Of time, of numbers, and due course of things
Which cannot in their huge and proper life 5
Be here presented. Now we bear the king Toward Calais. Grant him there. There seen,
Heave him away upon your wingèd thoughts
Athwart the sea. Behold the English beach
Pales in^o the flood, with men, wives, and boys, 10
Whose shouts and claps outvoice the deep-mouthed sea,
Which, like a mighty whiffler^o fore the king,
Seems to prepare his way. So let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London.
So swift a pace hath thought that even now 15
You may imagine him upon Blackheath;
Where that his lords desire him to have borne
His bruised helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city. He forbids it,
Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride; 20
Giving full trophy, signal, and ostent^o
Quite from himself, to God. But now behold,
In the quick forge and working house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens!
The mayor and all his brethren in best sort^o— 25
Like to the senators of th' antique Rome,
With the plebeians swarming at their heels—
Go forth and fetch their conqu'ring Caesar in;
As, by a lower but by loving^o likelihood,
Were now the general^o of our gracious empress 30
(As in good time he may) from Ireland coming,
Bringing rebellion broachèd^o on his sword,
How many would the peaceful city quit
To welcome him! Much more, and much more cause,
Did they this Harry. Now in London place him; 35
As yet the lamentation of the French
Invites^o the King of England's stay at home;
The emperor's coming^o in behalf of France
To order peace between them; and omit
All the occurrences, whatever chanced, 40
Till Harry's back-return again to France.
There must we bring him; and myself have played^o
The interim, by rememb'ring you 'tis past.
Then brook^o abridgment; and your eyes advance,
After your thoughts, straight back again to France. 45

Exit.

81 bearing banners i.e., with coats of arms 123 charity pious concern

V.Cho.3 th' excuse i.e., the reasons why the actors rely on the Chorus rather than full stage enactment 10 Pales in encloses 12 whiffler officer who clears the way for a procession 21 trophy . . . ostent token, sign, and show (of victory) 25 sort array 29 loving lovingly anticipated 30 general i.e., the Earl of Essex, who left to suppress rebellion in Ireland on March 27, 1599 (by the end of June 1599 Essex's failure became obvious) 32 broachèd impaled 37 Invites i.e., gives excuse and safety for 38 emperor's coming the Holy Roman Emperor came to England, May 1, 1416 42 played filled up, represented 44 brook tolerate

[Scene I. France. The English camp.]

Enter FLUELLEN and GOWER.

GOWER Nay, that's right. But why wear you your leek today? Saint Davy's day is past.

FLUELLEN There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things. I will tell you ass my friend, Captain Gower: the rascally, scauld,^o beggarly, lousy, 5 praggings knave, Pistol—which you and yourself, and all the world, know to be no petter than a fellow, look you now, of no merits—he is come to me, and prings me pread and salt yesterday, look you, and bid me eat my leek. It was in a place where I could not breed no 10 contention with him; but I will be so bold as to wear it in my cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Enter PISTOL.

GOWER Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey cock. 15

FLUELLEN 'Tis no matter for his swellings nor his turkey cocks. God pless you, Aunchient Pistol! You scurvy, lousy knave, God pless you!

PISTOL

Ha, art thou bedlam?^o Dost thou thirst, base Trojan,^o To have me fold up Parca's^o fatal web? 20 Hence! I am qualmish at the smell of leek.

FLUELLEN I peseech you heartily, scurvy, lousy knave, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eat, look you, this leek. Because, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections, and your appetites and 25 your disgestions doo's not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

PISTOL

Not for Cadwallader^o and all his goats.^o

FLUELLEN There is one goat for you. (Strikes him.)

Will you be so good, scauld knave, as eat it? 30

PISTOL

Base Trojan, thou shalt die!

FLUELLEN You say very true, scauld knave, when God's will is. I will desire you to live in the meantime, and eat your victuals. Come, there is sauce for it. [Strikes him.] You called me yesterday mountain- 35 squire;^o but I will make you today a squire of low degree.^o I pray you fall to; if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek.

GOWER Enough, captain, you have astonished^o him.

FLUELLEN I say I will make him eat some part of my 40 leek, or I will peat his pate four days.—Bite, I pray you; it is good for your green^o wound, and your ploody coxcomb.^o

PISTOL Must I bite?

FLUELLEN Yes, certainly, and out of doubt, and out 45 of question too, and ambiguities.

PISTOL By this leek, I will most horribly revenge—I eat and eat—I swear^o—

FLUELLEN Eat, I pray you. Will you have some more sauce to your leek? There is not enough leek to swear 50 by.

PISTOL Quiet thy cudgel, thou dost see I eat.

FLUELLEN Much good do^o you, scauld knave, heartily. Nay, pray you throw none away, the skin is good for your broken coxcomb. When you take 55 occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray you mock at 'em; that is all.

PISTOL Good.

FLUELLEN Ay, leeks is good. Hold you, there is a groat to heal your pate. 60

PISTOL Me a groat?

FLUELLEN Yes verily, and in truth you shall take it, or I have another leek in my pocket which you shall eat.

PISTOL

I take thy groat in earnest^o of revenge. 65

FLUELLEN If I owe you anything, I will pay you in cudgels; you shall be a woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels. God bye^o you, and keep you, and heal your pate. Exit.

PISTOL

All hell shall stir for this! 70

GOWER Go, go; you are a counterfeit cowardly knave. Will you mock at an ancient tradition, begun upon an honorable respect,^o and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceased valor, and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words? I have seen you gleeking and 75 galling^o at this gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel. You find it otherwise, and henceforth let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well. Exit. 80

PISTOL

Doth Fortune play the huswife^o with me now?

News have I, that my Doll^o is dead i' th' spital Of malady of France;^o

And there my rendezvous^o is quite cut off.

Old I do wax, and from my weary limbs 85 Honor is cudgeled. Well, bawd I'll turn,

And something lean to^o cutpurse of quick hand.

To England will I steal, and there I'll steal;

And patches will I get unto these cudgeled scars, And swear I got them in the Gallia wars. Exit. 90

V.i.5 scauld scurvy 19 bedlam mad; Trojan boon companion, dissolute adventurer (slang) 20 Parca i.e., Parcae, the three Fates, said to spin the web of man's destiny (they cut the thread when the pattern was completed, so ending a life) 28 Cadwallader the last British king; goats inhabitants of the Welsh mountains and, hence, used contemptuously of Welshmen 35–36 mountain-squire owner of worthless land (term of contempt) 36–37 squire . . . degree reference to the title of a medieval metrical romance; also a quibble on "low," as opposed to "mountain," line 35 39 astonished stunned, dismayed 42 green raw 43 coxcomb (1) cap worn by a fool (2) head (ludicrously)

47–48 By . . . swear Pistol changes his tune as his view of the situation changes; Fluellen probably cudgels him on "revenge" and "swear" and is placated while he is actually eating 53 do i.e., may it do you 65 in earnest as a token 68 bye be with 73 respect regard, consideration 75–76 gleeking and galling gibing and annoying 81 huswife hussy 82 my Doll Doll Tearsheet (said to be in the spital—i.e., hospital—in II.i.76–79; a change or confusion in Shakespeare's mind must have been involved here, for Pistol's wife was Nell Quickly; or, perhaps, for "Doll" the text should read "Nell"—other proper names are confused in the Folio) 83 malady of France venereal disease 84 rendezvous refuge, retreat 87 something lean to have a leaning toward the profession of

[Scene II. France. An apartment in the French king's palace.]

Enter, at one door, KING HENRY, EXETER, BEDFORD, [GLOUCESTER,] WARWICK, [WESTMORELAND,] and other lords; at another, QUEEN Isabel, the King [of FRANCE], the Duke of BURGUNDY, [the Princess KATHERINE, ALICE,] and other FRENCH.

KING HENRY

Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met!^o
Unto our brother France and to our sister
Health and fair time of day; joy and good wishes
To our most fair and princely cousin Katherine;
And as a branch and member of this royalty,
By whom this great assembly is contrived,
We do salute you, Duke of Burgundy;
And, princes French, and peers, health to you all!

FRANCE

Right joyous are we to behold your face,
Most worthy brother England; fairly met;
So are you, princes English, every one.

QUEEN

So happy be the issue, brother England,
Of this good day and of this gracious meeting
As we are now glad to behold your eyes—
Your eyes which hitherto have borne in them,
Against the French that met them in their bent,^o
The fatal balls of murdering basilisks.^o
The venom of such looks, we fairly hope,
Have lost their quality, and that this day
Shall change all griefs and quarrels into love.

KING HENRY

To cry amen to that, thus we appear.

QUEEN

You English princes all, I do salute you.

BURGUNDY

My duty to you both, on^o equal love, Great Kings of France and England! That I have labored
With all my wits, my pains, and strong endeavors
To bring your most imperial majesties
Unto this bar^o and royal interview,
Your mightiness on both parts best can witness.
Since, then, my office hath so far prevailed
That, face to face and royal eye to eye,
You have congreeted,^o let it not disgrace me
If I demand before this royal view,
What rub,^o or what impediment there is
Why that the naked, poor, and mangled Peace,
Dear nurse of arts, plenties, and joyful births,
Should not, in this best garden of the world,
Our fertile France, put up her lovely visage.
Alas, she hath from France too long been chased!
And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,^o
Corrupting in it^o own fertility.
Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart,
Unpruned dies; her hedges even-pleached,^o

Like prisoners wildly overgrown with hair,
Put forth disordered twigs; her fallow leas^o
The darnel,^o hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon, while that the coulter^o rusts
That should deracinate^o such savagery;
The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip, burnet, and green clover,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness,^o and nothing teems^o
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies,^o burrs,
Losing both beauty and utility.
And all our vineyards, fallows, meads, and hedges,
Defective in their natures, grow to wildness,
Even so our houses, and ourselves, and children,
Have lost, or do not learn for want of time,
The sciences that should become our country;
But grow like savages—as soldiers will,
That nothing do but meditate on blood—
To swearing, and stern looks, diffused^o attire,
And everything that seems unnatural.
Which to reduce^o into our former favor^o
You are assembled; and my speech entreats
That I may know the let^o why gentle Peace
Should not expel these inconveniences,
And bless us with her former qualities.

KING HENRY

If, Duke of Burgundy, you would^o the peace,
Whose want gives growth to th' imperfections
Which you have cited, you must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands;
Whose tenors and particular effects
You have, enscheduled briefly, in your hands.

BURGUNDY

The king hath heard them; to the which as yet
There is no answer made.

KING HENRY

Well then, the peace,
Which you before so urged, lies in his answer.

FRANCE

I have but with a cursitory^o eye
O'er glanced the articles. Pleaseth your grace
To appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us once more, with better heed
To resurvey them, we will suddenly
Pass our accept and peremptory answer.^o

KING HENRY

Brother, we shall. Go, uncle Exeter,
And brother Clarence, and you, brother Gloucester,
Warwick, and Huntingdon—go with the king,
And take with you free power to ratify,
Augment, or alter, as your wisdoms best
Shall see advantageable for our dignity,
Anything in or out of our demands,
And we'll consign^o thereto. Will you, fair sister,
Go with the princes or stay here with us?

V.ii.1 Peace . . . met Peace, for which we are here met, be to this meeting 16 bent direction 17 basilisks (1) fabulous reptiles, said to kill with their breath and look (2) large cannon 23 on of 27 bar place of judgment 31 congreeted exchanged greetings 33 rub obstacle 39 on heaps fallen in ruin 40 it its 42 even-pleached neatly interwoven and trimmed

44 fallow leas unsown arable land 45 darnel ryegrass (injurious to growing grain) 46 coulter knife that precedes the ploughshare 47 deracinate root up 51 Conceives by idleness cf. the proverb, "Idleness is the mother of vice"; teems is brought forth 52 kecksies umbelliferous plants (e.g., cow parsley) 61 diffused disorderly 63 reduce restore; favor appearance 65 let hindrance 68 would desire 77 cursitory cursory 81–82 suddenly . . . answer in very short time deliver our accepted and conclusive answer 90 consign agree

QUEEN

Our gracious brother, I will go with them;
Haply a woman's voice may do some good
When articles too nicely^o urged be stood^o on.

KING HENRY

Yet leave our cousin Katherine here with us. 95
She is our capital demand, comprised
Within the fore-rank of our articles.

QUEEN

She hath good leave.

Exeunt omnes. Manet^o KING [HENRY] and KATHERINE, [with the gentlewoman ALICE].

KING HENRY

Fair Katherine, and most fair!
Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms
Such as will enter at a lady's ear, 100
And plead his love suit to her gentle heart?

KATHERINE Your majesty shall mock at me; I cannot speak your England.

KING HENRY O fair Katherine, if you will love me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear 105 you confess it brokenly with your English tongue. Do you like me, Kate?

KATHERINE Pardonnez-moi, I cannot tell wat is "like me."

KING HENRY An angel is like you, Kate, and you are 110 like an angel.

KATHERINE Que dit-il? Que je suis semblable à les anges?

ALICE Oui, vraiment, sauf votre grace, ainsi dit-il.^o

KING HENRY I said so, dear Katherine, and I must not 115 blush to affirm it.

KATHERINE O bon Dieu! les langues des hommes sont pleines de tromperies.

KING HENRY What says she, fair one? That the tongues of men are full of deceits? 120

ALICE Oui, dat de tongues of de mans is be full of deceits:—dat is de princesse.^o

KING HENRY The princess is the better Englishwoman.^o I' faith, Kate, my wooing is fit for thy 125 understanding; I am glad thou canst speak no better English, for if thou couldst, thou wouldst find me such a plain king that thou wouldst think I had sold my farm to buy my crown. I know no ways to mince it^o in love, but directly to say, "I love you." Then, if you urge me farther than to say, "Do you in faith?" 130
I wear out my suit.^o Give me your answer, i' faith, do;
and so clap hands,^o and a bargain. How say you,
lady?

KATHERINE Sauf votre honneur, me understand well.

KING HENRY Marry, if you would put me to verses, 135 or to dance for your sake, Kate, why, you undid me.
For the one I have neither words nor measure;^o and for the other, I have no strength in measure,^o yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could win a lady at 94 nicely minutely, scrupulously; stood insisted 98 s.d.

Manet remains (in Elizabethan stage directions the Latin third person singular commonly occurs with a plural subject) 112–14 Que . . . dit-il What does he say? That I am like the angels? Alice Yes, truly, save your grace, he says so 122 dat . . . princesse that is what the princess says 123–24 is . . . Englishwoman because she sees through flattery 128–29 mince it speak prettily 131 wear . . . suit spend all my courtship 132 clap hands shake hands (in token of a bargain) 137 measure meter 138 strength in measure ability for dancing

leapfrog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armor 140 on my back, under the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leap into a wife.^o Or if I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favors,
I could lay on like a butcher, and sit like a jackanapes,^o never off. But, before God, Kate, I cannot look 145 greenly,^o nor gasp out my eloquence, nor I have no cunning in protestation: only downright oaths, which I never use till urged, nor never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sunburning,^o that never looks in his 150 glass for love of anything he sees there, let thine eye be thy cook.^o I speak to thee plain soldier: if thou canst love me for this, take me; if not, to say to thee that I shall die, is true—but for thy love, by the Lord, no;
yet I love thee too. And while thou liv'st, dear Kate, 155 take a fellow of plain and uncoined^o constancy, for he perforce must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places; for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favors, they do always reason themselves out again. What! A 160 speaker is but a prater; a rhyme is but a ballad;^o a good leg will fall, a straight back will stoop, a black beard will turn white, a curled pate will grow bald, a fair face will wither, a full eye will wax hollow: but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and the moon, or rather, the sun, 165 and not the moon, for it shines bright and never changes, but keeps his course truly. If thou would have such a one, take me; and take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king. And what say'st thou then to my love? Speak, my fair—and fairly, I pray thee. 170

KATHERINE Is it possible dat I sould love de ennemie of France?

KING HENRY No, it is not possible you should love
the enemy of France, Kate; but in loving me you should love the friend of France: for I love France so 175 well, that I will not part with a village of it—I will have it all mine. And, Kate, when France is mine and I am yours, then yours is France, and you are mine.

KATHERINE I cannot tell wat is dat.

KING HENRY No, Kate? I will tell thee in French, 180 which I am sure will hang upon my tongue like a new-married wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off. Je quand sur le possession de France, et quand vous avez le possession de moi (let me see, what then? Saint Denis^o be my speed!), donc votre est 185 France, et vous êtes mienne.^o It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom as to speak so much more French; I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.

KATHERINE Sauf votre honneur, le français que vous 190
parlez, il est meilleur que l'anglais lequel je parle.^o

139–42 win . . . wife to "leap" and "vault" were common in bawdy senses, and clearly used so by Shakespeare in other plays 144 jackanapes ape 146 greenly foolishly, sheepishly 150 not worth sunburning so ugly that the sun cannot make it more so 151–52 thine . . . cook your eye present me more attractively than I would be without its help 156 uncoined (1) not yet current (2) unalloyed 161 ballad the most popular and unsophisticated verse form 185 Saint
Denis patron saint of France 183–86 Je . . . mienne
When I have possession of France, and when you have possession of me . . . then France is yours, and you are mine 190–91 Sauf . . . parle Save your honor, the French that you speak is better than the English that I speak

KING HENRY No, faith, is't not, Kate. But thy speaking of my tongue, and I thine, most truly-falsely,^o must needs be granted to be much at one.^o But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English? Canst thou 195 love me?

KATHERINE I cannot tell.^o

KING HENRY Can any of your neighbors tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know thou lovest me; and at night, when you come into your closet,^o you'll 200 question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will to her dispraise those parts in me that you love with your heart; but, good Kate, mock me mercifully, the rather, gentle princess, because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou beest mine, Kate—as I have a 205 saving faith within me tells me thou shalt—I get thee with scrambling,^o and thou must therefore needs prove a good soldier-breeder. Shall not thou and I, between Saint Denis and Saint George, compound a boy, half French, half English, that shall go to Constantinople,^o 210 and take the Turk by the beard? Shall we not? What say'st thou, my fair flower-de-luce?

KATHERINE I do not know dat.

KING HENRY No; 'tis hereafter to know, but now to promise. Do but now promise, Kate, you will endeavor 215 for your French part of such a boy; and for my English moiety take the word of a king, and a bachelor. How answer you, la plus belle Katherine du monde, mon très cher et devin déesse?^o

KATHERINE Your majestee ave fausse French enough 220 to deceive de most sage demoiselle dat is en France.

KING HENRY Now, fie upon my false French! By mine honor in true English, I love thee, Kate; by which honor I dare not swear thou lovest me, yet my blood begins to flatter me that thou dost, notwithstanding the poor and untempering^o effect of my visage. Now beshrew my father's ambition! He was thinking of civil wars when he got me, therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that when I come to woo ladies, I fright them. 230 But in faith, Kate, the elder I wax the better I shall appear. My comfort is that old age, that ill layer-up^o of beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face. Thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me, if thou wear me,^o better and better; and 235 therefore tell me, most fair Katherine, will you have me? Put off your maiden blushes; avouch the thoughts of your heart with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand, and say, "Harry of England, I am thine!" which word thou shalt no sooner bless mine ear withal, 240 but I will tell thee aloud, "England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine"; who, though I speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt find the best king of good fellows. Come, your answer in broken^o music; 245

193 truly-falsely in good faith but bad French and English
194 at one (1) alike (2) in sympathy 197 I cannot tell (1) I don't know (2) I cannot speak 200 closet private chamber
207 scrambling scrimmaging 210 Constantinople taken by the Turks in 1453, thirty-one years after Henry's death; throughout the sixteenth century Christian princes aspired to crusade against the Turks 218-19 la . . . déesse the fairest Katherine in the world, my dearest and divine goddess
226 untempering without softening influence 232 ill layer-up ill preserver, wrinkler 235 if . . . me if you possess me
245 broken arranged for parts for thy voice is music, and thy English broken; therefore, queen of all, Katherine, break thy mind to me in broken English: Wilt thou have me?

KATHERINE Dat is as it sall please de roi mon père.

KING HENRY Nay, it will please him well, Kate; it 250 shall please him, Kate.

KATHERINE Den it sall also content me.

KING HENRY Upon that I kiss your hand, and I call you my queen.

KATHERINE Laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez! Ma 255 foi, je ne veux point que vous abaissiez votre grandeur en baisant la main d'une de votre seigneurie indigne serviteur. Excusez-moi, je vous supplie, mon très puissant seigneur.^o

KING HENRY Then I will kiss your lips, Kate. 260

KATHERINE Les dames et demoiselles pour être baisées devant leur noces, il n'est pas la coutume de France.^o

KING HENRY Madame my interpreter, what says she?

ALICE Dat it is not be de fashion pour le ladies of 265 France—I cannot tell wat is "baiser" en Anglish.

KING HENRY To kiss.

ALICE Your majestee entendre better que moi.

KING HENRY It is not a fashion for the maids in France to kiss before they are married, would she say? 270

ALICE Oui, vraiment.

KING HENRY O Kate, nice^o customs cursy^o to great kings. Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list^o of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows 275 our places^o stops the mouth of all find-faults, as I will do yours for upholding the nice fashion of your country in denying me a kiss. Therefore patiently, and yielding. [Kisses her.] You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate: there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them 280 than in the tongues of the French council; and they should sooner persuade Harry of England than a general petition of monarchs. Here comes your father.

Enter the French POWER and the English LORDS.

BURGUNDY God save your majesty! My royal cousin, teach you our princess English? 285

KING HENRY I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her, and that is good English.

BURGUNDY Is she not apt?

KING HENRY Our tongue is rough, coz, and my condition^o is not smooth; so that, having neither the voice 290 nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her that he will appear in his true likeness.

BURGUNDY Pardon the frankness of my mirth if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her, you 295 must make a circle; if conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked and blind. Can you blame her then, being a maid yet rosed over with the virgin-crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance

255-59 Laissez . . . seigneur Stop, my lord, stop, stop! Indeed, I do not wish to lower your greatness by kissing the hand of your unworthy servant. Excuse me, I beg you, my most powerful lord 261-63 Les . . . France It is not customary in France for ladies and young girls to be kissed before their marriage 272 nice fastidious; cursy curtsy, bow 274 list limit, bound 275-76 follows our places is the consequence of our royal status 289-90 condition temperament of a naked blind boy in her naked° seeing self? It were, 300 my lord, a hard condition° for a maid to consign° to.

KING HENRY Yet they do wink° and yield, as love is blind and enforces.

BURGUNDY They are then excused, my lord, when they see not what they do. 305

KING HENRY Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent winking.

BURGUNDY I will wink° on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning; for maids well summered, and warm kept, are like flies at 310 Bartholomew-tide,° blind, though they have their eyes; and then they will endure handling which before would not abide looking on.

KING HENRY This moral ties me over° to time and a hot summer; and so I shall catch the fly, your cousin, 315 in the latter end, and she must be blind too.

BURGUNDY As love is, my lord, before it loves.

KING HENRY It is so; and you may, some of you, thank love for my blindness, who cannot see many a fair French city for one fair French maid that stands 320 in my way.

FRANCE Yes, my lord, you see them perspectively,° the cities turned into a maid; for they are all girdled with maiden walls that war hath never ent'red.

KING HENRY Shall Kate be my wife? 325

FRANCE So please you.

KING HENRY I am content, so the maiden cities you talk of may wait on her; so the maid that stood in the way for my wish shall show me the way to my will.°

FRANCE
We have consented to all terms of reason. 330

KING HENRY
Is't so, my lords of England?

WESTMORELAND
The king hath granted every article:
His daughter first; and in sequel, all,
According to their firm proposèd natures.

EXETER Only he hath not yet subscribed this: Where 335 your majesty demands that the King of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant,° shall name your highness in this form, and with this addition, in French, "Notre très cher fils Henri, Roi d'Angleterre, Héritier de France"; and thus in Latin, "Praeclarissimus 340 filius noster Henricus, Rex Angliae, et Haeres Franciae."

FRANCE
Nor this I have not, brother, so denied
But your request shall make me let it pass.

KING HENRY
I pray you then, in love and dear alliance, 345
Let that one article rank with the rest,
And thereupon give me your daughter.

FRANCE
Take her, fair son, and from her blood raise up
Issue to me, that the contending kingdoms

300 naked unprotected 301 condition (1) stipulation (2) state of being; consign agree 302 wink shut their eyes 308 wink give a significant look 311 Bartholomew-tide Saint Bartholomew's day is August 24; by this time flies have become torpid 314 ties me over restricts me 322 per- spectively as through an optical glass giving strange, displaced or broken images 329 will (1) desire (2) sexual desire 337 grant granting lands or titles

Of France and England, whose very shores look pale° 350
With envy of each other's happiness,
May cease their hatred, and this dear° conjunction Plant neighborhood° and Christian-like accord
In their sweet bosoms; that never war advance
His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France. 355

LORDS Amen!

KING HENRY
Now, welcome, Kate; and bear me witness all,
That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.

Flourish.

QUEEN
God, the best maker of all marriages,
Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one! 360
As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal
That never may ill office,° or fell jealousy,
Which troubles oft the bed of blessed marriage,
Thrust in between the paction° of these kingdoms 365
To make divorce of their incorporate° league;
That English may as French, French Englishmen,
Receive each other! God speak this Amen!

ALL Amen!

KING HENRY
Prepare we for our marriage; on which day, 370
My Lord of Burgundy, we'll take your oath,
And all the peers', for surety of our leagues.
Then shall I swear to Kate, and you to me,
And may our oaths well kept and prosp'rous be!

Sennet.° Exeunt.

[E P I L O G U E]

Enter CHORUS.

Thus far with rough, and all-unable pen,
Our bending° author hath pursued the story,
In little room confining mighty men,
Mangling by starts° the full course of their glory. 5
Small time: but in that small, most greatly lived
This star of England. Fortune made his sword;
By which, the world's best garden° he achieved;
And of it left his son imperial lord.
Henry the Sixth, in infant bands crowned king
Of France and England, did this king succeed; 10
Whose state so many had the managing,
That they lost France, and made his England bleed:
Which oft our stage hath shown;° and for their sake,
In your fair minds let this acceptance take.°

350 pale an allusion to the white cliffs bordering the English
Channel 352 dear (1) significant (2) loving (3) dearly bought (?) 353 neighborhood neighborliness 363 office performance of a function or duty 365 paction compact 366 incorporate united in one body (appropriate to both marriage and peace settlement) 374 s.d. Sennet trumpet call for the departure of a procession

Epi.2 bending (1) bending under the weight of his task (2)
"stooping to your clemency" (Hamlet, III.ii.153) 4 starts fits and starts 7 world's best garden i.e., France (cf. V.ii.36) 13 oft . . . shown a reference to 1, 2, and 3 Henry VI 14 this acceptance take this play find favor

THE TRAGEDY OF JULIUS CAESAR

EDITED BY WILLIAM AND BARBARA ROSEN

Introduction

Thomas Platter, a Swiss traveler to England, recorded his visit of September 21, 1599, to a London theater: at about two o'clock, after lunch, he and his party crossed the river, and in a house with a thatched roof saw an excellent performance of the tragedy of the first Emperor Julius Caesar. (Platter was mistaken in giving to Caesar the title of "Emperor," either because he was weak in history or because he was impressed by the imperious portrayal of the title role.) He went on to note that there was a cast of about fifteen, and that after the play, according to custom, there was a most elegant and curious dance, two participants being dressed in men's clothes, and two in women's.

The dance that Platter saw was the jig, and the play was undoubtedly Shakespeare's The Tragedy of Julius Caesar, performed at the newly constructed Globe Theatre. It is quite probable that Shakespeare wrote the play early in 1599, and it marks an important stage in his development. His previous work, Henry V (1599), was the last of a long series of English history plays; and while attention shifts to Roman times in Julius Caesar, Shakespeare incorporates those ideas of history that grew through the English plays. Starting as a chronicle of wars and bloody events, the histories progressively move toward a recognition of tragedy through historical process. As the histories unfold, Shakespeare's horror of civil war becomes increasingly apparent; and as the focus narrows to individual rulers, we see the development of his intense belief in the divine quality of kingship as the only possible safeguard against civil dissension.

In Julius Caesar Shakespeare continues to explore the drama of power politics and personal conscience; only now, as if to gain perspective on the great issues of the histories, he moves the setting to a more distant time. The shift to ancient history would have sharpened rather than blunted the play's contemporary relevance because of the acknowledged Elizabethan habit of viewing history as a series of object lessons for present conduct.

We must not forget how widespread was the longing for unshakable rule and how overwhelming was the dread of civil war at the time Julius Caesar was first performed. Elizabeth I had come to the throne in 1558 when the country was in such a state of rebellion and confusion that it seemed likely to slip back into the horrors of the Wars of the Roses. Elizabeth had given her subjects peace, and the nation had prospered; for many years she had been a strong ruler, despite the repeated Catholic claims that she was illegitimate and therefore not a true successor. Attempts at assassination had been many. By 1599 she was old and visibly failing. She had no direct heir; there was no one whose claim to the throne after her was beyond dispute. Childless like Caesar, she could pass on the office only by naming an heir, and this she refused to do, perhaps in order to prevent the growth of factions. The shadow of war and dissension grew ominous. In such circumstances, we see first among the issues of Julius Caesar the very topical and concrete problem of a disputed succession, and the more abstract problem of killing—and replacing—the ruler.

Even without Machiavelli many Elizabethans knew that the moral problems of government are not necessarily the same as the moral problems of men. It was precisely because Elizabeth had compromised her personal beliefs whenever the public interest demanded it that she had been so successful a ruler; indeed, in many cases it is still impossible to know what she as a private person believed. Mary Tudor, who had tried to rule in accordance with religious principles, had brought about years of bloodshed. The theory of divine grace accorded to the public actions of a duly appointed ruler was not childish authoritarianism but a philosophical way of resolving the well-perceived gap between what the man might believe and what the ruler must do.

When we view Julius Caesar in the light of the political considerations of its own time, many of the difficulties of the play can be seen in perspective. Caesar is proud, and destined for the punishment of hubris; he is, nonetheless, "the ruler" by ability as well as power, as Plutarch himself suggests in The Life of Julius Caesar, a primary source for Shakespeare's work:

. . . the Romans, inclining to Caesar's prosperity and taking the bit in the mouth, supposing that to be ruled by one man alone, it would be a good mean for them to take breath a little, after so many troubles and miseries as they had abidden in these civil wars, they chose him perpetual Dictator. . . . And now for himself, after he had ended his civil wars, he did so honorably behave himself, that there was no fault to be found in him. . . .

Plutarch goes on to list Caesar's achievements and enterprises, and suggests that his only failing is a desire to be called king. However, Caesar's personal faults have no bearing upon his public abilities.

Brutus is high-minded and disinterested, even though his love of political liberty leads him to transgress the rules of allegiance to a ruler and gratitude to a benefactor. His personal virtues, however, have no bearing upon his public abilities. He is naive enough to believe that a republic needs no power structure, that the removal of Caesar will simply allow power to flow back to the officers of the republic. But of course events prove otherwise, and he and Cassius are forced in their turn to assume power against those who would "destroy the revolution." Neither Brutus nor Cassius has the ability—or the right—to rule, and both are defeated. Yet the man who ultimately replaces them is not the man who roused the public against them, but the one whose impersonal manner from the beginning marks him as the next possessor of the power to rule—Octavius Caesar.

Brutus, Octavius, and Antony all become guilty as men. Brutus kills his friend; Octavius joins the others of the triumvirate in condemning innocent men to death; Antony deliberately rouses a mob and turns it loose to do what mischief it will. What they do, however, does not matter in considering the fitness of each to rule. Personal innocence or guilt is not in question, and we are not asked to feel that one man or another is "right." We are asked to see that while a just man in private life is to be praised, a just man in public life may very well bring about catastrophe. The wicked—or, like Caesar, the conceited and superstitious—may be the genius as a ruler. Man's worth as a private individual does not necessarily ensure his value as a public ruler. Less sentimental than many of his critics, Shakespeare sees that a morally repulsive act may at times be a politically desirable one; that a man who acts from the highest of motives may be too busy keeping his conscience clean to lead well; that a man who once does evil in the expectation that good will be the final result may be forced more deeply into self-deception and impotence than a man who acts simply from expediency. But he also sees that the pursuit of expediency and lack of scruple do not in themselves guarantee ability to govern—else why not, ultimately, an Antony in command?

There is a natural inclination to desire unequivocal answers and absolute judgments, to simplify events until they can be seen as black or white; and we are naturally bewildered when forced into a position that requires us to judge but forbids us the use of simple terms of reference. It is not surprising, therefore, that we may be confounded by Julius Caesar, for often we confront situations in which personalities and actions are neither wholly right nor wholly wrong. We cannot feel unreserved hate or love for any character; each seems to call for a different response as he reacts to the seemingly irreconcilable demands of public and private life. Caesar is deaf, aging, subject to epileptic fits, inclined to superstition, warmhearted to his friends in private yet inflexible in public. But if we can believe Antony at all, Caesar has a genuine love of his country. His fault is a kind of ecstasy that the exercise of his office brings upon him. As a private individual he shows many weaknesses;

as a public institution he sees himself superior to all ordinary dangers, and believes that his office is a power that must not be opposed. Indeed, Caesar constantly uses his name to speak of his alter ego, the dictator, and in an early speech to Antony, in which he reveals his distrust of Cassius, he sums up the two views of himself as he unwittingly contrasts two attitudes: the public office that is perfect, and the private individual who is defective. It is as though his public self is quite dissociated from his personal weaknesses:

I rather tell thee what is to be feared
Than what I fear; for always I am Caesar.
Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf,
And tell me truly what thou think'st of him. (I.ii.211–14)

Caesar may have a number of weaknesses, but none of the personal defects impair the spirit of Caesar—the capacity to rule. The play vividly demonstrates that there is more stability, freedom, and justice in Rome with Caesar alive than with Caesar dead.

We may be far more sympathetic to the personality of Brutus; yet we must admit that neither he nor Cassius has any specific charges that would warrant the killing of Caesar. Cassius derides Caesar's weaknesses. His attacks are the result of personal envy—why should the fact that Caesar failed in a swimming contest, or suffered from fever, make him contemptible as a ruler? And Brutus admits that he has no immediate cause for indicting his friend. His soliloquy at the beginning of Act II is an agonized attempt to reconcile the idea of tyranny with the personal Caesar he knows. He begins his analysis of the situation with the conclusion—"It must be by his death"—and then, unable to find anything concrete for which Caesar deserves death, he has to resort to possibilities and probabilities: "He would be crowned./How that might change his nature, there's the question." In the end he convinces himself of the necessity of murder by thinking not of what is but what might be, by imagining the future abuse of power, and finally, by employing false analogy:

And therefore think him as a serpent's egg
Which hatched, would as his kind grow mischievous,
And kill him in the shell. (II.i.32–34)

But Caesar is a man, not a serpent's egg; and Brutus is no less mistaken when he tries to kill the spirit of Caesar by doing away with the man. He only succeeds in killing the man, not his spirit—and this is forcefully dramatized when, after the assassination, the people are eager to transfer their allegiance to Brutus, just as they had abandoned Pompey for Caesar:

THIRD PLEBEIAN
Let him be Caesar.
FOURTH PLEBEIAN Caesar's better parts
Shall be crowned in Brutus. (III.ii.51–52)

It is not only Brutus' misfortune but his fault that his achievements turn out, ironically, to be the reverse of his best intentions. He brings to Rome anarchy and the horrors of civil war, not "Peace, freedom, and liberty."

In dramatizing the complex issues of power politics,

Julius Caesar offers no easy solution to problems that are no less baffling to our own age. Many will find that this work is one of Shakespeare's most perplexing, for it is disconcerting when a play—or history itself—appeals to man's earnest desire to judge actions in terms of simple, personal standards of right and wrong and then betrays and mocks his deepest convictions by suggesting that Power is better than Virtue, that efficiency may be preferable to goodness, or that conscience may be dangerously inadequate in determining political action.

An individual's scrupulous concern for morality may, indeed, be disastrously impolitic. Cassius leads Brutus to an abhorrent deed, but when the consequences involve Brutus in the exercise of power, Brutus continues to think and act in accordance with private morality. His scruples about killing Antony or about unjustly raising money hinder the success of the conspiracy. His wish to fight a pitched battle, to decide the matter once and for all, instead of following stratagems and winning by attrition, is also the decision of a man who refuses to take on the role of politician. It is noteworthy that Cassius, after his initial victory, consistently defers to Brutus' moral scruples; knowing him to be wrong in his strategy, he is still swayed by the very image of nobility for which Brutus was chosen as the figurehead of the conspiracy. The irony is unmistakable: the politic man sets up an image of virtue, dissociated from politics, to serve his own purposes, to endear him to the populace; but once that image is established, his freedom to act without it is curbed, and he is hampered in the achievement of his political ends by the very image he has fostered.

The spirit of Caesar that dominates the play is to be associated, finally, with the exercise of supreme power. When Caesar dies, power is without a master, and as such, indiscriminately destructive. Each man in his turn tries to grasp the lightning that has been set free, and is fearfully transformed, until finally it comes to rest upon the man who alone, by gift of personality and legitimate succession, may wield it unscathed.

Shakespeare fully delineates the intriguing pattern of shifting power as an old Caesar is succeeded by a young one. The politic Cassius gives in to an impolitic Brutus and both fail as a result. Antony, Octavius, and Lepidus begin with complete ruthlessness; however, this does not guarantee them power or even win the battle for them—their opponents defeat themselves through mistakes. Lepidus, the "straw man," is first burdened with responsibility, then eliminated; and afterward, effortlessly, Antony, the ruthless and emotional partner, is displaced by the man without a temperament, the personification of impersonal rule.

The transfer of power from Antony to Octavius is subtly and swiftly dramatized in V.i, when Octavius suddenly opposes Antony's command and leads his troops in his own way—"I do not cross you," he tells Antony, "but I will do so." From this point Antony refers to his partner as "Caesar," whereas until that moment he had called him only "Octavius." Even when Octavius asks for advice immediately after he has asserted his independence (V.i.23), Antony calls him "Caesar" before bidding him "Make forth." And soon afterward Octavius is seen as the one who is beginning to prevail; it is he who gives directions: "Come, Antony; away!" In the last scene of the play Octavius is in total charge of the action, while Antony is returned to his first prominent role, that of funeral orator. Antony may deliver the wonderful eulogy for Brutus, but Octavius, in businesslike fashion, gives the orders for burial, and without consulting or mentioning Antony, says to his former adversaries: "All that served Brutus, I will entertain them," as if he were in sole command. Finally, Octavius renders the play's concluding speech, which is conventionally given by the person of highest rank, whose task is to restore order to the state.

In portraying Octavius and describing his rise to power, Shakespeare departs from his primary source, Plutarch's Lives, and his changes are important for our understanding of the play. Plutarch's Octavius is not an exceptional soldier but an outwardly pleasant person of charm and wit, the very opposite of Shakespeare's characterization. And whereas Shakespeare's Octavius gains stature at the battle of Philippi, in Plutarch's The Life of Marcus Antonius he is sick at this time, and Antony "had the chiefest glory of all this victory." In Plutarch's Life of Marcus Brutus it is further reported that Octavius was absent from the battle; he had himself carried from his camp because of a friend's ominous dream, "and no man could tell what became of Octavius Caesar after he was carried out of his camp."

Shakespeare's independent treatment of Octavius reveals his conception of the kind of man who can wield power in the spirit of Caesar. Brutus, Cassius, and Antony grasp at power and are unable to retain it, perhaps because in exercising it they are more swayed by personal passions than Caesar. Octavius had no part in the murder; he is the only person in the play as free of the passions of love or hate as Caesar claimed to be. In his speech at the beginning of Act V he identifies himself with the spirit of Caesar, makes himself spiritually his heir, and assumes the duty of revenge:

Look,
I draw a sword against conspirators.
When think you that the sword goes up again?
Never, till Caesar's three and thirty wounds
Be well avenged; or till another Caesar
Have added slaughter to the sword of traitors.

(V.i.50-55)

At the close of the play we are meant to feel that the exercise of power necessary for these times has once more been placed in adequate hands. The spirit of Caesar, for good or ill, has not been put to rest.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCE

Shakespeare's main source for Julius Caesar was Sir Thomas North's Lives of the Noble Grecians and Romans, printed in 1579 and again in 1595, an English translation of Jacques Amyot's French version of Plutarch's Greek. A number of other sources have been suggested for this play, and discussions of these may be found in Geoffrey Bullough's Narrative and Dramatic Sources of Shakespeare (Vol. V), in the introduction to the New Arden edition of Julius Caesar, edited by T. S. Dorsch, and in Kenneth Muir's book, Shakespeare's Sources (Vol. I). None of the problematic sources has more than peripheral importance, whereas Shakespeare's use of Plutarch throughout the play is detailed, literal, and incontrovertible.

Sometimes Shakespeare seems to versify directly from the Lives; at other times he selects, cuts, compresses, and amalgamates events from the full range of Plutarch's material dealing with the history of Julius Caesar. One comes to a full understanding of Shakespeare's dramatic skills only by reading through Plutarch's comparisons of Demetrius with Antony, of Dion with Brutus, and the chapters on Julius Caesar, Brutus, and Antony, where we sometimes find three variant accounts of the same event, from each of which Shakespeare has taken some details to construct his own version.

The most puzzling aspect of Julius Caesar is its ambivalent attitude toward the main characters. The play is not wholly sympathetic to Caesar, the conspirators, Antony, or Octavius. Caesar is killed at the beginning of the third act, and the audience's involvement is so divided among the other characters that the play seems to have no single "hero." Shakespeare's dramatic construction here and in the other Roman plays may well be a reflection of Plutarch's method in the Comparisons, where he strives for an objective view of his subjects by alternating favorable and unfavorable assessments without giving final approval to either.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

The First Folio of 1623 provides us with the text for Julius Caesar; there are no early quarto editions. In setting this play for the press, the printer's compositors probably worked from the playhouse promptbook, for the Folio text contains remarkably few misprints, serious errors in punctuation, or misattribution of speeches. The stage directions, unusually numerous and detailed, also suggest a stage manager's prompt copy; stage directions like "Alarum still" and "Enter boy with wine and tapers" are obviously closely connected with actual performance.

In the present edition, the names of characters have been normalized so that Marullus appears for the Folio Murellus (and Murrellus), Casca for Caska, Lucilius for Lucillius. Occasionally the Folio uses the forms "Antonio" (I.ii.3, 4, 6, 190; I.iii.37), "Claudio" (IV.iii.239, 241, 241 s.d., 286), "Flavio," "Labio" (V.iii.108), "Octavio" (III.i.275 s.d., V.ii.4), "Varrus" (IV.iii.241, 241 s.d., 286); these are standardized, appearing as Antonius, Claudius, Flavius, Labeo, Octavius, and Varro. The present edition modernizes spelling and punctuation, corrects a few obvious misprints, translates the act divisions from Latin into English, expands the speech prefixes, and alters the lineation of a few passages. The only other substantial departures from the Folio are listed below, the present reading in boldface type and then the Folio's reading in roman.

I.iii.129 In favor's Is Fauors

II.i.40 ides first 213 eighth eight

II.ii.19 fought fight 23 did neigh do neigh 46 are heare

III.i.39 law lane 113 states State 115 lies lye 283 for from

III.ii.105 art are

IV.iii.247 not it not

V.i.41 teeth teethes

V.iii.104 Thasos Tharsus

V.iv.7 Lucilius [F omits, and prints "Lucilius" as the prefix to line 9]

THE TRAGEDY OF JULIUS CAESAR

[Dramatis Personae]

JULIUS CAESAR
OCTAVIUS CAESAR
MARCUS ANTONIUS
M. AEMILIUS LEPIDUS } triumvirs after the death of Julius Caesar
CICERO
PUBLIUS } senators
POPILIUS LENA
MARCUS BRUTUS
CASSIUS
CASCA
TREBONIUS
LIGARIUS } *conspirators against Julius
Caesar*
DECIUS BRUTUS
METELLUS CIMBER
CINNA FLAVIUS } tribunes
MARULLUS
ARTEMIDORUS OF CNIDOS a teacher of rhetoric
A SOOTHSAYER

CINNA a poet
ANOTHER POET
LUCILIUS
TITINIUS
MESSALA
YOUNG CATO } friends to Brutus and Cassius
VOLUMNIUS
VARRO
CLITUS
CLAUDIUS } servants to Brutus
STRATO
LUCIUS
DARDANIUS
PINDARUS servant to Cassius
CALPHURNIA wife to Caesar
PORTIA wife to Brutus
SENATORS CITIZENS GUARDS
ATTENDANTS ETC.

Scene: During most of the play, at Rome; afterward near Sardis, and near Philippi]

A C T I

Scene I. [Rome. A street.]

Enter FLAVIUS, MARULLUS, and certain COMMONERS over the stage.

FLAVIUS

Hence! Home, you idle creatures, get you home!
Is this a holiday? What, know you not,
Being mechanical,^o you ought not walk
Upon a laboring day without the sign
Of your profession?^o Speak, what trade art thou? 5

The decorative border shown above appeared on the first page of Julius Caesar in the First Folio edition of Shakespeare's plays, 1623.

I.i.3 mechanical of the working class 4-5 sign . . . profession mark of your trade, i.e., working clothes

CARPENTER Why, sir, a carpenter.

MARULLUS

Where is thy leather apron and thy rule?
What dost thou with thy best apparel on?
You, sir, what trade are you?

COBBLER Truly, sir, in respect of a fine^o workman, I 10 am but, as you would say, a cobbler.^o

MARULLUS

But what trade art thou? Answer me directly.^o

COBBLER A trade, sir, that, I hope, I may use with a safe conscience, which is indeed, sir, a mender of bad soles.^o 15

10 in . . . fine in comparison with a skilled 11 cobbler (1) shoemaker (2) bungler 12 directly straightforwardly 15 soles pun on souls

FLAVIUS

What trade, thou knave? Thou naughty^o knave, what trade?

COBBLER Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out^o with me: yet, if you be out,^o sir, I can mend you.^o

MARULLUS

What mean'st thou by that? Mend me, thou saucy fellow?

COBBLER Why, sir, cobble you.

FLAVIUS

Thou art a cobbler, art thou?

COBBLER Truly, sir, all that I live by is with the awl: I meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor women's matters; but withal,^o I am indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes: when they are in great danger, I recover^o them. 25 As proper men as ever trod upon neat's leather^o have gone upon my handiwork.

FLAVIUS

But wherefore art not in thy shop today?

Why dost thou lead these men about the streets?

COBBLER Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get 30 myself into more work. But indeed, sir, we make holiday to see Caesar and to rejoice in his triumph.^o

MARULLUS

Wherefore rejoice? What conquest brings he home?

What tributaries^o follow him to Rome,

To grace in captive bonds his chariot wheels? 35

You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things!

O you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome,

Knew you not Pompey?^o Many a time and oft

Have you climbed up to walls and battlements,

To tow'rs and windows, yea, to chimney tops, 40

Your infants in your arms, and there have sat

The livelong day, with patient expectation,

To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome.

And when you saw his chariot but appear,

Have you not made an universal shout,

That Tiber trembled underneath her banks

To hear the replication^o of your sounds

Made in her concave shores?^o

And do you now put on your best attire?

And do you now cull out a holiday?

And do you now strew flowers in his way

That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood?^o

Be gone!

Run to your houses, fall upon your knees,

Pray to the gods to intermit^o the plague

That needs must light on this ingratitude.

FLAVIUS

Go, go, good countrymen, and, for this fault,

Assemble all the poor men of your sort;

Draw them to Tiber banks and weep your tears

Into the channel, till the lowest stream

Do kiss the most exalted shores of all.^o

Exeunt all the COMMONERS.

16 naughty worthless 17 out angry 18 be out have worn-out shoes; mend you (1) mend your shoes (2) improve your character 24 withal (1) nevertheless (2) with awl (3) with all 25 recover (1) resole (2) cure 26 neat's leather cattle's hide 32 triumph triumphal celebration 34 tributaries captives 38 Pompey defeated by Caesar in 48 B.C., later murdered 47 replication echo 48 concave shores hollowed-out banks 52 in . . . blood as the conqueror of Pompey's sons 55 intermit hold back 61 most . . . all highest water mark

See, whe'r^o their basest mettle^o be not moved;

They vanish tongue-tied in their guiltiness.

Go you down that way towards the Capitol;

This way will I. Disrobe the images, 65

If you do find them decked with ceremonies.^o

MARULLUS

May we do so?

You know it is the feast of Lupercal.^o

FLAVIUS

It is not matter; let no images

Be hung with Caesar's trophies. I'll about 70

And drive away the vulgar^o from the streets;

So do you too, where you perceive them thick.

These growing feathers plucked from Caesar's wing

Will make him fly an ordinary pitch,^o

Who else would soar above the view of men 75

And keep us all in servile fearfulness.

Exeunt.

[Scene II. A public place.]

Enter CAESAR, ANTONY (for the course), CALPHURNIA, PORTIA, DECIUS, CICERO, BRUTUS, CASSIUS, CASCA, a SOOTHSAYER; after them, MARULLUS and FLAVIUS.

CAESAR

Calphurnia!

CASCA Peace, ho! Caesar speaks.

CAESAR

Calphurnia!

CALPHURNIA Here, my lord.

CAESAR

Stand you directly in Antonius' way

When he doth run his course. Antonius!

ANTONY

Caesar, my lord? 5

CAESAR

Forget not in your speed, Antonius,

To touch Calphurnia; for our elders say

The barren, touchèd in this holy chase,

Shake off their sterile curse.

ANTONY

I shall remember:

When Caesar says "Do this," it is performed. 10

CAESAR

Set on, and leave no ceremony out.

SOOTHSAYER Caesar!

CAESAR Ha! Who calls? 55

CASCA

Bid every noise be still; peace yet again!

CAESAR

Who is it in the press^o that calls on me? 15

I hear a tongue, shriller than all the music,

Cry "Caesar." Speak; Caesar is turned to hear.

SOOTHSAYER

Beware the ides of March.^o

CAESAR

What man is that?

62 whe'r whether; mettle (1) substance (2) disposition 66 ceremonies robes (or ornaments) 68 Lupercal fertility festival held on February 15; Caesar's triumph really took place in the previous October, but Shakespeare combines events and shortens time spans for dramatic effect 71 vulgar common people 74 pitch height

I.ii.15 press crowd 18 ides of March March 15

BRUTUS

A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March.

CAESAR

Set him before me; let me see his face.

20

CASSIUS

Fellow, come from the throng; look upon Caesar.

CAESAR

What say'st thou to me now? Speak once again.

SOOTHSAYER

Beware the ides of March.

CAESAR

He is a dreamer, let us leave him. Pass.

Sennet.° Exeunt. Mane[n]t° BRUTUS and CASSIUS.

CASSIUS

Will you go see the order of the course?°

25

BRUTUS Not I.

CASSIUS I pray you do.

BRUTUS

I am not gamesome:° I do lack some part

Of that quick spirit° that is in Antony.

Let me not hinder, Cassius, your desires;

30

I'll leave you.

CASSIUS

Brutus, I do observe you now of late;

I have not from your eyes that gentleness

And show of love as I was wont° to have;

You bear too stubborn and too strange a hand°

35

Over your friend that loves you.

BRUTUS

Cassius,

Be not deceived: if I have veiled my look,

I turn the trouble of my countenance

Merely upon myself.° Vexèd I am

Of late with passions of some difference,° 40

Conceptions only proper to myself,°

Which give some soil,° perhaps, to my behaviors;

But let not therefore my good friends be grieved

(Among which number, Cassius, be you one)

Nor construe° any further my neglect

45

Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war,

Forgets the shows° of love to other men.

CASSIUS

Then, Brutus, I have much mistook your passion;°

By means whereof° this breast of mine hath buried

Thoughts of great value, worthy cogitations.

50

Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face?

BRUTUS

No, Cassius; for the eye sees not itself

But by reflection, by some other things.

CASSIUS

'Tis just:°

And it is very much lamented, Brutus,

55

That you have no such mirrors as will turn

Your hidden worthiness into your eye,

That you might see your shadow.° I have heard

Where many of the best respect° in Rome

(Except immortal Caesar), speaking of Brutus, 60

And groaning underneath this age's yoke,

Have wished that noble Brutus had his eyes.

BRUTUS

Into what dangers would you lead me, Cassius,

That you would have me seek into myself

For that which is not in me?

65

CASSIUS

Therefore, good Brutus, be prepared to hear;

And since you know you cannot see yourself

So well as by reflection, I, your glass,°

Will modestly discover to yourself

That of yourself which you yet know not of.

70

And be not jealous on° me, gentle Brutus:

Were I a common laughter,° or did use

To stale with ordinary oaths my love

To every new protester;° if you know

That I do fawn on men and hug them hard,

75

And after scandal° them; or if you know

That I profess myself° in banqueting

To all the rout,° then hold me dangerous.

Flourish° and shout.

BRUTUS

What means this shouting? I do fear the people

Choose Caesar for their king.

CASSIUS

Ay, do you fear it?

80

Then must I think you would not have it so.

BRUTUS

I would not, Cassius, yet I love him well.

But wherefore do you hold me here so long?

What is it that you would impart to me?

If it be aught toward the general good,°

85

Set honor in one eye and death i' th' other,

And I will look on both indifferently;°

For let the gods so speed me,° as I love

The name of honor more than I fear death.

CASSIUS

I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus,

90

As well as I do know your outward favor.°

Well, honor is the subject of my story.

I cannot tell what you and other men

Think of this life, but for my single self,

I had as lief not be,° as live to be 95

In awe of such a thing as I myself.°

I was born free as Caesar; so were you:

We both have fed as well, and we can both

Endure the winter's cold as well as he:

For once, upon a raw and gusty day,

100

58 shadow reflection, i.e., yourself as others see you 59 best respect highest reputation 68 glass mirror 71 jealous on suspicious of 72 laughter object of mockery 72-74 did

. . . protester were accustomed to make cheap with glib and frequent avowals to every new promiser of friendship

("ordinary" = [1] tavern [2] everyday) 76 scandal slander

77 profess myself declare my friendship 78 rout vulgar crowd 78 s.d. Flourish ceremonial sounding of trumpets

85 general good public welfare 87 indifferently impartially 88 speed me make me prosper 91 favor appearance

95 as . . . be just as soon not exist 96 such . . . myself i.e.,

another human being (Caesar)

24 s.d. Sennet flourish of trumpets marking ceremonial entrance or exit; Mane[n]t (they) remain 25 order . . . course progress of the race 28 gamesome (1) fond of sport (2) merry 29 quick spirit (1) lively nature (2) prompt obedience 34 wont accustomed 35 bear . . . hand treat too haughtily and distantly, keep at arm's length (the metaphor is from horsemanship) 37-39 if . . . myself If I have seemed withdrawn, it is because I am displeased with myself and no one else ("Merely" = wholly) 40 passions . . . difference conflicting emotions 41 Conceptions . . . myself ideas concerning me only 42 soil blemish 45 construe interpret 47 shows manifestations 48 passion feelings 49 By means whereof as a consequence of which 54 just true

The troubled Tiber chafing with^o her shores,
 Caesar said to me "Dar'st thou, Cassius, now
 Leap in with me into this angry flood,
 And swim to yonder point?" Upon the word,
 Accout' red^o as I was, I plungèd in
 And bade him follow: so indeed he did.
 The torrent roared, and we did buffet it
 With lusty sinews, throwing it aside
 And stemming it with hearts of controversy.^o
 But ere we could arrive the point proposed,
 Caesar cried "Help me, Cassius, or I sink!"
 I, as Aeneas,^o our great ancestor,
 Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder
 The old Anchises bear, so from the waves of Tiber
 Did I the tired Caesar. And this man
 Is now become a god, and Cassius is
 A wretched creature, and must bend his body
 If Caesar carelessly but nod on him.
 He had a fever when he was in Spain,
 And when the fit was on him, I did mark
 How he did shake; 'tis true, this god did shake.
 His coward lips did from their color fly,^o
 And that same eye whose bend^o doth awe the world
 Did lose his^o luster; I did hear him groan;
 Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans
 Mark him and write his speeches in their books,
 Alas, it cried, "Give me some drink, Titinius,"
 As a sick girl. Ye gods! It doth amaze me,
 A man of such a feeble temper^o should
 So get the start of^o the majestic world,
 And bear the palm^o alone.

Shout. Flourish.

BRUTUS

Another general shout?
 I do believe that these applauses are
 For some new honors that are heaped on Caesar.

CASSIUS

Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow world
 Like a Colossus,^o and we petty men
 Walk under his huge legs and peep about
 To find ourselves dishonorable^o graves.
 Men at some time are masters of their fates:
 The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,^o
 But in ourselves, that we are underlings.
 Brutus and Caesar: what should be in that "Caesar"?
 Why should that name be sounded^o more than yours?
 Write them together, yours is as fair a name;
 Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well;

105

110

115

120

125

130

135

140

145

Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with 'em,
 "Brutus" will start^o a spirit as soon as "Caesar."
 Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
 Upon what meat doth this our Caesar feed,
 That he is grown so great? Age, thou art shamed!
 Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods!
 When went there by an age, since the great flood,^o
 But it was famed with^o more than with one man?
 When could they say (till now) that talked of Rome,
 That her wide walks encompassed but one man?
 Now is it Rome indeed, and room^o enough,
 When there is in it but one only man.
 O, you and I have heard our fathers say,
 There was a Brutus^o once that would have brooked^o
 Th' eternal devil to keep his state in Rome
 As easily as a king.

150

155

160

BRUTUS

That you do love me, I am nothing jealous;^o
 What you would work me to,^o I have some aim;^o
 How I have thought of this, and of these times,
 I shall recount hereafter. For this present,
 I would not so (with love I might entreat you)
 Be any further moved. What you have said
 I will consider; what you have to say
 I will with patience hear, and find a time
 Both meet^o to hear and answer such high things.
 Till then, my noble friend, chew^o upon this:
 Brutus had rather be a villager
 Than to repute himself a son of Rome
 Under these hard conditions as this time
 Is like to lay upon us.

165

170

CASSIUS

I am glad

175

That my weak words have struck but thus much show
 Of fire from Brutus.

Enter CAESAR and his TRAIN.^o

BRUTUS

The games are done, and Caesar is returning.

CASSIUS

As they pass by, pluck Casca by the sleeve,
 And he will (after his sour fashion) tell you
 What hath proceeded worthy note today.

180

BRUTUS

I will do so. But look you, Cassius,
 The angry spot doth glow on Caesar's brow,
 And all the rest look like a chidden train:
 Calphurnia's cheek is pale, and Cicero
 Looks with such ferret^o and such fiery eyes
 As we have seen him in the Capitol,
 Being crossed in conference^o by some senators.

185

CASSIUS

Casca will tell us what the matter is.

CAESAR Antonius.

190

ANTONY Caesar?

147 start raise 152 great flood classical story told of the drowning of all mankind except Deucalion and his wife Pyrrha, spared by Zeus because of their virtue 153 But . . . with without the age being made famous by 156 Rome . . . room homonyms, hence a pun 159 a Brutus Lucius Junius Brutus helped expel the Tarquins and found the Republic in 509 B.C.; brooked tolerated 162 nothing jealous not at all doubtful 163 work me to persuade me of; aim idea 170 meet suitable 171 chew reflect 177 s.d. Train retinue 186 ferret ferretlike (a ferret is a vicious, weasel-like animal with red eyes) 188 conference debate

101 chafing with raging against 105 Accout' red fully armed 109 stemming . . . controversy moving forward against it (1) aggressively (2) in rivalry 112 Aeneas legendary founder of the Roman state, and hero of Virgil's Aeneid; Anchises was his feeble father 122 His . . . fly the color fled from his lips like a deserter fleeing from his banner in battle ("color" = [1] hue [2] banner) 123 bend glance 124 his its 129 feeble temper weak constitution 130 get . . . of outdistance 131 bear the palm carry off the victor's prize 136 Colossus an immense statue of Apollo, said to straddle the entrance to the harbor of Rhodes so that ships sailed under its legs 138 dishonorable because we are dominated by Caesar 140 stars destinies (in Shakespeare's day one's temperament, and therefore one's actions and course of life, were thought to be largely determined by the position of the planets at one's birth) 143 sounded (1) spoken (2) proclaimed by trumpet

CAESAR

Let me have men about me that are fat,
Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep a-nights.
Yond Cassius has a lean and hungry look;
He thinks too much: such men are dangerous.

195

ANTONY

Fear him not, Caesar, he's not dangerous;
He is a noble Roman, and well given.^o

CAESAR

Would he were fatter! But I fear him not.
Yet if my name were liable to fear,^o
I do not know the man I should avoid
So soon as that spare Cassius. He reads much,
He is a great observer, and he looks
Quite through the deeds^o of men. He loves no plays,
As thou dost, Antony; he hears no music;^o
Seldom he smiles, and smiles in such a sort^o
As if he mocked himself, and scorned his spirit
That could be moved to smile at anything.
Such men as he be never at heart's ease
Whiles they behold a greater than themselves,
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be feared
Than what I fear; for always I am Caesar.
Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf,
And tell me truly what thou think'st of him.

200

205

210

Sennet. Exeunt CAESAR and his TRAIN.

CASCA

You pulled me by the cloak; would you speak with me?

215

BRUTUS

Ay, Casca; tell us what hath chanced today,
That Caesar looks so sad.^o

CASCA

Why, you were with him, were you not?

BRUTUS

I should not then ask Casca what had chanced.

CASCA

Why, there was a crown offered him; and being offered him, he put it by^o with the back of his hand, thus; and then the people fell a-shouting.

220

BRUTUS

What was the second noise for?

CASCA

Why, for that too.

225

CASCA

Why, for that too.

BRUTUS

Was the crown offered him thrice?
CASCA Ay, marry,^o was't, and he put it by thrice, every time gentler than other; and at every putting-by mine honest neighbors shouted.

230

CASSIUS

Who offered him the crown?

CASCA

Why, Antony.

BRUTUS

Tell us the manner of it, gentle Casca.

CASCA

I can as well be hanged as tell the manner of it:
it was mere foolery; I did not mark it. I saw Mark

197 given disposed 199 if . . . fear if the idea of fear could ever be associated with me 203 through the deeds to the hidden motives of actions 204 hears no music cf. Merchant of Venice, V.i.83 ff.: "The man that hath no music in himself, Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds, Is fit for treasons . . . Let no such man be trusted" 205 sort manner 217 sad serious 221 put it by pushed it aside 228 marry truly (originally an oath, "By the Virgin Mary")

Antony offer him a crown—yet 'twas not a crown 235 neither, 'twas one of these coronets^o—and, as I told you, he put it by once; but for all that, to my thinking, he would fain^o have had it. Then he offered it to him again; then he put it by again; but to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it. And then he 240 offered it the third time. He put it the third time by;
and still^o as he refused it, the rabblement hooted, and clapped their chopt^o hands, and threw up their sweaty nightcaps,^o and uttered such a deal of stinking breath because Caesar refused the crown, that it had, almost, 245 choked Caesar; for he swounded^o and fell down at it.
And for mine own part, I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips and receiving the bad air.

CASSIUS

But, soft,^o I pray you; what, did Caesar swoound?

CASCA

He fell down in the market place, and foamed at mouth, and was speechless.

BRUTUS

'Tis very like he hath the falling-sickness.^o

CASSIUS

No, Caesar hath it not; but you, and I,
And honest Casca, we have the falling-sickness.^o

CASCA

I know not what you mean by that, but I am sure Caesar fell down. If the tag-rag people^o did not clap him and hiss him, according as he pleased and displeased them, as they use^o to do the players in the theater, I am no true man.

BRUTUS

What said he when he came unto himself?

260

CASCA

Marry, before he fell down, when he perceived the common herd was glad he refused the crown, he plucked me ope his doublet^o and offered them his throat to cut. An I had been a man of any occupation,^o if I would not have taken him at a word, I would I 265 might go to hell among the rogues. And so he fell.
When he came to himself again, he said, if he had done or said anything amiss, he desired their worships to think it was his infirmity. Three or four wenches, where I stood, cried "Alas, good soul!" and forgave 270 him with all their hearts; but there's no heed to be taken of them; if Caesar had stabbed their mothers, they would have done no less.

BRUTUS

And after that, he came thus sad away?

CASCA

Ay.

275

CASSIUS

Did Cicero say anything?

CASCA

Ay, he spoke Greek.

CASSIUS

To what effect?

CASCA

Nay, an I tell you that, I'll ne'er look you i' th' face again. But those that understood him smiled at 280 one another and shook their heads; but for mine own part, it was Greek to me. I could tell you more news

236 coronets small crowns 238 fain gladly 242 still every time 243 chopt rough, chapped 244 nightcaps contemptuous term for workingmen's caps 246 swounded fainted 249 soft slowly, "wait a minute" 252 falling-sickness epilepsy 254 we . . . falling-sickness we are becoming powerless and are declining under Caesar's rule 256 tag-rag people ragged mob 258 use are accustomed 263 ope his doublet open his jacket 264 man . . .
occupation (1) workingman, i.e., one of those to whom Caesar's speech was addressed (2) "man of action" too: Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Caesar's images, are put to silence.^o Fare you well. There was more foolery yet, if I could remember it. 285

CASSIUS Will you sup with me tonight, Casca?

CASCA No, I am promised forth.^o

CASSIUS Will you dine with me tomorrow?

CASCA Ay, if I be alive, and your mind hold,^o and your dinner worth the eating. 290

CASSIUS Good; I will expect you.

CASCA Do so. Farewell, both. Exit.

BRUTUS

What a blunt fellow is this grown to be! He was quick mettle^o when he went to school.

CASSIUS

So is he now in execution 295

Of any bold or noble enterprise, However he puts on this tardy form.^o This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit,^o Which gives men stomach^o to digest^o his words With better appetite. 300

BRUTUS

And so it is. For this time I will leave you. Tomorrow, if you please to speak with me, I will come home to you; or if you will, Come home to me, and I will wait for you.

CASSIUS

I will do so. Till then, think of the world.^o 305

Exit BRUTUS.

Well, Brutus, thou art noble; yet I see Thy honorable mettle^o may be wrought From that it is disposed;^o therefore it is meet^o That noble minds keep ever with their likes; For who so firm that cannot be seduced? 310

Caesar doth bear me hard,^o but he loves Brutus. If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius, He should not humor^o me. I will this night, In several hands,^o in at his windows throw, As if they came from several citizens, 315

Writings, all tending to^o the great opinion That Rome holds of his name; wherein obscurely Caesar's ambition shall be glanced at.^o And after this, let Caesar seat him sure;^o For we will shake him, or worse days endure. Exit. 320

[Scene III. A street.]

Thunder and lightning. Enter [from opposite sides] CASCA and CICERO.

CICERO

Good even, Casca; brought you Caesar home?

Why are you breathless? And why stare you so?

284 put to silence silenced (by being stripped of their tribuneships, and perhaps exiled or executed) 287 am promised forth have a previous engagement 289 hold does not change 294 quick mettle of a lively disposition 297 tardy form sluggish appearance 298 wit intelligence 299 stomach appetite; digest digest 305 the world the current state of affairs 307 mettle (1) disposition (2) metal 307–08 wrought . . . disposed shaped (like iron) contrary to its natural form 308 meet fitting 311 bear me hard hold a grudge against me 313 humor cajole, influence by flattery 314 several hands different handwritings 316 tending to bearing on 318 glanced at indirectly touched upon 319 seat him sure make his position secure

CASCA

Are not you moved, when all the sway of earth^o Shakes like a thing unfirm? O Cicero, I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds 5 Have rived^o the knotty oaks, and I have seen Th' ambitious ocean swell and rage and foam, To be exalted with^o the threat'ning clouds; But never till tonight, never till now, Did I go through a tempest dropping fire. 10

Either there is a civil strife in heaven, Or else the world, too saucy^o with the gods, Incenses them to send destruction.

CICERO

Why, saw you anything more wonderful?

295 CASCA

A common slave—you know him well by sight— 15 Held up his left hand, which did flame and burn Like twenty torches joined, and yet his hand, Not sensible of^o fire, remained unscorched. Besides—I ha' not since put up my sword— 20 Against^o the Capitol I met a lion, Who glazed^o upon me and went surly by Without annoying me. And there were drawn Upon a heap^o a hundred ghastly^o women, Transformed with their fear, who swore they saw Men, all in fire, walk up and down the streets. 25

And yesterday the bird of night^o did sit Even at noonday upon the market place, Hooting and shrieking. When these prodigies^o Do so conjointly meet,^o let not men say, "These are their reasons, they are natural," 30

For I believe they are portentous things Unto the climate^o that they point upon.

CICERO

Indeed, it is a strange-disposed^o time: But men may construe things after their fashion,^o Clean from the purpose^o of the things themselves. 35

Comes Caesar to the Capitol tomorrow?

CASCA

He doth; for he did bid Antonius Send word to you he would be there tomorrow.

CICERO

Good night then, Casca; this disturbèd sky Is not to walk in.

CASCA

Farewell, Cicero. Exit CICERO. 40

Enter CASSIUS.

CASSIUS

Who's there?

CASCA

A Roman.

CASSIUS

Casca, by your voice.

CASCA

Your ear is good. Cassius, what night is this?

I.iii.3 all . . . earth the whole scheme of things ("sway" = ruling principle) 6 rived split 8 exalted with elevated to 12 saucy presumptuous 18 sensible of sensitive to 20 Against directly opposite (?) near (?) 21 glazed stared 22–23 drawn . . . heap huddled together 23 ghastly white as ghosts 26 bird of night owl (a bird of ill omen) 28 prodigies unnatural events 29 conjointly meet coincide 32 climate region 33 strange-disposed abnormal 34 after their fashion in their own way 35 Clean . . . purpose quite contrary to the real meaning

CASSIUS

A very pleasing night to honest men.

CASCA

Who ever knew the heavens menace so?

CASSIUS

Those that have known the earth so full of faults. 45
 For my part, I have walked about the streets,
 Submitting me unto the perilous night,
 And thus unbracèd,° Casca, as you see,
 Have bared my bosom to the thunder-stone;°
 And when the cross° blue lightning seemed to open 50
 The breast of heaven, I did present myself
 Even in the aim and very flash of it.

CASCA

But wherefore did you so much tempt the heavens?
 It is the part° of men to fear and tremble
 When the most mighty gods by tokens° send 55
 Such dreadful heralds to astonish° us.

CASSIUS

You are dull, Casca, and those sparks of life
 That should be in a Roman you do want,°
 Or else you use not. You look pale, and gaze,
 And put on° fear, and cast yourself in wonder,° 60
 To see the strange impatience of the heavens;
 But if you would consider the true cause
 Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
 Why birds and beasts from quality and kind,°
 Why old men,° fools, and children calculate,° 65
 Why all these things change from their ordinance,°
 Their natures and preformèd faculties,°
 To monstrous quality,° why, you shall find
 That heaven hath infused them with these spirits°
 To make them instruments of fear and warning 70
 Unto some monstrous state.°
 Now could I, Casca, name to thee a man
 Most like this dreadful night,
 That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars
 As doth the lion in the Capitol; 75
 A man no mightier than thyself, or me,
 In personal action, yet prodigious° grown
 And fearful,° as these strange eruptions° are.

CASCA

'Tis Caesar that you mean, is it not, Cassius?

CASSIUS

Let it be who it is; for Romans now 80
 Have thews° and limbs like to their ancestors;
 But, woe the while!° Our fathers' minds are dead,
 And we are governed with our mothers' spirits;
 Our yoke and sufferance° show us womanish.

CASCA

Indeed, they say the senators tomorrow 85

Mean to establish Caesar as a king;
 And he shall wear his crown by sea and land,
 In every place save here in Italy.

CASSIUS

I know where I will wear this dagger then;
 Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassius. 90
 Therein,° ye gods, you make the weak most strong;
 Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do defeat.
 Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
 Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
 Can be retentive to° the strength of spirit; 95
 But life, being weary of these worldly bars,
 Never lacks power to dismiss itself.
 If I know this, know all the world besides,
 That part of tyranny that I do bear
 I can shake off at pleasure. Thunder still.

CASCA

So can I; 100
 So every bondman in his own hand bears
 The power to cancel his captivity.

CASSIUS

And why should Caesar be a tyrant then?
 Poor man, I know he would not be a wolf
 But that he sees the Romans are but sheep; 105
 He were no lion, were not Romans hinds.°
 Those that with haste will make a mighty fire
 Begin it with weak straws. What trash is Rome,
 What rubbish and what offal, when it serves
 For the base matter to illuminate 110
 So vile a thing as Caesar! But, O grief,
 Where hast thou led me? I, perhaps, speak this Before a willing bondman; then I know
 My answer must be made.° But I am armed,
 And dangers are to me indifferent.° 115

CASCA

You speak to Casca, and to such a man
 That is no fleering° tell-tale. Hold, my hand.
 Be factious° for redress of all these griefs,
 And I will set this foot of mine as far
 As who goes farthest. [They clasp hands.]

CASSIUS

There's a bargain made. 120
 Now know you, Casca, I have moved already
 Some certain of the noblest-minded Romans
 To undergo° with me an enterprise
 Of honorable dangerous consequence;
 And I do know, by this° they stay for me 125
 In Pompey's porch;° for now, this fearful night,
 There is no stir or walking in the streets,
 And the complexion of the element°
 In favor's like° the work we have in hand,
 Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible. 130

Enter CINNA.

CASCA

Stand close° awhile, for here comes one in haste.

91 Therein i.e., in suicide 95 be retentive to hold in 106 hinds (1) female deer (2) peasants (3) servants 114
 My . . . made I shall have to answer for my words 115 indifferent unimportant 117 fleering flattering 118 factious active in forming a political party 123 undergo undertake 125 by this by this time 126 Pompey's porch portico of Pompey's Theater 128 complexion . . . element condition of the sky 129 In favor's like in appearance is like 131 close hidden

48 unbracèd with doublet unfastened 49 thunder-stone lightning bolt 50 cross jagged 54 part role 55 tokens prophetic signs 56 astonish stun 58 want lack 60 put on display; cast . . . wonder are amazed 64 from . . . kind
 (act) against their natures 65 old men the senile, in second childhood; calculate make predictions (cf. proverb, "Fools and children often do prophesy") 66 ordinance natural order of behavior 67 preformèd faculties innate qualities 68 monstrous quality unnatural condition 69 spirits supernatural powers 71 monstrous state abnormal state of affairs 77 prodigious ominous 78 fearful causing fear; eruptions disturbances of nature 81 thews sinews 82 woe
 the while alas for the times 84 yoke and sufferance servitude and the meek endurance of it

CASSIUS

'Tis Cinna; I do know him by his gait;
He is a friend. Cinna, where haste you so?

CINNA

To find out you. Who's that? Metellus Cimber?

CASSIUS

No, it is Casca, one incorporate
To^o our attempts. Am I not stayed^o for, Cinna?

CINNA

I am glad on't.^o What a fearful night is this!
There's two or three of us have seen strange sights.

CASSIUS

Am I not stayed for? Tell me.

CINNA

Yes, you are.

O Cassius, if you could
But win the noble Brutus to our party—

CASSIUS

Be you content. Good Cinna, take this paper,
And look you lay it in the praetor's chair,^o
Where Brutus may but find it;^o and throw this
In at his window; set this up with wax
Upon old Brutus'^o statue. All this done,
Repair^o to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us.
Is Decius^o Brutus and Trebonius there?

CINNA

All but Metellus Cimber, and he's gone
To seek you at your house. Well, I will hie,^o
And so bestow these papers as you bade me.

CASSIUS

That done, repair to Pompey's Theater. Exit CINNA.
Come, Casca, you and I will yet ere day
See Brutus at his house; three parts of him
Is ours already, and the man entire
Upon the next encounter yields him ours.

CASCA

O, he sits high in all the people's hearts;
And that which would appear offense in us,
His countenance,^o like richest alchemy,^o
Will change to virtue and to worthiness.

CASSIUS

Him, and his worth, and our great need of him,
You have right well conceited.^o Let us go,
For it is after midnight, and ere day
We will awake him and be sure of him. Exeunt.

A C T I I

[Scene I. Rome.]

Enter BRUTUS in his orchard.^o

BRUTUS

What, Lucius, ho!

I cannot, by the progress of the stars,
Give guess how near to day. Lucius, I say!
I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly.

When, Lucius, when? Awake, I say! What, Lucius! 5

135

Enter LUCIUS.

LUCIUS Called you, my lord?

BRUTUS

Get me a taper^o in my study, Lucius.
When it is lighted, come and call me here.

LUCIUS I will, my lord.

Exit.

BRUTUS

140

It must be by his death; and for my part, 10
I know no personal cause to spurn at^o him,
But for the general.^o He would be crowned.
How that might change his nature, there's the question.
It is the bright day that brings forth the adder,
And that craves^o wary walking. Crown him that, 15
And then I grant we put a sting in him
That at his will he may do danger^o with.
Th' abuse of greatness is when it disjoins
Remorse^o from power; and, to speak truth of Caesar,
I have not known when his affections swayed^o 20
More than his reason. But 'tis a common proof^o
That lowliness^o is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face;
But when he once attains the upmost round,^o 25
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees^o
By which he did ascend. So Caesar may;
Then lest he may, prevent.^o And, since the quarrel^o
Will bear no color^o for the thing he is, 30
Fashion it^o thus: that what he is, augmented,
Would run to these and these extremities;^o
And therefore think him as a serpent's egg
Which hatched, would as his kind^o grow mischievous,
And kill him in the shell. 160

Enter LUCIUS.

LUCIUS

The taper burneth in your closet,^o sir. 35
Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper thus sealed up, and I am sure
It did not lie there when I went to bed.

Gives him the letter.

BRUTUS

Get you to bed again; it is not day.
Is not tomorrow, boy, the ides of March? 40

LUCIUS I know not, sir.

7 taper candle 11 spurn at rebel (literally, "kick") against 12 general public welfare 15 craves demands 17 danger harm 18-19 disjoins Remorse separates mercy 20 affections swayed emotions ruled 21 common proof matter of common experience 22 lowliness humility 24 round rung 26 base degrees (1) low steps of the ladder
(2) less important grades of office (3) common people 28 prevent take action to forestall; quarrel cause of complaint 29 bear no color have no excuse 30 Fashion it construct the case 31 these . . . extremities such and such extremes (of tyranny) 33 as his kind according to its nature 35 closet study

135-36 incorporate To intimately bound up with 136 stayed waited 137 on't of it (i.e., that Casca has joined the conspiracy) 143 praetor's chair official chair in which Brutus would sit as chief magistrate, an office next in rank to consul 144 Where . . . it where only Brutus may find it 146 old Brutus' Lucius Junius Brutus, founder of the Roman Republic 147 Repair go 148 Decius actually Decimus, a kinsman of Marcus Brutus; the error is found in North's Plutarch 150 hie hurry 159 countenance support; alchemy the "science" by which many experimenters tried to turn base metals into gold 162 conceited (1) understood (2) described in an elaborate simile
II.i.s.d. orchard garden

BRUTUS

Look in the calendar and bring me word.

LUCIUS I will, sir.

Exit.

BRUTUS

The exhalations° whizzing in the air

Give so much light that I may read by them.

45

Opens the letter and reads.

"Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake, and see thyself.

Shall Rome, &c.° Speak, strike, redress.

Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake."

Such instigations have been often dropped

Where I have took them up.

50

"Shall Rome, &c." Thus must I piece it out:°

Shall Rome stand under one man's awe?° What,

Rome?

My ancestors did from the streets of Rome

The Tarquin drive, when he was called a king.

"Speak, strike, redress." Am I entreated

55

To speak and strike? O Rome, I make thee promise,

If the redress will follow, thou receivest

Thy full petition at the hand of° Brutus!

Enter LUCIUS.

LUCIUS

Sir, March is wasted fifteen days.

Knock within.

BRUTUS

'Tis good. Go to the gate; somebody knocks.

60

*[Exit LUCIUS.]*Since Cassius first did whet° me against Caesar,
I have not slept.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing

And the first motion,° all the interim is

Like a phantasma,° or a hideous dream.

65

The genius° and the mortal instruments°

Are then in council, and the state of a man,

Like to a little kingdom, suffers then

The nature of an insurrection.°

Enter LUCIUS.

LUCIUS

Sir, 'tis your brother° Cassius at the door,

70

Who doth desire to see you.

BRUTUS

Is he alone?

LUCIUS

No, sir, there are moe° with him.

BRUTUS

Do you know them?

LUCIUS

No, sir; their hats are plucked about their ears,

And half their faces buried in their cloaks,

That by no means I may discover° them

75

By any mark of favor.°

BRUTUS

Let 'em enter. [Exit LUCIUS.]

44 exhalations meteors 47, 51 &c. read "et cetera" 51 piece it out develop the meaning 52 under . . . awe in awe of one man 58 Thy . . . of all you ask from 61 whet incite 64 motion prompting 65 phantasma hallucination 66 genius guardian spirit (?) reasoning spirit (?); mortal instruments the emotions and physical powers (which should be ruled and guided by reason) 69 nature . . . insurrection a kind of insurrection 70 brother brother-in-law (Cassius was married to Brutus' sister) 72 moe more 75 discover recognize 76 favor appearance

They are the faction. O conspiracy,

Sham'st thou to show thy dang'rous brow by night,

When evils are most free?° O, then by day

Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough

80

To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, conspiracy;

Hide it in smiles and affability:

For if thou path,° thy native semblance° on,

Not Erebus° itself were dim enough

To hide thee from prevention.°

85

Enter the conspirators, CASSIUS, CASCA, DECIUS, CINNA, METELLUS [Cimber], and TREBONIUS.

CASSIUS

I think we are too bold upon° your rest.

Good morrow, Brutus; do we trouble you?

BRUTUS

I have been up this hour, awake all night.

Know I these men that come along with you?

CASSIUS

Yes every man of them; and no man here

90

But honors you; and every one doth wish

You had but that opinion of yourself

Which every noble Roman bears of you.

This is Trebonius.

BRUTUS

He is welcome hither.

CASSIUS

This, Decius Brutus.

BRUTUS

He is welcome too.

95

CASSIUS

This, Casca; this, Cinna; and this, Metellus Cimber.

BRUTUS

They are all welcome.

What watchful cares° do interpose themselves

Betwixt your eyes and night?

CASSIUS

Shall I entreat a word?

100

They whisper.

DECIUS

Here lies the east; doth not the day break here?

CASCA No.

CINNA

O, pardon, sir, it doth; and yon gray lines

That fret° the clouds are messengers of day.

CASCA

You shall confess that you are both deceived.

105

Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises,

Which is a great way growing on° the south,

Weighing° the youthful season of the year.

Some two months hence, up higher toward the north

He first presents his fire; and the high° east

110

Stands as the Capitol, directly here.

BRUTUS

Give me your hands all over, one by one.

CASSIUS

And let us swear our resolution.

79 evils . . . free evil things roam most freely 83 path walk (verb); native semblance true appearance 84 Erebus dark region between earth and Hades 85 from prevention from being forestalled and hindered 86 upon in intruding on 98 watchful cares cares that keep you awake 104 fret pattern, interlace 107 growing on tending toward 108 Weighing considering 110 high due

BRUTUS

No, not an oath. If not the face of men,[°]
 The sufferance[°] of our souls, the time's abuse[°]—
 If these be motives weak, break off betimes,[°]
 And every man hence to his idle bed.
 So let high-sighted[°] tyranny range[°] on Till each man drop by lottery.[°] But if these
 (As I am sure they do) bear fire enough
 To kindle cowards and to steel with valor
 The melting spirits of women, then, countrymen,
 What need we any spur but our own cause
 To prick[°] us to redress? What other bond
 Than secret Romans[°] that have spoke the word,
 And will not palter?[°] And what other oath
 Than honesty[°] to honesty engaged[°]
 That this shall be, or we will fall for it?
 Swear[°] priests and cowards and men cautelous,[°]
 Old feeble carrions[°] and such suffering souls
 That welcome wrongs; unto bad causes swear
 Such creatures as men doubt; but do not stain
 The even[°] virtue of our enterprise,
 Nor th' insuppressive mettle[°] of our spirits,
 To think that or our cause or[°] our performance
 Did need an oath; when every drop of blood
 That every Roman bears, and nobly bears,
 Is guilty of a several bastardy[°]
 If he do break the smallest particle
 Of any promise that hath passed from him.

CASSIUS

But what of Cicero? Shall we sound him?
 I think he will stand very strong with us.

CASCA

Let us not leave him out.

CINNA

No, by no means.

METELLUS

O, let us have him, for his silver hairs
 Will purchase us a good opinion,[°]
 And buy men's voices to commend our deeds.
 It shall be said his judgment ruled our hands;
 Our youths and wildness shall no whit[°] appear,
 But all be buried in his gravity.[°]

BRUTUS

O, name him not! Let us not break with him;[°]
 For he will never follow anything
 That other men begin.

CASSIUS

Then leave him out.

CASCA

Indeed, he is not fit.

114 face of men sincere and resolute appearance of the conspirators, which should not be distrusted 115 sufferance patient endurance; time's abuse corruption of the age (i.e., Caesar's assumption of unconstitutional powers) 116 betimes immediately 118 high-sighted arrogant (viewing widely from on high, like a falcon ready to swoop on prey); range rove or fly in search of prey 119 by lottery by chance, i.e., at the tyrant's whim 124 prick urge 125 secret Romans the fact that we are Romans capable of maintaining secrecy 126 palter equivocate 127 honesty personal honor; engaged pledged 129 Swear bind by oath; cautelous deceitful 130 carrions wretches almost dead and rotting 133 even unblemished, perfect 134 insuppressive mettle indomitable temper 135 or . . . or either . . . or 138 guilty . . . bastardy guilty of an act not truly Roman 145 opinion reputation 148 no whit not in the slightest 149 gravity sobriety and stability (Latin gravitas) 150 break with him divulge our plan to him

DECIUS

Shall no man else be touched but only Caesar?

115 CASSIUS

Decius, well urged.[°] I think it is not meet
 Mark Antony, so well beloved of Caesar,
 Should outlive Caesar; we shall find of[°] him
 A shrewd contriver;[°] and you know, his means,
 If he improve[°] them, may well stretch so far
 As to annoy[°] us all; which to prevent,[°]
 Let Antony and Caesar fall together.

BRUTUS

Our course will seem too bloody, Caius Cassius,
 To cut the head off and then hack the limbs,
 Like wrath in death and envy[°] afterwards;
 For Antony is but a limb of Caesar.
 Let's be sacrificers, but not butchers, Caius.
 We all stand up against the spirit of Caesar,[°]
 And in the spirit of men there is no blood.
 O, that we then could come by[°] Caesar's spirit,
 And not dismember Caesar! But, alas,
 Caesar must bleed for it. And, gentle[°] friends,
 Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;
 Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
 Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds.
 And let our hearts, as subtle masters do,
 Stir up their servants[°] to an act of rage,
 And after seem to chide 'em. This shall make
 Our purpose necessary, and not envious;[°]
 Which so appearing to the common eyes,
 We shall be called purgers,[°] not murderers.
 And for Mark Antony, think not of him;
 For he can do no more than Caesar's arm
 When Caesar's head is off.

CASSIUS

Yet I fear him;

For in the ingrafted[°] love he bears to Caesar—

BRUTUS

Alas, good Cassius, do not think of him.
 If he love Caesar, all that he can do
 Is to himself—take thought[°] and die for Caesar.
 And that were much he should,[°] for he is given
 To sports, to wildness, and much company.

TREBONIUS

There is no fear[°] in him; let him not die,
 For he will live and laugh at this hereafter.

Clock strikes.

BRUTUS

Peace! Count the clock.

CASSIUS

The clock hath stricken three.

TREBONIUS

'Tis time to part.

CASSIUS

But it is doubtful yet

Whether Caesar will come forth today or no;

155 urged suggested 157 of in 158 shrewd contriver cunning and malicious plotter 159 improve make good use of 160 annoy harin; prevent forestall 164 envy malice, i.e., as though we were killing Caesar for personal spite and hatred 167 spirit of Caesar principles (of tyranny) for which Caesar stands 169 come by get possession of 171 gentle noble 176 servants (1) the hands (2) the passions 178 envious malicious 180 purgers healers 184 ingrafted firmly rooted 187 take thought grow melancholy with brooding 188 that . . . should that would be too much to expect of him 190 no fear nothing to fear

For he is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main^o opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies.^o
It may be these apparent prodigies,^o
The unaccustomed terror of this night,
And the persuasion of his augurers^o
May hold him from the Capitol today.

DECIUS

Never fear that. If he be so resolved,
I can o'ersway him;^o for he loves to hear
That unicorns may be betrayed with trees,^o
And bears with glasses,^o elephants with holes,^o
Lions with toils,^o and men with flatterers;
But when I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does, being then most flatterèd.
Let me work;
For I can give his humor^o the true bent,^o
And I will bring him to the Capitol.

CASSIUS

Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him.

BRUTUS

By the eighth hour; is that the uttermost?^o

CINNA

Be that the uttermost, and fail not then.

METELLUS

Caius Ligarius doth bear Caesar hard,^o
Who rated^o him for speaking well of Pompey.
I wonder none of you have thought of him.

BRUTUS

Now, good Metellus, go along by him.^o
He loves me well, and I have given him reasons;
Send him but hither, and I'll fashion^o him.

CASSIUS

The morning comes upon's; we'll leave you, Brutus.
And, friends, disperse yourselves; but all remember
What you have said, and show yourselves true Romans.

BRUTUS

Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily.
Let not our looks put on^o our purposes,
But bear it^o as our Roman actors do,
With untired spirits and formal constancy.^o
And so good morrow to you every one.

Exeunt. Manet^o BRUTUS.

Boy! Lucius! Fast asleep? It is no matter;
Enjoy the honey-heavy dew^o of slumber.
Thou hast no figures nor no fantasies^o
Which busy care draws in the brains of men;
Therefore thou sleep'st so sound.

Enter PORTIA.

195 PORTIA

Brutus, my lord.

BRUTUS

Portia, what mean you? Wherefore rise you now?
It is not for your health thus to commit
Your weak condition to the raw cold morning.

235

200 PORTIA

Nor for yours neither. Y'have ungently,^o Brutus, Stole from my bed; and yesternight at supper
You suddenly arose and walked about,
Musing and sighing, with your arms across;^o
And when I asked you what the matter was,
You stared upon me with ungentle looks.
I urged you further; then you scratched your head,
And too impatiently stamped with your foot.
Yet I insisted, yet you answered not,
But with an angry wafter^o of your hand
Gave sign for me to leave you. So I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience
Which seemed too much enkindled, and withal^o
Hoping it was but an effect of humor,^o
Which sometime hath his^o hour with every man.
It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep,
And could it work so much upon your shape
As it hath much prevailed on your condition,^o
I should not know you^o Brutus. Dear my lord,
Make me acquainted with your cause of grief.

240

245

210

250

255

BRUTUS

I am not well in health, and that is all.

PORTIA

Brutus is wise and, were he not in health,
He would embrace the means to come by it.

220 BRUTUS

Why, so I do. Good Portia, go to bed.

260

PORTIA

Is Brutus sick, and is it physical^o
To walk unbracèd^o and suck up the humors^o
Of the dank morning? What, is Brutus sick,
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night,^o
And tempt the rheumy and unpurgèd air^o
To add unto his sickness? No, my Brutus;
You have some sick offense^o within your mind,
Which by the right and virtue of my place^o
I ought to know of; and upon my knees
I charm^o you, by my once commended beauty,
By all your vows of love, and that great vow
Which did incorporate^o and make us one,
That you unfold to me, your self, your half,
Why you are heavy,^o and what men tonight
Have had resort to you; for here have been
Some six or seven, who did hide their faces
Even from darkness.

265

225

270

230

275

BRUTUS

Kneel not, gentle Portia.

237 ungently discourteously 240 across folded (a sign of melancholy) 246 wafter waving 249 withal also 250 effect of humor sign of a temporary mood 251 his its 254 condition disposition 255 know you recognize you as 261 physical healthy 262 unbracèd with doublet unfastened; humors dampness, mist 265 night night air was thought to be harmful, even poisonous 266 tempt . . . air risk the damp and unpurified (by the sun) air 268 sick offense sickness that harms 269 place situation (as wife) 271 charm entreat 273 incorporate make us one flesh (cf. Matthew 19:5, "They twain shall be one flesh") 275 heavy dejected

196 Quite . . . main at variance with the strong 197 ceremonies omens 198 apparent prodigies obvious signs of disaster 200 augurers augurs (priests who foretold, from omens, the future) 203 o'ersway him persuade him to change his mind 204 betrayed with trees tricked into running at a tree (at the last moment its prey steps aside so that the horn is deeply embedded and the unicorn is helpless) 205 glasses mirrors; holes pitfalls 206 toils nets, snares 210 humor temperament; bent direction 213 uttermost latest 215 bear Caesar hard has a grudge against Caesar 216 rated berated 218 him his house 220 fashion shape (to our designs) 225 put on display 226 bear it play our parts 227 formal constancy consistent decorum 228 s.d. Manet remains 230 dew refreshment 231 figures . . . fantasies both words specify figments of the imagination

PORTIA

I should not need, if you were gentle Brutus.
 Within the bond of marriage, tell me, Brutus, 280
 Is it excepted° I should know no secrets
 That appertain to you? Am I your self
 But, as it were, in sort or limitation,°
 To keep with you at meals, comfort your bed,
 And talk to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the suburbs° 285
 Of your good pleasure? If it be no more,
 Portia is Brutus' harlot, not his wife.

BRUTUS

You are my true and honorable wife,
 As dear to me as are the ruddy drops
 That visit my sad heart. 290

PORTIA

If this were true, then should I know this secret.
 I grant I am a woman; but withal°
 A woman that Lord Brutus took to wife.
 I grant I am a woman; but withal
 A woman well reputed, Cato's daughter.°
 Think you I am no stronger than my sex,
 Being so fathered and so husbanded?
 Tell me your counsels,° I will not disclose 'em.
 I have made strong proof of my constancy,°
 Giving myself a voluntary wound
 Here in the thigh; can I bear that with patience,
 And not my husband's secrets?

BRUTUS

O ye gods,
 Render me worthy of this noble wife!

Knock.

Hark, hark! One knocks. Portia, go in a while,
 And by and by thy bosom shall partake 305
 The secrets of my heart.
 All my engagements° I will construe° to thee,
 All the charactery of° my sad brows.
 Leave me with haste. Exit PORTIA.

Enter LUCIUS and [CAIUS] Ligarius.

Lucius, who's that knocks?

LUCIUS

Here is a sick man that would speak with you. 310

BRUTUS

Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake of.
 Boy, stand aside. Caius Ligarius! How?°

CAIUS

Vouchsafe° good morrow from a feeble tongue.

BRUTUS

O, what a time have you chose out, brave° Caius,
 To wear a kerchief!° Would you were not sick! 315

281 excepted made an exception that 283 in . . . limitation after a fashion or within a certain restriction (legal terms) 285 suburbs outlying districts (where the brothels and least respectable taverns were found) 292 withal at the same time 295 Cato's daughter Marcus Porcius Cato was famous for his integrity; he joined Pompey against Caesar and killed himself at Utica in 46 B.C. to avoid capture; he was Brutus' uncle as well as father-in-law 298 counsels secrets 299 proof . . . constancy trial of my resolution 307 engagements commitments; construe explain 308 charactery of writing upon, i.e., wrinkles of grief and worry 312 How How are you? 313 Vouchsafe please accept 314 brave noble 315 To . . . kerchief as a protection against drafts, i.e., to be sick

CAIUS

I am not sick, if Brutus have in hand
 Any exploit worthy the name of honor.

BRUTUS

Such an exploit have I in hand, Ligarius,
 Had you a healthful ear to hear of it.

CAIUS

By all the gods that Romans bow before, 320
 I here discard my sickness! Soul of Rome,
 Brave son, derived from honorable loins,°
 Thou, like an exorcist,° hast conjured up
 My mortifièd° spirit. Now bid me run,
 And I will strive with things impossible, 325
 Yea, get the better of them. What's to do?

BRUTUS

A piece of work that will make sick men whole.°

CAIUS

But are not some whole that we must make sick?

BRUTUS

That must we also. What it is, my Caius,
 I shall unfold to thee, as we are going 330
 To whom° it must be done.

CAIUS

Set on° your foot,
 And with a heart new-fired I follow you,
 To do I know not what; but it sufficeth
 That Brutus leads me on. Thunder.

BRUTUS

Follow me, then. Exeunt.

[Scene II. Caesar's house.]

Thunder and lightning. Enter Julius CAESAR in his nightgown.° 305

CAESAR

Nor heaven nor earth have been at peace tonight:
 Thrice hath Calphurnia in her sleep cried out,
 "Help, ho! They murder Caesar!" Who's within?

Enter a SERVANT.

SERVANT My lord?

CAESAR

Go bid the priests do present° sacrifice, 5
 And bring me their opinions of success.°

SERVANT I will, my lord. Exit.

Enter CALPHURNIA.

CALPHURNIA

What mean you, Caesar? Think you to walk forth?
 You shall not stir out of your house today.

CAESAR

Caesar shall forth. The things that threatened me 10
 Ne'er looked but on my back; when they shall see
 The face of Caesar, they are vanishèd.

CALPHURNIA

Caesar, I never stood on ceremonies,°
 Yet now they fright me. There is one within,

322 from honorable loins i.e., descent from Lucius Junius Brutus, founder of the Roman Republic 323 exorcist conjurer 324 mortifièd deadened 327 whole healthy 331 To whom to the house of him to whom; Set on advance II.ii.s.d. nightgown dressing gown 5 present immediate 6 opinions of success judgment as to the future course of events 13 stood on ceremonies paid attention to omens

Besides the things that we have heard and seen,
 Recounts most horrid sights seen by the watch.^o
 A lioness hath whelped in the streets,
 And graves have yawned, and yielded up their dead;
 Fierce fiery warriors fought upon the clouds
 In ranks and squadrons and right form^o of war,
 Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol;
 The noise of battle hurtled^o in the air,
 Horses did neigh and dying men did groan,
 And ghosts did shriek and squeal about the streets.
 O Caesar, these things are beyond all use,^o
 And I do fear them.

CAESAR What can be avoided
 Whose end is purposed by the mighty gods?
 Yet Caesar shall go forth; for these predictions
 Are to^o the world in general as to Caesar.

CALPHURNIA
 When beggars die, there are no comets seen;
 The heavens themselves blaze forth^o the death of princes.

CAESAR
 Cowards die many times before their deaths;
 The valiant never taste of death but once.
 Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
 It seems to me most strange that men should fear,
 Seeing that death, a necessary end,
 Will come when it will come.

Enter a SERVANT.

What say the augurers?

SERVANT
 They would not have you to stir forth today.
 Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
 They could not find a heart within the beast.

CAESAR
 The gods do this in shame of cowardice:
 Caesar should^o be a beast without a heart^o
 If he should stay at home today for fear.
 No, Caesar shall not. Danger knows full well
 That Caesar is more dangerous than he.
 We are two lions littered in one day,
 And I the elder and more terrible,
 And Caesar shall go forth.

CALPHURNIA Alas, my lord,
 Your wisdom is consumed in confidence.^o
 Do not go forth today. Call it my fear
 That keeps you in the house and not your own.
 We'll send Mark Antony to the Senate House,
 And he shall say you are not well today.
 Let me, upon my knee, prevail in this.

CAESAR
 Mark Antony shall say I am not well,
 And for thy humor,^o I will stay at home.

Enter DECIUS.

Here's Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so.

DECIUS
 Caesar, all hail! Good morrow, worthy Caesar;
 I come to fetch^o you to the Senate House.

16 watch night watchmen 20 right form proper military formation 22 hurtled clashed 25 use normal experience 29 Are to apply to 31 blaze forth proclaim (by comets and meteors) 42 should would; heart the organ of courage 49 consumed in confidence destroyed by too much confidence 56 humor whim 59 fetch escort

CAESAR
 And you are come in very happy time^o
 To bear my greeting to the senators,
 And tell them that I will not come today.
 Cannot, is false; and that I dare not, falser:
 I will not come today. Tell them so, Decius.

CALPHURNIA

Say he is sick.

CAESAR Shall Caesar send a lie?
 Have I in conquest stretched mine arm so far
 To be afeard to tell graybeards the truth?
 Decius, go tell them Caesar will not come.

DECIUS

Most mighty Caesar, let me know some cause,
 Lest I be laughed at when I tell them so.

CAESAR

The cause is in my will: I will not come.
 That is enough to satisfy the Senate.

But for your private satisfaction,
 Because I love you, I will let you know.

Calphurnia here, my wife, stays^o me at home.
 She dreamt tonight^o she saw my statue,^o

Which, like a fountain with an hundred spouts,
 Did run pure blood, and many lusty Romans
 Came smiling and did bathe their hands in it.

And these does she apply for^o warnings and portents^o

And evils imminent, and on her knee
 Hath begged that I will stay at home today.

DECIUS

This dream is all amiss interpreted;
 It was a vision fair and fortunate:

Your statue spouting blood in many pipes,
 In which so many smiling Romans bathed,
 Signifies that from you great Rome shall suck
 Reviving blood, and that great men shall press
 For tinctures, stains, relics, and cognizance.^o
 This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.

CAESAR

And this way have you well expounded it.

DECIUS

I have, when you have heard what I can say;
 And know it now, the Senate have concluded
 To give this day a crown to mighty Caesar.
 If you shall send them word you will not come,
 Their minds may change. Besides, it were a mock Apt to be rendered,^o for someone to say,
 "Break up the Senate till another time,
 When Caesar's wife shall meet with better dreams."
 If Caesar hide himself, shall they not whisper,
 "Lo, Caesar is afraid"?

Pardon me, Caesar, for my dear dear love

60 happy time favorable time (i.e., just at the right moment) 75 stays keeps 76 tonight last night; statue trisyllabic; pronounced "stat-u-a" 80 apply for explain as; portents accent on last syllable 89 tinctures . . . cognizance Samuel Johnson paraphrases the line: "The Romans, says Decius, all come to you, as to a saint, for relics; as to a prince, for honors"; tinctures (1) alchemical elixirs (2) colors, metals, etc. used in heraldry; stains colors in a coat of arms; relics venerated property of a martyr; cognizance mark of identification worn by a nobleman's followers 96-97 mock . . . rendered jeering remark likely to be made

To your proceeding° bids me tell you this,
And reason to my love is liable.°

CAESAR

How foolish do your fears seem now, Calphurnia! 105
I am ashamed I did yield to them.
Give me my robe,° for I will go.

Enter BRUTUS, LIGARIUS, METELLUS [Cimber], CASCA, TREBONIUS, CINNA, and PUBLIUS.

And look where Publius is come to fetch me.

PUBLIUS

Good morrow, Caesar.

CAESAR

Welcome, Publius.

What, Brutus, are you stirred so early too? 110

Good morrow, Casca. Caius Ligarius,
Caesar was ne'er so much your enemy°
As that same ague which hath made you lean.
What is't o'clock?

BRUTUS

Caesar, 'tis stricken eight.

CAESAR

I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter ANTONY.

See! Antony, that revels long a-nights,
Is notwithstanding up. Good morrow, Antony.

ANTONY

So to most noble Caesar.

CAESAR

Bid them prepare° within.

I am to blame to be thus waited for.

Now, Cinna; now, Metellus; what, Trebonius, 120
I have an hour's talk in store for you;

Remember that you call on me today;

Be near me, that I may remember you.

TREBONIUS

Caesar, I will [aside] and so near will I be,

That your best friends shall wish I had been further. 125

CAESAR

Good friends, go in and taste some wine with me,

And we (like friends) will straightway go together.

BRUTUS [Aside].

That every like is not the same,° O Caesar,

The heart of Brutus earns° to think upon. Exeunt.

[Scene III. A street near the Capitol, close to Brutus' house.]

Enter ARTEMIDORUS [reading a paper].

[ARTEMIDORUS] "Caesar, beware of Brutus; take heed of Cassius; come not near Casca; have an eye to Cinna; trust not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Cim-ber; Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast wronged Caius Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, 5 and it is bent° against Caesar. If thou beest not immortal, look about you: security gives way to conspiracy.°

103 proceeding advancement 104 reason . . . liable my affection proves stronger than my judgment (of impropriety) in telling you this ("liable" = subordinate) 107 robe toga 112 enemy Ligarius had supported Pompey against Caesar in the Civil War and had recently been pardoned by Caesar 118 prepare set out the wine mentioned in line 126 128 That . . . same what a pity that those who appear like friends may actually be enemies 129 earns grieves

II.iii.6 bent directed 7 security . . . conspiracy over-confidence gives conspiracy its opportunity

The mighty gods defend thee!

Thy lover,° Artemidorus."

Here will I stand till Caesar pass along, 10

And as a suitor° will I give him this.

My heart laments that virtue cannot live

Out of the teeth of emulation.°

If thou read this, O Caesar, thou mayest live;

If not, the Fates with traitors do contrive.° Exit. 15

[Scene IV. Another part of the street.]

Enter PORTIA and LUCIUS.

PORTIA

I prithee, boy, run to the Senate House;

Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone.

Why dost thou stay?

LUCIUS

To know my errand, madam.

PORTIA

I would have had thee there and here again 115

Ere I can tell thee what thou shouldst do there.

O constancy,° be strong upon my side;

Set a huge mountain 'tween my heart and tongue!

I have a man's mind, but a woman's might.°

How hard it is for women to keep counsel!°

Art thou here yet?

LUCIUS

Madam, what should I do? 10

Run to the Capitol, and nothing else?

And so return to you, and nothing else?

PORTIA

Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord look well,

For he went sickly forth; and take good note

What Caesar doth, what suitors press to him. 15

Hark, boy, what noise is that?

LUCIUS I hear none, madam.

PORTIA

Prithee, listen well.

I heard a bustling rumor like a fray,°

And the wind brings it from the Capitol.

LUCIUS

Sooth,° madam, I hear nothing. 20

Enter the SOOTHSAYER.

PORTIA

Come hither, fellow. Which way hast thou been?

SOOTHSAYER

At mine own house, good lady.

PORTIA

What is't o'clock?

SOOTHSAYER

About the ninth hour, lady.

PORTIA

Is Caesar yet gone to the Capitol?

SOOTHSAYER

Madame, not yet; I go to take my stand, 25

To see him pass on to the Capitol.

9 lover devoted friend 11 as a suitor like a petitioner 13
Out . . . emulation beyond the reach of envious rivalry 15 contrive conspire

II.iv.6 constancy resolution 8 might physical strength 9 counsel secret (Brutus has obviously told her of the conspiracy, though "stage time" has allowed no opportunity for this; the inconsistency is not noticeable during a performance) 18 bustling . . . fray confused noise as of battle 20 Sooth truly

PORTIA

Thou hast some suit to Caesar, hast thou not?

SOOTHSAYER

That I have, lady; if it will please Caesar
To be so good to Caesar as to hear me,
I shall beseech him to befriend himself.

30

PORTIA

Why, know'st thou any harm's intended towards him?

SOOTHSAYER

None that I know will be, much that I fear may chance.^o

Good morrow to you. Here the street is narrow;
The throng that follows Caesar at the heels,
Of senators, of praetors, common suitors,
Will crowd a feeble man almost to death.
I'll get me to a place more void,^o and there
Speak to great Caesar as he comes along.

Exit.

PORTIA

I must go in. Ay me, how weak a thing
The heart of woman is! O Brutus,
The heavens speed^o thee in thine enterprise!
Sure, the boy heard me—Brutus hath a suit
That Caesar will not grant—O, I grow faint.
Run, Lucius, and commend me^o to my lord;
Say I am merry;^o come to me again,
And bring me word what he doth say to thee.

40

Exeunt [severally].

A C T I I I

[Scene I. Rome. Before the Capitol.]

*Flourish. Enter CAESAR, BRUTUS, CASSIUS, CASCA, DECIUS, METELLUS [Cimber], TREBONIUS, CINNA,
ANTONY, LEPIDUS, ARTEMIDORUS, PUBLIUS, [POPILIUS,] and the SOOTHSAYER.*

CAESAR

The ides of March are come.

SOOTHSAYER

Ay, Caesar, but not gone.

ARTEMIDORUS

Hail, Caesar! Read this schedule.^o

DECIUS

Trebonius doth desire you to o'er-read,
At your best leisure, this his humble suit.

5

ARTEMIDORUS

O Caesar, read mine first; for mine's a suit
That touches^o Caesar nearer. Read it, great Caesar.

CAESAR

What touches us ourself shall be last served.

ARTEMIDORUS

Delay not, Caesar; read it instantly.

CAESAR

What, is the fellow mad?

PUBLIUS

Sirrah, give place.^o

10

32 chance happen 37 more void more empty (less crowded) 41 speed prosper 44 commend me give my love 45 merry cheerful

III.i.3 schedule scroll 7 touches concerns 10 Sirrah, give place Fellow, get out of the way

CASSIUS

What, urge you your petitions in the street?
Come to the Capitol.

[CAESAR goes to the Capitol, the rest following.]

POPILIUS

I wish your enterprise today may thrive.

CASSIUS

What enterprise, Popilius?

POPILIUS

Fare you well.

[Advances to CAESAR.]

BRUTUS

What said Popilius Lena?

15

CASSIUS

He wished today our enterprise might thrive.
I fear our purpose is discoverèd.

BRUTUS

Look how he makes to^o Caesar; mark him.

CASSIUS

Casca, be sudden,^o for we fear prevention.^o
Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known,
Cassius or Caesar never shall turn back,^o
For I will slay myself.

20

BRUTUS

Cassius, be constant.^o

Popilius Lena speaks not of our purposes;
For look, he smiles, and Caesar doth not change.^o

CASSIUS

Trebonius knows his time; for look you, Brutus,
He marks Mark Antony out of the way.

25

[Exeunt ANTONY and TREBONIUS.]

DECIUS

Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him go
And presently prefer^o his suit to Caesar.

BRUTUS

He is addressed.^o Press near and second him.

CINNA

Casca, you are the first that rears your hand.

30

CAESAR

Are we all ready? What is now amiss
That Caesar and his Senate must redress?

METELLUS

Most high, most mighty, and most puissant^o Caesar,
Metellus Cimber throws before thy seat
An humble heart. [Kneeling.]

CAESAR

I must prevent thee, Cimber.

35

These couchings^o and these lowly courtesies^o
Might fire the blood of ordinary men,
And turn preordinance and first decree^o

Into the law of children. Be not fond^o
To think that Caesar bears such rebel blood^o

40

That will be thawed from the true quality^o
With that^o which melteth fools—I mean sweet words,
Low-crookèd curtsies, and base spaniel^o fawning.

18 makes to heads for 19 sudden swift; prevention being forestallèd 21 turn back return alive 22 constant calm 24 change change his expression 28 presently prefer immediately present 29 addressed ready 33 puissant powerful 36 couchings low bowings; lowly courtesies humble obeisances 38 preordinance . . . decree customs and laws established from antiquity 39 fond so foolish as 40 bears
. . . blood has such uncontrolled emotions 41 true quality proper quality (i.e., firmness) 42 With that by those things 43 spaniel doglike, cringing

Thy brother by decree is banishèd.
 If thou dost bend and pray and fawn for him,
 I spurn thee like a cur out of my way.
 Know, Caesar doth not wrong, nor without cause
 Will he be satisfied.

METELLUS

Is there no voice more worthy than my own,
 To sound more sweetly in great Caesar's ear
 For the repealing° of my banished brother?

BRUTUS

I kiss thy hand, but not in flattery, Caesar, Desiring thee that Publius Cimber may
 Have an immediate freedom of repeal.°

CAESAR

What, Brutus?

CASSIUS Pardon, Caesar; Caesar, pardon!

As low as to thy foot doth Cassius fall
 To beg enfranchisement° for Publius Cimber.

CAESAR

I could be well moved, if I were as you;
 If I could pray to move,° prayers would move me;
 But I am constant as the Northern Star,°
 Of whose true-fixed and resting° quality
 There is no fellow° in the firmament.

The skies are painted with unnumb'red° sparks,
 They are all fire and every one doth shine;
 But there's but one in all doth hold° his place.

So in the world; 'tis furnished well with men,
 And men are flesh and blood, and apprehensive;°

Yet in the number I do know but one
 That unassailable holds on his rank,°

Unshaked of motion;° and that I am he,
 Let me a little show it, even in this—

That I was constant° Cimber should be banished,
 And constant do remain to keep him so.

CINNA

O Caesar—

CAESAR Hence! Wilt thou lift up Olympus?°

DECIUS

Great Caesar—

CAESAR Doth not Brutus bootless° kneel?

CASCA Speak hands for me!

They stab CAESAR.

CAESAR

Et tu, Brutè?° Then fall Caesar.

Dies.

CINNA

Liberty! Freedom! Tyranny is dead!

Run hence, proclaim, cry it about the streets.

CASSIUS

Some to the common pulpits,° and cry out

"Liberty, freedom, and enfranchisement!"

BRUTUS

45 People, and senators, be not affrighted.

Fly not; stand still; ambition's debt is paid.°

CASCA

Go to the pulpit, Brutus.

DECIUS

And Cassius too.

BRUTUS

50 Where's Publius?°

85

CINNA

Here, quite confounded with this mutiny.°

METELLUS

Stand fast together, lest some friend of Caesar's Should chance—

BRUTUS

55 Talk not of standing.° Publius, good cheer;

There is no harm intended to your person,

90

Nor to no Roman else. So tell them, Publius.

CASSIUS

And leave us, Publius, lest that the people
 Rushing on us should do your age some mischief.

BRUTUS

60 Do so; and let no man abide° this deed

But we the doers.

95

Enter TREBONIUS.

65

CASSIUS

Where is Antony?

TREBONIUS

Fled to his house amazed.°

Men, wives, and children stare, cry out and run,
 As° it were doomsday.

70

BRUTUS

Fates, we will know your pleasures.

That we shall die, we know; 'tis but the time,

And drawing days out, that men stand upon.°

100

CASCA

Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life

Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

BRUTUS

Grant that, and then is death a benefit.

So are we Caesar's friends, that have abridged

75

His time of fearing death. Stoop, Romans, stoop, 105

And let us bathe our hands in Caesar's blood

Up to the elbows, and besmear our swords.

Then walk we forth, even to the market place,°

And waving our red weapons o'er our heads,

Let's all cry, "Peace, freedom, and liberty!"

110

CASSIUS

Stoop then, and wash. How many ages hence

Shall this our lofty scene be acted over

In states unborn and accents yet unknown!

80

BRUTUS

How many times shall Caesar bleed in sport,°

51 repealing recalling 54 freedom of repeal permission to be recalled from exile 57 enfranchisement recall, freedom 59 pray to move beg others to change their minds 60 constant . . . Star unchanging as the polestar 61 resting changeless 62 fellow equal 63 unnumb'red innumerable 65 hold keep 67 apprehensive capable of reason 69 holds . . . rank maintains his position 70 Unshaked of motion unmoved by internal or external forces 72 constant firmly determined 74 Olympus a mountain in Greece where the gods lived and held court 75 bootless in vain 77 Et tu, Brutè And you (too), Brutus? 80 pulpits platforms for public speakers

83 ambition's . . . paid ambition has received what was due to it 85 Publius an old senator, too infirm to flee 86 confounded . . . mutiny overwhelmed by this uproar 89 Talk . . . standing Don't worry about making a stand, organizing resistance 94 abide bear the consequences of 96 amazed utterly confused 98 As as if 100 drawing . . . upon (hope of) prolonging life, that men are concerned about 108 the market place the Roman Forum, center of business and public affairs 114 in sport for entertainment, i.e., as part of a play

That now on Pompey's basis° lies along°
No worthier than the dust!

CASSIUS So oft as that shall be,
So often shall the knot° of us be called
The men that gave their country liberty.

DECIUS
What, shall we forth?

CASSIUS Ay, every man away.
Brutus shall lead, and we will grace° his heels
With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a SERVANT.

BRUTUS
Soft,° who comes here? A friend of Antony's.

SERVANT
Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me kneel;
Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down;
And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say:
Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest;°
Caesar was mighty, bold, royal,° and loving.
Say I love Brutus and I honor him;
Say I feared Caesar, honored him, and loved him.
If Brutus will vouchsafe that Antony
May safely come to him and be resolved°
How Caesar hath deserved to lie in death,
Mark Antony shall not love Caesar dead
So well as Brutus living; but will follow
The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus
Thorough° the hazards of this untrod state°
With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

BRUTUS
Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman;
I never thought him worse.
Tell him, so° please him come unto this place,
He shall be satisfied and, by my honor,
Depart untouched.

SERVANT I'll fetch him presently.°
Exit SERVANT.

BRUTUS
I know that we shall have him well to friend.°

CASSIUS
I wish we may. But yet have I a mind
That fears him much; and my misgiving still Falls shrewdly to the purpose.°

Enter ANTONY.

BRUTUS
But here comes Antony. Welcome, Mark Antony.

ANTONY
O mighty Caesar! Dost thou lie so low?
Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
Shrunk to this little measure? Fare thee well.
I know not, gentlemen, what you intend,

115 Who else must be let blood,° who else is rank.°
If I myself, there is no hour so fit
As Caesar's death's hour, nor no instrument
Of half that worth as those your swords, made rich 155
With the most noble blood of all this world.

I do beseech ye, if you bear me hard,°
Now, whilst your purpled° hands do reek and smoke,° Fulfill your pleasure. Live° a thousand years,
120 I shall not find myself so apt° to die; 160
No place will please me so, no mean° of death,
As here by Caesar, and by you cut off,
The choice and master spirits of this age.

BRUTUS
O Antony, beg not your death of us!
Though now we must appear bloody and cruel, 165
As by our hands and this our present act
You see we do, yet see you but our hands
And this the bleeding business they have done.
125 Our hearts you see not; they are pitiful;°
And pity to the general wrong of Rome— 170
As fire drives out fire, so pity pity°—
Hath done this deed on Caesar. For your part, 130 To you our swords have leaden° points, Mark Antony:
Our arms in strength of malice, and our hearts
Of brothers' temper,° do receive you in 175
With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence.

CASSIUS
135 Your voice° shall be as strong as any man's
In the disposing of new dignities.°

BRUTUS
Only be patient till we have appeased
The multitude, beside themselves with fear, 180
And then we will deliver° you the cause
140 Why I, that did love Caesar when I struck him,
Have thus proceeded.

ANTONY I doubt not of your wisdom.
Let each man render me his bloody hand.
First, Marcus Brutus, will I shake with you; 185
Next, Caius Cassius, do I take your hand;
Now, Decius Brutus, yours; now yours, Metellus;
Yours, Cinna; and, my valiant Casca, yours;
Though last, not least in love, yours, good Trebonius.
145 Gentlemen all—alas, what shall I say? 190
My credit° now stands on such slippery ground
That one of two bad ways you must conceit° me,
Either a coward or a flatterer.
That I did love thee, Caesar, O, 'tis true!
If then thy spirit look upon us now, 195
Shall it not grieve thee dearer° than thy death
To see thy Antony making his peace,
Shaking the bloody fingers of thy foes,

150 152 let blood (1) bled, purged (common Elizabethan practice of drawing blood to cure those swollen with disease) (2) put to death; rank (1) swollen with disease (2) overgrown, i.e., too powerful 157 bear me hard have a grudge against me 158 purpled (1) made scarlet (with blood) (2) made royal (?); reek and smoke steam (with freshly shed warm blood) 159 Live though I live 160 apt prepared 161 mean manner 169 pitiful full of pity 171 pity pity pity for Rome's subjection drove out pity for Caesar 173 leaden blunt 174-75 Our arms . . . temper our arms, strong with the might inspired by enmity, and our hearts, full of brotherly feeling 177 voice vote 178 dignities offices 181 deliver communicate to 191 credit reputation 192 conceit judge 196 dearer more deeply

115 basis pedestal of statue; along stretched out 117 knot closely bound group 120 grace do honor to 122 Soft wait a moment 126 honest honorable 127 royal of princely generosity 131 be resolved have it explained to his satisfaction 136 Thorough through; untrod state new and uncertain state of affairs 140 so if it should 142 presently immediately 143 well to friend as a good friend 145-46 my . . . purpose my forebodings always turn out to be justified

Most noble, in the presence of thy corse?°
 Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds,
 Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood,
 It would become me better than to close°
 In terms of friendship with thine enemies.
 Pardon me, Julius! Here wast thou bayed,° brave hart;°
 Here didst thou fall, and here thy hunters stand,
 Signed in thy spoil° and crimsoned in thy lethe.°
 O world, thou wast the forest to this hart;
 And this indeed, O world, the heart of thee.
 How like a deer, stroken° by many princes,
 Dost thou here lie!

CASSIUS

Mark Antony—

ANTONY Pardon me, Caius Cassius.

The enemies of Caesar shall say this;

Then, in a friend, it is cold modesty.°

CASSIUS

I blame you not for praising Caesar so;
 But what compact mean you to have with us?
 Will you be pricked in number° of our friends,
 Or shall we on,° and not depend on you?

ANTONY

Therefore I took your hands, but was indeed
 Swayed from the point by looking down on Caesar.
 Friends am I with you all, and love you all,
 Upon this hope, that you shall give me reasons
 Why, and wherein, Caesar was dangerous.

BRUTUS

Or else were this a savage spectacle.
 Our reasons are so full of good regard°
 That were you, Antony, the son of Caesar,
 You should be satisfied.

ANTONY

That's all I seek;

And am moreover suitor that I may
 Produce° his body to the market place,
 And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
 Speak in the order° of his funeral.

BRUTUS

You shall, Mark Antony.

CASSIUS

Brutus, a word with you.

[Aside to BRUTUS.]

You know not what you do; do not consent
 That Antony speak in his funeral.
 Know you how much the people may be moved
 By that which he will utter?

BRUTUS

By your pardon:

I will myself into the pulpit first,
 And show the reason of our Caesar's death.
 What Antony shall speak, I will protest°
 He speaks by leave and by permission,
 And that we are contented Caesar shall

Have all true° rites and lawful ceremonies.
 It shall advantage° more than do us wrong.°

CASSIUS

I know not what may fall;° I like it not.

BRUTUS

Mark Antony, here, take you Caesar's body.
 You shall not in your funeral speech blame us,
 But speak all good you can devise of Caesar,
 And say you do't by our permission;
 Else shall you not have any hand at all
 About his funeral. And you shall speak
 In the same pulpit whereto I am going,
 After my speech is ended.

210

250

ANTONY

Be it so;

I do desire no more.

BRUTUS

Prepare the body then, and follow us.

Exeunt. Manet ANTONY.

ANTONY

O pardon me, thou bleeding piece of earth,
 That I am meek and gentle with these butchers!
 Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
 That ever livèd in the tide of times.°
 Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood!
 Over thy wounds now do I prophesy
 (Which like dumb mouths do ope their ruby lips
 To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue),
 A curse shall light upon the limbs of men;
 Domestic fury and fierce civil strife
 Shall cumber° all the parts of Italy;
 Blood and destruction shall be so in use,°
 And dreadful objects so familiar,
 That mothers shall but smile when they behold
 Their infants quartered with the hands of war,
 All pity choked with custom of fell deeds;°
 And Caesar's spirit, ranging° for revenge,
 With Atè° by his side come hot from hell,
 Shall in these confines° with a monarch's voice
 Cry "Havoc,"° and let slip° the dogs of war,
 That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
 With carrion° men, groaning for burial.

215

255

220

260

225

265

230

270

275

Enter Octavius' SERVANT.

You serve Octavius Caesar, do you not?

SERVANT

I do, Mark Antony.

ANTONY

Caesar did write for him to come to Rome.

235

SERVANT

He did receive his letters and is coming,
 And bid me say to you by word of mouth—
 O Caesar!

280

[Seeing the body.]

240

ANTONY

Thy heart is big;° get thee apart and weep.

241 true proper 242 advantage benefit; wrong harm 243 fall happen 257 tide of times course (ebb and flow) of history 264 cumber burden, oppress 265 in use customary 269 custom . . . deeds habituation to cruel acts 270 ranging roving widely in search of prey 271 Atè Greek goddess of discord and vengeance 272 confines boundaries, regions 273 Cry "Havoc" give the signal for unrestricted slaughter and looting; let slip unleash 275 carrion dead and rotting 282 big swollen (with grief)

199 corse corpse 202 close make an agreement 204 bayed brought to bay; hart (1) deer (2) heart 206 Signed . . . spoil marked with the signs of your slaughter; lethe dissyllabic; the river of oblivion from which the dead drank in Hades; here, by extension, "stream of death," of "lifeblood" 209 stroken struck down 213 modesty moderation 216 pricked in number marked down (the modern "ticks off names"; the Roman made small holes in his wax-covered tablets) 217 on proceed 224 good regard sound considerations 228 Produce bring forth 230 order course of ceremonies 238 protest declare

Passion,^o I see, is catching, for mine eyes,
 Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,
 Began to water. Is thy master coming? 285

SERVANT

He lies tonight within seven leagues of Rome.

ANTONY

Post^o back with speed, and tell him what hath chanced.^o
 Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
 No Rome^o of safety for Octavius yet.
 Hie^o hence and tell him so. Yet stay awhile; 290
 Thou shalt not back till I have borne this corse
 Into the market place; there shall I try^o
 In my oration how the people take
 The cruel issue^o of these bloody men;
 According to the which, thou shalt discourse 295
 To young Octavius of the state of things.
 Lend me your hand. Exeunt.

[Scene II. The Forum.]

Enter BRUTUS and goes into the pulpit, and CASSIUS, with the PLEBEIANS.

PLEBEIANS

We will be satisfied!^o Let us be satisfied!

BRUTUS

Then follow me, and give me audience, friends.
 Cassius, go you into the other street
 And part the numbers.^o
 Those that will hear me speak, let 'em stay here; 5
 Those that will follow Cassius, go with him;
 And public reasons shall be renderèd
 Of Caesar's death.

FIRST PLEBEIAN I will hear Brutus speak.

SECOND PLEBEIAN

I will hear Cassius, and compare their reasons,
 When severally^o we hear them renderèd. 10

[Exit CASSIUS, with some of the PLEBEIANS.]

THIRD PLEBEIAN

The noble Brutus is ascended. Silence!

BRUTUS Be patient till the last.^o

Romans, countrymen, and lovers,^o hear me for my cause, and be silent, that you may hear. Believe me for mine honor, and have respect^o to mine honor, that you 15 may believe. Censure^o me in your wisdom, and awake your senses,^o that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Caesar's, to him I say that Brutus' love to Caesar was no less than his. If then that friend demand why Brutus rose against 20
 Caesar, this is my answer: Not that I loved Caesar less, but that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Caesar were living, and die all slaves, than that Caesar were dead, to live all free men? As Caesar loved me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he 25 was valiant, I honor him; but, as he was ambitious, I slew him. There is tears, for his love; joy, for his fortune; honor, for his valor; and death, for his ambition. Who is here so base, that would be a bond-man?^o If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is 30 here so rude,^o that would not be a Roman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so vile, that will not love his country? If any, speak; for him have I offended. I pause for a reply.

ALL None, Brutus, none! 35

BRUTUS Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Caesar than you shall do^o to Brutus. The question of his death is enrolled^o in the Capitol; his glory not extenuated,^o wherein he was worthy, nor his offenses enforced,^o for which he suffered death. 40

Enter Mark ANTONY, with Caesar's body.

Here comes his body, mourned by Mark Antony, who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place^o in the commonwealth, as which of you shall not? With this I depart, that, as I slew my best lover^o for the good of Rome, 45
 I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

ALL Live, Brutus! Live, live!

FIRST PLEBEIAN

Bring him with triumph home unto his house.

SECOND PLEBEIAN

Give him a statue with his ancestors. 50

THIRD PLEBEIAN

Let him be Caesar.

FOURTH PLEBEIAN Caesar's better parts^o

Shall be crowned in Brutus.

FIRST PLEBEIAN

We'll bring him to his house with shouts and clamors.

BRUTUS

My countrymen—

SECOND PLEBEIAN Peace! Silence! Brutus speaks.

FIRST PLEBEIAN Peace, ho! 55

BRUTUS

Good countrymen, let me depart alone,
 And, for my sake, stay here with Antony.
 Do grace to Caesar's corpse, and grace his speech^o
 Tending^o to Caesar's glories, which Mark Antony,
 By our permission, is allowed to make. 60
 I do entreat you, not a man depart,
 Save I alone, till Antony have spoke. Exit.

FIRST PLEBEIAN

Stay, ho! And let us hear Mark Antony.

THIRD PLEBEIAN

Let him go up into the public chair;^o
 We'll hear him. Noble Antony, go up. 65

ANTONY

For Brutus' sake, I am beholding^o to you.

283 Passion intense emotion, grief 287 Post ride post (with relays of horses), hasten; chanced happened 289 Rome another play on the pronunciation "room"; cf. I.ii.156 290 Hie hurry 292 try test 294 cruel issue outcome of the cruelty

III.ii.1 will be satisfied want a full explanation 4 part the numbers divide the crowd 10 severally separately 12 last conclusion (of my speech) 13 lovers dear friends 15 respect regard 16 Censure judge 17 senses powers of understanding, reason

29-30 bondman slave 31 rude barbarous 37 shall do i.e., if I should become equally tyrannical 37-38 The question . . .
enrolled the considerations that made necessary his death are recorded 39 extenuated depreciated 40 enforced exaggerated 43 place i.e., as a free citizen 45 lover friend
 51 parts qualities 58 Do . . . speech show respect to dead Caesar and listen respectfully to Antony's speech 59 Tending relating 64 public chair pulpit, rostrum 66 beholding beholden, indebted

FOURTH PLEBEIAN

What does he say of Brutus?

THIRD PLEBEIAN He says, for Brutus' sake,
He finds himself beholding to us all.

FOURTH PLEBEIAN

'Twere best he speak no harm of Brutus here!

FIRST PLEBEIAN

This Caesar was a tyrant.

THIRD PLEBEIAN Nay, that's certain.

We are blest that Rome is rid of him.

SECOND PLEBEIAN

Peace! Let us hear what Antony can say.

ANTONY

You gentle Romans—

ALL Peace, ho! Let us hear him.

ANTONY

Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears;

I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him.

The evil that men do lives after them,

The good is oft interrèd with their bones;

So let it be with Caesar. The noble Brutus

Hath told you Caesar was ambitious.

If it were so, it was a grievous fault,

And grievously hath Caesar answered^o it.

Here, under leave of Brutus and the rest

(For Brutus is an honorable man,

So are they all, all honorable men),

Come I to speak in Caesar's funeral.

He was my friend, faithful and just to me;

But Brutus says he was ambitious,

And Brutus is an honorable man.

He hath brought many captives home to Rome,

Whose ransoms did the general coffers^o fill;

Did this in Caesar seem ambitious?

When that the poor have cried, Caesar hath wept;

Ambition should be made of sterner stuff.

Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;

And Brutus is an honorable man.

You all did see that on the Lupercal

I thrice presented him a kingly crown,

Which he did thrice refuse. Was this ambition?

Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;

And sure he is an honorable man.

I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,

But here I am to speak what I do know.

You all did love him once, not without cause;

What cause withholds you then to mourn for him?

O judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts,

And men have lost their reason! Bear with me;

My heart is in the coffin there with Caesar,

And I must pause till it come back to me.

FIRST PLEBEIAN

Methinks there is much reason in his sayings.

SECOND PLEBEIAN

If thou consider rightly of the matter,

Caesar has had great wrong.

THIRD PLEBEIAN

Has he, masters?

I fear there will a worse come in his place.

FOURTH PLEBEIAN

Marked ye his words? He would not take the crown,

Therefore 'tis certain he was not ambitious.

FIRST PLEBEIAN

If it be found so, some will dear abide it.^o

SECOND PLEBEIAN

Poor soul, his eyes are red as fire with weeping.

THIRD PLEBEIAN

There's not a nobler man in Rome than Antony.

FOURTH PLEBEIAN

Now mark him, he begins again to speak.

70 ANTONY

But yesterday the word of Caesar might

Have stood against the world; now lies he there,

And none so poor to^o do him reverence.

O masters! If I were disposed to stir

Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,

I should do Brutus wrong and Cassius wrong,

Who, you all know, are honorable men.

I will not do them wrong; I rather choose

To wrong the dead, to wrong myself and you,

Than I will wrong such honorable men.

But here's a parchment with the seal of Caesar;

I found it in his closet;^o 'tis his will.Let but the commons^o hear this testament,

Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read,

And they would go and kiss dead Caesar's wounds,

And dip their napkins^o in his sacred blood;

Yea, beg a hair of him for memory,

And dying, mention it within their wills,

Bequeathing it as a rich legacy

Unto their issue.^o

80 FOURTH PLEBEIAN

We'll hear the will; read it, Mark Antony.

90 ALL

The will, the will! We will hear Caesar's will!

ANTONY

Have patience, gentle friends, I must not read it.

It is not meet^o you know how Caesar loved you.

You are not wood, you are not stones, but men;

And being men, hearing the will of Caesar,

It will inflame you, it will make you mad.

'Tis good you know not that you are his heirs;

For if you should, O, what would come of it?

95 FOURTH PLEBEIAN

Read the will! We'll hear it, Antony!

You shall read us the will, Caesar's will!

100 ANTONY

Will you be patient? Will you stay^o awhile?I have o'ershot myself^o to tell you of it.

105 I fear I wrong the honorable men

Whose daggers have stabbed Caesar; I do fear it.

FOURTH PLEBEIAN

They were traitors. Honorable men!

ALL

The will! The testament!

110 SECOND PLEBEIAN

They were villains,

Murderers! The will! Read the will!

ANTONY

You will compel me then to read the will?

Then make a ring about the corpse of Caesar,

115 dear abide it pay dearly for it 121 so poor to so low in rank as to 130 closet study (?) desk (?) 131 commons plebeians 134 napkins handkerchiefs 138 issue heirs 142 meet fitting 150 stay wait 151 o'ershot myself gone further than I intended

81 answered paid the penalty for 90 general coffers public treasury

And let me show you him that made the will.
Shall I descend? And will you give me leave?

ALL Come down.

SECOND PLEBEIAN Descend.

[ANTONY comes down.]

THIRD PLEBEIAN You shall have leave.

FOURTH PLEBEIAN A ring! Stand round.

FIRST PLEBEIAN

Stand from the hearse, stand from the body!

SECOND PLEBEIAN

Room for Antony, most noble Antony!

ANTONY

Nay, press not so upon me; stand far^o off.

ALL Stand back! Room! Bear back.

ANTONY

If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.

You all do know this mantle;^o I remember

The first time ever Caesar put it on:

'Twas on a summer's evening, in his tent,

That day he overcame the Nervii.^o

Look, in this place ran Cassius' dagger through;

See what a rent the envious^o Casca made;

Through this the well-belovèd Brutus stabbed,

And as he plucked his cursèd steel away,

Mark how the blood of Caesar followed it,

As^o rushing out of doors, to be resolved^o

If Brutus so unkindly^o knocked, or no;

For Brutus, as you know, was Caesar's angel.^o

Judge, O you gods, how dearly Caesar loved him!

This was the most unkindest^o cut of all;

For when the noble Caesar saw him stab,

Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms,

Quite vanquished him. Then burst his mighty heart;

And, in his mantle muffling up his face,

Even at the base^o of Pompey's statue^o

(Which all the while ran blood) great Caesar fell.

O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!

Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,

Whilst bloody treason flourished^o over us.

O, now you weep, and I perceive you feel

The dint^o of pity; these are gracious drops.

Kind souls, what^o weep you when you but behold

Our Caesar's vesture^o wounded? Look you here,

Here is himself, marred^o as you see with^o traitors.

FIRST PLEBEIAN O piteous spectacle!

SECOND PLEBEIAN O noble Caesar!

THIRD PLEBEIAN O woeful day!

FOURTH PLEBEIAN O traitors, villains!

FIRST PLEBEIAN O most bloody sight!

SECOND PLEBEIAN We will be revenged.

[ALL] Revenge! About!^o Seek! Burn! Fire! Kill!

Slay! Let not a traitor live!

ANTONY Stay, countrymen.

FIRST PLEBEIAN Peace there! Hear the noble Antony.

160 SECOND PLEBEIAN We'll hear him, we'll follow him, we'll die with him!

ANTONY

Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you up

To such a sudden flood of mutiny.

They that have done this deed are honorable.

What private griefs^o they have, alas, I know not,

That made them do it. They are wise and honorable,

165 And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you.

I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts;

I am no orator, as Brutus is;

But (as you know me all) a plain blunt man

That love my friend, and that they know full well

That gave me public leave to speak^o of him.

For I have neither writ, nor words, nor worth,

170 Action, nor utterance,^o nor the power of speech

To stir men's blood; I only speak right on.^o

I tell you that which you yourselves do know,

Show you sweet Caesar's wounds, poor poor dumb mouths,

And bid them speak for me. But were I Brutus,

175 And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony

Would ruffle up^o your spirits, and put a tongue

In every wound of Caesar that should move

The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

ALL

180 We'll mutiny.

FIRST PLEBEIAN We'll burn the house of Brutus.

THIRD PLEBEIAN

Away, then! Come, seek the conspirators.

ANTONY

185 Yet hear me, countrymen. Yet hear me speak.

ALL

Peace, ho! Hear Antony, most noble Antony!

ANTONY

Why, friends, you go to do you know not what:

190 Wherein hath Caesar thus deserved your loves?

Alas, you know not; I must tell you then:

You have forgot the will I told you of.

ALL

Most true, the will! Let's stay and hear the will.

195 ANTONY

Here is the will, and under Caesar's seal.

To every Roman citizen he gives,

To every several^o man, seventy-five drachmas.

SECOND PLEBEIAN

200 Most noble Caesar! We'll revenge his death!

THIRD PLEBEIAN O royal^o Caesar!

ANTONY Hear me with patience.

ALL Peace, ho!

ANTONY

205 Moreover, he hath left you all his walks,^o

His private arbors, and new-planted orchards,^o

On this side Tiber; he hath left them you,

167 far farther 170 mantle cloak (here, the toga) 173 Nervii a fierce tribe decisively conquered by Caesar in 57 B.C. 175 envious spiteful 179 As as though; to be resolved to learn for certain 180 unkindly (1) cruelly (2) unnaturally 181 angel favorite (i.e., considered incapable of evil) 183 most unkindest most cruel and unnatural 188 base pedestal; statue pronounced "stat-u-a" 192 flourished (1) swaggered
(2) brandished a sword in triumph 194 dint stroke 195 what why 196 vesture clothing 197 marred mangled; with by 204 About Let's go!

213 private griefs personal grievances 220 public . . . speak permission to speak in public 221-22 neither . . . utterance neither a written speech, nor fluency, nor reputation, nor (an orator's) gestures, nor good delivery (perhaps "writ" should be emended to "wit," meaning "intellectual cleverness") 223 right on directly, without premeditation 228 ruffle up incite to rage 242 several individual 244 royal nobly generous 247 walks parks 248 orchards gardens

And to your heirs forever: common pleasures,^o
To walk abroad and recreate yourselves.
Here was a Caesar! When comes such another?

FIRST PLEBEIAN

Never, never! Come, away, away!
We'll burn his body in the holy place,
And with the brands fire the traitors' houses.
Take up the body.

SECOND PLEBEIAN Go fetch fire.

THIRD PLEBEIAN Pluck down benches.

FOURTH PLEBEIAN Pluck down forms, windows,^o anything! Exeunt PLEBEIANS [with the body]. 260

ANTONY

Now let it work:^o Mischief, thou art afoot,
Take thou what course thou wilt.

Enter SERVANT.

How now, fellow?

SERVANT

Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.

ANTONY Where is he?

SERVANT

He and Lepidus are at Caesar's house.

ANTONY

And thither will I straight^o to visit him;
He comes upon a wish.^o Fortune is merry,
And in this mood will give us anything.

SERVANT

I heard him say, Brutus and Cassius
Are rid^o like madmen through the gates of Rome. 270

ANTONY

Belike^o they had some notice of^o the people,
How I had moved them. Bring me to Octavius.

Exeunt.

[Scene III. A street.]

Enter CINNA the poet, and after him the PLEBEIANS.

CINNA

I dreamt tonight^o that I did feast with Caesar,
And things unluckily charge my fantasy.^o
I have no will to wander forth^o of doors,
Yet something leads me forth.

FIRST PLEBEIAN What is your name? 5

SECOND PLEBEIAN Whither are you going?

THIRD PLEBEIAN Where do you dwell?

FOURTH PLEBEIAN Are you a married man or a bachelor?

SECOND PLEBEIAN Answer every man directly.^o 10

FIRST PLEBEIAN Ay, and briefly.

FOURTH PLEBEIAN Ay, and wisely.

THIRD PLEBEIAN Ay, and truly, you were best.

CINNA What is my name? Whither am I going?

250 Where do I dwell? Am I a married man or a bachelor? 15
Then, to answer every man directly and briefly, wisely and truly: wisely I say, I am a bachelor.

SECOND PLEBEIAN That's as much as to say, they are fools that marry; you'll bear me a bang^o for that, I fear.
Proceed directly. 20

255 CINNA Directly, I am going to Caesar's funeral.

FIRST PLEBEIAN As a friend or an enemy?

CINNA As a friend.

SECOND PLEBEIAN That matter is answered directly.

FOURTH PLEBEIAN For your dwelling, briefly. 25

CINNA Briefly, I dwell by the Capitol.

THIRD PLEBEIAN Your name, sir, truly.

CINNA Truly, my name is Cinna.

FIRST PLEBEIAN Tear him to pieces! He's a conspirator. 30

CINNA I am Cinna the poet! I am Cinna the poet!

