218 welkin's vicegerent deputy-ruler of heaven 224 but so not worth much 231-32 black-oppressing humor fluid in the body that causes melancholy 232 physic treatment 238 ycleped called 241 snow-white pen goose-quill 245 curious-knotted flower beds and paths in intricate patterns 248 unlettered illiterate 250 vassal underling 252 hight called 255 continent canon the decree restraining the members of the Academy 261 pricks spurs 262 meed reward 266 weaker vessel general phrase for womankind 268-69 at . . . notice at the slightest indication of thy concern

MOTH By a familiar demonstration of the working,
my tough signor.^o 10
ARMADO Why tough signor? Why tough signor?
MOTH Why tender juvenal? Why tender juvenal?
ARMADO I spoke it, tender juvenal, as a congruent epitheton^o appertaining to thy young days, which we may nominate tender. 15
MOTH And I, tough signor, as an appertinent title to your old time, which we may name tough.
ARMADO Pretty and apt.
MOTH How mean you, sir? I pretty, and my saying apt? Or I apt and my saying pretty? 20
ARMADO Thou pretty, because little.
MOTH Little pretty, because little. Wherefore apt?
ARMADO And therefore apt because quick.
MOTH Speak you this in my praise, master?
ARMADO In thy condign^o praise. 25
MOTH I will praise an eel with the same praise.
ARMADO What, that an eel is ingenious?
MOTH That an eel is quick.
ARMADO I do say thou art quick in answers. Thou heat'st my blood. 30
MOTH I am answered, sir.
ARMADO I love not to be crossed.
MOTH [Aside.] He speaks the mere contrary—crosses^o love not him.
ARMADO I have promised to study three years with 35
the duke.
MOTH You may do it in an hour, sir.
ARMADO Impossible.
MOTH How many is one thrice told?
ARMADO I am ill at reck'ning—it fitteth the spirit of 40
a tapster.^o
MOTH You are a gentleman and a gamester, sir.
ARMADO I confess both. They are both the varnish^o of a complete man.
MOTH Then I am sure you know how much the gross 45 sum of deuce-ace amounts to.
ARMADO It doth amount to one more than two.
MOTH Which the base vulgar do call three.
ARMADO True.
MOTH Why, sir, is this such a piece of study? Now 50 here is three studied ere ye'll thrice wink; and how easy it is to put "years" to the word "three," and study three years in two words, the dancing horse^o will tell you.
ARMADO A most fine figure.^o 55
MOTH [Aside.] To prove you a cipher.
ARMADO I will hereupon confess I am in love, and as it is base for a soldier to love, so am I in love with a base wench. If drawing my sword against the humor^o of affection would deliver me from the 60 reprobate thought of it, I would take desire prisoner and ransom him to any French courtier for a new-devised cursy.^o I think scorn^o to sigh: methinks I should outswear^o Cupid. Comfort me, boy. What great men have been in love? 65

MOTH Hercules, master.
ARMADO Most sweet Hercules! More authority, dear boy, name more; and, sweet my child, let them be men of good repute and carriage.
MOTH Samson, master—he was a man of good carriage, 70 great carriage, for he carried the town gates on his back like a porter, and he was in love.
ARMADO O well-knit Samson, strong-jointed Samson! I do excel thee in my rapier as much as thou didst me in carrying gates. I am in love too. Who was 75
Samson's love, my dear Moth?
MOTH A woman, master.
ARMADO Of what complexion?^o MOTH Of all the four,^o or the three, or the two, or one of the four. 80
ARMADO Tell me precisely of what complexion.
MOTH Of the sea-water green, sir.
ARMADO Is that one of the four complexions?
MOTH As I have read, sir, and the best of them too.
ARMADO Green^o indeed is the color of lovers. But to 85 have a love of that color, methinks Samson had small reason for it. He surely affected her for her wit.^o MOTH It was so, sir, for she had a green wit.
ARMADO My love is most immaculate white and red.
MOTH Most maculate^o thoughts, master, are masked 90
under such colors.
ARMADO Define, define, well-educated infant.
MOTH My father's wit, and my mother's tongue, assist me!
ARMADO Sweet invocation of a child, most pretty 95
and pathetic.
MOTH
If she be made of white and red,
Her faults will ne'er be known,
For blushing cheeks by faults are bred,
And fears by pale white shown. 100
Then if she fear or be to blame,
By this you shall not know,
For still her cheeks possess the same
Which native^o she doth owe.^o
A dangerous rhyme, master, against the reason of 105
white and red.
ARMADO Is there not a ballet,^o boy, of the King and the Beggar?
MOTH The world was very guilty of such a ballet some three ages since. But I think now 'tis not to be 110 found, or if it were, it would neither serve for the writing nor the tune.
ARMADO I will have that subject newly writ o'er, that I may example my digression^o by some mighty precedent. Boy, I do love that country girl that I 115 took in the park with the rational hind,^o Costard.
She deserves well.
MOTH [Aside.] To be whipped—and yet a better love than my master.

10 signor with a pun on senior 13–14 congruent epitheton appropriate adjective 25 condign well-deserved 33 crosses coins (so named for the crosses engraved on them) 41 tapster bartender 43 varnish outward gloss 53 dancing horse a performing horse well known for beating out numbers 55
figure figure of speech 60 humor innate disposition 62–63
new-devised cursy novel mannerism 63 think scorn
disdain

64 outswear forswear 78 complexion disposition 79 all the four the four humors or fluids of the body: blood, phlegm, bile, black bile 85 Green immature 87 wit mind 90
maculate spotted 104 native by nature; owe possess 107 ballet ballad 114 digression Armado means to say transgression 116 rational hind intelligent yokel

ARMADO Sing, boy. My spirit grows heavy in love. 120

MOTH And that's great marvel, loving a light wench.

ARMADO I say, sing.

MOTH Forbear till this company be past.

Enter [COSTARD the] clown, [DULL the] constable, and [JAQUENETTA, a] wench.

DULL Sir, the duke's pleasure is that you keep Costard safe, and you must suffer him to take no delight nor 125 no penance,° but 'a° must fast three days a week. For this damsel, I must keep her at the park—she is allowed for the day-woman.° Fare you well.

ARMADO I do betray myself with blushing. Maid!

JAQUENETTA Man? 130

ARMADO I will visit thee at the lodge.

JAQUENETTA That's hereby.

ARMADO I know where it is situate.

JAQUENETTA Lord, how wise you are!

ARMADO I will tell thee wonders. 135

JAQUENETTA With that face?

ARMADO I love thee.

JAQUENETTA So I heard you say.

ARMADO And so farewell.

JAQUENETTA Fair weather after you! 140

DULL Come, Jaquenetta, away!

Exeunt [DULL and JAQUENETTA].

ARMADO Villain, thou shalt fast for thy offenses ere thou be pardoned.

COSTARD Well, sir, I hope when I do it I shall do it on a full stomach.° 145

ARMADO Thou shalt be heavily punished.

COSTARD I am more bound to you than your fellows,° for they are but lightly rewarded.

ARMADO Take away this villain. Shut him up.

MOTH Come, you transgressing slave, away! 150

COSTARD Let me not be pent up, sir. I will fast, being loose.

MOTH No, sir, that were fast and loose.° Thou shalt to prison.

COSTARD Well, if ever I do see the merry days of 155 desolation that I have seen, some shall see.

MOTH What shall some see?

COSTARD Nay, nothing, Master Moth, but what they look upon. It is not for prisoners to be too silent in their words,° and therefore I will say nothing. I thank 160 God I have as little patience as another man, and therefore I can be quiet. Exit [with MOTH].

ARMADO I do affect° the very ground (which is base) where her shoe (which is baser) guided by her foot (which is basest) doth tread. I shall be forsworn 165 (which is a great argument of falsehood) if I love. And how can that be true love which is falsely attempted? Love is a familiar;° Love is a devil. There is no evil angel but Love. Yet was Samson so tempted, and he had an excellent strength; yet was Solomon so 170 seduced, and he had a very good wit. Cupid's butt-shaft° is too hard for Hercules' club, and therefore too much odds for a Spaniard's rapier. The first and second cause° will not serve my turn; the pasado° he respects not, the duello° he regards not. His disgrace 175 is to be called boy, but his glory is to subdue men. Adieu, valor; rust, rapier; be still, drum; for your manager is in love; yea, he loveth. Assist me some extemporal god of rhyme,° for I am sure I shall turn sonnet.° Devise, wit; write, pen; for I am for whole 180 volumes in folio. Exit.

[A C T I I]

[Scene I. The park.]

Enter the PRINCESS of France, with three attending ladies [MARIA, KATHARINE, ROSALINE] and three LORDS, [one named BOYET].

BOYET

Now, madam, summon up your dearest spirits.°

Consider who the king your father sends,
To whom he sends, and what's his embassy:
Yourself, held precious in the world's esteem,
To parley with the sole inheritor° 5

Of all perfections that a man may owe,° Matchless Navarre; the plea of no less weight
Than Aquitaine, a dowry for a queen.

Be now as prodigal of all dear grace
As Nature was in making graces dear° 10
When she did starve the general world beside,
And prodigally gave them all to you.

PRINCESS

Good Lord Boyet, my beauty, though but mean,
Needs not the painted flourish° of your praise.

Beauty is bought by judgment of the eye,
Not utt'ed by base sale of chapmen's tongues.° 15

I am less proud to hear you tell my worth
Than you much willing to be counted wise
In spending your wit in the praise of mine.

But now to task the tasker:° good Boyet,
You are not ignorant all-telling fame 20

Doth noise abroad Navarre hath made a vow,
Till painful study shall outwear three years,
No woman may approach his silent court.

Therefore to's seemeth it a needful course,
Before we enter his forbidden gates, 25

To know his pleasure; and in that behalf,
Bold of your worthiness,° we single you
As our best-moving° fair solicitor.

Tell him the daughter of the King of France,
On serious business, craving quick dispatch, 30

173-74 first . . . cause referring to rules governing the conduct of a duel 174 pasado forward thrust 175 duello correct way of dueling 179 extemporal . . . rhyme god of rhymes written on the spur of the moment 179-80 turn sonnet compose a sonnet

II.i.i dearest spirits best intelligence 5 inheritor possessor 6 owe own 10 graces dear beauty scarce 14 painted flourish elaborate ornament 16 utt'ed . . . tongues put up for sale by hucksters 20 task the tasker set a task to the one who sets tasks 28 Bold . . . worthiness confident of your worth 29 best-moving most persuasive

126 penance perhaps Dull means to say pleasance, meaning pleasure; 'a he 127-28 allowed . . . day-woman admitted as the dairy maid 145 on . . . stomach bravely 147 fellows servants 153 fast and loose not playing fairly 160 words probably with pun on wards = cells 163 affect love 168 familiar attendant spirit 171-72 butt-shaft unbarbed arrow

Importunes personal conference with his grace.
Haste, signify so much while we attend
Like humble-visaged suitors his high will.

BOYET

Proud of employment, willingly I go. Exit BOYET. 35

PRINCESS

All pride is willing pride, and yours is so.
Who are the votaries,^o my loving lords,
That are vow-fellows with this virtuous duke?

LORD

Longaville is one.

PRINCESS

Know you the man?

MARIA

I know him, madam. At a marriage feast 40
Between Lord Perigort and the beauteous heir
Of Jacques Falconbridge solemnizèd
In Normandy saw I this Longaville.
A man of sovereign parts^o he is esteemed,
Well fitted in arts, glorious in arms. 45
Nothing becomes him ill that he would well.^o
The only soil of his fair virtue's gloss—
If virtue's gloss will stain with any soil—
Is a sharp wit matched with too blunt a will,
Whose edge hath power to cut, whose will still wills 50
It should none spare that come within his power.

PRINCESS

Some merry mocking lord, belike—is't so?

MARIA

They say so most that most his humors know.

PRINCESS

Such short-lived wits do wither as they grow.
Who are the rest?

KATHARINE

The young Dumaine, a well-accomplished youth,
Of all that virtue love for virtue loved;
Most power to do most harm, least knowing ill,
For he hath wit to make an ill shape good,
And shape to win grace though he had no wit. 60
I saw him at the Duke Alençon's once;
And much too little^o of that good I saw
Is my report to^o his great worthiness.

ROSALINE

Another of these students at that time 65
Was there with him, if I have heard a truth.
Berowne they call him; but a merrier man,
Within the limit of becoming mirth,
I never spent an hour's talk withal.^o
His eye begets occasion^o for his wit;
For every object that the one doth catch 70
The other turns to a mirth-moving jest,
Which his fair tongue (conceit's expositor^o)
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That agèd ears play truant at his tales,
And younger hearings are quite ravishèd,
So sweet and voluble is his discourse.

PRINCESS

God bless my ladies! Are they all in love,

37 votaries those who have sworn a vow 44 sovereign parts lordly qualities 46 Nothing . . . well Nothing that he values is unbecoming to him 62 much too little far short 63 to compared to 68 withal with 69 begets occasion finds opportunity 72 conceit's expositor one who explains an ingenious notion

That every one her own hath garnishèd
With such bedecking ornaments of praise?

LORD

Here comes Boyet. Enter BOYET.

PRINCESS

Now, what admittance,^o lord? 80

BOYET

Navarre had notice of your fair approach;
And he and his competitors^o in oath
Were all addressed^o to meet you, gentle lady,
Before I came. Marry, thus much I have learnt; 85
He rather means to lodge you in the field,
Like one that comes here to besiege his court,
Than seek a dispensation for his oath
To let you enter his unpeopled house.

[The LADIES mask.]

Enter [KING of] Navarre, LONGAVILLE, DUMAINE, and BEROWNE, [with ATTENDANTS].

Here comes Navarre.

KING Fair princess, welcome to the court of Navarre. 90

PRINCESS "Fair" I give you back again; and "welcome" I have not yet. The roof of this court is too high to be yours, and welcome to the wide fields too base to be mine.

KING

You shall be welcome, madam, to my court. 95

PRINCESS

I will be welcome, then. Conduct me thither.

KING

Hear me, dear lady—I have sworn an oath.

PRINCESS

Our Lady help my lord! He'll be forsworn. 55

KING

Not for the world, fair madam, by my will.

PRINCESS

Why, will shall break it, will, and nothing else. 100

KING

Your ladyship is ignorant what it is. 60

PRINCESS

Were my lord so, his ignorance were wise,
Where now his knowledge must prove ignorance.
I hear your grace hath sworn out housekeeping.^o

'Tis deadly sin to keep that oath, my lord, 105
And sin to break it.

But pardon me, I am too sudden-bold;
To teach a teacher ill beseemeth me.

Vouchsafe to read the purpose of my coming,
And suddenly resolve me^o in my suit. 110

70 [Gives a paper.]

KING

Madam, I will, if suddenly I may.

PRINCESS

You will the sooner that I were away,
For you'll prove perjured if you make me stay. 75

BEROWNE

Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

ROSALINE

Did not I dance with you in Brabant once? 115

80 admittance permission to enter 82 competitors partners 83 addressed ready 104 sworn out housekeeping sworn not to keep house or offer hospitality 110 suddenly resolve me quickly give me a decision

BEROWNE

I know you did.

ROSALINE

How needless was it then

To ask the question!

BEROWNE

You must not be so quick.

ROSALINE

'Tis long° of you that spur me with such questions.

BEROWNE

Your wit's too hot, it speeds too fast, 'twill tire.

ROSALINE

Not till it leave the rider in the mire.

BEROWNE

What time o' day?

ROSALINE

The hour that fools should ask.

BEROWNE

Now fair befall° your mask!

ROSALINE

Fair fall the face it covers!

BEROWNE

And send you many lovers!

ROSALINE

Amen, so you be none.

BEROWNE

Nay, then will I be gone.

KING

Madam, your father here doth intimate°

The payment of a hundred thousand crowns,

Being but the one half of an entire sum

Disbursèd by my father in his wars.

But say that he, or we (as neither have),

Received that sum, yet there remains unpaid

A hundred thousand more, in surety of the which,

One part of Aquitaine is bound to us,

Although not valued to the money's worth.

If then the king your father will restore

But that one half which is unsatisfied,

We will give up our right in Aquitaine,

And hold fair friendship with his majesty.

But that, it seems, he little purposeth,

For here he doth demand to have repaid

A hundred thousand crowns; and not demands,

On payment of a hundred thousand crowns,

To have his title live in Aquitaine;

Which we much rather had depart withal,°

And have the money by our father lent,

Than Aquitaine, so gelded° as it is.

Dear princess, were not his requests so far

From reason's yielding, your fair self should make

A yielding 'gainst some reason in my breast,

And go well satisfied to France again.

PRINCESS

You do the king my father too much wrong,

And wrong the reputation of your name,

In so unseeming° to confess receipt

Of that which hath so faithfully been paid.

KING

I do protest I never heard of it;

And if you prove it, I'll repay it back

Or yield up Aquitaine.

PRINCESS

We arrest your word.°

Boyet, you can produce acquittances°

For such a sum from special officers

Of Charles his father.

KING

Satisfy me so.

BOYET

So please your grace, the packet° is not come

Where that and other specialties° are bound.

120

Tomorrow you shall have a sight of them.

165

KING

It shall suffice me—at which interview

All liberal reason I will yield unto.

Meantime, receive such welcome at my hand

As honor (without breach of honor) may

Make tender of° to thy true worthiness.

170

You may not come, fair princess, within my gates;

But here without you shall be so received

As you shall deem yourself lodged in my heart,

125

Though so denied fair harbor in my house.

Your own good thoughts excuse me, and farewell.

175

Tomorrow shall we visit you again.

PRINCESS

Sweet health and fair desires consort° your grace.

KING

Thy own wish wish I thee in every place.

Exit [KING and his TRAIN].

130

BEROWNE Lady, I will commend you to mine own heart.

180

ROSALINE Pray you, do my commendations, I would be glad to see it.

BEROWNE I would you heard it groan.

ROSALINE Is the fool sick?

135

BEROWNE Sick at the heart.

185

ROSALINE

Alack, let it blood!°

BEROWNE

Would that do it good?

140

ROSALINE

My physic says ay.

BEROWNE

Will you prick't with your eye?

ROSALINE

145

No point,° with my knife.

190

BEROWNE

Now, God save thy life!

ROSALINE

And yours from long living!

150

BEROWNE

I cannot stay thanksgiving.°

Exit.Enter DUMAINE.

DUMAINE

Sir, I pray you a word. What lady is that same?

155

BOYET

The heir of Alençon, Katharine her name.

195

159 arrest your word take your word as security 160 acquittances receipts 163 packet package 164 specialties particular legal documents 170 Make tender of offer 177 consort accompany 186 let it blood bleed him 190 No point not at all 193 stay thanksgiving stay long enough to give you proper thanks (for your unkind remark)

118 long because 123 fair befall good luck to 128 intimate make known 146 depart withal give up 148 gelded cut up 155 unseeming not appearing

DUMAINE

A gallant lady. Monsieur, fare you well. Exit.

[Enter LONGAVILLE.]

LONGAVILLE

I beseech you a word. What is she in the white?

BOYET

A woman sometimes, and^o you saw her in the light.

LONGAVILLE

Perchance light in the light.^o I desire her name.

BOYET

She hath but one for herself. To desire that were a shame. 200

LONGAVILLE

Pray you, sir, whose daughter?

BOYET

Her mother's, I have heard.

LONGAVILLE

God's blessing on your beard!

BOYET

Good sir, be not offended.

She is an heir of Falconbridge. 205

LONGAVILLE

Nay, my choler^o is ended.

She is a most sweet lady.

BOYET

Not unlike, sir; that may be. Exit LONGAVILLE.Enter BEROWNE.

BEROWNE

What's her name in the cap?

BOYET

Rosaline, by good hap. 210

BEROWNE

Is she wedded or no?

BOYET

To her will, sir, or so.^o

BEROWNE

O, you are welcome, sir! Adieu.

BOYET

Farewell to me, sir, and welcome to you.

Exit BEROWNE.

MARIA

That last is Berowne, the merry madcap lord. 215

Not a word with him but a jest.

BOYET

And every jest but a word.

PRINCESS

It was well done of you to take him at his word.

BOYET

I was as willing to grapple as he was to board.

KATHARINE

Two hot sheeps, marry!

BOYET

And wherefore not ships?

No sheep, sweet lamb, unless we feed on your lips. 220

KATHARINE

You sheep, and I pasture. Shall that finish the jest?

BOYET

So you grant pasture for me. [Offers to kiss her.]

KATHARINE

Not so, gentle beast.

My lips are no common,^o though several^o they be.

198 and if 199 light . . . light wanton if rightly perceived 206 choler wrath 212 or so something like that 223 no common not like pasture held in common; several two (the word also, in this context, signifies "private property")

BOYET

Belonging to whom?

KATHARINE

To my fortunes and me.

PRINCESS

Good wits will be jangling; but, gentles, agree. 225

This civil war of wits were much better used

On Navarre and his book-men, for here 'tis abused.

BOYET

If my observation (which very seldom lies)

By the heart's still rhetoric disclosed with eyes

Deceive me not now, Navarre is infected. 230

PRINCESS With what?

BOYET

With that which we lovers entitle "affected."^o

PRINCESS Your reason?

BOYET

Why, all his behaviors^o did make their retireTo the court^o of his eye, peeping thorough desire. 235His heart, like an agate^o with your print impressed,^o

Proud with his form, in his eye pride expressed.

His tongue, all impatient to speak and not see,^o

Did stumble with haste in his eyesight to be;

All senses to that sense did make their repair, 240

To feel only looking on fairest of fair.^o

Methought all his senses were locked in his eye,

As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;

Who, tend'ring^o their own worth from where they were glassed,^oDid point^o you to buy them, along as you passed. 245

His face's own margent did quote such amazes

That all eyes saw his eyes enchanted with gazes.^o

I'll give you Aquitaine, and all that is his,

And^o you give him for my sake but one loving kiss.

PRINCESS

Come to our pavilion. Boyet is disposed. 250

BOYET

But to speak that in words which his eye hath disclosed.

I only have made a mouth of his eye

By adding a tongue which I know will not lie.

ROSALINE

Thou art an old love-monger, and speakest skillfully.

MARIA

He is Cupid's grandfather, and learns news of him. 255

KATHARINE

Then was Venus like her mother, for her father is but grim.

BOYET

Do you hear, my mad wenches?

ROSALINE

No.

BOYET

What then? Do you see?

ROSALINE

Ay, our way to be gone.

BOYET

You are too hard for me.

Exeunt omnes.^o

232 affected impassioned 234 behaviors expression of his feelings 235 court watch-post 236 agate stone used for the engraving of images; impressed imprinted 238 His . . . see his tongue, vexed at having the power of speaking without having the power of seeing 241 To . . . fair sight is translated into feeling in regarding her 244 tend'ring offering; glassed enclosed in glass 245 point urge 246-47 His face's . . .
 gazes The amazement in Navarre's face drew attention, like comments in a book's margin, to the love in his eyes 249
 And if 258 s.d. omnes all (Latin)

[A C T I I I]

[Scene I. The park.]Enter [ARMADO the] braggart and [MOTH,] his boy.

ARMADO Warble, child, make passionate my sense of hearing.

MOTH [Sings.] Concolinel.^oARMADO Sweet air! Go, tenderness of years,^o take this key, give enlargement^o to the swain, bring him s festinately^o hither. I must employ him in a letter to my love.MOTH Master, will you win your love with a French brawl?^o

ARMADO How meanest thou? Brawling in French? 10

MOTH No, my complete master; but to jig off a tune at the tongue's end, canary to it^o with your feet, humor it with turning up your eyelids, sigh a note and sing a note, sometime through the throat as if you swallowed love with singing love, sometime through 15 the nose as if you snuffed up love by smelling love, with your hat penthouse-like o'er the shop of your eyes, with your arms crossed^o on your thin-belly doublet^o like a rabbit on a spit, or your hands in your pocket like a man after the old painting; and keep 20 not too long in one tune, but a snip^o and away. These are complements,^o these are humors, these betray nice wenches (that would be betrayed without these), and make them men of note—do you note me?—that most are affected to^o these. 25

ARMADO How hast thou purchased this experience?

MOTH By my penny of observation.

ARMADO But O—but O—

MOTH "The hobbyhorse is forgot."^o

ARMADO Call'st thou my love "hobbyhorse"? 30

MOTH No, master. The hobbyhorse is but a colt, and your love perhaps a hackney.^o But have you forgot your love?

ARMADO Almost I had.

MOTH Negligent student, learn her by heart. 35

ARMADO By heart, and in heart, boy.

MOTH And out of heart, master. All those three I will prove.

ARMADO What wilt thou prove?

MOTH A man, if I live; and this, by, in, and without, 40 upon the instant. By heart you love her, because your heart cannot come by her; in heart you love her, because your heart is in love with her; and out of heart you love her, being out of heart that you cannot enjoy her. 45

ARMADO I am all these three.

MOTH [Aside.] And three times as much more, and yet nothing at all.

ARMADO Fetch hither the swain. He must carry me a letter. 50

MOTH A message well sympathized^o—a horse to be ambassador for an ass.

ARMADO Ha, ha, what sayest thou?

MOTH Marry, sir, you must send the ass upon the horse, for he is very slow-gaited. But I go. 55

ARMADO The way is but short. Away!

MOTH As swift as lead, sir.

ARMADO

The meaning, pretty ingenious?

Is not lead a metal heavy, dull, and slow?

MOTH

Minime,^o honest master; or rather, master, no. 60

ARMADO

I say, lead is slow.

MOTH

You are too swift, sir, to say so.

Is that lead slow which is fired from a gun?

ARMADO

Sweet smoke of rhetoric!

He reputes me a cannon; and the bullet, that's he:

I shoot thee at the swain.

MOTH

Thump, then, and I flee. 65

[Exit.]

ARMADO

A most acute juvenal,^o voluble and free of grace!By thy favor, sweet welkin,^o I must sigh in thy face:Most rude melancholy, valor gives thee place.^o

My herald is returned.

Enter [MOTH the] page and [COSTARD the] clown.

MOTH

A wonder, master! Here's a costard^o broken in a shin. 70

ARMADO

Some enigma, some riddle. Come, thy l'envoy^o—begin.COSTARD No egma, no riddle, no l'envoy; no salve^o in the mail,^o sir. O, sir, plantain,^o a plain plantain. No l'envoy, no l'envoy, no salve, sir, but a plantain.ARMADO By virtue, thou enforcest laughter; thy 75 silly thought, my spleen;^o the heaving of my lungs provokes me to ridiculous smiling. O, pardon me, my stars! Doth the inconsiderate^o take salve for l'envoy, and the word l'envoy for a salve?

MOTH

Do the wise think them other? Is not l'envoy a salve? 80

ARMADO

No, page; it is an epilogue, or discourse to make plain Some obscure precedence^o that hath tofore been sain.^o I will example it:

The fox, the ape, and the humblebee

Were still at odds, being but three. 85

There's the moral. Now the l'envoy.

MOTH I will add the l'envoy. Say the moral again.

51 well sympathized in proper accord 60 Minime by no means (Latin) 66 juvenal in two senses: young fellow, satirist 67 welkin heaven 68 gives thee place gives place to you 70 costard apple, or head 71 l'envoy words ending a composition by way of leave-taking 72 salve with a pun on salve, the Latin word for salute 73 mail bag, container; plantain tree whose leaves were used for healing 76 spleen mirth 78 inconsiderate unthinking 82 precedence preceding statement; tofore been sain been said before

III.i.3 Concolinel perhaps the name of a song 4 tenderness of years affected talk for young fellow 5 enlargement freedom 6 festinately quickly 8-9 French brawl French dance 12 canary to it dance in a lively way 18 arms crossed a sign of melancholy 18-19 thin-belly doublet garment unpadded in the lower part (across your thin belly) 21 snip snatch 22 complements accompaniments 25 affected to taken with 29 The . . . forgot perhaps a phrase from an old song 31-32 hobbyhorse . . . colt . . . hackney slang words for whore

ARMADO

The fox, the ape, and the humblebee
Were still at odds, being but three.

MOTH

Until the goose came out of door, 90
And stayed the odds by adding four.^o
Now will I begin your moral, and do you follow with my l'envoy.

The fox, the ape, and the humblebee
Were still at odds, being but three. 95

ARMADO

Until the goose came out of door,
Staying the odds by adding four.

MOTH A good l'envoy, ending in the goose. Would you desire more?

COSTARD

The boy hath sold him a bargain,^o a goose—that's flat. 100
Sir, your pennyworth is good, and^o your goose be fat.
To sell a bargain well is as cunning as fast and loose.^o
Let me see: a fat l'envoy—ay, that's a fat goose.

ARMADO

Come hither, come hither. How did this argument begin?

MOTH

By saying that a costard was broken in a shin. 105
Then called you for the l'envoy.

COSTARD

True, and I for a plantain; thus came your argument in;
Then the boy's fat l'envoy, the goose that you bought,
And he ended the market.

ARMADO But tell me, how was there a costard broken 110
in a shin?

MOTH I will tell you sensibly.^o

COSTARD Thou hast no feeling of it, Moth. I will speak that l'envoy:

I, Costard, running out, that was safely within, 115
Fell over the threshold and broke my shin.

ARMADO We will talk no more of this matter.

COSTARD Till there be more matter^o in the shin.

ARMADO Sirrah Costard, I will enfranchise^o thee.

COSTARD O, marry me to one Frances! I smell some 120 l'envoy, some goose, in this.

ARMADO By my sweet soul, I mean setting thee at liberty, enfreedoming thy person. Thou wert immured, restrained, captivated, bound.

COSTARD True, true, and now you will be my 125
purgation and let me loose.

ARMADO I give thee thy liberty, set thee from durance, and in lieu thereof, impose on thee nothing but this. [Gives a letter.] Bear this significant^o to the country maid Jaquenetta. [Gives a coin.] There is 130 remuneration; for the best ward^o of mine honor is rewarding my dependents. Moth, follow.

MOTH

Like the sequel, I. Signior Costard, adieu.

Exit [ARMADO, followed by MOTH].

COSTARD

My sweet ounce of man's flesh, my inconvy^o Jew!

91 stayed . . . four turned them into evens by adding a fourth 100 sold . . . bargain made a fool of him 101 and if 102 fast and loose cheating 112 sensibly with feeling 118 matter pus 119 enfranchise set free 129 significant letter 131 ward protection 134 inconvy darling

—Now will I look to his remuneration. Remuneration? 135
O that's the Latin word for three farthings. Three farthings—remuneration. "What's the price of this inkle?"^o "One penny." "No, I'll give you a remuneration." Why, it carries it! Remuneration! Why, it is a fairer name than French crown.^o I will never buy 140 and sell out of this word.

Enter BEROWNE.

BEROWNE O my good knave Costard, exceedingly well met.

COSTARD Pray you, sir, how much carnation^o ribbon may a man buy for a remuneration? 145

BEROWNE O, what is a remuneration?

COSTARD Marry, sir, halfpenny farthing.

BEROWNE O, why then, three-farthing-worth of silk.

COSTARD I thank your worship. God be wi' you!

BEROWNE

O stay, slave, I must employ thee. 150

As thou wilt win my favor, good my knave,

Do one thing for me that I shall entreat.

COSTARD When would you have it done, sir?

BEROWNE O, this afternoon.

COSTARD Well, I will do it, sir. Fare you well. 155

BEROWNE O, thou knowest not what it is.

COSTARD I shall know, sir, when I have done it.

BEROWNE Why, villain, thou must know first.

COSTARD I will come to your worship tomorrow morning. 160

BEROWNE

It must be done this afternoon. Hark, slave, it is but this:

The princess comes to hunt here in the park,

And in her train there is a gentle lady;

When tongues speak sweetly, then they name her name,

And Rosaline they call her. Ask for her, 165

And to her white hand see thou do commend

This sealed-up counsel. [Gives him a letter and a shilling.]

There's thy guerdon.^o Go.

COSTARD Gardon, O sweet gardon! Better than remuneration—a 'levenpence farthing better. Most sweet gardon! I will do it, sir, in print.^o Gardon! 170 Remuneration! Exit.

BEROWNE

O, and I, forsooth, in love!

I, that have been love's whip,

A very beadle^o to a humorous sigh,

A critic, nay, a night-watch constable, 175

A domineering pedant o'er the boy,

Than whom no mortal so magnificent!

This wimpled,^o whining, purblind,^o wayward boy,

This senior-junior, giant-dwarf, Dan^o Cupid,

Regent of love rhymes, lord of folded arms, 180

Th' anointed sovereign of sighs and groans,

Liege^o of all loiterers and malcontents,

Dread prince of plackets,^o king of codpieces,^o

138 inkle band of linen 140 French crown in two senses:
a coin, and the baldness caused by syphilis, the so-called French disease 144 carnation flesh-colored 167 guerdon reward
170 in print most carefully 174 beadle parish constable 178 wimpled covered with a muffler; purblind completely blind 179 Dan don, a derivation of dominus = lord 182 Liege lord 183 plackets slits in petticoats (vulgar term for women); codpieces cloth covering the opening in men's breeches

Sole imperator and great general
 Of trotting paritors^o—O my little heart!—
 And I to be a corporal of his field,^o
 And wear his colors like a tumbler's^o hoop!
 What? I love? I sue? I seek a wife?
 A woman that is like a German clock,
 Still a-repairing, ever out of frame,^o
 And never going aright, being a watch,
 But being watched that it may still go right!
 Nay, to be perjured, which is worst of all;
 And, among three, to love the worst of all,
 A whitely^o wanton with a velvet brow,
 With two pitch balls stuck in her face for eyes.
 Ay, and, by heaven, one that will do the deed,^o
 Though Argus^o were her eunuch and her guard!
 And I to sigh for her, to watch for her,
 To pray for her! Go to, it is a plague
 That Cupid will impose for my neglect
 Of his almighty dreadful little might.
 Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue, groan.
 Some men must love my lady, and some Joan. [Exit.]

[A C T I V]

[Scene I. The park.]

Enter the PRINCESS, a FORESTER, her LADIES, and her LORDS.

PRINCESS
 Was that the king, that spurred his horse so hard
 Against the steep uprising of the hill?

FORESTER
 I know not, but I think it was not he.

PRINCESS
 Whoe'er 'a^o was, 'a showed a mounting mind.^o
 Well, lords, today we shall have our dispatch;
 On Saturday we will return to France.
 Then, forester, my friend, where is the bush
 That we must stand and play the murderer in?

FORESTER
 Hereby, upon the edge of yonder coppice,^o
 A stand where you may make the fairest shoot.

PRINCESS
 I thank my beauty, I am fair that shoot,
 And thereupon thou speak'st the fairest shoot.

FORESTER
 Pardon me, madam, for I meant not so.

PRINCESS
 What, what? First praise me, and again say no?

O short-lived pride! Not fair? Alack for woe! 15

185 FORESTER
 Yes, madam, fair.

PRINCESS Nay, never paint^o me now!
 Where fair is not, praise cannot mend the brow.^o
 Here, good my glass,^o take this for telling true—
 190 [Gives him money.]

Fair payment for foul words is more than due.

FORESTER
 Nothing but fair is that which you inherit. 20

195 PRINCESS
 See, see—my beauty will be saved by merit!^o
 O heresy in fair,^o fit for these days!
 A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair praise.
 But come, the bow! Now mercy goes to kill,^o

200 And shooting well is then accounted ill. 25

Thus will I save my credit in the shoot:
 Not wounding, pity would not let me do't;
 If wounding, then it was to show my skill,
 That more for praise than purpose meant to kill.

And out of question so it is sometimes, 30

Glory^o grows guilty of detested crimes,
 When, for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part,
 We bend to that the working of the heart;
 As I for praise alone now seek to spill
 The poor deer's blood that my heart means no ill. 35

BOYET
 Do not curst^o wives hold that self-sovereignty
 Only for praise' sake, when they strive to be Lords o'er their lords?

PRINCESS
 Only for praise, and praise we may afford
 To any lady that subdues a lord. 40

Enter [COSTARD the] clown.

BOYET
 Here comes a member of the commonwealth.^o COSTARD God dig-you-den^o all! Pray you, which is the head lady?

5 PRINCESS Thou shalt know her, fellow, by the rest
 that have no heads. 45

COSTARD Which is the greatest lady, the highest?

PRINCESS The thickest and the tallest.

COSTARD The thickest and the tallest—it is so. Truth is truth.

10 And^o your waist, mistress, were as slender as my wit, 50
 One o' these maids' girdles for your waist should be fit.
 Are not you the chief woman? You are the thickest
 here.

PRINCESS What's your will, sir? What's your will?

COSTARD I have a letter from Monsieur Berowne to one Lady Rosaline. 55

185 paritors officers of the Ecclesiastical Court who serve summonses for certain, often sexual, offenses 186 corporal . . . field aide to a general 187 tumbler's acrobat's 190 frame order 195 whitely pale 197 do the deed perform the act of coition 198 Argus ancient mythological being with a hundred eyes

IV.i.4 'a he; mounting mind lofty spirit (with pun on mountain) 9 coppice undergrowth of small trees

16 paint flatter 17 mend the brow make the brow more beautiful 18 good my glass my fine mirror 21 saved by merit saved by what I truly deserve 22 heresy in fair heresy with respect to beauty 24 mercy . . . kill the merciful huntsman goes forth to kill—instead of leaving the prey wounded—but such killing is not well regarded 31 Glory i.e., ambition for glory 36 curst peevish 41 member . . . commonwealth one of our group 42 God dig-you-den God give you good evening 50 And if

PRINCESS

O thy letter, thy letter! He's a good friend of mine.
Stand aside, good bearer. Boyet, you can carve°—
Break up this capon.°

BOYET

I am bound to serve.

This letter is mistook; it importeth° none here.
It is writ to Jaquenetta.

PRINCESS

We will read it, I swear.

60

Break the neck° of the wax, and every one give ear.

BOYET (Reads.) "By heaven, that thou art fair is most infallible; true that thou art beauteous; truth itself that thou art lovely. More fairer than fair, beautiful than beauteous, truer than truth itself, have com- 65 miseration on thy heroical vassal. The magnanimous and most illustrate° King Cophetua set eye upon the pernicious and indubitate° beggar Zenelophon,° and he it was that might rightly say veni, vidi, vici; which to annothanize° in the vulgar (O base and obscure 70 vulgar!) videlicet,° he came, saw, and overcame. He came, one; saw, two; overcame, three. Who came?
The king. Why did he come? To see. Why did he see? To overcome. To whom came he? To the beggar.
What saw he? The beggar. Who overcame he? The 75 beggar. The conclusion is victory. On whose side?
The king's. The captive is enriched. On whose side?
The beggar's. The catastrophe is a nuptial. On whose side? The king's. No—on both in one, or one in both.
I am the king, for so stands the comparison, thou the 80 beggar, for so witnesseth thy lowliness. Shall I command thy love? I may. Shall I enforce thy love? I could. Shall I entreat thy love? I will. What shalt thou exchange for rags? Robes. For tittles?° Titles. For thyself? Me. Thus, expecting thy reply, I profane my 85 lips on thy foot, my eyes on thy picture, and my heart on thy every part.

Thine in the dearest design of industry,°
Don Adriano de Armado.

Thus dost thou hear the Nemean lion° roar 90
'Gainst thee, thou lamb, that standest as his prey.
Submissive fall his princely feet before,
And he from forage° will incline to play.
But if thou strive, poor soul, what art thou then?
Food for his rage, repasture° for his den." 95

PRINCESS

What plume of feathers is he that indited° this letter?
What vane?° What weathercock?° Did you ever hear better?

BOYET

I am much deceived but I remember the style.

PRINCESS

Else your memory is bad, going o'er it erewhile.

BOYET

This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court; 100

57 carve with pun on the sense "flirt" 58 Break . . .
capon (1) Carve this chicken (2) Open this love-letter 59 importeth concerns 61 Break the neck still referring to the capon 67 illustrate illustrious 68 indubitate undoubted; Zenelophon character in the ballad of King Cophetua and the Beggar 70 annothanize anatomize or a mock-Latin word to mean "annotate" 71 videlicet namely (Latin) 84 tittles small jottings in ink 88 industry faithful service 90 Nemean lion lion killed by Hercules 93 from forage turning away from feeding 95 repasture food 96 indited wrote 97 vane weather vane; weathercock ostentatious thing

A phantasime,° a Monarcho,° and one that makes sport
To the prince and his book-mates.

PRINCESS

Thou fellow, a word.

Who gave thee this letter?

COSTARD

I told you—my lord.

PRINCESS

To whom shouldst thou give it?

COSTARD

From my lord to my lady.

PRINCESS

From which lord to which lady?

105

COSTARD

From my Lord Berowne, a good master of mine,
To a lady of France that he called Rosaline.

PRINCESS

Thou hast mistaken° his letter. Come, lords, away.
Here, sweet, put up this; 'twill be thine another day.

[Exeunt PRINCESS and TRAIN. BOYET remains.]

BOYET

Who is the suitor?° Who is the suitor?

ROSALINE

Shall I teach you to know? 110

BOYET

Ay, my continent° of beauty.

ROSALINE

Why, she that bears the bow.

Finely put off!°

BOYET

My lady goes to kill horns, but, if thou marry,
Hang me by the neck if horns that year miscarry.°
Finely put on!° 115

ROSALINE

Well then, I am the shooter.

BOYET

And who is your deer?

ROSALINE

If we choose by the horns, yourself. Come not near.
Finely put on indeed!

MARIA

You still wrangle with her, Boyet, and she strikes at the brow.°

BOYET

But she herself is hit lower. Have I hit her now? 120

ROSALINE Shall I come upon thee with an old saying that was a man when King Pepin of France was a little boy, as touching the hit it?°

BOYET So I may answer thee with one as old, that was a woman when Queen Guinever of Britain was a 125 little wench, as touching the hit it.

ROSALINE "Thou canst not hit it, hit it, hit it,

Thou canst not hit it, my good man.

BOYET

"And° I cannot, cannot, cannot,

And I cannot, another can." 130

Exit [ROSALINE with KATHARINE].

COSTARD

By my troth, most pleasant, how both did fit it!

MARIA

A mark marvelous well shot, for they both did hit it.

101 phantasime person of wild imaginings; Monarcho nickname of a crazy Italian at the court of Elizabeth 108 mistaken taken to the wrong person 110 suitors pronounced "shooters" 111 continent container 112 put off repulsed 114 if . . .
miscarry if someone is not made a cuckold 115 put on lay on, as a blow 119 strikes . . . brow takes careful aim (with an allusion to the cuckold's horns) 123 hit it name of a dance tune (leading to pun on the sense of hit = to copulate) 129
And if

BOYET

A mark! O, mark but that mark!° A mark, says my lady!

Let the mark have a prick° in't, to mete° at if it may be.

MARIA

Wide o' the bow hand!° I' faith, your hand is out. 135

COSTARD

Indeed 'a must shoot nearer, or he'll ne'er hit the clout.°

BOYET

And if my hand be out, then belike your hand is in.

COSTARD

Then will she get the upshoot° by cleaving the pin.°

MARIA

Come, come, you talk greasily;° your lips grow foul.

COSTARD

She's too hard for you at pricks, sir. Challenge her to bowl. 140

BOYET

I fear too much rubbing.° Good night, my good owl.
[Exeunt BOYET and MARIA.]

COSTARD

By my soul, a swain,° a most simple clown!
Lord, lord, how the ladies and I have put him down!
O' my troth,° most sweet jests, most incony° vulgar wit.

When it comes so smoothly off, so obscenely as it were, so fit! 145

Armado to th' one side—O, a most dainty man!
To see him walk before a lady, and to bear her fan!
To see him kiss his hand, and how most sweetly 'a will swear!

And his page o' t' other side, that handful of wit,
Ah, heavens, it is a most pathological nit!° 150

Shout within.

Sola,° sola! [Exit.]

[Scene II. The park.]

Enter DULL, HOLOFERNES the pedant, and NATHANIEL.

NATHANIEL Very reverend sport, truly, and done in the testimony° of a good conscience.

HOLOFERNES The deer was, as you know, sanguis, in blood; ripe as the pomewater,° who now hangeth like a jewel in the ear of coelo, the sky, the welkin, the heaven; and anon falleth like a crab° on the face of terra, the soil, the land, the earth. 5

NATHANIEL Truly, Master Holofernes, the epithets are sweetly varied, like a scholar at the least. But sir, I assure ye it was a buck of the first head.° 10

133 mark (1) target (2) pudend 134 prick mark within the target (with additional bawdy suggestion); mete aim 135 Wide . . . hand far from the target on the bow-hand side 136 clout nail in the center of the target 138 upshoot best shot; cleaving the pin (1) striking the center of the target (2) causing emission in the male 139 greasily indecently 141 rubbing bowling balls striking each other (with sexual innuendo) 142 swain herdsman 144 O' my troth by my faith; incony fine 150 nit small thing (louse) 151 Sola a hunting cry

IV.ii.2 testimony approval 4 pomewater variety of sweet apple 6 crab crabapple 10 buck . . . head full-grown buck

HOLOFERNES Sir Nathaniel, haud credo.°

DULL 'Twas not a haud credo, 'twas a pricket.°

HOLOFERNES Most barbarous intimation!° Yet a kind of insinuation, as it were, in via, in way, of explication;° facere,° as it were, replication,° or rather, ostentare, to show, as it were, his inclination—after his undressed, unpolished, uneducated, unpruned, untrained, or, rather, unlettered, or, ratherest, unconfirmed fashion—to insert again my haud credo for a deer. 20

DULL I said the deer was not a haud credo, 'twas a pricket.

HOLOFERNES

Twice-sod° simplicity, bis coctus!°

O thou monster ignorance, how deformed dost thou look!

NATHANIEL

Sir, he hath never fed of the dainties that are bred in a book. 25

He hath not eat paper, as it were, he hath not drunk ink. His intellect is not replenished. He is only an animal, only sensible in the duller parts.

And such barren plants are set before us that we thankful should be,

Which we of taste and feeling are, for those parts that do fructify° in us more than he. 30

For as it would ill become me to be vain, indiscreet, or a fool,

So were there a patch° set on learning, to see him in a school.

But, omne bene,° say I, being of an old father's mind, Many can brook° the weather that love not the wind.

DULL

You two are book-men. Can you tell me by your wit 35
What was a month old at Cain's birth that's not five weeks old as yet?

HOLOFERNES

Dictynna,° goodman Dull. Dictynna, goodman Dull.

DULL What is Dictynna?

NATHANIEL

A title to Phoebe, to Luna, to the moon.

HOLOFERNES

The moon was a month old when Adam was no more, 40
And raught° not to five weeks when he came to fivescore.

Th' allusion holds in the exchange.°

DULL 'Tis true indeed; the collusion° holds in the exchange.

HOLOFERNES God comfort thy capacity! I say th' 45 allusion holds in the exchange.

DULL And I say the pollution holds in the exchange, for the moon is never but a month old; and I say beside that 'twas a pricket that the princess killed.

II haud credo I do not believe it (Latin); in the next line, Dull apparently takes the words as old gray doe 12 pricket two-year-old red deer 13 intimation a pedantic substitute for insinuation 14–15 explication explanation 15 facere to make; replication unfolding, revelation 23 Twice-sod soaked twice (again and again); bis coctus cooked twice 30 fructify bear fruit 32 patch fool 33 omne bene all is well 34 brook endure 37 Dictynna Diana, the moon 41 raught attained 42 Th' allusion . . . exchange The riddle serves for Adam as well as for Cain 43 collusion a pedantic misunderstanding

HOLOFERNES Sir Nathaniel, will you hear an extem- 50 poral° epitaph on the death of the deer? And, to humor the ignorant, I call the deer the princess killed, a pricket.

NATHANIEL Perge,° good Master Holofernes, perge, so it shall please you to abrogate scurrility.° 55

HOLOFERNES

I will something affect the letter° for it argues facility.
The preyful° princess pierced and pricked a pretty pleasing pricket;
Some say a sore,° but not a sore till now made sore with shooting.
The dogs did yell. Put L° to sore, then sorel° jumps from thicket;
Or pricket, sore, or else sorel. The people fall a hooting. 60
If sore be sore, then L to sore makes fifty sores—o' sorel.
Of one sore I an hundred make by adding but one more L.

NATHANIEL A rare talent!°

DULL If a talent be a claw, look how he claws° him with a talent. 65

HOLOFERNES This is a gift that I have, simple, simple;
a foolish extravagant spirit, full of forms, figures, shapes, objects, ideas, apprehensions, motions, revolutions. These are begot in the ventricle° of memory, nourished in the womb of pia mater,° and delivered 70 upon the mellowing of occasion.° But the gift is good in those in whom it is acute, and I am thankful for it.

NATHANIEL Sir, I praise the Lord for you, and so may my parishioners, for their sons are well tutored by 75 you, and their daughters profit very greatly under
you. You are a good member of the commonwealth.

HOLOFERNES Mehercle,° if their sons be ingenious, they shall want no instruction; if their daughters be capable, I will put it to them. But vir sapit qui pauca 80 loquitur.° A soul feminine saluteth us.

Enter JAQUENETTA and [COSTARD] the clown.

JAQUENETTA God give you good morrow, Master Parson.

HOLOFERNES Master Parson, quasi° pierce-one? And if one should be pierced, which is the one? 85

COSTARD Marry, Master Schoolmaster, he that is likeliest to a hogshead.°

HOLOFERNES Of piercing a hogshead!° A good luster of conceit° in a turf° of earth, fire enough for a flint, pearl enough for a swine. 'Tis pretty; it is well. 90

JAQUENETTA Good Master Parson, be so good as read me this letter. It was given me by Costard, and sent me from Don Armado. I beseech you read it.

50-51 extemporal on the spur of the moment 54 Perge continue 55 abrogate scurrility put aside foul talk 56 affect the letter alliterate 57 preyful killing much prey 58 sore four-year-old buck 59 L the Roman numeral fifty; sorel young buck 63 talent talon 64 claws flatters 69 ventricle part of the brain containing the memory 70 pia mater membrane enclosing the brain 71 mellowing of occasion fit time 78 Mehercle By Hercules 80-81 vir . . . loquitur
the man is wise who speaks little 84 quasi as if 87 hogshead fathead 88 piercing a hogshead getting drunk
88-89 luster of conceit brilliant idea 89 turf clod

HOLOFERNES Fauste, precor, gelida quando pecus omne sub umbra ruminat,° and so forth. Ah, good old 95 Mantuan. I may speak of thee as the traveler doth of Venice:

Venetia, Venetia,

Chi non ti vede, non ti pretia.°

Old Mantuan, old Mantuan! Who understandeth 100 thee not, loves thee not. Ut, re, sol, la, mi, fa. Under pardon, sir, what are the contents? Or, rather, as Horace says in his—What, my soul, verses?

NATHANIEL Ay, sir, and very learned.

HOLOFERNES Let me hear a staff,° a stanze, a verse. 105
Lege, domine.°

[NATHANIEL Reads.]

"If love make me forsworn, how shall I swear to love?

Ah, never faith could hold if not to beauty vowed!

Though to myself forsworn, to thee I'll faithful prove;

Those thoughts to me were oaks, to thee like osiers bowed. 110

Study his bias leaves° and makes his book thine eyes,

Where all those pleasures live that art would comprehend.

If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice:

Well learnèd is that tongue that well can thee commend,

All ignorant that soul that sees thee without wonder;

Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire.

Thy eye Jove's lightning bears, thy voice his dreadful 115 thunder,

Which, not to anger bent, is music and sweet fire.

Celestial as thou art, O pardon love this wrong,

That sings heaven's praise with such an earthly tongue!" 120

HOLOFERNES You find not the apostrophus,° and so miss the accent. Let me supervise the canzonet.° Here are only numbers ratified;° but, for the elegancy, facility, and golden cadence of poesy, caret.° Ovidius Naso was the man; and why indeed "Naso"° but for 125 smelling out the odoriferous flowers of fancy, the jerks of invention?° Imitari° is nothing. So doth the hound his master, the ape his keeper, the tired horse his rider. But, damosella virgin, was this directed to you? 130

JAQUENETTA Ay, sir, from one Monsieur Berowne, one of the strange° queen's lords.

HOLOFERNES I will overglance the superscript.° "To the snow-white hand of the most beauteous Lady Rosaline." I will look again on the intellect° of the 135 letter for the nomination° of the party writing to the person written unto. "Your ladyship's, in all desired employment, Berowne." Sir Nathaniel, this Berowne is one of the votaries° with the king; and here he hath 94-95 Fauste . . . ruminat I pray thee, Faustus, when all the cattle ruminate beneath the cool shade (a quotation from a Latin poem by Mantuan, an Italian Renaissance poet) 98-99 Venetia . . . pretia Venice, Venice, only those who do not see thee do not value thee (Italian) 105 staff stanza 106 Lege, domine Read, master 111 Study . . . leaves the student leaves his favorite studies 121 apostrophus mark of punctuation taking the place of a vowel 122 canzonet song 123 numbers ratified rhythm regularized 124 caret it is deficient 125 Naso nose 127 jerks of invention clever strokes of wit; Imitari to imitate 132 strange foreign 133 superscript address 135 intellect purport 136 nomination name 139 votaries persons who have taken a vow framed° a letter to a sequent° of the stranger queen's, 140 which accidentally, or by the way of progression,° hath miscarried. Trip and go,° my sweet, deliver this paper into the royal hand of the king; it may concern much. Stay not thy compliment;° I forgive thy duty.

Adieu. 145

JAQUENETTA Good Costard, go with me. Sir, God save your life.

COSTARD Have with thee, my girl.

Exit [with JAQUENETTA].

NATHANIEL Sir, you have done this in the fear of God very religiously; and as a certain father saith— 150

HOLOFERNES Sir, tell not me of the father, I do fear colorable colors.° But to return to the verses—did they please you, Sir Nathaniel?

NATHANIEL Marvelous well for the pen.°

HOLOFERNES I do dine today at the father's of a 155 certain pupil of mine, where, if before repast it shall please you to gratify the table with a grace, I will, on my privilege I have with the parents of the foresaid child or pupil, undertake your ben venuto;° where I will prove those verses to be very unlearned, neither 160 savoring of poetry, wit, nor invention. I beseech your society.

NATHANIEL And thank you too, for society (saith the text) is the happiness of life.

HOLOFERNES And, certes,° the text most infallibly 165 concludes it. [To DULL.] Sir, I do invite you too; you shall not say me nay. Pauca verba.° Away! The gentles are at their game, and we will to our recreation.
Exeunt.

[Scene III. The park.]

Enter BEROWNE with a paper in his hand, alone.

BEROWNE The king he is hunting the deer; I am coursing° myself. They have pitched a toil;° I am toiling in a pitch—pitch that defiles. Defile—a foul word! Well, set thee down, sorrow, for so they say the fool said, and so say I, and I the fool. Well proved, 5 wit! By the Lord, this love is as mad as Ajax:° it kills sheep; it kills me—I a sheep. Well proved again
o' my side! I will not love; if I do, hang me! I' faith, I will not. O but her eye! By this light, but for her eye, I would not love her—yes, for her two eyes. 10
Well, I do nothing in the world but lie, and lie in my throat. By heaven, I do love, and it hath taught me to rhyme, and to be melancholy; and here is part of my rhyme, and here my melancholy. Well, she hath one o' my sonnets already. The clown bore it, the fool 15 sent it, and the lady hath it—sweet clown, sweeter fool, sweetest lady! By the world, I would not care a pin if the other three were in. Here comes one with a paper. God give him grace to groan!

He stands aside.

The KING ent'reth [with a paper].

KING Ay me! 20

BEROWNE [Aside.] Shot, by heaven! Proceed, sweet Cupid. Thou hast thumped him with thy bird-bolt° under the left pap.° In faith, secrets!

KING [Reads.]

“So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not

To those fresh morning drops upon the rose, 25

As thy eye-beams when their fresh rays have smote

The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows.

Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright

Through the transparent bosom of the deep

As doth thy face, through tears of mine, give light. 30

Thou shin'st in every tear that I do weep;

No drop but as a coach doth carry thee.

So ridest thou triumphing in my woe.

Do but behold the tears that swell in me,

And they thy glory through my grief will show. 35

But do not love thyself—then thou wilt keep

My tears for glasses° and still make me weep.

O queen of queens, how far dost thou excel

No thought can think, nor tongue of mortal tell!”

How shall she know my griefs? I'll drop the paper. 40

Sweet leaves, shade folly. Who is he comes here?

Enter LONGAVILLE [with a paper]. The KING steps aside.

What, Longaville, and reading! Listen, ear.

BEROWNE

Now, in thy likeness, one more fool appear!

LONGAVILLE

Ay me, I am forsworn.

BEROWNE

Why, he comes in like a perjure,° wearing papers.° 45

KING

In love, I hope—sweet fellowship in shame!

BEROWNE

One drunkard loves another of the name.

LONGAVILLE

Am I the first that have been perjured so?

BEROWNE

I could put thee in comfort—not by two that I know.

Thou makest the triumvir,° the corner-cap° of 50 society,

The shape of love's Tyburn,° that hangs up simplicity.

LONGAVILLE

I fear these stubborn lines lack power to move.

O sweet Maria, empress of my love!

These numbers will I tear, and write in prose.

BEROWNE

O, rhymes are guards° on wanton Cupid's hose; 55
Disfigure not his shop.°

LONGAVILLE

This same shall go.

140 framed devised; sequent follower 141 by . . . progression on its way 142 Trip and go phrase used of a morris dancer 144 Stay . . . compliment do not wait on ceremony 152 colorable colors plausible excuses 154 pen penmanship, or style of writing 159 ben venuto welcome (Italian) 165 certes certainly 167 Pauca verba Few words

IV.iii.2 coursing chasing; pitched a toil set a snare 6 Ajax ancient Greek warrior who, going mad, killed sheep, believing them his enemies

22 bird-bolt arrow for shooting birds 23 pap breast 37 glasses mirrors 45 perjure perjurer; wearing papers a punishment for perjury, to wear a paper on the head as a public shame (presumably Longaville has a sonnet in his hat-band) 50 triumvir triumvirate; corner-cap cap with corners (worn by divines, judges, and scholars) 51 Tyburn place of execution (the triangular-shaped gallows bears a resemblance to a corner-cap) 55 guards ornaments 56 shop organ of generation, or codpiece

He reads the sonnet.

"Did not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye,
'Gainst whom the world cannot hold argument,
Persuade my heart to this false perjury?
Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment. 60
A woman I forswore, but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee.
My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;
Thy grace, being gained, cures all disgrace in me.
Vows are but breath, and breath a vapor is; 65
Then thou, fair sun, which on my earth dost shine,
Exhal'st this vapor-vow; in thee it is.
If broken then, it is no fault of mine;
If by me broke, what fool is not so wise
To lose an oath to win a paradise?" 70

BEROWNE
This is the liver-vein,^o which makes flesh a deity,
A green goose^o a goddess. Pure, pure idolatry.
God amend us, God amend! We are much out o' th' way.^o

Enter DUMAINE [with a paper].

LONGAVILLE
By whom shall I send this?—Company? Stay.
[Steps aside.]

BEROWNE
All hid,^o all hid—an old infant play. 75
Like a demigod here sit I in the sky,
And wretched fools' secrets heedfully o'ereye.
More sacks to the mill^o—O heavens, I have my wish!
Dumaine transformed! Four woodcocks^o in a dish!

DUMAINE
O most divine Kate! 80

BEROWNE
O most profane coxcomb!

DUMAINE
By heaven, the wonder in a mortal eye!

BEROWNE
By earth, she is not, corporal.^o There you lie!

DUMAINE
Her amber hairs for foul hath amber quoted.^o

BEROWNE
An amber-colored raven was well noted. 85

DUMAINE
As upright as the cedar.

BEROWNE
Stoop,^o I say—
Her shoulder is with child.^o

DUMAINE
As fair as day.

BEROWNE
Ay, as some days; but then no sun must shine.

DUMAINE
O that I had my wish!

LONGAVILLE
And I had mine!

71 liver-vein vein coming from the liver (the place of the origin of love) 72 green goose goose born the previous autumn (and so, a young girl) 73 out . . . way on the wrong track 75 All hid formula from a child's game 78 More . . . mill more yet to do 79 woodcocks silly birds 83 corporal officer (with a pun on the word for bodily, human) 84 Her . . . quoted Her amber-colored hair made amber look ugly by contrast 86 Stoop stooped 87 with child rounded

KING

And I mine too, good Lord! 90

BEROWNE

Amen, so I had mine! Is not that a good word?

DUMAINE

I would forget her, but a fever she Reigns in my blood, and will rememb' red be.

BEROWNE

A fever in your blood? Why, then incision
Would let her out in saucers. Sweet misprision!^o 95

DUMAINE

Once more I'll read the ode that I have writ.

BEROWNE

Once more I'll mark how love can vary wit.

DUMAINE reads his sonnet.

DUMAINE "On a day—alack the day!—
Love, whose month is ever May,
Spied a blossom passing fair 100
Playing in the wanton air.
Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, can passage find;
That the lover, sick to death,
Wished himself the heaven's breath. 105
Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow;
Air, would I might triumph so!
But, alack, my hand is sworn Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn. 110
Vow, alack, for youth unmeet,
Youth so apt to pluck a sweet!
Do not call it sin in me,
That I am forsworn for thee;
Thou for whom Jove would swear
Juno but an Ethiop^o were, 115
And deny himself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love."

This will I send, and something else more plain,
That shall express my true love's fasting pain.^o
O, would the king, Berowne, and Longaville 120
Were lovers too! Ill, to example ill,
Would from my forehead wipe a perjured note,^o
For none offend where all alike do dote.

LONGAVILLE [Advancing.]

Dumaine, thy love is far from charity,
That in love's grief desir'st society. 125
You may look pale, but I should blush, I know,
To be o'erheard and taken napping so.

KING [Advancing.]

Come, sir, you blush! As his your case is such;
You chide at him, offending twice as much. 130
You do not love Maria! Longaville
Did never sonnet for her sake compile,
Nor never lay his wreathèd arms athwart
His loving bosom to keep down his heart.
I have been closely shrouded in this bush,
And marked you both, and for you both did blush. 135
I heard your guilty rhymes, observed your fashion,
Saw sighs reek^o from you, noted well your passion.

95 misprision mistake 115 Ethiop black person 119 fasting pain pain caused by deprivation 121–22 Ill . . . note wickedness, not liking to make itself an example, would remove from me the papers I bear as the punishment for perjury 137 reek exhale

"Ay me!" says one; "O Jove!" the other cries.
One, her hairs were gold; crystal, the other's eyes.

[To LONGAVILLE.]

You would for paradise break faith and troth,

[To DUMAINE.]

And Jove, for your love, would infringe an oath.
What will Berowne say when that he shall hear
Faith infringèd, which such zeal did swear?
How will he scorn, how will he spend his wit!
How will he triumph, leap and laugh at it!
For all the wealth that ever I did see,
I would not have him know so much by me.^o

BEROWNE [Advancing.]

Now step I forth to whip hypocrisy.
Ah, good my liege, I pray thee pardon me.
Good heart, what grace hast thou, thus to reprove
These worms for loving, that art most in love?
Your eyes do make no coaches;^o in your tears
There is no certain princess that appears.
You'll not be perjured, 'tis a hateful thing.
Tush, none but minstrels like of sonneting!
But are you not ashamed? Nay, are you not,
All three of you, to be thus much o'ershot?^o
You found his mote, the king your mote did see;
But I a beam^o do find in each of three.
O what a scene of fool'ry have I seen,
Of sighs, of groans, of sorrow, and of teen!^o
O me, with what strict patience have I sat,
To see a king transformèd to a gnat!
To see great Hercules whipping a gig,^o
And profound Solomon to tune a jig,
And Nestor^o play at push-pin^o with the boys,
And critic Timon^o laugh at idle toys!
Where lies thy grief? O, tell me, good Dumaine.
And, gentle Longaville, where lies thy pain?
And where my liege's? All about the breast.
A caudle,^o ho!

KING Too bitter is thy jest.

Are we betrayed thus to thy overview?

BEROWNE

Not you by me, but I betrayed to you;
I that am honest, I that hold it sin
To break the vow I am engagèd in,
I am betrayed by keeping company
With men like you, men of inconstancy.
When shall you see me write a thing in rhyme?
Or groan for Joan? Or spend a minute's time
In pruning^o me? When shall you hear that I
Will praise a hand, a foot, a face, an eye,
A gait, a state, a brow, a breast, a waist,
A leg, a limb—

KING Soft!^o Whither away so fast?

A true^o man or a thief, that gallops so?

147 by me concerning me 152 coaches for love to ride in (as in line 32) 157 o'ershot wide of the mark 158–59 mote . . . beam the contrast is between small and large faults (see Matthew 7:3–5; Luke 6:41–42) 161 teen grief 164 gig top 166 Nestor ancient Greek sage; push-pin child's game 167 critic Timon Greek misanthrope 171 caudle healing drink for an invalid 180 pruning preening 183 Soft Wait a minute! (an exclamation) 184 true honest

BEROWNE

I post^o from love. Good lover, let me go.

185

Enter JAQUENETTA and [COSTARD the] clown.

140 JAQUENETTA

God bless the king!

KING

What present hast thou there?

COSTARD

Some certain treason.

KING

What makes^o treason here?

COSTARD

145 Nay, it makes nothing, sir.

KING

If it mar nothing neither,

The treason and you go in peace away together.

JAQUENETTA

I beseech your grace let this letter be read.

190

Our parson misdoubts^o it; 'twas treason, he said.

150 KING Berowne, read it over.

He [BEROWNE] reads the letter.

Where hadst thou it?

JAQUENETTA Of Costard.

155 KING Where hadst thou it?

195

COSTARD Of Dun Adramadio, Dun Adramadio.

[BEROWNE tears the letter.]

KING

160 How now, what is in you? Why dost thou tear it?

BEROWNE

A toy, my liege, a toy. Your grace needs not fear it.

LONGAVILLE

It did move him to passion, and therefore let's hear it.

165 DUMAINE [Gathering up the pieces.]

It is Berowne's writing, and here is his name.

200

BEROWNE [To COSTARD.]

Ah, you whoreson loggerhead,^o you were born to do me shame!

170 Guilty, my lord, guilty. I confess, I confess.

KING What?

BEROWNE

That you three fools lacked me fool to make up the mess.^o

He, he, and you—and you, my liege, and I,

205

Are pick-purses in love, and we deserve to die.

175 O dismiss this audience, and I shall tell you more.

DUMAINE

Now the number is even.

BEROWNE

True, true, we are four.

Will these turtles^o be gone?

180 KING

Hence, sirs, away!

COSTARD

Walk aside the true folk, and let the traitors stay.

210

[Exeunt COSTARD and JAQUENETTA.]

BEROWNE

Sweet lords, sweet lovers, O let us embrace!

As true we are as flesh and blood can be.

The sea will ebb and flow, heaven show his face;

Young blood doth not obey an old decree.

185 post ride in haste 187 makes does 191 misdoubts mistrusts 201 whoreson loggerhead rascally blockhead 204 mess party of four at table 209 turtles turtledoves, lovers

We cannot cross° the cause why we were born;
Therefore of all hands must we be forsworn.

KING

What, did these rent° lines show some love of thine?

BEROWNE

Did they? quoth you. Who sees the heavenly Rosaline,
That, like a rude and savage man of Inde
At the first op'ning of the gorgeous East,
Bows not his vassal head and, strooken blind,
Kisses the base ground with obedient breast!
What peremptory° eagle-sighted eye
Dares look upon the heaven of her brow
That is not blinded by her majesty?

KING

What zeal, what fury, hath inspired thee now?
My love, her mistress, is a gracious moon;
She, an attending star, scarce seen a light.

BEROWNE

My eyes are then no eyes, nor I Berowne.
O, but for my love, day would turn to night!
Of all complexions the culled sovereignty°
Do meet, as at a fair, in her fair cheek,
Where several worthies° make one dignity,
Where nothing wants° that want itself doth seek.
Lend me the flourish° of all gentle tongues—
Fie, painted rhetoric!° O, she needs it not!
To things of sale° a seller's praise belongs:
She passes praise; then praise too short doth blot.
A withered hermit, fivescore winters worn,
Might shake off fifty, looking in her eye.
Beauty doth varnish° age as if new-born,
And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy.
O, 'tis the sun that maketh all things shine.

KING

By heaven, thy love is black as ebony!

BEROWNE

Is ebony like her? O wood divine!
A wife of such wood were felicity.
O, who can give an oath? Where is a book?
That I may swear beauty doth beauty lack
If that she learn not of her eye to look.
No face is fair that is not full so black.

KING

O paradox! Black is the badge of hell,
The hue of dungeons, and the school of night;°
And beauty's crest becomes the heavens well.°

BEROWNE

Devils soonest tempt, resembling spirits of light.
O, if in black my lady's brows be decked,
It mourns that painting and usurping° hair
Should ravish doters with a false aspect;°
And therefore is she born to make black fair.

215

Her favor° turns the fashion of the days,
For native blood° is counted painting now;
And therefore red that would avoid dispraise
Paints itself black to imitate her brow.

260

DUMAINE

To look like her are chimney sweepers black.

LONGAVILLE

220

And since her time are colliers° counted bright.

KING

And Ethiops of their sweet complexion crack.°

265

DUMAINE

Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light.

225

BEROWNE

Your mistresses dare never come in rain,
For fear their colors should be washed away.

KING

'Twere good yours did; for, sir, to tell you plain,
I'll find a fairer face not washed today.

270

BEROWNE

230

I'll prove her fair or talk till doomsday here.

KING

No devil will fright thee then so much as she.

DUMAINE

I never knew man hold vile stuff so dear.

235

LONGAVILLE

Look, here's thy love; [showing his shoe] my foot° and her face see.

BEROWNE

240

O, if the streets were paved with thine eyes,
Her feet were much too dainty for such tread.

275

DUMAINE

O vile! Then, as she goes, what upward lies
The street should see as she walked overhead.

KING

But what of this? Are we not all in love?

BEROWNE

245

O, nothing so sure, and thereby all forsworn.

280

KING

Then leave this chat, and, good Berowne, now prove
Our loving lawful and our faith not torn.

DUMAINE

250

Ay marry, there, some flattery for this evil!

LONGAVILLE

O, some authority how to proceed!
Some tricks, some quilllets,° how to cheat the devil!

285

DUMAINE

Some salve for perjury.

BEROWNE

255

O, 'tis more than need!

Have at you, then, affection's men-at-arms!°
Consider what you first did swear unto.

To fast, to study, and to see no woman—
Flat treason 'gainst the kingly state of youth.

290

Say, can you fast? Your stomachs are too young,

And abstinence engenders maladies.

[And where that° you have vowed to study, lords,

215 cross thwart 217 rent damaged 223 peremptory resolute 231 culled sovereignty chosen as the best 233 worthies good qualities 234 wants lacks 235 flourish adornment 236 painted rhetoric extravagant speech 237 of sale for sale 241 varnish lend freshness 252 school of night some editors emend "school" to "suit" or to "shade," but perhaps the term means a place for learning dark things 253 beauty's . . . well true beauty, which is bright, is heavenly, but if blackness is taken as the sign of beauty, it would be ironic to link beauty with heaven, which is the source of light 256 usurping false 257 aspect appearance

259 favor complexion 260 native blood naturally red complexion 264 colliers coalmen 265 crack boast 274 my foot he is wearing black shoes 285 quilllets subtleties 287 affection's men-at-arms love's warriors 293 where that whereas (after writing lines 293–314, here bracketed, Shakespeare apparently decided he could do better, and rewrote the passage in the ensuing lines, but the printer mistakenly printed both versions)

In that each of you have forsworn his book,
 Can you still dream and pore and thereon look? 295
 For when would you, my lord, or you, or you,
 Have found the ground of study's excellence
 Without the beauty of a woman's face?
 From women's eyes this doctrine I derive:
 They are the ground, the books, the academes,^o 300
 From whence doth spring the true Promethean fire.^o
 Why, universal plodding poisons^o up
 The nimble spirits in the arteries,
 As motion and long-during^o action tires
 The sinewy vigor of the traveler. 305
 Now for not looking on a woman's face,
 You have in that forsworn the use of eyes,
 And study too, the causer of your vow;
 For where is any author in the world
 Teaches such beauty as a woman's eye?
 Learning is but an adjunct to ourself,
 And where we are our learning likewise is.
 Then when ourselves we see in ladies' eyes,
 Do we not likewise see our learning there?]
 O, we have made a vow to study, lords,
 And in that vow we have forsworn our books;
 For when would you, my liege, or you, or you,
 In leaden contemplation have found out
 Such fiery numbers^o as the prompting eyes
 Of beauty's tutors have enriched you with?
 Other slow arts entirely keep the brain,
 And therefore, finding barren practisers,
 Scarce show a harvest of their heavy toil;
 But love, first learnèd in a lady's eyes,
 Lives not alone immurèd in the brain, 325
 But with the motion of all elements,^o
 Courses as swift as thought in every power,
 And gives to every power a double power
 Above their functions and their offices.
 It adds a precious seeing to the eye:
 A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind.
 A lover's ear will hear the lowest sound,
 When the suspicious head of theft^o is stopped.
 Love's feeling is more soft and sensible
 Than are the tender horns of cockled^o snails. 335
 Love's tongue proves dainty Bacchus gross in taste.
 For valor, is not love a Hercules,
 Still climbing trees in the Hesperides?^o
 Subtle as Sphinx; as sweet and musical
 As bright Apollo's lute, strung with his hair. 340
 And when love speaks, the voice of all the gods
 Make heaven drowsy with the harmony.
 Never durst poet touch a pen to write
 Until his ink were temp'red with love's sighs.
 O, then his lines would ravish savage ears
 And plant in tyrants mild humility.
 From women's eyes this doctrine I derive.
 They sparkle still the right Promethean fire;
 They are the books, the arts, the academes,

That show, contain, and nourish all the world; 350
 Else none at all in aught proves excellent.
 Then fools you were these women to forswear,
 Or, keeping what is sworn, you will prove fools.
 For wisdom's sake, a word that all men love,
 Or for love's sake, a word that loves all men, 355
 Or for men's sake, the authors of these women,
 Or women's sake, by whom we men are men—
 Let us once lose our oaths to find ourselves,
 Or else we lose ourselves to keep our oaths.
 It is religion to be thus forsworn, 360
 For charity itself fulfills the law,^o
 And who can sever love from charity?

KING

Saint Cupid then! And, soldiers, to the field!

BEROWNE

Advance your standards, and upon them, lords!
 Pell-mell, down with them! But be first advised, 365
 In conflict that you get the sun of them.^o

LONGAVILLE

Now to plain-dealing. Lay these glozes^o by.
 Shall we resolve to woo these girls of France? 315

KING

And win them too! Therefore let us devise
 Some entertainment for them in their tents. 370

BEROWNE

First from the park let us conduct them thither;
 Then homeward every man attach the hand
 Of his fair mistress. In the afternoon
 We will with some strange pastime solace them,
 Such as the shortness of the time can shape; 375
 For revels, dances, masks, and merry hours
 Forerun fair love, strewing her way with flowers.

KING

Away, away! No time shall be omitted
 That will be time,^o and may by us be fitted.

330 BEROWNE

Allons!^o Allons! Sowed cockle reaped no corn,^o 380
 And justice always whirls in equal measure.
 Light wenches may prove plagues to men forsworn;
 If so, our copper buys no better treasure. [Exeunt.]

[A C T V]

[Scene I. The park.]

Enter [HOLOFERNES] the pedant, [NATHANIEL] the curate, and DULL [the constable].

345 HOLOFERNES Satis quid sufficit.^o

NATHANIEL I praise God for you, sir. Your reasons^o at dinner have been sharp and sententious,^o pleasant without scurrility, witty without affection,^o audacious

300 academes academies 301 Promethean fire fire stolen from heaven by Prometheus 302 poisons some editors emend to "prisons" 304 long-during long-lasting 319 fiery numbers passionate verses 326 with . . . elements with the force of all the components of the universe 333 the . . .
 theft a thief's hearing, suspicious of every sound 335 cockled in shells 338 Hesperides garden where Hercules picked the golden apples

361 charity . . . law Romans 13:8, "He that loveth another hath fulfilled the law" 366 get . . . them approach when the sun is in their eyes 367 glozes trivial comments 379 be time come to pass 380 Allons Let's go! (French); Sowed
 . . . corn if weeds are sown, wheat is not reaped
 V.i.1 Satis quid sufficit Enough is as good as a feast 2 reasons discourses 3 sententious full of meaning 4 affection affectation

without impudency, learned without opinion,^o and ⁵ strange without heresy. I did converse this quondam^o day with a companion of the king's, who is intituled, nominated, or called, Don Adriano de Armado.

HOLOFERNES Novi hominem tanquam te.^o His humor is lofty, his discourse peremptory,^o his tongue ¹⁰ filed,^o his eye ambitious, his gait majestic, and his general behavior vain, ridiculous, and thrasonical.^o
He is too picked,^o too spruce, too affected, too odd,
as it were, too peregrinate,^o as I may call it.

NATHANIEL A most singular and choice epithet. ¹⁵

Draws out his table-book.^o

HOLOFERNES He draweth out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple^o of his argument. I abhor such fanatical phantasies,^o such insociable^o and point-devise^o companions; such rackers^o of orthography as to speak "dout" fine when he should ²⁰ say "doubt," "det" when he should pronounce
"debt"—d, e, b, t, not d, e, t. He clepeth^o a calf
"cauf," half "hauf," neighbor vocatur^o "nebor," neigh abbreviated "ne." This is abominable, which he would call "abominable." It insinuateth me of ²⁵ insanie.^o Ne intelligis, domine?^o To make frantic, lunatic.

NATHANIEL Laus Deo bone intelligo.^o

HOLOFERNES Bone?^o Bone for bene! Priscian^o a little scratched;^o 'twill serve. ³⁰

Enter [ARMADO the] braggart, [MOTH, his] boy, [and COSTARD the clown].

NATHANIEL Videsne quis venit?^o

HOLOFERNES Video, et gaudeo.^o

ARMADO [To MOTH.] Chirrah!^o

HOLOFERNES Quare^o "chirrah," not "sirrah"?

ARMADO Men of peace, well encount' red. ³⁵

HOLOFERNES Most military sir, salutation.

MOTH [Aside to COSTARD.] They have been at a great feast of languages and stol'n the scraps.

COSTARD O, they have lived long on the alms-basket^o of words. I marvel thy master hath not eaten ⁴⁰ thee for a word; for thou art not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatibus.^o Thou art easier swallowed than a flapdragon.^o

MOTH Peace! The peal^o begins.

ARMADO Monsieur, are you not lett' red?^o ⁴⁵ opinion dogmatism 6 quondam former 9 Novi . . . te

I know the man as well as I know you 10 peremptory decisive 11 filed polished 12 thrasonical boastful
13 picked refined 14 peregrinate foreign in manner 15 s.d. table-book tablet (stage directions are often, as here, in the imperative) 17 staple fiber 18 phantasies wild imagers; insociable impossible to associate with 19 point- devise perfectly correct; rackers torturers 22 clepeth calls 23 vocatur is called 25-26 insinuateth . . . insanie suggests insanity to me 26 Ne intelligis, domine Do you not understand, sir? 28 Laus . . . intelligo Praise be to God, I well understand 29 Bone probably a mixture of Latin bene and French bon; Priscian Latin grammarian of sixth century
A.D. 30 scratched damaged 31 Videsne quis venit Do you see who is coming? 32 Video, et gaudeo I see, and I rejoice 33 Chirrah dialect form for sirrah 34 Quare why 39-40 alms-basket basket used at feasts to collect scraps from the table for the poor 42 honorificabilitudinitatibus Latin tongue twister, thought to be the longest word known 43 flapdragon burning raisin or plum floating in liquor, and so drunk 44 peal of bells 45 lett' red man of letters

MOTH Yes, yes! He teaches boys the hornbook.^o What is a, b, spelled backward with the horn on his head?

HOLOFERNES Ba, pueritia,^o with a horn added.

MOTH Ba, most silly sheep with a horn. You hear his learning. ⁵⁰

HOLOFERNES Quis,^o quis, thou consonant?

MOTH The last of the five vowels, if you repeat them; or the fifth, if I.

HOLOFERNES I will repeat them: a, e, i—

MOTH The sheep. The other two concludes it—o, u. ⁵⁵

ARMADO Now, by the salt wave of the Mediterranean, a sweet touch, a quick renew^o of wit! Snip, snap, quick and home! It rejoiceth my intellect. True wit!

MOTH Offered by a child to an old man—which is wit-old.^o ⁶⁰

HOLOFERNES What is the figure?^o What is the figure?

MOTH Horns.

HOLOFERNES Thou disputes like an infant. Go whip thy gig.^o

MOTH Lend me your horn to make one, and I will ⁶⁵ whip about your infamy manu cita.^o A gig of a cuckold's horn.

COSTARD And^o I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst have it to buy gingerbread. Hold,
there is the very remuneration I had of thy master, ⁷⁰ thou halfpenny purse of wit, thou pigeon-egg of discretion. O, and the heavens were so pleased that thou wert but my bastard, what a joyful father wouldest thou make me! Go to, thou hast it ad dunghill,^o at the fingers' ends, as they say. ⁷⁵

HOLOFERNES O, I smell false Latin! "Dunghill" for unguem.

ARMADO Arts-man,^o preambulate.^o We will be singled from the barbarous. Do you not educate youth at the charge-house^o on the top of the mountain? ⁸⁰

HOLOFERNES Or mons, the hill.

ARMADO At your sweet pleasure, for the mountain.

HOLOFERNES I do, sans question.

ARMADO Sir, it is the king's most sweet pleasure and affection to congratulate the princess at her pavilion ⁸⁵
in the posteriors^o of this day, which the rude multitude call the afternoon.

HOLOFERNES The posterior of the day, most generous sir, is liable, congruent, and measurable^o for the afternoon. The word is well culled, chose, sweet and ⁹⁰
apt, I do assure you, sir, I do assure.

ARMADO Sir, the king is a noble gentleman, and my familiar,^o I do assure ye, very good friend. For what is inward^o between us, let it pass. I do beseech thee, remember thy courtesy.^o I beseech thee apparel thy ⁹⁵ head. And among other importunate and most

46 hornbook parchment with alphabet and numbers, covered with transparent horn, for teaching spelling and counting 48 pueritia childishness 51 Quis who 57 renew thrust
60 wit-old mentally feeble (with pun on wittol = cuckold)
61 figure figure of speech 64 gig top 66 manu cita with a swift hand 68 And if 74-75 ad dunghill perhaps a school-boy's corruption of the proverb ad unguem = to the fingernail, meaning "precisely" 78 Arts-man learned man; preambu- late walk forth 80 charge-house school (perhaps an allusion to a specific school on a hill, mentioned by Erasmus) 86 posteriors hind parts 89 liable, congruent, measurable all synonyms for suitable 93 familiar close friend 94 inward private 95 remember thy courtesy possibly, remove your hat when the king's name is mentioned serious designs, and of great import indeed, too—but let that pass; for I must tell thee, it will please his grace, by the world, sometime to lean upon my poor shoulder, and with his royal finger thus dally with my excrement,^o with my mustachio—but, sweet heart, let that pass. By the world, I recount no fable!

 Some certain special honors it pleaseth his greatness to impart to Armado, a soldier, a man of travel, that hath seen the world—but let that pass. The very all of all is (but, sweet heart, I do implore secrecy) that the king would have me present the princess (sweet chuck) with some delightful ostentation, or show, or pageant, or antic,^o or firework. Now, understanding that the curate and your sweet self are good at such eruptions and sudden breaking out of mirth, as it were, I have acquainted you withal, to the end to crave your assistance.

HOLOFERNES Sir, you shall present before her the Nine Worthies.^o Sir Nathaniel, as concerning some entertainment of time, some show in the posterior of this day, to be rend'red by our assistance, the king's command, and this most gallant, illustrate, and learned gentleman, before the princess—I say, none so fit as to present the Nine Worthies.

NATHANIEL Where will you find men worthy enough to present them?

HOLOFERNES Joshua, yourself; myself; and this gallant gentleman, Judas Maccabaeus; this swain, because of his great limb or joint, shall pass^o Pompey
 the Great; the page, Hercules—

ARMADO Pardon, sir—error! He is not quantity enough for that Worthy's thumb; he is not so big as the end of his club.

HOLOFERNES Shall I have audience?^o He shall present Hercules in minority.^o His enter and exit shall be strangling a snake; and I will have an apology^o for that purpose.

MOTH An excellent device! So if any of the audience hiss, you may cry, "Well done, Hercules! Now thou crushest the snake!" That is the way to make an offense gracious, though few have the grace to do it.

ARMADO For the rest of the Worthies?

HOLOFERNES I will play three myself.

MOTH Thrice-worthy gentleman!

ARMADO Shall I tell you a thing?

HOLOFERNES We attend.

ARMADO We will have, if this fadge^o not, an antic.
 I beseech you, follow.

HOLOFERNES Via,^o goodman Dull! Thou hast spoken no word all this while.

DULL Nor understood none neither, sir.

HOLOFERNES Allons, we will employ thee.

DULL I'll make one in a dance, or so; or I will play on the tabor^o to the Worthies, and let them dance the hay.^o

HOLOFERNES Most dull, honest Dull! To our sport, away! Exeunt.

101 excrement that which grows out (such as hair, nails, feathers) 109 antic fanciful pageant 115 Nine Worthies
 traditionally, Hector, Caesar, Joshua, David, Judas Maccabaeus, Alexander, King Arthur, Charlemagne, Godfrey of Boulogne;
 here Hercules and Pompey are included 125 pass represent 130 have audience be heard 131 minority early youth 132 apology justification 143 fadge succeed 145 Via come on (Italian) 150 tabor small drum; hay country dance

[Scene II. The park.]

Enter the ladies [the PRINCESS, KATHARINE, ROSA-LINE, and MARIA].

PRINCESS

Sweet hearts, we shall be rich ere we depart
 If fairings^o come thus plentifully in.
 A lady walled about with diamonds!
 Look you what I have from the loving king.

ROSALINE

Madam, came nothing else along with that?

PRINCESS

Nothing but this? Yes, as much love in rhyme
 As would be crammed up in a sheet of paper,
 Writ o' both sides the leaf, margent^o and all,
 That he was fain^o to seal on Cupid's name.

ROSALINE

That was the way to make his godhead wax,^o
 For he hath been five thousand year a boy.

KATHARINE

Ay, and a shrowd^o unhappy gallows^o too.

ROSALINE

You'll ne'er be friends with him: 'a killed your sister.

KATHARINE

He made her melancholy, sad, and heavy;
 And so she died. Had she been light, like you,
 Of such a merry, nimble, stirring spirit,
 She might ha' been a grandam ere she died.
 And so may you, for a light heart lives long.

ROSALINE

What's your dark meaning, mouse, of this light word?

KATHARINE

A light condition in a beauty dark.

ROSALINE

We need more light to find your meaning out.

KATHARINE

You'll mar the light by taking it in snuff;^o
 Therefore, I'll darkly end the argument.

ROSALINE

Look what^o you do, you do it still i' th' dark.

KATHARINE

So do not you, for you are a light wench.

ROSALINE

Indeed I weigh^o not you, and therefore light.

KATHARINE

You weigh me not? O, that's you care not for me!

ROSALINE

Great reason, for past care is still past cure.

PRINCESS

Well bandied^o both! A set of wit well played.
 But Rosaline, you have a favor too—
 Who sent it? And what is it?

ROSALINE

I would you knew.
 And if my face were but as fair as yours,
 My favor were as great. Be witness this.
 Nay, I have verses too, I thank Berowne;
 The numbers^o true, and, were the numb'ring^o too,

V.ii.2 fairings presents 8 margent margin 9 fain eager 10 wax grow (and with a pun on sealing wax) 12 shrowd accursed; gallows one fit to be hanged 22 taking . . . snuff being annoyed 24 Look what whatever 26 weigh value at a certain rate 29 bandied hit back and forth (figure from tennis) 35 numbers meter; numb'ring estimate

I were the fairest goddess on the ground.
 I am compared to twenty thousand fairs.^o
 O, he hath drawn my picture in his letter!
 PRINCESS Anything like?
 ROSALINE Much in the letters, nothing in the praise. 40
 PRINCESS Beauteous as ink—a good conclusion.
 KATHARINE Fair as a text B in a copybook.
 ROSALINE
 'Ware^o pencils, ho! Let me not die your debtor,
 My red dominical,^o my golden letter.
 O, that your face were not so full of O's!^o 45
 PRINCESS
 A pox of^o that jest, and I beshrow all shrows!^o
 But Katharine, what was sent to you from fair
 Dumaine?
 KATHARINE
 Madam, this glove.
 PRINCESS Did he not send you twain?
 KATHARINE
 Yes, madam; and moreover,
 Some thousand verses of a faithful lover. 50
 A huge translation of hypocrisy,
 Vilely compiled, profound simplicity.^o
 MARIA
 This, and these pearls, to me sent Longaville.
 The letter is too long by half a mile.
 PRINCESS
 I think no less. Dost thou not wish in heart 55
 The chain were longer and the letter short?
 MARIA
 Ay, or I would these hands might never part.
 PRINCESS
 We are wise girls to mock our lovers so.
 ROSALINE
 They are worse fools to purchase mocking so.
 That same Berowne I'll torture ere I go. 60
 O that I knew he were but in by th' week!^o
 How I would make him fawn, and beg, and seek,
 And wait the season, and observe the times,
 And spend his prodigal wits in bootless rhymes,
 And shape his service wholly to my hests,^o 65
 And make him proud to make me proud that jests!
 So pertauntlike^o would I o'ersway his state^o
 That he should be my fool, and I his fate.
 PRINCESS
 None are so surely caught, when they are caught,
 As wit turned fool. Folly, in wisdom hatched, 70
 Hath wisdom's warrant and the help of school
 And wit's own grace to grace a learned fool.
 ROSALINE
 The blood of youth burns not with such excess
 As gravity's revolt to wantonness.
 MARIA
 Folly in fools bears not so strong a note 75
 As fool'ry in the wise when wit doth dote;
 Since all the power thereof it doth apply
 To prove, by wit, worth in simplicity.

37 fairs beautiful women 43 'Ware beware 44 red dominical red S (for Sunday, the Lord's Day) 45 O's smallpox scars 46 A pox of may a plague strike; beshrow all shrows curse all shrews 52 simplicity simple-mindedness 61 in . . . week trapped 65 hests commands 67 pertauntlike like a winning hand (Pair-taunt) in a certain card game; o'ersway his state overrule his power

Enter BOYET.

PRINCESS

Here comes Boyet, and mirth is in his face.

BOYET

O, I am stabbed with laughter! Where's her grace? 80

PRINCESS

Thy news, Boyet?

BOYET

Prepare, madam, prepare!
 Arm, wenches, arm! Encounters mounted are Against your peace. Love doth approach disguised, Armèd in arguments; you'll be surprised.
 Muster your wits; stand in your own defense, 85
 Or hide your heads like cowards and fly hence.

PRINCESS

Saint Denis^o to Saint Cupid! What are they
 That charge their breath against us? Say, scout, say.

BOYET

Under the cool shade of a sycamore
 I thought to close mine eyes some half an hour, 90
 When, lo, to interrupt my purposed rest,
 Toward that shade I might behold addrest^o
 The king and his companions! Warily
 I stole into a neighbor thicket by,
 And overheard what you shall overhear— 95
 That, by and by, disguised they will be here.
 Their herald is a pretty knavish page
 That well by heart hath conned his embassy.^o
 Action and accent did they teach him there:
 "Thus must thou speak, and thus thy body bear." 100
 And ever and anon they made a doubt^o
 Presence majestical would put him out;
 "For," quoth the king, "an angel shalt thou see,
 Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously."
 The boy replied, "An angel is not evil; 105
 I should have feared her had she been a devil."
 With that all laughed and clapped him on the shoulder,
 Making the bold wag by their praises bolder.
 One rubbed his elbow thus, and fleered,^o and swore
 A better speech was never spoke before. 110
 Another, with his finger and his thumb,
 Cried, "Via, we will do't, come what will come!"
 The third he capered and cried, "All goes well!"
 The fourth turned on the toe,^o and down he fell.
 With that they all did tumble on the ground 115
 With such a zealous laughter, so profound,
 That in this spleen^o ridiculous appears,
 To check their folly, passion's solemn tears.

PRINCESS

But what, but what? Come they to visit us?

BOYET

They do, they do, and are apparelled thus— 120
 Like Muscovites or Russians, as I guess.
 Their purpose is to parley,^o court, and dance,
 And every one his love-feat^o will advance
 Unto his several mistress, which they'll know
 By favors several which they did bestow. 125

87 Saint Denis patron saint of France 92 addrest approaching 98 conned his embassy learned his commission 101 made a doubt expressed a fear 109 fleered grinned 114 turned . . . toe danced for happiness 117 spleen excess of mirth 122 parley hold a conference 123 love-feat exploit prompted by love

PRINCESS

And will they so? The gallants shall be tasked;^o
 For, ladies, we will every one be masked,
 And not a man of them shall have the grace,
 Despite of suit,^o to see a lady's face.
 Hold, Rosaline, this favor thou shalt wear,
 And then the king will court thee for his dear.
 Hold, take thou this, my sweet, and give me thine;
 So shall Berowne take me for Rosaline.
 And change you favors too; so shall your loves
 Woo contrary, deceived by these removes.^o

ROSALINE

Come on, then; wear the favors most in sight.^o

KATHARINE

But in this changing what is your intent?

PRINCESS

The effect of my intent is to cross^o theirs.
 They do it but in mockery merriment,
 And mock for mock is only my intent.
 Their several counsels they unbosom^o shall
 To loves mistook and so be mocked withal
 Upon the next occasion that we meet,
 With visages displayed, to talk and greet.

ROSALINE

But shall we dance if they desire us to't?

PRINCESS

No, to the death^o we will not move a foot,
 Nor to their penned speech render we no grace,
 But while 'tis spoke each turn away her face.

BOYET

Why, that contempt will kill the speaker's heart,
 And quite divorce his memory from his part.

PRINCESS

Therefore I do it, and I make no doubt
 The rest will e'er come in if he be out.
 There's no such sport as sport by sport o'erthrown,
 To make theirs ours, and ours none but our own.
 So shall we stay, mocking intended game,^o
 And they, well mocked, depart away with shame.

Sound trumpet.

BOYET

The trumpet sounds. Be masked—the maskers come.
[The LADIES mask.]

Enter BLACKAMOORS with music; [MOTH] the boy, with a speech, and [the KING, BEROWNE, and] the rest of the LORDS [in Russian dress and] disguised.

MOTH

"All hail, the richest beauties on the earth!"

BOYET

Beauties no richer than rich taffeta.

MOTH

"A holy parcel of the fairest dames,

The LADIES turn their backs to him.

That ever turned their backs to mortal views!"

BEROWNE "Their eyes," villain, "their eyes"!

MOTH

"That ever turned their eyes to mortal views!
 Out—"

BOYET True. "Out" indeed!

165

MOTH

130 "Out of your favors, heavenly spirits, vouchsafe
 Not to behold"—

BEROWNE "Once to behold," rogue!

MOTH

135 "Once to behold with your sunbeamèd eyes, —with your sunbeamèd eyes"— 170

BOYET

They will not answer to that epithet.

You were best call it "daughter-beamèd eyes."

MOTH

They do not mark me, and that brings^o me out.

BEROWNE

Is this your perfectness? Be gone, you rogue!

140 [Exit MOTH.]

ROSALINE

What would these strangers? Know their minds,
 Boyet. 175

If they do speak our language, 'tis our will
 That some plain man recount their purposes.

145 Know what they would.

BOYET

What would you with the princess?

BEROWNE

Nothing but peace and gentle visitation. 180

ROSALINE

What would they, say they?

150 BOYET

Nothing but peace and gentle visitation.

ROSALINE

Why, that they have, and bid them so be gone.

BOYET

She says you have it and you may be gone.

155 KING

Say to her, we have measured many miles,
 To tread a measure^o with her on this grass. 185

BOYET

They say that they have measured many a mile,
 To tread a measure with you on this grass.

ROSALINE

It is not so. Ask them how many inches
 Is in one mile. If they have measured many,
 The measure then of one is eas'ly told. 190

BOYET

If to come hither you have measured miles,
 And many miles, the princess bids you tell
 How many inches doth fill up one mile.

BEROWNE

Tell her we measure them by weary steps. 195

160 BOYET

She hears herself.

ROSALINE

How many weary steps,
 Of many weary miles you have o'ergone,
 Are numb'ed in the travel of one mile?

BEROWNE

We number nothing that we spend for you.
 Our duty is so rich, so infinite, 200

173 brings puts 186 measure stately dance

126 tasked tested 129 Despite of suit in spite of his pleading
 135 removes changes 136 most in sight conspicuously 138 cross thwart 141 unbosom confide 146 to the death as long as we live 155 game sport

That we may do it still without accompt.^o
 Vouchsafe to show the sunshine of your face,
 That we like savages may worship it.

ROSALINE

My face is but a moon, and clouded too.

KING

Blessèd are clouds, to do as such clouds do. 205
 Vouchsafe, bright moon, and these thy stars, to shine
 (Those clouds removed) upon our watery eyne.^o

ROSALINE

O vain petitioner, beg a greater matter!
 Thou now requests but moonshine in the water.^o

KING

Then in our measure do but vouchsafe one change.^o 210
 Thou bid'st me beg; this begging is not strange.^o

ROSALINE

Play, music then. Nay, you must do it soon.

[The MUSICIANS play.]

Not yet? No dance! Thus change I like the moon.

KING

Will you not dance? How come you thus estrangèd?

ROSALINE

You took the moon at full, but now she's changèd. 215

KING

Yet still she is the moon, and I the man.
 The music plays; vouchsafe some motion to it.

ROSALINE

Our ears vouchsafe it.

KING

But your legs should do it.

ROSALINE

Since you are strangers and come here by chance,
 We'll not be nice.^o Take hands. We will not dance. 220

KING

Why take we hands then?

ROSALINE

Only to part friends.

Curtsy, sweet hearts. And so the measure ends.

KING

More measure of this measure! Be not nice.

ROSALINE

We can afford no more at such a price.

KING

Price you yourselves. What buys your company? 225

ROSALINE

Your absence only.

KING

That can never be.

ROSALINE

Then cannot we be bought; and so adieu—
 Twice to your visor,^o and half once to you.

KING

If you deny to dance, let's hold more chat.

ROSALINE

In private then.

KING

I am best pleased with that. 230

[They converse apart.]

BEROWNE

White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.

PRINCESS

Honey, and milk, and sugar—there is three.

BEROWNE

Nay then, two treys,^o an if^o you grow so nice,
 Metheglin,^o wort,^o and malmsey.^o Well run, dice!
 There's half a dozen sweets.

PRINCESS

Seventh sweet, adieu. 235

Since you can cog,^o I'll play no more with you.

BEROWNE

One word in secret.

PRINCESS

Let it not be sweet.

BEROWNE

Thou grievest my gall.^o

PRINCESS

Gall! Bitter.

BEROWNE

Therefore meet.^o

[They converse apart.]

DUMAINE

Will you vouchsafe with me to change^o a word?

MARIA

Name it.

DUMAINE Fair lady—

MARIA

Say you so? Fair lord. 240

Take that for your "fair lady."

DUMAINE

Please it you,

As much in private, and I'll bid adieu.

[They converse apart.]

KATHARINE

What, was your vizard^o made without a tongue?

LONGAVILLE

I know the reason, lady, why you ask.

KATHARINE

O for your reason! Quickly, sir, I long. 245

LONGAVILLE

You have a double tongue^o within your mask
 And would afford my speechless vizard half.

KATHARINE

"Veal,"^o quoth the Dutchman. Is not "veal" a calf?

LONGAVILLE

A calf, fair lady?

KATHARINE

No, a fair lord calf.

LONGAVILLE

Let's part the word.

KATHARINE

No, I'll not be your half. 250

Take all and wean it, it may prove an ox.

LONGAVILLE

Look how you butt yourself in these sharp mocks.
 Will you give horns,^o chaste lady? Do not so.

KATHARINE

Then die a calf before your horns do grow.

LONGAVILLE

One word in private with you ere I die. 255

KATHARINE

Bleat softly then. The butcher hears you cry.

[They converse apart.]

201 accompt reckoning 207 eyne eyes 209 moonshine . . . water a mere nothing 210 change round of dancing
 211 not strange not unsuitably foreign 220 nice fastidious
 228 visor mask

233 treys threes (at dice); an if if 234 Metheglin drink mixed with honey; wort unfermented beer; malmsey a Mediterranean wine 236 cog cheat 238 gall sore spot;
 meet fitting 239 change exchange 243 vizard mask 246 double tongue an inner projection or tongue held in the mouth to keep the mask in place 248 Veal Dutch or German pronunciation of well 253 give horns prove unfaithful

BOYET

The tongues of mocking wenches are as keen
 As is the razor's edge invisible,
 Cutting a smaller hair than may be seen,
 Above the sense^o of sense; so sensible 260
 Seemeth their conference,^o their conceits^o have wings Fleeter than arrows, bullets, wind, thought, swifter things.

ROSALINE

Not one word more, my maids, break off, break off.

BEROWNE

By heaven, all dry-beaten^o with pure scoff!

KING

Farewell, mad wenches. You have simple wits. 265
Exeunt [KING, LORDS, and BLACKAMOORS].

PRINCESS

Twenty adieus, my frozen Muscovits.
 Are these the breed of wits so wondered at?

BOYET

Tapers they are, with your sweet breaths puffed out.

ROSALINE

Well-liking^o wits they have; gross, gross; fat, fat.

PRINCESS

O poverty in wit, kingly-poor flout!^o 270
 Will they not, think you, hang themselves tonight?
 Or ever but in vizards show their faces?
 This pert Berowne was out of count'nance quite.

ROSALINE

They were all in lamentable cases.^o
 The king was weeping-ripe^o for a good word. 275

PRINCESS

Berowne did swear himself out of all suit.^o

MARIA

Dumaine was at my service, and his sword.
 "No point,"^o quoth I; my servant straight was mute.

KATHARINE

Lord Longaville said I came o'er his heart;
 And trow^o you what he called me?

PRINCESS

Qualm,^o perhaps. 280

KATHARINE

Yes, in good faith.

PRINCESS

Go, sickness as thou art!

ROSALINE

Well, better wits have worn plain statute-caps.^o
 But will you hear? The king is my love sworn.

PRINCESS

And quick Berowne hath plighted faith to me.

KATHARINE

And Longaville was for my service born. 285

MARIA

Dumaine is mine as sure as bark on tree.

BOYET

Madam, and pretty mistresses, give ear.
 Immediately they will again be here

In their own shapes, for it can never be
 They will digest this harsh indignity. 290

PRINCESS

Will they return?

BOYET

They will, they will, God knows,
 And leap for joy though they are lame with blows.
 Therefore change^o favors, and when they repair,^o
 Blow^o like sweet roses in this summer air.

PRINCESS

How blow? How blow? Speak to be understood. 295

BOYET

Fair ladies masked are roses in their bud;
 Dismasked, their damask^o sweet commixture shown,
 Are angels vailing^o clouds, or roses blown.

PRINCESS

Avaunt, perplexity!^o What shall we do
 If they return in their own shapes to woo? 300

ROSALINE

Good madam, if by me you'll be advised,
 Let's mock them still, as well known as disguised.
 Let us complain to them what fools were here,
 Disguised like Muscovites in shapeless gear;^o 305
 And wonder what they were, and to what end
 Their shallow shows and prologue vilely penned,
 And their rough carriage so ridiculous,
 Should be presented at our tent to us.

BOYET

Ladies, withdraw. The gallants are at hand.

PRINCESS

Whip to our tents, as roes run o'er land. 310
Exeunt [PRINCESS and LADIES].

Enter the KING and the rest [BEROWNE, LONGAVILLE, and DUMAINE, all in their proper habits].

KING

Fair sir, God save you. Where's the princess?

BOYET

Gone to her tent. Please it your majesty Command me any service to her thither?

KING

That she vouchsafe me audience for one word.

BOYET

I will; and so will she, I know, my lord. Exit. 315

BEROWNE

This fellow pecks up wit, as pigeons peas,
 And utters it again when God doth please.
 He is wit's peddler, and retails his wares
 At wakes^o and wassails,^o meetings, markets, fairs;
 And we that sell by gross, the Lord doth know, 320
 Have not the grace to grace it with such show.
 This gallant pins the wenches^o on his sleeve.
 Had he been Adam, he had tempted Eve.
 'A can carve^o too, and lisp. Why, this is he
 That kissed his hand away in courtesy. 325
 This is the ape of form,^o Monsieur the Nice,^o
 That, when he plays at tables,^o chides the dice

260 Above the sense above the reach 261 conference conferring; conceits witticisms 264 dry-beaten beaten with blood being drawn 269 Well-liking plump, sleek 270 kingly-poor flout a poor jest for a king 274 cases with pun on the sense "masks" or "costumes" 275 weeping-ripe about to weep 276 out . . . suit beyond all reasonableness 278 No point not at all 280 trow know; Qualm sudden sickness 282 statute-caps caps apprentices were required to wear

293 change exchange; repair come again 294 Blow blossom
 297 damask red and white (like the Damascus rose) 298 vailing letting fall 299 Avaunt, perplexity Away, confusion!
 304 gear outfit 319 wakes vigils and feastings; wassails revelry 322 pins the wenches wears maidens' favors 324 carve make gestures of courtship 326 form etiquette; Nice exquisite 327 at tables backgammon

In honorable terms. Nay, he can sing
 A mean^o most meanly; and in ushering
 Mend^o him who can. The ladies call him sweet. 330
 The stairs, as he treads on them, kiss his feet.
 This is the flow'r that smiles on every one,
 To show his teeth as white as whalès-bone;
 And consciences that will not die in debt
 Pay him the due of "honey-tongued Boyet." 335

KING

A blister on his sweet tongue, with my heart,
 That put Armado's page out of his part!

Enter [the PRINCESS and] the LADIES [with BOYET].

BEROWNE

See where it comes! Behavior, what wert thou Till this madman showed thee, and what art thou now?

KING

All hail, sweet madam, and fair time of day. 340

PRINCESS

"Fair" in "all hail"^o is foul, as I conceive.

KING

Construe my speeches better, if you may.

PRINCESS

Then wish me better, I will give you leave.

KING

We came to visit you, and purpose now
 To lead you to our court. Vouchsafe it then. 345

PRINCESS

This field shall hold me, and so hold your vow.
 Nor God nor I delights in perjured men.

KING

Rebuke me not for that which you provoke.
 The virtue^o of your eye must break my oath.

PRINCESS

You nickname^o virtue. "Vice" you should have spoke; 350
 For virtue's office never breaks men's troth.
 Now, by my maiden honor, yet as pure
 As the unsullied lily, I protest,
 A world of torments though I should endure,
 I would not yield to be your house's guest, 355
 So much I hate a breaking cause^o to be
 Of heavenly oaths, vowed with integrity.

KING

O, you have lived in desolation here,
 Unseen, unvisited, much to our shame.

PRINCESS

Not so, my lord. It is not so, I swear. 360
 We have had pastimes here and pleasant game.
 A mess^o of Russians left us but of late.

KING

How, madam? Russians?

PRINCESS

Ay, in truth, my lord;
 Trim gallants, full of courtship and of state.

ROSALINE

Madam, speak true. It is not so, my lord. 365
 My lady, to the manner of the days,^o
 In courtesy gives undeserving praise.

We four indeed confronted were with four
 In Russian habit.^o Here they stayed an hour
 And talked apace; and in that hour, my lord, 370
 They did not bless us with one happy^o word.
 I dare not call them fools, but this I think,
 When they are thirsty, fools would fain have drink.

BEROWNE

This jest is dry to me. Gentle sweet,
 Your wit makes wise things foolish. When we greet 375
 With eyes best seeing heaven's fiery eye,^o
 By light we lose light. Your capacity
 Is of that nature that to your huge store
 Wise things seem foolish and rich things but poor.

ROSALINE

This proves you wise and rich, for in my eye— 380

BEROWNE

I am a fool, and full of poverty.

ROSALINE

But that you take what doth to you belong,
 It were a fault to snatch words from my tongue.

BEROWNE

O, I am yours, and all that I possess.

ROSALINE

All the fool mine?

BEROWNE

I cannot give you less. 385

ROSALINE

Which of the vizards was it that you wore?

BEROWNE

Where, when, what vizard? Why demand you this?

ROSALINE

There, then, that vizard, that superfluous case^o
 That hid the worse, and showed the better face.

KING

We were descried. They'll mock us now downright. 390

DUMAINE

Let us confess, and turn it to a jest.

PRINCESS

Amazed, my lord? Why looks your highness sad?

ROSALINE

Help! Hold his brows! He'll sound.^o Why look you pale?

Seasick, I think, coming from Muscovy.

BEROWNE

Thus pour the stars down plagues for perjury. 395
 Can any face of brass^o hold longer out?

Here stand I, lady, dart thy skill at me.

Bruise me with scorn, confound me with a flout,

Thrust thy sharp wit quite through my ignorance,

Cut me to pieces with thy keen conceit,^o 400

And I will wish thee never more to dance,

Nor never more in Russian habit wait.

O, never will I trust to speeches penned,

Nor to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue,

Nor never come in vizard to my friend, 405

Nor woo in rhyme, like a blind harper's song!

Taffeta phrases,^o silken terms precise,

Three-piled^o hyperboles, spruce affectation,

Figures^o pedantical—these summer flies

329 mean intermediate part 330 Mend surpass 341 hail with a pun on the meaning "sleet" 349 virtue power 350 nickname name by mistake 356 breaking cause cause for breaking off 362 mess group of four 366 to . . . days
 according to the fashion of the time

369 habit dress 371 happy appropriate 376 heaven's fiery eye the sun 388 case covering 393 sound swoon 396 face of brass brazen manner 400 conceit imagination
 407 Taffeta phrases fine speech 408 Three-piled the finest weight velvet 409 Figures figures of speech

Have blown^o me full of maggot ostentation.
 I do forswear them; and I here protest
 By this white glove (how white the hand, God knows!)
 Henceforth my wooing mind shall be expressed
 In russet^o yeas and honest kersey^o noes.
 And to begin, wench—so God help me, law!—
 My love to thee is sound, sans^o crack or flaw.

ROSALINE

Sans “sans,” I pray you.

BEROWNE

Yet I have a trick^o

Of the old rage. Bear with me, I am sick.

I'll leave it by degrees. Soft, let us see—

Write “Lord have mercy on us”^o on those three.

They are infected, in their hearts it lies;

They have the plague, and caught it of your eyes.

These lords are visited;^o you are not free,^o

For the Lord's tokens^o on you do I see.

PRINCESS

No, they are free that gave these tokens to us.

BEROWNE

Our states^o are forfeit. Seek not to undo us.

ROSALINE

It is not so, for how can this be true,

That you stand forfeit, being those that sue?

BEROWNE

Peace! for I will not have to do with you.

ROSALINE

Nor shall not if I do as I intend.

BEROWNE

Speak for yourselves. My wit is at an end.

KING

Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression

Some fair excuse.

PRINCESS

The fairest is confession.

Were not you here but even now disguised?

KING

Madam, I was.

PRINCESS

And were you well advised?

KING

I was, fair madam.

PRINCESS

When you then were here,

What did you whisper in your lady's ear?

KING

That more than all the world I did respect her.

PRINCESS

When she shall challenge this, you will reject her.

KING

Upon mine honor, no.

PRINCESS

Peace, peace, forbear!

Your oath once broke, you force not^o to forswear.

KING

Despise me when I break this oath of mine.

PRINCESS

I will, and therefore keep it. Rosaline,

What did the Russian whisper in your ear?

ROSALINE

Madame, he swore that he did hold me dear

410

As precious eyesight, and did value me
 Above this world; adding thereto, moreover,
 That he would wed me or else die my lover.

PRINCESS

God give thee joy of him. The noble lord

415

Most honorably doth uphold his word.

450

KING

What mean you, madam? By my life, my troth,

I never swore this lady such an oath.

ROSALINE

By heaven you did! And to confirm it plain,

You gave me this, but take it, sir, again.

420

KING

My faith and this the princess I did give.

455

I knew her by this jewel on her sleeve.

PRINCESS

Pardon me, sir, this jewel did she wear,

And Lord Berowne, I thank him, is my dear.

425

What! Will you have me, or your pearl again?

BEROWNE

Neither of either, I remit both twain.

460

I see the trick on't. Here was a consent,

Knowing aforehand of our merriment,

To dash^o it like a Christmas comedy.

Some carry-tale, some please-man,^o some slight zany,^o

Some mumble-news,^o some trencher-knight,^o some

Dick^o

465

430

That smiles his cheek in years,^o and knows the trick

To make my lady laugh when she's disposed,

Told our intents before; which once disclosed,

The ladies did change favors, and then we,

Following the signs, wooed but the sign of she.

470

Now, to our perjury to add more terror,

We are again forsworn, in will and error.

Much upon this 'tis.^o [To BOYET.] And might not you

Forestall our sport, to make us thus untrue?

Do not you know my lady's foot by th' squier,^o

475

435

And laugh upon the apple of her eye?^o

And stand between her back, sir, and the fire,

Holding a trencher,^o jesting merrily?

You put our page out.^o Go, you are allowed.^o

Die when you will, a smock^o shall be your shroud.

480

You leer upon me, do you? There's an eye

Wounds like a leaden sword.

BOYET

Full merrily

Hath this brave manage,^o this career,^o been run.

BEROWNE

Lo, he is tilting straight.^o Peace! I have done.

440

Enter [COSTARD the] clown.

Welcome, pure wit! Thou part'st a fair fray.

485

COSTARD

O Lord, sir, they would know

Whether the three Worthies shall come in or no.

463 dash ridicule 464 please-man toady; zany buffoon 465 mumble-news prattler; trencher-knight brave man at the table; Dick fellow 466 smiles . . . years laughs his face into wrinkles 473 Much . . . 'tis It is very much like this 475 by

th' squier by the rule (i.e., have her measure) 476 laugh . . .

eye laugh, looking closely into her eyes 478 trencher wooden plate 479 put . . . out take him out of his part;

allowed permitted (licensed, like a court fool) 480 smock

woman's garment 483 manage display of horsemanship;

career charge 484 tilting straight already jousting

410 blown filled 414 russet characteristic red-brown color of peasants' clothes; kersey plain wool cloth 416 sans without 417 trick trace 420 Lord . . . us inscription posted on the doors of houses harboring the plague 423 visited attacked by plague; free free of infection 424 the Lord's tokens plague spots 426 states estates 441 force not do not think it wrong

BEROWNE

What, are there but three?

COSTARD

No, sir, but it is vara° fine,

For every one pursents° three.

BEROWNE

And three times thrice is nine.

COSTARD

Not so, sir, under correction, sir, I hope, it is not so. 490

You cannot beg us,° sir, I can assure you, sir; we know what we know.

I hope, sir, three times thrice, sir—

BEROWNE

Is not nine?

COSTARD

Under correction, sir, we know whereuntil it doth amount.

BEROWNE

By Jove, I always took three threes for 495 nine.

COSTARD

O Lord, sir, it were pity you should get your living by reck'ning, sir.

BEROWNE

How much is it?

COSTARD

O Lord, sir, the parties themselves, the 500 actors, sir, will show whereuntil it doth amount. For mine own part, I am, as they say, but to perfect° one man in one poor man—Pompion° the Great, sir.

BEROWNE

Art thou one of the Worthies?

COSTARD

It pleased them to think me worthy of 505 Pompey the Great. For mine own part, I know not the degree° of the Worthy, but I am to stand for him.

BEROWNE

Go, bid them prepare.

COSTARD

We will turn it finely off, sir; we will take some care. Exit.

KING

Berowne, they will shame us. Let them not approach. 510

BEROWNE

We are shame-proof, my lord; and 'tis some policy° To have one show worse than the king's and his company.

KING

I say they shall not come.

PRINCESS

Nay, my good lord, let me o'errule you now.

That sport best pleases that doth least know how, 515

Where zeal strives to content, and the contents

Dies in the zeal of that which it presents.°

Their form confounded makes most form in mirth°

When great things laboring perish in their birth.

BEROWNE

A right description of our sport, my lord. 520

Enter [ARMADO the] braggart.

ARMADO Anointed, I implore so much expense of thy royal sweet breath as will utter a brace° of words.

[Converses apart with the KING, and delivers a paper to him.]

PRINCESS Doth this man serve God?

BEROWNE Why ask you?

PRINCESS 'A speaks not like a man of God his making. 525

ARMADO That is all one, my fair, sweet, honey monarch; for, I protest, the schoolmaster is exceeding fantastical; too-too vain, too-too vain; but we will put it, as they say, to fortuna de la guerra.° I wish you the peace of mind, most royal couplement!° Exit. 530

KING Here is like to be a good presence of Worthies.

He presents Hector of Troy; the swain, Pompey the Great; the parish curate, Alexander; Armado's page,

Hercules; the pedant, Judas Maccabaeus:

And if these four Worthies in their first show thrive, 535

These four will change habits° and present the other five.

BEROWNE There is five in the first show.

KING You are deceived, 'tis not so.

BEROWNE

The pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest,° the fool, and the boy—

Abate throw at novum,° and the whole world again 540

Cannot pick out five such, take each one in his vein.°

KING

The ship is under sail, and here she comes amain.°

Enter [COSTARD, for] Pompey.

COSTARD

"I Pompey am—"

BEROWNE

You lie, you are not he!

COSTARD

"I Pompey am—"

BOYET

With libbard's head° on knee.

BEROWNE

Well said, old mocker. I must needs be friends with thee. 545

COSTARD

"I Pompey am, Pompey surnamed the Big—"

DUMAINE

The "Great."

COSTARD

It is "Great," sir—"Pompey surnamed the Great,

That oft in field, with targe° and shield, did make my foe to sweat,

And traveling along this coast I here am come by chance, 550

And lay my arms before the legs of this sweet lass of France."

If your ladyship would say, "Thanks, Pompey," I had done.

PRINCESS Great thanks, great Pompey.

COSTARD 'Tis not so much worth, but I hope I was perfect. I made a little fault in "Great." 555

BEROWNE My hat to a halfpenny, Pompey proves the best Worthy.

Enter [NATHANIEL the] curate, for Alexander.

NATHANIEL

"When in the world I lived, I was the world's commander;

488 vara northern pronunciation of very 489 pursents represents 491 beg us prove us fools 502 perfect play the part of 503 Pompion pumpkin (for Pompey) 507 degree rank 511 policy crafty device 516-17 contents . . . presents the substance is destroyed by the excessive zeal in presenting it 518 Their . . . mirth art that is confused is most laughable entertainment 522 brace pair

529 fortuna . . . guerra fortune of war (Italian) 530 couplement pair 536 habits costumes 539 hedge-priest unlearned priest 540 Abate . . . novum except for the throw at nine (in a game of dice) 541 vein characteristic way 542 amain swiftly 544 libbard's head heraldic painting of leopard 549 targe shield

By east, west, north, and south, I spread my conquering might;

My scutcheon^o plain declares that I am Alisander—" 560

BOYET

Your nose says, no, you are not; for it stands too right.^o

BEROWNE

Your nose smells "no" in this, most tender-smelling knight.

PRINCESS

The conqueror is dismayed. Proceed, good Alexander.

NATHANIEL

"When in the world I lived, I was the world's commander—"

BOYET Most true, 'tis right—you were so, Alisander. 565

BEROWNE Pompey the Great—

COSTARD Your servant, and Costard.

BEROWNE Take away the conqueror, take away
Alisander.

COSTARD [To NATHANIEL.] O, sir, you have over- 570 thrown Alisander the conqueror! You will be scraped out of the painted cloth^o for this. Your lion that holds his pole-ax^o sitting on a close-stool^o will be given to Ajax.^o He will be the ninth Worthy. A conqueror, and afeard to speak? Run away for shame, Alisander. 575

[NATHANIEL stands aside.] There, an't^o shall please you, a foolish mild man; an honest man, look you, and soon dashed. He is a marvelous good neighbor, faith, and a very good bowler; but for Alisander—

alas! you see how 'tis—a little o'erparted.^o But there 580 are Worthies a-coming will speak their mind in some other sort.

PRINCESS Stand aside, good Pompey.

[COSTARD stands aside.]

Enter [HOLOFERNES the] pedant, for Judas, and [MOTH]
the boy, for Hercules.

HOLOFERNES

"Great Hercules is presented by this imp,^o

Whose club killed Cerberus, that three-headed canus;^o 585

And when he was a babe, a child, a shrimp,

Thus did he strangle serpents in his manus.^o

Quoniam^o he seemeth in minority,^o

Ergo^o I come with this apology."

Keep some state^o in thy exit, and vanish. 590

Exit [MOTH the] boy [to one side].

"Judas I am—"

DUMAINE A Judas?

HOLOFERNES Not Iscariot, sir.

"Judas I am, ycleped^o Maccabaeus."^o

DUMAINE Judas Maccabaeus clipt^o is plain Judas. 595

BEROWNE A kissing traitor. How, art thou proved Judas?

HOLOFERNES

"Judas I am—"

DUMAINE The more shame for you, Judas.

HOLOFERNES What mean you, sir? 600

BOYET To make Judas hang himself.

HOLOFERNES Begin, sir; you are my elder.

BEROWNE Well followed: Judas was hanged on an elder.^o

HOLOFERNES I will not be put out of countenance. 605

BEROWNE Because thou hast no face.

HOLOFERNES What is this?

BOYET A cittern-head.^o

DUMAINE The head of a bodkin.^o

BEROWNE A death's face in a ring.^o 610

LONGAVILLE The face of an old Roman coin, scarce
seen.

BOYET The pommel of Caesar's falchion.^o

DUMAINE The carved-bone face on a flask.

BEROWNE Saint George's half-cheek^o in a brooch. 615

DUMAINE Ay, and in a brooch of lead.^o

BEROWNE

Ay, and worn in the cap of a toothdrawer.

And now forward, for we have put thee in countenance.

HOLOFERNES You have put me out of countenance.^o

BEROWNE False. We have given thee faces. 620

HOLOFERNES But you have outfaced them all.

BEROWNE And^o thou wert a lion, we would do so.

BOYET

Therefore as he is an ass, let him go.

And so adieu, sweet Jude. Nay, why dost thou stay?

DUMAINE For the latter end of his name. 625

BEROWNE

For the ass to the Jude? Give it him. Jud-as, away!

HOLOFERNES

This is not generous, not gentle, not humble.

BOYET

A light for Monsieur Judas! It grows dark, he may stumble.

[HOLOFERNES stands aside.]

PRINCESS

Alas, poor Maccabaeus, how hath he been baited!^o

Enter [ARMADO the] braggart, [for Hector].

BEROWNE Hide thy head, Achilles! Here comes 630

Hector^o in arms.

DUMAINE Though my mocks come home by me, I will now be merry.

KING Hector was but a Trojan in respect of this.

BOYET But is this Hector? 635

KING I think Hector was not so clean-timbered.^o

LONGAVILLE His leg is too big for Hector's.

DUMAINE More calf, certain.

BOYET No; he is best indued in the small.^o

BEROWNE This cannot be Hector. 640

DUMAINE He's a god or a painter; for he makes faces.

560 scutcheon coat of arms 561 right straight (Alexander's neck was a little awry) 572 painted cloth wall-hanging

573 pole-ax battle-ax (and penis); close-stool commode

574 Ajax Greek warrior (with a pun on jakes = privy)

576 an't if it 580 o'erparted having too difficult a part

584 imp child 585 canus dog (from Latin canis) 587 manus

hand 588 Quoniam since; in minority under age 589

Ergo therefore 590 state dignity 594 ycleped called;

Maccabaeus Hebrew warrior 595 clipt (1) cut (2) embraced

604 elder a kind of tree 608 cittern-head head of a stringed musical instrument 609 bodkin long hairpin 610 death's

. . . ring finger ring with the carving of a skull 613 falchion sword 615 half-cheek profile 616 brooch of lead ornament worn in a cap as badge of dentist's trade 619 out of countenance disconcerted 622 And if 629 baited tormented

630-31 Achilles . . . Hector the Greek and Trojan champions

636 clean-timbered clean-limbed 639 small lower part of the leg

ARMADO

"The armipotent^o Mars, of lances the almighty, Gave Hector a gift—"

DUMAINE A gilt nutmeg.^o

BEROWNE A lemon.

LONGAVILLE Stuck with cloves.

DUMAINE No, cloven.

ARMADO Peace!

"The armipotent Mars, of lances the almighty,
Gave Hector a gift, the heir of Ilion;
A man so breathed^o that certain he would fight, yea
From morn till night, out of his pavilion.^o
I am that flower—"

DUMAINE That mint.

LONGAVILLE That columbine.

ARMADO Sweet Lord Longaville, rein thy tongue.

LONGAVILLE I must rather give it the rein, for it runs against Hector.

DUMAINE Ay, and Hector's a greyhound.

ARMADO The sweet war-man is dead and rotten.
Sweet chucks, beat not the bones of the buried. When he breathed, he was a man. But I will forward with my device. [To the PRINCESS.] Sweet royalty, bestow on me the sense of hearing.

BEROWNE steps forth [to whisper to COSTARD].

PRINCESS Speak, brave Hector; we are much delighted.

ARMADO I do adore thy sweet grace's slipper.

BOYET [Aside to DUMAINE.] Loves her by the foot.DUMAINE [Aside to BOYET.] He may not by the yard.^o

ARMADO

"This Hector far surmounted Hannibal—"

The party is gone.^o

COSTARD Fellow Hector, she is gone.^o She is two months on her way.

ARMADO What meanest thou?

COSTARD Faith, unless you play the honest Trojan, the poor wench is cast away. She's quick;^o the child brags in her belly already. 'Tis yours.

ARMADO Dost thou infamonize^o me among poten-tates? Thou shalt die.

COSTARD Then shall Hector be whipped for Jaquenetta that is quick by him, and hanged for Pompey that is dead by him.

DUMAINE Most rare Pompey!

BOYET Renowned Pompey!

BEROWNE Greater than great. Great, great, great Pompey! Pompey the Huge!

DUMAINE Hector trembles.

BEROWNE Pompey is moved. More Ates,^o more Ates!
Stir them on, stir them on!

DUMAINE Hector will challenge him.

BEROWNE Ay, if 'a have no more man's blood in his belly than will sup a flea.

ARMADO By the North Pole, I do challenge thee.

COSTARD I will not fight with a pole, like a northern man. I'll slash; I'll do it by the sword. I bepray you, let me borrow my arms again.

DUMAINE Room for the incensed Worthies!

COSTARD I'll do it in my shirt.

DUMAINE Most resolute Pompey!

MOTH Master, let me take you a buttonhole lower.^o

Do you not see, Pompey is uncasing^o for the combat?

What mean you? You will lose your reputation.

ARMADO Gentlemen and soldiers, pardon me. I will not combat in my shirt.

DUMAINE You may not deny it. Pompey hath made the challenge.

ARMADO Sweet bloods, I both may and will.

BEROWNE What reason have you for't?

ARMADO The naked truth of it is, I have no shirt. I go woolward^o for penance.

BOYET True, and it was enjoined^o him in Rome for want of linen; since when, I'll be sworn he wore none but a dishclout of Jaquenetta's, and that 'a wears next his heart for a favor.

Enter a messenger, Monsieur MARCADE.

MARCADÉ

God save you, madam.

PRINCESS

Welcome, Marcade,

But that thou interrupt'st our merriment.

MARCADÉ

I am sorry, madam, for the news I bring

Is heavy in my tongue. The king your father—

PRINCESS

Dead, for my life!

MARCADÉ

Even so. My tale is told.

BEROWNE

Worthies, away! The scene begins to cloud.

ARMADO For mine own part, I breathe free breath.
I have seen the day of wrong through the little hole of discretion, and I will right myself like a soldier.

Exeunt WORTHIES.

KING

How fares your majesty?

PRINCESS

Boyet, prepare. I will away tonight.

KING

Madam, not so. I do beseech you, stay.

PRINCESS

Prepare, I say. I thank you, gracious lords,

For all your fair endeavors, and entreat

Out of a new-sad soul that you vouchsafe

In your rich wisdom to excuse, or hide

The liberal opposition of our spirits,

If overboldly we have borne ourselves

In the converse of breath.^o Your gentleness

Was guilty of it. Farewell, worthy lord.

A heavy heart bears not a humble^o tongue.

Excuse me so, coming too short of thanks

For my great suit so easily obtained.

642 armipotent powerful in arms 644 gilt nutmeg with special icing 651 breathed well-exercised 652 pavilion tent for a champion at a tournament 667 yard slang word for male organ 669 The . . . gone Armado is referring to Hector 670 she is gone she is pregnant 674 quick pregnant 676 infamonize defame 686 Ates goddess of mischief

698 take . . . lower take you down a peg 699 uncasing removing his coat 707-08 go woolward wearing wool next to the skin 709 enjoined commanded 733 converse of breath conversation 735 humble civil, tactful

KING

The extreme parts of time extremely forms
 All causes to the purpose of his speed,^o
 And often at his very loose^o decides 740
 That which long process could not arbitrate.
 And though the mourning brow of progeny^o
 Forbid the smiling courtesy of love
 The holy suit which fain it would convince,^o
 Yet, since love's argument was first on foot, 745
 Let not the cloud of sorrow jostle it
 From what it purposed; since to wail friends lost
 Is not by much so wholesome-profitable
 As to rejoice at friends but newly found.

PRINCESS

I understand you not. My griefs are double. 750

BEROWNE

Honest plain words best pierce the ear of grief;
 And by these badges^o understand the king.
 For your fair sakes have we neglected time,
 Played foul play with our oaths. Your beauty, ladies,
 Hath much deformed us, fashioning our humors 755
 Even to the opposèd end of our intents;
 And what in us hath seemed ridiculous—
 As love is full of unbefitting strains,
 All wanton as a child, skipping and vain,
 Formed by the eye and therefore, like the eye, 760
 Full of straying shapes, of habits and of forms,
 Varying in subjects as the eye doth roll
 To every varied object in his glance;
 Which parti-coated^o presence of loose love
 Put on by us, if, in your heavenly eyes, 765
 Have misbecomed our oaths and gravities,
 Those heavenly eyes that look into these faults
 Suggested^o us to make. Therefore, ladies,
 Our love being yours, the error that love makes
 Is likewise yours. We to ourselves prove false, 770
 By being once false forever to be true
 To those that make us both—fair ladies, you.
 And even that falsehood, in itself a sin,
 Thus purifies itself and turns to grace.

PRINCESS

We have received your letters, full of love;
 Your favors, the ambassadors of love;
 And in our maiden council rated^o them
 At courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy,
 As bombast^o and as lining to the time.
 But more devout than this in our respects
 Have we not been, and therefore met your loves
 In their own fashion, like a merriment.

DUMAINE

Our letters, madam, showed much more than jest.

LONGAVILLE

So did our looks.

ROSALINE We did not quote^o them so.

KING

Now, at the latest minute of the hour 785
 Grant us your loves.

PRINCESS

A time, methinks, too short
 To make a world-without-end bargain in.
 No, no, my lord, your grace is perjured much,
 Full of dear guiltiness; and therefore this—
 If for my love (as there is no such cause) 790
 You will do aught, this shall you do for me:
 Your oath I will not trust, but go with speed
 To some forlorn and naked hermitage,
 Remote from all the pleasures of the world;
 There stay until the twelve celestial signs^o 795
 Have brought about the annual reckoning.
 If this austere insociable life
 Change not your offer made in heat of blood—
 If frosts and fasts, hard lodging and thin weeds,^o
 Nip not the gaudy blossoms of your love, 800
 But that it bear this trial, and last love—
 Then, at the expiration of the year,
 Come challenge me, challenge me by these deserts,
 And, by this virgin palm now kissing thine,
 I will be thine; and till that instant, shut 805
 My woeful self up in a mourning house,
 Raining the tears of lamentation
 For the remembrance of my father's death.
 If this thou do deny, let our hands part,
 Neither entitled in the other's heart. 810

KING

If this, or more than this, I would deny,
 To flatter up^o these powers of mine with rest,
 The sudden hand of death close up mine eye!
 Hence hermit then—my heart is in thy breast.

765

[BEROWNE

And what to me, my love? and what to me? 815

ROSALINE

You must be purgèd, too, your sins are rank,
 You are attaint^o with faults and perjury;
 Therefore, if you my favor mean to get,
 A twelvemonth shall you spend, and never rest, 820
 But seek the weary beds of people sick.]^o

DUMAINE

But what to me, my love? But what to me?
 A wife?

775

KATHARINE A beard, fair health, and honesty;
 With threefold love I wish you all these three.

DUMAINE

O, shall I say "I thank you, gentle wife"?

KATHARINE

780

Not so, my lord. A twelvemonth and a day 825
 I'll mark no words that smooth-faced wooers say.
 Come when the king doth to my lady come;
 Then, if I have much love, I'll give you some.

DUMAINE

I'll serve thee true and faithfully till then.

KATHARINE

Yet swear not, lest ye be forsworn again. 830

LONGAVILLE

785

What says Maria?

MARIA

At the twelvemonth's end
 I'll change my black gown for a faithful friend.

738–39 The . . . speed time, as it runs out, directs everything toward its conclusion 740 at . . . loose in the act of letting go 742 progeny descendants 744 convince prove 752 badges tokens 764 parti-coated fool's motley 768 Suggested tempted 777 rated valued 779 bombast padding 784 quote regard

795 twelve celestial signs of the Zodiac 799 weeds garments 812 flatter up pamper 817 attaint charged 815–20 lines 821–32 duplicate this passage in an expanded form; probably Shakespeare failed to indicate clearly that these six lines had been superseded

LONGAVILLE

I'll stay with patience, but the time is long.

MARIA

The liker° you! Few taller are so young.

BEROWNE

Studies my lady? Mistress, look on me.

Behold the window of my heart, mine eye,

What humble suit attends thy answer there.

Impose some service on me for thy love.

ROSALINE

Oft have I heard of you, my Lord Berowne,

Before I saw you, and the world's large tongue

Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks,

Full of comparisons and wounding flouts,°

Which you on all estates° will execute

That lie within the mercy of your wit.

To weed this wormwood° from your fruitful° brain, 845

And therewithal to win me, if you please,

Without the which I am not to be won,

You shall this twelvemonth term from day to day

Visit the speechless sick, and still° converse

With groaning wretches; and your task shall be

With all the fierce endeavor of your wit

To enforce the painèd impotent to smile.

BEROWNE

To move wild laughter in the throat of death?

It cannot be; it is impossible;

Mirth cannot move a soul in agony.

ROSALINE

Why, that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,

Whose influence is begot of that loose grace

Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools.

A jest's prosperity lies in the ear

Of him that hears it, never in the tongue

Of him that makes it. Then, if sickly ears,

Deafed with the clamors of their own dear groans,

Will hear your idle scorns, continue then,

And I will have you and that fault withal;

But if they will not, throw away that spirit,

And I shall find you empty of that fault,

Right joyful of your reformation.

BEROWNE

A twelvemonth? Well, befall what will befall,

I'll jest a twelvemonth in an hospital.

PRINCESS [To the KING.]

Ay, sweet my lord, and so I take my leave.

KING

No, madam, we will bring you on your way.

BEROWNE

Our wooing doth not end like an old play;

Jack hath not Jill. These ladies' courtesy

Might well have made our sport a comedy.

KING

Come, sir, it wants a twelvemonth and a day,

And then 'twill end.

BEROWNE

That's too long for a play.

Enter [ARMADO the] braggart.

ARMADO Sweet majesty, vouchsafe me—

PRINCESS Was not that Hector?

834 liker more like 842 wounding flouts painful jokes 843 all estates men of all kinds 845 wormwood bitterness; fruitful fruitful 849 still always

DUMAINE The worthy knight of Troy.

ARMADO I will kiss thy royal finger, and take leave. 880

I am a votary;° I have vowed to Jaquenetta to hold the plough for her sweet love three year. But, most esteemed greatness, will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praise of the owl and the cuckoo? It should have followed in the 885 end of our show.

KING Call them forth quickly; we will do so.

ARMADO Holla! Approach.

Enter all.

This side is Hiems, Winter; this Ver, the Spring; the one maintained by the owl, th' other by the cuckoo. 890

Ver, begin.

The Song.

[SPRING] When daisies pied° and violets blue

And lady-smocks° all silver-white

And cuckoo-buds° of yellow hue

Do paint the meadows with delight, 895

The cuckoo then, on every tree,

Mocks married men; for thus sings he,

"Cuckoo!"

Cuckoo, cuckoo!" O word of fear,

Unpleasing to a married ear!

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws, 900

And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks,

When turtles tread,° and rooks, and daws,

And maidens bleach their summer smocks,

The cuckoo then, on every tree,

Mocks married men; for thus sings he, 905

"Cuckoo!"

Cuckoo, cuckoo!" O word of fear,

Unpleasing to a married ear!

WINTER When icicles hang by the wall,

And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,°

And Tom bears logs into the hall, 910

And milk comes frozen home in pail,

When blood is nipped, and ways be foul,

Then nightly sings the staring owl, "Tu-whit,

Tu-who!" a merry note,

While greasy Joan doth keel° the pot. 915

When all aloud the wind doth blow,

And coughing drowns the parson's saw,°

And birds sit brooding in the snow,

And Marian's nose looks red and raw, 920

When roasted crabs° hiss in the bowl,

Then nightly sings the staring owl, "Tu-whit,

Tu-who!" a merry note,

While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

[ARMADO] The words of Mercury are harsh after the songs of Apollo.° [You that way, we this way. 925

Exeunt omnes.]

881 votary sworn follower 892 pied parti-colored 893 lady-smocks watercresses, or cuckoo flowers 894 cuckoo-buds crowfoot, or buttercup 902 turtles tread turtledoves mate 909 blows his nail blows on his fingernails to warm them (and so, waiting patiently) 915 keel cool, by stirring or skimming 917 saw wise saying 920 crabs crabapples 924-25 The . . . Apollo Let us end with the songs, because clever words of the god Mercury would come harshly after the songs of Apollo, the god of poetry

THE TRAGEDY OF KING RICHARD THE SECOND

EDITED BY KENNETH MUIR

Introduction

Richard II, at least in its present form, was written and performed in 1595, after the publication of Samuel Daniel's Civil Wars (which was registered in October 1594) and before December 9, when there was a private performance before Sir Edward Hoby and his friends. The play was a popular one. According to Elizabeth I, by 1601 it had been played "forty" times; but when the Essex conspirators asked Shakespeare's company to put on a special performance on the eve of the rebellion, because they thought that the deposition of Richard would be good propaganda, the players protested that it was "so old and so long out of use" that it would attract only a small audience. The conspirators therefore subsidized the performance.

Shakespeare had already dealt with the remote effects of Bolingbroke's usurpation in Henry VI and Richard III, and his obvious model in the present play was Edward II, a play in which Christopher Marlowe had brilliantly dramatized the deposition and murder of Richard of Bordeaux's great-grandfather. There were already at least two plays on the reign of Richard II, Jack Straw and Woodstock, and it has been argued by Professor John Dover Wilson (in his edition of Richard II) that Shakespeare's tragedy was based on a lost play by the author of The Troublesome Reign of King John, the source of Shakespeare's King John. The main arguments that have been advanced in support of this theory are (1) the presence of various details in the play that presuppose knowledge on the part of the audience; (2) the presence of "fossil" rhymes in blank verse speeches, which seem to indicate that the speeches were originally in rhymed verse; (3) the badness of certain scenes (for example, V.iii) which, it is supposed, Shakespeare borrowed from the source play; (4) the use by Shakespeare, either directly or indirectly, of facts available only in two or three French chronicles that were still in manuscript. The last of these points is discussed in A Note on the Sources (p. 441). On the other three, I agree with most scholars that the existence of the source play has not been proved. I can see no resemblance between the style of The Troublesome Reign and that of the suspected scenes of Richard II; Shakespeare himself may have revised his own play, turning some rhymed verse into blank verse; the obscurities, which in any case are unnoticed in performance, may be explained by sheer carelessness in introducing facts that Shakespeare remembered from his reading; and it is not positively necessary to find a scapegoat for the feeble passages of rhymed verse in Act V. It will be remembered that in the other plays written about this time—A Midsummer Night's Dream and Romeo and Juliet—there is a considerable amount of rhyme, more than there had been in previous plays. These three plays have another characteristic in common—they are the first in which Shakespeare uses patterns of imagery for dramatic purposes.¹ The reasons for the rhymed verse are not far to seek. Shakespeare completed his second narrative poem in 1594, and he was still writing sonnets in 1595. Blank verse, moreover, was still a comparatively new medium for drama. Marlowe had led his audiences away from "jigging veins of rhyming mother wits" only seven years previously. The academic dramatists—Daniel and Greville—still used rhyme in their plays. Peele had used it in some scenes of The Arraignment of Paris and Kyd, though he had used blank verse for The Spanish Tragedy, reverted to rhyme in his Cornelia. The Countess of Pembroke was known to favor it. Apart from Marlowe's, very little good blank verse had been written, and the best nondramatic poets—Spenser, Sidney, Daniel, Drayton—all stuck to rhyme. Looking back, we can see that Wilton, where the countess lived, was the home of lost causes; but to Shakespeare, to whom rhyme came easily, the matter was not so obvious. After all, his early blank verse was comparatively artificial and certainly rhetorical. He did not suffer from Mr. Eliot's fear that the audience would realize that it was listening to poetry. The acting, too, in these early years, had a strong element of formality: the delivery of the verse was more important than the realistic portrayal of character. Shakespeare was only just beginning to portray character by varying the verse. He did this brilliantly with Juliet's Nurse and in the contrast between Richard and Bolingbroke in the abdication scene. But his touch was still uncertain. The Gardener scene (III.iv) was admirably conceived as a commentary by the common man on the state of England, and as a parabolic statement, which links up with Gaunt's description of England as "this other Eden." But the execution of the scene falls far short of the conception. The Gardener, speaking in formal blank verse, indistinguishable from that used by royal and aristocratic characters, never really emerges from his role as a chorus. It would have been better, perhaps, to have written the scene in prose; but, for some reason, Shakespeare avoided prose altogether. Perhaps he was trying to please his new aristocratic friends.

¹ See Richard D. Altick's analysis of the play and the works by Van Doren, Clemen, and Stirling listed in the Suggested References.

Whatever the reasons, Shakespeare introduced a considerable amount of rhymed verse into Richard II. Some of it is successful, as in Bolingbroke's couplets in the third scene of the play (I.iii.144-47). But one scene (V.iii.73-135) is so bad that critics would like to believe that Shakespeare did not write it; or that, if he wrote it at all, it must belong to a much earlier version of the play, left inadvertently or ill-advisedly unrevised. As we have seen, however, Shakespeare hardly used rhyme at all in some of his early plays, so that the scene was probably written at the same period as the rest of the play. Swinburne, in A Study of Shakespeare, called the scene "the last hysterical struggle of rhyme to maintain its place in tragedy." The situation is farcical, with York, the Duchess, and Aumerle on their knees at once, and York actually urging the execution of his son. Shakespeare must have been aware of the absurdity, but he seems to have miscalculated the effect of the scene.

Richard II can be regarded either as a history play, the first of the tetralogy that includes the two parts of Henry IV and Henry V, or as a tragedy complete in itself. There are several indications in the play that Shakespeare had already planned to continue the story—for example, the Bishop of Carlisle's prophecy, Richard's own prophecy about Northumberland, the references to Prince Hal and Glendower, and the introduction of Hotspur—but when the play was first printed it was entitled The Tragedy of Richard II. Although it is a political tragedy, since we are as much concerned with the fate of England as with the fate of the hero, Richard has a more central role than Henry VI in three earlier histories or Henry IV in the next two histories.

The critics have been very much divided on the amount of sympathy we should extend to Richard. Some find him wholly admirable, and others regard him as wholly contemptible. To Kreyssig, he affords us the shocking spectacle of an absolute bankruptcy, mental and spiritual no less than in the world of outward affairs, caused by one condition only: that nature has given him the character of a Dilettante, and called him to a position which, more than any other, demands the Artist.²

To Walter Pater, writing a few years later, Richard seemed to be "an exquisite poet." Swinburne, in Three Plays of Shakespeare, declared that the third scene reveals the protagonist of the play as so pitifully mean and cruel a weakling that no future action or suffering can lift him above the level which divides and purifies pity from contempt.

² Quoted by A. P. Rossiter, "Angel with Horns" and Other Shakespeare Lectures, ed. Graham Storey (1961), p. 39.

Later in his essay, Swinburne accused Richard of "callous cruelty" and "heartless hypocrisy," remarking that "the histrionic young tyrant" was removed once for all beyond reach of manly sympathy or compassion unqualified by scorn. If we can ever be sorry for anything that befalls so vile a sample of royalty, our sorrow must be so diluted and adulterated by recollection of his wickedness and baseness that the tribute could hardly be acceptable to any but the most pitiable example or exception of mankind.

Walter Raleigh, however, remarked in Shakespeare that "It is difficult to condemn Richard without taking sides against poetry"; and two recent poets have sprung to Richard's defense, as they would have defended a minor poet of our own day, whose life had been a failure in the eyes of the world. W. B. Yeats, in Ideas of Good and Evil, passed lightly over the king's faults, and declared that Shakespeare made his king fail, a little because he lacked some qualities that were doubtless common among his scullions, but more because he had certain qualities that are uncommon in all ages. To suppose that Shakespeare preferred the man who deposed his king is to suppose that Shakespeare judged men with the eyes of a Municipal Councilor weighing the merits of a Town Clerk; and that had he been by when Verlaine cried out from his bed, "Sir, you have been made by the stroke of a pen, but I have been made by the breath of God," he would have thought the Hospital Superintendent the better man.

John Masefield, obviously much influenced by Yeats' essay, declares in William Shakespeare that Richard fails because he is not common:

The tragedy of the sensitive soul, always acute, becomes terrible when that soul is made king here by one of the accidents of life.

John Bailey, irritated by Yeats and Masefield, retorted tartly in The Continuity of Letters:

Fools such critics are. . . . For their own choice Mr. Yeats and Mr. Masefield are free. Only they must not father it upon Shakespeare. No man has ever known the theater better than he; and if he had meant us to admire Richard and despise Henry [Henry V, not Henry IV] we should most assuredly not have escaped doing it; but there is no audience from his day to ours which has not instantly and instinctively worshiped Henry and pitied Richard.

We may note in passing that many good critics have had reservations about Henry V, and modern audiences (except in time of war) have been less enthusiastic about him than Bailey appears to be, and more sympathetic to Richard, especially when the part was played by Sir John Gielgud. But the debate continues. A. P. Rossiter, to give a last example, unkindly suggests that there is "something in Richard which calls out the latent homosexuality of critics"; and to Pater's claim that Richard's nature is "that of a poet," he replies: "If so, surely a very bad poet."

Some of Richard's sympathetic critics seem to forget that he is depicted as a murderer; and those who find no redeeming features in his character ignore or misinterpret the changes brought about by suffering. Shakespeare's model for his play (as we have seen) was Edward II. Marlowe's method was to concentrate on Edward's misgovernment in the opening acts of the play and to arouse sympathy for him after his deposition, partly by stressing the unscrupulousness of his opponents, partly by showing that Edward was beloved by his favorites, and partly by a detailed presentation of his sufferings. Shakespeare's method is similar. In the first two acts he gives a vivid portrayal of Richard's misgovernment, which is brought home to us particularly by the patriotic indignation of Gaunt's dying speeches. In the later acts, although we are shown again and again Richard's weaknesses of character, Shakespeare arouses sympathy for him by the poetic beauty of his long arias, by his tragic isolation, by the pathos of his leave-taking from his queen, by the account of his entry into London, and by the episode of the loyal groom. Yet Shakespeare's method differs in several respects from Marlowe's. Richard's initial guilt is greater than Edward's, his suffering is mental rather than physical, and his character is purged by it. Although some critics believe that his scene with the queen and his soliloquy in prison reveal that he is still an incorrigible sentimentalist, turning everything, like Ophelia, to favor and to prettiness, there are signs that he has acquired a greater self-awareness and a recognition of his faults: "I wasted time, and now doth Time waste me" (V.v.49). But the greatest difference between the attitudes of the two dramatists is that Marlowe never mentions, while Shakespeare continually stresses, the divine right of kings. We are warned over and over again that Richard's deposition is a sin which will be punished by the horrors of civil war. It was to stress this point that Shakespeare deviated from his sources in giving the Bishop of Carlisle his eloquent prophecy just before the deposition scene.

Professor J. Dover Wilson has called Richard II "a Tudor passion play," a description which fits in with the frequent references to Scripture by which Shakespeare achieves its particular tone and atmosphere. Some of Richard's speeches are lamentations on the fall of princes, a recognition of the mortality of man and of the peculiar vulnerability of those called to high estate, which read like transmutations of Lydgate's Fall of Princes or of A Mirror for Magistrates. These link up with the medieval conception of tragedy as a fall from greatness into misery. But the scriptural references are mainly designed to emphasize the sin of rebellion against an anointed king, and they show that Shakespeare was steeped in the teaching of the Homilies, with whatever reservations he may have had about it. Richard compares his treacherous friends to Judas and those who show an outward pity at his fall to Pilate. He imagines that Bolingbroke will tremble at his sin; he boasts that the deputy elected by the Lord cannot be deposed by the breath of worldly men, that angels will fight on his side, and that the unborn children of the rebels will be struck by pestilence. Bolingbroke, for having broken his oath of allegiance, is damned in the book of heaven. England, rent by civil war, will be called Golgotha. The Bishop of Carlisle warns Bolingbroke not to set house against house; and Bolingbroke himself compares Richard's murderer to Cain. In prison Richard meditates on two Gospel texts.

Richard's own biblical references are an appeal for Christian compassion. It is possible, indeed, that Shakespeare had in mind the whole problem of charity and pity; but Professor Peter Alexander, who makes this suggestion in Shakespeare's Life and Art, goes on to complain that the fallen king's insistence on his own position . . . is incompatible with the self-forgetfulness which is as essential to the tragic as to the Christian hero. For this is not the waking as from a dream of some disinterested heart to the self-seeking of society, but the long lament of one who gave short shrift to a dying Gaunt; and this contrast between Richard's indifference to others and exquisite sensibility for himself makes tragedy impossible.

Even if we could believe in the self-forgetfulness of Hamlet, Lear, or Othello, we may well feel that Professor Alexander does not make allowances for the development of Richard's character in the course of the play, nor for the Elizabethan convention by which a character comments on his own situation. When Lear talks of his own pitiful state, or when Othello or Antony makes his final apologia, these characters are not meant to be indulging in self-pity or vanity: they are used by the dramatist to guide the feelings of the audience. In the mature tragedies, it is true, we do not get the self-comparison of a character to Christ; but the method is largely justified in Richard's case by the central importance in the play of the concept of divine right. The same consideration justifies the strong element of ritual in the play.

We are presented throughout the play with the contrast between Richard and his successor. Richard, the anointed king, is unfit to rule, in spite of his good qualities, and in spite of his belated acquisition of self-knowledge. Henry Bolingbroke is a born ruler, but his reign is doomed to misery because he is a usurper. The contrast is brought out in other ways. Richard is frivolous, witty, eloquent, and poetic, a man of words who wears his heart upon his sleeve, one who is continually playing a part, to whom, as John Palmer says in Political Characters, "nothing has interest or significance but what concerns himself." He loses his crown not because he stops the duel at Coventry—an action which he takes with the approval of his council, and which can hardly be regarded as an example of his love of play-acting—but because of his murder of Gloucester before the beginning of the play, because of his confiscation of Gaunt's estates, because his return from Ireland is delayed by contrary winds, and because he despairs on his arrival in England. This last point, which is usually taken as a prime example of his refusal to face realities, could as plausibly be used to prove that he was more realistic than his supporters. He is brought to his ruin, as all Shakespeare's tragic heroes are, by a combination of fate and faults of character.

Henry is a contrast in every respect. He is generally taciturn, although he can turn on his charm like a tap, as is apparent from the way even Northumberland is captivated by it. The account given in I.iv of his triumphant journey into exile, although put into the mouth of an enemy, is corroborated by what he himself admits in I Henry IV:

And then I stole all courtesy from heaven,
And dressed myself in such humility
That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crownèd king. (III.ii.50-54)

The same calculated behavior is described in Hotspur's account of their first meeting. Bolingbroke, like Claudius, is a "king of smiles," a "fawning greyhound" who proffered Hotspur "a candy deal of courtesy." We do not see Henry in any personal relationship, except with his father in the first act, and in his complaints about his son in the last. We see him as a politician (in the Elizabethan sense of the term, "unscrupulous self-seeker") who subordinates everything to his ambition. He obtains the crown, as he confesses on his deathbed, by "bypaths and indirect crook'd ways." Shakespeare presents the character with a masterly ambiguity. As John Palmer points out:

Bolingbroke gives no sign of his purpose—and for an excellent reason. He is that most dangerous of climbing politicians, the man who will go further than his rivals because he never allows himself to know where he is going. Every step in his progress toward the throne is dictated by circumstances, and he never permits himself to have a purpose till it is more than half fulfilled.

The same point is made by Brents Stirling:

Three times—at the end of III.iii, at the end of the deposition scene, and in the Exton scenes at the end of the play—Henry has taken, if it may be so called, a decisive step. Each time the move he has made has been embodied in a terse statement, and each time someone else has either evoked it from him or stated its implications for him.

The characterization, apart from that of Richard and Bolingbroke, is less effective than that of the minor characters in Richard III. But it is not so bad as is sometimes pretended. Swinburne, with customary exaggeration, attacked what he regarded as Shakespeare's incompetence:

The poet was not yet dramatist enough to feel for each of his characters an equal or proportionate regard; to divide and disperse his interest among the various crowd of figures which claim each in its place . . . a fair and adequate share of their creator's attention and sympathy. His present interest was wholly concentrated on the single figure of Richard; . . . the subordinate figures became to him but heavy and vexatious encumbrances, to be shifted on and off the stage with as much haste and as little of labor as might be possible to an impatient and uncertain hand. . . . Even after a lifelong study of this as of all other plays of Shakespeare, it is for me at least impossible to determine what I doubt the poet could himself have clearly defined—the main principle, the motive and the meaning of such characters as York, Norfolk, and Aumerle. The Gaveston and the Mortimer of Marlowe are far more solid and definite figures than these; yet none after Richard is more important to the scheme of Shakespeare. They are fitful, shifting, vaporous; their outlines change, withdraw, dissolve, and leave not a rack behind.

Swinburne's views were influenced by his assumption that the play was one of Shakespeare's earliest. If he had realized that the poet was not a novice when he wrote it, but the author of nine or ten other plays, he might have been less anxious to complain of its immaturity. Even in Shakespeare's greatest plays, the minor characters are little more than sketches; and it must be said that York, Mowbray, and Aumerle are not really as important to the scheme of the play as Gaveston and Mortimer are in Edward II. The three characters, moreover, are not really as indeterminate and vague as Swinburne pretends. York, for example, whom Swinburne described as an incomparable, an incredible, an unintelligible and a monstrous nullity . . . a living and driveling picture of hysterical impotence on the downward grade to dotage and distraction, is, in fact, a perfectly credible portrait of a man torn between conflicting loyalties. He deplors Richard's behavior but he is chosen to be Lord Governor because the king realizes that his criticisms were disinterested: "For he is just, and always loved us well" (II.i.221). York tried to be faithful to his trust; but it is clear from II.ii that he is muddled, incompetent, and powerless. Both here, and in later scenes, Shakespeare extracts some humor from York's bumbling inefficiency. In II.iii his loyalty to the king, his sympathy with Bolingbroke's wrongs, and his shortage of troops combine to paralyze him. He begins by calling Bolingbroke a traitor; before long he admits, "I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs" (II.iii.140). He confesses that his forces are too weak for him to arrest the traitor, and follows a declaration of neutrality by extending an invitation to the rebels to spend the night in the castle. Before the end of the scene he has half agreed to go with the rebels to Bristol, where Bolingbroke intends to execute the king's favorites. York has become a traitor almost without knowing it. Far from being incredible, the character is very shrewdly drawn.

Once Richard's downfall is assured, York becomes a wholehearted supporter of the new regime. Characteristically, York is full of pity for Richard; he remonstrates with Northumberland for leaving out his title (III.iii.8), and, although he is chosen to escort the king to his deposition, he movingly describes the entrance of Bolingbroke and Richard into London. His new loyalty is soon tested. When he finds that Aumerle has plotted to kill Bolingbroke, it never enters his head to be ashamed of his own coat-turning: he rushes off to Windsor to beg for his son's death. This is partly prudence—he has agreed to be pledge for Aumerle's "lasting fealty to the new-made king"—but partly the genuine zeal of a convert. The scene in which he goes on his knees to Bolingbroke, absurd as it is, is not out of character.

A similar defense could be made of Aumerle, who is deeply attached to Richard and loyal to him after his fall. He submits to Bolingbroke only when his carelessness has put his life in danger. Shakespeare tells us enough about him for the purposes of the play—his dislike of Bolingbroke revealed in his account of his leave-taking and in the accusations leveled against him in IV.i, his love for Richard shown by his tears in III.iii, and by his conspiracy against the usurper. There are some indications of irresponsibility in his character, but Shakespeare deliberately leaves unsettled whether or not he was implicated in Gloucester's murder. The scene at the beginning of Act IV where he is accused was described by Swinburne as "a morally chaotic introduction of incongruous causes, inexplicable plaintiffs, and incomprehensible defendants." But the question of which side is telling the truth is irrelevant to the effect which Shakespeare wishes to give. Aumerle has to be attacked, not because of his guilt, but because he is an opponent of the usurper.

The third character of whom Swinburne complains, Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, appears only in two scenes of the first act. Shakespeare could rely on most of his audience knowing that Richard himself was ultimately responsible for Gloucester's murder—and those who did not know were plainly informed by Gaunt in the second scene—and they would therefore appreciate that Bolingbroke's attack on Mowbray was aimed at the king, or at least at his favorites. Richard can only banish Bolingbroke if he consents to the perpetual banishment of Mowbray. If these facts are understood, Mowbray's conduct becomes intelligible. He tries to defend himself without betraying Richard, and he is bitterly surprised at his sentence of banishment. Some critics have thought that a character with such a doubtful past should not have been given the sympathetic lines in which he expresses his patriotism, and that he should not have been given so fine an epitaph as Carlisle's speech (IV.i.91 ff.). But there are no black and no white characters in Richard II. We need be no more surprised at Mowbray fighting "For Jesu Christ in glorious Christian field" (IV.i.93) than that Bolingbroke should intend to expiate his responsibility for Richard's death by making a pilgrimage to the Holy Land.

Sometimes, it must be admitted, Shakespeare does not fully succeed in making his characters live. In the second scene of the play, for example, he tries to give reality to the portrait of the Duchess of Gloucester by making her forget what she was going to say:

Commend me to thy brother, Edmund York.
Lo! this is all: nay, yet depart not so;
Though this be all, do not so quickly go.
I shall remember more. Bid him—Ah! what?
With all good speed at Plashy visit me. (I.ii.62–66)

Here the effect is blurred by the rigidity of the verse and the intrusive rhyme.

It has been necessary to defend the reality of the minor characters in the play because the conflict between Richard and Bolingbroke does not take place in a dramatic and political vacuum. The background is filled in economically and well: and the patriotism of Gaunt, the loyalty of Aumerle, the oscillation of York, the prophetic fervor of the Bishop of Carlisle are all essential to the effect of the tragedy.

In Titus Andronicus and Richard III Shakespeare had submerged tragedy in melodrama; in Romeo and Juliet the tragedy is brought about by accident rather than by defect of character; in Richard II the tragedy is firmly based on character and, as in King Lear, the character of the hero acquires greater depth as his fortunes decline. It may therefore be said that, in spite of its obvious weaknesses, and in spite of its inferiority in some respects to Richard III—it contains finer poetry and greater complexity but is usually less effective in the theater—it is closer to mature Shakespearean tragedy than any of the previous plays had been.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCES

The following have been suggested as possible sources of the play:

1. The Chronicles of Raphael Holinshed (1587), pp. 493–540.
2. The Union of the Two Noble and Illustre Famelies of Lancastre and Yorke by Edward Hall (1548).
3. The Cronycles of Englande by Sir John Froissart, translated by Lord Berners (1525).
4. J. Créton's Histoire du Roy d'Angleterre.
5. Chronicque de la Traïson et Mort de Richart Deux.
6. Le Beau's Chronique de Richard II depuis l'an 1377 jusques à l'an 1399.
(Numbers 4, 5, and 6 were in manuscript until the nineteenth century.)
7. Thomas of Woodstock (anonymous play).
8. The First Fowre Bookes of the Civile Wars by Samuel Daniel (1595).
9. A Myrroure for Magistrates (1559).
10. A lost play.

As we have seen, Professor J. Dover Wilson believed that the main source was this lost play, the author of which used numbers 1–6 of the works listed above. The theory presupposes that this unknown dramatist displayed a historical erudition beyond Shakespeare's customary range, although there are few signs of erudition in his companion piece, The Troublesome Reign of King John. As it is known that Shakespeare did in other plays combine several different sources, it is easier to believe that he followed the same practice in Richard II than that some unknown hack writer went to the same trouble.

If, then, we are skeptical of the existence of the lost play we can examine briefly the evidence for Shakespeare's use of the remaining nine hypothetical sources. There is no doubt that he had read parts of Holinshed, Hall, and A Mirror for Magistrates; almost certainly he knew Berners' Froissart and Daniel's poem; and there are enough apparent echoes of Woodstock to make it highly probable that he knew it, probably in the theater. Whether he had read the three French manuscripts or not is much more dubious.

It is significant that Shakespeare begins his play with the quarrel between Mowbray and Bolingbroke, for this is the point at which Hall begins his story; but, apart from this, the influence of Hall is apparently very slight.

It has been argued by Professor J. Dover Wilson (following Paul Reyher) that Shakespeare's characterization of John of Gaunt was suggested by Froissart, who, in his chapter on "How the Duke of Lancaster Died," speaks of his grief at his son's banishment, and at the king's misgovernment:

For he saw well that if he long persevered and were suffered to continue, the realm was likely to be utterly lost. With these imaginations and other, the Duke fell sick, whereon he died.

Froissart also mentions Richard's joy at Gaunt's death, and in an earlier passage he makes Gaunt say:

Our nephew, the King of England, will shame all ere he cease. He believeth too lightly evil counsel who shall destroy him; and simply, if he live long, he will lose his realm, and that hath been gotten with much cost and travail by our predecessors and by us.

Froissart, too, but not Holinshed, mentions the rumor that Richard was not the son of the Black Prince. This is found also in Traïson.

Mr. A. P. Rossiter, however, thought that the character of Gaunt could have been derived from Woodstock, Stow, and Hall. There is no doubt that Shakespeare was acquainted with Woodstock, for he echoes it in a number of places. For example, compare Gaunt's accusation that Richard had become England's landlord (II.i.57-60, 113) with the following lines from Woodstock:

Rent out our kingdom like a pelting farm
 . . .
 And thou no king, but landlord now become.

It is not possible to prove that Shakespeare read the three French manuscript chronicles, but they were not entirely inaccessible. Holinshed, Hall, and Daniel all used Créton's poem, and Holinshed refers to Traïson as "an old French pamphlet belonging to Jōhn Stow." If Shakespeare had wished to follow up Holinshed's references, the chances are that he could have done so, although the evidence that he actually did so has not convinced many scholars.

A messenger in Créton's poem describes the way people of all ages flocked to Bolingbroke's standard:

Then might you have beheld young and old, the feeble and the strong, make a clamor, and regarding neither right nor wrong stir themselves up with one accord . . . they began to flee towards the Duke . . . he brings young and old under subjection.

So Scroop (III.ii.112 ff.), after describing the whitebeards and boys who have joined Bolingbroke, adds "both young and old rebel." In the same scene, Richard's appeals to heaven, the use of Salisbury as a messenger of evil tidings, and the account of successive disasters—

you may be sure he was not fain to smile, for, on all sides, one after another, came pouring in upon him mischief and trouble—are all to be found in the corresponding scene of the play. The most striking parallel, however, is the comparison of Richard's betrayal and suffering to that of Christ. In the prose section of Créton's account, he compares the rejection of Richard by the people to the rejection of Christ by the Jews:

Then spake Duke Henry quite aloud to the commons of the said city. "Fair sirs, behold your king! consider what you will do with him!" And they made answer with a loud voice, "We will have him taken to Westminster." And so he delivered him unto them. At this hour did he remind me of Pilate, who caused our Lord Jesus Christ to be scourged at the stake, and afterwards had him brought before the multitude of the Jews, saying, "Fair Sirs, behold your king!" who replied, "let him be crucified!" Then Pilate washed his hands of it, saying, "I am innocent of the just blood." And so he delivered our Lord unto them. Much in the like manner did Duke Henry, when he gave up his rightful lord to the rabble of London, in order that, if they should put him to death, he might say, "I am innocent of this deed."

In Traïson there are several similar passages. The author compares Northumberland to Judas; and a few pages later Richard compares himself to Christ, who was likewise "undeservedly sold and given into the hands of his enemies." Although Holinshed refers to a prelate as a Pilate, and although Shakespeare elsewhere associates treachery with Judas, the emphasis on the Christ parallel is to be found only in Créton, Traïson, and Shakespeare. There are a few minor parallels with Traïson. "Daring-hardy" (I.iii.43) may translate hardie in precisely the same context, and "base court" (III.iii.175) may likewise translate basse cour. There seems, therefore, to be a slight balance of probability that Shakespeare had read both Créton's poem and Traïson, but there is less probability that he had read Le Beau's chronicle.

About seventy parallels have been listed with Daniel's Civil Wars. Some of these, however, are not peculiar to Daniel's poem, and others may be explained by the fact that both poets amplified their sources independently. But enough parallels remain to convince all recent editors (Dover Wilson, Black, Ure) that Shakespeare was influenced by Daniel, especially in II.i, IV.i, V.i, and V.ii. Shakespeare and Daniel both altered the age of the queen, making her a woman instead of a child; Shakespeare was clearly indebted to Daniel for the account of the entry of Richard and Bolingbroke into London; and Gaunt's speech on England (II.i.31-68) clearly echoes the following lines from Daniel's Civil Wars:

Why Neptune hast thou made us stand alone
 Divided from the world, for this say they?

A place there is where proudly raised there stands
 A huge aspiring rock neighboring the skies
 Whose surly brow imperiously commands
 The sea his bounds that at his proud feet lies:
 And spurns the waves that in rebellious bands
 Assault his empire and against him rise:

With what contagion France didst thou infect
 The land by thee made proud to disagree?

Although we have argued that Shakespeare consulted a number of different sources, there is little doubt that the great bulk of his material came from Holinshed. The only scenes that did not largely derive from the Chronicles are the following:

- I.ii. No direct source has been discovered
- II.i.1-152. Partly based on Froissart and Daniel
- II.ii. Largely invention
- III.iv. No source
- V.i. Possibly suggested by Daniel
- V.ii.1-40. Probably suggested by Daniel

It should be noted that Shakespeare sometimes combines widely separated facts for a single scene, that he telescopes events, and that on occasion he rearranges the order of historical happenings.

Of telescoping perhaps the best example is II.i. Bolingbroke had been banished in September 1398; his father died in the following February; Richard left for Ireland in May; and Bolingbroke landed at Ravenspurgh in July. But in Shakespeare's scene Gaunt is dying immediately after his son's banishment—in I.iv we have a description of Bolingbroke's leave-taking and of Gaunt's illness—but before the end of the scene we are told that Bolingbroke has already sailed from Brittany. A period of nine months elapses in the course of the scene. By this telescoping Shakespeare is able to link the death of Gaunt with the banishment of Bolingbroke, to link the confiscation of his estates with the necessities of the Irish campaign, and to link the support Bolingbroke receives with Richard's conduct and with the patriotic admonitions of Gaunt. The scene is dramatically effective on the stage, in spite of the impossibilities revealed in the study; and the fact that Bolingbroke is returning to England before he can have heard of the confiscation of his estates, and yet pretends later that this was his motive for returning from exile, is an example of the deliberate ambiguity with which the character is presented.

The fourth act provides a good example of Shakespeare's rearrangement of historical facts, although there is no essential distortion of historical truth. Bagot's accusation of Aumerle took place on October 16, Fitzwater's accusation two days later; Carlisle's speech (which was not, as in the play, associated with Bolingbroke's claim of the crown) was a week later, on October 23; the abdication took place in the Tower (not in Westminster Hall) on September 29; and the Abbot of Westminster's entertainment of the conspirators was not until December 17. Although Swinburne complained that the quarrel at the beginning of the scene was "a morally chaotic introduction of incongruous causes, inexplicable plaintiffs, and incomprehensible defendants," it reminds us, just before the abdication, of Gloucester's death, its ultimate cause; and it provides Aumerle with a motive for rebellion. Carlisle's speech, one of the most significant moments in the whole tetralogy, is much more dramatic in its place as a warning to the characters in the play and to us of the results of Bolingbroke's usurpation at the moment of its happening. It is obviously more dramatic for Richard to go through the ritual of his abdication in public than before the commissioners in the Tower; and the Abbot's plot is properly introduced at a moment when our sympathies have been fully aroused for Richard, especially when we realize that the plot to restore him to the throne is the direct cause of his murder. Some details of the scene may have been suggested by other sources—Froissart, Hall, Daniel, A Mirror for Magistrates, the Homilies, and even Traïson.

Finally, an example may be given of Shakespeare's omissions. In Holinshed's account, Northumberland persuades Richard to leave Conway Castle, ambushing him on the way to Flint, and conveying him to Flint Castle as a prisoner. Shakespeare omits this incident, following Froissart, who merely says that Richard rode to Flint, and prepared to defend the castle there.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

Richard II was first published in 1597, after August 29, when it was registered. The first quarto (Q1) appeared with the following title page: "THE/Tragedie of King Ri-/chard the se-/cond./As it hath beene publikely acted/by the right Honourable the/Lorde Chamberlaine his Ser-/uants./ LONDON/Printed by Valentine Simmes for Androw Wise, and/are to be sold at his shop in Paules church yard at/the signe of the Angel./1597."

The play is thought to have been printed from a transcript of Shakespeare's manuscript, but it may preserve some of his spelling and punctuation. Some critics (Cairncross, Brooks, Ure) think that the text is memorially contaminated in a few places (that is, the transcriber introduced mistakes through his memory of other lines of the play and also of Richard III). The first quarto forms the basis of the present edition, except for the abdication scene, which was omitted from the first three quartos and included in the fourth (1608). The play was included in the First Folio (1623), probably from a corrected text of Q5 (1615). The Folio text (F) enables us to correct Q1 in a number of places, and it provides the best text of the abdication scene; but many of its readings are "sophistications"—unnecessary alterations—for which Shakespeare was not responsible.

The present edition modernizes spelling and punctuation, amplifies abbreviations and regularizes speech prefixes, corrects obvious typographical errors, adjusts the position of stage directions, and in a few cases alters the lineation. Q1 is not divided into acts or scenes; the present edition uses the divisions established by the Globe editors, who used those of F but who added one at V.iv. F indicates the divisions in Latin; they are translated here. Other deviations from Q1 (and for the abdication scene from F) are listed below. The adopted reading is given in boldface; if it is not taken from F a note in a bracket explains that it is taken (for example) from Q5 or (again, for example) from an editor's emendation—indicated by [ed.]. Next is given the original reading in roman.

I.i.118 my scepter's scepters 139 But Ah but 152 gentlemen Gentleman 162 When . . . when When Harry? when obedience bids 192 parle parlee

I.ii.47 sit set 58 it is

I.iii.26 demand of [ed.] ask 33 comest [Q5] comes 84 innocency [ed.] innocence 172 then but but 180 you owe y'owe 221 night nightes 238 had it [ed.] had't

I.iv.1 s.d. Bagot [ed.] Bushie 20 cousin, cousin Coosens Coosin 23 Bagot . . . Green [Q6] [Q1] omits; F has "heere Bagot and Greene" 53 Bushy, what news? [Q1 omits, but prints the s.d. "Enter Bushie with newes"] 65 All [ed.; Q and F omit]

II.i.18 fond [ed.] found [the emendation to "fond" is plausible; but it is possible that "found" was an error caused by the similar endings of adjacent lines—"soundes" and "sound"—or that a line was omitted by mistake] 48 as a as 102 incagèd intraged 113 not [ed.] not, not 124 brother [Q2] brothers 156 kernes kerne 177 the a 232 that that [ed.] that 257 king's King 280 The . . . Arundel [ed.; Q and F omit] 283 Thomas Ramston [Holinshed] Iohn Ramston 284 Quoint Coines

II.ii.16 eye eyes 25 more's more is 31 though thought 53 Henry H 88 cold [ed.] they are cold 112 Th' one Tone 137 The . . . will [ed.] Will the hateful commons

II.iii.36 Hereford Herefords 98 the lord lord

III.ii.32 succor [ed.] succors 38 and [ed.] that 40 boldly [ed.] bouldy 72 O'erthrows Ouerthrowes

III.iii.13 with you to to 17 mis-take [ed.] mistake 30 lord Lords 59 waters—on [ed.] water's on 118 prince and [ed.] princesse

III.iv.11 joy [ed.] grieve 21 good. good? 26 pins pines 57
 We at [ed.] at 80 Cam'st Canst
 IV.i.22 him them 54 As [ed.] As it 55 sun to sun [ed.] sinne to sinne 76 my bond bond 154-319 [for this passage, here printed from F, Q1 has only "Let it be so, and loe on wednesday next,/We solemnly proclaime our Coronation,/Lords be ready all"] 182 and on [Q4] on; yours [Q4] thine 250 and [Q4] a 254
 Nor [Q4] No, nor 275 the [Q4] that 284 Was [Q5] Is; that [Q4] which 285 And [Q4] That 288 a [Q4] an 295 manners
 [Q4] manner 332 I will [ed.] Ile
 V.i.25 stricken throwne

V.ii.55 prevent me [ed.] preuent 78 life, my [ed.] life, by my 116 And An
 V.iii.10 While [ed.] Which 20 but yet [ed.] yet 35 that I that 67 And an 110 Bolingbroke Yorke 134-35 With . . . him
 [ed.] I pardon him with al my heart 143 cousin, too [Q6] cousin
 V.iv.1 s.d. Enter Manet
 V.v.27 sit set 79 bestrid bestride
 V.vi.8 Salisbury . . . Blunt Oxford, Salisbury, Blunt 12 s.d.
 Fitzwater [Q6] Fitzwaters 43 thorough [ed.] through [Q]
 through the [F]

THE TRAGEDY OF KING RICHARD THE SECOND

[Dramatis Personae]

KING RICHARD THE SECOND
EDMUND Duke of York
JOHN OF GAUNT Duke of Lancaster } his uncles
HENRY BOLINGBROKE Gaunt's son
DUKE OF AUMERLE York's son
THOMAS MOWBRAY Duke of Norfolk
EARL OF SALISBURY
EARL OF BERKELEY
SIR JOHN BUSHY
SIR WILLIAM BAGOT } Richard's favorites
SIR HENRY GREEN
EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND
HARRY PERCY his son
LORD ROSS
LORD WILLOUGHBY

BISHOP OF CARLISLE
SIR STEPHEN SCROOP
LORD FITZWATER
DUKE OF SURREY
ABBOT OF WESTMINSTER
SIR PIERCE OF EXTON
LORD MARSHAL
WELSH CAPTAIN
QUEEN ISABEL Richard's second wife
DUCHESS OF GLOUCESTER Gaunt's sister-in-law
DUCHESS OF YORK
LADIES attending on the Queen
GARDENERS A KEEPER A GROOM
LORDS HERALDS OFFICERS SOLDIERS
ATTENDANTS SERVANTS

Scene: England and Wales]

[A C T I]

[Scene I. Windsor Castle.]

Enter King RICHARD, John of GAUNT, with other NOBLES and ATTENDANTS.

RICHARD

Old John of Gaunt, time-honored Lancaster,
Hast thou according to thy oath and band°
Brought hither Henry Hereford,° thy bold son,
Here to make good the boist'rous late appeal,°
Which then our° leisure would not let us hear, 5
Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

GAUNT

I have, my liege.

RICHARD

Tell me, moreover, hast thou sounded him,
If he appeal° the duke on ancient malice,
Or worthily,° as a good subject should, 10
On some known ground of treachery in him?

GAUNT

As near as I could sift° him on that argument,°
On some apparent° danger seen in him
Aimed at your highness, no inveterate malice.

RICHARD

Then call them to our presence: face to face, 15
And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will hear
The accuser and the accused freely speak.
High-stomached° are they both, and full of ire,
In rage, deaf as the sea, hasty as fire.

Enter BOLINGBROKE and MOWBRAY.

The decorative border above appeared on the first page of Richard II in the First Folio edition of Shakespeare's plays, 1623.

I.i.2 band bond 3 Hereford pronounced "Herford" 4 appeal accusation of treason 5 our the royal plural

9 appeal accuse 10 worthily according to desert 12 sift examine thoroughly; argument subject 13 apparent obvious 18 High-stomached high-spirited

BOLINGBROKE^o

Many years of happy days befall
My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege!

MOWBRAY

Each day still better other's happiness,
Until the heavens, envying earth's good hap,
Add an immortal title to your crown!

RICHARD

We thank you both; yet one but flatters us,
As well appeareth by the cause you come,
Namely to appeal each other of high treason.
Cousin of Hereford, what dost thou object
Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

BOLINGBROKE

First—heaven be the record of my speech!—
In the devotion of a subject's love,
Tend'ring^o the precious safety of my prince,
And free from other misbegotten hate,
Come I appellant^o to this princely presence.
Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,
And mark my greeting^o well: for what I speak,
My body shall make good upon this earth,
Or my divine soul answer it in heaven.
Thou art a traitor and a miscreant,^o
Too good to be so, and too bad to live;
Since the more fair and crystal is the sky,
The uglier seem the clouds that in it fly.
Once more, the more to aggravate the note,^o
With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat,
And wish—so please my sovereign—ere I move,
What my tongue speaks my right-drawn^o sword may prove.

MOWBRAY

Let not my cold words here accuse my zeal:^o
'Tis not the trial of a woman's war,
The bitter clamor of two eager^o tongues,
Can arbitrate this cause betwixt us twain;
The blood is hot that must be cooled for this.
Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be hushed, and naught at all to say.
First, the fair reverence of^o your highness curbs me
From giving reins and spurs to my free speech,
Which else would post^o until it had returned
These terms of treason doubled down his throat.
Setting aside his high blood's royalty,
And let him be^o no kinsman to my liege,
I do defy him, and I spit at him,
Call him a slanderous coward and a villain;
Which to maintain, I would allow him odds,
And meet him were I tied^o to run afoot
Even to the frozen ridges of the Alps,
Or any other ground inhabitable,^o
Where ever Englishman durst set his foot.
Meantime, let this^o defend my loyalty:
By all my hopes^o most falsely doth he lie.

20 Bolingbroke pronounced and spelled "Bullingbrooke" in Shakespeare's time 32 Tend'ring cherishing 34 appellant accuser 36 greeting address 39 miscreant unbeliever, villain 43 note reproach 46 right-drawn drawn to defend the right 47 accuse my zeal make me seem unzealous 49 eager sharp 54 fair reverence of respect due to 56 post speed 59 let him be suppose him to be 63 tied obliged 65 inhabitable uninhabitable 67 this his sword 68 hopes i.e., of heaven

BOLINGBROKE

20 Pale trembling coward, there I throw my gage,
Disclaiming here the kindred of the king,^o 70
And lay aside my high blood's royalty,
Which fear, not reverence, makes thee to except.^o
If guilty dread have left thee so much strength
As to take up mine honor's pawn,^o then stoop.
By that, and all the rites of knighthood else, 75
Will I make good against thee, arm to arm,
What I have spoke, or thou canst worse devise.

MOWBRAY

I take it up; and by that sword I swear,
Which gently laid my knighthood on my shoulder,
I'll answer thee in any fair degree^o 80
Or chivalrous design of knightly trial;
And when I mount, alive may I not light,^o
If I be traitor or unjustly fight.

RICHARD

What doth our cousin lay to Mowbray's charge?
It must be great that can inherit us^o 85
So much as of a thought of ill in him.

BOLINGBROKE

Look what^o I speak, my life shall prove it true:
That Mowbray hath received eight thousand nobles^o
In name of lendings^o for your highness' soldiers, 90
The which he hath detained for lewd^o employments,
Like a false traitor and injurious villain.
Besides, I say, and will in battle prove,
Or^o here, or elsewhere to the furthest verge
That ever was surveyed by English eye,
That all the treasons for these eighteen years 95
Complotted and contrived in this land
Fetch^o from false Mowbray, their first head and spring.
Further, I say and further will maintain
Upon his bad life to make all this good,
That he did plot the Duke of Gloucester's^o death, 100
Suggest^o his soon-believing adversaries,
And, consequently,^o like a traitor coward, Sluced out his innocent soul through streams of blood;
Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries 105
Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth
To me for justice and rough chastisement:
And, by the glorious worth of my descent,
This arm shall do it, or^o this life be spent.

RICHARD

60 How high a pitch^o his resolution soars!
Thomas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to this? 110

MOWBRAY

O! let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf,
Till I have told this slander of his blood 65
How God and good men hate so foul a liar.

70 Disclaiming . . . king referring to Mowbray's words, lines 58–59 72 except use as excuse 74 pawn pledge (this glove or hood, which he throws down) 80 degree manner 82 light dismount 85 inherit us make us have 87 what whatever 88 nobles gold coins 89 lendings money on trust 90 lewd base 93 Or either 97 Fetch derive 100 Gloucester Thomas of Woodstock, who had been murdered at Richard's orders 101 Suggest incite 102 consequently afterward 108 or before 109 pitch peak of a falcon's flight (the king is uneasy that his own guilt will come to light)

RICHARD

Mowbray, impartial are our eyes and ears.
 Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir,
 As he is but my father's brother's son,
 Now by my scepter's awe I make a vow,
 Such neighbor nearness to our sacred blood
 Should nothing privilege him nor partialize°
 The unstooping firmness of my upright soul.
 He is our subject, Mowbray, so art thou:
 Free speech and fearless I to thee allow.

MOWBRAY

Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy heart,
 Through the false passage of thy throat, thou liest.
 Three parts of that receipt I had° for Calais
 Disbursed I duly to his highness' soldiers;
 The other part reserved I by consent,
 For that my sovereign liege was in my debt
 Upon remainder of a dear account,°
 Since last I went to France to fetch his queen.
 Now swallow down that lie. For Gloucester's death,
 I slew him not; but, to my own disgrace,
 Neglected my sworn duty° in that case.
 For you, my noble Lord of Lancaster,
 The honorable father of my foe,
 Once did I lay an ambush for your life,
 A trespass that doth vex my grievèd soul;
 But, ere I last received the sacrament,
 I did confess it, and exactly begged
 Your grace's pardon, and I hope I had it.
 This is my fault: as for the rest appealed,
 It issues from the rancor of a villain,
 A recreant° and most degenerate traitor;
 Which in myself I boldly will defend,
 And interchangeably° hurl down my gage
 Upon this overweening traitor's foot,
 To prove myself a loyal gentleman
 Even in the best blood chambered in his bosom.
 In haste whereof, most heartily I pray
 Your highness to assign our trial day.

RICHARD

Wrath-kindled gentlemen, be ruled by me.
 Let's purge this choler° without letting blood:°
 This we prescribe, though no physician;
 Deep malice makes too deep incision;
 Forget, forgive, conclude, and be agreed;
 Our doctors say this is no month to bleed.
 Good uncle, let this end where it begun:
 We'll calm the Duke of Norfolk, you your son.

GAUNT

To be a make-peace shall become my age:
 Throw down, my son, the Duke of Norfolk's gage.

RICHARD

And Norfolk, throw down his.

GAUNT

When,° Harry, when?

Obedience bids I should not bid again.

RICHARD

Norfolk, throw down; we bid—there is no boot.°

120 partialize make partial 126 that . . . had what I received 130 dear account private or expensive debt 134 duty either to kill Gloucester, or to reveal the murder 144 recreant renegade 146 interchangeably in exchange 153 choler anger; letting blood pun on bleeding medicinally and bloodshed 162 When exclamation of impatience 164 boot remedy

MOWBRAY

115 Myself I throw, dread sovereign, at thy foot. 165
 My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:
 The one my duty owes; but my fair name
 Despite of death that lives upon my grave,
 To dark dishonor's use thou shalt not have.
120 I am disgraced, impeached,° and baffled° here, 170
 Pierced to the soul with slander's venomèd spear,
 The which no balm can cure but his heart-blood
 Which breathed this poison.

RICHARD

Rage must be withstood.

Give me his gage; lions make leopards tame.°

125 MOWBRAY

Yea, but not change his spots.° Take but my shame, 175
 And I resign my gage. My dear dear lord,
 The purest treasure mortal times afford
 Is spotless reputation—that away,
130 Men are but gilded loam, or painted clay.
 A jewel in a ten-times-barred-up chest 180
 Is a bold spirit in a loyal breast;
 Mine honor is my life, both grow in one;
 Take honor from me, and my life is done;
135 Then, dear my liege, mine honor let me try;
 In that I live, and for that will I die. 185

RICHARD

Cousin, throw up° your gage; do you begin.

BOLINGBROKE

140 O, God defend my soul from such deep sin!
 Shall I seem crestfallen in my father's sight?
 Or with pale beggar-fear° impeach my height°
 Before this outdared dastard? Ere my tongue 190
 Shall wound my honor with such feeble wrong,°
145 Or sound so base a parle,° my teeth shall tear
 The slavish motive° of recanting fear,
 And spit it bleeding in his high disgrace,
 Where shame doth harbor, even in Mowbray's face. 195
 [Exit GAUNT.°]

150 RICHARD

We were not born to sue, but to command:
 Which since we cannot do to make you friends,
 Be ready, as your lives shall answer it,
 At Coventry upon Saint Lambert's Day.°
 There shall your swords and lances arbitrate 200
155 The swelling difference of your settled hate:
 Since we cannot atone° you, we shall see
 Justice design the victor's chivalry.°
 Lord Marshal, command our officers-at-arms
 Be ready to direct these home alarms. 205

Exit [RICHARD with others].

170 impeached accused; baffled treated with infamy 174 lions . . . tame alluding to the rampant lion in the king's royal arms and the standing beast in Mowbray's 175 spots alluding to the proverb and punning on the meaning "stains" 186 throw up perhaps to the upper stage on which Richard sits 189 beggar-fear appropriate to a beggar; height rank 191 feeble wrong a wrong so grave that the man who submits to it exhibits himself as feeble 192 parle parley, truce 193 motive moving organ (i.e., tongue) 195 s.d. Exit Gaunt Gaunt begins Scene II, and therefore according to stage convention must leave the stage before the end of Scene I 199 Saint Lambert's Day September 17 202 atone reconcile 203 design . . . chivalry indicate whose prowess will win the victory (i.e., the victor will be vindicated)

[Scene II. London. Gaunt's house.]

Enter John of GAUNT with the DUCHESS of Gloucester.

GAUNT

Alas, the part I had in Woodstock's° blood
Doth more solicit me than your exclams°
To stir against the butchers of his life;
But since correction lieth in those hands°
Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven,
Who, when they° see the hours° ripe on earth,
Will rain hot vengeance on offenders' heads.

DUCHESS

Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur?
Hath love in thy old blood no living fire?
Edward's seven sons, whereof thyself art one,
Were as seven vials of his sacred blood,
Or seven fair branches springing from one root.
Some of those seven are dried by nature's course,
Some of those branches by the destinies cut:
But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Gloucester,
One vial full of Edward's sacred blood,
One flourishing branch of his most royal root,
Is cracked, and all the precious liquor spilt,
Is hacked down, and his summer leaves all faded
By envy's hand and murder's bloody ax.
Ah! Gaunt, his blood was thine; that bed, that womb,
That metal,° that self° mold that fashioned thee,
Made him a man: and though thou livest and breathest,
Yet art thou slain in him; thou dost consent
In some large measure to thy father's death,
In that thou see'st thy wretched brother die,
Who was the model° of thy father's life.
Call it not patience, Gaunt, it is despair:
In suff'ring° thus thy brother to be slaught' red,
Thou showest the naked pathway° to thy life,
Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee.
That which in mean men we entitle patience
Is pale cold cowardice in noble breasts.
What shall I say? To safeguard thine own life,
The best way is to venge my Gloucester's death.

GAUNT

God's is the quarrel; for God's substitute,
His deputy° anointed in His sight,
Hath caused his death, the which if wrongfully,
Let heaven revenge, for I may never lift
An angry arm against His minister.

DUCHESS

Where, then, alas, may I complain myself?°

GAUNT

To God, the widow's champion and defense.

DUCHESS

Why, then, I will. Farewell, old Gaunt,
Thou goest to Coventry, there to behold
Our cousin° Hereford and fell° Mowbray fight.

I.ii.1 Woodstock Gloucester, Gaunt's brother 2 exclaims outcries 4 those hands the king's 7 they God and his angels; hours disyllabic 23 metal stuff; self same 28 model copy 30 suff'ring allowing 31 naked pathway open road (for his murderers) 38 deputy the idea that the king, however unworthy, is God's deputy is stressed throughout the play 42
Where . . . myself To whom shall I complain? 46 cousin
kinsman; fell ruthless

O! sit my husband's wrongs on Hereford's spear,
That it may enter butcher Mowbray's breast;
Or if misfortune° miss the first career,°
Be Mowbray's sins so heavy in his bosom,
That they may break his foaming courser's back,
And throw the rider headlong in the lists,
A caitiff recreant° to my cousin Hereford.
Farewell, old Gaunt; thy sometimes° brother's wife
With her companion, grief, must end her life.

GAUNT

Sister, farewell, I must to Coventry:
As much good stay with thee, as go with me.

DUCHESS

Yet one word more: grief boundeth where it falls,
Not with the empty hollowness, but weight.°
I take my leave before I have begun,
For sorrow ends not when it seemeth done.
Commend me to thy brother, Edmund York.°
Lo! this is all: nay, yet depart not so;
Though this be all, do not so quickly go.
I shall remember more. Bid him—Ah! what?
With all good speed at Plashy° visit me.
Alack! and what shall good old York there see
But empty lodgings and unfurnished walls,
Unpeopled offices,° untrodden stones,
And what hear there for welcome but my groans?
Therefore commend me, let him not come there,
To seek out sorrow that dwells everywhere.
Desolate, desolate will I hence and die!
The last leave of thee takes my weeping eye. Exeunt.

[Scene III. The lists at Coventry.]

Enter Lord MARSHAL and the Duke AUMERLE.

MARSHAL

My Lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford armed?

AUMERLE

Yea, at all points, and longs to enter in.

MARSHAL

The Duke of Norfolk, sprightly° and bold,
Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet.

AUMERLE

Why, then, the champions are prepared, and stay
For nothing but his majesty's approach.

The trumpets sound, and the king [RICHARD] enters with his NOBLES [including GAUNT, BUSHY, BAGOT, GREEN]. When they are set, enter [MOWBRAY] the Duke of Norfolk, in arms, defendant, [and a HERALD].

RICHARD

Marshal, demand of yonder champion
The cause of his arrival here in arms;
Ask him his name; and orderly proceed
To swear him in the justice of his cause.

MARSHAL

In God's name and the king's, say who thou art

49 misfortune disaster (to Mowbray); career encounter 53 caitiff recreant captive coward 54 sometimes sometime, former 58–59 grief . . . weight my grief returns because it is heavy, not like a ball 62 York Duke of York 66 Plashy in Essex 69 offices kitchens, servants' quarters, etc.
I.iii.3 sprightly full of spirit

And why thou comest thus knightly clad in arms,
Against what man thou com'st, and what thy quarrel.
Speak truly on thy knighthood and thy oath,
As so defend thee heaven and thy valor.

MOWBRAY

My name is Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk,
Who hither come engagèd by my oath—
Which God defend° a knight should violate!
Both to defend my loyalty and truth
To God, my king, and my succeeding issue,
Against the Duke of Hereford that appeals° me;
And by the grace of God, and this mine arm,
To prove him in defending of myself
A traitor to my God, my king, and me;
And as I truly° fight, defend me, heaven!

The trumpets sound. Enter [BOLINGBROKE] Duke of Hereford, appellant, in armor.

RICHARD

Marshal, demand of yonder knight in arms,
Both who he is, and why he cometh hither
Thus plated° in habiliments of war,
And formally, according to our law,
Depose° him in the justice of his cause.

MARSHAL

What is thy name? And wherefore com'st thou hither
Before King Richard in his royal lists?
Against whom comest thou? And what's thy quarrel?
Speak like a true knight, so defend thee heaven.

BOLINGBROKE

Harry of Hereford, Lancaster and Derby
Am I, who ready here do stand in arms
To prove by God's grace, and my body's valor
In lists, on Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk,
That he is a traitor, foul and dangerous,
To God of heaven, King Richard and to me:
And as I truly fight, defend me, heaven!

MARSHAL

On pain of death, no person be so bold
Or daring-hardy° as to touch the lists,
Except the marshal and such officers
Appointed to direct these fair designs.

BOLINGBROKE

Lord Marshal, let me kiss my sovereign's hand,
And bow my knee before his majesty;
For Mowbray and myself are like two men
That vow a long and weary pilgrimage:
Then let us take a ceremonious leave
And loving farewell of our several friends.

MARSHAL

The appellant in all duty greets your highness,
And craves to kiss your hand and take his leave.

RICHARD

We will descend and fold him in our arms.
Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right,
So be thy fortune in this royal fight:
Farewell, my blood, which if today thou shed,
Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.

BOLINGBROKE

O, let no noble eye profane a tear

18 defend forbid 21 appeals accuses 25 truly with truth on my side 28 plated in plate armor 30 Depose examine on oath 43 daring-hardy reckless

For me, if I be gored with Mowbray's spear:

As confident as is the falcon's flight
Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight.

My loving lord, I take my leave of you;

Of you, my noble cousin, Lord Aumerle,

Not sick, although I have to do with death,

But lusty, young, and cheerly° drawing breath.

Lo! as at English feasts, so I regret°

The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet.

O thou, the earthly author of my blood,

Whose youthful spirit in me regenerate°

Doth with a twofold vigor lift me up

To reach at victory above my head,

Add proof° unto mine armor with thy prayers,

And with thy blessings steel my lance's point,

That it may enter Mowbray's waxen° coat

And furbish new the name of John a° Gaunt

Even in the lusty havior° of his son.

GAUNT

God in thy good cause make thee prosperous;

Be swift like lightning in the execution,

And let thy blows doubly redoubled

Fall like amazing° thunder on the casque

Of thy adverse° pernicious enemy:

Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant and live.

BOLINGBROKE

Mine innocency and Saint George to thrive!

MOWBRAY

However God or fortune cast my lot,

There lives or dies, true to King Richard's throne,

A loyal, just, and upright gentleman.

Never did captive with a freer heart

Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace

His golden, uncontrolled enfranchisement°

More than my dancing soul doth celebrate

This feast of battle with mine adversary.

Most mighty liege, and my companion peers,

Take from my mouth the wish of happy years;

As gentle and as jocund as to jest°

Go I to fight: truth hath a quiet breast.

RICHARD

Farewell, my lord; securely° I espy

Virtue with valor couchèd° in thine eye.

Order the trial, marshal, and begin.

MARSHAL

Harry of Hereford, Lancaster and Derby,

Receive thy lance, and God defend the right.

BOLINGBROKE

Strong as a tower in hope,° I cry Amen.

MARSHAL

Go bear this lance to Thomas, Duke of Norfolk.

FIRST HERALD

Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,

Stands here for God, his sovereign, and himself,

On pain to be° found false and recreant,

To prove the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray,

66 cheerly cheerfully 67 regret greet 70 regenerate reborn 73 proof invulnerability 75 waxen soft 76 a of 77 havior behavior 81 amazing stupefying 82 adverse placed opposite 90 enfranchisement liberation 95 jest sport 97 securely confidently 98 couchèd lying hidden 102 Strong . . . hope cf. Psalms 61:3 106 On . . . be at the risk of being

A traitor to his God, his king, and him,
And dares him to set forward to the fight.

SECOND HERALD

Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, 110
On pain to be found false and recreant,
Both to defend himself, and to approve°
Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
To God, his sovereign, and to him disloyal,
Courageously and with a free desire 115
Attending but the signal to begin.

MARSHAL

Sound trumpets; and set forward combatants!

[A charge sounded.]

Stay, the king hath thrown his warder° down.

RICHARD

Let them lay by their helmets and their spears
And both return back to their chairs° again. 120
Withdraw with us, and let the trumpets sound,
While we return these dukes what we decree.

[A long flourish.°]

Draw near,
And list° what with our council we have done.
For that our kingdom's earth should not be soiled 125
With that dear blood which it hath fosterèd;
And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect
Of civil wounds plowed up with neighbor's sword,
And for we think the eagle-wingèd pride
Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts
With rival-hating envy set on you
To wake our peace, which in our country's cradle
Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep,
Which so roused up with boist'rous untuned drums,
With harsh-resounding trumpets' dreadful bray, 135
And grating shock of wrathful iron arms,
Might from our quiet confines fright fair peace,
And make us wade even in our kindred's blood;
Therefore we banish you our territories:
You, cousin Hereford, upon pain of life,
Till twice five summers have enriched our fields,
Shall not regret° our fair dominions,
But tread the stranger° paths of banishment.

BOLINGBROKE

Your will be done: this must my comfort be,
That sun that warms you here shall shine on me,
And those his golden beams to you here lent
Shall point on me, and gild my banishment.

RICHARD

Norfolk, for thee remains a heavier doom
Which I with some unwillingness pronounce:
The sly slow hours shall not determinate° 150
The dateless° limit of thy dear° exile;
The hopeless word° of "Never to return"
Breathe I against thee, upon pain of life.

MOWBRAY

A heavy sentence,° my most sovereign liege,

And all unlooked for from your highness' mouth: 155

A dearer merit,° not so deep a maim
As to be cast forth in the common air
Have I deserved at your highness' hands!
The language I have learnt these forty years,
My native English, now I must forgo, 160
And now my tongue's use is to me no more
Than an unstringèd viol or a harp,
Or like a cunning° instrument cased up,
Or being open, put into his hands
That knows no touch to tune the harmony. 165
Within my mouth you have enjailed my tongue,
Doubly portcullised° with my teeth and lips,
And dull unfeeling barren ignorance
Is made my jailer to attend on me.
I am too old to fawn upon a nurse, 170
Too far in years to be a pupil now;
What is thy sentence then but speechless death,
Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath?

RICHARD

It boots° thee not to be compassionate:°
After our sentence, plaining comes too late. 175

MOWBRAY

Then thus I turn me from my country's light,
To dwell in solemn shades of endless night.

[Turns to go.]

RICHARD

Return again, and take an oath with thee.
Lay on our royal sword your banished hands;
Swear by the duty that you owe to God— 180
Our part therein we banish with yourselves°—
To keep the oath that we administer:
You never shall—so help you truth and God!—
Embrace each other's love in banishment,
Nor never look upon each other's face, 185
Nor never write, regreet, nor reconcile
This luring tempest of your homebred hate,
Nor never by advisèd° purpose meet
To plot, contrive, or complot° any ill 190
'Gainst us, our state, our subjects, or our land.

BOLINGBROKE

I swear.

MOWBRAY And I, to keep all this.

BOLINGBROKE

Norfolk, so far as to mine enemy— 145
By this time, had the king permitted us,
One of our souls had wandered in the air,
Banished this frail sepulcher° of our flesh, 195
As now our flesh is banished from this land:
Confess thy treasons ere thou fly the realm;
Since thou hast far to go, bear not along
The clogging burden of a guilty soul.

MOWBRAY

No, Bolingbroke, if ever I were traitor, 200
My name be blotted from the book of life,

112 approve prove 118 warder truncheon (a signal to stop the combat) 120 chairs on which the combatants sat before mounting 122 s.d. flourish trumpet call 124 list hear 142 regret greet again 143 stranger foreign 150 determinate put a limit to 151 dateless endless; dear severe 152 word utterance 154 sentence punning on "word" in line 152

156 dearer merit better reward 163 cunning ingenious and requiring skill in the playing 167 portcullised a portcullis was a grating which could be let down in the gateway of a castle to block it 174 boots avails; compassionate expressing passionate feeling 181 Our . . . yourselves we absolve you from allegiance to us 188 advisèd deliberate 189 complot plot with others 195 sepulcher here accented on second syllable

And I from heaven banished as from hence!
But what thou art, God, thou, and I, do know,
And all too soon, I fear, the king shall rue.
Farewell, my liege, now no way can I stray:
Save back to England all the world's my way. Exit.

RICHARD

Uncle, even in the glasses^o of thine eyes
I see thy grievèd heart: thy sad aspect^o
Hath from the number of his banished years
Plucked four away. [To BOLINGBROKE.] Six frozen winters spent,
Return with welcome home from banishment.

BOLINGBROKE

How long a time lies in one little word.
Four lagging winters and four wanton^o springs
End in a word—such is the breath of kings.

GAUNT

I thank my liege that in regard to me
He shortens four years of my son's exile,
But little vantage^o shall I reap thereby:
For ere the six years that he hath to spend
Can change their moons and bring their times^o about,
My oil-dried lamp and time-bewasted light
Shall be extinct with age and endless night;
My inch of taper will be burnt and done,
And blindfold death^o not let me see my son.

RICHARD

Why! uncle, thou hast many years to live.

GAUNT

But not a minute, king, that thou canst give;
Shorten my days thou canst with sullen sorrow
And pluck nights from me, but not lend a morrow;
Thou canst help time to furrow me with age,
But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage:
Thy word is current^o with him for my death,
But dead, thy kingdom cannot buy my breath.

RICHARD

Thy son is banished upon good advice,
Whereto thy tongue a party-verdict^o gave:
Why at our justice seem'st thou then to lour?

GAUNT

Things sweet to taste prove in digestion sour.
You urged me as a judge, but I had rather
You would have bid me argue like a father.
O, had it been a stranger, not my child,
To smooth his fault I should have been more mild:
A partial slander^o sought I to avoid,
And in the sentence my own life destroyed.
Alas! I looked when some of you should say
I was too strict to make mine own away;
But you gave leave to my unwilling tongue
Against my will to do myself this wrong.

RICHARD

Cousin, farewell, and uncle, bid him so;
Six years we banish him, and he shall go.
[Flourish.] Exit [King RICHARD, with his TRAIN].

207 glasses eyes were thought to reflect the heart 208 aspect accent on second syllable 213 wanton luxuriant 217 vantage advantage 219 times seasons 223 blindfold death death is thought of as eyeless, like a skull, and also as Atropos, Milton's "blind fury with the abhorred shears," cutting short human lives 230 current valid 233 party-verdict one person's share of a joint verdict 240 partial slander imputation of partiality

AUMERLE

Cousin, farewell; what presence must not know,^o
From where you do remain let paper show.

MARSHAL

My lord, no leave take I, for I will ride
As far as land will let me by your side. 250

GAUNT

O, to what purpose dost thou hoard thy words,
That thou returnest no greeting to thy friends?

BOLINGBROKE

I have too few to take my leave of you,
When the tongue's office should be prodigal^o
To breathe the abundant dolor of the heart. 255

GAUNT

Thy grief^o is but thy absence for a time.

BOLINGBROKE

Joy absent, grief is present for that time.

GAUNT

What is six winters? They are quickly gone.

BOLINGBROKE

To men in joy; but grief makes one hour ten. 260

GAUNT

Call it a travel that thou tak'st for pleasure.

BOLINGBROKE

My heart will sigh when I miscall it so,
Which finds it an enforced pilgrimage.

GAUNT

The sullen passage of thy weary steps
Esteem as foil^o wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy home return. 265

BOLINGBROKE

Nay, rather, every tedious stride I make
Will but remember^o me what a deal of world
I wander from the jewels that I love.

GAUNT

Must I not serve a long apprenticeship
To foreign passages,^o and in the end,
Having my freedom,^o boast of nothing else
But that I was a journeyman^o to grief?^o 270

GAUNT

All places that the eye of heaven^o visits
Are to a wise man ports and happy havens.
Teach thy necessity to reason thus: 275

There is no virtue^o like necessity.
Think not the king did banish thee,
But thou the king. Woe doth the heavier sit
Where it perceives it is but faintly^o borne. 280

Go, say I sent thee forth to purchase honor,
And not the king exiled thee; or suppose
Devouring pestilence hangs in our air,
And thou art flying to a fresher clime.

Look what^o thy soul holds dear, imagine it
To lie that way thou goest, not whence thou com'st.
Suppose the singing birds musicians, 285

248 what . . . know perhaps "as I cannot have your news from you in person," or "what you cannot say in present company" (Aumerle is anxious to know Bolingbroke's intentions)
255 prodigal lavish 257 grief (1) grievance (2) sorrow 265 foil setting (metal leaf serving as a background) 268 remember remind 271 passages experiences 272 Having my freedom at the end of his apprenticeship and of his exile 273 journeyman (1) artisan (2) traveler; journeyman to grief employee of grief (instead of his own master) 274 eye of heaven sun (as in Ovid) 277 virtue efficacy 280 faintly faintheartedly 285 Look what whatever

The grass whereon thou tread'st the presence strewed,^o
 The flowers fair ladies, and thy steps no more
 Than a delightful measure or a dance;
 For gnarling^o sorrow hath less power to bite
 The man that mocks at it and sets it light.

BOLINGBROKE

O, who can hold a fire in his hand
 By thinking on the frosty Caucasus?
 Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite
 By bare imagination of a feast?
 Or wallow naked in December snow
 By thinking on fantastic^o summer's heat?
 O, no! the apprehension of the good
 Gives but the greater feeling to the worse.
 Fell^o sorrow's tooth doth never rankle^o more
 Than when he bites, but lanceth^o not the sore.

GAUNT

Come, come, my son, I'll bring thee on thy way.
 Had I thy youth and cause, I would not stay.^o

BOLINGBROKE

Then England's ground, farewell; sweet soil, adieu;
 My mother and my nurse that bears^o me yet!
 Where'er I wander, boast of this I can:
 Though banished, yet a true-born Englishman.

Exeunt.

[Scene IV. The Court.]

Enter the king [RICHARD] with BAGOT, [GREEN], &c. at one door, and the Lord AUMERLE at another.

RICHARD

We did observe.^o Cousin Aumerle,
 How far brought you high Hereford on his way?

AUMERLE

I brought high Hereford, if you call him so,
 But to the next high way, and there I left him.

RICHARD

And say, what store of parting tears were shed?

AUMERLE

Faith, none for me,^o except the northeast wind,
 Which then blew bitterly against our faces,
 Awaked the sleeping rheum, and so by chance
 Did grace our hollow parting with a tear.

RICHARD

What said our cousin when you parted with him?

AUMERLE

"Farewell."

And for my heart disdainèd that my tongue
 Should so profane the word, that taught me craft
 To counterfeit oppression of such grief
 That words seemed buried in my sorrow's grave.
 Marry, would the word "Farewell" have length'nèd hours
 And added years to his short banishment,

288 presence strewed royal presence chamber strewn with rushes 291 gnarling snarling (with perhaps a suggestion of the twisting effects of sorrow) 298 fantastic imaginary 301 Fell fierce; rankle fester 302 lanceth cuts with a surgeon's knife 304 I . . . stay i.e., away from England 306 bears
 (1) gives birth to (2) supports me; for a discussion of these speeches see K. Muir, Review of English Studies, X (1959), 283-86

I.iv.1 We did observe continuing a conversation 6 for me
 for my part

He should have had a volume of farewells;
 But since it would not, he had none of me.

290 RICHARD

He is our cousin,^o cousin, but 'tis doubt,
 When time shall call him home from banishment,
 Whether our kinsman come to see his friends.
 Ourself and Bushy, Bagot here and Green,
 Observed his courtship to the common people,
 How he did seem to dive into their hearts
 With humble and familiar courtesy,
 What reverence he did throw away on slaves,
 Wooing poor craftsmen with the craft of smiles
 And patient underbearing of his fortune,
 As 'twere to banish their affects with him.
 Off goes his bonnet to an oyster-wench;
 A brace of draymen bid God speed him well,
 And had the tribute of his supple knee,
 With "Thanks, my countrymen, my loving friends";
 As were our England in reversion his,
 And he our subjects' next degree in hope.

GREEN

Well, he is gone, and with him go these thoughts.
 Now for the rebels which stand out in Ireland;
 Expedient manage^o must be made, my liege,
 Ere further leisure yield them further means
 For their advantage and your highness' loss.

RICHARD

We will ourself in person to this war,
 And for our coffers with too great a court
 And liberal largess are grown somewhat light,
 We are enforced to farm^o our royal realm,
 The revenue whereof shall furnish us
 For our affairs in hand. If that come short,
 Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters;^o
 Whereto, when they shall know what men are rich,
 They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold,
 And send them after to supply our wants,
 For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter BUSHY.

Bushy, what news?

BUSHY

Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my lord,
 Sudden taken, and hath sent posthaste
 To entreat your majesty to visit him.

RICHARD

Where lies he?

BUSHY

At Ely House.

RICHARD

Now put it, God, in the physician's mind
 To help him to his grave immediately!
 The lining^o of his coffers shall make coats
 To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars.
 Come, gentlemen, let's all go visit him;
 Pray God we may make haste and come too late!

ALL

Amen!

Exeunt. 65

20 cousin Richard, Aumerle, and Bolingbroke were cousins 39 manage management 45 farm lease (Richard leased the crown lands and customs dues to his favorites for £7000 a month) 48 blank charters documents given to Richard's agents, with power to insert what sums they pleased for the rich to pay 61 lining contents (with pun on "coats")

[A C T I I]

[Scene I. London. Ely House.]

Enter John of GAUNT, sick, with the Duke of YORK, [the Earl of NORTHUMBERLAND, ATTENDANTS], &c.

GAUNT

Will the king come, that I may breathe my last
In wholesome counsel to his unstaïd° youth?

YORK

Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your breath,
For all in vain comes counsel to his ear.

GAUNT

O, but they say the tongues of dying men 5
Enforce attention like deep harmony:
Where words are scarce they are seldom spent in vain,
For they breathe truth that breathe their words in pain;
He that no more must say is listened more
Than they whom youth and ease have taught to glose;° 10
More are men's ends marked than their lives before;
The setting sun, and music at the close,°
As the last taste of sweets is sweetest last,° Writ in remembrance more than things long past:
Though Richard my life's counsel would not hear, 15
My death's sad tale° may yet undeaf his ear.

YORK

No, it is stopped with other flattering sounds:
As praises—of whose taste the wise° are fond—
Lascivious meters, to whose venom° sound 20
The open ear of youth doth always listen;
Report of fashions in proud Italy
Whose manners still° our tardy-apish° nation
Limps after in base imitation.°
Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity—
So it be new, there's no respect how vile— 25
That is not quickly buzzed into his ears?
Then all too late comes counsel to be heard,
Where will° doth mutiny with wit's regard.°
Direct not him whose way himself will choose:
'Tis breath thou lack'st, and that breath wilt thou lose. 30

GAUNT

Methinks I am a prophet new inspired,
And thus expiring° do foretell of him:
His rash fierce blaze of riot° cannot last,
For violent fires soon burn out themselves.
Small showers last long, but sudden storms are short; 35
He tires betimes that spurs too fast betimes;°
With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder.
Light vanity, insatiate cormorant,°
Consuming means, soon preys upon itself.
This royal throne of kings, this scept' red isle, 40
This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars,
This other Eden, demi-paradise,

This fortress built by Nature for herself
Against infection° and the hand of war,
This happy breed° of men, this little world,° 45
This precious stone set in the silver sea
Which serves it in the office of a wall,
Or as a moat defensive to a house,
Against the envy of less happier lands,
This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England, 50
This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings,
Feared by their breed, and famous by their birth,
Renowned for their deeds as far from home,
For Christian service° and true chivalry,
As is the sepulcher in stubborn° Jewry 55
Of the world's ransom, blessed Mary's son,
This land of such dear souls, this dear dear land—
Dear for her reputation through the world—
Is now leased out—I die pronouncing it—
Like to a tenement° or pelting° farm.° 60
England, bound in with the triumphant sea,
Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege°
Of wat'ry Neptune, is now bound in with shame,
With inky blots, and rotten parchment bonds.
That England that was wont to conquer others 65
Hath made a shameful conquest of itself.
Ah! would the scandal vanish with my life,
How happy then were my ensuing death!

Enter King [RICHARD] and QUEEN, &c. [AUMERLE, BUSHY, GREEN, BAGOT, ROSS, and WILLOUGHBY].

YORK

The king is come; deal mildly with his youth,
For young hot colts being raged° do rage the more. 70

QUEEN

How fares our noble uncle, Lancaster?

RICHARD

What comfort, man? How is't with aged Gaunt?

GAUNT

O, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt indeed, and gaunt in being old!
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast; 75
And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?
For sleeping England long time have I watched:
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt.
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon
Is my strict fast°—I mean my children's looks— 80
And therein fasting hast thou made me gaunt;
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave°
Whose hollow womb inherits° naught but bones.

RICHARD

Can sick men play so nicely° with their names?

GAUNT

No, misery makes sport to mock itself: 85
Since thou dost seek to kill my name in me,°
I mock my name, great king, to flatter thee.

II.i.2 unstaïd unrestrained 10 glose utter pleasing words 12 close conclusion of a musical phrase 13 last because it comes last 16 My . . . tale my solemn dying words 18 the wise even the wise (see A Note on the Text, p. 443) 19 venom venomous 22 still always; tardy-apish imitative, but behind the fashion 23 imitation five syllables; complaints of the aping of foreign fashions were common in Elizabethan England (for this speech and the next see K. Muir, Review of English Studies, X (1959), 286–89 28 will desire;
wit's regard what intelligence ought to regard 31–32
inspired . . . expiring pun 33 riot profligacy 36 betimes
(1) soon (2) early 38 cormorant glutton (from the bird)

44 infection moral infection 45 happy breed fortunate race; little world a world by itself 54 Christian service the Crusades 55 stubborn because they rejected Christ 40–60
This . . . farm the verb comes in line 59 60 tenement leased land or property; pelting paltry 62 siege perhaps a partial pun on surge 70 raged enraged 80 Is . . . fast I must go without 73–82 name . . . grave Coleridge defended the psychological truth of these puns 83 inherits the grave will get only bones because Gaunt is wasted away 84 nicely subtly and prettily 86 kill . . . me i.e., by banishing my son and heir

RICHARD

Should dying men flatter with those that live?

GAUNT

No, no, men living flatter those that die.

RICHARD

Thou, now a-dying, sayest thou flatterest me.

GAUNT

O no, thou diest, though I the sicker be.

RICHARD

I am in health, I breathe, and see thee ill.

GAUNT

Now He that made me knows I see thee ill;
 Ill in myself to see, and in thee seeing ill.^o
 Thy deathbed is no lesser than thy land,
 Wherein thou liest in reputation sick;
 And thou, too careless patient^o as thou art,
 Commit'st thy anointed body to the cure
 Of those physicians that first wounded thee.
 A thousand flatterers sit within thy crown,
 Whose compass is no bigger than thy head,
 And yet incaged in so small a verge^o
 The waste^o is no whit lesser than thy land.
 O, had thy grandsire^o with a prophet's eye
 Seen how his son's son should destroy his sons,^o
 From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame,
 Deposing thee before thou wert possessed,
 Which art possessed^o now to depose thyself.
 Why, cousin,^o wert thou regent of the world,
 It were a shame to let this land by lease;
 But for thy world^o enjoying but this land
 Is it not more than shame to shame it so?
 Landlord of England art thou now, not king;
 Thy state of law^o is bondsman to the law,
 And thou—

RICHARD [Interrupting.]

A lunatic, lean-witted fool,
 Presuming on an ague's privilege,
 Darest with thy frozen^o admonition
 Make pale our cheek, chasing the royal blood
 With fury from his native residence.^o
 Now, by my seat's^o right-royal majesty,
 Wert thou not brother to great Edward's son,
 This tongue that runs so roundly^o in thy head
 Should run thy head from thy unreverent shoulders.

GAUNT

O, spare me not, my brother Edward's son,
 For that I was his father Edward's son,
 That blood already like the pelican^o
 Hast thou tapped out and drunkenly caroused:
 My brother Gloucester, plain well-meaning soul—
 Whom fair befall in heaven 'mongst happy souls!—

94 ill . . . ill (1) bad eyesight (2) evil 97 careless patient
 one who does not take proper steps to cure himself 102 verge limit (and possibly area within a radius of twelve miles around the court) 103 waste (1) destruction of landlord's property by tenant (2) useless expense (3) wide space 104
grandsire Edward III 105 sons Gloucester and Gaunt 107–08 possessed . . . possessed (1) possessed of the crown
 (2) possessed with devils 109 cousin kinsman 111 world
 cf. line 45 114 state of law legal status 117 frozen (1) frigid in style (2) prompted by ague (3) cold, and so cooling me 119 residence his cheek 120 seat's throne's 122 roundly bluntly 126 pelican thought to wound its breast to feed its young with its blood—a symbol both of parental self-sacrifice and filial ingratitude

May be a precedent and witness good 130
 That thou respect'st not spilling Edward's blood.
 Join with the present sickness that I have,
 And thy unkindness be like crooked^o age
 To crop at once a too-long-withered flower.
 Live in thy shame, but die not shame with thee; 135
 These words hereafter thy tormentors be.
 Convey me to my bed, then to my grave;
 Love they to live that love and honor have.

Exit [GAUNT, borne by ATTENDANTS, and NORTHUMBERLAND].

RICHARD

And let them die that age and sullens^o have,
 For both hast thou, and both become the grave. 140

YORK

I do beseech your majesty, impute his words
 To wayward sickliness and age in him:
 He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear
 As Harry, Duke of Hereford, were he here. 100

RICHARD

Right, you say true, as Hereford's love, so his, 145
 As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is.^o

[Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.]

105

NORTHUMBERLAND

My liege, old Gaunt commends him to your majesty.

RICHARD

What says he?

110

NORTHUMBERLAND Nay, nothing, all is said;
 His tongue is now a stringless instrument;
 Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent. 150

YORK

Be York the next that must be bankrout^o so!
 Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe.

RICHARD

115

The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth he;
 His time is spent, our pilgrimage must be;
 So much for that.^o Now for our Irish wars. 155
 We must supplant those rough rug-headed kernes^o
 Which live like venom, where no venom^o else,
 But only they, have privilege to live.
 And for these great affairs do ask some charge,
 Towards our assistance we do seize to us 160
 The plate, coin, revenues, and movables
 Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possessed.

YORK

125

How long shall I be patient? Ah, how long
 Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong?
 Not Gloucester's death, nor Hereford's banishment, 165
 Nor Gaunt's rebukes,^o nor England's private wrongs,^o
 Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke^o

133 crooked bent (and suggesting Time with a scythe; cf. line 134) 139 sullens sulks 146 and . . . is let what will be, be 151 bankrout bankrupt 153–55 The . . . that cf. Boling-broke's equally callous reception of Mowbray's death, IV.i.103–04; he also changes the subject in the middle of a line 156 rug-headed kernes shag-haired light-armed Irish foot soldiers 157 venom reptiles (alluding to the tradition that Saint Patrick expelled snakes from Ireland) 166 Gaunt's rebukes rebukes suffered by Gaunt; private wrongs wrongs suffered by private citizens 167 prevention . . . Boling- broke Richard prevented Bolingbroke's marriage in exile to the French king's cousin

About his marriage, nor my own disgrace,^o
 Have ever made me sour^o my patient cheek,
 Or bend one wrinkle^o on my sovereign's face.
 I am the last of noble Edward's sons,
 Of whom thy father, Prince of Wales, was first:
 In war was never lion raged more fierce,
 In peace was never gentle lamb more mild,
 Than was that young and princely gentleman.
 His face thou hast, for even so looked he,
 Accomplished with the number of thy hours;^o
 But when he frowned it was against the French,
 And not against his friends; his noble hand
 Did win what he did spend, and spent not that
 Which his triumphant father's hand had won;
 His hands were guilty of no kindred blood,
 But bloody with the enemies of his kin.
 O, Richard, York is too far gone with grief,
 Or else he never would compare between—

RICHARD

Why, uncle, what's the matter?

YORK

O my liege,
 Pardon me, if you please; if not, I pleased
 Not to be pardoned, am content withal.
 Seek you to seize and gripe^o into your hands
 The royalties^o and rights of banished Hereford?
 Is not Gaunt dead? and doth not Hereford live?
 Was not Gaunt just? and is not Harry true?
 Did not the one deserve to have an heir?
 Is not his heir a well-deserving son?
 Take^o Hereford's rights away, and take from Time
 His charters and his customary rights,
 Let not tomorrow then ensue^o today;
 Be not thyself. For how art thou a king
 But by fair sequence and succession?^o
 Now afore God—God forbid I say true—
 If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights,
 Call in the letters patents that he hath
 By his attorneys-general to sue
 His livery,^o and deny^o his off'red homage,
 You pluck a thousand dangers on your head,
 You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts,
 And prick my tender patience to those thoughts
 Which honor and allegiance cannot think.

RICHARD

Think what you will, we seize into our hands
 His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands.

YORK

I'll not be by^o the while. My liege, farewell.
 What will ensue hereof there's none can tell:
 But by^o bad courses may be understood
 That their events^o can never fall out good. Exit.

RICHARD

Go, Bushy, to the Earl of Wiltshire^o straight;

168 my own disgrace unexplained; possibly we should accept the equally difficult original reading of Q1, "his own disgrace," corrected in all copies save one 169 sour make sour 170 wrinkle frown 177 Accomplished . . . hours when he was your age 189 gripe clutch 190 royalties gifts from the king 195 Take if you take 197 ensue follow upon 199 succession four syllables 202–04 Call . . . livery if you revoke the royal letters patent that enable his attorneys to obtain for him his father's lands 204 deny refuse 211 by near 213 by concerning 214 events outcomes 215 Wiltshire William le Scrope, treasurer of England

170

175

180

185

190

195

200

205

210

215

220

225

230

235

Bid him repair to us to Ely House,
 To see this business. Tomorrow next
 We will for Ireland—and 'tis time, I trow;
 And we create in absence of ourself
 Our uncle York Lord Governor of England,
 For he is just, and always loved us well.^o
 Come on, our queen, tomorrow must we part;
 Be merry, for our time of stay is short.

[Flourish.] Exeunt King [RICHARD] and QUEEN.
Manet^o NORTHUMBERLAND [with WILLOUGHBY and ROSS].

NORTHUMBERLAND

Well, lords, the Duke of Lancaster is dead.

ROSS

And living too, for now his son is duke.

WILLOUGHBY

Barely in title, not in revenues.

NORTHUMBERLAND

Richly in both, if justice had her right.

ROSS

My heart is great, but it must break with silence
 Ere't be disburdened with a liberal^o tongue.

NORTHUMBERLAND

Nay, speak thy mind, and let him ne'er speak more

That speaks thy words again to do thee harm.

WILLOUGHBY

Tends that that thou wouldst speak to the Duke of Hereford?

If it be so, out with it boldly, man;

Quick is mine ear to hear of good towards him.

ROSS

No good at all that I can do for him,

Unless you call it good to pity him,

Bereft, and gelded of his patrimony.

NORTHUMBERLAND

Now, afore God, 'tis shame such wrongs are borne

In him a royal prince and many moe^o

Of noble blood in this declining land!

The king is not himself, but basely led

By flatterers; and what they will inform

Merely in hate 'gainst any of us all,

That will the king severely prosecute

'Gainst us, our lives, our children, and our heirs.

ROSS

The commons hath he pilled^o with grievous taxes

And quite lost their hearts. The nobles hath he fined

For ancient quarrels and quite lost their hearts.

WILLOUGHBY

And daily new exactions are devised,

As blanks,^o benevolences,^o and I wot not what:

But what, a^o God's name, doth become of this?

NORTHUMBERLAND

Wars hath not wasted it, for warred he hath not,

But basely yielded upon compromise

That which his noble ancestors achieved with blows:

More hath he spent in peace than they in wars.

ROSS

The Earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in farm.

221 For . . . well in spite of York's criticisms of his conduct, Richard apparently appreciates his honesty 223 s.d. Manet remains 229 liberal free 239 moe more 246 pilled plundered 250 blanks cf. I.iv.48; benevolences forced loans (an anachronism, as they were introduced in 1473) 251 a in

WILLOUGHBY

The king's grown bankrout like a broken man.

NORTHUMBERLAND

Reproach and dissolution hangeth over him.

ROSS

He hath not money for these Irish wars,
His burdenous taxations notwithstanding,
But by the robbing of the banished duke.

NORTHUMBERLAND

His noble kinsman—most degenerate king!
But, lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm:
We see the wind sit sore upon our sails,
And yet we strike° not, but securely perish.

ROSS

We see the very wrack° that we must suffer,
And unavoided is the danger now,
For suffering so the causes of our wrack.

NORTHUMBERLAND

Not so; even through the hollow eyes of death
I spy life peering, but I dare not say
How near the tidings of our comfort is.

WILLOUGHBY

Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost ours.

ROSS

Be confident to speak, Northumberland;
We three are but thyself, and speaking so
Thy words are but as thoughts: therefore be bold.

NORTHUMBERLAND

Then thus: I have from le Port Blanc, a bay
In Brittain°, received intelligence
That Harry, Duke of Hereford, Rainold, Lord
Cobham,

[The son of Richard, Earl of Arundel,°]
That late broke° from the Duke of Exeter,
His brother, Archbishop, late of Canterbury,
Sir Thomas Erpingham, Sir Thomas Ramston,
Sir John Norbery, Sir Robert Waterton, and Francis Quoint—

All these well furnished by the Duke of Brittain°
With eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,°
Are making hither with all due expedience,°
And shortly mean to touch our northern shore.
Perhaps they had ere this, but that they stay
The first departing of the king for Ireland.
If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
Imp out° our drooping country's broken wing,
Redeem from broking pawn° the blemished
crown,

Wipe off the dust that hides our scepter's gilt,°
And make high majesty look like itself,
Away with me in post° to Ravenspurgh;
But if you faint, as fearing to do so,
Stay, and be secret, and myself will go.

266 strike a pun on striking sails and striking blows 267 wrack wreck 278 Brittain Brittany 280 The . . . Arundel some such line, necessary for the sense, is lacking, possibly because an Earl of Arundel was executed in October 1595 281 broke escaped 286 men of war soldiers 287 expedience speed 292 Imp out engraft new feathers 293 broking pawn lending money upon pawns, which was fraudulent (cf. II.i.113) 294 gilt pun on guilt 296 in post with speed, with relays of horses

ROSS

To horse, to horse, urge doubts to them that fear.

WILLOUGHBY

Hold out my horse,° and I will first be there. Exeunt. 300

[Scene II. Windsor Castle.]

Enter the QUEEN, BUSHY, BAGOT.

BUSHY

Madam, your majesty is too much sad.
You promised, when you parted with the king,
To lay aside life-harming heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition.

QUEEN

To please the king I did: to please myself
I cannot do it; yet I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard. Yet again methinks
Some unborn sorrow ripe in Fortune's womb
Is coming towards me; and my inward soul
With nothing trembles—at something it grieves
More than with parting from my lord the king.