FOURTH PLEBEIAN Tear him for his bad verses! Tear him for his bad verses!

CINNA I am not Cinna the conspirator.

FOURTH PLEBEIAN It is no matter, his name's Cinna; 35 pluck but his name out of his heart, and turn him going.^o 265

THIRD PLEBEIAN Tear him, tear him! [They attack him.] Come, brands, ho! Firebrands! To Brutus', to Cassius'! Burn all! Some to Decius' house, and some 40 to Casca's; some to Ligarius'! Away, go!

Exeunt all the PLEBEIANS, [with CINNA].

ACT IV

[Scene I. A house in Rome.]

Enter ANTONY, OCTAVIUS, and LEPIDUS.

ANTONY

These many then shall die; their names are pricked.^o

OCTAVIUS

Your brother too must die; consent you, Lepidus?

LEPIDUS

I do consent—

OCTAVIUS Prick him down, Antony.

LEPIDUS

Upon condition Publius shall not live,
Who is your sister's son, Mark Antony. 5

ANTONY

He shall not live; look, with a spot I damn him.^o

But, Lepidus, go you to Caesar's house;

Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine

How to cut off some charge^o in legacies.

LEPIDUS

What, shall I find you here? 10

OCTAVIUS

Or^o here or at the Capitol.

Exit LEPIDUS.

19 bear . . . bang get a blow from me 36-37 turn him going dispatch him

IV.i.i pricked ticked off, marked on the list 6 with . . . him with a dot (on the wax tablet) I condemn him 9 cut . . .
charge reduce expenses (by altering the amount left in bequests) 11 Or either

250 common pleasures public places of recreation 259 forms, windows long benches (and) shutters 261 work (1) ferment (as yeast) (2) work itself out 266 will I straight will I (go) at once 267 upon a wish just as I wished 270
Are rid have ridden 271 Belike probably; notice of news about

III.iii.i tonight last night 2 things . . . fantasy events give ominous weight to my imaginings 3 forth out 10 directly straightforwardly

ANTONY

This is a slight unmeritable° man,
Meet° to be sent on errands; is it fit,
The threefold world° divided, he should stand
One of the three to share it?

OCTAVIUS

So you thought him, 15

And took his voice° who should be pricked to die
In our black sentence° and proscription.°

ANTONY

Octavius, I have seen more days° than you;
And though we lay these honors on this man,
To ease ourselves of divers sland'rous loads,° 20
He shall but bear them as the ass bears gold,
To groan and sweat under the business,°
Either led or driven, as we point the way;
And having brought our treasure where we will,
Then take we down his load, and turn him off,° 25
(Like to the empty° ass) to shake his ears
And graze in commons.°

OCTAVIUS

You may do your will;

But he's a tried and valiant soldier.°

ANTONY

So is my horse, Octavius, and for that
I do appoint him store° of provender. 30
It is a creature that I teach to fight,
To wind,° to stop, to run directly on,
His corporal° motion governed by my spirit.°
And, in some taste,° is Lepidus but so.°
He must be taught, and trained, and bid go forth. 35
A barren-spirited° fellow; one that feeds
On objects, arts, and imitations,°
Which, out of use and staled° by other men,
Begin his fashion.° Do not talk of him
But as a property.° And now, Octavius, 40
Listen great things. Brutus and Cassius
Are levying powers;° we must straight make head.°
Therefore let our alliance be combined,
Our best friends made,° our means stretched;°
And let us presently° go sit in council 45
How covert matters may be best disclosed,
And open perils surest answerèd.°

OCTAVIUS

Let us do so; for we are at the stake,°

12 slight unmeritable insignificant and undeserving 13 Meet fit 14 threefold world three areas of the Roman empire, Europe, Asia, and Africa 16 voice vote 17 black sentence sentence of death; proscription condemnation to death or exile 18 have . . . days am older (and more experienced) 20 divers sland'rous loads blame which will be laid upon us for our various actions 22 business hard labor 25 turn him off drive him away 26 empty unburdened 27 in commons on public pasture 28 soldier trisyllabic 30 appoint him store allot him a supply 32 wind turn 33 corporal physical; spirit mind 34 taste measure; so the same 36 barren-spirited lacking initiative or ideas of his own 37 objects . . . imitations curiosities, artifices, and fashions (or styles) 38 staled made common 39 Begin his fashion i.e., he is always far behind the times 40 property mere tool (a thing rather than a person) 42 powers armed forces; straight make head immediately gather troops 44 Our . . . made let our closest allies be selected; stretched be used to the fullest advantage 45 presently immediately 46-47 How . . . answerèd to decide how hidden dangers may best be discovered and open dangers most safely encountered 48 at the stake metaphor derived from Elizabethan sport of bearbaiting: like a bear tied to a stake and set upon by many dogs

And bayed about with many enemies;
And some that smile have in their hearts, I fear, 50
Millions of mischiefs.° Exeunt.

[Scene II. Camp near Sardis.]

Drum. Enter BRUTUS, LUCILIUS, [LUCIUS,] and the ARMY. TITINIUS and PINDARUS meet them.

BRUTUS Stand ho!

LUCILIUS Give the word, ho! and stand.

BRUTUS

What now, Lucilius, is Cassius near?

LUCILIUS

He is at hand, and Pindarus is come
To do you salutation from his master. 5

BRUTUS

He greets me well.° Your master, Pindarus,
In his own change, or by ill officers,°
Hath given me some worthy° cause to wish
Things done undone; but if he be at hand,
I shall be satisfied.°

PINDARUS

I do not doubt 10

But that my noble master will appear
Such as he is, full of regard° and honor.

BRUTUS

He is not doubted. A word, Lucilius,
How he received you; let me be resolved.°

LUCILIUS

With courtesy and with respect enough, 15
But not with such familiar instances,°
Nor with such free and friendly conference°
As he hath used of old.

BRUTUS

Thou hast described
A hot friend cooling. Ever note, Lucilius,
When love begins to sicken and decay 20
It useth an enforced ceremony.°
There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
But hollow° men, like horses hot at hand,°
Make gallant show and promise of their mettle;°
Low march within.

But when they should endure the bloody spur, 25
They fall their crests,° and like deceitful jades°
Sink in the trial.° Comes his army on?

LUCILIUS

They mean this night in Sardis to be quartered;
The greater part, the horse in general,°
Are come with Cassius.

Enter CASSIUS and his POWERS.

BRUTUS

Hark! He is arrived. 30

March gently° on to meet him.

51 mischiefs plans to injure us

IV.ii.6 He . . . well he sends greetings by a very good man 7 In . . . officers either from a change in his feelings toward me or through the actions of bad subordinates 8 worthy substantial 10 be satisfied receive a satisfactory explanation 12 full of regard worthy of respect 14 resolved fully informed 16 familiar instances marks of friendship 17 conference conversation 21 enforced ceremony strained formality 23 hollow insincere; hot at hand overspirited at the start 24 mettle quality, courage 26 fall their crests let fall the ridges of their necks; jades nags 27 Sink . . .
trial fail when put to the test 29 the horse in general all the cavalry 31 gently slowly

CASSIUS Stand, ho!

BRUTUS Stand, ho! Speak the word along.

[FIRST SOLDIER] Stand!

[SECOND SOLDIER] Stand!

[THIRD SOLDIER] Stand!

CASSIUS

Most noble brother, you have done me wrong.

BRUTUS

Judge me, you gods! Wrong I mine enemies?

And if not so, how should I wrong a brother.

CASSIUS

Brutus, this sober form° of yours hides wrongs;

And when you do them—

BRUTUS

Cassius, be content.°

Speak your griefs° softly; I do know you well.

Before the eyes of both our armies here

(Which should perceive nothing but love from us)

Let us not wrangle. Bid them move away;

Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge° your griefs,

And I will give you audience.

CASSIUS

Pindarus,

Bid our commanders lead their charges° off

A little from this ground.

BRUTUS

Lucilius, do you the like, and let no man

Come to our tent till we have done our conference.

Let Lucius and Titinius guard our door.

Exeunt. Mane[n]t BRUTUS and CASSIUS.

[Scene III. Brutus' tent.]

CASSIUS

That you have wronged me doth appear in this:

You have condemned and noted° Lucius Pella

For taking bribes here of the Sardians;

Wherein my letters, praying on his side,°

Because I knew the man, was slighted off.°

BRUTUS

You wronged yourself to write in such a case.

CASSIUS

In such a time as this it is not meet

That every nice offense should bear this comment.°

BRUTUS

Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself

Are much condemned to have an itching palm,°

To sell and mart° your offices for gold

To undeservers.

CASSIUS I an itching palm?

You know that you are Brutus that speaks this,

Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last.

BRUTUS

The name of Cassius honors° this corruption,

And chastisement doth therefore hide his head.

CASSIUS Chastisement!

BRUTUS

Remember March, the ides of March remember.

35 Did not great Julius bleed for justice' sake?

What villain touched his body, that did stab,

And not° for justice? What, shall one of us,

That struck the foremost man of all this world

But for supporting robbers,° shall we now

Contaminate our fingers with base bribes,

And sell the mighty space of our large honors°

For so much trash° as may be graspèd thus?°

40 I had rather be a dog, and bay° the moon,

Than such a Roman.

CASSIUS

Brutus, bait° not me;

I'll not endure it. You forget yourself

To hedge me in.° I am a soldier, I,

Older in practice, abler than yourself

45 To make conditions.°

BRUTUS

Go to! You are not, Cassius.

CASSIUS I am.

BRUTUS I say you are not.

CASSIUS

Urge° me no more, I shall forget myself;

Have mind upon your health;° tempt° me no farther.

50 BRUTUS Away, slight° man!

CASSIUS

Is't possible?

BRUTUS

Hear me, for I will speak.

Must I give way and room to your rash choler?°

Shall I be frightened when a madman stares?°

CASSIUS

O ye gods, ye gods! Must I endure all this?

BRUTUS

All this? Ay, more: fret till your proud heart break.

Go show your slaves how choleric you are,

And make your bondmen tremble. Must I budge?°

Must I observe° you? Must I stand and crouch°

5 Under your testy humor?° By the gods,

You shall digest the venom° of your spleen,°

Though it do split you; for, from this day forth,

I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter,

When you are waspish.

CASSIUS

Is it come to this?

BRUTUS

You say you are a better soldier:

10 Let it appear so; make your vaunting° true,

21 And not except 23 supporting robbers protecting dishonest officials (a point made by Plutarch but mentioned only now by Shakespeare) 25 mighty . . . honors vast capacity to be honorable and magnanimous (with suggestion of potentiality for making other men free, and honorable in office) 26 trash rubbish, i.e., money; graspèd thus the small confined area of the closed fist contrasts with the "mighty space" gained by their honorable deeds in abolishing injustice and corruption 27 bay howl at 28 bait harass and worry (as a bear tied to a stake is baited by dogs) 30 hedge me in limit my freedom of action 32 make conditions manage practical matters 35 Urge drive, bully 36 health safety; tempt provoke 37 slight insignificant 39 give . . . choler let your hasty temper have free vent and run its course unchecked 40 stares glares 44 budge defer to it 45 observe wait on; crouch bow 46 testy humor irritability 47 digest the venom swallow the poison; spleen considered the source of sudden passion: i.e., fiery temper 52 vaunting boasting

40 sober form staid manner 41 be content keep calm 42 griefs grievances 46 enlarge freely express 48 charges troops

IV.iii.2 noted publicly disgraced 4 praying . . . side appealing on his behalf 5 was slighted off was contemptuously disregarded ("letters" takes a singular verb because of its singular meaning) 8 nice . . . comment trivial fault should receive criticism ("his" = its) 10 condemned . . . palm accused of being mercenary 11 mart traffic in 15 honors lends an air of respectability

And it shall please me well. For mine own part,
I shall be glad to learn of° noble men.

CASSIUS

You wrong me every way; you wrong me, Brutus; 55
I said, an elder soldier, not a better.
Did I say, better?

BRUTUS If you did, I care not.

CASSIUS

When Caesar lived, he durst not thus have moved° me.

BRUTUS

Peace, peace, you durst not so have tempted° him.

CASSIUS I durst not? 60

BRUTUS No.

CASSIUS

What? Durst not tempt him?

BRUTUS For your life you durst not.

CASSIUS

Do not presume too much upon my love;
I may do that I shall be sorry for.

BRUTUS

You have done that you should be sorry for. 65
There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats;
For I am armed so strong in honesty°
That they pass by me as the idle wind,
Which I respect° not. I did send to you
For certain sums of gold, which you denied me;
For I can raise no money by vile means. 70
By heaven, I had rather coin my heart
And drop my blood for drachmas than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash
By any indirection.° I did send
To you for gold to pay my legions, 75
Which you denied me. Was that done like Cassius?
Should I have answered Caius Cassius so?
When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous
To lock such rascal counters° from his friends, 80
Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces!

CASSIUS I denied you not.

BRUTUS

You did.

CASSIUS I did not. He was but a fool

That brought my answer back. Brutus hath rived° my heart.

A friend should bear his friend's infirmities; 85
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.

BRUTUS

I do not, till you practice them on me.

CASSIUS

You love me not.

BRUTUS

I do not like your faults.

CASSIUS

A friendly eye could never see such faults.

BRUTUS

A flatterer's would not, though they do appear 90
As huge as high Olympus.

CASSIUS

Come, Antony, and young Octavius, come,
Revenge yourselves alone° on Cassius,
For Cassius is aweary of the world:
Hated by one he loves; braved° by his brother; 95
Checked° like a bondman; all his faults observed,
Set in a notebook, learned and conned by rote°
To cast into my teeth.° O, I could weep
My spirit from mine eyes! There is my dagger,
And here my naked breast; within, a heart 100
Dearer than Pluto's mine,° richer than gold;
If that thou be'st a Roman, take it forth.
I, that denied thee gold, will give my heart.
Strike as thou didst at Caesar; for I know,
When thou didst hate him worst, thou lovedst him better 105
Than ever thou lovedst Cassius.

BRUTUS

Sheathe your dagger.

Be angry when you will, it shall have scope.°
Do what you will, dishonor shall be humor.°
O Cassius, you are yokèd with a lamb
That carries anger as the flint bears fire, 110
Who, much enforcèd,° shows a hasty spark,
And straight° is cold again.

CASSIUS

Hath Cassius lived

To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus
When grief and blood ill-temperèd° vexeth him?

BRUTUS

When I spoke that, I was ill-tempered too. 115

CASSIUS

Do you confess so much? Give me your hand.

BRUTUS And my heart too.

CASSIUS

O Brutus!

BRUTUS

What's the matter?

CASSIUS

Have not you love enough to bear with me
When that rash humor° which my mother gave me
Makes me forgetful?

BRUTUS

Yes, Cassius, and from henceforth, 120

When you are over-earnest with your Brutus, He'll think your mother° chides, and leave you so.°

Enter a POET, [followed by LUCILIUS, TITINIUS, and LUCIUS].

POET

Let me go in to see the generals;
There is some grudge° between 'em; 'tis not meet
They be alone.

LUCILIUS

You shall not come to them. 125

54 learn of (1) hear about the exploits of (2) take lessons from 58 moved exasperated 59 tempted provoked 67 honesty integrity 69 respect heed 75 indirection irregular methods 80 rascal counters base (and worthless) coins 84 rived broken

93 alone only 95 braved defied 96 Checked rebuked 97 conned by rote learned by heart 98 cast . . . teeth throw in my face 101 Dearer . . . mine more precious than all the riches in the earth (Pluto, god of the underworld, and Plutus, god of riches, were frequently confused) 107 shall have scope (your anger) shall have free play 108 dishonor . . . humor insults shall be regarded as quirks of temperament 111 much enforcèd greatly provoked 112 straight immediately 114 blood ill-temperèd a "black mood" 119 rash humor hasty temperament 122 your mother i.e., your inherited temperament; leave you so leave it at that 124 grudge bad feeling

POET

Nothing but death shall stay me.

CASSIUS

How now. What's the matter?

POET

For shame, you generals! What do you mean?

Love, and be friends, as two such men should be;

For I have seen more years, I'm sure, than ye.

CASSIUS

Ha, ha! How vilely doth this cynic° rhyme!

BRUTUS

Get you hence, sirrah! Saucy° fellow, hence!

CASSIUS

Bear with him, Brutus, 'tis his fashion.

BRUTUS

I'll know his humor when he knows his time.°

What should the wars do with these jigging° fools?

Companion,° hence!

CASSIUS

Away, away, be gone!

Exit POET.

BRUTUS

Lucilius and Titinius, bid the commanders

Prepare to lodge their companies tonight.

CASSIUS

And come yourselves, and bring Messala with you

Immediately to us. [Exeunt LUCILIUS and TITINIUS.]

BRUTUS

Lucius, a bowl of wine.

[Exit LUCIUS.]

CASSIUS

I did not think you could have been so angry.

BRUTUS

O Cassius, I am sick of many griefs.

CASSIUS

Of your philosophy you make no use,

If you give place° to accidental evils.°

BRUTUS

No man bears sorrow better. Portia is dead.

CASSIUS Ha? Portia?

BRUTUS She is dead.

CASSIUS

How scaped I killing when I crossed° you so?

O insupportable and touching° loss!

Upon° what sickness?

BRUTUS

Impatient of° my absence,

And grief that young Octavius with Mark Antony

Have made themselves so strong—for with her death

That tidings came°—with this she fell distract,°

And (her attendants absent) swallowed fire.°

CASSIUS

And died so?

BRUTUS Even so.

CASSIUS

O ye immortal gods!

Enter boy [LUCIUS] with wine and tapers.

BRUTUS

Speak no more of her. Give me a bowl of wine.

In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius.

Drinks.

CASSIUS

My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge.

Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'erswell the cup;

I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love.

[Drinks. Exit LUCIUS.]Enter TITINIUS and MESSALA.

BRUTUS

Come in, Titinius! Welcome, good Messala.

Now sit we close about this taper here,

And call in question° our necessities.

CASSIUS

Portia, art thou gone?

BRUTUS

No more, I pray you.

Messala, I have here received letters

That young Octavius and Mark Antony

Come down upon us with a mighty power,°

Bending their expedition° toward Philippi.

MESSALA

Myself have letters of the selfsame tenure.°

BRUTUS

With what addition?

MESSALA

That by proscription° and bills of outlawry°

Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus

Have put to death an hundred senators.

BRUTUS

Therein our letters do not well agree.

Mine speak of seventy senators that died

By their proscriptions, Cicero being one.

CASSIUS

Cicero one?

MESSALA Cicero is dead,

And by that order of proscription.

Had you your letters from your wife, my lord?

BRUTUS No, Messala.

MESSALA

Nor nothing in your letters writ of her?

BRUTUS

Nothing, Messala.

MESSALA

That methinks is strange.

BRUTUS

Why ask you? Hear you aught of her in yours?

MESSALA No, my lord.

BRUTUS

Now as you are a Roman, tell me true.

MESSALA

Then like a Roman bear the truth I tell,

For certain she is dead, and by strange manner.

BRUTUS

Why, farewell, Portia. We must die, Messala.

130 cynic rude fellow 131 Saucy impertinent 133 I'll . . .
time I'll accept his eccentricity when he can judge the suitable time for it 134 jigging doggerel-writing, rhyming 135 Companion base fellow 143 place way; accidental evils misfortunes brought on by chance (Brutus seems not to be behaving as a Stoic philosopher should) 147 crossed contradicted 148 touching wounding, grievous 149 Upon as a result of; Impatient of unable to endure 151-52 for . . .
came news of her death came at the same time as news of their strength 152 fell distract became distraught 153 swallowed fire (according to Plutarch she choked herself by putting hot coals into her mouth)

155

160

165

170

175

180

185

With meditating that she must die once,^o
I have the patience to endure it now.

MESSALA

Even so great men great losses should endure. 190

CASSIUS

I have as much of this in art^o as you,
But yet my nature could not bear it so.^o

BRUTUS

Well, to our work alive.^o What do you think
Of marching to Philippi presently?^o

CASSIUS

I do not think it good.

BRUTUS

Your reason?

CASSIUS

This it is: 195

'Tis better that the enemy seek us;
So shall he waste his means, weary his soldiers,
Doing himself offense,^o whilst we, lying still,
Are full of rest, defense, and nimbleness.

BRUTUS

Good reasons must of force^o give place to better. 200
The people 'twixt Philippi and this ground
Do stand but in a forced affection;^o
For they have grudged us contribution.
The enemy, marching along by them,
By them shall make a fuller number up,
Come on refreshed, new-added^o and encouraged;
From which advantage shall we cut him off
If at Philippi we do face him there,
These people at our back.

CASSIUS

Hear me, good brother.

BRUTUS

Under your pardon.^o You must note beside 210
That we have tried the utmost of our friends,
Our legions are brimful, our cause is ripe.
The enemy increaseth every day;
We, at the height, are ready to decline.
There is a tide in the affairs of men
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted,^o all the voyage of their life
Is bound in^o shallows and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now afloat,
And we must take the current when it serves, 220
Or lose our ventures.^o

CASSIUS

Then, with your will,^o go on;

We'll along ourselves and meet them at Philippi.

BRUTUS

The deep of night is crept upon our talk,
And nature must obey necessity,
Which we will niggard with a little rest.^o 225
There is no more to say?

188 once at some time 191 this in art i.e., this Stoicism in theory 178-92 Had . . . so some editors suggest that this was the original version of Shakespeare's account of Portia's death and that he later deleted this and wrote in lines 140-54, preferring to demonstrate Brutus' humanity rather than his Stoicism; the Folio printer then set up both versions by mistake; line 155 would follow 139—as 193 would follow 177—neatly enough to make this an attractive theory 193 alive as men still living 194 presently immediately 198 offense harm 200 force necessity 202 Do . . . affection support us only under compulsion 206 new-added reinforced 210 Under your pardon excuse me 217 Omitted neglected 218 bound in limited to 221 ventures shipping trade, i.e., risks; with your will as you wish 225 niggard . . . rest put off with the shortest possible sleep

CASSIUS

No more. Good night.

Early tomorrow will we rise and hence.^o

Enter LUCIUS.

BRUTUS

Lucius, my gown.^o Exit LUCIUS.

Farewell, good Messala.

Good night, Titinius. Noble, noble Cassius,

Good night, and good repose.

CASSIUS

O my dear brother, 230

This was an ill beginning of the night

Never come^o such division 'tween our souls!

Let it not, Brutus.

Enter LUCIUS with the gown.

BRUTUS

Everything is well.

CASSIUS

Good night, my lord.

BRUTUS

Good night, good brother.

TITINIUS, MESSALA

Good night, Lord Brutus.

BRUTUS

Farewell, every one. Exeunt. 235

Give me the gown. Where is thy instrument?^o

LUCIUS

Here in the tent. 205

BRUTUS

What, thou speak'st drowsily?

Poor knave,^o I blame thee not; thou art o'erwatched.^o

Call Claudius and some other of my men;

I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent. 240

LUCIUS

Varro and Claudius!

Enter VARRO and CLAUDIUS.

210

VARRO Calls my lord?

BRUTUS

I pray you, sirs, lie in my tent and sleep.

It may be I shall raise^o you by and by 215

On business to my brother Cassius. 245

VARRO

So please you, we will stand and watch your pleasure.^o

BRUTUS

I will not have it so; lie down, good sirs;

It may be I shall otherwise bethink me.^o 220

[VARRO and CLAUDIUS lie down.]

Look, Lucius, here's the book I sought for so;

I put it in the pocket of my gown. 250

LUCIUS

I was sure your lordship did not give it me.

225

BRUTUS

Bear with me, good boy, I am much forgetful.

Canst thou hold up thy heavy eyes awhile,

And touch^o thy instrument a strain^o or two?

LUCIUS

Ay, my lord, an't^o please you.

BRUTUS

It does, my boy. 255

I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.

227 hence leave this place 228 gown dressing gown 232 Never come may there never again come 236 instrument probably a lute 238 knave boy; o'erwatched tired out from lack of sleep 244 raise rouse 246 watch your pleasure be on the watch for your command 248 otherwise bethink me change my mind 254 touch play on; strain tune 255 an't if it

LUCIUS It is my duty, sir.

BRUTUS

I should not urge thy duty past thy might;
I know young bloods° look for a time of rest.

LUCIUS I have slept, my lord, already.

BRUTUS

It was well done, and thou shalt sleep again;
I will not hold thee long. If I do live,
I will be good to thee.

Music, and a song.

This is a sleepy tune. O murd'rous° slumber!
Layest thou thy leaden° mace° upon my boy,
That plays thee music? Gentle knave, good night;
I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee.
If thou dost nod, thou break'st thy instrument;
I'll take it from thee; and, good boy, good night.
Let me see, let me see; is not the leaf turned down
Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.

Enter the GHOST of Caesar.

How ill this taper burns.° Ha! Who comes here?
I think it is the weakness of mine eyes
That shapes this monstrous apparition.
It comes upon° me. Art thou anything?
Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil,
That mak'st my blood cold, and my hair to stare?°
Speak to me what thou art.

GHOST

Thy evil spirit, Brutus.

BRUTUS Why com'st thou?

GHOST

To tell thee thou shalt see me at Philippi.

BRUTUS Well; then I shall see thee again?

GHOST Ay, at Philippi.

BRUTUS

Why, I will see thee at Philippi then. [Exit GHOST.]

Now I have taken heart thou vanishest.

Ill spirit, I would hold more talk with thee.

Boy! Lucius! Varro! Claudius! Sirs, awake!
Claudius!

LUCIUS The strings, my lord, are false.°

BRUTUS

He thinks he still is at his instrument.

Lucius, awake!

LUCIUS My lord?

BRUTUS

Didst thou dream, Lucius, that thou so criedst out?

LUCIUS

My lord, I do not know that I did cry.

BRUTUS

Yes, that thou didst. Didst thou see anything?

LUCIUS Nothing, my lord.

BRUTUS

Sleep again, Lucius. Sirrah Claudius!

[To VARRO.]

Fellow thou, awake!

VARRO My lord?

CLAUDIUS My lord?

BRUTUS

Why did you so cry out, sirs, in your sleep?

260 BOTH

Did we, my lord?

BRUTUS Ay. Saw you anything?

300

VARRO

No, my lord, I saw nothing.

CLAUDIUS

Nor I, my lord.

BRUTUS

265 Go and commend me° to my brother Cassius;
Bid him set on his pow'rs betimes before,°
And we will follow.

BOTH

It shall be done, my lord. Exeunt.

270

A C T V

[Scene I. The plains of Philippi.]

275 Enter OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, and their ARMY.

OCTAVIUS

Now, Antony, our hopes are answerèd;
You said the enemy would not come down,
But keep the hills and upper regions.
It proves not so; their battles° are at hand;
They mean to warn° us at Philippi here,
Answering before we do demand° of them.

5

280 ANTONY

Tut, I am in their bosoms,° and I know
Wherefore they do it. They could be content
To visit other places,° and come down
With fearful° bravery,° thinking by this face°
To fasten in our thoughts° that they have courage;
But 'tis not so.

10

285

Enter a MESSENGER.

MESSENGER Prepare you, generals,
The enemy comes on in gallant show;
Their bloody sign° of battle is hung out,
And something to be done immediately.

15

290 ANTONY

Octavius, lead your battle softly° on
Upon the left hand of the even° field.

OCTAVIUS

Upon the right hand I; keep thou the left.

ANTONY

Why do you cross° me in this exigent?°

OCTAVIUS

I do not cross you; but I will do so.

20

295

302 commend me give my greetings 303 set . . . before advance his forces early in the morning before me
V.i.4 battles armies 5 warn challenge 6 Answering . . .
demand appearing in opposition before we force a meeting
7 I . . . bosoms I understand their inmost thoughts 8-9
They . . . places they would prefer to be somewhere else
10 fearful(1) frightened (2) awe-inspiring; bravery bravado (and show of splendor); face appearance 11 fasten . . .
thoughts persuade us 14 bloody sign red flag 16 battle softly army slowly 17 even level 19 cross oppose, contradict 19 exigent crisis

259 young bloods youthful constitutions 264 murd'rous deathlike 265 leaden heavy (association also with death, for lead was used in coffinmaking); mace staff of office (with which a man was touched on the shoulder when arrested) 272 How . . . burns lights allegedly burned dimly or blue in the presence of a supernatural being 275 upon toward 277 stare stand on end 288 false out of tune

March. Drum. Enter BRUTUS, CASSIUS, and their ARMY; [LUCILIUS, TITINIUS, MESSALA, and others].

BRUTUS

They stand, and would have parley.

CASSIUS

Stand fast, Titinius, we must out and talk.

OCTAVIUS

Mark Antony, shall we give sign of battle?

ANTONY

No, Caesar, we will answer on their charge.^o

Make forth;^o the generals would have some words. 25

OCTAVIUS

Stir not until the signal.

BRUTUS

Words before blows; is it so, countrymen?

OCTAVIUS

Not that we love words better, as you do.

BRUTUS

Good words are better than bad strokes, Octavius.

ANTONY

In your bad strokes, Brutus, you give good words; 30

Witness the hole you made in Caesar's heart,

Crying "Long live! Hail, Caesar!"

CASSIUS

Antony,

The posture^o of your blows are yet unknown;

But for your words, they rob the Hybla^o bees,

And leave them honeyless.

ANTONY

Not stingless too. 35

BRUTUS

O, yes, and soundless too;

For you have stol'n their buzzing, Antony,

And very wisely threat before you sting.

ANTONY

Villains! You did not so, when your vile daggers

Hacked one another in the sides of Caesar. 40

You showed your teeth^o like apes, and fawned like hounds,

And bowed like bondmen, kissing Caesar's feet;

Whilst damnèd Casca, like a cur, behind

Struck Caesar on the neck. O you flatterers!

CASSIUS

Flatterers! Now, Brutus, thank yourself; 45

This tongue had not offended so today,

If Cassius might have ruled.^o

OCTAVIUS

Come, come, the cause.^o If arguing make us sweat,

The proof^o of it will turn to redder drops.

Look, 50

I draw a sword against conspirators.

When think you that the sword goes up^o again?

Never, till Caesar's three and thirty wounds

Be well avenged; or till another Caesar^o

Have added slaughter to^o the sword of traitors. 55

BRUTUS

Caesar, thou canst not die by traitors' hands,

Unless thou bring'st them with thee.

OCTAVIUS

So I hope.

I was not born to die on Brutus' sword.

BRUTUS

O, if thou wert the noblest of thy strain,^o

Young man, thou couldst not die more honorable. 60

CASSIUS

A peevish^o schoolboy, worthless^o of such honor,

Joined with a masker and a reveler.^o

ANTONY

Old Cassius still!

OCTAVIUS

Come, Antony; away!

Defiance, traitors, hurl we in your teeth.

If you dare fight today, come to the field; 65

If not, when you have stomachs.^o

Exit OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, and ARMY.

CASSIUS

Why, now blow wind, swell billow, and swim bark!

The storm is up, and all is on the hazard.^o

BRUTUS

Ho, Lucilius, hark, a word with you.

LUCILIUS and MESSALA stand forth.

LUCILIUS

My lord?

[BRUTUS and LUCILIUS converse apart.]

CASSIUS

Messala.

MESSALA What says my general?

CASSIUS

Messala, 70

This is my birthday; as this very day

Was Cassius born. Give me thy hand, Messala:

Be thou my witness that against my will

(As Pompey was)^o am I compelled to set^o

Upon one battle all our liberties. 75

You know that I held Epicurus strong,^o

And his opinion; now I change my mind,

And partly credit things that do presage.^o

Coming from Sardis, on our former^o ensign

Two mighty eagles fell,^o and there they perched, 80

Gorging and feeding from our soldiers' hands,

Who to Philippi here consorted^o us.

This morning are they fled away and gone,

And in their steads do ravens, crows, and kites^o

Fly o'er our heads and downward look on us 85

As we were sickly^o prey; their shadows seem

A canopy most fatal,^o under which

Our army lies, ready to give up the ghost.

MESSALA

Believe not so. 50

CASSIUS

I but believe it partly,

59 strain family, line of descent 61 peevish childish (Octavius was 21); worthless unworthy 62 masker . . . reveler i.e., that dissipated Antony, who loved participating in masques and wild parties (cf. I.ii.203-04, II.i.188-89, II.ii.116) 66 stomachs inclination, appetite 68 on the hazard at stake 74 As Pompey was at Pharsalus where, having been persuaded to give battle against his will, he was decisively defeated and later murdered; set stake 76 held Epicurus strong believed strongly in the philosophy of Epicurus (a materialist who believed that because the gods were not interested in human affairs omens were to be discounted) 78 presage foretell the future 79 former foremost 80 fell swooped down 82 consorted accompanied 84 ravens . . . kites scavengers; traditionally, they know when a battle is pending and accompany the armies 86 sickly ready for death 87 fatal presaging death

24 answer . . . charge meet them when they attack 25

Make forth go forward 33 posture nature, quality 34

Hybla a Sicilian town famous for its sweet honey 41 showed your teeth grinned 47 ruled had his way (i.e., in urging that Antony be slain) 48 cause business at hand

49 proof test 52 up into the sheath 54 another Caesar

i.e., Octavius himself 55 Have . . . to has also been killed by

For I am fresh of spirit and resolved
To meet all perils very constantly.°

BRUTUS

Even so, Lucilius.

CASSIUS Now, most noble Brutus,
The gods today stand friendly, that we may,
Lovers° in peace, lead on our days to age!
But since the affairs of men rests still incertain,°
Let's reason with the worst that may befall.°
If we do lose this battle, then is this
The very last time we shall speak together.
What are you then determinèd to do?

BRUTUS

Even by the rule of that philosophy°
By which I did blame Cato for the death
Which he did give himself; I know not how,
But I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall,° so to prevent°
The time° of life, arming myself with patience
To stay the providence° of some high powers
That govern us below.

CASSIUS Then, if we lose this battle,
You are contented to be led in triumph°
Thorough the streets of Rome?

BRUTUS

No, Cassius, no; think not, thou noble Roman,
That ever Brutus will go bound to Rome;
He bears too great a mind. But this same day
Must end that work the ides of March begun;
And whether we shall meet again I know not.
Therefore our everlasting farewell take.
Forever, and forever, farewell, Cassius!
If we do meet again, why, we shall smile;
If not, why then this parting was well made.

CASSIUS

Forever, and forever, farewell, Brutus!
If we do meet again, we'll smile indeed;
If not, 'tis true this parting was well made.

BRUTUS

Why then, lead on. O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come!
But it sufficeth that the day will end,
And then the end is known. Come, ho! Away!

Exeunt.

[Scene II. The field of battle.]

Alarum.° Enter BRUTUS and MESSALA.

BRUTUS

Ride, ride, Messala, ride, and give these bills°
Unto the legions on the other side.°

Loud alarum.

Let them set on at once; for I perceive

90 But cold demeanor° in Octavius' wing,
And sudden push° gives them the overthrow. 5
Ride, ride, Messala! Let them all come down. Exeunt.

[Scene III. The field of battle.]

95 Alarums. Enter CASSIUS and TITINIUS.

CASSIUS

O, look, Titinius, look, the villains° fly!
Myself have to mine own° turned enemy.
This ensign° here of mine was turning back;
I slew the coward, and did take it° from him.

100 TITINIUS

O Cassius, Brutus gave the word too early, 5
Who, having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,°
Whilst we by Antony are all enclosed.

105

Enter PINDARUS.

PINDARUS

Fly further off, my lord, fly further off!
Mark Antony is in your tents, my lord. 10
Fly, therefore, noble Cassius, fly far° off!

CASSIUS

110 This hill is far enough. Look, look, Titinius!
Are those my tents where I perceive the fire?

TITINIUS

They are, my lord.

CASSIUS

115 Titinius, if thou lovest me,
Mount thou my horse and hide thy spurs in him 15
Till he have brought thee up to yonder troops
And here again, that I may rest assured
Whether yond troops are friend or enemy.

TITINIUS

I will be here again even with a thought.° Exit.

120

CASSIUS

Go, Pindarus, get higher on that hill; 20
My sight was ever thick.° Regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou not'st about the field.

[Exit PINDARUS.]

125

This day I breathèd first. Time is come round,
And where I did begin, there shall I end.

My life is run his compass.° Sirrah, what news? 25

PINDARUS (Above.)° O my lord!

CASSIUS What news?

PINDARUS [Above.]

Titinius is enclosed round about
With horsemen that make to him on the spur;°
Yet he spurs on. Now they are almost on him. 30
Now, Titinius! Now some light.° O, he lights too!
He's ta'en!° (Shout.) And, hark! They shout for joy.

CASSIUS

Come down; behold no more.

4 But cold demeanor marked lack of spirit in fighting 5 push attack

V.iii.i villains cowardly soldiers of his own side 2 mine own my own men 3 ensign standard-bearer 4 it the standard 7 spoil looting 11 far farther 19 even . . . thought as quickly as thought 21 My . . . thick I have always been nearsighted 25 is . . . compass has completed its circuit 26 s.d. Above on the upper stage 29 make . . . spur ride toward him at top speed 31 light dismount 32 ta'en taken, captured

91 constantly resolutely 94 Lovers devoted friends 95 rests still incertain always stand in doubt 96 reason . . . befall consider what must be done if the worst happens 100 that philosophy Stoicism 104 fall befall; prevent anticipate 105 time term, natural end 106 stay the providence await the ordained fate 108 in triumph (as a captive) in the victor's procession

V.ii. s.d. Alarum call to arms (drums or trumpets) 1 bills written orders 2 side wing (commanded by Cassius)

O, coward that I am, to live so long,
To see my best friend ta'en before my face!

Enter PINDARUS.

Come hither, sirrah.
In Parthia did I take thee prisoner;
And then I swore thee, saving of° thy life,
That whatsoever I did bid thee do,
Thou shouldst attempt it. Come now, keep thine oath. 40
Now be a freeman, and with this good sword,
That ran through Caesar's bowels, search° this bosom.
Stand° not to answer. Here, take thou the hilts,
And when my face is covered, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword—Caesar, thou art revenged, 45
Even with the sword that killed thee. [Dies.]

PINDARUS

So, I am free; yet would not so have been,
Durst I have done my will. O Cassius!
Far from this country Pindarus shall run,
Where never Roman shall take note of him. [Exit.] 50

Enter TITINIUS and MESSALA.

MESSALA

It is but change,° Titinius; for Octavius
Is overthrown by noble Brutus' power,
As Cassius' legions are by Antony.

TITINIUS

These tidings will well comfort Cassius.

MESSALA

Where did you leave him?

TITINIUS

All disconsolate, 55
With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill.

MESSALA

Is not that he that lies upon the ground?

TITINIUS

He lies not like the living. O my heart!

MESSALA

Is not that he?

TITINIUS

No, this was he, Messala, 60
But Cassius is no more. O setting sun,
As in thy red rays thou dost sink to night,
So in his red blood Cassius' day is set.
The sun of Rome is set. Our day is gone;
Clouds, dews,° and dangers come; our deeds are done!
Mistrust of° my success hath done this deed. 65

MESSALA

Mistrust of good success hath done this deed.
O hateful Error, Melancholy's child,°
Why dost thou show to the apt° thoughts of men
The things that are not? O Error, soon conceived, 70
Thou never com'st unto a happy birth,
But kill'st the mother° that engend' red thee!

TITINIUS

What, Pindarus! Where art thou, Pindarus?

MESSALA

Seek him, Titinius, whilst I go to meet
The noble Brutus, thrusting this report
Into his ears. I may say "thrusting" it; 75
For piercing steel and darts envenomèd
Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus
As tidings of this sight.

TITINIUS

Hie° you, Messala,
And I will seek for Pindarus the while.

[Exit MESSALA.]

Why didst thou send me forth, brave° Cassius? 80
Did I not meet thy friends, and did not they Put on my brows this wreath of victory,
And bid me give it thee? Didst thou not hear their shouts?

Alas, thou hast misconstrued everything!
But hold thee,° take this garland on thy brow; 85
Thy Brutus bid me give it thee, and I
Will do his bidding. Brutus, come apace,°
And see how I regarded° Caius Cassius.
By your leave,° gods. This is a Roman's part:°
Come, Cassius' sword, and find Titinius' heart. Dies. 90

Alarum. Enter BRUTUS, MESSALA, young CATO, STRATO, VOLUMNIUS, and LUCILIUS.

BRUTUS

Where, where, Messala, doth his body lie?

MESSALA

Lo, yonder, and Titinius mourning it.

BRUTUS

Titinius' face is upward.

CATO

He is slain. 55

BRUTUS

O Julius Caesar, thou art mighty yet!
Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords 95
In our own proper° entrails. Low alarums.

CATO

Brave° Titinius!
Look, whe'r° he have not crowned dead Cassius.

BRUTUS

Are yet two Romans living such as these?
The last of all the Romans, fare thee well!
It is impossible that ever Rome 100
Should breed thy fellow.° Friends, I owe moe° tears
To this dead man than you shall see me pay.
I shall find time, Cassius; I shall find time.
Come, therefore, and to Thasos° send his body;
His funerals shall not be in our camp, 105
Lest it discomfort us.° Lucilius, come,
And come, young Cato; let us to the field.
Labeo and Flavius set our battles° on.
'Tis three o'clock; and, Romans, yet ere night
We shall try fortune in a second fight. Exeunt. 110

38 swore . . . of made you swear, when I spared 42 search penetrate 43 Stand delay 51 change exchange (of fortune) 64 dews considered unwholesome 65 Mistrust of lack of confidence in 67 Melancholy's child i.e., those of despondent temperament are likely to be introspective and full of imaginary fears 68 apt easily impressed 71 mother
the melancholy person, Cassius, who conceived the error

78 Hie hasten 80 brave noble 85 hold thee wait a moment
87 apace quickly 88 regarded honored 89 By your leave with your permission (because he is ending his life before the time appointed by the gods); part role, duty 96 own proper (emphatic) very own; Brave noble 97 whe'r whether 101 fellow equal; moe more 104 Thasos an island near Philippi 106 discomfort us dishearten our troops 108 battles armies

[Scene IV. The field of battle.]

Alarum. Enter BRUTUS, MESSALA, [young] CATO, LUCILIUS, and FLAVIUS.

BRUTUS

Yet, countrymen, O, yet hold up your heads!
[Exit, with FOLLOWERS.]

CATO

What bastard^o doth not? Who will go with me?
I will proclaim my name about the field.
I am the son of Marcus Cato,^o ho!
A foe to tyrants, and my country's friend.
I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!

Enter SOLDIERS and fight.

[LUCILIUS]^o

And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I;
Brutus, my country's friend; know me for Brutus!
[Young CATO falls.]

O young and noble Cato, art thou down?
Why, now thou diest as bravely as Titinius,
And mayst be honored, being Cato's son.

[FIRST] SOLDIER

Yield, or thou diest.

LUCILIUS Only I yield to die.^o

There is so much^o that thou wilt kill me straight;^o
Kill Brutus, and be honored in his death.

[FIRST] SOLDIER

We must not. A noble prisoner!

Enter ANTONY.

SECOND SOLDIER

Room, ho! Tell Antony, Brutus is ta'en.

FIRST SOLDIER

I'll tell the news. Here comes the general.

Brutus is ta'en, Brutus is ta'en, my lord.

ANTONY Where is he?

LUCILIUS

Safe, Antony; Brutus is safe enough.

I dare assure thee that no enemy

Shall ever take alive the noble Brutus.

The gods defend him from so great a shame!

When you do find him, or alive or dead,

He will be found like Brutus, like himself.^o

ANTONY

This is not Brutus, friend, but, I assure you,

A prize no less in worth. Keep this man safe;

Give him all kindness. I had rather have Such men my friends than enemies. Go on,

And see whe'r Brutus be alive or dead,

And bring us word unto Octavius' tent

How everything is chanced.^o

Exeunt.

V.iv.2 What bastard who is such a low fellow that he 4 son . . . Cato son of Cato of Utica, hence, brother of Brutus' wife 7 Lucilius the Folio fails to provide a speech prefix for lines 7-8, but because it is clear from Plutarch and from line 14 that Lucilius impersonates Brutus it is plausible to attribute 7-8 to Lucilius 12 Only . . . die I yield only to die 13 so much so great an inducement, i.e., gaining great honor by killing Brutus (?), so much to be blamed for (?), a sum of money (offered to the soldier) (?); straight immediately 25 like himself behaving in accordance with his noble nature
32 is chanced has turned out

[Scene V. The field of battle.]

Enter BRUTUS, DARDANIUS, CLITUS, STRATO, and VOLUMNIUS.

BRUTUS

Come, poor remains^o of friends, rest on this rock.

CLITUS

Statilius showed the torchlight,^o but, my lord,
He came not back; he is or ta'en or slain.

BRUTUS

Sit thee down, Clitus. Slaying is the word;
It is a deed in fashion. Hark thee, Clitus.

[Whispers.]

CLITUS

What, I, my lord? No, not for all the world!

BRUTUS

Peace then, no words.

CLITUS

I'll rather kill myself.

BRUTUS

Hark thee, Dardanius. [Whispers.]

DARDANIUS

Shall I do such a deed?

CLITUS O Dardanius!

DARDANIUS O Clitus!

CLITUS

What ill request did Brutus make to thee?

DARDANIUS

To kill him, Clitus. Look, he meditates.

CLITUS

Now is that noble vessel^o full of grief,
That it runs over even at his eyes.

BRUTUS

Come hither, good Volumnius; list^o a word.

VOLUMNIUS

What says my lord?

BRUTUS

Why, this, Volumnius:

The ghost of Caesar hath appeared to me

Two several^o times by night; at Sardis once,

And this last night here in Philippi fields.

I know my hour is come.

VOLUMNIUS

Not so, my lord.

BRUTUS

Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius.

Thou see'st the world, Volumnius, how it goes;

Our enemies have beat us to the pit.^o

Low alarums.

It is more worthy to leap in ourselves

Than tarry till they push us. Good Volumnius,

Thou know'st that we two went to school together;

Even for that our love of old, I prithee

Hold thou my sword-hilts whilst I run on it.

VOLUMNIUS

That's not an office for a friend, my lord.

Alarum still.^o

V.v.1 poor remains wretched survivors 2 showed the torchlight Statilius had volunteered to see if Cassius' camp was occupied by the enemy; he signaled on arrival there but was obviously captured thereafter 13 vessel figurative for "human being"; also an allusion to the small jars of tears offered to the dead 15 list hear 18 several separate 23 pit
(1) trap for capturing wild animals (2) grave 29 s.d. still continuing

CLITUS

Fly, fly, my lord, there is no tarrying here.

BRUTUS

Farewell to you; and you; and you, Volumnius.

Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep;

Farewell to thee too, Strato. Countrymen,

My heart doth joy that yet in all my life

I found no man but he was true to me.

I shall have glory by this losing day

More than Octavius and Mark Antony

By this vile conquest° shall attain unto.

So far you well at once,° for Brutus' tongue

Hath almost ended his life's history.

Night hangs upon mine eyes; my bones would rest,

That have but labored to attain this hour.°

Alarum. Cry within, "Fly, fly, fly!"

CLITUS Fly, my lord, fly!

BRUTUS Hence! I will follow.

[Exeunt CLITUS, DARDANIUS, and VOLUMNIUS.]

I prithee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord,

Thou art a fellow of a good respect.°

Thy life hath had some smatch° of honor in it;

Hold then my sword, and turn away thy face,

While I do run upon it. Wilt thou, Strato?

STRATO

Give me your hand first. Fare you well, my lord.

BRUTUS

Farewell, good Strato—Caesar, now be still;

I killed not thee with half so good a will. Dies.Alarum. Retreat. Enter ANTONY, OCTAVIUS, MESSALA, LUCILIUS, and the ARMY.

OCTAVIUS

What man is that?

MESSALA

My master's man.° Strato, where is thy master?

STRATO

Free from the bondage you are in, Messala;

The conquerors can but make a fire of him.

38 vile conquest overthrow of the revolution against tyranny 39 at once without further delay 42 but . . . hour worked hard only to reach this goal of death (which brings, for a Stoic, rest from life's trials) 45 respect reputation 46 smatch smack, taste 53 man servant

30

For Brutus only overcame himself,°

And no man else hath honor by his death.

LUCILIUS

So Brutus should be found. I thank thee, Brutus,

That thou hast proved Lucilius' saying° true.

OCTAVIUS

All that served Brutus, I will entertain° them.

35

Fellow, wilt thou bestow° thy time with me?

STRATO

Ay, if Messala will prefer° me to you.

OCTAVIUS

Do so, good Messala.

40

MESSALA

How died my master, Strato?

STRATO

I held the sword, and he did run on it.

65

MESSALA

Octavius, then take him to follow thee,

That did the latest° service to my master.

ANTONY

This was the noblest Roman of them all.

All the conspirators save only he 45

Did that they did in envy of great Caesar;

He, only in a general honest thought

And common good to all, made one of them.°

His life was gentle,° and the elements°

So mixed° in him that Nature might stand up

And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

75

OCTAVIUS

According to his virtue,° let us use° him

With all respect and rites of burial.

Within my tent his bones tonight shall lie,

Most like a soldier ordered honorably.°

So call the field° to rest, and let's away

80

To part° the glories of this happy day. Exeunt omnes.

56 Brutus . . . himself only Brutus overcame Brutus 59 saying see V.iv.21-25 60 entertain take into service 61 bestow spend 62 prefer recommend 67 latest last 71-72 He . . . them he, moved only by impersonal motives directed to the good of the community, joined the conspirators 73 gentle noble; elements the four opposed elements, of which all nature was thought to be composed, were represented in the human body by the four liquids, bile, phlegm, blood, and choler; the dominance of these determined a man's temperament—melancholic, phlegmatic, sanguine, or choleric) 74 So mixed so well-balanced 76 virtue excellence; use treat 79 ordered honorably arrayed (and treated) with all honor 80 field army 81 part divide

AS YOU LIKE IT

EDITED BY ALBERT GILMAN

Introduction

Samuel Johnson found the story of As You Like It "wild and pleasing," the dialogue "sprightly," but regretted Shakespeare's "hastening to the end of his work," especially because it meant suppressing the "dialogue between the usurper and the hermit" and thereby losing "an opportunity of exhibiting a moral lesson." From the eighteenth century on, critics have often said that Shakespeare's craftsmanship in As You Like It is poor. G. B. Shaw, perhaps with tongue in cheek, in The Dark Lady of the Sonnets has Will Shakespeare say to Queen Elizabeth: "I have also stole from a book of idle wanton tales two of the most damnable foolishnesses in the world, in the one of which a woman goeth in man's attire and maketh impudent love to her swain, who pleaseth the groundlings by overthrowing a wrestler. . . . I have writ these to save my friends from penury, yet shewing my scorn for such follies and for them that praise them by calling the one As You Like It, meaning that it is not as I like it."

Some critics have complained of inconsistencies in the plotting. From several speeches in the play, it would appear that Duke Senior has been banished to the Forest of Arden for a long time, but other speeches suggest that his banishment is recent. In the first scene of the play Shakespeare gives the name Jaques to the middle son of Sir Rowland de Boys, but this Jaques does not appear until the close of the play and his speeches are simply marked "Second Brother." In the meantime we have heard much from another Jaques, the melancholy Jaques, who is one of Duke Senior's retainers. Two characters called by the same name can make for some confusion. These bits of carelessness, if that is what they are, are not unusual in Shakespeare and not peculiar to this play. What is unusual is the extraordinary dispatch with which the plot unfolds. Almost everything that is to happen, happens in the first act; murders are attempted, ribs are cracked, and several major characters are packed off to the Forest of Arden. In the ensuing acts Shakespeare scarcely concerns himself with the troubles that were introduced in the first act. Except for three short scenes we are always in Arden, where the dangers we are chiefly aware of are falling in love or being worsted in a discussion. So that the audience may go home, the two villains are reported to have been converted and four pairs of lovers are lined up to be wed.

Shakespeare has certainly handled the narrative expeditiously. It is very much as if he were eager to be in Arden to "fleet the time carelessly as they did in the golden world." We cannot regret that he missed the "opportunity of exhibiting a moral lesson." Nor can we regret that he gave himself a holiday from the intricate plotting that marks what seems to be the comedy anterior to As You Like It, Much Ado About Nothing. Who has not looked at his watch during the last act of a well-made plot and sighed to think of the knots still to be untied? We had rather be in Arden where the wicked are converted by fiat and lovers marry in half-dozen lots.

The plot moves swiftly in the beginning of As You Like It (and then stands almost still until the fifth act) because the interest of the play is not intended to arise out of the action or situation. And, as William Hazlitt has remarked, it does not. The play is chiefly concerned with two enduring human illusions—the pastoral ideal, or the dream of a simple life, and the ideal of romantic love. These are given an extremely complex representation through dialogue and contrasting relationships. The plot creates the conditions for this representation. The characters are given reason to wander in the woodland, the proper setting in which to develop the theme of pastoralism. Four diverse pairs are caused to fall in love and their contrasting romances will exemplify the varieties of love. Rosalind, given a double identity, can spoof love and yet be a lover. The plot does very well what it is designed to do.

The motives of the chief characters in As You Like It are as simple and abrupt as the action of the play, and they could surely be put in evidence by those who think the play a piece of indifferent craftsmanship. Oliver would see an end to his brother Orlando. Why? "For my soul, yet I know not why, hates nothing more than he." Duke Frederick, the usurper who has banished Duke Senior, would now banish Rosalind. The reason? "Grounded upon no other argument/But that the people praise her for her virtues." In her scenes with Orlando, Rosalind is in no danger; thus her original reason for pretending to be a man does not apply. Yet she does pretend, and it is only her disguise that prevents their immediate marriage. How is so crucial a decision motivated? "I will speak to him like a saucy lackey, and under that habit play the knave with him." Which is to say that she did it because she would do it.

In As You Like It each action follows directly from the uncomplicated nature of the person acting. It is his natural wickedness that impels Oliver to hate Orlando, and it is wickedness that causes Frederick to banish Rosalind. Antonio, in Shakespeare's The Tempest, is another younger brother who banishes his elder brother (Prospero) and usurps the dukedom. But Antonio's case is more complex than Frederick's, since, while the usurpation is not justified, there is the excuse that Prospero had neglected his duties as a ruler, and Antonio, Prospero's delegate, through the exercise of ducal power, came to believe (as a liar may come to believe his lie) that he was in fact the duke. But neither Rosalind nor Duke Senior is culpable, and Duke Frederick's usurpation is not said to result from any such interesting state of mind as Antonio's. Duke Frederick's crimes derive from his nature alone. In As You Like It a good nature is as unfailingly manifest as a bad one. Because their hearts are blithe, Celia and Rosalind are able to go into exile saying: "Now go in we content/To liberty, and not to banishment." Because his nature is noble, Duke Senior can say "Sweet are the uses of adversity" and can find "good in everything." The good in this play will be good whatever the occasion seems to warrant and the evil, at first, will be evil. Of Shakespeare's comedies only The Comedy of Errors makes so simple a connection between temperament and action. The Comedy of Errors is a farce, but As You Like It is not.

Englishmen in the Renaissance liked to construe life as an interaction of Fortune and Nature, and in As You Like It there is some talk of these two goddesses. Rosalind, for instance, instructs Celia: "Fortune reigns in gifts of the world, not in the lineaments of Nature." The only tension in the plot of As You Like It, set up in the first act, derives from Fortune's unjust distribution of the gifts of the world. The nobler natures, Duke Senior, Rosalind, Celia, and Orlando, are made to suffer by Fortune while the wicked, Oliver and Duke Frederick, thrive. This imbalance between Fortune and Nature requires resolution. The resolution provided is exceptionally good-humored, far more so than in either Much Ado About Nothing or Twelfth Night, the two plays with which As You Like It is conventionally grouped. The wicked are not punished or left rancorous but are converted and, now as virtuous men, Frederick and Oliver bring the fortunes of Duke Senior, Rosalind, and Orlando into harmony with their natures. Frederick's conversion is accomplished by contact with an old religious man, Oliver's by Orlando's generosity in saving his life. Fortunes are adjusted and dark natures are brightened by the simple impact of virtue. All of this makes a tidy package if Fortune and Nature are conceived as the major forces in life and if these forces are thought to work toward human happiness. Shakespeare's world view was ordinarily more complex.

It is, after all, a kind of innocence to believe that evil is certain men and that goodness is certain other men. And it is the sunniest optimism to believe that the evil are converted by contact with the good. In other plays of Shakespeare, even in the other comedies, temperaments are not so consistently agreeable or disagreeable and resolutions are not so sweet. Orsino, in Twelfth Night, is as romantic as Orlando but, where Orlando is vigorous and sensible, Orsino is passive and self-indulgent. Orsino is a generally sympathetic character, but there is something in him which dissatisfies us. Beatrice, in Much Ado About Nothing, is as witty as Rosalind but lacks her self-knowledge and is sometimes near to shrewishness. Beatrice is an attractive figure, but she has traits that threaten her happiness. The unsympathetic Malvolio, in Twelfth Night, is not transformed by contact with goodness; his last line is: "I'll be revenged on the whole pack of you." Shakespeare's characters ordinarily mix good with evil. His dramatic tension often derives from irreconcilable desires within each nature rather than from an easily corrected malallocation of Fortune's gifts. The exercise of virtue in some of his plays only stimulates the wicked to further wickedness. Why are these darker principles suspended in As You Like It?

The play is intended to suggest that human life can be harmoniously lived; that good sense, love, humor, and a generous disposition will produce happiness. Such a view requires not suppression of, but inattention to, those aspects of motivation and of human relationship that, in life, continually postpone a general harmony. A world that includes irreconcilable personal conflict and unrepenting evil can achieve justice, but not universal happiness.

As You Like It causes us to entertain seriously an illusion—a view of life in which a human wish plays a greater role than reality. Yet the play is far from being continuously idyllic. It is filled with sharp comment and disillusioning fact, particularly in connection with its chief subjects—the simple life and romantic love. These subjects are themselves illusions, conventional illusions, sentimental and foolish. Shakespeare laughs at their conventional treatment, threatens them with contrary views and conflicting facts, but in the end preserves them. The play reconciles the ideal with the actual. But not all of the actual. Shakespeare has looked away from the uglier facts, the ultimate ironies that cannot be integrated into a vision of harmony and happiness. Perhaps it is only The Tempest and The Winter's Tale, plays written after the great tragedies, that make happiness seem to be generally possible and yet also offer powerful representations of evil and suffering.

If As You Like It offered a completely one-sided presentation of harmony, we might be armed against it. But it does not. It presents numerous contrary arguments, and the tension they bring to the debate in Arden lends credence to the resolution. For as long as the play lasts we do not notice that the case against the ideal has not been as strong as it could be; that matters that cannot be reconciled with the ideal have been passed over. It is an illusion that As You Like It creates, but an illusion that admits so much of life as to seem possible.

What is the nature of the contrarieties that are reconciled with the pastoral ideal and the ideal of romantic love? Arrived in Arden, Touchstone is asked how he likes the shepherd's life and he replies:

In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life. Now in respect it is in the fields, it pleaseth me well; but in respect it is not in the court, it is tedious. As it is a spare life, look you, it fits my humor well; but as there is no more plenty in it, it goes much against my stomach. (III.ii.15-21)

The expression of one idea stimulates Touchstone to the expression of its contrary. But the ideas are not contraries of objective fact. To be solitary is to be private; to be in the fields is to be not in the court; to lead a spare life is to lead a life that has no more plenty in it. The objective facts are the same and the opposition is one of sentiment. A life spent apart from others can be agreeable or it can be disagreeable. When it is agreeable Touchstone would call it solitary and when it is disagreeable he would call it private. What can cause the same objective condition to change its nature?

Rosalind, who stands in the center of all things in this play, answers our question, but with reference to time rather than life in the forest. "Time," she says, "travels in divers paces with divers persons." She goes on to particularize. For a young maid "between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized" time trots too slowly. For a rich man who "hath not the gout" time ambles most agreeably. For a thief on his way to the gallows time goes too swiftly. To generalize Rosalind's remarks: time and life in the forest are apprehended differently by different persons and differently by one person according to his condition of life and state of appetite. Life in the forest and romantic love are ideal in their season but they are not for all seasons. Like a holiday, the greenwood and true love offer refreshment and regeneration. Prolonged beyond their season they become absurd and distasteful.

Touchstone concludes the speech quoted above by asking Corin: "Hast any philosophy in thee, shepherd?" Corin's response begins: "No more, but that I know the more one sickens, the worse at ease he is." At first this reply seems a simple extension of Touchstone's list of on-the-one-hand-this, but-on-the-other-hand-that. Then one realizes that the contrast between Corin's two terms, "the more one sickens" and "the worse at ease," does not follow Touchstone's principle. Corin's terms are objective synonyms as are Touchstone's, but Corin's are also subjective synonyms; to be sick and to be ill at ease are both disagreeable. It seems then that simple Corin has missed the point. Except that sickness is one of the things in life that is not psychologically relative; we never have an appetite for it. It is an absolute evil. Without knowing just how much philosophy the old shepherd had in him, we can take his line as the text for another proposition about As You Like It. The relativism of the play's discourse is bounded by a set of moral absolutes that cannot be taken as you like it.

Touchstone's speech concerns the pastoral life and this is a major subject of the conversations in Arden through III.ii. Pastoralism is a place and time apart. It is the restorative greenwood, where men live in the simplicity of nature. It is a remote Golden Age of harmony and innocence. The modern time and the corrupt court are its antithesis.

Duke Senior realizes the pastoral dream in Arden, finding "books in the running brooks" and "sermons in stones." Amiens sings sweetly of pastoralism in "Under the Greenwood Tree." But Jaques, who is of another humor, adds a jaundiced verse calling that man a fool who leaves wealth and ease for the wilderness. In course of time it develops that the winds are cold in Arden and the ground is hard, that the deer, "native burghers of this desert city," can be as indifferent to the misery of one of their kind as human beings can be, and that at least one lion and one snake are among the animal life. Life in the forest is not a fixed reality. It is able to produce happiness and able to produce misery. Love has potentialities that are more complex.

Love is revealed directly in the romance of Rosalind and Orlando and, by contrast, in the matching of Silvius with Phebe, and the mating of Audrey with Touchstone. The former pair disenchant us with certain aspects of both pastoralism and love. Silvius at first appears as the lovelorn shepherd of pastoral romance and Phebe as his pouting shepherdess. The sighing and spurning that are so graceful in the classical picture are distasteful when we see a little more of them. Silvius is an abject figure with his "Sweet Phebe, pity me." He shows what love can descend to when it is not combined with good sense. Phebe shows the response such love will inspire in a petulant nature:

But since that thou canst talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure; and I'll employ thee too.
But do not look for further recompense
Than thine own gladness that thou art employed.
(III.v.94-98)

We delight in Rosalind's pungent advice to Phebe: "Sell when you can, you are not for all markets."

For Touchstone love is a ubiquitous human need that seeks an object; it is very like a need that in animals is seasonal. Audrey, falling within his tolerance limits, is taken as an object. Romantic love does not have an object; it has an incomparable inspiration. Orlando, with Rosalind for inspiration, hangs love poems on trees and cries her name throughout the forest. Rosalind, hearing that Celia has seen Orlando, excitedly asks: "What did he when thou saw'st him? What said he? How looked he? Wherein went he? What makes he here?"

The several aspects of love are revealed by the three unlike love affairs. They are revealed also in the running discourse in Arden. There is no scene in which the nature of love is debated. No one keeps to the subject for long; Rosalind ends her catechism of love, in which Orlando and Phebe echo Silvius' exalted sentiments, with: "Pity you, no more of this; 'tis like the howling of Irish wolves against the moon." The discourse is composed of an ironic remark from Touchstone in one scene, something extravagantly amorous from Orlando in another, a joke from Celia in still another. The touches of color, the shading, the points of light, are distributed in time, but they come together to make a rather complex representation.

The disillusioned remarks on love, as on pastoralism, come chiefly from Jaques and Touchstone. Jaques is a man who has traveled and come back a weary malcontent; he stands somewhat detached from life. He is a variation on a familiar kind of stage figure in Shakespeare's day, a type first found in the snarling verse satires written by John Marston and Joseph Hall in the 1590's. After 1599 the type appears in the drama: the bitter critic who defends his railing and abusive language by saying that such attacks as his are the only way to purge the world of its vices. In II.vii, Duke Senior attacks Jaques as if he were a perfect instance of this type, and Jaques responds with the critic's familiar defense. In fact, however, Shakespeare has departed from the type.

Jaques ridicules human ideals, but his attacks are not corrosive and they are entertainingly expressed. Seeing Touchstone and Audrey press in among the country copulatives, Jaques remarks: "There is, sure, another flood toward, and these couples are coming to the ark." That he enjoys hearing Amiens sing argues a certain sweetness of nature, sweeter at any rate than the nature of Shylock, to whom music is the "vile squeaking of the wry-necked fife." The other characters appear to enjoy the company of Jaques as they would not the company of so vicious a satirist as Thersites in Troilus and Cressida. Duke Senior loves to be with him in his "sullen fits," for then Jaques is "full of matter," and at the end the duke urges Jaques to return with him to the court.

The darker potentialities of Jaques are hinted at, but on the whole he is an entertaining fellow and much that he says about love is true—when one is not in love. However, those who are most in love do not envy Jaques' detachment and knowledge of life. Rosalind gives her opinion that those who are either too sad or too merry are "abominable fellows," but between the two she would rather "have a fool to make me merry than experience to make me sad."

In Touchstone we have the fool Rosalind asks for. He sees as little in life to make one sad as Jaques sees to make one merry. Jaques is perhaps a disappointed idealist; but Touchstone is a realist who believes that happiness derives from the satisfactions of the body and from a wit that is quick to see the absurdity and folly in life. As Miss Gardner and Professor Goldsmith point out, Touchstone is the great parodist of the play (see, for instance, his love poem to Rosalind following those of Orlando). Touchstone's marriage to Audrey, the simple-minded shepherdess, who in fact is a goatherd, is itself a parody, but one of Shakespeare's making rather than Touchstone's. It is a parody on romance and pastoralism; but it is also the author's comment on the limitations of Touchstone's view of life.

Touchstone and Jaques are alike in their rejection of the ideal and alike therefore in their incompleteness. They show us the ideal as absurdity and sentimentality. Orlando and Rosalind show us romantic love as the best part of life so long as it is understood to be only a part, something that is here and now and should be enjoyed in its time. The play as a whole presents this view, but it is fully articulated by Rosalind alone.

Many romantic lines come from Orlando and Rosalind, and if they were to follow one upon another it would be "to have honey a sauce to sugar." Between sweets, however, there is always something sharp to taste. Sometimes it is provided by Jaques or Touchstone or Celia but most often perhaps by Rosalind as Ganymede. The contrast preserves the flavor. When Orlando swears that he will die of love if he cannot have Rosalind, she gives him her answer: "Men have died from time to time, and worms have eaten them, but not for love."

To speak of contrast is to suggest that one aspect is subordinate to the others; in the extreme case, that it exists only to set off the others. This is not the case with Rosalind's statements about love. Rosalind's line is comically matter-of-fact, very flat, but, after all, true. It checks Orlando just as he is about to move into absurdity. He loves her and it seems to him now that he cannot live without her, but if, in fact, he could not have her he would find reason to live.

Romantic love strains toward eternity. Memory and observation and the foresight they give are its enemies.

When Orlando swears that he will love forever and a day, Rosalind responds: "Say 'a day' without the 'ever.' No, no, Orlando. Men are April when they woo, December when they wed. Maids are May when they are maids, but the sky changes when they are wives."

On another occasion Rosalind as Ganymede teases Orlando by insisting that he has not the look of the distracted lover. "You are rather point-device in your accouterments, as loving yourself than seeming the lover of any other." Here again she is ridiculing the extremities of romantic love. At times she makes jokes that are bawdy and so reveal a facet of love. Orlando brings his destiny with him, she says. "What's that?" he asks. "Why horns; which such as you are fain to be beholding to your wives for." And when Orlando asks if she will love him—"Ay, and twenty such."

Yet Rosalind is unquestionably in love. To Celia she confides "that thou didst know how many fathom deep I am in love. But it cannot be sounded. My affection hath an unknown bottom, like the Bay of Portugal." Rosalind's disguise as Ganymede and her game with Orlando in which she is supposed to try to cure him of love provide an excuse for the expression of her many unromantic sentiments. But they are not to be understood as ideas invented for Ganymede with no validity for Rosalind. While in love she is able to realize what love may become in time and how it can appear to those who are not in love. She sees all around her subject, combining perspectives in the manner of certain Picasso portraits. In Rosalind's conversation we see love's two eyes and also its profile and the back of its neck.

Rosalind integrates the ideal and the workaday world; love is a good time of life, it is youth and springtime. It is not everything, but in its season it would be folly not to enjoy it. "Come, woo me, woo me," she says, "for now I am in a holiday humor and like enough to consent." Rosalind, whose nature unites ardor and intelligence, synthesizes the ideas of the play.

When so much has been said about cuckoldry and about April turning to December, it may be a little difficult to accept the four marriages of the last scene as a happy ending. But the jokes and the irony and the mockery have been directed primarily at love, not at marriage. Marriage belongs to the institutions of a stable society, and these are never questioned in the play. The responsibility of an elder brother for a younger is the institutional frame that immediately establishes Oliver's villainy. The respect a younger brother owes an elder is the standard that marks Frederick a scoundrel. And the last words about love, the words that assign it to its proper place in an orderly society and prepare for the festive dance at the end, are delivered by Hymen:

Wedding is great Juno's crown,
O blessed bond of board and bed!
'Tis Hymen peoples every town;
High wedlock then be honored.

(V.iv.141-44)

A note on the date:

On August 4, 1600, the Lord Chamberlain's Men entered As You Like It and three other plays in the Stationers' Register "to be staied" as a way of preventing their unauthorized publication. This entry sets the later limit for the date of As You Like It. An earlier limit is set by its absence from the list of Shakespeare's plays given by Francis Meres in Palladis Tamia (1598). In one of her speeches Celia says: "Since the little wit that fools have was silenced, the little foolery that wise men have makes a great show" (I.ii). This remark may be a reference to an official order of June 1, 1599, whereby the published writings of a number of satirists were burnt and the future printing of satires prohibited. In view of this possibility and the two limiting dates, the best supposition is that the play was written in the latter half of 1599 or early in 1600.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCE

Shakespeare's source for As You Like It is Thomas Lodge's pastoral romance, Rosalynde or Euphues' Golden Legacy, printed in 1590. This romance in turn is based in part on a short narrative poem of the fourteenth century, "The Tale of Gamelyn," telling of the unjust treatment of Gamelyn by his older brother, the bloody fights between them, Gamelyn's flight to the greenwood, where he becomes the leader of a happy band of outlaws, and the eventual recovery of his land after his brother has been hanged. The only reference to love comes in the last lines, where we are told that Gamelyn took a "wyf bothe good and feyr."

To this rapid and brutally humorous narrative, Lodge added the story of a banished king, Gerismond, and three love stories: one of these concerns Rosader (Gamelyn of the early poem and Shakespeare's Orlando) and Rosalynde; the others, Alinda and Saladyne (Shakespeare's Celia and Oliver) and Phoebe and Montanus (Shakespeare's Phebe and Silvius). Interspersed throughout Rosalynde are elegant love poems. The whole, a medley of folk tale, pastoral love eclogue, and pastoral romance, is predominantly written in the highly mannered style known as euphuism, a style made popular by John Lyly in the 1570's, but it is enlivened by homely phrases and proverbs.

Although there is no evidence that Shakespeare drew directly upon any work other than Lodge's, it is possible that three plays were in Shakespeare's mind when he came to write As You Like It. Two Robin Hood plays performed in 1598 by the Admiral's Company, The Downfall of Robert Earl of Huntingdon and The Death of Robert Earl of Huntingdon, may have inspired Shakespeare's treatment of the singing outlaws, and Sir Clyomon and Clamydes (printed in 1599) may have suggested the rustics, Audrey and William. (In Sir Clyomon a princess disguised as a man meets a crude but amusing shepherd named Corin who describes in plain language the love-making of real shepherds and country girls.)

To return from conjecture to fact: As You Like It owes a great deal to Rosalynde. Shakespeare follows the outline of Lodge's plot closely and develops many of its situations, such as the enmity of two sets of characters, the wrestling match, the flight to the forest, Orlando's desperate demand for food, the momentary hesitation of Orlando to save his brother from the lioness, the wooing of Rosalind disguised as Ganymede, the marriage of Celia and Oliver, the disdain of Phebe and her use of Silvius as messenger, and the return to the court. The title too may come from Lodge, who in a note to his "gentlemen readers," says, "If you like it, so."

It is not only in plot and situation that Shakespeare is indebted to Lodge. Lodge's two princesses possess in embryo almost all the characteristics of their counterparts, but compared to Shakespeare's heroine Lodge's Rosalynde is wooden. She does not master events as does Rosalind, and as a woman in love she is scarcely differentiated from Alinda (Shakespeare's Celia) or, at some points, from Phoebe.

The differences are as striking as the resemblances. Some of the changes were required by the genre. For example, Shakespeare omits an internal debate of Rosader's on whether to save his brother, condensing the gist of a passage of over five hundred words into two and a half lines. Separate events are combined and compressed. Shakespeare omits two reconciliations between Rosader and Saladyne and in place of a sequence where Rosader is chained as a lunatic by Saladyne and then set free by Adam with whose help he kills some of his brother's guests, Shakespeare has the brief third scene of the second act. Some material is rearranged so that major plot lines are not long lost to sight. Whereas in Lodge the Rosader-Saladyne plot is dropped for about fifteen pages when Alinda and Rosalynde appear in the forest, in Shakespeare Orlando flees to the forest at about the same time as the two girls. Lodge develops his three love affairs consecutively; one is virtually completed before the next is begun, and each is developed at almost equal length. Shakespeare quickly disposes of the Celia-Oliver romance and has Phebe fall in love with Ganymede much earlier than does Lodge. He is thus able to develop the love affairs concurrently, including the added one of Audrey and Touchstone, and to play them off one against the other.

Shakespeare retains little of the brutality of the novel. Orlando is far gentler than Rosader, the wrestler and his young opponents are injured rather than killed, and Saladyne's rescue of the ladies from a band of robbers is omitted. For Lodge's final battle in which Torismond, the usurper, dies, Shakespeare substitutes the miraculous conversion of Duke Frederick. The diminution of action and violence is in harmony with the spirit of the play and allows Shakespeare to develop contrasting emotions, values, and attitudes. Even when Shakespeare adheres to the general outline of a conversation in Lodge, he so alters the details that what is stilted in the novel becomes vivid, natural, engaging.

A few of Shakespeare's smaller changes can be mentioned here. Shakespeare gives far greater emphasis to Adam's age and long, faithful service. He links the two groups of court characters by making the two dukes brothers and the dead Sir Rowland de Boys an enemy of Duke Frederick. In Lodge, Rosalynde and Alinda see Rosader-Orlando in the forest at the same time; in Shakespeare, Celia sees him first, and her report to Rosalind allows us to see Rosalind's impulsive reaction and to hear some witty byplay.

Perhaps the most significant change is the addition of Jaques and Touchstone (Audrey, William, Mar-text, and Le Beau are far less important additions). Jaques and Touchstone have little effect on the development of the plot, but the Forest of Arden would be a duller and less realistic place without their presence. They help transform a piece of prose fiction, which is charming and often skillfully narrated but intellectually thin and sometimes tedious, into a play as rich in wisdom and knowledge as it is in laughter.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

As You Like It did not appear in print until the First Folio of 1623. The text is a good one and may represent a carefully prepared promptbook. Act and scene division is intelligent; exits and entrances are for the most part correctly indicated; and the stage directions are brief but generally adequate. The present edition follows the Folio text closely, admitting only those emendations that seem clearly necessary. A few directions not in the Folio but helpful in clarifying the action are placed in brackets. Spelling and punctuation are modernized, speech prefixes are extended from abbreviations, obvious typographical errors and mislineation are corrected, and the Latin divisions into act and scene are translated. Other significant departures from the Folio (F) are listed below, the present reading in boldface type followed by F's reading in roman.

I.i.107 she hee 158 Oliver [F omits]

I.ii.3 yet I were yet were 51 goddesses and hath goddesses, hath 82 Celia Ros 90 Le Beau the Beu 285 Rosalind Rosaline [from here on, F uses either form]

I.iii.77 her patience per patience

II.i.49 much must 59 of the country of Countrie

II.iii.10 some seeme 16 Orlando [F omits] 29 Orlando Ad[am] 71 seventeen seauentie

II.iv.1 weary merry 42 thy wound they would 67 you, friend your friend

II.v.1 Amiens [F omits] 41-42 no enemy . . . weather &c 46 Jaques Amy [i.e., Amiens]

II.vii.55 Not to seem Seeme 87 comes come 173 Amiens [F omits] 181 Then the

III.ii.125 this a desert this Desert 145 her his 155 pulpiter Iupiter 258 b' wi' buy 361 deifying defying

III.iv.29 of a lover of Louer

III.v.127-28 yet I have yet Haue

IV.i.1 me be better me better 18 my by 29 b' wi' buy 208 in, it in, in

IV.ii.7 Another Lord Lord

IV.iii.5 s.d. Enter Silvius [F places after "brain"] 8 Phebe bid Phebe, did bid 141 In I 154 his blood this bloud

V.ii.7 nor her sudden nor sodaine

V.iii.18 In springtime In the spring time 15-32 [the fourth stanza here appears as the second in F] 39 b' wi' buy

V.iv.34 s.d. Enter . . . Audrey [F prints after line 33] 81 so to the so ro 114 her hand his hand 164 them him 197 we will wee'l

AS YOU LIKE IT

[Dramatis Personae]

DUKE SENIOR in banishment in the Forest of Arden
DUKE FREDERICK his brother, usurper of the dukedom

AMIENS } lords attending on Duke Senior
JAQUES }

LE BEAU a courtier

CHARLES a wrestler

OLIVER } sons of Sir Rowland de Boys
JAQUES }
ORLANDO }

ADAM } servants to Oliver
DENNIS }

TOUCHSTONE a clown

SIR OLIVER MAR-TEXT a vicar

CORIN } shepherds
SILVIUS }

WILLIAM a country fellow

HYMEN

ROSALIND daughter to Duke Senior

CELIA daughter to Duke Frederick

PHEBE a shepherdess

AUDREY a country girl

LORDS PAGES FORESTERS ATTENDANTS

Scene: Oliver's house; the court; the Forest of Arden]

A C T I

Scene I. [Orchard of Oliver's house.]

Enter ORLANDO and ADAM.

ORLANDO As I remember, Adam, it was upon this fashion bequeathed me by will but poor a° thousand crowns, and, as thou say'st, charged my brother on his blessing to breed me well; and there begins my sadness. My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report s speaks goldenly of his profit.° For my part, he keeps me rustically° at home or, to speak more properly, stays me here at home unkept;° for call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth that differs not from the stalling of an ox? His horses are bred better, 10 for, besides that they are fair° with their feeding, they are taught their manage,° and to that end riders dearly

The decorative border shown above appeared on the first page of As You Like It in the First Folio edition of Shakespeare's plays, 1623.

I.i.2 poor a a mere 6 goldenly . . . profit glowingly of his progress 6-7 keeps me rustically supports me like a peasant 8 unkept uncared for 11 fair handsome 12 manage paces hired; but I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth, for the which his animals on his dunghills are as much bound to him as I. Besides this nothing 15 that he so plentifully gives me, the something that nature gave me his countenance° seems to take from me. He lets me feed with his hinds,° bars me the place of a brother, and, as much as in him lies, mines my gentility° with my education. This is it, Adam, that 20 grieves me; and the spirit of my father, which I think is within me, begins to mutiny against this servitude. I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Enter OLIVER.

ADAM Yonder comes my master, your brother. 25

ORLANDO Go apart, Adam, and thou shalt hear how he will shake me up.°

OLIVER Now, sir, what make you° here?

17 countenance behavior 18 hinds farm hands 19-20 mines my gentility undermines my good birth 27 shake me up berate me 28 make you are you doing (in the next line Orlando pretends to take the phrase to mean "accomplish")

ORLANDO Nothing. I am not taught to make anything. 30
 OLIVER What mar you then, sir?
 ORLANDO Marry,^o sir, I am helping you to mar that which God made, a poor unworthy brother of yours, with idleness.
 OLIVER Marry, sir, be better employed, and be naught 35 awhile.^o
 ORLANDO Shall I keep your hogs and eat husks with them? What prodigal portion have I spent^o that I should come to such penury?
 OLIVER Know you where^o you are, sir? 40
 ORLANDO O, sir, very well. Here in your orchard.
 OLIVER Know you before whom, sir?
 ORLANDO Ay, better than him I am before knows me. I know you are my eldest brother, and in the gentle condition of blood^o you should so know me. 45 The courtesy of nations^o allows you my better in that you are the first born, but the same tradition takes not away my blood were there twenty brothers betwixt us. I have as much of my father in me as you, albeit I confess your coming before me is nearer to his 50 reverence.^o
 OLIVER What, boy!
 [Strikes him.]
 ORLANDO Come, come, elder brother, you are too young in this.
 [Seizes him.]
 OLIVER Wilt thou lay hands on me, villain?^o 55
 ORLANDO I am no villain. I am the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Boys; he was my father, and he is thrice a villain that says such a father begot villains. Wert thou not my brother, I would not take this hand from thy throat till this other had pulled out thy 60 tongue for saying so. Thou hast railed on thyself.
 ADAM Sweet masters, be patient. For your father's remembrance, be at accord.
 OLIVER Let me go, I say.
 ORLANDO I will not till I please. You shall hear me. My 65 father charged you in his will to give me good education. You have trained me like a peasant, obscuring and hiding from me all gentlemanlike qualities.^o The spirit of my father grows strong in me, and I will no longer endure it. Therefore allow me such exercises^o 70 as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allottery^o my father left me by testament; with that I will go buy my fortunes.
 OLIVER And what wilt thou do? Beg when that is spent? Well, sir, get you in. I will not long be troubled 75 with you. You shall have some part of your will. I pray you leave me.

32 Marry an expletive, from "By the Virgin Mary" 35-36 be naught awhile don't bother me 37-38 Shall . . . spent an allusion to the story of the Prodigal Son. See Luke 15:11-32 40 where in whose presence (Orlando pretends to take it literally) 44-45 in . . . blood of the same good blood 46 courtesy of nations sanctioned custom of primogeniture 50-51 your . . . reverence as the eldest son you are head of the family and therefore entitled to respect 55 villain Oliver uses it in the sense of "wicked person," but Orlando plays on its other meaning, "low-born person" 68 qualities accomplishments 70 exercises occupations 72 allottery share

ORLANDO I will no further offend you than becomes me for my good.
 OLIVER Get you with him, you old dog. 80
 ADAM Is "old dog" my reward? Most true, I have lost my teeth in your service. God be with my old master; he would not have spoke such a word.
Exeunt ORLANDO, ADAM.
 OLIVER Is it even so? Begin you to grow upon me?^o I will physic your rankness^o and yet give no thousand 85 crowns neither. Holla, Dennis!
Enter DENNIS.
 DENNIS Calls your worship?
 OLIVER Was not Charles, the duke's wrestler, here to speak with me?
 DENNIS So please you, he is here at the door and 90 importunes access to you.
 OLIVER Call him in. [Exit DENNIS.] 'Twill be a good way; and tomorrow the wrestling is.
Enter CHARLES.
 CHARLES Good morrow to your worship.
 OLIVER Good Monsieur Charles, what's the new 95 news at the new court?
 CHARLES There's no news at the court, sir, but the old news. That is, the old duke^o is banished by his younger brother the new duke, and three or four loving lords have put themselves into voluntary exile with him, 100 whose lands and revenues enrich the new duke; therefore he gives them good leave to wander.
 OLIVER Can you tell if Rosalind, the duke's daughter, be banished with her father?
 CHARLES O, no; for the duke's daughter, her cousin, 105 so loves her, being ever from their cradles bred together, that she would have followed her exile, or have died to stay behind her. She is at the court, and no less beloved of her uncle than his own daughter, and never two ladies loved as they do. 110
 OLIVER Where will the old duke live?
 CHARLES They say he is already in the Forest of Arden,^o and a many merry men with him; and there they live like the old Robin Hood of England. They say many young gentlemen flock to him every day, 115 and fleet the time carelessly^o as they did in the golden world.^o
 OLIVER What, you wrestle tomorrow before the new duke?
 CHARLES Marry, do I, sir; and I came to acquaint you 120 with a matter. I am given, sir, secretly to understand that your younger brother, Orlando, hath a disposition to come in disguised against me to try a fall.^o Tomorrow, sir, I wrestle for my credit, and he that escapes me without some broken limb shall acquit 125 him well. Your brother is but young and tender, and for your love I would be loath to foil^o him, as I must for my own honor if he come in. Therefore, out of

84 grow upon me usurp my place 85 physic your rankness purge your overgrowth 98 old duke Duke Senior 112-13 Forest of Arden Ardennes (in France; though Shakespeare may also have had in mind the Forest of Arden near his birthplace) 116 fleet . . . carelessly pass the time at ease 116-17 golden world the Golden Age of classical mythology, when men were free of sin, want, and care 123 fall bout 127 foil throw, defeat my love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withal, that either you might stay him from his intendment, 130 or brook° such disgrace well as he shall run into, in that it is a thing of his own search and altogether against my will.

OLIVER Charles, I thank thee for thy love to me, which thou shalt find I will most kindly requite. I had myself 135 notice of my brother's purpose herein and have by underhand means° labored to dissuade him from it; but he is resolute. I'll tell thee, Charles, it is the stubbornest young fellow of France; full of ambition, an envious emulator° of every man's good parts,° a 140 secret and villainous contriver against me his natural° brother. Therefore use thy discretion. I had as lief° thou didst break his neck as his finger. And thou wert best look to't; for if thou dost him any slight disgrace, or if he do not mightily grace himself on thee,° he will 145 practice° against thee by poison, entrap thee by some treacherous device, and never leave thee till he hath ta'en thy life by some indirect means or other; for, I assure thee, and almost with tears I speak it, there is not one so young and so villainous this day living. I 150 speak but brotherly of him, but should I anatomize° him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and thou must look pale and wonder.

CHARLES I am heartily glad I came hither to you. If he come tomorrow, I'll give him his payment. If ever he 155 go alone° again, I'll never wrestle for prize more. And so God keep your worship. Exit.

OLIVER Farewell, good Charles. Now will I stir this gamester.° I hope I shall see an end of him; for my soul, yet I know not why, hates nothing more than 160 he. Yet he's gentle,° never schooled and yet learned, full of noble device,° of all sorts° enchantingly beloved; and indeed so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people, who best know him, that I am altogether misprized.° But it shall not be so long; 165 this wrestler shall clear all.° Nothing remains but that I kindle the boy thither, which now I'll go about.

Exit.

Scene II. [The duke's palace.]

Enter ROSALIND and CELIA.

CELIA I pray thee, Rosalind, sweet my coz,° be merry.

ROSALIND Dear Celia, I show more mirth than I am mistress of, and would you yet I were merrier? Unless you could teach me to forget a banished father, you must not learn° me how to remember any extra- 5 ordinary pleasure.

CELIA Herein I see thou lov'st me not with the full weight that I love thee. If my uncle, thy banished father, had banished thy uncle, the duke my father, so° thou hadst been still with me, I could have taught 10 my love to take thy father for mine. So wouldst thou, if the truth of thy love to me were so righteously tempered° as mine is to thee.

ROSALIND Well, I will forget the condition of my estate° to rejoice in yours. 15

CELIA You know my father hath no child but I, nor none is like to have; and truly, when he dies, thou shalt be his heir; for what he hath taken away from thy father perforce,° I will render thee again in affection. By mine honor, I will, and when I break that 20 oath, let me turn monster. Therefore, my sweet Rose, my dear Rose, be merry.

ROSALIND From henceforth I will, coz, and devise sports. Let me see, what think you of falling in love?

CELIA Marry, I prithee, do, to make sport withal; but 25 love no man in good earnest, nor no further in sport neither than with safety of a pure° blush thou mayst in honor come off° again.

ROSALIND What shall be our sport then?

CELIA Let us sit and mock the good housewife° 30 Fortune from her wheel,° that her gifts may henceforth be bestowed equally.

ROSALIND I would we could do so, for her benefits are mightily misplaced, and the bountiful blind woman doth most mistake in her gifts to women. 35

CELIA 'Tis true, for those that she makes fair,° she scarce makes honest,° and those that she makes honest, she makes very ill-favoredly.°

ROSALIND Nay, now thou goest from Fortune's office° to Nature's. Fortune reigns in gifts of the world,° 40 not in the lineaments of Nature.°

Enter [TOUCHSTONE the] clown.

CELIA No; when Nature hath made a fair creature, may she not by Fortune fall into the fire? Though Nature hath given us wit to flout at Fortune, hath not Fortune sent in this fool to cut off the argument? 45

ROSALIND Indeed, there is Fortune too hard for Nature when Fortune makes Nature's natural° the cutter-off of Nature's wit.

CELIA Peradventure° this is not Fortune's work neither, but Nature's, who perceiveth our natural wits 50 too dull to reason of such goddesses and hath sent this natural for our whetstone. For always the dullness of the fool is the whetstone of the wits. How now, wit; whither wander you?

TOUCHSTONE Mistress, you must come away to your 55 father.

CELIA Were you made the messenger?

TOUCHSTONE No, by mine honor, but I was bid to come for you.

ROSALIND Where learned you that oath, fool? 60

131 brook endure 136-37 by underhand means indirectly 140 envious emulator malicious rival; parts abilities 141 natural blood 142 lief soon 145 grace . . . thee gain credit at your expense 146 practice plot 151 anatomize fully describe 156 go alone walk without crutches 159 gamester athlete, sportsman 161 gentle endowed with the qualities of a gentleman 162 noble device gentlemanlike purposes; all sorts all kinds of people 165 misprized scorned 166 clear all settle matters

I.ii.1 sweet my coz my sweet cousin 5 learn teach

10 so provided that 12-13 righteously tempered perfectly composed 15 estate fortune 19 perforce forcibly 27 pure mere 28 come off get away 30 housewife (1) woman of the house (with a spinning wheel) (2) inconstant hussy 31 wheel the wheel turned by Fortune, blind goddess who distributed her favors at random, elevated some men and hurled others down 36 fair beautiful 37 honest chaste 38 ill-favoredly ugly 40 office function; gifts . . . world e.g., wealth, power 41 lineaments of Nature e.g., virtue, intelligence 47 natural born fool, halfwit 49 Peradventure perhaps

TOUCHSTONE Of a certain knight that swore by his honor they were good pancakes, and swore by his honor the mustard was naught.^o Now I'll stand to it,^o the pancakes were naught, and the mustard was good, and yet was not the knight forsworn.^o 65

CELIA How prove you that in the great heap of your knowledge?

ROSALIND Ay, marry, now unmuzzle your wisdom.

TOUCHSTONE Stand you both forth now. Stroke your chins, and swear by your beards that I am a 70 knave.

CELIA By our beards, if we had them, thou art.

TOUCHSTONE By my knavery, if I had it, then I were; but if you swear by that that is not, you are not forsworn; no more was this knight, swearing by his 75 honor, for he never had any; or if he had, he had sworn it away before ever he saw those pancakes or that mustard.

CELIA Prithee, who is't that thou mean'st?

TOUCHSTONE One that old Frederick, your father, 80 loves.

CELIA My father's love is enough to honor him enough. Speak no more of him; you'll be whipped for taxation^o one of these days.

TOUCHSTONE The more pity that fools may not 85 speak wisely what wise men do foolishly.

CELIA By my troth,^o thou sayest true, for since the little wit that fools have was silenced, the little foolery that wise men have makes a great show. Here comes Monsieur Le Beau. 90

Enter LE BEAU.

ROSALIND With his mouth full of news.

CELIA Which he will put^o on us as pigeons feed their young.

ROSALIND Then shall we be news-crammed.

CELIA All the better; we shall be the more marketable. 95 Bon jour, Monsieur Le Beau, what's the news?

LE BEAU Fair princess, you have lost much good sport.

CELIA Sport? Of what color?^o

LE BEAU What color, madam? How shall I answer 100 you?

ROSALIND As wit and fortune^o will.

TOUCHSTONE Or as the Destinies decrees.^o

CELIA Well said; that was laid on with a trowel.

TOUCHSTONE Nay, if I keep not my rank— 105

ROSALIND Thou lovest thy old smell.

LE BEAU You amaze^o me, ladies. I would have told you of good wrestling, which you have lost the sight of.^o

ROSALIND Yet tell us the manner of the wrestling. 110

LE BEAU I will tell you the beginning; and if it please your ladyships, you may see the end, for the best is yet to do,^o and here, where you are, they are coming to perform it.

CELIA Well, the beginning that is dead and buried. 115

LE BEAU There comes an old man and his three sons—

CELIA I could match this beginning with an old tale.^o

LE BEAU Three proper^o young men, of excellent growth and presence.

ROSALIND With bills^o on their necks "Be it known 120 unto all men by these presents."^o

LE BEAU The eldest of the three wrestled with Charles, the duke's wrestler; which Charles in a moment threw him and broke three of his ribs, that there is little hope of life in him. So he served the second, and 125 so the third. Yonder they lie, the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole^o over them that all the beholders take his part with weeping.

ROSALIND Alas!

TOUCHSTONE But what is the sport, monsieurs that 130 the ladies have lost?

LE BEAU Why, this that I speak of.

TOUCHSTONE Thus men may grow wiser every day. It is the first time that ever I heard breaking of ribs was sport for ladies. 135

CELIA Or I, I promise thee.

ROSALIND But is there any^o else longs to see this broken music^o in his sides? Is there yet another dotes upon rib-breaking? Shall we see this wrestling, cousin?

LE BEAU You must, if you stay here, for here is the 140 place appointed for the wrestling, and they are ready to perform it.

CELIA Yonder sure they are coming. Let us now stay and see it.

Flourish.^o Enter DUKE [FREDERICK], LORDS, ORLANDO, CHARLES, and ATTENDANTS.

DUKE FREDERICK Come on. Since the youth will not 145 be entreated, his own peril on his forwardness.

ROSALIND Is yonder the man?

LE BEAU Even he, madam.

CELIA Alas, he is too young; yet he looks successfully.^o

DUKE FREDERICK How now, daughter and cousin; 150 are you crept hither to see the wrestling?

ROSALIND Ay, my liege, so please you give us leave.

DUKE FREDERICK You will take little delight in it, I can tell you, there is such odds in the man.^o In pity of the challenger's youth I would fain^o dissuade him, but 155 he will not be entreated. Speak to him, ladies; see if you can move him.

CELIA Call him hither, good Monsieur Le Beau.

DUKE FREDERICK Do so. I'll not be by.

LE BEAU Monsieur the challenger, the princess calls 160 for you.

ORLANDO I attend them with all respect and duty.

ROSALIND Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?

ORLANDO No, fair princess. He is the general chal- 165 lenger; I come but in as others do, to try with him the strength of my youth.

CELIA Young gentleman, your spirits are too bold for

63 naught worthless; stand to it swear 65 forsworn perjured 84 taxation slander 87 troth faith 92 put force 99 color sort 102 fortune good luck 103 decrees the ending -s was a common variant in the third person plural 107 amaze confuse 108-09 lost . . . of missed 113 do be done

117 old tale Le Beau's story has a "Once upon a time" beginning 118 proper fine 120 bills notices 121 by these presents part of the opening formula of many legal documents; Rosalind puns on Le Beau's use of "presence," meaning "bearing" 127 dole lamentation 137 any anyone 138 broken music music arranged in parts for different instruments 144 s.d. Flourish trumpet fanfare 149 successfully able to succeed 154 such . . . man the odds are all in Charles' favor 155 fain like to your years. You have seen cruel proof of this man's strength; if you saw yourself with your eyes or knew yourself with your judgment, the fear of your adventure would counsel you to a more equal enterprise. We pray you for your own sake to embrace your own safety and give over this attempt.

ROSALIND Do, young sir. Your reputation shall not therefore be misprized;° we will make it our suit to the duke that the wrestling might not go forward.

ORLANDO I beseech you, punish me not with your hard thoughts, wherein I confess me much guilty to deny so fair and excellent ladies anything. But let your fair eyes and gentle wishes go with me to my trial; wherein if I be foiled,° there is but one shamed that was never gracious;° if killed, but one dead that is willing to be so. I shall do my friends no wrong, for I have none to lament me; the world no injury, for in it I have nothing. Only in the world I° fill up a place, which may be better supplied when I have made it empty.

ROSALIND The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.

CELIA And mine to eke° out hers.

ROSALIND Fare you well. Pray heaven I be deceived in you!°

CELIA Your heart's desires be with you!

CHARLES Come, where is this young gallant that is so desirous to lie with his mother earth?

ORLANDO Ready, sir; but his will hath in it a more modest working.°

DUKE FREDERICK You shall try but one fall.

CHARLES No, I warrant your grace you shall not entreat him to a second that have so mightily persuaded him from a first.

ORLANDO You mean to mock me after. You should not have mocked me before. But come your ways.°

ROSALIND Now Hercules be thy speed,° young man!

CELIA I would I were invisible, to catch the strong fellow by the leg.

Wrestle.

ROSALIND O excellent young man!

CELIA If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down.

[CHARLES is thrown.] Shout.

DUKE FREDERICK No more, no more.

ORLANDO Yes, I beseech your grace; I am not yet well breathed.°

DUKE FREDERICK How dost thou, Charles?

LE BEAU He cannot speak, my lord.

DUKE FREDERICK Bear him away. What is thy name, young man?

ORLANDO Orlando, my liege, the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Boys.

DUKE FREDERICK

I would thou hadst been son to some man else.

The world esteemed thy father honorable,

But I did find him still mine enemy.

Thou shouldst have better pleased me with this deed

Hadst thou descended from another house.

But fare thee well; thou art a gallant youth;

I would thou hadst told me of another father.

Exit DUKE [FREDERICK, with TRAIN].

CELIA

Were I my father, coz, would I do this?

ORLANDO

I am more proud to be Sir Rowland's son,

His youngest son, and would not change that calling°

To be adopted heir to Frederick.

ROSALIND

My father loved Sir Rowland as his soul,

And all the world was of my father's mind.

Had I before known this young man his son,

I should have given him tears unto° entreaties

Ere he should thus have ventured.

CELIA

Gentle cousin,

Let us go thank him and encourage him.

My father's rough and envious disposition

Sticks° me at heart. Sir, you have well deserved;

If you do keep your promises in love

But justly° as you have exceeded all promise,

Your mistress shall be happy.

ROSALIND

Gentleman, [gives chain]

Wear this for me, one out of suits° with Fortune,

That could° give more but that her hand lacks means.

Shall we go, coz?

CELIA

Ay. Fare you well, fair gentleman.

ORLANDO

Can I not say, "I thank you"? My better parts°

Are all thrown down, and that which here stands up

Is but a quintain,° a mere lifeless block.

ROSALIND

He calls us back. My pride fell with my fortunes;

I'll ask him what he would. Did you call, sir?

Sir, you have wrestled well, and overthrown

More than your enemies.

CELIA

Will you go, coz?

ROSALIND

Have with you.° Fare you well. Exit, [with CELIA].

ORLANDO

What passion° hangs these weights upon my tongue?

I cannot speak to her, yet she urged conference.°

CELIA

Enter LE BEAU.

O poor Orlando, thou art overthrown!

Or Charles or something weaker masters thee.

LE BEAU

Good sir, I do in friendship counsel you

To leave this place. Albeit you have deserved

High commendation, true applause, and love,

Yet such is now the duke's condition

That he misconsters° all that you have done.

222 still always 229 calling name 234 unto as well as 238 Sticks pains 240 justly exactly 242 out of suits in disfavor 243 could would 245 parts qualities 247 quintain wooden post (used for tilting practice) 252 Have with you I'm coming 253 passion strong feeling 254 conference conversation 261 misconsters misinterprets

176 misprized despised 182 foiled thrown 183 gracious graced by Fortune 186 Only . . . I in the world I only 191 eke stretch 192-193 deceived in you wrong in my estimation of your strength 198 modest working humble aim 204 come your ways let's get started 205 Hercules
. . . speed may Hercules help you 213 well breathed fully warmed up

The duke is humorous.^o What he is, indeed,
More suits you to conceive^o than I to speak of.

ORLANDO

I thank you, sir; and pray you, tell me this:
Which of the two was daughter of the duke,
That here was at the wrestling?

LE BEAU

Neither his daughter, if we judge by manners,
But yet indeed the taller^o is his daughter,
The other is daughter to the banished duke,
And here detained by her usurping uncle
To keep his daughter company, whose loves
Are dearer than the natural bond of sisters.
But I can tell you that of late this duke
Hath ta'en displeasure 'gainst his gentle niece,
Grounded upon no other argument^o
But that the people praise her for her virtues
And pity her for her good father's sake;
And, on my life, his malice 'gainst the lady
Will suddenly break forth. Sir, fare you well.
Hereafter, in a better world^o than this,
I shall desire more love and knowledge of you.

ORLANDO

I rest much bounden^o to you. Fare you well.

[Exit LE BEAU.]

Thus must I from the smoke into the smother,^o
From tyrant duke unto a tyrant brother.
But heavenly Rosalind!

Exit. 285

Scene III. [The palace.]

Enter CELIA and ROSALIND.

CELIA Why, cousin, why, Rosalind! Cupid have mercy, not a word?

ROSALIND Not one to throw at a dog.

CELIA No, thy words are too precious to be cast away upon curs; throw some of them at me; come, lame s me with reasons.

ROSALIND Then there were two cousins laid up, when the one should be lamed with reasons and the other mad^o without any.

CELIA But is all this for your father?

ROSALIND No, some of it is for my child's father.^o O,
how full of briers is this working-day world!

CELIA They are but burrs, cousin, thrown upon thee in holiday foolery; if we walk not in the trodden paths, our very petticoats will catch them.

ROSALIND I could shake them off my coat; these burrs are in my heart.

CELIA Hem^o them away.

ROSALIND I would try, if I could cry "hem,"^o and have him.

CELIA Come, come, wrestle with thy affections.^o

262 humorous moody 263 conceive understand 268 taller unless "taller" is a printer's slip for "smaller," Shakespeare here erred; Rosalind is later said to be taller 275 argument basis 280 a better world better times 282 bounden indebted 283 smother smothering smoke (the idea is: "Out of the frying pan into the fire")

I.iii.9 mad melancholy 11 child's father future husband, Orlando 18 Hem (1) cough (2) tuck 19 cry "hem" clear my throat (with a pun on him) 21 affections feelings

ROSALIND O, they take the part of a better wrestler than myself!

CELIA O, a good wish upon you! You will try^o in time, in despite of a fall. But turning these jests out of 25 service,^o let us talk in good earnest. Is it possible on such a sudden you should fall into so strong a liking with old Sir Rowland's youngest son?

ROSALIND The duke my father loved his father dearly.

CELIA Doth it therefore ensue that you should love his son dearly? By this kind of chase,^o I should hate him, for my father hated his father dearly; yet I hate not Orlando.

ROSALIND No, faith, hate him not, for my sake.

CELIA Why should I not? Doth he not deserve well?^o

Enter DUKE [FREDERICK], with LORDS.

ROSALIND Let me love him for that,^o and do you love him because I do. Look, here comes the duke.

CELIA With his eyes full of anger.

DUKE FREDERICK

Mistress, dispatch you with your safest haste
And get you from our court.

ROSALIND Me. uncle?

DUKE FREDERICK You, cousin.^o

Within these ten days if that thou beest found
So near our public court as twenty miles,
Thou diest for it.

ROSALIND I do beseech your grace
Let me the knowledge of my fault bear with me.
If with myself I hold intelligence^o
Or have acquaintance with mine own desires,
If that I do not dream or be not frantic,^o
As I do trust I am not; then, dear uncle,
Never so much as in a thought unborn
Did I offend your highness.

DUKE FREDERICK Thus do all traitors.

If their purgation^o did consist in words,
They are as innocent as grace^o itself.
Let it suffice thee that I trust thee not.

ROSALIND

Yet your mistrust cannot make me a traitor.
Tell me whereon the likelihoods^o depends.

DUKE FREDERICK

Thou art thy father's daughter, there's enough.

ROSALIND

So was I when your highness took his dukedom;
So was I when your highness banished him.
Treason is not inherited, my lord,
Or if we did derive it from our friends,^o
What's that to me? My father was no traitor.
Then, good my liege, mistake me not so much
To think my poverty is treacherous.

CELIA

Dear sovereign, hear me speak.

24 try chance a bout 25-26 turning . . . service to stop joking 32 chase pursuit (of the argument) 36 deserve well deserve to be hated (if Rosalind's reasoning is valid, it follows that Celia should hate Orlando) 37 for that for his virtues (Rosalind takes "deserve well" in its usual sense) 41 cousin kinsman 46 hold intelligence communicate 48 frantic insane 52 purgation clearance 53 grace virtue 56 likeli- hoods possibilities 61 friends relatives

DUKE FREDERICK

Ay, Celia. We stayed° her for your sake,
Else had she with her father ranged° along.

CELIA

I did not then entreat to have her stay;
It was your pleasure and your own remorse.°
I was too young that time to value her,
But now I know her. If she be a traitor,
Why, so am I. We still° have slept together,
Rose at an instant, learned, played, eat° together;
And wheresoe'er we went, like Juno's swans,
Still we went coupled and inseparable.

DUKE FREDERICK

She is too subtile° for thee; and her smoothness,
Her very silence and her patience,
Speak to the people, and they pity her.
Thou art a fool. She robs thee of thy name,
And thou wilt show more bright and seem more virtuous°
When she is gone. Then open not thy lips.
Firm and irrevocable is my doom°
Which I have passed upon her; she is banished.

CELIA

Pronounce that sentence then on me, my liege;
I cannot live out of her company.

DUKE FREDERICK

You are a fool. You, niece, provide yourself;
If you outstay the time, upon mine honor,
And in the greatness° of my word, you die.

Exit DUKE [FREDERICK], &c.

CELIA

O my poor Rosalind, whither wilt thou go?
Wilt thou change fathers? I will give thee mine.
I charge thee be not thou more grieved than I am.

ROSALIND

I have more cause.

CELIA

Thou hast not, cousin.

Prithee be cheerful. Know'st thou not the duke
Hath banished me, his daughter?

ROSALIND

That he hath not.

CELIA

No? Hath not? Rosalind lacks then the love
Which teacheth thee that thou and I am one.
Shall we be sund'red, shall we part, sweet girl?
No, let my father seek another heir.
Therefore devise with me how we may fly,
Whither to go, and what to bear with us;
And do not seek to take your change° upon you,
To bear your griefs yourself and leave me out;
For, by this heaven, now at our sorrows pale,°
Say what thou canst, I'll go along with thee.

ROSALIND

Why, whither shall we go?

CELIA

To seek my uncle in the Forest of Arden.

ROSALIND

Alas, what danger will it be to us,

Maids as we are, to travel forth so far!
Beauty provoketh thieves sooner than gold.

CELIA

I'll put myself in poor and mean° attire
And with a kind of umber° smirch my face;
The like do you; so shall we pass along
And never stir assailants.

ROSALIND

Were it not better,

Because that I am more than common° tall,
That I did suit me all points° like a man?
A gallant curtle-ax° upon my thigh,
A boar-spear in my hand; and, in my heart
Lie there what hidden woman's fear there will,
We'll have a swashing° and a martial outside,
As many other mannish cowards have
That do outface° it with their semblances.°

CELIA

What shall I call thee when thou art a man?

ROSALIND

I'll have no worse a name than Jove's own page,
And therefore look you call me Ganymede.
But what will you be called?

CELIA

Something that hath a reference to my state:
No longer Celia, but Aliena.°

ROSALIND

But, cousin, what if we assayed° to steal
The clownish fool out of your father's court;
Would he not be a comfort to our travel?

CELIA

He'll go along o'er the wide world with me;
Leave me alone to woo° him. Let's away
And get our jewels and our wealth together,
Devise the fittest time and safest way
To hide us from pursuit that will be made After my flight. Now go in we content
To liberty, and not to banishment.

Exeunt.

A C T I I

Scene I. [The Forest of Arden.]

Enter DUKE SENIOR, AMIENS, and two or three LORDS, like foresters.

DUKE SENIOR

Now, my co-mates and brothers in exile,°
Hath not old custom made this life more sweet
Than that of painted pomp? Are not these woods
More free from peril than the envious court?
Here feel we not° the penalty of Adam;°
The seasons' difference, as° the icy fang
And churlish° chiding of the winter's wind,

110 mean lowly 111 umber reddish-brown color 114 common usually 115 suit . . . points dress myself entirely 116 curtle-ax cutlass 119 swashing blustering 121 out-face bluff; semblances appearances (of bravery) 127 Aliena Latin = the estranged one 128 assayed attempted 132 woo coax

II.i.1 exile accent on second syllable 5 feel we not we do not feel (some editors emend "not" to "but"); penalty of Adam loss of Eden 6 as for example 7 churlish harsh

66 stayed kept 67 ranged wandered 69 remorse pity 72 still always 73 eat eaten 76 subtile crafty 80 virtuous full of good qualities 82 doom sentence 88 greatness power 101 change change of fortune 103 now . . . pale now pale at our sorrows

Which, when it bites and blows upon my body
 Even till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
 "This is no flattery; these are counselors
 That feelingly° persuade me what I am."
 Sweet are the uses of adversity,
 Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
 Wears yet a precious jewel° in his head;
 And this our life, exempt from public haunt,°
 Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
 Sermons in stones, and good in everything.

AMIENS

I would not change it; happy is your grace
 That can translate the stubbornness° of fortune
 Into so quiet and so sweet a style.

DUKE SENIOR

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
 And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools,°
 Being native burghers° of this desert° city,
 Should, in their own confines, with forkèd heads°
 Have their round haunches gored.

FIRST LORD

Indeed, my lord,

The melancholy Jaques° grieves at that,
 And in that kind° swears you do more usurp
 Than doth your brother that hath banished you.
 Today my Lord of Amiens and myself
 Did steal behind him as he lay along°
 Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out
 Upon the brook that brawls° along this wood
 To the which place a poor sequest' red° stag
 That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt
 Did come to languish; and indeed, my lord,
 The wretched animal heaved forth such groans
 That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
 Almost to bursting, and the big round tears
 Coursed one another down his innocent nose
 In piteous chase; and thus the hairy fool,
 Much markèd of° the melancholy Jaques,
 Stood on th' extremest verge of the swift brook,
 Augmenting it with tears.

DUKE SENIOR

But what said Jaques?

Did he not moralize° this spectacle?

FIRST LORD

O, yes, into a thousand similes.
 First, for his weeping into the needless° stream:
 "Poor deer," quoth he, "thou mak'st a testament
 As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
 To that which had too much." Then, being there alone,
 Left and abandoned of his velvet° friend:
 "'Tis right," quoth he, "thus misery doth part
 The flux° of company." Anon a careless° herd,
 Full of the pasture, jumps along by him
 And never stays to greet him; "Ay," quoth Jaques,

"Sweep on, you fat and greasy citizens,
 'Tis just the fashion; wherefore do you look° Upon that poor and broken bankrupt there?"
 Thus most invectively he pierceth through
 The body of the country, city, court,
 Yea, and of this our life, swearing that we
 Are mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse,
 To fright the animals and to kill them up
 In their assigned° and native dwelling place.

DUKE SENIOR

And did you leave him in this contemplation?

SECOND LORD

We did, my lord, weeping and commenting
 Upon the sobbing deer.

DUKE SENIOR

Show me the place.

I love to cope° him in these sullen fits,
 For then he's full of matter.

FIRST LORD

I'll bring you to him straight.°

Exeunt.

Scene II. [The palace.]

Enter DUKE [FREDERICK], with LORDS.

DUKE FREDERICK

Can it be possible that no man saw them?
 It cannot be; some villains of my court
 Are of consent and sufferance° in this.

FIRST LORD

I cannot hear of any that did see her.
 The ladies, her attendants of her chamber,
 Saw her abed, and in the morning early
 They found the bed untreasured of their mistress.

SECOND LORD

My lord, the roynish° clown at whom so oft
 Your grace was wont to laugh is also missing.
 Hisperia, the princess' gentlewoman,
 Confesses that she secretly o'erheard
 Your daughter and her cousin much commend
 The parts and graces° of the wrestler
 That did but lately foil the sinewy Charles,
 And she believes, wherever they are gone,
 That youth is surely in their company.

DUKE FREDERICK

Send to his brother, fetch that gallant hither;
 If he be absent, bring his brother to me;
 I'll make him find him. Do this suddenly,°
 And let not search and inquisition quail°
 To bring again these foolish runaways.

Exeunt.

Scene III. [Oliver's house.]

Enter ORLANDO and ADAM.

ORLANDO Who's there?

ADAM

What, my young master, O my gentle master,

56 wherefore . . . look why should you bother looking 63 assigned allotted (by nature) 67 cope encounter 69 straight at once

II.ii.3 Are . . . sufferance approved and helped 8 roynish scurvy 13 parts and graces good qualities and manner
 19 suddenly immediately 20 quail fail

11 feelingly (1) through the senses (2) with intensity 14 a precious jewel the fabled toadstone 15 public haunt society
 19 stubbornness hardness 22 fools simple creatures 23 burghers citizens; desert deserted 24 forkèd heads arrows
 26 Jaques dissyllabic, pronounced "Jā' kis" 27 kind way
 30 along stretched out 32 brawls makes noise 33 sequest'-red separated 41 markèd of noted by 44 moralize sermonize
 46 needless needing no more water 50 velvet i.e., courtierlike (the furry skin on the antlers, or the sleek hide, makes the deer resemble a velvet-clad courtier) 52 flux stream; Anon a careless soon an untroubled

O my sweet master, O you memory
 Of old Sir Rowland, why, what make you^o here?
 Why are you virtuous? Why do people love you? 5
 And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and valiant?
 Why would you be so fond^o to overcome
 The bonny prizer^o of the humorous^o duke?
 Your praise is come too swiftly home before you.
 Know you not, master, to some kind of men 10
 Their graces serve them but as enemies?
 No more^o do yours. Your virtues, gentle master,
 Are sanctified and holy traitors to you.^o
 O, what a world is this, when what is comely
 Envenoms him that bears it! 15

ORLANDO

Why, what's the matter?

ADAM

O unhappy youth,
 Come not within these doors; within this roof
 The enemy of all your graces lives.
 Your brother—no, no brother, yet the son—
 Yet not the son, I will not call him son,
 Of him I was about to call his father—
 Hath heard your praises, and this night he means
 To burn the lodging where you use^o to lie
 And you within it. If he fail of that,
 He will have other means to cut you off. 20
 I overheard him, and his practices;^o
 This is no place, this house is but a butchery;^o
 Abhor it, fear it, do not enter it!

ORLANDO

Why, whither, Adam, wouldst thou have me go?

ADAM

No matter whither, so you come not here. 30

ORLANDO

What, wouldst thou have me go and beg my food,
 Or with a base and boist'rous^o sword enforce
 A thievish living on the common road?^o
 This I must do, or know not what to do;
 Yet this I will not do, do how I can.
 I rather will subject me to the malice
 Of a diverted^o blood and bloody brother.

ADAM

But do not so. I have five hundred crowns,
 The thrifty hire I saved^o under your father,
 Which I did store to be my foster nurse
 When service should in my old limbs lie lame
 And unregarded age in corners thrown.
 Take that, and he that doth the ravens feed,
 Yea, providently caters for the sparrow,^o
 Be comfort to my age. Here is the gold;
 All this I give you. Let me be your servant;
 Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty,
 For in my youth I never did apply
 Hot and rebellious^o liquors in my blood,
 Nor did not with unbashful forehead^o woo 50

II.iii.4 make you are you doing 7 fond foolish 8 bonny prizer stout fighter; humorous moody, temperamental 12 No more no better 12–13 Your . . . you Orlando's blessed virtues have worked against him 23 use are accustomed 26 practices plots 27 butchery slaughterhouse 32 base and boist'rous low and swaggering 33 common road highway 37 diverted estranged 39 thrifty . . . saved wages I carefully saved 43–44 he . . . sparrow see Psalms 147:9, Luke 12:6 49 rebellious causing the flesh to rebel 50 unbashful forehead bold face

The means of weakness and debility;
 Therefore my age is as a lusty winter,
 Frosty, but kindly. Let me go with you;
 I'll do the service of a younger man
 In all your business and necessities. 55

ORLANDO

O good old man, how well in thee appears
 The constant^o service of the antique world,^o
 When service sweat for duty, not for meed!^o
 Thou art not for the fashion of these times,
 Where none will sweat but for promotion, 60
 And having that, do choke their service up
 Even with the having; it is not so with thee.
 But, poor old man, thou prun'st a rotten tree
 That cannot so much as a blossom yield
 In lieu of^o all thy pains and husbandry. 65
 But come thy ways, we'll go along together,
 And ere we have thy youthful wages spent,
 We'll light upon some settled low content.^o

20 ADAM

Master, go on, and I will follow thee
 To the last gasp with truth and loyalty. 70
 From seventeen years till now almost fourscore
 Here livèd I, but now live here no more;
 At seventeen years many their fortunes seek,
 But at fourscore it is too late a week;^o
 Yet fortune cannot recompense be better 75
 Than to die well and not my master's debtor. Exeunt.

Scenc IV. [The Forest of Arden.]

Enter ROSALIND for Ganymede, CELIA for Aliena, and clown, alias TOUCHSTONE.

ROSALIND O Jupiter, how weary are my spirits!

TOUCHSTONE I care not for my spirits if my legs were not weary. 35

ROSALIND I could find in my heart to disgrace my man's apparel and to cry like a woman; but I must 5 comfort the weaker vessel, as doublet and hose^o ought to show itself courageous to petticoat. Therefore, courage, good Aliena!

40 CELIA I pray you bear with me; I cannot go no further.

TOUCHSTONE For my part, I had rather bear with 10 you than bear you; yet I should bear no cross^o if I did bear you, for I think you have no money in your purse.

45 ROSALIND Well, this is the Forest of Arden.

TOUCHSTONE Ay, now am I in Arden, the more fool 15
 I. When I was at home, I was in a better place, but travelers must be content.

Enter CORIN and SILVIUS.

ROSALIND

Ay, be so, good Touchstone. Look you, who comes here,

A young man and an old in solemn talk.

57 constant faithful; the antique world the past 58 meed reward 65 In lieu of in return for 68 low content humble way of life 74 week time

II.iv.6 doublet and hose jacket and breeches II cross (1) trouble (2) coin stamped with a cross

CORIN

That is the way to make her scorn you still. 20

SILVIUS

O Corin, that thou knew'st how I do love her!

CORIN

I partly guess, for I have loved ere now.

SILVIUS

No, Corin, being old, thou canst not guess,
 Though in thy youth thou wast as true a lover
 As ever sighed upon a midnight pillow. 25
 But if thy love were ever like to mine,
 As sure I think did never man love so,
 How many actions most ridiculous
 Hast thou been drawn to by thy fantasy?°

CORIN

Into a thousand that I have forgotten. 30

SILVIUS

O, thou didst then never love so heartily!
 If thou rememb'rest not the slightest folly
 That ever love did make thee run into,
 Thou hast not loved.
 Or if thou hast not sat as I do now, 35
 Wearing° thy hearer in thy mistress' praise,
 Thou hast not loved.
 Or if thou hast not broke from company
 Abruptly, as my passion now makes me,
 Thou has not loved. 40
 O Phebe, Phebe, Phebe! Exit.

ROSALIND

Alas, poor shepherd! Searching of° thy wound,
 I have by hard adventure° found mine own.

TOUCHSTONE And I mine. I remember, when I was in love I broke my sword upon a stone and bid him 45 take that for coming a-night to Jane Smile; and I remember the kissing of her batler,° and the cow's dugs that her pretty chopt° hands had milked; and I remember the wooing of a peascod° instead of her, from whom I took two cods, and giving her them 50 again, said with weeping tears, "Wear these for my sake." We that are true lovers run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly.°

ROSALIND Thou speak'st wiser than thou art ware° of. 55

TOUCHSTONE Nay, I shall ne'er be ware of mine own wit° till I break my shins against it.

ROSALIND

Jove, Jove! This shepherd's passion
 Is much upon my fashion.

TOUCHSTONE And mine, but it grows something 60 stale with me.

CELIA

I pray you, one of you question yond man
 If he for gold will give us any food.
 I faint almost to death.

TOUCHSTONE Holla, you clown!°

ROSALIND

Peace, fool! He's not thy kinsman. 65

29 fantasy love (and all its fancies) 36 Wearing exhausting
 42 Searching of probing 43 hard adventure bad luck 47 batler wooden paddle (used in washing clothes) 48 chopt chapped 49 peascod peapod 52-54 as . . . folly just as everything that lives must die, so all who love inevitably do foolish things 55 art ware know 57 wit wisdom 64 clown
 (1) rustic (2) fool

CORIN

Who calls?

TOUCHSTONE Your betters, sir.

CORIN Else are they very wretched.

ROSALIND

Peace, I say! Good even to you, friend.

CORIN

And to you, gentle sir, and to you all.

ROSALIND

I prithee, shepherd, if that love or gold
 Can in this desert place buy entertainment,° 70
 Bring us where we may rest ourselves and feed.
 Here's a young maid with travel much oppressed,
 And faints for succor.

CORIN

Fair sir, I pity her
 And wish, for her sake more than for mine own,
 My fortunes were more able to relieve her; 75
 But I am shepherd to another man
 And do not shear the fleeces that I graze.
 My master is of churlish° disposition
 And little recks° to find the way to heaven 80
 By doing deeds of hospitality.
 Besides, his cote,° his flocks, and bounds of feed°
 Are now on sale, and at our sheepcote now,
 By reason of his absence, there is nothing
 That you will feed on; but what is, come see,
 And in my voice° most welcome shall you be. 85

ROSALIND

What is he that shall buy his flock and pasture?

CORIN

That young swain that you saw here but erewhile,°
 That little cares for buying anything.

ROSALIND

I pray thee, if it stand° with honesty,
 Buy thou the cottage, pasture, and the flock, 90
 And thou shalt have° to pay for it of us.

CELIA

And we will mend° thy wages. I like this place
 And willingly could waste° my time in it.

CORIN

Assuredly the thing is to be sold.
 Go with me; if you like upon report 95
 The soil, the profit, and this kind of life,
 I will your very faithful feeder° be
 And buy it with your gold right suddenly. Exeunt.

Scene V. [The forest.]Enter AMIENS, JAQUES, and others.Song.

AMIENS

Under the greenwood tree
 Who loves to lie with me,
 And turn° his merry note

70 entertainment food and shelter 78 churlish miserly
 79 recks thinks 81 cote cottage; bounds of feed pastures 85 in my voice as far as my position allows 87 erewhile a short while ago 89 stand be consistent 91 have have the money 92 mend improve 93 waste spend 97 feeder
 servant

II.v.3 turn attune, adapt

Unto the sweet bird's throat,
Come hither, come hither, come hither. 5
Here shall he see no enemy
But winter and rough weather.

JAQUES More, more, I prithee more!

AMIENS It will make you melancholy, Monsieur Jaques. 10

JAQUES I thank it. More, I prithee more! I can suck melancholy out of a song as a weasel sucks eggs. More, I prithee more!

AMIENS My voice is ragged. I know I cannot please you. 15

JAQUES I do not desire you to please me; I do desire you to sing. Come, more, another stanza! Call you 'em stanzas?

AMIENS What you will, Monsieur Jaques.

JAQUES Nay, I care not for their names; they owe me 20 nothing. Will you sing?

AMIENS More at your request than to please myself.

JAQUES Well then, if ever I thank any man, I'll thank you. But that they call compliment° is like th' encounter of two dog-apes,° and when a man thanks me 25 heartily, methinks I have given him a penny and he renders me the beggarly thanks. Come, sing; and you that will not, hold your tongues.

AMIENS Well, I'll end the song. Sirs, cover the while;° the duke will drink under this tree. He hath been all 30 this day to look you.

JAQUES And I have been all this day to avoid him. He is too disputable for my company. I think of as many matters as he, but I give heaven thanks and make no boast of them. Come, warble, come. 35

Song.

All together here.

Who doth ambition shun
And loves to live i' th' sun,
Seeking the food he eats,
And pleased with what he gets,
Come hither, come hither, come hither. 40
Here shall he see no enemy
But winter and rough weather.

JAQUES I'll give you a verse to this note° that I made yesterday in despite of my invention.°

AMIENS And I'll sing it. 45

JAQUES Thus it goes.

If it do come to pass
That any man turn ass,
Leaving his wealth and ease
A stubborn will to please, 50
Ducdame,° ducdame, ducdame.
Here shall he see gross fools as he,
An if° he will come to me.

AMIENS What's that "duc dame"?

JAQUES 'Tis a Greek° invocation to call fools into a 55 circle. I'll go sleep, if I can; if I cannot, I'll rail against all the first-born of Egypt.°

AMIENS And I'll go seek the duke. His banquet° is prepared. Exeunt.

Scene VI. [The forest.]

Enter ORLANDO and ADAM.

ADAM Dear master, I can go no further. O, I die for food. Here lie I down and measure out my grave. Farewell, kind master.

ORLANDO Why, how now, Adam? No greater heart in thee? Live a little, comfort° a little, cheer thyself a 5 little. If this uncouth° forest yield anything savage, I will either be food for it or bring it for food to thee. Thy conceit° is nearer death than thy powers. For my sake be comfortable; hold death awhile at the arm's end. I will here be with thee presently,° and if I bring 10 thee not something to eat, I will give thee leave to die; but if thou diest before I come, thou art a mocker of my labor. Well said; thou look'st cheerly, and I'll be with thee quickly. Yet thou liest in the bleak air. Come, I will bear thee to some shelter, and thou shalt 15 not die for lack of a dinner if there live anything in this desert. Cheerly, good Adam. Exeunt.

Scene VII. [The forest.]

Enter DUKE SENIOR, and LORDS, like outlaws.

DUKE SENIOR

I think he be transformed into a beast,
For I can nowhere find him like a man.

FIRST LORD

My lord, he is but even now gone hence;
Here was he merry, hearing of a song.

DUKE SENIOR

If he, compact of jars,° grow musical, 5
We shall have shortly discord in the spheres.°
Go seek him; tell him I would speak with him.

Enter JAQUES.

FIRST LORD

He saves my labor by his own approach.

DUKE SENIOR

Why, how now, monsieur, what a life is this,
That your poor friends must woo your company? 10
What, you look merrily.

JAQUES

A fool, a fool! I met a fool i' th' forest,

55 Greek unintelligible 57 first-born of Egypt perhaps "persons of high rank," but perhaps an allusion to life in the Forest of Arden; Exodus II,12 reports that when the first-born of Egypt died, the Israelites were sent into the wilderness 58 banquet light meal

II.vi.5 comfort take comfort 6 uncouth wild 8 conceit thought 10 presently at once

II.vii.5 compact of jars made up of discord 6 discord . . . spheres Ptolemaic astronomy taught that the planetary spheres produced a ravishing harmony as they revolved

20-21 names . . . nothing Jaques plays on the word name, a term for the borrower's signature on a loan 24 compliment politeness 25 dog-apes baboons 25-27 and when . . . thanks the hearty thanks of polite society are no more sincere than the extravagant gratitude of a beggar given a small coin 29 cover the while lay the table in the meantime 43 note tune 44 in . . . invention without using my imagination 51 Ducdame various derivations have been suggested: Romany dukrā mē ("I tell fortunes"); Welsh dewch 'da mi ("come with me"); Latin duc ad me ("bring [him] to me"); Italian Duc' da mè ("duke by myself" or "duke without a dukedom"); probably the word is nonsense 53 An if if only

A motley° fool! A miserable world!
 As I do live by food, I met a fool
 Who laid him down and basked him in the sun 15
 And railed on Lady Fortune in good terms,
 In good set terms,° and yet a motley fool.
 "Good morrow, fool," quoth I. "No, sir," quoth he,
 "Call me not fool till heaven hath sent me fortune."°
 And then he drew a dial from his poke,° 20
 And looking on it with lack-luster eye,
 Says very wisely, "It is ten o'clock.
 Thus we may see," quoth he, "how the world wags.°
 'Tis but an hour ago since it was nine,
 And after one hour more 'twill be eleven;
 And so, from hour to hour,° we ripe and ripe,
 And then, from hour to hour, we rot and rot;
 And thereby hangs a tale." When I did hear
 The motley fool thus moral° on the time,
 My lungs began to crow like chanticleer° 30
 That fools should be so deep contemplative;
 And I did laugh sans intermission°
 An hour by his dial. O noble fool,
 A worthy fool! Motley's the only wear.

DUKE SENIOR

What fool is this?

JAQUES

O worthy fool! One that hath been a courtier,
 And says, if ladies be but young and fair,
 They have the gift to know it. And in his brain,
 Which is as dry as the remainder biscuit°
 After a voyage, he hath strange places crammed 40
 With observation, the which he vents°
 In mangled forms. O that I were a fool!
 I am ambitious for a motley coat.

DUKE SENIOR

Thou shalt have one.

JAQUES

It is my only suit,°
 Provided that you weed your better judgments 45
 Of all opinion that grows rank° in them
 That I am wise. I must have liberty
 Withal, as large a charter° as the wind,
 To blow on whom I please, for so fools have.
 And they that are most gallèd° with my folly, 50
 They most must laugh. And why, sir, must they so?
 The why is plain as way to parish church:
 He that a fool doth very wisely hit
 Doth very foolishly, although he smart,
 Not to seem senseless of the bob.° If not, 55
 The wise man's folly is anatomized°
 Even by the squand'ring glances° of the fool.
 Invest° me in my motley, give me leave
 To speak my mind, and I will through and through

Cleanse the foul body of th' infected world, 60
 If they will patiently receive my medicine.

DUKE SENIOR

Fie on thee! I can tell what thou wouldst do.

JAQUES

What, for a counter,° would I do but good?

DUKE SENIOR

Most mischievous foul sin, in chiding sin.
 For thou thyself hast been a libertine, 65
 As sensual as the brutish sting° itself;
 And all th' embossèd° sores and headed evils
 That thou with license of free foot° hast caught,
 Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world.

JAQUES

Why, who cries out on pride 70
 That can therein tax any private party?°
 Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea
 Till that the weary very means do ebb?°
 What woman in the city do I name
 When that I say the city woman bears 75
 The cost° of princes on unworthy shoulders?
 Who can come in and say that I mean her,
 When such a one as she, such is her neighbor?
 Or what is he of basest function° 80
 That says his bravery is not on my cost,°
 Thinking that I mean him, but therein suits
 His folly to the mettle of my speech?°
 There then, how then, what then? Let me see wherein
 My tongue hath wronged him. If it do him right, 85
 Then he hath wronged himself. If he be free,°
 Why, then my taxing like a wild goose flies
 Unclaimed of any man. But who comes here?

Enter ORLANDO [with his sword drawn].

ORLANDO

Forbear, and eat no more!

JAQUES

Why, I have eat none yet.

ORLANDO

Nor shalt not, till necessity be served.

JAQUES

Of what kind° should this cock come of? 90

DUKE SENIOR

Art thou thus boldened, man, by thy distress,
 Or else a rude despiser of good manners,
 That in civility thou seem'st so empty?

ORLANDO

You touched my vein at first.° The thorny point 95
 Of bare distress hath ta'en from me the show
 Of smooth civility; yet am I inland bred°
 And know some nurture.° But forbear, I say!
 He dies that touches any of this fruit
 Till I and my affairs are answerèd.°

13 motley garbed in the multicolored costume of the court fool (a motley costume is commonly thought to be checkered or patched; Leslie Hotson, in Shakespeare's Motley, argues it was of varicolored threads but drab, like a tweed) 17 set terms precise phrases 19 Call . . . fortune fortune proverbially favors fools 20 dial . . . poke sundial from his pocket 23 wags goes 26 hour to hour perhaps with a pun on whore 29 moral moralize 30 chanticleer traditional name for a rooster 32 sans intermission without stop 39 remainder biscuit leftover hardtack 41 vents gives forth 44 suit (1) garment (2) petition 46 rank luxuriant 48 large a charter liberal license 50 gallèd chafed 55 senseless . . . bob unaware of the hit 56 anatomized revealed 57 squand'ring glances chance hits 58 Invest clothe

63 counter worthless coin 66 the brutish sting lust 67 embossèd swollen 68 license . . . foot complete freedom 71 tax . . . party criticize any particular person 73 weary . . . ebb perhaps: "ostentation eventually exhausts the wealth that makes it possible"; some editors emend "weary" to "wearer's" 76 cost wealth 79 function position 80 his . . . cost his fine dress is not paid for by me (and therefore is not my business) 81-82 suits . . . speech matches his folly to the substance of my words 85 free innocent 90 kind breed 94 You . . . first the duke's first supposition is correct 96 inland bred brought up in civilized society 97 nurture good breeding 99 answerèd provided for

JAQUES

An° you will not be answered with reason,° I must die. 100

DUKE SENIOR

What would you have? Your gentleness shall force
More than your force move us to gentleness.

ORLANDO

I almost die for food, and let me have it!

DUKE SENIOR

Sit down and feed, and welcome to our table.

ORLANDO

Speak you so gently? Pardon me, I pray you. 105

I thought that all things had been savage here,

And therefore put I on the countenance

Of stern commandment. But whate'er you are

That in this desert inaccessible,

Under the shade of melancholy boughs, 110

Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time;

If ever you have looked on better days,

If ever been where bells have knolled° to church,

If ever sat at any good man's feast,

If ever from your eyelids wiped a tear 115

And know what 'tis to pity and be pitied,

Let gentleness my strong enforcement° be;

In the which hope I blush, and hide my sword.

DUKE SENIOR

True is it that we have seen better days,

And have with holy bell been knolled to church, 120

And sat at good men's feasts, and wiped our eyes

Of drops that sacred pity hath engend'red;

And therefore sit you down in gentleness,

And take upon command° what help we have

That to your wanting° may be minist'red. 125

ORLANDO

Then but forbear your food a little while,

Whiles, like a doe, I go to find my fawn

And give it food. There is an old poor man

Who after me hath many a weary step

Limped in pure love. Till he be first sufficed, 130

Oppressed with two weak evils,° age and hunger,

I will not touch a bit.

DUKE SENIOR

Go find him out,

And we will nothing waste° till you return.

ORLANDO

I thank ye, and be blest for your good comfort!

[Exit.]

DUKE SENIOR

Thou see'st we are not all alone unhappy: 135

This wide and universal theater

Presents more woeful pageants° than the scene

Wherein we play in.

JAQUES

All the world's a stage,

And all the men and women merely players;

They have their exits and their entrances, 140

And one man in his time plays many parts,

His acts being seven ages.° At first, the infant,

Mewling° and puking in the nurse's arms.

Then the whining schoolboy, with his satchel

And shining morning face, creeping like snail 145

Unwillingly to school. And then the lover,

Sighing like furnace, with a woeful ballad

Made to his mistress' eyebrow. Then a soldier,

Full of strange oaths and bearded like the pard,°

Jealous° in honor, sudden° and quick in quarrel, 150

Seeking the bubble reputation

Even in the cannon's mouth. And then the justice,

In fair round belly with good capon lined,°

With eyes severe and beard of formal cut,

Full of wise saws° and modern instances;° 155

And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts

Into the lean and slippered pantaloon,°

With spectacles on nose and pouch on side;

His youthful hose,° well saved, a world too wide

For his shrunk shank. and his big manly voice, 160

Turning again toward childish treble, pipes

And whistles in his° sound. Last scene of all,

That ends this strange eventful history,

Is second childishness and mere° oblivion,

Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans everything. 165

Enter ORLANDO, with ADAM.

DUKE SENIOR

Welcome. Set down your venerable burden

And let him feed. 120

ORLANDO

I thank you most for him.

ADAM

So had you need.

I scarce can speak to thank you for myself. 125

DUKE SENIOR

Welcome, fall to. I will not trouble you 170

As yet to question you about your fortunes.

Give us some music; and, good cousin, sing.

Song.

AMIENS

Blow, blow, thou winter wind, 130

Thou art not so unkind°

As man's ingratitude: 175

Thy tooth is not so keen,

Because thou art not seen,

Although thy breath be rude.

Heigh-ho, sing heigh-ho, unto the green holly.

Most friendship is faining,° most loving mere folly: 180

Then, heigh-ho, the holly.

This life is most jolly.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky

That dost not bite so nigh

As benefits forgot: 185

Though thou the waters warp,°

Thy sting is not so sharp

As friend rememb'red not.

Heigh-ho, sing, &c.

100 An if; reason perhaps Jaques puns, eating a raisin (grape) 113 knolled rung 117 enforcement support 124 upon command as you wish 125 wanting need 131 weak evils evils causing weakness 133 waste consume 137 pageants scenes 142 seven ages for a survey in art and literature of the image of man's life divided into ages, see Samuel C. Chew, "This Strange Eventful History," in Joseph Quincy Memorial Studies, ed. James G. McManaway et al.

143 Mewling bawling 149 pard leopard 150 Jealous touchy; sudden rash 153 capon lined perhaps an allusion to the practice of bribing a judge with a capon 155 saws sayings; modern instances commonplace examples 157 pantaloan ridiculous old man (from Pantalone, a stock figure in Italian comedy) 159 hose breeches 162 his its 164 mere utter 174 unkind unnatural 180 faining longing (perhaps with a pun on feigning, pretending) 186 warp turn (into ice)

DUKE SENIOR

If that you were the good Sir Rowland's son,
 As you have whispered faithfully you were,
 And as mine eye doth his effigies^o witness
 Most truly limned^o and living in your face,
 Be truly welcome hither. I am the duke
 That loved your father. The residue of your fortune 195
 Go to my cave and tell me. Good old man,
 Thou art right welcome, as thy master is.
 Support him by the arm. Give me your hand,
 And let me all your fortunes understand. Exeunt.

A C T I I I

Scene I. [The palace.]Enter DUKE [FREDERICK], LORDS, and OLIVER.

DUKE FREDERICK

Not see him since? Sir, sir, that cannot be.
 But were I not the better part made mercy,^o
 I should not seek an absent argument^o
 Of my revenge, thou present. But look to it:
 Find out thy brother, wheresoe'er he is;
 Seek him with candle; bring him dead or living
 Within this twelvemonth, or turn^o thou no more
 To seek a living in our territory.
 Thy lands, and all things that thou dost call thine
 Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands
 Till thou canst quit^o thee by thy brother's mouth^o
 Of what we think against thee.

OLIVER

O that your highness knew my heart in this!
 I never loved my brother in my life.

DUKE FREDERICK

More villain thou. Well, push him out of doors,
 And let my officers of such a nature^o
 Make an extent upon^o his house and lands.
 Do this expediently^o and turn him going. Exeunt.

Scene II. [The forest.]Enter ORLANDO [with a paper].

ORLANDO

Hang there, my verse, in witness of my love;
 And thou, thrice-crownèd Queen of Night,^o survey
 With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
 Thy huntress' name^o that my full life doth sway.
 O Rosalind! These trees shall be my books,
 And in their barks my thoughts I'll character,^o
 That every eye which in this forest looks
 Shall see thy virtue witnessed^o everywhere.

Run, run, Orlando, carve on every tree
 The fair, the chaste, and unexpressive she.^o

Exit. 10*Enter* CORIN and [TOUCHSTONE the] clown.

CORIN And how like you this shepherd's life, Master Touchstone?

TOUCHSTONE Truly, shepherd, in respect of itself, it is a good life; but in respect that it is a shepherd's life, it is naught.^o In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private,^o it is a very vile life. Now in respect it is in the fields, it pleaseth me well; but in respect it is not in the court, it is tedious. As it is a spare^o life, look you, it fits my humor^o well; but as there is no more plenty in it, it goes much 20 against my stomach. Hast any philosophy^o in thee, shepherd?

CORIN No more, but that I know the more one sickens, the worse at ease he is; and that he that wants^o money, means, and content is without three good 25 friends; that the property of rain is to wet and fire to burn; that good pasture makes fat sheep, and that a great cause of the night is lack of the sun; that he that hath learned no wit by nature nor art^o may complain^o of good breeding, or comes of a very dull kindred. 30

TOUCHSTONE Such a one is a natural philosopher.^o
 Wast ever in court, shepherd?

CORIN No, truly.

TOUCHSTONE Then thou art damned.

CORIN Nay, I hope.

TOUCHSTONE Truly thou art damned, like an ill-roasted egg, all on one side.

CORIN For not being at court? Your reason.

TOUCHSTONE Why, if thou never wast at court, thou never saw'st good manners;^o if thou never saw'st good 40 manners, then thy manners must be wicked; and wickedness is sin, and sin is damnation. Thou art in a parlous^o stage, shepherd.

CORIN Not a whit, Touchstone. Those that are good manners at the court are as ridiculous in the country 45 as the behavior of the country is most mockable at the court. You told me you salute not at the court but you kiss^o your hands. That courtesy would be uncleanly if courtiers were shepherds.

TOUCHSTONE Instance,^o briefly. Come, instance. 50

CORIN Why, we are still^o handling our ewes, and their fells^o you know are greasy.

TOUCHSTONE Why, do not your courtier's hands sweat? And is not the grease of a mutton as wholesome as the sweat of a man? Shallow, shallow. A better 55 instance, I say. Come.

CORIN Besides, our hands are hard.

TOUCHSTONE Your lips will feel them the sooner.
 Shallow again. A more sounder instance, come.

CORIN And they are often tarred over with the surgery^o 60

192 effigies likeness (accent on second syllable) 193 limned depicted

III.i.2 the . . . mercy so merciful 3 argument object (i.e., Orlando) 7 turn return 11 quit acquit; mouth testimony 16 of . . . nature appropriate 17 Make . . . upon seize by writ 18 expediently speedily

III.ii.2 thrice-crownèd . . . Night Diana (goddess of the moon, the hunt, and chastity) 4 Thy huntress' name Rosalind, who, because she is chaste, serves Diana 6 character write 8 virtue witnessed power attested to 10 unexpressive she woman beyond description 15 naught worthless 16 private lonely 19 spare frugal; humor disposition 21 philosophy learning 24 wants lacks 29 by . . . art by birth or education; complain cry the lack 31 a natural philosopher (1) wise by nature (2) a wise idiot 40 manners (1) behavior (2) morals 43 parlous dangerous 47-48 but you kiss without kissing 50 Instance proof 51 still always 52 fells fleeces 60-61 tarred . . . surgery shepherds used tar as an ointment of our sheep, and would you have us kiss tar? The courtier's hands are perfumed with civet.^o

TOUCHSTONE Most shallow man! Thou worms' meat^o in respect of^o a good piece of flesh indeed! Learn of the wise, and perpend.^o Civet is of a baser 65 birth than tar, the very uncleanly flux^o of a cat. Mend the instance,^o shepherd.

CORIN You have too courtly a wit for me; I'll rest.

TOUCHSTONE Wilt thou rest damned? God help thee, shallow man! God make incision in thee!^o Thou 70 art raw.^o

CORIN Sir, I am a true laborer; I earn that^o I eat, get that I wear, owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness, glad of other men's good, content with my harm;^o and the greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze 75 and my lambs suck.

TOUCHSTONE That is another simple sin in you; to bring the ewes and the rams together and to offer to get your living by the copulation of cattle, to be bawd to a bell-wether^o and to betray a she-lamb of a twelve- 80 month to a crookèd-pated^o old cuckoldly^o ram, out of all reasonable match. If thou beest not damned for this, the devil himself will have no shepherds; I cannot see else how thou shouldst 'scape.

CORIN Here comes young Master Ganymede, my 85 new mistress' brother.

Enter ROSALIND, [reading a paper].

ROSALIND

"From the east to western Ind,
No jewel is like Rosalind.
Her worth, being mounted on the wind,
Through all the world bears Rosalind. 90
All the pictures fairest lined^o
Are but black to Rosalind.
Let no face be kept in mind
But the fair^o of Rosalind."

TOUCHSTONE I'll rhyme you so eight years together, 95 dinners and suppers and sleeping hours excepted. It is the right butterwomen's rank to market.^o

ROSALIND Out, fool!

TOUCHSTONE For a taste:

If a hart do lack a hind, 100
Let him seek out Rosalind.
If the cat will after kind,^o
So be sure will Rosalind.
Wintred^o garments must be lined,^o
So must slender Rosalind. 105
They that reap must sheaf and bind,
Then to cart^o with Rosalind.

Sweetest nut hath sourest rind,
Such a nut is Rosalind.

He that sweetest rose will find 110
Must find love's prick, and Rosalind.

This is the very false gallop of verses. Why do you infect yourself with them?

ROSALIND Peace, you dull fool! I found them on a tree. 115

TOUCHSTONE Truly the tree yields bad fruit.

ROSALIND I'll graff^o it with you and then I shall graff it with a medlar.^o Then it will be the earliest fruit i' th' country; for you'll be rotten ere you be half ripe, and that's the right virtue^o of the medlar. 120

TOUCHSTONE You have said; but whether wisely or no, let the forest judge.

Enter CELIA with a writing.

ROSALIND Peace! Here comes my sister reading; stand aside.

CELIA

"Why should this a desert be? 125
For^o it is unpeopled? No.

Tongues I'll hang on every tree
That shall civil sayings^o show:
Some, how brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage, 130
That the stretching of a span^o
Buckles in^o his sum of age;
Some, of violated vows

'Twixt the souls of friend and friend;
But upon the fairest boughs, 135
Or at every sentence end,
Will I 'Rosalinda' write,

Teaching all that read to know
The quintessence of every sprite^o
Heaven would in little^o show. 140
Therefore heaven Nature charged
That one body should be filled
With all graces wide-enlarged.

Nature presently^o distilled
Helen's cheek, but not her heart,^o 145
Cleopatra's majesty,
Atalanta's better part,^o
Sad^o Lucretia's^o modesty.

Thus Rosalind of many parts
By heavenly synod^o was devised, 150
Of many faces, eyes, and hearts,
To have the touches^o dearest prized.

Heaven would that she these gifts should have,
And I to live and die her slave."

ROSALIND O most gentle pulpiter, what tedious 155 homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried, "Have patience, good people"!

117 graff graft 118 medlar (1) an applelike fruit, not ready to eat until it is almost rotten (2) interferer 120 right virtue true quality 126 For because 128 civil sayings civilized maxims 131 stretching . . . span span of an open hand 132 Buckles in limits 139 sprite soul 140 in little in miniature (i.e., the microcosm) 144 presently thereupon 145 cheek . . . heart Helen's beauty but not her false heart 147 Atalanta's better part Rosalind has the gracefulness but not the cruelty of Atalanta, a huntress famed in Greek mythology for her fleetness 148 Sad dignified; Lucretia a Roman matron who killed herself rather than live dishonored 150 synod council 152 touches features

62 civet perfume obtained from the civet cat 63-64 worms' meat food for worms 64 respect of comparison with 65 perpend consider 66 flux secretion 66-67 Mend the instance give a better example 70 make . . . thee let your blood (a common cure, here for folly) 71 raw (1) inexperienced (2) sore 72 that what 74 content . . . harm bear with my troubles 80 bell-wether the leading sheep of a flock carries a bell 81 crookèd-pated with crooked horns; cuckoldly because horned 91 lined drawn 94 fair lovely face 97 right . . . market the verses jog along exactly like a procession of women riding to market 102 kind its own kind 104 Wintred prepared for winter; lined stuffed 107 to cart perhaps an allusion not only to the harvest but to the custom of transporting prostitutes to jail in a cart

CELIA How now? Back, friends. Shepherd, go off a little. Go with him, sirrah.

TOUCHSTONE Come, shepherd, let us make an honorable retreat; though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippage.^o Exit, [with CORIN].

CELIA Didst thou hear these verses?

ROSALIND O, yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some of them had in them more feet^o than the verses would bear.

CELIA That's no matter. The feet might bear the verses.

ROSALIND Ay, but the feet were lame, and could not bear themselves without the verse, and therefore stood lamely in the verse.

CELIA But didst thou hear without wondering how thy name should be hanged and carved upon these trees?

ROSALIND I was seven of the nine days^o out of the wonder before you came; for look here what I found on a palm tree. I was never so berhymed since Pythagoras^o time that^o I was an Irish rat,^o which I can hardly remember.

CELIA Trow^o you who hath done this?

ROSALIND Is it a man?

CELIA And a chain that you once wore, about his neck. Change you color?

ROSALIND I prithee who?

CELIA O Lord, Lord, it is a hard matter for friends to meet; but mountains may be removed with earthquakes, and so encounter.

ROSALIND Nay, but who is it?

CELIA Is it possible?

ROSALIND Nay, I prithee now with most petitionary vehemence,^o tell me who it is.

CELIA O wonderful, wonderful, and most wonderful wonderful, and yet again wonderful, and after that, out of all hooping!^o

ROSALIND Good my complexion!^o Dost thou think, though I am caparisoned^o like a man, I have a doublet and hose in my disposition? One inch of delay more is a South Sea of discovery.^o I prithee tell me who is it quickly, and speak apace.^o I would thou couldst stammer, that thou mightst pour this concealed man out of thy mouth as wine comes out of a narrow-mouthed bottle; either too much at once, or none at all. I prithee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings.

CELIA So you may put a man in your belly.

ROSALIND Is he of God's making? What manner of man? Is his head worth a hat? Or his chin worth a beard?

CELIA Nay, he hath but a little beard.

ROSALIND Why, God will send more, if the man will be thankful. Let me stay^o the growth of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.

CELIA It is young Orlando, that tripped up the wrestler's heels and your heart both in an instant.

ROSALIND Nay, but the devil take mocking! Speak sad brow and true maid.^o

CELIA I' faith, coz, 'tis he.

ROSALIND Orlando?

CELIA Orlando.

ROSALIND Alas the day! What shall I do with my doublet and hose? What did he when thou saw'st him? What said he? How looked he? Wherein went he?^o What makes he here? Did he ask for me? Where remains he? How parted he with thee? And when shalt thou see him again? Answer me in one word.

CELIA You must borrow me Gargantua's^o mouth first; 'tis a word too great for any mouth of this age's size. To say "ay" and "no" to these particulars is more than to answer in a catechism.

ROSALIND But doth he know that I am in this forest, and in man's apparel? Looks he as freshly^o as he did the day he wrestled?

CELIA It is as easy to count atomies^o as to resolve the propositions^o of a lover; but take a taste of my finding him, and relish it with good observance.^o I found him under a tree, like a dropped acorn.

ROSALIND It may well be called Jove's tree^o when it drops forth fruit.

CELIA Give me audience,^o good madam.

ROSALIND Proceed.

CELIA There lay he stretched along like a wounded knight.

ROSALIND Though it be pity to see such a sight, it well becomes the ground.

CELIA Cry "holla"^o to the tongue, I prithee; it curvets^o unseasonably. He was furnished^o like a hunter.

ROSALIND O, ominous! He comes to kill my heart.^o

CELIA I would sing my song without a burden.^o Thou bring'st me out of tune.

ROSALIND Do you not know I am a woman? When I think, I must speak. Sweet, say on.

Enter ORLANDO and JAQUES.

CELIA You bring me out. Soft. Comes he not here?

ROSALIND 'Tis he! Slink by, and note him.

JAQUES I thank you for your company; but, good faith, I had as lief have been myself alone.

ORLANDO And so 'had I; but yet for fashion sake I thank you too for your society.

JAQUES God b' wi' you; let's meet as little as we can.

ORLANDO I do desire we may be better strangers.

JAQUES I pray you mar no more trees with writing love songs in their barks.

ORLANDO I pray you mar no moe^o of my verses with reading them ill-favoredly.^o

162 scrip and scrippage shepherd's pouch and its contents
165 feet metrical units 175 seven . . . days cf. the phrase nine days's wonder 178 Pythagoras Greek philosopher who taught the doctrine of the transmigration of souls; that when; Irish rat it was believed that Irish sorcerers could kill rats with rhymed spells 180 Trow know 190-91 with . . . vehemence i.e., I beg you 194 out . . . hooping beyond all measure 195 Good my complexion a mild expletive 196 caparisoned dressed 197-98 One . . . discovery Another minute more will seem as long as it takes to voyage to the South Seas 199 apace quickly

211 stay wait for 216 sad . . . maid seriously and truth fully 222-23 Wherein went he How was he dressed? 226 Gargantua a giant in Rabelais and other writers 231 freshly handsome 233 atomies notes 233-34 resolve the propositions answer the questions 235 good observance close attention 237 Jove's tree the oak, sacred to Jove 239 Give me audience listen 245 holla whoa; curvets frolics 246 furnished dressed 247 heart pun on hart 248 burden refrain 262 moe more 263 ill-favoredly badly

JAQUES Rosalind is your love's name?
 ORLANDO Yes, just. 265
 JAQUES I do not like her name.
 ORLANDO There was no thought of pleasing you when she was christened.
 JAQUES What stature is she of?
 ORLANDO Just as high as my heart. 270
 JAQUES You are full of pretty answers. Have you not been acquainted with goldsmiths' wives, and conned them out of rings?^o
 ORLANDO Not so; but I answer you right painted cloth,^o from whence you have studied your questions. 275
 JAQUES You have a nimble wit; I think 'twas made of Atalanta's heels.^o Will you sit down with me, and we two will rail against our mistress the world and all our misery.
 ORLANDO I will chide no breather^o in the world but 280 myself, against whom I know most faults.
 JAQUES The worst fault you have is to be in love.
 ORLANDO 'Tis a fault I will not change for your best virtue. I am weary of you.
 JAQUES By my troth, I was seeking for a fool when I 285 found you.
 ORLANDO He is drowned in the brook. Look but in and you shall see him.
 JAQUES There I shall see mine own figure.
 ORLANDO Which I take to be either a fool or a 290 cipher.^o
 JAQUES I'll tarry no longer with you. Farewell, good Signior Love.
 ORLANDO I am glad of your departure. Adieu, good Monsieur Melancholy. [Exit JAQUES.] 295
 ROSALIND I will speak to him like a saucy lackey, and under that habit^o play the knave with him. Do you hear, forester?
 ORLANDO Very well. What would you?
 ROSALIND I pray you, what is't o'clock? 300
 ORLANDO You should ask me, what time o' day. There's no clock in the forest.
 ROSALIND Then there is no true lover in the forest, else sighing every minute and groaning every hour would detect^o the lazy foot of Time as well as a clock. 305
 ORLANDO And why not the swift foot of Time? Had not that been as proper?
 ROSALIND By no means, sir. Time travels in divers paces with divers persons. I'll tell you who Time ambles withal, who Time trots withal, who Time 310 gallops withal, and who he stands still withal.
 ORLANDO I prithee, who doth he trot withal?
 ROSALIND Marry, he trots hard with a young maid between the contract of her marriage^o and the day it is solemnized. If the interim be but a se'nnight,^o 315 Time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven year.
 ORLANDO Who ambles Time withal?
 ROSALIND With a priest that lacks Latin and a rich man that hath not the gout; for the one sleeps easily 320 because he cannot study, and the other lives merrily because he feels no pain; the one lacking the burden of lean and wasteful^o learning, the other knowing no burden of heavy tedious penury. These Time ambles withal. 325

 ORLANDO Who doth he gallop withal?
 ROSALIND With a thief to the gallows; for though he go as softly^o as foot can fall, he thinks himself too soon there.
 ORLANDO Who says it still withal? 330
 ROSALIND With lawyers in the vacation; for they sleep between term^o and term, and then they perceive not how time moves.
 ORLANDO Where dwell you, pretty youth?
 ROSALIND With this shepherdess, my sister; here in 335 the skirts of the forest, like fringe upon a petticoat.
 ORLANDO Are you native of this place?
 ROSALIND As the cony^o that you see dwell where she is kindled.^o
 ORLANDO Your accent is something finer than you 340 could purchase^o in so removed^o a dwelling.
 ROSALIND I have been told so of many. But indeed an old religious^o uncle of mine taught me to speak, who was in his youth an inland^o man; one that knew courtship^o too well, for there he fell in love. I have 345 heard him read many lectures against it; and I thank God I am not a woman, to be touched^o with so many giddy^o offenses as he hath generally taxed their whole sex withal.
 ORLANDO Can you remember any of the principal 350 evils that he laid to the charge of women?
 ROSALIND There were none principal. They were all like one another as halfpence are, every one fault seeming monstrous till his fellow fault came to match it. 355
 ORLANDO I prithee recount some of them.
 ROSALIND No, I will not cast away my physic but on those that are sick. There is a man haunts the forest that abuses our young plants with carving "Rosalind" on their barks, hangs odes upon hawthorns, and 360 elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancy-monger,^o I would give him some good counsel, for he seems to have the quotidian^o of love upon him.
 ORLANDO I am he that is so love-shaked. I pray you 365 tell me your remedy.
 ROSALIND There is none of my uncle's marks upon you. He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes^o I am sure you are not prisoner.
 ORLANDO What were his marks? 370
 ROSALIND A lean cheek, which you have not; a blue eye^o and sunken, which you have not; an unquestionable^o spirit, which you have not; a beard neglected, which you have not—but I pardon you for that, for

272-73 conned . . . rings memorized the sentimental sayings inscribed in rings 274-75 painted cloth cheap substitute for tapestry, on which were painted pictures with trite sayings 277 Atalanta's heels Atalanta was a symbol of speed 280 breather creature 291 cipher zero 297 habit guise 305 detect show 314 contract . . . marriage betrothal 315 a se'nnight seven days, a week

323 wasteful causing one to waste away 328 softly slowly 332 term court session 338 cony rabbit 339 kindled born 341 purchase acquire; removed remote 343 religious a member of a religious order 344 inland city 345 courtship (1) court manners (2) wooing 347 touched tainted 348 giddy frivolous 362 fancy-monger dealer in love 364 quotidian daily fever 369 cage of rushes prison easy to escape from 371-72 a blue eye dark circles under the eyes 372-73 unquestionable averse to conversation simply your having^o in beard is a younger brother's 375 revenue.^o Then your hose should be ungartered, your bonnet unbanded, your sleeve unbuttoned, your shoe untied, and everything about you demonstrating a careless desolation.^o But you are no such man: you are rather point-device in your accouterments,^o as loving 380 yourself than seeming the lover of any other.

ORLANDO Fair youth, I would I could make thee believe I love.

ROSALIND Me believe it? You may as soon make her that you love believe it, which I warrant she is apter 385 to do than to confess she does; that is one of the points in the which women still give the lie to their con-sciences. But in good sooth, are you he that hangs the verses on the trees wherein Rosalind is so admired?

ORLANDO I swear to thee, youth, by the white hand 390 of Rosalind, I am that he, that unfortunate he.

ROSALIND But are you so much in love as your rhymes speak?

ORLANDO Neither rhyme nor reason can express how much. 395

ROSALIND Love is merely^o a madness, and, I tell you, deserves as well a dark house and a whip^o as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished and cured is that the lunacy is so ordinary that the whippers are in love too. Yet I profess curing it by counsel. 400

ORLANDO Did you ever cure any so?

ROSALIND Yes, one, and in this manner. He was to imagine me his love, his mistress; and I set him every day to woo me. At which time would I, being but a moonish^o youth, grieve, be effeminate, changeable, 405 longing and liking, proud, fantastical,^o apish, shallow, inconstant, full of tears, full of smiles; for every passion something and for no passion truly anything, as boys and women are for the most part cattle of this color; would now like him, now loathe him; then 410 entertain him, then forswear him; now weep for him, then spit at him; that I drove my suitor from his mad humor^o of love to a living^o humor of madness, which was, to forswear the full stream of the world and to live in a nook merely monastic. And thus I cured him; 415 and this way will I take upon me to wash your liver^o as clean as a sound sheep's heart, that there shall not be one spot of love in't.

ORLANDO I would not be cured, youth.

ROSALIND I would cure you, if you would but call 420 me Rosalind and come every day to my cote and woo me.

ORLANDO Now, by the faith of my love, I will. Tell me where it is.

ROSALIND Go with me to it, and I'll show it you; 425 and by^o the way you shall tell me where in the forest you live. Will you go?

ORLANDO With all my heart, good youth.

ROSALIND Nay, you must call me Rosalind. Come, sister, will you go? Exeunt. 430

375 simply your having truthfully what you have 375-76 younger brother's revenue small portion 378-79 a careless desolation indifferent despondency 380 point-device . . .
accouterments precise in your dress 396 merely completely 397 a dark . . . whip the usual treatment of the insane in Shakespeare's day 405 moonish changeable 406 fantastical capricious 413 humor condition; living real 416 liver thought to be the seat of love 426 by along

Scene III. [The forest.]

Enter [TOUCHSTONE the] clown, AUDREY; and JAQUES [apart].

TOUCHSTONE Come apace,^o good Audrey. I will fetch up your goats, Audrey. And how, Audrey, am I the man yet? Doth my simple feature^o content you?

AUDREY Your features, Lord warrant^o us! What features? 5

TOUCHSTONE I am here with thee and thy goats, as the most capricious poet, honest Ovid, was among the Goths.^o

JAQUES [Aside.] O knowledge ill-inhabited,^o worse than Jove in a thatched house! 10

TOUCHSTONE When a man's verses cannot be understood, nor a man's good wit seconded with^o the forward child, understanding, it strikes a man more dead than a great reckoning in a little room.^o Truly, I would the gods had made thee poetical. 15

AUDREY I do not know what poetical is. Is it honest in deed and word? Is it a true thing?

TOUCHSTONE No, truly; for the truest poetry is the most feigning, and lovers are given to poetry, and what they swear in poetry may be said as lovers they 20 do feign.^o

AUDREY Do you wish then that the gods had made me poetical?

TOUCHSTONE I do truly; for thou swear'st to me thou art honest. Now, if thou wert a poet, I might 25 have some hope thou didst feign.

AUDREY Would you not have me honest?

TOUCHSTONE No, truly, unless thou wert hard-favored;^o for honesty coupled to beauty is to have honey a sauce to sugar. 30

JAQUES [Aside.] A material^o fool.

AUDREY Well, I am not fair, and therefore I pray the gods make me honest.

TOUCHSTONE Truly, and to cast away honesty upon a foul slut were to put good meat into an unclean dish. 35

AUDREY I am not a slut, though I thank the gods I am foul.

TOUCHSTONE Well, praised be the gods for thy foulness! Sluttishness may come hereafter. But be it as it may be, I will marry thee; and to that end I have 40 been with Sir^o Oliver Mar-text, the vicar of the next village, who hath promised to meet me in this place of the forest and to couple us.

JAQUES [Aside.] I would fain see this meeting.

AUDREY Well, the gods give us joy! 45

TOUCHSTONE Amen. A man may, if he were of a fearful heart, stagger^o in this attempt; for here we have no temple but the wood, no assembly but horn-beasts.^o But what though? Courage! As horns are

III.iii.i apace swiftly 3 feature appearance 4 warrant save 7-8 capricious . . . Goths the Roman poet Ovid was exiled among the Goths—pronounced in Elizabethan England the same as “goats”—for the immorality of his verses: Touchstone plays on the words “honest” (chaste) and “capricious” (derived from Latin caper = male goat) 9 ill-inhabited ill-housed 12 with by 14 great . . . room large bill for poor accommodations 21 feign (1) pretend
(2) desire (a pun on fain) 28-29 hard-favored ugly 31 material full of good matter 41 Sir an old form of address for a priest 47 stagger tremble 48-49 horn-beasts (1) horned animals (2) cuckolds odious, they are necessary.° It is said, "Many a man so knows no end of his goods." Right! Many a man has good horns and knows no end of them. Well, that is the dowry of his wife; 'tis none of his own getting. Horns! Even so, poor men alone. No, no; the noblest deer hath them as huge as the rascal.° Is the single man 55 therefore blessed? No; as a walled town is more worthier than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honorable than the bare brow of a bachelor; and by how much defense° is better than no skill, by so much is a horn more precious than to want.° 60

Enter Sir OLIVER MAR-TEXT.

Here comes Sir Oliver. Sir Oliver Mar-text, you are well met. Will you dispatch us° here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel?

OLIVER MAR-TEXT Is there none here to give the woman? 65

TOUCHSTONE I will not take her on gift of any man.

OLIVER MAR-TEXT Truly, she must be given, or the marriage is not lawful.

JAQUES [Comes forward.] Proceed, proceed; I'll give 70 her.

TOUCHSTONE Good even, good Master What-ye-call't.° How do you, sir? You are very well met. God 'ield you for your last company;° I am very glad to see you. Even a toy° in hand here, sir. Nay, pray be 75 covered.°

JAQUES Will you be married, motley?

TOUCHSTONE As the ox hath his bow,° sir, the horse his curb, and the falcon her bells, so man hath his desires; and as pigeons bill, so wedlock would be 80 nibbling.

JAQUES And will you, being a man of your breeding, be married under a bush like a beggar? Get you to church, and have a good priest that can tell you what marriage is. This fellow will but join you together as 85 they join wainscot;° then one of you will prove a shrunk panel, and like green timber warp, warp.

TOUCHSTONE [Aside.] I am not in the mind but° I were better to be married of him than of another; for he is not like to marry me well; and not being well 90 married,° it will be a good excuse for me hereafter to leave my wife.

JAQUES Go thou with me and let me counsel thee.

TOUCHSTONE

Come, sweet Audrey.

We must be married, or we must live in bawdry. 95

Farewell, good Master Oliver: not

O sweet Oliver,

O brave Oliver,

Leave me not behind thee;

but

Wind° away,

Be gone, I say;

I will not to wedding with thee.

OLIVER MAR-TEXT 'Tis no matter. Ne'er a fantastical° knave of them all shall flout me out of my 105 calling. Exeunt.

Scene IV. [The forest.]

Enter ROSALIND and CELIA.

ROSALIND Never talk to me; I will weep.

CELIA Do, I prithee; but yet have the grace to consider that tears do not become a man.

ROSALIND But have I not cause to weep?

CELIA As good cause as one would desire; therefore 5 weep.

ROSALIND His very hair is of the dissembling color.°

CELIA Something browner than Judas'. Marry, his kisses are Judas' own children.

ROSALIND I' faith, his hair is of a good color. 10

CELIA An excellent color. Your chestnut was ever the only color.

ROSALIND And his kissing is as full of sanctity as the touch of holy bread.°

CELIA He hath bought a pair of cast° lips of Diana.° A 15 nun of winter's sisterhood° kisses not more religiously; the very ice of chastity is in them.

ROSALIND But why did he swear he would come this morning, and comes not?

CELIA Nay, certainly there is no truth in him. 20

ROSALIND Do you think so?

CELIA Yes; I think he is not a pickpurse nor a horse-stealer, but for his verity in love, I do think him as concave° as a covered goblet or a worm-eaten nut.

ROSALIND Not true in love? 25

CELIA Yes, when he is in, but I think he is not in.

ROSALIND You have heard him swear downright he was.

CELIA "Was" is not "is." Besides, the oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a tapster;° they are 30 both the confirmer of false reckonings. He attends here in the forest on the duke your father.

ROSALIND I met the duke yesterday and had much question° with him. He asked me of what parentage I was. I told him, of as good as he; so he laughed and 35 let me go. But what talk we of fathers when there is such a man as Orlando?

CELIA O, that's a brave° man; he writes brave verses, speaks brave words, swears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite traverse,° athwart the heart of 40 his lover, as a puisny° tilter, that spurs his horse but on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose. But all's

101 Wind turn 104-05 fantastical odd

III.iv.7 dissembling color red, like the hair of Judas 14 holy bread not the sacramental wafer, but bread brought to church to be blessed and then distributed to the poor 15 cast (1) molded (2) castoff; Diana goddess of chastity 16 winter's sisterhood the most rigorous chastity 24 concave hollow 30 tapster waiter in a tavern 34 question talk 38 brave fine 40 traverse at an angle (instead of head-on) 41 puisny inexperienced

50 necessary inevitable 55 rascal inferior deer 59 defense the art of defense 60 want lack horns 62 dispatch us finish our business 72-73 Master What-ye-call't Touchstone delicately avoids the name "Jaques," which could be pronounced "jakes," a privy 73-74 God . . . company God reward you for the last time we met 75 toy trifle 75-76 pray be covered Jaques has removed his hat 78 bow yoke 86 wainscot wood paneling 88 I . . . but I am not sure but that 90-91 well married (1) legally married (2) happily married (3) married into wealth brave that youth mounts and folly guides. Who comes here?

Enter CORIN.

CORIN

Mistress and master, you have oft enquired
After the shepherd that complained^o of love,
Who you saw sitting by me on the turf,
Praising the proud disdainful shepherdess
That was his mistress.

CELIA

Well, and what of him?

CORIN

If you will see a pageant^o truly played
Between the pale complexion of true love
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain,
Go hence a little, and I shall conduct you,
If you will mark it.

ROSALIND

O, come, let us remove:

The sight of lovers feedeth those in love.

Bring us to this sight, and you shall say

I'll prove a busy actor in their play.

Exeunt.

Scene V. [The forest.]

Enter SILVIUS and PHEBE.

SILVIUS

Sweet Phebe, do not scorn me; do not, Phebe!
Say that you love me not, but say not so
In bitterness. The common executioner,
Whose heart th' accustomed sight of death makes hard,
Falls^o not the ax upon the humbled neck
But first begs pardon. Will you sterner be
Than he that dies and lives^o by bloody drops?

Enter [apart] ROSALIND, CELIA, and CORIN.

PHEBE

I would not be thy executioner.
I fly thee, for I would not injure thee.
Thou tell'st me there is murder in mine eye:
'Tis pretty, sure, and very probable
That eyes, that are the frail'st and softest things,
Who shut their coward gates on atomies,^o
Should be called tyrants, butchers, murderers.
Now I do frown on thee with all my heart,
And if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee.
Now counterfeit to swoond;^o why, now fall down;
Or if thou canst not, O, for shame, for shame,
Lie not, to say mine eyes are murderers.
Now show the wound mine eye hath made in thee;
Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains
Some scar of it; lean upon a rush,
The cicatrice and capable impressure^o
Thy palm some moment keeps; but now mine eyes,
Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not,
Nor I am sure there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt.

SILVIUS

O dear Phebe,

If ever, as that ever may be near,^o

You meet in some fresh cheek the power of fancy,^o

Then shall you know the wounds invisible

That love's keen arrows make.

PHEBE

But till that time

Come thou not near me; and when that time comes,

Afflict me with thy mocks, pity me not,

As till that time I shall not pity thee.

ROSALIND

And why, I pray you? Who might be your mother,

That you insult, exult, and all at once,

Over the wretched? What though you have no beauty

(As, by my faith, I see no more in you

Than without candle may go dark to bed^o)

Must you be therefore proud and pitiless?

Why, what means this? Why do you look on me?

I see no more in you than in the ordinary

Of nature's sale-work.^o 'Od's^o my little life,

I think she means to tangle my eyes too!

No, faith, proud mistress, hope not after it;

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,

Your bugle^o eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream

That can entame my spirits to your worship.

You foolish shepherd, wherefore do you follow her,

Like foggy south,^o puffing with wind and rain?

You are a thousand times a properer^o man

Than she a woman. 'Tis such fools as you

That makes the world full of ill-favored children.

'Tis not her glass,^o but you, that flatters her,

And out of you she sees herself more proper

Than any of her lineaments can show her.

But mistress, know yourself. Down on your knees,

And thank heaven, fasting, for a good man's love;

For I must tell you friendly in your ear,

Sell when you can, you are not for all markets.

Cry the man mercy,^o love him, take his offer;

Foul^o is most foul, being foul to be a scoffer;

So take her to thee, shepherd. Fare you well.

PHEBE

Sweet youth, I pray you chide a year together;

I had rather hear you chide than this man woo.

ROSALIND [Aside.] He's fall'n in love with your foul-ness, and she'll fall in love with my anger. If it be so, as fast as she answers thee with frowning looks, I'll sauce her with bitter words. [To PHEBE.] Why look you so upon me?

PHEBE

For no ill will I bear you.

ROSALIND

I pray you do not fall in love with me,

For I am falser than vows made in wine.

Besides, I like you not. If you will know my house,

'Tis at the tuft of olives, here hard^o by.

Will you go, sister? Shepherd, ply her hard.

Come, sister. Shepherdess, look on him better

And be not proud. Though all the world could see,

46 complained lamented 50 pageant scene, show
III.v.5 Falls lets fall 7 dies and lives earns his living 13
atomies motes 17 counterfeit to swoond pretend to swoon
23 cicatrice . . . impressure mark and visible impression

28 as . . . near and may the time be soon 29 fancy love 39 Than . . . bed your beauty is not so dazzling as to light up the room 42-43 ordinary . . . sale-work usual product of nature's manufacture 43 'Od's God save 47 bugle black and glassy 50 south south wind 51 properer more handsome 54 glass mirror 61 Cry . . . mercy ask the man's forgiveness
62 Foul (1) ugliness (2) wickedness 75 hard near

None could be so abused° in sight as he.

Come, to our flock. Exit, [with CELIA and CORIN]. 80

PHEBE

Dead shepherd, now I find thy saw° of might,
"Who ever loved that loved not at first sight?"°

SILVIUS

Sweet Phebe.

PHEBE

Ha! What say'st thou, Silvius?

SILVIUS

Sweet Phebe, pity me.

PHEBE

Why, I am sorry for thee, gentle Silvius.

85

SILVIUS

Wherever sorrow is, relief would be.

If you do sorrow at my grief in love,

By giving love your sorrow and my grief

Were both exterminated.°

PHEBE

Thou hast my love. Is not that neighborly?°

90

SILVIUS

I would have you.

PHEBE

Why, that were covetousness.

Silvius, the time was that I hated thee;

And yet it is not that I bear thee love,

But since that thou canst talk of love so well,

Thy company, which erst° was irksome to me,

95

I will endure; and I'll employ thee too;

But do not look for further recompense

Than thine own gladness that thou art employed.

SILVIUS

So holy and so perfect is my love,

And I in such a poverty of grace,°

100

That I shall think it a most plenteous crop

To glean the broken ears after the man

That the main harvest reaps. Loose now and then

A scatt' red° smile, and that I'll live upon.

PHEBE

Know'st thou the youth that spoke to me erewhile?°

105

SILVIUS

Not very well, but I have met him oft,

And he hath bought the cottage and the bounds

That the old carlot° once was master of.

PHEBE

Think not I love him, though I ask for him;

'Tis but a peevish boy; yet he talks well.

110

But what care I for words? Yet words do well

When he that speaks them pleases those that hear.

It is a pretty youth. Not very pretty.

But sure he's proud. And yet his pride becomes him.

He'll make a proper man. The best thing in him

115

Is his complexion. And faster than his tongue

Did make offense, his eye did heal it up.

He is not very tall. Yet for his years he's tall.

His leg is but so so. And yet 'tis well.

There was a pretty redness in his lip,

120

A little riper and more lusty red

Than that mixed in his cheek. 'Twas just the difference
Betwixt the constant° red and mingled damask.°

There be some women, Silvius, had they marked him

In parcels° as I did, would have gone near 125

To fall in love with him; but, for my part,

I love him not nor hate him not. And yet

I have more cause to hate him than to love him;

For what had he to do to chide at me?

He said mine eyes were black and my hair black;

130

And, now I am rememb' red,° scorned at me.

I marvel why I answered not again.

But that's all one: omittance is no quittance.°

I'll write to him a very taunting letter,

And thou shalt bear it. Wilt thou, Silvius?

135

SILVIUS

Phebe, with all my heart.

PHEBE

I'll write it straight;°

The matter's in my head and in my heart;

I will be bitter with him and passing short.°

Go with me, Silvius.

Exeunt.

A C T I V

Scene I. [The forest.]

Enter ROSALIND and CELIA and JAQUES.

JAQUES I prithee, pretty youth, let me be better acquainted with thee.

100

ROSALIND They say you are a melancholy fellow.

JAQUES I am so; I do love it better than laughing.

ROSALIND Those that are in extremity of° either are abominable fellows, and betray themselves to every modern censure° worse than drunkards.

5

JAQUES Why, 'tis good to be sad and say nothing.

ROSALIND Why then, 'tis good to be a post.

JAQUES I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation;° nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politic;° nor the lady's, which is nice;° nor the lover's, which is all these: but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples,° extracted from many objects, and indeed the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often rumination° wraps me in a most humorous sadness.

10

15

ROSALIND A traveler! By my faith, you have great reason to be sad. I fear you have sold your own lands to see other men's. Then to have seen much and to have nothing is to have rich eyes and poor hands.

20

JAQUES Yes, I have gained my experience.

Enter ORLANDO.

123 constant uniform; mingled damask pink and white

125 In parcels piece by piece 131 rememb' red reminded

133 omittance . . . quittance the fact that I did not reply does not mean I will not do so later 136 straight at once

138 passing short very curt

IV.i.5 are . . . of go to extremes in 6-7 every modern censure the average man's disapproval 11 emulation envy

14 politic i.e., put on to seem grave; nice fastidious 16

simples ingredients 18 often rumination constant reflection

79 abused deceived 81 saw saying 82 Who . . . sight
a line from Christopher Marlowe's poem Hero and Leander, published in 1598; the "dead shepherd" is Marlowe, who died in 1593 89 exterminated ended 90 neighborly friendly (perhaps alluding to the commandment to love one's neighbor) 95 erst formerly 100 a poverty of grace small favor 104 scatt' red stray 105 erewhile a short time ago
108 carlot countryman

ROSALIND And your experience makes you sad. I had 25 rather have a fool to make me merry than experience to make me sad—and to travel° for it too.

ORLANDO Good day and happiness, dear Rosalind.

JAKUES Nay then, God b' wi' you, an° you talk in blank verse. [Exit.] 30

ROSALIND Farewell, Monsieur Traveler. Look you lisp° and wear strange suits, disable° all the benefits of your own country, be out of love with your nativity,° and almost chide God for making you that countenance you are; or I will scarce think you have swam 35 in a gundello.° Why, how now, Orlando, where have you been all this while? You a lover? An you serve me such another trick, never come in my sight more.

ORLANDO My fair Rosalind, I come within an hour of my promise. 40

ROSALIND Break an hour's promise in love? He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts and break but a part of the thousand part of a minute in the affairs of love, it may be said of him that Cupid hath clapped° him o' th' shoulder, but I'll warrant him 45 heart-whole.

ORLANDO Pardon me, dear Rosalind.

ROSALIND Nay, an you be so tardy, come no more in my sight. I had as lief be wooed of a snail.

ORLANDO Of a snail? 50

ROSALIND Ay, of a snail; for though he comes slowly, he carries his house on his head; a better jointure,° I think, than you make a woman. Besides, he brings his destiny with him.

ORLANDO What's that? 55

ROSALIND Why, horns; which such as you are fain to be beholding to your wives for; but he comes armed° in his fortune and prevents° the slander of his wife.

ORLANDO Virtue is no horn-maker, and my Rosalind 60 is virtuous.

ROSALIND And I am your Rosalind.

CELIA It pleases him to call you so; but he hath a Rosalind of a better leer° than you.

ROSALIND Come, woo me, woo me; for now I am 65 in a holiday humor and like enough to consent. What would you say to me now, an I were your very very Rosalind?

ORLANDO I would kiss before I spoke.

ROSALIND Nay, you were better speak first, and when 70 you were graveled for lack of matter,° you might take occasion to kiss. Very good orators, when they are out,° they will spit; and for lovers, lacking—God warn° us!—matter, the cleanliest shift is to kiss.

ORLANDO How if the kiss be denied? 75

ROSALIND Then she puts you to entreaty, and there begins new matter.

ORLANDO Who could be out, being before his beloved mistress?

ROSALIND Marry, that should you, if I were your 80 mistress, or I should think my honesty ranker° than my wit.

ORLANDO What, of my suit?

ROSALIND Not out of your apparel, and yet out of your suit.° Am not I your Rosalind? 85

ORLANDO I take some joy to say you are, because I would be talking of her.

ROSALIND Well, in her person, I say I will not have
you.

ORLANDO Then, in mine own person, I die. 90

ROSALIND No, faith, die by attorney.° The poor world is almost six thousand years old, and in all this time there was not any man died in his own person,° videlicet,° in a love cause. Troilus° had his brains dashed out with a Grecian club; yet he did what he 95 could to die before, and he is one of the patterns of love. Leander,° he would have lived many a fair year though Hero had turned nun, if it had not been for a hot midsummer night; for, good youth, he went but forth to wash him in the Hellespont, and being 100 taken with the cramp, was drowned; and the foolish chroniclers of that age found° it was "Hero of Sestos."
But these are all lies. Men have died from time to time, and worms have eaten them, but not for love.

ORLANDO I would not have my right Rosalind of this 105 mind, for I protest her frown might kill me.

ROSALIND By this hand, it will not kill a fly. But come, now I will be your Rosalind in a more coming-on disposition; and ask me what you will, I will grant it. 110

ORLANDO Then love me, Rosalind.

ROSALIND Yes, faith, will I, Fridays and Saturdays and all.

ORLANDO And wilt thou have me?

ROSALIND Ay, and twenty such. 115

ORLANDO What sayest thou?

ROSALIND Are you not good?

ORLANDO I hope so.

ROSALIND Why then, can one desire too much of a good thing? Come, sister, you shall be the priest and 120 marry us. Give me your hand, Orlando. What do you say, sister?

ORLANDO Pray thee marry us.

CELIA I cannot say the words.

ROSALIND You must begin, "Will you, Orlando—" 125

CELIA Go to.° Will you, Orlando, have to wife this Rosalind?

ORLANDO I will.

ROSALIND Ay, but when?

ORLANDO Why now, as fast as she can marry us. 130

ROSALIND Then you must say, "I take thee, Rosalind, for wife."

ORLANDO I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.

ROSALIND I might ask you for your commission;° but I do take thee, Orlando, for my husband. There's a 135

27 travel pun on travail 29 an if 32 lisp speak affectedly;
disable disparage 33 nativity birthplace 36 gundello gondola 45 clapped touched 52 jointure marriage settlement 58 armed i.e., with horns; prevents (1) forestalls (2) anticipates (?) 64 leer face 71 graveled . . . matter hard put for something to say 73 out out of material 74 warn protect (warrant)

81 honesty ranker virtue fouler 85 suit (1) apparel (2) entreaty 91 attorney proxy 93 in . . . person in real life
(as opposed to fiction) 94 videlicet that is to say; Troilus Priam's son, betrayed in love by Cressida and killed by the spear of Achilles; "as true as Troilus" became a proverbial expression 97 Leander a prototype of dedicated love, who swam the Hellespont nightly to see his mistress, Hero of Sestos 102 found gave the verdict 126 Go to that's enough 134 commission license

girl goes before° the priest, and certainly a woman's thought runs before her actions.

ORLANDO So do all thoughts; they are winged.

ROSALIND Now tell me how long you would have her after you have possessed her. 140

ORLANDO For ever and a day.

ROSALIND Say "a day," without the "ever." No, no, Orlando. Men are April when they woo, December when they wed. Maids are May when they are maids, but the sky changes when they are wives. I will be 145 more jealous of thee than a Barbary cock-pigeon° over his hen, more clamorous than a parrot against° rain, more newfangled° than an ape, more giddy° in my desires than a monkey. I will weep for nothing, like Diana in the fountain,° and I will do that when 150 you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, and that when thou art inclined to sleep.

ORLANDO But will my Rosalind do so?

ROSALIND By my life, she will do as I do.

ORLANDO O, but she is wise. 155

ROSALIND Or else she could not have the wit to do this; the wiser, the waywarder. Make° the doors upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and 'twill out at the keyhole; stop that, 'twill fly with the smoke out at the chimney. 160

ORLANDO A man that had a wife with such a wit, he might say, "Wit, whither wilt?"°

ROSALIND Nay, you might keep that check° for it till you met your wife's wit going to your neighbor's bed. 165

ORLANDO And what wit could wit have to excuse that?

ROSALIND Marry, to say she came to seek you there. You shall never take her without her answer unless you take her without her tongue. O, that woman that 170 cannot make her fault her husband's occasion,° let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool.

ORLANDO For these two hours, Rosalind, I will leave thee. 175

ROSALIND Alas, dear love, I cannot lack thee two hours!

ORLANDO I must attend the duke at dinner. By two o'clock I will be with thee again.

ROSALIND Ay, go your ways, go your ways; I knew 180 what you would prove. My friends told me as much, and I thought no less. That flattering tongue of yours won me. 'Tis but one cast away,° and so, come death! Two o'clock is your hour?

ORLANDO Ay, sweet Rosalind. 185

ROSALIND By my troth, and in good earnest, and so God mend me, and by all pretty oaths that are not dangerous, if you break one jot of your promise or come one minute behind your hour, I will think you the most pathological° break-promise, and the most 190 hollow lover, and the most unworthy of her you call Rosalind, that may be chosen out of the gross° band of the unfaithful. Therefore beware my censure and keep your promise.

ORLANDO With no less religion° than if thou wert 195 indeed my Rosalind. So adieu.

ROSALIND Well, Time is the old justice that examines all such offenders, and let Time try. Adieu.

Exit [ORLANDO].

CELIA You have simply misused° our sex in your love-prate. We must have your doublet and hose 200 plucked over your head, and show the world what the bird hath done to her own nest.

ROSALIND O coz, coz, coz, my pretty little coz, that thou didst know how many fathom deep I am in love! But it cannot be sounded. My affection hath an un- 205 known bottom, like the Bay of Portugal.

CELIA Or rather, bottomless, that as fast as you pour affection in, it runs out.

ROSALIND No, that same wicked bastard of Venus° that was begot of thought,° conceived of spleen,° and 210 born of madness, that blind rascally boy that abuses every one's eyes because his own are out, let him be judge how deep I am in love. I'll tell thee, Aliena, I cannot be out of the sight of Orlando. I'll go find a shadow, and sigh till he come. 215

CELIA And I'll sleep. Exeunt.

Scene II. [The forest.]

Enter JAQUES; and LORDS, [like] foresters.

JAQUES Which is he that killed the deer?

LORD Sir, it was I.

JAQUES Let's present him to the duke like a Roman conqueror; and it would do well to set the deer's horns upon his head for a branch of victory. Have you 5 no song, forester, for this purpose?

ANOTHER LORD Yes, sir.

JAQUES Sing it. 'Tis no matter how it be in tune, so it make noise enough.

Music.

Song.

What shall he have that killed the deer? 10
His leather skin and horns to wear:
Then sing him home. The rest shall bear
This burden.°

Take thou no scorn° to wear the horn,
It was a crest ere thou wast born, 15

190 pathetical (1) pitiful (2) passionate (?) 192 gross large 195 religion faith 199 simply misused completely abused 209 bastard of Venus Cupid 210 thought despondency;
spleen sheer impulse

IV.ii.12-13 The rest . . . burden i.e., not only the forester who killed the deer but all men will wear the horns of cuckoldry (many editors read the line as a stage direction: the other foresters ["the rest"] are to join in the refrain ["burden"] after one forester has sung the first three lines of the song; if the Folio version—here followed—is correct, it is likely that all sing the song from the beginning) 14 Take . . . scorn do not be ashamed

136 goes before runs ahead (Rosalind has not waited for Celia to say, "Will you, Rosalind, have to husband") 146 Barbary cock-pigeon Barb pigeon ("Barbary" suggests jealousy) 147 against before 148 newfangled given to novelty; giddy changeable 150 like . . . fountain i.e., steadily (Diana was a popular subject for fountain statuary) 157 Make shut 162 Wit, whither wilt where are your senses 163 check rebuke 171 make . . . occasion turn defense of her own actions into an accusation of her husband's 183 one cast away one girl deserted

Thy father's father wore it,
 And thy father bore it.
 The horn, the horn, the lusty horn,
 Is not a thing to laugh to scorn.° Exeunt.

Scene III. [The forest.]

Enter ROSALIND and CELIA.

ROSALIND How say you now, is it not past two o'clock? And here much° Orlando!

CELIA I warrant you, with pure love and troubled brain, he hath ta'en his bow and arrows and is gone forth to sleep. 5

Enter SILVIUS.

Look who comes here.

SILVIUS

My errand is to you, fair youth.
 My gentle Phebe bid me give you this.
 I know not the contents, but, as I guess
 By the stern brow and waspish action 10
 Which she did use as she was writing of it,
 It bears an angry tenor. Pardon me;
 I am but as a guiltless messenger.

ROSALIND

Patience herself would startle at this letter
 And play the swaggerer. Bear this, bear all! 15
 She says I am not fair, that I lack manners;
 She calls me proud, and that she could not love me,
 Were man as rare as phoenix.° 'Od's my will!
 Her love is not the hare that I do hunt.
 Why writes she so to me? Well, shepherd, well, 20
 This is a letter of your own device.

SILVIUS

No, I protest, I know not the contents.
 Phebe did write it.

ROSALIND

Come, come, you are a fool,
 And turned into the extremity° of love.
 I saw her hand. She has a leathern hand, 25
 A freestone-colored° hand. I verily did think
 That her old gloves were on, but 'twas her hands.
 She has a housewife's hand; but that's no matter:
 I say she never did invent° this letter;
 This is a man's invention and his hand. 30

SILVIUS

Sure it is hers.

ROSALIND

Why, 'tis a boisterous and a cruel style,
 A style for challengers. Why, she defies me
 Like Turk to Christian. Woman's gentle brain
 Could not drop forth such giant-rude° invention, 35
 Such Ethiop words, blacker in their effect
 Than in their countenance. Will you hear the letter?

SILVIUS

So please you, for I never heard it yet;
 Yet heard too much of Phebe's cruelty.

ROSALIND

She Phebes me.° Mark how the tyrant writes. (Read.) 40
 "Art thou god, to shepherd turned,
 That a maiden's heart hath burned?"

Can a woman rail thus?

SILVIUS

Call you this railing?

ROSALIND (Read.)

"Why, thy godhead laid apart,° Warr'st thou with a woman's heart?" 45

Did you ever hear such railing?

"Whiles the eye of man did woo me,
 That could do no vengeance° to me."

Meaning me a beast.

"If the scorn of your bright eyne° 50

Have power to raise such love in mine,

Alack, in me what strange effect

Would they work in mild aspect!°

Whiles you chid me, I did love;

How then might your prayers move! 55

He that brings this love to thee

Little knows this love in me;

And by him seal up thy mind,°

Whether that thy youth and kind°

Will the faithful offer take 60

Of me and all that I can make,°

Or else by him my love deny,

And then I'll study how to die."

SILVIUS

Call you this chiding?

CELIA

Alas, poor shepherd!

ROSALIND Do you pity him? No, he deserves no pity. 65

Wilt thou love such a woman? What, to make thee an instrument,° and play false strains upon thee? Not to be endured! Well, go your way to her, for I see love hath made thee a tame snake,° and say this to her: that if she love me, I charge her to love thee; if she will not, 70 I will never have her unless thou entreat for her. If you be a true lover, hence, and not a word; for here comes more company. Exit SILVIUS.

Enter OLIVER.

OLIVER

Good morrow, fair ones. Pray you, if you know,
 Where in the purlieu° of this forest stands 75
 A sheepcote, fenced about with olive trees?

CELIA

West of this place, down in the neighbor bottom.°
 The rank of osiers° by the murmuring stream
 Left on your right hand brings you to the place.
 But at this hour the house doth keep itself; 80
 There's none within.

OLIVER

If that an eye may profit by a tongue,
 Then should I know you by description,
 Such garments and such years: "The boy is fair,

19 laugh to scorn ridicule

IV.iii.2 much i.e., not much 18 phoenix a legendary bird, of which there was only one in the world at any time 24 turned . . . extremity became the very essence 26 freestone-colored yellowish-brown 29 invent compose 35 giant-rude incredibly rude

40 She Phebes me She writes with her customary disdain 44 thy . . . apart having assumed human form 48 vengeance harm 50 eyne eyes 53 aspect (1) look (2) planetary influence 58 seal . . . mind tell your feelings in a letter 59 youth and kind youthful nature 61 make give 66-67 make . . . instrument use you 69 tame snake poor worm 75 purlieu borders 77 neighbor bottom nearby valley 78 rank of osiers row of willows

Of female favor,^o and bestows^o himself
Like a ripe sister;^o the woman low,^o
And browner than her brother." Are not you
The owner of the house I did enquire for?

CELIA

It is no boast, being asked, to say we are.

OLIVER

Orlando doth commend him to you both,
And to that you he calls his Rosalind
He sends this bloody napkin.^o Are you he?

ROSALIND

I am. What must we understand by this?

OLIVER

Some of my shame, if you will know of me
What man I am, and how and why and where
This handkercher was stained.

CELIA

I pray you tell it.

OLIVER

When last the young Orlando parted from you,
He left a promise to return again
Within an hour; and pacing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy,^o
Lo, what befell. He threw his eye aside,
And mark what object did present itself:
Under an old oak, whose boughs were mossed with age
And high top bald with dry antiquity,
A wretched ragged man, o'ergrown with hair,
Lay sleeping on his back; about his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreathed itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approached
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlinked itself
And with indented^o glides did slip away
Into a bush, under which bush's shade
A lioness, with udders all drawn dry,
Lay couching,^o head on ground, with catlike watch
When that the sleeping man should stir; for 'tis
The royal disposition of that beast
To prey on nothing that doth seem as dead.
This seen, Orlando did approach the man
And found it was his brother, his elder brother.

CELIA

O, I have heard him speak of that same brother,
And he did render^o him the most unnatural
That lived amongst men.

OLIVER

And well he might so do,

For well I know he was unnatural.

ROSALIND

But, to Orlando: did he leave him there,
Food to the sucked and hungry lioness?

OLIVER

Twice did he turn his back and purposed so;
But kindness,^o nobler ever than revenge,
And nature, stronger than his just occasion,^o
Made him give battle to the lioness,
Who quickly fell before him; in which hurtling
From miserable slumber I awaked.

85

CELIA

Are you his brother?

ROSALIND

Was't you he rescued?

CELIA

Was't you that did so oft contrive^o to kill him?

OLIVER

'Twas I. But 'tis not I. I do not shame

90

To tell you what I was, since my conversion
So sweetly tastes, being the thing I am.

135

ROSALIND

But, for the bloody napkin?

OLIVER

By and by.^o

When from the first to last, betwixt us two,
Tears our recountments^o had most kindly bathed,

95

As how I came into that desert place:

140

In brief, he led me to the gentle duke,

Who gave me fresh array and entertainment,^o

Committing me unto my brother's love,

Who led me instantly unto his cave,

There stripped himself, and here upon his arm

145

The lioness had torn some flesh away,

100

Which all this while had bled; and now he fainted,

And cried, in fainting, upon Rosalind.

Brief, I recovered^o him, bound up his wound;

And after some small space, being strong at heart,

150

He sent me hither, stranger as I am,

105

To tell this story, that you might excuse

His broken promise, and to give this napkin,

Dyed in his blood, unto the shepherd youth

That he in sport doth call his Rosalind.

155

110

[ROSALIND swoons.]

CELIA

Why, how now, Ganymede, sweet Ganymede!

OLIVER

Many will swoon when they do look on blood.

115

CELIA

There is more in it. Cousin Ganymede!

OLIVER

Look, he recovers.

ROSALIND

I would I were at home.

120

CELIA

We'll lead you thither.

160

I pray you, will you take him by the arm?

OLIVER

Be of good cheer, youth. You a man! You lack a man's heart.

ROSALIND

I do so, I confess it. Ah, sirrah, a body would think this was well counterfeited.^o I pray you tell your brother how well I counterfeited. Heigh-ho!

165

125

OLIVER

This was not counterfeit. There is too great testimony in your complexion that it was a passion of earnest.^o

ROSALIND

Counterfeit, I assure you.

170

OLIVER

Well then, take a good heart and counterfeit to be a man.

130

ROSALIND

So I do; but, i' faith, I should have been a woman by right.

CELIA

Come, you look paler and paler. Pray you draw homewards. Good sir, go with us.

175

85 favor features; bestows carries 86 ripe sister grown-up woman (some editors emend "sister" to "forester"); low short 92 napkin handkerchief 100 fancy love 111 indented serpentine 114 couching crouching 121 render describe 127 kindness familial affection 128 occasion opportunity

133 contrive plot 137 By and by soon 139 recountments recital (of our adventures since we last met) 142 entertainment hospitality 149 recovered revived 165 counterfeited pretended 168-69 passion of earnest real emotion

OLIVER

That will I, for I must bear answer back
How you excuse my brother, Rosalind.

ROSALIND I shall devise something. But I pray you commend my counterfeiting to him. Will you go? 180
Exeunt.

A C T V

Scene I. [The forest.]

Enter [TOUCHSTONE the] clown and AUDREY.

TOUCHSTONE We shall find a time, Audrey. Patience, gentle Audrey.

AUDREY Faith, the priest was good enough, for all the old gentleman's saying.

TOUCHSTONE A most wicked Sir Oliver, Audrey, a 5 most vile Mar-text. But, Audrey, there is a youth here in the forest lays claim to you.

AUDREY Ay, I know who 'tis. He hath no interest in me in the world. Here comes the man you mean.

Enter WILLIAM.

TOUCHSTONE It is meat and drink to me to see a 10 clown;° by my troth, we that have good wits have much to answer for. We shall be flouting;° we cannot hold.°

WILLIAM Good ev'n, Audrey.

AUDREY God ye° good ev'n, William. 15

WILLIAM And good ev'n to you, sir.

TOUCHSTONE Good ev'n, gentle friend. Cover thy head,° cover thy head. Nay, prithee be covered. How old are you, friend?

WILLIAM Five-and-twenty, sir. 20

TOUCHSTONE A ripe° age. Is thy name William?

WILLIAM William, sir.

TOUCHSTONE A fair name. Wast born i' th' forest
here?

WILLIAM Ay, sir, I thank God. 25

TOUCHSTONE "Thank God." A good answer. Art rich?

WILLIAM Faith, sir, so so.

TOUCHSTONE "So so" is good, very good, very excellent good; and yet it is not, it is but so so. Art 30 thou wise?

WILLIAM Ay, sir, I have a pretty wit.

TOUCHSTONE Why, thou say'st well. I do now remember a saying, "The fool doth think he is wise, but the wise man knows himself to be a fool." The 35 heathen philosopher, when he had a desire to eat a grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth, meaning thereby that grapes were made to eat and lips to open. You do love this maid?

WILLIAM I do, sir. 40

TOUCHSTONE Give me your hand. Art thou learned?

WILLIAM No, sir.

TOUCHSTONE Then learn this of me: to have is to have; for it is a figure° in rhetoric that drink, being poured out of a cup into a glass, by filling the one doth 45 empty the other; for all your writers do consent that ipse° is he. Now, you are not ipse, for I am he.

WILLIAM Which he, sir?

TOUCHSTONE He, sir, that must marry this woman.
Therefore, you clown, abandon—which is in the 50 vulgar, leave—the society—which in the boorish is, company—of this female—which in the common is, woman. Which together is, abandon the society of this female, or, clown, thou perishest; or, to thy better understanding, diest; or to wit, I kill thee, make thee 55 away, translate thy life into death, thy liberty into bondage. I will deal in poison with thee, or in bastinado,° or in steel; I will bandy with thee in faction;° I will o'errun thee with policy;° I will kill thee a hundred and fifty ways. Therefore tremble and depart. 60

AUDREY Do, good William.

WILLIAM God rest you merry, sir. Exit.

Enter CORIN.

CORIN Our master and mistress seeks you. Come away, away!

TOUCHSTONE Trip, Audrey, trip, Audrey. I attend,° 65
I attend. Exeunt.

Scene II. [The forest.]

Enter ORLANDO and OLIVER.

ORLANDO Is't possible that on so little acquaintance you should like her? That but seeing, you should love her? And loving, woo? And wooing, she should grant?
And will you persevere to enjoy her?

OLIVER Neither call the giddiness° of it in question, 5 the poverty of her, the small acquaintance, my sudden wooing, nor her sudden consenting; but say with me,
I love Aliena; say with her that she loves me; consent with both that we may enjoy each other. It shall be to your good; for my father's house, and all the revenue 10 that was old Sir Rowland's, will I estate° upon you, and here live and die a shepherd.

Enter ROSALIND.

ORLANDO You have my consent. Let your wedding be tomorrow: thither will I invite the duke and all's contented followers. Go you and prepare Aliena; for 15 look you, here comes my Rosalind.

ROSALIND God save you, brother.

OLIVER And you, fair sister. [Exit.]

ROSALIND O my dear Orlando, how it grieves me to see thee wear thy heart in a scarf!° 20

ORLANDO It is my arm.

ROSALIND I thought thy heart had been wounded with the claws of a lion.

ORLANDO Wounded it is, but with the eyes of a lady.

ROSALIND Did your brother tell you how I 25

V.i.ii clown yokel 12 flouting mocking 13 hold keep from mocking 15 God ye God give you 17-18 Cover thy head William has removed his hat 21 ripe fine

44 figure figure of speech 47 ipse he himself (Latin) 57-58 bastinado cudgeling 58 bandy . . . faction argue with you as do politicians 59 o'errun . . . policy overwhelm you with craft 65 attend come
V.ii.5 giddiness suddenness 11 estate settle 20 scarf sling counterfeited to sound° when he showed me your handkercher?

ORLANDO Ay, and greater wonders than that.

ROSALIND O, I know where you are! Nay, 'tis true. There was never anything so sudden but the fight of 30 two rams and Caesar's thrasonical° drag of "I came, saw, and overcame"; for your brother and my sister no sooner met but they looked; no sooner looked but they loved; no sooner loved but they sighed; no sooner sighed but they asked one another the reason; 35 no sooner knew the reason but they sought the remedy: and in these degrees° have they made a pair of stairs to marriage, which they will climb incontinent, or else be incontinent° before marriage: they are in the very wrath of love, and they will together; clubs 40 cannot part them.

ORLANDO They shall be married tomorrow, and I will bid the duke to the nuptial. But, O, how bitter a thing it is to look into happiness through another man's eyes! By so much the more shall I tomorrow be 45 at the height of heart-heaviness, by how much I shall think my brother happy in having what he wishes for.

ROSALIND Why then, tomorrow I cannot serve your turn for Rosalind?

ORLANDO I can live no longer by thinking. 50

ROSALIND I will weary you then no longer with idle talking. Know of me then, for now I speak to some purpose, that I know you are a gentleman of good conceit.° I speak not this that you should bear a good opinion of my knowledge, insomuch I say I know 55 you are; neither do I labor for a greater esteem than may in some little measure draw a belief from you, to do yourself good, and not to grace me.° Believe then, if you please, that I can do strange things. I have, since I was three year old, conversed° with a magician, 60 most profound in his art and yet not damnable.° If you do love Rosalind so near the heart as your gesture° cries it out, when your brother marries Aliena shall you marry her. I know into what straits of fortune she is driven; and it is not impossible to me, 65 if it appear not inconvenient° to you, to set her before your eyes tomorrow, human as she is,° and without any danger.

ORLANDO Speak'st thou in sober meanings?

ROSALIND By my life, I do, which I tender dearly,° 70 though I say I am a magician.° Therefore put you in your best array, bid your friends; for if you will be married tomorrow, you shall; and to Rosalind, if you will.

Enter SILVIUS and PHEBE.

Look, here comes a lover of mine and a lover of hers. 75

PHEBE

Youth, you have done me much ungentleness To show the letter that I writ to you.

26 sound swoon 31 thrasonical boastful (after the braggart soldier Thraso in Terence's comedy Eunuchus) 37 degrees a pun on the literal meaning, "steps" 38-39 incontinent . . . incontinent with all haste . . . unchaste 54 conceit understanding 58 to grace me to do credit to myself 60 conversed spent time 61 not damnable because he practices white, not black, magic 63 gesture conduct 66 inconvenient unfitting 67 human . . . is Rosalind herself, not a spirit 70 tender dearly hold precious 71 though . . . magician a magician could be punished with death

ROSALIND

I care not if I have. It is my study° To seem spiteful° and ungentle to you. You are there followed by a faithful shepherd: 80 Look upon him, love him; he worships you.

PHEBE

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.

SILVIUS

It is to be all made of sighs and tears; And so am I for Phebe.

PHEBE

And I for Ganymede. 85

ORLANDO

And I for Rosalind.

ROSALIND

And I for no woman.

SILVIUS

It is to be all made of faith and service; And so am I for Phebe.

PHEBE

And I for Ganymede. 90

ORLANDO

And I for Rosalind.

ROSALIND

And I for no woman.

SILVIUS

It is to be all made of fantasy,° All made of passion, and all made of wishes, All adoration, duty, and observance,° 95 All humbleness, all patience, and impatience, All purity, all trial, all observance;° And so am I for Phebe.

PHEBE

And so am I for Ganymede.

ORLANDO

And so am I for Rosalind. 100

ROSALIND

And so am I for no woman.

PHEBE

If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

SILVIUS

If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

ORLANDO

If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

ROSALIND Why do you speak too,° "Why blame 105 you me to love you?"

ORLANDO

To her that is not here, nor doth not hear.

ROSALIND Pray you, no more of this; 'tis like the howling of Irish wolves against the moon. [To SILVIUS.] I will help you if I can. [To PHEBE.] I 110 would love you if I could. Tomorrow meet me all together. [To PHEBE.] I will marry you if ever I marry woman, and I'll be married tomorrow. [To ORLANDO.] I will satisfy you if ever I satisfied man, and you shall be married tomorrow. [To SILVIUS.] I will content 115 you if what pleases you contents you, and you shall be married tomorrow. [To ORLANDO.] As you love Rosalind, meet. [To SILVIUS.] As you love Phebe, 78 study intention 79 spiteful scornful 93 fantasy fancy 95 observance devoted attention 97 observance some editors emend to "obedience" 105 Why . . . too some editors emend to "Who do you speak to" meet. And as I love no woman, I'll meet. So fare you well. I have left you commands.

120

SILVIUS I'll not fail if I live.

PHEBE Nor I.

ORLANDO Nor I.

Exeunt.

Scene III. [The forest.]

Enter [TOUCHSTONE the] clown and AUDREY.

TOUCHSTONE Tomorrow is the joyful day, Audrey; tomorrow will we be married.

AUDREY I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire to desire to be a woman of the world.° Here come two of the banished duke's pages. 5

Enter two PAGES.

FIRST PAGE Well met, honest° gentleman.

TOUCHSTONE By my troth, well met. Come, sit, sit, and a song!

SECOND PAGE We are for you. Sit i' th' middle.

FIRST PAGE Shall we clap into't roundly,° without 10
hawking or spitting or saying we are hoarse, which are the only° prologues to a bad voice?

SECOND PAGE I' faith, i' faith! and both in a tune,° like two gypsies on a horse.

Song.

It was a lover and his lass,

15

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
That o'er the green cornfield° did pass

In springtime, the only pretty ringtime,°
When birds do sing, hey ding a ding, ding.
Sweet lovers love the spring.

20

Between the acres° of the rye,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
These pretty country folks would lie
In springtime, &c.

This carol they began that hour,

25

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
How that a life was but a flower
In springtime, &c.

And therefore take° the present time,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
For love is crownèd with the prime°
In springtime, &c.

30

TOUCHSTONE Truly, young gentlemen, though there was no great matter in the ditty,° yet the note° was very untuneable.

35

FIRST PAGE You are deceived, sir. We kept time, we lost not our time.

TOUCHSTONE By my troth, yes; I count it but time lost to hear such a foolish song. God b' wi' you, and God mend your voices. Come, Audrey. Exeunt. 40

V.iii.4-5 a woman . . . world (1) married (2) fashionable 6 honest honorable 10 clap into't roundly begin directly 12 the only merely the 13 in a tune in unison 17 cornfield wheatfield 18 ringtime the time for giving marriage rings 21 Between the acres in the strips of unploughed land 29 take seize 31 prime spring 34 ditty words of the song; note melody

Scene IV. [The forest.]

Enter DUKE SENIOR, AMIENS, JAQUES, ORLANDO, OLIVER, CELIA.

DUKE SENIOR

Dost thou believe, Orlando, that the boy
Can do all this that he hath promised?

ORLANDO

I sometimes do believe, and sometimes do not,
As those that fear they hope,° and know they fear.

Enter ROSALIND, SILVIUS, and PHEBE.

ROSALIND

Patience once more, whiles our compact is urged.° 5
You say, if I bring in your Rosalind,
You will bestow her on Orlando here?

DUKE SENIOR

That would I, had I kingdoms to give with her.

ROSALIND

And you say you will have her when I bring her?

ORLANDO

That would I, were I of all kingdoms king. 10

ROSALIND

You say you'll marry me, if I be willing?

PHEBE

That will I, should I die the hour after.

ROSALIND

But if you do refuse to marry me,
You'll give yourself to this most faithful shepherd?

PHEBE

So is the bargain. 15

ROSALIND

You say that you'll have Phebe, if she will?

SILVIUS

Though to have her and death were both one thing.

ROSALIND

I have promised to make all this matter even.°
Keep you your word, O duke, to give your daughter;
You yours, Orlando, to receive his daughter; 20
Keep you your word, Phebe, that you'll marry me,
Or else, refusing me, to wed this shepherd;
Keep your word, Silvius, that you'll marry her
If she refuse me; and from hence I go,
To make these doubts all even. 25

Exit ROSALIND and CELIA.

DUKE SENIOR

I do remember in this shepherd boy
Some lively° touches of my daughter's favor.°

ORLANDO

My lord, the first time that I ever saw him
Methought he was a brother to your daughter. 30
But, my good lord, this boy is forest-born,
And hath been tutored in the rudiments
Of many desperate° studies by his uncle,
Whom he reports to be a great magician,
Obscurèd° in the circle of this forest.

Enter [TOUCHSTONE the] clown and AUDREY.

V.iv.4 hope hope in vain 5 compact is urged agreement is restated 18 make . . . even straighten out everything 27 lively living; favor features 32 desperate dangerous 34
Obscurèd hidden

JAQUES There is, sure, another flood toward,^o and 35 these couples are coming to the ark.^o Here comes a pair of very strange beasts, which in all tongues are called fools.

TOUCHSTONE Salutation and greeting to you all!

JAQUES Good my lord, bid him welcome. This is the 40 motley-minded gentleman that I have so often met in the forest. He hath been a courtier, he swears.

TOUCHSTONE If any man doubt that, let him put me to my purgation.^o I have trod a measure;^o I have flattered a lady; I have been politic^o with my friend, 45 smooth with mine enemy; I have undone^o three tailors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.^o

JAQUES And how was that ta'en up?^o

TOUCHSTONE Faith, we met, and found the quarrel 50 was upon the seventh cause.

JAQUES How seventh cause? Good my lord, like this fellow.

DUKE SENIOR I like him very well.

TOUCHSTONE God 'ield^o you, sir; I desire you of the 55 like.^o I press in here, sir, amongst the rest of the country copulatives,^o to swear and to forswear, according as marriage binds and blood breaks.^o A poor virgin, sir, an ill-favored thing, sir, but mine own; a poor humor^o of mine, sir, to take that that no man else 60 will. Rich honesty^o dwells like a miser, sir, in a poor house, as your pearl in your foul oyster.

DUKE SENIOR By my faith, he is very swift and sententious.^o

TOUCHSTONE According to the fool's bolt,^o sir, and 65
such dulcet diseases.^o

JAQUES But, for the seventh cause. How did you find the quarrel on the seventh cause?

TOUCHSTONE Upon a lie seven times removed—bear your body more seeming,^o Audrey—as thus, sir. 70
I did dislike the cut of a certain courtier's beard. He sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was: this is called the Retort Courteous.
If I sent him word again it was not well cut, he would send me word he cut it to please himself: this is called 75 the Quip Modest.^o If again, it was not well cut, he disabled^o my judgment: this is called the Reply
Churlish. If again, it was not well cut, he would answer
I spake not true: this is called the Reproof Valiant. If again, it was not well cut, he would say I lie: this is 80 called the Countercheck^o Quarrelsome: and so to the Lie Circumstantial^o and the Lie Direct.

JAQUES And how oft did you say his beard was not well cut?

TOUCHSTONE I durst go no further than the Lie 85

35 toward approaching 36 couples . . . ark cf. Genesis 7:2, "and of beasts that are not clean by two, the male and his female" 43-44 put . . . purgation test me 44 measure stately dance 45 politic crafty 46 undone ruined (by not paying his bills) 47-48 like . . . one almost fought over one 49 ta'en up settled 55 God 'ield God reward 56-57 I . . . like may I return the compliment 57 copulatives couples soon to be wed 58 blood breaks sexual interest wanes 60 humor whim 61 honesty virtue 63-64 swift and sententious quick-witted and pithy 65 According . . .
bolt cf. the proverb "A fool's bolt (arrow) is soon shot" 66 dulcet diseases pleasing weaknesses 70 seeming becomingly 76 Modest moderate 77 disabled did not value 81
Countercheck contradiction 82 Circumstantial indirect

Circumstantial, nor he durst not give me the Lie
Direct; and so we measured swords^o and parted.

JAQUES Can you nominate^o in order now the degrees of the lie?

TOUCHSTONE O sir, we quarrel in print, by the 90 book,^o as you have books for good manners. I will name you the degrees. The first, the Retort Courteous;
the second, the Quip Modest; the third, the Reply Churlish; the fourth, the Reproof Valiant; the fifth, the Countercheck Quarrelsome; the sixth, the Lie with 95 Circumstance; the seventh, the Lie Direct. All these you may avoid but the Lie Direct, and you may avoid that too, with an If. I knew when seven justices could not take up^o a quarrel, but when the parties were met themselves, one of them thought but of an If: as, "If 100 you said so, then I said so"; and they shook hands and swore brothers. Your If is the only peacemaker. Much virtue in If.

JAQUES Is not this a rare fellow, my lord? He's as good at anything, and yet a fool. 105

DUKE SENIOR He uses his folly like a stalking horse,^o and under the presentation^o of that he shoots his wit.

Enter HYMEN,^o ROSALIND, and CELIA. Still^o music.

HYMEN

Then is there mirth in heaven
When earthly things made even^o

Atone together.^o 110

Good duke, receive thy daughter;
Hymen from heaven brought her,

Yea, brought her hither,

That thou mightst join her hand with his
Whose heart within his bosom is. 115

ROSALIND [To DUKE.]

To you I give myself, for I am yours.

[To ORLANDO.]

To you I give myself, for I am yours.

DUKE SENIOR

If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.

ORLANDO

If there be truth in sight, you are my Rosalind.

PHEBE

If sight and shape be true,

Why then, my love adieu! 120

ROSALIND [To DUKE.]

I'll have no father, if you be not he.

[To ORLANDO.]

I'll have no husband, if you be not he.

[To PHEBE.]

Nor ne'er wed woman, if you be not she.

HYMEN Peace ho! I bar confusion: 125

'Tis I must make conclusion

Of these most strange events.

87 measured swords swords were measured before a duel
88 nominate name 90-91 by the book according to the rules 99 take up settle 106 stalking horse any object under cover of which a hunter pursues his game 107 presentation protection 107 s.d. Hymen god of marriage; Still soft 109 made even reconciled 110 Atone together are set at one

Here's eight that must take hands
To join in Hymen's bands,
If truth holds true contents.°

130

[To ORLANDO and ROSALIND.]

You and you no cross° shall part.

[To OLIVER and CELIA.]

You and you are heart in heart.

[To PHEBE.]

You to his love must accord,°
Or have a woman to your lord.

[To TOUCHSTONE and AUDREY.]

You and you are sure together°
As the winter to foul weather.

135

[To all.]

Whiles a wedlock hymn we sing,
Feed yourselves with questioning,
That reason wonder may diminish
How thus we met, and these things finish.

140

Song.

Wedding is great Juno's crown,
O blessed bond of board and bed!
'Tis Hymen peoples every town;
High° wedlock then be honorèd.
Honor, high honor, and renown
To Hymen, god of every town!

145

DUKE SENIOR

O my dear niece, welcome thou art to me,
Even daughter,° welcome, in no less degree!

PHEBE [To SILVIUS.]

I will not eat my word, now thou art mine;
Thy faith my fancy to thee doth combine.°

150

Enter SECOND BROTHER [Jaques de Boys].

SECOND BROTHER

Let me have audience for a word or two.
I am the second son of old Sir Rowland
That bring these tidings to this fair assembly.
Duke Frederick hearing how that every day
Men of great worth resorted to this forest,
Addressed a mighty power,° which were on foot
In his own conduct,° purposely to take
His brother here and put him to the sword;
And to the skirts of this wild wood he came,
Where, meeting with an old religious man,°
After some question° with him, was converted
Both from his enterprise and from the world,
His crown bequeathing to his banished brother,
And all their lands restored to them again
That were with him exiled. This to be true
I do engage° my life.

160

DUKE SENIOR Welcome, young man.
Thou offer'st fairly° to thy brothers' wedding:

130 If . . . contents if the truth is true 131 cross quarrel
133 accord agree 135 sure together securely bound 144 High solemn 148 Even daughter even as a daughter 150 combine unite 156 Addressed . . . power prepared a mighty army 157 conduct leadership 160 old religious man a hermit (?) 161 question talk 166 engage pledge 167 offer'st fairly bring a good gift

To one, his lands withheld; and to the other,
A land itself as large, a potent° dukedom.
First, in this forest let us do those ends°
That here were well begun and well begot;
And after, every° of this happy number
That have endured shrewd° days and nights with us
Shall share the good of our returnèd fortune,
According to the measure° of their states.
Meantime forget this new-fall'n° dignity
And fall into our rustic revelry.
Play, music, and you brides and bridegrooms all,
With measure heaped in joy, to th' measures° fall.

170

175

JAQUES

Sir, by your patience. If I heard you rightly,
The duke hath put on a religious life

180

And thrown into neglect the pompous court.°

SECOND BROTHER He hath.

JAQUES

To him will I. Out of these convertites°
There is much matter to be heard and learned.

185

[To DUKE.]

You to your former honor I bequeath;
Your patience and your virtue well deserves it.

[To ORLANDO.]

You to a love that your true faith doth merit;

[To OLIVER.]

You to your land and love and great allies;

[To SILVIUS.]

You to a long and well-deservèd bed;

190

[To TOUCHSTONE.]

And you to wrangling, for thy loving voyage
Is but for two months victualled. So, to your pleasures:
I am for other than for dancing measures.

DUKE SENIOR Stay, Jaques, stay.

JAQUES

To see no pastime I. What you would have I'll stay to know at your abandoned cave.

195

Exit.

DUKE SENIOR

Proceed, proceed. We will begin these rites,
As we do trust they'll end, in true delights.

155

Exit [after the dance].

[E P I L O G U E]

ROSALIND It is not the fashion to see the lady the epilogue, but it is no more unhandsome° than to see the lord the prologue. If it be true that good wine needs no bush,° 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue;
yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good

165

169 potent powerful 170 do those ends complete those purposes 172 every each one 173 shrewd hard 175 measure rank 176 new-fall'n newly acquired 179 measures dance steps 182 thrown . . . court given up the ceremonious life of the court 184 convertites converts
Epi.2 unhandsome unbecoming 4 no bush no advertisement
(in Shakespeare's time vintners used an ivy bush as a sign) plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. What a case am I in then, that am neither a good epilogue, nor cannot insinuate with you^o in the behalf of a good play! I am not furnished^o like a beggar; therefore to beg will not become me. My way is to ¹⁰ conjure^o you, and I'll begin with the women. I charge you, O women, for the love you bear to men, to like as much of this play as please you; and I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women—as I perceive

8 insinuate with you slyly get your approval 9 furnished dressed 11 conjure (1) solemnly entreat (2) charm (by magic)

by your simpering none of you hates them—that ¹⁵ between you and the women the play may please. If I were a woman,^o I would kiss as many of you as had beards that pleased me, complexions that liked^o me, and breaths that I defied^o not; and I am sure, as many as have good beards, or good faces, or sweet breaths, ²⁰ will, for my kind offer, when I make curtsy, bid me farewell.^o

Exit.

16-17 If . . . woman Rosalind, of course, was played by a boy 18 liked pleased 19 defied disliked 21-22 bid me farewell applaud

TWELFTH NIGHT, OR, WHAT YOU WILL

EDITED BY HERSCHEL BAKER

Introduction

Twelfth Night is such a genial, charming play that for a certain kind of reader its charm is self-defeating. Johnson, for example, admired its elegance and ease and its exquisite humor, and he conceded that it might be diverting on the stage; but because the principal action "wants credibility" and "exhibits no just picture of life," he remarked with disapproval, it cannot be instructive or tell us anything important. In short, it fails the test of relevance.

This great critic's cold opinion of the most profound of Shakespeare's so-called "golden comedies" presents us with a hard decision: either to dismiss Twelfth Night as false and fatuous or to accept it as a version of romance—deft and entertaining, to be sure, but remote from our concerns and exempt from any common-sense appraisal. As usual, Johnson, a man not given to unconsidered judgments, seems to argue from the facts. For one thing, what we know or may infer about the circumstances of its first production would indicate that Twelfth Night was conceived and written as a kind of bagatelle. If, as many scholars think, it was commissioned for performance by the fledgling lawyers of the Middle Temple at the romp that crowned their Christmas celebration, the play was tailored to an annual frolic when duty and convention were ignored, and when, in a saturnalian Feast of Misrule, mirth became the order of the day. Even the subtitle—What You Will—repudiates, or so it seems, the drab and probable for the promise of the unexpected.¹ Life, as most men come to know it, is a frayed and tattered thing of unexpressed desires and disappointed hopes, and its tumults rarely find repose. In the world depicted by Twelfth Night, however, it would seem that perturbation leads to calm and all suspensions are resolved, so that by happy if implausible coincidence afflicted virtue is rewarded, folly is exposed, and error yields to knowledge.

The ingredients of this consoling fiction are the staple items of romance: shipwreck, alienation, and wandering in a remote realm where a pair of high-born lovers melodiously indulge a set of attitudes untested by experience, where a maiden in distress by luck and pluck gets everything she wants, and where the pretensions of an "affectioned ass" are demolished by a pack of gay tormentors. The main plot, articulated by the ancient devices of disguise and mistaken identity, presents a love story (or a brace of interlocking love stories) that leads through skillful convolutions to a final recognition scene; and the subplot—a kind of antimasque—involves the "lighter people" in a complicated jest. Finally, all these knotted strands of action are conducted in a language so precise that form and function seem to coincide, with Orsino's artful "fancy" and Viola's deep but muted love as charmingly conveyed as Sir Toby's burly humor and the wit and music of the Clown.

Indeed, this play, which starts and ends with music, and which is studded with so many lovely songs, might be said to approach the condition of that art where form and style are everything, and where there is, or should be, no appeal to values and criteria not inherent in the work itself. In more severely imitative kinds of art, the reverse, of course, is true. Because Holbein's portrait of Sir Thomas More or Richardson's Clarissa—which, incidentally, was one of Johnson's favorite books—seek in different, complicated ways to represent contemporary experience with fidelity, at least a part of our response to them is based on what we know of life, and therefore we require that they express some aspect of the truth about the things they represent. On the other hand, a Mozart serenade stands for nothing but itself; it has a logic of its own, and it creates an independent frame of reference that baffles any moral or utilitarian test. Twelfth Night is not this kind of work, of course, but it is such a triumph of artifice and style, and shows such mastery of convention, that some readers might regard it as a self-subsistent artifact, or, at any rate, as a work invulnerable to the expectations and probabilities derived from everyday experience. Beguiled by its mazy plot and music, they would not even dare to ask if it is "true." For them, therefore, Johnson's test of relevance would appear to be irrelevant, and his common-sense, adverse opinion merely an impertinence.

¹ Despite Leslie Hotson's interesting attempt in The First Night of Twelfth Night (1954) to show that the play was commissioned for performance before the Queen and court at Whitehall on Twelfth Night (January 6) in 1601 to celebrate the splendid visit of Virginio Orsini, Duke of Bracciano, most scholars still accept an entry of February 2, 1602, in the diary of John Manningham, a barrister of the Middle Temple, as pointing to its first production in the Middle Temple hall on Twelfth Night of that year: "At our feast we had a play called Twelve Night, or What You Will, much like the Comedy of Errors or Menechmi in Plautus, but most like and near to that in Italian called Inganni. A good practice in it to make the steward believe his Lady widow was in love with him, by counterfeiting a letter as from his Lady in general terms, telling him what she liked best in him, and prescribing his gesture in smiling, his apparel, etc., and then when he came to practice making him believe they took him to be mad." On Manningham's clever guess about Nicolò Secchi's Gl'Inganni, see A Note on the Source, pp. 878-79.

To regard Twelfth Night either as escapist folderol or adroit but meaningless romance is, however, to forget its function as a play. But since it is a play, and since a play, as Aristotle said, is the imitation of an action, it must meet the test of relevance. This test can never be evaded in a literary production, because no true work of literature ignores what Johnson means by "life," and no honest writer, however much concerned with form and style, neglects his only proper subject, which is the human situation. It is not that we require an easy calculus of triumph for the good and disaster for the bad, but that a play reveal—or permit us to infer—a necessary connection between what happens to a man and the kind of man he is. When this requirement is evaded, as it seems to be evaded, for example, in the last act of Measure for Measure, we are baffled and uneasy because we feel a lack of moral sequence. Conversely, when the conduct of the action, however painful, satisfies our moral expectations, we are forced to yield assent. Thus, although the conclusion of King Lear is as harrowing as anything in drama, we accept it, in our anguish, because we recognize its dreadful logic.

We do not look for dreadful logic in Twelfth Night, of course, but we do expect to find a real connection between its artful, entertaining fiction and those aspects of experience that it seeks to represent. We expect to find some reference, even if oblique and stylized, to the world which each of us inhabits—a refinement of our own perceptions, an enlargement of our knowledge or compassion, a demonstration of how men and women act, and why. Otherwise art deteriorates to mere technique, and literature becomes gesticulation.

What, then, is there in Twelfth Night to save it from this danger? For one thing, there is a shaping theme that enables us to view the conventions of romance as a paradigm of our own behavior; for another, there is, in the subplot, such skillful use of sharp and even topical detail in depicting various kinds of folly that the effect is almost photographic. These two features of the work remove it from the realm of pure romance and attach it to our own experience. They remind us that despite its old-fashioned apparatus, its lyric grace, and what Johnson called its lack of "credibility," Twelfth Night should not be thought of as a piece of music or as an empty virtuoso exercise in style, but as a play that we may verify by what we know of life.

Twelfth Night meets this test with ease, for it concerns a basic human problem; or, if that sounds too severe for such a gay and sprightly work of art, it records and comments on a mode of human action that all men everywhere exhibit. This might be defined as our native bent for self-deception, or, conversely, as our difficulty in achieving self-awareness. Here the theme is given comic statement and presented as romance, but it has a universal application. Is it possible, Twelfth Night makes us wonder, for us to know the truth about ourselves? And even if we gain such knowledge, Shakespeare asks in other, darker plays, can such knowledge be endured? We see these questions posed when Richard II, stripped of crown and power and even of his misconceptions, sits in Pomfret Castle and explores his final, humbling recognition of himself; when Henry V, on the eve of Agincourt, expounds the wide distinction between the common notion of a king and the kingly burden that he bears; when Othello is compelled to face the horror of the deed he did "in honor"; when Lear tears off his clothing to reveal the "unaccommodated man." Such analogues in plays so different from Twelfth Night suggest how often, and in what varied contexts, Shakespeare used the theme. For him—as for Sophocles and Pirandello—to show one's growth toward self-awareness is almost coextensive with the art of drama.

This theme, so massive and protean, receives consummate comic statement in Twelfth Night. Here Shakespeare has to trim it not merely to the comic form (which requires a complex plot directed toward a happy ending) but also, presumably, to the interests of a special clientele—the debonair young lawyers at their revels in the Middle Temple. Almost inevitably, therefore, he writes a play of love: not love as the annihilating passion shared by Romeo and Juliet or the febrile lust of Troilus, but as a mode of social intercourse that works its way through opposition to eventual satisfaction. He had done this sort of thing before, of course, in such plays as The Two Gentlemen of Verona and As You Like It; but in Twelfth Night he makes a signal innovation, for here the lovers' triumph is delayed not by the customary impediments of parental disapproval or insolvency or politics, but by their own deceptions and self-deceptions. To secure this innovation he manipulates the old conventions of romance—notably the stock devices of disguise and mistaken identity—not merely that they might complicate the action and so provide diversion but that they might serve almost as metaphors or emblems for mental obfuscation. The perplexity of the plot—where, among many other sources of confusion, a girl disguised as a boy loves a man who commissions her to woo a lady whose advances she must check—represents in concrete terms the intellectual and emotional bewilderment that almost every character in the play exhibits. As a consequence, the machinery of romance acquires the novel function of articulating theme. To be sure, the convolutions of the plot provide diversion of a sort, but they also bind the characters in a web of interwoven error, and thus they underscore the meaning of the play: that most men never know, and maybe never have a chance to know, the truth about themselves.

But if, as the knotty and perplexing plot suggests, men are forced by circumstances into compounded misconceptions, they are also trapped by their illusions. Between the errors thrust upon them and those they generate themselves, they are caught as in a vise—victims not merely of deceit but also of their own folly. Orsino, for example, though

Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth;
In voices well divulged, free, learned, and valiant,
And in dimension and the shape of nature
A gracious person. (I.v.257-60)

is in fact so blinded by his image of himself as an ardent but despairing lover that he is maimed by his obsession.

We see him first as he indulges this obsession with his famous speech on music as the food of love, and this speech, however lovely to the ear, reveals the speaker as a narcissistic fool. Much given to discussions about his complicated states of mind, he, like most self-centered persons, is really very simple. Whereas he tells Viola that such as I am all true lovers are,

Unstaid and skittish in all motions else
Save in the constant image of the creature
That is beloved. (II.iv.17-20)

the only thing he loves is his romantic notion of the lover that he himself exemplifies, and he finds it so appealing that he never even asks if it is true. He leaves the play as he had entered it, with highfalutin talk about his "fancy," but this "fancy" is no more to be confused with love than his lyric self-descriptions are to be confused with fact. His soft, unmanly pleasure in caressing his emotions, his delight in "old and antic" songs as a solace for his "passion," even his petulant threat of violence against Olivia and "Cesario" for their presumed unfaithfulness reveal the sentimentalist who prefers the comfort of his own illusions to the dangers of candid self-appraisal.

In varying degrees, almost all the other characters in the play are shackled by their inability or refusal to comprehend their own emotions, or even to discern their blunders. Olivia's preoccupation with "a brother's dead love" is so unreal that a single visit from "Cesario" is enough to shatter it—and to provide her with a new obsession that is even more absurd, because it rests upon a yet more rudimentary error. Malvolio, "sick of self-love," is so easily led to self-exposure and humiliation that even as we laugh we pity him: "Alas, poor fool, how have they baffled thee!" Sir Andrew's imposing list of follies, both natural and acquired, makes him everybody's fool; and although Sir Toby has a searching eye for other people's foibles, he is usually much too drunk to recognize his own. Even Viola, who at least is in possession of the facts that save her from Olivia's type of blunder, thinks she must embark upon a program of deceit in order to survive. "Conceal me what I am," she tells the captain, and be my aid

For such disguise as haply shall become
The form of my intent. (I.ii.53-55)

Her finest moment in the play—the speech about the love-lorn girl who never told her love—is charming and pathetic, but it shows a certain pleasure in equivocation. Indeed, her skill and relish for the kind of organized deceit on which the action hangs are appropriate for the heroine of a play in which dissimulation and deception are routine. Only the Clown, it seems, is clear-eyed and wise enough to stand somewhat above the antics of the others and to comment on their follies. Knowing that foolery "does walk about the orb like the sun," he is as quick to puncture Orsino's egomania as to expose Olivia's silly posture of bereavement; and it is he, in the amusing but disturbing interview with the "lunatic" Malvolio, who makes us trace the narrow line between the madman and the sage. The Clown alone is immune to the pandemic error in Illyria—but he must wear a mask against contagion and infection, and he must hide his wisdom as the babble of a licensed fool. In a world where everyone is slightly mad, his motley is a badge of knowledge.

Finally, the plotting, which Johnson found offensive, is also made to demonstrate the fact that most men live by error and illusion. The three main lines of action—Orsino's languid courtship of Olivia, Olivia's imbroglio with Viola and Sebastian, and Malvolio's disgrace—do not appear as isolated plots that run their parallel and independent courses; they come to us instead as reciprocal and reverberating statements of a single situation, which is the gulling of a fool. Writers from Aristophanes to Shaw have used this situation, in one form or another, to pedagogic purpose, for they have brought the gull through ridicule to exposure and correction. It is significant that although Orsino, Olivia, and Malvolio are all the victims of deception fostered either by themselves or others, they learn nothing from experience. Two of them are unmolested in their folly, and the third, though harshly treated, clings to his absurd illusions. Malvolio's credulity—which is no sillier than that which goes unpunished in his betters—is chastised so severely that he becomes, as Lamb observed, an almost tragic figure; but Orsino and Olivia are never even chided. None of them is changed, however, and none surrenders his obsession. The denouement affords a kind of liberation, to be sure, for the proper pairing off of lovers signifies release from labyrinthine misconception. But the ease with which Orsino shifts his "fancy" from Olivia to Viola matches that with which, earlier, Olivia turns from anchorite to ardent lover and then substitutes Sebastian for "Cesario." Neither of these self-indulgent egoists has been compelled to shake off his illusion, and in a sense, therefore, neither earns the triumph he enjoys. Perhaps, as Johnson thought, Sir Andrew's "natural fatuity" renders him ineligible for comic therapy, but at any rate he stays, as he will always stay, a fool. Sir Toby, too, remains what he had been before—a sot and parasite—and in addition he acquires Maria. As for Malvolio, he not only profits nothing from his hard instruction, but as he takes his angry leave we see his self-love stiffened by his sense of injured merit. "I'll be revenged on the whole pack of you," he snarls as he departs.

Hazlitt thought that Shakespeare was "too good-natured and magnanimous" to treat his comic knaves and fools as they deserve. Perhaps for this reason or perhaps because he makes us recognize ourselves in them, we are glad for these deluded people in Illyria, for they teach us what, alas, we need to know: that since we rarely win our way to truth, we must settle for illusion.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCE

The plot of Twelfth Night—the adventures and misadventures of a pair of identical twins—is so old that its origins are lost in the prehistory of European literature. It had been a commonplace in Greek comedy long before Plautus and Terence imported it to Rome; and when young Shakespeare, at the start of his career, fashionably pillaged Plautus for The Comedy of Errors, he was following a distinguished Renaissance tradition of Italian, Spanish, French, and English writers who had worked their artful (and sometimes tedious) changes on the basic situation. One such change was the sexual differentiation of the twins, a refinement affording endless possibilities for intrigue and complication. It may be, as John Manningham suggested in the first known comment on Twelfth Night (see p. 876 n.), that for this embellishment he drew on Nicolò Secchi's Gl'Inganni (1562), but he could have gone to Secchi's source, which was Gl'Ingannati ("The Deceived"), a Plautine comedy, produced at Siena in 1531 and published six years later, that had spawned a dozen translations and adaptations through the later sixteenth century. Despite the formidable scholarship that has been brought to bear upon the question,² Shakespeare's knowledge of and obligation to most of this material is still a matter of dispute, but concerning his debt to one late recension of Gl'Ingannati there is no dispute whatever. This was Barnabe Rich's "Of Apolonius and Silla," the second of a set of eight prose narratives that was published in 1581 as Riche his Farewell to Militarie profession: conteinyng verie pleasaunt discourses fit for a peaceable tyme.

The genealogy of "Of Apolonius and Silla" is an instructive example of the free and easy ways of sixteenth-century writers: Rich found the tale (which he eked out with incidental and unacknowledged pilferings from William Painter's Palace of Pleasure, a big collection of stories first published in 1566) in Pierre de Belleforest's Histoires Tragiques (1579), which was translated from Matteo Bandello's Novelle (1554), which was based on Gl'Ingannati. Although Shakespeare could have read, and perhaps did read, these and other cognate versions of the story, his use of the Farewell would seem to be established by the fact that he took from it four words—coistrel, gaskins, pavin, and galliard—that appear in Twelfth Night and not elsewhere in his plays. Moreover, the fifth tale in Rich's collection ("Of Two Brethren and Their Wives") supplies an analogue for the scene (IV.ii) in which Malvolio is punished, although the subplot of the arrogant steward was apparently Shakespeare's own creation. He may have drawn on other things for this or that detail—for example, on Emanuel Forde's prose romance, The Famous History of Parismus (1598), for the shipwreck and for the names Olivia and Violetta, or on the anonymous play Sir Clyomon and Clamydes (1599) for the device (which he himself had used in The Two Gentlemen of Verona) of a girl disguised as a man in the service of her lover—but of all the alleged or possible sources, "Of Apolonius and Silla" stands closest to Twelfth Night. The bibliographical history of the Farewell—a book so popular that it was reprinted in 1583, 1594, and 1606—has been treated by Thomas Mabry Cranfill in his edition of the work (1959), pp. liii–lxxxi.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

The text of Twelfth Night, for which the sole source is the Folio of 1623, is, if not immaculate, so clean and tidy that it presents almost no problems. Apparently set up from the prompt copy or a transcript of it, the Folio of course contains a few misprints (like incardinate for incardinate at V.i.180–81), a few presumed or obvious errors in speech-headings (like those at II.v.32, 36, where Sir Toby is perhaps confused with Fabian, or at III.iv.24, where Malvolio is assigned a speech that clearly is not his), and a few lines (for example, II.ii.12 and III.iii.15) that seem to need some sort of emendation. Moreover, the fact that the Clown is given all the lovely songs that were perhaps originally Viola's (as suggested at I.ii.57–59 and II.iv.42–43) has been cited as a token of revision. In general, however, the text, as all its editors have gratefully conceded, is one of almost unexampled purity.

In the present edition, therefore, it is followed very closely, even in such forms as student, jealous, wrack (for wreck), and vild, which preserve, we may suppose, not only Shakespeare's spelling but also his pronunciation. But prethee, divil, murther, Sathan (for Satan), Anthonio, and berd (which occurs once for beard) are given in modern spelling. A few emendations sanctioned by long and universal approbation—like Pope's Arion for Orion at I.ii.15, Theobald's inspired curl by for coole my at I.iii.95, and Hanmer's staniel for stallion at II.v.112—have been admitted here, as have one or two superior readings from the later Folios (for example, tang for langer at III.iv.74). However, such attractive but unnecessary emendations as Pope's south for sound at I.i.5 have been rejected, and the few real cruxes have been allowed to stand, so that each reader must struggle all alone with Sir Andrew's damned-colored stock at I.iii.130, make what he can of the mysterious Lady of the Strachy at II.v.37–38, and unravel Viola's puzzling pronouncement at II.ii.12 without the aid of emendation.

In this edition the spelling has been modernized (with the exceptions noted above), the Latin act and scene divisions of the Folio translated, the punctuation brought into conformity with modern usage, a few lines that through compositorial error were printed as prose restored to verse (IV.ii.74–75), and a few stage directions (like the one at III.iv.14) shifted to accommodate the text. At the conclusion of the first, second, and fourth acts, the Folio has "Finis Actus . . .," here omitted. All editorial interpolations such as the list of characters, indications of place, and stage directions implied by the text but not indicated in the Folio are enclosed in square brackets. Other material departures from the copy text (excluding obvious typographical errors) are listed below in boldface type, followed in roman by the Folio reading. It will be apparent that most of them required no agonizing reappraisal.

I.ii.15 Arion Orion

I.iii.28 all, most almost 50 Andrew Ma. 95 curl by coole my 97 me we 111 kickshawses kicke-chawses 130 set sit 134 That's That

I.iv.28 nuncio's Nuntio's

I.v.146 H' as Ha's 164 s.d. Viola Uiolenta 253 with fertile tears fertill teares 299 county's countes

II.ii.20 That sure methought That me thought 31 our frailty O frailtie 32 of if

II.iii.25 leman Lemon 34 give a— giue a 135 a nayword an ayword

II.iv.53 Fly . . . fly Fye . . . fie 55 yew Ew 88 I It 103 know— know

II.v.12 metal Mettle 112 staniel stallion 141 born become; achieve atcheeues 154–56 thee, The Fortunate Unhappy./ Daylight thee, tht fortunate vnhappy daylight 173 dear deero

III.i.8 king lies Kings lyes 69 wise men wisemens 84 gait gate 93 all ready already 114 here heare

III.ii.8 see thee the see the 68 renegado Renegatho

III.iv.24 Olivia Mal. 74 tang langer 92 How is't with you, man [The Folio assigns this speech to Fabian] 119 Ay, biddy I biddy 150 Ay, is't, I, ist? 178 You . . . for't Yon . . . fot't

252 competent computent

IV.ii.6 in in in 15 Gorboduc Gorbodacke 38 clerestories cleere stores 72 sport to the sport the

V.i.199 pavin pany

² This scholarship is knowledgeably surveyed by Kenneth Muir, Shakespeare's Sources, Vol. 1, Comedies and Tragedies (1957), pp. 66–77; and Geoffrey Bullough (ed.), Narrative and Dramatic Sources of Shakespeare, Vol. 2 (1958), pp. 269–85.

TWELFTH NIGHT, OR, WHAT YOU WILL

[Dramatis Personae]

ORSINO Duke of Illyria
SEBASTIAN brother of Viola
ANTONIO a sea captain, friend to Sebastian
A SEA CAPTAIN friend to Viola
VALENTINE } gentlemen attending on the duke
CURIO }
SIR TOBY BELCH uncle to Olivia
SIR ANDREW AGUECHEEK

MALVOLIO steward to Olivia
FABIAN } servants to Olivia
FESTE a clown }
OLIVIA a countess
VIOLA sister to Sebastian
MARIA Olivia's woman
LORDS A PRIEST SAILORS OFFICERS
MUSICIANS ATTENDANTS

Scene: Illyria]

A C T I

Scene I. [The duke's palace.]

Enter ORSINO, DUKE of Illyria, CURIO, and other LORDS [with MUSICIANS].

DUKE

If music be the food of love, play on,
Give me excess of it, that, surfeiting,
The appetite^o may sicken, and so die.
That strain again! It had a dying fall;^o
O, it came o'er my ear like the sweet sound
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing and giving odor. Enough, no more!
'Tis not so sweet now as it was before.
O spirit of love, how quick and fresh^o art thou,
That,^o notwithstanding thy capacity,
Receiveth as the sea. Nought enters there,^o
Of what validity and pitch^o soe'er,
But falls into abatement and low price^o

The decorative border shown above was used in the First Folio edition of Shakespeare's plays, 1623.

I.i.3 appetite the lover's appetite for music 4 fall cadence 9 quick and fresh lively and eager 10 That in that 11 there in the lover's "capacity" 12 validity and pitch value and superiority (in falconry, pitch is the highest point of a bird's flight) 13 price esteem

Even in a minute. So full of shapes^o is fancy^o
That it alone is high fantastical.^o

15

CURIO

Will you go hunt, my lord?

DUKE

What, Curio?

CURIO The hart.

DUKE

Why, so I do, the noblest that I have.
O, when mine eyes did see Olivia first,
Methought she purged the air of pestilence.
That instant was I turned into a hart,
And my desires, like fell^o and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me.^o

20

Enter VALENTINE.

10

How now? What news from her?

VALENTINE

So please my lord, I might not be admitted;

25

14 shapes fantasies; fancy love 15 high fantastical pre-eminently imaginative 23 fell fierce 22-24 That . . . me Orsino's mannered play on hart/heart—which exemplifies the lover's "high fantastical" wit—derives from the story of Actaeon, a famous hunter who, having seen Diana bathing, was transformed into a stag and torn to pieces by his hounds

But from her handmaid do return this answer:
 The element° itself, till seven years' heat,°
 Shall not behold her face at ample view;
 But like a cloistress she will veiled walk,
 And water once a day her chamber round
 With eye-offending brine: all this to season°
 A brother's dead love, which she would keep fresh
 And lasting in her sad remembrance.°

DUKE

O, she that hath a heart of that fine frame
 To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
 How will she love when the rich golden shaft°
 Hath killed the flock of all affections else°
 That live in her; when liver, brain, and heart,°
 These sovereign thrones, are all supplied and filled,
 Her sweet perfections,° with one self° king.
 Away before me to sweet beds of flow'rs;
 Love-thoughts lie rich when canopied with bow'rs.
Exeunt.

Scene II. [The seacoast.]

Enter VIOLA, a CAPTAIN, and SAILORS.

VIOLA

What country, friends, is this?

CAPTAIN

This is Illyria,° lady.

VIOLA

And what should I do in Illyria?

My brother he is in Elysium.°

Perchance he is not drowned. What think you, sailors? 5

CAPTAIN

It is perchance that you yourself were saved.

VIOLA

O my poor brother, and so perchance may he be.

CAPTAIN

True, madam; and, to comfort you with chance,°

Assure yourself, after our ship did split,

When you, and those poor number saved with you, 10

Hung on our driving° boat, I saw your brother,

Most provident in peril, bind himself

(Courage and hope both teaching him the practice°)

To a strong mast that lived° upon the sea;

Where, like Arion° on the dolphin's back, 15

I saw him hold acquaintance with the waves

So long as I could see.

VIOLA

For saying so, there's gold.

Mine own escape unfoldeth to my hope,°

Whereto thy speech serves for authority° 20

The like of him. Know'st thou this country?

CAPTAIN

Ay, madam, well, for I was bred and born

Not three hours' travel from this very place.

VIOLA

Who governs here?

35

CAPTAIN

A noble duke, in nature as in name. 25

VIOLA

What is his name?

CAPTAIN Orsino.

40

VIOLA

Orsino! I have heard my father name him.

He was a bachelor then.

CAPTAIN

And so is now, or was so very late; 30

For but a month ago I went from hence,

And then 'twas fresh in murmur° (as you know

What great ones do, the less will prattle of)

That he did seek the love of fair Olivia.

VIOLA What's she?

35

CAPTAIN

A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count

That died some twelvemonth since, then leaving her

In the protection of his son, her brother,

Who shortly also died; for whose dear love,

They say, she hath abjured the sight 40

And company of men.

VIOLA

O that I served that lady,

And might not be delivered° to the world,

Till I had made mine own occasion mellow,

What my estate is.°

CAPTAIN

That were hard to compass,°

Because she will admit no kind of suit, 45

No, not° the duke's.

VIOLA

There is a fair behavior in thee, captain,

And though that° nature with a beauteous wall

Doth oft close in° pollution, yet of thee

I will believe thou hast a mind that suits 50

With this thy fair and outward character.°

I prithee (and I'll pay thee bounteously)

Conceal me what I am, and be my aid

For such disguise as haply shall become

The form of my intent.° I'll serve this duke. 55

Thou shalt present me as an eunuch to him;

It may be worth thy pains. For I can sing,

And speak to him in many sorts of music

That will allow° me very worth his service.

What else may hap, to time I will commit; 60

Only shape thou thy silence to my wit.°

19 unfoldeth . . . hope reinforces my hope for my brother's safety 20 serves for authority tends to justify 32 fresh in murmur being rumored 42 delivered disclosed 43-44 made . . . is found an appropriate time to reveal my status 44 compass effect 46 not not even 48 though that even though 49 close in conceal 51 character appearance and demeanor 54-55 become . . . intent suit my purpose 59 allow certify 61 wit skill in carrying out my plan

27 element sky; heat course 31 season preserve (by the salt in her tears) 33 remembrance pronounced with four syllables, "re-mem-ber-ance" 36 golden shaft the shaft, borne by Cupid, that causes love (as distinguished from the leaden shaft, which causes aversion and disdain) 37 all affections else all other emotions but love 38 liver . . . heart the seats respectively of sexual desire, thought, and feeling 40 perfections pronounced with four syllables; self sole

I.ii.2 Illyria region bordering the east coast of the Adriatic 4 Elysium heaven (in classical mythology, the abode of the happy dead) 8 chance possibility 11 driving drifting 13 practice procedure 14 lived floated 15 Arion in classical mythology, a bard who, having leapt into the sea to escape from murderous sailors, was borne to shore by a dolphin that he charmed by his songs

CAPTAIN

Be you his eunuch,^o and your mute I'll be;
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see.

VIOLA

I thank thee. Lead me on.

*Exeunt.*Scene III. [Olivia's house.]Enter Sir TOBY and MARIA.

TOBY What a plague means my niece to take the death of her brother thus? I am sure care's an enemy to life.

MARIA By my troth, Sir Toby, you must come in earlier o' nights. Your cousin,^o my lady, takes great exceptions to your ill hours.

TOBY Why, let her except before excepted.^o

MARIA Ay, but you must confine yourself within the modest limits of order.^o

TOBY Confine? I'll confine^o myself no finer than I am.
These clothes are good enough to drink in, and so be these boots too. And^o they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.

MARIA That quaffing and drinking will undo you. I heard my lady talk of it yesterday; and of a foolish knight that you brought in one night here to be her wooer.

TOBY Who? Sir Andrew Aguecheek?

MARIA Ay, he.

TOBY He's as tall^o a man as any's in Illyria.

MARIA What's that to th' purpose?

TOBY Why, he has three thousand ducats a year.

MARIA Ay, but he'll have but a year in all these ducats.
He's a very fool and a prodigal.

TOBY Fie that you'll say so! He plays o' th' viol-de-gamboys,^o and speaks three or four languages word for word without book, and hath all the good gifts of nature.

MARIA He hath indeed all, most natural;^o for, besides that he's a fool, he's a great quarreler; and but that he hath the gift of a coward to allay the gust^o he hath in quarreling, 'tis thought among the prudent he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

TOBY By this hand, they are scoundrels and substractors^o that say so of him. Who are they?

MARIA They that add, moreover, he's drunk nightly in your company.

TOBY With drinking healths to my niece. I'll drink to her as long as there is a passage in my throat and drink in Illyria. He's a coward and a coistrel^o that will not drink to my niece till his brains turn o' th' toe like a parish top.^o What, wench? Castiliano vulgo;^o for here comes Sir Andrew Agueface.

Enter Sir ANDREW.

ANDREW Sir Toby Belch. How now, Sir Toby Belch?

TOBY Sweet Sir Andrew.

ANDREW Bless you, fair shrew.

MARIA And you too, sir.

TOBY Accost, Sir Andrew, accost.

ANDREW What's that?

TOBY My niece's chambermaid.^o

ANDREW Good Mistress Accost, I desire better acquaintance.

MARIA My name is Mary, sir.

ANDREW Good Mistress Mary Accost.

TOBY You mistake, knight. "Accost" is front her, board her, woo her, assail her.

ANDREW By my troth, I would not undertake her in this company. Is that the meaning of "accost"?

MARIA Fare you well, gentlemen.

TOBY And thou let part so,^o Sir Andrew, would thou mightst never draw sword again.

ANDREW And you part so, mistress, I would I might never draw sword again! Fair lady, do you think you have fools in hand?^o

MARIA Sir, I have not you by th' hand.

ANDREW Marry,^o but you shall have, and here's my hand.

MARIA Now, sir, thought is free. I pray you, bring your hand to th' butt'ry^o bar and let it drink.

ANDREW Wherefore, sweetheart? What's your metaphor?

MARIA It's dry,^o sir.

ANDREW Why, I think so. I am not such an ass but I can keep my hand dry. But what's your jest?

MARIA A dry jest, sir.

ANDREW Are you full of them?

MARIA Ay, sir, I have them at my finger's ends.
Marry, now I let go your hand, I am barren.^o

Exit MARIA.

TOBY O knight, thou lack'st a cup of canary!^o When did I see thee so put down?

ANDREW Never in your life, I think, unless you see canary put me down. Methinks sometimes I have no more wit than a Christian or an ordinary man has.
But I am a great eater of beef, and I believe that does harm to my wit.

41 parish top according to George Steevens, a large top
"formerly kept in every village, to be whipped in frosty weather, that the peasants might be kept warm by exercise, and out of mischief while they could not work"; however,
the allusion may be to the communal top-spinning whose origins are buried in religious ritual; Castiliano vulgo a phrase of uncertain meaning; perhaps Sir Toby is suggesting that Maria assume a grave and ceremonial manner—like that of the notoriously formal Castilians—for Sir Andrew's benefit 48–49 What's . . . chambermaid Sir Andrew asks the meaning of the word "accost," but Sir Toby thinks that he is referring to Maria; actually, she was not Olivia's chambermaid, but rather her companion, or lady in waiting, as is made clear at I.v.161 59 so i.e., without ceremony 63 have . . . hand are dealing with fools 65 Marry indeed (a mild interjection, originally an oath, "By the Virgin Mary") 68 butt'ry buttery, a storeroom for butts or casks of liquor 71 dry (1) thirsty (2) indicative of impotence 77 barren (1) without more jests (2) dull-witted 78 canary a sweet wine from the Canary Islands

62 Be . . . eunuch this part of the plan was not carried out
I.iii.4 cousin a term indicating various degrees of kinship; here, niece 6 except before excepted Sir Toby parodies the legal jargon exceptis exceptiendis ("with the exceptions previously noted") commonly used in leases and contracts 8 modest
. . . order reasonable limits of good behavior 9 confine clothe 11 And if (a common Elizabethan usage) 19 tall bold and handsome 24–25 viol-de-gamboys bass viol 28 natural like a natural fool or idiot 30 gust gusto 33–34 subtractors slanderers 39 coistrel knave (literally, a groom who takes care of a knight's horse)

TOBY No question. 85
 ANDREW And I thought that, I'd forswear it. I'll ride home tomorrow, Sir Toby.
 TOBY Pourquoi,^o my dear knight?
 ANDREW What is "pourquoi"? Do, or not do? I would I had bestowed that time in the tongues that I 90 have in fencing, dancing, and bearbaiting. O, had I but followed the arts!
 TOBY Then hadst thou had an excellent head of hair.^o
 ANDREW Why, would that have mended my hair?
 TOBY Past question, for thou see'st it will not curl by 95 nature.
 ANDREW But it becomes me well enough, does't not?
 TOBY Excellent. It hangs like flax on a distaff;^o and I hope to see a huswife^o take thee between her legs and spin it off.
 ANDREW Faith, I'll home tomorrow, Sir Toby. Your niece will not be seen; or if she be, it's four to one she'll none of me. The count himself here hard by woos her.
 TOBY She'll none o' th' count. Shell not match above 105 her degree, neither in estate,^o years, nor wit; I have heard her swear't. Tut, there's life in't,^o man.
 ANDREW I'll stay a month longer. I am a fellow o' th' strangest mind i' th' world. I delight in masques and revels sometimes altogether.
 TOBY Art thou good at these kickshawses,^o knight? 110
 ANDREW As any man in Illyria, whatsoever he be, under the degree of my betters,^o and yet I will not compare with an old^o man.
 TOBY What is thy excellence in a galliard,^o knight? 115
 ANDREW Faith, I can cut a caper.^o
 TOBY And I can cut the mutton to't.
 ANDREW And I think I have the back-trick^o simply as strong as any man in Illyria.
 TOBY Wherefore are these things hid? Wherefore 120 have these gifts a curtain before 'em? Are they like to take^o dust, like Mistress Mall's picture? Why dost thou not go to church in a galliard and come home in a coranto?^o My very walk should be a jig. I would not so much as make water but in a sink-a-pace.^o What 125 dost thou mean? Is it a world to hide virtues^o in? I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was formed under the star of a galliard.^o
 ANDREW Ay, 'tis strong, and it does indifferent well in a damned-colored stock.^o Shall we set about some 130 revels?

TOBY What shall we do else? Were we not born under Taurus?^o
 ANDREW Taurus? That's sides and heart.
 TOBY No, sir; it is legs and thighs. Let me see thee 135 caper. Ha, higher; ha, ha, excellent! Exeunt.

Scene IV. [The duke's palace.]

Enter VALENTINE, and VIOLA in man's attire.

VALENTINE If the duke continue these favors towards you, Cesario, you are like to be much advanced. He hath known you but three days and already you are no stranger.
 VIOLA You either fear his humor^o or my negligence, 5 that^o you call in question the continuance of his love. Is he inconstant, sir, in his favors?
 VALENTINE No, believe me.

Enter DUKE, CURIO, and ATTENDANTS.

VIOLA I thank you. Here comes the count.
 DUKE Who saw Cesario, ho? 10
 VIOLA On your attendance, my lord, here.
 DUKE
 Stand you awhile aloof. Cesario,
 Thou know'st no less but all.^o I have unclasped
 To thee the book even of my secret soul.
 Therefore, good youth, address thy gait^o unto her; 15
 Be not denied access, stand at her doors,
 And tell them there thy fixèd foot shall grow
 Till thou have audience.
 VIOLA Sure, my noble lord,
 If she be so abandoned to her sorrow
 As it is spoke, she never will admit me. 20
 DUKE
 Be clamorous and leap all civil bounds
 Rather than make unprofited^o return.
 VIOLA
 Say I do speak with her, my lord, what then?
 DUKE
 O, then unfold the passion of my love;
 Surprise her with discourse of my dear^o faith; 25
 It shall become thee well to act my woes.
 She will attend it better in thy youth
 Than in a nuncio's^o of more grave aspect.^o
 VIOLA
 I think not so, my lord.
 DUKE Dear lad, believe it;
 For they shall yet belie thy happy years 30
 That say thou art a man. Diana's lip
 Is not more smooth and rubious;^o thy small pipe^o
 Is as the maiden's organ, shrill and sound,^o
 And all is semblative^o a woman's part.

133 Taurus the Bull (one of the twelve signs of the zodiac, each of which was thought to influence a certain part of the human body; most authorities assigned Taurus to neither "sides and heart" nor "legs and thighs," but to neck and throat) I.iv.5 humor changeable disposition 6 that in that 13 no . . . all everything 15 address thy gait direct your steps 22 unprofited unsuccessful 25 dear intense 28 nuncio's messenger's; aspect accent on second syllable 32 rubious ruby-red; pipe voice 33 shrill and sound high and clear 34 semblative like

88 Pourquoi why (French) 93 Then . . . hair perhaps Sir Toby is punning on Sir Andrew's "tongues" (line 90) as "tongs" or curling irons 98 distaff stick used in spinning 99 huswife housewife 106 estate fortune 107 there's life in't there's hope for you yet 111 kickshawses trifles (French quelque chose) 113 under . . . betters so long as he is not my social superior 114 old experienced (?) 115 galliard lively dance in triple time 116 caper (1) frisky leap (2) spice used to season mutton (hence Sir Toby's remark in the next line) 118 back-trick reverse step in dancing 122 take gather 124 coranto quick running dance 125 sink-a-pace cinque-pace (French cinq pas), a kind of galliard of five steps (but there is also a scatological pun here) 126 virtues talents, accomplishments 128 star . . . galliard a dancing star 130 damned-colored stock of the many emendations proposed for this stocking of uncertain color—"damasked-colored," "dun-colored," "dove-colored," "damson-colored," and the like—Rowe's "flame-colored" has been most popular

I know thy constellation° is right apt° 35
 For this affair. Some four or five attend him,
 All, if you will; for I myself am best
 When least in company. Prosper well in this,
 And thou shalt live as freely as thy lord
 To call his fortunes thine.

VIOLA I'll do my best 40
 To woo your lady. [Aside.] Yet a barful° strife!
 Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife. Exeunt.

Scene V. [Olivia's house.]

Enter MARIA and CLOWN.

MARIA Nay, either tell me where thou hast been, or I will not open my lips so wide as a bristle may enter in way of thy excuse. My lady will hang thee for thy absence.

CLOWN Let her hang me. He that is well hanged in s this world needs to fear no colors.°

MARIA Make that good.°

CLOWN He shall see none to fear.

MARIA A good lenten° answer. I can tell thee where that saying was born, of "I fear no colors." 10

CLOWN Where, good Mistress Mary?

MARIA In the wars; and that may you be bold to say in your foolery.

CLOWN Well, God give them wisdom that have it, and those that are fools, let them use their talents.° 15

MARIA Yet you will be hanged for being so long absent, or to be turned away. Is not that as good as a hanging to you?

CLOWN Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage, and for turning away, let summer bear it 20 out.°

MARIA You are resolute then?

CLOWN Not so, neither; but I am resolved on two points.°

MARIA That if one break, the other will hold; or if 25
 both break, your gaskins° fall.

CLOWN Apt, in good faith; very apt. Well, go thy way! If Sir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Eve's flesh° as any in Illyria.

MARIA Peace, you rogue; no more o' that. Here 30 comes my lady. Make your excuse wisely, you were best.° [Exit.]

Enter Lady OLIVIA, with MALVOLIO [and other ATTENDANTS].

CLOWN Wit, and't° be thy will, put me into good fooling. Those wits that think they have thee do very oft prove fools, and I that am sure I lack thee may pass 35

35 constellation predetermined qualities; apt suitable 41
barful full of impediments

I.v.6 fear no colors fear nothing (with a pun on color meaning "flag" and collar meaning "hangman's noose") 7 Make that good explain it 9 lenten thin, meager (perhaps an allusion to the colorless, unbleached linen that replaced the customary liturgical purple or violet during Lent) 15 talents native intelligence (with perhaps a pun on talons meaning "claws")
 20-21 let . . . out let the warm weather make it endurable 24 points counts (but Maria takes it in the sense of tagged laces serving as suspenders) 26 gaskins loose breeches 28-29 thou . . . flesh you would make as clever a wife 31-32 you were best it would be best for you 33 and't if it for a wise man. For what says Quinapalus?° "Better a witty fool than a foolish wit." God bless thee, lady.

OLIVIA Take the fool away.

CLOWN Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the lady. 40

OLIVIA Go to,° y' are a dry° fool! I'll no more of you.
 Besides, you grow dishonest.°

CLOWN Two faults, madonna,° that drink and good counsel will amend. For give the dry° fool drink, then is the fool not dry. Bid the dishonest man mend 45 himself: if he mend, he is no longer dishonest; if he cannot, let the botcher° mend him. Anything that's mended is but patched; virtue that transgresses is but patched with sin, and sin that amends is but patched with virtue. If that this simple syllogism will serve, so; 50 if it will not, what remedy? As there is no true cuckold but calamity,° so beauty's a flower. The lady bade take away the fool; therefore, I say again, take her away.

OLIVIA Sir, I bade them take away you.

CLOWN Misprision in the highest degree.° Lady, 55
 cucullus non facit monachum.° That's as much to say as, I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool.

OLIVIA Can you do it?

CLOWN Dexteriously,° good madonna. 60

OLIVIA Make your proof.

CLOWN I must catechize you for it, madonna. Good my mouse of virtue,° answer me.

OLIVIA Well, sir, for want of other idleness,° I'll bide your proof. 65

CLOWN Good madonna, why mourn'st thou?

OLIVIA Good fool, for my brother's death.

CLOWN I think his soul is in hell, madonna.

OLIVIA I know his soul is in heaven, fool.

CLOWN The more fool, madonna, to mourn for your 70 brother's soul, being in heaven. Take away the fool, gentlemen.

OLIVIA What think you of this fool, Malvolio? Doth he not mend?

MALVOLIO Yes, and shall do till the pangs of death 75 shake him. Infirmary, that decays the wise, doth ever make the better fool.

CLOWN God send you, sir, a speedy infirmity, for the better increasing your folly. Sir Toby will be sworn that I am no fox,° but he will not pass his word for 80
 twopence that you are no fool.

OLIVIA How say you to that, Malvolio?

MALVOLIO I marvel your ladyship takes delight in such a barren° rascal. I saw him put down the other day with° an ordinary fool that has no more brain than a 85

36 Quinapalus a sage of the Clown's invention 41 Go to enough; dry stupid 42 dishonest unreliable 43 madonna my lady 44 dry thirsty 47 botcher mender of clothes 51-52 there . . . calamity although the Clown's chatter should not be pressed too hard for significance, Kittredge's paraphrase of this difficult passage is perhaps the least unsatisfactory:
 "Every-man is wedded to fortune; hence, when one's fortune is unfaithful, one may in very truth be called a cuckold—the husband of an unfaithful wife" 55 Misprision . . . degree an egregious error in mistaken identity 56 cucullus . . .
monachum a cowl does not make a monk 60 Dexteriously
 dexterously 62-63 Good . . . virtue my good virtuous mouse (a term of playful affection) 64 idleness trifling 80
I . . . fox i.e., sly and dangerous (like you) 84 barren stupid 84-85 put down . . . with bested . . . by stone. Look you now, he's out of his guard^o already. Unless you laugh and minister occasion^o to him, he is gagged. I protest I take these wise men that crow^o so at these set^o kind of fools no better than the fools' zanies.^o

OLIVIA O, you are sick of self-love, Malvolio, and 90 taste with a distempered appetite. To be generous,^o guiltless, and of free disposition, is to take those things for birdbolts^o that you deem cannon bullets. There is no slander in an allowed^o fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, 95 though he do nothing but reprove.

CLOWN Now Mercury indue thee with leasing,^o for thou speak'st well of fools.

Enter MARIA.

MARIA Madam, there is at the gate a young gentleman much desires to speak with you. 100

OLIVIA From the Count Orsino, is it?

MARIA I know not, madam. 'Tis a fair young man and well attended.

OLIVIA Who of my people hold him in delay?

MARIA Sir Toby, madam, your kinsman. 105

OLIVIA Fetch him off, I pray you. He speaks nothing but madman. Fie on him! [Exit MARIA.] Go you, Malvolio. If it be a suit from the Count, I am sick, or not at home. What you will, to dismiss it. (Exit MALVOLIO.) Now you see, sir, how your fooling 110 grows old,^o and people dislike it.

CLOWN Thou hast spoke for us, madonna, as if thy eldest son should be a fool; whose skull Jove^o cram with brains, for—here he comes—one of thy kin has a most weak pia mater.^o 115

Enter Sir TOBY.

OLIVIA By mine honor, half drunk. What is he at the gate, cousin?

TOBY A gentleman,

OLIVIA A gentleman? What gentleman?

TOBY 'Tis a gentleman here. A plague o' these pickle- 120 herring!^o How now, sot?^o

CLOWN Good Sir Toby.

OLIVIA Cousin,^o cousin, how have you come so early by this lethargy?

TOBY Lechery? I defy lechery. There's one at the gate. 125

OLIVIA Ay, marry, what is he?

TOBY Let him be the devil and he will, I care not. Give me faith,^o say I. Well, it's all one. Exit.

OLIVIA What's a drunken man like, fool?

CLOWN Like a drowned man, a fool, and a madman. 130 One draught above heat^o makes him a fool, the second mads him, and a third drowns him.

OLIVIA Go thou and seek the crowner,^o and let him sit o' my coz;^o for he's in the third degree of drink—he's drowned. Go look after him. 135

CLOWN He is but mad yet, madonna, and the fool shall look to the madman. [Exit.]

Enter MALVOLIO.

MALVOLIO Madam, yond young fellow swears he will speak with you. I told him you were sick; he takes on him to understand so much, and therefore comes to speak with you. I told him you were asleep; he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore comes to speak with you. What is to be said to him, lady? He's fortified against any denial. 140

OLIVIA Tell him he shall not speak with me. 145

MALVOLIO H' as^o been told so; and he says he'll stand at your door like a sheriff's post,^o and be the supporter to a bench, but^o he'll speak with you.

OLIVIA What kind o' man is he?

MALVOLIO Why, of mankind.^o 150

OLIVIA What manner of man?

MALVOLIO Of very ill manner. He'll speak with you, will you or no.

OLIVIA Of what personage and years is he?

MALVOLIO Not yet old enough for a man nor young enough for a boy; as a squash^o is before 'tis a peascod, or a codling^o when 'tis almost an apple. 'Tis with him in standing water,^o between boy and man. He is very well-favored and he speaks very shrewishly.^o One would think his mother's milk were scarce out of him. 155

OLIVIA Let him approach. Call in my gentlewoman. 160

MALVOLIO Gentlewoman, my lady calls. Exit.

Enter MARIA.

OLIVIA Give me my veil; come, throw it o'er my face. We'll once more hear Orsino's embassy.

Enter VIOLA.

VIOLA The honorable lady of the house, which is she? 165

OLIVIA Speak to me; I shall answer for her. Your will?

VIOLA Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty—I pray you tell me if this be the lady of the house, for I never saw her. I would be loath to cast away my speech; for, besides that it is excellently well penned, I have taken great pains to con^o it. Good beauties, let me sustain no scorn. I am very comptible,^o even to the least sinister^o usage. 170

OLIVIA Whence came you, sir? 175

VIOLA I can say little more than I have studied, and that question's out of my part. Good gentle one, give me modest^o assurance if you be the lady of the house, that I may proceed in my speech.

133 crowner coroner 134 sit . . . coz hold an inquest on my kinsman 146 H' as he has 147 sheriff's post post set up before a sheriff's door for placards, notices, and such 148 but except 150 of mankind like other men 156 squash unripe peascod (peapod) 157 codling unripe apple 158 standing water at the turning of the tide, between ebb and flood, when it flows neither way 159 shrewishly tartly 172 con learn 173 comptible sensitive 174 sinister discourteous 178 modest reasonable

86 out . . . guard defenseless 87 minister occasion afford opportunity (for his fooling) 88 crow with laughter 89 set artificial; zanies inferior buffoons 91 generous liberal-minded 93 birdbolts blunt arrows 94 allowed licensed, privileged 97 Mercury . . . leasing may the god of trickery endow you with the gift of deception 111 old stale, tedious 113 Jove if, as is likely, Shakespeare here and elsewhere wrote "God," the printed text reflects the statute of 1606 that prohibited profane stage allusions to the deity 115 pia mater brain 120–21 pickle-herring to which the drunken Sir Toby attributes his hiccoughing 121 sot fool 123 Cousin i.e., uncle (see I.iii.4) 128 faith in order to resist the devil 131 above heat above what is required to make a man normally warm

OLIVIA Are you a comedian?^o 180
 VIOLA No, my profound heart;^o and yet (by the very fangs of malice I swear) I am not that^o I play. Are you the lady of the house?
 OLIVIA If I do not usurp^o myself, I am.
 VIOLA Most certain, if you are she, you do usurp 185 yourself; for what^o is yours to bestow is not yours to reserve. But this is from my commission.^o I will on with my speech in your praise and then show you the heart of my message.
 OLIVIA Come to what is important in't. I forgive 190 you^o the praise.
 VIOLA Alas, I took great pains to study it, and 'tis poetical.
 OLIVIA It is the more like to be feigned; I pray you keep it in. I heard you were saucy at my gates; and 195 allowed your approach rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, be gone; if you have reason, be brief. 'Tis not that time of moon with me to make one in so skipping a dialogue.^o
 MARIA Will you hoist sail, sir? Here lies your way. 200
 VIOLA No, good swabber; I am to hull^o here a little longer. Some mollification for your giant,^o sweet lady. Tell me your mind. I am a messenger.^o
 OLIVIA Sure you have some hideous matter to deliver, when the courtesy of it is so fearful.^o Speak your 205 office.^o
 VIOLA It alone concerns your ear. I bring no overture of war, no taxation of^o homage. I hold the olive^o in my hand. My words are as full of peace as matter.^o
 OLIVIA Yet you began rudely. What are you? What 210 would you?
 VIOLA The rudeness that hath appeared in me have I learned from my entertainment.^o What I am, and what I would, are as secret as maidenhead:^o to your ears, divinity;^o to any other's, profanation. 215
 OLIVIA Give us the place alone; we will hear this divinity. [Exit MARIA and ATTENDANTS.] Now, sir, what is your text?
 VIOLA Most sweet lady—
 OLIVIA A comfortable^o doctrine, and much may be 220 said of it. Where lies your text?
 VIOLA In Orsino's bosom.
 OLIVIA In his bosom? In what chapter of his bosom?
 VIOLA To answer by the method,^o in the first of his heart. 225
 OLIVIA O, I have read it; it is heresy. Have you no more to say?

180 comedian actor (because he has had to "con" a "part")
 181 my profound heart my sagacious lady (a bantering compliment) 182 that that which 184 usurp counterfeit (but Viola takes it in the sense "betray," "wrong") 186 what your hand in marriage 187 from my commission beyond my instructions 190–91 forgive you excuse you from repeating 198–99 'Tis . . . dialogue I am not in the mood to sustain such aimless banter 201 hull lie adrift 202 giant an ironical reference to Maria's small size 203 Tell . . . messenger many editors have divided these sentences, assigning the first to Olivia and the second to Viola 205 when . . . fearful since your manner is so truculent 206 office business 208 taxation of demand for; olive the symbol of peace 209 matter significant content 213 entertainment reception 214 maidenhead maidenhood 215 divinity a sacred message 220 comfortable comforting 224 method in the theological style suggested by "divinity," "profanation," "text," and "doctrine"

VIOLA Good madam, let me see your face.
 OLIVIA Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? You are now out of your 230 text.^o But we will draw the curtain and show you the picture. [Unveils.] Look you, sir, such a one I was this present.^o Is't not well done?
 VIOLA Excellently done, if God did all.
 OLIVIA 'Tis in grain,^o sir; 'twill endure wind and 235 weather.
 VIOLA
 'Tis beauty truly blent, whose red and white Nature's own sweet and cunning^o hand laid on. Lady, you are the cruel'st she alive If you will lead these graces to the grave, 240 And leave the world no copy.
 OLIVIA O, sir, I will not be so hard-hearted. I will give out divers schedules^o of my beauty. It shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil^o labeled to my will:^o as, item,^o two lips, indifferent red; item, 245 two gray eyes, with lids to them; item, one neck, one chin, and so forth. Were you sent hither to praise^o me?
 VIOLA
 I see you what you are; you are too proud; But if^o you were the devil, you are fair. My lord and master loves you. O, such love 250 Could be but recompensed though you were crowned The nonpareil of beauty.
 OLIVIA How does he love me?
 VIOLA
 With adorations, with fertile^o tears, With groans that thunder love, with sighs of fire.
 OLIVIA
 Your lord does know my mind; I cannot love him. 255 Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble, Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth; In voices well divulged,^o free, learned, and valiant, And in dimension^o and the shape of nature A gracious person. But yet I cannot love him. 260 He might have took his answer long ago.
 VIOLA
 If I did love you in my master's flame, With such a suff'ring, such a deadly^o life, In your denial I would find no sense; I would not understand it.
 OLIVIA Why, what would you? 265
 VIOLA
 Make me a willow^o cabin at your gate And call upon my soul^o within the house; Write loyal cantons^o of contemnèd^o love And sing them loud even in the dead of night; Hallo your name to the reverberate^o hills 270

230–31 You . . . text You have shifted from talking of your master's heart to asking about my face 232–33 this present just now (like portrait painters, Olivia gives the age of the subject of the "picture" she has just revealed by drawing the "curtain" of a veil from her face) 235 in grain fast-dyed, indelible 238 cunning skillful 243 schedules statements 244 utensil article 244–45 labeled . . . will i.e., added as a codicil 245 item also 247 praise appraise 249 if even if 253 fertile copious 258 well divulged of good repute 259 dimension physique 263 deadly doomed to die 266 willow emblem of a disconsolate lover 267 my soul Olivia 268 cantons songs; contemnèd rejected 270 reverberate reverberating

And make the babbling gossip of the air°
Cry out "Olivia!" O, you should not rest
Between the elements of air and earth
But° you should pity me.

OLIVIA

You might do much. What is your parentage?

VIOLA

Above my fortunes, yet my state° is well.
I am a gentleman.

OLIVIA

Get you to your lord.

I cannot love him. Let him send no more,
Unless, perchance, you come to me again
To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well.
I thank you for your pains. Spend this for me.

VIOLA

I am no fee'd post,° lady; keep your purse;
My master, not myself, lacks recompense.
Love make his heart of flint that you shall love;°
And let your fervor, like my master's, be Placed in contempt. Farewell, fair cruelty. Exit.

OLIVIA

"What is your parentage?"
"Above my fortunes, yet my state is well.
I am a gentleman." I'll be sworn thou art.
Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions, and spirit 290
Do give thee fivefold blazon.° Not too fast; soft,° soft,
Unless the master were the man. How now?
Even so quickly may one catch the plague?
Methinks I feel this youth's perfections
With an invisible and subtle stealth
To creep in at mine eyes. Well, let it be.
What ho, Malvolio!

Enter MALVOLIO.

MALVOLIO Here, madam, at your service.

OLIVIA

Run after that same peevish° messenger,
The county's° man. He left this ring behind him,
Would I or not. Tell him I'll none of it.
Desire him not to flatter with° his lord
Nor hold him up with hopes. I am not for him.
If that the youth will come this way tomorrow,
I'll give him reasons for't. Hie thee, Malvolio.

MALVOLIO

Madam, I will. Exit. 305

OLIVIA

I do I know not what, and fear to find
Mine eye too great a flatterer for my mind.°
Fate, show thy force; ourselves we do not owe.°
What is decreed must be—and be this so! [Exit.]

A C T I I

Scene I. [The seacoast.]

Enter ANTONIO and SEBASTIAN.

275 ANTONIO Will you stay no longer? Nor will you not that I go with you?

SEBASTIAN By your patience,° no. My stars shine darkly over me; the malignancy of my fate might perhaps distemper° yours. Therefore I shall crave of 5 you your leave, that I may bear my evils alone. It were a bad recompense for your love to lay any of them on
you. 280

ANTONIO Let me yet know of you whither you are bound. 10

SEBASTIAN No, sooth,° sir. My determinate° voyage is mere extravagancy.° But I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in; therefore it charges me in manners the rather to express myself.° 15
You must know of me then, Antonio, my name is Sebastian, which I called Roderigo. My father was that Sebastian of Messaline whom I know you have heard of. He left behind him myself and a sister, both born in an hour.° If the heavens had been pleased, 20 would we had so ended! But you, sir, altered that, for some hour before you took me from the breach° of the sea was my sister drowned.

ANTONIO Alas the day!

295 SEBASTIAN A lady, sir, though it was said she much 25 resembled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful.
But though I could not with such estimable wonder° overfar believe that, yet thus far I will boldly publish° her: she bore a mind that envy could not but call fair.
She is drowned already, sir, with salt water, though I 30 seem to drown her remembrance again with more.

ANTONIO Pardon me, sir, your bad entertainment.°

300 SEBASTIAN O good Antonio, forgive me your trouble.°

ANTONIO If you will not murder me° for my love, 35
let me be your servant.

SEBASTIAN If you will not undo what you have done, that is, kill him whom you have recovered,° desire it not. Fare ye well at once. My bosom is full of kindness, and I am yet so near the manners of my 40 mother that, upon the least occasion more, mine eyes will tell tales of me.° I am bound to the Count Orsino's court. Farewell. Exit.

ANTONIO

The gentleness of all the gods go with thee.
I have many enemies in Orsino's court, 45
Else would I very shortly see thee there.
But come what may, I do adore thee so
That danger shall seem sport, and I will go. Exit.

II.i.3 patience permission 5 distemper disorder 11 sooth truly; determinate intended 12 extravagancy wandering 14–15 it . . . myself civility requires that I give some account of myself 20 in an hour in the same hour 22 breach breakers 27 with . . . wonder with so much esteem in my appraisal 28 publish describe 32 bad entertainment poor reception at my hands 33–34 your trouble the trouble I have given you 35 murder me by forcing me to part from you 38 recovered saved 40–42 so . . . me so overwrought by my sorrow that, like a woman, I shall weep

271 babbling . . . air echo 274 But but that 276 state status 282 fee'd post lackey to be tipped 284 Love . . .
love may Love make the heart of him you love like flint 291 blazon heraldic insignia; soft take it slowly 298 peevish truculent, impertinent 299 county's count's 301 flatter with encourage 307 Mine . . . mind my eye, so susceptible to external attractions, will betray my judgment 308 owe own

Scene II. [A street near Olivia's house.]Enter VIOLA and MALVOLIO at several° doors.

MALVOLIO Were not you ev'n now with the Countess Olivia?

VIOLA Even now, sir. On a moderate pace I have since arrived but hither.

MALVOLIO She returns this ring to you, sir. You might 5 have saved me my pains, to have taken it away yourself. She adds, moreover, that you should put your lord into a desperate assurance° she will none of him.
And one thing more, that you be never so hardy to come again in his affairs, unless it be to report your 10 lord's taking of this. Receive it so.

VIOLA She took the ring of me.° I'll none of it.

MALVOLIO Come, sir, you peevishly threw it to her, and her will is, it should be so returned. If it be worth stooping for, there it lies, in your eye;° if not, be it his 15 that finds it. Exit.

VIOLA

I left no ring with her. What means this lady?
 Fortune forbid my outside have not charmed her.
 She made good view of me; indeed, so much
 That sure methought° her eyes had lost her tongue,° 20
 For she did speak in starts distractedly.
 She loves me sure; the cunning° of her passion
 Invites me in this churlish messenger.
 None of my lord's ring? Why, he sent her none.
 I am the man.° If it be so, as 'tis, 25
 Poor lady, she were better love a dream.
 Disguise, I see thou art a wickedness
 Wherein the pregnant enemy° does much.
 How easy is it for the proper false°
 In women's waxen hearts to set their forms! 30
 Alas, our frailty is the cause, not we,
 For such as we are made of, such we be.
 How will this fadge?° My master loves her dearly;
 And I (poor monster°) fond° as much on him;
 And she (mistaken) seems to dote on me. 35
 What will become of this? As I am man,
 My state is desperate° for my master's love.
 As I am woman (now alas the day!),
 What thriftless° sighs shall poor Olivia breathe?
 O Time, thou must untangle this, not I; 40
 It is too hard a knot for me t' untie. [Exit.]

Scene III. [A room in Olivia's house.]Enter Sir TOBY and Sir ANDREW.

TOBY Approach, Sir Andrew. Not to be abed after

II.ii.s.d. several separate 8 desperate assurance hopeless certainty 12 She . . . me of the various emendations proposed for this puzzling line, Malone's "She took no ring of me" is perhaps the most attractive 15 eye sight 20 sure me- thought "sure," which repairs the defective meter of this line, has been adopted from the Second Folio; another common emendation is "as methought"; her . . . tongue her fixed gaze made her lose the power of speech 22 cunning craftiness 25 I . . . man i.e., whom she loves 28 pregnant enemy crafty fiend (i.e., Satan) 29 proper false attractive but deceitful suitors 33 fadge turn out 34 monster because of her equivocal position as both man and woman; fond dote 37 desperate hopeless 39 thriftless unavailing midnight is to be up betimes; and "Deliculo surgere,"° thou know'st.ANDREW Nay, by my troth, I know not, but I know to be up late is to be up late. 5TOBY A false conclusion; I hate it as an unfilled can.°

To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early; so that to go to bed after midnight is to go to bed betimes. Does not our lives consist of the four elements?° 10ANDREW Faith, so they say; but I think it rather consists of eating and drinking.TOBY Th' art a scholar! Let us therefore eat and drink.
Marian I say, a stoup° of wine!Enter CLOWN.