BUSHY

Each substance of a grief hath twenty shadows,°
Which shows like grief itself, but is not so;
For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects,
Like perspectives° which, rightly gazed upon,
Show nothing but confusion; eyed awry,
Distinguish form. So your sweet majesty,
Looking awry upon your lord's departure,
Find° shapes of grief more than himself to wail,°
Which looked on as it is, is nought but shadows
Of what it is not; then, thrice-gracious queen,
More than your lord's departure weep not: more's not
seen,
Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye,
Which for things true weeps° things imaginary.

QUEEN

It may be so; but yet my inward soul
Persuades me it is otherwise. Howe'er it be,
I cannot but be sad—so heavy sad,
As, though on thinking on no thought I think,°
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.

BUSHY

'Tis nothing but conceit,° my gracious lady.

QUEEN

'Tis nothing less:° conceit is still derived
From some forefather grief; mine is not so,
For nothing hath begot my something grief,
Or something hath the nothing that I grieve:°

300 Hold . . . horse if my horse holds out

II.ii.14 shadows illusory griefs 18 perspectives pictures constructed so that they look distorted when viewed directly ("rightly"), and intelligible when viewed from the side ("awry") 22 Find the subject "you" is understood from "majesty"; wail bewail 27 weeps weeps for 31 though . . . think though I try to think about nothing 33 conceit fancy 34 'Tis nothing less it's anything except mere fancy 37 something . . . grieve the nothing that I grieve hath something in it

'Tis in reversion that I do possess,^o
But what it is that is not yet known what,
I cannot name; 'tis nameless woe I wot.^o

[Enter GREEN.]

GREEN

God save your majesty! and well met, gentlemen.
I hope the king is not yet shipped for Ireland.

QUEEN

Why hopest thou so? 'Tis better hope he is,
For his designs crave^o haste, his haste good hope:
Then wherefore dost thou hope he is not shipped?

GREEN

That he our hope might have retired his power
And driven into despair an enemy's hope,
Who strongly^o hath set footing in this land:
The banished Bolingbroke repeals^o himself,
And with uplifted arms is safe arrived
At Ravenspurgh.

QUEEN

Now God in heaven forbid!

GREEN

Ah, madam! 'tis too true; and that^o is worse,
The Lord Northumberland, his son, young Henry
Percy,^o

The Lords of Ross, Beaumond, and Willoughby,
With all their powerful friends are fled to him.

BUSHY

Why have you not proclaimed Northumberland
And all the rest^o revolted faction, traitors?

GREEN

We have: whereupon the Earl of Worcester^o
Hath broken his staff, resigned his stewardship,
And all the household servants fled with him
To Bolingbroke.

QUEEN

So, Green, thou art the midwife to my woe,
And Bolingbroke, my sorrow's dismal heir;^o
Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,^o
And I, a gasping, new-delivered mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow, joined.

BUSHY

Despair not, madam.

QUEEN

Who shall hinder me?

I will despair and be at enmity
With cozening hope: he is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper-back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands^o of life
Which false hope lingers^o in extremity.

[Enter the Duke of YORK.]

GREEN

Here comes the Duke of York.

QUEEN

With signs of war^o about his aged neck.

38 'Tis . . . possess I am heir to it, and I shall know what it is when I experience it 40 wot know 44 crave demand 48 strongly with a strong force 49 repeals recalls 52 that what 53 young Henry Percy these words are repeated in the next scene, and either "Henry" or "his son" may be spurious here 57 rest remaining 58 Worcester Northumberland's brother, and the Lord Steward of the king's household 63 heir offspring 64 prodigy monster 71 dissolve the bands unloose the bonds 72 lingers causes to linger 74 signs of war York is wearing throat armor

O, full of careful business^o are his looks!
Uncle, for God's sake, speak comfortable^o words.

75

40 YORK

Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts.
Comfort's in heaven, and we are on the earth,
Where nothing lives but crosses, cares, and grief.
Your husband, he is gone to save far off,
Whilst others come to make him lose at home.
Here am I left to underprop his land,
Who, weak with age, cannot support myself.
Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit^o made;
Now shall he try his friends that flattered him.

80

85

[Enter SERVINGMAN.]

SERVINGMAN

My lord, your son was gone before I came.

YORK

He was? Why so, go all which way it will.
The nobles, they are fled, the commons cold,
And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side.
Sirrah, get thee to Plashy to my sister^o Gloucester;
Bid her send me presently a thousand pound.
Hold, take my ring.

90

SERVINGMAN

My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordship:
Today as I came by I callèd there—
But I shall grieve you to report the rest.

95

YORK

What is't, knave?

SERVINGMAN

An hour before I came the duchess died.^o

YORK

God for his mercy, what a tide of woes
Comes rushing on this woeful land at once.
I know not what to do. I would to God—
So my untruth^o had not provoked him to it—
The king had cut off my head with my brother's.
What! are there no posts dispatched for Ireland?
How shall we do for money for these wars?
Come, sister—cousin, I would say—pray pardon me.
Go fellow, get thee home, provide some carts,
And bring away the armor that is there.

100

105

[Exit SERVINGMAN.]

Gentlemen, will you go muster men?
If I know how or which way to order these affairs,
Thus disorderly thrust into my hands,
Never believe me. Both are my kinsmen.
Th' one is my sovereign, whom both my oath
And duty bids defend; t' other again
Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wronged,
Whom conscience and my kindred bids to right.
Well, somewhat we must do. Come, cousin, I'll dispose of^o you. Gentlemen, go muster up your men,
And meet me presently at Berkeley.
I should to Plashy too,

110

115

75 careful business anxious preoccupation 76 comfortable comforting (the phrase "comfortable words" is used in the Anglican communion service) 84 surfeit overindulgence 90 sister sister-in-law 97 died in fact she died later; but Shakespeare wishes to give the effect of a succession of woes 101 untruth disloyalty 117 dispose of make arrangements for

But time will not permit. All is uneven,
And everything is left at six and seven.^o

Exeunt Duke [of YORK], QUEEN. Manent BUSHY, [BAGOT,] GREEN.

BUSHY

The wind sits^o fair for news to go for Ireland,
But none returns. For us to levy power
Proportionable^o to the enemy
Is all impossible.

GREEN

Besides, our nearness to the king in love
Is near the hate of those love not the king.

BAGOT

And that is the wavering commons, for their love
Lies in their purses, and whoso empties them
By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate.

BUSHY

Wherein the king stands generally condemned.

BAGOT

If judgment lie in^o them, then so do we,
Because we ever have been near the king.

GREEN

Well, I will for refuge straight to Bristow^o Castle.
The Earl of Wiltshire is already there.

BUSHY

Thither will I with you, for little office
The hateful commons will perform for us,
Except like curs to tear us all to pieces.
Will you go along with us?

BAGOT

No, I will to Ireland to his majesty.
Farewell; if heart's presages be not vain,
We three here part that ne'er shall meet again.

BUSHY

That's as York thrives to beat back Bolingbroke.

GREEN

Alas, poor duke, the task he undertakes
Is numb'ring sands, and drinking oceans dry:
Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly.
Farewell at once, for once, for all, and ever.

BUSHY

Well, we may meet again.

BAGOT

I fear me, never. [Exeunt.]

[Scene III. In Gloucestershire.]

Enter [BOLINGBROKE Duke of] Hereford, [and] NORTHUMBERLAND [with SOLDIERS].

BOLINGBROKE

How far is it, my lord, to Berkeley now?

NORTHUMBERLAND

Believe me, noble lord,
I am a stranger here in Gloucestershire.
These high wild hills and rough uneven ways
Draws out our miles and makes them wearisome;
And yet your fair discourse hath been as sugar,
Making the hard way sweet and delectable.^o
But I bethink me what a weary way

120

From Ravenspurgh to Cotshall^o will be found
In Ross and Willoughby, wanting your company,
Which I protest hath very much beguiled
The tediousness and process^o of my travel:
But theirs is sweet'ned with the hope to have
The present benefit which I possess;
And hope to joy is little less in joy
Than hope enjoyed. By this the weary lords
Shall make their way seem short as mine hath done,
By sight of what I have, your noble company.

125

BOLINGBROKE

Of much less value is my company
Than your good words. But who comes here?

Enter Harry PERCY.

130

NORTHUMBERLAND

It is my son, young Harry Percy,
Sent from my brother Worcester whencesoever.^o
Harry, how fares your uncle?

PERCY

I had thought, my lord, to have learned his health of
you.

NORTHUMBERLAND

135

Why, is he not with the queen?

PERCY

No, my good lord, he hath forsook the court,
Broken his staff of office, and dispersed
The household of the king.

NORTHUMBERLAND

What was his reason?

He was not so resolved when last we spake together.

140

PERCY

Because your lordship was proclaimed traitor;
But he, my lord, is gone to Ravenspurgh
To offer service to the Duke of Hereford,
And sent me over by Berkeley to discover
What power the Duke of York had levied there,
Then with directions to repair to Ravenspurgh.

145

NORTHUMBERLAND

Have you forgot the Duke of Hereford, boy?

PERCY

No, my good lord, for that is not forgot
Which ne'er I did remember. To my knowledge
I never in my life did look on him.

NORTHUMBERLAND

Then learn to know him now—this is the duke.

PERCY

My gracious lord, I tender you my service,
Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young,
Which elder days shall ripen and confirm
To more approvèd service and desert.

BOLINGBROKE

I thank thee, gentle Percy, and be sure
I count myself in nothing else so happy
As in a soul rememb'ring my good friends;
And as my fortune ripens with thy love,
It shall be still thy true love's recompense:
My heart this covenant makes, my hand thus seals it.

NORTHUMBERLAND

How far is it to Berkeley, and what stir
Keeps good old York there with his men of war?

121 six and seven i.e., in confusion 122 sits blows 124

Proportionable proportional 132 lie in depends on 134

Bristow old form of Bristol

II.iii.7 delectable accents on first and third syllables

9 Cotshall Cotswold 12 tediousness and process tedious process 22 whencesoever from wherever he is

PERCY

There stands the castle by yon tuft of trees,
Manned with three hundred men, as I have heard,
And in it are the Lords of York, Berkeley, and Seymour, 55
None else of name and noble estimate.

[Enter ROSS and WILLOUGHBY.]

NORTHUMBERLAND

Here come the Lords of Ross and Willoughby,
Bloody with spurring, fiery red with haste.

BOLINGBROKE

Welcome, my lords, I wot your love pursues
A banished traitor. All my treasury 60
Is yet but unfelt° thanks, which more enriched
Shall be your love° and labor's recompense.

ROSS

Your presence makes us rich, most noble lord.

WILLOUGHBY

And far surmounts our labor to attain it.

BOLINGBROKE

Evermore thank's the exchequer of the poor, 65
Which till my infant° fortune comes to years
Stands for my bounty. But who comes here?

[Enter BERKELEY.]

NORTHUMBERLAND

It is my Lord of Berkeley, as I guess.

BERKELEY

My Lord of Hereford, my message is to you.

BOLINGBROKE

My lord, my answer is—to Lancaster;° 70
And I am come to seek that name in England;
And I must find that title in your tongue
Before I make reply to aught you say.

BERKELEY

Mistake me not, my lord; 'tis not my meaning 75
To race one title° of your honor out.
To you, my lord, I come—what lord you will—
From the most gracious regent of this land,
The Duke of York, to know what pricks you on
To take advantage of the absent time,°
And fright our native peace with self-borne° arms? 80

[Enter YORK, attended.]

BOLINGBROKE

I shall not need transport my words by you:
Here comes his grace in person. My noble uncle!

[Kneels.]

YORK

Show me thy humble heart, and not thy knee,
Whose duty is deceivable° and false.

BOLINGBROKE

My gracious uncle— 85

YORK

Tut, tut! Grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle;

I am no traitor's uncle, and that word "grace"
In an ungracious mouth is but profane.
Why have those banished and forbidden legs
Dared once to touch a dust of England's ground? 90
But then, more "why?" Why have they dared to march

So many miles upon her peaceful bosom,
Frighting her palefaced villages with war,
And ostentation of despised° arms?
Com'st thou because the anointed king is hence? 95
Why, foolish boy, the king is left behind,
And in my loyal bosom lies his power.
Were I but now the lord of such hot youth
As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself
Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars of men, 100
From forth the ranks of many thousand French,
O, then, how quickly should this arm of mine,
Now prisoner to the palsy, chastise thee,
And minister correction to thy fault!

BOLINGBROKE

My gracious uncle, let me know my fault: 105
On what condition stands it, and wherein?

YORK

Even in condition of the worst degree,
In gross rebellion and detested treason.
Thou art a banished man, and here art come
Before the expiration of thy time, 110
In braving arms against thy sovereign.

BOLINGBROKE

As I was banished, I was banished Hereford,
But as I come, I come for Lancaster.
And, noble uncle, I beseech your grace,
Look on my wrongs with an indifferent° eye. 115
You are my father, for methinks in you
I see old Gaunt alive. O, then, my father,
Will you permit that I shall stand condemned,
A wandering vagabond, my rights and royalties
Plucked from my arms perforce, and given away 120
To upstart unthrifths?° Wherefore was I born?
If that my cousin king be King in England,
It must be granted I am Duke of Lancaster.
You have a son, Aumerle, my noble cousin:
Had you first died, and he been thus trod down, 125
He should have found his uncle Gaunt a father,
To rouse his wrongs and chase them to the bay.°
I am denied to sue my livery here,
And yet my letters patents give me leave.
My father's goods are all distrained and sold, 130
And these, and all, are all amiss employed.
What would you have me do? I am a subject;
And° I challenge law, attorneys are denied me;
And therefore personally I lay my claim
To my inheritance of free descent. 135

NORTHUMBERLAND

The noble duke hath been too much abused.

ROSS

It stands your grace upon° to do him right.

WILLOUGHBY

Base men by his endowments are made great.

94 despised despicable 115 indifferent impartial 121 unthrifths prodigals 127 bay quarry's last stand 133 And if 137 It . . . upon it behooves your grace

61 unfelt intangible 62 love love's 66 infant and so unable to possess property 70 to Lancaster Bolingbroke is about to reply, but in the middle of the sentence he changes his mind, to say that he will answer only in the name of Lancaster 75 race one title erase one title (with pun on "tittle") 79 absent time time of the king's absence 80 self-borne borne for one's own cause 84 deceivable deceptive

YORK

My lords of England, let me tell you this:
I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs,
And labored all I could to do him right;
But in this kind to come in braving arms,
Be his own carver,^o and cut out his way,
To find out right with wrong—it may not be:
And you that do abet him in this kind
Cherish rebellion, and are rebels all.

NORTHUMBERLAND

The noble duke hath sworn his coming is
But for his own; and for the right of that
We all have strongly sworn to give him aid:
And let him never see joy that breaks that oath.

YORK

Well, well, I see the issue of these arms.
I cannot mend it, I must needs confess,
Because my power is weak and all ill left:^o
But if I could, by Him that gave me life,
I would attach^o you all, and make you stoop
Unto the sovereign mercy of the king.
But since I cannot, be it known unto you
I do remain as neuter.^o So fare you well—
Unless you please to enter in the castle,
And there repose you for this night.

BOLINGBROKE

An offer, uncle, that we will accept.
But we must win your grace to go with us
To Bristow Castle, which they say is held
By Bushy, Bagot, and their complices,^o
The caterpillars of the commonwealth,^o
Which I have sworn to weed and pluck away.

YORK

It may be I will go with you, but yet I'll pause,
For I am loath to break our country's laws.
Nor friends, nor foes, to me welcome you are.
Things past redress are now with me past care.

Exeunt.

[Scene IV. In Wales.]

Enter Earl of SALISBURY, and a Welsh CAPTAIN.^o

CAPTAIN

My Lord of Salisbury, we have stayed ten days
And hardly keep our countrymen together,
And yet^o we hear no tidings from the king;
Therefore we will disperse ourselves. Farewell.

SALISBURY

Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welshman;
The king reposes all his confidence in thee.

CAPTAIN

'Tis thought the king is dead: we will not stay.
The bay trees in our country are all withered,
And meteors fright the fixèd stars of heaven,
The palefaced moon looks bloody on the earth,

143 Be . . . carver be a law to himself 153 ill left left inadequate (?) left in disorder (?) 155 attach arrest 158 neuter neutral 164 complices accomplices 165 The . . . commonwealth common Elizabethan expression, ultimately biblical, for those who preyed on society

II.iv.s.d. Captain possibly Owen Glendower, mentioned in III.i.43 3 yet so far

And lean-looked^o prophets whisper fearful change;
Rich men look sad, and ruffians dance and leap,
The one in fear to lose what they enjoy,^o
The other to enjoy by rage^o and war.
These signs forerun the death or fall of kings.
Farewell; our countrymen are gone and fled,
As well assured Richard their king is dead. [Exit.]

145 SALISBURY

Ah, Richard! With the eyes of heavy mind
I see thy glory like a shooting star
Fall to the base earth from the firmament;
Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe and unrest;^o
Thy friends are fled to wait upon thy foes,
And crossly^o to thy good all fortune goes. [Exit.]

[A C T I I I]

[Scene I. Bristol. Before the castle.]

160 Enter [BOLINGBROKE] Duke of Hereford, YORK, NORTHUMBERLAND, [other LORDS, SOLDIERS,] BUSHY and GREEN prisoners.

BOLINGBROKE

Bring forth these men.
Bushy and Green, I will not vex your souls,
Since presently^o your souls must part^o your bodies,
With too much urging your pernicious lives,
For 'twere no charity; yet, to wash your blood
From off my hands, here in the view of men,
I will unfold some causes of your deaths.
You have misled a prince, a royal king,
A happy^o gentleman in blood and lineaments,
By you unhappied and disfigured clean;
You have in manner with your sinful hours
Made a divorce^o betwixt his queen and him,
Broke the possession of a royal bed,
And stained the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks
With tears, drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs.^o
Myself a prince, by fortune of my birth,
Near to the king in blood, and near in love
Till you did make him misinterpret me,
Have stooped my neck under your injuries,
And sighed my English breath in foreign clouds,
Eating the bitter bread of banishment,
Whilst you have fed upon my signories,^o
Disparked^o my parks, and felled my forest woods,
From my own windows torn my household coat,^o

11 lean-looked lean-looking 13 enjoy possess 14 enjoy by rage in hope of enjoying by violent action 21–22 sun . . . unrest Richard's badge was a sun obscured by or breaking from clouds 24 crossly adversely

III.i.3 presently immediately; part part from 9 happy fortunate 11–12 in . . . divorce you have made a kind of divorce 11–15 You . . . wrongs there is no suggestion elsewhere in the play that Richard was estranged from his queen, though Holinshed does refer to his adultery (if the accusation is one of homosexuality, it may echo Marlowe's Edward II; and in Woodstock Queen Ann complains of Richard's favorites; but Bolingbroke is making a propaganda speech) 22 signories estates 23 Disparked thrown upon 24 From . . . coat broke the coat of arms in stained glass

Raced out my impresse,^o leaving me no sign, 25
 Save men's opinions and my living blood,
 To show the world I am a gentleman.^o
 This and much more, much more than twice all this,
 Condemns you to the death. See them delivered over
 To execution and the hand of death. 30

BUSHY

More welcome is the stroke of death to me
 Than Bolingbroke to England. Lords, farewell.

GREEN

My comfort is that heaven will take our souls
 And plague injustice with the pains of hell.

BOLINGBROKE

My Lord Northumberland, see them dispatched.^o 35
 [Exit NORTHUMBERLAND, with BUSHY and GREEN.]
 Uncle, you say the queen is at your house;
 For God's sake, fairly let her be intreated.^o
 Tell her I send to her my kind commends;^o
 Take special care my greetings be delivered.

YORK

A gentleman of mine I have dispatched 40
 With letters of your love to her at large.^o

BOLINGBROKE

Thanks, gentle uncle. Come, lords, away
 To fight with Glendower^o and his complices;
 A while to work, and after holiday. Exeunt.

[Scene II. The coast of Wales, near Barkloughly Castle.]

Enter the king [RICHARD], AUMERLE, [the Bishop of] CARLISLE, &c. [Drum, flourish, and colors.]

RICHARD

Barkloughly Castle call they this at hand?

AUMERLE

Yea, my lord. How brooks^o your grace the air
 After your late tossing on the breaking seas?

RICHARD

Needs must I like it well. I weep for joy
 To stand upon my kingdom once again. 5
 Dear earth, I do salute^o thee with my hand,
 Though rebels wound thee with their horses' hoofs.
 As a long-parted mother with her child
 Plays fondly with her tears and smiles in meeting,
 So weeping, smiling, greet I thee, my earth, 10
 And do thee favors with my royal hands.
 Feed not thy sovereign's foe, my gentle earth,
 Nor with thy sweets comfort his ravenous sense;
 But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,
 And heavy-gaited toads lie in their way, 15
 Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet
 Which with usurping steps do trample thee;
 Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies;
 And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower,
 Guard it, I pray thee, with a lurking adder 20

Whose double tongue may with a mortal^o touch
 Throw death upon thy sovereign's enemies.
 Mock not my senseless^o conjuration, lords:
 This earth shall have a feeling, and these stones
 Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king 25
 Shall falter under foul rebellion's arms.

CARLISLE

Fear not, my lord; that power that made you king
 Hath power to keep you king in spite of all.
 The means that heavens yield must be embraced
 And not neglected. Else heaven would, 30
 And we will not:^o heaven's offer we refuse,
 The proffered means of succor and redress.

AUMERLE

He means, my lord, that we are too remiss,
 Whilst Bolingbroke through our security
 Grows strong and great in substance and in power. 35

RICHARD

Discomfortable^o cousin, know'st thou not
 That when the searching eye of heaven is hid
 Behind the globe^o and lights the lower world,^o
 Then thieves and robbers range abroad unseen
 In murders and in outrage boldly here: 40
 But when from under this terrestrial ball
 He fires the proud tops of the eastern pines
 And darts his light through every guilty hole,
 Then murders, treasons, and detested sins,
 The cloak of night being plucked from off their backs, 45
 Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves?
 So when this thief, this traitor, Bolingbroke,
 Who all this while hath reveled in the night
 Whilst we were wand'ring with the Antipodes,
 Shall see us rising in our throne, the east, 50
 His treasons will sit blushing in his face,
 Not able to endure the sight of day,
 But self-affrighted tremble at his sin.
 Not all the water in the rough rude sea
 Can wash the balm^o off from an anointed king; 55
 The breath of worldly^o men cannot depose
 The deputy elected by the Lord.
 For every man that Bolingbroke hath pressed^o
 To lift shrewd^o steel against our golden crown,
 God for his Richard hath in heavenly pay 60
 A glorious angel;^o then, if angels fight,
 Weak men must fall, for heaven still guards the right.

Enter SALISBURY.

Welcome, my lord. How far off lies your power?^o

SALISBURY

Nor near, nor farther off, my gracious lord,
 Than this weak arm. Discomfort guides my tongue, 65
 And bids me speak of nothing but despair.
 One day too late, I fear me, noble lord,
 Hath clouded all thy happy days on earth.
 O, call back yesterday, bid time return,
 And thou shalt have twelve thousand fighting men. 70

25 Raced . . . impresse erased my impresa (emblem) 16-27 Myself . . . gentleman Bolingbroke's real complaint (he does not mention the forced loans and the farming of the land) 35 dispatched executed 37 intreated treated 38 commends commendations, greetings 41 at large in full 43 Glendower cf. note to II.iv.s.d.; perhaps Bolingbroke does not know that the Welsh army has disbanded
 III.ii.2 brooks enjoys 6 salute greet with a gesture

21 mortal deadly 23 senseless addressed to senseless things 30-31 Else . . . not otherwise we go against the will of heaven 36 Discomfortable discomforting 38 globe earth; lower world Antipodes 55 balm cf. IV.i.206 56 worldly earthly 58 pressed conscripted 59 shrewd sharp 59-61 crown . . . angel possibly a pun on these two coins 63 power
 army

Today, today, unhappy day too late,
O'erthrows thy joys, friends, fortune, and thy state;
For all the Welshmen, hearing thou wert dead,
Are gone to Bolingbroke, dispersed and fled.

AUMERLE

Comfort, my liege, why looks your grace so pale? 75

RICHARD

But now the blood of twenty thousand men
Did triumph in my face, and they are fled;
And till so much blood thither come again,
Have I not reason to look pale and dead?
All souls that will be safe fly from my side,
For Time hath set a blot upon my pride.

AUMERLE

Comfort, my liege, remember who you are.

RICHARD

I had forgot myself: am I not king?
Awake, thou coward majesty! Thou sleepest.
Is not the king's name twenty thousand names? 85
Arm, arm, my name! a puny subject strikes
At thy great glory. Look not to the ground,
Ye favorites of a king, are we not high?
High^o be our thoughts. I know my uncle York Hath power enough to serve our turn. But who comes here? 90

Enter SCROOP.

SCROOP

More health and happiness betide my liege
Than can my care-tuned^o tongue deliver him.

RICHARD

Mine ear is open, and my heart prepared;
The worst is worldly loss thou canst unfold.
Say, is my kingdom lost? Why, 'twas my care, 95
And what loss is it to be rid of care?
Strives Bolingbroke to be as great as we?
Greater he shall not be; if he serve God,
We'll serve Him too, and be his fellow so.
Revolt our subjects? That we cannot mend: 100
They break their faith to God as well as us.
Cry woe, destruction, ruin, and decay:
The worst is death, and death will have his day.

SCROOP

Glad am I that your highness is so armed
To bear the tidings of calamity. 105
Like an unseasonable stormy day
Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores
As if the world were all dissolved to tears,
So high above his limits swells the rage
Of Bolingbroke, covering your fearful land 110
With hard bright steel and hearts harder than steel.
White beards have armed their thin and hairless scalps
Against thy majesty; boys with women's voices
Strive to speak big,^o and clap their female^o joints
In stiff unwieldy arms against thy crown; 115
Thy very beadsmen^o learn to bend their bows
Of double-fatal^o yew against thy state;
Yea, distaff-women manage^o rusty bills^o

89 High high in name and place 92 care-tuned tuned to the key of sorrow 114 speak big assume men's voices; female weak, effeminate 116 beadsmen pensioners who pray for their benefactors 117 double-fatal the berry is poisonous and the wood used for bows 118 manage wield; bills wooden shafts with spiked blades

Against thy seat: both young and old rebel,
And all goes worse than I have power to tell. 120

RICHARD

Too well, too well thou tell'st a tale so ill.
Where is the Earl of Wiltshire? Where is Bagot?
What is become of Bushy? Where is Green?
That they have let the dangerous enemy
Measure our confines with such peaceful^o steps? 125
If we prevail, their heads shall pay for it.
I warrant they have^o made peace with Bolingbroke.

SCROOP

Peace have they made with him indeed, my lord.

RICHARD

O, villains, vipers, damned without redemption!
Dogs easily won to fawn on any man! 130
Snakes in my heart-blood warmed that sting my heart!
Three Judases, each one thrice worse than Judas!
Would they make peace? Terrible hell
Make war upon their spotted^o souls for this!

SCROOP

Sweet love, I see, changing his property,^o 135
Turns to the sourest and most deadly hate.
Again uncure their souls: their peace is made
With heads and not with hands; those whom you curse

Have felt the worst of death's destroying wound,
And lie full low, graved in the hollow ground. 140

AUMERLE

Is Bushy, Green, and the Earl of Wiltshire dead?

SCROOP

Ay, all of them at Bristow lost their heads.

AUMERLE

Where is the duke, my father, with his power?^o 95

RICHARD

No matter where—of comfort no man speak.
Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs, 145
Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.
Let's choose executors and talk of wills:
And yet not so, for what can we bequeath
Save our deposèd bodies to the ground? 150
Our lands, our lives, and all are Bolingbroke's,
And nothing can we call our own, but death
And that small model^o of the barren earth
Which serves as paste and cover^o to our bones. 155
For God's sake let us sit upon the ground
And tell sad stories of the death of kings:
How some have been deposed, some slain in war,
Some haunted by the ghosts they have deposed,
Some poisoned by their wives, some sleeping killed,
All murdered—for within the hollow^o crown 160
That rounds the mortal temples of a king
Keeps Death his court, and there the antic^o sits,
Scoffing his state and grinning at his pomp,
Allowing him a breath, a little scene,
To monarchize,^o be feared, and kill with looks, 165

125 peaceful unopposed 127 they have pronounced "they've"
134 spotted sinful 135 property distinctive quality 143 power army 153 model variously explained as mold, grave mound, and microcosm 154 paste and cover an image taken from pie crust, since this was sometimes called a coffin 160 hollow empty circle, vain, transitory 162 antic clown
165 monarchize play the monarch

Infusing him with self and vain conceit,^o
 As if this flesh which walls about our life
 Were brass impregnable; and, humored^o thus,
 Comes at the last, and with a little pin
 Bores thorough^o his castle wall, and farewell king! 170
 Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood
 With solemn reverence; throw away respect,
 Tradition, form, and ceremonious duty;
 For you have but mistook me all this while:
 I live with bread like you, feel want,
 Taste grief, need friends—subjected^o thus,
 How can you say to me, I am a king?

CARLISLE

My lord, wise men ne'er sit and wail their woes,
 But presently^o prevent the ways to wail.
 To fear the foe, since fear oppresseth strength,
 Gives in your weakness strength unto your foe;
 And so your follies fight against yourself.
 Fear and be slain, no worse can come to fight,^o
 And fight and die is death destroying death,
 Where fearing dying pays death servile breath.^o

AUMERLE

My father hath a power; inquire of him,
 And learn to make a body of a limb.^o

RICHARD

Thou chid'st me well. Proud Bolingbroke, I come
 To change^o blows with thee for our day of doom.
 This ague fit of fear is overblown;^o
 An easy task it is to win our own.
 Say, Scroop, where lies our uncle with his power?^o
 Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour.

SCROOP

Men judge by the complexion of the sky
 The state and inclination of the day;
 So may you by my dull and heavy eye.
 My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say.
 I play the torturer by small and small^o
 To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken:
 Your uncle York is joined with Bolingbroke,
 And all your northern castles yielded up,
 And all your southern gentlemen in arms
 Upon his party.^o

RICHARD

Thou hast said enough.
 Beshrew thee,^o cousin, which^o didst lead me forth
 Of that sweet way^o I was in to despair.
 What say you now? What comfort have we now?
 By heaven, I'll hate him everlastingly
 That bids me be of comfort any more.
 Go to Flint Castle: there I'll pine away;
 A king, woe's slave, shall kingly woe obey.
 That power I have, discharge, and let them go
 To ear the land that hath some hope to grow,^o
 For I have none. Let no man speak again
 To alter this, for counsel is but vain.

166 self . . . conceit empty estimate of self 168 humored perhaps "Death thus amused" or "the king thus indulged" 170 thorough through 176 subjected made a subject and subject to the ordinary needs of man 179 presently immediately 183 to fight by fighting 185 pays . . . breath makes us slaves to death 187 body . . . limb make a whole out of a part 189 change exchange 190 overblown blown over 192 power army 198 small and small little by little 203 Upon his party on his side 204 Beshrew thee ill befall you; which who 205 way path, habit 212 To . . . grow to cultivate the fertile ground (i.e., desert to Bolingbroke)

AUMERLE

My liege, one word.

RICHARD

He does me double wrong 215
 That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue.
 Discharge my followers, let them hence away,
 From Richard's night to Bolingbroke's fair day.
 [Exeunt.]

175

[Scene III. Wales. Before Flint Castle.]

Enter [with drum and colors] BOLINGBROKE, YORK, NORTHUMBERLAND, [ATTENDANTS, and SOLDIERS].

180

BOLINGBROKE

So that by this intelligence we learn
 The Welshmen are dispersed, and Salisbury
 Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed
 With some few private friends upon this coast.

185

NORTHUMBERLAND

The news is very fair and good, my lord;
 Richard not far from hence hath hid his head.

5

YORK

It would beseem the Lord Northumberland
 To say "King Richard." Alack, the heavy day
 When such a sacred king should hide his head.

190

NORTHUMBERLAND

Your grace mistakes; only to be brief
 Left I his title out.

10

YORK

The time hath been
 Would you have been so brief^o with him, he would Have been so brief with you to shorten you,
 For taking so the head,^o your whole head's length.

195

BOLINGBROKE

Mistake^o not, uncle, further than you should.

15

YORK

Take not, good cousin, further than you should,
 Lest you mis-take:^o the heavens are over our heads.

200

BOLINGBROKE

I know it, uncle, and oppose not myself
 Against their will. But who comes here?

Enter PERCY.

205

PERCY

Welcome, Harry. What, will not this castle yield? 20

PERCY

The castle royally is manned, my lord,
 Against thy entrance.

BOLINGBROKE

Royally!

210

PERCY

Why, it contains no king?
 Yes, my good lord,
 It doth contain a king: King Richard lies
 Within the limits of yon lime and stone;
 And with him are the Lord Aumerle, Lord Salisbury,
 Sir Stephen Scroop, besides a clergyman
 Of holy reverence—who, I cannot learn.

25

NORTHUMBERLAND

O, belike it is the Bishop of Carlisle.

III.iii.11–12 The . . . brief there was a time when if you had been so curt 14 taking . . . head (1) chopping off the title
 (2) acting without restraint 15 Mistake take amiss 17 mistake transgress, take what is not yours (i.e., the crown)

BOLINGBROKE

Noble lord, 30
 Go to the rude ribs° of that ancient castle,
 Through brazen trumpet send the breath of parley
 Into his ruined ears, and thus deliver:
 Henry Bolingbroke
 On both his knees doth kiss King Richard's hand, 35
 And sends allegiance and true faith of heart
 To his most royal person; hither come
 Even at his feet to lay my arms and power,
 Provided that my banishment repealed,
 And lands restored again be freely granted; 40
 If not, I'll use the advantage of my power,
 And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood
 Rained from the wounds of slaughtered Englishmen—
 The which,° how far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
 It is such crimson tempest should bedrench 45
 The fresh green lap of fair King Richard's land,
 My stooping duty tenderly° shall show.
 Go, signify as much, while here we march
 Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.
 Let's march without the noise of threat'ning drum, 50
 That from this castle's tattered° battlements
 Our fair appointments° may be well perused.
 Methinks King Richard and myself should meet
 With no less terror than the elements
 Of fire and water,° when their thund'ring shock 55
 At meeting tears the cloudy cheeks of heaven.
 Be he the fire, I'll be the yielding water;
 The rage be his, whilst on the earth I rain°
 My waters—on the earth, and not on him.
 March on, and mark King Richard how he looks. 60

The trumpets sound [parle without, and answer within; then a flourish]. RICHARD appeareth on the walls [with the Bishop of CARLISLE, AUMERLE, SCROOP, and SALISBURY].

See, see, King Richard doth himself appear,
 As doth the blushing discontented sun
 From out the fiery portal of the East,
 When he perceives the envious clouds are bent
 To dim his glory, and to stain the track 65
 Of his bright passage to the Occident.

YORK

Yet looks he like a king: behold his eye,
 As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth°
 Controlling majesty. Alack, alack for woe,
 That any harm should stain so fair a show. 70

RICHARD [To NORTHUMBERLAND.]

We are amazed, and thus long have we stood
 To watch the fearful bending of thy knee,
 Because we thought ourself thy lawful king:
 And if we be, how dare thy joints forget
 To pay their awful° duty to our presence? 75
 If we be not, show us the hand of God
 That hath dismissed us from our stewardship;
 For well we know no hand of blood and bone
 Can gripe the sacred handle of our scepter,

Unless he do profane, steal, or usurp; 80
 And though you think that all, as you have done,
 Have torn their souls by turning° them from us,
 And we are barren and bereft of friends,
 Yet know, my master, God omnipotent, 85
 Is mustering in his clouds on our behalf
 Armies of pestilence, and they shall strike
 Your children yet unborn and unbegot
 That lift your vassal hands against my head,
 And threat the glory of my precious crown.
 Tell Bolingbroke—for yon methinks he stands— 90
 That every stride he makes upon my land
 Is dangerous treason. He is come to open
 The purple testament of bleeding war;
 But ere the crown he looks for live in peace
 Ten thousand bloody crowns° of mothers' sons 95
 Shall ill become the flower of England's face,
 Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace
 To scarlet indignation, and bedew
 Her pastor's° grass with faithful English blood.

NORTHUMBERLAND

The King of Heaven forbid our lord the king 100
 Should so with civil and uncivil arms
 Be rushed upon. Thy thrice-noble cousin,
 Harry Bolingbroke, doth humbly kiss thy hand,
 And by the honorable tomb he swears
 That stands upon your royal grandsire's bones, 105
 And by the royalties of both your bloods—
 Currents that spring from one most gracious head—
 And by the buried hand of warlike Gaunt,
 And by the worth and honor of himself,
 Comprising all that may be sworn or said, 110
 His coming hither hath no further scope°
 Than for his lineal royalties,° and to beg
 Infranchisement° immediate on his knees;
 Which on thy royal party° granted once,
 His glittering arms he will commend to rust, 115
 His barbèd° steeds to stables, and his heart
 To faithful service of your majesty.
 This swears he, as he is a prince and just;
 And, as I am a gentleman, I credit him.

RICHARD

Northumberland, say thus the king returns,° 120
 His noble cousin is right welcome hither,
 And all the number of his fair demands
 Shall be accomplished without contradiction.
 With all the gracious utterance thou hast
 Speak to his gentle hearing kind commends.° 125

[To AUMERLE.]

We° do debase ourselves, cousin, do we not,
 To look so poorly° and to speak so fair?
 Shall we call back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the traitor and so die?

31 ribs protecting walls 44 The which as to which 47 tenderly solicitously 51 tattered crenelated, dilapidated 52 appointments arms and equipment 55 fire and water lightning and rain clouds 58 rain pun on reign 68 lightens forth flashes 75 awful reverential

82 torn . . . turning pun 95 crowns punning on "crown" in line 94 99 pastor's the king was the shepherd of his kingdom 111 scope aim 112 lineal royalties hereditary rights 113 Infranchisement recall from banishment and restitution of his lands 114 party side 116 barbèd armored 120 returns answers 125 commends greetings 126 We the speech prefix is repeated in the quarto, perhaps because a line of Northumberland's has dropped out 127 poorly abjectly

AUMERLE

No, good my lord; let's fight with gentle words, 130
Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful swords.

RICHARD

O God! O God! that e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yon proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth!° O, that I were as great 135
As is my grief, or lesser than my name!°
Or that I could forget what I have been!
Or not remember what I must be now!
Swell'st thou, proud heart? I'll give thee scope to beat,
Since foes have scope to beat both thee and me. 140

AUMERLE

Northumberland comes back from Bolingbroke.

RICHARD

What must the king do now? Must he submit?
The king shall do it. Must he be deposed?
The king shall be contented. Must he lose
The name of king? a° God's name, let it go. 145
I'll give my jewels for a set of beads;°
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage;
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown;
My figured° goblets for a dish of wood;
My scepter for a palmer's° walking-staff;
My subjects for a pair of carved saints;
And my large kingdom for a little grave,
A little, little grave, an obscure grave;
Or I'll be buried in the king's highway,
Some way of common trade,° where subjects' feet 155
May hourly trample on their sovereign's head;
For on my heart they tread now whilst I live,
And buried once, why not upon my head?
Aumerle, thou weep'st, my tender-hearted cousin:
We'll make foul weather with despoiled tears;
Our sighs and they shall lodge° the summer corn,
And make a dearth in this revolting land:
Or shall we play the wantons° with our woes
And make some pretty match with shedding tears,
As thus, to drop them still° upon one place, 165
Till they have fretted° us a pair of graves
Within the earth; and, therein laid, "there lies
Two kinsmen digged their graves with weeping eyes":
Would not this ill do well? Well, well, I see
I talk but idly, and you laugh at me. 170
Most mighty prince, my Lord Northumberland,
What says King Bolingbroke? Will his majesty
Give Richard leave to live till Richard die?
You make a leg,° and Bolingbroke says "Ay."

NORTHUMBERLAND

My lord, in the base court° he doth attend 175
To speak with you; may it please you to come down?

RICHARD

Down, down I come, like glist'ring Phaethon,°
Wanting the manage° of unruly jades.

In the base court! Base court where kings grow base,
To come at traitors' calls, and do them grace: 180
In the base court, come down: down court, down king,
For night owls shriek where mounting larks should sing.

BOLINGBROKE

What says his majesty?

135 NORTHUMBERLAND Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly° like a frantic man;
Yet he is come.

[Enter King RICHARD and ATTENDANTS, below.]

140 BOLINGBROKE Stand all apart, 185
And show fair duty to his majesty.

He kneels down.

My gracious lord.

RICHARD

Fair cousin, you debase your princely knee
To make the base earth proud with kissing it. 145
Me rather° had my heart might feel your love, 190
Than my displeased eye see your courtesy.
Up, cousin, up, your heart is up, I know,
Thus high° at least, although your knee be low.

150 BOLINGBROKE
My gracious lord, I come but for mine own.

RICHARD

Your own is yours, and I am yours, and all. 195

BOLINGBROKE

155 So far be mine, my most redoubted° lord,
As my true service shall deserve your love.

RICHARD

Well you deserve: they well deserve to have
That know the strong'st and surest way to get.
160 Uncle, give me your hands; nay, dry your eyes; 200
Tears show their love, but want their remedies.°
Cousin, I am too young to be your father,
Though you are old enough to be my heir.
What you will have, I'll give, and willing too,
165 For do we must what force will have us do. 205
Set on towards London, cousin, is it so?

BOLINGBROKE

Yea, my good lord.

RICHARD

170 Then I must not say no.
[Flourish. Exeunt.]

[Scene IV. The Duke of York's garden.]

175 Enter the QUEEN with [two LADIES,] her attendants.

QUEEN

What sport shall we devise here in this garden,
To drive away the heavy thought of care?

LADY

Madame,° we'll play at bowls.

135 sooth flattery 136 name i.e., king 145 a in 146 set of beads rosary 149 figured ornamented 150 palmer's pilgrim's 155 trade coming and going 161 lodge beat down 163 play the wantons be unrestrained 165 still always 166 fretted worn 174 make a leg curtsy 175 base court basse cour, the lower and outer courtyard 177 Phaethon he drove the sun chariot of his father, Apollo, and was struck by Zeus' thunderbolt 178 manage art of managing horses

184 fondly foolishly 190 Me rather I would sooner 193
Thus high pointing to his crown 196 redoubted dreaded 201 want their remedies cannot provide a cure for themselves or for the grief which causes them

III.iv.3 Madame spelled thus in the quarto, possibly to suggest that the ladies came with the queen from France

QUEEN

'Twill make me think the world is full of rubs,^o
And that my fortune runs against the bias.^o

LADY

Madame, we'll dance.

QUEEN

My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure^o keeps in grief:
Therefore no dancing, girl; some other sport.

LADY

Madame, we'll tell tales.

QUEEN

Of sorrow, or of joy?

LADY

Of either, madame.

QUEEN

Of neither, girl.

For if of joy, being altogether wanting,
It doth remember^o me the more of sorrow;
Or if of grief, being altogether had,
It adds more sorrow to my want of joy:
For what I have I need not to repeat,
And what I want it boots^o not to complain.

LADY

Madame, I'll sing.

QUEEN

'Tis well that thou hast cause;
But thou shouldst please me better, wouldst thou weep.

LADY

I could weep, madame, would it do you good.

QUEEN

And I could sing, would weeping do me good,
And never borrow any tear of thee.

Enter GARDENERS [one the master, the other two his men].

But stay, here come the gardeners.
Let's step into the shadow of these trees.
My wretchedness unto a row of pins,
They will talk of state,^o for every one doth so
Against a change;^o woe is forerun with woe.

GARDENER [To one SERVANT.]

Go, bind thou up young dangling apricocks,^o
Which like unruly children make their sire
Stoop with oppression^o of their prodigal^o weight;
Give some supportance^o to the bending twigs.

[To the other SERVANT.]

Go thou, and like an executioner
Cut off the heads of too fast growing sprays
That look too lofty in our commonwealth:
All must be even in our government.
You thus employed, I will go root away
The noisome weeds which without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.

MAN

Why should we, in the compass of a pale,^o
Keep law and form and due proportion,

Showing, as in a model,^o our firm estate,
When our sea-walled garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds, her fairest flowers choked up,
Her fruit trees all unpruned, her hedges ruined,
Her knots^o disordered, and her wholesome herbs
Swarming with caterpillars?^o

GARDENER

Hold thy peace.

He that hath suffered this disordered spring
Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf:
The weeds which his broad spreading leaves did shelter,
That seemed in eating him to hold him up,
Are plucked up root and all by Bolingbroke—
I mean the Earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green.

MAN

What, are they dead?

GARDENER

They are; and Bolingbroke
Hath seized the wasteful king. O, what pity is it
That he had not so trimmed and dressed^o his land
As we this garden! We at time of year
Do wound the bark, the skin of our fruit trees,
Lest being overproud in sap and blood
With too much riches it confound itself;
Had he done so to great and growing men,
They might have lived to bear, and he to taste
Their fruits of duty. Superfluous branches
We lop away, that bearing boughs may live:
Had he done so, himself had borne the crown,
Which waste of idle hours hath quite thrown down.

MAN

What, think you the king shall be deposed?

GARDENER

Depressed^o he is already, and deposed
'Tis doubt he will be. Letters came last night
To a dear friend of the good Duke of York's,
That tell black tidings.

QUEEN

O, I am pressed to death
Through want of speaking!^o

[Comes forward.]

Thou, old Adam's likeness, set to dress this garden,
How dares thy harsh rude tongue sound this displeasing news?

What Eve, what serpent hath suggested^o thee
To make a second fall of cursèd man?

Why dost thou say King Richard is deposed?

Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall? Say, where, when, and how Cam'st thou by this ill tidings? Speak, thou wretch.

GARDENER

Pardon me, madam; little joy have I
To breathe this news, yet what I say is true:
King Richard he is in the mighty hold^o
Of Bolingbroke. Their fortunes both are weighed:
In your lord's scale is nothing but himself
And some few vanities that make him light;
But in the balance of great Bolingbroke
Besides himself are all the English peers,

4 rubs obstacles by which bowls were diverted from their proper course 5 bias the form of the bowl which imparts an oblique motion 7-8 measure . . . measure (1) time to music (2) a stately dance (3) moderation 14 remember remind 18 boots avails 27 state the realm 28 Against a change when a change is expected 29 apricocks apricots 31 oppression weighing down; prodigal wasteful 32 supportance support 40 pale fenced-in land

42 as in a model in miniature 46 knots laid-out flower beds 47 caterpillars cf. II.iii.165 56 dressed tended 68 Depressed lowered in fortune 71-72 O . . . speaking referring to the torture of pressing to death administered to prisoners who refused to speak 75 suggested tempted 83 hold custody

And with that odds he weighs King Richard down.
Post you to London, and you will find it so;
I speak no more than everyone doth know.

QUEEN

Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
Doth not thy embassy belong to me,
And am I last that knows it? O, thou thinkest
To serve me last that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast! Come, ladies, go
To meet at London London's king in woe.
What, was I born to this, that my sad look
Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke?
Gard'ner, for telling me these news of woe,
Pray God, the plants thou graft'st may never grow.
Exit [with LADIES].

GARDENER

Poor queen, so that thy state might be no worse,
I would my skill were subject to thy curse.
Here did she fall a tear; here in this place
I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace;
Rue even for ruth° here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen. Exeunt.

[A C T I V]

[Scene I. Westminster Hall.]

Enter BOLINGBROKE, with the Lords [AUMERLE, NORTHUMBERLAND, PERCY, FITZWATER, SURREY, the Bishop of CARLISLE, the ABBOT of Westminster, another LORD, HERALD, and OFFICERS] to parliament.

BOLINGBROKE

Call forth Bagot.

Enter BAGOT [with OFFICERS].

Now, Bagot, freely speak thy mind,
What thou dost know of noble Gloucester's death,
Who wrought it with° the king, and who performed
The bloody office of his timeless° end.

BAGOT

Then set before my face the Lord Aumerle.

BOLINGBROKE

Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.

BAGOT

My Lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue
Scorns to unsay what once it hath delivered.
In that dead time° when Gloucester's death was plotted,
I heard you say, "Is not my arm of length,
That reacheth from the restful English court
As far as Callice° to mine uncle's head?"
Amongst much other talk that very time
I heard you say that you had rather refuse
The offer of an hundred thousand crowns
Than Bolingbroke's return to England;

106 ruth pity

IV.i.4 wrought it with persuaded 5 timeless untimely (or everlasting) 10 dead time variously interpreted: past time, deadly time, midnight hour 13 Callice Calais

Adding withal, how blest this land would be
In this your cousin's death.

AUMERLE

Princes and noble lords,

What answer shall I make to this base man?
Shall I so much dishonor my fair stars
On equal terms° to give him chastisement?
Either I must, or have mine honor soiled
With the attainder° of his slanderous lips.
There is my gage, the manual° seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell: I say thou liest,
And will maintain what thou hast said is false
In thy heart-blood, though being all too base
To stain the temper° of my knightly sword.

BOLINGBROKE

Bagot, forbear, thou shalt not take it up.

AUMERLE

Excepting one, I would he were the best
In all this presence that hath moved me so.°

FITZWATER

If that thy valor stand on sympathy,°
There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage° to thine;
By that fair sun which shows me where thou stand'st,
I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
That thou wert cause of noble Gloucester's death.
If thou deniest it twenty times, thou liest,
And I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forgèd, with my rapier's point.

AUMERLE

Thou dar'st not, coward, live to see that day.

FITZWATER

Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour!

AUMERLE

Fitzwater, thou art damned to hell for this.

PERCY

Aumerle, thou liest, his honor is as true
In this appeal as thou art all unjust;
And that thou art so, there I throw my gage,
To prove it on thee to the extremest point
Of mortal breathing;° seize it if thou dar'st.

AUMERLE

And if° I do not, may my hands rot off,
And never brandish more revengeful steel
Over the glittering helmet of my foe.

ANOTHER LORD

I task the earth to the like,° forsworn Aumerle,
And spur thee on with full as many lies
As may be hollowed° in thy treacherous ear
From sun to sun:° there is my honor's pawn;
Engage° it to the trial if thou darest.

AUMERLE

Who sets me else?° By heaven, I'll throw° at all!

22 On equal terms Aumerle was Bagot's superior and could therefore refuse to fight with him 24 attainder accusation 25 manual by my own hand (punning on a seal fixed to a document and his glove) 29 temper i.e., excellence 31-32 Excepting . . . so I wish I had been angered by the highest in rank present, except Bolingbroke 33 stand on sympathy depends on correspondence of rank 34 in gage in pledge 47-48 extremest . . . breathing to the death 49 And if if indeed 52 task . . . like lay on the earth the task of bearing another gage 54 hollowed shouted 55 sun to sun sunrise to sunset 56 Engage pun on gage and engage 57 Who . . . else Who else puts up a stake against me?; throw metaphor from dicing

I have a thousand spirits in one breast
To answer twenty thousand such as you.

SURREY

My Lord Fitzwater, I do remember well
The very time Aumerle and you did talk.

FITZWATER

'Tis very true; you were in presence^o then,
And you can witness with me this is true.

SURREY

As false, by heaven, as heaven itself is true!

FITZWATER

Surrey, thou liest.

SURREY

Dishonorable boy,
That lie shall lie so heavy on my sword,
That it shall render vengeance and revenge,
Till thou, the lie-giver, and that lie do lie
In earth as quiet as thy father's skull.
In proof whereof, there is my honor's pawn;
Engage it to the trial if thou dar'st.

FITZWATER

How fondly^o dost thou spur a forward^o horse!
If I dare eat, or drink, or breathe, or live,
I dare meet Surrey in a wilderness,
And spit upon him, whilst I say he lies,
And lies, and lies. There is my bond of faith,
To tie thee to my strong correction.^o
As I intend to thrive in this new world,^o
Aumerle is guilty of my true appeal.
Besides, I heard the banished Norfolk say
That thou, Aumerle, didst send two of thy men
To execute the noble Duke at Callice.

AUMERLE

Some honest Christian trust me with a gage.^o
That Norfolk lies, here do I throw down this,
If he may be repealed to try his honor.

BOLINGBROKE

These differences shall all rest under gage^o
Till Norfolk be repealed; repealed he shall be,
And, though mine enemy, restored again
To all his lands and signories.^o When he is returned,
Against Aumerle we will inforce his trial.

CARLISLE

That honorable day shall never be seen.
Many a time hath banished Norfolk fought
For Jesu Christ in glorious Christian field,
Streaming^o the ensign of the Christian cross
Against black pagans, Turks, and Saracens;
And, toiled^o with works of war, retired himself
To Italy, and there at Venice gave
His body to that pleasant country's earth,
And his pure soul unto his captain, Christ,
Under whose colors he had fought so long.

BOLINGBROKE

Why, bishop, is Norfolk dead?

CARLISLE

As surely as I live, my lord.

62 in presence present (or in attendance at court) 72 fondly foolishly; forward willing 77 correction punishment 78 new world of the new reign 83 Some . . . gage he has used both his own gloves 86 under gage prorogued 89 signories estates 94 Streaming flying 96 toiled exhausted with toil

BOLINGBROKE

Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to the bosom
Of good old Abraham!^o Lords appellants,^o
Your differences shall all rest under gage,
Till we assign you to your days of trial.

Enter YORK.

YORK

Great Duke of Lancaster, I come to thee
From plume-plucked^o Richard, who with willing soul
Adopts thee heir, and his high scepter yields
To the possession of thy royal hand.
Ascend his throne, descending now from him,
And long live Henry, fourth of that name!

BOLINGBROKE

In God's name, I'll ascend the regal throne.

CARLISLE

Marry,^o God forbid!
Worst^o in this royal presence may I speak,
Yet best beseeching me to speak the truth.
Would God that any in this noble presence
Were enough noble to be upright judge
Of noble Richard. Then true noblesse would Learn^o him forbearance from so foul a wrong.
What subject can give sentence on his king?
And who sits here that is not Richard's subject?
Thieves are not judged, but they are by to hear,
Although apparent^o guilt be seen in them;
And shall the figure^o of God's majesty,
His captain, steward, deputy elect,^o
Anointed, crownèd, planted many years,
Be judged by subject^o and inferior breath,
And he himself not present? O, forfend^o it, God,
That in a Christian climate souls refined^o
Should show so heinous, black, obscene^o a deed!
I speak to subjects and a subject speaks,
Stirred up by God thus boldly for his king.
My Lord of Hereford here, whom you call king,
Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king;
And if you crown him, let me prophesy
The blood of English shall manure the ground,
And future ages groan for this foul act;
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels,
And, in this seat of peace, tumultuous wars
Shall kin with^o kin, and kind^o with kind, confound;
Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny
Shall here inhabit, and this land be called
The field of Golgotha^o and dead men's skulls.
O, if you raise this house against this house,^o
It will the woofullest division prove
That ever fell upon this cursèd earth!^o
Prevent it, resist it, let it not be so,
Lest child, child's children, cry against you woe.

104 Abraham cf. Luke 16:22; appellants those who are appealing or accusing each other 108 plume-plucked humbled 114 Marry a light oath (from "By the Virgin Mary") 115 Worst least in rank or competence 120 Learn teach 124 apparent manifest 125 figure image 126 elect chosen 128 subject of a subject 129 forfend avert 130 refined purified by the Christian environment 131 obscene offensive 141 with by means of; kind race 144 Golgotha cf. Mark 15:22, "a place of dead men's skulls" (Bishops' Bible) 145 O . . . house cf. Mark 3:25 147 cursèd earth earth cursed by civil war

NORTHUMBERLAND

Well have you argued, sir; and for your pains
Of capital treason we arrest you here.
My Lord of Westminster, be it your charge
To keep him safely till his day of trial.
May it please you, lords, to grant the commons' suit?°

BOLINGBROKE

Fetch hither Richard, that in common view
He may surrender; so we shall proceed
Without suspicion.

YORK I will be his conduct.° Exit.

BOLINGBROKE

Lords, you that here are under our arrest,
Procure your sureties for your days of answer.
Little are we beholding to your love,
And little looked for at your helping hands.

Enter RICHARD and YORK.

RICHARD

Alack, why am I sent for to a king,
Before I have shook off the regal thoughts
Wherewith I reigned? I hardly yet have learned
To insinuate,° flatter, bow, and bend my knee.
Give Sorrow leave a while to tutor me
To this submission. Yet I well remember
The favors° of these men: were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry "All hail!" to me?
So Judas° did to Christ: but he in twelve° Found truth in all but one; I, in twelve thousand,
none.

God save the king! Will no man say "Amen"?
Am I both priest and clerk?° Well, then, amen.
God save the king, although I be not he;
And yet amen, if heaven do think him me.
To do what service am I sent hither?

YORK

To do that office° of thine own good will,
Which tired majesty did make thee offer:
The resignation of thy state and crown
To Henry Bolingbroke.

RICHARD Give me the crown.

Here, cousin, seize the crown. Here, cousin,
On this side my hand, and on that side yours.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well
That owes° two buckets, filling one another,
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down, unseen, and full of water.
That bucket down and full of tears am I,
Drinking my griefs, whilst you mount up on high.

BOLINGBROKE

I thought you had been willing to resign.

RICHARD

My crown I am, but still my griefs are mine:
You may my glories and my state depose,
But not my griefs; still am I king of those.

BOLINGBROKE

Part of your cares you give me with your crown.

RICHARD

Your cares° set up, do not pluck my cares down.
My care is loss of care, by old care done;
Your care is gain of care, by new care won.°
The cares I give, I have, though given away;
They 'tend° the crown, yet still with me they stay.

BOLINGBROKE

Are you contented to resign the crown?

RICHARD

Ay, no; no, ay: for I must nothing be.
Therefore no, no, for I resign to thee.
Now, mark me how I will undo° myself.
I give this heavy weight from off my head,
And this unwieldy scepter from my hand,
The pride of kingly sway from out my heart;
With mine own tears I wash away my balm,°
With mine own hands I give away my crown,
With mine own tongue deny my sacred state,
With mine own breath release all duteous oaths;
All pomp and majesty I do forswear;
My manors, rents, revenues,° I forgo;
My acts, decrees, and statutes I deny:
God pardon all oaths that are broke to me,
God keep all vows unbroke are° made to thee.
Make me, that nothing have, with nothing grieved,
And thou with all pleased, that hast all achieved.
Long mayst thou live in Richard's seat to sit,
And soon lie Richard in an earthy pit.
God save King Henry, unkinged Richard says,
And send him many years of sunshine days.
What more remains?

NORTHUMBERLAND No more, but that you read
These accusations, and these grievous crimes,
Committed by your person and your followers,
Against the state and profit of this land:
That by confessing them, the souls of men
May deem that you are worthily° deposed.

RICHARD

Must I do so? and must I ravel out°
My weaved-up follies? Gentle Northumberland,
If thy offenses were upon record,°
Would it not shame thee, in so fair a troop,°
To read a lecture of them?° If thou wouldst,
There shouldst thou find one heinous article,
Containing the deposing of a king,
And cracking the strong warrant of an oath,
Marked with a blot, damned in the book of heaven.
Nay, all of you that stand and look upon me,
Whilst that my wretchedness doth bait myself,
Though some of you, with Pilate,° wash your hands,
Showing an outward pity: yet you Pilates
Have here delivered me to my sour° cross,
And water cannot wash away your sin.

194 cares the word is used in several different senses in lines 194-97—sorrows, responsibilities, diligence or carefulness, anxiety 195-96 My . . . won My sorrow is loss of responsibility by failing to take pains; your anxiety is gain of responsibility won by your new carefulness 198 'tend attend on 202 undo (1) strip (2) ruin 206 balm anointing ointment used at coronation 211 revenues accent on second syllable 214 are that are 226 worthily deservedly 227 ravel out unweave 229 record accent on second syllable 230 troop assembly 231 read . . . them read them aloud 238 Pilate cf. Matthew 27:24 240 sour bitter

154 suit that the charges against the king should be published
157 conduct conductor 165 insinuate progress by devious ways 168 favors (1) faces (2) benefits 170 Judas cf. Matthew 26:49;
twelve the apostles 173 clerk employed to utter responses to the priest's prayers 177 office York corrects Richard's "service" 184 owes owns

NORTHUMBERLAND

My lord, dispatch,^o read o'er these articles.

RICHARD

Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot see:
And yet salt water blinds them not so much,
But they can see a sort^o of traitors here.
Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself,
I find myself a traitor with the rest;
For I have given here my soul's consent
T' undeck the pompous^o body of a king;
Made glory base, and sovereignty a slave,
Proud majesty a subject, state a peasant.

NORTHUMBERLAND

My lord—

RICHARD

No lord of thine, thou haught,^o insulting man,
Nor no man's lord: I have no name, no title,
No, not that name was given me at the font
But 'tis usurped.^o Alack, the heavy day!
That I have worn so many winters out,
And know not now what name to call myself.
O, that I were a mockery king of snow,
Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke,
To melt myself away in water drops!
Good king, great king—and yet not greatly good—
And if my word be sterling^o yet in England,
Let it command a mirror hither straight,
That it may show me what a face I have,
Since it is bankrout^o of his majesty.

BOLINGBROKE

Go some of you, and fetch a looking-glass.
[Exit ATTENDANT.]

NORTHUMBERLAND

Read o'er this paper while the glass doth come.

RICHARD

Fiend, thou torments me, ere I come to hell.

BOLINGBROKE

Urge it no more, my Lord Northumberland.

NORTHUMBERLAND

The commons will not then be satisfied.

RICHARD

They shall be satisfied: I'll read enough,
When I do see the very book indeed,
Where all my sins are writ,^o and that's myself.

Enter one with a glass.

Give me the glass, and therein will I read.
No deeper wrinkles yet? Hath Sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds? O, flatt'ring glass!
Like to my followers in prosperity,
Thou dost beguile me. Was this face the face
That every day under this household roof
Did keep ten thousand men? Was this the face
That, like the sun,^o did make beholders wink?
Was this the face that faced^o so many follies,
And was at last outfaced by Bolingbroke?

A brittle glory shineth in this face,
As brittle as the glory is the face,

[Throws glass down.]

For there it is, cracked in a hundred shivers.

245 Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport:
How soon my sorrow hath destroyed my face.

290

BOLINGBROKE

The shadow^o of your sorrow hath destroyed
The shadow^o of your face.

250 RICHARD Say that again.

"The shadow of my sorrow"? Ha, let's see.

'Tis very true, my grief lies all within,

And these external manners of laments

295

Are merely shadows to the unseen grief

That swells with silence in the tortured soul.^o

There lies the substance: and I thank thee, king,

255 For thy great bounty, that not only giv'st

Me cause to wail, but teachest me the way

300

How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon,

And then be gone, and trouble you no more.

Shall I obtain it?

260 BOLINGBROKE Name it, fair cousin.

RICHARD

Fair cousin? I am greater than a king:

For when I was a king, my flatterers

305

Were then but subjects; being now a subject,

265 I have a king here to^o my flatterer.

Being so great, I have no need to beg.

BOLINGBROKE

Yet ask.

RICHARD

And shall I have?

310

BOLINGBROKE

You shall.

RICHARD

Then give me leave to go.

270 BOLINGBROKE

Whither?

RICHARD

Whither you will, so I were from your sights.

BOLINGBROKE

Go some of you, convey him to the Tower.

315

RICHARD

O, good! "Convey"! Conveyers^o are you all,
That rise thus nimbly by a true king's fall.

275 [Exeunt RICHARD, some LORDS, and GUARDS.]

BOLINGBROKE

On Wednesday next we solemnly set down^o

Our coronation: lords, prepare yourselves.

280 Exeunt. Manent [the ABBOT of] Westminster,
[the Bishop of] CARLISLE, AUMERLE.

ABBOT

A woeful pageant have we here beheld.

320

CARLISLE

The woe's to come; the children yet unborn

285 Shall feel this day as sharp to them as thorn.

242 dispatch hurry up 245 sort group, pack 249 pompous splendid 253 haught haughty 255-56 No . . . usurped Richard was rumored to be a bastard 263 sterling current 266 bankrout bankrupt 273-74 book . . . writ cf. Psalms 139:16 283 sun cf. III.ii.50 284 faced brazened out, countenanced

291 shadow outward show 292 shadow reflection 294-97 my . . . soul Bolingbroke had implied that Richard was putting on an act; Richard replies that his visible grief is a reflection of a deeper grief he is feeling 307 to for 316 Conveyers thieves (convey was a euphemism for "steal") 318 set down appoint

AUMERLE

You holy clergymen, is there no plot
To rid the realm of this pernicious blot?

ABBOT

My lord, 325
Before I freely speak my mind herein,
You shall not only take the sacrament
To bury mine intents,^o but also to effect
Whatever I shall happen to devise.
I see your brows are full of discontent, 330
Your hearts of sorrow, and your eyes of tears.
Come home with me to supper: I will lay
A plot shall show us all a merry day. Exeunt.

[A C T V]

[Scene I. London. A street.]

Enter the QUEEN with her ATTENDANTS.

QUEEN

This way the king will come, this is the way
To Julius Caesar's ill-erected Tower,^o
To whose flint bosom my condemnèd lord
Is doomed a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke.
Here let us rest, if this rebellious earth
Have any resting for her true king's queen.

Enter RICHARD [and GUARD].

But soft, but see, or rather do not see
My fair rose wither; yet look up, behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with truelove tears. 10
Ah, thou the model where old Troy did stand!^o
Thou map of honor, thou King Richard's tomb,
And not King Richard, thou most beauteous inn,
Why should hard-favored grief be lodged in thee,
When triumph is become an alehouse^o guest? 15

RICHARD

Join not with grief, fair woman, do not so,
To make my end too sudden; learn, good soul,
To think our former state a happy dream,
From which awaked, the truth of what we are
Shows us but this: I am sworn brother, sweet, 20
To grim necessity, and he and I
Will keep a league till death. Hie thee to France,
And cloister thee in some religious house:^o
Our holy lives must win a new world's crown,
Which our profane hours here have stricken down.^o 25

QUEEN

What! is my Richard both in shape and mind
Transformed and weakened? Hath Bolingbroke
Deposed thine intellect? Hath he been in thy heart?

The lion dying thrusteth forth his paw
And wounds the earth, if nothing else, with rage 30
To be o'erpow' red, and wilt thou, pupil-like,
Take the correction mildly, kiss the rod,
And fawn on rage with base humility,
Which art a lion and the king of beasts?

RICHARD

A king of beasts indeed: if aught but beasts, 35
I had been still a happy king of men.
Good sometimes^o queen, prepare thee hence for France.
Think I am dead, and that even here thou takest
As from my deathbed thy last living leave.
In winter's tedious nights sit by the fire 40
With good old folks, and let them tell thee tales
Of woeful ages long ago betid;^o
And ere thou bid good night, to quite their griefs^o
Tell thou the lamentable tale of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their beds. 45
For why,^o the senseless brands will sympathize^o
The heavy accent of thy moving tongue,
And in compassion weep the fire out:
And some^o will mourn in ashes, some coal-black,
For the deposing of a rightful king. 50

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

NORTHUMBERLAND

My lord, the mind of Bolingbroke is changed:
You must to Pomfret,^o not unto the Tower.
And, madam, there is order ta'en^o for you:
With all swift speed you must away to France.

RICHARD

Northumberland, thou ladder wherewithal 55
The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne,
The time shall not be many hours of age
More than it is, ere foul sin, gathering head,^o
Shall break into corruption. Thou shalt think, 60
Though he divide the realm and give thee half,
It is too little, helping him^o to all;
He shall think that thou which knowest the way
To plant unrightful kings, wilt know^o again,
Being ne'er so little urged another way,
To pluck him headlong from the usurped throne. 65
The love of wicked men converts^o to fear,
That fear to hate, and hate turns one or both
To worthy^o danger and deserved death.

NORTHUMBERLAND

My guilt be on my head, and there an end.^o
Take leave and part, for you must part^o forthwith. 70

RICHARD

Doubly divorced! Bad men, you violate
A twofold marriage: 'twixt my crown and me,
And then betwixt me and my married wife.
Let me unkiss the oath 'twixt thee and me—
And yet not so, for with a kiss 'twas made. 75
Part us, Northumberland; I towards the north,

328 bury mine intents conceal my plans

V.i.2 Tower the Tower of London was built, according to legend, by Julius Caesar ("ill-erected" because it was used as a prison) 11 model . . . stand outline of the walls where Troy once stood (i.e., ruined majesty—suggested by London's old name of Trinovantum, New Troy) 15 alehouse Bolingbroke (contrasted with Richard, the "beauteous inn") 23 religious house convent 25 our . . . down our careless lives have endangered our hopes of heaven

37 sometimes sometime, former 42 betid happened 43 quite their griefs requite, or cap, their tragic stories 46 For why because of this; sympathize correspond to 49 some of the brands 52 Pomfret Pontefract Castle, in Yorkshire 53 there . . . ta'en arrangements have been made 58 gathering head metaphor from a boil 61 helping him seeing that you helped him 63 know know how 66 converts changes 68 worthy deserved 69 there an end that's all I have to say 70 part . . . part part from your queen, for you must depart

Where shivering cold and sickness pines° the clime;
My wife to France, from whence, set forth in pomp,
She came adornèd hither like sweet May,
Sent back like Hallowmas,° or short'st of day.° 80

QUEEN

And must we be divided? Must we part?

RICHARD

Ay, hand from hand, my love, and heart from heart.

QUEEN

Banish us both, and send the king with me.

RICHARD

That were some love, but little policy.

QUEEN

Then whither he goes, thither let me go. 85

RICHARD

So two together weeping make one woe.
Weep thou for me in France, I for thee here;
Better far off than, near, be ne'er the near.°
Go count thy way with sighs, I mine with groans.

QUEEN

So longest way shall have the longest moans. 90

RICHARD

Twice for one step I'll groan, the way being short,
And piece the way out° with a heavy heart.
Come, come, in wooing sorrow, let's be brief,
Since, wedding it, there is such length in grief.°
One kiss shall stop our mouths, and dumbly part: 95
Thus give I mine, and thus take I thy heart.

QUEEN

Give me mine own again, 'twere no good part
To take on me to keep and kill thy heart.
So now I have mine own again, be gone,
That I may strive to kill it with a groan. 100

RICHARD

We make woe wanton° with this fond delay:
Once more adieu, the rest let sorrow say.
Exeunt [different ways].

[Scene II. The Duke of York's palace.]

Enter Duke of YORK and the DUCHESS.

DUCHESS

My lord, you told me you would tell the rest,
When weeping made you break the story off,
Of our two cousins' coming into London.

YORK

Where did I leave?

DUCHESS

At that sad stop, my lord,
Where rude misgoverned° hands from windows' tops 5
Threw dust and rubbish on King Richard's head.

YORK

Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,
Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,
Which his aspiring rider seemed to know,°
With slow but stately pace kept on his course, 10

Whilst all tongues cried, "God save thee, Bolingbroke!"

You would have thought the very windows spake:
So many greedy looks of young and old
Through casements darted their desiring eyes
Upon his visage; and that all the walls 15
With painted imagery° had said at once,
"Jesu preserve thee! Welcome, Bolingbroke!"
Whilst he, from the one side to the other turning,
Bareheaded, lower than his proud steed's neck,
Bespoke them thus: "I thank you, countrymen." 20
And thus still doing, thus he passed along.

DUCHESS

Alack, poor Richard! Where rode he the whilst?

YORK

As in a theater the eyes of men,
After a well-graced° actor leaves the stage,
Are idly° bent on him that enters next, 25
Thinking his prattle to be tedious;
Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes Did scowl on gentle Richard; no man cried, "God save him!"
No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home,
But dust was thrown upon his sacred head; 30
Which with such gentle° sorrow he shook off,
His face still combating with tears and smiles,
The badges° of his grief and patience,
That had not God for some strong purpose steeled
The hearts of men, they must perforce° have melted, 35
And barbarism itself have pitied him.
But heaven hath a hand in these events,
To whose high will we bound our calm contents.°
To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now,
Whose state and honor I for aye° allow. 40

[Enter AUMERLE.]

DUCHESS

Here comes my son, Aumerle.

YORK

Aumerle that was,
But that is lost for being Richard's friend;
And, madam, you must call him Rutland now.
I am in parliament pledge for his truth°
And lasting fealty to the new-made king. 45

DUCHESS

Welcome, my son; who are the violets° now
That strew the green lap of the new-come spring?

AUMERLE

Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not.
God knows I had as lief° be none as one.

YORK

Well, bear you well in this new spring of time, 50
Lest you be cropped before you come to prime.
What news from Oxford?° Do these jousts and triumphs hold?°

AUMERLE

For aught I know, my lord, they do.

77 pines causes to pine 80 Hallowmas November 1; short'st of day December 22 88 ne'er the near never the nearer (proverbial) 92 piece . . . out lengthen (with possible pun on pace) 94 Since . . . grief We are wedded to sorrow till death and shall have plenty of time to grieve 101 wanton unrestrained (with secondary sense of promiscuous)
V.ii.5 rude misgoverned uncivilized and wrongly directed 9 rider . . . know seemed to know his rider

16 painted imagery painted cloths, resembling tapestry
24 well-graced accomplished 25 idly without interest 31 gentle noble 33 badges signs 35 perforce inevitably 38 bound . . . contents limit our wishes to calm content 40 aye ever 44 truth loyalty 46 violets favorites in the new court
49 had as lief would find it as pleasant 52 Oxford cf. line 99; Aumerle would give a start; Do . . . hold Will these tournaments and triumphal celebrations be held?

YORK

You will be there, I know.

AUMERLE

If God prevent me not, I purpose so.

YORK

What seal^o is that that hangs without thy bosom?

Yea, look'st thou pale? Let me see the writing.

AUMERLE

My lord, 'tis nothing.

YORK

No matter, then, who see it.

I will be satisfied: let me see the writing.

AUMERLE

I do beseech your grace to pardon me:

It is a matter of small consequence,

Which for some reasons I would not have seen.

YORK

Which for some reasons, sir, I mean to see.

I fear, I fear—

DUCHESS

What should you fear?

'Tis nothing but some band^o that he is ent' red intoFor gay apparel 'gainst^o the triumph day.

YORK

Bound to himself? What doth he with a bond

That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a fool.

Boy, let me see the writing.

AUMERLE

I do beseech you, pardon me. I may not show it.

YORK

I will be satisfied. Let me see it, I say!

He plucks it out of his bosom and reads it.

Treason, foul treason, villain, traitor, slave!

DUCHESS

What is the matter, my lord?

YORK

Ho, who is within there? Saddle my horse.

God for his mercy!^o What treachery is here!

DUCHESS

Why, what is it, my lord?

YORK

Give me my boots, I say! Saddle my horse!

Now, by mine honor, by my life, my troth,

I will appeach^o the villain.

DUCHESS

What is the matter?

YORK

Peace, foolish woman.

DUCHESS

I will not peace. What is the matter, Aumerle?

AUMERLE

Good mother, be content; it is no more

Than my poor life must answer.

DUCHESS

Thy life answer?

YORK

Bring me my boots: I will unto the king.

His MAN enters with his boots.

DUCHESS

Strike him, Aumerle. Poor boy, thou art amazed.^o

Hence, villain, never more come in my sight.

YORK

Give me my boots, I say.

DUCHESS

55 Why, York, what wilt thou do?

Wilt thou not hide the trespass of thine own?

Have we more sons? Or are we like to have?

Is not my teeming date^o drunk up with time?

And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age?

And rob me of a happy mother's name?

Is he not like thee? Is he not thine own?

YORK

Thou fond,^o mad woman,

60 Wilt thou conceal this dark conspiracy?

A dozen of them here have ta'en the sacrament

And interchangeably^o set down their hands.

To kill the king at Oxford.

DUCHESS

He shall be none;

We'll keep him here. Then what is that to him?

YORK

65 Away, fond woman, were he twenty times my son,

I would appeach him.

DUCHESS

Hadst thou groaned for him

As I have done, thou wouldst be more pitiful.

But now I know thy mind; thou dost suspect

That I have been disloyal to thy bed,

And that he is a bastard, not thy son:

70 Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind;

He is as like thee as a man may be,

Not like to me, or any of my kin,

And yet I love him.

YORK

Make way, unruly woman. Exit. 110

DUCHESS

After, Aumerle! Mount thee upon his horse;

Spur, post,^o and get before him to the king,

And beg thy pardon ere he do accuse thee.

I'll not be long behind; though I be old,

75 I doubt not but to ride as fast as York;

And never will I rise up from the ground

Till Bolingbroke have pardoned thee. Away! Be gone! [Exeunt.] 115

[Scene III. Windsor Castle.]

Enter [BOLINGBROKE, now] the king, with his NOBLES
[PERCY and others]. 80

BOLINGBROKE

Can no man tell me of my unthrifty^o son?^o

'Tis full three months since I did see him last.

If any plague^o hang over us, 'tis he.

I would to God, my lords, he might be found:

Inquire at London, 'mongst the taverns there,

For there, they say, he daily doth frequent

With unrestrained loose companions,

Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,

And beat our watch^o and rob our passengers;^oWhile he, young wanton and effeminate^o boy,91 teeming date time of childbearing 95 fond foolish 98 interchangeably reciprocally 112 post hastenV.iii.i unthrifty prodigal; son Prince Hal of Henry IV 3 plague he is thinking of the prophecies of Richard and Carlisle 9 watch watchmen; passengers wayfarers 10 effeminate voluptuous56 seal which would be hanging from the document on an attached strip of parchment 65 band bond 66 'gainst in preparation for 75 God . . . mercy Lord have mercy upon us 79 appeach peach, inform against 85 amazed dazed

Takes on the point of honor° to support
So dissolute a crew.

PERCY

My lord, some two days since I saw the prince,
And told him of those triumphs held at Oxford.

BOLINGBROKE

And what said the gallant?

PERCY

His answer was, he would unto the stews,°
And from the commonest creature pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favor, and with that
He would unhorse the lustiest challenger.

BOLINGBROKE

As dissolute as desperate; but yet
Through both° I see some sparks of better hope,
Which elder years may happily bring forth.
But who comes here?

Enter AUMERLE, amazed.

AUMERLE

Where is the king?

BOLINGBROKE

What means

Our cousin, that he stares and looks so wildly?

AUMERLE

God save your grace! I do beseech your majesty
To have some conference° with your grace alone.

BOLINGBROKE

Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone.

[Exeunt PERCY and LORDS.]

What is the matter with our cousin now?

AUMERLE

For ever may my knees grow to the earth,

[Kneels.]

My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth,
Unless a pardon° ere I rise or speak.

BOLINGBROKE

Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If on the first,° how heinous e'er it be,
To win thy after-love I pardon thee.

AUMERLE

Then give me leave that I may turn the key,
That no man enter till my tale be done.

BOLINGBROKE

Have thy desire.

[AUMERLE locks the door.] The Duke of YORK knocks at the door and crieth.

YORK [Within.]

My liege, beware, look to thyself:
Thou hast a traitor in thy presence there.

BOLINGBROKE

Villain, I'll make thee safe.°

[Draws his sword.]

AUMERLE

Stay thy revengeful hand; thou hast no cause to fear.

YORK

Open the door, secure,° foolhardy king!

Shall I for love speak treason° to thy face?
Open the door, or I will break it open.

[BOLINGBROKE opens. Enter YORK.]

BOLINGBROKE

What is the matter, uncle? Speak.

15

[He relocks door.]

Recover breath. Tell us, how near is danger,
That we may arm us to encounter it.

YORK

Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know
The treason that my haste forbids° me show.

20

AUMERLE

Remember, as thou read'st, thy promise passed.°
I do repent me, read not my name there;
My heart is not confederate with my hand.

45

50

YORK

It was, villain, ere thy hand did set it down.
I tore it from the traitor's bosom, king:
Fear, and not love, begets his penitence.
Forget° to pity him, lest thy pity prove
A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.

55

25

BOLINGBROKE

O heinous, strong,° and bold conspiracy!
O loyal father of a treacherous son!
Thou sheer immaculate and silver fountain,
From whence this stream, through muddy passages,
Hath held his° current, and defiled himself,°
Thy overflow of good converts° to bad;
And thy abundant goodness shall excuse
This deadly blot in thy digressing° son.

60

65

YORK

So shall my virtue be his vice's bawd,
And he shall spend mine honor with his shame,
As thriftless sons their scraping° fathers' gold.
Mine honor lives when his dishonor dies,
Or my shamed life in his dishonor lies.
Thou kill'st me in his life, giving him breath;
The traitor lives, the true man's put to death.

70

35

DUCHESS [Within.]

What ho! My liege, for God's sake, let me in!

BOLINGBROKE

What shrill-voiced suppliant makes this eager cry?

DUCHESS

A woman, and thy aunt, great king—'tis I.
Speak with me, pity me, open the door;
A beggar begs that never begged before.

75

BOLINGBROKE

Our scene is alt' red from a serious thing,
And now changed to "The Beggar and the King."°
My dangerous cousin, let your mother in:
I know she is come to pray for your foul sin.

80

[AUMERLE unlocks door during York's speech.]

YORK

If thou do pardon, whosoever pray,°

II Takes . . . honor undertakes as a point of honor 16
stews brothels 21 both dissoluteness and desperateness 26 conference conversation 31 Unless a pardon unless I have a pardon 33 on the first of the former kind 40 safe harmless (by killing him) 42 secure overconfident

43 treason by calling him a fool 49 haste forbids because he is out of breath 50 passed given 56 Forget forget your promise 58 strong dangerous 62 his its; himself itself 63 converts changes 65 digressing transgressing 68 scraping parsimonious 79 The . . . King referring to the title, but not to the contents, of the ballad about King Cophetua and the Beggar Maid 82 whosoever pray whoever prays

More sins for this forgiveness prosper may.

[Enter DUCHESS.]

This fest' red joint cut off, the rest rest° sound;
This let alone will all the rest confound.

85

DUCHESS

O king, believe not this hardhearted man:
Love loving not itself, none other can.°

YORK

Thou frantic woman, what dost thou make here?
Shall thy old dugs once more a traitor rear?°

DUCHESS

Sweet York, be patient. Hear me, gentle liege.

90

[Kneels.]

BOLINGBROKE

Rise up, good aunt.

DUCHESS

Not yet, I thee beseech.

For ever will I walk upon my knees,
And never see day that the happy sees,
Till thou give joy—until thou bid me joy—
By pardoning Rutland, my transgressing boy.

95

AUMERLE

Unto my mother's prayers I bend my knee.

[Kneels.]

YORK

Against them both my true joints bended be;

[Kneels.]

Ill mayst thou thrive, if thou grant any grace.

DUCHESS

Pleads he in earnest? Look upon his face.

His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest;

100

His words come from his mouth, ours from our breast;

He prays but faintly, and would be denied;

We pray with heart and soul, and all beside;

His weary joints would gladly rise, I know;

Our knees still kneel till to the ground they grow;

105

His prayers are full of false hypocrisy,

Ours of true zeal and deep integrity;

Our prayers do outpray his—then let them have

That mercy which true prayer ought to have.

BOLINGBROKE

Good aunt, stand up.

DUCHESS

Nay, do not say "Stand up";

110

Say "Pardon" first, and afterwards "Stand up";

And if I were thy nurse thy tongue to teach,

"Pardon" should be the first word of thy speech.

I never longed to hear a word till now.

Say "Pardon," king; let pity teach thee how.

115

The word is short, but not so short as sweet:

No word like "pardon" for kings' mouths so meet.

YORK

Speak it in French, king; say "Pardonne moy."°

DUCHESS

Dost thou teach pardon pardon to destroy?

Ah, my sour husband, my hardhearted lord!

120

That sets the word itself against the word.

Speak "Pardon" as 'tis current in our land:

The chopping° French we do not understand.

Thine eye begins to speak; set thy tongue there,

Or in thy piteous heart plant thou thine ear,

125

That hearing how our complaints and prayers do pierce,

Pity may move thee "Pardon" to rehearse.°

BOLINGBROKE

Good aunt, stand up.

DUCHESS

I do not sue to stand.

Pardon is all the suit° I have in hand.

BOLINGBROKE

I pardon him as God shall pardon me.

130

DUCHESS

O, happy vantage of a kneeling knee!

Yet° am I sick for fear; speak it again.

Twice saying "Pardon" doth not pardon twain,°

But makes one pardon strong.

BOLINGBROKE

With all my heart

I pardon him.

DUCHESS [Standing.] A god on earth° thou art.

135

[YORK and AUMERLE rise.]

BOLINGBROKE

But for our trusty° brother-in-law,° and the abbot,

With all the rest of that consorted crew,

Destruction straight shall dog them at the heels.

Good uncle, help to order several powers

To Oxford, or where'er these traitors are;

140

They shall not live within this world, I swear,

But I will have them if I once know where.

Uncle, farewell, and cousin, too, adieu.

Your mother well hath prayed, and prove you true.°

DUCHESS

Come, my old° son, I pray God make thee new.

145

Exeunt.

[Scene IV. Windsor Castle.]

Enter Sir Pierce EXTON and [a MAN].

EXTON

Didst thou not mark the king, what words he spake?

"Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?"

Was it not so?

MAN

These were his very words.

EXTON

"Have I no friend?" quoth he: he spake it twice,

And urged it twice together, did he not?

5

MAN

He did.

EXTON

And speaking it, he wishtly° looked on me,

123 chopping changing the meaning of words 127 rehearse repeat (a perfect rhyme with pierce in the sixteenth century)

129 suit (1) suit of cards (2) petition 132 Yet still 133 twain

(1) two people (2) divide 135 god on earth the Homilies

taught this; and, as Portia says, "earthly power doth then show likest God's/When mercy seasons justice" 136 trusty ironical;

brother-in-law Duke of Exeter, Richard's half-brother, who had married Bolingbroke's sister 144 true loyal 145 old

unregenerate

V.iv.7 wishtly probably "wishfully," with an undertone of

"wistly" (i.e., intently)

84 rest rest those that remain stay 87 Love . . . can If he does not love his son he cannot love anyone, even you 89 rear raise him to life (with a pun on the usual sense) 118 Pardonne moy pray excuse me (i.e., "no"); "moy" rhymes with destroy

As who should say, "I would thou wert the man
That would divorce this terror from my heart"—
Meaning the king at Pomfret. Come, let's go: 10
I am the king's friend, and will rid his foe. [Exeunt.]

[Scene V. Pomfret Castle.]

Enter RICHARD alone.

RICHARD

I have been studying how I may compare
This prison where I live unto the world:
And for because the world is populous,
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it. Yet I'll hammer it out: 5
My brain I'll prove the female to my soul,
My soul the father, and these two beget
A generation° of still-breeding° thoughts;
And these same thoughts people this little world,
In humors° like the people of this world, 10
For no thought is contented. The better sort,
As thoughts of things divine are intermixed
With scruples,° and do set the word itself
Against the word;° as thus: "Come, little ones";°
And then again, 15
"It is as hard to come as for a camel
To thread the postern of a small needle's° eye."°
Thoughts tending to ambition, they do plot
Unlikely wonders: how these vain weak nails
May tear a passage thorough the flinty ribs 20
Of this hard world, my ragged° prison walls;
And, for° they cannot, die in their own pride.°
Thoughts tending to content flatter themselves
That they are not the first of fortune's slaves,
Nor shall not be the last, like seely° beggars 25
Who sitting in the stocks refuge° their shame,
That many have, and others must, sit there;
And in this thought they find a kind of ease,
Bearing their own misfortunes on the back
Of such as have before endured the like. 30
Thus play I in one person many people,
And none contented; sometimes am I king,
Then treasons make me wish myself a beggar,
And so I am. Then crushing penury
Persuades me I was better when a king. 35
Then am I kinged again and, by and by,
Think that I am unkinged by Bolingbroke,
And straight am nothing. But whate'er I be,
Nor I, nor any man that but man is,
With nothing shall be pleased, till he be eased 40
With being nothing.° The music plays.

Music do I hear.

Ha—ha! Keep time! How sour sweet music is
When time is broke, and no proportion° kept;
So is it in the music of men's lives:

V.v.8 generation offspring; still-breeding constantly breeding 10 humors psychological characteristics 13 scruples doubts 14 word passage of Scripture; Come, little ones Matthew 19:14 ff. 17 needle's monosyllabic 16–17 It . . . eye Matthew 19:24 ff. 21 ragged rugged 22 for because; pride prime 25 seely (silly) simple-minded 26 refuge protect themselves from 39–41 nor any . . . being nothing man is never content until he is no more 43 proportion musical time

And here have I the daintiness of ear 45
To check° time broke in a disordered° string,
But for the concord of my state and time,°
Had not an ear to hear my true time broke.
I wasted time,° and now doth Time° waste me:
For now hath Time made me his numb'ring° clock; 50
My thoughts are minutes, and with sighs they jar°
Their watches° on unto mine eyes, the outward watch°
Whereto my finger, like a dial's point,°
Is pointing still,° in cleansing them from tears.
Now, sir, the sound that tells what hour it is 55
Are clamorous groans which strike upon my heart,
Which is the bell. So sighs, and tears, and groans,
Show minutes, times, and hours; but my time
Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy,
While I stand fooling here, his jack-of-the-clock.° 60
This music mads me: let it sound no more.
For though it have help° madmen to their wits,
In me it seems it will make wise men mad.
Yet blessing on his heart that gives it me, 65
For 'tis a sign of love; and love to Richard
Is a strange brooch° in this all-hating world.

Enter a GROOM of the stable.

15 GROOM

Hail, royal prince!

RICHARD Thanks, noble° peer!

The cheapest of us is ten groats too dear.

What art thou? And how comest thou hither,

20 Where no man never comes, but that sad dog 70

That brings me food to make misfortune live?°

GROOM

I was a poor groom of thy stable, king,

When thou wert king, who, traveling towards York,

25 With much ado at length have gotten leave

To look upon my sometimes° royal master's face. 75

O, how it ernald° my heart, when I beheld

In London streets, that coronation day,

When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary,°

30 That horse that thou so often hast bestrid,

That horse that I so carefully have dressed.° 80

RICHARD

Rode he on Barbary? Tell me, gentle° friend,

How went he under him?

35 GROOM

So proudly as if he disdained the ground.

RICHARD

So proud that Bolingbroke was on his back!

That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand; 85

46 check rebuke; disordered out of its place, a bar wrong
47 time the times 49 time measured duration; Time Father
Time 50 numb'ring counting hours and minutes 51 jar tick (of a clock), making a discord 52 watches intervals of time; outward watch dial (with pun on a man keeping watch) 53 dial's point hand of clock 54 still continually 60 jack-of-the-clock mannikin to strike the hours 62 help helped 66 strange brooch rare jewel 67 royal . . . noble a royal was worth ten shillings; a noble, six shillings and eight-pence; a groat, fourpence (Richard is saying that to call him
"royal" now is to price him too high, since he is now the peer, the equal, of the groom) 71 make misfortune live perpetuate my unfortunate life 75 sometimes former 76 ernald grieved 78 Barbary here the name of the horse, as well as the breed 80 dressed groomed 81 gentle implying groom is of gentle birth

This hand hath made him proud with clapping° him.
 Would he not stumble? Would he not fall down,
 Since pride must have a fall, and break the neck
 Of that proud man that did usurp his back?
 Forgiveness, horse! Why do I rail on thee,
 Since thou created to be awed by man
 Wast born to bear? I was not made a horse,
 And yet I bear a burden like an ass,
 Spurred, galled,° and tired by jauncing° Bolingbroke.

Enter one [a KEEPER] to RICHARD with meat.

KEEPER
 Fellow, give place; here is no longer stay.

RICHARD
 If thou love me, 'tis time thou wert away.

GROOM
 What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say.
Exit GROOM.

KEEPER
 My lord, wilt please you to fall to?°

RICHARD
 Taste° of it first, as thou art wont to do.

KEEPER
 My lord, I dare not; Sir Pierce of Exton
 Who lately came from the king, commands the contrary.

RICHARD
 The devil take Henry of Lancaster, and thee!
 Patience is stale, and I am weary of it.

KEEPER Help, help, help!

The murderers [EXTON and SERVANTS] rush in.

RICHARD
 How now! What means death in this rude assault?°
 Villain, thy own hand yields thy death's instrument.

[Snatches a weapon and kills one.]

Go thou, and fill another room° in hell!

[He kills another.] Here EXTON strikes him down.

That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire
 That staggers° thus my person. Exton, thy fierce hand
 Hath with the king's blood stained the king's own land.
 Mount, mount, my soul; thy seat is up on high,
 Whilst my gross flesh sinks downward here to die.
[Dies.]

EXTON
 As full of valor as of royal blood!
 Both have I spilled. O, would the deed were good!
 For now the devil that told me I did well
 Says that this deed is chronicled in hell.
 This dead king to the living king I'll bear.
 Take hence the rest, and give them burial here.
[Exeunt with the bodies.]

[Scene VI. Windsor Castle.]

[Flourish.] Enter BOLINGBROKE with the Duke of YORK [and other LORDS and ATTENDANTS].

90 BOLINGBROKE
 Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear
 Is that the rebels have consumed with fire
 Our town of Ciceter° in Gloucestershire,
 But whether they be ta'en or slain we hear not.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

5
 95 WELCOME, my lord; what is the news?
 NORTHUMBERLAND

First, to thy sacred state wish I all happiness;
 The next° news is, I have to London sent
 The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent.°
 The manner of their taking may appear
 At large discoursèd in this paper here. 10

BOLINGBROKE
 We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains,
 And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.°

Enter Lord FITZWATER.

100 FITZWATER
 My lord, I have from Oxford sent to London
 The heads of Brocas° and Sir Bennet Seely,
 Two of the dangerous consorted° traitors 15
 That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow.

BOLINGBROKE
 Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot:
 Right noble is thy merit well I wot.

Enter Henry PERCY [and the Bishop of CARLISLE].

105 PERCY
 The grand conspirator, Abbot of Westminster,
 With clog of conscience and sour melancholy, 20
 Hath yielded up his body to the grave;
 But here is Carlisle living, to abide
 Thy kingly doom, and sentence of his pride.

BOLINGBROKE
 Carlisle, this is your doom:
 Choose out some secret place, some reverend room° 25
 More than thou hast,° and with it joy° thy life.
 So° as thou liv'st in peace, die free from strife;
 For though mine enemy thou hast ever been,
 High sparks of honor in thee have I seen.

Enter EXTON with [ATTENDANTS bearing] the coffin.

115 EXTON
 Great king, within this coffin I present 30
 Thy buried fear:° herein all breathless lies
 The mightiest of thy greatest enemies,
 Richard of Bordeaux,° by me hither brought.

BOLINGBROKE
 Exton, I thank thee not, for thou hast wrought

V.vi.3 Ciceter Cirencester 7 next most important 8
 Spencer . . . Kent Lord Spencer, formerly Earl of Gloucester;
 Sir Thomas Blunt; Earl of Kent 12 right worthy gains well-deserved reward 14 Brocas Sir Leonard (or Bernard) Brocas 15 consorted associated 25 reverend room place of religious retirement 26 More . . . hast more religious and less political; joy enjoy 27 So provided that 31 buried fear
 cf. "living fear," V.iv.2 33 Bordeaux Richard's birthplace

86 clapping patting 94 galled made sore; jauncing making the horse prance (and perhaps himself prancing and triumphant) 98 fall to start eating 99 Taste he suspects poison 105 What . . . assault What does death mean by assaulting me so violently? 107 room place 109 staggers makes to stagger

A deed of slander with thy fatal hand
Upon my head and all this famous land.

EXTON

From your own mouth, my lord, did I this deed.

BOLINGBROKE

They love not poison that do poison need,
Nor do I thee; though I did wish him dead,
I hate the murderer, love him murderèd.
The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labor,
But neither my good word, nor princely favor.
With Cain go wander thorough shades of night,

35 And never show thy head by day nor light.
[Exit EXTON.]

Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe, 45

That blood should sprinkle me to make me grow.

Come, mourn with me for what I do lament,

And put on sullen black incontinent.^o

I'll make a voyage to the Holy Land,

40 To wash this blood off from my guilty hand. 50

March sadly after; grace my mournings here,
In weeping after this untimely bier. [Exeunt.]

48 incontinent forthwith

THE TRAGEDY OF ROMEO AND JULIET

EDITED BY J. A. BRYANT, JR.

Introduction

Romeo and Juliet, even in the mutilated versions that Restoration and eighteenth-century audiences knew, has always been one of Shakespeare's most popular plays. Since 1845, when Charlotte and Susan Cushman finally brought a version approaching Shakespeare's original back to the stage, it has been a coveted vehicle among actors and actresses alike, on both sides of the Atlantic; and some of the theater's greatest names have been associated with it. In recent years audiences have also been enjoying it in film versions and on television. Among professional scholars the play has sparked less enthusiasm. In this quarter one hears praise for the ingenuity of the language, for the brilliance of the characterizations, and for the portrayal of young love; but such praise is frequently qualified by the uneasy admission that Romeo and Juliet resists measurement by the rules conventionally applied to Shakespeare's later tragedies. More than one scholarly critic has expressed misgivings about the emphasis on pathos, the absence of ethical purpose, and what appears to be a capricious shifting of tone, particularly between the first two acts and the last three.

Such misgivings among modern readers are understandable, but one may question whether the Elizabethans would have felt or even understood them. Apparently most of Shakespeare's contemporaries still considered an ending in death the principal requirement for tragedy; and since Romeo and Juliet offered six deaths, five of them on stage and two of them the deaths of protagonists, audiences in those days probably thought it more tragic than many plays so labeled. Elizabethan audiences would have found equally strange the objection that the play lacks ethical purpose. They knew by training what to think of impetuous young lovers who deceived their parents and sought advice from friars. Arthur Brooke, whose Tragicall Historye of Romeus and Juliet (1562) was most likely Shakespeare's only source, had spelled it all out as follows:

To this ende (good Reader) is this tragicall matter written, to describe unto thee a coople of unfortunate lovers, thralling themselves to unhonest desire, neglecting the authoritie and advise of parents and frendes, conferring their principall counsels with dronken gossyppes, and superstitious friers (the naturally fitte instrumentes of unchastitie) attemptyng all adventures of peryll, for that-taynyng of their wished lust, usying auriculer confession (the kay of whoredome, and treason) for furtheraunce of theyre purpose, abusyng the honorable name of lawefull mariage, the cloke the shame of stolne contractes, finallye, by all means of unhonest lyfe, hastyng to most unhappy deathe.

In addition, Elizabethans also knew that suicide was the devil's business and usually meant damnation; in their view, therefore, Romeo and Juliet must have had automatically an abundance of ethical import. Shakespeare probably should be given some kind of credit for not challenging these deep-seated convictions of his contemporary auditors and readers; for, ironically, the modern feeling that his play is ethically deficient stems partly from the modern ability to see that Shakespeare has really approved the love of Romeo and Juliet, condoned their deceptions, and laid the blame for their deaths, even though by suicide, upon their elders.

A better explanation for the modern reader's uneasiness about ranking Romeo and Juliet with the so-called major tragedies lies in the widespread assumption that Shakespeare meant the play to be deterministic. Shakespeare seems to invite such a view when he promises in the Prologue to show the "misadventured piteous overthrows" of "a pair of star-crossed lovers" and thereafter lets the principals make references to fate and the stars and has them express various kinds of premonition. Romeo, for example, says in Act I that his "mind misgives/Some consequence yet hanging in the stars" (I.iv.106-07); Friar Lawrence tries to reassure himself with uneasy prayers but soon observes that "violent delights have violent ends" (II.vi.9); and Juliet, on taking leave of her husband, cries, "O Fortune, Fortune! All men call thee fickle" (III.v.60). These and other references make it easy to argue that the characters are, as they themselves sometimes imply, little better than puppets, pitiful perhaps but ethically uninteresting and scarcely due the fearful respect that one gives to the heroes of Shakespeare's later tragedies. Actually, the text as a whole gives little justification for such a view. It is true that Romeo says, as he is about to enter the Capulets' great hall,

my mind misgives
Some consequence yet hanging in the stars
Shall bitterly begin his fearful date
With this night's revels and expire the term
Of a despised life, closed in my breast,
By some vile forfeit of untimely death. (I.iv.106-11)

But he immediately adds, "he that hath the steerage of my course/Direct my sail!" The first part of this quotation is typical of what we find—and find not so often as some imagine—in Romeo and Juliet: premonitions, prayers, misgivings, references to Fortune, all uttered much as we ourselves utter such things, without necessarily implying real belief in astral influence. Sometimes the character's premonition is confirmed by later events; sometimes not, as is true of the auspicious part of Romeo's dream on the night before his suicide. The second part of the quotation is typical, too; for almost as often as these characters speak of fate they speak of a superior Providence, mysteriously directing but never absolutely determining human destiny. Moreover, accident-prone as Romeo and Juliet may occasionally seem, they are really no more so than Hamlet, who also has his share of premonitions; and their actions are no more clearly determined by supernatural influence than those of Macbeth. Like its successors, Romeo and Juliet takes place in a universe where there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow and where what will be, assuredly will be. All that is asked of the inhabitants of this Shakespearean world of tragedy is that they achieve readiness or ripeness for what is to come, and in this tragedy as in the others they are allowed and expected to do that much for themselves. The things to consider are whether or not the protagonists have succeeded in meeting this requirement and, if it appears they have failed, whether one had any right to suppose they would do otherwise.

A final source of uneasiness for contemporary readers of Romeo and Juliet is the impression, got mainly from the first two acts, that Verona is really a part of the world of comedy. Many things contribute to this impression. An amusing street fight and a masked ball in the first act, a lovers' meeting in the orchard in the second, a doting young man carrying courtly conventions to laughable excess, parents who would be custom-bound to interfere if they only knew of the affair going on under their noses, an affected troublemaker bent on vindicating honor to the letter in duels conducted with precious precision, a bawdy nurse and an even bawdier friend—such things as these in an Elizabethan play ordinarily lead to the triumph of young love and a marriage or two, with forgiveness and feasting all around. In this play, however, the familiar dream of courtly comedy shatters when Mercutio is slain, and from that point on the lightness quickly dissolves. Romeo is banished, the "comfortable" Friar falls back on desperate remedies, old Capulet grows testy and intolerant, Lady Capulet calls for blood, the amusing Nurse suggests bigamy as a practical course, and Juliet, who has scarcely known life, prepares to be familiar with death. Even the weather adapts itself to the shift in tone: it suddenly gets hot in Act III, and in Act IV it rains; the sky is still overcast as the play comes to an end.

The contrast that Shakespeare gets here between the tone of the first two acts and that of the remaining three is probably intentional and, in any case, more apparent than real. Unless a reader is genuinely sophisticated, his response to literature is always at least partly a matter of habit; he laughs and shudders on signal. Thus there will always be those who find the first two acts of Romeo and Juliet mainly laughable, just as there will always be some who consider Othello the tragedy of a handkerchief, a farce with unfortunate consequences. Shakespeare must not be held responsible for responses of this kind. The first two acts of Romeo and Juliet will appear to be consistently comic only if we read them in the limited light of other, very different things—second-rate farces, dramatic and nondramatic, hack work generally, certain comic strips, even—in which the same conventions have been used. The corrective is to pay attention, for Shakespeare allows us to carry any initial impression of comedy we may have got only so far as the climax of the street brawl in I.i. At that point, while the servants are still battling, Tybalt still fighting with Benvolio, Capulet yelling for a long sword, and his wife telling him to call for a crutch instead, he brings us up sharply with the Prince's words:

What, ho! You men, you beasts,
That quench the fire of your pernicious rage
With purple fountains issuing from your veins!
(I.i.86-88)

Comedy can thrive indefinitely on beasts that pass for men, but it cannot long tolerate a reminder of original sin such as lurks in "pernicious rage" or a reminder of royal humanity's self-destructiveness like "purple fountains"; and it is with these in our ears that we pass on to the rest of the Prince's dignified rebuke and thence to the speeches of Benvolio and the Montagues which express their human concern for a youthful friend and son, the absent Romeo. When Romeo himself appears, later in the same scene, juggling words in a fashionable euphuistic manner and complaining of the contradictions of love, we are more cautious with our laughter. Laugh as we may, Romeo clearly lives in a world where folly can have serious and irrevocable consequences; and we are no longer confident that the conventions of comedy will save him from those consequences or spare us the pain of seeing him destroyed.

The remaining scenes in Acts I and II contain much that confirms our uneasiness. For example, Capulet, who has been very funny calling for his long sword, says tenderly of his daughter in I.ii:

too soon marred are those so early made.
Earth hath swallowed all my hopes but she;
She is the hopeful lady of my earth. (I.ii.13-15)

These three lines are enough to establish him as a dramatic figure who will probably invite our sympathy as readily as he has provoked our ridicule. They also prepare us for Juliet, who never has much of the comic about her and least of all when she disturbs us with a prophetic "My grave is like to be my wedding bed" (I.v.137). Mercutio's bawdiness is perhaps the best argument for taking these two acts as comic, but an attentive listener will receive it all with the long Queen Mab speech still in mind, see that Mercutio's bawdiness and fancy are simply complementary aspects of a single creative and remarkably perceptive imagination, and be prepared to recognize that Verona's one hope of restoration without tragedy has vanished when he dies.

In any case, a feeling that the play represents relatively mature work has disposed most scholars to seek a late date for it. The latest that can reasonably be given is 1596, since the first edition appeared early in 1597 and described the play as having been performed by "Lord Hunsdon's servants," a title that Shakespeare's company held only from July 1596 until the following March. The preferred date seems to be 1595, which is also the preferred date for Richard II and A Midsummer Night's Dream. The reason usually given for putting these plays in the same year is that the same intense lyricism characterizes all three, but it has also been suggested that A Midsummer Night's Dream, in its special concern with the difficulties of young love, reveals itself to be a product of the same mood or preoccupation that caused Shakespeare to write Romeo and Juliet. Some interesting parallels have been noted. For example, in the first scene of A Midsummer Night's Dream Lysander says:

Brief as the lightning in the collied night,
That, in a spleen, unfolds both heaven and earth,
And ere a man hath power to say, "Behold!"
The jaws of darkness do devour it up:
So quick bright things come to confusion. (I.i.145-49)

To this Hermia replies, "If then true lovers have been ever crossed,/It stands as an edict in destiny." This exchange has been related plausibly both to Juliet's "too rash, too unadvised, too sudden;/Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be/Ere one can say it lightens" (II.ii.118-20) and to the "star-crossed lovers" of the Prologue. But beyond the realm of the plausible in this matter we cannot go. Those who regard the play as immature usually prefer an earlier date, insisting that the Nurse's "'Tis since the earthquake now eleven years" (I.iii.23), by which she remembers the time of Juliet's weaning, refers to a famous earthquake which struck England in 1580 and that Shakespeare meant to date his play 1591 by having the Nurse mention something that everyone in the audience could date precisely. Against this view one might argue that there were two other earthquakes in England during the 1580's and at least one on the Continent; Shakespeare could easily have referred to one of these or just as easily to no earthquake at all. Moreover, while it is certainly reasonable to suppose that in mentioning an earthquake he would have thought of some earthquake he knew, it is hardly reasonable to think he would have bothered to fix as contemporary the date of a play that apparently had nothing to gain by being considered topical. Everything taken into account, the play seems to come after plays like The Two Gentlemen of Verona and Love's Labor's Lost and before The Merchant of Venice and the Henry IV plays. The most likely date, therefore, is still 1595.

Whatever the date, the style of Romeo and Juliet places it at a point which marks the poet's achievement of self-awareness and confidence in his mastery over the medium. The play is rich in set pieces and memorable scenes, so much so in fact that insensitive producers have sometimes turned it into a collection of dramatic recitals. Yet Shakespeare's virtuosity, intrinsically interesting as it is whenever we choose to isolate some specimen of it, never fails to function as a part of the general action of the play; and that is as true in this work, where he seems to be rejoicing openly in his creative power, as it is in the later tragedies, where the power is felt rather than seen. Nothing in Romeo and Juliet really stands alone, not even a startling passage like the Queen Mab speech, which almost immediately proves to be an indispensable part of Mercutio's complex personality, just as Mercutio with all his complexity ultimately proves indispensable to the meaning of the play. The creativity displayed in this passage is Shakespeare's, to be sure, but his greatest achievement is in making it credibly Mercutio's. Equally remarkable is the much-admired lyrical quality of the next scene, in which Romeo meets Juliet for the first time; but this scene is remarkable for another reason. Here we have two young people who presumably have had no opportunity to develop any special gift for language. Juliet's talk up to this point has commanded no particular attention; and Romeo's, best displayed perhaps in his first exchange with Benvolio (I.i), has been characterized by extravagant paradoxes and an occasional fortuitous couplet. Suddenly, with Juliet in sight, he begins to make something like poetry:

O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright!
It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night
As a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear—
Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! (I.v.46-49)

Capulet and Tybalt briefly obscure the young man from view, but as these move aside, we see that he has not only taken Juliet by the hand but has begun spinning sonnets with her; and even before the Nurse interrupts, we have sensed the rightness of this unexpected attachment and its potential for permanence. We are thus prepared for the orchard, or balcony, scene of Act II and for the lovely aubade that the two perform at the parting in Act III—both among the memorable scenes in Shakespeare because without any formal patterning they achieve a unity all their own and still serve the larger function of suggesting the integrity that love can confer briefly upon two young people who, apart from each other, will remain children to the end.

In characterization Shakespeare had always been able to make language work for him, but with Romeo and Juliet he mastered it so completely that the play almost became a gallery of individuals. The language of the extremes in the social scale must have been easiest to catch, with the banter of servingmen at one end and the formal periods of Prince Escalus at the other; but in between the extremes we get the Nurse's peasant speech, most noticeably of peasant origin when she tries to imitate her betters, beautifully contrasted with the self-assured and warmly healthy country-gentry talk of old Capulet; Mercutio's mature command of language at all levels and Tybalt's narrow range of sharp insolence; Friar Lawrence's moralizing, formal and sententious but never tedious, and the tiny voice of the complaisant Apothecary. Some of these characters change attitude as external circumstances require, but in general their personalities simply unfold in the language that establishes them. This is also true of Benvolio, Paris, and Lady Capulet. Romeo and Juliet, however, undergo development, and he undergoes more than she. From her first appearance the younger Juliet is more mature than her lover. Romeo is fertile in figures and can occasionally invent fresh things like "Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day/Standst tiptoe on the misty mountaintops" (III.v.9-10); but it is always Juliet who leads the talk in their two great scenes together, and it is also she who knows what language cannot do:

Conceit, more rich in matter than in words,
Braggs of his substance, not of ornament.
They are but beggars that can count their worth;
But my true love is grown to such excess
I cannot sum up sum of half my wealth. (II.vi.30-34)

Her best lines are those in which she draws upon language to invent for her the images of death which she must confront before Romeo can be permanently hers (IV.iii.14-58); yet when she wakes to find Romeo lifeless, she can muster no language capable of helping her in such an extremity and quickly joins her lover in death. By contrast, Romeo's best speech is perhaps the one he delivers in the tomb; with it he gives dignity, meaning, and finality to the one act he plans and executes, however unwisely, without the help of friends, Friar, or Juliet. His language here, like the deed, is his own, as the courtly conventions and fashionable euphuism of many of his earlier scenes were not. His paradoxes, his puns, even his lamentations in the Friar's cell, are borrowed things, as his mature friends know; yet Romeo's "misshapen chaos of well-seeming forms" is catalyzed into inchoate poetry whenever Juliet comes upon the scene, and in the end he achieves in her presence a man's power to act if not a man's gift of discretion.

If Romeo and Juliet fails to achieve the highest rank of tragedy, the reason for that failure must be sought in the protagonists themselves and not in some extraterrestrial power or agency. The reason Romeo and Juliet do not stand out clearly as protagonists in a great tragedy is simply that Shakespeare created them to be protagonists in a different kind of play, one which has many of the circumstances that we find in the other tragedies but which lacks at the center a figure capable of achieving the terrible but satisfying perception of man's involvement in the mystery of creation. "Failure" is an inappropriate word for such an achievement. The notable thing about Romeo and Juliet is not that they fail to reach a Hamlet's degree of awareness but that as very young people they behave better and mature more rapidly in that direction than we have any right to expect them to. They learn that Verona is flawed, but they do not dream that the whole world is flawed in the same way. They discover that some actions are good and some bad, but never achieve the Friar's catholic view that only will can make an action bad and only grace can redeem it. They confront imperfection courageously; they fail to see in it an image of themselves. Death overtakes them in their innocence and their unknowing; and we remember them not as we remember tragic heroes, in pity and fear, but in admiration for their loveliness, as we remember dead children.

All things considered, the Verona which serves as their testing ground is not a bad place. The Prologue refers darkly to "the continuance of their parents' rage,/Which, but their children's end, naught could remove"; but as H. B. Charlton has observed, the old people in the play seem to have little interest in continuing a quarrel. Apart from the ancient rift, one might describe the city as a reservoir of high spirits and good will, full of attractive people like the witty Mercutio, Benvolio and Paris, the wise and tolerant Friar, and the young ladies who brighten the evenings in Capulet's great hall. Yet the Prologue is right. The rift created by the old people's almost forgotten rage is still there, wide enough for irresponsible young servingmen to see and make a game of and wide enough, too, for irresponsible young noblemen, like Tybalt, to aggravate into a civic crisis. One might say of it, as Mercutio says of his death wound, "'Tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church door; but 'tis enough, 'twill serve.'" In the end it has served as a conduit for some of the best blood in the city, including Mercutio's own, and for the tears of all the rest.

Apart from the two protagonists, the people of Verona, or rather those that Shakespeare has presented to us, may be arranged in two groups. The first of these, by far the larger, includes all the supernumeraries, such minor characters as Peter and the Apothecary, and a few relatively important figures like Tybalt, the Capulets, the Nurse, Paris, and Benvolio. These are the static or "flat" characters, who are "by nature" what they are; and their functions are to present the limited range of values they embody and to make the plot go. Tybalt, for example, is by nature choleric and determined to pick quarrels; Benvolio, by nature the opposite, is equally determined to avoid them. There are no surprises in either, even when Tybalt precipitates the climactic crisis of the play, just as there are no surprises in Paris and should be none in the Nurse. The latter is interesting to us precisely because Shakespeare's detailed unfolding of her reveals a consistent personality, yet she too is static. From the beginning, she is garrulous, corruptible, and insensitive; and as long as nothing requires her to be otherwise, she can also be amusing. At her crisis, when Juliet asks her to be wise, the Nurse can only suggest bigamy, a course quite in keeping with the values she herself is made of. Here the Nurse is no longer funny, but she has not changed. It is Juliet who has done that. The other characters in this group do not change either. They may be said to represent the abiding conditions of human intercourse in any representative community; and a lesser playwright, assembling a similar collection, would probably have included the same kind of servants and dignitaries, a Nurse or someone like her, Tybalt and Benvolio, all performing essentially the same functions as Shakespeare's and exhibiting many of the same qualities. The unique excellence of the static characters in Romeo and Juliet comes from Shakespeare's having particularized them so deftly that, like the protagonists in the play, we hopefully take them at first for people of larger dimensions. Their vitality tempts us to expect them to be more than they are and to give more than they have any capacity for giving. Thus when Tybalt fails to respond to Romeo's generous appeal and Lady Capulet proves blind to her daughter's need for sympathy, we feel the disappointment as sharply as if we were discovering for ourselves the limitations of common humanity.

The second group consists of three characters who give a doubly strong impression of life because they include among their qualities some degree of perception or understanding. Prince Escalus, slight as he is, is one of these, and Friar Lawrence another. Normally we should expect a magistrate to belong to the group of static or flat characters, but Shakespeare has given his magistrate a conscience and a growing presentiment of what must happen to everyone in Verona if the wound in the civil body cannot be healed. Others want to keep the peace, too, but mainly because they have a perfunctory sense of duty or perhaps because they dislike fighting. Escalus knows from the beginning that keeping the peace here is a matter of life or death, and in the end he readily takes his share of responsibility for the bloody sacrifice he has failed to avert:

Capulet, Montague,

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heaven finds means to kill your joys with love.
And I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. All are punished.

(V.iii.292-96)

The Friar is included in this "all"; and the Friar, moreover, has preceded the Prince in accepting blame:

if aught in this

Miscarried by my fault, let my old life
Be sacrificed some hour before his time
Unto the rigor of severest law.

(V.iii.267-70)

Like the Prince, the Friar has had from the start a clear perception of the danger latent in the old quarrel, and like the Prince he has taken steps appropriate to his position to mend the differences and restore order. Yet whereas the Prince by nature has moved openly and erred in not moving vigorously enough, Friar Lawrence by nature works in secret and his secrecy does him in. Actually his much-criticized plan for ending the quarrel is sound enough in principle. Any faithful son of the church, accustomed to cementing alliances with the sacrament of matrimony, would naturally have considered the young people's sudden affection for each other an opportunity sent by heaven. Friar Lawrence's error lies all in the execution of the thing, in letting a heaven-made marriage remain an affair of secret messages, rope ladders, and unorthodox sleeping potions, a clandestine remedy doomed to miscarriage long before the thwarted message determines the shape of the inevitable catastrophe. What was desperately needed in this case was a combination of virtues, the forthrightness of the Prince and the vigor and ingenuity of the Friar; and these virtues were combined only in Mercutio, who fell victim to the deficiencies of both in that he confronted a needlessly active Tybalt at a disadvantage caused in part by bumbling Romeo's adherence to the Friar's secret plot.

Mercutio, who is the third member of this more perceptive group, stands next to Romeo and Juliet in importance in the play. In fact, some critics who consider him more interesting than the two protagonists have suggested that Shakespeare finished him off in Act III out of necessity. This is almost as absurd as the view that Shakespeare wrote Falstaff out of Henry V because the fat man had become unmanageable. Others have found Mercutio's wit embarrassing and tried to relieve Shakespeare of the responsibility for some parts of it, but this is absurd too. An edited Mercutio becomes either sentimental or obscene; he also becomes meaningless, and without him the play as a whole reverts to the condition of melodrama that it had in Shakespeare's source. Consider for a moment the climax of the play, which is almost solely Shakespeare's invention. In Brooke the matter is relatively simple: Tybalt provokes Romeo, and Romeo slays him. Shakespeare has it that Tybalt deliberately sought to murder Romeo and Romeo so badly underestimated his challenger that he declined to defend himself; whereupon Mercutio, in defense of both Romeo's honor and his person, picked up the challenge and would have killed Tybalt but for Romeo's intervention. Tybalt then killed Mercutio, and Romeo killed Tybalt in revenge. But, one should ask, what if Romeo had not intervened? Tybalt would have been slain, surely, and Mercutio would have survived to receive the Prince's rebuke; at most, however, he would have been punished only slightly, for Mercutio was of the Prince's line and not of the feuding families. The feud thus would have died with Tybalt, and in time Capulet and Montague might have been reconciled openly, as Friar Lawrence hoped. In short, Mercutio was on the point of bringing to pass what neither civil authority nor well-intentioned but misplaced ingenuity had been able to accomplish, and Romeo with a single sentimental action ("I thought all for the best," he says) destroyed his only hope of averting tragedy long enough to achieve the maturity he needed in order to avoid it altogether.

Many critics have commented on the breathless pace of this play, and no wonder. Shakespeare has made it the story of a race against time. What Romeo needs most of all is a teacher, and the only one capable of giving him instruction worth having and giving it quickly is Mercutio. All the rest are unavailable, or ineffectual, like Benvolio, or unapt for dealing practically with human relations. Mercutio, however, for all his superficial show of irresponsibility, is made in the image of his creator; he is a poet, who gives equal value to flesh and spirit, sees them as inseparable aspects of total being, and accepts each as the necessary mode of the other. His first line in the play, discharged at a young fool who is playing the ascetic for love, is revealing: "Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance" (I.iv.13). And when gentle Romeo persists in day-dreaming, he says, "Be rough with love," declares that love is a mire and that dreamers are often liars. The long fairy speech which follows dignifies idle dreams by marrying them to earth; its intent is to compel Romeo to acknowledge his senses and to bring him to an honest and healthy confession of what he is really looking for, but Romeo is too wrapped up in self-deception to listen. In Act II Mercutio tries harder, speaks more plainly, but prompts from his pupil only the fatuous "He jests at scars that never felt a wound." Later still, in the battle of wits (II.iv), Mercutio imagines briefly that he has succeeded: "Why, is not this better now than groaning for love? Now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo; now art thou what thou art, by art as well as by nature" (II.iv.91-94). There are no wiser words in the whole play, and none more ironic; for Romeo even here has not found his identity and is never really to find it except for those fleeting moments when Juliet is there to lead him by the hand.

Time runs out for both principals in this play, but it is Juliet who makes the race exciting. Her five-day maturation is a miracle which only a Shakespeare could have made credible; yet at the end she is still a fourteen-year-old girl, and she succumbs to an adolescent's despair. Mercutio might have helped had he been available, but Mercutio is dead. All the others have deserted her—parents, Nurse, the Friar, who takes fright at the crucial moment, and Romeo, who lies dead at her feet. She simply has not lived long enough in her wisdom to stand entirely alone. This is really the source of pathos in Romeo and Juliet. One hears much about the portrayal of young love here, about the immortality of the lovers and the eternality of their love; but such talk runs toward vapid sentimentality and does an injustice to Shakespeare. No one has more poignantly described the beauty of young love than he, and no one has portrayed more honestly than he the destructiveness of any love which ignores the mortality of those who make it. Romeo struggled toward full understanding but fell far short of achievement, leaving a trail of victims behind him. Juliet came much closer than we had any right to expect, but she too failed. Both have a legitimate claim to our respect, she more than he; and the youth of both relieves them of our ultimate censure, which falls not on the stars but on all those whose thoughtlessness denied them the time they so desperately needed.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCE

The story of Romeo and Juliet was popular in Elizabethan times, and Shakespeare could have got his working outline of it from a number of places. Belleforest's Histoires Tragiques had a version, as did William Painter's Palace of Pleasure; and there had apparently been a play on the subject. Arthur Brooke, in an address "To the Reader" prefaced to his long narrative poem The Tragical History of Romeus and Juliet, mentioned seeing "the same argument lately set forth on stage"; but there is no evidence that Shakespeare worked from an older play or even that he consulted Belleforest or Painter, though he undoubtedly knew their works. All the evidence indicates that he worked directly from Brooke's poem, which Richard Tottell had printed in 1562 and Robert Robinson had reissued in 1587, shortly before the time that Shakespeare must have begun writing for the London stage.

Actually the story was popular, on the Continent at least, well before Elizabeth's time. Leaving out of account such obvious but distant analogues as the stories of Hero and Leander, Aeneas and Dido, Pyramus and Thisbe, and Troilus and Cressida, the first version of the story was one that appeared in Masuccio Salernitano's Il Novellino in 1476. This version had the clandestine lovers, the accommodating friar, the killing that led to the young man's banishment, the rival suitor, sleeping potion, thwarted messenger, and unhappy conclusion, but no suicides. It might have passed into oblivion had it not been for Luigi da Porto's Istoria novellamente ritrovata di due Nobili Amanti (published about 1530), which laid the scene in Verona and identified the feuding families as Montecchi and Capelletti and the lovers as Romeo and Giulietta. Da Porto's story also named the friar Lorenzo and the slain man Thebaldo Capelletti and introduced the ball, the balcony scene, and the double suicide at the tomb. It was da Porto, moreover, who first named a minor character Marcuccio and gave him the icy hands that subsequent tellers of the tale regularly mentioned until Shakespeare discarded the detail and replaced it with a distinctive personality. Da Porto is also remembered for having Giulietta commit suicide by holding her breath—a detail which fortunately no one bothered to perpetuate.

Da Porto's tale was widely imitated both in Italy and in France, but the version of most importance to readers of Shakespeare was that of Matteo Bandello, who put the story into his Novelle (1554). Of all the versions before Shakespeare's, Bandello's is generally considered the best. It is a plain, straightforward narrative, unmarred by the sentimentality and moralizing that characterized the work of some of his adapters. In Bandello's story the masking appears; Peter is there (but as Romeo's servant), the Nurse has a significant part in the plot, and the rope ladder comes into play. Almost as important is the version of Pierre Boaistuau (1559), adapted from Bandello, which was included in Belleforest's Histoires Tragiques. Boaistuau made Romeo go to the ball in the hope of seeing his indifferent lady (the Rosaline of Shakespeare's play), worked out the business of the Capulets' restraint at discovering Romeo's presence, and developed the dilemma that Juliet finds herself in when she first hears of Tybalt's death; he also developed the character of the Apothecary. All these things went into Painter's version (1567), which was a translation of Boaistuau, and into Brooke's, which was based on Boaistuau. The line of transmission from Masuccio to Shakespeare thus includes da Porto, Bandello, Boaistuau, and Brooke, in that order, with Painter standing unconsulted to one side. Shakespeare, however, used only Brooke directly and thus derived from the tradition only as much as Brooke passed on to him; but he borrowed freely from the great wealth of detail that Brooke himself had added.

Anyone interested in consulting Brooke's version for himself will find it in the first volume of Geoffrey Bullough's Narrative and Dramatic Sources of Shakespeare (1957). In spite of the tedious poulter's measure (iambic couplets in which the first line has twelve syllables and the second fourteen) the poem is not entirely dull; and no other single source gave Shakespeare so much that was immediately useful. Readers should recognize at once the character and function of Benvolio (though Brooke neglected to give him a name), the Capulet that stormed at what he took to be his daughter's willful disobedience and threatened her with incarceration and endless misery, the garrulous, amoral Nurse and her conversations with the young lovers, and the needy Apothecary. They will even find the clue to Mercutio's character (which Brooke did not develop) in the lines "Even as a Lyon would emong the lambes be bolde,/Such was emong the bashfull maydes, Mercutio to beholde." Numerous such hints, together with bits of business, suggestions for metaphors, and passages of dialogue, catch the eye as one scans Brooke's lines, not so much because they are arresting in themselves but because they call to mind the use Shakespeare has made of them. And if one gets safely past Brooke's "Address to the Reader," with its heavy-handed condemnation of lust, disobedience, and superstitious friars, one finds that Brooke too treated the lovers with sympathy and allowed his friar the best of intentions. In fact, Brooke, having discharged himself of his Protestant moralizing in the "Address," tended to make Fortune responsible for most things in the story; and Shakespeare, as we know, took Brooke's Fortune along with all the rest.

What Shakespeare did with Brooke's clean but relatively inert story was to add complication and focus, intensify it by drastic compression, and establish the intricate relationship of part to part in a texture of language that functions admirably as dialogue even as it creates the unity of a dramatic poem. In this transformation he made it possible for us to tolerate the Nurse, love Capulet, and pity the Apothecary. He relieved the Friar of the tedium that Brooke had encumbered him with, and he changed Escalus into a man who genuinely suffers and commands sympathy. In bringing Tybalt to the ball and making him the discoverer of Romeo's presence there, he gave real point to the disastrous street fight in Act III; he also enlarged Paris' part in the story and ennobled his character, and he created Mercutio. More important, he made all three of these serve as foils to a Romeo who develops and matures in response to the challenges they present and who, before the end, has ironically become responsible for the deaths of all three. Shakespeare's real miracle, however, was Juliet, transformed from an adolescent arrogantly eager to outdo her elders to an appealing child-woman, barely fourteen, who learns to mix courage with her innocence, yet falls victim to a world that only briefly and unintentionally but fatally treats her as a plaything.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

The first quarto (Q1) of Romeo and Juliet was printed in 1597 without previous entry in the Stationers' Register. It bore the following title page: "An/EXCELLENT/conceited Tragedie/OF/Romeo and Iuliet./As it hath been often (with great applause)/plaid publicquely, by the right Ho-/nourable the L. of Hunsdon/his Seruants./LONDON,/Printed by Iohn Danter./1597." Until the present century, editors frequently assumed that this text, curtailed and manifestly corrupt, represented an early draft of the play. Most now agree that Q1, like the other "bad" Shakespeare quartos, is a memorial reconstruction; that is, a version which some of the actors (accusing fingers have been pointed at those who played Romeo and Peter) put together from memory and gave to the printer. The second quarto (Q2) was printed in 1599 with the following title page: "THE/MOST/EX-/cellent and lamentable/Tragedie, of Romeo/and Iuliet./Newly corrected, augmented, and/amended: As it hath bene sundry times publicquely acted, by the/right Honourable the Lord Chamberlaine/his Seruants./London/Printed by Thomas Creede, for Cuthbert Burby, and are to/be sold at his shop neare the Exchange./1599." Apparently Q2 derives directly from the same acting version that is imperfectly reflected in the memorially reconstructed Q1, but it is based on a written script of the play rather than on actors' memories. Q2, however, is the product of careless or hasty printing and does not inspire complete confidence. Lines that the author doubtless had canceled are sometimes printed along with the lines intended to replace them, and occasionally notes about staging appear which are probably the prompter's, or possibly Shakespeare's. Vexing matters like these, together with the fact that some speeches in Q2 are clearly based on Q1 (possibly the manuscript that provided the copy for most of Q2 was illegible in places), have caused editors to make at least limited use of Q1. The other texts of Romeo and Juliet have no claim to authority. The second quarto provided the basis for a third quarto (1609), which in turn served as copy for an undated fourth quarto and for the text in the Folio of 1623. A fifth quarto, based on the fourth, appeared in 1637.

None of these texts—including the second quarto, upon which the present edition is based—makes any real division of the play into acts and scenes. (The last third of Q1 does have a rough indication of scene division in the form of strips of ornamental border across the page, and the Folio has at the beginning Actus Primus. Scena Prima, but nothing further.) The division used here, like that in most modern texts, derives from the Globe edition, as do the dramatis personae and the various indications of place. Spelling and punctuation have been modernized, a number of stage directions have been added (in square brackets), and speech prefixes have been regularized. This last change will be regretted by those who feel, perhaps rightly, that at least some of the speech prefixes of Q2 show how Shakespeare thought of the character at each moment of the dialogue. Lady Capulet, for example, is variously designated in the speech prefixes of Q2 as "Wife," "Lady," and sometimes "Mother"; Capulet is occasionally referred to as "Father," and Balthasar as "Peter"; the First Musician of the present text (IV.v) is once called "Fidler" in Q2 and several times "Minstrel" or "Minstrels." Other deviations (apart from obvious typographical errors) from Q2 are listed in the textual notes below. There the adopted reading is given first, in boldface, followed by a note in square brackets if the source of the reading is Q1; this is followed by the rejected reading in roman. Absence of a note in square brackets indicates that the adopted reading has been taken from some other source and represents guesswork at best. Apparently the editors of F as well as of Q3 and Q4 had no access to any authentic document.

In dealing with the troublesome stage direction at the end of I.iv, I have followed the solution adopted by H. R. Hoppe in his Crofts Classics edition (1947); and I have adopted the reading of "eyes' shot" for the customary "eyes shut" at III.ii.49 from the Pelican edition of John E. Hankins (1960), which presents a good argument for retaining the reading of Q2 with the addition of an apostrophe.

I.i.29 in sense [Q1] sense 34 comes two [Q1] comes 65 swashing washing 123 drave driue 150 his is 156 sun same 182 well-seeming [Q1] welseeing 205 Bid a sick [Q1] A sicke; make [Q1] makes 206 Ah [Q1] A
I.ii.32 on one 64-72 Signior . . . Helena [prose in Qq and F] 91 fires fier
I.iii.2-76 [Q2 prints Nurse's speeches in prose] 66, 67 honor [Q1] heure 99 make it [Q1] make
I.iv.7-8 Nor . . . entrance [added from Q1] 23 Mercutio Horatio 39 done [Q1] dum 42 Of this sir-reverence [Q1] or saue you reuerence 45 like lights 47 five fine 53-91 O . . . bodes [verse from Q1; Q2 has prose] 57 atomies ottamie

63 film Philome 66 maid [Q1] man 113 sail [Q1] sute 114 s.d. They . . . and [Q2 combines with s.d. used here at beginning of I.v]

I.v.s.d. [Q2 adds "Enter Romeo"] 1, 4, 7, 12 First Servingman . . . Second Servingman . . . First Servingman . . . Second Servingman [Q2 has "Ser.," "I.," "Ser.," and "Ser."] 97 ready [Q1] did readie 144 What's this? What's this? Whats tis? whats tis

II.i.9 one [Q1] on 10 pronounce [Q1] prouaunt; dove [Q1] day 12 heir [Q1] her 38 et cetera [Q1] or

II.ii.16 do to 20 eyes eye 45 were wene 83 washed washeth 99 havior [Q1] behaiur 101 more cunning [Q1] coying 163 than mine then 168 sweet Neece 187 Romeo [Q1] Iu. 188-89 [between these lines Q2 has "The grey eyde morne smiles on the frowning night,/Checking the Easterne Clouds with streaks of light,/And darknesse fleckted like a drunkard reeles,/From forth daies pathway, made by Tytans wheeles," lines nearly identical with those given to the Friar at II.iii.1-4; presumably Shakespeare first wrote the lines for Romeo, then decided to use them in Friar Lawrence's next speech, but neglected to delete the first version, and the printer mistakenly printed it]

II.iii.2 Check'ring Checking 3 fleckèd [Q1] fleckeld 74 ring yet [Q1] yet ringing

II.iv.19 Benvolio [Q1] Ro. 30 fantasticoes [Q1] phantacies 213 Ah A

II.v.11 three there

II.vi.27 music's musicke

III.i.2 are [Q1; Q2 omits] 91 s.d. Tybalt . . . flies [Q1; Q2 has "Away Tybalt"] 110 soundly too. Your soundly, to your 124 Alive [Q1] He gan 126 eyed [Q1] end 168 agile [Q1] aged 190 hate's [Q1] hearts 194 I It

III.ii.51 determine of determine 60 one on 72-73 [Q2 gives line 72 to Juliet, line 73 to Nurse] 76 Dove-feathered Rauenous doue-featherd 79 damnèd dimme

III.iii.s.d. Enter Friar [Q1] Enter Frier and Romeo 40 But . . . banishèd [in Q2 this line is preceded by one line, "This may flyes do, when I from this must flie," which is substantially the same as line 41, and by line 43, which is probably misplaced] 52 Thou [Q1] Then 61 madmen [Q1] mad man 73 s.d. Knock They knocke 75 s.d. Knock Slud knock 108 s.d. He . . . away [Q1; Q2 omits] 117 lives lies 143 misbehaved mishaued

162 s.d. Nurse . . . again [Q1; Q2 omits] 168 disguised disguise

III.v.13 exhales [Q1] exhale 36 s.d. Enter Nurse [Q1] Enter Madame and Nurse 42 s.d. He goeth down [Q1; Q2 omits]

54 Juliet Ro. 83 pardon him padon 140 gives giue 182 trained [Q1] liand

IV.i.7 talked talke 72 slay [Q1] stay 83 chapless chapels 85 his shroud his 98 breath [Q1] breast 100 wanny many 110 In Is [after this line Q2 has "Be borne to buriall in thy kindreds graue"; presumably as soon as Shakespeare wrote these words he decided he could do better, and expressed the gist of the idea in the next two lines, but the canceled line was erroneously printed] 111 shalt shall 116 waking walking

IV.iii.49 wake walke 58 Romeo, I drink [after "Romeo" Q2 has "heeres drinke," which is probably a stage direction printed in error] 58 s.d. She . . . curtains [Q1; Q2 omits]

IV.iv.21 faith [Q1] father

IV.v.65 cure care 82 fond some 95 s.d. casting . . . curtains [Q1; Q2 omits] 99 by [Q1] my; amended amended. Exit omnes 99 s.d. Peter [Q2 has "Will Kemp," the name of the actor playing the role] 126 grief [Q1] griefes 127 And . . . oppress [Q1; Q2 omits] 133, 136 Pretty [Q1] prates

V.i.11 s.d. booted [detail from Q1] 15 fares my [Q1] doth my Lady 24 e'en [Q1 "euen"] in; defy [Q1] denie 50 And An 76 pay [Q1] pray

V.iii.s.d. with . . . water [Q1; Q2 omits] 3 yew [Q1] young 21 s.d. and Balthasar . . . iron [Q1; Q2 has "Enter Romeo and Peter," and gives lines 40 and 43 to Peter instead of to Balthasar] 48 s.d. Romeo . . . tomb [Q1; Q2 omits] 68 conjurations [Q1] commiration 71 Page [Q2 omits this speech prefix] 102 fair [Q2 follows with "I will beleue," presumably words that Shakespeare wrote, then rewrote in the next line, but neglected to delete] 108 again. Here [between these words Q2 has the following material, which Shakespeare apparently neglected to delete: "come lye thou in my arme,/Heer's to thy health, where ere thou tumblest in./O true Appothecarie/Thy drugs are quicke. Thus with a kisse I die./Depart againe"] 137 yew yong 188 too too too 190 s.d. Enter . . . wife [Q2 places after line 202, with "Enter Capels" at line 190] 191 shrieked [Q1] shrike 200 slaughtered Slaughter 210 more early [Q1] now earling

THE TRAGEDY OF ROMEO AND JULIET

[Dramatis Personae]

CHORUS

ESCALUS Prince of Verona

PARIS a young count, kinsman to the Prince

MONTAGUE

CAPULET

AN OLD MAN of the Capulet family

ROMEO son to Montague

MERCUTIO *kinsman to the Prince and friend to
Romeo*

BENVOLIO *nephew to Montague and friend to
Romeo*

TYBALT nephew to Lady Capulet

FRIAR LAWRENCE } Franciscans

FRIAR JOHN

BALTHASAR servant to Romeo

SAMPSON } servants to Capulet

GREGORY

PETER servant to Juliet's Nurse

ABRAM servant to Montague

AN APOTHECARY

THREE MUSICIANS

AN OFFICER

LADY MONTAGUE wife to Montague

LADY CAPULET wife to Capulet

JULIET daughter to Capulet

NURSE to Juliet

CITIZENS of Verona GENTLEMEN and

GENTLEWOMEN of both houses MASKERS

TORCHBEARERS PAGES GUARDS

WATCHMEN SERVANTS ATTENDANTS

Scene: Verona; Mantua]

THE PROLOGUE

[Enter CHORUS.]

CHORUS

Two households, both alike in dignity,^o

In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,

From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,^o

Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean.

From forth the fatal loins of these two foes

A pair of star-crossed^o lovers take their life;

Whose misadventured piteous overthrows

Doth with their death bury their parents' strife.

The fearful passage of their death-marked love,

And the continuance of their parents' rage,

5

10

Which, but their children's end, naught could remove,
Is now the two hours' traffic of our stage;^o
The which if you with patient ears attend,
What here shall miss, our toil shall strive to mend.

[Exit.]

[A C T I]

[Scene I. Verona. A public place.]

Enter SAMPSON and GREGORY, with swords and bucklers,^o of the house of Capulet.

SAMPSON Gregory, on my word, we'll not carry coals.^o

12 two . . . stage the business of our play

I.i.s.d. bucklers small shields 1-2 carry coals endure insults

The decorative border above appeared on the title page of the 1597 quarto of Romeo and Juliet.

Pro.1 dignity rank 3 mutiny violence 6 star-crossed fated to disaster

GREGORY No, for then we should be colliers.^o

SAMPSON I mean, and^o we be in choler, we'll draw.^o

GREGORY Ay, while you live, draw your neck out of s collar.

SAMPSON I strike quickly, being moved.

GREGORY But thou art not quickly moved to strike.

SAMPSON A dog of the house of Montague moves me.

GREGORY To move is to stir, and to be valiant is to 10 stand. Therefore, if thou art moved, thou run'st away.

SAMPSON A dog of that house shall move me to stand. I will take the wall^o of any man or maid of Montague's.

GREGORY That shows thee a weak slave; for the 15 weakest goes to the wall.^o

SAMPSON 'Tis true; and therefore women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall.^o Therefore I will push Montague's men from the wall and thrust his maids to the wall. 20

GREGORY The quarrel is between our masters and us their men.

SAMPSON 'Tis all one. I will show myself a tyrant. When I have fought with the men, I will be civil with the maids—I will cut off their heads. 25

GREGORY The heads of the maids?

SAMPSON Ay, the heads of the maids or their maiden-heads. Take it in what sense thou wilt.

GREGORY They must take it in sense that feel it.

SAMPSON Me they shall feel while I am able to stand; 30 and 'tis known I am a pretty piece of flesh.

GREGORY 'Tis well thou art not fish; if thou hadst, thou hadst been Poor John.^o Draw thy tool!^o Here comes two of the house of Montagues.

Enter two other servingmen [ABRAM and BALTHASAR].

SAMPSON My naked weapon is out. Quarrel! I will 35 back thee.

GREGORY How? Turn thy back and run?

SAMPSON Fear me not.

GREGORY No, marry.^o I fear thee!

SAMPSON Let us take the law of our sides;^o let them 40 begin.

GREGORY I will frown as I pass by, and let them take it as they list.

SAMPSON Nay, as they dare. I will bite my thumb^o at them, which is disgrace to them if they bear it. 45

ABRAM Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?

SAMPSON I do bite my thumb, sir.

ABRAM Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?

SAMPSON [Aside to GREGORY.] Is the law of our side 50 if I say ay?

GREGORY [Aside to SAMPSON.] No.

SAMPSON No, sir, I do not bite my thumb at you, sir; but I bite my thumb, sir.

GREGORY Do you quarrel, sir?

ABRAM Quarrel, sir? No, sir. 55

3 colliers coal venders (this leads to puns on choler = anger, and collar = hangman's noose) 4 and if; draw draw swords 13 take the wall take the preferred place on the walk 16 goes . . . wall is pushed to the rear 18 thrust . . . wall assaulted against the wall 33 Poor John hake salted and dried (poor man's fare); tool weapon (with bawdy innuendo) 39 marry an interjection (from "By the Virgin Mary") 40 take . . . sides keep ourselves in the right 44 bite my thumb make a gesture of contempt

SAMPSON But if you do, sir, I am for you. I serve as good a man as you.

ABRAM No better.

SAMPSON Well, sir.

Enter BENVOLIO.

GREGORY Say "better." Here comes one of my 60 master's kinsmen.

SAMPSON Yes, better, sir.

ABRAM You lie.

SAMPSON Draw, if you be men. Gregory, remember thy swashing^o blow. 65

They fight.

BENVOLIO

Part, fools!

Put up your swords. You know not what you do.

Enter TYBALT.

TYBALT

What, art thou drawn among these heartless hinds?^o

Turn thee, Benvolio; look upon thy death.

BENVOLIO

I do but keep the peace. Put up thy sword, 70

Or manage it to part these men with me.

TYBALT

What, drawn, and talk of peace? I hate the word

As I hate hell, all Montagues, and thee.

Have at thee, coward!

[They fight.]

Enter [an OFFICER, and] three or four CITIZENS with clubs or partisans.

OFFICER Clubs, bills, and partisans!^o Strike! Beat them 75 down! Down with the Capulets! Down with the Montagues!

Enter old CAPULET in his gown, and his wife [LADY CAPULET].

CAPULET

What noise is this? Give me my long sword, ho!

LADY CAPULET

A crutch, a crutch! Why call you for a sword?

CAPULET

My sword, I say! Old Montague is come 80

And flourishes his blade in spite^o of me.

Enter old MONTAGUE and his wife [LADY MONTAGUE].

MONTAGUE

Thou villain Capulet!—Hold me not; let me go.

LADY MONTAGUE

Thou shalt not stir one foot to seek a foe.

Enter PRINCE Escalus, with his TRAIN.

PRINCE

Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace,

Profaners of this neighbor-stained steel— 85

Will they not hear? What, ho! You men, you beasts, That quench the fire of your pernicious rage

65 swashing slashing 68 heartless hinds cowardly rustics 75 bills, and partisans varieties of halberd, a combination spear and battle-ax 81 spite defiance

With purple fountains issuing from your veins!
 On pain of torture, from those bloody hands
 Throw your mistempered^o weapons to the ground 90
 And hear the sentence of your movèd prince.
 Three civil brawls, bred of an airy word
 By thee, old Capulet, and Montague,
 Have thrice disturbed the quiet of our streets
 And made Verona's ancient citizens 95
 Cast by their grave beseeching^o ornaments
 To wield old partisans, in hands as old,
 Cank' red with peace, to part your cank' red^o hate.
 If ever you disturb our streets again,
 Your lives shall pay the forfeit of the peace. 100
 For this time all the rest depart away.
 You, Capulet, shall go along with me;
 And, Montague, come you this afternoon,
 To know our farther pleasure in this case,
 To old Freetown, our common judgment place. 105
 Once more, on pain of death, all men depart.

Exeunt [all but MONTAGUE, LADY MONTAGUE, and BENVOLIO].

MONTAGUE

Who set this ancient quarrel new abroach?^o
 Speak, nephew, were you by when it began?

BENVOLIO

Here were the servants of your adversary
 And yours, close fighting ere I did approach. 110
 I drew to part them. In the instant came
 The fiery Tybalt, with his sword prepared;
 Which, as he breathed defiance to my ears,
 He swung about his head and cut the winds,
 Who, nothing hurt withal,^o hissed him in scorn. 115
 While we were interchanging thrusts and blows,
 Came more and more, and fought on part and part,^o
 Till the prince came, who parted either part.

LADY MONTAGUE

O, where is Romeo? Saw you him today?
 Right glad I am he was not at this fray.

BENVOLIO

Madam, an hour before the worshiped sun
 Peered forth the golden window of the East,
 A troubled mind drave me to walk abroad;
 Where, underneath the grove of sycamore
 That westward rooteth from this city side, 125
 So early walking did I see your son.
 Towards him I made, but he was ware^o of me
 And stole into the covert of the wood.
 I, measuring his affections by my own,
 Which then most sought where most might not be found,^o 130
 Being one too many by my weary self,
 Pursued my humor not pursuing his,^o
 And gladly shunned who gladly fled from me.

MONTAGUE

Many a morning hath he there been seen,
 With tears augmenting the fresh morning's dew, 135

Adding to clouds more clouds with his deep sighs;
 But all so soon as the all-cheering sun
 Should in the farthest East begin to draw
 The shady curtains from Aurora's^o bed, 140
 Away from light steals home my heavy^o son
 And private in his chamber pens himself,
 Shuts up his windows, locks fair daylight out,
 And makes himself an artificial night.
 Black and portentous must this humor^o prove 145
 Unless good counsel may the cause remove.

BENVOLIO

My noble uncle, do you know the cause?

MONTAGUE

I neither know it nor can learn of him.

BENVOLIO

Have you importuned him by any means?

MONTAGUE

Both by myself and many other friends;
 But he, his own affections' counselor, 150
 Is to himself—I will not say how true—
 But to himself so secret and so close,
 So far from sounding^o and discovery,
 As is the bud bit with an envious^o worm
 Ere he can spread his sweet leaves to the air 155
 Or dedicate his beauty to the sun.
 Could we but learn from whence his sorrows grow,
 We would as willingly give cure as know.

Enter ROMEO.

BENVOLIO

See, where he comes. So please you step aside;
 I'll know his grievance, or be much denied. 160

MONTAGUE

I would thou wert so happy^o by thy stay
 To hear true shrift.^o Come, madam, let's away.

Exeunt [MONTAGUE and LADY MONTAGUE].

BENVOLIO

Good morrow,^o cousin. 120

ROMEO

Is the day so young?

BENVOLIO

But new struck nine.

ROMEO

Ay me! Sad hours seem long.

Was that my father that went hence so fast? 165

BENVOLIO

It was. What sadness lengthens Romeo's hours?

ROMEO

Not having that which having makes them short.

BENVOLIO In love?

ROMEO Out—

BENVOLIO Of love? 170

ROMEO

Out of her favor where I am in love.

BENVOLIO

Alas that love, so gentle in his view,^o
 Should be so tyrannous and rough in proof!

ROMEO

Alas that love, whose view is muffled still,^o

139 Aurora's Aurora was the goddess of the dawn 140 heavy melancholy, moody 144 humor mood 153 So . . . sounding so far from measuring the depth of his mood 154 envious malign 161 happy lucky 162 true shrift Romeo's confession of the truth 163 morrow morning 172 gentle . . . view mild in appearance 174 muffled still always blindfolded

90 mistempered (1) ill-made (2) used with ill will 96 grave beseeching dignified and appropriate 98 Cank' red . . . cank' red rusted . . . malignant 107 new abroach newly open 115 withal thereby 117 on part and part some on one side, some on another 127 ware aware 130 most sought . . . found wanted most to be alone 132 Pursued . . . his followed my own inclination by not inquiring into his mood

Should without eyes see pathways to his will!
 Where shall we dine? O me! What fray was here?
 Yet tell me not, for I have heard it all.
 Here's much to do with hate, but more with love.^o
 Why then, O brawling love, O loving hate,
 O anything, of nothing first created!^o
 O heavy lightness, serious vanity,
 Misshapen chaos of well-seeming forms,
 Feather of lead, bright smoke, cold fire, sick health,
 Still-waking sleep, that is not what it is!
 This love feel I, that feel no love in this.
 Dost thou not laugh?

BENVOLIO No, coz,^o I rather weep.

ROMEO

Good heart, at what?

BENVOLIO At thy good heart's oppression.

ROMEO

Why, such is love's transgression.
 Grievings of mine own lie heavy in my breast,
 Which thou wilt propagate, to have it prest^o
 With more of thine. This love that thou hast shown Doth add more grief to too much of mine own.
 Love is a smoke made with the fume of sighs;
 Being purged, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes;
 Being vexed, a sea nourished with loving tears.
 What is it else? A madness most discreet,^o
 A choking gall, and a preserving sweet.
 Farewell, my coz.

BENVOLIO Soft!^o I will go along.

And if^o you leave me so, you do me wrong.

ROMEO

Tut! I have lost myself; I am not here;
 This is not Romeo, he's some other where.

BENVOLIO

Tell me in sadness,^o who is that you love?

ROMEO

What, shall I groan and tell thee?

BENVOLIO

Groan? Why, no;

But sadly^o tell me who.

ROMEO

Bid a sick man in sadness^o make his will.
 Ah, word ill urged to one that is so ill!
 In sadness, cousin, I do love a woman.

BENVOLIO

I aimed so near when I supposed you loved.

ROMEO

A right good markman. And she's fair I love.

BENVOLIO

A right fair mark,^o fair coz, is soonest hit.

ROMEO

Well, in that hit you miss. She'll not be hit
 With Cupid's arrow. She hath Dian's wit,^o
 And, in strong proof^o of chastity well armed,

175 From Love's weak childish bow she lives uncharmed.
 She will not stay^o the siege of loving terms,
 Nor bide^o th' encounter of assailing eyes,
 Nor ope her lap to saint-seducing gold.
 O, she is rich in beauty; only poor
 180 That, when she dies, with beauty dies her store.^o

BENVOLIO

Then she hath sworn that she will still^o live chaste?

ROMEO

185 She hath, and in that sparing make huge waste;
 For beauty, starved with her severity,
 Cuts beauty off from all posterity.
 She is too fair, too wise, wisely too fair,
 To merit bliss^o by making me despair.
 She hath forsworn to love, and in that vow
 Do I live dead that live to tell it now.

BENVOLIO

Be ruled by me; forget to think of her.

ROMEO

190 O, teach me how I should forget to think!

BENVOLIO

By giving liberty unto thine eyes.
 Examine other beauties.

ROMEO

195 'Tis the way
 To call hers, exquisite, in question^o more.
 These happy masks that kiss fair ladies' brows,
 Being black puts us in mind they hide the fair.
 He that is stricken blind cannot forget
 The precious treasure of his eyesight lost.
 Show me a mistress that is passing fair:
 What doth her beauty serve but as a note^o
 200 Where I may read who passed that passing fair?
 Farewell. Thou canst not teach me to forget.

BENVOLIO

I'll pay that doctrine, or else die in debt.^o Exeunt.

[Scene II. A street.]

Enter CAPULET, County PARIS, and the clown [his SERVANT].

205

CAPULET

But Montague is bound^o as well as I,
 In penalty alike; and 'tis not hard, I think,
 For men so old as we to keep the peace.

PARIS

Of honorable reckoning^o are you both,
 And pity 'tis you lived at odds so long.
 210 But now, my lord, what say you to my suit?

CAPULET

But saying o'er what I have said before:
 My child is yet a stranger in the world,
 She hath not seen the change of fourteen years;
 Let two more summers wither in their pride
 Ere we may think her ripe to be a bride.

PARIS

Younger than she are happy mothers made.

215 stay submit to 216 bide abide (put up with) 219 with
 . . . store she will leave no progeny to perpetuate her beauty
 220 still always 225 merit bliss win heavenly bliss 232
 To . . . question to keep bringing her beauty to mind 238
 note written reminder 241 I'll . . . debt I will teach you or else die trying

I.ii.i bound under bond 4 reckoning reputation

178 more with love i.e., the combatants enjoyed their fighting
 180 O . . . created Romeo here relates his own succession of witty paradoxes to the dogma that God created everything out of nothing 186 coz cousin (relative) 190 Which . . .
 prest which griefs you will increase by burdening my breast 196 discreet discriminating 198 Soft hold on 199 And if if 202 in sadness in all seriousness 204 sadly seriously 205 in sadness (1) in seriousness (2) in unhappiness at the prospect of death 210 fair mark target easily seen 212 Dian's wit the cunning of Diana, huntress and goddess of chastity 213 proof tested power

CAPULET

And too soon marred are those so early made.
 Earth hath swallowèd all my hopes° but she;
 She is the hopeful lady of my earth.
 But woo her, gentle Paris, get her heart;
 My will to her consent is but a part.
 And she agreed,° within her scope of choice°
 Lies my consent and fair according° voice.
 This night I hold an old accustomed° feast,
 Whereto I have invited many a guest,
 Such as I love; and you among the store,
 One more, most welcome, makes my number more.
 At my poor house look to behold this night
 Earth-treading stars° that make dark heaven light.
 Such comfort as do lusty young men feel
 When well-appareled April on the heel
 Of limping winter treads, even such delight
 Among fresh fennel° buds shall you this night
 Inherit° at my house. Hear all, all see,
 And like her most whose merit most shall be;
 Which, on more view of many, mine, being one,
 May stand in number,° though in reck'ning none.
 Come, go with me.

[To SERVANT, giving him a paper.]

Go, sirrah,° trudge about
 Through fair Verona; find those persons out
 Whose names are written there, and to them say
 My house and welcome on their pleasure stay.°

Exit [with PARIS].

SERVANT Find them out whose names are written here? It is written that the shoemaker should meddle with his yard and the tailor with his last, the fisher with his pencil and the painter with his nets;° but I am sent to find those persons whose names are here writ, and can never find° what names the writing person hath here writ. I must to the learned. In good time!°

Enter BENVOLIO and ROMEO.

BENVOLIO

Tut, man, one fire burns out another's burning;
 One pain is less'ned by another's anguish;°
 Turn giddy, and be help by backward turning;°
 One desperate grief cures with another's languish.
 Take thou some new infection to thy eye,
 And the rank poison of the old will die.

ROMEO

Your plantain leaf is excellent for that.

BENVOLIO

For what, I pray thee?

ROMEO

For your broken° shin.

BENVOLIO

Why, Romeo, art thou mad?

ROMEO

15 Not mad, but bound more than a madman is;
 Shut up in prison, kept without my food,
 Whipped and tormented and—God-den,° good fellow.

SERVANT God gi' go-den. I pray, sir, can you read?

ROMEO

20 Ay, mine own fortune in my misery.

SERVANT Perhaps you have learned it without book.

But, I pray, can you read anything you see? 60

ROMEO

Ay, if I know the letters and the language.°

SERVANT Ye say honestly. Rest you merry.°

ROMEO Stay, fellow; I can read.

He reads the letter.

“Signior Martino and his wife and daughters;
 30 County Anselm and his beauteous sisters;
 The lady widow of Vitruvio;
 Signior Placentio and his lovely nieces;
 Mercutio and his brother Valentine;
 Mine uncle Capulet, his wife and daughters;
 My fair niece Rosaline; Livia;
 Signior Valentio and his cousin Tybalt;
 Lucio and the lively Helena.” 70

A fair assembly. Whither should they come?

SERVANT Up.

ROMEO Whither? To supper? 75

SERVANT To our house.

ROMEO Whose house?

SERVANT My master's.

ROMEO

Indeed I should have asked you that before.

SERVANT Now I'll tell you without asking. My 80 master is the great rich Capulet; and if you be not of the house of Montagues, I pray come and crush a cup° of wine. Rest you merry. [Exit.]

BENVOLIO

At this same ancient° feast of Capulet's
 45 Sups the fair Rosaline whom thou so loves;
 With all the admirèd beauties of Verona.
 Go thither, and with unattainted° eye
 Compare her face with some that I shall show,
 And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.

50 ROMEO

When the devout religion of mine eye 90

Maintains such falsehood, then turn tears to fires;

And these, who, often drowned, could never die,

Transparent° heretics, be burnt for liars!

One fairer than my love? The all-seeing sun

Ne'er saw her match since first the world begun. 95

BENVOLIO

Tut! you saw her fair, none else being by,

Herself poised° with herself in either eye;

But in that crystal scales° let there be weighed

Your lady's love against some other maid

56 God-den good evening (good afternoon) 61 if . . .
 language if I already know what the writing says 62 Rest you merry May God keep you merry 82 crush a cup have a drink 84 ancient established by custom 87 unattainted impartial 93 Transparent obvious 97 poised balanced 98
 crystal scales Romeo's eyes

14 hopes children 18 And she agreed if she agrees; within
 . . . choice among those she favors 19 according agreeing 20 accustomed established by custom 25 Earth-treading stars young girls 29 fennel flowering herb 30 Inherit have 33 stand in number constitute one of the crowd; in reck'- ning none not worth special consideration 34 sirrah a term of familiar address 37 stay wait 39-41 shoemaker . . .
 nets one should stick to what one knows how to do (but the servant, being illiterate, reverses the proverbial expressions) 43 find understand 44 In good time i.e., here come some learned ones 46 another's anguish the pain of another 47 be . . . turning be helped by turning in the opposite direction
 52 broken scratched

That I will show you shining at this feast,
And she shall scant° show well that now seems best.

ROMEO

I'll go along, no such sight to be shown,
But to rejoice in splendor of mine own.° [Exeunt.]

[Scene III. A room in Capulet's house.]

Enter Capulet's wife [LADY CAPULET], and NURSE.

LADY CAPULET

Nurse, where's my daughter? Call her forth to me.

NURSE

Now, by my maidenhead at twelve year old,
I bade her come. What,° lamb! What, ladybird!
God forbid, where's this girl? What, Juliet!

Enter JULIET.

JULIET

How now? Who calls?

NURSE

Your mother.

JULIET

Madam, I am here. 5

What is your will?

LADY CAPULET

This is the matter.—Nurse, give leave awhile;
We must talk in secret. Nurse, come back again.
I have rememb' red me; thou's° hear our counsel.
Thou knowest my daughter's of a pretty age. 10

NURSE

Faith, I can tell her age unto an hour.

LADY CAPULET

She's not fourteen.

NURSE

I'll lay fourteen of my teeth—

And yet, to my teen° be it spoken, I have but four—She's not fourteen. How long is it now
To Lammastide?°

LADY CAPULET A fortnight and odd days. 15

NURSE

Even or odd, of all days in the year,
Come Lammas Eve at night shall she be fourteen.
Susan and she (God rest all Christian souls!)
Were of an age.° Well, Susan is with God;
She was too good for me. But, as I said,
On Lammas Eve at night shall she be fourteen;
That shall she, marry; I remember it well.
'Tis since the earthquake° now eleven years;
And she was weaned (I never shall forget it),
Of all the days of the year, upon that day;
For I had then laid wormwood to my dug,
Sitting in the sun under the dovehouse wall.
My lord and you were then at Mantua.
Nay, I do bear a brain.° But, as I said,
When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple
Of my dug and felt it bitter, pretty fool,
To see it tetchy° and fall out with the dug!
Shake, quoth the dovehouse!° 'Twas no need, I trow,°

101 scant scarcely 103 splendor . . . own my own lady's splendor

I.iii.3 What an impatient call 9 thou's thou shalt 13 teen sorrow 15 Lammastide August 1 19 of an age the same age 23 earthquake see Introduction, p. 481 29 I . . . brain my mind is still good 32 tetchy irritable 33 Shake . . .
dovehouse the dovehouse (which the Nurse personifies) began to tremble; trow believe

To bid me trudge.

And since that time it is eleven years,
For then she could stand high-lone;° nay, by th'
rood,°

She could have run and waddled all about;
For even the day before, she broke her brow;
And then my husband (God be with his soul!

'A° was a merry man) took up the child. 40

"Yea," quoth he, "dost thou fall upon thy face?
Thou wilt fall backward when thou hast more wit;
Wilt thou not, Jule?" and, by my holidam,°

The pretty wretch left crying and said, "Ay."

To see now how a jest shall come about! 45

I warrant, and I should live a thousand years,
I never should forget it. "Wilt thou not, Jule?" quoth
he,

And, pretty fool, it stinted° and said, "Ay."

LADY CAPULET

Enough of this. I pray thee hold thy peace.

NURSE

Yes, madam. Yet I cannot choose but laugh
To think it should leave crying and say, "Ay."

And yet, I warrant, it had upon it° brow 50

A bump as big as a young cock' rel's stone;

A perilous knock; and it cried bitterly.

"Yea," quoth my husband, "fall'st upon thy face? 55

Thou wilt fall backward when thou comest to age,

Wilt thou not, Jule?" It stinted and said, "Ay."

JULIET

And stint thou too, I pray thee, nurse, say I.

NURSE

Peace, I have done. God mark thee to his grace!

Thou wast the prettiest babe that e'er I nursed. 60

And I might live to see thee married once,
I have my wish.

LADY CAPULET

Marry,° that "marry" is the very theme

I came to talk of. Tell me, daughter Juliet,

How stands your disposition to be married? 65

JULIET

It is an honor that I dream not of.

NURSE

An honor? Were not I thine only nurse,

I would say thou hadst sucked wisdom from thy teat.

LADY CAPULET

Well, think of marriage now. Younger than you,

Here in Verona, ladies of esteem, 70

Are made already mothers. By my count,

I was your mother much upon these years°

That you are now a maid. Thus then in brief:

The valiant Paris seeks you for his love.

NURSE

A man, young lady! Lady, such a man 75

As all the world.—Why, he's a man of wax.°

LADY CAPULET

Verona's summer hath not such a flower.

NURSE

Nay, he's a flower, in faith—a very flower.

36 high-lone alone; rood cross 40 'A he 43 holidam holy thing, relic 48 stinted stopped 52 it its 63 Marry indeed 72 much . . . years the same length of time 76 man of wax man of perfect figure

LADY CAPULET

What say you? Can you love the gentleman?
 This night you shall behold him at our feast.
 Read o'er the volume of young Paris' face,
 And find delight writ there with beauty's pen;
 Examine every married lineament,^o
 And see how one another lends content;^o
 And what obscured in this fair volume lies
 Find written in the margent^o of his eyes.
 This precious book of love, this unbound^o lover,
 To beautify him only lacks a cover.^o
 The fish lives in the sea, and 'tis much pride
 For fair without the fair within to hide.^o
 That book in many's eyes doth share the glory,
 That in gold clasps locks in the golden story;
 So shall you share all that he doth possess,
 By having him making yourself no less.

NURSE

No less? Nay, bigger! Women grow by men.

LADY CAPULET

Speak briefly, can you like of^o Paris' love?

JULIET

I'll look to like, if looking liking move;
 But no more deep will I endart mine eye
 Than your consent gives strength to make it fly.

Enter SERVINGMAN.

SERVINGMAN Madam, the guests are come, supper served up, you called, my young lady asked for, the nurse cursed^o in the pantry, and everything in extremity. I must hence to wait.^o I beseech you follow straight.^o [Exit.]

LADY CAPULET

We follow thee. Juliet, the county stays.^o

NURSE

Go, girl, seek happy nights to happy days. Exeunt.

[Scene IV. A street.]

Enter ROMEO, MERCUTIO, BENVOLIO, with five or six other MASKERS; TORCHBEARERS.

ROMEO

What, shall this speech be spoke for our excuse?^o
 Or shall we on without apology?

BENVOLIO

The date is out of such prolixity.^o
 We'll have no Cupid hoodwinked^o with a scarf,
 Bearing a Tartar's painted bow of lath,
 Scaring the ladies like a crowkeeper;^o

83 married lineament harmonious feature 84 one . . .
 content all enhance one another 86 margent marginal commentary 87 unbound (1) without cover (2) uncaught 88 only . . . cover only a wife is lacking 89-90 The . . .
 hide The fair sea is made even fairer by hiding fair fish within it 96 like of be favorable to 101-02 the nurse cursed i.e., because she is not helping 103 to wait to serve 104 straight straightway 105 the county stays the count is waiting

I.iv.1 shall . . . excuse shall we introduce ourselves with the customary prepared speech 3 date . . . prolixity such wordiness is out of fashion 4 hoodwinked blindfolded 6 crowkeeper boy set to scare crows away

Nor no without-book prologue,^o faintly spoke
 After the prompter, for our entrance;
 But, let them measure^o us by what they will,
 We'll measure them a measure^o and be gone.

ROMEO

Give me a torch. I am not for this ambling.
 Being but heavy, I will bear the light.

85 MERCUTIO

Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.

ROMEO

Not I, believe me. You have dancing shoes
 With nimble soles; I have a soul of lead
 So stakes me to the ground I cannot move.

MERCUTIO

You are a lover. Borrow Cupid's wings
 And soar with them above a common bound.^o

ROMEO

I am too sore enpierced with his shaft
 To soar with his light feathers; and so bound
 I cannot bound a pitch^o above dull woe.
 Under love's heavy burden do I sink.

MERCUTIO

And, to sink in it, should you burden love—
 Too great oppression for a tender thing.

ROMEO

Is love a tender thing? It is too rough,
 Too rude, too boist'rous, and it pricks like thorn.

MERCUTIO

If love be rough with you, be rough with love;
 Prick love for pricking,^o and you beat love down.
 Give me a case to put my visage in.

A visor for a visor! What care I

What curious eye doth quote deformities?^o
 Here are the beetle brows^o shall blush^o for me.

BENVOLIO

Come, knock and enter; and no sooner in
 But every man betake him to his legs.^o

ROMEO

A torch for me! Let wantons light of heart
 Tickle the senseless rushes^o with their heels;
 For I am proverbied with a grandsire phrase,^o
 I'll be a candleholder^o and look on;
 The game was ne'er so fair, and I am done.^o

MERCUTIO

Tut! Dun's the mouse, the constable's own word!^o

If thou art Dun,^o we'll draw thee from the mire

7 without-book prologue memorized speech 9 measure judge 10 measure . . . measure dance one dance with them 18 bound (1) leap (2) limit 21 pitch height (as in a falcon's soaring) 28 Prick . . . pricking give love the spur in return 29-31 Give . . . deformities Give me a bag for my mask. A mask for a mask. What do I care who notices my ugliness?
 32 beetle brows bushy eyebrows (?); blush be red (i.e., be grotesque) 34 betake . . . legs begin dancing 36 rushes used for floor covering 37 grandsire phrase old saying 38 candleholder attendant 39 The . . . done I'll give up dancing, now that I have enjoyed it as much as I ever shall 40 Dun's . . . word Mercutio puns on Romeo's last clause, saying in effect "You are not done (i.e., dun = dark, by extension, silent) but the mouse is, and it's time to be quiet" 41 Dun a common name for a horse, used in an old game,
 "Dun is in the mire," in which the players try to haul a heavy log

Of this sir-reverence^o love, wherein thou stickest
Upon to the ears. Come, we burn daylight,^o ho!

ROMEO

Nay, that's not so.

MERCUTIO I mean, sir, in delay

We waste our lights^o in vain, like lights by day.

45

Take our good meaning, for our judgment sits

Five times in that^o ere once in our five wits.

ROMEO

And we mean well in going to this masque,

But 'tis no wit^o to go.

MERCUTIO

Why, may one ask?

ROMEO

I dreamt a dream tonight.^o

MERCUTIO

And so did I.

50

ROMEO

Well, what was yours?

MERCUTIO

That dreamers often lie.

ROMEO

In bed asleep, while they do dream things true.

MERCUTIO

O, then I see Queen Mab^o hath been with you.

She is the fairies' midwife, and she comes

In shape no bigger than an agate stone

55

On the forefinger of an alderman,

Drawn with a team of little atomies^o

Over men's noses as they lie asleep;

Her wagon spokes made of long spinners'^o legs,

60

The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers;

Her traces, of the smallest spider web;

Her collars, of the moonshine's wat'ry beams;

Her whip, of cricket's bone; the lash, of film;^o

Her wagoner, a small gray-coated gnat,

65

Not half so big as a round little worm

Pricked from the lazy finger of a maid;^o

Her chariot is an empty hazelnut,

Made by the joiner squirrel or old grub,^o

Time out o' mind the fairies' coachmakers.

And in this state^o she gallops night by night

70

Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of love;

On courtiers' knees, that dream on curtsies straight;

O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees;

O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream,

75

Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues,

Because their breath with sweetmeats tainted are.

Sometime she gallops o'er a courtier's nose,

And then dreams he of smelling out a suit;^o

And sometime comes she with a tithe pig's^o tail

80

Tickling a parson's nose as 'a lies asleep,

Then he dreams of another benefice.^o

Sometime she driveth o'er a soldier's neck,

And then dreams he of cutting foreign throats,

Of breaches, ambuscadoes, Spanish blades,

85

Of healths^o five fathom deep; and then anon

Drums in his ear, at which he starts and wakes,

And being thus frightened, swears a prayer or two

And sleeps again. This is that very Mab

That plats the manes of horses in the night

90

And bakes the elflocks^o in foul sluttish hairs,

Which once untangled much misfortune bodes.

This is the hag,^o when maids lie on their backs,

That presses them and learns them first to bear,

Making them women of good carriage.^o

This is she—

ROMEO Peace, peace, Mercutio, peace!

95

Thou talk'st of nothing.

MERCUTIO

True, I talk of dreams;

Which are the children of an idle brain,

Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;^o

Which is as thin of substance as the air,

And more inconstant than the wind, who woos

100

Even now the frozen bosom of the North

And, being angered, puffs away from thence,

Turning his side to the dewdropping South.

BENVOLIO

This wind you talk of blows us from ourselves.

Supper is done, and we shall come too late.

105

ROMEO

I fear, too early; for my mind misgives

Some consequence^o yet hanging in the stars

60

Shall bitterly begin his fearful date^o

With this night's revels and expire the term

Of a despised life, closed in my breast,

110

By some vile forfeit of untimely death.^o

But he that hath the steerage of my course

Direct my sail! On, lusty gentlemen!

BENVOLIO Strike, drum.

They march about the stage, and [retire to one side].

[Scene V. A hall in Capulet's house.]

SERVINGMEN come forth with napkins.^o

FIRST SERVINGMAN Where's Potpan, that he helps not to take away? He shift a trencher!^o He scrape a trencher!

75

SECOND SERVINGMAN When good manners shall lie all in one or two men's hands, and they unwashed too,
'tis a foul thing.

FIRST SERVINGMAN Away with the join-stools,^o remove the court cupboard,^o look to the plate. Good thou, save me a piece of marchpane,^o and, as thou

80

42 sir-reverence save your reverence (an apologetic expression, used to introduce indelicate expressions; here used humorously with the word "love") 43 burn daylight delay 45 lights (1) torches (2) mental faculties 47 that our good meaning 49 'tis no wit it shows no discretion 50 tonight last night 53 Queen Mab Fairy Queen (Celtic) 57 atomies tiny creatures 59 spinners' spiders' 63 film fine filament of some kind 65–66 worm . . . maid lazy maids were said to have worms breeding in their fingers 68 joiner . . . grub both woodworkers and adept at hollowing out nuts 70 state stately array 78 suit i.e., a petitioner, who may be induced to pay for the courtier's influence 79 tithe pig's tenth pig's (considered part of the parson's tithe) 81 benefice income, living

85 healths toasts 90 elflocks hair tangled by elves 92 hag nightmare or incubus 94 carriage (1) posture (2) capacity for carrying children 98 fantasy fancy 107 consequence future event 108 date duration (of the consequence or event) 109–11 expire . . . death the event is personified here as one who deliberately lends in expectation that the borrower will have to forfeit at great loss

I.v.s.d. although for reference purposes this edition employs the conventional post-Elizabethan divisions into scenes, the reader is reminded that they are merely editorial; in the quarto this stage direction is part of the preceding one 2 trencher wooden plate 7 join-stools stools fitted together by a joiner 8 court cupboard sideboard, displaying plate 9 marchpane marzipan, a confection made of sugar and almonds loves me, let the porter let in Susan Grindstone and 10

 Nell. Anthony, and Potpan!

SECOND SERVINGMAN Ay, boy, ready.

FIRST SERVINGMAN You are looked for and called for, asked for and sought for, in the great chamber.

THIRD SERVINGMAN We cannot be here and there 15 too. Cheerly, boys! Be brisk awhile, and the longer liver take all. Exeunt.

Enter [CAPULET, LADY CAPULET, JULIET, TYBALT, NURSE, and] all the GUESTS and GENTLEWOMEN to the MASKERS.

CAPULET

Welcome, gentlemen! Ladies that have their toes
 Unplagued with corns will walk a bout° with you.
 Ah, my mistresses, which of you all 20
 Will now deny° to dance? She that makes dainty,°
 She I'll swear hath corns. Am I come near ye now?
 Welcome, gentlemen! I have seen the day
 That I have worn a visor and could tell
 A whispering tale in a fair lady's ear, 25
 Such as would please. 'Tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis gone.
 You are welcome, gentlemen! Come, musicians, play.

Music plays, and they dance.

A hall,° a hall! Give room! And foot it, girls.
 More light, you knaves, and turn the tables up,
 And quench the fire; the room is grown too hot. 30
 Ah, sirrah, this unlooked-for sport° comes well.
 Nay, sit; nay, sit, good cousin Capulet;
 For you and I are past our dancing days.
 How long is't now since last yourself and I
 Were in a mask?

SECOND CAPULET By'r Lady, thirty years. 35

CAPULET

What, man? 'Tis not so much, 'tis not so much;
 'Tis since the nuptial of Lucentio,
 Come Pentecost as quickly as it will,
 Some five-and-twenty years, and then we masked.

SECOND CAPULET

'Tis more, 'tis more. His son is elder, sir; 40
 His son is thirty.

CAPULET Will you tell me that?

His son was but a ward° two years ago.

ROMEO [To a SERVINGMAN.]

What lady's that which doth enrich the hand
 Of yonder knight?

SERVINGMAN I know not, sir. 45

ROMEO

O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright!
 It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night
 As a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear—
 Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear!
 So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows 50
 As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows.
 The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand
 And, touching hers, make blessed my rude° hand.
 Did my heart love till now? Forswear it, sight!
 For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. 55

19 walk a bout dance a turn 21 deny refuse; makes dainty seems to hesitate 28 A hall clear the floor 31 unlooked-for sport they had not expected maskers 42 ward minor 53 rude rough

TYBALT

This, by his voice, should be a Montague.
 Fetch me my rapier, boy. What! Dares the slave
 Come hither, covered with an antic face,°
 To flier° and scorn at our solemnity?
 Now, by the stock and honor of my kin, 60
 To strike him dead I hold it not a sin.

CAPULET

Why, how now, kinsman? Wherefore storm you so?

TYBALT

Uncle, this is a Montague, our foe,
 A villain, that is hither come in spite° 65
 To scorn at our solemnity this night.

CAPULET

Young Romeo is it?

TYBALT

'Tis he, that villain Romeo.

CAPULET

Content thee, gentle coz, let him alone.
 'A bears him like a portly° gentleman,
 And, to say truth, Verona brags of him 70
 To be a virtuous and well-governed youth.
 I would not for the wealth of all this town
 Here in my house do him disparagement.
 Therefore be patient; take no note of him.
 It is my will, the which if thou respect,
 Show a fair presence and put off these frowns, 75
 An ill-beseeming semblance for a feast.

TYBALT

It fits when such a villain is a guest.
 I'll not endure him.

CAPULET

He shall be endured.

What, goodman° boy! I say he shall. Go to!°
 Am I the master here, or you? Go to! 80
 You'll not endure him, God shall mend my soul!°
 You'll make a mutiny° among my guests!
 You will set cock-a-hoop.° You'll be the man!

TYBALT

Why, uncle, 'tis a shame.

CAPULET

Go to, go to!

You are a saucy boy. Is't so, indeed? 85
 This trick may chance to scathe° you. I know what.
 You must contrary me! Marry, 'tis time—
 Well said, my hearts!—You are a princex°—go!
 Be quiet, or—More light, more light!—For shame!
 I'll make you quiet. What!—Cheerly, my hearts! 90

TYBALT

Patience perforce° with willful choler° meeting
 Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting.
 I will withdraw; but this intrusion shall,
 Now seeming sweet, onvert to bitt' rest gall. Exit.

ROMEO

If° I profane with my unworthiest hand 95
 This holy shrine,° the gentle sin is this:°

58 antic face fantastic mask 59 flier jeer 64 in spite insultingly 68 portly of good deportment 79 goodman a term applied to someone below the rank of gentleman; Go to impatient exclamation 81 God . . . soul roughly equivalent to our "Indeed" 82 mutiny disturbance 83 set cock-a-hoop be cock of the walk 86 scathe hurt, harm 88 princex impertinent youngster 91 Patience perforce enforced self-control; choler anger 95 If here begins an English, or Shakespearean, sonnet 96 shrine i.e., Juliet's hand;
 gentle . . . this this is the sin of well-bred people

My lips, two blushing pilgrims, ready stand
To smooth that rough touch with a tender kiss.

JULIET

Good pilgrim, you do wrong your hand too much,
Which mannerly devotion shows in this;
For saints have hands that pilgrims' hands do touch,
And palm to palm is holy palmers'° kiss.

ROMEO

Have not saints lips, and holy palmers too?

JULIET

Ay, pilgrim, lips that they must use in prayer.

ROMEO

O, then, dear saint, let lips do what hands do!
They pray; grant thou, lest faith turn to despair.

JULIET

Saints do not move,° though grant for prayers' sake.

ROMEO

Then move not while my prayer's effect I take.
Thus from my lips, by thine my sin is purged.

[Kisses her.]

JULIET

Then have my lips the sin that they have took.

ROMEO

Sin from my lips? O trespass sweetly urged!
Give me my sin again. [Kisses her.]

JULIET

You kiss by th' book.°

NURSE

Madam, your mother craves a word with you.

ROMEO

What is her mother?

NURSE

Marry, bachelor,
Her mother is the lady of the house,
And a good lady, and a wise and virtuous.
I nursed her daughter that you talked withal.°
I tell you, he that can lay hold of her Shall have the chinks.°

ROMEO

Is she a Capulet?

O dear account! My life is my foe's debt.°

BENVOLIO

Away, be gone; the sport is at the best.

ROMEO

Ay, so I fear; the more is my unrest.

CAPULET

Nay, gentlemen, prepare not to be gone;
We have a trifling foolish banquet towards.°
Is it e'en so?° Why then, I thank you all.
I thank you, honest gentlemen. Good night.
More torches here! Come on then; let's to bed.
Ah, sirrah, by my fay,° it waxes late;
I'll to my rest. [Exeunt all but JULIET and NURSE.]

JULIET

Come hither, nurse. What is yond gentleman?

NURSE

The son and heir of old Tiberio.

JULIET

What's he that now is going out of door?

NURSE

Marry, that, I think, be young Petruchio.

100

JULIET

What's he that follows here, that would not dance?

NURSE I know not.

135

JULIET

Go ask his name.—If he is married,
My grave is like to be my wedding bed.

NURSE

His name is Romeo, and a Montague,
The only son of your great enemy.

105

JULIET

My only love, sprung from my only hate!
Too early seen unknown, and known too late!
Prodigious° birth of love it is to me
That I must love a loathed enemy.

140

NURSE

What's this? What's this?

JULIET

A rhyme I learnt even now

Of one I danced withal.

145

110

One calls within, "Juliet."

NURSE

Anon,° anon!

Come, let's away; the strangers all are gone. Exeunt.

[A C T I I]

[P R O L O G U E]

[Enter] CHORUS.

120

CHORUS

Now old desire doth in his deathbed lie,
And young affection gapes° to be his heir;
That fair° for which love groaned for and would die,
With tender Juliet matched, is now not fair.
Now Romeo is beloved and loves again,
Alike bewitchèd° by the charm of looks;
But to his foe supposed he must complain,°
And she steal love's sweet bait from fearful hooks.
Being held a foe, he may not have access
To breathe such vows as lovers use to° swear,
And she as much in love, her means much less
To meet her new belovèd anywhere;
But passion lends them power, time means, to meet,
Temp'ring extremities with extreme sweet.° [Exit.]

5

10

130

102 palmers' religious pilgrims' (the term originally signified one who carried a palm branch; here it is used as a pun meaning one who holds another's hand) 107 do not move (1) do not initiate action (2) stand still 112 You . . . book You take my words literally to get more kisses 117 withal with 119 the chinks plenty of money 120 My life . . . debt My foe now owns my life 124 towards in preparation 125 Is . . . so the maskers insist on leaving 128 fay faith

142 Prodigious (1) monstrous (2) of evil portent 146 Anon at once

II.Pro.2 young affection gapes the new love is eager 3 That fair Rosaline 6 Alike bewitchèd both are bewitched 7 complain address his lover's suit 10 use to customarily 14 Temp'ring . . . sweet softening difficulties with extraordinary delights

[Scene I. Near Capulet's orchard.]

Enter ROMEO alone.

ROMEO

Can I go forward when my heart is here?
Turn back, dull earth, and find thy center out.°

Enter BENVOLIO with MERCUTIO. [ROMEO retires.]

BENVOLIO

Romeo! My cousin Romeo! Romeo!

MERCUTIO

He is wise

And, on my life, hath stol'n him home to bed.

BENVOLIO

He ran this way and leapt this orchard wall.

Call, good Mercutio.

MERCUTIO

Nay, I'll conjure too.

Romeo! Humors! Madman! Passion! Lover!

Appear thou in the likeness of a sigh;

Speak but one rhyme, and I am satisfied!

Cry but "Ay me!" pronounce but "love" and "dove"; 10

Speak to my gossip° Venus one fair word,

One nickname for her purblind° son and heir,

Young Abraham Cupid,° he that shot so true

When King Cophetua loved the beggar maid!°

He heareth not, he stirreth not, he moveth not; 15

The ape is dead,° and I must conjure him.

I conjure thee by Rosaline's bright eyes,

By her high forehead and her scarlet lip,

By her fine foot, straight leg, and quivering thigh,

And the demesnes° that there adjacent lie, 20

That in thy likeness thou appear to us!

BENVOLIO

And if° he hear thee, thou wilt anger him.

MERCUTIO

This cannot anger him. 'Twould anger him

To raise a spirit in his mistress' circle°

Of some strange nature, letting it there stand 25

Till she had laid it and conjured it down.

That were some spite;° my invocation

Is fair and honest:° in his mistress' name,

I conjure only but to raise up him.

BENVOLIO

Come, he hath hid himself among these trees 30

To be consorted° with the humorous° night.

Blind is his love and best befits the dark.

MERCUTIO

If love be blind, love cannot hit the mark.

Now will he sit under a medlar tree

And wish his mistress were that kind of fruit 35

As maids call medlars° when they laugh alone.

O, Romeo, that she were, O that she were
An open et cetera, thou a pop'rin pear!
Romeo, good night. I'll to my truckle bed;°
This field bed is too cold for me to sleep. 40
Come, shall we go?

BENVOLIO

Go then, for 'tis in vain

To seek him here that means not to be found.

Exit [with others].

[Scene II. Capulet's orchard.]

ROMEO [Coming forward.]

He jests at scars that never felt a wound.

[Enter JULIET at a window.]

But soft! What light through yonder window breaks?

It is the East, and Juliet is the sun!

Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon,

Who is already sick and pale with grief 5

That thou her maid° art far more fair than she.

Be not her maid, since she is envious.

Her vestal livery° is but sick and green,°

And none but fools do wear it. Cast it off.

It is my lady! O, it is my love! 10

O, that she knew she were!

She speaks, yet she says nothing. What of that?

Her eye discourses; I will answer it.

I am too bold; 'tis not to me she speaks.

Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, 15

Having some business, do entreat her eyes

To twinkle in their spheres° till they return.

What if her eyes were there, they in her head?

The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars

As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven 20

Would through the airy region stream so bright

That birds would sing and think it were not night.

See how she leans her cheek upon her hand!

O, that I were a glove upon that hand,

That I might touch that cheek!

JULIET

Ay me!

ROMEO

She speaks. 25

O, speak again, bright angel, for thou art

As glorious to this night, being o'er my head,

As is a wingèd messenger of heaven

Unto the white-upturnèd wond'ring eyes

Of mortals that fall back to gaze on him 30

When he bestrides the lazy puffing clouds

And sails upon the bosom of the air.

JULIET

O Romeo, Romeo! Wherefore art thou Romeo?

Deny thy father and refuse thy name;

Or, if thou wilt not, be but sworn my love, 35

And I'll no longer be a Capulet.

ROMEO [Aside.]

Shall I hear more, or shall I speak at this?

39 I'll . . . bed I'll go to my trundle bed, or baby bed (i.e., I'm innocent in affairs of this kind)

II.ii.6 her maid the moon is here thought of as Diana, goddess and patroness of virgins 8 vestal livery virginity; sick and green sickly, bearing the characteristics of greensickness, the virgin's malady 17 spheres orbits

II.i.1-2 Can . . . out Romeo refuses to pass Capulet's house, commanding his body, or "earth" to stop and join its proper soul, or "center" (i.e., Juliet) 11 gossip crony 12 purblind quite blind 13 Abraham Cupid the phrase may mean "ancient youth" or, since abram man was slang for trickster, "rascally Cupid" 14 King . . . maid reference to an old familiar ballad 16 ape is dead Romeo plays dead, like a performing ape 20 demesnes domains 22 And if if 24 circle conjurers worked within a magic circle, but there is also a bawdy innuendo, as in "stand," "laid," "down," and "raise" in lines 25-29 27 spite vexation 28 fair and honest respectable 31 consorted associated; humorous (1) damp (2) moody 36 medlars applelike fruit, eaten when decayed (like "pop'rin" in line 38, the word was often used to refer to sexual organs)

JULIET

'Tis but thy name that is my enemy.
 Thou art thyself, though not^o a Montague.
 What's Montague? It is nor hand, nor foot,
 Nor arm, nor face. O, be some other name
 Belonging to a man.
 What's in a name? That which we call a rose
 By any other word would smell as sweet.
 So Romeo would, were he not Romeo called,
 Retain that dear perfection which he owes^o
 Without that title. Romeo, doff thy name;
 And for thy name, which is no part of thee,
 Take all myself.

ROMEO I take thee at thy word.
 Call me but love, and I'll be new baptized;
 Henceforth I never will be Romeo.

JULIET

What man art thou, that, thus bescreened in night,
 So stumblest on my counsel?

ROMEO By a name
 I know not how to tell thee who I am.
 My name, dear saint, is hateful to myself
 Because it is an enemy to thee.
 Had I it written, I would tear the word.

JULIET

My ears have yet not drunk a hundred words
 Of thy tongue's uttering, yet I know the sound.
 Art thou not Romeo, and a Montague?

ROMEO Neither, fair maid, if either thee dislike.^o

JULIET

How camest thou hither, tell me, and wherefore?
 The orchard walls are high and hard to climb,
 And the place death, considering who thou art,
 If any of my kinsmen find thee here.

ROMEO

With love's light wings did I o'erperch^o these walls;
 For stony limits cannot hold love out,
 And what love can do, that dares love attempt.
 Therefore thy kinsmen are no stop to me.

JULIET

If they do see thee, they will murder thee.

ROMEO

Alack, there lies more peril in thine eye
 Than twenty of their swords! Look thou but sweet,
 And I am proof^o against their enmity.

JULIET

I would not for the world they saw thee here.

ROMEO

I have night's cloak to hide me from their eyes;
 And but^o thou love me, let them find me here.
 My life were better ended by their hate
 Than death proroguèd,^o wanting of thy love.

JULIET

By whose direction found'st thou out this place?

ROMEO

By Love, that first did prompt me to inquire.
 He lent me counsel, and I lent him eyes.
 I am no pilot; yet, wert thou as far

As that vast shore washed with the farthest sea,
 I should adventure^o for such merchandise.

JULIET

40 Thou knowest the mask of night is on my face;
 Else would a maiden blush bepaint my cheek
 For that which thou hast heard me speak tonight.
 Fain would I dwell on form—fain, fain deny
 What I have spoke; but farewell compliment!^o
 45 Dost thou love me? I know thou wilt say "Ay";
 And I will take thy word. Yet, if thou swear'st,
 Thou mayst prove false. At lovers' perjuries,
 They say Jove laughs. O gentle Romeo,
 If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully.
 Or if thou thinkest I am too quickly won,
 50 I'll frown and be perverse and say thee nay,
 So thou wilt woo; but else, not for the world.
 In truth, fair Montague, I am too fond,^o
 And therefore thou mayst think my havior^o light;
 But trust me, gentleman, I'll prove more true
 Than those that have more cunning to be strange.^o
 I should have been more strange, I must confess,
 55 But that thou overheard'st, ere I was ware,
 My true love passion. Therefore pardon me,
 And not impute this yielding to light love,
 Which the dark night hath so discoverèd.^o

ROMEO

60 Lady, by yonder blessèd moon I vow,
 That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops—

JULIET

O, swear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,
 That monthly changes in her circle orb,
 Lest that thy love prove likewise variable.

ROMEO

What shall I swear by?

65 JULIET Do not swear at all;
 Or if thou wilt, swear by thy gracious self,
 Which is the god of my idolatry,
 And I'll believe thee.

ROMEO

If my heart's dear love—

JULIET

70 Well, do not swear. Although I joy in thee,
 I have no joy of this contract tonight.
 It is too rash, too unadvised, too sudden;
 Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be Ere one can say it lightens. Sweet, good night!
 This bud of love, by summer's ripening breath,
 May prove a beauteous flow'r when next we meet.
 Good night, good night! As sweet repose and rest
 Come to thy heart as that within my breast!

75 ROMEO

O, wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?

JULIET

What satisfaction canst thou have tonight?

ROMEO

Th' exchange of thy love's faithful vow for mine.

JULIET

80 I gave thee mine before thou didst request it;
 And yet I would it were to give again.

ROMEO

Wouldst thou withdraw it? For what purpose, love? 130

39 though not even if you were not 46 owes owns 61 dislike displeases 66 o'erperch fly over 73 proof protected 76 but if only 78 proroguèd deferred

84 adventure risk the journey 89 compliment formal courtesy 98 fond (1) affectionate (2) foolishly tender 99 havior behavior 101 strange aloof 106 discoverèd revealed

JULIET
But to be frank^o and give it thee again.
And yet I wish but for the thing I have.
My bounty^o is as boundless as the sea,
My love as deep; the more I give to thee,
The more I have, for both are infinite.
I hear some noise within. Dear love, adieu!
[NURSE calls within.]
Anon, good nurse! Sweet Montague, be true.
Stay but a little, I will come again. [Exit.]
ROMEO
O blessèd, blessèd night! I am afeard,
Being in night, all this is but a dream,
Too flattering-sweet to be substantial.
[Enter JULIET again.]
JULIET
Three words, dear Romeo, and good night indeed.
If that thy bent^o of love be honorable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word tomorrow,
By one that I'll procure to come to thee,
Where and what time thou wilt perform the rite;
And all my fortunes at thy foot I'll lay
And follow thee my lord throughout the world.
[NURSE Within.] Madam!
JULIET
I come anon.—But if thou meanest not well,
I do beseech thee—
[NURSE Within.]
Madam!
JULIET By and by^o I come.—
To cease thy strife^o and leave me to my grief.
Tomorrow will I send.
ROMEO So thrive my soul—
JULIET
A thousand times good night! [Exit.] 155
ROMEO
A thousand times the worse, to want thy light!
Love goes toward love as schoolboys from their books;
But love from love, toward school with heavy looks.
Enter JULIET again.
JULIET
Hist! Romeo, hist! O for a falc'ner's voice
To lure this tassel gentle^o back again!
Bondage is hoarse^o and may not speak aloud,
Else would I tear the cave where Echo lies
And make her airy tongue more hoarse than mine
With repetition of "My Romeo!"
ROMEO
It is my soul that calls upon my name.
How silver-sweet sound lovers' tongues by night,
Like softest music to attending^o ears!
JULIET
Romeo!
ROMEO My sweet?

JULIET What o'clock tomorrow
Shall I send to thee?
ROMEO By the hour of nine.
JULIET
I will not fail. 'Tis twenty years till then. 170
I have forgot why I did call thee back.
ROMEO
Let me stand here till thou remember it.
JULIET
I shall forget, to have thee still stand there,
Rememb'ring how I love thy company.
ROMEO
And I'll still stay, to have thee still forget, 175
Forgetting any other home but this.
JULIET
'Tis almost morning. I would have thee gone—
And yet no farther than a wanton's^o bird,
That lets it hop a little from his hand,
Like a poor prisoner in his twisted gyves,^o 180
And with a silken thread plucks it back again,
So loving-jealous of his liberty.
ROMEO
I would I were thy bird.
JULIET Sweet, so would I.
Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing.
Good night, good night! Parting is such sweet sorrow 185
That I shall say good night till it be morrow.^o [Exit.]
ROMEO
Sleep dwell upon thine eyes, peace in thy breast!
Would I were sleep and peace, so sweet to rest!^o
Hence will I to my ghostly friar's^o close cell,
His help to crave and my dear hap^o to tell. Exit. 190

[Scene III. Friar Lawrence's cell.]

Enter FRIAR [Lawrence] alone, with a basket.

FRIAR
The gray-eyed morn smiles on the frowning night,
Check'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light;
And fleckèd^o darkness like a drunkard reels
From forth day's path and Titan's burning wheels.^o 5
Now, ere the sun advance his burning eye
The day to cheer and night's dank dew to dry,
I must upfill this osier cage^o of ours
With baleful^o weeds and precious-juicèd flowers. 160
The earth that's Nature's mother is her tomb.
What is her burying grave, that is her womb; 10
And from her womb children of divers kind
We sucking on her natural bosom find,
Many for many virtues excellent,
None but for some, and yet all different.

178 wanton's capricious child's 180 gyves fetters 186 morrow morning 188 rest the four lines that follow in the quarto are here deleted because they are virtually identical with the first four lines of the next scene (see A Note on the Text, p. 486); apparently Shakespeare wrote them and then decided to use them at the start of the next scene but forgot to delete their first occurrence 189 ghostly friar's spiritual father's (i.e., confessor's) 190 dear hap good fortune II.iii.3 fleckèd spotted 4 Titan's burning wheels wheels of the sun's chariot 7 osier cage willow basket 8 baleful (1) evil (2) poisonous

131 frank generous 133 bounty capacity for giving 143 bent aim 152 By and by at once 153 strife efforts 160 tassel gentle tercel gentle, male falcon 161 Bondage is hoarse being surrounded by "protectors," I cannot cry loudly 167 attending attentive

O, mickle° is the powerful grace that lies
 In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities;
 For naught so vile that on the earth doth live
 But to the earth some special good doth give;
 Nor aught so good but, strained° from that fair use,
 Revolts from true birth,° stumbling on abuse.
 Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied,
 And vice sometime by action dignified.°

Enter ROMEO.°

Within the infant rind° of this weak flower
 Poison hath residence and medicine° power;
 For this, being smelt, with that part cheers each part;°
 Being tasted, stays all senses with the heart.
 Two such opposèd kings encamp them still°
 In man as well as herbs—grace and rude will;
 And where the worser is predominant,
 Full soon the canker° death eats up that plant.

ROMEO

Good morrow, father.

FRIAR

Benedicite!°

What early tongue so sweet saluteth me?
 Young son, it argues a distemperèd head°
 So soon to bid good morrow to thy bed.
 Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye,
 And where care lodges, sleep will never lie;
 But where unbruised youth with unstuffed° brain
 Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign.
 Therefore thy earliness doth me assure
 Thou art uproused with some distemp'rature;
 Or if not so, then here I hit it right—
 Our Romeo hath not been in bed tonight.

ROMEO

That last is true. The sweeter rest was mine.

FRIAR

God pardon sin! Wast thou with Rosaline?

ROMEO

With Rosaline, my ghostly father? No.
 I have forgot that name and that name's woe.

FRIAR

That's my good son! But where hast thou been then?

ROMEO

I'll tell thee ere thou ask it me again.
 I have been feasting with mine enemy,
 Where on a sudden one hath wounded me
 That's by me wounded. Both our remedies
 Within thy help and holy physic° lies.
 I bear no hatred, blessèd man, for, lo,
 My intercession° likewise steads° my foe.

FRIAR

Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift.°
 Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift.°

15 mickle much 19 strained diverted 20 Revolts . . .
 birth falls away from its real purpose 22 dignified made worthy 22 s.d. Enter Romeo the entry of Romeo at this point, unseen by the Friar, emphasizes the appropriateness of the remaining eight lines of the Friar's speech, not only to the flower but to Romeo 23 infant rind tender bark, skin 24 medicine medicinal 25 For . . . part being smelled, this flower stimulates every part of the body 27 still always 30 canker cankerworm, larva that feeds on leaves 31
 Benedicite Bless you! 33 distemperèd head troubled mind 37 unstuffed untroubled 52 physic medicine 54 intercession entreaty; steads helps 55 homely . . . drift plain in your talk 56 shrift absolution

15

ROMEO

Then plainly know my heart's dear love is set
 On the fair daughter of rich Capulet;
 As mine on hers, so hers is set on mine,
 And all combined,° save what thou must combine
 By holy marriage. When and where and how
 We met, we wooed, and made exchange of vow,
 I'll tell thee as we pass; but this I pray,
 That thou consent to marry us today.

60

FRIAR

Holy Saint Francis! What a change is here!
 Is Rosaline, that thou didst love so dear,
 So soon forsaken? Young men's love then lies
 Not truly in their hearts, but in their eyes.
 Jesu Maria! What a deal of brine
 Hath washed thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline!
 How much salt water thrown away in waste
 To season° love, that of it doth not taste!
 The sun not yet thy signs from heaven clears,
 Thy old groans ring yet in mine ancient ears.
 Lo, here upon thy cheek the stain doth sit
 Of an old tear that is not washed off yet.
 If e'er thou wast thyself, and these woes thine,
 Thou and these woes were all for Rosaline.
 And art thou changed? Pronounce this sentence then:
 Women may fall° when there's no strength° in men.

65

70

75

80

ROMEO

Thou chid'st me oft for loving Rosaline.

FRIAR

For doting, not for loving, pupil mine.

ROMEO

And bad'st me bury love.

FRIAR

Not in a grave

To lay one in, another out to have.

ROMEO

I pray thee chide me not. Her I love now
 Doth grace° for grace and love for love allow.
 The other did not so.

85

FRIAR

O, she knew well

Thy love did read by rote, that could not spell.°
 But come, young waverer, come go with me.
 In one respect° I'll thy assistant be;
 For this alliance may so happy prove
 To turn your households' rancor to pure love.

90

50

ROMEO

O, let us hence! I stand on° sudden haste.

FRIAR

Wisely and slow. They stumble that run fast. Exeunt.

[Scene IV. A street.]

Enter BENVOLIO and MERCUTIO.

MERCUTIO

Where the devil should this Romeo be?
 Came he not home tonight?

BENVOLIO

Not to his father's. I spoke with his man.

60 combined (1) brought into unity (2) settled 72 season (1) preserve (2) flavor 80 may fall may be expected to be fickle; strength constancy 86 grace favor 88 did . . . spell said words without understanding them 90 In one respect with respect to one particular 93 stand on insist on

MERCUTIO

Why, that same pale hardhearted wench, that Rosaline,
Torments him so that he will sure run mad. 5

BENVOLIO

Tybalt, the kinsman to old Capulet,
Hath sent a letter to his father's house.

MERCUTIO A challenge, on my life.

BENVOLIO Romeo will answer it.

MERCUTIO Any man that can write may answer a 10 letter.BENVOLIO Nay, he will answer the letter's master, how he dares, being dared.MERCUTIO Alas, poor Romeo, he is already dead:
stabbed with a white wench's black eye; run through 15
the ear with a love song; the very pin° of his heart cleft with the blind bow-boy's butt-shaft;° and is he a man to encounter Tybalt?

BENVOLIO Why, what is Tybalt?

MERCUTIO More than Prince of Cats.° O, he's the 20 courageous captain of compliments.° He fights as you sing pricksong°—keeps time, distance, and proportion;
he rests his minim rests,° one, two, and the third in your bosom! The very butcher of a silk button,° a duelist, a duelist! A gentleman of the very first house,° 25 of the first and second cause.° Ah, the immortal passado!° The punto reverso!° The hay!°

BENVOLIO The what?

MERCUTIO The pox of such antic, lisping, affecting fantasticoes°—these new tuners of accent! “By Jesu, 30 a very good blade! A very tall° man! A very good whore!” Why, is not this a lamentable thing, grandsir, that we should be thus afflicted with these strange flies, these fashionmongers, these pardon-me's,° who stand so much on the new form° that they cannot sit at ease 35 on the old bench? O, their bones,° their bones!

Enter ROMEO.

BENVOLIO Here comes Romeo! Here comes Romeo!

MERCUTIO Without his roe,° like a dried herring. O flesh, flesh, how art thou fishified! Now is he for the numbers° that Petrarch flowed in. Laura,° to his 40 lady, was a kitchen wench (marry, she had a better love to berhyme her), Dido° a dowdy,° Cleopatra a gypsy,° Helen and Hero° hildings° and harlots, Thisbe°

II.iv.16 pin center (of a target) 17 blind bow-boy's butt-shaft Cupid's blunt arrow 20 Prince of Cats Tybalt's name, or some variant of it, was given to the cat in medieval stories of Reynard the Fox 21 compliments formal courtesies 22 sing pricksong (1) sing from a text (2) sing with attention to accuracy 23 he . . . rests he scrupulously observes every formality (literally, “he observes even the shortest rests in the notation”) 24 button on his opponent's shirt 25 first house first rank 26 first . . . cause dueling terms, meaning formal grounds for taking offense and giving a challenge 27 pasado lunge; punto reverso backhanded stroke; hay home thrust (Italian hai) 30 fantasticoes fops 31 tall brave 34 pardon-me's persons who affect foreign phrases (cf. Italian perdona mi) 35 form (1) fashion (2) bench 36 bones pun on French bon 38 Without his roe (1) emaciated like a fish that has spawned or (2) stripped of “Ro,” leaving only “me-o” (a sigh) 40 numbers verses; Laura Petrarch's beloved 42 Dido Queen of Carthage, enamored of Aeneas; dowdy a drab woman 43 gypsy a deceitful woman (gypsies were commonly believed to be Egyptians); Helen and Hero beloved respectively of Paris and Leander; hildings good-for-nothings; Thisbe beloved of Pyramus in a story analogous to that of Romeo and Juliet a gray eye° or so, but not to the purpose. Signior Romeo, bonjour! There's a French salutation to your French slop.° You gave us the counterfeit fairly last night. 45

ROMEO Good morrow to you both. What counterfeit did I give you?MERCUTIO The slip,° sir, the slip. Can you not con- 50 ceive?ROMEO Pardon, good Mercutio. My business was great, and in such a case as mine a man may strain courtesy.MERCUTIO That's as much as to say, such a case° as 55
yours constrains a man to bow in the hams.

ROMEO Meaning, to curtsy.

MERCUTIO Thou hast most kindly hit° it.

ROMEO A most courteous exposition.

MERCUTIO Nay, I am the very pink° of courtesy. 60

ROMEO Pink for flower.

MERCUTIO Right.

ROMEO Why, then is my pump° well-flowered.°

MERCUTIO Sure wit, follow me this jest now till thou hast worn out thy pump, that, when the single sole 65 of it is worn, the jest may remain, after the wearing, solely singular.°ROMEO O single-soled jest, solely singular for the singleness!MERCUTIO Come between us, good Benvolio! My 70 wits faint.ROMEO Swits° and spurs, swits and spurs; or I'll cry a match.°MERCUTIO Nay, if our wits run the wild-goose chase,° I am done; for thou hast more of the wild 75 goose in one of thy wits than, I am sure, I have in my whole five. Was I with you there for the goose?°ROMEO Thou wast never with me for anything when thou wast not there for the goose.°

MERCUTIO I will bite thee by the ear for that jest. 80

ROMEO Nay, good goose, bite not!°

MERCUTIO Thy wit is a very bitter sweeting;° it is a most sharp sauce.ROMEO And is it not, then, well served in to a sweet goose?° 85MERCUTIO O, here's a wit of cheveril,° that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad!°ROMEO I stretch it out for that word “broad,” which, added to the goose, proves thee far and wide a broad° goose. 90

MERCUTIO Why, is not this better now than groaning

44 gray eye gleam in the eye 46 slop loose breeches 50 slip (1) escape (2) counterfeit coin 55 case (1) situation (2) physical condition 58 most kindly hit most politely interpreted 60 pink perfection; but Romeo proceeds to exploit two other meanings: (1) flower (2) punches in an ornamental design 63 pump shoe; well-flowered ornamented with pinking (with pun on floored) 67 solely singular (1) single-soled (i.e., weak) (2) uniquely remarkable (literally, “uniquely unique”) 72 Swits switches 72–73 cry a match claim a victory 74–75 wild-goose chase cross-country game of “follow the leader” on horseback 77 goose end of the chase (i.e., end of the punning match) 79 goose prostitute 81 good . . . not proverbial for “Spare me!” 82 bitter sweeting tart kind of apple 84–85 sweet goose tender goose (here probably referring to Mercutio; but the expression “Sour sauce for sweet meat” was proverbial) 86 cheveril kid leather, easily stretched 87 ell broad forty-five inches wide 89 broad indecent (?)

for love? Now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo; now art thou what thou art, by art as well as by nature. For this driveling love is like a great natural^o that runs lolling^o up and down to hide his 95 bauble^o in a hole.

BENVOLIO Stop there, stop there!

MERCUTIO Thou desirest me to stop in my tale against the hair.^o

BENVOLIO Thou wouldst else have made thy tale 100 large.^o

MERCUTIO O, thou art deceived! I would have made it short; for I was come to the whole depth of my tale, and meant indeed to occupy the argument^o no longer. 105

ROMEO Here's goodly gear!^o

Enter NURSE and her man [PETER].

A sail, a sail!

MERCUTIO Two, two! A shirt and a smock.^o

NURSE Peter!

PETER Anon. 110

NURSE My fan, Peter.

MERCUTIO Good Peter, to hide her face; for her fan's the fairer face.

NURSE God ye good morrow, gentlemen.

MERCUTIO God ye good-den,^o fair gentlewoman. 115

NURSE Is it good-den?

MERCUTIO 'Tis no less, I tell ye; for the bawdy hand of the dial is now upon the prick^o of noon.

NURSE Out upon you! What a man are you!

ROMEO One, gentlewoman, that God hath made, 120 himself to mar.

NURSE By my troth, it is well said. "For himself to mar," quoth 'a?^o Gentlemen, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

ROMEO I can tell you; but young Romeo will be 125 older when you have found him than he was when you sought him. I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worse.^o

NURSE You say well.

MERCUTIO Yea, is the worst well? Very well took,^o 130 i' faith! Wisely, wisely.

NURSE If you be he, sir, I desire some confidence^o with you.

BENVOLIO She will endite^o him to some supper.

MERCUTIO A bawd, a bawd, a bawd! So ho!^o 135

ROMEO What hast thou found?

MERCUTIO No hare,^o sir; unless a hare, sir, in a lenten pie,^o that is something stale and hoar^o ere it be spent.

[He walks by them and sings.]

An old hare hoar, 140
And an old hare hoar,
Is very good meat in Lent;
But a hare that is hoar
Is too much for a score
When it hoars ere it be spent. 145

Romeo, will you come to your father's? We'll to dinner thither.

ROMEO I will follow you.

MERCUTIO Farewell, ancient lady. Farewell, [singing] 150
"Lady, lady, lady."^o Exeunt [MERCUTIO, BENVOLIO].

NURSE I pray you, sir, what saucy merchant was this that was so full of his ropery?^o

ROMEO A gentleman, nurse, that loves to hear himself talk and will speak more in a minute than he will stand to in a month. 155

NURSE And 'a speak anything against me, I'll take him down, and 'a were lustier than he is, and twenty such Jacks; and if I cannot, I'll find those that shall. Scurvy knave! I am none of his flirt-gills;^o I am none of his skainsmates.^o And thou must stand by too, and 160 suffer every knave to use me at his pleasure!

PETER I saw no man use you at his pleasure. If I had, my weapon should quickly have been out, I warrant you. I dare draw as soon as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrel, and the law on my side. 165

NURSE Now, afore God, I am so vexed that every part about me quivers. Scurvy knave! Pray you, sir, a word; and, as I told you, my young lady bid me inquire you out. What she bid me say, I will keep to myself; but first let me tell ye, if ye should lead 170 her in a fool's paradise,^o as they say, it were a very gross kind of behavior, as they say; for the gentlewoman is young; and therefore, if you should deal double with her, truly it were an ill thing to be off' red to any gentlewoman, and very weak^o dealing. 175

ROMEO Nurse, commend me to thy lady and mistress. I protest unto thee—

NURSE Good heart, and i' faith I will tell her as much. Lord, Lord, she will be a joyful woman.

ROMEO What wilt thou tell her, nurse? Thou dost not 180 mark me.

NURSE I will tell her, sir, that you do protest, which, as I take it, is a gentlemanlike offer.

ROMEO

Bid her devise
Some means to come to shrift this afternoon; 185
And there she shall at Friar Lawrence' cell
Be shrived and married. Here is for thy pains.

NURSE No, truly, sir; not a penny.

ROMEO Go to! I say you shall.

NURSE This afternoon, sir? Well, she shall be there. 190

ROMEO

And stay, good nurse, behind the abbey wall.
Within this hour my man shall be with thee
And bring thee cords made like a tackled stair,^o

95 natural idiot; lolling with tongue hanging out 96 bauble trinket (with ribald innuendo) 99 against the hair against my inclination 101 large indecent 104 occupy the argument discuss the matter 106 gear stuff 108 shirt . . . smock a man and a woman 115 good-den good evening (i.e., afternoon) 118 prick point on the dial of a clock (with bawdy innuendo) 123 quoth 'a indeed (literally, "said he") 127-28 for . . . worse mock-modestly parodying "for want of a better" 130 took understood 132 confidence conference (possibly a malapropism) 134 endite invite (Benvolio's intentional malapropism?) 135 So ho cry on sighting a quarry 137 hare prostitute 138 lenten pie rabbit pie (eaten sparingly and hence stale); hoar grayhaired, moldy (wordplay on hare and whore)

150 Lady, lady, lady ballad refrain from "Chaste Susanna" 152 ropery rascally talk 159 flirt-gills flirting wenches 160 skainsmates harlots (?) daggers' mates (i.e., outlaws' mates) 171 fool's paradise seduction 175 weak unmanly, unscrupulous 193 tackled stair rope ladder

Which to the high topgallant° of my joy
Must be my convoy° in the secret night.
Farewell. Be trusty, and I'll quit° thy pains.
Farewell. Commend me to thy mistress.

NURSE

Now God in heaven bless thee! Hark you, sir.

ROMEO

What say'st thou, my dear nurse?

NURSE

Is your man secret? Did you ne'er hear say,
Two may keep counsel, putting one away?

ROMEO

Warrant thee my man's as true as steel.

NURSE Well, sir, my mistress is the sweetest lady.

Lord, Lord! When 'twas a little prating thing—O, there is a nobleman in town, one Paris, that would fain 205 lay knife aboard;° but she, good soul, had as lieve° see a toad, a very toad, as see him. I anger her sometimes, and tell her that Paris is the properer man; but I'll warrant you, when I say so, she looks as pale as any clout° in the versal world.° Doth not rosemary and 210
Romeo begin both with a letter?

ROMEO Ay, nurse; what of that? Both with an R.

NURSE Ah, mocker! That's the dog's name.° R is for the—no; I know it begins with some other letter; and she hath the prettiest sententious° of it, of you and 215 rosemary, that it would do you good to hear it.

ROMEO Commend me to thy lady.

NURSE Ay, a thousand times. [Exit ROMEO.] Peter!

PETER Anon.

NURSE Before, and apace. Exit [after PETER]. 220

[Scene V. Capulet's orchard.]

Enter JULIET.

JULIET

The clock struck nine when I did send the nurse;
In half an hour she promised to return.

Perchance she cannot meet him. That's not so.

O, she is lame! Love's heralds should be thoughts,
Which ten times faster glides than the sun's beams 5
Driving back shadows over low'ring hills.

Therefore do nimble-pinioned doves° draw Love,
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.

Now is the sun upon the highmost hill

Of this day's journey, and from nine till twelve 10
Is three long hours; yet she is not come.

Had she affections and warm youthful blood,
She would be as swift in motion as a ball;

My words would bandy her° to my sweet love,
And his to me. 15

But old folks, many feign as they were dead°—
Unwieldy, slow, heavy, and pale as lead.

Enter NURSE [and PETER].

194 topgallant summit (mast above the topmast) 195 convoy conveyance 196 quit reward 206 lay knife aboard take a slice; had as lieve would rather 210 clout cloth; versal world universe 213 dog's name the R sound suggests a dog's growl 215 sententious sentences, pithy sayings

II.v.7 nimble-pinioned doves swift-winged doves (sacred to Venus) 14 bandy her speed her 16 old . . . dead many old people move about as if they were almost dead

O God, she comes! O honey nurse, what news?

195 Hast thou met with him? Send thy man away.

NURSE

Peter, stay at the gate.

[Exit PETER.] 20

JULIET

Now, good sweet nurse—O Lord, why lookest thou sad?

Though news be sad, yet tell them merrily;

If good, thou shamest the music of sweet news

200 By playing it to me with so sour a face.

NURSE

I am aweary, give me leave awhile. 25

Fie, how my bones ache! What a jaunce° have I!

JULIET

I would thou hadst my bones, and I thy news.

Nay, come, I pray thee speak. Good, good nurse, speak.

NURSE

Jesu, what haste! Can you not stay° awhile?

Do you not see that I am out of breath? 30

JULIET

How art thou out of breath when thou hast breath

To say to me that thou art out of breath?

The excuse that thou dost make in this delay

Is longer than the tale thou dost excuse.

Is thy news good or bad? Answer to that. 35

Say either, and I'll stay the circumstance.°

Let me be satisfied, is't good or bad?

NURSE Well, you have made a simple° choice; you know not how to choose a man. Romeo? No, not

he. Though his face be better than any man's, yet 40 his leg excels all men's; and for a hand and a foot, and a body, though they be not to be talked on, yet they are past compare. He is not the flower of courtesy, but, I'll warrant him, as gentle as a lamb.

Go thy ways, wench; serve God. What, have you 45 dined at home?

JULIET

No, no. But all this did I know before.

What says he of our marriage? What of that?

NURSE

Lord, how my head aches! What a head have I!

It beats as it would fall in twenty pieces. 50

My back a° t' other side—ah, my back, my back!

Beshrew° your heart for sending me about

To catch my death with jauncing up and down!

10

JULIET

I' faith, I am sorry that thou art not well.

Sweet, sweet, sweet nurse, tell me, what says my love? 55

NURSE Your love says, like an honest gentleman, and a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome, and, I warrant, a virtuous—where is your mother?

JULIET

Where is my mother? Why, she is within.

Where should she be? How oddly thou repliest! 60

“Your love says, like an honest gentleman,

“Where is your mother?” ”

NURSE

O God's Lady dear!

26 jaunce jaunt, fatiguing walk 29 stay wait 36 stay the circumstance wait for the details 38 simple foolish 51 a on 52 Beshrew curse (in the sense of “shame on”)

Are you so hot?° Marry come up, I trow.°
Is this the poultice for my aching bones?
Henceforward do your messages yourself.

JULIET
Here's such a coil!° Come, what says Romeo?

NURSE
Have you got leave to go to shrift today?

JULIET
I have.

NURSE
Then hie you hence to Friar Lawrence' cell;
There stays a husband to make you a wife.
Now comes the wanton blood up in your cheeks:
They'll be in scarlet straight° at any news.
Hie you to church; I must another way,
To fetch a ladder, by the which your love
Must climb a bird's nest soon when it is dark.
I am the drudge, and toil in your delight;
But you shall bear the burden soon at night.
Go; I'll to dinner; hie you to the cell.

JULIET
Hie to high fortune! Honest nurse, farewell. Exeunt.

[Scene VI. Friar Lawrence's cell.]

Enter FRIAR [Lawrence] and ROMEO.

FRIAR
So smile the heavens upon this holy act
That afterhours with sorrow chide us not!

ROMEO
Amen, amen! But come what sorrow can,
It cannot countervail° the exchange of joy
That one short minute gives me in her sight.
Do thou but close our hands with holy words,
Then love-devouring death do what he dare—
It is enough I may but call her mine.

FRIAR
These violent delights have violent ends
And in their triumph die, like fire and powder,
Which, as they kiss, consume. The sweetest honey
Is loathsome in his own deliciousness
And in the taste confounds° the appetite.
Therefore love moderately: long love doth so;
Too swift arrives as tardy as too slow.

Enter JULIET.

Here comes the lady. O, so light a foot
Will ne'er wear out the everlasting flint.°
A lover may bestride the gossamers°
That idles in the wanton° summer air,
And yet not fall; so light is vanity.°

JULIET
Good even to my ghostly confessor.

FRIAR
Romeo shall thank thee, daughter, for us both.

63 hot angry; Marry . . . trow Indeed, come now, by the Virgin 66 coil disturbance 72 straight straightway II.vi.4 countervail equal 13 confounds destroys 17 Will . . . flint Juliet's feet are lighter than waterdrops, which are proverbially said to wear away stones 18 gossamers spiders' webs 19 wanton capricious 20 vanity a transitory thing (an earthly lover and his love)

JULIET
As much to him,° else is his thanks too much.

65 ROMEO
Ah, Juliet, if the measure of thy joy
Be heaped like mine, and that thy skill be more 25
To blazon it,° then sweeten with thy breath
This neighbor air, and let rich music's tongue
Unfold the imagined happiness that both
Receive in either by this dear encounter.

JULIET
Conceit, more rich in matter than in words, 30
Braggs of his substance, not of ornament.°
They are but beggars that can count their worth;
But my true love is grown to such excess
I cannot sum up sum of half my wealth.

FRIAR
Come, come with me, and we will make short work; 35
For, by your leaves, you shall not stay alone
Till holy church incorporate two in one. [Exeunt.]

[A C T I I I]

[Scene I. A public place.]

Enter MERCUTIO, BENVOLIO, and MEN.

BENVOLIO
I pray thee, good Mercutio, let's retire.
The day is hot, the Capels are abroad,
And, if we meet, we shall not 'scape a brawl,
5 For now, these hot days, is the mad blood stirring.

MERCUTIO Thou art like one of these fellows that, 5 when he enters the confines of a tavern, claps me his sword upon the table and says, "God send me no need of thee!" and by the operation of the second cup draws him on the drawer,° when indeed there is no 10 need. 10

BENVOLIO Am I like such a fellow?

MERCUTIO Come, come, thou art as hot a Jack in thy mood as any in Italy; and as soon moved to be moody,° and as soon moody to be moved.°

15 BENVOLIO And what to? 15

MERCUTIO Nay, and there were two such, we should have none shortly, for one would kill the other.
Thou! Why, thou wilt quarrel with a man that hath a hair more or a hair less in his beard than thou hast.
Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, 20
having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes. What eye but such an eye would spy out such a quarrel? Thy head is as full of quarrels as an egg is full of meat; and yet thy head hath been beaten as addle as an egg for quarreling. Thou hast quarreled 25 with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun.

23 As . . . him the same greeting to Romeo 25-26 thy . . .
it you are better able to, set it forth 30-31 Conceit . . .
ornament True understanding is its own proud manifestation and does not need words

III.i.9 draws . . . drawer draws his sword on the waiter 13
moody angry 14 moody . . . moved quick-tempered

Didst thou not fall out with a tailor for wearing his new doublet° before Easter? With another for tying his new shoes with old riband?° And yet thou wilt tutor me from quarreling!

BENVOLIO And I were so apt to quarrel as thou art, any man should buy the fee simple° of my life for an hour and a quarter.°

MERCUTIO The fee simple? O simple!° 35

Enter TYBALT, PETRUCHIO,° and others.

BENVOLIO By my head, here comes the Capulets.

MERCUTIO By my heel, I care not.

TYBALT Follow me close, for I will speak to them.
Gentlemen, good-den.° A word with one of you.

MERCUTIO And but one word with one of us? 40

Couple it with something; make it a word and a blow.

TYBALT You shall find me apt enough to that, sir, and you will give me occasion.

MERCUTIO Could you not take some occasion without giving? 45

TYBALT Mercutio, thou consortest with Romeo.

MERCUTIO Consort?° What, dost thou make us minstrels? And thou make minstrels of us, look to hear nothing but discords. Here's my fiddlestick;° here's that shall make you dance. Zounds,° consort! 50

BENVOLIO We talk here in the public haunt of men.
Either withdraw unto some private place,
Or reason coldly of your grievances,
Or else depart. Here all eyes gaze on us.

MERCUTIO Men's eyes were made to look, and let them gaze. 55
I will not budge for no man's pleasure, I.

Enter ROMEO.

TYBALT Well, peace be with you, sir. Here comes my man.°

MERCUTIO But I'll be hanged, sir, if he wear your livery.°
Marry, go before to field,° he'll be your follower!
Your worship in that sense may call him man. 60

TYBALT Romeo, the love I bear thee can afford
No better term than this: thou art a villain.°

ROMEO Tybalt, the reason that I have to love thee
Doth much excuse the appertaining° rage
To such a greeting. Villain am I none. 65
Therefore farewell. I see thou knowest me not.

TYBALT Boy, this shall not excuse the injuries
That thou hast done me; therefore turn and draw.

29 doublet jacket 30 riband ribbon 33 fee simple absolute possession 33-34 for . . . quarter i.e., the life expectancy of one with Mercutio's penchant for quarreling 35 O simple O stupid 35 s.d. Petruchio in I.v he is one of Capulet's guests, but has no lines 39 good-den good evening (i.e., afternoon) 47 Consort (1) to keep company with (2) company of musicians 49 fiddlestick sword 50 Zounds by God's wounds 57 man Mercutio takes this to mean "manservant" 58 livery servant's uniform 59 field dueling field 62 villain low fellow 64 appertaining appropriate

ROMEO

I do protest I never injured thee,
But love thee better than thou canst devise° 70
Till thou shalt know the reason of my love;
And so, good Capulet, which name I tender°
As dearly as mine own, be satisfied.

MERCUTIO

O calm, dishonorable, vile submission!
Alla stoccata° carries it away. 75

[Draws.]

Tybalt, you ratcatcher, will you walk?°

TYBALT

What wouldst thou have with me?

MERCUTIO Good King of Cats, nothing but one of your nine lives. That I mean to make bold withal,° and, as you shall use me hereafter, dry-beat° the rest of 80 the eight. Will you pluck your sword out of his pilcher° by the ears? Make haste, lest mine be about your ears ere it be out.

TYBALT I am for you.

[Draws.]

ROMEO

Gentle Mercutio, put thy rapier up. 85

MERCUTIO Come, sir, your passado!°

[They fight.]

ROMEO

Draw, Benvolio; beat down their weapons.
Gentlemen, for shame! Forbear this outrage!
Tybalt, Mercutio, the prince expressly hath Forbid this bandying° in Verona streets. 90
Hold, Tybalt! Good Mercutio!

[*TYBALT under Romeo's arm thrusts
MERCUTIO in, and flies.*]

MERCUTIO

I am hurt.

A plague a° both houses! I am sped.°
Is he gone and hath nothing?

BENVOLIO

What, art thou hurt?

MERCUTIO

Ay, ay, a scratch, a scratch. Marry, 'tis enough. 95
Where is my page? Go, villain, fetch a surgeon.
[Exit PAGE.]

ROMEO

Courage, man. The hurt cannot be much.

MERCUTIO No, 'tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church door; but 'tis enough, 'twill serve. Ask for me tomorrow, and you shall find me a grave° 100 man. I am peppered,° I warrant, for this world. A plague a both your houses! Zounds, a dog, a rat, a mouse, a cat, to scratch a man to death! A braggart, a rogue, a villain, that fights by the book of arithmetic!° Why the devil came you between us? I was hurt under your arm. 105

70 devise imagine 72 tender value 75 Alla stoccata a term in fencing ("at the thrust") which Mercutio uses contemptuously as a nickname for Tybalt 76 walk step aside 79 make bold withal make bold with; take 80 dry-beat thrash 82 pilcher scabbard 86 passado lunge 90 bandying brawling 92 a on; sped wounded 99 grave (1) extremely serious (2) ready for the grave 100 am peppered have been given a deathblow 103 by . . . arithmetic by formal rules

ROMEO

I thought all for the best.

MERCUTIO

Help me into some house, Benvolio,
Or I shall faint. A plague a both your houses!
They have made worms' meat of me. I have it,^o
And soundly too. Your houses!

110

Exit [MERCUTIO and BENVOLIO].

ROMEO

This gentleman, the prince's near ally,^o
My very^o friend, hath got this mortal hurt
In my behalf—my reputation stained
With Tybalt's slander—Tybalt, that an hour
Hath been my cousin. O sweet Juliet,
Thy beauty hath made me effeminate
And in my temper soft'ned valor's steel!^o

Enter BENVOLIO.

BENVOLIO

O Romeo, Romeo, brave Mercutio is dead!
That gallant spirit hath aspired^o the clouds,
Which too untimely here did scorn the earth.

120

ROMEO

This day's black fate on moe^o days doth depend;^o
This but begins the woe others must end.

[Enter TYBALT.]

BENVOLIO

Here comes the furious Tybalt back again.

ROMEO

Alive in triumph, and Mercutio slain?
Away to heaven respective lenity,^o
And fire-eyed fury be my conduct^o now!
Now, Tybalt, take the "villain" back again
That late thou gavest me; for Mercutio's soul
Is but a little way above our heads,
Staying for thine to keep him company.
Either thou or I, or both, must go with him.

125

TYBALT

Thou, wretched boy, that didst consort him here,
Shalt with him hence.

ROMEO

This shall determine that.

They fight. TYBALT falls.

BENVOLIO

Romeo, away, be gone!
The citizens are up, and Tybalt slain.
Stand not amazed. The prince will doom thee death
If thou art taken. Hence, be gone, away!

135

ROMEO

O, I am fortune's fool!^o

BENVOLIO

Why dost thou stay?

Exit ROMEO.Enter CITIZENS.

CITIZEN

Which way ran he that killed Mercutio?
Tybalt, that murderer, which way ran he?

140

BENVOLIO

There lies that Tybalt.

CITIZEN

Up, sir, go with me.

I charge thee in the prince's name obey.

Enter PRINCE, old MONTAGUE, CAPULET, their WIVES, and all.

PRINCE

Where are the vile beginners of this fray?

BENVOLIO

O noble prince, I can discover^o all
The unlucky manage^o of this fatal brawl.
There lies the man, slain by young Romeo,
That slew thy kinsman, brave Mercutio.

145

115

LADY CAPULET

Tybalt, my cousin! O my brother's child!
O prince! O cousin! Husband! O, the blood is spilled
Of my dear kinsman! Prince, as thou art true,
For blood of ours shed blood of Montague.
O cousin, cousin!

150

PRINCE

Benvolio, who began this bloody fray?

120

BENVOLIO

Tybalt, here slain, whom Romeo's hand did slay.
Romeo, that spoke him fair, bid him bethink
How nice^o the quarrel was, and urged^o withal
Your high displeasure. All this—utterèd
With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bowed—
Could not take truce with the unruly spleen^o
Of Tybalt deaf to peace, but that he tilts^o
With piercing steel at bold Mercutio's breast;
Who, all as hot, turns deadly point to point,
And, with a martial scorn, with one hand beats
Cold death aside and with the other sends
It back to Tybalt, whose dexterity
Retorts it. Romeo he cries aloud,
"Hold, friends! Friends, part!" and swifter than his tongue,

155

160

165

130

His agile arm beats down their fatal points,
And 'twixt them rushes; underneath whose arm
An envious^o thrust from Tybalt hit the life
Of stout Mercutio, and then Tybalt fled;
But by and by comes back to Romeo,
Who had but newly entertained^o revenge,
And to't they go like lightning; for, ere I
Could draw to part them, was stout Tybalt slain;
And, as he fell, did Romeo turn and fly.
This is the truth, or let Benvolio die.

170

175

LADY CAPULET

He is a kinsman to the Montague;
Affection makes him false, he speaks not true.
Some twenty of them fought in this black strife,
And all those twenty could but kill one life.
I beg for justice, which thou, prince, must give.
Romeo slew Tybalt; Romeo must not live.

180

PRINCE

Romeo slew him; he slew Mercutio.

Who now the price of his dear blood doth owe?

185

CAPULET

Not Romeo, prince; he was Mercutio's friend;

144 discover reveal 145 manage course 156 nice trivial; urged mentioned 159 spleen ill nature 160 tilts thrusts 170
envious full of enmity 173 entertained contemplated

109 I have it I have received my deathblow 111 ally relative 112 very true 117 in . . . steel softened the valorous part of my character 119 aspired climbed to 121 moe more; depend hang over 125 respective lenity discriminating mercifulness 126 conduct guide 138 fool plaything, dupe

His fault concludes but what the law should end,
The life of Tybalt.

PRINCE And for that offense
Immediately we do exile him hence.
I have an interest in your hate's proceeding,
My blood^o for your rude brawls doth lie a-bleeding;
But I'll amerce^o you with so strong a fine
That you shall all repent the loss of mine.
I will be deaf to pleading and excuses;
Nor tears nor prayers shall purchase out abuses.
Therefore use none. Let Romeo hence in haste,
Else, when he is found, that hour is his last.
Bear hence this body and attend our will.^o
Mercy but murders, pardoning those that kill.
Exit [with others].

[Scene II. Capulet's orchard.]

Enter JULIET alone.

JULIET
Gallop apace, you fiery-footed steeds,^o
Towards Phoebus' lodging!^o Such a wagoner
As Phaëthon^o would whip you to the west
And bring in cloudy night immediately.
Spread thy close curtain, love-performing night,
That runaways^o eyes may wink,^o and Romeo
Leap to these arms untalked of and unseen.
Lovers can see to do their amorous rites,
And by their own beauties; or, if love be blind,
It best agrees with night. Come, civil night,
Thou sober-suited matron all in black,
And learn me how to lose a winning match,
Played for a pair of stainless maidenhoods.
Hood^o my unmanned^o blood, bating^o in my cheeks,
With thy black mantle till strange^o love grow bold,
Think true love acted simple modesty.
Come, night; come, Romeo; come, thou day in
night;
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night
Whiter than new snow upon a raven's back.
Come, gentle night; come, loving, black-browed
night;
Give me my Romeo; and, when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine
That all the world will be in love with night
And pay no worship to the garish sun.
O, I have bought the mansion of a love,
But not possessed it; and though I am sold,
Not yet enjoyed. So tedious is this day
As is the night before some festival
To an impatient child that hath new robes
And may not wear them. O, here comes my nurse,

Enter NURSE, with cords.

And she brings news; and every tongue that speaks
But Romeo's name speaks heavenly eloquence.
Now, nurse, what news? What hast thou there, the cords

190 That Romeo bid thee fetch?

NURSE Ay, ay, the cords. 35

JULIET

Ay me! What news? Why dost thou wring thy hands?

195 NURSE

Ah, weraday!^o He's dead, he's dead, he's dead!
We are undone, lady, we are undone!
Alack the day! He's gone, he's killed, he's dead!

JULIET

Can heaven be so envious?

NURSE

Romeo can, 40
Though heaven cannot. O Romeo, Romeo!
Who ever would have thought it? Romeo!

JULIET

What devil art thou that dost torment me thus?
This torture should be roared in dismal hell.

Hath Romeo slain himself? Say thou but "Ay," 45

And that bare vowel "I" shall poison more
Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice.^o

I am not I, if there be such an "Ay,"^o

5 Or those eyes' shot^o that makes thee answer "Ay."

If he be slain, say "Ay"; or if not, "No." 50

Brief sounds determine of my weal or woe.

NURSE

I saw the wound, I saw it with mine eyes,
(God save the mark!^o) here on his manly breast.

10 A piteous corse,^o a bloody piteous corse;

Pale, pale as ashes, all bedaubed in blood,

All in gore-blood. I sounded^o at the sight. 55

JULIET

O, break, my heart! Poor bankrout,^o break at once!

To prison, eyes; ne'er look on liberty!

Vile earth,^o to earth resign;^o end motion here,

And thou and Romeo press one heavy bier! 60

NURSE

O Tybalt, Tybalt, the best friend I had!

O courteous Tybalt! Honest gentleman!

20 That ever I should live to see thee dead!

JULIET

What storm is this that blows so contrary?

Is Romeo slaught' red, and is Tybalt dead? 65

My dearest cousin, and my dearer lord?

25 Then, dreadful trumpet, sound the general doom!^o

For who is living, if those two are gone?

NURSE

Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banishèd;

Romeo that killed him, he is banishèd. 70

30 JULIET

O God! Did Romeo's hand shed Tybalt's blood?

NURSE

It did, it did! Alas the day, it did!

191 My blood Mercutio was the Prince's relative 192 amerce punish by fine 198 attend our will respect my decision
III.ii.1 fiery-footed steeds horses of the sun god, Phoebus
2 Towards Phoebus' lodging beneath the horizon 3 Phaëthon Phoebus' son, who mismanaged the horses and let them run away 6 runaways' of the horses (?); wink shut 14 Hood cover with a hood, as in falconry; unmanned (1) untamed (2) unmated; bating fluttering 15 strange unfamiliar

37 weraday welladay, alas 47 cockatrice basilisk (a serpent fabled to have a killing glance) 48 Ay (1) I (2) eye 49 eyes' shot the Nurse's glance 53 God . . . mark God avert the bad omen 54 corse corpse 56 sounded swooned 57 bankrout bankrupt 59 Vile earth referring to her own body; resign return 67 dreadful . . . doom sound the trumpet of doomsday

JULIET

O serpent heart, hid with a flow'ring face!
 Did ever dragon keep so fair a cave?
 Beautiful tyrant! Fiend angelical!
 Dove-feathered raven! Wolvish-ravens lamb!
 Despisèd substance of divinest show!
 Just opposite to what thou justly seem'st—
 A damnèd saint, an honorable villain!
 O nature, what hadst thou to do in hell
 When thou didst bower the spirit of a fiend
 In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh?
 Was ever book containing such vile matter
 So fairly bound? O, that deceit should dwell
 In such a gorgeous palace!

NURSE

There's no trust,
 No faith, no honesty in men; all perjured,
 All forsworn, all naught, all dissemblers.
 Ah, where's my man? Give me some aqua vitae.^o
 These griefs, these woes, these sorrows make me old.
 Shame come to Romeo!

JULIET

Blistered be thy tongue
 For such a wish! He was not born to shame.
 Upon his brow shame is ashamed to sit;
 For 'tis a throne where honor may be crowned
 Sole monarch of the universal earth.
 O, what a beast was I to chide at him!

NURSE

Will you speak well of him that killed your cousin?

JULIET

Shall I speak ill of him that is my husband?
 Ah, poor my lord, what tongue shall smooth thy name
 When I, thy three-hours wife, have mangled it?
 But wherefore, villain, didst thou kill my cousin?
 That villain cousin would have killed my husband.
 Back, foolish tears, back to your native spring!
 Your tributary^o drops belong to woe,
 Which you, mistaking, offer up to joy.
 My husband lives, that Tybalt would have slain;
 And Tybalt's dead, that would have slain my husband.
 All this is comfort; wherefore weep I then?
 Some word there was, worser than Tybalt's death,
 That murd'ered me. I would forget it fain;
 But O, it presses to my memory
 Like damnèd guilty deeds to sinners' minds!
 "Tybalt is dead, and Romeo—banishèd."
 That "banishèd," that one word "banishèd,"
 Hath slain ten thousand Tybalts. Tybalt's death
 Was woe enough, if it had ended there;
 Or, if sour woe delights in fellowship
 And needly will be ranked with^o other griefs,
 Why followed not, when she said "Tybalt's dead,"
 Thy father, or thy mother, nay, or both,
 Which modern^o lamentation might have moved?
 But with a rearward^o following Tybalt's death,
 "Romeo is banishèd"—to speak that word
 Is father, mother, Tybalt, Romeo, Juliet,
 All slain, all dead. "Romeo is banishèd"—
 There is no end, no limit, measure, bound,

In that word's death; no words can that woe sound.
 Where is my father and my mother, nurse?

NURSE

75 Weeping and wailing over Tybalt's corse.
 Will you go to them? I will bring you thither.

JULIET

Wash they his wounds with tears? Mine shall be spent, 130
 When theirs are dry, for Romeo's banishment.
 80 Take up those cords. Poor ropes, you are beguiled,
 Both you and I, for Romeo is exiled.
 He made you for a highway to my bed;
 But I, a maid, die maiden-widowèd. 135
 Come, cords; come, nurse. I'll to my wedding bed;
 And death, not Romeo, take my maidenhead!

NURSE

Hie to your chamber. I'll find Romeo
 To comfort you. I wot^o well where he is.
 Hark ye, your Romeo will be here at night. 140
 I'll to him; he is hid at Lawrence's cell.

JULIET

90 O, find him! Give this ring to my true knight
 And bid him come to take his last farewell.
Exit [with NURSE].

95

[Scene III. Friar Lawrence's cell.]

Enter FRIAR [Lawrence].

FRIAR

Romeo, come forth; come forth, thou fearful^o man.
 Affliction is enamored of thy parts,^o
 And thou art wedded to calamity.

100

[Enter ROMEO.]

ROMEO

Father, what news? What is the prince's doom?^o
 What sorrow craves acquaintance at my hand 5
 That I yet know not?

105

FRIAR

Too familiar
 Is my dear son with such sour company.
 I bring thee tidings of the prince's doom.

ROMEO

What less than doomsday^o is the prince's doom?

110

FRIAR

A gentler judgment vanished^o from his lips— 10
 Not body's death, but body's banishment.

ROMEO

115

Ha, banishment? Be merciful, say "death";
 For exile hath more terror in his look,
 Much more than death. Do not say "banishment."

FRIAR

Here from Verona art thou banishèd. 15
 Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.

120

ROMEO

There is no world without Verona walls,
 But purgatory, torture, hell itself.
 Hence banishèd is banished from the world,
 And world's exile is death. Then "banishèd" 20
 Is death misnamed. Calling death "banishèd," 125

139 wot know

88 aqua vitae spirits 103 tributary contributed 117 needly
 . . . with must be accompanied by 120 modern ordinary 21 rearward rear guard

III.iii.1 fearful frightened 2 Affliction . . . parts affliction is in love with your attractive qualities 4 doom final decision 9 doomsday my death 10 vanished escaped

Thou cut'st my head off with a golden ax
And smilest upon the stroke that murders me.

FRIAR

O deadly sin! O rude unthankfulness!
Thy fault our law calls death; but the kind prince,
Taking thy part, hath rushed[°] aside the law,
And turned that black word "death" to "banishment."
This is dear mercy, and thou see'st it not.

ROMEO

'Tis torture, and not mercy. Heaven is here,
Where Juliet lives; and every cat and dog
And little mouse, every unworthy thing,
Live here in heaven and may look on her;
But Romeo may not. More validity,[°]
More honorable state, more courtship[°] lives
In carrion flies than Romeo. They may seize
On the white wonder of dear Juliet's hand
And steal immortal blessing from her lips,
Who, even in pure and vestal[°] modesty,
Still blush, as thinking their own kisses sin;[°]
But Romeo may not, he is banishèd.
Flies may do this but I from this must fly;
They are freemen, but I am banishèd.
And sayest thou yet that exile is not death?
Hadst thou no poison mixed, no sharp-ground knife,
No sudden mean of death, though ne'er so mean,[°]
But "banishèd" to kill me—"banishèd"?
O friar, the damnèd use that word in hell;
Howling attends it! How hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
A sin-absolver, and my friend professed,
To mangle me with that word "banishèd"?

FRIAR

Thou fond[°] mad man, hear me a little speak.

ROMEO

O, thou wilt speak again of banishment.

FRIAR

I'll give thee armor to keep off that word;
Adversity's sweet milk, philosophy,
To comfort thee, though thou art banishèd.

ROMEO

Yet[°] "banishèd"? Hang up philosophy!
Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Displant a town, reverse a prince's doom,
It helps not, it prevails not. Talk no more.

FRIAR

O, then I see that madmen have no ears.

ROMEO

How should they, when that wise men have no eyes?

FRIAR

Let me dispute[°] with thee of thy estate.[°]

ROMEO

Thou canst not speak of that thou dost not feel.
Wert thou as young as I, Juliet thy love,
An hour but married, Tybalt murderèd,
Doting like me, and like me banishèd,
Then mightst thou speak, then mightst thou tear thy hair,

And fall upon the ground, as I do now,
Taking the measure[°] of an unmade grave.

70

Enter NURSE and knock.

FRIAR

Arise, one knocks. Good Romeo, hide thyself.

ROMEO

Not I; unless the breath of heartsick groans
Mistlike infold me from the search of eyes.

30

[Knock.]

FRIAR

Hark, how they knock! Who's there? Romeo, arise;
Thou wilt be taken.—Stay awhile!—Stand up;

75

35

[Knock.]

Run to my study.—By and by![°]—God's will,
What simpleness[°] is this.—I come, I come!

Knock.

40

Who knocks so hard? Whence come you? What's your will?

Enter NURSE.

NURSE

Let me come in, and you shall know my errand.
I come from Lady Juliet.

FRIAR

Welcome then.

80

NURSE

O holy friar, O, tell me, holy friar,
Where is my lady's lord, where's Romeo?

50

FRIAR

There on the ground, with his own tears made drunk.

NURSE

O, he is even in my mistress' case,[°]
Just in her case! O woeful sympathy!
Piteous predicament! Even so lies she,
Blubb'ring and weeping, weeping and blubb'ring.
Stand up, stand up! Stand, and you be a man.
For Juliet's sake, for her sake, rise and stand!
Why should you fall into so deep an O?[°]

85

55

90

ROMEO [Rises.] Nurse—

NURSE

Ah sir, ah sir! Death's the end of all.

60

ROMEO

Spakest thou of Juliet? How is it with her?
Doth not she think me an old murderer,
Now I have stained the childhood of our joy
With blood removed but little from her own?
Where is she? And how doth she! And what says
My concealed lady to our canceled[°] love?

95

NURSE

O, she says nothing, sir, but weeps and weeps;
And now falls on her bed, and then starts up,
And Tybalt calls; and then on Romeo cries,
And then down falls again.

100

65

ROMEO

As if that name,

70 Taking the measure measuring by my outstretched body
76 By and by in a moment (said to the person knocking) 77 simpleness silly behavior (Romeo refuses to rise) 84 case with bawdy innuendo complementing "stand," "rise," etc., in lines 85–90; but the Nurse is unaware of this possible interpretation 90 so . . . O such a fit of moaning 98 canceled invalidated

26 rushed pushed 33 validity value 34 courtship opportunity for courting 38 vestal virgin 39 their . . . sin sin, when they touch each other 45 mean . . . mean method
. . . lowly 52 fond foolish 57 Yet still 63 dispute discuss;
estate situation

Shot from the deadly level° of a gun,
 Did murder her; as that name's cursèd hand
 Murdered her kinsman. O, tell me, friar, tell me, 105
 In what vile part of this anatomy
 Doth my name lodge? Tell me, that I may sack°
 The hateful mansion.

[He offers to stab himself, and NURSE snatches the dagger away.]

FRIAR Hold thy desperate hand.
 Art thou a man? Thy form cries out thou art;
 Thy tears are womanish, thy wild acts denote 110
 The unreasonable° fury of a beast.
 Unseemly° woman in a seeming man!
 And ill-beseeming beast in seeming both!
 Thou hast amazed me. By my holy order,
 I thought thy disposition better tempered. 115
 Hast thou slain Tybalt? Wilt thou slay thyself?
 And slay thy lady that in thy life lives,
 By doing damnèd hate upon thyself?
 Why railest thou on thy birth, the heaven, and earth?
 Since birth and heaven and earth,° all three do meet 120
 In thee at once; which thou at once wouldst lose.°
 Fie, fie, thou shamest thy shape, thy love, thy wit,°
 Which,° like a usurer, abound'st in all,
 And usest none in that true use indeed
 Which should bedeck° thy shape, thy love, thy wit. 125
 Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,
 Digressing from the valor of a man;°
 Thy dear love sworn but hollow perjury,
 Killing that love which thou hast vowed to cherish;
 Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love, 130
 Misshapen in the conduct° of them both,
 Like powder in a skillless soldier's flask,°
 Is set afire by thine own ignorance,
 And thou dismemb' red with thine own defense.°
 What, rouse thee, man! Thy Juliet is alive, 135
 For whose dear sake thou wast but lately dead.°
 There art thou happy.° Tybalt would kill thee,
 But thou slewest Tybalt. There art thou happy.
 The law, that threat'ned death, becomes thy friend
 And turns it to exile. There art thou happy.
 A pack of blessings light upon thy back;
 Happiness courts thee in her best array;
 But, like a misbehaved and sullen wench,
 Thou puts up thy fortune and thy love.
 Take heed, take heed, for such die miserable. 145
 Go get thee to thy love, as was decreed,
 Ascend her chamber, hence and comfort her.
 But look thou stay not till the watch be set,
 For then thou canst not pass to Mantua,
 Where thou shalt live till we can find a time 150
 To blaze° your marriage, reconcile your friends,

103 level aim 107 sack plunder 111 unreasonable irrational 112 Unseemly indecorous 113 ill-beseeming . . . both inappropriate even to a beast in being both man and woman 120 birth . . . earth family origin, soul, and body 121 lose abandon 122 wit intellect 123 Which who 125 bedeck do honor to 127 valor . . . man his manly qualities 131 conduct management 132 flask powder flask 134 dis-memb' red . . . defense your intellect, properly the defender of shape and love, is set off independently and destroys all 136 dead declaring yourself dead 137 happy fortunate 151 blaze announce publicly

Beg pardon of the prince, and call thee back
 With twenty hundred thousand times more joy
 Than thou went'st forth in lamentation.
 Go before, nurse. Commend me to thy lady, 155
 And bid her hasten all the house to bed,
 Which heavy sorrow makes them apt unto.
 Romeo is coming.

NURSE

O Lord, I could have stayed here all the night
 To hear good counsel. O, what learning is! 160
 My lord, I'll tell my lady you will come.

ROMEO

Do so, and bid my sweet prepare to chide.

[NURSE offers to go in and turns again.]

NURSE

Here, sir, a ring she bid me give you, sir.
 Hie you, make haste, for it grows very late. [Exit.] 165

ROMEO

How well my comfort is revived by this! 165

FRIAR

Go hence; good night; and here stands all your state:°
 Either be gone before the watch be set,
 Or by the break of day disguised from hence.
 Sojourn in Mantua. I'll find out your man,
 And he shall signify from time to time 170
 Every good hap to you that chances here.
 Give me thy hand. 'Tis late. Farewell; good night.

ROMEO

But that a joy past joy calls out on me,
 It were a grief so brief to part with thee.
 Farewell. Exeunt. 175

[Scene IV. A room in Capulet's house.]

135 Enter old CAPULET, his wife [LADY CAPULET], and PARIS.

CAPULET

Things have fall'n out, sir, so unluckily
 That we have had no time to move° our daughter.
 Look you, she loved her kinsman Tybalt dearly,
 And so did I. Well, we were born to die.
 'Tis very late; she'll not come down tonight. 5
 I promise° you, but for your company,
 I would have been abed an hour ago.

PARIS

These times of woe afford no times to woo.
 Madam, good night. Commend me to your daughter.

LADY [CAPULET]

I will, and know her mind early tomorrow; 10
 Tonight she's mewed up to her heaviness.°

CAPULET

Sir Paris, I will make a desperate tender°
 Of my child's love. I think she will be ruled
 In all respects by me; nay more, I doubt it not.
 Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed; 15
 Acquaint her here of my son Paris' love

166 here . . . state this is your situation

III.iv.2 move discuss the matter with 6 promise assure 11 mewed . . . heaviness shut up with her grief 12 make . . .
 tender risk an offer

And bid her (mark you me?) on Wednesday next—
But soft! What day is this?

PARIS Monday, my lord.

CAPULET

Monday! Ha, ha! Well, Wednesday is too soon.
A° Thursday let it be—a Thursday, tell her,
She shall be married to this noble earl.
Will you be ready? Do you like this haste?
We'll keep no great ado—a friend or two;
For hark you, Tybalt being slain so late,
It may be thought we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we revel much.
Therefore we'll have some half a dozen friends,
And there an end. But what say you to Thursday?

PARIS

My lord, I would that Thursday were tomorrow.

CAPULET

Well, get you gone. A Thursday be it then.
Go you to Juliet ere you go to bed;
Prepare her, wife, against° this wedding day.
Farewell, my lord.—Light to my chamber, ho!
Afore me,° it is so very late
That we may call it early by and by.°
Good night. Exeunt.

[Scene V. Capulet's orchard.]

Enter ROMEO and JULIET aloft.

JULIET

Wilt thou be gone? It is not yet near day.
It was the nightingale, and not the lark,
That pierced the fearful° hollow of thine ear.
Nightly she sings on yond pomegranate tree.
Believe me, love, it was the nightingale.

ROMEO

It was the lark, the herald of the morn;
No nightingale. Look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder east.
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tiptoe on the misty mountaintops.
I must be gone and live, or stay and die.

JULIET

Yond light is not daylight; I know it, I.
It is some meteor that the sun exhales°
To be to thee this night a torchbearer
And light thee on thy way to Mantua.
Therefore stay yet; thou need'st not to be gone.

ROMEO

Let me be ta'en, let me be put to death.
I am content, so thou wilt have it so.
I'll say yon gray is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow;°
Nor that is not the lark whose notes do beat
The vaulty heaven so high above our heads.
I have more care to stay than will to go.
Come, death, and welcome! Juliet wills it so.
How is't, my soul? Let's talk; it is not day.

JULIET

It is, it is! Hie hence, be gone, away!
It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and unpleasing sharps.
Some say the lark makes sweet division;°
This doth not so, for she divideth us.
Some say the lark and loathèd toad change eyes;
O, now I would they had changed voices too,
Since arm from arm that voice doth us affray,°
Hunting thee hence with hunt's-up° to the day.
O, now be gone! More light and light it grows.

ROMEO

More light and light—more dark and dark our woes.

Enter NURSE.

NURSE Madam!

JULIET Nurse?

30

NURSE

Your lady mother is coming to your chamber.
The day is broke; be wary, look about. [Exit.]

JULIET

Then, window, let day in, and let life out.

35

ROMEO

Farewell, farewell! One kiss, and I'll descend.

[He goeth down.]

JULIET

Art thou gone so, love-lord, ay husband-friend?°
I must hear from thee every day in the hour,
For in a minute there are many days.
O, for this count I shall be much in years°
Ere I again behold my Romeo!

ROMEO

Farewell!
I will omit no opportunity
That may convey my greetings, love, to thee.

5

JULIET

O, think'st thou we shall ever meet again?

ROMEO

I doubt it not; and all these woes shall serve
For sweet discourses in our times to come.

10

JULIET

O God, I have an ill-divining° soul!
Methinks I see thee, now thou art so low,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb.
Either my eyesight fails, or thou lookest pale.

55

ROMEO

And trust me, love, in my eye so do you.
Dry° sorrow drinks our blood. Adieu, adieu! Exit.

15

JULIET

O Fortune, Fortune! All men call thee fickle.
If thou art fickle, what dost thou° with him
That is renowned for faith? Be fickle, Fortune,
For then I hope thou wilt not keep him long
But send him back.

20

Enter mother [LADY CAPULET].

29 division melody (i.e., a division of notes) 33 affray frighten 34 hunt's-up morning song (for hunters) 43 husband-friend husband-lover 46 much in years much older 54 ill-divining foreseeing evil 59 Dry thirsty (as grief was thought to be) 61 what dost thou what business have
you

20 A on 32 against in preparation for 34 Afore me indeed
(a light oath) 35 by and by soon

III.v.3 fearful fearing 13 exhales gives out 20 reflex . . .
brow reflection of the edge of the moon

LADY CAPULET

Ho, daughter! Are you

JULIET

Who is't that calls? It is my lady mother.

Is she not down so late,^o or up so early?

What unaccustomed cause procures her hither?

LADY CAPULET

Why, how now, Juliet?

JULIET

Madam, I am not well.

LADY CAPULET

Evermore weeping for your cousin's death?

What, wilt thou wash him from his grave with tears?

And if thou couldst, thou couldst not make him live.

Therefore have done. Some grief shows much of love;

But much of grief shows still some want of wit.

JULIET

Yet let me weep for such a feeling loss.^o

LADY CAPULET

So shall you feel the loss, but not the friend

Which you weep for.

JULIET

Feeling so the loss,

I cannot choose but ever weep the friend.

LADY CAPULET

Well, girl, thou weep'st not so much for his death

As that the villain lives which slaughtered him.

JULIET

What villain, madam?

LADY CAPULET

That same villain Romeo.

JULIET [Aside.]

Villain and he be many miles asunder—

God pardon him! I do, with all my heart;

And yet no man like he doth grieve my heart.

LADY CAPULET

That is because the traitor murderer lives.

JULIET

Ay, madam, from the reach of these my hands.

Would none but I might venge my cousin's death!

LADY CAPULET

We will have vengeance for it, fear thou not.

Then weep no more. I'll send to one in Mantua,

Where that same banished runagate^o doth live,

Shall give him such an unaccustomed dram

That he shall soon keep Tybalt company;

And then I hope thou wilt be satisfied.

JULIET

Indeed I never shall be satisfied

With Romeo till I behold him—dead^o—

Is my poor heart so for a kinsman vexed.

Madam, if you could find out but a man

To bear a poison, I would temper^o it;

That Romeo should, upon receipt thereof,

Soon sleep in quiet. O, how my heart abhors

To hear him named and cannot come to him,

To wreak^o the love I bore my cousin

Upon his body that hath slaughtered him!

LADY CAPULET

Find thou the means, and I'll find such a man.

But now I'll tell thee joyful tidings, girl.

JULIET

65

And joy comes well in such a needy time.

What are they, beseech your ladyship?

LADY CAPULET

Well, well, thou hast a careful^o father, child;

One who, to put thee from thy heaviness,

Hath sorted out^o a sudden day of joy

That thou expects not nor I looked not for.

110

JULIET

Madam, in happy time!^o What day is that?

LADY CAPULET

Marry, my child, early next Thursday morn

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,

The County Paris, at Saint Peter's Church,

Shall happily make thee there a joyful bride.

115

JULIET

75

Now by Saint Peter's Church, and Peter too,

He shall not make me there a joyful bride!

I wonder at this haste, that I must wed

Ere he that should be husband comes to woo.

I pray you tell my lord and father, madam,

I will not marry yet; and when I do, I swear

It shall be Romeo, whom you know I hate,

Rather than Paris. These are news indeed!

120

LADY CAPULET

80

Here comes your father. Tell him so yourself,

And see how he will take it at your hands.

125

Enter CAPULET and NURSE.

CAPULET

When the sun sets the earth doth drizzle dew,

But for the sunset of my brother's son

It rains downright.

85

How now? A conduit,^o girl? What, still in tears?

Evermore show'ring? In one little body

Thou counterfeits a bark, a sea, a wind:

For still thy eyes, which I may call the sea,

Do ebb and flow with tears; the bark thy body is,

Sailing in this salt flood; the winds, thy sighs,

Who, raging with thy tears and they with them,

Without a sudden^o calm will overset

Thy tempest-tossèd body. How now, wife?

Have you delivered to her our decree?

130

135

LADY CAPULET

Ay, sir; but she will none, she gives you thanks.^o

I would the fool were married to her grave!

140

95

CAPULET

Soft! Take me with you,^o take me with you, wife.

How? Will she none? Doth she not give us thanks?

Is she not proud? Doth she not count her blest,

Unworthy as she is, that we have wrought^o

So worthy a gentleman to be her bride?

145

100

JULIET

Not proud^o you have, but thankful that you have.

Proud can I never be of what I hate,

But thankful even for hate that is meant love.

CAPULET

105

How, how, how, how, chopped-logic?^o What is this? 150

67 not . . . late so late getting to bed 75 feeling loss loss to be felt 90 runagate renegade 95 dead Lady Capulet takes this to refer to "him"; Juliet takes it to refer to "heart" 98 temper (1) mix (2) weaken 102 wreak (1) avenge (2) give expression to

108 careful solicitous 110 sorted out selected 112 in happy time most opportunely 130 conduit water pipe 137 sudden unanticipated, immediate 140 she . . . thanks she'll have none of it, thank you 142 Soft . . . you Wait! Help me to understand you 145 wrought arranged 147 proud highly pleased 150 chopped-logic chop logic, sophistry

"Proud"—and "I thank you"—and "I thank you not"—

And yet "not proud"? Mistress minion^o you,
Thank me no thankings, nor proud me no pouds,
But fettle^o your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next
To go with Paris to Saint Peter's Church,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle^o thither.
Out, you greensickness^o carrion! Out, you baggage!^o
You tallow-face!

LADY CAPULET Fie, fie! What, are you mad?

JULIET

Good father, I beseech you on my knees,
Hear me with patience but to speak a word.

CAPULET

Hang thee, young baggage! Disobedient wretch!
I tell thee what—get thee to church a Thursday
Or never after look me in the face.

Speak not, reply not, do not answer me!
My fingers itch. Wife, we scarce thought us blest
That God had lent us but this only child;
But now I see this one is one too much,
And that we have a curse in having her.
Out on her, hilding!^o

NURSE God in heaven bless her!

You are to blame, my lord, to rate^o her so.

CAPULET

And why, my Lady Wisdom? Hold your tongue,
Good Prudence. Smatter with your gossips,^o go!

NURSE

I speak no treason.

CAPULET O, God-i-god-en!^o

NURSE

May not one speak?

CAPULET Peace, you mumbling fool!

Utter your gravity o'er a gossip's bowl,
For here we need it not.

LADY CAPULET You are too hot.

CAPULET

God's bread!^o It makes me mad.

Day, night; hour, tide, time; work, play;

Alone, in company; still my care hath been

To have her matched; and having now provided

A gentleman of noble parentage,

Of fair demesnes,^o youthful, and nobly trained,

Stuffed, as they say, with honorable parts,

Proportioned as one's thought would wish a man—

And then to have a wretched puling^o fool,

A whining mammet,^o in her fortune's tender,^o

To answer "I'll not wed, I cannot love;

I am too young, I pray you pardon me!"

But, and you will not wed, I'll pardon you!^o

Graze where you will, you shall not house with me.

Look to't, think on't; I do not use to jest.^o

152 minion minx 154 fettle make ready 156 hurdle sledge on which traitors were taken to execution 157 greensickness

anemic, after the fashion of young girls; baggage strumpet

169 hilding worthless person 170 rate scold 172 Smatter

. . . gossips save your chatter for your cronies 173 God-i-god-en God give you good even! (here equivalent to "Get on with you!") 177 God's bread By the sacred host! 182

demesnes domains 185 puling whining 186 mammet puppet; in . . . tender (1) on good fortune's offer (2) subject to fortuitous circumstance (?) 189 I'll pardon you i.e., in a way you don't expect 191 do . . . jest am not in the habit of joking

Thursday is near; lay hand on heart, advise:^o

And you be mine, I'll give you to my friend;

And you be not, hang, beg, starve, die in the streets,

For, by my soul, I'll ne'er acknowledge thee,

Nor what is mine shall never do thee good.

Trust to't. Bethink you. I'll not be forsworn.

Exit.

JULIET

Is there no pity sitting in the clouds

That sees into the bottom of my grief?

O sweet my mother, cast me not away!

Delay this marriage for a month, a week;

Or if you do not, make the bridal bed

In that dim monument where Tybalt lies.

LADY CAPULET

Talk not to me, for I'll not speak a word.

Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee.

Exit. 205

JULIET

O God!—O nurse, how shall this be prevented?

My husband is on earth, my faith in heaven.^o

How shall that faith return again to earth

Unless that husband send it me from heaven

By leaving earth?^o Comfort me, counsel me.

Alack, alack, that heaven should practice stratagems

Upon so soft a subject as myself!

What say'st thou? Hast thou not a word of joy?

Some comfort, nurse.

NURSE

Faith, here it is.

Romeo is banished; and all the world to nothing^o

That he dares ne'er come back to challenge you;

Or if he do, it needs must be by stealth.

Then, since the case so stands as now it doth,

I think it best you married with the county.

O, he's a lovely gentleman!

Romeo's a dishclout^o to him. An eagle, madam,

Hath not so green, so quick, so fair an eye

As Paris hath. Beshrew^o my very heart,

I think you are happy in this second match,

For it excels your first; or if it did not,

Your first is dead—or 'twere as good he were

As living here and you no use of him.

JULIET

Speak'st thou from thy heart?

NURSE

And from my soul too; else beshrew them both.

JULIET Amen!

NURSE What?

JULIET

Well, thou hast comforted me marvelous much.

Go in; and tell my lady I am gone,

Having displeased my father, to Lawrence' cell,

To make confession and to be absolved.

NURSE

Marry, I will; and this is wisely done.

[Exit.]

JULIET

Ancient damnation!^o O most wicked fiend!

Is it more sin to wish me thus forsworn,^o

192 advise consider 207 my . . . heaven my vow is recorded in heaven 210 By leaving earth by dying 215 all . . .
nothing the Nurse advises a safe bet 221 dishclout dishcloth 223 Beshrew curse (used in light oaths) 237 Ancient damnation (1) damned old woman (2) ancient devil (note the term "wicked fiend" immediately following) 238 forsworn guilty of breaking a vow

Or to dispraise my lord with that same tongue
Which she hath praised him with above compare 240
So many thousand times? Go, counselor!
Thou and my bosom henceforth shall be twain.^o
I'll to the friar to know his remedy.
If all else fail, myself have power to die. Exit.

[A C T I V]

[Scene I. Friar Lawrence's cell.]

Enter FRIAR [Lawrence] and County PARIS.

FRIAR
On Thursday, sir? The time is very short.

PARIS
My father Capulet will have it so,
And I am nothing slow to slack his haste.^o

FRIAR
You say you do not know the lady's mind.
Uneven^o is the course; I like it not.

PARIS
Immoderately she weeps for Tybalt's death,
And therefore have I little talked of love;
For Venus smiles not in a house of tears.
Now, sir, her father counts it dangerous
That she do give her sorrow so much sway,
And in his wisdom hastes our marriage
To stop the inundation of her tears,
Which, too much minded^o by herself alone,^o
May be put from her by society.
Now do you know the reason of this haste.

FRIAR [Aside.]
I would I knew not why it should be slowed,—
Look, sir, here comes the lady toward my cell.

Enter JULIET.

PARIS
Happily met, my lady and my wife!

JULIET
That may be, sir, when I may be a wife.

PARIS
That "may be" must be, love, on Thursday next.

JULIET
What must be shall be.

FRIAR That's a certain text.

PARIS
Come you to make confession to this father?

JULIET
To answer that, I should confess to you.

PARIS
Do not deny to him that you love me.

JULIET
I will confess to you that I love him.

PARIS
So will ye, I am sure, that you love me.

242 Thou . . . twain You shall henceforth be separated from my trust

IV.i.3 I . . . haste I shall not check his haste by being slow myself 5 Uneven irregular 13 minded thought about; by herself alone when she is alone

JULIET
If I do so, it will be of more price,
Being spoke behind your back, than to your face.

PARIS
Poor soul, thy face is much abused with tears.

JULIET
The tears have got small victory by that, 30
For it was bad enough before their spite.^o

PARIS
Thou wrong'st it more than tears with that report.

JULIET
That is no slander, sir, which is a truth;
And what I spake, I spake it to my face.

PARIS
Thy face is mine, and thou hast sland'ered it. 35

JULIET
It may be so, for it is not mine own.
Are you at leisure, holy father, now,
Or shall I come to you at evening mass?^o

FRIAR
My leisure serves me, pensive daughter, now. 40
My lord, we must entreat the time alone.^o

PARIS
God shield^o I should disturb devotion! 5
Juliet, on Thursday early will I rouse ye.
Till then, adieu, and keep this holy kiss. Exit.

JULIET
O, shut the door, and when thou hast done so, 10
Come weep with me—past hope, past care, past help! 45

FRIAR
O Juliet, I already know thy grief;
It strains me past the compass of my wits.
I hear thou must, and nothing may prorogue^o it,
On Thursday next be married to this county. 15

JULIET
Tell me not, friar, that thou hearest of this, 50
Unless thou tell me how I may prevent it.
If in thy wisdom thou canst give no help,
Do thou but call my resolution wise
And with this knife I'll help it presently.^o
God joined my heart and Romeo's, thou our hands; 55
And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo's sealed,
Shall be the label^o to another deed,^o
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both. 60
Therefore, out of thy long-experienced time,
Give me some present counsel; or, behold,
'Twixt my extremes and me this bloody knife
Shall play the umpire, arbitrating that
Which the commission^o of thy years and art
Could to no issue of true honor bring. 65
Be not so long to speak. I long to die
If what thou speak'st speak not of remedy.

FRIAR
Hold, daughter. I do spy a kind of hope, 25
Which craves as desperate an execution
As that is desperate which we would prevent. 70

31 before their spite before they marred it 38 evening mass evening mass was still said occasionally in Shakespeare's time
40 entreat . . . alone ask to have this time to ourselves
41 God shield God forbid 48 prorogue delay 54 presently at once 57 label bearer of the seal; deed (1) act (2) legal document 64 commission authority

If, rather than to marry County Paris,
Thou hast the strength of will to slay thyself,
Then is it likely thou wilt undertake
A thing like death to chide away this shame,
That cop'st° with death himself to scape from it;
And, if thou darest, I'll give thee remedy.

JULIET

O, bid me leap, rather than marry Paris,
From off the battlements of any tower,
Or walk in thievish° ways, or bid me lurk
Where serpents are; chain me with roaring bears,
Or hide me nightly in a charnel house,°
O'ercovered quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky° shanks and yellow chapless° skulls;
Or bid me go into a new-made grave
And hide me with a dead man in his shroud—
Things that, to hear them told, have made me tremble—
And I will do it without fear or doubt,
To live an unstained wife to my sweet love.

FRIAR

Hold, then. Go home, be merry, give consent
To marry Paris. Wednesday is tomorrow.
Tomorrow night look that thou lie alone;
Let not the nurse lie with thee in thy chamber.
Take thou this vial, being then in bed,
And this distilling° liquor drink thou off;
When presently through all thy veins shall run
A cold and drowsy humor;° for no pulse
Shall keep his native° progress, but surcease;°
No warmth, no breath, shall testify thou livest;
The roses in thy lips and cheeks shall fade
To wanny° ashes, thy eyes' windows° fall
Like death when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part, deprived of supple government,°
Shall, stiff and stark and cold, appear like death;
And in this borrowed likeness of shrunk death
Thou shalt continue two-and-forty hours,
And then awake as from a pleasant sleep.
Now, when the bridegroom in the morning comes
To rouse thee from thy bed, there art thou dead.
Then, as the manner of our country is,
In thy best robes uncovered on the bier
Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault
Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie.
In the meantime, against° thou shalt awake,
Shall Romeo by my letters know our drift;°
And hither shall he come; and he and I
Will watch thy waking, and that very night
Shall Romeo bear thee hence to Mantua.
And this shall free thee from this present shame,
If no inconstant toy° nor womanish fear
Abate thy valor in the acting it.

JULIET

Give me, give me! O, tell not me of fear!

FRIAR

Hold! Get you gone, be strong and prosperous

75 cop'st negotiates 79 thievish infested with thieves 81 charnel house vault for old bones 83 reeky damp; chapless jawless 94 distilling infusing 96 humor fluid 97 native natural; surcease stop 100 wanny pale; windows lids 102 supple government faculty for maintaining motion 113 against before 114 drift purpose 119 inconstant toy whim

In this resolve. I'll send a friar with speed
To Mantua, with my letters to thy lord.

JULIET

Love give me strength, and strength shall help afford. 125
Farewell, dear father. Exit [with FRIAR].

[Scene II. Hall in Capulet's house.]

Enter father CAPULET, mother [LADY CAPULET],
NURSE, and SERVINGMEN, two or three.

CAPULET

So many guests invite as here are writ.

[Exit a SERVINGMAN.]

Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning° cooks.

85 SERVINGMAN You shall have none ill, sir; for I'll try°
if they can lick their fingers.

CAPULET

How canst thou try them so?

5

SERVINGMAN Marry, sir, 'tis an ill cook that cannot lick his own fingers.° Therefore he that cannot lick his fingers goes not with me.

90 CAPULET Go, begone. [Exit SERVINGMAN.]

We shall be much unfurnished° for this time.

10

What, is my daughter gone to Friar Lawrence?

NURSE

Ay, forsooth.

CAPULET

95 Well, he may chance to do some good on her.
A peevish self-willed harlotry it is.°

Enter JULIET.

NURSE

100 See where she comes from shrift with merry look. 15

CAPULET

How now, my headstrong? Where have you been gadding?

JULIET

105 Where I have learnt me to repent the sin
Of disobedient opposition
To you and your behests, and am enjoined
By holy Lawrence to fall prostrate here 20
To beg your pardon. Pardon, I beseech you!
110 Henceforward I am ever ruled by you.

CAPULET

Send for the county. Go tell him of this.

I'll have this knot knit up tomorrow morning.

JULIET

115 I met the youthful lord at Lawrence's cell 25
And gave him what becomèd° love I might,
Not stepping o'er the bounds of modesty.

CAPULET

Why, I am glad on't. This is well. Stand up.

120 This is as't should be. Let me see the county.

Ay, marry, go, I say, and fetch him hither.

30

Now, afore God, this reverend holy friar,

All our whole city is much bound to him.

JULIET

Nurse, will you go with me into my closet°

IV.ii.2 cunning skillful 3 try test 6-7 cannot . . . fingers cannot taste his own cooking 10 unfurnished unprovisioned 14 A . . . is She's a silly good-for-nothing 26 becomèd proper 33 closet private chamber

To help me sort such needful ornaments
As you think fit to furnish me tomorrow?

LADY CAPULET

No, not till Thursday. There is time enough.

CAPULET

Go, nurse, go with her. We'll to church tomorrow.

Exeunt [JULIET and NURSE].

LADY CAPULET

We shall be short in our provision.

'Tis now near night.

CAPULET

Tush, I will stir about,

And all things shall be well, I warrant thee, wife.

Go thou to Juliet, help to deck up her.

I'll not to bed tonight; let me alone.

I'll play the housewife for this once. What, ho!

They are all forth; well, I will walk myself

To County Paris, to prepare up him

Against^o tomorrow. My heart is wondrous light,

Since this same wayward girl is so reclaimed.

Exit [with LADY CAPULET].

[Scene III. Juliet's chamber.]

Enter JULIET and NURSE.

JULIET

Ay, those attires are best; but, gentle nurse,

I pray thee leave me to myself tonight;

For I have need of many orisons^o

To move the heavens to smile upon my state,^o

Which, well thou knowest, is cross^o and full of sin.

Enter mother [LADY CAPULET].

LADY CAPULET

What, are you busy, ho? Need you my help?

JULIET

No, madam; we have culled such necessities

As are behoveful^o for our state^o tomorrow.

So please you, let me now be left alone,

And let the nurse this night sit up with you;

For I am sure you have your hands full all

In this so sudden business.

LADY CAPULET

Good night.

Get thee to bed, and rest; for thou hast need.

Exeunt [LADY CAPULET and NURSE].

JULIET

Farewell! God knows when we shall meet again.

I have a faint^o cold fear thrills through my veins

That almost freezes up the heat of life.

I'll call them back again to comfort me.

Nurse!—What should she do here?

My dismal scene I needs must act alone.

Come, vial.

What if this mixture do not work at all?

Shall I be married then tomorrow morning?

No, no! This shall forbid it. Lie thou there.

[Lays down a dagger.]

What if it be a poison which the friar

Subtly hath minist^ored^o to have me dead,

46 Against in anticipation of

IV.iii.3 orisons prayers 4 state condition 5 cross perverse

8 behoveful expedient; state pomp 15 faint causing faintness 25 minist^ored provided

Lest in this marriage he should be dishonored

Because he married me before to Romeo?

I fear it is; and yet methinks it should not,

For he hath still^o been tried^o a holy man.

How if, when I am laid into the tomb,

I wake before the time that Romeo

Come to redeem me? There's a fearful point!

Shall I not then be stifled in the vault,

To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in,

And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes?

Or, if I live, is it not very like

The horrible conceit^o of death and night,

Together with the terror of the place—

As in a vault, an ancient receptacle

Where for this many hundred years the bones

Of all my buried ancestors are packed;

Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,^o

Lies fest^oring in his shroud; where, as they say,

At some hours in the night spirits resort—

Alack, alack, is it not like that I,

So early waking—what with loathsome smells,

And shrieks like mandrakes^o torn out of the earth,

That living mortals, hearing them, run mad—

I, if I wake, shall I not be distraught,^o

Environed with all these hideous fears,

And madly play with my forefathers' joints,

And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud,

And, in this rage, with some great kinsman's bone

As with a club dash out my desp^orate brains?

O, look! Methinks I see my cousin's ghost

Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body

Upon a rapier's point. Stay, Tybalt, stay!

Romeo, Romeo, Romeo, I drink to thee.

[She falls upon her bed within the curtains.]

[Scene IV. Hall in Capulet's house.]

10 Enter lady of the house [LADY CAPULET] and NURSE.

LADY CAPULET

Hold, take these keys and fetch more spices, nurse.

NURSE

They call for dates and quinces in the pastry.^o

Enter old CAPULET.

CAPULET

15 Come, stir, stir, stir! The second cock hath crowed,

The curfew bell hath rung, 'tis three o'clock.

Look to the baked meats,^o good Angelica;^o

Spare not for cost.

NURSE

Go, you cotquean,^o go,

20 Get you to bed! Faith, you'll be sick tomorrow

For this night's watching.^o

CAPULET

No, not a whit. What, I have watched ere now

All night for lesser cause, and ne'er been sick.

29 still always; tried proved 37 conceit thought 42 green in earth newly entombed 47 mandrakes plant with forked root, resembling the human body (supposed to shriek when uprooted and drive the hearer mad) 49 distraught driven mad
IV.iv.2 pastry pastrycook's room 5 baked meats meat pies;
Angelica the Nurse's name 6 cotquean man who does woman's work 8 watching staying awake

LADY CAPULET

Ay, you have been a mouse hunt° in your time;
But I will watch you from such watching now.

Exit LADY CAPULET and NURSE.

CAPULET

A jealous hood,° a jealous hood!

Enter three or four [FELLOWS] with spits and logs and baskets.

Now, fellow,

What is there?

FIRST FELLOW

Things for the cook, sir; but I know not what. 15

CAPULET

Make haste, make haste. [Exit FIRST FELLOW.]

Sirrah, fetch drier logs.

Call Peter; he will show thee where they are.

SECOND FELLOW

I have a head, sir, that will find out logs°

And never trouble Peter for the matter.

CAPULET

Mass,° and well said; a merry whoreson,° ha! 20

Thou shalt be loggerhead.°

[Exit SECOND FELLOW, with the others.]

Good faith, 'tis day.

The county will be here with music straight,

For so he said he would. Play music.

I hear him near.

Nurse! Wife! What, ho! What, nurse, I say!

Enter NURSE.

Go waken Juliet; go and trim her up. 25

I'll go and chat with Paris. Hie, make haste,

Make haste! The bridegroom he is come already:

Make haste, I say. [Exit.]

[Scene V. Juliet's chamber.]

NURSE°

Mistress! What, mistress! Juliet! Fast,° I warrant her, she.

Why, lamb! Why, lady! Fie, you slugabed.°

Why, love, I say! Madam; sweetheart! Why, bride!

What, not a word? You take your pennyworths° now;

Sleep for a week; for the next night, I warrant, 5

The County Paris hath set up his rest°

That you shall rest but little. God forgive me!

Marry, and amen. How sound is she asleep!

I needs must wake her. Madam, madam, madam!

Ay, let the county take you in your bed;

He'll fright you up, i' faith. Will it not be? 10

[Draws aside the curtains.]

11 mouse hunt night prowler, woman chaser 13 A jealous hood you wear the cap of a jealous person 18 will . . .

logs has an affinity for logs (i.e., is wooden also) 20 Mass

by the Mass; whoreson rascal 21 loggerhead blockhead

IV.v.1 Nurse at the conclusion of the last scene the Nurse presumably did not go off stage but remained on the forestage, and after Capulet's departure she now walks to the rear to open the curtains, revealing Juliet; Fast fast asleep 2 slugabed

sleepyhead 4 pennyworths small portions (i.e., short naps)

6 set . . . rest firmly resolved (with bawdy suggestion of having a lance in readiness)

What, dressed, and in your clothes, and down° again?

I must needs wake you. Lady! Lady! Lady!

Alas, alas! Help, help! My lady's dead!

O weraday° that ever I was born! 15

Some aqua vitae,° ho! My lord! My lady!

[Enter LADY CAPULET.]

LADY CAPULET

What noise is here?

NURSE

O lamentable day!

LADY CAPULET

What is the matter?

NURSE

Look, look! O heavy day!

LADY CAPULET

O me, O me! My child, my only life!

Revive, look up, or I will die with thee! 20

Help, help! Call help.

Enter father [CAPULET].

CAPULET

For shame, bring Juliet forth; her lord is come.

NURSE

She's dead, deceased; she's dead, alack the day!

LADY CAPULET

Alack the day, she's dead, she's dead, she's dead!

CAPULET

Ha! Let me see her. Out alas! She's cold, 25

Her blood is settled, and her joints are stiff;

Life and these lips have long been separated.

Death lies on her like an untimely frost

Upon the sweetest flower of all the field.

NURSE

O lamentable day!

LADY CAPULET

O woeful time! 30

CAPULET

Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me wail,

Ties up my tongue and will not let me speak.

Enter FRIAR [Lawrence] and the County [PARIS, with MUSICIANS].

FRIAR

Come, is the bride ready to go to church?

CAPULET

Ready to go, but never to return.

O son, the night before thy wedding day 35

Hath Death lain with thy wife. There she lies,

Flower as she was, deflowerèd by him.

Death is my son-in-law, Death is my heir;

My daughter he hath wedded. I will die

And leave him all. Life, living, all is Death's. 40

PARIS

Have I thought, love, to see this morning's face,

And doth it give me such a sight as this?

LADY CAPULET

Accursed, unhappy, wretched, hateful day!

Most miserable hour that e'er time saw

In lasting labor of his pilgrimage! 45

But one, poor one, one poor and loving child,

But one thing to rejoice and solace in,

And cruel Death hath caught it from my sight.

NURSE

O woe! O woeful, woeful, woeful day!

12 down gone back to bed 15 weraday welladay, alas 16

aqua vitae spirits

Most lamentable day, most woeful day
That ever ever I did yet behold!
O day, O day, O day! O hateful day!
Never was seen so black a day as this.
O woeful day! O woeful day!

PARIS

Beguiled, divorcèd, wrongèd, spited, slain!
Most detestable Death, by thee beguiled,
By cruel, cruel thee quite overthrown.
O love! O life!—not life, but love in death!

CAPULET

Despised, distressèd, hated, martyred, killed!
Uncomfortable^o time, why cam'st thou now
To murder, murder our solemnity?
O child, O child! My soul, and not my child!
Dead art thou—alack, my child is dead,
And with my child my joys are buried!

FRIAR

Peace, ho, for shame! Confusion's cure lives not
In these confusions. Heaven and yourself
Had part in this fair maid—now heaven hath all,
And all the better is it for the maid.
Your part in her you could not keep from death,
But heaven keeps his part in eternal life.
The most you sought was her promotion,
For 'twas your heaven she should be advanced;
And weep ye now, seeing she is advanced
Above the clouds, as high as heaven itself?
O, in this love, you love your child so ill
That you run mad, seeing that she is well.^o
She's not well married that lives married long,
But she's best married that dies married young.
Dry up your tears and stick your rosemary^o
On this fair corse, and, as the custom is,
And in her best array bear her to church;
For though fond nature^o bids us all lament,
Yet nature's tears are reason's merriment.

CAPULET

All things that we ordained festival
Turn from their office to black funeral—
Our instruments to melancholy bells,
Our wedding cheer to a sad burial feast;
Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change;
Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse;
And all things change them to the contrary.

FRIAR

Sir, go you in; and, madam, go with him;
And go, Sir Paris. Everyone prepare
To follow this fair corse unto her grave.
The heavens do low'r^o upon you for some ill;
Move them no more by crossing their high will.

Exeunt [casting rosemary on her and shutting the curtains]. Manet^o [the NURSE and MUSICIANS].

FIRST MUSICIAN

Faith, we may put up our pipes and be gone.

NURSE

Honest good fellows, ah, put up, put up!
For well you know this is a pitiful case.^o

[Exit.]

60 Uncomfortable discomfoting 76 well in blessed condition, in heaven 79 rosemary an evergreen, signifying remembrance 82 fond nature foolish human nature 94 low'r frown 95 s.d. Manet remains (Latin) 98 case (1) situation (2) instrument case

50 FIRST MUSICIAN

Ay, by my troth, the case may be amended.

Enter [PETER].

PETER Musicians, O, musicians, "Heart's ease," 100
"Heart's ease"! O, and you will have me live, play
"Heart's ease."

55

FIRST MUSICIAN Why "Heart's ease"?

PETER O, musicians, because my heart itself plays
"My heart is full." O, play me some merry dump^o to 105 comfort me.

60

FIRST MUSICIAN Not a dump we! 'Tis no time to play now.

PETER You will not then?

FIRST MUSICIAN No. 110

PETER I will then give it you soundly.

FIRST MUSICIAN What will you give us?

65

PETER No money, on my faith, but the gleeck.^o I will give you^o the minstrel.FIRST MUSICIAN Then will I give you the serving- 15 creature.

70

PETER Then will I lay the serving-creature's dagger on your pate. I will carry^o no crotchets.^o I'll re you, I'll fa^o you. Do you note^o me?FIRST MUSICIAN And you re us and fa us, you note 120 us.^oSECOND MUSICIAN Pray you put up your dagger, and put out^o your wit. Then have at you with my wit!

75

PETER I will dry-beat you with an iron wit, and put up my iron dagger. Answer me like men. 125

"When griping grief the heart doth wound,
And doleful dumps the mind oppress,
Then music with her silver sound"^o—

80

Why "silver sound"? Why "music with her silver sound"? What say you, Simon Catling?^o 130

FIRST MUSICIAN Marry, sir, because silver hath a sweet sound.

PETER Pretty! What say you, Hugh Rebeck?^o

85

SECOND MUSICIAN I say "silver sound" because musicians sound for silver. 135

PETER Pretty too! What say you, James Soundpost?^o

THIRD MUSICIAN Faith, I know not what to say.

90

PETER O, I cry you mercy,^o you are the singer. I will say for you. It is "music with her silver sound" because musicians have no gold for sounding. 140

"Then music with her silver sound
With speedy help doth lend redress." Exit.

FIRST MUSICIAN What a pestilent knave is this same!

SECOND MUSICIAN Hang him, Jack! Come, we'll 145 in here, tarry for the mourners, and stay dinner.

Exit [with others].

105 dump sad tune 113 gleeck gibe 114 give you call you 118 carry endure; crotchets (1) whims (2) quarter notes 118-19 re . . . fa musical notes, but used perhaps with puns on ray, or bewray = befoul, and fay = polish (see H. Kökeritz, Shakespeare's Pronunciation, pp. 105-06) 119 note understand 120-21 note us set us to music 123 put out set out, display 126-28 When . . . sound the song is from Richard Edwards' "In Commendation of Music," in The Paradise of Dainty Devices (1576) 130 Catling catgut, a lute string 133 Rebeck a three-stringed fiddle 136 Soundpost peg that gives internal support to a violin 138 cry you mercy beg your pardon

[A C T V]

[Scene I. Mantua. A street.]

Enter ROMEO.

ROMEO

If I may trust the flattering^o truth of sleep,
 My dreams presage some joyful news at hand.
 My bosom's lord^o sits lightly in his throne,
 And all this day an unaccustomed spirit
 Lifts me above the ground with cheerful thoughts. 5
 I dreamt my lady came and found me dead
 (Strange dream that gives a dead man leave to think!)
 And breathed such life with kisses in my lips
 That I revived and was an emperor.
 Ah me! How sweet is love itself possessed,
 When but love's shadows^o are so rich in joy!

Enter Romeo's MAN [Balthasar, booted].

News from Verona! How now, Balthasar?
 Dost thou not bring me letters from the friar?
 How doth my lady? Is my father well?
 How fares my Juliet? That I ask again,
 For nothing can be ill if she be well.

MAN

Then she is well, and nothing can be ill.
 Her body sleeps in Capel's monument,^o
 And her immortal part with angels lives.
 I saw her laid low in her kindred's vault
 And presently took post^o to tell it you.
 O, pardon me for bringing these ill news,
 Since you did leave it for my office,^o sir.

ROMEO

Is it e'en so? Then I defy you, stars!
 Thou knowest my lodging. Get me ink and paper 25
 And hire post horses. I will hence tonight.

MAN

I do beseech you, sir, have patience.
 Your looks are pale and wild and do import^o
 Some misadventure.

ROMEO

Tush, thou art deceived.
 Leave me and do the thing I bid thee do. 30
 Hast thou no letters to me from the friar?

MAN

No, my good lord.

ROMEO

No matter. Get thee gone.
 And hire those horses. I'll be with thee straight.

Exit [MAN].

Well, Juliet, I will lie with thee tonight.
 Let's see for means. O mischief, thou art swift 35
 To enter in the thoughts of desperate men!
 I do remember an apothecary,
 And hereabouts 'a dwells, which late I noted
 In tatt'red weeds,^o with overwhelming^o brows,
 Culling of simples.^o Meager were his looks, 40
 Sharp misery had worn him to the bones;
 And in his needy shop a tortoise hung,
 An alligator stuffed, and other skins

Of ill-shaped fishes; and about his shelves
 A beggarly account^o of empty boxes, 45
 Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds,
 Remnants of packthread, and old cakes of roses^o
 Were thinly scatterèd, to make up a show.
 Noting this penury, to myself I said,
 "And if a man did need a poison now 50
 Whose sale is present death in Mantua,
 Here lives a caitiff^o wretch would sell it him."
 O, this same thought did but forerun my need,
 And this same needy man must sell it me.
 As I remember, this should be the house. 55
 Being holiday, the beggar's shop is shut.
 What, ho! Apothecary!

[Enter APOTHECARY.]

APOTHECARY

Who calls so loud?

ROMEO

Come hither, man. I see that thou art poor.
 Hold, there is forty ducats. Let me have
 A dram of poison, such soon-speeding gear^o 60
 As will disperse itself through all the veins
 That the life-weary taker may fall dead,
 And that the trunk^o may be discharged of breath
 As violently as hasty powder fired
 Doth hurry from the fatal cannon's womb. 65

APOTHECARY

Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
 Is death to any he that utters^o them.

ROMEO

Art thou so bare and full of wretchedness
 And fearest to die? Famine is in thy cheeks,
 Need and oppression starveth^o in thy eyes, 70
 Contempt and beggary hangs upon thy back:
 The world is not thy friend, nor the world's law;
 The world affords no law to make thee rich;
 Then be not poor, but break it and take this.

APOTHECARY

My poverty but not my will consents. 75

ROMEO

I pay thy poverty and not thy will.

APOTHECARY

Put this in any liquid thing you will
 And drink it off, and if you had the strength
 Of twenty men, it would dispatch you straight.

ROMEO

There is thy gold—worse poison to men's souls, 80
 Doing more murder in this loathsome world,
 Than these poor compounds that thou mayst not sell.
 I sell thee poison; thou hast sold me none.
 Farewell. Buy food and get thyself in flesh.
 Come, cordial^o and not poison, go with me 85
 To Juliet's grave; for there must I use thee. Exeunt.

[Scene II. Friar Lawrence's cell.]

Enter Friar JOHN to Friar LAWRENCE.

JOHN

Holy Franciscan friar, brother, ho!

45 account number 47 cakes of roses pressed rose petals
 (for perfume) 52 caitiff miserable 60 soon-speeding gear fast-working stuff 63 trunk body 67 utters dispenses 70 starveth stand starving 85 cordial restorative

V.i.i flattering illusory 3 bosom's lord heart 11 shadows dreams 18 monument tomb 21 post post horses 23 office duty 28 import suggest 39 weeds clothes; overwhelming overhanging 40 Culling of simples collecting medicinal herbs

Enter [Friar] LAWRENCE.

LAWRENCE

This same should be the voice of Friar John.
Welcome from Mantua. What says Romeo?
Or, if his mind be writ, give me his letter.

JOHN

Going to find a barefoot brother out,
One of our order, to associate^o me
Here in this city visiting the sick,
And finding him, the searchers^o of the town,
Suspecting that we both were in a house
Where the infectious pestilence did reign,
Sealed up the doors, and would not let us forth,
So that my speed to Mantua there was stayed.

LAWRENCE

Who bare my letter, then, to Romeo?

JOHN

I could not send it—here it is again—
Nor get a messenger to bring it thee,
So fearful were they of infection.

LAWRENCE

Unhappy fortune! By my brotherhood,^o
The letter was not nice,^o but full of charge,^o
Of dear import; and the neglecting it
May do much danger. Friar John, go hence,
Get me an iron crow^o and bring it straight
Unto my cell.

JOHN Brother, I'll go and bring it thee. Exit.

LAWRENCE

Now must I to the monument alone.
Within this three hours will fair Juliet wake.
She will beshrew^o me much that Romeo
Hath had no notice of these accidents;^o
But I will write again to Mantua,
And keep her at my cell till Romeo come—
Poor living corse, closed in a dead man's tomb! Exit.

[Scene III. A churchyard; in it a monument belonging to the Capulets.]

Enter PARIS and his PAGE [with flowers and sweet water].

PARIS

Give me thy torch, boy. Hence, and stand aloof.
Yet put it out, for I would not be seen.
Under yond yew trees lay thee all along,^o
Holding thy ear close to the hollow ground.
So shall no foot upon the churchyard tread
(Being loose, unfirm, with digging up of graves)
But thou shalt hear it. Whistle then to me,
As signal that thou hearest something approach.
Give me those flowers. Do as I bid thee, go.

PAGE [Aside.]

I am almost afraid to stand alone
Here in the churchyard; yet I will adventure.^o

[Retires.]

V.ii.6 associate accompany 8 searchers health officers 17 brotherhood religious order 18 nice trivial; charge importance 21 crow crowbar 25 beshrew blame 26
accidents happenings

V.iii.3 lay . . . along lie at full length 11 adventure risk it

PARIS

Sweet flower, with flowers thy bridal bed I strew
(O woe! thy canopy is dust and stones)
Which with sweet^o water nightly I will dew;
Or, wanting that, with tears distilled by moans. 15
The obsequies that I for thee will keep Nightly shall be to strew thy grave and weep.

Whistle BOY.

The boy gives warning something doth approach.
What cursèd foot wanders this way tonight
To cross^o my obsequies and true love's rite? 20
What, with a torch? Muffle^o me, night, awhile.
[Retires.]

Enter ROMEO [and BALTHASAR with a torch, a mattock, and a crow of iron].

ROMEO

Give me that mattock and the wrenching iron. 15
Hold, take this letter. Early in the morning
See thou deliver it to my lord and father.
Give me the light. Upon thy life I charge thee, 25
Whate'er thou hearest or see'st, stand all aloof
And do not interrupt me in my course.
Why I descend into this bed of death
Is partly to behold my lady's face,
But chiefly to take thence from her dead finger 30
A precious ring—a ring that I must use
In dear employment.^o Therefore hence, be gone.
But if thou, jealous,^o dost return to pry
In what I farther shall intend to do,
By heaven, I will tear thee joint by joint 35
And strew this hungry churchyard with thy limbs.
The time and my intents are savage-wild,
More fierce and more inexorable far
Than empty tigers or the roaring sea.

BALTHASAR

I will be gone, sir, and not trouble ye. 40

ROMEO

So shalt thou show me friendship. Take thou that.
Live, and be prosperous; and farewell, good fellow.

BALTHASAR [Aside.]

For all this same, I'll hide me hereabout.
His looks I fear, and his intents I doubt.^o [Retires.]

ROMEO

Thou detestable maw,^o thou womb of death, 45
Gorged with the dearest morsel of the earth,
Thus I enforce thy rotten jaws to open,
And in despite^o I'll cram thee with more food.
[ROMEO opens the tomb.]

PARIS

This is that banished haughty Montague
That murd'ed my love's cousin—with which grief 50
It is supposed the fair creature died—
And here is come to do some villainous shame
To the dead bodies. I will apprehend him.
Stop thy unhallowèd toil, vile Montague!
Can vengeance be pursued further than death? 55

14 sweet perfumed 20 cross interrupt 21 Muffle hide 32
dear employment important business 33 jealous curious 44 doubt suspect 45 maw stomach 48 in despite to spite
you

Condemnèd villain, I do apprehend thee.
Obey, and go with me; for thou must die.

ROMEO

I must indeed; and therefore came I hither.
Good gentle youth, tempt not a desp'rate man.
Fly hence and leave me. Think upon these gone; 60
Let them affright thee. I beseech thee, youth,
Put not another sin upon my head
By urging me to fury. O, be gone!
By heaven, I love thee better than myself,
For I come hither armed against myself. 65
Stay not, be gone. Live, and hereafter say
A madman's mercy bid thee run away.

PARIS

I do defy thy conjurations.^o
And apprehend thee for a felon here.

ROMEO

Wilt thou provoke me? Then have at thee, boy! 70
[They fight.]

PAGE

O Lord, they fight! I will go call the watch.
[Exit. PARIS falls.]

PARIS

O, I am slain! If thou be merciful,
Open the tomb, lay me with Juliet. [Dies.]

ROMEO

In faith, I will. Let me peruse this face.
Mercutio's kinsman, noble County Paris! 75
What said my man when my betossèd soul
Did not attend^o him as we rode? I think
He told me Paris should have married Juliet.
Said he not so, or did I dream it so?
Or am I mad, hearing him talk of Juliet,
To think it was so? O, give me thy hand,
One writ with me in sour misfortune's book!
I'll bury thee in a triumphant grave.
A grave? O, no, a lanthorn,^o slaught' red youth,
For here lies Juliet, and her beauty makes
This vault a feasting presence^o full of light.
Death, lie thou there, by a dead man interred.

[Lays him in the tomb.]

How oft when men are at the point of death
Have they been merry! Which their keepers^o call
A lightning before death. O, how may I
Call this a lightning? O my love, my wife!
Death, that hath sucked the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet upon thy beauty.
Thou art not conquered. Beauty's ensign^o yet
Is crimson in thy lips and in thy cheeks,
And death's pale flag is not advanced there.
Tybalt, liest thou there in thy bloody sheet?
O, what more favor can I do to thee
Than with that hand that cut thy youth in twain
To sunder his that was thine enemy?
Forgive me, cousin! Ah, dear Juliet,
Why art thou yet so fair? Shall I believe
That unsubstantial Death is amorous,

And that the lean abhorrèd monster keeps
Thee here in dark to be his paramour? 105
For fear of that I still will stay with thee
And never from this pallet of dim night
Depart again. Here, here will I remain
With worms that are thy chambermaids. O, here
Will I set up my everlasting rest
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh. Eyes, look your last!
Arms, take your last embrace! And, lips, O you
The doors of breath, seal with a righteous kiss
A dateless^o bargain to engrossing^o death! 115
Come, bitter conduct;^o come, unsavory guide!
Thou desperate pilot,^o now at once run on
The dashing rocks thy seasick weary bark!
Here's to my love! [Drinks.] O true apothecary!
Thy drugs are quick. Thus with a kiss I die. 120

[Falls.]

Enter FRIAR [Lawrence], with lanthorn, crow, and spade.

FRIAR

Saint Francis be my speed!^o How oft tonight
Have my old feet stumbled^o at graves! Who's there?

BALTHASAR

Here's one, a friend, and one that knows you well.

FRIAR

Bliss be upon you! Tell me, good my friend,
What torch is yond that vainly lends his light 125
To grubs and eyeless skulls? As I discern,
It burneth in the Capels' monument.

BALTHASAR

It doth so, holy sir; and there's my master,
One that you love.

FRIAR

Who is it?

BALTHASAR

Romeo.

FRIAR

How long hath he been there?

BALTHASAR

Full half an hour. 130

FRIAR

Go with me to the vault.

BALTHASAR

I dare not, sir.

My master knows not but I am gone hence,
And fearfully did menace me with death
If I did stay to look on his intents.

FRIAR

Stay then; I'll go alone. Fear comes upon me. 135
O, much I fear some ill unthrifty^o thing.

BALTHASAR

As I did sleep under this yew tree here,
I dreamt my master and another fought,
And that my master slew him.

FRIAR

Romeo!

Alack, alack, what blood is this which stains
The stony entrance of this sepulcher? 140
What mean these masterless and gory swords
To lie discolored by this place of peace?

[Enters the tomb.]

Romeo! O, pale! Who else? What, Paris too?

68 conjurations solemn charges 77 attend give attention to 84 lanthorn lantern (a windowed erection on the top of a dome or room to admit light) 86 feasting presence festive presence chamber 89 keepers jailers 94 ensign banner

115 dateless eternal; engrossing all-buying, all-encompassing 116 conduct guide 117 desperate pilot himself 121 speed help 122 stumbled a bad omen 136 unthrifty unlucky

And steeped in blood? Ah, what an unkind^o hour
Is guilty of this lamentable chance!
The lady stirs.

[JULIET rises.]

JULIET

O comfortable^o friar! Where is my lord?
I do remember well where I should be,
And there I am. Where is my Romeo?

FRIAR

I hear some noise. Lady, come from that nest
Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep.
A greater power than we can contradict
Hath thwarted our intents. Come, come away.
Thy husband in thy bosom there lies dead;
And Paris too. Come, I'll dispose of thee
Among a sisterhood of holy nuns.
Stay not to question, for the watch is coming.
Come, go, good Juliet. I dare no longer stay.

JULIET

Go, get thee hence, for I will not away. Exit [FRIAR]. 160
What's here? A cup, closed in my true love's hand?
Poison, I see, hath been his timeless^o end.
O churl!^o Drunk all, and left no friendly drop
To help me after? I will kiss thy lips.
Haply some poison yet doth hang on them 165
To make me die with a restorative.

[Kisses him.]

Thy lips are warm!

CHIEF WATCHMAN [Within.] Lead, boy. Which way?

JULIET

Yea, noise? Then I'll be brief. O happy^o dagger! 170

[Snatches Romeo's dagger.]

This is thy sheath; there rust, and let me die.

[She stabs herself and falls.]

Enter [Paris'] BOY and WATCH.

BOY

This is the place. There, where the torch doth burn.

CHIEF WATCHMAN

The ground is bloody. Search about the churchyard.
Go, some of you; whoe'er you find attach.

[Exeunt some of the WATCH.]

Pitiful sight! Here lies the county slain;
And Juliet bleeding, warm, and newly dead,
Who here hath lain this two days buried. 175

Go, tell the prince; run to the Capulets;
Raise up the Montagues; some others search.

[Exeunt others of the WATCH.]

We see the ground whereon these woes do lie,
But the true ground^o of all these piteous woes
We cannot without circumstance^o descry. 180

Enter [some of the WATCH, with] Romeo's man
[BALTHASAR].

145 SECOND WATCHMAN

Here's Romeo's man. We found him in the churchyard.

CHIEF WATCHMAN

Hold him in safety till the prince come hither.

Enter FRIAR [Lawrence] and another WATCHMAN.

THIRD WATCHMAN

150 Here is a friar that trembles, sighs, and weeps. 185
We took this mattock and this spade from him
As he was coming from this churchyard's side.

CHIEF WATCHMAN

A great suspicion! Stay the friar too.

Enter the PRINCE [and ATTENDANTS].

155

PRINCE

What misadventure is so early up,
That calls our person from our morning rest? 190

Enter CAPULET and his wife [LADY CAPULET, with others].

CAPULET

What should it be, that is so shrieked abroad?

LADY CAPULET

165 O, the people in the street cry "Romeo,"
Some "Juliet," and some "Paris"; and all run
With open outcry toward our monument.

PRINCE

What fear is this which startles in your ears? 195

CHIEF WATCHMAN

Sovereign, here lies the County Paris slain;
And Romeo dead; and Juliet, dead before,
Warm and new killed.

PRINCE

Search, seek, and know how this foul murder comes.

CHIEF WATCHMAN

Here is a friar, and slaughtered Romeo's man, 200
With instruments upon them fit to open
These dead men's tombs.

CAPULET

O heavens! O wife, look how our daughter bleeds!
This dagger hath mista'en, for, lo, his house^o
Is empty on the back of Montague, 205
And it missheathèd in my daughter's bosom!

LADY CAPULET

O me, this sight of death is as a bell
That warns my old age to a sepulcher.

Enter MONTAGUE [and others].

PRINCE

Come, Montague; for thou art early up
To see thy son and heir more early down. 210

MONTAGUE

Alas, my liege, my wife is dead tonight!
Grief of my son's exile hath stopped her breath.
What further woe conspires against mine age?

PRINCE

Look, and thou shalt see.

MONTAGUE

O thou untaught! What manners is in this, 215
To press before thy father to a grave?

204 his house its sheath

145 unkind unnatural 148 comfortable comforting 162 timeless untimely 163 churl rude fellow 170 happy opportune 181 ground cause 182 circumstance details

PRINCE

Seal up the mouth of outrage^o for a while,
 Till we can clear these ambiguities
 And know their spring, their head, their true descent;
 And then will I be general of your woes^o
 And lead you even to death. Meantime forbear,
 And let mischance be slave to patience.
 Bring forth the parties of suspicion.

FRIAR

I am the greatest, able to do least,
 Yet most suspected, as the time and place
 Doth make against me, of this direful murder;
 And here I stand, both to impeach and purge^o
 Myself condemnèd and myself excused.

PRINCE

Then say at once what thou dost know in this.

FRIAR

I will be brief, for my short date of breath^o
 Is not so long as is a tedious tale.
 Romeo, there dead, was husband to that Juliet;
 And she, there dead, that's Romeo's faithful wife.
 I married them; and their stol'n marriage day
 Was Tybalt's doomsday, whose untimely death
 Banished the new-made bridegroom from this city;
 For whom, and not for Tybalt, Juliet pined.
 You, to remove that siege òf grief from her,
 Betrothed and would have married her perforce
 To County Paris. Then comes she to me
 And with wild looks bid me devise some mean
 To rid her from this second marriage,
 Or in my cell there would she kill herself.
 Then gave I her (so tutored by my art)
 A sleeping potion; which so took effect
 As I intended, for it wrought on her
 The form of death. Meantime I writ to Romeo
 That he should hither come as^o this dire night
 To help to take her from her borrowed grave,
 Being the time the potion's force should cease.
 But he which bore my letter, Friar John,
 Was stayed by accident, and yesternight
 Returned my letter back. Then all alone
 At the prefixèd hour of her waking
 Came I to take her from her kindred's vault;
 Meaning to keep her closely^o at my cell
 Till I conveniently could send to Romeo.
 But when I came, some minute ere the time
 Of her awakening, here untimely lay
 The noble Paris and true Romeo dead.
 She wakes; and I entreated her come forth
 And bear this work of heaven with patience;
 But then a noise did scare me from the tomb,
 And she, too desperate, would not go with me,
 But, as it seems, did violence on herself.
 All this I know, and to the marriage

Her nurse is privy;^o and if aught in this Miscarried by my fault, let my old life
 Be sacrificed some hour before his time
 Unto the rigor of severest law.

270

220 PRINCE

We still^o have known thee for a holy man.
 Where's Romeo's man? What can he say to this?

BALTHASAR

I brought my master news of Juliet's death;
 And then in post he came from Mantua
 To this same place, to this same monument.
 This letter he early bid me give his father,
 And threat'ned me with death, going in the vault,
 If I departed not and left him there.

275

PRINCE

Give me the letter. I will look on it.
 Where is the county's page that raised the watch?
 Sirrah, what made your master^o in this place?

280

BOY

He came with flowers to strew his lady's grave;
 And bid me stand aloof, and so I did.
 Anon comes one with light to ope the tomb;
 And by and by^o my master drew on him;
 And then I ran away to call the watch.

285

PRINCE

This letter doth make good the friar's words,
 Their course of love, the tidings of her death;
 And here he writes that he did buy a poison
 Of a poor pothecary and therewithal^o
 Came to this vault to die and lie with Juliet.
 Where be these enemies? Capulet, Montague,
 See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
 That heaven finds means to kill your joys with love.
 And I, for winking at^o your discords too,
 Have lost a brace^o of kinsmen. All are punished.

290

295

CAPULET

O brother Montague, give me thy hand.
 This is my daughter's jointure,^o for no more
 Can I demand.

MONTAGUE But I can give thee more;
 For I will raise her statue in pure gold,
 That whiles Verona by that name is known,
 There shall no figure at such rate^o be set
 As that of true and faithful Juliet.

300

CAPULET

As rich shall Romeo's by his lady's lie—
 Poor sacrifices of our enmity!

305

260 PRINCE

A glooming^o peace this morning with it brings.
 The sun for sorrow will not show his head.
 Go hence, to have more talk of these sad things;
 Some shall be pardoned, and some punished;
 For never was a story of more woe
 Than this of Juliet and her Romeo. [Exeunt omnes.]

310

217 the . . . outrage these violent cries 220 general . . .
 woes leader in your sorrowing 227 impeach and purge make charges and exonerate 230 date of breath term of life 248 as on 256 closely hidden

267 privy accessory 271 still always 281 made your master was your master doing 285 by and by soon 290 therewithal therewith 295 winking at closing eyes to 296 brace pair
 (i.e., Mercutio and Paris) 298 jointure marriage settlement
 302 rate value 306 glooming cloudy

A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM

EDITED BY WOLFGANG CLEMEN

Introduction

A study of Shakespeare's development as a dramatic artist shows that one of his supreme achievements during his "middle period" consists in combining heterogeneous elements in a single play. The dramas of Shakespeare's predecessors all exist on a smaller scale, mostly adhering to one particular type and keeping within more limited resources of style and subject matter. However, even in his very first comedies, The Two Gentlemen of Verona, The Comedy of Errors, and Love's Labor's Lost, we see Shakespeare widening the scope of the dramatic genre to which these plays belong and introducing new elements taken over from other sections of the literary tradition of the past. A Midsummer Night's Dream, then, which must have been written about 1595, combines for the first time totally disparate worlds into one unified whole; the sharp contrasts brought together there would have destroyed the play's balance in the hands of any lesser playwright. For, indeed, it required Shakespeare's genius to bring together Bottom and Puck, the crude realism of the artisans and the exquisite delicacy of the fairy world, the stylized and pointed repartee of the Athenian lovers and the dignified manner of Theseus and Hippolyta. What we find are contrasts on many levels, exemplified by diversified means. Yet Shakespeare strikes an equilibrium between these contrasts, reconciling and fusing the discordant factors within the organic body of his comedy. A Midsummer Night's Dream, therefore, not only exhibits bold contrasts and divergent elements of plot, atmosphere, and character; it also illustrates the unifying power of the spirit of comedy and the poetic imagination. We further find that the play's unity is reinforced by a subtle technique of counterpoint and juxtaposition, a skillful contrasting of different strands of plot, and the creation of an atmosphere full of illusion, wonder, and strangeness, all of which facilitate the many transitions occurring during the course of the play.

Some facts about its origin and title may help us better to understand the particular nature of the play. A Midsummer Night's Dream is clearly related to the practices of midsummer night, the night before June 24, which was the date of Saint John the Baptist's festival and hence connected with merrymaking, various superstitions and folk customs, dances, pageants, and revels. More than any other night in the year, midsummer night suggested enchantment and witchcraft, something which Shakespeare has superbly embodied in his fairy world. To an Elizabethan audience, moreover, the play's title would have immediately called to mind the so-called midsummer madness, which was a state of mind marked by a heightened readiness to believe in the delusions of the imagination that were thought to befall the minds of men after days of great summer heat. Thus, by means of his highly suggestive title, Shakespeare has firmly planted the dreamlike action of his drama in the popular beliefs and customs of his time. Furthermore the title gives theatergoers and readers a clue as to how the work should be understood—namely, as an unrealistic creation of the imagination, a series of dream images containing all the contradictions and inconsistencies that dreams normally possess, but containing too their symbolic content. Indeed, the dreamlike character of what takes place is repeatedly alluded to. In Puck's Epilogue, for instance, the audience themselves are explicitly addressed:

And this weak and idle theme,
No more yielding but a dream,
Gentles, do not reprehend.

(V.i.426–28)

In short, the play's title makes significant allusion to the nature and meaning of the work, though it makes no reference to the period of time during which the events of the drama occur. In fact, the action takes place between April 29 and May 1, the latter date, being that of May Day, demanding of course particular celebrations, and for that reason it is perhaps a suitable day for the marriage of Theseus and Hippolyta.

Now the wedding of the princely pair is not only the destination of the action; it is also the occasion for which the play itself was written. A Midsummer Night's Dream was undoubtedly intended as a dramatic epithalamium to celebrate the marriage of some aristocratic couple. (The attempts made to fix on a definite historical marriage, however, must remain conjectural.) Plays written for such festive occasions addressed themselves to an aristocratic audience. They were mostly performed on private stages rather than in public theaters and revealed an entirely different style of performance from the popular dramas. The relationship of A Midsummer Night's Dream to the court masque—something which V.i.40 draws attention to—also comes in here. The masques formed a central part of the entertainments that were always given at court celebrations, and several noticeable features in A Midsummer Night's Dream clearly relate to the genre of the court masque. The music and dances, the appearance of fairylike creatures possessed of supernatural qualities, the employment of motifs involving magic and metamorphosis, and the vigorous stylization and symmetrical structure of some parts do indeed remind one of the court masque. Finally, the scenes with Bottom, Quince, and company may be compared to the antimasque, which formed the burlesque and realistic counterpart performed together with the masque itself.

In referring to the masque, one is only pointing out a single aspect of A Midsummer Night's Dream. We must also remember that Shakespeare has similarly taken over stylistic and formal elements from his own early comedies, popular drama, the romantic play, and the mythological dream plays of John Lyly. Shakespeare has tapped many sources, but he has nevertheless been able to create an original and independent form of drama that includes skillful organization of plot—involving the manipulation of three subplots that run parallel to one another—as well as a rich suffusion of the whole by both the atmosphere of nature and that of magic. Between a descriptive and retrospective kind of dramatic method and one that makes us see the process of things in action Shakespeare has struck a perfect sense of balance.

A study of the interrelation of the four plots reveals how their contrasts, juxtapositions, and dovetailing help to disclose the meaning of the drama. The play begins with a scene between Theseus and Hippolyta, who do not appear again until Act IV. In Act V their wedding is celebrated. The plot involving Theseus and Hippolyta can therefore be styled an “enveloping action” that provides the play with a definite framework and a firmly established temporal scaffolding; it stands outside the world of dream, enchantment, and love entanglements, suggesting the sphere of everyday reality out of which the events of the drama first develop and to which they then ultimately return. The section in I.i with Egeus, Hermia, Lysander, and Demetrius relates the Theseus-Hippolyta plot to that of the lovers, for Theseus himself appears as arbitrator in the love dispute and it will be on his wedding day that the harsh verdict he passes on Hermia is to take effect, should she not have changed her mind by that date. This verdict is the cause of Hermia and Lysander's decision to flee into the wood near Athens, so that with this the events of the second and third acts have already been determined. The comic subplot, moreover, beginning in I.ii with the gathering of the artisans to prepare themselves for rehearsal, is also announced in I.i, insofar as we learn of the entertainments to be presented on Theseus' wedding day. Theseus' promise to woo Hippolyta “With pomp, with triumph, and with reveling” can also be understood as an allusion to the dramatic entertainments that are to come later. From the very beginning, then, our expectations are raised in connection with the wedding day, which is to bring with it the artisans' play, the decision regarding the love dispute between the Athenian couples, and the festive marriage of Theseus and Hippolyta.

If this were all that Shakespeare had given us, we would have had a comedy little different from his early ones. The plot connected with the fairies, however, with Oberon and Titania at its center, not only brings considerable complications into the course of the above-mentioned matters, but also adds to the whole drama a new feature that Shakespeare had never employed before. For the supernatural, which intervenes in the activities of the characters, turns their intentions upside down, and directs their actions. It is the fairies who are responsible for the confusion, and also for the final reconciliation, thus substituting enchantment and arbitrariness for the lovers' own responsibility and power of will. Yet these influences also have repercussions on the fairies themselves, because Titania thereby falls in love with the ass-headed Bottom. Thus the world of the fairies is linked with that of the artisans, and we get those incomparably comic situations that are themselves the outcome of the fairies' intervention. Finally, a link between the plots dealing with the fairies and Theseus emerges in the conversation between Oberon and Titania in which the fairy rulers' earlier connections with Theseus and Hippolyta are recalled; and this is a moment that accelerates the pair's mutual jealousy and estrangement.

Since the fairies remain always invisible to the other members of the dramatis personae (only Bottom is ironically allowed the privilege of seeing Titania), and their deeds are accomplished without the knowledge of the other characters, Shakespeare has been able to achieve a highly dramatic effect of “double awareness.” We as audience are aware of Puck's magic juice and therefore look forward with pleasure to what might develop. We know even more than the usually omniscient Oberon, who does not realize till some time later the confusion that Puck has caused by mistake. This error on Puck's part bears deeper significance, for it shows that even the fairies can err and that the influences they exert as supernatural agents in the play do not in the least answer to anything providential, but rather contain filaments of arbitrariness, self-deception, and folly.

An insight into the peculiar nature of the fairy world in A Midsummer Night's Dream helps us to understand the entire play, for although the fairies certainly possess supernatural qualities, they are nevertheless closely linked to the world of mankind and have their share of human frailties. Their origin in the realm of the elemental and their partly instinctive, partly playful nature, together with their capriciousness and irrationality, indicate which forces and qualities Shakespeare wanted us to see as conditioning and influencing human love relationships; for the haphazard and arbitrary game that love plays with the two Athenian couples appears as a projection of the irrationality, irresponsibility, and playfulness characterizing the nature of the fairies themselves. However, the fairies not only make other people behave in a way that corresponds, as it were, to their own fairy natures; they also strengthen and reinforce people's latent tendencies. Previous to the fairies' intervention, we learn from Demetrius that he has loved Helena before bestowing his affections on Hermia (I.i.106-07, 242-43); it is not for nothing that he is termed “spotted and inconstant man” (I.i.110).

Shakespeare has interspersed his text with numerous illuminating hints referring to the fairies' peculiar traits of character and sphere of existence, so that we are able to get a vivid picture of the type of creatures they are. Although the world of the fairies exhibits several characteristics common to popular belief and folklore tradition, it is to a considerable extent a new creation of Shakespeare's own. This is particularly true when we think of Puck, whose descent from Robin Goodfellow or Hobgoblin, as he is called by one of the fairies when he first appears (II.i.34, 40), only accounts for one aspect of his being. If one examines the numerous statements that Puck utters about himself and that the other characters utter about him, one immediately realizes that Shakespeare has created a complex dramatic figure to whom is assigned a key position within the fabric of the play. Not only is Puck the comically rough and earthbound goblin with his mischievous pranks, blunt speech, and intervention in day-to-day affairs; he is also a spirit closely linked with the elements, having command over supernatural powers and capable of moving at incredible speed. As "Oberon's jester" he is close to the fools of Shakespeare's later comedies, enjoying his own jests and possessing the gift of sharp, critical observation. Keeping this last point in mind, we see that Shakespeare has assigned him the role of spectator several times during the course of the play, and as such he comments on the action and aptly characterizes the people taking part. Hence it is he who, in view of the confusion he has caused among the lovers, cries out:

Shall we their fond pageant see?

Lord, what fools these mortals be! (III.ii.114-15)

Thus Puck becomes the interpreter of the play's dramatic situations and intermediary between stage and audience as he places himself at a distance from events that have depended on and been influenced by him, and to which in the Epilogue, significantly spoken by him, he is able to look back, as from a higher vantage point. Indeed, it is remarkable how many motives determining the play's action derive from Puck, how many invisible wires he holds in his hand. Yet his interventions in the development of the plot are as much the result of a casual mood or mischievous whim as they are the result of premeditated instructions from his master, Oberon. This is shown, for instance, in the case of Bottom's transformation in the first scene of Act III. It is a paradox of the dramatic action that Oberon's well-meaning intention is turned into its opposite through Puck's mistake (Lysander, instead of Demetrius, is anointed with the magic herb), so that the activity of the supernatural forces seems to be largely conditioned by error and coincidence. Still, it is precisely this fickleness and inconstancy of fate that Puck acknowledges in his laconic answer to Oberon when the latter reproves him for the mistake: "Then fate o'errules. . . ." With these words Puck gives utterance to a basic motif in the drama.

It has often been stressed that in A Midsummer Night's Dream Shakespeare wanted to portray the irrational nature of love, the shifting and unstable "fancy" that continually falls prey to illusion, regards itself as being playful and short-lived, and is accompanied by a certain irresponsibility; whereas in Romeo and Juliet, written during the same period, love appears in quite a different shape, as a fateful and all-consuming force making claims to absolute authority and demanding that the whole of the self be yielded up to it.

But Shakespeare makes clear to us in several ways that the love between the Athenian couples is not rooted in actuality. Puck's magic juice, operating as a supernatural medium, is of course only one of the means by which Shakespeare places the relationships of the four Athenian lovers outside of reality. The love entanglements occur during a night full of dreams and enchantment, of which only an imprecise picture afterward remains in the memory of those concerned. Furthermore, it is undoubtedly the poet's deliberate intention (contrary to his practice in other plays of the same period) that the lovers should be so weakly characterized that it is impossible for us to retain them in our memory as real and differentiated human beings. We may likewise take it for granted that their symmetrical grouping and their appearance in pairs is the result of conscious stylization on Shakespeare's part. And if the style of their dialogues, together with the handling of the verse, often seems to be flat, trite, and frankly silly, this neither signifies Shakespeare's lack of skill nor justifies the contention that passages have been left in from an earlier version of the same play. Rather it gives evidence that Shakespeare intended the four lovers to be just what they are, puppets and not fully realized characters. Even the spectator to those scenes of confusion in the wood soon has no idea where he is or who precisely is in love with whom.

Above all, however, the dreamlike atmosphere of such scenes accentuates our feeling that the four lovers appear to be quite removed from any criteria applicable to reality. "The willing suspension of disbelief" that Coleridge designated as one of the poet's chief aims Shakespeare achieves by creating a world of illusion that manifests itself from the first scene onward. Dream world and reality merge imperceptibly, so that the persons concerned are not sure themselves in which sphere they move, nor whether what they have experienced has been imagination or truth. The idea that what has happened has been a dream, illusion, or "vision" is often expressed from various standpoints by the characters themselves. Dream is a key word in the drama, and the idea that everything is based on imagination is given frequent and subtle variation. The art with which Shakespeare shifts from the dream world to reality is unique. This is evident in the first scene of Act IV, where both the lovers and Bottom are depicted as awaking out of their dreams—a scene in which all four plots are brought together for the first time, whereby the mind of the spectator is made to see the boundaries separating them as being simultaneously non-existent and yet firmly fixed. Finally, as if in a series of flashbacks, the incidents that have occurred during the night of dreams are lit up once again from a distance by means of Theseus' famous speech describing "the lunatic, the lover, and the poet" as being "of imagination all compact." These words refer once more to that faculty which lies behind not only dreams, but the poet's own creations as well and under whose spell we, as spectators, have been kept during the whole course of the play; for we too have been enchanted, responding eagerly to the call of the poetry and accepting the play as an organism that conforms to its own rules, a world where strange and real things mingle in a curious way.

The illusion of a dream sequence scurrying past is also enhanced by a sense of the forward surge of time. Not only is the passing of night into morning given expression through the shifting movement of light and dark within a series of superb images and subtle allusions: the impatience and longing with which the different characters look forward to the future are perceptible from the very start, thus making time flow in an anticipatory way. Again, the language of the play is rich in images and expressions indicating quick movement, lightness, and transitoriness, thereby contributing to the overall atmospheric impression. How delicately and accurately the play's particular atmosphere, together with its theme and leitmotifs, is rendered from the very beginning, an examination of the first scene of the play alone would show, although we can permit ourselves only a few observations here.

The very first exchange between Theseus and Hippolyta conveys to us a twofold awareness of time, from the standpoint of which we contemplate a time span that culminates in the wedding day, the date of which is fixed immediately at the outset. This emerges when Hippolyta's "Four days will quickly steep themselves in night;/Four nights will quickly dream away the time" (I.i.7-8) is contrasted with Theseus' "but, O, methinks, how slow/This old moon wanes!" (I.i.3-4). During this initial dialogue Shakespeare skillfully puts us in tune with the moonlit scenes that follow by means of Theseus' comparison of the "old moon" with "a stepdame, or a dowager,/Long withering out a young man's revenue" (I.i.5-6). In this scene alone "moon" and "night" each occur five times, "dream" three times. The lines just quoted also suggest the aristocratic world of the court, where a part of the action is to take place. A further element is introduced when, immediately following, we read these instructions to Philostrate:

Stir up the Athenian youth to merriments,
Awake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth. (I.i.12-13)

Yet the entry of Egeus immediately afterward, leading in his daughter Hermia and, "full of vexation," bringing accusations against Lysander because the latter "hath bewitched the bosom of [his] child," ushers in the radically contrasting note of discord, deception, and trickery, something that is never missing in any Shakespearean comedy and is always present as an undercurrent in A Midsummer Night's Dream; for the final state of harmony reached at the end of the play both in the world of the fairies and that of the court turns out to be a resolution of previously opposed forces, a reconciliation attained after former estrangement, and "the concord of this discord" (V.i.60).

The main theme of the drama—namely, the transitoriness and inconstancy of love—is also anticipated in this first scene when Lysander describes love as momentary as a sound,

Swift as a shadow, short as any dream,
Brief as the lightning in the collied night,
That, in a spleen, unfolds both heaven and earth,
And ere a man hath power to say, "Behold!"
The jaws of darkness do devour it up:
So quick bright things come to confusion. (I.i.143-49)

This passage is illuminating because it shows how Shakespeare not only bodies forth the themes and motifs of his drama in terms of action, but also gives them expression through imagery. In no other play by Shakespeare's middle period do we find so much poetry and verse melody, or indeed nature imagery, with its references to plants, animals, and other natural phenomena; nature itself even enters the drama as a participating agent alongside the characters. A Midsummer Night's Dream should therefore be apprehended as poetry and music, and not only be absorbed and endorsed by the eye and intellect as a connected series of actions. For the play's language, by means of its images, its subtle allusions and suggestions, its verbal repetitions and rhythmic patterns, has built up a complex and finely varied tissue of ideas, impressions, and associations that constantly act on our powers of imagination and stimulate them to participate. The great range and delicacy of impact that poetic drama possesses, as opposed to prose drama, can be perfectly witnessed in A Midsummer Night's Dream.

The degree to which the language, with its proliferation of allusions, ironies, and ambiguities, creates the overall dramatic effect is made clear by those prose scenes with the artisans, where the lyrical and poetic are completely lacking. Apart from suggesting a wealth of gestures, the language used by Bottom and company is rich in implications and evokes delightful misunderstandings; it gives expression to the artisans' ludicrous ambition for higher things as well as to their rustic limitations. All this gives rise to that constant incongruity which is the prerequisite for great comedy—the incongruity existing between the basic natures of the characters and their pretensions. The scenes with Bottom, Quince, and company provide a comic and realistic contrast to the poetry of the fairies and the artificial and stylized love scenes of the Athenians. Thus the delicacy, polished bearing, and lightness inherent in all other sections of the play are counterbalanced by the uncouthness, the heavy solidity of everyday life, and a naive roughness that the artisans bring into the magical fairy world of the moonlit scenes. Puck, the shrewd onlooker, at one stage justly calls them "hempen home-spuns." But Shakespeare has made far more out of this antimasque than a merely amusing subplot filled with clownlike figures; during the course of the play one of them has come to be the most unforgettable character in the entire drama. For the lack of vitality and pronounced individuality noticeable in the other personages we are fully recompensed in Bottom, who has justly been described as the greatest comic creation in the dramatist's early work. Abundantly endowed with remarkable qualities, Bottom is continually putting himself in a comic light. There are no features of his character that at one point or another do not lead to some ridiculous situation, some unforgettable moment of contrast or unintentionally provoked comparison. Bottom's supreme satisfaction with himself and his sense of ease remain with him even in his transformed state, while his stage ambitions (he wants to play the part of the lion as well as that of Pyramus, Thisby, and the tyrant) parody the profession of acting and yet at the same time form a characteristic trait that fits him remarkably well. That his ambitions are fulfilled even before the Pyramus and Thisby drama takes place, insofar as Bottom has to play the parts of both ass and lover, is significant, just as is the marked irony that Bottom alone, out of all the persons in the play, is permitted to come into contact with the fairies—though this encounter does not impress him in the least or signify for him any unusual experience. In Titania's presence he discards nothing at all of his own personality; the ass's head, which with other people would have resulted in monstrous caricature, in his case is something that illuminates for us his real nature.

If the story of the craftsmen forms a satirical counterbalance to the plot of the lovers, then it is also true to say that the drama of Pyramus and Thisby initiates a twofold, even threefold kind of awareness. For what we get in this parody of the love tragedy is an exaggerated depiction of the four lovers' sentimentality, their high-flown protestations of love, and their pseudo-solemnity—a depiction in the form of a flashback that they themselves are now able to contemplate as spectators, serenely calm and reconciled with one another. The lovers' own relationships have likewise been a play that the fairies have found highly amusing, and these entanglements parallel the quarrel between Oberon and Titania, the quarrel from which the confusion among the lovers originated.

The play-within-the-play, superbly worked out by Shakespeare, makes us particularly aware that the entire drama has indeed been a "play," summoned into life by the dramatist's magic wand and just as easily made to vanish. When Puck refers in the first line of his Epilogue ("If we shadows have offended") not merely to the fairies, previously termed "shadows," but also to all the actors who have taken part, we realize that Shakespeare is once more making it clear to us that we have been watching a "magic-lantern show," something where appearance, not reality, is the operative factor.

It is peculiarly ironic that Bottom, Quince, and company perform the tragedy of Pyramus and Thisby as an auspicious offering on behalf of the newly established love union, thereby, one might say, presenting the material of Romeo and Juliet in a comic and grotesque manner. Thus an exaggerated form of tragedy is employed so that the preceding scenes may be parodied as comedy. The play of Pyramus and Thisby parodies not only the torments of love, which the Athenian lovers can now look back on with serene calmness, but also the Senecan style of Elizabethan tragedy with its melodrama and ponderous conventions. Shakespeare parodies these conventions here by means of exaggeration or clumsy and grotesque usage—the too explicit Prologue, for instance; the verbose self-explanation and commentaries; the stereotyped phrases for expressing grief; and the excessive use of such rhetorical devices as apostrophe, alliteration, hyperbole, and rhetorical question.

Even the elements of comedy and parody in the Pyramus and Thisby performance appear in a twofold light. Though they themselves are being mocked, the lovers smile at these awkward efforts on the part of the craftsmen, and Theseus even adds a highly suggestive commentary.

In the craftsmen's play, Shakespeare is also parodying the whole life of the theater. He calmly takes the shortcomings of all theatrical production and acting, drives them to absurd lengths, and holds them up for inspection. The lantern, which is supposed to represent the moon, makes us conscious of how equally inadequate Pyramus and Thisby are in their roles and suggests that such inadequacy may time and again have made its appearance on the Elizabethan stage. For those Elizabethan playgoers who viewed a play superficially, without using their own powers of imagination, much in Shakespearean drama must have remained completely unintelligible. It is at such narrow-minded theatergoers as these that Shakespeare is indirectly poking fun. And he enables us to see the limitations of his own stage, which had to portray a large world and create atmosphere without the elaborate scenery and technical equipment that we have today.

But the very inadequacy of the artisans' production gives emphasis to the true art of dramatic illusion and magic, as we have witnessed it in the preceding scenes, in which the evocative power of Shakespeare's language, assisted by our imagination, enables us to experience moonlight and nighttime in the woods. Theseus himself makes this point when, in answer to Hippolyta's remark, "This is the silliest stuff that ever I heard," he says: "The best in this kind are but shadows; and the worst are no worse, if imagination amend them" (V.i.211-13).¹

A NOTE ON THE SOURCE

A Midsummer Night's Dream is, together with Love's Labor's Lost and The Tempest, one of those few plays for which no specific source appears to exist. The plot, with its skillful interplay of four different actions, is of Shakespeare's own making, although single incidents and motives as well as some names and details come from widely different origins.

Thus, the enveloping action of Theseus and Hippolyta derives in part from Chaucer's The Knight's Tale. This tale begins, as our play does, with Theseus' victorious return from war with Hippolyta and also ends with a celebration at court. Moreover, the story of Palamon and Arcite in The Knight's Tale is linked with the Theseus story in a similar way and also illustrates how friendship is broken by love. But Shakespeare has modified this motif in a characteristic way, replacing the two men by two young women and adding a fourth lover, thereby not only establishing symmetry but also providing for those multiple combinations and varying relationships between Lysander, Hermia, Demetrius, and Helena that constitute the comedy of errors of the night in the forest. Shakespeare's portrait of Theseus may have been further influenced by the figure of Theseus in Plutarch's Lives, which Shakespeare read in Sir Thomas North's translation. Theseus' function as a wise judge as well as his tolerance and benevolence toward the craftsmen are features that find a parallel in Plutarch.

Oberon as the fairy king with a kingdom in the East had been made familiar through the French romance Huon of Bordeaux, while the name of Titania for the fairy queen in A Midsummer Night's Dream may have been suggested by the epithet given to Diana in Ovid's Metamorphoses (III.173). Diana, however, occurs as the "lady of the fairies" in Reginald Scot's The Discoverie of Witchcraft (1584), which supplied Shakespeare with much information about witches, fairies, and transformations and contends at the same time that belief in Robin Good-fellow was declining, and that all those stories about fairies were untrue. Bottom's "assification" may also have been suggested by Scot's account of the spells exercised by the witches but has another parallel in Apuleius' The Golden Ass, which had been translated in 1566. For the magic juice, several analogues have been pointed out, the closest being in Montemayor's prose pastoral Diana Enamorada (1542).

¹ The editor wishes to express his thanks to Dr. Dieter Mehl for assistance in the compilation of the notes.

The story of Pyramus and Thisby existed in Elizabethan times in many poetical versions, some of them exhibiting those sentimental and melodramatic exaggerations that must have prompted Shakespeare to his subtle and complex parody. It is significant that George Pettie in his Pettie his Pleasure (1576) sees in this story a parallel with the account of Romeo and Juliet. Shakespeare in his play-within-the-play obviously creates an ironic and comic parallel to his own tragedy—no matter whether Romeo and Juliet was already in existence then or soon to appear. Geoffrey Bullough, in the second volume of his Narrative and Dramatic Sources of Shakespeare, reprints eleven pieces from which Shakespeare may have drawn.

The most interesting of our play's sources are, however, the unwritten ones. For the fairy world that is presented by so many graphic details and concrete features owes much to folklore and the living tradition of the Warwickshire countryside. Shakespeare must have been intensely alive to the mass of popular superstition, legend, and folk custom still to be found in his own times. He took what he could use from these sources, adding, however, many details of his own invention and modifying several traditional traits. The fairy world which thus emerges is—if we consider its dramatic function—a new creation of Shakespeare's own poetic imagination, which has at each stage transmuted the source material "into something rich and strange."

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

The chief authority for the text of A Midsummer Night's Dream is the first quarto of 1600 (Q1), possibly printed from Shakespeare's own manuscript. The second quarto of 1619 (Q2), fraudulently dated 1600, and the First Folio of 1623 (F) correct a few obvious mistakes of Q1 and add some new ones. The Folio introduces division into acts. The present text follows Q1 as closely as possible, but modernizes punctuation and spelling (and prints "and" as "an" when it means "if"), occasionally alters the lineation (for example, prints as prose some lines that were mistakenly set as verse), expands and regularizes the speech prefixes, slightly alters the position of stage directions where necessary, and corrects obvious typographical errors. Other departures from Q1 are listed below, the adopted reading first in boldface, and then Q1's reading in roman. If the adopted reading is derived from Q2 or from F, the fact is noted in a bracket following the reading.

I.i.4 wanes [Q2] waues 10 New-bent Now bent 19 s.d.
Lysander [F] Lysander and Helena 24 Stand forth, Demetrius
 [printed as s.d. in Q1, Q2, F] 26 Stand forth, Lysander [printed as s.d. in Q1, Q2, F] 102 Demetrius' Demetrius 136 low loue
187 Yours would Your words 191 I'd ile 216 sweet sweld
219 stranger companies strange companions
II.i.69 steep [Q2] steppe 79 Aegles Eagles 109 thin chinne
158 the west [F] west 190 slay . . . slayeth stay . . . stayeth
201 not nor [F] not not
II.ii.9, 13, 24 [speech prefixes added by editor] 39 Be't Bet it
47 is [Q2] it
III.i.12 By'r lakin Berlakin 28-29 yourselves [F] your selfe
55 Bottom [Q2] Cet 68 and let or let 82 Odors, odors [F] odours, odorous 87 Puck [F] Quin 162-63 Peaseblossom . . .
All [Q1, Q2, and F print as a single speech, attributed to "Fairies"]
175-78 Peaseblossom . . . Mustardseed. Hail [Q1, Q2, and F print thus: 1 Fai. Haile mortall, haile./2. Fai. Haile./3. Fai. Haile] 195 you of you
III.ii.19 mimic [F] Minnick 80 part I so part I 85 sleep slippe 213 first, like first life 220 passionate words [F] words 250 prayers praise 299 gentlemen [Q2] gentleman 323 she's [Q2] she is 406 Speak! In some bush? Speake in some bush
426 shalt [Q2] shat 451 To your eye your eye
IV.i.74 o'er or 83 sleep of all these five sleepe: of all these, fine
118 Seemed seeme 129 this is my [Q2] this my 173 saw see 200 let us [Q2] lets 208 to expound [Q2] expound 210 a patched [F] patcht a
IV.ii.3 Starveling [F] Flute
V.i.34 our [F] or 156 Snout [F] Flute 191 up in thee [F] now againe 272 gleams beams 317 mote moth 350 Bottom [F] Lion 370 lion Lyons 371 behowls beholds 418-19 And the owner . . . rest [these two lines are transposed in Q1, Q2, and F]

A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM

[Dramatis Personae]

THESEUS Duke of Athens
EGEUS father to Hermia
LYSANDER } in love with Hermia
DEMETRIUS }
PHILOSTRATE Master of the Revels to Theseus
PETER QUINCE a carpenter; Prologue in the play
SNUG a joiner; Lion in the play
NICK BOTTOM a weaver; Pyramus in the play
FRANCIS FLUTE a bellows mender; Thisby in the play
TOM SNOOT a tinker; Wall in the play
ROBIN STARVELING a tailor; Moonshine in the play

HIPPOLYTA Queen of the Amazons, betrothed to Theseus
HERMIA daughter to Egeus, in love with Lysander
HELENA in love with Demetrius
OBERON King of the Fairies
TITANIA Queen of the Fairies
PUCK or Robin Goodfellow
PEASEBLOSSOM } fairies
COBWEB }
MOTH }
MUSTARDSEED }
OTHER FAIRIES attending their king and queen
ATTENDANTS on Theseus and Hippolyta

Scene: Athens, and a wood near it]

A C T I

[Scene I. The palace of Theseus.]

Enter THESEUS, HIPPOLYTA, [PHILOSTRATE,] with others.

THESEUS

Now, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial hour Draws on apace. Four happy days bring in Another moon; but, O, methinks, how slow
This old moon wanes! She lingers^o my desires,
Like a stepdame, or a dowager,
Long withering out a young man's revenue.^o

HIPPOLYTA

Four days will quickly steep themselves in night;

The decorative border above appeared on the title page of the second quarto edition of A Midsummer Night's Dream, 1619.

I.i.4 lingers makes to linger, delays 6 Long . . . revenue diminishing the young man's money (because she must be supported by him)

Four nights will quickly dream away the time;
And then the moon, like to a silver bow
New-bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities.

THESEUS

Go, Philostrate,

Stir up the Athenian youth to merriments,
Awake the pert^o and nimble spirit of mirth,
Turn melancholy forth to funerals;
The pale companion^o is not for our pomp.^o

[Exit PHILOSTRATE.]

Hippolyta, I wooed thee with my sword,^o
And won thy love, doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with reveling.

Enter EGEUS and his daughter HERMIA, and LYSANDER, and DEMETRIUS.

13 pert lively 15 companion fellow (contemptuous); pomp festive procession 16 I . . . sword Theseus had captured Hippolyta when he conquered the Amazons

EGEUS

Happy be Theseus, our renownèd duke!

20

THESEUS

Thanks, good Egeus.° What's the news with thee?

EGEUS

Full of vexation come I, with complaint

Against my child, my daughter Hermia.

Stand forth, Demetrius. My noble lord,

This man hath my consent to marry her.

25

Stand forth, Lysander. And, my gracious duke,

This man hath bewitched the bosom of my child.

Thou, thou, Lysander, thou hast given her rhymes,

And interchanged love tokens with my child.

Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung,

30

With feigning voice, verses of feigning love,

And stol'n the impression of her fantasy°

With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gauds, conceits,

Knacks,° trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats, messengers

Of strong prevailment in unhardened youth.

35

With cunning hast thou filched my daughter's heart,

Turned her obedience, which is due to me,

To stubborn harshness. And, my gracious duke,

Be it so she will not here before your grace

Consent to marry with Demetrius,

40

I beg the ancient privilege of Athens:

As she is mine, I may dispōse of her,

Which shall be either to this gentleman

Or to her death, according to our law

Immediately° provided in that case.

45

THESEUS

What say you, Hermia? Be advised, fair maid.

To you your father should be as a god,

One that composed your beauties; yea, and one

To whom you are but as a form in wax

By him imprinted and within his power

50

To leave the figure or disfigure it.

Demetrius is a worthy gentleman.

HERMIA

So is Lysander.

THESEUS In himself he is;

But in this kind, wanting your father's voice,°

The other must be held the worthier.

55

HERMIA

I would my father looked but with my eyes.

THESEUS

Rather your eyes must with his judgment look.

HERMIA

I do entreat your grace to pardon me.

I know not by what power I am made bold,

Nor how it may concern my modesty,

60

In such a presence here to plead my thoughts;

But I beseech your grace that I may know

The worst that may befall me in this case,

If I refuse to wed Demetrius.

THESEUS

Either to die the death, or to abjure

65

Forever the society of men.

Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires;

Know of° your youth, examine well your blood,°

Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,

You can endure the livery of a nun,

70

For aye to be in shady cloister mewed,°

To live a barren sister all your life,

Chanting faint hymns to the cold fruitless moon.°

Thrice-blessèd they that master so their blood,

To undergo such maiden pilgrimage;

75

But earthlier happy is the rose distilled,°

Than that which, withering on the virgin thorn,

Grows, lives, and dies in single blessedness.

HERMIA

So will I grow, so live, so die, my lord,

Ere I will yield my virgin patent° up

80

Unto his lordship, whose unwished yoke

My soul consents not to give sovereignty.

THESEUS

Take time to pause; and, by the next new moon—

The sealing day betwixt my love and me,

For everlasting bond of fellowship—

85

Upon that day either prepare to die

For disobedience to your father's will,

Or else to wed Demetrius, as he would,

Or on Diana's altar to protest

For aye austerity and single life.

90

DEMETRIUS

Relent, sweet Hermia: and, Lysander, yield

Thy crazèd title° to my certain right.

45

LYSANDER

You have her father's love, Demetrius;

Let me have Hermia's: do you marry him.

EGEUS

Scornful Lysander! True, he hath my love,

95

And what is mine my love shall render him.

And she is mine, and all my right of her

I do estate unto° Demetrius.

50

LYSANDER

I am, my lord, as well derived as he,

As well possessed;° my love is more than his;

100

My fortunes every way as fairly ranked

(If not with vantage°) as Demetrius';

And, which is more than all these boasts can be,

I am beloved of beauteous Hermia.

Why should not I then prosecute my right?

105

Demetrius, I'll avouch it to his head,°

Made love to Nedar's daughter, Helena,

And won her soul; and she, sweet lady, dotes,

Devoutly dotes, dotes in idolatry,

Upon this spotted° and inconstant man.

110

THESEUS

I must confess that I have heard so much,

And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof;

But, being overfull of self-affairs,

My mind did lose it. But, Demetrius, come;

And come, Egeus. You shall go with me;

115

I have some private schooling for you both.

21 Egeus pronounced "E-gé-us" 32 stol'n . . . fantasy fraudulently impressed your image upon her imagination 33-34 gauds, conceits, Knacks trinkets, cleverly devised tokens, knickknacks 45 Immediately expressly 54 But . . . voice but in this particular respect, lacking your father's approval

68 Know of ascertain from; blood passions 71 mewed caged 73 moon Diana, goddess of chastity 76 distilled made into perfumes 80 patent privilege 92 crazèd title flawed claim 98 estate unto settle upon 100 As well possessed as rich 102 If . . . vantage if not better 106 to his head in his teeth 110 spotted morally stained

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself
 To fit your fancies to your father's will;
 Or else the law of Athens yields you up—
 Which by no means we may extenuate—
 To death, or to a vow of single life.
 Come, my Hippolyta. What cheer, my love?
 Demetrius and Egeus, go along.
 I must employ you in some business
 Against^o our nuptial, and confer with you
 Of something nearly^o that concerns yourselves.

EGEUS

With duty and desire we follow you.

Exeunt [all but LYSANDER and HERMIA].

LYSANDER

How now, my love! Why is your cheek so pale?
 How chance^o the roses there do fade so fast?

HERMIA

Belike^o for want of rain, which I could well
 Beteem^o them from the tempest of my eyes.

LYSANDER

Ay me! For aught that I could ever read,
 Could ever hear by tale or history,
 The course of true love never did run smooth;
 But, either it was different in blood—

HERMIA

O cross! Too high to be enthralled to low!

LYSANDER

Or else misgraffèd^o in respect of years—

HERMIA

O spite! Too old to be engaged to young!

LYSANDER

Or else it stood upon the choice of friends—

HERMIA

O hell! To choose love by another's eyes!

LYSANDER

Or, if there were a sympathy in choice,
 War, death, or sickness did lay siege to it,
 Making it momentany^o as a sound,
 Swift as a shadow, short as any dream,
 Brief as the lightning in the collied^o night,
 That, in a spleen,^o unfolds both heaven and earth,
 And ere a man hath power to say, "Behold!"
 The jaws of darkness do devour it up:
 So quick bright things come to confusion.

HERMIA

If then true lovers have been ever crossed,
 It stands as an edict in destiny:

Then let us teach our trial patience,^o

Because it is a customary cross,

As due to love as thoughts and dreams and sighs,
 Wishes and tears, poor Fancy's^o followers.

LYSANDER

A good persuasion.^o Therefore, hear me, Hermia.
 I have a widow aunt, a dowager
 Of great revenue, and she hath no child.
 From Athens is her house remote seven leagues,

And she respects me as her only son.

160

There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee,

And to that place the sharp Athenian law

Cannot pursue us. If thou lovest me, then,

Steal forth thy father's house tomorrow night;

And in the wood, a league without the town,

165

Where I did meet thee once with Helena,

To do observance to a morn of May,

There will I stay for thee.

HERMIA

My good Lysander!

I swear to thee, by Cupid's strongest bow,

By his best arrow with the golden head,^o

170

By the simplicity of Venus' doves,

By that which knitteth souls and prospers loves,

And by that fire which burned the Carthage queen,^o

When the false Trojan under sail was seen,

By all the vows that ever men have broke,

175

In number more than ever women spoke,

In that same place thou hast appointed me,

Tomorrow truly will I meet with thee.

LYSANDER

Keep promise, love. Look, here comes Helena.

135

Enter HELENA.

HERMIA

God speed fair Helena! Whither away?

180

HELENA

Call you me fair? That fair again unsay.

Demetrius loves your fair.^o O happy fair!

Your eyes are lodestars,^o and your tongue's sweet air^o

More tunable than lark to shepherd's ear,

When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.

185

Sickness is catching. O, were favor^o so,

Yours would I catch, fair Hermia, ere I go;

My ear should catch your voice, my eye your eye,

My tongue should catch your tongue's sweet melody.

Were the world mine, Demetrius being bated,^o

190

The rest I'd give to be to you translated.^o

O, teach me how you look, and with what art

You sway the motion of Demetrius' heart!

HERMIA

I frown upon him, yet he loves me still.

HELENA

O that your frowns would teach my smiles such skill!

195

HERMIA

I give him curses, yet he gives me love.

HELENA

O that my prayers could such affection move!

HERMIA

The more I hate, the more he follows me.

155

HELENA

The more I love, the more he hateth me.

HERMIA

His folly, Helena, is no fault of mine.

200

HELENA

None, but your beauty: would that fault were mine!

125 Against in preparation for 126 nearly closely 129
How chance how does it come that 130 Belike perhaps 131 Beteem allow, afford 137 misgraffèd ill matched, misgrafted 143 momentany momentary, passing 145 collied blackened 146 spleen sudden fit of passion 152 teach . . .
patience teach ourselves to be patient 155 Fancy's Love's 156 persuasion principle

170 arrow . . . head Cupid's gold-headed arrows caused love, the leaden ones dislike 173 Carthage queen Dido (who burned herself on a funeral pyre when the Trojan Aeneas left her) 182 fair beauty 183 lodestars guiding stars; air music 186 favor looks 190 bated excepted 191 translated transformed

HERMIA

Take comfort. He no more shall see my face;
 Lysander and myself will fly this place.
 Before the time I did Lysander see,
 Seemed Athens as a paradise to me.
 O, then, what graces in my love do dwell,
 That he hath turned a heaven unto a hell!

LYSANDER

Helen, to you our minds we will unfold.
 Tomorrow night, when Phoebe^o doth behold
 Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,
 Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass,
 A time that lovers' flights doth still^o conceal,
 Through Athens' gates have we devised to steal.

HERMIA

And in the wood, where often you and I
 Upon faint primrose beds were wont to lie,
 Emptying our bosoms of their counsel sweet,
 There my Lysander and myself shall meet,
 And thence from Athens turn away our eyes,
 To seek new friends and stranger companies.^o
 Farewell, sweet playfellow. Pray thou for us;
 And good luck grant thee thy Demetrius!
 Keep word, Lysander. We must starve our sight
 From lovers' food till tomorrow deep midnight.

LYSANDER

I will, my Hermia. Exit HERMIA. Helena, adieu.
 As you on him, Demetrius dote on you!

Exit LYSANDER.

HELENA

How happy some o'er other some^o can be!
 Through Athens I am thought as fair as she.
 But what of that? Demetrius thinks not so;
 He will not know what all but he do know.
 And as he errs, doting on Hermia's eyes,
 So I, admiring of his qualities.
 Things base and vile, holding no quantity,^o
 Love can transpose to form and dignity.
 Love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind,
 And therefore is winged Cupid painted blind.
 Nor hath Love's mind of any judgment taste;
 Wings, and no eyes, figure^o unheedy haste:
 And therefore is Love said to be a child,
 Because in choice he is so oft beguiled.
 As waggish boys in game themselves forswear,
 So the boy Love is perjured everywhere.
 For ere Demetrius looked on Hermia's eyne,^o
 He hailed down oaths that he was only mine;
 And when this hail some heat from Hermia felt,
 So he dissolved, and show'rs of oaths did melt.
 I will go tell him of fair Hermia's flight.
 Then to the wood will he tomorrow night
 Pursue her; and for this intelligence^o
 If I have thanks, it is a dear expense:^o
 But herein mean I to enrich my pain,
 To have his sight thither and back again.

Exit.

209 Phoebe the moon 212 still always 219 stranger companies the company of strangers 226 some . . . some some in comparison with others 232 holding no quantity having no proportion (therefore unattractive) 237 figure symbolize 242 eyne eyes 248 intelligence piece of news 249 dear expense (1) expense gladly incurred (2) heavy cost (in Demetrius' opinion)

[Scene II. Quince's house.]

Enter QUINCE the carpenter, and SNUG the joiner, and BOTTOM the weaver, and FLUTE the bellows mender, and SNOOT the tinker, and STARVELING the tailor.^o

205

QUINCE Is all our company here?

BOTTOM You were best to call them generally,^o man by man, according to the scrip.

210

QUINCE Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit, through all Athens, to play in our interlude^o before the duke and the duchess, on his wedding day at night.

BOTTOM First, good Peter Quince, say what the play treats on; then read the names of the actors; and so grow to a point.

10

215

QUINCE Marry,^o our play is, "The most lamentable comedy, and most cruel death of Pyramus and Thisby."

BOTTOM A very good piece of work, I assure you, and a merry. Now, good Peter Quince, call forth your actors by the scroll. Masters, spread yourselves.

15

220

QUINCE Answer as I call you. Nick Bottom, the weaver.

BOTTOM Ready. Name what part I am for, and proceed.

20

QUINCE You, Nick Bottom, are set down for Pyramus.

225

BOTTOM What is Pyramus? A lover, or a tyrant?

QUINCE A lover that kills himself, most gallant, for love.

25

230

BOTTOM That will ask some tears in the true performing of it: if I do it, let the audience look to their eyes. I will move storms, I will condole^o in some measure. To the rest: yet my chief humor^o is for a tyrant. I could play Ercles^o rarely, or a part to tear a cat in,^o to make all split.

30

The raging rocks
 And shivering shocks
 Shall break the locks
 Of prison gates;
 And Phibbus' car^o
 Shall shine from far,
 And make and mar
 The foolish Fates.

35

235

This was lofty! Now name the rest of the players.
 This is Ercles' vein, a tyrant's vein. A lover is more condoling.

40

245

QUINCE Francis Flute, the bellows mender.

FLUTE Here, Peter Quince.

QUINCE Flute, you must take Thisby on you.

45

FLUTE What is Thisby? A wand'ring knight?

QUINCE It is the lady that Pyramus must love.

250

I.ii.s.d. the names of the clowns suggest their trades: Bottom object on which the yarn is wound; Quince quines, blocks of wood used for building; Snug close-fitting; Flute suggesting fluted bellows (for church organs); Snout spout of a kettle; Starveling an allusion to the proverbial thinness of tailors 2 generally Bottom means individually 6 interlude dramatic entertainment 11 Marry an interjection (originally an oath, "By the Virgin Mary") 28 condole lament 29 humor disposition 30 Ercles Hercules (a part notorious for ranting) 30-31 part . . . in railing part 36 Phibbus' car mispronunciation for Phoebus' car, or chariot (i.e., the sun)

FLUTE Nay, faith, let not me play a woman. I have a beard coming.

QUINCE That's all one.^o You shall play it in a mask, 50 and you may speak as small^o as you will.

BOTTOM An^o I may hide my face, let me play Thisby too. I'll speak in a monstrous little voice, "Thisne,^o Thisne!" "Ah Pyramus, my lover dear! Thy Thisby dear, and lady dear!" 55

QUINCE No, no; you must play Pyramus: and, Flute, you Thisby.

BOTTOM Well, proceed.

QUINCE Robin Starveling, the tailor.

STARVELING Here, Peter Quince. 60

QUINCE Robin Starveling, you must play Thisby's mother. Tom Snout, the tinker.

SNOUT Here, Peter Quince.

QUINCE You, Pyramus' father: myself, Thisby's father: Snug, the joiner; you, the lion's part. And I 65 hope here is a play fitted.

SNUG Have you the lion's part written? Pray you, if it be, give it me, for I am slow to study.

QUINCE You may do it extempore, for it is nothing but roaring. 70

BOTTOM Let me play the lion too. I will roar that^o I will do any man's heart good to hear me. I will roar, that I will make the duke say, "Let him roar again, let him roar again."

QUINCE An you should do it too terribly, you would 75 fright the duchess and the ladies, that they would shriek; and that were enough to hang us all.

ALL That would hang us, every mother's son.

BOTTOM I grant you, friends, if you should fright the ladies out of their wits, they would have no more 80 discretion but to hang us: but I will aggravate^o my voice so that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 'twere^o any nightingale.

QUINCE You can play no part but Pyramus; for Pyramus is a sweet-faced man; a proper^o man as one 85 shall see in a summer's day; a most lovely, gentleman-like man: therefore you must needs play Pyramus.

BOTTOM Well, I will undertake it. What beard were I best to play it in?

QUINCE Why, what you will. 90

BOTTOM I will discharge it in either your straw-color beard, your orange-tawny beard, your purple-in-grain^o beard, or your French-crown-color^o beard, your perfit^o yellow.

QUINCE Some of your French crowns^o have no hair 95 at all, and then you will play barefaced.^o But, masters, here are your parts; and I am to entreat you, request you, and desire you, to con^o them by tomorrow night; and meet me in the palace wood, a mile without the town, by moonlight. There will we rehearse, 100 for if we meet in the city, we shall be dogged with company, and our devices^o known. In the meantime

50 That's all one It makes no difference 51 small softly 52 An if 53 Thisne perhaps Shakespeare wrote "thisne," meaning "in this manner" 71 that so that 81 aggravate Bottom means moderate 83 an 'twere as if it were 85 proper handsome 92-93 purple-in-grain dyed with a fast purple 93 French-crown-color color of French gold coin 94 perfit perfect 95 crowns (1) gold coins (2) heads bald from the French disease (syphilis) 96 barefaced (1) bald (2) brazen 98 con study 102 devices plans

I will draw a bill of properties,^o such as our play wants. I pray you, fail me not.

BOTTOM We will meet; and there we may rehearse 105 most obscenely^o and courageously. Take pains; be perfit: adieu.

QUINCE At the Duke's Oak we meet.

BOTTOM Enough; hold or cut bowstrings.^o Exeunt.

[A C T I I]

[Scene I. A wood near Athens.]

Enter a FAIRY at one door, and Robin Goodfellow [PUCK] at another.

PUCK

How now, spirit! Wither wander you?

FAIRY

Over hill, over dale,
Thorough bush, thorough brier,
Over park, over pale,^o
Thorough flood, thorough fire, 5
I do wander everywhere,
Swifter than the moon's sphere;^o
And I serve the Fairy Queen,
To dew her orbs^o upon the green.
The cowslips tall her pensioners^o be: 10
In their gold coats spots you see;
Those be rubies, fairy favors,^o
In those freckles live their savors.^o

I must go seek some dewdrops here,
And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear. 15
Farewell, thou lob^o of spirits; I'll be gone.
Our queen and all her elves come here anon.

PUCK

The king doth keep his revels here tonight.
Take heed the queen come not within his sight.
For Oberon is passing fell and wrath,^o 20
Because that she as her attendant hath
A lovely boy, stolen from an Indian king;
She never had so sweet a changeling.^o
And jealous Oberon would have the child
Knight of his train, to trace^o the forests wild. 25
But she perforce withholds the lovèd boy,
Crowns him with flowers, and makes him all her joy.
And now they never meet in grove or green,
By fountain clear, or spangled starlight sheen,^o
But they do square,^o that all their elves for fear 30
Creep into acorn cups and hide them there.

103 bill of properties list of stage furnishings 106 obscenely Bottom means seemly 109 hold . . . bowstrings keep your word or give it up (?)

II.i.4 pale enclosed land, park 7 moon's sphere according to the Ptolemaic system, the moon was fixed in a hollow sphere that surrounded and revolved about the earth 9 orbs fairy rings (i.e., circles of darker grass) 10 pensioners bodyguards (referring to Elizabeth I's bodyguard of fifty splendid young noblemen) 12 favors gifts 13 savors perfumes 16 lob lubber, clumsy fellow 20 passing . . . wrath very fierce and angry 23 changeling usually a child left behind by fairies in exchange for one stolen, but here applied to the stolen child 25 trace traverse 29 starlight sheen brightly shining starlight 30 square clash, quarrel

FAIRY

Either I mistake your shape and making quite,
 Or else you are that shrewd and knavish sprite Called Robin Goodfellow. Are not you he
 That frights the maidens of the villagery,[°] 35
 Skim milk, and sometimes labor in the quern,[°]
 And bootless[°] make the breathless housewife churn,
 And sometime make the drink to bear no barm,[°]
 Mislead night wanderers, laughing at their harm?
 Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck, 40
 You do their work, and they shall have good luck.
 Are not you he?

PUCK

Thou speakest aright;

I am that merry wanderer of the night.
 I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
 When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile, 45
 Neighing in likeness of a filly foal:
 And sometime lurk I in a gossip's[°] bowl,
 In very likeness of a roasted crab;[°]
 And when she drinks, against her lips I bob
 And on her withered dewlap[°] pour the ale. 50
 The wisest aunt, telling the saddest[°] tale,
 Sometime for three-foot stool mistaketh me;
 Then slip I from her bum, down topples she,
 And "tailor"[°] cries, and falls into a cough;
 And then the whole quire[°] hold their hips and laugh, 55
 And waxen[°] in their mirth, and neeze,[°] and swear
 A merrier hour was never wasted[°] there.
 But, room, fairy! Here comes Oberon.

FAIRY

And here my mistress. Would that he were gone!

Enter [OBERON,] the King of Fairies, at one door, with his TRAIN; and [TITANIA,] the Queen, at another, with hers.

OBERON

Ill met by moonlight, proud Titania. 60

TITANIA

What, jealous Oberon! Fairy, skip hence.
 I have forsworn his bed and company.

OBERON

Tarry, rash wanton;[°] am not I thy lord?

TITANIA

Then I must be thy lady: but I know
 When thou hast stolen away from fairy land 65
 And in the shape of Corin[°] sat all day,
 Playing on pipes of corn,[°] and versing love
 To amorous Phillida. Why art thou here,
 Come from the farthest steep of India?
 But that, forsooth, the bouncing[°] Amazon,
 Your buskined[°] mistress and your warrior love,
 To Theseus must be wedded, and you come
 To give their bed joy and prosperity.

35 villagery villagers 36 quern hand mill for grinding grain 37 bootless in vain 38 barm yeast, froth 47 gossip's old woman's 48 crab crabapple 50 dewlap fold of skin on the throat 51 saddest most serious 54 tailor suggesting the posture of a tailor squatting; or a term of abuse (Middle English taillard = thief) 55 quire company, choir 56 waxen increase; neeze sneeze 57 wasted passed 63 rash wanton hasty willful creature 66 Corin like "Phillida," line 68, a traditional name for a lover in pastoral poetry 67 pipes of corn musical instruments made of grain stalks 70 bouncing swaggering 71 buskined wearing a hunter's boot (buskin)

OBERON

How canst thou thus for shame, Titania,
 Glance at my credit with Hippolyta, 75
 Knowing I know thy love to Theseus?
 Didst not thou lead him through the glimmering
 night
 From Perigenia, whom he ravishèd?
 And make him with fair Aegles break his faith,
 With Ariadne and Antiopa?[°] 80

TITANIA

These are the forgeries of jealousy:
 And never, since the middle summer's spring,[°]
 Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
 By pavèd[°] fountain or by rushy brook, 85
 Or in the beachèd margent[°] of the sea,
 To dance our ringlets to the whistling wind,
 But with thy brawls thou hast disturbed our sport.
 Therefore the winds, piping to us in vain,
 As in revenge, have sucked up from the sea 90
 Contagious[°] fogs; which, falling in the land,
 Hath every pelting[°] river made so proud,
 That they have overborne their continents.[°]
 The ox hath therefore stretched his yoke in vain,
 The plowman lost his sweat, and the green corn[°]
 Hath rotted ere his youth attained a beard; 95
 The fold stands empty in the drownèd field,
 And crows are fatted with the murrion flock;[°]
 The nine men's morris[°] is filled up with mud;
 And the quaint mazes[°] in the wanton green,[°]
 For lack of tread, are undistinguishable. 100
 The human mortals want their winter here;
 No night is now with hymn or carol blest.
 Therefore the moon, the governess of floods,
 Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
 That rheumatic diseases do abound. 105
 And thorough this distemperature[°] we see
 The seasons alter: hoary-headed frosts
 Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose,
 And on old Hiems'[°] thin and icy crown
 An odorous chaplet[°] of sweet summer buds 110
 Is, as in mockery, set. The spring, the summer,
 The childing[°] autumn, angry winter, change
 Their wonted liveries;[°] and the mazèd[°] world,
 By their increase, now knows not which is which.
 And this same progeny of evils comes 115
 From our debate,[°] from our dissension;
 We are their parents and original.

OBERON

Do you amend it, then; it lies in you:
 Why should Titania cross her Oberon? 70

78-80 Perigenia . . . Antiopa girls Theseus loved and deserted 82 middle summer's spring beginning of mid-summer 84 pavèd with pebbly bottom 85 margent margin, shore 90 Contagious generating pestilence 91 pelting petty 92 continents containers (i.e., banks) 94 corn grain 97 murrion flock flock dead of cattle disease (murrain) 98 nine men's morris square cut in the turf (for a game in which each player has nine counters, or "men") 99 quaint mazes intricate meandering paths on the grass (kept fresh by running along them); wanton green grass growing without check 106 distemperature disturbance in nature 109 old Hiems' the winter's 110 chaplet wreath 112 childing breeding, fruitful 113 wonted liveries accustomed apparel; mazèd bewildered 116 debate quarrel

I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my henchman.°

TITANIA Set your heart at rest.
The fairy land buys not° the child of me.
His mother was a vot'ress° of my order,
And, in the spicèd Indian air, by night,
Full often hath she gossiped by my side,
And sat with me on Neptune's yellow sands,
Marking th' embarkèd traders on the flood;
When we have laughed to see the sails conceive
And grow big-bellied with the wanton wind;
Which she, with pretty and with swimming gait
Following—her womb then rich with my young squire—
Would imitate, and sail upon the land,
To fetch me trifles, and return again,
As from a voyage, rich with merchandise.
But she, being mortal, of that boy did die;
And for her sake do I rear up her boy,
And for her sake I will not part with him.

OBERON
How long within this wood intend you stay?

TITANIA
Perchance till after Theseus' wedding day.
If you will patiently dance in our round,°
And see our moonlight revels, go with us.
If not, shun me, and I will spare° your haunts.

OBERON
Give me that boy, and I will go with thee.

TITANIA
Not for thy fairy kingdom. Fairies, away!
We shall chide downright, if I longer stay.
Exeunt [TITANIA and her TRAIN].

OBERON
Well, go thy way. Thou shalt not from this grove
Till I torment thee for this injury.
My gentle Puck, come hither. Thou rememb'rest
Since° once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back,
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil° at her song,
And certain stars shot madly from their spheres,
To hear the sea maid's music.

PUCK I remember.

OBERON
That very time I saw, but thou couldst not,
Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
Cupid all armed. A certain aim he took
At a fair vestal° thronèd by the west,
And loosed his love shaft smartly from his bow,
As it should° pierce a hundred thousand hearts.
But I might° see young Cupid's fiery shaft
Quenched in the chaste beams of the wat'ry moon,
And the imperial vot'ress passèd on,
In maiden meditation, fancy-free.°
Yet marked I where the bolt of Cupid fell.

120 It fell upon a little western flower,
Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound,
And maidens call it love-in-idleness.°
Fetch me that flow'r; the herb I showed thee once:
The juice of it on sleeping eyelids laid
Will make or man or woman° madly dote
125 Upon the next live creature that it sees.
Fetch me this herb, and be thou here again
Ere the leviathan° can swim a league.

PUCK
I'll put a girdle round about the earth
In forty minutes. [Exit.] 175

OBERON Having once this juice,
I'll watch Titania when she is asleep,
And drop the liquor of it in her eyes.
The next thing then she waking looks upon,
Be it on lion, bear, or wolf, or bull,
180 On meddling monkey, or on busy° ape,
She shall pursue it with the soul of love.
And ere I take this charm from off her sight,
As I can take it with another herb,
I'll make her render up her page to me. 185
But who comes here? I am invisible,
And I will overhear their conference.

140 Enter DEMETRIUS, HELENA following him.

DEMETRIUS
I love thee not, therefore pursue me not.
Where is Lysander and fair Hermia?
The one I'll slay, the other slayeth me. 190
Thou told'st me they were stol'n unto this wood;
And here am I, and wood° within this wood,
Because I cannot meet my Hermia.
Hence, get thee gone, and follow me no more!

HELENA
You draw me, you hardhearted adamant;° 195
But yet you draw not iron, for my heart
Is true as steel. Leave you your power to draw,
And I shall have no power to follow you.

DEMETRIUS
Do I entice you? Do I speak you fair?°
Or, rather, do I not in plainest truth
Tell you, I do not nor I cannot love you? 200

HELENA
And even for that do I love you the more.
155 I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius,
The more you beat me, I will fawn on you.
Use me but as your spaniel, spurn me, strike me,
Neglect me, lose me; only give me leave,
Unworthy as I am, to follow you.
What worser place can I beg in your love—
And yet a place of high respect with me—
Than to be usèd as you use your dog? 210

DEMETRIUS
Tempt not too much the hatred of my spirit,
For I am sick when I do look on thee.

HELENA
And I am sick when I look not on you.

121 henchman page 122 The . . . not even your whole domain could not buy 123 vot'ress woman who has taken a vow 140 round circular dance 142 spare keep away from 149 Since when 152 civil well behaved 158 vestal virgin (possibly an allusion to Elizabeth, the Virgin Queen) 160 As it should as if it would 161 might could 164 fancy-free free from the power of love

168 love-in-idleness pansy 171 or man or woman either man or woman 174 leviathan sea monster, whale 181 busy meddling 192 wood out of my mind (with perhaps an additional pun on wooed) 195 adamant (1) very hard gem (2) lodestone; magnet 199 speak you fair speak kindly to you

DEMETRIUS

You do impeach^o your modesty too much,
To leave the city, and commit yourself
Into the hands of one that loves you not,
To trust the opportunity of night
And the ill counsel of a desert^o place
With the rich worth of your virginity.

HELENA

Your virtue is my privilege.^o For that
It is not night when I do see your face,
Therefore I think I am not in the night;
Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company,
For you in my respect^o are all the world.
Then how can it be said I am alone,
When all the world is here to look on me?

DEMETRIUS

I'll run from thee and hide me in the brakes,^o
And leave thee to the mercy of wild beasts.

HELENA

The wildest hath not such a heart as you.
Run when you will, the story shall be changed:
Apollo flies, and Daphne^o holds the chase;
The dove pursues the griffin;^o the mild hind^o
Makes speed to catch the tiger; bootless speed,
When cowardice pursues, and valor flies.

DEMETRIUS

I will not stay^o thy questions. Let me go!
O, if thou follow me, do not believe
But I shall do thee mischief in the wood.

HELENA

Ay, in the temple, in the town, the field,
You do me mischief. Fie, Demetrius!
Your wrongs do set a scandal on my sex.
We cannot fight for love, as men may do;
We should be wooed, and were not made to woo.
[Exit DEMETRIUS.]

I'll follow thee, and make a heaven of hell,
To die upon^o the hand I love so well. [Exit.]

OBERON

Fare thee well, nymph: ere he do leave this grove,
Thou shalt fly him, and he shall seek thy love.

Enter PUCK.

Hast thou the flower there? Welcome, wanderer.

PUCK

Ay, there it is.

OBERON

I pray thee, give it me.
I know a bank where the wild thyme blows,
Where oxlips and the nodding violet grows,
Quite overcanopied with luscious woodbine,
With sweet musk roses, and with eglantine.
There sleeps Titania sometime of the night,
Lulled in these flowers with dances and delight;
And there the snake throws^o her enameled skin,
Weed^o wide enough to wrap a fairy in.
And with the juice of this I'll streak her eyes,

And make her full of hateful fantasies.

Take thou some of it, and seek through this grove.

215

A sweet Athenian lady is in love

260

With a disdainful youth. Anoint his eyes;

But do it when the next thing he espies

May be the lady. Thou shalt know the man

By the Athenian garments he hath on.

Effect it with some care that he may prove 265

220

More fond on her^o than she upon her love:

And look thou meet me ere the first cock crow.

PUCK

Fear not, my lord, your servant shall do so. Exeunt.

225

[Scene II. Another part of the wood.]

Enter TITANIA, Queen of Fairies, with her TRAIN.

TITANIA

Come, now a roundel^o and a fairy song;
Then, for the third part of a minute, hence;
Some to kill cankers in the musk-rose buds,
Some war with reremice^o for their leathern wings
To make my small elves coats, and some keep back
The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots and wonders
At our quaint^o spirits. Sing me now asleep.
Then to your offices, and let me rest.

230

5

235

FAIRIES sing.

FIRST FAIRY

You spotted snakes with double tongue,
Thorny hedgehogs, be not seen;
Newts and blindworms,^o do no wrong,
Come not near our Fairy Queen.

10

240

CHORUS

Philomele,^o with melody
Sing in our sweet lullaby;
Lulla, lulla, lullaby, lulla, lulla, lullaby:
Never harm
Nor spell nor charm,
Come our lovely lady nigh;
So, good night, with lullaby.

15

FIRST FAIRY

Weaving spiders, come not here;
Hence, you long-legged spinners, hence!
Beetles black, approach not near;
Worm nor snail, do no offense.

20

CHORUS

Philomele, with melody, &c.

250

SECOND FAIRY

Hence, away! Now all is well.
One aloof stand sentinel.

25

[Exeunt FAIRIES. TITANIA sleeps.]

255

Enter OBERON [and squeezes the flower on Titania's eyelids].

OBERON

What thou see'st when thou dost wake,
Do it for thy truelove take;
Love and languish for his sake.

266 fond on her foolishly in love with her

II.ii.I roundel dance in a ring 4 reremice bats 7 quaint dainty 11 blindworms small snakes 13 Philomele nightingale

214 impeach expose to reproach 218 desert deserted, uninhabited 220 Your . . . privilege Your inherent power is my warrant 224 in my respect in my opinion 227 brakes thickets 231 Daphne a nymph who fled from Apollo (at her prayer she was changed into a laurel tree) 232 griffin fabulous monster with an eagle's head and a lion's body; hind doe 235 stay wait for 244 To die upon dying by 255 throws casts off 256 Weed garment

Be it ounce,^o or cat, or bear,
 Pard,^o or boar with bristled hair,
 In thy eye that shall appear
 When thou wak'st, it is thy dear.
 Wake when some vile thing is near. [Exit.]

Enter LYSANDER and HERMIA.

LYSANDER
 Fair love, you faint with wand'ring in the wood;
 And to speak troth,^o I have forgot our way.
 We'll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good,
 And tarry for the comfort of the day.

HERMIA
 Be't so, Lysander. Find you out a bed;
 For I upon this bank will rest my head.

LYSANDER
 One turf shall serve as pillow for us both,
 One heart, one bed, two bosoms, and one troth.

HERMIA
 Nay, good Lysander. For my sake, my dear,
 Lie further off yet, do not lie so near.

LYSANDER
 O, take the sense,^o sweet, of my innocence!
 Love takes the meaning^o in love's conference.
 I mean, that my heart unto yours is knit,
 So that but one heart we can make of it:
 Two bosoms interchainèd with an oath;
 So then two bosoms and a single troth.^o
 Then by your side no bed-room me deny,
 For lying so, Hermia, I do not lie.^o

HERMIA
 Lysander riddles very prettily.
 Now much beshrew^o my manners and my pride,
 If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied.
 But, gentle friend, for love and courtesy
 Lie further off, in human modesty.
 Such separation as may well be said
 Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid,
 So far be distant; and, good night, sweet friend.
 Thy love ne'er alter till thy sweet life end!

LYSANDER
 Amen, amen, to that fair prayer, say I,
 And then end life when I end loyalty!
 Here is my bed. Sleep give thee all his rest!

HERMIA
 With half that wish the wisher's eyes be pressed!
 [They sleep.]

Enter PUCK.

PUCK
 Through the forest have I gone,
 But Athenian found I none,
 On whose eyes I might approve^o
 This flower's force in stirring love.
 Night and silence.—Who is here?
 Weeds^o of Athens he doth wear:
 This is he, my master said,

30 ounce lynx 31 Pard leopard 36 troth truth 45 take the sense understand the true meaning 46 Love . . . meaning lovers understand the true meaning of what they say to each other 50 troth faithful love 52 lie be untrue 54 beshrew curse (but commonly, as here, in a light sense) 68 approve try 71 Weeds garments

Despisèd the Athenian maid;
 And here the maiden, sleeping sound,
 On the dank and dirty ground.
 Pretty soul! She durst not lie
 Near this lack-love, this kill-courtesy.
 Churl,^o upon thy eyes I throw
 All the power this charm doth owe.^o
 When thou wak'st, let love forbid
 Sleep his seat on thy eyelid.
 So awake when I am gone,
 For I must now to Oberon. Exit.

Enter DEMETRIUS and HELENA, running.

HELENA
 Stay, though thou kill me, sweet Demetrius.

DEMETRIUS
 I charge thee, hence, and do not haunt me thus.

HELENA
 O, wilt thou darkling^o leave me? Do not so.

DEMETRIUS
 Stay, on thy peril! I alone will go. [Exit.]

HELENA
 O, I am out of breath in this fond^o chase!
 The more my prayer, the lesser is my grace.
 Happy is Hermia, wheresoe'er she lies,
 For she hath blessèd and attractive eyes.
 How came her eyes so bright? Not with salt tears.
 If so, my eyes are oft'ner washed than hers.
 No, no, I am as ugly as a bear,
 For beasts that meet me run away for fear.
 Therefore no marvel though Demetrius
 Do, as a monster, fly my presence thus.
 What wicked and dissembling glass of mine
 Made me compare with Hermia's sphery eyne?^o
 But who is here? Lysander! On the ground!
 Dead? Or asleep? I see no blood, no wound.
 Lysander, if you live, good sir, awake.

LYSANDER [Awaking.]
 And run through fire I will for thy sweet sake.
 Transparent^o Helena! Nature shows art,
 That through thy bosom makes me see thy heart.
 Where is Demetrius? O, how fit a word
 Is that vile name to perish on my sword!

HELENA
 Do not say so, Lysander, say not so.
 What though he love your Hermia? Lord, what though?
 Yet Hermia still loves you. Then be content.

LYSANDER
 Content with Hermia! No; I do repent
 The tedious minutes I with her have spent.
 Not Hermia but Helena I love:
 Who will not change a raven for a dove?
 The will^o of man is by his reason swayed
 And reason says you are the worthier maid.
 Things growing are not ripe until their season:
 So I, being young, till now ripe not^o to reason.
 And touching now the point of human skill,^o

78 Churl boorish fellow 79 owe possess 86 darkling in the dark 88 fond (1) doting (2) foolish 99 sphery eyne starry eyes 104 Transparent bright 115 will desire 118 ripe not have not ripened 119 touching . . . skill now reaching the fullness of human reason

Reason becomes the marshal to my will,
And leads me to your eyes, where I o'erlook
Love's stories, written in love's richest book.

HELENA

Wherefore was I to this keen mockery born?
When at your hands did I deserve this scorn?
Is't not enough, is't not enough, young man,
That I did never, no, nor never can,
Deserve a sweet look from Demetrius' eye,
But you must flout° my insufficiency?
Good troth,° you do me wrong, good sooth, you do,
In such disdainful manner me to woo.
But fare you well. Perforce I must confess
I thought you lord of more true gentleness.°
O, that a lady, of one man refused,
Should of another therefore be abused!

Exit.

LYSANDER

She sees not Hermia. Hermia, sleep thou there,
And never mayst thou come Lysander near!
For as a surfeit of the sweetest things
The deepest loathing to the stomach brings,
Or as the heresies that men do leave
Are hated most of those they did deceive,
So thou, my surfeit and my heresy,
Of all be hated, but the most of me!
And, all my powers, address° your love and might
To honor Helen and to be her knight!

Exit.

HERMIA [Awaking.]

Help me, Lysander, help me! Do thy best
To pluck this crawling serpent from my breast!
Ay me, for pity! What a dream was here!
Lysander, look how I do quake with fear.
Methought a serpent eat° my heart away,
And you sat smiling at his cruel prey.°
Lysander! What, removed? Lysander! Lord!
What, out of hearing? Gone? No sound, no word?
Alack, where are you? Speak, an if° you hear;
Speak, of° all loves! I swoon almost with fear.
No? Then I well perceive you are not nigh.
Either death or you I'll find immediately.

Exit.

[A C T I I I]

[Scene I. The wood. TITANIA lying asleep.]

Enter the clowns [QUINCE, SNUG, BOTTOM, FLUTE, SNOUT, and STARVELING].

BOTTOM Are we all met?

QUINCE Pat,° pat; and here's a marvail's° convenient place for our rehearsal. This green plot shall be our stage, this hawthorn brake° our tiring house,° and we will do it in action as we will do it before the duke.

BOTTOM Peter Quince?

120 QUINCE What sayest thou, bully° Bottom?

BOTTOM There are things in this comedy of Pyramus and Thisby that will never please. First, Pyramus must draw a sword to kill himself; which the ladies cannot 10 abide. How answer you that?

SNOUT By'r lakin,° a parlous° fear.

125 STARVELING I believe we must leave the killing out,
when all is done.

BOTTOM Not a whit. I have a device to make all well. 15
Write me a prologue, and let the prologue seem to say, we will do no harm with our swords, and that Pyramus is not killed indeed; and, for the more better assurance, tell them that I Pyramus am not Pyramus, but Bottom the weaver. This will put 20 them out of fear.

QUINCE Well, we will have such a prologue, and it shall be written in eight and six.°

135 BOTTOM No, make it two more; let it be written in eight and eight.

SNOUT Will not the ladies be afeard of the lion?

STARVELING I fear it, I promise you.

140 BOTTOM Masters, you ought to consider with yourselves. To bring in—God shield us!—a lion among ladies, is a most dreadful thing. For there is not a 30 more fearful wild fowl than your lion living; and we ought to look to't.

SNOUT Therefore another prologue must tell he is not a lion.

145 BOTTOM Nay, you must name his name, and half his 35 face must be seen through the lion's neck, and he himself must speak through, saying thus, or to the same defect—"Ladies"—or, "Fair ladies—I would wish you"—or, "I would request you"—or, "I would entreat you—not to fear, not to tremble: my 40 life for yours. If you think I come hither as a lion, it were pity of my life.° No, I am no such thing. I am a man as other men are." And there indeed let him name his name, and tell them plainly, he is Snug the joiner. 45

QUINCE Well, it shall be so. But there is two hard things; that is, to bring the moonlight into a chamber;
for, you know, Pyramus and Thisby meet by moonlight.

SNOUT Doth the moon shine that night we play our 50 play?

BOTTOM A calendar, a calendar! Look in the almanac; find out moonshine, find out moonshine.

QUINCE Yes, it doth shine that night.

BOTTOM Why, then may you leave a casement of the 55 great chamber window, where we play, open, and the moon may shine in at the casement.

QUINCE Ay; or else one must come in with a bush of thorns° and a lantern, and say he comes to disfigure,° or to present, the person of Moonshine. Then, there 60 is another thing: we must have a wall in the great chamber; for Pyramus and Thisby, says the story, did talk through the chink of a wall.

128 flout jeer at 129 Good troth indeed (an expletive, like "Good sooth") 132 gentleness noble character 143 address apply 149 eat ate (pronounced "et") 150 prey act of preying 153 an if if 154 of for the sake of III.i.2 Pat exactly, on the dot; marvail's Quince means mar- velous 4 brake thicket; tiring house attiring house, dressing room

7 bully good fellow 12 By'r lakin by Our Lady (ladykin = little lady); parlous perilous, terrible 23 in . . . six in alternate lines of eight and six syllables (ballad stanza) 42 pity
. . . life a bad thing for me 58–59 bush of thorns legend held that the man in the moon had been placed there for gathering firewood on Sunday 59 disfigure Quince means figure, "represent"

SNOUT You can never bring in a wall. What say you,
Bottom? 65

BOTTOM Some man or other must present Wall: and let him have some plaster, or some loam, or some roughcast^o about him, to signify Wall; and let him hold his fingers thus, and through that cranny shall Pyramus and Thisby whisper. 70

QUINCE If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit down, every mother's son, and rehearse your parts.
Pyramus, you begin. When you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so everyone according to his cue. 75

Enter Robin [PUCK].

PUCK
What hempen homespuns^o have we swagg'ring here,
So near the cradle of the Fairy Queen?

What, a play toward!^o I'll be an auditor;

An actor too perhaps, if I see cause.

QUINCE Speak, Pyramus. Thisby, stand forth. 80

PYRAMUS [BOTTOM]

Thisby, the flowers of odious savors sweet—

QUINCE Odors, odors.

PYRAMUS —odors savors sweet:

So hath thy breath, my dearest Thisby dear.

But hark, a voice! Stay thou but here awhile, 85

And by and by^o I will to thee appear. Exit.

PUCK

A stranger Pyramus than e'er played here! [Exit.]

THISBY [FLUTE] Must I speak now?

QUINCE Ay, marry, must you. For you must understand he goes but to see a noise that he heard, and is to 90 come again.

THISBY

Most radiant Pyramus, most lily-white of hue,

Of color like the red rose on triumphant brier,

Most brisky juvenal,^o and eke^o most lovely Jew,^o

As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire, 95
I'll meet thee, Pyramus, at Ninny's^o tomb.

QUINCE "Ninus' tomb," man. Why, you must not speak that yet. That you answer to Pyramus. You speak all your part at once, cues and all. Pyramus, enter. Your cue is past; it is "never tire." 100

THISBY

O—as true as truest horse, that yet would never tire.

[Re-enter PUCK, and BOTTOM with an ass's head.]

PYRAMUS

If I were fair, Thisby, I were only thine.

QUINCE O monstrous! O strange! We are haunted.

Pray, masters! Fly, masters! Help!

[Exeunt all the CLOWNS but BOTTOM.]

PUCK

I'll follow you, I'll lead you about a round,^o 105

Through bog, through bush, through brake, through brier.

Sometime a horse I'll be, sometime a hound,

A hog, a headless bear, sometime a fire;

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn,
Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn. Exit. 110

BOTTOM Why do they run away? This is a knavery of them to make me afeard.

Enter SNOUT.

SNOUT O Bottom, thou art changed! What do I see on thee?

BOTTOM What do you see? You see an ass head of 115 your own, do you? [Exit SNOUT.]

Enter QUINCE.

QUINCE Bless thee, Bottom! Bless thee! Thou art translated.^o Exit.

BOTTOM I see their knavery. This is to make an ass of me; to fright me, if they could. But I will not stir 120 from this place, do what they can. I will walk up and down here, and will sing, that they shall hear I am not afraid.

[Sings.]

The woosel^o cock so black of hue,

With orange-tawny bill, 125

The throstle with his note so true,

The wren with little quill—^o

TITANIA [Awaking.]

What angel wakes me from my flow'ry bed?

BOTTOM [Sings.]

The finch, the sparrow, and the lark,

The plain-song cuckoo^o gray, 130

Whose note full many a man doth mark,

And dares not answer nay—

for, indeed, who would set his wit^o to so foolish a bird? Who would give a bird the lie,^o though he cry
"cuckoo" never so?^o 135

TITANIA

I pray thee, gentle mortal, sing again:

Mine ear is much enamored of thy note;

So is mine eye enthralled to thy shape;

And thy fair virtue's force perforce doth move me

On the first view to say, to swear, I love thee. 140

BOTTOM Methinks, mistress, you should have little reason for that. And yet, to say the truth, reason and love keep little company together nowadays; the more the pity, that some honest neighbors will not make them friends. Nay, I can gleek^o upon 145 occasion.

TITANIA

Thou art as wise as thou art beautiful.

BOTTOM Not so, neither; but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to serve mine own turn. 150

TITANIA

Out of this wood do not desire to go.

68 roughcast lime mixed with gravel to plaster outside walls 76 hempen homespuns coarse fellows (clad in homespun cloth of hemp) 78 toward in preparation 86 by and by shortly 94 juvenal youth; eke also; Jew probably added for its jingle with "juvenal" 96 Ninny's blunder for Ninus' (Ninus was the legendary founder of Nineveh) 105 about a round roundabout

118 translated transformed 124 woosel ouzel, blackbird 127 quill literally, "reed pipe"; here, "piping voice" 130 the plain-song cuckoo the cuckoo, who sings a simple song 133 set his wit use his intelligence to answer 134 give . . . lie contradict a bird (the cuckoo's song supposedly tells a man he is a cuckold) 135 never so ever so often 145 gleek make a satirical jest

Thou shalt remain here, whether thou wilt or no.

I am a spirit of no common rate.^o

The summer still doth tend^o upon my state;

And I do love thee. Therefore, go with me.

I'll give thee fairies to attend on thee,

And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deep,

And sing, while thou on pressèd flowers dost sleep:

And I will purge thy mortal grossness so,

That thou shalt like an airy spirit go.

Peaseblossom! Cobweb! Moth!^o And Mustardseed!

Enter four fairies [PEASEBLOSSOM, COBWEB, MOTH, and MUSTARDSEED].

PEASEBLOSSOM Ready.

COBWEB

And I.

MOTH And I.

MUSTARDSEED And I.

ALL Where shall we go?

TITANIA

Be kind and courteous to this gentleman;

Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes;

Feed him with apricocks and dewberries,^o

With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries;

The honey bags steal from the humblebees,^o

And for night tapers crop their waxen thighs,

And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes,

To have my love to bed and to arise;

And pluck the wings from painted butterflies,

To fan the moonbeams from his sleeping eyes.

Nod to him, elves, and do him courtesies.

PEASEBLOSSOM Hail, mortal!

COBWEB Hail!

MOTH Hail!

MUSTARDSEED Hail!

BOTTOM I cry your worships mercy,^o heartily: I beseech your worship's name.

COBWEB Cobweb.

BOTTOM I shall desire you of more acquaintance,^o good Master Cobweb: if I cut my finger,^o I shall make bold with you. Your name, honest gentleman?

PEASEBLOSSOM Peaseblossom.

BOTTOM I pray you, commend me to Mistress Squash,^o your mother, and to Master Peascod,^o your father. Good Master Peaseblossom, I shall desire you of more acquaintance too. Your name, I beseech you, sir?

MUSTARDSEED Mustardseed.

BOTTOM Good Master Mustardseed, I know your patience well. That same cowardly, giantlike ox-beef hath devoured^o many a gentleman of your house. I promise you your kindred hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire you of more acquaintance, good Master Mustardseed.

TITANIA

Come, wait upon him; lead him to my bower.

The moon methinks looks with a wat'ry eye;

And when she weeps, weeps every little flower,

Lamenting some enforcèd^o chastity.

Tie up my lover's tongue, bring him silently.

Exit [TITANIA, with BOTTOM and FAIRIES].

[Scene II. Another part of the wood.]

Enter [OBERON,] King of Fairies, and Robin Goodfellow [PUCK].

OBERON

I wonder if Titania be awaked;

Then, what it was that next came in her eye,

Which she must dote on in extremity.^o

Here comes my messenger. How now, mad spirit!

What night-rule^o now about this haunted grove?

PUCK

My mistress with a monster is in love.

Near to her close^o and consecrated bower,

While she was in her dull and sleeping hour,

A crew of patches,^o rude mechanicals,^o

That work for bread upon Athenian stalls,

Were met together to rehearse a play,

Intended for great Theseus' nuptial day.

The shallowest thickskin of that barren sort,^o

Who Pyramus presented in their sport,

Forsook his scene, and entered in a brake.

When I did him at this advantage take,

An ass's nole^o I fixèd on his head.

Anon^o his Thisby must be answerèd,

And forth my mimic comes. When they him spy,

As wild geese that the creeping fowler eye,

Or russet-pated choughs, many in sort,^o

Rising and cawing at the gun's report,

Sever themselves and madly sweep the sky,

So, at his sight, away his fellows fly;

And, at our stamp, here o'er and o'er one falls;

He murder cries, and help from Athens calls.

Their sense thus weak, lost with their fears thus strong,

Made senseless things begin to do them wrong;

For briers and thorns at their apparel snatch;

Some sleeves, some hats, from yielders all things catch.

I led them on in this distracted fear,

And left sweet Pyramus translated there:

When in that moment, so it came to pass,

Titania waked, and straightway loved an ass.

OBERON

This falls out better than I could devise.

But hast thou yet latched^o the Athenian's eyes

With the love juice, as I did bid thee do?

PUCK

I took him sleeping—that is finished too—

200 enforcèd violated

III.ii.3 in extremity to the extreme 5 night-rule happenings during the night 7 close private, secret 9 patches fools, clowns; rude mechanicals uneducated workingmen 13 barren sort stupid group 17 nole "noodle," head 18 Anon presently 21 russet-pated . . . sort gray-headed jackdaws, many in a flock 36 latched fastened (or possibly "moistened")

153 rate rank 154 still doth tend always waits upon 161 Moth pronounced "mote," and probably a speck rather than an insect is denoted 166 apricocks and dewberries apricots and blackberries 168 humblebees bumblebees 179 I . . . mercy I beg pardon of your honors 182 I . . . acquaintance I shall want to be better acquainted with you 183 if . . . finger cobweb was used for stanching blood 186 Squash unripe peapod 187 Peascod contrary to squash, a ripe peapod 193 devoured because beef is often eaten with mustard

And the Athenian woman by his side;
That, when he waked, of force^o she must be eyed. 40

Enter DEMETRIUS and HERMIA.

OBERON

Stand close:^o this is the same Athenian.

PUCK

This is the woman, but not this the man.

DEMETRIUS

O, why rebuke you him that loves you so?

Lay breath so bitter on your bitter foe.

HERMIA

Now I but chide; but I should use thee worse, 45
For thou, I fear, hast given me cause to curse.
If thou hast slain Lysander in his sleep,
Being o'er shoes in blood, plunge in the deep,
And kill me too.

The sun was not so true unto the day 50
As he to me. Would he have stolen away
From sleeping Hermia? I'll believe as soon
This whole^o earth may be bored, and that the moon
May through the center creep, and so displease
Her brother's^o noontide with th' Antipodes.^o 55
It cannot be but thou hast murd' red him.
So should a murderer look, so dead,^o so grim.

DEMETRIUS

So should the murdered look; and so should I,
Pierced through the heart with your stern cruelty.
Yet you, the murderer, look as bright, as clear, 60
As yonder Venus in her glimmering sphere.

HERMIA

What's this to my Lysander? Where is he?
Ah, good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me?

DEMETRIUS

I had rather give his carcass to my hounds.

HERMIA

Out, dog! Out, cur! Thou driv'st me past the bounds 65
Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slain him, then?
Henceforth be never numb' red among men!
O, once tell true! Tell true, even for my sake!
Durst thou have looked upon him being awake?
And hast thou killed him sleeping? O brave touch!^o 70
Could not a worm, an adder, do so much?
An adder did it; for with doubler tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.

DEMETRIUS

You spend your passion on a misprised mood:^o
I am not guilty of Lysander's blood; 75
Nor is he dead, for aught that I can tell.

HERMIA

I pray thee, tell me then that he is well.

DEMETRIUS

An if I could, what should I get therefore?^o

HERMIA

A privilege, never to see me more.
And from thy hated presence part I so. 80
See me no more, whether he be dead or no. Exit.

DEMETRIUS

There is no following her in this fierce vein.
Here therefore for a while I will remain.
So sorrow's heaviness doth heavier grow 85
For debt that bankrout sleep doth sorrow owe;^o
Which now in some slight measure it will pay,
If for his tender^o here I make some stay.

Lie down [and sleep].

OBERON

What hast thou done? Thou hast mistaken quite,
And laid the love juice on some truelove's sight. 90
Of thy misprision^o must perforce ensue
Some true love turned, and not a false turned true.

PUCK

Then fate o'errules, that, one man holding troth,
A million fail, confounding oath on oath.^o

OBERON

About the wood go swifter than the wind,
And Helena of Athens look thou find. 95
All fancy-sick^o she is and pale of cheer,^o
With sighs of love, that costs the fresh blood
dear:
By some illusion see thou bring her here.
I'll charm his eyes against she do appear.^o

PUCK

I go, I go; look how I go, 100
Swifter than arrow from the Tartar's bow. [Exit.]

OBERON

Flower of this purple dye,
Hit with Cupid's archery,
Sink in apple of his eye. 105
When his love he doth espy,
Let her shine as gloriously
As the Venus of the sky.
When thou wak'st, if she be by,
Beg of her for remedy.

Enter PUCK.

PUCK

Captain of our fairyband, 110
Helena is here at hand;
And the youth, mistook by me,
Pleading for a lover's fee.
Shall we their fond pageant^o see?
Lord, what fools these mortals be! 115

OBERON

Stand aside. The noise they make
Will cause Demetrius to awake.

PUCK

Then will two at once woo one;
That must needs be sport alone;^o
And those things do best please me 120
That befall prepost' rously.

Enter LYSANDER and HELENA.

40 of force by necessity 41 close concealed 53 whole solid 55 Her brother's the sun's; Antipodes the inhabitants of the other side of the earth 57 dead deadly pale 70 brave touch splendid exploit (ironic) 74 misprised mood mistaken anger
78 therefore in return

85 For . . . owe because of the debt that bankrupt sleep owes to sorrow 87 tender offer 90 misprision mistake 93 confounding . . . oath breaking oath after oath 96 fancy-sick lovesick; cheer face 99 against . . . appear in preparation for her appearance 114 fond pageant foolish exhibition 119 alone unique, supreme

LYSANDER

Why should you think that I should woo in scorn?

Scorn and derision never come in tears:

Look, when I vow, I weep; and vows so born,

In their nativity all truth appears.

How can these things in me seem scorn to you,

Bearing the badge of faith,^o to prove them true?

HELENA

You do advance^o your cunning more and more.

When truth kills truth, O devilish-holy fray!

These vows are Hermia's: will you give her o'er?

Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh.

Your vows to her and me, put in two scales,

Will even weigh; and both as light as tales.

LYSANDER

I had no judgment when to her I swore.

HELENA

Nor none, in my mind, now you give her o'er.

LYSANDER

Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you.

DEMETRIUS [Awaking.]

O Helen, goddess, nymph, perfect, divine!

To what, my love, shall I compare thine eyne?

Crystal is muddy. O, how ripe in show^o

Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow!

That pure congealèd white, high Taurus^o snow,

Fanned with the eastern wind, turns to a crow

When thou hold'st up thy hand: O, let me kiss

This princess of pure white, this seal of bliss!

HELENA

O spite! O hell! I see you all are bent

To set against me for your merriment:

If you were civil^o and knew courtesy,

You would not do me thus much injury.

Can you not hate me, as I know you do,

But you must join in souls to mock me too?

If you were men, as men you are in show,

You would not use a gentle^o lady so;

To vow, and swear, and superpraise my parts,^o

When I am sure you hate me with your hearts.

You both are rivals, and love Hermia;

And now both rivals to mock Helena:

A trim^o exploit, a manly enterprise,

To conjure tears up in a poor maid's eyes

With your derision! None of noble sort

Would so offend a virgin, and extort^o

A poor soul's patience, all to make you sport.

LYSANDER

You are unkind, Demetrius. Be not so;

For you love Hermia; this you know I know.

And here, with all good will, with all my heart,

In Hermia's love I yield you up my part;

And yours of Helena to me bequeath,

Whom I do love, and will do till my death.

HELENA

Never did mockers waste more idle^o breath.

DEMETRIUS

Lysander, keep thy Hermia; I will none.

If e'er I loved her, all that love is gone.

My heart to her but as guestwise sojourned,

And now to Helen is it home returned,

There to remain.

LYSANDER

Helen, it is not so.

DEMETRIUS

Disparage not the faith thou dost not know,

Lest, to thy peril, thou aby it dear.^o

Look, where thy love comes; yonder is thy dear.

Enter HERMIA.

HERMIA

Dark night, that from the eye his^o function takes,

The ear more quick of apprehension makes;

Wherein it doth impair the seeing sense,

It pays the hearing double recompense.

Thou art not by mine eye, Lysander, found;

Mine ear, I thank it, brought me to thy sound.

But why unkindly didst thou leave me so?

LYSANDER

Why should he stay, whom love doth press to go?

HERMIA

What love could press Lysander from my side?

LYSANDER

Lysander's love, that would not let him bide,

Fair Helena, who more engilds the night

Than all yon fiery oes^o and eyes of light.

Why seek'st thou me? Could not this make thee know,

The hate I bare thee made me leave thee so?

HERMIA

You speak not as you think: it cannot be.

HELENA

Lo, she is one of this confederacy!

Now I perceive they have conjoined all three

To fashion this false sport, in spite of me.

Injurious^o Hermia! Most ungrateful maid!

Have you conspired, have you with these contrived

To bait^o me with this foul derision?

Is all the counsel that we two have shared,

The sister's vows, the hours that we have spent,

When we have chid the hasty-footed time

For parting us—O, is all forgot?

All school days friendship, childhood innocence?

We, Hermia, like two artificial^o gods,

Have with our needles created both one flower,

Both on one sampler,^o sitting on one cushion,

Both warbling of one song, both in one key;

As if our hands, our sides, voices, and minds,

Had been incorporate.^o So we grew together,

Like to a double cherry, seeming parted,

But yet an union in partition;

Two lovely berries molded on one stem;

So, with two seeming bodies, but one heart;

Two of the first, like coats in heraldry,

Due but to one, and crownèd with one crest.^o

175 aby it dear pay dearly for it 177 his its (the eye's) 188 oes orbs 195 Injurious insulting 196–97 contrived To bait plotted to assail 203 artificial skilled in art 205 sampler work of embroidery 208 incorporate one body 213–14 Two . . . crest Helena apparently envisages a shield on which the coat of arms appears twice but which has a single crest; Helena and Hermia have two bodies but a single heart

127 badge of faith Lysander means his tears 128 advance exhibit, display 139 show appearance 141 Taurus' of the Taurus Mountains (in Turkey) 147 civil civilized 152 gentle well-born 153 parts qualities 157 trim splendid (ironical) 160 extort wear out by torturing 168 idle vain, futile

And will you rent^o our ancient love asunder, 215
 To join with men in scorning your poor friend?
 It is not friendly, 'tis not maidenly.
 Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it,
 Though I alone do feel the injury.

HERMIA

I am amazèd at your passionate words. 220
 I scorn you not. It seems that you scorn me.

HELENA

Have you not set Lysander, as in scorn,
 To follow me and praise my eyes and face?
 And made your other love, Demetrius (Who even but now did spurn me with his foot), 225
 To call me goddess, nymph, divine and rare,
 Precious, celestial? Wherefore speaks he this
 To her he hates? And wherefore doth Lysander
 Deny your love,^o so rich within his soul,
 And tender me (forsooth) affection,
 But by your setting on, by your consent?
 What though I be not so in grace^o as you,
 So hung upon with love, so fortunate,
 But miserable most, to love unloved?
 This you should pity rather than despise. 235

HERMIA

I understand not what you mean by this.

HELENA

Ay, do! Persever,^o counterfeit sad^o looks,
 Make mouths^o upon me when I turn my back;
 Wink each at other; hold the sweet jest up.
 This sport, well carried, shall be chronicled. 240
 If you have any pity, grace, or manners,
 You would not make me such an argument.^o
 But fare ye well. 'Tis partly my own fault,
 Which death or absence soon shall remedy.

LYSANDER

Stay, gentle Helena; hear my excuse:
 My love, my life, my soul, fair Helena!

HELENA

O excellent!

HERMIA Sweet, do not scorn her so.

DEMETRIUS

If she cannot entreat,^o I can compel.

LYSANDER

Thou canst compel no more than she entreat.
 Thy threats have no more strength than her weak prayers. 250

Helen, I love thee; by my life, I do!

I swear by that which I will lose for thee,
 To prove him false that says I love thee not.

DEMETRIUS

I say I love thee more than he can do.

LYSANDER

If thou say so, withdraw and prove it too. 255

DEMETRIUS

Quick, come!

HERMIA Lysander, whereto tends all this?

LYSANDER

Away, you Ethiope!^o

DEMETRIUS

No, no; he'll
 Seem to break loose; take on as^o you would follow,
 But yet come not: you are a tame man, go!

LYSANDER

Hang off, thou cat, thou burr! Vile thing, let loose, 260
 Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent!

HERMIA

Why are you grown so rude! What change is this,
 Sweet love?

LYSANDER Thy love! Out, tawny Tartar, out!
 Out, loathèd med'cine! O hated potion, hence!

HERMIA

Do you not jest? 225

HELENA

Yes, sooth;^o and so do you. 265

LYSANDER

Demetrius, I will keep my word^o with thee.

DEMETRIUS

I would I had your bond, for I perceive
 A weak bond holds you. I'll not trust your word. 230

LYSANDER

What, should I hurt her, strike her, kill her dead?
 Although I hate her, I'll not harm her so. 270

HERMIA

What, can you do me greater harm than hate?
 Hate me! Wherefore? O me! What news, my love!
 Am not I Hermia? Are not you Lysander?
 I am as fair now as I was erewhile.^o
 Since night^o you loved me; yet since night you left me. 275
 Why, then you left me—O, the gods forbid!—
 In earnest, shall I say? 240

LYSANDER

Ay, by my life!
 And never did desire to see thee more.
 Therefore be out of hope, of question, of doubt;
 Be certain, nothing truer. 'Tis no jest 280
 That I do hate thee, and love Helena.

HERMIA

O me! You juggler! You canker blossom!^o
 You thief of love! What, have you come by night
 And stol'n my love's heart from him?

HELENA

Fine, i' faith!
 Have you no modesty, no maiden shame, 285
 No touch of bashfulness? What, will you tear
 Impatient answers from my gentle tongue?
 Fie, fie! You counterfeit, you puppet, you!

HERMIA

Puppet? Why so? Ay, that way goes the game.
 Now I perceive that she hath made compare^o 290
 Between our statures; she hath urged her height,
 And with her personage, her tall personage,
 Her height, forsooth, she hath prevailed with him.
 And are you grown so high in his esteem,
 Because I am so dwarfish and so low? 295
 How low am I, thou painted maypole? Speak!
 How low am I? I am not yet so low
 But that my nails can reach unto thine eyes.

215 rent rend, tear 229 your love his love for you 232 in grace in favor 237 Persever persevere (but accented on second syllable); sad grave 238 Make mouths make mocking faces 242 argument subject (of scorn) 248 entreat prevail
 by entreating

257 Ethiope blackamoor (brunette) 258 take on as make a fuss as if 265 sooth truly 266 my word my promise to fight with you 274 erewhile a little while ago 275 Since night since the beginning of this night 282 canker blossom dog rose (or possibly worm that cankers the blossom) 290 compare comparison

HELENA

I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen,
Let her not hurt me. I was never curst;^o
I have no gift at all in shrewishness;
I am a right maid^o for my cowardice.
Let her not strike me. You perhaps may think,
Because she is something lower than myself,
That I can match her.

HERMIA Lower! Hark, again!

HELENA

Good Hermia, do not be so bitter with me.
I evermore did love you, Hermia,
Did ever keep your counsels, never wronged
you;
Save that, in love unto Demetrius,
I told him of your stealth unto this wood.
He followed you; for love I followed him.
But he hath chid me hence, and threatened me
To strike me, spurn me, nay, to kill me too.
And now, so you will let me quiet go,
To Athens will I bear my folly back,
And follow you no further. Let me go.
You see how simple and how fond^o I am.

HERMIA

Why, get you gone. Who is't that hinders you?

HELENA

A foolish heart, that I leave here behind.

HERMIA

What, with Lysander?

HELENA

With Demetrius.

LYSANDER

Be not afraid. She shall not harm thee, Helena.

DEMETRIUS

No, sir, she shall not, though you take her part.

HELENA

O, when she's angry, she is keen and shrewd!^o
She was a vixen when she went to school;
And though she be but little, she is fierce.

HERMIA

"Little" again! Nothing but "low" and "little"!
Why will you suffer her to flout me thus?
Let me come to her.

LYSANDER

Get you gone, you dwarf;
You minimus,^o of hind'ring knotgrass^o made;
You bead, you acorn!

DEMETRIUS

You are too officious
In her behalf that scorns your services.
Let her alone. Speak not of Helena;
Take not her part; for, if thou dost intend^o
Never so little show of love to her,
Thou shalt aby^o it.

LYSANDER

Now she holds me not.
Now follow, if thou dar'st, to try whose right,
Of thine or mine, is most in Helena.

DEMETRIUS

Follow! Nay, I'll go with thee, cheek by jowl.

[Exeunt LYSANDER and DEMETRIUS.]

HERMIA

You, mistress, all this coil is 'long of you:^o
Nay, go not back.

HELENA

I will not trust you, I, 340
Nor longer stay in your curst company.
Your hands than mine are quicker for a fray,
My legs are longer though, to run away.

HERMIA

I am amazed,^o and know not what to say.

Exeunt [HELENA and HERMIA].

OBERON

This is thy negligence. Still thou mistak'st, 345
Or else committ'st thy knaveries willfully.

PUCK

Believe me, king of shadows, I mistook.
Did not you tell me I should know the man
By the Athenian garments he had on?
And so far blameless proves my enterprise, 350
That I have 'nointed an Athenian's eyes;
And so far am I glad it so did sort,^o
As this their jangling I esteem a sport.

OBERON

Thou see'st these lovers seek a place to fight.
Hie therefore, Robin, overcast the night. 355

The starry welkin^o cover thou anon
With drooping fog, as black as Acheron;^o
And lead these testy^o rivals so astray,
As^o one come not within another's way.

Like to Lysander sometime frame thy tongue, 360
Then stir Demetrius up with bitter wrong;^o
And sometime rail thou like Demetrius.

And from each other look thou lead them thus,
Till o'er their brows death-counterfeiting sleep
With leaden legs and batty^o wings doth creep. 365

Then crush this herb into Lysander's eye,
Whose liquor hath this virtuous^o property,
To take from thence all error with his might,
And make his eyeballs roll with wonted sight. 370

When they next wake, all this derision^o
Shall seem a dream and fruitless vision,
And back to Athens shall the lovers wend,
With league whose date^o till death shall never end.

Whiles I in this affair do thee employ, 375
I'll to my queen and beg her Indian boy;
And then I will her charmèd eye release
From monster's view, and all things shall be peace.

PUCK

My fairy lord, this must be done with haste,
For night's swift dragons cut the clouds full fast,
And yonder shines Aurora's harbinger;^o 380

At whose approach, ghosts, wand'ring here and there,
Troop home to churchyards: damnèd spirits all,
That in crossways and floods have burial,
Already to their wormy beds are gone.

For fear lest day should look their shames upon, 385
They willfully themselves exile from light,
And must for aye consort with black-browed night.

339 all . . . you all this turmoil is brought about by you 344 amazed in confusion 352 sort turn out 356 welkin sky 357 Acheron one of the rivers of the underworld 358 testy excited, angry 359 As that 361 wrong insult 365 batty bat-like 367 virtuous potent 370 derision ludicrous delusion 373 With . . . date in union whose term 380
Aurora's harbinger dawn's herald (i.e., the morning star)

300 curst quarrelsome 302 right maid true young woman 317 fond foolish 323 keen and shrewd sharp-tongued and shrewish 329 minimus smallest thing; knotgrass a weed that allegedly stunted one's growth 333 intend give sign, direct (or possibly "pretend") 335 aby pay for

OBERON

But we are spirits of another sort.
 I with the morning's love^o have oft made sport;
 And, like a forester, the groves may tread, 390
 Even till the eastern gate, all fiery-red,
 Opening on Neptune with fair blessèd beams,
 Turns into yellow gold his salt green streams.
 But, notwithstanding, haste; make no delay.
 We may effect this business yet ere day. [Exit.] 395

PUCK

Up and down, up and down,
 I will lead them up and down:
 I am feared in field and town:
 Goblin,^o lead them up and down.
 Here comes one. 400

Enter LYSANDER.

LYSANDER

Where art thou, proud Demetrius? Speak thou now.

PUCK

Here, villain; drawn^o and ready. Where art thou?

LYSANDER

I will be with thee straight.

PUCK

Follow me, then,
 To plainer^o ground. [Exit LYSANDER.]

Enter DEMETRIUS.

DEMETRIUS

Lysander! Speak again!
 Thou runaway, thou coward, art thou fled? 405
 Speak! In some bush? Where dost thou hide thy head?

PUCK

Thou coward, art thou bragging to the stars,
 Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars,
 And wilt not come? Come, recreant! Come, thou child!
 I'll whip thee with a rod. He is defiled 410
 That draws a sword on thee.

DEMETRIUS

Yea, art thou there?

PUCK

Follow my voice. We'll try no manhood^o here.
Exeunt.

[Enter LYSANDER.]

LYSANDER

He goes before me and still dares me on:
 When I come where he calls, then he is gone.
 The villain is much lighter-heeled than I. 415
 I followed fast, but faster he did fly,
 That fallen am I in dark uneven way,
 And here will rest me. [Lies down.] Come, thou gentle day!
 For if but once thou show me thy gray light,
 I'll find Demetrius, and revenge this spite. 420 [Sleeps.]

[Enter] Robin [PUCK] and DEMETRIUS.

PUCK

Ho, ho, ho! Coward, why com'st thou not?

DEMETRIUS

Abide me,^o if thou dar'st; for well I wot^o
 Thou runn'st before me, shifting every place,
 And dar'st not stand, nor look me in the face.
 Where art thou now?

PUCK

Come hither. I am here. 425

DEMETRIUS

Nay, then, thou mock'st me. Thou shalt buy this dear,^o
 If ever I thy face by daylight see.
 Now, go thy way. Faintness constraineth me
 To measure out my length on this cold bed.
 By day's approach look to be visited.^o 430
 [Lies down and sleeps.]

Enter HELENA.

HELENA

O weary night, O long and tedious night,
 Abate^o thy hours! Shine comforts from the east,
 That I may back to Athens by daylight,
 From these that my poor company detest:
 And sleep, that sometimes shuts up sorrow's eye, 435
 Steal me awhile from mine own company.
 Sleep.

PUCK

Yet but three? Come one more.
 Two of both kinds makes up four.
 Here she comes, curst^o and sad:
 Cupid is a knavish lad, 440
 Thus to make poor females mad.

[Enter HERMIA.]

HERMIA

Never so weary, never so in woe;
 Bedabbled with the dew and torn with briers,
 I can no further crawl, no further go;
 My legs can keep no pace with my desires. 445
 Here will I rest me till the break of day.
 Heavens shield Lysander, if they mean a fray!
 [Lies down and sleeps.]

PUCK

On the ground
 Sleep sound:
 I'll apply 450
 To your eye,
 Gentle lover, remedy.

[Squeezing the juice on Lysander's eye.]

When thou wak'st,
 Thou tak'st
 True delight 455
 In the sight
 Of thy former lady's eye:
 And the country proverb known,
 That every man should take his own,
 In your waking shall be shown. 460
 Jack shall have Jill;
 Nought shall go ill;
 The man shall have his mare again;
 and all shall be well. [Exit.]

389 the morning's love Aurora (or possibly her lover Cephalus) 399 Goblin Hobgoblin (one of Puck's names)
 402 drawn with drawn sword 404 plainer more level
 412 try no manhood have no test of valor

422 Abide me wait for me; wot know 426 buy this dear pay dearly for this 430 look . . . visited be sure to be sought out 432 Abate make shorter 439 curst cross

[A C T I V]

[Scene I. The wood. LYSANDER, DEMETRIUS,
HELENA, and HERMIA, lying asleep.]

Enter [TITANIA,] Queen of Fairies, and [BOTTOM the clown, and FAIRIES; and [OBERON,] the King, behind them.

TITANIA

Come, sit thee down upon this flow'ry bed,
While I thy amiable cheeks do coy,^o
And stick musk roses in thy sleek smooth head,
And kiss thy fair large ears, my gentle joy.

BOTTOM Where's Peaseblossom? 5

PEASEBLOSSOM Ready.

BOTTOM Scratch my head, Peaseblossom. Where's Monsieur Cobweb?

COBWEB Ready.

BOTTOM Monsieur Cobweb, good monsieur, get 10 you your weapons in your hand, and kill me a red-hipped humblebee on the top of a thistle; and, good monsieur, bring me the honey bag. Do not fret yourself too much in the action, monsieur; and,
good monsieur, have a care the honey bag break 15 not; I would be loath to have you overflown with a honey bag, signior. Where's Monsieur Mustard-seed?

MUSTARDSEED Ready.

BOTTOM Give me your neaf,^o Monsieur Mustard- 20 seed. Pray you, leave your curtsy,^o good monsieur.

MUSTARDSEED What's your will?

BOTTOM Nothing, good monsieur, but to help
Cavalery^o Cobweb to scratch. I must to the barber's, monsieur; for methinks I am marvail's^o hairy about 25 the face; and I am such a tender ass, if my hair do but tickle me, I must scratch.

TITANIA

What, wilt thou hear some music, my sweet love?

BOTTOM I have a reasonable good ear in music. Let's 30 have the tongs and the bones.^o

TITANIA

Or say, sweet love, what thou desirest to eat.

BOTTOM Truly, a peck of provender. I could munch your good dry oats. Methinks I have a great desire to a bottle^o of hay. Good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow.^o 35

TITANIA

I have a venturous fairy that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee new nuts.

BOTTOM I had rather have a handful or two of dried peas. But, I pray you, let none of your people stir me:
I have an exposition of^o sleep come upon me. 40

TITANIA

Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms.
Fairies, be gone, and be all ways^o away.

[Exeunt FAIRIES.]

IV.i.2 While . . . coy while I caress your lovely cheeks 20 neaf fist, hand 21 leave your curtsy stop bowing, leave your hat on (a curtsy was any gesture of respect) 24
Cavalery Cavalier 25 marvail's Bottom means marvelous 30 tongs . . . bones rustic music, made by tongs struck with metal and by bone clappers held between the fingers 34 bottle bundle 35 fellow equal 40 exposition of Bottom means disposition for 42 all ways in every direction

So doth the woodbine the sweet honeysuckle
Gently entwist; the female ivy^o so
Enrings the barky fingers of the elm. 45
O, how I love thee! How I dote on thee!

[They sleep.]

Enter Robin Goodfellow [PUCK].

OBERON [Advancing.]

Welcome, good Robin. See'st thou this sweet sight?

Her dotage now I do begin to pity:

For, meeting her of late behind the wood,
Seeking sweet favors^o for this hateful fool, 50
I did upbraid her, and fall out with her.

For she his hairy temples then had rounded

With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers;

And that same dew, which sometime^o on the buds
Was wont^o to swell, like round and orient^o pearls, 55

Stood now within the pretty flouriets'^o eyes,

Like tears, that did their own disgrace bewail.

When I had at my pleasure taunted her,

And she in mild terms begged my patience,

I then did ask of her her changeling child; 60

Which straight she gave me, and her fairy sent

To bear him to my bower in fairy land.

And now I have the boy, I will undo

This hateful imperfection of her eyes:

And, gentle Puck, take this transformèd scalp 65

From off the head of this Athenian swain,

That, he awaking when the other^o do,

May all to Athens back again repair,

And think no more of this night's accidents,^o

But as the fierce vexation of a dream. 70

But first I will release the Fairy Queen.

Be as thou wast wont to be;

See as thou wast wont to see.

Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower

Hath such force and blessèd power. 75

Now, my Titania, wake you, my sweet queen.

TITANIA

My Oberon, what visions have I seen!

Methought I was enamored of an ass.

OBERON

There lies your love.

TITANIA

How came these things to pass?

O, how mine eyes do loathe his visage now! 80

OBERON

Silence awhile. Robin, take off this head.

Titania, music call; and strike more dead

Than common sleep of all these five the sense.

TITANIA

Music, ho, music! Such as charmeth sleep!

PUCK

Now, when thou wak'st, with thine own fool's eyes peep. 85

OBERON

Sound, music! [Music.] Come, my queen, take hands
with me,

And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be.

[Dance.]

44 female ivy called female because it clings to the elm and is supported by it 50 favors love tokens (probably flowers) 54 sometime formerly 55 Was wont used to; orient lustrous 56 flouriets' flowerets' 67 other others 69
accidents happenings

Now thou and I are new in amity,
And will tomorrow midnight solemnly°
Dance in Duke Theseus' house triumphantly,°
And bless it to all fair prosperity.
There shall the pairs of faithful lovers be Wedded, with Theseus, all in jollity.

PUCK

Fairy King, attend, and mark:
I do hear the morning lark.

OBERON

Then, my queen, in silence sad,°
Trip we after night's shade.
We the globe can compass soon,
Swifter than the wand'ring moon.

TITANIA

Come, my lord; and in our flight,
Tell me how it came this night,
That I sleeping here was found
With these mortals on the ground. Exeunt.

Wind horn. Enter THESEUS, and all his TRAIN; [HIPPOLYTA, EGEUS].

THESEUS

Go, one of you, find out the forester,
For now our observation° is performed;
And since we have the vaward° of the day,
My love shall hear the music of my hounds.
Uncouple in the western valley; let them go.
Dispatch, I say, and find the forester.

[Exit an ATTENDANT.]

We will, fair queen, up to the mountain's top,
And mark the musical confusion
Of hounds and echo in conjunction.

HIPPOLYTA

I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
When in a wood of Crete they bayed° the bear
With hounds of Sparta. Never did I hear
Such gallant chiding; for, besides the groves,
The skies, the fountains, every region near Seemed all one mutual cry. I never heard
So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.

THESEUS

My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So flewed, so sanded;° and their heads are hung
With ears that sweep away the morning dew;
Crook-kneed, and dew-lapped like Thessalian bulls;
Slow in pursuit, but matched in mouth like bells,
Each under each.° A cry° more tunable
Was never holloed to, nor cheered with horn,
In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly.
Judge when you hear. But, soft!° What nymphs are these?

EGEUS

My lord, this is my daughter here asleep;
And this, Lysander; this Demetrius is;
This Helena, old Nedar's Helena:
I wonder of their being here together.

89 solemnly ceremoniously 90 triumphantly in festive procession 96 sad serious, solemn 105 observation observation of the rite of May (cf. I.i.167) 106 vaward vanguard (i.e., morning) 114 bayed brought to bay 121 So . . . sanded like Spartan hounds, with hanging cheeks and of sandy color 125 Each under each of different tone (like the chime of bells); cry pack of hounds 128 soft stop

THESEUS

No doubt they rose up early to observe
The rite of May; and, hearing our intent,
Came here in grace of our solemnity.°
But speak, Egeus. Is not this the day
That Hermia should give answer of her choice?

EGEUS

It is, my lord.

THESEUS

Go, bid the huntsmen wake them with their horns.

Shout within. They all start up. Wind horns.

Good morrow, friends. Saint Valentine is past:
Begin these wood birds but to couple now?°

LYSANDER

Pardon, my lord.

THESEUS

I pray you all, stand up.

I know you two are rival enemies.
How comes this gentle concord in the world,
That hatred is so far from jealousy,°
To sleep by hate, and fear no enmity?

LYSANDER

My lord, I shall reply amazedly,°
Half sleep, half waking: but as yet, I swear,
I cannot truly say how I came here.
But, as I think—for truly would I speak,
And now I do bethink me, so it is—
I came with Hermia hither. Our intent
Was to be gone from Athens, where we might,
Without° the peril of the Athenian law—

EGEUS

Enough, enough, my lord; you have enough.
I beg the law, the law, upon his head.
They would have stol'n away; they would, Demetrius,
Thereby to have defeated° you and me,
You of your wife and me of my consent,
Of my consent that she should be your wife.

DEMETRIUS

My lord, fair Helen told me of their stealth,°
Of this their purpose hither to this wood,
And I in fury hither followed them,
Fair Helena in fancy° following me.
But, my good lord, I wot not by what power—
But by some power it is—my love to Hermia,
Melted as the snow, seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaud,°
Which in my childhood I did dote upon;
And all the faith, the virtue° of my heart,
The object and the pleasure of mine eye,
Is only Helena. To her, my lord,
Was I betrothed ere I saw Hermia:
But, like a sickness,° did I loathe this food;
But, as in health, come to my natural taste,
Now I do wish it, love it, long for it,
And will for evermore be true to it.

135 in . . . solemnity in honor of our festival 141 Begin . . . now it was supposed that birds began to mate on February 14, Saint Valentine's Day 145 jealousy suspicion 147 amazedly confusedly 154 Without outside of 158 defeated deprived by fraud 161 stealth stealthy flight 164 in fancy in love, doting 168 idle gaud worthless trinket 170 virtue power 174 like a sickness like one who is sick

THESEUS

Fair lovers, you are fortunately met.
 Of this discourse we more will hear anon.
 Egeus, I will overbear your will,
 For in the temple, by and by,^o with us
 These couples shall eternally be knit;
 And, for the morning now is something worn,^o
 Our purposed hunting shall be set aside.
 Away with us to Athens! Three and three,
 We'll hold a feast in great solemnity.
 Come, Hippolyta. [Exeunt THESEUS, HIPPOLYTA, EGEUS, and TRAIN.]

DEMETRIUS

These things seem small and undistinguishable,
 Like far-off mountains turnèd into clouds.

HERMIA

Methinks I see these things with parted eye,^o
 When everything seems double.

HELENA

So methinks:
 And I have found Demetrius like a jewel,
 Mine own, and not mine own.

DEMETRIUS

Are you sure
 That we are awake? It seems to me
 That yet we sleep, we dream. Do not you think
 The duke was here, and bid us follow him?

HERMIA

Yea, and my father.

HELENA

And Hippolyta.

LYSANDER

And he did bid us follow to the temple.

DEMETRIUS

Why, then, we are awake. Let's follow him,
 And by the way let us recount our dreams. [Exeunt.] 200
 BOTTOM [Awaking.] When my cue comes, call me, and I will answer. My next is, "Most fair Pyramus."
 Heigh-ho! Peter Quince? Flute, the bellows mender?
 Snout, the tinker? Starveling? God's my life,^o stol'n hence, and left me asleep? I have had a most rare vision. I have had a dream, past the wit of man to say what dream it was. Man is but an ass, if he go about^o to expound this dream. Methought I was—there is no man can tell what. Methought I was—and methought
 I had—but man is but a patched^o fool if he will offer 210 to say what methought I had. The eye of man hath not heard, the ear of man hath not seen, man's hand is not able to taste, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report,^o what my dream was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballet^o of this dream. It shall be 215 called "Bottom's Dream," because it hath no bottom; and I will sing it in the latter end of a play, before the duke. Peradventure to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at her death.^o [Exit.]

[Scene II. Athens. Quince's house.]

180 Enter QUINCE, FLUTE,^o THISBY, and the rabble [SNOUT, STARVELING].

QUINCE Have you sent to Bottom's house? Is he come home yet?

STARVELING He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt he is transported.^o

185 FLUTE If he come not, then the play is marred. It 5 goes not forward, doth it?

QUINCE It is not possible. You have not a man in all Athens able to discharge^o Pyramus but he.

FLUTE No, he hath simply the best wit of any handicraft man in Athens. 10

QUINCE Yea, and the best person too; and he is a very paramour for a sweet voice.

190 FLUTE You must say "paragon." A paramour is, God bless us, a thing of nought.^o

Enter SNUG the joiner.

SNUG Masters, the duke is coming from the temple, 15
 and there is two or three lords and ladies more married.
 If our sport had gone forward, we had all been made men.^o

195 FLUTE O sweet bully Bottom! Thus hath he lost sixpence a day^o during his life. He could not have 20 scaped sixpence a day. An the duke had not given him sixpence a day for playing Pyramus, I'll be hanged.
 He would have deserved it. Sixpence a day in Pyramus, or nothing.

Enter BOTTOM.

BOTTOM Where are these lads? Where are these 25 hearts?

QUINCE Bottom! O most courageous^o day! O most happy hour!

BOTTOM Masters, I am to discourse wonders: but ask me not what; for if I tell you, I am not true Athenian. 30
 I will tell you everything, right as it fell out.

QUINCE Let us hear, sweet Bottom.

BOTTOM Not a word of me.^o All that I will tell you is, that the duke hath dined. Get your apparel together, good strings to your beards, new ribbons to your 35 pumps; meet presently^o at the palace; every man look o'er his part; for the short and the long is, our play is preferred.^o In any case, let Thisby have clean linen; and let not him that plays the lion pare his nails, for they shall hang out for the lion's claws. And, most 40
 dear actors, eat no onions nor garlic, for we are to utter sweet breath,^o and I do not doubt but to hear them say it is a sweet comedy. No more words. Away! Go,
 away! [Exeunt.]

181 by and by shortly 183 something worn somewhat spent 190 with parted eye with the eyes out of focus 204 God's my life an oath (possibly from "God bless my life") 207 go about endeavor 210 patched referring to the patchwork dress of jesters 211-14 The . . . report compare
 I Corinthians, 2:9 ff.: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him" 215 ballet ballad 219 her death Thisby's death in the play

IV.ii.s.d. Flute Shakespeare seems to have forgotten that Flute and Thisby are the same person 4 transported carried off (by the fairies) 8 discharge play 14 thing of nought wicked thing 17-18 made men men whose fortunes are made 20 sixpence a day a pension 27 courageous brave, splendid 33 of me from me 36 presently immediately 38 preferred put forward, recommended 42 breath (1) exhalation (2) words

[A C T V]

[Scene I. Athens. The palace of Theseus.]

Enter THESEUS, HIPPOLYTA, and PHILOSTRATE, [LORDS, and ATTENDANTS].

HIPPOLYTA

'Tis strange, my Theseus, that these lovers speak of.

THESEUS

More strange than true. I never may believe
These antique° fables, nor these fairy toys.°
Lovers and madmen have such seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies,° that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends.
The lunatic, the lover, and the poet
Are of imagination all compact.°
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold,
That is the madman. The lover, all as frantic,
Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt.°
The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven;

And as imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing
A local habitation and a name.
Such tricks hath strong imagination,
That, if it would but apprehend some joy,
It comprehends some bringer of that joy;°
Or in the night, imagining some fear,°
How easy is a bush supposed a bear!

HIPPOLYTA

But all the story of the night told over,
And all their minds transfigured so together,
More witnesseth than fancy's images,
And grows to something of great constancy;°
But, howsoever, strange and admirable.°

Enter lovers: LYSANDER, DEMETRIUS, HERMIA, and HELENA.

THESEUS

Here come the lovers, full of joy and mirth.
Joy, gentle friends! Joy and fresh days of love Accompany your hearts!

LYSANDER

More than to us

Wait in your royal walks, your board, your bed!

THESEUS

Come now, what masques,° what dances shall we have,
To wear away this long age of three hours
Between our aftersupper° and bedtime?
Where is our usual manager of mirth?
What revels are in hand? Is there no play,
To ease the anguish of a torturing hour?
Call Philostrate.

PHILOSTRATE Here, mighty Theseus.

V.i.3 antique (1) ancient (2) grotesque (antic); fairy toys trifles about fairies 5 fantasies imagination 8 compact composed 11 brow of Egypt face of a gypsy 20 It . . .
joy it includes an imagined bringer of the joy 21 fear object of fear 26 constancy consistency (and reality) 27 admirable wonderful 32 masques courtly entertainments with masked dancers 34 aftersupper refreshment served after early supper

THESEUS

Say, what abridgment° have you for this evening?
What masque? What music? How shall we beguile
The lazy time, if not with some delight? 40

PHILOSTRATE

There is a brief° how many sports are ripe:°
Make choice of which your highness will see first.

[Giving a paper.]

THESEUS

"The battle with the centaurs, to be sung
By an Athenian eunuch to the harp." 45
We'll none of that. That have I told my love,
In glory of my kinsman Hercules.
"The riot of the tipsy Bacchanals, Tearing the Thracian singer° in their rage."
That is an old device;° and it was played 50
When I from Thebes came last a conqueror.
"The thrice three Muses mourning for the death
Of learning, late deceased in beggary."
That is some satire, keen and critical,
Not sorting with° a nuptial ceremony. 55
"A tedious brief scene of young Pyramus
And his love Thisby; very tragical mirth."
Merry and tragical? Tedious and brief?
That is, hot ice and wondrous strange snow.
How shall we find the concord of this discord? 60

PHILOSTRATE

A play there is, my lord, some ten words long,
Which is as brief as I have known a play;
But by ten words, my lord, it is too long,
Which makes it tedious. For in all the play
There is not one word apt, one player fitted. 65
And tragical, my noble lord, it is,
For Pyramus therein doth kill himself.
Which, when I saw rehearsed, I must confess,
Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears
The passion° of loud laughter never shed. 70

THESEUS

What are they that do play it?

PHILOSTRATE

Hard-handed men, that work in Athens here,
Which never labored in their minds till now;
And now have toiled their unbreathed° memories
With this same play, against° your nuptial. 75

THESEUS

And we will hear it.

PHILOSTRATE

No, my noble lord;
It is not for you. I have heard it over,
And it is nothing, nothing in the world;
Unless you can find sport in their intents,
Extremely stretched and conned with cruel pain, 80
To do you service.

THESEUS

I will hear that play;
For never anything can be amiss,
When simpleness and duty tender it.
Go, bring them in: and take your places, ladies.

[Exit PHILOSTRATE.]

39 abridgment entertainment (to abridge or shorten the time)
42 brief written list; ripe ready to be presented 49 Thracian singer Orpheus 50 device show 55 sorting with suited to 70 passion strong emotion 74 unbreathed unexercised 75 against in preparation for

HIPPOLYTA

I love not to see wretchedness o'ercharged,^o
And duty in his service perishing.

85

THESEUS

Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.

HIPPOLYTA

He says they can do nothing in this kind.^o

THESEUS

The kinder we, to give them thanks for nothing.
Our sport shall be to take what they mistake:
And what poor duty cannot do, noble respect
Takes it in might,^o not merit.
Where I have come, great clerks^o have purposed
To greet me with premeditated welcomes;
Where I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practiced accent in their fears,
And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome. Trust me, sweet,
Out of this silence yet I picked a welcome;
And in the modesty of fearful duty
I read as much as from the rattling tongue
Of saucy and audacious eloquence.
Love, therefore, and tongue-tied simplicity
In least speak most, to my capacity.^o

90

95

100

105

[Enter PHILOSTRATE.]

PHILOSTRATE

So please your grace, the Prologue is addressed.^o

THESEUS

Let him approach.

[Flourish trumpets.] Enter the PROLOGUE [Quince].

PROLOGUE

If we offend, it is with our good will.

That you should think, we come not to offend,
But with good will. To show our simple skill,
That is the true beginning of our end.^o

110

Consider, then, we come but in despite.

We do not come, as minding to content you,
Our true intent is. All for your delight,

We are not here. That you should here repent you,
The actors are at hand; and, by their show,^o

115

You shall know all, that you are like to know.

THESEUS This fellow doth not stand upon points.^o

LYSANDER He hath rid his prologue like a rough colt;
he knows not the stop.^o A good moral, my lord: it is not enough to speak, but to speak true.

120

HIPPOLYTA Indeed he hath played on this prologue like a child on a recorder;^o a sound, but not in government.^o

THESEUS His speech was like a tangled chain; nothing impaired, but all disordered. Who is next? 125

Enter PYRAMUS and THISBY and WALL and MOON-SHINE and LION [as in dumb show].

PROLOGUE

Gentles, perchance you wonder at this show;
But wonder on, till truth make all things plain.

This man is Pyramus, if you would know;

This beauteous lady Thisby is certain.

130

This man, with line and roughcast, doth present

Wall, that vile Wall which did these lovers sunder;
And through Wall's chink, poor souls, they are content

To whisper. At the which let no man wonder.

This man, with lantern, dog, and bush of thorn,

135

Presenteth Moonshine; for, if you will know,

By moonshine did these lovers think no scorn

To meet at Ninus' tomb, there, there to woo.

This grisly beast, which Lion hight^o by name,

The trusty Thisby, coming first by night,

140

Did scare away, or rather did affright;

And, as she fled, her mantle she did fall,^o

Which Lion vile with bloody mouth did stain.

Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth and tall,^o

And finds his trusty Thisby's mantle slain:

145

Whereat, with blade, with bloody blameful blade,

He bravely broached^o his boiling bloody breast;

And Thisby, tarrying in mulberry shade,

His dagger drew, and died. For all the rest,

Let Lion, Moonshine, Wall, and lovers twain

150

At large^o discourse, while here they do remain.

THESEUS I wonder if the lion be to speak.

DEMETRIUS No wonder, my lord. One lion may,
when many asses do.

Exit LION, THISBY, and MOONSHINE.

WALL

In this same interlude it doth befall

155

That I, one Snout by name, present a wall;

And such a wall, as I would have you think,

That had in it a crannied hole or chink,

Through which the lovers, Pyramus and Thisby,

Did whisper often very secretly.

160

This loam, this roughcast, and this stone, doth show

That I am that same wall; the truth is so;

And this the cranny is, right and sinister,^o

Through which the fearful lovers are to whisper.

THESEUS Would you desire lime and hair to speak
better? 165

DEMETRIUS It is the wittiest partition^o that ever I heard discourse, my lord.

THESEUS Pyramus draws near the wall. Silence!

PYRAMUS

O grim-looking night! O night with hue so black!

170

O night, which ever art when day is not!

O night, O night! Alack, alack, alack,

I fear my Thisby's promise is forgot!

And thou, O wall, O sweet, O lovely wall,

That stand'st between her father's ground and mine! 175

139 hight is called 142 fall let fall 144 tall brave 147 bravely broached gallantly stabbed 151 At large at length 163 right and sinister running right and left, horizontal 167 wittiest partition most intelligent wall (with a pun on partition, a section of a book or of an oration)

85 wretchedness o'ercharged lowly people overburdened
88 in this kind in this kind of thing (i.e., acting) 92 Takes . . . might considers the ability and the effort made 93 clerks scholars 105 to my capacity according to my understanding 106 addressed ready 111 end aim 116 show probably referring to a kind of pantomime—"dumb show"—that was to follow, in which the action of the play was acted without words while the Prologue gave his account 118 stand upon points (1) care about punctuation (2) worry about niceties 120 stop (1) technical term for the checking of a horse (2) mark of punctuation 123 recorder flutelike instrument 123-24 government control

Thou wall, O wall, O sweet and lovely wall, Show me thy chink, to blink through with mine
eyne!

[WALL holds up his fingers.]

Thanks, courteous wall. Jove shield thee well for this!
But what see I? No Thisby do I see.

O wicked wall, through whom I see no bliss!

180

Cursed be thy stones for thus deceiving me!

THESEUS The wall, methinks, being sensible,^o should curse again.^o

PYRAMUS No, in truth, sir, he should not. "Deceiving me" is Thisby's cue. She is to enter now, and I am to spy her through the wall. You shall see it will fall pat^o as I told you. Yonder she comes.

185

Enter THISBY.

THISBY

O wall, full often hast thou heard my moans,
For parting my fair Pyramus and me!
My cherry lips have often kissed thy stones,
Thy stones with lime and hair knit up in thee.

190

PYRAMUS

I see a voice: now will I to the chink,
To spy an I can hear my Thisby's face.
Thisby!

THISBY My love thou art, my love I think.

PYRAMUS

Think what thou wilt, I am thy lover's grace;^o
And, like Limander,^o am I trusty still.

195

THISBY

And I like Helen,^o till the Fates me kill.

PYRAMUS

Not Shafalus to Procrus^o was so true.

THISBY

As Shafalus to Procrus, I to you.

PYRAMUS

O kiss me through the hole of this vile wall!

200

THISBY

I kiss the wall's hole, not your lips at all.

PYRAMUS

Wilt thou at Ninny's tomb meet me straightway?

THISBY

'Tide life, 'tide death,^o I come without delay.

[Exeunt PYRAMUS and THISBY.]

WALL

Thus have I, Wall, my part dischargèd so;

And, being done, thus wall away doth go. [Exit.] 205

THESEUS Now is the moon used^o between the two neighbors.

DEMETRIUS No remedy, my lord, when walls are so willful to hear without warning.^o

HIPPOLYTA This is the silliest stuff that ever I heard. 210

THESEUS The best in this kind^o are but shadows; and the worst are no worse, if imagination amend them.

HIPPOLYTA It must be your imagination then, and not theirs.

THESEUS If we imagine no worse of them than they 215 of themselves, they may pass for excellent men. Here come two noble beasts in, a man and a lion.

Enter LION and MOONSHINE.

LION

You, ladies, you, whose gentle hearts do fear

The smallest monstrous mouse that creeps on floor,
May now perchance both quake and tremble here, 220

When lion rough in wildest rage doth roar.

Then know that I, as Snug the joiner, am

A lion fell,^o nor else no lion's dam;

For, if I should as lion come in strife

Into this place, 'twere pity on my life.^o 225

THESEUS A very gentle^o beast, and of a good conscience.

DEMETRIUS The very best at a beast, my lord, that e'er I saw.

LYSANDER This lion is a very fox for his valor. 230

THESEUS True; and a goose for his discretion.

DEMETRIUS Not so, my lord; for his valor cannot carry^o his discretion, and the fox carries the goose.

THESEUS His discretion, I am sure, cannot carry his valor; for the goose carries not the fox. It is well. 235

Leave it to his discretion, and let us listen to the moon.

MOONSHINE

This lanthorn^o doth the hornèd moon present—

DEMETRIUS He should have worn the horns on his head.^o

THESEUS He is no crescent, and his horns are invisible 240 within the circumference.

MOONSHINE

This lanthorn doth the hornèd moon present,

Myself the man i' th' moon do seem to be.

THESEUS This is the greatest error of all the rest. The man should be put into the lanthorn. How is it else 245
the man i' th' moon?

DEMETRIUS He dares not come there for the candle;
for, you see, it is already in snuff.^o

HIPPOLYTA I am aweary of this moon. Would he would change! 250

THESEUS It appears, by his small light of discretion, that he is in the wane; but yet, in courtesy, in all reason, we must stay the time.

LYSANDER Proceed, Moon.

MOONSHINE All that I have to say is to tell you that 255 the lanthorn is the moon; I, the man i' th' moon; this thorn bush, my thorn bush; and this dog, my dog.

DEMETRIUS Why, all these should be in the lanthorn; for all these are in the moon. But, silence! Here comes Thisby. 260

Enter THISBY.

182 sensible conscious 183 again in return 186 pat exactly
195 thy lover's grace thy gracious lover 196 Limander
Bottom means Leander, but blends him with Alexander 197
Helen Hero, beloved of Leander, is probably meant 198
Shafalus to Procrus Cephalus and Procris are meant, legendary lovers 203 'Tide . . . death come (betide) life or death 206 moon used the quartos read thus, the Folio reads morall downe; among suggested emendations are "mural down" and
"moon to see" 208-09 when . . . warning when walls are so eager to listen without warning the parents (?)

211 in this kind of this sort, i.e., plays (or players?) 223 lion fell fierce lion (perhaps with a pun on fell = skin) 225 pity . . . life a dangerous thing for me 226 gentle gentlemanly, courteous 233 carry carry away 237 lanthorn so spelled, and perhaps pronounced "lant-horn," because lanterns were commonly made of horn 238-39 horns . . .
head cuckolds were said to have horns 248 in snuff (1) in need of snuffing (2) resentful

THISBY

This is old Ninny's tomb. Where is my love?

LION Oh—

[The LION roars. THISBY runs off.]

DEMETRIUS Well roared, Lion.

THESEUS Well run, Thisby.

HIPPOLYTA Well shone, Moon. Truly, the moon 265 shines with a good grace.

[The LION shakes Thisby's mantle, and exit.]

THESEUS Well moused,° Lion.

DEMETRIUS And then came Pyramus.

LYSANDER And so the lion vanished.

Enter PYRAMUS.

PYRAMUS

Sweet Moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams; 270

I thank thee, Moon, for shining now so bright;

For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering gleams,

I trust to take of truest Thisby sight.

But stay, O spite!°

But mark, poor knight, 275

What dreadful dole° is here!

Eyes, do you see?

How can it be?

O dainty duck! O dear!

Thy mantle good, 280

What, stained with blood!

Approach, ye Furies fell!°

O Fates, come, come,

Cut thread and thrum;°

Quail,° crush, conclude, and quell!° 285

THESEUS This passion, and the death of a dear friend, would go near to make a man look sad.

HIPPOLYTA Beshrew° my heart, but I pity the man.

PYRAMUS

O wherefore, nature, didst thou lions frame?

Since lion vile hath here deflow'ed my dear: 290

Which is—no, no—which was the fairest dame

That lived, that loved, that liked, that looked with cheer.°

Come, tears, confound;

Out, sword, and wound

The pap of Pyramus; 295

Ay, that left pap,

Where heart doth hop.

[Stabs himself.]

Thus die I, thus, thus, thus.

Now am I dead,

Now am I fled; 300

My soul is in the sky.

Tongue, lose thy light;

Moon, take thy flight.

[Exit MOONSHINE.]

Now die, die, die, die, die. [Dies.]

DEMETRIUS No die, but an ace,° for him; for he is 305 but one.LYSANDER Less than an ace, man; for he is dead, he is nothing.THESEUS With the help of a surgeon he might yet recover, and yet prove an ass. 310HIPPOLYTA How chance° Moonshine is gone before Thisby comes back and finds her lover?THESEUS She will find him by starlight. Here she comes; and her passion° ends the play.

[Enter THISBY.]

HIPPOLYTA Methinks she should not use a long one 315 for such a Pyramus. I hope she will be brief.DEMETRIUS A mote will turn the balance, which Pyramus, which Thisby, is the better; he for a man, God warr'nt us; she for a woman, God bless us!LYSANDER She hath spied him already with those 320 sweet eyes.

DEMETRIUS And thus she means,° videlicet:

THISBY

Asleep, my love?

What, dead, my dove?

O Pyramus, arise! 325

Speak, speak. Quite dumb?

Dead, dead? A tomb

Must cover thy sweet eyes.

These lily lips,

This cherry nose, 330

These yellow cowslip cheeks,

Are gone, are gone.

Lovers, make moan.

His eyes were green as leeks.

O Sisters Three,° 335

Come, come to me,

With hands as pale as milk;

Lay them in gore,

Since you have shore°

With shears his thread of silk. 340

Tongue, not a word.

Come, trusty sword,

Come, blade, my breast imbrue!°

[Stabs herself.]

And, farewell, friends.

Thus Thisby ends. 345

Adieu, adieu, adieu. [Dies.]

THESEUS Moonshine and Lion are left to bury the dead.

DEMETRIUS Ay, and Wall too.

BOTTOM [Starting up.] No, I assure you; the wall is 350 down that parted their fathers. Will it please you to see the epilogue, or to hear a Bergomask dance° between two of our company?THESEUS No epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Never excuse, for when the players 355 are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if 267 moused shaken (like a mouse) 274 spite vexation 276 dole sorrowful thing 282 fell fierce 284 thread and thrum

i.e., everything ("thrum" = the end of the warp thread) 285 Quail destroy; quell kill 288 Beshrew curse (but a mild word) 292 cheer countenance

305 No . . . ace not a die (singular of dice), but a one-spot on a die 311 How chance how does it come that 314 passion passionate speech 322 means laments 335 Sisters Three the three Fates 339 shore shorn 343 imbrue stain with blood 352 Bergomask dance rustic dance

he that writ it had played Pyramus and hanged himself in Thisby's garter, it would have been a fine tragedy: and so it is, truly; and very notably discharged. But, come, your Bergomask. Let your 360 epilogue alone.

[A dance.]

The iron tongue of midnight hath told° twelve.
Lovers, to bed; 'tis almost fairy time.
I fear we shall outsleep the coming morn,
As much as we this night have overwatched. 365
This palpable-gross° play hath well beguiled
The heavy gait of night. Sweet friends, to bed.
A fortnight hold we this solemnity,
In nightly revels and new jollity. Exeunt.

Enter PUCK [with a broom].

PUCK
Now the hungry lion roars, 370
And the wolf behowls the moon;
Whilst the heavy plowman snores,
All with weary task fordone.°
Now the wasted° brands do glow, 375
Whilst the screech owl, screeching loud,
Puts the wretch that lies in woe
In remembrance of a shroud.
Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his sprite, 380
In the churchway paths to glide:
And we fairies, that do run
By the triple Hecate's team,°
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream, 385
Now are frolic.° Not a mouse
Shall disturb this hallowed house:
I am sent, with broom, before,
To sweep the dust behind the door.°

Enter [OBERON and TITANIA,] King and Queen of Fairies, with all their TRAIN.

OBERON
Through the house give glimmering light, 390
By the dead and drowsy fire:
Every elf and fairy sprite
Hop as light as bird from brier;
And this ditty, after me,
Sing, and dance it trippingly. 395

362 told counted, tolled 366 palpable-gross obviously grotesque 373 fordone worn out 374 wasted used-up 383 triple Hecate's team i.e., because she had three names: Phoebe in heaven, Diana on earth, Hecate in Hades (like her chariot—drawn by black horses or dragons—the elves were abroad only at night; but III.ii.388–93 says differently) 386 frolic frolicsome 389 behind the door from behind the door (Puck traditionally helped with household chores)

TITANIA

First, rehearse your song by rote,
To each word a warbling note:
Hand in hand, with fairy grace,
Will we sing, and bless this place.

[Song and dance.]

OBERON

Now, until the break of day, 400
Through this house each fairy stray.
To the best bride-bed will we,
Which by us shall blessed be;
And the issue there create°
Ever shall be fortunate. 405
So shall all the couples three Ever true in loving be;
And the blots of nature's hand
Shall not in their issue stand. 410
Never mole, harelip, nor scar,
Nor mark prodigious,° such as are Despised in nativity,
Shall upon their children be.
With this field-dew consecrate,
Every fairy take his gait,° 415
And each several° chamber bless,
Through this palace, with sweet peace,
And the owner of it blest
Ever shall in safety rest. 420
Trip away; make no stay;
Meet me all by break of day.

Exeunt [all but PUCK].

PUCK

If we shadows have offended,
Think but this, and all is mended:
That you have but slumb' red here, 425
While these visions did appear.
And this weak and idle° theme,
No more yielding but° a dream,
Gentles, do not reprehend:
If you pardon, we will mend. 430
And, as I am an honest Puck,
If we have unearnèd luck
Now to scape the serpent's tongue,°
We will make amends ere long;
Else the Puck a liar call: 435
So, good night unto you all.
Give me your hands,° if we be friends,
And Robin shall restore amends.° [Exit.]

404 create created 411 mark prodigious ominous birthmark 415 take his gait proceed 416 several individual 426 idle foolish 427 No . . . but yielding no more than 432 to . . . tongue to escape hisses from the audience 436 Give . . . hands applaud 437 restore amends make amends

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING JOHN

EDITED BY WILLIAM H. MATCHETT

Introduction¹

The Life and Death of King John was probably not Shakespeare's title. The editors of the 1623 Folio harmonized the plays they grouped as "Histories" by giving them titles as nearly alike as possible. Richard II, for example, is also "The Life and Death of . . ." in the Folio, though prior to 1623 it had appeared as "The Tragedy of . . ." The Folio titles are designed to fit the plays into a general pattern.

This point is worth attention only because so many readers assume, on the basis of the title, that John must be the hero of the play. He is not. He is no more the hero of the play bearing his name than Henry IV is the hero of either of the plays bearing his name or, for that matter, Julius Caesar of the play bearing his. Each of Shakespeare's plays is best considered an individual experiment in dramatic structure; too often they are distorted for the sake of fitting them into some generic theory, understood in terms designed to make them conform to a definition. In the plays based on English history, Shakespeare is less involved with the exploits of kings, or indeed with the actual history of the period, than he is with exploring situations that test moral or political theory against complex psychological reality. Only in Richard III does the king dominate the stage: Richard II balances its verbose king against the silent Bolingbroke as the wronger becomes the wronged, the wronged the wronger; and the primary balance of moral positions in Henry IV, Part One, is triple—Hal played off against Hotspur and Falstaff, each in his own way both attractive and reprehensible. King John is also built upon a triple balance. To attain it, Shakespeare has mingled freely reordered historical material with pure fiction; just as he invented Falstaff and took years from Hotspur for the sake of that dramatic structure, so he invented the Bastard and took years from Arthur for the sake of this. His is a drama of ideas and not just a chronicle history.

A second stumbling block to appreciating Shakespeare's accomplishment in King John has been the general assumption that his play is based on another, The Troublesome Reign of John, King of England, which can thus be used to "explain" Shakespeare's departures from history (the Bastard, the ignoring of the Magna Carta, and so on). We are told that we may not blame these on—or credit them to—Shakespeare, who "merely took them over from his source." The Note on the Sources (p. 561) gives a brief account of my reasons for thinking that King John is not dependent on The Troublesome Reign but that the dependence is the other way around. (Indeed, The Troublesome Reign of King John is more likely to have been Shakespeare's original title, taken over by the imitation, than is the title given it by the editors of the Folio.) It is sufficient here to say that, even if I were wrong, even if Shakespeare had based his play on the other, we would still have to consider the result as a finished play deserving independent judgment. John is the rightful king at the beginning of The Troublesome Reign; the Bastard is but a shadow of Shakespeare's character.

The King John of history came to the throne legitimately, the heir named by his dying brother, Richard I. True, their nephew Arthur was the son of a brother older than John, and some supported his claim, but John's was in fact the better. Primogeniture was not the only legal route to a crown. John enters Shakespeare's play, however, as an acknowledged usurper. Unlike his mother, he offers no objection to Chatillion's reference to his "borrowed majesty" (I.i.4), and even Queen Elinor's objection is a political gesture, not an assertion of principle, as is clear as soon as Chatillion has left the stage. By thus transforming history, Shakespeare is able to play John's "possession" against Arthur's "right," the de facto king against the king de jure, and by that means to pose a political and moral question. By adding the Bastard to this balance, he further divides the claims to the throne and makes the questions more significant. Richard's illegitimate son, with neither possession of, nor right to, the crown, has yet inherited his father's personal qualities—"The very spirit of Plantagenet!" (I.i.167)—which would make him a better king than either John or Arthur. It is this division of qualifications that the playwright both invents and explores.

The memory of Richard Coeur de Lion haunts this play as the mythically heightened image of a good and heroic king. He triumphantly combined the royal right, possession, and character which the first act distinguishes as having been divided among his nephew, the child Arthur, his brother, the man John, and his son, the youthful Bastard. The division is an imbalance demanding resolution: which—right, possession, or character—is the essential ingredient for a king? As we are introduced to the abstract issues in the early lines of the play, we are prone to the easy assumption that the throne obviously ought to go to Arthur, to whom by right it belongs. This point, so clear in the first act before we have seen Arthur, becomes more ambiguous in the second; we meet Arthur in circumstances which overshadow his right. While his immaturity and weakness attract some personal sympathy, sympathy for his cause is dissipated as we observe the company he keeps. King Richard's rightful heir is first seen agreeing to "Embrace . . . love . . . welcome" and "forgive" (II.i.11-12) Austria, the man who killed King Richard. He is a pawn moved by an ambitious mother and surrounded by an unscrupulous, self-seeking, foreign league. Were he to gain his right and become king, the results would presumably be disastrous for England.

¹ Portions of this introduction have been recast from passages of my article "Richard's Divided Heritage in King John," Essays in Criticism, XII (1962), 231-53, by permission of the editors.

With the death of Arthur, the failure and eventual collapse of John, and, through the course of the play, the Bastard's increasing perception of the distinction between self-interest and true honor, it would appear that the Bastard is being groomed to take over as king, as the most deserving of that position. And, indeed, so he is. In order to lead our expectations more firmly in that direction, Shakespeare has let us think the Bastard will be the only one left, withholding the historical fact of the existence of another heir; only in the final scenes of his play does he first mention John's son, Prince Henry. Bringing him in defeats these expectations, but it does not subvert the issue; it shifts the emphasis from the original questions to a deeper consideration of the requirements of honor. The very qualities that constitute the Bastard's fitness for the throne lead to his repudiation of personal ambition and his kneeling to Prince Henry. True honor, a matter not of prestige and power but of duty, is decided on the basis of what is best for England. The Bastard, in kneeling, renounces his recently established claim to the throne and thus prevents further civil war. True honor makes the Bastard the best of subjects in a unified England, and this, in the logic of the play, is more important than the character of the king.

Insofar as the play has a hero, then, it is the Bastard, and, indeed, a large part of the first act is devoted to introducing him to us. He repeats the national situation on a domestic scale. He also is in possession of an estate to which another, his half brother Robert, is the rightful heir. Our sympathies, like John's, are of course with the "good blunt fellow" (I.i.71); under the influence of those sympathies, however, both "right" and "honor" begin to twist in our hands. Robert's assumed moral right to his inheritance is denied by John in the name of another right, the legal fiction of the Bastard's legitimacy. Everyone knows that Robert, for lack of sufficient proof, like Arthur, for lack of sufficient power, is being "legally" cheated.

But the Bastard, unlike John, is not permitted to enjoy his dishonorably held possessions. To save him for his later role in the play, he is presented with a choice between "honor" and possessions. He chooses "honor" (here merely "reputation"), and his ambitious choice immediately pays off, for John knights him. There is in his response an impetuous decisiveness, uncalculating, heedless of consequences, a little naive. He is not one to ask, like John, "What follows if we disallow of this?" (I.i.16), but says at once, "I'll take my chance" (I.i.151).

Many have been bothered by the contradiction between the self-sufficient character of the Bastard and his pursuit here of an honor that is merely reputation. They try to explain it away, just as they tell us he "does not really mean what he says" in his "commodity" speech at the end of II.i. The contradiction exists. The Bastard's discovery and handling of it is a primary development in the play. But the reputation he chooses in Act I is one to which he has, in fact, a right; gambling on future "chance," he trades his spurious respectability for an honest reputation as a royal bastard. He makes the right choice for the wrong reason; he has yet to add insight to the character which is intrinsic—"I am I, howe'er I was begot" (I.i.175). It is safe to say that the first act leaves the audience more interested in what will happen to him than in the immediate challenge to John.

The second act, however, is concerned almost entirely with the dynastic struggle, and the Bastard, though he attempts once, unsuccessfully, to control the action, serves primarily as an observant commentator. His presence as an observer needs to be stressed since, in the shade of his lively comments, one might overlook its importance: his political education is beginning and he has much to learn. By the end of the act the once naive young man has found the proper name for the political motivation he observes.