ANDREW Here comes the fool, i' faith. 15

CLOWN How now, my hearts? Did you never see the picture of We Three?°

TOBY Welcome, ass. Now let's have a catch.°

ANDREW By my troth, the fool has an excellent breast.° I had rather than forty shillings I had such a 20 leg,° and so sweet a breath to sing, as the fool has. In sooth, thou wast in very gracious° fooling last night, when thou spok'st of Pigrogromitus,° of the Vapians° passing the equinoctial of Queubus.° 'Twas very good, i' faith. I sent thee sixpence for thy leman.° Hadst it? 25CLOWN I did impetico thy gratillity,° for Malvolio's nose is no whipstock. My lady has a white hand, and the Myrmidons are no bottle-ale houses.°ANDREW Excellent. Why, this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now a song! 30TOBY Come on, there is sixpence for you. Let's have a song.ANDREW There's a testril° of me too. If one knight give a—°CLOWN Would you have a love song, or a song of 35 good life?°

TOBY A love song, a love song.

ANDREW Ay, ay, I care not for good life.

CLOWN sings.

O mistress mine, where are you roaming?

O, stay and hear, your true-love's coming, 40

That can sing both high and low.

Trip no further, pretty sweeting;

Journeys end in lovers meeting,

Every wise man's son doth know.

II.iii.2 Deliculo surgere Diluculo surgere saluberrimum est,
 "It is most healthful to rise early" (a tag from William Lily's Latin grammar, which was widely used in sixteenth-century schools) 6 can tankard 9-10 four elements air, fire, earth, and water, which were thought to be the basic ingredients of all things 14 stoup cup 17 picture . . . Three picture of two asses, the spectator making the third 18 catch round, a simple polyphonic song for several voices 20 breast voice 21 leg skill in bowing (?) 22 gracious delightful 23-24 Pigro- gromitus, Vapians, Queubus presumably words invented by the Clown as specimens of his "gracious fooling" in mock learning 25 leman sweetheart 26 impetico thy gratillity more of the Clown's fooling, which perhaps means something like "pocket your gratuity" 26-28 Malvolio's . . . houses probably mere nonsense 33 testril tester, sixpence 33-34 If
 . . . a— some editors have tried to supply what seems to be a missing line here, but it is probable that the Clown breaks in without permitting Sir Andrew to finish his sentence
35-36 of good life moral, edifying (?)

ANDREW Excellent good, i' faith.

TOBY Good, good.

CLOWN [sings].

What is love? 'Tis not hereafter;
Present mirth hath present laughter;

What's to come is still^o unsure;

In delay there lies no plenty;

Then come kiss me, sweet, and twenty,^o

Youth's a stuff will not endure.

ANDREW A mellifluous voice, as I am true knight.

TOBY A contagious breath.^o

ANDREW Very sweet and contagious, i' faith.

TOBY To hear by the nose, it is dulcet in contagion.^o

But shall we make the welkin^o dance indeed? Shall we rouse the night owl in a catch that will draw three souls out of one weaver?^o Shall we do that?

ANDREW And you love me, let's do't. I am dog^o at a 60 catch.

CLOWN By'r Lady, sir, and some dogs will catch well.

ANDREW Most certain. Let our catch be "Thou knave."

CLOWN "Hold thy peace, thou knave,"^o knight? I 65 shall be constrained in't to call thee knave, knight.

ANDREW 'Tis not the first time I have constrained one to call me knave. Begin, fool. It begins, "Hold thy peace."

CLOWN I shall never begin if I hold my peace. 70

ANDREW Good, i' faith! Come, begin.

Catch sung. Enter MARIA.

MARIA What a caterwauling do you keep here? If my lady have not called up her steward Malvolio and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me.

TOBY My lady's a Cataian, we are politicians,^o 75
Malvolio's a Peg-a-Ramsey,^o and [sings] "Three merry men be we."^o Am not I consanguineous?^o Am I not of her blood? Tilly-vally, lady. [Sings.] "There dwelt a man in Babylon, lady, lady."

CLOWN Beshrew^o me, the knight's an admirable 80 fooling.

ANDREW Ay, he does well enough if he be disposed, and so do I too. He does it with a better grace, but I do it more natural.^o

TOBY [Sings.] "O the twelfth day of December." 85

45 MARIA For the love o' God, peace!

Enter MALVOLIO.

MALVOLIO My masters, are you mad? Or what are you? Have you no wit,^o manners, nor honesty,^o but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house, that ye squeak out 90 your coziars'^o catches without any mitigation or remorse^o of voice? Is there no respect of place, persons, nor time in you?

TOBY We did keep time, sir, in our catches. Sneck up.^o

MALVOLIO Sir Toby, I must be round^o with you. My 95 lady bade me tell you that, though she harbors you as her kinsman, she's nothing allied to your disorders. If you can separate yourself and your misdemeanors, you are welcome to the house. If not, and it would please you to take leave of her, she is very willing to bid you 100 farewell.

TOBY [Sings.] "Farewell, dear heart since I must needs be gone."^o

MARIA Nay, good Sir Toby.

CLOWN [Sings.] "His eyes do show his days are almost 105 done."

MALVOLIO Is't even so?

TOBY [Sings.] "But I will never die."

CLOWN [Sings.] Sir Toby, there you lie.

MALVOLIO This is much credit to you. 110

TOBY [Sings.] "Shall I bid him go?"

CLOWN [Sings.] "What and if you do?"

TOBY [Sings.] "Shall I bid him go, and spare not?"

CLOWN [Sings.] "O, no, no, no, no, you dare not!"

TOBY Out o' tune, sir? Ye lie.^o Art any more than a 115 steward? Dost thou think, because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale?

CLOWN Yes, by Saint Anne, and ginger^o shall be hot i' th' mouth too.

TOBY Th' art i' th' right.—Go, sir, rub your chain 120 with crumbs.^o A stoup of wine, Maria!

MALVOLIO Mistress Mary, if you prized my lady's favor at anything more than contempt, you would not give means for this uncivil rule.^o She shall know of it, by this hand. Exit. 125

MARIA Go shake your cars.^o

ANDREW 'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's ahungry,^o to challenge him the field,^o and then to break promise with him and make a fool of him.

TOBY Do't, knight. I'll write thee a challenge; or I'll 130 deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.

MARIA Sweet Sir Toby, be patient for tonight. Since the youth of the count's was today with my lady, she 49 still always 51 Then . . . twenty so kiss me, my sweet, and then kiss me twenty times again (some editors, taking "twenty" as an intensive, read the line as "so kiss me then, my very sweet one") 54 contagious breath catchy song 56

To . . . contagion i.e., If we could hear through the nose, the Clown's "breath" would be sweet and not malodorous, as "contagious" breaths usually are 57 welkin sky 59 weaver weavers were noted for their singing 60 dog clever (but in the next line the Clown puns on dog = latch, gripping device) 65
Hold . . . knave a line from the round proposed by Sir Andrew 75 My . . . politicians because Sir Toby and his companions are "politicians" (i.e., tricksters, intriguers) they recognize Maria's warning of Olivia's anger as the ruse of a "Cataian" (i.e., native of Cathay, cheater); hence "Tilly-vally, lady" (line 78), which means something like "Fiddlesticks, lady"
76 Peg-a-Ramsey character in an old song whose name Sir
Toby uses apparently as a term of contempt 76-77 Three . . .
we like Sir Toby's other snatches, a fragment of an old song 77 consanguineous related, kin (to Olivia) 80 Beshrew curse 84 natural with an unintentional pun on "nature" as a term for fool or idiot; see I.iii.28

88 wit sense; honesty decency 91 coziars' cobblers' 91-92 mitigation or remorse lowering 94 Sneck up go hang 95 round blunt 102-03 Farewell . . . gone what follows, in crude antiphony between Sir Toby and the Clown, is adapted from a ballad, "Corydon's Farewell to Phyllis" 115
Out . . . lie Sir Toby accuses the Clown of being out of tune, it seems, because he had added an extra "no" and thus an extra note in line 114, and of lying because he had questioned his valor in "you dare not"; then he turns to berating Malvolio 118 ginger commonly used to spice ale 120-21 rub . . .
crumbs polish your steward's chain, your badge of office
124 give . . . rule provide liquor for this brawl 126 Go
. . . ears i.e., like the ass you are (?) 128 ahungry characteristically, Sir Andrew confuses hunger and thirst and thus perverts the proverbial expression; the field i.e., to a duel is much out of quiet. For Monsieur Malvolio, let me alone with him. If I do not gull him into a nayword,¹³⁵ and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. I know I can do it.

TOBY Possess^o us, possess us. Tell us something of him.

MARIA Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of Puritan.¹⁴⁰

ANDREW O, if I thought that, I'd beat him like a dog.

TOBY What, for being a Puritan? Thy exquisite reason, dear knight.

ANDREW I have no exquisite reason for't, but I have reason good enough.¹⁴⁵

MARIA The devil a Puritan that he is, or anything constantly^o but a time-pleaser;^o an affectioned^o ass, that cons state without book^o and utters it by great swarths;^o the best persuaded of himself;^o so crammed, as he thinks, with excellencies that it is his grounds of¹⁵⁰ faith that all that look on him love him; and on that vice in him will my revenge find notable cause to work.

TOBY What wilt thou do?

MARIA I will drop in his way some obscure epistles of love, wherein by the color of his beard, the shape of¹⁵⁵ his leg, the manner of his gait, the expressure^o of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself most feelingly personated.^o I can write very like my lady your niece; on a forgotten matter we can hardly make distinction of our hands.¹⁶⁰

TOBY Excellent. I smell a device.

ANDREW I have't in my nose too.

TOBY He shall think by the letters that thou wilt drop that they come from my niece, and that she's in love with him.¹⁶⁵

MARIA My purpose is indeed a horse of that color.

ANDREW And your horse now would make him an ass.

MARIA Ass, I doubt not.

ANDREW O, 'twill be admirable.¹⁷⁰

MARIA Sport royal, I warrant you. I know my physic will work with him. I will plant you two, and let the fool make a third,^o where he shall find the letter. Observe his construction^o of it. For this night, to bed, and dream of the event.^o Farewell. *Exit.*¹⁷⁵

TOBY Good night, Penthesilea.^o

ANDREW Before me,^o she's a good wench.

TOBY She's a beagle^o true-bred, and one that adores me. What o' that?

ANDREW I was adored once too.¹⁸⁰

TOBY Let's to bed, knight. Thou hadst need send for more money.

135 nayword byword 139 Possess inform 140 Puritan a straight-laced, censorious person (in lines 146-47 Maria makes it clear that she is not using the label in a strict ecclesiastical sense, as Sir Andrew [line 141] thinks) 147 constantly consistently; time-pleaser sycophant; affectioned affected 148 cons . . . book memorizes stately gestures and turns of phrase 149 swarths swaths, quantities; the . . . himself who thinks most highly of himself 156 expressure expression 158 personated represented. 172-73 let . . . third like the plan to have Viola present herself to Duke Orsino as a eunuch (I.ii.62), this plot device was abandoned; it is Fabian, not the Clown, who makes the third spectator to Malvolio's exposé 174 construction interpretation 175 event outcome 176 Penthesilea in classical mythology, the queen of the Amazons 177 Before me I swear, with myself as witness 178 beagle one of several allusions to Maria's small stature

ANDREW If I cannot recover^o your niece, I am a foul way out.^o

TOBY Send for money, knight. If thou hast her not i'¹⁸⁵ th' end, call me Cut.^o

ANDREW If I do not, never trust me, take it how you will.

TOBY Come, come; I'll go burn some sack.^o 'Tis too late to go to bed now. Come, knight; come, knight. 190
Exeunt.

Scene IV. [The duke's palace.]

Enter DUKE, VIOLA, CURIO, and others.

DUKE

Give me some music. Now good morrow, friends.

Now, good Cesario, but that piece of song,

That old and antic^o song we heard last night.

Methought it did relieve my passion^o much,

More than light airs and recollected terms^o

Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times.⁵

Come, but one verse.

CURIO He is not here, so please your lordship, that should sing it.

DUKE Who was it?¹⁰

CURIO Feste the jester, my lord, a fool that the Lady Olivia's father took much delight in. He is about the house.

DUKE

Seek him out, and play the tune the while.

[Exit CURIO.]

Music plays.

Come hither, boy. If ever thou shalt love,¹⁵

In the sweet pangs of it remember me;

For such as I am all true lovers are,

Unstaid and skittish in all motions^o else

Save in the constant image of the creature

That is beloved. How dost thou like this tune?²⁰

VIOLA

It gives a very echo to the seat^o

Where Love is throned.

DUKE Thou dost speak masterly.

My life upon't, young though thou art, thine eye

Hath stayed upon some favor^o that it loves.

Hath it not, boy?

VIOLA A little, by your favor.²⁵

DUKE

What kind of woman is't?

VIOLA Of your complexion.^o

DUKE

She is not worth thee then. What years, i' faith?

VIOLA

About your years, my lord.

DUKE

Too old, by heaven. Let still^o the woman take

183 recover win 183-4 a . . . out badly out of pocket 186 Cut a dock-tailed horse 189 burn some sack heat and spice some Spanish wine

II.iv.3 antic quaint 4 passion suffering (from unrequited love) 5 recollected terms studied phrases 18 motions emotions 21 seat the heart (see I.i.38-39) 24 favor face 26 complexion temperament 29 still always

An elder than herself: so wears she° to him,
 So sways she level in her husband's heart;°
 For, boy, however we do praise ourselves,
 Our fancies° are more giddy and unfirm,
 More longing, wavering, sooner lost and worn,°
 Than women's are.

VIOLA I think it well, my lord.

DUKE
 Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
 Or thy affection cannot hold the bent;°
 For women are as roses, whose fair flow'r,
 Being once displayed, doth fall that very hour.

VIOLA
 And so they are; alas, that they are so.
 To die, even when they to perfection grow.

Enter CURIO and CLOWN.

DUKE
 O, fellow, come, the song we had last night.
 Mark it, Cesario; it is old and plain.
 The spinsters° and the knitters in the sun,
 And the free° maids that weave their thread with bones,°
 Do use to chant it. It is silly sooth,°
 And dallies° with the innocence of love,
 Like the old age.°

CLOWN Are you ready, sir?

DUKE I prithee sing.

Music.

The Song.

Come away, come away, death,
 And in sad cypress° let me be laid.
 Fly away, fly away, breath;
 I am slain by a fair cruel maid.
 My shroud of white, stuck all with yew,
 O, prepare it.
 My part of death, no one so true
 Did share it.
 Not a flower, not a flower sweet,
 On my black coffin let there be strown;
 Not a friend, not a friend greet
 My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown.
 A thousand thousand sighs to save,
 Lay me, O, where
 Sad true lover never find my grave,
 To weep there.

DUKE There's for thy pains.

CLOWN No pains, sir. I take pleasure in singing, sir.

DUKE I'll pay thy pleasure then.

CLOWN Truly, sir, and pleasure will be paid one time 70 or another.

DUKE Give me now leave to leave thee.

CLOWN Now the melancholy god protect thee, and the tailor make thy doublet of changeable° taffeta, for 30 thy mind is a very opal. I would have men of such 75 constancy put to sea, that their business might be everything, and their intent everywhere; for that's it that always makes a good voyage of nothing. Farewell.

Exit.

DUKE

35 Let all the rest give place.°

[Exeunt CURIO and ATTENDANTS.]

Once more, Cesario,
 Get thee to yond same sovereign cruelty.° 80
 Tell her my love, more noble than the world,
 Prizes not quantity of dirty lands;
 The parts° that fortune hath bestowed upon her
 Tell her I hold as giddily° as fortune,
 But 'tis that miracle and queen of gems° 85
 That nature pranks her in° attracts my soul.

VIOLA

But if she cannot love you, sir?

DUKE

I cannot be so answered.

VIOLA

Sooth,° but you must.
 Say that some lady, as perhaps there is,
 Hath for your love as great a pang of heart 90
 As you have for Olivia. You cannot love her.
 You tell her so. Must she not then be answered?

DUKE

There is no woman's sides
 Can bide° the beating of so strong a passion
 As love doth give my heart; no woman's heart 95
 So big to hold so much; they lack retention.°
 Alas, their love may be called appetite,
 No motion° of the liver° but the palate,
 That suffer surfeit, cloyment, and revolt;°
 But mine is all as hungry as the sea 100
 And can digest as much. Make no compare Between that love a woman can bear me
 And that I owe Olivia.

VIOLA

Ay, but I know—

DUKE

What dost thou know?

60

VIOLA

Too well what love women to men may owe. 105
 In faith, they are as true of heart as we.
 My father had a daughter loved a man
 As it might be perhaps, were I a woman,
 I should your lordship.

DUKE

And what's her history?

VIOLA

A blank, my lord. She never told her love, 110
 But let concealment, like a worm i' th' bud,
 Feed on her damask° cheek. She pined in thought;°
 And, with a green and yellow melancholy,
 She sat like Patience on a monument,
 Smiling at grief. Was not this love indeed? 115
 We men may say more, swear more; but indeed

30 wears she she adapts herself 31 sways . . . heart she keeps steady in her husband's affections 33 fancies loves 34 worn many editors have adopted the reading "won" from the Second Folio 37 hold the bent maintain its strength and tension (the image is that of a bent bow) 44 spinsters spinners 45 free carefree; bones bone bobbins 46 silly sooth simple truth 47 dallies deals movingly 48 the old age the good old times 52 cypress a coffin made of cypress wood 74 changeable with shifting lights and colors

79 give place withdraw 80 sovereign cruelty peerless and disdainful lady 83 parts gifts (of wealth and social status)
 84 giddily indifferently 85 queen of gems Olivia's beauty 86 pranks her in adorns her with 88 Sooth truly 94 bide endure 96 retention the ability to retain 98 motion stirring, prompting; liver seat of passion 99 revolt revulsion 112 damask like a pink and white damask rose; thought brooding

Our shows are more than will;° for still we prove
Much in our vows but little in our love.

DUKE

But died thy sister of her love, my boy?

VIOLA

I am all the daughters of my father's house,
And all the brothers too, and yet I know not.°
Sir, shall I to this lady?

DUKE

Ay, that's the theme.

To her in haste. Give her this jewel. Say
My love can give no place,° bide no denay.° Exeunt.

Scene V. [Olivia's garden.]

Enter Sir TOBY, Sir ANDREW, and FABIAN.

TOBY Come thy ways, Signior Fabian.

FABIAN Nay, I'll come. If I lose a scruple° of this sport, let me be boiled° to death with melancholy.

TOBY Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally sheep-biter° come by some notable shame? 5

FABIAN I would exult, man. You know he brought me out o' favor with my lady about a bearbaiting here.

TOBY To anger him we'll have the bear again, and we will fool him black and blue. Shall we not, Sir Andrew?

ANDREW And we do not, it is pity of our lives. 10

Enter MARIA.

TOBY Here comes the little villain. How now, my metal of India?°

MARIA Get ye all three into the box tree. Malvolio's coming down this walk. He has been yonder i' the sun practicing behavior to his own shadow this half hour. 15 Observe him, for the love of mockery; for I know this letter will make a contemplative° idiot of him. Close,° in the name of jesting. [The others hide.] Lie thou there [throws down a letter]; for here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling.° Exit. 20

Enter MALVOLIO.

MALVOLIO 'Tis but fortune; all is fortune. Maria once told me she did affect me;° and I have heard herself come thus near, that, should she fancy,° it should be one of my complexion. Besides, she uses me with a more exalted respect than anyone else that follows° 25
her. What should I think on't?

TOBY Here's an overweening rogue.

FABIAN O, peace! Contemplation makes a rare turkey cock of him. How he jets° under his advanced° plumes! 30

ANDREW 'Slight,° I could so beat the rogue.

TOBY Peace, I say.°

117 Our . . . will what we show is greater than the passion that we feel 121 I know not because she thinks that her brother may be still alive 124 can . . . place cannot yield;
denay denial

II.v.2 scruple smallest part 3 boiled pronounced "biled," quibbling on bile, which was thought to be the cause of melancholy 5 sheep-biter sneaky dog 12 metal of India golden girl 17 contemplative self-centered; Close hide 20 tickling stroking, i.e., flattery 22 she . . . me Olivia liked me 23 fancy love 25 follows serves 29 jets struts; advanced uplifted 31 'Slight by God's light (a mild oath) 32 Peace, I say many editors assign this and line 36 to Fabian on the ground that it is his function throughout the scene to restrain Sir Toby and Sir Andrew

MALVOLIO To be Count Malvolio.

TOBY Ah, rogue!

ANDREW Pistol him, pistol him. 35

TOBY Peace, peace.

MALVOLIO There is example for't. The Lady of the Strachy° married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

ANDREW Fie on him, Jezebel.°

FABIAN O, peace! Now he's deeply in. Look how 40 imagination blows him.°

MALVOLIO Having been three months married to her, sitting in my state—

TOBY O for a stonebow,° to hit him in the eye!

MALVOLIO Calling my officers about me, in my 45 branched° velvet gown; having come from a daybed,° where I have left Olivia sleeping—

TOBY Fire and brimstone!

FABIAN O, peace, peace!

MALVOLIO And then to have the humor of state;° and 50
after a demure travel of regard,° telling them I know my place, as I would they should do theirs, to ask for my kinsman Toby—

TOBY Bolts and shackles!

FABIAN O peace, peace, peace, now, now. 55

MALVOLIO Seven of my people, with an obedient start, make out for° him. I frown the while, and perchance wind up my watch, or play with my—some rich jewel.° Toby approaches; curtsies there to me—

TOBY Shall this fellow live? 60

FABIAN Though our silence be drawn from us with cars, yet peace.

MALVOLIO I extend my hand to him thus, quenching
my familiar smile with an austere regard of control°—

TOBY And does not Toby take° you a blow o' the 65 lips then?

MALVOLIO Saying, "Cousin Toby, my fortunes having cast me on your niece, give me this prerogative of speech."

TOBY What, what? 70

MALVOLIO "You must amend your drunkenness."

TOBY Out, scab!

FABIAN Nay, patience, or we break the sinews of our plot.

MALVOLIO "Besides, you waste the treasure of your 75 time with a foolish knight"—

ANDREW That's me, I warrant you.

MALVOLIO "One Sir Andrew"—

ANDREW I knew 'twas I, for many do call me fool.

MALVOLIO What employment° have we here? 80

[Takes up the letter.]

FABIAN Now is the woodcock° near the gin.°

37-38 The Lady . . . Strachy an unidentified allusion to a great lady who married beneath her 39 Jezebel the proud and wicked queen of Ahab, King of Israel, whom Sir Andrew, muddled as usual, regards as Malvolio's prototype in arrogance 41 blows him puffs him up 44 stonebow crossbow that shoots stones 46 branched embroidered; daybed sofa 50 to . . . state to assume an imperious manner 51 after
. . . regard having glanced gravely over my retainers 57 make out for go to fetch 58-59 play . . . jewel Malvolio automatically reaches for his steward's chain and then catches himself 64 an . . . control a stern look of authority 65 take give 80 employment business 81 woodcock a proverbially stupid bird; gin snare

TOBY O, peace, and the spirit of humors intimate reading aloud to him!

MALVOLIO By my life, this is my lady's hand. These be her very C's, her U's, and her T's; and thus makes 85 she her great P's. It is, in contempt of° question, her hand.

ANDREW Her C's, her U's, and her T's? Why that?

MALVOLIO [Reads.] "To the unknown beloved, this, and my good wishes." Her very phrases! By your 90 leave, wax.° Soft,° and the impressure her Lucrece,° with which she uses to seal.° 'Tis my lady. To whom should this be?

FABIAN This wins him, liver and all.

MALVOLIO [Reads.]

"Jove knows I love, 95
But who?

Lips, do not move;
No man must know."

"No man must know." What follows? The numbers altered!° "No man must know." If this should be thee, 100 Malvolio?

TOBY Marry, hang thee, brock!°

MALVOLIO [Reads.]

"I may command where I adore,
But silence, like a Lucrece knife,
With bloodless stroke my heart doth gore. 105
M. O. A. I. doth sway my life."

FABIAN A fustian° riddle.

TOBY Excellent wench,° say I.

MALVOLIO "M. O. A. I. doth sway my life." Nay, but first, let me see, let me see, let me see. 110

FABIAN What dish o' poison has she dressed° him!

TOBY And with what wing the staniel checks at it!°

MALVOLIO "I may command where I adore." Why, she may command me: I serve her; she is my lady. Why, this is evident to any formal capacity.° There is 115 no obstruction° in this. And the end; what should that alphabetical position portend? If I could make that resemble something in me! Softly, "M. O. A. I."

TOBY O, ay, make up that. He is now at a cold scent.

FABIAN Sowter will cry upon't for all this, though it 120 be as rank as a fox.°

MALVOLIO M.—Malvolio. M.—Why, that begins my name.

FABIAN Did not I say he would work it out? The cur is excellent at faults.° 125

MALVOLIO M.—But then there is no consonancy in the sequel.° That suffers under probation.° A should follow, but O does.

FABIAN And O° shall end, I hope.

86 in contempt of beyond 90–91 By . . . wax Excuse me for breaking the seal 91 Soft take it slowly; the . . . Lucrece the seal depicts Lucrece (noble Roman matron who stabbed herself after she was raped by Tarquin, hence a symbol of chastity) 92 uses to seal customarily seals 99–100 The numbers altered the meter changed (in the stanza that follows) 102 brock badger 107 fustian foolish and pretentious 108 wench Maria 111 dressed prepared for 112 with . . . it with what speed the kestrel (a kind of hawk) turns to snatch at the wrong prey 115 formal capacity normal intelligence 116 obstruction difficulty 120–21 Sowter . . . fox The hound will bay after the false scent even though the deceit is gross and clear 125 faults breaks in the scent 126–27 consonancy . . . sequel consistency in what follows 127 suffers under probation does not stand up under scrutiny 129 O sound of lamentation

TOBY Ay, or I'll cudgel him and make him cry O. 130

MALVOLIO And then I comes behind.

FABIAN Ay, and you had any eye behind you, you might see more detraction at your heels than fortunes before you.

MALVOLIO M, O, A, I. This simulation° is not as the 135 former; and yet, to crush° this a little, it would bow to me, for every one of these letters are in my name. Soft, here follows prose.

[Reads.]

"If this fall into thy hand, revolve.° In my stars° I am above thee, but be not afraid of greatness. Some are 140 born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon 'em. Thy Fates open their hands; let thy blood and spirit embrace them; and to inure° thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough° and appear fresh. Be opposite with° a kinsman, 145 surly with servants. Let thy tongue tang arguments of state;° put thyself into the trick of singularity.° She thus advises thee that sighs for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings and wished to see thee ever cross-gartered.° I say, remember. Go to, 150 thou art made, if thou desir'st to be so. If not, let me see thee a steward still, the fellow of servants, and not worthy to touch Fortune's fingers. Farewell. She that would alter services with thee,

The Fortunate Unhappy." 155

Daylight and champion° discovers° not more. This is open. I will be proud, I will read politic authors,° I will baffle° Sir Toby, I will wash off gross° acquaintance, I will be point-devise,° the very man. I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade° me, for every reason 160 excites to this,° that my lady loves me. She did commend my yellow stockings of late, she did praise my leg being cross-gartered; and in this she manifests herself to my love, and with a kind of injunction drives me to these habits of her liking.° I thank my stars, I am 165 happy. I will be strange,° stout,° in yellow stockings, and cross-gartered, even with the swiftness of putting on. Jove and my stars be praised. Here is yet a post-script.

[Reads.]

"Thou canst not choose but know who I am. If thou 170 entertain'st° my love, let it appear in thy smiling. Thy smiles become thee well. Therefore in my presence still smile, dear my sweet, I prithee."

Jove, I thank thee. I will smile; I will do everything that thou wilt have me.

Exit. 175

135 simulation hidden significance 136 crush force 139 revolve reflect; stars fortune 143 inure accustom 145 slough skin (of a snake); opposite with hostile to 146–47 tang . . . state resound with topics of statecraft 147 trick of singularity affectation of eccentricity 150 cross-gartered with garters crossed above and below the knee 156 champion campaign, open country; discovers reveals 157 politic authors writers on politics 158 baffle publicly humiliate; gross low 159 be point-devise follow the advice in the letter in every detail 160 jade trick 161 excites to this enforces this conclusion 165 these . . . liking this clothing that she likes 166 strange haughty; stout proud 171 entertain'st accept

FABIAN I will not give my part of this sport for a pension of thousands to be paid from the sophy.^o

TOBY I could marry this wench for this device.

ANDREW So could I too.

TOBY And ask no other dowry with her but such 180 another jest.

Enter MARIA.

ANDREW Nor I neither.

FABIAN Here comes my noble gull-catcher.^o

TOBY Wilt thou set thy foot o' my neck?

ANDREW Or o' mine either? 185

TOBY Shall I play^o my freedom at tray-trip^o and become thy bonds slave?

ANDREW I' faith, or I either?

TOBY Why, thou hast put him in such a dream that, when the image of it leaves him, he must run mad. 190

MARIA Nay, but say true, does it work upon him?

TOBY Like aqua vitae^o with a midwife.

MARIA If you will, then, see the fruits of the sport, mark his first approach before my lady. He will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a color she abhors, 195 and cross-gartered, a fashion she detests; and he will smile upon her which will now be so unsuitable to her disposition, being addicted to a melancholy as she is, that it cannot but turn him into a notable contempt. If you will see it, follow me. 200

TOBY To the gates of Tartar,^o thou most excellent devil of wit.

ANDREW I'll make one^o too.

Exeunt.

A C T I I I

Scene I. [Olivia's garden.]

Enter VIOLA and CLOWN [with a tabor].

VIOLA Save thee,^o friend, and thy music. Dost thou live by^o thy tabor?^o

CLOWN No, sir, I live by the church.

VIOLA Art thou a churchman?

CLOWN No such matter, sir. I do live by the church; 5 for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the church.

VIOLA So thou mayst say, the king lies^o by a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him; or, the church stands by^o thy tabor, if thy tabor stand by the church. 10

CLOWN You have said, sir. To see this age! A sentence is but a chev'ril^o glove to a good wit. How quickly the wrong side may be turned outward!

VIOLA Nay, that's certain. They that dally nicely^o with words may quickly make them wanton.^o 15

177 sophy Shah of Persia (perhaps with reference to Sir Anthony Shirley's visit to the Persian court in 1599, from which he returned laden with gifts and honors) 183 gull-catcher fool-catcher 186 play gamble; tray-trip a dice game 192 aqua vitae distilled liquors 201 Tartar Tartarus (in classical mythology, the infernal regions) 203 make one come III.i.1 Save thee God save you 2 live by gain a living from (but the Clown takes it in the sense of "reside near"); tabor (1) drum (2) taborn, tavern 8 lies sojourns 9 stands by (1) stands near (2) upholds 12 chev'ril cheveril (soft kid leather) 14 dally nicely play subtly 15 wanton equivocal in meaning (but the Clown takes it in the sense of "unchaste")

CLOWN I would therefore my sister had had no name, sir.

VIOLA Why, man?

CLOWN Why, sir, her name's a word, and to dally with that word might make my sister wanton. But 20 indeed words are very rascals since bonds disgraced them.^o

VIOLA Thy reason, man?

CLOWN Troth,^o sir, I can yield you none without words, and words are grown so false I am loath to 25 prove reason with them.

VIOLA I warrant thou art a merry fellow and car'st for nothing.

CLOWN Not so, sir; I do care for something; but in my conscience, sir, I do not care for you. If that be to care 30 for nothing, sir, I would it would make you invisible.

VIOLA Art not thou the Lady Olivia's fool?

CLOWN No, indeed, sir. The Lady Olivia has no folly. She will keep no fool, sir, till she be married; and fools are as like husbands as pilchers^o are to herrings—the 35 husband's the bigger. I am indeed not her fool, but her corrupter of words.

VIOLA I saw thee late at the Count Orsino's.

CLOWN Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb^o like the sun; it shines everywhere. I would be sorry, sir, 40 but^o the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress. I think I saw your wisdom there.

VIOLA Nay, and thou pass upon me,^o I'll no more with thee. Hold, there's expenses for thee.

[Gives a coin.]

CLOWN Now Jove, in his next commodity^o of hair, 45 send thee a beard.

VIOLA By my troth, I'll tell thee, I am almost sick for one, though I would not have it grow on my chin. Is thy lady within?

CLOWN Would not a pair of these^o have bred, sir? 50

VIOLA Yes, being kept together and put to use.^o

CLOWN I would play Lord Pandarus of Phrygia, sir, to bring a Cressida to this Troilus.^o

VIOLA I understand you, sir. 'Tis well begged.

[Gives another coin.]

CLOWN The matter, I hope, is not great, sir, begging 55 but a beggar: Cressida was a beggar.^o My lady is within, sir. I will conster^o to them whence you come. Who you are and what you would are out of my welkin;^o I might say "element," but the word is overworn.^o Exit. 60

21-22 since . . . them since it was required that a man's word be guaranteed by a bond (?) 24 Troth by my troth 35 pilchers pilchards (a kind of small herring) 39 orb earth 41 but but that 43 pass upon me make me the butt of your witticisms 45 commodity lot, consignment 50 these coins of the sort that Viola had just given him 51 put to use put out at interest 52-53 I . . . Troilus in the story of Troilus and Cressida, which supplied both Chaucer and Shakespeare the plot for major works, Pandarus was the go-between in the disastrous love affair 56 Cressida . . . beggar in Robert Henryson's Testament of Cressida, a kind of sequel to Chaucer's poem, the faithless heroine became a harlot and a beggar 57 conster explain 59 welkin sky 59-60 I . . . overworn perhaps a thrust at Ben Jonson, whose fondness for the word "element" had been ridiculed by other writers

VIOLA

This fellow is wise enough to play the fool,
And to do that well craves° a kind of wit.°
He must observe their mood on whom he jests,
The quality of persons, and the time;
And,° like the haggard,° check at° every feather
That comes before his eye. This is a practice°
As full of labor as a wise man's art;
For folly that he wisely shows, is fit;
But wise men, folly-fall'n,° quite taint their wit.°

Enter Sir TOBY and [Sir] ANDREW.

TOBY Save you, gentleman.

VIOLA And you, sir.

ANDREW Dieu vous garde, monsieur.

VIOLA Et vous aussi; votre serviteur.°

ANDREW I hope, sir, you are, and I am yours.

TOBY Will you encounter° the house? My niece is desirous you should enter, if your trade be to° her.

VIOLA I am bound to° your niece, sir; I mean, she is the list° of my voyage.

TOBY Taste° your legs, sir; put them to motion.

VIOLA My legs do better understand° me, sir, than I understand what you mean by bidding me taste my legs.

TOBY I mean, to go, sir, to enter.

VIOLA I will answer you with gait and entrance.° But we are prevented.°

Enter OLIVIA and gentlewoman [MARIA].

Most excellent accomplished lady, the heavens rain odors on you.

ANDREW That youth's a rare courtier. "Rain odors"
—well!°

VIOLA My matter hath no voice,° lady, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ear.

ANDREW "Odors," "pregnant," and "vouchsafed"—
I'll get 'em all three all ready.

OLIVIA Let the garden door be shut, and leave me to my hearing. [Exeunt Sir TOBY, Sir ANDREW, and MARIA.] Give me your hand, sir.

VIOLA

My duty, madam, and most humble service.

OLIVIA

What is your name?

VIOLA

Cesario is your servant's name, fair princess.

OLIVIA

My servant, sir? 'Twas never merry world
Since lowly feigning° was called compliment.
Y' are servant to the Count Orsino, youth.

VIOLA

And he is yours, and his must needs be yours.

Your servant's servant is your servant, madam.

OLIVIA

For° him, I think not on him; for his thoughts,
Would they were blanks, rather than filled with me.

VIOLA

Madam, I come to whet your gentle thoughts
On his behalf.

OLIVIA

O, by your leave, I pray you.

I bade you never speak again of him;

But, would you undertake another suit,

I had rather hear you to solicit that

Than music from the spheres.°

VIOLA

Dear lady—

OLIVIA

Give me leave,° beseech you. I did send,

After the last enchantment you did here,

A ring in chase of you. So did I abuse°

Myself, my servant, and, I fear me, you.

Under your hard construction° must I sit,

To force that on you in a shameful cunning

Which you knew none of yours. What might you think?

Have you not set mine honor at the stake

And baited it with all th' unmuzzled thoughts°

That tyrannous heart can think? To one of your receiving°

Enough is shown; a cypress,° not a bosom,

Hides my heart. So, let me hear you speak.

VIOLA

I pity you.

OLIVIA

That's a degree° to love.

VIOLA

No, not a grize;° for 'tis a vulgar proof°

That very oft we pity enemies.

OLIVIA

Why then, methinks 'tis time to smile again.

O world, how apt the poor are to be proud.

If one should be a prey, how much the better

To fall before the lion than the wolf.

Clock strikes.

The clock upbraids me with the waste of time.

Be not afraid, good youth, I will not have you,

And yet, when wit and youth is come to harvest,°

Your wife is like to reap a proper° man.

There lies your way, due west.°

VIOLA

Then westward ho!°

Grace and good disposition° attend your ladyship.

You'll nothing, madam, to my lord by me?

62 craves requires; wit intelligence 65 And many editors, following Johnson, have emended this to "not"; haggard untrained hawk; check at leave the true course and pursue 66 practice skill 69 folly-fall'n having fallen into folly; taint their wit betray their common sense 72-73 Dieu . . . serviteur God protect you, sir. And you also; your servant 75 encounter approach 76 trade be to business be with 77 bound to bound for (carrying on the metaphor in "trade") 78 list destination 79 Taste try 80 understand stand under, support 84 with . . . entrance by going and entering (with a pun on gate) 85 prevented anticipated 89 well well put 90 matter . . . voice business must not be revealed 101 lowly feigning affected humility

105 For as for 112 music . . . spheres the alleged celestial harmony of the revolving stars and planets 113 Give me leave do not interrupt me 115 abuse deceive 117 hard construction harsh interpretation 120-21 set . . . thoughts the metaphor is from the Elizabethan sport of bearbaiting, in which a bear was tied to a stake and harassed by savage dogs 122 receiving perception 123 cypress gauzelike material 125 degree step 126 grize step; vulgar proof common knowledge 134 when . . . harvest when you are mature 135 proper handsome 136 due west Olivia is perhaps implying that the sun of her life—Cesario's love—is about to vanish; westward ho cry of Thames watermen 137 good disposition tranquillity of mind

OLIVIA

Stay.

I prithee tell me what thou think'st of me.

VIOLA

That you do think you are not what you are.°

OLIVIA

If I think so, I think the same of you.°

VIOLA

Then think you right. I am not what I am.

OLIVIA

I would you were as I would have you be.

VIOLA

Would it be better, madam, than I am?

I wish it might, for now I am your fool.°

OLIVIA

O, what a deal of scorn looks beautiful

In the contempt and anger of his lip.

A murd'rous guilt shows not itself more soon

Than love that would seem hid: love's night is noon.° 150

Cesario, by the roses of the spring,

By maidhood,° honor, truth, and everything,

I love thee so that, maugre° all thy pride,

Nor wit nor reason can my passion hide.

Do not extort thy reasons from this clause,° 155

For that° I woo, thou therefore hast no cause;°

But rather reason thus with reason fetter,

Love sought is good, but given unsought is better.

VIOLA

By innocence I swear, and by my youth,

I have one heart, one bosom, and one truth, 160

And that no woman has; nor never none

Shall mistress be of it, save I alone.

And so adieu, good madam. Never more

Will I my master's tears to you deplore.

OLIVIA

Yet come again; for thou perhaps mayst move 165

That heart which now abhors to like his love. *Exeunt.*Scene II. [Olivia's house.]Enter Sir TOBY, Sir ANDREW, and FABIAN.

ANDREW No, faith, I'll not stay a jot longer.

TOBY Thy reason, dear venom; give thy reason.

FABIAN You must needs yield° your reason, Sir Andrew.

ANDREW Marry, I saw your niece do more favors to s the count's servingman than ever she bestowed upon me. I saw't i' th' orchard.TOBY Did she see thee the while, old boy? Tell me that.

ANDREW As plain as I see you now. 170

FABIAN This was a great argument° of love in her toward you.

ANDREW 'Slight, will you make an ass o' me?

141 That . . . are That you think you are in love with a man, and are not 142 If . . . you Olivia misconstrues Viola's remark to mean that she is out of her mind 146 I am
. . . fool you are making a fool of me 150 love's . . .
noon love is apparent even when it is hidden 152 maid-
hood maidenhood 153 maugre despite 155 clause premise
156 For that that because; cause i.e., to accept my love
III.ii.3 yield give 11 great argument strong evidence

FABIAN I will prove it legitimate,° sir, upon the oaths of judgment and reason. 15

140 TOBY And they have been grand-jurymen since before Noah was a sailor.

FABIAN She did show favor to the youth in your sight only to exasperate you, to awake your dormouse° valor, to put fire in your heart and brimstone in your 20 liver. You should then have accosted her, and with some excellent jests, fire-new from the mint, you should have banged the youth into dumbness. This was looked for at your hand, and this was balked.°
The double guilt° of this opportunity you let time wash 25 off, and you are now sailed into the North of my lady's opinion,° where you will hang like an icicle on a Dutchman's beard° unless you do redeem it by some laudable attempt either of valor or policy.°

ANDREW And't be any way, it must be with valor; for 30 policy I hate. I had as lief be a Brownist° as a politician.°

TOBY Why then, build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valor. Challenge me the count's youth to fight with him; hurt him in eleven places. My niece shall take note of it, and assure thyself there is no love- 35 broker in the world can° more prevail in man's commendation with woman than report of valor.

FABIAN There is no way but this, Sir Andrew.

ANDREW Will either of you bear me a challenge to
him? 40

TOBY Go, write it in a martial hand. Be curst° and brief; it is no matter how witty, so it be eloquent and full of invention. Taunt him with the license of ink.°
If thou thou'st° him some thrice, it shall not be amiss;
and as many lies as will lie in thy sheet of paper, 45 although the sheet were big enough for the bed of Ware° in England, set 'em down. Go about it. Let there be gall enough in thy ink, though thou write with a goose-pen, no matter. About it!

ANDREW Where shall I find you? 50

TOBY We'll call thee at the cubiculo.° Go.

Exit Sir ANDREW.

FABIAN This is a dear manikin° to you, Sir Toby.

TOBY I have been dear to him,° lad, some two thousand strong or so.

FABIAN We shall have a rare letter from him, but 55
you'll not deliver't?

TOBY Never trust me then; and by all means stir on the youth to an answer. I think oxen and wainropes° cannot hale them together. For Andrew, if he were opened, and you find so much blood in his liver as will 60 clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of th' anatomy.°

14 legitimate valid 19 dormouse i.e., sleepy 24 balked let slip 25 gilt plating 26-27 the . . . opinion her frosty disdain 27-28 an . . . beard perhaps an allusion to the arctic voyage (1596-97) of the Dutchman Willem Barents, an account of which was registered for publication in 1598 29 policy intrigue, trickery 31 Brownist follower of William Browne, a reformer who advocated the separation of church and state; politician schemer 36 can that can 41 curst petulant 43 license of ink freedom that writing permits 44 thou'st use the familiar thou instead of the more formal you 46-47 bed of Ware famous bedstead, almost eleven feet square, formerly in an inn at Ware in Hertfordshire 51 cubiculo little chamber 52 manikin puppet 53 been . . . him spent his money 58 wainropes wagon ropes 61 anatomy
cadaver

FABIAN And his opposite,^o the youth, bears in his visage no great presage of cruelty.

Enter MARIA.

TOBY Look where the youngest wren^o of mine^o comes. 65

MARIA If you desire the spleen,^o and will laugh yourselves into stitches, follow me. Yond gull Malvolio is turned heathen, a very renegado; for there is no Christian that means to be saved by believing rightly can ever believe such impossible passages of grossness.^o 70 He's in yellow stockings.

TOBY And cross-gartered?

MARIA Most villainously; like a pedant that keeps a school i' th' church. I have dogged him like his murderer. He does obey every point of the letter that 75 I dropped to betray him. He does smile his face into more lines than is in the new map with the augmentation of the Indies.^o You have not seen such a thing as 'tis. I can hardly forbear hurling things at him. I know my lady will strike him. If she do, he'll smile, and 80 take't for a great favor.

TOBY Come bring us, bring us where he is.

Exeunt omnes.

Scene III. [A street.]

Enter SEBASTIAN and ANTONIO.

SEBASTIAN

I would not by my will have troubled you;
But since you make your pleasure of your pains,
I will no further chide you.

ANTONIO

I could not stay behind you. My desire
(More sharp than filèd steel) did spur me forth; 5
And not all love to see you (though so much
As might have drawn one to a longer voyage)
But jealousy^o what might befall your travel,
Being skillless in^o these parts; which to a stranger,
Unguided and unfriended, often prove 10
Rough and unhospitable. My willing love,
The rather by these arguments of fear,^o
Set forth in your pursuit.

SEBASTIAN

My kind Antonio,
I can no other answer make but thanks,
And thanks, and ever oft good turns^o 15
Are shuffled off with such uncurrent^o pay.
But, were my worth^o as is my conscience firm,

You should find better dealing. What's to do?
Shall we go see the relics of this town?

ANTONIO

Tomorrow, sir; best first go see your lodging. 20

SEBASTIAN

I am not weary, and 'tis long to night.
I pray you let us satisfy our eyes
With the memorials and the things of fame
That do renown this city.

ANTONIO

Would you'd pardon^o me. 25
I do not without danger walk these streets.
Once in a sea-fight 'gainst the count his galleys^o
I did some service; of such note indeed
That, were I ta'en here, it would scarce be answered.^o

SEBASTIAN

Belike you slew great number of his people?

ANTONIO

Th' offense is not of such a bloody nature, 30
Albeit the quality^o of the time and quarrel
Might well have given us bloody argument.^o
It might have since been answered^o in repaying
What we took from them, which for traffic's^o sake
Most of our city did. Only myself stood out; 35
For which, if I be lapsèd^o in this place,
I shall pay dear.

SEBASTIAN Do not then walk too open.

ANTONIO

It doth not fit me. Hold, sir, here's my purse.
In the south suburbs at the Elephant^o
Is best to lodge. I will bespeak our diet,^o 40
Whiles^o you beguile the time and feed your knowledge
With viewing of the town. There shall you have^o me.

SEBASTIAN

Why I your purse?

ANTONIO

Haply your eye shall light upon some toy^o
You have desire to purchase, and your store^o 45
I think is not for idle markets,^o sir.

SEBASTIAN

I'll be your purse-bearer, and leave you for An hour.

ANTONIO To th' Elephant.

SEBASTIAN I do remember. Exeunt.

Scene IV. [Olivia's garden.]

Enter OLIVIA and MARIA.

OLIVIA

I have sent after him. He says he'll come:^o
How shall I feast him? What bestow of^o him?
For youth is bought more oft than begged or borrowed.
I speak too loud. Where's Malvolio? He is sad and 5 civil,^o

24 pardon excuse 26 count his galleys count's warships 28 answered defended 31 quality circumstances 32 argu- ment cause 33 answered compensated 34 traffic's trade's
36 lapsèd surprised and apprehended 39 Elephant an inn
40 bespeak our diet arrange for our meals 41 Whiles while 42 have find 44 toy trifle 45 store wealth 46 idle markets unnecessary purchases
III.iv.1 He . . . come suppose he says he'll come 2 of on 4 sad and civil grave and formal

62 opposite adversary 64 youngest wren smallest of small birds; mine most editors adopt Theobald's emendation "nine"
66 spleen a fit of laughter 70 impossible . . . grossness improbabilities 77-78 new . . . Indies presumably a map, prepared under the supervision of Richard Hakluyt and others and published about 1600, that employed the principles of projection and showed North America and the East Indies in fuller detail than any earlier map; it was conspicuous for the rhumb lines marking the meridians

III.iii.8 jealousy anxiety 9 skillless in unacquainted with 12 The . . . fear reinforced by my solicitude for your safety 15 And thanks . . . turns the fact that this line is a foot too short has prompted a wide variety of emendations, the most popular of which has been Theobald's "And thanks, and ever thanks; and oft good turns"; later Folios omit this and the following line altogether 16 uncurrent worthless 17 worth resources

And suits well for a servant with my fortunes. 5
Where is Malvolio?

MARIA He's coming, madam, but in very strange manner. He is sure possessed,^o madam.

OLIVIA Why, what's the matter? Does he rave?

MARIA No, madam, he does nothing but smile. Your 10 ladyship were best to have some guard about you if he come, for sure the man is tainted in 's wits.

OLIVIA

Go call him hither. I am as mad as he,
If sad and merry madness equal be.

Enter MALVOLIO.

How now, Malvolio? 15

MALVOLIO Sweet lady, ho, ho!

OLIVIA Smil'st thou? I sent for thee upon a sad^o occasion.

MALVOLIO Sad, lady? I could be sad. This does make some obstruction in the blood, this cross-gartering; 20 but what of that? If it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true sonnet^o is, "Please one, and please all."^o

OLIVIA Why, how dost thou, man? What is the matter with thee? 25

MALVOLIO Not black in my mind, though yellow in my legs. It did come to his hands, and commands shall be executed. I think we do know the sweet Roman hand.^o

OLIVIA Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio? 30

MALVOLIO To bed? Ay, sweetheart, and I'll come to thee.

OLIVIA God comfort thee. Why dost thou smile so,
and kiss thy hand so oft?

MARIA How do you, Malvolio? 35

MALVOLIO At your request? Yes, nightingales answer
daws!^o

MARIA Why appear you with this ridiculous boldness before my lady?

MALVOLIO "Be not afraid of greatness." 'Twas well 40 writ.

OLIVIA What mean'st thou by that, Malvolio?

MALVOLIO "Some are born great."

OLIVIA Ha?

MALVOLIO "Some achieve greatness." 45

OLIVIA What say'st thou?

MALVOLIO "And some have greatness thrust upon them."

OLIVIA Heaven restore thee!

MALVOLIO "Remember who commended thy yellow 50 stockings."

OLIVIA Thy yellow stockings?

MALVOLIO "And wished to see thee cross-gartered."

OLIVIA Cross-gartered?

MALVOLIO "Go to, thou art made, if thou desir'st to 55 be so."

8 possessed with a devil, mad 17 sad serious 22 sonnet any short lyric poem 22-23 Please one . . . all so long as I please the one I love I do not care about the rest (from "A prettie newe Ballad, intytuled: The Crow sits vpon the wall, Please one and please all") 28-29 sweet Roman hand italic writing, an elegant cursive script more fashionable than the crabbed
"secretary hand" commonly used in Shakespeare's time 36-37
At . . . daws Should I reply to a mere servant like you? Yes, for sometimes nightingales answer jackdaws

OLIVIA Am I made?

MALVOLIO "If not, let me see thee a servant still."

OLIVIA Why, this is very midsummer madness.^o

Enter SERVANT.

SERVANT Madam, the young gentleman of the Count 60
Orsino's is returned. I could hardly entreat him back.
He attends your ladyship's pleasure.

OLIVIA I'll come to him. [Exit SERVANT.] Good
Maria, let this fellow be looked to. Where's my cousin Toby? Let some of my people have a special care of 65 him. I would not have him miscarry^o for the half of my dowry. Exit [OLIVIA, accompanied by MARIA].

MALVOLIO O ho, do you come near me^o now? No worse man than Sir Toby to look to me. This concurs directly with the letter. She sends him on purpose, 70 that I may appear stubborn^o to him; for she incites me to that in the letter. "Cast thy humble slough," says she; "be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants;
let thy tongue tang with arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity." And consequently sets 75 down the manner how: as, a sad face, a reverend carriage, a slow tongue, in the habit^o of some sir^o of note, and so forth. I have limed^o her; but it is Jove's doing, and Jove make me thankful. And when she went away now, "Let this fellow^o be looked to." 80
"Fellow." Not "Malvolio," nor after my degree,^o but "fellow." Why, everything adheres together, that no dram^o of a scruple,^o no scruple of a scruple, no obstacle, no incredulous or unsafe^o circumstance—what can be said? Nothing that can be can come between me and 85 the full prospect of my hopes. Well, Jove, not I, is the doer of this, and he is to be thanked.

Enter [Sir] TOBY, FABIAN, and MARIA.

TOBY Which way is he, in the name of sanctity? If all the devils of hell be drawn in little,^o and Legion^o himself possessed him, yet I'll speak to him. 90

FABIAN Here he is, here he is! How is't with you, sir?

TOBY How is't with you, man?^o

MALVOLIO Go off; I discard you. Let me enjoy my private.^o Go off.

MARIA Lo, how hollow the fiend speaks within him! 95 Did not I tell you? Sir Toby, my lady prays you to have a care of him.

MALVOLIO Aha, does she so?

TOBY Go to, go to; peace, peace; we must deal gently with him. Let me alone. How do you, Malvolio? 100
How is't with you? What, man, defy the devil?
Consider, he's an enemy to mankind.

59 midsummer madness extreme folly, Midsummer Eve (June 23) being traditionally associated with irresponsible and eccentric behavior 66 miscarry come to harm 68 come near me begin to understand my importance 71 stubborn hostile 77 habit clothing; sir personage 78 limed caught (as birds are caught with sticky birdlime) 80 fellow (1) menial (2) associate (the sense in which Malvolio takes the word) 81 after my degree according to my status 83 dram (1) minute part (2) apothecary's measure for one-eighth of an ounce; scruple (1) doubt (2) apothecary's measure for one-third of a dram 84 incredulous or unsafe incredible or doubtful 89 in little in small compass; Legion a group of devils (see Mark 5:8-9) 92 How . . . man the Folio implausibly assigns this speech to Fabian, but the contemptuous
"man" suggests that the speaker must be Malvolio's social superior 94 private privacy

MALVOLIO Do you know what you say?

MARIA La you, and you speak ill of the devil, how he takes it at heart. Pray God he be not bewitched. 105

FABIAN Carry his water to th' wise woman.°

MARIA Marry, and it shall be done tomorrow morning if I live. My lady would not lose him for more than I'll say.

MALVOLIO How now, mistress?

MARIA O Lord.

TOBY Prithee hold thy peace. This is not the way. Do you not see you move° him? Let me alone with him.

FABIAN No way but gentleness; gently, gently. The fiend is rough° and will not be roughly used. 115

TOBY Why, how now, my bawcock?° How dost thou, chuck?°

MALVOLIO Sir.

TOBY Ay, biddy, come with me. What, man, 'tis not for gravity to play at cherry-pit with Satan.° Hang 120 him, foul collier!°

MARIA Get him to say his prayers; good Sir Toby, get him to pray.

MALVOLIO My prayers, minx?

MARIA No, I warrant you, he will not hear of 125 godliness.

MALVOLIO Go hang yourselves all! You are idle° shallow things; I am not of your element.° You shall know more hereafter. Exit.

TOBY Is't possible? 130

FABIAN If this were played upon a stage now, I could condemn it as an improbable fiction.

TOBY His very genius° hath taken the infection of the device, man.

MARIA Nay, pursue him now, lest the device take air 135 and taint.°

FABIAN Why, we shall make him mad indeed.

MARIA The house will be the quieter.

TOBY Come, we'll have him in a dark room and bound. My niece is already in the belief that he's mad. 140 We may carry it° thus, for our pleasure and his penance, will our very pastime, tired out of breath, prompt us to have mercy on him; at which time we will bring the device to the bar and crown thee for a finder of madmen. But see, but see. 145

Enter Sir ANDREW.

FABIAN More matter for a May morning.°

ANDREW Here's the challenge; read it. I warrant there's vinegar and pepper in't.

FABIAN Is't so saucy?°

ANDREW Ay, is't, I warrant him. Do but read. 150

TOBY Give me. [Reads.] "Youth, whatsoever thou art, thou art but a scurvy fellow."

FABIAN Good, and valiant.

TOBY [Reads.] "Wonder not nor admire° not in thy

106 Carry . . . woman for analysis 113 move agitate 115 rough violent 116 bawcock fine fellow (French beau coq)

117 chuck chick 119-20 'tis . . . Satan it is unsuitable for a man of your dignity to play a children's game with Satan

121 collier vendor of coals 127 idle trifling 128 element sphere 133 genius nature, personality 135-36 take . . .

taint be exposed and spoiled 141 carry it go on with the joke 146 More . . . morning Another subject for a May Day pageant 149 saucy with "vinegar and pepper" 154

admire marvel

mind why I do call thee so, for I will show thee no 155 reason for't."

FABIAN A good note that keeps you from the blow of the law.

TOBY [Reads.] "Thou com'st to the Lady Olivia, and in my sight she uses thee kindly. But thou liest in thy 160 throat; that is not the matter I challenge thee for."

110 FABIAN Very brief, and to exceeding good sense—less.

TOBY [Reads.] "I will waylay thee going home; where if it be thy chance to kill me"— 165

FABIAN Good.

TOBY [Reads.] "Thou kill'st me like a rogue and a villain."

FABIAN Still you keep o' th' windy side of the law.° Good. 170

TOBY [Reads.] "Fare thee well, and God have mercy upon one of our souls. He may have mercy upon mine, but my hope is better, and so look to thyself. Thy friend, as thou usest him, and thy sworn enemy, Andrew Aguecheek." 175

If this letter move him not, his legs cannot. I'll give't him.

MARIA You may have very fit occasion for't. He is now in some commerce° with my lady and will by and by depart. 180

TOBY Go, Sir Andrew. Scout me for him at the corner of the orchard like a bum-baily.° So soon as ever thou see'st him, draw; and as thou draw'st, swear horrible; for it comes to pass oft that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent sharply twanged off, gives man- 185 hood more approbation° than ever proof° itself would have earned him. Away!

ANDREW Nay, let me alone for swearing.° Exit.

TOBY Now will not I deliver his letter; for the behavior of the young gentleman gives him out to be of 190 good capacity and breeding; his employment between his lord and my niece confirms no less. Therefore this letter, being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth. He will find it comes from a clodpoll.° But, sir, I will deliver his challenge by word 195 of mouth, set upon Aguecheek a notable report of valor, and drive the gentleman (as I know his youth will aptly receive it) into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury, and impetuosity. This will so fright them both that they will kill one another by the look, 200 like cockatrices.°

Enter OLIVIA and VIOLA.

FABIAN Here he comes with your niece. Give them way till he take leave, and presently after him.°

TOBY I will meditate the while upon some horrid message for a challenge. 205

[Exeunt Sir TOBY, FABIAN, and MARIA.]

OLIVIA

I have said too much unto a heart of stone

169 o' . . . law safe from prosecution 179 commerce conversation 182 bum-baily bailiff, sheriff's officer 186 approbation attestation; proof actual trial 188 let . . . swearing do not worry about my ability at swearing 195 clodpoll dunce 201 cockatrices fabulous serpents that could kill with a glance 202-03 Give . . . him Do not interrupt them until he goes, and then follow him at once

And laid mine honor too unchary° on't.
There's something in me that reproves my fault;
But such a headstrong potent fault it is
That it but mocks reproof.

VIOLA

With the same havior° that your passion bears
Goes on my master's griefs.

OLIVIA

Here, wear this jewel° for me; 'tis my picture.
Refuse it not; it hath no tongue to vex you.
And I beseech you come again tomorrow.
What shall you ask of me that I'll deny,
That honor, saved, may upon asking give?

VIOLA

Nothing but this: your true love for my master.

OLIVIA

How with mine honor may I give him that
Which I have given to you?

VIOLA

I will acquit you.

OLIVIA

Well, come again tomorrow. Fare thee well.
A fiend like thee° might bear my soul to hell. [Exit.]

Enter [Sir] TOBY and FABIAN.

TOBY Gentleman, God save thee.

VIOLA And you, sir.

TOBY That defense thou hast, betake thee to't. Of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him, I know not; but thy interceptor, full of despite,° bloody as the hunter,° attends° thee at the orchard end.
Dismount thy tuck,° be yare° in thy preparation, for thy assailant is quick, skillful, and deadly.

VIOLA You mistake, sir. I am sure no man hath any quarrel to me. My remembrance is very free and clear from any image of offense done to any man.

TOBY You'll find it otherwise, I assure you. Therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your guard; for your opposite° hath in him what youth, strength, skill, and wrath can furnish man withal.°

VIOLA I pray you, sir, what is he?

TOBY He is knight, dubbed with unhatched° rapier and on carpet consideration,° but he is a devil in private brawl. Souls and bodies hath he divorced three; and his incensement at this moment is so implacable that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death and sepulcher. "Hob, nob"° is his word;
"give't or take't."

VIOLA I will return again into the house and desire some conduct° of the lady. I am no fighter. I have heard of some kind of men that put quarrels purposely on others to taste° their valor. Belike this is a man of that quirk.

TOBY Sir, no. His indignation derives itself out of a very competent° injury; therefore get you on and 207 unchary carelessly 211 havior behavior 213 jewel jeweled locket (?) 222 like thee with your attractions 227 despite defiance 227-28 bloody . . . hunter bloodthirsty as a hunting dog 228 attends awaits 229 Dismount thy tuck unsheathe your rapier; yare quick, prompt 236 opposite adversary 237 withal with 239 unhatched unhacked 240 on carpet consideration not because of his exploits in the field but through connections at court 244 Hob, nob have it, or have it not 247 conduct escort 249 taste test 252 competent sufficient give him his desire. Back you shall not to the house, unless you undertake that with me which with as much safety you might answer him. Therefore on, or strip your sword stark naked; for meddle° you must, that's certain, or forswear to wear iron about you.

VIOLA This is as uncivil as strange. I beseech you do me this courteous office, as to know of the knight what my offense to him is. It is something of my negligence,° nothing of my purpose.

TOBY I will do so. Signior Fabian, stay you by this gentleman till my return. Exit [Sir] TOBY.

VIOLA Pray you, sir, do you know of this matter?

FABIAN I know the knight is incensed against you, even to a mortal arbitrament;° but nothing of the circumstance more.

VIOLA I beseech you, what manner of man is he?

FABIAN Nothing of that wonderful promise, to read him by his form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his valor. He is indeed, sir, the most skillful, bloody, and fatal opposite that you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria. Will you walk towards him? I will make your peace with him if I can.

VIOLA I shall be much bound to you for't. I am one that had rather go with sir priest than sir knight. I care not who knows so much of my mettle.° Exeunt.

Enter [Sir] TOBY and [Sir] ANDREW.

TOBY Why, man, he's a very devil; I have not seen such a firago.° I had a pass° with him, rapier, scabbard, and all, and he gives me the stuck-in° with such a mortal motion° that it is inevitable; and on the answer° he pays you as surely as your feet hits the ground they step on. They say he has been fencer to the sophy.°

ANDREW Pox on't, I'll not meddle with him.

TOBY Ay, but he will not now be pacified. Fabian can scarce hold him yonder.

ANDREW Plague on't, and I thought he had been valiant, and so cunning in fence,° I'd have seen him damned ere I'd have challenged him. Let him let the matter slip, and I'll give him my horse, gray Capilet.

TOBY I'll make the motion.° Stand here; make a good show on't. This shall end without the perdition of souls.° [Aside.] Marry, I'll ride your horse as well as I ride you.

Enter FABIAN and VIOLA.

I have his horse to take up° the quarrel. I have persuaded him the youth's a devil.

FABIAN He is as horribly conceited of him,° and pants and looks pale, as if a bear were at his heels.

TOBY There's no remedy, sir; he will fight with you

256 meddle engage him, fight 260-61 of my negligence unintentional 266 mortal arbitrament deadly trial 277 mettle character, disposition 277 s.d. Exeunt this stage direction, which leaves the stage empty, properly marks the ending of the scene, but the new scene that opens with the entrance of Sir Toby and Sir Andrew is not indicated as such in the Folio 279 firago virago (probably a phonetic spelling); pass bout 280 stuck-in stoccado, thrust 281 mortal motion deadly pass 282 answer return 284 sophy shah 289 in fence at fencing 292 motion proposal 293-94 perdition of souls loss of life 296 take up settle 298 He
. . . him Cesario has just as terrifying a notion of Sir Andrew for's oath^o sake. Marry, he hath better bethought him of his quarrel,^o and he finds that now scarce to be worth talking of. Therefore draw for the supportance of his vow.^o He protests he will not hurt you.

VIOLA [Aside.] Pray God defend me! A little thing 305 would make me tell them how much I lack of a man.

FABIAN Give ground if you see him furious.

TOBY Come, Sir Andrew, there's no remedy. The gentleman will for his honor's sake have one bout with you; he cannot by the duello^o avoid it; but he 310 has promised me, as he is a gentleman and a soldier, he will not hurt you. Come on, to't.

ANDREW Pray God he keep his oath!

[Draws.]

Enter ANTONIO.

VIOLA

I do assure you 'tis against my will.

[Draws.]

ANTONIO

Put up your sword. If this young gentleman 315 Have done offense, I take the fault on me; If you offend him, I for him defy you.

TOBY You, sir? Why, what are you?

ANTONIO [Draws.]

One, sir, that for his love dares yet do more Than you have heard him brag to you he will. 320

TOBY Nay, if you be an undertaker,^o I am for you.

[Draws.]

Enter OFFICERS.

FABIAN O good Sir Toby, hold. Here come the officers.

TOBY [To ANTONIO.] I'll be with you anon.

VIOLA [To Sir ANDREW.] Pray, sir, put your sword 325 up, if you please.

ANDREW Marry, will I, sir; and for that^o I promised you, I'll be as good as my word. He will bear you easily, and reins well.

FIRST OFFICER This is the man; do thy office.^o 330

SECOND OFFICER

Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit Of Count Orsino.

ANTONIO You do mistake me, sir.

FIRST OFFICER

No, sir, no jot. I know your favor^o well, Though now you have no sea-cap on your head. Take him away. He knows I know him well. 335

ANTONIO

I must obey. [To VIOLA.] This comes with seeking you.

But there's no remedy; I shall answer it.^o

What will you do, now my necessity

Makes me to ask you for my purse? It grieves me

Much more for what I cannot do for you 340

Than what befalls myself. You stand amazed, But be of comfort.

SECOND OFFICER Come, sir, away.

ANTONIO

I must entreat of you some of that money.

VIOLA

What money, sir?

For the fair kindness you have showed me here, 345

And part^o being prompted by your present trouble, Out of my lean and low ability

I'll lend you something. My having is not much.

I'll make division of my present^o with you.

Hold, there's half my coffer.^o

ANTONIO

Will you deny me now? 350

Is't possible that my deserts to you

Can lack persuasion?^o Do not tempt my misery,

Lest that it make me so unsound^o a man

As to upbraid you with those kindnesses

That I have done for you.

VIOLA

I know of none, 355

Nor know I you by voice or any feature.

315 I hate ingratitude more in a man

Than lying, vainness,^o babbling, drunkenness,

Or any taint of vice whose strong corruption

Inhabits our frail blood.

ANTONIO

O heavens themselves! 360

SECOND OFFICER

Come, sir, I pray you go.

ANTONIO

Let me speak a little. This youth that you see here

I snatched one half out of the jaws of death;

Relieved him with such sanctity of love,

And to his image, which methought did promise 365

Most venerable^o worth, did I devotion.

FIRST OFFICER

What's that to us? The time goes by. Away.

ANTONIO

But, O, how vild^o an idol proves this god!

Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature^o shame.

In nature there's no blemish but the mind;^o 370

None can be called deformed but the unkind.^o

Virtue is beauty; but the beauteous evil

Are empty trunks,^o o'erflourished^o by the devil.

FIRST OFFICER

The man grows mad; away with him! Come, come, sir.

ANTONIO Lead me on. Exit, [with OFFICERS]. 375

VIOLA

Methinks his words do from such passion fly

That he believes himself; so do not I.

Prove true, imagination, O, prove true,

That I, dear brother, be now ta'en for you!

TOBY Come hither, knight; come hither, Fabian. 380

We'll whisper o'er a couplet or two of most sage saws.^o

346 part partly 349 present present resources 350 coffer chest, i.e., money 351-52 deserts . . . persuasion claims on you can fail to be persuasive 353 unsound weak, unmanly 358 vainness (1) falseness (2) boasting 366 venerable worthy of veneration 368 vild vile 369 feature shape, external appearance 370 mind as distinguished from body or "feature" 371 unkind unnatural 373 trunks chests; o'erflourished decorated with carving and painting 381-82 sage saws wise maxims

301 oath oath's 302 his quarrel the cause of his resentment 303-04 draw . . . vow make a show of valor merely for the satisfaction of his oath 310 duello duelling code 321 an undertaker one who takes up a challenge for another (with perhaps a pun on undertaker as a government agent, i.e., scoundrel) 327 for that as for what (i.e., his horse, "gray Capilet") 330 office duty 333 favor face 337 answer it try to defend myself against the accusation

VIOLA

He named Sebastian. I my brother know
Yet living in my glass.° Even such and so
In favor was my brother, and he went
Still in this fashion, color, ornament,
For him I imitate. O, if it prove,
Tempests are kind, and salt waves fresh in love!

[Exit.]

TOBY A very dishonest° paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare. His dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian.

FABIAN A coward, a most devout coward; religious in it.°

ANDREW 'Slid,° I'll after him again and beat him.

TOBY Do; cuff him soundly, but never draw thy sword.

ANDREW And I do not—

FABIAN Come, let's see the event.°

TOBY I dare lay any money 'twill be nothing yet.°
Exit, [with Sir ANDREW and FABIAN].

A C T I V

Scene I. [Before Olivia's house.]

Enter SEBASTIAN and CLOWN.

CLOWN Will you make me believe that I am not sent for you?

SEBASTIAN Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow.
Let me be clear of thee.

CLOWN Well held out,° i' faith! No, I do not know you; nor I am not sent to you by my lady, to bid you come speak with her; nor your name is not Master Cesario; nor this is not my nose neither. Nothing that is so is so.

SEBASTIAN I prithee vent thy folly somewhere else.
Thou know'st not me.

CLOWN Vent my folly! He has heard that word of some great man, and now applies it to a fool. Vent my folly! I am afraid this great lubber,° the world, will prove a cockney.° I prithee now, ungird thy strangeness,° and tell me what I shall vent° to my lady. Shall
I vent to her that thou art coming?

SEBASTIAN I prithee, foolish Greek,° depart from me.
There's money for thee. If you tarry longer, I shall give worse payment.

CLOWN By my troth, thou hast an open hand. These wise men that give fools money get themselves a good report—after fourteen years' purchase.°

Enter [Sir] ANDREW, [Sir] TOBY, and FABIAN.

384 living . . . glass staring at me from my mirror 389 dishonest dishonorable 393-94 religious in it dedicated to his cowardice (following "devout") 395 'Slid by God's eyelid 399 event outcome 400 yet after all IV.i.5 held out maintained 14 lubber lout 15 cockney affected fop 15-16 ungird thy strangeness abandon your silly pretense (of not recognizing me) 16 vent say 18 Greek buffoon 23 after . . . purchase after a long delay, at a high price

ANDREW Now, sir, have I met you again? There's for
you!

[Strikes SEBASTIAN.]

SEBASTIAN Why, there's for thee, and there, and there!

[Strikes Sir ANDREW.]

Are all the people mad?

TOBY Hold, sir, or I'll throw your dagger o'er the house.

[Seizes SEBASTIAN.]

CLOWN This will I tell my lady straight.° I would not be in some of your coats for twopence. [Exit.]

TOBY Come on, sir; hold.

ANDREW Nay, let him alone. I'll go another way to work with him. I'll have an action of battery against him,° if there be any law in Illyria. Though I stroke° him first, yet it's no matter for that.

SEBASTIAN Let go thy hand.

TOBY Come, sir, I will not let you go. Come, my young soldier, put up your iron. You are well fleshed.°
Come on.

SEBASTIAN

I will be free from thee. [Frees himself.] What wouldst thou now?

If thou dar'st tempt me further, draw thy sword.

TOBY What, what? Nay then, I must have an ounce or two of this malapert° blood from you.

[Draws.]

Enter OLIVIA.

OLIVIA

Hold, Toby! On thy life I charge thee hold!

TOBY Madam.

OLIVIA

Will it be ever thus? Ungracious wretch,
Fit for the mountains and the barbarous caves,
Where manners ne'er were preached! Out of my sight!
Be not offended, dear Cesario.
Rudesby,° begone.

[Exeunt Sir TOBY, Sir ANDREW, and FABIAN.]

I prithee gentle friend,

Let thy fair wisdom, not thy passion, sway°
In this uncivil° and unjust extent°
Against thy peace. Go with me to my house,
And hear thou there how many fruitless pranks
This ruffian hath botched up,° that thou thereby Mayst smile at this. Thou shalt not choose but go.
Do not deny. Beshrew° his soul for me.
He started° one poor heart° of mine, in thee.

SEBASTIAN

What relish is in this?° How runs the stream?
Or° I am mad, or else this is a dream.

31 straight straightaway, at once 35-36 have . . . him charge him with assaulting me 36 stroke struck 40 well fleshed made eager for fighting by having tasted blood 45 malapert saucy 52 Rudesby ruffian 53 sway rule 54 uncivil barbarous; extent display 57 botched up clumsily contrived 59 Beshrew curse 60 started roused; heart with a pun on hart 61 What . . . this What does this mean?
62 Or either

Let fancy still my sense in Lethe° steep;
If it be thus to dream, still let me sleep!

OLIVIA

Nay, come, I prithee. Would thou'dst be ruled by me! 65

SEBASTIAN

Madam, I will.

OLIVIA

O, say so, and so be.

Exeunt.

Scene II. [Olivia's house.]

Enter MARIA and CLOWN.

MARIA Nay, I prithee put on this gown and this beard; make him believe thou art Sir Topas° the curate; do it quickly. I'll call Sir Toby the whilst.°

[Exit.]

CLOWN Well, I'll put it on, and I will dissemble° myself in't, and I would I were the first that ever 5 dissembled in such a gown. I am not tall enough to become the function° well, nor lean enough to be thought a good student;° but to be said an honest man and a good housekeeper° goes as fairly as to say a careful° man and a great scholar. The competitors° 10 enter.

Enter [Sir] TOBY [and MARIA].

TOBY Jove bless thee, Master Parson.

CLOWN Bonos dies,° Sir Toby; for, as the old hermit of Prague,° that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a niece of King Gorboduc,° "That that is is"; 15 so, I, being Master Parson, am Master Parson; for what is "that" but that, and "is" but is?

TOBY To him, Sir Topas.

CLOWN What ho, I say. Peace in this prison!

TOBY The knave counterfeits well; a good knave.° 20

MALVOLIO within.

MALVOLIO Who calls there?

CLOWN Sir Topas the curate, who comes to visit Malvolio the lunatic.

MALVOLIO Sir Topas, Sir Topas, good Sir Topas, go to my lady. 25

CLOWN Out, hyperbolical° fiend! How vexest thou this man! Talkest thou nothing but of ladies?

TOBY Well said, Master Parson.

MALVOLIO Sir Topas, never was man thus wronged. Good Sir Topas, do not think I am mad. They have 30 laid me here in hideous darkness.

CLOWN Fie, thou dishonest Satan. I call thee by the most modest° terms, for I am one of those gentle ones that will use the devil himself with courtesy. Say'st thou that house° is dark? 35

MALVOLIO As hell, Sir Topas.

CLOWN Why, it hath bay windows transparent as barricadoes,° and the clerestories° toward the south north are as lustrous as ebony; and yet complainest thou of obstruction? 40

MALVOLIO I am not mad, Sir Topas. I say to you this house is dark.

CLOWN Madman, thou errest. I say there is no darkness but ignorance, in which thou art more puzzled than the Egyptians in their fog.° 45

MALVOLIO I say this house is as dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell; and I say there was never man thus abused. I am no more mad than you are. Make the trial of it in any constant question.°

CLOWN What is the opinion of Pythagoras° concerning wild fowl? 50

MALVOLIO That the soul of our grandam might happily° inhabit a bird.

CLOWN What think'st thou of his opinion?

MALVOLIO I think nobly of the soul and no way approve his opinion. 55

CLOWN Fare thee well. Remain thou still in darkness. Thou shalt hold th' opinion of Pythagoras ere I will allow of thy wits,° and fear to kill a woodcock,° lest thou dispossess the soul of thy grandam. Fare thee 60 well.

MALVOLIO Sir Topas, Sir Topas!

TOBY My most exquisite Sir Topas!

CLOWN Nay, I am for all waters.°

MARIA Thou mightst have done this without thy beard and gown. He sees thee not. 65

TOBY To him in thine own voice, and bring me word how thou find'st him. [To MARIA.] I would we were well rid of this knavery. If he may be conveniently delivered,° I would he were; for I am now so far in 70 offense with my niece that I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot.° [To the CLOWN.] Come by and by to my chamber. Exit [with MARIA].

CLOWN [Sings.]

"Hey, Robin, jolly Robin,
Tell me how thy lady does."° 75

MALVOLIO Fool.

CLOWN "My lady is unkind, perdie."°

MALVOLIO Fool.

CLOWN "Alas, why is she so?"

MALVOLIO Fool, I say. 80

CLOWN "She loves another." Who calls, ha?

MALVOLIO Good fool, as ever thou wilt deserve well at my hand, help me to a candle, and pen, ink, and paper. As I am a gentleman, I will live to be thankful to thee for't. 85

CLOWN Master Malvolio?

MALVOLIO Ay, good fool.

CLOWN Alas, sir, how fell you besides your five wits?°

38 barricadoes barricades; clerestories upper windows 45
Egyptians . . . fog to plague the Egyptians Moses brought a "thick darkness" that lasted three days; see Exodus 10:21-23
49 constant question consistent topic, normal conversation 50 Pythagoras ancient Greek philosopher who expounded the doctrine of the transmigration of souls 53 happily haply, perhaps 59 allow . . . wits acknowledge your sanity;
woodcock a proverbially stupid bird 64 I . . . waters I can turn my hand to any trade 70 delivered released 72 upshot conclusion 74-75 Hey . . . does the Clown sings an old ballad 77 perdie certainly 88 how . . . wits how did you happen to become mad

63 Lethe in classical mythology, the river of oblivion in Hades
IV.ii.2 Sir Topas the ridiculous hero of Chaucer's Rime of Sir Thopas, a parody of chivalric romances 3 the whilst meanwhile 4 dissemble disguise 7 function clerical office 8 student student 9 good housekeeper solid citizen 10 careful painstaking; competitors confederates 13 Bonos dies good day 13-14 old . . . Prague apparently the Clown's nonsensical invention 15 King Gorboduc a legendary king of Britain 20 knave fellow 26 hyperbolical boisterous (a term from rhetoric meaning "exaggerated in style") 33 most modest mildest 35 house madman's cell

MALVOLIO Fool, there was never man so notoriously^o abused. I am as well in my wits, fool, as thou art. 90
 CLOWN But as well? Then you are mad indeed, if you be no better in your wits than a fool.
 MALVOLIO They have here propertied me;^o keep me in darkness, send ministers to me, asses, and do all they can to face me out of my wits.^o 95
 CLOWN Advise you^o what you say. The minister is here.^o—Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore. Endeavor thyself to sleep and leave thy vain bibble babble.
 MALVOLIO Sir Topas. 100
 CLOWN Maintain no words with him, good fellow.—Who, I, sir? Not I, sir. God buy you,^o good Sir Topas.—Marry, amen.—I will, sir, I will.
 MALVOLIO Fool, fool, fool, I say!
 CLOWN Alas, sir, be patient. What say you, sir? I am 105 shent^o for speaking to you.
 MALVOLIO Good fool, help me to some light and some paper. I tell thee, I am as well in my wits as any man in Illyria.
 CLOWN Well-a-day that you were,^o sir. 110
 MALVOLIO By this hand, I am. Good fool, some ink, paper, and light; and convey what I will set down to my lady. It shall advantage thee more than ever the bearing of letter did.
 CLOWN I will help you to't. But tell me true, are you 115 not mad indeed, or do you but counterfeit?^o
 MALVOLIO Believe me, I am not. I tell thee true.
 CLOWN Nay, I'll ne'er believe a madman till I see his brains. I will fetch you light and paper and ink.
 MALVOLIO Fool, I'll requite it in the highest degree. 120 I prithee be gone.
 CLOWN [Sings.]
 I am gone, sir.
 And anon, sir,
 I'll be with you again,
 In a trice, 125
 Like to the old Vice,^o
 Your need to sustain.^o
 Who with dagger of lath,
 In his rage and his wrath,
 Cries "Ah ha" to the devil. 130
 Like a mad lad,
 "Pare thy nails, dad."
 Adieu, goodman devil.^o Exit.

Scene III. [Olivia's garden.]Enter SEBASTIAN.

89 notoriously outrageously 93 propertied me used me as a mere object, not a human being 95 face . . . wits impudently insist that I am mad 96 Advise you consider carefully 96–97 The . . . here for the next few lines the Clown uses two voices, his own and that of Sir Topas 102 God buy you God be with you, i.e., good-bye 106 shent rebuked 110 Well-a-day . . . were alas, if only you were 116 counterfeit pretend 126 Vice in the morality plays, a stock mischievous character who usually carried a wooden dagger 127 Your . . . sustain in order to help you resist the devil 133 Adieu, goodman devil a much emended line; "goodman" (Folio "good man"), a title for a yeoman or any man of substance not of gentle birth, roughly corresponds to our "mister"

SEBASTIAN

This is the air; that is the glorious sun;
 This pearl she gave me, I do feel't and see't;
 And though 'tis wonder that enwraps me thus,
 Yet 'tis not madness. Where's Antonio then?
 I could not find him at the Elephant; 5
 Yet there he was,^o and there I found this credit,^o
 That he did range the town to seek me out.
 His counsel now might do me golden service;
 For though my soul disputes well with my sense^o
 That this may be some error, but no madness, 10
 Yet doth this accident and flood of fortune
 So far exceed all instance,^o all discourse,^o
 That I am ready to distrust mine eyes
 And wrangle with my reason that persuades me
 To any other trust^o but that I am mad, 15
 Or else the lady's mad. Yet, if 'twere so,
 She could not sway^o her house, command her followers,
 Take and give back affairs and their dispatch^o
 With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing
 As I perceive she does. There's something in't 20
 That is deceivable.^o But here the lady comes.

Enter OLIVIA and PRIEST.

OLIVIA

Blame not this haste of mine. If you mean well,
 Now go with me and with this holy man
 Into the chantry by.^o There, before him,
 And underneath that consecrated roof, 25
 Plight me the full assurance of your faith,
 That my most jealous^o and too doubtful soul
 May live at peace. He shall conceal it
 Whiles^o you are willing it shall come to note,^o
 What time we will our celebration keep^o 30
 According to my birth. What do you say?

SEBASTIAN

I'll follow this good man and go with you
 And having sworn truth, ever will be true.

OLIVIA

Then lead the way, good father, and heavens so shine
 That they may fairly note^o this act of mine. Exeunt. 35

A C T V

Scene I. [Before Olivia's house.]Enter CLOWN and FABIAN.FABIAN Now as thou lov'st me, let me see his^o letter.

CLOWN Good Master Fabian, grant me another request.

FABIAN Anything.

IV.iii.6 was had been; credit belief 9 my soul . . . sense my reason agrees with the evidence of my senses 12 instance precedent; discourse reason 15 trust belief 17 sway rule 18 Take . . . dispatch assume and discharge the management of affairs 21 deceivable deceptive 24 chantry by nearby chapel 27 jealous jealous, anxious 29 Whiles until; come to note be made public 30 our celebration keep celebrate our marriage ceremony (as distinguished from the formal compact of betrothal) 35 fairly note look with favor on V.i.i his Malvolio's

CLOWN Do not desire to see this letter. 5
 FABIAN This is to give a dog, and in recompense desire my dog again.

Enter DUKE, VIOLA, CURIO, and LORDS.

DUKE Belong you to the Lady Olivia, friends?
 CLOWN Ay, sir, we are some of her trappings.
 DUKE I know thee well. How dost thou, my good 10
 fellow?
 CLOWN Truly, sir, the better for my foes, and the worse for my friends.
 DUKE Just the contrary: the better for thy friends.
 CLOWN No, sir, the worse. 15
 DUKE How can that be?
 CLOWN Marry, sir, they praise me and make an ass of me. Now my foes tell me plainly I am an ass; so that by my foes, sir, I profit in the knowledge of myself, and by my friends I am abused;° so that, conclusions 20 to be as kisses,° if your four negatives° make your two affirmatives,° why then, the worse for my friends, and the better for my foes.
 DUKE Why, this is excellent.
 CLOWN By my troth, sir, no, though it please you to 25 be one of my friends.
 DUKE Thou shalt not be the worse for me. There's gold.
 CLOWN But that it would be double-dealing,° sir, I would you could make it another. 30
 DUKE O, you give me ill counsel.
 CLOWN Put your grace° in your pocket, sir, for this once, and let your flesh and blood obey it.
 DUKE Well, I will be so much a sinner to be a double-dealer. There's another.° 35
 CLOWN Primo, secundo, tertio° is a good play;° and the old saying is "The third pays for all." The triplex,° sir, is a good tripping measure; or the bells of Saint Bennet,° sir, may put you in mind—one, two, three.
 DUKE You can fool no more money out of me at this 40 throw.° If you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.
 CLOWN Marry, sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. I go, sir; but I would not have you to think 45 that my desire of having is the sin of covetousness.
 But, as you say, sir, let your bounty take a nap; I will awake it anon. Exit.

Enter ANTONIO and OFFICERS.

VIOLA
 Here comes the man, sir, that did rescue me.

DUKE
 That face of his I do remember well; 50
 Yet when I saw it last, it was besmeared
 As black as Vulcan° in the smoke of war.

20 abused deceived 20–21 conclusions . . . kisses if conclusions may be compared to kisses (when a coy girl's repeated denials really mean assent) 21 negatives lips (?) 22 affirmatives i.e., mouths (?) 29 double-dealing (1) giving twice (2) duplicity 32 grace (1) title of nobility (2) generosity 35 another i.e., coin 36 Primo, secundo, tertio one, two, three; play child's game (?) 37 triplex triple time in dancing 38–39 Saint Bennet Saint Benedict (a church) 41 throw throw of the dice 52 Vulcan Roman god of fire and patron of blacksmiths

A baubling° vessel was he captain of,
 For shallow draught and bulk unprizable,°
 With which such scathful° grapple did he make 55
 With the most noble bottom° of our fleet
 That very envy and the tongue of loss°
 Cried fame and honor on him. What's the matter?

FIRST OFFICER

Orsino, this is that Antonio
 That took the Phoenix and her fraught° from Candy;° 60
 And this is he that did the Tiger board
 When your young nephew Titus lost his leg.
 Here in the streets, desperate of shame and state,°
 In private brabble° did we apprehend him.

VIOLA

He did me kindness, sir; drew on my side;° 65
 But in conclusion put strange speech upon me.°
 I know not what 'twas but distraction.°

DUKE

Notable° pirate, thou salt-water thief,
 What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies
 Whom thou in terms so bloody and so dear° 70
 Hast made thine enemies?

ANTONIO

Orsino, noble sir,
 Be pleased that I shake off these names you give me.
 Antonio never yet was thief or pirate,
 Though I confess, on base and ground enough,
 Orsino's enemy. A witchcraft drew me hither. 75
 That most ingrateful boy there by your side
 From the rude sea's enraged and foamy mouth
 Did I redeem. A wrack° past hope he was.
 His life I gave him, and did thereto add
 My love without retention or restraint, 80
 All his in dedication. For his sake
 Did I expose myself (pure° for his love)
 Into the danger of this adverse° town;
 Drew to defend him when he was beset;
 Where being apprehended, his false cunning 85
 (Not meaning to partake with me in danger)
 Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,°
 And grew a twenty years removed thing
 While one would wink; denied me mine own purse,
 Which I had recommended° to his use 90
 Not half an hour before.

VIOLA

How can this be?

DUKE

When came he to this town?

ANTONIO

Today, my lord; and for three months before,
 No int'rim, not a minute's vacancy,
 Both day and night did we keep company. 95

Enter OLIVIA and ATTENDANTS.

53 baubling insignificant 54 For . . . unprizable virtually worthless on account of its small size 55 scathful destructive 56 bottom ship 57 very . . . loss even enmity and the voice of the losers 60 fraught freight, cargo; Candy Candia, Crete 63 desperate . . . state recklessly disregarding his shameful past behavior and the requirements of public order 64 brabble brawl 65 drew . . . side drew his sword in my defense 66 put . . . me spoke to me oddly 67 distraction madness 68 Notable notorious 70 dear grievous 78 wrack wreck 82 pure purely 83 adverse unfriendly 87 to . . . acquaintance brazenly to deny any knowledge of me 90 recommended given

DUKE

Here comes the countess; now heaven walks on earth.
But for° thee, fellow: fellow, thy words are madness.
Three months this youth hath tended upon me;
But more of that anon. Take him aside.

OLIVIA

What would my lord, but that° he may not have,
Wherein Olivia may seem serviceable?
Cesario, you do not keep promise with me.

VIOLA Madam?

DUKE

Gracious Olivia—

OLIVIA

What do you say, Cesario?—Good my lord°—

VIOLA

My lord would speak; my duty hushes me.

OLIVIA

If it be aught to the old tune, my lord,
It is as fat and fulsome° to mine ear
As howling after music.

DUKE

Still so cruel?

OLIVIA

Still so constant, lord.

DUKE

What, to perverseness? You uncivil lady,
To whose ingrate and unauspicious° altars
My soul the faithfull'st off'rings have breathed out
That e'er devotion tendered. What shall I do?

OLIVIA

Even what it please my lord, that shall become him.

DUKE

Why should I not, had I the heart to do it,
Like to th' Egyptian thief° at point of death,
Kill what I love?—a savage jealousy
That sometime savors nobly. But hear me this:
Since you to non-regardance° cast my faith,
And that° I partly know the instrument
That screws° me from my true place in your favor,
Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still.
But this your minion, whom I know you love,
And whom, by heaven I swear, I tender° dearly,
Him will I tear out of that cruel eye
Where he sits crownèd in his master's spite.
Come, boy, with me. My thoughts are ripe in mischief.
I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love
To spite a raven's heart within a dove. [Going.]

VIOLA

And I, most jocund, apt,° and willingly,
To do you rest° a thousand deaths would die.
[Following.]

OLIVIA

Where goes Cesario?

VIOLA

After him I love

More than I love these eyes, more than my life,
More, by all mores,° than e'er I shall love wife.
If I do feign, you witnesses above
Punish my life for tainting of my love!

OLIVIA

Ay me detested, how am I beguiled!

VIOLA

Who does beguile you? Who does do you wrong?

OLIVIA

Hast thou forgot thyself? Is it so long?

Call forth the holy father. [Exit an ATTENDANT.]

DUKE

[To VIOLA.] Come, away!

OLIVIA

Whither, my lord? Cesario, husband, stay.

DUKE

Husband?

OLIVIA

Ay, husband. Can he that deny?

DUKE

Her husband, sirrah?°

VIOLA

No, my lord, not I.

OLIVIA

Alas, it is the baseness of thy fear

That makes thee strangle thy propriety.°

Fear not, Cesario; take thy fortunes up;

Be that thou know'st thou art, and then thou art

As great as that° thou fear'st.

Enter PRIEST.

O, welcome, father!

Father, I charge thee by thy reverence

Here to unfold—though lately we intended

To keep in darkness what occasion now

Reveals before 'tis ripe—what thou dost know

Hath newly passed between this youth and me.

PRIEST

A contract° of eternal bond of love,

Confirmed by mutual joinder of your hands,

Attested by the holy close of lips,

Strength'ned by interchangement of your rings;

And all the ceremony of this compact°

Sealed in my function,° by my testimony;

Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my grave

I have traveled but two hours.

DUKE

O thou dissembling cub, what wilt thou be

When time hath sowed a grizzle on thy case?°

Or will not else thy craft° so quickly grow

That thine own trip° shall be thine overthrow?

Farewell, and take her; but direct thy feet

Where thou and I, henceforth, may never meet.

VIOLA

My lord, I do protest.

OLIVIA

O, do not swear.

Hold little° faith, though thou hast too much fear.

Enter Sir ANDREW.

97 But for as for 100 but that except that which (i.e., my love) 105 Good my lord i.e., please be silent (so Cesario may speak) 108 fat and fulsome gross and repulsive 112 ingrate and unauspicious ungrateful and unpropitious 117 th' Egyptian thief in Heliodorus' Ethiopica, a Greek romance translated by Thomas Underdown about 1569, the bandit Thyamis, besieged in a cave, plans to kill the captive princess Charicleia, the object of his hopeless love; but in the darkness he kills another woman instead 120 non-regardance neglect 121 that since 122 screws forces 125 tender hold 131 apt readily 132 do you rest give you peace

135 mores possible comparisons 144 sirrah customary form of address to a menial 146 strangle thy propriety deny your identity 149 that him who (i.e., the duke) 155 contract betrothal 159 compact accent on second syllable 160 Sealed . . . function ratified by me in my priestly office 164 a . . . case gray hairs on your skin 165 craft duplicity 166 trip craftiness 170 little at least a little

ANDREW For the love of God, a surgeon! Send one presently° to Sir Toby.

OLIVIA What's the matter?

ANDREW H' as° broke my head across, and h' as given Sir Toby a bloody coxcomb° too. For the love of God, 175 your help! I had rather than forty pound I were at home.

OLIVIA Who has done this, Sir Andrew?

ANDREW The count's gentleman, one Cesario. We took him for a coward, but he's the very devil in- 180 cardinate.°

DUKE My gentleman Cesario?

ANDREW Od's lifelings,° here he is! You broke my head for nothing; and that that I did, I was set on to do't by Sir Toby. 185

VIOLA

Why do you speak to me? I never hurt you.
You drew your sword upon me without cause,
But I bespake you fair° and hurt you not.

Enter [Sir] TOBY and CLOWN.

ANDREW If a bloody coxcomb be a hurt, you have hurt me. I think you set nothing by a bloody coxcomb. 190 Here comes Sir Toby halting;° you shall hear more. But if he had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates° than he did.

DUKE How now, gentleman? How is't with you?

TOBY That's all one! H' as hurt me, and there's th' 195 end on't. Sot,° didst see Dick Surgeon, sot?

CLOWN O, he's drunk, Sir Toby, an hour ago. His eyes were set° at eight i' th' morning.

TOBY Then he's a rogue and a passy measures pavin.° I hate a drunken rogue. 200

OLIVIA Away with him! Who hath made this havoc with them?

ANDREW I'll help you, Sir Toby, because we'll be dressed° together.

TOBY Will you help—an ass-head and a coxcomb and 205 a knave, a thin-faced knave, a gull?

OLIVIA Get him to bed, and let his hurt be looked to.

[Exeunt CLOWN, FABIAN, Sir TOBY, and Sir ANDREW.]

Enter SEBASTIAN.

SEBASTIAN

I am sorry, madam, I have hurt your kinsman;
But had it been the brother of my blood,
I must have done no less with wit and safety.° 210
You throw a strange regard° upon me, and by that I do perceive it hath offended you.
Pardon me, sweet one, even for the vows
We made each other but so late ago.

DUKE

One face, one voice, one habit,° and two persons— 215
A natural perspective° that is and is not.

SEBASTIAN

Antonio, O my dear Antonio,
How have the hours racked and tortured me
Since I have lost thee!

ANTONIO

Sebastian are you?

SEBASTIAN Fear'st thou° that, Antonio? 220

ANTONIO

How have you made division of yourself?
An apple cleft in two is not more twin
Than these two creatures. Which is Sebastian?

OLIVIA

Most wonderful.

SEBASTIAN

Do I stand there? I never had a brother; 225
Nor can there be that deity in my nature
Of here and everywhere.° I had a sister,
Whom the blind waves and surges have devoured.
Of charity,° what kin are you to me?
What countryman? What name? What parentage? 230

VIOLA

Of Messaline; Sebastian was my father;
Such a Sebastian was my brother too;
So went he suited° to his watery tomb.
If spirits can assume both form and suit,°
You come to fright us.

SEBASTIAN A spirit I am indeed, 235

But am in that dimension grossly clad
Which from the womb I did participate.°
Were you a woman, as the rest goes even,°
I should my tears let fall upon your cheek
And say, "Thrice welcome, drownèd Viola!" 240

VIOLA

My father had a mole upon his brow.

SEBASTIAN

And so had mine.

VIOLA

And died that day when Viola from her birth
Had numb'ed thirteen years.

SEBASTIAN

O, that record° is lively in my soul! 245
He finishèd indeed his mortal act
That day that made my sister thirteen years.

VIOLA

If nothing lets° to make us happy both
But this my masculine usurped attire, 250
Do not embrace me till each circumstance
Of place, time, fortune do cohere and jump°
That I am Viola; which to confirm,
I'll bring you to a captain in this town,

172 presently immediately 174 H' as he has 175 coxcomb pate 180-81 incardinate incarnate 183 Od's lifelings by God's life 188 bespake you fair addressed you courteously 191 halting limping 193 othergates otherwise 196 Sot fool 198 set closed 199 passy measures pavin passamezzo pavan, a slow and stately dance of eight bars (hence its relevance to the surgeon whose eyes had "set at eight") 203-04 be dressed have our wounds dressed 210 with . . . safety with a sensible regard for my safety 211 strange regard unfriendly look

215 habit costume 216 A natural perspective a natural optical illusion (like that produced by a stereoscope, which converts two images into one) 220 Fear'st thou do you doubt 226-27 Nor . . . everywhere nor can I, like God, be everywhere at once 229 Of charity out of simple kindness 233 suited clothed 234 form and suit body and clothing 236-37 am . . . participate clothed in the bodily form that, like other mortals, I acquired at birth 238 as . . . even as other circumstances seem to indicate 245 record history (accent on second syllable) 248 lets interferes 251 cohere and jump fall together and agree

Where lie my maiden weeds;° by whose gentle help
I was preserved to serve this noble count.
All the occurrence of my fortune since
Hath been between this lady and this lord.

SEBASTIAN [To OLIVIA.]

So comes it, lady, you have been mistook.
But nature to her bias drew° in that.
You would have been contracted to a maid;
Nor are you therein, by my life, deceived:
You are betrothed both to a maid and man.

DUKE

Be not amazed; right noble is his blood.
If this be so, as yet the glass° seems true,
I shall have share in this most happy wrack.

[To VIOLA.]

Boy, thou hast said to me a thousand times
Thou never shouldst love woman like to me.

VIOLA

And all those sayings will I over° swear,
And all those swearings keep as true in soul
As doth that orbèd continent° the fire
That severs day from night.

DUKE

Give me thy hand,

And let me see thee in thy woman's weeds.

VIOLA

The captain that did bring me first on shore
Hath my maid's garments. He upon some action
Is now in durance, at Malvolio's suit,°
A gentleman, and follower of my lady's.

OLIVIA

He shall enlarge° him. Fetch Malvolio hither.
And yet alas, now I remember me,
They say, poor gentleman, he's much distract.

Enter CLOWN with a letter, and FABIAN.

A most extracting° frenzy of mine own
From my remembrance clearly banished his.
How does he, sirrah?

CLOWN Truly, madam, he holds Belzebub at the stave's end° as well as a man in his case° may do.
H' as here writ a letter to you; I should have given't you today morning. But as a madman's epistles are no gospels, so it skills° not much when they are delivered.

OLIVIA Open't and read it.

CLOWN Look then to be well edified, when the fool delivers the madman. [Reads in a loud voice.] "By the Lord, madam"—

OLIVIA How now? Art thou mad?

CLOWN No, madam, I do but read madness. And your ladyship will have it as it ought to be, you must allow vox.°

OLIVIA Prithee read i' thy right wits.

254 weeds clothes 259 nature . . . drew nature followed her normal inclination 264 glass the "natural perspective" of line 216 268 over repeatedly 270 orbèd continent in Ptolemaic astronomy, the sphere of the sun 274-75
He . . . suit at Malvolio's instigation he is now imprisoned upon some legal charge 277 enlarge release 280 extracting obliterating (in that it draws me from all thoughts of Malvolio's "frenzy") 283-84 he . . . end he keeps the fiend at a distance 284 case condition 287 skills matters 296
vox an appropriately loud voice

CLOWN So I do, madonna; but to read his right wits is to read thus. Therefore perpend,° my princess, and give ear.

OLIVIA [To FABIAN.] Read it you, sirrah.

FABIAN [Reads.] "By the Lord, madam, you wrong me, and the world shall know it. Though you have put me into darkness, and given your drunken cousin rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my senses as well as your ladyship. I have your own letter that induced me to the semblance I put on; with the which I doubt not but to do myself much right, or you much shame. Think of me as you please. I leave my duty a little unthought of, and speak out of my injury.
The madly used Malvolio."

OLIVIA Did he write this?

CLOWN Ay, madam.

DUKE This savors not much of distraction.

OLIVIA

See him delivered, Fabian; bring him hither.

[Exit FABIAN.]

My lord, so please you, these things further thought on,
To think me as well a sister as a wife,
One day shall crown th' alliance on't, so please you,
Here at my house and at my proper° cost.

DUKE

Madam, I am most apt° t' embrace your offer.

[To VIOLA.]

Your master quits° you; and for your service done
him,
So much against the mettle of your sex,
So far beneath your soft and tender breeding,
And since you called me master for so long,
Here is my hand; you shall from this time be
Your master's mistress.

OLIVIA

A sister; you are she.

Enter [FABIAN, with] MALVOLIO.

DUKE

Is this the madman?

OLIVIA

Ay, my lord, this same.

How now, Malvolio?

MALVOLIO

Madam, you have done me wrong,
Notorious° wrong.

OLIVIA

Have I, Malvolio? No.

MALVOLIO

Lady, you have. Pray you peruse that letter.

You must not now deny it is your hand.

Write from it° if you can, in hand or phrase,

Or say 'tis not your seal, not your invention.°

You can say none of this. Well, grant it then,

And tell me, in the modesty of honor,°

Why you have given me such clear lights of favor,

Bade me come smiling and cross-gartered to you,

To put on yellow stockings, and to frown

Upon Sir Toby and the lighter° people;

And, acting this in an obedient hope,

299 perpend pay attention 319 proper own 320 apt ready 321 quits releases 329 Notorious notable 332 from it differently 333 invention composition 335 in . . . honor with a proper regard to your own honor 339 lighter lesser

Why have you suffered me to be imprisoned,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious geck and gull°
That e'er invention played on? Tell me why.

OLIVIA

Alas, Malvolio, this is not my writing,
Though I confess much like the character;
But, out of° question, 'tis Maria's hand.
And now I do bethink me, it was she
First told me thou wast mad; then cam'st in smiling,
And in such forms which here were presupposed°
Upon thee in the letter. Prithee be content.
This practice hath most shrewdly passed° upon thee;
But when we know the grounds and authors of it,
Thou shalt be both the plaintiff and the judge
Of thine own cause.

FABIAN

Good madam, hear me speak,

And let no quarrel, nor no brawl to come,
Taint the condition of this present hour,
Which I have wond'ered at. In hope it shall not,
Most freely I confess myself and Toby
Set this device against Malvolio here,
Upon some stubborn and uncourteous parts°
We had conceived against him. Maria writ
The letter, at Sir Toby's great importance,°
In recompense whereof he hath married her.
How with a sportful malice it was followed
May rather pluck on° laughter than revenge,
If that° the injuries be justly weighed
That have on both sides passed.

OLIVIA

Alas, poor fool,° how have they baffled° thee!

CLOWN Why, "some are born great, some achieve 370 greatness, and some have greatness thrown upon them." I was one, sir, in this interlude,° one Sir Topas, sir; but that's all one. "By the Lord, fool, I am not mad!" But do you remember, "Madam, why laugh you at such a barren rascal? And you smile not, he's 375 gagged"? And thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenges.

343 geck and gull fool and dupe 347 out of beyond 350 presupposed imposed 352 This . . . passed this trick has most mischievously worked 361 Upon . . . parts because of some unyielding and discourteous traits of character 363 importance importunity 366 pluck on prompt 367 If that if 369 fool here, a term of affection and compassion; baffled publicly humiliated 372 interlude little play

MALVOLIO I'll be revenged on the whole pack of
you!
[Exit]

OLIVIA

He hath been most notoriously abused.

380

DUKE

345 Pursue him and entreat him to a peace.
He hath not told us of the captain yet.
When that is known, and golden time convents,°
A solemn combination shall be made
Of our dear souls. Meantime, sweet sister,
350 We will not part from hence. Cesario, come—
For so you shall be while you are a man,
But when in other habits you are seen,
Orsino's mistress and his fancy's° queen.

385

Exeunt [all but the CLOWN].

CLOWN sings.°

When that I was and a° little tiny boy,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
A foolish thing was but a toy,°
For the rain it raineth every day.

390

But when I came to man's estate,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
'Gainst knaves and thieves men shut their gate,
For the rain it raineth every day.

395

But when I came, alas, to wive,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
By swaggering could I never thrive,
For the rain it raineth every day.

400

But when I came unto my beds,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
With tosspots° still had drunken heads,
For the rain it raineth every day.

405

A great while ago the world begun,
Hey, ho, the wind and the rain;
But that's all one, our play is done,
And we'll strive to please you every day.

[Exit.]

383 convents is suitable (?) 389 fancy's love's 389 s.d.
Clown sings since no source has been found for the Clown's song—which certain editors have inexplicably denounced as doggerel—we may assume that it is Shakespeare's 390 and a a 392 toy trifle 404 tosspots sots

THE TRAGEDY OF HAMLET

PRINCE OF DENMARK

EDITED BY EDWARD HUBLER

Introduction

Tragedy of the first order is a rare phenomenon. It came into being in Greece in the fifth century B.C., where it flourished for a while, and it did not appear again until some two thousand years later when Shakespeare wrote Hamlet in 1600. The second incarnation of the spirit of tragedy differs greatly from the first in form and method. In Shakespeare the comic and the serious are not dissociated. His brightest moments pass quickly into shadow, and laughter often illuminates his darkest scenes. The comic and the tragic stand side by side, giving us a fuller view of the thing observed, neither canceling out the other. A hallmark of Shakespeare's mature work is its simultaneity, the presentation of things and their opposites at the same time. Coleridge called him "myriad-minded." There had been an alternation of the dark and the light in English drama almost from the beginning, but it remained for Shakespeare to make each a part of the other. He was able to do so because he knew that the difference between comedy and tragedy has nothing to do with subject matter. Each is a way of looking at life. Neither gives us a total view of life, nor does Shakespeare in his use of both; but he approaches totality more closely than any other dramatist.

In Hamlet we laugh at the affected and superficial Osric (this is a lightening before the storm), and we are amused by the garrulous Polonius, whose inadequate worldly wisdom stands in contrast to the deeper truths the play reveals. But the most central use of comedy is Hamlet's mordant wit. His

Thrift, thrift, Horatio. The funeral baked meats
Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables (I.ii.180-81) emphasizes his revulsion at his mother's hasty remarriage. His near-hysteria after the Ghost makes its revelation underlines the degree to which the revelation has disturbed him. The audience may laugh at things such as these, but the laughter is not merry. And there will be no laughter at all when, at the close of Hamlet's interview with his mother, he drags the body of Polonius to the exit, remarking, "I'll lug the guts into the neighbor room." Then he pauses at the threshold to say, "Good night, Mother." And he says it with all the tenderness he has, for she has looked into her soul and repented, and in the contest with the king she is now on Hamlet's side. Mother and son are again at one. Bringing this about has been the essential business of the scene, and the dragging of the body (though the body must somehow be removed) is in no way necessary to it. Yet this bit of grotesquerie adds to the multiplicity of the scene's effects without in any way detracting from its deep seriousness.

It was Aristotle's belief that a well-constructed plot should be single in issue, and that if any one action were to be displaced or removed, the whole would be disjointed and disturbed. The action of Hamlet, however, is far from single in issue, and the play can be judiciously cut for presentation on the stage without serious disturbance of the whole. Shakespeare's plays were so cut in his own theater. The First Folio version of Hamlet is based upon the acting version of the play, and it omits some two hundred lines, chiefly reflective passages, which are found in the second quarto. These lines include the soliloquy beginning "How all occasions do inform against me" (IV.iv.32-66). The scene is richer if the soliloquy is included, but its absence does not significantly change the play as a whole. Another passage omitted from the acting version is Hamlet's discourse (I.iv.17-38) on the heavy drinking done in Denmark and the effect of it on the reputation of the Danes. The speech adds little to the action, but in its movement from the particular to the general it helps give the play extension. This is not to suggest that Shakespeare's plays are not unified, but their unity is clearly not Aristotelian.

In a tragedy the hero normally comes to the realization of a truth of which he had been hitherto unaware. There is, as Aristotle has it, "a change from ignorance to knowledge"; but in Greek tragedy this may be little more than the clearing up of a mistaken identity. Not so with the tragedies of Shakespeare's maturity. In Hamlet and King Lear, for instance, there is a transformation in the character of the hero. Toward the close of his play Lear is the opposite of what he had been at the beginning. He has been purged of his arrogance and pride, and the pomp and circumstance of kingship, on which he had placed great store, is to him no more than an interesting spectacle. What matters now is the love of the daughter he had rejected in the first scene. When we first meet Hamlet he is in a state of depression. The world to him is "an unweeded garden" from which he would willingly depart. He has found corruption not only in the state but in existence itself. We soon learn that he had not always been so. Ophelia tells us that he had been the ideal Renaissance prince—a soldier, scholar, courtier, "the glass of fashion and the mold of form." And though we catch glimpses of his former self in his conversations with Horatio, his state of depression continues. By the final scene, however, his composure has returned. He no longer appears in slovenly dress; he apologizes to Laertes, and he treats Claudius with courtesy up to the point at which Gertrude's death discloses the king's treachery and compels him to the act of vengeance.

All this is not simply a return to Hamlet's former self. In the course of the action he has grown in stature and wisdom. He is no longer troubled by reasoning doubts, for he knows now that reason is not enough. An overreliance on reason and a belief in untrammelled free will are hallmarks of the Shakespearean villain; the heroes learn better. In the beginning of the final scene Hamlet is still beset from without and within—"thou wouldst not think how ill all's here about my heart; but it is no matter." And it does not matter, because he has now come to put his trust in providence. Earlier in the scene he had said,

Our indiscretion sometime serves us well
When our deep plots do pall, and that should learn us
There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will. (V.ii.8-11)

This is not, as has been said, "a fatalist's surrender of his personal responsibility." It is the realization that man is not a totally free agent. With this realization Hamlet can face the fencing match and the king's intrigues without concern for self. What matters at the end of an important tragedy is not success or failure, but what a man is. Tragedy of the first order moves into the realm of the human spirit, and at the close we contemplate the nature of man. In this respect Shakespeare and the Greeks are the same, but they reach the end by widely divergent paths. We may consider the path which Shakespeare took.

Early in his career Shakespeare served an apprenticeship to Christopher Marlowe, but he soon surpassed him, and he took the journey from Romeo and Juliet to Hamlet on his own. His first so-called tragedy, Titus Andronicus, is not a tragedy at all. It is a blood-chilling thriller, and, as a recent production at Stratford-upon-Avon demonstrated, an effective one. The management had to have attendants at the theater to minister to the patrons who fainted as the play's horrors were revealed. A like response to tragedy is impossible. Melodrama such as Titus uses horror and grief as entertainment, bringing them as close to the spectator as it can. Tragedy uses them as truth. These, it says, are part of our human heritage, and we must face them. And in the end, partly because they are faced, they lose their terror, and the tragedy passes beyond them. It is not surprising, then, that the greatest tragedies are those involving the greatest horrors, for facing a great horror demands greatness of spirit. This greatness of spirit is what we contemplate at the end of a Shakespearean tragedy. At the close of the tragedy we are not so much concerned with Hamlet or Othello as individuals as with the spirit of man triumphant in defeat.

Shakespeare's next attempt at tragedy brings him to the borders of the tragic realm. There is much macabre action and humor in Richard III, but the horrors are moral as well as physical, and there is an approach to self-recognition in the remorse Richard feels on waking from his ghost-haunted sleep. This is no longer, or at least not altogether, horror as entertainment. In this play Shakespeare mastered and improved upon Marlowe's techniques. In Richard II there is, no doubt, a general indebtedness to Marlowe's Edward II. Both kings are weak men who come to a tragic end. Toward the close of Marlowe's play we sympathize with Edward because he is the underdog and because the people who surround him are worse than he, but toward the end of Richard II we sympathize with the king because adversity has moved him to a kind of self-realization. There is an approach to the recognition scenes of the later tragedies. Shakespeare has brought his weak and self-willed king to a recognition, if only for a time, of his mortality and the humanity he shares with others. Later, Shakespeare was to do this profoundly with Lear. Here he shows us both power politics at work and a transformation in Richard, and in his characterization of Richard he shows us how the transfer of power to Bolingbroke was possible without Bolingbroke's being a villain. He eschews comedy and physical action, not, we may be sure, out of any disregard for them, but because other matters came first. At this stage of his career Shakespeare was not able to do at one time all the things that needed to be done. He was later to do so in Hamlet. In Richard II the primary matters are character and theme. There are impressive tableaux, but there is no action comparable to that of the earlier so-called tragedies.

There is more onstage action in Romeo and Juliet, and almost all of it is integral to character and theme. The hero and heroine meet, fall in love, mature through adversity, and find that, for them, love is of more worth than life. Nor is their ordeal in vain. They have their love, and their deaths bring peace to Verona. There is laughter in the play, but it is aroused by comic characters. The principals are serious throughout. But the play's laughter and vulgarities are not by any means comic relief. They contribute to a background of lust and hatred against which the story of the young lovers stands in contrast. Besides, Shakespeare's romance is never pure; it is always rooted in reality. It is never in danger of "falling upward, as it were, into vacuity." There is a notable mingling of the comic and the serious in Mercutio's death scene. It has comedy, pathos, and irony, all at once—a promise of things to come. Shakespeare seems never to have viewed things simply, and as soon as he acquired the skill, he made contraries and varying aspects of the same thing stand side by side, nothing canceling anything else out. And so it is here. Mercutio's flippancy in no way reduces the pathos and irony of his death.

After Romeo and Juliet Shakespeare turned to comedy and the completion of the historical tetralogy he had begun with Richard II. The last of this series, Henry V, is a fine play of action with England as its subject and England's national hero as its hero, yet it seems to have brought Shakespeare to a dead end. He was at the height of his success and popularity, but he seems not to have been satisfied with the play. He apologizes, and directly too, for the inability of his theater to present the panoply of war. He refers to his stage as "this unworthy scaffold," and to his theater as "this cockpit," "this wooden O," and he begs the audience to imagine what cannot be shown them. Yet in his next serious play he uses the oldest of dramatic conventions—a few soldiers on either side of the stage representing contending armies—without apology. For with this play the essential thing is not the action itself but the idea that it embodies. In Julius Caesar the essential thing, the dramatic thing, is the spirit of man, and this can be portrayed without pageantry. What is needed now are words. What matters now is not so much what a man does but what he is.¹ Brutus is the precursor of tragic heroes to come. As he is brooding on the outcome of the Battle of Philippi, he says,

O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come!
But it sufficeth that the day will end,
And then the end is known. (V.i.122-25)

It might be the voice of Hamlet before the fencing match: "If it be now, 'tis not to come. . . ." In Richard II there is no comedy; now, in Julius Caesar, there are only a few comic puns early in the play. First things first. But although Julius Caesar was Shakespeare's most important achievement to date, it has, perhaps, too great a separation of action and idea. What was needed was a fusion of the two, and this he achieved in Hamlet.²

Hamlet has onstage action in God's plenty. A ghost walks the stage; people are killed by stabbing and poisoning; a young woman runs mad, is drowned offstage, and is buried on stage; two skeletons are dug up and scattered over the stage; armies march, and there is a fencing match that ends in a general slaughter. Yet one scarcely thinks of

¹ In this paragraph I am indebted to "From Henry V to Hamlet," by Harley Granville-Barker, in Aspects of Shakespeare (1933).

² Hamlet was first published in 1603. The play is not mentioned in Francis Meres's Palladis Tamia (1598), which includes a list of Shakespeare's works. Since Meres mentions so minor a work as Titus Andronicus, he would have hardly omitted Hamlet had it existed. And it is almost certain that the Hamlet played by Shakespeare's company in 1594 and 1596 was not Shakespeare's, for he probably was not yet capable of writing the Hamlet we now know; nor is it likely that he revised the story over the better part of a decade, for he worked fast, writing his entire works in the time it took James Joyce to write Finnegans Wake. But there is other evidence to narrow the gap between 1598 and 1603—a definite allusion to Shakespeare's Hamlet in a note written by Gabriel Harvey in his copy of Speght's edition of Chaucer, published in 1598. Such a note might have been written any time between the publication of the book and Harvey's death in 1631, but in the same note he refers to the Earl of Essex in the present tense. Since Essex was executed on February 25, 1601, it appears that the note was written while Essex was alive and before he made his mad attempt to seize the person of the queen on February 7, 1601. During the fall of 1598 and the following winter, Essex was busy preparing his ill-fated foray into Ireland. He returned in September of 1599. Harvey's reference was therefore presumably made between the autumn of 1599 and early 1601, and it is during that time that Hamlet was written. The best date is 1600, which is confirmed by a consideration of Shakespeare's other activities. In 1599 he had rounded out his cycle of history plays with the writing of Henry V. He had recently written The Merry Wives of Windsor (to please Queen Elizabeth, as tradition has it), and he had completed Julius Caesar. He seems to have been looking for new worlds to conquer. He turned to comedy for a while, producing As You Like It and Twelfth Night. Then came the most important play he had yet written, Hamlet.

Hamlet as a play of action. There is some comedy, but it is most often used to intensify the serious matters to which it is germane. There are indecencies that were not put into the play to please the groundlings. They are the opposite of those employed at the opening of Romeo and Juliet to command attention. Hamlet's remarks to Ophelia early in III.ii (the scene of the play-within-the-play) reveal once more his disillusionment with women, and the indecencies of Ophelia's mad songs complete her characterization. Uninhibited in her madness, in a notable anticipation of modern psychology she sings about sex and the father who had dominated her while he lived. To be sure, the play is sometimes diffuse. Everyone is given to generalizing, even the wretched Rosencrantz and Guildenstern. It is, of course, necessary to generalize on the action, and Shakespeare succeeds in doing so; but in the later tragedies he was to do it more compactly. In Hamlet Shakespeare was writing tragedy of the first order for the first time, and perhaps he could not be intellectually aware of how to do it until he had once done it, for he had no models to show him the way. (What little he knew of Greek tragedy was through Roman or other adaptations.) In any case, he knew, in 1600, the heights tragedy could achieve, and he was to achieve them again in the next great tragedies—Othello, King Lear, and Macbeth. There is a saying that Shakespeare never repeats. In most respects it is not true, but it is true that he never repeated his successes. The four great tragedies are as different from each other as plays of the same genre by the same author could be.

In each of the plays the hero is transformed into something he had not been at the beginning of the play. He recognizes that he is other than he was, but in Hamlet the recognition scene is not explicit. Hamlet emerges from his state of depression, and if he did not the play would be a study in pathology rather than a tragedy; but we do not see him emerging from it as we see, for instance, the change taking place in Othello's speech beginning with "Behold I have a weapon . . ." (V.ii.259-82) or in Lear's prayer for the poor:

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your looped and windowed raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these? O, I have ta'en
Too little care of this. (III.iv.28-33)

In this speech Lear is the opposite of the arrogant, unfeeling man he had been at the opening of the play, and we are told that he is. Shakespeare liked to be explicit when he could be. At the end of his play, Hamlet, too, is very different from the man who had earlier longed for death, and contemplated suicide. There is no more "fighting" in his soul; like Lear on his way to prison, he is at peace.

The movement toward Hamlet's regeneration begins with his reflections on the Player's speech about Hecuba; it advances further in the closet scene, and it reaches its culmination in the gravediggers' scene. Although this scene is crowded with action, it is essentially a meditation on the inevitability of death. It begins lightly enough for such a scene, but it grows steadily more serious, more general, and more personal—more personal to Hamlet, and through its increasing generality more personal to us—until in the end it transcends the macabre. At the opening of the scene it is disclosed that someone presumed a suicide is to be buried. Her name is not mentioned, but we know who she is. After some talk about her right to Christian burial, there is a conundrum: "What is he that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter?" And the answer: "a gravemaker. The houses he makes lasts till doomsday." Hamlet and Horatio enter as the digger breaks into a song about advancing age. In the course of the song he digs up a skull, and Hamlet comments on it: "That skull had a tongue in it, and could sing once. How the knave jowls it to the ground, as if 'twere Cain's jawbone, that did the first murder!" Or it might be "the pate of a politician," or a courtier, or "my Lord Such-a-one. . . . And now my Lady Worm's, chapless, and knocked about the mazzard with a sexton's spade." While Shakespeare is thus generalizing about the fact of death, another skull is dug up. It turns out to be the skull of Yorick, the king's jester, and the generalization becomes personal: "I knew him, Horatio, a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy. He hath borne me on his back a thousand times. And now how abhorred in my imagination it is! My gorge rises at it." Here the scene passes beyond comedy, and Shakespeare tells us so: "Where be your gibes now? Your gambols, your songs? . . . Now get you to my lady's chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favor she must come. Make her laugh at that." Hamlet's remarks on the bones are his last comment on the discrepancy between appearance and reality. He is coming to accept reality for what it is. Then as the generalization continues, a funeral procession enters, and Hamlet learns who is to be buried today. He has seen the body of an old friend dug up to make room for the body of the woman he loves. He has looked on death at what is for him its worst. It is after the graveyard scene that the man who had continually brooded on death is able to face it. It seems axiomatic that any horror becomes less horrible once we have looked squarely at it. When we see Hamlet again he can defy augury, for the augurs can foretell only such things as success or failure; but there is nothing, except himself, to prevent a man from facing his own private horror and rising above it. And so it is with Hamlet. When Horatio offers to cancel the fencing match "if your mind dislike anything," he is able to reply, "Not a whit, we defy augury. There is special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come. The readiness is all. Since no man of aught he leaves knows, what is't to leave betimes? Let be." "Readiness" here means both submitting to providence and being in a state of preparation. It is not that death does not matter; it matters very much indeed, but readiness matters more. Shakespeare's tragic heroes do not renounce the world. The dying Hamlet is concerned about the welfare of the state and his own worldly reputation. Such values are never denied, but at the end of the tragedies they are no longer primary values. At such moments the central thing is the spirit of man achieving grandeur.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCES

The story of Hamlet is an ancient one. No doubt it had its origin in one of the family feuds familiar in Northern history and saga. Sailors carried it to Ireland, where it picked up accretions of Celtic folklore and legend, and later returned to Scandinavia to become part of the traditional history of Denmark. It was incorporated into written literature in the second half of the twelfth century when a learned clerk, Saxo Grammaticus, retold it in his Historia Danica. His narrative is a story of early and relatively barbaric times. For instance, the dismembered body of the prototype of Polonius is thrown into an open latrine to be devoured by scavenging hogs, and there is no trace of the ideals of chivalry and courtesy that we find in Shakespeare's play. Still, the basic elements of Shakespeare's plot are there: the killing of the Danish ruler by his brother, the marriage of the brother and the widowed queen, the pretended madness and real craft of the dead king's son, the son's evasion of the sanity tests, his voyage to England with letters bearing his death warrant, his alteration of the letters, his return, and the accomplishment of his revenge. Saxo also gives us, under different names, the chief characters of the story as we know it in Shakespeare: Claudius (Feng), Gertrude (Gerutha), Hamlet (Amlethus), unnamed prototypes of Ophelia, Polonius, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern, and perhaps even of Horatio.

Saxo's narrative circulated widely in manuscript. It was printed in Paris in 1514, reprinted elsewhere, and came in time to the attention of François de Belleforest, who in 1576 told his version of the Hamlet story in the fifth volume of his Histoires Tragiques. He made one notable addition to the story. He states that the queen committed adultery with her brother-in-law during her marriage to the king. This remains in Shakespeare in the ghost's epithet for his brother, "adulterate," and in Hamlet's "He that hath killed my king, and whored my mother," and it operates as part of the motivation for the revulsion which Hamlet sometimes feels for woman-kind. Belleforest's Histoires seems to have been a popular book. His version was translated very badly into English under the title The Hystorie of Hamblet in 1608, too late to serve as a source for Shakespeare. In all likelihood it was called into being by the popularity of Shakespeare's play.

The next version of the Hamlet story was an English play of the 1580's based on Belleforest. It was never printed, and the manuscript seems to be irretrievably lost. Since the late eighteenth century it has been attributed more or less confidently to Thomas Kyd (1557?-1595?). Kyd was a scrivener and playwright, the author of the well-known Spanish Tragedy. His words show some advance over that of his predecessors in the creation of character and, especially, in the manipulation of plot. He could wring from a scene all the melodrama it afforded. Kyd's play on the Hamlet story, if, indeed, it is his, served as the immediate source of Shakespeare's play and is called by scholars the Ur-Hamlet. The first reference to it is found in Thomas Nashe's preface to Robert Greene's Menaphon, 1589. In it Nashe, an established writer, indulged in an attack on certain "trivial translators" and "shifting companions" who "leave the trade of noverint [scribe, copyist] whereto they were born, and busy themselves with the endeavors of art that could scarcely Latinize their neck verse. . . . Yet English Seneca . . . yields many good sentences . . . and if you entreat him fair in a frosty morning, he will afford you whole Hamlets, I should say handfuls of tragical speeches. . . . Seneca, let blood, line by line and page by page, at length must needs die to our stage; which makes his famished followers to imitate the Kid in Aesop . . . and these men to intermeddle with Italian translations." The passage has been much debated, but it seems clear that Nashe, by a pun on Kid, associated the Senecan play of Hamlet with Kyd. The play is next mentioned in the diary of Philip Henslowe, the theatrical producer, who records that a play called Hamlet was performed at the suburban theater of Newington Butts in June, 1594, by the Admiral's and the Chamberlain's Men. It was apparently Henslowe's custom to indicate a new play with the letters "ne," and since there is no such indication at this entry, we may perhaps assume that the play was old; and since the receipts for this performance were only eight shillings, it is possible that Hamlet was no longer popular in the playhouse. It seems likely that this is the play to which Nashe referred.

The play was next referred to by Thomas Lodge in his Wit's Misery, 1596. He speaks there of the "ghost which cried so miserably at The Theater, like an oyster wife, 'Hamlet, revenge.'" The scorn of Lodge's statement suggests that the play was an outmoded one, and his mention of The Theater as the playhouse at which the ghost cried out tells us that the Chamberlain's Men, the theatrical company to which Shakespeare belonged, had taken over the drama, for the playhouse at which they were then playing was called The Theater. The play, then, was the property of Shakespeare's company, and he was free to use the story for his own purposes. Scholars have been assiduous in their attempts to reconstruct the Ur-Hamlet from references to it and from the versions of the story which preceded and followed it. And they have yet another version of the story at hand. There is a German play on the Hamlet story called Der bestrafte Brudermord oder Prinz Hamlet aus Daennemark. It was first printed in 1781 from a manuscript dated 1710. The manuscript has been lost, but the printed version has survived.

We know that a Hamlet was played by English actors at Dresden in 1626 and that there was another performance of the play, probably in German, in 1665. The latter is probably the origin of Der bestrafte Brudermord, a play which, by the eighteenth century, had grossly deteriorated from its original. Still, its dependence on an English Hamlet is certain. We must ask if it derives from an early version by Shakespeare as misrepresented in the first quarto or from the Ur-Hamlet, and the scholars give us a divided answer. The name Corambus of the German version recalls Corambis of the first quarto and suggests that as a source. On the other hand, Corambis may well have been the name in the Ur-Hamlet. There are other similarities to Shakespeare's quarto, but there are great differences from it. The German play opens with a prologue in which Night calls upon the Furies to spur the revenge against the king. This is Senecan rather than Shakespearean. The ghost tells Hamlet that it was reported that he had died of an apoplexy, whereas in the first quarto it was said that he had died of a snake bite. There is no trace of Hamlet's great soliloquies which exist in the first quarto in mangled form. On the whole it seems more likely that Der bestrafte Brudermord derives from the Ur-Hamlet than from the first quarto.

What, then, was the immediate source of Shakespeare's Hamlet like? In answering this question it must be acknowledged that we are not on firm ground, but an informed surmise is better than nothing, provided we remember that we are being tentative. It was Senecan and, in name at least, a tragedy, though in reality a melodrama. A Senecan play would be gory, with the stage cluttered with corpses in the final scene. It was by Thomas Kyd. Why else should Nashe have associated "Kid" and "noverint" with the play? Kyd had been a scrivener, and unlike Nashe, he was not a university man. He had made translations from both Italian and French, and he had turned dramatist. He was able to read Belleforest in French. He knew Seneca intimately. In the play the ghost calls for revenge, and the revengeful ghost is characteristic of Seneca. In Saxo Grammaticus there is no ghost. There is no need for one; the murderer of the king was known to be his brother, and there was, therefore, nothing for the ghost to reveal. The ghost is one of Kyd's contributions to the story. He had used a ghost effectively in his Spanish Tragedy, and he was here repeating one of his successful devices. In the Ur-Hamlet the ghost made the revelation and urged upon Hamlet the obligation of revenge. In Saxo, Hamlet feigned madness in self-protection and in order to get at the person of the king. Kyd retained the pretended madness, but we cannot know what uses he made of it. The play ended, of course, with Hamlet's triumph and death in a bloody massacre.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

Shakespeare's Hamlet comes to us in three versions. The first of them, known as the first quarto, was published in 1603 by N. L. [Nicholas Ling] and John Trundell, who advertised it on the title page as having been played "by his Highness Servants in the City of London, as also in the two universities of Cambridge and Oxford, and elsewhere." This was a pirated edition, published without the consent of the owners, and Shakespeare had nothing to do with it. In the preceding year an attempt had been made to forestall just such a venture. On July 26, 1602, James Roberts, a printer friendly to Shakespeare's company, had entered in the Stationers' Register "A book called The Revenge of Hamlet Prince of Denmark as it was lately acted by the Lord Chamberlain his Servants." This was intended to serve as a kind of copyright. It should be said in passing that "his Highness Servants" were the King's Men and that the Chamberlain's Men became the King's Men on May 19, 1603, when James I took Shakespeare's company under his direct protection.

The copy which Ling and Trundell sent to the printer was an extraordinary hodgepodge, so that the first quarto gives us a very poor notion of Shakespeare's play. How this copy came into being has been the subject of much investigation, but there is little agreement. In general there are three schools of thought: (1) the first quarto is a badly reported version of Hamlet as Shakespeare wrote it once and for all; (2) it is a badly reported version of an early draft of Shakespeare's play; and (3) it was expanded from some actor's parts of an early version of the play. This last seems most likely, since some of the lines, notably those of Marcellus, are accurate, other passages are partially correct, and still others are sheer invention. All three levels are to be found in the soliloquy (III.i.56 ff.) beginning "To be or not to be."

To be or not to be, ay there's the point,
To die, to sleep, is that all? Ay all:
No, to sleep, to dream, ay marry there it goes,
For in that dream of death, when we awake,
And borne before an everlasting judge,
From whence no passenger ever returned,
To undiscovered country, at whose sight
The happy smile, and the accursed damned.
But for this, the joyful hope of this,
Who'd bear the scorns and flattery of the world,
Scorned by the right rich, the rich cursed of the poor?
The widow being oppressed, the orphan wronged,
The taste of hunger, or a tyrant's reign,
And thousand more calamities besides,
To grunt and sweat under this weary life,
When that he may his full quietus make,
With a bare bodkin, who would this endure,
But for a hope of something after death?
Which pulses the brain, and doth confound the sense,
Which makes us rather bear those veils we have,
Than fly to others that we know not of.
Ay that, O this conscience makes cowards of us all,
Lady in thy orisons, be all my sins rememb'red

It is clear that there is a hand other than Shakespeare's in this. That the first quarto is a debased version of an early version of the play is suggested by, most notably, changes in names. Why should Polonius, for instance, become Corambis if the copy were based on the version Shakespeare wrote once and for all?

It was not considered good business to publish a play while it was still popular in the theater, for it could then be acted in the provinces by other than its owners, reducing the public for the play when Shakespeare's company took it on tour. This being so, the publication of the first quarto had done Shakespeare a double injury: the play was in print, and it misrepresented its author. Shakespeare had some leisure at this time, and theaters being closed because of the plague from March 1603 to April 1604. We may suppose that he decided to revise the play and have it printed. In any case, another edition of Hamlet appeared in 1604. The title page seems designed to tell the public that this is the genuine article: "The Tragical History of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark. By William Shakespeare. Newly imprinted and enlarged to almost as much again as it was, according to the true and perfect copy." The statement is literally true. The second quarto is almost twice as long as the first quarto, and although it lacks some passages preserved in the First Folio, the second quarto is the fullest and best version of the play.

The third version of Hamlet is to be found in the First Folio, 1623, the collected edition of Shakespeare's plays made by his friends and associates in the theater, John Heminges and Henry Condell. Here the text is based on the acting version of the play. The Folio gives us some ninety lines not found in the second quarto. These include two passages of considerable length, II.ii.243-74 and II.ii.344-69, but the Folio does not give us some two hundred lines found in the second quarto. These are mostly reflective passages, including Hamlet's last soliloquy,

"How all occasions do inform against me." As befits an acting version, the Folio stage directions are more numerous and frequently are fuller. Modern editions are made by collation of the second quarto and the First Folio and are therefore longer than either of them.

Because the second quarto is the longest version, giving us more of the play as Shakespeare conceived it than either of the others, it serves as the basic version for this text. Unfortunately the printers of it often worked carelessly. Words and phrases are omitted, there are plain misreadings of Shakespeare's manuscript, speeches are sometimes wrongly assigned. It was therefore necessary to turn to the First Folio for many readings. Neither the first quarto nor the second quarto is divided into acts or scenes; the Folio indicates only the following: I.i, I.ii, I.iii, II, II.ii. The present edition, to allow for easy reference, follows the traditional divisions of the Globe edition, placing them (as well as indications of locale) in brackets to indicate that they are editorial, not authorial. Punctuation and spelling are modernized (and is given as an when it means "if"), obvious typographical errors are corrected, abbreviations are expanded, speech prefixes are regularized, and the positions of stage directions are slightly altered where necessary. Other departures from the second quarto are listed below. First is given the adopted reading, in boldface type, and then the second quarto's reading, in roman. The vast majority of these adopted readings are from the Folio; if an adopted reading is not from the Folio, the fact is indicated by a bracketed remark explaining, for example, that it is drawn from the first Quarto [Q1] or the Second Folio [F2] or an editor's conjecture [ed.].

I.i.16 soldier souldiers 63 Polacks [F has "Pollax"] pollax 68 my mine 73 why with; cast cost 88 those these 91 returned returne 94 designed [F2] design 112 mote [ed.] moth 121 feared [ed.] feare 138 you your 140 at it it 142 s.d. Exit Ghost [Q2 omits]

I.ii.1 s.d. Councilors [ed.] Counsaile: as 41 s.d. Exit Voltemand and Cornelius [Q2 omits] 58 He hath Hath 67 so so much 77 good coold 82 shapes [ed.: F has "shewes"] chapes 96 a mind or minde 132 self-slaughter seale slaughter 133 weary wary 137 to this thus 143 would should 149 even she [Q2 omits] 175 to drink deep for to drinke 178 to see to 209 Where, as [ed.] Whereas 224 Indeed, indeed, sirs Indeede Sirs 237 Very like, very like Very like 238 hundred hundreth 257 foul fonde

I.iii.3 convoy is conuay in 12 bulk bulkes 18 For he himself is subject to his birth [Q2 omits] 49 like a a 68 thine thy 74 Are Or 75 be boy 76 loan loue 83 invites inuests 109 Tend'ring [Q1] Wrong [F has "Roaming"] 115 springes springs 123 parley parle 125 tether tider 131 beguile beguide

I.iv.1 shrewdly shroudly 2 a nipping nipping 6 s.d. go [ed.] goes 19 clepe [ed.] clip 27 the [ed.] their 33 Their [ed.] His 36 evil [ed.] eale 57 s.d. Ghost beckons Hamlet Beckins 69 my lord my 70 summit [ed.] somnet [F has "sonnet"] 82 artere [ed.] arture [F has "artire"] 87 imagination imacion

I.v.47 what a what 55 lust but 56 sate sort 64 leperous leaprous 68 posset possesse 91 s.d. Exit [Q2 omits] 95 stiffly swiftly 113 Horatio and Marcellus (Within.) Enter Horatio and Marcellus [Q2 gives the speech to Horatio] 116 bird and 122 heaven, my lord heauen 132 Look you, I'll I will 170 some'er [ed.] so mere [F has "so ere"]

II.i.s.d. Reynaldo or two 28 Faith, no Fayth 38 warrant wit 39 sullies sallies 40 i' th' with 52-53 at "friend or so," and "gentleman" [Q2 omits] 112 quoted coted

II.ii.43 Assure you I assure 57 o'erhasty hastie 58 s.d. Enter Polonius, Voltemand, and Cornelius Enter Embassadors 90 since brevity breuitie 108 s.d. the letter [Q2 omits, but has "letter" at side of line 116] 126 above about 137 winking working 143 his her 148 watch with 149 a lightness lightnes 151 'tis this this 167 s.d. Enter Hamlet reading on a book Enter Hamlet 189 far gone, far gone far gone 203 you yourself your selfe 204 should be shall growe 212 sanity sanctity 214-15 and suddenly . . . between him [Q2 omits] 218 will will not 227 excellent extent 231 overhappy euer happy 232 cap lap 240 but that but the 243-74 Let me question

 . . . dreadfully attended [Q2 omits] 278 even euer 284
 Why anything Any thing 311 a piece peece 317 woman women 328 of me on me 331-32 the clown . . . o' th' sere [from F, but F has "tickled a" for "tickle o'"; Q2 omits] 333 blank black 344-69 Hamlet. How comes . . . load too [Q2 omits] 349 berattle [ed.: F has "be-ratled"; Q2 omits] 356 most like [ed.: F has "like most"; Q2 omits] 380 lest my let me 405-06 tragical-historical, tragical-comical-historical-pastoral [Q2 omits] 433 By'r Lady by lady 437 French falconers friendly Fankners 450 affectation affection 453 tale talke 463 heraldry heraldy 481 Then senseless Ilium [Q2 omits] 488 And like Like 502 fellies [ed.] follies 511 Mobled queen is good [F has "Inobled" for "Mobled"; Q2 omits] 521 husband's husband 526 whe'r [ed.] where 546-47 a need neede 547 or sixteen lines lines, or sixteene lines 551 till tell 559 his visage the visage 564 to Hecuba to her 566 the cue that 585 ha' fatted [F has "have fatted"] a fatted 588 O, vengeance [Q2 omits] 590 father [Q4; Q2 and F omit] 606 devil, and the devil deale, and the deale
 III.i.32-33 myself (lawful espials) Will myself Wee'le 46 loneliness lowliness 55 Let's withdraw with-draw 83 cowards of us all cowards 85 sicklied sickled 92 well, well, well well 107 your honesty you 121 to a nunnery a Nunry
 129 knaves all knaues 138 Go, farewell farewell 145 lisp list
 146-47 your ignorance ignorance 153 expectancy expectation 158 that what 160 feature stature 162 [Q2 concludes the line with a stage direction, "Exit"] 189 unwatched vnmatcht III.ii.1 pronounced pronound 23 own feature feature 27 the which which 29 praise prayd 37 us, sir vs 45 s.d. Exit Players [Q2 omits] 49 s.d. Exit Polonius [Q2 omits] 52 ho
 [F has "hoa"] howe 89 detecting detected 89 s.d. Rosencrantz . . . Flourish [Q2 omits] 115-16 Hamlet. I mean . . . my lord [Q2 omits] 138 s.d. sound [ed.] sounds; very lovingly [Q2 omits]; She kneels . . . unto him [Q2 omits]; Exeunt [Q2 omits] 140 is miching munching 145 keep counsel keepe 159 ground the ground 167 your our 172 In neither Eyther none, in neither 173 love Lord 194 like the 203 Grief joys Greefe ioy 223 An [ed.] And 227 a I be a 231 s.d. sleeps [Q2 omits] 232 s.d. Exit Exeunt 260 Confederate Considerat 262 infected inuected 264 s.d. Pours the poison in his ears [Q2 omits] 270 Hamlet. What . . . fire [Q2 omits] 280-81 two Provincial prouinciall 314 start stare 324 my business busines 366 and thumb & the vmber 375 the top of my my 379 you can you 394-95 Polonius . . . friends Leaue me friends. I will, say so. By and by is easily said 397 breathes breakes 399 bitter business as the day business as the bitter day
 404 daggers dagger
 III.iii.19 huge hough 22 ruin raine 23 with a a 50 pardoned pardon 58 shove showe 73 pat but 79 hire and salary base and silly
 III.iv.5-6 with him . . . Mother, Mother, Mother [Q2 omits]
 7 warrant wait 21 inmost most 23 ho [F has "hoa"] how; ho [F has "hoa"] how 25 s.d. kills Polonius [Q2 omits] 53 That roars . . . index [Q2 gives to Hamlet] 60 heaven-kissing heaue, a kissing 89 panders pardons 90 mine eyes into my very soul my very eyes into my soule 91 grainèd greued 92 will not will 98 tithe kyth 140 Ecstasy [Q2 omits] 144 And I And 159 live leaue 166 Refrain tonight to refraine night
 180 Thus This 187 ravel rouell 216 foolish most foolish
 218 s.d. exit Hamlet, tugging in Polonius Exit
 IV.i.35 dragged dreg'd
 IV.ii.1 s.d. Enter Hamlet Enter Hamlet, Rosencraus, and others
 2 Gentlemen. (Within.) Hamlet! Lord Hamlet! [Q2 omits]
 4 s.d. Enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern [Q2 omits] 6

Compounded Compound 19 ape apple 31-32 Hide fox, and all after [Q2 omits]
 IV.iii.15 Ho [F has "Hoa"] How 44 With fiery quickness [Q2 omits] 53 and so so 69 were ne'er begun will nere begin IV.v.16 Queen [Q2 gives line 16 as part of the previous speech] 20 s.d. Enter Ophelia [distracted.] Enter Ophelia [placed after line 16] 39 grave ground 42 God good 52 clothes close 57
 Indeed, la Indeede 74 s.d. Exit [Q2 omits] 83 in their in 90 his this 97 Queen. Alack, what noise is this [Q2 omits]
 98 are is 107 They The 143 swoopstake [ed.] soopstake
 153 s.d. Let her come in [Q2 gives to Laertes] 158 Till Tell 161 an old a poore 162-64 Nature . . . loves [Q2 omits]
 166 Hey . . . hey nony [Q2 omits] 182 O, you must you may 187 affliction afflictions 195 All flaxen Flaxen 199 Christian souls, I pray God Christians soules 200 see this this IV.vi.9 an't and 22 good turn turne 26 bore bord 31 He
 So 32 give you you
 IV.vii.6 proceeded proceede 14 conjunctive conclue 20
 Would Worke 22 loud a wind loued Arm'd 24 And But; had haue 36 How now . . . Hamlet [Q2 omits] 42 s.d. Exit Messenger [Q2 omits] 45-46 your pardon you pardon 47 and more strange return returne 48 Hamlet [Q2 omits] 56 shall live liue 62 checking the King 88 my me 115 wick [ed.]
 weeke 119 changes change 122 spendthrift [ed.] spend thirfts 125 in deed [ed.] indeede 134 on ore 138 pass pace 140 for that for 156 ha't hate 159 prepared prefard 167 hoar horry 171 cold cull-cold
 V.i.9 se offendendo so offended 12 Argal or all 34-37 Other.
 Why . . . without arms [Q2 omits] 43 that frame that 55
 s.d. Enter Hamlet and Horatio afar off Enter Hamlet and Horatio [Q2 places after line 64] 60 stoup soope 70 daintier dintier 89 mazzard massene 106-07 Is this . . . recoveries [Q2 omits] 108 his vouchers vouchers 109 double ones doubles 120 O or 121 For such a guest is meet [Q2 omits]
 142 a gravemaker Graue-maker 143 all the days the dayes
 165 corses nowadays corses 172-73 three and twenty 23
 183 Let me see [Q2 omits] 185 borne bore 192 chamber table 208-09 as thus [Q2 omits] 216 winter's waters 217 s.d.
 Enter . . . attendant Enter K. Q. Laertes and the corse 231 Shards, flints Flints 247 treble double 250 s.d. Leaps in the grave [Q2 omits] 261 and rash rash 277 Dost thou doost 285 thus this 298 shortly thirtie 299 Till Tell V.ii.5 Methought my thought 6 bilboes bilbo 17 unseal vnfold 19 Ah [ed.; F has "Oh"] A 43 as's [F has "assis"] as sir 52 Subscribed Subscribe 57 Why, man . . . employment [Q2 omits] 68-80 To quit . . . comes here [Q2 omits] 78 court [ed.; F has "count"; Q2 omits] 80 s.d. young Osric [Q2 omits]
 81 Osric [Q2 prints "Cour" consistently as the speech prefix] 83 humbly humble 94 Put your your 100 sultry sully 101 for or 103 But, my my 109 gentleman [ed.] gentlemen 111 feelingly [ed.] sellingly 143 his weapon [ed.] this weapon 152 hangers [ed.] hanger 159 carriages carriage 162 might be be 165-66 all impawned as all 181 e'en so so 185 Yours, yours. He Yours 190 did comply did 194 yeasty histy 195 fanned [ed.; F has "fond"] prophane; winnowed trennowed
 209 to Laertes [ed.] Laertes 211 lose this wager loose 214
 But thou thou 217-18 gaingiving gamgiuing 222 If it be now if it be 224 will come well come 242 Sir, in this audience
 [Q2 omits] 252 keep my my; till all 256 Come on [Q2 omits]
 265 bettered better 267 s.d. Prepare to play [Q2 omits] 274 union Vnice 287 s.d. They play [Q2 omits] 288 A touch, a touch [Q2 omits] 302 s.d. play [Q2 omits] 304 s.d. In scuffling they change rapiers [Q2 omits] 305 ho [F has "hoa"] howe 313 Ho [ed.] how 315 Hamlet. Hamlet Hamlet 318 thy my 324 s.d. Hurts the King [Q2 omits] 327 murd'rous, damnèd damned 328 thy union the Onixe 329 s.d. King dies [Q2 omits] 333 s.d. dies [Q2 omits] 347 live I leaue 360 s.d. Dies [Q2 omits] 363 s.d. with drum, colors, and Attendants
 [Q2 omits] 381 th' yet yet 385 forced for no 394 on no
 401 rite [ed.; F has "rites"] right 405 s.d. marching . . . shot off [Q2 omits]

THE TRAGEDY OF HAMLET

PRINCE OF DENMARK

[Dramatis Personae]

CLAUDIUS King of Denmark
HAMLET son to the late, and nephew to the present,
king
POLONIUS Lord Chamberlain
HORATIO friend to Hamlet
LAERTES son to Polonius
VOLTEMAND }
CORNELIUS } courtiers
ROSENCRANTZ }
GUILDENSTERN }
OSRIC }
A GENTLEMAN }
A PRIEST

MARCELLUS }
BARNARDO } officers
FRANCISCO a soldier
REYNALDO servant to Polonius
PLAYERS
TWO CLOWNS gravediggers
FORTINBRAS Prince of Norway
A NORWEGIAN CAPTAIN
ENGLISH AMBASSADORS
GERTRUDE Queen of Denmark, mother to Hamlet
OPHELIA daughter to Polonius
GHOST of Hamlet's father
LORDS LADIES OFFICERS SOLDIERS SAILORS MESSENGERS ATTENDANTS

Scene: Elsinore]

[A C T I]

[Scene I. A guard platform of the castle.]