Tracing this view of the main structure of the play unfortunately involves slighting many of its subsidiary felicities, as well as some of its weaknesses. John, Elinor, and Pandulph would each repay closer attention than can be given them here, but earlier generations would be particularly incensed at such neglect of Constance, whose laments for her son in this act made her, for actresses and audiences alike, the most attractive character in the play. This is a view I cannot share, though she is indeed forceful in her claims for sympathy. I find it noteworthy that many actresses, in creating their conception of her suffering motherhood, found it necessary to omit some of her more violent speeches, especially in her screeching exchanges with Elinor. Constance is a suffering mother, there is no doubt, but she is also an ambitious one, a strident, domineering tigress. No one would think of applying to her Lear's praise of Cordelia's voice, "ever soft,/Gentle and low—an excellent thing in woman" (V.iii.274-75). Friend and enemy alike fail in their continuous attempts to silence her. John is brutal—"Bedlam, have done" (II.i.183)—while Austria (line 134) and King Philip (line 195) are merely trying to reconcile her to the etiquette of political duplicity, but even Arthur joins the chorus—"Good my mother, peace!" (line 163)—to no avail. She is equally uncontrollable in her appearances in the next act and is ultimately reported to have died "in a frenzy" (IV.ii.122). She is wronged, indeed, but she is one of the reasons that Arthur would be such a disastrous king for England.

In direct contrast with Arthur, the Bastard shows an immediate antipathy to Austria, motivated of course by the lionskin Richard's killer is wearing. (Shakespeare is already thinking in terms of total dramatic effect on a stage, not just in terms of lines.) Whatever the moral masquerades of the political schemers, the Bastard, as Richard's son, has a personal loyalty which he will not deny. If this personal warmth is in contrast with the calculated zeal of the other opponents, it is in even greater contrast with the dispassionately calculated neutrality of Hubert.

Given the opposed armies at his gates, Hubert's position has all the appearance of eminent sense: "we are the King of England's subjects . . . he that proves the king,/To him will we prove loyal" (II.i.267-71). But, however appealing the arguments on the virtues of neutrality, Hubert's position is unacceptable in King John. This is not the moral superiority of "A plague a both your houses!" with which Mercutio, "the prince's near ally," rejects the parochial quarrel that has caused his death (Romeo and Juliet, III.i.108-10); this is the willingness of common citizens to accept either of two contradictory national loyalties. It has the sound sense of self-preservation—and perhaps today that seems enough—but it is meant to have little else: as comes increasingly clear in Hubert's progressive responses, it is not a moral position at all, but a refusal to face the issue. (That the issue is not resolvable in the terms in which it has been set does not, apparently, excuse a man from involvement.)

Hubert's response sounds fine until probed: "he that proves the king,/To him will we prove loyal." What kind of loyalty is this? Like "honor" in the first act, it is not the real article, but a calculated substitute; what ought to be the warm and total response of a committed man is here the small change of a self-indulgent apathy. What "proves the king"—the issue itself—is precisely what Hubert avoids, and his restatements, the "worthiest" or "greatest" (II.i.281, 332), are equally hollow, assuming only that might makes right. Hubert abdicates the citizen's duty to act according to his best moral lights and, selfishly holding himself aloof, leaves the decision to naked force.

Though superior to Hubert here in his loyalty and his freedom from selfish calculation, the Bastard is not himself facing any moral issues. His response is warm and total, but it is not yet what one would call perceptive. He, no less than Hubert, leaves the decision to naked force; the difference is his willingness to involve himself on the side to which he is loyal. This involvement leads to his first venture in political strategy, his "wild" (II.i.395) suggestion that the kings join forces against Angiers before turning back to their own quarrel. His "Smacks it not something of the policy?" (II.i.396) shows his naive pride in what he is pleased to consider his approach to political wisdom, but what is the rash response of naive loyalty in the Bastard becomes insane ruthlessness when it is accepted and given royal sanction by John.

It is from Blanch, however, that the Bastard learns the most. Though her role in the play is brief, it is crucial. Hubert's suggestion that she be married to the Dauphin disgusts the Bastard, but both kings see in the suggestion a way of saving face while abandoning their sterile enmity. Lewis, too, plays the game with a will, and his ability to switch rapidly from enemy to lover, patently insincere, gilding his political opportunism with the language of a sonneteer, is in sharp contrast not only with the Bastard's disgusted and less flexible sincerity, but with the honesty of his bride-to-be. Blanch is as much a political pawn as Arthur, but, without loss of dignity or feminine propriety, she is hardly less plain-spoken—when called upon to speak—than the Bastard: "Further I will not flatter you, my lord,/That all I see in you is worthy love . . ." (II.i.516-17). When John asks for her formal assent, she pronounces herself "bound in honor still to do/What you in wisdom still vouchsafe to say" (II.i.522-23). This is the only use of the word "honor" in the second act (it had been used—misused—eight times before) and its first appearance in the play as a high-minded sense of personal obligation, a trait of character rather than a mere claim for public approval. Blanch is controlled by her honor, whatever the personal consequences. The Bastard is silent, but his education has now truly begun, as comes clear when he is left alone at the end of the scene.

In his well-known soliloquy—"Mad world! Mad kings! Mad composition!" (II.i.561)—with new insight he gives the name, missing so far in the play, to the primary motivating force behind what we have seen: "commodity," the unprincipled self-interest which perverts "all indifferency, . . . direction, purpose, course, intent" (lines 579-80), and brings the noblest-sounding resolutions to the most ignominious results. Having named it, he formally adopts it, for the Bastard's final words are "Gain, be my lord, for I will worship thee!" (line 598). Many of the difficulties commentators have with this speech arise from their attempts to make of it a summation of the Bastard's character, a final position rather than a stage in his development. He is not static, and it is enough in the second act that he has begun to consider where he is. What was blind loyalty now sees madness on both sides. For the first time he is critical of John. Though he is wrong in his estimate of King Philip's original motive, accepting the public declaration for the fact, the important point is that he is beginning to judge for himself and no longer just following chance. The word "honorable" in the Bastard's mouth now, though we may demur from "honorable war" (line 585), is not what it was in the first act, but what he has learned from Blanch.

After this insight into the kings, there is surely a hesitation (between lines 586 and 587) when, in his honesty, the Bastard recognizes the application to himself: "And why rail I on this commodity?/But for because he hath not wooed me yet" (lines 587-88). Must we demand conversion at the very incipience of self-knowledge? The Bastard, realizing that he has been living in the same spirit he has condemned in the kings, concludes most humanly by reversing his complaint and turning their conduct into a rationalization for his own. But he has found a name for such conduct; he has seen commodity and its opposite. Never again can he remain unconscious in following chance. It is enough for now. It is a place to end a scene but not a play.

The Bastard is not the only one who is educated during the course of this play. Hubert, the man who thought he could hold himself aloof from commitment, is caught between the claims of political allegiance and those of simple compassion. The warmth of John's fawning—"O my gentle Hubert,/We owe thee much!" (III.ii.29-30)—has a multiple motivation. John is not merely flattering Hubert in order to bring him to murder Arthur, but indeed owes Hubert much, just as he says: he may owe him the very capture of Arthur, as the entry would seem to imply, and he presumably owes him Angiers, Hubert apparently having made his choice after France broke the league. John is promising a reward already due and hinting for just one further service. Whatever the circumstances that determined him, Hubert is no longer in a position to maintain his neutrality; he has made, or has been forced to make, his choice, and the loyalty once so coldly promised to the stronger must now be delivered. After a number of false starts, John finally manages the most pointed of commissions, as though his will were less tainted for showing naked so briefly:

KING JOHN

Death.

HUBERT My lord.

KING JOHN A grave.

HUBERT He shall not live.

KING JOHN Enough.

(III.ii.76)

John leaves the promised reward unspecified, but the more significant ambiguity lies in the sinister irony of his final statement to Arthur that Hubert will attend on him "With all true duty" (III.ii.83). True to whom? to what? in what sense? The nature of "true duty"—whether Hubert's, John's, the Bastard's, Blanch's, King Philip's, Pandulph's, Lady Faulconbridge's, Robert Faulconbridge's, the English nobles', or Melun's—is precisely what is at issue in this play, whether we call it that, or "loyalty," or "honor."

However unexpected, and even illogical, the shift in intent from murder to blinding—or, more likely, to murder as an "accident" during blinding—the resultant stage business is an image of the moral situation, an image that is echoed and re-echoed in the lines. It is Hubert's "duty" that is iron; human sympathy is the living eye that he must put out. Hubert, with his hot irons and concealed accomplices, is brute power; the child Arthur is powerless innocence, wronged right. In the difficulty of putting innocent goodness on the stage, Shakespeare makes of Arthur, as he does of Blanch at the end of III.i, a formal image of victimized virtue—Arthur the image of suffering innocence, Blanch of suffering integrity. Perhaps the ultimate horror in the viciousness of "this iron age" (IV.i.60) is the recognition by innocence that its own appearance must be suspect: "Nay, you may think my love was crafty love,/And call it cunning" (IV.i.53–54).

The choice between theory and humanity forced upon Hubert is rather like the choice facing the Duke of York in the final act of Richard II, but that old man, pursuing an abstraction (as he does with consistently high-minded inefficacy throughout the play), becomes ridiculous in his prosecution of his son, while Hubert, choosing humane mercy over political theory, grows toward probity. His decision to spare Arthur, his choice of a higher duty over a lower, creates no moral millennium, however; only the most naive faith would expect such a result. He is immediately involved in duplicity—he must lie to John—and in "Much danger" (IV.i.133).

Hubert and the Bastard discover each other, as it were, over the body of Arthur. The Bastard is sent to England in III.ii, so that he is off the stage when John gives his charge to Hubert, which, for the sake of later developments, Shakespeare could not permit him to witness. The Bastard and Hubert are also kept apart from each other during IV.ii, sharing the stage only as the Bastard reports on his travels "through the land" (line 143) and on the prophecy of Peter of Pomfret. Thus the Bastard observes neither the effect of Hubert's false announcement of Arthur's death nor John's later struggle to shift the responsibility and Hubert's revelation of his disobedient innocence. Hubert, in turn, has little chance to recognize the new maturity of the Bastard: he hears the Bastard's annoyance with John—"But if you be afeard to hear the worst,/Then let the worst unheard fall on your head" (IV.ii.135–36)—but not the Bastard's invitation for the denial which John does not make—"I met [the English lords]/. . . going to seek the grave/Of Arthur, whom they say is killed to-night/On your suggestion" (IV.ii.162–66). The Bastard is no less open, no less loyal, but he approaches decisions more slowly, suspending judgment without concealing his suspicion.

The scene in which these two, the Bastard and Hubert, recognize each other's worth is superbly constructed. Arthur's body lies unfound while the English lords reveal that they have already been in treasonable correspondence with Pandulph; their claim to outraged principles has been but an act, a pretext for saving their skins during the expected French invasion. In contrast, though he shares their suspicions that John has killed Arthur, the Bastard puts his duty to England first. Discovery of Arthur's body should confirm all suspicions, and the audience waits in suspense for the Bastard's response while the lords indulge in self-justifying superlatives of horror. "Sir Richard, what think you?" Salisbury asks (IV.iii.41), but he and Pembroke both favor the Bastard with their own I-told-you-so's before—following surely a lengthy pause—he answers simply and directly: "It is a damnèd and a bloody work,/The graceless action of a heavy hand,/If that it be the work of any hand" (IV.iii.57–59). His conditional conclusion, which can only strike the eager lords as pusillanimous, is a sign of his increasing wisdom, undergirded for the audience by our knowledge that the death was in fact accidental.

Hubert's untimely message that Arthur lives can hardly be expected to convince anyone, and the Bastard is forced to defend him from the lords' wrath, though his "If" is still unresolved. Shown Arthur's body, Hubert weeps, which the hypocrites naturally take for hypocrisy but, held off by the Bastard, they cannot attack him, and they leave to join the Dauphin. Though willing to defend Hubert from attack while the facts are unclear, the Bastard has not abandoned his own strong suspicions. Hubert, in spite of his choice of a higher duty, is entangled in circumstantial evidence. The Bastard demands a direct answer ("Knew you of this fair work?" [IV.iii.116]), and indicates both his stand if the answer is yes ("There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell/As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child" [lines 123–24]) and his honest opinion ("I do suspect thee very grievously" [line 134]). This is the new, more thoughtful, less hotheaded but no less forthright man that the Bastard has grown to be, a far cry from the unthinking enthusiast he was in the first act. And he need only listen to the quality of Hubert's brief denial to accept it without further question. In a world of commodity, the two who have abandoned it look into each other's hearts and recognize what they have found.

Having accepted Hubert's innocence, however, the Bastard is left with his suspicions of John. The issues surrounding Arthur's death are more complex, more muddled and human than many have been willing to allow. The moral responsibility naturally depends on whether one emphasizes the accident or the justified fear of John which forced Arthur to take the chance. What John wanted was Arthur's death without the responsibility for it. The consequences of the alleged death have no sooner forced him to welcome the news that Arthur is still alive than fate gives him exactly what he had wanted. But it is too late, and the thing he wanted becomes its own opposite: though, as it turned out, he lacked the power, he is left with the responsibility—or at least the apparent responsibility, which does equal harm. The Bastard knows less of this than we, and his response is the appropriate one for any conscientious man: "I am amazed, methinks, and lose my way/Among the thorns and dangers of this world" (IV. iii.140-41). The moral life is rarely, for a perceptive man, a simple choice between well-marked paths, but life in a maze. The ambiguity of the Bastard's ensuing soliloquy reflects the ambiguity of the issues themselves, and his conclusion the necessity to act in spite of it. He recognizes both Arthur's right to the throne and the fact that the very question is no longer relevant; that "England," the rightful king, is dead, but that England, the country, remains to suffer, "and vast confusion waits,/As doth a raven on a sick-fall'n beast,/The imminent decay of wrested pomp" (lines 152-54). This is what commodity has cost. Though he recognizes now that John's pomp was wrested, the Bastard sees no honorable choice for one who would serve England but continuing loyalty: "I'll to the king" (line 157).

Arriving with his bad news, he is again closely observing John and controlling his disgust only with difficulty. The conclusion of his report—"And wild amazement hurries up and down/The little number of your doubtful friends" (V.i.35-36)—is not only general but pointedly personal ("I am amazed"); though others may be "doubtful friends" because they are both fearful and untrusting, he is a trustworthy and fearless friend tormented by doubt. John's assumption that Arthur yet lives sounds to the Bastard like the sheerest evasion and almost leads to a break. Given the Bastard's suspicions, "some damned hand" (line 41) is dangerously blunt, backing down not at all from the firm position already taken when Arthur's body was found. There is a crescendo of excitement when John, in horror and guilt, attempts again to place the blame on Hubert, and the Bastard, convinced of Hubert's innocence, responds with a direct insinuation of John's responsibility for murder:

KING JOHN

That villain Hubert told me he did live.

BASTARD

So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew. (V.i.42-43)

The final pronoun, clearing Hubert, accuses John. This exchange, in which tempers have risen on both sides, must be followed by a long, electric silence, while John cringes and the Bastard cools to consider what he is doing. England must again be uppermost in his thoughts, for he stops his attack in midstream and turns to rallying John's spirits for the battle with the invaders. This self-control, this ability to quell his passionate outrage in order to undertake what is required by a higher loyalty, demonstrates the maturity the Bastard has reached. His moral superiority to John is obvious; it is one of his glorious moments and prepares us to accept what follows.

Though the Bastard has, technically, misjudged the details of Arthur's death, he has not in fact misjudged John. He pleads now only that the man act with the outer semblance of a king in order to inspire his followers. But John has just abandoned his authority to Pandulph and, pleased merely to have retained his throne, considers it a "happy peace" (V.i.63). Such peace with an invading army horrifies the Bastard—"O inglorious league!" (line 65)—and leads to so overwhelming a remonstrance that John, having yielded to Pandulph, yields his authority again, this time to the Bastard: "Have thou the ordering of this present time" (line 77). John, though a vigorous usurper, and swift to defend Angiers in the first act, has not been able to maintain his grasp. Once he has given way to the temptation to order Arthur's death, his fortunes decline: his nobles abandon him; the French invade England; his mother dies; he capitulates to Pandulph. He has proven a king incapable of kingship and now is finally replaced in action by the man most capable of it.

The Bastard has in fact become the king. Though he speaks to Pandulph and Lewis of "the scope/And warrant limited unto my tongue" (V.ii.122-23), we know that his warrant has not in fact been limited. Such a pose is but a way of keeping his own counsel, of postponing decision until he learns how things stand; once he knows the situation, he assumes full authority: "Now hear our English king,/For thus his royalty doth speak in me" (lines 128-29). The king of and for whom he speaks—who "is prepared" (line 130), who "doth smile" (line 134) at the invasion, "the gallant monarch" (line 148), "warlike John" (line 176)—is of course not the man John but a verbal image of the king England needs. The image is not a fiction, however, for it is personified in the Bastard himself. As though to ensure this distinction between the image and the fact, the brief third scene shows us, in direct contrast to "warlike John," the utter impotence of the man beneath the public image. Ill with fever, he is ordered from the field by the Bastard, lest he confuse and dishearten the soldiers. The kingly role has been entirely transferred. Richard's son has become "Richard" (V.iii.12); "That misbegotten devil, Faulconbridge,/In spite of spite, alone upholds the day" (V.iv.4-5).

It is against the quality of this man that Shakespeare displays the formalizations of allegiance, the hollow rites which political practice substitutes for such living loyalty: Arthur's "embracing" of Austria; Lewis' marriage to Blanch and the treaty it attests; the "king's oath" (II.ii.10) which Constance has from Philip; the casuistry of Pandulph's "falsehood falsehood cures" (III.i.203); John's second coronation, enforcing new oaths of allegiance after excommunication has freed his followers from their former oaths; excommunication itself, not here a spiritual issue but merely the weapon of another power politician; the show of outrage with which the nobles cover their desertion; John's yielding his crown to, and accepting it back from, Pandulph, again with no religious significance but simply as a political bargain—"Now keep your holy word: go meet the French" (V.i.5). The fourth scene of Act V twists the ironic complications of meaningless oaths and meaningful loyalty about as far as they can be wrung. The dying Melun, breaking an oath (his to the Dauphin) which broke an oath (the Dauphin's and his to the English nobles) which broke an oath (the nobles' to John), reveals to the nobles that the Dauphin intends to execute them as soon as his battle is won. Abandoning their "holy vow" (IV.iii.67), they hasten to return to John. Who is to disentangle true honor from such a web as this? But Melun, saving their lives, says that he does so for the love of "one Hubert" (V.iv.40-41), and because he himself had an English grandfather. This personal loyalty stands out above the meaningless oaths as a return to sanity and honor. The men thus saved by his love for Hubert are, however, the very men who most misjudged and misused Hubert for their selfish ends. They are saved by love for the man they scorned, a cutting of the web which carries distinct overtones of Christian forgiveness.

The two who have lifted themselves above commodity come together in another key scene when Hubert brings the Bastard the news that John is dying. No time is wasted in the play on the mechanics of John's death—poisoning by a monk is supplied by history as Shakespeare knew it; his attention, however, is not on John but on the effect of the approaching death on the Bastard. As they meet in the night, Hubert's "Who art thou?" (V.vi.9) is precisely the question that remains to be settled, and the Bastard's "Who thou wilt" in answer, coupled with the reminder of his Plantagenet blood, stresses the possibility toward which the play has apparently been aiming. We have seen Hubert grow from his attempt at a coldly rational avoidance of the problem of choice between loyalties to a realization that a man is forced to commit himself and can only try to do so honorably. We have seen the Bastard grow from a naive enthusiast following chance to a man of mature insight and ability. What Hubert brings the Bastard now is, in effect, an invitation to take the throne, to assume the role he has in fact been filling and for which the character he inherited from his father has proven so eminently fitted. Arthur is dead; John is dying; he is the obvious successor. It is all understated, but the implications are clear: "I left him almost speechless, and broke out/To acquaint you with this evil, that you might/The better arm you to the sudden time" (V.vi.24-26). Hubert foresees a struggle, and he wants the Bastard to have the throne—as do we. A struggle with whom? "The lords are all come back" (line 33). Clearly they must not gain control. But then the surprising new complication is introduced: "And brought Prince Henry in their company" (line 34). This is the first mention in the play that John has a son and heir; dramatically it is startling news.

Nor is the structure of the play affected by whether or not the audience "knows all the time" that John must, historically, be followed on the throne by his son Henry. The "structure of expectation" may be affected—Henry's arrival could, in fact, fulfill a historical expectation—but an audience expecting Henry should still see his arrival as cutting across the prior course of the action, upsetting a suggested balance. For, whether or not the audience is surprised by the conclusion, the fact remains that the play, in its original division of claimants to the throne and its eventual elimination of two of them, appears to be moving toward the coronation of the third claimant, and only alters that appearance at the last minute by introducing the hitherto unmentioned heir. Not only has Henry been unmentioned, but Shakespeare has not even acknowledged that John had a wife (two, in fact). Suppressing Isabell, as he suppressed Constance's third husband, allows him to develop the relationship between John and his mother without dramatic confusion; it also serves to keep Henry better hidden.

Prince Henry is apparently, like Arthur, a young successor surrounded by a self-seeking league. The Bastard is in the situation that faced John upon the death of Richard, and the question is, will he, like John, usurp the throne? However self-seeking such a move might appear, it could well be considered, given the Bastard's kingly character and Prince Henry's companions, the best hope for England. The Bastard's immediate response is a prayer, as much for England as for himself: "Withhold thine indignation, mighty God,/And tempt us not to bear above our power!" (V.vi.37-38). It is not a decision, but it is surely an aspiration to withstand the temptations of commodity. He is, in fact, not even willing at the moment to entertain the possibility of usurpation. His immediate revelation that he has lost "half my power this night" (line 39) has been taken to mean that he is forced to his dynastic decision only by his inability to muster sufficient strength to seize the throne from the combined forces of the returning noblemen. It is rather the explanation to Hubert of his prayer that God withhold His indignation. His worry is, as always, for England, facing the invaders now with decimated forces. The invasion, not the succession, is his business at the moment. And the question is doubly untimely, for John is still "the king" (line 43).

But we know, as the Bastard does not, that Lewis has also suffered grievous losses. Structurally, it remains only for John to die and the Bastard to reach his decision. Shakespeare first shows us Prince Henry, however, though the lines give no clue as to how the author may have advised his fellow actor to play the part. The prince's few speeches leave him sounding a sensitive enough young man facing the death of his father, but it would be equally possible to play him as a weakling reminiscent of Arthur or as a young man of promising strength of character, reminiscent of the Bastard. And the effect he creates will naturally cast its light on the Bastard's decision. If he is Arthur all over again, surrounded by the returning nobles, the Bastard's kneeling to him will flood the end of the play with a dreadful irony; if he has a suggestion of the royal character as well as the royal right, the Bastard's homage, acknowledging his possession of the throne, will create a triumphant rejoining of the qualifications divided at the beginning of the play.

The director and the actor, I would suggest, are called upon to attempt a compromise: Henry must be kept young enough to underline the similarity between the Bastard's choice and that which originally faced John; at the same time, he must show vitality and promise, for a suggestion of his complete dominance by the former traitors would be out of key with the generally hopeful conclusion of the play. This ambiguity in the prince's role is in part indicative of the fact that our attention no longer remains solely on the question of what qualifies a king, but has shifted over to that of how, given this situation, the Bastard ought to act.

John, who commenced the play as a successful usurper, dies miserably as he listens to the Bastard's news of England's losses. Even as John lies dying, his faithful follower pays him the compliment of not tempering the truth. And, though "God He knows how we shall answer" Lewis (V.vii.60), John is no sooner dead than the Bastard turns to rallying the defense. But defense is not necessary, for the others know that Lewis has already sued for peace. There remains then but the single question, and it is quickly settled: the Bastard turns and kneels to Prince Henry. Whether the prince combines the true kingly character with the possession and the right here acknowledged, the lines give us little chance of knowing. It is going to be up to the director. That, however, is no longer the main point. The very strength of character which made the Bastard the most worthy of Richard's heirs leads him to relinquish any divisive personal ambitions and to acknowledge a true duty to support the new king. This is the heir who alone remains of those who were established in the first act as having a share in Richard's heritage; this is the young man who once said, "Gain, be my lord, for I will worship thee!"; this is the efficient commander who, as John failed, has actually been wielding the royal power, filling the role of England's king. In spite of all these indications of a contrary denouement, he kneels to Prince Henry, acknowledging him King Henry. In a world of self-seekers, his conception of honor has grown until he is capable of this self-denying loyalty to England. It is, of course, one of the tragic ironies of politics that a man may be cut off from authority by the very act which best demonstrates his worthiness to wield it.

Though it has taken a paragraph to sketch the implications of the Bastard's kneeling—and more could be said—he is not to be seen as one who has thought it all through. He is as impulsive at the close as he was at the beginning, but his impulses are those of one whose original promise has come to maturity. His closing speech, with its ringing final couplet, has sometimes been dismissed as a platitudinous set piece, as "Armada rhetoric." But Armada rhetoric can be moving if one has just survived the threat of the Armada, and the Bastard's speech is platitudinous only when lifted out of its historical and textual context, only when we fail to see that the play has demonstrated most effectively the moral complexity of the problem of loyalty, while the Bastard has shown us (as, in his lesser role, has Hubert) the self-denying acceptance of a higher duty which true loyalty demands from the man of honor.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCES

In 1591, one Sampson Clarke published in London an anonymous two-part play, the lengthy title of which begins The Troublesome Reign of John, King of England . . .; many, indeed most, editors and scholars assume this to be the source of Shakespeare's play.² The plots are in fact so similar that, in spite of continual, line-by-line differences,³ there are only three logically possible relationships between them: either King John (KJ) is based on The Troublesome Reign (TR), or TR is based on KJ, or each is based on some third play, now missing. Missing sources are tantalizing but rarely of any use; though always logically possible, no such third play need be posited to explain the similarities between the two we have. It is sufficient to assume that one is based upon the other.

But which upon which? TR is a play of little verbal distinction with a firm anti-Roman-Catholic bias. It is commonly said that Shakespeare improved the verse and cut down on the anti-Catholicism. At the same time he is said to have been careless with his handling of the plot, so that one must read TR to understand KJ. For example, the Bastard's annoyance at the marriage of Blanch and Lewis is said to be understandable only when we know that in TR Elinor had already promised Blanch to the Bastard. One may, however, reverse such an argument and say that, based upon KJ, TR supplies the crudest of (misleading) motivation for what is more meaningful thematically in Shakespeare's play. In KJ, the Bastard's annoyance is with the blatant political expediency of the marriage; to reduce this to personal jealousy is to confuse the issue and cheapen the play. (It is noteworthy that Elinor's promise is first, and last, mentioned only when the political marriage has been suggested [TR, I.828–30]; the author of TR may well be scraping up a motive for something he has failed to understand.) What is taken as "better plotting" in TR can be consistently explained as an expansion and cheapening of Shakespeare's implications.⁴

One may, in addition, indicate many scenes in which TR muddles issues, or reproduces the outline of an action while missing the thematic point. The following are examples:

1. Blanch asks Lewis not to forsake his bride on his wedding day, but says nothing of her divided loyalty.
2. Pandulph and Lewis have their private conference after the departure of King Philip and Constance, but little reason for it remains. Pandulph's Machiavellian exposition of the complex political necessities (KJ, III.iii.107–83) is reduced to two lines in an eleven-line

³ Two lines alone appear unchanged in both plays (King John, II.i.528 and V.iv.42 are identical with The Troublesome Reign, I.862 and II.793), but there are other lines which are within a word or phrase of exact repetition—for example, King John: "With them a bastard of the king's deceased" (II.i.65); The Troublesome Reign: "Next them a bastard of the king's (deceased)" (I.512). Though divided into two parts, each with its own title page, The Troublesome Reign is in fact only a few hundred lines longer than King John.

⁴ Major examples would of course be the TR scene (written largely in Skeltonics and thus unlike anything else in the play) during which the Bastard, raiding the monasteries, finds a nun hidden in the abbot's chest and a friar in the nun's, and the attention paid to the monk who poisons John, which diverts attention from the Bastard's choice. This scene of the monk and the abbot (supplying a motivation not taken from Holinshed) takes the place, in fact, of the night meeting of Hubert and the Bastard, which does not occur in TR. Similarly, though some find TR "more effective" because the Bastard chases Austria and captures Richard's lionskin, here again TR may simply bring into the lines what is implied in KJ: if the Bastard enters wearing the lionskin as well as carrying Austria's head, the point is visual and requires no speeches. His complaint of the heat as he enters is a thoroughly effective reference to what he is wearing. To say more is to detract.

² The Troublesome Reign has frequently been reprinted, most recently in Six Early Plays Related to the Shakespeare Canon, edited by E. B. Everitt, Anglistica, XIV (1965), 143–93; this reprint is the basis for the line references in this note.

- scene: "Arthur is safe, let John alone with him!/Thy title next is fair'st to England's crown" (TR, I.1232-33).
3. The Bastard comes on stage, bringing Peter of Pomfret to John, before—and remains on stage during—John's decision, openly announced to the nobles, to kill Arthur, which announcement itself precedes Hubert's entry with the (mis)information that Arthur is dead. The Bastard is still on stage when Hubert tells John that Arthur is in fact alive. This removes from the Bastard any necessity of making up his mind about either John or Hubert and thus drains most of its meaning from the scene in which he is tested by the finding of Arthur's body.
 4. In that scene, the nobles find Arthur's body the moment they come on stage, which—along with their having heard John's announcement—supplies them with a sufficient motive for a treachery which in KJ is based upon a tangled skein of suspicion and hypocritical self-seeking, rendering doubly ironic Salisbury's reference to "our pure honors" (KJ, IV.iii.25). TR is elementary; KJ is morally complex and interesting.
 5. The Bastard himself boasts that "King Richard's fortune hangs/Upon the plume of warlike Philip's [that is, his own] helm" (II.759-60), but John and the Bastard fight alongside each other against Lewis, without John's structurally important conferring of royal power upon the Bastard ("Have thou the ordering of this present time" [KJ, V.i.77]).
 6. The dying Melun has two reasons for revealing Lewis' plot to the English nobles, but only one is common to both plays ("For that my grandsire was an Englishman"—the second of the two identical lines). In TR, the other reason is his dramatically trite (however relevant) desire to save his soul, "to leave this mansion free of guilt" (II.791); in KJ it is the thematic and ironic complexity of "Commend me to one Hubert, with your king:/The love of him . . ./Awakes my conscience to confess all this (V.iv.40-43). Thus TR lacks the entire irony of the nobles' being saved for love of the man they have most scorned.
 7. John, at his death, asks for "the frozen Alps,/To tumble on, and cool this inward heat" (II.1089-90), without any of the development which, throughout KJ, ties heat and cold, fever and cool zeal, blood and eyes into a web of thematic images.

At each of these points, and many others, it is possible to argue that Shakespeare has improved on a TR source; but it is equally possible to argue that TR has missed the point of the KJ scene upon which it is based. It is possible that Shakespeare omitted scenes from TR and developed others; it would seem more likely that the author of TR, working not from the text of KJ but from his memory of performances, invented material to fill out what he considered opportunities too inviting to be missed, and reproduced some actions and stage groupings of which the meaning in KJ had quite escaped him. Apart from KJ, it is difficult to see why some of these incidents occur in TR; drained of their dramatic meaning, they are fragments, implying, like fossils, that they are remnants of a living organism, not that they are random protoplasm which might be blown into future viability.

And yet, if the author of TR was remembering performances of KJ—if, however he may have misunderstood it, he is reproducing the action as well as he is—how is it possible that he remembered so few of its words, and those few so flat, so peripheral? Why are there no traces of the metaphors or of the forceful lines which strike us as the most obviously Shakespearean element in KJ? The absence of all trace of Shakespeare's characteristic language is surely the strongest of arguments against TR's having been based upon KJ. To counter it, one is forced to invent a man with no ear for poetry, no memory for lines, who has at the same time a surprisingly good memory for the scene-by-scene progress of the plot. It is possible to conceive such a man, working perhaps some weeks later from a plot outline made immediately after a performance, but he is an unlikely combination, and it is on the basis of this difficulty that one must say that the source question remains open.

For, in terms of plot development, the evidence seems, to me at least, to go strongly the other way. Consider one final relationship in which TR is clearer than KJ: the question of John's orders to Hubert. The situation is definitely confusing in Shakespeare's play: John hints to Hubert, first obliquely and then directly, to kill Arthur (III.ii.69-77). We therefore assume, when we see Hubert preparing instruments with the help of an unspecified number of brutes (labeled, indeed, Executioners by the entries and the speech-headings), that he is about to carry out John's wish. However, it turns out that he is going to blind Arthur instead, and he shows the boy written orders to that effect (IV.i.33-39). This is the first surprise; the second comes when, having reported Arthur dead, Hubert is defending himself against John's unjustified anger. Nothing is said of blinding in this scene, and Hubert's "Here is your hand and seal for what I did" (IV.ii.215) apparently refers to written orders to kill Arthur. Whether we are to assume two differing written orders, or a confusion about the contents of one order, is not clear.

This is another situation in which we are told that we must go to TR if we are to understand what is happening. There, John puts Arthur into Hubert's custody, saying:

Hubert, keep him safe,
For on his life doth hang thy sovereign's crown,
But in his death consists thy sovereign's bliss.
Then, Hubert, as thou shortly hear'st from me,
So use the prisoner I have given in charge. (I.1176-80)

John clearly has conflicting motives, but he gives no such direct hint as we have in Shakespeare. We cannot be sure what the further orders will be. The scene between Hubert and Arthur keeps us in suspense. (The entry calls for "Hubert de Burgh with three men," and the single speech-heading labels them Attendants.) Hubert is about to commit some form of violence against Arthur, and we expect that he may be going to kill him, but this is first denied in favor of something worse (I.1425-29), and then Hubert reads the words of the order—"put out the eyes of Arthur Plantagenet" (line 1443). This settles our doubts, and the scene proceeds to Hubert's ultimate decision not to carry out the order. When Hubert returns to John, the king has just informed the nobles that "The brat shall die" (line 1737), but this is presumably a new decision, and Hubert brings the (false) news that "According to your Highness' strict command/Young Arthur's eyes are blinded and extinct" (lines 1744-45), adding that he died of the "extreme pain" (line 1747). This twist is in accordance with Hubert's plan (lines 1520-21) and is presumably a way of covering his failure to obey orders. Whether he is intending to help Arthur escape or merely to keep him hidden, is not mentioned. Finally, however, when John curses Hubert—"Furies haunt thee still/For killing him whom all the world laments" (lines 1797-98)—Hubert's reply, "Why here's—my lord—your Highness' hand and seal,/Charging on life's regard to do the deed!" (lines 1799-1800), would seem, as in KJ, to refer to an order for Arthur's death and not to the document shown to Arthur at the time. Here is the same confusion; without comparing the scene with KJ, however, one might be willing to take "the deed" as blinding.

At any rate, apart from this final detail, the development is logical in TR, while it is confused in its major outline in KJ, and the argument goes that this is further evidence that TR was the original. If so, we have the curious Shakespeare of certain textual scholars, the man who grew toward mastery of his craft through carelessness in handling a perfectly clear source. That Shakespeare was sometimes careless—that he was careless here—there is no doubt; but his carelessness is of a differing kind if he is not following a source which has already solved the problem he then creates. Which is more likely: that an author finding confusion in his source would attempt to straighten it out? or that an author finding clarity would muddle it? It would appear, prima facie, more likely that TR followed KJ than that KJ followed TR. TR's improvement at this point is of a piece with its supplying of motivation for the Bastard's resentment of Blanch's marriage, its supplying of a scene in the monastery and a scene dealing with John's poisoner; the author of TR was developing what appeared to him faulty or insufficient. The difference is that in the orders to Hubert there was a genuine confusion which, indeed, he only partially resolved.

How then, if I am arguing for the general superiority of Shakespeare's text and the superficiality of TR's "improvements," how then do I account for the confusion of Shakespeare's handling of these scenes? First, it must be clear that any "inferiority" is in the single matter of inconsistent orders; the scenes are vastly superior in every other respect. Only the presence of the inconsistency needs explanation.

It would be difficult to account for the inconsistency if KJ were in fact based upon TR. However, the contradiction comes right out of Holinshed:

True it is that great suit was made to have Arthur set at liberty, as well by the French king as by William de Riches, a valiant baron of Poictou, and divers other noblemen of Brittany, who, when they could not prevail in their suit, banded themselves together and, joining in confederacy with Robert, Earl of Alençon, the Viscount Beaumont, William de Fulgiers, and others, they began to levy sharp wars against King John in divers places, insomuch (as it was thought) that so long as Arthur lived there would be no quiet in those parts; whereupon it was reported that King John, through persuasion of his counselors, appointed certain persons to go to Falais, where Arthur was kept in prison, under the charge of Hubert de Burgh, and there to put out the young gentleman's eyes.

The point is that the move from "so long as Arthur lived" to the order to "put out the young gentleman's eyes" is not logical in Holinshed, which thus provides a basis for the lack of logic in KJ. Furthermore, it is clear that Shakespeare's attention has been caught less by the illogicality, which he reproduces, than by the dramatic possibilities, especially the possibilities for thematic development of both stage and verse imagery in the attack by the "hot irons" of brute power upon the helpless eyes of suffering innocence. Shakespeare would not then be seen as a playwright who carelessly muddled a structure that was clear, as a botcher of someone else's play, but as an artist creating drama from the raw material of the chronicle. The structure he gave KJ, the structure indicated in my introduction, is his own; it is not in Holinshed, and it is mangled by TR. If he has taken over this one illogicality from his source, it is because his attention at that point was focused so firmly on the poetic possibilities. He was attempting to write a new kind of play, a play with a dramatic structure, not just a chronicle history; the man who tried to reproduce it in TR quite missed Shakespeare's point. He thought he was dealing with another play like one of the parts of Henry VI, and indeed the same man may have been responsible for all three quartos.

For TR may be seen as having the same relationship to KJ as The First part of the Contention betwixt the two famous Houses of Yorke and Lancaster and The True Tragedie of Richard Duke of Yorke have to 2 and 3 Henry VI. Long considered to have been the sources of Shakespeare's plays, these are now generally acknowledged to have been "bad quartos," versions of Shakespeare's plays concocted on the basis of some familiarity with performances of them. TR may well be a bad quarto of similar origin; it need not be Shakespeare's source.

That Holinshed is Shakespeare's source, or one of his sources, is further attested (to give one or two of a multitude of examples) by the page in the chronicle at which we last looked. The succeeding paragraph concludes:

Howbeit, to satisfy his mind for the time and to stay the rage of the Britains [men of Brittany], he [Hubert de Burgh] caused it to be bruited abroad through the country that the King's commandment was fulfilled, and that Arthur also, through sorrow and grief, was departed out of this life. For the space of fifteen days this rumor incessantly ran through both the realms of England and France, and there was ringing for him through the towns and villages as [though] it had been for his funeral.

Two pages earlier in Holinshed is the account of the spectacle of the five moons, but it is given no interpretation. Shakespeare brings these two items together in Hubert's report:

KING JOHN

Five moons?

HUBERT Old men and beldams in the streets

Do prophesy upon it dangerously;

Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths.

(IV.ii.185-87)

And the Bastard has already reported: "I find the people strangely fantasied,/Possessed with rumors . . ." (IV.ii. 144-45). There is nothing of these rumors in TR; had that been Shakespeare's source, he would still have to be seen as having gone also to Holinshed. Similarly, Holinshed probably accounts for Shakespeare's use of the word "commodity." The Bastard has no commodity soliloquy in TR. Just after Holinshed's mention of the fall of Angiers, however, we find:

The French king all this while conceiving another exploit in his head, more commodious to him than as yet to attempt war against the Englishmen upon so light an occasion, dissembled the matter. . . .

It is in this coupling of "commodious" with dissembling that I would see the origin of Shakespeare's use of "commodity." Again, if he were using TR, he would still have to be seen as going to Holinshed. That is the position to which some scholars have in fact now arrived. If Shakespeare used Holinshed, however, he had no need of TR, while TR is difficult to explain on the basis of Holinshed without KJ—though its author did refer to some chronicle or other for a few details that Shakespeare had not used (the full name Hubert de Burgh, Chester and Beauchamp as the names of additional barons, and so on). Though neither case has yet been proved, I join Professors Alexander and Honigsmann in thinking that the conflicting evidence tends to converge upon Holinshed as Shakespeare's major source and TR as a bad quarto.

Here for once we do not need to decide between Holinshed's chronicle and Hall's, for Hall does not deal with the reign of John. However, in inventing the character of the Bastard, based on a brief mention in Holinshed, it is clear that Shakespeare recalled an incident in Hall which he already knew in connection with his writing of 1 Henry VI. He may have associated the name Faulconbridge with a bastard on the basis of another passage in Hall which he had used in 3 Henry VI. There he has Margaret say, "Stern Faulconbridge commands the Narrow Seas" (I.i.239); in Hall, this man is identified as "one Thomas Nevel, bastard son to Thomas, Lord Faulconbridge, the valiant captain, a man of no less courage than audacity (who for [in spite of] his evil conditions was such an apt person that a more meet could not be chosen to set all the world in a broil, and to put the estate of the realm on an ill hazard), had of new begun a great commotion. This bastard was before this time appointed by the Earl of Warwick to be Vice-Admiral of the sea. . . ." Hall describes a foolhardy rebel against Edward IV; in Margaret's speech he is, of course, a faithful partisan of Henry VI. Since we know Shakespeare to have been working with this chronicle material for his preceding plays, we have here additional weight for the argument that he is the one who invented the Bastard of KJ as the blunt and dauntless Englishman. (This association in turn probably accounts for his giving the name Faulconbridge to Portia's English suitor, "a proper man's picture" but untaught in other languages, in The Merchant of Venice, I.ii. Shakespeare used the name elsewhere but with no strikingly obvious reason for the choice. Longaville's Maria is "an heir of Faulconbridge" in Love's Labor's Lost [II.i.205]. In the quarto text of 2 Henry IV there is an entry for "Fauconbridge" among the rebels [I.iii]; since he has no speeches, most editors drop him.) Though there are possibly other sources from which Shakespeare picked up a detail or two (Bullough reproduces several, as well as TR, in Narrative and Dramatic Sources of Shakespeare, IV), they are not central to the play.

Though the source question remains unsettled, and a serious investigator must naturally study TR also, I consider Holinshed's Chronicles to have been the point of departure for Shakespeare's creative imagination in KJ. These are now most conveniently studied in Shakespeare's Holinshed, a selection edited by Richard Hosley (1968). In comparing the play with the chronicles, as in comparing any of his plays with their literary sources—as in comparing the earlier history plays or the later Macbeth with other portions of the same chronicles—the point is in seeing not simply the source itself as a literary curiosity but what Shakespeare used, omitted, modified, or invented. It is in understanding his selective approach to a source that we can perhaps come closest to understanding how that creative imagination quickened raw substance into a work of art.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

Though mentioned by Francis Meres in 1598, King John was not printed until 1623, in the Folio. It has usually been thought that it must have been written between 1591, the publication date of The Troublesome Reign of King John, upon which many consider Shakespeare's play to have been based, and 1598, when Meres mentioned it. Since, as the Note on the Sources indicates, I am convinced that it preceded The Troublesome Reign, I naturally date Shakespeare's play before 1591, somewhere, probably, between 1588 and 1590. I would think that the writing of 1, 2, and 3 Henry VI, certainly, and of Richard III, probably, preceded it, and thus I would differ on the dates of composition for all of these plays from those given in the table in the General Introduction (p. 5). King John should be seen as belonging with these early plays but, in its conception, a long step forward from them.

To see The Troublesome Reign as based upon Shakespeare's play is not to make it a trustworthy quarto. Its author imitates Shakespeare's plot but has little memory for his lines. The Folio remains the only substantive text.

Such inconsistencies as the Folio text contains suggest that the play was printed from author's manuscript and not from a theatrical promptbook. The chief of these inconsistencies is the Act II entry of "a Citizen upon the walls" of Angiers, followed by the speech-heading Cit. for his first four speeches, after which, in midscene, he becomes Hubert for one speech, and then Hub. Presumably this change represents the author's decision, while writing, to develop the anonymous Citizen into a character of importance to the plot, and such confusion of speech-heading would have been removed from the promptbook. To the detriment of the play, most editors have carried the unnamed Citizen through the act, thus introducing Hubert as a new character in III.ii. Hubert's development as a man forced to take a stand is only clear when we recognize his attempt to avoid involvement during Act II.

The errors in act and scene headings were presumably made by the compositor. His repetition of Actus Quartus where he needed Actus Quintus may have been carried over from his copy, but a less obvious confusion would seem most simply explained on the basis of his having misunderstood what he found. Actus Primus, Scaena Prima is followed by a Scaena Secunda covering more than four double-column pages, to be followed in turn by an Actus Secundus covering little more than half of one page, which makes for a total first act of more than seven pages, and a second act of less than one. Editors, following Theobald, have generally turned the Scaena Secunda into Act II, and Actus Secundus into III.i, which necessitates considering the Folio's Actus Tertius, Scaena Prima a further error. Since Constance throws herself to the ground at the conclusion of Actus Secundus and is apparently still there at the opening of Actus Tertius (in spite of her being listed as entering with the others), editors have felt justified in making those scenes continuous in spite of the indicated division.

It is much more likely, as Honigmann suggests in the Arden edition, that the compositor mistook a simple manuscript two (or 2, or II), meaning Act II, as indicating Scene II, reversing the process when he came to the next two (or 2, or II) and labeling an intended second scene of Act II as though it were the whole act. This edition therefore follows Honigmann and differs from other editors by including a II.ii and thus beginning III.i in accordance with the Folio. Given the continuous action of an Elizabethan production, the presence of Constance seated on stage from one act to the next is not a serious challenge to following the Folio at that point.

Several scholars have noted that, at III.i.81, the Folio prints "heaven" where the context clearly demands the word "God," and they have suggested that censorship intervened at some point between the original manuscript and the Folio. But editors have not considered the implications of this argument.

In only one other history play, Henry VIII, does "heaven" appear more frequently than "God" ("heaven" 44 times, "God" 21); in 1 Henry VI and 3 Henry VI they appear an equal number of times (16 times each in the first, 20 times each in the second); in the other five history plays "heaven" appears 115 times to "God's" 270, with the greatest discrepancy in Richard III (29 to 79). In all these plays, the lowest frequency of appearance of the word "God" is the 16 times it appears in 1 Henry VI, and the highest frequency of the word "heaven" is the 44 times in Henry VIII. Compare with these figures the fact that "heaven" appears 51 times in the Folio text of King John, while "God" appears only 5 times, and the suggestion of censorship is greatly strengthened.

Such being likely, each appearance of the word "heaven" in this play becomes suspect. V.vii.60 is, as clearly as III.i.81, an instance in which "God" was the original word. In phrases like "heaven and earth" (II.i.173), "clouds of heaven" (II.i.252), or "heaven or hell" (II.i.407), it is obvious that no change should be made. But this leaves a large group of doubtful instances. On the basis of context (verbal, rhythmic, and dramatic) I have made the change from "heaven" to "God" eight times where it seems thoroughly justified, as noted below. Eleven places where I would also prefer to make the change but, in line with the conservative textual policy of this edition, have not done so are I.i.83, 84, 256; II.i.373; III.i.162, 168, 192 (twice); IV.i.55; IV.iii.82; and V.i.29. Eighteen other places where the change would be possible but where, for contextual reasons (with which others might disagree), I would not make it are I.i.70; II.i.35, 86, 170, 171; III.i.22, 33, 34, 62; III.ii.37, 68; III.iii.48; IV.i.23, 91, 109; and IV.iii.10, 145, 159. (In addition to the three instances mentioned previously, I consider "heaven" obviously correct in II.i.174; III.ii.44; III.iii.77, 87, 158; IV.ii.15, 216; V.ii.52; V.v.1; and V.vii.72.)

Speech-headings in this edition are regularized by spelling them out in full. Spelling and punctuation have been modernized (conservatively), and obvious typographical errors have been corrected. I have changed to "Dauphin" and "Melun" in stage directions, but have left the old spellings, "Dolphin" and "Meloone," in the speeches for the sake of pronunciation. Other than these changes, departures from the Folio text are listed below, the adopted reading first, in boldface, followed by the original, in roman.

I.i.1 s.d. with Chatillion with the Chattylyon 43 God heauen
62 God heauen 147 I would It would 203 Pyrenean Perennean
208 smack smoake 237 Could he get me Could get me
II.i. ACT II Scaena Secunda s.d. King Philip . . . Austria and his Attendants Philip King of France, Lewis, Daulphin, Austria, Constance, Arthur 1 King Philip Lewis [the text several times confuses the French king's name] 18 Ah, noble boy A noble boy
63 Ate Ace 127 Than thou and John in manners, being as like Then thou and Iohn, in manners being as like 149 Philip Lewis
150 King Philip Lew. 152 Anjou Angiers 201 s.d. Hubert a Citizen [not identified as Hubert until the speech-heading at line 325] 215 Confronts your Comfort yours 259 roundure rounder 368 Hubert Fra[nce]. 487 Anjou Angiers [the error—see also II.i.152—is probably not the author's, for Angiers is the city excepted in line 489; cf. also line 528, where Folio has "Aniow"]
II.ii. Scene II Actus Secundus
III.i.36 day daies 74 task tast 81 God heauen 238 God heauen
III.iii.64 friends fiends
IV.i.77 God's heauen 91 mote moth
IV.ii.1 again crowned against crowned 42 when then 73 Does Do
IV.iii.33 man mans
V. ACT V Actus Quartus
V.ii.26 Were Was 43 hast thou fought hast fought 66 God heauen 133 unhaired vn-heard
V.v.3 measured measure
V.vi.37 God heauen
V.vii.17 mind winde 21 cygnet Symet 42 strait straight 60 God heauen

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING JOHN

[Dramatis Personae]

KING JOHN

PRINCE HENRY son to the king

ARTHUR Duke of Brittany, nephew to the king

BIGOT

ESSEX

PEMBROKE

SALISBURY

} English lords

ROBERT FAULCONBRIDGE *son to Sir Robert
Faulconbridge*

PHILIP THE BASTARD his half brother

HUBERT a citizen of Angiers

JAMES GURNEY servant to Lady Faulconbridge

PETER OF POMFRET a prophet

PHILIP King of France

LEWIS the Dauphin (Dolphin)

LYMOGES Duke of Austria

CARDINAL PANDULPH the pope's legate

COUNT MELUN (Meloone) a French lord

CHATILLION ambassador from France

QUEEN ELINOR mother to King John

CONSTANCE mother to Arthur

BLANCH OF SPAIN niece to King John

LADY FAULCONBRIDGE widow to Sir Robert Faulconbridge

LORDS SHERIFF HERALDS OFFICERS

SOLDIERS EXECUTIONERS MESSENGERS

OTHER ATTENDANTS

Scene: England and France]

A C T I

Scene I. [England. King John's court.]

Enter KING JOHN, Queen ELINOR, PEMBROKE,
ESSEX, and SALISBURY, with CHATILLION of France.

KING JOHN

Now say, Chatillion, what would France with us?

CHATILLION

Thus, after greeting, speaks the King of France

In my behavior^o to the majesty,

The borrowed^o majesty, of England here.

ELINOR

A strange beginning: "borrowed majesty"! 5

KING JOHN

Silence, good mother; hear the embassy.

CHATILLION

Philip of France, in right and true behalf

Of thy deceased brother Geoffrey's son,

Arthur Plantagenet, lays most lawful claim

To this fair island and the territories: 10

To Ireland, Poitiers, Anjou, Touraine, Maine,

Desiring thee to lay aside the sword

Which sways usurpingly these several titles,

And put the same into young Arthur's hand,

Thy nephew and right royal sovereign. 15

KING JOHN

What follows if we disallow of^o this?

CHATILLION

The proud control^o of fierce and bloody war,

To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld.

KING JOHN

Here have we war for war and blood for blood,

Controlment^o for controlment: so answer France. 20

The decorative border shown above appeared on the first page of King John in the First Folio edition of Shakespeare's plays, 1623.

I.i.3 In my behavior through me 4 borrowed usurped

16 disallow of deny 17 proud control resolute compulsion
20 Controlment compulsion

CHATILLION

Then take my king's defiance from my mouth,
The farthest limit of° my embassy.

KING JOHN

Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace.
Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France,
For, ere thou canst report,° I will be there: 25
The thunder of my cannon shall be heard.
So, hence! Be thou the trumpet° of our wrath
And sullen presage of your own decay.°
An honorable conduct° let him have:
Pembroke, look to't. Farewell, Chatillion. 30

Exit CHATILLION and PEMBROKE.

ELINOR

What now, my son! Have I not ever said
How that ambitious Constance would not cease
Till she had kindled France and all the world
Upon the right and party of her son?
This might have been prevented and made whole 35
With very easy arguments of love,°
Which now the manage° of two kingdoms must
With fearful bloody issue arbitrate.

KING JOHN

Our strong possession and our right for us.

ELINOR

Your strong possession much more than your right, 40
Or else it must go wrong with you and me;
So much my conscience whispers in your ear,
Which none but God, and you, and I, shall hear.

Enter a SHERIFF.

ESSEX

My liege, here is the strangest controversy,
Come from the country to be judged by you, 45
That e'er I heard. Shall I produce the men?

KING JOHN

Let them approach.
Our abbeys and our priories shall pay
This expeditious charge.°

Enter ROBERT Faulconbridge, and Philip [his BASTARD brother].

What men° are you?

BASTARD

Your faithful subject, I, a gentleman, 50
Born in Northamptonshire, and eldest son,
As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge,
A soldier, by the honor-giving hand
Of Cordelion° knighted in the field.

KING JOHN

What art thou? 55

ROBERT

The son and heir to that same Faulconbridge.

KING JOHN

Is that the elder, and art thou the heir?
You came not of one mother then, it seems.

22 farthest limit of most extreme measure permitted by 25 report (1) give an account (2) make a noise like a gun (cf. "thunder," line 26) 27 trumpet herald 28 sullen presage
. . . decay gloomy foreteller of your own destruction 29 conduct escort 36 arguments of love (1) expressions of love (2) friendly discussions (?) 37 manage government(s) 49 expeditious charge (1) sudden expense (2) speedy attack;
What men who (of what name) 54 Cordelion Coeur de
Lion (Lionhearted), i.e., King Richard I, John's older brother

BASTARD

Most certain of one mother, mighty king;
That is well known; and, as I think, one father: 60
But for the certain knowledge of that truth
I put you o'er° to God and to my mother;
Of that I doubt, as all men's children may.

ELINOR

Out on thee, rude man! Thou dost shame thy mother,
And wound her honor with this diffidence.° 65

BASTARD

I, madam? No, I have no reason for it;
That is my brother's plea and none of mine;
The which if he can prove, 'a° pops me out
At least from fair five hundred pound a year.
Heaven guard my mother's honor and my land! 70

KING JOHN

A good blunt fellow. Why, being younger born,
Doth he lay claim to thine inheritance?

BASTARD

I know not why, except to get the land.
But once he slandered me with bastardy.
But whe'r° I be as true begot or no, 75
That still I lay upon my mother's head;°
But that I am as well begot, my liege—
Fair fall° the bones that took the pains for me—
Compare our faces and be judge yourself.
If old Sir Robert did beget us both, 80
And were our father, and this son like him,
O old Sir Robert, father, on my knee
I give heaven thanks I was not like to thee!

KING JOHN

Why, what a madcap hath heaven lent us here!

ELINOR

He hath a trick° of Cordelion's face; 85
The accent of his tongue affecteth° him:
Do you not read some tokens of my son
In the large composition° of this man?

KING JOHN

Mine eye hath well examinèd his parts,
And finds them perfect Richard. Sirrah, speak, 90
What doth move you° to claim your brother's land?

BASTARD

Because he hath a half-face° like my father!
With half that face° would he have all my land—
A half-faced groat° five hundred pound a year!

ROBERT

My gracious liege, when that my father lived, 95
Your brother did employ my father much—

BASTARD

Well sir, by this you cannot get my land:
Your tale must be how he employed my mother.

ROBERT

And once dispatched° him in an embassy

62 put you o'er refer you 65 diffidence mistrust 68 'a he 75 whe'r whether 76 lay . . . head leave up to my mother 78 Fair fall may good befall 85 trick distinctive trait 86 affecteth tends toward, resembles 88 large composition
(1) large size (2) general features 91 you Robert (John shows his partiality for the Bastard by the shift of pronoun—cf. line 55—and by his use of the slightly contemptuous "Sirrah")
92 half-face (1) profile (2) imperfect or emaciated face 93
With . . . face (1) with a face like that (2) with such impudence 94 half-faced groat (1) small silver coin with a profile stamped on it (2) imperfect or clipped coin 99 dispatched (1) sent
(2) disposed of

To Germany, there with the emperor
 To treat of high affairs touching that time.
 Th' advantage of his absence took the king,
 And in the meantime sojourned at my father's,
 Where how he did prevail I shame to speak—
 But truth is truth: large lengths of seas and shores
 Between my father and my mother lay,
 As I have heard my father speak himself,
 When this same lusty° gentleman was got.
 Upon his deathbed he by will bequeathed
 His lands to me, and took it on his death°
 That this my mother's son was none of his;
 And if° he were, he came into the world
 Full fourteen weeks before the course of time.
 Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine,
 My father's land, as was my father's will.

KING JOHN

Sirrah, your brother is legitimate.
 Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him;
 And if she did play false, the fault was hers;
 Which fault lies on° the hazards of all husbands
 That marry wives. Tell me, how if my brother,
 Who, as you say, took pains to get this son,
 Had of your father claimed this son for his?
 In sooth, good friend, your father might have kept
 This calf, bred from his cow, from all the world.
 In sooth he might; then, if he were my brother's,
 My brother might not claim him, nor your father,
 Being none of his, refuse him: this concludes.
 My mother's son did get your father's heir;
 Your father's heir must have your father's land.

ROBERT

Shall then my father's will be of no force
 To dispossess that child which is not his?

BASTARD

Of no more force to dispossess me, sir,
 Than was his will to get me, as I think.

ELINOR

Whether hadst thou° rather be, a Faulconbridge,
 And like thy brother,° to enjoy thy land,
 Or the reputed son of Cordelion,
 Lord of thy presence° and no land beside?

BASTARD

Madam, and if my brother had my shape
 And I had his, Sir Robert's his,° like him,
 And if my legs were two such riding-rods,°
 My arms such eelskins stuffed, my face so thin
 That in mine ear I durst not stick a rose Lest men should say, "Look, where three-farthings° goes!"

And, to° his shape, were heir to all this land,
 Would I might never stir from off this place,

100 I would give it every foot to have this face:
 I would not be Sir Nob° in any case.°

ELINOR

I like thee well: wilt thou forsake thy fortune,
 Bequeath° thy land to him, and follow me?

105 I am a soldier and now bound to France. 150

BASTARD

Brother, take you my land, I'll take my chance.
 Your face hath got five hundred pound a year,
 Yet sell your face for fivepence and 'tis dear.
 110 Madam, I'll follow you unto the death.

ELINOR

Nay, I would have you go before me thither. 155

BASTARD

Our country manners give our betters way.

115 KING JOHN

What is thy name?

BASTARD

Philip, my liege, so is my name begun—
 Philip, good old Sir Robert's wife's eldest son.

KING JOHN

120 From henceforth bear his name whose form thou bearest: 160

Kneel thou down Philip, but rise more great,
 Arise Sir Richard, and Plantagenet.°

BASTARD

125 Brother by th' mother's side, give me your hand:
 My father gave me honor, yours gave land.
 Now blessed be the hour,° by night or day, 165
 When I was got, Sir Robert was away!

ELINOR

The very spirit of Plantagenet!

130 I am thy grandam, Richard; call me so.

BASTARD

Madam, by chance but not by truth;° what though?
 Something about,° a little from the right, 170
 In at the window, or else o'er the hatch:
 Who dares not stir by day must walk by night,
 And have is have, however men do catch.
 135 Near or far off, well won is still well shot,°
 And I am I, howe'er I was begot. 175

KING JOHN

Go, Faulconbridge. Now hast thou thy desire:
 A landless knight makes° thee a landed squire.
 Come, madam, and come, Richard, we must speed
 140 For France, for France, for it is more than need.

BASTARD

Brother, adieu: good fortune come to thee! 180
 For thou wast got i' th' way of honesty.

Exeunt all but BASTARD.

145 A foot of honor better than I was,
 But many a many foot of land the worse.
 Well, now can I make any Joan° a lady.

108 lusty merry; got conceived 110 took . . . death swore at the peril of his soul 112 And if if (a frequent Elizabethan usage) 119 lies on is among 127 concludes is decisive 134 Whether hadst thou which would you 135 like thy brother resembling Robert (in physique and character) 137 Lord . . . presence master of your own physique and character 139 Sir Robert's his Sir Robert's (a double genitive) 140 riding-rods switches for horses 143 threefarthings the smallest of a number of coins which were distinguished from coins of similar sizes by the presence of a rose behind the ear in Queen Elizabeth's portrait 144 to in addition to

147 Nob nickname for Robert (?)—perhaps with puns on head and knob, continuing mockery of his brother's appearance;
 in any case (1) under any circumstances (2) in any covering (clothing, body) 149 Bequeath legally transfer (immediately; his death is not implied) 162 Plantagenet surname of the royal family 165 hour (1) hour (2) whore (then identically pronounced) 169 truth virtue 170 Something about a bit off course 171-74 In . . . shot all proverbial expressions 177 A landless knight makes (1) the Bastard makes (2) making the Bastard landless makes 184 Joan common girl

"Good den, Sir Richard!"—"God-amercy,° fellow"°—

And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter,
For new-made honor doth forget men's names:

'Tis too respective and too sociable

For your conversion.° Now your traveler,

He and his toothpick° at my worship's mess,°

And when my knightly stomach is sufficed,

Why then I suck my teeth° and catechize

My pickèd° man of countries: "My dear sir"—

Thus, leaning on mine elbow, I begin—

"I shall beseech you"—that is Question now;

And then comes Answer like an Absey-book:°

"O, sir," says Answer, "at your best command,

At your employment, at your service, sir";

"No, sir," says Question, "I, sweet sir, at yours";

And so, ere Answer knows what Question would,

Saving in dialogue of compliment,

And talking of the Alps and Apennines,

The Pyrenean and the river Po,

It draws toward supper in conclusion so.

But this is worshipful society,

And fits the mounting spirit like myself;

For he is but a bastard to the time°

That doth not smack of observation.°

And so am I, whether I smack or no:

And not alone in habit and device,°

Exterior form, outward accoutrement,

But from the inward motion° to deliver

Sweet, sweet, sweet poison° for the age's tooth,

Which, though I will not practice to deceive,

Yet, to avoid deceit,° I mean to learn;

For it shall strew the footsteps of my rising.°

But who comes in such haste in riding-robcs?

What woman-post° is this? Hath she no husband

That will take pains to blow a horn before her?°

Enter LADY FAULCONBRIDGE and James GURNEY.

O me! 'Tis my mother. How now, good lady!

What brings you here to court so hastily?

LADY FAULCONBRIDGE

Where is that slave, thy brother? Where is he,

That holds in chase° mine honor up and down?

185 Good den . . . God-amercy usual greetings (elisions of "God give you good evening" and "God have mercy on you"); fellow used for one of lower rank 188-89 'Tis . . . conversion It (remembering names) is too respectful and too amiable for my change in rank ("your" is general and vague: any conversion) 190 toothpick an un-English affectation; mess dinner table 192 suck my teeth scorning a toothpick 193 pickèd (1) affected (2) with his teeth picked 196 Absey-book ABC book, a child's question-and-answer primer 207 but . . . time not a true child of his time 208 observation (1) paying attention (2) obsequiousness 210 habit and device dress and emblem (the heraldic symbol on his shield will be crossed by a black band, the "bar sinister" denoting a bastard) 212 motion incitement, intention 213 sweet poison flattery 215 deceit deception (i.e., being deceived) 216 it . . . rising flattery will be thrown before me as I rise just as flowers are thrown to welcome a great man 218 woman-post female messenger 219 blow . . . her (1) clear the way for her (as a herald announced an important arrival, or as the speeding post blew his post horn) (2) announce her adultery (the cuckold was said to wear horns) 223 holds in chase pursues (as a huntsman)

BASTARD

185 My brother Robert? Old Sir Robert's son?
Colbrand the giant,° that same mighty man?
Is it Sir Robert's son that you seek so?

225

LADY FAULCONBRIDGE

190 Sir Robert's son? Aye, thou unreverend boy, Sir Robert's son! Why scorn'st thou at Sir Robert?
He is Sir Robert's son, and so art thou.

BASTARD

James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave awhile? 230

GURNEY

195 Good leave,° good Philip.

BASTARD

Philip, sparrow!° James,
There's toys° abroad; anon I'll tell thee more.

Exit James [GURNEY].

Madam, I was not old Sir Robert's son.

200 Sir Robert might have eat his part in me

Upon Good Friday and ne'er broke his fast: 235

Sir Robert could do well—marry, to confess°—

Could he get me! Sir Robert could not do it.

205 We know his handiwork: therefore, good mother,

To whom am I beholding for these limbs?

Sir Robert never holp° to make this leg.° 240

LADY FAULCONBRIDGE

Hast thou conspired with thy brother too,

That for thine own gain shouldst defend mine honor?

210 What means this scorn, thou most untoward° knave?

BASTARD

Knight, knight, good mother, Basilisco-like.°

What! I am dubbed; I have it on my shoulder. 245

But, mother, I am not Sir Robert's son;

215 I have disclaimed Sir Robert and my land;

Legitimation, name, and all is gone.

Then, good my mother, let me know my father;

Some proper° man I hope: who was it, mother? 250

LADY FAULCONBRIDGE

Hast thou denied thyself a Faulconbridge?

BASTARD

220 As faithfully as I deny the devil.

LADY FAULCONBRIDGE

King Richard Cordelion was thy father.

By long and vehement suit I was seduced

To make room for him in my husband's bed. 255

Heaven lay not my transgression to my charge,

That art° the issue of my dear offense,

Which was so strongly urged past my defense.

BASTARD

Now, by this light, were I to get° again,

Madam, I would not wish a better father. 260

Some sins do bear their privilege° on earth,

And so doth yours: your fault was not your folly.

225 Colbrand the giant Guy of Warwick's final opponent in the popular old romances 231 Good leave willingly; Philip, sparrow Philip, a common name for a pet sparrow, is too paltry for the newly knighted Bastard 232 toys trifling gifts (i.e., knighthoods) or rumors (?) 236 marry, to confess indeed, to speak the truth 240 holp helped; to . . . leg (1) to form a leg like mine (2) to give me courtly manners like this (to make a leg = to bow; the Bastard must bow, perhaps ironically, as he requests her answer) 243 untoward perverse, ill-mannered 244 Basilisco-like Basilisco was a bragging knight in an earlier play, Soliman and Perseda 250 proper handsome, respectable 257 That art thou that art 259 get be conceived 261 bear their privilege carry their immunity (because of their good results?)

Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose,
 Subjected tribute° to commanding love;
 Against whose fury and unmatched force 265
 The aweless lion could not wage the fight,
 Nor keep his princely heart from Richard's hand.°
 He that perforce robs lions of their hearts
 May easily win a woman's. Ay, my mother,
 With all my heart I thank thee for my father!° 270
 Who lives and dares but say thou didst not well
 When I was got, I'll send his soul to hell.
 Come, lady, I will show thee to my kin,
 And they shall say, when Richard me begot,
 If thou hadst said him nay, it had been sin. 275
 Who says it was, he lies; I say 'twas not!° Exeunt.

A C T I I

[Scene I. France.]

Enter before [the gate of] Angiers, KING PHILIP of France, LEWIS the Dauphin, CONSTANCE, ARTHUR, and their ATTENDANTS and, from the other side, AUSTRIA and his ATTENDANTS.

KING PHILIP

Before Angiers well met, brave Austria.
 Arthur, that great forerunner of thy blood,°
 Richard, that robbed the lion of his heart
 And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
 By this brave duke° came early to his grave; 5
 And for amends to his posterity,
 At our importance° hither is he come
 To spread his colors,° boy, in thy behalf,
 And to rebuke the usurpation
 Of thy unnatural uncle, English John: 10
 Embrace him, love him, give him welcome hither.

ARTHUR

God shall forgive you Cordelion's death
 The rather that you give his offspring life,
 Shadowing° their right under your wings of war.
 I give you welcome with a powerless hand, 15
 But with a heart full of unstained love:
 Welcome before the gates of Angiers, duke.

LEWIS

Ah, noble boy, who would not do thee right?

AUSTRIA

Upon thy cheek lay I this zealous kiss,
 As seal to this indenture° of my love: 20
 That to my home I will no more return
 Till Angiers, and the right thou hast in France,

Together with that pale, that white-faced shore,°
 Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides
 And coops° from other lands her islanders, 25
 Even till that England, hedged in with the main,
 That water-walled bulwark, still° secure
 And confident from foreign purposes,
 Even till that utmost corner of the west
 Salute thee for her king; till then, fair boy, 30
 Will I not think of home, but follow arms.

CONSTANCE

O take his mother's thanks, a widow's thanks,
 Till your strong hand shall help to give him strength
 To make a more requital to° your love.

AUSTRIA

The peace of heaven is theirs that lift their swords 35
 In such a just and charitable war.

KING PHILIP

Well then, to work: our cannon shall be bent°
 Against the brows of this resisting town.
 Call for our chiefest men of discipline,°
 To cull the plots of best advantages.° 40
 We'll lay before this town our royal bones,
 Wade to the marketplace in Frenchmen's blood:
 But we will make it subject to this boy.

CONSTANCE

Stay for an answer to your embassy,
 Lest unadvised you stain your swords with blood. 45
 My Lord Chatillion may from England bring
 That right in peace which here we urge in war,
 And then we shall repent each drop of blood
 That hot rash haste so indirectly° shed.

Enter CHATILLION.

KING PHILIP

A wonder, lady! Lo, upon thy wish, 50
 Our messenger Chatillion is arrived!
 What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;
 We coldly pause for thee; Chatillion, speak.

CHATILLION

Then turn your forces from this paltry siege
 And stir them up against a mightier task: 55
 England, impatient of your just demands,
 Hath put himself in arms; the adverse winds,
 Whose leisure I have stayed, have given him time
 To land his legions all as soon as I;
 His marches are expedient° to this town, 60
 His forces strong, his soldiers confident.
 With him along is come the mother-queen,
 An Ate,° stirring him to blood and strife;
 With her her niece, the Lady Blanch of Spain;
 With them a bastard of the king's deceased;° 65
 And all th' unsettled humors° of the land,
 Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries,°

264 Subjected tribute tribute required of a vassal 266–67 The . . . hand the legend was that Richard's epithet came from his having eaten the heart he tore out by reaching, barehanded, down the throat of a living lion 270 for my father (1) on behalf of my father (2) for the father you have given me 276 not (1) not (2) naught, i.e., nothing (3) naught, i.e., wickedness (sexual immorality; cf. Richard III, I.i.97–100) II.i.2 forerunner . . . blood predecessor in your line (Arthur was Richard's nephew) 5 this brave duke Austria (that Austria killed Richard is not historical, but see note to III.i.40) 7 importance importunity 8 spread his colors unfurl his battle flags 14 Shadowing sheltering 20 indenture sealed agreement

23 that pale, that white-faced shore reference to the chalk cliffs on England's southern coast (a pale is also a limited territory) 25 coops encloses for protection 27 still always 34 more requital to larger recompense for 37 bent aimed (as is a bow) 39 discipline military training 40 To . . . advantages to choose the best location (for the cannons) 49 indirectly wrongly 60 expedient speedy 63 Ate goddess of vengeance 65 of . . . deceased of the deceased king 66 unsettled humors unsteady rabble (humors were bodily fluids, the balance of which supposedly determined a man's disposition) 67 voluntaries volunteers

With ladies' faces and fierce dragons' spleens,^o
 Have sold their fortunes at their native homes,
 Bearing their birthrights proudly on their backs,^o 70
 To make a hazard of^o new fortunes here.
 In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits
 Than now the English bottoms^o have waft o'er
 Did never float upon the swelling tide,
 To do offense and scathe in Christendom. 75

Drum beats.

The interruption of their churlish drums
 Cuts off more circumstance:^o they are at hand,
 To parley or to fight; therefore prepare.

KING PHILIP

How much unlooked for is this expedition!^o

AUSTRIA

By how much unexpected, by so much 80
 We must awake endeavor for defense,
 For courage mounteth with occasion:
 Let them be welcome then; we are prepared.

Enter KING [JOHN] of England, BASTARD, Queen [ELINOR], BLANCH, PEMBROKE, and others.

KING JOHN

Peace be to France, if France in peace permit
 Our just and lineal^o entrance to our own; 85
 If not, bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven,
 Whiles we, God's wrathful agent, do correct^o
 Their proud contempt that beats His peace to heaven.

KING PHILIP

Peace be to England, if that war return
 From France to England, there to live in peace. 90
 England we love, and for that England's sake
 With burden of our armor here we sweat.
 This toil of ours should be a work of thine,
 But thou from loving England art so far
 That thou hast underwrought^o his lawful king, 95
 Cut off the sequence of posterity,
 Outfacèd infant state,^o and done a rape
 Upon the maiden virtue of the crown.
 Look here upon thy brother Geoffrey's face:
 These eyes, these brows, were molded out of his; 100
 This little abstract^o doth contain that large
 Which died in Geoffrey, and the hand of time
 Shall draw this brief into as huge a volume.
 That Geoffrey was thy elder brother born,
 And this his son; England was Geoffrey's right 105
 And this^o is Geoffrey's in the name of God.
 How comes it then that thou art called a king,
 When living blood doth in these temples beat,
 Which owe^o the crown that thou o'ermasterest?

KING JOHN

From whom hast thou this great commission, France, 110
 To draw my answer from thy articles?^o

KING PHILIP

From that supernal judge that stirs good thoughts
 In any beast of strong authority
 To look into the blots and stains of right;
 That judge hath made me guardian to this boy, 115
 Under whose warrant I impeach thy wrong
 And by whose help I mean to chastise it.

KING JOHN

Alack, thou dost usurp authority.

KING PHILIP

Excuse it is to beat usurping down.

ELINOR

Who is it thou dost call usurper, France? 120

CONSTANCE

Let me make answer: thy usurping son.

ELINOR

Out, insolent! Thy bastard shall be king
 That thou mayst be a queen^o and check the world!

CONSTANCE

My bed was ever to thy son as true
 As thine was to thy husband, and this boy 125
 Liker in feature to his father Geoffrey
 Than thou and John in manners, being as like
 As rain to water, or devil to his dam.
 My boy a bastard! By my soul I think
 His father never was so true begot: 130
 It cannot be and if thou wert his mother.

ELINOR

There's a good mother, boy, that blots thy father.

CONSTANCE

There's a good grandam, boy, that would blot thee.

AUSTRIA

Peace!

BASTARD Hear the crier.^o

AUSTRIA

What the devil art thou?

BASTARD

One that will play the devil, sir, with you, 135
 And 'a^o may catch your hide^o and you alone:
 You are the hare of whom the proverb goes,
 Whose valor plucks dead lions by the beard.
 I'll smoke^o your skin-coat, and I catch you right; 140
 Sirrah, look to't; i' faith, I will, i' faith.

BLANCH

O well did he become that lion's robe,
 That did disrobe the lion of that robe!

BASTARD

It lies as sightly^o on the back of him
 As great Alcides' shoes upon an ass.^o
 But, ass, I'll take that burden from your back, 145
 Or lay on that shall make your shoulders crack.

AUSTRIA

What cracker^o is this same that deafs our ears
 With this abundance of superfluous breath?
 King Philip, determine what we shall do straight.

68 spleens the spleen was considered the location of the emotions 70 Bearing . . . backs having invested their patrimonies in armor 71 make . . . of take a chance on winning 73 bottoms ships 77 circumstance detailed information 79 expedition speed 85 lineal inherited 87 correct chastise 95 underwrought undermined 97 Outfacèd infant state arrogantly defied the child king 101 abstract summary, abridgment (cf. "brief" and "volume" in line 103) 106 this possibly the English crown, which John is wearing, the city of Angiers, or Arthur himself 109 owe own 111 To . . . articles to compel me to answer your accusations

123 queen (1) queen (2) quean = whore (3) queen in chess (cf. "check" later in line) 134 crier law-court official who called for silence 136 And 'a if he; hide Richard's lionskin, which Austria is wearing 139 smoke (1) disinfect (2) beat 143 sightly handsomely 144 Alcides' . . . ass (1) Hercules' shoes (proverbial) on an ass (2) Hercules appears (Folio's "shoes" may also mean shows) mounted on an ass (3) Hercules' lionskin (he wore the skin of the Nemean lion which he had killed) appears on an ass 147 cracker (1) braggart (2) firecracker

KING PHILIP

Women and fools, break off your conference.
King John, this is the very sum of all:
England and Ireland, Anjou, Touraine, Maine,
In right of Arthur do I claim of thee:
Wilt thou resign them and lay down thy arms?

KING JOHN

My life as soon! I do defy thee, France.
Arthur of Britain,° yield thee to my hand,
And out of my dear love I'll give thee more
Than e'er the coward hand of France can win;
Submit thee, boy.

ELINOR

Come to thy grandam, child.

CONSTANCE

Do, child, go to it grandam, child;
Give grandam kingdom, and it grandam will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig;
There's a good grandam.°

ARTHUR

Good my mother, peace!

I would that I were low laid in my grave.
I am not worth this coil° that's made for me.

ELINOR

His mother shames him so, poor boy, he weeps.

CONSTANCE

Now shame upon you, whe'r she does or no!
His grandam's wrongs, and not his mother's shames,
Draws° those heaven-moving pearls from his poor eyes,
Which heaven shall take in nature of° a fee:
Ay, with these crystal beads heaven shall be bribed°
To do him justice and revenge on you.

ELINOR

Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth!

CONSTANCE

Thou monstrous injurer of heaven and earth!
Call not me slanderer; thou and thine usurp
The dominations,° royalties, and rights
Of this oppressed boy: this is thy eldest son's son,°
Infortunate in nothing but in thee:
Thy sins are visited° in this poor child;
The canon of the law° is laid on him,
Being but the second generation
Removèd from thy sin-conceiving womb.

KING JOHN

Bedlam,° have done.

CONSTANCE

I have but this to say,

That he is not only plaguèd for her sin,
But God hath made her sin° and her the plague°
On this removèd issue,° plagued for her
And with her plague; her sin his injury,
Her injury the beadle° to her sin,
All punished in the person of this child,
And all for her; a plague upon her!

ELINOR

150 Thou unadvisèd scold, I can produce
A will° that bars the title of thy son.

CONSTANCE

Aye, who doubts that? A will! A wicked will;
A woman's will;° a cankered grandam's will!

KING PHILIP

155 Peace, lady! Pause, or be more temperate:
It ill beseems this presence° to cry aim
To° these ill-tunèd repetitions.
Some trumpet summon hither to the walls
These men of Angiers. Let us hear them speak
Whose title they admit, Arthur's or John's.

195

200

*Trumpet sounds.*160 Enter HUBERT upon the walls.

HUBERT

Who is it that hath warnèd° us to the walls?

KING PHILIP

'Tis France, for England.

KING JOHN

England for itself.

165 You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects—

KING PHILIP

You loving men of Angiers, Arthur's subjects,
Our trumpet called you to this gentle parle°—

205

KING JOHN

For our advantage; therefore hear us first:
These flags of France, that are advancèd° here
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither marched to your endamage-
The cannons have their bowels full of wrath,
And ready mounted are they to spit forth
Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls.
All preparation for a bloody siege
And merciless proceeding by these French
175 Confronts your city's eyes, your winking° gates,
And but for our approach those sleeping stones,
That as a waist° doth girdle you about,
By the compulsion of their ordinance°
By this time from their fixèd beds of lime
180 Had been dishabited,° and wide havoc made
For bloody power to rush upon your peace.
But on the sight of us your lawful king,
Who painfully with much expedient march
Have brought a countercheck before your gates,
To save unscratched your city's threatened cheeks,
Behold, the French, amazed, vouchsafe a parle;
And now, instead° of bullets wrapped in fire,
To make a shaking fever in your walls,
They shoot but calm words folded up in smoke,
To make a faithless error° in your ears;
Which trust accordingly, kind citizens,
And let us in, your king, whose labored° spirits,
Forwearied° in this action of swift speed,
Craves harborage within your city walls.

210

215

220

225

230

156 Britain Brittany 160–63 Do . . . grandam baby talk 165 coil fuss 169 Draws draw (it is not unusual for a plural subject to have a verb in -s) 170 in nature of in place of, as though it were 171 with . . . bribed these crystal beads—pearls, tears—will bribe heaven both as precious gems and as prayer beads 176 dominations dominions 177 eldest son's son oldest grandson (not oldest-son's son) 179 visited punished 180 canon . . . law Exodus 20:5 183 Bedlam lunatic 185 her sin John (?); the plague the great plagues were commonly explained as punishment for a sinful nation—Elinor is both the cause of Arthur's punishment and that punishment itself 186 this removèd issue this remote descendant (i.e., Arthur) 188 beadle parish official who whipped sinners

192 A will Richard's will named John his heir; Shakespeare plays this down to present John as a usurper 194 A woman's will Constance suggests that Elinor wrote the will, and women's wills were not legal 196 presence royal assembly 196–97 cry aim To encourage 201 warned summoned 205 parle parley 207 advancèd raised 215 winking able to open and shut (the gates are like eyelids) 217 waist belt or sash 218 ordinance cannons 220 dishabited disinhabited, dislodged 230 faithless error treacherous lie 232 labored overworked 233 Forwearied tired out

KING PHILIP

When I have said,° make answer to us both.
 Lo, in this right hand, whose protection
 Is most divinely vowed upon the right
 Of him it holds, stands young Plantagenet,
 Son to the elder brother of this man,
 And king o'er him and all that he enjoys:
 For this downtrodden equity° we tread
 In warlike march these greens before your town,
 Being no further enemy to you
 Than the constraint of hospitable zeal°
 In the relief of this oppressèd child
 Religiously provokes. Be pleasèd then
 To pay that duty which you truly owe
 To him that owes° it, namely this young prince;
 And then our arms, like to a muzzled bear,
 Save in aspect, hath° all offense sealed up:
 Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent
 Against th' invulnerable clouds of heaven,
 And with a blessèd and unvexed retire,°
 With unhacked swords and helmets all unbruised,
 We will bear home that lusty blood again
 Which here we came to spout against your town,
 And leave your children, wives, and you in peace.
 But if you fondly pass° our proffered offer,
 'Tis not the roundure° of your old-faced walls°
 Can hide you from our messengers of war,
 Though all these English and their discipline
 Were harbored in their rude circumference.
 Then tell us, shall your city call us° lord,
 In that behalf which° we have challenged it?
 Or shall we give the signal to our rage
 And stalk in blood to our possession?

HUBERT

In brief, we are the King of England's subjects:
 For him, and in his right, we hold this town.

KING JOHN

Acknowledge then the king, and let me in.

HUBERT

That can we not; but he that proves° the king,
 To him will we prove loyal: till that time
 Have we rammed up° our gates against the world.

KING JOHN

Doth not the crown of England prove the king?
 And if not that, I bring you witnesses,
 Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed—

BASTARD

Bastards, and else.°

KING JOHN

To verify our title with their lives.

KING PHILIP

As many and as wellborn bloods° as those—

BASTARD

Some bastards, too.

235 said finished speaking 241 equity right 244 the . . . zeal
 the obligations of generous resolution 248 owes owns 250 hath will have 253 unvexed retire orderly departure 258 fondly pass foolishly disregard 259 roundure roundness; old-faced walls walls so well built they had not required refacing 263 us King Philip (England, with Arthur as king, would be subordinate to France) 264 In . . . which on behalf of him for whom 270 proves proves to be 272 rammed up barricaded 276 else others 278 bloods (1) men of courage (2) men of good family

KING PHILIP

Stand in his face to contradict his claim. 280

HUBERT

Till you compound° whose right is worthiest,
 We for the worthiest hold the right from both.

KING JOHN

Then God forgive the sin of all those souls
 That to their everlasting residence,
 Before the dew of evening fall, shall fleet,° 285
 In dreadful trial of our kingdom's king!

KING PHILIP

Amen, amen! Mount, chevaliers! To arms!

BASTARD

Saint George, that swinged° the dragon, and e'er since Sits on's horseback at mine hostess' door,° Teach us some fence!° [To AUSTRIA.] Sirrah, were I at home 290
 At your den, sirrah, with your lioness,
 I would set an ox head to your lion's hide,
 And make a monster° of you.

AUSTRIA

Peace! No more.

255 BASTARD

O tremble, for you hear the lion roar.

KING JOHN

Up higher to the plain, where we'll set forth 295
 In best appointment all our regiments.

260 BASTARD

Speed then, to take advantage of the field.

KING PHILIP

It shall be so; and at the other hill
 Command the rest to stand. God, and our right!
 Exeunt.

Here, after excursions,° enter the HERALD OF FRANCE with trumpets, to the gates.

FRENCH HERALD

You men of Angiers, open wide your gates, 300
 And let young Arthur, Duke of Britain, in,
 Who by the hand of France this day hath made
 Much work for tears in many an English mother,
 Whose sons lie scattered on the bleeding ground:
 Many a widow's husband groveling lies, 305
 Coldly embracing the discolored earth,
 And victory with little loss doth play
 Upon the dancing banners of the French,
 Who are at hand, triumphantly displayed,°
 To enter conquerors and to proclaim 310
 Arthur of Britain England's king, and yours.

Enter ENGLISH HERALD, with trumpet.

ENGLISH HERALD

Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring your bells:
 King John, your king and England's, doth approach,
 Commander of this hot malicious day.
 Their armors, that marched hence so silver-bright, 315
 Hither return all gilt° with Frenchmen's blood;

281 compound settle 285 fleet pass away, fly 288
 swinged beat 289 Sits . . . door painted on an inn sign 290 fence skill with the sword 293 monster (1) ox-headed lion (2) cuckold 299 s.d. excursions sallies, raids (in the theater, stage-crossings and clashes to represent a battle) 309 displayed spread out (for a parade, not for a battle) 316 gilt gilded, i.e., reddened (gold was considered red as in "his golden blood," Macbeth, II.iii.114)

There stuck no plume in any English crest
That is removèd by a staff° of France.
Our colors do return in those same hands
That did display them when we first marched forth, 320
And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come
Our lusty English, all with purpled hands,
Dyed in the dying slaughter° of their foes.
Open your gates and give the victors way.

HUBERT

Heralds, from off our tow'rs we might behold, 325
From first to last, the onset and retire°
Of both your armies, whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censurèd.
Blood hath bought blood, and blows have answered
blows,
Strength matched with strength, and power confronted power. 330
Both are alike, and both alike we like:
One must prove greatest. While they weigh so even,
We hold our town for neither, yet for both.
Enter the two KINGS, with their POWERS, at several° doors.

KING JOHN

France, hast thou yet more blood to cast away?
Say, shall the current of our right roam on? 335
Whose passage, vexed with thy impediment,
Shall leave his native channel and o'erswell,
With course disturbed, even thy confining shores,
Unless thou let his silver water keep
A peaceful progress to the ocean. 340

KING PHILIP

England, thou hast not saved one drop of blood
In this hot trial more than we of France;
Rather, lost more. And by this hand I swear,
That sways the earth this climate overlooks,
Before we will lay down our just-borne arms, 345
We'll put thee down, 'gainst whom these arms we bear,
Or add a royal number° to the dead,
Gracing the scroll that tells of this war's loss
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.°

BASTARD

Ha, majesty! How high thy glory tow'rs° 350
When the rich blood of kings is set on fire!
O now doth Death line his dead chaps° with steel;
The swords of soldiers are his teeth, his fangs;
And now he feasts, mousing° the flesh of men
In undetermined differences° of kings. 355
Why stand these royal fronts° amazèd thus?
Cry "Havoc!"° kings; back to the stained field,
You equal potents,° fiery kindled spirits!
Then let confusion° of one part° confirm
The other's peace; till then, blows, blood, and death! 360

318 staff spear, lance 323 Dyed . . . slaughter hunters customarily dipped their hands in the deer's blood (cf. Julius Caesar, III.i.106 ff.) 326 retire withdrawal 328 censurèd judged 333 s.d. several separate 347 royal number king's name as one item in the list 349 With . . . kings with a king slaughtered as well as slaughtering 350 tow'rs soars (hawking jargon) 352 chaps jaws 354 mousing tearing, biting 355 undetermined differences unsettled disputes 356 fronts foreheads 357 Havoc the call for general slaughter with no taking of prisoners 358 potents potentates, powers 359 confusion defeat; part party

KING JOHN

Whose party do the townsmen yet° admit?

KING PHILIP

Speak, citizens, for England: who's your king?

HUBERT

The King of England, when we know the king.

KING PHILIP

Know him in us, that here hold up his right.

KING JOHN

In us, that are our own great deputy, 365
And bear possession of our person° here,
Lord of our presence,° Angiers, and of you.

HUBERT

A greater pow'r than we denies all this,
And, till it be undoubted, we do lock
Our former scruple in our strong-barred gates, 370
Kings of our fear,° until our fears, resolved,
Be by some certain king purged and deposed.

BASTARD

By heaven, these scroyles° of Angiers flout you, kings,
And stand securely on their battlements
As in a theater, whence they gape and point 375
At your industrious scenes and acts of death.
Your royal presences be ruled by me:
Do like the mutines° of Jerusalem,
Be friends awhile and both conjointly bend
Your sharpest deeds of malice on this town. 380
By east and west let France and England mount
Their battering cannon chargèd to the mouths,
Till their soul-fearing° clamors have brawled down°
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city.
I'd play incessantly upon° these jades,° 385
Even till unfencèd° desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar° air.
That done, dis sever your united strengths,
And part your mingled colors once again;
Turn face to face and bloody point to point. 390
Then, in a moment, Fortune shall cull° forth
Out of one side her happy minion,°
To whom in favor she shall give the day,
And kiss him with a glorious victory.
How like you this wild counsel, mighty states?° 395
Smacks it not something of the policy?°

KING JOHN

Now, by the sky that hangs above our heads,
I like it well. France, shall we knit our pow'rs
And lay this Angiers even with the ground,
Then after fight who shall be king of it? 400

BASTARD

And if thou hast the mettle of a king,
Being wronged as we are by this peevish town,

361 yet now 366 bear . . . person owe no allegiance to anyone else (unlike Arthur, who has apparently done homage to Philip —cf. line 263) 367 presence person 371 Kings . . . fear kings as a result of our fear (forced by our fears to be our own kings) 373 scroyles scoundrels 378 mutines mutineers (factions fighting each other in Jerusalem in 70 A.D. united to fight the Romans) 383 soul-fearing causing the soul to fear; brawled down noisily laid waste 385 play . . . upon (1) play guns upon (2) make sport of; jades wretches (a jade is a worn-out horse or a wanton woman) 386 unfencèd unfortified 387 vulgar common 391 cull (1) choose (2) fondle, hug 392 minion darling, favorite 395 states kings 396 the policy political skill, perhaps specifically Machiavellian political cunning

Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these saucy walls;
And when that we have dashed them to the ground, 405
Why then defy each other, and, pell-mell,^o
Make work^o upon ourselves, for heaven or hell.^o

KING PHILIP

Let it be so. Say, where will you assault?

KING JOHN

We from the west will send destruction
Into this city's bosom.

AUSTRIA

I from the north.

KING PHILIP Our thunder^o from the south

Shall rain their drift^o of bullets on this town.

BASTARD [Aside.]

O prudent discipline! From north to south
Austria and France shoot in each other's mouth.
I'll stir them to it: come, away, away!

HUBERT

Hear us, great kings: vouchsafe a while to stay
And I shall show you peace and fair-faced league,
Win you this city without stroke or wound,
Rescue those breathing lives to die in beds,
That here come sacrifices for the field.
Persever not, but hear me, mighty kings.

KING JOHN

Speak on with favor; we are bent^o to hear.

HUBERT

That daughter there of Spain, the Lady Blanch,
Is near to England:^o look upon the years
Of Lewis the Dolphin^o and that lovely maid. 425
If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch?
If zealous^o love should go in search of virtue,
Where should he find it purer than in Blanch?
If love, ambitious, sought a match of birth, 430
Whose veins bound^o richer blood than Lady Blanch?
Such as she is, in beauty, virtue, birth,
Is the young Dolphin every way complete;^o
If not complete of,^o say he is not she,
And she again wants^o nothing, to name want,^o 435
If want it be not^o that she is not he.
He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finishèd by such as she,
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fullness of perfection lies in him. 440
O, two such silver currents when they join
Do glorify the banks that bound them in;
And two such shores, to two such streams made one,
Two such controlling bounds shall you be, kings,
To these two princes, if you marry them.^o 445
This union shall do more than battery can
To our fast-closèd gates: for at this match,^o

With swifter spleen^o than powder can enforce,
The mouth of passage shall we fling wide ope,
And give you entrance. But without this match, 450
The sea enragèd is not half so deaf,
Lions more confident, mountains and rocks
More free from motion, no, not Death himself
In mortal fury half so peremptory,^o
As we to keep this city.

BASTARD

Here's a stay^o

455

That shakes the rotten carcass of old Death
Out of his rags! Here's a large mouth, indeed,
That spits forth death and mountains, rocks and seas,
Talks as familiarly of roaring lions
As maids of thirteen do of puppy dogs. 460
What cannoneer begot this lusty blood?
He speaks plain cannon fire, and smoke, and bounce;^o
He gives the bastinado^o with his tongue:
Our ears are cudgeled; not a word of his 415
But buffets better than a fist of France. 465
Zounds!^o I was never so bethumped with words
Since I first called my brother's father dad.

ELINOR

Son, list to this conjunction,^o make this match;
Give with our niece a dowry large enough, 420
For by this knot thou shalt so surely tie 470
Thy now unsured assurance^o to the crown
That yon green boy shall have no sun to ripe
The bloom that promiseth a mighty fruit.
I see a yielding in the looks of France:
Mark how they whisper. Urge them while their souls 475
Are capable of this ambition,^o
Lest zeal,^o now melted by the windy breath
Of soft petitions, pity, and remorse,
Cool and congeal again to what it was.

HUBERT

Why answer not the double majesties 480
This friendly treaty^o of our threatened town?

KING PHILIP

Speak England first, that hath been forward first
To speak unto this city: what say you?

435 KING JOHN

If that the Dolphin there, thy princely son,
Can in this book of beauty read "I love," 485
Her dowry shall weigh equal with a queen:
For Anjou and fair Touraine, Maine, Poitiers,
And all that we upon this side the sea^o—
Except this city now by us besieged—
Find liable^o to our crown and dignity, 490
Shall gild her bridal bed and make her rich
In titles, honors, and promotions,
As she in beauty, education, blood,
Holds hand with^o any princess of the world.

KING PHILIP

What say'st thou, boy? Look in the lady's face. 495

406 pell-mell headlong, tumultuously 407 Make work work havoc; for . . . hell to the death 411 thunder cannons 412 drift shower 422 bent determined 424 near to England closely related to King John (she was the daughter of John's sister and of the King of Castile) 425 Dolphin Dauphin 428 zealous sanctified 431 bound hold 433 complete fully endowed 434 of therein 435 wants lacks; to name want to speak of defects 436 If . . . be not if it is not a deficiency
(the verbal quibbling of these lines is more to the Elizabethan taste than to ours, but it marks also the impersonal formality of Hubert's proposal) 445 if . . . them i.e., to each other 447 match (1) marriage (2) wick for igniting powder

448 spleen impetuosity 454 peremptory resolute 455 stay check, hindrance 462 bounce explosive noise 463 bastinado cudgeling 466 Zounds By God's wounds! 468 list . . .
conjunction listen to (accept) this union 471 unsured assurance uncertain title 476 capable . . . ambition ready to accept this desire for alliance 477 zeal King Philip's eagerness to support Arthur 481 treaty proposal 488 sea the English Channel 490 liable subject 494 Holds hand with is the equal of

LEWIS

I do, my lord, and in her eye I find
 A wonder, or a wondrous miracle,
 The shadow° of myself formed in her eye,
 Which, being but the shadow of your son,
 Becomes a sun, and makes your son a shadow: 500
 I do protest I never loved myself
 Till now infixèd I beheld myself,
 Drawn in the flattering table° of her eye.

Whispers with BLANCH.

BASTARD

Drawn° in the flattering table of her eye!
 Hanged in the frowning wrinkle of her brow! 505
 And quartered° in her heart! He doth espy
 Himself love's traitor; this is pity now,
 That, hanged and drawn and quartered, there should be

In such a love so vile a lout as he.

BLANCH [To LEWIS.]

My uncle's will in this respect is mine: 510
 If he see aught in you that makes him like,
 That anything he sees which moves his liking,
 I can with ease translate it to my will;°
 Or, if you will, to speak more properly,
 I will enforce it eas'ly to my love. 515
 Further I will not flatter you, my lord,
 That all I see in you is worthy love,
 Than this: that nothing do I see in you,
 Though churlish thoughts themselves should be your judge,
 That I can find should merit any hate. 520

KING JOHN

What say these young ones? What say you, my niece?

BLANCH

That she is bound in honor still° to do
 What you in wisdom still vouchsafe to say.

KING JOHN

Speak then, Prince Dolphin: can you love this lady?

LEWIS

Nay, ask me if I can refrain from love, 525
 For I do love her most unfeignèdly.

KING JOHN

Then do I give Volquessen, Touraine, Maine,
 Poitiers, and Anjou, these five provinces,
 With her to thee; and this addition more,
 Full thirty thousand marks of English coin. 530
 Philip of France, if thou be pleased withal,
 Command thy son and daughter to join hands.

KING PHILIP

It likes us° well. Young princes, close your hands.

AUSTRIA

And your lips too, for I am well assured
 That I did so when I was first assured.° 535

498 shadow image 503 Drawn . . . table portrayed on the flattering surface (the whole of the Dauphin's speech—"eye," "sun," "son," "shadow"—is conventional; he simply says what is expected of him) 504 Drawn (1) portrayed (2) disemboweled 506 quartered (1) lodged (2) cut or torn in four parts (traitors were hanged, drawn and quartered) 513 translate . . . will I can bend my will to my uncle's desires (Blanch is much less conventional, and much more honest, than Lewis) 522 still always 533 It likes us we like it 535 assured engaged to be married

KING PHILIP

Now, citizens of Angiers, ope your gates;
 Let in that amity which you have made,
 For at Saint Mary's Chapel presently
 The rites of marriage shall be solemnized.
 Is not the Lady Constance in this troop? 540
 I know she is not, for this match made up
 Her presence would have interrupted much.
 Where is she and her son? Tell me, who knows.

LEWIS

She is sad and passionate° at your highness' tent.

KING PHILIP

And, by my faith, this league that we have made 545
 Will give her sadness very little cure.
 Brother of England, how may we content
 This widow lady? In her right we came,
 Which we, God knows, have turned another way,
 To our own vantage.

KING JOHN

We will heal up all, 550
 For we'll create young Arthur Duke of Britain
 And Earl of Richmond, and this rich fair town
 We make him lord of. Call the Lady Constance.
 Some speedy messenger bid her repair
 To our solemnity.° I trust we shall, 555
 If not fill up the measure of her will,
 Yet in some measure satisfy her so
 That we shall stop her exclamation.°
 Go we, as well as haste will suffer us,
 To this unlooked for, unprepared pomp.° 560

Exeunt [all but the BASTARD].

BASTARD

Mad world! Mad kings! Mad composition!°
 John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole,
 Hath willingly departed with° a part,
 And France, whose armor conscience buckled on,
 Whom zeal and charity brought to the field 565
 As God's own soldier, rounded in the ear
 With° that same purpose-changer, that sly devil,
 That broker° that still breaks the pate of faith,
 That daily break-vow, he that wins of all,
 Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids, 570
 Who,° having no external thing to lose
 But the word "maid," cheats the poor maid of that,
 That smooth-faced° gentleman, tickling° commodity,
 Commodity, the bias° of the world,
 The world, who of itself is peisèd° well, 575
 Made to run even upon even ground,
 Till this advantage, this vile drawing° bias,
 This sway° of motion,° this commodity,

544 passionate enraged 555 solemnity ceremony (the wedding and the granting of titles to Arthur) 558 stop her exclamation silence her complaining 560 pomp ceremony 561 composition compromise 563 departed with given away 566-67 rounded . . . With whispered to by 568 broker pander 571 Who elliptical; begins by referring to "maids," ends, as the subject of "cheats," by referring to "commodity," the subject of this whole series of appositions 573 smooth-faced ingratiating, deceitful; tickling (1) teasing—the maids (2) flattering—anyone; commodity self-interest 574 bias oblique course (in bowling, the bowl went on an oblique course because of the weight built into one side; bias was the word for either the course or the weight itself) 575 peisèd weighted 577 vile drawing two adjectives, but also "vile-drawing," drawing to evil 578 sway that which sways; diverter, corrupter; motion (1) movement (2) intention

Makes it take head° from all indifferency,^o
 From all direction, purpose, course, intent. 580
 And this same bias, this commodity,
 This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word,
 Clapped on the outward eye° of fickle France,
 Hath drawn him from his own determined aid,
 From a resolved° and honorable war, 585
 To a most base and vile-concluded peace.
 And why rail I on this commodity?
 But for because° he hath not wooed me yet:
 Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,^o
 When his fair angels° would salute my palm, 590
 But for my hand, as unattempted° yet,
 Like a poor beggar, raileth on the rich.
 Well, whiles I am a beggar, I will rail
 And say there is no sin but to be rich;
 And being rich, my virtue then shall be 595
 To say there is no vice but beggary.
 Since kings break faith upon° commodity,
 Gain, be my lord, for I will worship thee! Exit.

Scene II. [King Philip's tent.]

Enter CONSTANCE, ARTHUR, and SALISBURY.

CONSTANCE

Gone to be married! Gone to swear a peace!
 False blood to false blood joined! Gone to be friends!
 Shall Lewis have Blanch, and Blanch those provinces?
 It is not so; thou hast misspoke, misheard;
 Be well advised, tell o'er thy tale again. 5
 It cannot be; thou dost but say 'tis so.
 I trust I may not trust thee, for thy word
 Is but the vain breath of a common man;
 Believe me, I do not believe thee, man:
 I have a king's oath to the contrary. 10
 Thou shalt be punished for thus frightening me,
 For I am sick and capable of fears,
 Oppressed with wrongs, and therefore full of fears,
 A widow, husbandless,^o subject to fears,
 A woman naturally born to fears; 15
 And though thou now confess thou didst but jest,
 With my vexed spirits I cannot take a truce,^o
 But they will quake and tremble all this day.
 What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head?
 Why dost thou look so sadly on my son? 20
 What means that hand upon that breast of thine?
 Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,^o
 Like a proud river peering o'er° his bounds?

579 take head run; indifferency impartiality, disinterestedness
583 outward eye (1) physical vision, as opposed to moral vision or conscience (2) in bowling, the bowl had an "eye" which received the weight, the bias 585 resolved the decision to undertake it having been made 588 But for because only because 589 clutch my hand refuse the bribe 590 angels (1) commodity's agents, the fallen angels (2) gold coins called angels because they carried a picture of the archangel Michael killing a dragon 591 unattempted untested, untempted 597 upon as a result of

II.ii.14 A widow, husbandless not necessarily a tautology: the historical Constance, though Geoffrey's widow, was at this time married to her third husband; his presence would, however, be a dramatic confusion, and Shakespeare simplifies to increase her isolation 17 take a truce make peace 22 that lamentable rheum those sorrowful tears 23 peering o'er overflowing

Be these sad signs confirmers of thy words?
 Then speak again, not all thy former tale, 25
 But this one word, whether thy tale be true.

SALISBURY

As true as I believe you think them false
 That give you cause to prove my saying true.

585 CONSTANCE

O if thou teach me to believe this sorrow,
 Teach thou this sorrow how to make me die! 30
 And let belief and life encounter so
 As doth the fury of two desperate men
 Which in the very meeting fall and die.
 Lewis marry Blanch! O boy, then where art thou?
 France friend with England, what becomes of me? 35
 Fellow, be gone! I cannot brook thy sight.
 This news hath made thee a most ugly man.

595 SALISBURY

What other harm have I, good lady, done,
 But spoke the harm that is by others done?

CONSTANCE

Which harm within itself so heinous is 40
 As it makes harmful all that speak of it.

ARTHUR

I do beseech you, madam, be content.^o

CONSTANCE

If thou, that bid'st me be content, wert grim,
 Ugly and sland'rous° to thy mother's womb,
 Full of unpleasing blots° and sightless° stains, 45
 Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, prodigious,^o
 Patched with foul moles and eye-offending marks,
 I would not care, I then would be content,
 For then I should not love thee: no, nor thou
 Become thy great birth, nor deserve a crown. 50
 But thou art fair, and at thy birth, dear boy,
 Nature and Fortune joined to make thee great.
 Of Nature's gifts thou mayst with lilies boast
 And with the half-blown° rose. But Fortune, O,
 She is corrupted, changed, and won from thee; 55
 Sh' adulterates hourly° with thine uncle John,
 And with her golden hand° hath plucked on° France
 To tread down fair respect of sovereignty,
 And made his majesty the bawd to theirs.
 France is a bawd to Fortune and King John, 60
 That strumpet Fortune, that usurping John!
 Tell me, thou fellow, is not France forsworn?
 Envenom° him with words, or get thee gone
 And leave those woes alone which I alone
 Am bound to underbear.^o

SALISBURY

Pardon me, madam, 65

I may not go without you to the kings.

CONSTANCE

Thou mayst; thou shalt: I will not go with thee.
 I will instruct my sorrows to be proud,^o
 For grief is proud° and makes his owner stoop.^o

42 content calm, satisfied 44 sland'rous a disgrace, giving cause for slander 45 blots spots, disfigurements; sightless unsightly 46 prodigious deformed, hence a prodigy or bad omen 54 half-blown half-opened 56 hourly (1) every hour (2) like a whore (cf. I.i.165) 57 golden hand hand which dispenses gold; plucked on drawn along 63 Envenom (1) poison (2) curse 65 underbear endure, suffer 68, 69 proud (1) proud (2) prou'd = proved = tested 69 stoop bow down (Constance is made to bow down under her grief, but she will also make the kings bow down to it)

To me and to the state° of my great grief
Let kings assemble, for my grief's so great
That no supporter but the huge firm earth
Can hold it up: here I and sorrows sit;
Here is my throne; bid kings come bow to it.

[Seats herself on the ground. Exeunt
SALISBURY and ARTHUR.°]

A C T I I I

Scene I. [King Philip's tent.]

Enter KING JOHN, [KING PHILIP of] France, [LEWIS the] Dauphin, BLANCH, ELINOR, Philip [the BASTARD], AUSTRIA, [and ATTENDANTS, to] CONSTANCE, [seated on the ground°].

KING PHILIP

'Tis true, fair daughter, and this blessed day
Ever in France shall be kept festival:°
To solemnize this day the glorious sun
Stays in his course and plays the alchemist,
Turning with splendor of his precious eye
The meager cloddy earth to glittering gold.
The yearly course that brings this day about
Shall never see it but a holy day.

CONSTANCE [Rising.]

A wicked day, and not a holy day!
What hath this day deserved? What hath it done
That it in golden letters should be set
Among the high tides° in the calendar?
Nay, rather turn this day out of the week,
This day of shame, oppression, perjury.
Or, if it must stand still,° let wives with child
Pray that their burdens may not fall this day,
Lest that their hopes prodigiously be crossed:°
But° on this day let seamen fear no wrack;°
No bargains° break that are not this day made;
This day all things begun come to ill end,
Yea, faith itself to hollow falsehood change!

KING PHILIP

By heaven, lady, you shall have no cause
To curse the fair proceedings of this day:
Have I not pawned to you my majesty?°

CONSTANCE

You have beguiled me with a counterfeit°
Resembling majesty, which, being touched and tried,° Proves valueless: you are forsworn, forsworn!

70 state (1) condition (2) high rank (3) government (4) throne
74 s.d. Exeunt . . . Arthur it is not clear whether Salisbury should lead Arthur off or they should go in opposite directions; it is only clear that they are not present during the next scene and that Arthur next appears, in III.ii, as John's prisoner
III.i.s.d. seated . . . ground the action is of course continuous from the end of the second act 2 festival as a holiday 12 high tides principal anniversaries 15 stand still always remain 17 prodigiously be crossed be denied by the birth of a deformed child 18 But except; wrack disaster (here, of course, shipwreck) 19 bargains agreements 24 pawned . . . majesty pledged you my word as a king 25 counterfeit false coin 26 touched and tried its gold tested on a touchstone

70 You came in arms° to spill mine enemies' blood,
But now, in arms,° you strengthen it with yours.
The grappling vigor and rough frown of war 30
Is cold in amity and painted peace,°
And our oppression° hath made up this league.
Arm, arm, you heavens, against these perjured kings!
A widow cries; be husband to me, heavens!
Let not the hours of this ungodly day 35
Wear out° the day in peace; but, ere sunset,
Set armed discord 'twixt these perjured kings!
Hear me! O, hear me!

AUSTRIA

Lady Constance, peace!

CONSTANCE

War! War! No peace! Peace is to me a war.
O, Lymoges!° O, Austria! Thou dost shame 40
That bloody spoil:° thou slave, thou wretch, thou coward!
Thou little valiant, great in villainy!
Thou ever strong upon the stronger side!
Thou Fortune's champion, that dost never fight
But when her humorous° ladyship is by 45
To teach thee safety! Thou art perjured too,
And sooth'st up° greatness. What a fool art thou,
A ramping° fool, to brag and stamp and swear
Upon my party!° Thou cold-blooded slave,
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side? 50
Been sworn my soldier, bidding me depend
Upon thy stars, thy fortune, and thy strength,
And dost thou now fall over° to my foes?
Thou wear a lion's hide! Doff it for shame,
And hang a calfskin° on those recreant° limbs. 55

10

AUSTRIA

O that a man should speak those words to me!

BASTARD

And hang a calfskin on those recreant limbs.

AUSTRIA

15

Thou dar'st not say so, villain, for thy life!

BASTARD

And hang a calfskin on those recreant limbs.

KING JOHN

20

We like not this; thou dost forget thyself. 60

Enter PANDULPH.

KING PHILIP

Here comes the holy legate of the pope.

PANDULPH

Hail, you anointed deputies of heaven!

To thee, King John, my holy errand is.

I Pandulph, of fair Milan cardinal,

And from Pope Innocent the legate here, 65

Do in his name religiously demand

28-29 in arms . . . in arms armed . . . embracing 31 Is . . . peace lies dead in your friendship and false peace 32 our oppression your oppression of us 36 Wear out last through 40 Lymoges Limoges and Austria were, historically, two men, but are here combined; Richard Coeur de Lion was actually killed, not by Austria, but while besieging Limoges 41 bloody spoil the lionskin 45 humorous full of humors, capricious 47 sooth'st up flatterest 48 ramping (1) raging (2) threatening—chiefly said of lions (3) standing on the hind legs, like a heraldic lion 49 Upon my party as one of my supporters 53 fall over go over 55 calfskin (1) indicating a calf, or meek, cowardly fellow, in sharpest contrast with a lion (2) traditional coat (?) for a household fool or idiot kept for amusement; recreant cowardly

Why thou against the church, our holy mother,
So willfully dost spurn;° and force perforce°
Keep Stephen Langton, chosen Archbishop
Of Canterbury, from that holy see:
This, in our foresaid holy father's name,
Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.

KING JOHN

What earthy name to interrogatories°
Can task the free breath of a sacred king?°
Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name
So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous,
To charge me to an answer,° as the pope.
Tell him this tale, and from the mouth of England
Add thus much more, that no Italian priest
Shall tithe or toll° in our dominions;
But as we, under God, are supreme head,
So under Him that great supremacy
Where we do reign, we will alone uphold
Without th' assistance of a mortal hand:
So tell the pope, all reverence set apart
To him and his usurped authority.

KING PHILIP

Brother of England, you blaspheme in this.

KING JOHN

Though you and all the kings of Christendom
Are led so grossly° by this meddling priest,°
Dreading the curse that money may buy out,°
And by the merit of vile gold, dross, dust,
Purchase corrupted pardon of a man,
Who in that sale sells pardon from himself:°
Though you and all the rest, so grossly led,
This juggling witchcraft with revenue cherish,°
Yet I alone, alone do me oppose
Against the pope, and count his friends my foes.

PANDULPH

Then, by the lawful power that I have,
Thou shalt stand curst and excommunicate:
And blessèd shall he be that doth revolt
From his allegiance to an heretic;
And meritorious shall that hand be called,
Canonized and worshiped as a saint,
That takes away by any secret course
Thy hateful life.

CONSTANCE

O lawful let it be
That I have room with Rome° to curse awhile!
Good father cardinal, cry thou "Amen"
To my keen curses, for without my wrong
There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.

PANDULPH

There's law and warrant, lady, for my curse.

CONSTANCE

And for mine too: when law can do no right,

70

Let it be lawful that law bar no wrong!
Law cannot give my child his kingdom here,
For he that holds his kingdom holds the law;
Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong,
How can the law forbid my tongue to curse?

115

PANDULPH

75

Philip of France, on peril of a curse,
Let go the hand of that arch-heretic,
And raise the power of France upon his head,°
Unless he do submit himself to Rome.

120

ELINOR

Look'st thou pale, France? Do not let go thy hand.

CONSTANCE

80

Look to that, Devil, lest that France repent,
And by disjoining hands, hell lose a soul.

AUSTRIA

King Philip, listen to the cardinal.

BASTARD

85

And hang a calfskin on his recreant limbs.

125

AUSTRIA

Well, ruffian, I must pocket up these wrongs, Because—

BASTARD Your breeches best may carry them.

KING JOHN

Philip, what say'st thou to the cardinal?

CONSTANCE

90

What should he say, but as the cardinal?

LEWIS

95

Bethink you, father, for the difference
Is purchase of a heavy curse from Rome,
Or the light loss of England for a friend:
Forgo the easier.°

130

BLANCH

That's the curse of Rome.

CONSTANCE

100

O Lewis, stand fast! The devil tempts thee here
In likeness of a new untrimmèd° bride.

135

BLANCH

The Lady Constance speaks not from her faith,
But from her need.°

CONSTANCE

105

O, if thou grant my need,
Which only lives but by the death of faith,
That need must needs infer° this principle,
That faith would live again by death of need.
O then tread down my need, and faith mounts up;
Keep my need up, and faith is trodden down!

140

KING JOHN

The king is moved, and answers not to this.

CONSTANCE

110

O be removed from him, and answer well!

AUSTRIA

Do so, King Philip; hang no more in doubt.

145

BASTARD

Hang nothing but a calfskin, most sweet lout.

KING PHILIP

I am perplexed, and know not what to say.

PANDULPH

What canst thou say but will perplex thee more,
If thou stand excommunicate and cursed?

68 spurn kick contemptuously; force perforce by violent means 73 interrogatories questions asked formally in a law court 73-74 What . . . king What mortal can force a king to answer charges? 77 charge . . . answer command an answer from me 80 tithe or toll collect church revenues 89 grossly (1) stupidly (2) materially—as opposed to spiritually; this meddling priest the pope 90 buy out remove 93 sells . . . himself (1) i.e., not from God (2) loses his own pardon through the transaction 95 This . . . cherish cling to, and nourish financially, this deceptive wickedness 106 room with Rome the words were presumably homonyms

119 upon his head against him 133 the easier the lighter, the less oppressive 135 untrimmèd still possessing her maidenhead 136-37 speaks . . . need is interested not in truth but in advancing her cause 139 infer imply

KING PHILIP

Good reverend father, make my person yours,^o 150
 And tell me how you would bestow yourself.
 This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
 And the conjunction of our inward souls
 Married in league, coupled and linked together 155
 With all religious strength of sacred vows;
 The latest breath that gave the sound of words
 Was deep-sworn faith, peace, amity, true love
 Between our kingdoms and our royal selves;
 And even before this truce, but new^o before,
 No longer than we well could wash our hands 160
 To clap this royal bargain up of peace,^o
 Heaven knows, they were besmeared and overstained
 With slaughter's pencil,^o where revenge did paint
 The fearful difference^o of incensèd kings:
 And shall these hands, so lately purged of blood, 165
 So newly joined in love, so strong in both,^o
 Unyoke this seizure and this kind regret?^o
 Play fast and loose^o with faith? so jest with heaven,
 Make such unconstant children of ourselves
 As now again to snatch our palm from palm,^o 170
 Unswear faith sworn, and on the marriage bed
 Of smiling peace to march a bloody host,
 And make a riot on the gentle brow
 Of true sincerity? O holy sir,
 My reverend father, let it not be so! 175
 Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose
 Some gentle order, and then we shall be blessed
 To do your pleasure and continue friends.

PANDULPH

All form is formless, order orderless,
 Save what is opposite to England's love.
 Therefore to arms! Be champion of our church,
 Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse,
 A mother's curse, on her revolting son.
 France, thou mayst hold a serpent by the tongue,
 A casèd^o lion by the mortal^o paw,
 A fasting tiger safer by the tooth,
 Than keep in peace that hand which thou dost hold.

KING PHILIP

I may disjoin my hand, but not my faith.

PANDULPH

So mak'st thou faith an enemy to faith,^o
 And like a civil war set'st oath to oath,
 Thy tongue against thy tongue. O, let thy vow,
 First made to heaven, first be to heaven performed,
 That is, to be the champion of our church.
 What since thou swor'st^o is sworn against thyself
 And may not be performèd by thyself, 195
 For that which thou hast sworn to do amiss

Is not amiss when it is truly done;^o
 And being not done, where doing tends to ill,
 The truth is then most done not doing it.
 The better act of purposes mistook 200
 Is to mistake again; though indirect,
 Yet indirection thereby grows direct,
 And falsehood falsehood cures, as fire cools fire
 Within the scorched veins of one new burned.
 It is religion that doth make vows kept, 205
 But thou hast sworn against religion
 (By what thou swear'st against the thing thou swear'st^o)
 And mak'st an oath the surety for thy truth
 (Against an oath the truth^o); thou art unsure
 To swear^o—swears only not to be forsworn,^o 210
 Else what a mockery should it be to swear!
 But thou dost swear only to be forsworn,
 And most forsworn, to keep^o what thou dost swear;
 Therefore thy later vows against thy first
 Is in thyself rebellion to thyself: 215
 And better conquest never canst thou make
 Than arm^o thy constant and thy nobler parts
 Against these giddy loose suggestions;^o
 Upon which better part^o our prayers come in,
 If thou vouchsafe^o them. But if not, then know 220
 The peril of our curses light on thee
 So heavy as thou shalt not shake them off,
 But in despair die under their black weight.

AUSTRIA

Rebellion, flat rebellion!

BASTARD

Will't not be?^o

Will not a calfskin stop that mouth of thine? 225

LEWIS

Father, to arms!

BLANCH

Upon thy wedding day?

Against the blood that thou hast married?

What, shall our feast be kept with slaughtered
 men?

185 Shall braying trumpets and loud churlish drums,
 Clamors of hell, be measures^o to our pomp?
 O husband, hear me! Ay, alack, how new
 Is "husband" in my mouth! Even for that name,
 Which till this time my tongue did ne'er pronounce,
 Upon my knee I beg, go not to arms
 Against mine uncle. 230

190 CONSTANCE O, upon my knee, 235
 Made hard with kneeling, I do pray to thee,

150 make . . . yours put yourself in my place 159 new just 161 clap . . . peace shake hands on this agreement, this royal peace treaty 163 pencil paintbrush 164 difference dissension 166 so . . . both (1) hands so strong in both blood and love (2) love so strong in both kings (?) 167 Unyoke . . .
 regret release their clasp and friendly counterclasp 168 Play
 . . . loose cheat 170 palm (1) hand (2) symbol of peace 185 casèd caged (?) wearing its own hide (i.e., living) (?); mortal deadly 189 So . . . faith thus you make your loyalty to your oath to John an enemy to your loyalty to the true faith, the church 194 What . . . swor'st what you have sworn at any time after your original vow to the church

197 truly done done as it ought to be done, rather than done in accordance with your unsound oath (this argument for swearing one thing and doing another is the so-called doctrine of equivocation for which Elizabethan Protestants particularly hated and feared the Jesuits) 207 By . . . swear'st by your oath to John against your religion 209 Against . . . truth the truth itself (religion) stands against the oath (to John) which you make the basis of your loyalty 209-10 thou . . .
 swear you are untrustworthy in your oaths 210 swears . . .
 forsworn one swears in the first place to ensure that one will not later swear the opposite (the complex, parenthetical style of Pandulph's argument creates a dramatic effect of quibbling ingenuity as opposed to an effect of plain-spoken truth) 213
 And . . . keep and you would be most forsworn if you were to keep 217 arm to arm 218 giddy loose suggestions inconstant, unrestrained temptations 219 Upon . . . part in behalf of which preferable party or faction 220 vouchsafe permit 224 Will't not be Will this not cease? 230 measures melodies

Thou virtuous Dolphin, alter not the doom
Forethought by God!°

BLANCH

Now shall I see thy love: what motive may
Be stronger with thee than the name of wife? 240

CONSTANCE

That which upholdeth him that thee upholds,
His honor: O thine honor, Lewis, thine honor!

LEWIS

I muse your majesty doth seem so cold,
When such profound respects° do pull you on!

PANDULPH

I will denounce° a curse upon his head. 245

KING PHILIP

Thou shalt not need. England, I will fall from° thee.

CONSTANCE

O fair return of banished majesty!

ELINOR

O foul revolt of French inconstancy!

KING JOHN

France, thou shalt rue this hour within this hour.

BASTARD

Old Time the clock-setter, that bald sexton° Time, 250
Is it as he will?° Well then, France shall rue.

BLANCH

The sun's o'ercast with blood: fair day, adieu!
Which is the side that I must go withal?
I am with both: each army hath a hand,
And in their rage, I having hold of both, 255
They whirl asunder and dismember me.
Husband, I cannot pray that thou mayst win;
Uncle, I needs must pray that thou mayst lose;
Father,° I may not wish the fortune thine;
Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thrive: 260
Whoever wins, on that side shall I lose;
Assured loss before the match be played.

LEWIS

Lady, with me, with me thy fortune lies.

BLANCH

There where my fortune lives, there my life dies.

KING JOHN

Cousin,° go draw our puissance° together. 265
[Exit BASTARD.]

France, I am burned up with inflaming wrath,
A rage whose heat hath this condition,°
That nothing can allay, nothing but blood,
The blood, and dearest-valued blood, of France.

KING PHILIP

Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn 270
To ashes, ere our blood shall quench that fire!
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy.

KING JOHN

No more than he that threats. To arms let's hie!
Exeunt.

Scene II. [Battlefield near Angiers.]

Alarums,° excursions. Enter BASTARD, with Austria's head.°

BASTARD

Now, by my life, this day° grows wondrous hot.
Some airy devil hovers in the sky
And pours down mischief.° Austria's head lie there,

Enter [KING] JOHN, ARTHUR, HUBERT.

While Philip breathes.°

245 KING JOHN

Hubert, keep this boy. Philip, make up:° 5
My mother is assailed in our tent,
And ta'en, I fear.

BASTARD

My lord, I rescued her;°
Her highness is in safety, fear you not:
But on, my liege, for very little pains
Will bring this labor to an happy end. Exit [all].° 10

Alarums, excursions, retreat. [Re-]enter [KING] JOHN, ELINOR, ARTHUR, BASTARD, HUBERT, [and] LORDS.

KING JOHN [To ELINOR.]

So shall it be: your grace shall stay behind
So strongly guarded. [To ARTHUR.] Cousin, look not sad:

255

Thy grandam loves thee, and thy uncle will
As dear be to thee as thy father was.

ARTHUR

O this will make my mother die with grief! 15

KING JOHN [To the BASTARD.]

260

Cousin, away for England! Haste before,°
And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags°
Of hoarding abbots; imprisoned angels°
Set at liberty: the fat ribs of peace
Must by the hungry now be fed upon! 20
Use our commission in his° utmost force.

BASTARD

Bell, book, and candle° shall not drive me back
When gold and silver becks° me to come on.
I leave your highness. Grandam, I will pray
(If ever I remember to be holy) 25
For your fair safety; so I kiss your hand.

ELINOR

Farewell, gentle cousin.

KING JOHN

Coz,° farewell.

[Exit BASTARD.]

III.ii.s.d. Alarums trumpets, battle cries; with Austria's head though there is no mention of the lionskin, the Bastard should presumably wear it in this scene and perhaps from now on; his complaint of the heat may be in part a comic reference to this addition to his costume 1 this day (1) the day itself (2) the battle 2-3 Some . . . mischief some invisible devil has made the day so hot, or the battle so fierce 4 breathes catches his breath 5 make up advance, press on 7 I rescued her Shakespeare gives the Bastard credit for a rescue historically effected by John 10 s.d. Exit [all] because the stage is cleared, many editors begin a new scene here 16 before ahead of us 17 shake the bags empty the moneybags ("Shak[e]bag" is a "desperate ruffi[a]n" in Arden of Feversham, 1592) 18 angels coins (cf. II.i.590) 21 his its 22 Bell . . . candle excommunication 23 becks beckons 27 Coz cousin, kinsman

237-38 alter . . . God don't interfere with divine intervention 244 respects inducements 245 denounce pronounce 246 fall from desert 250 sexton gravedigger and bell-ringer 251 Is . . . will is that the way he wants it 259 Father father-in-law (King Philip) 265 Cousin kinsman (commonly, as here, nephew); puissance army 267 condition characteristic

ELINOR

Come hither, little kinsman. Hark, a word.

[She takes ARTHUR aside.]

KING JOHN

Come hither, Hubert. O my gentle Hubert,
 We owe thee much!° Within this wall of flesh
 There is a soul counts thee her creditor,
 And with advantage° means to pay° thy love;
 And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath
 Lives in this bosom, dearly cherishèd.
 Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say,
 But I will fit it with some better tune.°
 By heaven, Hubert, I am almost ashamed
 To say what good respect° I have of thee.

HUBERT

I am much bounden° to your majesty.

KING JOHN

Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so yet,
 But thou shalt have; and creep time ne'er so slow,
 Yet it shall come for me to do thee good.
 I had a thing to say, but let it go.
 The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,
 Attended with the pleasures of the world,
 Is all too wanton and too full of gauds
 To give me audience.° If the midnight bell
 Did, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,
 Sound on into the drowsy race° of night;
 If this same were a churchyard where we stand,
 And thou possessèd with a thousand wrongs;
 Or if that surly spirit, melancholy,
 Had baked thy blood and made it heavy, thick,
 Which else runs tickling up and down the veins,
 Making that idiot, laughter, keep° men's eyes
 And strain° their cheeks to idle merriment,
 A passion hateful to my purposes;
 Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes,
 Hear me without thine ears, and make reply
 Without a tongue, using conceit° alone,
 Without eyes, ears, and harmful sound of words;
 Then, in despite of brooded° watchful day,
 I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts:
 But, ah, I will not; yet I love thee well,
 And, by my troth, I think thou lov'st me well.

HUBERT

So well, that what you bid me undertake,
 Though that my death were adjunct to° my act,
 By heaven, I would do it.

KING JOHN

Do not I know thou wouldst?

30 We . . . much perhaps the entry after line 3 indicates that Hubert is responsible for the capture of Arthur; at any rate, Hubert is now clearly loyal to John, not to France
 32 advantage interest; pay recompense, repay 36 fit . . . tune (1) set it to more appropriate music (2) render it in a better style (i.e., reward you with more than words)
 38 good respect high regard 39 bounden bound, indebted
 46-47 too full . . . audience (1) the mind of the day is too full of trinkets to listen to me (2) the day is too full of florid beauties for you to pay proper attention to my harsh meaning
 49 race course, progress (many editors substitute "ear" for "race," but this destroys the oxymoron "drowsy race") 55 keep employ for its own purposes 56 strain constrain, limit
 60 conceit imagination, understanding 62 brooded brooding
 67 adjunct to an essential constituent of

Good Hubert, Hubert, Hubert, throw thine eye
 On yon young boy; I'll tell thee what, my friend, 70
 He is a very serpent in my way,
 And wheresoe'er this foot of mine doth tread
 He lies before me: dost thou understand me?
 Thou art his keeper.

30

HUBERT And I'll keep him so
 That he shall not offend your majesty. 75

KING JOHN

Death.

HUBERT My lord.

35

KING JOHN A grave.

HUBERT He shall not live.

KING JOHN

Enough.

I could be merry now. Hubert, I love thee.

Well, I'll not say what I intend for thee:

Remember. Madam, fare you well.

I'll send those powers o'er to your majesty. 80

40

ELINOR

My blessing go with thee!

KING JOHN

For England, cousin, go.

Hubert shall be your man,° attend on you

With all true duty. On toward Calais,° ho! Exeunt.

45

Scene III. [King Philip's tent.]

50

Enter [KING PHILIP of] France, [LEWIS the] Dauphin, PANDULPH, ATTENDANTS.

KING PHILIP

So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,°
 A whole armado° of convicted° sail
 Is scattered and disjoined from fellowship.

55

PANDULPH

Courage and comfort! All shall yet go well.

KING PHILIP

60

What can go well, when we have run° so ill? 5
 Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost?
 Arthur ta'en prisoner? divers° dear friends slain?
 And bloody England into England gone,
 O'erbearing interruption, spite of° France?

65

LEWIS

What he hath won, that hath he fortified. 10
 So hot a speed with such advice disposed,°
 Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,
 Doth want example:° who hath read or heard
 Of any kindred action like to this?

KING PHILIP

Well could I bear that England had this praise, 15
 So° we could find some pattern° of our shame.

Enter CONSTANCE.

Look, who comes here! a grave unto a soul,
 Holding th' eternal spirit, against her will,

82 man servant 83 Calais pronounced to rhyme with palace
 III.iii.1 flood sea 2 armado armada, fleet of armed ships; convicted doomed 5 run (1) proceeded (2) run away 7 divers various 9 spite of in spite of 11 with . . . disposed carried out with such determination 13 Doth want example is without parallel 16 So if; pattern example, parallel

In the vile prison of afflicted breath.^o

I prithee, lady, go away with me.

CONSTANCE

Lo, now! now see the issue of your peace!

KING PHILIP

Patience, good lady! Comfort, gentle Constance!

CONSTANCE

No, I defy^o all counsel, all redress,

But that which ends all counsel, true redress:

Death, Death, O, amiable, lovely Death!

Thou odoriferous stench! sound rottenness!

Arise forth from the couch of lasting night,^o

Thou hate and terror to prosperity,

And I will kiss thy detestable bones,

And put my eyeballs in thy vaulty^o brows,

And ring these fingers with thy household worms,

And stop this gap of breath^o with fulsome^o dust,

And be a carrion monster like thyself:

Come, grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st

And buss^o thee as thy wife! Misery's love,

O, come to me!

KING PHILIP O fair affliction,^o peace!

CONSTANCE

No, no, I will not, having breath to cry!

O that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth!

Then with a passion would I shake the world,

And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy^o

Which cannot hear a lady's feeble voice,

Which scorns a modern invocation.^o

PANDULPH

Lady, you utter madness, and not sorrow.

CONSTANCE

Thou art holy to belie me so!^o

I am not mad: this hair I tear is mine;

My name is Constance; I was Geoffrey's wife;

Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost!

I am not mad: I would to heaven I were,

For then 'tis like^o I should forget myself!

O, if I could, what grief should I forget!

Preach some philosophy to make me mad,

And thou shalt be canonized, cardinal.

For, being not mad but sensible of^o grief,

My reasonable part produces reason

How^o I may be delivered of^o these woes,

And teaches me to kill or hang myself:

If I were mad, I should forget my son,

Or madly think a babe of clouts^o were he.

I am not mad: too well, too well I feel

The different plague of each calamity.

KING PHILIP

Bind up those tresses! O, what love I note

In the fair multitude of those her hairs!

19 afflicted breath tormented life 23 defy reject 27 couch . . . night lair of eternal night (i.e., hell) 30 vaulty (1) arched (2) tomblike 32 stop . . . breath stop up this mouth; fulsome loathsome 35 buss kiss 36 affliction (1) afflicted one (2) one who now afflicts us 40 fell anatomy cruel skeleton (i.e. Death) 42 modern invocation common or ordinary entreaty 44 Thou . . . so as it stands, the line must be sarcastic; it is short a syllable, and many editors follow the fourth edition of the Folio (1685) in supplying "not" before "holy" 49 like likely 53 sensible of capable of feeling 54-55 reason How the idea of a way in which 55 be delivered of (1) give birth to (2) be delivered from 58 babe of clouts rag doll

Where but by chance a silver drop^o hath fall'n,

20 Even to that drop ten thousand wiry friends^o

Do glue^o themselves in sociable grief,

Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,

Sticking together in calamity.

CONSTANCE

To England, if you will.^o

KING PHILIP

Bind up your hairs.

CONSTANCE

25 Yes, that I will; and wherefore will I do it?

I tore them from their bonds and cried aloud,

"O that these hands could so redeem my son,

As they have given these hairs their liberty!"

But now I envy at^o their liberty,

30 And will again commit them to their bonds,

Because my poor child is a prisoner.

And, father cardinal, I have heard you say

That we shall see and know our friends in heaven:

If that be true, I shall see my boy again,

35 For since the birth of Cain, the first male child,

To him that did but yesterday suspire,

There was not such a gracious^o creature born.

But now will canker-sorrow^o eat my bud

And chase the native beauty from his cheek,

And he will look as hollow as a ghost,

As dim and meager as an ague's fit,

40 And so he'll die; and rising so again,

When I shall meet him in the court of heaven

I shall not know him: therefore never, never

Must I^o behold my pretty Arthur more.

PANDULPH

You hold too heinous a respect^o of grief.

CONSTANCE

45 He talks to me that never had a son.

KING PHILIP

You are as fond of^o grief as of your child.

CONSTANCE

Grief fills the room up of my absent child,

50 Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me,

Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words,

Remembers^o me of all his gracious parts,

Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form;

Then have I reason to be fond of grief!

55 Fare you well: had you such a loss as I,

I could give better comfort than you do.

I will not keep this form^o upon my head,

When there is such disorder in my wit!^o

O Lord! My boy, my Arthur, my fair son!

60 My life, my joy, my food, my all the world!

My widow-comfort, and my sorrows' cure! Exit. 105

KING PHILIP

I fear some outrage, and I'll follow her.

Exit.

63 drop tear 64 wiry friends hairs ("wiry" was a common, and not pejorative, epithet for hair) 65 glue sympathetically attach 68 To . . . will Constance here responds to King Philip's invitation at line 20; the separation is often taken as evidence that her "mad scene" is an interpolation, though the leap back to an earlier subject may simply be another symptom of her agitation 73 envy at am envious of 81 gracious (1) attractive, pleasing (2) holy, expressing and meriting divine grace 82 canker-sorrow sorrow as a canker-worm 89 Must I can I 90 heinous a respect atrocious a conception 92 fond of foolishly enamored with 96 Remembers reminds 101 form order (she had bound up her hair at lines 69-75, and now unbinds it again) 102 wit mind

LEWIS

There's nothing in this world can make me joy;
Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale,
Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man,
And bitter shame hath spoiled the sweet words' taste,^o 110
That it yields nought but shame and bitterness.

PANDULPH

Before the curing of a strong disease,
Even in the instant of repair^o and health,
The fit is strongest: evils that take leave,
On their departure most of all show evil. 115
What have you lost by losing of this day?^o

LEWIS

All days of glory, joy, and happiness.

PANDULPH

If you had won it, certainly you had.
No, no; when Fortune means to men most good,
She looks upon them with a threat'ning eye: 120
'Tis strange to think how much King John hath lost
In this which he accounts so clearly won—
Are not you grieved that Arthur is his prisoner?

LEWIS

As heartily as he is glad he hath him.

PANDULPH

Your mind is all as youthful as your blood. 125
Now hear me speak with a prophetic spirit,
For even the breath of what I mean to speak
Shall blow each dust,^o each straw, each little rub,^o
Out of the path which shall directly lead
Thy foot to England's throne. And therefore mark: 130
John hath seized Arthur, and it cannot be
That, while warm life plays in that infant's veins,
The misplaced^o John should entertain an hour,
One minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest.
A scepter snatched with an unruly hand 135
Must be as boisterously^o maintained as gained,
And he that stands upon a slipp'ry place
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up:^o
That John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall;
So be it, for it cannot be but so. 140

LEWIS

But what shall I gain by young Arthur's fall?

PANDULPH

You, in the right of Lady Blanch your wife,
May then make all the claim that Arthur did.

LEWIS

And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did.

PANDULPH

How green you are and fresh in this old world! 145
John lays you plots;^o the times conspire with you,
For he that steeps his safety in true blood^o

110 sweet words' taste the words of the tale, sweet on first telling, are bitter on second telling; many editors follow Pope in emending the Folio's "words" to "world's" 113 repair recovery 116 losing . . . day losing today's battle 128 dust particle of dust; rub obstacle (from bowling, a roughness in the path of the bowl) 133 misplaced out of his proper place (i.e., usurping) 136 boisterously violently 138 Makes . . . up is not fastidious about his means of holding himself up 146 lays you plots prepares the course for you to follow 147 steeps . . . blood saturates his own security in loyal, or legitimate, blood (the specific aim of Pandulph's generalization is, of course, John's inevitable need to murder the true king, Arthur)

Shall find but bloody safety and untrue.

This act so evilly borne^o shall cool the hearts
Of all his people, and freeze up their zeal, 150
That none so small advantage^o shall step forth
To check his reign, but they will cherish it;
No natural exhalation^o in the sky,
No scope of nature,^o no distempered^o day, 155
No common wind, no customèd event,
But they will pluck away his^o natural cause
And call them meteors,^o prodigies, and signs,
Abortives,^o presages, and tongues of heaven, 115
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.

LEWIS

May be he will not touch young Arthur's life, 160
But hold himself safe in his prisonment.

PANDULPH

O sir, when he shall hear of your approach,
If that young Arthur be not gone already, 120
Even at that news he dies; and then the hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him 165
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change,^o
And pick strong matter^o of revolt and wrath
Out of the bloody fingers' ends of John.
Methinks I see this hurly^o all on foot;^o
And, O, what better matter breeds^o for you 170
Than I have named! The bastard Faulconbridge
Is now in England ransacking the church,
Offending charity:^o if but a dozen French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call^o
To train^o ten thousand English to their side, 175
Or as a little snow, tumbled about,
Anon^o becomes a mountain. O noble Dolphin,
Go with me to the king: 'tis wonderful
What may be wrought out of their discontent,
Now that their souls are topful of offense.^o 180
For England go; I will whet on^o the king.

LEWIS

Strong reasons makes^o strange actions! Let us go:
If you say aye, the king will not say no. Exeunt.

A C T I V

Scene I. [England. A room in a castle.]

Enter HUBERT and EXECUTIONERS.

HUBERT

Heat me these irons hot, and look thou stand
Within the arras.^o When I strike my foot

149 borne (1) born (2) carried out 151 none . . . advantage no opportunity, however small 153 exhalation meteor 154 scope of nature event at the limit of natural possibility; distempered stormy 156 his its 157 meteors supernatural omens (opposed to the "natural exhalation" of line 153) 158 Abortives misshaped creations (also considered omens) 166 kiss . . . change amorously welcome any alteration 167 matter (1) reason, cause (2) corrupt matter, pus 169 hurly turmoil; on foot under way 170 breeds is being prepared 173 charity right feeling among Christians 174 call decoy 175 train entice 177 Anon at once 180 topful of offense (1) filled to the brim with John's offenses (2) thoroughly offended 181 whet on urge 182 makes make (the verb form may imply "having strong reasons")
IV.i.2 Within the arras behind the curtain

Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth
And bind the boy which you shall find with me
Fast to the chair. Be heedful. Hence, and watch.

EXECUTIONER

I hope your warrant will bear out° the deed.

HUBERT

Uncleanly° scruples! Fear not you! Look to't.
[EXECUTIONERS hide.]

Young lad, come forth; I have to say with° you.

Enter ARTHUR.

ARTHUR

Good morrow, Hubert.

HUBERT

Good morrow, little prince.

ARTHUR

As little prince, having so great a title
To be more prince, as may be.° You are sad.

HUBERT

Indeed, I have been merrier.

ARTHUR

Mercy on me!

Methinks nobody should be sad but I:

Yet I remember, when I was in France,

Young gentlemen would be as sad as night,

Only for wantonness.° By my Christendom,°

So° I were out of prison, and kept sheep,

I should be as merry as the day is long;

And so I would be here, but that I doubt°

My uncle practices° more harm to me.

He is afraid of me, and I of him:

Is it my fault that I was Geoffrey's son?

No, indeed, is't not; and I would to heaven

I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

HUBERT [Aside.]

If I talk to him, with his innocent prate°

He will awake my mercy, which lies dead:

Therefore I will be sudden and dispatch.°

ARTHUR

Are you sick, Hubert? You look pale today.

In sooth, I would you were a little sick,

That I might sit all night and watch with you.

I warrant I love you more than you do me.

HUBERT [Aside.]

His words do take possession of my bosom.

[To ARTHUR.]

Read here, young Arthur. [Showing a paper.]

[Aside.] How now, foolish rheum!°

Turning dispiteous torture° out of door!

I must be brief, lest resolution drop

Out at mine eyes in tender womanish tears.

[To ARTHUR.]

Can you not read it? Is it not fair writ?°

6 bear out vindicate, give authority for 7 Uncleanly improper 8 to say with something to say to 10-11 As . . . may be considering my title (king) to be even greater, I am presently as little prince as may be 16 wantonness whim; By my Christendom as I am a Christian (perhaps literally "by my baptism") 17 So if only 19 doubt fear 20 practices schemes 25 prate prattle 27 dispatch finish the job quickly 33 rheum (1) tears (2) room (in his bosom, Arthur's words threatening to displace the torture there) 34 dispiteous torture merciless torture (1) threatened to Arthur (2) now tormenting Hubert 37 fair writ written clearly

ARTHUR

Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect:°

Must you with hot irons burn out both mine eyes?

HUBERT

Young boy, I must.

ARTHUR

And will you?

HUBERT

And I will.

ARTHUR

Have you the heart? When your head did but ache,

I knit my handkercher about your brows

(The best I had, a princess wrought it me°—

And I did never ask it you° again)

And with my hand at midnight held your head,

And like the watchful minutes to the hour,°

Still and anon° cheered up the heavy time,

Saying, "What lack you?" and "Where lies your grief?"

Or "What good love° may I perform for you?"

Many a poor man's son would have lien° still,

And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you;

But you at your sick service had° a prince.

Nay, you may think my love was crafty° love,

And call it cunning. Do and if you will.

If heaven be pleased that you must use me ill,

Why then you must. Will you put out mine eyes?

These eyes that never did nor never shall

So much as frown on you?

HUBERT

I have sworn to do it,

And with hot irons must I burn them out.

ARTHUR

Ah, none but in this iron age would do it!

The iron of itself, though heat° red-hot,

Approaching near these eyes, would drink my tears

And quench this fiery indignation

Even in the matter° of mine innocence!

Nay, after that, consume away in rust,

But for° containing fire to harm mine eye!

Are you more stubborn-hard than hammered iron?

And if an angel should have come to me

And told me Hubert should put out mine eyes,

I would not have believed him—no tongue but Hubert's.

HUBERT [Stamps.]

Come forth.

[EXECUTIONERS come forth with a cord, irons, etc.]

Do as I bid you do.

ARTHUR

O save me, Hubert, save me! My eyes are out

Even with the fierce looks of these bloody men.

HUBERT

Give me the iron, I say, and bind him here.

ARTHUR

Alas, what need you be so boist'rous rough?

I will not struggle; I will stand stone still!

For God's sake, Hubert, let me not be bound!

38 effect purpose 43 wrought it me worked (embroidered) it for me 44 ask it you ask you for it 46 like . . . hour as frequently as there are observable minutes in an hour (?) 47 Still and anon continually 49 love labor of love 50 lien (disyllabic) lain 52 you . . . had you, sick, had at your service 53 crafty feigned 61 heat heated 64 matter substance (i.e., tears) 66 But for merely as a result of

Nay, hear me, Hubert! Drive these men away,
And I will sit as quiet as a lamb.
I will not stir, nor winch,^o nor speak a word,
Nor look upon the iron angrily:
Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive you,
Whatever torment you do put me to.

HUBERT

Go, stand within; let me alone with him.

EXECUTIONER

I am best pleased to be from^o such a deed. 85
[Exeunt EXECUTIONERS.]

ARTHUR

Alas, I then have chid away my friend!
He hath a stern look, but a gentle heart:
Let him come back, that his compassion may Give life to yours.

HUBERT Come, boy, prepare yourself.

ARTHUR

Is there no remedy?

HUBERT None, but to lose your eyes. 90

ARTHUR

O heaven, that there were but a mote in yours,
A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wandering hair,
Any annoyance in that precious sense:
Then feeling what small things are boisterous^o there,
Your vile intent must needs seem horrible. 95

HUBERT

Is this your promise? Go to,^o hold your tongue.

ARTHUR

Hubert, the utterance of a brace^o of tongues
Must needs want^o pleading for a pair of eyes:
Let me not hold my tongue! let me not,^o Hubert!
Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue,
So^o I may keep mine eyes. O, spare mine eyes,
Though to no use but still to look on you!
Lo, by my troth, the instrument is cold
And would not^o harm me.

HUBERT I can heat it, boy.

ARTHUR

No, in good sooth; the fire is dead with grief,
Being create^o for comfort, to be used^o
In undeserved extremes.^o See else^o yourself.
There is no malice in this burning coal.
The breath of heaven hath blown his spirit out
And strewed repentant ashes on his head. 110

HUBERT

But with my breath I can revive it, boy.

ARTHUR

And if you do, you will but make it blush
And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert:
Nay, it perchance will sparkle in^o your eyes,
And, like a dog that is compelled to fight,
Snatch at his master that doth tarre him on.^o
All things that you should use to do me wrong

80 winch wince 85 from away from 94 boisterous painful 96 Go to disapproving exclamation, equivalent, perhaps, to "come, come" 97 brace pair 98 want be insufficient 99
let me not (1) repeating the previous plea (2) hinder me not 101 So if thereby 104 would not (1) would not be able to (2) does not wish to 106 create created; to be used at the prospect of being used 107 In undeserved extremes for undeserved cruelties (with pun on Latin in extremis, in the final agonies of dying); else further 114 sparkle in throw sparks into 116 tarre him on incite him

Deny their office:^o only you do lack
That mercy which fierce fire and iron extends,^o
Creatures of note for mercy-lacking uses.^o 120

HUBERT

Well, see to live: I will not touch thine eye
For all the treasure that thine uncle owes;^o
Yet am I sworn and I did purpose, boy,
With this same very iron to burn them out.

ARTHUR

O, now you look like Hubert! All this while 125
You were disguisèd.

HUBERT

Peace! No more. Adieu.
Your uncle must not know but^o you are dead.
I'll fill these doggèd^o spies with false reports;
And, pretty child, sleep doubtless and secure^o
That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world, 130
Will not offend thee.

ARTHUR

O heaven! I thank you, Hubert.

HUBERT

Silence! No more! Go closely^o in with me.
Much danger do I undergo for thee. Exeunt.

Scene II. [King John's court.]

Enter [KING] JOHN, PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and other LORDS.

KING JOHN

Here once again we sit, once again crowned,^o
And looked upon, I hope, with cheerful eyes.

PEMBROKE

This "once again," but that your highness pleased,
Was once superfluous:^o you were crowned before, 5
And that high royalty was ne'er plucked off,
The faiths of men ne'er stained with revolt;
Fresh expectation^o troubled not the land
With any longed-for change or better state.^o

SALISBURY

Therefore, to be possessed with double pomp,^o
To guard^o a title that was rich before, 10
To gild refinèd gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,^o 15
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.^o

PEMBROKE

But that your royal pleasure must be done,

118 Deny their office contradict their customary functions

119 extends extend, grant 120 Creatures . . . uses creatures

(i.e., fire and iron) famous for cruel uses 122 owes owns

127 but anything but that 128 doggèd surly 129 doubtless and secure certain and assured 132 closely secretly

IV.ii.1 once again crowned John has just had a second coronation, enforcing new oaths of allegiance to counteract the excommunication, which freed his followers from their original oaths (see III.i.100-01) 4 once superfluous one time more than necessary 7 Fresh expectation (1) eager anticipation

(2) anticipation of something new 8 state (1) government

(2) condition 9 pomp ceremony (i.e., coronation) 10 guard

(1) ornament (2) defend 14-15 with . . . garnish to seek to embellish the sun's beauty with a candle 16 excess extravagance ("excess" may also refer to usury—see Merchant of

Venice, I.iii.59—and may here connote Salisbury's sense that John is extorting too much money from his subjects)

This act is as an ancient tale new told,
And, in the last repeating, troublesome,
Being urgèd at a time unseasonable.

SALISBURY

In this the antique and well-noted° face
Of plain old form° is much disfigurèd,
And like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about,° Startles and frights consideration,°
Makes sound opinion sick and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashioned robe.°

PEMBROKE

When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound° their skill in covetousness,°
And oftentimes excusing of a fault
Doth make the fault the worse by th' excuse,
As patches set upon a little breach°
Discredit more in hiding of the fault
Than did the fault before it was so patched.

SALISBURY

To this effect, before you were new crowned,
We breathed° our counsel: but it pleased your highness
To overbear it, and we are all well pleased,° Since all and every part of what we would° Doth make a stand at° what your highness will.°

KING JOHN

Some reasons of this double coronation
I have possessed you with,° and think them strong;
And more, more strong, when lesser is my fear,
I shall indue° you with. Meantime but ask
What you would have reformed that is not well,
And well shall you perceive how willingly
I will both hear and grant you your requests.

PEMBROKE

Then I, as one that am the tongue of these
To sound the purposes° of all their hearts,
Both for myself and them—but, chief of all,
Your safety, for the which, myself and them°
Bend their best studies°—heartily request
Th' enfranchisement of Arthur, whose restraint
Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent
To break into this dangerous argument:
If what in rest° you have, in right you hold,
Why then° your fears, which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong, should move you to mew up
Your tender kinsman, and to choke his days
With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth
The rich advantage of good exercise?°

20

25

30

35

40

45

50

55

60

That the time's enemies° may not have this
To grace occasions,° let it be our suit,
That you have bid us ask his liberty,°
Which for our goods° we do no further ask
Than whereupon our weal,° on you depending,
Counts it your weal he have his liberty.

65

Enter HUBERT.

KING JOHN

Let it be so:° I do commit his youth
To your direction. Hubert, what news with you?

[Takes him aside.]

PEMBROKE

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
He showed his warrant to a friend of mine.
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye; that close aspect° of his
Does show the mood of a much troubled breast,
And I do fearfully believe 'tis done,
What we so feared he had a charge to do.

70

75

SALISBURY

The color of the king doth come and go
Between his purpose and his conscience,
Like heralds 'twixt two dreadful battles° set:
His passion is so ripe, it needs must break.

PEMBROKE

And when it breaks, I fear will issue thence
The foul corruption° of a sweet child's death.

80

KING JOHN

We cannot hold° mortality's strong hand.
Good lords, although my will to give is living,
The suit which you demand is gone and dead.
He tells us Arthur is deceased tonight.

85

SALISBURY

Indeed we feared his sickness was past cure.

PEMBROKE

Indeed we heard how near his death he was,
Before the child himself felt he was sick:
This must be answered either here or hence.°

KING JOHN

Why do you bend such solemn brows° on me?
Think you I bear the shears of destiny?°
Have I commandment on the pulse of life?

90

SALISBURY

It is apparent foul play, and 'tis shame

21 well-noted well-known 22 old form customary methods
24 fetch about (nautical) take a new tack 25 frights consideration frightens contemplation (raising the whole question of his right to the crown) 27 so . . . robe (1) a robe so newly made, as opposed to John's original coronation robe (2) a robe of such new style (as opposed to "plain old form," line 22) 29 confound disrupt, destroy; covetousness (1) desire to do better (2) greed 32 breach tear in a garment, perhaps with a pun on the garment itself 36 breathed uttered quietly or hesitantly 37 we . . . pleased it is becoming increasingly clear that they are not in the least pleased 38 would would do, wish 39 Doth . . . at stops at (the limits of); will wishes to do 41 possessed you with given you 43 indue endow, supply 48 sound the purposes give sound to the intentions 50 them they (themselves?) 51 Bend . . . studies exert their (our?) hardest efforts 55 rest peace 56 Why then why, then, is it that 60 exercise education in those qualities befitting a gentleman

61 the time's enemies those opposed to present arrangements 62 grace occasions embellish their excuses or opportunities (for rebellion) 63 That . . . liberty as punctuated here—and in the Folio—Pembroke asks that it be given out that John encouraged them to ask for Arthur's liberty;
many editors, following Rowe, place a comma after "ask" to mean "let his liberty be the suit you have offered to grant us" 64 our goods our own good 65 whereupon our weal in so far as our own well-being 67 Let . . . so John, seeing Hubert, grants their request on the supposition that Arthur is already dead; many editors, following Dr. Johnson, have destroyed this detail by moving the entry to the middle of line 68 72 close aspect severe appearance, guarded look 78 battles armies drawn up for battle 81 corruption pus 82 hold restrain 89 This . . . hence amends must be made for this either in this world or the next 90 bend . . .
brows scowl 91 shears of destiny with which Atropos,
one of the three Fates, cuts the thread of life

That greatness should so grossly offer it:°
So thrive it in your game!° and so, farewell.

PEMBROKE

Stay yet, Lord Salisbury. I'll go with thee
And find th' inheritance of this poor child,
His little kingdom of a forcèd° grave.
That blood which owed° the breadth of all this isle,
Three foot of it doth hold: bad world the while!° 100
This must not be thus borne; this will break out
To all our sorrows, and ere long, I doubt.°

Exeunt [LORDS].

KING JOHN

They burn in indignation. I repent.

Enter MESSENGER.

There is no sure foundation set on blood,
No certain life achieved by others' death. 105
A fearful eye thou hast. Where is that blood
That I have seen inhabit in those cheeks?
So foul a sky clears not without a storm;
Pour down thy weather: how goes all in France?

MESSENGER

From France to England; never such a pow'r 110
For any foreign preparation°
Was levied in the body of a land.
The copy of your speed is learned by them:°
For when you should be told they do prepare,
The tidings comes that they are all arrived.

KING JOHN

O, where hath our intelligence° been drunk?
Where hath it slept? Where is my mother's care,
That such an army could be drawn in France
And she not hear of it?

MESSENGER

My liege, her ear
Is stopped with dust: the first of April died
Your noble mother; and, as I hear, my lord,
The Lady Constance in a frenzy died
Three days° before—but this from rumor's tongue
I idly° heard; if true or false I know not.

KING JOHN

Withhold thy speed, dreadful occasion!° 125
O, make a league with me, till I have pleased
My discontented peers. What! Mother dead!
How wildly then walks my estate in France!
Under whose conduct came those pow'rs of France
That thou for truth giv'st out are landed here? 130

MESSENGER

Under the Dolphin.

Enter BASTARD and PETER of Pomfret.

KING JOHN Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill tidings. [To BASTARD.] Now, what says
the world

To your proceedings? Do not seek to stuff
My head with more ill news, for it is full.

BASTARD

But if you be afeard to hear the worst, 135
Then let the worst unheard fall on your head.

KING JOHN

Bear with me, cousin, for I was amazed°
Under the tide; but now I breathe again
Aloft° the flood, and can give audience 140
To any tongue, speak it of what it will.

BASTARD

How I have sped° among the clergymen,
The sums I have collected shall express.
But as I travailed° hither through the land,
I find the people strangely fantasied,° 145
Possessed with rumors, full of idle dreams,
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear.
And here's a prophet that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret,° whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heels,
To whom he sung, in rude harsh-sounding rhymes, 150
That ere the next Ascension Day at noon,
Your highness should deliver up your crown.

KING JOHN

Thou idle dreamer, wherefore didst thou so?

PETER

Foreknowing that the truth will fall out so.

115

KING JOHN

Hubert, away with him: imprison him, 155
And on that day at noon, whereon he says
I shall yield up my crown, let him be hanged.
Deliver him to safety° and return,
For I must use thee. [Exit HUBERT, with PETER.]

O my gentle° cousin,

120

Hear'st thou the news abroad, who are arrived? 160

BASTARD

The French, my lord; men's mouths are full of it—
Besides, I met Lord Bigot and Lord Salisbury,
With eyes as red as new-enkindled fire,
And others more, going to seek the grave
Of Arthur, whom they say is killed tonight 165
On your suggestion.

KING JOHN

Gentle kinsman, go,
And thrust thyself into their companies.
I have a way to win their loves again;
Bring them before me.

130

BASTARD

I will seek them out.

KING JOHN

Nay, but make haste: the better foot before!° 170
O, let me have no subject enemies,
When adverse foreigners affright my towns
With dreadful pomp of stout invasion.
Be Mercury,° set feathers to thy heels,
And fly, like thought, from them to me again. 175

BASTARD

The spirit of the time shall teach me speed. Exit.

94 so grossly offer it present (such foul play) so flagrantly
95 So . . . game May your schemes come to the same end!
98 forcèd enforced, violently brought about 99 blood which owed life which owned 100 the while during the time this can be true 102 doubt fear 111 foreign preparation force for foreign invasion 113 The . . . them they have learned to copy your speed 116 intelligence spy service 123 Three days Shakespeare compresses three years to three days 124 idly carelessly, without paying attention 125 occasion course of events

137 amazed in a maze, bewildered 139 Aloft on top of 141 sped fared 143 travailed (1) labored (2) traveled (the words had not yet been separated) 144 strangely fantasied filled with strange fancies 148 Pomfret Pontefract, in the West Riding of Yorkshire 158 safety close custody 159 gentle noble, wellborn 170 better foot before as fast as you can 174 Mercury messenger of the gods, who wore winged sandals

KING JOHN

Spoke like a sprightly^o noble gentleman.
Go after him, for he perhaps shall need
Some messenger betwixt me and the peers,
And be thou he.

MESSENGER With all my heart, my liege. [Exit.] 180

KING JOHN

My mother dead!

Enter HUBERT.

HUBERT

My lord, they say five moons were seen tonight:
Four fixèd, and the fifth did whirl about
The other four in wondrous motion.

KING JOHN

Five moons?

HUBERT Old men and beldams^o in the streets 185

Do prophesy upon it^o dangerously;
Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths,
And, when they talk of him, they shake their heads
And whisper one another in the ear,

And he that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist, 190

Whilst he that hears makes fearful action,
With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes.

I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,

The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,

With open mouth swallowing a tailor's news, 195

Who, with his shears and measure in his hand,

Standing on slippers, which his nimble haste

Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet,

Told of a many thousand warlike French,

That were embattailèd^o and ranked in Kent. 200

Another lean unwashed artificer

Cuts off his tale and talks of Arthur's death.

KING JOHN

Why seek'st thou to possess me with these fears?

Why urgest thou so oft young Arthur's death?

Thy hand hath murdered him: I had a mighty cause 205

To wish him dead, but thou hadst none to kill him.

HUBERT

No had,^o my lord? Why, did you not provoke^o me?

KING JOHN

It is the curse of kings to be attended

By slaves that take their humors^o for a warrant

To break within the bloody house of life, 210

And on the winking of authority

To understand a law,^o to know the meaning

Of dangerous majesty, when perchance it frowns

More upon humor than advised respect.^o

HUBERT

Here is your hand and seal for what I did. 215

KING JOHN

O, when the last accompt^o twixt heaven and earth

Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal

Witness against us to damnation!

How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds

Make deeds ill done!^o Hadst not thou been by, 220

A fellow by the hand of nature marked,

Quoted^o and signed^o to do a deed of shame,

This murder had not come into my mind;

But taking note of thy abhorred aspect,

Finding thee fit for bloody villainy, 225

Apt, liable^o to be employed in danger,

I faintly broke with thee of^o Arthur's death;

And thou, to be endearèd to a king,

Made it no conscience to destroy^o a prince.

HUBERT

My lord— 230

KING JOHN

Hadst thou but shook thy head or made a pause

When I spake darkly^o what I purposèd,

Or turned an eye of doubt upon my face,

As^o bid me tell my tale in express words,

Deep shame had struck me dumb, made me break off, 235

And those thy fears might have wrought fears in me.

But thou didst understand me by my signs

And didst in signs again parley with sin;^o

Yea, without stop,^o didst let thy heart consent,

And consequently thy rude hand to act 240

The deed, which both our tongues held vile to name.

Out of my sight, and never see me more!

My nobles leave me, and my state is braved,^o

Even at my gates, with ranks of foreign pow'rs; 245

Nay, in the body of this fleshly land,^o

This kingdom, this confine^o of blood and breath,

Hostility and civil tumult reigns

Between my conscience and my cousin's death.

HUBERT

Arm you against your other enemies:

I'll make a peace between your soul and you. 250

Young Arthur is alive! This hand of mine

Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand,

Not painted with the crimson spots of blood.

Within this bosom never entered yet

The dreadful motion^o of a murderous thought, 255

And you have slandered nature in my form,^o

Which, howsoever rude exteriorly,

Is yet the cover of a fairer mind

Than to be butcher of an innocent child.

KING JOHN

Doth Arthur live? O, haste thee to the peers! 260

Throw this report on their incensèd rage,

And make them tame to their obedience.^o

Forgive the comment that my passion made

Upon thy feature, for my rage was blind,

And foul imaginary eyes of blood^o 265

Presented thee more hideous than thou art.

220 deeds ill done (1) evil deeds done (2) deeds done badly

222 Quoted (1) marked, as with a line in the margin of a book

(2) noted, recorded; signed (1) marked with some distinguishing characteristic, such as the sign of Cain (2) assigned, appointed

226 liable suitable 227 broke . . . of disclosed to thee my desire for 229 Made . . . destroy had no scruples about destroying 232 darkly obscurely 234 As as to 238 sin (1)

sin (2) sign 239 stop hesitation 243 braved challenged 245

the . . . land my own body (conceived as a microcosm)

246 confine limited territory 255 motion impulse, inclination

256 form features 262 tame . . . obedience subject to their oaths 265 imaginary . . . blood (1) John's eyes, imagining bloodshed (2) Hubert's eyes, imagined bloodthirsty (3)

Arthur's eyes, imagined as empty sockets

177 sprightly full of spirit 185 beldams grandmothers

186 prophesy upon it expound its meaning 200 embat- tailèd marshaled for battle 207 No had had I not; provoke urge; order (?) 209 humors moods, whims 211-12 on

. . . law take as law the mere hints (or oversights) of one in authority 214 advised respect deliberate consideration

216 accompt account

O, answer not, but to my closet^o bring
The angry lords with all expedient haste.
I conjure^o thee but slowly: run more fast. Exeunt.

Scene III. [Before a castle.]

Enter ARTHUR, on the walls.

ARTHUR
The wall is high, and yet will I leap down.
Good ground, be pitiful and hurt me not!
There's few or none do know me; if they did,
This ship-boy's semblance hath disguised me quite.
I am afraid, and yet I'll venture it. 5
If I get down, and do not break my limbs,
I'll find a thousand shifts^o to get away.
As good to die and go, as die and stay.
[Leaps down.]

O me! my uncle's spirit is in these stones!
Heaven take my soul, and England keep my bones! 10
Dies.

Enter PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and BIGOT.

SALISBURY
Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmundsbury.^o
It is our safety, and we must embrace
This gentle offer of the perilous time.

PEMBROKE
Who brought that letter from the cardinal?

SALISBURY
The Count Meloone, a noble lord of France, 15
Whose private with^o me of the Dolphin's love
Is much more general^o than these lines import.

BIGOT
Tomorrow morning let us meet him then.

SALISBURY
Or rather then set forward, for 'twill be 20
Two long days' journey, lords, or ere^o we meet.
Enter BASTARD.

BASTARD
Once more today well met, distempered^o lords!
The king by me requests your presence straight.^o

SALISBURY
The king hath dispossessed himself of us;
We will not line his thin bestainèd cloak 25
With our pure honors, nor attend the foot
That leaves the print of blood where'er it walks.
Return and tell him so: we know the worst.

BASTARD
Whate'er you think, good words, I think, were best.

SALISBURY
Our griefs, and not our manners, reason^o now.

BASTARD
But there is little reason in your grief! 30
Therefore 'twere reason you had manners now.

PEMBROKE
Sir, sir, impatience hath his privilege.

267 closet private council-chamber 269 conjure entreat
IV.iii.7 shifts tricks 11 Saint Edmundsbury Bury Saint Edmunds, in Suffolk 16 private with private message to 17 general comprehensive 20 or ere before 21 distempered peevish 22 straight immediately 29 reason control our conduct

BASTARD
'Tis true, to hurt his master, no man else.

SALISBURY
This is the prison. [Sees ARTHUR.] What is he lies here?

PEMBROKE
O Death, made proud with pure and princely beauty! 35
The earth had not a hole to hide this deed.

SALISBURY
Murder, as hating what himself hath done,
Doth lay it open to urge on revenge.

BIGOT
Or when he doomed this beauty to a grave, 40
Found it too precious princely for a grave.^o

SALISBURY
Sir Richard, what think you? You have beheld:
Or have you^o read or heard, or could you think,
Or do you almost think, although you see,
That^o you do see? Could thought, without this object, 45
Form such another? This is the very top,
The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest,
Of murder's arms:^o this is the bloodiest shame,
The wildest savagery, the vilest stroke,
That ever walleyed^o wrath or staring rage^o
Presented to the tears of soft remorse.^o 50

PEMBROKE
All murders past do stand excused in this:
And this, so sole and so unmatchable,
Shall give a holiness, a purity,
To the yet unbegotten sin of times,^o
And prove a deadly bloodshed but a jest, 55
Exemplified by^o this heinous spectacle.

BASTARD
It is a damnèd and a bloody work,
The graceless^o action of a heavy^o hand,
If that it be the work of any hand.

SALISBURY
If that it be the work of any hand! 60
We had a kind of light^o what would ensue:
It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand,
The practice^o and the purpose of the king—
From whose obedience I forbid my soul,
Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life, 65
And breathing to his breathless excellence
The incense of a vow, a holy vow,
Never to taste the pleasures of the world,
Never to be infected with delight,^o
Nor conversant with ease and idleness, 70
Till I have set a glory to this hand,
By giving it the worship of revenge.^o

40 too . . . grave the bodies of royalty were not buried but placed in monuments 42 Or have you have you either 44
That that which 47 arms (1) heraldic insignia (2) power 49 walleyed glaring; rage insanity 50 remorse pity 54 times future times 56 Exemplified by in comparison with 58 graceless lacking divine sanction, damned; heavy oppressive, evil 61 light intimation (perhaps with the sarcastic connotation of "divinely inspired," following the Bastard's "damnèd" and "graceless") 63 practice plot 69 infected with delight given these circumstances, delight would be unhealthy 71-72 set . . . revenge put a halo around Arthur's hand (as opposed to Hubert's, in line 62) by showing my veneration through revenge (he will make Arthur a saint by worshiping him as one); some editors would read
"this hand" as Salisbury's own, but that causes difficulties with the religious imagery

PEMBROKE, BIGOT

Our souls religiously confirm thy words.

Enter HUBERT.

HUBERT

Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you:
Arthur doth live; the king hath sent for you.

SALISBURY

O, he is bold and blushes not at death.
Avaunt, thou hateful villain, get thee gone!

HUBERT

I am no villain.

SALISBURY [Drawing his sword.] Must I rob the law?

BASTARD

Your sword is bright, sir; put it up again.

SALISBURY

Not till I sheathe it in a murderer's skin.

HUBERT

Stand back, Lord Salisbury, stand back, I say!
By heaven, I think my sword's as sharp as yours.
I would not have you, lord, forget yourself,
Nor tempt° the danger of my true defense,
Lest I, by marking of° your rage, forget
Your worth, your greatness, and nobility.

BIGOT

Out, dunghill! dar'st thou brave° a nobleman?

HUBERT

Not for my life: but yet I dare defend
My innocent life against an emperor.

SALISBURY

Thou art a murderer.

HUBERT

Do not prove me so:°

Yet° I am none. Whose tongue soe'er speaks false,
Not truly speaks; who speaks not truly, lies.

PEMBROKE

Cut him to pieces!°

BASTARD

Keep the peace, I say.

SALISBURY

Stand by,° or I shall gall° you, Faulconbridge.

BASTARD

Thou wert better gall the devil, Salisbury.
If thou but frown on me, or stir thy foot,
Or teach thy hasty spleen° to do me shame,°
I'll strike thee dead. Put up thy sword betime,°
Or I'll so maul you and your toasting-iron
That you shall think the devil is come from hell.

BIGOT

What wilt thou do, renownèd Faulconbridge?
Second a villain and a murderer?

HUBERT

Lord Bigot, I am none.

BIGOT

Who killed this prince?

HUBERT

'Tis not an hour since I left him well:

I honored him, I loved him, and will weep
My date° of life out for his sweet life's loss.

SALISBURY

Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes,
For villainy is not without such rheum,
And he, long traded° in it, makes it seem
Like rivers of remorse and innocence.
Away with me, all you whose souls abhor
Th' uncleanly savors of a slaughterhouse,
For I am stifled with this smell of sin.

BIGOT

Away toward Bury, to the Dolphin there!

PEMBROKE

There tell the king he may inquire us out.

Exeunt LORDS.

BASTARD

Here's a good world! Knew you of this fair work?
Beyond the infinite and boundless reach
Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death,
Art thou damned, Hubert.

HUBERT

Do but hear me, sir—

85

BASTARD

Ha! I'll tell thee what:

120

Thou'rt damned as black—nay, nothing is so black—
Thou art more deep damned than Prince Lucifer:
There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell
As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child.

HUBERT

Upon my soul—

BASTARD

If thou didst but consent

125

90

To this most cruel act, do but despair,°
And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb
Will serve to strangle thee! A rush will be a beam
To hang thee on. Or wouldst thou drown thyself,
Put but a little water in a spoon
And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stifle such a villain° up.
I do suspect thee very grievously.

130

HUBERT

95

If I in act, consent, or sin of thought,
Be guilty of the stealing that sweet breath
Which was embounded in this beauteous clay,
Let hell want pains enough to torture me!
I left him well.

135

100

BASTARD

Go, bear him in thine arms.

140

I am amazed,° methinks, and lose my way
Among the thorns and dangers of this world.
How easy dost thou take all England° up!
From forth this morsel of dead royalty,
The life, the right and truth of all this realm
Is fled to heaven, and England now is left
To tug and scramble° and to part by th' teeth°
The unowed interest° of proud swelling state.

145

84 tempt test 85 marking of (1) observing (2) striking at 87 brave challenge 90 Do . . . so by forcing me to kill you 91 Yet up to now. 93 Cut . . . pieces Hubert, as a mere citizen, is not considered worthy of the dueling code; the lords' honor demands that they kill him for calling them liars, but they will not bother to kill him as a gentleman 94 by aside;
gall wound 97 spleen ill temper; do me shame treat me contemptuously (as you have Hubert) 98 betime soon, before it is too late

106 date period 109 traded practiced 126 do but despair do nothing other than commit suicide (you are damned already; it is your only choice) 133 such a villain apparently, the greater the villain, the easier suicide 140 amazed in a maze, bewildered 142 all England in calling Arthur "England," the Bastard acknowledges his right to the throne 146 scamble scramble; part . . . teeth tear apart as would a pack of dogs or wolves 147 unowed interest (1) unowned title (2) the interest (duty, obedience) not owed to any king

Now for the bare-picked bone of majesty
 Doth doggèd° war bristle his angry crest
 And snarleth in the gentle eyes of peace: 150
 Now powers from home and discontents at home
 Meet in one line,° and vast confusion waits,
 As doth a raven on a sick-fall'n beast,
 The imminent decay of wrested pomp.°
 Now happy he whose cloak and center° can 155
 Hold out this tempest. Bear away that child,
 And follow me with speed: I'll to the king.
 A thousand businesses are brief in hand,°
 And heaven itself doth frown upon the land.
Exit [both].

A C T V

Scene I. [King John's court.]

Enter KING JOHN and PANDULPH [with] ATTENDANTS.

[KING JOHN gives PANDULPH his crown.]

KING JOHN

Thus have I yielded up into your hand
 The circle of my glory.

PANDULPH [Returning him the crown.] Take again
 From this my hand, as holding of° the pope,
 Your sovereign greatness and authority.

KING JOHN

Now keep your holy word: go meet the French, 5
 And from his holiness use all your power
 To stop their marches 'fore we are enflamed.
 Our discontented counties° do revolt;
 Our people quarrel with obedience,
 Swearing allegiance and the love of soul° 10
 To stranger blood, to foreign royalty.
 This inundation of mistempered humor
 Rests by you only to be qualified.°
 Then pause not, for the present time's so sick
 That present med'cine must be ministered, 15
 Or overthrow incurable ensues.

PANDULPH

It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
 Upon° your stubborn usage of the pope,

149 doggèd cruel 151–52 powers . . . line a confusing image: it may mean either that English deserters fight face to face with English defenders who are themselves discontented, or that foreign invaders—powers away from their homes—are allied in a single army with English rebels; both senses are apt, and the complexity is an appropriate preparation for the “vast confusion” which impends 154 wrested pomp (1) the royal magnificence John usurped from Arthur (2) the position which his enemies threaten to wrest from John 155 center cincture, belt 158 brief in hand immediately demanded (“brief,” used here in some apparently unique adjectival sense, is perhaps related to the noun meaning “a royal mandate” or “a summary statement”)

V.i.3 as holding of as a leasehold from 8 counties shires; nobles (?) 10 love of soul soul's love, loyalty 12–13 This . . . qualified Only you can moderate this flooding of the body (of the state) with turbulent humor (in medieval physiology, health and disposition were considered dependent upon the balance maintained among four bodily fluids, called humors) 18 Upon as a result of

But since you are a gentle convertite,°
 My tongue shall hush again this storm of war 20
 And make fair weather in your blust'ring land.
 On this Ascension Day, remember well,
 Upon your oath of service to the pope,
 Go I to make the French lay down their arms. Exit.

KING JOHN

Is this Ascension Day? Did not the prophet 25
 Say that before Ascension Day at noon
 My crown I should give off?° Even so I have!
 I did suppose it should be on constraint,
 But, heaven be thanked, it is but voluntary.

Enter BASTARD.

BASTARD

All Kent hath yielded—nothing there holds out 30
 But Dover Castle—London hath received,
 Like a kind host, the Dolphin and his powers.
 Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone
 To offer service to your enemy;
 And wild amazement° hurries up and down 35
 The little number of your doubtful° friends.°

KING JOHN

Would not my lords return to me again
 After they heard young Arthur was alive?

BASTARD

They found him dead and cast into the streets,
 An empty casket, where the jewel of life 40
 By some damned hand was robbed and ta'en away.

KING JOHN

That villain Hubert told me he did live.

BASTARD

So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew.
 But wherefore do you droop? Why look you sad?
 Be great in act, as you have been in thought; 45
 Let not the world see fear and sad distrust°
 Govern the motion of a kingly eye;
 Be stirring° as the time; be fire with fire.
 Threaten the threat'ner, and outface° the brow
 Of bragging° horror: so shall inferior eyes, 50
 That borrow their behaviors from the great,
 Grow great by your example and put on
 The dauntless spirit of resolution.
 Away, and glister like the god of war
 When he intendeth to become° the field: 55
 Show boldness and aspiring confidence!
 What, shall they seek the lion in his den,
 And fright him there? and make him tremble there?
 O, let it not be said! Forage,° and run
 To meet displeasure farther from the doors, 60
 And grapple with him ere he come so nigh.

KING JOHN

The legate of the pope hath been with me,
 And I have made a happy° peace with him,

19 convertite convert 27 give off relinquish 35 amazement confusion, uncertainty 36 doubtful (1) fearful (2) untrustworthy 35–36 hurries . . . friends either “hurries them up and down” or “hurries among them” 46 sad distrust sorrowful lack of self-confidence 48 stirring energetic 49 outface defy, stare down 50 bragging threatening 55 become grace 59 Forage sally forth 63 happy blessed, favorable

And he hath promised to dismiss the powers
Led by the Dolphin.

BASTARD O inglorious league! 65
Shall we, upon the footing of our land,^o
Send fair-play orders^o and make compromise,
Insinuation,^o parley, and base truce
To arms invasive? Shall a beardless boy,
A cockered^o silken wanton,^o brave^o our fields 70
And flesh^o his spirit in a warlike soil,
Mocking the air with colors idly^o spread,
And find no check? Let us, my liege, to arms!
Perchance the cardinal cannot make your peace;
Or if he do, let it at least be said 75
They saw we had a purpose of defense.

KING JOHN

Have thou the ordering of this present time.

BASTARD
Away then, with good courage! Yet, I know,
Our party may well meet a prouder^o foe. Exeunt.

Scene II. [Bury Saint Edmunds. The Dauphin's camp.]

Enter, in arms, [LEWIS the] Dauphin, SALISBURY, MELUN, PEMBROKE, BIGOT, [and] SOLDIERS.

LEWIS

My Lord Meloone, let this be copied out,
And keep it safe for our remembrance;
Return the precedent^o to those lords again,
That, having our fair order^o written down,
Both they and we, perusing o'er these notes, 5
May know wherefore we took the sacrament,
And keep our faiths firm and inviolable.

SALISBURY

Upon our sides it never shall be broken.
And, noble Dolphin, albeit we swear
A voluntary zeal and an unurged faith 10
To your proceedings, yet believe me, prince,
I am not glad that such a sore of time
Should seek a plaster^o by contemned^o revolt,
And heal the inveterate canker^o of one wound
By making many. O, it grieves my soul 15
That I must draw this metal^o from my side
To be a widow-maker! O, and there
Where honorable rescue^o and defense
Cries out upon^o the name of Salisbury!
But such is the infection of the time 20
That, for the health and physic^o of our right,
We cannot deal^o but with the very hand
Of stern injustice and confusèd wrong.
And is't not pity, O my grievèd friends,

66 upon . . . land based upon our native land 67 fair-play orders challenges and injunctions following the rules of chivalry 68 Insinuation ingratiating actions 70 cockered pampered; wanton spoiled child; brave (1) defy (2) display his splendid outfit in 71 flesh initiate 72 idly (1) carelessly (2) uselessly (if they meet no defense) 79 prouder (1) more powerful (2) more splendid (a last scoff at the Dauphin) V.ii.3 precedent original (the "this" of line 1) 4 fair order reasonable terms of agreement 13 plaster medical dressing; contemned despised 14 inveterate canker persistent ulcer 16 metal (1) sword (2) mettle, courage 18 Where honorable rescue England, where (the need for) honorable rescue (or, where noblemen needing rescue) 19 Cries out upon appeal to 21 physic medical treatment 22 deal contend

That we, the sons and children of this isle, 25
Were born to see so sad an hour as this Wherein we step after a stranger, march
Upon her gentle bosom, and fill up
Her enemies' ranks—I must withdraw and weep
Upon the spot^o of this enforcèd cause— 30
To grace^o the gentry of a land remote,
And follow unacquainted colors^o here?
What, here? O nation, that thou couldst remove!^o
That Neptune's arms, who clippeth^o thee about,
Would bear^o thee from the knowledge of thyself, 35
And cripple^o thee, unto a pagan shore
Where these two Christian armies might combine
The blood of malice in a vein^o of league,
And not to spend it so unneighborly!^o

LEWIS

A noble temper dost thou show in this, 40
And great affections^o wrestling in thy bosom
Doth make an earthquake of nobility.
O, what a noble combat hast thou fought
Between compulsion and a brave respect!^o
Let me wipe off this honorable dew, 45
That silverly doth progress^o on thy cheeks:
My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
Being an ordinary inundation,
But this effusion of such manly drops,
This show'r, blown up by tempest of the soul, 50
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amazed
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heaven
Figured quite o'er with^o burning meteors.
Lift up thy brow, renownèd Salisbury,
And with a great heart heave away this storm. 55
Commend^o these waters to those baby eyes
That never saw the giant-world^o enraged,
Nor met with fortune, other than at feasts,
Full warm of blood,^o of mirth, of gossiping.
Come, come; for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deep 60
Into the purse of rich prosperity
As Lewis himself: so, nobles, shall you all,
That knit your sinews to the strength of mine.

Enter PANDULPH.

And even there, methinks, an angel^o spake.

30 Upon the spot (1) on the location (2) because of the disgrace 31 grace (1) embellish (2) be gracious to, welcome, honor 32 unacquainted colors foreign flags 33 remove go somewhere else 34 clippeth embraces 35 bear (1) carry (2) bare, strip 36 cripple disable (playing upon the sound-echo of "clippeth" in line 34) 38 vein (1) blood vessel (2) inclination 39 unneighborly meiosis, or understatement for rhetorical effect—Salisbury has created the image of a brutal rape by Neptune which would be preferable to the present "unneighborly" prospect 41 affections passions (perhaps "affection's" to make "wrestling" the subject of "Doth") 44 Between . . . respect between what you were compelled to do and a courageous (or ostentatious?) consideration (or carefulness) 46 progress make a ceremonious journey 53 Figured . . . with with a complete pattern of 56 Commend entrust, deliver to the keeping of 57 giant-world (1) the baby's world of giants (2) the large world beyond the baby's perception 59 Full . . . blood fully warmed with human feeling 64 angel various possibilities: (1) Lewis himself, punning on angel as a coin (following "purse" and "nobles" in lines 61 and 62, a noble also being a coin) and attesting his sincerity (2) Pandulph, who has just arrived with, Lewis thinks, heavenly assistance (3) a trumpet, which has just announced Pandulph's arrival

Look where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of God,
And on our actions set° the name of right
With holy breath.

PANDULPH Hail, noble prince of France!
The next is this: King John hath reconciled Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in,°
That so stood out against the holy church,
The great metropolis and see of Rome.
Therefore thy threat'ning colors now wind up,
And tame the savage spirit of wild war,
That, like a lion fostered up at hand,
It may lie gently at the foot of peace,
And be no further harmful than in show.

LEWIS
Your grace shall° pardon me, I will not back:°
I am too high-born to be propertied,°
To be a secondary at control,°
Or useful servingman and instrument
To any sovereign state throughout the world.
Your breath first kindled the dead coal of wars
Between this chastised kingdom and myself,
And brought in matter° that should feed this fire;
And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out
With that same weak wind which enkindled it!
You taught me how to know the face of right,
Acquainted me with interest° to this land,
Yea, thrust this enterprise into my heart;
And come ye now to tell me John hath made
His peace with Rome? What is that peace to me?
I, by the honor of my marriage bed,
After young Arthur, claim this land for mine,
And, now it is half-conquered, must I back
Because that John hath made his peace with Rome?
Am I Rome's slave? What penny hath Rome borne?
What men provided? what munition sent,
To underprop this action? Is't not I
That undergo this charge?° Who else but I,
And such as to my claim are liable,°
Sweat in this business and maintain this war?
Have I not heard these islanders shout out,
"Vive le roi!" as I have banked° their towns?
Have I not here the best cards for the game
To win this easy match played for a crown?
And shall I now give o'er the yielded set?°
No, no, on my soul, it never shall be said.

PANDULPH
You look but on the outside of this work.

LEWIS
Outside or inside, I will not return
Till my attempt so much be glorified
As to my ample hope was promised
Before I drew this gallant head of war,°
And culled° these fiery spirits from the world,

65 To outlook° conquest and to win renown
Even in the jaws of danger and of death.

[Trumpet sounds.]

What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?

Enter BASTARD.

70

BASTARD

According to the fair-play° of the world,
Let me have audience; I am sent to speak:
My holy Lord of Milan, from the king
I come, to learn how you have dealt for him,
And, as you answer, I do know the scope
And warrant limited unto my tongue.°

120

PANDULPH

The Dolphin is too willful-opposite,°
And will not temporize° with my entreaties:
80 He flatly says he'll not lay down his arms.

125

BASTARD

By all the blood that ever fury breathed,
The youth says well. Now hear our English king,
For thus his royalty doth speak in me:
He is prepared, and reason to he should°—
This apish and unmannerly approach,
This harnessed masque and unadvised revel,°
This unhaired° sauciness and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at, and is well prepared
90 To whip this dwarfish war, this° pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories.
That hand which had the strength, even at your door,
To cudgel you and make you take the hatch,°
To dive like buckets in concealèd wells,
95 To crouch in litter° of your stable planks,
To lie like pawns,° locked up in chests and trunks,
To hug with swine, to seek sweet safety out
In vaults and prisons, and to thrill and shake
Even at the crying of your nation's crow,°
100 Thinking this voice an armèd Englishman—Shall that victorious hand be feeble here
That in your chambers gave you chastisement?
No! Know the gallant monarch is in arms
And, like an eagle, o'er his aerie tow'rs,°
105 To souse° annoyance° that comes near his nest.
And you degenerate, you ingrate revolts,°
You bloody Neroes,° ripping up the womb
Of your dear mother England, blush for shame:
For your own ladies and pale-visaged maids,

130

135

140

145

150

110 115 outlook stare down 118 fair-play accepted rules for battle 122-23 as . . . tongue depending upon your answer, I know what I am authorized to say 124 willful-opposite obstinately quarrelsome 125 temporize make terms 130 reason . . . should there is reason also (too) that he should be prepared (?) reason to be prepared he indeed has (?) he should also debate, or give his reasons (?) 132 harnessed . . . revel masque performed in armor and misguided entertainment 133 unhaired beardless 135 this these 138 take the hatch jump over the bottom of a half-door without pausing to open it (cf. I.i.171) 140 litter bedding 141 pawns articles pawned 144 crow cock (the Frenchmen were frightened, so the Bastard claims, by the crowing of the very Gallic cock which symbolizes France) 149 tow'rs (hawking term) mounts up, soars 150 souse (1) dive, swoop down on (2) beat severely; annoyance any threat 151 ingrate revolts ungrateful rebels 152 Neroes among his other crimes, Nero, the Roman emperor, was said not only to have murdered his mother but to have torn open her womb

67 set place, as an official seal 70 is come in has submitted 78 shall must; back go back 79 propertied treated as a property, made a means to some other end 80 secondary at control subordinate under the control of another 85 matter (1) fuel (2) arguments 89 interest title 100 charge burden, expense 101 liable subject 104 banked coasted past (?) built military embankments around (?) (with Vive le roi this is also part of the card-playing metaphor) 107 set contest 113 drew . . . war assembled this gallant army 114 culled selected

Like Amazons, come tripping after drums,
Their thimbles into armèd gauntlets change,
Their needles° to lances, and their gentle hearts
To fierce and bloody inclination.

LEWIS

There end thy brave,° and turn thy face in peace.
We grant thou canst outscold us: fare thee well;
We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a brabblers°.

PANDULPH

Give me leave to speak.

BASTARD

No, I will speak.

LEWIS

We will attend to neither.

Strike up the drums, and let the tongue of war
Plead for our interest and our being here.

BASTARD

Indeed, your drums, being beaten, will cry out;
And so shall you, being beaten: do but start
An echo with the clamor of thy drum,
And, even at hand, a drum is ready braced°
That shall reverberate° all, as loud as thine.
Sound but another, and another shall,
As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear
And mock the deep-mouthed thunder: for at hand—
Not trusting to this halting° legate here,
Whom he hath used rather for sport than need—
Is warlike John; and in his forehead sits
A bare-ribbed Death, whose office is this day
To feast upon whole thousands of the French.

LEWIS

Strike up our drums to find this danger out.

BASTARD

And thou shalt find it, Dolphin, do not doubt.

*Exeunt.*Scene III. [A battlefield.]Alarums. Enter [KING] JOHN and HUBERT.

KING JOHN

How goes the day with us? O, tell me, Hubert.

HUBERT

Badly, I fear. How fares your majesty?

KING JOHN

This fever, that hath troubled me so long,
Lies heavy on me: O, my heart is sick!

Enter a MESSENGER.

MESSENGER

My lord, your valiant kinsman, Faulconbridge,
Desires your majesty to leave the field
And send him word by me which way you go.

KING JOHN

Tell him, toward Swinstead,° to the abbey there.

MESSENGER

Be of good comfort, for the great supply°
That was expected by the Dolphin here,

155

Are wracked three nights ago on Goodwin sands.°
This news was brought to Richard but even now:
The French fight coldly and retire themselves.

KING JOHN

Ay me! this tyrant fever burns me up,
And will not let me welcome this good news.

15

160

Set on toward Swinstead; to my litter straight:
Weakness possesseth me, and I am faint.

*Exeunt.*Scene IV. [Elsewhere on the field.]Enter SALISBURY, PEMBROKE, and BIGOT.

SALISBURY

165

I did not think the king so stored with friends.

PEMBROKE

Up once again: put spirit in the French;
If they miscarry, we miscarry too.

SALISBURY

170

That misbegotten devil, Faulconbridge,
In spite of spite,° alone upholds the day.

5

PEMBROKE

They say King John, sore sick, hath left the field.

Enter MELUN wounded.

175

MELUN

Lead me to the revolts of England here.

SALISBURY

When we were happy, we had other names.

PEMBROKE

It is the Count Meloone.

SALISBURY

Wounded to death.

180

MELUN

Fly, noble English, you are bought and sold;°
Unthread the rude eye of rebellion,°
And welcome home again discarded° faith.
Seek out King John and fall before his feet:
For if the French be lords of this loud day,
He° means to recompense the pains you take
By cutting off your heads! Thus hath he sworn,
And I with him, and many moe° with me,
Upon the altar at Saint Edmundsbury,
Even on that altar where we swore to you
Dear amity and everlasting love.

10

15

20

SALISBURY

May this be possible? May this be true?

MELUN

Have I not hideous death within my view,
Retaining but a quantity° of life,
Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax°
Resolveth from his figure° 'gainst the fire?
What in the world should make me now deceive,
Since I must lose the use° of all deceit?
Why should I then be false, since it is true

25

10

11 Goodwin sands shoals in the Straits of Dover
V.iv.5 In spite of spite despite any opposition 10 bought and sold duped 11 Unthread . . . rebellion rebellion as a needle into which they have threaded themselves 12 dis- carded (1) cast off (2) badly carded (their faith as ill-made thread) 15 He Lewis 17 moe more 23 quantity fragment 24 form of wax wax image (such, perhaps, as might be used by a witch to represent her victim) 25 Resolveth . . .
figure relaxes its form, melts 27 use advantage

157 needles monosyllabic, pronounced "neels" 159 brave bravado, defiant boasting 162 brabblers brawler 169 braced stretched taut (the drumhead) 170 reverberate drive back (both the army and the echo) 174 halting imperfect, shifting
V.iii.8 Swinstead a mistake, historically, for Swineshead Abbey in Lincolnshire 9 supply of men

That I must die here, and live hence, by Truth?^o
 I say again, if Lewis do win the day,
 He is forsworn^o if e'er those eyes of yours
 Behold another day break in the east:
 But even this night, whose black contagious breath
 Already smokes^o about the burning crest
 Of the old, feeble, and day-wearied sun,
 Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire,
 Paying the fine^o of rated^o treachery
 Even with a treacherous fine of all your lives,
 If Lewis by your assistance win the day.
 Commend me to one Hubert, with your king:
 The love of him, and this respect^o besides,
 For that^o my grandsire was an Englishman,
 Awakes my conscience to confess all this.
 In lieu whereof,^o I pray you bear me hence
 From forth the noise and rumor^o of the field,
 Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts
 In peace, and part this body and my soul
 With contemplation and devout desires.

SALISBURY

We do believe thee, and beshrew^o my soul
 But I do^o love the favor and the form^o
 Of this most fair occasion, by the which
 We will untread^o the steps of damnèd flight,
 And like a bated^o and retirèd flood,
 Leaving our rankness^o and irregular course,
 Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlooked,^o 55
 And calmly run on in obedience
 Even to our ocean, to our great King John.
 My arm shall give thee help to bear thee hence,
 For I do see the cruel pangs of death
 Right^o in thine eye. Away, my friends! New flight, 60
 And happy newness,^o that intends old right.
Exeunt [assisting MELUN].

Scene V. [The Dauphin's camp.]Enter [LEWIS the] Dauphin, and his TRAIN.

LEWIS

The sun of heaven methought was loath to set,
 But stayed and made the western welkin blush,
 When English measured backward their own ground
 In faint retire!^o O, bravely came we off,^o
 When with a volley of our needless shot, 5
 After such bloody toil, we bid good night
 And wound our tott'ring colors clearly up,^o

29 die . . . Truth only if he dies undissembling and serving God can he hope for eternal life in heaven 31 is forsworn will be perjured 34 smokes spreads like smoke 37 fine penalty (but in the next line "fine" = end); rated (1) evaluated (2) chided 41 respect consideration 42 For that because 44 lieu whereof exchange for which 45 rumor tumult 49 beshrew a curse upon 50 But I do if I do not; favor . . . form appearance 52 untread retrace 53 bated subsided 54 rankness (1) excessive size (2) impetuous violence (3) offensive odor 55 Stoop . . . o'erlooked (1) contract within those banks we have overflowed (2) kneel to accept those obligations we have disregarded 60 Right clearly 61 happy newness appropriate and favorable change

V.v.4 faint retire cowardly retreat; bravely . . . off (1) fearlessly and (2) worthily we left the field 7 wound . . . up rolled up our (1) tattered (2) flapping banners without interference

Last in the field, and almost lords of it!

Enter a MESSENGER.

MESSENGER

Where is my prince, the Dolphin?

LEWIS

Here. What news?

MESSENGER

The Count Meloone is slain; the English lords
 By his persuasion are again fall'n off, 10
 And your supply, which you have wished so long,
 Are cast away and sunk on Goodwin sands.

LEWIS

Ah, foul, shrewd^o news! Beshrew thy very heart!
 I did not think to be so sad tonight 15
 As this hath made me. Who was he that said
 King John did fly an hour or two before
 The stumbling^o night did part our weary pow'rs?

MESSENGER

Whoever spoke it, it is true, my lord.

LEWIS

Well!^o keep good quarter and good care tonight: 20
 The day shall not be up so soon as I
 To try the fair adventure of tomorrow. Exeunt.

Scene VI. [Near Swinstead.]Enter BASTARD and HUBERT, severally.^o

HUBERT

Who's there? Speak, ho! speak quickly, or I shoot.

BASTARD

A friend. What art thou?

HUBERT

Of the part^o of England.

BASTARD

Whither dost thou go?

HUBERT

What's that to thee? Why may not I demand
 Of thine affairs as well as thou of mine? 5

BASTARD

Hubert, I think?

HUBERT

Thou hast a perfect^o thought.
 I will upon all hazards well believe
 Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well.
 Who art thou?^o

BASTARD

Who thou wilt: and if thou please, 10
 Thou mayst befriend me so much as to think
 I come one way of the Plantagenets.

HUBERT

Unkind remembrance!^o thou and endless night
 Have done me shame.^o Brave soldier, pardon me,
 That any accent breaking from thy tongue
 Should scape the true acquaintance of mine ear. 15

BASTARD

Come, come! sans compliment,^o what news abroad?

14 shrewd grievous, cursed 18 stumbling stumbling-causing 20 Well Good!

V.vi.s.d. severally from opposite sides 2 Of the part on the side 6 perfect correct 9 Who art thou given John's weakness and Arthur's death, this is now a key question 12 remembrance (1) reminder (2) memory 12-13 thou . . . shame the Bastard, by recognizing Hubert's voice though Hubert did not recognize his; the night, by concealing his features 16 sans compliment without courtly flattery

HUBERT

Why, here walk I, in the black brow^o of night,
To find you out.

BASTARD Brief, then; and what's the news?

HUBERT

O, my sweet sir, news fitting to the night,
Black, fearful, comfortless, and horrible. 20

BASTARD

Show me the very wound of this ill news:
I am no woman; I'll not swoond^o at it.

HUBERT

The king, I fear, is poisoned by a monk:
I left him almost speechless, and broke out^o
To acquaint you with this evil, that you might 25
The better arm you to the sudden time^o
Than if you had at leisure^o known of this.

BASTARD

How did he take it? Who did taste to^o him?

HUBERT

A monk, I tell you, a resolvèd^o villain
Whose bowels suddenly burst out.^o The king 30
Yet speaks, and peradventure^o may recover.

BASTARD

Who didst thou leave to tend his majesty?

HUBERT

Why, know you not? The lords are all come back,
And brought Prince Henry^o in their company,
At whose request the king hath pardoned them, 35
And they are all about his majesty.

BASTARD

Withhold thine indignation, mighty God,
And tempt us not to bear above our power!^o
I'll tell thee, Hubert, half my power^o this night,
Passing these flats,^o are taken by the tide; 40
These Lincoln Washes have devourèd them;
Myself, well mounted, hardly have escaped.
Away before! Conduct me to the king;
I doubt^o he will be dead or ere^o I come. Exeunt.

Scene VII. [An orchard at Swinstead Abbey.]

Enter PRINCE HENRY, SALISBURY, and BIGOT.

PRINCE HENRY

It is too late: the life of all his blood
Is touched corruptibly,^o and his pure^o brain,
Which some suppose the soul's frail dwelling house,
Doth, by the idle^o comments that it makes,

17 in . . . brow under the threatening countenance 22 swoond faint 24 broke out left abruptly 26 arm . . .
time prepare yourself (both psychologically and materially) for the crisis 27 at leisure without haste 28 taste to act as taster for (the taster sampled each dish to detect possible poison) 29 resolvèd resolute (he poisoned himself, by tasting, in order to poison the king) 30 Whose . . . out
cf. the death of Judas (Acts 1:18) 31 peradventure perhaps 34 Prince Henry John's son (this is the first mention of him in the play) 38 tempt . . . power (1) do not tempt us to undertake more than we can accomplish (2) do not test us by imposing more suffering than we can endure 39 power army 40 these flats the tidal flats at the mouth of the River Welland in
The Wash, a large inlet between Lincolnshire and Norfolk
44 doubt fear; or ere before
V.vii.2 touched corruptibly infected to the point of decomposition; pure lucid 4 idle irrational

Foretell the ending of mortality. 5

Enter PEMBROKE.

PEMBROKE

His highness yet doth speak, and holds belief
That, being brought into the open air,
It would allay the burning quality
Of that fell^o poison which assaileth him.

PRINCE HENRY

Let him be brought into the orchard here. 10
Doth he still rage?^o

PEMBROKE

He is more patient
Than when you left him; even now he sung.
[Exit PEMBROKE.]

PRINCE HENRY

O, vanity of sickness! fierce extremes
In their continuance will not feel themselves.^o
Death, having preyed upon the outward parts, 15
Leaves them invisible,^o and his siege is now
Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds
With many legions of strange fantasies,
Which, in their throng and press to that last hold,^o
Confound themselves.^o 'Tis strange that death should 20
sing!
I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,
Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death,^o
And from the organ-pipe of frailty sings
His soul and body to their lasting rest. 35

SALISBURY

Be of good comfort, prince, for you are born 25
To set a form upon that indigest^o
Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.

[KING] JOHN brought in.

KING JOHN

Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbowroom,
It would not out at windows, nor at doors;^o
There is so hot a summer in my bosom 30
That all my bowels crumble up to dust!
I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen
Upon a parchment, and against this fire
Do I shrink up.

PRINCE HENRY How fares your majesty?

KING JOHN

Poisoned—ill fare!^o dead, forsook, cast off, 35
And none of you will bid the winter come
To thrust his icy fingers in my maw,
Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course
Through my burned bosom, nor entreat the north
To make his bleak winds kiss my parchèd lips 40
And comfort me with cold. I do not ask you much—

9 fell cruel 11 rage rave 13-14 fierce . . . themselves as the sufferings of a dying man continue he loses awareness of them 16 invisible modifies "Death" but suggests also, as modifying "outward parts," John's present disregard of his pains 19 hold stronghold 20 Confound themselves defeat or destroy one another (the fantasies seeking to capture John's mind so get in each other's way that no one of them succeeds) 22 Who . . . death the swan was fabled to sing only as it died 26 indigest shapeless confusion 28-29 now
. . . doors either now my soul has room to escape me, which it did not have inside the abbey, or now that my soul has room, it still refuses to leave my body 35 ill fare (1) ill fortune (2) bad food

I beg cold comfort—and you are so strait,^o
And so ingrateful, you deny me that.

PRINCE HENRY

O, that there were some virtue^o in my tears
That might relieve you!

KING JOHN The salt in them is hot. 45

Within me is a hell, and there the poison
Is as a fiend confined to tyrannize
On unreprieveable condemnèd blood.

Enter BASTARD.

BASTARD

O, I am scalded^o with my violent motion
And spleen^o of speed to see your majesty! 50

KING JOHN

O cousin, thou art come to set mine eye!^o
The tackle of my heart is cracked and burnt,
And all the shrouds^o wherewith my life should sail
Are turnèd to one thread, one little hair:
My heart hath one poor string to stay it by, 55
Which holds but till thy news be utterèd,
And then all this thou see'st is but a clod
And module^o of confounded^o royalty.

BASTARD

The Dolphin is preparing hitherward,
Where God He knows^o how we shall answer him, 60
For in a night the best part of my pow'r,
As I upon advantage did remove,^o
Were in the Washes all unwarily^o
Devourèd by the unexpected flood. [The KING dies.]

SALISBURY

You breathe these dead news^o in as dead an ear. 65
My liege! my lord!—but now a king, now thus!

PRINCE HENRY

Even so must I run on, and even so stop.
What surety^o of the world, what hope, what stay,^o
When this was now a king, and now is clay?

BASTARD

Art thou gone so? I do but stay behind 70
To do the office for thee of revenge,
And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven,
As it on earth hath been thy servant still.^o
Now, now, you stars that move in your right spheres,^o
Where be your pow'rs?^o Show now your mended faiths, 75
And instantly return with me again,
To push destruction and perpetual shame

Out of the weak door of our fainting land:
Straight^o let us seek, or straight we shall be sought.
The Dolphin rages at our very heels. 80

SALISBURY

It seems you know not, then, so much as we:
The Cardinal Pandulph is within at rest,
Who half an hour since came from the Dolphin
And brings from him such offers of our peace 85
As we with honor and respect may take,
With purpose presently to leave this war.

BASTARD

He will the rather do it when he sees Ourselves well sinewèd to our defense.

SALISBURY

Nay, 'tis in a manner done already,
For many carriages^o he hath dispatched 90
To the seaside, and put his cause and quarrel
To the disposing of the cardinal,
With whom yourself, myself, and other lords,
If you think meet, this afternoon will post^o
To consummate this business happily. 95

BASTARD

Let it be so; and you, my noble prince,
With other princes that may best be spared,
Shall wait upon^o your father's funeral.

PRINCE HENRY

At Worcester must his body be interred,
For so he willed it.

BASTARD

Thither shall it then. 100
And happily^o may your sweet self put on
The lineal state^o and glory of the land!
To whom, with all submission, on my knee,
I do bequeath my faithful services
And true subjection everlastingly. 105

SALISBURY

And the like tender^o of our love we make,
To rest without a spot^o for evermore.

PRINCE HENRY

I have a kind soul that would give thanks,
And knows not how to do it but with tears.

BASTARD

O, let us pay the time but needful woe, 110
Since it hath been beforehand with our griefs.^o
This England never did, nor never shall,
Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror
But when it first did help to wound itself.
Now these her princes are come home again, 115
Come the three corners^o of the world in arms,
And we shall shock them!^o Naught shall make us rue
If England to itself do rest but true! Exeunt.

42 strait narrow, severe, stingy 44 virtue healing power
49 scalded overheated, covered with hot liquid (perspiration)
50 spleen impetuous violence, eagerness 51 set mine eye close my eyes after I die 53 shrouds (1) ropes holding a mast in place; with a contextually, but not syntactically, appropriate reminder of (2) winding sheets 58 module
image; confounded defeated, destroyed 60 God He knows
God only knows 62 upon . . . remove seizing the chance changed my location 63 unwarily without warning 65 dead news (1) deadly news (2) news of death 68 surety guarantee, certainty; stay (1) support (2) continuance 73 still constantly 74 stars . . . spheres noblemen who have returned to your proper positions 75 pow'rs (1) armed troops (2) astral influences

79 Straight immediately 90 carriages wagons 94 post hasten 98 wait upon escort ceremonially 101 happily fittingly 102 lineal state directly inherited rank (as king), or the crown, etc., denoting that rank 106 tender offer 107 spot stain (of disloyalty) 110–11 let . . . griefs let us weep no more than necessary since time has anticipated our griefs (providing compensation: the French abandonment of the invasion offsetting the English losses; Henry replacing John) 116 the three corners presumably England is the fourth 117 shock them (1) meet them in battle (2) throw them into confusion (3) tie them in bundles like sheaves (?)

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE

EDITED BY KENNETH MYRICK

Introduction

The Merchant of Venice is the earliest of three superb comedies in which Shakespeare has set a generous and clear-sighted woman in sharp contrast to a no less unusual, but markedly unsocial man. From beginning to end, Portia and Shylock—like Rosalind and Jaques in As You Like It and Viola and Malvolio in Twelfth Night—remain poles apart. It is significant that Portia in her greatest scene, and the two other heroines in nearly all of their scenes, are disguised as men. Only the audience and one confidante share their secret. Knowing it, the spectators naturally tend to center their interest in them and to view the play through their eyes. Portia, Rosalind, and Viola tend to overshadow their lovers, not because, as is often asserted, the men are not worthy of them, but because of their fascinating double roles.

Their respective opponents—Shylock, Jaques, and Malvolio—are all vivid, but strange and isolated figures. None is an actual villain, but each has been accurately called an antihero.

On the Elizabethan stage, it was probably easier for Portia to take the leading role than it is in the modern theater. In Shakespeare's company there was a better balance than in modern times, when the star actor tends to overshadow all the others. The lady's handicap is especially formidable when the star is, like Sir Henry Irving, both the manager of the theater and even the director of the troupe. Ellen Terry was at her best, she said, when she played against Irving, but she could not be the central figure of the play that Portia is meant to be. At times in the nineteenth century, Shylock so overshadowed everyone else that the beautiful final act was omitted entirely.

It is pretty clear today that when Jaques or Malvolio is allowed to usurp the leading role, the entire play is thrown out of balance. In The Merchant of Venice the problem is complicated by other factors. The late E. E. Stoll, in a justly famous essay, argued that Shylock was always an unsympathetic figure to the Elizabethans because he is a miser, a usurer, and a Jew. The attitude of the civilized world has changed toward all three. We have hardly ever known a miser. The usurer seems only a man who lends money at interest. And prejudice against Jews is hateful to all fair-minded people. How then can any decent person appreciate this comedy in the spirit in which Stoll thought it was written? How valid is his view?

The strength of Stoll's interpretation lies in his strong common sense, massive erudition, and insights into dramatic method. He stressed the great importance of the common beliefs, prejudices, and superstitions that distinguish Shakespeare's time from our own era. He emphasized the significance of our vivid first impressions, of the contrasts of character with character and plot with subplot, and the necessity of approaching a play as a play and not as a book. He saw that as readers we tend to respond as individuals, but as spectators we tend to catch the contagion of the crowd and respond like everyone else. With all his gifts as an interpreter of Shakespeare, however, Stoll appears sometimes to have been strangely insensitive to the humanizing ideals of Shakespeare's age and the poetic atmosphere of his plays.

"The Merchant of Venice is a fairy tale," declared that wise man of the theater, Harley Granville-Barker. We may think he made too much of this point, but he reminded us forcibly that the play is set in the realm of high romance. We cannot understand it in terms of modern realism. Strange and wonderful are the stories of the caskets, the pound of flesh, and the beautiful girl disguised as a wise young judge—not to mention the miser's daughter who blossoms into a delightful and virtuous lady, filled with the joy of life. We begin to sense this poetic atmosphere in the very first scene.

ACT I

Antonio and Bassanio. Antonio is not in the least the stodgy, smug, intolerant businessman that he is often supposed to be. A great merchant prince of the fabulous city of Venice, he sends out his splendid ships as far as Mexico and the Indies and shares his wealth with the needy and oppressed. In his quiet way, he—like Bassanio and Portia, Lorenzo and Jessica—is a figure of romance. His friends see poetry in his commercial ventures:

Your argosies with portly sail—
 Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,
 Or as it were the pageants of the sea—
 Do overpeer the petty traffickers
 That cursy to them, do them reverence,
 As they fly by them with their woven wings. (I.i.9-14)

His friends see also a great and ever-present danger. The modern merchant is often depicted as a type enjoying comfortable security. Salerio and Solanio, like people today when they think of the astronauts, are fascinated and appalled by the risks that Antonio takes. Yet he faces these constant dangers with a quiet mind. Shakespeare, like the medieval poets, could find romance in the old themes of love and battle; but with a poet's insight into men and affairs, he discovered it also in the merchant-adventurer's commerce, in which, as in knightly times, danger went hand in hand with beauty and high achievement.

Antonio is admired and beloved for his good deeds. Yet the poet has wisely given him a relatively passive role. If we felt his emotions too keenly, the scene of his trial would be too painful for comedy. His "sadness" contributes to this passiveness. One guess about the cause of his melancholy is that he fears Bassanio's approaching marriage will separate him from his friend. Another is that he is just in a strange mood. Antonio, however, is too generous to regret his friend's happy marriage, and the emphasis given to his mood suggests an important meaning.

We can find it in one of the common ideas of the Elizabethan age, the belief in presentiments. Shakespeare uses it in many plays to foreshadow future events, especially dangers and misfortunes. It is somewhat analogous to the faith in extrasensory perception, which (though not shared by the present editor) is held by some of our very intelligent contemporaries. A striking parallel to Antonio's sadness is in Richard II, which was probably written just before The Merchant of Venice. In one scene Queen Isabel's attendants are troubled about her sadness, a much more violent melancholy than Antonio's. Suddenly, after only a few moments, she hears the shocking news of Bolingbroke's rebellion, which is to bring about the dethronement and murder of her husband. She instantly recognizes the meaning of her presentiment.

Antonio's unaccountable sadness is a less violent experience than Queen Isabel's, apparently because the danger is more remote and because in the end he escapes it. But in kind, though not in degree, the two presentiments are alike.

Few moderns have such faith in extrasensory perception as many intelligent Elizabethans had in presentiments. Therefore, we go astray if we invent rationalistic explanations for Antonio's sadness which neither the poet nor his audience had in mind—just as we do when we explain Banquo's ghost, or King Hamlet's, as a figment of the imagination. These are cases that require the "willing suspension of disbelief."

Antonio's presentiment has an important dramatic function. It suggests to the audience some great danger of which he and his friends are totally unconscious. Thus it creates dramatic irony, quickens suspense, and awakens a warm concern for this modest and generous merchant prince, who is so much admired and beloved. In his next scene it also heightens our concern for him when he readily agrees to Shylock's apparently jovial suggestion that Antonio forfeit a pound of flesh if the three thousand ducats are not paid back on time.

Bassanio has sometimes been misunderstood even more seriously than Antonio—as a contemptible man of fashion who puts his friend's life in danger so that he can gamble on winning an heiress. His best qualities, as Professor Bernard Grebanier has remarked, have become increasingly rare in the last century and a half. He speaks with "an elegance which is innate and unconscious. . . . The miraculous thing is that . . . this patrician quality of the mind is united . . . with a manliness, an unaggressive virility of a kind to which the twentieth century is becoming totally a stranger." His first words about Portia—"In Belmont is a lady richly left" (I.i.161)—do not mean that he wants to marry her for money, but that "there is good reason to promise the return of the loan" he is asking of his friend. His eloquent words about Portia herself assure us that his love for her is genuine.

As the play develops, we find Bassanio's friend, Gratiano, asking to go with him to Belmont. A loud extrovert, Gratiano "speaks an infinite deal of nothing," and is the last person Bassanio would choose to accompany him on a delicate mission. But with a few very frank words of caution, he generously accedes to his friend's surprising request, without the slightest trace of irritation. At Belmont we see Bassanio not only as a delightful gentleman, but as a man of thought and insight as he meditates on which casket to choose. When he has won Portia, we like him for his overwhelming joy, his modesty, and his entire devotion to her.

The world of Bassanio and Antonio is not ours. Its values are chiefly those of a governing class—courage, justice, a high sense of honor, courtesy, learning, a love of beauty, compassion, and humility. Lord Bassanio has the highest rank of anyone in the play except the Duke, yet he never shows even a trace of arrogance. Like Sir Philip Sidney, the most admired and beloved young Englishman of Shakespeare's time, Bassanio has lived beyond his means because of the position he occupies. For him, as for Sidney and Castiglione, life is at once an earnest task, an adventure, and a fine art. To Sidney, Shakespeare, and their contemporaries, the marriage of so fine a nobleman as Bassanio with a virtuous, gifted, humanely educated, and wholly delightful lady of wealth would be altogether fitting.

Portia. As for Portia, even most of Shylock's warmest partisans commonly find her irresistible in her early scenes, however they may dislike her way of defeating him in the court scene. Some, of course, grumble at her deft satire of her egregious parcel of wooers, and one critic can declare solemnly, "Portia herself, for some reason, is the least lovable of Shakespeare's comedy heroines." Harley Granville-Barker, who saw nearly all the characters with remarkable clarity, observed that the poet reveals Portia's character "to us mainly in little things, and lets us feel its whole happy virtue in the melody of her speech." Granville-Barker also points out that, hedged about as she is by her father's will in the early scenes, there is very little for her to do. However this may be, the strangeness of her situation captures our attention, and the naturalness of her thoughts and feelings leads us to identify ourselves at once with her cause and to sense the irony of her situation. Although her father did not trust her to choose a husband for herself, yet, as her shrewd comments on her suitors reveal, few women ever had a keener insight into men's characters than she. Nevertheless, she does not really rebel against her father's will, and when she learns it has driven away six unwelcome suitors, she is amazed and delighted at the old man's foresight. Her filial piety meant more to the Elizabethans than to us, but her quick feelings, her sense of responsibility, her wit and keen perception of the ridiculous belong to every age and make her one of the most magnetic of heroines.

Shylock and Antonio.

SHYLOCK Three thousand ducats—well.

BASSANIO Ay, sir, for three months.

SHYLOCK For three months—well. (I.iii.1-3)

Shylock comes before us abruptly, with no previous hint that he exists. Antonio and Portia, in their first speeches, confide their thoughts and feelings to their friends. Bassanio, alone with Antonio, pours out his heart. But Shylock, from the first words he utters, is a strangely isolated figure, secretive and calculating. We begin to discover his real thoughts only when he utters them aside as Antonio enters. The hatred that he expresses so vehemently and his efforts later in the scene to appear as Antonio's cordial friend are in glaring contradiction.

Defenders of Shylock often argue that at first his offer of friendship is sincere, and that he never meant the forfeit of a pound of Antonio's flesh as anything but "a merry jest," until Jessica deserted him to elope with one of Antonio's Christian friends. This interpretation ignores the basic principle that every essential point must be clear to the simplest groundling. When a character in Shakespeare speaks aside to the audience, he always speaks his real thoughts. When Shylock says, as Antonio enters,

If I can catch him once upon the hip,

I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him (I.iii.43-44)

we have no choice but to believe him.

E. E. Stoll's famous, though one-sided, interpretation of Shylock is indispensable for an understanding of Shylock's real character. Stoll demonstrates that the issue between the Jewish money lender and the Christian merchant is not simply the taking of interest. It is the usurer's merciless exploitation of his victims. He is no mere "banker," as H. B. Charlton called him, but a crafty and ruthless loan shark. The Tudor laws against usury stated an ideal and then compromised with the practical facts of trade. They outlawed any interest on any loan but imposed no penalty if the rate did not exceed ten percent (nearly twice the rate commonly charged today for a mortgage loan). The typical usurer, however, found devious ways of exacting far more than the law allowed. His special victims were the inexperienced and the very needy—widows and orphans, and young gentlemen not yet possessed of their inheritance. For an original loan of a hundred pounds, the clever usurer might gain in a few years real estate worth five hundred or a thousand pounds, bringing his wretched debtor to beggary or death. The Elizabethan hatred of usury was sanctioned by Aristotle's theory that money cannot breed money; but far more important were the enormous interest rates and fraudulent contracts of clever scoundrels. Recognizing Shylock as a usurer, the Elizabethans must have been hostile to him, especially when they saw him plotting against Antonio's life.

Why does he hate this generous merchant? Antonio has denounced Shylock in public. He has loaned money to the usurer's victims, has charged them no interest at all and thus enabled many of them to escape total ruin. Although he has never till now either charged interest on a loan, or paid it, Antonio is ready to "break a custom" rather than have his best friend risk losing Portia. For this, many critics, supposing the issue to involve one of Antonio's absolute principles, charge him with hypocrisy. But Antonio, as a man of affairs, is less interested in theory than in results. The charge would be valid only if he were exacting interest from a debtor. To rescue the usurer's victims, he has loaned them money at no interest. To enable Bassanio to win Portia, he will himself pay interest on a loan, rather than let his best friend lose his dearest hopes. In each case his concern is to bring generous aid to those in need.

While discussing the loan with Antonio, Shylock suddenly digresses and pours out one of his most eloquent and moving speeches. In the Rialto, he declares, in full view of crowds of merchants, Antonio has publicly disgraced him. He has called him dog, kicked him, and spat upon him. Some very intelligent readers have refused to believe these charges, but Antonio himself confirms them.

I am as like to call thee so again,

To spet on thee again, to spurn thee too. (I.iii.127-28)

It is a strange and shameful fact that for many centuries Christians held it to be proper to spit in a Jew's face on certain occasions. The idea goes back to the Crucifixion, when the Jews mocked Christ and spat upon him. Similarly, the horrible idea that the Jews had become a race accursed by God arose from their refusal to accept Jesus as the Messiah. In spite of these bitter prejudices, however, it is hard to believe that Shakespeare approved Antonio's way of publicly denouncing the usurer. The words he gives Shylock seem designed to show us how it feels to be an outcast in a Christian society.

It is hard to know the exact meaning of a gesture common four centuries ago. Just what did it mean in the social context of Elizabethan England? The great queen herself once "spat upon a courtier's cloak that displeased her." The act of thumbing the nose was originally an obscene insult, but we have seen friends use it as a bit of light teasing.

As a compassionate man, outraged by the usurer's inhumanity to his victims, Antonio is capable of hot indignation, as we see in his answer to Shylock's charge. Today he might expose a dangerous public enemy in a newspaper or television interview, or by presenting the facts to the prosecuting attorney. In Shakespeare's Venice, where the practice of usury seems to have been as inhuman as anywhere else, Antonio takes the kind of direct action that decent Americans sometimes took against an unscrupulous man in pioneer days on the frontier. Antonio deliberately insults the usurer, literally kicks him out of his place of business, does all he can to turn public opinion against him, and spends his own money to rescue Shylock's victims. Christ himself, though he preached the gospel of love, denounced the oppressors and hypocrites in public and whipped the money changers out of the temple. Antonio's just indignation is natural and understandable, and so is Shylock's bitter resentment. We begin to see Shylock as his own worst enemy, poisoned by greed and hate.

ACTS II AND III

From the harsh but strangely compelling figure of the antihero, we turn immediately to Portia. In her scenes with Morocco and Aragon, she is a marvel of self-control and courtesy, although some of her speeches to them are edged with an irony that they never catch. Her whole future happiness is at stake, for neither Morocco nor Aragon can appreciate the best qualities of a Renaissance lady. Morocco is a warmhearted man of honor and courage, who has the grace to think he may not deserve her. But there is something naive, almost barbaric, in his desire that his fate be decided by having his rivals and himself cut their flesh to see whose blood is reddest. His mind is very simple; hers is highly endowed by nature and has acquired the best culture of a remarkable age and country. We wish Morocco well, but he is no mate for Portia. As for Aragon, he has the presumptuous pride that the Elizabethans disliked in the Spaniards. He has also the naiveté to suppose that a man could actually deserve such a woman as Portia, and that he is that man. Most of Shakespeare's genuine lovers are, like Portia and Bassanio, humbled by their love.

One key to the meaning of a Shakespeare play is the way he directs our sympathies. In many of his masterpieces there is one person, or more, through whose eyes we are particularly invited to see the other characters and the events. In Henry IV it is chiefly Prince Hal, in Hamlet it is Horatio and Hamlet, in Twelfth Night it is Viola. Who is it in The Merchant of Venice?

In the opening scene, in which Antonio is the center of attention but at first does little, we see him as four of his friends do. In Shylock's first scene, many modern readers see him as he sees himself, but those who realize what a usurer actually was will look at him as Bassanio and Antonio do. Stoll, in a long analysis, argued that whenever we begin to sympathize with Shylock, his greed and hatred are emphasized. He accuses Antonio of disgracing him and then plots to kill him. He speaks of Launcelot as a kind patch, but adds that he is "a huge feeder." He speaks kindly to his daughter as "Jessica, my girl," and instantly remembers his dream of moneybags. In one of his greatest scenes, he pours out a passionate defense of the Jewish people and a challenge to Christians to practice the mercy and humility that they profess; but he ends the speech on the note of revenge, arranging with Tubal to meet him at the synagogue to plan the legalized murder of a generous Christian merchant.

Stoll makes an important point. But we can turn it around and show, on his own evidence, that in each of Shylock's scenes, except the briefest, he wins the sympathy of the audience for at least a few moments. When do we ever see the least touch of kindly feeling in Iago or Goneril?

Shylock differs, too, from other Shakespearean villains—from Angelo in Measure for Measure, with whom he is often compared, and from Hamlet's uncle, King Claudius—in that these men are entirely conscious of their villainy. At the trial, Shylock can ask, apparently in all sincerity, "What judgment shall I dread, doing no wrong?" The unique thing about Shylock is this strange sincerity. He can nurse the most diabolical passions and imagine he does no wrong.

Doubtless the Elizabethans laughed with Solanio and Salerio when they baited Shylock, for as Stoll has emphasized, a general audience in the theater will respond to the mood of the characters on stage. Yet we must never suppose that these two friends of Antonio express more than a very small part of Shakespeare's attitude toward the Jew. These characters can scarcely be distinguished from one another, and we do not go to such people to find Shakespeare's whole meaning. Their function is chiefly to release the feelings of the audience or to tell us news. In the court scene, the jeers and imprecations of Gratiano provide a similar release. But "Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice." The shallow comments of this excited extrovert contrast with the wisdom of Portia and the considered judgment of Antonio.

Throughout the play, Shakespeare has invited us to look at the other characters and the action through Portia's eyes, and to share her sympathies. One way he does this is in the skillful arrangement of contrasting scenes. He places Shylock's first scene between Portia's first and second, and her third just after Jessica's flight. Beginning with Portia's fourth scene (II.ix), he alternates her scenes with Shylock's with almost exact regularity until their encounter in the courtroom. In this way the poet silently draws ever more sharply the contrast between the usurer and the wise Renaissance lady, before either has any idea of the other's existence.

Our sympathies are never so strongly with Portia, or with Bassanio, as in the beautiful scene where he wins her, particularly in the tense moments while she watches him meditating on which casket to choose, and in the climax that brings them a happiness they can hardly express. When the sudden news comes of Antonio's catastrophic losses, Portia instantly offers her entire fortune to save her husband's friend of whom until now she has never heard. Like Bassanio and Antonio, she knows how to "give and hazard all she hath." In this scene of love and generous friendship, we see Portia at her best.

In the next scene we find Shylock at his worst, raging madly at Antonio and promising to take his life. It is his one scene in the play in which we can have no spark of sympathy for him. Is destiny on his side, or on Portia's?

SHYLOCK AND JUDAISM

As we approach the court scene, we must face the question of Shakespeare's attitude toward the Jews. Stoll and some others believed he shared the hateful prejudice that had disgraced Christianity for over fifteen centuries. In 1935, Professor John W. Draper sharply challenged this view. "Shylock the Jew was merely exotic local color," he declared. "Shylock the usurer was a commentary on London life." The second statement is certainly true; there were many usurers in the great city, and their cruelty was notorious. The first statement is partly true. Dr. J. L. Cardozo seems to have proved that—contrary to common opinion—there were no Jews, or almost none, dwelling anywhere in Shakespeare's London, unless we except the small band of a few hundred Portuguese who had converted from Judaism to Christianity. Shylock must have been an exotic figure to the Elizabethans.

His Judaism, however, is emphasized again and again. In Shylock the great virtues of the ancient Hebrews have often been corrupted into the nearest vices. Reverence for law has degenerated into legalism, loyalty to his own people into a vehement antipathy to Christians, practical sagacity into the love of money, a noble love of justice into a fanatical thirst for a revenge that excludes every thought of mercy. Yet until the climax of the court scene, Shylock is blindly unconscious of doing anything wrong. Here is no mere comic butt, no mere hypocrite and villain, but a warped and dangerous fanatic—sometimes comic, sometimes hateful—impervious to any normal appeal to common sense or natural kindness, but always strangely human. Something has poisoned this man, and apparently a whole people, originally splendidly endowed by nature.

Most modern readers find the source of the poison in Christian persecution. Shakespeare touches on this idea, especially in Shylock's great defense of the humanity of the Jews. But his emphasis lies elsewhere. Shylock is fiercely conscious of his "sacred nation." He defends the iniquitous practice of usury by citing the Old Testament. As Christians had always said of the Jews from the days of Saint Paul, he insists on the bare letter of the law and ignores the spirit. He goes to the synagogue to plan Antonio's death. In the court scene he declares solemnly he has "an oath in heaven" that he will cut the pound of flesh from Antonio. Earlier we see momentarily a better side of his Judaism, in his memory of his wife's first gift. It is obvious, nevertheless, that Shakespeare has many times connected Shylock's worst qualities with the Hebrew religion.

So hateful is this idea to us that we must be very certain just what it meant to Shakespeare. The prejudice is not at all the Nazi's hatred of the Jew's blood and supposed race, for Jessica is "a daughter to his blood" but not to "his manners," that is, his moral values and actions. The hostility is directed against Shylock's code of ethics and the religion that is assumed to be its source.

How could the humane and clear-sighted Shakespeare ever have taken such a view of one of the world's great religions? Perhaps we can most easily understand his view if we remember the attitude toward Puritans that is held today by some humane but not well-informed people. Without examining the facts with an open mind, they see the Puritans as narrow zealots or even hypocrites, who—like Shylock—despised beauty and merrymaking, loved money, and looked down with contempt on their less sanctified neighbors. Although these people think of themselves as enlightened and tolerant, they regard the Puritan religion as a fanaticism—a perverted view of life which warped a man's mind, chilled his sympathies, and poisoned his relations with all who did not share the special outlook of the chosen few. There is some truth in this picture, but impartial historians know it to be, on the whole, distorted and unjust.

The analogy with Judaism is very close, for the Puritans' emphasis on the Old Testament made them the most Hebraic of Christian groups. In Elizabeth's reign, even men of large minds and generous sympathies could regard the Jewish faith very much as many of our contemporaries regard Puritanism. For centuries Christians had been taught almost universally that the ancient religion of Israel had degenerated into a narrow fanaticism, teaching a pedantic adherence to the mere letter of the law and ignoring the spirit. "The letter killeth but the spirit giveth life," wrote Saint Paul. As a Christian scholar of our time, James Parkes, wrote: "The inadequacy of the law . . . was [the church fathers'] continual accusation against the Jews." Parkes also observed that our English word law is no adequate equivalent for the original word Torah in the Hebrew text:

The written law was . . . the basis of Torah, but Torah itself was the complete revelation of the holy community or nation through which the individual in every act could fulfill the purpose of God in his creation.

Between this lofty Hebrew concept and the Christian idea of the divine mercy which at once fulfills and transcends the law, there is no irreconcilable conflict. Shakespeare and the members of his audience, however, could not know what scholars so wise as Richard Hooker (1554?–1600) had not discovered.

The modern parallel to Shylock is not the Jews. It is the Nazi persecutors of the Jews.

THE TRIAL

The scene of Antonio's trial surpasses almost anything Shakespeare had ever written previously in both range and power. The sustained clash of wills, the battle of ideas, the variety of characterization, the prolonged suspense (relieved now and then by touches of comedy), the deepening irony, and the stunning reversal of fortune when Portia finally turns Shylock's own weapon against himself—all these reveal the hand of a great craftsman and the inspiration of a master poet.

Often in the nineteenth century, and sometimes in the twentieth, this scene has been interpreted as "The Tragedy of Shylock." Stoll interpreted it as harsh comedy. After the reversal of fortune, he says, "The Jew's very words are echoed by Portia and Gratiano as they jeer, and at every turn that justice takes . . . there are now peals and shouts of laughter." Neither interpretation does justice to Shakespeare's sane and compassionate view.

In the first place, though everyone else is appalled at Shylock's cruelty, he himself is here a figure of real dignity. The mad fierceness of his last two scenes is gone. As he addresses the Duke, his language is eloquent, and his strange reasoning is cogent. Confident in the justice of his cause, he regards Gratiano's bitter curse with amused indifference. To the Duke and Portia he shows a courteous respect. Up to the sudden reversal of his fortunes, he treats her with admiration and genuine friendliness. In one sense, we see him at his best in this scene. With some exceptions, his bearing in more than half the scene is that of a civilized man of affairs. The contrast between his manner and his fanatical purpose heightens the effect. He is a shrewd and persuasive advocate in his astounding case. When the Duke makes a powerful appeal that he show "human gentleness and love," Shylock defends with powerful logic his right to take Antonio's life.

DUKE

How shalt thou hope for mercy, rend'ring none?

SHYLOCK

What judgment shall I dread, doing no wrong?

(IV.i.88-89)

The tension of the scene mounts steadily, but Shakespeare skillfully breaks it now and then. Just before Bellario's messenger (Nerissa) comes in, we are deeply moved by the selfless friendship of Bassanio and Antonio, as each insists that he should die for the other. Then the sight of Nerissa trying, without quite perfect success, to act the part of an experienced law clerk brings a hint of comedy. As spectators we need not laugh, but all will feel a slight lessening of tension. When Shylock takes the occasion to whet his knife on his sole, the grotesque act brings us still nearer to comedy.

Portia enters dressed as a judge and gets quickly down to business. Shylock's procedure cannot be attacked under the law.

Then must the Jew be merciful.

On what compulsion must I?

(IV.i.181-82)

The question reveals how tightly his moral code is bound to the letter of the law. What it forbids he will never do. But he can neither give nor forgive. Portia, in a speech that almost sums up the meaning of the play, explains that mercy must be an entirely free gift. It blesses the giver and the receiver alike. To show mercy is the privilege of kings, of God himself. But if Shylock insists on the letter of the law, sentence must be given against the merchant. Then comes Portia's quiet masterstroke.

Tarry a little; there is something else.

This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood.

(IV.i.304-05)

Stunned as he is, Shylock tries to accept the previous offer of thrice the bond. But having refused it, he now has no claim on it or even on the bare principal. The law has yet another hold on him. He, an alien, has plotted against a citizen's life. All his vast wealth is forfeit, half to Antonio, half to the state, and his life lies "in the mercy of the Duke only."

Portia has appealed in vain to reason, to charity, and to self-interest. Now she has turned the letter of the law against Shylock. He has been guilty of the mad presumption that the Greeks called hubris. For him this sudden blow is a profound psychological shock. No longer can he boast he does no wrong. By his own code, the letter of the law, he knows he is guilty of a deadly crime. Stunned and broken, he kneels before the Duke.

The strict court of Venice understands mercy as well as justice. Justice demands that the offender be punished, be forced to make amends to the injured party, and be restrained from doing further harm. Mercy draws a distinction between a crime willed and a crime enacted. As the prince of Christian humanists, Erasmus, says of charity, mercy requires that the Christian "be an enemy only to vice. Let him kill the Turk, but save the man." Let Portia and the Duke kill his fanaticism, but save the man.

Can we honestly say that he receives mercy? By the mere letter of the law he receives it abundantly. He now owns not a penny's worth of property, and his life is forfeit. The Duke instantly pardons him his life, but Shylock is ready to die. It is now Antonio's opportunity to show mercy. Under the law, one half of Shylock's wealth is now Antonio's, the other half the state's. Following a hint of the Duke's, the merchant proposes, first, that the half which is the state's be restored conditionally to Shylock. Second, he offers to use his own half as a permanent loan without interest, and at the Jew's death to give it outright to Jessica and Lorenzo. He imposes two conditions: first, that the young couple shall receive all Shylock's property at his death; second, that he immediately become a Christian.

In view of Shylock's own cruelty to his luckless debtors, these terms would seem to us both just and merciful, were it not for the forced conversion. This we are bound to resent if we think of the Hebrew faith only as it really is. But if we see it as it had been misunderstood by Christians for over fifteen centuries, we can describe it in the words of Edmund Burke (written with no reference to Judaism) as "an uncouth, pernicious, and degrading superstition." As we painfully rediscovered in Hitler's Germany, the perversion of the instincts of religion and human loyalty can be one of the most dangerous forces in the world. The fanatical Nazis had to be reeducated before they could ever be trusted; so Shylock, too, must give up his fanatical adherence to the letter of the law. It is noteworthy that Antonio, the Duke, and Portia never show any hatred of Shylock. In their view he is being saved from himself. Shakespeare's information about a great religious faith was defective and largely mistaken, but his own values are universal.

FULFILLMENT

The final scene at Portia's estate will seem irrelevant and bitterly ironical to those who still regard Shylock as a victim of Christian bigotry. To others it will be something very different. A good man has been saved from death. A dangerous but greatly gifted man has begun to see life in an altogether new way. Now, in the peace and the magical beauty of the evening, Lorenzo and Jessica are recalling famous lovers of the past. Their earnest mood, broken by playful teasing, Lorenzo's poetic nature as revealed in his words about the music of the spheres, the entrance of Portia and Nerissa, happy in a work of redemption fully achieved—all this suggests powerfully the happy harmony of life at its best. Gratiano's sudden quarrel with Nerissa and the women's harmless teasing of the men about the rings they gave away bring us back to ordinary life and to the mood of comedy. Portia's news that three of Antonio's argosies "Are richly come to harbor suddenly" (V.i.277) and her good news also for Jessica and Lorenzo give promise of long happiness for them. Gratiano's final speech brings a laugh from the audience.

To those who can see Shylock as neither an entire villain nor a hero, but a gifted man whose fanatical hatred makes him his own worst enemy until he is saved from himself, The Merchant of Venice is no tragedy. To those who can view the play from the point of view of the wise, realistic, and compassionate heroine, it is one of Shakespeare's most beautiful and most significant comedies.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCES

Some of Shakespeare's plays are close to their sources, and it is useful and often illuminating to see how he departs from Plutarch or Holinshed, Greene or Lodge. But no known work can be the only source for The Merchant of Venice. Apparently Shakespeare combined a number of sources, all of which repay careful study.

If he drew chiefly on a single source, it may have been a play called The Jew, which Stephen Gosson mentioned favorably in 1579, in his School of Abuse, and which he said showed "the greediness of worldly choosers" and the "bloody minds of usurers." Some scholars believe that the term "worldly choosers" shows that the casket story (in which worldly-minded suitors are discomfited by choosing the gold or silver casket) has been combined with the story of the usurer and the pound of flesh. Yet "greediness" seems less appropriate to suitors than to usurers. In any case, The Jew is not extant, and speculation about Shakespeare's debt to it is idle.

Of extant works, Il Pecorone (The Duncce), an Italian collection of prose tales by an author who calls himself Ser Giovanni Fiorentino, is the most relevant. The first tale of the fourth day concerns the Lady of Belmonte, a widow who demands that each traveler seek to possess her; if he does, she will wed him, but if he fails, all his goods are forfeit. Giannetto voyages to Belmonte twice; twice he is drugged and therefore fails and loses his goods. His godfather then borrows from a Jewish usurer and furnishes him for a third voyage. (Giannetto has lied, telling his godfather that the goods were lost in shipwrecks.) This time Giannetto—warned by the lady's maid—is successful. There follows the usurer's demand for the overdue money, the cleverness of the lawyer, the lady in disguise (as in Shakespeare), and the business of the ring.

There is no indubitable proof that Shakespeare borrowed directly from Il Pecorone. He could have found the tale of the pound of flesh in other works, such as Alexander Silwayne's The Orator and Anthony Munday's Zelauto. It seems more than possible, however, that Shakespeare read Il Pecorone either in a translation or in Italian—a language which, with his good knowledge of Latin, he might very easily have acquired.

If he read it in one language or another, probably his most notable changes are the alteration of the indecent test imposed on the wooer, the addition of the usurer's daughter, and the omission of the wooer's incredibly long forgetfulness of his benefactor's danger, together with the ennoblement of all the leading characters.

The story of the caskets comes ultimately from Oriental folklore. Shakespeare's immediate source is believed to be an English version of the Gesta Romanorum, a collection of medieval Latin tales, translated into English in 1577 and "bettered" by the same translator in 1595. Possibly the author of the old play The Jew is responsible for joining the casket plot to the bond plot, but we know little about the play; Shakespeare may have been the first to combine the two stories.

Finally, it should be mentioned that Shakespeare's play about Christians and a Jew must owe something to Marlowe's The Jew of Malta, and also to the trial, in 1594, of Dr. Roderigo Lopez, the converted Portuguese Jew who, though very probably innocent, was convicted and executed on the charge of plotting to poison Queen Elizabeth I. In The Jew of Malta, Shakespeare would have found a Jew who is a scoundrel but is, at certain moments, a really human figure wronged by the Christians around him. Shylock's daughter Jessica may owe something to Marlowe's Abigail, who loves a Christian, but both Abigail and her beloved are killed, whereas Jessica escapes into a happy marriage with Lorenzo. In the Lopez trial, Shakespeare would have found the usual depiction of the murderous Jew.

Geoffrey Bullough, in the first volume of his Narrative and Dramatic Sources of Shakespeare, has brought together selections from Silwayne's The Orator, Anthony Munday's Zelauto, and Il Pecorone. To anyone who browses through this material, it is clear enough that Shakespeare did not invent the chief episodes of his play. It is no less clear that the remarkable characterizations, the moral tone, the poetry, and probably the deft interweaving of the various strands of the plot are the work of a great dramatic poet.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

The exact date of the play's composition is uncertain, but the play was in existence in 1598, when Francis Meres mentioned it in Palladis Tamia, and it may have been written as early as 1596, if the reference to the ship Andrew in I.i.27 is indebted—as has been conjectured—to news of the capture of the Spanish ship Saint Andrew in the Cádiz expedition. In 1598 and in 1600 the play was entered in the Stationers' Register. It was first published in a quarto (Q1) in 1600. The interesting part of the title page runs thus: "The most excellent/Historie of the Merchant/o/Venice./With the extreame crueltie of Shylocke the Iewef towards the sayd Merchant, in cutting a iust pound/of his flesh: and the obtayning of Portia/by the choyse of three/chests./As it hath beene diuers times acted by the Lord/Chamberlaine his Seruants./Written by William Shakespeare." The absence of some necessary stage directions (for example, entrances of some characters who later speak) suggests that the copy for this quarto could not have been a promptbook. Conversely, there are some bits of evidence that suggest the copy was very close to Shakespeare's manuscript; for example, such a stage direction as "Enter Portia for Balthazar" seems to reflect an author's conception of his action. But plays that are commonly thought to be printed from Shakespeare's manuscript usually have some confusions in them, the result of a somewhat illegible manuscript, and The Merchant of Venice lacks such confusions. Probably, then, the printer's copy for the first quarto was a scribe's careful and clean copy of the manuscript—but, of course, it is unwise to be dogmatic about such matters.

In 1619 a second quarto (Q2) appeared, falsely dated 1600. Q2 was based on Q1, and though it corrects some palpable errors in Q1, Q2 has no independent authority.

In 1623 the play was again reprinted, in the First Folio, again from Q1. And again, of course, there are some slight departures from Q1, ranging from misprints to the addition of some interesting stage directions that doubtless reflect playhouse practice. The most notable are directions calling for the flourishing of cornets.

Q1, then, the only authoritative text, and the source of all others, serves as the basis for the present edition, but some changes have been made. Solanio, Salarino, and Salerio have, as in most modern editions, been reduced to Solanio and Salerio. (Possibly Shakespeare began with three such characters in mind, but as he worked he apparently found he could make do with two, and Salarino disappeared. The name Salarino—which in Q1 occurs in stage directions at I.i; II.iv, vi, viii; III.i—in this edition is replaced by Salerio. Salarino is a diminutive of Salerio, and it is possible that Shakespeare did not intend them to be distinct. In any case, the name Salerio must stay, because it appears in the dialogue as well as in the stage directions.) Spelling and punctuation have been modernized, and speech prefixes have been regularized (for example, we give “Shylock,” though Q1 varies between “Shylock,” “Shy.,” and “Iew”). Act divisions, first introduced in the Folio, are given, and for ease of reference, the scene divisions established by the Globe edition are given. These additions, like necessary stage directions that are not found in Q1, are enclosed in brackets. A superfluous stage direction (“Enter Tubal,” at III.i.75) has been deleted, the positions of a few stage directions are slightly altered, and obvious typographical errors have been corrected. Other departures from Q1 are listed below, the adopted reading given first, in boldface type, the rejected reading in roman type. If the adopted reading comes from Q2 or F, that fact is indicated.

- I.i.27 docked docks 113 Is It is
I.ii.59 throstle Trassell
II.i.s.d. Morocco Morochus 35 page rage
II.ii.98 last [Q2] lost
II.vii.69 tombs timber
II.viii.39 Slubber [Q2, F] slumber
III.i.103 Heard heere
III.ii.67 eyes [F] eye 81 vice voyce
III.iii.s.d. Solanio Salerio
III.iv.49 Padua Mantua 50 cousin's [Q2, F] cosin 81 my [Q2, F] my my III.v.22 e'en [Q2, F] in 28 comes. come? 77 merit it meane it, it 84 a wife [F] wife
IV.i.30 his state [Q2, F] this states 31 flint [Q2] flints 51 Master Maisters 74 bleat [F] bleake 75 mountain [F] mountaine of 100 is mine as mine 229 No, not [Q2] Not not 397 Gratiano [Q2, F] Shy [lock]
V.i.41-42 Master Lorenzo and Mistress Lorenzo? M. Lorenzo, & M. Lorenzo 49 Sweet soul [concludes Launcelot's speech] 51 Stephano [Q2] Stephen 87 Erebus [F] Terebus 152 it you [Q2, F] you

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE

[Dramatis Personae]

DUKE OF VENICE
PRINCE OF MOROCCO } suitors to Portia
PRINCE OF ARAGON }
ANTONIO a merchant of Venice
BASSANIO his friend, suitor to Portia
GRATIANO }
SALERIO } friends to Antonio and Bassanio
SOLANIO }
LORENZO in love with Jessica
SHYLOCK a Jew
TUBAL a Jew, his friend

LAUNCELOT GOBBO a clown, servant to Shylock
OLD GOBBO father to Launcelot
LEONARDO servant to Bassanio
BALTHASAR } servants to Portia
STEPHANO }
PORTIA an heiress
NERISSA her waiting woman
JESSICA daughter to Shylock
MAGNIFICOS of Venice OFFICERS of the court of justice JAILER SERVANTS OTHER ATTENDANTS

Scene: Venice and Belmont]

[A C T I]

[Scene I. Venice. A street.]

Enter ANTONIO, SALERIO, and SOLANIO.

ANTONIO
In sooth I know not why I am so sad.^o
It wearies me, you say it wearies you;
But how I caught it, found it, or came by it,
What stuff 'tis made of, whereof it is born,
I am to learn;^o
And such a want-wit^o sadness^o makes of me
That I have much ado to know myself.

SALERIO
Your mind is tossing on the ocean,^o
There where your argosies^o with portly^o sail—

The decorative border shown above is a repeated ornament which appeared on the title page of the first quarto edition of The Merchant of Venice, 1600.

I.i.i sad sober, depressed 5 am to learn need to learn, cannot guess (the incomplete line indicates a short pause)
6 want-wit dull fellow; sadness depression 8 ocean pronounced "ó-ce-an" 9 argosies great merchant ships; portly stately

Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood, 10
Or as it were the pageants^o of the sea—
Do overpeer the petty traffickers
That cursy^o to them, do them reverence,
As they fly by them with their woven wings.

SOLANIO 15
Believe me, sir, had I such venture^o forth,
The better part of my affections would
Be with my hopes abroad. I should be still^o
Plucking the grass to know where sits the wind,
Peering in maps for ports and piers and roads;^o
And every object that might make me fear 20
Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt
Would make me sad.

SALERIO My wind cooling my broth
Would blow me to an ague^o when I thought
What harm a wind too great might do at sea.
I should not see the sandy hourglass run 25
But I should think of shallows and of flats,

II pageants floats, splendidly decorated wagons in the shape of castles, dragons, etc. 13 cursy curtsy, bow 15 venture unpredictable enterprise 17 still always 19 roads harbors 23 ague trembling fit

And see my wealthy Andrew^o docked in sand,
 Vailing^o her high top lower than her ribs
 To kiss her burial. Should I go to church
 And see the holy edifice of stone
 And not bethink me straight of dangerous rocks,
 Which touching but my gentle^o vessel's side
 Would scatter all her spices on the stream,
 Enrobe the roaring waters with my silks—
 And in a word, but even now worth this,^o
 And now worth nothing?^o Shall I have the thought
 To think on this, and shall I lack the thought
 That such a thing bechanced^o would make me sad?
 But tell not me! I know Antonio
 Is sad to think upon his merchandise.

ANTONIO

Believe me, no. I thank my fortune for it,
 My ventures are not in one bottom^o trusted,
 Nor to one place; nor is my whole estate
 Upon the fortune of this present year.
 Therefore my merchandise makes me not sad.

SOLANIO

Why then you are in love.

ANTONIO

Fie, fie!

SOLANIO

Not in love neither? Then let us say you are sad
 Because you are not merry; and 'twere as easy
 For you to laugh and leap, and say you are merry
 Because you are not sad. Now by two-headed Janus,^o 50
 Nature hath framed strange^o fellows in her time:
 Some that will evermore peep through their eyes
 And laugh like parrots at a bagpiper,
 And other of such vinegar aspect
 That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile 55
 Though Nestor^o swear the jest be laughable.

Enter BASSANIO, LORENZO, and GRATIANO.

Here comes Bassanio, your most noble kinsman,
 Gratiano, and Lorenzo. Fare ye well;
 We leave you now with better company.

SALERIO

I would have stayed till I had made you merry,
 If worthier friends had not prevented^o me. 60

ANTONIO

Your worth is very dear in my regard.
 I take it your own business calls on you,
 And you embrace th' occasion to depart.

SALERIO

Good morrow, my good lords. 65

BASSANIO

Good signiors both, when shall we laugh? Say, when?
 You grow exceeding strange;^o must it be so?

SALERIO

We'll make our leasures to attend on yours.

Exeunt SALERIO and SOLANIO.

27 Andrew the name of a ship 28 Vailing lowering, in recognition of a superior 32 gentle noble and gentle; hence, splendid and frail 35, 36 this, nothing spoken with an emphatic gesture 38 bechanced should it happen 42 bottom ship 50 two-headed Janus Roman god of entrances and hence of all beginnings; depicted with two faces, one cheerful, one sad, symbolizing the uncertainty of the future (Solanio suggests that Antonio is as strange a figure as Janus) 51 strange marvelously queer 56 Nestor the oldest and most venerable Greek leader in the Trojan War; a type of gravity and wisdom 61 prevented forestalled 67 strange distant

LORENZO

My Lord Bassanio, since you have found Antonio,
 We two will leave you; but at dinner time 70
 I pray you have in mind where we must meet.

BASSANIO

I will not fail you.

GRATIANO

You look not well, Signior Antonio.

35 You have too much respect upon^o the world;
 They lose it that do buy it with much care. 75
 Believe me, you are marvelously changed.

ANTONIO

40 I hold the world but as the world, Gratiano—
 A stage, where every man must play a part,
 And mine a sad one.

GRATIANO

Let me play the fool!

With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come, 80
 And let my liver^o rather heat with wine
 Than my heart cool with mortifying groans.^o
 Why should a man whose blood is warm within Sit like his grandsire, cut in alabaster?

Sleep when he wakes? And creep into the jaundice^o 85

By being peevish? I tell thee what, Antonio—

I love thee, and 'tis my love that speaks—

There are a sort of men whose visages
 Do cream and mantle^o like a standing pond,
 And do a willful stillness entertain^o 90

With purpose to be dressed in an opinion^o
 Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit,^o

As who should say, "I am Sir Oracle,^o

And when I ope my lips, let no dog bark!"

O my Antonio, I do know of these 95

That therefore only are reputed wise

For saying nothing; when I am very sure

If they should speak, would almost dam^o those ears,
 Which hearing them would call their brothers fools.

I'll tell thee more of this another time. 100

But fish not with this melancholy bait

For this fool gudgeon,^o this opinion.

Come, good Lorenzo. Fare ye well awhile;

I'll end my exhortation after dinner.

LORENZO

Well, we will leave you then till dinner time. 105

I must be one of these same dumb wise men,

For Gratiano never lets me speak.

74 respect upon regard for 81 liver one of the supposed seats of the passions 82 mortifying groans groans supposed to deaden vitality (by drawing blood from the heart) 85 jaundice disease thought to be caused by peevishness 89 cream and mantle become impassive like thick cream on a bowl of milk, or a mantle of scum on a pond 90 entertain assume 91 opinion reputation (as in line 102) 92 profound conceit power of forming profound conceptions 93 I . . . Oracle I am as wise as a Greek oracle (inspired by the gods) 98 dam often emended to "damn," and probably a pun: if these silent and reputedly wise men ever did speak, the abundance of their foolish words would not only dam up the ears of the listeners, but also make the listeners call the formerly silent men fools, and thus bring on the listeners the penalty of damnation which is pronounced on all who apply this term to a brother man (see Matthew 5:22) 101-02 But . . . gudgeon don't cultivate melancholy to gain a reputation for silent wisdom, for the judgment of the multitude is stupid (a gudgeon was proverbially a foolish fish)

GRATIANO

Well, keep me company but two years moe,^o
Thou shalt not know the sound of thine own tongue.

ANTONIO

Fare you well; I'll grow a talker for this gear.^o 110

GRATIANO

Thanks i' faith; for silence is only commendable
In a neat's tongue^o dried and a maid not vendible.^o
Exeunt [GRATIANO and LORENZO].

ANTONIO Is that anything now?

BASSANIO Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice. His reasons are 115 as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff: you shall seek all day ere you find them, and when you have them they are not worth the search.

ANTONIO

Well, tell me now, what lady is the same
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage 120
That you today promised to tell me of?

BASSANIO

'Tis not unknown to you, Antonio,
How much I have disabled mine estate,
By something^o showing a more swelling port^o
Than my faint means would grant continuance.^o 125
Nor do I now make moan to be abridged^o
From such a noble rate;^o but my chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,^o
Hath left me gaged.^o To you, Antonio, 130
I owe the most in money and in love,
And from your love I have a warranty
To unburden all my plots and purposes
How to get clear of all the debts I owe.

ANTONIO

I pray you, good Bassanio, let me know it, 135
And if it stand as you yourself still^o do,
Within the eye of honor, be assured
My purse, my person, my extremest means
Lie all unlocked to your occasions.^o

BASSANIO

In my schooldays, when I had lost one shaft^o 140
I shot his fellow^o of the selfsame flight^o
The selfsame way, with more advised^o watch,
To find the other forth; and by adventuring both
I oft found both. I urge this childhood proof^o
Because what follows is pure innocence.^o 145
I owe you much, and like a willful youth^o
That which I owe is lost; but if you please
To shoot another arrow that self way
Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt,

As I will watch the aim, or^o to find both, 150
Or bring your latter hazard^o back again
And thankfully rest debtor for the first.

ANTONIO

You know me well, and herein spend but time
To wind about my love with circumstance;^o
And out of doubt you do me now more wrong 155
In making question of my uttermost
Than if you had made waste of all I have.
Then do but say to me what I should do
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prest unto it.^o Therefore speak. 160

BASSANIO

In Belmont is a lady richly left;^o
And she is fair and, fairer than that word,
Of wondrous virtues.^o Sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages.
Her name is Portia, nothing undervalued 165
To^o Cato's daughter, Brutus' Portia;^o
Nor is the wide world ignorant of her worth,
For the four winds blow in from every coast
Renowned suitors, and her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece, 170
Which makes her seat^o of Belmont Colchos' strond,^o
And many Jasons come in quest of her.
O my Antonio, had I but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I have a mind presages me^o such thrift^o 175
That I should questionless be fortunate!

ANTONIO

Thou know'st that all my fortunes are at sea;
Neither have I money, nor commodity^o
To raise a present sum. Therefore go forth;
Try what my credit can in Venice do. 180
That shall be racked^o even to the uttermost
To furnish thee to Belmont, to fair Portia.
Go presently^o inquire, and so will I,
Where money is; and I no question make
To have it of my trust or for my sake.^o Exeunt. 185

[Scene II. Belmont. Portia's house.]

Enter PORTIA with her waiting woman, NERISSA.

PORTIA By my troth,^o Nerissa, my little body is awearied of this great world.

145

NERISSA You would be, sweet madam, if your miseries were in the same abundance as your good fortunes are; and yet for aught I see, they are as sick 5 that surfeit^o with too much as they that starve with

108 moe more (moe is the old positive form of which more was the comparative) 110 gear stuff (a mild jest, showing that Gratiano has cheered Antonio for a moment) 112 neat's tongue beef tongue; vendible salable (i.e., marriageable) 124 something somewhat; swelling port impressive style of living 125 grant continuance allow me to continue 126 abridged cut down 127 rate scale 129 my . . . prodigal the lavish way I spent my time 130 gaged pledged 136 still always 139 occasions needs 140 shaft arrow 141 fellow duplicate; selfsame flight identical in size and in the feathers 142 advised considered 144 proof experience 145 pure innocence childlike sincerity 146 like . . . youth like one who neglected sound advice and learned by making mistakes

150 or either 151 hazard thing risked 154 To . . . circumstance to approach my love circuitously with elaborate talk 160 prest unto it ready to aid you in it (from Latin praesto = at hand, ready) 161 richly left left rich 163 virtues powers and gifts (a more inclusive word than today) 165–66 nothing undervalued To of no less value than 166 Brutus' Portia famed for her intellectual gifts, her resolution, and her wifely devotion (see Julius Caesar, II.i.234–309) 171 seat estate; Colchos' strond the shore east of the Black Sea where Jason won the Golden Fleece 175 mind presages me presentiment that foretells me; thrift thriving, success 178 commodity merchandise 181 racked stretched to the point of torture (as on the rack) 183 presently instantly 185 of . . . sake on my credit or on the basis of friendship I.ii.1 troth faith 6 surfeit are overfed, gluttoned nothing. It is no mean^o happiness, therefore, to be seated in the mean;^o superfluity comes sooner by^o white hairs, but competency^o lives longer.

PORTIA Good sentences,^o and well pronounced. 10

NERISSA They would be better if well followed.

PORTIA If to do were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been^o churches, and poor men's cottages princes' palaces. It is a good divine that follows his own instructions; I can easier teach twenty 15 what were good to be done, than to be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching. The brain may devise laws for the blood,^o but a hot temper^o leaps o'er a cold decree;^o such a hare is madness the youth to skip o'er the meshes^o of good counsel the cripple. But this 20 reasoning is not in the fashion^o to choose me a husband. O me, the word "choose"! I may neither choose who I would nor refuse who I dislike, so is the will of a living daughter curbed by the will^o of a dead father. Is it not hard, Nerissa, that I cannot choose one, nor 25 refuse none?^o

NERISSA Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations. Therefore the lott'ry that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver, and lead, whereof who chooses his mean- 30 ing chooses you, will no doubt never be chosen by any rightly but one who you shall rightly love. But what warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come?

PORTIA I pray thee overname them; and as thou 35 namest them I will describe them, and according to my description level at my affection.

NERISSA First, there is the Neapolitan prince.

PORTIA Ay, that's a colt indeed, for he doth nothing but talk of his horse, and he makes it a great appropri- 40 ation of his own good parts^o that he can shoe him himself. I am much afeard my lady his mother played false with a smith.

NERISSA Then is there the County^o Palatine.

PORTIA He doth nothing but frown—as who should 45 say, "And^o you will not have me, choose!" He hears merry tales and smiles not; I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher^o when he grows old, being so full of unmannerly sadness^o in his youth. I had rather be married to a death's-head with a bone in his mouth 50 than to either of these. God defend me from these two!

NERISSA How say you by the French lord, Monsieur Le Bon?

PORTIA God made him, and therefore let him pass for a man. In truth, I know it is a sin to be a mocker, 55 but he! Why, he hath a horse better than the Neapolitan's, a better bad habit of frowning than the Count Palatine; he is every man in no man. If a throstle^o sing, he falls straight a-cap'ring; he will fence with his own shadow. If I should^o marry him, I 60 should^o marry twenty husbands. If he would despise me, I would forgive him; for if he love me to madness, I shall never requite him.

NERISSA What say you then to Falconbridge, the young baron of England? 65

PORTIA You know I say nothing to him, for he understands not me, nor I him. He hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you will come into the court and swear that I have a poor pennyworth in the English. He is a proper^o man's picture, but alas, who 70 can converse with a dumbshow? How oddly he is suited! I think he bought his doublet^o in Italy, his round hose^o in France, his bonnet in Germany, and his behavior everywhere.

NERISSA What think you of the Scottish lord, his neighbor? 75

PORTIA That he hath a neighborly charity in him, for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman and swore he would pay him again when he was able. I think the Frenchman^o became his surety and sealed 80 under for another.

NERISSA How like you the young German,^o the Duke of Saxony's nephew?

PORTIA Very vilely in the morning when he is sober, and most vilely in the afternoon when he is drunk. 85 When he is best he is a little worse than a man, and when he is worst he is little better than a beast.^o And the worst fall that ever fell, I hope I shall make shift^o to go without him.

NERISSA If he should offer to choose, and choose the 90 right casket, you should refuse to perform your father's will if you should refuse to accept him.

PORTIA Therefore, for fear of the worst, I pray thee set a deep glass of Rhenish wine on the contrary 95 casket, for if the devil be within and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will do anything, Nerissa, ere I will be married to a sponge.

NERISSA You need not fear, lady, the having any of these lords. They have acquainted me with their deter- 100 minations; which is indeed to return to their home, and to trouble you with no more suit, unless you may be won by some other sort^o than your father's imposition,^o depending on the caskets.

PORTIA If I live to be as old as Sibylla,^o I will die as chaste as Diana unless I be obtained by the manner of 105 my father's will. I am glad this parcel of wooers are so reasonable, for there is not one among them but I dote on his very absence; and I pray God grant them a fair departure.

7, 8 mean (1) slight (2) golden mean 8 comes sooner by acquires sooner 9 competency a modest but comfortable fortune 10 sentences sententious maxims 13 had been would have been 18 blood passion; hot temper ardent temperament 18–19 cold decree decision made in cold judgment 20 meshes nets for catching small creatures 21 in the fashion of the sort 23–24 will . . . will wish . . . last will and testament 26 refuse none refuse any 40–41 appropriation . . . parts personal accomplishment added to his talents 44 County Count 46 And if 47–48 the weeping philosopher another Heraclitus 49 unmannerly sadness unbecoming seriousness

59 throstle song thrush 60–61 should . . . should were to . . . would be obliged to 70 proper handsome 72 doublet upper garment, corresponding to the modern coat 73 round hose lower garment, combining the functions of breeches and stockings 75–80 Scottish . . . Frenchman an allusion to the French promises of aid to the Scots against the English, promises that were often broken 82 German Germans were proverbially heavy drinkers 86–87 best . . . beast a pun, "beast" being pronounced almost like "best" (such quibbles were not necessarily comic, but were considered clever and interesting) 88 make shift find a way 102 sort manner 102–03 imposition command 104 Sibylla the Cumean Sibyl (Apollo promised her as many years of life as were the grains of sand she was holding in her hand)

NERISSA Do you not remember, lady, in your father's 110 time, a Venetian, a scholar and a soldier, that came hither in company of the Marquis of Montferrat?

PORTIA Yes, yes, it was Bassanio!—as I think, so was he called.

NERISSA True, madam. He, of all the men that ever 115 my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.

PORTIA I remember him well, and I remember him worthy of thy praise.

Enter a SERVINGMAN.

How now? What news? 120

SERVINGMAN The four strangers° seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a fifth, the Prince of Morocco, who brings word the prince his master will be here tonight.

PORTIA If I could bid the fifth welcome with so good 125 heart as I can bid the other four farewell, I should be glad of his approach. If he have the condition of a saint and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should shrive me than wive me. Come, Nerissa. Sirrah,° go before. Whiles we shut the gate upon one wooer, 130 another knocks at the door. Exeunt.

[Scene III. Venice. A public place.]

Enter BASSANIO with SHYLOCK the Jew.

SHYLOCK Three thousand ducats—well.

BASSANIO Ay, sir, for three months.

SHYLOCK For three months—well.

BASSANIO For the which, as I told you, Antonio shall be bound.° 5

SHYLOCK Antonio shall become bound—well.

BASSANIO May° you stead° me? Will you pleasure me? Shall I know your answer?

SHYLOCK Three thousand ducats for three months, and Antonio bound. 10

BASSANIO Your answer to that.

SHYLOCK Antonio is a good man.°

BASSANIO Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?

SHYLOCK Ho no, no, no, no! My meaning in saying 15 he is a good man. is to have you understand me that he is sufficient.° Yet his means are in supposition:° he hath an argosy bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies; I understand, moreover, upon the Rialto,° he hath a third at Mexico, a fourth for England—and other 20 ventures he hath, squand' red abroad. But ships are but boards, sailors but men; there be land rats and water rats, water thieves and land thieves—I mean pirates°— and then there is the peril of waters, winds, and rocks.

The man is, notwithstanding, sufficient. Three 25 thousand ducats—I think I may take his bond.

BASSANIO Be assured you may.

SHYLOCK I will be assured I may. And that I may be assured, I will bethink me. May I speak with Antonio?

BASSANIO If it please you to dine with us. 30

SHYLOCK Yes, to smell pork, to eat of the habitation which your prophet the Nazarite° conjured the devil into! I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. What 35 news on the Rialto? Who is he comes here?

Enter ANTONIO.

BASSANIO

This is Signior Antonio.

SHYLOCK [Aside.]

How like a fawning publican° he looks.

I hate him for° he is a Christian;

But more, for that in low simplicity 40

He lends out money gratis, and brings down

The rate of usance° here with us in Venice.

If I can catch him once upon the hip,°

I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him.

He hates our sacred nation, and he rails, 45

Even there where merchants most do congregate,

On me, my bargains, and my well-won thrift,°

Which he calls interest. Cursèd be my tribe

If I forgive him.

BASSANIO Shylock, do you hear?

SHYLOCK

I am debating of my present store,° 50

And by the near guess of my memory

I cannot instantly raise up the gross°

Of full three thousand ducats. What of that?

Tubal, a wealthy Hebrew of my tribe,

Will furnish me. But soft,° how many months 55

Do you desire? [To ANTONIO.] Rest you fair, good signior!

Your worship was the last man in our mouths.

ANTONIO

Shylock, albeit I neither lend nor borrow

By taking nor by giving of excess,

Yet to supply the ripe wants of my friend, 60
I'll break a custom. [To BASSANIO.] Is he yet possessed°

How much ye would?°

SHYLOCK Ay, ay, three thousand ducats.

ANTONIO

And for three months.

SHYLOCK

I had forgot—three months, you told me so.

Well then, your bond. And let me see—but hear you: 65

121 four strangers apparently Shakespeare originally described four suitors, then added two more, and forgot to change "four" to "six" 129 Sirrah a regular form of address to a social inferior; Portia speaks to the servant

I.iii.5 bound under legal obligation as cosigner of the bond 7 May can; stead be of service to 12 good man good business risk (Bassanio takes the word as referring to moral character) 17 sufficient adequate, responsible; in supposition doubtful 19 Rialto famous bridge in Venice, the center of commercial activity 23 pirates pronounced "pi-rats," with quibble on rats

32 the Nazarite Christ (the allusion is to the episode in Mark 5:1-13, Luke 8:26-33) 38 publican sometimes glossed as a Roman tax gatherer, as in Matthew 11:17 and 31:30 ff., and sometimes as an Elizabethan innkeeper; perhaps Shylock uses it as an inexact but bitter term of reproach 39 for because 42 usance interest 43 upon the hip at a disadvantage (a term in wrestling) 47 thrift prosperity 50 present store stock of ready money 52 gross whole amount 55 soft hold, stay 61 possessed apprised 62 would desire

Methoughts° you said you neither lend nor borrow Upon advantage.°

ANTONIO I do never use it.

SHYLOCK

When Jacob° grazed his uncle Laban's sheep—
This Jacob from our holy Abram was,
As his wise mother wrought in his behalf,
The third possessor; ay, he was the third—

ANTONIO

And what of him? Did he take interest?

SHYLOCK

No, not take interest—not as you would say
Directly int'rest. Mark what Jacob did:
When Laban and himself were compromised°
That all the eanlings which were streaked and pied
Should fall as Jacob's hire, and ewes being rank
In end of autumn turnèd to the rams;
And when the work of generation was Between these woolly breeders in the act,
The skillful shepherd pilled° me° certain wands,
And in the doing of the deed of kind°
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes,
Who then conceiving, did in eaning° time
Fall parti-colored lambs, and those were Jacob's.
This was a way to thrive, and he was blest;
And thrift is blessing if men steal it not.

ANTONIO

This was a venture,° sir, that Jacob served for,
A thing not in his power to bring to pass,
But swayed and fashioned by the hand of heaven.
Was this inserted to make interest good?
Or is your gold and silver ewes and rams?

SHYLOCK

I cannot tell; I make it breed as fast.
But note me, signior—

ANTONIO

Mark you this, Bassanio,
The devil can cite Scripture for his purpose.
An evil soul producing holy witness
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek,
A goodly° apple rotten at the heart.
O what a goodly outside falsehood hath!

SHYLOCK

Three thousand ducats—'tis a good round sum.
Three months from twelve—then let me see, the rate—

ANTONIO

Well, Shylock, shall we be beholding° to you?

SHYLOCK

Signior Antonio, many a time and oft
In the Rialto you have rated° me
About my moneys and my usances.
Still° have I borne it with a patient shrug,
For suff'rance° is the badge of all our tribe.
You call me misbeliever, cutthroat dog,
And spet upon my Jewish gaberdine,°
And all for use of that which is mine own.
Well then, it now appears you need my help.

Go to, then.° You come to me and you say,
"Shylock, we would have moneys"—you say so,
You that did void your rheum° upon my beard
And foot me as you spurn a stranger cur
Over your threshold! Moneys is your suit.
What should I say to you? Should I not say,
"Hath a dog money? Is it possible
A cur can lend three thousand ducats?" Or Shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key,
With bated breath, and whisp'ring humbleness,
Say this:

"Fair sir, you spet on me on Wednesday last,
You spurned me such a day, another time
You called me dog; and for these courtesies
I'll lend you thus much moneys"?"

ANTONIO

I am as like to call thee so again,
To spet on thee again, to spurn thee too.
If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not
As to thy friends—for when did friendship take
A breed for barren metal° of his friend?—
But lend it rather to thine enemy,
Who if he break,° thou mayst with better face
Exact the penalty.

SHYLOCK

Why look you, how you storm!
I would be friends with you, and have your love,
Forget the shames that you have stained me with,
Supply your present wants, and take no doit°
Of usance for my moneys; and you'll not hear me.
This is kind° I offer.

BASSANIO

This were kindness.

SHYLOCK

This kindness will I show:
Go with me to a notary; seal me there
Your single° bond, and, in a merry sport,
If you repay me not on such a day,
In such a place, such sum or sums as are Expressed in the condition, let the forfeit
Be nominated for an equal pound
Of your fair flesh, to be cut off and taken
In what part of your body pleaseth me.

ANTONIO

Content, in faith. I'll seal to such a bond,
And say there is much kindness° in the Jew.

BASSANIO

You shall not seal to such a bond for me!
I'll rather dwell in my necessity.

ANTONIO

Why fear not, man; I will not forfeit it.
Within these two months—that's a month before
This bond expires—I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond.

SHYLOCK

O father Abram, what these Christians are,
Whose own hard dealings teaches them suspect
The thoughts of others! Pray you tell me this:

66 Methoughts it seemed to me 67 advantage interest
68 Jacob see Genesis 30:25-43, 31:1-13 75 were compromised had reached an agreement 81 pilled stripped; me the ethical dative 82 kind nature 84 eaning lambing 88 venture unpredictable enterprise 98 goodly fine-appearing 102 beholding beholden, obligated 104 rated berated, reviled 106 Still always 107 suff'rance long-suffering 109 gaberdine the distinctive gown or mantle of the Jews

112 Go to, then an exclamation suggesting annoyance 114 rheum spittle 131 breed . . . metal interest (Aristotelian doctrine held that money, unlike living things, cannot reproduce) 133 break become insolvent 137 doit tiny Dutch coin, valued at one eighth of an English penny 139 kind kind and natural (in contrast to usurious dealings) 142 single without further security 150 kindness natural friendliness

If he should break his day,^o what should I gain
 By the exaction of the forfeiture?
 A pound of man's flesh taken from a man
 Is not so estimable, profitable neither,
 As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats. I say
 To buy his favor I extend this friendship.
 If he will take it, so; if not, adieu.^o
 And for my love I pray you wrong me not.^o

ANTONIO

Yes, Shylock, I will seal unto this bond.

SHYLOCK

Then meet me forthwith at the notary's;
 Give him direction for this merry bond,
 And I will go and purse the ducats straight,
 See to my house, left in the fearful^o guard
 Of an unthrifty knave,^o and presently^o
 I'll be with you. Exit.

ANTONIO

Hie thee, gentle Jew.^o

The Hebrew will turn Christian; he grows kind. 175

BASSANIO

I like not fair terms and a villain's mind.

ANTONIO

Come on. In this there can be no dismay;
 My ships come home a month before the day. Exeunt.

[A C T I I]

[Scene I. Belmont. Portia's house.]

[Flourish of cornets.] Enter [the Prince of] MOROCCO, a tawny Moor all in white, and three or four FOLLOWERS accordingly, with PORTIA, NERISSA, and their TRAIN.

MOROCCO

Mislike me not for my complexion,
 The shadowed^o livery^o of the burnished sun,
 To whom I am a neighbor and near bred.
 Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
 Where Phoebus^o fire scarce thaws the icicles,
 And let us make incision^o for your love
 To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine.
 I tell thee, lady, this aspect^o of mine
 Hath feared the valiant.^o By my love I swear,
 The best-regarded virgins of our clime
 Have loved it too. I would not change this hue,
 Except to steal your thoughts, my gentle queen.

PORTIA

In terms of choice^o I am not solely led
 By nice^o direction of a maiden's eyes.
 Besides, the lott'ry of my destiny

160 break his day break his promise to pay on the due date
 166 adieu probably the word has the original meaning "I commend you to God" 167 And . . . not And for the friendship I have shown you, please don't misjudge me in the future
 172 fearful hazardous 173 unthrifty knave careless youngster; presently instantly 174 gentle Jew courteous Jew (with a pun on gentile)

II.i.2 shadowed dark; livery uniform for a king's or nobleman's retainers 5 Phoebus' the sun-god's 6 make incision cut our flesh 8 aspect pronounced "a-spèct" 9 feared the valiant caused the valiant to fear 13 In . . . choice with respect to my choice 14 nice fastidious

160 Bars me the right of voluntary choosing.
 But if my father had not scanted^o me,
 And hedged me by his wit^o to yield myself
 His wife who wins me by that means I told you,
 Yourself, renowned prince, then stood as fair 20
 As any comer I have looked on yet
 For my affection.

MOROCCO Even for that I thank you.

Therefore I pray you lead me to the caskets
 To try my fortune. By this scimitar,
 That slew the Sophy,^o and a Persian prince 25
 That won three fields of Sultan Solymán,
 I would o'erstare^o the sternest eyes that look,
 Outbrave the heart most daring on the earth,
 Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
 Yea, mock the lion when 'a^o roars for prey, 30
 To win thee, lady. But alas the while,
 If Hercules and Lichas^o play at dice
 Which is the better man, the greater throw
 May turn by fortune from the weaker hand.
 So is Alcides^o beaten by his page, 35
 And so may I, blind fortune leading me,
 Miss that which one unworthier may attain,
 And die with grieving.

PORTIA You must take your chance,
 And either not attempt to choose at all,
 Or swear before you choose, if you choose wrong 40
 Never to speak to lady afterward
 In way of marriage. Therefore be advised.^o

MOROCCO

Nor will not.^o Come, bring me unto my chance.

PORTIA

First, forward to the temple; after dinner
 Your hazard shall be made.

MOROCCO Good fortune then, 45
 To make me blest or cursèdst among men!
 [Flourish of cornets.] Exeunt.

[Scene II. Venice. A street.]

5 Enter [LAUNCELOT Gobbo] the clown, alone.

LAUNCELOT Certainly my conscience will serve me to run from this Jew my master. The fiend is at mine elbow and tempts me, saying to me, "Gobbo, Launcelot Gobbo, good Launcelot," or "good Gobbo," or "good Launcelot Gobbo—use your legs, take the start, 5 run away." My conscience says, "No. Take heed, honest Launcelot; take heed, honest Gobbo," or as aforesaid, "honest Launcelot Gobbo, do not run; scorn running with thy heels."^o Well, the most courageous fiend bids me pack. "Fia!"^o says the fiend; 10
 "away!" says the fiend. "For the heavens,^o rouse up a brave mind," says the fiend, "and run." Well, my conscience hanging about the neck of my heart says

17 scanted limited 18 hedged . . . wit fenced me in by his clever intellect 25 Sophy Shah of Persia 27 o'erstare outstare 30 'a he 32 Lichas Hercules' page 35 Alcides Hercules 42 be advised consider well 43 Nor will not nor will I (ever woo another for my wife)

II.ii.9 scorn . . . heels (1) scorn to run away with your feet (2) scorn utterly to run 10 Fia from Italian via = away 11 For the heavens by heaven, or for heaven's sake (in either case a grotesque thing for the fiend to say) very wisely to me, "My honest friend Launcelot, being an honest man's son"—or rather an honest woman's son, for indeed my father did something smack, something grow to, he had a kind of taste°—Well, my conscience says, "Launcelot, budge not." "Budge," says the fiend. "Budge not," says my conscience. "Conscience," say I, "you counsel well." "Fiend," say I, "you counsel well." To be ruled by my conscience, I should stay with the Jew my master who (God bless the mark!°) is a kind of devil; and to run away from the Jew, I should be ruled by the fiend who, saving your reverence, is the devil himself. Certainly the Jew is the very devil incarnation;° and in my conscience, my conscience is but a kind of hard conscience to offer to counsel me to stay with the Jew. The fiend gives the more friendly counsel. I will run, fiend; my heels are at your commandment, I will run.

Enter old GOBBO with a basket.

GOBBO Master young man, you, I pray you, which is the way to Master Jew's?

LAUNCELOT [Aside.] O heavens, this is my true-begotten father who, being more than sand-blind,° high-gravel-blind,° knows me not. I will try confusions with him.

GOBBO Master young gentleman, I pray you which is the way to Master Jew's?

LAUNCELOT Turn up on your right hand at the next turning, but at the next turning of all, on your left; marry,° at the very next turning turn of no hand, but turn down indirectly to the Jew's house.

GOBBO Be God's sonties,° 'twill be a hard way to hit! Can you tell me whether one Launcelot that dwells with him, dwell with him or no?

LAUNCELOT Talk you of young Master Launcelot? [Aside.] Mark me now! Now will I raise the waters.°—Talk you of young Master Launcelot?

GOBBO No master,° sir, but a poor man's son. His father, though I say't, is an honest exceeding poor man and, God be thanked, well to live.°

LAUNCELOT Well, let his father be what 'a will, we talk of young Master Launcelot.

GOBBO Your worship's friend,° and Launcelot, sir.

LAUNCELOT But I pray you, ergo,° old man, ergo I beseech you, talk you of young Master Launcelot?

GOBBO Of Launcelot, an't° please your mastership.

LAUNCELOT Ergo, Master Launcelot. Talk not of Master Launcelot, father, for the young gentleman, according to Fates and Destinies and such odd sayings, the Sisters Three and such branches of learning, is indeed deceased, or as you would say in plain terms, gone to heaven.

16-17 did something smack . . . had a kind of taste both phrases indicate a tendency to vice 22-23 God . . . mark used, like "saving your reverence" in lines 24-25, to avert a bad omen 26 incarnation blunder for incarnate 34 sand-blind dull of sight 35 high-gravel-blind Launcelot's comic superlative for "sand-blind" earlier 41 marry a mild interjection (originally an oath, "By the Virgin Mary") 43 Be God's sonties by God's little saints 47 raise the waters rouse a storm of emotion (a nautical metaphor?) 49 No master as a servant, Launcelot has no claim to the title of master 50-51 exceeding . . . live poverty-stricken and well-to-do 54 Your worship's friend he politely insists on his son's humble status 55 ergo therefore 57 an't if it

GOBBO Marry, God forbid! The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop.

LAUNCELOT [Aside.] Do I look like a cudgel or a hovel-post, a staff, or a prop?° Do you know me, father?°

GOBBO Alack the day, I know you not, young gentleman, but I pray you tell me, is my boy—God rest his soul—alive or dead?

LAUNCELOT Do you not know me, father?°

GOBBO Alack, sir, I am sand-blind! I know you not.

LAUNCELOT Nay, indeed if you had your eyes you might fail of the knowing me. It is a wise father that knows his own child. Well, old man, I will tell you news of your son. [Kneels, with his back to his father.] Give me your blessing. Truth will come to light; murder cannot be hid long—a man's son may, but in the end truth will out.

GOBBO Pray you, sir, stand up. I am sure you are not Launcelot, my boy.

LAUNCELOT Pray you let's have no more fooling about it, but give me your blessing. I am Launcelot—your boy that was, your son that is, your child that shall be.

GOBBO I cannot think you are my son.

LAUNCELOT I know not what I shall think of that; but I am Launcelot, the Jew's man, and I am sure Margery your wife is my mother.

GOBBO Her name is Margery indeed! I'll be sworn, if thou be Launcelot thou art mine own flesh and blood. Lord worshipped might He be, what a beard° hast thou got! Thou hast got more hair on thy chin than Dobbin my fill-horse° has on his tail.

LAUNCELOT [Rises.] It should seem then that Dobbin's tail grows backward. I am sure he had more hair of his tail than I have of my face when I last saw him.

GOBBO Lord, how art thou changed! How dost thou and thy master agree? I have brought him a present. How 'gree you now?

LAUNCELOT Well, well; but for mine own part, as I have set up my rest° to run away, so I will not rest till I have run some ground. My master's a very Jew. Give him a present? Give him a halter!° I am famished in his service; you may tell° every finger I have with my ribs. Father, I am glad you are come. Give me your present to one Master Bassanio, who indeed gives rare new liveries. If I serve not him I will run as far as God has any ground. O rare fortune, here comes the man. To him, father, for 'I am a Jew if I serve the Jew any longer.

Enter BASSANIO, with [LEONARDO and] a FOLLOWER or two.

BASSANIO You may do so, but let it be so hasted that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock.

66-67 Do . . . prop spoken directly to the audience 68, 72 father a term of courtesy often used by the young to the old, without implying blood relationship 93 beard the sand-blind father places his hand on his son's head, and mistakes Launcelot's fashionable long hair for a huge beard 95 fill-horse cart horse 103 set . . . rest wagered all (with word play on "rest" and "run") 105 halter hangman's noose 106 tell count

See these letters delivered, put the liveries to making, 115 and desire Gratiano to come anon° to my lodging.

[Exit one of his MEN.]

LAUNCELOT To him, father!

GOBBO God bless your worship!

BASSANIO Gramercy.° Wouldst thou aught with me?

GOBBO Here's my son, sir, a poor boy— 120

LAUNCELOT Not a poor boy, sir, but the rich Jew's man, that would, sir, as my father shall specify—

GOBBO He hath a great infection,° sir, as one would say, to serve—

LAUNCELOT Indeed, the short and the long is, I serve 125
the Jew, and have a desire, as my father shall specify—

GOBBO His master and he, saving your worship's reverence, are scarce cater-cousins.°

LAUNCELOT To be brief, the very truth is that the Jew, having done me wrong, doth cause me, as my 130 father, being I hope an old man, shall frutify° unto
you—

GOBBO I have here a dish of doves that I would bestow upon your worship, and my suit is—

LAUNCELOT In very brief, the suit is impertinent° to 135 myself, as your worship shall know by this honest old man, and though I say it, though old man, yet poor man, my father.

BASSANIO One speak for both. What would you?

LAUNCELOT Serve you, sir. 140

GOBBO That is the very defect° of the matter, sir.

BASSANIO

I know thee well; thou hast obtained thy suit.

Shylock thy master spoke with me this day,

And hath preferred° thee, if it be preferment

To leave a rich Jew's service to become 145

The follower of so poor a gentleman.

LAUNCELOT The old proverb° is very well parted between my master Shylock and you, sir. You have the grace of God, sir, and he hath enough.

BASSANIO

Thou speak'st it well. Go, father, with thy son; 150

Take leave of thy old master and inquire

My lodging out. [To a SERVANT.] Give him a livery
More guarded° than his fellows'. See it done.

LAUNCELOT Father, in. I cannot get a service; no! I have ne'er a tongue in my head! Well! [Studies his 155 palm.] If any man in Italy have a fairer table° which doth offer to swear upon a book—I shall have good fortune! Go to, here's a simple line of life. Here's a small trifle of wives. Alas, fifteen wives is nothing; eleven widows and nine maids is a simple coming-in 160 for one man. And then to scape drowning thrice, and to be in peril of my life with the edge of a feather bed!
Here are simple scapes.° Well, if Fortune be a woman, she's a good wench for this gear.° Father, come. I'll take my leave of the Jew in the twinkling. 165

Exit clown [LAUNCELOT, with old GOBBO].

BASSANIO

I pray thee, good Leonardo, think on this:

These things being bought and orderly bestowed,

Return in haste, for I do feast tonight

My best-esteemed acquaintance. Hie thee, go.

LEONARDO

My best endeavors shall be done herein. 170

Enter GRATIANO.

GRATIANO

Where's your master?

LEONARDO

Yonder, sir, he walks.

Exit LEONARDO.

GRATIANO

Signior Bassanio!

BASSANIO

Gratiano!

GRATIANO

I have suit to you.

BASSANIO

You have obtained it!

GRATIANO

You must not deny me. I must go with you to Belmont.

BASSANIO

Why then you must. But hear thee, Gratiano: 175

Thou art too wild, too rude, and bold of voice—

Parts that become thee happily enough

And in such eyes as ours appear not faults;

But where thou art not known—why, there they show

Something too liberal.° Pray thee take pain 180

To allay with some cold drops of modesty

Thy skipping spirit, lest through thy wild behavior

I be misconst' red° in the place I go to,

And lose my hopes.

GRATIANO

Signior Bassanio, hear me:

If I do not put on a sober habit,° 185

Talk with respect, and swear but now and then,

Wear prayer books in my pocket, look demurely—

Nay more, while grace is saying hood mine eyes

Thus with my hat, and sigh and say amen,

Use all the observance of civility° 190

Like one well studied in a sad ostent°

To please his grandam, never trust me more.

BASSANIO

Well, we shall see your bearing.

GRATIANO

Nay, but I bar tonight. You shall not gauge me
By what we do tonight.

BASSANIO

No, that were pity. 195

I would entreat you rather to put on

Your boldest suit of mirth, for we have friends

That purpose merriment. But fare you well;

I have some business.

GRATIANO

And I must to Lorenzo and the rest, 200

But we will visit you at supper time.

Exeunt.

116 anon straightway 119 Gramercy many thanks (French grand merci) 123 infection Gobbo's mistake for affection (i.e., liking) 128 cater-cousins great friends 131 frutify for fructify, a blunder for a word like signify 135 impertinent for pertinent 141 defect for effect 144 preferred recommended for a higher position 147 proverb such as, "He that hath the grace of God hath enough" 153 guarded ornamented 156 table palm 163 scapes escapes 164 gear business (i.e., the good fortune that he pretends to read in his palm)

180 liberal free (a kind word to describe Gratiano!) 183 misconst' red misconstrued 185 habit (1) bearing (2) garment 190 civility civilized behavior 191 sad ostent sober and earnest appearance

[Scene III. Venice. Shylock's house.]

Enter JESSICA and [LAUNCELOT] the clown.

JESSICA

I am sorry thou wilt leave my father so;
Our house is hell, and thou a merry devil
Didst rob it of some taste of tediousness.
But fare thee well; there is a ducat for thee.
And, Launcelot, soon at supper shalt thou see
Lorenzo, who is thy new master's guest.
Give him this letter; do it secretly.
And so farewell. I would not have my father
See me in talk with thee.

LAUNCELOT Adieu!° Tears exhibit° my tongue. Most 10 beautiful pagan, most sweet Jew, if a Christian do not play the knave and get thee, I am much deceived.°
But adieu! These foolish drops do something drown my manly spirit. Adieu!

JESSICA

Farewell, good Launcelot. [Exit LAUNCELOT.] 15
Alack, what heinous sin is it in me
To be ashamed to be my father's child!
But though I am a daughter to his blood,
I am not to his manners. O Lorenzo,
If thou keep promise, I shall end this strife,
Become a Christian and thy loving wife! 20
Exit.

[Scene IV. Venice. A street.]

Enter GRATIANO, LORENZO, SALERIO, and SOLANIO.

LORENZO

Nay, we will slink away in supper time,
Disguise us at my lodging, and return
All in an hour.

GRATIANO

We have not made good preparation.

SALERIO

We have not spoke us yet of torchbearers.° 5

SOLANIO

'Tis vile, unless it may be quaintly ordered,°
And better in my mind not undertook.

LORENZO

'Tis now but four of clock. We have two hours
To furnish us.

Enter LAUNCELOT [with a letter].

Friend Launcelot, what's the news?

LAUNCELOT And it shall please you to break up° this, 10
it shall seem to signify.

LORENZO

I know the hand. In faith, 'tis a fair hand,

And whiter than the paper it° writ on
Is the fair hand that writ.

GRATIANO

Love-news, in faith!

LAUNCELOT By your leave, sir. 15

LORENZO Whither goest thou?

LAUNCELOT Marry, sir, to bid° my old master the Jew to sup tonight with my new master the Christian.

LORENZO

Hold here, take this. [Gives money.] Tell gentle° Jessica
I will not fail her. Speak it privately. 20

Exit clown [LAUNCELOT].

Go, gentlemen;

Will you prepare you for this masque tonight?
I am provided of a torchbearer.

SALERIO

Ay marry, I'll be gone about it straight.

SOLANIO

And so will I.

LORENZO Meet me and Gratiano 25

At Gratiano's lodging some hour hence.

SALERIO

'Tis good we do so. Exit [with SOLANIO].

GRATIANO

Was not that letter from fair Jessica?

LORENZO

I must needs tell thee all. She hath directed
How I shall take her from her father's house, 30
What gold and jewels she is furnished with,
What page's suit she hath in readiness.
If e'er the Jew her father come to heaven,
It will be for his gentle° daughter's sake;
And never dare misfortune cross her foot,° 35
Unless she do it under this excuse,
That she is issue to a faithless° Jew.
Come, go with me; peruse this as thou goest.
Fair Jessica shall be my torchbearer.°

Exit [with GRATIANO].

[Scene V. Venice. Before Shylock's house.]

Enter [SHYLOCK the] Jew and [LAUNCELOT,] his man that was the clown.

SHYLOCK

Well, thou shalt see, thy eyes shall be thy judge,
The difference of old Shylock and Bassanio.—
What,° Jessica!—Thou shalt not gormandize
As thou hast done with me.—What, Jessica!—
And sleep, and snore, and rend apparel out.— 5
Why, Jessica, I say!

LAUNCELOT Why, Jessica!

SHYLOCK

Who bids thee call? I do not bid thee call.

LAUNCELOT Your worship was wont to tell me I could do nothing without bidding.

Enter JESSICA.

II.iii.10 Adieu perhaps not merely "good-by," but "I commend you to God"; exhibit for inhibit II-12 if . . . deceived perhaps Launcelot is giving a hint of what happens in II.v, but perhaps "do" should be emended to "did," and "get" should be understood in the sense of "beget"

II.iv.5 spoke . . . torchbearers talked about getting torchbearers (who were regularly used in this sort of street festivity) 6 quaintly ordered artfully arranged 10 break up open

13 it the hand 17 bid ask 19, 34 gentle charming and possessed of all attributes of a lady (with a pun on gentile, as elsewhere) 35 cross her foot cross her path 37 faithless lacking the Christian faith 39 torchbearer i.e., disguised as a page

II.v.3 What exclamation of impatience, like "Why" in line 6

JESSICA Call you? What is your will?

SHYLOCK

I am bid forth to supper, Jessica.

There are my keys. But wherefore should I go?

I am not bid for love—they flatter me.

But yet I'll go in hate, to feed upon

The prodigal Christian. Jessica my girl,

Look to my house. I am right loath to go.

There is some ill a-brewing towards my rest,

For I did dream of moneybags tonight.°

LAUNCELOT I beseech you, sir, go. My young master doth expect your reproach.°

SHYLOCK So do I his.

LAUNCELOT And they have conspired together. I will not say you shall see a masque, but if you do, then it was not for nothing that my nose fell a-bleeding on Black Monday° last at six o'clock i' th' morning, 25 falling out that year on Ash Wednesday was four year in th' afternoon.°

SHYLOCK

What, are there masques? Hear you me, Jessica:

Lock up my doors; and when you hear the drum

And the vile squealing of the wry-necked fife,°

Clamber not you up to the casements then,

Nor thrust your head into the public street

To gaze on Christian fools with varnished faces;°

But stop my house's ears—I mean my casements;

Let not the sound of shallow fopp'ry enter

My sober house. By Jacob's staff I swear

I have no mind of feasting forth tonight;

But I will go. Go you before me, sirrah.

Say I will come.

LAUNCELOT I will go before, sir.

Mistress, look out at window for all this:

There will come a Christian by

Will be worth a Jewess' eye. [Exit.]

SHYLOCK

What says that fool of Hagar's offspring,° ha?

JESSICA

His words were "Farewell, mistress"—nothing else.

SHYLOCK

The patch° is kind enough, but a huge feeder,

Snail-slow in profit,° and he sleeps by day

More than the wildcat. Drones hive not with me;

Therefore I part with him, and part with him

To one that I would have him help to waste

His borrowed purse. Well, Jessica, go in;

Perhaps I will return immediately.

Do as I bid you, shut doors after you.

18 tonight last night (the premonition is serious for Shylock, comic for the audience) 20 reproach Launcelot's word for approach 25 Black Monday Easter Monday 26-27 falling . . . afternoon apparently Launcelot means "four years ago on Ash Wednesday," but he may be intentionally talking nonsense 30 wry-necked fife fife-player with neck twisted to one side (the mouthpiece of the Elizabethan fife was set at an angle, and these words are therefore sometimes taken to mean the instrument; but Shylock would be less scornful of the instrument than of the gay fool with his neck at a crazy angle) 33 varnished faces painted masks (Shylock no doubt puns on varnished in the sense of "insincere") 43 Hagar's offspring Ishmael, son of Abraham by the servant Hagar (mother and son were cast out by Abraham after Isaac's birth) 45 patch fool 46 in profit in any profitable activity

10 Fast bind, fast find,
A proverb never stale in thrifty mind. Exit.

JESSICA

Farewell; and if my fortune be not crost,

I have a father, you a daughter, lost. Exit. 55

15 [Scene VI. Venice. Before Shylock's house.]

Enter the masquers GRATIANO and SALERIO.

GRATIANO

This is the penthouse° under which Lorenzo

Desired us to make stand.

SALERIO

His hour is almost past.

GRATIANO

And it is marvel he outdwells his hour,

For lovers ever run before the clock.

SALERIO

O ten times faster Venus' pigeons° fly

To seal love's bonds new-made, than they are wont

To keep obligèd faith° unforfeited! 5

GRATIANO

That ever holds. Who riseth from a feast

With that keen appetite that he sits down?

Where is the horse that doth untread again 10

His tedious measures° with the unbated fire

That he did pace them first? All things that are 35 Are with more spirit chasèd than enjoyed.

How like a younger° or a prodigal

The scarfèd° bark puts from her native bay, 15

Hugged and embracèd by the strumpet wind!

How like the prodigal doth she return,

With overweathered° ribs and ragged sails,

40 Lean, rent, and beggared by the strumpet wind!

Enter LORENZO.

SALERIO

Here comes Lorenzo: more of this hereafter. 20

LORENZO

Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode.°

Not I but my affairs have made you wait.

When you shall please to play the thieves for wives,

I'll watch as long for you then. Approach;

Here dwells my father Jew. Ho, who's within? 25

[Enter] JESSICA above [in boy's clothes].

JESSICA

Who are you? Tell me for more certainty,

Albeit I'll swear that I do know your tongue.

LORENZO

Lorenzo, and thy love.

JESSICA

Lorenzo certain, and my love indeed,

For who love I so much? And now who knows 30

But you, Lorenzo, whether I am yours?

LORENZO

Heaven and thy thoughts are witness that thou art.

II.vi.i penthouse shelter formed by a projecting roof 5 Venus' pigeons they drew her chariot 7 obligèd faith faith pledged (in marriage) 11 measures paces 14 younger younger son 15 scarfèd decorated with scarfs (i.e., flags and streamers) 18 overweathered long exposed to stormy weather 21 abode delay

JESSICA

Here, catch this casket; it is worth the pains.
 I am glad 'tis night, you° do not look on me,
 For I am much ashamed of my exchange.°
 But love is blind, and lovers cannot see
 The pretty follies that themselves commit;
 For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
 To see me thus transformèd to a boy.

LORENZO

Descend, for you must be my torchbearer.

JESSICA

What, must I hold a candle to my shames?
 They in themselves, good sooth, are too too light.°
 Why, 'tis an office of discovery,° love,
 And I should be obscured.

LORENZO

So are you, sweet,

Even in the lovely garnish° of a boy.

But come at once;

For the close° night doth play the runaway,

And we are stayed for at Bassanio's feast.

JESSICA

I will make fast the doors and gild myself
 With some moe° ducats, and be with you straight. 50
[Exit above.]

GRATIANO

Now by my hood, a gentle° and no Jew!

LORENZO

Beshrow° me but I love her heartily!

For she is wise, if I can judge of her,

And fair she is, if that mine eyes be true,

And true she is, as she hath proved herself; 55

And therefore, like herself, wise, fair, and true,

Shall she be placèd in my constant soul.

Enter JESSICA [below].

What, art thou come? On, gentlemen, away!

Our masquing mates by this time for us stay.

Exit [with JESSICA and SALERIO].

Enter ANTONIO.

ANTONIO Who's there?

GRATIANO Signior Antonio?

ANTONIO

Fie, fie, Gratiano, where are all the rest?

'Tis nine o'clock, our friends all stay for you.

No masque tonight. The wind is come about;

Bassanio presently° will go aboard. 65

I have sent twenty out to seek for you.

GRATIANO

I am glad on't. I desire no more delight

Than to be under sail and gone tonight. Exeunt.

[Scene VII. Belmont. Portia's house.]

[Flourish of cornets.] Enter PORTIA, with MOROCCO and both their TRAINS.

34 'tis night, you an ellipsis, "and" being understood 35 exchange of clothes 42 light immodest (with a pun) 43 office of discovery task in which my disguise will be revealed 45 garnish pleasing attire 47 close secret 50 moe more
 51 gentle refined lady (with the usual pun on gentile) 52
 Beshrow a light word for curse 65 presently at this present moment

PORTIA

Go, draw aside the curtains and discover°

The several caskets to this noble prince.

35 Now make your choice.

MOROCCO

This first, of gold, who this inscription bears,

"Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire." 5

The second, silver, which this promise carries,

"Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves."

40 This third, dull lead, with warning all as blunt,°

"Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath."

How shall I know if I do choose the right? 10

PORTIA

The one of them contains my picture, prince.

If you choose that, then I am yours withal.

MOROCCO

Some god direct my judgment! Let me see—

I will survey th' inscriptions back again.

What says this leaden casket? 15

"Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath."

Must give—for what? For lead! Hazard for lead?

This casket threatens; men that hazard all

Do it in hope of fair advantages.

A golden mind stoops not to shows of dross; 20

I'll then nor give nor hazard aught for lead.

What says the silver with her virgin hue?

"Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves."

As much as he deserves? Pause here, Morocco,

And weigh thy value with an even hand: 25

If thou be'st rated by thy estimation,°

55 Thou dost deserve enough, and yet enough

May not extend so far as to the lady;

And yet to be afeard of my deserving

Were but a weak disabling° of myself. 30

As much as I deserve? Why that's the lady!

I do in birth deserve her, and in fortunes,

In graces, and in qualities of breeding;

But more than these, in love I do deserve.

What if I strayed no farther, but chose here? 35

Let's see once more this saying graved in gold:

60 "Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire."

Why that's the lady! All the world desires her;

From the four corners of the earth they come

To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing saint. 40

The Hyrcanian deserts° and the vasty wilds

Of wide Arabia are as throughfares now

65 For princes to come view fair Portia.

The watery kingdom, whose ambitious head

Spets in the face of heaven, is no bar 45

To stop the foreign spirits, but they come

As o'er a brook to see fair Portia.

One of these three contains her heavenly picture.

Is't like that lead contains her? 'Twere damnation

To think so base a thought; it were too gross° 50

To rib her cerecloth° in the obscure° grave.

II.vii.I discover reveal 8 as blunt as blunt as the lead is dull (with quibbles on blunt in the senses of "abrupt in speech and manner" and "not sharp," and on dull in the senses of "not sharp" and "not shining") 26 estimation reputation 30 disabling undervaluing 41 Hyrcanian deserts Persian deserts (famous for savage beasts) 50 it . . . gross lead would be too coarse (bodies of wealthy persons were often encased in lead) 51 cerecloth waxed embalming cloth; obscure accent on first syllable

Or shall I think in silver she's immured,
Being ten times undervalued to tried gold?
O sinful thought! Never so rich a gem
Was set in worse than gold. They have in England 55
A coin that bears the figure of an angel
Stampèd in gold—but that's insculped^o upon;
But here an angel^o in a golden bed
Lies all within. Deliver me the key.
Here do I choose, and thrive I as I may! 60

PORTIA

There, take it, prince; and if my form lie there,
Then I am yours. [He opens the golden casket.]

MOROCCO O hell! What have we here?

A carrion death,^o within whose empty eye
There is a written scroll! I'll read the writing.

"All that glisters is not gold;^o 65
Often have you heard that told.
Many a man his life hath sold
But my outside to behold;
Gilded tombs do worms infold.
Had you been as wise as bold, 70
Young in limbs, in judgment old,
Your answer had not been inscrolled.^o
Fare you well, your suit is cold."

Cold indeed, and labor lost.

Then farewell heat, and welcome frost! 75

Portia, adieu. I have too grieved a heart

To take a tedious leave. Thus losers part.

Exit [with his TRAIN. Flourish of cornets].

PORTIA

A gentle^o riddance. Draw the curtains, go.

Let all of his complexion^o choose me so. Exeunt.

[Scene VIII. Venice. A street.]

Enter SALERIO and SOLANIO.

SALERIO

Why, man, I saw Bassanio under sail;

With him is Gratiano gone along,

And in their ship I am sure Lorenzo is not.

SOLANIO

The villain^o Jew with outcries raised the duke,

Who went with him to search Bassanio's ship. 5

SALERIO

He came too late, the ship was under sail.

But there the duke was given to understand

That in a gondola were seen together

Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica.

Besides, Antonio certified the duke

They were not with Bassanio in his ship.

SOLANIO

I never heard a passion^o so confused,

So strange, outrageous, and so variable

As the dog Jew did utter in the streets:

"My daughter! O my ducats! O my daughter! 15

Fled with a Christian! O my Christian ducats!

Justice! The law! My ducats and my daughter!

A sealèd bag, two sealèd bags of ducats,

Of double ducats, stol'n from me by my daughter!

And jewels—two stones, two rich and precious stones, 20

Stol'n by my daughter! Justice! Find the girl!

She hath the stones upon her, and the ducats!"

SALERIO

Why, all the boys in Venice follow him,

Crying his stones, his daughter, and his ducats.

SOLANIO

Let good Antonio look he keep his day,^o 25

Or he shall pay for this.

SALERIO

Marry, well rememb'red.

I reasoned^o with a Frenchman yesterday,

Who told me, in the narrow seas^o that part

The French and English there miscarrièd

A vessel of our country richly fraught.^o 30

I thought upon Antonio when he told me,

And wished in silence that it were not his.

SOLANIO

You were best to tell Antonio what you hear.

Yet do not suddenly, for it may grieve him.

SALERIO

A kinder gentleman treads not the earth. 35

I saw Bassanio and Antonio part.

Bassanio told him he would make some speed

Of his return; he answered, "Do not so.

Slubber^o not business for my sake, Bassanio,

But stay the very riping of the time; 40

And for the Jew's bond which he hath of me,

Let it not enter in your mind of love.^o

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts

To courtship and such fair ostents^o of love

As shall conveniently become you there." 45

And even there, his eye being big with tears,

Turning his face, he put his hand behind him,

And with affection wondrous sensible^o

He wrung Bassanio's hand; and so they parted.

SOLANIO

I think he only loves the world for him. 50

I pray thee let us go and find him out,

And quicken his embracèd heaviness^o

With some delight or other.

SALERIO

Do we so.

Exeunt.

[Scene IX. Belmont. Portia's house.]

Enter NERISSA and a SERVITOR.

10 NERISSA

Quick, quick I pray thee, draw the curtain straight.^o

The Prince of Aragon hath ta'en his oath,

And comes to his election^o presently.^o

57 insculped sculptured 58 angel Portia's picture 63 death death's head 65 All . . . gold proverbial 72 inscrolled written on the scroll 78 gentle well-bred 79 complexion temperament (not merely coloring)

II.viii.4 villain low-bred fellow (not scoundrel; a vaguer term than today) 12 passion emotional outburst

25 keep his day pay on the exact day appointed 27 reasoned talked 28 narrow seas English Channel 30 fraught freighted 39 Slubber hurry over in a slovenly way 42 mind of love loving thoughts (probably about both Antonio and Portia) 44 ostents shows, expressions 48 affection wondrous sensible wonderfully strong emotion 52 quicken . . . heaviness lighten the gloom which he has embraced

II.ix.I straight at once 3 election choice; presently at this present moment, instantly [Flourish of cornets.] Enter ARAGON, his TRAIN, and PORTIA.

PORTIA

Behold, there stand the caskets, noble prince.
If you choose that wherein I am contained,
Straight shall our nuptial rites be solemnized;
But if you fail, without more speech, my lord,
You must be gone from hence immediately.

ARAGON

I am enjoined by oath to observe three things:
First, never to unfold to any one
Which casket 'twas I chose; next, if I fail
Of the right casket, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage;
Lastly, if I do fail in fortune of my choice,
Immediately to leave you and be gone.

PORTIA

To these injunctions everyone doth swear
That comes to hazard for my worthless self.

ARAGON

And so^o have I addressed me.^o Fortune now
To my heart's hope! Gold, silver, and base lead.
"Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath." 20
You shall look fairer ere I give or hazard.
What says the golden chest? Ha, let me see!
"Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire."
What many men desire—that "many" may be meant
By^o the fool multitude that choose by show, 25
Not learning more than the fond^o eye doth teach,
Which pries not to th' interior, but like the martlet^o
Builds in the weather on the outward wall,
Even in the force and road of casualty.^o
I will not choose what many men desire, 30
Because I will not jump with^o common spirits
And rank me with the barbarous multitudes.
Why then, to thee, thou silver treasure house!
Tell me once more what title thou dost bear.
"Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves." 35
And well said too, for who shall go about
To cozen^o fortune, and be honorable
Without the stamp of merit? Let none presume
To wear an undeservèd dignity.
O that estates, degrees,^o and offices^o 40
Were not derived corruptly, and that clear honor
Were purchased by the merit of the wearer!
How many then should cover^o that stand bare!
How many be commanded that command;
How much low peasantry would then be gleanèd^o 45
From the true seed of honor!^o And how much honor
Picked from the chaff and ruin of the times
To be new varnished.^o Well, but to my choice.
"Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves."
I will assume desert. Give me a key for this, 50
And instantly unlock my fortunes here.

[He opens the silver casket.]

PORTIA

Too long a pause for that which you find there.^o

ARAGON

What's here? The portrait of a blinking idiot
Presenting me a schedule!^o I will read it. 5
How much unlike art thou to Portia!
How much unlike my hopes and my deservings!
"Who chooseth me shall have as much as he deserves."
Did I deserve no more than a fool's head?
Is that my prize? Are my deserts no better?

PORTIA

To offend and judge are distinct offices, 60
And of opposèd natures.^o

ARAGON

What is here?

"The fire^o seven times tried this;^o
Seven times tried that judgment is
That did never choose amiss.
Some there be that shadows kiss; 65
Such have but a shadow's bliss.
There be fools alive iwis,^o
Silvered o'er,^o and so was this.
Take what wife you will to bed,
I^o will ever be your head. 70
So be gone; you are sped."^o

Still more fool I shall appear
By the time I linger here.
With one fool's head I came to woo,
But I go away with two. 75
Sweet, adieu. I'll keep my oath,
Patiently to bear my wroath.^o [Exit, with his TRAIN.]

PORTIA

Thus hath the candle singed the moth.
O these deliberate fools! When they do choose,
They have the wisdom by their wit^o to lose. 80

NERISSA

The ancient saying is no heresy:
Hanging and wiving goes by destiny.

PORTIA

Come draw the curtain, Nerissa.

Enter MESSENGER.

MESSENGER

Where is my lady?

PORTIA

Here. What would my lord?^o

MESSENGER

Madam, there is alighted at your gate 85
A young Venetian, one that comes before
To signify th' approaching of his lord,
From whom he bringeth sensible regrets,^o
To wit, besides commends and courteous breath,
Gifts of rich value. Yet I have not seen^o 90
So likely^o an ambassador of love.

18 so on these terms; have . . . me I have addressed myself (to this affair) 25 By with regard to 26 fond foolish 27 martlet martin, a bird 29 in . . . casualty exposed to the tyrannic force of mischance and lying in the open road 31 jump with accord with 37 cozen cheat 40 degrees ranks; offices official positions 43 cover wear hats, in sign of authority 45 gleanèd picked out, as in gleaning grain (cf. line 47, "Picked from the chaff") 46 seed of honor descendants of ancient nobility 48 To . . . varnished to have the luster of their family restored

52 Too . . . there probably an aside 54 schedule scroll 60-61 To . . . natures The offender is not to judge himself 62 fire pronounced fí-er; this the silver of the casket 67 iwis certainly 68 Silvered o'er with the gray hair usually associated with wisdom 70 I the "blinking idiot" of line 53 71 you are sped you have achieved your fortune 77 wroath heavy lot (?) 80 wit cleverness 84 What . . . lord a gay, jesting retort to the Messenger's "my lady" 88 sensible regrets a quibble: greetings (1) expressing strong feeling, and (2) conveying tangible gifts 90 Yet . . . seen not yet have I seen 91 likely promising

A day in April never came so sweet
To show how costly° summer was at hand,
As this forespurrer° comes before his lord.

PORTIA

No more, I pray thee. I am half afeard 95
Thou wilt say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend'st such high-day wit° in praising him.
Come, come, Nerissa, for I long to see
Quick Cupid's post° that comes so mannerly.

NERISSA

Bassanio, Lord Love,° if thy will it be! Exeunt. 100

[A C T I I I]

[Scene I. Venice. A street.]

[Enter] SOLANIO and SALERIO.

SOLANIO Now what news on the Rialto?

SALERIO Why, yet it lives there unchecked° that Antonio hath a ship of rich lading wracked on the narrow seas°—the Goodwins° I think they call the place
—a very dangerous flat, and fatal, where the carcasses 5 of many a tall ship lie buried as they say, if my gossip°
Report be an honest woman of her word.

SOLANIO I would she were as lying a gossip in that, as ever knapped° ginger or made her neighbors believe she wept for the death of a third husband. But it is 10 true, without any slips of prolixity° or crossing the plain highway of talk,° that the good Antonio, the honest Antonio—O that I had a title good enough to keep his name company!—

SALERIO Come, the full stop.° 15

SOLANIO Ha, what sayest thou? Why the end is, he hath lost a ship.

SALERIO I would it might prove the end of his losses.

SOLANIO Let me say amen betimes,° lest the devil cross my prayer, for here he comes in the likeness of a 20 Jew.

Enter SHYLOCK.

How now, Shylock? What news among the merchants?

SHYLOCK You knew, none so well, none so well as you, of my daughter's flight.

SALERIO That's certain. I for my part knew the tailor 25 that made the wings she flew withal.

SOLANIO And Shylock for his own part knew the bird was fledge,° and then it is the complexion° of them all to leave the dam.

SHYLOCK She is damned for it. 30

SALERIO That's certain, if the devil may be her judge.

93 costly rich, plenteous 94 forespurrer advance messenger
(one who spurs his horse ahead of his party) 97 high-day wit imagination befitting a festive occasion 99 post messenger
100 Lord Love god of love

III.i.2 it . . . unchecked it is reported without dispute 4 narrow seas English Channel; Goodwins Goodwin Sands, a shoal 6 gossip talkative comrade 9 knapped snapped, bit 11 slips of prolixity long-winded lies 11–12 crossing . . . talk going counter to honest speech 15 Come
. . . stop Come to the end of your sentence 19 betimes promptly 28 fledge feathered, able to fly; complexion natural disposition

SHYLOCK My own flesh and blood to rebel!

SOLANIO Out upon it, old carrion! Rebels it° at these years?

SHYLOCK I say my daughter is my flesh and my 35
blood.

SALERIO There is more difference between thy flesh and hers than between jet and ivory, more between your bloods than there is between red wine and Rhenish. But tell us, do you hear whether Antonio 40 have had any loss at sea or no?

SHYLOCK There I have another bad match! A bank-rout,° a prodigal, who dare scarce show his head on the Rialto, a beggar that was used to come so smug° upon the mart! Let him look to his bond. He was wont 45 to call me usurer. Let him look to his bond. He was wont to lend money for a Christian cursy.° Let him look to his bond.

SALERIO Why, I am sure if he forfeit thou wilt not take his flesh. What's that good for? 50

SHYLOCK To bait fish withal. If it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge. He hath disgraced me, and hind'red me half a million, laughed at my losses, mocked at my gains, scorned my nation, thwarted my bargains, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies— 55 and what's his reason? I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes? Hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions,° senses, affections,° passions?—fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and 60 cooled by the same winter and summer as a Christian is? If you prick us, do we not bleed? If you tickle us, do we not laugh? If you poison us, do we not die?
And if you wrong us, shall we not revenge? If we are like you in the rest, we will resemble you in that. If a 65
Jew wrong a Christian, what is his humility?° Revenge!
If a Christian wrong a Jew, what should his sufferance be by Christian example? Why revenge! The villainy you teach me I will execute, and it shall go hard but I will better the instruction. 70

Enter a MAN from Antonio.

[MAN] Gentlemen, my master Antonio is at his house,
and desires to speak with you both.

SALERIO We have been up and down to seek him.

Enter TUBAL.

SOLANIO Here comes another of the tribe. A third cannot be matched, unless the devil himself turn Jew. 75

Exeunt gentlemen [SOLANIO, SALERIO, and MAN].

SHYLOCK How now, Tubal! What news from Genoa?
Hast thou found my daughter?

TUBAL I often came where I did hear of her, but cannot find her.

SHYLOCK Why there, there, there, there! A diamond 80 gone cost me two thousand ducats in Frankford! The curse never fell upon our nation till now; I never felt it till now. Two thousand ducats in that, and other precious, precious jewels. I would my daughter were 33 Rebels it a contemptuous pun on "flesh and blood" in line

32 in the sense of fleshly desire 42–43 bankrout bankrupt 44 smug well-groomed 47 cursy courtesy 57 dimensions limbs, features, etc. 58 affections feelings 66 what . . .
humility what does his Christian humility amount to dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear! Would she 85 were hearsed at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin!

No news of them? Why, so! And I know not what's spent in the search. Why thou loss upon loss—the thief gone with so much, and so much to find the 90 thief!—and no satisfaction, no revenge, nor no ill luck stirring but what lights o' my shoulders, no sighs but o' my breathing, no tears but o' my shedding.

TUBAL Yes, other men have ill luck too. Antonio, as I heard in Genoa—

SHYLOCK What, what, what? Ill luck, ill luck? 95

TUBAL Hath an argosy cast away coming from Tripolis.

SHYLOCK I thank God, I thank God! Is it true, is it true?

TUBAL I spoke with some of the sailors that escaped the 100 wrack.

SHYLOCK I thank thee, good Tubal. Good news, good news! Ha, ha! Heard in Genoa?

TUBAL Your daughter spent in Genoa, as I heard, one night fourscore ducats. 105

SHYLOCK Thou stick'st a dagger in me. I shall never see my gold again. Fourscore ducats at a sitting, fourscore ducats!

TUBAL There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice that swear he cannot choose but 110 break.°

SHYLOCK I am very glad of it. I'll plague him; I'll torture him. I am glad of it.

TUBAL One of them showed me a ring that he had of your daughter for a monkey. 115

SHYLOCK Out upon her! Thou torturest me, Tubal.
It was my turquoise; I had it of Leah° when I was a bachelor. I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys.

TUBAL But Antonio is certainly undone. 120

SHYLOCK Nay, that's true, that's very true. Go,
Tubal, fee me an officer;° bespeak° him a fortnight before. I will have the heart of him if he forfeit, for were he out of Venice I can make what merchandise° I will. Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue; go, 125 good Tubal; at our synagogue, Tubal. Exeunt.

[Scene II. Belmont. Portia's house.]

Enter BASSANIO, PORTIA, GRATIANO, [NERISSA,] and all their TRAINS.

PORTIA

I pray you tarry; pause a day or two
Before you hazard, for in choosing wrong
I lose your company. Therefore forbear awhile.
There's something tells me (but it is not love)
I would not lose you; and you know yourself 5
Hate counsels not in such a quality.°
But lest you should not understand me well—
And yet a maiden hath no tongue but thought—
I would detain you here some month or two Before you venture for me. I could teach you 10

III break go bankrupt 117 Leah Shylock's wife 122 officer to arrest Antonio; bespeak engage 124 merchandise wealth
III.ii.6 in . . . quality in such a manner of speech as I am using to you

How to choose right, but then I am forsworn.

So will I never be. So may you miss me.

But if you do, you'll make me wish a sin—

That I had been forsworn. Beshrow° your eyes!

They have o'erlooked° me and divided me; 15

One half of me is yours, the other half yours—

Mine own I would say; but if mine then yours,

And so all yours! O these naughty° times

Puts bars between the owners and their rights!

And so, though yours, not yours. Prove it so,° 20

Let fortune go to hell for it, not I.

I speak too long, but 'tis to peize° the time,

To eche° it and to draw it out in length,

To stay you from election.

BASSANIO Let me choose,

For as I am, I live upon the rack.° 25

PORTIA

Upon the rack, Bassanio? Then confess

What treason there is mingled with your love.°

BASSANIO

None but that ugly treason of mistrust,

Which makes me fear th' enjoying of my love.

There may as well be amity and life 30

'Tween snow and fire, as treason and my love.

PORTIA

Ay, but I fear you speak upon the rack,

Where men enforcèd° do speak anything.

BASSANIO

Promise me life, and I'll confess the truth.

PORTIA

Well then, confess and live.

BASSANIO

Confess and love 35

Had been the very sum of my confession!

O happy torment, when my torturer

Doth teach me answers for deliverance.°

But let me to my fortune and the caskets.

PORTIA

Away then! I am locked in one of them; 40

If you do love me, you will find me out.

Nerissa and the rest, stand all aloof.

Let music sound while he doth make his choice;

Then if he lose he makes a swanlike end,°

Fading in music. That the comparison 45

May stand more proper, my eye shall be the stream

And wat'ry deathbed for him. He may win;

And what is music then? Then music is

Even as the flourish° when true subjects bow

To a new-crownèd monarch. Such it is 50

As are those dulcet sounds in break of day,

That creep into the dreaming bridegroom's ear

And summon him to marriage. Now he goes,

With no less presence,° but with much more love,

14 Beshrow curse (but a playful word) 15 o'erlooked bewitched 18 naughty wicked 20 Prove it so if it should prove so 22 peize weigh down, hence retard 23 eche eke out (i.e., lengthen) 25 rack instrument of torture, on which the body was pulled with great force, often breaking the joints; used to force confessions, especially in trials for treason 27 What . . . love spoken playfully 33 enforcèd compelled (by torture) 38 answers for deliverance answers to free me from torture 44 swanlike end an end like the swan's (who was supposed never to sing until it sang enchantingly at its death) 49 flourish fanfare of trumpets 54 presence noble bearing

Than young Alcides,^o when he did redeem
 The virgin tribute^o paid by howling Troy
 To the sea monster. I stand for sacrifice;
 The rest aloof are the Dardanian wives,
 With bleared visages come forth to view
 The issue of th' exploit. Go, Hercules!
 Live thou,^o I live. With much, much more dismay^o
 I view the fight than thou that mak'st the fray.^o

A song the whilst BASSANIO comments on the caskets to himself.

Tell me where is fancy^o bred,
 Or in the heart, or in the head?
 How begot, how nourishèd?
 Reply, reply.
 It is engend'red in the eyes,
 With gazing fed, and fancy dies
 In the cradle where it lies.
 Let us all ring fancy's knell.
 I'll begin it—Ding, dong, bell.
 ALL Ding, dong, bell.

BASSANIO

So^o may the outward shows be least themselves;^o
 The world is still^o deceived with ornament.
 In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt,
 But being seasoned with a gracious voice,
 Obscures the show of evil? In religion,
 What damnèd error but some sober brow
 Will bless it, and approve it with a text,^o
 Hiding the grossness with fair ornament?
 There is no vice so simple but assumes
 Some mark of virtue on his outward parts.
 How many cowards whose hearts are all as false
 As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
 The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars,
 Who inward searched, have livers white as milk!^o
 And these assume but valor's excrement^o
 To render them redoubted.^o Look on beauty,
 And you shall see 'tis purchased by the weight,
 Which therein works a miracle in nature,
 Making them lightest^o that wear most of it:
 So are those crispèd^o snaky golden locks,
 Which maketh such wanton^o gambols with the wind
 Upon supposèd fairness, often known
 To be the dowry^o of a second head,
 The skull that bred them in the sepulcher.
 Thus ornament is but the guilèd^o shore
 To a most dangerous sea, the beauteous scarf
 Veiling an Indian^o beauty; in a word,
 The seeming truth which cunning times put on
 To entrap the wisest. Therefore then, thou gaudy gold,
 Hard food for Midas, I will none of thee;

55 Nor none of thee, thou pale and common drudge^o
 'Tween man and man. But thou, thou meager^o lead
 Which rather threaten'st than dost promise aught,
 Thy paleness moves me more than eloquence;
 And here choose I. Joy be the consequence!

60 PORTIA [Aside.]

How all the other passions fleet to air,
 As doubtful thoughts, and rash-embraced despair,
 And shudd'ring fear, and green-eyed jealousy.
 O love, be moderate, allay thy ecstasy,
 In measure rain thy joy, scant^o this excess!
 I feel too much thy blessing. Make it less
 For fear I surfeit.^o

65 BASSANIO [Opening the leaden casket.]

What find I here?

Fair Portia's counterfeit!^o What demigod^o
 Hath come so near creation? Move these eyes?
 Or whether, riding on the balls of mine,^o
 Seem they in motion? Here are severed lips
 Parted with sugar breath; so sweet a bar^o
 Should sunder such sweet friends.^o Here in her hairs
 The painter plays the spider, and hath woven
 A golden mesh t' entrap the hearts of men
 Faster^o than gnats in cobwebs. But her eyes—
 How could he see to do them? Having made one,
 Methinks it should have power to steal both his
 And leave itself unfurnished.^o Yet look how far
 The substance^o of my praise doth wrong this shadow^o
 In underprizing it, so far this shadow^o
 Doth limp behind the substance.^o Here's the scroll,
 The continent and summary^o of my fortune.

"You that choose not by the view
 Chance as fair,^o and choose as true.
 Since this fortune falls to you,
 Be content and seek no new.
 If you be well pleased with this
 And hold your fortune for your bliss,
 Turn you where your lady is,
 And claim her with a loving kiss."

90 A gentle^o scroll. Fair lady, by your leave.

[Kisses her.]

I come by note,^o to give and to receive.
 Like one of two contending in a prize,^o
 That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes,
 Hearing applause and universal shout,
 Giddy in spirit, still gazing in a doubt
 Whether those peals of praise be his^o or no—
 So, thrice-fair lady, stand I even so,
 As doubtful whether what I see be true,
 Until confirmed, signed, ratified by you.

103 pale . . . drudge pale hack worker (i.e., silver) 104 meager poverty-stricken, of slight value 112 scant lessen 114 surfeit grow sick with too much (i.e., too much joy)
 115 counterfeit image; demigod half-divine painter 117 balls of mine my eyeballs 119 so . . . bar Portia's breath 120 sweet friends her lips 123 Faster tighter 126 unfurnished not provided with its mate (since the picture of the first eye has taken away both of the painter's eyes) 127, 129 The substance Portia herself 127, 128 this shadow her picture 130 continent and summary that which contains and sums up 132 Chance as fair have as fair fortune 139 gentle courteous, well-bred 140 by note according to instructions (in lines 137–38) 141 prize contest for a prize, as in a tournament 145 his intended for him

55 Alcides Hercules 56 virgin tribute Hesione, Priam's sister, who was offered as a divine sacrifice to be devoured by a sea monster; Hercules slew the monster and saved her 61 Live thou if thou live; dismay alarm and terror 62 fray combat 63 fancy love based only on the senses, especially the sight 73 So thus; least themselves least what they really are 74 still continually 79 approve . . . text prove it by a biblical text 86 livers . . . milk a pale liver supposedly caused cowardice
 87 excrement excrescence, outer appearance 88 redoubted dreaded 91 lightest a pun on light in the sense of "unchaste" 92 crispèd curled 93 wanton playful 95 dowry gift of property (i.e., hair from a dead person's head) 97 guilèd full of guile, treacherous 99 Indian East Indian. hence dusky

PORTIA

You see me, Lord Bassanio, where I stand,
Such as I am. Though for myself alone
I would not be ambitious in my wish
To wish myself much better, yet for you
I would be trebled twenty times myself,
A thousand times more fair, ten thousand times more rich,

That only to stand high in your account,^o
I might in virtues, beauties, livings,^o friends,
Exceed account.^o But the full sum of me
Is sum of something—which, to term in gross,^o
Is an unlessoned girl, unschooled, unpracticed;
Happy in this, she is not yet so old
But she may learn; happier than this,
She is not bred so dull but she can learn;
Happiest of all, is that her gentle spirit
Commits itself to yours to be directed,
As from her lord, her governor, her king.
Myself, and what is mine, to you and yours
Is now converted.^o But now^o I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself
Are yours, my lord's. I give them with this ring,
Which when you part from, lose, or give away,
Let it presage^o the ruin of your love
And be my vantage to exclaim on^o you.

BASSANIO

Madam, you have bereft me of all words.
Only my blood speaks to you in my veins,
And there is such confusion in my powers
As, after some oration fairly spoke
By a belovèd prince,^o there doth appear
Among the buzzing pleasèd multitude;
Where every something being blent together
Turns to a wild of nothing, save of joy
Expressed and not expressed. But when this ring
Parts from this finger, then parts life from hence!
O then be bold to say Bassanio's dead!

NERISSA

My lord and lady, it is now our time,
That have stood by and seen our wishes prosper,
To cry "good joy." Good joy, my lord and lady!

GRATIANO

My Lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish—
For I am sure you can wish none from^o me;
And when your honors mean to solemnize
The bargain of your faith, I do beseech you
Even at that time I may be married too.

BASSANIO

With all my heart, so^o thou canst get a wife.

GRATIANO

I thank your lordship, you have got me one.
My eyes, my lord, can look as swift as yours:

155 account esteem, regard 156 livings possessions 157 account computation 158 term in gross describe in broad terms 167 converted changed (i.e., made yours); But now only now 173 presage foretell 174 vantage . . . on opportunity to cry out against (lines 173–74 are spoken playfully) 179 prince a feminine as well as a masculine noun;
hence suitably applied to Portia 191 from away from 195
so provided

You saw the mistress, I beheld the maid.

You loved, I loved; for intermission^o

150

No more pertains to me, my lord, than you.

200

Your fortune stood upon the caskets there,

And so did mine too, as the matter falls;

For wooing here until I sweat again,^o

And swearing till my very roof^o was dry

With oaths of love, at last—if promise last^o—

205

155

I got a promise of this fair one here

To have her love, provided that your fortune

Achieved her mistress.

PORTIA

Is this true, Nerissa?

NERISSA

160

Madam, it is, so you stand pleased withal.

BASSANIO

And do you, Gratiano, mean good faith?

210

GRATIANO Yes, faith, my lord.

BASSANIO

165

Our feast shall be much honored in your marriage.

GRATIANO We'll play with them the first boy for a thousand ducats.

NERISSA What, and stake down?^o

215

170

GRATIANO No, we shall ne'er win at that sport, and stake down.

But who comes here? Lorenzo and his infidel!^o

What, and my old Venetian friend Salerio!

Enter LORENZO, JESSICA, and SALERIO, a messenger from Venice.

175

BASSANIO

Lorenzo and Salerio, welcome hither,

220

If that the youth of my new int'rest^o here

Have power to bid you welcome. By your leave,

I bid my very friends and countrymen,

180

Sweet Portia, welcome.

PORTIA

So do I, my lord.

They are entirely welcome.

225

LORENZO

I thank your honor. For my part, my lord,

185

My purpose was not to have seen you here,

But meeting with Salerio by the way,

He did entreat me past all saying nay

To come with him along.

SALERIO

I did, my lord,

230

And I have reason for it. Signior Antonio

Commends him to you.^o [Gives BASSANIO a letter.]

190

BASSANIO

Ere I ope his letter,

I pray you tell me how my good friend doth.

SALERIO

Not sick, my lord, unless it be in mind,

Nor well, unless in mind. His letter there 235

Will show you his estate.^o

195

Open the letter.

GRATIANO

Nerissa, cheer yond stranger; bid her welcome.

Your hand, Salerio. What's the news from Venice?

199 intermission pausing 203 again again and again 204 roof roof of the mouth 205 if promise last if her promise holds 215 stake down a betting term (with an off-color pun) 218 infidel one who lacks the true faith (Gratiano applies the term playfully to Jessica; cf. II.vi.51) 221 int'rest claim 232 Commends . . . you sends you his best wishes 236 estate state, condition

How doth that royal merchant,^o good Antonio?
I know he will be glad of our success;
We are the Jasons, we have won the Fleece.

SALERIO

I would you had won the fleece^o that he hath lost!

PORTIA

There are some shrowd^o contents in yond same paper
That steals the color from Bassanio's cheek:
Some dear friend dead, else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. What, worse and worse?
With leave, Bassanio—I am half yourself,
And I must freely have the half of anything
That this same paper brings you.

BASSANIO

O sweet Portia,

Here are a few of the unpleasant'st words
That ever blotted paper! Gentle lady,
When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had
Ran in my veins—I was a gentleman.
And then I told you true; and yet, dear lady,
Rating myself at nothing, you shall see
How much I was a braggart. When I told you
My state^o was nothing, I should then have told you
That I was worse than nothing; for indeed
I have engaged^o myself to a dear friend,
Engaged my friend to his mere^o enemy
To feed my means. Here is a letter, lady,
The paper as the body of my friend,
And every word in it a gaping wound
Issuing lifeblood. But is it true, Salerio?
Hath all his ventures failed? What, not one hit?
From Tripolis, from Mexico and England,
From Lisbon, Barbary, and India,
And not one vessel scape the dreadful touch
Of merchant-marring rocks?

SALERIO

Not one, my lord.

Besides, it should appear that if he had
The present^o money to discharge^o the Jew,
He would not take it. Never did I know
A creature that did bear the shape of man
So keen and greedy to confound^o a man.
He plies the duke at morning and at night,
And doth impeach the freedom of the state^o
If they deny him justice. Twenty merchants,
The duke himself, and the magnificoes
Of greatest port^o have all persuaded with him,
But none can drive him from the envious^o plea
Of forfeiture, of justice, and his bond.

JESSICA

When I was with him, I have heard him swear
To Tubal and to Chus, his countrymen,
That he would rather have Antonio's flesh
Than twenty times the value of the sum
That he did owe him; and I know, my lord,
If law, authority, and power deny not,
It will go hard with poor Antonio.

239 royal merchant merchant prince 242 fleece pun on fleets 243 shrowd evil, grievous; literally, "cursed" 259 state estate, fortune 261 engaged pledged 262 mere absolute 273 present ready; discharge pay 276 confound ruin, destroy 278 impeach . . . state charge that Venice is no free state 280–81 magnificoes . . . port nobles of highest dignity 282 envious malignant

PORTIA

Is it your dear friend that is thus in trouble?

BASSANIO

The dearest friend to me, the kindest man,
The best-conditioned^o and unwearied spirit
In doing courtesies, and one in whom
The ancient Roman honor more appears
Than any that draws breath in Italy.

295

PORTIA

What sum owes he the Jew?

BASSANIO

For me, three thousand ducats.

PORTIA

What, no more?

Pay him six thousand, and deface^o the bond.

Double six thousand and then treble that,

300

Before a friend of this description

Shall lose a hair through Bassanio's fault.

First go with me to church and call me wife,

And then away to Venice to your friend!

For never shall you lie by Portia's side

305

With an unquiet soul. You shall have gold

To pay the petty debt twenty times over;

When it is paid, bring your true friend along.

My maid Nerissa and myself meantime

Will live as maids and widows. Come away!

310

For you shall hence^o upon your wedding day.

Bid your friends welcome, show a merry cheer;

Since you are dear bought, I will love you dear.

But let me hear the letter of your friend.

265 [BASSANIO (Reads.)] "Sweet Bassanio, my ships have 315

all miscarried, my creditors grow cruel, my estate is very low, my bond to the Jew is forfeit. And since in paying it, it is impossible I should live, all debts are cleared between you and I if I might but see you at my 270 death. Notwithstanding, use your pleasure. If your 320 love do not persuade you to come, let not my letter."

PORTIA

O love, dispatch all business and be gone!

BASSANIO

Since I have your good leave to go away,

275 I will make haste; but till I come again

No bed shall e'er be guilty of my stay,

325

Nor rest be interposer 'twixt us twain.

Exeunt.

280 [Scene III. Venice. A street.]

Enter [SHYLOCK] the Jew and SOLANIO and ANTONIO and the JAILER.

SHYLOCK

Jailer, look to him. Tell not me of mercy.

285 This is the fool that lent out money gratis.

Jailer, look to him.

ANTONIO

Hear me yet, good Shylock.

SHYLOCK

I'll have my bond! Speak not against my bond!

290 I have sworn an oath that I will have my bond. 5

Thou call'dst me dog before thou hadst a cause,

But since I am a dog, beware my fangs.

The duke shall grant me justice. I do wonder,

293 The best-conditioned of the best disposition 299
deface destroy 311 shall hence must go hence

Thou naughty^o jailer, that thou art so fond^o
To come abroad with him at his request. 10

ANTONIO

I pray thee hear me speak.

SHYLOCK

I'll have my bond. I will not hear thee speak.
I'll have my bond, and therefore speak no more.
I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield 15
To Christian intercessors. Follow not.
I'll have no speaking; I will have my bond.

Exit [SHYLOCK the] Jew.

SOLANIO

It is the most impenetrable cur
That ever kept^o with men.

ANTONIO

Let him alone;

I'll follow him no more with bootless^o prayers. 20
He seeks my life. His reason well I know:
I oft delivered from his forfeitures^o
Many that have at times made moan to me.
Therefore he hates me.

SOLANIO

I am sure the duke

Will never grant this forfeiture to hold. 25

ANTONIO

The duke cannot deny the course of law;
For the commodity^o that strangers^o have
With us in Venice, if it be denied,
Will much impeach the justice of the state,
Since that the trade and profit of the city 30
Consisteth of all nations. Therefore go.
These griefs^o and losses have so bated^o me
That I shall hardly spare a pound of flesh
Tomorrow to my bloody creditor.
Well, jailer, on. Pray God Bassanio come 35
To see me pay his debt, and then I care not! Exeunt.

[Scene IV. Belmont. Portia's house.]

Enter PORTIA, NERISSA, LORENZO, JESSICA, and [BALTHASAR,] a man of Portia's.

LORENZO

Madam, although I speak it in your presence,
You have a noble and a true conceit^o
Of godlike amity,^o which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord.
But if you knew to whom you show this honor, 5
How true a gentleman you send relief,
How dear a lover^o of my lord your husband,
I know you would be prouder of the work
Than customary bounty can enforce you.^o

PORTIA

I never did repent for doing good, 10
Nor shall not now; for in companions
That do converse and waste^o the time together,

Whose souls do bear an egal^o yoke of love,
There must be needs a like proportion
Of lineaments, of manners, and of spirit; 15
Which makes me think that this Antonio,
Being the bosom lover of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord. If it be so,
How little is the cost I have bestowed
In purchasing^o the semblance^o of my soul 20
From out the state of hellish cruelty!
This comes too near the praising of myself;
Therefore no more of it. Hear other things:
Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry^o and manage of my house, 25
Until my lord's return. For mine own part,
I have toward heaven breathed a secret vow
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Only attended by Nerissa here,
Until her husband and my lord's return. 30
There is a monast'ry two miles off,
And there we will abide. I do desire you
Not to deny this imposition,^o
The which my love and some necessity
Now lays upon you. 25

LORENZO Madam, with all my heart; 35
I shall obey you in all fair commands.

PORTIA

My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jessica
In place of Lord Bassanio and myself. 40
So fare you well till we shall meet again. 40

LORENZO

Fair thoughts and happy hours attend on you!

JESSICA

I wish your ladyship all heart's content.

PORTIA

I thank you for your wish, and am well pleased
To wish it back on you. Fare you well, Jessica.

Exeunt [JESSICA and LORENZO].

Now, Balthasar, 45
As I have ever found thee honest-true,
So let me find thee still. Take this same letter,
And use thou all th' endeavor of a man
In speed to Padua. See thou render this 50
Into my cousin's hands, Doctor Bellario;
And look what^o notes and garments he doth give thee
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagined speed^o
Unto the tranect,^o to the common ferry
Which trades to Venice. Waste no time in words 55
But get thee gone. I shall be there before thee. 55

BALTHASAR

Madam, I go with all convenient speed.^o [Exit.]

PORTIA

Come on, Nerissa; I have work in hand 10
That you yet know not of. We'll see our husbands
Before they think of us.

NERISSA

Shall they see us?

III.iii.9 naughty wicked; fond foolish 19 kept dwelt 20 bootless unavailing 22 forfeitures penalties that he could have legally exacted 27 commodity commercial advantage;
strangers foreigners 32 griefs pains; bated reduced
III.iv.2 conceit idea, conception 3 amity friendship 7 lover friend 8-9 prouder . . . you prouder of this action than even your habitual kindness can make you 12 converse and waste associate and spend

13 egal equal 20 purchasing gaining; semblance likeness (Portia refers to the old idea that a genuine friend or lover is a second self; Antonio is like Bassanio, and therefore like Portia) 25 husbandry care 33 imposition task that I impose 51 look what whatever 52 imagined speed speed of imagination 53 tranect ferry 56 convenient speed speed suited (to this emergency)

PORTIA

They shall, Nerissa, but in such a habit°
 That they shall think we are accomplishèd°
 With that we lack. I'll hold thee any wager,
 When we are both accoutered like young men,
 I'll prove the prettier° fellow of the two,
 And wear my dagger with the braver grace,°
 And speak between the change of man and boy
 With a reed° voice, and turn two mincing steps
 Into a manly stride, and speak of frays
 Like a fine bragging youth; and tell quaint° lies,
 How honorable ladies sought my love,
 Which I denying, they fell sick and died—
 I could not do withal!° Then I'll repent,
 And wish, for all that,° that I had not killed them.
 And twenty of these puny lies I'll tell,
 That men shall swear I have discontinued school
 Above a twelvemonth. I have within my mind
 A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,°
 Which I will practice.

NERISSA

Why, shall we turn to° men?

PORTIA

Fie, what a question's that,
 If thou wert near a lewd° interpreter!
 But come, I'll tell thee all my whole device
 When I am in my coach, which stays for us
 At the park gate; and therefore haste away,
 For we must measure twenty miles today. Exeunt.

[Scene V. Belmont. A garden.]

Enter [LAUNCELOT the] clown and JESSICA.

LAUNCELOT Yes truly; for look you, the sins of the father are to be laid upon the children.° Therefore, I promise you I fear you.° I was always plain with you,
 and so now I speak my agitation° of the matter.
 Therefore be o' good cheer, for truly I think you are damned. There is but one hope in it that can do you any good, and that is but a kind of bastard hope neither.

JESSICA And what hope is that, I pray thee?

LAUNCELOT Marry, you may partly hope that your father got you not—that you are not the Jew's daughter.

JESSICA That were a kind of bastard hope indeed!
 So° the sins of my mother should be visited upon me.

LAUNCELOT Truly then, I fear you are damned both by father and mother. Thus when I shun Scylla your father, I fall into Charybdis your mother. Well, you are gone both ways.

JESSICA I shall be saved by my husband.° He hath made me a Christian.

20

LAUNCELOT Truly, the more to blame he! We were Christians enow° before,° e'en as many as could well live one by another.° This making of Christians will raise the price of hogs; if we grow all to be porkeaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher° on the coals 25 for money.

65

Enter LORENZO.

JESSICA I'll tell my husband, Launcelot, what you say. Here he comes.

70

LORENZO I shall grow jealous° of you shortly,
 Launcelot, if you thus get my wife into corners. 30

JESSICA Nay, you need not fear us, Lorenzo. Launcelot and I are out.° He tells me flatly there's no mercy for me in heaven because I am a Jew's daughter; and he says you are no good member of the commonwealth, for in converting Jews to Christians you raise the price 35 of pork.

75

LORENZO [To LAUNCELOT.] I shall answer that better to the commonwealth than you can the getting up of the Negro's belly. The Moor° is with child by you, Launcelot! 40

80

LAUNCELOT It is much that the Moor should be more than reason; but if she be less than an honest° woman, she is indeed more than I took her for.

LORENZO How every fool can play upon the word! I think the best grace° of wit will shortly turn into 45 silence, and discourse grow commendable in none only but parrots. Go in, sirrah; bid them prepare for dinner.

LAUNCELOT That is done, sir. They have all stomachs.

LORENZO Goodly Lord, what a wit-snapper are you! 50
 Then bid them prepare dinner.

LAUNCELOT That is done too, sir. Only "cover"° is the word.

LORENZO Will you cover then, sir?

LAUNCELOT Not so, sir, neither! I know my duty. 55

LORENZO Yet more quarreling with occasion!° Wilt thou show the whole wealth of thy wit in an instant?
 I pray thee understand a plain man in his plain meaning: go to thy fellows, bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. 60

LAUNCELOT For the table,° sir, it shall be served in;
 for the meat, sir, it shall be covered;° for your coming in to dinner, sir, why let it be as humors and conceits° shall govern. Exit clown [LAUNCELOT].

LORENZO

O dear discretion,° how his words are suited!° 65
 The fool hath planted in his memory
 An army of good words; and I do know
 A many° fools that stand in better place,
 Garnished° like him, that for a tricky word

22 enow enough; before before you turned Christian 23 one by another one off another 25 rasher slice of bacon 29 jealous jealous 32 out at odds 39 Moor pronounced
"more"; hence Launcelot quibbles on much, more, and Moor
42 honest chaste 45 grace virtue 52 cover cover the table (Launcelot proceeds to quibble on cover in the sense of "wear a hat") 56 quarreling with occasion caviling at every opportunity 61 table (1) the piece of furniture (2) the meal 62 covered i.e., to be kept hot 63 humors and conceits fancies and notions 65 dear discretion precious common sense; suited fitted together (?) dressed up (?) 68 A many an old idiom for a large number 69 Garnished decked out

60 habit garment (i.e., men's clothes) 61 accomplishèd provided 64 prettier more dashing 65 braver grace finer masculine grace 67 reed high or squeaky, like the sound of a reed pipe 69 quaint clever and elaborate 72 I . . . withal
I could not help it 73 for all that in spite of that 77 Jacks fellows 78 turn to turn into (with an off-color pun; cf. I.iii.
78) 80 lewd bad

III.v.1-2 sins . . . children see Exodus 20:5 3 fear you fear for you 4 agitation blunder for cogitation 14 So thus 19 saved . . . husband see I Corinthians 7:14

Defy the matter.^o How cheer'st thou,^o Jessica?
And now, good sweet, say thy opinion—
How dost thou like the Lord Bassanio's wife?

JESSICA

Past all expressing. It is very meet
The Lord Bassanio live an upright life,
For having such a blessing in his lady,
He finds the joys of heaven here on earth;
And if on earth he do not merit it,
In reason he should never come to heaven.
Why, if two gods should play some heavenly match
And on the wager lay^o two earthly women,
And Portia one, there must be something else^o
Pawned with the other, for the poor rude world
Hath not her fellow.

LORENZO Even such a husband
Hast thou of me as she is for a wife.

JESSICA

Nay, but ask my opinion too of that!

LORENZO

I will anon. First let us go to dinner.

JESSICA

Nay, let me praise you while I have a stomach.^o

LORENZO

No, pray thee, let it serve for table-talk;
Then howsome'er^o thou speak'st, 'mong other things
I shall digest it.

JESSICA

Well, I'll set you forth.^o

Exit [with LORENZO].

[A C T I V]

[Scene I. Venice. A court of justice.]

Enter the DUKE, the MAGNIFICOS, ANTONIO, BASSANIO, [SALERIO,] and GRATIANO [with others].

DUKE What^o is Antonio here?

ANTONIO Ready, so please your grace.

DUKE

I am sorry for thee. Thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch,
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram^o of mercy.

ANTONIO

I have heard

Your grace hath ta'en great pains to qualify^o
His rigorous course; but since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his envy's reach,^o I do oppose
My patience to his fury, and am armed
To suffer with a quietness of spirit
The very tyranny and rage^o of his.

70 the matter good sense; How cheer'st thou How is it with thee? (the implication is that he kisses her) 80 lay stake 81 something else i.e., to make the wager fair 87 stomach a pun on the senses of "desire" (to praise you) and an "appetite" for dinner 89 howsome'er however 90 I'll . . . forth I'll give a fine account of you IV.i.i What why (interjection) 6 dram mite, drop (literally an eighth of an ounce) 7 qualify moderate 10 his envy's reach the reach of his malignant hate 13 tyranny and rage savagery and passion

DUKE

Go one, and call the Jew into the court.

SALERIO

He is ready at the door; he comes, my lord.

Enter SHYLOCK.

DUKE

Make room, and let him stand before our^o face.
Shylock, the world thinks, and I think so too,
That thou but ledest this fashion of thy malice
To the last hour of act; and then 'tis thought
Thou'lt show thy mercy and remorse^o more strange^o 20
Than is thy strange^o apparent cruelty;
And where thou now exacts the penalty,
Which is a pound of this poor merchant's flesh,
Thou wilt not only loose^o the forfeiture,
But touched with human gentleness and love, 25
Forgive a moiety^o of the principal,
Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so huddled on his back—
Enow^o to press a royal merchant^o down 30
And pluck commiseration of his state
From brassy bosoms and rough hearts of flint,
From stubborn Turks and Tartars never trained
To offices of tender courtesy.
We all expect^o a gentle^o answer, Jew.

SHYLOCK

I have possessed^o your grace of what I purpose, 35
And by our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond.
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter and your city's freedom!^o 40
You'll ask me why I rather choose to have
A weight of carrion flesh than to receive Three thousand ducats. I'll not answer that,
But say it is my humor. Is it answered?
What if my house be troubled with a rat,
And I be pleased to give ten thousand ducats 45
To have it baned?^o What, are you answered yet?
Some men there are love not a gaping pig,^o
Some that are mad if they behold a cat,
And others, when the bagpipe sings i' th' nose,
Cannot contain their urine; for affection,^o 50
Master of passion,^o sways it to the mood
Of what it likes or loathes. Now for your answer:
As there is no firm reason to be rend'red
Why he cannot abide a gaping pig,
Why he a harmless necessary cat, 55
Why he^o a woolen bagpipe, but of force^o

16 our the royal "we," appropriate in giving an order, but in the next line the duke uses "I," the informal singular, suited for a personal appeal to Shylock's feelings 20 remorse compassion; strange wonderful 21 strange astonishing 24 loose release 26 moiety portion 29 Enow enough; royal merchant merchant prince 34 expect await; gentle befitting a gentleman 35 possessed informed 38-39 danger . . .
freedom cf. III.iii.27-31 46 baned poisoned 47 gaping pig young roast pig, often served with fruit in its open mouth (Shylock invokes the old theory of natural antipathy to explain his hatred of Antonio, thus concealing the real cause;
cf. I.iii.39-42) 50 affection natural sympathy or antipathy 51 passion powerful emotion 54-56 he . . . he . . . he pronounced with heavy emphasis: this man . . . that man . . .
another 56 of force of necessity, against his will

Must yield to such inevitable shame°
 As to offend, himself being offended;
 So can I give no reason, nor I will not,
 More than a lodged° hate and a certain° loathing
 I bear Antonio, that I follow thus
 A losing suit against him. Are you answered?

BASSANIO

This is no answer, thou unfeeling man,
 To excuse the current of thy cruelty!

SHYLOCK

I am not bound° to please thee with my answers.

BASSANIO

Do all men kill the things they do not love?

SHYLOCK

Hates any man the thing he would not kill?

BASSANIO

Every offense is not a hate at first.

SHYLOCK

What, wouldst thou have a serpent sting thee twice?

ANTONIO

I pray you think you question° with the Jew.
 You may as well go stand upon the beach
 And bid the main flood bate his° usual height;
 You may as well use question with the wolf,
 Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb;
 You may as well forbid the mountain pines
 To wag their high tops and to make no noise
 When they are fretten° with the gusts of heaven;
 You may as well do anything most hard
 As seek to soften that—than which what's harder?—
 His Jewish heart. Therefore I do beseech you
 Make no more offers, use no farther means,
 But with all brief and plain conveniency°
 Let me have judgment, and the Jew his will.

BASSANIO

For thy three thousand ducats here is six.

SHYLOCK

If every ducat in six thousand ducats
 Were in six parts, and every part a ducat,
 I would not draw° them. I would have my bond.

DUKE

How shalt thou hope for mercy, rend'ring none?

SHYLOCK

What judgment shall I dread, doing no wrong?
 You have among you many a purchased slave,
 Which like your asses and your dogs and mules
 You use in abject and in slavish parts,°
 Because you bought them. Shall I say to you,
 "Let them be free! Marry them to your heirs!
 Why sweat they under burdens? Let their beds
 Be made as soft as yours, and let their palates
 Be seasoned with such viands"? You will answer,
 "The slaves are ours." So do I answer you:
 The pound of flesh which I demand of him
 Is dearly bought, is mine, and I will have it.
 If you deny me, fie upon your law!
 There is no force in the decrees of Venice.
 I stand for judgment. Answer; shall I have it?

57 shame as in line 50, above 60 lodged fixed; certain assured, steadfast 65 bound bound by law 70 think you question remember you argue 72 main . . . his ocean at high tide reduce its 77 fretten fretted 82 brief . . . conveniency suitable brevity and directness 87 draw take 92 parts duties

DUKE

Upon my power I may dismiss this court
 Unless Bellario, a learned doctor
 Whom I have sent for to determine this,
 Come here today.

SALERIO

My lord, here stays without
 A messenger with letters from the doctor,
 New come from Padua.

DUKE

Bring us the letters. Call the messenger.

BASSANIO

Good cheer, Antonio! What, man, courage yet!
 The Jew shall have my flesh, blood, bones, and all,
 Ere thou shalt lose for me one drop of blood.

ANTONIO

I am a tainted wether° of the flock,
 Meetest° for death. The weakest kind of fruit
 Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me.
 You cannot better be employed, Bassanio,
 Than to live still, and write mine epitaph.

Enter NERISSA [dressed like a lawyer's clerk].

DUKE

Came you from Padua, from Bellario?

NERISSA

From both, my lord. Bellario greets your grace.
 [Presents a letter.]

BASSANIO

Why dost thou whet thy knife so earnestly?

SHYLOCK

To cut the forfeiture from that bankrout there.

GRATIANO

Not on thy sole, but on thy soul, harsh Jew,
 Thou mak'st thy knife keen; but no metal can—
 No, not the hangman's° ax—bear° half the keenness
 Of thy sharp envy.° Can no prayers pierce thee?

SHYLOCK

No, none that thou hast wit enough to make.

GRATIANO

O be thou damned, execrable° dog,
 And for thy life let justice be accused!°
 Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
 To hold opinion with Pythagoras°
 That souls of animals infuse themselves
 Into the trunks of men. Thy currish spirit
 Governed a wolf who, hanged for human slaughter,°
 Even from the gallows did his fell° soul fleet,
 And whilst thou layest in thy unhallowed dam,°
 Infused itself in thee; for thy desires
 Are wolvis, bloody, starved, and ravenous.

SHYLOCK

Till thou canst rail the seal from off my bond,

100

114 tainted wether infected ram 115 Meetest fittest 125 hangman's executioner's; bear have 126 envy malignant hate 128 inexecrable most execrable, detestable 129 And . . . accused a much-debated line; probably "Let justice be accused because you have been allowed to live so long" 131 Pythagoras Greek philosopher of the sixth century B.C. who taught the doctrine of the transmigration of souls 134 hanged . . . slaughter wolves, dogs, and other animals were sometimes hanged for killing or attacking people; hence the phrase hangdog look 135 fell fierce 136 dam mother of an animal, here a shewolf

Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud.
Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall
To cureless ruin.^o I stand here for law.

DUKE

This letter from Bellario doth commend
A young and learned doctor to our court.
Where is he?

NERISSA

He attendeth here hard by

To know your answer whether you'll admit him.

DUKE

With all my heart. Some three or four of you
Go give him courteous conduct to this place.
Meantime the court shall hear Bellario's letter.

[CLERK (Reads.)] "Your grace shall understand that at the receipt of your letter I am very sick; but in the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor of Rome. His name is Balthasar. I acquainted him with the cause in controversy between the Jew and Antonio the merchant.
We turned o'er many books together. He is furnished with my opinion which, bettered with his own learning, the greatness whereof I cannot enough commend, comes with him at my importunity to fill up^o your grace's request in my stead. I beseech you let his lack of years be no impediment to let^o him lack a reverend estimation, for I never knew so young a body with so old a head. I leave him to your gracious acceptance, whose trial^o shall better publish his commendation."

Enter PORTIA for Balthasar, [dressed like a doctor of laws].

DUKE

You hear the learned Bellario, what he writes;
And here, I take it, is the doctor come.
Give me your hand. Come you from old Bellario?

PORTIA

I did, my lord.

DUKE

You are welcome; take your place.

Are you acquainted with the difference^o
That holds this present question^o in the court?

PORTIA

I am informèd throughly^o of the cause.^o
Which is the merchant here? And which the Jew?

DUKE

Antonio and old Shylock, both stand forth.

PORTIA

Is your name Shylock?

SHYLOCK

Shylock is my name.

PORTIA

Of a strange^o nature is the suit you follow,
Yet in such rule that^o the Venetian law
Cannot impugn you as you do proceed.

[To ANTONIO.]

You stand within his danger,^o do you not?

ANTONIO

Ay, so he says.

PORTIA

Do you confess the bond?

141-42 fall . . . ruin i.e., like a house too long out of repair 159-60 fill up satisfy 161 to let to cause 164 trial conduct when brought to the test 170 difference dispute 171 question case under judicial examination 172 thoroughly thoroughly; cause case 176 strange astonishing 177 in . . .
that within the rule so that 179 danger power to harm

140 ANTONIO

I do.

PORTIA Then must the Jew be merciful.

SHYLOCK

On what compulsion must I? Tell me that.

PORTIA

The quality of mercy is not strained;^o
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath. It is twice blest;
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes.
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
The thronèd monarch better than his crown.
His scepter shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings;
But mercy is above this scept'red sway;
It is enthronèd in the hearts of kings,
It is an attribute to God Himself,
And earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice. Therefore, Jew,
Though justice be thy plea, consider this:
That, in the course of justice, none of us
Should see salvation.^o We do pray for mercy,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy. I have spoke thus much
To mitigate the justice of thy plea;
Which if thou follow, this strict court of Venice
Must needs give sentence 'gainst the merchant there.

165 SHYLOCK

My deeds upon my head! I crave the law,
The penalty and forfeit of my bond.

PORTIA

Is he not able to discharge the money?

BASSANIO

Yes, here I tender it for him in the court,
Yea, twice^o the sum. If that will not suffice,
I will be bound to pay it ten times o'er
On forfeit of my hands, my head, my heart.
If this will not suffice, it must appear
That malice bears down truth. And I beseech you,
Wrest once the law to your authority.^o
To do a great right, do a little wrong,
And curb this cruel devil of his will.

PORTIA

It must not be. There is no power in Venice
Can alter a decree establishèd.
'Twill be recorded for a precedent,
And many an error by the same example
Will rush into the state. It cannot be.

SHYLOCK

A Daniel come to judgment!^o Yea, a Daniel!
O wise young judge, how I do honor thee!

183 strained constrained, compelled 198-99 That . . .
salvation referring to the doctrine that God can justly condemn every man, since none is free of sin 209 twice in lines 226 and 233 "thrice" the money has been offered, and most editors therefore emend "twice" to "thrice," on the assumption that here the compositor misread the manuscript; but in line 84 the offered amount is indeed double—six thousand ducats for three thousand—and therefore emendation to "thrice" still leaves an inconsistency, unless the point is that as Bassanio's fears for Antonio grow, he raises the offer 214 Wrest . . . authority
For once twist the law a little and subject it to your authority 222 Daniel . . . judgment the young biblical hero who secured justice for Susannah (see Apocrypha, Susannah 42-64)

PORTIA

I pray you let me look upon the bond.

SHYLOCK

Here 'tis, most reverend doctor, here it is.

PORTIA

Shylock, there's thrice thy money off'red thee.

SHYLOCK

An oath, an oath! I have an oath in heaven;

Shall I lay perjury upon my soul?

No, not for Venice!

PORTIA

Why, this bond is forfeit;

And lawfully by this the Jew can claim

A pound of flesh, to be by him cut off

Nearest the merchant's heart. Be merciful.

Take thrice thy money; bid me tear the bond.

SHYLOCK

When it is paid, according to the tenure.^o

It doth appear you are a worthy judge;

You know the law, your exposition

Hath been most sound. I charge you by the law,

Whereof you are a well-deserving pillar,

Proceed to judgment. By my soul I swear

There is no power in the tongue of man

To alter me. I stay^o here on my bond.

ANTONIO

Most heartily I do beseech the court

To give the judgment.

PORTIA

Why then, thus it is:

You must prepare your bosom for his knife—

SHYLOCK

O noble judge! O excellent young man!

PORTIA

For the intent and purpose of the law

Hath full relation to^o the penalty,

Which here appeareth due upon the bond.

SHYLOCK

'Tis very true. O wise and upright judge!

How much more elder art thou than thy looks!

PORTIA

Therefore lay bare your bosom.

SHYLOCK

Ay, his breast—

So says the bond, doth it not, noble judge?

"Nearest his heart"; those are the very words.

PORTIA

It is so. Are there balance^o here to weigh

The flesh?

SHYLOCK I have them ready.

PORTIA

Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on your charge,^o

To stop his wounds, lest he do bleed to death.

SHYLOCK

Is it so nominated in the bond?

PORTIA

It is not so expressed, but what of that?

'Twere good you do so much for charity.

SHYLOCK

I cannot find it; 'tis not in the bond.

PORTIA

You, merchant, have you anything to say?

ANTONIO

But little. I am armed and well prepared.

Give me your hand, Bassanio; fare you well.

225

Grieve not that I am fall'n to this for you,

265

For herein Fortune shows herself more kind

Than is her custom: it is still her use^o

To let the wretched man outlive his wealth,

To view with hollow eye and wrinkled brow

An age of poverty; from which ling'ring penance

270

Of such misery doth she cut me off.

Commend me to your honorable wife.

230

Tell her the process^o of Antonio's end,

Say how I loved you, speak me fair in death;

And when the tale is told, bid her be judge

275

Whether Bassanio had not once a love.^o

Repent but you^o that you shall lose your friend,

And he repents not^o that he pays your debt;

235

For if the Jew do cut but deep enough,

I'll pay it instantly with all my heart.^o

280

BASSANIO

Antonio, I am married to a wife

Which is as dear to me as life itself;

240

But life itself, my wife, and all the world

Are not with me esteemed above thy life.

I would lose all, ay sacrifice them all

285

Here to this devil, to deliver you.

PORTIA

Your wife would give you little thanks for that

If she were by to hear you make the offer.

GRATIANO

245

I have a wife who I protest I love.

I would she were in heaven, so she could 290

Entreat some power to change this currish Jew.

NERISSA

'Tis well you offer it behind her back;

The wish would make else an unquiet house.

SHYLOCK

250

These be the Christian husbands! I have a daughter;

Would any of the stock of Barabbas^o

295

Had been her husband, rather than a Christian!

We trifle time. I pray thee pursue sentence.

PORTIA

A pound of that same merchant's flesh is thine.

The court awards it, and the law doth give it—

SHYLOCK

Most rightful judge!

300

255

PORTIA

And you must cut this flesh from off his breast.

The law allows it, and the court awards it.

SHYLOCK

Most learned judge! A sentence! Come, prepare!

PORTIA

Tarry a little; there is something else.

This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;

305

260

The words expressly are "a pound of flesh."

Take then thy bond, take thou thy pound of flesh;

267 still her use ever her custom 273 process whole story
276 love friend (with a quibble on love in the sense of "lover") 277 Repent but you if you but feel sorrow 278 And . . .
not then he regrets not 280 with . . . heart a quibble on heart in the senses of "soul" and of the physical organ 295
Barabbas (1) the thief freed by Pilate when the people demanded that Christ be crucified (2) the name of the villainous hero in Marlowe's The Jew of Malta

234 tenure conditions 241 stay take my stand 247 Hath
. . . to is related inseparably to 254 balance plural: scales
256 on your charge at your expense

But in the cutting it, if thou dost shed
One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods
Are by the laws of Venice confiscate
Unto the state of Venice.

GRATIANO

O upright judge! Mark, Jew. O learned judge!

SHYLOCK

Is that the law?

PORTIA

Thyself shalt see the act;

For, as thou urgest justice, be assured

Thou shalt have justice more than thou desir'st.

GRATIANO

O learned judge! Mark, Jew. A learned judge!

SHYLOCK

I take this offer then. Pay the bond thrice

And let the Christian go.

BASSANIO

Here is the money.

PORTIA

Soft!

The Jew shall have all justice. Soft, no haste;

He shall have nothing but the penalty.

GRATIANO

O Jew! An upright judge, a learned judge!

PORTIA

Therefore prepare thee to cut off the flesh.

Shed thou no blood, nor cut thou less nor more

But just a pound of flesh. If thou tak'st more

Or less than a just^o pound, be it but so much

As makes it light or heavy in the substance^o

Or the division^o of the twentieth part

Of one poor scruple^o—nay, if the scale do turn

But in the estimation^o of a hair—

Thou diest, and all thy goods are confiscate.

GRATIANO

A second Daniel! A Daniel, Jew!

Now, infidel, I have you on the hip!

PORTIA

Why doth the Jew pause? Take thy forfeiture.

SHYLOCK

Give me my principal, and let me go.

BASSANIO

I have it ready for thee; here it is.

PORTIA

He hath refused it in the open court.

He shall have merely justice and his bond.

GRATIANO

A Daniel still say I, a second Daniel!

I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word.

SHYLOCK

Shall I not have barely my principal?

PORTIA

Thou shalt have nothing but the forfeiture,

To be so taken at thy peril, Jew.

SHYLOCK

Why, then the devil give him good of it!

I'll stay no longer question.^o

PORTIA

Tarry, Jew!

The law hath yet another hold on you.

It is enacted in the laws of Venice,

If it be proved against an alien

That by direct or indirect attempts

He seek the life of any citizen,

350

310

The party 'gainst the which he doth contrive

Shall seize^o one half his goods; the other half

Comes to the privy coffer^o of the state;

And the offender's life lies in the mercy

Of the duke only, 'gainst all other voice.

355

In which predicament^o I say thou stand'st,

For it appears by manifest proceeding

That indirectly, and directly too,

315

Thou hast contrived against the very life

Of the defendant, and thou hast incurred

360

The danger formerly by me rehearsed.^o

Down therefore, and beg mercy of the duke.

GRATIANO

Beg that thou mayst have leave to hang thyself!

And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,

Thou hast not left the value of a cord;

365

Therefore thou must be hanged at the state's charge.

320

DUKE

That thou shalt see the difference of our spirit,

I pardon thee thy life before thou ask it.

For^o half thy wealth, it is Antonio's;

The other half comes to the general state,

370

Which humbleness may drive unto a fine.^o

PORTIA

325

Ay, for the state, not for Antonio.

SHYLOCK

Nay, take my life and all! Pardon not that!

You take my house, when you do take the prop

That doth sustain my house. You take my life

375

330

When you do take the means whereby I live.

PORTIA

What mercy can you render him, Antonio?

GRATIANO

A halter gratis! Nothing else, for God's sake!

ANTONIO

So please my lord the duke and all the court

To quit^o the fine for one half of his goods,

380

335

I am content; so^o he will let me have

The other half in use,^o to render it

Upon his death unto the gentleman

That lately stole his daughter.

Two things provided more: that for this favor

385

He presently^o become a Christian;

The other, that he do record a gift

Here in the court of all he dies possessed

340

Unto his son Lorenzo and his daughter.

DUKE

He shall do this, or else I do recant^o

390

The pardon that I late pronouncèd here.

PORTIA

Art thou contented, Jew? What dost thou say?

SHYLOCK

I am content.

PORTIA

Clerk, draw a deed of gift.

345

352 seize take possession of 353 privy coffer equivalent to British privy purse, money provided for the monarch's own use 356 predicament situation 361 rehearsed cited 369 For as for 371 may . . . fine may persuade me to reduce to a fine 380 quit remit 381 so provided 382 in use in trust, to use in his business 386 presently instantly 390 recant retract

326 just exact 327 substance amount 328 division portion 328-29 twentieth . . . scruple one grain 330 estimation value 345 stay . . . question remain for no more talk

SHYLOCK

I pray you give me leave to go from hence.
I am not well. Send the deed after me,
And I will sign it.

DUKE

Get thee gone, but do it.

GRATIANO

In christ'ning shalt thou have two godfathers.
Had I been judge, thou shouldst have had ten more°—
To bring thee to the gallows, not to the font.

Exit [SHYLOCK].

DUKE

Sir, I entreat you home with me to dinner.

PORTIA

I humbly do desire your grace of pardon.
I must away this night toward Padua,
And it is meet I presently set forth.

DUKE

I am sorry that your leisure serves you not.°
Antonio, gratify° this gentleman,
For in my mind you are much bound to him.

Exit DUKE and his TRAIN.

BASSANIO

Most worthy gentleman, I and my friend
Have by your wisdom been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties, in lieu whereof,°
Three thousand ducats due unto the Jew
We freely cope° your courteous pains withal.

ANTONIO

And stand indebted, over and above,
In love and service to you evermore.

PORTIA

He is well paid that is well satisfied,
And I, delivering you, am satisfied,
And therein do account myself well paid;
My mind was never yet more mercenary.
I pray you know me when we meet again.
I wish you well, and so I take my leave.

BASSANIO

Dear sir, of force I must attempt you further.
Take some remembrance of us as a tribute,
Not as fee. Grant me two things, I pray you—
Not to deny me, and to pardon me.

PORTIA

You press me far, and therefore I will yield.
Give me your gloves; I'll wear them for your sake.

[BASSANIO takes off his gloves.]

And for your love I'll take this ring from you.
Do not draw back your hand; I'll take no more,
And you in love° shall not deny me this.

BASSANIO

This ring, good sir, alas, it is a trifle!
I will not shame myself to give you this.

PORTIA

I will have nothing else but only this,
And now methinks I have a mind to it.

BASSANIO

There's more depends on this than on the value.°

The dearest ring in Venice will I give you,
And find it out by proclamation.
Only for this, I pray you pardon me.°

435

PORTIA

I see, sir, you are liberal in offers.
You taught me first to beg, and now methinks
You teach me how a beggar should be answered.

BASSANIO

Good sir, this ring was given me by my wife,
And when she put it on she made me vow
That I should neither sell nor give nor lose it.

440

PORTIA

That 'scuse serves many men to save their gifts.
And if your wife be not a madwoman,
And know how well I have deserved this ring,
She would not hold out enemy forever
For giving it to me. Well, peace be with you!

445

Exeunt [PORTIA and NERISSA].

405 ANTONIO

My Lord Bassanio, let him have the ring.
Let his deservings, and my love withal,
Be valued 'gainst your wife's commandment.°

450

BASSANIO

Go, Gratiano, run and overtake him;
Give him the ring, and bring him if thou canst Unto Antonio's house. Away, make haste!

410

Exit GRATIANO.

Come, you and I will thither presently,
And in the morning early will we both Fly toward Belmont. Come, Antonio.

455

Exeunt.

[Scene II. Venice. A street.]

Enter [PORTIA and] NERISSA, [disguised as before].

PORTIA

Inquire the Jew's house out, give him this deed,°
And let him sign it. We'll away tonight
And be a day before our husbands home.
This deed will be well welcome to Lorenzo.

420

Enter GRATIANO.

GRATIANO

Fair sir, you are well o'erta'en.
My Lord Bassanio upon more advice°
Hath sent you here this ring, and doth entreat
Your company at dinner.

5

PORTIA

That cannot be.
His ring I do accept most thankfully,
And so I pray you tell him. Furthermore,
I pray you show my youth old Shylock's house.

10

GRATIANO

That will I do.

NERISSA

Sir, I would speak with you.

[Aside to PORTIA.]

I'll see if I can get my husband's ring,
Which I did make him swear to keep forever.

436 Only . . . me Only as for this ring, I beg you to excuse me
450 commandment four syllables

IV.ii.1 this deed the deed of gift for Lorenzo and Jessica
6 upon more advice on further consideration

398 ten more to make a jury of twelve 404 serves you not is not sufficient for you 405 gratify show your gratitude to 409 in lieu whereof in return for which 411 We freely cope of our own free will we requite 428 in love in your good will to me 433 the value the ring's value

PORTIA [Aside to NERISSA.]

Thou mayst, I warrant. We shall have old swearing° 15
That they did give the rings away to men;
But we'll outface them, and outswear them too.
Away, make haste! Thou know'st where I will tarry.

NERISSA

Come, good sir, will you show me to this house?
[Exeunt.]

[A C T V]

[Scene I. Belmont. A garden before Portia's house.]

Enter LORENZO and JESSICA.

LORENZO

The moon shines bright. In such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees
And they did make no noise, in such a night
Troilus° methinks mounted the Trojan walls,
And sighed his soul toward the Grecian tents
Where Cressid° lay that night.

JESSICA In such a night
Did Thisbe° fearfully o'ertrip the dew,
And saw the lion's shadow ere himself,
And ran dismayed away.

LORENZO In such a night
Stood Dido° with a willow° in her hand
Upon the wild sea banks, and waft° her love
To come again to Carthage.

JESSICA In such a night
Medea° gathered the enchanted herbs
That did renew old Aeson°.

LORENZO In such a night
Did Jessica steal° from the wealthy Jew,
And with an unthrift love° did run from Venice
As far as Belmont.

JESSICA In such a night
Did young Lorenzo swear he loved her well,
Stealing her soul with many vows of faith,
And ne'er a true one.

LORENZO In such a night
Did pretty Jessica, like a little shrow°,
Slander her love, and he forgave it her.

JESSICA
I would out-night you, did nobody come;
But hark, I hear the footing of a man.

Enter [Stephano,] a MESSENGER.

15 old swearing a lot of hard swearing
V.i.1-22 the lovers' playful contest in verse-making belongs to a type of poetic dialogue as old as Virgil's Eclogues 4 Troilus hero of Chaucer's Troilus and Cressida and of Shakespeare's play of the same title; a type of the faithful lover 6 Cressid Cressida, a type of the faithless woman 7 Thisbe heroine of the tragic tale of Pyramus and Thisbe in Ovid's Metamorphoses 10 Dido Queen of Carthage whom Aeneas loved but abandoned at the call of duty; willow proverbially associated with forsaken love 11 waft waved (with the willow branch) 13 Medea princess and sorceress who helped Jason to obtain the Golden Fleece, and later was deserted by him 14 Aeson father of Jason, restored to youth by Medea 15 steal a pun: steal money, steal away 16 unthrift love a pun: a love which disregards wealth, and a lover without wealth 21 shrow shrew

LORENZO

Who comes so fast in silence of the night? 25

MESSENGER A friend.

LORENZO

A friend? What friend? Your name I pray you, friend.

MESSENGER

Stephano is my name, and I bring word
My mistress will before the break of day
Be here at Belmont. She doth stray about 30
By holy crosses° where she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours.

LORENZO Who comes with her?

MESSENGER

None but a holy hermit and her maid.
I pray you, is my master yet returned?

LORENZO

He is not, nor we have not heard from him. 35
But go we in, I pray thee, Jessica,
And ceremoniously let us prepare
Some welcome for the mistress of the house.

Enter [LAUNCELOT the] clown.

LAUNCELOT Sola,° sola! Wo ha! Ho sola, sola!

LORENZO Who calls? 40

LAUNCELOT Sola! Did you see Master Lorenzo and Mistress Lorenzo? sola, sola!

LORENZO Leave holloaing, man! Here.

LAUNCELOT Sola! Where? Where?

LORENZO Here! 45

LAUNCELOT Tell him there's a post come from my master, with his horn full of good news.° My master will be here ere morning. [Exit.]

LORENZO

Sweet soul, let's in, and there expect° their coming.
And yet no matter; why should we go in? 50
My friend Stephano, signify, I pray you,
Within the house, your mistress is at hand,
And bring your music forth into the air.

[Exit MESSENGER.]

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!
Here will we sit and let the sounds of music 55
Creep in our ears; soft stillness and the night
Become° the touches° of sweet harmony.
Sit, Jessica. Look how the floor of heaven
Is thick inlaid with patens° of bright gold.
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st 60
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring° to the young-eyed cherubins;
Such harmony is in immortal souls,
But whilst this muddy vesture of decay°
Doth grossly close it in, we cannot hear it. 65

[Enter MUSICIANS.]

31 holy crosses a common sight in Renaissance Italy, used to mark shrines on hilltops, beside roads, etc. 39 Sola Launcelot imitates a courier's horn 47 horn full of good news Launcelot puns on the cornucopia, "the horn of plenty" 49 expect await 57 Become befit 57, 67 touches notes produced by touching the strings or stops of a musical instrument 59 patens tiles 62 quiring making music (a reference to the music of the spheres; it was thought that the harmonious movement of the spheres, in Ptolemaic astronomy, produced a heavenly music inaudible to human ears) 64 muddy . . . decay earthy garment subject to decay (i.e., the body)

Come ho, and wake Diana° with a hymn!
With sweetest touches° pierce your mistress' ear
And draw her home with music.

Play music.

JESSICA

I am never merry when I hear sweet music.

LORENZO

The reason is, your spirits are attentive. 70
For do but note a wild and wanton° herd
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud,
Which is the hot condition° of their blood:
If they but hear perchance a trumpet sound, 75
Or any air of music touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,°
Their savage eyes turned to a modest gaze
By the sweet power of music. Therefore the poet
Did feign that Orpheus° drew trees, stones, and floods; 80
Since naught so stockish,° hard, and full of rage°
But music for the time doth change his nature.
The man that hath no music in himself,
Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils;° 85
The motions° of his spirit are dull as night,
And his affections° dark as Erebus.°
Let no such man be trusted. Mark the music.

Enter PORTIA and NERISSA.

PORTIA

That light we see is burning in my hall;
How far that little candle throws his beams! 90
So shines a good deed in a naughty° world.

NERISSA

When the moon shone we did not see the candle.

PORTIA

So doth the greater glory dim the less.
A substitute° shines brightly as a king
Until a king be by, and then his state 95
Empties itself,° as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters.° Music, hark!

NERISSA

It is your music, madam, of the house.

PORTIA

Nothing is good, I see, without respect;°
Methinks it sounds much sweeter than by day. 100

NERISSA

Silence bestows that virtue on it, madam.

PORTIA

The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark
When neither is attended;° and I think
The nightingale, if she should sing by day
When every goose is cackling, would be thought 105

No better a musician than the wren.

How many things by season, seasoned are
To their right praise and true perfection!°

Peace! [Music ceases.] How the° moon sleeps with Endymion,°

And would not be awaked.°

LORENZO

That is the voice,

110

Or I am much deceived, of Portia.

PORTIA

He knows me as the blind man knows the cuckoo,
By the bad voice.

LORENZO

Dear lady, welcome home.

PORTIA

We have been praying for our husbands' welfare,
Which speed we hope the better for our words. 115
Are they returned?

LORENZO

Madam, they are not yet,

But there is come a messenger before
To signify their coming.

PORTIA

Go in, Nerissa.

Give order to my servants that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence— 120
Nor you, Lorenzo—Jessica, nor you.

[A tucket° sounds.]

LORENZO

Your husband is at hand; I hear his trumpet.
We are no telltales, madam; fear you not.

PORTIA

This night methinks is but the daylight sick;
It looks a little paler. 'Tis a day 125
Such as the day is when the sun is hid.

Enter BASSANIO, ANTONIO, GRATIANO, and their FOLLOWERS.

BASSANIO

We should hold day with the Antipodes,°
If you would walk in absence of the sun.

95

PORTIA

Let me give light,° but let me not be light,
For a light wife doth make a heavy° husband, 130
And never be Bassanio so for me.
But God sort all!° You are welcome home, my lord.

BASSANIO

I thank you, madam. Give welcome to my friend.
This is the man, this is Antonio, 100
To whom I am so infinitely bound. 135

PORTIA

You should in all sense° be much bound to him,
For, as I hear, he was much bound for you.

105

107–08 by . . . perfection by the right occasion are made ready to receive their fitting praise and attain their full perfection 109 Peace! How the the quarto reads "Peace, how the"; editors often emend to "Peace, ho! The"; Endymion a handsome shepherd, beloved of Diana 109–10 Peace . . . awaked addressed to the musicians 121 s.d. tucket trumpet call (Bassanio, like every nobleman, had his individual tucket) 127 Antipodes dwellers on the opposite side of the earth 129, 130 light, heavy Portia quibbles on light in the senses of radiance, unchaste, and of little weight, and on heavy in the senses of weighty and despondent, weighed down with trouble 132 God sort all let God ordain all according to his wisdom 136 in all sense (1) in all reason (2) in all senses

66 Diana goddess of the moon and of chastity 71 wanton frolicsome, untrained 74 hot condition impetuous nature 77 make . . . stand stand still by common consent 80 Orpheus famous legendary Greek poet and musician 81 stockish blockish, dull; rage passion 85 spoils plundering 86 motions inward promptings 87 affections emotions; Erebus the dark underworld of the Greeks 91 naughty evil 94 substitute deputy 95–96 his . . . itself his own glory merges into the king's 97 main of waters ocean 99 without respect without reference to circumstances 103 attended heeded

ANTONIO

No more than I am well acquitted of.^o

PORTIA

Sir, you are very welcome to our house.
It must appear in other ways than words;
Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy.^o

GRATIANO [To NERISSA.]

By yonder moon I swear you do me wrong!
In faith, I gave it to the judge's clerk.
Would he were gelt^o that had it, for my part,^o
Since you do take it, love, so much at heart.

PORTIA

A quarrel, ho, already! What's the matter?

GRATIANO

About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring
That she did give me, whose posy^o was
For all the world like cutler's poetry
Upon a knife, "Love me, and leave me not."

NERISSA

What^o talk you of the posy or the value?
You swore to me when I did give it you
That you would wear it till your hour of death,
And that it should lie with you in your grave.
Though not for me,^o yet for your vehement oaths,
You should have been respective^o and have kept it.
Gave it a judge's clerk! No, God's my judge,
The clerk will ne'er wear hair on's face that had it!

GRATIANO

He will, and if he live to be a man.

NERISSA

Ay, if a woman live to be a man.

GRATIANO

Now by this hand, I gave it to a youth,
A kind of boy, a little scrubbèd^o boy
No higher than thyself, the judge's clerk,
A prating boy that begged it as a fee.
I could not for my heart deny it him.

PORTIA

You were to blame—I must be plain with you—
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift,
A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,
And so riveted with faith unto your flesh.
I gave my love a ring, and made him swear
Never to part with it; and here he stands.
I dare be sworn for him he would not leave it^o
Nor pluck it from his finger, for the wealth
That the world masters.^o Now in faith, Gratiano,
You give your wife too unkind^o a cause of grief.
And, 'twere to me, I should be mad^o at it.

BASSANIO [Aside.]

Why, I were best to cut my left hand off
And swear I lost the ring defending it.

GRATIANO

My Lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begged it, and indeed

Deserved it too; and then the boy, his clerk
That took some pains in writing, he begged mine;
And neither man nor master would take aught
But the two rings.

140 PORTIA What ring gave you, my lord?
Not that, I hope, which you received of me. 185

BASSANIO

If I could add a lie unto a fault,^o
I would deny it; but you see my finger
Hath not the ring upon it—it is gone.

145 PORTIA Even so void is your false heart of truth.
By heaven, I will ne'er come in your bed
Until I see the ring! 190

NERISSA

Nor I in yours
Till I again see mine!

BASSANIO

150 Sweet Portia,
If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what^o I gave the ring, 195
And how unwillingly I left the ring
When naught would be accepted but the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.

155 PORTIA If you had known the virtue of the ring,
Or half her worthiness that gave the ring,
Or your own honor to contain^o the ring, 200
You would not then have parted with the ring.
What man is there so much unreasonable,
If you had pleased to have defended it
With any terms of zeal,^o wanted the modesty 205
To urge the thing held as a ceremony?^o
Nerissa teaches me what to believe;
I'll die for't but some woman had the ring!

BASSANIO

165 No, by my honor, madam! By my soul
No woman had it, but a civil doctor,^o 210
Which did refuse three thousand ducats of me
And begged the ring, the which I did deny him,
And suffered him to go displeased away,
Even he that had held up the very life
Of my dear friend. What should I say, sweet lady? 215
I was enforced to send it after him.
I was beset with shame and courtesy.^o
My honor would not let ingratitude
So much besmear it. Pardon me, good lady!
For by these blessed candles of the night, 220
175 Had you been there, I think you would have begged
The ring of me to give the worthy doctor.

PORTIA

Let not that doctor e'er come near my house.
Since he hath got the jewel that I loved,
And that which you did swear to keep for me, 225
I will become as liberal^o as you;
180 I'll not deny him anything I have,

138 acquitted of freed from 141 breathing courtesy courtesy that is only breath (i.e., words) 144 gelt castrated; for my part so far as I care 148 posy a contraction of poesy (i.e., poetry); motto (inscribed on a ring) 151 What why 155 Though . . . me if not for my sake 156 respective regardful, heedful 162 scrubbèd stunted 172 leave it let it go 174 masters possesses 175 unkind unnaturally cruel 176 mad in a frenzy

186 fault faulty act 195 conceive for what form a conception of why 201 honor to contain honorable duty to retain 205 terms of zeal ardent language 205-06 wanted . . . ceremony would have been so lacking in modesty as to urge a claim on the thing you were keeping as a hallowed symbol 210 civil doctor doctor of civil law 217 beset . . . courtesy assailed by feelings of shame and the obligations of courtesy 226 liberal (1) licentious (2) generous

No, not my body nor my husband's bed.
 Know him I shall, I am well sure of it.
 Lie not a night from home. Watch me like Argus.^o 230
 If you do not, if I be left alone—
 Now by mine honor which is yet mine own,
 I'll have that doctor for mine bedfellow.

NERISSA

And I his clerk. Therefore be well advised^o
 How you do leave me to mine own protection. 235

GRATIANO

Well, do you so. Let not me take^o him then!
 For if I do, I'll mar the young clerk's pen.^o

ANTONIO

I am th' unhappy subject of these quarrels.

PORTIA

Sir, grieve not you; you are welcome not withstanding.

BASSANIO

Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong,^o 240
 And in the hearing of these many friends
 I swear to thee, even by thine own fair eyes,
 Wherein I see myself—

PORTIA

Mark you but that!

In both my eyes he doubly sees himself,
 In each eye one. Swear by your double self,^o
 And there's an oath of credit.^o

BASSANIO

Nay, but hear me.

Pardon this fault, and by my soul I swear
 I never more will break an oath with thee.

ANTONIO

I once did lend my body for his wealth,^o
 Which but for him that had your husband's ring 250
 Had quite miscarried. I dare be bound again,
 My soul upon the forfeit, that your lord
 Will never more break faith advisedly.^o

PORTIA

Then you shall be his surety. Give him this,
 And bid him keep it better than the other. 255

ANTONIO

Here, Lord Bassanio. Swear to keep this ring.

BASSANIO

By heaven, it is the same I gave the doctor!

PORTIA

I had it of him. Pardon me, Bassanio,
 For by this ring the doctor lay with me.

NERISSA

And pardon me, my gentle Gratiano,
 For that same scrubbèd boy, the doctor's clerk,
 In lieu of^o this, last night did lie with me.

GRATIANO

Why, this is like the mending of highways
 In summer, where the ways are fair enough.
 What, are we cuckolds^o ere we have deserved it? 265

PORTIA

Speak not so grossly. You are all amazed.^o
 Here is a letter; read it at your leisure.
 It comes from Padua from Bellario.
 There you shall find that Portia was the doctor,
 Nerissa there her clerk. Lorenzo here 270
 Shall witness I set forth as soon as you,
 And even but now returned. I have not yet
 Entered my house. Antonio, you are welcome,
 And I have better news in store for you
 Than you expect. Unseal this letter soon; 275
 There you shall find three of your argosies
 Are richly come to harbor suddenly.
 You shall not know by what strange^o accident
 I chancèd on this letter.

ANTONIO

I am dumb!

BASSANIO

Were you the doctor, and I knew you not? 280

GRATIANO

Were you the clerk that is to make me cuckold?

NERISSA

Ay, but the clerk that never means to do it,
 Unless he live until he be a man.

BASSANIO

Sweet doctor, you shall be my bedfellow.
 When I am absent, then lie with my wife. 285

ANTONIO

Sweet lady, you have given me life and living!
 For here I read for certain that my ships
 Are safely come to road.^o

PORTIA

How now, Lorenzo?

My clerk hath some good comforts too for you. 290

NERISSA

Ay, and I'll give them him without a fee. 290
 There do I give to you and Jessica
 From the rich Jew, a special deed of gift,
 After his death, of all he dies possessed of.

LORENZO

Fair ladies, you drop manna in the way
 Of starvèd people.^o

PORTIA

It is almost morning,

And yet I am sure you are not satisfied 295
 Of these events at full.^o Let us go in,
 And charge us there upon^o inter'gatories,^o
 And we will answer all things faithfully.

GRATIANO

Let it be so. The first inter'gatory 300
 That my Nerissa shall be sworn on^o is,
 Whether till the next night she had rather stay,
 Or go to bed now, being two hours to day.
 But were the day come, I should wish it dark
 Till I were couching with the doctor's clerk. 305
 Well, while I live I'll fear no other thing
 So sore, as keeping safe Nerissa's ring. Exeunt.

230 Argus a monstrous giant of Greek myth, with a hundred eyes; a type of never-failing watchfulness 234 be well advised be very careful 236 take get hold of 237 pen double entendre 240 this enforced wrong this wrong I was forced to commit 245 double self a quibble (1) two-fold image (2) double-dealing character 246 oath of credit oath to be believed (spoken in irony) 249 wealth welfare 253 advisedly deliberately 262 In lieu of in return for 265 cuckolds husbands of faithless wives

266 amazed utterly bewildered; literally, "entangled in a maze (or labyrinth)" 278 strange astonishing 288 road anchorage 295 starvèd people Lorenzo, though of good social position, was, like Bassanio, far from rich 296-97 not . . . full not fully satisfied how these events came to pass 298 charge . . . upon load us with questions; inter'gatories interrogatories (i.e., questions formally drawn up to be put to a defendant or witness and answered under oath) 301 sworn on sworn to under oath

THE HISTORY OF HENRY THE FOURTH [PART ONE]

EDITED BY MAYNARD MACK

Introduction

Readers who come to Henry IV [Part One] from Richard II (and they are well advised who do so) find themselves in a changed world. The new king's second word is "shaken"—"So shaken as we are, so wan with care" (I.i.1). His realm's peace, "frighted," pants to catch her breath. The English earth, invoked in vain by Richard in the earlier play for aid against Henry's invading power (III.ii.4 ff.), like a perverted mother has been sucking "her own children's blood." Englishmen have met Englishmen "in the . . . furious close of civil butchery." The "edge" of war's knife has cut his master.

Though the new king assigns these troubles to the past, we are speedily assured they will not stay there. Present news is equally bloody. In the West, a thousand of Mortimer's men have been "butchered," and afterward mutilated. In the North, ten thousand Scottish corpses were seen by Sir Walter Blunt "balked in their own blood." Throughout the play we shall hear continually of this sort of thing: of "guns and drums and wounds" (I.iii.55) and "many a good tall fellow" destroyed (I.iii.61); of "bloody noses and cracked crowns" (II.iii.92); wearing "a garment all of blood" (III.ii.135); noblemen offered up "hot and bleeding" to "the fire-eyed maid of smoky war" (IV.i.113-14); ragamuffins tossed dead into a pit—"Tut, tut, good enough to toss; food for powder. . . ." (IV.ii.65-66)—or consigned, maimed, to the town's end, "to beg during life" (V.iii.38). Richard returned from wars in Ireland in the earlier play, and the present king, then Henry Hereford, known as Bolingbroke, invaded England; but we never heard of doings like these. This is indeed a changed world: the world of outrage that is anticipated in the next-to-last scene of Richard II by the brutal murder of the king and, earlier, in the deposition scene, by the warning of the Bishop of Carlisle:

What subject can give sentence on his king?
And who sits here that is not Richard's subject?

My Lord of Hereford here, whom you call king,
Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king;
And if you crown him, let me prophesy
The blood of England shall manure the ground,

And future ages groan for this foul act;
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels,
And, in this seat of peace, tumultuous wars
Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind, confound;
Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny
Shall here inhabit, and this land be called
The field of Golgotha and dead men's skulls.
O, if you raise this house against this house,
It will the woofullest division prove
That ever fell upon this cursèd earth!
Prevent it, resist it, let it not be so,
Lest child, child's children, cry against you woe.

(IV.i.121-22, 134-49)

The violence predicted by Carlisle takes over immediately in 1 Henry IV, as we have seen. But the bishop's enunciation of what is sometimes called "the Tudor myth"—the thesis that an ever-watchful Providence brings retribution on peoples who displace their lawful sovereigns, and, specifically, that England's sufferings between the murder of Richard in 1399 and the accession of the first Tudor monarch in 1485 were a divinely appointed punishment for the assault on Richard—the enunciation of this doctrine better suits Shakespeare's earlier treatment of these disorders in the Henry VI plays and Richard III than the Henry IV plays. The world that produces Henry is changed in this respect, too. The old scheme of celestial superintendence hangs loosely over it, to be glanced at in moments of introspection and anxiety; but to all dramatic intents and purposes, Henry's world, like Henry himself, is secular. One reason may be that Shakespeare saw in secularism the necessary condition of a usurper's success. A more compelling reason, doubtless, is that his attention had increasingly shifted from the interpretive moral and theological scheme with which his sources provided him toward the complexities and crosscurrents of human beings as they act and react on one another: in Yeats's words, toward "the fury and the mire of human veins."

The best anticipation of the mood of our play, from this point of view, is Richard's own warning, addressed to the man whose betrayal of him enabled Henry to seize the throne:

Northumberland, thou ladder wherewithal
The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne,
The time shall not be many hours of age
More than it is, ere foul sin, gathering head,
Shall break into corruption. Thou shalt think,
Though he divide the realm and give thee half,
It is too little, helping him to all;
He shall think that thou which knowest the way
To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again,
Being ne'er so little urged another way,
To pluck him headlong from the usurped throne.
The love of wicked men converts to fear,
That fear to hate, and hate turns one or both
To worthy danger and deserved death. (V.i.55-68)

These lines pay tribute to the overall theological scheme ("foul sin, gathering head"), but this fact should not blind us to the principles of realpolitik which they put forward as the mode of action that will govern in the hearts of Henry and his associates.

The irony of the new king's position, we soon learn, springs from these principles. As a successful usurper with the blood of a predecessor on his conscience, he is himself a principle of the disorder on which, as Shakespeare's Macbeth will learn at length, no lasting order can be built. Lawlessness springs up about him as if like Jason he had sown the dragon's teeth. It comes not only in the form of the Percys' rebellion and the behavior of his son, but in the knavery of Falstaff and the murky atmosphere of the inn at Rochester (to some extent an image of England), where all order is in decay and no man trusts another. All these are reflections cast by Henry in the mirror of the body politic. If there are highwaymen on the public road and other highwaymen at Glendower's plotting to snatch the crown, these circumstances cannot be separated from the circumstance that one who has acted like a highwayman is king.

Thus the Tudor theme of the harsh wages of usurpation by no means vanishes from the play. Minimizing it as doctrine, Shakespeare makes it part of the poetic and dramatic texture, while he qualifies and complicates it by presenting to us in Henry a capable and even admirable king—one who, though never granted the security and peace he longs for, maintains his crown by a combination of strength, sagacity, severity, and lenience, and passes it on to an eventually deserving son. The ambivalence of his position is brought out by continual questioning of his title. The rebels question it on many occasions verbally (I.iii. 10 ff., 143 ff.; IV.iii.52 ff.; V.i.30 ff.) and, subsequently, by force of arms. The king himself seems to cast a doubt on it when he dresses others "in his coats" to confuse the enemy at Shrewsbury, as if royalty were a costume or blazon to be laid on at will. When Falstaff "acts" the king in the tavern, this doubt assumes a compelling visual shape, as does a further doubt whether "that father ruffian," as Hal calls Falstaff when he himself assumes the king's part, is more a ruffian in some respects than the deposer and murderer of Richard. Meantime, in the language of the play, this subject is teased at incessantly: we hear of the "grace" that Hal will or will not have when he is king; of the "true¹ prince" knowable by instinct; of the "heir apparent"¹—with a lurking pun in the second term; of false or cracked coins (bearing the king's image) to be passed current; of "nobles" appreciated to "royals"; and of many forms of "counterfeiting." Perhaps the ambiguities surrounding Henry's claim are expressed most succinctly in two remarks made by the Scottish Douglas during the battle. Douglas is engaged in killing all who wear the king's coats as fast as he can find them. "I fear thou art another counterfeit," he says as he sees Henry approach in the same garb. "And yet, in faith, thou bearest thee like a king." The first sentence suggests the emptiness of Henry's title in that he is not the rightful king; the second suggests the justness of his title in that he is a man who knows how to rule. We notice, however, that the king's life is saved neither by the stratagem of the coats nor by kingly "bearing," but by the chivalry of his son.

Henry IV [Part One] was published in 1598; it was probably written and acted in 1596-97. There are some topical allusions in the play to these years, notably the Second Carrier's reference to the high cost of oats that killed Robin Ostler (II.i.12). Topical in a more important sense, during the whole of the 1590's, was the play's general subject matter. Though contemporary concern about succession to the throne need not (though it may) have influenced Shakespeare's choice of materials for his English histories, it inevitably gave them an extra dimension. Elizabeth was now in her sixties, and there was no assured heir, only a multiplicity of candidates, including her sometimes favorite, the Earl of Essex. Many recalled anxiously the chaos in times past when the center of power in the monarchical system had ceased to be sharply defined and clearly visible. This had occurred to an extent after Henry VIII's death, and earlier after Henry V's, and still earlier after the murder of Richard II.

If Shakespeare was at all influenced by these anxieties, his rendering of them is on the whole buoyant and optimistic in his second English tetralogy and especially so in 1 Henry IV. True, the England seen in this play and its immediate successor is far from reassuring. It has even been an England, on the one side, of bawdy house and thieves'-kitchen, of waylaid merchants, badgered and bewildered Justices, and a peasantry wretched, betrayed, and recruited for the wars; an England, on the other side, of the chivalrous wolf pack of Hotspur and Douglas, and of state-sponsored treachery in the person of Prince John—the whole presided over by a sick King, hagridden by conscience, dreaming of a Crusade to the Holy Land as M. Remorse [Falstaff] thinks of slimming and repentance.²

But this is only half the picture. Beside it, for the first Henry IV play, we must place the warmth, wit, and high spirits of the tavern scenes, the impetuous charm of Hotspur, the amusing domesticities of Kate and Glendower's daughter, the touching loyalty of Francis, the affections that (along with sponging) bind Falstaff to Hal, and Hal's own magnanimity and self-command. For both the first and second plays, we must weigh heavily into the account the character of the story told. This, the greatest of monarchical success stories in English popular history, traces the evolution of an engaging scapegrace into one of the most admired of English kings. Chicanery and appetite in the first play, apathy and corruption in the second, form an effective theatrical background against which the oncoming sunbright majesty of the future Henry V may shine more brightly—as we are assured precisely that it will do on our first meeting with him (I.ii).

¹ The italics are, of course, the editor's.

² J. F. Danby, Shakespeare's Doctrine of Nature: A Study of King Lear (1949), pp. 97-98.

When Shakespeare turned to this subject in 1596–97, he found in his historical sources, mainly Holinshed's Chronicles, two dominant motifs. One was the moral and theological interpretation of the troubles attending Henry IV's reign in consequence of his usurpation. This we have already discussed. The other was the legend of the madcap youth of Henry's son and heir—a legend already exploited in an anonymous play of which we have today only a debased and possibly abbreviated text: The Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth. The Famous Victories contributes to 1 Henry IV the germ of the robbery incident (though the Prince's involvement in a thieving episode is found in the chronicles as well); the germ of the tavern high jinks and parodying of authority; the germ of the expectation of Hal's reign as a golden age of rascals; and the germ of the reconciliation scene between the prince and his father. The extent to which these hints are fleshed out and transfigured by Shakespeare's imagination may be seen in the character of Mistress Quickly. Her entire original in the Famous Victories is a sentence spoken by the prince, favoring a rendezvous at "the old tavern in Eastcheap" because "there is a pretty wench that can talk well."

From the Famous Victories come also the names Gad's Hill (for the arranger of the robbery), Ned (our Ned Poins), and Jockey Oldcastle. The last was Shakespeare's name for Falstaff when the play was first performed, as references throughout the early seventeenth century show; Hal's addressing him as "my old lad of the castle" in the play as we have it (I.ii.42) is a survival from this. By the time the play was printed, the name had been altered to Falstaff for reasons that can now only be guessed at. Possibly there had been a protest by Oldcastle's descendants, one of whom was Lord Chamberlain during part of 1596–97. How the historical Oldcastle (d. 1417), a man of character who was made High Sheriff of Herefordshire and eventually Lord Cobham, came to be metamorphosed into the roisterer of the Famous Victories is also an unsolved mystery, though no more mysterious than the dramatic imagination that exalted this dull stage roisterer, lacking eloquence, wit, mendacity, thirst, and fat, into the Falstaff we know.

On Holinshed and minor sources like Samuel Daniel's epic The First Four Books of the Civil Wars between the Two Houses of Lancaster and York (1595), Shakespeare based his treatment of the Percy rebellion, recasting the materials to give them an inner coherence. The Hotspur of history, for example, was twenty-three years older than Hal and two years older than the king himself, who at the date of the battle of Shrewsbury was only thirty-seven, his eldest son being then sixteen, and Prince John thirteen. Shakespeare followed the lead of Daniel and made Hotspur a youth, in order to establish dramatic rivalry between him and Hal. He then aged Henry rapidly so that by the time of the battle the king can speak of crushing his "old limbs in ungentle steel" and be the more appropriately rescued (this episode is also derived from Daniel) by his vigorous heir. For the same dramatic purpose, he assigned to Hal the triumph over Hotspur—though the inspiration for this may have come from misreading an ambiguous sentence in Holinshed. The reconciliation of prince and king, touched on in the chronicles and dramatized briefly in the Famous Victories as occurring in Henry's latter years, he moved forward to a position before Shrewsbury, in order to enhance the human drama of father and son and further sharpen our anticipation of Hal's meeting with Hotspur. Hotspur's blunt, uncourtly humor, the conception of Glendower as scholar and poet fired by a Celtic imagination, the entertaining clash of temperament and mood that this makes possible at Glendower's house, not only between Welshman and Englishman, but between romantic lovers and seasoned man and wife—all this again is Shakespeare's invention. His transformation of Holinshed, like his transformation of the Famous Victories, may best be indicated by a specific example. All of Hotspur's deliciously impetuous speech about the popinjay lord who came to Holmedon to demand his prisoners, not to mention the wonderfully ebullient scene in which it occurs, has behind it in Holinshed only seventeen words: "the King demanded of the Earl and his son such Scottish prisoners as were taken at Homeldon. . . ."

Hal's triumphant journey from tippling in taverns to glory on the field of battle derives from one other "source," more influential than any yet mentioned here. This is the psychomachia of the morality plays—that is, the struggle of virtues and vices for possession of a man's soul, a theme acted again and again in the plays of the early sixteenth century, which the drama of Marlowe and Shakespeare superseded. In these plays, youthful virtue is beset by temptations and misleaders but customarily sees the true light at last and is saved. In the same general manner, Prince Hal "has to choose, Morality-fashion, between Sloth or Vanity, to which he is drawn by his bad companions, and Chivalry, to which he is drawn by his father and brother. And he chooses Chivalry."³

The play that Shakespeare built from these miscellaneous materials is simple in its large outlines. It brings before us three contrasting environments at once, each with a commanding personality. The court is Henry's domain; the tavern is Falstaff's; the feudal countryside is Hotspur's. What essentially takes place during the first three acts is the progress of Hal, the one unattached player, from Falstaff's environment to Henry's. Hal then returns in the last scene of Act III to mobilize the tavern world for war, after which Falstaff's environment dissolves. We then have two environments, both military and political in nature, one of them dominated by Hotspur, the other (beginning with Act IV) increasingly by Hal. Falstaff, now in his turn the unattached man, makes appropriate comments on each.

Within this simple framework, Shakespeare accomplishes an articulation of complementary images, cross-references, and ironic contrasts that is without parallel in the history of English stage comedy. The highway robbery comments on the Percys' plot and also on the king's usurpation, as we saw a few moments ago. Gadshill, boasting of the quality of his confederates (II.i), anticipates Hotspur's misplaced confidence in the fidelity of his fellow rebels (II.iii). Falstaff bawling for his horse (II.ii) has satirical affinities with Hotspur chattering to the same purpose (II.iii). Hal describes Hotspur talking to his wife (II.iv) as if he had been an eavesdropper in the scene preceding, and points our attention to a tavern monomania in Francis which is perhaps reminiscent of Hotspur's monomania for "palisadoes, frontiers, parapets." Hotspur describes a presumed but perhaps wholly imaginary fight between Glendower and Mortimer in epic terms (I.iii); Falstaff does the same for a definitely imaginary contest with eleven men in buckram (II.iv). Falstaff keeps telling us he is about to reform; Hal actually does so. Hal's interview with his father (III.ii) is broadened and deepened for us in advance by the burlesque of it (II.iv) and by the failure of Hotspur to achieve a similar self-discipline (III.i). Glendower and Hotspur mirror each other in egoism, contrast vividly in the pedantic refinements of the one, the countrified heartiness of the other. Falstaff's remarks on honor, as everyone knows, complement those we have heard earlier from Hotspur; the comic account of Falstaff's conscripted derelicts corrects and supplements the description of Hal's army by a general who loves parades (IV.i.97 ff.) and the anticipation of destroying it by a general who loves carnage (IV.i.113 ff.); Falstaff's cynical "They'll fill a pit as well as better" hangs over the ensuing battle, enveloping especially those who are to fill a pit simply because the king has dressed them in his coats; and so on. This list of cross-references could be extended almost indefinitely.

³ E. M. W. Tillyard, Shakespeare's History Plays (1944), p. 265.

Only through such qualifying optics as these does Shakespeare allow us to view the simple morality "choice" described by Professor Tillyard. Hotspur is one term in that choice—at first glance, a wholly negative term. He misjudges Henry, seeing only the king's duplicity. He misjudges Hal, seeing only the truant, overlooking Hal's sagacity and versatility. Magnanimity is also beyond his reach. His manners are rude, not courtly. His reaction to Glendower is both impolitic and provincial. Yet the play shows us there is much to be said on behalf of this misguided and hotheaded young man. In many respects, he is set apart from, and above, the company he keeps. In being free of scheming policy, he is differentiated from his uncle Worcester and the king. In fighting (for a time) the nation's battles, he has in the past surpassed Hal. He can be counted on when needed and is thereby distinguished from Glendower, Mortimer, and his father. His valor in battle is total. In this he is unlike Douglas, who makes a fine display of fearlessness but in the pinch flees. And he is naively frank-hearted. Hotspur, Worcester knows, would be moved to meet what seems the king's generous offer of amnesty with equal generosity, and the battle would probably not be fought.

Falstaff, the other term of the choice, is similarly complex. First of all, he is endowed by Shakespeare with a comic imagination that enables him (as Antony will later be enabled by the imagination of Cleopatra) to show his back above the element he lives in. His shattering of official clichés and stained-glass attitudes throughout the play is a measure of his penetration as well as, sometimes, his irresponsibility: "Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal. 'Tis no sin for a man to labor in his vocation" (I.ii.105-06); "A plague of sighing and grief, it blows a man up like a bladder" (II.iv.334-36); "Thou knowest in the state of innocence Adam fell, and what should poor Jack Falstaff do in the days of villainy? Thou see'st I have more flesh than another man, and therefore more frailty" (III.iii.172-76); "Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it" (V.i.28). These show the same gift of comic insight that enables him to multiply images of himself as a shotten herring or a poulterer's hare, to raise the stock role of miles gloriosus, or braggart soldier, into the most rapturous flight of mendacity the comic stage has ever seen (II.iv), and to fling into the tense silence before the robbery one of those searching questions about the nature of man and his societies that a wide-eyed child will sometimes propound: "Zounds, will they not rob us?" (II.ii.64). (In 2 Henry IV, appealing to "law of nature" to account for the way of a pike with a dace, he will make this Hobbesian question a proposition.)

Falstaff is also set apart by his genuine affections, his joy in his friends: "Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship come to you!" (II.iv.280-81). He is even set apart by a certain kind of honesty. He will lie to others inexhaustibly, but that life is sweeter to him than honor, sack than killing, money in the pocket more gratifying than a fine squad of soldiers, he never seeks to hide from himself. Yet it would be folly to ignore that his honesty makes him no less a rascal, his affection no less a parasite, his perspicacity about some matters no less willful-blind about the rest. Falstaff is much more than—but he also is—a glutton, drunkard, liar, coward, and thief.

Hotspur and Falstaff are extremes, and we see the gulf that separates them when Hotspur goes down fighting while Falstaff plays dead to save his skin. But extremes (so runs the familiar saying) meet, and we see them meet when Falstaff, having taken Hotspur's body on his back, assures Hal he is "not a double man." The phrase reminds us that he and Hotspur are in some respects outsized versions of the same thing. Both are chivalric figures, Falstaff being, however backslidden, a knight; both exemplify ways in which chivalry may go to seed. "A harebrained Hotspur, governed by a spleen," as his uncle Worcester describes him, can sacrifice to spleen a true knight's fealty and stain the honor he so prizes by making it the ground his egoism walks on. As for Falstaff, that "huge bombard of sack," that "roast Manningtree ox with the pudding in his belly": in his knight's bosom, "there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty; . . . it is all filled up with guts and midriff."

Falstaff and Hotspur help us see that Hal's course is a mean between extremes. King Henry helps us see that Hal's mean is not a path of least resistance but a creative will that points toward a new kind of world. A master of appearances, as his description of his behavior in King Richard's time informs us (III.ii), Henry is at the same time their victim. If he seriously imagines that he would ever actually go on that crusade whose "dear expedience" occupies his council at the opening of the play (I.i), he is obviously self-deceived; if he does not intend to go, it is a calculated charade. The sketches of Hotspur and his son which he draws for us in the same scene are unmistakably sincere; but we soon discover they are wrong—mere stereotypes of martial prowess and libertinism. Henry does not really understand either his son or Hotspur. When he holds up Hotspur for a model in the reconciliation scene (III.ii), when he exhibits his delusion that what he was to King Richard, Hotspur is now to Hal, when he speaks of Hal's "barren pleasures" to us who have just seen the tavern bulge with an energy and feeling never to be matched at Henry's court, we understand how far he has become prisoner of a royalism that is less imaginative than his son's. And when the battle comes, we understand more clearly against this background the meaning of the contrasts there: the king "has many marching in his coats"; the prince offers to decide the issue by taking the danger on himself alone; the king, thinking in political terms, sends his enemies to execution and within these terms is perfectly right to do so; the prince thinks in larger terms and spares Douglas, not for political reasons (though doubtless he is aware of these), but because, as in his praise of Hotspur, he can cherish "high deeds/Even in the bosom of our adversaries." Even Falstaff at his most ignominious, wounding Hotspur's corpse and claiming credit for having killed him, the prince can bring himself to excuse; he will gild his lie "with the happiest terms I have."

Thus by the play's end, Hal casts an inclusive shadow. He has met the claims of Hotspur's world, of Falstaff's, and of Henry's, without narrowing himself to any one. He has practiced mercy as well as justice, politics as well as friendship, shown himself capable of mockery as well as reverence, detachment as well as commitment, and brought into a practicable balance court, field, and tavern. He is on the way to becoming the luminous figure toward whom, in Henry V, Welshman, Irishman, Scot, and Englishman will alike be drawn. In this figure, combining valor, courtliness, hard sense, and humor in an ideal image of the potentialities of the English character, Shakespeare seems to have discerned grounds for that optimism about the future of his country which permeates his historical vision in the plays from Richard II to Henry V. We ourselves may find in it, if not so local and particular an image, glimpses of an ideal form that remains relevant to us—such a form as Socrates and Glaucon, in the ninth book of the Republic, allude to in their discussion of the perfect city. Glaucon, the doubter, says: "But the city whose foundation we have been describing has its being only in words; there is no spot on earth where it exists." And Socrates replies: "No; but it is laid up in heaven as a pattern for him who wills to see, and seeing, to found that city in himself. Whether it exists anywhere, or ever will exist, is no matter."

A NOTE ON THE SOURCES

So far as we know, the sources on which Shakespeare chiefly drew in writing Henry IV [Part One] were the following: (1) the pages on Henry's reign in Volume III of Raphael Holinshed's compilation of British history, Chronicles of England, Scotland, and Ireland, first published in 1577 but later reissued (1586–87) in an enlarged edition, which seems to have been the text actually consulted by Shakespeare; (2) the relevant stanzas in Book III of Samuel Daniel's long poem, The First Four Books of the Civil Wars between the Two Houses of Lancaster and York (1595); and (3) The Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth, Containing the Honorable Battle of Agincourt—an anonymous play of uncertain date, first printed in 1598, today extant in only one known copy. For a brief account of the playwright's management of his sources in the completed play, see the Introduction, p. 640.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

The text for the present edition as a whole is the first quarto of 1598. This is generally believed to have been set from an earlier edition of the same year (Q0), of which today only four leaves are known—containing the text of the play from I.iii.199 to II.ii.112. Q0, so far as we have it, shows characteristics which relate it closely to an authorial manuscript, probably a corrected working manuscript rather than a fair copy. Q1 may therefore be regarded as still reasonably faithful to what Shakespeare wrote. The later quartos (Q2, 1599; Q3, 1604; Q4, 1608; Q5, 1613), each set from the one preceding, and the Folio (1623), set from Q5, have increasingly less authority.

Apart from spelling and punctuation, which are modernized in this edition, and regularization of speech prefixes, I have followed Q1, and, where it exists, Q0. With one exception (IV.i.12–13), I preserve the lineation of these editions, printing therefore as prose a number of passages so printed in Q1 but now almost invariably divided into lines of verse. It is possible, even probable, that some of these passages were intended to be verse; but the wide differences exhibited by editors in lineating them persuade me to reserve this entertainment for readers who wish to engage in it. I have usually indicated in the footnotes one or more of the traditional patterns of lineation for each passage.

The table below records departures from Q0–Q1. The first reading (boldface) is that which I have adopted in the text; the second is that of Q1. Almost all of the emendations were made in the quartos or in the First Folio, indicating that in Shakespeare's own day the passages in question were suspect; but because these early texts have no authority, they are not cited as sources.

Division into acts and scenes is here that of the Folio, save that I follow Capell and most other editors (including those of the Globe edition) in dividing the Folio's V.ii into V.ii and V.iii and renumbering the subsequent scenes. In the quartos there is no indication of acts or scenes.

I.i.62 a dear deere 69 blood did bloud. Did 76 In faith it is [the quartos and folios give to the king]
I.ii.80 similes smiles 161 Bardolph, Peto Haruey, Rossill [these are names that Shakespeare evidently meant originally to assign to Falstaff's associates: see below, II.iv.174–77, 181–82]
I.iii.199–206 [Q0–Q4 do not assign to Hotspur, but give as part of Northumberland's speech]
II.ii.16 two and twenty xxii
II.iii.4 respect the respect 70 A roan Roane
II.iv.34 precedent present 37 [assigned to prince] 174–77 [assigned to Gadshill, Ross (= Russell: see above, I.ii.161), Falstaff, Ross] 181–82 [assigned to Ross] 246 eelskin elsskin 343 Owen O 398 tristful trustfull
III.i.99 cantle scantle 128 on an
III.ii.115 Enlargèd Enlargd
III.iii.37 that's that 61 tithe tight 92 s.d. them him 180 guests ghesse 208 o' of IV.i.20 I, my lord I my mind 54 is tis 107 dropped drop 125 cannot can 126 yet it
IV.iii.21 horse horses 28 ours our 82 country's Countrey
V.i.138 will it wil
V.ii.3 undone vnder one 25 s.d. Hotspur Percy
V.iii.22 A Ah
V.iv.66 Nor Now 74 s.d. who he 157 ours our

THE HISTORY OF HENRY THE FOURTH

[PART ONE]

[Dramatis Personae]

KING HENRY THE FOURTH
HENRY Prince of Wales } the king's PRINCE JOHN OF LANCASTER } sons
EARL OF WESTMORELAND
SIR WALTER BLUNT
THOMAS PERCY Earl of Worcester
HENRY PERCY Earl of Northumberland
HENRY PERCY ("HOTSPUR") his son
EDMUND MORTIMER Earl of March
RICHARD SCROOP Archbishop of York
ARCHIBALD Earl of Douglas
OWEN GLENDOWER
SIR RICHARD VERNON
SIR JOHN FALSTAFF

SIR MICHAEL a friend of the Archbishop of York
POINS
GADSHILL
PETO
BARDOLPH
FRANCIS a waiter
LADY PERCY Hotspur's wife and Mortimer's sister LADY MORTIMER Glendower's daughter and Mortimer's wife
MISTRESS QUICKLY hostess of the tavern
SHERIFF VINTNER CHAMBERLAIN TWO CARRIERS OSTLER MESSENGERS
TRAVELERS ATTENDANTS

Scene: England and Wales]

[A C T I]

[Scene I. London. The palace.]

Enter the KING, Lord JOHN of Lancaster, Earl of WEST-MORELAND, [Sir Walter BLUNT,] with others.

KING

So shaken as we are, so wan with care,
Find we a time for frightened peace to pant°
And breathe short-winded accents of new broils
To be commenced in stronds° afar remote.
No more the thirsty entrance of this soil
Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood,
No more shall trenching° war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flow'rets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces. Those opposed eyes

5

Which, like the meteors° of a troubled heaven, 10
All of one nature, of one substance bred°,
Did lately meet in the intestine° shock
And furious close° of civil butchery,
Shall now in mutual well-beseeming° ranks
March all one way and be no more opposed 15
Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies.
The edge of war, like an ill-sheathèd knife,
No more shall cut his master. Therefore, friends,
As far as to the sepulcher of Christ°—
Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross 20
We are impressèd and engagèd° to fight—
Forthwith a power° of English shall we levy,
Whose arms were molded in their mother's womb
To chase these pagans in those holy fields

20

10 meteors atmospheric disturbances 11 All . . . bred i.e., because believed to originate from vapors 12 intestine internal 13 close grappling 14 mutual well-beseeming interdependent well-ordered 19 As . . . Christ to Jerusalem 21 impressèd and engagèd conscripted and pledged (by Henry's vow after the murder of Richard: cf. Richard II, V.vi.45–50) 22 power army

The decorative border shown above appeared on the first page of the fifth quarto edition of The History of Henry the Fourth [Part One], 1613.

I.i.2 pant catch (her) breath 4 stronds shores 7 trenching (1) cutting (2) encroaching

Over whose acres walked those blessed feet
Which fourteen hundred years ago were nailed
For our advantage on the bitter cross.
But this our purpose now is twelvemonth old,
And bootless° 'tis to tell you we will go.
Therefor we meet not now.° Then let me hear
Of you, my gentle cousin° Westmoreland,
What yesternight our council did decree
In forwarding this dear expedience.°

WESTMORELAND

My liege, this haste was hot in question°
And many limits of the charge° set down
But yesternight; when all athwart° there came
A post° from Wales, loaden with heavy news,
Whose worst was that the noble Mortimer,
Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight Against the irregular and wild° Glendower,
Was by the rude hands of that Welshman taken,
A thousand of his people butcherèd;
Upon whose dead corpse there was such misuse,
Such beastly shameless transformation
By those Welshwomen done, as may not be Without much shame retold or spoken of.°

KING

It seems then that the tidings of this broil
Brake off our business for the Holy Land.

WESTMORELAND

This, matched with other, did, my gracious lord;
For more uneven° and unwelcome news
Came from the north, and thus it did import:
On Holy-rood Day° the gallant Hotspur there,
Young Harry Percy, and brave Archibald,
That ever-valiant and approvèd Scot,
At Holmedon° met, where they did spend
A sad and bloody hour;
As by discharge of their artillery
And shape of likelihood° the news was told;
For he that brought them,° in the very heat
And pride of their contention° did take horse,
Uncertain of the issue° any way.

KING

Here is a dear, a true industrious° friend,
Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse,
Stained with the variation of each soil
Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat° of ours,
And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.
The Earl of Douglas is discomfited;
Ten thousand bold Scots, two and twenty knights,
Balked° in their own blood did Sir Walter see
On Holmedon's plains. Of prisoners, Hotspur took

29 bootless useless 30 Therefor . . . now That is not the reason we now meet 31 gentle cousin noble kinsman 33 dear expedience urgent enterprise 34 hot in question undergoing hot discussion 35 limits . . . charge apportionings of tasks and costs 36 athwart crosswise, i.e., interfering 37 post messenger 40 irregular and wild i.e., as border-raider and guerrilla 43-46 such . . . of the phrasing in Holinshed, Shakespeare's source, suggests that the dead English were castrated 50 uneven cf. "smooth" in line 66 52 Holy-rood Day September 14 55 Holmedon Humbleton in Northumberland 58 shape of likelihood probability 59 them the news 59-60 heat . . . contention peak of battle 61 issue outcome 62 true industrious loyally zealous 65 seat dwelling, i.e., the palace 69 Balked (1) heaped (2) thwarted

25 Mordake, Earl of Fife and eldest son
To beaten Douglas, and the Earl of Athol,
Of Murray, Angus, and Menteith.
And is not this an honorable spoil?
A gallant prize? Ha, cousin, is it not? 75

30 WESTMORELAND

In faith it is. A conquest for a prince to boast of
KING
Yea, there thou mak'st me sad, and mak'st me sin
In envy that my Lord Northumberland
Should be the father to so blest a son:
35 A son who is the theme of honor's tongue, 80
Amongst a grove the very straightest plant;
Who is sweet fortune's minion° and her pride;
Whilst I, by looking on the praise of him,
See riot and dishonor stain the brow
40 Of my young Harry. O that it could be proved 85
That some night-tripping fairy° had exchanged
In cradle clothes our children where they lay,
And called mine Percy, his Plantagenet!°
Then would I have his Harry, and he mine.
45 But let him from my thoughts. What think you, coz,° 90
Of this young Percy's pride? The prisoners
Which he in this adventure hath surprised°
To his own use he keeps, and sends me word
I shall have none but Mordake, Earl of Fife.

WESTMORELAND

This is his uncle's teaching, this is Worcester, 95
Malevolent to you in all aspects,°
Which makes him prune° himself and bristle up
The crest of youth against your dignity.

KING

But I have sent for him to answer this;
55 And for this cause awhile we must neglect 100
Our holy purpose to Jerusalem.
Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we
Will hold at Windsor, so inform the lords:
But come yourself with speed to us again,
60 For more is to be said and to be done 105
Than out of anger can be utterèd.°

WESTMORELAND

I will, my liege. Exeunt.

[Scene II. London. The prince's lodging.]

Enter PRINCE of Wales and Sir John FALSTAFF.

FALSTAFF Now, Hal, what time of day is it, lad?
PRINCE Thou art so fat-witted with drinking of old sack,° and unbuttoning thee after supper, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly which thou wouldest truly know. 5
What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day?
Unless hours were cups of sack, and minutes capons,

82 minion darling 86 fairy fairies were thought sometimes to steal a beautiful infant, leaving an ugly "changeling" in its place 88 Plantagenet family name of Henry IV 90 coz kinsman (short for cousin) 92 surprised taken 96 Malevolent . . . aspects an astrological expression comparing Worcester to a planet whose influence obstructs Henry's designs 97 prune preen his feathers for action (like a hawk) 106 utterèd transacted in public
I.ii.3 sack Spanish white wine and clocks the tongues of bawds, and dials° the signs of leaping houses,° and the blessed sun himself a fair hot wench in flame-colored taffeta, I see no reason why 10 thou shouldst be so superfluous to° demand the time of the day.

FALSTAFF Indeed you come near me° now, Hal; for we that take purses go by° the moon and the seven stars,° and not by Phoebus,° he, that wand'ring knight 15 so fair.° And I prithee, sweet wag, when thou art a king, as, God save thy grace°—majesty I should say, for grace thou wilt have none—

PRINCE What, none?

FALSTAFF No, by my troth; not so much as will serve 20 to be prologue to an egg and butter.

PRINCE Well, how then? Come, roundly, roundly.°

FALSTAFF Marry,° then, sweet wag, when thou art king, let not us that are squires of the night's body be called thieves of the day's beauty.° Let us be Diana's° 25 foresters, gentlemen of the shade, minions° of the moon; and let men say we be men of good government,° being governed, as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we steal. 30

PRINCE Thou sayest well, and it holds well° too; for the fortune of us that are the moon's men doth ebb and flow like the sea, being governed as the sea is by the moon. As, for proof now: a purse of gold most resolutely snatched on Monday night and most 35 dissolutely spent on Tuesday morning; got with swearing "Lay by," and spent with crying "Bring in";° now in as low an ebb as the foot of the ladder,° and by and by in as high a flow as the ridge of the gallows.

FALSTAFF By the Lord, thou say'st true, lad—and is 40 not my hostess of the tavern a most sweet wench?

PRINCE As the honey of Hybla,° my old lad of the castle°—and is not a buff jerkin° a most sweet robe of durance?

8 dials sundial 9 leaping houses brothels 11 so superfluous to so irrelevant as to 13 near me close to understanding me (as if Hal were shooting at a mark) 14 go by (1) walk under (2) tell time by (3) regulate our lives by 14–15 seven stars constellation Pleiades 15 Phoebus the sun 15–16 he . . . fair Falstaff possibly quotes here, or sings, a line of a lost ballad; the sun was readily thought of as an eternal wanderer or "knight-errant" 17 grace Falstaff puns on "your grace" a title which Hal asking will exchange for "your majesty"—and spiritual grace and, in lines 20–21, on grace before eating 22 roundly i.e., get to the point (but possibly with a glance at Falstaff's girth) 23 Marry a mild oath, from "By the Virgin Mary" 24–25 squires . . . beauty Falstaff's puns on night/knight—knights were often attended by body-squires—and probably on body/beauty/booty; the "day's beauty" in one of its senses here is the sun and balances "the night's body," which in one sense is the moon 25 Diana goddess of the moon and the hunt (by identifying the hunt with hunting for "booty"—and "beauty"—Falstaff presents himself and his crew as Diana's companion foresters, her titled "gentlemen of the shade," her "minions," who "steal"—i.e., [1] move silently [2] take purses under her "countenance"—i.e., under [1] her face [2] her protection) 26 minions servants and favorites 27–28 of good government (1) well-behaved (2) ruled by a good ruler 31 it holds well it's a good comparison 37–38 Lay by . . . Bring in the highwayman's commands: the first to his victims, the second to the waiter in the tavern where he spends his gains 38 ladder leading up to the gallows 42 Hybla Sicilian source of fine honey; old . . . castle rowdy (with pun on Oldcastle, Falstaff's original name, and probably on The Castle, a well-known London brothel) 43 buff jerkin tan (leather) jacket (a "robe of durance" because both durable and suggesting imprisonment [durance] because worn by the sheriff's officers)

FALSTAFF How now, how now, mad wag? What, in thy quips and thy quiddities?° What a plague have I to 45 do with a buff jerkin?

PRINCE Why, what a pox° have I to do with my hostess of the tavern?

FALSTAFF Well, thou hast called her to a reckoning° many a time and oft. 50

PRINCE Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part?

FALSTAFF No; I'll give thee thy due, thou hast paid all there.

PRINCE Yea, and elsewhere, so far as my coin would stretch; and where it would not, I have used my credit. 55

FALSTAFF Yea, and so used it that, were it not here apparent that thou art heir apparent—But I prithee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king? And resolution thus fubbed° as it is with the rusty curb of old father Antic° the law? 60 Do not thou, when thou art king, hang a thief.

PRINCE No; thou shalt.

FALSTAFF Shall I? O rare! By the Lord, I'll be a brave° judge.

PRINCE Thou judgest false already. I mean, thou shalt 65 have the hanging of the thieves and so become a rare hangman.

FALSTAFF Well, Hal, well; and in some sort it jumps with my humor° as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you. 70

PRINCE For obtaining of suits?°

FALSTAFF Yea, for obtaining of suits, whereof the hangman hath no lean wardrobe. 'Sblood,° I am as melancholy as a gib-cat° or a lugged° bear.

PRINCE Or an old lion, or a lover's lute. 75

FALSTAFF Yea, or the drone° of a Lincolnshire bagpipe.

PRINCE What sayest thou to a hare,° or the melancholy of Moorditch?°

FALSTAFF Thou hast the most unsavory similes, and 80 art indeed the most comparative,° rascalliast, sweet young prince. But, Hal, I prithee trouble me no more with vanity.° I would to God thou and I knew where a commodity° of good names were to be bought. An old lord of the council rated° me the other day in the 85 street about you, sir, but I marked him not; and yet he talked very wisely, but I regarded him not; and yet he talked wisely, and in the street too.

44–45 What . . . quiddities So you're in a witty mood, are you? 47 pox the Prince turns Falstaff's "plague" (line 45) into a disease more characteristic of tavern hostesses 49 called . . . reckoning (1) called her to a showdown (2) asked her for the bill 59 resolution thus fubbed courage (i.e., in the highwayman) thus cheated of its reward 60 old father Antic "that old screwball" 63 brave (1) excellent (2) handsomely decked out 68–69 jumps . . . humor agrees with my frame of mind 71 suits petitions for court favor (but Falstaff takes it in the sense of the victim's garments, which were forfeit to the executioner) 73 'Sblood by God's (i.e., Christ's) blood 74 gib-cat tomcat; lugged tied to a stake and baited by dogs, as entertainment 76 drone single note of a bagpipe's bass pipe 78 hare proverbially melancholy 79 Moorditch foul London drainage ditch 81 comparative full of (insulting) comparisons 83 vanity worldly considerations (Falstaff here takes up one of his favorite humorous roles, assuming for the next several lines the sanctimonious attitudes and vocabulary of Elizabethan Puritanism) 84 commodity supply 85 rated scolded

PRINCE Thou didst well, for wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it.⁹⁰

FALSTAFF O, thou hast damnable iteration,⁹¹ and art indeed able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal—God forgive thee for it! Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better than one of the wicked.⁹⁵ I must give over this life, and I will give it over! By the Lord, and⁹⁶ I do not, I am a villain! I'll be damned for never a king's son in Christendom.

PRINCE Where shall we take a purse tomorrow, Jack?¹⁰⁰

FALSTAFF Zounds,⁹⁷ where thou wilt, lad! I'll make one. An⁹⁸ I do not, call me villain and baffle⁹⁹ me.

PRINCE I see a good amendment of life in thee—from praying to purse-taking.

FALSTAFF Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation,¹⁰⁵ Hal. 'Tis no sin for a man to labor in his vocation.

Enter POINS.

Poins! Now shall we know if Gadshill have set a match.¹¹⁰ O, if men were to be saved by merit,¹¹¹ what hole in hell were hot enough for him? This is the most omnipotent villain that ever cried "Stand!" to a true¹¹² man.

PRINCE Good morrow, Ned.

POINS Good morrow, sweet Hal. What says Monsieur Remorse? What says Sir John Sack and Sugar?¹¹⁵ Jack, how agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that thou soldest him on Good Friday last for a cup of Madeira and a cold capon's leg?

PRINCE Sir John stands to his word, the devil shall have his bargain; for he was never yet a breaker of proverbs. He will give the devil his due.¹²⁰

POINS Then art thou damned for keeping thy word with the devil.

PRINCE Else he had been damned for cozening¹²⁵ the devil.

POINS But, my lads, my lads, tomorrow morning, by four o'clock early, at Gad's Hill!¹³⁰ There are pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings,¹³¹ and traders riding to London with fat purses. I have vizards¹³² for you all; you have horses for yourselves. Gadshill lies tonight in Rochester. I have bespoke supper tomorrow night at Eastcheap.¹³³ We may do it as secure as sleep.

89-90 Thou . . . it Hal quotes Proverbs 1:20-24: "Wisdom crieth without, and putteth forth her voice in the streets . . . saying . . . 'I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded'" 91 damnable iteration a sinful way of repeating and (mis)applying holy texts 95-96 the wicked Puritan idiom for those who were not Puritans; cf. "saint" in line 92, which glances at the Puritans' way of referring collectively to themselves 97 and if 101 Zounds by God's (i.e., Christ's) wounds 102 An if; baffle hang upside down (a punishment allotted perjured knights) 105 vocation calling (with reference to the Puritan stress on a man's being "called" by God to his work) 107-08 set a match arranged a robbery 108 merit good works (in Puritan doctrine wholly insufficient for salvation) 110 true honest 114 Sack and Sugar sack sweetened with sugar was particularly the drink of the elderly, but there may be a pun, in this context, on sackcloth, symbol of penance 123 cozening cheating 126 Gad's Hill a place notorious for holdups on the road from Rochester to London 127 offerings for the shrine of Saint Thomas à Becket 128 vizards masks 131 Eastcheap London street and district

If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home and be hanged!

FALSTAFF Hear ye, Yedward:¹³⁴ if I tarry at home and go not, I'll hang you for going.¹³⁵

POINS You will, chops?¹³⁶

FALSTAFF Hal, wilt thou make one?

PRINCE Who, I rob? I a thief? Not I, by my faith.

FALSTAFF There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou can'st not of the blood royal¹⁴⁰ if thou darest not stand for¹⁴¹ ten shillings.

PRINCE Well then, once in my days I'll be a madcap.

FALSTAFF Why, that's well said.

PRINCE Well, come what will, I'll tarry at home.

FALSTAFF By the Lord, I'll be a traitor then, when thou art king.¹⁴⁵

PRINCE I care not.

POINS Sir John, I prithee, leave the prince and me alone. I will lay him down such reasons for this adventure that he shall go.¹⁵⁰

FALSTAFF Well, God give thee the spirit of persuasion and him the ears of profiting, that what thou speakest may move¹⁵⁵ and what he hears may be believed, that the true prince may (for recreation sake) prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the time want countenance.¹⁵⁶ Farewell; you shall find me in Eastcheap.

PRINCE Farewell, the¹⁵⁷ latter spring! Farewell, All-hallown summer!¹⁵⁸ [Exit FALSTAFF.]

POINS Now, my good sweet honey lord, ride with us tomorrow. I have a jest to execute that I cannot manage alone. Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto, and Gadshill shall rob those men that we have already waylaid;¹⁶⁰ yourself and I will not be there; and when they have the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head off from my shoulders.¹⁶⁵

PRINCE How shall we part with them in setting forth?

POINS Why, we will set forth before or after them and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleasure to fail; and then will they adventure upon the exploit themselves, which they shall have no sooner achieved, but we'll set upon them.¹⁷⁰

PRINCE Yea, but 'tis like that they will know us by our horses, by our habits,¹⁷¹ and by every other appointment,¹⁷² to be ourselves.

POINS Tut! Our horses they shall not see—I'll tie them in the wood; our vizards we will change after we leave them; and, sirrah,¹⁷³ I have cases of buckram for the nonce,¹⁷⁴ to immask our noted outward garments.

PRINCE Yea, but I doubt¹⁷⁵ they will be too hard for us.

POINS Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cowards as ever turned back; and for the

134 Yedward dialect form of Edward 136 chops "fat-face"

141 royal pun on royal, a ten-shilling coin; stand for (1) pass for (as a coin) (2) contest for (in a robbery) 151-53 God . . . move mimicry again of the Puritans, who claimed to act only when the spirit moved in them 155-56 want countenance lack protection (royal and aristocratic) 157 the sometimes used in the sixteenth century for thou and you 157-58 All-hallown summer Poins compares Falstaff's youthfulness in old age to the belated summer that occurs around All Hallows Day 162 waylaid set our trap for 173 habits dress 173-74 appointment piece of equipment 177 sirrah term of address showing great familiarity 177-78 cases . . . nonce outer coverings of coarse linen for the purpose 179 doubt fear third, if he fight longer than he sees reason, I'll forswear arms. The virtue of this jest will be the incomprehensible° lies that this same fat rogue will tell us when we meet at supper: how thirty, at least, he fought 185 with; what wards,° what blows, what extremities he endured; and in the reproof° of this lives the jest.

PRINCE Well, I'll go with thee. Provide us all things necessary and meet me tomorrow night° in Eastcheap. There I'll sup. Farewell.

POINS Farewell, my lord.

Exit.

PRINCE

I know you all, and will awhile uphold
The unyoked humor° of your idleness.
Yet herein will I imitate the sun,°
Who doth permit the base contagious° clouds 195
To smother up his beauty from the world,
That, when he please again to be himself,
Being wanted,° he may be more wond'ered at
By breaking through the foul and ugly mists
Of vapors that did seem to strangle him.
If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work;
But when they seldom come, they wished-for come,
And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents.°
So when this loose behavior I throw off 205
And pay the debt I never promised,
By how much better than my word I am,
By so much shall I falsify men's hopes;°
And, like bright metal on a sullen° ground,
My reformation, glitt'ring o'er my fault,
Shall show more goodly and attract more eyes
Than that which hath no foil° to set it off.
I'll so offend to make offense a skill,
Redeeming time° when men think least I will. Exit.

[Scene III. Windsor. The council chamber.]

Enter the KING, NORTHUMBERLAND, WORCESTER, HOTSPUR, Sir Walter BLUNT, with others.

KING

My blood hath been too cold and temperate,
Unapt to stir at these indignities,
And you have found me,° for accordingly
You tread upon my patience; but be sure
I will from henceforth rather be myself,° 5
Mighty and to be feared, than my condition,°

Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down,
And therefore lost that title of respect
Which the proud soul ne'er pays but to the proud.

WORCESTER

Our house, my sovereign liege, little deserves 10
The scourge of greatness to be used on it—
And that same greatness too which our own hands
Have holp° to make so portly.°

190 NORTHUMBERLAND

My lord—

KING

Worcester, get thee gone, for I do see
Danger and disobedience in thine eye. 15
O, sir, your presence is too bold and peremptory,
And majesty might never yet endure
The moody frontier° of a servant brow.
You have good leave to leave us: when we need
Your use and counsel, we shall send for you. 20

Exit WORCESTER.

You were about to speak.

200 NORTHUMBERLAND

Yea, my good lord.

Those prisoners in your highness' name demanded
Which Harry Percy here at Holmedon took,
Were, as he says, not with such strength denied
As is deliverèd to your majesty. 25
Either envy,° therefore, or misprision°
Is guilty of this fault, and not my son.

HOTSPUR

My liege, I did deny no prisoners.
But I remember, when the fight was done,
When I was dry with rage and extreme toil, 30
Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword,
Came there a certain lord, neat and trimly dressed,
Fresh as a bridegroom, and his chin new reaped°
Showed like a stubble land at harvest home.
He was perfumèd like a milliner, 35
And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held
A pouncet box,° which ever and anon
He gave his nose, and took't away again;
Who° therewith angry, when it next came there,
Took it in snuff;° and still he smiled and talked; 40
And as the soldiers bore dead bodies by,
He called them untaught knaves, unmannerly,
To bring a slovenly unhandsome corse°
Betwixt the wind and his nobility.
With many holiday and lady° terms 45
He questioned° me, amongst the rest demanded
My prisoners in your majesty's behalf.
I then, all smarting with my wounds being cold,
To be so pest' red with a poppingay,°
Out of my grief° and my impatience 50
Answered neglectingly, I know not what—
He should, or he should not; for he made me mad
To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet,
And talk so like a waiting gentlewoman

183–84 incomprehensible unlimited 186 wards strategies of defense (in swordsmanship) 187 reproof disproof 189 tomorrow night they will meet for the robbery tomorrow morning, but Hal is thinking ahead to the jest on Falstaff that night 193 unyoked humor undisciplined inclinations 194 sun royalty's traditional symbol 195 contagious clouds were thought to breed pestilence 198 wanted lacked, missed 204 rare accidents unexpected or uncommon events 208 hopes expectations 209 sullen dull 212 foil contrasting background 214 Redeeming time making amends (Hal alludes to Ephesians 5:7 ff., which bears in a general way on much that has been said in this scene: "Be not ye therefore partakers with them, for ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light. . . . See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise; redeeming the time, because the days are evil.")

I.iii.3 found me found me out 5 myself what I am as king 6 my condition what I am by nature

13 holp helped; portly stately 18 frontier rampart (as if Worcester were an enemy fortress) 26 envy malice; misprision misapprehension 33 reaped i.e., with the closely clipped beard of a man of fashion 37 pouncet box perfume box 39 Who his nose 40 Took . . . snuff proverbial, meaning "took offense," but here with pun on "snuffing" the perfume 43 corse corpse 45 holiday and lady fastidious and effeminate 46 questioned talked to 49 poppingay parrot (here, one who is gaudy in dress and chatters emptily) 50 grief pain

Of guns and drums and wounds—God save the mark!°—

And telling me the sovereignest° thing on earth
Was parmacity° for an inward bruise,
And that it was great pity, so it was,
This villainous saltpeter should be digged
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
Which many a good tall° fellow had destroyed
So cowardly, and but for these vile guns,
He would himself have been a soldier.
This bald unjointed chat of his, my lord,
I answered indirectly,° as I said,
And I beseech you, let not his report
Come current° for an accusation
Betwixt my love and your high majesty.

BLUNT

The circumstance considerèd, good my lord,
Whate'er Lord Harry Percy then had said
To such a person, and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the rest retold,
May reasonably die, and never rise
To do him wrong,° or any way impeach
What then he said, so° he unsay it now.

KING

Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners,
But with proviso and exception,
That we at our own charge shall ransom straight
His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer;
Who, on my soul, hath willfully betrayed
The lives of those that he did lead to fight Against that great magician, damned Glendower—
Whose daughter, as we hear, that Earl of March Hath lately married. Shall our coffers, then,
Be emptied to redeem a traitor home?
Shall we buy treason, and indent° with fears°
When they have lost and forfeited themselves?
No, on the barren mountains let him starve!
For I shall never hold that man my friend
Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost
To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

HOTSPUR

Revolted Mortimer?
He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,
But by the chance of war. To prove that true
Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds, 95
Those mouthèd wounds,° which valiantly he took
When on the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,
In single opposition hand to hand,
He did confound° the best part of an hour
In changing hardiment° with great Glendower. 100 Three times they breathed,° and three times did they drink,

55 God . . . mark a ritual phrase originally used to invoke a blessing, but here expressing scorn 56 sovereignest best 57 parmacity spermaceti (medicinal substance found in sperm whales) 61 tall stalwart 65 indirectly absently 67 Come current (1) be accepted (as of true coin) (2) intrude 74 To . . . wrong to be held against him 75 so provided 86 indent bargain; fears (1) cowards (2) traitors, i.e., those who by "fear" have yielded to the enemy and so become traitors "to be feared" 96 mouthèd wounds wounds that speak for him (based on the likeness of a bloody flesh wound to a mouth) 99 confound spend 100 changing hardiment battling 101 breathed paused for breath

Upon agreement, of swift Severn's flood;
Who° then affrighted with their bloody looks
Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds
And hid his crisp° head in the hollow bank, 105
Bloodstainèd with these valiant combatants.
Never did bare and rotten policy°
Color° her working with such deadly wounds;
Nor never could the noble Mortimer
Receive so many, and all willingly. 110
Then let not him be slanderèd with revolt.°

KING

Thou dost belie° him, Percy, thou dost belie him!
He never did encounter with Glendower.
I tell thee, he durst as well have met the devil alone
As Owen Glendower for an enemy. 115
Art thou not ashamed? But, sirrah,° henceforth
Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer.
Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you. My Lord Northumberland, 120
We license your departure with your son.
Send us your prisoners, or you will hear of it.

Exit KING [with BLUNT and TRAIN].

HOTSPUR

And if° the devil come and roar for them,
I will not send them. I will after straight
And tell him so, for I will ease my heart, 125
Albeit I make a hazard of° my head.

80 NORTHUMBERLAND

What, drunk with choler?° Stay, and pause awhile.
Here comes your uncle.

Enter WORCESTER.

85 HOTSPUR Speak of Mortimer?

Zounds, I will speak of him, and let my soul
Want mercy if I do not join with him! 130
Yea, on his part I'll empty all these veins,
And shed my dear blood drop by drop in the dust,
But I will lift the downtrod Mortimer
As high in the air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate and cank' red° Bolingbroke.° 135

NORTHUMBERLAND

Brother, the king hath made your nephew mad.

WORCESTER

Who struck this heat up after I was gone?

HOTSPUR

He will forsooth have all my prisoners;
And when I urged the ransom once again
Of my wife's brother, then his cheek looked pale, 140
And on my face he turned an eye of death,
Trembling even at the name of Mortimer.

WORCESTER

I cannot blame him. Was not he proclaimed
By Richard that dead is, the next of blood?°

NORTHUMBERLAND

He was, I heard the proclamation: 145

103 Who the river 105 crisp used punningly to mean both "curled" (of a man's head) and "rippling" (of a river); "head" also refers punningly to a river's force 107 policy cunning 108 Color (1) disguise (2) redden (i.e., with blood) 111 revolt treason 112 belie misrepresent 116 sirrah term of address to an inferior, here insulting 123 And if if 126 make . . . of risk 127 choler anger 135 cank' red infected; Bolingbroke the king 144 next of blood heir to the throne

And then it was when the unhappy king
(Whose wrongs in us° God pardon!) did set forth
Upon his Irish expedition;
From whence he intercepted° did return
To be deposed, and shortly murderèd.

WORCESTER

And for whose death we in the world's wide mouth
Live scandalized and foully spoken of.

HOTSPUR

But soft, I pray you, did King Richard then Proclaim my brother Edmund Mortimer
Heir to the crown?

NORTHUMBERLAND He did, myself did hear it.

HOTSPUR

Nay, then I cannot blame his cousin king,
That wished him on the barren mountains starve.
But shall it be that you, that set the crown
Upon the head of this forgetful man,
And for his sake wear the detested blot
Of murderous subornation°—shall it be
That you a world of curses undergo,
Being the agents or base second means,
The cords, the ladder, or the hangman rather?
O, pardon me that I descend so low
To show the line° and the predicament°
Wherein you range under this subtle king!
Shall it for shame be spoken in these days,
Or fill up chronicles in time to come,
That men of your nobility and power
Did gage° them both in an unjust behalf
(As both of you, God pardon it, have done)
To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker° Bolingbroke?
And shall it in more shame be further spoken
That you are fooled, discarded, and shook off
By him for whom these shames ye underwent?
No, yet time serves wherein you may redeem
Your banished honors and restore yourselves
Into the good thoughts of the world again;
Revenge the jeering and disdained contempt
Of this proud king, who studies day and night
To answer all the debt he owes to you
Even with the bloody payment of your deaths.
Therefore I say—

WORCESTER Peace, cousin, say no more;

And now I will unclasp a secret book,
And to your quick-conceiving° discontents
I'll read you matter deep and dangerous,
As full of peril and adventurous spirit
As to o'erwalk a current roaring loud
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.

HOTSPUR

If he fall in, good night, or sink, or swim!^o
Send danger from the east unto the west,
So honor cross it from the north to south,

And let them grapple. O, the blood more stirs 195
To rouse a lion than to start a hare!

NORTHUMBERLAND

Imagination of some great exploit
150 Drives him beyond the bounds of patience.

HOTSPUR

By heaven, methinks it were an easy leap 200
To pluck bright honor from the palefaced moon,
Or dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom line could never touch the ground,
And pluck up drownèd honor by the locks,
So° he that doth redeem her thence might wear
Without corrival° all her dignities; 205
But out upon this half-faced fellowship!^o

WORCESTER

He apprehends a world of figures° here,
But not the form of what he should attend.
Good cousin, give me audience for a while.

160 HOTSPUR

I cry you mercy.° 210

WORCESTER

Those same noble Scots that are your prisoners—

HOTSPUR

I'll keep them all.
165 By God, he shall not have a Scot of them!
No, if a Scot° would save his soul, he shall not.
I'll keep them, by this hand!

WORCESTER

You start away 215
And lend no ear unto my purposes.
Those prisoners you shall keep.

HOTSPUR

Nay, I will! That's flat!
He said he would not ransom Mortimer,
Forbade my tongue to speak of Mortimer,
175 But I will find him when he lies asleep, 220
And in his ear I'll hollo "Mortimer."
Nay, I'll have a starling shall be taught to speak
Nothing but "Mortimer," and give it him
To keep his anger still in motion.

180 WORCESTER

Hear you, cousin, a word. 225

HOTSPUR

All studies° here I solemnly defy°
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke;
And that same sword-and-buckler° Prince of Wales,
185 But that I think his father loves him not 230
And would be glad he met with some mischance,
I would have him poisonèd with a pot of ale.°

WORCESTER

Farewell, kinsman: I'll talk to you
190 When you are better tempered to attend.

NORTHUMBERLAND

Why, what a wasp-stung and impatient fool
Art thou to break into this woman's mood, 235
Tying thine ear to no tongue but thine own!

147 in us at our hands 149 intercepted interrupted 161 murderous subornation confederacy in murder 166 line degree, station (but also "hangman's rope" [cf. line 164] and "tether" [cf. line 167]); predicament category (but also "perilous position") 171 gage pledge 174 canker dog-rose (an inferior rose, but with suggestions of "cankervorm" and "ulcer") 187 quick-conceiving eagerly responsive 192 good . . . swim the man is doomed whether he sinks at once or is swept away by the current 204 So provided 205 corrival partner 206 out . . .

fellowship down with this half-and-half sharing (of honors) 207 figures (1) figures of speech (2) airy fancies (as opposed to substantial "form," line 208) 210 cry you mercy beg your pardon 214 Scot pun on scot, meaning "small payment" 226 studies interest; defy reject 228 sword-and-buckler
"low-down" (sword and shield were arms of the lower classes) 231 ale a further glance at Hal's presumed low tastes, gentlemen's drink being wine

HOTSPUR

Why, look you, I am whipped and scourged with rods,
 Nettled, and stung with pismires,^o when I hear
 Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke.

In Richard's time—what do you call the place? 240
 A plague upon it! It is in Gloucestershire;
 'Twas where the madcap duke his uncle kept,^o
 His uncle York—where I first bowed my knee
 Unto this king of smiles, this Bolingbroke—
 'Sblood!—when you and he came back from Ravens-purgh^o— 245

NORTHUMBERLAND

At Berkeley Castle.

HOTSPUR

You say true.

Why, what a candy deal^o of courtesy
 This fawning greyhound then did proffer me!
 "Look when his infant fortune came to age," 250
 And "gentle Harry Percy," and "kind cousin"—
 O, the devil take such cozeners!^o—God forgive me!
 Good uncle, tell your tale; I have done.

WORCESTER

Nay, if you have not, to it again.

We will stay your leisure.

HOTSPUR

I have done, i' faith. 255

WORCESTER

Then once more to your Scottish prisoners:
 Deliver them up without their ransom straight,
 And make the Douglas' son your only mean
 For powers in Scotland—which, for divers reasons
 Which I shall send you written, be assured 260
 Will easily be granted. [To NORTHUMBERLAND.]

You, my lord,
 Your son in Scotland being thus employed,
 Shall secretly into the bosom creep
 Of that same noble prelate well-beloved,
 The Archbishop.

HOTSPUR

Of York, is it not? 265

WORCESTER

True; who bears hard^o
 His brother's death at Bristow,^o the Lord Scroop.
 I speak not this in estimation,^o
 As what I think might be, but what I know
 Is ruminated, plotted, and set down, 270
 And only stays but to behold the face
 Of that occasion that shall bring it on.

HOTSPUR

I smell it.^o Upon my life, it will do well.

NORTHUMBERLAND

Before the game is afoot thou still let'st slip.^o

HOTSPUR

Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot. 275
 And then the power of Scotland and of York
 To join with Mortimer, ha?

WORCESTER

And so they shall.

HOTSPUR

In faith, it is exceedingly well aimed.

WORCESTER

And 'tis no little reason bids us speed
 To save our heads by raising of a head;^o 280
 For, bear ourselves as even as we can,
 The king will always think him in our debt,
 And think we think ourselves unsatisfied,
 Till he hath found a time to pay us home.^o
 And see already how he doth begin 285
 To make us strangers to his looks of love.

HOTSPUR

He does, he does! We'll be revenged on him.

WORCESTER

Cousin, farewell. No further go in this
 Than I by letters shall direct your course.
 When time is ripe, which will be suddenly,^o 290
 I'll steal to Glendower and Lord Mortimer,
 Where you and Douglas, and our pow'rs at once,
 As I will fashion it, shall happily meet,
 To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms,
 Which now we hold at much uncertainty. 295

NORTHUMBERLAND

Farewell, good brother. We shall thrive, I trust.

HOTSPUR

Uncle, adieu. O, let the hours be short
 Till fields and blows and groans applaud our sport!
Exeunt.

[A C T I I]

[Scene I. Rochester. An inn yard.]

Enter a CARRIER with a lantern in his hand.

FIRST CARRIER Heigh-ho! An it be not four by the day,^o I'll be hanged. Charles' wain^o is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not packed. What, ostler!

OSTLER [Within.] Anon, anon.

FIRST CARRIER I prithee, Tom, beat^o Cut's saddle, 5 put a few flocks in the point;^o poor jade is wrung in the withers^o out of all cess.^o

Enter another CARRIER.

SECOND CARRIER Peas and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next^o way to give poor jades the bots.^o This house is turned upside down since Robin 10
 Ostler died.

FIRST CARRIER Poor fellow never joyed since the price of oats rose; it was the death of him.

SECOND CARRIER I think this be the most villainous house in all London road for fleas, I am stung like a 15
 tench.^o

280 head army 284 home with a "home" thrust 290
 suddenly speedily

II.i.1-2 by the day in the morning 2 Charles' wain the Great Bear 5 beat i.e., to soften it 6 a few . . . point a little padding in the pommel 6-7 wrung . . . withers rubbed raw at the shoulders 7 out . . . cess to excess 9 next nearest 10 bots worms 16 tench fish with red spots (as if flea-bitten)

238 pismires ants 242 kept dwelt 245 Ravenspurgh harbor in Yorkshire (where Hotspur's father had gone to take sides with Bolingbroke—who was returning from exile on the Continent—against the absent King Richard II) 248 candy deal sugared bit 252 cozeners cheats (with pun on "cousin" of previous line) 266 bears hard because his brother had been executed by Henry 267 Bristow Bristol 268 in estimation as a guess 273 smell it i.e., like a hound catching the scent 274 let'st slip let loose (the dogs)

FIRST CARRIER Like a tench? By the mass, there is ne'er a king christen could be better bit than I have been° since the first cock.°

SECOND CARRIER Why, they will allow us ne'er a 20 jordan,° and then we leak in your chimney,° and your chamber-lye° breeds fleas like a loach.°

FIRST CARRIER What, ostler! Come away and be hanged! Come away!

SECOND CARRIER I have a gammon° of bacon and 25 two razes° of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charing Cross.

FIRST CARRIER God's body! The turkeys in my pannier° are quite starved. What, ostler! A plague on thee, hast thou never an eye in thy head? Canst not 30 hear? And 'twere not as good deed as drink to break the pate on thee, I am a very villain. Come, and be hanged! Hast no faith in thee?

Enter GADSHILL.

GADSHILL Good morrow, carriers, what's o'clock?

FIRST CARRIER I think it be two o'clock. 35

GADSHILL I prithee lend me thy lantern to see my gelding in the stable.

FIRST CARRIER Nay, by God, soft!° I know a trick worth two of that, i' faith.

GADSHILL I pray thee lend me thine. 40

SECOND CARRIER Ay, when? Canst tell?° Lend me thy lantern, quoth he? Marry, I'll see thee hanged first!

GADSHILL Sirrah carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?

SECOND CARRIER Time enough to go to bed with a 45 candle,° I warrant thee. Come, neighbor Mugs, we'll call up the gentlemen, they will along with company, for they have great charge.° Exeunt [CARRIERS].

GADSHILL What, ho! Chamberlain!

Enter CHAMBERLAIN.

CHAMBERLAIN "At hand,° quoth pickpurse." 50

GADSHILL That's even as fair as "at hand, quoth the chamberlain"; for thou variest no more from picking of purses than giving direction doth from laboring: thou layest the plot how.

CHAMBERLAIN Good morrow, Master Gadshill. It 55 holds current° that I told you yesternight: there's a franklin° in the Wild of Kent° hath brought three hundred marks° with him in gold, I heard him tell it to one of his company last night at supper—a kind of auditor,° one that hath abundance of charge too, God 60 knows what. They are up already and call for eggs and butter, they will away presently.

17–19 there . . . been not even a Christian king (though kings get the best of everything) could have surpassed my record in fleabites 19 the first cock midnight 21 jordan chamber-pot; chimney fireplace 22 chamber-lye urine; loach fish that breeds often 25 gammon haunch 26 razes roots 29 pannier basket 38 soft "listen to him!" 41 Ay . . . tell? standard retort to an inopportune request 45–46 Time . . . candle evasively spoken, the carriers being suspicious of Gadshill 48 charge luggage 50 At hand a popular tag meaning "Ready, sir!" but relevant here to the Chamberlain's filching way of life, as Gadshill points out 56 current true 57 franklin rich farmer; Wild of Kent name of a room at the inn (wild = weald, open country) 57–58 three hundred marks £200 (Elizabethan value) 60 auditor revenue officer

GADSHILL Sirrah, if they meet not with Saint Nicholas' clerks,° I'll give thee this neck.

CHAMBERLAIN No, I'll none of it; I pray thee keep 65 that for the hangman; for I know thou worshippest Saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.

GADSHILL What talkest thou to me of the hangman? If I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallows; for if I hang, old Sir John hangs with me, and thou knowest he is no 70 starveling. Tut! There are other Troyans° that thou dream'st not of, the which for sport sake are content to do the profession some grace; that would (if matters should be looked into) for their own credit sake make all whole. I am joined with no foot-landrakers,° no 75 long-staff sixpenny strikers,° none of these mad mustachio purple-hued maltworms;° but with nobility and tranquillity,° burgomasters and great oneyers,° such as can hold in,° such as will strike sooner than speak,° and speak sooner than drink, and drink sooner 80 than pray—and yet, zounds, I lie, for they pray continually to their saint, the commonwealth, or rather, not pray to her, but prey on her, for they ride up and down on her and make her their boots.°

CHAMBERLAIN What, the commonwealth their 85 boots? Will she hold out water in foul way?°

GADSHILL She will, she will! Justice hath liquored° her. We steal as in a castle, cocksure. We have the receipt of fernseed,° we walk invisible.

CHAMBERLAIN Nay, by my faith, I think you are 90 more beholding to the night than to fernseed for your walking invisible.

GADSHILL Give me thy hand. Thou shalt have a share in our purchase,° as I am a true man.

CHAMBERLAIN Nay, rather let me have it, as you are 95 a false thief.

GADSHILL Go to; "homo" is a common name to all men.° Bid the ostler bring my gelding out of the stable. Farewell, you muddy knave. [Exeunt.]

[Scene II. The highway, near Gad's Hill.]

Enter PRINCE, POINS, and PETO, etc.

POINS Come, shelter, shelter! I have removed Falstaff's horse, and he frets° like a gummed velvet.

PRINCE Stand close.

[They step aside.]

Enter FALSTAFF.

63–64 Saint Nicholas' clerks highwaymen (Saint Nicholas was reckoned the patron of all travelers, including traveling thieves) 71 Troyans good fellows 75 foot-landrakers footloose vagabonds 76 long-staff . . . strikers men who would pull you from your horse with long staves even to steal sixpence 77 mustachio . . . maltworms big-mustached purple-faced drunkards 78 tranquillity Gadshill's witty coinage, on the analogy of "nobility": people who don't have to scrounge their living; oneyers ones (?) 79 hold in keep confidence 80 speak say "hands up" 84 boots with pun on boots/booty 86 in foul way on muddy roads 87 liquored (1) greased (as with boots) (2) made her drunk 89 receipt of fernseed recipe of fernseed (popularly supposed to render one invisible) 94 purchase euphemism for loot 97–98 homo . . . men the Latin for man, homo is a term that covers all men, true (i.e., honest) or false II.ii.2 frets chafes (with pun on the fretting or fraying of velvet as the gum used to stiffen it wore away)

FALSTAFF Poin's! Poin's, and be hanged! Poin's!