Enter BARNARDO and FRANCISCO, two sentinels.

BARNARDO Who's there?

FRANCISCO

Nay, answer me. Stand and unfold^o yourself.

BARNARDO Long live the king!^o

FRANCISCO Barnardo?

BARNARDO He.

FRANCISCO

You come most carefully upon your hour.

BARNARDO

'Tis now struck twelve. Get thee to bed, Francisco.

The decorative border shown above appeared on the first page of Hamlet in the First Folio edition of Shakespeare's plays, 1623.

I.i.2 unfold disclose 3 Long . . . king perhaps a password, perhaps a greeting

FRANCISCO

For this relief much thanks. 'Tis bitter cold,
And I am sick at heart.

BARNARDO

Have you had a quiet guard?

FRANCISCO

Not a mouse stirring. 10

BARNARDO

Well, good night.

If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus,
The rivals^o of my watch, bid them make haste.

5

Enter HORATIO and MARCELLUS.

FRANCISCO

I think I hear them. Stand, ho! Who is there?

HORATIO

Friends to this ground.

MARCELLUS

And liegemen to the Dane.^o 15

13 rivals partners 15 liegemen . . . Dane loyal subjects to the King of Denmark

FRANCISCO

Give you° good night.

MARCELLUS

O, farewell, honest soldier.

Who hath relieved you?

FRANCISCO

Barnardo hath my place.

Give you good night.

Exit FRANCISCO.

MARCELLUS

Holla, Barnardo!

BARNARDO

Say—

What, is Horatio there?

HORATIO

A piece of him.

BARNARDO

Welcome, Horatio. Welcome, good Marcellus.

MARCELLUS

What, has this thing appeared again tonight?

BARNARDO

I have seen nothing.

MARCELLUS

Horatio says 'tis but our fantasy,
 And will not let belief take hold of him
 Touching this dreaded sight twice seen of us;
 Therefore I have entreated him along
 With us to watch the minutes of this night,
 That, if again this apparition come,
 He may approve° our eyes and speak to it.

HORATIO

Tush, tush, 'twill not appear.

BARNARDO

Sit down awhile,

And let us once again assail your ears,

That are so fortified against our story,

What we have two nights seen.

HORATIO

Well, sit we down,

And let us hear Barnardo speak of this.

BARNARDO

Last night of all,
 When yond same star that's westward from the pole°
 Had made his course t' illume that part of heaven
 Where now it burns, Marcellus and myself,
 The bell then beating one—

Enter GHOST.

MARCELLUS

Peace, break thee off. Look where it comes again.

BARNARDO

In the same figure like the king that's dead.

MARCELLUS

Thou art a scholar; speak to it, Horatio.

BARNARDO

Looks 'a not like the king? Mark it, Horatio.

HORATIO

Most like: it harrows me with fear and wonder.

BARNARDO

It would be spoke to.

MARCELLUS

Speak to it, Horatio.

HORATIO

What art thou that usurp'st this time of night,
 Together with that fair and warlike form
 In which the majesty of buried Denmark°
 Did sometimes march? By heaven I charge thee, speak.

MARCELLUS

It is offended.

BARNARDO

See, it stalks away.

HORATIO

Stay! Speak, speak. I charge thee, speak. Exit GHOST.

MARCELLUS

'Tis gone and will not answer.

BARNARDO

How now, Horatio? You tremble and look pale.

Is not this something more than fantasy?

What think you on't?

HORATIO

Before my God, I might not this believe

Without the sensible and true avouch°

Of mine own eyes.

MARCELLUS

Is it not like the king?

HORATIO

As thou art to thyself.

Such was the very armor he had on

When he the ambitious Norway° combated:

So frowned he once, when, in an angry parle°,

He smote the sledded Polacks° on the ice.

'Tis strange.

MARCELLUS

Thus twice before, and jump° at this dead hour,

With martial stalk hath he gone by our watch.

HORATIO

In what particular thought to work I know not;

But, in the gross and scope° of my opinion,

This bodes some strange eruption to our state.

MARCELLUS

Good now, sit down, and tell me he that knows,

Why this same strict and most observant watch

So nightly toils the subject° of the land,

And why such daily cast of brazen cannon

And foreign mart° for implements of war,

Why such impress° of shipwrights, whose sore task

Does not divide the Sunday from the week,

What might be toward° that this sweaty haste

Doth make the night joint-laborer with the day?

Who is't that can inform me?

HORATIO

That can I.

At least the whisper goes so: our last king,

Whose image even but now appeared to us,

Was, as you know, by Fortinbras of Norway,

Thereto pricked on by a most emulate pride,

Dared to the combat; in which our valiant Hamlet

(For so this side of our known world esteemed him)

Did slay this Fortinbras, who, by a sealed compact

Well ratified by law and heraldry°,

Did forfeit, with his life, all those his lands

Which he stood seized° of, to the conqueror;

Against the which a moiety competent°

Was gagèd° by our king, which had returned

To the inheritance of Fortinbras,

Had he been vanquisher, as, by the same comart°

And carriage of the article designed°,

His fell to Hamlet. Now, sir, young Fortinbras,

57 sensible . . . avouch sensory and true proof 61 Norway
 King of Norway 62 parle parley 63 sledded Polacks Poles in sledges 65 jump just 68 gross and scope general drift 72 toils the subject makes the subjects toil 74 mart trading 75 impress forced service 77 toward in preparation 87 law and heraldry heraldic law (governing the combat) 89 seized possessed 90 moiety competent equal portion 91 gagèd engaged, pledged 93 comart agreement 94 carriage . . .
 designed import of the agreement drawn up

16 Give you God give you 29 approve confirm 36 pole
 polestar 48 buried Denmark the buried King of Denmark

Of unimprovèd° mettle hot and full,
 Hath in the skirts° of Norway here and there
 Sharked up° a list of lawless resolute°,
 For food and diet, to some enterprise
 That hath a stomach in't;° which is no other,
 As it doth well appear unto our state,
 But to recover of us by strong hand
 And terms compulsory, those foresaid lands
 So by his father lost; and this, I take it,
 Is the main motive of our preparations,
 The source of this our watch, and the chief head°
 Of this posthaste and romage° in the land.

BARNARDO

I think it be no other but e'en so;
 Well may it sort° that this portentous figure
 Comes armèd through our watch so like the king
 That was and is the question of these wars.

HORATIO

A mote it is to trouble the mind's eye:
 In the most high and palmy state of Rome,
 A little ere the mightiest Julius fell,
 The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted dead
 Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets;°
 As stars with trains of fire and dews of blood,
 Disasters° in the sun; and the moist star,°
 Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
 Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse.
 And even the like precurse° of feared events,
 As harbingers° preceding still° the fates
 And prologue to the omen° coming on,
 Have heaven and earth together demonstrated
 Unto our climatures° and countrymen.

Enter GHOST.

But soft, behold, lo where it comes again!
 I'll cross it,° though it blast me.—Stay, illusion.

It spreads his° arms.

It thou hast any sound or use of voice,
 Speak to me.
 If there be any good thing to be done
 That may to thee do ease and grace to me,
 Speak to me.
 If thou art privy to thy country's fate,
 Which happily° foreknowing may avoid,
 O, speak!
 Or if thou hast uphoarded in thy life
 Extorted° treasure in the womb of earth,
 For which, they say, you spirits oft walk in death,
The cock crows.

Speak of it. Stay and speak. Stop it, Marcellus.

MARCELLUS

Shall I strike at it with my partisan?°

140

HORATIO

Do, if it will not stand.

100 BARNARDO 'Tis here.

HORATIO

'Tis here.

MARCELLUS

'Tis gone.

Exit GHOST.

We do it wrong, being so majestic,
 To offer it the show of violence,
 For it is as the air, invulnerable,
 And our vain blows malicious mockery.

145

BARNARDO

It was about to speak when the cock crew.

HORATIO

And then it started, like a guilty thing
 Upon a fearful summons. I have heard,
 The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn,
 Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat
 Awake the god of day, and at his warning,
 Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air,
 Th' extravagant and erring° spirit hies
 To his confine; and of the truth herein
 This present object made probation.°

150

155

MARCELLUS

It faded on the crowing of the cock.
 Some say that ever 'gainst° that season comes Wherein our Savior's birth is celebrated,
 This bird of dawning singeth all night long,
 And then, they say, no spirit dare stir abroad,
 The nights are wholesome, then no planets strike,°
 No fairy takes,° nor witch hath power to charm:
 So hallowed and so gracious is that time.

160

HORATIO

So have I heard and do in part believe it.
 But look, the morn in russet mantle clad
 Walks o'er the dew of yon high eastward hill.
 Break we our watch up, and by my advice
 Let us impart what we have seen tonight
 Unto young Hamlet, for upon my life
 This spirit, dumb to us, will speak to him.
 Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it,
 As needful in our loves, fitting our duty?

165

170

MARCELLUS

Let's do't, I pray, and I this morning know
 Where we shall find him most convenient. Exeunt.

175

[Scene II. The castle.]

Flourish.° Enter Claudius, KING of Denmark, Gertrude the QUEEN, COUNCILORS, POLONIUS and his son LAERTES, HAMLET, cum aliis° [including VOLTEMAND and CORNELIUS].

KING

Though yet of Hamlet our dear brother's death
 The memory be green, and that it us befitted

140 partisan pike (a long-handled weapon) 154 extravagant and erring out of bounds and wandering 156 probation proof 158 'gainst just before 162 strike exert an evil influence 163 takes bewitches
 I.ii.s.d. Flourish fanfare of trumpets; cum aliis with others (Latin)

96 unimprovèd untried 97 skirts borders 98 Sharked up collected indiscriminately (as a shark gulps its prey); resolutes desperadoes 100 hath . . . in't requires courage 106 head fountainhead, origin 107 romage bustle 109 sort befit 116 Did . . . streets the break in the sense which follows this line suggests that a line has dropped out 118 Disasters threatening signs; moist star moon 121 precurse precursor, foreshadowing 122 harbingers forerunners; still always 123 omen calamity 125 climatures regions 127 cross it (1) cross its path, confront it (2) make the sign of the cross in front of it 127 s.d. his its, the Ghost's (though possibly what is meant is that Horatio spreads his own arms, making a cross of himself) 134 happily haply, perhaps 137 Extorted ill-won

To bear our hearts in grief, and our whole kingdom
 To be contracted in one brow of woe,
 Yet so far hath discretion fought with nature
 That we with wisest sorrow think on him
 Together with remembrance of ourselves.
 Therefore our sometime sister,⁸ now our queen,
 Th' imperial jointress⁹ to this warlike state,
 Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
 With an auspicious¹⁰ and a dropping eye,
 With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
 In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
 Taken to wife. Nor have we herein barred
 Your better wisdoms, which have freely gone
 With this affair along. For all, our thanks.
 Now follows that you know young Fortinbras,
 Holding a weak supposal of our worth,
 Or thinking by our late dear brother's death
 Our state to be disjoint and out of frame,²⁰
 Colleguèd with this dream of his advantage,²¹
 He hath not failed to pester us with message,
 Importing the surrender of those lands
 Lost by his father, with all bands of law,
 To our most valiant brother. So much for him.
 Now for ourself and for this time of meeting.
 Thus much the business is: we have here writ
 To Norway, uncle of young Fortinbras—
 Who, impotent and bedrid, scarcely hears
 Of this his nephew's purpose—to suppress
 His further gait³¹ herein, in that the levies,
 The lists, and full proportions³² are all made
 Out of his subject;³³ and we here dispatch
 You, good Cornelius, and you, Voltemand,
 For bearers of this greeting to old Norway,
 Giving to you no further personal power
 To business with the king, more than the scope
 Of these delated articles³⁸ allow.

Farewell, and let your haste commend your duty.

CORNELIUS, VOLTEMAND

In that, and all things, will we show our duty.

KING

We doubt it nothing. Heartily farewell.

Exit VOLTEMAND and CORNELIUS.

And now, Laertes, what's the news with you?
 You told us of some suit. What is't, Laertes?
 You cannot speak of reason to the Dane
 And lose your voice.⁴⁵ What wouldst thou beg, Laertes,
 That shall not be my offer, not thy asking?
 The head is not more native⁴⁷ to the heart,
 The hand more instrumental to the mouth,
 Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father.
 What wouldst thou have, Laertes?

LAERTES

My dread lord,

50

Your leave and favor to return to France,
 From whence, though willingly I came to Denmark
 To show my duty in your coronation,
 Yet now I must confess, that duty done,

My thoughts and wishes bend again toward France
 And bow them to your gracious leave and pardon.

55

KING

Have you your father's leave? What says Polonius?

POLONIUS

He hath, my lord, wrung from me my slow leave
 By laborsome petition, and at last
 Upon his will I sealed my hard consent.⁶⁰
 I do beseech you give him leave to go.

60

KING

Take thy fair hour, Laertes. Time be thine,
 And thy best graces spend it at thy will.

15

But now, my cousin⁶⁴ Hamlet, and my son—

HAMLET [Aside.]

A little more than kin, and less than kind!⁶⁵

65

KING

How is it that the clouds still hang on you?

20

HAMLET

Not so, my lord. I am too much in the sun.⁶⁶

QUEEN

Good Hamlet, cast thy nighted color off,
 And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark.

25

Do not forever with thy vailèd⁷⁰ lids

70

Seek for thy noble father in the dust.

Thou know'st 'tis common; all that lives must die,
 Passing through nature to eternity.

HAMLET

30

Ay, madam, it is common.⁷¹

QUEEN

If it be,

Why seems it so particular with thee?

75

HAMLET

Seems, madam? Nay, it is. I know not "seems."

35

'Tis not alone my inky cloak, good mother,

Nor customary suits of solemn black,

Nor windy suspiration⁷⁹ of forced breath,

80

No, nor the fruitful river in the eye,

Nor the dejected havior of the visage,

Together with all forms, moods, shapes of grief,

That can denote me truly. These indeed seem,

40

For they are actions that a man might play,

But I have that within which passes show;

85

These but the trappings and the suits of woe.

KING

'Tis sweet and commendable in your nature, Hamlet,

To give these mourning duties to your father,

But you must know your father lost a father,

That father lost, lost his, and the survivor bound

90

In filial obligation for some term

To do obsequious⁹² sorrow. But to persever

In obstinate condolment⁹³ is a course

Of impious stubbornness. 'Tis unmanly grief.

It shows a will most incorrect to heaven,

95

A heart unfortified, a mind impatient,

An understanding simple and unschooled.

For what we know must be and is as common

60 Upon . . . consent To his desire I gave my reluctant consent 64 cousin kinsman 65 kind pun on the meanings "kindly" and "natural"; though doubly related—"more than kin"—Hamlet asserts that he neither resembles Claudius in nature nor feels kindly toward him 67 sun sunshine of royal favor (with a pun on son) 70 vailèd lowered 74 common (1) universal (2) vulgar 79 windy suspiration heavy sighing 92 obsequious suitable to obsequies (funerals) 93 condolment mourning

8 our sometime sister my (the royal "we") former sister-in-law 9 jointress joint tenant, partner 11 auspicious joyful 20 frame order 21 advantage superiority 31 gait proceeding 32 proportions supplies for war 33 Out . . . subject out of old Norway's subjects and realm 38 delated articles detailed documents 45 lose your voice waste your breath 47 native related

As any the most vulgar^o thing to sense,
 Why should we in our peevish opposition
 Take it to heart? Fie, 'tis a fault to heaven,
 A fault against the dead, a fault to nature,
 To reason most absurd, whose common theme
 Is death of fathers, and who still hath cried,
 From the first corse^o till he that died today,
 "This must be so." We pray you throw to earth
 This unprevailing^o woe, and think of us
 As of a father, for let the world take note
 You are the most immediate to our throne,
 And with no less nobility of love
 Than that which dearest father bears his son
 Do I impart toward you. For your intent
 In going back to school in Wittenberg,
 It is most retrograde^o to our desire,
 And we beseech you, bend you^o to remain
 Here in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
 Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son.

QUEEN

Let not thy mother lose her prayers, Hamlet.
 I pray thee stay with us, go not to Wittenberg.

HAMLET

I shall in all my best obey you, madam.

KING

Why, 'tis a loving and a fair reply.
 Be as ourself in Denmark. Madam, come.
 This gentle and unforced accord of Hamlet
 Sits smiling to my heart, in grace whereof
 No jocund health that Denmark drinks today,
 But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
 And the king's rouse^o the heaven shall bruit^o again,
 Respeaking earthly thunder. Come away.

Flourish. Exeunt all but HAMLET.

HAMLET

O that this too too sullied^o flesh would melt,
 Thaw, and resolve itself into a dew,
 Or that the Everlasting had not fixed
 His canon^o 'gainst self-slaughter. O God, God,
 How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
 Seem to me all the uses of this world!
 Fie on't, ah, fie, 'tis an unweeded garden
 That grows to seed. Things rank and gross in nature

Possess it merely.^o That it should come to this:
 But two months dead, nay, not so much, not two,
 So excellent a king, that was to this
 Hyperion^o to a satyr, so loving to my mother
 That he might not beteem^o the winds of heaven
 Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth,
 Must I remember? Why, she would hang on him
 As if increase of appetite had grown
 By what it fed on; and yet within a month—
 Let me not think on't; frailty, thy name is woman—
 A little month, or ere those shoes were old
 With which she followed my poor father's body

Like Niobe,^o all tears, why she, even she—
 O God, a beast that wants discourse of reason^o 150
 Would have mourned longer—married with my uncle,
 My father's brother, but no more like my father
 Than I to Hercules. Within a month,
 Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears 105
 Had left the flushing^o in her gallèd eyes,
 She married. O, most wicked speed, to post^o 155
 With such dexterity to incestuous^o sheets!
 It is not, nor it cannot come to good.
 But break my heart, for I must hold my tongue.

Enter HORATIO, MARCELLUS, and BARNARDO.

HORATIO

Hail to your lordship!

115 HAMLET I am glad to see you well. 160
 Horatio—or I do forget myself.

HORATIO

The same, my lord, and your poor servant ever.

HAMLET

Sir, my good friend, I'll change^o that name with you.
 And what make you from Wittenberg, Horatio?

120 Marcellus. 165

MARCELLUS My good lord!

HAMLET

I am very glad to see you. [To BARNARDO.] Good even, sir.

But what, in faith, make you from Wittenberg?

125 HORATIO
 A truant disposition, good my lord.

HAMLET

I would not hear your enemy say so, 170
 Nor shall you do my ear that violence
 To make it truster^o of your own report
 Against yourself. I know you are no truant.

130 But what is your affair in Elsinore?
 We'll teach you to drink deep ere you depart. 175

HORATIO

My lord, I came to see your father's funeral.

HAMLET

135 I prithee do not mock me, fellow student.
 I think it was to see my mother's wedding.

HORATIO

Indeed, my lord, it followed hard upon.

HAMLET

140 Thrift, thrift, Horatio. The funeral baked meats 180
 Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.
 Would I had met my dearest^o foe in heaven
 Or ever I had seen that day, Horatio!
 My father, methinks I see my father.

HORATIO

145 Where, my lord?

HAMLET In my mind's eye, Horatio. 185

HORATIO

I saw him once. 'A^o was a goodly king.

99 vulgar common 105 corse corpse 107 unprevailing unavailing 114 retrograde contrary 115 bend you incline 127 rouse deep drink; bruit announce noisily 129 sullied Q2 has "sallied," here modernized to "sullied," which makes sense and is therefore given; but the Folio reading, "solid," which fits better with "melt," is quite possibly correct 132 canon law 137 merely entirely 140 Hyperion the sun god, a model of beauty 141 beteem allow 149 Niobe a mother who wept profusely at the death of her children 150 wants . . . reason lacks reasoning power 155 left the flushing stopped reddening 156 post hasten 157 incestuous canon law considered marriage with a deceased brother's widow to be incestuous 163 change exchange 172 truster believer 182 dearest most intensely felt 186

 'A he

HAMLET

'A was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again.

HORATIO

My lord, I think I saw him yesternight.

HAMLET Saw? Who?

HORATIO

My lord, the king your father.

HAMLET

The king my father?

HORATIO

Season your admiration^o for a while
With an attent ear till I may deliver
Upon the witness of these gentlemen
This marvel to you.

HAMLET

For God's love let me hear!

HORATIO

Two nights together had these gentlemen,
Marcellus and Barnardo, on their watch
In the dead waste and middle of the night
Been thus encountered. A figure like your father,
Armèd at point exactly, cap-a-pe,^o
Appears before them, and with solemn march Goes slow and stately by them. Thrice he walked
By their oppressed and fear-surprisèd eyes,
Within his truncheon's length,^o whilst they, distilled^o
Almost to jelly with the act^o of fear,
Stand dumb and speak not to him. This to me
In dreadful^o secrecy impart they did,
And I with them the third night kept the watch,
Where, as they had delivered, both in time,
Form of the thing, each word made true and good,
The apparition comes. I knew your father.
These hands are not more like.

HAMLET

But where was this?

MARCELLUS

My lord, upon the platform where we watched.

HAMLET

Did you not speak to it?

HORATIO

My lord, I did;

But answer made it none. Yet once methought
It lifted up it^o head and did address
Itself to motion like as it would speak:
But even then the morning cock crew loud,
And at the sound its shrunk in haste away
And vanished from our sight.

HAMLET

'Tis very strange.

HORATIO

As I do live, my honored lord, 'tis true,
And we did think it writ down in our duty
To let you know of it.

HAMLET

Indeed, indeed, sirs, but this troubles me.
Hold you the watch tonight?

ALL

We do, my lord.

HAMLET Armed, say you?

ALL Armed, my lord.

HAMLET

From top to toc?

ALL

My lord, from head to foot.

HAMLET

Then saw you not his face.

HORATIO

O, yes, my lord. He wore his beaver^o up.

230

HAMLET

190

What, looked he frowningly?

HORATIO

A countenance more in sorrow than in anger.

HAMLET Pale or red?

HORATIO

Nay, very pale.

HAMLET

And fixed his eyes upon you?

HORATIO

Most constantly.

195

HAMLET

I would I had been there.

235

HORATIO

It would have much amazed you.

HAMLET

Very like, very like. Stayed it long?

HORATIO

200

While one with moderate haste might tell^o a hundred.

BOTH Longer, longer.

HORATIO

Not when I saw't.

HAMLET

His beard was grizzled,^o no?

240

205

HORATIO

It was as I have seen it in his life,
A sable silvered.^o

HAMLET

I will watch tonight.

Perchance 'twill walk again.

210

HORATIO

I warr'nt it will.

HAMLET

If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it though hell itself should gape
And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,
If you have hitherto concealed this sight,
Let it be tenable^o in your silence still,
And whatsoever else shall hap tonight,
Give it an understanding but no tongue;
I will requite your loves. So fare you well.
Upon the platform 'twixt eleven and twelve
I'll visit you.

245

ALL

Our duty to your honor.

HAMLET

Your loves, as mine to you. Farewell.

Exeunt [all but HAMLET].

220

My father's spirit—in arms? All is not well.
I doubt^o some foul play. Would the night were come!
Till then sit still, my soul. Foul deeds will rise,
Though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes.

255

Exit.

[Scene III. A room.]

Enter LAERTES and OPHELIA, his sister.

LAERTES

My necessities are embarked. Farewell.
And, sister, as the winds give benefit

230 beaver visor, face guard 238 tell count 240 grizzled gray 242 sable silvered black mingled with white 248 tenable held 256 doubt suspect

192 Season your admiration control your wonder 200 cap-a-pe head to foot 204 truncheon's length space of a short staff; distilled reduced 205 act action 207 dreadful terrified 216 it its

And convoy° is assistant, do not sleep,
But let me hear from you.

OPHELIA Do you doubt that?

LAERTES
For Hamlet, and the trifling of his favor,
Hold it a fashion and a toy° in blood,
A violet in the youth of primy° nature,
Forward,° not permanent, sweet, not lasting,
The perfume and suppliance° of a minute,
No more.

OPHELIA No more but so?

LAERTES Think it no more.
For nature crescent° does not grow alone
In thews° and bulk, but as this temple° waxes,
The inward service of the mind and soul
Grows wide withal. Perhaps he loves you now,
And now no soil nor cautel° doth besmirch
The virtue of his will; but you must fear,
His greatness weighed,° his will is not his own.
For he himself is subject to his birth.
He may not, as unvalued° persons do,
Carve for himself; for on his choice depends
The safety and health of this whole state;
And therefore must his choice be circumscribed
Unto the voice and yielding of that body
Whereof he is the head. Then if he says he loves you,
It fits your wisdom so far to believe it
As he in his particular act and place
May give his saying deed, which is no further Than the main voice of Denmark goes withal.
Then weigh what loss your honor may sustain
If with too credent° ear you list his songs,
Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open
To his unmastered importunity.
Fear it, Ophelia, fear it, my dear sister,
And keep you in the rear of your affection,
Out of the shot and danger of desire.
The chariest maid is prodigal enough
If she unmask her beauty to the moon.
Virtue itself scapes not calumnious strokes.
The canker° galls the infants of the spring
Too oft before their buttons° be disclosed,
And in the morn and liquid dew of youth
Contagious blastments are most imminent.
Be wary then; best safety lies in fear;
Youth to itself rebels, though none else near.

OPHELIA
I shall the effect of this good lesson keep
As watchman to my heart, but, good my brother,
Do not, as some ungracious° pastors do,
Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven,
Whiles, like a puffed and reckless libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads
And recks not his own rede.°

Enter POLONIUS.

LAERTES O, fear me not.
I stay too long. But here my father comes.
A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles upon a second leave.

5 POLONIUS
Yet here, Laertes? Aboard, aboard, for shame! 55
The wind sits in the shoulder of your sail,
And you are stayed for. There—my blessing with thee,
And these few precepts in thy memory
Look thou character.° Give thy thoughts no tongue,
Nor any unproportioned° thought his act. 60
Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar.
Those friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,
Grapple them unto thy soul with hoops of steel,
But do not dull thy palm with entertainment
Of each new-hatched, unfledged courage.° Beware 65
Of entrance to a quarrel; but being in,
Bear't that th' opposèd may beware of thee.
Give every man thine ear, but few thy voice;
Take each man's censure,° but reserve thy judgment.
Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy, 70
But not expressed in fancy; rich, not gaudy,
For the apparel oft proclaims the man,
And they in France of the best rank and station
Are of a most select and generous, chief in that.°
Neither a borrower nor a lender be, 75
For loan oft loses both itself and friend,
And borrowing dulleth edge of husbandry.°
This above all, to thine own self be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man. 80
Farewell. My blessing season this° in thee!

LAERTES
Most humbly do I take my leave, my lord.

POLONIUS
The time invites you. Go, your servants tend.°

35 LAERTES
Farewell, Ophelia, and remember well
What I have said to you.

OPHELIA 'Tis in my memory locked, 85
And you yourself shall keep the key of it.

40 LAERTES Farewell. Exit LAERTES.
POLONIUS

What is't, Ophelia, he hath said to you?

OPHELIA
So please you, something touching the Lord Hamlet.

POLONIUS
45 Marry,° well bethought. 90
'Tis told me he hath very oft of late
Given private time to you, and you yourself
Have of your audience been most free and bounteous.
If it be so—as so 'tis put on me,
50 And that in way of caution—I must tell you 95
You do not understand yourself so clearly
As it behooves my daughter and your honor.
What is between you? Give me up the truth.

I.iii.3 convoy conveyance 6 toy idle fancy 7 primy springlike 8 Forward premature 9 suppliance diversion 11 crescent growing 12 thews muscles and sinews; temple the body 15 cautel deceit 17 greatness weighed high rank considered 19 unvalued of low rank 30 credent credulous 39 canker cankerworm 40 buttons buds 47 ungracious lacking grace 51 recks . . . rede does not heed his own advice

59 character inscribe 60 unproportioned unbalanced 65 courage gallant youth 69 censure opinion 74 Are . . . that show their fine taste and their gentlemanly instincts more in that than in any other point of manners (Kittredge) 77 husbandry thrift 81 season this make fruitful this (advice) 83 tend attend 90 Marry a light oath, from "By the Virgin Mary"

OPHELIA

He hath, my lord, of late made many tenders^o
Of his affection to me.

POLONIUS

Affection pooh! You speak like a green girl,
Unsifted^o in such perilous circumstance.
Do you believe his tenders, as you call them?

OPHELIA

I do not know, my lord, what I should think.

POLONIUS

Marry, I will teach you. Think yourself a baby
That you have ta'en these tenders for true pay
Which are not sterling. Tender yourself more dearly,
Or (not to crack the wind of the poor phrase)
Tend'ring it thus you'll tender me a fool.^o

OPHELIA

My lord, he hath importuned me with love
In honorable fashion.

POLONIUS

Ay, fashion you may call it. Go to, go to.

OPHELIA

And hath given countenance to his speech, my lord,
With almost all the holy vows of heaven.

POLONIUS

Ay, springes to catch woodcocks.^o I do know,
When the blood burns, how prodigal the soul
Lends the tongue vows. These blazes, daughter,
Giving more light than heat, extinct in both,
Even in their promise, as it is a-making,
You must not take for fire. From this time
Be something scater of your maiden presence.
Set your entreatments^o at a higher rate
Than a command to parley. For Lord Hamlet, Believe so much in him that he is young,
And with a larger tether may he walk
Than may be given you. In few, Ophelia,
Do not believe his vows, for they are brokers,^o
Not of that dye^o which their investments^o show,
But mere implorators^o of unholy suits,
Breathing like sanctified and pious bonds,^o
The better to beguile. This is for all:
I would not, in plain terms, from this time forth
Have you so slander^o any moment leisure
As to give words or talk with the Lord Hamlet.
Look to't, I charge you. Come your ways.

OPHELIA

I shall obey, my lord.

Exeunt.

[Scene IV. A guard platform.]

Enter HAMLET, HORATIO, and MARCELLUS.

HAMLET

The air bites shrewdly;^o it is very cold.

99 tenders offers (in line 103 it has the same meaning, but in line 106 Polonius speaks of "tenders" in the sense of counters or chips; in line 109 "Tend'ring" means "holding," and "tender" means "give," "present") 102 Unsifted untried 109 tender . . . fool (1) present me with a fool (2) present me with a baby 115 springes . . . woodcocks snares to catch stupid birds 122 entreatments interviews 127 brokers procurers 128 dye i.e., kind; investments garments 129 implorators solicitors 130 bonds pledges 133 slander disgrace
I.iv.1 shrewdly bitterly

HORATIO

It is a nipping and an eager^o air.

100 HAMLET

What hour now?

HORATIO

I think it lacks of twelve.

MARCELLUS

No, it is struck.

HORATIO

Indeed? I heard it not. It then draws near the season 5
Wherein the spirit held his wont to walk.

105

A flourish of trumpets, and two pieces go off.

What does this mean, my lord?

HAMLET

The king doth wake^o tonight and takes his rouse,^o
Keeps wassail, and the swagg'ring upspring^o reels, 10
And as he drains his draughts of Rhenish^o down
The kettledrum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge.^o

HORATIO

Is it a custom?

HAMLET

Ay, marry, is't,
But to my mind, though I am native here 15
And to the manner born, it is a custom
More honored in the breach than the observance.
This heavy-headed revel east and west
Makes us traduced and taxed of^o other nations.
They clepe^o us drunkards and with swinish phrase
Soil our addition,^o and indeed it takes 20
From our achievements, though performed at height,
The pith and marrow of our attribute.^o
So oft it chances in particular men
That for some vicious mole^o of nature in them,
As in their birth, wherein they are not guilty, 25
(Since nature cannot choose his origin)
By the o'ergrowth of some complexion,^o
Oft breaking down the pales^o and forts of reason,
Or by some habit that too much o'erleavens^o
The form of plausible^o manners, that (these men, 30
Carrying, I say, the stamp of one defect,
Being nature's livery, or fortune's star^o)
Their virtues else, be they as pure as grace,
As infinite as man may undergo,
Shall in the general censure^o take corruption 35
From that particular fault. The dram of evil
Doth all the noble substance of a doubt,
To his own scandal.^o

Enter GHOST.

HORATIO

Look, my lord, it comes.

HAMLET

Angels and ministers of grace defend us!

2 eager sharp 8 wake hold a revel by night; takes his rouse carouses 9 upspring a dance 10 Rhenish Rhine wine 12 triumph . . . pledge achievement (of drinking a wine cup in one draught) of his toast 18 taxed of blamed by 19 clepe call 20 addition reputation (literally, "title of honor") 22 attribute reputation 24 mole blemish 27 complexion natural disposition 28 pales enclosures 29 o'erleavens mixes with, corrupts 30 plausible pleasing 32 nature's . . . star nature's equipment (i.e., "innate"), or a person's destiny determined by the stars 35 general censure popular judgment 36-38 The dram . . . scandal though the drift is clear, there is no agreement as to the exact meaning of these lines

Be thou a spirit of health^o or goblin damned,
 Bring with thee airs from heaven or blasts from hell,
 Be thy intents wicked or charitable,
 Thou com'st in such a questionable^o shape
 That I will speak to thee. I'll call thee Hamlet,
 King, father, royal Dane. O, answer me!
 Let me not burst in ignorance, but tell
 Why thy canonized^o bones, hearsèd in death,
 Have burst their cerements,^o why the sepulcher
 Wherein we saw thee quietly interred
 Hath oped his ponderous and marble jaws
 To cast thee up again. What may this mean
 That thou, dead corse, again in complete steel,
 Revisits thus the glimpses of the moon,
 Making night hideous, and we fools of nature
 So horridly to shake our disposition^o
 With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls?
 Say, why is this? Wherefore? What should we do?

GHOST beckons HAMLET.

HORATIO

It beckons you to go away with it,
 As if some impartment^o did desire
 To you alone.

MARCELLUS Look with what courteous action
 It waves you to a more removèd ground.
 But do not go with it.

HORATIO No, by no means.

HAMLET

It will not speak. Then I will follow it.

HORATIO

Do not, my lord.

HAMLET Why, what should be the fear?

I do not set my life at a pin's fee,
 And for my soul, what can it do to that,
 Being a thing immortal as itself?
 It waves me forth again. I'll follow it.

HORATIO

What if it tempt you toward the flood, my lord,
 Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff
 That beetles^o o'er his base into the sea,
 And there assume some other horrible form,
 Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason^o
 And draw you into madness? Think of it.
 The very place puts toys^o of desperation,
 Without more motive, into every brain
 That looks so many fathoms to the sea
 And hears it roar beneath.

HAMLET It waves me still.

Go on; I'll follow thee.

MARCELLUS

You shall not go, my lord.

HAMLET

Hold off your hands.

HORATIO

Be ruled. You shall not go.

HAMLET

My fate cries out

And makes each petty artere^o in this body

40 As hardy as the Nemean lion's nerve.^o
 Still am I called! Unhand me, gentlemen.
 By heaven, I'll make a ghost of him that lets^o me! 85
 I say, away! Go on. I'll follow thee.

Exit GHOST, and HAMLET.

45 HORATIO

He waxes desperate with imagination.

MARCELLUS

Let's follow. 'Tis not fit thus to obey him.

HORATIO

50 Have after! To what issue will this come?

MARCELLUS

Something is rotten in the state of Denmark. 90

HORATIO

Heaven will direct it.

55 MARCELLUS Nay, let's follow him. Exeunt.

[Scene V. The battlements.]

Enter GHOST and HAMLET.

HAMLET

Whither wilt thou lead me? Speak; I'll go no further.

60 GHOST

Mark me.

HAMLET I will.

GHOST

My hour is almost come,
 When I to sulf'rous and tormenting flames
 Must render up myself.

HAMLET

Alas, poor ghost.

GHOST

Pity me not, but lend thy serious hearing
 To what I shall unfold. 5

65

HAMLET

Speak. I am bound to hear.

GHOST

So art thou to revenge, when thou shalt hear.

HAMLET What?

GHOST

I am thy father's spirit,
 70 Doomed for a certain term to walk the night,
 And for the day confined to fast in fires,
 Till the foul crimes^o done in my days of nature
 Are burnt and purged away. But that I am forbid
 To tell the secrets of my prison house,
 75 I could a tale unfold whose lightest word
 Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
 Make thy two eyes like stars start from their spheres,^o
 Thy knotted and combinèd locks to part,
 And each particular hair to stand an^o end
 Like quills upon the fearful porpentine.^o 20
 But this eternal blazon^o must not be
 To ears of flesh and blood. List, list, O, list!
 If thou didst ever thy dear father love—

80

HAMLET O God!

GHOST

Revenge his foul and most unnatural murder. 25

HAMLET Murder?

40 spirit of health good spirit 43 questionable (1) capable of discourse (2) dubious 47 canonized buried according to the canon or ordinance of the church 48 cerements waxed linen shroud 55 shake our disposition disturb us 59 impartment communication 71 beetles juts out 73 deprive . . . reason destroy the sovereignty of your reason 75 toys whims, fancies 82 artere artery

83 Nemean lion's nerve sinews of the mythical lion slain by Hercules 85 lets (1) allows (2) hinders

I.v.12 crimes sins 17 spheres in Ptolemaic astronomy, each planet was fixed in a hollow transparent shell concentric with the earth 19 an on 20 fearful porpentine timid porcupine 21 eternal blazon revelation of eternity

GHOST

Murder most foul, as in the best it is,
But this most foul, strange, and unnatural.

HAMLET

Haste me to know't, that I, with wings as swift
As meditation^o or the thoughts of love,
May sweep to my revenge.

GHOST

I find thee apt,
And duller shouldst thou be than the fat weed
That roots itself in ease on Lethe wharf,^o
Wouldst thou not stir in this. Now, Hamlet, hear.
'Tis given out that, sleeping in my orchard,
A serpent stung me. So the whole ear of Denmark
Is by a forgèd process^o of my death
Rankly abused. But know, thou noble youth,
The serpent that did sting thy father's life
Now wears his crown.

HAMLET

O my prophetic soul!

My uncle?

GHOST

Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate^o beast,
With witchcraft of his wits, with traitorous gifts—
O wicked wit and gifts, that have the power
So to seduce!—won to his shameful lust
The will of my most seeming-virtuous queen.
O Hamlet, what a falling-off was there,
From me, whose love was of that dignity
That it went hand in hand even with the vow
I made to her in marriage, and to decline
Upon a wretch whose natural gifts were poor
To those of mine.
But virtue, as it never will be moved,
Though lewdness^o court it in a shape of heaven,
So lust, though to a radiant angel linked,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed
And prey on garbage.
But soft, methinks I scent the morning air;
Brief let me be. Sleeping within my orchard,
My custom always of the afternoon,
Upon my secure^o hour thy uncle stole
With juice of cursed hebona^o in a vial,
And in the porches of my ears did pour
The leperous distillment, whose effect
Holds such an enmity with blood of man
That swift as quicksilver it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body,
And with a sudden vigor it doth posset^o
And curd, like eager^o droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood. So did it mine,
And a most instant tetter^o barked about
Most lazarlke^o with vile and loathsome crust
All my smooth body.
Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Of life, of crown, of queen at once dispatched,
Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhouselèd, disappointed, unaneled,^o

No reck'ning made, but sent to my account
With all my imperfections on my head.
O, horrible! O, horrible! Most horrible!

80

If thou hast nature in thee, bear it not.

Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A couch for luxury^o and damnèd incest.

But howsoever thou pursues this act,

Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive

85

Against thy mother aught. Leave her to heaven

And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge

To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once.

The glowworm shows the matin^o to be near

And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire.

90

Adieu, adieu, adieu. Remember me.

Exit.

HAMLET

O all you host of heaven! O earth! What else?

And shall I couple hell? O fi! Hold, hold, my heart,

And you, my sinews, grow not instant old,

But bear me stiffly up. Remember thee?

95

Ay, thou poor ghost, whiles memory holds a seat

In this distracted globe.^o Remember thee?Yea, from the table^o of my memoryI'll wipe away all trivial fond^o records,All saws^o of books, all forms, all pressures^o past

100

That youth and observation copied there,

And thy commandment all alone shall live

Within the book and volume of my brain,

Unmixed with baser matter. Yes, by heaven!

O most pernicious woman!

105

O villain, villain, smiling, damnèd villain!

My tables—meet it is I set it down

That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain.

At least I am sure it may be so in Denmark.

[Writes.]

So, uncle, there you are. Now to my word:

110

It is "Adieu, adieu, remember me."

I have sworn't.

HORATIO and MARCELLUS (Within.)

My lord, my lord!

Enter HORATIO and MARCELLUS.

MARCELLUS Lord Hamlet!

HORATIO Heavens secure him!

HAMLET So be it!

MARCELLUS

Illo, ho, ho,^o my lord!

115

HAMLET

Hillo, ho, ho, boy! Come, bird, come.

MARCELLUS

How is't, my noble lord?

HORATIO What news, my lord?

HAMLET

O, wonderful!

HORATIO

Good my lord, tell it.

HAMLET No, you will reveal it.

30 meditation thought 33 Lethe wharf bank of the river of forgetfulness in Hades 37 forgèd process false account 42 adulterate adulterous 54 lewdness lust 61 secure unsuspecting 62 hebona a poisonous plant 68 posset curdle
69 eager acid 71 tetter scab 72 lazarlke leperlike 77
Unhouselèd, disappointed, unaneled without the sacrament of communion, unabsolved, without extreme unction

83 luxury lust 89 matin morning 97 globe i.e., his head
98 table tablet, notebook 99 fond foolish 100 saws maxims; pressures impressions 115 Illo, ho, ho falconer's call to his hawk

HORATIO
Not I, my lord, by heaven.

MARCELLUS Nor I, my lord. 120

HAMLET
How say you then? Would heart of man once think it?
But you'll be secret?

BOTH Ay, by heaven, my lord.

HAMLET
There's never a villain dwelling in all Denmark
But he's an arrant knave.

HORATIO
There needs no ghost, my lord, come from the grave 125
To tell us this.

HAMLET Why, right, you are in the right;
And so, without more circumstance° at all,
I hold it fit that we shake hands and part:
You, as your business and desire shall point you,
For every man hath business and desire 130
Such as it is, and for my own poor part,
Look you, I'll go pray.

HORATIO
These are but wild and whirling words my lord.

HAMLET
I am sorry they offend you, heartily;
Yes, faith, heartily.

HORATIO There's no offense, my lord. 135

HAMLET
Yes, by Saint Patrick, but there is, Horatio,
And much offense too. Touching this vision here,
It is an honest ghost,° that let me tell you.
For your desire to know what is between us,
O'ermaster't as you may. And now, good friends, 140
As you are friends, scholars, and soldiers,
Give me one poor request.

HORATIO
What is't, my lord? We will.

HAMLET
Never make known what you have seen tonight.

BOTH
My lord, we will not.

HAMLET Nay, but swear't. 145

HORATIO In faith,

My lord, not I.

MARCELLUS Nor I, my lord—in faith.

HAMLET
Upon my sword.

MARCELLUS We have sworn, my lord, already.

HAMLET
Indeed, upon my sword, indeed.

GHOST cries under the stage.

GHOST Swear.

HAMLET
Ha, ha, boy, say'st thou so? Art thou there, truepenny?° 150
Come on. You hear this fellow in the cellarage.
Consent to swear.

HORATIO Propose the oath, my lord.

HAMLET
Never to speak of this that you have seen.
Swear by my sword.

GHOST [Beneath.] Swear. 155

HAMLET
Hic et ubique?° Then we'll shift our ground;
Come hither, gentlemen,
And lay your hands again upon my sword.
Swear by my sword
Never to speak of this that you have heard. 160
GHOST [Beneath.] Swear by his sword.

HAMLET
Well said, old mole! Canst work i' th' earth so fast?
A worthy pioner!° Once more remove, good friends.

HORATIO
O day and night, but this is wondrous strange!

HAMLET
And therefore as a stranger give it welcome. 165
There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your philosophy.
But come:
Here as before, never, so help you mercy,
How strange or odd some'er I bear myself 170
(As I perchance hereafter shall think meet
To put an antic disposition° on),
That you, at such times seeing me, never shall
With arms encumb' red° thus, or this headshake,
Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase, 175
As "Well, well, we know," or "We could, an if we would,"
Of "If we list to speak," or "There be, an if they might,"
Or such ambiguous giving out, to note
That you know aught of me—this do swear,
So grace and mercy at your most need help you. 180
GHOST [Beneath.] Swear.
[They swear.]

HAMLET
Rest, rest, perturbèd spirit. So, gentlemen,
With all my love I do commend me° to you,
And what so poor a man as Hamlet is
May do t' express his love and friending to you, 185
God willing, shall not lack. Let us go in together,
And still your fingers on your lips, I pray.
The time is out of joint. O cursèd spite,
That ever I was born to set it right!
Nay, come, let's go together. Exeunt. 190

[A C T I I]

[Scene I. A room.]

Enter old POLONIUS, with his man REYNALDO.

POLONIUS

Give him this money and these notes, Reynaldo.

REYNALDO I will, my lord.

POLONIUS

You shall do marvell's° wisely, good Reynaldo,

156 Hic et ubique here and everywhere (Latin) 163 pioner digger of mines 172 antic disposition fantastic behavior 174 encumb' red folded 183 commend me entrust myself
II.i.3 marvell's marvelous(ly)

127 circumstance details 138 honest ghost not a demon in his father's shape 150 truepenny honest fellow

Before you visit him, to make inquire
Of his behavior.

REYNALDO My lord, I did intend it.

POLONIUS

Marry, well said, very well said. Look you sir,
Inquire me first what Danskers^o are in Paris,
And how, and who, what means, and where they keep,^o

What company, at what expense; and finding
By this encompassment^o and drift of question
That they do know my son, come you more nearer
Than your particular demands^o will touch it.
Take you as 'twere some distant knowledge of him,
As thus, "I know his father and his friends,
And in part him." Do you mark this, Reynaldo?

REYNALDO Ay, very well, my lord.

POLONIUS

"And in part him, but," you may say, "not well,
But if't be he I mean, he's very wild,
Addicted so and so." And there put on him
What forgeries^o you please; marry, none so rank
As may dishonor him—take heed of that—
But, sir, such wanton, wild, and usual slips
As are companions noted and most known
To youth and liberty.

REYNALDO As gaming, my lord.

POLONIUS

Ay, or drinking, fencing, swearing, quarreling,
Drabbing.^o You may go so far.

REYNALDO

My lord, that would dishonor him.

POLONIUS

Faith, no, as you may season it in the charge.
You must not put another scandal on him,
That he is open to incontinency.^o
That's not my meaning. But breathe his faults so quaintly^o
That they may seem the taints of liberty,
The flash and outbreak of a fiery mind,
A savageness in unreclaimèd blood,
Of general assault.^o

REYNALDO But, my good lord—

POLONIUS

Wherefore should you do this?

REYNALDO

Ay, my lord,
I would know that.

POLONIUS

Marry, sir, here's my drift,
And I believe it is a fetch of warrant.^o

You laying these slight sullies on my son
As 'twere a thing a little soiled i' th' working,
Mark you,

Your party in converse, him you would sound,
Having ever seen in the prenominate crimes^o
The youth you breathe of guilty, be assured
He closes with you in this consequence:^o

"Good sir," or so, or "friend," or "gentleman"—

According to the phrase or the addition^o
Of man and country—

REYNALDO

Very good, my lord.

POLONIUS

And then, sir, does 'a^o this—'a does—

What was I about to say? By the mass, I was about to say something! Where did I leave?

REYNALDO At "closes in the consequence," at "friend or so," and "gentleman."

POLONIUS

At "closes in the consequence"—Ay, marry!

He closes thus: "I know the gentleman;

I saw him yesterday, or t'other day,

Or then, or then, with such or such, and, as you say,

There was 'a gaming, there o'ertook in's rouse,

There falling out at tennis"; or perchance,

"I saw him enter such a house of sale,"

Videlicet,^o a brothel, or so forth.

See you now—

Your bait of falsehood take this carp of truth,

And thus do we of wisdom and of reach,^o

With windlasses^o and with assays of bias,^o

By indirections find directions out.

So, by my former lecture and advice,

Shall you my son. You have me, have you not?

REYNALDO

My lord, I have.

POLONIUS

God bye ye, fare ye well.

REYNALDO

Good my lord.

POLONIUS

Observe his inclination in yourself.^o

REYNALDO

I shall, my lord.

POLONIUS

And let him ply his music.

REYNALDO

Well, my lord.

POLONIUS

Farewell.

Exit REYNALDO.

Enter OPHELIA.

How now, Ophelia, what's the matter?

OPHELIA

O my lord, my lord, I have been so affrighted!

POLONIUS

With what, i' th' name of God?

OPHELIA

My lord, as I was sewing in my closet,^o

Lord Hamlet, with his doublet all unbraced,^o

No hat upon his head, his stockings fouled,

Ungartered, and down-gyvèd^o to his ankle,

Pale as his shirt, his knees knocking each other,

And with a look so piteous in purport,^o

As if he had been loosèd out of hell

To speak of horrors—he comes before me.

POLONIUS

Mad for thy love?

OPHELIA

My lord, I do not know,

But truly I do fear it.

7 Danskers Danes 8 keep dwell 10 encompassment circling 12 demands questions 20 forgeries inventions 26
Drabbing wenching 30 incontinency habitual licentious-ness 31 quaintly ingeniously, delicately 35 Of general assault common to all men 38 fetch of warrant justifiable device 43 Having . . . crimes if he has ever seen in the aforementioned crimes 45 He . . . consequence he falls in with you in this conclusion

47 addition title 49 'a he 61 Videlicet namely 64 reach far-reaching awareness (?) 65 windlasses circuitous courses; assays of bias indirect attempts (metaphor from bowling;
"bias" = curved course) 71 in yourself for yourself 77 closet private room 78 doublet all unbraced jacket entirely unlaced 80 down-gyvèd hanging down like fetters 82 purport expression

POLONIUS

What said he?

OPHELIA

He took me by the wrist and held me hard;
 Then goes he to the length of all his arm,
 And with his other hand thus o'er his brow
 He falls to such perusal of my face
 As 'a would draw it. Long stayed he so.
 At last, a little shaking of mine arm,
 And thrice his head thus waving up and down,
 He raised a sigh so piteous and profound
 As it did seem to shatter all his bulk
 And end his being. That done, he lets me go,
 And, with his head over his shoulder turned,
 He seemed to find his way without his eyes,
 For out o' doors he went without their helps,
 And to the last bended their light on me.

POLONIUS

Come, go with me. I will go seek the king.
 This is the very ecstasy° of love,
 Whose violent property fordoes° itself
 And leads the will to desperate undertakings
 As oft as any passions under heaven
 That does afflict our natures. I am sorry.
 What, have you given him any hard words of late?

OPHELIA

No, my good lord; but as you did command,
 I did repel his letters and denied
 His access to me.

POLONIUS

That hath made him mad.

I am sorry that with better heed and judgment
 I had not quoted° him. I feared he did but trifle
 And meant to wrack thee; but beshrew my jealousy.°
 By heaven, it is as proper° to our age
 To cast beyond ourselves° in our opinions
 As it is common for the younger sort
 To lack discretion. Come, go we to the king.
 This must be known, which, being kept close, might move
 More grief to hide than hate to utter love.°
 Come.

Exeunt. 120

[Scene II. The castle.]

Flourish. Enter KING and QUEEN, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN, [with others].

KING

Welcome, dear Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.
 Moreover that° we much did long to see you,
 The need we have to use you did provoke
 Our hasty sending. Something have you heard
 Of Hamlet's transformation: so call it,
 Sith° nor th' exterior nor the inward man
 Resembles that it was. What it should be,
 More than his father's death, that thus hath put him
 So much from th' understanding of himself,
 I cannot dream of. I entreat you both 10

That, being of so° young days brought up with him,
 And sith so neighbored to his youth and havior,°
 That you vouchsafe your rest° here in our court
 Some little time, so by your companies
 To draw him on to pleasures, and to gather
 So much as from occasion you may glean,
 Whether aught to us unknown afflicts him thus,
 That opened° lies within our remedy.

15

QUEEN

Good gentlemen, he hath much talked of you,
 And sure I am, two men there is not living
 To whom he more adheres. If it will please you
 To show us so much gentry° and good will
 As to expend your time with us awhile
 For the supply and profit of our hope,
 Your visitation shall receive such thanks
 As fits a king's remembrance.

20

ROSENCRANTZ

Both your majesties

Might, by the sovereign power you have of us,
 Put your dread pleasures more into command
 Than to entreaty.

105

GUILDENSTERN

But we both obey,

And here give up ourselves in the full bent°
 To lay our service freely at your feet,
 To be commanded.

30

KING

Thanks, Rosencrantz and gentle Guildenstern.

QUEEN

Thanks, Guildenstern and gentle Rosencrantz.
 And I beseech you instantly to visit
 My too much changèd son. Go, some of you,
 And bring these gentlemen where Hamlet is.

35

GUILDENSTERN

Heavens make our presence and our practices
 Pleasant and helpful to him!

115

QUEEN

Ay, amen!

Exeunt ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN [with some ATTENDANTS].

Enter POLONIUS.

POLONIUS

Th' ambassadors from Norway, my good lord,
 Are joyfully returned.

40

KING

Thou still° hast been the father of good news.

POLONIUS

Have I, my lord? Assure you, my good liege,
 I hold my duty, as I hold my soul,
 Both to my God and to my gracious king;
 And I do think, or else this brain of mine
 Hunts not the trail of policy so sure°
 As it hath used to do, that I have found
 The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy.

45

KING

O, speak of that! That do I long to hear.

50

POLONIUS

Give first admittance to th' ambassadors.

My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.

11 of so from such 12 youth and havior behavior in his youth 13 vouchsafe your rest consent to remain 18 opened revealed 22 gentry courtesy 30 in . . . bent entirely (the figure is of a bow bent to its capacity) 42 still always 47 Hunts . . . sure does not follow clues of political doings with such sureness

102 ecstasy madness 103 property fordoes quality destroys 112 quoted noted 113 beshrew my jealousy curse my suspicions 114 proper natural 115 To . . . ourselves to be overcalculating 117-19 Come . . . love the general meaning is that while telling the king of Hamlet's love may anger the king, more grief would come from keeping it secret II.ii.2 Moreover that besides the fact that 6 Sith since

KING

Thyself do grace to them and bring them in.

[Exit POLONIUS.]

He tells me, my dear Gertrude, he hath found
The head and source of all your son's distemper.

55

QUEEN

I doubt° it is no other but the main,°
His father's death and our o'erhasty marriage.

KING

Well, we shall sift him.

Enter POLONIUS, VOLTEMAND, and CORNELIUS.

Welcome, my good friends.

Say, Voltemand, what from our brother Norway?

VOLTEMAND

Most fair return of greetings and desires.
Upon our first,° he sent out to suppress
His nephew's levies, which to him appeared
To be a preparation 'gainst the Polack;
But better looked into, he truly found
It was against your highness, whereat grieved,
That so his sickness, age, and impotence
Was falsely borne in hand,° sends out arrests
On Fortinbras; which he, in brief, obeys,
Receives rebuke from Norway, and in fine,°
Makes vow before his uncle never more
To give th' assay° of arms against your majesty.
Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy,
Gives him threescore thousand crowns in annual fee
And his commission to employ those soldiers,
So levied as before, against the Polack,
With an entreaty, herein further shown,

60

65

70

75

[Gives a paper.]

That it might please you to give quiet pass
Through your dominions for this enterprise,
On such regards of safety and allowance°
As therein are set down.

KING

It likes us well;

80

And at our more considered time° we'll read,
Answer, and think upon this business.
Meantime, we thank you for your well-took labor.
Go to your rest; at night we'll feast together.
Most welcome home!

Exeunt ambassadors [VOLTE-
MAND and CORNELIUS].

POLONIUS

This business is well ended.

85

My liege and madam, to expostulate°
What majesty should be, what duty is,
Why day is day, night night, and time is time,
Were nothing but to waste night, day, and time.
Therefore, since brevity is the soul of wit,°
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief. Your noble son is mad.
Mad call I it, for, to define true madness,
What is't but to be nothing else but mad?
But let that go.

90

QUEEN

More matter, with less art.

95

POLONIUS

Madam, I swear I use no art at all.

That he's mad, 'tis true: 'tis true 'tis pity,
And pity 'tis 'tis true—a foolish figure.°

But farewell it, for I will use no art.

Mad let us grant him then; and now remains 100

That we find out the cause of this effect,

Or rather say, the cause of this defect,

For this effect defective comes by cause.

Thus it remains, and the remainder thus.

Perpend.°

105

I have a daughter: have, while she is mine,

Who in her duty and obedience, mark,

Hath given me this. Now gather, and surmise.

[Reads] the letter.

"To the celestial, and my soul's idol, the most beautified Ophelia"—

110

That's an ill phrase, a vile phrase; "beautified" is a vile phrase. But you shall hear. Thus:

"In her excellent white bosom, these, &c."

QUEEN

Came this from Hamlet to her?

POLONIUS

Good madam, stay awhile. I will be faithful.

115

"Doubt thou the stars are fire,

Doubt that the sun doth move;

Doubt° truth to be a liar,

But never doubt I love.

O dear Ophelia, I am ill at these numbers.° I have not art to reckon my groans; but that I love thee best, O most best, believe it. Adieu.

120

Thine evermore, most dear lady,

whilst this machine° is to him, Hamlet."

This in obedience hath my daughter shown me,

125

And more above° hath his solicitings,

As they fell out by time, by means, and place,

All given to mine ear.

KING

But how hath she

Received his love?

POLONIUS

What do you think of me?

KING

As of a man faithful and honorable.

130

POLONIUS

I would fain prove so. But what might you think,

When I had seen this hot love on the wing

(As I perceived it, I must tell you that,

Before my daughter told me), what might you,

Or my dear majesty your queen here, think,

135

If I had played the desk or table book,°

Or given my heart a winking,° mute and dumb,

Or looked upon this love with idle sight?

What might you think? No, I went round to work

And my young mistress thus I did bespeak:

140

"Lord Hamlet is a prince, out of thy star.°

This must not be." And then I prescripts gave her,

That she should lock herself from his resort,

Admit no messengers, receive no tokens.

Which done, she took the fruits of my advice,

145

98 figure figure of rhetoric 105 Perpend consider carefully
118 Doubt suspect 120 ill . . . numbers unskilled in verses 124 machine complex device (here, his body) 126 more above in addition 136 played . . . book i.e., been a passive recipient of secrets 137 winking closing of the eyes 141 star sphere

56 doubt suspect; main principal point 61 first first audience
67 borne in hand deceived 69 in fine finally 71 assay trial
79 regards . . . allowance i.e., conditions 81 considered time time proper for considering 86 expostulate discuss 90 wit wisdom, understanding

And he, repellèd, a short tale to make,
Fell into a sadness, then into a fast,
Thence to a watch,^o thence into a weakness,
Thence to a lightness,^o and, by this declension,
Into the madness wherein now he raves,
And all we mourn for.

KING Do you think 'tis this?

QUEEN
It may be, very like.

POLONIUS
Hath there been such a time, I would fain know that,
That I have positively said, "'Tis so,"
When it provèd otherwise?

KING Not that I know.

POLONIUS [Pointing to his head and shoulder.]
Take this from this, if this be otherwise.
If circumstances lead me, I will find
Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed
Within the center.^o

KING How may we try it further?

POLONIUS
You know sometimes he walks four hours together
Here in the lobby.

QUEEN So he does indeed.

POLONIUS
At such a time I'll loose my daughter to him.
Be you and I behind an arras^o then.
Mark the encounter. If he love her not,
And be not from his reason fall'n thereon,
Let me be no assistant for a state
But keep a farm and carters.

KING We will try it.

Enter HAMLET reading on a book.

QUEEN
But look where sadly the poor wretch comes reading.

POLONIUS
Away, I do beseech you both, away.
Exit KING and QUEEN.

I'll board him presently.^o O, give me leave.
How does my good Lord Hamlet?

HAMLET Well, God-a-mercy.

POLONIUS Do you know me, my lord?

HAMLET Excellent well. You are a fishmonger.^o

POLONIUS Not I, my lord.

HAMLET Then I would you were so honest a man.

POLONIUS Honest, my lord?

HAMLET Ay, sir. To be honest, as this world goes, is to be one man picked out of ten thousand.

POLONIUS That's very true, my lord.

HAMLET For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, being a good kissing carrion^o—Have you a daughter?

POLONIUS I have, my lord.

HAMLET Let her not walk i' th' sun. Conception^o is a blessing, but as your daughter may conceive, friend, look to't.

POLONIUS [Aside.] How say you by that? Still harping on my daughter. Yet he knew me not at first. 'A said
I was a fishmonger. 'A is far gone, far gone. And truly in my youth I suffered much extremity for love, very near this. I'll speak to him again.—What do you read,
my lord?

HAMLET Words, words, words.

POLONIUS What is the matter, my lord?

HAMLET Between who?

POLONIUS I mean the matter^o that you read, my lord.

HAMLET Slanders, sir; for the satirical rogue says here that old men have gray beards, that their faces are wrinkled, their eyes purging thick amber and plum-tree gum, and that they have a plentiful lack of wit, together with most weak hams. All which, sir, though I most powerfully and potently believe, yet I hold it not honesty^o to have it thus set down; for you yourself, sir, should be old as I am if, like a crab, you could go backward.

POLONIUS [Aside.] Though this be madness, yet there is method in't. Will you walk out of the air, my lord?

HAMLET Into my grave.

POLONIUS Indeed, that's out of the air. [Aside.] How pregnant^o sometimes his replies are! A happiness^o that often madness hits on, which reason and sanity could not so prosperously be delivered of. I will leave him and suddenly contrive the means of meeting between him and my daughter.—My lord, I will take my leave of you.

HAMLET You cannot take from me anything that I will more willingly part withal—except my life, except my life, except my life.

Enter GUILDENSTERN and ROSENCRANTZ.

POLONIUS Fare you well, my lord.

HAMLET These tedious old fools!

POLONIUS You go to seek the Lord Hamlet? There he is.

ROSENCRANTZ [To POLONIUS.] God save you, sir!
[Exit POLONIUS.]

GUILDENSTERN My honored lord!

ROSENCRANTZ My most dear lord!

HAMLET My excellent good friends! How dost thou, Guildenstern? Ah, Rosencrantz! Good lads, how do you both?

ROSENCRANTZ
As the indifferent^o children of the earth.

GUILDENSTERN

Happy in that we are not overhappy.

On Fortune's cap we are not the very button.

HAMLET Nor the soles of her shoe?

ROSENCRANTZ Neither, my lord.

HAMLET Then you live about her waist, or in the middle of her favors?

GUILDENSTERN Faith, her privates^o we.

HAMLET In the secret parts of Fortune? O, most true!
She is a strumpet. What news?

196 matter Polonius means "subject matter," but Hamlet pretends to take the word in the sense of "quarrel" 203 honesty decency 211 pregnant meaningful; happiness apt turn of phrase 230 indifferent ordinary 237 privates ordinary men (with a pun on private parts)

148 watch wakefulness 149 lightness mental derangement 159 center center of the earth 163 arras tapestry hanging in front of a wall 170 board him presently accost him at once 174 fishmonger dealer in fish (slang for a procurer) 182 a good . . . carrion perhaps the meaning is "a good piece of flesh to kiss," but many editors emend "good" to "god," taking the word to refer to the sun 184 Conception (1) understanding (2) becoming pregnant

ROSENCRANTZ None, my lord, but that the world's 240 grown honest.

HAMLET Then is doomsday near. But your news is not true. Let me question more in particular. What have you, my good friends, deserved at the hands of Fortune that she sends you to prison hither? 245

GUILDENSTERN Prison, my lord?

HAMLET Denmark's a prison.

ROSENCRANTZ Then is the world one.

HAMLET A goodly one, in which there are many confines, wards,^o and dungeons, Denmark being one 250
o' th' worst.

ROSENCRANTZ We think not so, my lord.

HAMLET Why, then 'tis none to you, for there is nothing either good or bad but thinking makes it so.
To me it is a prison. 255

ROSENCRANTZ Why then your ambition makes it
one. 'Tis too narrow for your mind.

HAMLET O God, I could be bounded in a nutshell and count myself a king of infinite space, were it not that I have bad dreams. 260

GUILDENSTERN Which dreams indeed are ambition, for the very substance of the ambitious is merely the shadow of a dream.

HAMLET A dream itself is but a shadow.

ROSENCRANTZ Truly, and I hold ambition of so airy 265 and light a quality that it is but a shadow's shadow.

HAMLET Then are our beggars bodies, and our monarchs and outstretched heroes the beggars' shadows.^o Shall we to th' court? For, by my fay,^o I cannot reason. 270

BOTH We'll wait upon you.

HAMLET No such matter. I will not sort you with the rest of my servants, for, to speak to you like an honest man, I am most dreadfully attended. But in the beaten way of friendship, what make you at Elsinore? 275

ROSENCRANTZ To visit you, my lord; no other occasion.

HAMLET Beggar that I am, I am even poor in thanks, but I thank you; and sure, dear friends, my thanks are too dear a halfpenny.^o Were you not sent for? Is 280 it your own inclining? Is it a free visitation? Come, come, deal justly with me. Come, come; nay, speak.

GUILDENSTERN What should we say, my lord?

HAMLET Why anything—but to th' purpose. You were sent for, and there is a kind of confession in your 285 looks, which your modesties have not craft enough to color. I know the good king and queen have sent for
you.

ROSENCRANTZ To what end, my lord?

HAMLET That you must teach me. But let me conjure 290 you by the rights of your fellowship, by the conso-nancy of our youth, by the obligation of our ever-preserved love, and by what more dear a better proposer can charge you withal, be even and direct with me, whether you were sent for or no. 295

ROSENCRANTZ [Aside to GUILDENSTERN.] What say you?

250 wards cells 267–69 Then . . . shadows By your logic, beggars (lacking ambition) are substantial, and great men are elongated shadows 269 fay faith 280 too . . . halfpenny not worth a halfpenny

HAMLET [Aside.] Nay then, I have an eye of you.—If you love me, hold not off.

GUILDENSTERN My lord, we were sent for. 300

HAMLET I will tell you why; so shall my anticipation prevent your discovery,^o and your secrecy to the king and queen molt no feather. I have of late, but wherefore I know not, lost all my mirth, forgone all custom of exercises; and indeed, it goes so heavily with my 305 disposition that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a sterile promontory; this most excellent canopy,
the air, look you, this brave o'erhanging firmament,
this majestical roof fretted^o with golden fire: why, it appeareth nothing to me but a foul and pestilent 310 congregation of vapors. What a piece of work is a man, how noble in reason, how infinite in faculties, in form and moving how express^o and admirable, in action how like an angel, in apprehension how like a god: the beauty of the world, the paragon of animals; 315 and yet to me, what is this quintessence of dust? Man delights not me; nor woman neither, though by your smiling you seem to say so.

ROSENCRANTZ My lord, there was no such stuff in my thoughts. 320

HAMLET Why did ye laugh then, when I said, "Man delights not me"?

ROSENCRANTZ To think, my lord, if you delight not in man, what lenten^o entertainment the players shall receive from you. We coted^o them on the way, and 325 hither are they coming to offer you service.

HAMLET He that plays the king shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me; the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target;^o the lover shall not sigh gratis; the humorous man^o shall end his part in 330 peace; the clown shall make those laugh whose lungs are tickle o' th' sere;^o and the lady shall say her mind freely, or^o the blank verse shall halt^o for't. What players are they?

ROSENCRANTZ Even those you were wont to take 335
such delight in, the tragedians of the city.

HAMLET How chances it they travel? Their residence, both in reputation and profit, was better both ways.

ROSENCRANTZ I think their inhibition^o comes by the means of the late innovation.^o 340

HAMLET Do they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the city? Are they so followed?

ROSENCRANTZ No indeed, are they not.

HAMLET How comes it? Do they grow rusty?

ROSENCRANTZ Nay, their endeavor keeps in the 345 wonted pace, but there is, sir, an eyrie^o of children, little cyases, that cry out on the top of question^o and are most tyrannically^o clapped for't. These are now the fashion, and so berattle the common stages^o (so

302 prevent your discovery forestall your disclosure 309 fretted adorned 313 express exact 324 lenten meager 325 coted overtook 329 target shield 330 humorous man i.e., eccentric man (among stock characters in dramas were men dominated by a "humor" or odd trait) 332 tickle . . .
sere on hair trigger ("sere" = part of the gunlock) 333 or else; halt limp 339 inhibition hindrance 340 innovation probably an allusion to the companies of child actors that had become popular and were offering serious competition to the adult actors 346 eyrie nest 347 eyases . . . question unfledged hawks that cry shrilly above others in matters of debate 348 tyrannically violently 349 berattle . . . stages cry down the public theaters (with the adult acting companies)

they call them) that many wearing rapiers are afraid of 350 goosequills° and dare scarce come thither.

HAMLET What, are they children? Who maintains 'em? How are they escoted?° Will they pursue the quality° no longer than they can sing? Will they not say afterwards, if they should grow themselves to 355 common players (as it is most like, if their means are no better), their writers do them wrong to make them exclaim against their own succession?°

ROSENCRANTZ Faith, there has been much to-do on both sides, and the nation holds it no sin to tarre° them 360 to controversy. There was, for a while, no money bid for argument° unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question.

HAMLET Is't possible?

GUILDENSTERN O, there has been much throwing 365
about of brains.

HAMLET Do the boys carry it away?

ROSENCRANTZ Ay, that they do, my lord—Hercules and his load° too.

HAMLET It is not very strange, for my uncle is King of 370
Denmark, and those that would make mouths at him while my father lived give twenty, forty, fifty, a hundred ducats apiece for his picture in little. 'Sblood,° there is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could find it out. 375

A flourish.

GUILDENSTERN There are the players.

HAMLET Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore.
Your hands, come then. Th' appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony. Let me comply° with you in this garb,° lest my extent° to the players (which I tell 380 you must show fairly outwards) should more appear like entertainment than yours. You are welcome. But my uncle-father and aunt-mother are deceived.

GUILDENSTERN In what, my dear lord?

HAMLET I am but mad north-northwest:° when the 385 wind is southerly I know a hawk from a handsaw.°

Enter POLONIUS.

POLONIUS Well be with you, gentlemen.

HAMLET Hark you, Guildenstern, and you too; at each ear a hearer. That great baby you see there is not yet out of his swaddling clouts. 390

ROSENCRANTZ Happily° he is the second time come to them, for they say an old man is twice a child.

HAMLET I will prophesy he comes to tell me of the players. Mark it.—You say right, sir; a Monday morning, 'twas then indeed. 395

POLONIUS My lord, I have news to tell you.

HAMLET My lord, I have news to tell you. When Roscius° was an actor in Rome—

POLONIUS The actors are come hither, my lord.

HAMLET Buzz, buzz.° 400

POLONIUS Upon my honor—

HAMLET Then came each actor on his ass—

POLONIUS The best actors in the world, either for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral, pastoral-comical, historical-pastoral, tragical-historical, tragical-comical- 405 historical-pastoral; scene individable,° or poem unlimited.° Seneca° cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus° too light. For the law of writ and the liberty,° these are the only men.

HAMLET O Jephtha, judge of Israel,° what a treasure 410
hadst thou!

POLONIUS What a treasure had he, my lord?

HAMLET Why,
“One fair daughter, and no more,
The which he lovèd passing well.” 415

POLONIUS [Aside.] Still on my daughter.

HAMLET Am I not i' th' right, old Jephtha?

POLONIUS If you call me Jephtha, my lord, I have a daughter that I love passing well.

HAMLET Nay, that follows not. 420

POLONIUS What follows then, my lord?

HAMLET Why,
“As by lot, God wot,”
and then, you know,

“It came to pass, as most like it was.” 425
The first row of the pious chanson° will show you more, for look where my abridgment° comes.

Enter the PLAYERS.

You are welcome, masters, welcome, all. I am glad to see thee well. Welcome, good friends. O, old friend, why, thy face is valanced° since I saw thee last. Com'st 430 thou to beard me in Denmark? What, my young lady° and mistress? By'r Lady, your ladyship is nearer to heaven than when I saw you last by the altitude of a chopine.° Pray God your voice, like a piece of un-current gold, be not cracked within the ring.°— 435
Masters, you are all welcome. We'll e'en to't like French falconers, fly at anything we see. We'll have a speech straight. Come, give us a taste of your quality.
Come, a passionate speech.

PLAYER What speech, my good lord? 440

HAMLET I heard thee speak me a speech once, but it was never acted, or if it was, not above once, for the 398 Roscius a famous Roman comic actor 400 Buzz, buzz an interjection, perhaps indicating that the news is old 406 scene individable plays observing the unities of time, place, and action 406–07 poem unlimited plays not restricted by the tenets of criticism 407 Seneca Roman tragic dramatist; Plautus Roman comic dramatist 408 For . . . liberty perhaps “for sticking to the text and improvising”; perhaps “for classical plays and for modern loosely written plays” 410 Jephtha . . . Israel the title of a ballad on the Hebrew judge who sacrificed his daughter; see Judges 11 426 row . . . chanson stanza of the scriptural song 427 abridgment (1) i.e., entertainers, who abridge the time (2) interrupters 430 valanced fringed (with a beard) 431 young lady i.e., boy for female roles 434 chopine thick-soled shoe 434–35 like . . . ring a coin was unfit for legal tender if a crack extended from the edge through the ring enclosing the monarch's head; Hamlet, punning on ring, refers to the change of voice that the boy actor will undergo

351 goosequills pens (of satirists who ridicule the public theaters and their audiences) 353 escoted financially supported 354 quality profession of acting 358 succession future 360 tarre incite 362 argument plot of a play 368–69 Hercules . . . load i.e., the whole world (with a reference to the Globe Theatre, which had a sign that represented Hercules bearing the globe) 373 'Sblood by God's blood 379 comply be courteous 380 garb outward show; extent behavior 385 north-northwest i.e., on one point of the compass only 386 hawk from a handsaw “hawk” can refer not only to a bird but to a kind of pickax; “handsaw”—a carpenter's tool—may involve a similar pun on hernshaw, a heron) 391 Happily perhaps play, I remember, pleased not the million; 'twas caviary to the general,° but it was (as I received it, and others, whose judgments in such matters cried in the top of° 445 mine) an excellent play, well digested in the scenes, set down with as much modesty as cunning.° I remember one said there were no sallets° in the lines to make the matter savory; nor no matter in the phrase that might indict the author of affectation, but called it an honest 450 method, as wholesome as sweet, and by very much more handsome than fine.° One speech in't I chiefly loved. 'Twas Aeneas' tale to Dido, and thereabout of it especially when he speaks of Priam's slaughter. If it live in your memory, begin at this line—let me see, let me 455 see:

"The rugged Pyrrhus, like th' Hyrcanian beast°—" 'Tis not so; it begins with Pyrrhus:

"The rugged Pyrrhus, he whose sable° arms, Black as his purpose, did the night resemble 460 When he lay couchèd in th' ominous horse,° Hath now this dread and black complexion smeared With heraldry more dismal.° Head to foot Now is he total gules, horridly tricked° With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons, 465 Baked and impasted° with the parching streets, That lend a tyrannous and a damnèd light To their lord's murder. Roasted in wrath and fire, And thus o'ersizèd° with coagulate gore, With eyes like carbuncles, the hellish Pyrrhus 470 Old grandsire Priam seeks."

So, proceed you.

POLONIUS Fore God, my lord, well spoken, with good accent and good discretion.

PLAYER "Anon he finds him, 475 Striking too short at Greeks. His antique sword, Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls, Repugnant to command.° Unequal matched, Pyrrhus at Priam drives, in rage strikes wide, But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword 480 Th' unnervèd father falls. Then senseless Ilium,° Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top Stoops to his base,° and with a hideous crash Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear. For lo, his sword, Which was declining on the milky head Of reverend Priam, seemed i' th' air to stick. So as a painted tyrant° Pyrrhus stood, And like a neutral to his will and matter° Did nothing.

But as we often see, against° some storm, 490 A silence in the heavens, the rack° stand still, The bold winds speechless, and the orb below As hush as death, anon the dreadful thunder Doth rend the region, so after Pyrrhus' pause, A rousèd vengeance sets him new awork, 495

443-44 caviary . . . general i.e., too choice for the multitude 445 in the top of overtopping 447 modesty as cunning restraint as art 448 sallets salads, spicy jests 452 more . . . fine well-proportioned rather than ornamented 457 Hyrcanian beast tiger (Hyrcania was in Asia) 459 sable black 461 ominous horse wooden horse at the siege of Troy 463 dismal ill-omened 464 total . . . tricked all red, horridly adorned 466 impasted encrusted 469 o'ersizèd smeared over 478 Repugnant to command disobedient 481 senseless Ilium insensate Troy 483 Stoops . . . base collapses ("his" = its) 487 painted tyrant tyrant in a picture 488 matter task 490 against just before 491 rack clouds

And never did the Cyclops' hammers fall On Mars's armor, forged for proof eterne,° With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword Now falls on Priam.

Out, out, thou strumpet Fortune! All you gods, 500 In general synod° take away her power, Break all the spokes and fellies° from her wheel, And bowl the round nave° down the hill of heaven, As low as to the fiends."

POLONIUS This is too long. 505

HAMLET It shall to the barber's, with your beard.— Prithee say on. He's for a jig or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps. Say on; come to Hecuba.

PLAYER

"But who (ah woe!) had seen the mobled° queen—" 510

HAMLET "The mobled queen"?

POLONIUS That's good. "Mobled queen" is good.

PLAYER

"Run barefoot up and down, threat'ning the flames With bisson rheum;° a clout° upon that head Where late the diadem stood, and for a robe, About her lank and all o'erteemèd° loins, 515 A blanket in the alarm of fear caught up— Who this had seen, with tongue in venom steeped 'Gainst Fortune's state would treason have pronounced. But if the gods themselves did see her then, When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport 520 In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs, The instant burst of clamor that she made (Unless things mortal move them not at all) Would have much milch° the burning eyes of heaven And passion in the gods." 525

POLONIUS Look, whe'r° he has not turned his color, and has tears in's eyes. Prithee no more.

HAMLET 'Tis well. I'll have thee speak out the rest of this soon. Good my lord, will you see the players well bestowed?° Do you hear? Let them be well used, for 530 they are the abstract and brief chronicles of the time. After your death you were better have a bad epitaph than their ill report while you live.

POLONIUS My lord, I will use them according to their desert. 535

HAMLET God's bodkin,° man, much better! Use every man after his desert, and who shall scape whipping? Use them after your own honor and dignity. The less they deserve, the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in. 540

POLONIUS Come, sirs.

HAMLET Follow him, friends. We'll hear a play tomorrow. [Aside to PLAYER.] Dost thou hear me, old friend? Can you play The Murder of Gonzago?

PLAYER Ay, my lord. 545

HAMLET We'll ha't tomorrow night. You could for a need study a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines which I would set down and insert in't, could you not?

PLAYER Ay, my lord.

HAMLET Very well. Follow that lord, and look you 550

497 proof eterne eternal endurance 501 synod council 502 fellies rims 503 nave hub 509 mobled muffled 513 bisson rheum blinding tears; clout rag 515 o'erteemèd exhausted with childbearing 524 milch moist (literally "milk-giving") 526 whe'r whether 530 bestowed housed, 536 God's bodkin by God's little body mock him not. My good friends, I'll leave you till night. You are welcome to Elsinore.

Exeunt POLONIUS and PLAYERS.

ROSENCRANTZ Good my lord.

Exeunt [ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN].

HAMLET

Ay, so, God bye to you.—Now I am alone.

O, what a rogue and peasant slave am I!

Is it not monstrous that this player here,

But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,^o

Could force his soul so to his own conceit^o

That from her working all his visage wanned,

Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,

A broken voice, and his whole function^o suiting

With forms^o to his conceit? And all for nothing!

For Hecuba!

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,

That he should weep for her? What would he do

Had he the motive and the cue for passion

That I have? He would drown the stage with tears

And cleave the general ear with horrid speech,

Make mad the guilty and appall the free,^o

Confound the ignorant, and amaze indeed

The very faculties of eyes and ears.

Yet I,

A dull and muddy-mettled^o rascal, peak

Like John-a-dreams,^o unpregnant of^o my cause,

And can say nothing. No, not for a king,

Upon whose property and most dear life

A damned defeat was made. Am I a coward?

Who calls me villain? Breaks my pate across?

Plucks off my beard and blows it in my face?

Tweaks me by the nose? Gives me the lie i' th' throat

As deep as to the lungs? Who does me this?

Ha, 'swounds,^o I should take it, for it cannot be

But I am pigeon-livered^o and lack gall

To make oppression bitter, or ere this

I should ha' fatted all the region kites^o

With this slave's offal. Bloody, bawdy villain!

Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless^o villain!

O, vengeance!

Why, what an ass am I! This is most brave,^o

That I, the son of a dear father murdered,

Prompted to my revenge by heaven and hell,

Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words

And fall a-cursing like a very drab,^o

A stallion!^o Fie upon't, foh! About,^o my brains.

Hum—

I have heard that guilty creatures sitting at a play

Have by the very cunning of the scene

Been struck so to the soul that presently^o

They have proclaimed their malefactions.

For murder, though it have no tongue, will speak

With most miraculous organ. I'll have these players

Play something like the murder of my father

Before mine uncle. I'll observe his looks,

I'll tent^o him to the quick. If 'a do blench,^o

I know my course. The spirit that I have seen

May be a devil, and the devil hath power

T' assume a pleasing shape, yea, and perhaps

Out of my weakness and my melancholy,

As he is very potent with such spirits,

Abuses me to damn me. I'll have grounds

More relative^o than this. The play's the thing

Wherein I'll catch the conscience of the king. Exit.

[A C T I I I]

[Scene I. The castle.]

Enter KING, QUEEN, POLONIUS, OPHELIA, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, LORDS.

KING

And can you by no drift of conference^o

Get from him why he puts on this confusion,

Grating so harshly all his days of quiet

With turbulent and dangerous lunacy?

ROSENCRANTZ

He does confess he feels himself distracted,

But from what cause 'a will by no means speak.

GUILDENSTERN

Nor do we find him forward to be sounded,^o

But with a crafty madness keeps aloof

When we could bring him on to some confession

Of his true state.

QUEEN

Did he receive you well?

ROSENCRANTZ

Most like a gentleman.

GUILDENSTERN

But with much forcing of his disposition.^o

ROSENCRANTZ

Niggard of question,^o but of our demands

Most free in his reply.

QUEEN

Did you assay^o him

To any pastime?

ROSENCRANTZ

Madame, it so fell out that certain players

We o'erraught^o on the way; of these we told him,

And there did seem in him a kind of joy

To hear of it. They are here about the court,

And, as I think, they have already order

This night to play before him.

POLONIUS

'Tis most true,

And he beseeched me to entreat your majesties

To hear and see the matter.

KING

With all my heart, and it doth much content me

To hear him so inclined.

604 tent probe; blench flinch 611 relative probably "pertinent," but possibly "able to be related plausibly"

III.i.1 drift of conference management of conversation 7 forward . . . sounded willing to be questioned 12 forcing

. . . disposition effort 13 Niggard of question uninclined to talk 14 assay tempt 17 o'erraught overtook

557 dream of passion imaginary emotion 558 conceit imagination 561 function action 562 forms bodily expressions 569 appall the free terrify (make pale?) the guiltless 573 muddy-mettled weak-spirited 573-74 peak Like John-a-dreams mope like a dreamer 574 unpregnant of unquicken by 582 'swounds by God's wounds 583 pigeon-livered gentle as a dove 585 region kites kites (scavenger birds) of the sky 587 kindless unnatural 589 brave fine 593 drab prostitute 594 stallion male prostitute (perhaps one should adopt the Folio reading, "scullion" = kitchen wench); About to work 598 presently immediately

Good gentlemen, give him a further edge
And drive his purpose into these delights.

ROSENCRANTZ

We shall, my lord.

Exeunt ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

KING

Sweet Gertrude, leave us too,
For we have closely^o sent for Hamlet hither,
That he, as 'twere by accident, may here 30
Affront^o Ophelia.
Her father and myself (lawful espials^o)
Will so bestow ourselves that, seeing unseen,
We may of their encounter frankly judge
And gather by him, as he is behaved, 35
If't be th' affliction of his love or no
That thus he suffers for.

QUEEN

I shall obey you.
And for your part, Ophelia, I do wish
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet's wildness. So shall I hope your virtues 40
Will bring him to his wonted way again,
To both your honors.

OPHELIA

Madam, I wish it may.
[Exit QUEEN.]

POLONIUS

Ophelia, walk you here.—Gracious, so please you,
We will bestow ourselves. [To OPHELIA.] Read on this book,
That show of such an exercise may color^o 45
Your loneliness. We are oft to blame in this,
'Tis too much proved, that with devotion's visage
And pious action we do sugar o'er
The devil himself.

KING [Aside.]

O, 'tis too true.
How smart a lash that speech doth give my conscience! 50
The harlot's cheek, beautied with plast'ring art,
Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it
Than is my deed to my most painted word.
O heavy burden!

POLONIUS

I hear him coming. Let's withdraw, my lord. 55
[Exeunt KING and POLONIUS.]

Enter HAMLET.

HAMLET

To be, or not to be: that is the question:
Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer
The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune,
Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
And by opposing end them. To die, to sleep— 60
No more—and by a sleep to say we end
The heartache, and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to! 'Tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wished. To die, to sleep—
To sleep—perchance to dream: ay, there's the rub,^o 65
For in that sleep of death what dreams may come
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,^o
Must give us pause. There's the respect^o

That makes calamity of so long life:^o

For who would bear the whips and scorns of time, 70
Th' oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,
The pangs of despised love, the law's delay,
The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of th' unworthy takes,
When he himself might his quietus^o make 75
With a bare bodkin?^o Who would fardels^o bear,
To grunt and sweat under a weary life,
But that the dread of something after death,
The undiscovered country, from whose bourn^o
No traveler returns, puzzles the will, 80
And makes us rather bear those ills we have,
Than fly to others that we know not of?
Thus conscience^o does make cowards of us all,
And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast^o of thought, 85
And enterprises of great pitch^o and moment,
With this regard^o their currents turn awry,
And lose the name of action.—Soft you now,
The fair Ophelia!—Nymph, in thy orisons^o
Be all my sins remembered.

OPHELIA

Good my lord, 90

How does your honor for this many a day?

HAMLET

I humbly thank you; well, well, well.

OPHELIA

My lord, I have remembrances of yours
That I have longèd long to redeliver.
I pray you now, receive them.

HAMLET

No, not I, 95

I never gave you aught.

OPHELIA

My honored lord, you know right well you did,
And with them words of so sweet breath composed
As made these things more rich. Their perfume lost,
Take these again, for to the noble mind 100
Rich gifts wax poor when givers prove unkind.
There, my lord.

HAMLET Ha, ha! Are you honest?^o

OPHELIA My lord?

HAMLET Are you fair? 105

OPHELIA What means your lordship?

HAMLET That if you be honest and fair, your honesty should admit no discourse to your beauty.^o

OPHELIA Could beauty, my lord, have better com- 110
merce than with honesty?

HAMLET Ay, truly; for the power of beauty will sooner transform honesty from what it is to a bawd^o than the force of honesty can translate beauty into his likeness. This was sometime a paradox, but now the time gives it proof. I did love you once. 115

OPHELIA Indeed, my lord, you made me believe so.

HAMLET You should not have believed me, for virtue

29 closely secretly 31 Affront meet face to face 32 espials spies 45 exercise may color act of devotion may give a plausible hue to (the book is one of devotion) 65 rub impediment (obstruction to a bowler's ball) 67 coil (1) turmoil (2) a ring of rope (here the flesh encircling the soul)
68 respect consideration

69 makes . . . life (1) makes calamity so long-lived (2) makes living so long a calamity 75 quietus full discharge (a legal term) 76 bodkin dagger; fardels burdens 79 bourn region 83 conscience self-consciousness, introspection 85 cast color 86 pitch height (a term from falconry) 87 regard consideration 89 orisons prayers 103 Are you honest (1)
Are you modest? (2) Are you chaste (3) Have you integrity?
107-08 your honesty . . . beauty your modesty should permit no approach to your beauty 112 bawd procurer cannot so inoculate^o our old stock but we shall relish of it.^o I loved you not.

OPHELIA I was the more deceived. 120

HAMLET Get thee to a nunnery. Why wouldst thou be a breeder of sinners? I am myself indifferent honest,^o but yet I could accuse me of such things that it were better my mother had not borne me: I am very proud, revengeful, ambitious, with more offenses at my beck^o 125 than I have thoughts to put them in, imagination to give them shape, or time to act them in. What should such fellows as I do crawling between earth and heaven? We are arrant knaves all; believe none of us.
Go thy ways to a nunnery. Where's your father? 130

OPHELIA At home, my lord.

HAMLET Let the doors be shut upon him, that he may play the fool nowhere but in's own house. Farewell.

OPHELIA O help him, you sweet heavens!

HAMLET If thou dost marry, I'll give thee this plague 135 for thy dowry: be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow, thou shalt not escape calunmy. Get thee to a nunnery.
Go, farewell. Or if thou wilt needs marry, marry a fool, for wise men know well enough what monsters^o you make of them. To a nunnery, go, and quickly too. 140
Farewell.

OPHELIA Heavenly powers, restore him!

HAMLET I have heard of your paintings, well enough.
God hath given you one face, and you make yourselves another. You jig and amble, and you lisp; you nick- 145 name God's creatures and make your wantonness your ignorance.^o Go to, I'll no more on't; it hath made me mad. I say we will have no moe^o marriage. Those that are married already—all but one—shall live. The rest shall keep as they are. To a nunnery, go. Exit. 150

OPHELIA

O what a noble mind is here o'erthrown!
The courtier's, soldier's, scholar's, eye, tongue, sword,
Th' expectancy and rose^o of the fair state,
The glass of fashion, and the mold of form,^o
Th' observed of all observers, quite, quite down! 155
And I, of ladies most deject and wretched,
That sucked the honey of his musicked vows,
Now see that noble and most sovereign reason
Like sweet bells jangled, out of time and harsh,
That unmatched form and feature of blown^o youth 160
Blasted with ecstasy.^o O, woe is me
T' have seen what I have seen, see what I see!

Enter KING and POLONIUS.

KING

Love? His affections^o do not that way tend,
Nor what he spake, though it lacked form a little,
Was not like madness. There's something in his soul 165
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood,
And I do doubt^o the hatch and the disclose
Will be some danger; which for to prevent,

I have in quick determination
Thus set it down: he shall with speed to England 170
For the demand of our neglected tribute.
Haply the seas, and countries different,
With variable objects, shall expel
This something-settled^o matter in his heart,
Whereon his brains still beating puts him thus 175
From fashion of himself. What think you on't?

POLONIUS

It shall do well. But yet do I believe
The origin and commencement of his grief
Sprung from neglected love. How now, Ophelia?
You need not tell us what Lord Hamlet said; 180
We heard it all. My lord, do as you please,
But if you hold it fit, after the play,
Let his queen mother all alone entreat him
To show his grief. Let her be round^o with him,
And I'll be placed, so please you, in the ear 185
Of all their conference. If she find him not,^o
To England send him, or confine him where Your wisdom best shall think.

KING

It shall be so.

Madness in great ones must not unwatched go.

Exeunt.

[Scene II. The castle.]

Enter HAMLET and three of the PLAYERS.

HAMLET Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue. But if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lief the town crier spoke my lines. Nor do not saw the air too much 5 with your hand, thus, but use all gently, for in the very torrent, tempest, and (as I may say) whirlwind of your passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. O, it offends me to the soul to hear a robustious periwig-pated^o fellow tear a passion 10 to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings,^o who for the most part are capable of^o nothing but inexplicable dumb shows^o and noise. I would have such a fellow whipped for o'erdoing Termagant. It out-herods Herod.^o Pray you avoid it.

PLAYER I warrant your honor. 15

HAMLET Be not too tame neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor. Suit the action to the word, the word to the action, with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature. For anything so o'erdone is from^o the purpose of playing, 20 whose end, both at the first and now, was and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature; to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time his form and pressure.^o Now, this overdone, or come tardy off, though it makes the 25

118 inoculate graft 118-19 relish of it smack of it (our old sinful nature) 122 indifferent honest moderately virtuous 125 beck call 139 monsters horned beasts, cuckolds 146-47 make . . . ignorance excuse your wanton speech by pretending ignorance 148 moe more 153 expectancy and rose i.e., fair hope 154 The glass . . . form the mirror of fashion, and the pattern of excellent behavior 160 blown blooming 161 ecstasy madness 163 affections inclinations 167 doubt fear

174 something-settled somewhat settled 184 round blunt
186 find him not does not find him out
III.ii.9 robustious periwig-pated boisterous wig-headed 10-11 groundlings those who stood in the pit of the theater
(the poorest and presumably most ignorant of the audience) 11 are capable of are able to understand 12 dumb shows it had been the fashion for actors to preface plays or parts of plays with silent mime 13-14 Termagant . . . Herod boisterous characters in the old mystery plays 20 from contrary to 24 pressure image, impress unskillful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve, the censure of the which one must in your allowance o'erweigh a whole theater of others. O, there be players that I have seen play, and heard others praise, and that highly (not to speak it profanely), that neither having th' accent of Christians, nor the gait of Christian, pagan, nor man, have so strutted and bellowed that I have thought some of Nature's journeymen° had made men, and not made them well, they imitated humanity so abominably. 35

PLAYER I hope we have reformed that indifferently° with us, sir.

HAMLET O, reform it altogether! And let those that play your clowns speak no more than is set down for them, for there be of them that will themselves laugh, 40 to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too, though in the meantime some necessary question of the play be then to be considered. That's villainous and shows a most pitiful ambition in the fool that uses
it. Go make you ready. Exit PLAYERS. 45

Enter POLONIUS, GUILDENSTERN, and
ROSENCRANTZ.

How now, my lord? Will the king hear this piece of work?

POLONIUS And the queen too, and that presently.

HAMLET Bid the players make haste.

Exit POLONIUS.

Will you two help to hasten them?

ROSENCRANTZ Ay, my lord. Exeunt they two. 50

HAMLET What, ho, Horatio!

Enter HORATIO.

HORATIO Here, sweet lord, at your service.

HAMLET

Horatio, thou art e'en as just a man
As e'er my conversation coped withal.° 55

HORATIO

O, my dear lord—

HAMLET Nay, do not think I flatter.

For what advancement° may I hope from thee,
That no revenue hast but thy good spirits
To feed and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flattered?

No, let the candied° tongue lick absurd pomp, 60
And crook the pregnant° hinges of the knee
Where thrift° may follow fawning. Dost thou hear?

Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice
And could of men distinguish her election,
S' hath sealed thee° for herself, for thou hast been 65

As one, in suff'ring all, that suffers nothing,
A man that Fortune's buffets and rewards
Hast ta'en with equal thanks; and blest are those Whose blood° and judgment are so well commeddled°

That they are not a pipe for Fortune's finger 70
To sound what stop she please. Give me that man
That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him

In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart,
As I do thee. Something too much of this—
There is a play tonight before the king. 75

One scene of it comes near the circumstance
Which I have told thee, of my father's death.

I prithee, when thou see'st that act afoot,
Even with the very comment° of thy soul

Observe my uncle. If his occulted° guilt 80
Do not itself unkennel in one speech,
It is a damnèd ghost that we have seen,

And my imaginations are as foul
As Vulcan's stithy.° Give him heedful note,

For I mine eyes will rivet to his face, 85
And after we will both our judgments join
In censure of his seeming.°

HORATIO Well, my lord.
If 'a steal aught the whilst this play is playing,
And scape detecting, I will pay the theft.

Enter trumpets and kettledrums, KING, QUEEN, POLO-NIUS, OPHELIA, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, and other LORDS attendant, with his GUARD carrying torches. Danish march. Sound a flourish.

HAMLET They are coming to the play: I must be idle;° 90
Get you a place.

KING How fares our cousin Hamlet?

HAMLET Excellent, i' faith, of the chameleon's dish;°
I eat the air, promise-crammed; you cannot feed 95
capons so.

KING I have nothing with this answer, Hamlet; these words are not mine.

HAMLET No, nor mine now. [To POLONIUS.] My lord, you played once i' th' university, you say?

POLONIUS That did I, my lord, and was accounted a 100 good actor.

HAMLET What did you enact?

POLONIUS I did enact Julius Caesar. I was killed i' th'
Capitol; Brutus killed me.

HAMLET It was a brute part of him to kill so capital a 105 calf there. Be the players ready?

ROSENCRANTZ Ay, my lord. They stay upon your patience.

QUEEN Come hither, my dear Hamlet, sit by me.

HAMLET No, good mother. Here's metal more 110 attractive.°

POLONIUS [To the KING.] O ho! Do you mark that?

HAMLET Lady, shall I lie in your lap?

[He lies at Ophelia's feet.]

OPHELIA No, my lord.

HAMLET I mean, my head upon your lap? 115

OPHELIA Ay, my lord.

HAMLET Do you think I meant country matters?°

OPHELIA I think nothing, my lord.

HAMLET That's a fair thought to lie between maids'
legs. 120

OPHELIA What is, my lord?

33 journeymen workers not yet masters of their craft 36 indifferently tolerably 55 coped withal met with 57 advancement promotion 60 candied sugared, flattering 61 pregnant (1) pliant (2) full of promise of good fortune 62 thrift profit 65 S' . . . thee she (the soul) has set a mark on you 69 blood passion; commeddled blended

79 very comment deepest wisdom 80 occulted hidden 84 stithy forge, smithy 87 censure . . . seeming judgment on his looks 90 be idle play the fool 93 the chameleon's dish air (on which chameleons were thought to live) 111 attractive magnetic 117 country matters rustic doings (with a pun on the vulgar word for the pudendum)

HAMLET Nothing.

OPHELIA You are merry, my lord.

HAMLET Who, I?

OPHELIA Ay, my lord.

HAMLET O God, your only jig-maker!° What should a man do but be merry? For look you how cheerfully my mother looks, and my father died within's two hours.

OPHELIA Nay, 'tis twice two months, my lord.

HAMLET So long? Nay then, let the devil wear black, for I'll have a suit of sables.° O heavens! Die two months ago, and not forgotten yet? Then there's hope a great man's memory may outlive his life half a year.
But, by'r Lady, 'a must build churches then, or else shall 'a suffer not thinking on, with the hobbyhorse,° whose epitaph is "For O, for O, the hobbyhorse is forgot!"

The trumpets sound. Dumb show follows:

Enter a KING and a QUEEN very lovingly, the QUEEN embracing him, and he her. She kneels; and makes show of protestation unto him. He takes her up, and declines his head upon her neck. He lies him down upon a bank of flowers. She, seeing him asleep, leaves him. Anon come in another man: takes off his crown, kisses it, pours poison in the sleeper's ears, and leaves him. The QUEEN returns, finds the KING dead, makes passionate action. The POISONER, with some three or four, come in again, seem to condole with her. The dead body is carried away. The POISONER wooes the QUEEN with gifts; she seems harsh awhile, but in the end accepts love. Exeunt.

OPHELIA What means this, my lord?

HAMLET Marry, this is miching mallecho;° it means mischief.

OPHELIA Belike this show imports the argument° of the play.

Enter PROLOGUE.

HAMLET We shall know by this fellow. The players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all.

OPHELIA Will 'a tell us what this show meant?

HAMLET Ay, or any show that you will show him.
Be not you ashamed to show, he'll not shame to tell you what it means.

OPHELIA You are naught,° you are naught; I'll mark
the play.

PROLOGUE

For us, and for our tragedy,
Here stooping to your clemency,
We beg your hearing patiently. [Exit.]

HAMLET Is this a prologue, or the posy of a ring?°

OPHELIA 'Tis brief, my lord.

HAMLET As woman's love.

Enter [two PLAYERS as] king and queen.

PLAYER KING

Full thirty times hath Phoebus' cart° gone round

126 jig-maker composer of songs and dances (often a fool, who performed them) 132 sables pun on the meanings
"black" and "luxurious furs" 136 hobbyhorse mock horse worn by a performer in the morris dance 140 miching mallecho sneaking mischief 142 argument plot 150 naught wicked, improper 155 posy . . . ring motto inscribed in a ring 158 Phoebus' cart the sun's chariot

Neptune's salt wash° and Tellus'° orbèd ground,
And thirty dozen moons with borrowed sheen
About the world have times twelve thirties been,
Since love our hearts, and Hymen did our hands,
Unite commutual in most sacred bands.

PLAYER QUEEN

So many journeys may the sun and moon
Make us again count o'er ere love be done!
But woe is me, you are so sick of late,
So far from cheer and from your former state,
That I distrust° you. Yet, though I distrust, Discomfort you, my lord, it nothing must.
For women fear too much, even as they love,
And women's fear and love hold quantity,
In neither aught, or in extremity.°
Now what my love is, proof° hath made you know,
And as my love is sized, my fear is so.
Where love is great, the littlest doubts are fear;
Where little fears grow great, great love grows there.

PLAYER KING

Faith, I must leave thee, love, and shortly too;
My operant° powers their functions leave to do:
And thou shalt live in this fair world behind,
Honored, beloved, and haply one as kind
For husband shalt thou—

PLAYER QUEEN

O, confound the rest!

Such love must needs be treason in my breast.
In second husband let me be accurst!
None wed the second but who killed the first.

HAMLET [Aside.] That's wormwood.°

PLAYER QUEEN

The instances° that second marriage move°
Are base respects of thrift,° but none of love.
A second time I kill my husband dead
When second husband kisses me in bed.

PLAYER KING

I do believe you think what now you speak,
But what we do determine oft we break.
Purpose is but the slave to memory,
Of violent birth, but poor validity,°
Which now like fruit unripe sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken when they mellow be.
Most necessary 'tis that we forget
To pay ourselves what to ourselves is debt.
What to ourselves in passion we propose,
The passion ending, doth the purpose lose.
The violence of either grief or joy
Their own enactures° with themselves destroy:
Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;
Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident.
This world is not for aye, nor 'tis not strange
That even our loves should with our fortunes change,
For 'tis a question left us yet to prove,
Whether love lead fortune, or else fortune love.
The great man down, you mark his favorite flies;

159 Neptune's salt wash the sea; Tellus Roman goddess of the earth 168 distrust am anxious about 171-72 And . . .
extremity perhaps the idea is that women's anxiety is great or little in proportion to their love; the previous line, unrhymed, may be a false start that Shakespeare neglected to delete 173 proof experience 178 operant active 185 wormwood a bitter herb 186 instances motives; move induce 187 respects of thrift considerations of profit 193 validity strength 201 enactures acts

The poor advanced makes friends of enemies;
 And hitherto doth love on fortune tend,
 For who not needs shall never lack a friend;
 And who in want a hollow friend doth try,
 Directly seasons him^o his enemy.
 But, orderly to end where I begun,
 Our wills and fates do so contrary run
 That our devices still are overthrown;
 Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our own.
 So think thou wilt no second husband wed,
 But die thy thoughts when thy first lord is dead.

PLAYER QUEEN

Nor earth to me give food, nor heaven light,
 Sport and repose lock from me day and night,
 To desperation turn my trust and hope,
 An anchor's^o cheer in prison be my scope,
 Each opposite that blanks^o the face of joy
 Meet what I would have well, and it destroy:
 Both here and hence pursue me lasting strife,
 If, once a widow, ever I be wife!

HAMLET If she should break it now!

PLAYER KING

'Tis deeply sworn. Sweet, leave me here awhile;
 My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
 The tedious day with sleep.

PLAYER QUEEN Sleep rock thy brain,
 [He] sleeps.

And never come mischance between us twain! Exit.

HAMLET Madam, how like you this play?

QUEEN The lady doth protest too much, methinks.

HAMLET O, but she'll keep her word.

KING Have you heard the argument?^o Is there no offense in't?

HAMLET No, no, they do but jest, poison in jest; no offense i' th' world.

KING What do you call the play?

HAMLET The Mousetrap. Marry, how? Tropically.^o
 The play is the image of a murder done in Vienna:
 Gonzago is the duke's name; his wife, Baptista. You shall see anon. 'Tis a knavish piece of work, but what of that? Your majesty, and we that have free^o souls, it touches us not. Let the galled jade winch;^o our withers are unwrung.

Enter LUCIANUS.

This is one Lucianus, nephew to the king.

OPHELIA You are as good as a chorus, my lord.

HAMLET I could interpret^o between you and your love, if I could see the puppets dallying.

OPHELIA You are keen^o my lord, you are keen.

HAMLET It would cost you a groaning to take off mine edge.

OPHELIA Still better, and worse.

HAMLET So you mistake^o your husbands.—Begin, murderer. Leave thy damnable faces and begin. Come,
 the croaking raven doth bellow for revenge.

213 seasons him ripens him into 223 anchor's anchorite's, hermit's 224 opposite that blanks adverse thing that blanches 236 argument plot 241 Tropically figuratively (with a pun on trap) 245 free innocent 246 galled jade winch chafed horse wince 250 interpret like a showman explaining the action of puppets 252 keen (1) sharp (2) sexually aroused 256 mistake err in taking

LUCIANUS

210 Thoughts black, hands apt, drugs fit, and time agreeing,
 Confederate season,^o else no creature seeing, 260
 Thou mixture rank, of midnight weeds collected,
 With Hecate's ban^o thrice blasted, thrice infected,
 Thy natural magic and dire property^o
 215 On wholesome life usurps immediately.

Pours the poison in his ears.

HAMLET 'A poisons him i' th' garden for his estate. 265
 His name's Gonzago. The story is extant, and written in very choice Italian. You shall see anon how the murderer gets the love of Gonzago's wife.

OPHELIA The king rises.

HAMLET What, frightened with false fire?^o 270

QUEEN How fares my lord?

POLONIUS Give o'er the play.

225 KING Give me some light. Away!

POLONIUS Lights, lights, lights!

Exeunt all but HAMLET and HORATIO.

HAMLET

Why, let the stricken deer go weep, 275

The hart ungalled play:

230 For some must watch, while some must sleep;

Thus runs the world away.

Would not this, sir, and a forest of feathers^o—if the rest of my fortunes turn Turk^o with me—with two 280 Provincial roses^o on my razed^o shoes, get me a fellowship in a cry^o of players?

HORATIO Half a share.

HAMLET A whole one, I.

For thou dost know, O Damon dear, 285

This realm dismantled was

Of Jove himself; and now reigns here

A very, very—pajock.^o

HORATIO You might have rhymed.^o

HAMLET O good Horatio, I'll take the ghost's word 290 for a thousand pound. Didst perceive?

HORATIO Very well, my lord.

HAMLET Upon the talk of poisoning?

HORATIO I did very well note him.

HAMLET Ah ha! Come, some music! Come, the 295 recorders!^o

For if the king like not the comedy,

Why then, belike he likes it not, perdy.^o

Come, some music!

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

GUILDENSTERN Good my lord, vouchsafe me a word 300 with you.

HAMLET Sir, a whole history.

GUILDENSTERN The king, sir—

HAMLET Ay, sir, what of him?

255 GUILDENSTERN Is in his retirement marvelous dis- 305 temp'ed.

260 Confederate season the opportunity allied with me 262

Hecate's ban the curse of the goddess of sorcery 263 property nature 270 false fire blank discharge of firearms 279 feathers plumes were sometimes part of a costume 280 turn Turk go bad, treat me badly 281 Provincial roses rosettes like the roses of Provence (?); razed ornamented with slashes 282 cry pack, company 288 pajock peacock 289 You . . .

rhymed i.e., rhymed "was" with "ass" 296 recorders flutelike instruments 298 perdy by God (French par dieu)

HAMLET With drink, sir?

GUILDENSTERN No, my lord, with choler.^o

HAMLET Your wisdom should show itself more richer to signify this to the doctor, for for me to put him to his purgation would perhaps plunge him into more choler. 310

GUILDENSTERN Good my lord, put your discourse into some frame,^o and start not so wildly from my affair. 315

HAMLET I am tame, sir; pronounce.

GUILDENSTERN The queen, your mother, in most great affliction of spirit hath sent me to you.

HAMLET You are welcome.

GUILDENSTERN Nay, good my lord, this courtesy is not of the right breed. If it shall please you to make me a wholesome answer, I will do your mother's commandment: if not, your pardon and my return shall be the end of my business. 320

HAMLET Sir, I cannot. 325

ROSENCRANTZ What, my lord?

HAMLET Make you a wholesome^o answer; my wit's diseased. But, sir, such answer as I can make you shall command, or rather, as you say, my mother. Therefore no more, but to the matter. My mother, you say— 330

ROSENCRANTZ Then thus she says: your behavior hath struck her into amazement and admiration.^o

HAMLET O wonderful son, that can so stonish a mother! But is there no sequel at the heels of this mother's admiration? Impart. 335

ROSENCRANTZ She desires to speak with you in her closet^o ere you go to bed.

HAMLET We shall obey, were she ten times our mother. Have you any further trade with us?

ROSENCRANTZ My lord, you once did love me. 340

HAMLET And do still, by these pickers and stealers.^o

ROSENCRANTZ Good my lord, what is your cause of distemper? You do surely bar the door upon your own liberty, if you deny your griefs to your friend.

HAMLET Sir, I lack advancement.^o 345

ROSENCRANTZ How can that be, when you have the voice of the king himself for your succession in Denmark?

Enter the PLAYERS with recorders.

HAMLET Ay, sir, but "while the grass grows"—the proverb^o is something musty. O, the recorders. Let me see one. To withdraw^o with you—why do you go about to recover the wind^o of me as if you would drive me into a toil?^o 350

GUILDENSTERN O my lord, if my duty be too bold, my love is too unmannerly.^o 355

HAMLET I do not well understand that. Will you play upon this pipe?

GUILDENSTERN My lord, I cannot.

HAMLET I pray you.

GUILDENSTERN Believe me, I cannot. 360

HAMLET I pray you.

GUILDENSTERN Believe me, I cannot.

HAMLET I do beseech you.

GUILDENSTERN I know no touch of it, my lord.

HAMLET It is as easy as lying. Govern these ventages^o with your fingers and thumb, give it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most eloquent music. Look you, these are the stops. 365

GUILDENSTERN But these cannot I command to any utt'rance of harmony; I have not the skill. 370

HAMLET Why, look you now, how unworthy a thing you make of me! You would play upon me; you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery; you would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass;^o and there is much music, excellent voice, in this little organ,^o yet cannot you make it speak. 'Sblood, do you think I am easier to be played on than a pipe? Call me what instrument you will, though you can fret^o me, you cannot play upon me. 375 380

Enter POLONIUS.

God bless you, sir!

POLONIUS My lord, the queen would speak with you, and presently.

HAMLET Do you see yonder cloud that's almost in shape of a camel? 385

POLONIUS By th' mass and 'tis, like a camel indeed.

HAMLET Methinks it is like a weasel.

POLONIUS It is backed like a weasel.

HAMLET Or like a whale.

POLONIUS Very like a whale. 390

HAMLET Then I will come to my mother by and by. [Aside.] They fool me to the top of my bent.^o—I will come by and by.^o

POLONIUS I will say so. Exit.

HAMLET "By and by" is easily said. Leave me, friends. [Exeunt all but HAMLET.] 395

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn, and hell itself breathes out
Contagion to this world. Now could I drink hot blood
And do such bitter business as the day
Would quake to look on. Soft, now to my mother. 400
O heart, lose not thy nature; let not ever
The soul of Nero^o enter this firm bosom.
Let me be cruel, not unnatural;
I will speak daggers to her, but use none.
My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites: 405
How in my words somever she be shent,^o
To give them seals^o never, my soul, consent! Exit.

308 choler anger (but Hamlet pretends to take the word in its sense of "biliousness") 314 frame order, control 327 whole- some sane 332 admiration wonder 337 closet private room 341 pickers and stealers i.e., hands (with reference to the prayer, "Keep my hands from picking and stealing") 345 advancement promotion 350 proverb "While the grass groweth, the horse starveth" 351 withdraw speak in private 352 recover the wind get on the windward side (as in hunting)
353 toil snare 354–55 if . . . unmannerly if these questions seem rude, it is because my love for you leads me beyond good manners

365 ventages vents, stops on a recorder 375 compass range of voice 376 organ the recorder 379 fret vex (with a pun alluding to the frets, or ridges, that guide the fingering on some instruments) 392 They . . . bent They compel me to play the fool to the limit of my capacity 393 by and by very soon 402 Nero Roman emperor who had his mother murdered 406 shent rebuked 407 give them seals confirm them with deeds

[Scene III. The castle.]Enter KING, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

KING

I like him not, nor stands it safe with us
 To let his madness range. Therefore prepare you.
 I your commission will forthwith dispatch,
 And he to England shall along with you.
 The terms° of our estate may not endure
 Hazard so near's° as doth hourly grow
 Out of his brows.

GUILDENSTERN We will ourselves provide.

Most holy and religious fear it is
 To keep those many many bodies safe
 That live and feed upon your majesty.

ROSENCRANTZ

The single and peculiar° life is bound
 With all the strength and armor of the mind
 To keep itself from noyance,° but much more
 That spirit upon whose weal depends and rests
 The lives of many. The cess of majesty°
 Dies not alone, but like a gulf° doth draw
 What's near it with it; or it is a massy wheel
 Fixed on the summit of the highest mount,
 To whose huge spokes ten thousand lesser things
 Are mortised and adjoined, which when it falls,
 Each small annexment, petty consequence,
 Attends° the boist'rous ruin. Never alone
 Did the king sigh, but with a general groan.

KING

Arm° you, I pray you, to this speedy voyage,
 For we will fetters put about this fear,
 Which now goes too free-footed.

ROSENCRANTZ

We will haste us.

Exeunt gentlemen [ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN].

Enter POLONIUS.

POLONIUS

My lord, he's going to his mother's closet.
 Behind the arras I'll convey myself
 To hear the process.° I'll warrant she'll tax him home,°
 And, as you said, and wisely was it said,
 'Tis meet that some more audience than a mother,
 Since nature makes them partial, should o'erhear
 The speech of vantage.° Fare you well, my liege.
 I'll call upon you ere you go to bed
 And tell you what I know.

KING

Thanks, dear my lord.

Exit [POLONIUS].

O, my offense is rank, it smells to heaven;
 It hath the primal eldest curse° upon't,
 A brother's murder. Pray can I not,
 Though inclination be as sharp as will.
 My stronger guilt defeats my strong intent,
 And like a man to double business bound

I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
 And both neglect. What if this cursèd hand
 Were thicker than itself with brother's blood,
 Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens
 To wash it white as snow? Whereto serves mercy
 But to confront° the visage of offense?
 And what's in prayer but this twofold force,
 To be forestallèd ere we come to fall,
 Or pardoned being down? Then I'll look up.
 My fault is past. But, O, what form of prayer
 Can serve my turn? "Forgive me my foul murder"?
 That cannot be, since I am still possessed
 Of those effects° for which I did the murder,
 My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
 May one be pardoned and retain th' offense?
 In the corrupted currents of this world
 Offense's gilded hand may shove by justice,
 And oft 'tis seen the wicked prize itself
 Buys out the law. But 'tis not so above.
 There is no shuffling;° there the action lies
 In his true nature, and we ourselves compelled,
 Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
 To give in evidence. What then? What rests?°
 Try what repentance can. What can it not?
 Yet what can it when one cannot repent?
 O wretched state! O bosom black as death!
 O limèd° soul, that struggling to be free
 Art more engaged!° Help, angels! Make assay.°
 Bow, stubborn knees, and, heart with strings of steel,
 Be soft as sinews of the newborn babe.
 All may be well.

[He kneels.]Enter HAMLET.

HAMLET

Now might I do it pat, now 'a is a-praying,
 And now I'll do't. And so 'a goes to heaven,
 And so am I revenged. That would be scanned.°
 A villain kills my father, and for that I, his sole son, do this same villain send
 To heaven.
 Why, this is hire and salary, not revenge.
 'A took my father grossly, full of bread,°
 With all his crimes broad blown,° as flush° as May;
 And how his audit° stands, who knows save heaven?
 But in our circumstance and course of thought,
 'Tis heavy with him; and am I then revenged,
 To take him in the purging of his soul,
 When he is fit and seasoned for his passage?
 No.
 Up, sword, and know thou a more horrid hent.°
 When he is drunk asleep, or in his rage,
 Or in th' incestuous pleasure of his bed,
 At game a-swearing, or about some act
 That has no relish° of salvation in't—
 Then trip him, that his heels may kick at heaven,

III.iii.5 terms conditions 6 near's near us 11 peculiar individual, private 13 noyance injury 15 cess of majesty cessation (death) of a king 16 gulf whirlpool 22 Attends waits on, participates in 24 Arm prepare 29 process proceedings; tax him home censure him sharply 33 of vantage from an advantageous place 37 primal eldest curse curse of Cain, who killed Abel

47 confront oppose 54 effects things gained 61 shuffling trickery 64 rests remains 68 limèd caught (as with bird lime, a sticky substance spread on boughs to snare birds) 69 engaged ensnared; assay an attempt 75 would be scanned ought to be looked into 80 bread i.e., wordly gratification 81 crimes broad blown sins in full bloom; flush vigorous 82 audit account 88 hent grasp (here, occasion for seizing) 92 relish flavor

And that his soul may be as damned and black
 As hell, whereto it goes. My mother stays. 95
 This physic° but prolongs thy sickly days. Exit.
 KING [Rises.]
 My words fly up, my thoughts remain below.
 Words without thoughts never to heaven go. Exit.

[Scene IV. The queen's closet.]

Enter [QUEEN] Gertrude and POLONIUS.

POLONIUS
 'A will come straight. Look you lay home° to him.
 Tell him his pranks have been too broad° to bear with,
 And that your grace hath screened and stood between Much heat and him. I'll silence me even here.
 Pray you be round with him. 5

HAMLET (Within.) Mother, Mother, Mother!

QUEEN I'll warrant you; fear me not. Withdraw; I hear him coming. [POLONIUS hides behind the arras.]

Enter HAMLET.

HAMLET
 Now, Mother, what's the matter?

QUEEN
 Hamlet, thou hast thy father much offended. 10

HAMLET
 Mother, you have my father much offended.

QUEEN
 Come, come, you answer with an idle° tongue.

HAMLET
 Go, go, you question with a wicked tongue.

QUEEN
 Why, how now, Hamlet?

HAMLET What's the matter now?

QUEEN
 Have you forgot me?

HAMLET No, by the rood,° not so! 15
 You are the queen, your husband's brother's wife,
 And, would it were not so, you are my mother.

QUEEN
 Nay, then I'll set those to you that can speak.

HAMLET
 Come, come, and sit you down. You shall not budge.
 You go not till I set you up a glass° 20
 Where you may see the inmost part of you!

QUEEN
 What wilt thou do? Thou wilt not murder me?
 Help, ho!

POLONIUS [Behind.] What, ho! Help!

HAMLET [Draws.]
 How now? A rat? Dead for a ducat, dead! 25

[Makes a pass through the arras and] kills POLONIUS.

POLONIUS [Behind.]
 O, I am slain!

QUEEN O me, what hast thou done?

HAMLET
 Nay, I know not. Is it the king?

QUEEN

O, what a rash and bloody deed is this!

HAMLET

A bloody deed—almost as bad, good Mother,
 As kill a king, and marry with his brother. 30

QUEEN

As kill a king?

HAMLET Ay, lady, it was my word.

[Lifts up the arras and sees POLONIUS.]

Thou wretched, rash, intruding fool, farewell!
 I took thee for thy better. Take thy fortune.
 Thou find'st to be too busy is some danger.—
 Leave wringing of your hands. Peace, sit you down 35
 And let me wring your heart, for so I shall
 If it be made of penetrable stuff,
 If damnèd custom have not brazed° it so
 That it be proof° and bulwark against sense.°

QUEEN

What have I done that thou dar'st wag thy tongue
 In noise so rude against me? 40

HAMLET

Such an act
 That blurs the grace and blush of modesty,
 Calls virtue hypocrite, takes off the rose
 From the fair forehead of an innocent love,
 And sets a blister° there, makes marriage vows 45
 As false as dicers' oaths. O, such a deed
 As from the body of contraction° plucks
 The very soul, and sweet religion makes
 A rhapsody° of words! Heaven's face does glow
 O'er this solidity and compound mass 50
 With heated visage, as against the doom
 Is thoughtsick at the act.°

QUEEN

Ay me, what act,
 That roars so loud and thunders in the index?°

HAMLET

Look here upon this picture, and on this,
 The counterfeit presentment° of two brothers. 55
 See what a grace was seated on this brow:
 Hyperion's curls, the front° of Jove himself,
 An eye like Mars, to threaten and command,
 A station° like the herald Mercury
 New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill— 60
 A combination and a form indeed
 Where every god did seem to set his seal
 To give the world assurance of a man.
 This was your husband. Look you now what follows.
 Here is your husband, like a mildewed ear 65
 Blasting his wholesome brother. Have you eyes?
 Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,
 And batten° on this moor? Ha! Have you eyes?
 You cannot call it love, for at your age
 The heyday° in the blood is tame, it's humble, 70
 And waits upon the judgment, and what judgment
 Would step from this to this? Sense° sure you have,

38 brazed hardened like brass 39 proof armor; sense feeling 45 sets a blister brands (as a harlot) 47 contraction marriage contract 49 rhapsody senseless string 49–52 Heaven's . . . act The face of heaven blushes over this earth (compounded of four elements), the face hot, as if Judgment Day were near, and it is thoughtsick at the act 53 index prologue 55 counterfeit presentment represented image 57 front forehead 59 station bearing 68 batten feed gluttonously 70 heyday excitement 72 Sense feeling

96 physic Claudius' purgation by prayer, as Hamlet thinks in line 85

III.iv.1 lay home thrust (rebuke) him sharply 2 broad unrestrained 12 idle foolish 15 rood cross 20 glass mirror

Else could you not have motion, but sure that sense
Is apoplexed,^o for madness would not err,
Nor sense to ecstasy^o was ne'er so thrall'd
But it reserved some quantity of choice
To serve in such a difference. What devil was't
That thus hath cozened you at hoodman-blind?^o
Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sans^o all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense
Could not so mope.^o

O shame, where is thy blush? Rebellious hell,
If thou canst mutine in a matron's bones,
To flaming youth let virtue be as wax
And melt in her own fire. Proclaim no shame
When the compulsive ardor^o gives the charge,
Since frost itself as actively doth burn,
And reason panders will.^o

QUEEN O Hamlet, speak no more.
Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soul,
And there I see such black and grain'd^o spots
As will not leave their tinct.^o

HAMLET Nay, but to live
In the rank sweat of an enseam'd^o bed,
Stewed in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the nasty sty—

QUEEN O, speak to me no more.
These words like daggers enter in my ears.
No more, sweet Hamlet.

HAMLET A murderer and a villain,
A slave that is not twentieth part the tithe^o
Of your precedent lord, a vice^o of kings,
A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,
That from a shelf the precious diadem stole
And put it in his pocket—

QUEEN No more.

Enter GHOST.

HAMLET
A king of shreds and patches—
Save me and hover o'er me with your wings,
You heavenly guards! What would your gracious figure?

QUEEN
Alas, he's mad.

HAMLET
Do you not come your tardy son to chide,
That, lapsed in time and passion, lets go by
Th' important acting of your dread command?
O, say!

GHOST
Do not forget. This visitation
Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.
But look, amazement on thy mother sits.
O, step between her and her fighting soul!

74 apoplexed paralyzed 75 ecstasy madness 78 cozened
... hoodman-blind cheated you at blindman's buff 80 sans without 82 mope be stupid 87 compulsive ardor compelling passion 89 reason panders will reason acts as a procurer for desire 91 grain'd dyed in grain (fast dyed) 92 tinct color 93 enseam'd perhaps "soaked in grease," i.e., sweaty; perhaps "much wrinkled" 98 tithe tenth part 99 vice like the Vice, a fool and mischief-maker in the old morality plays

Conceit^o in weakest bodies strongest works. 115
Speak to her, Hamlet.

75 HAMLET How is it with you, lady?
QUEEN

Alas, how is't with you,
That you do bend your eye on vacancy,
And with th' incorporal^o air do hold discourse?
80 Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep,
And as the sleeping soldiers in th' alarm
Your bedded hair^o like life in excrements^o
Start up and stand an end.^o O gentle son,
Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper
85 Sprinkle cool patience. Whereon do you look? 125

HAMLET
On him, on him! Look you, how pale he glares!
His form and cause conjoined, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable.^o—Do not look upon me,
Lest with this piteous action you convert
90 My stern effects.^o Then what I have to do 130
Will want true color; tears perchance for blood.

QUEEN
To whom do you speak this?

HAMLET Do you see nothing there?

QUEEN
Nothing at all; yet all that is I see.

95 HAMLET Nor did you nothing hear?
QUEEN No, nothing but ourselves.

HAMLET
Why, look you there! Look how it steals away!
100 My father, in his habit^o as he lived!
Look where he goes even now out at the portal!
Exit GHOST.

QUEEN
This is the very coinage of your brain.
This bodiless creation ecstasy
Is very cunning in.

HAMLET Ecstasy? 140
My pulse as yours doth temperately keep time
And makes as healthful music. It is not madness
That I have uttered. Bring me to the test,
And I the matter will reword, which madness
105 Would gambol^o from. Mother, for love of grace, 145
Lay not that flattering unction^o to your soul,
That not your trespass but my madness speaks.
It will but skin and film the ulcerous place
Whiles rank corruption, mining^o all within,
Infects unseen. Confess yourself to heaven,
110 Repent what's past, avoid what is to come, 150
And do not spread the compost^o on the weeds
To make them ranker. Forgive me this my virtue.
For in the fatness of these pursy^o times
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,
155 Yea curb^o and woo for leave to do him good.

115 Conceit imagination 119 incorporal bodiless 122 bedded hair hairs laid flat; excrements outgrowths (here, the hair) 123 an end on end 128 capable receptive 129–30 convert ... effects divert my stern deeds 136 habit garment (Q1, though a "bad" quarto, is probably correct in saying that at line 102 the Ghost enters "in his night gown," i.e., dressing gown) 145 gambol start away 146 unction ointment 149 mining undermining 152 compost fertilizing substance 154 pursy bloated 156 curb bow low

QUEEN

O Hamlet, thou hast cleft my heart in twain.

HAMLET

O, throw away the worser part of it,
And live the purer with the other half.
Good night—but go not to my uncle's bed.
Assume a virtue, if you have it not.
That monster custom, who all sense doth eat,
Of habits devil, is angel yet in this,
That to the use^o of actions fair and good
He likewise gives a frock or livery^o
That aptly is put on. Refrain tonight,
And that shall lend a kind of easiness
To the next abstinence; the next more easy;
For use almost can change the stamp of nature,
And either^o the devil, or throw him out
With wondrous potency. Once more, good night,
And when you are desirous to be blest,
I'll blessing beg of you.—For this same lord,
I do repent; but heaven hath pleased it so,
To punish me with this, and this with me,
That I must be their^o scourge and minister.
I will bestow^o him and will answer well
The death I gave him. So again, good night.
I must be cruel only to be kind.
Thus bad begins, and worse remains behind.
One word more, good lady.

QUEEN

What shall I do?

HAMLET

Not this, by no means, that I bid you do:
Let the bloat king tempt you again to bed,
Pinch wanton on your cheek, call you his mouse,
And let him, for a pair of reechy^o kisses,
Or paddling in your neck with his damned fingers,
Make you to ravel^o all this matter out,
That I essentially am not in madness,
But mad in craft. 'Twere good you let him know,
For who that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a paddock,^o from a bat, a gib,^o
Such dear concernings hide? Who would do so?
No, in despite of sense and secrecy,
Unpeg the basket on the house's top,
Let the birds fly, and like the famous ape,
To try conclusions,^o in the basket creep
And break your own neck down.

QUEEN

Be thou assured, if words be made of breath,
And breath of life, I have no life to breathe
What thou hast said to me.

HAMLET

I must to England; you know that?

QUEEN

Alack,

I had forgot. 'Tis so concluded on.

HAMLET

There's letters sealed, and my two schoolfellows,
Whom I will trust as I will adders fanged,

They bear the mandate;^o they must sweep my way 205
And marshal me to knavery. Let it work;
For 'tis the sport to have the engineer^o
Hoist with his own petar,^o and't shall go hard
But I will delve one yard below their mines 160
And blow them at the moon. O, 'tis most sweet 210
When in one line two crafts^o directly meet.
This man shall set me packing:
I'll lug the guts into the neighbor room.
Mother, good night. Indeed, this counselor
Is now most still, most secret, and most grave, 165 215
Who was in life a foolish prating knave.
Come, sir, to draw toward an end with you.
Good night, Mother.

[Exit the QUEEN. Then] exit HAMLET, tugging in Polonius.

[A C T I V]

[Scene I. The castle.]

Enter KING and QUEEN, with ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

180

KING

There's matter in these sighs. These profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them.
Where is your son?

QUEEN

Bestow this place on us a little while.

185

[Exeunt ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.]

Ah, mine own lord, what have I seen tonight!

5

KING

What, Gertrude? How does Hamlet?

QUEEN

190

Mad as the sea and wind when both contend
Which is the mightier. In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
Whips out his rapier, cries, "A rat, a rat!"
And in this brainish apprehension^o kills 10
The unseen good old man.

195

KING

O heavy deed!

It had been so with us, had we been there.

His liberty is full of threats to all,

To you yourself, to us, to every one.

15

Alas, how shall this bloody deed be answered?

200

It will be laid to us, whose providence^o

Should have kept short, restrained, and out of haunt^o

This mad young man. But so much was our love

We would not understand what was most fit,

20

But, like the owner of a foul disease,

To keep it from divulging, let it feed

Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone?

QUEEN

To draw apart the body he hath killed;

205 mandate command 207 engineer (1) demolition expert
(2) contriver 208 petar bomb 211 crafts (1) boats (2) acts of guile, crafty schemes

IV.i.11 brainish apprehension mad imagination 17 provi- dence foresight 18 out of haunt away from association with others

164 use practice 165 livery characteristic garment (punning on "habits" in line 163) 170 either probably a word is missing after "either"; among suggestions are master, curb, and house; but possibly "either" is a verb meaning "make easier" 176 their the heavens' 177 bestow stow, lodge 185 reechy foul (literally "smoky") 187 ravel unravel, reveal 191 paddock toad; gib tomcat 196 To try conclusions to make experiments

O'er whom his very madness, like some ore
Among a mineral^o of metals base,
Shows itself pure. 'A weeps for what is done.

KING

O Gertrude, come away!
The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch
But we will ship him hence, and this vile deed
We must with all our majesty and skill
Both countenance and excuse. Ho, Guildenstern!

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Friends both, go join you with some further aid:
Hamlet in madness hath Polonius slain,
And from his mother's closet hath he dragged him. 35
Go seek him out; speak fair, and bring the body
Into the chapel. I pray you haste in this.

[Exeunt ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.]

Come, Gertrude, we'll call up our wisest friends
And let them know both what we mean to do
And what's untimely done . . .^o 40
Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
As level as the cannon to his blank^o
Transports his poisoned shot, may miss our name
And hit the woundless^o air. O, come away!
My soul is full of discord and dismay. Exeunt. 45

[Scene II. The castle.]

Enter HAMLET.

HAMLET Safely stowed.

GENTLEMEN (Within.) Hamlet! Lord Hamlet!

HAMLET But soft, what noise? Who calls on Hamlet?
O, here they come.

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

ROSENCRANTZ What have you done, my lord, with the dead body?

HAMLET

Compounded it with dust, whereto 'tis kin.

ROSENCRANTZ

Tell us where 'tis, that we may take it thence
And bear it to the chapel.

HAMLET Do not believe it. 10

ROSENCRANTZ Believe what?

HAMLET That I can keep your counsel and not mine own. Besides, to be demanded of^o a sponge, what replication^o should be made by the son of a king?

ROSENCRANTZ Take you me for a sponge, my lord? 15

HAMLET Ay, sir, that soaks up the king's countenance,^o his rewards, his authorities. But such officers do the king best service in the end. He keeps them, like an ape, in the corner of his jaw, first mouthed, to be last swallowed. When he needs what you have gleaned, 20 it is but squeezing you and, sponge, you shall be dry again.

ROSENCRANTZ I understand you not, my lord.

25-26 ore . . . mineral vein of gold in a mine 40 done
. . . evidently something has dropped out of the text;
Capell's conjecture, "So, haply slander," is usually printed
42 blank white center of a target 44 woundless invulnerable
IV.ii.13 demanded of questioned by 14 replication reply
16-17 countenance favor

25 HAMLET I am glad of it: a knavish speech sleeps in a foolish ear. 25

ROSENCRANTZ My lord, you must tell us where the body is and go with us to the king.

HAMLET The body is with the king, but the king is not with the body. The king is a thing—

30 GUILDENSTERN A thing, my lord? 30

HAMLET Of nothing. Bring me to him. Hide fox, and all after.^o Exeunt.

[Scene III. The castle.]

Enter KING, and two or three.

KING

I have sent to seek him and to find the body:
How dangerous is it that this man goes loose!
Yet must not we put the strong law on him:
He's loved of the distracted^o multitude,
Who like not in their judgment, but their eyes, 5
And where 'tis so, th' offender's scourge is weighed,
But never the offense. To bear^o all smooth and even,
This sudden sending him away must seem Deliberate pause.^o Diseases desperate grown
By desperate appliance are relieved, 10
Or not at all.

Enter ROSENCRANTZ, [GUILDENSTERN,] and all the rest.

How now? What hath befall'n?

ROSENCRANTZ

Where the dead body is bestowed, my lord,
We cannot get from him.

KING

But where is he?

ROSENCRANTZ

Without, my lord; guarded, to know your pleasure.

KING

Bring him before us.

ROSENCRANTZ Ho! Bring in the lord. 15

They enter.

KING Now, Hamlet, where's Polonius?

HAMLET At supper.

KING At supper? Where?

HAMLET Not where he eats, but where 'a is eaten. A certain convocation of politic^o worms are e'en at him. 20
Your worm is your only emperor for diet. We fat all creatures else to fat us, and we fat ourselves for maggots. Your fat king and your lean beggar is but variable service^o—two dishes, but to one table. That's the end. 25

KING Alas, alas!

HAMLET A man may fish with the worm that hath eat of a king, and eat of the fish that hath fed of that worm.

KING What does thou mean by this? 30

31-32 Hide . . . after a cry in a game such as hide-and-seek;
Hamlet runs from the stage

IV.iii.4 distracted bewildered, senseless 7 bear carry out 9 pause planning 20 politic statesmanlike, shrewd 24 variable service different courses

HAMLET Nothing but to show you how a king may go to progress° through the guts of a beggar.

KING Where is Polonius?

HAMLET In heaven. Send thither to see. If your messenger find him not there, seek him i' th' other place 35 yourself. But if indeed you find him not within this month, you shall nose him as you go up the stairs into the lobby.

KING [To ATTENDANTS.] Go seek him there.

HAMLET 'A will stay till you come. 40
[Exeunt ATTENDANTS.]

KING

Hamlet, this deed, for thine especial safety,
Which we do tender° as we dearly grieve
For that which thou hast done, must send thee hence
With fiery quickness. Therefore prepare thyself.
The bark is ready and the wind at help, 45
Th' associates tend,° and everything is bent
For England.

HAMLET For England?

KING Ay, Hamlet.

HAMLET Good.

KING

So is it, if thou knew'st our purposes.

HAMLET I see a cherub° that sees them. But come, for England! Farewell, dear Mother. 50

KING Thy loving father, Hamlet.

HAMLET My mother—father and mother is man and wife, man and wife is one flesh, and so, my mother.
Come, for England! Exit.

KING

Follow him at foot;° tempt him with speed aboard. 55
Delay it not; I'll have him hence tonight.
Away! For everything is sealed and done
That else leans° on th' affair. Pray you make haste.
[Exeunt all but the KING].

And, England, if my love thou hold'st at aught—
As my great power thereof may give thee sense, 60
Since yet thy cicatrice° looks raw and red
After the Danish sword, and thy free awe°
Pays homage to us—thou mayst not coldly set
Our sovereign process,° which imports at full
By letters congruing to that effect
The present° death of Hamlet. Do it, England,
For like the hectic° in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me. Till I know 'tis done,
Howe'er my haps,° my joys were ne'er begun. Exit.

[Scene IV. A plain in Denmark.]

Enter FORTINBRAS with his ARMY over the stage.

FORTINBRAS

Go, captain, from me greet the Danish king,
Tell him that by his license Fortinbras
Craves the conveyance of° a promised march
Over his kingdom. You know the rendezvous.

32 progress royal journey 42 tender hold dear 46 tend wait 49 cherub angel of knowledge 55 at foot closely 58 leans depends 61 cicatrice scar 62 free awe uncompelled submission 63–64 coldly . . . process regard slightly our royal command 66 present instant 67 hectic fever 69 haps chances, fortunes
IV.iv.3 conveyance of escort for

If that his majesty would aught with us, 5
We shall express our duty in his eye;°
And let him know so.

CAPTAIN I will do't, my lord.

FORTINBRAS Go softly° on.

[Exeunt all but the CAPTAIN.]

Enter HAMLET, ROSENCRANTZ, &c.

HAMLET

Good sir, whose powers° are these?

CAPTAIN

They are of Norway, sir. 10

HAMLET

How purposed, sir, I pray you?

CAPTAIN

Against some part of Poland.

HAMLET 45

Who commands them, sir?

CAPTAIN

The nephew to old Norway, Fortinbras.

HAMLET

Goes it against the main° of Poland, sir, 15
Or for some frontier?

CAPTAIN

Truly to speak, and with no addition,°
We go to gain a little patch of ground
That hath in it no profit but the name.
To pay five ducats, five, I would not farm it, 20
Nor will it yield to Norway or the Pole
A ranker° rate, should it be sold in fee.°

HAMLET

Why, then the Polack never will defend it.

CAPTAIN

Yes, it is already garrisoned.

HAMLET

Two thousand souls and twenty thousand ducats 25
Will not debate° the question of this straw.
This is th' imposthume° of much wealth and peace,
That inward breaks, and shows no cause without
Why the man dies. I humbly thank you, sir.

CAPTAIN

God bye you, sir. [Exit.]

ROSENCRANTZ Will't please you go, my lord? 30

HAMLET

I'll be with you straight. Go a little before.

[Exeunt all but HAMLET.]

How all occasions do inform against me
And spur my dull revenge! What is a man,
If his chief good and market° of his time
Be but to sleep and feed? A beast, no more. 35
Sure he that made us with such large discourse,° Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To fust° in us unused. Now, whether it be Bestial oblivion,° or some craven scruple 40
Of thinking too precisely on th' event°—
A thought which, quartered, hath but one part wisdom

6 in his eye before his eyes (i.e., in his presence) 8 softly slowly 9 powers forces 15 main main part 17 with no addition plainly 22 ranker higher; in fee outright 26 debate settle 27 imposthume abscess, ulcer 34 market profit 36 discourse understanding 39 fust grow moldy
40 oblivion forgetfulness 41 event outcome

And ever three parts coward—I do not know
 Why yet I live to say, "This thing's to do,"
 Sith I have cause, and will, and strength, and means 45
 To do't. Examples gross^o as earth exhort me.
 Witness this army of such mass and charge,^o
 Led by a delicate and tender prince,
 Whose spirit, with divine ambition puffed,
 Makes mouths at the invisible event,^o 50
 Exposing what is mortal and unsure
 To all that fortune, death, and danger dare,
 Even for an eggshell. Rightly to be great
 Is not^o to stir without great argument,^o
 But greatly^o to find quarrel in a straw 55
 When honor's at the stake. How stand I then,
 That have a father killed, a mother stained,
 Excitements^o of my reason and my blood,
 And let all sleep, while to my shame I see
 The imminent death of twenty thousand men 60
 That for a fantasy and trick of fame^o
 Go to their graves like beds, fight for a plot
 Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause,
 Which is not tomb enough and continent^o
 To hide the slain? O, from this time forth, 65
 My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth! Exit.

[Scene V. The castle.]

Enter HORATIO, [QUEEN] Gertrude, and a GENTLE- MAN.

QUEEN

I will not speak with her.

GENTLEMAN

She is importunate, indeed distract.
 Her mood will needs be pitied.

QUEEN

What would she have?

GENTLEMAN

She speaks much of her father, says she hears There's tricks i' th' world, and hems, and beats her heart, 5
 Spurns enviously at straws,^o speaks things in doubt^o
 That carry but half sense. Her speech is nothing,
 Yet the unshapèd use of it doth move
 The hearers to collection;^o they yawn^o at it,
 And botch the words up fit to their own thoughts, 10
 Which, as her winks and nods and gestures yield them,
 Indeed would make one think there might be thought,
 Though nothing sure, yet much unhappily.

HORATIO

'Twere good she were spoken with, for she may strew
 Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds. 15

QUEEN

Let her come in. [Exit GENTLEMAN.]

[Aside.]

46 gross large obvious 47 charge expense 50 Makes . . .
event makes scornful faces (is contemptuous of) the unseen outcome 54 not the sense seems to require "not not"; argu- ment reason 55 greatly nobly 58 Excitements incentives 61 fantasy . . . fame illusion and trifle of reputation 64 continent receptacle, container

IV.v.6 Spurns . . . straws objects spitefully to insignificant matters; in doubt uncertainly 8-9 Yet . . . collection yet the formless manner of it moves her listeners to gather up some sort of meaning 9 yawn gape (?)

To my sick soul (as sin's true nature is).
 Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss;^o
 So full of artless jealousy^o is guilt
 It spills^o itself in fearing to be spilt. 20

Enter OPHELIA [distracted.]

OPHELIA

Where is the beauteous majesty of Denmark?

QUEEN How now, Ophelia?

OPHELIA (She sings.)

How should I your truelove know
 From another one?

By his cockle hat^o and staff 25
 And his sandal shoon.^o

QUEEN

Alas, sweet lady, what imports this song?

OPHELIA Say you? Nay, pray you mark.
 (Song.)

He is dead and gone, lady,

He is dead and gone; 30

At his head a grass-green turf,
 At his heels a stone.

Oh, ho!

QUEEN Nay, but Ophelia—

OPHELIA Pray you mark. [Sings.] 35

White his shroud as the mountain snow—

Enter KING.

QUEEN Alas, look here, my lord.

OPHELIA

(Song.)

Larded^o all with sweet flowers
 Which bewept to the grave did not go
 With truelove showers. 40

KING How do you, pretty lady?

OPHELIA Well, God dild^o you! They say the owl was a baker's daughter.^o Lord, we know what we are, but know not what we may be. God be at your table!

KING Conceit^o upon her father. 45

OPHELIA Pray let's have no words of this, but when they ask you what it means, say you this:

(Song.)

Tomorrow is Saint Valentine's day.^o

All in the morning betime,
 And I a maid at your window, 50
 To be your Valentine.

Then up he rose and donned his clothes

And dupped^o the chamber door,

Let in the maid, that out a maid

Never departed more. 55

KING Pretty Ophelia.

OPHELIA Indeed, la, without an oath, I'll make an end
 on't: [Sings.]

18 amiss misfortune 19 artless jealousy crude suspicion 20 spills destroys 25 cockle hat a cockleshell on the hat was the sign of a pilgrim who had journeyed to shrines overseas;
 the association of lovers and pilgrims was a common one 26
shoon shoes 38 Larded decorated 42 dild yield, i.e., reward 43 baker's daughter an allusion to a tale of a baker's daughter who begrudged bread to Christ and was turned into an owl 45 Conceit brooding 48 Saint Valentine's day February 14 (the notion was that a bachelor would become the truelove of the first girl he saw on this day)
 53 dupped opened (did up)

By Gis° and by Saint Charity,
Alack, and fie for shame!
Young men will do't if they come to't,
By Cock,° they are to blame.
Quoth she, "Before you tumbled me,
You promised me to wed."

He answers:

"So would I 'a' done, by yonder sun,
An thou hadst not come to my bed."

KING How long hath she been thus?

OPHELIA I hope all will be well. We must be patient, but I cannot choose but weep to think they would lay 70 him i' th' cold ground. My brother shall know of it; and so I thank you for your good counsel. Come, my coach! Good night, ladies, good night. Sweet ladies, good night, good night. Exit.

KING

Follow her close; give her good watch, I pray you. 75
[Exit HORATIO.]

O, this is the poison of deep grief; it springs
All from her father's death—and now behold!

O Gertrude, Gertrude,

When sorrows come, they come not single spies,

But in battalions: first, her father slain;

Next, your son gone, and he most violent author 80

Of his own just remove; the people muddied,°

Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whispers

For good Polonius' death, and we have done but greenly°

In huggermugger° to inter him; poor Ophelia 85

Divided from herself and her fair judgment,

Without the which we are pictures or mere beasts;

Last, and as much containing as all these,

Her brother is in secret come from France,

Feeds on his wonder,° keeps himself in clouds, 90

And wants not buzzers° to infect his ear

With pestilent speeches of his father's death,

Wherein necessity, of matter beggared,°

Will nothing stick° our person to arraign

In ear and ear. O my dear Gertrude, this, 95

Like to a murd'ring piece,° in many places

Gives me superfluous death. A noise within.

Enter a MESSENGER.

QUEEN

Alack, what noise is this?

KING

Attend, where are my Switzers?° Let them guard the door.

What is the matter?

MESSENGER

Save yourself, my lord.

The ocean, overpeering of his list,° 100

Eats not the flats with more impiteous haste

Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,°

O'erbears your officers. The rabble call him lord,

And, as the world were now but to begin,

Antiquity forgot, customs not known, 105

The ratifiers and props of every word,

60

They cry, "Choose we! Laertes shall be king!"

Caps, hands, and tongues applaud it to the clouds,

"Laertes shall be king! Laertes king!"

A noise within.

65

QUEEN

How cheerfully on the false trail they cry!

110

O, this is counter,° you false Danish dogs!

Enter LAERTES, with others.

KING

The doors are broke.

LAERTES

Where is this king?—Sirs, stand you all without.

ALL

No, let's come in.

LAERTES

I pray you give me leave.

ALL

We will, we will. 115

LAERTES

I thank you. Keep the door. [Exeunt his FOLLOWERS.]

O thou vile king,

Give me my father.

QUEEN

Calmly, good Laertes.

LAERTES

That drop of blood that's calm proclaims me bastard,

Cries cuckold° to my father, brands the harlot

Even here between the chaste unsmirch'd brow 120

Of my true mother.

KING

What is the cause, Laertes,

That thy rebellion looks so giantlike?

Let him go, Gertrude. Do not fear° our person.

There's such divinity doth hedge a king

That treason can but peep to° what it would, 125

Acts little of his will. Tell me, Laertes,

Why thou art thus incensed. Let him go, Gertrude.

Speak, man.

LAERTES

Where is my father? 95

KING

Dead.

QUEEN

But not by him.

KING

Let him demand his fill. 130

LAERTES

How came he dead? I'll not be juggled with.

To hell allegiance, vows to the blackest devil,

Conscience and grace to the profoundest pit!

I dare damnation. To this point I stand,

That both the worlds I give to negligence,° 135

Let come what comes, only I'll be revenged

Most thoroughly for my father.

KING

Who shall stay you?

LAERTES

My will, not all the world's.

And for my means, I'll husband them° so well

They shall go far with little. 105

KING

Good Laertes,

140

III counter a hound runs counter when he follows the scent backward from the prey 119 cuckold man whose wife is unfaithful 123 fear fear for 125 peep to i.e., look at from a distance 135 That . . . negligence i.e., I care not what may happen (to me) in this world or the next 139 husband them use them economically

59 Gis (contraction of Jesus) 62 Cock (1) God (2) phallus 82 muddied muddled 84 greenly foolishly 85 huggermugger secret haste 90 wonder suspicion 91 wants not buzzers does not lack talebearers 93 of matter beggared unprovided with facts 94 Will nothing stick will not hesitate 96 murd'ring piece a cannon that shot a kind of shrapnel
98 Switzers Swiss guards 100 list shore 102 in . . . head with a rebellious force

If you desire to know the certainty
Of your dear father, is't writ in your revenge
That swoopstake° you will draw both friend and foe,
Winner and loser?

LAERTES

None but his enemies.

KING Will you know them then? 145

LAERTES

To his good friends thus wide I'll ope my arms
And like the kind life-rend'ring pelican°
Repast° them with my blood.

KING Why, now you speak

Like a good child and a true gentleman.
That I am guiltless of your father's death, 150
And am most sensibly° in grief for it,
It shall as level to your judgment 'pear
As day does to your eye.

A noise within: "Let her come in."

LAERTES

How now? What noise is that?

Enter OPHELIA.

O heat, dry up my brains; tears seven times salt 155
Burn out the sense and virtue° of mine eye!
By heaven, thy madness shall be paid with weight
Till our scale turn the beam.° O rose of May,
Dear maid, kind sister, sweet Ophelia!
O heavens, is't possible a young maid's wits 160
Should be as mortal as an old man's life?
Nature is fine° in love, and where 'tis fine,
It sends some precious instance° of itself
After the thing it loves.

OPHELIA (Song.)

They bore him barefaced on the bier 165
Hey non nony, nony, hey nony
And in his grave rained many a tear—
Fare you well, my dove!

LAERTES

Hadst thou thy wits, and didst persuade revenge,
It could not move thus. 170

OPHELIA You must sing "A-down a-down, and you call him a-down-a." O, how the wheel° becomes it!
It is the false steward, that stole his master's daughter.

LAERTES This nothing's more than matter.°

OPHELIA There's rosemary, that's for remembrance. 175 Pray you, love, remember. And there is pansies, that's for thoughts.

LAERTES A document° in madness, thoughts and remembrance fitted.

OPHELIA There's fennel° for you, and columbines. 180

143 swoopstake in a clean sweep 147 pelican thought to feed its young with its own blood 148 Repast feed 151 sensibly acutely 156 virtue power 158 turn the beam weigh down the bar (of the balance) 162 fine refined, delicate 163 instance sample 172 wheel of uncertain meaning, but probably a tum or dance of Ophelia's, rather than Fortune's wheel 174 This . . . matter This nonsense has more meaning than matters of consequence 178 document lesson 180 fennel the distribution of flowers in the ensuing lines has symbolic meaning, but the meaning is disputed; perhaps "fennel" = flattery, "columbines" = cuckoldry, "rue" = sorrow for Ophelia and repentance for the queen, "daisy" = dissembling, "violets" = faithfulness; for other interpretations, see J. W. Lever in Review of English Studies, New Series 3 [1952], pp. 113-29

There's rue for you, and here's some for me. We may call it herb of grace o' Sundays. O, you must wear your rue with a difference. There's a daisy. I would give you some violets, but they withered all when my father died. They say 'a made a good end. 185
[Sings.]

For bonny sweet Robin is all my joy.

LAERTES

Thought and affliction, passion, hell itself,
She turns to favor° and to prettiness.

OPHELIA

(Song.)

And will 'a not come again?
And will 'a not come again? 190
No, no, he is dead,
Go to thy deathbed,
He never will come again.

His beard was as white as snow,
All flaxen was his poll.° 195

He is gone, he is gone,

And we cast away moan.

God 'a' mercy on his soul!

And of all Christian souls, I pray God. God bye you.
[Exit.]

LAERTES

Do you see this, O God? 200

KING

Laertes, I must commune with your grief,
Or you deny me right. Go but apart,
Make choice of whom your wisest friends you will,
And they shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me.
If by direct or by collateral° hand 205
They find us touched,° we will our kingdom, give
Our crown, our life, and all that we call ours,
To you in satisfaction; but if not,
Be you content to lend your patience to us,
And we shall jointly labor with your soul 210
To give it due content.

LAERTES

Let this be so.

His means of death, his obscure funeral—
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment° o'er his bones,
No noble rite nor formal ostentation°—
Cry to be heard, as 'twere from heaven to earth, 215
That I must call't in question.

KING

So you shall;

And where th' offense is, let the great ax fall.
I pray you go with me. Exeunt.

[Scene VI. The castle.]

Enter HORATIO and others.

HORATIO What are they that would speak with me?

GENTLEMAN Seafaring men, sir. They say they have letters for you.

HORATIO Let them come in. [Exit GENTLEMAN.]

I do not know from what part of the world 5
I should be greeted, if not from Lord Hamlet.

Enter SAILORS.

188 favor charm, beauty 195 All . . . poll white as flax was his head 205 collateral indirect 206 touched implicated 213 hatchment tablet bearing the coat of arms of the dead 214 ostentation ceremony SAILOR God bless you, sir.

HORATIO Let Him bless thee too.

SAILOR 'A shall, sir, an't please Him. There's a letter for you, sir—it came from th' ambassador that was bound for England—if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is.

HORATIO [Reads the letter.] "Horatio, when thou shalt have overlooked° this, give these fellows some means to the king. They have letters for him. Ere we were two days old at sea, a pirate of very warlike appointment° gave us chase. Finding ourselves too slow of sail, we put on a compelled valor, and in the grapple I boarded them. On the instant they got clear of our ship; so I alone became their prisoner. They have dealt with me like thieves of mercy, but they knew what they did: I am to do a good turn for them.
Let the king have the letters I have sent, and repair thou to me with as much speed as thou wouldest fly death. I have words to speak in thine ear will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the bore° of the matter. These good fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern hold their course for England. Of them I have much to tell thee.
Farewell.

He that thou knowest thine, Hamlet."

Come, I will give you way for these your letters,
And do't the speedier that you may direct me
To him from whom you brought them. Exeunt.

[Scene VII. The castle.]

Enter KING and LAERTES.

KING

Now must your conscience my acquittance seal,
And you must put me in your heart for friend,
Sith you have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he which hath your noble father slain
Pursued my life.

LAERTES It well appears. But tell me

Why you proceeded not against these feats
So criminal and so capital° in nature,
As by your safety, greatness, wisdom, all things else,
You mainly° were stirred up.

KING O, for two special reasons,
Which may to you perhaps seem much unsinewed,°
But yet to me they're strong. The queen his mother
Lives almost by his looks, and for myself—
My virtue or my plague, be it either which—
She is so conjunctive° to my life and soul,
That, as the star moves not but in his sphere,
I could not but by her. The other motive
Why to a public count° I might not go
Is the great love the general gender° bear him,
Who, dipping all his faults in their affection,
Would, like the spring that turneth wood to stone,°

Convert his gyves° to graces; so that my arrows,
Too slightly timbered° for so loud a wind,
Would have reverted to my bow again,
And not where I had aimed them.

LAERTES

And so have I a noble father lost,
A sister driven into desp'rate terms,°
Whose worth, if praises may go back again,°
Stood challenger on mount of all the age
For her perfections. But my revenge will come.

KING

Break not your sleeps for that. You must think
That we are made of stuff so flat and dull
That we can let our beard be shook with danger,
And think it pastime. You shortly shall hear more.
I loved your father, and we love ourself,
And that, I hope, will teach you to imagine—

Enter a MESSENGER with letters.

How now? What news?

MESSENGER Letters, my lord, from Hamlet:
These to your majesty; this to the queen.

KING

From Hamlet? Who brought them?

MESSENGER

Sailors, my lord, they say; I saw them not.
They were given me by Claudio; he received them
Of him that brought them.

KING

Laertes, you shall hear them.—

Leave us.

Exit MESSENGER.

[Reads.] "High and mighty, you shall know I am set naked° on your kingdom. Tomorrow shall I beg leave to see your kingly eyes; when I shall (first asking your pardon thereunto) recount the occasion of my sudden and more strange return.

Hamlet."

What should this mean? Are all the rest come back?
Or is it some abuse,° and no such thing?

LAERTES

Know you the hand?

KING

'Tis Hamlet's character.° "Naked"!
And in a postscript here, he says "alone."
Can you devise° me?

LAERTES

I am lost in it, my lord. But let him come.
It warms the very sickness in my heart
That I shall live and tell him to his teeth,
"Thus didst thou."

KING

If it be so, Laertes
(As how should it be so? How otherwise?),
Will you be ruled by me?

LAERTES

Ay, my lord,
So you will not o'errule me to a peace.

KING

To thine own peace. If he be now returned,
As checking at° his voyage, and that he means

IV.vi.14 overlooked surveyed 17 appointment equipment
26 bore caliber (here, "importance")

IV.vii.7 capital deserving death 9 mainly powerfully 10 unsinewed weak 14 conjunctive closely united 17 count reckoning 18 general gender common people 20 spring
. . . stone a spring in Shakespeare's county was so charged with lime that it would petrify wood placed in it

21 gyves fetters 22 timbered shafted 26 terms conditions
27 go back again revert to what is past 44 naked destitute 50 abuse deception 51 character handwriting 53 devise advise 62 checking at turning away from (a term in falconry)

No more to undertake it, I will work him
To an exploit now ripe in my device,
Under the which he shall not choose but fall;
And for his death no wind of blame shall breathe,
But even his mother shall uncharge the practice^o
And call it accident.

LAERTES My lord, I will be ruled;
The rather if you could devise it so
That I might be the organ.

KING It falls right. 70
You have been talked of since your travel much,
And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality
Wherein they say you shine. Your sum of parts
Did not together pluck such envy from him
As did that one, and that, in my regard, 75
Of the unworthiest siege.^o

LAERTES What part is that, my lord?

KING
A very riband in the cap of youth,
Yet needful too, for youth no less becomes
The light and careless livery that it wears
Than settled age his sables and his weeds,^o 80
Importing health and graveness. Two months since Here was a gentleman of Normandy.
I have seen myself, and served against, the French,
And they can^o well on horseback, but this gallant
Had witchcraft in't. He grew unto his seat, 85
And to such wondrous doing brought his horse
As had he been incorpsed and deminated
With the brave beast. So far he topped my thought
That I, in forgery^o of shapes and tricks,
Come short of what he did.

LAERTES A Norman was't? 90

KING A Norman.

LAERTES
Upon my life, Lamord.

KING The very same.

LAERTES
I know him well. He is the brooch^o indeed
And gem of all the nation.

KING
He made confession^o of you, 95
And gave you such a masterly report,
For art and exercise in your defense,
And for your rapier most especial,
That he cried out 'twould be a sight indeed
If one could match you. The scrimers^o of their nation 100
He swore had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
If you opposed them. Sir, this report of his
Did Hamlet so envenom with his envy
That he could nothing do but wish and beg
Your sudden coming o'er to play with you. 105
Now, out of this—

LAERTES What out of this, my lord?

KING
Laertes, was your father dear to you?
Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,
A face without a heart?

LAERTES Why ask you this?

67 uncharge the practice not charge the device with treachery
76 siege rank 80 sables . . . weeds i.e., sober attire
84 can do 89 forgery invention 93 brooch ornament 95 confession report 100 scrimers fencers

KING

Not that I think you did not love your father, 110
But that I know love is begun by time,
And that I see, in passages of proof,^o
Time qualifies^o the spark and fire of it.
There lives within the very flame of love
A kind of wick or snuff^o that will abate it, 115
And nothing is at a like goodness still,^o
For goodness, growing to a plurisy,^o
Dies in his own too-much. That we would do
We should do when we would, for this "would" changes,
And hath abatements and delays as many 120
As there are tongues, are hands, are accidents,
And then this "should" is like a spendthrift sigh,^o
That hurts by easing. But to the quick^o of th' ulcer—
Hamlet comes back; what would you undertake
To show yourself in deed your father's son 125
More than in words?

LAERTES To cut his throat i' th' church!

KING
No place indeed should murder sanctuarize;^o
Revenge should have no bounds. But, good Laertes,
Will you do this? Keep close within your chamber.
Hamlet returned shall know you are come home. 130
We'll put on those^o shall praise your excellence
And set a double varnish on the fame
The Frenchman gave you, bring you in fine^o together
And wager on your heads. He, being remiss,
Most generous, and free from all contriving, 135
Will not peruse the foils, so that with ease,
Or with a little shuffling, you may choose
A sword unbated,^o and, in a pass of practice,^o
Requite him for your father.

LAERTES I will do't,
And for that purpose I'll anoint my sword. 140
I bought an unction of a mountebank,^o
So mortal that, but dip a knife in it,
Where it draws blood, no cataplasms^o so rare,
Collected from all simples^o that have virtue^o
Under the moon, can save the thing from death 145
That is but scratched withal. I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death.

KING Let's further think of this,
Weigh what convenience both of time and means
May fit us to our shape.^o If this should fail, 150
And that our drift look through^o our bad performance,
'Twere better not assayed. Therefore this project
Should have a black or second, that might hold
If this did blast in proof.^o Soft, let me see.
We'll make a solemn wager on your cunnings— 155
I ha't!

112 passages of proof proved cases 113 qualifies diminishes
115 snuff residue of burnt wick (which dims the light) 116 still always 117 plurisy fullness, excess 122 spendthrift sigh sighing provides ease, but because it was thought to thin the blood and so shorten life it was spendthrift 123 quick sensitive flesh 127 sanctuarize protect 131 We'll . . .
those we'll incite persons who 133 in fine finally 138
unbated not blunted; pass of practice treacherous thrust 141 mountebank quack 143 cataplasms poultice 144 simples medicinal herbs; virtue power (to heal) 150 shape role 151 drift look through purpose show through 154 blast in proof burst (fail) in performance

When in your motion you are hot and dry—
As make your bouts more violent to that end—
And that he calls for drink, I'll have prepared him
A chalice for the nonce,^o whereon but sipping,
If he by chance escape your venom'd stuck,^o
Our purpose may hold there.—But stay, what noise?

Enter QUEEN.

QUEEN

One woe doth tread upon another's heel,
So fast they follow. Your sister's drowned, Laertes.

LAERTES Drowned! O, where?

QUEEN

There is a willow grows askant^o the brook,
That shows his hoar^o leaves in the glassy stream:
Therewith^o fantastic garlands did she make
Of crowflowers, nettles, daisies, and long purples,
That liberal^o shepherds give a grosser name,
But our cold maids do dead men's fingers call them.
There on the pendent boughs her crownet^o weeds
Clamb'ring to hang, an envious sliver^o broke,
When down her weedy trophies and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Her clothes spread wide,
And mermaidlike awhile they bore her up,
Which time she chanted snatches of old lauds,^o
As one incapable^o of her own distress,
Or like a creature native and indued^o
Unto that element. But long it could not be Till that her garments, heavy with their drink,
Pulled the poor wretch from her melodious lay
To muddy death.

LAERTES Alas, then she is drowned?

QUEEN Drowned, drowned.

LAERTES

Too much of water hast thou, poor Ophelia,
And therefore I forbid my tears; but yet
It is our trick;^o nature her custom holds,
Let shame say what it will: when these are gone,
The woman^o will be out. Adieu, my lord.
I have a speech o' fire, that fain would blaze,
But that this folly drowns it.

Exit.

KING

Let's follow, Gertrude.

How much I had to do to calm his rage!

Now fear I this will give it start again;

Therefore let's follow.

Exeunt.

[A C T V]

[Scene I. A churchyard.]

Enter two CLOWNS.^o

CLOWN Is she to be buried in Christian burial when she willfully seeks her own salvation?

OTHER I tell thee she is. Therefore make her grave straight.^o The crowner^o hath sate on her, and finds it Christian burial.

160 CLOWN How can that be, unless she drowned herself in her own defense?

OTHER Why, 'tis found so.

CLOWN It must be se offendendo;^o it cannot be else.

For here lies the point: if I drown myself wittingly, 10 it argues an act, and an act hath three branches—it is to act, to do, to perform. Argal,^o she drowned herself wittingly.

165 OTHER Nay, but hear you, Goodman Delver.

CLOWN Give me leave. Here lies the water—good. 15
Here stands the man—good. If the man go to this water and drown himself, it is, will he nill he,^o he goes; mark you that. But if the water come to him and drown him, he drowns not himself. Argal, he that is 170 not guilty of his own death, shortens not his own life. 20

OTHER But is this law?

CLOWN Ay marry, is't—crowner's quest^o law.

OTHER Will you ha' the truth on't? If this had not been a gentlewoman, she should have been buried out o' Christian burial. 25

CLOWN Why, there thou say'st. And the more pity that great folk should have count'nance^o in this world to drown or hang themselves more than their even-Christen.^o Come, my spade. There is no ancient 180 gentlemen but gard'ners, ditchers, and gravemakers. 30
They hold up^o Adam's profession.

OTHER Was he a gentleman?

CLOWN 'A was the first that ever bore arms.^o

OTHER Why, he had none.

CLOWN What, art a heathen? How doest thou under- 35 stand the Scripture? The Scripture says Adam digged.
185 Could he dig without arms? I'll put another question to thee. If thou answerest me not to the purpose, confess thyself—

OTHER Go to. 40

CLOWN What is he that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter?

OTHER The gallowsmaker, for that frame outlives a thousand tenants.

CLOWN I like thy wit well, in good faith. The gallows 45 does well. But how does it well? It does well to those that do ill. Now thou dost ill to say the gallows is built stronger than the church. Argal, the gallows may do well to thee. To't again, come.

OTHER Who builds stronger than a mason, a ship- 50
wright, or a carpenter?

CLOWN Ay, tell me that, and unyoke.^o

OTHER Marry, now I can tell.

CLOWN To't.

OTHER Mass,^o I cannot tell. 55

Enter HAMLET and HORATIO afar off.

160 nonce occasion 161 stuck thrust 166 askant aslant
167 hoar silver-gray 168 Therewith i.e., with willow twigs 170 liberal free-spoken, coarse-mouthed 172 crownet coronet 173 envious sliver malicious branch 177 lauds hymns 178 incapable unaware 179 indued in harmony with 187 trick trait, way 189 woman i.e., womanly part of me

V.i.s.d. clowns rustics

4 straight straightway; crowner coroner 9 se offendendo blunder for se defendendo, a legal term meaning "in self-defense" 12 Argal blunder for Latin ergo, "therefore" 17 will he . . . he will he or will he not (whether he will or will not) 22 quest inquest 27 count'nance privilege 28-29 even-Christen fellow Christian 31 hold up keep up 33 bore arms had a coat of arms (the sign of a gentleman) 52
unyoke i.e., stop work for the day 55 Mass by the mass

CLOWN Cudgel thy brains no more about it, for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating. And when you are asked this question next, say "a grave-maker." The houses he makes lasts till doomsday. Go, get thee in, and fetch me a stoup^o of liquor. 60

[Exit OTHER CLOWN.]

(Song.)

In youth when I did love, did love,

Methought it was very sweet

To contract—O—the time for—a—my behove,^o

O, methought there—a—was nothing—a—meet.

HAMLET Has this fellow no feeling of his business? 'A 65
sings in gravemaking.

HORATIO Custom hath made it in him a property of easiness.^o

HAMLET 'Tis e'en so. The hand of little employment hath the daintier sense.^o 70

CLOWN (Song.)

But age with his stealing steps

Hath clawed me in his clutch,

And hath shipped me into the land,

As if I had never been such.

[Throws up a skull.]

HAMLET That skull had a tongue in it, and could sing 75 once. How the knave jowls^o it to the ground, as if 'twere Cain's jawbone, that did the first murder! This might be the pate of a politician, which this ass now o'erreaches,^o one that would circumvent God, might it not? 80

HORATIO It might, my lord.

HAMLET Or of a courtier, which could say "Good morrow, sweet lord! How dost thou, sweet lord?" This might be my Lord Such-a-one, that praised my Lord Such-a-one's horse when 'a went to beg it, might 85 it not?

HORATIO Ay, my lord.

HAMLET Why, e'en so, and now my Lady Worm's, chapless,^o and knocked about the mazzard^o with a sexton's spade. Here's fine revolution, an we had the 90 trick to see't. Did these bones cost no more the breeding but to play at loggets^o with them? Mine ache to think on't.

CLOWN (Song.)

A pickax and a spade, a spade,

For and a shrouding sheet; 95

O, a pit of clay for to be made

For such a guest is meet.

[Throws up another skull.]

HAMLET There's another. Why may not that be the skull of a lawyer? Where be his quiddities^o now, his quillities,^o his cases, his tenures,^o and his tricks? Why 100 does he suffer this mad knave now to knock him about the sconce^o with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Hum! This fellow might be in's time a great buyer of land, with his statutes, his recognizances, his fines,^o his double vouchers, his recoveries. Is this the fine^o of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries, to have his fine pate full of fine dirt? Will his vouchers vouch him no more of his purchases, and double ones too, than the length and breadth of a pair of indentures?^o The very conveyances^o of his lands 110 will scarcely lie in this box, and must th' inheritor himself have no more, ha?

HORATIO Not a jot more, my lord.

HAMLET Is not parchment made of sheepskins?

HORATIO Ay, my lord, and of calveskins too. 115

HAMLET They are sheep and calves which seek out assurance^o in that. I will speak to this fellow. Whose grave's this, sirrah?

CLOWN Mine, sir. [Sings.]

O, a pit of clay for to be made 120

For such a guest is meet.

HAMLET I think it be thine indeed, for thou liest in't.

CLOWN You lie out on't, sir, and therefore 'tis not yours. For my part, I do not lie in't, yet it is mine.

HAMLET Thou dost lie in't, to be in't and say it is 125 thine. 'Tis for the dead, not for the quick;^o therefore thou liest.

CLOWN 'Tis a quick lie, sir; 'twill away again from me to you.

HAMLET What man dost thou dig it for? 130

CLOWN For no man, sir.

HAMLET What woman then?

CLOWN For none neither.

HAMLET Who is to be buried in't?

CLOWN One that was a woman, sir; but, rest her soul, 135
she's dead.

HAMLET How absolute^o the knave is! We must speak by the card,^o or equivocation^o will undo us. By the Lord, Horatio, this three years I have took note of it, the age is grown so picked^o that the toe of the peasant 140 comes so near the heel of the courtier he galls his kibe.^o How long hast thou been a gravemaker?

CLOWN Of all the days i' th' year, I came to't that day that our last king Hamlet overcame Fortinbras.

HAMLET How long is that since? 145

CLOWN Cannot you tell that? Every fool can tell that. It was that very day that young Hamlet was born—he that is mad, and sent into England.

HAMLET Ay, marry, why was he sent into England?

CLOWN Why, because 'a was mad. 'A shall recover his 150 wits there; or, if 'a do not, 'tis no great matter there.

HAMLET Why?

CLOWN 'Twill not be seen in him there. There the men are as mad as he.

HAMLET How came he mad? 155

CLOWN Very strangely, they say.

HAMLET How strangely?

60 stoup tankard 63 behove advantage 67–68 in . . . easiness easy for him 70 hath . . . sense is more sensitive (because it is not calloused) 76 jowls hurls 79 o'erreaches (1) reaches over (2) has the advantage over 89 chapless lacking the lower jaw; mazzard head 92 loggets a game in which small pieces of wood were thrown at an object 99 quiddities subtle arguments (from Latin quidditas = whatness) 100 quillities fine distinctions; tenures legal means of holding land 102 sconce head

105 his statutes . . . fines his documents giving a creditor control of a debtor's land, his bonds of surety, his documents changing an entailed estate into fee simple (unrestricted ownership) 106 fine end 110 indentures contracts; conveyances legal documents for the transference of land 117 assurance safety 126 quick living 137 absolute positive, decided 138 by the card by the compass card, i.e., exactly; equivocation ambiguity 140 picked refined 141 kibe sore on the back of the heel

CLOWN Faith, e'en with losing his wits.

HAMLET Upon what ground?

CLOWN Why, here in Denmark. I have been sexton 160 here, man and boy, thirty years.

HAMLET How long will a man lie i' th' earth ere he rot?

CLOWN Faith, if 'a be not rotten before 'a die (as we have many pocky corses° nowadays that will scarce 165 hold the laying in), 'a will last you some eight year or nine year. A tanner will last you nine year.

HAMLET Why he, more than another?

CLOWN Why, sir, his hide is so tanned with his trade that 'a will keep out water a great while, and your 170 water is a sore decayer of your whoreson dead body.
Here's a skull now hath lien you i' th' earth three and twenty years.

HAMLET Whose was it?

CLOWN A whoreson mad fellow's it was. Whose do 175 you think it was?

HAMLET Nay, I know not.

CLOWN A pestilence on him for a mad rogue! 'A poured a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. This same skull, sir, was, sir, Yorick's skull, the king's jester. 180

HAMLET This?

CLOWN E'en that.

HAMLET Let me see. [Takes the skull.] Alas, poor Yorick! I knew him, Horatio, a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy. He hath borne me on his back 185 a thousand times. And now how abhorred in my imagination it is! My gorge rises at it. Here hung those lips that I have kissed I know not how oft. Where be your gibes now? Your gambols, your songs, your flashes of merriment that were wont to set the table 190 on a roar? Not one now to mock your own grinning?
Quite chapfall'n°? Now get you to my lady's chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favor°
she must come. Make her laugh at that. Prithee, Horatio, tell me one thing. 195

HORATIO What's that, my lord?

HAMLET Dost thou think Alexander looked o' this fashion i' th' earth?

HORATIO E'en so.

HAMLET And smelt so? Pah! 200

[Puts down the skull.]

HORATIO E'en so, my lord.

HAMLET To what base uses we may return, Horatio!
Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander till 'a find it stopping a bung-hole?

HORATIO 'Twere to consider too curiously,° to con- 205
sider so.

HAMLET No, faith, not a jot, but to follow him thither with modesty enough,° and likelihood to lead it; as thus: Alexander died, Alexander was buried, Alexander returneth to dust; the dust is earth; of earth we 210 make loam; and why of that loam whereto he was converted might they not stop a beer barrel?

Imperious Caesar, dead and turned to clay,

Might stop a hole to keep the wind away.

O, that that earth which kept the world in awe 215
Should patch a wall t' expel the winter's flaw!°
But soft, but soft awhile! Here comes the king.

Enter KING, QUEEN, LAERTES, and a coffin, with LORDS attendant [and a DOCTOR of Divinity].

The queen, the courtiers. Who is this they follow?
And with such maimèd° rites? This doth betoken 220
The corse they follow did with desp'rate hand
Fordo it° own life. 'Twas of some estate.°

Couch° we awhile, and mark. [Retires with HORATIO.]

LAERTES

What ceremony else?

HAMLET That is Laertes,

A very noble youth. Mark.

LAERTES

What ceremony else? 225

DOCTOR

Her obsequies have been as far enlarged
As we have warranty. Her death was doubtful,°
And, but that great command o'ersways the order,
She should in ground unsanctified been lodged 230
Till the last trumpet. For charitable prayers,
Shards,° flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her.
Yet here she is allowed her virgin crants,°
Her maiden strewments,° and the bringing home
Of bell and burial.

LAERTES

Must there no more be done?

DOCTOR

No more be done. 235

We should profane the service of the dead
To sing a requiem and such rest to her
As to peace-parted souls.

LAERTES

Lay her i' th' earth,
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
May violets spring! I tell thee, churlish priest, 240
A minist'ring angel shall my sister be
When thou liest howling!

HAMLET

What, the fair Ophelia?

QUEEN

Sweets to the sweet! Farewell.

[Scatters flowers.]

I hoped thou shouldst have been my Hamlet's wife.
I thought thy bride bed to have decked, sweet maid, 245
And not have strewed thy grave.

LAERTES

O, treble woe

Fall ten times treble on that cursèd head
Whose wicked deed thy most ingenious sense°
Deprived thee of! Hold off the earth awhile,
Till I have caught her once more in mine arms. 250

Leaps in the grave.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead
Till of this flat a mountain you have made
T' o'ertop old Pelion° or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus.

165 pocky corses bodies of persons who had been infected with the pox (syphilis) 192 chapfall'n (1) down in the mouth (2) jawless 194 favor facial appearance 205 curiously minutely 208 with modesty enough without exaggeration

216 flaw gust 219 maimèd incomplete 221 Fordo it destroy its; estate high rank 222 Couch hide 227 doubtful suspicious 231 Shards broken pieces of pottery 232 crants garlands 233 strewments i.e., of flowers 248 most ingenious sense finely endowed mind 253 Pelion according to classical legend, giants in their fight with the gods sought to reach heaven by piling Mount Pelion and Mount Ossa on Mount Olympus

HAMLET [Coming forward.] What is he whose grief
Bears such an emphasis, whose phrase of sorrow 255
Conjures the wand'ring stars,^o and makes them stand
Like wonder-wounded hearers? This is I,
Hamlet the Dane.

LAERTES The devil take thy soul!
[Grapples with him.]^o

HAMLET
Thou pray'st not well.
I prithee take thy fingers from my throat, 260
For, though I am not splenitive^o and rash,
Yet have I in me something dangerous,
Which let thy wisdom fear. Hold off thy hand.

KING
Pluck them asunder.

QUEEN Hamlet, Hamlet!

ALL
Gentlemen!

HORATIO Good my lord, be quiet. 265

[ATTENDANTS part them.]

HAMLET
Why, I will fight with him upon this theme
Until my eyelids will no longer wag.

QUEEN
O my son, what theme?

HAMLET
I loved Ophelia. Forty thousand brothers
Could not with all their quantity of love 270
Make up my sum. What wilt thou do for her?

KING
O, he is mad, Laertes.

QUEEN
For love of God forbear him.

HAMLET
'Swounds, show me what thou't do.
Woo't weep? Woo't fight? Woo't fast? Woo't tear 275 thyself?

Woo't drink up eisel?^o Eat a crocodile?
I'll do't. Dost thou come here to whine?
To outface me with leaping in her grave?
Be buried quick with her, and so will I.
And if thou prate of mountains, let them throw 280
Millions of acres on us, till our ground,
Singeing his pate against the burning zone,^o
Make Ossa like a wart! Nay, an thou'lt mouth,
I'll rant as well as thou.

QUEEN This is mere madness;
And thus a while the fit will work on him. 285
Anon, as patient as the female dove
When that her golden couplets are disclosed,^o
His silence will sit drooping.

HAMLET Hear you, sir.

What is the reason that you use me thus?
I loved you ever. But it is no matter. 290
Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will mew, and dog will have his day.

KING

I pray thee, good Horatio, wait upon him.

Exit HAMLET and HORATIO.

[To LAERTES.]

Strengthen your patience in our last night's speech.
We'll put the matter to the present push.^o 295
Good Gertrude, set some watch over your son.
This grave shall have a living^o monument.
An hour of quiet shortly shall we see;
Till then in patience our proceeding be. Exeunt.

[Scene II. The castle.]

265 Enter HAMLET and HORATIO.

HAMLET
So much for this, sir; now shall you see the other.
You do remember all the circumstance?

HORATIO
Remember it, my lord!

HAMLET
Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting
That would not let me sleep. Methought I lay 5
Worse than the mutines in the bilboes.^o Rashly
(And praised be rashness for it) let us know,
Our indiscretion sometime serves us well
When our deep plots do pall,^o and that should learn us 10
There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

HORATIO That is most certain.

HAMLET
Up from my cabin,
My sea gown scarfed about me, in the dark
Groped I to find out them, had my desire,
Fingered^o their packet, and in fine^o withdrew 15
To mine own room again, making so bold,
My fears forgetting manners, to unseal
Their grand commission; where I found, Horatio—
Ah, royal knavery!—an exact command,
Larded^o with many several sorts of reasons, 20
Importing Denmark's health, and England's too,
With, ho, such bugs and goblins in my life,^o
That on the supervise,^o no leisure bated,^o
No, not to stay the grinding of the ax,
My head should be struck off.

HORATIO Is't possible? 25

HAMLET
Here's the commission; read it at more leisure.
But wilt thou hear now how I did proceed?

HORATIO I beseech you.

HAMLET
Being thus benetted round with villains,

295 present push immediate test 297 living lasting (with perhaps also a reference to the plot against Hamlet's life)

V.ii.6 mutines . . . bilboes mutineers in fetters 9 pall fail 15 Fingered stole; in fine finally 20 Larded enriched 22 such . . . life such bugbears and imagined terrors if I were allowed to live 23 supervise reading; leisure bated delay allowed

256 wand'ring stars planets 258 s.d. Grapples with him Q1, a bad quarto, presumably reporting a version that toured, has a previous direction saying "Hamlet leaps in after Laertes"; possibly he does so, somewhat hysterically, but such a direction—absent from the two good texts, Q2 and F—makes Hamlet the aggressor, somewhat contradicting his next speech; perhaps Laertes leaps out of the grave to attack Hamlet 261 splenitive fiery (the spleen was thought to be the seat of anger) 276 eisel vinegar 282 burning zone sun's orbit 287 golden . . . dis-closed the dove lays two eggs, and the newly hatched ("disclosed") young are covered with golden down

Or° I could make a prologue to my brains,
They had begun the play. I sat me down,
Devised a new commission, wrote it fair.
I once did hold it, as our statist^o do,
A baseness to write fair,^o and labored much
How to forget that learning, but, sir, now
It did me yeoman's service. Wilt thou know
Th' effect^o of what I wrote?

HORATIO Ay, good my lord.

HAMLET

An earnest conjuration from the king,
As England was his faithful tributary,
As love between them like the palm might flourish,
As peace should still her wheaten garland wear
And stand a comma^o 'tween their amities,
And many suchlike as's of great charge,^o
That on the view and knowing of these contents,
Without debatement further, more or less,
He should those bearers put to sudden death,
Not shriving^o time allowed.

HORATIO How was this sealed?

HAMLET

Why, even in that was heaven ordinant.^o
I had my father's signet in my purse,
Which was the model^o of that Danish seal,
Folded the writ up in the form of th' other,
Subscribed it, gave't th' impression, placed it safely,
The changeling never known. Now, the next day
Was our sea fight, and what to this was sequent
Thou knowest already.

HORATIO

So Guildenstern and Rosencrantz go to't.

HAMLET

Why, man, they did make love to this employment.
They are not near my conscience; their defeat
Does by their own insinuation^o grow.
'Tis dangerous when the baser nature comes
Between the pass^o and fell^o incensèd points
Of mighty opposites.

HORATIO Why, what a king is this!

HAMLET

Does it not, think thee, stand me now upon^o—
He that hath killed my king, and whored my mother,
Popped in between th' election^o and my hopes,
Thrown out his angle^o for my proper life,^o
And with such coz'nage^o—is't not perfect conscience
To quit^o him with this arm? And is't not to be damned
To let this canker of our nature come
In further evil?

HORATIO

It must be shortly known to him from England
What is the issue of the business there.

HAMLET

It will be short; the interim's mine,
And a man's life's no more than to say "one."

30 But I am very sorry, good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot myself,
For by the image of my cause I see
The portraiture of his. I'll court his favors.
But sure the bravery^o of his grief did put me
35 Into a tow'ring passion.

HORATIO Peace, who comes here? 80

Enter young OSRIC, a courtier.

OSRIC Your lordship is right welcome back to Denmark.

HAMLET I humbly thank you, sir. [Aside to HORATIO.]
Dost know this waterfly?

HORATIO [Aside to HAMLET.] No, my good lord. 85

HAMLET [Aside to HORATIO.] Thy state is the more gracious, for 'tis a vice to know him. He hath much land, and fertile. Let a beast be lord of beasts, and his crib shall stand at the king's mess.^o 'Tis a chough,^o but, as I say, spacious^o in the possession of dirt. 90

OSRIC Sweet lord, if your lordship were at leisure, I should impart a thing to you from his majesty.

HAMLET I will receive it, sir, with all diligence of spirit. Put your bonnet to his right use. 'Tis for the head. 95

50 OSRIC I thank your lordship, it is very hot.

HAMLET No, believe me, 'tis very cold; the wind is northerly.

OSRIC It is indifferent cold, my lord, indeed.

HAMLET But yet methinks it is very sultry and hot 100 for my complexion.^o

OSRIC Exceedingly, my lord; it is very sultry, as 'twere—I cannot tell how. But, my lord, his majesty bade me signify to you that 'a has laid a great wager on your head. Sir, this is the matter— 105

HAMLET I beseech you remember.

60 [HAMLET moves him to put on his hat.]

OSRIC Nay, good my lord; for my ease, in good faith.
Sir, here is newly come to court Laertes—believe me, an absolute gentleman, full of most excellent differences,^o of very soft society and great showing. Indeed, 110 to speak feelingly^o of him, he is the card^o or calendar of gentry; for you shall find in him the continent^o of what part a gentleman would see.

HAMLET Sir, his definement^o suffers no perdition^o in you, though, I know, to divide him inventorially 115 would dozy^o th' arithmetic of memory, and yet but yaw neither in respect of his quick sail.^o But, in the verity of extolment, I take him to be a soul of great article,^o and his infusion^o of such dearth and rareness as, to make true diction^o of him, his semblable^o is his 120 mirror, and who else would trace him, his umbrage,^o nothing more.

OSRIC Your lordship speaks most infallibly of him.

30 Or ere 33 statist statesmen 34 fair clearly 37 effect purport 42 comma link 43 great charge (1) serious exhortation (2) heavy burden (punning on as's and asses) 47 shriving absolution 48 ordinant ruling 50 model counterpart 59 insinuation meddling 61 pass thrust; fell cruel 63 stand
. . . upon become incumbent upon me 65 election the Danish monarchy was elective 66 angle fishing line; my proper life my own life 67 coz'nage trickery 68 quit pay back

79 bravery bravado 89 mess table; chough jackdaw (here, chatterer) 90 spacious well off 101 complexion temperament 109–10 differences distinguishing characteristics 111
feelingly justly; card chart 112 continent summary 114 definement description; perdition loss 116 dozy dizzy 116–17 and yet . . . sail and yet only stagger despite all ("yaw neither") in trying to overtake his virtues 119 article literally,
"item," but here perhaps "traits" or "importance"; infusion essential quality 120 diction description; semblable likeness
121 umbrage shadow

HAMLET The concernancy,^o sir? Why do we wrap the gentleman in our more rawer breath? 125
 OSRIC Sir?
 HORATIO Is't not possible to understand in another tongue? You will to't,^o sir, really.
 HAMLET What imports the nomination of this gentleman? 130
 OSRIC Of Laertes?
 HORATIO [Aside to HAMLET.] His purse is empty already. All's golden words are spent.
 HAMLET Of him, sir.
 OSRIC I know you are not ignorant— 135
 HAMLET I would you did, sir; yet, in faith, if you did, it would not much approve^o me. Well, sir?
 OSRIC You are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is—
 HAMLET I dare not confess that, lest I should compare 140 with him in excellence; but to know a man well were to know himself.
 OSRIC I mean, sir, for his weapon; but in the imputation^o laid on him by them, in his meed^o he's unfellowed. 145
 HAMLET What's his weapon?
 OSRIC Rapier and dagger.
 HAMLET That's two of his weapons—but well.
 OSRIC The king, sir, hath wagered with him six Barbary horses, against the which he has impawned,^o 150 as I take it, six French rapiers and poniards, with their assigns,^o as girdle, hangers,^o and so. Three of the carriages,^o in faith, are very dear to fancy, very responsive^o to the hilts, most delicate carriages, and of very liberal conceit.^o 155
 HAMLET What call you the carriages?
 HORATIO [Aside to HAMLET.] I knew you must be edified by the margent^o ere you had done.
 OSRIC The carriages, sir, are the hangers.
 HAMLET The phrase would be more germane to the 160 matter if we could carry a cannon by our sides. I would it might be hangers till then. But on! Six Barbary horses against six French swords, their assigns, and three liberal-conceited carriages—that's the French bet against the Danish. Why is this all im- 165 pawned, as you call it?
 OSRIC The king, sir, hath laid, sir, that in a dozen passes between yourself and him he shall not exceed you three hits; he hath laid on twelve for nine, and it would come to immediate trial if your lordship 170 would vouchsafe the answer.
 HAMLET How if I answer no?
 OSRIC I mean, my lord, the opposition of your person in trial.
 HAMLET Sir, I will walk here in the hall. If it please 175 his majesty, it is the breathing time of day with me.^o Let the foils be brought, the gentleman willing, and the king hold his purpose, I will win for him an I can;

if not, I will gain nothing but my shame and the odd hits. 180
 OSRIC Shall I deliver you e'en so?
 HAMLET To this effect, sir, after what flourish your nature will.
 OSRIC I commend my duty to your lordship.
 HAMLET Yours, yours. [Exit OSRIC.] He does well to 185 commend it himself; there are no tongues else for's turn.
 HORATIO This lapwing^o runs away with the shell on his head.
 HAMLET 'A did comply, sir, with his dug^o before 'a 190 sucked it. Thus has he, and many more of the same breed that I know the drossy age dotes on, only got the tune of the time and, out of an habit of encounter,^o a kind of yeasty^o collection, which carries them through and through the most fanned and winnowed opinions; 195 and do but blow them to their trial, the bubbles are out.^o

Enter a LORD.

LORD My lord, his majesty commended him to you by young Osric, who brings back to him that you attend him in the hall. He sends to know if your 200 pleasure hold to play with Laertes, or that you will take longer time.
 HAMLET I am constant to my purposes; they follow the king's pleasure. If his fitness speaks, mine is ready; now or whensoever, provided I be so able as now. 205
 LORD The king and queen and all are coming down.
 HAMLET In happy time.
 LORD The queen desires you to use some gentle entertainment^o to Laertes before you fall to play.
 HAMLET She well instructs me. [Exit LORD.] 210
 HORATIO You will lose this wager, my lord.
 HAMLET I do not think so. Since he went into France I have been in continual practice. I shall win at the odds. But thou wouldst not think how ill all's here about my heart. But it is no matter. 215
 HORATIO Nay, good my lord—
 HAMLET It is but foolery, but it is such a kind of gain-giving^o as would perhaps trouble a woman.
 HORATIO If your mind dislike anything, obey it. I will forestall their repair hither and say you are not fit. 220
 HAMLET Not a whit, we defy augury. There is special providence in the fall of a sparrow.^o If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come. The readiness is all. Since no man of aught he leaves knows, what is't to leave 225 betimes?^o Let be.

A table prepared. [Enter] TRUMPETS, DRUMS, and OFFICERS with cushions; KING, QUEEN, [OSRIC,] and all the STATE, [with] foils, daggers, [and stoups of wine borne in]; and LAERTES.

188 lapwing the new-hatched lapwing was thought to run around with half its shell on its head 190 'A . . . dug he was ceremoniously polite to his mother's breast 193 out . . . encounter out of his own superficial way of meeting and conversing with people 194 yeasty frothy 196–97 the . . . out i.e., they are blown away (the reference is to the "yeasty collection") 208–09 to . . . entertainment to be courteous 217–18 gain-giving misgiving 222 the . . . sparrow cf. Matthew 10:29, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father" 226 betimes early

124 concernancy meaning 128 will to't will get there 137 approve commend 143–44 imputation reputation 144 meed merit 150 impawned wagered 152 assigns accompaniments; hangers straps hanging the sword to the belt 153 carriages an affected word for hangers 153–54 responsive corresponding 155 liberal conceit elaborate design 158 margent i.e., marginal (explanatory) comment 176 breathing . . . me time when I take exercise

KING

Come, Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me.

[The KING puts Laertes' hand into Hamlet's.]

HAMLET

Give me your pardon, sir. I have done you wrong,
But pardon't, as you are a gentleman.This presence° knows, and you must needs have heard, 230
How I am punished with a sore distraction.

What I have done

That might your nature, honor, and exception°

Roughly awake, I here proclaim was madness.

Was't Hamlet wronged Laertes? Never Hamlet. 235

If Hamlet from himself be ta'en away,

And when he's not himself does wrong Laertes,

Then Hamlet does it not, Hamlet denies it.

Who does it then? His madness. If't be so,

Hamlet is of the faction° that is wronged;

His madness is poor Hamlet's enemy. 240

Sir, in this audience,

Let my disclaiming from a purposed evil

Free me so far in your most generous thoughts

That I have shot my arrow o'er the house

And hurt my brother.

LAERTES

I am satisfied in nature,

Whose motive in this case should stir me most

To my revenge. But in my terms of honor

I stand aloof, and will no reconciliation

Till by some elder masters of known honor

I have a voice and precedent° of peace

To keep my name ungor'd. But till that time

I do receive your offered love like love,

And will not wrong it. 250

HAMLET

I embrace it freely,

And will this brother's wager frankly play.

Give us the foils. Come on. 255

LAERTES

Come, one for me.

HAMLET

I'll be your foil,° Laertes. In mine ignorance

Your skill shall, like a star i' th' darkest night,

Stick fiery off° indeed.

LAERTES

You mock me, sir.

HAMLET

No, by this hand. 260

KING

Give them the foils, young Osric. Cousin Hamlet,

You know the wager?

HAMLET

Very well, my lord.

Your grace has laid the odds o' th' weaker side.

KING

I do not fear it, I have seen you both;

But since he is bettered,° we have therefore odds. 265

LAERTES

This is too heavy; let me see another.

HAMLET

This likes me well. These foils have all a length?

Prepare to play.

OSRIC

Ay, my good lord.

KING

Set me the stoups of wine upon that table.

If Hamlet give the first or second hit, 270

Or quit° in answer of the third exchange,

Let all the battlements their ordnance fire.

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath,

And in the cup an union° shall he throw

Richer than that which four successive kings 275

In Denmark's crown have worn. Give me the cups,

And let the kettle° to the trumpet speak,

The trumpet to the cannoneer without,

The cannons to the heavens, the heaven to earth, 280

"Now the king drinks to Hamlet." Come, begin.

Trumpets the while.

240

And you, the judges, bear a wary eye.

HAMLET

Come on, sir.

LAERTES

Come, my lord. They play.

HAMLET

One.

245

LAERTES

No.

HAMLET

Judgment?

OSRIC

A hit, a very palpable hit.

Drum, trumpets, and shot. Flourish; a piece goes off.

250

LAERTES

Well, again.

KING

Stay, give me drink. Hamlet, this pearl is thine.

Here's to thy health. Give him the cup. 285

HAMLET

I'll play this bout first; set it by awhile.

255

Come. [They play.] Another hit. What say you?

LAERTES

A touch, a touch; I do confess't.

KING

Our son shall win.

QUEEN

He's fat,° and scant of breath.

Here, Hamlet, take my napkin, rub thy brows. 290

The queen carouses to thy fortune, Hamlet.

HAMLET

260

Good madam!

KING

Gertrude, do not drink.

QUEEN

I will, my lord; I pray you pardon me.

[Drinks.]KING [Aside.]

It is the poisoned cup; it is too late.

265

HAMLET

I dare not drink yet, madam—by and by. 295

QUEEN

Come, let me wipe thy face.

LAERTES

My lord, I'll hit him now.

KING

I do not think't.

LAERTES [Aside.]

And yet it is almost against my conscience.

230 presence royal assembly 233 exception disapproval
 240 faction party, side 251 voice and precedent authoritative opinion justified by precedent 257 foil (1) blunt sword (2) background (of metallic leaf) for a jewel 259 Stick fiery off stand out brilliantly 265 bettered has improved (in France)

271 quit repay, hit back 274 union pearl 277 kettle kettle-drum 289 fat (1) sweaty (2) out of training

HAMLET

Come for the third, Laertes. You do but dally.
I pray you pass with your best violence;
I am sure you make a wanton° of me.

LAERTES

Say you so? Come on.

[They] play.

OSRIC

Nothing neither way.

LAERTES

Have at your now!

In scuffling they change rapiers, [and both are wounded].

KING

Part them. They are incensed.

HAMLET

Nay, come—again! [The QUEEN falls.]

OSRIC

Look to the queen there, ho!

HORATIO

They bleed on both sides. How is it, my lord?

OSRIC

How is't, Laertes?

LAERTES

Why, as a woodcock to mine own springe,° Osric.
I am justly killed with mine own treachery.

HAMLET

How does the queen?

KING

She sounds° to see them bleed.

QUEEN

No, no, the drink, the drink! O my dear Hamlet!
The drink, the drink! I am poisoned. [Dies.]

HAMLET

O villainy! Ho! Let the door be locked.
Treachery! Seek it out.

[LAERTES falls.]

LAERTES

It is here, Hamlet. Hamlet, thou art slain;
No med'cine in the world can do thee good.
In thee there is not half an hour's life.
The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,
Unbated and envenomed. The foul practice°
Hath turned itself on me. Lo, here I lie,
Never to rise again. Thy mother's poisoned.
I can no more. The king, the king's to blame.

HAMLET

The point envenomed too?
Then, venom, to thy work.

Hurts the KING.

ALL Treason! Treason!

KING

O, yet defend me, friends. I am but hurt.

HAMLET

Here, thou incestuous, murd'rous, damnèd Dane,
Drink off this potion. Is thy union here?
Follow my mother.

KING dies.

LAERTES

He is justly served.

It is a poison tempered° by himself.

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet.

301 wanton spoiled child 308 springe snare 310 sounds swoons 319 practice deception 330 tempered mixed

Mine and my father's death come not upon thee,
Nor thine on me! Dies.

300

HAMLET

Heaven make thee free of it! I follow thee.
I am dead, Horatio. Wretched queen, adieu!
You that look pale and tremble at this chance,
That are but mutes° or audience to this act,
Had I but time (as this fell sergeant,° Death,
Is strict in his arrest) O, I could tell you—
But let it be. Horatio, I am dead;
Thou livest; report me and my cause aright
To the unsatisfied.°

335

340

HORATIO

Never believe it.

I am more an antique Roman° than a Dane.
Here's yet some liquor left.

HAMLET

As th' art a man,

Give me the cup. Let go. By heaven, I'll ha't!

345

305

O God, Horatio, what a wounded name,
Things standing thus unknown, shall live behind me!
If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,
Absent thee from felicity° awhile,
And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,
To tell my story. A march afar off. [Exit OSRIC.]

350

What warlike noise is this?

Enter OSRIC.

OSRIC

Young Fortinbras, with conquest come from Poland,
To th' ambassadors of England gives
This warlike volley.

HAMLET

O, I die, Horatio!

The potent poison quite o'ercrows° my spirit.
I cannot live to hear the news from England,
But I do prophesy th' election lights
On Fortinbras. He has my dying voice.
So tell him, with th' occurrents,° more and less,
Which have solicited°—the rest is silence.

355

Dies. 360

315

HORATIO

Now cracks a noble heart. Good night, sweet prince,
And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest.

[March within.]

320

Why does the drum come hither?

Enter FORTINBRAS, with the AMBASSADORS with drum, colors, and ATTENDANTS.

FORTINBRAS

Where is this sight?

HORATIO

What is it you would see?

If aught of woe or wonder, cease your search.

365

325

FORTINBRAS

This quarry° cries on havoc.° O proud Death,
What feast is toward° in thine eternal cell
That thou so many princes at a shot
So bloodily hast struck?

AMBASSADOR

The sight is dismal;

337 mutes performers who have no words to speak 338 fell sergeant dread sheriff's officer 342 unsatisfied uninformed 343 antique Roman with reference to the old Roman fashion of suicide 349 felicity i.e., the felicity of death 355 o'er-crows overpowers (as a triumphant cock crows over its weak opponent) 359 occurrents occurrences 360 solicited incited 366 quarry heap of slain bodies; cries on havoc proclaims general slaughter 367 toward in preparation

And our affairs from England come too late.
 The ears are senseless that should give us hearing
 To tell him his commandment is fulfilled,
 That Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are dead.
 Where should we have our thanks?

HORATIO Not from his^o mouth,
 Had it th' ability of life to thank you.
 He never gave commandment for their death.
 But since, so jump^o upon this bloody question,
 You from the Polack wars, and you from England,
 Are here arrived, give order that these bodies
 High on a stage^o be placèd to the view,
 And let me speak to th' yet unknowing world
 How these things came about. So shall you hear
 Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts,
 Of accidental judgments, casual^o slaughters,
 Of deaths put on by cunning and forced cause,
 And, in this upshot, purposes mistook
 Fall'n on th' inventors' heads. All this can I Truly deliver.

FORTINBRAS Let us haste to hear it,

374 his Claudius' 377 jump precisely 380 stage platform
 384 casual not humanly planned, chance

370 And call the noblest to the audience.
 For me, with sorrow I embrace my fortune. 390
 I have some rights of memory^o in this kingdom,
 Which now to claim my vantage doth invite me.

HORATIO

Of that I shall have also cause to speak,
 375 And from his mouth whose voice will draw on^o more.
 But let this same be presently performed, 395
 Even while men's minds are wild, lest more mischance
 On^o plots and errors happen.

FORTINBRAS

Let four captains
 380 Bear Hamlet like a soldier to the stage,
 For he was likely, had he been put on,^o
 To have proved most royal; and for his passage^o 400
 The soldiers' music and the rite of war
 Speak loudly for him.
 385 Take up the bodies. Such a sight as this Becomes the field,^o but here shows much amiss.
 Go, bid the soldiers shoot. 405

Exeunt marching; after the which a peal of ordnance are shot off.

391 rights of memory remembered claims 394 voice . . .
 on vote will influence 397 On on top of 399 put on advanced (to the throne) 400 passage death 404 field battlefield

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR

EDITED BY WILLIAM GREEN

Introduction¹

What a delightful picture of Elizabethan village life Shakespeare presents in The Merry Wives of Windsor. He tickles our palates with hot venison pasty and pippins and cheese. He plunges us into a world where hawking and greyhound racing are matters of concern. He walks us through the town, alluding to the nearby Thames, Datchet Mead, Windsor Castle and its chapel. He takes us into the Garter Inn; and, lastly, he leaves us at midnight under Herne's Oak in Windsor Little Park. Yet his intent is not to extol village life for its own sake, for, as always, Shakespeare is interested in people. In this play he gives us a peek into the private lives of his villagers, showing us how love affects as disparate a group of individuals as one would ever expect to encounter in an English village.

There is, of course, the traditional sweet young maiden—Mistress Anne Page, the picture of “pretty virginity.” She is in love with a handsome gentleman. He has for his rivals the shy, colorless nephew of a country justice and a choleric French physician who draws his patients from among the gentry and royalty. These are the principals of the subplot. In the main plot we meet a pair of prosperous townsmen—one given to extreme jealousy—whose vivacious wives prove more than a match for a fat, old, lecherous conniver from London. Rounding out this rich gallery of characters are a Welsh parson more adept at giving a Latin lesson than fighting a duel; a bluff, hearty innkeeper whose equanimity can be shattered only by such a major calamity as the theft of his post horses; a country justice of the peace; a goodhearted housekeeper, skilled as a go-between; and some sharpers parasitically attendant on the lecher.

Shakespeare takes these characters and places them in a fast-paced farce. He blends the two plot lines smoothly, and organically integrates his characters. When the play concludes, the audience may leave in a joyous mood, laughing over the fractured English of Evans and Caius, chuckling at the malapropisms of Mistress Quickly, delighted with the farce escapades, content that Jill got her Jack and that middle-class morality has been upheld.

¹ Portions of the following are based on concepts developed in extended form in the editor's Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1962. Permission has been granted by the Princeton University Press.

A major Shakespearean work? Hardly. That audiences have not been disturbed by this question of major or minor is apparent from the long production record the play has had (including a performance before James I in November 1604) and from the adaptations it has undergone, first in John Dennis' dramatic version of 1702 (The Comical Gallant) and later in various operatic treatments.

Yet this play, so much the delight of theatergoers, has proved a bane to scholars. If “To thyself be enough” could be applied to The Merry Wives, there would be no problem. But since Shakespeare was a playwright in whom a continual line of development can be traced, the play must be considered in relation to the canon as a whole. And here a host of problems arises.

When examined in the study instead of on the stage, The Merry Wives engenders question after question. Why does a set of characters from the history plays (Henry IV and Henry V) appear in the script? No biographical links can be established between the six characters—Falstaff, Bardolph, Pistol, Nym, Justice Shallow, Mistress Quickly—and their namesakes in the history plays. Why does Shakespeare take such pains to give a historically accurate portrait of Windsor in the 1590's in this his sole play dealing entirely with contemporary English life? Why even select Windsor as the locale for a play about country life when Shakespeare knew Warwickshire so well? Why at a time when he had already produced masterful poetry in A Midsummer Night's Dream and Romeo and Juliet does he write a play almost entirely in prose? The little verse that appears must be classified as inferior. Why when engrossed in writing romantic comedy—A Midsummer Night's Dream and The Merchant of Venice show how far he had come with the genre since The Two Gentlemen of Verona—does he suddenly backtrack to the farcical treatment of love that he successfully presented in The Taming of the Shrew? And what source did he use for the play? None has been discovered.

A key to the answers to these questions is found in some allusions to Queen Elizabeth and Windsor Castle in V.v:

Cricket, to Windsor chimneys shalt thou leap.
Where fires thou find'st unraked and hearths unswept,

There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry.
Our radiant queen hates sluts and sluttery. (V.v.45-48)

A few lines later the Fairy Queen instructs:

Search Windsor Castle, elves, within and out.
Strew good luck, oughs, on every sacred room,
That it may stand till the perpetual doom,
In state as wholesome as in state 'tis fit,
Worthy the owner, and the owner it.
The several chairs of Order look you scour
With juice of balm and every precious flow'r.
Each fair instalment, coat, and several crest,
With loyal blazon, evermore be blest.
And nightly, meadow-fairies, look you sing,
Like to the Garter's compass, in a ring.
Th' expressure that it bears, green let it be,
More fertile-fresh than all the field to see;
And "Honi soit qui mal y pense" write
In emerald tufts, flow'rs purple, blue, and white—
Like sapphire, pearl, and rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee—
Fairies use flow'rs for their charactery. (V.v.58-75)

Two allusions attract attention in this passage: Honi soit qui mal y pense—motto of the Order of the Garter—and the instructions to the fairies to scour "the several chairs of Order." So deliberately does Shakespeare draw attention to the Order that we cannot ignore the references. They stand out even more sharply when we realize that earlier in the play (I.iv) Dr. Caius informed us he was hurrying to court for a "grand affair." Also, in II.ii, Mistress Quickly noted that the town was filling with courtiers. Something concerning the Order of the Garter was happening in Windsor, and that something could only be an installation of Knights-Elect.

Now the Windsor setting makes sense, for if Shakespeare chose to allude to a Garter installation, what more appropriate place to locate the play than in Windsor, home of the Order of the Garter since the fourteenth century? Moreover, what need to state that the preparation of castle and chapel is for this ceremonial? The Elizabethans knew that the only Garter rite celebrated in Windsor was an installation—this by decree of Elizabeth in 1567. And the Elizabethans—at least those in courtly circles during the late 1590's—further knew what Garter installation Shakespeare was referring to—that of May 1597.

This last statement cannot be verified, but convincing circumstantial evidence has recently been adduced, and generally accepted by scholars, that the sole Garter occasion to which the allusions point is the April 1597 Feast of Saint George and its attendant ceremonials. On this occasion five individuals were named to the Order. Two of them have particular bearing on the genesis of The Merry Wives: Frederick, Duke of Württemberg (to whom we shall return), and George Carey, the second Lord Hunsdon.

Hunsdon, a favorite cousin of Queen Elizabeth, was patron of Shakespeare's company at this time. His connection with the company becomes particularly significant in light of an old stage tradition concerning the composition of The Merry Wives. According to the tradition, first recorded by John Dennis in 1702, Queen Elizabeth commanded that the play be written and that the task be completed within fourteen days. Nicholas Rowe, in his 1709 edition of Shakespeare's Works, amplified the tradition by stating that the queen "was so well pleas'd with that admirable character of Falstaff, in the two Parts of Henry the Fourth, that she commanded him to continue it for one Play more, and to show him in Love."

Stage traditions, especially one appearing eighty-six years after Shakespeare's death, must be taken with skepticism. Yet in the face of no counterevidence, this tradition deserves respect. Its foundation is based on the queen's desire to see Falstaff in love, establishing that she had already become familiar with old tunbelly. Although no court play lists are extant, we do know that Shakespeare's company performed before the courtiers six times during the 1596-97 Christmas play season: December 26, 27, 1596; January 1, 6, and February 6, 8, 1597. That 1 Henry IV was among the works presented is a strong possibility. Recent study of this first Falstaff play points to the autumn of 1596 as the date for its completion—a date slightly earlier than the generalized 1597 traditionally assigned.

Allowing for conjecture, we may assume that the queen expressed her delight with Falstaff in 1 Henry IV, wondered aloud how the fat knight would fare in a romantic entanglement, had her remarks picked up by Lord Hunsdon and transmitted to Shakespeare with a request to have the play ready for presentation at the April 1597 Saint George's day festivities. Hunsdon had good reason for making such a request, for not only was he to be named a Garter knight on that occasion, but he also was to become Lord Chamberlain of England. Although this latter event occurred on April 17, Hunsdon knew of the appointment several weeks in advance, as he did of his impending Order election. The Merry Wives may be considered his "thank you note" to the queen.

Now, we need not take Dennis' remarks about finishing the play in fourteen days literally, especially since Dennis, in one of his letters, later recorded the time span as ten days. Rather, they point to a short period of time for composition. And The Merry Wives bears overwhelming marks of hasty composition, perhaps more than any other play of Shakespeare's. The Shallow-Falstaff quarrel of the opening scene is never resolved; the horse-stealing subplot of the fourth act with its references to a German duke is not in any way integrated into the main plot lines of the play; the Caius-Evans revenge scheme dies aborning; anachronisms in time sequences are present; the costume colors in the fairy scene are hopelessly confused; and various other errors appear in the text. Since by 1597 Shakespeare had established a reputation as a skilled dramatist—only a year later Francis Meres was to cite him among the English as "most excellent" in comedy and tragedy—so much slipshod workmanship must be attributed to writing against the clock.

Creating a play to order on short notice, one showing Falstaff in love, was a formidable task. Shakespeare simplified it first by trying to adapt material already at hand and then by revamping some old play. In the spring of 1597, he appears to have been at work on 2 Henry IV. The opening of The Merry Wives with Falstaff, Shallow, Bardolph, and Pistol in a country setting reminds us strongly of the Gloucestershire scenes in the Henry play. Shakespeare initially attempts to create a new plot situation for these characters, but after about a hundred lines he gives up. Under the pressure of time, instead of starting over, he leaves the Falstaff-Shallow quarrel unresolved and attempts to fit Falstaff and crew into the plot of an old play.

This work, in both its main plot and its subplot, bears traits of Italian comedy, and was probably rooted in a tale or tales from the Italian novellas that had been translated into English in various collections since the 1560's. The main plot deals with the stock situation of a clever lover who attempts to deceive a husband. By reversing the roles and making the lover the duped one, a farce situation results. To this plot is grafted—either by Shakespeare or the source author—the traditional Italian tale of two young lovers who cannot gain parental permission to marry. The girl in these stories often is involved with three suitors, at least one of whom is a grotesque character. She also has her maid as a go-between.

Into these tales Shakespeare marches Falstaff and company. Falstaff, of course, converts easily into the duped lover; but the other characters, with the exception of Dame Quickly, who becomes the go-between, cannot be matched with existing characters in the source. Thus Shakespeare is forced to let Shallow wander in and out of the play with no real function and to make what use he can of Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol before writing them out of the script.

In making Falstaff the duped lover, Shakespeare not only fulfilled the Queen's request, but went one step further, for he knew esthetically, as Edmund Malone long ago observed, "what the queen, if the story be true, seems not to have known . . . Falstaff could not love, but by ceasing to be Falstaff. He could only counterfeit love, and his professions could be prompted, not by the hope of pleasure, but of money." The Falstaff of The Merry Wives must, therefore, be considered a new character with an old name.

At the start of this play the fat knight does bear some resemblances to his counterpart in the Henry IV plays in the lusty, blustering manner with which he outfaces Shallow and Slender. And in his soliloquy in IV.v, Shakespeare may have allowed him to reminisce over the old days with the mad Prince of Wales when Falstaff says,

I would all the world might be cozened, for I have been cozened and beaten too. If it should come to the ear of the court how I have been transformed, and how my transformation hath been washed and cudged, they would melt me out of my fat drop by drop, and liquor fisher-men's boots with me. I warrant they would whip me with their fine wits till I were as crestfall'n as a dried pear.

(IV.v. 90-97)

However, from the beginning of I.iii—when the action proper gets under way—we have a different Falstaff, one who appears to be a reworking of a scholar or pedant from the source story. Thus the Host says to him, "Speak scholarly and wisely"; Ford, in his disguise as Brooke, notes in II.ii, "Sir, I hear you are a scholar" and follows this up several lines later, observing, "You are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance, authentic in your place and person, generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike, and learned preparations." Literary allusions and such phraseology as "Mistress Ford . . . I see you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requital to a hair's breadth," crop up in Falstaff's speech and contrast sharply with the racy, oath-laden utterances we have come to associate with the "fat-kidneyed rascal."

This scholar-cum-knight is now a butt, a dupe. He is the farcical target of two delightful Windsor housewives. We must forget the merry rogue who, caught in a pack of lies in describing the Gadshill robbery, is able to wheedle out of the situation by exclaiming, "If reasons were as plentiful as blackberries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion, I."

In reworking Falstaff's cronies—Pistol, Nym, and Shallow—as well as in handling the new characters Slender, Caius, and Ford, Shakespeare proved himself more than a mechanical adapter. He fashioned these characters according to the mold of "humors comedy," a genre newly introduced to the stage by George Chapman in 1596. Shakespeare first attempted portrayals of humors, or temperaments, with some of the fringe characters in 2 Henry IV, the play, we will remember, that he probably had been working on when interrupted by the queen's command; but he did so here on a rather superficial level. Only Pistol of the "irregular humorists" of 2 Henry IV emerges as a full-fledged humors character.

The Pistol of The Merry Wives is basically the same character he is in 2 Henry IV, a blusterer full of sound and fury. His cohort Nym, as the name indicates (Middle English nimen, "to take"), is a filcher; his deeds proclaim it as he joins with Pistol to part Slender from his purse and Mistress Bridget from the handle of her fan. And his overworked phrase "That's my humor" serves further to betray his generic origin. Their fellow traveler from the history plays, Shallow, remains the talkative, empty-headed country justice of 2 Henry IV.

Slender and Caius, however, receive fuller treatment, their humors portrayal going beyond the mere use of type names. As the second and third wooer to Anne Page, they function integrally in the plot. They are basically the two grotesques frequently found as suitors to the amorosa in Italian comedy; Shakespeare has skillfully retained their grotesque function by casting them as humors figures. Caius is presented as a choleric Frenchman. His medical side is never commented on by Shakespeare. And Slender is portrayed as a country gull. No sooner does he arrive in town than he is robbed by Pistol, Nym, and Bardolph. He is completely passive in the suit to Anne Page. Without his Book of Songs and Sonnets he is unable to woo the lady. Slender of body and slender of mind is he indeed.

The most complete humors portrait in The Merry Wives is that of Ford. All Windsor knows, as Quickly relates, that "he's a very jealousy man." Ford even talks of it openly with others. And in private he shows that he is so completely consumed by the flames of jealousy that he would "rather trust a Fleming with my butter, Parson Hugh the Welshman with my cheese, an Irishman with my aqua vitae bottle, or a thief to walk my ambling gelding, than my wife with herself. . . . God be praised for my jealousy." So intense is this emotion that Ford becomes despicable enough to hire another man, Falstaff, to seduce his wife. In this action Shakespeare exploits Ford's humor to increase the plot complications. However, at the proper moment he makes Ford see the foolishness of his ways and repent (IV.iv). The entire handling of Ford's character is one-dimensional and makes an interesting contrast with the deeper study of jealousy found in Othello.

What is striking about Shakespeare's treatment of The Merry Wives as humors comedy is that nowhere do we see the savage bite of the Jonsonian moralist seeking to strip the mask of hypocrisy from humanity. Nor are follies and vices held up to scorn and ridicule. When Shakespeare exposes the weaknesses of Ford or Caius or Slender, he does so with gentleness—and compassion. Even Nym and Pistol do not meet the fate they deserve. That Shakespeare even was able to graft elements of humors comedy onto the basic farce-comedy plot of The Merry Wives is a tribute to his artistry, considering the limited amount of time in which he had to work.

Not only in turning to humors comedy was Shakespeare following the latest dramatic trends, but also in bringing on stage foreign character types. In making Caius a French physician (there is no reason for linking him with the founder of the Cambridge college), Shakespeare may have been mocking the predilection of the upper-class Londoners for foreign physicians. But with Hugh Evans, he was surely capitalizing on the interest in stage Welshmen which started about 1593 and continued unabated for several years. Witness Glendower and Fluellen in Shakespeare's other plays.

Thus far we have seen how Shakespeare, by following popular theatrical trends, reworked his Italianate source and created new interest in what might otherwise have been a dull set of stock characters. Still unaccounted for, however, are the Windsor setting, the Order of the Garter allusions, or the horse-stealing subplot. These are not essential to the action line of the play. In fact, the inferior quarto text excises all references to either the court or the Order of the Garter.

The allusions and setting have already been discussed in establishing the date of the play as 1597. Their presence in the script, however, is more than ornamentation, for Shakespeare does combine them into a logical pattern. Aware of the special occasion for which he was to write the play and the select audience that would see it, Shakespeare apparently decided to include material that would reflect on that occasion and on his patron's own election to the Order.

The initial step was to change the locale of the Italianate original to Windsor, easily done since all this original demanded by way of place was a plausible setting for a group of middle-class characters. Immediately with the Windsor switch a Garter association was set up for an Elizabethan audience. This association is carried still further by depicting activity at Windsor Castle—preparation for a ceremonial that by historical evidence could only be an Order of the Garter installation. Shakespeare then clinched the Garter-Windsor link by penning a tribute to the Order. He also added a compliment to the queen, knowing that she would be at the special performance.

This type of structuring is not unique for Shakespeare. He was a master of depicting multiple activities in his plays, making his audiences aware that there are worlds within worlds. Using the terms Harry Levin has given us in The Overreacher,² the "grand affair" at the castle becomes the overplot; the Falstaff-in-love story, the main plot; and the Anne Page-Fenton romance, which parallels the variation on the "course of true love" in the main plot, the underplot. There is even one character who moves from plot to plot: Doctor Caius. We must not forget that three times in I.iv he informs us that he is on his way to the "grand affair," that is, the installation.

One problem still remains in this examination of the plot structure: the presence of the horse-stealing subplot of the fourth act. This section is not based on any of the incidents in the story line proper and disappears from the play as mysteriously as it came. The key character in it is a German duke who never appears but whose men make off with three of the Host's post horses. To be understood, this subplot must be seen as an appendage of the Garter overplot, but alas, it is such a weak appendage that it dangles completely unsupported.

The German duke alluded to is most assuredly Frederick, Duke of Württemberg, who, as previously mentioned, was one of the five individuals elected to the Order in 1597. He was, in fact, the only German ruler made a Garter knight between 1579 and 1612. Ever since 1592 when he had made a trip to England while still Count Mompelgard, Frederick had been obsessed with a desire to become a Knight of the Garter. He badgered Elizabeth and her courtiers with letters and with embassages over the next several years in support of this desire. The queen, for various reasons, paid little heed to his wishes. Finally, in 1597, at a time of serious strain in Anglo-German relations stemming from bitter disagreements over trading policies between the English and the Hanse, Elizabeth sanctioned Frederick's election to the Order. That this was done solely out of political expediency to keep the duke as a German ally is virtually a certainty. Since Frederick had not been particularly discreet in his campaign for election, a goodly segment of those in court circles were fully aware of this vain duke's interest in the Garter.

Even after his election Frederick continued to be a topical figure, for now he began his campaign for investiture and installation—the two final ceremonies for full-fledged Garter membership. Elizabeth may have delayed in sending an investiture mission to Württemberg because the costs were so great or she may have wanted to have a hold over Frederick, as a friendly German prince, so that he would actively support her in the Hanse dispute. This dispute had become so serious by the summer of 1597 that Emperor Rudolph II barred the English Merchant Adventurers from the German empire. Whatever the reason behind Elizabeth's stalling, the queen died in 1603 without either an end to the Hanse dispute or investiture for Frederick.

Soon after James I came to the throne, Emperor Rudolph settled the Hanse dispute, and Duke Frederick renewed his pleas for investiture. This time he succeeded, and he received the long-coveted insignia of the Order during the investiture ceremonies in Stuttgart on November 6, 1603. The following April he sent a proxy delegate for installation at Windsor during the annual Feast of Saint George celebration. Clearly Duke Frederick and his lobbying activities were known to a great number of those in court circles, and clearly the twelve years that those activities span would have brought Frederick to the attention of even a wider circle of Londoners. There is, therefore, no reason to doubt the recognition of any allusions to Frederick in the play by the audience at the posited initial Garter production or at subsequent performances through 1604.

² Harry Levin, The Overreacher (1952).

Moreover, evidence exists in the horse-stealing subplot to link the "duke de Jamany" with Frederick. In the corrupt quarto version of the subplot appears the curious phrase cosen garmombles. The Folio text reads cozen-Iermans at the same point. In all probability the Q text preserves the original reading. (We may attribute the Folio version to a revision made after the publication of the quarto text in 1602 when the topicality of a direct reference to Frederick was either no longer proper or intelligible.) Garmombles, as Leslie Hotson suggests, represents a scrambling of Garter and Mompelgard. That his suggestion is apt can be supported by the observation that Shallow's scrambling of Custos Rotulorum for Custalorum in the opening scene is similar in technique. The cosen of the phrase is a pun on cosen or cozen, "to cheat," and on the salutatory address used by a ruler at this time when corresponding with another ruler. This oblique identification of Frederick with the German duke of the play is further established by Doctor Caius' information that "dere is no duke dat de court is know to come." This exactly describes the election of Frederick to the Order, for he was elected in absentia (a normal procedure with foreign rulers) and not informed of this until October, five months after the installation ceremonies.

Now, neither of the above allusions links Frederick directly with the theft of the Host's post horses, the action of the sketchy subplot. Impetus for this incident comes, probably, from a post-horse scandal that occurred in September 1596, when Le Sieur Aymar de Chastes, Governor of Dieppe, was returning to France from an embassy to England concerning an Anglo-French defense treaty. De Chastes had been hurrying home to prepare Dieppe for the reciprocating English embassy that had as one of its charges the investiture of Henry IV into the Order of the Garter. En route to the coast, de Chastes, probably through misunderstanding the operations of the English posting system, abused the authority of a warrant he had been issued to assist him in procuring post horses, and, with two of his retinue, tried to take by force post horses from an innkeeper in Gravesend. He also got into difficulty with hackneymen from Rochester for attempting to take post horses beyond the stage for which they had been hired. Knowledge of both incidents was widespread.

Only six months later Shakespeare was presumably working on The Merry Wives for presentation at the Garter Feast. Intent on reinforcing the Garter overplot to the play, he reworked the de Chastes posting scandal, having recalled that it was connected with a Garter event—the investiture of Henry IV. Since, for diplomatic reasons, he could not lampoon so distinguished a man as de Chastes, Shakespeare turned him into another foreigner, one even more closely bound up with the Order ceremonies and one who could safely be satirized: the Duke of Württemberg. After all, the English court knew precisely why Frederick had been elected to the Order and how obnoxious he had made himself in lobbying for election. Thus, the three Frenchmen become Germans—a deft stroke at a time when the Hanse troubles would have aroused anti-German sentiment among the normally xenophobic Englishmen; the governor becomes a duke; and the locale shifts from Gravesend and Rochester to Windsor.

Allowing for the conjectural nature of the above account, we see that it does explain the disparate elements of the horse-stealing subplot. The problem is not that this subplot is a fragment of a larger unit, now lost, which developed the Evans-Caius revenge scheme—as some scholars, embarrassed to account for the horse-stealing episode, have hypothesized—but rather that having written the material, Shakespeare could not integrate it into the other plot lines of the play. So he left it alone, an isolated entity mutely joining the fragmentary Shallow-Falstaff quarrel as witnesses to the difficulty of writing against the incessant ticking of a clock.

If history has been dwelled on at length, it is because only through history can we understand the tripartite plot structure of the play. If The Merry Wives were written for a special occasion, and here we must realize that the evidence is primarily circumstantial, that occasion must be explored for insight into the peculiar characteristics of the play.

Shakespeare's aim in The Merry Wives was to entertain, to counterpoint the serious ceremonials of the 1597 Feast of Saint George with mirth. This he does by writing a farce. Thus he tries to make everyone happy: Queen Elizabeth, by fulfilling her wish to see Falstaff in love; Lord Hunsdon, his patron, by prefiguring Hunsdon's own installation at Windsor a month hence; the courtiers at large, by ridiculing the Garter-obsessed Duke of Württemberg; and the general theatrical public, by bringing before them one of the freshest sets of humors characters in Elizabethan comedy as well as upholding on stage the virtue of English women. (Says Mistress Page, "We'll leave a proof by that which we will do,/Wives may be merry, and yet honest too.") A tall order for a short space of time in which to execute it. Surely Shakespeare deserves some forgiveness for the abundance of loose ends in the play.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCE

The Merry Wives belongs to that small group of Shakespeare's plays that have no known source. But Renaissance Italian novellas afford several duped lovers who, like Falstaff, have three assignations with the wife of a jealous husband. Anne Page, the young maiden sought after by three suitors, finds herself in a situation that is a recurring one in conventional Italian comedy. Thus, there is scholarly consensus that whatever the precise source of The Merry Wives, that source was a work based on Italian models.

Italian tales had been known in English translation in the sixteenth century through such collections as Painter's The Palace of Pleasure (1566) and Pettie's A Petite Palace of Pettie his Pleasure (1576). However, in the face of the stage tradition about hurried composition for The Merry Wives, scholars generally believe that Shakespeare, rather than directly having dramatized any of these tales, reworked an old play in the repertory of his company. For convenience, we may term this old play the Ur-Merry Wives. That Italianate plays should have been available is not startling; the conventions of Italian comedy had filtered into English drama by the 1570's (even earlier if we allow for influences from Plautus and Terence) through performances of the School Plays—academic comedies presented at Oxford and Cambridge. These comedies were written in imitation of or translated from the Italian commedia erudita. The commedia dell' arte also may have provided material; extant commedia dell' arte scenari reveal traces of the situations found in both the main plot and the subplot of The Merry Wives. And Italian actors appeared in England in the 1570's in productions from their native repertory.

The dramatic source—if there was one—of The Merry Wives is lost, but three tales have been uncovered that contain resemblances to incidents found in Shakespeare's version. That most closely mirroring events of the main plot is a tale published in 1558 in Ser Giovanni Fiorentino's Il Pecorone (Day I, Novella 2). It relates how Bucciuolo, upon completing his legal studies in Bologna, goes to his teacher for instruction on the art of falling in love. Following his teacher's advice, he visits a church, where he becomes enamored of a young lady who, unknown to the student, is the wife of the teacher. She encourages Bucciuolo's attentions and soon invites him to visit her. Bucciuolo, as previously requested by the teacher, keeps him apprised of all progress. This teacher, a very jealous man, begins to suspect that his wife is the young woman. When he learns of the meeting, he rushes home at the appointed time. The wife hides Bucciuolo under a pile of newly laundered clothes, and thus he escapes detection. The young man reports the incident to his mentor the next day and adds that he has been invited back for a rendezvous the following night. This time the teacher, in a great rage, follows the student and knocks on the door as soon as Bucciuolo has entered. The lady opens the door and embraces her husband in such a manner that Bucciuolo is able to slip out safely. She then shouts that her husband has gone mad; the neighbors and her brothers arrive, and when the brothers see the teacher pierce the pile of laundry with his sword, they consider him insane. The husband then threatens the brothers, who beat him with cudgels. Word goes through the neighborhood that the teacher indeed has gone mad. Bucciuolo, in sympathy, comes to visit him, discovers that he has been cuckolding his own teacher, tells the wretched man that he grieves for him, and then leaves Bologna.

The tale contains striking similarities with the main plot of The Merry Wives. Fiorentino's story revolves around a jealous husband who gets a full report of the assignations between his wife and her lover. The lover is hidden under laundry, which the husband examines on his second attempt to catch the pair. Each time the lover escapes, and at the end he learns the truth of the situation. The duped husband receives a beating after the second visit. Shakespeare's important change is in making the lover rather than the husband the duped male.

Another story of a duped husband that resembles The Merry Wives is "The Tale of the Two Lovers of Pisa" from Tarlton's Newes out of Purgatorie (1590). The husband, a physician, is a very jealous man who decides to test the virtue of his wife by encouraging a young man to make love to her. The young man, who does not know that the physician and the husband are one, reports daily on the progress of his affair to the physician. Three assignations take place, and each time the young man escapes when the physician arrives to search for him. In the first instance, the young man is concealed in a vat of feathers, in the second he hides between two ceilings, and in the third he is carried from the house in a chest supposedly containing the physician's papers. At the end the lover learns the truth of the situation.

This tale also opens with an account of how the girl came to marry the physician. The details are similar to incidents in the Anne Page story. Margaret, the daughter of a wealthy gentleman, has many suitors, but her father wants her to marry a rich husband. The father finally selects Mutio, a rich but old and jealous physician, and forces Margaret to marry him. It is possible that the germ for the Anne Page subplot lies in this tale. (Or, as Oscar Campbell has theorized, it may come from one of the commedia erudita-type plays.)

The third tale with plot parallels is "Of Two Brethren and their Wives" from Riche his Farewell to Military Profession (1581) by Barnaby Riche. This tale is of interest because it deals with the intrigues of a married woman who is involved with three suitors. Two of them, the doctor and lawyer, are comic types. Both are duped by the woman. Possibly the author of the Ur-Merry Wives switched elements from the main plot to the subplot and vice versa.

What this brief account of possible source materials shows is that all the details of story found in The Merry Wives plot lines were known in both narrative and dramatic form by 1590—several years before the composition of The Merry Wives. In adapting the to-hand material, Shakespeare added the Falstaff crew from the Henry plays and, as discussed in the Introduction, inserted the topical events reflected in the horse-stealing subplot and in the court and Garter allusions.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

Two texts of The Merry Wives of Windsor exist: that of the 1602 quarto and that of the 1623 Folio. The play had been entered in the Stationers' Register on January 18, 1602, for publication by John Busby, but Busby immediately transferred his rights to Arthur Johnson. Johnson brought out Q1 later that year with Thomas Creede as his printer. In 1619, Thomas Pavier issued a second quarto that basically reprints Q1 and is therefore without textual authority. The last early quarto of the play, that of 1630, except for some changes in spelling and punctuation, was printed from the Folio. Thus Q1 and F stand as the only texts of editorial importance.

There are significant differences between these two texts. Not only is Q1 some twelve hundred lines shorter, but it omits and transposes scenes, cuts speaking parts for William and Robin, excises all references to the court and Order of the Garter, and makes a jumble of many individual passages. In sum, although coherent, the quarto text is inferior to the Folio version. Yet the quarto contains certain passages and readings—notably Brooke as the alias for Ford, and cosen garmombles in place of cozen-germans—which appear to be genuinely Shakespeare's.

Various theories have been advanced over the years to account for the two versions of the play. Scholarly consensus marks the Folio text as the authentic version. However, according to a strong current theory, F rests upon a 1597 mother text that had undergone minor modifications between the original production and publication of the Folio in 1623.

The quarto version, it is posited, represents an abridgment of that mother text, illegitimately made through memorial reconstruction for a provincial acting company around 1601. The pirate was most certainly a "hired man" who played the Host in the original Lord Chamberlain's Men productions of the play. While making his memorial reconstruction, this traitor actor seems to have restored to the text the "Brooke" reading that had been altered to "Broome" in 1597. This was done to avoid conflict with the family of William Brooke, Lord Cobham, who had taken umbrage at Shakespeare's original name for Falstaff in 1 Henry IV—Oldcastle, a Brooke family ancestor. At the same time, the pirate-actor, through his playing knowledge of the original script, corrected other anomalies, such as the confusion over the costume colors in the fairy scene, which hasty composition had let creep into the mother text. Thus, while Q1 must be regarded as a corrupt text, it has helped to get us closer to Shakespeare's original version.

Trying to recapture that original version, we are further handicapped by certain peculiarities in the Folio text. The only stage directions indicate entries and exits; character names are massed at the head of each scene; the play is fully divided into acts and scenes; and there are idiosyncrasies in punctuation. These oddities, considered collectively, are now taken as an indication that the Folio Merry Wives is a literary transcription of either the author's manuscript or a prompt copy—it is impossible to tell which—made by Ralph Crane, distinguished scrivener of the King's Men. Since The Merry Wives shares these scribal characteristics with the three other plays opening the Folio, it appears as if the original plan was to have Crane make a set of literary transcriptions for all the plays in the Folio, but the plan never was completely executed.

The present edition is based on the Folio text. The massed entries have been changed from the scene heads to the appropriate places within the scene. The Latin of the Folio's act and scene divisions has been translated into English. The French of Doctor Caius is modernized, and the Welsh pronunciations of Sir Hugh Evans are indicated a little more consistently than in the Folio. For example, at I.i.243, where the Folio in a single speech gives both "ord" and "ort," the present edition alters the first to agree with the second. Prose passages set as verse in the Folio appear here as prose. Added stage directions and indications of locale are in brackets. The name "Broome," which appears regularly in F, is here given as "Brooke," speech prefixes and abbreviations are expanded, spelling and punctuation are modernized, and obvious typographical errors are corrected. Other departures from F are listed below, the adopted reading first, in boldface type, followed by the Folio reading in roman. Adopted readings from Q1 are indicated by a bracketed Q. Readings from later quartos, folios, or those by editors appear unbracketed.

- I.i.42 George Thomas 54, 57 Shallow Slender 120-21 They carried . . . pocket [Q; F omits] 239 contempt content
 I.ii.12 seese cheese
 I.iii.14 lime [Q] liue 48 well [Q] will 52 legion [Q: legians] legend 60 oeillades illiads 69 cheater Cheaters 81 o' th' ith' 82 humor honor 93 Page [Q] Ford 94 Ford [Q] Page 98 Page Ford 100 mind mine
 I.iv.21 whey face [Q: whay coloured] wee-face 43 boitier vert boyteene verd
 II.i.56 praised praise 61 Hundredth Psalm hundred Psalms 133 And there's the humor of it [Q; F omits] 203 Ford Shallow 208 mynheers An-heires
 II.ii.22, 50, 302 God [Q] heauen
 II.iii.54 word [Q; F omits] 76 Page, Shallow, and Slender All
 III.i.83 urinals [Q] Vrinal 84-85 for missing your meetings and appointments [Q; F omits] 100 Give me thy hand, terrestrial; so [Q; F omits]
 III.iii.3 Robert Robin 147-48 who goes here [Q; F omits] 159 uncope uncape 185 foolish foolishion
 III.iv.12 Fenton [F omits] 57 God [Q] Heauen 62 have hath 109 s.d. Exit Exeunt
 III.v.86 By the Lord [Q] Yes 145 s.d. Exit Exeunt
 IV.i.46 hung hing 67 lunatics Lunaties
 IV.ii.20 lunes lines 54 Mrs. Page [F gives the line as part of the previous speech] 62 Mrs. Page [Q] Mist. Ford 94 direct direct direct 98 him [F omits] 175 not [F omits] 187 Jeshu [Q] yea and no
 IV.iii.1 Germans desire Germane desires 7 them [Q] him 9 house [Q] houses
 IV.iv.7 cold gold 32 makes make 42 Disguised . . . head [Q, which has "Horne" for "Herne"; F omits] 60 Mrs. Ford Ford 72 tire time
 IV.v.43 Simple Fal. 51 Tyke [Q] like 54 Thou art [Q] thou are 99-100 to say my prayers [Q; F omits]
 IV.vi.27 ever euen 39 denote deuote
 V.ii.3 daughter [F omits]
 V.iii.12 Hugh Herne
 V.v.s.d. with a buck's head upon him [Q; F omits] 2 hot-blooded hot-bloodied 38 s.d. Enter . . . of Fairies [Q] Enter Fairies 70 More Mote 90 s.d. They . . . starts [Q; F omits] 104 s.d. Here . . . rises up [Q, which gives "red" where we give "green," and "greene" where we give "white," and describes Anne as "being in white"] 198 white greene 202, 208 green white

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR

[Dramatis Personae]

SIR JOHN FALSTAFF
FENTON a young gentleman
SHALLOW a country justice
SLENDER nephew to Shallow
FORD } two citizens of Windsor
PAGE }
WILLIAM PAGE a boy, son to Page
SIR HUGH EVANS a Welsh parson
DOCTOR CAIUS a French physician
HOST of the Garter Inn

BARDOLPH }
PISTOL } followers of Falstaff
NYM }
ROBIN page to Falstaff
SIMPLE servant to Slender
RUGBY servant to Doctor Caius
MISTRESS FORD
MISTRESS PAGE
ANNE PAGE her daughter
MISTRESS QUICKLY servant to Doctor Caius
SERVANTS to Page, Ford, &c.

Scene: Windsor and the neighborhood]

A C T I

Scene I. [Before Page's house.]

Enter Justice SHALLOW, SLENDER, [and] Sir Hugh EVANS.

SHALLOW Sir° Hugh, persuade me not; I will make a Star-chamber° matter of it. If he were twenty Sir John Falstaffs, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, Esquire.

SLENDER In the county of Gloucester, Justice of Peace, and Coram.°

SHALLOW Ay, cousin Slender, and Custalorum.°

SLENDER Ay, and Ratolorum° too; and a gentleman born, Master Parson, who writes himself Armigero,° in any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation—Armigero.

The decorative border shown above is a repeated ornament which appeared on the title page of the first quarto edition of The Merry Wives of Windsor, 1602.

I.i.i Sir title used before the first name of ordinary priests 2
Star-chamber court having jurisdiction over cases of riot, forgery, and other specific offenses 5 Coram Quorum (term for justices with special legal qualifications) 6 Custalorum Custos Rotulorum (a chief justice) 7 Ratolorum Slender's garbling of rotulorum 8 Armigero esquire

SHALLOW Ay, that I do, and have done any time these three hundred years.

SLENDER All his successors gone before him hath done't; and all his ancestors that come after him may.
They may give° the dozen white luces° in their coat.° 15

SHALLOW It is an old coat.

EVANS The dozen white louses do become an old coat well. It agrees well, passant;° it is a familiar beast to man, and signifies love.

SHALLOW The luce is the fresh fish. The salt fish is an 20 old coat.°

SLENDER I may quarter,° coz?°

SHALLOW You may, by marrying.

15 give display; luces pikes (fish); coat coat of arms 18 passant walking (heraldic) 20-21 The luce . . . coat obscure line probably containing an involved play on the words salt and saltant (heraldic term for describing a leaping position for small animals or vermin), luce and louse, old coat (as a garment), coat of arms, and cod (the fish—sometimes pronounced as a homonym of coat); also, there may be a reference to the coat of arms of the Fishmongers Company, which is a composite of the arms of the older Saltfishmongers and those of the Freshfishmongers 22 quarter add arms to one's family coat; coz kinsman

EVANS It is marring indeed, if he quarter it.
 SHALLOW Not a whit. 25
 EVANS Yes, py'r Lady.^o If he has a quarter of your coat, there is but three skirts for yourself, in my simple conjectures. But that is all one. If Sir John Falstaff have committed disparagements unto you, I am of the Church, and will be glad to do my benevolence to 30 make atonements and compromises between you.
 SHALLOW The Council^o shall hear it. It is a riot.
 EVANS It is not meet the Council hear a riot. There is no fear of Got in a riot. The Council, look you, shall desire to hear the fear of Got, and not to hear a riot. 35 Take your vizaments^o in that.
 SHALLOW Ha! O' my life, if I were young again, the sword should end it.
 EVANS It is petter that friends is the sword, and end it. And there is also another device in my prain, which 40 peradventure prings goot discretions with it. There is Anne Page, which is daughter to Master George Page, which is pretty virginity.
 SLENDER Mistress Anne Page? She has brown hair, and speaks small^o like a woman? 45
 EVANS It is that fery person for all the 'orld, as just as you will desire. And seven hundred pounds of moneys, and gold and silver, is her grandsire, upon his death's-bed—Got deliver to a joyful resurrections—give, when she is able to overtake seventeen years old. It 50 were a goot motion if we leave our pribbles and prabbles,^o and desire a marriage between Master Abraham and Mistress Anne Page.
 SHALLOW Did her grandsire leave her seven hundred pound? 55
 EVANS Ay, and her father is make her a petter penny.
 SHALLOW I know the young gentlewoman. She has good gifts.
 EVANS Seven hundred pounds and possibilities^o is goot gifts. 60
 SHALLOW Well, let us see honest Master Page. Is Falstaff there?
 EVANS Shall I tell you a lie? I do despise a liar as I do despise one that is false, or as I despise one that is not true. The knight Sir John is there; and, I beseech you, 65 be ruled by your well-willers. I will peat the door for Master Page. [Knocks.] What, ho! Got pless your house here.
 PAGE [Within.] Who's there?
 EVANS Here is Got's plessing, and your friend, and 70 Justice Shallow; and here young Master Slender, that peradventures shall tell you another tale, if matters grow to your likings.
 [Enter] Master PAGE.

PAGE I am glad to see your worships well. I thank you for my venison, Master Shallow. 75
 SHALLOW Master Page, I am glad to see you. Much good do it your good heart! I wished your venison better—it was ill killed.^o How doth good Mistress

Page?—and I thank you always with my heart, la, with my heart. 80
 PAGE Sir, I thank you.
 SHALLOW Sir, I thank you; by yea and no, I do.
 PAGE I am glad to see you, good Master Slender.
 SLENDER How does your fallow^o greyhound, sir? I heard say he was outrun on Cotsall.^o 85
 PAGE It could not be judged, sir.
 SLENDER You'll not confess, you'll not confess.
 SHALLOW That he will not. 'Tis your fault,^o 'tis your fault. 'Tis a good dog.
 PAGE A cur, sir. 90
 SHALLOW Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog. Can there be more said? He is good and fair. Is Sir John Falstaff here?
 PAGE Sir, he is within. And I would I could do a good office between you. 95
 EVANS It is spoke as a Christians ought to speak.
 SHALLOW He hath wronged me, Master Page.
 PAGE Sir, he doth in some sort confess it.
 SHALLOW If it be confessed, it is not redressed. Is not that so, Master Page? He hath wronged me; indeed, he 100 hath. At a word, he hath, believe me. Robert Shallow, Esquire, saith he is wronged.
 PAGE Here comes Sir John.

[Enter Sir John] FALSTAFF, BARDOLPH, NYM, [and] PISTOL.

FALSTAFF Now, Master Shallow, you'll complain of me to the king? 105
 SHALLOW Knight, you have beaten my men, killed my deer, and broke open my lodge.
 FALSTAFF But not kissed your keeper's daughter?
 SHALLOW Tut, a pin!^o This shall be answered.
 FALSTAFF I will answer it straight. I have done all this. 110 That is now answered.
 SHALLOW The Council shall know this.
 FALSTAFF 'Twere better for you if it were known in counsel.^o You'll be laughed at.
 EVANS Pauca verba;^o Sir John, goot worts. 115
 FALSTAFF Good worts?^o Good cabbage!—Slender, I broke your head. What matter^o have you against me?
 SLENDER Marry, sir, I have matter in my head against you, and against your cony-catching^o rascals, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol. They carried me to the tavern and 120 made me drunk, and afterward picked my pocket.
 BARDOLPH [Drawing his sword.] You Banbury cheese!^o
 SLENDER Ay, it is no matter.
 PISTOL [Also draws.] How now, Mephostophilus!^o 125
 SLENDER Ay, it is no matter.
 NYM [Drawing.] Slice, I say! Pauca, pauca. Slice! That's my humor.^o

26 py'r Lady by our Lady (the use of p for b here is the first of Evans' Welsh pronunciations) 32 Council King's Council sitting as the Court of Star-chamber 36 vizaments advisements 45 small gentle 51–52 pribbles and prabbles petty bickerings 59 possibilities prospects of inheritance 78 ill killed (1) improperly killed (?) (2) possibly a reference to Falstaff's doing the killing (see I.i.106–07)

84 fallow brownish yellow 85 Cotsall the Cotswold hills in Gloucestershire (locale of the Cotswold Games and center for coursing) 88 fault misfortune 109 pin trifle 113–14 in counsel privately 115 Pauca verba few words (Latin) 116 worts (1) words (2) cabbage-like plant 117 matter dispute (but in the next line it has the senses of "brain matter" and "cause") 119 cony-catching cheating 122–23 Banbury cheese noted for its thinness, a reference to Slender's build 125 Mephostophilus devil (from Marlowe's Dr. Faustus) 128 humor temperament

SLENDER Where's Simple, my man? Can you tell, cousin?

EVANS Peace, I pray you. Now let us understand. There is three umpires in this matter, as I understand; that is, Master Page, fidelicet,^o Master Page; and there is myself, fidelicet, myself; and the three party is, lastly and finally, mine Host of the Garter.^o

PAGE We three to hear it and end it between them.

EVANS Fery goot. I will make a prief of it in my notebook, and we will afterwards 'ork upon the cause with as great discreetly as we can.

FALSTAFF Pistol!

PISTOL He hears with ears.

EVANS The tevil and his tam! What phrase is this, "He hears with ear"? Why, it is affectations.

FALSTAFF Pistol, did you pick Master Slender's purse?

SLENDER Ay, by these gloves, did he—or I would I might never come in mine own great chamber again else—of seven groats^o in mill-sixpences,^o and two Edward shovel-boards,^o that cost me two shilling and two pence apiece of Yed^o Miller, by these gloves.

FALSTAFF Is this true, Pistol?

EVANS No, it is false, if it is a pickpurse.

PISTOL

Ha, thou mountain-foreigner!^o Sir John and master mine,

I combat challenge of this latten bilbo.^o

Word of denial in thy labras^o here!

Word of denial! Froth and scum, thou liest!

SLENDER By these gloves, then 'twas he.

NYM Be avised, sir, and pass good humors. I will say "marry trap"^o with you, if you run the nuthook's humor^o on me. That is the very note of it.

SLENDER By this hat, then he in the red face had it; for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunk, yet I am not altogether an ass.

FALSTAFF What say you, Scarlet and John?^o

BARDOLPH Why, sir, for my part, I say the gentleman had drunk himself out of his five sentences.

EVANS It is his "five senses." Fie, what the ignorance is!

BARDOLPH And being fap,^o sir, was, as they say, cashiered;^o and so conclusions passed the careers.^o

SLENDER Ay, you spake in Latin then too. But 'tis no matter. I'll ne'er be drunk whilst I live again, but in honest, civil, godly company, for this trick. If I be drunk, I'll be drunk with those that have the fear of God, and not with drunken knaves.

EVANS So Got 'udge me, that is a virtuous mind.

FALSTAFF You hear all these matters denied, gentlemen; you hear it.

[Enter] ANNE PAGE [with wine], MISTRESS FORD [and] MISTRESS PAGE [following].

PAGE Nay, daughter, carry the wine in; we'll drink within.

[Exit ANNE Page.]

SLENDER O heaven! This is Mistress Anne Page.

PAGE How now, Mistress Ford!

FALSTAFF Mistress Ford, by my troth, you are very well met. By your leave, good mistress.

[Kisses her.]

PAGE Wife, bid these gentlemen welcome. Come, we have a hot venison pasty to dinner. Come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness.

[Exeunt all except SHALLOW, SLENDER, and EVANS.]

SLENDER I had rather than forty shillings I had my Book of Songs and Sonnets^o here.

[Enter] SIMPLE.

How now, Simple, where have you been? I must wait on myself, must I? You have not the Book of Riddles about you, have you?

SIMPLE Book of Riddles? Why, did you not lend it to Alice Shortcake upon Allhallowmas^o last, a fortnight afore Michaelmas?^o

SHALLOW Come, coz; come, coz; we stay for you. A word with you, coz. Marry,^o this, coz: there is as 'twere a tender,^o a kind of tender, made afar off^o by Sir Hugh here. Do you understand me?

SLENDER Ay, sir, you shall find me reasonable. If it be so, I shall do that that is reason.

SHALLOW Nay, but understand me.

SLENDER So I do, sir.

EVANS Give ear to his motions.^o Master Slender, I will description the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

SLENDER Nay, I will do as my cousin Shallow says. I pray you pardon me. He's a Justice of Peace in his country, simple though^o I stand here.

EVANS But that is not the question. The question is concerning your marriage.

SHALLOW Ay, there's the point, sir.

EVANS Marry, is it, the very point of it—to Mistress Anne Page.

SLENDER Why, if it be so, I will marry her upon any reasonable demands.

EVANS But can you affection the 'oman? Let us command to know that of your mouth, or of your lips; for divers^o philosophers hold that the lips is parcel^o of the mouth. Therefore, precisely, can you carry your goot will to the maid?

SHALLOW Cousin Abraham Slender, can you love her?

SLENDER I hope, sir, I will do as it shall become one that would do reason.

189 Book . . . Sonnets an anthology published by Tottel in 1557, commonly called Tottel's Miscellany 194 Allhallowmas All Saints' day, November 1 195 Michaelmas Saint Michael's day, September 29 197 Marry a mild oath, from "By the Virgin Mary" 198 tender offer; afar off indirectly 204 motions proposals 208 simple though as sure as 218 divers various 219 parcel part

133 fidelicet videlicet = namely 135 Garter Garter Inn 148 groats coins worth fourpence; mill-sixpences milled coins 149 Edward shovel-boards shillings from the reign of Edward VI used in the game of shovelboard (rare coins by the 1590's) 150 Yed Ed, Edward 153 mountain-foreigner Welshman 154 latten bilbo brass sword 155 labras lips 159 marry trap a term of insult 159-60 run . . . humor think to involve me with the law ("nuthook" = constable) 164 Scarlet and John Robin Hood's companions (alluding to Bardolph's red face) 169 fap drunk 170 cashiered robbed; conclusions . . . careers an obscure line possibly meaning "and that brought the matter to a speedy end" or "he got what he deserved"—from pass a careire, a term in horsemanship

EVANS Nay, Got's lords and his ladies! You must 225 speak possitable,^o if you can carry her your desires towards her.

SHALLOW That you must. Will you, upon good dowry, marry her?

SLENDER I will do a greater thing than that, upon your 230 request, cousin, in any reason.

SHALLOW Nay, conceive me,^o conceive me, sweet coz. What I do is to pleasure you, coz. Can you love the maid?

SLENDER I will marry her, sir, at your request; but if 235
there be no great love in the beginning, yet heaven may decrease it upon better acquaintance when we are married and have more occasion to know one another.
I hope upon familiarity will grow more contempt.
But if you say, "Marry her," I will marry her; that I 240 am freely dissolved, and dissolutely.

EVANS It is a fery discretion answer, save the faul'^o is in the 'ort "dissolutely." The 'ort is, according to our meaning, "resolutely." His meaning is goot.

SHALLOW Ay, I think my cousin meant well. 245

SLENDER Ay, or else I would I might be hanged, la.

[Enter ANNE Page.]

SHALLOW Here comes fair Mistress Anne.—Would I were young for your sake, Mistress Anne.

ANNE The dinner is on the table. My father desires your worships' company. 250

SHALLOW I will wait on him, fair Mistress Anne.

EVANS Od's^o plessed will! I will not be absence at the grace. [Exeunt SHALLOW and EVANS.]

ANNE Will't please your worship to come in, sir?

SLENDER No, I thank you, forsooth, heartily; I am 255 very well.

ANNE The dinner attends you, sir.

SLENDER I am not a-hungry, I thank you, forsooth.
[To SIMPLE.] Go, sirrah,^o for all you are my man, go wait upon my cousin Shallow. [Exit SIMPLE.] A 260 justice of peace sometime may be beholding to his friend for a man. I keep but three men and a boy yet, till my mother be dead. But what though? Yet I live like a poor gentleman born.

ANNE I may not go in without your worship; they 265 will not sit till you come.

SLENDER I' faith, I'll eat nothing. I thank you as much as though I did.

ANNE I pray you, sir, walk in.

SLENDER I had rather walk here, I thank you. I 270 bruised my shin th' other day with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence—three veneys^o for a dish of stewed prunes—and, by my troth, I cannot abide the smell of hot meat since. Why do your dogs bark so? Be there bears i' th' town? 275

ANNE I think there are, sir; I heard them talked of.

SLENDER I love the sport^o well, but I shall as soon quarrel at it as any man in England. You are afraid if you see the bear loose, are you not?

ANNE Ay, indeed, sir. 280

SLENDER That's meat and drink to me now. I have seen Sackerson^o loose twenty times, and have taken him by the chain; but, I warrant you, the women have so cried and shrieked at it, that it passed. But women, indeed, cannot abide 'em; they are very ill-favored 285 rough things.

[Enter PAGE.]

PAGE Come, gentle Master Slender, come. We stay
for you.

SLENDER I'll eat nothing; I thank you, sir.

PAGE By cock and pie,^o you shall not choose, sir! 290
Come, come.

SLENDER Nay, pray you, lead the way.

PAGE Come on, sir.

SLENDER Mistress Anne, yourself shall go first.

ANNE Not I, sir; pray you keep on. 295

SLENDER Truly, I will not go first; truly, la! I will not do you that wrong.

ANNE I pray you, sir.

SLENDER I'll rather be unmannerly than troublesome.
You do yourself wrong, indeed, la! Exeunt. 300

Scene II. [Before Page's house.]

Enter EVANS and SIMPLE.

EVANS Go your ways, and ask of Doctor Caius' house, which is the way; and there dwells one Mistress Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse,^o or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer. 5

SIMPLE Well, sir.

EVANS Nay, it is petter yet. Give her this letter, for it is a 'oman that altogether's acquaintance with Mistress Anne Page; and the letter is to desire and require her to solicit your master's desires to Mistress Anne Page. 10
I pray you be gone. I will make an end of my dinner;
there's pippins and seese^o to come. Exeunt.

Scene III. [Falstaff's room in the Garter Inn.]

Enter FALSTAFF, HOST, BARDOLPH, NYM, PISTOL,
[and ROBIN the] page.

FALSTAFF Mine Host of the Garter!

HOST What says my bully rook?^o Speak scholarly and wisely.

FALSTAFF Truly, mine Host, I must turn away some of my followers. 5

HOST Discard, bully Hercules, cashier. Let them wag;^o trot, trot.

FALSTAFF I sit at^o ten pounds a week.

HOST Thou'rt an emperor—Caesar, Keisar,^o and Pheazar.^o I will entertain^o Bardolph: he shall draw,^o 10
he shall tap.^o Said I well, bully Hector?

FALSTAFF Do so, good mine Host.

226 possitable positively 232 conceive me understand me
242 faul' fault 252 Od's God's 259 sirrah term of address used to inferiors 272 veneys bouts 277 the sport bearbaiting

282 Sackerson a famous bear 290 cock and pie an oath
I.ii.4 dry nurse housekeeper 12 pippins and seese apples and cheese

I.iii.2 bully rook friendly term of address used by the Host
6 wag depart 8 I sit at my expenses run 9 Keisar Kaiser
10 Pheazar vizier; entertain employ; draw draw liquor
11 tap serve as tapster

HOST I have spoke; let him follow. [To BARDOLPH.]
Let me see thee froth and lime.^o I am at a word;^o follow. [Exit.] 15

FALSTAFF Bardolph, follow him. A tapster is a good trade. An old cloak makes a new jerkin; a withered servingman, a fresh tapster. Go, adieu.

BARDOLPH It is a life that I have desired. I will thrive.

PISTOL O base Hungarian wight!^o Wilt thou the 20
spigot wield? [Exit BARDOLPH.]

NYM He was gotten^o in drink. Is not the humor conceited?^o

FALSTAFF I am glad I am so acquit^o of this tinderbox.
His thefts were too open. His filching was like an 25 unskillful singer: he kept not time.

NYM The good humor is to steal at a minute's rest.^o

PISTOL "Convey," the wise it call. "Steal"? Foh, a fico^o for the phrase!

FALSTAFF Well, sirs, I am almost out at heels.^o 30

PISTOL Why then, let kibes^o ensue.

FALSTAFF There is no remedy. I must cony-catch, I must shift.^o

PISTOL Young ravens must have food.

FALSTAFF Which of you know Ford of this town? 35

PISTOL I ken^o the wight. He is of substance good.

FALSTAFF My honest lads, I will tell you what I am about.

PISTOL Two yards, and more.

FALSTAFF No quips now, Pistol. Indeed, I am in the 40 waist two yards about. But I am now about no waste;
I am about thrift. Briefly, I do mean to make love to Ford's wife. I spy entertainment in her: she discourses, she carves,^o she gives the leer of invitation. I can construe the action of her familiar style; and the 45 hardest voice of her behavior, to be Englished rightly, is, "I am Sir John Falstaff's."

PISTOL He hath studied her well, and translated her will, out of honesty^o into English.^o

NYM The anchor is deep.^o Will that humor pass? 50

FALSTAFF Now, the report goes she has all the rule of her husband's purse. He hath a legion of angels.^o

PISTOL As many devils entertain. And "To her, boy," say I.

NYM The humor rises; it is good. Humor me the 55 angels.

FALSTAFF I have writ me here a letter to her; and here another to Page's wife, who even now gave me good eyes too, examined my parts with most judicious oeillades.^o Sometimes the beam of her view gilded my 60 foot, sometimes my portly belly.

PISTOL [Aside.] Then did the sun on dunghill shine.

NYM [Aside.] I thank thee for that humor.

FALSTAFF O, she did so course o'er my exteriors with 14 froth and lime cheat the customers by putting a big head of foam on the beer or by adulterating wine with lime; 1 . . . word I speak briefly 20 base Hungarian wight

beggary fellow 22 gotten begotten 23 conceited ingenious 24 acquit rid 27 minute's rest in the shortest possible interval
29 fico fig 30 out at heels penniless 31 kibes chilblains 33 shift devise some stratagem 36 ken know 44 carves shows courtesy 49 honesty chastity; English probably with a pun on ingle = paramour 50 The . . . deep an obscure line possibly meaning (1) it is a deeply thought-out scheme or
(2) that wine keg (i.e., Falstaff) is a deep thinker (from anker, a wine keg) 52 angels gold coins worth about ten shillings 60 oeillades amorous glances such a greedy intention that the appetite of her eye 65 did seem to scorch me up like a burning-glass. Here's another letter to her. She bears the purse too. She is a region in Guiana, all gold and bounty. I will be cheater^o to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me. They shall be my East and West Indies, and I will 70 trade to them both. [To PISTOL.] Go, bear thou this letter to Mistress Page; [to NYM] and thou this to Mistress Ford. We will thrive, lads, we will thrive.

PISTOL

Shall I Sir Pandarus^o of Troy become,
And by my side wear steel? Then Lucifer take all! 75

NYM I will run no base humor. Here, take the humor-letter. I will keep the havior of reputation.

FALSTAFF [To ROBIN.]

Hold, sirrah, bear you these letters tightly.^o
Sail like my pinnace to these golden shores.
Rogues, hence, avaunt! Vanish like hailstones, go! 80
Trudge, plod away o' th' hoof; seek shelter, pack!^o
Falstaff will learn the humor of the age:
French thrift,^o you rogues—myself and skirted page.
[Exeunt FALSTAFF and ROBIN.]

PISTOL

Let vultures gripe thy guts! For gourd and fullam^o holds,
And high and low^o beguiles the rich and poor. 85
Tester^o I'll have in pouch when thou shalt lack,
Base Phrygian Turk!^o

NYM I have operations which be humors of revenge.

PISTOL Wilt thou revenge?

NYM By welkin^o and her star! 90

PISTOL With wit or steel?

NYM

With both the humors, I.

I will discuss^o the humor of this love to Page.

PISTOL

And I to Ford shall eke unfold
How Falstaff, varlet vile, 95
His dove will prove, his gold will hold,
And his soft couch defile.

NYM My humor shall not cool. I will incense Page to deal with poison. I will possess him with yellowness,^o for the revolt of mind is dangerous. That is my true 100 humor.

PISTOL Thou art the Mars of malcontents. I second thee; troop on. Exeunt.

Scene IV. [A room in Doctor Caius' house.]

Enter Mistress QUICKLY [and] SIMPLE.

QUICKLY [Calling.] What, John Rugby! ([Enter] John RUGBY.) I pray thee, go to the casement and see if you can see my master, Master Doctor Caius, coming. If he do, i' faith, and find anybody in the house, here will 69 cheater (1) escheator, official who looked after the king's escheats (2) one who defrauds 74 Sir Pandarus the go-between in Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde, from whose name the word pander comes 78 tightly well 81 pack be off 83 French thrift an allusion to the French custom then current to use one page instead of many servingmen 84 gourd and fullam kinds of false dice 85 high and low numbers on the dice

86 Tester sixpence 87 Base Phrygian Turk term of insult 90 welkin sky 93 discuss declare 99 yellowness jealousy be an old° abusing of God's patience and the king's s English.

RUGBY I'll go watch.

QUICKLY Go, and we'll have a posset° for't soon at night, in faith, at the latter end of a sea-coal° fire. [Exit RUGBY.] An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever 10 servant shall come in house withal;° and, I warrant you, no telltale, nor no breedbate.° His worst fault is that he is given to prayer; he is something peevish° that way, but nobody but has his fault. But let that pass.—Peter Simple you say your name is? 15

SIMPLE Ay, for fault of a better.

QUICKLY And Master Slender's your master?

SIMPLE Ay, forsooth.

QUICKLY Does he not wear a great round beard like a glover's paring knife? 20

SIMPLE No, forsooth. He hath but a little whey° face, with a little yellow beard—a Cain-colored° beard.

QUICKLY A softly-sprighted° man, is he not?

SIMPLE Ay, forsooth. But he is as tall a man of his hands° as any is between this and his head. He hath 25 fought with a warrener.°

QUICKLY How say you? O, I should remember him. Does he not hold up his head, as it were, and strut in his gait?

SIMPLE Yes, indeed does he. 30

QUICKLY Well, heaven send Anne Page no worse fortune. Tell Master Parson Evans I will do what I can for your master. Anne is a good girl, and I wish—

[Enter RUGBY.]

RUGBY Out, alas! Here comes my master!

QUICKLY We shall all be shent.° Run in here, good 35 young man; go into this closet.° He will not stay long. [Shuts SIMPLE in the chamber.] What, John Rugby! John, what, John, I say! Go, John, go inquire for my master. I doubt° he be not well, that he comes not home. [Exit RUGBY.] 40

[Sings.] "And down, down, adown-a," &c.

[Enter] Doctor CAIUS.

CAIUS Vat is you sing? I do not like dese toys.° Pray you go and vetch me in my closset un boitier vert—a box, a green-a box. Do intend° vat I speak? A green-a box. 45

QUICKLY Ay, forsooth, I'll fetch it you. [Aside.] I am glad he went not in himself. If he had found the young man, he would have been horn-mad.° [Exit.]

CAIUS Fe, fe, fe, fe! Ma foi, il fait fort chaud. Je m'en vais à la cour—la grande affaire.° 50

QUICKLY [Returning with the box.] Is it this, sir?

CAIUS Oui; mette le au mon pocket; dépêche,° quickly. Vere is dat knave Rugby?

I.iv.5 old great, plenty of 8 posset hot milk curdled with ale or wine 9 sea-coal coal brought by sea 11 withal with 12 breedbate mischiefmaker 13 peevish silly 21 whey pale (the Folio gives "wee," perhaps a dialectal pronunciation) 22 Cain-colored reddish-yellow (traditional color of Cain's beard in tapestries) 23 softly-sprighted gentle-spirited 24–25 tall . . . hands valiant 26 warrener gamekeeper 35 shent scolded 36 closet private room 39 doubt fear 42 toys foolish nonsense 44 intend hear (French entendre) 48 horn-mad enraged 49–50 Ma . . . affaire Faith, it is very hot. I am going to the court—the grand affair 52 Oui . . . dépêche yes; put it in my pocket; be quick

QUICKLY What, John Rugby! John!

[Enter RUGBY.]

RUGBY Here, sir. 55

CAIUS You are John Rugby, and you are Jack Rugby. Come, take-a your rapier and come after my heel to de court.

RUGBY 'Tis ready, sir, here in the porch.

CAIUS By my trot,° I tarry too long. Od's me! Qu'ai 60 j'oublié?° Dere is some simples° in my closset dat I vill not for de varld I shall leave behind.

[Crosses to the chamber.]

QUICKLY [Aside.] Ay me, he'll find the young man there, and be mad.

CAIUS O diable, diable! Vat is in my closset? Villainy! 65 Larron!° [Pulls SIMPLE out.] Rugby, my rapier!

QUICKLY Good master, be content.

CAIUS Verefore shall I be content-a?

QUICKLY The young man is an honest man.

CAIUS Vat shall de honest man do in my closset? Dere 70 is no honest man dat shall come in my closset.

QUICKLY I beseech you, be not so phlegmatic.° Hear the truth of it. He came of an errand to me from Parson Hugh.

CAIUS Vell? 75

SIMPLE Ay, forsooth, to desire her to—

QUICKLY Peace, I pray you.

CAIUS Peace-a your tongue.—Speak-a your tale.

SIMPLE To desire this honest gentlewoman, your maid, to speak a good word to Mistress Anne Page for 80 my master in the way of marriage.

QUICKLY This is all, indeed, la! But I'll ne'er put my finger in the fire, and need not.

CAIUS Sir Hugh send-a you?—Rugby, baille° me 85 some paper. Tarry you a little-a while.

[Writes.]

QUICKLY [Aside to SIMPLE.] I am glad he is so quiet. If he had been thoroughly moved, you should have heard him so loud, and so melancholy. But notwithstanding, man, I'll do you your master what good I can; and the very yea and the no is, the French doctor, 90 my master—I may call him my master, look you, for I keep his house; and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself—

SIMPLE [Aside to QUICKLY.] 'Tis a great charge° to 95 come under one body's hand.

QUICKLY [Aside to SIMPLE.] Are you avised o' that? You shall find it a great charge. And to be up early and down late; but notwithstanding—to tell you in your ear, I would have no words of it—my master himself 100 is in love with Mistress Anne Page. But notwithstanding that, I know Anne's mind. That's neither here nor there.

CAIUS You jack'nape,° give-a dis letter to Sir Hugh. By gar, it is a shallenge. I vill cut his troat in de Park; 105 and I vill teach a scurvy jackanape priest to meddle or

60 trot troth 60–61 Qu'ai j'oublié What have I forgotten? 61 simples medicinal herbs 66 Larron thief 72 phlegmatic Quickly's error for choleric 84 baille fetch 95 charge burden 104 jack'nape coxcomb make. You may be gone; it is not good you tarry here.

[Exit SIMPLE.] By gar, I vill cut all his two stones;° by gar, he shall not have a stone to trow at his dog.

QUICKLY Alas, he speaks but for his friend. 110

CAIUS It is no matter-a ver dat. Do not you tell-a me dat I shall have Anne Page for myself? By gar, I vill kill de Jack° priest; and I have appointed mine Host of de Jarteer to measure our weapon.° By gar, I vill myself have Anne Page. 115

QUICKLY Sir, the maid loves you, and all shall be well. We must give folks leave to prate. What the good-year!°

CAIUS Rugby, come to the court vit me. [To QUICKLY.] By gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall 120 turn your head out of my door. Follow my heels, Rugby. [Exeunt CAIUS and RUGBY.]

QUICKLY [Calling after CAIUS.] You shall have An°— fool's-head of your own. No, I know Anne's mind for that. Never a woman in Windsor knows more of 125 Anne's mind than I do, nor can do more than I do with her, I thank heaven.

FENTON [Offstage.] Who's within there, ho?

QUICKLY Who's there, I trow?° Come near° the house, I pray you. 130

[Enter] FENTON.

FENTON How now, good woman. How dost thou?

QUICKLY The better that it pleases your good worship to ask.

FENTON What news? How does pretty Mistress Anne?

QUICKLY In truth, sir, and she is pretty, and honest,° 135 and gentle—and one that is your friend. I can tell you that by the way, I praise heaven for it.

FENTON Shall I do any good, think'st thou? Shall I not lose my suit?

QUICKLY Troth, sir, all is in His hands above. But 140 notwithstanding, Master Fenton, I'll be sworn on a book she loves you. Have not your worship a wart above your eye?

FENTON Yes, marry, have I. What of that?

QUICKLY Well, thereby hangs a tale. Good faith, it is 145 such another Nan;° but, I detest,° an honest maid as ever broke bread. We had an hour's talk of that wart.
I shall never laugh but in that maid's company. But, indeed, she is given too much to allicholy° and musing.
But for you—well, go to. 150

FENTON Well, I shall see her today. Hold, there's money for thee; let me have thy voice in my behalf.
If thou see'st her before me, commend me—

QUICKLY Will I? I' faith, that we will. And I will tell your worship more of the wart the next time we have 155 confidence, and of other wooers.

FENTON Well, farewell. I am in great haste now.

QUICKLY Farewell to your worship. [Exit FENTON.]
Truly, an honest gentleman. But Anne loves him not, for I know Anne's mind as well as another does. Out 160 upon't, what have I forgot? Exit.

ACT II

Scene I. [Before Page's house.]

Enter MISTRESS PAGE [with a letter].

MRS. PAGE What, have 'scaped love letters in the holiday time° of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Let me see.

[Reads.]

"Ask me no reason why I love you, for though Love use Reason for his precisian,° he admits him not for 5 his counselor. You are not young, no more am I. Go to then, there's sympathy. You are merry, so am I.
Ha, ha, then there's more sympathy. You love sack,° and so do I. Would you desire better sympathy? Let it suffice thee, Mistress Page—at the least, if the love 10 of soldier can suffice—that I love thee. I will not say, pity me—'tis not a soldierlike phrase; but I say, love me. By me,

Thine own true knight,
By day or night,
Or any kind of light,
With all his might
For thee to fight,

15

John Falstaff."

What a Herod of Jewry° is this! O wicked, wicked 20 world. One that is well-nigh worn to pieces with age to show himself a young gallant! What an unweighed° behavior hath this Flemish drunkard° picked—with the devil's name!—out of my conversation° that he dares in this manner assay me? Why, he hath not been 25 thrice in my company. What should I say to him? I was then frugal of my mirth—heaven forgive me!
Why, I'll exhibit° a bill in the parliament for the putting down° of men. How shall I be revenged on him? For revenged I will be, as sure as his guts are made 30 of puddings.°

[Enter] MISTRESS FORD.

MRS. FORD Mistress Page! Trust me, I was going to your house.

MRS. PAGE And, trust me, I was coming to you. You look very ill. 35

MRS. FORD Nay, I'll ne'er believe that. I have to show to the contrary.

MRS. PAGE Faith, but you do, in my mind.

MRS. FORD Well, I do then; yet I say I could show you to the contrary. O Mistress Page, give me some 40 counsel.

MRS. PAGE What's the matter, woman?

MRS. FORD O woman, if it were not for one trifling respect, I could come to such honor.

MRS. PAGE Hang the trifle, woman; take the honor. 45
What is it? Dispense with trifles. What is it?

MRS. FORD If I would but go to hell for an eternal moment or so, I could be knighted.

108 stones testicles 113 Jack term of contempt 114 measure our weapon umpire the duel 118 good-year a meaningless expletive 123 An (1) Anne (2) an 129 trow wonder; Come near enter 135 honest chaste 146 such another Nan i.e., charming female; detest Quickly's error for protest 149
allicholy melancholy

II.i.1-2 in . . . time i.e., in my youth 5 precisian inflexible spiritual adviser 8 sack Spanish white wine 20 Herod of Jewry portrayed as a ranting villain in the miracle plays 22 unweighed inconsiderate 23 Flemish drunkard the Flemish were notorious for heavy drinking 24 conversation behavior 28 exhibit submit 29 putting down suppressing 31 puddings sausages

MRS. PAGE What? Thou liest. Sir Alice Ford? These knights will hack;° and so thou shouldst not alter the 50 article of thy gentry.°

MRS. FORD We burn daylight.° [Giving her a letter.] Here, read, read! Perceive how I might be knighted. I shall think the worse of fat men as long as I have an eye to make difference of° men's liking.° And yet 55 he would not swear; praised women's modesty; and gave such orderly and well-behaved reproof to all uncomeliness° that I would have sworn his disposition would have gone to the truth of his words.° But they do no more adhere and keep place together than the 60 Hundredth Psalm to the tune of "Greensleeves."° What tempest, I trow, threw this whale, with so many tuns of oil in his belly, ashore at Windsor? How shall I be revenged on him? I think the best way were to entertain him with hope till the wicked fire of lust 65 have melted him in his own grease. Did you ever hear the like?

MRS. PAGE [Comparing the two letters.] Letter for letter, but that the name of Page and Ford differs.—To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions,° 70 here's the twin brother of thy letter. But let thine inherit first, for I protest mine never shall. I warrant he hath a thousand of these letters, writ with blank space for different names—sure, more—and these are of the second edition. He will print them, out of 75 doubt; for he cares not what he puts into the press, when he would put us two. I had rather be a giantess and lie under Mount Pelion.° Well, I will find you twenty lascivious turtles° ere one chaste man.

[Gives both letters to MISTRESS FORD.]

MRS. FORD Why, this is the very same: the very 80 hand, the very words. What doth he think of us?

MRS. PAGE Nay, I know not. It makes me almost ready to wrangle with mine own honesty.° I'll entertain myself like one that I am not acquainted withal; for sure, unless he know some strain in me that I know 85 not myself, he would never have boarded° me in this fury.

MRS. FORD "Boarding" call you it? I'll be sure to keep him above deck.

MRS. PAGE So will I. If he come under my hatches, 90 I'll never to sea again. Let's be revenged on him. Let's appoint him a meeting, give him a show of comfort in his suit, and lead him on with a fine-baited° delay till he hath pawned his horses to mine Host of the Garter. 95

MRS. FORD Nay, I will consent to act any villainy against him that may not sully the chariness° of our honesty. O that my husband saw this letter! It would give eternal food to his jealousy.

MRS. PAGE Why, look where he comes, and my 100 goodman° too. He's as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause. And that, I hope, is an unmeasurable distance.

MRS. FORD You are the happier woman.

MRS. PAGE Let's consult together against this greasy 105 knight. Come hither. [They retire.]

[Enter] Master PAGE, [with] NYM, [and] Master FORD, [with] PISTOL.

FORD Well, I hope it be not so.

PISTOL

Hope is a curtal° dog in some affairs.

Sir John affects° thy wife.

FORD Why, sir, my wife is not young. 110

PISTOL

He woos both high and low, both rich and poor,

Both young and old, one with another, Ford.

He loves the gallimaufry.° Ford, perpend.°

FORD Love my wife?

PISTOL

With liver° burning hot. Prevent, or go thou, 115

Like Sir Actaeon° he, with Ringwood° at thy heels.

O, odious is the name!°

FORD What name, sir?

PISTOL

The horn, I say. Farewell.

Take heed, have open eye, for thieves do foot by night. 120

Take heed, ere summer comes or cuckoo birds° do sing.

Away, Sir Corporal Nym!

Believe it, Page; he speaks sense. [Exit.]

FORD [Aside.] I will be patient; I will find out this.

NYM [To PAGE.] And this is true; I like not the humor 125 of lying. He hath wronged me in some humors. I should have borne the humored letter to her, but I have a sword and it shall bite upon my necessity. He loves your wife. There's the short and the long. My name is Corporal Nym; I speak, and I avouch 'tis 130 true. My name is Nym, and Falstaff loves your wife. Adieu. I love not the humor of bread and cheese.° And there's the humor of it. Adieu. [Exit.]

PAGE "The humor of it," quoth 'a? Here's a fellow 135 frights English out of his wits.

FORD I will seek out Falstaff.

PAGE I never heard such a drawling, affecting° rogue.

FORD If I do find it—well.

PAGE I will not believe such a Cataian,° though the 140 priest o' th' town commended him for a true man.

FORD 'Twas a good sensible fellow—well.

50 hack meaning not clear in this context; a double entendre on giving indiscriminate blows with a sword is possible
51 article . . . gentry character of your rank 52 burn daylight waste time 55 make difference of discriminate between; liking looks 58 uncomeliness improper behavior 58–59 his disposition . . . words i.e., appearances are deceiving 61 Greensleeves popular love ballad 70 ill opinions sullied reputations 78 Mount Pelion mountain in Thessaly noted in mythology for the attempt of the giants to reach heaven by piling Mount Ossa on Pelion 79 turtles turtledoves (noted for their fidelity to their mates) 83 honesty chastity 86 boarded made advances to 93–94 fine-baited subtly alluring 97 chariness scrupulous integrity

101 goodman husband 108 curtal with a docked tail 109 affects loves 113 gallimaufry medley; perpend consider 115 liver supposed seat of love 116 Sir Actaeon accidentally coming upon Diana bathing, Actaeon was turned into a stag for punishment and then killed by his own hounds; Ringwood common Elizabethan name for a hound 117 odious . . . name allusion to Actaeon as a horned beast, i.e., a cuckold 121 cuckoo birds allusion to cuckoldom from the cuckoo's habit of laying its eggs in the nests of other birds 132 bread and cheese possible allusion to the cuckoo-bread flower, i.e., feeding cuckoldry 137 affecting affected 139 Cataian Cathaian (i.e., Chinese; not considered trustworthy by the Elizabethans)

[MISTRESS PAGE and MISTRESS FORD come forward.]

PAGE How now, Meg.

MRS. PAGE Whither go you, George? Hark you.