PRINCE [Comes forward.] Peace, ye fat-kidneyed rascal! What a brawling dost thou keep!

FALSTAFF Where's Poin's, Hal?

PRINCE He is walked up to the top of the hill; I'll go seek him.

[Steps aside.]

FALSTAFF I am accursed to rob in that thief's company. 10
The rascal hath removed my horse and tied him I know not where. If I travel but four foot by the squire^o further afoot, I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all this, if I scape hanging for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his 15 company hourly any time this two and twenty years, and yet I am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hanged. It could not be else: I have drunk medicines. Poin's! Hal! A plague upon you 20 both! Bardolph! Peto! I'll starve^o ere I'll rob a foot further. And 'twere not as good a deed as drink to turn true man and to leave these rogues, I am the veriest varlet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground is threescore and ten miles 25 afoot with me, and the stony-hearted villains know it well enough. A plague upon it when thieves cannot be true one to another! (They whistle.) Whew! A plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues! Give me my horse and be hanged! 30

PRINCE [Comes forward.] Peace, ye fat-guts! Lie down, lay thine ear close to the ground, and list if thou canst hear the tread of travelers.

FALSTAFF Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? 'Sblood, I'll not bear mine own flesh so 35 far afoot again for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. What a plague mean ye to colt^o me thus?

PRINCE Thou liest, thou art not colted, thou art uncolted.^o

FALSTAFF I prithee, good Prince Hal, help me to my 40 horse, good king's son.

PRINCE Out, ye rogue! Shall I be your ostler?

FALSTAFF Hang thyself in thine own heir-apparent garters!^o If I be ta'en, I'll peach^o for this. And I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, 45 let a cup of sack be my poison. When a jest is so forward—and afoot too—I hate it.

Enter GADSHILL [and BARDOLPH].

GADSHILL Stand!

FALSTAFF So I do, against my will.

POIN'S O, 'tis our setter;^o I know his voice. [Comes 50 forward.] Bardolph, what news?

BARDOLPH Case ye, case ye! On with your vizards! There's money of the king's coming down the hill; 'tis going to the king's exchequer.

FALSTAFF You lie, ye rogue! 'Tis going to the king's 55 tavern.

GADSHILL There's enough to make us all—

FALSTAFF To be hanged.

13 squire rule 21 starve die 37 colt trick 39 uncolted unhorsed 43-44 heir-apparent garters Falstaff adapts a proverbial phrase to fit a crown prince 44 peach inform on you 50 setter one who makes arrangements for a robbery

PRINCE Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poin's and I will walk lower; if they scape 60 from your encounter, then they light on us.

PETO How many be there of them?

GADSHILL Some eight or ten.

FALSTAFF Zounds, will they not rob us?

PRINCE What, a coward, Sir John Paunch? 65

FALSTAFF Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt^o your grandfather, but yet no coward, Hal.

PRINCE Well, we leave that to the proof.^o

POIN'S Sirrah Jack, thy horse stands behind the hedge. When thou need'st him, there thou shalt find him. 70
Farewell and stand fast.

FALSTAFF Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hanged.

PRINCE [Aside to POIN'S.] Ned, where are our disguises? 75

POIN'S [Aside to PRINCE.] Here, hard by. Stand close. [Exeunt PRINCE and POIN'S.]

FALSTAFF Now, my masters, happy man be his dole,^o say I. Every man to his business.

Enter the TRAVELERS.

TRAVELER Come, neighbor. The boy shall lead our horses down the hill; we'll walk afoot awhile and ease 80 our legs.

THIEVES Stand!

TRAVELER Jesus bless us!

FALSTAFF Strike! Down with them! Cut the villains' throats! Ah, whoreson caterpillars!^o Bacon-fed 85 knaves! They hate us youth. Down with them! Fleece them!

TRAVELER O, we are undone, both we and ours forever!

FALSTAFF Hang ye, gorbellied^o knaves, are ye 90 undone? No, ye fat chuffs;^o I would your store^o were here! On, bacons, on! What, ye knaves, young men must live. You are grandjurors,^o are ye? We'll jure ye, faith! Here they rob them and bind them. Exeunt.

Enter the PRINCE and POIN'S [disguised].

PRINCE The thieves have bound the true men. Now 95 could thou and I rob the thieves and go merrily to London, it would be argument^o for a week, laughter for a month, and a good jest forever.

POIN'S Stand close! I hear them coming.

[They stand aside.]

Enter the thieves again.

FALSTAFF Come, my masters, let us share, and then to 100 horse before day. And the prince and Poin's be not two arrant^o cowards, there's no equity stirring.^o There's no more valor in that Poin's than in a wild duck.

66 John of Gaunt Hal's grandfather (but in reply to "Sir John Paunch" Falstaff puns on gaunt/thin which Hal evidently is [cf. II.iv.226-50]) 68 proof test 77 happy . . . dole may happiness be our lot 85 whoreson caterpillars miserable parasites 90 gorbellied great-bellied 91 chuffs misers; store total wealth 93 grandjurors men of substance (as required for service on a grand jury) 97 be argument make conversation 102 arrant thorough; no equity stirring no justice left alive

PRINCE Your money! As they are sharing, the Prince and Poins set upon them. They all run away, and Falstaff, 105
POINS Villains! after a blow or two, runs away too, leaving the booty behind them.

PRINCE Got with much ease. Now merrily to horse.
The thieves are all scattered, and possessed with fear so strongly that they dare not meet each other: each takes his fellow for an officer. Away, good Ned. 110 Falstaff sweats to death and lards the lean earth as he walks along. Were't not for laughing, I should pity him.°

POINS How the fat rogue roared! Exeunt.

[Scene III. Northumberland. Warkworth Castle.]

Enter HOTSPUR solus,° reading a letter.

HOTSPUR "But, for mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house."° He could be contented—why is he not then? In respect of the love he bears our house!
He shows in this he loves his own barn better than he 5 loves our house. Let me see some more. "The purpose you undertake is dangerous"—why, that's certain!
'Tis dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink; but I tell you, my lord fool, out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety. "The purpose you undertake 10 is dangerous, the friends you have named uncertain, the time itself unsorted,° and your whole plot too light for the counterpoise of so great an opposition." Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow, cowardly hind,° and you lie. What a lack- 15 brain is this! By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant: a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation; an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this! Why, my Lord of York° commends the plot 20 and the general course of the action. Zounds, and I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is there not my father, my uncle, and myself; Lord Edmund Mortimer, my Lord of York, and Owen Glendower? Is there not, besides, the Douglas? 25
Have I not all their letters to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month, and are they not some of them set forward already? What a pagan° rascal is this, an infidel! Ha! you shall see now, in very sincerity of fear and cold heart will he to the king and lay open 30 all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself and go to buffets° for moving such a dish of skim milk with so honorable an action! Hang him, let him tell the king!
We are prepared. I will set forward tonight.

Enter his LADY.

How now, Kate? I must leave you within these two 35 hours.

LADY

O my good lord, why are you thus alone?
For what offense have I this fortnight been
A banished woman from my Harry's bed?
Tell me, sweet lord, what is't that takes from thee 40
Thy stomach,° pleasure, and thy golden sleep?
Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth,
And start so often when thou sit'st alone?
Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks
And given my treasures and my rights of thee 45
To thick-eyed musing and cursed° melancholy?
In thy faint slumbers I by thee have watched,°
And heard thee murmur tales of iron wars,
Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed,
Cry "Courage! To the field!" And thou hast talked 50
Of sallies and retires, of trenches, tents,
Of palisadoes,° frontiers,° parapets,
Of basilisks,° of cannon, culverin,°
Of prisoners' ransom, and of soldiers slain,
And all the currents° of a heady° fight. 55
Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,
And thus hath so bestirred thee in thy sleep,
That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow
Like bubbles in a late-disturbèd stream,
And in thy face strange motions have appeared, 60
Such as we see when men restrain their breath
On some great sudden hest.° O, what portents are these?
Some heavy business hath my lord in hand,
And I must know it, else he loves me not.

HOTSPUR

What, ho!

[Enter a SERVANT.]

Is Gilliams with the packet gone? 65
SERVANT He is, my lord, an hour ago.
HOTSPUR Hath Butler brought those horses from the
sheriff?
SERVANT One horse, my lord, he brought even now.
HOTSPUR What horse? A roan, a crop-ear, is it not? 70
SERVANT It is, my lord.
HOTSPUR That roan shall be my throne. Well, I will back him straight. O Esperance!° Bid Butler lead him forth into the park.° [Exit SERVANT.]
LADY But hear you, my lord. 75
HOTSPUR What say'st thou, my lady?
LADY What is it carries you away?°
HOTSPUR Why, my horse, my love—my horse!
LADY Out, you mad-headed ape! A weasel hath not such a deal of spleen° as you are tossed with. In faith, 80 I'll know your business, Harry, that I will! I fear my brother Mortimer doth stir about his title and hath sent for you to line° his enterprise; but if you go°—

41 stomach appetite 46 cursed peevish 47 watched lain awake 52 palisadoes defenses made of stakes; frontiers fortifications 53 basilisks, culverin sizes and types of cannon 55 currents occurrences; heady violent 62 hest (1) command
(?) (2) resolution (?) 73 Esperance hope (part of the Percy motto) 72-74 That . . . park Pope and many later editors print as verse, with line breaks after "throne/Esperance/park" 77 away (1) from home (2) from your usual self 80 spleen caprice 83 line strengthen 79-83 Out . . . go printed by Pope and many later editors as verse, but with a variety of lineations

107-13 Got . . . him printed as verse by Pope and many later editors, with line breaks after "horse/fear/other/officer/death/along/him"

II.iii.s.d. solus alone (Latin) 3 house family 12 unsorted unsuitable 15 hind menial 20 Lord of York Archbishop of York (cf. I.iii.264 ff.) 28 pagan faithless 31-32 divide . . .
buffets split myself into two, and set the halves fighting

HOTSPUR So far afoot, I shall be weary, love.

LADY Come, come, you paraquito,^o answer me 85 directly unto this question that I ask. In faith, I'll break thy little finger, Harry, and if thou wilt not tell me all things true.^o

HOTSPUR

Away, away, you trifler! Love? I love thee not;
I care not for thee, Kate. This is no world 90
To play with mammet^o and to tilt^o with lips.
We must have bloody noses and cracked crowns,^o
And pass them current too. Gods me,^o my horse!
What say'st thou, Kate? What wouldst thou have with me?

LADY

Do you not love me? Do you not indeed? 95
Well, do not then; for since you love me not,
I will not love myself. Do you not love me?
Nay, tell me if you speak in jest or no.

HOTSPUR

Come, wilt thou see me ride?
And when I am a-horseback, I will swear 100
I love thee infinitely. But hark you, Kate:
I must not have you henceforth question me
Whither I go, nor reason whereabout.
Whither I must, I must, and—to conclude,
This evening must I leave you, gentle Kate. 105
I know you wise—but yet no farther wise
Than Harry Percy's wife; constant you are—
But yet a woman; and for secrecy,
No lady closer—for I well believe
Thou wilt not utter what thou dost not know, 110
And so far will I trust thee, gentle Kate—

LADY How? So far?

HOTSPUR

Not an inch further. But hark you, Kate:
Whither I go, thither shall you go too;
Today will I set forth, tomorrow you. 115
Will this content you, Kate?

LADY It must of force.^o

Exeunt.

[Scene IV. Eastcheap. The tavern.^o]

Enter PRINCE and POINS.

PRINCE Ned, prithee come out of that fat^o room and lend me thy hand to laugh a little.

POINS Where hast been, Hal?

PRINCE With three or four loggerheads^o amongst three or fourscore hogsheads. I have sounded the very 5 bass-string of humility. Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leash^o of drawers^o and can call them all by their christen names, as Tom, Dick, and Francis. They take it already upon their salvation^o that, though I be but Prince of Wales, yet I am the king of courtesy, 10 and tell me flatly I am no proud Jack^o like Falstaff, but a Corinthian,^o a lad of mettle, a good boy (by the Lord, so they call me!), and when I am King of England I shall command all the good lads in East-cheap. They call drinking deep, dyeing scarlet;^o and 15 when you breathe in your watering,^o they cry "hem!"

and bid you play it off.^o To conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour that I can drink with any tinker in his own language during my life.
I tell thee, Ned, thou hast lost much honor that thou 20
wert not with me in this action. But, sweet Ned—to sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this pennyworth of sugar,^o clapped even now into my hand by an under-skinker,^o one that never spake other English in his life than "Eight shillings and 25 sixpence," and "You are welcome," with this shrill addition, "Anon,^o anon, sir! Score^o a pint of bastard^o in the Half-moon,"^o or so—but, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come, I prithee do thou stand in some by-room while I question my puny drawer to 30 what end he gave me the sugar; and do thou never leave calling "Francis!" that his tale to me may be nothing but "Anon!" Step aside, and I'll show thee a precedent.^o

POINS Francis! 35

PRINCE Thou art perfect.

POINS Francis!

[POINS steps aside.]

Enter [FRANCIS, a] drawer.

FRANCIS Anon, anon, sir. Look down into the Pomgarnet,^o Ralph.

PRINCE Come hither, Francis. 40

FRANCIS My lord?

PRINCE How long hast thou to serve,^o Francis?

FRANCIS Forsooth, five years, and as much as to—

POINS [Within.] Francis!

FRANCIS Anon, anon, sir. 45

PRINCE Five year! By'r Lady,^o a long lease for the clinking of pewter. But, Francis, darest thou be so valiant as to play the coward with thy indenture^o and show it a fair pair of heels and run from it?

FRANCIS O Lord, sir, I'll be sworn upon all the books 50
in England I could find in my heart—

POINS [Within.] Francis!

FRANCIS Anon, sir.

PRINCE How old art thou, Francis?

FRANCIS Let me see: about Michaelmas^o next I shall 55
be—

POINS [Within.] Francis!

85 paraquito parrot 85–88 Come . . . true printed by Pope and many later editors as verse, with line breaks after "me/ask/Harry/true" 91 mammet dolls; tilt duel 92 crowns (1) heads (2) coins—which when "cracked" were hard to "pass current" (possibly there is an allusion to the "crown" of kingship, which, though not genuine when usurped, may be passed current by force) 93 Gods me God save me 116 of force of necessity

II.iv.s.d. tavern the tavern is said to be in Eastcheap, but it is never explicitly named; references to a boar in 2 Henry IV suggest it is the Boar's Head 1 fat hot 4 loggerheads
blockheads 7 leash trio; drawers tapsters

9 take . . . salvation pledge their salvation 11 Jack fellow 12 Corinthian gay blade 15 dyeing scarlet i.e., from the complexion it gives a man 16 breathe . . . watering pause for breath while drinking 17 play it off down it 23 sugar for sweetening wine (cf. I.ii.114) 24 under-skinker under-tapster 27 Anon (I'm coming) at once; Score charge;
bastard Spanish wine 28 Half-moon one of the inn's rooms 34 precedent example 39 Pomgarnet Pomegranate
(another of the inn's rooms) 42 serve as an apprentice (apprenticeship ran for seven years) 46 By'r Lady by Our Lady (mild oath) 48 indenture contract 55 Michaelmas
September 29

FRANCIS Anon, sir. Pray stay a little, my lord.
 PRINCE Nay, but hark you, Francis. For the sugar thou gavest me—'twas a pennyworth, was't not? 60
 FRANCIS O Lord! I would it had been two!
 PRINCE I will give thee for it a thousand pound. Ask me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.
 POINS [Within.] Francis!
 FRANCIS Anon, anon. 65
 PRINCE Anon, Francis?° No, Francis; but tomorrow, Francis; or, Francis, a Thursday; or indeed, Francis, when thou wilt. But, Francis—
 FRANCIS My lord?
 PRINCE Wilt thou rob this leathern-jerkin, crystal- 70 button, not-pated, agate-ring, puke-stocking, caddis-garter, smooth-tongue, Spanish-pouch?°
 FRANCIS O Lord, sir, who do you mean?
 PRINCE Why then, your brown bastard is your only drink; for look you, Francis, your white canvas 75 doublet will sully. In Barbary, sir, it cannot come to so much.°
 FRANCIS What, sir?
 POINS [Within.] Francis!
 PRINCE Away, you rogue! Dost thou not hear them 80 call?

Here they both call him. The drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.

Enter VINTNER.°

VINTNER What, stand'st thou still, and hear'st such a calling? Look to the guests within. [Exit FRANCIS.]
 My lord, old Sir John, with half a dozen more, are at the door. Shall I let them in? 85
 PRINCE Let them alone awhile, and then open the door. [Exit VINTNER.] Poins!
 POINS [Within.] Anon, anon, sir.

Enter POINS.

PRINCE Sirrah, Falstaff and the rest of the thieves are at the door. Shall we be merry? 90
 POINS As merry as crickets, my lad. But hark ye; what cunning match have you made with this jest of the drawer? Come, what's the issue?°
 PRINCE I am now of all humors that have showed themselves humors since the old days of goodman 95 Adam to the pupil age of this present twelve o'clock at midnight.°

[Enter FRANCIS.]

What's o'clock, Francis?

FRANCIS Anon, anon, sir. [Exit.]
 PRINCE That ever this fellow should have fewer 100 words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman! His industry is upstairs and downstairs, his eloquence the parcel of a reckoning.° I am not yet of Percy's mind, the Hotspur of the North: he that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, 105 and says to his wife, "Fie upon this quiet life! I want work." "O my sweet Harry," says she, "how many hast thou killed today?" "Give my roan horse a drench,"° says he, and answers "Some fourteen," an hour after, "a trifle, a trifle." I prithee call in Falstaff. 110 I'll play Percy, and that damned brawn° shall play Dame Mortimer his wife. "Rivo!"° says the drunkard. Call in Ribs, call in Tallow.

Enter FALSTAFF, [GADSHILL, BARDOLPH, and PETO; FRANCIS follows with wine].

POINS Welcome, Jack. Where hast thou been?
 FALSTAFF A plague of° all cowards, I say, and a 115 vengeance too! Marry and amen! Give me a cup of sack, boy. Ere I lead this life long, I'll sew netherstocks,° and mend them and foot them too. A plague of all cowards! Give me a cup of sack, rogue. Is there no virtue extant? 120

He drinketh.

PRINCE Didst thou never see Titan° kiss a dish of butter (pitiful-hearted Titan!) that melted at the sweet tale of the sun's? If thou didst, then behold that compound.

FALSTAFF You rogue, here's lime° in this sack too! 125 There is nothing but roguery to be found in villainous man. Yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it—a villainous coward! Go thy ways, old Jack, die when thou wilt; if manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a 130 shotten herring.° There lives not three good men unhanged in England; and one of them is fat, and grows old. God help the while! A bad world, I say. I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms° or anything. A plague of all cowards, I say still! 135

PRINCE How now, woolsack? What mutter you?
 FALSTAFF A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath° and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You Prince of Wales? 140
 PRINCE Why, you whoreson round man, what's the matter?

FALSTAFF Are not you a coward? Answer me to that—and Poins there?

101–03 His industry . . . reckoning his whole activity is running up and down stairs, his whole conversation the totaling of bills 109 drench dose of medicine 111 brawn fat boar 112 Rivo drinking cry of uncertain meaning 115 of on 117 netherstocks stockings 121 Titan the sun (of which Hal is possibly reminded by Falstaff's broad face, and his melting effect on the sack) 125 lime added to make poor wine seem dry and clear 131 shotten herring herring that has cast its roe (and is therefore long and lean) 133–34 God . . . psalms Falstaff reassumes his role of comic Puritan: English weavers were often psalm-singing Protestants who had fled from the Roman Catholic Continent 138 dagger of lath wooden dagger (by this phrase Falstaff associates himself with a character called "the Vice" in the old religious plays, who drove the devil offstage by beating him with a wooden dagger)

66 Anon, Francis Hal pretends to take Francis' "anon"—at once—to Poins as meaning he wants the thousand pounds at once 70–72 this . . . Spanish-pouch the innkeeper, whose middle-class appearance Hal details: leather jacket with crystal buttons, short hair, agate ring, wool stockings, plain worsted (not fancy) garters, ingratiating (and probably unctuous) speech, money pouch of Spanish leather 74–77 Why . . . much semi-nonsense; but the implication seems clear that Francis must stick to his trade 81 s.d. Vintner the innkeeper 93 issue outcome, point (of the jest) 94–97 I . . . midnight I am ready for every kind of gaiety that men have invented since the beginning of the world

POINS Zounds, ye fat paunch, and ye call me coward, 145
by the Lord, I'll stab thee.

FALSTAFF I call thee coward? I'll see thee damned ere I call thee coward, but I would give a thousand pound
I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders; you care not who sees your 150 back. Call you that backing of your friends? A plague upon such backing, give me them that will face me.
Give me a cup of sack. I am a rogue if I drunk today.

PRINCE O villain, thy lips are scarce wiped since thou drunk'st last. 155

FALSTAFF All is one for that. (He drinketh.) A plague of all cowards, still say I.

PRINCE What's the matter?

FALSTAFF What's the matter? There be four of us here have ta'en a thousand pound this day morning. 160

PRINCE Where is it, Jack, where is it?

FALSTAFF Where is it? Taken from us it is. A hundred upon poor four of us!

PRINCE What, a hundred, man?

FALSTAFF I am a rogue if I were not at half-sword° 165 with a dozen of them two hours together. I have scaped by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doublet,° four through the hose;° my buckler cut through and through; my sword hacked like a hand-saw—ecce signum!° I never dealt° better since I was a 170 man. All would not do. A plague of all cowards! Let them speak. If they speak more or less than truth, they are villains and the sons of darkness.°

PRINCE Speak, sirs. How was it?

GADSHILL We four set upon some dozen— 175

FALSTAFF Sixteen at least, my lord.

GADSHILL And bound them.

PETO No, no, they were not bound.

FALSTAFF You rogue, they were bound, every man of them, or I am a Jew else—an Ebrew Jew. 180

GADSHILL As we were sharing, some six or seven fresh men set upon us—

FALSTAFF And unbound the rest, and then come in the other.°

PRINCE What, fought you with them all? 185

FALSTAFF All? I know not what you call all, but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radish!°
If there were not two or three and fifty° upon poor old Jack, then am I no two-legged creature.

PRINCE Pray God you have not murd'ed some of 190
them.

FALSTAFF Nay, that's past praying for. I have peppered two of them. Two I am sure I have paid,° two rogues in buckram suits. I tell thee what, Hal—if I tell thee a lie, spit in my face, call me horse. Thou knowest 195 my old ward:° here I lay, and thus I bore my point.
Four rogues in buckram let drive at me.

PRINCE What, four? Thou said'st but two even now.

FALSTAFF Four, Hal. I told thee four.

POINS Ay, ay, he said four. 200

FALSTAFF These four came all afront and mainly° thrust at me. I made me no more ado but took all their seven points in my target, thus.

PRINCE Seven? Why, there were but four even now.

FALSTAFF In buckram? 205

POINS Ay, four, in buckram suits.

FALSTAFF Seven, by these hilts, or I am a villain else.

PRINCE [Aside to POINS.] Prithee let him alone. We shall have more anon.

FALSTAFF Dost thou hear me, Hal? 210

PRINCE Ay, and mark° thee too, Jack.

FALSTAFF Do so, for it is worth the list'ning to. These nine in buckram that I told thee of—

PRINCE So, two more already.

FALSTAFF Their points being broken— 215

POINS Down fell their hose.°

FALSTAFF Began to give me ground; but I followed me close, came in, foot and hand, and with a thought° seven of the eleven I paid.

PRINCE O monstrous! Eleven buckram men grown 220 out of two!

FALSTAFF But, as the devil would have it, three misbegotten knaves in Kendal green came at my back and let drive at me; for it was so dark, Hal, that thou couldst not see thy hand. 225

PRINCE These lies are like their father that begets them
—gross as a mountain, open, palpable. Why, thou clay-brained guts, thou knotty-pated° fool, thou whoreson obscene greasy tallow-catch°—

FALSTAFF What, art thou mad? Art thou mad? Is not 230
the truth the truth?

PRINCE Why, how couldst thou know these men in Kendal green when it was so dark thou couldst not see thy hand? Come, tell us your reason. What sayest thou to this? 235

POINS Come, your reason, Jack, your reason.

FALSTAFF What, upon compulsion? Zounds, and I were at the strappado° or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion? If reasons° were as plentiful as 240 blackberries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion, I.

PRINCE I'll be no longer guilty of this sin; this sanguine° coward, this bed-presser, this horseback-breaker, this huge hill of flesh— 245

FALSTAFF 'Sblood, you starveling, you eelskin, you dried neat's-tongue,° you bull's pizzle,° you stockfish°
—O for breath to utter what is like thee!—you tailor's yard, you sheath, you bowcase, you vile standing tuck!° 250

165 at half-sword infighting at close quarters 168 doublet Elizabethan upper garment; hose Elizabethan breeches 170 ecce signum behold the evidence (Latin; spoken as he shows his sword); dealt dealt blows 173 sons of darkness i.e., damned (but cf. also I.ii.24) 184 other others 187 bunch of radish again an object long and lean 188 three and fifty fifty-three was the number of Spanish ships popularly reputed to have opposed Sir Richard Grenville at the battle of the Azores in 1591; Falstaff thus humorously claims for his fight the status of a national epic 193 paid settled with 196 ward fencing posture

201 mainly mightily 211 mark pay close attention to 216 Down . . . hose Poins wittily takes "points" in the sense of laces holding the breeches to the doublet 218 with a thought quick as a thought 228 knotty-pated blockheaded 229 tallow-catch (1) pan to catch drippings under roasting meat (?) (2) tallow-keech, roll of fat for making candles (?) 238 strappado instrument of torture 240 reasons pronounced like "raisins," and hence comparable to blackberries 244 sanguine ruddy (and hence valorous-seeming) 247 neat's tongue ox-tongue; pizzle penis; stockfish dried codfish 249-50 standing tuck upright rapier

PRINCE Well, breathe awhile, and then to it again; and when thou hast tired thyself in base comparisons, hear me speak but this.

POINS Mark, Jack.

PRINCE We two saw you four set on four, and bound 255 them and were masters of their wealth. Mark now how a plain tale shall put you down. Then did we two set on you four and, with a word,^o outfaced you from your prize, and have it; yea, and can show it you here in the house. And, Falstaff, you carried your 260 guts away as nimbly, with as quick dexterity, and roared for mercy, and still run and roared, as ever I heard bullcalf. What a slave art thou to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and then say it was in fight! What trick, what device, what starting hole^o canst 265 thou now find out to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?

POINS Come, let's hear, Jack. What trick hast thou now?

FALSTAFF By the Lord, I knew ye as well as he that 270 made ye. Why, hear you, my masters. Was it for me to kill the heir apparent? Should I turn upon the true prince? Why, thou knowest I am as valiant as Hercules, but beware instinct. The lion will not touch the true prince.^o Instinct is a great matter. I was now a coward 275 on instinct. I shall think the better of myself, and thee, during my life—I for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince. But, by the Lord, lads, I am glad you have the money. Hostess, clap to the doors. Watch tonight, pray tomorrow.^o Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, 280 all the titles of good fellowship come to you! What, shall we be merry? Shall we have a play extempore?

PRINCE Content—and the argument^o shall be thy running away.

FALSTAFF Ah, no more of that, Hal, and thou lovest 285 me!

Enter HOSTESS.

HOSTESS O Jesu, my lord the prince!

PRINCE How now, my lady the hostess? What say'st thou to me?

HOSTESS Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the 290 court at door would speak with you. He says he comes from your father.

PRINCE Give him as much as will make him a royal man,^o and send him back again to my mother.

FALSTAFF What manner of man is he? 295

HOSTESS An old man.

FALSTAFF What doth gravity^o out of his bed at mid-night? Shall I give him his answer?

PRINCE Prithce do, Jack.

FALSTAFF Faith, and I'll send him packing. Exit. 300

PRINCE Now, sirs. By'r Lady, you fought fair; so did you, Peto; so did you, Bardolph. You are lions too, you ran away upon instinct, you will not touch the true prince; no—fie!

BARDOLPH Faith, I ran when I saw others run. 305

PRINCE Faith, tell me now in earnest, how came Falstaff's sword so hacked?

PETO Why, he hacked it with his dagger, and said he would swear truth out of England but he would make you believe it was done in fight, and persuaded us to 310 do the like.

BARDOLPH Yea, and to tickle our noses with spear-grass to make them bleed, and then to beslobber our garments with it and swear it was the blood of true men. I did that^o I did not this seven year before—I 315 blushed to hear his monstrous devices.

PRINCE O villain! Thou stolest a cup of sack eighteen years ago and wert taken with the manner,^o and ever since thou hast blushed extempore. Thou hadst fire^o and sword on thy side, and yet thou ran'st away. 320 What instinct hadst thou for it?

BARDOLPH My lord, do you see these meteors?^o Do you behold these exhalations?^o

PRINCE I do.

BARDOLPH What think you they portend? 325

PRINCE Hot livers and cold purses.^o

BARDOLPH Choler,^o my lord, if rightly taken.

PRINCE No, if rightly taken, halter.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Here comes lean Jack; here comes bare-bone. How now, my sweet creature of bombast?^o How long is't 330 ago, Jack, since thou sawest thine own knee?

FALSTAFF My own knee? When I was about thy years, Hal, I was not an eagle's talent^o in the waist; I could have crept into any alderman's thumb-ring. A plague of sighing and grief, it blows a man up like a 335 bladder. There's villainous news abroad. Here was Sir John Bracy from your father: you must to the court in the morning. That same mad fellow of the north, Percy, and he of Wales that gave Amamon the bastinado, and made Lucifer cuckold, and swore the 340 devil his true liegeman upon the cross of a Welsh hook^o—what a plague call you him?

POINS Owen Glendower.

FALSTAFF Owen, Owen—the same; and his son-in-law Mortimer, and old Northumberland, and that 345 sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs a-horseback up a hill perpendicular—

PRINCE He that rides at high speed and with his pistol kills a sparrow flying.

FALSTAFF You have hit it. 350

PRINCE So did he never the sparrow.

315 that what 318 taken . . . manner caught with the goods 319 fire the alcoholic hue of Bardolph's face 322, 323 meteors, exhalations the pimples and other features of Bardolph's face, spoken of as if they were meteorological portents 326 Hot . . . purses the two notable results of excessive drink 327 Choler anger (Bardolph implies that he is choleric, and therefore no coward; Hal proceeds to understand "choler" as "collar," which in Bardolph's case will be—"if rightly taken"—the hangman's noose) 330 bombast cotton stuffing 333 talent talon 339–42 he . . . hook Falstaff alludes to Glendower's supposed magical powers: he has cudgeled a devil named Amamon, made horns grow on Lucifer, and forced the devil to swear allegiance to him on the cross of a weapon that has no cross

258 with a word (1) in brief (?) (2) with a mere shout to scare you (?) 265 starting hole hiding place 274–75 lion . . . prince a traditional belief about lions 279–80 Watch . . . tomorrow cf. Matthew 26:41, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation"; Falstaff puns on watch, which means "carouse" as well as "keep vigil" 283 argument subject 293–94 royal man cf. "noble" in the previous speech, but with a pun on royal, a coin worth ten shillings, which was of greater value than the noble, worth six shillings eight pence 297 gravity sober age

FALSTAFF Well, that rascal hath good metal^o in him; he will not run.

PRINCE Why, what a rascal art thou then, to praise him so for running! 355

FALSTAFF A-horseback, ye cuckoo! But afoot he will not budge a foot.

PRINCE Yes, Jack, upon instinct.

FALSTAFF I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand bluecaps^o more. 360 Worcester is stol'n away tonight; thy father's beard is turned white with the news; you may buy land now as cheap as stinking mack'el.

PRINCE Why then, it is like, if there come a hot June, and this civil buffeting hold, we shall buy maidenheads 365 as they buy hobnails, by the hundreds.^o

FALSTAFF By the mass, lad, thou sayest true; it is like we shall have good trading that way. But tell me, Hal, art not thou horrible afraid? Thou being heir apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again 370 as that fiend Douglas, that spirit Percy, and that devil Glendower? Art thou not horribly afraid? Doth not thy blood thrill^o at it?

PRINCE Not a whit, i' faith. I lack some of thy instinct.

FALSTAFF Well, thou wilt be horribly chid tomorrow 375 when thou comest to thy father. If thou love me, practice an answer.

PRINCE Do thou stand for my father and examine me upon the particulars of my life.

FALSTAFF Shall I? Content. This chair shall be my 380 state,^o this dagger my scepter, and this cushion my crown.

PRINCE Thy state is taken for^o a joined-stool, thy golden scepter for a leaden dagger, and thy precious rich crown for a pitiful bald crown. 385

FALSTAFF Well, and the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now shalt thou be moved. Give me a cup of sack to make my eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept; for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in King Cambyzes' vein.^o 390

PRINCE Well, here is my leg.

FALSTAFF And here is my speech. Stand aside, nobility.^o

HOSTESS O Jesu, this is excellent sport, i' faith!

FALSTAFF

Weep not, sweet queen,^o for trickling tears are vain. 395

HOSTESS O, the Father, how he holds his countenance!^o

FALSTAFF

For God's sake, lords, convey my tristful^o queen!

For tears do stop the floodgates of her eyes.

HOSTESS O Jesu, he doth it as like one of these 400 harlotry^o players as ever I see!

FALSTAFF Peace, good pintpot. Peace, good tickle-brain. Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied. For though the camomile,^o the more it is trodden on, the 405 faster it grows, so^o youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. That thou art my son I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion, but chiefly a villainous trick^o of thine eye and a foolish hanging of thy nether lip that doth warrant me. If 410 then thou be son to me, here lies the point: why, being son to me, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micher and eat blackberries?^o A question not to be asked. Shall the son^o of England prove a thief and take purses? A question 415 to be asked. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch. This pitch (as ancient writers do report) doth defile; so doth the company thou keepest. For, Harry, now I do not speak to thee in drink, but in 420 tears; not in pleasure, but in passion; not in words only, but in woes also: and yet there is a virtuous man whom I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name.

PRINCE What manner of man, and it like your 425 majesty?

FALSTAFF A goodly portly^o man, i' faith, and a corpulent;^o of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage; and, as I think, his age some fifty, or, by'r Lady, inclining to threescore; and now I re- 430 member me, his name is Falstaff. If that man should be lewdly given,^o he deceiveth me; for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks. If then the tree may be known by the fruit,^o as the fruit by the tree, then, peremptorily^o I speak it, there is virtue in that Falstaff. Him keep 435 with, the rest banish. And tell me now, thou naughty varlet, tell me where hast thou been this month?

PRINCE Dost thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

FALSTAFF Depose me? If thou dost it half so gravely, 440 so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a rabbit-sucker^o or a poulter's hare.

PRINCE Well, here I am set.

FALSTAFF And here I stand. Judge, my masters.

PRINCE Now, Harry, whence come you? 445

FALSTAFF My noble lord, from Eastcheap.

PRINCE The complaints I hear of thee are grievous.

FALSTAFF 'Sblood, my lord, they are false! Nay, I'll tickle ye for a young prince,^o i' faith.

352 good metal with pun on mettle (spirit, courage) 360 bluecaps Scots 364-66 if . . . hundreds the prince applies the analogy of selling cheap what won't keep to the reactions of virgins as they see all the men going off to war 373 thrill shiver (with fear) 381 state chair of state 383 taken for either "seen to be merely," or, alternatively, this is a meditative comment, possibly an aside, in the detached vein of I.ii.192 and II.iv.486, with "thy" referring to the king 390 King Cambyzes' vein the old ranting style of Preston's King Cambyzes (1569) 393 nobility addressed to his motley ragamuffins 395 queen addressed to the Hostess, who is evidently tearful with laughter; probably with a standard pun on quean = tart, prostitute 396-97 holds his countenance keep a straight face 398 tristful sad

401 harlotry rascally 405 camomile aromatic herb (Falstaff proceeds to satirize the highflown style of the court by using a manner of speech called euphuism—from John Lyly's fictional narrative, Euphues [1578], which introduced it—based on similes drawn from natural history, intricate balance, antithesis, and repetition of sounds, words, and ideas) 406 so some editors emend to "yet," but the imperfect logical correspondence of "though . . . so" may be part of Falstaff's mockery 409 trick mannerism (possibly a twitch) 413-14 prove . . . blackberries be a truant from duty and go blackberrying 414 son with pun on sun, the royal symbol 427 portly stately 427-28 corpulent well filled out 432 lewdly given inclined to evil-doing 433-34 If . . . fruit cf. Matthew 12:33, "The tree is known by his fruit" 434 peremptorily decisively 442 rabbit-sucker suckling rabbit 448-49 I'll . . . prince I'll act a prince that will amuse you

PRINCE Swarest thou, ungracious boy? Henceforth 450 ne'er look on me. Thou art violently carried away from grace. There is a devil haunts thee in the likeness of an old fat man; a tun° of man is thy companion.
 Why dost thou converse with that trunk of humors,° that bolting-hutch° of beastliness, that swoll'n parcel 455 of dropsies,° that huge bombard° of sack, that stuffed cloakbag of guts, that roasted Manningtree° ox with the pudding in his belly, that reverend vice,° that gray iniquity,° that father ruffian,° that vanity° in years?
 Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? 460
 Wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon and eat it? Wherein cunning, but in craft?° Wherein crafty, but in villainy? Wherein villainous, but in all things? Wherein worthy, but in nothing?

FALSTAFF I would your grace would take me with 465
 you.° Whom means your grace?

PRINCE That villainous abominable misleader of youth, Falstaff, that old white-bearded Satan.

FALSTAFF My lord, the man I know.

PRINCE I know thou dost. 470

FALSTAFF But to say I know more harm in him than in myself were to say more than I know. That he is old, the more the pity, his white hairs do witness it;
 but that he is, saving your reverence, a whoremaster, that I utterly deny. If sack and sugar be a fault, God 475 help the wicked! If to be old and merry be a sin, then many an old host that I know is damned. If to be fat be to be hated, then Pharaoh's lean kine° are to be loved. No, my good lord: banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Poins; but for sweet Jack Falstaff, 480 kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and therefore more valiant being, as he is, old Jack Falstaff, banish not him thy Harry's company, banish not him thy Harry's company, banish plump Jack, and banish all the world! 485

PRINCE I do, I will. [A knocking heard. Exeunt HOSTESS, FRANCIS, and BARDOLPH.]

Enter BARDOLPH, running.

BARDOLPH O, my lord, my lord! The sheriff with a most monstrous watch° is at the door.

FALSTAFF Out, ye rogue! Play out the play, I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff. 490

Enter the HOSTESS.

HOSTESS O Jesu, my lord, my lord!

PRINCE Heigh, heigh, the devil rides upon a fiddle-stick! What's the matter?

HOSTESS The sheriff and all the watch are at the door.
 They are come to search the house. Shall I let them in? 495

453 tun hogshead 454 trunk of humors receptacle of body fluids (with allusion to the diseases that were thought to be the product of these fluids) 455 bolting-hutch sifting-bin (where impurities collect) 456 dropsies internal fluids; bombard leather wine vessel 457 Manningtree town in Essex (where at annual fairs plays were acted and, evidently, great oxen were stuffed and barbecued) 458–59 vice . . . iniquity . . .
ruffian . . . vanity names intended to associate Falstaff with characters of the old morality plays, all of whom were corrupters of virtue; but unlike Falstaff, who ought to know better, they were young 462 Wherein . . . craft wherein skillful but in underhanded skills 465–66 take . . . you let me follow your meaning 478 kine cows (cf. Genesis 41:19–21)
 488 watch group of constables

FALSTAFF Dost thou hear, Hal? Never call a true piece of gold a counterfeit. Thou art essentially made without seeming so.°

PRINCE And thou a natural coward without instinct.

FALSTAFF I deny your major.° If you will deny the 500 sheriff, so; if not, let him enter. If I become not a cart° as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up!
 I hope I shall as soon be strangled with a halter as another.

PRINCE Go hide thee behind the arras.° The rest walk 505 up above. Now, my masters, for a true face and good conscience.

FALSTAFF Both which I have had; but their date is out, and therefore I'll hide me. Exit.

PRINCE Call in the sheriff. 510
 [Exeunt all but the PRINCE and PETO.]

Enter SHERIFF and the CARRIER.

Now, master sheriff, what is your will with me?

SHERIFF
 First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and cry
 Hath followed certain men unto this house.

PRINCE What men?

SHERIFF
 One of them is well known, my gracious lord— 515
 A gross fat man.

CARRIER As fat as butter.

PRINCE
 The man, I do assure you, is not here,
 For I myself at this time have employed him.°
 And, sheriff, I will engage my word to thee
 That I will by tomorrow dinner time 520
 Send him to answer thee, or any man,
 For anything he shall be charged withal;
 And so let me entreat you leave the house.

SHERIFF
 I will, my lord. There are two gentlemen
 Have in this robbery lost three hundred marks. 525

PRINCE
 It may be so. If he have robbed these men,
 He shall be answerable; and so farewell.

SHERIFF
 Good night, my noble lord.

PRINCE
 I think it is good morrow, is it not?

SHERIFF
 Indeed, my lord, I think it be two o'clock. 530
Exit [with CARRIER].

PRINCE This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's. Go call him forth.

PETO Falstaff! Fast asleep behind the arras, and snorting° like a horse.

PRINCE Hark how hard he fetches breath. Search his 535 pockets.

He searcheth his pocket and findeth certain papers.

496–98 Never . . . so a difficult passage, perhaps meaning that Falstaff, as a true piece of gold despite appearances, should not be turned over to the sheriff by a royal friend who is also true gold despite appearances 500 major major premise, with pun on mayor 501 cart hangman's cart 505 arras wall-hanging 517–18 The . . . him Hal's reply is equivocal: Falstaff is not "here," in the heir-apparent's presence, but "employed" behind the arras 533–34 snorting
 snoring

What hast thou found?

PETO Nothing but papers, my lord.

PRINCE Let's see what they be. Read them.

[PETO reads.]

"Item, A capon 2s. 2d. 540
Item, Sauce 4d.
Item, Sack two gallons. 5s. 8d.
Item, Anchovies and sack after supper . 2s. 6d.
Item, Bread ob."°

PRINCE O monstrous! But one halfpennyworth of 545 bread to this intolerable deal° of sack! What there is else, keep close; we'll read it at more advantage. There let him sleep till day. I'll to the court in the morning.
We must all to the wars, and thy place shall be honorable. I'll procure this fat rogue a charge of foot,° and 550
I know his death will be a march of twelve score.°
The money shall be paid back again with advantage.°
Be with me betimes° in the morning, and so good morrow, Peto.

PETO Good morrow, good my lord. Exeunt. 555

[A C T I I I]

[Scene I. Wales. A room.]

Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, Lord MORTIMER,
Owen GLENDOWER.

MORTIMER

These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction° full of prosperous hope.

HOTSPUR Lord Mortimer, and cousin Glendower, will you sit down? And uncle Worcester. A plague upon it! I have forgot the map. 5

GLENDOWER No, here it is. Sit, cousin Percy, sit, good cousin Hotspur, for by that name as oft as Lancaster doth speak of you, his cheek looks pale, and with a rising sigh he wisheth you in heaven.

HOTSPUR And you in hell, as oft as he hears Owen 10
Glendower spoke of.°

GLENDOWER

I cannot blame him. At my nativity
The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes
Of burning cressets,° and at my birth
The frame and huge foundation of the earth 15
Shakèd like a coward.

HOTSPUR Why, so it would have done at the same season if your mother's cat had but kittened, though yourself had never been born.

GLENDOWER

I say the earth did shake when I was born. 20

HOTSPUR

And I say the earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose as fearing you it shook.

GLENDOWER

The heavens were all on fire, the earth did tremble.

HOTSPUR

O, then the earth shook to see the heavens on fire,
And not in fear of your nativity. 25

Diseasèd nature oftentimes breaks forth
In strange eruptions; oft the teeming earth
Is with a kind of colic pinched and vexed
By the imprisoning of unruly wind
Within her womb, which, for enlargement striving, 30
Shakes the old beldame° earth and topples down
Steeple and mossgrown towers. At your birth
Our grandam earth, having this distemp'rature,°
In passion° shook.

GLENDOWER Cousin, of many men

I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave 35

To tell you once again that at my birth
The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes,
The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds
Were strangely clamorous to the frightened fields.

These signs have marked me extraordinary, 40

And all the courses of my life do show

I am not in the roll of common men.

Where is he living, clipped in with° the sea
That chides the banks of England, Scotland, Wales,
Which calls me pupil or hath read to° me? 45

And bring him out that is but woman's son

Can trace° me in the tedious ways of art°

And hold me pace in deep experiments.

HOTSPUR I think there's no man speaks better Welsh.°

I'll to dinner. 50

MORTIMER

Peace, cousin Percy; you will make him mad.

GLENDOWER

I can call spirits from the vasty deep.

HOTSPUR

Why, so can I, or so can any man;
But will they come when you do call for them?

GLENDOWER Why, I can teach you, cousin, to com- 55
mand the devil.

HOTSPUR

And I can teach thee, coz, to shame the devil—
By telling truth. Tell truth and shame the devil.
If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither,
And I'll be sworn I have power to shame him hence. 60
O, while you live, tell truth and shame the devil!

MORTIMER

Come, come, no more of this unprofitable chat.

GLENDOWER

Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke made head
Against my power; thrice from the banks of Wye
And sandy-bottomed Severn have I sent him 65
Booteless° home and weather-beaten back.

544 ob. obolus, halfpenny 546 deal lot 550 charge of foot company of infantry 551 twelve score twelvescore paces 552 advantage interest 553 betimes early

III.i.2 induction beginning 3-II Lord . . . of many editors revise to read as verse, with line breaks after "down/it/is/Hotspur/you/sigh/hell/of"; or, leaving Hotspur's lines as prose, revise Glendower's speech to read as verse with breaks after "Percy/name/you/sigh/heaven" 14 cressets beacons

31 beldame grandmother (cf. "grandam" in line 33) 33 distemp'rature physical disorder 34 passion pain 43 clipped in with embraced by 45 read to tutored 47 trace follow; art magic 49 speaks better Welsh (1) brags better
(2) talks more unintelligibly 66 Booteless profitless (probably trisyllabic)

HOTSPUR

Home without boots, and in foul weather too?
How scapes he agues,^o in the devil's name?

GLENDOWER

Come, here is the map. Shall we divide our right^o
According to our threefold order ta'en?

70

MORTIMER

The archdeacon hath divided it
Into three limits^o very equally.
England, from Trent and Severn hitherto,
By south and east is to my part assigned;
All westward, Wales beyond the Severn shore,
And all the fertile land within that bound,
To Owen Glendower; and, dear coz, to you
The remnant northward lying off from Trent.
And our indentures tripartite^o are drawn,
Which being seal'd interchangeably^o
(A business that this night may execute),
Tomorrow, cousin Percy, you and I
And my good Lord of Worcester will set forth
To meet your father and the Scottish power,
As is appointed us, at Shrewsbury.
My father Glendower is not ready yet,
Nor shall we need his help these fourteen days.

75

80

85

[To GLENDOWER.]

Within that space you may have drawn together
Your tenants, friends, and neighboring gentlemen.

GLENDOWER

A shorter time shall send me to you, lords;
And in my conduct shall your ladies come,
From whom you now must steal and take no leave,
For there will be a world of water shed
Upon the parting of your wives and you.

90

HOTSPUR

Methinks my moiety,^o north from Burton here,
In quantity equals not one of yours.
See how this river comes me cranking^o in
And cuts me from the best of all my land
A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantle^o out.
I'll have the current in this place dammed up,
And here the smug^o and silver Trent shall run
In a new channel fair and evenly.
It shall not wind with such a deep indent
To rob me of so rich a bottom^o here.

95

100

105

105

110

GLENDOWER

Not wind? It shall, it must! You see it doth.

MORTIMER

Yea, but mark how he bears his course, and runs me up with like advantage^o on the other side, gelding the opposèd continent^o as much as on the other side it takes from you.^o

WORCESTER

Yea, but a little charge^o will trench^o him here

And on this north side win this cape of land;
And then he runs straight and even.

HOTSPUR

I'll have it so, a little charge will do it.

GLENDOWER

I'll not have it alt'red.

HOTSPUR

Will not you?

GLENDOWER

No, nor you shall not.

HOTSPUR

Who shall say me nay?

115

GLENDOWER

Why, that will I.

HOTSPUR

Let me not understand you then; speak it in Welsh.

GLENDOWER

I can speak English, lord, as well as you;
For I was trained up in the English court,
Where, being but young, I framèd to the harp
Many an English ditty lovely well,
And gave the tongue a helpful ornament^o—
A virtue that was never seen in you.

120

HOTSPUR

Marry, and I am glad of it with all my heart!
I had rather be a kitten and cry mew
Than one of these same meter ballad-mongers.^o
I had rather hear a brazen canstick turned^o
Or a dry wheel grate on the axletree,
And that would set my teeth nothing on edge,
Nothing so much as mincing^o poetry.
'Tis like the forced gait of a shuffling nag.

125

130

GLENDOWER

Come, you shall have Trent turned.

HOTSPUR

I do not care. I'll give thrice so much land
To any well-deserving friend;
But in the way of bargain, mark ye me,
I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair.
Are the indentures drawn? Shall we be gone?

135

GLENDOWER

The moon shines fair; you may away by night.
I'll haste the writer, and withal
Break with^o your wives of your departure hence.
I am afraid my daughter will run mad,
So much she doteth on her Mortimer.

140

Exit.

MORTIMER

Fie, cousin Percy, how you cross my father!

HOTSPUR

I cannot choose. Sometime he angers me
With telling me of the moldwarp^o and the ant,
Of the dreamer Merlin and his prophecies,
And of a dragon and a finless fish,
A clip-winged griffin and a moulted raven,
A couching^o lion and a ramping^o cat,

145

122 gave . . . ornament (1) ornamented the words with music (?) (2) benefited the English language by my poems (?)
126 meter ballad-mongers singers of doggerel ballads 127 canstick turned candlestick in process of being burnished (and therefore raucously scraped) 130 mincing affected
140 Break with inform 145 moldwarp mole, i.e., Henry 149 couching, ramping Hotspur ridicules heraldic crouching and rearing beasts; evidently Glendower talked of ancient prophecies which held that the kingdom of the mole should be divided by the lion, dragon and wolf, which were the crests of Percy, Glendower, and Mortimer

68 agues i.e., catching cold 69 our right the kingdom they hope to win 72 limits regions 79 indentures tripartite three-way agreements 80 interchangeably i.e., by all three parties 95 moiety share 97 cranking winding 99 cantle piece 101 smug smooth 104 bottom valley 107 advantage disadvantage 108 gelding . . . continent cutting out of the opposite bank 106-09 Yea . . . you revised by most editors to four or five lines of verse, with little agreement about lineation 110 charge cost; trench make a new course for

And such a deal of skimble-skamble° stuff
As puts me from my faith. I tell you what—
He held me last night at least nine hours
In reckoning up the several devils' names
That were his lackeys. I cried "hum," and "Well, go to!"

But marked him not a word. O, he is as tedious
As a tired horse, a railing wife;
Worse than a smoky house. I had rather live
With cheese and garlic in a windmill far
Than feed on cates° and have him talk to me
In any summer house in Christendom.

MORTIMER

In faith, he is a worthy gentleman,
Exceedingly well read and profited
In strange concealments,° valiant as a lion,
And wondrous affable, and as bountiful
As mines of India. Shall I tell you, cousin?
He holds your temper in a high respect
And curbs himself even of his natural scope°
When you come 'cross his humor.° Faith, he does.
I warrant you that man is not alive
Might so have tempted him as you have done
Without the taste of danger and reproof.
But do not use it oft, let me entreat you.

WORCESTER

In faith, my lord, you are too willful-blame,°
And since your coming hither have done enough
To put him quite besides his patience.
You must needs learn, lord, to amend this fault.
Though sometimes it show greatness, courage,
blood°—

And that's the dearest grace it renders you—
Yet oftentimes it doth present° harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,°
Pride, haughtiness, opinion,° and disdain;
The least of which haunting a nobleman
Loseth men's hearts, and leaves behind a stain
Upon the beauty of all parts besides,
Beguiling them of commendation.

HOTSPUR

Well, I am schooled. Good manners be your speed!°
Here come our wives, and let us take our leave.

Enter GLENDOWER with the LADIES.

MORTIMER

This is the deadly spite° that angers me—
My wife can speak no English, I no Welsh.

GLENDOWER

My daughter weeps; she'll not part with you,
She'll be a soldier too, she'll to the wars.

MORTIMER

Good father, tell her that she and my aunt Percy
Shall follow in your conduct speedily.

GLENDOWER speaks to her in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.

150 GLENDOWER

She is desperate here.
A peevish self-willed harlotry,° one that no persuasion 195 can do good upon.

The LADY speaks in Welsh.

155 MORTIMER

I understand thy looks. That pretty Welsh°
Which thou pourest down from these swelling heavens°

160

I am too perfect in; and, but for shame,
In such a parley° should I answer thee. 200

The LADY again in Welsh.

165

I understand thy kisses, and thou mine,
And that's a feeling disputation.°
But I will never be a truant, love,
Till I have learnt thy language; for thy tongue
Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penned,° 205
Sung by a fair queen in a summer's bow'r,
With ravishing division,° to her lute.

GLENDOWER

170

Nay, if you melt, then will she run mad.

The LADY speaks again in Welsh.

MORTIMER

O, I am ignorance itself in this!

GLENDOWER

175

She bids you on the wanton° rushes lay you down 210
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you
And on your eyelids crown the god of sleep,°
Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness,
Making such difference 'twixt wake and sleep 215
As is the difference betwixt day and night
The hour before the heavenly-harnessed team°
Begins his golden progress in the east.

180

MORTIMER

185

With all my heart I'll sit and hear her sing.
By that time will our book,° I think, be drawn. 220

GLENDOWER

Do so, and those musicians that shall play to you
Hang in the air a thousand leagues from hence,
And straight they shall be here: sit, and attend.

HOTSPUR Come, Kate, thou art perfect in lying down.

Come, quick, quick, that I may lay my head in thy lap. 225

LADY PERCY Go, ye giddy goose.

The music plays.

190

HOTSPUR

Now I perceive the devil understands Welsh,
And 'tis no marvel he is so humorous,°
By'r Lady, he is a good musician.

LADY PERCY

Then should you be nothing but musical, 230
For you are altogether governed by humors.
Lie still, ye thief, and hear the lady sing in Welsh.

150 skimble-skamble meaningless 159 cates delicacies
162–63 profited . . . concealments expert in secret arts 167 scope tendencies 168 come . . . humor clash with his temperament 173 too willful-blame blamable for too much willfulness 177 blood spirit 179 present indicate 180 government self-control 181 opinion arrogance
186 be your speed bring you success 188 spite misfortune

195 harlotry ninny, fool 197 That pretty Welsh her tears
198 heavens her eyes 200 parley meeting (of tears) 202 feeling disputation dialogue by (1) touching (2) the feelings
205 highly penned lofty 207 division musical variation 210 wanton luxurious 213 crown . . . sleep give sleep sovereignty 217 the heavenly-harnessed team the horses of the sun 220 book agreement 228 humorous capricious

HOTSPUR I had rather hear Lady, my brach,^o howl in Irish.
 LADY PERCY Wouldst thou have thy head broken? 235
 HOTSPUR No.
 LADY PERCY Then be still.
 HOTSPUR Neither! 'Tis a woman's fault.
 LADY PERCY Now God help thee!
 HOTSPUR To the Welsh lady's bed. 240
 LADY PERCY What's that?
 HOTSPUR Peace! She sings.

Here the LADY sings a Welsh song.

Come, Kate, I'll have your song too.
 LADY PERCY Not mine, in good sooth.^o
 HOTSPUR Not yours, in good sooth? Heart, you 245 swear like a comfit-maker's^o wife. "Not you, in good sooth!" and "as true as I live!" and "as God shall mend me!" and "as sure as day!"
 And givest such sarcenet surety^o for thy oaths
 As if thou never walk'st further than Finsbury.^o 250
 Swear me, Kate, like a lady as thou art,
 A good mouth-filling oath, and leave "in sooth"
 And such protest of pepper gingerbread^o
 To velvet guards^o and Sunday citizens.

Come, sing.

LADY PERCY I will not sing. 255
 HOTSPUR 'Tis the next way to turn tailor^o or be red-breast-teacher.^o And the indentures be drawn, I'll away within these two hours; and so come in when ye will. Exit.

GLENDOWER
 Come, come, Lord Mortimer. You are as slow 260
 As hot Lord Percy is on fire to go.
 By this our book is drawn; we'll but seal,
 And then to horse immediately.

MORTIMER With all my heart. Exeunt.

[Scene II. London. The palace.]

Enter the KING, PRINCE of Wales, and others.

KING
 Lords, give us leave: the Prince of Wales and I Must have some private conference; but be near at hand,
 For we shall presently have need of you.

Exeunt LORDS.

I know not whether God will have it so
 For some displeasing service I have done, 5
 That, in his secret doom,^o out of my blood^o
 He'll breed revengement and a scourge for me;
 But thou dost in thy passages^o of life

Make me believe that thou art only marked
 For the hot vengeance and the rod of heaven 10
 To punish my mistreadings.^o Tell me else,
 Could such inordinate^o and low desires,
 Such poor, such bare, such lewd, such mean attempts,
 Such barren pleasures, rude society,
 As thou art matched withal^o and grafted to, 15
 Accompany the greatness of thy blood
 And hold their level with thy princely heart?

PRINCE

So please your majesty, I would I could
 Quit^o all offenses with as clear excuse
 As well^o as I am doubtless I can purge 20
 Myself of many I am charged withal.
 Yet such extenuation let me beg
 As, in reproof of many tales devised,
 Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear
 By smiling pickthanks and base newsmongers, 25
 I may, for some things true wherein my youth
 Hath faulty wand' red and irregular,
 Find pardon on my true submission.^o

KING

God pardon thee! Yet let me wonder, Harry,
 At thy affections,^o which do hold a wing 30
 Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
 Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost,
 Which by thy younger brother is supplied,
 And art almost an alien to the hearts
 Of all the court and princes of my blood. 35
 The hope and expectation of thy time^o
 Is ruined, and the soul of every man
 Prophetically do forethink thy fall.
 Had I so lavish of my presence been,
 So common-hackneyed in the eyes of men, 40
 So stale and cheap to vulgar company,
 Opinion,^o that did help me to the crown,
 Had still kept loyal to possession^o
 And left me in reputeless banishment,
 A fellow of no mark nor likelihood. 45
 By being seldom seen, I could not stir
 But, like a comet, I was wond' red at;
 That men would tell their children, "This is he!"
 Others would say, "Where? Which is Bolingbroke?"
 And then I stole all courtesy from heaven,^o 50
 And dressed myself in such humility
 That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
 Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths
 Even in the presence of the crownèd king.
 This did I keep my person fresh and new, 55
 My presence, like a robe pontifical,
 Ne'er seen but wond' red at; and so my state,
 Seldom but sumptuous, showed like a feast

233 brach bitch-hound 244 sooth truth 246 comfit-maker's confectioner's 249 sarcenet surety flimsy security ("sarcenet" = a thin silk) 250 Finsbury favorite resort near London (frequented by the middle-class groups whom Hotspur satirizes) 253 pepper gingerbread i.e., insubstantial, crumbling in the mouth 254 velvet guards shopkeepers, who favored velvet trimmings for Sunday wear 256 tailor like weavers, tailors were famed for singing at their work 257 red-breast-teacher singing master to songbirds
 III.ii.6 doom judgment; blood heirs 8 passages courses

9-11 thou . . . mistreadings (1) heaven is punishing me through you (2) heaven will punish you to punish me 12 inordinate out of order (for one of your rank) 15 withal with 19 Quit clear myself of 20 As well and as well 22-28 Yet . . . submission Yet let me beg such extenuation that when I have confuted many manufactured charges (which the ear of greatness is bound to hear from informers and tattletales) I may be pardoned for some true faults of which my youth has been guilty 30 affections tastes 36 time reign 42 Opinion public opinion 43 possession i.e., Richard II 50 I . . . heaven I took a godlike graciousness on myself

And won by rareness such solemnity.
 The skipping king, he ambled up and down
 With shallow jesters and rash bavin° wits,
 Soon kindled and soon burnt; carded° his state;
 Mingled his royalty with cap'ring fools;
 Had his great name profanèd with their scorns
 And gave his countenance, against his name,°
 To laugh at gibing boys and stand the push°
 Of every beardless vain comparative;°
 Grew a companion to the common streets,
 Enfeoffed himself to popularity;°
 That, being daily swallowed by men's eyes,
 They surfeited with honey and began
 To loathe the taste of sweetness, whereof a little More than a little is by much too much.
 So, when he had occasion to be seen,
 He was but as the cuckoo is in June,
 Heard, not regarded—seen, but with such eyes
 As, sick and blunted with community,°
 Afford no extraordinary gaze,
 Such as is bent on sunlike majesty
 When it shines seldom in admiring eyes;
 But rather drowsed and hung their eyelids down,
 Slept in his face, and rend'red such aspect
 As cloudy° men use to their adversaries,
 Being with his presence glutted, gorged, and full.
 And in that very line, Harry, standest thou;
 For thou hast lost thy princely privilege
 With vile participation.° Not an eye
 But is aweary of thy common sight,
 Save mine, which hath desired to see thee more;
 Which now doth that I would not have it do—
 Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.°

PRINCE

I shall hereafter, my thrice-gracious lord,
 Be more myself.

KING

For all the world,
 As thou art to this hour was Richard then
 When I from France set foot at Ravenspurgh;
 And even as I was then is Percy now.
 Now, by my scepter, and my soul to boot,
 He hath more worthy interest° to the state
 Than thou the shadow of succession;
 For of no right, nor color° like to right,
 He doth fill fields with harness° in the realm,
 Turns head against the lion's armèd jaws,
 And, being no more in debt to years than thou,
 Leads ancient lords and reverend bishops on
 To bloody battles and to bruising arms.
 What never-dying honor hath he got Against renownèd Douglas! whose high deeds,
 Whose hot incursions and great name in arms
 Holds from all soldiers chief majority°

61 bavin brushwood (which flares and burns out) 62 carded debased 65 his name (1) his kingly title (2) his kingly authority 66 stand the push put up with the impudence 67 comparative deviser of insulting comparisons 69 Enfeoffed . . . popularity bound himself to low company 77 with community by familiarity (with the king) 83 cloudy sullen (but also with reference to "clouds" obscuring the royal "sun") 87 participation companionship 91 tenderness tears 98 worthy interest claim based on worth (as compared with a "shadow" claim by inheritance) 100 color pretense 101 harness armor 109 majority preeminence

And military title capital° 110
 Through all the kingdoms that acknowledge Christ.
 Thrice hath this Hotspur, Mars in swathing clothes,
 This infant warrior, in his enterprises
 Discomfited great Douglas; ta'en him once,
 Enlargèd him, and made a friend of him, 115
 To fill the mouth of deep defiance up°
 And shake the peace and safety of our throne.
 And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland,
 The Archbishop's grace of York, Douglas, Mortimer
 Capitulate° against us and are up.° 120
 But wherefore do I tell these news to thee?
 Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes,
 Which art my nearest and dearest° enemy?
 Thou that art like enough, through vassal fear,
 Base inclination, and the start of spleen, 125
 To fight against me under Percy's pay,
 To dog his heels and curtsy at his frowns,
 To show how much thou art degenerate.

PRINCE

Do not think so, you shall not find it so.
 And God forgive them that so much have swayed 130
 Your majesty's good thoughts away from me.
 I will redeem all this on Percy's head
 And, in the closing of some glorious day,
 Be bold to tell you that I am your son,
 When I will wear a garment all of blood, 135
 And stain my favors° in a bloody mask,
 Which, washed away, shall scour my shame with it.
 And that shall be the day, when'er it lights,
 That this same child of honor and renown,
 This gallant Hotspur, this all-praisèd knight, 140
 And your unthought-of Harry chance to meet.
 For every honor sitting on his helm,
 Would they were multitudes, and on my head
 My shames redoubled! For the time will come
 That I shall make this northern youth exchange 145
 His glorious deeds for my indignities.
 Percy is but my factor,° good my lord,
 To engross° up glorious deeds on my behalf;
 And I will call him to so strict account
 That he shall render every glory up, 150
 Yea, even the slightest worship of his time,°
 Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.
 This in the name of God I promise here;
 The which if he be pleased I shall perform,
 I do beseech your majesty may salve 155
 The long-grown wounds of my intemperance.
 If not, the end of life cancels all bands,°
 And I will die a hundred thousand deaths
 Ere break the smallest parcel° of this vow.

KING

A hundred thousand rebels die in this! 160
 Thou shalt have charge and sovereign trust herein.

Enter BLUNT.

How now, good Blunt? Thy looks are full of speed.

110 capital topmost 116 fill . . . up deepen the noise of defiance 120 Capitulate (1) make a "head" or armed force (?) (2) draw up "heads" of an argument (?); up in arms 123 dearest (1) most loved (2) costliest 136 favors features 147 factor agent 148 engross hoard 151 worship . . . time honor he has gained in his lifetime 157 bands bonds, promises 159 parcel item

BLUNT

So hath the business° that I come to speak of.
 Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word
 That Douglas and the English rebels met 165
 The eleventh of this month at Shrewsbury.
 A mighty and a fearful head they are,
 If promises be kept on every hand,
 As ever off' red foul play in a state.

KING

The Earl of Westmoreland set forth today; 170
 With him my son, Lord John of Lancaster:
 For this advertisement is five days old.
 On Wednesday next, Harry, you shall set forward;
 On Thursday we ourselves will march. Our meeting
 Is Bridgenorth; and, Harry, you shall march 175
 Through Gloucestershire; by which account,
 Our business valuèd,° some twelve days hence
 Our general forces at Bridgenorth shall meet.
 Our hands are full of business. Let's away:
 Advantage feeds him° fat while men delay. Exeunt. 180

[Scene III. Eastcheap. The tavern.]

Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

FALSTAFF Bardolph, am I not fall'n away vilely since this last action? Do I not bate?° Do I not dwindle?
 Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown! I am withered like an old apple-john.° Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some lik- 5
 ing.° I shall be out of heart° shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. And I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, I am a peppercorn,° a brewer's horse.° The inside of a church!
 Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of 10
 me.

BARDOLPH Sir John, you are so fretful you cannot live long.

FALSTAFF Why, there is it! Come, sing me a bawdy song, make me merry. I was as virtuously given as a 15 gentleman need to be, virtuous enough: swore little, diced not above seven times a week, went to a bawdy house not above once in a quarter of an hour, paid money that I borrowed three or four times,° lived well, and in good compass;° and now I live out of all order, out 20 of all compass.

BARDOLPH Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that you must needs be out of all compass—out of all reasonable compass, Sir John.

FALSTAFF Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my 25 life. Thou art our admiral,° thou bearest the lantern in the poop—but 'tis in the nose of thee: thou art the Knight of the Burning Lamp.

BARDOLPH Why, Sir John, my face does you no 30 harm.

FALSTAFF No, I'll be sworn. I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a death's-head° or a memento mori.° I never see thy face but I think upon hellfire and Dives° that lived in purple; for there he is in his robes, burning, burning. If thou wert any way given 35 to virtue, I would swear by thy face; my oath should be "By this fire, that's God's angel."° But thou art altogether given over, and wert indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness. When thou ran'st up Gad's Hill in the night to catch my 40 horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus° or a ball of wildfire,° there's no purchase in money. O, thou art a perpetual triumph,° an everlasting bonfire-light! Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links° and torches, walking with thee in the 45 night betwixt tavern and tavern; but the sack that thou hast drunk me would have bought me lights as good cheap° at the dearest chandler's° in Europe.
 I have maintained that salamander° of yours with fire any time this two and thirty years. God reward 50 me for it!

BARDOLPH 'Sblood, I would my face were in your belly!°

FALSTAFF God-americy! So should I be sure to be 55 heart-burned.

Enter HOSTESS.

How now, Dame Partlet° the hen? Have you enquired yet who picked my pocket?

HOSTESS Why, Sir John, what do you think, Sir John? Do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have enquired, so has my husband, man by 60 man, boy by boy, servant by servant. The tithe° of a hair was never lost in my house before.

FALSTAFF Ye lie, hostess. Bardolph was shaved and lost many a hair, and I'll be sworn my pocket was picked. Go to, you are a woman, go! 65

HOSTESS Who, I? No;° I defy thee! God's light, I was never called so in mine own house before!

FALSTAFF Go to, I know you well enough.

HOSTESS No, Sir John; you do not know me, Sir
 John. I know you, Sir John. You owe me money, Sir 70
 John, and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it.
 I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

163 So . . . business the business too has speed (must be dealt with speedily) 177 Our business valuèd having sized up what we have to do 180 him itself

III.iii.2 bate lose weight 4 old apple-john apple with shriveled skin 5-6 am . . . liking (1) am in the mood (2) still have some flesh left 6 out of heart (1) out of the mood
 (2) out of shape 9 peppercorn, brewer's horse Falstaff this time picks objects not long and thin, but dry, withered, decrepit 17-19 diced . . . times probably spoken with significant pauses after "diced not," "once," "borrowed"
 20 compass order (but Bardolph takes it in the sense of "size")
 26 admiral flagship (recognizable by its lantern)

32 death's-head ring with a skull 32-33 memento mori reminder of death 34 Dives uncharitable rich man who burns in hell (Luke 16:19-31) 37 angel alluding to the Scriptural accounts of angels manifesting themselves as fire, or possibly to the seraphs, highest order of angels, who were fire 41-42 ignis fatuus will-o'-the-wisp 42 ball of wildfire firework 43 triumph i.e., of the Roman kind, with torches 45 links flares 48 good cheap cheaply; chandler's candle maker's 49 salamander lizard supposed to live in fire 52-53 I . . . belly proverbial retort, to which Falstaff's reply gives new life 56 Dame Partlet traditional name for a hen, and well suited to the clucking hostess 61 tithe tenth part 66 No the Hostess suspects that any word or phrase of Falstaff's may contain hidden innuendoes about her moral character;
 she sometimes retorts with comments containing amusing innuendoes about herself that she is too ignorant to understand

FALSTAFF Dowlas,^o filthy dowlas! I have given them away to bakers' wives; they have made bolters^o of them.

HOSTESS Now, as I am a true woman, holland^o of eight shillings an ell.^o You owe money here besides, Sir John, for your diet and by-drinkings,^o and money lent you, four and twenty pound.

FALSTAFF He had his part of it; let him pay.

HOSTESS He? Alas, he is poor; he hath nothing.

FALSTAFF How? Poor? Look upon his face. What call you rich?^o Let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks. I'll not pay a denier.^o What, will you make a younker^o of me? Shall I not take mine ease in mine inn but I shall have my pocket picked? I have lost a seal ring of my grandfather's worth forty mark.

HOSTESS O Jesu, I have heard the prince tell him, I know not how oft, that that ring was copper!

FALSTAFF How? The prince is a Jack,^o a sneak-up.^o 'Sblood, and he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog if he would say so.

Enter the PRINCE [and POINS], marching, and FALSTAFF meets them, playing upon his truncheon^o like a fife.

How now, lad? Is the wind in that door,^o i' faith? Must we all march?

BARDOLPH Yea, two and two,^o Newgate fashion.

HOSTESS My lord, I pray you hear me.

PRINCE What say'st thou, Mistress Quickly? How doth thy husband? I love him well, he is an honest man.

HOSTESS Good my lord, hear me.

FALSTAFF Prithee let her alone and list to me.

PRINCE What say'st thou, Jack?

FALSTAFF The other night I fell asleep here behind the arras and had my pocket picked. This house is turned bawdy house; they pick pockets.

PRINCE What didst thou lose, Jack?

FALSTAFF Wilt thou believe me, Hal, three or four bonds of forty pound apiece and a seal ring of my grandfather's.

PRINCE A trifle, some eightpenny matter.

HOSTESS So I told him, my lord, and I said I heard your grace say so; and, my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foulmouthed man as he is, and said he would cudgel you.

PRINCE What! He did not?

HOSTESS There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else.

FALSTAFF There's no more faith in thee than in a stewed prune,^o nor no more truth in thee than in a drawn^o fox; and for womanhood, Maid Marian may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee.^o Go, you thing, go!

73 Dowlas coarse linen 74 bolters sieves 76 holland fine linen 77 ell one and a quarter yards 78 by-drinkings drinks between meals 83 rich referring to its red-gold and copper hues 84 denier tenth of a penny 85 younker greenhorn 90 Jack rascal; sneak-up sneak 92 s.d. truncheon cudgel 93 Is . . . door is that how things are going 95 two and two bound in pairs like prisoners on the way to (Newgate) prison 119 stewed prune evidently chosen by Falstaff because stewed prunes were associated with bawdy houses 120 drawn drawn from his lair and trying every trick to get back to it 120-21 Maid . . . thee a disreputable female in country May games is chaste as the wife of the ward's most respectable citizen in comparison with you

HOSTESS Say, what thing, what thing?

FALSTAFF What thing? Why, a thing to thank God on.

HOSTESS I am no thing to thank God on, I would thou shouldst know it! I am an honest man's wife, and, setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

FALSTAFF Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

HOSTESS Say, what beast, thou knave, thou?

FALSTAFF What beast? Why, an otter.

PRINCE An otter, Sir John? Why an otter?

FALSTAFF Why, she's neither fish nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.

HOSTESS Thou art an unjust man in saying so. Thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave, thou!

PRINCE Thou say'st true, hostess, and he slanders thee most grossly.

HOSTESS So he doth you, my lord, and said this other day you ought^o him a thousand pound.

PRINCE Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?

FALSTAFF A thousand pound, Hal? A million! Thy love is worth a million, thou owest me thy love.

HOSTESS Nay, my lord, he called you Jack and said he would cudgel you.

FALSTAFF Did I, Bardolph?

BARDOLPH Indeed, Sir John, you said so.

FALSTAFF Yea, if he said my ring was copper.

PRINCE I say 'tis copper. Darest thou be as good as thy word now?

FALSTAFF Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but man, I dare; but as thou art prince, I fear thee as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

PRINCE And why not as the lion?

FALSTAFF The king himself is to be feared as the lion. Dost thou think I'll fear thee as I fear thy father? Nay, and I do, I pray God my girdle break.

PRINCE O, if it should, how would thy guts fall about thy knees! But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty in this bosom of thine. It is all filled up with guts and midriff. Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket? Why, thou whoreson, impudent, embossed^o rascal,^o if there were anything in thy pocket but tavern reckonings, memorandums of bawdy houses, and one poor pennyworth of sugar candy to make thee long-winded—if thy pocket were enriched with any other injuries^o but these, I am a villain. And yet you will stand to it; you will not pocket up wrong. Art thou not ashamed?

FALSTAFF Dost thou hear, Hal? Thou knowest in the state of innocency Adam fell, and what should poor Jack Falstaff do in the days of villainy? Thou see'st I have more flesh than another man, and therefore more frailty. You confess then, you picked my pocket?

PRINCE It appears so by the story.

FALSTAFF Hostess, I forgive thee, go make ready breakfast, love thy husband, look to thy servants, cherish thy guests. Thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason. Thou see'st I am pacified still. Nay, prithee be gone.

Exit HOSTESS.

142 ought owed 165 embossed (1) swollen (2) foaming at the mouth (of a deer); rascal (1) rogue (2) lean young deer 169 injuries things whose loss you call injuries

Now, Hal, to the news at court. For the robbery, lad—how is that answered?

PRINCE O my sweet beef, I must still be good angel 185 to thee. The money is paid back again.

FALSTAFF O, I do not like that paying back! 'Tis a double labor.

PRINCE I am good friends with my father, and may do anything. 190

FALSTAFF Rob me the exchequer the first thing thou doest, and do it with unwashed hands° too.

BARDOLPH Do, my lord.

PRINCE I have procured thee, Jack, a charge of foot.

FALSTAFF I would it had been of horse. Where shall I 195 find one that can steal well? O for a fine thief° of the age of two and twenty or thereabouts! I am heinously unprovided. Well, God be thanked for these rebels, they offend none but the virtuous: I laud them, I praise them. 200

PRINCE Bardolph!

BARDOLPH My lord?

PRINCE

Go bear this letter to Lord John of Lancaster,
To my brother John; this to my Lord of Westmoreland. [Exit BARDOLPH.]

Go, Peto, to horse, to horse; for thou and I 205
Have thirty miles to ride yet ere dinner time.

[Exit PETO.]

Jack, meet me tomorrow in the Temple Hall

At two o'clock in the afternoon.

There shalt thou know thy charge, and there receive Money and order for their furniture.° 210

The land is burning, Percy stands on high,
And either we or they must lower lie. [Exit.]

FALSTAFF

Rare words! Brave world! Hostess, my breakfast, come.

O, I could wish this tavern were my drum!° [Exit.]

[A C T I V]

[Scene I. The rebel camp, near Shrewsbury.]

[Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, and DOUGLAS.]

HOTSPUR

Well said, my noble Scot. If speaking truth
In this fine age were not thought flattery,
Such attribution° should the Douglas have
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go so general current° through the world. 5
By God, I cannot flatter, I do defy°
The tongues of soothers!° But a braver place
In my heart's love hath no man than yourself.
Nay, task me° to my word; approve me, lord.

192 with unwashed hands with no delay 196 thief i.e., to steal a horse 210 furniture equipment 214 drum recruiting center

IV.i.3 attribution recognition 5 go . . . current be as widely accepted (the image is of a coin of recent mintage:
"this season's stamp") 6 defy despise 7 soothers flatterers
9 task me try me, test me

DOUGLAS

Thou art the king of honor. 10

No man so potent breathes upon the ground
But I will beard° him.

Enter one with letters.

HOTSPUR

Do so, and 'tis well.—

What letters hast thou there?—I can but thank you.

MESSENGER

These letters come from your father.

HOTSPUR

Letters from him? Why comes he not himself? 15

MESSENGER

He cannot come, my lord, he is grievous sick.

HOTSPUR

Zounds! How has he the leisure to be sick

In such a justling° time? Who leads his power?

Under whose government° come they along?

MESSENGER

His letters bears° his mind, not I, my lord. 20

WORCESTER

I prithee tell me, doth he keep his bed?

MESSENGER

He did, my lord, four days ere I set forth,

And at the time of my departure thence

He was much feared° by his physicians.

WORCESTER

I would the state of time had first been whole 25

Ere he by sickness had been visited.

His health was never better worth than now.

HOTSPUR

Sick now? Droop now? This sickness doth infect

The very lifeblood of our enterprise.

'Tis catching hither, even to our camp. 30

He writes me here that inward sickness—

And that his friends by deputation°

Could not so soon be drawn; nor did he think it meet

To lay so dangerous and dear a trust

On any soul removed but on his own. 35

Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,

That with our small conjunction° we should on,

To see how fortune is disposed to us;

For, as he writes, there is no quailing now,

Because the king is certainly possessed° 40

Of all our purposes. What say you to it?

WORCESTER

Your father's sickness is a maim to us.

HOTSPUR

A perilous gash, a very limb lopped off.

And yet, in faith, it is not! His present want

Seems more than we shall find it. Were it good 45

To set° the exact wealth of all our states

All at one cast? To set so rich a main°

On the nice° hazard of one doubtful hour?

It were not good; for therein should we read

The very bottom and the soul° of hope, 50

12 beard oppose 18 justling jostling, unquiet 19 government command 20 bears a singular verb with plural subject is not uncommon in Elizabethan English 24 feared feared for 32 deputation a deputy 37 conjunction combination of forces 40 possessed informed 46 set risk 47 main (1) stake (in gambling) (2) army 48 nice precarious 50 soul (1) essence (2) sole (cf. "bottom")

The very list,^o the very utmost bound
Of all our fortunes.
DOUGLAS Faith, and so we should.
Where now remains a sweet reversion,^o
We may boldly spend upon the hope of what is to come in.

A comfort of retirement^o lives in this. 55

HOTSPUR
A rendezvous, a home to fly unto,
If that the devil and mischance look big^o
Upon the maidenhead of our affairs.

WORCESTER
But yet I would your father had been here.
The quality and hair^o of our attempt 60
Brooks^o no division. It will be thought
By some that know not why he is away,
That wisdom, loyalty, and mere dislike
Of our proceedings kept the earl from hence.
And think how such an apprehension 65
May turn the tide of fearful^o faction
And breed a kind of question in our cause.
For well you know we of the off'ring side^o
Must keep aloof from strict arbitrament,^o
And stop all sight-holes, every loop^o from whence 70
The eye of reason may pry in upon us.
This absence of your father's draws^o a curtain
That shows the ignorant a kind of fear
Before not dreamt of.

HOTSPUR You strain too far.
I rather of his absence make this use: 75
It lends a luster and more great opinion,^o
A larger dare to our great enterprise,
Than if the earl were here; for men must think,
If we, without his help, can make a head^o
To push against a kingdom, with his help 80
We shall o'erturn it topsy-turvy down.
Yet all goes well; yet all our joints are whole.

DOUGLAS
As heart can think. There is not such a word
Spoke of in Scotland as this term of fear.

Enter Sir Richard VERNON.

HOTSPUR
My cousin Vernon, welcome, by my soul. 85

VERNON
Pray God my news be worth a welcome, lord.
The Earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hitherwards; with him Prince John.

HOTSPUR
No harm. What more?

VERNON And further, I have learned
The king himself in person is set forth, 90
Or hitherwards intended speedily,
With strong and mighty preparation.

HOTSPUR
He shall be welcome too. Where is his son,
The nimble-footed madcap Prince of Wales,

And his comrades, that daffed^o the world aside 95
And bid it pass?

VERNON All furnished, all in arms;
All plumed like estridges^o that with the wind
Bated^o like eagles having lately bathed;
Glittering in golden coats like images;
As full of spirit as the month of May 100
And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer;
Wanton^o as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.
I saw young Harry with his beaver^o on,
His cushes^o on his thighs, gallantly armed, 105
Rise from the ground like feathered Mercury,
And vaulted with such ease into his seat
As if an angel dropped down from the clouds
To turn and wind^o a fiery Pegasus
And witch the world with noble horsemanship.

HOTSPUR
No more, no more! Worse than the sun in March, 110
This praise doth nourish agues.^o Let them come.
They come like sacrifices in their trim,
And to the fire-eyed maid^o of smoky war
All hot and bleeding will we offer them.
The mailèd Mars shall on his altars sit 115
Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire
To hear this rich reprisal^o is so nigh,
And yet not ours. Come, let me taste my horse,
Who is to bear me like a thunderbolt
Against the bosom of the Prince of Wales. 120
Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse,
Meet, and ne'er part till one drop down a corse.
O that Glendower were come!

VERNON There is more news.
I learned in Worcester, as I rode along,
He cannot draw his power this fourteen days. 125

DOUGLAS
That's the worst tidings that I hear of yet.

WORCESTER
Ay, by my faith, that bears a frosty sound.
HOTSPUR
What may the king's whole battle^o reach unto?

VERNON
To thirty thousand.

HOTSPUR Forty let it be.
My father and Glendower being both away, 130
The powers of us may serve so great a day.
Come, let us take a muster speedily.
Doomsday is near. Die all, die merrily.

DOUGLAS
Talk not of dying. I am out of fear
Of death or death's hand for this one half year. 135

Exeunt.

[Scene II. A road near Coventry.]

Enter FALSTAFF [and] BARDOLPH.

FALSTAFF Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry;

51 list limit 53 reversion inheritance still to be received 55 comfort of retirement security to fall back on 57 big menacingly 60 hair nature 61 Brooks allows of 66 fearful timid 68 we . . . side we who take the offensive 69 arbitrament evaluation 70 loop loophole 72 draws draws aside 76 opinion prestige 79 a head (1) an army
(2) headway

95 daffed thrust 97 estridges ostriches (ostrich plumes are the emblem of the Prince of Wales) 98 Bated shook their wings 102 Wanton exuberant 103 beaver helmet 104
cushes thigh armor 108 wind wheel about 111 agues chills and fever (the spring sun was believed to set them going) 113 maid Bellona, goddess of war 117 reprisal prize 128 battle army

fill me a bottle of sack. Our soldiers shall march through. We'll to Sutton Co'fil' tonight.

BARDOLPH Will you give me money, captain?

FALSTAFF Lay out,° lay out. 5

BARDOLPH This bottle makes an angel.°

FALSTAFF And if it do, take it for thy labor; and if it make twenty, take them all; I'll answer the coinage. Bid my lieutenant Peto meet me at town's end.

BARDOLPH I will, captain. Farewell. Exit. 10

FALSTAFF If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a soused gurnet.° I have misused the king's press° damnably. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fifty soldiers, three hundred and odd pounds. I press me none but good householders, yeomen's sons;° 15 inquire me out contracted bachelors, such as had been asked twice on the banes°—such a commodity of warm° slaves as had as lief hear the devil as a drum, such as fear the report of a caliver° worse than a struck fowl or a hurt wild duck. I pressed me none 20 but such toasts-and-butter, with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and they have bought out their services; and now my whole charge consists of ancients,° corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies°—slaves as ragged as Lazarus° in the 25 painted cloth,° where the glutton's dogs licked his sores; and such as indeed were never soldiers, but discarded unjust° servingmen, younger sons to younger brothers, revolted° tapsters, and ostlers trade-fall'n;° the cankers° of a calm world and a long 30 peace; ten times more dishonorable ragged than an old fazed ancient;° and such have I to fill up the rooms of them as have bought out their services that you would think that I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals lately come from swine-keeping, from eating 35 draff° and husks. A mad fellow met me on the way, and told me I had unloaded all the gibbets and pressed the dead bodies. No eye hath seen such scarecrows. I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's flat. Nay, and the villains march wide betwixt the 40 legs, as if they had gyves° on, for indeed I had the most of them out of prison. There's not a shirt and a half in all my company, and the half-shirt is two napkins tacked together and thrown over the shoulders like a herald's coat without sleeves; and the shirt, to 45 say the truth, stol'n from my host at Saint Albans, or the red-nose innkeeper at Daventry. But that's all one; they'll find linen enough on every hedge.°

IV.ii.5 Lay out pay out of your own pocket 6 angel coin worth, at various times, six shillings eightpence to ten shillings (Bardolph means that Falstaff now owes him an angel, but Falstaff jokingly takes "make" in the literal sense—as if the bottle were minting angels; he tells Bardolph to take them all and he will guarantee they are not counterfeit) 12 soused gurnet pickled fish; press power of conscription 15 good . . . sons men of some means who could pay to be let off 17 asked . . . banes on the verge of marriage (banns [banes] were announcements of intent to marry, published usually three times at weekly intervals) 18 warm comfortable 19 caliver musket 24 ancients ensigns 24–25 gentlemen of companies lesser officers 25 Lazarus the beggar in the Dives parable (Luke 16:19–31) 26 painted cloth painted wall-hanging 28 unjust dishonest 29 revolted runaway 30 trade-fall'n unemployed; cankers parasites 32 fazed ancient tattered flag 36 draff pig-swill (the prodigal son, in Luke 15:15–16, was so hungry he longed for draff) 41 gyves fetters

Enter the PRINCE [and the] Lord of WESTMORELAND.

PRINCE How now, blown° Jack?° How now, quilt?

FALSTAFF What, Hal? How now, mad wag? What a 50 devil dost thou in Warwickshire? My good Lord of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy. I thought your honor had already been at Shrewsbury.

WESTMORELAND Faith, Sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there, and you too, but my powers are 55 there already. The king, I can tell you, looks for us all, we must away all night.

FALSTAFF Tut, never fear me: I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.

PRINCE I think, to steal cream indeed, for thy theft 60 hath already made thee butter. But tell me, Jack, whose fellows are these that come after?

FALSTAFF Mine, Hal, mine.

PRINCE I did never see such pitiful rascals.

FALSTAFF Tut, tut, good enough to toss;° food for 65 powder, food for powder, they'll fill a pit as well as better. Tush, man, mortal men, mortal men.

WESTMORELAND Ay, but, Sir John, methinks they are exceeding poor and bare, too beggarly.

FALSTAFF Faith, for their poverty, I know not where 70 they had that, and for their bareness, I am sure they never learned that of me.

PRINCE No, I'll be sworn, unless you call three fingers° in the ribs bare. But, sirrah, make haste. Percy is already in the field. Exit. 75

FALSTAFF What, is the king encamped?

WESTMORELAND He is, Sir John. I fear we shall stay too long.

FALSTAFF Well, to the latter end of a fray and the beginning of a feast fits a dull fighter and a keen 80 guest. Exeunt.°

[Scene III. The rebel camp, near Shrewsbury.]

Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, DOUGLAS, VERNON.

HOTSPUR

We'll fight with him tonight.

WORCESTER

It may not be.

DOUGLAS

You give him then advantage.

VERNON

Not a whit.

HOTSPUR

Why say you so? Looks he not for supply?°

VERNON

So do we.

HOTSPUR His is certain, ours is doubtful.

WORCESTER

Good cousin, be advised; stir not tonight. 5

48 hedge where linen was put out to dry 49 blown (1) swelled (2) short of wind; Jack (1) Falstaff's name (2) soldier's quilted jacket 65 toss i.e., on the end of a pike 73–74 three fingers i.e., of fat 81 s.d. Exeunt the quarto's "Exeunt," implying that Westmoreland goes off with Falstaff, may be wrong; Falstaff's last speech sounds as if Westmoreland had departed, and Falstaff winks at the audience

IV.iii.3 supply reinforcement

VERNON

Do not, my lord.

DOUGLAS

You do not counsel well.

You speak it out of fear and cold heart.

VERNON

Do me no slander, Douglas. By my life—

And I dare well maintain it with my life—

If well-respected° honor bid me on,

I hold as little counsel with weak fear

As you, my lord, or any Scot that this day lives.

Let it be seen tomorrow in the battle

Which of us fears.

DOUGLAS

Yea, or tonight.

VERNON

Content.

HOTSPUR

Tonight, say I.

VERNON

Come, come, it may not be.

I wonder much, being men of such great leading° as you are,

That you foresee not what impediments

Drag back our expedition.° Certain horse

Of my cousin Vernon's are not yet come up.

Your uncle Worcester's horse came but today;

And now their pride and mettle is asleep,

Their courage with hard labor tame and dull,

That not a horse is half the half of himself.

HOTSPUR

So are the horses of the enemy

In general journey-bated° and brought low.

The better part of ours are full of rest.

WORCESTER

The number of the king exceedeth ours.

For God's sake, cousin, stay till all come in.

The trumpet sounds a parley. Enter Sir Walter BLUNT.

BLUNT

I come with gracious offers from the king,

If you vouchsafe me hearing and respect.

HOTSPUR

Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt, and would to God

You were of our determination.°

Some of us love you well; and even those some

Envy your great deservings and good name,

Because you are not of our quality,°

But stand against us like an enemy.

BLUNT

And God defend° but still I should stand so,

So long as out of limit° and true rule

You stand against anointed majesty.

But to my charge.° The king hath sent to know

The nature of your griefs, and whereupon

You conjure from the breast of civil peace

Such bold hostility, teaching his duteous land

Audacious cruelty. If that the king

Have any way your good deserts forgot,

Which he confesseth to be manifold,

He bids you name your griefs, and with all speed

You shall have your desires with interest,

And pardon absolute for yourself and these

Herein misled by your suggestion.°

HOTSPUR

The king is kind, and well we know the king

Knows at what time to promise, when to pay.

My father and my uncle and myself

10 Did give him that same royalty he wears;

And when he was not six and twenty strong,

Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,

A poor unminded outlaw sneaking home,

My father gave him welcome to the shore;

And then he heard him swear and vow to God

He came but to be Duke of Lancaster,

To sue his livery and beg his peace,°

15 With tears of innocence and terms of zeal,

My father, in kind heart and pity moved,

Swore him assistance, and performed it too.

Now when the lords and barons of the realm

Perceived Northumberland did lean to him,

The more and less came in with cap and knee;°

Met him in boroughs, cities, villages,

20 Attended him on bridges, stood in lanes,°

Laid gifts before him, proffered him their oaths,

Gave him their heirs as pages, followed him

Even at the heels in golden multitudes.

He presently, as greatness knows itself,°

Steps me a little higher than his vow

25 Made to my father, while his blood was poor,

Upon the naked shore at Ravenspurgh;

And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform

Some certain edicts and some strait° decrees

That lie too heavy on the commonwealth;

Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep

Over his country's wrongs; and by this face,

This seeming brow of justice, did he win

The hearts of all that he did angle for;

30 Proceeded further—cut me off the heads

Of all the favorites that the absent king

In deputation° left behind him here

When he was personal° in the Irish war.

BLUNT

Tut! I came not to hear this.

35

HOTSPUR

Then to the point.

In short time after, he deposed the king;

Soon after that deprived him of his life;

And in the neck of that° tasked° the whole state;

To make that worse, suff' red his kinsman March

(Who is, if every owner were well placed,

40 Indeed his king) to be engaged in Wales,

There without ransom to lie forfeited;

Disgraced me in my happy victories,

Sought to entrap me by intelligence;°

Rated° mine uncle from the council board;

45 In rage dismissed my father from the court;

51 suggestion instigation 62 sue . . . peace sue for the delivery of his lands (which Richard II had arrogated to the crown) and make his peace with the king 68 with . . . knee with cap off and bended knee (in token of allegiance) 70 lanes facing rows 74 as . . . itself as greatness begins to feel its strength 79 strait strict 87 In deputation as deputies 88 personal personally engaged 92 in . . . that next; tasked taxed 98 intelligence spies 99 Rated scolded (cf.
 I.iii.14–20)

10 well-respected well-considered 17 leading generalship
 19 expedition hastening into battle 26 journey-bated travel-weakened 33 determination party 36 quality company 38 defend forbid 39 limit a subject's proper imits 41 charge message

Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on wrong;
And in conclusion drove us to seek out
This head° of safety, and withal to pry
Into his title, the which we find
Too indirect° for long continuance.

105

BLUNT

Shall I return this answer to the king?

HOTSPUR

Not so, Sir Walter. We'll withdraw awhile.
Go to the king; and let there be impawned
Some surety for a safe return again,
And in the morning early shall mine uncle
Bring him our purposes; and so farewell.

110

BLUNT

I would you would accept of grace and love.

HOTSPUR

And may be so we shall.

BLUNT

Pray God you do. [Exeunt.]

[Scene IV. York. The Archbishop's palace.]

Enter [the] ARCHBISHOP of York [and] SIR MICHAEL.

ARCHBISHOP

Hie, good Sir Michael; bear this sealèd brief°
With wingèd haste to the Lord Marshal;
This to my cousin Scroop; and all the rest
To whom they are directed. If you knew
How much they do import, you would make haste.

5

SIR MICHAEL

My good lord, I guess their tenor.

ARCHBISHOP

Like enough you do.
Tomorrow, good Sir Michael, is a day
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
Must bide the touch;° for, sir, at Shrewsbury,
As I am truly given to understand,
The king with mighty and quick-raisèd power
Meets with Lord Harry; and I fear, Sir Michael,
What with the sickness of Northumberland,
Whose power was in the first proportion,°
And what with Owen Glendower's absence thence,
Who with them was a rated sinew° too
And comes not in, overruled by prophecies—
I fear the power of Percy is too weak
To wage an instant trial with the king.

10

20

SIR MICHAEL

Why, my good lord, you need not fear;
There is Douglas and Lord Mortimer.

ARCHBISHOP

No, Mortimer is not there.

SIR MICHAEL

But there is Mordake, Vernon, Lord Harry Percy,
And there is my Lord of Worcester, and a head
Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen.

25

ARCHBISHOP

And so there is; but yet the king hath drawn

103 head army 105 indirect (1) not in the direct line (from Richard) (2) morally oblique

IV.iv.1 brief message 10 bide the touch stand the test (as metal is tested by the touchstone to know if it is gold) 15 proportion magnitude 17 rated sinew highly valued strength

The special head° of all the land together—
The Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster,
The noble Westmoreland and warlike Blunt,
And many moe corrivals° and dear° men
Of estimation and command in arms.

30

SIR MICHAEL

Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well opposed.

ARCHBISHOP

I hope no less, yet needful 'tis to fear;
And, to prevent the worst, Sir Michael, speed.
For if Lord Percy thrive not, ere the king
Dismiss his power, he means to visit us,
For he hath heard of our confederacy,
And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him.
Therefore make haste. I must go write again
To other friends; and so farewell, Sir Michael.

35

40

Exeunt.

[A C T V]

[Scene I. The king's camp, near Shrewsbury.]

Enter the KING, PRINCE of Wales, Lord JOHN of Lancaster, Earl of WESTMORELAND,° Sir Walter BLUNT, FALSTAFF.

KING

How bloodily the sun begins to peer
Above yon bulky hill! The day looks pale
At his distemp'rature.°

PRINCE

The southern wind
Doth play the trumpet° to his° purposes
And by his hollow whistling in the leaves
Foretells a tempest and a blust'ring day.

5

KING

Then with the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win.

The trumpet sounds. Enter WORCESTER [and VERNON].

15

How now, my Lord of Worcester? 'Tis not well
That you and I should meet upon such terms
As now we meet. You have deceived our trust
And made us doff our easy robes of peace
To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel.
This is not well, my lord; this is not well.
What say you to it? Will you again unknit
This churlish knot of all-abhorred war,
And move in that obedient orb° again
Where you did give a fair and natural light,
And be no more an exhaled meteor,°
A prodigy of fear, and a portent
Of broachèd° mischief to the unborn times?

10

15

20

25

28 head army 31 moe corrivals more associates; dear important

V.i.s.d. Earl of Westmoreland in V.ii.28 we learn that Westmoreland has been held as the "surety" of IV.iii.109, but at this point Shakespeare apparently had not decided who was the hostage 3 his distemp'rature the sun's apparent ailment 4 play the trumpet (1) act the announcer (2) blow as if playing a trumpet; his the sun's 17 obedient orb orbit of obedience 19 exhaled meteor wandering body (not subject to orbit, and thought an omen or "prodigy") 21 broachèd opened

WORCESTER

Hear me, my liege.
For mine own part, I could be well content
To entertain the lag-end of my life
With quiet hours, for I protest
I have not sought the day of this dislike.

KING

You have not sought it! How comes it then?

FALSTAFF

Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.

PRINCE

Peace, chewet,^o peace!

WORCESTER

It pleased your majesty to turn your looks
Of favor from myself and all our house;
And yet I must remember^o you, my lord,
We were the first and dearest of your friends.
For you my staff of office did I break
In Richard's time, and posted day and night
To meet you on the way and kiss your hand
When yet you were in place and in account
Nothing so strong and fortunate as I.
It was myself, my brother, and his son
That brought you home and boldly did outdare
The dangers of the time. You swore to us,
And you did swear that oath at Doncaster,
That you did nothing purpose 'gainst the state,
Nor claim no further than your new-fall'n^o right,
The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster.
To this we swore our aid. But in short space
It rained down fortune show'ring on your head,
And such a flood of greatness fell on you—
What with our help, what with the absent king,
What with the injuries of a wanton time,
The seeming sufferances that you had borne,
And the contrarious winds that held the king
So long in his unlucky Irish wars
That all in England did repute him dead—
And from this swarm of fair advantages
You took occasion to be quickly wooed
To gripe^o the general sway into your hand;
Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster;
And, being fed by us, you used us so
As that ungentle gull,^o the cuckoo's bird,^o
Useth the sparrow—did oppress our nest,
Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk
That even our love durst not come near your sight
For fear of swallowing; but with nimble wing
We were enforced for safety sake to fly
Out of your sight and raise this present head;
Whereby we stand opposèd by such means
As you yourself have forged against yourself
By unkind usage, dangerous^o countenance,
And violation of all faith and troth
Sworn to us in your younger enterprise.

KING

These things, indeed, you have articulate,^o

Proclaimed at market crosses, read in churches,
To face^o the garment of rebellion
With some fine color^o that may please the eye 75
Of fickle changelings and poor discontents,
Which gape and rub the elbow^o at the news
Of hürlyburly innovation.^o
And never yet did insurrection want
Such water colors to impaint his cause, 80
Nor moody beggars, starving for a time
Of pell-mell havoc and confusion.

PRINCE

In both your armies there is many a soul
Shall pay full dearly for this encounter,
If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew 85
The Prince of Wales doth join with all the world
In praise of Henry Percy. By my hopes,
This present enterprise set off his head,^o
I do not think a braver gentleman,
More active-valiant or more valiant-young, 90
More daring or more bold, is now alive
To grace this latter age with noble deeds.
For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry;
And so I hear he doth account me too. 95
Yet this before^o my father's majesty—
I am content that he shall take the odds
Of his great name and estimation,
And will, to save the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him in a single fight. 100

KING

And, Prince of Wales, so dare we venture thee;
Albeit,^o considerations infinite
Do make against it. No, good Worcester, no!
We love our people well; even those we love 105
That are misled upon your cousin's part;
And, will they take the offer of our grace,^o
Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man
Shall be my friend again, and I'll be his.
So tell your cousin, and bring me word 110
What he will do. But if he will not yield,
Rebuke and dread correction wait on us,^o
And they shall do their office.^o So be gone.
We will not now be troubled with reply.
We offer fair; take it advisedly. 60

Exit WORCESTER [with VERNON].

PRINCE

It will not be accepted, on my life. 115
The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
Are confident against the world in arms. 65

KING

Hence, therefore, every leader to his charge;
For, on their answer, will we set on them,
And God befriend us as our cause is just! 120

Exeunt. Manent^o PRINCE [and] FALSTAFF.

FALSTAFF Hal, if thou see me down in the battle and bestride me, so!^o 'Tis a point of friendship.

29 chewet (1) jackdaw, i.e., chatterer (2) meat pie 32 remember remind 44 new-fall'n by the death of his father, John of Gaunt 57 gripe grab 60 gull, bird nestling (the cuckoo lays its eggs in other birds' nests, and the young cuckoos when hatched speedily destroy the other nestlings) 69 dangerous menacing 72 articulate spelled out

74 face trim 75 color (1) hue (2) rhetorical coloring (hence, pretext) 77 rub the elbow hug themselves with delight 78 innovation revolution 88 set . . . head removed from his record 96 this before let me say this in the presence of 102
Albeit on the other hand 106 grace pardon 111 wait on us are in our service 112 office duty 120 s.d. Manent remain (Latin) 122 so I shan't object

PRINCE Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship. Say thy prayers, and farewell.
 FALSTAFF I would 'twere bedtime, Hal, and all well. 125
 PRINCE Why, thou owest God a death.° [Exit.]
 FALSTAFF 'Tis not due yet: I would be loath to pay him before his day. What need I be so forward with him that calls not on me? Well, 'tis no matter; honor pricks° me on. Yea, but how if honor prick° me off 130 when I come on? How then? Can honor set to a leg? No. Or an arm? No. Or take away the grief of a wound? No. Honor hath no skill in surgery then? No. What is honor? A word. What is in that word honor? What is that honor? Air—a trim° reckoning! Who 135 hath it? He that died a Wednesday. Doth he feel it? No. Doth he hear it? No. 'Tis insensible then? Yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living? No. Why? Detraction° will not suffer it. Therefore I'll none of it. Honor is a mere scutcheon°—and so ends 140 my catechism. Exit.

[Scene II. The rebel camp, near Shrewsbury.]

Enter WORCESTER [and] Sir Richard VERNON.

WORCESTER
 O no, my nephew must not know, Sir Richard,
 The liberal and kind offer of the king.

VERNON
 'Twere best he did.

WORCESTER Then are we all undone.
 It is not possible, it cannot be,
 The king should keep his word in loving us. 5
 He will suspect us still and find a time
 To punish this offense in other faults.
 Supposition all our lives shall be stuck full of eyes;°
 For treason is but trusted like the fox,
 Who, never so tame, so cherished and locked up, 10
 Will have a wild trick° of his ancestors.
 Look how we can, or sad or° merrily,
 Interpretation will misquote our looks,
 And we shall feed like oxen at a stall,
 The better cherished still the nearer death. 15
 My nephew's trespass may be well forgot;
 It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood,
 And an adopted name of privilege°—
 A harebrained Hotspur, governed by a spleen.
 All his offenses live upon my head 20
 And on his father's. We did train° him on;
 And, his corruption being ta'en° from us,
 We, as the spring of all, shall pay for all.
 Therefore, good cousin, let not Harry know,
 In any case, the offer of the king. 25

Enter HOTSPUR [and] DOUGLAS].

126 death pronounced like debt, in which sense Falstaff takes it
 130 pricks spurs; prick check (as a casualty) 135 trim fine (spoken ironically) 139 Detraction slander 140 scutcheon painted shield with coat of arms identifying a dead nobleman
 V.ii.8 Supposition . . . eyes suspicion will always be spying on us 11 trick (1) trait (2) wile 12 or sad or either sad or 18 an . . . privilege a nickname which carries a privilege (to be impulsive) with it 21 train (1) draw (2) aim 22 ta'en taken (like an infection)

VERNON
 Deliver° what you will, I'll say 'tis so.
 Here comes your cousin.
 HOTSPUR My uncle is returned.
 Deliver up my Lord of Westmoreland.°
 Uncle, what news?

WORCESTER
 The king will bid you battle presently. 30

DOUGLAS
 Defy him by the Lord of Westmoreland.

HOTSPUR
 Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so.

DOUGLAS
 Marry, and shall, and very willingly. Exit.

WORCESTER
 There is no seeming mercy in the king.

HOTSPUR
 Did you beg any? God forbid! 35

WORCESTER
 I told him gently of our grievances,
 Of his oath-breaking, which he mended thus,
 By now forswearing that he is forsworn.
 He calls us rebels, traitors, and will scourge
 With haughty arms this hateful name in us. 40

Enter DOUGLAS.

DOUGLAS
 Arm, gentlemen, to arms, for I have thrown
 A brave defiance in King Henry's teeth,
 And Westmoreland, that was engaged,° did bear it;
 Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on.

WORCESTER
 The Prince of Wales stepped forth before the king 45
 And, nephew, challenged you to single fight.

HOTSPUR
 O, would the quarrel lay upon our heads,
 And that no man might draw short breath today
 But I and Harry Monmouth! Tell me, tell me,
 How showed his tasking?° Seemed it in contempt? 50

VERNON
 No, by my soul. I never in my life
 Did hear a challenge urged more modestly,
 Unless a brother should a brother dare
 To gentle exercise and proof of arms.
 He gave you all the duties of a man;° 55
 Trimmed up your praises with a princely tongue;
 Spoke your deservings like a chronicle;°
 Making you ever better than his praise
 By still dispraising praise valued with you;°
 And, which became him like a prince indeed, 60
 He made a blushing cital of° himself,
 And chid his truant youth with such a grace
 As if he mast' red there a double spirit
 Of teaching and of learning instantly.°
 There did he pause; but let me tell the world, 65
 If he outlive the envy of this day,

26 Deliver report 28 Westmoreland who has been hostage for the safe return of Worcester and Vernon 43 engaged held as hostage 50 tasking challenging 55 duties . . . man duties that one man can owe another 57 like a chronicle with the itemized detail characteristic of a chronicle history 59 dispraising . . . you i.e., because it must fall so far short of your deservings 61 cital of reference to 64 instantly simultaneously

England did never owe° so sweet a hope,
So much misconstrued in° his wantonness.

HOTSPUR

Cousin, I think thou art enamored
On his follies. Never did I hear
Of any prince so wild a liberty.°
But be he as he will, yet once ere night
I will embrace him with a soldier's arm,
That° he shall shrink under my courtesy.
Arm, arm with speed! And, fellows, soldiers, friends, 75
Better consider what you have to do
Than I, that have not well the gift of tongue,
Can lift your blood up with persuasion.

Enter a MESSENGER.

MESSENGER

My lord, here are letters for you.

HOTSPUR

I cannot read them now.—
O gentlemen, the time of life is short!
To spend that shortness basely were too long
If life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at the arrival of an hour.°
And if we live, we live to tread on kings;
If die, brave death, when princes die with us!
Now for our consciences, the arms are fair,
When the intent of bearing them is just.

Enter another [MESSENGER].

MESSENGER

My lord, prepare. The king comes on apace.

HOTSPUR

I thank him that he cuts me from my tale,
For I profess not talking: only this—
Let each man do his best; and here draw I
A sword whose temper I intend to stain
With the best blood that I can meet withal
In the adventure of this perilous day.
Now, Esperance! Percy! and set on.
Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace;
For, heaven to earth,° some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy. 100

Here they embrace. The trumpets sound. [Exeunt.]

[Scene III. Shrewsbury. The battlefield.]

*The KING enters with his power. Alarum to the battle.
[Exeunt.] Then enter DOUGLAS, and Sir Walter BLUNT [disguised as the king].*

BLUNT

What is thy name, that in battle thus thou crossest me?
What honor dost thou seek upon my head?

DOUGLAS

Know then my name is Douglas,
And I do haunt thee in the battle thus Because some tell me that thou art a king. 5

BLUNT

They tell thee true.

DOUGLAS

The Lord of Stafford dear today hath bought Thy likeness, for instead of thee, King Harry,
This sword hath ended him: so shall it thee,
Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner. 10

BLUNT

I was not born a yielder, thou proud Scot;
And thou shalt find a king that will revenge
Lord Stafford's death.

*They fight. DOUGLAS kills BLUNT. Then enter
HOTSPUR.*

HOTSPUR

O Douglas, hadst thou fought at Holmedon thus,
I never had triumphed upon a Scot. 15

DOUGLAS

80 All's done, all's won: here breathless lies the king.

HOTSPUR Where?

DOUGLAS Here.

HOTSPUR

85 This, Douglas? No. I know this face full well.
A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt;
Semblably° furnished like the king himself. 20

DOUGLAS

A fool° go with thy soul, whither it goes!
A borrowed title hast thou bought too dear:
Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?

HOTSPUR

The king hath many marching in his coats. 25

DOUGLAS

90 Now, by my sword, I will kill all his coats;
I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece,
Until I meet the king.

HOTSPUR

Up and away!
Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day. [Exeunt.]
95 Alarum. Enter FALSTAFF solus.

FALSTAFF Though I could scape shot-free° at London, 30
I fear the shot here. Here's no scoring° but upon the pate. Soft! Who are you? Sir Walter Blunt. There's honor for you! Here's no vanity!° I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy too. God keep lead out of me. I need no more weight than mine own bowels. 35
I have led my rag-of-muffins where they are peppered.°
There's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive, and they are for the town's end, to beg during life.
But who comes here?

Enter the PRINCE.

PRINCE

What, stands thou idle here? Lend me thy sword. 40
Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff
Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies,
Whose deaths are yet unrevengeed. I prithee
Lend me thy sword.

V.iii.21 Semblably similarly 22 fool the title "fool"
30 shot-free without paying the bill 31 scoring (1) billing
(2) striking 33 Here's no vanity spoken ironically: i.e., here is "vanity"—futility, foolishness; but vanity also implies lightness, which is then set against the "heaviness" of life: cf.
"lead," "heavy," "weight" 36 I . . . peppered a common practice of officers, who drew the dead soldiers' pay

67 owe own 68 in with respect to 71 liberty reckless freedom 74 That so that 82-84 To . . . hour If life were measured by a clock's hand, closing after a single hour, it would still be too long if basely spent 99 heaven to earth the odds are as great as heaven to earth

FALSTAFF O Hal, I prithee give me leave to breathe 45 awhile. Turk Gregory° never did such deeds in arms as I have done this day. I have paid° Percy, I have made him sure.

PRINCE
He is indeed, and living to kill thee.

I prithee lend me thy sword. 50

FALSTAFF Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy be alive, thou gets not my sword; but take my pistol if thou wilt.

PRINCE Give it me. What, is it in the case?

FALSTAFF Ay, Hal. 'Tis hot, 'tis hot.° There's that 55 will sack a city.

The PRINCE draws it out and finds it to be a bottle of sack.

PRINCE
What, is it a time to jest and dally now?

He throws the bottle at him. Exit.

FALSTAFF Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce° him. If he do come in my way, so; if he do not, if I come in his willingly, let him make a carbonado° of me. I like 60 not such grinning honor as Sir Walter hath. Give me life; which if I can save, so; if not, honor comes unlooked for, and there's an end. [Exit.]

[Scene IV. Shrewsbury. The battlefield.]

Alarum. Excursions.° Enter the KING, the PRINCE, Lord JOHN of Lancaster, Earl of WESTMORELAND.

KING
I prithee, Harry, withdraw thyself, thou bleedest too much.

Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him.

JOHN
Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed too.

PRINCE
I beseech your majesty make up,°
Lest your retirement do amaze° your friends. 5

KING
I will do so. My Lord of Westmoreland, lead him to his tent.

WESTMORELAND
Come, my lord, I'll lead you to your tent.

PRINCE
Lead me, my lord? I do not need your help;
And God forbid a shallow scratch should drive
The Prince of Wales from such a field as this, 10
Where stained nobility lies trodden on,
And rebels' arms triumph in massacres!

JOHN
We breathe° too long. Come, cousin Westmoreland,
Our duty this way lies. For God's sake, come.

[Exeunt JOHN of Lancaster and WESTMORELAND.]

46 Turk Gregory in Shakespeare's time, "Turk" was a by-word for any ruthless man; "Gregory" may refer to the irascible Pope Gregory VII, or to Elizabeth's enemy, Pope Gregory XIII; Pope and Turk were regarded as the two great enemies of Protestant Christendom 47 paid killed 55 hot he has fired it so often he has had to put it away to cool 58 pierce pronounced "perse" 60 carbonado meat slashed open for broiling

V.iv.s.d. Excursions sorties 4 make up move forward 5 amaze dismay 13 breathe pause

PRINCE

By God, thou hast deceived me, Lancaster! 15
I did not think thee lord of such a spirit.
Before, I loved thee as a brother, John,
But now I do respect thee as my soul.

KING

I saw him hold Lord Percy at the point
With lustier maintenance than I did look for 20
Of such an ungrown warrior.

PRINCE

O, this boy lends mettle to us all! Exit.
[Enter DOUGLAS.]

DOUGLAS

Another king? They grow like Hydra's° heads.
I am the Douglas, fatal to all those
That wear those colors on them. What art thou 25
That counterfeit'st the person of a king?

KING

The king himself, who, Douglas, grieves at heart
So many of his shadows thou hast met,
And not the very king. I have two boys
Seek Percy and thyself about the field; 30
But, seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily,
I will assay thee, and defend thyself.

DOUGLAS

I fear thou art another counterfeit;
And yet, in faith, thou bearest thee like a king.
But mine I am sure thou art, who'er thou be, 35
And thus I win thee.

They fight, the KING being in danger. Enter PRINCE of Wales.

PRINCE

Hold up thy head, vile Scot, or thou art like Never to hold it up again. The spirits
Of valiant Shirley, Stafford, Blunt° are in my arms.
It is the Prince of Wales that threatens thee, 40
Who never promiseth but he means to pay.

They fight. DOUGLAS flieth.

Cheerly, my lord. How fares your grace?
Sir Nicholas Gawsey hath for succor sent,
And so hath Clifton. I'll to Clifton straight.

KING

Stay and breathe awhile. 45
Thou hast redeemed thy lost opinion,°
And showed thou mak'st some tender° of my life,
In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me.

PRINCE

O God, they did me too much injury
That ever said I heark'ned for your death. 50
If it were so, I might have let alone
The insulting hand of Douglas over you,
Which would have been as speedy in your end
As all the poisonous potions in the world,
And saved the treacherous labor of your son. 55

KING

Make up to Clifton; I'll to Sir Nicholas Gawsey.
Exit.

Enter HOTSPUR.

23 Hydra a many-headed monster which grew two heads for each one destroyed 39 Shirley, Stafford, Blunt those whom Douglas has killed wearing the king's coats 46 opinion reputation 47 tender value

HOTSPUR

If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.

PRINCE

Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name.

HOTSPUR

My name is Harry Percy.

PRINCE

Why, then I see a very valiant rebel of the name. 60

I am the Prince of Wales, and think not, Percy,

To share with me in glory any more.

Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere,^o

Nor can one England brook^o a double reign

Of Harry Percy and the Prince of Wales. 65

HOTSPUR

Nor shall it, Harry, for the hour is come

To end the one of us; and would to God

Thy name in arms were now as great as mine!

PRINCE

I'll make it greater ere I part from thee,

And all the budding honors on thy crest 70

I'll crop to make a garland for my head.

HOTSPUR

I can no longer brook thy vanities.

They fight.

Enter FALSTAFF.

FALSTAFF Well said, Hal! To it, Hal! Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you.

Enter DOUGLAS. He fighteth with FALSTAFF, [who] falls down as if he were dead. [Exit DOUGLAS.] The PRINCE killeth PERCY.

HOTSPUR

O Harry, thou hast robbed me of my youth! 75

I better brook the loss of brittle life

Than those proud titles thou hast won of me.

They wound my thoughts worse than thy sword my flesh.

But thoughts, the slaves of life, and life, time's fool,^o

And time, that takes survey of all the world, 80

Must have a stop. O, I could prophesy,

But that the earthy and cold hand of death

Lies on my tongue. No, Percy, thou art dust,

And food for— [Dies.]

PRINCE

For worms, brave Percy. Fare thee well, great heart. 85

Ill-weaved ambition, how much art thou shrunk!

When that this body did contain a spirit,

A kingdom for it was too small a bound;

But now two paces of the vilest earth

Is room enough. This earth that bears thee dead 90

Bears not alive so stout^o a gentleman.

If thou wert sensible of courtesy,

I should not make so dear^o a show of zeal.

But let my favors^o hide thy mangled face;

And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself 95

For doing these fair rites of tenderness.

Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven.

Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave,
But not rememb'ed in thy epitaph.

He spieth FALSTAFF on the ground.

What, old acquaintance? Could not all this flesh 100

Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell!

I could have better spared a better man.

O, I should have a heavy miss^o of thee

If I were much in love with vanity.^o

Death hath not struck so fat a deer^o today, 105

Though many dearer,^o in this bloody fray.

Emboweled^o will I see thee by-and-by;

Till then in blood by noble Percy lie. Exit.

FALSTAFF riseth up.

FALSTAFF Emboweled? If thou embowel me today, I'll give you leave to powder^o me and eat me too 110 tomorrow. 'Sblood, 'twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant^o Scot had paid me scot and lot^o too. Counterfeit? I lie; I am no counterfeit. To die is to be a counterfeit, for he is but the counterfeit of a man who hath not the life of a man; but to counterfeit dying 115 when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better part of valor is discretion,^o in the which better part I have saved my life. Zounds, I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead. How if he 120 should counterfeit too, and rise? By my faith, I am afraid he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure; yea, and I'll swear I killed him. Why may not he rise as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and nobody sees me. Therefore, sirrah 125 [stabs him], with a new wound in your thigh, come you along with me.

He takes up HOTSPUR on his back. Enter PRINCE [and] JOHN of Lancaster.

PRINCE

Come, brother John; full bravely hast thou fleshed

Thy maiden sword.

JOHN

But, soft! whom have we here?

Did you not tell me this fat man was dead? 130

PRINCE

I did; I saw him dead,

Breathless and bleeding on the ground. Art thou alive,

Or is it fantasy that plays upon our eyesight?

I prithee speak. We will not trust our eyes

Without our ears. 'Thou art not what thou seem'st. 135

FALSTAFF No, that's certain, I am not a double man;^o but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack.^o There is Percy. If your father will do me any honor, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you. 140

PRINCE Why, Percy I killed myself, and saw thee dead!

103 heavy miss "heavy" loss (in two senses) 104 vanity frivolity (and lightness) 105 deer with pun on dear 106 dearer nobler, more valuable 107 Emboweled disemboweled (for embalming) 110 powder salt 112 termagant bloodthirsty; paid . . . lot killed me (literally, "paid me in full"; "scot" and "lot" were parish taxes) 117-18 The . . . discretion Falstaff willfully misinterprets the maxim that valor is the better for being accompanied by discretion 136 double man (1) wraith (2) twofold man 137 Jack rascal

63 sphere orbit 64 brook put up with 79 slaves . . . fool i.e., because thoughts are dependent on life and because life is subservient to time 91 stout valiant 93 dear heartfelt 94 favors probably Hal's ostrich plumes, his emblem as Prince of Wales

FALSTAFF Didst thou? Lord, Lord, how this world is given to lying. I grant you I was down, and out of breath, and so was he; but we rose both at an instant and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believed, so; if not, let them that should reward valor bear the sin upon their own heads. I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound in the thigh. If the man were alive and would deny it, 150 zounds! I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

JOHN
This is the strangest tale that ever I heard.

PRINCE
This is the strangest fellow, brother John.
Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back.
For my part, if a lie may do thee grace, 155
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

A retreat is sounded.

The trumpet sounds retreat; the day is ours.
Come, brother, let us to the highest of the field,
To see what friends are living, who are dead.

Exeunt [PRINCE Henry and Prince JOHN].

FALSTAFF I'll follow,° as they say, for reward. He that 160 rewards me, God reward him. If I do grow great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge,° and leave sack, and live cleanly, as a nobleman should do.

Exit [bearing off the body].

[Scene V. Shrewsbury. The battlefield.]

The trumpets sound. Enter the KING, PRINCE of Wales, Lord JOHN of Lancaster, Earl of WESTMORELAND, with WORCESTER and VERNON prisoners.

KING
Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke.
Ill-spirited Worcester, did not we send grace,
Pardon, and terms of love to all of you?
And wouldst thou turn our offers contrary?
Misuse the tenor of thy kinsman's trust? 5
Three knights upon our party slain today,
A noble earl, and many a creature else
Had been alive this hour,

160 follow i.e., as hounds do when the quarry is killed, to receive their reward 162 purge repent

If like a Christian thou hadst truly borne Betwixt our armies true intelligence.° 10

WORCESTER

What I have done my safety urged me to;
And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Since not to be avoided it falls on me.

KING

Bear Worcester to the death, and Vernon too;
Other offenders we will pause upon. 15

[Exeunt WORCESTER and VERNON, guarded.]

How goes the field?

PRINCE

The noble Scot, Lord Douglas, when he saw
The fortune of the day quite turned from him,
The noble Percy slain, and all his men
Upon the foot of fear, fled with the rest; 20
And falling from a hill, he was so bruised
That the pursuers took him. At my tent
The Douglas is, and I beseech your grace
I may dispose of him.

KING

With all my heart.

PRINCE

Then, brother John of Lancaster, to you 25
This honorable bounty shall belong.
Go to the Douglas and deliver him
Up to his pleasure, ransomless and free.
His valors shown upon our crests today
Have taught us how to cherish such high deeds, 30
Even in the bosom of our adversaries.

JOHN

I thank your grace for this high courtesy,
Which I shall give away immediately.

KING

Then this remains, that we divide our power.
You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland, 35
Towards York shall bend you with your dearest speed
To meet Northumberland and the prelate Scroop,
Who, as we hear, are busily in arms.
Myself and you, son Harry, will towards Wales
To fight with Glendower and the Earl of March. 40
Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,
Meeting the check of such another day;
And since this business° so fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won. Exeunt.

V.v.10 intelligence information 43 business (trisyllabic)

THE SECOND PART OF HENRY THE FOURTH

EDITED BY NORMAN N. HOLLAND, JR.

Introduction

Betrayal, someone has said, is the quintessential Shakespearean theme. Certainly, it would seem to be in Henry IV, Part Two, for this play hinges on two betrayals. Prince John promises the rebels in a battlefield parley their "griefs shall be with speed redressed. Upon my soul, they shall." Then, once the rebels' troops are discharged, he tells them he will indeed redress their grievances "with a most Christian care"—but executes them as rebels. "God, and not we, hath safely fought today." (Some outraged critics have called the line blasphemous.) Then, at the end of the play, after the death of Henry IV, Falstaff expects to be "one of the greatest men in this realm" in something other than size. He cheers his newly crowned Hal only to be answered by one of the most magnificent and brutal lines in all literature: "I know thee not, old man. Fall to thy prayers." Dismissed, banished, he dies in Henry V because "The king has killed his heart."

The ethical rightness or wrongness of these actions¹ constitutes one of the two bones of contention this play has cast among critics. The other is the relation of this play to Henry IV, Part One: are Parts One and Two² separate plays or one long ten-act play? The answers to both (like all questions we ask of Shakespeare) must come from a recognition of the significant wholeness of the work of art he has created, for these two seeming betrayals, morally ambiguous as they may appear, make only two among a host of other such incidents in the play.

For example, in an episode that Shakespeare carefully retained from his sources, the old king, believing a prophecy he is to die "in Jerusalem," expects to die on a crusade. Instead, he finds himself dying, not in the city Jerusalem but in a room in Westminster called "Jerusalem." Once Henry IV is dead, the Lord Chief Justice (who had clapped Hal in prison) thinks himself a man doomed, but instead, the new king creates him Chief Justice anew, "a father to my youth," and puts him in charge of Falstaff. Bringing these and many other such reversals to a fullness and completion is, of course, the reformation of Hal himself from the madcap prince to what he will be in Henry V, "the mirror of all Christian kings." "Let the end try the man," he had warned earlier; and at the end he acts

¹ Mr. Stanley McKenzie, in an unpublished paper, very skillfully analyzes the ethical problem of the two "betrayals" in terms of the structure and imagery of the play. I am indebted to him for a number of the ideas which follow.

² "Part Two" in the title of an Elizabethan history play simply means that the play deals with events later in the reign of the king named in the title than those the Part One play deals with. It does not imply that the play in question is an integral part of a series, like a chapter in a novel.

To mock the expectation of the world,
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out
Rotten opinion, who hath writ me down
After my seeming. (V.ii.126-29)

"Expectation mocked" is the key, a theme that pervades and informs the comic scenes as well as the serious ones. To the Lord Chief Justice's amused outrage, Falstaff, who illustrates "all the characters of age," has the gall to set down his name "in the scroll of youth" and—even—call the Justice old. He manages to elude the legal powers of the Lord Chief Justice (roughly equivalent to the Chief Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court), and then he has the effrontery to try to borrow a thousand pounds from him. Mistress Quickly believes Falstaff will marry her (perhaps the silliest of all expectations in a play of silly expectations), and thus Falstaff manages to turn her lawsuit into a cozy dinner party. Old Justice Shallow, in one of the most exquisite moments of the play, turns away from that death that hovers over all the characters to a startling image of vitality and (in Elizabethan English) virility:

SHALLOW Jesu, Jesu, the mad days that I have spent!
And to see how many of my old acquaintance are dead!
SILENCE We shall all follow, cousin.
SHALLOW Certain, 'tis certain, very sure, very sure.
Death, as the psalmist saith, is certain to all, all shall die. How [much for] a good yoke of bullocks at Stamford Fair? (III.ii.34-40)

Shallow, the classic portrait of the old grad, makes much of "the wildness of his youth," but we find that his talk is all an old man's lying. Young Shallow was thin, puny, "ever in the rearward of the fashion," and yet, notes

Falstaff ruefully, "Now has he lands and beeves." Everywhere expectation is overturned. Falstaff picks (from Shallow's point of view) precisely the wrong men for his recruits. Yet even so, Francis Feeble of valorous name turns out to have that stoical acceptance of destiny that constitutes (as we shall see) the essential ethic the play puts forward.

The same sense of expectation mocked permeates the language and imagery of the play. What should give hope or security does not. Armor "worn in heat of day . . . scald'st with safety," while, conversely, "In poison there is physic." Hopes, like ships, "touch ground and dash themselves to pieces," while even houses are "giddy and unsure." The very buds, which to prove fruit,

Hope gives not so much warrant as despair
That frosts will bite them. (I.iii.39-41)

Fathers who care for their sons, like bees that gather honey, "are murdered for [their] pains." Sleep, in the king's lovely apostrophe, comes to the least likely, the shipboy suffering a storm in the crows' nest:

Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose
To the wet sea-season in an hour so rude,
And in the calmest and most stillest night,
With all appliances and means to boot,
Deny it to a king? Then happy low, lie down!
Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown. (III.i.26-31)

The least fortunate are most fortunate—one cannot predict, for premonitions themselves run by opposites:

Against ill chances men are ever merry,
But heaviness foreruns the good event. (IV.ii.81-82)

Even the mere dramaturgic context of 2 Henry IV mocks expectation. The madcap prince of Part Two reverses the reformation we have already seen in Part One. The odd Epilogue treats the plays as the unsuccessful payment of a debt—an expectation—and goes on to contract a further debt: "Our humble author will continue the story, with Sir John in it." But Falstaff does not appear in Henry V, and further, he is not to be confused with the character you expected him to be; "Oldcastle died martyr, and this is not the man" (see p. 723n.).

Even odder than the Epilogue is the Induction with Rumor as the presenter. Shakespeare, as always, sets up the internal logic of his work from the very opening lines: Rumor, whatever else he may be, is the creator and defeater of expectations par excellence, bringer of "smooth comforts false, worse than true wrongs." Here, he announces falsely a rebel victory at Shrewsbury and the death of Prince Hal under the sword of Northumberland's son Hotspur. Then, almost the entire first scene of the play deals with expectations created and defeated (even down to the opening lines in which a porter says that Northumberland will be found in the orchard, but then the Earl himself unexpectedly appears). And, of course, no one expected the madcap prince to overcome "the never-daunted Percy." Learning of his son's death, Northumberland says, these news,

Having been well, that would have made me sick,
Being sick, have in some measure made me well.

(I.i.137-39)

Much later in the play, another old man, King Henry IV, will echo his paradox: "Wherefore should these good news make me sick?" In either case, news—words—seem to have an effect opposite to what one would expect.

The first scene shifts to the second, from one diseased old man to another:

FALSTAFF Sirrah . . . what says the doctor to my water [urine]?

PAGE He said, sir, the water itself was a good healthy water; but, for the party that [owned] it, he might have [more] diseases than he knew for. (I.ii.1-5)

The Page's response, itself a mockery of what we might expect from a doctor, continues from the previous scene the tension between words and body.

As we might expect from Falstaff's "throng of words" or, indeed, the figure of Rumor, "painted full of tongues," words—"prophecies," "seeming," "rotten opinion," "news"—all play a key role in 2 Henry IV in creating expectations that deeds and persons then defeat in fact, as chances, mocks,

And changes fill the cup of alteration
With divers liquors. (III.i.51-53)

Most notably, Prince John tricks the rebels with his "princely word": "I give it you, and will maintain my word"—though the letter, not the spirit. But there are others whose words create false expectations: Mistress Quickly's malapropisms and Pistol's ranting in garbled quotations make us expect to hear one thing; then, when we hear their blunder, our expectation is mocked. And the rebels, too, create false hopes with words:

We fortify in paper and in figures,
Using the names of men instead of men,
Like one that draws the model of an house
Beyond his power to build it. (I.iii.56-59)

As Lord Bardolph's words hint, this play uses (unusually often for Shakespeare) names that tag their bearers in a manner almost Dickensian: Pistol, Shallow, Shadow, and Moldy; Doll Tearsheet and Jane Nightwork of amorous name; the sheriff's men, Fang and Snare; Mistress Quickly, whose name, in Elizabethan pronunciation, conceals a ribald pun; Goodman Puff, fat as Falstaff, and hungry Francis Pickbone; Travers, who, in the opening scene, denies ("traverses") Lord Bardolph's report. Yet, as one would expect in a play of expectations mocked, the actual, physical characters often belie their tags; Sampson Stockfish is a fruiterer, Bullcalf a coward, and Feeble brave.

We would be wrong, though, to conclude that words always build up false expectations, that 2 Henry IV envisions no larger plan that one can trust—such a skepticism would be utterly foreign to Shakespeare and the Elizabethans' sense of cosmic order. There is, as the king says, a plan, though a bitter one, "the book of fate" that lists the defeats of our expectations:

O, if this were seen,
The happiest youth, viewing his progress through,
What perils past, what crosses to ensue,
Would shut the book, and sit him down and die.
(III.i.53-56)

And Warwick goes on to make an important statement of the Elizabethans' anecdotal or symbolistic view of history:

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased,
The which observed, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life.
(III.i.80-84)

There is, then, a larger order, and some of the characters find their place in it. Others, notably Falstaff and the rebels who are "betrayed," do not. What is the essential difference between those who find a place and those who are "betrayed"?

As so often in Shakespeare, a peripheral episode tells us, a scene superfluous to the main plot but one which Shakespeare spent some pains to improve from his sources. Hal, thinking his father dead, takes his crown into another room. His father revives and accuses him of wishing parricide. It is, of course, one more episode of expectations mocked, but the king's words tell us more: he accuses Hal of being "hasty," unable to "stay," of wishing his father's death: "What! Canst thou not forbear me half an hour?" Slowly, Hal answers. He did not "affect," that is, crave, desire, the crown. Rather, he took it as an enemy: it "hath fed upon the body of my father." Its gold is no medicine, but rather "hast eat thy bearer up." The king is pleased with his son's "pleading so wisely." Wherein does the wisdom lie?

The king explains in his next speech, "the very latest counsel that ever I shall breathe," presumably, therefore, the most important. He recalls the way he took the crown from Richard in Richard II,

How troublesome it sat upon my head.
To thee it shall descend with better quiet. (IV.v.186-87)

It seemed in me
But as an honor snatched with boisterous hand.
(IV.v.190-91)

And now my death
Changes the mood, for what in me was purchased
Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort,
So thou the garland wear'st successively. (IV.v.198-201)

The word "purchased" is important: a legal term, it refers to the acquiring of land other than by inherited succession ("successively"). The word reflects, as the whole play does, the feudal and Renaissance prejudice against those who violate the natural order of things by taking for themselves against the ordained patterns of birth and inheritance. Henry sinned when he "snatched" the crown, but Hal will wear it free of such sin, for he inherits it. The king's accusations tell us Hal's wrong in taking the crown from his sleeping father lay in his inability to "forbear," to "stay," in his "wish," his being "hasty."

Thou hast stol'n that which after some few hours
Were thine without offense. (IV.v.101-02)

Hal's answer is wise in that he says he did not crave the crown, but rather recognized that the crown is an enemy that feeds on its bearer, eats its bearer up.

Appetite is both the sin and the danger, that appetite which, as the prince had jokingly confessed earlier, "was not princely got." To be truly a prince, one must not crave and try to take, but rather forbear, wait, trust, put oneself in that larger order: God's, nature's, his father's. Appetite governs the common man, not the prince, and, indeed, it was the common people's appetite that let Henry take the crown from Richard, though, says the archbishop,

The commonwealth is sick of their own choice;
Their overgreedy love hath surfeited. (I.iii.87-88)

Thou, beastly feeder, art so full of [Henry]
That thou provok'st thyself to cast him up.
So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge
Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard;
And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vomit up,
And howl'st to find it. What trust is in these times?
(I.iii.95-100)

The wise monarch provides for his people's appetites. Henry's last counsel—for his expectation was again foiled, his statement of Hal's rightful title was not his "latest counsel"—Henry's last advice is to "busy giddy minds with foreign quarrels," to turn appetite elsewhere, for Henry knows all too well the rebel and vain spirit is one that seeks to take for itself rather than accept the natural order of monarchy.

That larger order is not wholly beneficent, for it includes, as Shallow reminds us, death. "Death, as the psalmist saith, is certain to all, all shall die," all: Northumberland, the king, Shallow, Silence, Falstaff, the Lord Chief Justice—all the old men in this play of old men are dying. Some try to put it aside, like Falstaff: "Peace, good Doll! Do not speak like a death's head. Do not bid me remember my end." But death cannot be put aside. In Sir Thomas Browne's beautiful sentence, "This world is not an inn but an hospital," not a place to feed but a place to die in. One may consult the doctor as Falstaff does; or, as the archbishop's rebellion tries to do, diet rank minds sick of happiness

And purge th' obstructions which begin to stop
Our very veins of life. (IV.i.64-66)

But purges and potions, be they the medicinale gold that the crown so distinctly is not or the sherris-sack whose virtues Falstaff so eloquently proclaims, are of no real use, for death is certain. Though it may be unexpected, in a chamber named Jerusalem instead of the city, death itself is certain.

The play's images of medicines represent one kind of defense against the acceptance of a larger, cosmic order that includes disease and death; words represent another. Thus, the rebels project and plan, emitting words, "publish[ing] the occasion of our arms." They "fortify with the names of men." The archbishop, so "deep within the books of God," turns himself into "an iron man talking." In general, the rebels emit words and then take them for things, as their predecessor Hotspur did,

who lined himself with hope
Eating the air and promise of supply. (I.iii.27-28)

They forget their physical selves and ask only for their "articles," "this schedule," their "conditions" in a "true substantial form." And verbal form is all John gives them.

Falstaff, too, emits a "throng of words" that wrench the "true cause the false way." Contrasted with them, taking language in,

The prince but studies his companions
Like a strange tongue, wherein, to gain the language,
'Tis needful that the most immodest word
Be looked upon and learned, (IV.iv.68-71)

but once learned, he will no longer speak, emit, such words, but rather take them "as a pattern or a measure" with which to judge the lives of others.

In other words, the prince will not thrust up a merely verbal reality against the larger order. Rather, he will make himself and his language a part of that larger order, as Prince John does: "God, and not we, hath safely fought today." Pathetically, the rebels themselves try to become part of some larger order: "We are time's subjects."

We see which way the stream of time doth run,
And are enforced from our most quiet there
By the rough torrent of occasion. (IV.i.70-72)

But "occasion" is a transitory thing, a creature of time, and time itself is a great betrayer. The king's party fits into a firmer order: "Construe the times to their necessities." When Warwick states the Elizabethan view of history, he speaks of it as a "necessary form." When King Henry disclaims any intent on his part of seizing Richard's crown, he says, necessity so bowed the state

That I and greatness were compelled to kiss. (III.i.73-74)

And he accepts the rebel threat—

Are these things then necessities?
Then let us meet them like necessities. (III.i.92-93)

The rebels, however, are responding, not to "necessities," but their "most just and right desires," the "demands" they seek to "enjoy." Appetite is their failure, and John's strategy simply traps them as animals are baited and trapped by their appetites. They drink as token of their wishes granted, but the drink also symbolizes their failure and defeat through appetite. (Indeed, the archbishop after drinking finds himself "passing light in spirit.")

The real drinker, though, the very essence of appetite, is, of course, Falstaff. "He hath eaten me out of house and home," Mistress Quickly complains. "The old boar" (earlier he had been a sow) doth "feed in the old frank," monetarily, emotionally, and gastrically. At Shallow's, "We shall do nothing but eat, and make good cheer."

Falstaff feeds on Shallow, too, taking a thousand pounds from him, promising to turn him into verbal jokes just as he himself ("the cause that wit is in other men") turns himself to words. Hal's succession provokes him into a riot of appetite: "Let us take any man's horses; the laws of England are at my commandment."

Thus, it is supremely appropriate that Hal reject him ("the feeder of my riots") in terms of food, as, earlier, he had taken leave of a Falstaff richly symbolized as a withered apple. In the coronation scene, Falstaff calls out, "My King! My Jove!" (thus identifying himself with Saturn, the Titan who devoured his own children). Hal replies:

I know thee not, old man. Fall to thy prayers.
How ill white hairs becomes a fool and jester!
I have long dreamt of such a kind of man,
So surfeit-swelled, so old, and so profane,
But, being awaked, I do despise my dream.
Make less thy body hence, and more thy grace.
Leave gormandizing. Know the grave doth gape
For thee thrice wider than for other men.
Reply not to me with a fool-born jest. (V.v.47-55)

Not only does Hal put aside appetite—he fends off Falstaff's wordmongering (even as he himself lapses into two jokes—though he immediately counters, "Presume not that I am the thing I was"). Saddest of all, most brutal but most necessary, he reminds Falstaff of his role as an old man and of the grave's mouth that gapes so widely for him.

The mouth, food and medicine going into it, words coming out, these images dominating a play of appetites and expectations mocked—Shakespeare here harks back to a truth of infancy, to a time when life was a life of the mouth. Psychologists such as Erik Erikson have been stressing in recent years the crucial importance of that time when we must discover our own identities; when we learn, taught by our own appetites, that we must await, trust, expect another to feed us. It is this ability to trust in another that enables the infant to experience that other as an existence separate from his own desires, to experience, therefore, his own separateness, his identity. The paradox continues into later life: it is the ability to give up one's own desires, to trust, even to merge and identify with the "necessity" represented by others, even, in a sense, to tolerate being engulfed by or devoured by it (as King Henry's crown, emblem of the larger order, has eaten its bearer up), that enables us to reemerge, as we did in earliest infancy, into a new sense of identity, a new role. In a paradox almost biblical, we must lose ourselves to find ourselves.

So with Falstaff: to grow into the new role he should assume now that Hal is king, he must curb his appetites ("Leave gormandizing") and learn to depend on another (the "competence of life" his new king allows him). He must live with the certainty that the grave gapes for him, that he will himself be devoured. As for the rebels, they do not let themselves be merged into the larger necessity represented by the monarch; instead, they try to create roles for themselves out of their own words (or mouths). Necessarily, they fail.

Prince Hal, too, must give up an identity based on his own appetites, that of the madcap prince, and accept an identity set out for him, that of the hero-king. As Ernst

Kris points out in a psychoanalytic study of this play, Hal, until his father's death, refuses to fall back into the role his father has planned for him. Rather, he puts aside his father, stained and imperfect as a curber of appetites because he himself "snatched" the crown "with boisterous hand," and he takes an identity from Falstaff, a father-substitute. Once his real father is dead, however, he can put aside Falstaff (ultimately rendering him as dead as his true father) and be taken into the role his father wished for him. Indeed, he can even accept a proper father-substitute in the person of the Lord Chief Justice.

Food is our earliest experience of trust; justice is a later one. Again, we must learn to wait rather than try to grab—we must trust in the large necessity of law. 2 Henry IV gives us a pair of justices: a true one in the Lord Chief Justice, a false one in Shallow, who succumbs to his servant's entreaty to "bear out a knave against an honest man." Shallow lets himself merge into a larger order, but one of his servants' making, so that, as Falstaff points out, they become like foolish justices, he a justicelike servingman. The Lord Chief Justice, however, speaks to Hal with "the person of your father"; "the image of his power lay then in me." He justifies his earlier action of imprisoning the prince by reminding the new young king that he, now, has a new identity—"As you are a king, speak in your state." And Hal responds by assuming his kingly role, merging himself in his father's identity so that "I live to speak my father's words." To the Lord Chief Justice,

You shall be as a father to my youth.
My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear.
And I will stoop and humble my intents
To your well-practiced wise directions. (V.ii.118-21)

My father is gone wild into his grave,
For in his tomb lie my [appetites],
And with his spirits sadly I survive,
To mock the expectation of the world. (V.ii.123-26)

Thus, Hal merges into his father and contrasts with the archbishop, who rebelled though he was "the imagined voice of God himself"; he did misuse the reverence of [his] place,

Employ the countenance and grace of heaven,
As a false favorite doth his prince's name,
In deeds dishonorable. (IV.ii.23-26)

The right people of the play merge into a larger order; the wrong people resist or misuse that larger order. Shallow's very name tells us something about their failure: as Prince John says to the rebels,

You are too shallow, Hastings, much too shallow,
To sound the bottom of the after-times. (IV.ii.50-51)

The image is of a river, and the archbishop had earlier compared himself and the other rebels to a river in flood, saying that, if their demands are granted, "We come within our awful banks again." Henry IV, too, is linked to a flooding river: in a detail Shakespeare retained from his sources, Henry (who was himself a rebel) dies as the Thames thrice floods without ebb. As for Hal,

The tide of blood in me
Hath proudly flowed in vanity till now.
Now doth it turn and ebb back to the sea,
Where it shall mingle with the state of floods
And flow henceforth in formal majesty. (V.ii.129-33)

He has put aside flooding and merged himself into the identity ordained for him by that larger order, vast as the sea. The play can end now, as it began, with a rumor. But now a true rumor, for a bird sings the music of true expectation, the king's will merged into the nation's destiny.

In short, the theme of betrayal permeates and informs the language, incidents, and characters of 2 Henry IV, but it is betrayal in a special sense: "expectations mocked." That is, the play begins with a sense of hunger or appetite:

Open your ears, for which of you will stop
The vent of hearing when loud Rumor speaks? (Ind.1-2)

Then, against selfish or foolish appetite, the play poises a larger, parental plan of justice or monarchy or necessity that threatens to swallow up the characters by danger, disease, or death. And yet this larger necessity offers the paradoxical and unexpected possibility of a new identity, a kind of rebirth into a new self for those who can merge themselves into it. True princeliness calls for this ability to trust in the larger order, to achieve identity by the very act of curbing the self and its appetites and being merged into the greater plan. True rebellion means—in its most primitive sense—feeding oneself, resisting trust in that larger order by substituting one's own medicines, words, appetite, food, plans: "eating the air." And thus, the play itself answers the critics who have been troubled by Prince John's trick on the political rebels and Prince Hal's rejection of the appetitive rebel, Falstaff. These two "betrayals" become necessary and inevitable if we take the play on its own emotional and intellectual terms: the original failure of trust was the rebels' own inability to merge (without wordy conditions) into the larger order of nature.

Again, if we take the play on its own terms, we can see the answer to the second critical issue: the relation of 2 Henry IV to 1 Henry IV. The external evidence from Elizabethan stage-practice that the two plays must have been separate and self-sufficient entities is clear enough. The internal evidence is clear, too. 1 and 2 Henry IV are quite different in their essential dramatic ideas, but they make a matched pair.

We can see the difference in the Falstaffs of the two parts. Twinned in avoirdupois, soldiering, and appetites, they nevertheless differ in some important ways. In both parts, Falstaff is a creature who defeats expectation, not only in the action, but also in our response (as Freud notes). From the point of view of the literary historian, as Bernard Spivack has shown, this mocking of our expectations places him in the tradition of the deceptive Vice of the morality plays or the tricky Ambidexter of a Cambises. But in 1 Henry IV, Falstaff seems more triumphant: the Chaplinesque clown who, by his ability to play many parts, triumphs even over death, as (in the final battle) he feigns a death-and-rebirth. In 2 Henry IV, Falstaff resists, but succumbs to, the preordained role pointed out by Philip Williams and C. L. Barber. He becomes the slain god, the Lord of Misrule who must be banished to restore health to the land. Hal is absorbed into the role of the hero-king, while Falstaff is engulfed by a mythic significance that demands his rejection and death.

Miss Caroline Spurgeon noted some years ago that the Falstaff of 1 Henry IV uses many images from books and the Bible, while the Falstaff of 2 Henry IV speaks in grotesque, rough, coarse similes drawn from body functions and appetites. We can add that Falstaff One uses a very distinctive figure of speech, the enthymeme: "If I travel but four foot by the squire further afoot, I shall break my wind." "If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hanged." "And 'twere not as good a deed as drink to turn true man and to leave these rogues, I am the veriest varlet that ever chewed with a tooth." (These all occur within ten lines in 1 Henry IV, suggesting the frequency of the figure.) Falstaff Two almost entirely lacks this figure of speech; instead, he has become something of a monologist. He takes in a character, then turns him into a satirical portrait: we see Falstaff Two do this with himself, his page, his tailor, Pistol, Prince Hal, Poins, Bardolph, Shallow, Prince John, and, of course, sherris-sack, in monologues quite different in style from his catechism of honor in 1 Henry IV (which tests a role). Falstaff Two may be responding to the same taste that led Jonson to put such incidental character sketches into Every Man Out of His Humor and Cynthia's Revels or that accounts for the popularity of the character-books of Hall, Overbury, and others in the early seventeenth century, but, in any case, he has shifted from acting out different roles (often taken from books and the Bible) to a more passive taking in of what he sees, then spewing it out in words (the image of vomit occurs several times in 2 Henry IV). Falstaff One's big comic scene is the play-within-the-play in the tavern, when he tries on the roles of King Henry and Prince Hal. Falstaff Two's big comic scene is the recruiting, when he looks at the prospective draftees and coins them into a mint of witty remarks. In short, he becomes the walking embodiment of everything the play rejects: appetite, wordmongering, resistance to one's proper role. He becomes, like Iago in the tragedies, or Autolycus and Caliban in the last plays, Shakespeare's homo repudiandus, the character who focuses in himself everything to be rejected. This, then, is the essential difference between the Falstaffs of 1 and 2 Henry IV: the earlier Falstaff actively tries on different roles; the later and more passive Falstaff finds himself forced into a pattern laid down for him by his context.

And so does Hal. In 1 Henry IV, he actively chooses the role of hero; in 2 Henry IV, he lapses into kingship. The rest of the characters show the same passivity. 1 Henry IV gave us an active, scrappy group of rebels; 2 Henry IV represents rebellion by talkers and bargainers. 1 Henry IV sharply opposed characters as good son—bad son; good father—bad father; hot spur and false staff; and Hal forged a role for himself between such extremes. 2 Henry IV makes only one such sharp pairing: the good justice, who merges into his master's voice, as against the bad justice, who merges into his servant's. Mostly, 2 Henry IV bunches fairly nondescript characters into the roles they must assume—and so the Folio text lists them, in bracketed groups as—"Opposites against King Henrie the Fourth," "Of the Kings Partie," "Country Soldiers," "Irregular Humorists," and the women. In the same way, 2 Henry IV abounds in references to parts of the body, parts of a house, parts of a kingdom—the later play constantly stresses a sense of role within a larger plan.

These different ways of dealing with role are what make 1 and 2 Henry IV quite separate but nevertheless a matched pair. In both, the problem is to bring Hal to the role laid down for him by his father, his king, his God. 1 Henry IV offers the active solution; 2 Henry IV, the passive. In the first play, Hal takes from the takers, robs Hotspur and Falstaff of the honors or money they had robbed from others. In the second, Hal is the taker taken: he learns to put down his cravings and appetites and be taken up into the larger plan. 1 Henry IV is the sunnier version—my pun is intentional—for it looks at the problem of Hal's achieving at-oneness with his father from the point of view of the son who actively battles the rebel within and without. 2 Henry IV sees the theme with the eyes of a dying father, in terms of passive expectation, trust, and acceptance of necessity. It is this atmosphere of passivity that keeps the magnificent fighter-Hal of 1 Henry IV out of the action—what action there is—in 2 Henry IV. Finally, in Henry V, these active and passive solutions fuse. Hal's active battling fulfills the role he must passively accept. He brings the drives and appetites of others and their roles as Scot, Irishman, Welshman, or French princess into the service of his kingly function:

Upon the king! Let us our lives, our souls,
Our debts, our careful wives,
Our children, and our sins, lay on the king!

(Henry V, IV.i.230–32)

The king must bear all—all but a few traitors and "irregular humorists" who insist on keeping separate. They must die.

Betrayal is the quintessential Shakespearean theme—provided we recognize the special tone that Shakespeare gives it. All his works deal with the taming of shrewishness: the masking over or mastery of hate by love. Betrayal, for Shakespeare, seems to mean a situation in which one can expect love, but in which love falls away and reveals an unsuspected or unmastered hate beneath. Iago is the obvious example, but we can look at all the tragedies as situations in which the love between a man and a woman, love either new or preexisting or expectable, fails to master hate. When love succeeds, the issue is comic, as in Measure for Measure and The Merchant of Venice, which temper hard justice with feminine mercy. All's well that ends well—that ends in love as Henry V's wars in France will.

So understood, 2 Henry IV, written near the end of 1597 or early in 1598, occupies a pivotal point in the Shakespearean canon. In the early comedies, romantic love overcomes feuds and hatreds, while in the early histories and tragedies, family or romantic love fails to control political and social aggressions. In the plays of 1598–1601, Shakespeare seems to play with the thought that passivity best counters aggression or romantic assertiveness. Claudio in Much Ado About Nothing lets his prince do his wooing for him. In Twelfth Night, the woman takes the role of wooer, as she does in As You Like It. 2 Henry IV also looks forward to the tragedies, the uncurbed and parricidal drives of Brutus and Cassius, and even more, to that character who, more than any other in Shakespeare, resists the role his father had set up for him, putting up instead his own smokescreen of words—Hamlet. In many ways, but notably in the special, paternal way love controls rebellion and aggression, 2 Henry IV seems closer to the tragedies and “problem plays” than to the earlier histories.

The passivity of 2 Henry IV may also explain why it has become less popular than the other histories. It was apparently as popular as 1 Henry IV in the eighteenth century, but, then, eighteenth-century audiences were still committed to a larger, hierarchical plan in society. The nineteenth and twentieth centuries prize precisely the acquisitive, assertive behavior that resists inherited patterns and plans, and this particular history play, which so sharply rejects such social individualism, has fallen in popularity. But 2 Henry IV can look for better days with newer approaches to Shakespeare. Nineteenth-century audiences concentrated on the events represented by the plays rather than on the plays as themselves events and, therefore, they wanted to see in the histories one long epic glorifying England’s history—to them, 2 Henry IV marked a sordid low. Today, however, we recognize that Shakespeare’s histories embody Elizabethan political views, not nineteenth-century Whiggery, and we are better at accepting Shakespeare’s plays on their own terms, as things-in-themselves. When we do so accept 2 Henry IV, we find it offers moments as fine as any in the Shakespearean canon: the brilliant and pathetic portrait of Shallow; the grotesquery of Pistol; the prince’s reconciliation with his father; the king’s apostrophe to sleep; the rejection of Falstaff. More important, when we accept the play itself as an event, our experience of the play becomes our own act of trust.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCES

As was his custom in the histories, Shakespeare developed Henry IV, Part Two from several sources. Chiefly, he used his favorite, Raphael Holinshed’s Chronicles of England, Scotland, and Ireland (probably the 1587 edition), and an old, anonymous play, The Famous Victories of Henry V (performed before 1588, but the earliest extant printing is of 1598). Almost certainly, he drew a few details from Samuel Daniel’s long narrative poem, The First Four Books of the Civil Wars between the Two Houses of Lancaster and York (1595). He may also have looked at Edward Hall’s earlier chronicle, more moralistic than Holinshed’s, The Union of the Two Noble and Illustre Famelies of Lancastre and Yorke (1548) or John Stow’s The Chronicles of England (1580). The story of the prince’s giving the Lord Chief Justice a box on the ear and being sent to prison for it was first printed in Sir Thomas Elyot’s Boke Named the Governour (1531), though the story was widely retold and much stressed in the Famous Victories.

Shakespeare took from the Famous Victories the broad outlines of the comic sections of 1 and 2 Henry IV and the battles of Henry V. The old play was strong on Hal’s roistering and his swaggering companions, and, though it has neither Pistol nor Mistress Quickly, it does offer a crude prototype of Falstaff in “Jockey” or “Sir John Oldcastle” (see p. 723n.), though he is no more than a tadpole compared to Shakespeare’s full-blown conception. Holinshed, Daniel, and the other sources were used for the portrait of Henry IV as a king sick in body and soul and also for facts about the various rebellions and battles.

Shakespeare saved from his chronicle sources even small details if they fitted his theme, the failure to fit into a larger order because of a selfish appetite for food, drink, words, or power. Thus, he dutifully recounted from Holinshed the drinking between the armies, the archbishop’s preoccupation with his articles, and the floods that mark Henry IV’s death. At the same time, he altered large patterns of history where it suited his purpose. Of these changes, one stands out particularly. Shakespeare attributes the “betrayal” of the rebels to Prince John as well as to Westmoreland, though Holinshed had painted Westmoreland as the sole author of the strategy. Obviously, to understand the play fully, we must be able to account for such a marked and faintly discrediting change.

If you can obtain copies of the sources, you can see in still other details how Shakespeare’s style of thought differs from his contemporaries’, for example by examining three episodes from Shakespeare’s play in which he does follow his sources fairly closely. They are rich moments in the Shakespearean world: the scene of the king’s death with Hal’s precipitate taking of the crown; the coronation scene with the rejection of Falstaff; the forgiving of the Lord Chief Justice. Holinshed sees the first with the eye of a political reporter, interested in events and statecraft, while Daniel sees the king’s death in terms of the psychology of the noble classes, and the anonymous author of the Famous Victories pleased his broader public with the almost folkloric regeneration of a prodigal son. Reading 2 Henry IV, IV.v, V.v, and V.ii against these parts of the sources, one experiences not only Shakespeare’s fusing of popular and courtly traditions but also that special transmuting touch which was his alone.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

Henry IV, Part Two comes to us in two—or really, three—texts: the Folio of 1623 and the quarto of 1600; the quarto, however, occurs in two forms, the second (Qb) a modification of the first, evidently to admit a scene (III.i) omitted in Qa. The researches of a number of scholars³ have now converged to give us a history of these three texts.

Shakespeare wrote the play in late 1597 or early 1598, and from his manuscript (called “foul papers”) the Chamberlain’s Men had a transcript made to serve as the promptbook for performances. In 1600, possibly to forestall pirating, the company sold the publication rights to Much Ado About Nothing and 2 Henry IV, which were then entered in the Stationers’ Register on August 23. The foul papers were sent to the printshop of Valentine

³ Notably J. Dover Wilson, Matthias Shaaber, James McManaway, and John H. Smith.

Simmes for publication in quarto form. While there, perhaps while the copy was being cast off into page-length units for the compositors, the sheets containing Act III.i were misplaced (perhaps mixed into the sheets of Much Ado About Nothing, which were in the same handwriting). At this point, the deputy of the Bishop of London, whose task it was to censor the play, read the manuscript and ordered the deletion of eight short passages that might conceivably compare Elizabeth to Richard II or otherwise tend to rebellion. He did not, however, see and censor the longer and more important references to Richard in III.i, for the sheets containing that scene had been mislaid. In due course, Simmes and his men finished and issued the first quarto version of 2 Henry IV, Qa, and turned to work on Much Ado About Nothing. But then someone discovered a scene was missing, and Simmes had to put aside Much Ado About Nothing and, at some cost to himself, correct his error by resetting two leaves as four to accommodate the omitted scene. Simmes then issued this second version of the quarto, Qb.

Shakespeare's acting company, meanwhile, was using a transcript of the foul papers for their prompt copy and altering it to indicate their stage-practices: removing profanity, omitting mute characters, revising stage business, and so on. There is, of course, no way to tell whether Shakespeare agreed to these changes or whether they simply accumulated over the years. Further, at some point, the prompt copy itself may have been recopied—perhaps for a collector of plays, perhaps preparatory to printing the Folio; if so, the copyist was probably someone used to working with play texts, who systematically took out colloquial and vulgar expressions, improved the punctuation, and rewrote the stage directions. The Folio text of the play was then set up either directly from the altered prompt copy or indirectly through a transcript of it.

Thus, Qa (supplemented by III.i from Qb) comes closest to Shakespeare's original words and imagined staging—though often in the form of “bunched” stage directions (simply an initial listing at the beginning of a scene of the characters who will appear in it). The Folio suggests alterations in staging that Shakespeare may (or may not) have participated in, and it supplies eight passages the censor removed, but for the most part the Folio is authoritative only to correct obvious blunders or otherwise help in deciphering the oddly punctuated quarto text. Accordingly, I have modernized spelling and punctuation, regularized the speech-tags and the printing of prose and verse, and supplied the Globe act and scene divisions used in standard reference books, but otherwise I have followed the quartos closely, with a few exceptions.

The eight passages I have supplied from the Folio that do not appear in Qa or Qb are: I.i.166–79, You cast . . . to be? I.i.189–209, The gentle . . . follow him. I.iii.21–24, Till we . . . admitted. I.iii.36–55, Yes, if . . . Or else. I.iii.85–108, Let us . . . worst. II.iii.23–45, He had . . . grave. IV.i.55–79, And with . . . wrong. IV.i.101–37, O, my . . . the king. The Folio also includes many small expansions, some of a word or two, others of whole sentences or phrases. I have included the longer ones, but not those so short as likely to be mere compositors' expansions. Finally, the list of characters appearing at the end of the Folio text I have here reproduced at the beginning.

Occasionally I have adopted certain readings that do not appear in the quartos; these readings are listed in the following, with the accepted reading first in boldface, the rejected reading second in roman. Since, in almost all these cases, I have used the Folio reading instead of the quartos', unless otherwise indicated, the accepted reading is from the Folio (F), the rejected from quarto Qa.

Ind.36 Where When 40 s.d. Rumor [ed.] Rumours
I.i.96 say so [Q omits] 161 Lord Bardolph Vmfr[evile] 162 Morton Bard. [Mour. at line 163] 164 Lean on your Leaeue on you 166–79 [Q omits; F, with editorial brought from “bring” at line 178] 189–209 [Q omits]
I.ii.38 smooth smoothy 49 Where's Bardolph [after “through it” in Q] 50 into in 98 hath haue 99 an age [ed.] an ague [Q] age [F] 174–75 this age shapes them, are his age shapes the one 205–06 and Prince Harry [Q omits]
I.iii.s.d. [Q includes a mute character, Fauconbridge] 21–24 [Q omits] 26 case [ed.] cause [F, Q] 36–55 [Q omits] 71 Are And 79 He . . . Welsh French and Welch he leaues his/back vnarme, they 85–108 [Q omits] 109 Mowbray Bish.
II.i.14 and that [Q omits] 21 vice view 25 continuantly continually 43 Sir John [Q omits] 147 tapestries tapestrie 171 Basingstoke Billingsgate
II.ii.s.d. Poins, with [ed.] Poynes, sir Iohn Russel, with 15 viz. with 16 ones once 21 thy the 22 made a shift to [Q omits] 77 e'en now [ed.] enow [Q] euen now [F] 83 rabbit rabble 125–33 [Q and F give to Poins] 132 familiars family
II.iii.11 endeared endeere 23–45 [Q omits]
II.iv.12 s.d. [occurs after line 18, Q; F omits] 13 Will Dra[wer] [Q; F omits] 177 Die men Men 225 A Ah 272 master's master 285 so to
III.i.26 thy them [Qb] 81 nature of natures or [Qb]
III.ii.1 come on. [Qa] come on sir [Qb] 113 Falstaff. Prick him. Iohn prickes him. [as stage direction, Q] 146 his [Q omits] 291 would [ed.] will [F] wooll [Q] 303 Exeunt [ed.] exit 304–37 [Q assigns this speech to Shallow] 318 invisible [ed.] inuincible [Q, F] 320 ever ouer
IV.i.s.d. Mowbray, Hastings Mowbray, Bardolfe, Hastings 12 could [“would” in some copies of Q] 30 Then, my lord [omitted in some copies of Q] 36 appeared [ed.] appeare 45 figure [“figures” in some copies of Q] 55–79 [Q omits] After line 92, line omitted: And consecrate commotions bitter edge. [appears in some copies of Q] After line 93, line omitted: To brother borne an houshold cruelty [appears in some copies of Q, but it seems probable that Shakespeare had marked on his ms. that both these lines were to be deleted] 101–37 [Q omits] 114 force [ed.] forc'd [F] 178 And [ed.] At [Q, F] 183 not that. If [ed.] not, that if [F, Q]
IV.ii.1 [notice that there should be no scene division, the action being continuous, and the stage not having emptied. The stage direction at IV.i.224 follows Q] 8 Than That 19 imagined [ed.] imagine [Q, F] 24 Employ Imply 48 this his 67–71 [as in F; Q assigns 67–68 to bishop, 69–71 to prince] 117 and such acts as yours [Q omits] 122 these traitors this traitour
IV.iii.1 [as at IV.ii.1, there should be no scene division]
IV.iv.33 he's he is 52 Canst thou tell that? [Q omits] 77 others other 104 write wet; letters termes 120 and will break out [Q omits] 132 Softly, pray [Q omits]
IV.v.1 [as at IV.ii.1, there should be no scene division] 13 altered vtred [Q, some copies] 49 How fares your grace? [Q omits] 60–61 [one line in Q] 74 culling toling 75–79 [text follows F] Our thigh, packt with waxe our mouthes with hony,/We bring it to the hieue: and like the bees,/Are murdred for our paines, this bitter taste/Yeelds his engrossements to the ending father [Q] 79 s.d. at line 81 in Q 81 hath hands 107 Which Whom 160 worst of worse then 161 is [Q omits] 177 O my son [Q omits] 178 it [Q omits] 204 my [ed.] thy [Q, F] 220 My gracious liege [Q omits]
V.i.25 the other day [Q omits]; Hinckley Hunkly 50 but a very [Q omits]
V.ii.s.d. Enter the Earl of Warwick and the Lord Chief Justice. Enter Warwike, duke Humphrey, L. chiefe Iustice, Thomas Clarence, Prince, Iohn Westmerland 46 mix mixt
V.iii.5–6 a, a [Q omits] 35 wag wags 131 knighthood Knight
V.iv.s.d. Beadle Sincklo [Q, and so in the Q speech-tags for this scene; Sincklo was a small-part actor in Shakespeare's company]
V.v.25 Falstaff [Q omits] 30 all [Q omits]

THE SECOND PART OF HENRY THE FOURTH

The Actors' Names

RUMOR the Presenter

KING HENRY THE FOURTH

PRINCE HENRY afterwards crowned King Henry the Fifth

PRINCE JOHN OF

LANCASTER

HUMPHREY OF

GLOUCESTER

THOMAS OF CLARENCE

[EARL OF] NORTHUMBERLAND

[RICHARD SCROOP] the Archbishop of York

[LORD] MOWBRAY

[LORD] HASTINGS

LORD BARDOLPH

TRAVERS

MORTON

[SIR JOHN] COLEVILLE

[EARL OF] WARWICK

[EARL OF] WESTMORELAND

[EARL OF] SURREY

[SIR JOHN BLUNT]

GOWER

HARCOURT

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE

sons to Henry IV and brethren of Henry V

*opposites against
King
Henry IV*

of the king's party

POINS

[SIR JOHN] FALSTAFF

BARDOLPH

PISTOL

PETO [Falstaff's] PAGE

[ROBERT] SHALLOW

SILENCE

DAVY servant to Shallow

FANG AND SNARE two sergeants

[RALPH] MOLDY

[SIMON] SHADOW

[THOMAS] WART

[FRANCIS] FEEBLE

[PETER] BULLCALF

NORTHUMBERLAND'S WIFE

PERCY'S WIDOW [Lady Percy]

HOSTESS QUICKLY

DOLL TEARSHEET

[A Dancer as] EPILOGUE

DRAWERS BEADLES GROOMS

[PORTER MESSENGER SOLDIERS

LORDS ATTENDANTS

irregular humorists

both country justices

country soldiers

Scene: England]

[I N D U C T I O N]

Enter RUMOR, painted full of tongues.

[RUMOR]

Open your ears, for which of you will stop
The vent of hearing when loud Rumor speaks?
I, from the orient to the drooping west,
Making the wind my post horse, still unfold
The acts commencèd on this ball of earth.
Upon my tongues continual slanders ride,
The which in every language I pronounce,
Stuffing the ears of men with false reports.
I speak of peace while covert enmity
Under the smile of safety wounds the world.
And who but Rumor, who but only I,
Make fearful musters and prepared defense
Whiles the big year, swoln with some other grief,
Is thought with child by the stern tyrant, war,
And no such matter? Rumor is a pipe^o
Blown by surmises, jealousies, conjectures,
And of so easy and so plain a stop
That the blunt^o monster with uncounted heads,
The still-discordant wav'ring multitude,
Can play upon it. But what need I thus
My well-known body to anatomize
Among my household?° Why is Rumor here?
I run before King Harry's victory,
Who in a bloody field by Shrewsbury
Hath beaten down young Hotspur^o and his troops,
Quenching the flame of bold rebellion
Even with the rebels' blood. But what mean I
To speak so true at first? My office is
To noise abroad that Harry Monmouth^o fell
Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's sword,
And that the king before the Douglas' rage
Stooped his anointed head as low as death.
This have I rumored through the peasant towns
Between that royal field of Shrewsbury
And this worm-eaten hole of ragged^o stone,
Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland,
Lies crafty-sick.^o The posts come tiring^o on,
And not a man of them brings other news
Than they have learned of me. From Rumor's tongues
They bring smooth comforts false, worse than true wrongs. Exit RUMOR. 40

[A C T I]

[Scene I. Northumberland's castle.]

Enter the LORD BARDOLPH at one door.

LORD BARDOLPH

Who keeps the gate here, ho? Where is the earl?

The decorative border shown on page 686 appeared on the first page of the fifth quarto edition of The History of Henry the Fourth [Part One], 1613.

Ind.15 pipe wind instrument 18 blunt dull 22 my household the audience 25 Hotspur Harry Percy, the Earl of Northumberland's son, a rebel against King Henry IV, killed by the Prince of Wales 29 Harry Monmouth the Prince of Wales, Prince Hal 35 ragged rough-edged 37 crafty-sick feigning sickness; tiring exhausting themselves

PORTER [Within.]

What shall I say you are?

LORD BARDOLPH Tell thou the earl
That the Lord Bardolph doth attend him here.

PORTER

His lordship is walked forth into the orchard.
Please it your honor, knock but at the gate,
And he himself will answer. 5

5 Enter the Earl [of] NORTHUMBERLAND.

LORD BARDOLPH Here comes the earl.

NORTHUMBERLAND

What news, Lord Bardolph? Every minute now
Should be the father of some stratagem.
The times are wild. Contention, like a horse
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose
And bears down all before him. 10

LORD BARDOLPH Noble earl,
I bring you certain news from Shrewsbury. 15

NORTHUMBERLAND

Good, and^o God will!

LORD BARDOLPH As good as heart can wish.
The king is almost wounded to the death;
And, in the fortune of my lord your son,
Prince Harry slain outright; and both the Blunts Killed by the hand of Douglas; young Prince John
And Westmoreland and Stafford fled the field;
And Harry Monmouth's brawn,^o the hulk Sir John,
Is prisoner to your son. O, such a day,
So fought, so followed, and so fairly won,
Came not till now to dignify the times
Since Caesar's fortunes! 20

NORTHUMBERLAND How is this derived?
Saw you the field? Came you from Shrewsbury? 30

LORD BARDOLPH

I spake with one, my lord, that came from thence, 25

Enter TRAVERS.

A gentleman well bred and of good name,
That freely rend'red me these news for true. 35

NORTHUMBERLAND

Here comes my servant Travers,^o who I sent
On Tuesday last to listen after news.

LORD BARDOLPH

My lord, I overrode^o him on the way,
And he is furnished with no certainties
More than he haply^o may retail from me. 30

NORTHUMBERLAND

Now, Travers, what good tidings comes with you?

TRAVERS

My lord, Sir John Umfrevile turned me back
With joyful tidings, and, being better horsed, Outrode me. After him came spurring hard
A gentleman, almost forspent^o with speed,
That stopped by me to breathe his bloodied horse.
He asked the way to Chester, and of him
I did demand what news from Shrewsbury. 40
He told me that rebellion had bad luck,
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold.
With that, he gave his able horse the head,

I.i.13 and if 19 brawn fattened boar 28 Travers to "traverse" is to deny 30 overrode outrode 32 haply perhaps 37 forspent totally used up

And bending forward struck his armèd heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade^o
Up to the rowel-head, and starting so
He seemed in running to devour the way,
Staying no longer question.

NORTHUMBERLAND Ha? Again.

Said he young Harry Percy's spur was cold?
Of Hotspur Coldspur? That rebellion
Had met ill luck?

LORD BARDOLPH My lord, I'll tell you what.
If my young lord your son have not the day,
Upon mine honor, for a silken point^o
I'll give my barony. Never talk of it.

NORTHUMBERLAND

Why should that gentleman that rode by Travers
Give then such instances of loss?

LORD BARDOLPH Who, he?

He was some hilding^o fellow that had stol'n
The horse he rode on, and, upon my life,
Spoke at a venture. Look, here comes more news.

Enter MORTON.

NORTHUMBERLAND

Yea, this man's brow, like to a title-leaf,
Foretells the nature of a tragic volume.
So looks the strond^o whereon the imperious flood
Hath left a witnessed^o usurpation.
Say, Morton, didst thou come from Shrewsbury?

MORTON

I ran from Shrewsbury, my noble lord,
Where hateful death put on his ugliest mask
To fright our party.

NORTHUMBERLAND How doth my son and brother?

Thou tremblest, and the whiteness in thy cheek
Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand.
Even such a man, so faint, so spiritless,
So dull, so dead in look, so weebegone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And would have told him half his Troy was burnt.
But Priam found the fire ere he his tongue
And I my Percy's death ere thou report'st it.
This thou wouldst say, "Your son did thus and thus;
Your brother thus. So fought the noble Douglas,"
Stopping my greedy ear with their bold deeds.
But in the end, to stop my ear indeed,
Thou hast a sigh to blow away this praise,
Ending with "Brother, son, and all are dead."

MORTON

Douglas is living, and your brother—yet;
But, for my lord your son—

NORTHUMBERLAND Why, he is dead!

See what a ready tongue suspicion hath!
He that but fears the thing he would not know
Hath by instinct knowledge from others' eyes
That what he feared is chanced. Yet speak, Morton.
Tell thou an earl his divination lies,
And I will take it as a sweet disgrace
And make thee rich for doing me such wrong.

MORTON

You are too great to be by me gainsaid.
Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain.

NORTHUMBERLAND

Yet, for all this, say not that Percy's dead.
I see a strange confession in thine eye.
Thou shak'st thy head and hold'st it fear, or sin,
To speak a truth. If he be slain, say so.
The tongue offends not that reports his death;
And he doth sin that doth belie the dead,
Not he which says the dead is not alive.
Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office, and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
Rememb' red tolling a departing friend.

LORD BARDOLPH

I cannot think, my lord, your son is dead.

MORTON

I am sorry I should force you to believe
That which I would to God I had not seen.
But these mine eyes saw him in bloody state,
Rend'ring faint quittance,^o wearied and out-breathed,
To Harry Monmouth, whose swift wrath beat down
The never-daunted Percy to the earth,
From whence with life he never more sprung up.
In few,^o his death, whose spirit lent a fire
Even to the dullest peasant in his camp,
Being bruited^o once, took fire and heat away
From the best-tempered courage in his troops.
For from his mettle was his party steeled,
Which once in him abated, all the rest
Turned on themselves, like dull and heavy lead.
And as the thing that's heavy in itself,
Upon enforcement flies with greatest speed,
So did our men, heavy in Hotspur's loss,
Lend to this weight such lightness with their fear
That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim
Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety,
Fly from the field. Then was that noble Worcester
So soon ta'en prisoner. And that furious Scot,
The bloody Douglas, whose well-laboring sword
Had three times slain th' appearance of the king,^o
'Gan vail his stomach^o and did grace^o the shame
Of those that turned their backs, and in his flight,
Stumbling in fear, was took. The sum of all
Is that the king hath won, and hath sent out
A speedy power to encounter you, my lord,
Under the conduct of young Lancaster
And Westmoreland. This is the news at full.

NORTHUMBERLAND

For this I shall have time enough to mourn.
In poison there is physic;^o and these news,
Having been well, that^o would have made me sick,
Being sick, have in some measure made me well.
And, as the wretch whose fever-weak'ned joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life,
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms, even so my limbs,
Weak'ned with grief, being now enraged with grief,^o
Are thrice themselves. Hence, therefore, thou nice^o crutch!

108 quittance repaying (of blows) 112 few few words 114
bruited noised about 128 th' appearance of the king noblemen disguised as the king 129 'Gan . . . stomach began to abate his courage; grace favor 137 physic medicine 138 Having . . . that that, had they been well 144 grief
. . . grief sickness . . . sorrow 145 nice delicate

45 jade nag 53 point lace (used to tie breeches up) 57 hilding base 62 strond shore 63 a witnessed evidence of

A scaly gauntlet now with joints of steel
 Must glove this hand. And hence, thou sickly quioif!^o
 Thou art a guard too wanton^o for the head
 Which princes, fleshed with^o conquest, aim to hit.
 Now bid my brows with iron, and approach
 The ragged'st^o hour that time and spite dare bring
 To frown upon th' enraged Northumberland!
 Let heaven kiss earth! Now let not nature's hand
 Keep the wild flood confined! Let order die!
 And let this world no longer be a stage
 To feed contention in a ling'ring act!^o
 But let one spirit of the first-born Cain
 Reign in all bosoms, that, each heart being set
 On bloody courses, the rude scene may end,
 And darkness be the burier of the dead!

LORD BARDOLPH

This strained passion doth you wrong, my lord.

MORTON

Sweet earl, divorce not wisdom from your honor.
 The lives of all your loving complices
 Lean on your health, the which, if you give o'er
 To stormy passion, must perforce decay.
 You cast th' event^o of war, my noble lord,
 And summed the account of chance, before you said,
 "Let us make head."^o It was your presumise
 That, in the dole^o of blows, your son might drop.
 You knew he walked o'er perils, on an edge,
 More likely to fall in than to get o'er.
 You were advised his flesh was capable
 Of wounds and scars and that his forward spirit
 Would lift him where most trade of danger ranged.
 Yet did you say, "Go forth." And none of this,
 Though strongly apprehended, could restrain
 The stiff-borne^o action. What hath then befall'n,
 Or what hath this bold enterprise brought forth,
 More than that being which was like to be?

LORD BARDOLPH

We all that are engaged^o to this loss
 Knew that we ventured on such dangerous seas
 That if we wrought out life 'twas ten to one.
 And yet we ventured, for the gain proposed
 Choked the respect^o of likely peril feared.
 And since we are o'erset,^o venture again.
 Come, we will all put forth,^o body and goods.

MORTON

'Tis more than time. And, my most noble lord,
 I hear for certain, and dare speak the truth:
 The gentle Archbishop of York is up
 With well-appointed pow'rs.^o He is a man
 Who with a double^o surety binds his followers.
 My lord your son had only but the corpse,
 But shadows and the shows of men, to fight.
 For that same word "rebellion" did divide
 The action of their bodies from their souls,
 And they did fight with queasiness, constrained,

150

155

160

165

170

175

180

185

190

195

As men drink potions, that their weapons only Seemed on our side. But for their spirits and souls,
 This word "rebellion," it had froze them up
 As fish are in a pond. But now the bishop Turns insurrection to religion.
 Supposed sincere and holy in his thoughts,
 He's followed both with body and with mind,
 And doth enlarge his rising with the blood
 Of fair King Richard, scraped from Pomfret^o stones;
 Derives from heaven his quarrel and his cause;
 Tells them he doth bestride a bleeding land,
 Gasping for life under great Bolingbroke;^o
 And more and less^o do flock to follow him.

200

205

NORTHUMBERLAND

I knew of this before; but, to speak truth,
 This present grief had wiped it from my mind.
 Go in with me, and counsel every man
 The aptest way for safety and revenge.
 Get^o posts and letters, and make^o friends with speed.
 Never so few, and never yet more need. Exeunt.

210

215

[Scene II. London.]

Enter Sir John [FALSTAFF] alone, with his PAGE bearing his sword and buckler.

FALSTAFF Sirrah, you giant,^o what says the doctor to my water?^o

PAGE He said, sir, the water itself was a good healthy water; but, for the party that owed^o it, he might have moe^o diseases than he knew for.

5

FALSTAFF Men of all sorts take a pride to gird^o at me. The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man,^o is not able to invent anything that intends to laughter more than I invent or is invented on me. I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walk before thee like a sow that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one. If the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then I have no judgment. Thou whoreson mandrake,^o thou art fitter to be worn in my cap than to wait at my heels. I was never manned with an agate^o till now, but I will inset you neither in gold nor silver, but in vile apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel—the juvenal,^o the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fledge.^o I will sooner have a beard grow in the palm of my hand than he shall get one off his cheek, and yet he will not stick to say his face is a face-royal.^o God may finish it when he will, 'tis not a hair amiss yet. He may keep it still at a face-royal,^o for a barber shall never earn sixpence out of it; and yet he'll be crowing as if he had writ^o man

10

15

20

25

205 Pomfret Pomfret castle (where Richard II was murdered)
 208 Bolingbroke King Henry IV 209 more and less high and low 214 Get beget; make collect

I.ii.1 giant the Page was played by an unusually small boy, who probably mimicked Falstaff 2 water urine 4 owed owned 5 moe more 6 gird mock 7 compounded clay, man man, compounded of clay 14–15 mandrake man-shaped root 16 manned . . . agate attended by a servingman small as a figure carved in a jewel 19 juvenal juvenile (echoing jewel) 20 fledge feathered 23, 25 face-royal the king's face on a ten-shilling coin (the royal), which presumably would not need the attention of a barber 26 writ styled himself

147 quioif nightcap 148 wanton light 149 fleshed with having savored 151 ragged'st roughest 156 act (1) deed (2) section of a play 166 cast th' event estimated the outcome 168 make head raise an army 169 dole dealing out 177 stiff-borne determinedly carried on 180 engaged bound by contract 184 respect consideration 185 o'erset (1) upset, capsized (2) outwagered 186 put forth wager 190 well-appointed pow'rs well-equipped armies 191 double i.e., of body and soul

ever since his father was a bachelor. He may keep his own grace,^o but he's almost out of mine, I can assure him. What said Master Dummelton about the satin for my short cloak and my slops?^o 30

PAGE He said, sir, you should procure him better assurance^o than Bardolph. He would not take his band^o and yours; he liked not the security.

FALSTAFF Let him be damned, like the glutton!^o Pray God his tongue be hotter! A whoreson Achitophel!^o A rascal, yea-forsooth knave!^o To bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security! The whoreson smooth-pates^o do now wear nothing but high shoes,^o and bunches of keys^o at their girdles; and if a man is through with them in honest taking up, 40 then they must stand upon security.^o I had as lief they would put ratsbane in my mouth as offer to stop it with "security." I looked 'a^o should have sent me two-and-twenty yards of satin, as I am a true knight, and he sends me "security." Well, he may sleep in 45 security, for he hath the horn^o of abundance, and the lightness^o of his wife shines through it. And yet cannot he see, though he have his own lanthorn^o to light him. Where's Bardolph?

PAGE He's gone into Smithfield^o to buy your worship 50 a horse.

FALSTAFF I bought him in Paul's,^o and he'll buy me a horse in Smithfield. And I could get me but a wife in the stews,^o I were manned, horsed, and wived.^o

Enter Lord CHIEF JUSTICE [and SERVANT].

PAGE Sir, here comes the nobleman that committed^o 55 the prince for striking him about Bardolph.

FALSTAFF Wait close—I will not see him.

CHIEF JUSTICE What's he that goes there?

SERVANT Falstaff, and't please your lordship.

CHIEF JUSTICE He that was in question^o for the 60 robb'ry?

SERVANT He, my lord. But he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury, and, as I hear, is now going with some charge^o to the Lord John of Lancaster.

CHIEF JUSTICE What, to York? Call him back again. 65

SERVANT Sir John Falstaff!

FALSTAFF Boy, tell him I am deaf.

PAGE You must speak louder; my master is deaf.

28 grace (1) title, "your grace" (2) favor 30 slops wide breeches 32 assurance security (Bardolph is not Lord Bardolph, but one of Falstaff's cronies) 33 band bond 34 glutton Dives (who in Luke 16:24 asked for water to cool his tongue) 35–36 Achitophel the counselor who betrayed Absalom (II Samuel 15–17) 36 yea-forsooth knave one who swears sissy oaths like "yea, forsooth" 38 smooth-pates tradesmen (who wore their hair short, not like a nobleman's) 39 high shoes sign of pride; keys sign of possessions 40–41 if . . . security after a man completes a bargain on credit with them, they suddenly demand security 43 'a he 46 horn (1) cornucopia (2) cuckold's horn 47 lightness unchastity 48 lanthorn lantern (in which a light shines through horn panels) 50 Smithfield the horse market 52 Paul's unemployed men loitered in Saint Paul's cathedral seeking service 54 stews brothels; manned . . . wived a proverb: "Who goes to Westminster for a wife, to Paul's for a man, or to Smithfield for a horse, may meet with a whore, a knave, and a jade" 55 committed i.e., to prison (notice that the audience needed only this brief allusion to the story about Hal striking the Lord Chief Justice) 60 in question suspected 64 charge commission for soldiers

CHIEF JUSTICE I am sure he is—to the hearing of anything good. Go, pluck him by the elbow. I must 70 speak with him.

SERVANT Sir John!

FALSTAFF What! A young knave, and begging! Is there not wars? Is there not employment? Doth not the king lack subjects? Do not the rebels need soldiers? 75 Though it be a shame to be on any side but one, it is worse shame to beg than to be on the worst side, were it worse than the name of rebellion can tell how to make it.

SERVANT You mistake me, sir. 80

FALSTAFF Why, sir, did I say you were an honest man? Setting my knighthood and my soldiership aside,^o I had lied in my throat if I had said so.

SERVANT I pray you, sir, then set your knighthood and your soldiership aside and give me leave to tell you 85 you lie in your throat if you say I am any other than an honest man.

FALSTAFF I give thee leave to tell me so! I lay aside that which grows to me! If thou get'st any leave of me, hang me. If thou tak'st leave, thou wert better be 90 hanged. You hunt counter.^o Hence! Avaunt!

SERVANT Sir, my lord would speak with you.

CHIEF JUSTICE Sir John Falstaff, a word with you.

FALSTAFF My good lord! God give your lordship good time of day. I am glad to see your lordship abroad. 95 I heard say your lordship was sick. I hope your lordship goes abroad by advice.^o Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of an age^o in you, some relish of the saltiness of time in you; and I most humbly beseech your lordship 100 to have a reverent care of your health.

CHIEF JUSTICE Sir John, I sent for you before your expedition to Shrewsbury.

FALSTAFF And't please your lordship, I hear his majesty is returned with some discomfort from Wales. 105

CHIEF JUSTICE I talk not of his majesty. You would not come when I sent for you.

FALSTAFF And I hear, moreover, his highness is fall'n into this same whoreson apoplexy.

CHIEF JUSTICE Well, God mend him! I pray you, let 110 me speak with you.

FALSTAFF This apoplexy, as I take it, is a kind of lethargy, and't please your lordship, a kind of sleeping in the blood, a whoreson tingling.

CHIEF JUSTICE What, tell you me of it? Be it as it is. 115

FALSTAFF It hath it original^o from much grief, from study and perturbation of the brain. I have read the cause of his effects in Galen.^o It is a kind of deafness.

CHIEF JUSTICE I think you are fall'n into the disease, for you hear not what I say to you. 120

FALSTAFF Very well, my lord, very well. Rather, and't please you, it is the disease of not listening, the malady of not marking, that I am troubled withal.

CHIEF JUSTICE To punish you by the heels^o would

82–83 Setting . . . aside i.e., because knights and soldiers ought not to lie 91 counter in the wrong direction 97 advice a physician's advice 99 age pun on ague; cf. IV.i.34 116 it original its origin 118 Galen Greek physician (A.D. 129–99) whose writings dominated Renaissance medical practice 124 punish . . . heels put you in fetters or the stocks amend the attention of your ears, and I care not if I do 125 become your physician.

FALSTAFF I am as poor as Job, my lord, but not so patient. Your lordship may minister the potion of imprisonment to me in respect of poverty; but how I should be your patient to follow your prescriptions, 130
the wise may make some dram° of a scruple°, or indeed a scruple itself.

CHIEF JUSTICE I sent for you, when there were matters against you for your life, to come speak with
me. 135

FALSTAFF As I was then advised by my learned counsel in the laws of this land-service°, I did not come.

CHIEF JUSTICE Well, the truth is, Sir John, you live in great infamy.

FALSTAFF He that buckles himself in my belt cannot 140
live in less.

CHIEF JUSTICE Your means are very slender and your waste is great.

FALSTAFF I would it were otherwise. I would my means were greater and my waist slender. 145

CHIEF JUSTICE You have misled the youthful prince.

FALSTAFF The young prince hath misled me. I am the fellow with the great belly°, and he my dog.

CHIEF JUSTICE Well, I am loath to gall a new-healed wound. Your day's service at Shrewsbury hath a little 150 gilded over your night's exploit° on Gad's Hill. You may thank th' unquiet time for your quiet o'erposting° that action.

FALSTAFF My lord?

CHIEF JUSTICE But since all is well, keep it so. Wake 155 not a sleeping wolf.

FALSTAFF To wake a wolf is as bad as smell a fox.°

CHIEF JUSTICE What! You are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

FALSTAFF A wassail candle°, my lord, all tallow. If I 160 did say of wax°, my growth would approve the truth.

CHIEF JUSTICE There is not a white hair in your face but should have his effect of gravity.

FALSTAFF His effect of gravity°, gravy, gravy.

CHIEF JUSTICE You follow the young prince up and 165 down like his ill angel.

FALSTAFF Not so, my lord. Your ill angel° is light°, but I hope he that looks upon me will take me without weighing. And yet, in some respects, I grant, I cannot go°. I cannot tell. Virtue is of so little regard in these 170 costermongers'° times that true valor is turned berod°.°
Pregnancy° is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings°. All the other gifts appertinent to man, as the malice of this age shapes them, are not worth a gooseberry. You that are old 175 consider not the capacities of us that are young. You do measure the heat of our livers with the bitterness of your galls. And we that are in the vaward° of our youth, I must confess, are wags too.

CHIEF JUSTICE Do you set down your name in the 180 scroll of youth, that are written down old with all the characters of age? Have you not a moist eye, a dry hand, a yellow cheek, a white beard, a decreasing leg, an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken, your wind short, your chin double, your wit single°, and every 185 part about you blasted with antiquity, and will you yet call yourself young? Fie, fie, fie, Sir John!

FALSTAFF My lord, I was born about three of the clock in the afternoon, with a white head and something a round belly. For my voice, I have lost it with 190 hallowing° and singing of anthems. To approve° my youth further, I will not. The truth is, I am only old in judgment and understanding; and he that will caper° with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him! For the box of the ear 195 that the prince gave you, he gave it like a rude prince, and you took it like a sensible lord. I have checked° him for it, and the young lion repents, marry, not in ashes and sackcloth, but in new silk and old sack.° 200

CHIEF JUSTICE Well, God send the prince a better companion!

FALSTAFF God send the companion a better prince!
I cannot rid my hands of him.

CHIEF JUSTICE Well, the king hath severed you and 205
Prince Harry. I hear you are going with Lord John of Lancaster against the archbishop and the Earl of Northumberland.

FALSTAFF Yea, I thank your pretty sweet wit for it.
But look you° pray, all you that kiss my lady peace 210 at home, that our armies join not in a hot day, for, by the Lord, I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to swear extraordinarily. If it be a hot day, and I brandish anything but a bottle, I would I might never spit white° again. There is not a dangerous action 215 can peep out his head but I am thrust upon it. Well, I cannot last ever. But it was alway yet the trick of our English nation, if they have a good thing, to make it too common. If ye will needs say I am an old man, you should give me rest. I would to God my name were 220 not so terrible to the enemy as it is. I were better to be eaten to death with a rust than to be scoured to nothing with perpetual motion.

CHIEF JUSTICE Well, be honest, be honest, and God bless your expedition! 225

FALSTAFF Will your lordship lend me a thousand pound to furnish me forth?

CHIEF JUSTICE Not a penny, not a penny. You are too impatient to bear crosses°. Fare you well. Commend me to my cousin Westmoreland. 230

[Exeunt CHIEF JUSTICE and SERVANT.]

131 dram, scruple apothecaries' small weights 137 land- service a play on military service—in which Falstaff's sword would be his "learned counsel"—as against the service of a legal summons 148 belly so large he cannot see where he is going and therefore needs a dog to lead him (?); a reference to some well-known beggar (?) 151 exploit the robbery in 1 Henry IV, II.ii. and II.iv 152 quiet o'erposting quietly getting past 157 smell a fox be suspicious 160 wassail
candle large candle designed to last a whole night, as at a feast 161 wax a play on (1) beeswax (2) grow 164 gravy with pun on the sense "fatty sweat" 167 ill angel clipped coin; light
(1) not due weight (2) wanton 170 go (1) pass for currency
(2) copulate (?) 171 costermongers' hucksters'; berod bear-herd, one who leads tame bears 172 Pregnancy quickness of wit 173 reckonings tavern bills

178 vaward vanguard 185 single weak 191 hallowing (1) sanctifying (2) "halloing," shouting to hounds; approve prove 194 caper compete at dancing 197 checked reproved 200 sack sherry 210 look you make sure you 215 spit white
(1) suffer a dry mouth from carousing (2) emit semen (?) 229
crosses (1) afflictions (2) coins marked with a cross

FALSTAFF If I do, fillip° me with a three-man beetle.°
A man can no more separate age and covetousness than 'a can part young limbs and lechery. But the gout galls the one and the pox pinches the other, and so both the degrees° prevent° my curses. Boy! 235

PAGE Sir?

FALSTAFF What money is in my purse?

PAGE Seven groats° and twopence.

FALSTAFF I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse. Borrowing only lingers and lingers 240 it out, but the disease is incurable. Go bear this letter to my Lord of Lancaster, this to the prince, this to the Earl of Westmoreland, and this to old Mistress Ursula, whom I have weekly sworn to marry since I perceived the first white hair of my chin. About it. You know 245 where to find me. [Exit PAGE.] A pox of this gout!
Or a gout of this pox! For the one or the other plays the rogue with my great toe. 'Tis no matter if I do halt°—I have the wars for my color,° and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. A good wit will make 250 use of anything. I will turn diseases to commodity.°
[Exit.]

[Scene III. The rebels' meeting place.]

Enter th' ARCHBISHOP, Thomas MOWBRAY (Earl Marshall), the Lord HASTINGS and [LORD] BARDOLPH.

ARCHBISHOP

Thus have you heard our cause and known our means;
And, my most noble friends, I pray you all,
Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes.
And first, Lord Marshall, what say you to it?

MOWBRAY

I well allow the occasion° of our arms, 5
But gladly would be better satisfied
How in our means we should advance ourselves
To look with forehead bold and big enough
Upon the power and puissance° of the king.

HASTINGS

Our present musters grow upon the file° 10
To five-and-twenty thousand men of choice;
And our supplies° live largely in the hope
Of great Northumberland, whose bosom burns
With an incensèd fire of injuries.

LORD BARDOLPH

The question then, Lord Hastings, standeth thus: 15
Whether our present five-and-twenty thousand
May hold up head without Northumberland?

HASTINGS

With him, we may.

LORD BARDOLPH Yea, marry,° there's the point.

But if without him we be thought too feeble,
My judgment is, we should not step too far 20

Till we had his assistance by the hand.
For in a theme so bloody-faced as this,
Conjecture, expectation, and surmise
Of aids incertain should not be admitted.

ARCHBISHOP

'Tis very true, Lord Bardolph, for indeed 25
It was young Hotspur's case at Shrewsbury.

LORD BARDOLPH

It was, my lord, who lined° himself with hope,
Eating the air and promise of supply,
Flatt'ring himself in project of a power
Much smaller than° the smallest of his thoughts, 30
And so, with great imagination
Proper to madmen, led his powers to death
And, winking,° leaped into destruction.

HASTINGS

But, by your leave, it never yet did hurt 35
To lay down likelihoods and forms of hope.

LORD BARDOLPH

Yes, if this present quality of war.°
Indeed the instant action, a cause on foot,
Lives so in hope as in an early spring
We see th' appearing buds, which to prove fruit,
Hope gives not so much warrant as despair° 40
That frosts will bite them. When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model.°
And when we see the figure° of the house,
Then must we rate the cost of the erection,
Which if we find outweighs ability, 45
What do we then but draw anew the model
In fewer offices,° or at least° desist
To build at all? Much more, in this great work,
Which is almost to pluck a kingdom down
And set another up, should we survey 50
The plot of situation and the model,
Consent° upon a sure foundation,
Question surveyors, know our own estate,
How able such a work to undergo,
To weigh against his opposite.° Or else 55
We fortify in paper and in figures,
Using the names of men instead of men,—
Like one that draws the model of an house
Beyond his power to build it, who, half through,
Gives o'er and leaves his part-created cost° 60
A naked subject to the weeping clouds
And waste for churlish winter's tyranny.

HASTINGS

Grant that our hopes, yet likely of fair birth,
Should be stillborn, and that we now possessed 65
The utmost man of expectation,
I think we are so, body strong enough
Even as we are, to equal with the king.

LORD BARDOLPH

What, is the king but five-and-twenty thousand?

231 fillip flip; three-man beetle a battering-ram carried by three men (what it would take to "fillip" Falstaff) 235 degrees stations in life; prevent act before 238 groats fourpenny coins 249 halt limp; color (1) pretense (2) battle flag 251 commodity something to sell

I.iii.5 allow the occasion approve the cause 9 puissance strength 10 file catalog 12 supplies reinforcements 18 marry a mild oath, "By the Virgin Mary"

27 lined reinforced (as in tailoring) 29–30 in . . . than in planning on the basis of an army that in fact was much smaller than 33 winking shutting his eyes 36 Yes . . . war a famous obscurity, perhaps saying: Yes, it does do hurt to plan
if this planning present (i.e., represent, substitute for) quality (i.e., true substance, strength) of war 40 despair (supply:
"gives warrant") 42 model plan 43 figure design 47 offices rooms for service; least worst 52 Consent agree 55 his opposite its opposition 60 part-created cost half-realized expenditure

HASTINGS

To us no more, nay, not so much, Lord Bardolph.
For his divisions, as the times do brawl, 70
Are in three heads: one power against the French,
And one against Glendower, perforce a third
Must take up us. So is the unfirm king
In three divided, and his coffers sound
With hollow poverty and emptiness. 75

ARCHBISHOP

That he should draw his several° strengths together
And come against us in full puissance°
Need not to be dreaded.

HASTINGS

If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarmed, the French and Welsh
Baying him at the heels. Never fear that. 80

LORD BARDOLPH

Who is it like° should lead his forces hither?

HASTINGS

The Duke of Lancaster and Westmoreland.
Against the Welsh, himself and Harry Monmouth.
But who is substituted against the French,
I have no certain notice.

ARCHBISHOP

Let us on, 85
And publish the occasion of our arms.
The commonwealth is sick of their own choice;
Their overgreedy love hath surfeited.
An habitation giddy and unsure
Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart. 90
O thou fond many,° with what loud applause
Didst thou beat° heaven with blessing Bolingbroke,
Before he was what thou wouldst have him be!
And being now trimmed° in thine own desires,
Thou, beastly feeder, art so full of him 95
That thou provok'st thyself to cast him up.
So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge
Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard;
And now thou° wouldst eat thy dead vomit up,
And howl'st to find it. What trust is in these times? 100
They that when Richard lived would have him die
Are now become enamored on his grave.
Thou° that threw'st dust upon his goodly head
When through proud London he came sighing on After th' admired heels of Bolingbroke 105
Criest now, "O earth, yield us that king again,
And take thou this!" O thoughts of men accursed!
"Past and to come seems best, things present worst."°

MOWBRAY

Shall we go draw our numbers° and set on?

HASTINGS

We are time's subjects, and time bids be gone. 110
Exeunt.

[A C T I I]

[Scene I. London.]

Enter HOSTESS of the Tavern and an OFFICER or two [FANG and another, followed by SNARE].

HOSTESS Master Fang, have you ent' red the action?°

FANG It is ent' red.

HOSTESS Where's your yeoman?° Is't a lusty yeoman? Will 'a stand to't?°

FANG Sirrah—where's Snare?° 5

HOSTESS O Lord, ay! Good Master Snare!

SNARE Here, here.

FANG Snare, we must arrest Sir John Falstaff.

HOSTESS Yea, good Master Snare, I have ent' red him and all. 10

SNARE It may chance cost some of us our lives, for he will stab.

HOSTESS Alas the day! Take heed of him. He stabbed me in mine own house, and that most beastly. In good faith, 'a cares not what mischief he does, if his weapon 15 be out. He will foin° like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.

FANG If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.

HOSTESS No, nor I neither. I'll be at your elbow.

FANG And I but fist him once, and 'a come but within 20
my vice°—

90 HOSTESS I am undone by his going. I warrant you, he's an infinitive° thing upon my score.° Good Master Fang, hold him sure. Good Master Snare, let him not
'scape. 'A comes continually° to Pie Corner°— 25 saving° your manhoods—to buy a saddle; and he is 95 indited° to dinner to the Lubber's Head° in Lumbert°
Street, to Master Smooth's the silkman. I pray you, since my exion° is ent' red and my case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his 30 answer. A hundred mark is a long one for a poor lone woman to bear, and I have borne,° and borne, and borne, and have been fubbed off,° and fubbed off, and fubbed off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no honesty in such dealing, 35 unless a woman should be made an ass and a beast, to bear every knave's wrong. Yonder he comes, and that arrant malmsey-nose° knave, Bardolph, with him. Do your offices, do your offices. Master Fang and Master
Snare, do me, do me, do me your offices. 40

Enter Sir John [FALSTAFF] and BARDOLPH, and the boy [PAGE].

FALSTAFF How now! Whose mare's dead?° What's the matter?

II.i.1 ent' red the action filed the lawsuit (with a ribald second meaning) 3 yeoman assistant (i.e., constable) 4 stand to't not collapse in the face of danger (with a ribald second meaning) 5 Snare evidently hanging back 16 foin thrust (with, again, a second meaning) 21 vice grip 23 infinitive infinite; score account at the tavern 25 continually a mix-up of continually and incontinently (Mistress Quickly speaks in a stream of malapropisms, many with indecent second meanings); Pie Corner the cook's quarter (with an indecent pun) 26 saving no offense meant to 27 indited invited; Lubber's Head Libbard's (i.e., Leopard's) Head; Lumbert Lombard 29 exion action 32 borne endured (with a second, ribald sense) 33 fubbed off put off 38 malmsey-nose nose reddened from winebibbing 41 Whose mare's dead What's all the commotion?

76 several separate 77 puissance power 81 like likely 91 fond many foolish multitude 92 beat assault (with noise or prayer) 94 trimmed dressed 99 thou the multitude (compared to a dog, as described in Proverbs 16:11) 103 Thou the multitude 108 Past . . . worst proverbial 109 draw our numbers assemble our troops

FANG Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of Mistress Quickly.

FALSTAFF Away, varlets! Draw, Bardolph! Cut me 45 off the villain's head. Throw the quean° in the channel.°

HOSTESS Throw me in the channel! I'll throw thee in the channel. Wilt thou? Wilt thou? Thou bastardy° rogue! Murder, murder! Ah, thou honeysuckle° villain! Wilt thou kill God's officers and the king's? 50 Ah, thou honeyseed° rogue! Thou art a honeyseed, a man-queller,° and a woman-queller.

FALSTAFF Keep them off, Bardolph.

FANG A rescue!° A rescue!

HOSTESS Good people, bring a rescue or two. Thou 55 wo't, wo't thou? Thou wo't, wo't ta? Do, do, thou rogue! Do, thou hempseed!°

PAGE Away, you scullion!° You rampallian!° You fustilarian!° I'll tickle your catastrophe.°

Enter Lord CHIEF JUSTICE and his MEN.

CHIEF JUSTICE What is the matter? Keep the peace 60 here, ho!

HOSTESS Good my lord, be good to me. I beseech you, stand to me.°

CHIEF JUSTICE

How now, Sir John! What are you brawling here?

Doth this become your place, your time and business? 65

You should have been well on your way to York.

Stand from him, fellow. Wherefore hang'st thou upon him?

HOSTESS O my most worshipful lord, and't please your grace, I am a poor widow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at my suit. 70

CHIEF JUSTICE For what sum?

HOSTESS It is more than for some, my lord, it is for all I have. He hath eaten me out of house and home; he hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his. But I will have some of it out again, or I will ride thee 75 o' nights like the mare.°

FALSTAFF I think I am as like to ride the mare,° if I have any vantage of ground° to get up.

CHIEF JUSTICE How comes this, Sir John? What man of good temper would endure this tempest of 80 exclamation? Are you not ashamed to enforce a poor widow to so rough a course to come by her own?

FALSTAFF What is the gross sum that I owe thee?

HOSTESS Marry, if thou wert an honest man, thyself and the money too. Thou didst swear to me upon a 85 parcel-gilt° goblet, sitting in my Dolphin° chamber, at the round table, by a sea-coal fire, upon Wednesday in Wheeson° week, when the prince broke thy head for liking° his father to a singing-man of Windsor, thou

46 quean scold; channel gutter 48 bastardly mixing dastardly and bastard (1) illegitimate (2) a sweetened wine 49 honeysuckle homicidal 51 honeyseed homicide 52 man-queller man-killer 54 rescue forcible taking of persons out of legal custody 57 hempseed a child destined for the gallows (but also homicide, as in line 51—Mistress Quickly is referring to the Page) 58 scullion kitchen wench; rampallian rampant whore 59 fustilarian derived from fustilugs, a frowsy, fat woman; catastrophe ending 63 stand to me be firm for me (with a second sense) 76 mare nightmare 77 mare female (but also the "two-legged mare," i.e., the gallows) 78 vantage of ground advantage of higher ground 86 parcel-gilt partly gilded; Dolphin the sign marking the room 88 Wheeson Whitsun 89 liking likening didst swear to me then, as I was washing thy wound, 90 to marry me and make me my lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it? Did not goodwife Keech, the butcher's wife, come in then and call me gossip° Quickly? Coming in to borrow a mess of vinegar, telling us she had a good dish of prawns,° whereby thou didst 95 desire to eat some, whereby I told thee they were ill for a green° wound? And didst thou not, when she was gone downstairs, desire me to be no more so familiarity with such poor people, saying that ere long they should call me "madam"? And didst thou not kiss me 100 and bid me fetch thee thirty shillings? I put thee now to thy book-oath. Deny it, if thou canst.

FALSTAFF My lord, this is a poor mad soul, and she says up and down the town that her eldest son is like you. She hath been in good case,° and the truth is, 105 poverty hath distracted her.° But for these foolish officers, I beseech you I may have redress against them.

CHIEF JUSTICE Sir John, Sir John, I am well acquainted with your manner of wrenching the true cause the false way. It is not a confident brow, nor the 110 throng of words that come with such more than impudent sauciness from you, can thrust me from a level° consideration. You have, as it appears to me, practiced upon° the easy-yielding spirit of this woman, and made her serve your uses both in purse and in 115 person.

HOSTESS Yea, in truth, my lord.

CHIEF JUSTICE Pray thee, peace. Pay her the debt you owe her and unpay the villainy you have done with her. The one you may do with sterling money, 120 and the other with current° repentance.

FALSTAFF My lord, I will not undergo this sneap° without reply. You call honorable boldness impudent sauciness. If a man will make curtsy and say nothing, he is virtuous. No, my lord, my humble duty re- 125 memb' red, I will not be your suitor. I say to you, I do desire deliverance from these officers, being upon hasty employment in the king's affairs.

CHIEF JUSTICE You speak as having power to do wrong. But answer in th' effect of° your reputation, 130 and satisfy the poor woman.

FALSTAFF Come hither, hostess.

Enter a messenger [GOWER].

CHIEF JUSTICE Now, Master Gower, what news?

GOWER

The king, my lord, and Harry Prince of Wales Are near at hand. The rest the paper tells. 135

[They draw aside.]

FALSTAFF [To HOSTESS.] As I am a gentleman!

HOSTESS Faith, you said so before.

FALSTAFF As I am a gentleman, come, no more words of it.

HOSTESS By this heavenly ground I tread on, I must 140 be fain° to pawn both my plate and the tapestry of my dining chambers.

93 gossip friend (a common form of address) 95 prawns shrimp 97 green new 105 case situation, i.e., well-to-do 106 distracted her driven her mad 113 level straight 114 practiced upon deceived 121 current (1) progressive (2) opposite of counterfeit 122 sneap snub 130 in . . . of so as to fulfill 141 fain obliged

FALSTAFF Glasses, glasses, is the only drinking.^o And for thy walls, a pretty slight drollery,^o or the story of the Prodigal, or the German hunting^o in waterwork,^o 145 is worth a thousand of these bed-hangers^o and these fly-bitten tapestries. Let it be ten pound, if thou canst. Come, and 'twere not for thy humors,^o there's not a better wench in England. Go, wash thy face, and draw^o the action. Come, thou must not be in this 150 humor with me. Dost not know me? Come, come, I know thou wast set on to this.

HOSTESS Pray thee, Sir John, let it be but twenty nobles.^o I' faith, I am loath to pawn my plate, so God save me, la! 155

FALSTAFF Let it alone; I'll make other shift. You'll be a fool still.^o

HOSTESS Well, you shall have it, though I pawn my gown. I hope you'll come to supper. You'll pay me all together? 160

FALSTAFF Will I live? [To BARDOLPH]. Go, with her, with her. Hook on,^o hook on!

HOSTESS Will you have Doll Tearsheet meet you at supper?

FALSTAFF No more words. Let's have her. 165

Exit HOSTESS and sergeant [FANG, BARDOLPH and others].

CHIEF JUSTICE [To GOWER]. I have heard better news.

FALSTAFF What's the news, my lord?

CHIEF JUSTICE [Ignoring FALSTAFF]. Where lay the king tonight?^o 170

GOWER At Basingstoke, my lord.

FALSTAFF I hope, my lord, all's well. What is the news, my lord?

CHIEF JUSTICE Come all his forces back?

GOWER No. Fifteen hundred foot, five hundred horse, 175 Are marched up to my Lord of Lancaster, Against Northumberland and the archbishop.

FALSTAFF Comes the king back from Wales, my noble lord?

CHIEF JUSTICE [To his MEN].

You shall have letters of me presently.

Come, go along with me, good Master Gower. 180

FALSTAFF My lord!

CHIEF JUSTICE What's the matter?

FALSTAFF Master Gower, shall I entreat you with me to dinner?

GOWER I must wait upon my good lord here, I thank 185 you, good Sir John.

CHIEF JUSTICE Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up^o in counties as you go.

FALSTAFF Will you sup with me, Master Gower?

CHIEF JUSTICE What foolish master taught you these 190 manners, Sir John?

FALSTAFF Master Gower, if they become me not, he was a fool that taught them me. This is the right^o fencing grace, my lord—tap for tap, and so part fair. CHIEF JUSTICE Now the Lord lighten^o thee! Thou 195 art a great fool. [Exeunt.]

[Scene II. The prince's house.]

Enter the PRINCE [Henry], POINS, with others.

PRINCE Before God, I am exceeding weary.^o

POINS Is't come to that? I had thought weariness durst not have attached^o one of so high blood.

PRINCE Faith, it does me, though it discolors the complexion^o of my greatness to acknowledge it. Doth 5 it not show vilely in me to desire small beer?

POINS Why, a prince should not be so loosely studied^o as to remember so weak a composition.^o

PRINCE Belike, then, my appetite was not princely got,^o for, by my troth, I do now remember the poor 10 creature, small beer. But indeed these humble considerations makè me out of love with my greatness. What a disgrace is it to me to remember thy name!^o Or to know thy face tomorrow! Or to take note how many pair of silk stockings thou hast, viz. these, and 15 those that were thy peach-colored ones! Or to bear the inventory of thy shirts, as: one for superfluity and another for use! But that the tennis-court-keeper knows better than I; for it is a low ebb of linen with thee when thou keepest not racket there,^o as thou 20 hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy low countries^o have made a shift^o to eat up thy holland.^o And God knows whether those that bawl out the ruins of thy linen shall inherit His kingdom. But the midwives say the children are not in the fault,^o 25 whereupon the world increases, and kindreds^o are mightily strengthened.

POINS How ill it follows, after you have labored so hard, you should talk so idly! Tell me, how many good young princes would do so, their fathers being so sick 30 as yours at this time is?

PRINCE Shall I tell thee one thing, Poins?

POINS Yes, faith, and let it be an excellent good thing.

PRINCE It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine. 35

POINS Go to. I stand the push^o of your one thing that you will tell.

PRINCE Marry, I tell thee, it is not meet^o that I should be sad, now my father is sick. Albeit I could tell to thee, as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call 40 my friend, I could be sad, and sad indeed, too.

193 right correct 195 lighten (1) enlighten (2) make [you] weigh less

II.ii.1 weary having just ridden from Wales 3 attached arrested 4-5 discolors the complexion causes a blush 7 loosely studied carelessly or wantonly applied 8 so . . . composition so unstable and trivial a compound (as small beer) 10 got begotten 13 disgrace . . . name i.e., unlike "graceful" courtiers who affect to forget the names of their inferiors 19-20 it . . . there if you have as many as two shirts, one to play in, a second to change into, you frequent the tennis courts 21-22 low countries Netherlands (with an obscene pun) 22 shift (1) contrivance (2) shirt; holland linen made in Holland 25 in the fault share the sin (of their illegitimacy, with a pun on French, foutre = to copulate) 26 kindreds clans 36 push thrust 38 meet fitting

143 glasses, is . . . drinking glasses are in fashion now, not metal tankards 144 drollery comic picture 145 German hunting hunting the boar; waterwork imitation tapestry 146 bed-hangers bed-curtains 148 humors (1) whims (2) general character 150 draw withdraw 154 nobles coins worth six shillings eightpence 156-57 be . . . still always lose your chance 162 Hook on stick to her 170 tonight last night 188 take soldiers up recruit men

POINS Very hardly^o upon such a subject.

PRINCE By this hand, thou thinkest me as far in the devil's book as thou and Falstaff for obduracy and persistency. Let the end^o try the man. But I tell thee, 45 my heart bleeds inwardly that my father is so sick. And keeping such vile company as thou art hath in reason taken from me all ostentation^o of sorrow.

POINS The reason?

PRINCE What wouldst thou think of me if I should 50 weep?

POINS I would think thee a most princely hypocrite.

PRINCE It would be every man's thought, and thou art a blessed fellow to think as every man thinks. Never a man's thought in the world keeps the roadway 55 better than thine. Every man would think me an hypocrite indeed. And what accites^o your most worshipful thought to think so?

POINS Why, because you have been so lewd and so much engrafted^o to Falstaff. 60

PRINCE And to thee.

POINS By this light, I am well spoke on; I can hear it with mine own ears. The worst that they can say of me is that I am a second brother^o and that I am a proper fellow of my hands,^o and those two things I 65 confess I cannot help. By the mass, here comes Bardolph.

Enter BARDOLPH and boy [PAGE].

PRINCE And the boy that I gave Falstaff. 'A had him from me Christian, and look if the fat villain have not transformed him ape.^o 70

BARDOLPH God save your grace.

PRINCE And yours, most noble Bardolph.

POINS Come, you virtuous ass, you bashful fool, must you be blushing?^o Wherefore blush you now? What a maidenly man-at-arms are you become! Is't such a 75 matter to get a pottle-pot's^o maidenhead?

PAGE 'A calls me e'en now, my lord, through a red lattice,^o and I could discern no part of his face from the window. At last I spied his eyes, and methought he had made two holes in the alewife's petticoat and so 80 peeped through.

PRINCE Has not the boy profited?^o

BARDOLPH Away, you whoreson upright rabbit, away!

PAGE Away, you rascally Althaea's dream,^o away! 85

PRINCE Instruct us, boy. What dream, boy?

PAGE Marry, my lord, Althaea dreamed she was delivered of a firebrand, and therefore I call him her dream.

PRINCE A crown's worth of good interpretation. 90 There 'tis, boy. [Tips him.]

42 Very hardly with great difficulty 45 end outcome 48 ostentation show 57 accites summons (a judicial term) 60 engrafted grafted (like a plant) 64 a second brother one who inherits nothing 65 proper . . . hands skillful with my hands as a fighter (or as a thief?) 70 transformed him ape dressed him fantastically 74 blushing redfaced (from drinking) 76 pottle-pot two-quart tankard 77-78 red lattice such a window was the sign of an alehouse 82 profited i.e., from his association with Falstaff 85 Althaea's dream the dream he describes in lines 87-89 was actually Hecuba's; the Fates told Althaea her son would live only as long as a log on the fire remained unconsumed; perhaps the boy has not "profited" as much as the prince thought

POINS O, that this blossom could be kept from cankers!^o Well, there is sixpence to preserve^o thee.

BARDOLPH And you do not make him hanged among you, the gallows shall have wrong. 95

PRINCE And how doth thy master, Bardolph?

BARDOLPH Well, my lord. He heard of your grace's coming to town. There's a letter for you.

POINS Delivered with good respect. And how doth the martlemas,^o your master? 100

BARDOLPH In bodily health, sir.

POINS Marry, the immortal part needs a physician, but that moves not him. Though that be sick, it dies not.

PRINCE I do allow this wen^o to be as familiar with me 105 as my dog, and he holds his place, for look you how he writes.

POINS [Reads.] "John Falstaff, knight"—every man must know that, as oft as he has occasion to name himself. Even like those that are kin to the king, for they never prick their finger but they say, "There's some of the king's blood spilt." "How comes that?" says he that takes upon him not to conceive. The answer is as ready as a borrowed cap,^o "I am the king's poor cousin, sir." 115

PRINCE Nay, they will be kin to us, or they will fetch it from Japhet.^o But the letter. [Reads.] "Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son of the king nearest his father, Harry Prince of Wales, greeting." 120

POINS Why, this is a certificate.^o

PRINCE Peace! [Reads.] "I will imitate the honorable Romans in brevity." 125

POINS He sure means brevity in breath, short-winded.

[PRINCE reads.] "I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leave thee. Be not too familiar with Poins, for he misuses thy favors so much that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Repent at idle times as thou mayst, and so farewell. 130

"Thine, by yea and no, which is as much as to say, as thou usest him, JACK FALSTAFF with my familiars, JOHN with my brothers and sisters, and SIR JOHN with all Europe." 135

POINS My lord, I'll steep this letter in sack and make him eat it.

PRINCE That's to make him eat twenty of his words. But do you use me thus, Ned? Must I marry your sister? 140

POINS God send the wench no worse fortune! But I never said so.

PRINCE Well, thus we play the fools with the time, and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds and mock us. Is your master here in London?

BARDOLPH Yea, my lord.

PRINCE Where sups he? Doth the old boar feed in the old frank?^o 145

93 cankers plant-destroying worms; preserve i.e., because Elizabethan coins bore crosses 100 martlemas a beef fattened for slaughter before winter on Martinmas Day (November 11) 105 wen swelling 114 borrowed cap which the borrower promptly tips 116-17 fetch . . . Japhet fetch their ancestry from that one of Noah's sons whose offspring peopled Europe 120 certificate patent (in formal style) 146 frank sty (presumably a glance at the famous Boar's Head tavern)

BARDOLPH At the old place, my lord, in Eastcheap.
 PRINCE What company?
 PAGE Ephesians, my lord, of the old church.^o
 PRINCE Sup any women with him? 150
 PAGE None, my lord, but old Mistress Quickly and Mistress Doll Tearsheet.
 PRINCE What pagan^o may that be?
 PAGE A proper gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's. 155
 PRINCE Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull. Shall we steal upon them, Ned, at supper?
 POINS I am your shadow, my lord; I'll follow you.
 PRINCE Sirrah,^o you boy, and Bardolph, no word to your master that I am yet come to town. There's for 160 your silence. [Tips them.]
 BARDOLPH I have no tongue, sir.
 PAGE And for mine, sir, I will govern it.
 PRINCE Fare you well; go. [Exeunt BARDOLPH and
PAGE.] This Doll Tearsheet should be some road.^o 165
 POINS I warrant you, as common as the way between Saint Alban's and London.
 PRINCE How might we see Falstaff bestow himself tonight in his true colors, and not ourselves be seen?
 POINS Put on two leathern jerkins^o and aprons, and 170 wait upon him at his table as drawers.^o
 PRINCE From a god to a bull? A heavy descension!
 It was Jove's case.^o From a prince to a prentice? A low transformation! That shall be mine, for in everything the purpose must weigh with^o the folly. Follow 175 me, Ned. Exeunt.

[Scene III. Northumberland's castle.]

*Enter NORTHUMBERLAND, his wife [LADY NORTH-UMBERLAND], and the wife to Harry Percy [LADY
 PERCY].*

NORTHUMBERLAND
 I pray thee, loving wife, and gentle daughter,^o
 Give even way^o unto my rough affairs.
 Put not you on the visage of the times
 And be like them to Percy^o troublesome.
 LADY NORTHUMBERLAND
 I have given over; I will speak no more. 5
 Do what you will, your wisdom be your guide.
 NORTHUMBERLAND
 Alas, sweet wife, my honor is at pawn,
 And, but^o my going, nothing can redeem it.
 LADY PERCY
 O yet, for God's sake, go not to these wars!
 The time was, father, that you broke your word, 10
 When you were more endeared to it than now,
 When your own Percy, when my heart's dear Harry,

149 Ephesians . . . church libertines (who had to be corrected by Saint Paul—Ephesians 5:3–8) 153 pagan prostitute (loveworshipper) 159 Sirrah form of address to an inferior 165 road prostitute (one to be ridden, open to all) 170 jerkins jackets 171 drawers tavern waiters 173 Jove's case he transformed himself into a bull to seduce Europa 175 weigh with match

II.iii.1 daughter daughter-in-law 2 Give even way allow free passage 4 Percy Northumberland, "the Percy" 8 but except for

Threw many a northward look to see his father
 Bring up his powers, but he did long in vain.
 Who then persuaded you to stay at home? 15
 There were two honors lost, yours and your son's.
 For yours, the God of heaven brighten it!
 For his, it stuck upon him as the sun
 In the gray vault of heaven, and by his light
 Did all the chivalry of England move 20
 To do brave acts. He was indeed the glass^o
 Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves.
 He^o had no legs that practiced not his^o gait;
 And speaking thick,^o which nature made his blemish,
 Became the accents of the valiant, 25
 For those that could speak low and tardily
 Would turn their own perfection to abuse,
 To seem like him. So that in speech, in gait,
 In diet, in affections of delight,^o
 In military rules, humors of blood,^o 30
 He was the mark and glass, copy and book,
 That fashioned others. And him! O wondrous! Him!
 O miracle of men! Him did you leave,
 Second to none, unseconded by you,
 To look upon the hideous god of war 35
 In disadvantage, to abide a field^o
 Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name
 Did seem defensible. So you left him.
 Never, O never, do his ghost the wrong
 To hold your honor more precise and nice^o 40
 With others than with him! Let them alone.
 The marshal and the archbishop are strong.
 Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers,
 Today might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck,
 Have talked of Monmouth's^o grave.

NORTHUMBERLAND Beshrew^o your heart, 45

Fair daughter, you do draw my spirits from me
 With new lamenting ancient oversights.
 But I must go and meet with danger there,
 Or it will seek me in another place
 And find me worse provided.

LADY NORTHUMBERLAND O, fly to Scotland,^o 50
 Till that the nobles and the armed commons
 Have of their puissance^o made a little taste.

LADY PERCY
 If they get ground and vantage of the king,
 Then join you with them, like a rib of steel,
 To make strength stronger. But, for all our loves, 55
 First let them try themselves. So did your son;
 He was so suff'red.^o So came I a widow,
 And never shall have length of life enough
 To rain^o upon remembrance with mine eyes,
 That it may grow and sprout as high as heaven, 60
 For recordation^o to my noble husband.

NORTHUMBERLAND
 Come, come, go in with me. 'Tis with my mind
 As with the tide swelled up unto his height,

21 glass looking glass 23 He any man; his Harry Percy's 24 thick fast (crowding the words) 29 affections of delight preferences in pleasure 30 humors of blood disposition 36 abide a field endure on a battlefield 40 nice punctilious 45 Monmouth's Prince Hal's; Beshrew cursed be 50 Scotland
 i.e., far from the battle 52 puissance strength 57 suff'red allowed (to fight alone) 59 rain drop tears 61 recordation
 memorial

That makes a still-stand, running neither way.
 Fain would I go to meet the archbishop,
 But many thousand reasons hold me back.
 I will resolve for Scotland. There am I,
 Till time and vantage° crave my company. Exeunt.

[Scene IV. Mistress Quickly's tavern.]

Enter a DRAWER or two [FRANCIS and another].

FRANCIS What the devil hast thou brought there?
 Apple-johns?° Thou knowest Sir John cannot endure an apple-john.

DRAWER Mass, thou say'st true. The prince once set a dish of apple-johns before him, and told him there were five more Sir Johns, and, putting off his hat, said,
 "I will now take my leave of these six dry, round, old withered knights." It ang' red him to the heart. But he hath forgot that.

FRANCIS Why, then, cover,° and set them down. 10
 And see if thou canst find out Sneak's noise.° Mistress
 Tearsheet would fain hear some music.

Enter WILL [a third drawer].

WILL Dispatch! The room where they supped is too hot. They'll come in straight.

FRANCIS Sirrah, here will be the prince and Master 15
 Pains anon, and they will put on two of our jerkins and aprons, and Sir John must not know of it. Bardolph hath brought word.

DRAWER By the mass, here will be old Utis.° It will be an excellent stratagem. 20

FRANCIS I'll see if I can find out Sneak. Exit.

Enter Mistress Quickly [the HOSTESS] and DOLL Tearsheet.

HOSTESS I' faith, sweetheart, methinks now you are in an excellent good temperality.° Your pulsidge° beats as extraordinarily as heart would desire, and your color, I warrant you, is as red as any rose, in good 25 truth, la! But, i' faith, you have drunk too much canaries,° and that's a marvelous searching wine, and it perfumes the blood ere one can say, "What's this?"
 How do you now?

DOLL Better than I was. Hem! 30

HOSTESS Why, that's well said. A good heart's worth gold. Lo, here comes Sir John.

Enter Sir John [FALSTAFF].

FALSTAFF [Sings.] "When Arthur first in court"°—
 Empty the jordan!°—"And was a worthy king."°—
 How now, Mistress Doll! 35

HOSTESS Sick of a calm,° yea, good faith.

FALSTAFF So is all her sect.° And they be once in a calm, they are sick.

68 vantage profitable opportunity

II.iv.2 Apple-johns apples ripened on Saint John's Day, midsummer, but eaten two years later when withered—
 perhaps they remind Sir John of age or impotency 10 cover spread the tablecloth 11 noise band of musicians 19 old Utis grand festival (utaves was the eighth day or "octave" of a feast) 23 temperality temper or temperance; pulsidge pulse 27 canaries Canary wine 33 When . . . court first line of a ballad 34 jordan chamber pot 36 calm qualm 37
sect prostitutes (love-worshippers)

DOLL A pox damn you, you muddy° rascal, is that all the comfort you give me? 40

FALSTAFF You make fat rascals,° Mistress Doll.

DOLL I make them? Gluttony and diseases make, I make them not.

FALSTAFF If the cook help to make the gluttony, you help to make the diseases, Doll. We catch of you, 45 Doll, we catch of you. Grant that, my poor virtue, grant that.

DOLL Yea, joy, our chains and our jewels.

FALSTAFF "Your brooches, pearls, and ouches."° For to serve bravely is to come halting off, you know. To 50 come off the breach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon the charged chambers° bravely—

DOLL Hang yourself, you muddy conger,° hang yourself! 55

HOSTESS By my troth, this is the old fashion. You two never meet but you fall to some discord. You are both, i' good truth, as rheumatic° as two dry toasts.°
 You cannot one bear with another's confirmities.°
 What the goodyear!° One must bear,° and that must 60 be you [to DOLL]. You are the weaker vessel, as they say, the emptier vessel.

DOLL Can a weak empty vessel bear such a huge full hogshead? There's a whole merchant's venture of Bordeaux stuff° in him. You have not seen a hulk 65 better stuffed in the hold. Come, I'll be friends with thee, Jack. Thou art going to the wars, and whether
 I shall ever see thee again or no, there is nobody cares.

Enter DRAWER.

DRAWER Sir, Ancient° Pistol's below and would speak with you. 70

DOLL Hang him, swaggering° rascal! Let him not come hither. It is the foul-mouthed'st rogue in England.

HOSTESS If he swagger, let him not comè here. No, by my faith. I must live among my neighbors. I'll no 75 swaggerers. I am in good name and fame with the very best. Shut the door, there comes no swaggerers here. I have not lived all this while to have swaggering
 now. Shut the door, I pray you.

FALSTAFF Dost thou hear, hostess? 80

HOSTESS Pray ye, pacify yourself, Sir John. There comes no swaggerers here.

FALSTAFF Dost thou hear? It is mine ancient.

HOSTESS Tilly-fally, Sir John, ne'er tell me. And your ancient swagg'rer comes not in my doors. I was 85 before Master Tisick,° the debuty, t' other day, and, as he said to me, 'twas no longer ago than Wednesday last, "I' good faith, neighbor Quickly,"

39 muddy filthy 41 You . . . rascals a rascal was a lean deer—you say or cause the lean to fat, i.e., become bloated or to sweat as a cure for the pox 49 Your . . . ouches another scrap of ballad; "ouches" are both brooches and scabs 52–53 charged chambers loaded cannon (used, like other words in this speech, with a bawdy second meaning) 54 conger eel 58 rheumatic she means splenetic or choleric, the hot and dry humor—like toast; dry toasts that would scratch one another 59 confirmities infirmities 60 What the goodyear What the plague!; bear (1) endure (2) support 64–65 merchant's
 . . . stuff shipload of wine 69 Ancient ensign, standard-bearer 71 swaggering blustering 86 Tisick phthisic, consumption (?)

says he—Master Dumbe, our minister, was by then —“neighbor Quickly,” says he, “receive those that 90 are civil, for,” said he, “you are in an ill name.” Now ‘a said so, I can tell whereupon. “For,” says he, “you are an honest woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed what guests you receive. Receive,” says he, “no swaggering companions.”° There comes 95 none here. You would bless you to hear what he said. No, I’ll no swagg’ers.

FALSTAFF He’s no swagg’rer, hostess, a tame cheater,° i’ faith. You may stroke him as gently as a puppy greyhound. He’ll not swagger with a Barbary hen,° 100 if her feathers turn back in any show of resistance. Call him up, drawer. [Exit DRAWER.]

HOSTESS Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater. But I do not love swaggering, by my troth. I am the worse when one 105 says “swagger.” Feel, masters, how I shake, look you, I warrant you.

DOLL So you do, hostess.

HOSTESS Do I? Yea, in very truth, do I, and ’twere an aspen leaf. I cannot abide swagg’ers. 110

Enter Ancient PISTOL, [BARDOLPH], and Bardolph’s boy [PAGE].

PISTOL God save you, Sir John!

FALSTAFF Welcome, Ancient Pistol.° Here, Pistol, I charge° you with a cup of sack. Do you discharge° upon mine hostess.

PISTOL I will discharge upon her, Sir John, with two 115 bullets.°

FALSTAFF She is pistol-proof, sir; you shall not hardily° offend her.

HOSTESS Come, I’ll drink no proofs nor no bullets. I’ll drink no more than will do me good, for no man’s 120 pleasure, I.

PISTOL Then to you, Mistress Dorothy; I will charge you.

DOLL Charge me! I scorn you, scurvy companion. What! You poor, base, rascally, cheating, lack-linen 125 mate! Away, you moldy rogue, away! I am meat° for your master.

PISTOL I know you, Mistress Dorothy.

DOLL Away, you cut-purse rascal! You filthy bung,° away! By this wine, I’ll thrust my knife in your 130 moldy chaps,° and you play the saucy cuttle° with me. Away, you bottle-ale° rascal! You basket-hilt stale juggler,° you! Since when, I pray you, sir? God’s light, with two points° on your shoulder? Much! 135

PISTOL God let me not live but I will murder your ruff° for this.

95 companions fellows 98 cheater cardsharp’s decoy 100 Barbary hen guinea hen (whose feathers are already ruffled; also, a prostitute) 112 Pistol pronounced almost like pizzle (= penis) hence leading to this series of obscene puns 113 charge (1) toast (2) load (a pistol); discharge go off (i.e., sound a return toast, explode like a pistol—or sexually 116 bullets an indecency 117–18 not hardily by no means 126 meat flesh 129 bung pickpocket 131 chaps cheeks; cuttle (1) cutthroat (2) cuttlefish (that spews out a fluid used for sauce) 132 bottle-ale cheap (?) 132–33 basket-hilt stale juggler doer of sword-tricks with an old-fashioned sword with hilt shaped like a basket 134 points laces for tying on armor 136–37 murder your ruff tear your collar

FALSTAFF No more, Pistol; I would not have you go off here. Discharge yourself of our company, Pistol.

HOSTESS No, good Captain Pistol, not here, sweet 140 captain.

DOLL Captain! Thou abominable damned cheater, art thou not ashamed to be called captain? And captains were of my mind, they would truncheon° you out for taking their names upon you before you 145 have earned them. You a captain! You slave, for what? For tearing a poor whore’s ruff in a bawdy house? He a captain! Hang him, rogue! He lives upon moldy stewed prunes° and dried cakes. A captain! God’s light, these villains will make the 150 word as odious as the word “occupy,”° which was an excellent good word before it was ill sorted.° Therefore captains° had need look to’t.

BARDOLPH Pray thee, go down, good ancient.

FALSTAFF Hark thee hither, Mistress Doll. 155

PISTOL Not I! I tell thee what, Corporal Bardolph, I could tear her! I’ll be revenged of her!

PAGE Pray thee, go down.

PISTOL I’ll see her damned first, to Pluto’s damnèd lake,° by this hand, to th’ infernal deep, with Erebus° 160 and tortures vile also.° Hold hook and line,° say I. Down, down, dogs! Down, faitors!° Have we not Hiren° here?

HOSTESS Good Captain Pizzle, be quiet. ’Tis very late, i’ faith. I beseek you now, aggravate° your choler. 165

PISTOL These be good humors, indeed! Shall packhorses And hollow pampered jades° of Asia, Which cannot go but thirty mile a day, Compare with Caesars, and with Cannibals,° And Trojan Greeks? Nay, rather damn them with 170 King Cerberus,° and let the welkin° roar. Shall we fall foul for toys?°

HOSTESS By my troth, captain, these are very bitter words.

BARDOLPH Be gone, good ancient. This will grow 175 to a brawl anon.

PISTOL Die men like dogs! Give crowns like pins! Have we not Hiren here?

HOSTESS O’ my word, captain, there’s none such here. What the goodyear! Do you think I would deny 180 her?° For God’s sake, be quiet.

PISTOL

Then feed, and be fat, my fair Calipolis.

Come, give’s some sack.

“Si fortune me tormente, sperato me contento.”°

144 truncheon cudgel 149 stewed prunes put in the windows of brothels, “stews,” as a sign 151 occupy had acquired the sense of “fornicate” 152 ill sorted put in bad company 153 captains Falstaff is a captain 160 lake he means the river Styx; Erebus passageway to Hades 161 and . . . also Pistol begins to rave in his characteristic way, spewing out garbled scraps from old declamatory plays—or, indeed, any line that comes to his mind; Hold . . . line a fisherman’s cry 162 faitors fates (?) 163 Hiren Pistol applies this name (Irene) from a play to his sword, punning on iron 165 aggravate she means moderate 167 jades nags 169 Cannibals he means Hannibals 171 Cerberus three-headed dog that guarded Hades; welkin sky 172 toys trivia (like Doll) 180–81 deny her the Hostess evidently thinks Pistol is calling for a special girl 184 Si . . . contento a garbled proverb—“If fortune torments me, hope contents me”

Fear we broadsides? No, let the fiend give fire. 185
Give me some sack. And, sweetheart, lie thou there.
[Lays down his sword.]

Come we to full points° here, and are etceteras° no things?°

FALSTAFF Pistol, I would be quiet.

PISTOL Sweet knight, I kiss thy neaf.° What! We have seen the seven stars.° 190

DOLL For God's sake, thrust him downstairs. I cannot endure such a fustian° rascal.

PISTOL Thrust him downstairs! Know we not Galloway nags?°

FALSTAFF Quoit° him down, Bardolph, like a shove-groat shilling.° Nay, and 'a do nothing but speak nothing, 'a shall be nothing here. 195

BARDOLPH Come, get you downstairs.

PISTOL

What! Shall we have incision? Shall we imbrue?°

[Snatches up his sword.]

Then death rock me asleep, abridge my doleful days! 200

Why, then, let grievous, ghastly, gaping wounds

Untwined the Sisters Three!° Come, Atropos, I say!

HOSTESS Here's goodly stuff toward!

FALSTAFF Give me my rapier, boy.

DOLL I pray thee, Jack, I pray thee, do not draw. 205

FALSTAFF Get you downstairs!

[Draws, and threatens PISTOL.]

HOSTESS Here's a goodly tumult! I'll forswear keeping house afore I'll be in these tiritts° and frights.

So, murder, I warrant now. Alas, alas! Put up your naked weapons, put up your naked weapons. 210

[FALSTAFF drives PISTOL out, BARDOLPH following.]

DOLL I pray thee, Jack, be quiet. The rascal's gone.

Ah, you whoreson little valiant villain, you!

HOSTESS Are you not hurt i' th' groin? Methought 'a made a shrewd thrust at your belly.

[Enter BARDOLPH.]

FALSTAFF Have you turned him out o' doors? 215

BARDOLPH Yea, sir. The rascal's drunk. You have hurt him, sir, i' th' shoulder.

FALSTAFF A rascal! To brave° me!

DOLL Ah, you sweet little rogue, you! Alas, poor ape, how thou sweat'st! Come, let me wipe thy face. 220

'Come on, you whoreson chops.° Ah, rogue! I' faith, I love thee. Thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon, and ten times better than the Nine Worthies.° Ah, villain!

187 full points stops, periods (closed sentences); etceteras open-ended statements—with an obscene sense); no things with a second meaning: women who are "naughty"; the line as a whole means: Aren't we going to do anything more here? 189 kiss thy neaf kiss thy fist (a chivalric gesture) 190 seven stars the Pleiades (we have made a night of it) 192 fustian cheap cloth or talk 194 Galloway nags small Irish horses (bad to ride) 195 Quoit pitch (with a pun on quiet) 195-96 shove-groat shilling coin used in a game like shuffleboard ("shove-ha'penny") 199 imbrue shed blood 202 Sisters Three the Fates who spun the thread of life, cut by the third, Atropos 208 tiritts a blending of terrors and fits (?) 218 brave defy 221 chops fat-cheeked man 224 Nine Worthies Hector, Alexander, Julius Caesar, Joshua, David, Judas Maccabaeus, King Arthur, Charlemagne, Godfrey of Bouillon

FALSTAFF A rascally slave! I will toss the rogue in a 225 blanket.

DOLL Do, and thou dar'st for thy heart. And thou dost, I'll canvas° thee between a pair of sheets.

[Enter MUSICIANS.]

PAGE The music is come, sir.

FALSTAFF Let them play. Play, sirs. Sit on my knee, 230

Doll. A rascal bragging slave! The rogue fled from me like quicksilver.

DOLL I' faith [aside] and thou followedst him like a church. Thou whoreson little tidy Bartholomew boar-pig,° when wilt thou leave fighting o' days and 235 foining° o' nights, and begin to patch up thine old body for heaven?

Enter PRINCE and POINS [disguised].

FALSTAFF Peace, good Doll! Do not speak like a death's-head.° Do not bid me remember mine end.°

DOLL Sirrah, what humor's the prince° of? 240

FALSTAFF A good shallow young fellow. 'A would have made a good pantler,° 'a would ha' chipped° bread well.

DOLL They say Poins has a good wit.

FALSTAFF He a good wit? Hang him, baboon! His 245 wit's as thick as Tewksbury mustard.° There's no more conceit° in him than is in a mallet.°

DOLL Why does the prince love him so, then?

FALSTAFF Because their legs are both of a bigness, and 'a plays at quoits well, and eats conger and fennel,° 250 and drinks off candles' ends for flap-dragons,° and rides the wild-mare° with the boys, and jumps upon joined-stools,° and swears with a good grace, and wears his boots very smooth, like unto the Sign of the Leg,° and breeds no bate° with telling of discreet 255 stories; and such other gambol° faculties 'a has, that show a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admits him. For the prince himself is such another; the weight of a hair will turn scales between their avoirdupois. 260

PRINCE Would not this nave° of a wheel have his ears cut off?

POINS Let's beat him before his whore.

PRINCE Look, whe'r° the withered elder° hath not his poll° clawed° like a parrot. 265

POINS Is it not strange that desire should so many years outlive performance?

228 canvas toss (as in a canvas) 234-35 Bartholomew boar-pig young male pig fattened as a special delicacy for the Bartholomew Fair on August 24 at West Smithfield 236 foining thrusting (as a sword) 239 death's-head figure of a skull used to remind one of mortality; end double sense 240 prince Doll may have spied Hal and Poins 242 pantler pantryworker; chipped chopped 246 Tewksbury mustard Tewksbury was famed for good mustard 247 conceit conception; mallet i.e., a blockhead 250 conger and fennel eel (the eating of which was thought to make one stupid) dressed or flattered by fennel sauce 251 flap-dragons flaming raisins were floated on spirit and the players tried to snap them up, or drink the liquor; here candle ends are used to fool Poins 252 wild-mare seesaw 253 joined-stools carefully carpentered stools 254-55 Sign of the Leg sign over a bootmaker's 255 bate debate, quarrel 256 gambol playful 261 nave (1) fat hub on a cart wheel (2) pun on knave 264 whe'r whether; elder (1) old man (2) sapless tree 265 poll hair; clawed by Doll

FALSTAFF Kiss me, Doll.

PRINCE Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction!
What says th' almanac to that? 270

POINS And look whether the fiery Trigon,^o his man, be not lisping to his master's old tables,^o his notebook,
his counsel-keeper.

FALSTAFF Thou dost give me flattering busses.^o

DOLL By my troth, I kiss thee with a most constant 275
heart.

FALSTAFF I am old, I am old.

DOLL I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young boy of them all.

FALSTAFF What stuff wilt have a kirtle^o of? I shall 280 receive money o' Thursday. Shalt have a cap tomorrow.
A merry song, come. 'A grows late; we'll to bed.
Thou'lt forget me when I am gone.

DOLL By my troth, thou'lt set me a-weeping, and thou say'st so. Prove that ever I dress myself handsome 285 till thy return. Well, hearken o' th' end.^o

FALSTAFF Some sack, Francis.

PRINCE, POINS Anon, anon, sir.

[Coming forward.]

FALSTAFF Ha! A bastard son of the king's? And art not thou Poins his brother? 290

PRINCE Why, thou globe of sinful continents,^o what a life doth thou lead!

FALSTAFF A better than thou. I am a gentleman, thou art a drawer.

PRINCE Very true, sir, and I come to draw you out 295
by the ears.

HOSTESS O, the Lord preserve thy grace! By my troth, welcome to London. Now, the Lord bless that sweet face of thine! O Jesu, are you come from Wales?

FALSTAFF Thou whoreson mad compound^o of 300 majesty, by this light^o flesh and corrupt blood, thou art welcome.

DOLL How, you fat fool! I scorn you.

POINS My lord, he will drive you out of your revenge and turn all to a merriment, if you take not the heat. 305

PRINCE You whoreson candle-mine^o you, how vilely did you speak of me now before this honest, virtuous, civil gentlewoman!

HOSTESS God's blessing of your good heart! And so she is, by my troth. 310

FALSTAFF Didst thou hear me?

PRINCE Yea, and you knew me, as you did when you ran away by Gad's Hill.^o You knew I was at your back, and spoke it on purpose to try my patience.

FALSTAFF No, no, no, not so. I did not think thou 315 wast within hearing.

PRINCE I shall drive you then to confess the willful abuse, and then I know how to handle you.

FALSTAFF No abuse, Hal, o' mine honor, no abuse.

PRINCE Not to dispraise me and call me pantler and 320 bread-chipper and I know not what?

FALSTAFF No abuse, Hal.

POINS No abuse?

FALSTAFF No abuse, Ned, i' the' world. Honest Ned, none. I dispraised him before the wicked, that the 325 wicked might not fall in love with thee. In which doing, I have done the part of a careful friend and a true subject, and thy father is to give me thanks for it. No abuse, Hal. None, Ned, none. No, faith, boys,
none. 330

PRINCE See now, whether pure fear and entire cowardice doth not make thee wrong this virtuous gentlewoman to close^o with us. Is she of the wicked?
Is thine hostess here of the wicked? Or is thy boy of the wicked? Or honest Bardolph, whose zeal burns in 335 his nose, of the wicked?

POINS Answer, thou dead elm, answer.

FALSTAFF The fiend hath pricked down^o Bardolph irrecoverable, and his face is Lucifer's privy-kitchen, where he doth nothing but roast malt-worms.^o For 340 the boy, there is a good angel about him, but the devil blinds him too.

PRINCE For the women?

FALSTAFF For one of them, she's in hell already, and burns^o poor souls. For th' other, I owe her money, 345 and whether she be damned for that, I know not.

HOSTESS No, I warrant you.

FALSTAFF No, I think thou art not. I think thou art quit for that.^o Marry, there is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh^o to be eaten in thy house, 350 contrary to the law, for the which I think thou wilt howl.

HOSTESS All victuallers do so. What's a joint of mutton^o or two in a whole Lent?

PRINCE You, gentlewoman— 355

DOLL What says your grace?

FALSTAFF His grace says that which his flesh rebels against.^o

PETO knocks at door.

HOSTESS Who knocks so loud at door? Look to th' door there, Francis. 360

[Enter PETO.]

PRINCE

Peto, how now! What news?

PETO

The king your father is at Westminster,
And there are twenty weak and wearied posts^o
Come from the north. And as I came along 365
I met and overtook a dozen captains,
Bareheaded, sweating, knocking at the taverns,
And asking everyone for Sir John Falstaff.

PRINCE

By heaven, Poins, I feel me much to blame,

333 close make peace 338 pricked down checked off 340 malt-worms (1) weevils in beer (2) drunkards (3) the white material in Bardolph's pimples 345 burns gives burning diseases to 349 quit for that paid off for that 350 flesh
(1) meat (2) womanflesh 354 mutton also meant a prostitute 357-58 His grace . . . against his grace calls her a gentlewoman, but his animal flesh rises up at the idea 363 posts messengers

271 fiery Trigon the conjunction of the three fiery signs of the Zodiac: Aries, Leo, and Sagittarius (in Bardolph's face) 272 tables tablet or engagement book (i.e., bawd, Mistress Quickly) 274 busses kisses 280 kirtle skirt 286 hearken . . . end see how it turns out 291 continents (1) vast land surfaces
(2) contents (3) pun on continence 300 compound mixture 301 light unchaste (he is referring to Doll) 306 candle-mine reservoir of tallow 312-13 as . . . Hill the robbery of the robbers in 1 Henry IV, II.ii. and II.iv

So idly to profane the precious time,
When tempest of commotion,^o like the south^o 370
Borne with black vapor,^o doth begin to melt
And drop upon our bare unarmèd heads.
Give me my sword and cloak. Falstaff, good night.

Exeunt PRINCE and POINS, [PETO, and BARDOLPH].

FALSTAFF Now comes in the sweetest morsel of the night, and we must hence and leave it unpicked. 375 [Sound of knocking.] More knocking at the door?
[Enter BARDOLPH.] How now! What's the matter?

BARDOLPH

You must away to court, sir, presently.^o

A dozen captains stay at door for you.

FALSTAFF [To the PAGE.] Pay the musicians, sirrah. 380
Farewell, hostess. Farewell, Doll. You see, my good wenches, how men of merit are sought after. The undeserver may sleep when the man of action is called on. Farewell, good wenches. If I be not sent away post,^o I will see you again ere I go. 385

DOLL I cannot speak. If my heart be not ready to burst—well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

FALSTAFF Farewell, farewell. Exit [with BARDOLPH].

HOSTESS Well, fare thee well. I have known thee these twenty-nine years, come peascod-time,^o but an 390
honester and truer-hearted man—well, fare thee well.

BARDOLPH [Within.] Mistress Tearsheet!

HOSTESS What's the matter?

BARDOLPH [Within.] Bid Mistress Tearsheet come to my master. 395

HOSTESS O, run, Doll, run, run, good Doll. Come.
[To BARDOLPH within.] She comes blubbered.^o Yea, will you come, Doll? Exeunt.

[A C T I I I]

[Scene I. The palace.]

Enter the KING in his nightgown,^o alone.

KING [To a PAGE, within.]

Go, call the Earls of Surrey and of Warwick.

But, ere they come, bid them o'erread these letters
And well consider of them. Make good speed!

How many thousand of my poorest subjects
Are at this hour asleep! O sleep, O gentle sleep, 5
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frightened thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down
And steep my senses in forgetfulness?

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,^o

Upon uneasy pallets^o stretching thee 10
And hushed with buzzing night-flies^o to thy slumber,
Than in the perfumed^o chambers of the great,

370 commotion rebellion; south south wind 371 Borne
. . . vapor laden with black clouds 378 presently at present, at once 385 post posthaste 390 peascod-time early summer (but there is evidently a ribald sense, too) 397 blubbered
disfigured with weeping

III.i.s.d. nightgown dressing gown (the customary indoor garment) 9 smoky cribs chimneyless hovels 10 uneasy
pallets comfortless straw beds 11 night-flies nocturnal insects 12 perfumed Elizabethans who could afford perfume tried to keep out fresh air

Under the canopies of costly state,^o

And lulled with sound of sweetest melody?

O thou dull god, why li'st thou with the vile 15

In loathsome beds, and leavest the kindly couch

A watchcase^o or a common 'larum-bell?^o

Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast

Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains

In cradle of the rude imperious surge 20

And in the visitation of the winds,

Who take the ruffian billows by the top,

Curling their monstrous heads and hanging them

With deafing^o clamor in the slippery clouds,

That, with the hurly,^o death itself awakes? 25

Canst thou, O partial^o sleep, give thy repose

To the wet sea-son in an hour so rude,

And in the calmest and most stillest night,

With all appliances and means to boot,^o

Deny it to a king? Then happy low,^o lie down! 30

Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

Enter WARWICK, SURREY, and Sir John BLUNT.

WARWICK

Many good morrows to your majesty!

KING

Is it good morrow, lords?

WARWICK

'Tis one o'clock, and past.

KING

Why, then, good morrow to you all, my lords. 35

Have you read o'er the letter that I sent you?

WARWICK

We have, my liege.

KING

Then you perceive the body of our kingdom

How foul it is, what rank^o diseases grow,

And with what danger, near the heart of it. 40

WARWICK

It is but as a body yet distempered,^o

Which to his former strength may be restored

With good advice and little medicine.

My Lord Northumberland will soon be cooled.

KING

O God, that one might read the book of fate, 45

And see the revolution of the times

Make mountains level, and the continent,^o

Weary of solid firmness, melt itself

Into the sea! And other times to see

The beachy girdle of the ocean 50

Too wide for Neptune's hips. How chances, mocks,

And changes fill the cup of alteration

With divers liquors! O, if this were seen,

The happiest youth, viewing his progress through, 55

What perils past, what crosses^o to ensue,

Would shut the book, and sit him down and die.

'Tis not ten years gone

Since Richard and Northumberland, great friends,

13 canopies . . . state bed-curtains of those in a wealthy state
17 watchcase (1) sentry box (2) case of a constantly ticking watch; 'larum-bell alarm-bell (hence, constantly watchful) 24 deafing deafening 25 hurly hurly-burly 26 partial not impartial 29 means to boot measures to further (sleep) 30 low lowborn 39 rank swelling 41 yet distempered as yet but sickened 47 continent land surface 55 crosses punishments

Did feast together,^o and in two years after
 Were they at wars. It is but eight years since 60
 This Percy was the man nearest my soul,
 Who like a brother toiled in my affairs
 And laid his love and life under my foot,^o
 Yea, for my sake, even to the eyes of Richard Gave him defiance. But which of you was by— 65
 [To WARWICK.] You, cousin Nevil,^o as I may remember—

When Richard, with his eye brimful of tears,
 Then checked^o and rated^o by Northumberland,
 Did speak these words, now proved a prophecy:
 "Northumberland, thou ladder by the which 70
 My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne"—
 Though then, God knows, I had no such intent,
 But that necessity so bowed the state
 That I and greatness were compelled to kiss—
 "The time shall come," thus did he follow it, 75
 "The time will come that foul sin, gathering head,^o Shall break into corruption." So went on,
 Foretelling this same time's condition
 And the division of our amity.

WARWICK

There is a history in all men's lives, 80
 Figuring^o the nature of the times deceased,
 The which observed, a man may prophesy,
 With a near aim, of the main chance of things
 As yet not come to life, who in their seeds
 And weak beginning lie intreasurèd. 85
 Such things become the hatch and brood of time,
 And by the necessary form of this^o
 King Richard might create a perfect guess
 That great Northumberland, then false to him,
 Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness,
 Which should not find a ground to root upon,
 Unless on you.

KING Are these things then necessities?
 Then let us meet them like necessities.
 And that same word even now cries out on us.
 They say the bishop and Northumberland 95
 Are fifty thousand strong.

WARWICK It cannot be, my lord.
 Rumor doth double, like the voice and echo,
 The numbers of the feared. Please it your grace
 To go to bed. Upon my soul, my lord,
 The powers that you already have sent forth 100
 Shall bring this prize in very easily.
 To comfort you the more, I have received
 A certain instance^o that Glendower is dead.
 Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill,
 And these unseasoned^o hours perforce must add 105
 Unto your sickness.

KING I will take your counsel.
 And were these inward^o wars once out of hand,^o
 We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land. Exeunt.

59 Did feast together Shakespeare here alters history for dramatic purposes; this appears neither in Holinshed nor in his own Richard II 63 under my foot in subservience to me 66 Nevil historical error for Beauchamps 68 checked, rated rebuked 76 gathering head (1) coming to a head (2) collecting an army 70-77 Northumberland . . . corruption paraphrased from Richard II, V.i.55 ff. 81 Figuring symbolizing 87 necessary . . . this inevitable operation of this principle of analogy 103 instance proof 105 unseasoned unusual 107 inward internal; out of hand finished

[Scene II. Outside Justice Shallow's house.]

Enter Justice SHALLOW and Justice SILENCE [with MOLDY, SHADOW, WART, FEEBLE, BULLCALF].

SHALLOW Come on, come on, come on. Give me your hand, sir, give me your hand, sir; an early stirrer, by the rood!^o And how doth my good cousin Silence?

SILENCE Good morrow, good cousin Shallow.

SHALLOW And how doth my cousin, your bedfellow? 5
 And your fairest daughter and mine, my goddaughter Ellen?

SILENCE Alas, a black ousel,^o cousin Shallow!

SHALLOW By yea and no,^o sir, I dare say my cousin William is become a good scholar. He is at Oxford 10 still, is he not?

SILENCE Indeed, sir, to my cost.

SHALLOW 'A must, then, to the Inns o' Court^o shortly. I was once of Clement's Inn,^o where I think they will talk of mad Shallow yet. 15

SILENCE You were called "lusty Shallow" then, cousin.

SHALLOW By the mass, I was called anything. And I would have done anything indeed too, and roundly^o too. There was I, and little John Doit of Staffordshire, 20 and black George Barnes, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Squele,^o a Cotswold^o man; you had not four such swinge-bucklers^o in all the Inns o' Court again. And I may say to you we knew where the bona-robas^o were and had the best of them all at commandment. 25
 Then was Jack Falstaff, now Sir John, a boy, and page to Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk.

SILENCE This Sir John, cousin, that comes hither anon about soldiers?

SHALLOW The same Sir John, the very same. I see 30 him break Scoggin's^o head at the court-gate, when 'a was a crack^o not thus high. And the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Stockfish,^o a fruiterer, behind Gray's Inn.^o Jesu, Jesu, the mad days that I have spent! And to see how many of my old acquaint- 35
 tance are dead!

SILENCE We shall all follow, cousin.

SHALLOW Certain, 'tis certain, very sure, very sure. Death, as the psalmist saith, is certain to all, all shall die. How^o a good yoke of bullocks at Stamford Fair? 40

SILENCE By my troth, I was not there.

SHALLOW Death is certain. Is old Double^o of your town living yet? 100

SILENCE Dead, sir.

SHALLOW Jesu, Jesu, dead! 'A drew a good bow, and 45 dead! 'A shot a fine shoot. John a Gaunt^o loved him

III.ii.3 rood cross 8 ousel blackbird 9 By . . . no a puritan's oath 13 Inns o' Court law schools (which functioned as universities for the gentry) 14 Clement's Inn one of the Inns of Chancery, admitting students unable to get into the Inns of Court 19 roundly fully 20-22 Doit . . . Barnes . . . Pickbone . . . Squele the names are suggestive of insignificance, a doit being a half-farthing; country wealth (barns); stinginess; squealing cowardice 22 Cotswold a range of hills in Gloucestershire 23 swinge-bucklers shield-beaters i.e., blusterers) 24 bona-robas high-class whores (Italian buon-aroba = good material) 31 Scoggin's the name means a coarse joker 32 crack perky boy 33 Stockfish a dried fish (suggestive of an impotent man) 34 Gray's Inn another Inn of Court 40 How how much for 42 Double suggests one doubled over with age 46 John a Gaunt Henry IV's father well and betted much money on his head. Dead! 'A would have clapped i' th' clout at twelve score, and carried you a forehand shaft a fourteen and fourteen and a half,^o that it would have done a man's heart so good to see. How a score of ewes now?

SILENCE Thereafter as they be.^o A score of good ewes may be worth ten pounds.

SHALLOW And is old Double dead?

SILENCE Here come two of Sir John Falstaff's men, as 55 I think.

Enter BARDOLPH and one with him.

Good morrow, honest gentlemen.

BARDOLPH I beseech you, which is Justice Shallow?

SHALLOW I am Robert Shallow, sir, a poor esquire^o of this county, and one of the king's justices of the 60 peace. What is your good pleasure with me?

BARDOLPH My captain, sir, commends him to you, my captain, Sir John Falstaff, a tall^o gentleman, by heaven, and a most gallant leader.

SHALLOW He greets me well, sir. I knew him a good 65 backsword^o man. How doth the good knight? May I ask how my lady his wife doth?

BARDOLPH Sir, pardon, a soldier is better accommodated^o than with a wife.

SHALLOW It is well said, in faith, sir, and it is well said 70 indeed too. "Better accommodated"! It is good, yea, indeed, is it. Good phrases are surely, and ever were, very commendable. "Accommodated"! It comes of "accommodo." Very good, a good phrase.

BARDOLPH Pardon, sir. I have heard the word. 75 "Phrase" call you it? By this good day, I know not the phrase, but I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldierlike word, and a word of exceeding good command, by heaven. "Accommodated," that is, when a man is, as they say, 80 accommodated; or when a man is, being, whereby 'a may be thought to be accommodated, which is an excellent thing.

Enter FALSTAFF.

SHALLOW It is very just.^o Look, here comes good Sir John. Give me your good hand, give me your wor- 85 ship's good hand. By my troth, you like^o well and bear your years very well. Welcome, good Sir John.

FALSTAFF I am glad to see you well, good Master Robert Shallow. Master Surecard,^o as I think?

SHALLOW No, Sir John, it is my cousin Silence, in 90 commission^o with me.

FALSTAFF Good Master Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

SILENCE Your good worship is welcome.

FALSTAFF Fie! This is hot weather, gentlemen. Have 95 you provided me here half a dozen sufficient men?

SHALLOW Marry, have we, sir. Will you sit?

FALSTAFF Let me see them, I beseech you.

SHALLOW Where's the roll? Where's the roll?

Where's the roll? Let me see, let me see, let me see. So, 100 so, so, so so, so—so. Yea, marry, sir. Rafe Moldy! Let them appear as I call, let them do so, let them do so. Let me see, where is Moldy?

MOLDY Here, and't please you.

SHALLOW What think you, Sir John? A good-limbed 105 fellow, young, strong, and of good friends.

FALSTAFF Is thy name Moldy?

MOLDY Yea, and't please you.

FALSTAFF 'Tis the more time thou wert used.

SHALLOW Ha, ha, ha! Most excellent, i' faith! Things 110 that are moldy lack use. Very singular good! In faith, well said, Sir John, very well said.

FALSTAFF Prick him.^o

MOLDY I was pricked^o well enough before, and you could have let me alone. My old dame^o will be undone 115 now for one to do her husbandry and her drudgery. You need not to have pricked me. There are other men fitter to go out than I.

FALSTAFF Go to. Peace, Moldy, you shall go. Moldy, 120 it is time you were spent.

MOLDY Spent?

SHALLOW Peace, fellow, peace. Stand aside. Know you where you are? For th' other, Sir John, let me see. Simon Shadow!^o

FALSTAFF Yea, marry, let me have him to sit under. 125 He's like to be a cold soldier.

SHALLOW Where's Shadow?

SHADOW Here, sir.

FALSTAFF Shadow, whose son art thou?

SHADOW My mother's son, sir. 130

FALSTAFF Thy mother's son! Like enough, and thy father's shadow. So the son^o of the female is the shadow of the male. It is often so, indeed, but much^o of the father's substance!

SHALLOW Do you like him, Sir John? 135

FALSTAFF Shadow will serve for summer. Prick him, for we have a number of shadows fill up the muster-book.

SHALLOW Thomas Wart!

FALSTAFF Where's he? 140

WART Here, sir.

FALSTAFF Is thy name Wart?

WART Yea, sir.

FALSTAFF Thou art a very ragged^o wart.

SHALLOW Shall I prick him, Sir John? 145

FALSTAFF It were superfluous,^o for his apparel is built upon his back and the whole frame stands upon pins. Prick him no more.

SHALLOW Ha, ha, ha! You can do it,^o sir! You can do it! I commend you well. Francis Feeble! 150

FEEBLE Here, sir.

48-50 clapped . . . half hit the bull's-eye at 240 yards, and shot a heavy arrow (for point-blank shooting) 280 or 290 yards 52 Thereafter . . . be according to their condition 59 esquire gentleman (ranking just below a knight) 63 tall brave 66 backsword stick with a hilt used by apprentices in fencing 68-69 accommodated provided (a "perfumed term," according to Ben Jonson) 84 just exact 86 like get on 89 Surecard absolute winner (at cards) 90-91 in commission commissioned as justice of the peace

113 Prick him check him off 114 pricked (1) chosen (2) worried (and a ribald third meaning) 115 dame old wife (or mother) 124 Shadow (1) likeness (2) shade (3) fictitious name in the muster roll for which an officer collected pay (Falstaff jokes on all three meanings) 132 son he is punning on sun 133 much little (sarcastic) 144 ragged having rough projections (referring to his pinned-together clothes) 146 superfluous i.e., to "prick him," pin his clothes together 149 you . . . it you know how to joke

SHALLOW What trade art thou, Feeble?

FEEBLE A woman's tailor, sir.

SHALLOW Shall I prick him, sir?

FALSTAFF You may. But if he had been a man's 155 tailor, he'd a' pricked you. Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle° as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat?

FEEBLE I will do my good will, sir. You can have no more.

FALSTAFF Well said, good woman's tailor! Well said, 160 courageous Feeble! Thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove or most magnanimous° mouse. Prick the woman's tailor well,° Master Shallow, deep,° Master Shallow.

FEEBLE I would Wart might have gone, sir.

FALSTAFF I would thou wert a man's tailor, that thou mightst mend him and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to° a private soldier that is the leader of so many thousands.° Let that suffice, most forcible 170 Feeble.

FEEBLE It shall suffice, sir.

FALSTAFF I am bound to thee, reverend Feeble. Who is next?

SHALLOW Peter Bullcalf o' th' green! 175

FALSTAFF Yea, marry, let's see Bullcalf.

BULLCALF Here, sir.

FALSTAFF 'Fore God, a likely fellow! Come, prick°
Bullcalf till he roar again.

BULLCALF O Lord, good my lord captain— 180

FALSTAFF What, dost thou roar before thou art pricked?

BULLCALF O Lord, sir, I am a diseased man.

FALSTAFF What disease hast thou?

BULLCALF A whoreson cold, sir, a cough, sir, which I 185 caught with ringing in° the king's affairs upon his coronation day, sir.

FALSTAFF Come, thou shalt go to the wars in a gown.°
We will have away thy cold, and I will take such order that thy friends shall ring for thee.° Is here all? 190

SHALLOW Here is two more called than your number.
You must have but four° here, sir. And so, I pray you, go in with me to dinner.

FALSTAFF Come, I will go drink with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you, by my troth, 195
Master Shallow.

SHALLOW O, Sir John, do you remember since we lay all night in the Windmill° in Saint George's Field?

FALSTAFF No more of that, Master Shallow.

SHALLOW Ha! 'Twas a merry night, And is Jane 200
Nightwork alive?

FALSTAFF She lives, Master Shallow.

SHALLOW She never could away with° me.

FALSTAFF Never, never, she would always say she could not abide Master Shallow. 205

SHALLOW By the mass, I could anger° her to th' heart. She was then a bona-roba. Doth she hold her own well?

FALSTAFF Old, old, Master Shallow.

SHALLOW Nay, she must be old. She cannot choose 210 but be old. Certain she's old, and had Robin Night-work by old Nightwork before I came to Clement's Inn.

SILENCE That's fifty-five year ago.

SHALLOW Ha, cousin Silence, that thou hadst seen 215 that that this knight and I have seen! Ha, Sir John, said I well?

FALSTAFF We have heard the chimes at midnight,
Master Shallow.

SHALLOW That we have, that we have, that we have, 220 in faith, Sir John, we have. Our watchword was "Hem,° boys!" Come, let's to dinner, come, let's to dinner. Jesus, the days that we have seen! Come,
come.

Exeunt [FALSTAFF and the JUSTICES].
BULLCALF Good Master Corporate° Bardolph, stand 225
my friend, and here's four Harry ten shillings in French crowns° for you. In very truth, sir, I had as lief be hanged, sir, as go. And yet for mine own part, sir, I do not care, but rather, because I am unwilling, and, for mine own part, have a desire to stay with my 230 friends. Else, sir, I did not care, for mine own part, so much.

BARDOLPH Go to, stand aside.

MOLDY And, good Master Corporal Captain, for my dame's sake, stand my friend. She has nobody to do 235 anything about her when I am gone, and she is old and cannot help herself. You shall have forty,° sir.

BARDOLPH Go to, stand aside.

FEEBLE By my troth, I care not. A man can die but once. We owe God a death.° I'll ne'er bear a base 240 mind. And't be my destiny, so. And't be not, so. No man's too good to serve's prince. And let it go which way it will, he that dies this year is quit° for the next.

BARDOLPH Well said. Th' art a good fellow.

FEEBLE Faith, I'll bear no base mind. 245

Enter FALSTAFF and the JUSTICES.

FALSTAFF Come, sir, which men shall I have?

SHALLOW Four of which you please.

BARDOLPH Sir, a word with you. [Aside.] I have three pound to free Moldy and Bullcalf.

FALSTAFF Go to, well.

SHALLOW Come, Sir John, which four will you 250
have?

FALSTAFF Do you choose for me.

SHALLOW Marry, then, Moldy, Bullcalf, Feeble, and Shadow. 255

FALSTAFF Moldy and Bullcalf. For you, Moldy, stay at home till you are past service.° And for your part, Bullcalf, grow till you come unto it. I will none of you.

SHALLOW Sir John, Sir John, do not yourself wrong.

157 battle battle line 163 magnanimous big-spirited 164 well, deep quibbles on Shallow's name 169 put him to set him to the occupation of 170 thousands of lice 178 prick here the word refers to the sticking of a bull with a goad in bullbaiting 186 ringing in ringing the church bells to celebrate 188 gown dressing gown 190 ring for thee toll your funeral 192 four he settles for three 198 Windmill evidently a brothel 203 away with put up with 206 anger inflamm

222 Hem the equivalent of "Bottoms up!" 225 Corporate blunder for corporal 226-27 four . . . crowns a country way of counting out £1: the amount of four pieces, formerly of ten shillings' value but currently five, rendered in five four-shilling pieces, "French crowns"; Bullcalf is offering around $200 in today's values 237 forty forty shillings (about $400 today) 240 death pronounced like debt, hence a pun 243 is quit owes nothing 257 service (1) military (2) domestic
(3) bull's

They are your likeliest men, and I would have you 260 served with the best.

FALSTAFF Will you tell me, Master Shallow, how to choose a man? Care I for the limb, the thews,^o the stature, bulk, and big assemblance^o of a man? Give me the spirit, Master Shallow! Here's Wart. You see what 265 a ragged appearance it is. 'A shall charge you and discharge you with the motion of a pewterer's hammer,^o come off and on swifter than he that gibbets on the brewer's bucket.^o And this same half-faced fellow, Shadow. Give me this man. He presents no mark to 270
the enemy: the foeman may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife. And for a retreat, how swiftly will this Feeble the woman's tailor run off!
O, give me the spare men, and spare me the great ones. Put me a caliver^o into Wart's hand, Bardolph. 275

BARDOLPH Hold, Wart, traverse.^o Thus, thus, thus.

FALSTAFF Come, manage me your caliver. So. Very well. Go to. Very good, exceeding good. O, give me always a little, lean, old, chopped,^o bald shot.^o Well said, i' faith. Wart. Th'art a good scab.^o Hold, there's 280 a tester^o for thee.

SHALLOW He is not his craft's master, he doth not do it right. I remember at Mile-End Green, when I lay at Clement's Inn—I was then Sir Dagonet in Arthur's show^o—there was a little quiver^o fellow, and 'a would 285 manage you his piece thus, and 'a would about and about, and come you in and come you in. "Rah, tah, tah," would 'a say, "Bounce," would 'a say, and away again would 'a go, and again would 'a come. I shall ne'er see such a fellow. 290

FALSTAFF These fellows would do well, Master Shallow. God keep you, Master Silence. I will not use many words with you. Fare you well, gentlemen both.
I thank you. I must a dozen mile tonight. Bardolph, give the soldiers coats. 295

SHALLOW Sir John, the Lord bless you! God prosper your affairs! God send us peace! At your return visit our house, let our old acquaintance be renewed.
Peradventure I will with ye to the court.

FALSTAFF 'Fore God, would you would. 300

SHALLOW Go to, I have spoke at a word.^o God keep you.

FALSTAFF Fare you well, gentle gentlemen [Exeunt
JUSTICES.] On, Bardolph, lead the men away.
[Exeunt all but FALSTAFF.] As I return, I will fetch 305 off^o these justices. I do see the bottom of Justice Shallow. Lord, Lord, how subject we old men are to this vice of lying! This same starved justice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildness of his youth and the feats he hath done about Turnbull 310 Street,^o and every third word a lie, duer^o paid to the hearer than the Turk's tribute.^o I do remember him at Clement's Inn like a man made after supper of a cheese-paring. When 'a was naked, he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fan- 315 tastically carved upon it with a knife. 'A was so forlorn that his dimensions to any thick^o sight were invisible. 'A was the very genius^o of famine, yet lecherous as a monkey, and the whores called him mandrake.^o 'A came ever in the rearward of the 320 fashion, and sung those tunes to the overscutched huswives^o that he heard the carmen whistle, and sware they were his fancies or his goodnights.^o And now is this Vice's dagger^o become a squire, and talks as familiarly of John a Gaunt as if he had been sworn 325 brother to him, and I'll be sworn 'a ne'er saw him but once in the Tilt-yard, and then he^o burst his head for crowding among the marshal's men. I saw it, and told John a Gaunt he beat his own name, for you might have thrust him and all his apparel into an eelskin— 330

the case of a treble hautboy^o was a mansion for him, a court. And now has he land and beeves. Well, I'll be acquainted with him, if I return, and't shall go hard but I'll make him a philosopher's two stones^o to me.
If the young dace^o be a bait for the old pike, I see no 335 reason in the law of nature but I may snap at him. Let time shape, and there an end. [Exit.]

[A C T I V]

[Scene I. With the rebel army.]

Enter the ARCHBISHOP [of York], MOWBRAY,
HASTINGS [and others], within the Forest of Gaultree.

ARCHBISHOP

What is this forest called?

HASTINGS

'Tis Gaultree Forest, and't shall please your grace.

ARCHBISHOP

Here stand, my lords, and send discoverers^o forth
To know the numbers of our enemies.

HASTINGS

We have sent forth already.

ARCHBISHOP

'Tis well done. 5

My friends and brethren in these great affairs,
I must acquaint you that I have received
New-dated letters from Northumberland,
Their cold intent, tenor, and substance, thus:
Here doth he wish his person, with such powers^o 10
As might hold sortance with his quality,^o

312 than . . . tribute than tribute is paid to the Turk 317 thick imperfect 318 genius spirit 320 mandrake forked root, shaped like the lower half of a man 321-22 over-scutched huswives often-whipped whores 323 his . . .
his goodnights goodnight songs or his own musical improvisations 324 Vice's dagger thin wooden dagger carried by the Vice, clown in the old morality plays 327 he John of Gaunt 331 treble hautboy smallest oboe 334 philosopher's two stones twice as profitable as one philosopher's stone which would transmute base metals to gold—and a ribald second sense 335 dace thin, small fish
IV.i.3 discoverers spies 10 powers armies 11 hold . . .
quality accord with his rank

263 thews bodily forces 264 assemblance appearance 267 motion . . . hammer a rapid tap-tap 268-69 gibbets . . .
bucket hoists with the beam ("bucket") of a brewer's crane 275 caliver light musket 276 traverse cross over 279 chopped chapped; shot shooter (musketeers had to run nimbly behind the pikemen or spearmen to reload) 280 scab wart 281 tester sixpence 284-85 Arthur's show an annual archery show at Mile-End Green in which the contestants took the names of knights of the Round Table; Sir Dagonet was Arthur's fool 285 quiver nimble 301 at a word on an impulse 305-06 fetch off trick 310-11 Turnbull Street
a red-light district 311 duer more duly, regularly

The which he could not levy. Whereupon
He is retired, to ripe° his growing fortunes,
To Scotland, and concludes in hearty prayers
That your attempts may overlive° the hazard
And fearful meeting of° their opposite.

MOWBRAY

Thus do the hopes we have in him touch ground°
And dash themselves to pieces.

Enter MESSENGER.

HASTINGS

Now, what news?

MESSENGER

West of this forest, scarcely off a mile,
In goodly form comes on the enemy,
And, by the ground they hide, I judge their number
Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand.

MOWBRAY

The just proportion that we gave them out.°
Let us sway° on and face them in the field.

ARCHBISHOP

What well-appointed° leader fronts° us here?

Enter WESTMORELAND.

MOWBRAY

I think it is my Lord of Westmoreland.

WESTMORELAND

Health and fair greeting from our general,
The prince, Lord John and Duke of Lancaster.

ARCHBISHOP

Say on, my Lord of Westmoreland, in peace.
What doth concern your coming?

WESTMORELAND

Then, my lord,

Unto your grace do I in chief° address
The substance of my speech. If that rebellion
Came like itself, in base and abject routs,°
Led on by bloody youth, guarded with rage,°
And countenanced° by boys and beggary,°

I say, if damned commotion° so appeared,
In his true, native and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords

Had not been here, to dress the ugly form
Of base and bloody insurrection

With your fair honors. You, Lord Archbishop,
Whose see° is by a civil peace maintained,

Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touched,
Whose learning and good letters° peace hath tutored,
Whose white investments figure° innocence,

The dove and very blessed spirit of peace,
Wherefore do you so ill translate° yourself

Out of the speech of peace that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war,

Turning your books to graves, your ink to blood,

15

20

25

30

35

40

45

50

Your pens to lances, and your tongue divine
To a loud trumpet and a point of war?°

ARCHBISHOP

Wherefore do I this? So the question stands.

Briefly to this end: we are all diseased,
And with our surfeiting and wanton° hours

Have brought ourselves into a burning fever,
And we must bleed° for it. Of which disease

Our late king, Richard, being infected, died.
But, my most noble Lord of Westmoreland,

I take not on me here as a physician,°

Nor do I as an enemy to peace

Troop in the throngs of military men,

But rather show awhile like fearful war,

To diet rank° minds sick of happiness

And purge th' obstructions which begin to stop

Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly.

I have in equal° balance justly weighed

What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,

And find our griefs° heavier than our offenses.

We see which way the stream of time doth run,

And are enforced from our most quiet there

By the rough torrent of occasion,

And have the summary of all our griefs,

When time shall serve, to show in articles;°

Which long ere this we offered to the king,

And might by no suit gain our audience.

When we are wronged and would unfold our griefs,

We are denied access unto his person

Even by those men that most have done us wrong.

The dangers of the days but newly gone,

Whose memory is written on the earth

With yet-appearing blood, and the examples

Of every minute's instance,° present now,

Hath put us in these ill-beseeming arms,

Not to break peace or any branch of it,

But to establish here a peace indeed,

Concurring both in name and quality.°

WESTMORELAND

When ever yet was your appeal denied?

Wherein have you been gallèd° by the king?

What peer hath been suborned to grate on° you,

That you should seal this lawless bloody book

Of forged rebellion with a seal divine?°

ARCHBISHOP

My brother general,° the commonwealth,

I make my quarrel in particular.

WESTMORELAND

There is no need of any such redress,

Or if there were, it not belongs to you.

MOWBRAY

Why not to him in part, and to us all

55

60

65

70

75

80

85

90

95

13 ripe ripen 15 overlive survive 15-16 hazard . . . of the fearful risk of meeting 17 touch ground like a ship 23 just . . . out exact number we allowed for 24 sway move 25 well-appointed well-furnished; fronts confronts 31 in chief chiefly 33 routs mobs 34 guarded with rage trimmed with false bluster (and pun on rag) 35 countenanced faced out, added to; beggary beggars 36 commotion rebellion 42 see seat, throne, hence diocese 44 good letters humane scholarship 45 investments figure vestments symbolize 47 translate transform (but note the extended metaphor of language in lines 48-52)

52 point of war bugle call 55 wanton self-indulgent 57 bleed be bled (as a purgative) 60 I . . . physician I do not presume to act as the doctor (to do the bleeding; I will but "show"—line 63) 64 rank swollen 67 equal unbiased 69 griefs grievances 74 articles formal listing 83 Of . . . instance proof in every minute 87 quality substance 89 gallèd irritated 90 suborned . . . on set on to vex 92 divine see A Note on the Text, p. 685 93 brother general brother in a general sense as opposed to my brother by birth; Henry IV had executed the archbishop's brother—1 Henry IV, I.iii; see A Note on the Text, p. 685

That feel the bruises of the days before,
And suffer the condition of these times.
To lay a heavy and unequal^o hand
Upon our honors?

WESTMORELAND O, my good Lord Mowbray,
Construe the times to their necessities,^o
And you shall say indeed, it is the time,
And not the king, that doth you injuries.
Yet for your part, it not appears to me
Either from the king or in the present time
That you should have an inch of any ground
To build a grief on. Were you not restored
To all the Duke of Norfolk's signories,^o
Your noble and right well-rememb'ed father's?

MOWBRAY

What thing, in honor, had my father lost,
That need to be revived and breathed in me?
The king that loved him, as the state stood then,
Was force perforce^o compelled to banish him.
And then that Henry Bolingbroke and he,
Being mounted and both roused in their seats,^o
Their neighing coursers daring of^o the spur,
Their armed staves in charge, their beavers^o down,
Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights of steel,
And the loud trumpet blowing them together,
Then, then, when there was nothing could have stayed

My father from the breast of Bolingbroke—
O, when the king did throw his warder^o down
His own life hung upon the staff he threw.
Then threw he down himself and all their lives
That by indictment and by dint^o of sword
Have since miscarried^o under Bolingbroke.

WESTMORELAND

You speak, Lord Mowbray, now you know not what.

The Earl of Hereford was reputed then
In England the most valiant gentleman.
Who knows on whom Fortune would then have smiled?

But if your father had been victor there,
He ne'er had borne it^o out of Coventry.^o
For all the country in a general voice
Cried hate upon him, and all their prayers and love
Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on
And blessed and graced—and did more than^o the
king.

But this is mere digression from my purpose.
Here come I from our princely general
To know your griefs, to tell you from his grace
That he will give you audience, and wherein
It shall appear that your demands are just,
You shall enjoy them, everything set off^o
That might so much as think you enemies.

100 unequal not impartial 102 Construe . . . necessities interpret the present state of things according to the forces that inevitably make them the way they are 109 signories lands 114 force perforce willy-nilly (for the trial by battle described in lines 115–37, see Richard II, I.iii 116 seats saddles 117 daring of ready for 118 armed . . . beavers lances at the ready, their helmet-visors 123 warder ceremonial baton 126 dint force 127 miscarried perished 133 it the prize; Coventry the scene of this trial by battle 137 did more than did so more than for 143 set off put aside, ignored

MOWBRAY

But he hath forced us to compel this offer, 145
And it proceeds from policy,^o not love.

WESTMORELAND

Mowbray, you overween^o to take it so.
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear.
For, lo, within a ken^o our army lies,
Upon mine honor, all too confident 150
To give admittance to a thought of fear.
Our battle^o is more full of names^o than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armor all as strong, our cause the best.
Then reason will^o our hearts should be as good. 155
Say you not then our offer is compelled.

MOWBRAY

Well, by my will we shall admit no parley.

WESTMORELAND

That argues but the shame of your offense.
A rotten^o case abides no handling.

115 HASTINGS

Hath the Prince John a full commission, 160
In very ample virtue^o of his father,
To hear and absolutely to determine
Of what conditions we shall stand upon?

WESTMORELAND

That is intended in the general's name.^o
I muse^o you make so slight a question. 165

ARCHBISHOP

Then take, my Lord of Westmoreland, this schedule,
For this contains our general grievances.
Each several article herein redressed,^o
All members of our cause, both here and hence^o
That are insinewed^o to this action, 170
Acquitted by a true substantial form^o
And present execution of our wills
To us and our purposes confined,^o
We^o come within our awful banks^o again
And knit our powers to the arm of peace. 175

WESTMORELAND

This will I show the general. Please you, lords,
In sight of both our battles we may meet,
And either end in peace—which God so frame—
Or to the place of diff'rence^o call the swords
Which must decide it.

ARCHBISHOP

My lord, we will do so. 180

Exit WESTMORELAND.

MOWBRAY

There is a thing within my bosom tells me
That no conditions^o of our peace can stand.

HASTINGS

Fear you not that. If we can make our peace
Upon such large terms and so absolute

146 policy statecraft 147 overween calculate too much 149 ken look 152 battle battle line; names men with warlike reputations 155 reason will it will be reasonable that 159 rotten fragile (proverbial statement) 161 In . . . virtue with exactly the ample power 164 intended . . . name implicit in the king's making his son the general 165 muse am puzzled 168 Each . . . redressed if each . . . is redressed, etc. 169 hence elsewhere 170 insinewed bound by strong sinews 171 substantial form firm formal agreement 172–73 will . . . confined demands restricted (in scope) to us and our grievances 174 We then we; banks i.e., they will subside like a stream that had been in flood 179 diff'rence conflict 182 conditions provisions in the contract

As our conditions shall consist upon,
Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains.

185

[Scene II. The same.]^o

MOWBRAY

Yea, but our valuation^o shall be such
That every slight and false-derived cause,
Yea, every idle, nice, and wanton^o reason
Shall to the king taste of this action,
That, were our royal faiths martyrs in love,^o
We shall be winnowed with so rough a wind
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff
And good from bad find no partition.^o

ARCHBISHOP

No, no, my lord. Note this. The king is weary
Of dainty^o and such picking^o grievances.
For he hath found to end one doubt by death
Revives two greater in the heirs of life,^o
And therefore will he wipe his tables^o clean
And keep no telltale to his memory
That may repeat and history his loss
To new remembrance. For full well he knows
He cannot so precisely^o weed this land
As his misdoubts^o present occasion.
His foes are so enrooted with his friends
That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so and shake a friend.
So that this land, like an offensive wife
That hath enraged him on to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up
And hangs resolved correction^o in the arm
That was upreared to execution.

HASTINGS

Besides, the king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement.
So that his power, like to a fangless lion,
May offer,^o but not hold.

ARCHBISHOP

'Tis very true.

And therefore be assured, my good Lord Marshal,
If we do now make our atonement^o well,
Our peace will, like a broken limb united,
Grow stronger for the breaking.

MOWBRAY

Be it so.

Here is returned my Lord of Westmoreland.

Enter WESTMORELAND.

WESTMORELAND

The prince is here at hand. Pleaseth your lordship
To meet his grace just distance^o 'tween our armies.

Enter Prince John [of LANCASTER] and his ARMY.

MOWBRAY

Your Grace of York, in God's name then, set forward. 225

ARCHBISHOP

Before, and greet his grace, my lord; we come.

LANCASTER

You are well encount' red here, my cousin Mowbray.
Good day to you, gentle Lord Archbishop.
And so to you, Lord Hastings, and to all.
My Lord of York, it better showed with you
When that your flock, assembled by the bell, 5
Encircled you to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text
Than now to see you here an iron^o man talking,
Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum,
Turning the word to sword and life to death. 10
That man that sits within a monarch's heart
And ripens in the sunshine of his favor,
Would he abuse the countenance of the king,
Alack, what mischiefs might he set abroad^o
In shadow of such greatness! With you, Lord Bishop, 15
It is even so. Who hath not heard it spoken
How deep you were within the books of God?
To us the speaker in His parliament,
To us th' imagined voice of God himself,
The very opener and intelligencer^o 20
Between the grace, the sanctities of heaven
And our dull workings.^o O, who shall believe
But you misuse the reverence of your place,
Employ the countenance and grace of heaven,
As a false favorite doth his prince's name, 25
In deeds dishonorable? You have ta'en up,^o
Under the counterfeited zeal^o of God,
The subjects of His substitute,^o my father,
And both against the peace of heaven and him
Have here upswarmed^o them.

215

ARCHBISHOP

Good my Lord of Lancaster,

30

I am not here against your father's peace,
But, as I told my Lord of Westmoreland,
The time misord' red doth, in common sense,^o
Crowd us and crush us to this monstrous^o form,
To hold our safety up. I sent your grace 35
The parcels^o and particulars of our grief,
The which hath been with scorn shoved from the court,
Whereon this Hydra^o son of war is born,
Whose dangerous eyes may well be charmed asleep
With grant of our most just and right desires, 40
And true obedience, of this madness cured,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty.

MOWBRAY

If not, we ready are to try our fortunes
To the last man.

HASTINGS

And though we here fall down,

We have supplies to second^o our attempt. 45

If they miscarry, theirs^o shall second them,

187 valuation i.e., in the king's eyes 189 nice, and wanton petty and frivolous 191 were . . . love even if we were as faithful in love to his royal self as martyrs 194 partition dividing 196 dainty, picking finicky 197-98 to end . . . life to rid himself of one doubtful subject by executing him creates two even more treacherous foes in those who live on after the dead man 199 tables notebook 203 precisely thoroughly 204 misdoubts suspicions 211 resolved correction a check on his resolution 217 offer threaten 219 atonement becoming at one 224 just distance halfway

IV.ii.s.d. notice there should be no scene division, the action being continuous and the stage not having emptied 8 iron (1) armored (2) merciless 14 abroad open (like a cask) 20 opener and intelligencer interpreter and informant 22 workings mental operations 26 ta'en up enlisted 27 zeal with a pun on seal 28 substitute deputy 30 upswarmed made (them) swarm up 33 in common sense to anybody's senses 34 monstrous unnatural 36 parcels small parts 38 Hydra many-headed monster 45 supplies to second reinforcements to back up 46 theirs their supplies

And so success° of mischief shall be born
And heir from heir shall hold this quarrel up
Whiles England shall have generation.°

LANCASTER

You are too shallow, Hastings, much too shallow, 50
To sound° the bottom of the after-times.

WESTMORELAND

Pleaseth your grace to answer them directly
How far forth you do like their articles.

LANCASTER

I like them all, and do allow them well, 55
And swear here, by the honor of my blood,
My father's purposes have been mistook,
And some about him have too lavishly°
Wrested° his meaning and authority.
My lord, these griefs shall be with speed redressed.
Upon my soul, they shall. If this may please you, 60
Discharge your powers unto their several counties,
As we will ours. And here between the armies
Let's drink together friendly and embrace,
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home
Of our restored love and amity. 65

ARCHBISHOP

I take your princely word for these redresses.

LANCASTER

I give it you, and will maintain my word.
And thereupon I drink unto your grace.

[He drinks.]

HASTINGS

Go, captain, and deliver to the army
This news of peace. Let them have pay, and part.° 70
I know it will well please them. Hie thee, captain.
[Exit OFFICER.]

ARCHBISHOP

To you, my noble Lord of Westmoreland.
[He drinks.]

WESTMORELAND

I pledge your grace, and, if you knew what pains
I have bestowed to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely. But my love to ye 75
Shall show itself more openly hereafter.

ARCHBISHOP

I do not doubt you.

WESTMORELAND I am glad of it.

Health to my lord and gentle cousin, Mowbray.

MOWBRAY

You wish me health in very happy season,
For I am, on the sudden, something° ill. 80

ARCHBISHOP

Against° ill chances men are ever merry,
But heaviness foreruns the good event.

WESTMORELAND

Therefore be merry, coz, since sudden sorrow Serves to say thus, "Some good thing comes tomorrow."

ARCHBISHOP

Believe me, I am passing° light in spirit. 85

MOWBRAY

So much the worse, if your own rule be true.

Shout [within].

LANCASTER

The word of peace is rend'red. Hark, how they shout!

MOWBRAY

This had been cheerful after victory.

ARCHBISHOP

A peace is of the nature of a conquest,
For then both parties nobly are subdued, 90
And neither party loser.

LANCASTER

Go, my lord,
And let our army be discharged too.
[Exit WESTMORELAND.]

And, good my lord, so please you, let our trains°
March by us, that we may peruse the men
We should have coped withal.°

ARCHBISHOP

Go, good Lord Hastings, 95
And, ere they be dismissed, let them march by.
[Exit HASTINGS.]

LANCASTER

I trust, lords, we shall lie tonight together.

Enter WESTMORELAND.

Now cousin, wherefore stands our army still?

WESTMORELAND

The leaders, having charge from you to stand, 100
Will not go off until they hear you speak.

LANCASTER

They know their duties.

Enter HASTINGS.

HASTINGS

My lord, our army is dispersed already.
Like youthful steers unyoked, they take their courses
East, west, north, south, or, like a school broke up, 105
Each hurries toward his home and sporting-place.°

WESTMORELAND

Good tidings, my Lord Hastings, for the which
I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason.
And you, Lord Archbishop, and you, Lord Mowbray,
Of capital° treason I attach° you both. 110

MOWBRAY

Is this proceeding just and honorable?

WESTMORELAND

Is your assembly so?

ARCHBISHOP [To LANCASTER.]

Will you thus break your faith?

LANCASTER

I pawned° thee none. 115
I promised you redress of these same grievances
Whereof you did complain, which, by mine honor,
I will perform with a most Christian care.
But for you, rebels, look to taste the due
Meet for rebellion and such acts as yours.
Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly° brought here and foolishly sent hence. 120
Strike up our drums, pursue the scatt' red stray.

47 success succession 49 generation offspring 51 sound measure the depth of 57 lavishly loosely 58 Wrested twisted 70 part depart 80 something somewhat 81 Against expecting 85 passing surpassingly

93 our trains those who follow us 95 coped withal been matched with 105 sporting-place playground 109 capital punishable by death; attach arrest 112 pawned pledged 119
Fondly foolishly

God, and not we, hath safely fought today.
Some guard these traitors to the block of death,
Treason's true bed and yielder up of breath. [Exeunt.]

[Scene III. The same.]^o

Alarum. Enter FALSTAFF [and COLEVILLE, meeting].
Excursions.^o

FALSTAFF What's your name, sir? Of what condition^o are you, and of what place?

COLEVILLE I am a knight, sir, and my name is Coleville of the Dale.^o

FALSTAFF Well, then, Coleville is your name, a knight 5 is your degree, and your place the Dale. Coleville shall be still your name, a traitor your degree, and the dungeon your place, a place deep enough. So shall you be still Coleville of the Dale.

COLEVILLE Are not you Sir John Falstaff? 10

FALSTAFF As good a man as he, sir, whoe'er I am. Do ye yield, sir, or shall I sweat for you? If I do sweat, they are the drops of thy lovers,^o and they weep for thy death. Therefore rouse up fear and trembling, and do observance to my mercy. 15

COLEVILLE I think you are Sir John Falstaff, and in that thought yield me.

FALSTAFF I have a whole school^o of tongues in this belly of mine, and not a tongue of them all speaks any other word but my name. And I had but a belly 20 of any indifferency,^o I were simply the most active fellow in Europe. My womb,^o my womb, my womb undoes^o me. Here comes our general.

Enter [Prince] John [of LANCASTER], WESTMORE-LAND, [BLUNT,] and the rest. Retreat [sounded].

LANCASTER

The heat^o is past, follow no further now.

Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland. 25
[Exit WESTMORELAND.]

Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while?

When everything is ended, then you come.

These tardy tricks of yours will, on my life,

One time or other break some gallows' back

FALSTAFF I would be sorry, my lord, but it should be 30 thus. I never knew yet but rebuke and check was the reward of valor. Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? Have I, in my poor and old motion, the expedition of thought? I have speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility. I have found'red^o 35 nine score and odd posts,^o and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valor, taken Sir John Coleville of the Dale, a most furious knight and valorous enemy. But what of that? He saw me, and yielded, that I may justly say, with the hook-nosed 40 fellow of Rome, "There, cousin,^o I came, saw, and overcame."

LANCASTER It was more of his courtesy than your deserving.

FALSTAFF I know not. Here he is, and here I yield 45 him. And I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds, or, by the Lord, I will have it in a particular ballad else,^o with mine own picture on the top on't, Coleville kissing my foot. To the which course if I be enforced, if you do not all show 50 like gilt twopences^o to^o me, and I in the clear sky of fame o'ershine you as much as the full moon doth the cinders of the element,^o which show like pins' heads to her, believe not the word of the noble. Therefore let me have right, and let desert mount. 55

LANCASTER Thine's too heavy to mount.

FALSTAFF Let it shine, then.

LANCASTER Thine's too thick to shine.

FALSTAFF Let it do something, my good lord, that may do me good, and call it what you will. 60

LANCASTER Is thy name Coleville?

COLEVILLE It is, my lord.

LANCASTER A famous rebel art thou, Coleville.

FALSTAFF And a famous true subject took him.

COLEVILLE

I am, my lord, but as my betters are 65
That led me hither. Had they been ruled by me,
You should have won them dearer than you have.
FALSTAFF I know not how they sold themselves. But thou, like a kind fellow, gavest thyself away gratis, and I thank thee for thee. 70

Enter WESTMORELAND.

LANCASTER

Now, have you left pursuit?

WESTMORELAND

Retreat is made^o and execution stayed.^o

LANCASTER

Send Coleville with his confederates

To York, to present^o execution.

Blunt, lead him hence, and see you guard him sure. 75

[Exeunt BLUNT and others with COLEVILLE.]

And now dispatch^o we toward the court, my lords.

I hear the king my father is sore sick.

Our news shall go before us to his majesty,

Which, cousin, you shall bear to comfort him,

And we with sober speed will follow you. 80

FALSTAFF

My lord, I beseech you give me leave to go

Through Gloucestershire. And when you come to court,

Stand^o my good lord in your good report.

LANCASTER

Fare you well, Falstaff. I, in my condition,^o

Shall better speak of you than you deserve. 85

[Exeunt all but FALSTAFF.]

IV.iii.s.d. again, there should be no scene division; see
A Note on the Text, p. 685; Excursions brief combats I condition rank 4 Dale deep place 13 drops . . . lovers teardrops of those who love you 18 school multitude (he is saying "my belly proclaims my identity as loudly as a multitude") 21 indifferency undistinguished quality 22 womb belly 23 undoes unmans 24 heat hot fighting 35 found'red lamed 36 posts post horses (Falstaff is, after all, heavy)

41 There, cousin a gross familiarity to Prince John; the Folio reads "their Caesar" 48 particular ballad else special broadside ballad otherwise 51 gilt twopences silver twopenny pieces, if gilded, could pass for gold half crowns;
to in comparison to 53 cinders . . . element stars 72
Retreat is made the order for retreat has been given;
stayed halted 74 present immediate 76 dispatch hurry 83 Stand act as 84 condition present state of mind (but Fal-staff takes his meaning as "rank")

FALSTAFF I would you had the wit. 'Twere better than your dukedom. Good faith, this same young sober-blooded boy doth not love me, nor a man cannot make him laugh. But that's no marvel, he drinks no wine. There's never none of these demure 90 boys come to any proof,° for thin drink doth so over-cool their blood, and making many fish-meals, that they fall into a kind of male greensickness,° and then, when they marry, they get° wenches. They are generally fools and cowards, which some of us should 95 be too, but for inflammation.° A good sherris-sack° hath a twofold operation in it. It ascends me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish and dull and cruddy° vapors which environ it, makes it apprehensive,° quick, forgetive,° full of nimble, fiery, and 100 delectable shapes, which, delivered o'er to the voice, the tongue, which is the birth, becomes excellent wit.° The second property of your excellent sherris is the warming of the blood, which, before cold and settled, left the liver° white and pale, which is the badge of 105 pusillanimity and cowardice. But the sherris warms it and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extremes. It illumineth the face, which as a beacon gives warning to all the rest of this little kingdom, man, to arm, and then the vital commoners and inland 110 petty spirits° muster me all to their captain, the heart, who, great and puffed up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage, and this valor comes of sherris. So that skill in the weapon is nothing without sack, for that sets it a-work, and learning a mere 115 hoard of gold kept by a devil, till sack commences it° and sets it in act and use. Hereof comes it that Prince Harry is valiant, for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father, he hath, like lean, sterile, and bare land, manured,° husbanded, and tilled 120 with excellent endeavor of drinking good and good store of fertile sherris, that he is become very hot and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first humane principle I would teach them should be to forswear thin potations and to addict themselves to sack. 125

Enter BARDOLPH.

How now, Bardolph?

BARDOLPH The army is discharged all and gone.

FALSTAFF Let them go. I'll through Gloucestershire, and there will I visit Master Robert Shallow, Esquire. I have him already temp'ring° between my finger 130 and my thumb, and shortly will I seal° with him. Come away. [Exeunt.]

91 come . . . proof stand much testing 93 green-sickness anemia common to young girls 94 get beget 96 inflammation i.e., of the spirits with liquor; sherris-sack sherry (wine from the Jerez district in Spain; "sack" is from the French, sec = dry) 99 cruddy curded 99-100 apprehensive quick to take in 100 forgetive begetting, procreative 102 wit intelligence 105 liver seat of the passions, including courage 110-11 vital . . . spirits fluids within the body that give it life and motion 116-17 commences it gives it a university degree (licensing it to act) 120 manured tilled by hand 130 temp'ring softening (like sealing wax) 131 seal (1) squeeze (2) close the deal

[Scene IV. Westminster.]

Enter the KING, WARWICK, KENT, Thomas Duke of CLARENCE, Humphrey [Duke] of GLOUCESTER, [and others].

KING

Now, lords, if God doth give successful end To this debate that bleedeth at our doors, We will our youth lead on to higher fields And draw no swords but what are sanctified.° Our navy is addressed,° our power° collected, 5 Our substitutes in absence well invested,° And everything lies level° to our wish. Only, we want° a little personal strength And pause us, till these rebels, now afoot, Come underneath the yoke of government. 10

WARWICK

Both which we doubt not but your majesty Shall soon enjoy.

KING

Humphrey, my son of Gloucester,

Where is the prince your brother?

GLOUCESTER

I think he's gone to hunt, my lord, at Windsor.

KING

And how accompanied?

GLOUCESTER

I do not know, my lord. 15

KING

Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

GLOUCESTER

No, my good lord, he is in presence° here.

CLARENCE

What would my lord and father?

KING

Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence. How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother? 20 He loves thee, and thou dost neglect him Thomas; Thou hast a better place in his affection Than all thy brothers. Cherish it, my boy, And noble offices thou mayst effect Of mediation, after I am dead, 25 Between his greatness and thy other brethren. Therefore omit him not, blunt not his love, Nor lose the good advantage of his grace By seeming cold or careless of his will. For he is gracious,° if he be observed.° 30 He hath a tear for pity and a hand Open as day for meeting charity. Yet notwithstanding, being incensed, he's flint, As humorous° as winter and as sudden As flaws congealèd° in the spring of day. 35 His temper, therefore, must be well observed. Chide him for faults, and do it reverently, When you perceive his blood inclined to mirth, But, being moody, give him time and scope, Till that his passions, like a whale on ground, 40 Confound° themselves with working.° Learn this, Thomas,

IV.iv.4 sanctified i.e., in a crusade 5 addressed at the ready; power army 6 invested clothed (with authority) 7 level according 8 want lack 17 presence the royal presence 30 gracious full of royal grace; observed respected 34 humorous given to whims 35 flaws congealèd snowstorms turned to sleet 41 Confound defeat; working acting out

And thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,
A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,
That the united vessel of their blood,
Mingled with venom of suggestion°—
As, force perforce,° the age will pour it in—
Shall never leak, though it do work as strong
As aconitum° or rash gunpowder.

CLARENCE

I shall observe him with all care and love.

KING

Why art thou not at Windsor with him, Thomas? 50

CLARENCE

He is not there today. He dines in London.

KING

And how accompanied? Canst thou tell that?

CLARENCE

With Poins and other his continual followers.

KING

Most subject is the fattest° soil to weeds,
And he, the noble image of my youth, 55
Is overspread with them. Therefore my grief
Stretches itself beyond the hour of death.
The blood weeps from my heart when I do shape
In forms imaginary th' unguided days
And rotten times that you shall look upon 60
When I am sleeping with my ancestors.
For when his headstrong riot hath no curb,
When rage° and hot blood are his counselors,
When means and lavish manners° meet together,
O, with what wings shall his affections° fly 65
Towards fronting° peril and opposed decay!

WARWICK

My gracious lord, you look beyond° him quite.
The prince but studies his companions
Like a strange tongue, wherein, to gain the language,
'Tis needful that the most immodest word 70
Be looked upon and learned, which once attained,
Your highness knows, comes to no further use
But to be known and hated. So, like gross terms,
The prince will in the perfectness of time
Cast off his followers, and their memory 75
Shall as a pattern or a measure live,
By which his grace must mete° the lives of others,
Turning past evils to advantages.

KING

'Tis seldom when the bee doth leave her comb
In the dead carrion.° Who's here? Westmoreland? 80

Enter WESTMORELAND.

WESTMORELAND

Health to my sovereign, and new happiness
Added to that that I am to deliver.
Prince John your son doth kiss your grace's hand.
Mowbray, the Bishop Scroop, Hastings and all 85
Are brought to the correction of your law.
There is not now a rebel's sword unsheathed,

But peace puts forth her olive everywhere.
The manner how this action hath been borne
Here at more leisure may your highness read,
With every course° of his particular. 90

KING

O Westmoreland, thou art a summer bird,
Which ever in the haunch° of winter sings
The lifting up of day.

Enter HARCOURT.

Look, here's more news.

HARCOURT

From enemies, heavens keep your majesty,
And, when they stand against you, may they fall 95
As those that I am come to tell you of!
The Earl Northumberland and the Lord Bardolph,
With a great power of English and of Scots,
Are by the shrieve° of Yorkshire overthrown.
The manner and true order of the fight 100
This packet, please it you, contains at large.

KING

And wherefore should these good news make me sick?
Will Fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still° in foulest letters?
She either gives a stomach° and no food— 105
Such are the poor, in health—or else a feast
And takes away the stomach—such are the rich
That have abundance and enjoy it not.
I should rejoice now at this happy news,
And now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy. 110
O me! Come near me. Now I am much ill.

GLOUCESTER

Comfort, your majesty!

CLARENCE

O my royal father!

WESTMORELAND

My sovereign lord, cheer up yourself, look up.

WARWICK

Be patient, princes. You do know these fits
Are with his highness very ordinary. 115
Stand from him, give him air, he'll straight° be well.

CLARENCE

No, no, he cannot long hold out these pangs.
Th' incessant care and labor of his mind
Hath wrought the mure° that should confine it in
So thin that life looks through and will break out. 120

GLOUCESTER

The people fear me,° for they do observe
Unfathered° heirs and loathly° births off nature.
The seasons change their manners, as° the year
Had found some months asleep and leaped them over.

CLARENCE

The river° hath thrice flowed,° no ebb between, 125
And the old folk, time's doting chronicles,
Say it did so a little time before
That our great-grandsire, Edward,° sicked and died.

WARWICK

Speak lower, princes, for the king recovers.

45 suggestion insinuations 46 force perforce willy-nilly 48 aconitum wolfsbane (a poison) 54 fattest richest 63 rage passion 64 lavish manners loose behavior 65 affections desires 66 fronting confronting 67 look beyond misjudge, i.e., you look further into the future than the evidence warrants 77 mete measure, judge 79–80 'Tis . . . carrion The bee who has created sweetness in rottenness rarely abandons it

90 course occurrence 92 haunch back portion 99 shrieve sheriff 104 still ever 105 stomach appetite 116 straight straightway 119 wrought the mure worked the wall 121 fear me make me fear 122 Unfathered supernaturally begotten; loathly monstrous 123 as as if 125 river Thames;
flowed flooded 128 Edward Edward III

GLOUCESTER

This apoplexy will certain be his end.

KING

I pray you, take me up, and bear me hence
Into some other chamber. Softly, pray.[They bear him to another part of the stage.][Scene V. The same.]

[KING]

Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends,
Unless some dull and favorable^o hand
Will whisper music to my weary spirit.

WARWICK

Call for the music in the other room.

KING

Set me the crown upon my pillow here.

CLARENCE

His eye is hollow, and he changes^o much.

WARWICK

Less noise, less noise!

Enter [PRINCE] Harry.

PRINCE

Who saw the Duke of Clarence?

CLARENCE

I am here, brother, full of heaviness.

PRINCE

How now! Rain^o within doors, and none abroad!
How doth the king?

GLOUCESTER

Exceeding ill.

PRINCE

Heard he the good news yet?

Tell it him.

GLOUCESTER

He altered much upon the hearing it.

PRINCE

If he be sick with joy, he'll recover without physic.

WARWICK

Not so much noise, my lords. Sweet prince, speak low. 15
The king your father is disposed to sleep.

CLARENCE

Let us withdraw into the other room.

WARWICK

Will't please your grace to go along with us?

PRINCE

No, I will sit and watch here by the king.

[Exeunt all but PRINCE Hal.]Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow, 20
Being so troublesome a bedfellow?

O polished perturbation! Golden care!

That keep'st the ports^o of slumber open wide

To many a watchful night! Sleep with it now!

Yet not so sound and half so deeply sweet 25

As he whose brow with homely biggen^o bound

IV.v.s.d. the stage is not emptied, the king being lifted onto a bed and moved to the inner stage or another part of the outer stage, and the quarto and the Folio indicate no scene division; the conventional nineteenth-century scene division is superfluous 2 dull and favorable drowsy and kindly 6 changes changes color 9 Rain tears 23 ports city gates (as the eyes are to the mind) 26 biggen nightcap

Snores out the watch of night. O majesty!

130

When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit

Like a rich armor worn in heat of day,

That scald'st with safety.^o By his gates of breath^o 30

There lies a downy feather which stirs not.

Did he suspire,^o that light and weightless down

Perforce must move. My gracious lord, my father!

This sleep is sound indeed. This is a sleep

That from this golden rigol^o hath divorced 35

So many English kings. Thy due from me

Is tears and heavy sorrows of the blood,

Which nature, love, and filial tenderness

Shall, O dear father, pay thee plenteously.

My due from thee is this imperial crown, 40

Which, as immediate from^o thy place and blood,Derives^o itself to me. [Puts on the crown.] Lo, where it sits,Which God shall guard. And put the world's whole strength

Into one giant arm, it shall not force

This lineal^o honor from me. This from thee 45Will I to mine leave, as 'tis left to me. *Exit.*KING [Waking.] Warwick! Gloucester! Clarence!

Enter WARWICK, GLOUCESTER, CLARENCE.

CLARENCE

Doth the king call?

WARWICK

What would your majesty? How fares your grace?

KING

Why did you leave me here alone, my lords? 50

CLARENCE

We left the prince my brother here, my liege,

Who undertook to sit and watch by you.

KING

The Prince of Wales! Where is he? Let me see him.

He is not here.

WARWICK

This door is open. He is gone this way. 55

GLOUCESTER

He came not through the chamber where we stayed.

KING

Where is the crown? Who took it from my pillow?

WARWICK

When we withdrew, my liege, we left it here.

KING

The prince hath ta'en it hence. Go, seek him out.

Is he so hasty that he doth suppose 60

My sleep my death?

Find him, my Lord of Warwick, chide him hither.

[Exit WARWICK.]This part^o of his conjoins with my disease

And helps to end me. See, sons, what things you are!

How quickly nature falls into revolt 65

When gold becomes her object!

For this the foolish overcareful fathers

Have broke their sleep with thoughts,

Their brains with care, their bones with industry.

30 scald'st with safety scorches while it protects; gates of breath lips 32 suspire breathe 35 rigol circle 41 as immediate from as nothing is between me and 42 Derives flows down 45 lineal inherited (as against taken) 63 part act

For this they have engrossèd° and piled up
 The cank' red° heaps of strange-achievèd° gold;
 For this they have been thoughtful° to invest
 Their sons with arts° and martial exercises.
 When, like the bee, culling from every flower
 The virtuous sweets, our thighs packed with wax,
 Our mouths with honey, we bring it to the hive,
 And, like the bees, are murdered for our pains.
 This bitter taste yields his engrossments°
 To the ending father.

Enter WARWICK.

Now, where is he that will not stay so long
 Till his friend sickness hath determinèd° me?

WARWICK

My lord, I found the prince in the next room,
 Washing with kindly° tears his gentle cheeks,
 With such a deep demeanor° in great sorrow
 That tyranny, which never quaffed but blood,
 Would, by beholding him, have washed his knife
 With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither.

KING

But wherefore did he take away the crown?

Enter [PRINCE] Harry.

Lo, where he comes. Come hither to me, Harry.
 Depart the chamber, leave us here alone.

Exeunt [WARWICK and the others].

PRINCE

I never thought to hear you speak again.

KING

Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought.
 I stay too long by thee,° I weary thee.
 Dost thou so hunger for mine empty chair
 That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honors
 Before thy hour be ripe? O foolish youth!
 Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee.
 Stay but a little, for my cloud of dignity
 Is held from falling with so weak a wind°
 That it will quickly drop. My day is dim.
 Thou hast stol'n that which after some few hours
 Were thine without offense, and at my death
 Thou hast sealed up° my expectation.
 Thy life did manifest thou lov'dst me not,
 And thou wilt have me die assured of it.
 Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
 Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
 To stab at half an hour of my life.
 What! Canst thou not forbear me half an hour?
 Then get thee gone and dig my grave thyself,
 And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear
 That thou art crownèd, not that I am dead.
 Let all the tears that should bedew my hearse
 Be drops of balm° to sanctify thy head.
 Only compound° me with forgotten dust.
 Give that which gave thee life unto the worms.

70

Pluck down my officers, break my decrees,

For now a time is come to mock at form.°

Harry the Fifth is crowned. Up, vanity!

Down, royal state! All you sage counselors, hence!

120

And to the English court assemble now,

From every region, apes of idleness!

Now, neighbor confines,° purge you of your scum.

Have you a ruffian that will swear, drink, dance,

Revel the night, rob, murder, and commit

125

The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?

Be happy, he will trouble you no more.

England shall double gild his treble guilt,

England shall give him office, honor, might,

For the fifth Harry from curbed license plucks

130

The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog

Shall flesh° his tooth on every innocent.

O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!

When that my care could not withhold thy riots,

85

What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?

135

O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,

Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants.

PRINCE

O, pardon me, my liege! But for my tears,

The moist impediments unto my speech,

I had forestalled this dear° and deep rebuke

140

Ere you with grief had spoke and I had heard

The course of it so far. There is your crown,

And He that wears the crown immortally

Long guard it yours. If I affect° it more Than as your honor and as your renown,

145

Let me no more from this obedience° rise,

Which my most inward true and duteous spirit

Teacheth, this prostrate and exterior bending.

God witness with me, when I here came in,

And found no course° of breath within your majesty,

150

How cold it struck my heart. If I do feign,

O, let me in my present wildness die

And never live to show th' incredulous world

The noble change that I have purposed.

Coming to look on you, thinking you dead,

100

155

And dead almost, my liege, to think you were,

I spake unto this crown as having sense,

And thus upbraided it: "The care on thee depending Hath fed upon the body of my father.

Therefore, thou best of gold art worst of gold.

105

160

Other, less fine in carat,° is more precious,

Preserving life in medicine potable,°

But thou, most fine, most honored, most renowned,

Hast eat thy bearer up." Thus, my most royal liege,

Accusing it, I put it on my head,

110

165

To try with it, as with an enemy

That had before my face murdered my father,

The quarrel of a true inheritor.

But if it did infect my blood with joy,

Or swell my thoughts to any strain° of pride,

115

170

If any rebel or vain spirit of mine

Did with the least affection of a welcome

70 engrossèd bought up 71 cank' red (1) rusting (2) malignant; strange-achievèd hard-won 72 thoughtful careful 73 arts liberal arts 78 yields his engrossments his accumulations yield 81 determinèd ended 83 kindly natural 84 deep demeanor intense manner 93 by thee (1) with thee (2) in thy opinion 99 wind breath 103 sealed up confirmed 114 balm coronation oil 115 Only compound just mix

118 form order 123 neighbor confines nearby regions
 132 flesh sink in flesh 140 dear heartfelt 144 affect desire 146 obedience low curtsy 150 course occurrence 161 carat with pun on charact, character 162 medicine potable gold in solution (prescribed as medicine) 170 strain musical theme
 (i.e., feeling)

Give entertainment to the might of it,
Let God forever keep it from my head
And make me as the poorest vassal is
That doth with awe and terror kneel to it.

KING

O my son,
God put it in thy mind to take it hence,
That thou mightst win the more thy father's love,
Pleading so wisely in excuse of it!
Come hither, Harry, sit thou by my bed,
And hear, I think, the very latest^o counsel
That ever I shall breathe. God knows, my son,
By what bypaths and indirect crooked ways
I met^o this crown, and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head.
To thee it shall descend with better quiet,
Better opinion, better confirmation,
For all the soil^o of the achievement goes
With me into the earth. It seemed in me
But as an honor snatched with boisterous^o hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their assistances,
Which daily grew to quarrel and to bloodshed
Wounding supposed peace. All these bold fears^o
Thou see'st with peril I have answered,
For all my reign hath been but as a scene
Acting that argument.^o And now my death
Changes the mood,^o for what in me was purchased^o
Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort,
So thou the garland wear'st successively.^o
Yet, though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,
Thou art not firm enough, since griefs are green.^o
And all my friends, which thou must make thy friends,
Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en out,
By whose fell^o working I was first advanced
And by whose power I well might lodge a fear
To be again displaced. Which to avoid,
I cut them off, and had a purpose now
To lead out many to the Holy Land,
Lest rest and lying still might make them look Too near^o unto my state. Therefore, my Harry,
Be it thy course to busy giddy minds
With foreign quarrels, that action, hence borne out,^o
May waste the memory of the former days.
More would I, but my lungs are wasted so
That strength of speech is utterly denied me.
How I came by the crown, O God forgive,
And grant it may with thee in true peace live!

PRINCE

My gracious liege,
You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me.
Then plain and right must my possession be,
Which I with more than with a common pain^o
'Gainst all the world will rightfully maintain.

Enter [Prince John of] LANCASTER [and WARWICK].

182 latest last 185 met i.e., as one meets one's fate 189 soil dirt 191 boisterous rough 195 fears things causing fear 198 argument plot (in a play) 199 mood punning on mode; purchased a legal term: acquired by deed rather than inheritance 201 successively by hereditary succession 203 green fresh and growing 206 fell fierce 211-12 look Too near (1) examine (2) aspire too closely 214 hence borne out carried on elsewhere 223 pain effort (and note the formal rhymes)

KING

Look, look, here comes my John of Lancaster.

225

175 LANCASTER

Health, peace, and happiness to my royal father!

KING

Thou bring'st me happiness and peace, son John,
But health, alack, with youthful wings is flown
From this bare, withered trunk. Upon thy sight
My worldly business makes a period.
Where is my Lord of Warwick?

180

230

PRINCE

My Lord of Warwick!

KING

Doth any name particular belong
Unto the lodging where I first did swoon?

185

WARWICK

'Tis called "Jerusalem,"^o my noble lord.

KING

Laud^o be to God! Even there my life must end.
It hath been prophesied to me many years
I should not die but "in Jerusalem,"
Which vainly I supposed the Holy Land.
But bear me to that chamber; there I'll lie.
In that "Jerusalem" shall Harry die.

190

235

195

[Exeunt.] 240

[A C T V]

[Scene I. Justice Shallow's home.]

Enter SHALLOW, FALSTAFF, and BARDOLPH [and PAGE].

SHALLOW By cock and pie,^o sir, you shall not away tonight. What, Davy, I say!

FALSTAFF You must excuse me, Master Robert Shallow.

SHALLOW I will not excuse you. You shall not be excused. Excuses shall not be admitted. There is no excuse shall serve. You shall not be excused. Why, Davy!

[Enter DAVY.]

DAVY Here, sir.

SHALLOW Davy, Davy, Davy, Davy, let me see, Davy. Let me see, Davy, let me see. Yea, marry, William cook, bid him come hither. Sir John, you shall not be excused.

DAVY Marry, sir, thus, those precepts^o cannot be served. And, again, sir, shall we sow the headland^o with wheat?

SHALLOW With red wheat,^o Davy. But for William cook—are there no young pigeons?

DAVY Yes, sir. Here is now the smith's note^o for shoeing and plow-irons.

20

234 Jerusalem Holinshed states correctly that the "Jerusalem chamber" is in Westminster Abbey, not Westminster Palace; Shakespeare leaves the setting of IV.iv and IV.v ambiguous until this line—see the stage direction at IV.iv.1 235 Laud praise

V.i.1 By . . . pie a mild oath 14 precepts orders 15 headland unploughed strip between two ploughed fields 17 red wheat sown in late August 19 note bill

SHALLOW Let it be cast^o and paid. Sir John, you shall not be excused.

DAVY Now, sir, a new link to the bucket^o must needs be had. And, sir, do you mean to stop any of William's wages, about the sack he lost the other day at Hinckley 25 Fair?^o

SHALLOW 'A shall answer it. Some pigeons, Davy, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws,^o tell William cook.

DAVY Doth the man of war stay all night, sir? 30

SHALLOW Yea, Davy. I will use him well. A friend i' th' court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy, for they are arrant knaves and will backbite.

DAVY No worse than they are backbitten,^o sir, for 35 they have marvelous foul linen.

SHALLOW Well conceited,^o Davy. About thy business, Davy.

DAVY I beseech you, sir, to countenance^o William Visor of Woncot against Clement Perkes o' th' hill. 40

SHALLOW There is many complaints, Davy, against that Visor. That Visor is an arrant knave, on my knowledge.

DAVY I grant your worship that he is a knave, sir, but yet, God forbid, sir, but a knave should have some 45 countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knave is not. I have served your worship truly, sir, this eight years—and I cannot once or twice in a quarter bear out^o a knave against an honest man, I have but a very little 50 credit with your worship. The knave is mine honest friend, sir. Therefore, I beseech you, let him be countenanced.

SHALLOW Go to, I say he shall have no wrong. Look about,^o Davy! [Exit DAVY.] Where are you, Sir 55 John? Come, come, come, off with your boots. Give me your hand, Master Bardolph.

BARDOLPH I am glad to see your worship.

SHALLOW I thank thee with my heart, kind Master Bardolph. [To the PAGE.] And welcome, my tall 60 fellow. Come, Sir John.

FALSTAFF I'll follow you, good Master Robert Shallow. [Exit SHALLOW.] Bardolph, look to our horses. [Exeunt BARDOLPH and PAGE.] If I were sawed into quantities,^o I should make four dozen of such 65 bearded hermits' staves as Master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing to see the semblable coherence^o of his men's spirits and his. They, by observing him, do bear themselves like foolish justices. He, by conversing with them, is turned into a justicelike serving- 70 man. Their spirits are so married in conjunction with the participation of society^o that they flock together in consent,^o like so many wild geese. If I had a suit to Master Shallow, I would humor his men with the imputation of being near their master. If to his men, 75 I would curry^o with Master Shallow that no man could better command his servants. It is certain that either wise bearing^o or ignorant carriage is caught, as men take diseases, one of another. Therefore let men take heed of their company.^o I will devise matter 80 enough out of this Shallow to keep Prince Harry in continual laughter the wearing out of six fashions, which is four terms,^o or two actions,^o and 'a shall laugh without intervallums.^o O, it is much that a lie with a slight oath and a jest with a sad brow will do with a 85 fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders! O, you shall see him laugh till his face be like a wet cloak ill laid up!^o

SHALLOW [Within.] Sir John!

FALSTAFF I come, Master Shallow. I come, Master 90 Shallow. [Exit.]

[Scene II. London.]

Enter the Earl of WARWICK and the Lord CHIEF JUSTICE [meeting].

WARWICK

How now, my Lord Chief Justice! Whither away?

CHIEF JUSTICE

How doth the king?

WARWICK

Exceeding well. His cares are now all ended.

CHIEF JUSTICE

I hope, not dead.

WARWICK

He's walked the way of nature, And to our^o purposes he lives no more. 5

CHIEF JUSTICE

I would his majesty had called me with him. The service that I truly^o did his life Hath left me open to all injuries.

WARWICK

Indeed I think the young king loves you not.

CHIEF JUSTICE

I know he doth not, and do arm myself 10 To welcome the condition of the time, Which cannot look more hideously upon me Than I have drawn it in my fantasy.

Enter [Prince] John [of LANCASTER], Thomas [of CLARENCE], and Humphrey [of GLOUCESTER].

WARWICK

Here come the heavy issue^o of dead Harry. O that the living Harry had the temper^o 15 Of he,^o the worst of these three gentlemen! How many nobles then should hold their places That must strike^o sail to spirits of vile sort!

CHIEF JUSTICE

O God, I fear all will be overturned!

LANCASTER

Good morrow, cousin Warwick, good morrow. 20

21 cast checked 23 link . . . bucket chain link for the yoke 25–26 Hinckley Fair held on August 26, thirty miles northeast of Stratford 29 kickshaws fancy things (French, quelque chose) 35 backbitten i.e., with lice 37 conceited conceived 39 countenance show favor to 49 bear out help out 54–55 Look about look sharp! 65 quantities lengths 67 semblable coherence visible similarity 72 society association 73 in consent unanimously 76 curry curry favor

78 bearing behavior 80 take . . . company ironical, coming from Falstaff 83 terms court sessions (four in the year); actions lawsuits 84 intervallums intersessions 88 ill laid up put away wrinkled V.ii.5 our living men's as contrasted to God's 7 truly faithfully 14 heavy issue grieving sons 15 temper temperament 16 he whoever is 18 strike lower (i.e., submit to pirates)

GLOUCESTER, CLARENCE

Good morrow, cousin.

LANCASTER

We meet like men that had forgot to speak.

WARWICK

We do remember, but our argument^o
Is all too heavy to admit much talk.

LANCASTER

Well, peace be with him that hath made us heavy. 25

CHIEF JUSTICE

Peace be with us, lest we be heavier.

GLOUCESTER

O, good my lord, you have lost a friend indeed,
And I dare swear you borrow not that face
Of seeming sorrow—it is sure your own.

LANCASTER

Though no man be assured what grace to find, 30
You stand in coldest expectation.
I am the sorrier. Would 'twere otherwise.

CLARENCE

Well, you must now speak Sir John Falstaff fair,
Which swims against your stream of quality.^o

CHIEF JUSTICE

Sweet princes, what I did, I did in honor, 35
Led by th' impartial conduct of my soul,
And never shall you see that I will beg
A ragged and forestalled remission.^o
If truth and upright innocence fail me, 40
I'll to the king my master that is dead,
And tell him who hath sent me after him.

WARWICK

Here comes the prince.

Enter the prince [as KING Henry the Fifth] and BLUNT.

CHIEF JUSTICE

Good morrow, and God save your majesty!

KING

This new and gorgeous garment, majesty, 45
Sits not so easy on me as you think.
Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear.
This is the English, not the Turkish court.
Not Amurath^o an Amurath succeeds,
But Harry Harry. Yet be sad, good brothers,
For, by my faith, it very well becomes you. 50
Sorrow so royally in you appears^o
That I will deeply^o put the fashion on
And wear it in my heart. Why then, be sad,
But entertain no more of it, good brothers,
Than a joint burden paid upon us all. 55
For me, by heaven, I bid you be assured,
I'll be your father and your brother too.
Let me but bear your love, I'll bear your cares.
Yet weep that Harry's dead, and so will I,
But Harry lives, that shall convert those tears 60
By number into hours of happiness.

BROTHERS

We hope no otherwise from your majesty.

23 argument situation 34 swims . . . quality goes against the current of your disposition and rank 38 ragged . . .
remission beggarly and already prevented pardon 48 Amurath Amurath IV of Turkey strangled his brothers on his accession in 1574 51 appears they are wearing black, he royal red 52 deeply (1) solemnly (2) within

KING

You all look strangely on me. [To the CHIEF JUSTICE.]

And you most.

You are, I think, assured I love you not.

CHIEF JUSTICE

I am assured, if I be measured rightly, 65
Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

KING

No?

How might a prince of my great hopes forget
So great indignities you laid upon me?
What! Rate,^o rebuke, and roughly send to prison 70
Th' immediate heir of England! Was this easy?^o
May this be washed in Lethe,^o and forgotten?

CHIEF JUSTICE

I then did use the person^o of your father.
The image of his power lay then in me.
And, in th' administration of his law, 75
Whiles I was busy for the commonwealth,
Your highness pleasèd to forget my place,
The majesty and power of law and justice,
The image of the king whom I presented,
And struck me in my very seat of judgment. 80
Whereon, as an offender to your father,
I gave bold way to my authority
And did commit^o you. If the deed were ill,
Be you contented, wearing now the garland,
To have a son set your decrees at nought? 85
To pluck down justice from your awful^o bench?
To trip the course of law and blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person?
Nay, more, to spurn at your most royal image
And mock your workings in a second body?^o 90
Question your royal thoughts. Make the case yours.
Be now the father and propose^o a son:
Hear your own dignity so much profaned,
See your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted,
Behold yourself so by a son disdained, 95
And then imagine me taking your part
And in your power soft silencing your son.
After this cold considerance,^o sentence me,
And, as you are a king, speak in your state^o
What I have done that misbecame my place, 100
My person, or my liege's sovereignty.

KING

You are right, Justice, and you weigh this well.
Therefore still bear the balance and the sword.
And I do wish your honors may increase, 105
Till you do live to see a son of mine
Offend you—and obey you—as I did.
So shall I live to speak my father's words:
"Happy am I, that have a man so bold
That dares do justice on my proper^o son, 110
And not less happy, having such a son
That would deliver up his greatness so
Into the hands of justice." You did commit me.

70 Rate berate 71 easy unimportant (the legend was well known; see above, note to I.ii.55–56) 72 Lethe the river of forgetfulness in Hades 73 use the person act in the character 83 commit send to prison 86 awful causing awe 90 in . . . body i.e., one who uses your person (see line 73) 92 propose put the case of (legal term) 98 cold considerance cool consideration 99 state station 109 proper own

For, which, I do commit into your hand
 Th' unstained sword that you have used to bear,
 With this remembrance,^o that you use the same
 With the like bold, just, and impartial spirit
 As you have done 'gainst me. There is my hand.
 You shall be as a father to my youth.
 My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear,
 And I will stoop and humble my intents
 To your well-practiced wise directions.
 And, princes all, believe me, I beseech you,
 My father is gone wild^o into his grave,
 For in his tomb lie my affections,^o
 And with his spirits^o sadly I survive,
 To mock the expectation of the world,
 To frustrate prophecies, and to raze^o out
 Rotten opinion, who hath writ me down
 After my seeming.^o The tide of blood in me
 Hath proudly flowed in vanity till now.
 Now doth it turn and ebb back to the sea,
 Where it shall mingle with the state of floods^o
 And flow henceforth in formal majesty.
 Now call we our high court of parliament.
 And let us choose such limbs of noble counsel
 That the great body of our state may go
 In equal rank with the best-governed nation;
 That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
 As things acquainted and familiar to us,
 In which you, father, shall have foremost hand.
 Our coronation done, we will accite,^o
 As I before rememb'red,^o all our state,^o
 And, God consigning^o to my good intents,
 No prince nor peer shall have just cause to say,
 God shorten Harry's happy life one day!
Exit [with the rest].

[Scene III. Justice Shallow's home.]

Enter Sir John [FALSTAFF], SHALLOW, SILENCE, DAVY, BARDOLPH, PAGE.

SHALLOW Nay, you shall see my orchard, where, in an arbor, we will eat a last year's pippin^o of mine own grafting,^o with a dish of caraways,^o and so forth.
 Come, cousin Silence. And then to bed.
 FALSTAFF 'Fore God, you have here a goodly dwelling and a rich.
 SHALLOW Barren, barren, barren. Beggars all, beggars all, Sir John. Marry, good air. Spread, Davy, spread, Davy. Well said, Davy.
 FALSTAFF This Davy serves you for good uses. He is your servingman and your husband.^o
 SHALLOW A good varlet,^o a good varlet, a very good varlet, Sir John. By the mass, I have drunk too much sack at supper. A good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down. Come, cousin. 15

115 SILENCE Ah, sirrah, quoth-a,^o we shall [Sings.]

Do nothing but eat, and make good cheer,
 And praise God for the merry year,
 When flesh^o is cheap and females dear,
 And lusty lads roam here and there 20
 So merrily,

And ever among so merrily.
 FALSTAFF There's a merry heart! Good Master
 Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon.
 SHALLOW Give Master Bardolph some wine, Davy. 25
 DAVY Sweet sir, sit, I'll be with you anon. Most sweet sir, sit. Master page, good master page, sit. [Makes them sit down, at another table.] Proface!^o What you want^o in meat, we'll have in drink. But you must bear,^o the heart's all. [Exit.] 30

SHALLOW Be merry, Master Bardolph, and, my little soldier there, be merry.

SILENCE [Sings.]
 135 Be merry, be merry, my wife has all,
 For women are shrews, both short and tall.
 'Tis merry in hall when beards wag all, 35
 And welcome merry Shrovetide.^o
 Be merry, be merry.

140 FALSTAFF I did not think Master Silence had been a man of this mettle.

SILENCE Who, I? I have been merry^o twice and once 40 ere now.

Enter DAVY.

DAVY [To BARDOLPH.] There's a dish of leather-coats^o for you.

SHALLOW Davy!

DAVY Your worship! [To BARDOLPH.] I'll be with 45
 you straight.—A cup of wine, sir?

SILENCE [Sings.]
 A cup of wine that's brisk and fine,
 And drink unto the leman^o mine,
 And a merry heart lives long-a.

FALSTAFF Well said, Master Silence. 50

SILENCE [Sings.] And we shall be merry, now comes in the sweet o' the night.

FALSTAFF Health and long life to you, Master
 Silence.

SILENCE [Sings.]
 Fill the cup, and let it come, 55
 I'll pledge you a mile^o to th' bottom.

SHALLOW Honest Bardolph, welcome. If thou want'st anything, and wilt not call, beshrew^o thy heart. [To the PAGE.] Welcome, my little tiny thief, and welcome indeed too. I'll drink to Master Bardolph, 60 and to all the cabileros^o about London.

DAVY I hope to see London once ere I die.

16 quoth-a said he 19 flesh meat (with a ribald second sense)
 28 Proface a dinner welcome 29 want lack 30 bear endure
 36 Shrovetide period of feasting just before Lent 40 merry tipsy (?) 42-43 leather-coats russet apples 48 leman sweetheart 56 pledge . . . mile drink in one draught though it were a mile deep 58 beshrew cursed be 61 cabileros cavaliers

115 remembrance entry in the records (legal term) 123 wild uncivilized 124 affections appetites 125 spirits character (based on his humors) 127 raze erase 129 my seeming the way I seem outwardly 132 state of floods majesty of the ocean 141 accite summon 142 rememb'red noted (cf. line 115); state great men of the land 143 consigning signing ratification (legal term; notice Hal's knowledge of different "languages")
 V.iii.2 pippin type of apple 3 grafting grafting; caraways
 caraway seeds 11 husband housemanager 12 varlet servant

BARDOLPH And I might see you there, Davy—

SHALLOW By the mass, you'll crack° a quart together, ha! Will you not, Master Bardolph? 65

BARDOLPH Yea, sir, in a pottle-pot.°

SHALLOW By God's liggens,° I thank thee. The knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that. 'A will not out,° 'a. 'Tis true bred.

BARDOLPH And I'll stick by him, sir. 70

One knocks at door.

SHALLOW Why, there spoke a king. Lack nothing.
Be merry. Look who's at door there, ho! Who knocks? [Exit DAVY.]

FALSTAFF [To SILENCE, seeing him drinking.] Why, now you have done me right.° 75

SILENCE [Kneels, drinks and sings.]
Do me right,
And dub me knight.°
Samingo.°

Is't not so?

FALSTAFF 'Tis so. 80

SILENCE Is't so? Why then, say an old man can do somewhat.

[Enter DAVY.]

DAVY And't please your worship, there's one Pistol come from the court with news.

FALSTAFF From the court! Let him come in. 85

Enter PISTOL.

How now, Pistol!

PISTOL Sir John, God save you!

FALSTAFF What wind blew you hither, Pistol?

PISTOL Not the ill wind which blows no man to good. Sweet knight, thou art now one of the greatest 90 men in this realm.

SILENCE By'r lady, I think 'a be, but goodman Puff° of Barson.

PISTOL Puff!°

Puff i' thy teeth, most recreant coward base! 95
Sir John, I am thy Pistol and thy friend,
And helter-skelter have I rode to thee,
And tidings do I bring and lucky joys
And golden times and happy news of price.

FALSTAFF I pray thee now, deliver them like a man of 100
this world.°

PISTOL

A foutra° for the world and worldlings base!
I speak of Africa° and golden joys.

FALSTAFF

O base Assyrian° knight, what is thy news?
Let King Cophetua° know the truth thereof. 105

64 crack split, share 66 pottle-pot two-quart tankard 67 By God's liggens an oath of unknown meaning, possibly because Shallow is tipsy 69 out pass out 75 done me right pledged to my pledge 77 knight drinking a deep draught while kneeling entitled one to be called "knight" 78 Samingo Monsieur Mingo, the hero of the song 92 but goodman Puff except for yeoman Puff (whose name suggests a shape and size as "great" as Falstaff's) 94 Puff swaggerer 100-01 man
. . . world ordinary man 102 foutra French, foutre, accompanied by an indecent gesture 103 Africa where the gold comes from 104 Assyrian pun on ass (?) (Falstaff adopts Pistol's style in hopes of communicating with him) 105
Cophetua African king in a famous ballad

SILENCE [Sings.]

"And Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John."

PISTOL

Shall dunghill curs confront the Helicons?°

And shall good news be baffled?°

Then, Pistol, lay thy head in Furies' lap.

SHALLOW Honest gentleman, I know not your 110 breeding.

PISTOL Why then, lament therefore.°

SHALLOW Give me pardon, sir. If, sir, you come with news from the court, I take it there's but two ways, either to utter them, or conceal them. I am, sir, 115 under the king, in some authority.

PISTOL

Under which king, Besonian?° Speak, or die.

SHALLOW

Under King Harry.

PISTOL

Harry the Fourth, or Fifth?

SHALLOW

Harry the Fourth.

PISTOL

A foutra for thine office!°

Sir John, thy tender lambkin now is king. 120

Harry the fifth's the man. I speak the truth.

When Pistol lies, do this,° and fig me, like

The bragging Spaniard.

FALSTAFF

What, is the old king dead?

PISTOL

As nail in door. The things I speak are just. 125

FALSTAFF Away, Bardolph! Saddle my horse. Master Robert Shallow, choose what office thou wilt in the land, 'tis thine. Pistol, I will double-charge° thee with dignities.

BARDOLPH

O joyful day! 130

I would not take a knighthood for my fortune.

PISTOL

What! I do bring good news.°

FALSTAFF Carry Master Silence to bed. Master
Shallow, my Lord Shallow—be what thou wilt, I am fortune's steward! Get on thy boots! We'll ride all 135 night! O sweet Pistol! Away, Bardolph! [Exit BARDOLPH.] Come, Pistol, utter more to me, and withal devise something to do thyself good. Boot, boot, Master Shallow. I know the young king is sick for me. Let us take any man's horses;° the laws of 140 England are at my commandment. Blessed are they that have been my friends, and woe to my Lord Chief Justice!

PISTOL

Let vultures vile seize on his lungs also!

"Where is the life that late I led?"° say they. 145

Why, here it is. Welcome these pleasant days!

Exit [with the rest].

107 Helicons poets (?) 108 baffled treated shamefully 112 therefore for that 117 Besonian beggarly recruit 119 thine office the king's death terminated Shallow's appointment 122 do this make an insulting gesture, the "fig," by putting the thumb between the index and third fingers 128 double-charge twice-load (a pistol) 132 What! . . . news a knighthood is evidently not enough for Pistol or perhaps he is responding to Silence's sudden collapse 140 take . . . horses
"press" them (for they are on the king's service) 145 Where
. . . led scrap of an old song

[Scene IV. London.]

Enter BEADLE° and three or four OFFICERS [with HOSTESS Quickly and DOLL Tearsheet].

HOSTESS No, thou arrant knave, I would to God that I might die, that I might have thee hanged.° Thou hast drawn my shoulder out of joint.

BEADLE The constables have delivered her over to me, and she shall have whipping-cheer,° I warrant 5 her. There hath been a man or two killed about° her.

DOLL Nut-hook,° nut-hook, you lie. Come on, I'll tell thee what, thou damned tripe-visaged° rascal, and the child I go with do miscarry, thou wert better thou hadst struck thy mother, thou paper-faced° villain. 10

HOSTESS O the Lord, that Sir John were come! I would make this a bloody day to somebody. But I pray God the fruit of her womb miscarry!°

BEADLE If it do, you shall have a dozen of cushions again. You have but eleven° now. Come, I charge 15 you both go with me, for the man is dead that you and Pistol beat amongst you.

DOLL I'll tell you what, you thin man in a censer,° I will have you as soundly swung° for this—you blue-bottle° rogue, you filthy famished correctioner, if you 20 be not swung, I'll forswear half-kirtles.°

BEADLE Come, come, you she-knight-errant, come.

HOSTESS O God, that right should thus overcome might!° Well, of sufferance° comes ease.

DOLL Come, you rogue, come. Bring me to a justice. 25

HOSTESS Ay, come, you starved bloodhound.

DOLL Goodman death, goodman bones!

HOSTESS Thou atomy,° thou!

DOLL Come, you thin thing! Come, you rascal!°

BEADLE Very well. [Exeunt.] 30

[Scene V. London.]

Enter STREWERS of rushes.

FIRST STREWER More rushes, more rushes!°

SECOND STREWER The trumpets have sounded twice.

THIRD STREWER 'Twill be two o'clock ere they come from the coronation. Dispatch, dispatch. 5 [Exeunt.]

Trumpets sound, and the KING and his TRAIN pass over the stage. After them enter FALSTAFF, SHALLOW, PISTOL, BARDOLPH, and the boy [PAGE].

V.iv.s.d. Beadle parish officer (who punished petty offenders) 2 hanged for murdering me 5 whipping-cheer hospitality of the whip 6 about (1) because of, or (2) in the presence of 7 Nut-hook slang for the "catchpole" carried by beadles 8 tripe-visaged pock-marked 10 paper-faced thin and pale 13 miscarry she goes along with Doll's threat 15 eleven Doll having used one to simulate pregnancy 18 thin . . . censer figure of a man stamped on the lid of a pan for burning incense (?) 19 swung beaten 19–20 blue-bottle beadles, like modern policemen, wore blue coats 21 half-kirtles skirts 23–24 O . . . might a typical Quickly blunder 24 of sufferance out of suffering (but "sufferance" means tolerance) 28 atomy atom (does she mean anatomy = cadaver?) 29 rascal lean dear

V.v.i rushes the usual floor covering; here, strewn in the streets

FALSTAFF Stand here by me, Master Shallow. I will make the king do you grace.° I will leer° upon him as 'a comes by, and do but mark the countenance that he will give me.

PISTOL God bless thy lungs, good knight. 10

FALSTAFF Come here, Pistol, stand behind me. [To SHALLOW.] O, if I had had time to have made new liveries,° I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you. But 'tis no matter; this poor show doth better. This doth infer° the zeal I had to see him. 15

PISTOL It doth so.

FALSTAFF It shows my earnestness of affection—

PISTOL It doth so.

FALSTAFF My devotion—

PISTOL It doth, it doth, it doth. 20

FALSTAFF As it were, to ride day and night, and not to deliberate, not to remember, not to have patience to shift me°—

SHALLOW It is best, certain.

FALSTAFF But to stand stained with travel, and 25 sweating with desire to see him, thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him.

PISTOL 'Tis "semper idem,"° for "obsque hoc nihil est."° 'Tis all in every part.° 30

SHALLOW 'Tis so, indeed.

PISTOL

My knight, I will inflame thy noble liver,°

And make thee rage.

Thy Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,

Is in base durance and contagious° prison, 35

Haled thither by most mechanical° and dirty hand.

Rouse up revenge from ebon° den with fell Alecto's° snake,

For Doll is in. Pistol speaks nought but truth.

FALSTAFF

I will deliver her.

PISTOL

There roared the sea, and trumpet clangor sounds. 40

[Trumpets sound.] Enter the KING and his TRAIN [including the Lord CHIEF JUSTICE].

FALSTAFF

God save thy grace, King Hal, my royal Hal!

PISTOL

The heavens thee guard and keep, most royal imp° of fame!

FALSTAFF

God save thee, my sweet boy!

KING

My Lord Chief Justice, speak to that vain man.

CHIEF JUSTICE

Have you your wits? Know you what 'tis you speak? 45

7 do you grace show you favor; leer glance slyly (instead of reverently bowing his head) 13 liveries servants' uniforms 15 infer imply 23 shift me change my clothes 29 semper idem ever the same 29–30 obsque . . . est without this, nothing (both phrases are mottoes, the second garbled 30 all . . . part absolute (another motto) 32 liver seat of the passions (love as well as rage) 35 contagious pestilential 36 mechanical working-class 37 ebon black; Alecto one of the Furies 42 imp (1) scion (2) graft (in falconry or gardening—that which adds to)

FALSTAFF

My king! My Jove! I speak to thee, my heart!

KING

I know thee not,° old man. Fall to thy prayers.

How ill white hairs becomes a fool and jester!

I have long dreamt of such a kind of man,

So surfeit-swelled, so old, and so profane,

But, being awaked, I do despise my dream.

Make less thy body hence,° and more thy grace.

Leave gormandizing. Know the grave doth gape

For thee thrice wider than for other men.

Reply not to me with a fool-born° jest.

Presume not that I am the thing I was,

For God doth know, so shall the world perceive,

That I have turned away my former self.

So will I those that kept me company.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,

Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,

The tutor and the feeder of my riots.

Till then, I banish thee, on pain of death,

As I have done the rest of my misleaders,

Not to come near our person by ten mile.

For competence of life° I will allow you,

That lack of means enforce you not to evils.

And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,

We will, according to your strengths and qualities,

Give you advancement. Be it your charge, my lord,

To see performed the tenor of my word.

Set on. [Exeunt the KING and his TRAIN.]

FALSTAFF Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.

SHALLOW Yea, marry, Sir John, which I beseech you 75 to let me have home with me.

FALSTAFF That can hardly be, Master Shallow. Do not you grieve at this. I shall be sent for in private to him. Look you, he must seem thus to the world. Fear not your advancements; I will be the man yet that 80 shall make you great.

SHALLOW I cannot perceive how, unless you give me your doublet and stuff me out with straw. I beseech you, good Sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand. 85

FALSTAFF Sir, I will be as good as my word. This that you heard was but a color.°

SHALLOW A color° that I fear you will die° in, Sir John.

FALSTAFF Fear no colors.° Go with me to dinner. 90 Come, Lieutenant° Pistol. Come, Bardolph. I shall be sent for soon at night.°

Enter [Lord CHIEF] JUSTICE and Prince John [of LANCASTER, and OFFICERS].

CHIEF JUSTICE

Go, carry Sir John Falstaff to the Fleet.°

Take all his company along with him.

47 I . . . not see Matthew 25:10-12 52 hence henceforth 55 fool-born note the pun 66 competence of life allowance for necessities 87 color pretense 88 color punning on choler, and collar, i.e., noose); die punning on dye 90 colors enemy flags (a proverb) 91 Lieutenant note the promotion 92 soon at night at early evening 93 Fleet prison for distinguished prisoners temporarily detained for inquiry ("I will hear you soon"—line 96)

FALSTAFF

My lord, my lord—

95

CHIEF JUSTICE

I cannot now speak. I will hear you soon.

Take them away.

PISTOL

50 "Si fortuna me tormenta, spero contenta."°

Exeunt [all but Prince John of LANCASTER and the CHIEF JUSTICE].

LANCASTER

I like this fair proceeding of the king's.

55 He hath intent his wonted° followers

100

Shall all be very well provided for,

But all are banished till their conversations

Appear more wise and modest to the world.

CHIEF JUSTICE

60 And so they are.

LANCASTER

The king hath called his parliament, my lord.

105

CHIEF JUSTICE

He hath.

65 LANCASTER

I will lay odds that, ere this year expire,

We bear our civil swords° and native fire

As far as France. I heard a bird so sing,

Whose music, to my thinking, pleased the king.

110

Come, will you hence?

[Exeunt.]

EPILOGUE °

[Spoken by a DANCER.]

First my fear,° then my curtsy, last my speech. My fear is your displeasure; my curtsy my duty; and my speech to beg your pardons. If you look for a good speech now, you undo° me, for what I have to say is of mine own making, and what indeed I should say 5 will, I doubt,° prove mine own marring. But to the purpose, and so to the venture. Be it known to you, as it is very well, I was lately here in the end of a displeasing play,° to pray your patience for it and to promise you a better. I meant indeed to pay you with 10 this, which, if like an ill venture° it come unluckily home, I break,° and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here I promised you I would be and here I commit my body to your mercies. Bate me some° and I will pay you some and, as most debtors do, promise you 15 infinitely, and so I kneel down before you, but, indeed, to pray for the queen.

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquit me, will you command me to use my legs? And yet that were

98 Si . . . contenta if fortune torments me, hope contents me 100 wonted customary 108 civil swords swords presently used in civil war

Epilogue evidently, as in A Midsummer Night's Dream, a mingling of epilogues: the first paragraph is for one occasion, the second and third for another, and epilogues for any occasion could be built up out of separate parts 1 fear stage fright (pretended) 4 undo ruin 6 doubt fear 9 displeasing play unidentified 11 venture business venture 12 break (1) break my promise (2) go bankrupt 14 Bate me some forgive part of my debt but light payment, to dance out of your debt. But a good conscience will make any possible satisfaction, and so would I. All the gentlewomen here have forgiven me.²⁰ If the gentlemen will not, then the gentlemen do not agree with the gentlewomen, which was never seen in such an assembly.

One word more, I beseech you. If you be not too much cloyed with fat meat, our humble author will continue the story, with Sir John in it,²⁵ and make you merry with fair Katharine of France. Where, for anything I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless³⁰ already 'a be killed with your hard opinions, for 22-23 have forgiven me perhaps the Epilogue was spoken by the Page 28 Sir . . . it but Falstaff does not appear in Henry V

Oldcastle^o died martyr, and this is not the man. My tongue is weary. When my legs are too, I will bid you good night.

[End with a dance.]

32 Oldcastle Sir John Oldcastle was the name of the prince's boon companion in the source play, The Famous Victories of Henry V, and, evidently, in Shakespeare's first versions of the Henry IV plays. Old. appears as a speech tag at quarto 2
Henry IV, I.ii.125. (See also 1 Henry IV, I.ii.42.) In this Epilogue, Shakespeare is saying his Falstaff is not the historical Oldcastle, executed in 1417 and honored by Protestant chroniclers as a Lollard martyr (though Catholic chroniclers said he was a drunkard and a robber). The name was probably removed from Shakespeare's plays at the behest of Oldcastle's descendant, Lord Cobham—who was promptly nicknamed by the Essex faction Sir John Falstaff.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

EDITED BY DAVID L. STEVENSON

Introduction

Much Ado About Nothing presents an editor with no significant problems as to when it was written, the correctness of the text, the kind of source material that it reanimates and makes into a play. It was published in quarto in 1600, when Shakespeare was thirty-six, with his name on the title page, and was further identified as having been "publicly acted" by the acting company for which he wrote and of which he was a member. The evidence is quite clear that it had been written within a year or a year and a half of its publication (that is, at about mid-point in Shakespeare's career as a dramatist). The text itself is an excellent one, the basis of the posthumous Folio text of 1623, with only a few minor difficulties as to the assignment of lines and as to the intent, here and there, of the original punctuation. The Hero-Claudio-Don John plot, with its lady's maid, caught with her lover, being mistaken for the lady herself, has been traced back to a Greek source of about the year 400. The sixteenth-century Italian collector of tales, Bandello, used the plot in Story XXII of his Novelle (1554), as did Ariosto somewhat earlier in Book V of his Orlando Furioso,¹ and as did Spenser in Book II, Canto 4, of The Faerie Queene (1590). Beatrice and Benedick, if one wishes to abstract them from the play to view them in historical context, are part of a battle of the sexes with deep roots in the culture and in the literature of the Western world (as I have tried to demonstrate in The Love-Game Comedy, 1946). Dogberry and Verges have self-evident origins in that which they parody.

Much Ado About Nothing, moreover, has never provoked elaborate critical appraisal, perhaps because it has always seemed serenely self-contained, a comedy that does its work so well when seen on a stage, or when read, that it does not particularly invite extended comment. Its brilliance as a comedy, then (to justify the admirable quietness of its critics), can be briefly verbalized in two interrelated ways. We can describe the dramatic strategies employed in the play, which create its idiosyncratic "tone" as a comedy. We can also try to define the unique identity of Much Ado by an exploration of its substance, the special aspect of existence blocked out for dramatization in the play.

The primary identifying fact about Much Ado, I think, is that it is the most realistic of Shakespeare's love comedies written during the reign of Elizabeth. And it is realistic despite the basic improbability (or conventionality) of Claudio's deception by Don John. It abandons completely the romantic landscape, the romantic disguisings, the romantic dialogue of Portia's and Bassanio's Belmont, of Rosalind's and Orlando's Forest of Arden, of Viola's and Duke Orsino's Illyria. In Much Ado we enter a dramatic world created in very close imitation of the habitable one we know outside the theater.

From its very beginning, the play forces this real world upon us. Its characters are a small group of aristocrats who have all known each other a long time and who are introduced to us, in I.i, talking about each other on the basis of old familiarity. Hero, for example, recognizes at once Beatrice's oblique reference to Benedick as "Signior Mountanto." Beatrice, we are to understand, has taunted Benedick's valor sometime before the immediate moments of the play and remembers that she has promised "to eat all of his killing" in the wars that have just concluded. She has also previously ridiculed his pretensions as a lover. She recalls: "He set up his bills here in Messina and challenged Cupid at the flight." Leonato refers easily to the long-standing "merry war betwixt Signior Benedick" and Beatrice. Claudio confesses to earlier amorous thoughts about Hero before he went off to the "rougher task" of the wars. Even Don John (I.iii) has already been sufficiently irritated by the "exquisite" Claudio to abhor the elegance of this "very forward March-chick," this "start-up," and to be "sick in displeasure to him" (II.ii).

Our sense of the close approximation of Much Ado to an actual social world is further enhanced by a certain casualness and easiness in the confrontations of one character with another. In this respect, and scene by scene, Much Ado is more like Hamlet, for example, than it is like As You Like It or Twelfth Night. The first and the last scene in the play are perhaps the most brilliant illustrations of this casualness, this incredible ease with which characters react to each other. But it is an ease that is completely sustained as "tone" or manner throughout the play. One finds it in Don Pedro's teasing of Balthasar (and in Benedick's teasing of him as he is hidden in the arbor), for example, for his reluctance to sing in front of them (II.iii). It is the element which gives credibility to Borachio's rambling discourse to Conrade on fashion (III.iii). It is what makes Benedick's sudden playing the role of school-teacher and grammarian ("How now? Interjections?") in the church scene (IV.i) so believable and so desperately ironic. It is what makes so devastating the unexpected and embarrassed encounter that Don Pedro and Claudio have with Leonato and Antonio after the disgracing of Hero (V.i).

¹ The famous Elizabethan translation (1591) was by Sir John Harington, the favorite of the queen.

Another aspect of the sustained, mimetic realism of Much Ado has to do with the kind of language that makes up the complex, closely interwoven dialogue of the play. The language used to carry the interchanges between Rosalind and Orlando, or between Viola and Duke Orsino, is romantically stylized and tempts us to immerse ourselves in some ideal, golden world of love. The language used for the interchanges between characters in Much Ado constantly reminds us of the flow of clever discourse in the best moments of the actual world we all inhabit. And the potency of this language of Much Ado is such that it seems capable of generating the natural, this-worldly atmosphere of the play just in itself. It is not the formalized repartee, the carefully contrived and balanced give and take of wit in Restoration comedy. Rather, its special quality is its air of the spontaneous. In Much Ado it is as if the characters themselves were inventing in front of us their quick ironic retorts and their exultant gaiety at the accomplishment.

The characters in this play take their dramatic world to be so much alive that they are constantly remembering what they have said to each other earlier in the action. The most striking example of this sort of realism is the acid repetition to Benedick by Don Pedro and by Claudio (V.i and V.iv) of Benedick's extravagant description (I.i) of what may be done to him if he ever falls in love. But Beatrice, who turns the word "stuffed" inside out in her ridicule of Benedick (I.i), later tempts Margaret to use it against her (III.iv): "A maid, and stuffed!" Don Pedro, with Claudio by (V.i), catches his anger at Leonato's importunate language in the deftly sardonic phrase, "we will not wake your patience." Claudio, moments later in the same scene (after he learns that he has been grossly fooled), expresses his genuine contrition to Leonato by slightly varying the same phrase: "I know not how to pray your patience." Even the two members of the watch, who are worried about "one Deformed" in III.iii, find Dogberry carefully remembering in V.i to have Borachio examined "upon that point."

The sustained, conversational quality of the dialogue of Much Ado, which accompanies and gives body to the nonchalant casualness of the character confrontations in the play, is perhaps the ultimate essence of the play's mimetic richness. The characters may individualize what they say, but they all speak essentially the same sophisticated-realistic language of their group. In its imagery it is much concerned with the act of sex and with the expected cuckoldry of their society ("he that is less than a man, I am not for him"; "Tush, fear not, man! We'll tip thy horns with gold"). It is also full of the kind of literary reference that would be known to a person of such a society. Hercules, Ate, Europa and Jove, Baucis and Philemon are tossed into the stream of discourse; Kyd's Spanish Tragedy and A Handful of Pleasant Delights are quoted; Beatrice makes use of current attitudes already exploited in Davies' poem Orchestra in her description of marriage as a dance. But beyond all this sort of identifying conversational style is an "aliveness" in what the characters say to one another. It is this extravagant "aliveness," in combination with the play's other dramatic devices, that gives to Much Ado its separate identity of discourse. In no other of Shakespeare's comedies could one of its characters call another, with such eloquent understatement, "my Lady Tongue."

The substance of Much Ado is that of the romantic comedies, sex, love, and marriage. But this play's differentiated way of regarding this substance, its sophisticated realism, is certainly intentionally suggested by its title. Within the play itself there are two views of this substance. One view is that assumed by Claudio, Don Pedro, Leonato, and Hero. Claudio is the central, dominating voice of this group as he acts out its social assumptions. He is presented as a conventional young man, one who regards love and marriage as the making of a sensible match with a virtuous and attractive young girl who brings a good dowry and the approval of her father and of his friends. Although a young man today, a member of a similar social group, might put his feelings in somewhat more romantic terms, if he were of a "good" family in any city of the Western world, he might essentially agree with Claudio's view.

Claudio is certainly no passionate Romeo, and there is no indication in the play that he has done more than regard Hero as an attractive member of the aristocratic society to which they both belong. He is (perhaps somewhat in the position of Paris, in Romeo and Juliet) a young man capable of an easy romanticizing of sexual attraction, as his comment on Hero to Don Pedro fully reveals:

now I am returned and that war-thoughts
Have left their places vacant, in their rooms
Come thronging soft and delicate desires,
All prompting me how fair young Hero is,
Saying I liked her ere I went to wars. (I.i.294-98)

Claudio, again like Paris, is the young man bent on doing "the right thing" in his society. He is attractive as a man, as his worst enemy, Don John, lets us know by his envy. But Claudio is also, as people aware only of the right thing to do tend to be, terrifyingly naive (and terrifyingly obtuse). As Benedick puts it, Claudio reacts like a hurt bird when he thinks Don Pedro has taken Hero from him ("Alas, poor hurt fowl! Now will he creep into sedges," II.i.196-97). And Benedick places Claudio's romantic inclinations toward Hero at the level of the feelings of a small child by comparing Claudio to a "schoolboy who, being overjoyed with finding a bird's nest, shows it his companion, and he [Don Pedro] steals it" (II.i.214-16). Claudio's politeness, his sense of the socially appropriate, even leads him to suggest that he abandon his bride immediately after his marriage and accompany his sponsor, Don Pedro, from Messina to Aragon. Don Pedro again identifies for us the childlike quality of Claudio's feelings for Hero when he replies: "that would be as great a soil in the new gloss of your marriage as to show a child his new coat and forbid him to wear it" (III.ii.5-7).

In the church scene, Claudio's turning on Hero for her supposed assignation on the eve of her marriage is wholly in keeping with the nature of his feelings for her and with the codes of his group. He moves toward his denunciation in the sententiously arrogant, teasing manner of the overly conventional person who has been fooled about something rather important and who will now take great pleasure in a measured retaliation. Claudio, the exquisite, reacts appropriately like a child cheated over a toy promised to him. And the absolute "rightness" of his attitude in the play is made quite clear by the fact that Hero's father and Don Pedro instantly agree with it. Leonato, who was as concerned as Claudio and Don Pedro with a "good" marriage, reacts, indeed, much as Capulet (also a socially conventional man) had reacted when Juliet had refused to marry Paris:

Why had I one?

Why ever wast thou lovely in my eyes?

And mine that I was proud on, mine so much
That I myself was to myself not mine,
Valuing of her—why she, O, she is fall'n
Into a pit of ink.

(IV.i.128-29, 136-39)

Beatrice and Benedick, wholly unchildlike, present another view of the essential stuff of this play, a view that cuts across the conventional one, and insinuates doubts lurking in sophisticated minds as to its necessary validity. They are everywhere presented as completely aware of the fact that they are playing roles with and for each other—Beatrice as shrew, Benedick as misogynist—and enjoying the playing. The subject matter of their game is a distaste for institutionalized romantic love leading to marriage, the precise kind of "love" that Claudio and Hero accept easily and without thought. The only obstacle to Claudio's pursuit would be the sort of thing he thinks has happened, a lack of sexual virtue on the part of the girl who has caught his fancy. The subtle obstacle to the union of Benedick and Beatrice is that neither is ever sure of what he or she would be like if they agreed to quit playing their respective roles. Indeed, part of the dramatic (and psychological) excitement at the play's end is that neither one of this pair is yet certain of what emotions really lie below the level of the role-playing.

The love game of Beatrice and Benedick is an intricate one in Much Ado, because both of them are teasing something more complicated than just conventional romantic love. They are dramatized as testing the antiromantic roles they are actually playing against their sense of what it would be like to be a Hero or a Claudio, to fall into the words and phrases and stances of institutionalized romance. Moreover, in their dueling in the self-accepted roles of the man and the woman too knowing to wear the yoke of marriage and to "sigh away Sundays," it is always made dramatically obvious that both characters are aware that with any slipping either or both could easily become a Hero or a Claudio and turn husband and wife. Benedick's first direct comment on Beatrice, early in the play (I.i. 186-88), is, it seems to me, self-evident acknowledgment of this fact: "and she were not possessed with a fury, [Beatrice] exceeds [Hero] as much in beauty as the first of May doth the last of December."

It is this ambivalent element of their love game, I think, that made Beatrice and Benedick so fascinating to their own age, and now also to us. And the basis of the fascination is that in their own probing of their reactions to ritualized romantic love, they invite us to probe the usually inaccessible areas of our own knowing, our own awareness in such matters. More important, if we think, at the play's end, that Beatrice and Benedick merely exist for five acts to be tricked into admitting that they are fundamentally as conventionally involved in sex, love, and marriage as Hero and Claudio, we have missed the essential purport of the play.

Beatrice is the more open of the two in her acknowledgment of the ambiguity of her role-playing. Her acid remarks in the first scene of Act I concerning Benedick's challenge to Cupid, and her uncle's fool's response (that is, Beatrice herself?), carry the suggestion, never made overt in the play, either that Beatrice had never been sure of her role as Lady Tongue or that she had once tried out a romantic role with Benedick himself. She is presented as openly uneasy (II.i) over the fact that Hero has got herself a husband ("I may sit in a corner and cry 'Heigh-ho for a husband!'"). And she once darkly hints an earlier involvement with Benedick when she tells Don Pedro that Benedick lent his heart to her for a while, "and I gave him use for it, a double heart for his single one. Marry, once before he won it of me with false dice" (II.i.268-70).

The ambiguousness in Benedick's role as misogynic bachelor is perhaps best suggested by the extravagant language he always uses to defend his role:

Prove that ever I lose more blood with love than I will get again with drinking, pick out mine eyes with a ballad maker's pen and hang me up at the door of a brothel house for the sign of blind Cupid.

(I.i.243-47)

His taunt to Claudio concerning Hero ("Would you buy her, that you inquire after her?" I.i.175-76), and his headlong flight from Beatrice (II.i) with the bitter comment that "while she is here" he could live as quietly in hell, are but further illustrations of this extravagance. Dramatically, to be sure, such soaring flights of words prepare us for the irony of his surrender to love of a sort. Psychologically, they tempt us to wonder that a man could hate so vehemently what he professes to have no interest in.

The marriage of Hero and Claudio turns on the simple problem as to whether Hero is a virgin or not, that is, as to whether she is socially and therefore personally acceptable to Claudio in his aristocratic world of arranged marriages. The marriage of Beatrice and Benedick turns on the ability of their peers to trick them out of their self-conscious role-playing. It is of interest to note that the latter pair's willingness to surrender to love and marriage takes place while Hero's virtue is still under a cloud as far as Claudio is concerned, and therefore at a moment when their previous bantering would be inappropriate. It is equally important to note that both Beatrice and Benedick, if somewhat subdued, actually bring alive again, at the play's end, something of the ambiguity toward love that they had had from the beginning of the play.

Beatrice's final words are not those of a Rosalind or a Viola:

I yield upon great persuasion, and partly to save your life, for I was told you were in a consumption. (V.iv.95-96)

Benedick's penultimate comments are addressed not to Beatrice, but rather to Don Pedro. And Benedick insists upon being as ambiguous about his feelings, now that he has agreed to conform to marriage, as he had been earlier, when he could only exclaim against it. He insists to Don Pedro that "since I do purpose to marry, I will think nothing to any purpose that the world can say against it" (V.iv.104-06). He concludes that Don Pedro himself had better marry in order that he too may join the gay company of cuckolds-to-be:

get thee a wife, get thee a wife! There is no staff more reverend than one tipped with horn. (V.iv.122-24)

In Romeo and Juliet, written about four years before Much Ado, Shakespeare had dramatized the lyric, fragile love of very young people not yet wise enough to yield to the social realities—and therefore broken by them. He had presented their love as a highly perishable commodity, one as subject to accident as to time. It is not only Romeo and Juliet, but we, as audience, who acquiesce in their deaths because we are fully aware that in "reality" there can only be either slow dilution or abrupt extinction of such flowerlike love. In Twelfth Night, written probably a year or so later than Much Ado, we are kept within the elegant, golden confines of courtly, aristocratic romance—a place full of music and of bodily forms (to borrow from Yeats) "of hammered gold and gold enameling," set singing to keep some "drowsy Emperor awake."

The kind of love encompassed by the dialogue of Much Ado, and by its two sets of lovers, is love in the social world. This comedy, indeed, is a highly novel one for Shakespeare to have written. The play ends with its characters and the audience accepting the two marriages that have been in the making from its beginning. But the power of the comedy lies not in our accepting the fragility of youthful passion or in our surrender to idyllic romance. Rather, Much Ado, by all its strategies of language and characterization, moves so close to reality that it cannot reach a denouement in which the simply understood mood or attitude of Romeo and Juliet or of Twelfth Night reaches final focus.

The essential uniqueness of Much Ado as a comedy, and its fascination, lies in the fact that it invokes our awareness of the complicated relationship between the indeterminate nature of private feeling and the simplicities of the decorous behavior which is supposed to embody such feeling. That is to say, Much Ado dramatizes sex, love, and marriage in close imitation of their complexity in actuality. This play, of course, is far too stylized to be "real," and it keeps us comically insulated from too deep involvement with its characters and its substance. The play's final moment of balance, of standing still, then, is necessarily somewhat different from that of the Shakespearean romances where a long ritual of wooing comes to a ritualized conclusion. In Much Ado we are given, in its last scene, the dramatic illusion that the pair of marriages has been created by the volition of the characters themselves. They seem to be marrying out of their own desire to find, if only momentarily, a way of being at peace with themselves and with each other.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCE

Much Ado About Nothing combines two plots, the Hero-Claudio tragicomic one and the Beatrice-Benedick comic one. Shakespeare himself seems to have hit on the idea of joining the two, though if he knew of an earlier work in which they had already been combined, he surely would not have scrupled to follow suit.

The gist of the Hero-Claudio plot—a girl is said to be false and her fiancé is so deceived that he denounces her, though later they are reconciled—is ancient. It is also the basis of a series of stories popular in the sixteenth century. It can scarcely be doubted that Shakespeare knew it in the versions of Ariosto (Orlando Furioso was translated by Sir John Harington and plundered by Edmund Spenser) and Bandello (the Novelle were translated into French by Belleforest). Quite possibly Shakespeare was acquainted with a number of other versions. Shakespeare's own addition of Dogberry and Verges, for which at best he had only bare hints, gives this Hero-Claudio plot most of its vitality.

The comic intrigue of Beatrice and Benedick is scarcely a plot, and it would be foolish to attempt to isolate a source for it. Sixteenth-century literature offers numerous ladies and gentlemen who wittily scorn each other. In the English drama before Shakespeare, John Lyly had made something of a specialty of such combats. There are, moreover, nondramatic works (Lyly is again relevant) that may also have given Shakespeare hints. Possibly a paragraph in Castiglione's Il Cortegiano (translated by Sir Thomas Hoby) sparked his imagination:

I have also seen a most fervent love spring in the heart of a woman toward one that seemed at first not to bear him the least affection in the world, only for that they heard say that the opinion of many was that they loved together.

It should be remembered, too, that Beatrice and Benedick are not Shakespeare's first witty, bickering lovers. In Love's Labor's Lost, Biron ("not a word with him but a jest") and Rosaline ("a wightly wanton") anticipate Beatrice and Benedick.

Passages from several books that probably influenced Much Ado are given in the second volume of Geoffrey Bullough's Narrative and Dramatic Sources of Shakespeare, but when one has read Much Ado each source seems like Charles Lamb's poor relation: "the most irrelevant thing in nature—a piece of impertinent correspondence."

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

The present text of Much Ado About Nothing is based upon the quarto edition of the play, published in 1600. The Folio text of 1623 is a slightly edited version of this quarto.

In I.ii Antonio is designated "Old" in the quarto, meaning old man. In II.i Antonio's speeches are assigned to "Brother." In IV.ii "Kemp" and "Cowley," the actors intended for the roles, are assigned the speeches for Dogberry and Verges. The present edition regularizes all speech prefixes. All act and scene divisions are bracketed, since (like indications of locale) these are not in the quarto. Spelling and punctuation have been modernized, and obvious typographical errors have been corrected. The positions of a few stage directions have been slightly altered; necessary directions that are not given in the quarto are added in brackets. Other substantial departures from the quarto are listed below, the adopted reading first, in boldface, and then the quarto's reading in roman type.

If the adopted reading comes from the Folio, the fact is indicated by [F] following it.

I.i.s.d. [Q has "Innogen his wife," i.e., Leonato's wife, before "Hero"; she does not appear in the play] I Don Pedro Don Peter 9 Don Pedro Don Peter 197 s.d. Enter Don Pedro Enter don Pedro, Iohn the bastard

II.i.s.d. Hero his wife, Hero; niece neece, and a kinsman 80 s.d. Don John or dumb Iohn 203 s.d. [Q adds "Iohn and Borachio, and Conrade"]

II.iii.137 us of [F] of vs

III.ii.51 Don Pedro [F] Bene

IV.ii.s.d. [Q places "Borachio" immediately after "Constables"]

V.iii.10 dumb [F] dead 22 Claudio Lo[rd]

V.iv.54 Antonio Leo 97 Benedick Leon

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

[Dramatis Personae]

DON PEDRO Prince of Aragon
DON JOHN his bastard brother
CLAUDIO a young lord of Florence
BENEDICK a young lord of Padua
LEONATO Governor of Messina
ANTONIO an old man, his brother
BALTHASAR attendant on Don Pedro
BORACHIO } followers of Don John
CONRADE }
FRIAR FRANCIS

DOGBERRY a constable
VERGES a headborough
A SEXTON
A BOY
HERO daughter to Leonato
BEATRICE niece to Leonato
MARGARET } gentlewomen attending on Hero
URSULA }
MESSENGERS WATCH ATTENDANTS ETC.

Scene: Messina]

[A C T I]

[Scene I. Before Leonato's house.]

Enter LEONATO, Governor of Messina, HERO his daughter, and BEATRICE his niece, with a MESSENGER.
LEONATO I learn in this letter that Don Pedro of Aragon comes this night to Messina.
MESSENGER He is very near by this. He was not three leagues off when I left him.
LEONATO How many gentlemen^o have you lost in this action?
MESSENGER But few of any sort,^o and none of name.^o
LEONATO A victory is twice itself when the achiever brings home full numbers. I find here that Don Pedro hath bestowed much honor on a young Florentine¹⁰ called Claudio.
MESSENGER Much deserved on his part, and equally rememb'ed by Don Pedro. He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing, in the figure of a lamb, the feats of a lion. He hath indeed better¹⁵ bett'ed expectation^o than you must expect of me to tell you how.

LEONATO He hath an uncle^o here in Messina will be very much glad of it.
MESSENGER I have already delivered him letters, and²⁰ there appears much joy in him; even so much that joy could not show itself modest enough without a badge^o of bitterness.
LEONATO Did he break out into tears?
MESSENGER In great measure.²⁵
LEONATO A kind overflow of kindness.^o There are no faces truer than those that are so washed. How much better is it to weep at joy than to joy at weeping!
BEATRICE I pray you, is Signior Mountanto^o returned from the wars or no?³⁰
MESSENGER I know none of that name, lady. There was none such in the army of any sort.
LEONATO What is he that you ask for, niece?
HERO My cousin means Signior Benedick of Padua.

The decorative border shown above appeared on the title page of the quarto edition of Much Ado About Nothing, 1600.

I.i.5 gentlemen men of upper class 7 sort rank; name distinguished family

15–16 better bett'ed expectation greatly exceeded anticipated valor 18 uncle does not appear in the play 23 badge emblem 26 kind . . . kindness natural overflow of tenderness 29 Mountanto a fencing thrust

MESSENGER O, he's returned, and as pleasant^o as ever 35
he was.

BEATRICE He set up his bills^o here in Messina and challenged Cupid at the flight;^o and my uncle's fool, reading the challenge, subscribed^o for Cupid and challenged him at the burbolt.^o I pray you, how 40 many hath he killed and eaten in these wars? But how many hath he killed? For indeed, I promised to eat all of his killing.

LEONATO Faith, niece, you tax^o Signior Benedick too much; but he'll be meet^o with you, I doubt it not. 45

MESSENGER He hath done good service, lady, in these wars.

BEATRICE You had musty victual, and he hath help to eat it. He is a very valiant trencherman;^o he hath an excellent stomach. 50

MESSENGER And a good soldier too, lady.

BEATRICE And a good soldier to^o a lady. But what is he to a lord?

MESSENGER A lord to a lord, a man to a man; stuffed with all honorable virtues. 55

BEATRICE It is so, indeed; he is no less than a stuffed man.^o But for the stuffing—well, we are all mortal.

LEONATO You must not, sir, mistake my niece.
There is a kind of merry war betwixt Signior Benedick and her. They never meet but there's a skirmish of wit 60 between them.

BEATRICE Alas, he gets nothing by that! In our last conflict four of his five wits^o went halting^o off, and now is the whole man governed with one; so that if he have wit enough to keep himself warm, let him bear 65 it for a difference between himself and his horse. For it is all the wealth that he hath left to be known a reasonable creature. Who is his companion now? He hath every month a new sworn brother.

MESSENGER Is't possible? 70

BEATRICE Very easily possible. He wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat; it ever changes with the next block.^o

MESSENGER I see, lady, the gentleman is not in your books.^o 75

BEATRICE No. And^o he were, I would burn my study.
But I pray you, who is his companion? Is there no young squarer^o now that will make a voyage with him to the devil?

MESSENGER He is most in the company of the right 80
noble Claudio.

BEATRICE O Lord, he will hang upon him like a disease. He is sooner caught than the pestilence, and the taker runs presently^o mad. God help the noble Claudio if he have caught the Benedict;^o it will cost 85 him a thousand pound ere 'a^o be cured.

MESSENGER I will hold friends with you, lady.

BEATRICE Do, good friend.

LEONATO You will never run mad,^o niece.

BEATRICE No, not till a hot January. 90

MESSENGER Don Pedro is approached.

Enter DON PEDRO, CLAUDIO, BENEDICK, BAL-THASAR, and [DON] JOHN the bastard.

DON PEDRO Good Signior Leonato, are you come to meet your trouble? The fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it.

LEONATO Never came trouble to my house in the 95 likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, comfort should remain. But when you depart from me, sorrow abides, and happiness takes his leave.

DON PEDRO You embrace your charge^o too willingly.
I think this is your daughter. 100

LEONATO Her mother hath many times told me so.

BENEDICK Were you in doubt, sir, that you asked her?

LEONATO Signior Benedick, no; for then were you a
child. 105

DON PEDRO You have it full, Benedick. We may guess by this what you are, being a man. Truly the lady fathers herself.^o Be happy, lady, for you are like an honorable father.

BENEDICK If Signior Leonato be her father, she would 110 not have his head^o on her shoulders for all Messina, as like him as she is.

BEATRICE I wonder that you will still^o be talking,
Signior Benedick; nobody marks you.

BENEDICK What, my dear Lady Disdain! Are you 115
yet living?

BEATRICE Is it possible Disdain should die while she hath such meet food to feed it as Signior Benedick?
Courtesy itself must convert to Disdain if you come in her presence. 120

BENEDICK Then is courtesy a turncoat. But it is certain I am loved of all ladies,^o only you excepted; and I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart; for truly I love none.

BEATRICE A dear happiness to women! They would 125 else have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. I thank God and my cold blood, I am of your humor for that.^o I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow than a man swear he loves me.

BENEDICK God keep your ladyship still in that mind, 130
so some gentleman or other shall scape a predestinate scratched face.

BEATRICE Scratching could not make it worse and
'twere such a face as yours were.

BENEDICK Well, you are a rare parrot-teacher.^o 135

BEATRICE A bird of my tongue is better than a beast of yours.

BENEDICK I would my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuer.^o But keep your way, a God's name! I have done. 140

35 pleasant lively 37 bills advertising placards 38 flight shooting contest (i.e., he thought himself a lady-killer) 39 subscribed signed up 40 burbolt blunt arrow 44 tax i.e., tease too hard 45 meet even 49 trencherman eater
52 to in comparison with 56–57 stuffed man dummy
63 five wits common sense, imagination, fancy, estimation, memory; halting limping 72–73 next block most recent shape 75 books favor 76 And if 78 squarer brawler 84 presently immediately (the usual sense in Shakespeare) 85
Benedict the change in spelling suggests a disease based on Benedick's name 86 'a he

89 run mad catch the Benedict 99 charge burden (of my visit)
108 fathers herself shows who her father is by resembling him
111 his head white-haired and bearded (?) 113 still always
(the usual sense in Shakespeare) 122 loved . . . ladies he had "challenged Cupid" 127–28 of . . . that in agreement on that 135 parrot-teacher monotonous speaker of nonsense 139 continuer staying power

BEATRICE You always end with a jade's trick.^o I know you of old.

DON PEDRO That is the sum of all,^o Leonato. Signior Claudio and Signior Benedick, my dear friend Leonato hath invited you all. I tell him we shall stay here, at the least a month, and he heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer. I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart.

LEONATO If you swear, my lord, you shall not be forsworn. [To DON JOHN.] Let me bid you welcome, my lord; being reconciled to the prince your brother, I owe you all duty.

DON JOHN I thank you. I am not of many words, but I thank you.

LEONATO Please it your grace lead on?

DON PEDRO Your hand, Leonato. We will go together.

Exeunt. Manent^o BENEDICK and CLAUDIO.

CLAUDIO Benedick, didst thou note the daughter of Signior Leonato?

BENEDICK I noted^o her not, but I looked on her.

CLAUDIO Is she not a modest young lady?

BENEDICK Do you question me as an honest man should do, for my simple true judgment? Or would you have me speak after my custom, as being a professed tyrant to their sex?

CLAUDIO No, I pray thee speak in sober judgment.

BENEDICK Why, i' faith, methinks she's too low for a high praise, too brown for a fair praise, and too little for a great praise. Only this commendation I can afford her, that were she other than she is, she were unhandsome, and being no other but as she is, I do not like her.

CLAUDIO Thou thinkest I am in sport. I pray thee tell me truly how thou lik'st her.

BENEDICK Would you buy her, that you inquire after her?

CLAUDIO Can the world buy such a jewel?

BENEDICK Yea, and a case to put it into. But speak you this with a sad brow?^o Or do you play the flouting Jack, to tell us Cupid is a good hare-finder and Vulcan a rare carpenter?^o Come, in what key shall a man take you to go in the song?

CLAUDIO In mine eye she is the sweetest lady that ever I looked on.

BENEDICK I can see yet without spectacles, and I see no such matter. There's her cousin, and she were not possessed with a fury, exceeds her as much in beauty as the first of May doth the last of December. But I hope you have no intent to turn husband, have you?

CLAUDIO I would scarce trust myself, though I had sworn the contrary, if Hero would be my wife.

BENEDICK Is't come to this? In faith, hath not the world one man but he will wear his cap with suspicion?^o Shall I never see a bachelor of threescore again? Go to, i' faith! And thou wilt needs thrust thy neck into a yoke, wear the print of it and sigh away Sundays.^o Look! Don Pedro is returned to seek you.

Enter DON PEDRO.

DON PEDRO What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonato's?

BENEDICK I would your grace would constrain me to tell.

DON PEDRO I charge thee on thy allegiance.^o

BENEDICK You hear, Count Claudio; I can be secret as a dumb man. I would have you think so. But, on my allegiance—mark you this—on my allegiance! He is in love. With who? Now that is your grace's part. Mark how short his answer is—with Hero, Leonato's short daughter.

CLAUDIO If this were so, so were it utt' red.

BENEDICK Like the old tale, my lord: "It is not so, nor 'twas not so, but indeed, God forbid it should be so!"

CLAUDIO If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be otherwise.

DON PEDRO Amen, if you love her, for the lady is very well worthy.

CLAUDIO You speak this to fetch me in, my lord.

DON PEDRO By my troth, I speak my thought.

CLAUDIO And, in faith, my lord, I spoke mine.

BENEDICK And, by my two faiths and troths, my lord, I spoke mine.

CLAUDIO That I love her, I feel.

DON PEDRO That she is worthy, I know.

BENEDICK That I neither feel how she should be loved, nor know how she should be worthy, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me. I will die in it at the stake.

DON PEDRO Thou wast ever an obstinate heretic in the despite of^o beauty.

CLAUDIO And never could maintain his part but in the force of his will.^o

BENEDICK That a woman conceived me, I thank her; that she brought me up, I likewise give her most humble thanks. But that I will have a rechate^o winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick,^o all women shall pardon me. Because I will not do them the wrong to mistrust any, I will do myself the right to trust none; and the fine^o is (for the which I may go the finer), I will live a bachelor.

DON PEDRO I shall see thee, ere I die, look pale with love.

BENEDICK With anger, with sickness, or with hunger, my lord, not with love. Prove that ever I lose more blood with love than I will get again with drinking, pick out mine eyes with a ballad maker's pen and hang me up at the door of a brothel house for the sign of blind Cupid.

DON PEDRO Well, if ever thou dost fall from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument.^o

141 jade's trick trick of a vicious horse (i.e., a sudden stop?)
143 sum of all end of the sparring match 157 s.d. Manent remain (Latin) 160 noted (1) scrutinized (2) set to music (3) stigmatized 179 with . . . brow seriously 180-81 to . . . carpenter to mock us with nonsense (Cupid was blind, Vulcan was a blacksmith) 193-94 but . . . suspicion who (because he is unmarried) will not fear that he has a cuckold's horns

195-97 thrust . . . Sundays enjoy the tiresome bondage of marriage 202 allegiance solemn obligation to a prince 228-29 in . . . of in contempt of 231 will sexual appetite 234 rechate recheate, notes on a hunting horn 236 baldrick belt, sling (the reference here, and in "rechate," is to the horns of a cuckold) 238 fine finis, result 249 notable argument famous example

BENEDICK If I do, hang me in a bottle^o like a cat and 250 shoot at me; and he that hits me, let him be clapped on the shoulder and called Adam.^o

DON PEDRO Well, as time shall try:

"In time the savage bull doth bear the yoke."

BENEDICK The savage bull may, but if ever the sensible 255
Benedick bear it, pluck off the bull's horns and set them in my forehead, and let me be vilely painted, and in such great letters as they write "Here is good horse to hire," let them signify under my sign "Here you may see Benedick the married man." 260

CLAUDIO If this should ever happen, thou wouldst be horn-mad.^o

DON PEDRO Nay, if Cupid have not spent all his quiver in Venice,^o thou wilt quake for this shortly.

BENEDICK I look for an earthquake too then. 265

DON PEDRO Well, you will temporize with the hours.^o In the meantime, good Signior Benedick, repair to Leonato's. Commend me to him and tell him
I will not fail him at supper; for indeed he hath made great preparation. 270

BENEDICK I have almost matter^o enough in me for such an embassy, and so I commit you—

CLAUDIO To the tuition^o of God. From my house, if I had it—

DON PEDRO The sixth of July. Your loving friend, 275
Benedick.

BENEDICK Nay, mock not, mock not. The body of your discourse is sometime guarded^o with fragments, and the guards are but slightly basted on neither.
Ere you flout old ends^o any further, examine your 280 conscience. And so I leave you. Exit.

CLAUDIO My liege, your highness now may do me good.

DON PEDRO

My love is thine to teach. Teach it but how,
And thou shalt see how apt it is to learn 285
Any hard lesson that may do thee good.

CLAUDIO

Hath Leonato any son, my lord?

DON PEDRO

No child but Hero; she's his only heir.
Dost thou affect^o her, Claudio?

CLAUDIO

O my lord,
When you went onward on this ended action,^o 290
I looked upon her with a soldier's eye,
That liked, but had a rougher task in hand
Than to drive liking to the name of love.
But now I am returned and that^o war-thoughts
Have left their places vacant, in their rooms 295
Come thronging soft and delicate desires,
All prompting me how fair young Hero is,
Saying I liked her ere I went to wars.

DON PEDRO

Thou wilt be like a lover presently

250 bottle basket 252 Adam Adam Bell, one of the three superlative archers in the ballad "Adam Bell" 262 horn-mad mad with jealousy (perhaps also "sexually insatiable") 264
Venice famous for sexual license 266-67 temporize . . .
hours change temper or attitude with time 271 matter sense 273 tuition custody 278 guarded trimmed (used of clothing)
280 flout old ends i.e., indulge in derision at my expense 289 affect love 290 ended action war just concluded 294 that because

And tire the hearer with a book of words. 300

If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it,
And I will break^o with her and with her father,
And thou shalt have her. Was't not to this end
That thou began'st to twist so fine a story?

CLAUDIO

How sweetly you do minister to love, 305
That know love's grief by his complexion!^o
But lest my liking might too sudden seem,
I would have salved it with a longer treatise.

DON PEDRO

What need the bridge much broader than the flood?
The fairest grant is the necessity.^o 310
Look, what will serve is fit. 'Tis once,^o thou lovest,
And I will fit thee with the remedy.
I know we shall have reveling tonight.
I will assume thy part in some disguise
And tell fair Hero I am Claudio, 315
And in her bosom I'll unclasp my heart
And take her hearing prisoner with the force
And strong encounter of my amorous tale;
Then after to her father will I break,
And the conclusion is, she shall be thine. 320
In practice let us put it presently. Exeunt.

[Scene II. Leonato's house.]

Enter LEONATO and an old man [ANTONIO], brother to Leonato.

LEONATO How now, brother? Where is my cousin^o your son? Hath he provided this music?

ANTONIO He is very busy about it. But, brother, I can tell you strange news that you yet dreamt not of.

LEONATO Are they^o good? 5

ANTONIO As the events stamps them.^o But they have a good cover, they show well outward. The prince and Count Claudio, walking in a thick-pleached alley in mine orchard,^o were thus much overheard by a man of mine. The prince discovered^o to Claudio that he 10 loved my niece your daughter and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance, and if he found her accordant,^o he meant to take the present time by the top^o and instantly break with you of it.

LEONATO Hath the fellow any wit that told you this? 15

ANTONIO A good sharp fellow. I will send for him, and question him yourself.

LEONATO No, no. We will hold it as a dream till it appear itself. But I'll acquaint my daughter withal, that she may be the better prepared for an answer, if 20 peradventure this be true. Go you and tell her of it.

[Enter ATTENDANTS.]

Cousin, you know what you have to do. O, I cry you mercy,^o friend. Go you with me, and I will use your skill. Good cousin, have a care this busy time. Exeunt.

302 break open negotiations 306 complexion appearance 310 The . . . necessity The most attractive giving is when the receiver really needs something 311 'Tis once in short
I.ii.1 cousin kinsman 5 they the news (plural in the sixteenth century) 6 As . . . them as the outcome proves them to be (a plural noun, especially when felt to be singular, often has a verb ending in -s) 8-9 thick-pleached . . . orchard walk or arbor fenced by interwoven branches in my garden 10 discovered disclosed 13 accordant agreeing 14 top forelock 22-23 cry you mercy beg your pardon

[Scene III. Leonato's house.]

Enter Sir [DON] JOHN the bastard and CONRADE, his companion.

CONRADE What the goodyear,^o my lord! Why are you thus out of measure sad?^o

DON JOHN There is no measure in the occasion that breeds; therefore the sadness is without limit.

CONRADE You should hear reason.

DON JOHN And when I have heard it, what blessing brings it?

CONRADE If not a present remedy, at least a patient sufferance.

DON JOHN I wonder that thou, being (as thou say'st¹⁰ thou art) born under Saturn,^o goest about to apply a moral medicine to a mortifying mischief.^o I cannot hide what I am. I must be sad when I have cause, and smile at no man's jests; eat when I have stomach, and wait for no man's leisure; sleep when I am drowsy,¹⁵ and tend on no man's business; laugh when I am merry, and claw no man in his humor.^o

CONRADE Yea, but you must not make the full show of this till you may do it without controlment. You have of late stood out against your brother, and he²⁰ hath ta'en you newly into his grace, where it is impossible you should take true root but by the fair weather that you make yourself. It is needful that you frame^o the season for your own harvest.

DON JOHN I had rather be a canker^o in a hedge than²⁵ a rose in his grace, and it better fits my blood to be disdained of all than to fashion a carriage^o to rob love from any. In this, though I cannot be said to be a flattering honest man, it must not be denied but I am a plain-dealing villain. I am trusted with a muzzle and³⁰ enfranchised with a clog; therefore I have decreed not to sing in my cage. If I had my mouth, I would bite; if I had my liberty, I would do my liking. In the meantime let me be that I am, and seek not to alter me.

CONRADE Can you make no use of your discontent?³⁵

DON JOHN I make all use of it, for I use it only. Who comes here?

Enter BORACHIO.

What news, Borachio?

BORACHIO I came yonder from a great supper. The prince your brother is royally entertained by Leonato,⁴⁰ and I can give you intelligence^o of an intended marriage.

DON JOHN Will it serve for any model to build mischief on? What is he for a fool that betroths himself to unquietness?

BORACHIO Marry,^o it is your brother's right hand.⁴⁵

DON JOHN Who? The most exquisite Claudio?

BORACHIO Even he.

DON JOHN A proper squire!^o And who? And who? Which way looks he?

BORACHIO Marry, one Hero, the daughter and heir of Leonato.

DON JOHN A very forward March-chick!^o How came you to this?

BORACHIO Being entertained for^o a perfumer, as I⁵⁵ was smoking^o a musty room, comes me the prince and Claudio, hand in hand in sad^o conference. I whipped me behind the arras and there heard it agreed upon that the prince should woo Hero for himself, and having obtained her, give her to Count Claudio.

DON JOHN Come, come, let us thither. This may prove food to my displeasure. That young start-up hath all the glory of my overthrow. If I can cross him any way, I bless myself every way. You are both⁶⁰ sure,^o and will assist me?

CONRADE To the death, my lord.

DON JOHN Let us to the great supper. Their cheer is the greater that I am subdued. Would the cook were^o my mind! Shall we go prove^o what's to be done?

BORACHIO We'll wait upon your lordship.

Exit [with others].

[A C T I I]

[Scene I. Leonato's house.]

Enter LEONATO, his brother [ANTONIO], HERO his daughter, and BEATRICE his niece, [also MARGARET and URSULA].

LEONATO Was not Count John here at supper?

ANTONIO I saw him not.

BEATRICE How tartly that gentleman looks! I never can see him but I am heartburned an hour after.

HERO He is of a very melancholy^o disposition.

BEATRICE He were an excellent man that were made just in the midway between him and Benedick. The one is too like an image and says nothing, and the other too like my lady's eldest son,^o evermore tattling.

LEONATO Then half Signior Benedick's tongue in¹⁰ Count John's mouth, and half Count John's melancholy in Signior Benedick's face—

BEATRICE With a good leg and a good foot,^o uncle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would win any woman in the world, if 'a could get her good¹⁵ will.

LEONATO By my troth, niece, thou wilt never get thee a husband if thou be so shrewd^o of thy tongue.

ANTONIO In faith, she's too curst.^o

BEATRICE Too curst is more than curst. I shall lessen²⁰ God's sending that way, for it is said, "God sends a curst cow short horns"; but to a cow too curst he sends none.

I.iii.1 What the goodyear an expletive 2 out . . . sad unduly morose 11 under Saturn i.e., naturally sullen 12 mortifying mischief killing calamity 17 claw . . . humor flatter no man ("claw" = pat or scratch on the back; "humor" = whim) 24 frame bring about 25 canker wild rose 27 fashion a carriage contrive a behavior 41 intelligence information 46 Marry an expletive, from "By the Virgin Mary"

49 proper squire fine young fellow 53 forward March-chick precocious fellow (i.e., born in early spring) 55 entertained for employed as 56 smoking fumigating (or possibly merely perfuming) 57 sad serious 65 sure reliable 69 prove try II.i.5 melancholy ill-tempered 9 eldest son i.e., overly confident (as heir presumptive) 13 foot perhaps with a pun on French foutre = to copulate—i.e., a good lover 18 shrewd sharp 19 curst shrewish

LEONATO So, by being too curst, God will send you no horns.^o

BEATRICE Just,^o if he send me no husband; for the 25 which blessing I am at him upon my knees every morning and evening. Lord, I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face. I had rather lie in the woolen!^o

LEONATO You may light on a husband that hath no 30 beard.

BEATRICE What should I do with him? Dress him in my apparel and make him my waiting gentlewoman? He that hath a beard is more than a youth, and he that hath no beard is less than a man; and he that is more 35 than a youth is not for me; and he that is less than a man, I am not for him. Therefore I will even take sixpence in earnest^o of the berrord^o and lead his apes into hell.^o

LEONATO Well then, go you into hell? 40

BEATRICE No; but to the gate, and there will the devil meet me like an old cuckold with horns on his head, and say, "Get you to heaven, Beatrice, get you to heaven. Here's no place for you maids." So deliver I up my apes, and away to Saint Peter. For the heavens, 45 he shows me where the bachelors^o sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

ANTONIO [To HERO.] Well, niece, I trust you will be ruled by your father.

BEATRICE Yes, faith. It is my cousin's duty to make 50 cursy^o and say, "Father, as it please you." But yet for all that, cousin, let him be a handsome fellow, or else make another cursy, and say, "Father, as it please me."

LEONATO [To BEATRICE.] Well, niece, I hope to see you one day fitted^o with a husband. 55

BEATRICE Not till God make men of some other metal^o than earth. Would it not grieve a woman to be overmastered with a piece of valiant dust? To make an account of her life to a clod of wayward marl?^o No, uncle, I'll none. Adam's sons are my brethren, and 60 truly I hold it a sin to match in my kindred.

LEONATO Daughter, remember what I told you. If the prince do solicit you in that kind, you know your answer.

BEATRICE The fault will be in the music, cousin, if 65 you be not wooed in good time. If the prince be too important,^o tell him there is measure^o in everything, and so dance out the answer. For, hear me, Hero: wooing, wedding, and repenting is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinquepace.^o The first suit is hot and 70 hasty like a Scotch jig (and full as fantastical); the wedding, mannerly modest, as a measure, full of state and ancientry; and then comes Repentance and with his bad legs falls into the cinquepace faster and faster till he sink into his grave. 75

LEONATO Cousin, you apprehend passing shewdly.

BEATRICE I have a good eye, uncle; I can see a church by daylight.

LEONATO The revelers are ent'ring, brother. Make good room. 80

[All put on their masks.]

Enter Prince [DON] PEDRO, CLAUDIO, and BENEDICK, and BALTHASAR [masked; and without masks BORACHIO and] DON JOHN.

DON PEDRO Lady, will you walk about with your friend?^o

HERO So you walk softly and look sweetly and say nothing, I am yours for the walk; and especially when I walk away. 85

DON PEDRO With me in your company?

HERO I may say so when I please.

DON PEDRO And when please you to say so?

HERO When I like your favor,^o for God defend^o the lute should be like the case!^o 90

DON PEDRO My visor^o is Philemon's^o roof; within the house is Jove.

HERO Why then, your visor should be thatched.

DON PEDRO Speak low if you speak love.

[Draws her aside.]

BENEDICK^o Well, I would you did like me. 95

MARGARET So would not I for your own sake, for I have many ill qualities.

BENEDICK Which is one?

MARGARET I say my prayers aloud.

BENEDICK I love you the better. The hearers may cry 100 amen.

MARGARET God match me with a good dancer!

BALTHASAR [Interposing.] Amen.

MARGARET And God keep him out of my sight when the dance is done! Answer, clerk. 105

BALTHASAR No more words. The clerk is answered.

URSULA I know you well enough. You are Signior Antonio.

ANTONIO At a word, I am not.

URSULA I know you by the waggling^o of your head. 110

ANTONIO To tell you true, I counterfeit him.

URSULA You could never do him so ill-well unless you were the very man. Here's his dry^o hand up and down. You are he, you are he!

ANTONIO At a word I am not. 115

URSULA Come, come, do you think I do not know you by your excellent wit? Can virtue hide itself? Go to, mum, you are he. Graces will appear, and there's an end.

BEATRICE Will you not tell me who told you so? 120

BENEDICK No, you shall pardon me.

BEATRICE Nor will you not tell me who you are?

BENEDICK Not now.

82 friend lover 89 favor face; defend forbid 89-90 the lute . . . case your face be as ugly as your mask 91 visor mask; Philemon peasant who entertained Jove in his house 95 Benedick many editors emend the quarto, and give this and Benedick's two subsequent speeches to Balthasar; but in V.ii Benedick and Margaret spar, and they may well do so here 110 waggling palsy 113 dry dried-up (with age)

24 no horns horn used as phallic symbol, as Beatrice's next remark makes plain 25 Just exactly 28-29 in the woolen between scratchy blankets 38 in earnest (1) advance payment (2) in all seriousness; berrord bearward, animal keeper 38-39 lead . . . hell traditional punishment for dying unwed 46 bachelors unwed persons (female as well as male) 51 cursy curtsy 55 fitted continues playful sexual innuendo of the scene 57 metal substance 59 marl earth 67 important importunate; measure (1) discernible time sequence (2) moderation (the entire speech is a light parody of Sir John Davies' Orchestra, A Poem of Dancing [1596]; cf. stanza 23: "Time the measure of all moving is/And dancing is a moving all in measure") 70 cinquepace lively dance

BEATRICE That I was disdainful, and that I had my good wit out of the "Hundred Merry Tales."° Well, 125 this was Signior Benedick that said so.

BENEDICK What's he?

BEATRICE I am sure you know him well enough.

BENEDICK Not I, believe me.

BEATRICE Did he never make you laugh? 130

BENEDICK I pray you, what is he?

BEATRICE Why, he is the prince's jester, a very dull fool. Only his° gift is in devising impossible slanders. None but libertines delight in him, and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villainy; for he both 135 pleases men and angers them, and then they laugh at him and beat him. I am sure he is in the fleet;° I would he had boarded me.

BENEDICK When I know the gentleman, I'll tell him what you say. 140

BEATRICE Do, do. He'll but break a comparison or two on me; which peradventure (not marked or not laughed at), strikes him into melancholy, and then there's a partridge wing saved, for the fool will eat no supper that night. [Music.] We must follow the 145 leaders.

BENEDICK In every good thing.

BEATRICE Nay, if they lead to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning.

Dance.

Exeunt [all except DON JOHN, BORACHIO and CLAUDIO].

DON JOHN Sure my brother is amorous on Hero and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it. The ladies follow her and but one visor remains. 150

BORACHIO And that is Claudio. I know him by his bearing.

DON JOHN Are not you Signior Benedick? 155

CLAUDIO You know me well. I am he.

DON JOHN Signior, you are very near my brother in his love. He is enamored on Hero. I pray you dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth. You may do the part of an honest man in it. 160

CLAUDIO How know you he loves her?

DON JOHN I heard him swear his affection.

BORACHIO So did I too, and he swore he would marry her tonight.

DON JOHN Come, let us to the banquet.° 165

Exeunt. Manet CLAUDIO.

CLAUDIO

Thus answer I in name of Benedick
But hear these ill news with the ears of Claudio.
'Tis certain so. The prince woos for himself.
Friendship is constant in all other things
Save in the office° and affairs of love. 170
Therefore all hearts in love use their own tongues;
Let every eye negotiate for itself
And trust no agent; for beauty is a witch
Against whose charms faith melteth into blood.°

125 Hundred Merry Tales a popular collection of amusing, coarse anecdotes 133 only his his only 137 fleet group (the related meaning, group of ships, leads to "boarded me," but perhaps too there is an allusion to Fleet Prison) 165 banquet light meal, or course, of fruit, wine, and dessert 170 office business 174 blood passion, desire

This is an accident of hourly proof,° 175
Which I mistrusted not. Farewell therefore Hero!

Enter BENEDICK.

BENEDICK Count Claudio?

CLAUDIO Yea, the same.

BENEDICK Come, will you go with me?

CLAUDIO Whither? 180

BENEDICK Even to the next° willow,° about your own business, county.° What fashion will you wear the garland of? About your neck, like an usurer's chain? Or under your arm, like a lieutenant's scarf? You must wear it one way, for the prince hath got your 185 Hero.

CLAUDIO I wish him joy of her.

BENEDICK Why, that's spoken like an honest drovier.° So they sell bullocks. But did you think the prince would have served you thus? 190

CLAUDIO I pray you leave me.

BENEDICK Ho! Now you strike like the blind man! 'Twas the boy that stole your meat, and you'll beat the post.°

CLAUDIO If it will not be, I'll leave you. Exit. 195

BENEDICK Alas, poor hurt fowl! Now will he creep into sedges. But, that my Lady Beatrice should know me, and not know me! The prince's fool! Ha! It may be I go under that title because I am merry. Yea, but so I am apt to do myself wrong. I am not so reputed. 200 It is the base (though bitter) disposition of Beatrice that puts the world into her person and so gives me out.° Well, I'll be revenged as I may.

Enter the prince [DON PEDRO], HERO, LEONATO.

DON PEDRO Now, signior, where's the count? Did you see him? 205

BENEDICK Troth, my lord, I have played the part of Lady Fame.° I found him here as melancholy as a lodge in a warren.° I told him, and I think I told him true, that your grace had got the good will of this young lady, and I off'ed him my company to a willow 210 tree, either to make him a garland, as being forsaken, or to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipped.

DON PEDRO To be whipped? What's his fault?

BENEDICK The flat transgression of a schoolboy who, being overjoyed with finding a bird's nest, shows it his 215 companion, and he steals it.

DON PEDRO Wilt thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer.

BENEDICK Yet it had not been amiss the rod had been made, and the garland too; for the garland he might 220 have worn himself, and the rod he might have bestowed on you, who (as I take it) have stol'n his bird's nest.

DON PEDRO I will but teach them to sing and restore them to the owner. 225

BENEDICK If their singing answer your saying, by my faith you say honestly.

175 accident . . . proof common happening 181 next nearest; willow symbol of unrequited love 182 county count 188 drovier cattle dealer 193-94 beat the post strike out blindly 201-03 It . . . out It is the low and harsh disposition of Beatrice to assume her opinion of me is the world's opinion of me 207 Lady Fame goddess of rumor 208 in a warren in a lonely place

DON PEDRO The Lady Beatrice hath a quarrel to you. The gentleman that danced with her told her she is much wronged by you.

BENEDICK O, she misused me past the endurance of a block! An oak but with one green leaf on it would have answered her; my very visor began to assume life and scold with her. She told me, not thinking I had been myself, that I was the prince's jester, that I was duller than a great thaw; huddling jest upon jest with such impossible conveyance^o upon me that I stood like a man at a mark,^o with a whole army shooting at me. She speaks poniards, and every word stabs. If her breath were as terrible as her terminations,^o there were no living near her; she would infect to the North Star. I would not marry her though she were endowed with all that Adam had left him before he transgressed. She would have made Hercules have turned spit, yea, and have cleft his club to make the fire too. Come, talk not of her. You shall find her the infernal Ate^o in good apparel. I would to God some scholar would conjure her,^o for certainly, while she is here, a man may live as quiet in hell as in a sanctuary; and people sin upon purpose, because they would go thither; so indeed all disquiet, horror, and perturbation follows her.

Enter CLAUDIO and BEATRICE.

DON PEDRO Look, here she comes.

BENEDICK Will your grace command me any service to the world's end? I will go on the slightest errand now to the Antipodes that you can devise to send me on; I will fetch you a toothpicker now from the furthest inch of Asia; bring you the length of Prester John's^o foot; fetch you a hair off the great Cham's^o beard; do you any embassy to the Pygmies—rather than hold three words' conference with this harpy. You have no employment for me?

DON PEDRO None, but to desire your good company.

BENEDICK O God, sir, here's a dish I love not! I cannot endure my Lady Tongue. Exit.

DON PEDRO Come, lady, come; you have lost the heart of Signior Benedick.

BEATRICE Indeed, my lord, he lent it me awhile, and I gave him use^o for it, a double heart for his single one. Marry, once before he won it of me with false dice; therefore your grace may well say I have lost it.

DON PEDRO You have put him down, lady; you have put him down.

BEATRICE So I would not he should do me, my lord, lest I should prove the mother of fools.^o I have brought Count Claudio, whom you sent me to seek.

DON PEDRO Why, how now, count? Wherefore are you sad?

CLAUDIO Not sad, my lord.

DON PEDRO How then? Sick?

CLAUDIO Neither, my lord.

BEATRICE The count is neither sad, nor sick, nor merry, nor well; but civil count, civil^o as an orange, and something of that jealous complexion.^o

DON PEDRO I' faith, lady, I think your blazon^o to be true; though I'll be sworn, if he be so, his conceit^o is false. Here, Claudio. I have wooed in thy name, and fair Hero is won. I have broke with her father, and his good will obtained. Name the day of marriage, and God give thee joy!

LEONATO Count, take of me my daughter, and with her my fortunes. His grace hath made the match, and all grace say amen to it!

BEATRICE Speak, count, 'tis your cue.

CLAUDIO Silence is the perfectest herald of joy. I were but little happy if I could say how much. Lady, as you are mine, I am yours. I give away myself for you and dote upon the exchange.

BEATRICE Speak, cousin; or (if you cannot) stop his mouth with a kiss and let not him speak neither.

DON PEDRO In faith, lady, you have a merry heart.

BEATRICE Yea, my lord; I thank it, poor fool, it keeps on the windy^o side of care. My cousin tells him in his ear that he is in her heart.

CLAUDIO And so she doth, cousin.

BEATRICE Good Lord, for alliance! Thus goes everyone to the world but I, and I am sunburnt.^o I may sit in a corner and cry "Heigh-ho for a husband!"

DON PEDRO Lady Beatrice, I will get you one.

BEATRICE I would rather have one of your father's getting.^o Hath your grace ne'er a brother like you? Your father got excellent husbands, if a maid could come by them.

DON PEDRO Will you have me, lady?

BEATRICE No, my lord, unless I might have another for working days; your grace is too costly to wear every day. But I beseech your grace pardon me. I was born to speak all mirth and no matter.

DON PEDRO Your silence most offends me, and to be merry best becomes you, for out o' question you were born in a merry hour.

BEATRICE No, sure, my lord, my mother cried; but then there was a star danced, and under that was I born. Cousins, God give you joy!

LEONATO Niece, will you look to those things I told you of?

BEATRICE I cry you mercy,^o uncle. By your grace's pardon. Exit BEATRICE.

DON PEDRO By my troth, a pleasant-spirited lady.

LEONATO There's little of the melancholy element in her, my lord. She is never sad but when she sleeps, and not ever^o sad then; for I have heard my daughter say she hath often dreamt of unhappiness and waked herself with laughing.

DON PEDRO She cannot endure to hear tell of a husband.

LEONATO O, by no means! She mocks all her wooers out of suit.

237 impossible conveyance incredible dexterity 238 mark target 240 terminations words 247 Ate goddess of discord 248 conjure her exorcise the devil out of her 258-59 Prester John legendary Christian king in remote Asia 259 Cham Khan 269 use interest 275 fools babies

283 civil polite (with a pun on orange of Seville) 284 complexion (1) disposition (2) color (i.e., yellowish for jealousy) 285 blazon description 286 conceit idea, concept 303 windy windward, safe 306-07 Good . . . sunburnt Everyone gets a husband but me, and I am ugly ("sunburnt" = tanned, and therefore ugly in the sixteenth century) 311 getting begetting 327 cry you mercy beg your pardon 332 ever always

DON PEDRO She were an excellent wife for Benedick.
 LEONATO O Lord, my lord! If they were but a week 340 married, they would talk themselves mad.
 DON PEDRO County Claudio, when mean you to go to church?
 CLAUDIO Tomorrow, my lord. Time goes on crutches till Love have all his rites. 345 LEONATO Not till Monday, my dear son, which is hence a just sevennight; and a time too brief too, to have all things answer my mind.
 DON PEDRO Come, you shake the head at so long a breathing; but I warrant thee, Claudio, the time shall 350 not go dully by us. I will in the interim undertake one of Hercules' labors, which is, to bring Signior Benedick and the Lady Beatrice into a mountain of affection th' one with th' other. I would fain have it a match, and I doubt not but to fashion it if you three will but 355 minister such assistance as I shall give you direction.
 LEONATO My lord, I am for you, though it cost me ten nights' watchings.^o
 CLAUDIO And I, my lord.
 DON PEDRO And you too, gentle Hero? 360 HERO I will do any modest office, my lord, to help my cousin to a good husband.
 DON PEDRO And Benedick is not the unhopefullest husband that I know. Thus far can I praise him: he is of a noble strain, of approved^o valor and confirmed 365 honesty. I will teach you how to humor your cousin, that she shall fall in love with Benedick; and I [to LEONATO and CLAUDIO], with your two helps, will so practice on^o Benedick that, in despite of his quick wit and his queasy stomach, he shall fall in love with 370 Beatrice. If we can do this, Cupid is no longer an archer; his glory shall be ours, for we are the only love-gods. Go in with me, and I will tell you my drift.
Exit [with the others].

[Scene II. Leonato's house.]

Enter [DON] JOHN and BORACHIO.
 DON JOHN It is so. The Count Claudio shall marry
 the daughter of Leonato.
 BORACHIO Yea, my lord; but I can cross it.
 DON JOHN Any bar, any cross, any impediment will be medicinal to me. I am sick in displeasure to him, 5 and whatsoever comes athwart his affection ranges evenly^o with mine. How canst thou cross this marriage?
 BORACHIO Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly that no dishonesty shall appear in me.
 DON JOHN Show me briefly how. 10
 BORACHIO I think I told your lordship, a year since, how much I am in the favor of Margaret, the waiting gentlewoman to Hero.
 DON JOHN I remember.
 BORACHIO I can, at any unseasonable instant of the 15 night, appoint her to look out at her lady's chamber window.

358 ten nights' watchings ten nights awake 365 approved tested 369 practice on deceive II.ii.6-7 ranges evenly goes in a straight line (i.e., suits me exactly)

DON JOHN What life is in that to be the death of this marriage?
 BORACHIO The poison of that lies in you to temper. 20
 Go you to the prince your brother; spare not to tell him that he hath wronged his honor in marrying the renowned Claudio (whose estimation do you mightily hold up) to a contaminated stale,^o such a one as Hero.
 DON JOHN What proof shall I make of that? 25
 BORACHIO Proof enough to misuse the prince, to vex Claudio, to undo Hero, and kill Leonato. Look you for any other issue?
 DON JOHN Only to despite them I will endeavor anything. 30
 BORACHIO Go then; find me a meet hour^o to draw
 Don Pedro and the Count Claudio alone; tell them that you know that Hero loves me; intend^o a kind of zeal both to the prince and Claudio (as in love of your brother's honor, who hath made this match, and his 35 friend's reputation, who is thus like to be cozened^o with the semblance of a maid) that you have discovered thus. They will scarcely believe this without trial.
 Offer them instances;^o which shall bear no less likelihood than to see me at her chamber window, hear me 40
 call Margaret Hero, hear Margaret term me Claudio; and bring them to see this the very night before the intended wedding. For in the meantime I will so fashion the matter that Hero shall be absent; and there shall appear such seeming truth of Hero's disloyalty 45 that jealousy^o shall be called assurance and all the preparation overthrown.
 DON JOHN Grow this to what adverse issue it can, I will put it in practice. Be cunning in the working this, and thy fee is a thousand ducats. 50
 BORACHIO Be you constant in the accusation, and my cunning shall not shame me.
 DON JOHN I will presently go learn their day of marriage. Exit [with BORACHIO].

[Scene III. Leonato's garden.]

Enter BENEDICK alone.
 BENEDICK Boy!
[Enter BOY.]
 BOY Signior?
 BENEDICK In my chamber window lies a book. Bring it hither to me in the orchard.^o
 BOY I am here already, sir. 5
 BENEDICK I know that, but I would have made thee hence and here again. (Exit [BOY].) I do much wonder that one man, seeing how much another man is a fool when he dedicates his behaviors to love, will, after he hath laughed at such shallow follies in others, become 10 the argument^o of his own scorn by falling in love; and such a man is Claudio. I have known when there was no music with him but the drum and the fife; and now had he rather hear the tabor and the pipe.^o I have 24 stale prostitute 31 meet hour suitable time 33 intend pretend 36 cozened cheated 39 instances proofs 46

 jealousy mistrust
 II.iii.4 orchard garden II argument subject matter 14
 tabor . . . pipe music of an unmartial sort known when he would have walked ten mile afoot to 15 see a good armor; and now will he lie ten nights awake carving the fashion° of a new doublet. He was wont to speak plain and to the purpose, like an honest man and a soldier; and now is he turned orthography;° his words are a very fantastical banquet—just so many 20 strange dishes. May I be so converted and see with these eyes? I cannot tell; I think not. I will not be sworn but love may transform me to an oyster; but I'll take my oath on it, till he have made an oyster of me he shall never make me such a fool. One woman 25 is fair, yet I am well; another is wise, yet I am well; another virtuous, yet I am well. But till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace. Rich she shall be, that's certain; wise, or I'll none; virtuous, or I'll never cheapen° her; fair, or I'll 30 never look on her; mild, or come not near me; noble, or not I for an angel;° of good discourse,° an excellent musician, and her hair shall be of what color it please God. Ha, the prince and Monsieur Love! [Retiring.] I will hide me in the arbor. 35

Enter Prince [DON PEDRO], LEONATO, CLAUDIO, [to the sound of] music.

DON PEDRO

Come, shall we hear this music?

CLAUDIO

Yea, my good lord. How still the evening is,
 As hushed on purpose to grace harmony!

DON PEDRO

See you where Benedick hath hid himself?

CLAUDIO

O, very well, my lord. The music ended, 40
 We'll fit the kid fox with a pennyworth.°

Enter BALTHASAR with music.

DON PEDRO

Come, Balthasar, we'll hear that song again.

BALTHASAR

O, good my lord, tax not so bad a voice
 To slander music any more than once.

DON PEDRO

It is the witness still of excellency 45
 To put a strange face on his own perfection.
 I pray thee sing, and let me woo no more.

BALTHASAR

Because you talk of wooing, I will sing,
 Since many a wooer doth commence his suit
 To her he thinks not worthy, yet he woos, 50
 Yet will he swear he loves.

DON PEDRO

Nay, pray thee come;

Or if thou wilt hold longer argument,
 Do it in notes.

BALTHASAR

Note this before my notes:

There's not a note of mine that's worth the noting.

DON PEDRO

Why, these are very crotchets° that he speaks! 55
 Note notes, forsooth, and nothing!°

[Music.]

BENEDICK [Aside.] Now divine air! Now is his soul ravished! Is it not strange that sheep's guts should hale souls out of men's bodies? Well, a horn for my money, when all's done. 60

[BALTHASAR sings.]

The Song.

Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more,
 Men were deceivers ever,
 One foot in sea, and one on shore,
 To one thing constant never.
 Then sigh not so, 65
 But let them go,
 And be you blithe and bonny,
 Converting all your sounds of woe
 Into hey nonny, nonny.

Sing no more ditties, sing no moe, 70
 Of dumps° so dull and heavy;
 The fraud of men was ever so,
 Since summer first was leavy.
 Then sigh not so, &c.

DON PEDRO By my troth, a good song. 75

BALTHASAR And an ill singer, my lord.

DON PEDRO Ha, no, no, faith! Thou sing'st well enough for a shift.°

BENEDICK [Aside.] And he had been a dog that should have howled thus, they would have hanged him; and 80
 I pray God his bad voice bode no mischief. I had as live° have heard the night raven, come what plague could have come after it.

DON PEDRO Yea, marry. Dost thou hear, Balthasar? I pray thee get us some excellent music; for tomorrow 85 night we would have it at the Lady Hero's chamber window.

BALTHASAR The best I can, my lord.

DON PEDRO Do so. Farewell.

Exit BALTHASAR [with MUSICIANS].

45 Come hither, Leonato. What was it you told me of today? That your niece Beatrice was in love with Signior Benedick?

CLAUDIO O, ay! [In a low voice to DON PEDRO.]
 Stalk on, stalk on; the fowl sits. [In full voice.] I did never think that lady would have loved any man. 95

50 LEONATO No, not I neither; but most wonderful that she should so dote on Signior Benedick, whom she hath in all outward behaviors seemed ever to abhor.

BENEDICK [Aside.] Is't possible? Sits the wind in that corner? 100

LEONATO By my troth, my lord, I cannot tell what to think of it, but that she loves him with an enraged affection, it is past the infinite of thought.

DON PEDRO May be she doth but counterfeit.

CLAUDIO Faith, like enough. 105

LEONATO O God, counterfeit? There was never

17 carving the fashion considering the design 19 orthography i.e., into a pedant (?) 30 cheapen bargain for 31-32 noble . . . angel puns: both words are Elizabethan coins 32 discourse conversation 41 We'll . . . penny-worth We'll give Benedick a little something (perhaps "kid fox" means "young fox," perhaps "known fox")

55 crotchets (1) whims (2) musical notes 56 nothing pronounced "noting," hence a pun 71 dumps sad songs 78 shift makeshift 82 live lief counterfeit of passion came so near the life of passion as she discovers^o it.

DON PEDRO Why, what effects of passion shows she?

CLAUDIO [In a low voice.] Bait the hook well! This ¹¹⁰ fish will bite.

LEONATO What effects, my lord? She will sit you, you heard my daughter tell you how.

CLAUDIO She did indeed.

DON PEDRO How, how, I pray you? You amaze me! ¹¹⁵

I would have thought her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.

LEONATO I would have sworn it had, my lord—especially against Benedick.

BENEDICK [Aside.] I should think this a gull^o but that ¹²⁰ the white-bearded fellow speaks it. Knavery cannot, sure, hide himself in such reverence.

CLAUDIO [In a low voice.] He hath ta'en th' infection; hold^o it up.

DON PEDRO Hath she made her affection known to ¹²⁵ Benedick?

LEONATO No, and swears she never will. That's her torment.

CLAUDIO 'Tis true indeed. So your daughter says. "Shall I," says she, "that have so oft encount'ed him ¹³⁰ with scorn, write to him that I love him?"

LEONATO This says she now when she is beginning to write to him; for she'll be up twenty times a night, and there will she sit in her smock till she have writ a sheet of paper. My daughter tells us all. ¹³⁵

CLAUDIO Now you talk of a sheet of paper, I remember a pretty jest your daughter told us of.

LEONATO O, when she had writ it, and was reading it over, she found "Benedick" and "Beatrice" between the sheet? ¹⁴⁰

CLAUDIO That.

LEONATO O, she tore the letter into a thousand halfpence,^o railed at herself that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew would flout her. "I measure him," says she, "by my own spirit; for I ¹⁴⁵ should flout him if he writ to me. Yea, though I love him, I should."

CLAUDIO Then down upon her knees she falls, weeps, sobs, bears her heart, tears her hair, prays, curses—"O sweet Benedick! God give me patience!" ¹⁵⁰

LEONATO She doth indeed; my daughter say so; and the ecstasy^o hath so much overborne her that my daughter is sometime afeard she will do a desperate outrage to herself. It is very true.

DON PEDRO It were good that Benedick knew of it ¹⁵⁵ by some other, if she will not discover it.

CLAUDIO To what end? He would make but a sport of it and torment the poor lady worse.

DON PEDRO And he should, it were an alms^o to hang him! She's an excellent sweet lady, and, out of all ¹⁶⁰ suspicion, she is virtuous.

CLAUDIO And she is exceeding wise.

DON PEDRO In everything but in loving Benedick.

LEONATO O, my lord, wisdom and blood^o combating in so tender a body, we have ten proofs to one that ¹⁶⁵ blood hath the victory. I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian.

DON PEDRO I would she had bestowed this dotage on me; I would have daffed all other respects^o and made her half myself. I pray you tell Benedick of it and hear ¹⁷⁰ what'a will say.

LEONATO Were it good, think you?

CLAUDIO Hero thinks surely she will die; for she says she will die if he love her not, and she will die ere she make her love known, and she will die, if he woo her, ¹⁷⁵ rather than she will bate^o one breath of her accustomed crossness.

DON PEDRO She doth well. If she should make tender^o of her love, 'tis very possible he'll scorn it; for the man, as you know all, hath a contemptible^o spirit. ¹⁸⁰

CLAUDIO He is a very proper^o man.

DON PEDRO He hath indeed a good outward happiness.

CLAUDIO Before God, and in my mind, very wise.

DON PEDRO He doth indeed show some sparks that ¹⁸⁵ are like wit.^o

CLAUDIO And I take him to be valiant.

DON PEDRO As Hector, I assure you. And in the managing of quarrels you may say he is wise, for either he avoids them with great discretion, or undertakes ¹⁹⁰ them with a most Christianlike fear.

LEONATO If he do fear God, 'a must necessarily keep peace. If he break the peace, he ought to enter into a quarrel with fear and trembling.

DON PEDRO And so will he do; for the man doth fear ¹⁹⁵ God, howsoever it seems not in him by some large jests^o he will make. Well, I am sorry for your niece. Shall we go seek Benedick and tell him of her love?

CLAUDIO Never tell him, my lord; let her wear it out with good counsel. ²⁰⁰

LEONATO Nay, that's impossible; she may wear her heart out first.

DON PEDRO Well, we will hear further of it by your daughter. Let it cool the while. I love Benedick well, and I could wish he would modestly examine himself ²⁰⁵ to see how much he is unworthy so good a lady.

LEONATO My lord, will you walk? Dinner is ready.

[They walk away.]

CLAUDIO If he do not dote on her upon this, I will never trust my expectation.

DON PEDRO Let there be the same net spread for her, ²¹⁰ and that must your daughter and her gentlewomen carry.^o The sport will be, when they hold one an opinion of another's dotage, and no such matter. That's the scene that I would see, which will be merely a dumb show.^o Let us send her to call him in to dinner. ²¹⁵

[Exeunt DON PEDRO, CLAUDIO, and LEONATO.]

BENEDICK [Advancing.] This can be no trick; the conference was sadly^o borne. They have the truth of this from Hero. They seem to pity the lady; it seems her affections have their full bent.^o Love me? Why, it

169 daffed . . . respects put aside all other considerations (i.e., of disparity in rank) 176 bate abate, give up 178 tender offer 180 contemptible disdainful 181 proper handsome 186 wit intelligence 196-97 large jests broad jokes 212 carry manage 215 dumb show pantomime (because of embarrassment) 217 sadly seriously 219 affections . . . bent emotions are tightly stretched (like a bent bow)

108 discovers reveals, betrays 120 gull trick 124 hold keep 142-43 halfpence i.e., small pieces 152 ecstasy madness 159 an alms a charity 164 blood passion must be requited. I hear how I am censured. They say 220

 I will bear myself proudly if I perceive the love come from her. They say too that she will rather die than give any sign of affection. I did never think to marry;
 I must not seem proud. Happy are they that hear their detractions and can put them to mending. They say 225
 the lady is fair—'tis a truth, I can bear them witness; and virtuous—'tis so, I cannot reprove it; and wise, but for loving me; by my troth, it is no addition to her wit, nor no great argument of her folly; for I will be horribly in love with her. I may chance have some 230 odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me because I have railed so long against marriage; but doth not the appetite alter? A man loves the meat in his youth that he cannot endure in his age. Shall quips and sentences° and these paper bullets of the brain awe a man 235 from the career° of his humor? No, the world must be peopled. When I said I would die a bachelor, I did not think I should live till I were married. Here comes Beatrice. By this day, she's a fair lady. I do spy some marks of love in her. 240

Enter BEATRICE.

BEATRICE Against my will I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.

BENEDICK Fair Beatrice, I thank you for your pains.

BEATRICE I took no more pains for those thanks than you take pains to thank me. If it had been painful, I 245 would not have come.

BENEDICK You take pleasure then in the message?

BEATRICE Yea, just so much as you may take upon a knife's point, and choke a daw withal.° You have no stomach,° signior? Fare you well. Exit. 250

BENEDICK Ha! "Against my will I am sent to bid you come in to dinner." There's a double meaning in that.
 'I took no more pains for those thanks than you took pains to thank me.' That's as much as to say, "Any pains that I take for you is as easy as thanks." If I do 255 not take pity of her, I am a villain; if I do not love her,
 I am a Jew. I will go get her picture. Exit.

[ACT III]

[Scene I. Leonato's garden.]

Enter HERO and two gentlewomen, MARGARET and URSULA.

HERO

Good Margaret, run thee to the parlor.
 There shalt thou find my cousin Beatrice
 Proposing with° the prince and Claudio.
 Whisper her ear and tell her, I and Ursley
 Walk in the orchard, and our whole discourse 5
 Is all of her. Say that thou overheard'st us;
 And bid her steal into the pleachèd bower,

Where honeysuckles, ripened by the sun,
 Forbid the sun to enter—like favorites,
 Made proud by princes, that advance their pride 10
 Against that power that bred it.° There will she hide
 her
 To listen our propose. This is thy office;°
 Bear thee well in it and leave us alone.

MARGARET

I'll make her come, I warrant you, presently. [Exit.]

HERO

Now, Ursula, when Beatrice doth come, 15
 As we do trace° this alley up and down,
 Our talk must only be of Benedick.
 When I do name him, let it be thy part
 To praise him more than ever man did merit.
 My talk to thee must be how Benedick 20
 Is sick in love with Beatrice. Of this matter
 Is little Cupid's crafty° arrow made,
 That only° wounds by hearsay.

Enter BEATRICE.

Now begin;
 For look where Beatrice like a lapwing runs
 Close by the ground, to hear our conference. 25

URSULA

The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
 Cut with her golden oars the silver stream
 And greedily devour the treacherous bait;
 So angle we for Beatrice, who even now
 Is couchèd in the woodbine coverture.° 30
 Fear you not my part of the dialogue.

HERO

Then go we near her, that her ear lose nothing
 Of the false sweet bait that we lay for it.

[They approach the bower.]

No, truly, Ursula, she is too disdainful.
 I know her spirits are as coy° and wild 35
 As haggards° of the rock.

URSULA

But are you sure
 That Benedick loves Beatrice so entirely?

HERO

So says the prince, and my new-trothèd lord.

URSULA

And did they bid you tell her of it, madam?

HERO

They did entreat me to acquaint her of it; 40
 But I persuaded them, if they loved Benedick,
 To wish him wrestle with affection
 And never to let Beatrice know of it.

URSULA

Why did you so? Doth not the gentleman
 Deserve as full as fortunate a bed 45
 As ever Beatrice shall couch upon?

HERO

O god of love! I know he doth deserve
 As much as may be yielded to a man;
 But Nature never framed a woman's heart

234-35 sentences maxims 236 career course 249 withal with 249-50 no stomach no wish to argue (as well as "no appetite")

III.i.3 Proposing with talking to

10-11 Made . . . it an Elizabethan audience of c. 1600 would be reminded of the Earl of Essex 12 office duty 16 trace walk 22 crafty skillfully wrought 23 only solely 30 woodbine coverture honeysuckle thicket 35 coy disdainful
 36 haggards wild and intractable hawks

Of prouder stuff than that of Beatrice.
 Disdain and Scorn ride sparkling in her eyes,
 Misprizing^o what they look on; and her wit
 Values itself so highly that to her
 All matter else seems weak. She cannot love,
 Nor take no shape nor project^o of affection,
 She is so self-endear'd.

URSULA Sure I think so;
 And therefore certainly it were not good
 She knew his love, lest she'll make sport of it.

HERO
 Why, you speak truth. I never yet saw man,
 How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featured, 60
 But she would spell him backward. If fair-faced,
 She would swear the gentleman should be her sister;
 If black,^o why, Nature, drawing of an antic,^o
 Made a foul blot; if tall, a lance ill-headed;
 If low, an agate very vilely cut;^o
 If speaking, why, a vane blown with all winds;
 If silent, why, a block mov'd with none.
 So turns she every man the wrong side out
 And never gives to truth and virtue that
 Which simpleness and merit purchaseth. 70

URSULA
 Sure, sure, such carping is not commendable.

HERO
 No, not to be so odd, and from all fashions,^o
 As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable.
 But who dare tell her so? If I should speak,
 She would mock me into air; O, she would laugh me 75
 Out of myself, press me to death with wit!
 Therefore let Benedick, like covered fire,
 Consume away in sighs, waste inwardly.
 It were a better death than die with mocks,
 Which is as bad as die with tickling.

URSULA
 Yet tell her of it. Hear what she will say.

HERO
 No; rather I will go to Benedick
 And counsel him to fight against his passion.
 And truly, I'll devise some honest^o slanders
 To stain my cousin with. One doth not know
 How much an ill word may empoison liking.

URSULA
 O, do not do your cousin such a wrong!
 She cannot be so much without true judgment
 (Having so swift and excellent a wit
 As she is prized to have) as to refuse
 So rare a gentleman as Signior Benedick.

HERO
 He is the only man of Italy,
 Always excepted my dear Claudio.

URSULA
 I pray you be not angry with me, madam,
 Speaking my fancy. Signior Benedick,
 For shape, for bearing, argument, and valor,
 Goes foremost in report through Italy.

HERO
 Indeed he hath an excellent good name.

50 URSULA
 His excellence did earn it ere he had it.
 When are you married, madam? 100

HERO
 Why, everyday tomorrow!^o Come, go in.
 55 I'll show thee some attires, and have thy counsel
 Which is the best to furnish^o me tomorrow.

[They walk away.]

URSULA
 She's limed,^o I warrant you! We have caught her,
 madam.

HERO
 If it prove so, then loving goes by haps;^o 105
 Some Cupid kills with arrows, some with traps.

[Exeunt HERO and URSULA.]

BEATRICE [Coming forward.]
 65 What fire is in mine ears? Can this be true?
 Stand I condemned for pride and scorn so much?
 Contempt, farewell! And maiden pride, adieu!
 No glory lives behind the back of such. 110
 And, Benedick, love on; I will requite thee,
 Taming my wild heart to thy loving hand.
 If thou dost love, my kindness shall incite thee
 To bind our loves up in a holy band;
 For others say thou dost deserve, and I 115
 Believe it better than reportingly.^o Exit.

[Scene II. Leonato's house.]

Enter prince [DON PEDRO], CLAUDIO, BENEDICK, and LEONATO.

DON PEDRO I do but stay till your marriage be consummate, and then go I toward Aragon. 80

CLAUDIO I'll bring you thither, my lord, if you'll vouchsafe^o me.

DON PEDRO Nay, that would be as great a soil in the 5 new gloss of your marriage as to show a child his new coat and forbid him to wear it. I will only be bold with Benedick for his company; for, from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth. He hath 85 twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring,^o and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. He hath a heart as sound as a bell; and his tongue is the clapper, for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks. 10

BENEDICK Gallants, I am not as I have been.

90 LEONATO So say I. Methinks you are sadder.^o 15

CLAUDIO I hope he be in love.

DON PEDRO Hang him truant?^o There's no true drop of blood in him to be truly touched with love. If he be sad, he wants money.

BENEDICK I have the toothache. 20

95 DON PEDRO Draw it.^o

101 everyday tomorrow tomorrow I shall be married forever 103 furnish dress 104 limed caught (as a bird is caught in birdlime, a sticky substance smeared on branches) 105 haps chance 116 reportingly mere hearsay
 III.ii.4 vouchsafe permit 10 cut Cupid's bowstring avoided falling in love 15 sadder graver 17 truant i.e., as unfaithful to his anti-romantic stance 21 Draw it Extract it (but "draw" also means eviscerate; traitors were hanged, drawn, and quartered. "Draw it" thus leads to the exclamation
 "Hang it")

52 Misprizing despising 55 project notion 63 black dark-complexioned; antic grotesque figure 65 agate . . .
 cut poorly done miniature 72 from all fashions contrary 84 honest appropriate

BENEDICK Hang it!

CLAUDIO You must hang it first and draw it afterwards.

DON PEDRO What? Sigh for the toothache? 25

LEONATO Where is but a humor or a worm.°

BENEDICK Well, everyone cannot master a grief but he that has it.°

CLAUDIO Yet say I he is in love.

DON PEDRO There is no appearance of fancy° in him, 30 unless it be a fancy that he hath to strange disguises; as to be a Dutchman today, a Frenchman tomorrow; or in the shape of two countries at once, as a German from the waist downward, all slops,° and a Spaniard from the hip upward, no doublet.° Unless he have a 35 fancy to this foolery, as it appears he hath, he is no fool for fancy, as you would have it appear he is.

CLAUDIO If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs; 'a brushes his hat o' mornings. What should that bode? 40

DON PEDRO Hath any man seen him at the barber's?

CLAUDIO No, but the barber's man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed tennis balls.°

LEONATO Indeed he looks younger than he did, by 45 the loss of a beard.

DON PEDRO Nay, 'a rubs himself with civet.° Can you smell him out by that?

CLAUDIO That's as much as to say, the sweet youth's in love. 50

DON PEDRO The greatest note of it is his melancholy.

CLAUDIO And when was he wont to wash his face?

DON PEDRO Yea, or to paint himself?° For the which I hear what they say of him.

CLAUDIO Nay, but his jesting spirit, which is now 55 crept into a lutestring, and now governed by stops.°

DON PEDRO Indeed that tells a heavy tale for him. Conclude, conclude, he is in love.

CLAUDIO Nay, but I know who loves him.

DON PEDRO That would I know too. I warrant, one 60 that knows him not.

CLAUDIO Yes, and his ill conditions;° and in despite of all,° dies° for him.

DON PEDRO She shall be buried with her face upwards.° 65

BENEDICK Yet is this no charm for the toothache. Old signior, walk aside with me; I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobbyhorses° must not hear.

[Exeunt BENEDICK and LEONATO.]

DON PEDRO For my life, to break with him about 70 Beatrice!

26 humor . . . worm supposed causes of tooth decay; "humor = secretion" 27-28 Well . . . it A man has to have a grief first before he can master it (Benedick does not admit that he has a grief; but some editors emend "cannot" to "can") 30 fancy love 34 slops loose breeches 35 doublet close-fitting jacket 43-44 the . . . balls cf. Beatrice's remark, II.i.27-28, "I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face" 47 civet perfume 53 to paint himself to use cosmetics 56 stops frets (on the lute) 62 conditions qualities 62-63 in . . . all notwithstanding 63 dies (1) pines away (2) is willing to "die" in the act of sex 64-65 She . . . upwards continues sexual innuendo 68-69 hobbyhorses jesters (originally an imitation horse fastened around the waist of a morris dancer)

CLAUDIO 'Tis even so. Hero and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice, and then the two bears will not bite one another when they meet.

Enter [DON] JOHN the bastard.

DON JOHN My lord and brother, God save you. 75

DON PEDRO Good den,° brother.

DON JOHN If your leisure served, I would speak with you.

DON PEDRO In private?

DON JOHN If it please you. Yet Count Claudio may 80 hear, for what I would speak of concerns him.

DON PEDRO What's the matter?

DON JOHN [To CLAUDIO.] Means your lordship to be married tomorrow?

DON PEDRO You know he does. 85

DON JOHN I know not that, when he knows what I know.

CLAUDIO If there be any impediment, I pray you discover it.

DON JOHN You may think I love you not; let that 90 appear hereafter, and aim better at me° by that° I now will manifest. For my brother (I think he holds you well, and in dearness of heart) hath help to effect your ensuing marriage—surely suit ill spent and labor ill bestowed! 95

DON PEDRO Why, what's the matter?

DON JOHN I came hither to tell you, and, circumstances short'ned (for she has been too long a-talking of), the lady is disloyal.

CLAUDIO Who? Hero? 100

DON JOHN Even she—Leonato's Hero, your Hero, every man's Hero.

CLAUDIO Disloyal?

DON JOHN The word is too good to paint out her wickedness. I could say she were worse. Think you of 105 a worse title, and I will fit her to it. Wonder not till further warrant. Go but with me tonight, you shall see her chamber window ent'red, even the night before her wedding day. If you love her then, tomorrow wed her. But it would better fit your honor to change your 110 mind.

CLAUDIO May this be so?

DON PEDRO I will not think it.

DON JOHN If you dare not trust that you see, confess not that you know. If you will follow me, I will show 115 you enough; and when you have seen more and heard more, proceed accordingly.

CLAUDIO If I see anything tonight why I should not marry her tomorrow, in the congregation where I should wed, there will I shame her. 120

DON PEDRO And, as I wooed for thee to obtain her, I will join with thee to disgrace her.

DON JOHN I will disparage her no farther till you are my witnesses. Bear it coldly° but till midnight, and let the issue show itself. 125

DON PEDRO O day untowardly turned!

CLAUDIO O mischief strangely thwarting!

DON JOHN O plague right well prevented! So will you say when you have seen the sequel. [Exeunt.]

76 Good den good evening 91 aim . . . me judge better of me; that that which 124 coldly calmly

[Scene III. A street.]

Enter DOGBERRY and his compartner [VERGES,] with the WATCH.

DOGBERRY Are you good men and true?

VERGES Yea, or else it were pity but they should suffer salvation,^o body and soul.

DOGBERRY Nay, that were a punishment too good for them if they should have any allegiance in them, s being chosen for the prince's watch.

VERGES Well, give them their charge,^o neighbor Dogberry.

DOGBERRY First, who think you the most desartless man to be constable? 10

FIRST WATCH High Oatcake, sir, or George Seacole, for they can write and read.

DOGBERRY Come hither, neighbor Seacole. God hath blessed you with a good name. To be a well-favored^o man is the gift of fortune, but to write and read comes 15 by nature.

SECOND WATCH Both which, Master Constable—

DOGBERRY You have; I knew it would be your answer. Well, for your favor, sir, why, give God thanks and make no boast of it; and for your writing 20 and reading, let that appear when there is no need of such vanity. You are thought here to be the most senseless and fit man for the constable of the watch. Therefore bear you the lanthorn. This is your charge: you shall comprehend all vagrom^o men; you are to 25 bid any man stand,^o in the prince's name.

SECOND WATCH How if 'a will not stand?

DOGBERRY Why then, take no note of him, but let him go, and presently call the rest of the watch together and thank God you are rid of a knave. 30

VERGES If he will not stand when he is bidden, he is none of the prince's subjects.

DOGBERRY True, and they are to meddle with none but the prince's subjects. You shall also make no noise in the streets; for, for the watch to babble and to talk 35 is most tolerable, and not to be endured.

WATCH^o We will rather sleep than talk; we know what belongs to a watch.

DOGBERRY Why, you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman, for I cannot see how sleeping should 40 offend. Only, have a care that your bills^o be not stol'n. Well, you are to call at all the alehouses and bid those that are drunk get them to bed.

WATCH How if they will not?

DOGBERRY Why then, let them alone till they are 45 sober. If they make you not then the better answer, you may say they are not the men you took them for.

WATCH Well, sir.

DOGBERRY If you meet a thief, you may suspect him, by virtue of your office, to be no true man; and for 50 such kind of man, the less you meddle or make with them, why, the more is for your honesty.

WATCH If we know him to be a thief, shall we not lay hands on him?

DOGBERRY Truly, by your office you may; but I 55 think they that touch pitch will be defiled. The most peaceable way for you, if you do take a thief, is to let him show himself what he is, and steal out of your company.

VERGES You have been always called a merciful man, 60 partner.

DOGBERRY Truly, I would not hang a dog by my will, much more a man who hath any honesty in him.

VERGES If you hear a child cry in the night, you must call to the nurse and bid her still it. 65

WATCH How if the nurse be asleep and will not hear us?

DOGBERRY Why then, depart in peace and let the child wake her with crying; for the ewe that will not hear her lamb when it baes will never answer a calf 70 when he bleats.

VERGES 'Tis very true.

DOGBERRY This is the end of the charge: you, constable, are to present the prince's own person. If you meet the prince in the night, you may stay him. 75

VERGES Nay, by'r Lady, that I think 'a cannot.

DOGBERRY Five shillings to one on't, with any man that knows the statutes, he may stay him! Marry, not without the prince be willing; for indeed the watch ought to offend no man, and it is an offense to stay a 80 man against his will.

VERGES By'r Lady, I think it be so.

DOGBERRY Ha, ah, ha! Well, masters, good night. And there be any matter of weight chances, call up me. Keep your fellows' counsels and your own, and good 85 night. Come, neighbor.

WATCH Well, masters, we hear our charge. Let us go sit here upon the church bench till two, and then all to bed.

DOGBERRY One word more, honest neighbors. I 90 pray you watch about Signior Leonato's door; for the wedding being there tomorrow, there is a great coil^o tonight. Adieu. Be vigilant, I beseech you.

Exeunt [DOGBERRY and VERGES].

Enter BORACHIO and CONRADE.

BORACHIO What, Conrade!

WATCH [Aside.] Peace! Stir not! 95

BORACHIO Conrade, I say!

CONRADE Here, man. I am at thy elbow.

BORACHIO Mass,^o and my elbow itched; I thought there would a scab^o follow.

CONRADE I will owe thee an answer for that; and now 100 forward with thy tale.

BORACHIO Stand thee close then under this penthouse,^o for it drizzles rain, and I will, like a true drunkard,^o utter all to thee.

WATCH [Aside.] Some treason, masters; yet stand 105 close.

BORACHIO Therefore know I have earned of Don John a thousand ducats.

92 coil to-do, turmoil 98 Mass an interjection, from "By the Mass" 99 scab (1) crust over a wound (2) contemptible person 102-03 penthouse shed, lean-to 104 drunkard his name is based on the Spanish borracho = drunkard

III.iii.3 salvation damnation (the beginning of the malapropisms basic to the comedy of Dogberry and Verges) 7 charge instructions 14 well-favored handsome 25 comprehend all vagrom apprehend all vagrant 26 stand halt, stop 37 Watch neither the quarto nor the Folio differentiates again between First Watch and Second Watch until the end of this scene 41 bills constables' pikes

CONRADE It is possible that any villainy should be so dear?

110

BORACHIO Thou shouldst rather ask if it were possible any villainy should be so rich; for when rich villains have need of poor ones, poor ones may make what price they will.

CONRADE I wonder at it.

115

BORACHIO That shows thou art unconfirmed.^o Thou knowest that the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloak, is nothing to a man.^o

CONRADE Yes, it is apparel.

BORACHIO I mean the fashion.

120

CONRADE Yes, the fashion is the fashion.

BORACHIO Tush! I may as well say the fool's the fool. But see'st thou not what a deformed thief this fashion is?

WATCH [Aside.] I know that Deformed; 'a has been a vile thief this seven year; 'a goes up and down like a gentleman. I remember his name.

BORACHIO Didst thou not hear somebody?

CONRADE No; 'twas the vane on the house.

BORACHIO See'st thou not, I say, what a deformed thief this fashion is? How giddily 'a turns about all the hotbloods between fourteen and five-and-thirty? Sometimes fashioning them like Pharaoh's soldiers in the reechy^o painting, sometime like god Bel's priests^o in the old church window, sometime like the shaven Hercules in the smirched worm-eaten tapestry, where his codpiece^o seems as massy as his club?

CONRADE All this I see; and I see that the fashion wears out more apparel than the man. But art not thou thyself giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

BORACHIO Not so neither. But know that I have tonight wooed Margaret, the Lady Hero's gentlewoman, by the name of Hero. She leans me out at her mistress' chamber window, bids me a thousand times good night. I tell this tale vilely—I should first tell thee how the prince, Claudio, and my master, planted and placed and possessed^o by my master Don John, saw afar off in the orchard this amiable encounter.

150

CONRADE And thought they Margaret was Hero?

BORACHIO Two of them did, the prince and Claudio; but the devil my master knew she was Margaret; and partly by his oaths, which first possessed them, partly by the dark night, which did deceive them, but chiefly by my villainy, which did confirm any slander that Don John had made, away went Claudio enraged; swore he would meet her, as he was appointed, next morning at the temple, and there, before the whole congregation, shame her with what he saw o'ernight and send her home again without a husband.

160

FIRST WATCH We charge you in the prince's name stand!

SECOND WATCH Call up the right Master Constable.

We have here recovered the most dangerous piece of lechery that ever was known in the commonwealth.

116 unconfirmed innocent 118 is . . . man fails to reveal his actual character 134 reechy grimy, filthy; god Bel's priests from the Apocrypha 137 codpiece decorative pouch at the fly on a sixteenth-century man's breeches 149 possessed informed, deluded

FIRST WATCH And one Deformed is one of them; I know him; 'a wears a lock.^o

CONRADE Masters, masters—

SECOND WATCH You'll be made bring Deformed forth, I warrant you.

170

CONRADE Masters, never speak; we charge you let us obey you to go with us.^o

BORACHIO We are like to prove a goodly commodity, being taken up of these men's bills.^o

175

CONRADE A commodity in question,^o I warrant you. Come, we'll obey you.

Exeunt.

[Scene IV. Leonato's house.]

Enter HERO, and MARGARET, and URSULA.

HERO Good Ursula, wake my cousin Beatrice and desire her to rise.

URSULA I will, lady.

HERO And bid her come hither.

URSULA Well.

[Exit.] 5

MARGARET Troth, I think your other rabato^o were better.

HERO No, pray thee, good Meg, I'll wear this.

MARGARET By my troth, 'snot so good, and I warrant your cousin will say so.

10

HERO My cousin's a fool, and thou art another. I'll wear none but this.

MARGARET I like the new tire^o within^o excellently, if the hair were a thought browner; and your gown's a most rare fashion, i' faith. I saw the Duchess of Milan's gown that they praise so.

15

HERO O, that exceeds, they say.

MARGARET By my troth, 'sbut a nightgown^o in respect of yours—cloth o' gold and cuts,^o and laced with silver, set with pearls, down sleeves, side-sleeves,^o and skirts, round underborne with a bluish tinsel. But for a fine, quaint,^o graceful, and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten on't.

20

HERO God give me joy to wear it, for my heart is exceeding heavy.

25

MARGARET 'Twill be heavier soon by the weight of a man.

HERO Fie upon thee! Art not ashamed?

MARGARET Of what, lady? Of speaking honorably? Is not marriage honorable in a beggar? Is not your lord honorable without marriage? I think you would have me say, "saving your reverence, a husband." And bad thinking do not wrest true speaking, I'll offend nobody. Is there any harm in "the heavier for a husband"? None, I think, and it be the right

35

168 lock lovelock, curl of hair hanging by the ear 172-73

Masters . . . us Conrade is mocking the language of the Second Watch; he means, "Say no more, we will go along with you" 174-75 We . . . bills Borachio continues the mockery with a series of puns: "commodity" = (1) merchandise (2) profit; "taken up" = (1) arrested (2) bought on credit; "bills" = (1) pikes (2) bonds or sureties 176 in question (1) subject to judicial examination (2) of doubtful value

III.iv.6 rabato ruff 13 tire headdress; within in the next room 18 nightgown dressing gown 19 cuts slashes to show rich fabric underneath 20 down sleeves, side-sleeves long sleeves covering the arms, open sleeves hanging from the shoulder 22 quaint pretty, dainty husband and the right wife; otherwise 'tis light,^o and not heavy. Ask my Lady Beatrice else. Here she comes.

Enter BEATRICE.

HERO Good morrow, coz.

BEATRICE Good morrow, sweet Hero.

HERO Why, how now? Do you speak in the sick 40 tune?

BEATRICE I am out of all other tune, methinks.

MARGARET Clap's into^o "Light o' love." That goes without a burden.^o Do you sing it, and I'll dance it.

BEATRICE Ye light o' love with your heels!^o Then, if 45 your husband have stables enough, you'll see he shall lack no barns.^o

MARGARET O illegitimate construction! I scorn that with my heels.

BEATRICE 'Tis almost five o'clock, cousin; 'tis time 50 you were ready. By my troth, I am exceeding ill. Heigh-ho!

MARGARET For a hawk, a horse, or a husband?

BEATRICE For the letter that begins them all, H.^o

MARGARET Well, and you be not turned Turk,^o 55 there's no more sailing by the star.

BEATRICE What means the fool, trow?^o

MARGARET Nothing I; but God send everyone their heart's desire!

HERO These gloves the count sent me, they are an 60 excellent perfume.

BEATRICE I am stuffed,^o cousin; I cannot smell.

MARGARET A maid, and stuffed!^o There's goodly catching of cold.

BEATRICE O, God help me! God help me! How long 65 have you professed apprehension?^o

MARGARET Ever since you left it. Doth not my wit become me rarely?

BEATRICE It is not seen enough. You should wear it in your cap. By my troth, I am sick. 70

MARGARET Get you some of this distilled Carduus Benedictus^o and lay it to your heart. It is the only thing for a qualm.^o

HERO There thou prick'st her with a thistle.

BEATRICE Benedictus? Why Benedictus? You have 75 some moral^o in this Benedictus.

MARGARET Moral? No, by my troth, I have no moral meaning. I meant plain holy thistle. You may think perchance that I think you are in love. Nay, by'r lady, I am not such a fool to think what I list;^o nor I list not 80 to think what I can; nor indeed I cannot think, if I would think my heart out of thinking, that you are in love, or that you will be in love, or that you can be in love. Yet Benedick was such another, and now is he become a man. He swore he would never marry; and 85 yet now in despite of his heart he eats his meat without grudging.^o And how you may be converted I know not; but methinks you look with your eyes as other women do.

BEATRICE What pace is this that thy tongue keeps? 90

MARGARET Not a false gallop.

Enter URSULA.

URSULA Madam, withdraw. The prince, the count, Signior Benedick, Don John, and all the gallants of the town are come to fetch you to church.

HERO Help to dress me, good coz, good Meg, good 95 Ursula.
[Exeunt.]

[Scene V. Another room in Leonato's house.]

Enter LEONATO and the Constable [DOGBERRY], and the Headborough [VERGES].

LEONATO What would you with me, honest neighbor?

DOGBERRY Marry, sir, I would have some confidence with you that decerns you nearly.

LEONATO Brief, I pray you, for you see it is a busy 5 time with me.

DOGBERRY Marry, this it is, sir.

VERGES Yes, in truth it is, sir.

LEONATO What is it, my good friends?

DOGBERRY Goodman Verges, sir, speaks a little off 10 the matter—an old man, sir, and his wits are not so blunt as, God help, I would desire they were; but, in faith, honest as the skin between his brows.

VERGES Yes, I thank God I am as honest as any man living that is an old man and no honestest than I. 15

DOGBERRY Comparisons are odorous; palabras,^o neighbor Verges.

LEONATO Neighbors, you are tedious.

DOGBERRY It pleases your worship to say so, but we are the poor duke's officers; but truly, for mine own 20 part, if I were as tedious as a king, I could find in my heart to bestow it all of your worship.

LEONATO All thy tediousness on me, ah?

DOGBERRY Yea, and 'twere a thousand pound more than 'tis; for I hear as good exclamation on your 25 worship as of any man in the city, and though I be but a poor man, I am glad to hear it.

VERGES And so am I.

LEONATO I would fain know what you have to say.

VERGES Marry, sir, our watch tonight, excepting 30 your worship's presence, ha' ta'en a couple of as arrant knaves as any in Messina.

DOGBERRY A good old man, sir; he will be talking. As they say, "When the age is in, the wit is out." God help us! It is a world to see! Well said, i' faith, neighbor 35 Verges. Well, God's a good man. And two men ride of a horse, one must ride behind. An honest soul, i' faith, sir, by my troth he is, as ever broke bread; but God is to be worshiped; all men are not alike, alas, good neighbor! 40

LEONATO Indeed, neighbor, he comes too short of you.

DOGBERRY Gifts that God gives.

LEONATO I must leave you.

III.v.16 palabras for Spanish pocas palabras = few words

36 light pun on wanton 43 Claps's into let us sing 44 burden bass part (with pun on "the heavier for a husband") 45 Ye . . . heels sexual innuendo 47 barns pun on bairns, children 54 H ache was pronounced "aitch" 55 turned Turk completely changed 57 trow I wonder 62 I am stuffed I have a head cold 63 stuffed filled (as with a child) 66 apprehension wit 71-72 Carduus Benedictus blessed thistle, a medicinal herb 73 qualm sensation of sickness 76 moral special meaning 80 list please 86-87 he . . . grudging he finds that he can still eat

DOGBERRY One word, sir. Our watch, sir, have in- 45 deed comprehended two aspicuous persons, and we would have them this morning examined before your worship.

LEONATO Take their examination yourself and bring it me; I am now in great haste, as it may appear unto 50
you.

DOGBERRY It shall be suffigance.

LEONATO Drink some wine ere you go. Fare you well.

[Enter a MESSENGER.]

MESSENGER My lord, they stay for you to give your 55 daughter to her husband.

LEONATO I'll wait upon them. I am ready.

Exit [LEONATO, with MESSENGER].

DOGBERRY Go, good partner, go get you to Francis
Seacole; bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the jail.
We are now to examination these men. 60

VERGES And we must do it wisely.

DOGBERRY We will spare for no wit, I warrant you;
here's that shall drive some of them to a non-come.^o
Only get the learned writer to set down our excommunication, and meet me at the jail. [Exeunt.] 65

[A C T I V]

[Scene I. A church.]

Enter prince [DON PEDRO], [DON JOHN the] bastard, LEONATO, FRIAR [Francis], CLAUDIO, BENEDICK, HERO, and BEATRICE [and ATTENDANTS].

LEONATO Come, Friar Francis, be brief. Only to the plain form of marriage, and you shall recount their particular^o duties afterwards.

FRIAR You come hither, my lord, to marry this lady?
CLAUDIO No. 5

LEONATO To be married to her; friar, you come to marry her.

FRIAR Lady, you come hither to be married to this count?

HERO I do. 10

FRIAR If either of you know any inward impediment why you should not be conjoined, I charge you on your souls to utter it.

CLAUDIO Know you any, Hero?

HERO None, my lord. 15

FRIAR Know you any, count?

LEONATO I dare make his answer, none.

CLAUDIO O, what men dare do! What men may do!
What men daily do, not knowing what they do!

BENEDICK How now? Interjections? Why then, some 20 be of^o laughing, as, ah, ha, he!^o

CLAUDIO

Stand thee by,^o friar. Father, by your leave,
Will you with free and unconstrained soul
Give me this maid your daughter?

LEONATO

As freely, son, as God did give her me. 25

CLAUDIO

And what have I to give you back whose worth
May counterpoise this rich and precious gift?

DON PEDRO

Nothing, unless you render her again.

CLAUDIO

Sweet prince, you learn me noble thankfulness.

There, Leonato, take her back again. 30

Give not this rotten orange to your friend.

She's but the sign and semblance of her honor.

Behold how like a maid she blushes here!

O, what authority and show of truth

Can cunning sin cover itself withal! 35

Comes not that blood, as modest evidence,

To witness simple virtue? Would you not swear,

All you that see her, that she were a maid,

By these exterior shows? But she is none.

She knows the heat of a luxurious^o bed; 40

Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty.

LEONATO

What do you mean, my lord?

CLAUDIO

Not to be married,

Not to knit my soul to an approvèd^o wanton.

LEONATO

Dear my lord, if you, in your own proof,^o

Have vanquished the resistance of her youth 45

And made defeat of her virginity—

CLAUDIO

I know what you would say: if I have known^o her,

You will say she did embrace me as a husband,

And so extenuate the 'forehand sin. 50

No, Leonato,

I never tempted her with word too large,

But, as a brother to his sister, showed

Bashful sincerity and comely love.

HERO

And seemed I ever otherwise to you?