[They speak aside.]

MRS. FORD How now, sweet Frank. Why art thou melancholy?

FORD I melancholy? I am not melancholy. Get you home, go.

MRS. FORD Faith, thou hast some crotchets^o in thy head now. Will you go, Mistress Page?

MRS. PAGE Have with you.^o—You'll come to dinner, George?

[Enter] Mistress QUICKLY.

[Aside to MISTRESS FORD.] Look who comes yonder. She shall be our messenger to this paltry knight.

MRS. FORD [Aside to MISTRESS PAGE.] Trust me, I thought on her. She'll fit it.

MRS. PAGE You are come to see my daughter Anne?

QUICKLY Ay, forsooth; and, I pray, how does good Mistress Anne?

MRS. PAGE Go in with us and see. We have an hour's talk with you.

[Exeunt MISTRESS PAGE, MISTRESS FORD, and Mistress QUICKLY.]

PAGE How now, Master Ford.

FORD You heard what this knave told me, did you not?

PAGE Yes, and you heard what the other told me?

FORD Do you think there is truth in them?

PAGE Hang 'em, slaves! I do not think the knight would offer^o it. But these that accuse him in his intent towards our wives are a yoke^o of his discarded men—very rogues, now they be out of service.

FORD Were they his men?

PAGE Marry were they.

FORD I like it never the better for that. Does he lie at the Garter?

PAGE Ay, marry does he. If he should intend this voyage toward my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head.^o

FORD I do not misdoubt my wife, but I would be loath to turn them together. A man may be too confident. I would have nothing lie on my head. I cannot be thus satisfied.

[Enter] HOST.

PAGE Look where my ranting Host of the Garter comes. There is either liquor in his pate or money in his purse when he looks so merrily.—How now, mine Host.

HOST How now, bully rook, thou'rt a gentleman. [Calling behind him.] Cavaliero^o Justice, I say!

[Enter] SHALLOW.

SHALLOW I follow, mine Host, I follow. Good even and twenty,^o good Master Page. Master Page, will you go with us? We have sport in hand.

HOST Tell him, Cavaliero Justice; tell him, bully rook.

SHALLOW Sir, there is a fray to be fought between Sir Hugh the Welsh priest and Caius the French doctor.

FORD Good mine Host o' th' Garter, a word with you.

[Draws him aside.]

HOST What sayest thou, my bully rook?

SHALLOW [To PAGE.] Will you go with us to behold it? My merry Host hath had the measuring of their weapons, and, I think, hath appointed them contrary^o places; for, believe me, I hear the parson is no jester. Hark, I will tell you what our sport shall be.

[They converse apart.]

HOST Hast thou no suit against my knight, my Guest-Cavaliero?

FORD None, I protest. But I'll give you a pottle^o of burnt^o sack to give me recourse to him and tell him my name is Brooke—only for a jest.

HOST My hand, bully. Thou shalt have egress and regress—said I well?—and thy name shall be Brooke. It is a merry knight. Will you go, mynheers?^o

SHALLOW Have with you, mine Host.

PAGE I have heard the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier.

SHALLOW Tut, sir, I could have told you more. In these times you stand on distance,^o your passes,^o stoccadoes,^o and I know not what. 'Tis the heart, Master Page; 'tis here, 'tis here. I have seen the time with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats.

HOST Here, boys, here, here! Shall we wag?^o

PAGE Have with you. I had rather hear them scold than fight. Exeunt [HOST, SHALLOW, and PAGE].

FORD Though Page be a secure fool and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. She was in his company at Page's house, and what they made there, I know not. Well, I will look further into't; and I have a disguise to sound Falstaff. If I find her honest, I lose not my labor. If she be otherwise, 'tis labor well bestowed. [Exit.]

Scene II. [Falstaff's room in the Garter Inn.]

Enter FALSTAFF [and] PISTOL.

FALSTAFF I will not lend thee a penny.

PISTOL

Why, then the world's mine oyster,

Which I with sword will open.

FALSTAFF Not a penny. I have been content, sir, you should lay my countenance^o to pawn. I have grated upon^o my good friends for three reprieves for you

188–89 Good . . . twenty good evening twenty times over (there is an error in time here, for it is morning) 198 contrary different 203 pottle two-quart tankard 204 burnt heated 208 mynheers gentlemen 213 distance space between fencers; passes lunges 214 stoccadoes thrusts 218 wag go

II.ii.5 countenance reputation 5–6 grated upon pestered

148 crotchets peculiar notions 150 Have with you I'll go along with you 167 offer try 168 yoke pair 177 let . . . head (1) it's my responsibility (2) I would be cuckolded 187 Cavaliero Spanish title for a gentleman trained in arms and your coach-fellow Nym; or else you had looked through the grate, like a geminy° of baboons. I am damned in hell for swearing to gentlemen my friends you were good soldiers and tall fellows. And when 10 Mistress Bridget lost the handle of her fan,° I took't° upon mine honor thou hadst it not.

PISTOL

Didst not thou share? Hadst thou not fifteen pence?

FALSTAFF Reason, you rogue, reason. Think'st thou I'll endanger my soul gratis? At a word, hang no more 15 about me; I am no gibbet for you. Go! A short knife° and a throng!° To your manor of Pickt-hatch,° go! You'll not bear a letter for me, you rogue? You stand upon your honor! Why, thou unconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep the terms of 20 my honor precise. I, I, I myself sometimes, leaving the fear of God on the left hand and hiding mine honor in my necessity, am fain to shuffle,° to hedge,° and to lurch;° and yet you, rogue, will ensconce your rags, your cat-a-mountain° looks, your red-lattice° 25 phrases, and your bold-beating° oaths, under the shelter of your honor! You will not do it? You!

PISTOL

I do relent. What would thou more of man?

[Enter] ROBIN.

ROBIN Sir, here's a woman would speak with you.

FALSTAFF Let her approach. 30

[Enter Mistress] QUICKLY.

QUICKLY Give your worship good morrow.

FALSTAFF Good morrow, good wife.

QUICKLY Not so, and't please your worship.

FALSTAFF Good maid then.

QUICKLY I'll be sworn, as my mother was the first 35 hour I was born.

FALSTAFF I do believe the swearer. What with me?

QUICKLY Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two?

FALSTAFF Two thousand, fair woman, and I'll vouch- 40 safe thee the hearing.

QUICKLY There is one Mistress Ford—[glancing at PISTOL and ROBIN] sir, I pray, come a little nearer this ways. I myself dwell with Master Doctor Caius.

FALSTAFF Well, on; Mistress Ford, you say— 45

QUICKLY Your worship says very true. I pray your worship, come a little nearer this ways.

FALSTAFF I warrant thee, nobody hears. Mine own people, mine own people.

QUICKLY Are they so? God bless them and make 50 them His servants!

FALSTAFF Well, Mistress Ford, what of her?

QUICKLY Why, sir, she's a good creature. Lord, Lord, your worship's a wanton! Well, heaven forgive you, and all of us, I pray— 55

FALSTAFF Mistress Ford—come, Mistress Ford.

QUICKLY Marry, this is the short and the long of it.

You have brought her into such a canaries° as 'tis wonderful. The best courtier of them all, when the court lay at Windsor, could never have brought her 60 to such a canary. Yet there has been knights, and lords, and gentlemen, with their coaches. I warrant you, coach after coach, letter after letter, gift after gift; smelling so sweetly—all musk—and so rush- 65 ling,° I warrant you, in silk and gold; and in such alligant° terms, and in such wine and sugar of the best and the fairest that would have won any woman's heart; and I warrant you, they could never get an eye-wink of her. I had myself twenty angels given me this morning; but I defy all angels—in any such 70 sort, as they say—but in the way of honesty; and I warrant you, they could never get her so much as sip on a cup with the proudest of them all; and yet there has been earls—nay, which is more, pensioners;° but, I warrant you, all is one with her. 75

FALSTAFF But what says she to me? Be brief, my good she-Mercury.°

QUICKLY Marry, she hath received your letter; for the which she thanks you a thousand times; and she gives you to notify that her husband will be absence from 80 his house between ten and eleven.

FALSTAFF Ten and eleven.

QUICKLY Ay, forsooth; and then you may come and see the picture, she says, that you wot° of. Master Ford, her husband, will be from home. Alas, the sweet 85 woman leads an ill life with him; he's a very jealousy man; she leads a very frampold° life with him, good heart.

FALSTAFF Ten and eleven.—Woman, commend me to her; I will not fail her. 90

QUICKLY Why, you say well. But I have another messenger to your worship. Mistress Page hath her hearty commendations to you too; and let me tell you in your ear, she's as fartuous° a civil modest wife, and one, I tell you, that will not miss you morning nor 95 evening prayer, as any is in Windsor, whoe'er be the other. And she bade me tell your worship that her husband is seldom from home, but she hopes there will come a time. I never knew a woman so dote upon a man. Surely I think you have charms, la; yes, in truth. 100

FALSTAFF Not I, I assure thee. Setting the attraction of my good parts° aside, I have no other charms.

QUICKLY Blessing on your heart for't!

FALSTAFF But, I pray thee, tell me this: has Ford's wife and Page's wife acquainted each other how they love 105 me?

QUICKLY That were a jest indeed! They have not so little grace, I hope; that were a trick indeed! But Mistress Page would desire you to send her your little page, of all loves;° her husband has a marvelous 110 infection° to the little page; and truly, Master Page is an honest man. Never a wife in Windsor leads a better life than she does. Do what she will, say what she will,

8 geminy pair 11 handle . . . fan often made of gold or silver; took't swore 16 short knife for cutting purses 17 throng crowd of victims; Pickt-hatch a notorious district of London 23 shuffle act underhandedly; hedge cheat 24 lurch pilfer 25 cat-a-mountain wildcat; red-lattice i.e., alehouse 26 bold-beating blustering

58 canaries quandaries (?) mentally intoxicated, as with canary wine (?) 64-65 rushling rustling 66 alligant elegant (?) eloquent (?) 74 pensioners members of the royal body-guard 77 she-Mercury messenger 84 wot know 87 frampold disagreeable 94 fartuous virtuous 102 parts talents 110 of all loves for love's sake 111 infection affection take all, pay all, go to bed when she list,^o rise when she list, all is as she will. And, truly, she deserves it; for if 115 there be a kind woman in Windsor, she is one. You must send her your page; no remedy.

FALSTAFF Why, I will.

QUICKLY Nay, but do so then; and look you, he may come and go between you both; and in any case have 120 a nay-word,^o that you may know one another's mind, and the boy never need to understand anything; for 'tis not good that children should know any wickedness. Old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world. 125

FALSTAFF Fare thee well, commend me to them both. There's my purse; I am yet thy debtor.—Boy, go along with this woman. [Exeunt Mistress QUICKLY and ROBIN.] This news distracts me.

PISTOL [Aside.]

This punk^o is one of Cupid's carriers.^o 130

Clap on more sails; pursue; up with your fights;^o

Give fire! She is my prize, or ocean whelm them all!

[Exit.]

FALSTAFF Sayest thou so, old Jack? Go thy ways; I'll make more of thy old body than I have done. Will they yet look after thee? Wilt thou, after the expense 135 of so much money, be now a gainer? Good body, I thank thee. Let them say 'tis grossly done; so it be fairly done, no matter.

[Enter] BARDOLPH.

BARDOLPH Sir John, there's one Master Brooke below would fain speak with you, and be acquainted with 140 you; and hath sent your worship a morning's draught of sack.

FALSTAFF Brooke is his name?

BARDOLPH Ay, sir.

FALSTAFF Call him in. [Exit BARDOLPH.] Such 145

Brookes are welcome to me, that o'erflows such liquor.

Aha! Mistress Ford and Mistress Page, have I encompassed^o you? Go to; via!^o

[Enter BARDOLPH, with] FORD [disguised].

FORD Bless you, sir.

FALSTAFF And you, sir; would you speak with me? 150

FORD I make bold to press with so little preparation upon you.

FALSTAFF You're welcome. What's your will?—

Give us leave, drawer. [Exit BARDOLPH.]

FORD Sir, I am a gentleman that have spent much. My 155 name is Brooke.

FALSTAFF Good Master Brooke, I desire more acquaintance of you.

FORD Good Sir John, I sue for yours, not to charge^o you; for I must let you understand I think myself in 160 better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something embold'ned me to this unseasoned^o intrusion; for they say if money go before, all ways do lie open.

FALSTAFF Money is a good soldier, sir, and will on. 165

FORD Troth, and I have a bag of money here troubles me. If you will help to bear it, Sir John, take all, or half, for easing me of the carriage.

FALSTAFF Sir, I know not how I may deserve to be your porter. 170

FORD I will tell you, sir, if you will give me the hearing.

FALSTAFF Speak, good Master Brooke. I shall be glad to be your servant.

FORD Sir, I hear you are a scholar—I will be brief with 175 you—and you have been a man long known to me, though I had never so good means as desire to make myself acquainted with you. I shall discover^o a thing to you wherein I must very much lay open mine own imperfection; but, good Sir John, as you have one eye 180 upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the register of your own, that I may pass with a reproof the easier, sith^o you yourself know how easy it is to be such an offender.

FALSTAFF Very well, sir. Proceed. 185

FORD There is a gentlewoman in this town, her husband's name is Ford.

FALSTAFF Well, sir.

FORD I have long loved her, and, I protest to you, bestowed much on her, followed her with a doting 190 observance, engrossed opportunities^o to meet her, fee'd^o every slight occasion that could but niggardly give me sight of her, not only bought many presents to give her but have given largely to many to know what she would have given. Briefly, I have pursued 195 her as love hath pursued me, which hath been on the wing of all occasions. But whatsoever I have merited—either in my mind or in my means—meed,^o I am sure, I have received none, unless experience be a jewel. That I have purchased at an infinite rate, and 200 that hath taught me to say this,

“Love like a shadow flies when substance love pursues; Pursuing that that flies, and flying what pursues.”

FALSTAFF Have you received no promise of satisfaction at her hands? 205

FORD Never.

FALSTAFF Have you importuned her to such a purpose?

FORD Never.

FALSTAFF Of what quality was your love then? 210

FORD Like a fair house built on another man's ground, so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it.

FALSTAFF To what purpose have you unfolded this to me? 215

FORD When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some say that though she appear honest to me, yet in other places she enlargeth her mirth so far that there is shrewd construction made of her.^o Now, Sir John, here is the heart of my purpose: you are a gentleman 220 of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance,^o authentic^o in your place and person,

114 list pleases 121 nay-word password 130 punk strumpet; carriers messengers 131 fights screens to conceal and protect crews in naval engagements 147–48 encompassed outwitted 148 via go on 159 charge cause expense to 162 unseasoned unseasonable

178 discover reveal 183 sith since 191 engrossed opportunities manufactured as many opportunities as possible 192 fee'd employed 198 meed reward 218–19 she . . . of her she is so free in her merriment that she has a bad reputation 221–22 great admittance high social prestige 222 authentic duly qualified generally allowed^o for your many warlike, courtlike, and learned preparations.^o

FALSTAFF O sir!

FORD Believe it, for you know it. There is money. Spend it, spend it; spend more; spend all I have. Only give me so much of your time in exchange of it as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife. Use your art of wooing; win her to consent to you. If any man may, you may as soon as any.

FALSTAFF Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affection that I should win what you would enjoy? Methinks you prescribe to yourself very preposterously.

FORD O, understand my drift. She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honor that the folly of my soul dares not present itself. She is too bright to be looked against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand, my desires had instance^o and argument to commend themselves. I could drive her then from the ward^o of her purity, her reputation, her marriage vow, and a thousand other her defenses, which now are too too strongly embattled against me. What say you to't, Sir John?

FALSTAFF Master Brooke, I will first make bold with your money; next, give me your hand; and last, as I am a gentleman, you shall, if you will, enjoy Ford's wife.

FORD O good sir!

FALSTAFF I say you shall.

FORD Want no money, Sir John; you shall want none.

FALSTAFF Want no Mistress Ford, Master Brooke; you shall want none. I shall be with her, I may tell you, by her own appointment. Even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me. I say I shall be with her between ten and eleven, for at that time the jealous rascally knave her husband will be forth. Come you to me at night; you shall know how I speed.^o

FORD I am blest in your acquaintance. Do you know Ford, sir?

FALSTAFF Hang him, poor cuckoldly knave! I know him not. Yet I wrong him to call him poor. They say the jealous wittolly^o knave hath masses of money, for the which his wife seems to me well-favored.^o I will use her as the key of the cuckoldly rogue's coffer, and there's my harvest-home.^o

FORD I would you knew Ford, sir, that you might avoid him if you saw him.

FALSTAFF Hang him, mechanical^o salt-butter^o rogue! I will stare him out of his wits. I will awe him with my cudgel; it shall hang like a meteor o'er the cuckold's horns. Master Brooke, thou shalt know I will pre-dominate over the peasant, and thou shalt lie with his wife. Come to me soon at night. Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his style.^o Thou, Master Brooke, shalt know him for knave and cuckold. Come to me soon at night. [Exit.]

FORD What a damned Epicurean^o rascal is this! My heart is ready to crack with impatience. Who says this is improvident jealousy? My wife hath sent to him, the hour is fixed, the match is made. Would any man have thought this? See the hell of having a false woman! My bed shall be abused, my coffers ransacked, my reputation gnawn at; and I shall not only receive this villainous wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable terms,^o and by him that does me this wrong. Terms! Names! Amaimon sounds well; Lucifer, well; Barbason,^o well; yet they are devils' additions,^o the names of fiends. But Cuckold! Wittol!^o—Cuckold! The devil himself hath not such a name. Page is an ass, a secure^o ass. He will trust his wife; he will not be jealous. I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, Parson Hugh the Welshman with my cheese, an Irishman with my aqua vitae^o bottle, or a thief to walk my ambling gelding, than my wife with herself. Then she plots, then she ruminates, then she devises. And what they think in their hearts they may effect, they will break their hearts but they will effect. God be praised for my jealousy. Eleven o'clock the hour. I will prevent this, detect my wife, be revenged on Falstaff, and laugh at Page. I will about it; better three hours too soon than a minute too late. Fie, fie, fie! Cuckold! Cuckold! Cuckold! Exit.

Scene III. [A field near Windsor.]

Enter [Doctor] CAIUS [and] RUGBY.

CAIUS Jack Rugby!

RUGBY Sir?

CAIUS Vat is de clock, Jack?

RUGBY 'Tis past the hour, sir, that Sir Hugh promised to meet.

CAIUS By gar, he has save his soul dat he is no come. He has pray his Pible vell dat he is no come. By gar, Jack Rugby, he is dead already if he be come.

RUGBY He is wise, sir. He knew your worship would kill him if he came.

CAIUS By gar, de herring is no dead so as I vill kill him. Take your rapier, Jack. I vill tell you how I vill kill him.

RUGBY Alas, sir, I cannot fence.

CAIUS Villainy, take your rapier.

RUGBY Forbear; here's company.

[Enter] PAGE, SHALLOW, SLENDER, [and] HOST.

HOST Bless thee, bully doctor.

SHALLOW Save you, Master Doctor Caius.

PAGE Now, good Master Doctor.

SLENDER Give you good morrow, sir.

281 Epicurean sensual 288-89 stand . . . terms submit to being called horrible names 290-91 Amaimon . . . Lucifer . . . Barbason names of devils 292 additions titles 293 Wittol contented cuckold 294 secure confident 298 aqua vitae spirits (brandy, whiskey, etc.)

223 allowed approved 224 preparations accomplishments 240 instance evidence 242 ward defense 261 speed succeed 266 wittolly cuckoldly 267 well-favored (1) well chosen (2) good-looking 269 harvest-home reaped profits 272 mechanical low, vulgar; salt-butter (1) possible derogatory allusion to Ford as a merchant (2) ill-smelling 278 aggravate his style add to his title

CAIUS Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?
 HOST To see thee fight, to see thee foin,^o to see thee traverse;^o to see thee here, to see thee there; to see thee pass thy punto, thy stock, thy reverse, thy distance, thy montant.^o Is he dead, my Ethiopian?^o Is he 25 dead, my Francisco?^o Ha, bully? What says my Aesculapius?^o My Galen?^o My heart of elder?^o Ha, is he dead, bully stale?^o Is he dead?
 CAIUS By gar, he is de coward Jack-priest of de worlde.
 He is not show his face. 30
 HOST Thou art a Castilian King-Urinal!^o Hector of Greece,^o my boy!
 CAIUS I pray you bear vitness dat me have stay six or seven, two, tree hours for him, and he is no come.
 SHALLOW He is the wiser man, Master Doctor. He is 35 a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies. If you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Is it not true, Master Page?
 PAGE Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace. 40
 SHALLOW Bodykins,^o Master Page, though I now be old and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one.^o Though we are justices and doctors and churchmen, Master Page, we have some salt^o of our youth in us. We are the sons of women, 45
 Master Page.
 PAGE 'Tis true, Master Shallow.
 SHALLOW It will be found so, Master Page. Master Doctor Caius, I am come to fetch you home. I am sworn of the peace. You have showed yourself a wise 50 physician, and Sir Hugh hath shown himself a wise and patient churchman. You must go with me, Master Doctor.
 HOST Pardon, Guest-Justice.—A word, Monsieur
 Mock-water.^o 55
 CAIUS Mock-vater? Vat is dat?
 HOST Mock-water, in our English tongue, is valor, bully.
 CAIUS By gar, den, I have as much mock-vater as de Englishman.—Scurvy jack-dog priest! By gar, me 60 vill cut his ears.
 HOST He will clapperclaw^o thee tightly, bully.
 CAIUS Clapper-de-claw? Vat is dat?
 HOST That is, he will make thee amends.
 CAIUS By gar, me do look he shall clapper-de-claw 65 me; for, by gar, me vill have it.
 HOST And I will provoke him to't, or let him wag.
 CAIUS Me tank you for dat.
 HOST And moreover, bully—But first, Master Guest,

II.iii.22 foin thrust 23 traverse move back and forth 24–25 pass . . . montant in fencing: “punto” = to strike a blow with the point of the sword; “stock” = thrust; “reverse” = backhand stroke; “distance” = keeping the proper space between combatants; “montant” = upward thrust 25 Ethio- pian dark-bearded or dark-complexioned person 26 Francis- co Frenchman 27 Aesculapius god of medicine; Galen Greek physician; heart of elder having a soft pith, coward 28 stale slang term for a physician, from diagnosing through urine analysis 31 Castilian King-Urinal king of doctors (derogatory allusion to Philip II of Spain) 31–32 Hector of Greece brave warrior 41 Bodykins God's little body (an oath) 43 make one join in 45 salt liveliness 55 Mock- water i.e., physician (precise meaning unclear; possible corruption of muck-water or make-water, with an allusion to urine analysis) 62 clapperclaw thrash and Master Page, and eke Cavaliero Slender [aside to 70 them] go you through the town to Frogmore.^o

 PAGE Sir Hugh is there, is he?
 HOST He is there. See what humor he is in. And I will bring the doctor about by the fields. Will it do well?
 SHALLOW We will do it. 75
 PAGE, SHALLOW, and SLENDER Adieu, good Master
 Doctor. [Exeunt PAGE, SHALLOW, and SLENDER.]
 CAIUS By gar, me vill kill de priest, for he speak for a jackanape to Anne Page.
 HOST Let him die. Sheathe thy impatience; throw cold 80 water on thy choler. Go about the fields with me through Frogmore. I will bring thee where Mistress Anne Page is, at a farmhouse a-feasting; and thou shalt woo her. Cried game;^o said I well?
 CAIUS By gar, me dank you vor dat. By gar, I love 85 you; and I shall procure-a you de good guest: de earl,
 de knight, de lords, de gentlemen, my patients.
 HOST For the which I will be thy adversary toward Anne Page. Said I well?
 CAIUS By gar, 'tis good; vell said. 90
 HOST Let us wag then.
 CAIUS Come at my heels, Jack Rugby. Exeunt.

ACT III

Scene I. [A field near Frogmore.]

Enter EVANS [and] SIMPLE. [EVANS is in doublet and hose and carries a sword. SIMPLE carries Evans' gown and a book.]
 EVANS I pray you now, good Master Slender's servingman, and friend Simple by your name, which way have you looked for Master Caius, that calls himself Doctor of Physic?
 SIMPLE Marry, sir, the pittie-ward,^o the park-ward,^o 5 every way; Old Windsor^o way, and every way but the town way.
 EVANS I most feheemently desire you, you will also look that way.
 SIMPLE I will, sir. [Exit.] 10
 EVANS Pless my soul, how full of cholers^o I am, and tremping of mind. I shall be glad if he have deceived me.—How melancholies I am.—I will knog his urinals^o about his knave's costard^o when I have goot opportunities for the 'ork. Pless my soul! [Sings.] 15
 To shallow rivers, to whose falls
 Melodious birds sings madrigals;
 There will we make our peds of roses,
 And a thousand fragrant posies.^o
 To shallow— 20

71 Frogmore village southeast of Windsor; Caius had been waiting on the north side of the town 84 Cried game a puzzling expression, possibly from Elizabethan sporting slang, conjecturally meaning the game is under way III.i.5 the pittie-ward toward Windsor Little Park; the park-ward toward Windsor Great Park 6 Old Windsor a village south of Frogmore 11 cholers choler, anger 13–14
knog his urinals smash his equipment for analyzing a patient's urine 14 costard head (literally, a type of large apple)
16–19 To shallow . . . posies garbled lines from Marlowe's
 “The Passionate Shepherd to His Love”

Mercy on me, I have a great dispositions to cry.
[Sings.]

Melodious birds sing madrigals—
When as I sat in Pabylon°—
And a thousand vagram° posies.
To shallow, &c.

25

[Enter SIMPLE.]

SIMPLE Yonder he is coming, this way, Sir Hugh.

EVANS He's welcome. [Sings.]

To shallow rivers, to whose falls—

Heaven prosper the right! What weapons is he?

SIMPLE No weapons, sir. There comes my master, 30
Master Shallow, and another gentleman, from Frog-more, over the stile, this way.

EVANS Pray you, give me my gown—or else keep it in your arms.

[Takes the book and reads.]

[Enter] PAGE, SHALLOW, [and] SLENDER.

SHALLOW How now, Master Parson. Good morrow, 35 good Sir Hugh. Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.

SLENDER [Aside.] Ah, sweet Anne Page!

PAGE Save you, good Sir Hugh.

EVANS Pless you from His mercy sake, all of you. 40

SHALLOW What, the sword and the word?° Do you study them both, Master Parson?

PAGE And youthful still—in your doublet and hose
this raw rheumatic day.

EVANS There is reasons and causes for it. 45

PAGE We are come to you to do a good office, Master Parson.

EVANS Fery well; what is it?

PAGE Yonder is a most reverend gentleman who, belike having received wrong by some person, is at 50
most odds with his own gravity and patience that ever you saw.

SHALLOW I have lived fourscore years and upward; I never heard a man of his place, gravity, and learning so wide of his own respect.° 55

EVANS What is he?

PAGE I think you know him: Master Doctor Caius, the renowned French physician.

EVANS Got's will, and his passion of my heart! I had as lief you would tell me of a mess of porridge. 60

PAGE Why?

EVANS He has no more knowledge in Hibocrates° and Galen—and he is a knave besides, a cowardly knave as you would desires to be acquainted withal.

PAGE I warrant you, he's the man should fight with 65
him.

SLENDER [Aside.] O sweet Anne Page!

SHALLOW It appears so by his weapons.

[Enter] HOST, CAIUS, [and] RUGBY.

Keep them asunder; here comes Doctor Caius.

PAGE Nay, good Master Parson, keep in your weapon. 70

SHALLOW So do you, good Master Doctor.

HOST Disarm them, and let them question.° Let them keep their limbs whole and hack our English.

CAIUS I pray you let-a me speak a word with your ear. Verefore vill you not meet-a me? 75

EVANS [Aside to CAIUS.] Pray you, use your patience.
[Aloud.] In good time.

CAIUS By gar, you are de coward, de Jack dog, John ape.

EVANS [Aside to CAIUS.] Pray you, let us not be laugh- 80 ing-stogs° to other men's humors. I desire you in friendship, and I will one way or other make you amends. [Aloud.] I will knog your urinals about your knave's cogscomb for missing your meetings and appointments. 85

CAIUS Diable! Jack Rugby, mine Host de Jarteer, have I not stay for him to kill him? Have I not, at de place I did appoint?

EVANS As I am a Christians soul, now look you, this is the place appointed. I'll be judgment by mine Host 90 of the Garter.

HOST Peace, I say, Gallia and Gaul,° French and Welsh, soul-curer and body-curer.

CAIUS Ay, dat is very good, excellent.

HOST Peace, I say. Hear mine Host of the Garter. Am 95
I politic? Am I subtle? Am I a Machiavel?° Shall I lose my doctor? No; he gives me the potions and the motions.° Shall I lose my parson, my priest, my Sir Hugh? No; he gives me the proverbs and the no-verbs. Give me thy hand, terrestrial; so. Give me thy 100 hand, celestial; so. Boys of art,° I have deceived you both; I have directed you to wrong places. Your hearts are mighty, your skins are whole, and let burnt sack be the issue.° Come, lay their swords to pawn.
Follow me, lad of peace; follow, follow, follow. 105

SHALLOW Trust me, a mad Host.—Follow, gentlemen, follow.

SLENDER [Aside.] O sweet Anne Page!

[Exeunt SHALLOW, SLENDER, PAGE, and HOST.]

CAIUS Ha, do I perceive dat? Have you make-a de sot° of us, ha, ha? 110

EVANS This is well! He has made us his vloutingstog.° I desire you that we may be friends, and let us knog our prains together to be revenge on this same scall,° scurvy, cogging companion,° the Host of the Garter. 115

CAIUS By gar, with all my heart. He promise to bring me where is Anne Page. By gar, he deceive me too.

EVANS Well, I will smite his noddles. Pray you follow.
[Exeunt.]

Scene II. [Windsor. A street.]

[Enter] MISTRESS PAGE [and] ROBIN.

MRS. PAGE Nay, keep your way, little gallant. You were wont to be a follower, but now you are a leader.

72 question dispute verbally 80–81 laughing-stogs laugh-ingstocks 92 Gallia and Gaul Wales and France 96 a Machiavel an intriguer (from Niccolò Machiavelli, regarded by the Elizabethans as the archintriguer) 98 motions bowel movements 101 art learning 104 issue conclusion 110 sot fool 111–12 vlouting-stog flouting-stock, laughingstock 114 scall scald, scurvy; cogging companion cheating rascal

23 When . . . Pabylon from Psalm 137 24 vagram fragrant 41 word the Bible 55 wide . . . respect indifferent to his reputation 62 Hibocrates Hippocrates (fifth century B.C. Greek physician)

Whether° had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels?

ROBIN I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a s man than follow him like a dwarf.

MRS. PAGE O, you are a flattering boy. Now I see you'll be a courtier.

[Enter] FORD.

FORD Well met, Mistress Page. Whither go you?

MRS. PAGE Truly, sir, to see your wife. Is she at 10 home?

FORD Ay, and as idle as she may hang together,° for want of company. I think if your husbands were dead, you two would marry.

MRS. PAGE Be sure of that—two other husbands. 15

FORD Where had you this pretty weathercock?°

MRS. PAGE I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my husband had him of. What do you call your knight's name, sirrah?

ROBIN Sir John Falstaff. 20

FORD Sir John Falstaff!

MRS. PAGE He, he; I can never hit on's name. There is such a league° between my Goodman and he. Is your wife at home indeed?

FORD Indeed she is. 25

MRS. PAGE By your leave, sir. I am sick till I see her.

[Exeunt MISTRESS PAGE and ROBIN.]

FORD Has Page any brains? Hath he any eyes? Hath he any thinking? Sure, they sleep; he hath no use of them. Why, this boy will carry a letter twenty mile as easy as a cannon will shoot pointblank twelve score.° 30 He pieces out° his wife's inclination; he gives her folly motion° and advantage. And now she's going to my wife, and Falstaff's boy with her. A man may hear this shower sing in the wind. And Falstaff's boy with her. —Good plots! They are laid, and our revolted wives 35 share damnation together. Well, I will take him, then torture my wife, pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so-seeming Mistress Page, divulge Page himself for a secure and willful Actaeon;° and to these violent proceedings all my neighbors shall cry aim.° 40 [Clock strikes.] The clock gives me my cue, and my assurance bids me search. There I shall find Falstaff. I shall be rather praised for this than mocked, for it is as positive as the earth is firm that Falstaff is there. I will go. 45

[Enter] PAGE, SHALLOW, SLENDER, HOST, EVANS, CAIUS, [and RUGBY].

SHALLOW, PAGE, &C. Well met, Master Ford.

FORD Trust me, a good knot.° I have good cheer at home, and I pray you all go with me.

SHALLOW I must excuse myself, Master Ford.

SLENDER And so must I, sir. We have appointed to 50 dine with Mistress Anne, and I would not break with her for more money than I'll speak of.

SHALLOW We have lingered about a match between

Anne Page and my cousin Slender, and this day we shall have our answer. 55

SLENDER I hope I have your good will, father Page.

PAGE You have, Master Slender. I stand wholly for you. But my wife, Master Doctor, is for you altogether.

CAIUS Ay, be-gar, and de maid is love-a me; my 60 nursh-a Quickly tell me so mush.

HOST What say you to young Master Fenton? He capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses, he speaks holiday,° he smells April and May. He will carry't,° he will carry't; 'tis in his buttons;° he 65 will carry't.

PAGE Not by my consent, I promise you. The gentleman is of no having.° He kept company with the wild prince and Poinis;° he is of too high a region; he knows too much. No, he shall not knit a knot in his fortunes 70 with the finger of my substance. If he take her, let him take her simply.° The wealth I have waits on my consent, and my consent goes not that way.

FORD I beseech you heartily, some of you go home with me to dinner. Besides your cheer, you shall have 75 sport. I will show you a monster. Master Doctor, you shall go. So shall you, Master Page, and you, Sir Hugh.

SHALLOW Well, fare you well. We shall have the freer wooing at Master Page's.

[Exeunt SHALLOW and SLENDER.]

CAIUS Go home, John Rugby. I come anon. 80

[Exit RUGBY.]

HOST Farewell, my hearts. I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary° with him. [Exit.]

FORD [Aside.] I think I shall drink in pipe-wine° first with him; I'll make him dance.—Will you go, 85 gentles?

ALL Have with you to see this monster. Exeunt.

Scene III. [A room in Ford's house.]

Enter MISTRESS FORD [and] MISTRESS PAGE.

MRS. FORD What, John! What, Robert!

MRS. PAGE Quickly, quickly. Is the buck basket°—

MRS. FORD I warrant. What, Robert, I say!

[Enter] SERVANTS [with a basket].

MRS. PAGE Come, come, come!

MRS. FORD Here, set it down. 5

MRS. PAGE Give your men the charge. We must be brief.

MRS. FORD Marry, as I told you before, John and Robert, be ready here hard by in the brewhouse; and when I suddenly call you, come forth, and without 10 any pause or staggering, take this basket on your shoulders. That done, trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the whitsters° in Datchet Mead,° and

64 speaks holiday uses choice language 65 carry't win; 'tis . . . buttons he has it in him 68 having property 68–69 wild . . . Poinis Prince Hal and Poinis, characters from 1 and 2 Henry IV 72 simply by herself without any dowry 82 canary a sweet wine 83 pipe-wine wine from the cask; involved punning on pipe (1) a cask (2) a musical instrument, and on canary (1) a type of wine (2) a lively dance

III.iii.2 buck basket basket for soiled linen 13 whitsters bleachers of linen; Datchet Mead meadow between Windsor Little Park and the Thames

III.ii.3 Whether I wonder whether 12 as idle . . . together as idle as she can be without going to pieces 16 weathercock an allusion to Robin's gaudy clothes 23 league friendship 30 twelve score at twelve score paces 31 pieces out assists 32 motion prompting 39 Actaeon cuckold 40 cry aim applaud (from archery) 47 knot company there empty it in the muddy ditch close by the Thames side.

15

MRS. PAGE You will do it?

MRS. FORD I ha' told them over and over; they lack no direction. Begone, and come when you are called.

[Exeunt SERVANTS.]

[Enter] ROBIN.

MRS. PAGE Here comes little Robin.

20

MRS. FORD How now, my eyas-musket.^o What news with you?

ROBIN My master, Sir John, is come in at your back door, Mistress Ford, and requests your company.

MRS. PAGE You little Jack-a-Lent,^o have you been true to us?

ROBIN Ay, I'll be sworn. My master knows not of your being here, and hath threat'ned to put me into everlasting liberty if I tell you of it; for he swears he'll turn me away.

30

MRS. PAGE Thou'rt a good boy. This secrecy of thine shall be a tailor to thee and shall make thee a new doublet and hose. I'll go hide me.

MRS. FORD Do so. [To ROBIN.] Go tell thy master I am alone. [Exit ROBIN.] Mistress Page, remember you your cue.

MRS. PAGE I warrant thee; if I do not act it, hiss me.

[Exit.]

MRS. FORD Go to, then. We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross wat'ry pumpkin.^o We'll teach him to know turtles from jays.^o

40

[Enter] FALSTAFF.

FALSTAFF "Have I caught thee, my heavenly jewel?"^o Why, now let me die, for I have lived long enough. This is the period^o of my ambition. O this blessed hour!

MRS. FORD O sweet Sir John!

45

FALSTAFF Mistress Ford, I cannot cog,^o I cannot prate, Mistress Ford. Now shall I sin in my wish: I would thy husband were dead. I'll speak it before the best lord; I would make thee my lady.

MRS. FORD I your lady, Sir John? Alas, I should be a pitiful lady.

FALSTAFF Let the court of France show me such another. I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond. Thou hast the right arched beauty of the brow that becomes the ship-tire,^o the tire-valiant,^o or any tire of Venetian admittance.^o

MRS. FORD A plain kerchief, Sir John. My brows become nothing else, nor that well neither.

FALSTAFF Thou art a tyrant to say so. Thou wouldst make an absolute^o courtier, and the firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait

21 eyas-musket young male sparrow hawk; i.e., a sprightly lad 25 Jack-a-Lent an allusion to Robin's gaudy clothes, from the decorated puppet used in Lenten games 39 pumpkin pumpkin 40 turtles from jays faithful women from unfaithful ones 41 Have . . . jewel from Sir Philip Sidney's collection of sonnets, Astrophel and Stella 43 period end 46 cog fawn 55 ship-tire headdress shaped like a ship; tire-valiant fanciful headdress 56 tire . . . admittance Venetian-style headdress 60 absolute perfect in a semicircled farthingale.^o I see what thou wert if fortune, thy foe, were—not nature—thy friend.^o Come, thou canst not hide it.

MRS. FORD Believe me, there's no such thing in me.

65

FALSTAFF What made me love thee? Let that persuade thee there's something extraordinary in thee. Come, I cannot cog and say thou art this and that, like a many of these lispings hawthorn buds^o that come like women in men's apparel and smell like Bucklersbury^o in simple-time.^o I cannot. But I love thee, none but thee; and thou deserv'st it.

70

MRS. FORD Do not betray me, sir. I fear you love Mistress Page.

FALSTAFF Thou mightst as well say I love to walk by the Counter-gate,^o which is as hateful to me as the reek of a limekiln.

75

MRS. FORD Well, heaven knows how I love you, and you shall one day find it.

FALSTAFF Keep in that mind; I'll deserve it.

80

MRS. FORD Nay, I must tell you, so you do, or else I could not be in that mind.

[Enter ROBIN.]

ROBIN Mistress Ford, Mistress Ford! Here's Mistress Page at the door—sweating and blowing and looking wildly, and would needs speak with you presently.^o

85

FALSTAFF She shall not see me; I will ensconce me behind the arras.^o

MRS. FORD Pray you, do so; she's a very tattling woman.

[FALSTAFF hides.]

[Enter MISTRESS PAGE.]

What's the matter? How now!

90

MRS. PAGE O Mistress Ford, what have you done? You're shamed, y' are overthrown, y' are undone forever!

MRS. FORD What's the matter, good Mistress Page?

MRS. PAGE O well-a-day, Mistress Ford! Having an honest man to your husband, to give him such cause of suspicion!

95

MRS. FORD What cause of suspicion?

MRS. PAGE What cause of suspicion! Out upon you; how am I mistook in you!

100

MRS. FORD Why, alas, what's the matter?

MRS. PAGE Your husband's coming hither, woman, with all the officers in Windsor, to search for a gentleman that he says is here now in the house—by your consent—to take an ill advantage of his absence. You are undone.

105

MRS. FORD 'Tis not so, I hope.

MRS. PAGE Pray heaven it be not so that you have such a man here! But 'tis most certain your husband's coming, with half Windsor at his heels, to search for such a one. I come before to tell you. If you know

110

62 semicircled farthingale half-hooped petticoat 62–63 I . . . friend Since you are already naturally pretty, I can imagine what you would look like dressed for the world of high society if fortune had not made you a member of the bourgeois class ("Fortune Thy Foe" is the title of an Elizabethan popular ballad) 69 hawthorn buds dandies 70 Bucklersbury a street in London where herbs were sold 71 simple-time herb-selling season 76 Counter-gate gate of the debtors' prison, known as an area of foul odors 85 presently immediately 87 arras hanging tapestry used for wall decoration yourself clear,° why, I am glad of it; but if you have a friend° here, convey, convey him out. Be not amazed; call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life forever.

MRS. FORD What shall I do? There is a gentleman, my dear friend; and I fear not mine own shame so much as his peril. I had rather than a thousand pound he were out of the house.

MRS. PAGE For shame! Never stand° “you had rather” and “you had rather.” Your husband’s here at hand; bethink you of some conveyance. In the house you cannot hide him.—O, how have you deceived me!—Look, here is a basket. If he be of any reasonable stature, he may creep in here; and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking.° Or—it is whiting time°—send him by your two men to Datchet Mead.

MRS. FORD He’s too big to go in there. What shall I do?

FALSTAFF [Rushing forward.] Let me see’t, let me see’t. O let me see’t! I’ll in, I’ll in! Follow your friend’s counsel. I’ll in!

MRS. PAGE What, Sir John Falstaff! [Aside to FALSTAFF.] Are these your letters, knight?

FALSTAFF [Aside to MISTRESS PAGE.] I love thee. Help me away.—Let me creep in here. I’ll never—

[Climbs into the basket; they cover him with foul linen.]

MRS. PAGE [To ROBIN.] Help to cover your master, boy. Call your men, Mistress Ford. [Aside to FALSTAFF.] You dissembling knight!

MRS. FORD What, John! Robert! John!

[Exit ROBIN.]

[Enter SERVANTS.]

Go, take up these clothes here quickly. Where’s the cowlstaff?° Look how you drumble!° Carry them to the laundress in Datchet Mead. Quickly, come!

[Enter] FORD, PAGE, CAIUS, [and] EVANS.

FORD [To his companions.] Pray you, come near. If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me; then let me be your jest; I deserve it. How now, who goes here? Whither bear you this?

SERVANTS To the laundress, forsooth.

MRS. FORD Why, what have you to do whither they bear it? You were best meddle with buck-washing!

FORD Buck? I would I could wash myself of the buck!° Buck, buck, buck! Ay, buck; I warrant you, buck—and of the season° too, it shall appear. [Exeunt SERVANTS with the basket.] Gentlemen, I have dreamed tonight.° I’ll tell you my dream. Here, here, here be my keys. Ascend my chambers; search, seek, find out. I’ll warrant we’ll unkennel° the fox. Let me stop this way first. [Locks the door.] So, now uncope.°

PAGE Good Master Ford, be contented. You wrong yourself too much.

FORD True, Master Page. Up, gentlemen; you shall see sport anon. Follow me, gentlemen. [Exit.]

EVANS This is fery fantastical humors and jealousies.

CAIUS By gar, ’tis no de fashion of France; it is not jealous in France.

PAGE Nay, follow him, gentlemen. See the issue of his search. [Exeunt PAGE, CAIUS, and EVANS.]

MRS. PAGE Is there not a double excellency in this?

MRS. FORD I know not which pleases me better—that my husband is deceived, or Sir John.

MRS. PAGE What a taking° was he in when your husband asked who was in the basket!

MRS. FORD I am half afraid he will have need of washing; so throwing him into the water will do him a benefit.

MRS. PAGE Hang him, dishonest rascal! I would all of the same strain were in the same distress.

MRS. FORD I think my husband hath some special suspicion of Falstaff’s being here, for I never saw him so gross in his jealousy till now.

MRS. PAGE I will lay a plot to try that, and we will yet have more tricks with Falstaff. His dissolute disease will scarce obey this medicine.

MRS. FORD Shall we send that foolish carrion° Mistress Quickly to him, and excuse his throwing into the water, and give him another hope to betray him to another punishment?

MRS. PAGE We will do it. Let him be sent for tomorrow, eight o’clock, to have amends.

[Enter FORD, PAGE, CAIUS, and EVANS.]

FORD I cannot find him. May be the knave bragged of that he could not compass.

MRS. PAGE [Aside to MISTRESS FORD.] Heard you that?

MRS. FORD You use me well, Master Ford, do you?

FORD Ay, I do so.

MRS. FORD Heaven make you better than your thoughts!

FORD Amen.

MRS. PAGE You do yourself mighty wrong, Master Ford.

FORD Ay, ay, I must bear it.

EVANS If there be any pody in the house, and in the chambers, and in the coffers, and in the presses,° Heaven forgive my sins at the day of judgment!

CAIUS Be-gar, nor I too; dere is nobodies.

PAGE Fie, fie, Master Ford, are you not ashamed? What spirit, what devil suggests this imagination? I would not ha’ your distemper in this kind for the wealth of Windsor Castle.

FORD ’Tis my fault,° Master Page. I suffer for it.

EVANS You suffer for a pad conscience. Your wife is as honest a ’omans as I will desires among five thousand, and five hundred too.

CAIUS By gar, I see ’tis an honest woman.

FORD Well, I promised you a dinner. Come, come, walk in the Park. I pray you pardon me. I will hereafter make known to you why I have done this.—Come, wife; come, Mistress Page—I pray you pardon me. Pray heartily, pardon me.

172 taking fright 185 carrion body of corrupting flesh 204 presses cupboards 211 fault weakness

112 clear innocent 113 friend paramour 120 stand lose time over 126 bucking washing 127 whiting time bleaching time 143 cowlstaff pole for carrying a basket between two persons; drumble dawdle 153 buck horned beast, cuckold 154 of the season in season 156 tonight last night 158 unkennel dislodge 159 uncope flush him out (hunting)

PAGE Let's go in, gentlemen; but, trust me, we'll mock him. I do invite you tomorrow morning to my house to breakfast. After, we'll a-birding^o together. I have a fine hawk for the bush.^o Shall it be so?

FORD Anything.

225

EVANS If there is one, I shall make two in the company.

CAIUS If dere be one, or two, I shall make-a de turd.

FORD Pray you, go, Master Page.

EVANS [Aside to CAIUS.] I pray you now, remem- 230
brance tomorrow on the lousy knave, mine Host.

CAIUS [Aside to EVANS.] Dat is good, by gar; with all my heart.

EVANS [Aside to CAIUS.] A lousy knave, to have his gibes and his mockeries! Exeunt. 235

Scene IV. [Before Page's house.]

Enter FENTON [and] ANNE Page.

FENTON

I see I cannot get thy father's love;
Therefore no more turn me to him, sweet Nan.

ANNE

Alas, how then?

FENTON Why, thou must be thyself.

He doth object I am too great of birth,
And that my state^o being galled with my expense,^o 5

I seek to heal it only by his wealth.

Besides these, other bars he lays before me:

My riots past, my wild societies;

And tells me 'tis a thing impossible

I should love thee but as a property. 10

ANNE

May be he tells you true.

FENTON

No, heaven so speed^o me in my time to come!

Albeit I will confess thy father's wealth

Was the first motive that I wooed thee, Anne.

Yet, wooing thee, I found thee of more value 15

Than stamps^o in gold or sums in sealèd bags;

And 'tis the very riches of thyself

That now I aim at.

ANNE

Gentle Master Fenton,

Yet seek my father's love; still seek it, sir.

If opportunity and humblest suit 20

Cannot attain it, why, then—

[Enter] SHALLOW, SLENDER, [and Mistress] QUICKLY.
Hark you hither.

[Takes FENTON aside.]

SHALLOW Break their talk, Mistress Quickly. My kinsman shall speak for himself.

SLENDER I'll make a shaft or a bolt on't.^o 'Slid,^o 'tis but venturing. 25

SHALLOW Be not dismayed.

223 a-birding hawking 224 fine . . . bush a hawk especially trained to fly at small birds sheltered in bushes

III.iv.5 state estate; galled . . . expense squandered away 12 speed prosper 16 stamps coins 24 make . . . on't do it one way or another (literally, use a slender arrow or a thick one); 'Slid God's eyelid (mild oath)

SLENDER No, she shall not dismay me. I care not for that, but that I am afraid.

QUICKLY [To ANNE.] Hark ye, Master Slender would speak a word with you. 30

ANNE

I come to him. [Aside.] This is my father's choice.

O, what a world of vile ill-favored faults

Looks handsome in three hundred pounds a year.

QUICKLY And how does good Master Fenton? Pray you, a word with you. 35

[They converse together.]

SHALLOW She's coming; to her, coz. O boy, thou hadst a father!

SLENDER I had a father, Mistress Anne; my uncle can tell you good jests of him. Pray you, uncle, tell Mistress Anne the jest how my father stole two geese 40 out of a pen, good uncle.

SHALLOW Mistress Anne, my cousin^o loves you.

SLENDER Ay, that I do, as well as I love any woman in Gloucestershire.

SHALLOW He will maintain you like a gentlewoman. 45

SLENDER Ay, that I will, come cut and long-tail, under the degree of a squire.^o

SHALLOW He will make you a hundred and fifty pounds jointure.

ANNE Good Master Shallow, let him woo for himself. 50

SHALLOW Marry, I thank you for it; I thank you for that good comfort. She calls you, coz. I'll leave you.

ANNE Now, Master Slender—

SLENDER Now, good Mistress Anne—

ANNE What is your will? 55

SLENDER My will? 'Od's heartlings,^o that's a pretty jest indeed! I ne'er made my will yet, I thank God. I am not such a sickly creature, I give heaven praise.

ANNE I mean, Master Slender, what would you with me? 60

SLENDER Truly, for mine own part, I would little or nothing with you. Your father and my uncle have made motions.^o If it be my luck, so; if not, happy man be his dole.^o They can tell you how things go better than I can. You may ask your father; here he comes. 65

[Enter] PAGE [and] MISTRESS PAGE.

PAGE

Now, Master Slender. Love him, daughter Anne.—

Why, how now! What does Master Fenton here?

You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house.

I told you, sir, my daughter is disposed of.

FENTON

Nay, Master Page, be not impatient. 70

MRS. PAGE

Good Master Fenton, come not to my child.

PAGE

She is no match for you.

FENTON

Sir, will you hear me?

PAGE

No, good Master Fenton.

42 cousin kinsman 46-47 cut . . . squire all kinds so long as they are not too high-ranking 56 'Od's heartlings God's little heart (an oath) 63 motions suggestions 63-64 happy . . . dole happiness be his portion Come, Master Shallow; come, son Slender, in.

Knowing my mind, you wrong me, Master Fenton. 75

[PAGE, SHALLOW, and SLENDER enter the house.]

QUICKLY Speak to Mistress Page.

FENTON

Good Mistress Page, for that I love your daughter

In such a righteous fashion as I do,

Perforce, against all checks,° rebukes, and manners,

I must advance the colors° of my love

80

And not retire. Let me have your good will.

ANNE Good mother, do not marry me to yond fool.

MRS. PAGE I mean it not. I seek you a better husband.

QUICKLY [To ANNE.] That's my master, Master

Doctor.

85

ANNE

Alas, I had rather be set quick° i' th' earth,

And bowled to death with turnips.

MRS. PAGE

Come, trouble not yourself. Good Master Fenton,

I will not be your friend, nor enemy.

My daughter will I question how she loves you,

90

And as I find her, so am I affected.

Till then, farewell, sir. She must needs go in.

Her father will be angry.

[MISTRESS PAGE and ANNE enter the house.]

FENTON

Farewell, gentle mistress. Farewell, Nan.

QUICKLY This is my doing now. "Nay," said I, "will 95

you cast away your child on a fool, and a physician?

Look on Master Fenton." This is my doing.

FENTON

I thank thee, and I pray thee, once° tonight

Give my sweet Nan this ring. There's for thy pains.

[Gives the ring and some money to QUICKLY and then departs.]

QUICKLY Now heaven send thee good fortune! A 100 kind heart he hath. A woman would run through fire and water for such a kind heart. But yet, I would my master had Mistress Anne; or I would Master Slender had her; or, in sooth, I would Master Fenton had her.

I will do what I can for them all three, for so I have 105 promised, and I'll be as good as my word—but speciously° for Master Fenton. Well, I must of another errand to Sir John Falstaff from my two mistresses.

What a beast am I to slack it!°

Exit.

Scene V. [Falstaff's room in the Garter Inn.]

Enter FALSTAFF.

FALSTAFF Bardolph, I say!

[Enter] BARDOLPH.

BARDOLPH Here, sir.

FALSTAFF Go fetch me a quart of sack—put a toast° in't. [Exit BARDOLPH.] Have I lived to be carried in a basket like a barrow of butcher's offal, and to be 5 thrown in the Thames? Well, if I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains ta'en out and battered, and give them to a dog for a New-Year's gift. The rogues slighted° me into the river with as little remorse as they would have drowned a blind 10 bitch's puppies, fifteen i' th' litter. And you may know by my size that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking; if the bottom were as deep as hell, I should down. I had been drowned but that the shore was shelvy and shallow—a death that I abhor, for the 15 water swells a man; and what a thing should I have been when I had been swelled. I should have been a mountain of mummy.°

[Enter BARDOLPH with two cups of wine.]

BARDOLPH Here's Mistress Quickly, sir, to speak with you.

20

FALSTAFF Come, let me pour in some sack to the Thames water, for my belly's as cold as if I had swallowed snowballs for pills to cool the reins.° Call her in.

BARDOLPH Come in, woman.

25

[Enter Mistress] QUICKLY.

QUICKLY By your leave; I cry you mercy.° Give your worship good morrow.

FALSTAFF Take away these chalices.° Go brew me a pottle of sack finely.

BARDOLPH With eggs, sir?

30

FALSTAFF Simple of itself; I'll no pullet-sperm in my brewage. [Exit BARDOLPH.] How now.

QUICKLY Marry, sir, I come to your worship from Mistress Ford.

FALSTAFF Mistress Ford? I have had ford enough; I 35 was thrown into the ford; I have my belly full of ford.

QUICKLY Alas the day, good heart, that was not her fault. She does so take on with her men; they mistook their erection.°

FALSTAFF So did I mine, to build upon a foolish 40
woman's promise.

QUICKLY Well, she laments, sir, for it that it would yearn° your heart to see it. Her husband goes this morning a-birding. She desires you once more to come to her between eight and nine. I must carry her 45 word quickly. She'll make you amends, I warrant
you.

FALSTAFF Well, I will visit her. Tell her so, and bid her think what a man is. Let her consider his frailty, and then judge of my merit.

50

QUICKLY I will tell her.

FALSTAFF Do so.—Between nine and ten, sayest thou?

QUICKLY Eight and nine, sir.

FALSTAFF Well, begone. I will not miss her.

QUICKLY Peace be with you, sir.

55

[Exit, leaving the door open.]

FALSTAFF I marvel I hear not of Master Brooke. He sent me word to stay within. I like his money well.—
O, here he comes.

[Enter] FORD.

FORD Bless you, sir.

79 checks reproofs 80 colors banners 86 quick living 98 once sometime 107 speciously especially 109 slack it be remiss about it

III.v.3 a toast a piece of toast

9 slighted tossed contemptuously 18 mummy dead flesh
23 reins kidneys 26 cry you mercy beg your pardon 28 chalices drinking cups 39 erection direction 43 yearn grieve

FALSTAFF Now, Master Brooke, you come to know 60 what hath passed between me and Ford's wife?

FORD That, indeed, Sir John, is my business.

FALSTAFF Master Brooke, I will not lie to you. I was at her house the hour she appointed me.

FORD And sped you,° sir? 65

FALSTAFF Very ill-favoredly, Master Brooke.

FORD How so, sir? Did she change her determination?

FALSTAFF No, Master Brooke, but the peaking cornuto° her husband, Master Brooke, dwelling in a continual 'larum of jealousy, comes me in the instant 70 of our encounter, after we had embraced, kissed, protested, and, as it were, spoke the prologue of our comedy; and at his heels a rabble° of his companions, thither provoked and instigated by his distemper,° and, forsooth, to search his house for his wife's love. 75

FORD What, while you were there?

FALSTAFF While I was there.

FORD And did he search for you, and could not find
you?

FALSTAFF You shall hear. As good luck would have 80 it, comes in one Mistress Page, gives intelligence of Ford's approach; and in her invention and Ford's wife's distraction, they conveyed me into a buck basket.

FORD A buck basket? 85

FALSTAFF By the Lord, a buck basket! Rammed me in with foul shirts and smocks, socks, foul stockings, greasy napkins, that,° Master Brooke, there was the rankest compound of villainous smell that ever offended nostril. 90

FORD And how long lay you there?

FALSTAFF Nay, you shall hear, Master Brooke, what I have suffered to bring this woman to evil for your good. Being thus crammed in the basket, a couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds,° were called forth by their 95 mistress to carry me in the name of foul clothes to Datchet Lane. They took me on their shoulders; met the jealous knave their master in the door, who asked them once or twice what they had in their basket. I quaked for fear lest the lunatic knave would have 100 searched it; but fate, ordaining he should be a cuckold, held his hand. Well, on went he for a search, and away went I for foul clothes. But mark the sequel, Master Brooke. I suffered the pangs of three several deaths:
first, an intolerable fright to be detected with° a jealous 105 rotten bellwether;° next, to be compassed like a good bilbo° in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head; and then, to be stopped in, like a strong distillation, with stinking clothes that fretted° in their own grease. Think of that, a man of my kidney°— 110 think of that—that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution° and thaw. It was a miracle to 'scape suffocation. And in the height of this 65 sped you did you succeed 68–69 peaking cornuto prying cuckold (with a pun on peak as the tip of the horn) 73 rabble pack 74 distemper ill temper 88 that so that 95 hinds servants 105 with by 106 bellwether ram with a bell around his neck who led the flock (with an implied reference to a horned beast or cuckold) 106–07 compassed . . .

bilbo bent around like a well-tempered sword blade (a test for ascertaining the quality of a good blade) 109 fretted decayed 110 kidney temperament 112 dissolution liquefaction

bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease, like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames, and 115 cooled, glowing hot, in that surge, like a horseshoe.
Think of that—hissing hot—think of that, Master Brooke!

FORD In good sadness,° sir, I am sorry that for my sake you have suffered all this. My suit then is desperate. 120
You'll undertake her no more?

FALSTAFF Master Brooke, I will be thrown into Etna, as I have been into Thames, ere I will leave her thus.
Her husband is this morning gone a-birding. I have received from her another embassy° of meeting. 125
'Twixt eight and nine is the hour, Master Brooke.

FORD 'Tis past eight already, sir.

FALSTAFF Is it? I will then address me° to my appointment. Come to me at your convenient leisure, and you shall know how I speed; and the conclusion shall 130 be crowned with your enjoying her. Adieu. You shall have her, Master Brooke; Master Brooke, you shall cuckold Ford. [Exit.]

FORD Hum! Ha! Is this a vision? Is this a dream? Do
I sleep? Master Ford, awake; awake, Master Ford! 135
There's a hole made in your best coat, Master Ford.
This 'tis to be married; this 'tis to have linen and buck baskets! Well, I will proclaim myself what I am. I will now take the lecher; he is at my house; he cannot 'scape me; 'tis impossible he should. He cannot creep 140 into a halfpenny purse, nor into a pepperbox. But, lest the devil that guides him should aid him, I will search impossible places. Though what I am I cannot avoid, yet to be what I would not shall not make me tame.
If I have horns to make one mad, let the proverb go 145 with me—I'll be horn-mad. Exit.

A C T I V

Scene I. [A street.]

Enter MISTRESS PAGE, [Mistress] QUICKLY, [and] WILLIAM.

MRS. PAGE Is he at Master Ford's already, think'st thou?

QUICKLY Sure he is by this, or will be presently. But, truly, he is very courageous° mad about his throwing into the water. Mistress Ford desires you to come 5 suddenly.°

MRS. PAGE I'll be with her by and by.° I'll but bring my young man here to school. Look where his master comes; 'tis a playing-day, I see.

[Enter] EVANS.

How now, Sir Hugh! No school today? 10

EVANS No. Master Slender is let the boys leave to play.

QUICKLY Blessing of his heart.

MRS. PAGE Sir Hugh, my husband says my son profits nothing in the world at his book. I pray you, ask him some questions in his accidence.° 15

119 sadness seriousness 125 embassy message 128 address me go

IV.i.4 courageous outrageous 6 suddenly immediately 7 by and by quickly 15 accidence knowledge of grammatical inflections

EVANS Come hither, William. Hold up your head; come.

MRS. PAGE Come on, sirrah; hold up your head; answer your master; be not afraid.

EVANS William, how many numbers is in nouns? 20

WILLIAM Two.

QUICKLY Truly, I thought there had been one number more, because they say, "Od's nouns."^o

EVANS Peace your tattlings. What is "fair," William?

WILLIAM "Pulcher." 25

QUICKLY Polecats!^o There are fairer things than polecats, sure.

EVANS You are a very simplicity 'oman. I pray you peace. What is "lapis," William?

WILLIAM A stone. 30

EVANS And what is "a stone," William?

WILLIAM A pebble.

EVANS No, it is "lapis." I pray you remember in your prain.

WILLIAM "Lapis." 35

EVANS That is a good William. What is he, William, that does lend articles?

WILLIAM Articles are borrowed of the pronoun, and be thus declined: "Singulariter, nominativo, hic, haec, hoc." 40

EVANS "Nominativo, hig, hag, hog." Pray you, mark: "genitivo, hujus." Well, what is your accusative case?

WILLIAM "Accusativo, hinc."

EVANS I pray you, have your remembrance, child: 45
"accusativo, hung, hang, hog."

QUICKLY "Hang-hog"^o is Latin for bacon, I warrant you.

EVANS Leave your prabbles, 'oman. What is the focative case, William? 50

WILLIAM O—"vocativo, O."

EVANS Remember, William; focative is "caret."^o

QUICKLY And that's a good root.

EVANS 'Oman, forbear.

MRS. PAGE Peace. 55

EVANS What is your genitive case plural, William?

WILLIAM Genitive case?

EVANS Ay.

WILLIAM Genitive—"horum, harum, horum."

QUICKLY Vengeance of Jenny's case!^o Fie on her! 60
Never name her, child, if she be a whore.

EVANS For shame, 'oman.

QUICKLY You do ill to teach the child such words. He teaches him to hick and to hack,^o which they'll do fast enough of themselves, and to call "horum." Fie upon 65
you!

EVANS 'Oman, art thou lunatics? Hast thou no understandings for thy cases and the numbers of the genders?

23 Od's nouns God's wounds (an oath) 26 Polecats (1) wildcats (2) prostitutes 47 Hang-hog an allusion to a famous story of the jurist Sir Nicholas Bacon, who told a prisoner named Hog, who tried to have his death sentence commuted on grounds of kindred, that "you and I cannot be of kindred unless you are hanged; for Hog is not Bacon till it be well hanged" 52 caret is lacking (Latin) 60 case pudendum (Mistress Quickly associates Latin horum with whore, and harum with hare, a slang term for a prostitute) 64 to hick . . . hack hiccup (?) and go wenching (?; precise meaning unknown, but dissoluteness is implied)

Thou art as foolish Christian creatures as I would desires. 70

MRS. PAGE Prithee, hold thy peace.

EVANS Show me now, William, some declensions of your pronouns.

WILLIAM Forsooth, I have forgot.

EVANS It is "qui, quae, quod." If you forget your 75
"qui's," your "quae's," and your "quod's,"^o you must be preeches.^o Go your ways and play; go.

MRS. PAGE He is a better scholar than I thought he was.

EVANS He is a good sprag^o memory. Farewell, 80
Mistress Page.

MRS. PAGE Adieu, good Sir Hugh. [Exit EVANS.]
Get you home, boy. Come, we stay too long. Exeunt.

Scene II. [A room in Ford's house.]

Enter FALSTAFF [and] MISTRESS FORD.

FALSTAFF Mistress Ford, your sorrow hath eaten up my sufferance.^o I see you are obsequious^o in your love, and I profess requital to a hair's breadth, not only, Mistress Ford, in the simple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it. 5
But are you sure of your husband now?

MRS. FORD He's a-birding, sweet Sir John.

MRS. PAGE [Within.] What ho, gossip^o Ford. What ho!

MRS. FORD Step into th' chamber, Sir John. 10
[Exit FALSTAFF.]

[Enter] MISTRESS PAGE.

MRS. PAGE How now, sweetheart! Who's at home besides yourself?

MRS. FORD Why, none but mine own people.

MRS. PAGE Indeed?

MRS. FORD No, certainly. [Aside to her.] Speak 15 louder.

MRS. PAGE Truly, I am so glad you have nobody here.

MRS. FORD Why?

MRS. PAGE Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes^o again. He so takes on yonder with my husband, 20 so rails against all married mankind, so curses all Eve's daughters—of what complexion soever, and so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, "Peer out,^o peer out!" that any madness I ever yet beheld seemed but tameness, civility, and patience to this his distemper 25 he is in now. I am glad the fat knight is not here.

MRS. FORD Why, does he talk of him?

MRS. PAGE Of none but him; and swears he was carried out, the last time he searched for him, in a basket; protests to my husband he is now here, and 30 hath drawn him and the rest of their company from their sport to make another experiment of his suspicion. But I am glad the knight is not here. Now he shall see his own foolery.

76 qui's, quae's, quod's Latin qu was pronounced k, giving rise to bawdy puns on keys = penises, case = pudendum, cods = testicles) 77 preeches breeched, flogged 80 sprag sprack, alert

IV.ii.2 sufferance suffering; obsequious devoted 8 gossip friend 20 lunes lunacies 23 Peer out alluding to the cuckold's horns

MRS. FORD How near is he, Mistress Page? 35

MRS. PAGE Hard by, at street end; he will be here anon.

MRS. FORD I am undone! The knight is here.

MRS. PAGE Why then you are utterly shamed, and he's but a dead man. What a woman are you! Away 40 with him, away with him. Better shame than murder.

MRS. FORD Which way should he go? How should I bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket again?

[Enter FALSTAFF.]

FALSTAFF No, I'll come no more i' th' basket. May I not go out ere he come? 45

MRS. PAGE Alas, three of Master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols that none shall issue out; otherwise you might slip away ere he came. But what make you here?

FALSTAFF What shall I do? I'll creep up into the 50 chimney.

MRS. FORD There they always use to discharge their birding pieces.

MRS. PAGE Creep into the kilnhole.^o

FALSTAFF Where is it? 55

MRS. FORD He will seek there, on my word. Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract^o for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his note. There is no hiding you in the house. 60

FALSTAFF I'll go out then.

MRS. PAGE If you go out in your own semblance, you die, Sir John. Unless you go out disguised—

MRS. FORD How might we disguise him?

MRS. PAGE Alas the day, I know not. There is no 65 woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise, he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape.

FALSTAFF Good hearts, devise something. Any extremity rather than a mischief. 70

MRS. FORD My maid's aunt, the fat woman of Brainford,^o has a gown above.

MRS. PAGE On my word, it will serve him; she's as big as he is. And there's her thrummed^o hat and her muffler too. Run up, Sir John. 75

MRS. FORD Go, go, sweet Sir John. Mistress Page and I will look some linen for your head.

MRS. PAGE Quick, quick! We'll come dress you straight; put on the gown the while. [Exit FALSTAFF.]

MRS. FORD I would my husband would meet him in 80 this shape. He cannot abide the old woman of Brainford; he swears she's a witch, forbade her my house, and hath threat'ned to beat her.

MRS. PAGE Heaven guide him to thy husband's cudgel, and the devil guide his cudgel afterwards! 85

MRS. FORD But is my husband coming?

MRS. PAGE Ay, in good sadness, is he; and talks of the basket too, howsoever he hath had intelligence.

MRS. FORD We'll try that; for I'll appoint my men to carry the basket again, to meet him at the door with it, 90 as they did last time.

MRS. PAGE Nay, but he'll be here presently. Let's go dress him like the witch of Brainford.

MRS. FORD I'll first direct my men what they shall do with the basket. Go up; I'll bring linen for him 95 straight. [Exit.]

MRS. PAGE Hang him, dishonest^o varlet, we cannot misuse him enough.

We'll leave a proof by that which we will do,

Wives may be merry, and yet honest too. 100

We do not act that often jest and laugh;

'Tis old but true, "Still swine eats all the draff."^o

[Exit.]

[Enter MISTRESS FORD, with two] SERVANTS.

MRS. FORD Go, sirs, take the basket again on your shoulders. Your master is hard at door; if he bid you set it down, obey him. Quickly, dispatch. [Exit.] 105

FIRST SERVANT Come, come, take it up.

SECOND SERVANT Pray heaven, it be not full of knight again.

FIRST SERVANT I hope not; I had lief as bear so much lead. 110

[They lift the basket.]

[Enter] FORD, PAGE, CAIUS, EVANS, [and] SHALLOW.

FORD Ay, but if it prove true, Master Page, have you any way then to unfool me again? Set down the basket, villain. Somebody call my wife. Youth in a basket!^o O you panderly rascals! There's a knot,^o a ging,^o a pack, a conspiracy against me. Now shall the devil be shamed.^o What, wife, I say! Come, come forth! Behold what honest clothes you send forth to bleaching! 115

PAGE Why, this passes,^o Master Ford! You are not to go loose any longer; you must be pinioned. 120

EVANS Why, this is lunatics, this is mad as a mad dog.

SHALLOW Indeed, Master Ford, this is not well, indeed.

FORD So say I too, sir.

[Enter MISTRESS FORD.]

Come hither, Mistress Ford; Mistress Ford, the honest 125 woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature that hath the jealous fool to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?

MRS. FORD Heaven be my witness you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty. 130

FORD Well said, 'brazen-face; hold it out.—Come forth, sirrah!

[Pulling clothes out of the basket.]

PAGE This passes!

MRS. FORD Are you not ashamed? Let the clothes alone. 135

FORD I shall find you anon.

EVANS 'Tis unreasonable. Will you take up your wife's clothes? Come away.

FORD Empty the basket, I say!

54 kilnhole oven 58 abstract list 71-72 fat . . . Brainford an actual personage who kept a tavern in Brentford, a town on the Thames twelve miles east of Windsor 74 thrummed fringed

97 dishonest unchaste 102 draff swill 113-14 Youth . . . basket a contemporary phrase apparently connoting a "fortunate lover" 114 knot band 115 ging gang 115-16 Now . . . shamed "Speak the truth and shame the devil" (proverbial) 119 passes exceeds everything

MRS. FORD Why, man, why?

FORD Master Page, as I am a man, there was one conveyed out of my house yesterday in this basket. Why may not he be there again? In my house I am sure he is. My intelligence^o is true; my jealousy is reasonable. Pluck me out all the linen.

[FORD and PAGE pull out more clothes.]

MRS. FORD If you find a man there, he shall die a flea's death.

PAGE Here's no man.

SHALLOW By my fidelity, this is not well, Master Ford; this wrongs you.

EVANS Master Ford, you must pray, and not follow the imaginations of your own heart. This is jealousies.

FORD Well, he's not here I seek for.

PAGE No, nor nowhere else but in your brain.

FORD Help to search my house this one time. If I find not what I seek, show no color for my extremity.^o Let me forever be your table-sport.^o Let them say of me, "As jealous as Ford that searched a hollow walnut for his wife's leman."^o Satisfy me once more; once more search with me.

MRS. FORD What ho, Mistress Page, come you and the old woman down. My husband will come into the chamber.

FORD Old woman? What old woman's that?

MRS. FORD Why, it is my maid's aunt of Brainford.

FORD A witch, a quean,^o an old cozening^o quean! Have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands, does she? We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling. She works by charms, by spells, by th' figure,^o and such daubery^o as this is, beyond our element; we know nothing. Come down, you witch, you hag, you; come down, I say!

MRS. FORD Nay, good, sweet husband! Good gentlemen, let him not strike the old woman.

[Enter FALSTAFF in woman's clothes, and MISTRESS PAGE.]

MRS. PAGE Come, Mother Prat, come, give me your hand.

FORD I'll "prat"^o her. [Beats him.] Out of my door, you witch, you rag, you baggage, you polecat, you runnion!^o Out, out! I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you!

[Exit FALSTAFF, running.]

MRS. PAGE Are you not ashamed? I think you have killed the poor woman.

MRS. FORD Nay, he will do it. 'Tis a goodly credit for you.

FORD Hang her, witch!

EVANS By Jeshu, I think the 'oman is a witch indeed. I like not when a 'oman has a great peard; I spy a great peard under his muffler.

FORD Will you follow, gentlemen? I beseech you, follow. See but the issue of my jealousy. If I cry out thus upon no trail,^o never trust me when I open^o again.

140

PAGE Let's obey his humor a little further. Come, gentlemen.

[Exeunt FORD, PAGE, SHALLOW, CAIUS, and EVANS.]

MRS. PAGE Trust me, he beat him most pitifully.

MRS. FORD Nay, by th' mass, that he did not; he beat him most unpitifully, methought.

MRS. PAGE I'll have the cudgel hallowed and hung o'er the altar; it hath done meritorious service.

MRS. FORD What think you? May we, with the warrant of womanhood and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any further revenge?

MRS. PAGE The spirit of wantonness is, sure, scared out of him. If the devil have him not in fee-simple,^o with fine and recovery,^o he will never, I think, in the way of waste,^o attempt us again.

MRS. FORD Shall we tell our husbands how we have served him?

MRS. PAGE Yes, by all means, if it be but to scrape the figures^o out of your husband's brains. If they can find in their hearts the poor unvirtuous fat knight shall be any further afflicted, we two will still be the ministers.^o

MRS. FORD I'll warrant they'll have him publicly shamed, and methinks there would be no period to the jest, should he not be publicly shamed.

MRS. PAGE Come, to the forge with it; then shape it. I would not have things cool.

Exeunt.

Scene III. [A room in the Garter Inn.]

Enter HOST and BARDOLPH.

BARDOLPH Sir, the Germans desire to have three of your horses. The duke himself will be tomorrow at court, and they are going to meet him.

HOST What duke should that be comes so secretly? I hear not of him in the court. Let me speak with the gentlemen. They speak English?

BARDOLPH Ay, sir; I'll call them to you.

HOST They shall have my horses, but I'll make them pay; I'll sauce them.^o They have had my house a week at command.^o I have turned away my other guests. They must come off.^o I'll sauce them. Come. Exeunt.

Scene IV. [A room in Ford's house.]

Enter PAGE, FORD, MISTRESS PAGE, MISTRESS FORD, and EVANS.

EVANS 'Tis one of the best discretions of a 'oman^o as ever I did look upon.

PAGE And did he send you both these letters at an instant?

192 upon no trail where there is no scent; open cry out from picking up a scent (used of hounds) 204 fee-simple absolute possession 205 fine and recovery legal procedure for transferring an entailed estate into a fee-simple 206 waste spoliation 210 figures phantasms 213 ministers agents

IV.iii.9 sauce them make them pay dearly 10 at command reserved 11 come off pay

IV.iv.I best . . . 'oman most discreet woman

144 intelligence information 156 show . . . extremity suggest no excuse for my extravagance 157 table-sport laughingstock 159 leman lover 166 quean hussy; cozening cheating, deceiving 170-71 by th' figure by making wax effigies for enchantments 171 daubery false show 178 prat beat on the buttocks 180 runnion abusive term for a woman

MRS. PAGE Within a quarter of an hour. 5
 FORD
 Pardon me, wife. Henceforth do what thou wilt.
 I rather will suspect the sun with cold
 Than thee with wantonness. Now doth thy honor stand,
 In him that was of late an heretic,
 As firm as faith.
 PAGE 'Tis well, 'tis well; no more. 10
 Be not as extreme in submission as in offense.
 But let our plot go forward. Let our wives
 Yet once again, to make us public sport,
 Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow,
 Where we may take him and disgrace him for it. 15
 FORD
 There is no better way than that they spoke of.
 PAGE How? To send him word they'll meet him in the Park at midnight? Fie, fie, he'll never come.
 EVANS You say he has been thrown in the rivers, and has been grievously peaten as an old 'oman. Methinks 20 there should be terrors in him that he should not come. Methinks his flesh is punished; he shall have no desires.
 PAGE So think I too.
 MRS. FORD
 Devise but how you'll use him when he comes, 25
 And let us two devise to bring him thither.
 MRS. PAGE
 There is an old tale goes that Herne the Hunter,
 Sometime° a keeper here in Windsor Forest,
 Doth all the wintertime, at still midnight,
 Walk round about an oak, with great ragg'd horns; 30
 And there he blasts° the tree, and takes° the cattle,
 And makes milch-kine yield blood, and shakes a chain
 In a most hideous and dreadful manner.
 You have heard of such a spirit, and well you know
 The superstitious idle-headed eld° 35
 Received, and did deliver to our age,
 This tale of Herne the Hunter for a truth.
 PAGE
 Why, yet there want not many that do fear
 In deep of night to walk by this Herne's Oak.
 But what of this?
 MRS. FORD Marry, this is our device:° 40
 That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us,
 Disguised like Herne, with huge horns on his head.
 PAGE
 Well, let it not be doubted but he'll come,
 And in this shape. When you have brought him thither,
 What shall be done with him? What is your plot? 45
 MRS. PAGE
 That likewise have we thought upon, and thus:
 Nan Page my daughter, and my little son,
 And three or four more of their growth, we'll dress
 Like urchins,° ouphs,° and fairies, green and white,
 With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads, 50
 And rattles in their hands. Upon a sudden,
 As Falstaff, she, and I are newly met,
 Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once

With some diffusèd° song. Upon their sight,
 We two in great amazedness will fly. 55
 The let them all encircle him about,
 And, fairy-like, to pinch the unclean knight,
 And ask him why, that hour of fairy revel,
 In their so sacred paths he dares to tread
 In shape profane.
 MRS. FORD And till he tell the truth, 60
 Let the supposed fairies pinch him sound°
 And burn him with their tapers.
 MRS. PAGE The truth being known,
 We'll all present ourselves, dis-horn the spirit,
 And mock him home to Windsor.
 FORD The children must
 Be practiced well to this, or they'll ne'er do't. 65
 EVANS I will teach the children their behaviors; and I will be like a jackanapes° also, to burn the knight with my taber.
 FORD
 That will be excellent. I'll go buy them vizards.°
 MRS. PAGE
 My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies, 70
 Finely attirèd in a robe of white.
 PAGE
 That silk will I go buy. [Aside.] And in that tire°
 Shall Master Slender steal my Nan away,
 And marry her at Eton.°—Go, send to Falstaff straight.
 FORD
 Nay, I'll to him again in name of Brooke. 75
 He'll tell me all his purpose. Sure, he'll come.
 MRS. PAGE
 Fear not you that. Go, get us properties°
 And tricking° for our fairies.
 EVANS Let us about it. It is admirable pleasures and fery honest knaveries. 80
 [Exeunt PAGE, FORD, and EVANS.]
 MRS. PAGE
 Go, Mistress Ford,
 Send Quickly to Sir John, to know his mind.
 [Exit MISTRESS FORD.]
 I'll to the doctor. He hath my good will,
 And none but he, to marry with Nan Page.
 That Slender, though well landed, is an idiot; 85
 And he my husband best of all affects.
 The doctor is well moneyed, and his friends
 Potent at court. He, none but he, shall have her, Though twenty thousand worthier come to crave
 her. [Exit.]

Scene V. [The room in the Garter Inn.]

Enter HOST [and] SIMPLE.

HOST What wouldst thou have, boor? What, thick-skin? Speak, breathe, discuss; brief, short, quick, snap.

SIMPLE Marry, sir, I come to speak with Sir John Falstaff from Master Slender.

HOST There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his 5

28 Sometime formerly 31 blasts blights; takes bewitches 35 eld elders 40 device plan 49 urchins goblins; ouphs elves

54 diffusèd cacophonous 61 sound soundly 67 jackanapes monkey 69 vizards masks 72 tire attire 74 Eton across the river from Windsor 77 properties stage properties 78
 tricking adornment, costumes standing-bed and truckle bed.^o 'Tis painted about with the story of the Prodigal,^o fresh and new. Go, knock and call. He'll speak like an Anthropophaginian^o unto thee. Knock, I say.

SIMPLE There's an old woman, a fat woman, gone up 10 into his chamber. I'll be so bold as stay, sir, till she come down. I come to speak with her, indeed.

HOST Ha, a fat woman? The knight may be robbed. I'll call. Bully knight, bully Sir John! Speak from thy lungs military. Art thou there? It is thine Host, thine 15 Ephesian,^o calls.

FALSTAFF [Above.] How now, mine Host?

HOST Here's a Bohemian-Tartar^o tarries the coming down of thy fat woman. Let her descend, bully, let her descend. My chambers are honorable. Fie, privacy, 20 fie!

[Enter] FALSTAFF.

FALSTAFF There was, mine Host, an old fat woman even now with me, but she's gone.

SIMPLE Pray you, sir, was't not the wise woman of Brainford? 25

FALSTAFF Ay, marry, was it, mussel-shell.^o What would you with her?

SIMPLE My master, sir, my Master Slender, sent to her, seeing her go thorough the streets, to know, sir, whether one Nym, sir, that beguiled him of a chain, 30 had the chain or no.

FALSTAFF I spake with the old woman about it.

SIMPLE And what says she, I pray, sir?

FALSTAFF Marry, she says that the very same man that beguiled Master Slender of his chain cozened him of it. 35

SIMPLE I would I could have spoken with the woman herself. I had other things to have spoken with her too from him.

FALSTAFF What are they? Let us know.

HOST Ay, come; quick! 40

SIMPLE I may not conceal^o them, sir.

HOST Conceal them, or thou diest.

SIMPLE Why, sir, they were nothing but about Mistress Anne Page; to know if it were my master's fortune to have her, or no. 45

FALSTAFF 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

SIMPLE What, sir?

FALSTAFF To have her, or no. Go; say the woman told me so.

SIMPLE May I be bold to say so, sir? 50

FALSTAFF Ay, Sir Tyke;^o who more bold?

SIMPLE I thank your worship: I shall make my master glad with these tidings. [Exit.]

HOST Thou art clerkly, thou art clerkly,^o Sir John. Was there a wise woman with thee? 55

FALSTAFF Ay, that there was, mine Host; one that hath taught me more wit than ever I learned before in my life; and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.

[Enter] BARDOLPH.

BARDOLPH Out, alas, sir, cozenage, mere^o cozenage! 60

HOST Where be my horses? Speak well of them, varletto.^o

BARDOLPH Run away with the cozeners; for so soon as I came beyond Eton, they threw me off from behind one of them, in a slough of mire; and set 65 spurs and away, like three German devils, three Doctor Faustuses.^o

HOST They are gone but to meet the duke, villain.^o Do not say they be fled: Germans are honest men.

[Enter] EVANS.

EVANS Where is mine Host? 70

HOST What is the matter, sir?

EVANS Have a care of your entertainments.^o There is a friend of mine come to town tells me there is three cozen-germans^o that has cozened all the hosts of Readins,^o of Maidenhead, of Colebrook, of horses 75 and money. I tell you for good will, look you. You are wise and full of gibes and vlouting-stogs, and 'tis not convenient you should be cozened. Fare you well. [Exit.]

[Enter] CAIUS.

CAIUS Vere is mine Host de Jarteer? 80

HOST Here, Master Doctor, in perplexity and doubtful^o dilemma.

CAIUS I cannot tell vat is dat; but it is tell-a me dat you make grand preparation for a duke de Jamany. By my trot, dere is no duke dat de court is know to 85 come. I tell you for good vill. Adieu. [Exit.]

HOST Hue and cry, villain, go! [To FALSTAFF.] Assist me, knight. I am undone. [To BARDOLPH.] Fly, run, hue and cry, villain! I am undone!

[Exeunt HOST and BARDOLPH.]

FALSTAFF I would all the world might be cozened, for I have been cozened and beaten too. If it should 90 come to the ear of the court how I have been transformed, and how my transformation hath been washed and cudgeled, they would melt me out of my fat drop by drop, and liquor^o fishermen's boots 95 with me. I warrant they would whip me with their fine wits till I were as crestfall'n^o as a dried pear. I never prospered since I forswore myself at primero.^o Well, if my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent. 100

[Enter Mistress] QUICKLY.

Now, whence come you?

QUICKLY From the two parties, forsooth.

FALSTAFF The devil take one party and his dam the other! And so they shall be both bestowed. I have suffered more for their sakes, more than the villainous 105 inconstancy of man's disposition is able to bear.

QUICKLY And have not they suffered? Yes, I warrant—speciously^o one of them. Mistress Ford, good heart,

62 varletto rascal 67 Doctor Faustuses Faustus was a German scholar who allegedly obtained magical powers by making a compact with Lucifer; known to the Elizabethans primarily through Marlowe's play 68 villain base fellow 72 entertainments total supplies for running an inn 74 cozen-germans (1) cousin-germans, relatives (2) cheating Germans 75 Readins Reading 81-82 doubtful fearful 95 liquor grease 97 crestfall'n undistinguished 98 primero a card game 108 speciously especially

IV.v.6 truckle bed trundle bed 7 Prodigal the Prodigal Son 8-9 Anthropophaginian cannibal 16 Ephesian boon companion 18 Bohemian-Tartar wild man 26 mussel-shell one who gapes 41 conceal reveal 51 Sir Tyke Master Cur 54 clerkly scholarly 60 mere pure is beaten black and blue that you cannot see a white spot about her.

110

FALSTAFF What tell'st thou me of black and blue? I was beaten myself into all the colors of the rainbow; and I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brainford. But that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me, the knave constable had set me i' th' stocks, i' th' common stocks, for a witch.

115

QUICKLY Sir, let me speak with you in your chamber. You shall hear how things go, and, I warrant, to your content. Here is a letter will say somewhat. Good hearts, what ado here is to bring you together. Sure, one of you does not serve heaven well that you are so crossed.^o

120

FALSTAFF Come up into my chamber. Exeunt.

Scene VI. [The Garter Inn.]

Enter FENTON [and] HOST.

HOST Master Fenton, talk not to me. My mind is heavy; I will give over all.

FENTON

Yet hear me speak. Assist me in my purpose, And, as I am a gentleman, I'll give thee A hundred pound in gold more than your loss.

5

HOST I will hear you, Master Fenton, and I will, at the least, keep your counsel.

FENTON

From time to time I have acquainted you With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page, Who mutually hath answered my affection, (So far forth as herself might be her chooser) Even to my wish. I have a letter from her Of such contents as you will wonder at, The mirth whereof so larded^o with my matter^o That neither singly can be manifested Without the show of both. Fat Falstaff Hath a great scene. The image^o of the jest I'll show you here at large. [Takes out a letter.]

10

15

Hark, good mine Host:

Tonight at Herne's Oak, just 'twixt twelve and one, Must my sweet Nan present^o the Fairy Queen— The purpose why, is here—in which disguise, While other jests are something rank^o on foot, Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender, and with him at Eton Immediately to marry. She hath consented. Now, sir,

20

Her mother (ever strong against that match And firm for Doctor Caius) hath appointed That he shall likewise shuffle^o her away, While other sports are tasking of their minds, And at the dean'ry, where a priest attends, Straight marry her. To this her mother's plot She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath

30

Made promise to the doctor. Now, thus it rests: Her father means she shall be all in white,

35

123 crossed thwarted

IV.vi.14 larded intermixed; matter i.e., courtship problems
17 image form 20 present represent 22 something rank rather abundantly 29 shuffle spirit

And in that habit, when Slender sees his time To take her by the hand and bid her go, She shall go with him. Her mother hath intended— The better to denote her to the doctor, For they must all be masked and vizarded— That quaint^o in green she shall be loose enrobed, With ribands pendent, flaring 'bout her head; And when the doctor spies his vantage ripe, To pinch her by the hand, and on that token^o The maid hath given consent to go with him.

40

45

HOST

Which means she to deceive, father or mother?

FENTON

Both, my good Host, to go along with me. And here it rests, that you'll procure the vicar To stay for me at church 'twixt twelve and one, And, in the lawful name of marrying, To give our hearts united ceremony.^o

50

HOST

Well, husband your device;^o I'll to the vicar. Bring you the maid, you shall not lack a priest.

FENTON

So shall I evermore be bound to thee; Besides, I'll make a present recompense.

Exeunt. 55

ACT V

Scene I. [The Garter Inn.]

Enter FALSTAFF [and Mistress] QUICKLY.

10

FALSTAFF Prithee, no more prattling. Go. I'll hold.^o This is the third time; I hope good luck lies in odd numbers. Away; go. They say there is divinity^o in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Away!

QUICKLY I'll provide you a chain, and I'll do what I can to get you a pair of horns.

15

FALSTAFF Away, I say; time wears. Hold up your head, and mince.^o [Exit Mistress QUICKLY.]

[Enter] FORD.

How now, Master Brooke. Master Brooke, the matter will be known tonight, or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Herne's Oak, and you shall see wonders.

10

FORD Went you not to her yesterday,^o sir, as you told me you had appointed?

25

FALSTAFF I went to her, Master Brooke, as you see, like a poor old man; but I came from her, Master Brooke, like a poor old woman. That same knave Ford, her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, Master Brooke, that ever governed frenzy. I will tell you: he beat me grievously, in the shape of a woman; for in the shape of man, Master Brooke, I fear not Goliath with a weaver's beam,^o

20

41 quaint elegantly 44 token signal 51 united ceremony union through the marriage rite 52 husband your device manage your plan prudently

V.i.i hold keep the engagement 3 divinity divination 8 mince trip off 13 yesterday a slip; should be "this morning" 22 Goliath . . . beam an allusion to Goliath's staff from I Samuel 17:7 and II Samuel 21:19 because I know also life is a shuttle.^o I am in haste. Go along with me; I'll tell you all, Master Brooke. Since I plucked geese, played truant, and whipped top, I²⁵ knew not what 'twas to be beaten till lately. Follow me. I'll tell you strange things of this knave Ford, on whom tonight I will be revenged, and I will deliver his wife into your hand. Follow. Strange things in hand, Master Brooke! Follow. Exeunt. 30

Scene II. [Windsor Little Park.]

Enter PAGE, SHALLOW, [and] SLENDER.

PAGE Come, come; we'll couch^o i' th' Castle ditch^o till we see the light of our fairies. Remember, son Slender, my daughter.

SLENDER Ay, forsooth; I have spoke with her and we have a nay-word^o how to know one another. I come⁵ to her in white, and cry, "mum"; she cries, "budget";^o and by that we know one another.

SHALLOW That's good too. But what needs either your "mum," or her "budget"? The white will decipher her well enough.—It hath struck ten o'clock. 10

PAGE The night is dark; light and spirits will become it well. Heaven prosper our sport. No man means evil but the devil, and we shall know him by his horns. Let's away; follow me. Exeunt.

Scene III. [Outside the Park.]

Enter MISTRESS PAGE, MISTRESS FORD, [and Doctor] CAIUS.

MRS. PAGE Master Doctor, my daughter is in green. When you see your time, take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and dispatch it quickly. Go before into the Park. We two must go together.

CAIUS I know vat I have to do. Adieu. 5

MRS. PAGE Fare you well, sir. [Exit CAIUS.] My husband will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter. But 'tis no matter; better a little chiding than a great deal of heartbreak. 10

MRS. FORD Where is Nan now and her troop of fairies, and the Welsh devil, Hugh?

MRS. PAGE They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's Oak, with obscured lights which at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting they will at once¹⁵ display to the night.

MRS. FORD That cannot choose but amaze^o him.

MRS. PAGE If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked.

MRS. FORD We'll betray him finely. 20

MRS. PAGE

Against such lewdsters^o and their lechery,

Those that betray them do no treachery.

MRS. FORD The hour draws on. To the Oak, to the Oak! Exeunt.

23 life . . . shuttle paraphrased from Job 7:6, "My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle"

V.ii.1 couch hide; Castle ditch a ditch running along the east side of Windsor Castle 5 nay-word password 6 mum . . . budget mumbudget, a game in which the player pretended to be tongue-tied

V.iii.17 amaze frighten 21 lewdsters lechers

Scene IV. [Outside the Park.]

Enter EVANS [disguised as a satyr] and [others as] FAIRIES.

EVANS Trib,^o trib, fairies. Come, and remember your parts. Be pold, I pray you. Follow me into the pit, and when I give the watch-'ords, do as I pid you. Come, come; trib, trib. Exeunt.

Scene V. [Herne's Oak in Windsor Little Park.]

Enter FALSTAFF [disguised as Herne,] with a buck's head upon him.

FALSTAFF The Windsor bell hath struck twelve; the minute draws on. Now, the hot-blooded gods assist me! Remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa;^o love set on thy horns. O powerful love, that in some respects makes a beast a man; in some other, 5 a man a beast. You were also, Jupiter, a swan for the love of Leda.^o O omnipotent love, how near the god drew to the complexion^o of a goose! A fault done first in the form of a beast. O Jove, a beastly fault! And then another fault in the semblance of a fowl; 10 think on't, Jove; a foul fault! When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag; and the fattest, I think, i' th' forest. Send me a cool rut-time,^o Jove, or who can blame me to piss my tallow?^o Who comes here? My doe? 15

[Enter] MISTRESS PAGE [and] MISTRESS FORD.

MRS. FORD Sir John? Art thou there, my deer, my male deer?

FALSTAFF My doe with the black scut!^o Let the sky rain potatoes;^o let it thunder to the tune of "Green-sleeves," hail kissing-comfits,^o and snow eringoes.^o 20 Let there come a tempest of provocation,^o I will shelter me here.

[Hugs her.]

MRS. FORD Mistress Page is come with me, sweetheart.

FALSTAFF Divide me like a bribed^o buck, each a 25 haunch. I will keep my sides to myself, my shoulders for the fellow of this walk,^o and my horns I bequeath your husbands. Am I a woodman,^o ha? Speak I like Herne the Hunter? Why, now is Cupid a child of conscience;^o he makes restitution. As I am a true 30 spirit, welcome!

[Noise within.]

V.iv.1 Trib trip

V.v.3-4 bull . . . Europa disguise adopted by Jove for his abduction of Europa 6-7 swan . . . Leda another animal disguise adopted by Jove in an amorous adventure 8 complexion temperament 14 rut-time annual period of sexual excitement for the male deer 15 piss my tallow during rut-time the main food for the hart was the red mushroom, which supposedly brought on urination 18 scut (1) tail (2) pudendum 19 potatoes sweet potatoes, formerly considered aphrodisiacs 20 kissing-comfits perfumed sweetmeats; eringoes candied seaholly (considered an aphrodisiac) 21 provocation lustful stimulation 25 bribed stolen 27 fellow . . . walk forester on this beat 28 woodman hunter (here, of women) 29-30 of conscience conscientious

MRS. PAGE Alas, what noise?

MRS. FORD Heaven forgive our sins!

FALSTAFF What should this be?

MRS. FORD, MRS. PAGE Away, away! 35
[They run off.]

FALSTAFF I think the devil will not have me damned, lest the oil that's in me should set hell on fire. He would never else cross me thus.

Enter Sir Hugh [EVANS] like a satyr, [ANNE Page] and BOYS dressed like fairies, Mistress QUICKLY like the Queen of Fairies, [PISTOL as Hobgoblin. They carry tapers.]

QUICKLY

Fairies, black, gray, green, and white,
You moonshine revelers, and shades of night, 40
You orphan° heirs of fixed destiny,
Attend your office° and your quality.°
Crier Hobgoblin, make the fairy oyes.°

PISTOL

Elves, list your names; silence, you airy toys!
Cricket, to Windsor chimneys shalt thou leap. 45
Where fires thou find'st unraked° and hearths unswept,
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry.°
Our radiant queen hates sluts° and sluttery.

FALSTAFF

They are fairies; he that speaks to them shall die.
I'll wink° and couch; no man their works must eye. 50
[Lies down upon his face.]

EVANS

Where's Bead? Go you, and where you find a maid
That ere she sleep has thrice her prayers said,
Raise up the organs of her fantasy,°
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy.
But those as sleep and think not on their sins, 55
Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and shins.

QUICKLY

About, about.
Search Windsor Castle, elves, within and out.
Strew good luck, ouphs,° on every sacred room,
That it may stand till the perpetual doom,° 60
In state as wholesome as in state 'tis fit,
Worthy the owner, and the owner it.
The several chairs of Order° look you scour
With juice of balm and every precious flow'r.
Each fair instalment,° coat,° and several crest,° 65
With loyal blazon,° evermore be blest.
And nightly, meadow-fairies, look you sing,
Like to the Garter's compass,° in a ring.
Th' expressure° that it bears, green let it be,

More fertile-fresh than all the field to see; 70
And "Honi soit qui mal y pense"° write
In emerald tufts, flow'rs purple, blue, and white—
Like sapphire, pearl, and rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee—
Fairies use flow'rs for their charactery.° 75
Away, disperse! But till 'tis one o'clock,
Our dance of custom round about the oak
Of Herne the Hunter, let us not forget.

EVANS

Pray you, lock hand in hand; yourselves in order set;
And twenty glowworms shall our lanterns be, 80
To guide our measure round about the tree.
But, stay—I smell a man of middle earth.°

FALSTAFF Heavens defend me from that Welsh fairy, lest he transform me to a piece of cheese!°

PISTOL

Vile worm, thou wast o'erlooked° even in thy birth. 85

QUICKLY

With trial-fire touch me his finger end.
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

PISTOL

A trial, come.

EVANS Come, will this wood take fire? 90

They put the tapers to his fingers, and he starts.

FALSTAFF O, O, O!

QUICKLY

Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire!
About him, fairies, sing a scornful rhyme;
And, as you trip, still pinch him to your time.
The Song.

Fie on sinful fantasy! 95
Fie on lust and luxury!°
Lust is but a bloody fire,°
Kindled with unchaste desire,
Fed in heart, whose flames aspire,
As thoughts do blow them, higher and higher. 100
Pinch him, fairies, mutually;°
Pinch him for his villainy;
Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about,
Till candles and starlight and moonshine be out.

Here they pinch him, and sing about him, and [CAIUS] the doctor comes one way and steals away a boy in green. And SLENDER another way; he takes a boy in white. And FENTON steals Mistress ANNE. And a noise of hunting is made within, and all the FAIRIES run away. FALSTAFF pulls off his buck's head and rises up.

[Enter] PAGE, FORD, [MISTRESS PAGE, MISTRESS
FORD, and EVANS°].

41 orphan possible allusion to the folklore belief that fairies were born spontaneously and thus had no parents 42 office duty; quality profession 43 oyes hear ye (public crier's call) 46 unraked not properly covered with coals 47 bilberry blueberry 48 sluts untidy kitchen-maids 50 wink close my eyes 53 Raise . . . fantasy cause her to have pleasant dreams 59 ouphs elves 60 perpetual doom Day of Judgment 63 chairs of Order stalls of the knights of the Order of the Garter in Saint George's Chapel 65 instalment stall; coat coat of arms; crest helmet (affixed above the stall) 66 blazon armorial bearings 68 compass circle 69 expressure image, picture

71 Honi . . . pense Ill be to him who evil thinks (motto of the Order of the Garter) 75 charactery writing (accent on second syllable) 82 middle earth that section of the universe between heaven and hell, realm of mortals 83-84 Heavens . . . cheese cheese was the favorite food of Welshmen; since Evans smells Falstaff, the latter fears he will be turned into cheese and then devoured 85 o'erlooked bewitched 96 luxury lasciviousness 97 bloody fire fire in the blood 101 mutually jointly 104 s.d. Evans Q1 brings in Evans and Shallow with the others; Evans presumably left the stage at the previous direction, when "all the Fairies run away"; he must reenter because he speaks later; Shallow speaks no lines, but he may well belong to this group scene

PAGE

Nay, do not fly. I think we have watched you^o now. 105
Will none but Herne the Hunter serve your turn?

MRS. PAGE [To PAGE.]

I pray you, come, hold up the jest no higher.^o

[To FALSTAFF.]

Now, good Sir John, how like you Windsor wives?
See you these, husband? [Points to Falstaff's horns.] Do not these fair yokes

Become the forest better than the town? 110

FORD Now sir, who's a cuckold now? Master Brooke, Falstaff's a knave, a cuckoldly knave; here are his horns, Master Brooke. And, Master Brooke, he hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's but his buck basket, his cudgel, and twenty pounds of money, which must be 115 paid to Master Brooke; his horses are arrested^o for it, Master Brooke.

MRS. FORD Sir John, we have had ill luck; we could never meet.^o I will never take you for my love again, but I will always count you my deer. 120

FALSTAFF I do begin to perceive that I am made an ass.

FORD Ay, and an ox^o too: both the proofs^o are extant.

FALSTAFF And these are not fairies? I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet 125 the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers,^o drove the grossness of the foppery^o into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. See now how wit may be made a Jack-a-Lent, when 'tis upon ill employment. 130

EVANS Sir John Falstaff, serve Got and leave your desires, and fairies will not pinse you.

FORD Well said, fairy Hugh.

EVANS [To FORD.] And leave you your jealousies too,
I pray you. 135

FORD I will never mistrust my wife again, till thou art able to woo her in good English.

FALSTAFF Have I laid my brain in the sun and dried it, that it wants^o matter to prevent so gross o'erreaching as this? Am I ridden with a Welsh goat too? Shall I 140 have a coxcomb of frieze?^o 'Tis time I were choked with a piece of toasted cheese.

EVANS Seese is not goot to give putter; your belly is all putter.

FALSTAFF "Seese" and "putter"? Have I lived to 145 stand at the taunt of one that makes fritters of English?
This is enough to be the decay of lust and late-walking^o through the realm.

MRS. PAGE Why, Sir John, do you think though we would have thrust virtue out of our hearts by the 150 head and shoulders, and have given ourselves without scruple to hell, that ever the devil could have made you our delight?

FORD What, a hodge-pudding?^o A bag of flax?

MRS. PAGE A puffed man? 155

105 watched you caught you in the act 107 hold . . .
higher put an end to the jest 116 arrested seized by warrant 119 meet possible aural pun on mate 123 ox fool (from the expression "to make an ox of someone"); proofs i.e., the long horns 127 powers faculties; foppery deceit 139 wants lacks 141 coxcomb of frieze fool's cap of coarse Welsh woolen cloth 147 late-walking staying out late 154 hodge-pudding large sausage of many ingredients

PAGE Old, cold, withered, and of intolerable entrails?

FORD And one that is as slanderous as Satan?

PAGE And as poor as Job?

FORD And as wicked as his wife?

EVANS And given to fornications, and to taverns, and 160 sack and wine and metheglins,^o and to drinkings and swearings and starings,^o pribbles and prabbles?

FALSTAFF Well, I am your theme. You have the start of me; I am dejected;^o I am not able to answer the Welsh flannel.^o Ignorance itself is a plummet^o o'er me. 165
Use me as you will.

FORD Marry, sir, we'll bring you to Windsor, to one Master Brooke, that you have cozened of money, to whom you should have been a pander. Over and above that you have suffered, I think to repay that 170 money will be a biting affliction.

PAGE Yet be cheerful, knight. Thou shalt eat a posset tonight at my house, where I will desire thee to laugh at my wife that now laughs at thee. Tell her Master Slender hath married her daughter. 175

MRS. PAGE [Aside.] Doctors doubt that.^o If Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, Doctor Caius'
wife.

[Enter SLENDER.]

SLENDER Whoa, ho, ho, father Page!

PAGE Son, how now; how now, son! Have you 180 dispatched?^o

SLENDER Dispatched? I'll make the best in Gloucestershire know on't; would I were hanged, la, else.

PAGE Of what, son?

SLENDER I came yonder at Eton to marry Mistress 185 Anne Page, and she's a great lubberly boy. If it had not been i' th' church, I would have swung^o him, or he should have swung me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I might never stir—and 'tis a postmaster's^o boy! 190

PAGE Upon my life, then, you took the wrong.

SLENDER What need you tell me that? I think so, when I took a boy for a girl. If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him. 195

PAGE Why, this is your own folly. Did not I tell you how you should know my daughter by her garments?

SLENDER I went to her in white, and cried, "mum," and she cried, "budget," as Anne and I had appointed;
and yet it was not Anne, but a postmaster's boy. 200

MRS. PAGE Good George, be not angry. I knew of your purpose; turned my daughter into green; and indeed she is now with the doctor at the dean'ry, and there married.

[Enter Doctor CAIUS.]

CAIUS Vere is Mistress Page? By gar, I am cozened! 205
I ha' married un garçon, a boy; un peasant, by gar, a boy; it is not Anne Page. By gar, I am cozened!

MRS. PAGE Why? Did you take her in green?

161 metheglins spiced Welsh mead 162 starings swaggerings 164 dejected cast down 165 Welsh flannel teasing name for a Welshman; plummet (1) garment (from plumbet, a woolen fabric) (2) line for sounding 176 Doctors doubt that expression of disbelief 181 dispatched settled the business 187 swung beaten 190 postmaster master of post horses

CAIUS Ay, be-gar, and 'tis a boy. Be-gar, I'll raise all Windsor. [Exit.] 210

FORD This is strange. Who hath got the right Anne?

PAGE My heart misgives me. Here comes Master Fenton.

[Enter FENTON and ANNE Page.]

How now, Master Fenton!

ANNE

Pardon, good father! Good my mother, pardon! 215

PAGE Now, mistress, how chance you went not with Master Slender?

MRS. PAGE

Why went you not with Master Doctor, maid?

FENTON

You do amaze° her. Hear the truth of it.

You would have married her most shamefully, 220

Where there was no proportion held in love.

The truth is, she and I, long since contracted,°

Are now so sure° that nothing can dissolve us.

Th' offense is holy that she hath committed,

And this deceit loses the name of craft, 225

Of disobedience, or unduteous title,

Since therein she doth evitate° and shun

A thousand irreligious cursèd hours

Which forcèd marriage would have brought upon her.

FORD

Stand not amazed. Here is no remedy. 230

In love the heavens themselves do guide the state;

Money buys lands, and wives are sold by fate.

FALSTAFF I am glad, though you have ta'en a special stand° to strike at me, that your arrow hath glanced.

PAGE

Well, what remedy? Fenton, heaven give thee joy! 235

What cannot be eschewed must be embraced.

FALSTAFF

When night dogs run, all sorts of deer are chased.

MRS. PAGE

Well, I will muse° no further. Master Fenton,

Heaven give you many, many merry days!

Good husband, let us every one go home, 240

And laugh this sport o'er by a country fire;

Sir John and all.

FORD

Let it be so. Sir John,

To Master Brooke you yet shall hold your word;

For he tonight shall lie with Mistress Ford. Exeunt.

219 amaze perplex 222 contracted betrothed 223 sure firmly bound in wedlock

227 evitate avoid 234 stand hunter's place for shooting
238 muse grumble

THE HISTORY OF TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

EDITED BY DANIEL SELTZER

Introduction

The modern student of Troilus and Cressida—reader, spectator, or actor—is faced with complex problems of staging, character, and moral ideas. The challenge of the play has been complicated (in many instances, unnecessarily) by a critical history full of dissension. Some of the insolubles connected with Troilus and Cressida concern the auspices of its first performances, or, indeed, whether it was acted at all before it was printed. Others stem from a consideration of the nature of the play itself, because critics have always felt that it is strange and untypical, and somehow flawed, expounding an approach to life which Shakespeare found uncongenial even as he set it forth. It may be helpful, therefore, to review some basic facts, to indicate those questions that can never be settled with the documentation at our disposal, and then to move on to an appraisal of the work itself and its place in Shakespeare's career. Ultimately, we should try to see in the play the attempt Shakespeare was making to solve certain ethical questions in dramatic form.

The history of the play's first production is inextricably bound up in its early textual history. Literary critics as well as bibliographical historians have been interested in the latter for some years, perhaps because it seems unlikely that so strange a play should be accompanied only accidentally by a curious textual provenance. Believing that the tastes of its first audience might help explain the problematic nature of the play, critics have wanted to know where and for whom it was first performed. Certain aspects of the textual history of Troilus and Cressida seem to offer answers; this has led to great speculation, some of which has tended to obscure the facts.

The facts are these. In February of 1603, the permission of the Stationers' Company was granted to James Roberts to print, "when he hath gotten sufficient aucthority, the booke of Troilus and Cressida, as yt is acted by my Lord Chamberlens men." From whom Roberts had yet to secure "aucthority" is not immediately apparent; presumably it was from the actors themselves, who wanted to block publication for the time being. Nevertheless, the entry clearly documents the existence and performance of Troilus and Cressida by Shakespeare's company, probably during the winter of 1602-03. Roberts, for whatever reason, did not print the play. The first edition of Troilus and Cressida did not appear until almost six years later, when two newcomers to the printing business, Richard Bonian and Henry Walley, published a quarto of the text in January 1609. While the book was still in the press, Bonian and Walley altered its title page and added an extra leaf, which carried an epistle to the reader. The first title page announced the play: "As it was acted by the Kings Maiesties seruants at the Globe." The new title page of the quarto, the same as the first in other particulars, replaced this acknowledgment with the phrase: "Excellently expressing the beginning of their [Troilus and Cressida's] loues, with the conceited wooing of Pandarus Prince of Licia." Following the altered title page appeared the epistle to the reader, unsigned, claiming that the play was "neuer stal'd with the Stage, neuer clapper-clawd with the palmes of the vulger . . . not . . . sullied, with the smoaky breath of the multitude." Finally, in 1623, Troilus and Cressida was printed by Heminges and Condell in their great folio collection of Shakespeare's plays, in a text occasionally fuller than that of the 1609 quarto, but also containing many errors (see the Note on the Text). Troilus and Cressida appears in the section of the Folio containing the tragedies, although its position in this section was altered after printing had begun. The alteration used to be grounds for an inference by some critics that even Shakespeare's editors and colleagues were not certain about the type of play with which they were dealing. More recently, however, textual critics have shown that the change was probably due only to the reluctance of Walley, the surviving publisher of the quarto, to give up his rights to the printer of the Folio—the delay meanwhile causing the latter to withdraw Troilus and Cressida after three pages of it had been set up in type, and to reinsert it later when permission was granted. Thus, although Heminges and Condell apparently classified Troilus and Cressida as a "Tragedy," and although the writer of the 1609 epistle called it a "Comedy," its position in the Folio has nothing to do with the ambiguous nature of the play itself; after all, both title pages of the 1609 quarto call it a "History." Nothing is really proved by this contradictory nomenclature except how casual the Elizabethan and Jacobean vocabulary was when it came to naming genres.

Although unnecessary problems raised by the play's position in the Folio have been removed, the earlier printer's claim that Troilus and Cressida had never been applauded "with the palmes of the vulger" has elicited various and conflicting interpretations: the play, indeed, was never acted; it entered rehearsals, proved too difficult, and was withdrawn; it was acted not for the "vulger" at the public theater, but for an audience of sophisticated and cynical wits at the Inns of Court; it was actually produced at the Globe but was a failure with the "multitude," therefore "neuer clapper-clawd." We should note that all these conjectures are possible only because of the altered title page and printer's epistle in the quarto; but neither of these bibliographical facts should obscure the evidence of the original entry in the Stationers' Register (that Shakespeare's company had acted the play by the beginning of 1603), nor that of the first 1609 title page (which tells us specifically that the play "was acted by the Kings Maiesties seruants at the Globe"). Any further suggestions about the theatrical provenance of the play are clearly conjectural. More important, interpretations of characters, mood, and general intention of Troilus and Cressida that are based on such conjecture should be considered with great caution.

One such interpretation that has attained considerable currency is that the play was acted by Shakespeare's company for the young lawyers at one of the Inns of Court, and that it was especially written and rehearsed for this occasion. Such circumstances, the theory maintains, would not only be in keeping with the cynical mood and legalistic rhetoric of the drama, but with the claims of the epistle, whose author is careful to state only that the play was never performed for the "vulger," and not that it had never been performed at all. If this is the case, however, it represents the only example during Shakespeare's career of any play actually subsidized for a special production in this manner. To purchase a single performance for a play already in the public repertory was something else entirely—Elizabeth's court did this frequently—but it was very costly to do so. Moreover, although much in the play would delight the ears of a cynic, and although some of the language in it is drawn (very generally) from legal vocabulary, the fact remains that the bitterness of this drama runs deeper than the self-conscious sneer that often accompanies sarcasm. There is metaphor drawn from the law in many other Shakespearean plays, and one should ask, in reading or seeing Troilus and Cressida, whether some of its abstractions and overblown circumlocutions may not have a more general purpose than the pleasure of some law students attending a theatrical charade.

To suggest that Shakespeare wrote the play for the students to act themselves is even more unlikely. Troilus and Cressida is extremely difficult for amateurs to perform, even if they are very talented and very cynical. Pandarus' allusions to prostitutes and others employed in the "hold-door trade" would have been absurd in a performance for one of the Inns; illogical, indeed, before any audience except that of the public theater. This epilogue is as unsavory and ugly as anything in Thersites' "mastic" harangues, and although we may not like to think so, it, and the action preceding it, must have been spoken in a public theater by actors in Shakespeare's company.

Whether the public audience applauded it is another matter. Troilus and Cressida may not have been performed more than once or twice, and it is very possible that Bonian and Walley, as they prepared the first title page for their 1609 quarto, knew only that the play was by an extremely successful dramatist and that it had once been acted at the Globe. Details of failures, even today, are not often remembered after seven or eight years. Whatever made them decide to alter the title page, deleting the acknowledgment to Shakespeare's company and inserting the epistle to the reader, we can never know. We must keep in mind, however, that possibly their correction was itself a mistake. In any case, the inserted phrase about the "conceited wooing of Pandarus Prince of Licia" was an easy line filler for the deleted acknowledgment, and no publisher has ever shrunk from a descriptive phrase that might promote sales of his book. The tone of the epistle indicates that Bonian and Walley knew a good thing when they saw it, and they were delighted to have in their possession a play by Shakespeare which six years earlier his own company apparently had tried to withhold from publication, and which had been in the repertory but was not generally known.

Our only positive evidence dates Troilus and Cressida before February 1603, in performance at the Globe Theatre by the King's Men (then the Lord Chamberlain's Men). Although it is probably impossible to solve the riddle of this play's textual history, it is important to keep that mystery separate from the enigma of the play itself. There is no doubt that the peculiar strengths and failings of Troilus and Cressida are unique in the Shakespearean canon; even when compared to the other so-called problem plays (Measure for Measure, All's Well That Ends Well), it stands by itself. Troilus and Cressida contains speeches that illuminate difficult portions of other plays, but seem somehow incongruous in this one; most of its cast of characters were traditionally associated with ideals of romance and chivalry, but even as they describe heroic emotions and speak the old ringing epithets, these figures appear addicted to long-winded gossip, petty projects, morbid preoccupations, and selfishly narrow ambitions. Such incongruities remind us of the intentions and methods of satire, and it has been suggested that Troilus and Cressida was Shakespeare's specific attempt to write in the currently popular vein of "comical satire." But human depravity obviously saddened Shakespeare infinitely more than it angered Marston, Jonson, or Chapman, and the satirical elements of the play have ultimately very little to do with the final impression it makes in reading, or with its overall effect in the theater. If the play has a satirical spokesman, it is Thersites, but Thersites' corrosive voice hardly speaks for balance or good sense, and, if the actor is brave enough to play him correctly, no audience smiles upon him except in embarrassment. At first, one may suspect satirical intention behind such incongruous components as Ulysses' eloquent perceptions and the insignificant use made of them, but much of the pathos of the play occurs in just those scenes that would be mercilessly satirical if Shakespeare were being consistent. It has been proposed, with good logic, that in Troilus and Cressida Shakespeare consciously imitated or unconsciously assimilated certain elements of cynicism and satire from the plays then being performed by child actors with great success at Blackfriars and Paul's.

Perhaps less than a year before the composition of Troilus and Cressida, Shakespeare allowed Hamlet himself to express surprise that these children should "carry it away," even in competition with "Hercules and his load too." Always alert to the economic problems of his profession as well as to the artistic ones, Shakespeare was inevitably influenced by the issues that the war of the theaters expressed, but although this influence surely affected some aspects of Troilus and Cressida, it can never be held accountable for the play as a whole.

In the problems that the drama presents for directors, actors, and stage designers, one may find, perhaps, a clue to its mystery, a way to understand why some parts of it are so emotionally and intellectually satisfying, others so flat and ill-conceived. Problems of modern production often reveal with lucidity the answers to many questions that a purely literary approach cannot solve. Although probably no modern production of this play can make it a satisfactory theatrical experience (as much may have been said of the script in 1602), one quality that does emerge in production tells us much about the development of Shakespeare's ideas around the time Troilus and Cressida was written. That quality is one of energetic experimentation—experimentation not of the amateur, unsure of his materials, nor of the craftsman temporarily exhausted and therefore forgetting for the moment the almost automatic use of his tools. Rather, Troilus and Cressida reminds one of a study by Michelangelo, boldly and completely rendered in some places, lightly blocked in elsewhere—the whole cartoon groping with line and space to build a conception that seems to develop before us, sometimes obscure but never tentative, and that will require ultimately another form, perhaps even a different medium, for its perfect expression.

In producing Troilus and Cressida for the stage, this quality of experimentation, of searching for form, comes to the director when he first tries to develop an overall conception of the action and the general style that should guide him when rehearsals begin, but he is likely to discover early in his efforts that this play defies such an attempt. This is why Troilus and Cressida, perhaps more frequently than any other play by Shakespeare, succumbs in preparation to that last effort of the desperate director, a striking form of modern dress. The modern theater has seen Troilus and Cressida in Edwardian dress, modish evening clothes, Wild West costumes, and the uniforms of the American Civil War; and there is little doubt that such aberrations occur (invariably in the name of originality or "significance to the modern audience") because the director, in forgivable despair, has begun to mistrust the text itself.

A setting for this play usually presents problems. Perhaps the original plan of the director and his designer is to use a three-sided apron stage, approximating the projection of the platform in the Elizabethan public theaters; they have envisioned the dramatic potentials of certain speeches delivered from different parts of this remarkable acting area: the oaths of the two lovers, for example, just before Pandarus packs them off to bed; Ulysses' two great addresses, the first of which seems especially to require the magnificent plenitude of space provided by the apron stage; the great quintet near the end of the play, when Troilus, Ulysses, and Thersites watch and comment upon the surrender of Cressida to Diomedes; the last chaotic battle exchanges, which require maximum fluidity of movement. If, however, on the basis of such scenes, a setting is provided that utilizes the large, even epic proportions of the open platform, the director and actors will soon discover that in other portions of the play so much space becomes a burden instead of an advantage. Even scenes that begin with the promise of pomp and procession become, within twenty or thirty lines, scenes of intimate discussion. The Trojan princes marching over the stage (I.ii.189–245) are much less important to the progress of the play than the innuendos and small talk of Cressida and Pandarus; nor is there suspense built in anticipation of the entrance of Troilus himself, for we have already seen him, and, having heard Cressida's replies to Pandarus' gossip, we are even prepared for her coy response when he appears. The combat between Hector and Ajax (IV.v.113) is a red herring for the director, because this combat, when it finally happens, is dramatically uninteresting compared to other portions of the scene—Ulysses' enthusiastic praise of Troilus, for example, or Troilus and Ulysses' short exchange, which ends the episode; the combat is especially pale compared to the byplay between Achilles and Hector. If the director plans the moves of his actors to emphasize the apparent climax of the episode, he will find that the real interest of the scene has shifted elsewhere, that the point of the action is not what he thought it was, and that whatever this scene should be, it is not a scene of pageantry.

The actors themselves will face problems of characterization comparable to the vocal difficulties of an operatic baritone who, while studying his role, comes suddenly upon an aria written in the range of a tenor. If, for example, Hector is as sharply intelligent as he appears throughout the debate with Troilus and Paris (II.ii), the actor playing him will have difficulty portraying the hero's flabby and illogical surrender at the end of the scene. It is true that men commit themselves every day to causes in which they do not believe, but this irony does not impregnate Hector's

I am yours,
You valiant offspring of great Priamus.
I have a roisting challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits.
I was advertised their great general slept
Whilst emulation in the army crept;
This, I presume, will wake him. (II.ii.206–13)

These lines neither satirize Hector nor (as has been suggested) reveal ironically the fate of reason in a situation of uncontrolled passion. Moreover, they do not contain the sort of formalized change of motivation that occurs frequently in Elizabethan plays, and which an actor must cope with as best he can. These lines are simply a manifestation of the history to which Shakespeare was bound and to which his previous development of Hector's intelligence and viewpoint was inimical.

Experimentation with motive and personality that results in inconsistent characterization presents difficulties for actors in other roles. The actress playing Cressida appears on stage only twice after she has been exchanged by the Trojans for Antenor; earlier (III.ii.61–194 and IV.ii.100-02) she has managed somehow the character's unrealistic anticipation of her own treachery, but, after her tearful leave-taking of Troilus, in which his repeated cry, "Be true," has touched her own fears, Cressida must parade happily among the Grecian generals, who kiss her "in general," and receive Ulysses' coldly perceptive insult. Whatever the actress has made of Cressida earlier, she is now the brassy and degraded slut the Elizabethans had been taught to expect. She appears only once more, to fall to Diomedes, and the actress must decide how to effect this transition of character. Once again, the problem is not so much one of an unfamiliar convention, but of unreconciled strands of development.

Such difficulties of production, and others similar to them, suggest that one of Shakespeare's major problems in composing Troilus and Cressida was not only consistency of character in the normal sense, but the nature of constancy itself, whether in politics or in love. Each of the troublesome matters noted above concerns the continuity of some factor pertinent to all parts of the text, whether that factor is stage setting or characterization. In IV.v Hector's dialogue with Achilles assumes more importance than his short fight with Ajax, because it is Achilles and not Ajax who should have entered the lists against the Trojan champion. It would be in keeping with Elizabethan ideas of order and degree for Achilles to maintain the identity of an active hero, and Ulysses wishes to goad him on toward his proper role. But more important, we listen eagerly to the talk between Hector and Achilles because so much in the play concerns sentiments identical to those motivating these men: Hector's faith in the principles that define what is right and good, and Achilles' surrender to the "one touch of nature" that can make all human beings blind and selfish. The confrontation of these men demands full use of the open stage, with the other actors distributed so as to emphasize it, but the machinery of Ajax's exhibition bout still hangs fire, and Shakespeare, almost as though he were working out the problem before our eyes, develops his main line of interest without bothering to erase false starts and unnecessary detail.

There is no need to examine in every character the way in which inconstancy, as a thematic concern, vitiates dramatic consistency. One final example is provided importantly by the heroine of the play. In the first half of the action Cressida is full and varied, yet her later fall from constancy is so baldly unqualified that Shakespeare's interest seems to have been attracted more to the violence of the metamorphosis than to maintaining the credibility of the character. No simple reliance upon the Elizabethan rumor of Cressida's harlotry can explain her sudden and complete degeneration.

The nature of that constancy which can preserve felicity in love and stability in politics had concerned Shakespeare since he began writing plays, and it was to remain a fundamental concern throughout his career. Troilus and Cressida is a pivotal play in the canon because it looks forward and backward simultaneously, indicating the ways in which Shakespeare's view of constancy was developing, and the dramatic forms that eventually would have to be employed to render that development effectively. From the beginning, he had found great dramatic potential in the stability that can be maintained only by the king who mirrors in himself an ordered nation, and in the fidelity of love that can overcome laughable folly or dangerous misunderstanding. By far the greater part of his writing had been, consequently, in varying forms of romantic comedy and patriotic chronicle-histories (the latter a theatrical form that may actually have been Shakespeare's own conception). He had also dramatized, though with less frequency, that form of constancy within the individual which forces him to be so energetically true to himself in love or even in crime that he can no longer be tolerated in the world of living men. In the lives of those tortured kings whose stories had added the aspect of tragedy to some of the history plays, Shakespeare had found that the world of politics could serve as background to the story of an individual whose mind demanded isolation from his surroundings, and whose actions would effect a downfall as inevitable as his virtues were magnificent. The two years preceding Troilus and Cressida saw Shakespeare's utilization of Roman politics for the scene of Brutus' individual tragedy. The fall of Julius Caesar, finished by the middle of the play, is patterned after the simple downward movement of Fortune's wheel—the pattern of almost all late medieval and early Tudor tragedies. But Shakespeare intended that his exploration of Brutus' constancy should hold the center of the drama; in Julius Caesar his refining hand turned attention in upon the mind of the hero himself. Roughly contemporary with this play were the romantic comedies As You Like It and Twelfth Night, each touched with a pervasive melancholy, each in its own way implying that only the truth of love can survive the vicissitudes of the world, the "rain [that] raineth every day." Perhaps a year before Troilus and Cressida came Hamlet, in which the public and private responsibilities of the mind are probed with a range and precision that elude comment. It may be helpful to observe, however, that many of the problems that challenge Hamlet's mind are paralleled by those that confuse the Trojan princes and the Greek generals. In both Hamlet and Troilus and Cressida, the authority of law is opposed by individual desire or private principle; in both, the ultimate canon of morality is set against the honor, real or supposed, of the individual; and in both, the definition of honor, "rightly to be great," is strenuously argued by those who have most at stake.

In Troilus and Cressida Shakespeare tried for the first time to combine in dramatic terms a story of love with a story of public affairs. It is worth noting that in the major tragedies that follow, the personal fate of the hero is inextricably bound up in the world of the state, and that in Troilus and Cressida Shakespeare made his first real study of the relationship between the pressures of the public world and the survival of love. Hamlet's uncle believed that "within the very flame of love" there lived a power which would destroy it, that, like goodness itself, it could not remain constant, but would grow "to a plurisy" and die in its own excess (Hamlet, IV.vii)—a metaphor very similar to Ulysses' description of passion, the "universal wolf" that would "last eat up himself" (I.iii.121, 124). Whatever Claudius' opinion, however, Shakespeare clearly believed that true love, untainted with destructive appetite, would not alter "when it alteration finds. . . . But [bear] it out even to the edge of doom" (Sonnet 116). These two statements articulate extremes that became the foundations for much of Shakespeare's thinking in the second half of his professional career; again and again he concerned himself with those forms of love that would survive all trials or succumb to the snares of the world. Always the process involved a growth of self-knowledge, and in King Lear, his most inclusive tragic statement, Shakespeare was able to show that after the greatest suffering might come the greatest achievement—a perception of constancy more powerful than any worldly reward or punishment; and that after such perception, death could come almost as a reward, as the final felicity.

Naturally, the creation of dramatic situations capable of sustaining this sort of action required a gradual revision of forms in which to work, and Shakespeare searched continually for the most appropriate modes of expression. That he moved from romantic comedy and history to tragedy, and from tragedy to romance, indicates a developing view of life and art; this development should not be divided into sharply limited chronological “periods,” each one represented by a different kind of play. Nothing could be more misleading, for even in Shakespeare’s earliest plays are individual lines and scenes as typical of his mature outlook as anything in the last romances. His metamorphosis of dramatic forms is more like Beethoven’s progress toward the last piano sonatas and string quartets—a steady growth, a long series of experiments and finished monuments, none actually exclusive of the others, but attaining finally an absolute correspondence between idea and expression. Coming where it does in Shakespeare’s development, Troilus and Cressida contains within it all the components of the playwright’s most typical tragic pattern, but arranged in such a way as to prohibit the achievement possible in that form.

In 1601, probably about a year before the first performances of Troilus and Cressida, Shakespeare’s poem The Phoenix and the Turtle was published in Love’s Martyr, a collection of allegorical and emblematic verse. The subject matter of this poem clarifies the nature of Shakespeare’s thematic concerns in his play, and it is no accident that in both poem and play one senses the author’s effort to shape difficult materials to his purpose. The Phoenix and the Turtle describes the remarkable union of the mythical Phoenix and the Turtledove, in which love was so complete that even Reason stands amazed at the sight. In this mating, we are told, “number . . . in love was slain,” for two separate lovers became one, and “Property” itself—the defining essence of the individual thing—was “appalled.”

Property was thus appalled,
That the self was not the same;
Single nature’s double name
Neither two nor one was called.

(37-40)

These two lovers, in themselves all “Beauty, truth, and rarity,” do not survive their own union, but are consumed “In a mutual flame,” even as each finds absolute perfection in the other. The implication is that such absolute love cannot survive its own assault upon reason; its achievement is set forth as admirable and its inevitable passing as wonderful, but the poem also articulates the great sadness of such an event. It is a funeral dirge in which Reason, personified as the voice of admiration, composes the closing hymn of praise—a hymn, Shakespeare says specifically, “As chorus to their tragic scene.”

Claudius’ “too-much” of love, drowning itself in a “plurisy,” may be equated with the self-cannibalism of appetite, as described by Ulysses; but these are a far cry from the admirable, yet sadly “tragic scene,” which Shakespeare paints in The Phoenix and the Turtle. Shakespeare articulated in this poem—perhaps for the first time in his career—what was to become his most powerful dramatic irony in plays still to come: that the purity of love in “the marriage of true minds,” while stronger than any other human achievement, cannot survive in the material world; and, as he demonstrated about five years after Troilus and Cressida, in the glorious conclusion to Antony and Cleopatra, such an achievement in love is inimical to that earthly order which must control the reasonable state. In this sense, the coolly efficient Octavius Caesar, in Antony and Cleopatra, and the personified Reason, in The Phoenix and the Turtle, both observe the same qualities of constancy in the dead lovers before them. The possession of these qualities was a basic criterion for tragedy, as Shakespeare must have understood the form at this time. The pure strains of love of Troilus for Cressida and of Antony for Cleopatra are, speaking quantitatively, the same; but a tragedy is the result of Antony’s love, because he is as constant as Cleopatra’s beauty is felicitous. However, “Property” in Troilus and Cressida cannot be “appalled” by “simple . . . so well compounded”; in this play no miraculous marriage of “Truth and Beauty” deserves the repose of death.

In its structural position in the play, Troilus’ sight of Cressida, as she gives in to Diomedes, corresponds to the insight that carries the truly tragic hero toward his death; but what Troilus sees, though the truth, runs counter to his ideal, and to this ideal he is as constant as any genuinely tragic hero. His vocabulary, as he tries to convince both himself and Ulysses that what he has seen cannot actually have taken place, is very similar to that of The Phoenix and the Turtle. “If there be rule in unity itself,” he cries, “This was not she” (V.ii.139-40)—recalling the paradox in the poem that “number” (that is, that “one” cannot be “two”) “was slain,” that the lovers merged into one entity, yet preserved their distinct essences. Building upon the conceit that there must be two Cressidas—his own, faithfully waiting in Troy, and this one, who is Diomedes’—he elaborates the most painful truth in the play: that what has seemed glorious and admirable, is not so.

This she? No, this is Diomed’s Cressida.
If beauty have a soul, this is not she;
If souls guide vows, if vows be sanctimonies,
If sanctimony be the gods’ delight,
If there be rule in unity itself,
This was not she. O madness of discourse,
That cause sets up with and against itself:
Bifold authority, where reason can revolt
Without perdition, and loss assume all reason
Without revolt. This is, and is not, Cressid.

(V.ii.135-44)

Shakespeare wanted to show the disruption of constancy in both streams of action in the play—that of the love affair, and that of the famous war. Troilus’ view of Cressida in Diomedes’ arms does not give him that sublime lucidity of the tragic hero, but tempts him instead toward nihilism;

his prayer, as the play closes, is that Troy's destruction be swift, that the gods show their mercy by sending "brief plagues." Similarly, the great order of government that is Ulysses' ideal, and in which all men must assume their proper degree, is shown to elude the Greek generals. Shakespeare never maligns the ideal itself (it would be absurd to imagine that the author of the English histories would do so!), but he allows Thersites to remark how "that stale old mouse-eaten dry cheese, Nestor, and that same dog-fox, Ulysses" have failed it:

O' the t'other side, the policy of those crafty swearing rascals . . . is not proved worth a blackberry. They set me up, in policy, that mongrel cur, Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind, Achilles; and now is the cur Ajax prouder than the cur Achilles, and will not arm today. Whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarism, and policy grows into an ill opinion. (V.iv.9-17)

Many of the difficulties of this play in performance, as we have seen, occur because the dramatic rendering of inconstancy in love and in the state actually forces an inconstancy of character and a jarring sequence of events. To make the metamorphoses of love and political honor as striking as possible, Shakespeare first had to set forth both in their admirable condition. That Troilus' love and Ulysses' ideal polity come to nothing is not the result of satirical intention, but rather the requirement of the particular history Shakespeare chose to render dramatically. He always chose his plots carefully, and must have realized that the story of the lovers and the war contained the potential for tragedy, as he was beginning to understand it, but never achieved it. In Antony and Cleopatra, after all, he was to demonstrate how a "marriage of true minds," violently drawn together with physical and spiritual joy, would admit no impediments, even that of the Roman state; in Troilus and Cressida, he chose a plot full of impediments which are appallingly effective. The Trojan lover dotes upon his own ideal of faith as much as he dotes upon his faithless woman, and is blinded to a true perception of worth. His ringing question, "What's aught but as 'tis valued?" implies assessment by only one of two parties in love, for whatever price Troilus puts upon Cressida, he has yet to learn that she holds herself cheap. Similarly, that "policy grows into an ill opinion" in the Greek camp shows that its leaders have been insufficient to Ulysses' early description of divine and earthly order; and they, and Ulysses himself, have substituted machination—Thersites' "policy"—for true statecraft. On stage, what begins as divine intelligence ends as a practical joke.

We must not forget that Shakespeare's Elizabethan audiences (public or private) probably would not have found the inconsistencies of Troilus and Cressida where we find them. In the retelling of a story so familiar, they would have been surprised, for example, that so much hope is engendered in the first part of the play for Cressida's constancy, and not that she proves unfaithful. Ulysses' "degree" speech, perhaps the locus classicus in modern study of the Elizabethan conception of the "Great Chain of Being," is the sort of speech ordinarily suggestive in Shakespeare of a different dramatic decorum; it explicitly defines an ideal that this play never renders in action.

All this Shakespeare must have realized. The incidents of the Troy story chosen for dramatization predicated disappointment in the love plot and a shambles of order in the story of the war; even if he planned to carry forward the story of Troy in the sequel, which many critics infer from Pandarus' epilogue, surely he knew that in this drama the materials he had chosen demanded an ending in which no realization of the ideal was possible. Moreover, he knew that although the sequence of events and partial characterizations of his history were basically appropriate to the "tragic scene," he would be dealing as well with incongruities of folly and affectation suggestive of comic decorum. Since his audience would be familiar with his fable, he could count on their awareness of traditional characters and events; but even though he did not strive for novelty, he must have wondered how the implicit ethical significance of his rendering would be received. Moreover, since the public nature of the state was the background for the action, he would have realized that he was combining, for the first time with equal importance, a romantic story with an historical story. Clearly he desired to indicate a parallel between the betrayal of love that ends the former and the disintegration of heroism that ends the latter. Shakespeare may have anticipated the intractable nature of some of his materials, and it is quite possible that, during its composition, he knew that Troilus and Cressida might turn out to be an imperfect play—but the experiment fascinated him, and it was necessary.

The dangers that can prevent the triumph of love—both external to it and within it—occupied his mind henceforth, but his genius as a practical man of the theater did not always prevent this interest from assuming proportions inappropriate to the play at hand. Just as Shylock's monstrous faith in himself had almost swamped the romantic action of The Merchant of Venice, Angelo's morbidly distorted concept of law and love in Measure for Measure (written three or four years after Troilus and Cressida) was disproportionate to the romantic action surrounding it. Ultimately—but not until Antony and Cleopatra had shown him the way—Shakespeare discovered the dramatic form in which the persistent faith necessary for tragic achievement could be preserved in the living world, in which the ideal is made part of reality. The dying life in Troilus and Cressida is far from the world of romance, but the qualities of humanity and the grace of nature required to revivify men are so violently excluded from the fabric of the play, that these healing powers become more explicit for their absence. The characters of Troilus and Cressida are unable to achieve them, but by implication we know what they must be.

Following an earlier formula for tragical action, Shakespeare created, in Romeo and Juliet, a hero and heroine whose hopes seem almost mechanically doomed; the truth and beauty of their faith stand no chance against the external accidents of the world, although their love never alters in purity. After Romeo and Juliet, Shakespeare slowly shifted his emphasis; the character's inner strength to withstand external impediments became more important than an arbitrary caprice of fate, and the cause of disaster or tragic achievement was shown thereafter to reside within the human personality itself. Such causes were never again only partially articulated. In Troilus and Cressida they are frighteningly explicit, and because of the experimental form of the play they appear to us brutal and even cynical.

But Thersites' view of the world was never Shakespeare's. Never again was he to allow his audiences to witness such despair in the ability of men to achieve grace in love or death.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCES

There is no single source for Troilus and Cressida, but there are several works with which we can be certain Shakespeare was familiar, and which he probably used in composing the play. Modern editions of these are listed at the end of this note. Homer's poem, of course, stands behind the story of the war, and Shakespeare's Greek, while less than his small Latin, might have been sufficient to cope with it. He also used the first parts of Chapman's translation of the Iliad, published in 1598 (Seaven Bookes of the Iliades and Achilles Shield); Chapman's later work on Homer appeared too late for Shakespeare's use in this play. Certain details of characterization and action, however, indicate that he either consulted Homer directly or used one of the full Latin or French translations of the sixteenth century; some of these details, such as the characterization of Ulysses and the abuse of Hector's body, could not have resulted from hearsay or pseudo-Homeric versions. Other aspects of the camp scenes, both Greek and Trojan, stem from Lydgate's Sege of Troye (c. 1412-20) or Caxton's Recuyell of the Historyes of Troye (1475). Both of these are derived ultimately from early pseudo-Homeric narratives, their more immediate source being the Historia Troiana (1287) of Guido delle Colonne; Guido had also provided one of the secondary sources for Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde. Shakespeare also knew Arthur Golding's translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses, some parts of which touch upon the story of the Trojan War.

Shakespeare's major source for the love story was Chaucer's great narrative poem, Troilus and Criseyde (1382-85), although one must qualify immediately the nature of his reliance upon it. The bones of the story, as Shakespeare knew it, and even some details of the action are from Chaucer, but it would be most misleading to assume that Shakespeare's treatment of the tale resembles Chaucer's. The qualities of the story that attracted Shakespeare, and to which he added much more specific action concerning the characters in the camp scenes, were not those emphasized—nor perhaps even recognized—by his most important predecessor in English literature. Chaucer's treatment of the story emphasizes the charm of the lovers and, while it lasts, the delight of their union. Pandarus is a warmhearted, benevolent courtier, himself a servant of love, though unsuccessful in his own amours. His humor is invariably genial, and although some of his jests are broad, they are never obscene. His main desire is the happiness of Troilus and Criseyde, and he is shocked into melancholy silence when he hears the news of Criseyde's betrayal. The heroine herself is a young woman of considerable dignity, imagination, and charm, with none of the coquetry or worldliness of Shakespeare's girl. She yields to Troilus only after long persuasion, and, befriended by Hector himself, enjoys a good reputation throughout the city. Chaucer's Troilus, like Shakespeare's, is a faithful and sensitive lover; but the affair is conducted in a vastly different manner in the two narratives. Pandarus, in Shakespeare's play, is glibly obscene, coarsely sentimental, and, frequently, hardly more than a leering voyeur, anxious for the lovers' happiness, but deriving from it what appears to be sexual pleasure for himself. In Chaucer's poem, the powers of love ennoble those who serve it, and the union of Troilus and Criseyde is set forth as an event of great beauty and cheer.

In Chaucer, the significance of Criseyde's fall is set against that of the great city itself, and both become part of a larger and more general sadness. Criseyde is shown to be confused and weak, but her lonely position in the Greek camp is also poignantly described. She becomes an instrument in the fortunes of both Troilus and Diomedes, and some emphasis is thereby withdrawn from her faithless act itself. Her treachery is lamentable, but it is somehow overshadowed by the tragedy of Troy and the fate of mankind in general. Far from acknowledging in Criseyde an implicit harlotry, Chaucer sets forth, simply and with deep sadness, the tale of her loss. He is as moved by it as Pandarus, and seems to learn, with Troilus, that solace, if it can be found at all, is to be found in something more permanent than the life of this world. It should not be assumed that Chaucer's psychology was less subtle than Shakespeare's; it is derived in this poem, in fact, from the elaborate pattern of behavior defined in the code of courtly love—a code that could effect great beauty and delicacy of human feeling. Although Shakespeare's times—and ours—would describe such behavior pejoratively, as based in an adulterous relationship, no condemnation is implicit in Chaucer's work. It should be noted that his Criseyde is a widow when she first sees Troilus. His characters are capable of great strength and constancy, but Chaucer shows that the capricious movement of Fortune's wheel can crush what is beautiful and cause what is apparently constant to pass. His narrative is tragic in its treatment of the lovers' fall, comic to the extent that its characters are prone to folly and delusion.