CLAUDIO

Out on thee, seeming! I will write against it. 55

You seem to me as Dian in her orb,

As chaste as is the bud ere it be blown;^o

But you are more intemperate in your blood^o

Than Venus, or those pamp' red animals

That rage in savage sensuality. 60

HERO

Is my lord well that he doth speak so wide?^o

LEONATO

Sweet prince, why speak not you?

DON PEDRO

What should I speak?

I stand dishonored that have gone about

To link my dear friend to a common stale.^o

LEONATO

Are these things spoken, or do I but dream? 65

DON JOHN

Sir, they are spoken, and these things are true.

63 non-come non compos mentis

IV.i.3 particular personal 20-21 some be of some are concerned with 21 ah, ha, he examples of interjections 22
Stand thee by stand aside

40 luxurious lustful 43 approvèd tested 44 proof experience
47 known had intercourse with 57 blown blossomed 58 blood sexual desire 61 so wide so far from the truth 64
stale prostitute

- BENEDICK
This looks not like a nuptial.
- HERO "True," O God!
- CLAUDIO
Leonato, stand I here?
Is this the prince? Is this the prince's brother?
Is this face Hero's? Are our eyes our own?
- LEONATO
All this is so. But what of this, my lord?
- CLAUDIO
Let me but move one question to your daughter;
And by that fatherly and kindly° power
That you have in her, bid her answer truly.
- LEONATO
I charge thee do so, as thou art my child.
- HERO
O, God defend me! How am I beset!
What kind of catechizing call you this?
- CLAUDIO
To make you answer truly to your name.
- HERO
Is it not Hero? Who can blot that name
With any just reproach?
- CLAUDIO Marry, that can Hero!
Hero itself can blot out Hero's virtue.
What man was he talked with you yesternight,
Out at your window betwixt twelve and one?
Now, if you are a maid, answer to this.
- HERO
I talked with no man at that hour, my lord.
- DON PEDRO
Why, then are you no maiden, Leonato,
I am sorry you must hear. Upon mine honor
Myself, my brother, and this grievèd count
Did see her, hear her, at that hour last night
Talk with a ruffian at her chamber window
Who hath indeed, most like a liberal° villain,
Confessed the vile encounters they have had
A thousand times in secret.
- DON JOHN
Fie, fie! They are not to be named, my lord—
Not to be spoke of;
There is not chastity enough in language
Without offense to utter them. Thus, pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment.
- CLAUDIO
O Hero! What a Hero hadst thou been
If half thy outward graces had been placed
About thy thoughts and counsels of thy heart!
But fare thee well, most foul, most fair, farewell;
Thou pure impiety and impious purity,
For thee I'll lock up all the gates of love,
And on my eyelids shall conjecture° hang,
To turn all beauty into thoughts of harm,
And never shall it more be gracious.
- LEONATO
Hath no man's dagger here a point for me?
[HERO swoons.]
- BEATRICE
Why, how now, cousin? Wherefore sink you down?
- DON JOHN
Come, let us go. These things, come thus to light, 110
Smother her spirits up.
[Exeunt DON PEDRO, DON JOHN, and CLAUDIO.]
- BENEDICK
How doth the lady?
- 70 BEATRICE Dead, I think. Help, uncle!
Hero! Why, Hero! Uncle! Signior Benedick!
Friar!
- LEONATO
O fate, take not away thy heavy hand!
Death is the fairest cover for her shame 115
That may be wished for.
- BEATRICE How now, cousin Hero?
- 75 FRIAR
Have comfort, lady.
- LEONATO
Dost thou look up?
- FRIAR Yea, wherefore should she not?
- LEONATO
Wherefore? Why, doth not every earthly thing
Cry shame upon her? Could she here deny 120
The story that is printed in her blood?°
- 80 Do not live, Hero; do not ope thine eyes;
For, did I think thou wouldst not quickly die,
Thought I thy spirits were stronger than thy shames,
Myself would on the rearward of reproaches 125
Strike at thy life. Grieved I, I had but one?
Chid I for that at frugal nature's frame?°
- 85 O, one too much by thee! Why had I one?
Why ever wast thou lovely in my eyes?
Why had I not with charitable hand 130
Took up a beggar's issue at my gates,
Who smirchèd thus and mired with infamy,
I might have said, "No part of it is mine;
This shames derives itself from unknown loins"? 135
But mine, and mine I loved, and mine I praised,
And mine that I was proud on, mine so much
That I myself was to myself not mine,
Valuing of her—why she, O, she is fall'n
Into a pit of ink, that the wide sea 140
Hath drops too few to wash her clean again,
And salt too little which may season give°
To her foul tainted flesh!
- BENEDICK Sir, sir, be patient.
For my part, I am so attired in wonder,
I know not what to say.
- 100 BEATRICE
O, on my soul, my cousin is belied! 145
- BENEDICK
Lady, were you her bedfellow last night?
- BEATRICE
105 No, truly, not; although, until last night,
I have this twelvemonth been her bedfellow.
- LEONATO
Confirmed, confirmed! O, that is stronger made
Which was before barred up with ribs of iron! 150
Would the two princes lie, and Claudio lie,
Who loved her so that, speaking of her foulness,
Washed it with tears? Hence from her! Let her die.

FRIAR

Hear me a little;
 For I have only been silent so long,
 And given way unto this course of fortune,
 By noting of the lady. I have marked
 A thousand blushing apparitions
 To start into her face, a thousand innocent shames
 In angel whiteness beat away those blushes,
 And in her eye there hath appeared a fire
 To burn the errors that these princes hold
 Against her maiden truth. Call me a fool;
 Trust not my reading nor my observations,
 Which with experimental seal^o doth warrant
 The tenor^o of my book; trust not my age,
 My reverence, calling, nor divinity,
 If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
 Under some biting error.

LEONATO

Friar, it cannot be.

Thou see'st that all the grace that she hath left
 Is that she will not add to her damnation
 A sin of perjury; she not denies it.
 Why seek'st thou then to cover with excuse
 That which appears in proper nakedness?

FRIAR

Lady, what man is he you are accused of?

HERO

They know that do accuse me; I know none.
 If I know more of any man alive
 Than that which maiden modesty doth warrant,
 Let all my sins lack mercy! O my father,
 Prove you that any man with me conversed
 At hours unmeet, or that I yesternight
 Maintained the change^o of words with any creature,
 Refuse me, hate me, torture me to death!

FRIAR

There is some strange misprision^o in the princes.

BENEDICK

Two of them have the very bent^o of honor;
 And if their wisdoms be misled in this,
 The practice^o of it lives in John the bastard,
 Whose spirits toil in frame of villainies.

LEONATO

I know not. If they speak but truth of her,
 These hands shall tear her. If they wrong her honor,
 The proudest of them shall well hear of it.
 Time hath not yet so dried this blood of mine,
 Nor age so eat up my invention,^o
 Nor fortune made such havoc of my means,
 Nor my bad life reft me so much of friends,
 But they shall find awaked in such a kind
 Both strength of limb and policy of mind,
 Ability in means, and choice of friends,
 To quit^o me of them throughly.

FRIAR

Pause awhile

And let my counsel sway you in this case.
 Your daughter here the princes left for dead.
 Let her awhile be secretly kept in,
 And publish it that she is dead indeed;

Maintain a mourning ostentation,^o

And on your family's old monument

155

Hang mournful epitaphs, and do all rites
 That appertain unto a burial.

LEONATO

What shall become of this? What will this do?

FRIAR

160

Marry, this well carried shall on her behalf
 Change slander to remorse; that is some good.
 But not for that dream I on this strange course,
 But on this travail look for greater birth.
 She dying, as it must be so maintained,
 Upon the instant that she was accused,
 Shall be lamented, pitied, and excused 165

Of every hearer. For it so falls out
 That what we have we prize not to the worth
 Whiles we enjoy it; but being lacked and lost,
 Why, then we rack^o the value, then we find
 The virtue that possession would not show us
 Whiles it was ours. So will it fare with Claudio.
 When he shall hear she died upon his words,
 Th' idea of her life shall sweetly creep

170

Into his study of imagination,^o
 And every lovely organ^o of her life
 Shall come appareled in more precious habit,^o
 More moving, delicate, and full of life,
 Into the eye and prospect of his soul
 Than when she lived indeed. Then shall he mourn,
 If ever love had interest in his liver,^o

180

And wish he had not so accusèd her,
 No, though he thought his accusation true.

Let this be so, and doubt not but success^o

Will fashion the event^o in better shape

Than I can lay it down in likelihood.

But if all aim, but this, be leveled false,^o

The supposition of the lady's death

Will quench the wonder of her infamy;

185

And if it sort^o not well, you may conceal her,

As best befits her wounded reputation,

In some reclusive and religious life,

Out of all eyes, tongues, minds, and injuries.

BENEDICK

Signior Leonato, let the friar advise you;

And though you know my inwardness^o and love

Is very much unto the prince and Claudio,

Yet, by mine honor, I will deal in this

As secretly and justly as your soul

Should with your body.

195

LEONATO Being that I flow in grief,

The smallest twine may lead me.

FRIAR

'Tis well consented. Presently away;

For to strange sores strangely they strain the cure.

Come, lady, die to live. This wedding day

200

Perhaps is but prolonged. Have patience and endure.

Exit [with all but BEATRICE and BENEDICK].

204 Maintain . . . ostentation perform the outward show of mourning 219 rack stretch 224 study of imagination meditation, musing 225 organ physical feature 226 habit dress 230 liver supposed seat of love 233 success what follows 234 event outcome 236 But . . . false but if all conjecture, except this (i.e., the mere supposition of Hero's death), be aimed ("leveled") falsely 239 sort turn out 244 inwardness most intimate feelings

165 experimental seal seal of experience 166 tenor purport 182 maintained the change held exchange 184 misprision mistaking 185 bent shape (or perhaps "inclination") 187 practice scheming 193 invention inventiveness 199 quit revenge

BENEDICK Lady Beatrice, have you wept all this while? 255
 BEATRICE Yea, and I will weep a while longer.
 BENEDICK I will not desire that.
 BEATRICE You have no reason. I do it freely.
 BENEDICK Surely I do believe your fair cousin is wronged. 260
 BEATRICE Ah, how much might the man deserve of me that would right her!
 BENEDICK Is there any way to show such friendship?
 BEATRICE A very even^o way, but no such friend.
 BENEDICK May a man do it? 265
 BEATRICE It is a man's office, but not yours.
 BENEDICK I do love nothing in the world so well as you. Is not that strange?
 BEATRICE As strange as the thing I know not. It were as possible for me to say I loved nothing so well as you. 270
 But believe me not; and yet I lie not. I confess nothing, nor I deny nothing. I am sorry for my cousin.
 BENEDICK By my sword, Beatrice, thou lovest me.
 BEATRICE Do not swear and eat it.
 BENEDICK I will swear by it that you love me, and I 275 will make him eat it that says I love not you.
 BEATRICE Will you not eat your word?
 BENEDICK With no sauce that can be devised to it. I protest^o I love thee.
 BEATRICE Why then, God forgive me! 280
 BENEDICK What offense, sweet Beatrice?
 BEATRICE You have stayed me in a happy hour.^o I was about to protest I loved you.
 BENEDICK And do it with all thy heart.
 BEATRICE I love you with so much of my heart that 285
 none is left to protest.
 BENEDICK Come, bid me do anything for thee.
 BEATRICE Kill Claudio.
 BENEDICK Ha! Not for the wide world!
 BEATRICE You kill me to deny it. Farewell. 290
 BENEDICK Tarry, sweet Beatrice.

[He holds her.]

BEATRICE I am gone, though I am here; there is no love in you. Nay, I pray you let me go!
 BENEDICK Beatrice—
 BEATRICE In faith, I will go! 295
 BENEDICK We'll be friends first.

[He lets her go.]

BEATRICE You dare easier be friends with me than fight with mine enemy.
 BENEDICK Is Claudio thine enemy?
 BEATRICE Is 'a not approved in the height a villain, 300 that hath slandered, scorned, dishonored my kinswoman? O that I were a man! What, bear her in hand^o until they come to take hands; and then, with public accusation, uncovered slander, unmitigated rancor—
 O God, that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the 305 market place!
 BENEDICK Hear me, Beatrice—
 BEATRICE Talk with a man out at a window! A proper saying!

BENEDICK Nay, but Beatrice— 310
 BEATRICE Sweet Hero, she is wronged, she is sland' red, she is undone.
 BENEDICK Beat—
 BEATRICE Princes and counties! Surely, a princely testimony, a goodly count, Count Comfect;^o a sweet 315 gallant surely! O that I were a man for his sake! Or that I had any friend would be a man for my sake! But manhood is melted into cursies,^o valor into compliment, and men are only turned into tongue, and trim ones too. He is now as valiant as Hercules that only tells a 320 lie, and swears it. I cannot be a man with wishing; therefore I will die a woman with grieving.
 BENEDICK Tarry, good Beatrice. By this hand, I love thee.
 BEATRICE Use it for my love some other way than 325 swearing by it.
 BENEDICK Think you in your soul the Count Claudio hath wronged Hero?
 BEATRICE Yea, as sure as I have a thought or a soul.
 BENEDICK Enough, I am engaged. I will challenge 330 him. I will kiss your hand, and so I leave you. By this hand, Claudio shall render me a dear account. As you hear of me, so think of me. Go comfort your cousin. I must say she is dead. And so farewell. [Exeunt.]

[Scene II. A prison.]

Enter the constables [DOGBERRY and VERGES] and the town clerk [SEXTON] in gowns, BORACHIO, [CONRADE, and WATCH].

DOGBERRY Is our whole dissembly appeared?
 VERGES O, a stool and a cushion for the sexton.
 SEXTON Which be the malefactors?
 DOGBERRY Marry, that am I and my partner.
 VERGES Nay, that's certain. We have the exhibition 5 to examine.
 SEXTON But which are the offenders that are to be examined? Let them come before Master Constable.
 DOGBERRY Yea, marry, let them come before me. What is your name, friend? 10
 BORACHIO Borachio.
 DOGBERRY Pray write down Borachio. Yours, sirrah?^o
 CONRADE I am a gentleman, sir, and my name is Conrade. 15
 DOGBERRY Write down Master Gentleman Conrade. Masters, do you serve God?
 BOTH Yea, sir, we hope.
 DOGBERRY Write down that they hope they serve God; and write God first, for God defend but God 20 should go before such villains! Masters, it is proved already that you are little better than false knaves, and it will go near to be thought so shortly. How answer you for yourselves?
 CONRADE Marry, sir, we say we are none. 25
 DOGBERRY A marvelous witty fellow, I assure you; but I will go about with him.^o Come you hither, sirrah;

315 Comfect sugar candy 318 cursies curtsies

IV.ii.13 sirrah term of address used to an inferior 27 go . . . him get the better of him

264 even direct 279 protest avow 282 in . . . hour just in time 302 bear . . . hand fool her a word in your ear. Sir, I say to you, it is thought you are false knaves.

BORACHIO Sir, I say to you we are none.^o 30

DOGBERRY Well, stand aside. 'Fore God, they are both of a tale.^o Have you writ down that they are none?

SEXTON Master Constable, you go not the way to examine. You must call forth the watch that are their 35 accusers.

DOGBERRY Yea, marry, that's the efast^o way. Let the watch come forth. Masters, I charge you in the prince's name, accuse these men.

FIRST WATCH This man said, sir, that Don John the 40 prince's brother was a villain.

DOGBERRY Write down Prince John a villain. Why, this is flat perjury, to call a prince's brother villain.

BORACHIO Master Constable!

DOGBERRY Pray thee, fellow, peace. I do not like thy 45 look, I promise thee.

SEXTON What heard you him say else?

SECOND WATCH Marry, that he had received a thousand ducats of Don John for accusing the Lady Hero wrongfully. 50

DOGBERRY Flat burglary as ever was committed.

VERGES Yea, by mass, that it is.

SEXTON What else, fellow?

FIRST WATCH And that Count Claudio did mean, upon his words, to disgrace Hero before the whole 55 assembly, and not marry her.

DOGBERRY O villain! Thou wilt be condemned into everlasting redemption for this.

SEXTON What else?

WATCH This is all. 60

SEXTON And this is more, masters, than you can deny. Prince John is this morning secretly stol'n away. Hero was in this manner accused, in this very manner refused, and upon the grief of this suddenly died. Master Constable, let these men be bound and brought 65 to Leonato's. I will go before and show him their examination. [Exit.]

DOGBERRY [To the WATCH.] Come, let them be opinioned.^o

VERGES Let them be in the hands of Coxcomb.^o 70

DOGBERRY God's my life, where's the sexton? Let him write down the prince's officer Coxcomb. Come, bind them. Thou naughty^o varlet!

CONRADE Away! You are an ass, you are an ass.

DOGBERRY Dost thou not suspect my place? Dost 75 thou not suspect my years? O that he were here to write me down an ass! But, masters, remember that I am an ass. Though it be not written down, yet forget not that I am an ass. No, thou villain, thou art full of piety, as shall be proved upon thee by good witness. I 80 am a wise fellow; and which is more, an officer; and which is more, a householder; and which is more, as pretty a piece of flesh as any is in Messina, and one that knows the law, go to! And a rich fellow enough, go to! And a fellow that hath had losses; and one that 85 hath two gowns and everything handsome about him. Bring him away. O that I had been writ down an ass! Exit [with the others.]

[A C T V]

[Scene I. Before Leonato's house.]

Enter LEONATO and his brother [ANTONIO].

ANTONIO

If you go on thus, you will kill yourself,
And 'tis not wisdom thus to second^o grief
Against yourself.

LEONATO I pray thee cease thy counsel,

Which falls into mine ears as profitless
As water in a sieve. Give not me counsel, 5
Nor let no comforter delight mine ear
But such a one whose wrongs do suit with^o mine.
Bring me a father that so loved his child,
Whose joy of her is overwhelmed like mine,
And bid him speak of patience. 10

Measure his woe the length and breadth of mine,
And let it answer every strain^o for strain,
As thus for thus, and such a grief for such,
In every lineament, branch, shape, and form.
If such a one will smile and stroke his beard, 15
And sorrow wag,^o cry "hem" when he should groan;
Patch grief with proverbs, make misfortune drunk
With candle-wasters;^o bring him yet^o to me,
And I of him will gather patience.

But there is no such man. For, brother, men 20
Can counsel and speak comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but, tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptual medicine^o to rage,
Fetter strong madness in a silken thread, 25
Charm ache with air and agony with words.
No, no! 'Tis all men's office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow,
But no man's virtue nor sufficiency 30
To be so moral^o when he shall endure
The like himself. Therefore give me no counsel;
My griefs cry louder than advertisement.^o

ANTONIO

Therein do men from children nothing differ.

LEONATO

I pray thee peace. I will be flesh and blood;
For there was never yet philosopher 35
That could endure the toothache patiently,
However they have writ the style of gods
And made a push at chance and sufferance.^o

30 none apparently pronounced the same as known, and so taken by Dogberry in his next speech 31-32 they . . . tale their stories agree 37 efast quickest 69 opinioned he means pinioned 70 Coxcomb apparently Verges thinks this is an elegant name for one of the Watch; editors commonly emend "of Coxcomb" to "off, coxcomb," and give to Conrade 73 naughty wicked

V.i.2 second assist 7 suit with accord with 12 strain quality, trait 16 wag wave away 18 candle-wasters revelers (?) philosophers (?); yet then 24 preceptual medicine medicine of precepts (cf. line 17, "Patch grief with proverbs") 30 moral moralizing 32 advertisement counsel 38 made . . . sufferance defied mischance and suffering

ANTONIO

Yet bend not all the harm upon yourself.
Make those that do offend you suffer too.

LEONATO

There thou speak'st reason. Nay, I will do so.
My soul doth tell me Hero is belied;
And that shall Claudio know; so shall the prince,
And all of them that thus dishonor her.

Enter prince [DON PEDRO] and CLAUDIO.

ANTONIO

Here comes the prince and Claudio hastily.

DON PEDRO

Good den, good den.

CLAUDIO

Good day to both of you.

LEONATO

Hear you, my lords—

DON PEDRO

We have some haste, Leonato.

LEONATO

Some haste, my lord! Well, fare you well, my lord.
Are you so hasty now? Well, all is one.

DON PEDRO

Nay, do not quarrel with us, good old man.

ANTONIO

If he could right himself with quarreling,
Some of us would lie low.

CLAUDIO

Who wrongs him?

LEONATO

Marry, thou dost wrong me, thou dissembler, thou!
Nay, never lay thy hand upon thy sword;
I fear thee not.

CLAUDIO

Marry, beshrew^o my hand

If it should give your age such cause of fear.

In faith, my hand meant nothing to my sword.

LEONATO

Tush, tush, man! Never fleer^o and jest at me.

I speak not like a dotard nor a fool,

As under privilege of age to brag

What I have done being young, or what would do,

Were I not old. Know, Claudio, to thy head,^o

Thou hast so wronged mine innocent child and me

That I am forced to lay my reverence by

And, with gray hairs and bruise of many days,

Do challenge thee to trial of a man.^o

I say thou hast belied mine innocent child.

Thy slander hath gone through and through her heart,

And she lies buried with her ancestors;

O, in a tomb where never scandal slept,

Save this of hers, framed^o by thy villainy!

CLAUDIO

My villainy?

LEONATO

Thine, Claudio; thine I say.

DON PEDRO

You say not right, old man.

LEONATO

My lord, my lord,

I'll prove it on his body if he dare,

Despite his nice fence^o and his active practice,

His May of youth and bloom of lustihood.

CLAUDIO

Away! I will not have to do with you.

55 beshrew curse (but not a strong word) 58 fleer sneer
62 head face 66 trial . . . man manly test, i.e., a duel 71 framed made 75 nice fence elegant fencing

LEONATO

Canst thou so daff^o me? Thou hast killed my child.

40 If thou kill'st me, boy, thou shalt kill a man.

ANTONIO

He shall kill two of us, and men indeed.

80

But that's no matter; let him kill one first.

Win me and wear me! Let him answer me.

Come, follow me, boy; come, sir boy; come, follow me.

Sir boy, I'll whip you from your foining^o fence!

Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will.

85

45 LEONATO Brother—

ANTONIO

Content yourself. God knows I loved my niece;

And she is dead, slandered to death by villains,

That dare as well answer a man indeed

As I dare take a serpent by the tongue.

90

Boys, apes, braggarts, Jacks,^o milksops!

LEONATO

Brother

Anthony—

ANTONIO

Hold you content. What, man! I know them, yea,

And what they weigh, even to the utmost scruple;^o

Scambling,^o outfacing, fashionmonging^o boys,

That lie and cog^o and flout, deprave and slander,

95

Go anticly,^o and show outward hideousness,

And speak off half a dozen dang'rous words,

How they might hurt their enemies, if they durst;

And this is all.

LEONATO

But, brother Anthony—

55

ANTONIO

Come, 'tis no matter.

100

Do not you meddle; let me deal in this.

DON PEDRO

Gentlemen both, we will not wake your patience.^o

My heart is sorry for your daughter's death.

But, on my honor, she was charged with nothing

But what was true, and very full of proof.

105

LEONATO

My lord, my lord!

DON PEDRO

I will not hear you.

65

LEONATO

No? Come, brother, away! I will be heard!

ANTONIO

And shall, or some of us will smart for it.

Exeunt ambo^o [LEONATO and ANTONIO].

70

Enter BENEDICK.

DON PEDRO See, see! Here comes the man we went 110 to seek.

CLAUDIO Now, signior, what news?

BENEDICK Good day, my lord.

DON PEDRO Welcome, signior. You are almost come to part almost a fray.

115

CLAUDIO We had liked to have had our two noses snapped off with two old men without teeth.

75

78 daff put off 84 foining thrusting 91 Jacks a contemptuous term of no precise meaning 93 scruple smallest unit 94 Scambling brawling; fashionmonging fashion-following 95 cog cheat 96 anticly grotesquely dressed 102 wake your patience arouse your indulgence (heavily ironic) 109 s.d. ambo both (Latin)

DON PEDRO Leonato and his brother. What think'st thou? Had we fought, I doubt° we should have been too young for them.

BENEDICK In a false quarrel there is no true valor. I came to seek you both.

CLAUDIO We have been up and down to seek thee; for we are high-proof° melancholy, and would fain have it beaten away. Wilt thou use thy wit?

BENEDICK It is in my scabbard. Shall I draw it?

DON PEDRO Dost thou wear thy wit by thy side?

CLAUDIO Never any did so, though very many have been beside their wit. I will bid thee draw, as we do the minstrels: draw° to pleasure us.

DON PEDRO As I am an honest man, he looks pale. Art thou sick, or angry?

CLAUDIO What, courage, man! What though care killed a cat, thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.

BENEDICK Sir, I shall meet your wit in the career° and you charge° it against me. I pray you choose another subject.

CLAUDIO Nay then, give him another staff. This last was broke cross°.

DON PEDRO By this light, he changes more and more. I think he be angry indeed.

CLAUDIO If he be, he knows how to turn his girdle°.

BENEDICK Shall I speak a word in your ear?

CLAUDIO God bless me from a challenge!

BENEDICK [Aside to CLAUDIO.] You are a villain; I jest not; I will make it good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare. Do me right, or I will protest° your cowardice. You have killed a sweet lady, and her death shall fall heavy on you. Let me hear from you.

CLAUDIO Well, I will meet you, so I may have good cheer.

DON PEDRO What, a feast, a feast?

CLAUDIO I' faith, I thank him; he hath bid me to a calf's head and a capon; the which if I do not carve most curiously,° say my knife's naught. Shall I not find a woodcock° too?

BENEDICK Sir, your wit ambles well; it goes easily.

DON PEDRO I'll tell thee how Beatrice praised thy wit the other day. I said thou hadst a fine wit. "True," said she, "a fine little one." "No," said I, "a great wit." "Right," says she, "a great gross one." "Nay," said I, "a good wit." "Just," said she, "it hurts nobody." "Nay," said I, "the gentleman is wise." "Certain," said she, "a wise gentleman," "Nay," said I, "he hath the tongues." "That I believe," said she, "for he swore a thing to me on Monday night which he forswore on Tuesday morning; there's a double tongue; there's two tongues." Thus did she an hour together transshape° thy particular virtues. Yet at last she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the prop' rest° man in Italy.

CLAUDIO For the which she wept heartily and said she cared not.

DON PEDRO Yea, that she did; but yet, for all that, and if she did not hate him deadly, she would love him dearly. The old man's daughter told us all.

CLAUDIO All, all! And moreover, God saw him when he was hid in the garden.

DON PEDRO But when shall we set the savage bull's horns on the sensible Benedick's head?

CLAUDIO Yea, and text underneath, "Here dwells Benedick, the married man"?

BENEDICK Fare you well, boy; you know my mind. I will leave you now to your gossiplike humor; you break jests as braggards do their blades, which God be thanked hurt not. [To DON PEDRO.] My lord, for your many courtesies I thank you. I must discontinue your company. Your brother the bastard is fled from Messina. You have among you killed a sweet and innocent lady. For my Lord Lackbeard there, he and I shall meet; and till then peace be with him. [Exit.]

DON PEDRO He is in earnest.

CLAUDIO In most profound earnest; and, I'll warrant you, for the love of Beatrice.

DON PEDRO And hath challenged thee?

CLAUDIO Most sincerely.

DON PEDRO What a pretty thing man is when he goes in his doublet and hose and leaves off his wit!

Enter constables [DOGBERRY, VERGES, and the WATCH, with] CONRADE and BORACHIO.

CLAUDIO He is then a giant to an ape; but then is an ape a doctor to such a man°.

DON PEDRO But, soft you, let me be! Pluck up, my heart, and be sad. Did he not say my brother was fled?

DOGBERRY Come you, sir. If justice cannot tame you, she shall ne'er weigh more reasons in her balance. Nay, and you be a cursing hypocrite once, you must be looked to.

DON PEDRO How now? Two of my brother's men bound? Borachio one.

CLAUDIO Harken after° their offense, my lord.

DON PEDRO Officers, what offense have these men done?

DOGBERRY Marry, sir, they have committed false report; moreover, they have spoken untruths; secondarily, they are slanders; sixth and lastly, they have belied a lady; thirdly, they have verified unjust things; and to conclude, they are lying knaves.

DON PEDRO First, I ask thee what they have done; thirdly, I ask thee what's their offense; sixth and lastly, why they are committed; and to conclude, what you lay to their charge.

CLAUDIO Rightly reasoned, and in his own division; and, by my troth, there's one meaning well suited°.

DON PEDRO Who have you offended, masters, that you are thus bound° to your answer? This learned

119 doubt suspect 124 high-proof in the highest degree
130 draw draw not a sword but a fiddle bow 135 in the career headlong 136 charge i.e., as in tilting with staves or lances 139 broke cross ineptly broken (by crossing the opponent's shield instead of striking it headlong) 142 turn his girdle challenge me (by reaching for his dagger?) 148 protest proclaim 156 curiously skillfully 157 woodcock stupid bird (Claudio reduces the duel to a carving up of symbols of stupidity—a calf's head, a capon, and a woodcock) 165–66 hath the tongues knows foreign languages 170 transshape distort

171 prop' rest most handsome 200–01 He . . . man An ape would consider him important, but an ape is actually a scholar ("doctor") compared to such a fool 210 Harken after inquire into 223 well suited well dressed out 225 bound arraigned constable is too cunning^o to be understood. What's your offense?

BORACHIO Sweet prince, let me go no farther to mine answer. Do you hear me, and let this count kill me. I have deceived even your very eyes. What your 230 wisdoms could not discover, these shallow fools have brought to light, who in the night overheard me confessing to this man, how Don John your brother incensed me to slander the Lady Hero; how you were brought into the orchard and saw me court Margaret 235 in Hero's garments; how you disgraced her when you should marry her. My villainy they have upon record, which I had rather seal with my death than repeat over to my shame. The lady is dead upon mine and my master's false accusation; and briefly, I desire nothing 240 but the reward of a villain.

DON PEDRO Runs not this speech like iron through your blood?

CLAUDIO I have drunk poison whiles he uttered it.

DON PEDRO But did my brother set thee on to this? 245

BORACHIO Yea, and paid me richly for the practice of it.

DON PEDRO He is composed and framed of treachery, And fled he is upon this villainy.

CLAUDIO Sweet Hero, now the image doth appear 250 In the rare semblance that I loved it first.

DOGBERRY Come, bring away the plaintiffs. By this time our sexton hath reformed Signior Leonato of the matter. And, masters, do not forget to specify, when time and place shall serve, that I am an ass. 255

VERGES Here, here comes Master Signior Leonato, and the sexton too.

Enter LEONATO, his brother [ANTONIO], and the SEXTON.

LEONATO

Which is the villain? Let me see his eyes,
That, when I note another man like him,
I may avoid him. Which of these is he? 260

BORACHIO

If you would know your wronger, look on me.

LEONATO

Art thou the slave that with thy breath hast killed
Mine innocent child?

BORACHIO Yea, even I alone.

LEONATO

No, not so, villain! Thou beliest thyself.
Here stand a pair of honorable men;
A third is fled, that had a hand in it.
I thank you, princes, for my daughter's death.
Record it with your high and worthy deeds.
'Twas bravely done, if you bethink you of it.

CLAUDIO

I know not how to pray your patience;^o
Yet I must speak. Choose your revenge yourself;
Impose me to what penance your invention^o
Can lay upon my sin. Yet sinned I not
But in mistaking.

DON PEDRO By my soul, nor I;

And yet, to satisfy this good old man, 275

226 cunning intelligent 270 pray your patience ask your forgiveness 272 invention imagination

I would bend under any heavy weight
That he'll enjoin me to.

LEONATO

I cannot bid you bid my daughter live;
That were impossible; but I pray you both,
Possess^o the people in Messina here 280
How innocent she died; and if your love
Can labor aught in sad invention,
Hang her an epitaph upon her tomb,
And sing it to her bones, sing it tonight.
Tomorrow morning come you to my house; 285
And since you could not be my son-in-law,
Be yet my nephew. My brother hath a daughter,
Almost the copy of my child that's dead,
And she alone is heir to both of us.
Give her the right^o you should have giv'n her cousin, 290
And so dies my revenge.

CLAUDIO

O noble sir!

Your overkindness doth wring tears from me.
I do embrace your offer; and dispose
For henceforth of poor Claudio.

LEONATO

Tomorrow then I will expect your coming; 295
Tonight I take my leave. This naughty man Shall face to face be brought to Margaret,
Who I believe was packed^o in all this wrong,
Hired to it by your brother.

BORACHIO

No, by my soul, she was not;

Nor knew not what she did when she spoke to me; 300
But always hath been just and virtuous
In anything that I do know by her.

DOGBERRY Moreover, sir, which indeed is not under white and black,^o this plaintiff here, the offender, did call me ass. I beseech you let it be rememb'ed in his 305 punishment. And also the watch heard them talk of one Deformed; they say he wears a key^o in his ear, and a lock hanging by it, and borrows money in God's name, the which he hath used so long and never paid that now men grow hardhearted and will lend nothing 310 for God's sake. Pray you examine him upon that point.

LEONATO I thank thee for thy care and honest pains.

DOGBERRY Your worship speaks like a most thankful and reverent youth, and I praise God for you.

LEONATO There's for thy pains. 315

[Gives money.]

DOGBERRY God save the foundation!^o

LEONATO Go, I discharge^o thee of thy prisoner, and I thank thee. 265

DOGBERRY I leave an arrant knave with your worship, which I beseech your worship to correct yourself, for 320 the example of others. God keep your worship! I wish your worship well. God restore you to health!
I humbly give you leave to depart; and if a merry meeting may be wished, God prohibit it! Come, neighbor. [Exeunt DOGBERRY and VERGES.] 325

280 Possess inform 290 right Hero had a right to claim
Claudio as her husband; probably there is also a pun on rite 298 packed combined, i.e., an accomplice 303-04 not . . .
black not in the official record 307 key ring (but perhaps Dogberry merely assumes that if a man wears a lock in his hair he must wear a key too) 316 the foundation as if Leonato were a charitable institution 317 discharge relieve

LEONATO

Until tomorrow morning, lords, farewell.

ANTONIO

Farewell, my lords. We look for you tomorrow.

DON PEDRO

We will not fail.

CLAUDIO

Tonight I'll mourn with Hero.

[Exeunt DON PEDRO and CLAUDIO.]

LEONATO [To the WATCH.]

Bring you these fellows on.

We'll talk with Margaret,

How her acquaintance grew with this lewd^o fellow.

Exeunt [separately].

[Scene II. Leonato's garden.]

Enter BENEDICK and MARGARET [meeting].

BENEDICK Pray thee, sweet Mistress Margaret, deserve well at my hands by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.

MARGARET Will you then write me a sonnet in praise of my beauty?

BENEDICK In so high a style,^o Margaret, that no man living shall come over it; for in most comely truth thou deservest it.

MARGARET To have no man come over me!^o Why, shall I always keep belowstairs?^o

BENEDICK Thy wit is as quick as the greyhound's mouth; it catches.

MARGARET And yours as blunt as the fencer's foils, which hit but hurt not.

BENEDICK A most manly wit, Margaret; it will not hurt a woman. And so, I pray thee call Beatrice. I give thee the bucklers.^o

MARGARET Give us the swords; we have bucklers of our own.

BENEDICK If you use them, Margaret, you must put in the pikes^o with a vice;^o and they are dangerous weapons for maids.

MARGARET Well, I will call Beatrice to you, who I think hath legs.

Exit MARGARET.

BENEDICK And therefore will come.

[Sings.] The god of love,
That sits above

And knows me, and knows me,
How pitiful I deserve—

I mean in singing; but in loving, Leander the good swimmer, Troilus^o the first employer of panders, and a whole book full of these quondam carpetmongers,^o whose names yet run smoothly in the even road of a blank verse—why, they were never so truly turned over and over as my poor self in love. Marry, I cannot show it in rhyme. I have tried. I can find out no rhyme

331 lewd low

V.ii.6 style pun on stile, a set of steps for passing over a fence 9 come over me the beginning of an interchange of sexual innuendoes 10 keep belowstairs dwell in the servants' quarters 16–17 I give . . . bucklers I yield 21 pikes spikes in the center of bucklers; vice screw 30–31 Leander . . . Troilus legendary lovers; Leander nightly swam the Hellespont to visit Hero, Troilus was aided in his love for Cressida by Pandarus 32 quondam carpetmongers ancient boudoir knights to "lady" but "baby," an innocent rhyme; for "scorn," "horn," a hard rhyme; for "school," "fool," a babbling rhyme. Very ominous endings. No, I was not born under a rhyming planet, nor I cannot woo in festival terms.

Enter BEATRICE.

Sweet Beatrice, wouldst thou come when I called thee?

BEATRICE Yea, signior, and depart when you bid me.

BENEDICK O, stay but till then!

BEATRICE "Then" is spoken. Fare you well now. And yet, ere I go, let me go with that I came, which is, with knowing what hath passed between you and Claudio.

BENEDICK Only foul words; and thereupon I will kiss thee.

BEATRICE Foul words is but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noisome. Therefore I will depart unknissed.

BENEDICK Thou hast frightened the word out of his right sense, so forcible is thy wit. But I must tell thee plainly, Claudio undergoes my challenge; and either I must shortly hear from him or I will subscribe him^o a coward. And I pray thee now tell me, for which of my bad parts didst thou first fall in love with me?

BEATRICE For them all together, which maintained so politic a state^o of evil that they will not admit any good part to intermingle with them. But for which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?

BENEDICK Suffer love! A good epithet. I do suffer love indeed, for I love thee against my will.

BEATRICE In spite of your heart, I think. Alas, poor heart! If you spite it for my sake, I will spite it for yours, for I will never love that which my friend hates.

BENEDICK Thou and I are too wise to woo peaceably.

BEATRICE It appears not in this confession. There's not one wise man among twenty that will praise himself.

BENEDICK An old, an old instance,^o Beatrice, that lived in the time of good neighbors. If a man do not erect in this age his own tomb ere he dies, he shall live no longer in monument than the bell rings and the widow weeps.

BEATRICE And how long is that, think you?

BENEDICK Question: why, an hour in clamor and a quarter in rheum;^o therefore is it most expedient for the wise, if Don Worm, his conscience, find no impediment to the contrary, to be the trumpet of his own virtues, as I am to myself. So much for praising myself, who, I myself will bear witness, is praiseworthy. And now tell me, how doth your cousin?

BEATRICE Very ill.

BENEDICK And how do you?

BEATRICE Very ill too.

BENEDICK Serve God, love me, and mend. There will I leave you too, for here comes one in haste.

Enter URSULA.

URSULA Madam, you must come to your uncle.

58 subscribe him write him down 62 politic a state well-ordered a community 75 instance example 82 rheum tears

Yonder's old coil^o at home. It is proved my Lady Hero hath been falsely accused, the prince and Claudio 95 mightily abused, and Don John is the author of all, who is fled and gone. Will you come presently?

BEATRICE Will you go hear this news, signior?

BENEDICK I will live in thy heart, die in thy lap, and be buried in thy eyes; and moreover, I will go with 100 thee to thy uncle's.

Exit [with BEATRICE and URSULA].

[Scene III. A church.]

Enter CLAUDIO, prince [DON PEDRO, LORD,] and three or four with tapers [followed by MUSICIANS].

CLAUDIO Is this the monument of Leonato?

LORD It is, my lord.

CLAUDIO [Reads from a scroll.]

Epitaph.

Done to death by slanderous tongues
Was the Hero that here lies;
Death, in guerdon^o of her wrongs,
Gives her fame which never dies.
So the life that died with shame
Lives in death with glorious fame.

[Hangs up the scroll.]

Hang thou there upon the tomb,
Praising her when I am dumb.

CLAUDIO

Now, music, sound, and sing your solemn hymn.

Song.

Pardon, goddess of the night,^o
Those that slew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go.
Midnight, assist our moan;
Help us to sigh and groan,
Heavily, heavily.
Graves, yawn and yield your dead,
Till death be utterèd,
Heavily, heavily.

CLAUDIO

Now unto thy bones good night!
Yearly will I do this rite.

DON PEDRO

Good morrow, masters; put your torches out.

The wolves have preyed, and look, the gentle day, 25
Before the wheels of Phoebus,^o round about
Dapples the drowsy east with spots of gray.
Thanks to you all, and leave us. Fare you well.

CLAUDIO

Good morrow, masters; each his several way.

DON PEDRO

Come, let us hence and put on other weeds,^o 30
And then to Leonato's we will go.

CLAUDIO

And Hymen^o now with luckier issue speeds^o
Than this for whom we rend'red up this woe. Exeunt.

[Scene IV. Leonato's house.]

Enter LEONATO, BENEDICK, [BEATRICE,] MARGARET, URSULA, old man [ANTONIO], FRIAR [Francis], HERO.

FRIAR

Did I not tell you she was innocent?

LEONATO

So are the prince and Claudio, who accused her
Upon the error that you heard debated.
But Margaret was in some fault for this,
Although against her will, as it appears 5
In the true course of all the question.^o

ANTONIO

Well, I am glad that all things sorts^o so well.

BENEDICK

And so am I, being else by faith enforced
To call young Claudio to a reckoning for it.

LEONATO

Well, daughter, and you gentlewomen all, 10
Withdraw into a chamber by yourselves,
And when I send for you, come hither masked.
The prince and Claudio promised by this hour
To visit me. You know your office, brother;
You must be father to your brother's daughter, 15
And give her to young Claudio. Exeunt LADIES.

ANTONIO

Which I will do with confirmed^o countenance.

BENEDICK

Friar, I must entreat your pains, I think.

FRIAR

To do what, signior?

BENEDICK

To bind me, or undo me—one of them. 20
Signior Leonato, truth it is, good signior,
Your niece regards me with an eye of favor.

LEONATO

That eye my daughter lent her; 'tis most true.

20 BENEDICK

And I do with an eye of love requite her.

LEONATO

The sight whereof I think you had from me, 25
From Claudio, and the prince. But what's your will?

BENEDICK

Your answer, sir, is enigmatical.

But, for my will, my will is, your good will
May stand with ours, this day to be conjoined
In the state of honorable marriage; 30
In which, good friar, I shall desire your help.

LEONATO

My heart is with your liking.

FRIAR

And my help.

Here comes the prince and Claudio.

Enter prince [DON PEDRO] and CLAUDIO and two or three other.

94 old coil plenty of confusion

V.iii.5 guerdon reward 12 goddess . . . night Diana, goddess of the moon and of chastity 26 wheels of Phoebus wheels of the sun god's chariot 30 weeds apparel

32 Hymen god of marriage; speeds succeeds

V.iv.6 question investigation 7 sorts turn out 17 confirmed steady

DON PEDRO

Good morrow to this fair assembly.

LEONATO

Good morrow, prince; good morrow, Claudio.

We here attend you. Are you yet determined

Today to marry with my brother's daughter?

CLAUDIO

I'll hold my mind, were she an Ethiope.

LEONATO

Call her forth, brother. Here's the friar ready.

[Exit ANTONIO.]

DON PEDRO

Good morrow, Benedick. Why, what's the matter

That you have such a February face,

So full of frost, of storm, and cloudiness?

CLAUDIO

I think he thinks upon the savage bull.^oTush, fear not, man! We'll tip thy horns with gold,^oAnd all Europa^o shall rejoice at thee,

As once Europa did at lusty Jove

When he would play the noble beast in love.

BENEDICK

Bull Jove, sir, had an amiable low,

And some such strange bull leaped your father's cow

And got a calf in that same noble feat

Much like to you, for you have just his bleat.

Enter [Leonato's] brother [ANTONIO], HERO, BEATRICE, MARGARET, URSULA, [the ladies wearing masks].

CLAUDIO

For this I owe you.^o Here comes other reck'nings.

Which is the lady I must seize upon?

ANTONIO

This same is she, and I do give you her.

CLAUDIO

Why then, she's mine. Sweet, let me see your face.

LEONATO

No, that you shall not till you take her hand

Before this friar and swear to marry her.

CLAUDIO

Give me your hand; before this holy friar

I am your husband if you like of me.

HERO

And when I lived I was your other wife; [unmasking]

And when you loved you were my other husband.

CLAUDIO

Another Hero!

HERO

Nothing certainer.

One Hero died defiled; but I do live,

And surely as I live, I am a maid.

DON PEDRO

The former Hero! Hero that is dead!

LEONATO

She died, my lord, but whiles^o her slander lived.

FRIAR

All this amazement can I qualify,^o

When, after that the holy rites are ended,

I'll tell you largely^o of fair Hero's death.

Meantime let wonder seem familiar,

And to the chapel let us presently.

BENEDICK

Soft and fair, friar. Which is Beatrice?

BEATRICE [Unmasking.]

I answer to that name. What is your will?

BENEDICK

Do not you love me?

BEATRICE

Why, no; no more than reason.

BENEDICK

Why, then your uncle, and the prince, and Claudio

Have been deceived—they swore you did.

BEATRICE

Do not you love me?

BENEDICK

Troth, no; no more than reason.

BEATRICE

Why, then my cousin, Margaret, and Ursula

Are much deceived; for they did swear you did.

BENEDICK

They swore that you were almost sick for me.

BEATRICE

They swore that you were well-nigh dead for me.

BENEDICK

'Tis no such matter. Then you do not love me?

BEATRICE

No, truly, but in friendly recompense.

LEONATO

Come, cousin, I am sure you love the gentleman.

CLAUDIO

And I'll be sworn upon't that he loves her;

For here's a paper written in his hand,

A halting^o sonnet of his own pure brain,

Fashioned to Beatrice.

HERO

And here's another,

Writ in my cousin's hand, stol'n from her pocket,

Containing her affection unto Benedick.

BENEDICK

A miracle! Here's our own hands against our hearts. Come, I will have thee; but, by this light, I take thee for pity.

BEATRICE

I would not deny you; but, by this good day, I yield upon great persuasion, and partly to save your life, for I was told you were in a consumption.

BENEDICK^o

Peace! I will stop your mouth.

[Kisses her.]

DON PEDRO

How dost thou, Benedick, the married

man?

BENEDICK

I'll tell thee what, prince: a college of witcrackers cannot flout me out of my humor. Dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? No. If a man will be beaten with brains, 'a shall wear nothing handsome about him. In brief, since I do purpose to marry, I will think nothing to any purpose that the world can say against it; and therefore never flout at me for what I have said against it; for man is a giddy thing, and this is my conclusion. For thy part, Claudio,

I did think to have beaten thee; but in that thou art

43 savage bull refers to I.i.254 44 tip . . . gold make your cuckolding something to be proud of 45 Europa Europe (though in the next line the word designates the girl that Jupiter wooed in the guise of a bull) 52 I owe you I will pay you back (for calling me a calf and a bastard) 66 but whiles only while 67 qualify abate

69 largely in detail 87 halting limping 97 Benedick both quarto and Folio assign this line to Leonato; possibly the original reading is correct, and Leonato forces Benedick to kiss Beatrice like to be my kinsman, live unbruised, and love my 110

cousin.

CLAUDIO I had well hoped thou wouldst have denied Beatrice, that I might have cudged thee out of thy single life, to make thee a double-dealer,^o which out of question thou wilt be if my cousin do not look 115 exceeding narrowly to thee.

BENEDICK Come, come, we are friends. Let's have a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts and our wives' heels.

LEONATO We'll have dancing afterward. 120

BENEDICK First, of my word; therefore play, music.

114 double-dealer (1) married man (2) unfaithful husband

Prince, thou art sad; get thee a wife, get thee a wife!
There is no staff more reverend than one tipped with horn.^o

Enter MESSENGER.

MESSENGER

My lord, your brother John is ta'en in flight, 125
And brought with armèd men back to Messina.

BENEDICK Think not on him till tomorrow. I'll devise thee brave punishments for him. Strike up, pipers!

Dance.

[Exeunt.]

123-24 with horn final reference to the horns of a cuckold

THE LIFE OF HENRY THE FIFTH

EDITED BY JOHN RUSSELL BROWN

Introduction

In the theater The Life of Henry the Fifth is renowned for pageantry, battles, and crowd scenes, its varied collection of minor characters, and the unquestioned dominance of its hero. After Shakespeare's day it first became popular as the theaters began to use ambitious stage settings and more elaborate stage management. Shakespeare's play was embellished in 1761 by a coronation scene, and in 1839 with a moving "diorama"—an extensive panoramic view which moved across the back of the stage—that depicted the journey from Southampton to Harfleur. In recent years it has been performed in battle-dress against film sequences showing twentieth-century warfare or, as at Stratford-upon-Avon in 1964, with painstaking realism of gunsmoke and bloody shattered bodies. (Sir Laurence Olivier made it the subject of a film.) For actors the play has always been hard work, with many changes of costume as pageantry is displaced by mobilization and then by warfare and hardship; and then there is another switch back to pageantry. But rewards are there, too, in the great number of parts that Shakespeare has individually realized for two or three episodes, or even a single scene: Mistress Quickly, Bardolph, Nym, the boy; William and Bates—or even a strangely effective gentleness in the one-line part of Court; Jamy, Gower, MacMorris; the dauphin, Princess Katherine, the King of France, Montjoy, Burgundy. Press criticisms show that Henry V is the minor actor's opportunity; a boy or Mistress Quickly, a princess or Burgundy can steal a large part of the notice.

Yet it also has an undoubted hero. For other history plays, the leading actor in a company might play the Bastard rather than King John, Falstaff or Hotspur rather than Prince Hal or Henry IV—even Bolingbroke in preference to Richard II. But here Fluellen and Pistol are the most considerable rivals to the hero, and neither is effectively present in more than six or seven scenes, or has more than incidental contact with the king.

Written in 1599, a year or so before Hamlet, Henry V was Shakespeare's last history play for ten years or more, and he appears to have taken no risks. Despite its crowd scenes and wide range of characters, it has a simple plot of wars, a battle, and a peace, centered on its undoubted hero. A Chorus, before each act, encourages the audience's warmest responses, and invites its imagination to see two mighty monarchies and to follow Harry as a type of virtue, "the mirror of all Christian kings" (II.Cho.6). For most of the play, the king appears publicly, in ceremonial consultation or address, or as leader of his army; his words are well-ordered, and clearly and fully understood. When he surprises the French ambassador with defiance or the three traitors with a knowledge of their crimes, the audience has been prepared in advance so that its understanding suffers no shock. The minor characters are all dependent on Harry and yet make only occasional appearances in unconsecutive scenes, usually without the hero, so that the independent plot-interest they awaken is both small and quickly answered. Except for the French royal house, none already established has a place in the last long scene; but two entirely new characters are then introduced to eminence, Isabel and the Duke of Burgundy. The play's structure is firmly centered; its setting splendid, varied, broad. In its sweeping, general impression, and usually in performance, Henry V is a popular pageant-play of the "star of England," and incidentally of his people and his victories.

But this view of Shakespeare's achievement will not satisfy many critics and scholars who have studied the play and resisted the confident tone of the Chorus. They can see it as a routine and unwieldy continuation of other histories, without the imaginative argumentation or consistency of earlier plays. Or, especially if they concentrate attention on the words of the hero, they can read it as a careful investigation of the human failings of a politician. (E. M. W. Tillyard's Shakespeare's History Plays and Honor Matthews' treatment of the play in her Character and Symbol in Shakespeare's Plays are eloquent spokesmen for these opposing views.) In the theater, too, the play can seem merely routine, especially in association with Shakespeare's other histories. When acted at Stratford-upon-Avon in 1951, as the fourth of a continuous series of plays, from Richard II and the two parts of Henry IV, it seemed something of an appendix. The stage designer was led to elaborate the single setting that had served for the other three plays with flags, drapes, and properties. The official book on the season speaks of the play in these terms:

By the time we reach Henry V the particular interest of the "presentation in cycle" is all but over.

When Henry V was performed at the same theater in 1964 in a longer series after the two parts of Henry IV and before Richard III and the three parts of Henry VI, its Harry ("the mirror of all Christian kings") was hailed as a plain man's king, a pacifist warrior, or, fashionably, a self-questioning antihero. Shakespeare's ground plan for the hero-centered pageant narrative can sustain very different edifices.

Indeed, in many small details of the play's structure Shakespeare seems to be guarding against too broad or relaxed a reception of the play. The comedy is carefully restricted, its incidents being short-lived and its characters severely limited in sensibility—that is, in vocabulary and ideas. And on the other hand, Shakespeare used contrasts between consecutive scenes to sharpen the audience's appreciation: so Harry's "Once more unto the breach, dear friends . . .," confident that there is none "so mean and base" that has not a "noble luster" in his eyes (III.i.1 ff.), is followed by Bardolph's mimicry and by thoughts of "a pot of ale, and safety" (III.ii.1-13); such "friends" have to be driven to the breach by Fluellen calling them "dogs" and "cullions." The broad expanse of the stage-picture has no dark shadows in which attention can dwell and no individual issues on which it can concentrate; but, cunningly, its lines are kept sharp and agile. In particular Shakespeare has ensured by small details that the central figure can arouse the keenest perceptions. The duologue of two bishops that prepares the audience for Harry's first appearance presents two differing qualities in the man without suggesting conflict: his "grace," or "celestial spirits," and his "policy" that makes even God's ministers circumspect toward him. His own early speeches easily command the responses he wishes from those presented with him, thus suggesting a superior awareness not fully explicit in his words; and for all their verbal control, they are fired by a wide range of ideas, thus hinting at a varied awareness stretching beyond the immediate context. His reply to the French ambassador (I.ii.259 ff.), for instance, gives jest for jest, mentions his "wilder days" with equal firmness as his present "majesty," and moves lightly from his own will ("I will keep my state . . . When I do rouse me . . . But I will rise there . . . I will dazzle") to the will of God ("But this lies all within the will of God . . . in whose name . . ."). These last transitions may also cause some of the audience to see Harry as a limited figure, apparently unaware of the size of the assumptions he makes; and so may the manner in which he speaks of widows, curses, and tears with no slackened pace or tender epithet. Yet these incipient inquiries are never made a dramatic issue by presenting alternative courses, or by criticism of Harry on stage, or by a hint of his private thoughts, such as Shakespeare had already achieved for Prince Hal or Henry IV and was to develop so fully in Julius Caesar and Hamlet, written one or two years later. The Chorus is at hand to keep the picture fully animated and expectation forward, with:

Now all the youth of England are on fire,
And silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies. (II.Cho.1-2)

So the predominant focus is maintained, a wide view of a pageant narrative.

But even the first act is not superficial. Because Shakespeare has not sharpened the focus by his usual devices as he could so effectively have done, this needs to be especially noticed. The audience's appreciation is quickened without bringing the hero closely and intimately to its attention; there is no soliloquy, no aside, no self-conscious or nervous speech, no sudden, unprepared exit or utterance or transition of mood. The audience's view is centered on Harry and its perception is acute, but Harry is always the central figure of a group, and the audience knows him in the same kind of terms as it knows the other characters.

The second act, like the first, gives no occasion for an intense focus on Harry, but Shakespeare has ensured still greater clarity, and more deeply questioning responses. Among the noisy quarrels of Pistol and his fellows comes news that Falstaff is sick and broken in heart after Harry has banished him; and this, in turn, is followed by the contrasting affirmation, "The king is a good king . . . it must be as it may. . . . lambkins, we will live"; here the audience cannot give one simple emotional response. Then Harry in public discloses the treachery of three friends, elaborating formally on the evil hearts under their apparent goodness:

thy fall hath left a kind of blot
To mark the full-fraught man and best indued
With some suspicion. (II.ii.138-40)

The audience is being made aware that the wide scene can be viewed in more than one way. Harry himself may be moved, for before pronouncing judgment he speaks a short sentence:

I will weep for thee;
For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like
Another fall of man. (II.ii.140-42)

This is not a clear intensification of the focus in a deeply revealing soliloquy, for the words are spoken formally for all to hear; but it makes sure that any questioning aroused by this incident may touch Harry as well as others. Then he concludes the scene securely, with a final conciseness that is habitual to him:

Let us deliver
Our puissance into the hand of God,
Putting it straight in expedition.
Cheerly to sea; the signs of war advance:
No king of England, if not King of France! (II.ii.189-93)

But now even this does not remain simple: Harry's confident committal into the "hand of God" is followed by the Hostess' reflective account of Falstaff fumbling with the sheets and playing with flowers, and crying out, "God, God, God!" three or four times:

Now I, to comfort him, bid him 'a should not think of God; I hoped there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet. So 'a bade me lay more clothes on his feet. (II.iii.19-23)

Harry went to France asserting that he went hand in hand with God; Falstaff is said to have gone "away and it had been any christom child"; and then Pistol leaves to follow the king:

Let us to France, like horse-leeches, my boys,
To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck! (II.iii.55-56)

Contrasts sharpen the wide view; and some of the audience, if they stopped to consider, would think they knew more of the overall issues than any one of the dramatis personae.

Bickering at the French court, differences among Harry's soldiers, the charm, absurdity and prim bawdiness of the French Princess learning English, all may cause the audience to question, in a general way, the motives and comprehension of the characters. And Harry's invocation of the "fleshed soldier, rough and hard of heart . . . With conscience wide as hell" as a threat to Harfleur (III.iii.1-43), may heighten its sense of what is involved and cause it to question Harry's attitude to the brutality he is prepared to encourage. Then, as the battle of Agincourt approaches, his reply to Montjoy, the French herald, shows all his earlier resource—vaunting wit, pride, modest self-blame, confidence in God, unhesitating threat of carnage, concise utterance. Expectation for the crisis of the action is heightened and wide, but in a new manner "objective" or watchful. The audience has seen more aspects of each figure in the picture than those figures seem to have seen themselves.

Yet the battle is prepared for in leisurely manner. The Chorus describes its setting with careful artistry, as in the multiple epithets of "cripple tardy-gaited night," or the Spenserian prettiness of "paly flames." Then Harry, disguised in a great cloak, wanders alone, meeting his various soldiers. He is no longer attended as a king, and speaking as a man in isolation he comes closer to the audience. Two very brief soliloquies are his first in the play. Then, talking to Williams, a tendentious, "ordinary" soldier, he considers the responsibility for life and death and deeds in a new vein:

some (peradventure) have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder; some, of beguiling virgins . . .; some, making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Now, if these men have defeated the law and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God. (IV.i.161-68)

This is the voice of Hamlet:

That skull had a tongue in it, and could sing once. How the knave jowls it to the ground, as if 'twere Cain's jaw-bone, that did the first murder! This might be the pate of a politician, which this ass now o'erreaches, one that would circumvent God, might it not? (V.i.75-80)

These thoughts were to stay in Shakespeare's mind as he wrote Macbeth, five or six years later:

Faith, here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heaven. (II.iii.8-11)

Despite its length, Harry's meditative, elaborating prose has the conviction to keep Williams silent until its conclusion, when his only comment is simple agreement. For the audience, the unusual lack of concision, meter, and pace gives Harry a new voice, helping to realize the new range of his thought and feeling which may well embody some of their own incipient comments on the action. As the soldiers move off and Harry is alone, the dramatic focus will be, for the first time, potentially intense and deep. There follows a questioning, yet formal consideration of the cares of kingship, and a lyrical, yet still formal, consideration of a peasant's laboring life. This is yet another aspect of Harry's response, but he seems to shape his thoughts consciously and concludes as if presenting another concise summing-up in public. When Erpingham enters to call him to battle, the widest view seems about to be reestablished. But this valued messenger is sent away and Harry falls on his knees and prays: "O God of battles, steel my soldiers' hearts" (IV.i.289). He knows their weakness:

Possess them not with fear! Take from them now
The sense of reck'ning, or th' opposèd numbers
Pluck their hearts from them. (IV.i.290-92)

Then he speaks of himself, urgently, repetitively, impulsively. He mentions precisely a fear which hitherto has not been made an issue anywhere on the surface of the drama:

Not today, O Lord,
O, not today, think not upon the fault
My father made in compassing the crown!
I Richard's body have interrèd new,
And on it have bestowed more contrite tears
Than from it issued forcèd drops of blood.
Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay. (IV.i.292-98)

The expression of purpose—"to pardon blood"—is emphasized by word order and by meter, and twice the lines break before their end, to give urgency and weight to a new idea:

Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay,
Who twice a day their withered hands hold up
Toward heaven, to pardon blood;
And I have built two chantries,
Where the sad and solemn priests sing still
For Richard's soul. More will I do:
Though all that I can do is nothing worth;
Since that my penitence comes after all,
Imploring pardon. (IV.i.298-306)

There is a half-line pause, then Gloucester enters and Harry is once more the leader, assured and ready:

GLOUCESTER My liege!
KING
My brother Gloucester's voice? Ay.
I know thy errand; I will go with thee.
The day, my friends, and all things stay for me. (IV.i.307-10)

This sequence has shown Harry as king, son, and man, conscious of his responsibility and that of other men in war as in peace, and acknowledging a fear within himself, an awareness that, though he may outstrip the judgment of men, he has "no wings to fly from God." As he prepares for battle a short moment of intense focus has revealed his inmost secrets, and his knowledge that no human help can redress the past.

It is possible to read Harry's prayer as another calculated maneuver—to judge, with Una Ellis-Fermor in her Frontiers of Drama, that:

when he prays, . . . he is more than ever in the council chamber driving an astute bargain, a piece of shrewd diplomacy, between one king and another.

But this is to disregard the newly urgent style of utterance, and the considerable preparation for this moment. Harry had perhaps wept for the traitors as they reminded him that a "full-fraught" man may be suspected. He had earnestly commanded the archbishop to justify his title to the French crown with conscience washed

As pure as sin with baptism. (I.ii.31-32)

Moreover, the need for an honest heart and Harry's equal responsibility with all men are taken up in the following scenes in ways which can betray to the audience's intensified interest his deep concern with these issues.

His address to the soldiers before battle is not a spurring on of others, in the vein of "Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more." Compared with that conjuring up of the blood before Harfleur, it is thoughtful:

if it be a sin to covet honor,
I am the most offending soul alive. (IV.iii.28-29)

Because it is their feast day, he remembers the two noble brothers, Crispin and Crispian, who during the Roman persecution served as shoemakers yet were still martyred for their obvious Christianity; and they become an image for his men in battle:

We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;
For he today that sheds his blood with me
Shall be my brother; be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition. (IV.iii.60-63)

Harry covets honor in his heart and would have his soldiers do so with him; and this is his battle cry. In fight he is still valiant, gay almost with hardiness, angry, ruthless, efficient. He is again the Harry of the first three acts, ready in anger to kill all his prisoners. But afterward there are further reminders of his inward knowledge and need. Perhaps the repeated insistence with which he gives all credit to God is one. Certainly when Fluellen, the robustly confident Welshman, claims brotherhood—

I am your majesty's countryman, I care not who know it!
. . . I need not to be ashamed of your majesty, praised be
God, so long as your majesty is an honest man—
(IV.vii.110-113)

Harry answers directly and simply, "God keep me so"—that is, an "honest man"—and only then turns to public, urgent matters. Later, when Williams excuses his quarrel, his words must strike the monarch more deeply than the puzzled soldier could guess:

All offenses, my lord, come from the heart: never came any from mine that might offend your majesty.
(IV.viii.46-48)

Some of the audience, at least, will remember that this king has recognized an "offending" heart within himself. (As Shakespeare directed Harry to listen to Williams after battle, the seed for the Epilogue to The Tempest may have been in his mind: "As you from crimes would pardoned be,/Let your indulgence set me free.")

In that Henry V has a central scene of intense focus that shows the king acknowledging his guilt, it is obviously indebted to 2 Henry IV. But Shakespeare has modified his purpose and his technique. Harry does not win peace like his father, only a recognition of the need for pardon; moreover, he remains a figure in the center of others. In this play, the predominantly wide view is reestablished and the audience's inward knowledge of Harry's personal crisis is used to deepen the view of the whole scene, and of the many other characters to whom, unlike Henry IV, this king is dramatically related. Williams, Fluellen, Montjoy, and the soldiers are only the first to reenter the picture; the whole fifth act sustains and develops this experience.

It begins with the ludicrous unmasking of the braggart, Pistol, who is forced to eat Fluellen's leek. This is more than a comic counterpart to heroism, for he is left alone onstage and in a direct and immediate soliloquy he may briefly provoke empathetic sympathy:

Old I do wax, and from my weary limbs
Honor is cudged. (V.i.85-86)

The moment is passed as he gathers confidence and decides to return to England to cheat and steal. And the audience's view is fully extended as the kings of France and England and their nobility fill the stage for the final scene in quiet and formal meeting. In a long, deliberate speech, the peace-maker, the Duke of Burgundy, describes France ravaged by war and a generation of her sons growing like savages—as soldiers will,

That nothing do but meditate on blood. (V.ii.59-60)

The whole play, its action and consequences, passes in general review, seen this time with French eyes—or rather with a timeless concern with the arts and sciences of peace, and with natural affections. This new perspective is generalized, but as the two parties leave the stage to debate the terms of peace, Harry remains with Katherine, Princess of France, and her maid: here the dramatic interest is as narrow as before Agincourt. As Harry woos his bride, he speaks sometimes as if in soliloquy, for she cannot understand all he says. It is a complex scene: clearly this is to be a political, but also a personally felt, marriage; clearly Harry offers himself as a simple man, but he does so with wit and eloquence; clearly he is confident and a conqueror, but he is also suitor. And as he warms to his theme he speaks again, directly and with immediacy, of a "good heart":

a good leg will fall, a straight back will stoop, a black beard will turn white, a curled pate will grow bald, a fair face will wither, a full eye will wax hollow: but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and the moon, or rather, the sun, and not the moon, for it shines bright and never changes, but keeps his course truly. (V.ii.161-67)

Katherine questions, "Is it possible dat I sould love de ennemie of France?" And he can answer only with a riddle:

No, it is not possible . . . but in loving me you should love the friend of France: for I love France so well, that I will not part with a village of it—I will have it all mine. And, Kate, when France is mine and I am yours, then yours is France, and you are mine. (V.ii.173-78)

He gets the deserved response: "I cannot tell wat is dat," and the plain soldier is forced to attempt "false French." Yet now they speak more freely, and as Harry's blood "begins to flatter" him that he is loved, he speaks lightly of his father's ambition, which had held him in prayer before battle:

Now beshrew my father's ambition! He was thinking of civil wars when he got me, therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that when I come to woo ladies, I fright them. (V.ii.227-30)

Too much should not be made of this reference; it shows a relaxation of mind, not a conscious change of attitude. Soon, against the "custom" of France, they kiss, and are silent together. And then, gently and with an intimate, relaxing jest, Harry acknowledges what has been given and taken, and understood without words:

You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate: there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them than in the tongues of the French council (V.ii.279-81)

The stage fills again, the relaxed mood being sustained by Burgundy's heavy teasing of the bridegroom. The latter still insists on receiving the cities of the bride's dowry and the title of Inheritor of France, but with a general "Amen," the contesting sides stand solemnly side by side in agreement. As the focus thus widens fully again, and steadies, there is another silence as Harry kisses Kate before them all, as his "sovereign queen." But the view is also acute and questioning. Shakespeare has not attempted to show a love match, or a union in which the audience may be easily confident; and now the bride's mother reminds them frankly of fell jealousy,

Which troubles oft the bed of blessed marriage.

(V.ii.363-64)

The long wooing scene—far more elaborate than at first seems to be required by the dramatic context—serves to show afresh and with an intermittent intensity the need for an honest heart, and the danger and embarrassment of relying on words alone; and, in the kiss, it suggests an inward understanding, peace, affection, unity, that is a greater solvent, a more powerful reorganizing power, than words or battles: the silence of the kiss is a shared silence in which the audience instinctively participates.

Representatives of two societies take up, with remembrances of past action and hopes and prayers for the future, their final positions of concord; and Harry, speaking formally within the wide picture, closes the play with a further pointer to the heart of all matters:

we'll take your oath,

And all the peers', for surety of our leagues.

Then shall I swear to Kate, and you to me,

*And may our oaths well kept and prosp'rous be!*¹

(V.ii.371-74)

Shakespeare has finished his long series of history plays by presenting a group of people standing together: behind appearances and oaths there is need for an "honest heart"; within the wide range, the audience is invited to search for signs of inward peace, good faith, affection, trust, of that which "never changes, but keeps his course truly." When the stage empties and the Chorus announces the end of the action, he also speaks of later times when all France was lost and England bled again. If this play has received its intended "acceptance," it will not be destructive or irrelevant to remind the audience that the final, peaceful grouping was neither fully honest nor fully permanent.

Henry V is a hero-centered historical pageant that presents a clear narrative and varied characters. In that respect it differs from Shakespeare's earlier histories, with their concern with political necessity or "commodity," with rebellion, power, and conscience, and with God's providence. But it was not an easy, or routine, declension from a more serious drama. The play tries to relate the personal, instinctive, and affectionate truth of human relationships, exemplified in the acceptance of Kate and Harry, with warfare, politics, and national rivalries; and it has effected this in the wide range of characters that is such an important aid to the full acceptance of this play. Mistress Quickly's account of Falstaff's death, Fluellen's incongruous loyalty and familiarity with his king, Williams' defense of his honest heart, Pistol's recognition of the end of his campaign, and Kate and Harry's kiss, all represent the necessary element of human understanding, as eloquent as Burgundy's general evocation of the virtues of peace. The audience's involvement in these moments is of a different nature from its involvement in the narrative of war and politics, and is of pervasive, because unthinking, importance in the reception of the play as a whole.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCES

Shakespeare's main source for this play was Holinshed's Chronicles. He simplified the king's continual wars in France by concentrating on the siege of Harfleur, the battle of Agincourt, and the Treaty of Troyes; in his play the successful negotiations for peace immediately follow victory, without the abortive discussions and further years of fighting recounted by Holinshed. Shakespeare also omitted all but one early reference to the Scots and every incident concerned with the dissenting Lollards in England and the execution of Sir John Oldcastle.

¹ Editor's italics.

In this source Shakespeare found no doubt expressed about the greatness of Henry V: the character sketch included in the account of his death speaks, in terms similar to the Chorus of the play, of "a pattern in princehood, a lodestar in honor, and mirror of magnificence," and marginal notes highlight his various wise decisions and valiant acts. Yet at the same time the terrible effects of Henry's wars are considered by Holinshed with sympathy for their victims, and something of Shakespeare's complexity of view may have been suggested by the chronicler; accounts of the sieges of Harfleur and Rouen and comments on the killing of prisoners are particularly relevant here. The Duke of Burgundy's affecting introduction to the peace talks at the beginning of V.ii may owe something to Holinshed's account of French opinion after Agincourt. Henry's prayer for pardon, which details his penance for his father's "fault . . . in compassing the crown" (IV.i.293 ff.), obviously owes something to Holinshed's description of Richard II's burial at the beginning of the reign and possibly to his comment on the Earl of Cambridge; Holinshed, like Shakespeare, recognized the weakness of Henry's claim to the English throne while showing that he claimed the French in the name of justice and right.

A further source for the play was the anonymous history play, The Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth, published in 1598. Some resemblances may well be accidental, but the handling of the English claims to the French crown, the tennis ball challenge, the Treaty of Troyes, and the royal wooing suggests a direct indebtedness. Some of Pistol's episodes may derive from low comedy scenes in The Famous Victories.

Even while following Holinshed in story and occasionally in words, Shakespeare also referred to Hall's The Union of the Noble and Illustre Famelies of Lancastre and York (1542). This earlier version of the chronicle seems to have influenced the first act especially, and perhaps Exeter's speech on the calamities of war in II.iv and the French view of the English in III.v and III.vii.

For various small details in the narrative and for discussions of military discipline and the rights of war and government, Shakespeare echoed numerous Elizabethan books. Among these are John Lyly's Euphues and his England (1580) for the archbishop's account of the kingdom of the bees in I.ii, Tacitus' Annals (translated 1598) for Henry's talk with the common soldiers before battle, and A Brief Discourse of War (1590) written by the Welsh knight Sir Roger Williams for some parts of Fluellen's disquisitions.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

The first edition of Henry V was a quarto published in 1600 with a title page reading:

THE CRONICLE

History of Henry the fift,
With his battell fought at Agin Court in France. Together with Auntient Pistoll.

As it hath bene sundry times playd by the Right honorable the Lord Chamberlaine his seruants.

This was a shortened version and a "bad" text; probably some actors had pieced together their own text, which was subsequently cut and rearranged a little for the convenience of a touring company.

Two more quarto editions followed in 1602 and 1619 (its title page, however, being dated 1608); both were reprints from the first edition.

The first, and only, authoritative edition appeared in the collected folio of Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies that was published in 1623. Spellings, punctuation, variations in nomenclature, and the nature of some of the stage directions and of some of the errors all suggest that this was printed either from Shakespeare's autograph working-manuscript (or "foul papers" as bibliographers usually term this, despite its general clarity and uniformity), or else from a good copy of Shakespeare's manuscript. A few directions for noises and a duplicate entry suggest that the manuscript may have been annotated lightly by a bookkeeper (or stage manager).

This Folio text is divided into five unequal acts by the occurrence of entries for the Chorus to speak appropriate prologues, but another division, running the first two acts together and dividing Act IV into two after its sixth scene, is marked with act headings. Both arrangements involve difficulties: that of the printed headings disregards the Chorus' prologues that clearly belong to the original composition of the play; that of the Chorus suggests that the play was partly rewritten at some stage of composition. This rewriting must have involved the early Pistol and Mrs. Quickly episodes: the Chorus before Act II announces that the scene

Is now transported, gentles, to Southampton.

There is the playhouse now, there must you sit,

And thence to France (II.Cho.35-37)

but in II.i the scene is still London, in Eastcheap, and then, after one scene at Southampton, II.iii is again London for the account of Falstaff's death. These confusions are partly covered up by the concluding lines to II.Cho.:

But, till the king come forth, and not till then,

Unto Southampton do we shift our scene.

Probably II.i and II.iii were both invented and inserted after the composition of the first two acts had been completed, or nearly completed, in a form that is now lost. If so, it seems likely that Shakespeare began the play intending to fulfill his promise in the Epilogue to 2 Henry IV, and take Falstaff to France—and that he then decided to omit Falstaff and so had to effect some cutting, rewriting, and patching. Such a decision may have affected later parts of the play as well: some editors believe that Pistol has inherited some of the business originally designed for Falstaff (but not his idiom); others that Henry's talk with Pistol and the soldiers before Agincourt is a late addition. There can, of course, be no certain knowledge of such processes of composition; what is undoubted is that the Folio text is a good, authoritative version of the play as Shakespeare wrote or rewrote it.

Obviously the Folio must be the basis for any modern text. This edition reproduces it wherever possible, modernizing spelling, and altering punctuation and verse lineations where the editor's sense of literary and dramatic fitness dictated. Abbreviations have been expanded and speech prefixes regularized. Stage directions have been amplified where necessary, such additions being printed within brackets. Obvious typographical errors have been corrected and eccentric spellings regularized where appropriate without notice, but all significant emendations are noted below. In this list the adopted reading is given in boldface type and is followed by the rejected Folio reading in roman or a note of the Folio's omission within brackets. If the adopted reading occurs in the first quarto edition it is followed by "Q" within brackets.

I.ii.74 heir [Q] th'Heire 131 blood Bloods 163 her their 197 majesty [Q] Maiesties 212 End [Q] And
II.i.24 mare name 43, 44 Iceland Island 74 thee defy [Q] defie thee 81 enough [Q] enough to 106-07 Nym. I shall . . . betting? [Q; F omits] 117 that's that 119 Ah A
II.ii.87 him with with 107 a an 139 mark the make thee 147 Henry [Q] Thomas 159 I in in 176 have sought [Q] sought 181 s.d. Exeunt Exit
II.iii.17 'a babbled a Table 25 so upward [Q] so vp-peer'd 49 word [Q] world
II.iv.107 pinning [Q] priuy
III.Cho.4 Hampton Douer 6 fanning fayning
III.i.7 conjure commune 17 noble Noblish 24 men me 32 Straining Straying
III.iii.32 heady headly 35 Defile Desire
III.iv.1 été este 1-2 parles bien bien parlas 8-13 Et les doigts . . . écolier [F assigns "Et les doigts" to Alice, lines 9-11 to Katherine, and "La main . . . écolier" (in lines 12-13) to Alice] 10

souviendrai souemeray 16 Nous [F omits] 41 pas déjà y desia 43 Non Nome 47 Sauf Sans
III.v.11 Dieu du 45 Foix Loys 46 knights Kings
III.vi.31 her [Q] his 103 o' fire a fire 112 lenity [Q] Leuitie
III.vii.12 pasterns postures 13 Ça, ha! ch' ha: 61 lief liue 67 et la truie est la leuye
IV.Cho.27 Presenteth Presented
IV.i.3 Good God 35 Qui va là? Che vous la? 94 Thomas Iohn 179 mote Moth 229 s.d. Exeunt Soldiers Exit Souldiers [after line 229] 245 What What?; adoration Odoration 291 or of 310 friends [Q] friend
IV.ii.2 Montez à Monte; Varlet Verlot 5 eaux et la terre ewes & terre 6 le feu feu 7 Ciel Cein 26 'gainst against 50 gimmaled Iymold
IV.iii.13-14 Exeter. And yet . . . valor [F gives after lines 11 and 12, spoken by Bedford] 26 earns yernes 48 And say . . . Crispin's day. [Q; F omits] 105 grazing crazing
IV.iv.15 Or for 36 à cette heure asture 37 couper coupes 54 l'avez promis layt a promets 57 remercîments remerciours 57-58 suis tombé intombe 59 distingué distinie 67 Suivez Saaue
IV.v.2-3 perdu . . . perdu perdia . . . perdie 4 Mort Mor 13 in honor in 17 by a [Q] a base
IV.vi.34 mistful mixtfull
IV.vii.16 great gear 77 their with 109 countryman [Q] countrymen 114 God [Q] Good
IV.viii.44 martial Marshall 112 we me
V.i.72 begun began 83 Of of a 90 swear swore
V.ii.12 England Ireland 50 all withall 72 tenors Tenures 77 cursitory curselarie 93 Haply Happily 118 pleines plein 191 est meilleur & melieus 256 abaissiez abbaisse 257 d'une de votre d'une nostre 262 baisées baisee; coutume costume 266 baiser buisse 324 never ent'red entred 365 paction Pation

THE LIFE OF HENRY THE FIFTH

[Dramatis Personae]

CHORUS

KING HENRY THE FIFTH

DUKES OF GLOUCESTER AND BEDFORD brothers of the king

DUKE OF EXETER uncle of the king

DUKE OF YORK cousin of the king

EARLS OF SALISBURY, WESTMORELAND,
WARWICK, AND CAMBRIDGE

ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY

BISHOP OF ELY

LORD SCROOP

SIR THOMAS GREY

SIR THOMAS ERPINGHAM

GOWER, FLUELLEN, MACMORRIS, JAMY officers in the English army

JOHN BATES, ALEXANDER COURT, MICHAEL
WILLIAMS soldiers in the English army

PISTOL, NYM, BARDOLPH

BOY

AN ENGLISH HERALD

CHARLES THE SIXTH King of France

LEWIS the dauphin

DUKES OF BURGUNDY, ORLEANS, BOURBON,
BERRI, AND BRETAGNE

CONSTABLE OF FRANCE

RAMBURES AND GRANDPRÉ French lords

GOVERNOR OF HARFLEUR

MONTJOY a French herald

AMBASSADORS to King Henry

ISABEL Queen of France

KATHERINE daughter of the French king and queen

ALICE an attendant to Katherine

HOSTESS QUICKLY of an Eastcheap tavern, married to Pistol

LORDS LADIES OFFICERS SOLDIERS

CITIZENS MESSENGERS ATTENDANTS

Scene: England; France]

Enter PROLOGUE.

O for a Muse of fire,^o that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention:^o

A kingdom for a stage, princes to act,
And monarchs to behold the swelling^o scene!

Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,^o 5
Assume the port of Mars,^o and at his heels (Leashed in, like hounds) should famine, sword, and fire

The decorative border shown above appeared on the title page of the quarto edition of Henry V, 1608.

I.Pro.1 fire (1) most airy (sublime) of the four elements (2) warlike nature (cf. line 6 below and II.Cho.1) 2 invention imaginative creation 4 swelling stately 5 like himself (1) incomparable (2) worthy of himself 6 port of Mars bearing of the god of war

Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentles^o all,
The flat unraisèd spirits^o that hath dared

On this unworthy scaffold^o to bring forth 10

So great an object. Can this cockpit hold

The vasty fields of France? Or may we cram

Within this wooden O^o the very casques^o

That did affright the air at Agincourt?

O, pardon—since a crooked figure^o may 15

Attest in little place a million;

And let us, ciphers^o to this great accompt,^o

8 gentles gentlefolk 9 flat unraisèd spirits i.e., dull, un-inspired actors and playwright 10 scaffold stage (technical term) 13 wooden O small wooden circle; i.e., the theater of the King's Men (at the first performance, this was probably the curtain); very casques helmets, even without the men who wore them 15 crooked figure a nought, that could change 100,000 into 1,000,000 17 ciphers nothings; accompt (1) sum total (2) story

On your imaginary° forces work.
 Suppose within the girdle of these walls
 Are now confined two mighty monarchies,
 Whose high, upreared and abutting fronts°
 The perilous narrow ocean parts asunder.°
 Piece out our imperfections with your thoughts:
 Into a thousand parts divide one man
 And make imaginary puissance.°
 Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them
 Printing their proud° hoofs i' th' receiving earth;
 For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our kings,
 Carry them° here and there, jumping o'er times,
 Turning th' accomplishment of many years
 Into an hourglass; for the which supply,°
 Admit me Chorus to this history;
 Who, Prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
 Gently to hear, kindly to judge our play. Exit.

A C T I

Scene I. [London. An antechamber in the king's palace.]

Enter the two bishops [the Archbishop] of CANTERBURY and [the Bishop of] ELY.

CANTERBURY

My lord, I'll tell you, that self° bill is urged
 Which in th' eleventh year of the last king's reign°
 Was like,° and had indeed against us passed
 But that the scrambling° and unquiet time
 Did push it out of farther question.

ELY

But how, my lord, shall we resist it now?

CANTERBURY

It must be thought on. If it pass against us,
 We lose the better half of our possession;
 For all the temporal° lands which men devout
 By testament have given to the Church
 Would they strip from us; being valued thus—
 As much as would maintain, to the king's honor,
 Full fifteen earls and fifteen hundred knights,
 Six thousand and two hundred good esquires,
 And to relief of lazars,° and weak age
 Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil,
 A hundred almshouses right well supplied;
 And to the coffers of the king beside,
 A thousand pounds by th' year. Thus runs the bill.

ELY

This would drink deep.

CANTERBURY 'Twould drink the cup and all. 20

ELY

But what prevention?

CANTERBURY

The king is full of grace and fair regard.°

18 imaginary imaginative 21 fronts frontiers 21–22 high
 . . . asunder i.e., the cliffs of Dover and Calais, on opposite sides of the English Channel 25 puissance (trisyllabic) armed force 27 proud spirited 29 them i.e., thoughts (?) kings (?)
 31 for . . . supply to help you in which I.i.1 self same 2 eleventh . . . reign 1410 3 like likely (to be passed) 4 scrambling scuffling, disordered 9 temporal secular (as opposed to sacred) 15 lazars lepers 22 regard repute

ELY

And a true lover of the holy Church.

CANTERBURY

The courses of his youth promised it not.
 The breath no sooner left his father's body
 But that his wildness, mortified° in him,
 Seemed to die too; yea, at that very moment
 Consideration° like an angel came
 And whipped th' offending Adam° out of him,
 Leaving his body as a paradise
 T' envelop and contain celestial spirits.
 Never was such a sudden scholar made;
 Never came reformation in a flood
 With such a heady currance° scouring faults;
 Nor never Hydra-headed° willfulness
 So soon did lose his seat°—and all at once—
 As in this king.

ELY

We are blessed in the change.

CANTERBURY

Hear him but reason° in divinity,
 And, all-admiring, with an inward wish
 You would desire the king were made a prelate;
 Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs,
 You would say it hath been all in all° his study;
 List° his discourse of war, and you shall hear
 A fearful battle rend'red you in music;°
 Turn him to any cause of policy,°
 The Gordian knot° of it he will unloose,
 Familiar as his garter; that when he speaks,
 The air, a chartered libertine,° is still,
 And the mute wonder° lurketh in men's ears
 To steal his sweet and honeyed sentences;°
 So that the art and practic part of life
 Must be the mistress to this theoric;°
 Which is a wonder how his grace° should glean it,
 Since his addiction was to courses vain,
 His companies° unlettered, rude, and shallow,
 His hours filled up with riots, banquets, sports;
 And never noted in him any study,
 Any retirement, any sequestration
 From open haunts and popularity.°

ELY

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
 And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best
 Neighbored by fruit of baser quality;
 And so the prince obscured his contemplation°
 Under the veil of wildness, which (no doubt)
 Grew like the summer grass, fastest by night,
 Unseen, yet crevice in his faculty.°

26 mortified dead (a religious usage) 28 Consideration meditation 29 whipped . . . Adam drove original sin 34 heady currance headlong current 35 Hydra-headed Hydra was a mythological beast with nine heads, growing two more for every one cut off 36 seat throne 38 reason debate 42 all in all all things in all respects 43 List listen to 44 rend'red . . .
music recounted with harmonious and stirring eloquence 45 cause of policy political problem 46 Gordian knot tied by Gordius when chosen King of Gordium; the oracle declared that whoever loosened it would rule Asia; Alexander the Great cut through it with his own sword 48 chartered libertine one licensed to go his own way 49 wonder wonderer 50 sentences sayings 51–52 art . . . theoric practice and experience must have taught him theory 53 grace majesty (a formal title) 55 companies companions 59 open . . . popularity public places and familiarity 63 contemplation study of life
 66 crevice . . . faculty growing because that is its nature

CANTERBURY

It must be so, for miracles are ceased;^o
And therefore we must needs admit the means^o
How things are perfected.

ELY But, my good lord,
How now for mitigation of this bill
Urged by the commons?^o Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?

CANTERBURY He seems indifferent;^o
Or rather swaying more upon our part
Than cherishing th' exhibitors^o against us;
For I have made an offer to his majesty—
Upon our spiritual convocation,^o
And in regard of causes^o now in hand,
Which I have opened^o to his grace at large,
As touching France—to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy yet
Did to his predecessors part withal.

ELY How did this offer seem received, my lord?

CANTERBURY With good acceptance of his majesty;
Save that there was not time enough to hear,
As I perceived his grace would fain have done,
The severals and unhidden passages^o
Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms,
And generally to the crown and seat of France,
Derived from Edward, his great-grandfather.

ELY What was th' impediment that broke this off?

CANTERBURY The French ambassador upon that instant
Craved audience; and the hour I think is come
To give him hearing. Is it four o'clock?

ELY It is.

CANTERBURY Then go we in to know his embassy;
Which I could with a ready guess declare
Before the Frenchman speak a word of it.

ELY I'll wait upon you, and I long to hear it. Exeunt.

[Scene II. The presence chamber in the palace.]

Enter the KING, Humphrey [Duke of GLOUCESTER], BEDFORD, CLARENCE, WARWICK, WESTMORE-LAND, and EXETER, [with ATTENDANTS].

KING Where is my gracious Lord of Canterbury?

EXETER Not here in presence.

KING Send for him, good uncle.

WESTMORELAND Shall we call in th' ambassador, my liege?

KING

Not yet, my cousin.^o We would be resolved,^o
Before we hear him, of some things of weight
That task^o our thoughts concerning us and France. 5

70 Enter two bishops [the Archbishop of CANTERBURY and the Bishop of ELY].

CANTERBURY

God and his angels guard your sacred throne,
And make you long become it!

KING Sure we thank you.

75 My learned lord, we pray you to proceed,
And justly and religiously unfold
Why the Law Salique, that they have in France,
Or should or^o should not bar us in our claim.
And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord,
80 That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading,^o
Or nicely charge your understanding soul
With opening titles miscreate,^o whose right^o
Suits not in native colors with the truth;^o
For God doth know how many now in health
Shall drop their blood in approbation^o
Of what your reverence shall incite us to. 20

85 Therefore take heed how you impawn^o our person,
How you awake our sleeping sword of war.
We charge you in the name of God, take heed;
For never two such kingdoms did contend
Without much fall of blood, whose guiltless drops 25
Are every one a woe, a sore complaint
'Gainst him whose wrongs^o gives edge unto the swords
That makes such waste in brief mortality.
Under this conjuration, speak, my lord:
For we will hear, note, and believe in heart 30
That what you speak is in your conscience washed
As pure as sin with baptism.

CANTERBURY

95 Then hear me, gracious sovereign, and you peers,
That owe yourselves, your lives, and services
To this imperial throne. There is no bar
To make^o against your highness' claim to France
But this which they produce from Pharamond:^o
"In terram Salicam mulieres ne succedant";
"No woman shall succeed in Salique land."
Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze^o
40 To be the realm of France, and Pharamond
The founder of this law and female bar.
Yet their own authors faithfully affirm
That the land Salique is in Germany,
Between the floods of Sala and of Elbe; 45
Where Charles the Great having subdued the Saxons,
There left behind and settled certain French;
Who, holding in disdain the German women
For some dishonest manners^o of their life,
Established then this law: to wit, no female 50

I.ii.4 cousin kinsman; be resolved have doubts removed 6 task burden 12 Or . . . or either . . . or 14 reading interpretation 15–16 nicely . . . miscreate by subtle reasoning lay to the charge of your soul—which knows right and wrong—the fault of advancing illegitimate claims 16 right claim 17 Suits . . . truth plainly told would not be taken as true 19 approbation support 21 impawn pledge, hazard 27 wrongs wrongdoings 36 make i.e., be made 37 Pharamond legendary king of Salian Franks 40 gloze interpret 49 dishonest manners unchaste conduct

67 miracles are ceased Protestants believed miracles ceased to occur after the revelation of Christ 68 means i.e., natural cause 71 commons House of Commons in the parliament of England
72 indifferent impartial 74 exhibitors presenters of the bill 76 convocation formal meeting of the clergy 77 causes affairs 78 opened revealed 86 severals . . . passages details and clear (obvious) lines of descent

Should be inheritrix in Salique land;
 Which Salique (as I said) 'twixt Elbe and Sala
 Is at this day in Germany, called Meisen.
 Then doth it well appear the Salique Law
 Was not devised for the realm of France;
 Nor did the French possess the Salique land
 Until four hundred one and twenty years
 After defunction^o of King Pharamond,
 Idly supposed the founder of this law,
 Who died within the year of our redemption
 Four hundred twenty-six; and Charles the Great Subdued the Saxons, and did seat the French
 Beyond the river Sala, in the year
 Eight hundred five. Besides, their writers say,
 King Pepin,^o which deposèd Childeric,
 Did, as heir general,^o being descended
 Of Blithild, which was daughter to King Clothair,
 Make claim and title to the crown of France.
 Hugh Capet also—who usurped the crown
 Of Charles the Duke of Lorraine, sole heir male
 Of the true line and stock of Charles the Great—
 To find^o his title with some shows of truth,
 Though in pure truth it was corrupt and naught,
 Conveyed^o himself as heir to th' Lady Lingard,
 Daughter to Charlemain,^o who was the son
 To Lewis the Emperor, and Lewis the son
 Of Charles the Great. Also King Lewis the Tenth,^o
 Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet,
 Could not keep quiet in his conscience,
 Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied
 That fair Queen Isabel, his grandmother,
 Was lineal^o of the Lady Ermengard,
 Daughter to Charles the foresaid Duke of Lorraine;
 By the which marriage the line of Charles the Great
 Was reunited to the crown of France.
 So that, as clear as is the summer's sun,
 King Pepin's title and Hugh Capet's claim,
 King Lewis his satisfaction,^o all appear
 To hold in right and title of the female:
 So do the kings of France unto this day.
 Howbeit they would hold up this Salique Law
 To bar your highness claiming from the female,
 And rather choose to hide them in a net
 Than amply to imbar their crooked titles^o
 Usurped from you and your progenitors.

KING

May I with right and conscience make this claim?

CANTERBURY

The sin upon my head, dread sovereign!
 For in the Book of Numbers is it writ:
 When the man dies, let the inheritance
 Descend unto the daughter. Gracious lord,
 Stand for your own, unwind your bloody flag,
 Look back into your mighty ancestors;

55

60

65

70

75

80

85

90

95

100

Go, my dread lord, to your great-grandsire's^o tomb,
 From whom you claim; invoke his warlike spirit,
 And your great-uncle's, Edward the Black Prince,
 Who on the French ground played a tragedy,^o
 Making defeat on the full power^o of France,
 Whiles his most mighty father on a hill
 Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp
 Forge in blood of French nobility.
 O noble English, that could entertain
 With half their forces^o the full pride of France,
 And let another half stand laughing by,
 All out of work, and cold for^o action!

105

110

115

120

125

130

135

140

145

ELY

Awake remembrance of these valiant dead
 And with your puissant arm renew their feats.
 You are their heir; you sit upon their throne;
 The blood and courage that renownèd them
 Runs in your veins: and my thrice-puissant^o liege
 Is in the very May-morn of his youth
 Ripe for exploits and mighty enterprises.

EXETER

Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth
 Do all expect that you should rouse yourself,
 As did the former lions of your blood.

WESTMORELAND

They know your grace hath^o cause and means and
 might;
 So hath your highness. Never king of England
 Had nobles richer and more loyal subjects,
 Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England
 And lie pavilioned in the fields of France.

CANTERBURY

O, let their bodies follow, my dear liege,
 With blood, and sword and fire, to win your right!
 In aid whereof we of the spirituality
 Will raise your highness such a mighty sum
 As never did the clergy at one time
 Bring in to any of your ancestors.

KING

We must not only arm t' invade the French,
 But lay down our proportions^o to defend Against the Scot, who will make road^o upon us
 With all advantages.^o

CANTERBURY

They of those marches,^o gracious sovereign,
 Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
 Our inland^o from the pilfering borderers.

KING

We do not mean the coursing^o snatchers only;
 But fear the main intendment^o of the Scot,
 Who hath been still^o a giddy neighbor to us;
 For you shall read that my great-grandfather
 Never went with his forces into France

98 defunction discharge, death 65 Pepin King of Franks 56 general through male or female line of descent 72 find provide 74 Conveyed passed on 75 Charlemain Holinshed's error for Charles the Bold 77 Tenth Holinshed's error for Ninth 82 lineal lineally descended 88 his satisfaction see line 80 93-94 to hide . . . titles to take refuge in a tangle of sophistical arguments than make the most of (bar in, secure) their own false claims (by admitting female succession)

103 great-grandsire's Edward III's (whose mother, Isabella, was daughter of Philip IV of France) 106 a tragedy the battle of Crécy (1346) 107 power army 112 half their forces one third was held in reserve with the king 114 for for lack of 119 thrice-puissant i.e., for the three reasons just stated 125 hath accented 137 lay . . . proportions estimate the size of our forces 138 road raid 139 With all advantages at every favorable opportunity, with everything in their favor 140 marches border country 142 inland heart of the country 143 coursing marauding 144 main intendment general purpose 145 still always

But that the Scot on his unfurnished° kingdom
 Came pouring like the tide into a breach,
 With ample and brim fullness of his force,
 Galling the gleanèd° land with hot assays,
 Girding with grievous siege castles and towns;
 That England, being empty of defense,
 Hath shook and trembled at th' ill neighborhood.°

CANTERBURY

She hath been then more feared° than harmed, my liege;

For hear her but exampled° by herself:

When all her chivalry hath been in France,

And she a mourning widow of her nobles,

She hath herself not only well defended

But taken and impounded as a stray°

The King of Scots;° whom she did send to France

To fill King Edward's fame with prisoner kings,

And make her chronicle as rich with praise

As is the ooze and bottom° of the sea

With sunken wrack° and sumless treasures.

ELY

But there's a saying very old and true—

“If that you will France win,

Then with Scotland first begin.”

For once the eagle (England) being in prey,°

To her unguarded nest the weasel (Scot)

Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs

(Playing the mouse in absence of the cat)

To tame° and havoc more than she can eat.

EXETER

It follows then, the cat must stay at home;

Yet that is but a crushed° necessity,

Since we have locks to safeguard necessities

And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.

While that the armèd hand doth fight abroad,

Th' advisèd° head defends itself at home;

For government, though high, and low, and lower,

Put into parts,° doth keep in one consent,°

Congreeing° in a full and natural close,°

Like music.

CANTERBURY Therefore doth heaven divide

The state° of man in divers functions,

Setting endeavor in continual motion;°

To which is fixèd, as an aim or butt,

Obedience; for so work the honeybees,

Creatures that by a rule in nature° teach

The act° of order to a peopled kingdom.

They have a king, and officers of sorts,°

Where some like magistrates correct° at home,

Others like merchants venture trade abroad,

150

Others like soldiers armèd in their stings

Make boot upon° the summer's velvet buds,

Which pillage they with merry march bring home 195

To the tent-royal of their emperor—

Who, busied in his majesty, surveys

The singing masons building roofs of gold,

The civil citizens kneading up the honey,

The poor mechanic° porters crowding in 200

Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate,

155

The sad-eyed justice, with his surly° hum,

Delivering o'er to executors° pale

The lazy yawning drone. I this infer,°

That many things, having full reference° 205

To one consent, may work contrariously;

160

As many arrows loosèd several ways°

Come to one mark, as many ways meet in one town,

As many fresh streams meet in one salt sea,

As many lines close in the dial's center,

210

So may a thousand actions, once afoot,

165

End in one purpose, and be all well borne°

Without defeat. Therefore to France, my liege!

Divide your happy England into four,

Whereof take you one quarter into France,

215

And you withal shall make all Gallia shake.

If we, with thrice such powers left at home,

170

Cannot defend our own doors from the dog,

Let us be worried, and our nation lose

The name of hardiness and policy.° 220

KING

Call in the messengers sent from the dauphin.

[Exeunt some ATTENDANTS.]

175

Now are we well resolved,° and by God's help

And yours, the noble sinews of our power,

France being ours,° we'll bend it to our awe,°

Or break it all to pieces. Or there we'll sit, 225

Ruling in large and ample empery°

O'er France and all her (almost) kingly dukedoms,

Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,°

Tombless, with no remembrance° over them.

Either our history shall with full mouth 230

Speak freely of our acts, or else our grave,

Like Turkish mute,° shall have a tongueless mouth,

185

Not worshippèd° with a waxen° epitaph.

Enter AMBASSADORS of France [and ATTENDANTS].

Now are we well prepared to know the pleasure

Of our fair cousin dauphin; for we hear 235

190

Your greeting is from him, not from the king.

AMBASSADOR

May't please your majesty to give us leave

Freely to render what we have in charge;

Or shall we sparingly° show you far off

The dauphin's meaning, and our embassy? 240

148 unfurnished undefended 151 gleanèd i.e., stripped of defenders 154 neighborhood neighborliness 155 feared alarmed 156 exampled furnished with a precedent 160
stray animal found wandering out of bounds 161 King of Scots David II 164 ooze and bottom oozy bottom 165
wrack wreck 169 in prey engaged in preying 173 tame broach (as a weasel breaks into eggs to suck their meat) 175
crushed strained, needless 179 advisèd prudent 181 parts
 (1) members of the body politic (2) melodies of the various instruments in concerted music; consent (1) agreement (2) harmony 182 Congreeing agreeing; close (1) union (2) conclusion of a piece of music 184 state estate, kingdom
185 Setting . . . motion giving a perpetual stimulus to effort 188 in nature instinctive 189 act operation 190 sorts various kinds 191 correct administer justice

194 Make boot upon plunder 200 mechanic engaged in manual labor 202 surly stern 203 executors executioners 204 infer adduce 205 reference relation 207 loosèd several ways shot from various places 212 borne carried out 220 policy statesmanship 222 resolved (1) convinced (2) determined 224 ours i.e., by right of inheritance; bend . . . awe subdue it to our authority 226 empery dominion 228 urn grave 229 remembrance memorial inscription 232 Turkish mute certain slaves in the Turkish royal household had their tongues cut out to ensure secrecy 233 worshipped honored; waxen easily effaced 239 spar- ingly with reserve, discreetly

KING

We are no tyrant, but a Christian king,
Unto whose grace^o our passion is as subject
As is our wretches fett' red in our prisons;
Therefore with frank and with uncurbèd plainness,
Tell us the dauphin's mind.

AMBASSADOR

Thus then, in few:^o

245

Your highness, lately sending into France,
Did claim some certain dukedoms, in the right
Of your great predecessor, King Edward the Third.
In answer of which claim, the prince our master
Says that you savor too much of your youth, 250
And bids you be advised:^o There's naught in France
That can be with a nimble galliard^o won;
You cannot revel into dukedoms there.
He therefore sends you, meeter for your spirit,
This tun^o of treasure; and in lieu of this, 255
Desires you let the dukedoms that you claim
Hear no more of you. This the dauphin speaks.

KING

What treasure, uncle?

EXETER

Tennis balls, my liege.

KING

We are glad the dauphin is so pleasant^o with us—
His present, and your pains, we thank you for. 260
When we have matched our rackets to these balls,
We will in France^o (by God's grace) play a set
Shall strike his father's crown^o into the hazard.^o
Tell him he hath made a match with such a wrangler^o
That all the courts^o of France will be disturbed 265
With chases.^o And we understand him well,
How he comes o'er us with^o our wilder days,
Not measuring what use we made of them.
We never valued this poor seat^o of England,
And therefore, living hence,^o did give ourself 270
To barbarous license; as 'tis ever common
That men are merriest when they are from home.
But tell the dauphin I will keep my state,^o
Be like a king, and show my sail of greatness,^o
When I do rouse me in my throne of France. 275
For that I have laid by my majesty,
And plodded like a man for working days;^o
But I will rise there with so full a glory
That I will dazzle all the eyes of France,
Yea, strike the dauphin blind to look on us.^o 280
And tell the pleasant prince this mock of his Hath turned his balls to gunstones,^o and his soul
Shall stand sore chargèd for the wasteful vengeance

242 grace gracious disposition 245 few few words 251 be advised take care 252 galliard lively dance 255 tun cask 259 pleasant jocular, merry 262 France (1) tennis court (2) the country 263 crown (1) coin (stake money) (2) throne and power; hazard (1) opening in the walls of an old-fashioned tennis court; the ball entering it became "dead" and a point was scored (2) peril, jeopardy 264 wrangler (1) adversary (2) disputant 265 courts (1) tennis courts (2) courts of princes 266 chases (1) bouncings twice of tennis ball (scoring points) (2) pursuits 267 comes . . . with affects superiority over us by reason of 269 seat throne (lines 269–72 are ironical) 270 hence i.e., away from the court 273 state position of power 274 show . . . greatness demean myself proudly 276–77 For . . . days To be able to achieve this I have divested myself of greatness and learned what it is to live as a laboring man 278–80 But . . . us cf. 1 Henry IV, I.ii.192–214 282 gunstones stones used for cannonballs

That shall fly with them; for many a thousand widows
Shall this his mock mock out of their dear husbands, 285
Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down;
And some are yet ungotten and unborn
That shall have cause to curse the dauphin's scorn.^o
But this lies all within^o the will of God,
To whom I do appeal, and in whose name, 290
Tell you the dauphin, I am coming on
To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My rightful hand in a well-hallowed cause.
So get you hence in peace. And tell the dauphin
His jest will savor but of shallow wit, 295
When thousands weep more than did laugh at it.
Convey them with safe conduct. Fare you well.

Exeunt AMBASSADORS [and ATTENDANTS].

EXETER

This was a merry message.

KING

We hope to make the sender blush at it.
Therefore, my lords, omit no happy hour^o 300
That may give furth'rance to our expedition;^o
For we have now no thought in us but France,
Save those to God, that run before^o our business.
Therefore let our proportions^o for these wars
Be soon collected, and all things thought upon 305
That may with reasonable swiftmess add
More feathers to our wings; for, God before,^o
We'll chide this dauphin at his father's door.
Therefore let every man now task his thought
That this fair action may on foot^o be brought. 310

Exeunt.

[A C T I I]

Flourish.^o Enter CHORUS.

Now all the youth of England are on fire,
And silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies;^o
Now thrive the armorers, and honor's thought
Reigns solely^o in the breast of every man. 5
They sell the pasture now, to buy the horse;
Following the mirror^o of all Christian kings
With wingèd heels, as English Mercuries.^o
For now sits Expectation in the air
And hides a sword, from hilts^o unto the point, 10
With crowns imperial, crowns and coronets
Promised to Harry and his followers.
The French, advised by good intelligence^o
Of this most dreadful preparation,
Shake in their fear, and with pale policy^o

288 scorn taunt 289 lies all within depends wholly upon 300 omit . . . hour lose no favorable occasion 301 expedition enterprise 303 run before i.e., as prayers precede 304 proportions forces and supplies 307 God before God leading us 310 on foot in active operation II. Cho.s.d. Flourish trumpet fanfare 2 silken . . . lies pastimes and luxuries are laid aside like clothes 4 solely alone 6 mirror model 7 Mercuries in classical mythology Mercury, or Hermes, was the gods' messenger; he was pictured as wearing winged helmet and sandals 9 hilts hilt (plural for singular, as frequently) 12 advised . . . intelligence informed by efficient espionage 14 pale policy contrivance inspired by fear

Seek to divert the English purposes.
 O England, model^o to thy inward greatness,
 Like little body with a mighty heart,
 What mightst thou do, that honor would thee do,
 Were all thy children kind and natural!^o
 But see, thy fault^o France^o hath in thee found out—
 A nest of hollow^o bosoms—which he fills
 With treacherous crowns;^o and three corrupted men—
 One, Richard Earl of Cambridge, and the second,
 Henry Lord Scroop of Masham, and the third,
 Sir Thomas Grey, knight, of Northumberland—
 Have, for the gilt^o of France (O guilt indeed!),
 Confirmed conspiracy with fearful France,
 And by their hands this grace^o of kings must die,
 If hell and treason hold their promises,
 Ere he take ship for France, and in Southampton.
 Linger your patience on, and we'll digest
 Th' abuse of distance;^o force^o a play:—
 The sum is paid; the traitors are agreed;
 The king is set from London; and the scene
 Is now transported, gentles, to Southampton.
 There is the playhouse now, there must you sit,
 And thence to France shall we convey you safe
 And bring you back, charming the narrow seas^o
 To give you gentle pass;^o for, if we may,
 We'll not offend one stomach^o with our play.
 But, till the king come forth, and not till then,
 Unto Southampton do we shift our scene. Exit.

[Scene I. London. A street.]

Enter Corporal NYM and Lieutenant BARDOLPH.

BARDOLPH Well met, Corporal Nym.

NYM Good morrow, Lieutenant^o Bardolph.

BARDOLPH What, are Ancient^o Pistol and you friends yet?

NYM For my part, I care not; I say little; but when time shall serve,^o there shall be smiles—but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight; but I will wink^o and hold out mine iron.^o It is a simple one; but what though? It will toast cheese, and it will endure cold,^o as another man's sword will—and there's an end.^o

BARDOLPH I will bestow^o a breakfast to make you friends, and we'll be all three sworn brothers^o to France. Let't be so, good Corporal Nym.

NYM Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the 15 certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may.^o That is my rest,^o that is the rendezvous^o of it.

BARDOLPH It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly, and certainly she did you wrong, for you were troth-plight^o to her. 20

NYM I cannot tell. Things must be as they may; men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time, and some say knives have edges.
 It must be as it may; though patience be a tired mare, yet she will plod;^o there must be conclusions. Well, 25
 I cannot tell.

Enter PISTOL and [HOSTESS] Quickly.

BARDOLPH Here comes Ancient Pistol and his wife.
 Good corporal, be patient here. How now, mine host Pistol?

PISTOL
 Base tyke, call'st thou me host?
 Now by this hand I swear I scorn the term;
 Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers! 30

HOSTESS No, by my troth, not long; for we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen that live honestly^o by the prick of their needles, but 35 it will be thought we keep a bawdy house straight.
 [NYM draws his sword.] O well-a-day, Lady, if he be not hewn now! We shall see willful adultery and murder committed.

[PISTOL draws.]

BARDOLPH Good lieutenant—good corporal—offer 40 nothing here.

NYM Pish!

PISTOL Pish for thee, Iceland dog;^o thou prick-eared cur of Iceland!

HOSTESS Good Corporal Nym, show thy valor, and 45
 put up your sword.^o

NYM Will you shog off?^o I would have you solus.^o

PISTOL
 “Solus,” egregious^o dog? O viper vile!
 The “solus” in thy most marvelous face!
 The “solus” in thy teeth, and in thy throat, 50
 And in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy maw,^o perdy!^o
 And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth!
 I do retort the “solus” in thy bowels;
 For I can take,^o and Pistol's cock is up,^o
 And flashing fire will follow. 55

16 model form 19 kind and natural loving and naturally affectionate 20 fault imperfection; France the King of France 21 hollow (1) false (2) empty 22 crowns coins 26 gilt i.e., golden crowns 28 grace ornament 31–32 digest . . .
distance dispose of the wrong done to fact in moving from place to place in the play's action 32 force cram full 38 charming . . . seas laying spells on the English Channel 39 pass passage 40 offend one stomach (1) displease anyone (2)
 make anyone seasick

II.i.2 Lieutenant Bardolph was a corporal in 2 Henry IV and Nym calls him so again at III.ii.3, below 3 Ancient ensign, standard bearer 6 serve be opportune 7 wink (1) shut my eyes (2) give a meaningful look 8 iron sword 9 will endure cold does not mind being naked 10 there's an end that's all there is to it 11 bestow treat you to 12 sworn brothers comrades pledged to share each other's fortunes
 (cf. III.ii.44–45)

15–16 I will . . . may cf. the proverb, “He that cannot do as he would must do as he may” 16 rest what I stand to win or lose (the stakes in a game of primero, the loss of which brings about the end of the game); rendezvous last resort 20 troth-plight betrothed (more binding than a modern engagement) 24–25 patience . . . plod patience is wear-some, yet it achieves its purpose in the end 35 honestly (1) decently (2) chastely (“prick” of the same line sustains the bawdy allusion) 43 Iceland dog white sharp-eared dog, so shaggy that neither its face nor body can be seen (a favorite lapdog) 45–46 show . . . sword unintentionally apposite, for Nym had so little valor that he could not fight 47 shog off move off (slang); solus alone (Pistol takes it to mean single, i.e., unmarried; or, ignorant of Latin, some great insult) 48 egregious outsized 51 maw stomach; perdy by God 54 take (1) cause harm to befall (by his elaborate exorcism or curse) (2) strike (3) take fire; cock is up is cocked for firing (punning on his name)

NYM I am not Barbason;° you cannot conjure° me;
I have an humor to knock you indifferently° well. If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier,° as I may, in fair terms.° If you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little in good terms,° as 60
I may, and that's the humor° of it.

PISTOL

O braggard vile, and damnèd furious wight,°
The grave doth gape,° and doting° death is near;
Therefore exhale!°

BARDOLPH Hear me, hear me what I say! He that 65 strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilts,° as I am a soldier.

[Draws.]

PISTOL

An oath of mickle° might, and fury shall abate.

[PISTOL and NYM sheathe their swords.]

Give me thy fist, thy forefoot° to me give.

Thy spirits are most tall.°

NYM I will cut thy throat one time or other in fair terms, that is the humor of it. 70

PISTOL

Couple a gorge!°

That is the word. I thee defy° again.

O hound of Crete,° think'st thou my spouse to get? 75

No; to the spital° go,

And from the powd'ring tub° of infamy

Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cressid's kind,°

Doll Tearsheet,° she by name, and her espouse.

I have, and I will hold, the quondam° Quickly 80

For the only she;° ar d—pauca,° there's enough.

Go to!

Enter the BOY.

BOY Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master°— and your hostess. He is very sick and would to bed.
Good Bardolph, put thy face° between his sheets, 85 and do the office of a warming pan. Faith, he's very ill.

BARDOLPH Away, you rogue!

HOSTESS By my troth, he'll yield the crow a pudding°

56 Barbason name of a fiend; conjure exorcise 57 indifferently fairly 57-59 If . . . rapier a pistol was said to be
"foul" after firing, and was normally cleaned with a ramrod or scouring rod 59 in fair terms fairly (a fashionable cliché) 60 in good terms on a good footing (another fashionable cliché) 61 humor fancy, inclination (yet another cliché) 62 wight person 63 gape (1) open (2) greedily desire; doting loving, fond 64 exhale draw forth 66 run . . .
hilts drive the whole sword blade into him 68 mickle great (already, in Shakespeare's day, archaistic) 69 forefoot paw 70 tall courageous 73 Couple a gorge cut the throat (a comic version of the French couper la gorge, appropriate to the coming campaign) 74 defy challenge 75 hound of Crete another shaggy dog; cf. note to line 43 76 spital hospital 77 powd'ring tub pickling vat (frequently applied to the sweating tub used for curing venereal disease) 78 lazar . . .
kind leprous whore (a stock phrase; a kite is a bird of prey)
79 Doll Tearsheet cf. 2 Henry IV, II.ii.165-67 and V.iv
80 quondam former 81 only she one woman in the world;
pauca few words (Latin pauca verba) 83 my master Falstaff
(the boy is the page given to Falstaff by Prince Hal, 2 Henry IV, I.ii) 85 thy face Bardolph's was red, like fire 88 he'll . . . pudding i.e., the boy will make food (pudding = stuffed intestines) for crows on the gallows (proverbial)

one of these days. The king has killed his heart.° Good husband, come home presently.° Exit. 90

BARDOLPH Come, shall I make you two friends? We must to France together: why the devil should we keep knives to cut one another's throats?

PISTOL

Let floods o'erswell, and fiends for food howl on!°

NYM You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you 95 at betting?

PISTOL

Base is the slave that pays.°

NYM That now I will have; that's the humor of it.

PISTOL

As manhood shall compound.° Push° home.

[They] draw.

BARDOLPH By this sword, he that makes the first 100 thrust, I'll kill him! By this sword, I will.

[Draws.]

PISTOL

"Sword" is an oath, and oaths must have their course.

[Sheathes his sword.]

BARDOLPH Corporal Nym, and° thou wilt be friends, be friends; and thou wilt not, why then be enemies with me too. Prithee put up.° 105

NYM I shall have my eight shillings I won of you at betting?

PISTOL

A noble° shalt thou have, and present° pay;

And liquor likewise will I give to thee,

And friendship shall combine, and brotherhood. 110

I'll live by Nym, and Nym shall live by me.

Is not this just? For I shall sutler° be

Unto the camp, and profits will accrue.

Give me thy hand.

[NYM sheathes his sword.]

NYM I shall have my noble? 115

PISTOL

In cash, most justly paid.

NYM Well then, that's the humor of't.

Enter HOSTESS.

HOSTESS As ever you come of women, come in quickly to Sir John. Ah, poor heart! he is so shaken of a burning quotidian tertian° that it is most lament- 120 able to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

NYM The king hath run bad humors° on the knight;
that's the even° of it.

89 king . . . heart by rejecting Falstaff; cf. 2 Henry IV,
V.v.47-72 90 presently immediately 94 Let . . . on
Let riot thrive and the devils be deprived of their prey 97
Base . . . pays a corruption of the proverb, "The poor man always pays" 99 manhood shall compound valor decides;
Push thrust (of a sword) 103 and if 105 put up sheathe 108 noble coin worth six shillings and eight pence; present immediate 112 sutler seller of provisions to a camp or garrison 120 quotidian tertian two kinds of intermittent fevers, the first recurring daily, the second every third day (a nonsensical phrase) 122 run bad humors vented his ill humor 123 even truth

PISTOL

Nym, thou hast spoke the right;
His heart is fractured and corroborate.^o

NYM The king is a good king, but it must be as it may:
he passes some humors, and careers.^o

PISTOL

Let us condole the knight; for, lambkins, we will live.
[Exeunt.]

[Scene II. Southampton.]

Enter EXETER, BEDFORD, and WESTMORELAND.

BEDFORD

'Fore God, his grace is bold to trust these traitors.

EXETER

They shall be apprehended by and by.^o

WESTMORELAND

How smooth and even^o they do bear themselves,
As if allegiance in their bosoms sat,
Crowned with faith and constant loyalty!

BEDFORD

The king hath note^o of all that they intend,
By interception which they dream not of.

EXETER

Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow,^o
Whom he hath dulled and cloyed^o with gracious favors—

That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell
His sovereign's life to death and treachery!

Sound trumpets. Enter the KING, SCROOP, CAMBRIDGE, and GREY, [LORDS, and ATTENDANTS].

KING

Now sits the wind fair, and we will aboard.
My Lord of Cambridge, and my kind Lord of Masham,
And you, my gentle knight, give me your thoughts:
Think you not that the pow'rs we bear with us
Will cut their passage through the force of France,
Doing the execution and the act
For which we have in head^o assembled them?

SCROOP

No doubt, my liege, if each man do his best.

KING

I doubt not that, since we are well persuaded
We carry not a heart with us from hence
That grows^o not in a fair consent^o with ours,
Nor leave not one behind that doth not wish
Success and conquest to attend on us.

CAMBRIDGE

Never was monarch better feared and loved
Than is your majesty. There's not, I think, a subject
That sits in heart-grief and uneasiness
Under the sweet shade^o of your government.

GREY

True. Those that were your father's enemies

125 fractured and corroborate broken and joined together (?)
127 passes . . . careers indulges some whims and liveliness
II.ii.2 apprehended by and by arrested soon 3 even unruffled 6 note knowledge 8 bedfellow Scroop 9 dulled and cloyed bored and overindulged 18 in head as an organized force 22 grows lives; consent agreement 28 shade protection

Have steeped their galls^o in honey, and do serve you 30
With hearts create^o of duty, and of zeal.

125 KING

We therefore have great cause of thankfulness,
And shall forget the office^o of our hand
Sooner than quittance^o of desert and merit
According to the weight and worthiness. 35

SCROOP

So service shall with steelèd sinews toil,
And labor shall refresh itself with hope,
To do your grace incessant services.

KING

We judge no less. Uncle of Exeter,
Enlarge^o the man committed yesterday 40
That railed against our person. We consider
It was excess of wine that set him on,
And on his more advice,^o we pardon him.

SCROOP

That's mercy, but too much security:^o
Let him be punished, sovereign, lest example 45
Breed (by his sufferance^o) more of such a kind.

KING

O, let us yet^o be merciful!

CAMBRIDGE

So may your highness, and yet punish too.

GREY

Sir,
You show great mercy if you give him life 50
After the taste^o of much correction.

KING

Alas, your too much love and care of me
Are heavy orisons^o 'gainst this poor wretch!
If little faults proceeding on distemper^o
Shall not be winked^o at, how shall we stretch^o our eye 55
When capital^o crimes, chewed, swallowed, and digested,
Appear before us? We'll yet enlarge that man,
Though Cambridge, Scroop, and Grey, in their dear^o care
And tender preservation of our person,
Would have him punished. And now to our French causes.^o 60

Who are the late^o commissioners?

CAMBRIDGE

I one, my lord.
Your highness bade me ask for it^o today. 20

SCROOP

So did you me, my liege.

GREY

And I, my royal sovereign. 65

KING

Then, Richard Earl of Cambridge, there is yours;
There yours, Lord Scroop of Masham; and, sir knight,
Grey of Northumberland, this same is yours:

30 galls bitterness 31 create created 33 office proper function 34 quittance requital 40 Enlarge set at liberty 43 on . . . advice on maturer reflection 44 security want of caution 46 by his sufferance by not checking him 47 yet now as always 51 taste experience 53 heavy orisons weighty pleas 54 proceeding on distemper i.e., committed when drunk 55 winked connived; stretch open wide 56 capital punishable by death 58 dear (1) deeply felt (2) dire 60 causes affairs 61 late recently appointed 63 it
the written commission

Read them, and know I know your worthiness.
My Lord of Westmoreland, and uncle Exeter, 70
We will aboard tonight.—Why, how now, gentlemen?

What see you in those papers that you lose
So much complexion?—Look ye, how they change!
Their cheeks are paper.—Why, what read you there
That have so cowarded and chased your blood 75
Out of appearance?

CAMBRIDGE I do confess my fault,
And do submit me to your highness' mercy.

GREY, SCROOP
To which we all appeal.

KING
The mercy that was quick in us but late,
By your own counsel is suppressed and killed. 80
You must not dare (for shame) to talk of mercy,
For your own reasons turn into your bosoms,
As dogs upon their masters, worrying you.
See you, my princes and my noble peers,
These English monsters! My Lord of Cambridge
here— 85

You know how apt our love was to accord°
To furnish him with all appertinents
Belonging to his honor; and this man
Hath, for a few light° crowns, lightly° conspired
And sworn unto the practices° of France 90
To kill us here in Hampton; to the which
This knight, no less for bounty bound to us
Than Cambridge is, hath likewise sworn. But O,
What shall I say to thee, Lord Scroop, thou cruel,
Ingrateful, savage, and inhuman creature? 95
Thou that didst bear the key of all my counsels,
That knew'st the very bottom of my soul,
That (almost) mightst have coined me into gold,
Wouldst thou have practiced on me for thy use?°

May it be possible that foreign hire 100
Could out of thee extract one spark of evil
That might annoy my finger? 'Tis so strange
That, though the truth of it stands off as gross°
As black and white, my eye will scarcely see it.
Treason and murder ever kept together, 105
As two yoke-devils° sworn to either's purpose,
Working so grossly in a natural cause
That admiration did not hoop at them;°
But thou ('gainst all proportion°) didst bring in Wonder to wait on treason and on murder; 110
And whatsoever cunning fiend it was
That wrought upon thee so preposterously°
Hath got the voice° in hell for excellence;
And other devils that suggest° by treasons
Do botch and bungle up damnation 115
With patches, colors, and with forms being fetched
From glist'ring semblances of piety;°

73 complexion color 76 appearance sight 86 accord agree 89 light trivial; lightly readily 90 practices intrigues 99 practiced . . . use plotted against me for your own profit 103 off as gross out as plain 106 yoke-devils fellow-devils 107–08 so . . . them so obviously in a matter natural to them that no one cried out in wonder 109 proportion propriety 112 preposterously unnaturally 113 voice vote 114 suggest tempt 115–17 Do . . . piety disguise the fact of damnation with folly, false pretexts, and behavior borrowed from bright outward manifestations of piety

But he that tempered° thee bade thee stand up,°
Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,
Unless to dub° thee with the name of traitor. 120
If that same demon that hath gulled thee thus
Should with his lion gait° walk the whole world,
He might return to vasty Tartar° back
And tell the legions,° "I can never win
A soul so easy as that Englishman's." 125

O, how hast thou with jealousy infected°
The sweetness of affiance!° Show° men dutiful?
Why, so didst thou. Seem they grave and learned?
Why, so didst thou. Come they of noble family?
Why, so didst thou. Seem they religious? 130
Why, so didst thou. Or are they spare in diet,
Free from gross passion, or of mirth or anger,
Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood,°
Garnished and decked in modest complement,°
Not working with the eye without the ear,° 135
And but in purged judgment trusting neither?
Such and so finely bolted° didst thou seem;
And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot
To mark the full-fraught° man and best indued°
With some suspicion. I will weep for thee; 140
For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like
Another fall of man. Their faults are open.°
Arrest them to the answer° of the law;
And God acquit° them of their practices!

EXETER I arrest thee of high treason by the name of 145
Richard Earl of Cambridge.

I arrest thee of high treason by the name of Henry
Lord Scroop of Masham.

I arrest thee of high treason by the name of Thomas
Grey, knight, of Northumberland. 150

SCROOP
Our purposes God justly hath discovered,
And I repent my fault more than my death—
Which I beseech your highness to forgive,
Although my body pay the price of it.

CAMBRIDGE
For me, the gold of France did not seduce, 155
Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended.
But God be thanked for prevention,°
Which I in sufferance° heartily will rejoice,° Beseeching God, and you, to pardon me. 160

GREY
Never did faithful subject more rejoice
At the discovery of most dangerous treason
Than I do at this hour joy o'er myself,
Prevented from a damnèd enterprise.
My fault, but not my body, pardon, sovereign. 165

118 tempered worked upon; stand up make a stand straightforwardly 120 dub invest (with a title) 122 lion gait cf. I Peter 5:8, "Your adversary, the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour" 123 Tartar Tartarus, hell 124 legions i.e., of devils 126 jealousy infected suspicion tainted 127 affiance confidence; Show seem 133 swerving . . . blood erring after the flesh 134 modest complement unostentatious demeanor 135 Not . . . ear i.e., listening as well as seeing 137 bolted sifted (as flour) 139 full-fraught completely gifted; indued endowed 142 open patent 143 answer punishment 144 acquit requite 158 prevention four syllables 159 sufferance suffering the penalty; rejoice i.e., rejoice at

KING

God quit° you in His mercy! Hear your sentence.
 You have conspired against our royal person,
 Joined with an enemy proclaimed, and from his coffers
 Received the golden earnest° of our death;
 Wherein you would have sold your king to slaughter, 170
 His princes and his peers to servitude,
 His subjects to oppression and contempt,
 And his whole kingdom into desolation.
 Touching our person, seek we no revenge,
 But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,°
 Whose ruin you have sought, that to her laws
 We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence (Poor miserable wretches) to your death;
 The taste° whereof God of His mercy give
 You patience to endure, and true repentance
 Of all your dear° offenses! Bear them hence.

Exeunt [CAMBRIDGE, SCROOP, and GREY, guarded].

Now, lords, for France; the enterprise whereof
 Shall be to you as us, like° glorious.

We doubt not of a fair and lucky war,
 Since God so graciously hath brought to light
 This dangerous treason, lurking in our way
 To hinder our beginnings. We doubt not now
 But every rub° is smoothèd on our way.

Then, forth, dear countrymen. Let us deliver
 Our puissance° into the hand of God,
 Putting it straight in expedition.°

Cheerly to sea; the signs of war advance:°

No king of England, if not King of France!

Flourish. [Exeunt.]

[Scene III. London. Before a tavern.]

Enter PISTOL, NYM, BARDOLPH, BOY, and HOSTESS.

HOSTESS Prithee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.°

PISTOL

No; for my manly heart doth earn.°
 Bardolph, be blithe; Nym, rouse thy vaunting veins;°
 Boy, bristle thy courage up; for Falstaff he is dead, 5
 And we must earn therefore.

BARDOLPH Would I were with him, wheresome'er
 he is, either in heaven or in hell!

HOSTESS Nay sure, he's not in hell! He's in Arthur's bosom,° if ever man went to Arthur's bosom. 'A° 10 made a finer end,° and went away and° it had been any christom child.° 'A parted ev'n just between twelve and one, ev'n at the turning o' th' tide.° For after I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end, I knew there 15 was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen,°

166 quit absolve 169 golden earnest advance payment
 175 tender care for 179 taste experience 181 dear dire 183 like equally 188 rub obstacle 190 puissance armed force 191 expedition motion 192 signs . . . advance raise up the banners

II.iii.2 Staines on the road to Southampton 3 earn grieve
 4 vaunting veins rising spirits 9-10 Arthur's bosom a mistake for Abraham's bosom 10 'A he 11 finer end i.e., than going to hell; and as if 12 christom child infant in christening robe (the proper form was "chrisom"), innocent babe 13 at . . . tide according to popular belief, persons near the sea died at the turn of the tide 14-16 fumble . . . pen traditionally accepted signs of the imminence of death and 'a babbled° of green fields. "How now, Sir John?"

 quoth I. "What, man? Be o' good cheer." So 'a cried out, "God, God, God!" three or four times. Now I, to comfort him, bid him 'a should not think of God; 20
 I hoped there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet. So 'a bade me lay more clothes on his feet. I put my hand into the bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone. Then I felt to his knees, and so upward, and upward, and all was as cold 25
 as any stone.

175 NYM They say he cried out of° sack.

HOSTESS Ah, that 'a did.

BARDOLPH And of women.

HOSTESS Nay, that 'a did not. 30

BOY Yes, that 'a did, and said they were devils
 180 incarnate.°

HOSTESS 'A could never abide carnation;° 'twas a color he never liked.

BOY 'A said once, the devil would have him about 35 women.

185 HOSTESS 'A did in some sort, indeed, handle° women;
 but then he was rheumatic,° and talked of the Whore of Babylon.°

BOY Do you not remember 'a saw a flea stick upon 40
 Bardolph's nose, and 'a said it was a black soul burning in hell?

190 BARDOLPH Well, the fuel° is gone that maintained that fire: that's all the riches I got in his service.

NYM Shall we shog?° The king will be gone from 45 Southampton.

PISTOL

Come, let's away. My love, give me thy lips.

Look to my chattels and my movables.

Let senses rule. The word is "Pitch and pay."°

Trust none; 50

For oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer-cakes,°

And Hold-fast is the only dog,° my duck.

Therefore Caveto° be thy counselor.

Go, clear thy crystals.° Yokefellows in arms,

Let us to France, like horse-leeches, my boys, 55

To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck!

BOY And that's but unwholesome food, they say.

17 'a babbled the Folio has "a Table," which seems meaningless to most readers. Lewis Theobald's conjecture, in 1726, that a compositor misread the copy's "a babld" has been widely accepted. One might argue that the compositor misread "a talkd," but "babbled" is more appropriate than "talked" to the childishness—referred to earlier in the speech—of an old man's last moments. Recently the Folio reading has been defended, though not convincingly. One student, for example, takes "Table" in the sense of "picture" or "tableau," and paraphrases thus: Falstaff's nose was sharp as the pointed stakes of a pinfold, in a picture of green fields. Various interpretations are usefully surveyed in E. G. Fogel, Shakespeare Quarterly, IX [1958], 485-92; but Theobald's conjecture seems better sense and better Shakespeare 27 cried out of complained loudly of 32 incarnate in human shape 33 carnation flesh color 37 handle speak of 38 rheumatic perhaps a mistake for lunatic; probably pronounced "rome-atic"; see next note 38-39 Whore of Babylon (1) the "scarlet woman" of Revelation 17:4-5 (2) the Church of Rome 43 fuel liquor provided by Falstaff 45 shog move off 49 Let . . . pay Keep your wits about you. The motto is "Cash down" 51 wafer-cakes i.e., easily broken 52 Hold-fast . . . dog
 cf. the proverb, "Brag is a good dog, but Hold-fast is a better" 53 Caveto take care 54 clear thy crystals wipe your eyes

PISTOL

Touch her soft mouth, and march.

BARDOLPH Farewell, hostess.

[Kisses her.]

NYM I cannot kiss, that is the humor of it; but adieu! 60

PISTOL

Let housewifery° appear; keep close,° I thee command.

HOSTESS Farewell! Adieu! Exeunt.

[Scene IV. France. The French king's palace.]

Flourish. Enter the French KING, the DAUPHIN, the Dukes of BERRI and BRETAGNE, [the CONSTABLE, and others].

KING

Thus comes the English with full power upon us,
And more than carefully it us concerns
To answer royally in our defenses.
Therefore the Dukes of Berri and of Bretagne,
Of Brabant and of Orleans, shall make forth, 5
And you, Prince Dauphin, with all swift dispatch
To line° and new repair our towns of war
With men of courage, and with means defendant;
For England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf.° 10
It fits us then to be as provident
As fear may teach us out of late examples°
Left by the fatal and neglected° English
Upon our fields.

DAUPHIN

My most redoubted father,
It is most meet we arm us 'gainst the foe; 15
For peace itself should not so dull a kingdom
(Though war nor no known quarrel were in question)
But that defenses, musters, preparations
Should be maintained, assembled, and collected,°
As were a war in expectation. 20
Therefore I say, 'tis meet we all go forth
To view the sick and feeble parts of France;
And let us do it with no show of fear—
No, with no more than if we heard that England
Were busied with a Whitsun morris dance;° 25
For, my good liege, she is so idly kinged,
Her scepter so fantastically borne,°
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous° youth,
That fear attends° her not.

CONSTABLE

O peace, Prince Dauphin!
You are too much mistaken in this king. 30
Question your grace the late ambassadors,
With what great state he heard their embassy,
How well supplied with noble counselors,
How modest in exception,° and withal
How terrible in constant resolution; 35
And you shall find his vanities forespent°

61 housewifery good housekeeping; keep close stay at home
II.iv.7 line fortify 10 gulf whirlpool 12 late examples
i.e., battles of Crécy (1346) and Poitiers (1356) 13 fatal and neglected fatally underestimated 19 maintained . . .
collected these verbs refer singly to the nouns of the previous line, in order 25 Whitsun morris dance folk dance celebrating the coming of summer 27 Her . . . borne her royal powers so freakishly exercised 28 humorous capricious 29 attends accompanies 34 exception expressing disapproval
36 forespent already used up

Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus,° Covering discretion with a coat of folly;
As gardeners do with ordure hide those roots
That shall first spring and be most delicate. 40

DAUPHIN

Well, 'tis not so, my Lord High Constable!
But though we think it so, it is no matter;
In cases of defense, 'tis best to weigh
The enemy more mighty than he seems;
So the proportions of defense are filled, 45
Which of a weak and niggardly projection°
Doth, like a miser, spoil his coat with scanting°
A little cloth.

KING

Think we King Harry strong;
And, princes, look you strongly arm to meet him.
The kindred of him hath been fleshed° upon us; 50
And he is bred out of that bloody strain°
That haunted° us in our familiar paths;
Witness our too much memorable shame
When Crécy battle fatally was struck,
And all our princes captived, by the hand 55
Of that black name, Edward, Black Prince of Wales;
Whiles that his mountain sire°—on mountain standing,
Up in the air, crowned with the golden sun—
Saw his heroical seed,° and smiled to see him
Mangle the work of nature, and deface 60
The patterns° that by God and by French fathers
Had twenty years been made. This is a stem
Of that victorious stock; and let us fear
The native mightiness and fate° of him.

Enter a MESSENGER.

MESSENGER

Ambassadors from Harry, King of England, 65
Do crave admittance to your majesty.

KING

We'll give them present° audience. Go, and bring them. [Exeunt MESSENGER and certain LORDS.]
You see this chase is hotly followed, friends.

DAUPHIN

Turn head,° and stop pursuit; for coward dogs
Most spend their mouths° when what they seem to 70 threaten
Runs far before them. Good my sovereign,
Take up the English short, and let them know
Of what a monarchy you are the head.
Self-love,° my liege, is not so vile a sin
As self-neglecting.

Enter [LORDS, with] EXETER [and TRAIN].

KING

From our brother of England? 75

EXETER

From him, and thus he greets your majesty:

37 Brutus Lucius Junius Brutus feigned stupidity in order to escape repressive action when planning to free Rome from the Tarquin tyranny 45–46 So . . . projection in this way the defending forces are fully mustered which if on a weak and sparing scheme 47 scanting stinting 50 fleshed (1) encouraged by a foretaste of success (2) initiated to bloodshed 51 strain stock 52 haunted pursued 57 mountain sire father of more than human proportions 59 seed issue, son 61 patterns examples of Frenchmen 64 fate what he is destined to achieve 67 present immediate 69 Turn head stand at bay (like stags) 70 spend their mouths give cry 74 Self- love i.e., in praising oneself

He wills you, in the name of God Almighty,
That you divest yourself, and lay apart
The borrowed glories that by gift of heaven,
By law of nature and of nations, 'longs
To him and to his heirs—namely, the crown
And all wide-stretchèd honors that pertain
By custom, and the ordinance of times,^o
Unto the crown of France. That you may know
'Tis no sinister nor no awkward^o claim,
Picked from the wormholes^o of long-vanished days,
Nor from the dust of old oblivion raked,
He sends you this most memorable line,^o

[giving a paper]

In every branch truly demonstrative;
Willing you overlook^o this pedigree;
And when you find him evenly^o derived
From his most famed of famous ancestors,
Edward the Third, he bids you then resign
Your crown and kingdom, indirectly^o held
From him, the native^o and true challenger.

KING

Or else what follows?

EXETER

Bloody constraint; for if you hide the crown
Even in your hearts, there will he rake for it.
Therefore in fierce tempest is he coming,
In thunder and in earthquake, like a Jove;
That if requiring^o fail, he will compel;
And bids you, in the bowels of the Lord,^o
Deliver up the crown, and to take mercy
On the poor souls for whom this hungry war
Opens his vasty jaws; and on your head
Turning the widows' tears, the orphans' cries,
The dead men's blood, the pining maidens' groans,
For husbands, fathers, and betrothèd lovers
That shall be swallowed in this controversy.
This is his claim, his threat'ning, and my message;
Unless the dauphin be in presence here,
To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

KING

For us, we will consider of this further.
Tomorrow shall you bear our full intent
Back to our brother of England.

DAUPHIN

For the dauphin,
I stand here for him: what to him from England?

EXETER

Scorn and defiance, slight regard, contempt,
And anything that may not misbecome
The mighty sender, doth he prize you at.
Thus says my king: and if your father's highness
Do not, in grant of all demands at large,
Sweeten the bitter mock you sent his majesty,
He'll call you to so hot an answer of it
That caves and womby vaultages^o of France

83 ordinance of times established usage 85 no sinister
. . . awkward neither irregular nor illegitimate 86 Picked
. . . wormholes ingeniously derived from neglected (worm-eaten) books 88 memorable line noteworthy pedigree 90 Willing you overlook desiring you to peruse 91 evenly directly 94 indirectly wrongfully 95 native rightful 101 requiring demand 102 in . . . Lord a phrase found in Holinshed, and derived from Philippians 1:8 124 womby
vaultages hollow caverns

Shall chide your trespass, and return your mock
In second accent of his ordinance.^o 125

DAUPHIN

80 Say: if my father render fair return,
It is against my will; for I desire
Nothing but odds with England. To that end,
As matching to his youth and vanity, 130
I did present him with the Paris balls.^o

85 EXETER

He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it,
Were it the mistress^o court of mighty Europe;
And be assured, you'll find a difference,
As we his subjects have in wonder found, 135
Between the promise of his greener^o days
And these he masters now. Now he weighs^o time
Even to the utmost grain: that you shall read
In your own losses, if he stay in France.

KING

Tomorrow shall you know our mind at full. 140
Flourish.

95

EXETER

Dispatch us with all speed, lest that our king
Come here himself to question our delay;
For he is footed in this land already.

KING

You shall be soon dispatched, with fair conditions.
100 A night is but small breath and little pause 145
To answer matters of this consequence. Exeunt.

105

A C T [I I I]

Flourish. Enter CHORUS.

Thus with imagined^o wing our swift scene flies,
In motion of no less celerity
Than that of thought. Suppose that you have seen
The well-appointed king at Hampton pier
Embark his royalty; and his brave^o fleet 5
With silken streamers the young Phoebus fanning.^o
Play with your fancies, and in them behold
Upon the hempen tackle shipboys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistle^o which doth order give
To sounds confused; behold the threaten sails, 10
Borne with th' invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms^o through the furrowed sea,
Breasting the lofty surge. O, do but think
You stand upon the rivage,^o and behold
120 A city on th' inconstant billows dancing; 15
For so appears this fleet majestic,
Holding due course to Harfleur. Follow, follow!
Grapple your minds to sternage of^o this navy,
And leave your England, as dead midnight, still,
Guarded with grandsires, babies, and old women, 20

126 second . . . ordinance echo of his cannon 131 Paris balls tennis balls 133 mistress chief 136 greener more inexperienced 137 weighs values
III.Cho.I imagined of imagination 5 brave splendid 6
young Phoebus fanning seen fluttering against the rising sun
9 whistle blown by the master of a ship 12 bottoms ships
14 rivage shore 18 to sternage of astern

Either past or not arrived to pith^o and puissance;
 For who is he whose chin is but enriched
 With one appearing hair that will not follow
 These culled and choice-drawn^o cavaliers to France?
 Work, work your thoughts, and therein see a siege: 25
 Behold the ordinance^o on their carriages,
 With fatal mouths gaping on girded^o Harfleur.
 Suppose th' ambassador from the French comes back;
 Tells Harry that the king doth offer him
 Katherine his daughter, and with her to dowry 30
 Some petty and unprofitable dukedoms.
 The offer likes not; and the nimble gunner
 With linstock^o now the devilish cannon touches,^o
Alarum, and chambers^o go off.

And down goes all before them. Still be kind,
 And eke out our performance with your mind. Exit. 35

[Scene I. France. Harfleur.]

Enter the KING, EXETER, BEDFORD, and GLOUCESTER. Alarum. [Enter SOLDIERS carrying] scaling ladders at Harfleur.

KING
 Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more;
 Or close the wall up with our English dead!
 In peace there's nothing so becomes a man
 As modest stillness^o and humility;
 But when the blast of war blows in our ears, 5
 Then imitate the action of the tiger:
 Stiffen the sinews, conjure up the blood,
 Disguise fair nature with hard-favored rage;
 Then lend the eye a terrible aspect:
 Let it pry through the portage^o of the head 10
 Like the brass cannon; let the brow o'erwhelm it
 As fearfully as doth a gallèd^o rock
 O'erhang and jutty his confounded^o base,
 Swilled^o with the wild and wasteful ocean.
 Now set the teeth, and stretch the nostril wide, 15
 Hold hard the breath, and bend up^o every spirit
 To his full height! On, on, you noble English,
 Whose blood is fet^o from fathers of war-proof;^o
 Fathers that like so many Alexanders^o
 Have in these parts from morn till even fought 20
 And sheathed their swords for lack of argument.^o
 Dishonor^o not your mothers; now attest
 That those whom you called fathers did beget you!
 Be copy now to men of grosser blood
 And teach them how to war! And you, good yeomen, 25
 Whose limbs were made in England, show us here
 The mettle of your pasture.^o Let us swear
 That you are worth your breeding; which I doubt not,

21 pith strength 24 choice-drawn chosen with special care
 26 ordinance ordnance, cannon 27 girded besieged 33 linstock staff holding lighted match; touches touches off, fires 33 s.d. chambers small pieces of ordnance (usually for ceremonial purposes)

III.i.4 stillness silence, staidness (?) 10 portage portholes
 12 gallèd sea-beaten 13 confounded demolished 14
Swilled greedily swallowed 16 bend up strain 18 fet fetched; war-proof proved in war 19 Alexanders i.e., sighing for more worlds to conquer 21 argument i.e., opponents 22 Dishonor i.e., by throwing doubts on your paternity 27 mettle . . . pasture fine quality of your rearing

For there is none of you so mean and base
 That hath not noble luster in your eyes. 30
 I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,^o
 Straining upon the start. The game's afoot!
 Follow your spirit; and upon this charge,^o
 Cry, "God for Harry, England, and Saint George!"
[Exeunt.] Alarum, and chambers go off.

[Scene II. Harfleur.]

Enter NYM, BARDOLPH, PISTOL, and BOY.

BARDOLPH On, on, on, on, on, to the breach, to the breach!

NYM Pray thee, corporal, stay; the knocks are too hot; and, for mine own part, I have not a case^o of lives.
 The humor of it is too hot; that is the very plain-song^o 5
 of it.

PISTOL

The plain-song is most just; for humors do abound.
 Knocks go and come; God's vassals drop and die;
 And sword and shield

In bloody field 10

Doth win immortal fame.

BOY Would I were in an alehouse in London! I would give all my fame for a pot of ale, and safety.

PISTOL

And I:

If wishes would prevail with me, 15

My purpose should not fail with me,

But thither would I hie.

BOY As duly, but not as truly,^o
 As bird doth sing on bough.

Enter FLUELLEN.

FLUELLEN Up to the breach, you dogs! Avaunt, you 20
 cullions!^o

PISTOL

Be merciful, great duke, to men of mold!^o

Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage,

Abate thy rage, great duke!

Good bawcock, bate thy rage! Use lenity, sweet chuck!^o 25

NYM These be good^o humors. Your honor wins bad humors.^o Exit, [with all but BOY].

BOY As young as I am, I have observed these three swashers. I am boy to them all three; but all they three, 30 though they would serve me, could not be man to me; for indeed three such antics^o do not amount to a man. For Bardolph, he is white-livered^o and red-faced; by the means whereof 'a faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol, he hath a killing tongue and a quiet sword; by the means whereof 'a breaks words,^o and 35 keeps whole weapons. For Nym, he hath heard that men of few words are the best men, and therefore he

31 slips leashes 33 upon this charge as you charge

III.ii.4 case set 5 plain-song simple air without variations, i.e., simple truth 18 truly (1) honorably (2) in tune 21
cullions base fellows 22 mold clay 25 bawcock . . . chuck ingratiating familiarities 26 good ironical 26-27 Your . . .
humors Valor is dangerous (so he runs off) 31 antics buffoons 32 white-livered cowardly 35 breaks words (1) breaks promises (2) exchanges words

scorns to say his prayers, lest 'a should be thought a coward; but his few bad words are matched with as few good deeds, for 'a never broke any man's head 40 but his own, and that was against a post when he was drunk. They will steal anything, and call it purchase.^o Bardolph stole a lute-case, bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three halfpence. Nym and Bardolph are sworn brothers in filching; and in Calais they stole a 45 fire-shovel. I knew by that piece of service the men would carry coals.^o They would have me as familiar with men's pockets as their gloves or their handkerchers; which makes much against my manhood, if I should take from another's pocket to put into mine; 50 for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs.^o I must leave them, and seek some better service. Their villainy goes against my weak stomach,^o and therefore I must cast it up.^o Exit.

Enter GOWER [and FLUELLEN].

GOWER Captain Fluellen, you must come presently^o 55 to the mines; the Duke of Gloucester would speak with you.

FLUELLEN To the mines? Tell you the duke, it is not so good to come to the mines; for look you, the mines is not according to the disciplines of the war.^o The 60 concavities of it is not sufficient; for look you, th' athversary, you may discuss^o unto the duke, look you, is digt himself four yard under the countermines.^o By Cheshu, I think 'a will plow^o up all, if there is not better directions. 65

GOWER The Duke of Gloucester, to whom the order of the siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman, a very valiant gentleman, i faith.

FLUELLEN It is Captain Macmorris, is it not?

GOWER I think it be. 70

FLUELLEN By Cheshu, he is an ass, as in the world! I will verify as much in his beard.^o He has no more directions in the true disciplines of the wars, look you, of the Roman disciplines, than is a puppy-dog.

Enter MACMORRIS and Captain JAMY.

GOWER Here 'a comes, and the Scots captain, Captain 75 Jamy, with him.

FLUELLEN Captain Jamy is a marvelous falorous gentleman, that is certain, and of great expedition^o and knowledge in th' aunchient wars, upon my particular^o knowledge of his directions. By Cheshu, he will main- 80 tain his argument as well as any military man in the world in the disciplines of the pristine wars of the Romans.

JAMY I say gud day, Captain Fluellen.

FLUELLEN God-den to your worship, good Captain 85 James.

GOWER How now, Captain Macmorris? Have you quit the mines? Have the pioners^o given o'er?

MACMORRIS By Chrish, law, tish ill done! The work ish give over, the trompet sound the retreat. By my 90 hand I swear, and my father's soul, the work ish ill done! It ish give over. I would have blowed up the town, so Chrish save me, law, in an hour. O, tish ill done, tish ill done! By my hand, tish ill done!

FLUELLEN Captain Macmorris, I beseech you now, 95 will you voutsafe me, look you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the war, the Roman wars?—in the way of argument, look you, and friendly communication; partly to satisfy my opinion, and partly for the satis- 100 faction, look you, of my mind—as touching the direction of the military discipline, that is the point.

JAMY It sall be vary gud, gud feith, gud captens bath, and I sall quit^o you with gud leve, as I may pick 105 occasion. That sall I, mary.^o

MACMORRIS It is no time to discourse, so Chrish save me! The day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukes; it is no time to discourse; the town is beseeched,^o and the trumpet call us to the breach, and we talk, and, be Chrish, do nothing; 'tis 110 shame for us all, so God sa' me, 'tis shame to stand still, it is shame, by my hand! And there is throats to be cut, and works to be done, and there ish nothing done, so Chrish sa' me, law!

JAMY By the mess, ere theise eyes of mine take themselves to slomber, I'll do gud service, or I'll lig i' th' grund for it! Ay or go to death! And I'll pay't as valorously as I may, that sall I suerly do, that is the breff and the long. Mary, I wad full fain heard some question 'tween you tway. 115 120

FLUELLEN Captain Macmorris, I think, look you, under your correction, there is not many of your nation—

MACMORRIS Of my nation? What ish my nation? Ish a villain, and a basterd, and a knave, and a rascal. 125 What ish my nation? Who talks of my nation?

FLUELLEN Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, Captain Macmorris, peradventure I shall think you do not use me with that affability as in discretion you ought to use me, look you, being as 130 good a man as yourself, both in the disciplines of war, and in the derivation of my birth, and in other particularities.

MACMORRIS I do not know you so good a man as myself; so Chrish save me, I will cut off your head! 135

GOWER Gentlemen both, you will^o mistake each other.

JAMY Ah, that's a foul fault!

A parley [sounded].

GOWER The town sounds a parley.

FLUELLEN Captain Macmorris when there is more 140 better opportunity to be required,^o look you, I will be so bold as to tell you I know the disciplines of war; and there is an end. Exit [with others].

88 pioners pioneers, miners 104 quit answer 105 mary Jamy's pronunciation of "marry," a mild oath, from "By the Virgin Mary" 109 beseeched for besieged 136 will are determined to 141 to be required serves

42 purchase booty (thieves' slang) 47 carry coals (1) do dirty work (2) submit to insult 51 pocketing . . . wrongs (1) receiving stolen goods (2) submitting to insult 52-53 goes . . . stomach (1) is against my disposition (2) makes me sick 53-54 cast it up (1) run from their service (2) be sick 55 presently immediately 60 disciplines . . . war military experience 62 discuss declare 63 four . . . countermines countermines four yards under the mines 64 plow the first of Fluellen's dialect substitutions of p for b 72 verify . . . beard prove it to his face 78 expedition readiness in disputation (rhetorical term) 79 particular personal

[Scene III. Before the gates of Harfleur.]

Enter the KING [Henry] and all his TRAIN before the gates.

KING

How yet resolves the governor of the town?
This is the latest parle we will admit:
Therefore to our best mercy give yourselves,
Or, like to men proud of destruction,^o
Defy us to our worst; for, as I am a soldier,
A name that in my thoughts becomes me best,
If I begin the batt'ry once again,
I will not leave the half-achieved Harfleur
Till in her ashes she lie buried.
The gates of mercy shall be all shut up,
And the fleshed^o soldier, rough and hard of heart,
In liberty of bloody hand shall range
With conscience wide as hell, mowing like grass
Your fresh fair virgins and your flow'ring infants.
What is it then to me if impious war,
Arrayed in flames like to the prince of fiends,
Do with his smirched complexion all fell^o feats Enlinked to waste and desolation?
What is't to me, when you yourselves are cause,
If your pure maidens fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing violation?
What rein can hold licentious wickedness
When down the hill he holds his fierce career?^o
We may as bootless spend our vain command
Upon th' enraged soldiers in their spoil^o
As send precepts^o to the leviathan^o
To come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harfleur,
Take pity of your town and of your people
Whiles yet my soldiers are in my command,
Whiles yet the cool and temperate wind of grace
O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of heady murder, spoil, and villainy.
If not—why, in a moment look to see
The blind^o and bloody soldier with foul hand
Defile the locks of your shrill-shrieking daughters;
Your fathers taken by the silver beards,
And their most reverend heads dashed to the walls;
Your naked infants spitted upon pikes,
Whiles the mad mothers with their howls confused
Do break the clouds, as did the wives of Jewry
At Herod's bloody-hunting slaughtermen.
What say you? Will you yield, and this avoid?
Or, guilty in defense,^o be thus destroyed?

Enter GOVERNOR [on the wall].

GOVERNOR

Our expectation hath this day an end;
The dauphin, whom of succors we entreated,
Returns us that his powers are yet not ready
To raise so great a siege. Therefore, great king,
We yield our town and lives to thy soft mercy.
Enter our gates, dispose of us and ours,
For we no longer are defensible.^o

III.iii.4 proud of destruction glorying in death II fleshed initiated in slaughter 17 fell savage 23 career gallop 25 spoil plundering 26 precepts written instructions; leviathan legendary aquatic animal of enormous size (common in Hebrew poetry) 34 blind reckless 43 guilty in defense to blame for holding out 50 defensible able to make a defense

KING

Open your gates. Come, uncle Exeter,
Go you and enter Harfleur; there remain
And fortify it strongly 'gainst the French.
Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle,
The winter coming on, and sickness growing 55
Upon our soldiers, we will retire to Calais.
Tonight in Harfleur will we be your guest;
Tomorrow for the march are we address.^o
Flourish, and enter the town.

[Scene IV. Rouen. A room in the palace.]

10

Enter KATHERINE and [ALICE,] an old gentlewoman.

KATHERINE Alice, tu as été en Angleterre, et tu parles bien le langage.

ALICE Un peu, madame.

15

KATHERINE Je te prie m'enseigne; il faut que j'apprenne à parler. Comment appelez-vous la main 5 en anglais?

ALICE La main? Elle est appelée de hand.

KATHERINE De hand. Et les doigts?

20

ALICE Les doigts? Ma foi, j'oublie les doigts; mais je me souviendrai. Les doigts? Je pense qu'ils sont 10 appelés de fingres; oui, de fingres.

KATHERINE La main, de hand; les doigts, le fingres. Je pense que je suis le bon écolier; j'ai gagné deux mots d'anglais vitelement. Comment appelez-vous les 25 ongles? 15

ALICE Les ongles? Nous les appelons de nails.

KATHERINE De nails. Ecoutez; dites-moi si je parle bien: de hand, de fingres, et de nails.

30

ALICE C'est bien dit, madame; il est fort bon anglais.

KATHERINE Dites-moi l'anglais pour le bras. 20

ALICE De arm, madame.

KATHERINE Et le coude.

ALICE D' elbow.

35

KATHERINE D' elbow. Je m'en fais la répétition de tous les mots que vous m'avez appris dès à présent. 25

ALICE Il est trop difficile, madame, comme je pense.

58 address prepared

III.iv (translated)

40

KATHERINE Alice, you have been in England and speak the language well.

ALICE A little, my lady.

KATHERINE I pray you, teach me; I have to learn to speak it. What do you call la main in English?

ALICE La main? It is called de hand.

KATHERINE De hand. And les doigts?

ALICE Les doigts? Oh dear, I forget les doigts; but I shall remember. Les doigts? I think that they are called de fingres; yes, de fingres.

45

KATHERINE Le main, de hand; les doigts, le fingres. I think that I am an apt scholar; I have learned two words of English quickly. What do you call les ongles?

ALICE Les ongles? We call them de nails.

KATHERINE De nails. Listen; tell me if I speak correctly: de hand, de fingres, and de nails.

50

ALICE Well said, my lady; it is very good English.

KATHERINE Tell me the English for le bras.

ALICE De arm, my lady.

KATHERINE And le coude.

ALICE D' elbow.

KATHERINE D' elbow. I shall repeat all the words you have taught me so far.

ALICE It is too hard, my lady, I think.

KATHERINE Excusez-moi, Alice; écoutez: d' hand, de fingre, de nails, d' arma, de bilbow.
 ALICE D' elbow, madame.
 KATHERINE O Seigneur Dieu, je m'en oublie! D' 30 elbow. Comment appelez-vous le col?
 ALICE De nick, madame.
 KATHERINE De nick. Et le menton?
 ALICE De chin.
 KATHERINE De sin. Le col, de nick; le menton, de sin. 35
 ALICE Oui. Sauf votre honneur, en vérité, vous prononcez les mots aussi droit que les natifs d'Angleterre.
 KATHERINE Je ne doute point d'apprendre, par la grace de Dieu, et en peu de temps. 40
 ALICE N'avez-vous pas déjà oublié ce que je vous ai enseigné?
 KATHERINE Non, je réciterai à vous promptement: d' hand, de fingre, de mails—
 ALICE De nails, madame. 45
 KATHERINE De nails, de arm, de ilbow—
 ALICE Sauf votre honneur, d' elbow.
 KATHERINE Ainsi dis-je; d' elbow, de nick, et de sin. Comment appelez-vous le pied et la robe?
 ALICE Le foot, madame; et le count. 50
 KATHERINE Le foot et le count! O Seigneur Dieu! Ils sont les mots de son mauvais, corruptible, gros, et impudique, et non pour les dames d'honneur d'user: je ne voudrais prononcer ces mots devant les seigneurs de France pour tout le monde. Foh, le foot et le count! 55
 Néanmoins, je réciterai une autre fois ma leçon ensemble: d' hand, de fingre, de nails, d' arm, d' elbow, de nick, de sin, de foot, le count.
 ALICE Excellent, madame!
 KATHERINE C'est assez pour une fois: allons-nous à 60 diner. Exit, [with ALICE].
 KATHERINE Pardon me, Alice; listen: d' hand, de fingre, de nails, d' arma, de bilbow.
 ALICE D' elbow, my lady.
 KATHERINE O dear Lord, I forget. D' elbow. What do you call le col?
 ALICE De nick, my lady.
 KATHERINE De nick. And le menton?
 ALICE De chin.
 KATHERINE De sin. Le col, de nick; le menton, de sin.
 ALICE Yes. By your leave, indeed you pronounce the words just like a native of England.
 KATHERINE I have no doubt that I shall learn, with God's help, and in little time.
 ALICE Have you not already forgotten what I have taught you?
 KATHERINE No, I shall recite to you now: d' hand, de fingre, de mails—
 ALICE De nails, my lady.
 KATHERINE De nails, de arm, de ilbow—
 ALICE By your leave, d' elbow.
 KATHERINE That's what I said: d' elbow, de nick, and de sin. What do you call le pied and la robe?
 ALICE The foot, my lady; and the count. [editor's note: these words are similar in sound to the French equivalents of the English "four-letter" words; "count" is an attempt at "gown"]
 KATHERINE The foot and the count! O dear Lord! Those are bad words, wicked, vulgar, and indecent, and respectable ladies don't use them. I wouldn't utter those words before French gentlemen for the whole world. Fie, the foot and the count! Still, I shall recite once more my whole lesson: d' hand, de fingre, de nails, d' arm, d' elbow, de sin, de foot, the count.
 ALICE Excellent, my lady.
 KATHERINE That's enough for one session; let's go to dinner.

[Scene V. Rouen. A room in the palace.]

Enter the KING of France, the DAUPHIN, [BRETAGNE], the CONSTABLE of France, and others.

KING

'Tis certain he hath passed the river Somme.

CONSTABLE

And if he be not fought withal, my lord,
 Let us not live in France; let us quit all
 And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.

DAUPHIN

O Dieu vivant! Shall a few sprays of us,° 5
 The emptying° of our father's luxury,
 Our scions, put in wild and savage stock,°
 Spirt° up so suddenly into the clouds
 And overlook their grafters?

BRETAGNE

Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman bastards! 10
 Mort Dieu! Ma vie! if they march along
 Unfought withal, but I will sell my dukedom
 To buy a slobb'ry° and a dirty farm
 In that nook-shotten° isle of Albion.°

CONSTABLE

Dieu de batailles! where have they this mettle? 15
 Is not their climate foggy, raw, and dull,
 On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale,
 Killing their fruit with frowns? Can sodden° water,
 A drench for sur-reined jades, their barley broth,° Decoct° their cold blood to such valiant heat? 20
 And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine,
 Seem frosty? O, for honor of our land,
 Let us not hang like roping° icicles
 Upon our houses' thatch, whiles a more frosty people
 Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich fields— 25
 "Poor" we call them° in their native lords!

DAUPHIN

By faith and honor,
 Our madams mock at us and plainly say
 Our mettle is bred out,° and they will give
 Their bodies to the lust of English youth, 30
 To new-store France with bastard warriors.

BRETAGNE

They bid us to the English dancing schools
 And teach lavoltas° high, and swift corantos,°
 Saying our grace° is only in our heels,°
 And that we are most lofty° runaways. 35

KING

Where is Montjoy, the herald? Speed him hence;
 Let him greet England with our sharp defiance.
 Up, princes, and with spirit of honor edged
 More sharper than your swords, hie to the field.

III.v.5 sprays of us offshoots, bastards 6 emptying expenditure 7 scions . . . stock i.e., Norman French mating with Anglo-Saxon (scions are shoots, for grafting) 8 Spirt sprout, shoot 13 slobb'ry waterlogged 14 nook-shotten full of odd angles, shapeless; Albion an ancient poetical name for Britain, alluding to the white cliffs visible from France 18 sodden boiled 19 drench . . . broth medicinal draught (or mash) given to overridden nags, (which is much the same as) their beer 20 Decoct warm up 23 roping hanging down together like rope 26 them i.e., the "rich fields" of France 29 bred out exhausted, degenerate 33 lavoltas dances with high leaps; corantos dances with a running step 34 grace virtue, saving grace (?); our heels (1) dancing (2) running away 35 lofty stately, pompous

Charles Delabreth, High Constable of France,
 You Dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berri,
 Alençon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgundy;
 Jacques Chatillon, Rambures, Vaudemont,
 Beaumont, Grandpré, Roussi, and Faulconbridge,
 Foix, Lestrale, Bouciqualt, and Charolois,
 High dukes, great princes, barons, lords, and knights,
 For your great seats^o now quit you of great shames:
 Bar Harry England, that sweeps through our land
 With pennons painted in the blood of Harfleur;
 Rush on his host, as doth the melted snow
 Upon the valleys whose low vassal seat
 The Alps doth spit and void his^o rheum upon.
 Go down upon him—you have power enough—
 And in a captive chariot into Rouen
 Bring him our prisoner.

CONSTABLE This becomes the great. 55
 Sorry am I his numbers are so few,
 His soldiers sick, and famished in their march;
 For I am sure, when he shall see our army,
 He'll drop his heart into the sink^o of fear
 And, for achievement,^o offer us his ransom. 60

KING
 Therefore, Lord Constable, haste on Montjoy,
 And let him say to England that we send
 To know what willing ransom he will give.
 Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Rouen.

DAUPHIN
 Not so, I do beseech your majesty. 65

KING
 Be patient, for you shall remain with us.
 Now forth, Lord Constable, and princes all,
 And quickly bring us word of England's fall. Exeunt.

[Scene VI. France. The English camp in Picardy.]

Enter captains, English and Welsh: GOWER and FLUELLEN.

GOWER How now, Captain Fluellen, come you from the bridge?^o

FLUELLEN I assure you, there is very excellent services^o committed at the bridge.

GOWER Is the Duke of Exeter safe? 5

FLUELLEN The Duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon, and a man that I love and honor with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my live, and my living, and my uttermost power. He is not—God be praised and blessed!—any hurt in the world, 10 but keeps the bridge most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an aunchient lieutenant^o there at the pridge, I think in my very conscience he is as valiant a man as Mark Anthony, and he is a man of no estimation in the world, but I did see him do as gallant 15 service.

GOWER What do you call him?

FLUELLEN He is called Aunchient Pistol.

GOWER I know him not.

47 seats estates 52 his the Alps' 59 sink pit 60 achievement acquisition (i.e., for France)

III.vi.2 the bridge over the Ternoise, captured on October 23, 1415, two days before the battle of Agincourt 4 services exploits 12 aunchient lieutenant sublieutenant

Enter PISTOL.

FLUELLEN Here is the man. 20

PISTOL

Captain, I thee beseech to do me favors;
 The Duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

FLUELLEN Ay, I praise God; and I have merited some love at his hands.

PISTOL

Bardolph, a soldier firm and sound of heart, 25
 And of buxom^o valor, hath by cruel fate,
 And giddy Fortune's furious fickle wheel—
 That goddess blind,
 That stands upon the rolling restless stone—

FLUELLEN By your patience, Aunchient Pistol. 30
 Fortune is painted blind, with a muffler afore her eyes, to signify to you that Fortune is blind; and she is painted also with a wheel, to signify to you, which is the moral of it, that she is turning and inconstant, and mutability, and variation; and her foot, look you, is 35 fixed upon a spherical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls. In good truth, the poet makes a most excellent description of it; Fortune is an excellent moral.^o

PISTOL

Fortune is Bardolph's foe, and frowns on him;
 For he hath stol'n a pax,^o and hangèd must 'a be— 40
 A damnèd death!

Let gallows gape for dog; let man go free,
 And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate.
 But Exeter hath given the doom^o of death
 For pax of little price. 45

Therefore, go speak—the duke will hear thy voice;
 And let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
 With edge of penny cord, and vile reproach.
 Speak, captain, for his life, and I will thee requite.

FLUELLEN Aunchient Pistol, I do partly understand 50 your meaning.

PISTOL

Why then, rejoice therefore!

FLUELLEN Certainly, aunchient, it is not a thing to rejoice at; for if, look you, he were my brother, I would desire the duke to use his good pleasure, and 55 put him to execution; for discipline ought to be used.

PISTOL

Die and be damned! and figo^o for thy friendship!

FLUELLEN It is well.

PISTOL

The fig of Spain!^o Exit.

FLUELLEN Very good. 60

GOWER Why, this is an arrant^o counterfeit rascal! I remember him now—a bawd, a cutpurse.

FLUELLEN I'll assure you, 'a utt'red as prave words at the pridge, as you shall see in a summer's day. But it is very well. What he has spoke to me, that is well, I 65 warrant you, when time is serve.

GOWER Why, 'tis a gull,^o a fool, a rogue, that now and then goes to the wars, to grace himself at his

26 buxom lively 38 moral symbolical figure 40 pax tablet depicting the Crucifixion, kissed by priest and then communicants at Mass 44 doom sentence 57 figo Spanish for fig (see next note) 59 fig of Spain contemptuous and obscene gesture made by thrusting the thumb between the fingers or into the mouth 61 arrant out-and-out 67 gull simpleton return into London, under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in the great commanders' 70 names, and they will learn you by rote where services^o were done: at such and such a sconce,^o at such a breach, at such a convoy; who came off^o bravely, who was shot, who disgraced, what terms the enemy stood on;^o and this they con^o perfectly in the phrase of war, which 75 they trick up with new-tuned oaths;^o and what a beard of the general's cut^o and a horrid suit of the camp will do among foaming bottles and ale-washed wits is wonderful to be thought on. But you must learn to know such slanders of the age, or else you may 80 be marvelously mistook.

FLUELLEN I tell you what, Captain Gower: I do perceive he is not the man that he would gladly make show to the world he is. If I find a hole in his coat,^o I will tell him my mind. [Drum within.] Hark you, the 85 king is coming, and I must speak with him from the pridge.

Drum and colors. Enter the KING and his poor SOLDIERS [and GLOUCESTER].

God pless your majesty!

KING

How now, Fluellen, cam'st thou from the bridge?

FLUELLEN Ay, so please your majesty: the Duke of 90 Exeter has very gallantly maintained the pridge; the French is gone off, look you, and there is gallant and most prave passages.^o Marry, th' athversary was have possession of the pridge, but he is enforced to retire, and the Duke of Exeter is master of the pridge. I can 95 tell your majesty, the duke is a prave man.

KING What men have you lost, Fluellen?

FLUELLEN The perdition of th' athversary hath been very great, reasonable great: marry, for my part, I think the duke hath lost never a man, but one that is 100 like to be executed for robbing a church—one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man. His face is all bubukles and whelks,^o and knobs, and flames o' fire, and his lips blows at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes plue and sometimes red; but his nose is 105 executed,^o and his^o fire's out.

KING We would have all such offenders so cut off;^o and we give express charge that in our marches through the country there be nothing compelled from the villages, nothing taken but paid for; none of 110 the French upbraided or abused in disdainful language; for when lenity and cruelty play for a kingdom, the gentler gamester is the soonest winner.

Tucket.^o Enter MONTJOY.

MONTJOY You know me by my habit.^o

KING Well then, I know thee. What shall I know of 115 thee?

MONTJOY My master's mind.

KING Unfold it.

MONTJOY Thus says my king: Say thou to Harry of England, though we seemed dead, we did but sleep. 120 Advantage^o is a better soldier than rashness. Tell him, we could have rebuked him at Harfleur, but that we thought not good to bruise an injury^o till it were full ripe. Now we speak upon our cue, and our voice is imperial: England shall repent his folly, see his weak- 125 ness, and admire our sufferance.^o Bid him therefore consider of his ransom, which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested; which in weight to re- answer, his pettiness would bow under.^o For our 130 losses, his exchequer is too poor; for th' effusion of our blood, the muster of his kingdom too faint a number; and for our disgrace, his own person kneeling at our feet but a weak and worthless satisfaction. To this add defiance; and tell him for conclusion, he hath 135 betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounced. So far my king and master; so much my office.

KING

What is thy name? I know thy quality.

MONTJOY Montjoy.^o

140

KING

Thou dost thy office fairly. Turn thee back, And tell thy king, I do not seek him now, But could be willing to march on to Calais Without impeachment;^o for, to say the sooth, 145 Though 'tis no wisdom to confess so much Unto an enemy of craft and vantage,^o My people are with sickness much enfeebled, My numbers lessened; and those few I have Almost no better than so many French, Who when they were in health, I tell thee, herald, 150 I thought upon one pair of English legs Did march three Frenchmen. Yet forgive me, God, That I do brag thus! This your air of France Hath blown that vice in me. I must repent. Go therefore tell thy master, here I am; 155 My ransom is this frail and worthless trunk; My army but a weak and sickly guard; Yet, God before, tell him we will come on, Though France himself and such another neighbor Stand in our way. There's for thy labor, Montjoy. 160

[Gives a purse.]

Go bid thy master well advise himself:

If we may pass, we will; if we be hind'red,

We shall your tawny ground with your red blood

Discolor; and so, Montjoy, fare you well.

The sum of all our answer is but this:

165

We would not seek a battle as we are,

Nor, as we are, we say we will not shun it.

So tell your master.

121 Advantage favorable opportunity 123 bruise an injury squeeze out a festering wound 126 admire our sufferance wonder at our patience 129-30 in . . . under to compensate in full would be too much for his small resources 140 Montjoy title of chief herald of France, not his name 144 impeachment hindrance 146 craft and vantage cunning and superiority

71 services exploits 72 sconce small fort or earthwork 73 came off got clear 74 what . . . on what the position of the enemy depended on 75 con learn 76 trick . . . oaths adorn with newly phrased oaths 77 of . . . cut shaped in the same fashion as the general's 84 hole . . . coat some fault in him 93 passages i.e., of arms 103 bubukles and whelks abscesses-and-carbuncles (a confusion of two words) and pimples 106 executed i.e., slit (as he stood in the pillory before being hanged); his its 107 cut off put to death 113 s.d. Tucket a personal trumpet call 114 habit i.e., the herald's tabard

MONTJOY

I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness. [Exit.]

GLOUCESTER

I hope they will not come upon us now.

KING

We are in God's hand, brother, not in theirs.

March to the bridge, it now draws toward night;

Beyond the river we'll encamp ourselves,

And on tomorrow bid them march away. Exeunt.

[Scene VII. France. The French camp, near Agincourt.]

Enter the CONSTABLE of France, the Lords RAMBURES, ORLEANS, DAUPHIN, with others.

CONSTABLE Tut! I have the best armor of the world.

Would it were day!

ORLEANS You have an excellent armor; but let my horse have his due.

CONSTABLE It is the best horse of Europe.

ORLEANS Will it never be morning?

DAUPHIN My Lord of Orleans, and my Lord High Constable, you talk of horse and armor?

ORLEANS You are as well provided of both as any prince in the world.

DAUPHIN What a long night is this! I will not change my horse with any that treads but on four pasterns. Ça, ha! He bounds from the earth, as if his entrails were hairs;° le cheval volant, the Pegasus, chez les narines de feu!° When I bestride him, I soar, I am a hawk; he trots the air; the earth sings when he touches it. The basest horn of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes.°

ORLEANS He's of the color of the nutmeg.

DAUPHIN And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus:° he is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness while his rider mounts him. He is indeed a horse, and all other jades° you may call beasts.

CONSTABLE Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

DAUPHIN It is the prince of palfreys;° his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage.

ORLEANS No more, cousin.

DAUPHIN Nay, the man hath no wit that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, vary° deservèd praise on my palfrey; it is a theme as fluent as the sea. Turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument° for them all. 'Tis a subject for a sovereign to reason° on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on; and for the world, familiar to us and unknown, to lay apart their particular functions, and wonder at him. I once writ a sonnet in his praise and began thus, "Wonder of nature!"

ORLEANS I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's mistress.

DAUPHIN Then did they imitate that which I composed to my courser, for my horse is my mistress.

ORLEANS Your mistress bears well.°

DAUPHIN Me well, which is the prescript° praise and perfection of a good and particular° mistress.

CONSTABLE Nay, for methought yesterday your mistress shrewdly° shook your back.

DAUPHIN So perhaps did yours.

CONSTABLE Mine was not bridled.°

DAUPHIN O, then belike she was old and gentle, and you rode like a kern° of Ireland, your French hose° off, and in your strait strossers.°

CONSTABLE You have good judgment in horsemanship.°

DAUPHIN Be warned by me then: they that ride so, and ride not warily, fall into foul bogs. I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

CONSTABLE I had as lief have my mistress a jade.°

DAUPHIN I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears his own hair.°

CONSTABLE I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a sow to my mistress.

DAUPHIN "Le chien est retourné à son propre vomissement, et la truie lavée au boubier."° Thou mak'st use of anything.

CONSTABLE Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress, or any such proverb so little kin to the purpose.

RAMBURES My Lord Constable, the armor that I saw in your tent tonight—are those stars or suns upon it?

CONSTABLE Stars, my lord.

DAUPHIN Some of them will fall tomorrow, I hope.

CONSTABLE And yet my sky shall not want.

DAUPHIN That may be, for you bear a many superfluously, and 'twere more honor some were away.

CONSTABLE Ev'n as your horse bears your praises, who would trot as well, were some of your brags dismounted.

DAUPHIN Would I were able to load him with his desert! Will it never be day? I will trot tomorrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

CONSTABLE I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way;° but I would it were morning, for I would fain be about the ears of the English.

RAMBURES Who will go to hazard° with me for twenty prisoners?

CONSTABLE You must first go yourself to hazard, ere you have them.

III.vii.13-14 as if . . . hairs i.e., as if he were a tennis ball (or perhaps "hairs" = hares) 14-15 cheval . . . feu the flying horse, Pegasus, with fiery nostrils 17-18 The basest . . . Hermes the winged horse, Pegasus, struck Mount Helicon with his hoof and the fountain of the Muses sprang forth; Hermes, alias Mercury, invented the pipe and charmed to sleep Argus of the hundred eyes 21 Perseus Pegasus sprang from the blood of the gorgon, Medusa, when Perseus cut off her head 24 jades nags 28 palfreys saddle horses (too light for use in battle) 33 vary express in different ways 36 argument subject 37 reason discourse

46 bears well carries her rider well 47 prescript prescribed 48 particular private 50 shrewdly (1) severely (2) shrewishly (cf. line 52) 52 bridled as (1) a horse (2) a shrew compelled to wear a bridle 54 kern lightly armed Irish foot soldier; French hose loose, wide breeches 55 strait strossers tight trousers (i.e., bare-legged) 56-57 horsemanship with a pun on whores-manship 61 jade (1) poor horse (2) loose woman 62-63 wears . . . hair i.e., doesn't need a (fashionable) wig 66-67 Le chien . . . boubier cf. II Peter 2:22, "The dog is turned to his own vomit again, and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire" 84-85 faced . . . way (1) put out of countenance (2) driven off 87 go to hazard take a wager

DAUPHIN 'Tis midnight; I'll go arm myself. Exit.
 ORLEANS The dauphin longs for morning.
 RAMBURES He longs to eat the English.
 CONSTABLE I think he will eat all he kills.
 ORLEANS By the white hand of my lady, he's a 95
 gallant prince.
 CONSTABLE Swear by her foot, that she may tread out° the oath.
 ORLEANS He is simply the most active gentleman of France. 100
 CONSTABLE Doing is activity, and he will still be doing.°
 ORLEANS He never did harm, that I heard of.
 CONSTABLE Nor will do none tomorrow; he will keep that good name still. 105
 ORLEANS I know him to be valiant.
 CONSTABLE I was told that, by one that knows him better than you.
 ORLEANS What's he?
 CONSTABLE Marry, he told me so himself, and he said 110
 he cared not who knew it.
 ORLEANS He needs not; it is no hidden virtue in him.
 CONSTABLE By my faith, sir, but it is! Never anybody saw it but his lackey;° 'tis a hooded valor, and when it appears, it will bate.° 115
 ORLEANS Ill will never said well.
 CONSTABLE I will cap that proverb with, "There is flattery in friendship."
 ORLEANS And I will take up that with, "Give the devil his due." 120
 CONSTABLE Well placed! There stands your friend for the devil. Have at the very eye of that proverb with, "A pox of the devil!"
 ORLEANS You are the better at proverbs, by how much "a fool's bolt is soon shot." 125
 CONSTABLE You have shot over.°
 ORLEANS 'Tis not the first time you were overshot.°

Enter a MESSENGER.

MESSENGER My Lord High Constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your tents.
 CONSTABLE Who hath measured the ground? 130
 MESSENGER The Lord Grandpré.
 CONSTABLE A valiant and most expert gentleman.
 Would it were day! Alas, poor Harry of England!
 He longs not for the dawning, as we do.
 ORLEANS What a wretched and peevish° fellow is 135
 this King of England, to mope with his fat-brained followers so far out of his knowledge!
 CONSTABLE If the English had any apprehension,°
 they would run away.
 ORLEANS That they lack; for if their heads had any 140 intellectual armor, they could never wear such heavy headpieces.
 RAMBURES That island of England breeds very valiant creatures: their mastiffs are of unmatchable courage.

97-98 tread out (1) obliterate (2) treat with contempt 102 doing having sexual intercourse 114 but his lackey i.e., he has beaten no one but his footboy 114-15 hooded . . . bate valor like a hawk hooded before action, which flutters and beats its wings when its hood is removed 115 bate (1) beat its wings (2) become dejected 126 over beyond the mark 127 overshot (1) wide of the mark (2) beaten in shooting 135 peevish senseless 138 apprehension understanding, grasp of mind

ORLEANS Foolish curs, that run winking° into the 145 mouth of a Russian bear, and have their heads crushed like rotten apples! You may as well say, that's a valiant flea, that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.
 CONSTABLE Just, just! And the men do sympathize with the mastiffs in robustious and rough coming on, 150 leaving their wits with their wives: and then give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel; they will eat like wolves and fight like devils.
 ORLEANS Ay, but these English are shrewdly° out of beef. 155
 CONSTABLE Then shall we find tomorrow they have only stomachs° to eat, and none to fight. Now is it time to arm; come, shall we about it?
 ORLEANS
 It is now two o'clock; but let me see—by ten
 We shall have each a hundred Englishmen. Exeunt. 160

ACT [I V]

[Enter] CHORUS.

Now entertain conjecture of a time
 When creeping murmur and the poring° dark
 Fills the wide vessel of the universe.
 From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
 The hum of either army stilly° sounds; 5
 That the fixed sentinels almost receive
 The secret whispers of each other's watch.
 Fire answers fire, and through their paly° flames
 Each battle° sees the other's umbered° face.
 Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful neighs 10
 Piercing the night's dull ear; and from the tents
 The armorers accomplishing° the knights,
 With busy hammers closing rivets up,
 Give dreadful note° of preparation.
 The country cocks do crow, the clocks do toll; 15
 And the third hour of drowsy morning named.
 Proud of their numbers, and secure° in soul,
 The confident and over-lusty° French
 Do the low-rated English play° at dice;
 And chide the cripple tardy-gaited night 20
 Who like a foul and ugly witch doth limp
 So tediously away. The poor condemnèd English,
 Like sacrifices, by their watchful° fires
 Sit patiently, and inly ruminate
 The morning's danger; and their gesture° sad, 25
 Investing° lank-lean cheeks and war-worn coats,
 Presenteth them unto the gazing moon
 So many horrid ghosts. O, now, who will behold
 The royal captain of this ruined band
 Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent, 30
 Let him cry, "Praise and glory on his head!"
 For forth he goes and visits all his host,

145 winking with eyes shut 154 shrewdly very much 157
 stomachs disposition

IV.Cho.2 poring eye-straining 5 stilly softly 8 paly pale (poetic) 9 battle army; umbered shadowed 12 accomplishing equipping 14 note indication 17 secure confident 18 over-lusty too lively 19 play play for 23 watchful used for keeping watch 25 gesture bearing 26 Investing accompanying

Bids them good morrow with a modest smile,
 And calls them brothers, friends, and countrymen.
 Upon his royal face there is no note
 How dread an army hath enrounded him;
 Nor doth he dedicate one jot of color
 Unto° the weary and all-watchèd° night;
 Bur freshly looks, and overbears attaint°
 With cheerful semblance and sweet majesty;
 That every wretch, pining and pale before,
 Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks.
 A largess universal, like the sun,
 His liberal eye doth give to everyone,
 Thawing cold fear, that mean and gentle all
 Behold, as may unworthiness define,°
 A little touch of Harry in the night.
 And so our scene must to the battle fly;
 Where (O for pity!) we shall much disgrace,
 With four or five most vile and ragged foils°
 Right ill-disposed in brawl ridiculous,
 The name of Agincourt. Yet sit and see,
 Minding true things by what their mock'ries° be.

Exit.

[Scene I. France. The English camp at Agincourt.]

Enter the KING, BEDFORD, and GLOUCESTER.

KING

Gloucester, 'tis true that we are in great danger;
 The greater therefore should our courage be.
 Good morrow, brother Bedford. God Almighty!
 There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
 Would men observingly distill it out;
 For our bad neighbor makes us early stirrers,
 Which is both healthful, and good husbandry.°
 Besides, they are our outward° consciences,
 And preachers to us all, admonishing
 That we should dress us° fairly for our end.
 Thus may we gather honey from the weed
 And make a moral° of the devil himself.

Enter ERPINGHAM.

Good morrow, old Sir Thomas Erpingham:
 A good soft pillow for that good white head
 Were better than a churlish turf of France.

ERPINGHAM

Not so, my liege. This lodging likes me better, Since I may say, "Now lie I like a king."

KING

'Tis good for men to love their present pains
 Upon° example: so the spirit is eased;
 And when the mind is quick'ned, out of doubt
 The organs,° though defunct° and dead before,
 Break up their drowsy grave, and newly° move
 With casted slough and fresh legerity.°

37-38 dedicate . . . Unto look pale on account of 38 all-watchèd entirely spent in watches 39 overbears attaint overcomes any sign of exhaustion 46 as . . . define as far as our unworthy selves can present it 50 foils light fencing weapons 53 mock'ries imitations

IV.i.7 husbandry careful management 8 outward i.e., not our own inner 10 dress us prepare ourselves 12 moral improving lesson 19 Upon in pursuance of 21 organs parts of the body; defunct out of use 22 newly a snake is torpid before casting its slough 23 legerity nimbleness

Lend me thy cloak, Sir Thomas. Brothers both,
 Commend me to the princes in our camp;
 Do my good morrow to them, and anon
 Desire them all to my pavilion.

25

GLOUCESTER

We shall, my liege.

ERPINGHAM

Shall I attend your grace?

KING

No, my good knight.

Go with my brothers to my lords of England.

30

I and my bosom must debate awhile,

And then I would no other company.

ERPINGHAM

The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble Harry!

Exeunt [all but the KING].

KING

God-a-mercy, old heart! thou speak'st cheerfully.

Enter PISTOL.

PISTOL Qui va là?°

35

KING A friend.

PISTOL

Discuss° unto me; art thou officer,

Or art thou base, common, and popular?°

KING I am a gentleman of a company.

PISTOL

Trail'st thou the puissant pike?°

40

KING Even so. What are you?

PISTOL

As good a gentleman as the emperor.

KING Then you are a better than the king.

PISTOL

The king's a bawcock,° and a heart of gold,

A lad of life, an imp° of fame,

Of parents good, of fist most valiant.

I kiss his dirty shoe, and from heartstring

I love the lovely bully.° What is thy name?

45

KING Harry le Roy.

PISTOL

Le Roy? A Cornish name. Art thou of Cornish crew? 50

KING No, I am a Welshman.

PISTOL

Know'st thou Fluellen?

KING Yes.

PISTOL

Tell him I'll knock his leek about his pate

Upon Saint Davy's day.°

55

KING Do not you wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.

PISTOL

Art thou his friend?

KING And his kinsman too.

PISTOL

The figo° for thee then!

60

KING I thank you. God be with you!

PISTOL

My name is Pistol called.

Exit.

35 Qui va là Who goes there? 37 Discuss declare 38 popular vulgar 40 Trail'st . . . pike i.e., Are you an infantryman? (a pike was held below its head, the butt trailing behind on the ground) 44 bawcock fine fellow (familiar term) 45 imp child 48 bully fine fellow (familiar, endearing term) 55 Saint Davy's day March 1 60 figo fig (Spanish), contemptuous and obscene gesture

KING It sorts^o well with your fierceness.

Manet^o KING [aside].

Enter FLUELLEN and GOWER.

GOWER Captain Fluellen!

FLUELLEN So! in the name of Jesu Christ, speak 65 fewer.^o It is the greatest admiration in the universal world, when the true and aunchient prerogatifes and laws of the wars is not kept. If you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle 70
taddle nor pibble babble in Pompey's camp; I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the sobriety of it, and the modesty^o of it, to be otherwise.

GOWER Why, the enemy is loud; you hear him all 75
night.

FLUELLEN If the enemy is an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb, in your own conscience now? 80

GOWER I will speak lower.

FLUELLEN I pray you, and beseech you that you will.
Exit, [with GOWER].

KING

Though it appear a little out of fashion,^o
There is much care and valor in this Welshman.

Enter three soldiers: John BATES, Alexander COURT, and Michael WILLIAMS.

COURT Brother John Bates, is not that the morning 85
which breaks yonder?

BATES I think it be; but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.

WILLIAMS We see yonder the beginning of the day, but I think we shall never see the end of it. Who goes 90 there?

KING A friend.

WILLIAMS Under what captain serve you?

KING Under Sir Thomas Erpingham.

WILLIAMS A good old commander, and a most kind 95
gentleman. I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?^o

KING Even as men wracked upon a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.

BATES He hath not told his thought to the king?

KING No; nor it is not meet he should. For though I 100 speak it to you, I think the king is but a man, as I am:
the violet smells to him, as it doth to me; the element shows^o to him, as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions.^o His ceremonies^o laid by, in his nakedness he appears but a man; and though his 105 affections are higher mounted than ours, yet when they stoop,^o they stoop with the like wing: therefore, when he sees reason of^o fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are. Yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appearance 110 of fear, lest he, by showing it, should dishearten his army.

BATES He may show what outward courage he will;
but I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish 115 himself in Thames up to the neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures,^o so we were quit here.^o

KING By my troth, I will speak my conscience^o of the king: I think he would not wish himself anywhere but where he is. 120

BATES Then I would he were here alone; so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men's lives saved.

KING I dare say you love him not so ill to wish him here alone; howsoever you speak this to feel other 125 men's minds. Methinks I could not die anywhere so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just and his quarrel honorable.

WILLIAMS That's more than we know.

BATES Ay, or more than we should seek after; for we 130 know enough if we know we are the king's subjects:
if his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes
the crime of it out of us.

WILLIAMS But if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make, when all 135
those legs and arms and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day and cry all, "We died at such a place," some swearing, some crying for a surgeon, some upon their wives left poor behind them, some upon the debts they owe, some upon their 140 children rawly^o left. I am afeard there are few die well^o that die in a battle; for how can they charitably dispose of anything when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it; who to disobey, were 145 against all proportion of subjection.^o

KING So, if a son that is by his father sent about merchandise do sinfully miscarry^o upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him; or if a servant, 150 under his master's command transporting a sum of money, be assailed by robbers and die in many irreconciled^o iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation. But this is not so. The king is not bound to answer^o the 155 particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitrament of swords, can try it out with 160 all unspotted soldiers: some (peradventure) have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder;
some, of beguiling virgins with the broken seals^o of perjury; some, making the wars their bulwark,^o that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with 165 pillage and robbery. Now, if these men have defeated

63 sorts suits (the Elizabethan pistol was notably noisy and ineffective) 63 s.d. Manet remains (Latin) 66 fewer less 74 modesty moderation 83 out of fashion odd 96 estate state, condition 102-03 element shows sky appears 104 conditions characteristics; ceremonies accompaniments of royalty 107 stoop used of a hawk swooping down on its prey 108 of for the law and outrun native° punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God. War is his beadle,° war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished for before-breach° of the king's laws 170 in now the king's quarrel. Where they feared the death, they have borne life away; and where they would be safe, they perish. Then if they die unprovided,° no more is the king guilty of their damnation that he was before guilty of those impieties for the 175 which they are now visited.° Every subject's duty is the king's, but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed—wash every mote out of his conscience; and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, 180 the time was blessedly lost wherein such preparation was gained; and in him that escapes, it were not sin to think that, making God so free° an offer, He let him outlive that day, to see His greatness, and to teach others how they should prepare. 185

116 at all adventures whatever the consequences 116-17 quit here done with this job 118 conscience inmost thought 141 rawly (1) unprepared (2) at immature age; well i.e., a Christian death 146 proportion of subjection due relation of subject to monarch 148 sinfully miscarry perish in his sins 153 irreconciled not atoned for 155 answer render account for 163 seals sealed covenants 164 bulwark defense (against pursuing justice)

WILLIAMS 'Tis certain, every man that dies ill, the ill upon his own head; the king is not to answer it.

BATES I do not desire he should answer for me, and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

KING I myself heard the king say he would not be 190 ransomed.

WILLIAMS Ay, he said so, to make us fight cheerfully; but when our throats are cut, he may be ransomed, and we ne'er the wiser.

KING If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after. 195

WILLIAMS You pay him° then! That's a perilous shot out of an elder-gun,° that a poor and a private° displeasure can do against a monarch! You may as well go about to turn the sun to ice with fanning in his face with a peacock's feather. You'll never trust his word 200 after! Come, 'tis a foolish saying.

KING Your reproof is something too round;° I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

WILLIAMS Let it be a quarrel between us, if you live.

KING I embrace it. 205

WILLIAMS How shall I know thee again?

KING Give me any gage° of thine, and I will wear it in my bonnet. Then, if ever thou dar'st acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

WILLIAMS Here's my glove. Give me another of 210 thine.

KING There.

WILLIAMS This will I also wear in my cap. If ever thou come to me and say, after tomorrow, "This is my glove," by this hand, I will take° thee a box on the 215 ear.

KING If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.

WILLIAMS Thou dar'st as well be hanged.

KING Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the 220 king's company.

WILLIAMS Keep thy word. Fare thee well.

BATES Be friends, you English fools, be friends! We have French quarrels enow, if you could tell how to reckon.

KING Indeed the French may lay twenty French 225 crowns° to one they will beat us, for they bear them on their shoulders;° but it is no English treason° to cut French crowns, and tomorrow the king himself will be a clipper.

Exeunt SOLDIERS.

"Upon the king! Let us our lives, our souls, 230

Our debts, our careful° wives,

Our children, and our sins, lay on the king!"

We must bear all. O hard condition,

Twin-born with greatness, subject to the breath°

Of every fool, whose sense no more can feel 235

But his own wringing!° What infinite heart's-ease

Must kings neglect that private men enjoy!

And what have kings that privates have not too,

Save ceremony, save general ceremony?

And what art thou, thou idol Ceremony? 240

What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more

Of mortal griefs than do thy worshippers?

What are thy rents? What are thy comings-in?

O Ceremony, show me but thy worth!

What is thy soul of adoration?° 245

Art thou aught else but place, degree, and form,°

Creating awe and fear in other men?

Wherein thou art less happy, being feared, Than they in fearing.

What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet, 250

But poisoned flattery? O, be sick, great greatness,

And bid thy ceremony give thee cure!

Thinks thou the fiery fever will go out

With titles blown° from adulation?

Will it give place to flexure° and low bending? 255

Canst thou, when thou command'st the beggar's knee,

Command the health of it? No, thou proud dream,

That play'st so subtly with a king's repose.

I am a king that find° thee; and I know

'Tis not the balm, the scepter, and the ball,° 260

The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,

The intertissued robe of gold and pearl,

The farcèd° title running 'fore the king,

The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp

That beats upon the high shore° of this world— 265

No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous ceremony,

Not all these, laid in bed majestical,

Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave,

Who, with a body filled, and vacant mind,

Gets him to rest, crammed with distressful° bread; 270

Never sees horrid night, the child of hell;

But like a lackey,° from the rise to set,

Sweats in the eye of Phoebus,° and all night

226 crowns (1) coins, worth about six shillings each (2) heads 226-27 for . . . shoulders i.e., the French can lay such bets because (1) they so outnumber the English (2) they are still alive 227 treason it was a treasonable offense to debase the coinage by "clipping," or paring the edges of coins, to take their gold 231 careful anxious 234 breath speech 236 wringing stomach ache 245 thy . . . adoration the real nature of thy worship 246 form good order 254 blown inflated 255 flexure obsequious bowing 259 find discover the true character of 260 ball orb 263 farcèd stuffed out with pompous phrases 265 high shore exalted places 270 distressful gained by hard toil 272 lackey footman who ran by the coach of his master 273 Phoebus
sun-god

167 native rightful 169 beadle parish officer for punishing petty offenders 170 before-breach previous breach 173-74 unprovided unprepared 176 visited punished 183 free complete, wholehearted 196 pay him pay him out 197 elder-gun popgun (child's toy); private single and common man's 202 round plainspoken 207 gage pledge 215 take strike

Sleeps in Elysium;° next day after dawn,
 Doth rise and help Hyperion° to his horse;
 And follows so the ever-running year
 With profitable labor to his grave;
 And but for ceremony, such a wretch,
 Winding up° days with toil and nights with sleep,
 Had the forehand° and vantage of a king.
 The slave, a member of° the country's peace,
 Enjoys it; but in gross° brain little wots
 What watch the king keeps to maintain the peace,
 Whose hours the peasant best advantages.°

Enter ERPINGHAM.

ERPINGHAM

My lord, your nobles, jealous° of your absence,
 Seek through your camp to find you.

KING

Good old knight,

Collect them all together at my tent.
 I'll be before thee.

ERPINGHAM

I shall do't, my lord.

Exit.

KING

O God of battles, steel my soldiers' hearts,
 Possess them not with fear! Take from them now
 The sense of reck'ning, or th' opposèd numbers
 Pluck their hearts from them. Not today, O Lord,
 O, not today, think not upon the fault°
 My father made in compassing the crown!
 I Richard's body have interrèd new,
 And on it have bestowed more contrite tears
 Than from it issued forcèd drops of blood.
 Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay,
 Who twice a day their withered hands hold up
 Toward heaven, to pardon blood;
 And I have built two chantries,
 Where the sad and solemn priests sing still
 For Richard's soul. More will I do:
 Though all that I can do is nothing worth;
 Since that my penitence comes after all,
 Imploring pardon.

Enter GLOUCESTER.

GLOUCESTER My liege!

KING

My brother Gloucester's voice? Ay.
 I know thy errand; I will go with thee.
 The day, my friends, and all things stay for me.

310

Exeunt.

[Scene II. France. The French camp.]

Enter the DAUPHIN, ORLEANS, RAMBURES, and BEAUMONT.

ORLEANS

The sun doth gild our armor. Up, my lords!

DAUPHIN Montez à cheval!° My horse! Varlet, lacquais! Ha!

274 Elysium in mythology, the abode of the blessed after death 275 Hyperion sun-god (more correctly, his father)
 279 Winding up passing 280 forehand upper hand 281 member of sharer in 282 gross stupid 284 peasant best advantages most benefit the peasant 285 jealous anxious 293 the fault i.e., the deposition of Richard II, and the suggestion for his subsequent murder

IV.ii.2 Montez à cheval To horse!

ORLEANS O brave spirit!

275 DAUPHIN Via! les eaux et la terre°— 5

ORLEANS Rien puis? L'air et le feu.

DAUPHIN Ciel, cousin Orleans.

Enter CONSTABLE.

280 Now, my Lord Constable?

CONSTABLE

Hark how our steeds for present service neigh!

DAUPHIN

Mount them, and make incision in their hides,
 That their hot blood may spin° in English eyes
 And dout them with superfluous courage,° ha!

10

RAMBURES

What, will you have them weep our horses' blood?
 How shall we then behold their natural tears?

Enter MESSENGER.

MESSENGER

The English are embattailed, you French peers.

15

CONSTABLE

To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse!
 Do but behold yond poor and starvèd band,
 And your fair show° shall suck away their souls,
 Leaving them but the shales° and husks of men.
 There is not work enough for all our hands,
 Scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins
 To give each naked curtle ax° a stain
 That our French gallants shall today draw out
 And sheathe for lack of sport. Let us but blow on them,
 The vapor of our valor will o'erturn them.
 'Tis positive 'gainst all exceptions,° lords,
 That our superfluous lackeys and our peasants,
 Who in unnecessary action swarm
 About our squares of battle, were enow
 To purge this field of such a hilding° foe,
 Though we upon this mountain's basis by
 Took stand for idle speculation:°
 But that our honors must not. What's to say?
 A very little little let us do,
 And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound
 The tucket sonance° and the note to mount;
 For our approach shall so much dare° the field
 That England shall couch° down in fear and yield.

20

25

30

35

Enter GRANDPRÉ.

GRANDPRÉ

Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?
 Yond island carrions,° desperate° of their bones,
 Ill-favoredly become the morning field.
 Their ragged curtains° poorly are let loose,
 And our air shakes them passing° scornfully.
 Big Mars seems bankrout° in their beggared host,

40

5 Via . . . terre Begone, water and earth (the dauphin is still thinking of his horse; Orleans asks if he does not wish to ride further, to "air and fire"; the dauphin replies, "Heaven")
 11 spin gush forth 12 dout . . . courage extinguish them with overflowing blood (the supposed source of courage)
 18 fair show spectacular appearance 19 shales shells 22 curtle ax cutlass (broad-cutting sword) 26 exceptions objections 30 hilding worthless 32 speculation looking on 36 sonance sound 37 dare dazzle 38 couch crouch 40 carrions skeletons; desperate careless, without hope of saving 42 curtains banner 43 passing extremely 44 bankrout bankrupt

And faintly through a rusty beaver° peeps. 45
 The horsemen sit like fixèd candlesticks
 With torch-staves in their hand; and their poor jades
 Lob° down their heads, dropping the hides and hips,
 The gum down roping° from their pale-dead eyes,
 And in their pale dull mouths the gimmaled° bit 50
 Lies foul with chewed grass, still and motionless;
 And their executors, the knavish crows,
 Fly o'er them all, impatient for their hour.
 Description cannot suit itself in words
 To demonstrate the life of° such a battle 55
 In life so lifeless as it shows itself.

CONSTABLE

They have said their prayers, and they stay for death.

DAUPHIN

Shall we go send them dinners, and fresh suits,
 And give their fasting horses provender,
 And after fight with them? 60

CONSTABLE

I stay but for my guard. On to the field!
 I will the banner from a trumpet° take
 And use it for my haste. Come, come away!
 The sun is high, and we outwear the day. Exeunt.

[Scene III. France. The English camp.]

Enter GLOUCESTER, BEDFORD, EXETER, ERPING-
 HAM with all his HOST, SALISBURY, and WESTMORE-LAND.

GLOUCESTER

Where is the king?

BEDFORD

The king himself is rode to view their battle.°

WESTMORELAND

Of fighting men they have full three-score thousand.

EXETER

There's five to one; besides they all are fresh.

SALISBURY

God's arm strike with us! 'Tis a fearful odds. 5
 God bye° you, princes all; I'll to my charge.
 If we no more meet, till we meet in heaven,
 Then joyfully, my noble Lord of Bedford,
 My dear Lord Gloucester, and my good Lord Exeter,
 And my kind kinsman, warriors all, adieu! 10

BEDFORD

Farewell, good Salisbury, and good luck go with thee!

EXETER

Farewell, kind lord. Fight valiantly today;
 And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it,
 For thou art framed of the firm truth of valor.

[Exit SALISBURY.]

BEDFORD

He is as full of valor as of kindness, 15
 Princely in both.

Enter the KING.

WESTMORELAND O that we now had here

45 beaver face guard of a helmet 48 Lob droop 49 roping hanging like rope 50 gimmaled jointed 55 the life of
 to the life 62 trumpet trumpeter
 IV.iii.2 battle battle array 6 bye be with

But one ten thousand of those men in England
 That do no work today!

KING

What's he that wishes so?

My cousin Westmoreland? No, my fair cousin. 20
 If we are marked to die, we are enow
 To do our country loss; and if to live,
 The fewer men, the greater share of honor.
 God's will! I pray thee wish not one man more.
 By Jove, I am not covetous for gold, 25
 Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost;
 It earns° me not if men my garments wear;
 Such outward things dwell not in my desires:
 But if it be a sin to covet honor,
 I am the most offending soul alive.
 No, faith, my coz, wish not a man from England. 30
 God's peace! I would not lose so great an honor
 As one man more methinks would share from me
 For the best hope I have. O, do not wish one more!
 Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my host,
 That he which hath no stomach° to this fight, 35
 Let him depart; his passport shall be made,
 And crowns for convoy put into his purse;
 We would not die in that man's company
 That fears his fellowship° to die with us.
 This day is called the Feast of Crispian:° 40
 He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
 Will stand a-tiptoe when this day is named,
 And rouse him at the name of Crispian.
 He that shall see this day, and live old age,
 Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbors 45
 And say, "Tomorrow is Saint Crispian."
 Then will he strip his sleeve and show his scars,
 And say, "These wounds I had on Crispin's day."
 Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot,
 But he'll remember, with advantages,° 50
 What feats he did that day. Then shall our names,
 Familiar in his mouth as household words—
 Harry the King, Bedford and Exeter,
 Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloucester—
 Be in their flowing cups freshly rememb'ed. 55
 This story shall the good man teach his son;
 And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by,
 From this day to the ending of the world,
 But we in it shall be rememberèd—
 We few, we happy few, we band of brothers; 60
 For he today that sheds his blood with me
 Shall be my brother;° be he ne'er so vile,°
 This day shall gentle his condition.°
 And gentlemen in England, now abed,
 Shall think themselves accursed they were not here; 65
 And hold their manhoods cheap whiles any speaks
 That fought with us upon Saint Crispin's day.

Enter SALISBURY.

SALISBURY

My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with speed:

26 earns grieves 35 stomach inclination 39 fellowship participation 40 Crispian the brothers Crispin and Crispian (cf. line 57) fled from Rome during the persecutions of Dio-cletian and supported and hid themselves as humble shoe-makers; they were martyred A.D. 286 50 advantages added luster 60–62 brothers . . . brother like the brother martyrs; see note to line 40 62 vile low of birth 63 gentle his con- dition ennoble his rank

The French are bravely° in their battles set
And will with all expedience° charge on us.

KING

All things are ready, if our minds be so.

WESTMORELAND

Perish the man whose mind is backward now!

KING

Thou dost not wish more help from England, coz?

WESTMORELAND

God's will, my liege! would you and I alone,
Without more help, could fight this royal battle!

KING

Why, now thou hast unwished five thousand men!
Which likes me better than to wish us one.
You know your places: God be with you all!

Tucket. Enter MONTJOY.

MONTJOY

Once more I come to know of thee, King Harry,
If for thy ransom thou wilt now compound,°
Before thy most assurèd overthrow;
For certainly thou art so near the gulf
Thou needs must be englutted.° Besides, in mercy,
The constable desires thee thou wilt mind°
Thy followers of repentance, that their souls
May make a peaceful and a sweet retire°
From off these fields, where (wretches!) their poor bodies
Must lie and fester.

KING

Who hath sent thee now?

MONTJOY

The Constable of France.

KING

I pray thee bear my former answer back:
Bid them achieve° me, and then sell my bones.
Good God, why should they mock poor fellows thus?
The man that once did sell the lion's skin
While the beast lived, was killed with hunting him.
A many of our bodies shall no doubt
Find native graves; upon the which, I trust,
Shall witness live in brass of this day's work.
And those that leave their valiant bones in France,
Dying like men, though buried in your dunghills,
They shall be famed; for there the sun shall greet them
And draw their honors reeking° up to heaven,
Leaving their earthly parts to choke your clime,
The smell whereof shall breed a plague in France.
Mark then abounding valor in our English:
That, being dead, like to the bullet's grazing,
Break out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality.°
Let me speak proudly. Tell the constable,
We are but warriors for the working day:°
Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirched
With rainy marching in the painful° field.
There's not a piece of feather in our host—
Good argument, I hope, we will not fly—

70

75

80

85

90

95

100

105

110

And time hath worn us into slovenry.

But, by the mass, our hearts are in the trim;°

And my poor soldiers tell me, yet ere night

They'll be in fresher robes,° or they will pluck

The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads

And turn them° out of service. If they do this

(As, if God please, they shall), my ransom then

Will soon be levied. Herald, save thou thy labor.

Come thou no more for ransom, gentle herald;

They shall have none, I swear, but these my joints;

Which if they have as I will leave 'em them,

Shall yield them little, tell the constable.

MONTJOY

I shall, King Harry. And so fare thee well:

Thou never shalt hear herald any more.

Exit.

KING

I fear thou wilt once more come again for a ransom.°

Enter YORK.

YORK

My lord, most humbly on my knee I beg

The leading of the vaward.°

KING

Take it, brave York. Now, soldiers, march away;

And how thou pleasest, God, dispose the day! Exeunt.

[Scene IV. France. The field of battle.]

Alarum. Excursions. Enter PISTOL, FRENCH SOLDIER, BOY.

PISTOL Yield, cur!

FRENCH SOLDIER Je pense que vous êtes le gentilhomme de bonne qualité.°

PISTOL Qualitie calmie custure me!° Art thou a gentleman? What is thy name? Discuss.

FRENCH SOLDIER O Seigneur Dieu!

PISTOL

O Signieur Dew should be a gentleman.

Perpend° my words, O Signieur Dew, and mark:

O Signieur Dew, thou diest on point of fox,°

Except, O signieur, thou do give to me

Egregious° ransom.

FRENCH SOLDIER O, prenez miséricorde, ayez pitié de moi!°

PISTOL

Moy° shall not serve; I will have forty moys,

Or I will fetch thy rim° out at thy throat

In drops of crimson blood.

FRENCH SOLDIER Est-il impossible d'échapper la force de ton bras?°

PISTOL Brass, cur?

115 in the trim (1) in fine fettle (2) fashionably attired 117 in fresher robes i.e., in heavenly robes 119 them the soldiers 128 I . . . ransom (ironic) 130 vaward vanguard IV.iv.2-3 Je . . . qualité I think you are a gentleman of high rank 4 Qualitie . . . me possibly a corruption of an Irish refrain to a popular song: "Calen o custure me," for "the girl from the (river) Suir" 8 Perpend consider 9 fox kind of sword 11 Egregious huge 12-13 O . . . moi O, have mercy, take pity on me! 14 Moy no coin so called existed;
possibly a reference to the measure, about a bushel 15 rim lining of the stomach 17-18 Est-il . . . bras Is there no way to escape the strength of your arm? (in Shakespeare's time the s in bras was still sounded before a pause)

69 bravely finely arrayed 70 expedience expedition, speed 80 compound make terms 83 englutted swallowed 84 mind remind 86 retire retreat (sarcastic) 91 achieve kill 101 reeking exhaling, rising 107 relapse of mortality (1) renewed deadliness (2) with a deadly rebound (?) 109 for . . . day i.e., (1) who mean business (2) who are not dressed in finery 111 painful arduous

Thou damnèd and luxurious mountain goat,^o
Offer'st me brass?

FRENCH SOLDIER O, pardonnez-moi!

PISTOL

Say'st thou me so? Is that a ton of moys?
Come hither, boy; ask me this slave in French
What is his name.

BOY Ecoutez: comment êtes-vous appelé?

FRENCH SOLDIER Monsieur le Fer.

BOY He says his name is Master Fer.

PISTOL Master Fer? I'll fer him, and firk^o him, and ferret^o him! Discuss the same in French unto him.

BOY I do not know the French for "fer," and "ferret," and "firk."

PISTOL Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.

FRENCH SOLDIER Que dit-il, monsieur?

BOY Il me commande de vous dire que vous faites vous prêt; car ce soldat ici est disposé tout à cette heure de couper votre gorge.^o

PISTOL

Owy, cuppele gorge, permafoy!

Peasant, unless thou give me crowns, brave crowns;

Or mangled shalt thou be by this my sword.

FRENCH SOLDIER O, je vous supplie, pour l'amour de Dieu, me pardonner! Je suis gentilhomme de bonne maison. Gardez ma vie, et je vous donnerai deux cents écus.^o

PISTOL

What are his words?

BOY He prays you to save his life; he is a gentleman of a good house, and for his ransom he will give you two hundred crowns.

PISTOL

Tell him my fury shall abate, and I

The crowns will take.

FRENCH SOLDIER Petit monsieur, que dit-il?

BOY Encore qu'il est contre son jurement de par-donner aucun prisonnier; néanmoins, pour les écus que vous l'avez promis, il est content de vous donner la liberté, le franchisement.

FRENCH SOLDIER Sur mes genoux je vous donne mille remerciements; et je m'estime heureux que je suis tombé entre les mains d'un chevalier, je pense, le plus brave, vaillant, et très distingué seigneur d'Angleterre.^o

PISTOL

Expound unto me, boy.

BOY He gives you, upon his knees, a thousand thanks, and he esteems himself happy that he hath fall'n into the hands of one (as he thinks) the most brave, valorous, and thrice-worthy signieur of England.

20 luxurious mountain goat lustful wild lecher 29 firk
a euphemistic pronunciation of the common four-letter obscenity 30 ferret go for, search out 34-37 Que . . .
gorge What does he say, sir? Boy He bids me tell you that you must prepare yourself, for this soldier intends to cut your throat immediately 41-44 O . . . écus O, I pray you, for the love of God, to pardon me. I am a gentleman of good house. Preserve my life, and I will give you two hundred écus 52-59 Encore . . . d'Angleterre I say again that it is against his oath to spare any prisoner; nevertheless, because of the écus you have promised him, he is willing to give you liberty, freedom. French Soldier On my knees I give you a thousand thanks; and I count myself happy that I have fallen into the hands of a knight, as I think, the bravest, most valiant, and eminent gentleman in England

PISTOL

As I suck blood, I will some mercy show!

Follow me.

BOY Suivez-vous le grand capitaine. [Exeunt PISTOL and FRENCH SOLDIER.] I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty^o a heart; but the saying is true, "The empty vessel makes the greatest sound." 70 Bardolph and Nym had ten times more valor than this roaring devil i' th' old play that everyone may pare his nails^o with a wooden dagger;^o and they are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal anything adventurously. I must stay with the lackeys with the 75 luggage of our camp—the French might have a good prey of us, if he knew of it, for there is none to guard it but boys. Exit.

[Scene V. France. Another part of the field.]

Enter CONSTABLE, ORLEANS, BOURBON, DAUPHIN, and RAMBURES.

CONSTABLE O diable!

ORLEANS O Seigneur! le jour est perdu, tout est
perdu!^o

DAUPHIN

Mort Dieu, ma vie! all is confounded, all!

Reproach and everlasting shame

Sits mocking in our plumes.

A short alarum.

O méchante^o fortune! Do not run away.

CONSTABLE

Why, all our ranks are broke.

DAUPHIN

O perdurable^o shame! Let's stab ourselves.

Be these the wretches that we played at dice for? 10

ORLEANS

Is this the king we sent to for his ransom?

BOURBON

Shame, and eternal shame, nothing but shame!

Let us die in honor. Once more back again!

And he that will not follow Bourbon now,

Let him go hence, and with his cap in hand

Like a base pander hold the chamber door

Whilst by a slave, no gentler^o than my dog,

His fairest daughter is contaminated.

CONSTABLE

Disorder, that hath spoiled^o us, friend us now!

Let us on^o heaps go offer up our lives.

ORLEANS

We are enow yet living in the field

To smother up the English in our throngs,

If any order might be thought upon.

BOURBON

The devil take order now! I'll to the throng;

Let life be short, else shame will be too long.

Exit [with others.]

69 empty cowardly 72-73 pare his nails clip his wings (a proverbial phrase) 73 wooden dagger weapon of the Vice in early Elizabethan plays

IV.v.2-3 O . . . perdu O sir, the day is lost, all is lost
7 méchante evil, spiteful 9 perdurable lasting 17 gentler
(1) more noble (2) less rough 19 spoiled ruined 20 on in

[Scene VI. France. Another part of the field.]

Alarum. Enter the KING and his TRAIN, [EXETER, and others,] with PRISONERS.

KING

Well have we done, thrice-valiant countrymen,
But all's not done; yet keep the French the field.

EXETER

The Duke of York commends him to your majesty.

KING

Lives he, good uncle? Thrice within this hour
I saw him down; thrice up again and fighting.
From helmet to the spur all blood he was.

EXETER

In which array, brave soldier, doth he lie,
Larding° the plain; and by his bloody side,
Yoke-fellow to his honor-owing° wounds,
The noble Earl of Suffolk also lies.

Suffolk first died; and York, all haggled° over,
Comes to him, where in gore he lay insteeped,
And takes him by the beard, kisses the gashes
That bloodily did yawn upon his face.

He cries aloud, "Tarry, my cousin Suffolk!
My soul shall thine keep company to heaven.
Tarry, sweet soul, for mine, then fly abreast;
As in this glorious and well-foughten field
We kept together in our chivalry!"

Upon these words I came, and cheered him up;
He smiled me in the face, raught° me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, "Dear my lord,
Commend my service to my sovereign."

So did he turn, and over Suffolk's neck
He threw his wounded arm, and kissed his lips;
And so, espoused to death, with blood he sealed
A testament of noble-ending love.

The pretty° and sweet manner of it forced
Those waters from me which I would have stopped;
But I had not so much of man in me,
And all my mother° came into mine eyes
And gave me up to tears.

KING

I blame you not;
For, hearing this, I must perforce compound°
With mistful eyes, or they will issue too.

Alarum.

But hark, what new alarum is this same?
The French have reinforced their scattered men.
Then every soldier kill his prisoners!
Give the word through.

Exit, [with others].

[Scene VII. France. Another part of the field.]

Enter FLUELLEN and GOWER.

FLUELLEN Kill the poys and the luggage? 'Tis expressly against the law of arms; 'tis as arrant a piece of knavery, mark you now, as can be offert—in your conscience, now, is it not?

GOWER 'Tis certain there's not a boy left alive, and the cowardly rascals that ran from the battle ha' done this slaughter; besides, they have burned and carried away all that was in the king's tent; wherefore the king most worthily hath caused every soldier to cut his prisoner's throat. O, 'tis a gallant king!

FLUELLEN Ay, he was porn at Monmouth, Captain Gower. What call you the town's name where Alexander the Pig was born?

GOWER Alexander the Great.

FLUELLEN Why, I pray you, is not "pig" great? The pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnanimous, are all one reckonings, save the phrase is a little variations.°

GOWER I think Alexander the Great was born in Macedon; his father was called Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

FLUELLEN I think it is in Macedon where Alexander is porn. I tell you, Captain, if you look in the maps of the 'orld, I warrant you sall find, in the comparisons between Macedon and Monmouth, that the situations, look you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedon, and there is also moreover a river at Monmouth. It is called Wye at Monmouth; but it is out of my prains what is the name of the other river. But 'tis all one;
'tis alike as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is salmons in both. If you mark Alexander's life well, Harry of Monmouth's life is come after it indifferent well, for there is figures° in all things. Alexander, God knows, and you know, in his rages, and his furies, and his wraths, and his cholers, and his moods, and his displeasures, and his indignations, and also being a little intoxicates in his prains, did, in his ales and his angers, look you, kill his best friend, Cleitus.

GOWER Our king is not like him in that; he never killed any of his friends.

FLUELLEN It is not well done, mark you now, to take the tales out of my mouth, ere it is made and finished.
I speak but in the figures and comparisons of it: as Alexander killed his friend Cleitus, being in his ales and his cups, so also Harry Monmouth, being in his right wits and his good judgments, turned away the fat knight with the great-belly° doublet—he was full of jests, and gipes, and knaveries, and mocks; I have forgot his name.

GOWER Sir John Falstaff.

FLUELLEN That is he: I'll tell you there is good men porn at Monmouth.

GOWER Here comes his majesty.

Alarum. Enter KING Harry and BOURBON, [WARWICK,
GLOUCESTER, EXETER, and others,] with PRISONERS.
Flourish.

KING

I was not angry since I came to France
Until this instant. Take a trumpet,° herald,
Ride thou unto the horsemen on yond hill:
If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or void the field: they do offend our sight.
If they'll do neither, we will come to them,

IV.vi.8 Larding enriching 9 owing owning 11 haggled mangled 21 raught reached 28 pretty lovely 31 mother inherited womanly feelings 33 compound come to terms

IV.vii.18 variations for varied 33 figures parallels 47 great-belly (1) styled with stuffed lining (2) large-sized (appropriate to Falstaff's girth) 55 trumpet trumpeter

And make them skirr^o away, as swift as stones
Enforcèd from the old Assyrian slings.
Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have,
And not a man of them that we shall take
Shall taste our mercy. Go and tell them so.

Enter MONTJOY.

EXETER

Here comes the herald of the French, my liege.

GLOUCESTER

His eyes are humbler than they used to be.

KING

How now? What means this, herald? Know'st thou not
That I have finèd^o these bones of mine for ransom?
Com'st thou again for ransom?

HERALD

No, great king.

I come to thee for charitable license,
That we may wander o'er this bloody field
To book^o our dead, and then to bury them;
To sort our nobles from our common men.
For many of our princes (woe the while!)
Lie drowned and soaked in mercenary blood;
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes, and their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock-deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk^o out their armèd heels at their dead masters,
Killing them twice. O, give us leave, great king,
To view the field in safety, and dispose
Of their dead bodies!

KING

I tell thee truly, herald,

I know not if the day be ours or no,
For yet a many of your horsemen peer^o
And gallop o'er the field.

HERALD

The day is yours.

KING

Praised be God, and not our strength for it!
What is this castle called that stands hard by?

HERALD

They call it Agincourt.

KING

Then call we this the field of Agincourt,
Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

FLUELLEN Your grandfather^o of famous memory, an't please your majesty, and your great-uncle Edward the Plack Prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, fought a most prave pattle here in France.

KING They did, Fluellen.

FLUELLEN Your majesty says very true. If your majesties is rememb'red of it, the Welshmen did good service in a garden where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps; which your majesty know to this hour is an honorable badge of the service;^o and I do believe your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy's day.

KING

I wear it for a memorable honor;
For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman.

60 skirr scurry 68 finèd paid as a fine (he staked his bones, and having won he now has every right to them) 72 book record 79 Yerk kick 84 peer are in sight 91 grandfather in fact Edward III was Henry V's great-grandfather 97-100 Welshmen . . . the service the custom is usually said to commemorate a British victory over the Saxons, A.D. 540

60 FLUELLEN All the water in Wye cannot wash your 105
Majesty's Welsh plood out of your pody, I can tell you that: God pless it, and preserve it, as long as it pleases his grace, and his majesty too!

KING Thanks, good my countryman.

FLUELLEN By Jeshu, I am your majesty's countryman, 110
I care not who know it! I will confess it to all the 'orld;
I need not to be ashamed of your majesty, praised be
God, so long as your majesty is an honest man.

KING

God keep me so!

Enter WILLIAMS.

Our heralds go with him;
Bring me just notice of the numbers dead 115
On both our parts.

[Exeunt HERALDS, MONTJOY, and others, including GOWER.]

Call yonder fellow hither.

EXETER Soldier, you must come to the king.

KING Soldier, why wear'st thou that glove in thy cap?

WILLIAMS And't please your majesty, 'tis the gage of 120
one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.

KING An Englishman?

WILLIAMS And't please your majesty, a rascal that swaggered with me last night; who, if alive, and ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take^o him a box o' th' ear; or if I can see my glove in his cap, 125 which he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear
(if alive), I will strike it out soundly.

KING What think you, Captain Fluellen, is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

FLUELLEN He is a craven and a villain else, and't 130
please your majesty, in my conscience.

KING It may be his enemy is a gentleman of great sort,^o quite from the answer of his degree.^o

FLUELLEN Though he be as good a gentleman as the 135 devil is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himself, it is necessary, look your grace, that he keep his vow and his oath.
If he be perjured, see you now, his reputation is as arrant a villain and a Jack-sauce^o as ever his black shoe trod upon God's ground and his earth, in my conscience, law! 140

KING Then keep thy vow, sirrah,^o when thou meet'st
the fellow.

WILLIAMS So I will, my liege, as I live.

KING Who serv'st thou under?

WILLIAMS Under Captain Gower, my liege. 145

FLUELLEN Gower is a good captain, and is good knowledge and literated in the wars.

KING Call him hither to me, soldier.

WILLIAMS I will, my liege. Exit.

KING Here, Fluellen, wear thou this favor for me, 150 and stick it in thy cap; when Alençon and myself were down together, I plucked this glove from his helm.
If any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alençon and an enemy to our person. If thou encounter any such, apprehend him, and^o thou dost me love. 155

FLUELLEN Your grace doo's me as great honors as can be desired in the hearts of his subjects. I would fain

124 take strike 133 sort rank; from . . . degree above that corresponding to his own rank 138 Jack-sauce saucy Jack 141 sirrah term of address to an inferior 155 and if see the man, that has but two legs, that shall find himself aggrieved at this glove; that is all. But I would fain see it once, and please God of his grace that I might see. 160

KING Know'st thou Gower?

FLUELLEN He is my dear friend, and please you.

KING Pray thee go seek him, and bring him to my tent.

FLUELLEN I will fetch him.

Exit. 165

KING

My Lord of Warwick, and my brother Gloucester, Follow Fluellen closely at the heels.

The glove which I have given him for a favor

May haply purchase him a box o' th' ear;

It is the soldier's. I by bargain should 170

Wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick:

If that the soldier strike him—as I judge

By his blunt bearing, he will keep his word—

Some sudden mischief may arise of it;

For I do know Fluellen valiant,

175

And, touched° with choler, hot as gunpowder,

And quickly will return an injury.

Follow, and see there be no harm between them.

Go you with me, uncle of Exeter.

Exeunt.

[Scene VIII. France. Another part of the field.]

Enter GOWER and WILLIAMS.

WILLIAMS I warrant it is to knight you, Captain.

Enter FLUELLEN.

FLUELLEN God's will and his pleasure, Captain, I beseech you now, come apace to the king. There is more good toward you peradventure than is in your knowledge to dream of. 5

WILLIAMS Sir, know you this glove?

FLUELLEN Know the glove? I know the glove is a glove.

WILLIAMS I know this, and thus I challenge it.

Strikes him.

FLUELLEN 'Sblood, an arrant traitor as any's in the 10 universal world, or in France, or in England!

GOWER How now, sir? You villain!

WILLIAMS Do you think I'll be forsworn?

FLUELLEN Stand away, Captain Gower. I will give treason his payment into plows, I warrant you. 15

WILLIAMS I am no traitor.

FLUELLEN That's a lie in thy throat. I charge you in his majesty's name apprehend him: he's a friend of the Duke Alençon's.

Enter WARWICK and GLOUCESTER.

WARWICK How now, how now? What's the matter? 20

FLUELLEN My Lord of Warwick, here is (praised be God for it!) a most contagious treason come to light, look you, as you shall desire in a summer's day. Here is his majesty.

Enter KING and EXETER.

KING How now? What's the matter? 25

FLUELLEN My liege, here is a villain and a traitor that, look your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Alençon.

WILLIAMS My liege, this was my glove, here is the fellow of it; and he that I gave it to in change promised 30 to wear it in his cap. I promised to strike him if he did. I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.

FLUELLEN Your majesty hear now, saving your majesty's manhood, what an arrant, rascally, beggarly, 35 lousy knave it is! I hope your majesty is pear me testimony and witness, and will avouchment,° that this is the glove of Alençon that your majesty is give me, in your conscience, now.

KING

Give me thy glove, soldier. Look, here is the fellow of it. 40

'Twas I indeed thou promised'st to strike;

And thou hast given me most bitter terms.

FLUELLEN And please your majesty, let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world.

KING How canst thou make me satisfaction? 45

WILLIAMS All offenses, my lord, come from the heart: never came any from mine that might offend your majesty.

KING It was ourself thou didst abuse.

WILLIAMS Your majesty came not like yourself: you 50 appeared to me but as a common man; witness the night, your garments, your lowliness. And what your highness suffered under that shape, I beseech you take it for your own fault, and not mine; for had you been as I took you for, I made no offense. Therefore I 55 beseech your highness pardon me.

KING

Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with crowns,

And give it to this fellow. Keep it, fellow,

And wear it for an honor in thy cap,

Till I do challenge it. Give him the crowns; 60

And, captain, you must needs be friends with him.

FLUELLEN By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his belly. Hold, there is twelve pence for you; and I pray you to serve God, and keep you out of prawls and prabbles, and quarrels and dissensions, and, I warrant you, it is the better for you. 65

WILLIAMS I will none of your money.

FLUELLEN It is with a good will, I can tell you; it will serve you to mend your shoes. Come, wherefore should you be so pashful? Your shoes is not so good. 70 'Tis a good silling, I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter [an English] HERALD.

KING

Now, herald, are the dead numb'red?

HERALD

Here is the number of the slaught'red French.

[Gives a paper.]

KING

What prisoners of good sort° are taken, uncle?

EXETER

Charles Duke of Orleans, nephew to the king; 75

John Duke of Bourbon and Lord Bouciqualt:

A C T V

Of other lords and barons, knights and squires,
Full fifteen hundred, besides common men.

KING

This note doth tell me of ten thousand French
That in the field lie slain. Of princes, in this number, 80
And nobles bearing banners,^o there lie dead
One hundred twenty-six; added to these,
Of knights, esquires, and gallant gentlemen,
Eight thousand and four hundred; of the which,
Five hundred were but yesterday dubbed knights. 85
So that in these ten thousand they have lost
There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries;
The rest are princes, barons, lords, knights, squires,
And gentlemen of blood and quality.
The names of those their nobles that lie dead: 90
Charles Delabreth, High Constable of France;
Jacques of Chatillon, Admiral of France;
The master of the crossbows, Lord Rambures;
Great Master of France, the brave Sir Guichard
Dauphin;
John Duke of Alençon; Anthony Duke of Brabant, 95
The brother to the Duke of Burgundy;
And Edward Duke of Bar; of lusty earls,
Grandpré and Roussi, Faulconbridge and Foix,
Beaumont and Marle, Vaudemont and Lestrale.
Here was a royal fellowship of death! 100
Where is the number of our English dead?

[HERALD gives another paper.]

Edward the Duke of York, the Earl of Suffolk,
Sir Richard Ketly, Davy Gam, esquire;
None else of name; and of all other men
But five-and-twenty. O God, thy arm was here! 105
And not to us, but to thy arm alone,
Ascribe we all! When, without stratagem,
But in plain shock and even play of battle,
Was ever known so great and little loss
On one part and on th' other? Take it, God, 110
For it is none but thine!

EXETER

'Tis wonderful!

KING

Come, go we in procession to the village;
And be it death proclaimed through our host
To boast of this, or take that praise from God
Which is His only. 115

FLUELLEN Is it not lawful, and please your majesty, to tell how many is killed?

KING

Yes, Captain; but with this acknowledgment,
That God fought for us.

FLUELLEN Yes, my conscience, he did us great good. 120

KING

Do we all holy rites:
Let there be sung "Non nobis" and "Te Deum,"
The dead with charity^o enclosed in clay,
And then to Calais; and to England then;
Where ne'er from France arrived more happy men. 125

Exeunt.

Enter CHORUS.

Vouchsafe to those that have not read the story
That I may prompt them; and of such as have,
I humbly pray them to admit th' excuse^o