By the time Shakespeare decided to write Troilus and Cressida, the story of the lovers had been retold many times, and the character of Cressida had been debased to that of a harlot. Chiefly responsible for this metamorphosis was Henryson's The Testament of Cresseid, which after 1532, when it was printed as Chaucer's in an edition of his works; was thought to be authentically Chaucerian. Henryson's poem is a sequel to the earlier narrative, beginning after Diomedes, tiring of her, dismisses Cresseid. The girl rails against the gods in whom she had placed her trust, particularly Venus and Cupid, and in anger they transform her into a leper; she laments and goes upon her way, and finally dies—but not before Prince Troilus, upon his horse, passes her in the road and, not recognizing her transformed face, gives her alms. Henryson's tale treats the character of Cresseid sympathetically and with great human insight, although she is condemned for her faithlessness and especially for her great pride. Nevertheless, the Elizabethans read the piece entirely in the light of Cresseid's treachery, and it was not long before she became synonymous with all the evil qualities that the character in Shakespeare's play is willing to acknowledge if she prove false: "Yea, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood, / 'As false as Cressid'" (III.ii.193-94).

There had been other dramatic renderings of the story before Shakespeare's, but all are lost; there is little doubt, however, that Cressida appeared in these versions as a strumpet. A surviving stage direction from the lost play by Chettle and Dekker (1599) reads, "Enter Cressida, with Beggars"—probably the company of lepers among whom, in Henryson's poem, she dies. References to Cressida as a whore abound in Elizabethan literature, and we may be sure that, just as the word for a base procurer stems from her uncle's name, her own became an equally common epithet.

The significance of this transformation should not be underestimated, although we may regret the violence it appears to do Chaucer and even Henryson. Shakespeare, in fact, may have been attracted to the plot, as I have suggested in the Introduction, because of its apparently unqualified statement of inconstancy. In this sense, his use of Homer (and Chapman's Homer), Lydgate, and Caxton is much closer to our normal understanding of the word "source" than is his reliance upon Chaucer. Although most of the details of the story are transformed, those relating to the camp and council scenes stand much closer to the originals than does his treatment of the love story.

Modern editions of major sources:

H. Bergen, ed. Lydgate's Troy Book. Early English Text Society, No. 97 (1906); Nos. 103, 106 (1908); No. 126 (1935).

Allardyce Nicoll, ed. Chapman's Homer (Bollingen Series XLI). 2 vols. New York: Pantheon Books, Inc., 1956.

F. N. Robinson, ed. Troilus and Criseyde, in The Complete Works of Geoffrey Chaucer. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company; London: Oxford University Press, 1933. 2nd ed., 1957.

R. K. Root, ed. The Book of Troilus and Criseyde by Geoffrey Chaucer. Princeton, N. J.: Princeton University Press, 1945.

H. O. Sommer, ed. Caxton's The Recuyell of the Historyes of Troye. 2 vols. London: 1894.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

It is now generally believed that the 1609 quarto of Troilus and Cressida was printed from a transcript made from Shakespeare's original draft of the play. It omits about forty-five lines, the Prologue, and many stage directions that appear in the Folio, but on the whole contains a text that stands closer to Shakespeare's original than does that of the Folio. Since the compositors of the Folio apparently worked not only from the quarto but from Shakespeare's autograph manuscript, it is surprising that they did not produce the better text; their readings are mainly inferior to those of the quarto.

The relative values of the two texts (both of them, in different ways, stemming from Shakespeare's manuscript, and both of them, therefore, authoritative) depend on the nature of the copy used by the compositors, and the care and intelligence with which they worked. It is possible that the quarto represents the play as it was shortened for performance, but it is more likely that the transcriber of the original manuscript was confused by Shakespeare's own second thoughts and deletions and failed to record some revisions and added speeches. On the other hand, although the compositors of the Folio probably had for reference and collation not only the quarto but the original manuscript itself, their goal was speed and not always accuracy. While they added many lines omitted in the quarto, they also introduced many mistaken readings; one compositor in particular evidently suited himself in interpreting difficult words and phrases, and made hash of most of them. Other portions of the Folio text were printed with greater care, however, and since the manuscript at hand may have been used in the playhouse, these portions include more complete stage directions and speech heads than appear in the quarto. The Folio, therefore, supplies the fuller text; it should be used occasionally to emend the quarto, but the earlier edition remains the better text. Its readings are frequently superior to those of the Folio, although, naturally, where the Folio prints speeches entirely omitted in the quarto, these must be considered authoritative. Similarly, those readings in the Folio which introduce corrections on the basis of copy that was either Shakespeare's or very close to his should be followed.

The present edition is based on the quarto but adds passages from the Folio. (These additions are recorded in the list of departures printed below.) Act and scene divisions (none are given for this play in quarto or Folio) have been added in square brackets, along with simple indications of locale. Abbreviations have been amplified, spelling and punctuation have been modernized, and "and" is printed "an" when it means "if." The position of a few stage directions has been slightly altered when necessary. Other departures from the quarto are listed below, the adopted reading first in boldface type, and then the original reading in roman. The adopted reading is most often from the Folio; when it is not, it is followed by [ed.] to indicate that it is an editor's conjecture rather than an authoritative reading.

Dedicatory address 39 state [ed.] states
Prologue [Q omits] 12 barks [ed.; F has "Barke"] 19 Sperr [ed.; F has "Stirre"]
I.i.78 she were not she were 80 what care I what I
I.ii.17 they the 36 s.d. Enter Pandarus [Q omits] 184 Ilium Ilium 209 man's heart man heart 245 s.d. Enter Common Soldiers [Q omits] 288 s.d. Exit Pandarus [Q omits]
I.iii.s.d. Sennet [Q omits] 13 every euer 31 thy the 36 patient ancient 54 Returns [ed.] Retires 61 thy the 70-74 Agamemnon. Speak . . . oracle [Q omits] 75 basis bases 110 meets melts 159 unsquared vnsquare 195 and discredit our discredit 212 s.d. Tucket [Q omits] 214 s.d. Enter Aeneas [Q omits] 247 affair affaires 250 whisper him whisper with him 252 the attentive that attentive 256 loud alowd 263 rusty restie 267 That seeks And feeds 276 compass couple 294 one no 298 will tell tell 302 youth men 305 first sir 309 s.d. Exeunt. Manent Ulysses and Nestor [Q omits] 315 This 'tis [Q omits] 334 his honor those honours 354-56 which . . . the limbs [F emended from "in his" to "his"; Q omits] 390 tarre arre
II.i.11 s.d. Strikes him [Q omits] 14 vinewed'st [F: whinid'st] vnsalted 17 oration oration without booke 18 a prayer praier 40-41 Ajax . . . Do, do [Q assigns to Thersites as one speech] 45 Thou scurvy-valiant you scurvy valiant 55 s.d. Enter Achilles and Patroclus [Q omits] 56 do you do yee 71 I It 75 I'll I 101 if he knock out and knocke at 105 your grand-sires had nails on their toes [F emended from "their" to "your"] their grandsiers had nailes 116 brach [ed.] brooch 123 fifth first 131 s.d. Exit [Q omits]
II.ii.14-15 surety, Surety surely Surely 27 father fathers 33 at reasons of reasons 47 Let's Sets 64 shores shore 75 truce ttuce 86 he be 96 s.d. with her hair about her ears [Q omits] 104 eld [ed.; F has "old"] elders 210 strike shrike

II.iii.21 s.d. Enter Patroclus [Q omits] 25 wouldst couldst 31 art art not 47 thyself Thersites 55-59 Patroclus. You . . . a fool [Q omits] 62-63 commanded of Agamemnon commanded 66 Creator Prouer 68 Patroclus Come Patroclus 69 s.d. Exit [Q omits] 73-74 Now . . . all [Q omits] 79 shent [ed.; F has "sent"] sate 80 appertainments appertainings 89 A word, my lord [Q omits] 102 s.d. Enter Patroclus [Q omits] 130 pettish lunes [F emended from "lines" to "lunes"] course, and time; as if and if 131 carriage of this action streame of his commencement 141 enter you entertaine 141 s.d. Exit Ulysses [Q omits] 158 I hate I do hate 191 stale [ed.] staule 193 titled liked 203 pash push 212 let his humor's tell his humorous 220 'A would . . . shares [Q gives to Ajax] 222
 He's . . . warm [ed.; Q and F give to Ajax] 223 praises praiers
 242 beyond, beyond all erudition beyond all thy erudition
 248 bourn boord 249 Thy This 263 cull call III.i.s.d. Music . . . Servant Enter Pandarus 24 friend [Q omits] 38 that thou thou 92 your poor disposer's your disposers 107 lord lad 114 In . . . so [Q omits] 117 shaft confounds shafts confound 149 these this 157 thee her III.ii.s.d. and Troilus' Troylus 3 he stays stayes 3 s.d. Enter Troilus [Q omits] 8 Like like to 10 those these 15 s.d. Exit Pandarus [Q omits] 27 s.d. Enter Pandarus [Q omits] 32 s.d.
 Exit Pandarus [Q omits] 36 unawares vnwares 66 fears [ed.]
 teares 80 This is This 91 merit crown it. No perfection merit louer part no affection 98 s.d. Enter Pandarus [Q omits] 131 Cunning [ed.] Comming 158 aye age 178 Yet, after After 183 and or 191 as wolf or Wolfe 198 pains paine
 III.iii.s.d. Flourish [Q omits] 4 come [ed.] loue 102 giver giuers 128 abject object 140 on one 141 shrinking shriking
 155 one on 158 hedge turne 160 hindmost him, most 161-63
 Or . . . on [F emended from "neere" to "rear"; Q omits] 164 past passe 177 give [ed.] goe 183 Than That 197 every grain of Pluto's gold euery thing 198 th' uncomprehensive deeps the vncomprehensieue depth 224 a dewdrop dew drop 251 he a 266 ambassador to him Ambassador 274 most valorous valorous 278 Grecian army armie; Agamemnon, et cetera Agamemnon 293 God b' wi' you [ed.] God buy you IV.i.4 you your 16 But Lul'd 36 it was twas 40 do think beleue 50 s.d. Exit Aeneas [Q omits] 52 the soul soule 56 soilure soyle 76 you they
 IV.ii.19 s.d. Within [Q omits] 22 s.d. Enter Pandarus [F places after line 20; Q omits] 52 'Tis Its 58 s.d. Enter Troilus [Q omits] 64 to us; and for him forthwith to him, and forthwith 73 nature neighbor Pandar 106 I will Ile 110 s.d.
 Exeunt [Q omits]

IV.iv.54 the root my throate 64 there's there is 77 They're . . . nature [Q omits] 79 person portion 139 s.d. Sound trumpet [Q omits] 144-48 Deiphobus. Let us . . . chivalry [F, with 144 assigned to Diomedes; Q omits]
 IV.v.94 Ulysses. They . . . already [Q omits] 95 Agamem-non Vlises 98 in deeds deeds 131 Of our rank feud [Q omits] 132 drop day 164-69 But that's . . . integrity [Q omits] 177 that I affect th' untraded oath thy affect, the vntraded earth 187 thy th' 192 shraped [ed.] shruped 205 As they . . .
 courtesy [Q omits] 254 stithied stichied 291 she loved my Lord
 V.i.14 these this 15 boy box 20 catarrhs [Q omits] 24 and the like [Q omits] 48 s.d. Exit [Q omits] 55 brother be 57 hanging at his brother's leg at his bare legge 59 forced faced 61 he is her's 61 dog, a mule day, a Moyle 62 fitchew Fichooke 64-65 Ask me not aske me 70 s.d. Enter Achilles [Q omits] 72 good God 78 sewer [ed.] sure 79 both at once both
 V.ii.5 s.d. Enter . . . Ulysses [Q omits] 14 Cressida Cal 39
 Nay Now 40 distraction distruction 47 Adieu [Q omits]
 55 these together together 57 But will Will 58 la [ed.] lo
 67 Troilus. I . . . will [Q omits] 68 Cressida Troy 79 Nay
 . . . me [Q, F assign to Diomedes] 83 Cressida [Q omits] 89
 By And by 104 s.d. Exit [Q omits] 116 coact Court 121 had deceptious were deceptions 132 soil spoile 155 five finde 165 Much as as much
 V.iii.14 Cassandra Cres 20-22 To hurt . . . charity [F emended from "would count" to "would," and from "as" to "use"; Q omits] 23-25 It . . . Hector [Q assigns to Andromache] 29 mean'st meanest 58 But by my ruin [Q omits]
 85 distraction destruction 90 s.d. Exit [Q omits]
 V.iv.4 young knave's knaues 9 errand [F has "errant"] arrant;
 O' the Ath 16 begin [ed.] began 17 s.d. Enter Diomedes and Troilus [Q omits] 26 art thou art
 V.v.22 scaled scaling 41 luck lust
 V.vii.11 double-horned [ed.] double-hen'd 12 s.d. Exeunt
 [ed.] Exit 23 s.d. Exeunt Exit
 V.viii.16 One Greek [F has "Gree."] One
 V.ix.1 what shout is that what is this V.x.2 Never . . . night [Q assigns to Troilus, and places his entrance before the line] 21-22 But march away. Hector is dead [Q omits] 23 vile proud 32-34 Pandarus. But . . .
 name [in F these lines appear as well after V.iii.112, concluding that scene] 33 Ignominy and ignominy 37 traders [ed.]
 traitors 49 your aching my aking 50 hold-door hold-ore

A Never Writer, to an Ever Reader. News.

Eternal reader, you have here a new play, never staled with the stage, never clapperclawed with the palms of the vulgar, and yet passing full of the palm comical; for it is a birth of your brain^o that never undertook anything comical vainly. And were but the 5 vain names of comedies changed for the titles of commodities, or of plays for pleas, you should see all those grand censors, that now style them such vanities, flock to them for the main grace of their gravities—especially this author's comedies, that are so framed to the life 10 that they serve for the most common commentaries of all the actions of our lives, showing such a dexterity and power of wit that the most displeased with plays are pleased with his comedies. And all such dull and heavy-witted worldlings as were never capable of the 15 wit of a comedy, coming by report of them to his representations, have found that wit there that they never found in themselves and have parted better witted than they came, feeling an edge of wit set upon them more than ever they dreamed they had brain to grind 20 it on. So much and such savored salt of wit is in his

4 your brain i.e., Shakespeare's brain

comedies that they seem, for their height of pleasure, to be born in that sea that brought forth Venus.^o Amongst all there is none more witty than this; and had I time I would comment upon it, though I know it needs not, 25 for so much as will make you think your testern^o well bestowed, but for so much worth as even poor I know to be stuffed in it. It deserves such a labor as well as the best comedy in Terence or Plautus. And believe this, that when he is gone and his comedies out of sale, 30 you will scramble for them and set up a new English Inquisition. Take this for a warning, and at the peril of your pleasure's loss, and judgment's, refuse not, nor like this the less for not being sullied with the smoky breath of the multitude; but thank fortune for the 35
'scape it hath made amongst you, since by the grand possessors'^o wills I believe you should have prayed for them rather than been prayed. And so I leave all such to be prayed for, for the state of their wits' healths, that will not praise it. Vale. 40

23 Venus the Greek goddess Aphrodite, who, according to Hesiod, was born in ocean foam 26 testern sixpence (slang)
36-37 grand possessors presumably, the actor-sharers of the King's Men, who may have tried to stop publication

THE HISTORY OF TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

[Dramatis Personae]

PRIAM King of Troy
HECTOR
TROILUS
PARIS
DEIPHOBUS
HELENUS

} his sons

MARGARELON a bastard son of Priam

AENEAS
ANTENOR

} Trojan commanders

CALCHAS a Trojan priest, taking part with the Greeks

PANDARUS uncle to Cressida

AGAMEMNON the Greek general

MENELAUS his brother

ACHILLES
AJAX
ULYSSES
NESTOR
DIOMEDES
PATROCLUS

} Greek commanders

THERSITES a deformed and scurrilous Greek

ALEXANDER servant to Cressida

SERVANT TO TROILUS

SERVANT TO PARIS

SERVANT TO DIOMEDES

HELEN wife to Menelaus

ANDROMACHE wife to Hector

CASSANDRA daughter to Priam; a prophetess

CRESSIDA daughter to Calchas

TROJAN AND GREEK SOLDIERS AND ATTENDANTS

Scene: Troy, and the Greek camp before it

THE PROLOGUE

[Enter the PROLOGUE, armed for battle.]

In Troy there lies the scene. From isles of Greece
The princes orgulous,^o their high blood chafed,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war. Sixty and nine, that wore
Their crownets regal, from th' Athenian bay
Put forth toward Phrygia;^o and their vow is made
To ransack Troy, within whose strong immures^o
The ravished Helen, Menelaus' queen,

5

With wanton Paris sleeps—and that's the quarrel. 10
To Tenedos^o they come,
And the deep-drawing barks do there disgorge
Their warlike fraughtage.^o Now on Dardan^o plains
The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions. Priam's six-gated city, 15
Dardan, and Timbria, Helias, Chetas, Troien,
And Antenonidus,^o with massy staples
And corresponsive and fulfilling^o bolts,
Sperr up^o the sons of Troy.
Now expectation, tickling skittish^o spirits, 20
On one and other side, Trojan and Greek,

15

20

The decorative border shown above is a repeated ornament which appeared on the title page of the quarto edition of Troilus and Cressida, 1609.

Pro. 2 orgulous proud 7 Phrygia western Asia Minor 8
immures walls

11 Tenedos the port of Troy 13 fraughtage freight, i.e., soldiers; Dardan Trojan (after Dardanus, son of Zeus and the Pleiad Electra, and ancestor of Priam) 16-17 Dardan . . .
Antenonidus names of the gates of Troy 18 fulfilling filling tightly 19 Sperr up shut up 20 skittish nervous

Sets all on hazard. And hither am I come,
 A prologue armed,^o but not in confidence
 Of author's pen or actor's voice, but suited^o
 In like conditions as our argument,^o
 To tell you, fair beholders, that our play
 Leaps o'er the vaunt^o and firstlings of those broils,
 Beginning in the middle, starting thence away
 To what may be digested in a play.
 Like or find fault; do as your pleasures are;
 Now good or bad, 'tis but the chance of war.

[A C T I]

[Scene I. Within Troy.]

Enter PANDARUS and TROILUS.

TROILUS

Call here my varlet,^o I'll unarm again.
 Why should I war without^o the walls of Troy
 That find such cruel battle here within?
 Each Trojan that is master of his heart,
 Let him to field; Troilus, alas, hath none.

PANDARUS

Will this gear^o ne'er be mended?

TROILUS

The Greeks are strong, and skillful to^o their strength,
 Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness valiant;
 But I am weaker than a woman's tear,
 Tamer than sleep, fonder^o than ignorance,
 Less valiant than the virgin in the night,
 And skillless^o as unpracticed infancy.

PANDARUS Well, I have told you enough of this.

For my part, I'll not meddle nor make no farther. He that will have a cake out of the wheat must tarry the grinding.

TROILUS Have I not tarried?

PANDARUS Ay, the grinding; but you must tarry the bolting.^o

TROILUS Have I not tarried?

PANDARUS Ay, the bolting; but you must tarry the leavening.

TROILUS Still have I tarried.

PANDARUS Ay, to the leavening; but here's yet in the word "hereafter" the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating the oven, and the baking. Nay, you must stay the cooling too, or ye may chance burn your lips.

TROILUS

Patience herself, what goddess e'er she be,
 Doth lesser blench^o at suff'rance than I do.
 At Priam's royal table do I sit,
 And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts—
 So, traitor,^o then she comes when she is thence.^o

PANDARUS Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.

TROILUS

I was about to tell thee, when my heart,
 As wedgèd with a sigh, would rive^o in twain,
 Lest Hector or my father should perceive me—
 I have, as when the sun doth light a-scorn,^o
 Buried this sigh in wrinkle of a smile;
 But sorrow, that is couched in seeming gladness,
 Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness.

PANDARUS An^o her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen's—well, go to—there were no more comparison between the women; but, for my part,
 she is my kinswoman: I would not, as they term it, praise her, but I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did. I will not dispraise your sister Cassandra's wit, but—

TROILUS

O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus,
 When I do tell thee, there my hopes lie drowned,
 Reply not in how many fathoms deep
 They lie indrenched. I tell thee I am mad
 In Cressid's love; thou answer'st she is fair,
 Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart
 Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice;
 Handlest in thy discourse, O, that her hand^o
 In whose comparison all whites are ink,
 Writing their own reproach; to whose soft seizure^o
 The cygnet's^o down is harsh, and spirit^o of sense
 Hard as the palm of plowman. This thou tell'st me,
 As true thou tell'st me, when I say I love her;
 But, saying thus, instead of oil and balm,
 Thou lay'st in every gash that love hath given me
 The knife that made it.

PANDARUS I speak no more than truth.

TROILUS Thou dost not speak so much.

PANDARUS Faith, I'll not meddle in it; let her be as she is. If she be fair, 'tis the better for her; and she be not, she has the mends^o in her own hands.

TROILUS Good Pandarus, how now, Pandarus?

PANDARUS I have had my labor for my travail;^o ill thought on of her, and ill thought of you; gone between and between, but small thanks for my labor.

TROILUS What, art thou angry, Pandarus? What,
 with me?

PANDARUS Because she's kin to me, therefore she's not so fair as Helen. An she were not kin to me, she would be as fair a^o Friday as Helen is on Sunday.^o
 But what care I? I care not an she were a blackamoor;
 'tis all one to me.

TROILUS Say I she is not fair?

PANDARUS I do not care whether you do or no. She's a fool to stay behind her father.^o Let her to the Greeks, and so I'll tell her the next time I see her. For my part,
 I'll meddle nor make no more i' th' matter.

23 armed equipped for fight 24 suited dressed 25 argument subject 27 vaunt beginning
 I.i.1 varlet servant 2 without outside 6 gear business 7 to in addition to, in proportion to 10 fonder more unsophisticated, simpler 12 skillless inept, naive 19 bolting sifting 30 blench flinch 33 traitor a self-rebuke, for suggesting that she is sometimes absent; then . . . thence she returns immediately whenever she is absent

37 rive split 39 a-scorn mockingly(?) grudgingly(?) 43 An if 57 that her hand that hand of hers 59 seizure grasp 60 cygnet's young swan's; spirit the thin bodily substance believed to transmit sense impressions through the nerves 70 mends (1) remedies (2) cosmetics 72 travail punning on travel ("gone between and between") 79 a' on 79 on Sunday i.e., in her Sunday best 84 father Calchas, who had deserted to the Greeks

TROILUS Pandarus—

PANDARUS Not I.

TROILUS Sweet Pandarus—

PANDARUS Pray you, speak no more to me. I will 90 leave all as I found it, and there an end. Exit.

Sound alarum.

TROILUS

Peace, you ungracious clamors! Peace, rude sounds!

Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair,

When with your blood you daily paint her thus.

I cannot fight upon this argument;°

It is too starved a subject for my sword.

But Pandarus—O gods, how do you plague me!

I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar;

And he's as tetchy° to be wooed to woo

As she is stubborn, chaste, against all suit.

Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's° love,

What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we.

Her bed is India; there she lies, a pearl.

Between our Ilium° and where she resides

Let it be called the wild and wand'ring flood,

Ourselves the merchant, and this sailing Pandar

Our doubtful hope, our convoy and our bark.

Alarum. Enter AENEAS.

AENEAS

How now, Prince Troilus, wherefore not afield?

TROILUS

Because not there. This woman's answer sorts,°

For womanish it is to be from thence.

What news, Aeneas, from the field today?

AENEAS

That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

TROILUS

By whom, Aeneas?

AENEAS

Troilus, by Menelaus.

TROILUS

Let Paris bleed; 'tis but a scar to scorn:°

Paris is gored with Menelaus' horn.°

Alarum.

AENEAS

Hark what good sport is out of town today!

TROILUS

Better at home, if "would I might" were "may."

But to the sport abroad; are you bound thither?

AENEAS

In all swift haste.

TROILUS

Come, go we then together. Exeunt.

[Scene II. Within Troy.]

Enter CRESSIDA and [Alexander,] her MAN.

CRESSIDA

Who were those went by?

MAN

Queen Hecuba and Helen.

CRESSIDA

And whither go they?

MAN

Up to the eastern tower,

Whose height commands as subject all the vale,

To see the battle. Hector, whose patience

Is as a virtue fixed, today was moved.

He chid Andromache, and struck his armor,

And, like as there were husbandry° in war,

Before the sun rose he was harnessed° light,

And to the field goes he, where every flower

Did, as a prophet, weep what it foresaw

In Hector's wrath.

CRESSIDA

What was his cause of anger?

MAN

The noise goes, this: there is among the Greeks

A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector;

They call him Ajax.

CRESSIDA

Good; and what of him?

MAN

They say he is a very man per se

And stands alone.

105

CRESSIDA So do all men unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs.

MAN This man, lady, hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions.° He is as valiant as the lion, 20

churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant; a man into whom nature hath so crowded humors° that his valor is crushed into folly, his folly sauced with discretion.

There is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse° of, nor any man an attain° but he carries 25

110 some stain of it. He is melancholy without cause and merry against the hair.° He hath the joints of everything, but everything so out of joint that he is a gouty

Briareus,° many hands and no use, or purblind Argus,°

all eyes and no sight. 30

CRESSIDA But how should this man that makes me smile make Hector angry?

MAN They say he yesterday coped° Hector in the 115 battle and struck him down, the disdain and shame

whereof hath ever since kept Hector fasting and 35

waking.

Enter PANDARUS.

CRESSIDA Who comes here?

MAN Madam, your uncle Pandarus.

CRESSIDA Hector's a gallant man.

MAN As may be in the world, lady.

40

PANDARUS What's that? What's that?

CRESSIDA Good morrow, uncle Pandarus.

PANDARUS Good morrow, cousin° Cressid. What do you talk of? Good morrow, Alexander. How do you, cousin? When were you at Ilium?

45

CRESSIDA This morning, uncle.

PANDARUS What were you talking of when I came?

95 argument theme 99 tetchy peevish 101 Daphne the nymph who was changed into a bay tree as she ran to escape Apollo 104 Ilium here, Priam's palace; generally, Troy (for Ilus, founder of the city, Priam's grandfather) 109 sorts is appropriate 114 but . . . scorn i.e., considering its source, the kind of scar to be scorned 115 horn of a cuckold

I.ii.7 husbandry good management, thrift 8 harnessed armored 20 additions distinctive qualities, characteristics 22 humors bodily fluids which, in excess, were thought to cause emotional disorder 25 glimpse momentary shining; attaint imputation of dishonor 27 against the hair contrary to natural tendency (cf. against the grain) 29 Briareus a hundred-handed giant; Argus a herdsman with eyes covering his body 33 coped engaged, encountered 43 cousin a term of familiarity; here, niece

Was Hector armed and gone ere ye came to Ilium?

Helen was not up, was she?

CRESSIDA Hector was gone, but Helen was not up. 50

PANDARUS E'en so, Hector was stirring early.

CRESSIDA That were we talking of, and of his anger.

PANDARUS Was he angry?

CRESSIDA So he says here.

PANDARUS True, he was so; I know the cause too. 55

He'll lay about him today, I can tell them that; and there's Troilus will not come far behind him. Let them take heed of Troilus, I can tell them that too.

CRESSIDA What, is he angry too?

PANDARUS Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man 60 of the two.

CRESSIDA O Jupiter! There's no comparison.

PANDARUS What, not between Troilus and Hector?

Do you know a man if you see him?

CRESSIDA Ay, if I ever saw him before and knew him. 65

PANDARUS Well, I say Troilus is Troilus.

CRESSIDA Then you say as I say, for I am sure he is not Hector.

PANDARUS No, nor Hector is not Troilus in some degrees.° 70

CRESSIDA 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.

PANDARUS Himself? Alas, poor Troilus, I would he were.°

CRESSIDA So he is.

PANDARUS Condition,° I had gone barefoot to India. 75

CRESSIDA He is not Hector.

PANDARUS Himself? No, he's not himself. Would 'a° were himself. Well, the gods are above; time must friend or end. Well, Troilus, well, I would my heart were in her body. No, Hector is not a better man than 80 Troilus.

CRESSIDA Excuse me.

PANDARUS He is elder.

CRESSIDA Pardon me, pardon me.

PANDARUS Th' other's not come to't;° you shall tell 85 me another tale when th' other's come to't. Hector shall not have his will° this year.

CRESSIDA He shall not need it if he have his own.

PANDARUS Nor his qualities.

CRESSIDA No matter. 90

PANDARUS Nor his beauty.

CRESSIDA 'Twould not become him. His own's better.

PANDARUS You have no judgment, niece. Helen herself swore th' other day that Troilus, for a brown 95 favor°—for so 'tis, I must confess—not brown neither—CRESSIDA No, but brown.

PANDARUS Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

CRESSIDA To say the truth, true and not true. 100

PANDARUS She praised his complexion above Paris.

CRESSIDA Why, Paris hath color enough.

PANDARUS So he has.

CRESSIDA Then Troilus should have too much. If she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his. 105 He having color enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

PANDARUS I swear to you, I think Helen loves him 110 better than Paris.

CRESSIDA Then she's a merry Greek° indeed.

PANDARUS Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him th' other day into the compassed° window—and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his 115 chin—

CRESSIDA Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

PANDARUS Why, he is very young; and yet will he, within three pound, lift as much as his brother Hector. 120

CRESSIDA Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter?°

PANDARUS But to prove to you that Helen loves him, she came and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin—

CRESSIDA Juno have mercy; how came it cloven? 125

PANDARUS Why, you know 'tis dimpled; I think his smiling becomes him better than any man in all Phrygia.

CRESSIDA O, he smiles valiantly.

PANDARUS Does he not? 130

CRESSIDA O, yes, an 'twere a cloud in autumn.

PANDARUS Why go to then. But to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus—

CRESSIDA Troilus will stand° to the proof if you'll prove it so. 135

PANDARUS Troilus? Why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle° egg.

CRESSIDA If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens i' the shell.

PANDARUS I cannot choose but laugh to think how 140 she tickled his chin. Indeed, she has a marvel's° white hand, I must needs confess.

CRESSIDA Without the rack.°

PANDARUS And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin. 145

CRESSIDA Alas poor chin, many a wart is richer.

PANDARUS But there was such laughing. Queen Hecuba laughed that her eyes ran o'er.

CRESSIDA With millstones.

PANDARUS And Cassandra laughed. 150

CRESSIDA But there was a more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes. Did her eyes run o'er too?

PANDARUS And Hector laughed.

CRESSIDA At what was all this laughing?

PANDARUS Marry,° at the white hair that Helen spied 155 on Troilus' chin.

CRESSIDA An't had been a green hair, I should have laughed too.

PANDARUS They laughed not so much at the hair as at his pretty answer. 160

CRESSIDA What was his answer?

69–70 in some degrees by some distance; in some (specific) ways (?) 72–73 I . . . were i.e., I wish he were himself, and not in love 75 Condition i.e., even if to bring that about 77 'a he 85 come to't reached manhood 87 will some editors emend to "wit," i.e., intelligence 95–96 brown favor dark complexion

112 a merry Greek one of frivolous or loose behavior (slang) 114 compassed bay 121 so . . . lifter so experienced a thief (cf. shoplifter) 134 stand a bawdy pun; cf. Sonnet 151 137 addle rotten 141 marvel's marvelous 143 rack torture 155 Marry an interjection, from the oath, "By the Virgin Mary"

PANDARUS Quoth she, "Here's but two-and-fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white."

CRESSIDA This is her question.

PANDARUS That's true, make no question of that. 165
 "Two-and-fifty hairs," quoth he, "and one white. That white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons." "Jupiter!" quoth she, "which of these hairs is Paris, my husband?" "The forked° one," quoth he; "pluck't out, and give it him." But there was such 170 laughing, and Helen so blushed, and Paris so chafed, and all the rest so laughed, that it passed.

CRESSIDA So let it now, for it has been a great while going by.

PANDARUS Well, cousin, I told you a thing yester- 175 day; think on't.

CRESSIDA So I do.

PANDARUS I'll be sworn 'tis true; he will weep you, an° 'twere a man born in April.

Sound a retreat.

CRESSIDA And I'll spring up in his tears, an° 'twere a 180 nettle against° May.

PANDARUS Hark, they are coming from the field. Shall we stand up here and see them as they pass to- ward Ilium? Good niece, do; sweet niece, Cressida.

CRESSIDA At your pleasure. 185

PANDARUS Here, here, here's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely.° I'll tell you them all by their names as they pass by, but mark Troilus above the rest.

Enter AENEAS [and passes across the stage].

CRESSIDA Speak not so loud. 190

PANDARUS That's Aeneas. Is not that a brave° man? He's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you. But mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

Enter ANTENOR [and passes across the stage].

CRESSIDA Who's that?

PANDARUS That's Antenor. He has a shrewd wit, I 195 can tell you; and he's man good enough—he's one o' the soundest judgments in Troy whosoever, and a proper° man of person. When comes Troilus? I'll show you Troilus anon. If he see me, you shall see him nod at me. 200

CRESSIDA Will he give you the nod?°

PANDARUS You shall see.

CRESSIDA If he do, the rich shall have more.°

Enter HECTOR [and passes across the stage].

PANDARUS That's Hector, that, that, look you, that; there's a fellow! Go thy way, Hector! There's a brave 205 man, niece. O brave Hector! Look how he looks; there's a countenance! Is't not a brave man?

CRESSIDA O, a brave man.

PANDARUS Is 'a not? It does a man's heart good. Look you what hacks are on his helmet. Look you 210 yonder, do you see? Look you there. There's no jesting; there's laying on, take't off who will,° as they say. There be hacks!

CRESSIDA Be those with swords?

PANDARUS Swords, anything, he cares not; an the 215 devil come to him, it's all one. By God's lid, it does one's heart good.

Enter PARIS [and passes across the stage].

Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris. Look ye yonder, niece. Is't not a gallant° man too, is't not? Why, this is brave now. Who said he came hurt home 220 today? He's not hurt. Why, this will do Helen's heart good now, ha? Would I could see Troilus now. You shall see Troilus anon.

CRESSIDA Who's that?

Enter HELENUS [and passes across the stage].

PANDARUS That's Helenus. I marvel where Troilus 225 is. That's Helenus. I think he went not forth today. That's Helenus.

CRESSIDA Can Helenus fight, uncle?

PANDARUS Helenus? No. Yes, he'll fight indifferent well. I marvel where Troilus is. Hark, do you not 230 hear the people cry "Troilus"? Helenus is a priest.

CRESSIDA What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

Enter TROILUS [and passes across the stage].

PANDARUS Where? Yonder? That's Deiphobus. 'Tis Troilus! There's a man, niece, hem? Brave Troilus, the prince of chivalry! 235

CRESSIDA Peace, for shame, peace!

PANDARUS Mark him, note him. O brave Troilus! Look well upon him, niece. Look you how his sword is bloodied, and his helm more hacked than Hector's— and how he looks, and how he goes. O admirable 240 youth! He never saw three-and-twenty. Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way! Had I a sister were a grace,° or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris? Paris is dirt to him; and I warrant Helen, to change, would give an eye to boot. 245

Enter COMMON SOLDIERS.

CRESSIDA Here comes more.

PANDARUS Asses, fools, dolts; chaff and bran, chaff and bran; porridge after meat. I could live and die in the eyes of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look. The eagles are gone; crows and daws, crows and daws. I had 250 rather be such a man as Troilus than Agamemnon and all Greece.

CRESSIDA There is amongst the Greeks Achilles, a better man than Troilus.

PANDARUS Achilles? A drayman,° a porter, a very 255 camel.°

CRESSIDA Well, well.

PANDARUS "Well, well"? Why, have you any discretion, have you any eyes, do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, man- 260 hood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and such like, the spice and salt that season a man?

169 forked resembling a cuckold's horns (?) 179 an as if 181 against in advance of 187 bravely excellently 191 brave fine 198 proper handsome 201 nod play on noddy, simpleton 203 the . . . more i.e., the fool shall become more foolish

212 take't . . . will i.e., whoever cares to say otherwise (to "lay on" and "take off" were common colloquial tags) 219 gallant general term of praise, like brave 242 grace attendant goddess 255 drayman one who draws a cart 256 camel i.e., beast of burden

CRESSIDA Ay, a minced^o man; and then to be baked with no date in the pie, for then the man's date is out.^o

PANDARUS You are such a woman a man knows not 265 at what ward^o you lie.

CRESSIDA Upon my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty;^o my mask, to defend my beauty; and you, to defend all these. And at all these 270 wards I lie, at a thousand watches.^o

PANDARUS Say one of your watches.

CRESSIDA Nay, I'll watch you for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too. If I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling^o how 275 I took the blow; unless it swell past hiding,^o and then it's past watching.

PANDARUS You are such another!

Enter [Troilus'] BOY.

BOY Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.

PANDARUS Where? 280

BOY At your own house. There he unarms him.

PANDARUS Good boy, tell him I come. [Exit BOY.] I doubt^o he be hurt. Fare ye well, good niece.

CRESSIDA Adieu, uncle.

PANDARUS I will be with you, niece, by and by. 285

CRESSIDA To bring,^o uncle.

PANDARUS Ay, a token from Troilus.

CRESSIDA By the same token, you are a bawd.

Exit PANDARUS.

Words, vows, gifts, tears, and love's full sacrifice

He offers in another's enterprise; 290

But more in Troilus thousandfold I see

Than in the glass of Pandar's praise may be.

Yet hold I off. Women are angels, wooing;^o

Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the doing.

That she^o beloved knows nought that knows not this: 295

Men prize the thing ungained more than it is;^o

That she was never yet, that ever knew

Love got^o so sweet as when desire did sue.

Therefore this maxim out of love^o I teach:

Achievement is command; ungained, beseech.^o 300

Then, though my heart's content firm love doth bear,

Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. Exit.

[Scene III. The Greek camp.]

Sennet.^o Enter AGAMEMNON, NESTOR, ULYSSES, DIOMEDES, MENELAUS, with others.

263 minced (1) mincing, affected (2) overspiced (3) divided into parts beyond recognition 263-64 then to . . . out dates were a common ingredient in most pastries; Cressida's pun implies that Troilus, as Pandarus compounds him, could contain no substance and be of no interest, out of date 266 ward position of defense in swordplay 269 honesty chastity 271 watches periods of the night 275 watch . . . telling i.e., to make certain you do not tell 276 swell past hiding Cressida thus completes her ribald play on words 283 doubt suspect that, fear that 286 To bring an idiomatic intensifier, now obsolete, meaning roughly, "indeed" or "with a vengeance"; Cressida says, with mild sarcasm, "yes, I am sure you will," although Pandarus picks up the word in its normal verbal sense 293 wooing while being wooed 295 That she that woman 296 it is its value 298 got i.e., by men 299 out of love from love's teaching 300 Achievement . . . beseech when men achieve love, they command; while still trying to gain it, they will beg

I.iii.s.d. Sennet a trumpet call announcing specific personages in a procession

AGAMEMNON

Princes,

What grief hath set these jaundies^o o'er your cheeks?

The ample proposition that hope makes

In all designs begun on earth below

Fails in the promised largeness. Checks and disasters 5

Grow in the veins of actions highest reared,

As knots, by the conflux^o of meeting sap,

Infects the sound pine and diverts his grain

Tortive and errant^o from his course of growth.

Nor, princes, is it matter new to us 10

That we come short of our suppose^o so far

That after seven years' siege yet Troy walls stand;

Sith every action that hath gone before,

Whereof we have record, trial did draw

Bias and thwart,^o not answering the aim 15

And that unbodied figure of the thought

That gave't surmised shape. Why then, you princes,

Do you with cheeks abashed^o behold our works

And call them shames, which are indeed nought else

But the protractive^o trials of great Jove 20

To find persistive constancy in men?

The fineness of which metal is not found

In Fortune's love; for then, the bold and coward,

The wise and fool, the artist^o and unread,

The hard and soft, seem all affined^o and kin. 25

But, in the wind and tempest of her frown,

Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,

Puffing at all, winnows the light away,

And what hath mass or matter by itself

Lies rich in virtue and unmingled.^o 30

NESTOR

With due observance of thy godlike seat,

Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply^o

Thy latest words. In the reproof^o of chance

Lies the true proof of men. The sea being smooth,

How many shallow bauble boats dare sail 35

Upon her patient breast, making their way

With those of nobler bulk?

But let the ruffian Boreas^o once enrage

The gentle Thetis,^o and anon behold

The strong-ribbed bark through liquid mountains

cut, 40

Bounding between the two moist elements

Like Perseus' horse,^o where's then the saucy boat,

Whose weak untimbered sides but even now

Corrivaled greatness? Either to harbor fled,

Or made a toast^o for Neptune. Even so 45

Doth valor's show^o and valor's worth divide

In storms of fortune. For in her ray and brightness

The herd hath more annoyance by the breese^o

Than by the tiger; but when the splitting wind

2 jaundies jaundice (an obsolete plural) 7 conflux flowing together 9 Tortive and errant twisted and wandering 11 suppose anticipation 15 Bias and thwart to one side and crosswise 18 cheeks abashed faces turned aside in confusion and shame 20 protractive extended 24 artist scholar 25 affined in affinity, related 30 unmingled unmixed with other essences 32 apply show examples of (as in a rhetorical exercise) 33 reproof rebuff 38 Boreas the north wind 39 Thetis a sea maiden, Achilles' mother, but here personifying the sea 42 Perseus' horse Pegasus, the winged horse 45 toast a piece of toast was usually soaked in wine 46 show outward appearance 48 breese gadfly

Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks, 50
 And flies fled under shade, why then the thing of courage,
 As roused with rage, with rage doth sympathize,^o
 And with an accent tuned in selfsame key
 Returns^o to chiding fortune.

ULYSSES Agamemnon,
 Thou great commander, nerves^o and bone of Greece, 55
 Heart of our numbers, soul and only sprite,^o
 In whom the tempers and the minds of all
 Should be shut up,^o hear what Ulysses speaks.
 Besides th' applause and approbation
 The which [to AGAMEMNON], most mighty for thy place and sway, 60

[to NESTOR]

And thou most reverend for thy stretched-out life,
 I give to both your speeches—which were such
 As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
 Should hold up high in brass; and such again
 As venerable Nestor, hatched in silver,^o 65
 Should with a bond of air, strong as the axletree
 On which heaven rides, knit all the Greekish ears
 To his experienced tongue—yet let it please both,
 Thou great, and wise, to hear Ulysses speak.

AGAMEMNON
 Speak, Prince of Ithaca; and be't of less expect 70
 That matter needless, of importless burden,
 Divide thy lips than we are confident,
 When rank Thersites opes his mastic^o jaws,
 We shall hear music, wit, and oracle.

ULYSSES
 Troy, yet upon his basis, had been down, 75
 And the great Hector's sword had lacked a master,
 But for these instances.^o
 The specialty of rule^o hath been neglected;
 And look, how many Grecian tents do stand
 Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions. 80
 When that the general is not like the hive
 To whom the foragers shall all repair,
 What honey is expected?^o Degree being vizarded,^o
 Th' unworthiest shows as fairly in the mask.
 The heavens themselves, the planets, and this center 85
 Observe degree, priority, and place,
 Insisture,^o course, proportion, season, form,
 Office, and custom, in all line of order.
 And therefore is the glorious planet Sol^o
 In noble eminence enthroned and sphered 90
 Amidst the other;^o whose med'cinable eye
 Corrects the influence^o of evil planets,
 And posts, like the commandment of a king,

Sans check, to good and bad. But when the planets
 In evil mixture^o to disorder wander, 95
 What plagues, and what portents, what mutiny,
 What raging of the sea, shaking of earth,
 Commotion in the winds, frights, changes, horrors,
 Divert and crack, rend and deracinate^o
 The unity and married calm of states 100
 Quite from their fixure? O, when degree is shaken,
 Which is the ladder of all high designs,
 The enterprise is sick. How could communities,
 Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods in cities,
 Peaceful commerce from dividable shores, 105
 The primogenity^o and due of birth,
 Prerogative of age, crowns, scepters, laurels,
 But by degree, stand in authentic place?
 Take but degree away, untune that string,
 And hark what discord follows. Each thing meets 110
 In mere oppugnancy.^o The bounded waters
 Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores
 And make a sop^o of all this solid globe;
 Strength should be lord of imbecility,^o
 And the rude son should strike his father dead; 115
 Force should be right, or rather right and wrong—
 Between whose endless jar^o justice resides—
 Should lose their names, and so should justice too.
 Then everything include itself in power,^o
 Power into will, will into appetite, 120
 And appetite, an universal wolf,
 So doubly seconded with will and power,
 Must make perforce an universal prey
 And last eat up himself. Great Agamemnon,
 This chaos, when degree is suffocate, 125
 Follows the choking.
 And this neglection of degree it is
 That by a pace goes backward with a purpose
 It hath to climb.^o The general's disdained
 By him one step below, he by the next, 130
 That next by him beneath; so every step,
 Exemplified by the first pace that is sick
 Of his superior, grows to an envious fever
 Of pale and bloodless emulation;^o
 And 'tis this fever that keeps Troy on foot, 135
 Not her own sinews. To end a tale of length,
 Troy in our weakness stands, not in her strength.

NESTOR

Most wisely hath Ulysses here discovered
 The fever whereof all our power is sick.

90 AGAMEMNON

The nature of the sickness found, Ulysses, 140
 What is the remedy?

ULYSSES

The great Achilles, whom opinion crowns
 The sinew and the forehand of our host,
 Having his ear full of his airy fame,
 Grows dainty of^o his worth, and in his tent 145

52 sympathize becomes similar to 54 Returns replies 55 nerves sinews 56 sprite spirit 58 shut up gathered in 65 hatched in silver referring to the silver lines in his hair 73 mastic abusive, scourging (sometimes emended to "mastiff") 77 instances reasons 78 The . . . rule the particular organization of ruling, the distinction of rights in a chain of authority 81-83 When . . . expected When the endeavors of the general populace are not similar to those of the agent which rules them, and to which they are responsible, what profit can be expected? (?) When the ruling general is dissimilar in kind to the soldiers in his army, what profit, etc. (?) 83 Degree being vizarded the hierarchy of authority being hidden 87 Insisture regularity of position 89 Sol the sun
 91 other others 92 influence astrological effect

95 evil mixture unlucky or malignant relationship (astrological) 99 deracinate uproot 106 primogenity right of the eldest son to succeed to his father's estate 111 mere oppugnancy total strife 113 sop pulp 114 imbecility weakness 117 jar discord 119 include . . . power enclose itself within power, i.e., become power 127-29 And . . .
 climb this neglect of hierarchy causes a step toward disintegration each time an attempt is made to climb upward 134 emulation rivalry 145 dainty of finicky about

Lies mocking our designs. With him Patroclus
 Upon a lazy bed the livelong day
 Breaks scurril jests,
 And with ridiculous and silly action
 (Which, slanderer, he imitation° calls) 150
 He pageants° us. Sometimes, great Agamemnon, Thy topless deputation° he puts on,
 And, like a strutting player, whose conceit
 Lies in his hamstring,° and doth think it rich
 To hear the wooden dialogue° and sound 155
 'Twixt his stretched footing° and the scaffoldage,
 Such to-be-pitied and o'erwrested seeming°
 He acts thy greatness in; and when he speaks,
 'Tis like a chime a-mending,° with terms unsquared,°
 Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon° dropped, 160
 Would seem hyperboles. At this fusty° stuff
 The large Achilles, on his pressed bed lolling,
 From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause,
 Cries, "Excellent! 'tis Agamemnon right.
 Now play me Nestor; hem, and stroke thy beard, 165
 As he being drest° to some oration."
 That's done, as near as the extremest ends
 Of parallels, as like as Vulcan and his wife,
 Yet god Achilles still cries, "Excellent!
 'Tis Nestor right. Now play him me,° Patroclus, 170 Arming to answer in a night alarm."
 And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age
 Must be the scene of mirth; to cough and spit,
 And with a palsy fumbling on his gorget,°
 Shake in and out the rivet. And at this sport
 Sir Valor dies; cries, "O, enough, Patroclus,
 Or give me ribs of steel; I shall split all
 In pleasure of my spleen!"° And in this fashion
 All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
 Severals and generals° of grace exact,
 Achievements, plots, orders, preventions,
 Excitements to the field or speech for truce,
 Success or loss, what is or is not, serves
 As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.°

NESTOR
 And in the imitation of these twain,
 Who, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns
 With an imperial voice, many are infect.
 Ajax is grown self-willed, and bears his head
 In such a rein,° in full as proud a place
 As broad Achilles; keeps his tent like him; 190

149-50 silly . . . imitation Ulysses contrasts such charades with true imitation to the life, presumably the goal of the excellent actor 151 pageants mimics 152 topless deputation unlimited office 153-54 conceit . . . hamstring imagination lies in the tendon of his leg 155 wooden dialogue the thumps of heavy footfalls on the wooden stage floor 156 stretched footing absurdly long strides; scaffoldage scaffold, stage 157 o'erwrested seeming overstrained impersonation 159 chime a-mending (1) chime being repaired (2) dissonant combination of sounds just following the ringing of many chimes (?); unsquared inappropriate 160 roaring Typhon a monster with serpents' heads and a tremendous voice 161 fusty stale, second-rate 166 drest carefully prepared for, addressed 168 Vulcan . . . wife Vulcan, god of the smithy and forge, was depicted as sooty, and was lame besides; his "wife" was Venus, who cuckolded him with Mars 170 me for me 174 gorget throat armor 178 spleen supposed the seat of the emotions of anger and hilarity 180 Severals and generals individual and general qualities 184 paradoxes absurdities 189 In . . . rein so high

Makes factious feasts; rails on our state of war,
 Bold as an oracle, and sets Thersites,
 A slave whose gall° coins slanders like a mint,
 To match us in comparisons with dirt,
 To weaken and discredit our exposure, 195
 How rank° soever rounded in with danger.

ULYSSES

They tax° our policy and call it cowardice,
 Count wisdom as no member of the war,
 Forestall prescience,° and esteem no act 200
 But that of hand. The still and mental parts
 That do contrive how many hands shall strike
 When fitness° calls them on, and know by measure
 Of their observant toil the enemies' weight—
 Why, this hath not a finger's dignity.
 They call this bed-work, mapp'ry,° closet war; 205
 So that the ram that batters down the wall,
 For the great swinge° and rudeness of his poise,
 They place before his hand that made the engine,
 Or those that with the fineness of their souls
 By reason guide his execution. 210

NESTOR

Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse°
 Makes many Thetis' sons.

Tucket.°

AGAMEMNON

What trumpet? Look, Menelaus.

MENELAUS From Troy.

175 Enter AENEAS.

AGAMEMNON

What would you 'fore our tent? 215

AENEAS

180 Is this great Agamemnon's tent, I pray you?

AGAMEMNON

Even this.

AENEAS

May one that is a herald and a prince
 Do a fair message to his kingly eyes?°

185 AGAMEMNON

With surety stronger than Achilles' arm 220
 'Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voice
 Call Agamemnon head and general.

AENEAS

190 Fair leave and large security. How may
 A stranger to those most imperial looks
 Know them from eyes of other mortals?

AGAMEMNON

How? 225

AENEAS

Ay.

I ask, that I might waken reverence,
 And bid the cheek be ready with a blush
 Modest as morning when she coldly eyes
 The youthful Phoebus.° 230

193 gall the source of bile, which was thought to produce rancor and abuse 196 rank densely, abundantly 197 tax criticize 199 Forestall prescience discount foresight 202 fitness readiness 205 mapp'ry map work 207 swinge impetus, whirling force 211 Achilles' horse either literally, or collectively, for his soldiers, the Myrmidons 212 s.d. Tucket trumpet call 219 to . . . eyes in his presence 230 Phoebus Phoebus Apollo (the sun god)

Which is that god in office, guiding men?
Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?

AGAMEMNON

This Trojan scorns us, or the men of Troy
Are ceremonious courtiers.

AENEAS

Courtiers as free, as debonair, unarmed,
As bending^o angels; that's their fame in peace.
But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls,
Good arms, strong joints, true swords—and, great Jove's accord,^o

Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Aeneas;
Peace, Trojan; lay thy finger on thy lips.
The worthiness of praise distains^o his worth,
If that the praised himself bring the praise forth.
But what the repining enemy commends,
That breath fame blows; that praise, sole pure, transcends.

AGAMEMNON

Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself Aeneas?

AENEAS

Ay, Greek, that is my name.

AGAMEMNON

What's your affair, I pray you?

AENEAS

Sir, pardon; 'tis for Agamemnon's ears.

AGAMEMNON

He hears nought privately that comes from Troy.

AENEAS

Nor I from Troy come not to whisper him.
I bring a trumpet to awake his ear,
To set his seat on the attentive bent,^o
And then to speak.

AGAMEMNON Speak frankly as the wind;

It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour.

That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake,
He tells thee so himself.

AENEAS

Trumpet, blow loud,
Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents;
And every Greek of mettle, let him know,
What Troy means fairly shall be spoke aloud.

Sound trumpet.

We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy
A prince called Hector—Priam is his father—
Who in this dull and long-continued truce
Is rusty grown. He bade me take a trumpet,^o
And to this purpose speak: kings, princes, lords,
If there be one among the fair'st of Greece
That holds his honor higher than his ease,
That seeks his praise more than he fears his peril,
That knows his valor and knows not his fear,
That loves his mistress more than in confession
With truant vows to her own lips he loves,^o
And dare avow her beauty and her worth
In other arms than hers^o—to him this challenge;

Hector, in view of Troyans and of Greeks,
Shall make it good, or do his best to do it;
He hath a lady wiser, fairer, truer,
Than ever Greek did compass in his arms;
And will tomorrow with his trumpet call,
Midway between your tents and walls of Troy,
To rouse a Grecian that is true in love.
If any come, Hector shall honor him;
If none, he'll say in Troy when he retires,
The Grecian dames are sunburnt^o and not worth
The splinter of a lance. Even so much.

AGAMEMNON

This shall be told our lovers, Lord Aeneas;
If none of them have soul in such a kind,
We left them all at home. But we are soldiers;
And may that soldier a mere recreant prove,
That means not, hath not, or is not in love!
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,
That one meets Hector; if none else, I am he.

NESTOR

Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
When Hector's grandsire sucked. He is old now,
But if there be not in our Grecian host
A nobleman that hath one spark of fire
To answer for his love, tell him from me,
I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,^o
And in my vantbrace^o put my withered brawns,^o
And, meeting him, will tell him that my lady
Was fairer than his grandam, and as chaste
As may be in the world. His youth in flood,
I'll prove this truth with my three drops of blood.

AENEAS

Now heavens forbend such scarcity of youth!

ULYSSES Amen.

[AGAMEMNON]

Fair Lord Aeneas, let me touch your hand;
To our pavilion shall I lead you first.
Achilles shall have word of this intent;
So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent.
Yourself shall feast with us before you go,
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

Exeunt. Manent^o ULYSSES and NESTOR.

ULYSSES Nestor.

NESTOR

What says Ulysses?

ULYSSES

I have a young conception in my brain;
Be you my time to bring it to some shape.^o

NESTOR What is't?

ULYSSES

This 'tis:
Blunt wedges rive hard knots; the seeded pride
That hath to this maturity blown up
In rank Achilles, must or now be cropped
Or, shedding,^o breed a nursery of like evil
To overbulk us all.

NESTOR

Well, and how?

236 bending bowing 238 Jove's accord with Jove on their side 241 distains sullies 252 To . . . bent to make him, and his place of government, pay attention 263 trumpet a trumpeter in attendance 269–70 That . . . loves one that loves his mistress even more than the false oaths of lip service (?) more than enough to swear false vows that he loves her (?) 272 In . . . hers i.e., with weapons 282 sunburnt dark (for the Elizabethans, ugly) 296 beaver movable face guard of a helmet 297 vantbrace armor fitting the forearm; brawns arm (or leg) muscles (an obsolete plural) 309 s.d. Manent (they) remain 312–13 I . . . shape i.e., I have the beginning of an idea; let me develop it as you listen 319 shedding i.e., scattering seed

236 bending bowing 238 Jove's accord with Jove on their side 241 distains sullies 252 To . . . bent to make him, and his place of government, pay attention 263 trumpet a trumpeter in attendance 269–70 That . . . loves one that loves his mistress even more than the false oaths of lip service (?) more than enough to swear false vows that he loves her (?) 272 In . . . hers i.e., with weapons

ULYSSES

This challenge that the gallant Hector sends,
However it is spread in general name,
Relates in purpose only to Achilles.

NESTOR

True, the purpose is perspicuous as substance
Whose grossness little characters sum up;°
And, in the publication, make no strain°
But that Achilles, were his brain as barren
As banks of Libya—though, Apollo knows,
'Tis dry enough—will with great speed of judgment,
Ay with celerity, find Hector's purpose
Pointing on him.

ULYSSES

And wake him to the answer, think you?

NESTOR

Why, 'tis most meet. Who may you else oppose
That can from Hector bring his honor off,
If not Achilles? Though't be a sportful combat,
Yet in the trial much opinion° dwells;
For here the Trojans taste our dear'st repute
With their fin'st palate;° and trust to me, Ulysses,
Our imputation shall be oddly poised
In this vild action.° For the success,
Although particular, shall give a scantling°
Of good or bad unto the general;°
And in such indexes, although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes,° there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come at large. It is supposed
He that meets Hector issues from our choice;
And choice, being mutual act of all our souls,
Makes merit her election,° and doth boil,
As 'twere from forth us all, a man distilled
Out of our virtues—who miscarrying,
What heart receives from hence a conquering part,
To steel a strong opinion to themselves;
Which entertained, limbs are his° instruments,
In no less working than are swords and bows
Directive by the limbs.

ULYSSES

Give pardon to my speech. Therefore 'tis meet Achilles meet not Hector. Let us, like merchants,
First show foul wares, and think perchance they'll sell;
If not, the luster of the better shall exceed
By showing the worse first. Do not consent
That ever Hector and Achilles meet;
For both our honor and our shame in this
Are dogged with two strange followers.°

NESTOR

I see them not with my old eyes; what are they?

ULYSSES

What glory our Achilles shares from Hector,
Were he not proud, we all should share with him.

But he already is too insolent,
And it were better parch in Afric sun
Than in the pride and salt° scorn of his eyes,
Should he 'scape Hector fair. If he were foiled,
Why then we do our main opinion° crush
In taint of° our best man. No, make a lott'ry;
And by device let blockish Ajax draw
The sort° to fight with Hector; among ourselves
Give him allowance for the better man,
For that will physic the great Myrmidon°
Who broils° in loud applause, and make him fall
His crest that prouder than blue Iris° bends.
If the dull brainless Ajax comes safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices; if he fail,
Yet go we under our opinion still
That we have better men. But, hit or miss,
Our project's life this shape of sense assumes:
Ajax employed plucks down Achilles' plumes.

NESTOR

Now, Ulysses, I begin to relish thy advice,
And I will give a taste thereof forthwith
To Agamemnon. Go we to him straight.
Two curs shall tame each other; pride alone
Must tarre° the mastiffs on, as 'twere a bone. Exeunt.

[A C T I I]

[Scene I. The Greek camp.]

Enter AJAX and THERSITES.

AJAX Thersites!
THERSITES Agamemnon, how if he had boils—full,
all over, generally?
AJAX Thersites!
THERSITES And those boils did run?—say so—did not the general run then? Were not that a botchy core?°
AJAX Dog!
THERSITES Then would come some matter from him.
I see none now.
AJAX Thou bitch-wolf's son, canst thou not hear?
Feel then.
Strikes him.
THERSITES The plague of Greece upon thee, thou mongrel beef-witted lord!
AJAX Speak then, thou vinewed'st leaven,° speak. I will beat thee into handsomeness.
THERSITES I shall sooner rail thee into wit and holiness; but I think thy horse will sooner con° an oration than thou learn a prayer without book.° Thou canst strike, canst thou? A red murrain° o' thy jade's° tricks!

325 Whose . . . up whose large size can be defined by small figures 326 make no strain you may be sure 336 opinion reputation 337–38 taste . . . palate put our most valued reputation to the test of their most careful, sensitive observation 339–40 Our . . . action Our reputation shall be unequally balanced in this trivial action 341 scantling sample 342 general (1) general view (2) entire army 343–44 small . . . volumes small markings compared to the great significance to follow 349 election criteria for choice 354 his i.e., of the strong opinion 364 followers consequences

370 salt-bitter 372 our main opinion the mainstay of our reputation 373 In taint of to the loss of, with the shame of 375 sort lot 377 the great Myrmidon Achilles, whose father, Peleus, had subjects called Myrmidons 378 broils bakes; i.e., suns himself 379 Iris the rainbow 390 tarre incite, provoke

II.i.6 botchy core erupted boil 14 vinewed'st leaven most mildewed dough 17 con memorize 18 without book by heart 19 red murrain form of plague manifested in red skin eruptions; jade's nag's

AJAX Toadstool, learn me^o the proclamation. 20
 THERSITES Dost thou think I have no sense, thou strikest me thus?
 AJAX The proclamation!
 THERSITES Thou art proclaimed fool, I think.
 AJAX Do not, porpentine,^o do not; my fingers itch. 25
 THERSITES I would thou didst itch from head to foot; an I had the scratching of thee, I would make thee the loathsomest scab in Greece. When thou art forth in the incursions,^o thou strikest as slow as another.
 AJAX I say, the proclamation! 30
 THERSITES Thou grumblest and railest every hour on Achilles, and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus^o is at Proserpina's^o beauty, ay, that thou bark'st at him.
 AJAX Mistress Thersites!
 THERSITES Thou shouldst strike him.
 AJAX Cobloaf!^o
 THERSITES He would pun^o thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.
 AJAX You whoreson cur! 40
 [Beating him.]
 THERSITES Do, do.
 AJAX Thou stool for a witch!
 THERSITES Ay, do, do, thou sodden-witted lord!
 thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows;
 an asinico^o may tutor thee. Thou scurvy-valiant ass, 45 thou art here but to thrash Trojans, and thou art bought and sold^o among those of any wit like a barbarian slave. If thou use to beat me, I will begin at thy heel, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels,^o thou! 50
 AJAX You dog!
 THERSITES You scurvy lord!
 AJAX You cur!
 [Beating him.]
 THERSITES Mars his^o idiot! Do, rudeness; do, camel; do, do. 55
 Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.
 ACHILLES Why, how now, Ajax, wherefore do you thus? How now, Thersites, what's the matter, man?
 THERSITES You see him there? Do you?
 ACHILLES Ay, what's the matter?
 THERSITES Nay, look upon him. 60
 ACHILLES So I do. What's the matter?
 THERSITES Nay, but regard him well.
 ACHILLES "Well"—why so I do.
 THERSITES But yet you look not well upon him; for, whosoever^o you take him to be, he is Ajax. 65
 ACHILLES I know that, fool.
 THERSITES Ay, but that fool^o knows not himself.
 AJAX Therefore I beat thee.

20 learn me find out for me 25 porpentine porcupine 29 incursions battle raids, attacks 33 Cerberus the monstrous watchdog of Hades; Proserpina a beautiful goddess carried off by Pluto to the underworld 37 Cobloaf a badly baked, crusty loaf of bread 38 pun pound 45 asinico ass, simpleton 47 bought and sold made fun of 50 bowels mercy (the bowels were thought to be the source of compassion) 54 Mars his Mars's 65 whosoever whomsoever 67 that fool as though Achilles had said, "I know that fool"

THERSITES Lo, lo, lo, lo, what modicums of wit he utters! His evasions have ears thus long.^o I have 70 bobbed his brain more than he has beat my bones. I will buy nine sparrows for a penny, and his pia mater^o is not worth the ninth part of a sparrow. This lord, Achilles, Ajax, who wears his wit in his belly and his guts in his head, I'll tell you what I say of him. 75 ACHILLES What?
 THERSITES I say, this Ajax—
 [AJAX threatens to strike him.]
 ACHILLES Nay, good Ajax.
 THERSITES Has not so much wit—
 [AJAX threatens again to strike him.]
 ACHILLES Nay, I must hold you. 80
 THERSITES As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.
 ACHILLES Peace, fool!
 THERSITES I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not—he there, that he. Look you there. 85
 AJAX O thou damned cur, I shall—
 ACHILLES Will you set^o your wit to a fool's?
 THERSITES No, I warrant you; the fool's will shame it.
 PATROCLUS Good words, Thersites.
 ACHILLES What's the quarrel? 90
 AJAX I bade the vile owl go learn me the tenor of the proclamation, and he rails upon me.
 THERSITES I serve thee not.
 AJAX Well, go to, go to.
 THERSITES I serve here voluntary. 95
 ACHILLES Your last service was suff'rance, 'twas not voluntary; no man is beaten voluntary. Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.^o THERSITES E'en so. A great deal of your wit, too, lies in your sinews, or else there be liars. Hector shall have 100 a great catch if he knock out either of your brains. 'A were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel.
 ACHILLES What, with me too, Thersites?
 THERSITES There's Ulysses and old Nestor, whose wit was moldy ere your grandsires had nails on their 105 toes, yoke you like draft oxen and make you plow up the wars.
 ACHILLES What, what?
 THERSITES Yes, good sooth. To, Achilles! To, Ajax!
 To—^o 110
 AJAX I shall cut out your tongue.
 THERSITES 'Tis no matter, I shall speak as much as thou afterwards.
 PATROCLUS No more words, Thersites; peace!
 THERSITES I will hold my peace when Achilles' 115
 brach^o bids me, shall I?
 ACHILLES There's for you, Patroclus.
 THERSITES I will see you hanged like clotpoles,^o ere
 I come any more to your tents. I will keep where there is wit stirring and leave the faction of fools. Exit. 120
 PATROCLUS A good riddance.

70 thus long as long as those of an ass 72 pia mater brain
 (literally, the membrane covering the brain) 87 set match
 98 impress pun on impressment, compulsory military service 109-110 To, Achilles . . . To imitation of the shouts of a driver, urging on his horses 116 brach bitch 118 clotpoles blockheads

ACHILLES

Marry, this, sir, is proclaimed through all our host:
That Hector, by the fifth hour^o of the sun,
Will, with a trumpet, 'twixt our tents and Troy
Tomorrow morning call some knight to arms
That hath a stomach,^o and such a one that dare
Maintain—I know not what; 'tis trash. Farewell.

AJAX

Farewell? Who shall answer him?

ACHILLES

I know not. 'Tis put to lott'ry. Otherwise,
He knew his man.

[Exeunt ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.]

AJAX

O, meaning you? I will go learn more of it. Exit.

[Scene II. Troy; Priam's palace.]

Enter PRIAM, HECTOR, TROILUS, PARIS, and HELENUS.

PRIAM

After so many hours, lives, speeches spent,
Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks:
"Deliver Helen, and all damage else,
As honor, loss of time, travail, expense,
Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is consumed
In hot digestion of this cormorant^o war,
Shall be struck off." Hector, what say you to't?

HECTOR

Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I,
As far as toucheth my particular,^o
Yet, dread Priam,
There is no lady of more softer bowels,^o
More spongy to suck in the sense of fear,
More ready to cry out, "Who knows what follows?"
Than Hector is. The wound of peace is surety,^o
Surety secure; but modest doubt is called
The beacon of the wise, the tent^o that searches
To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go.
Since the first sword was drawn about this question,
Every tithe soul, 'mongst many thousand dismes,^o
Hath been as dear as Helen. I mean, of ours.
If we have lost so many tenths of ours
To guard a thing not ours nor worth to us,
Had it our name, the value of one ten,^o
What merit's in that reason which denies
The yielding of her up?

TROILUS

Fie, fie, my brother!

Weigh you the worth and honor of a king
So great as our dread father in a scale
Of common ounces? Will you with counters^o sum
The past proportion of his infinite,^o

123 fifth hour eleven in the morning 126 stomach temperament or relish (here, for chivalric achievement)

II.ii.6 cormorant ravenous, rapacious 9 my particular me, personally 11 of . . . bowels more averse to violence 14
The . . . surety peace is endangered by a sense of safety 16 tent roll of absorbent material, for cleaning or probing wounds 19 Every . . . dismes every tenth soul, among many thousand tens (?) every soul taken by war as its tenth among many thousand such tenths (?) 23 one ten one in ten 28 counters pieces of worthless metal used for computation 29 The . . . infinite his infinite greatness which is past all measurement

And buckle in a waist most fathomless^o
With spans^o and inches so diminutive
As fears and reasons? Fie, for godly shame!

HELENUS

No marvel, though you bite so sharp at reasons,
You are so empty of them. Should not our father Bear the great sway of his affairs with reason,
Because your speech hath none that tell him so?

TROILUS

You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest;
You fur your gloves with reason.^o Here are your reasons:

You know an enemy intends you harm;
You know a sword employed is perilous,
And reason flies the object^o of all harm.
Who marvels then, when Helenus beholds
A Grecian and his sword, if he do set
The very wings of reason to his heels
And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove,
Or like a star disorbed?^o Nay, if we talk of reason,
Let's shut our gates and sleep! Manhood and honor Should have hare-hearts, would they but fat their thoughts

With this crammed^o reason. Reason and respect
Make livers^o pale and lustihood deject.

HECTOR

Brother, she is not worth what she doth cost
The keeping.

TROILUS

What's aught but as 'tis valued?

HECTOR

But value dwells not in particular will.^o
It holds his^o estimate and dignity^o
As well wherein 'tis precious of itself
As in the prizer.^o 'Tis mad idolatry
To make the service greater than the god;
And the will dotes that is attributive^o
To what infectiously itself affects,
Without some image of th' affected merit.^o

TROILUS

I take today a wife, and my election
Is led on in the conduct of my will—^o
My will enkindled by mine eyes and ears,
Two traded^o pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment. How may I avoid,
Although my will distaste what it elected,
The wife I chose? There can be no evasion
To blench^o from this and to stand firm by honor.
We turn not back the silks upon the merchant
When we have soiled them, nor the remainder viands

30 fathomless immeasurable 31 spans units of measure averaging nine inches 38 You . . . reason You use reason as a comfortable word with which to decorate your speech, much as fur lines gloves 41 object here, presentation, sight 46 disorbed thrown from its sphere 49 crammed filled to excess, doughy 50 livers thought to be the seats of passions 53 particular will the individual's inclination 54 his its; dignity value 56 prizer appraiser 58 attributive dependent, subservient 59–60 To . . . merit to what it, to its own infection, desires, with no objective perception of the worth of the thing desired 61–62 I . . . will Troilus is setting forth, rhetorically, an example to prove his point; whatever he may be thinking, he is not announcing, of course, his approaching liaison with Cressida 64 traded experienced 68 bleach shrink

We do not throw in unrespective sieve°
 Because we now are full. It was thought meet
 Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks.
 Your breath with full consent bellied his sails;
 The seas and winds, old wranglers, took a truce 75
 And did him service; he touched the ports desired,
 And for an old aunt° whom the Greeks held captive
 He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and freshness

Wrinkles Apollo's and makes pale the morning.
 Why keep we her? The Grecians keep our aunt. 80
 Is she worth keeping? Why, she is a pearl
 Whose price hath launched above a thousand ships
 And turned crowned kings to merchants.
 If you'll avouch 'twas wisdom Paris went—
 As you must needs, for you all cried, "Go, go"—
 If you'll confess he brought home worthy prize—
 As you must needs, for you all clapped your hands 85
 And cried, "Inestimable!"—why do you now
 The issue of your proper wisdoms rate,°
 And do a deed that never Fortune did:
 Beggar the estimation° which you prized 90
 Richer than sea and land? O theft most base,
 That we have stol'n what we do fear to keep!
 But thieves unworthy of a thing so stol'n,
 That in their country did them that disgrace° 95
 We fear to warrant° in our native place.

Enter CASSANDRA raving, with her hair about her ears.

CASSANDRA

Cry, Troyans, cry!

PRIAM What noise? What shriek is this?

TROILUS

'Tis our mad sister.° I do know her voice.

CASSANDRA Cry, Troyans!

HECTOR It is Cassandra.

CASSANDRA

Cry, Troyans, cry! Lend me ten thousand eyes,
 And I will fill them with prophetic tears.

HECTOR

Peace, sister, peace!

CASSANDRA

Virgins and boys, mid-age and wrinkled eld,
 Soft infancy, that nothing canst but cry, 105
 Add to my clamors! Let us pay betimes
 A moiety° of that mass of moan to come.
 Cry, Troyans, cry! Practice your eyes with tears!
 Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilion stand;
 Our firebrand° brother, Paris, burns us all. 110
 Cry, Troyans, cry! A Helen and a woe!
 Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go. Exit.

HECTOR

Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high strains
 Of divination in our sister work

Some touches of remorse? Or is your blood 115
 So madly hot that no discourse of reason,
 Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause,
 Can qualify° the same?

TROILUS

Why, brother Hector,

We may not think the justness of each act
 Such and no other than event° doth form it, 120
 Nor once deject the courage of our minds
 Because Cassandra's mad. Her brainsick raptures°
 Cannot distaste° the goodness of a quarrel
 Which hath our several honors all engaged
 To make it gracious. For my private part, 125
 I am no more touched than all Priam's sons;
 And Jove forbid there should be done amongst us
 Such things as might offend the weakest spleen°
 To fight for and maintain.

PARIS

Else might the world convince° of levity 130
 As well my undertakings as your counsels;
 But I attest the gods, your full consent
 Gave wings to my propension° and cut off
 All fears attending on so dire a project.
 For what, alas, can these my single arms? 135
 What propugnation° is in one man's valor
 To stand the push and enmity of those
 This quarrel would excite? Yet, I protest,
 Were I alone to pass° the difficulties,
 And had as ample power as I have will, 140
 Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done
 Nor faint in the pursuit.

PRIAM

Paris, you speak

Like one besotted on your sweet delights.
 You have the honey still, but these the gall;
 So to be valiant is no praise at all. 145

PARIS

Sir, I propose not merely to myself 100
 The pleasure such a beauty brings with it;
 But I would have the soil of her fair rape°
 Wiped off in honorable keeping her.
 What treason were it to the ransacked° queen, 150
 Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me,
 Now to deliver her possession up
 On terms of base compulsion! Can it be
 That so degenerate a strain as this 105
 Should once set footing in your generous° bosoms?
 There's not the meanest spirit on our party
 Without a heart to dare or sword to draw
 When Helen is defended, nor none so noble
 Whose life were ill bestowed or death unfamed 110
 Where Helen is the subject. Then, I say,
 Well may we fight for her whom we know well
 The world's large spaces cannot parallel. 160

HECTOR

Paris and Troilus, you have both said well,
 And on the cause and question now in hand
 Have glozed°—but superficially: not much 165

71 unrespective sieve common receptacle 77 aunt Hesione, Priam's sister and Ajax's mother, married to Telamon; another son was Teucer, greatest archer among the Greeks 89 The . . . rate condemn the result of your own judgments 91 estimation thing esteemed 95 disgrace i.e., the abduction of Helen 96 warrant justify by defense 98 our mad sister when Cassandra refused Apollo's love, he destroyed his earlier gift to her of prophecy by causing her never to be believed 107 moiety part 110 firebrand Hecuba dreamed she was delivered of a firebrand when Paris was born

118 qualify moderate 120 event outcome 122 brainsick raptures fits of prophecy 123 distaste make distasteful 128 spleen temper, temperament 130 convince convict 133 propension inclination 136 propugnation defense 139 pass suffer, undergo 148 rape carrying off 150 ransacked carried off 155 generous nobly born (therefore magnanimous) 165 glozed commented, glossed

Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought
 Unfit to hear moral° philosophy.
 The reasons you allege do more conduce
 To the hot passion of distempered blood
 Than to make up a free determination
 'Twixt right and wrong; for pleasure and revenge
 Have ears more deaf than adders° to the voice
 Of any true decision. Nature craves
 All dues be rendered to their owners. Now,
 What nearer debt in all humanity
 Than wife is to the husband? If this law
 Of nature be corrupted through affection,°
 And that great minds, of partial° indulgence
 To their benumbèd° wills, resist the same,
 There is a law in each well-ordered nation
 To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory.
 If Helen, then, be wife to Sparta's king,
 As it is known she is, these moral laws
 Of nature and of nations speak aloud
 To have her back returned. Thus to persist
 In doing wrong extenuates° not wrong,
 But makes it much more heavy. Hector's opinion
 Is this in way of truth. Yet ne'ertheless,
 My spritely° brethren, I propend° to you
 In resolution to keep Helen still;
 For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependence
 Upon our joint and several° dignities.

TROILUS

Why, there you touched the life of our design!
 Were it not glory that we more affected
 Than the performance of our heaving spleens,°
 I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood
 Spent more in her defense. But, worthy Hector,
 She is a theme of honor and renown,
 A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds,
 Whose present courage may beat down our foes
 And fame in time to come canonize us;
 For I presume brave Hector would not lose
 So rich advantage of a promised glory
 As smiles upon the forehead of this action
 For the wide world's revenue.

HECTOR

I am yours,

You valiant offspring of great Priamus.
 I have a roisting° challenge sent amongst
 The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks
 Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits.
 I was advertised° their great general slept
 Whilst emulation° in the army crept;
 This, I presume, will wake him.

Exeunt.

[Scene III. The Greek camp; near Achilles' tent.]

Enter THERSITES solus.

THERSITES How now, Thersites? What, lost in the labyrinth of thy fury? Shall the elephant Ajax carry it° thus? He beats me, and I rail at him. O worthy satisfaction! Would it were otherwise—that I could beat him, whilst he railed at me. 'Sfoot,° I'll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I'll see° some issue of my spiteful execrations. Then there's Achilles, a rare enginer.° If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves. O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Jove, the king of gods; and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy caduceus,° if ye take not that little, little, less than little wit from them that they have; which short-armed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their massy irons and cutting the web. After this, the vengeance on the whole camp! Or, rather, the Neapolitan bone-ache,° for that, methinks, is the curse depending on those that war for a placket.° I have said my prayers, and devil Envy say "Amen." What ho, my Lord Achilles!

Enter PATROCLUS.

PATROCLUS Who's there? Thersites? Good Thersites, come in and rail.

THERSITES If I could 'a' rememb'ed a gilt counterfeit, thou wouldst not have slipped° out of my contemplation. But it is no matter; thyself upon thyself!
 The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenue. Heaven bless° thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee. Let thy blood° be thy direction till thy death. Then, if she that lays thee out says thou art a fair corse,° I'll be sworn and sworn upon't she never shrouded any but lazars.°
 Amen. Where's Achilles?

PATROCLUS What, art thou devout? Wast thou in prayer?

THERSITES Ay, the heavens hear me!

PATROCLUS Amen.

Enter ACHILLES.

ACHILLES Who's there?

PATROCLUS Thersites, my lord.

ACHILLES Where? Where? O, where? Art thou come? Why, my cheese, my digestion,° why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals? Come, what's Agamemnon?

THERSITES Thy commander, Achilles. Then tell me,
 Patroclus, what's Achilles?

167 moral Aristotle wrote "political" (Nicomachean Ethics, I.3), but the use of "moral" here is paralleled in Erasmus, Bacon, and many other contemporary translations and commentaries; the two words were roughly interchangeable in sixteenth-century terminology 172 more . . . adders cf. Psalm 58:4-5 177 affection appetite 178 partial biased, favoring 179 benumbèd paralyzed (by affection and appetite) 187 extenuates lessens 190 spritely spirited; propend incline 193 joint and several collective and individual 196 heaving spleens angry passions 208 roisting noisy, clamorous 211 advertised informed 212 emulation envious rivalry (see I.iii.134)

II.iii.2 carry it carry it off, come out on top 5 'Sfoot an oath; "God's foot" 6 but I'll see rather than not see 7 enginer a soldier in a company used for ditch digging, tunneling, and otherwise undermining the battlements of an enemy camp 12 caduceus Mercury's staff, twined with serpents 18 Neapolitan bone-ache syphilis 20 placket opening in a petticoat (used obscenely, with anatomical suggestion) 25 slipped pun on slip, a counterfeit coin of brass, covered with silver or gold 28 bless i.e., save 30 blood passion 31 corse corpse 32 lazars lepers (with decayed bodies) 41 my . . . digestion cheese served as the final course of a meal was thought to aid digestion

PATROCLUS Thy lord, Thersites. Then tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself?

THERSITES Thy knower, Patroclus. Then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?

PATROCLUS Thou must tell that knowest. 50

ACHILLES O tell, tell.

THERSITES I'll decline° the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles, Achilles is my lord, I am Patroclus' knower, and Patroclus is a fool.

PATROCLUS You rascal! 55

THERSITES Peace, fool! I have not done.

ACHILLES He is a privileged man.° Proceed, Thersites.

THERSITES Agamemnon is a fool, Achilles is a fool, Thersites is a fool, and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.

ACHILLES Derive this; come. 60

THERSITES Agamemnon is a fool to offer° to command Achilles, Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon, Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool, and this Patroclus is a fool positive.

PATROCLUS Why am I a fool? 65

THERSITES Make that demand of the Creator; it suffices me thou art. Look you, who comes here?

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, DIOMEDES, AJAX, and CALCHAS.

ACHILLES Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody. Come in with me, Thersites. Exit.

THERSITES Here is such patchery,° such juggling, and 70 such knavery. All the argument is a whore and a cuckold, a good quarrel to draw emulous° factions and bleed to death upon. Now, the dry serpigo° on the subject, and war and lechery confound all! [Exit.]

AGAMEMNON Where is Achilles? 75

PATROCLUS Within his tent, but ill-disposed, my lord.

AGAMEMNON

Let it be known to him that we are here.

He shent° our messengers, and we lay by

Our appertainments,° visiting of him. 80

Let him be told so, lest perchance he think

We dare not move° the question of our place

Or know not what we are.

PATROCLUS I shall so say to him.

[Exit.]

ULYSSES We saw him at the opening of his tent. He is not sick. 85

AJAX Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart. You may call it melancholy if you will favor the man; but, by my head, 'tis pride. But why, why? Let him show us a cause. A word, my lord. [Takes AGAMEMNON aside.]

NESTOR What moves Ajax thus to bay at him? 90

ULYSSES Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him.

NESTOR Who, Thersites?

ULYSSES He.

NESTOR Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.° 95

ULYSSES No, you see, he is his argument that has his argument, Achilles.

NESTOR All the better. Their fraction° is more our wish than their faction.° But it was a strong com- 100 posure° a fool could disunite.

ULYSSES The amity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily untie.

Enter PATROCLUS.

Here comes Patroclus.

NESTOR No Achilles with him?

ULYSSES

The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy. 105
His legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.°

PATROCLUS

Achilles bids me say he is much sorry

If anything more than your sport and pleasure

Did move your greatness and this noble state°

To call upon him. He hopes it is no other 110

But, for your health and your digestion sake,
An after-dinner's breath.°

AGAMEMNON Hear you, Patroclus.

We are too well acquainted with these answers;

But his evasion, winged thus swift with scorn,

Cannot outfly our apprehensions.° 115

Much attribute he hath, and much the reason

Why we ascribe it to him; yet all his virtues,

Not virtuously on his own part beheld,°

Do in our eyes begin to lose their gloss—

Yea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish, 120

Are like to rot untasted. Go and tell him

We come to speak with him; and you shall not sin

If you do say we think him overproud

And underhonest,° in self-assumption greater

Than in the note of judgment,° and worthier than 125 himself

Here tend the savage strangeness° he puts on,

Disguise the holy strength of their command,

And underwrite in an observing kind

His humorous predominance;° yea, watch

His pettish lunes,° his ebbs and flows, as if 130

The passage and whole carriage of this action

Rode on his tide. Go tell him this; and add

That, if he overhold° his price so much,

We'll none of him; but let him, like an engine°

Not portable, lie under this report: 135

"Bring action hither, this cannot go to war."

A stirring dwarf we do allowance° give

Before a sleeping giant. Tell him so.

PATROCLUS

I shall, and bring his answer presently. [Exit.]

98 fraction fracture, break 99 faction union 99-100 composure union 106 flexure bending 109 noble state assemblage of noblemen 112 breath exercise 115 apprehensions perceptions 118 Not . . . beheld not carried with modesty 124 underhonest calculating, not open 125 note of judgment opinion of men of judgment
126 tend . . . strangeness wait upon the rude aloofness 127-29 Disguise . . . predominance allow to be hidden the divine authority of their command, and, in a form of acquiescence, subscribe to his eccentric notion of superiority 130 pettish lunes capricious variations (like the changes of the moon) 133 overhold overvalue 134 engine mechanical contrivance (here, military) 137 allowance praise

52 decline run through (in the grammatical sense, as to decline a noun) 57 He . . . man in the sense that the railing of a professional jester or fool was "allowed" 61 offer attempt 70 patchery roguery 72 emulous jealous 73 serpigo a quickly spreading skin disease, with eruptions 79 shent rebuked 80 appertainments rights of rank 82 move raise 95 argument subject matter

AGAMEMNON

In second voice we'll not be satisfied; 140
We come to speak with him. Ulysses, enter you.

Exit ULYSSES.

AJAX What is he more than another?

AGAMEMNON No more than what he thinks he is.

AJAX Is he so much? Do you not think he thinks himself a better man than I am? 145

AGAMEMNON No question.

AJAX Will you subscribe his thought, and say he is?

AGAMEMNON No, noble Ajax; you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable. 150

AJAX Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.

AGAMEMNON Your mind is the clearer and your virtues the fairer. He that is proud eats up himself. Pride is his own glass,^o his own trumpet, his own chronicle; 155 and whatever praises itself but in the deed, devours the deed in the praise.Enter ULYSSES.

AJAX I do hate a proud man as I hate the engend'ring of toads.

NESTOR [Aside.] And yet he loves himself. Is't not 160 strange?

ULYSSES

Achilles will not to the field tomorrow.

AGAMEMNON

What's his excuse?

ULYSSES He doth rely on none,

But carries on the stream of his dispose^o

Without observance or respect of any, 165

In will peculiar and in self-admission.^o

AGAMEMNON

Why will he not upon our fair request

Untent his person and share th' air with us?

ULYSSES

Things small as nothing, for request's sake only,^o 170

He makes important. Possessed he is with greatness,

And he speaks not to himself but with a pride

That quarrels at self-breath.^o Imagined worth

Holds in his blood such swoln and hot discourse

That 'twixt his mental and his active parts

Kingdomed^o Achilles in commotion rages 175

And batters down himself. What should I say?

He is so plaguy proud that the death-tokens^o of it

Cry "No recovery."

AGAMEMNON Let Ajax go to him.

Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent;

'Tis said he holds you well, and will be led 180

At your request a little from himself.

ULYSSES

O Agamemnon, let it not be so!

We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes

When they go from Achilles. Shall the proud lord

That bastes his arrogance with his own seam^o 185

And never suffers matter of the world

Enter his thoughts, save such as doth revolve

And ruminatc himself—shall he be worshiped

Of that we hold an idol more than he?

No, this thrice-worthy and right valiant lord 190

Shall not so stale his palm,^o nobly acquired,Nor, by my will, assubjugate^o his merit,

As amply titled as Achilles' is,

By going to Achilles.

That were to enlard his fat-already pride, 195

And add more coals to Cancer^o when he burnsWith entertaining great Hyperion.^o

This lord go to him! Jupiter forbid,

And say in thunder, "Achilles, go to him."

NESTOR [Aside.]O, this is well. He rubs the vein^o of him. 200DIOMEDES [Aside.]

And how his silence drinks up his applause!

AJAX

If I go to him, with my armèd fist

I'll pash^o him o'er the face.

AGAMEMNON

O, no! You shall not go.

AJAX

An he be proud with me, I'll pheese^o his pride. 205

Let me go to him.

ULYSSES

Not for the worth that hangs upon our quarrel.

AJAX A paltry, insolent fellow!

NESTOR [Aside.] How he describes himself!

AJAX Can he not be sociable? 210

ULYSSES [Aside.] The raven chides blackness.AJAX I'll let his humor's blood.^oAGAMEMNON [Aside.] He will be the physician that should be the patient.

AJAX An all men were of my mind— 215

ULYSSES [Aside.] Wit would be out of fashion.AJAX 'A^o should not bear it so, 'a should eat swords first! Shall pride carry it?NESTOR [Aside.] An 'twould, you'd carry half.ULYSSES [Aside.] 'A would have ten shares. 220

AJAX I will knead him; I'll make him supple.

NESTOR [Aside.] He's not yet through^o warm. Force^o him with praises; pour in, pour, his ambition is dry.ULYSSES [To AGAMEMNON.]

My lord, you feed too much on this dislike.

NESTOR

Our noble general, do not do so. 225

DIOMEDES

You must prepare to fight without Achilles.

ULYSSES

Why, 'tis this naming of him does him harm.

Here is a man—but 'tis before his face;

I will be silent.

NESTOR Wherefore should you so?

He is not emulous,^o as Achilles is. 230

155 glass mirror 164 dispose inclination 166 In . . . self-admission with will exclusively his own and with self-approval 169 for . . . only only because requested 172 That . . . self-breath that quarrels with speech itself 175 Kingdomed i.e., as though Achilles were himself a kingdom engaged in civil strife 177 death-tokens external symptoms of the plague preceding death 185 seam grease, fat

191 stale his palm detract from his glory 192 assubjugate debase 196 Cancer i.e., summer, which begins under this sign of the zodiac 197 Hyperion the sun 200 vein mood 203 pash bash 205 pheese settle the business of 212 let . . . blood cure him by letting blood, thus decreasing the strength of Achilles' humor, his mood of pride 217 'A he 222 through thoroughly; Force stuff 230 emulous jealously competitive

ULYSSES

Know the whole world, he is as valiant—

AJAX

A whoreson dog, that shall palter° with us thus!

Would he were a Trojan!

NESTOR What a vice were it in Ajax now—

ULYSSES If he were proud—

DIOMEDES Or covetous of praise—

ULYSSES Ay, or surly borne—

DIOMEDES Or strange, or self-affected!°

ULYSSES

Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet composure;

Praise him that gat° thee, she that gave thee suck;

Famed be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature

Thrice-famed beyond, beyond all erudition;°

But he that disciplined thine arms to fight,

Let Mars divide eternity in twain

And give him half; and, for thy vigor,

Bull-bearing Milo° his addition° yield

To sinewy Ajax. I will not praise thy wisdom,

Which, like a bourn, a pale,° a shore, confines

Thy spacious and dilated parts. Here's Nestor,

Instructed by the antiquary times,°

He must, he is, he cannot but be wise;

But pardon, father Nestor, were your days

As green as Ajax, and your brain so tempered,

You should not have the eminence of him,

But be as Ajax.

AJAX Shall I call you father?

NESTOR

Ay, my good son.

DIOMEDES Be ruled by him, Lord Ajax.

ULYSSES

There is no tarrying here; the hart Achilles

Keeps thicket. Please it our great general

To call together all his state° of war;

Fresh kings are come to Troy. Tomorrow,

We must with all our main° of power stand fast.

And here's a lord—come knights from east to west,

And cull their flower, Ajax shall cope the best.

AGAMEMNON

Go we to council. Let Achilles sleep;

Light boats sail swift, though greater hulks draw deep.

Exeunt.

[A C T I I I]

[Scene I. Troy; Priam's palace.]

Music sounds within. Enter PANDARUS and a SERVANT.

PANDARUS Friend you, pray you a word. Do you not follow the young Lord Paris?

SERVANT Ay, sir, when he goes before me.

PANDARUS You depend° upon him, I mean.

SERVANT Sir, I do depend upon the Lord.

PANDARUS You depend upon a notable gentleman;

I must needs praise him.

SERVANT The Lord be praised!

235 PANDARUS You know me, do you not?

SERVANT Faith, sir, superficially.

PANDARUS Friend, know me better. I am the Lord Pandarus.

SERVANT I hope I shall know your honor better.

PANDARUS I do desire it.

240 SERVANT You are in the state of grace.°

PANDARUS Grace?° Not so, friend. Honor and lordship are my titles. What music is this?

SERVANT I do but partly know, sir. It is music in parts.°

245 PANDARUS Know you the musicians?

SERVANT Wholly, sir.

PANDARUS Who play they to?

SERVANT To the hearers, sir.

PANDARUS At whose pleasure, friend?

250 SERVANT At mine, sir, and theirs that love music.

PANDARUS Command, I mean, friend.

SERVANT Who shall I command, sir?

PANDARUS Friend, we understand not one another. I am too courtly, and thou too cunning. At whose request do these men play?

255 SERVANT That's to't, indeed, sir. Marry, sir, at the request of Paris, my lord, who is there in person; with him the mortal Venus, the heartblood of beauty, love's invisible soul.

PANDARUS Who? My cousin Cressida?

SERVANT No, sir, Helen. Could not you find out that by her attributes?

260 PANDARUS It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the Lady Cressid. I come to speak with Paris from the Prince Troilus. I will make a complimentary assault upon him, for my business seethes.°

SERVANT Sodden business! There's a stewed° phrase, indeed.

Enter PARIS and HELEN, [with COURTIER].

PANDARUS Fair be to you, my lord, and to all this fair company. Fair desires in all fair measure fairly guide them. Especially to you, fair queen, fair thoughts be your fair pillow.

HELEN Dear lord, you are full of fair words.

PANDARUS You speak your fair pleasure, sweet queen. Fair prince, here is good broken music.°

PARIS You have broke it, cousin; and, by my life, you shall make it whole again; you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance. Nell, he is full of harmony.

III.i.4 depend i.e., serve, in a position of dependence
15 You . . . grace pretending that Pandarus meant that he desired his own honor to be better; also, perhaps, the servant is hinting for a gratuity 16 Grace the courtly title of a duke, etc. 18–19 music in parts music containing several vocal or instrumental parts in counterpoint 41 seethes boils, i.e., demands immediate attention 42 stewed (1) boiled (2) pertaining to stews, or brothels (?) 50 broken music music the parts for which are written for different solo instruments, or groups of different instruments

232 palter play shifty games, dodge 238 strange, or self-affected haughty, or self-centered 240 gat begat 241–42 thy parts . . . erudition your natural attributes three times more famous (i.e., than your tutor), even more famous than all learning itself 246 Milo a famous Greek athlete, said to have carried a bull upon his shoulders for forty yards; addition title, i.e., "Bull-bearing" 248 a bourn, a pale a boundary, a fence 250 Instructed . . . times i.e., his wisdom learned from olden times, all the years of his old age 259 state noblemen in council 261 main might

PANDARUS Truly, lady, no. 55
 HELEN O, sir!
 PANDARUS Rude,° in sooth; in good sooth, very rude.
 PARIS Well said, my lord. Well, you say so in fits.°
 PANDARUS I have business to my lord, dear queen.
 My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word? 60
 HELEN Nay, this shall not hedge us out. We'll hear you sing, certainly.
 PANDARUS Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me. But, marry, thus, my lord: my dear lord and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus— 65
 HELEN My Lord Pandarus, honey-sweet lord—
 PANDARUS Go to, sweet queen, go to—commends himself most affectionately to you.
 HELEN You shall not bob° us out of our melody. If you do, our melancholy upon your head! 70
 PANDARUS Sweet queen, sweet queen, that's a sweet queen, i' faith.
 HELEN And to make a sweet lady sad is a sour offense.
 PANDARUS Nay, that shall not serve your turn; that shall it not, in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words; 75 no, no. And, my lord, he desires you that, if the king call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.
 HELEN My Lord Pandarus—PANDARUS What says my sweet queen, my very, very sweet queen? 80
 PARIS What exploit's in hand? Where sups he tonight?
 HELEN Nay, but my Lord—
 PANDARUS What says my sweet queen? My cousin will fall out with you.° 85
 HELEN You must not know where he sups.
 PARIS I'll lay my life, with my disposer° Cressida.
 PANDARUS No, no; no such matter; you are wide.°
 Come, your disposer is sick.
 PARIS Well, I'll make excuse. 90
 PANDARUS Ay, good my lord. Why should you say Cressida? No, your poor disposer's sick.
 PARIS I spy.
 PANDARUS You spy? What do you spy? Come, give me an instrument now, sweet queen. 95
 HELEN Why, this is kindly done.
 PANDARUS My niece is horribly in love with a thing
 you have, sweet queen.°
 HELEN She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my Lord
 Paris. 100
 PANDARUS He? No, she'll none of him; they two are twain.°
 HELEN Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.°
 PANDARUS Come, come, I'll hear no more of this. 105
 I'll sing you a song now.
 HELEN Ay, ay, prithee. Now by my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.

57 Rude unpolished, rough 58 fits sections or divisions of a song (perhaps Paris means, "You say so only at times") 69 bob cheat 84-85 My . . . you Pandarus lightly pretends that Paris, his "cousin," will become jealous if Helen continues to flirt with him, Pandarus 87 disposer i.e., she who rules him (Paris jokingly uses an excessively gallant term) 88 wide wide of the mark 97-98 My . . . queen i.e., Cressida loves, or would love to have, a sexual partner such as Paris is to Helen 102 twain at odds, have nothing in common 103-04 Falling . . . three Helen's bawdy joke picks up the train of thought begun by Pandarus

PANDARUS Ay, you may, you may.°
 HELEN Let thy song be love. This love will undo us 110
 all. O Cupid, Cupid, Cupid!
 PANDARUS Love! Ay, that it shall, i' faith.
 PARIS Ay, good now, "Love, love, nothing but love."
 PANDARUS In good troth, it begins so: [Sings.]
 Love, love, nothing but love, still love still more! 115
 For, O, love's bow shoots buck and doe.
 The shaft confounds not that° it wounds,
 But tickles still the sore.°
 These lovers cry, O ho! they die!
 Yet that which seems the wound to kill 120
 Doth turn O ho! to Ha, ha, he!
 So dying love lives still.
 O ho! a while, but Ha, ha, ha!
 O ho! groans out for Ha, ha, ha!—Heigh ho!
 HELEN In love, i' faith, to the very tip of the nose. 125
 PARIS He eats nothing but doves, love, and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.
 PANDARUS Is this the generation of love—hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds? Why, they are vipers. Is 130 love a generation of vipers?° Sweet lord, who's a-field today?
 PARIS Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy. I would fain have armed today, but my Nell would not have it so. How chance my 135 brother Troilus went not?
 HELEN He hangs the lip at something. You know all,
 Lord Pandarus.
 PANDARUS Not I, honey-sweet queen. I long to hear how they sped° today. You'll remember your brother's 140 excuse?
 PARIS To a hair.°
 PANDARUS Farewell, sweet queen.
 HELEN Commend me to your niece.
 PANDARUS I will, sweet queen. [Exit.] 145

Sound a retreat.

PARIS
 They're come from the field. Let us to Priam's hall
 To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must woo you
 To help unarm our Hector. His stubborn buckles,
 With these your white enchanting fingers touched,
 Shall more obey than to the edge of steel 150
 Or force of Greekish sinews. You shall do more Than all the island kings°—disarm great Hector.
 HELEN
 'Twill make us proud to be his servant, Paris;
 Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty
 Gives us more palm in beauty than we have, 155
 Yea, overshines ourself.
 PARIS
 Sweet, above thought I love thee. Exeunt.

109 you may i.e., have your joke 117 confounds not that does not distress because 118 sore wound (perhaps a pun on the term for a buck in his fourth year) 131 a . . . vipers cf.
 Matthew 3:7 140 how they sped i.e., the results of their action 142 To a hair does Paris jokingly recall Troilus'
 "pretty answer" about the hairs on his chin (see I.ii.168-70)?
 152 island kings kings of the Grecian islands

[Scene II. Within Troy.]

Enter PANDARUS and Troilus' MAN.

PANDARUS How now, where's thy master? At my cousin Cressida's?

MAN No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.

Enter TROILUS.

PANDARUS O, here he comes. How now, how now?

TROILUS Sirrah, walk off. [Exit MAN.] 5

PANDARUS Have you seen my cousin?

TROILUS

No, Pandarus. I stalk about her door
Like a strange soul upon the Stygian° banks
Staying for waftage.° O, be thou my Charon,°
And give me swift transportance to those fields 10
Where I may wallow in the lily beds
Proposed° for the deserver. O gentle Pandar,
From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings,
And fly with me to Cressid.

PANDARUS

Walk here i' th' orchard. I'll bring her straight. 15
Exit PANDARUS.

TROILUS

I am giddy; expectation whirls me round.
Th' imaginary relish is so sweet
That it enchants my sense. What will it be
When that the wat'ry° palates taste indeed
Love's thrice-repurèd° nectar? Death, I fear me, 20
Sounding° destruction, or some joy too fine,
Too subtle, potent, tuned too sharp in sweetness
For the capacity of my ruder° powers.
I fear it much; and I do fear besides
That I shall lose distinction° in my joys, 25
As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps
The enemy flying.

Enter PANDARUS.

PANDARUS She's making her ready; she'll come straight; you must be witty° now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so short as if she were frayed with 30 a spirit.° I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain;° she fetches her breath as short as a new-ta'en sparrow.

Exit PANDARUS.

TROILUS

Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom.
My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse,
And all my powers do their bestowing° lose, 35
Like vassalage° at unawares encount'ring
The eye of majesty.

Enter PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

PANDARUS Come, come, what need you blush? Shame's a baby. Here she is now; swear the oaths now to her that you have sworn to me. What! Are you 40 gone again? You must be watched ere you be made tame,° must you? Come your ways, come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you i' the fills.° Why do you not speak to her? Come, draw this curtain,° and let's see your picture. Alas the day, how loath you 45 are to offend daylight! An 'twere dark, you'd close° sooner. So, so; rub on, and kiss the mistress.° How now, a kiss in fee-farm!° Build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The falcon as the tercel, for all the ducks i' 50 the river.° Go to, go to.

TROILUS You have bereft me of all words, lady.

PANDARUS Words pay no debts, give her deeds; but she'll bereave you o' the deeds too if she call your activity in question. What, billing again? Here's "In 55 witness whereof the parties interchangeably"°—Come in, come in. I'll go get a fire. [Exit.]

CRESSIDA Will you walk in, my lord?

TROILUS O Cressid, how often have I wished me thus! 60

CRESSIDA Wished, my lord? The gods grant—O my lord!

TROILUS What should they grant? What makes this pretty abruption?° What too curious° dreg espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love? 65

CRESSIDA More dregs than water, if my fears have eyes.

TROILUS Fears make devils of cherubins; they never see truly. 70

CRESSIDA Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason stumbling without fear. To fear the worst oft cures the worse.

TROILUS O, let my lady apprehend no fear; in all Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.° 75

CRESSIDA Nor nothing monstrous neither?

TROILUS Nothing but our undertakings when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers, thinking it harder for our mistress to devise imposition enough than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstrosity in love, lady, that the will is 80 infinite and the execution confined; that the desire is boundless and the act a slave to limit.

CRESSIDA They say all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform, vowing more than the perfection 85 of ten and discharging less than the tenth part

41-42 watched . . . tame i.e., prodded on until made submissive (a hawk was tamed by "watching" it, i.e., keeping it constantly awake) 43 fills shafts (of a cart) 44 curtain her veil 46 close move together 47 rub . . . mistress terms from bowling, where "to rub" was to meet obstacles in the way of the small object-ball, called the "mistress"; bowls are still said "to kiss" when they touch gently 48 a kiss in fee-farm i.e., a long kiss (a fee-farm was a grant of lands in perpetuity) 50-51 The falcon . . . river i.e., I will bet on the falcon (the term applied only to the female of the species) against the tercel (the male) to bring down any game 55-56 "In witness . . . interchangeably" a legal formula, usually ending with the words "have set their hands and seals" 64 abruption breaking off; too curious overly cautious, anxious, or inquisitive 73-74 apprehend . . . monster Troilus refers to some type of dramatic allegory such as Cupid might be depicted as "presenting," or the emblematic characters, such as Fear, in pageants or court masques

III.ii.8 Stygian from Styx, the principal river of the underworld 9 waftage passage across water; Charon ferryman of the dead, across the Styx to Hades 12 Proposed promised 19 wat'ry watering (cf. mouth "watering" with appetite) 20 thrice-repurèd distilled again and again (i.e., to extract the purest essence) 21 Sounding swooning 23 ruder physical 25 distinction ability to distinguish 29 be witty be alert, have your wits about you 30-31 frayed . . . spirit frightened by a ghost 31 villain here a term of endearment 35 bestowing proper use 36 vassalage vassals of one. They that have the voice of lions and the act of hares—are they not monsters?

TROILUS Are there such? Such are not we. Praise us as we are tasted,^o allow us as we prove; our head shall go bare till merit crown it. No perfection in reversion^o shall have a praise in present; we will not name desert before his birth, and, being born, his addition shall be humble.^o Few words to fair faith. Troilus shall be such to Cressid, as what envy can say worst shall be a mock for his truth, and what truth can speak truest not truer than Troilus.^o

CRESSIDA Will you walk in, my lord?

Enter PANDARUS.

PANDARUS What, blushing still? Have you not done talking yet?

CRESSIDA Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

PANDARUS I thank you for that. If my lord get a boy of you, you'll give him me. Be true to my lord; if he flinch, chide me for it.

TROILUS You know now your hostages: your uncle's word and my firm faith.

PANDARUS Nay, I'll give my word for her too. Our kindred, though they be long ere they be wooed, they are constant being won. They are burrs, I can tell you; they'll stick where they are thrown.

CRESSIDA

Boldness comes to me now and brings me heart.
Prince Troilus, I have loved you night and day
For many weary months.

TROILUS

Why was my Cressid then so hard to win?

CRESSIDA

Hard to seem won; but I was won, my lord,
With the first glance that ever—pardon me;
If I confess much you will play the tyrant.
I love you now, but, till now, not so much
But I might master it. In faith, I lie;
My thoughts were like unbridled children grown
Too headstrong for their mother. See, we fools!
Why have I blabbed? Who shall be true to us
When we are so unsecret to ourselves?
But, though I loved you well, I wooed you not;
And yet, good faith, I wished myself a man,
Or that we women had men's privilege
Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue,
For in this rapture I shall surely speak
The thing I shall repent. See, see! Your silence, Cunning in dumbness, from my weakness draws
My very soul of counsel.^o Stop my mouth.

TROILUS

And shall, albeit sweet music issues thence.

PANDARUS Pretty, i' faith.

CRESSIDA

My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me;
'Twas not my purpose thus to beg a kiss.

90 tasted tested 91 reversion right or anticipation of future possession 93–94 his . . . humble it shall be given no high or pompous titles 95–97 as what . . . Troilus so that the worst malice can do is sneer at his constancy, and even the best truth that truth can speak will not be truer than Troilus 132 very . . . counsel inmost thoughts and secrets

I am ashamed. O heavens, what have I done?
For this time will I take my leave, my lord:

TROILUS

Your leave, sweet Cressid?

PANDARUS Leave! An you take leave till tomorrow morning—

CRESSIDA

Pray you, content you.

TROILUS What offends you, lady?

CRESSIDA

Sir, mine own company.

TROILUS

You cannot shun yourself.

CRESSIDA

Let me go and try.

I have a kind of self resides with you;
But an unkind self, that itself will leave
To be another's fool.^o I would be gone.
Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.

TROILUS

Well know they what they speak that speak so wisely.

CRESSIDA

Perchance, my lord, I show more craft than love,
And fell so roundly^o to a large^o confession
To angle for your thoughts. But you are wise,
Or else you love not, for to be wise and love
Exceeds man's might;^o that dwells with gods above.

TROILUS

O that I thought it could be in a woman—
As, if it can, I will presume in you—
To feed for aye her lamp and flames of love;
To keep her constancy in plight and youth,^o
Outliving beauty's outward,^o with a mind
That doth renew swifter than blood decays;
Or that persuasion could but thus convince me
That my integrity and truth to you
Might be affronted^o with the match and weight
Of such a winnowed^o purity in love:
How were I then uplifted! But, alas,
I am as true as truth's simplicity,
And simpler than the infancy of truth.

CRESSIDA

In that I'll war with you.

125

TROILUS

O virtuous fight,
When right with right wars who shall be most right!
True swains in love shall in the world to come
Approve^o their truth by Troilus. When their rhymes,
Full of protest, of oath and big compare,
Wants similes, truth tired with iteration,
"As true as steel, as plantage to the moon,^o
As sun to day, as turtle^o to her mate,
As iron to adamant,^o as earth to the center,"
Yet, after all comparisons of truth,
As truth's authentic author to be cited,

135

148 fool dupe 152 roundly frankly, openly; large unrestrained 153–55 But . . . might i.e., you are reasonable, which means you are not in love, for no man can follow reason and love at the same time 159 in . . . youth as it was when it was plighted, and as fresh 160 beauty's outward external, transitory beauty 164 affronted confronted, i.e., equaled 165 winnowed i.e., distilled 172 Approve attest 175 plantage . . . moon the moon was thought to influence plantage, or vegetation 176 turtle turtledove (an emblem of eternally faithful love) 177 adamant the loadstone (magnetic)

"As true as Troilus" shall crown up the verse
And sanctify the numbers.°

CRESSIDA Prophet may you be!
If I be false or swerve a hair from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot itself,
When waterdrops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallowed cities up,
And mighty states characterless° are grated
To dusty nothing, yet let memory,
From false to false among false maids in love,
Upbraid my falsehood! When they've said, "As false
As air, as water, wind or sandy earth,
As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf,
Pard to the hind,° or stepdame to her son,"
Yea, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,
"As false as Cressid."

PANDARUS Go to, a bargain made. Seal it, seal it; I'll 195 be the witness. Here I hold your hand, here my cousin's. If ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name; call them all Pandars. Let all constant 200 men be Troiluses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers-between Pandars! Say, "Amen."

TROILUS Amen.

CRESSIDA Amen.

PANDARUS Amen. Whereupon I will show you a 205 chamber which bed,° because° it shall not speak of your pretty encounters, press it to death. Away!

Exeunt [TROILUS and CRESSIDA.]

And Cupid grant all tongue-tied maidens here Bed, chamber, Pandar to provide this gear! Exit.

[Scene III. The Greek camp.]

Enter ULYSSES, DIOMEDES, NESTOR, AGAMEMNON, [MENELAUS, AJAX, and] CALCHAS. Flourish [of trumpets.]

CALCHAS

Now, princes, for the service I have done,
Th' advantage of the time prompts me aloud
To call for recompense. Appear it to mind
That through the sight° I bear in things to come,
I have abandoned Troy, left my possession,
Incurred a traitor's name, exposed myself,
From certain and possessed conveniences,
To doubtful fortunes, sequest'ring° from me all
That time, acquaintance, custom, and condition
Made tame° and most familiar to my nature;
And here, to do you service, am become
As new into the world, strange, unacquainted.
I do beseech you, as in way of taste,°
To give me now a little benefit
Out of those many registered in promise,
Which, you say, live to come in my behalf.

AGAMEMNON

What wouldst thou of us, Trojan? Make demand.

180 CALCHAS

You have a Trojan prisoner, called Antenor,
Yesterday took; Troy holds him very dear.
Oft have you—often have you thanks therefor— 20
Desired my Cressid in right great exchange,°
Whom Troy hath still° denied; but this Antenor
I know is such a wrest° in their affairs 185
That their negotiations all must slack,
Wanting his manage; and they will almost 25
Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam,
In change of him. Let him be sent, great princes,
And he shall buy my daughter; and her presence
Shall quite strike off all service I have done
In most accepted° pain.

AGAMEMNON Let Diomedes bear him, 30

And bring us Cressid hither; Calchas shall have
What he requests of us. Good Diomed,
Furnish you fairly, for this interchange.
Withal bring word if Hector will tomorrow
Be answered in his challenge. Ajax is ready. 35

DIOMEDES

This shall I undertake, and 'tis a burden
Which I am proud to bear. Exit, [with CALCHAS].

ACHILLES and PATROCLUS stand in their tent.°

ULYSSES

Achilles stands i' th' entrance of his tent.
Please it our general pass strangely° by him,
As if he were forgot; and, princes all, 40
Lay negligent and loose regard upon him.
I will come last. 'Tis like he'll question me
Why such unplausive° eyes are bent, why turned, on him.

If so, I have derision medicinable
To use between your strangeness and his pride, 45
Which his own will shall have desire to drink.
It may do good; pride hath no other glass
To show° itself but pride, for supple knees
Feed arrogance and are the proud man's fees.

AGAMEMNON

We'll execute your purpose, and put on 50
A form of strangeness as we pass along.
So do each lord, and either greet him not
Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more Than if not looked on. I will lead the way.

ACHILLES

What comes the general to speak with me? 55
You know my mind; I'll fight no more 'gainst Troy.

10 AGAMEMNON

What says Achilles? Would he aught with us?

NESTOR

Would you, my lord, aught with the general?

ACHILLES No.

15 NESTOR Nothing, my lord.

AGAMEMNON The better.

ACHILLES Good day, good day.

60

181 numbers metrical verses 186 characterless without an identifying mark 192 Pard . . . hind leopard to the doe 206 which bed the bed in which; because (1) for the reason that (normal usage) (2) in order that (?)

III.iii.4 sight foresight 8 sequest'ring putting aside 10 tame familiar, comfortable 13 taste foretaste

21 right great exchange exchange for someone sufficiently great 22 still always 23 wrest a key used for tuning stringed instruments (i.e., the influence of harmony in Trojan discussions) 30 accepted cheerfully endured 37 s.d. stand . . . tent appear and stand in the entrance of their tent 39 strangely aloofly 43 unplausive disapproving 48 show mirror

MENELAUS How do you? How do you?

ACHILLES What, does the cuckold scorn me?

AJAX How now, Patroclus?

ACHILLES Good morrow, Ajax.

AJAX Ha?

ACHILLES Good morrow.

AJAX Ay, and good next day too.

Exeunt.

ACHILLES

What mean these fellows? Know they not Achilles?

PATROCLUS

They pass by strangely. They were used to bend,
To send their smiles before them to Achilles,
To come as humbly as they used to creep
To holy altars.

ACHILLES What, am I poor of late?

'Tis certain, greatness, once fall'n out with fortune,
Must fall out with men too. What the declined is
He shall as soon read in the eyes of others
As feel in his own fall; for men, like butterflies,
Show not their mealy° wings but to the summer,
And not a man, for being simply man,
Hath any honor, but honor for those honors
That are without° him, as place, riches, and favor,
Prizes of accident as oft as merit;
Which when they fall, as being slippery standers,
The love that leaned on them as slippery too,
Doth one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fall. But 'tis not so with me;
Fortune and I are friends. I do enjoy
At ample point° all that I did possess,
Save these men's looks—who do, methinks, find out
Something not worth in me such rich beholding
As they have often given. Here is Ulysses;
I'll interrupt his reading.
How now, Ulysses.

ULYSSES Now, great Thetis' son.

ACHILLES

What are you reading?

ULYSSES A strange fellow here
Writes me that man, how dearly ever parted,
How much in having, or without or in,
Cannot make boast to have that which he hath,
Nor feels not what he owes but by reflection;
As when his virtues aiming upon others
Heat them, and they retort that heat again
To the first giver.

ACHILLES This is not strange, Ulysses.

The beauty that is borne here in the face
The bearer knows not, but commends itself
To others' eyes; nor doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself,
Not going from itself; but eye to eye opposed
Salutes each other with each other's form;
For speculation° turns not to itself
Till it hath traveled and is married there
Where it may see itself. This is not strange at all.

79 mealy powdery 82 without external to 89 At ample point in full measure, in every way 96 how . . . parted however excellently endowed by nature 97 How . . . or in however much in possession, whether externally or internally 99 Nor . . . reflection and understands what he himself possesses ("owes" = owns) only as it is reflected 109 speculation power of sight

ULYSSES

I do not strain at the position°—

It is familiar—but at the author's drift;

Who in his circumstance° expressly proves

That no man is the lord of anything—

Though in and of him there be much consisting°—

Till he communicate his parts to others.

Nor doth he of himself know them for aught

Till he behold them formèd in th' applause

Where they're extended;° who,° like an arch, reverb'rate

The voice again, or, like a gate of steel

Fronting the sun, receives and renders back

His figure and his heat. I was much rapt in this,

And apprehended here immediately

Th' unknown Ajax.

Heavens, what a man is there! A very horse,

That has he knows not what. Nature, what things there are

Most abject in regard and dear in use!°

What things again most dear in the esteem

And poor in worth! Now shall we see tomorrow,

An act that very chance doth throw upon him:

Ajax renowned. O heavens, what some men do,

While some men leave to do!

How some men creep in° skittish° Fortune's hall,

Whiles others play the idiots in her eyes!

How one man eats into another's pride,

While pride is fasting in his wantonness!°

To see these Grecian lords—why, even already

They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder,

As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast,

And great Troy shrinking.

ACHILLES

I do believe it; for they passed by me

As misers do by beggars, neither gave to me

Good word nor look. What, are my deeds forgot?

ULYSSES

Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,

Wherein he puts alms for oblivion,

A great-sized monster of ingratitude.

Those scraps are good deeds past, which are devoured

As fast as they are made, forgot as soon

As done. Perseverance, dear my lord,

Keeps honor bright. To have done, is to hang

Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail°

In monumental mock'ry. Take the instant° way;

For honor travels in a strait so narrow

Where one but goes abreast. Keep, then, the path;

For emulation hath a thousand sons

That one by one pursue. If you give way,

Or hedge aside from the direct forthright,°

Like to an ent'red tide they all rush by

And leave you hindmost;

112 position i.e., that of the writer whom Ulysses paraphrases above 114 circumstance detailed discussion 116 Though . . . consisting although much exists in him and also because of him 120 Where they're extended in which his natural attributes are noised abroad; who which 128 Most . . . use most despised and yet invaluable 134 in into; skittish unreliable 137 his wantonness its own self-satisfaction 152 mail piece of armor 153 instant most immediate 158 direct forthright course of action clearly at hand, the path straight ahead

THERSITES Why, he stalks up and down like a peacock—a stride and a stand; ruminates like an hostess that hath no arithmetic but her brain to set down her reckoning; bites his lip with a politic regard,^o as who should say, “There were wit in this head an ’twould 255 out”; and so there is, but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not show without knocking. The man’s undone forever, for if Hector break not his neck i’ the combat, he’ll break’t himself in vainglory. He knows not me. I said, “Good morrow, Ajax”; and he 260 replies, “Thanks, Agamemnon.” What think you of this man that takes me for the general? He’s grown a very land-fish, languageless, a monster. A plague of opinion! A man may wear it on both sides like a leather jerkin.^o 265

ACHILLES Thou must be my ambassador to him, Thersites.

THERSITES Who, I? Why, he’ll answer nobody. He professes not answering. Speaking is for beggars; he wears his tongue in’s arms. I will put on^o his presence; 270 let Patroclus make demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

ACHILLES To him, Patroclus. Tell him I humbly desire the valiant Ajax to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarmed to my tent, and to procure 275 safe-conduct for his person of the magnanimous and most illustrious, six-or-seven-times-honored captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon, et cetera. Do this.

PATROCLUS Jove bless great Ajax! 280

THERSITES Hum.

PATROCLUS I come from the worthy Achilles—

THERSITES Ha!

PATROCLUS Who most humbly desires you to invite Hector to his tent— 285

THERSITES Hum!

PATROCLUS And to procure safe-conduct from Agamemnon.

THERSITES Agamemnon?

PATROCLUS Ay, my lord. 290

THERSITES Ha!

PATROCLUS What say you to’t?

THERSITES God b’ wi’ you, with all my heart.

PATROCLUS Your answer, sir.

THERSITES If tomorrow be a fair day, by eleven of the 295 clock it will go one way or other; howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

PATROCLUS Your answer, sir.

THERSITES Fare ye well, with all my heart,

ACHILLES Why, but he is not in this tune, is he? 300

THERSITES No, but out of tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not; but I am sure none, unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make catlings^o on.

ACHILLES Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him 305 straight.

THERSITES Let me bear another to his horse, for that’s the more capable^o creature.

ACHILLES

My mind is troubled, like a fountain stirred,

254 politic regard expression of shrewd judgment 265 jerkin close-fitting jacket 270 put on imitate 304 catlings strings of catgut 308 capable intelligent

And I myself see not the bottom of it. 310

[Exeunt ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.]

THERSITES Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep than such a valiant ignorance.

[Exit.]

[A C T I V]

[Scene I. Within Troy.]

Enter, at one door, AENEAS [with a torch;] at another, PARIS, DEIPHOBUS, ANTENOR, DIOMED the Grecian, [and others,] with torches.

PARIS

See, ho! Who is that there?

DEIPHOBUS

It is the Lord Aeneas.

AENEAS

Is the prince there in person?

Had I so good occasion to lie long

As you, Prince Paris, nothing but heavenly business

Should rob my bedmate of my company. 5

DIOMEDES

That’s my mind too. Good morrow, Lord Aeneas.

PARIS

A valiant Greek, Aeneas; take his hand.

Witness the process^o of your speech, wherein

You told how Diomed, a whole week by days,^o

Did haunt you in the field.

AENEAS

Health to you, valiant sir, 10

During all question of the gentle truce;^o

But when I meet you armed, as black defiance

As heart can think or courage execute.

DIOMEDES

The one and other Diomed embraces.

Our bloods are now in calm, and, so long, health! 15

But when contention and occasion^o meet,

By Jove, I’ll play the hunter for thy life

With all my force, pursuit, and policy.^o

AENEAS

And thou shalt hunt a lion that will fly

With his face backward. In humane gentleness, 20

Welcome to Troy. Now, by Anchises’^o life,

Welcome indeed! By Venus’ hand^o I swear,

No man alive can love in such a sort

The thing he means to kill more excellently.

DIOMEDES

We sympathize.^o Jove, let Aeneas live, 25

If to my sword his fate be not the glory,

A thousand complete courses of the sun!

But, in mine emulous honor, let him die

With every joint a wound, and that tomorrow!

AENEAS

We know each other well. 30

IV.i.8 process gist, drift 9 by days day by day 11 question . . . truce intercourse made possible by the truce 16 occasion opportunity 18 policy cunning 21 Anchises Aeneas’ father 22 Venus’ hand Diomedes was supposed to have wounded Venus, Aeneas’ mother, in the hand 25 sympathize have the same feeling

DIOMEDES

We do, and long to know each other worse.

PARIS

This is the most despiteful gentle greeting,
The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of.
What business, lord, so early?

AENEAS

I was sent for to the king; but why, I know not. 35

PARIS

His purpose meets you; it was to bring this Greek
To Calchas' house, and there to render him,
For the enfreed Antenor, the fair Cressid.
Let's have your company; or, if you please,
Haste there before us. I constantly° do think—
Or rather call my thought a certain knowledge—
My brother Troilus lodges there tonight.
Rouse him and give him note of our approach,
With the whole quality° wherefore. I fear
We shall be much unwelcome.

AENEAS

That I assure you. 45

Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece
Than Cressid borne from Troy.

PARIS

There is no help.

The bitter disposition of the time
Will have it so. On, lord; we'll follow you.

AENEAS

Good morrow, all. Exit AENEAS. 50

PARIS

And tell me, noble Diomed; faith, tell me true,
Even in the soul of sound good-fellowship,
Who, in your thoughts, deserves fair Helen best,
Myself or Menelaus?

DIOMEDES

Both alike.

He merits well to have her that doth seek her,
Not making any scruple of her soilure,
With such a hell of pain and world of charge;°
And you as well to keep her that defend her,
Not palating° the taste of her dishonor,
With such a costly loss of wealth and friends. 60
He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamèd piece;°
You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins
Are pleased to breed out your inheritors.
Both merits poised,° each weighs nor less nor more; 65
But he as he, the heavier for a whore.°

PARIS

You are too bitter to your countrywoman.

DIOMEDES

She's bitter to her country! Hear me, Paris—
For every false drop in her bawdy veins
A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple°
Of her contaminated carrion weight
A Trojan hath been slain. Since she could speak,

She hath not given so many good words breath
As for her Greeks and Trojans suffered death.

PARIS

Fair Diomed, you do as chapmen° do, 75
Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy;
But we in silence hold this virtue well,
We'll not commend what we intend to sell.°
Here lies our way. Exeunt.

[Scene II. Within Troy; Calchas' house.]

Enter TROILUS and CRESSIDA.

TROILUS

Dear, trouble not yourself; the morn is cold.

CRESSIDA

Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine uncle down;
He shall unbolt the gates.

TROILUS

Trouble him not;

To bed, to bed. Sleep kill° those pretty eyes,
And give as soft attachment° to thy senses 5
As infants' empty of all thought!

CRESSIDA

Good morrow then.

TROILUS

I prithee now, to bed.

CRESSIDA

Arc you aweary of me?

TROILUS

O Cressida! But that the busy day,
Waked by the lark, hath roused the ribald crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer, 10
I would not from thee.

CRESSIDA

Night hath been too brief.

TROILUS

Beshrew the witch! With venomous wights° she stays
As tediously as hell, but flies the grasps of love
With wings more momentary-swift than thought.
You will catch cold and curse me. 15

CRESSIDA

Prithee, tarry; 15

You men will never tarry.
O foolish Cressid! I might have still held off,
And then you would have tarried. Hark, there's one up.

PANDARUS (Within.) What's all the doors open here?

TROILUS It is your uncle. 20

CRESSIDA

A pestilence on him! Now will he be mocking.
I shall have such a life.

Enter PANDARUS.

70 PANDARUS How now, how now! How go maiden-heads? Here, you maid, where's my cousin Cressid?

CRESSIDA

Go hang yourself, you naughty mocking uncle. 25
You bring me to do°—and then you flout me too.

PANDARUS To do what? To do what? Let her say what. What have I brought you to do?

75 chapmen hawkers of cheap wares 78 We'll . . . sell
i.e., we'll not practice the seller's tricks although you practice the buyer's (Paris does not imply that Helen is for sale)

IV.ii.4 kill overpower 5 attachment seizure 12 venomous wights malignant witches (or, simply, evil creatures) 26 do used sometimes in obscene sense

40 constantly firmly 44 quality occasion, explanation 57 charge cost 59 Not palating insensible to 62 flat tamèd piece (1) cask of wine opened so long that the wine has gone flat (2) woman so promiscuous that she can no longer excite or be excited sexually 65 poised weighed 66 But . . .
whore (1) but he, i.e., Menelaus, as heavy as his small merit may be, plus the weight of the whore who is, after all, his legal possession (?) (2) but he, whoever wins her, heavier only by the weight of a whore (to be "light" was to be morally loose) (?)
70 scruple the smallest possible unit of weight

CRESSIDA

Come come; beshrew your heart! You'll ne'er be good,
Nor suffer others.

PANDARUS Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! A poor capocchia!° Hast not slept tonight? Would he not, a naughty man, let it sleep? A bugbear° take him!

CRESSIDA

Did not I tell you? Would he were knocked i' the head!

One knocks.

Who's that at door? Good uncle, go and see.
My lord, come you again into my chamber.
You smile and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

TROILUS Ha, ha!

CRESSIDA

Come, you are deceived, I think of no such thing.

Knock.

How earnestly they knock! Pray you, come in.
I would not for half Troy have you seen here.

Exeunt [TROILUS and CRESSIDA].

PANDARUS Who's there? What's the matter? Will you beat down the door? How now, what's the matter?

[Enter AENEAS.]

AENEAS

Good morrow, lord, good morrow.

PANDARUS Who's there? My Lord Aeneas! By my troth, I knew you not. What news with you so early?

AENEAS

Is not Prince Troilus here?

PANDARUS Here? What should he do here?

AENEAS

Come, he is here, my lord. Do not deny him.
It doth import° him much to speak with me.

PANDARUS Is he here, say you? 'Tis more than I know, I'll be sworn. For my own part, I came in late.
What should he do here?

AENEAS Who!° Nay, then. Come, come, you'll do him wrong ere you are ware. You'll be so true to him, to be false to him. Do not you know of him, but yet go fetch him hither; go.

Enter TROILUS.

TROILUS How now, what's the matter?

AENEAS

My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rash.° There is at hand
Paris your brother, and Deiphobus,
The Grecian Diomed, and our Antenor
Delivered to us; and for him forthwith,
Ere the first sacrifice, within this hour,
We must give up to Diomedes' hand
The Lady Cressida.

TROILUS Is it so concluded?

AENEAS

By Priam, and the general state° of Troy.
They are at hand and ready to effect it.

TROILUS

How my achievements mock me!
I will go meet them. And, my Lord Aeneas,
We met by chance; you did not find me here.

AENEAS

Good, good, my lord; the secrets° of nature
Have not more gift in taciturnity.

Exeunt [TROILUS and AENEAS].

PANDARUS Is't possible? No sooner got but lost? The devil take Antenor! The young prince will go mad.
A plague upon Antenor! I would they had broke's neck!

Enter CRESSIDA.

CRESSIDA

How now? What's the matter? Who was here?

PANDARUS Ah, ah!

CRESSIDA

Why sigh you so profoundly? Where's my lord?
Gone? Tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter?

PANDARUS Would I were as deep under the earth as I am above!

CRESSIDA O the gods! What's the matter?

PANDARUS Pray thee, get thee in. Would thou hadst ne'er been born! I knew thou wouldst be his death. O poor gentleman! A plague upon Antenor!

CRESSIDA Good uncle, I beseech you on my knees, what's the matter?

PANDARUS Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone; thou art changed° for Antenor. Thou must to thy father and be gone from Troilus. 'Twill be his death; 'twill be his bane;° he cannot bear it.

CRESSIDA

O you immortal gods! I will not go.

PANDARUS Thou must.

CRESSIDA

I will not, uncle. I have forgot my father;
I know no touch of consanguinity°—
No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me
As the sweet Troilus. O you gods divine,
Make Cressid's name the very crown of falsehood
If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and death,
Do to this body what extremes you can;
But the strong base and building of my love
Is as the very center of the earth,
Drawing all things to it. I will go in and weep—

PANDARUS Do, do.

CRESSIDA

—Tear my bright hair, and scratch my praised cheeks,
Crack my clear voice with sobs, and break my heart
With sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troy.

Exeunt.

[Scene III. Within Troy; near Calchas' house.]

Enter PARIS, TROILUS, AENEAS, DEIPHOBUS, ANTENOR, DIOMEDES.

32 capocchia simpleton 33 bugbear hobgoblin 51 doth import is important to 55 Who an exclamation of impatience; sometimes as to call "stop!" to a horse 61 rash urgent

68 general state noblemen in council 73 secrets most unknown parts 92 changed exchanged 94 bane poison, destruction 98 no . . . consanguinity no sense of relationship

PARIS

It is great morning,^o and the hour prefixed
For her delivery to this valiant Greek Comes fast upon. Good my brother Troilus,
Tell you the lady what she is to do,
And haste her to the purpose.

TROILUS

Walk into her house. 5

I'll bring her to the Grecian presently;^o
And to his hand when I deliver her,
Think it an altar, and thy brother Troilus
A priest there off'ring to it his own heart.

PARIS

I know what 'tis to love; 10
And would, as I shall pity, I could help.
Please you walk in, my lords. Exeunt.

[Scene IV. Within Troy; Calchas' house.]

Enter PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

PANDARUS Be moderate, be moderate.

CRESSIDA

Why tell you me of moderation?
The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste,
And violenteth^o in a sense as strong
As that which causeth it. How can I moderate it? 5
If I could temporize with my affections,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,^o
The like allayment could I give my grief.
My love admits no qualifying dross;^o
No more my grief, in such a precious loss. 10

Enter TROILUS.

PANDARUS Here, here, here he comes. Ah, sweet ducks!

CRESSIDA O Troilus! Troilus!

PANDARUS What a pair of spectacles^o is here! Let me embrace too. "O heart," as the goodly saying is— 15

O heart, heavy heart,
Why sigh'st thou without breaking?

where he answers again,

Because thou canst not ease thy smart
By friendship nor by speaking. 20

There was never a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse.
We see it, we see it. How now, lambs!

TROILUS

Cressid, I love thee in so strained^o a purity,
That the blest gods, as angry with my fancy,^o 25
More bright in zeal than the devotion which Cold lips blow to their deities, take thee from me.

CRESSIDA Have the gods envy?

PANDARUS Ay, ay, ay, ay, 'tis too plain a case.

CRESSIDA

And is it true that I must go from Troy? 30

TROILUS

A hateful truth.

CRESSIDA What, and from Troilus too?

TROILUS

From Troy and Troilus.

CRESSIDA

Is't possible?

TROILUS

And suddenly, where injury of chance^o
Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by 35
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure,^o forcibly prevents
Our locked embrasures, strangles our dear vows
Even in the birth of our own laboring breath.
We two, that with so many thousand sighs
Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves 40
With the rude brevity and discharge of one.
Injurious time now with a robber's haste
Crams his rich thievery up, he knows not how;
As many farewells as be stars in heaven,
With distinct breath and consigned kisses to them,^o 45
He fumbles^o up into a loose adieu,
And scants us with a single famished kiss,
Distasted^o with the salt of broken tears.

AENEAS (Within.) My lord, is the lady ready?

TROILUS

Hark! You are called. Some say the Genius^o 50
Cries so to him that instantly must die.
Bid them have patience; she shall come anon.

PANDARUS Where are my tears? Rain, to lay this wind, or my heart will be blown up by the root! [Exit.]

CRESSIDA

I must, then, to the Grecians?

TROILUS

No remedy. 55

CRESSIDA

A woeful Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks!
When shall we see again?

TROILUS

Hear me, love. Be thou but true of heart—

CRESSIDA

I true! How now! What wicked deem^o is this?

TROILUS

Nay, we must use expostulation kindly, 60
For it is parting from us.^o
I speak not "be thou true" as fearing thee,
For I will throw my glove^o to Death himself
That there's no maculation^o in thy heart; 65
But "be thou true," say I, to fashion in My sequent protestation:^o be thou true,
And I will see thee.

CRESSIDA

O, you shall be exposed, my lord, to dangers
As infinite as imminent; but I'll be true.

TROILUS

And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve. 70

CRESSIDA

And you this glove. When shall I see you?

TROILUS

I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,

33 injury of chance injurious accident 36 rejoindure reunion 45 With . . . them with the words of each farewell and the kisses which ratify each of them 46 fumbles wraps clumsily 48 Distasted the taste (of the kiss) ruined 50 Genius guardian spirit 59 deem thought 60-61 Nay . . .
us we must be gentle in all remonstrance, for we are now saying good-bye 63 throw my glove give challenge 64 maculation taint, blemish (i.e., disloyalty) 65-66 to . . .
protestation as introduction for my own promise to follow

IV.iii.1 great morning broad daylight 6 presently immediately

IV.iv.4 violenteth rages 7 palate taste 9 qualifying dross moderating impurity 14 spectacles a pun 24 strained distilled, filtered 25 fancy love

To give thee nightly visitation.

But yet, be true.

CRESSIDA O heavens! "Be true" again!

TROILUS

Hear why I speak it, love.

The Grecian youths are full of quality;°

They're loving,° well composed with gift of nature,
And swelling o'er with arts and exercise.°

How novelty may move, and parts with person,°

Alas! A kind of godly jealousy—

Which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin—

Makes me afeared.

CRESSIDA O heavens, you love me not!

TROILUS

Die I a villain then!

In this I do not call your faith in question

So mainly as my merit. I cannot sing,

Nor heel the high lavolt,° nor sweeten talk,

Nor play at subtle games—fair virtues all,

To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant;°

But I can tell that in each grace of these

There lurks a still and dumb-discoursive° devil

That tempts most cunningly. But be not tempted.

CRESSIDA Do you think I will?

TROILUS No!

But something may be done that we will not;

And sometimes we are devils to ourselves

When we will tempt the frailty of our powers,

Presuming on their changeful potency.°

AENEAS (Within.)

Nay, good my lord!

TROILUS Come, kiss; and let us part.

PARIS (Within.)

Brother Troilus!

TROILUS Good brother, come you hither;

And bring Aeneas and the Grecian with you.

CRESSIDA

My lord, will you be true?

TROILUS

Who? I? Alas, it is my vice, my fault.

Whiles others fish with craft for great opinion,°

I with great truth catch° mere simplicity;

Whilst some with cunning gild their copper crowns, 105

With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.

Fear not my truth; the moral° of my wit

Is "plain and true"—there's all the reach of it.

[Enter AENEAS, PARIS, ANTENOR, DEIPHOBUS and
DIOMEDES.]

Welcome, Sir Diomed. Here is the lady

Which for Antenor we deliver you.

At the port,° lord, I'll give her to thy hand,

And by the way possess° thee what she is.

Entreat° her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek,

76 quality qualities 77 loving adept in the arts of love 78 arts and exercise talents both in theory and in practice 79 parts with person specific qualities and talents, combined with personal charm 86 high lavolt the lavolt was a dance for two persons, requiring many high steps and bounds 88

pregnant ready, fully able 90 dumb-discoursive articulate even in silence 97 changeful potency power which may alter to failure 103 opinion reputation 104 catch achieve;

i.e., achieve a reputation for 107 moral maxim 111 port gate (of the city) 112 possess inform 113 Entreat treat

If e'er thou stand at mercy of my sword,

Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe

As Priam is in Ilion.

115

DIOMEDES Fair Lady Cressid,

So please you, save the thanks this prince expects.

The luster in your eye, heaven in your cheek,

Pleads your fair usage; and to Diomed

You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

120

TROILUS

Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,

To shame the seal of my petition° to thee

In praising her. I tell thee, lord of Greece,

She is as far high-soaring o'er thy praises

As thou unworthy to be called her servant.

125

I charge thee use her well, even for my charge;°

For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not,

Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,

I'll cut thy throat.

85

DIOMEDES O, be not moved, Prince Troilus.

Let me be privileged by my place and message

To be a speaker free. When I am hence,

I'll answer to my lust;° and know you, lord,

I'll nothing do on charge. To her own worth

She shall be prized; but that you say "be't so,"

I speak it in my spirit and honor, "no."

135

TROILUS

Come, to the port. I'll tell thee, Diomed,

This brave° shall oft make thee to hide thy head.

Lady, give me your hand, and, as we walk,

To our own selves bend we our needful talk.

95

[Exeunt TROILUS, CRESSIDA, and DIOMEDES.]

Sound trumpet.

PARIS

Hark! Hector's trumpet.

AENEAS

How have we spent this morning! 140

The prince must think me tardy and remiss,

That swore to ride before him to the field.

PARIS

'Tis Troilus' fault. Come, come, to field with him.

DEIPHOBUS

Let us make ready straight.

AENEAS

Yea, with a bridegroom's fresh alacrity,

Let us address° to tend on Hector's heels.

The glory of our Troy doth this day lie

On his fair worth and single chivalry.

Exeunt.

145

[Scene V. The Greek camp.]

110

Enter AJAX, armed; ACHILLES, PATROCLUS,

AGAMEMNON, MENELAUS, ULYSSES, NESTOR,

CALCHAS, &c.

AGAMEMNON

Here art thou in appointment° fresh and fair,

Anticipating time. With starting° courage,

122 To . . . petition to disdain the worth of my charge and promise 126 even . . . charge simply because I say so

132 answer . . . lust do as I please 137 brave boast 146

address prepare

IV.v.1 appointment equipment and apparel 2 starting active, prompt

Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax, that the appallèd air
May pierce the head of the great combatant
And hale him hither.

AJAX Thou, trumpet,° there's my purse.
Now crack thy lungs, and split thy brazen pipe.
Blow, villain, till thy spherèd bias° cheek
Outswell the colic of puffed Aquilon!°
Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout blood; 10
Thou blow'st for Hector.

[Trumpet sounds.]

ULYSSES
No trumpet answers.

ACHILLES 'Tis but early days.°

AGAMEMNON
Is not yond Diomed with Calchas' daughter?

ULYSSES
'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait;
He rises on the toe. That spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

[Enter DIOMEDES, with CRESSIDA.]

AGAMEMNON
Is this the Lady Cressid?

DIOMEDES Even she.

AGAMEMNON
Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady.

NESTOR
Our general doth salute you with a kiss.

ULYSSES
Yet is the kindness but particular.°
'Twere better she were kissed in general.°

NESTOR
And very courtly counsel. I'll begin.
So much for Nestor.

ACHILLES
I'll take that winter° from your lips, fair lady.
Achilles bids you welcome.

MENELAUS
I had good argument for kissing once.

PATROCLUS
But that's no argument for kissing now;
For thus popped Paris in his hardiment,°
And parted thus you and your argument.°

ULYSSES
O, deadly gall, and theme of all our scorns,
For which we lose our heads to gild his horns.

PATROCLUS
The first was Menelaus' kiss; this, mine.
Patroclus kisses you.

MENELAUS O, this is trim.

PATROCLUS
Paris and I kiss evermore for him.

MENELAUS
I'll have my kiss, sir. Lady, by your leave.

CRESSIDA
In kissing, do you render or receive?

PATROCLUS
Both take and give.

CRESSIDA I'll make my match to live,°
The kiss you take is better than you give;
Therefore no kiss.

MENELAUS
I'll give you boot;° I'll give you three for one. 40

CRESSIDA
You are an odd° man; give even, or give none.

MENELAUS
An odd man, lady? Every man is odd.

CRESSIDA
No, Paris is not, for you know 'tis true
That you are odd and he is even with you.

MENELAUS
You fillip° me o' the head.

CRESSIDA No, I'll be sworn. 45

ULYSSES
It were no match, your nail against his horn.°
May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?

CRESSIDA
You may.

ULYSSES I do desire it.

CRESSIDA Why, beg then.

ULYSSES
Why, then, for Venus' sake, give me a kiss,
When Helen is a maid again, and his. 50

CRESSIDA
I am your debtor; claim it when 'tis due.

ULYSSES
Never's my day, and then a kiss of you.

DIOMEDES 20
Lady, a word. I'll bring you to your father.

[Exeunt DIOMEDES and CRESSIDA.]

NESTOR
A woman of quick sense.

ULYSSES Fie, fie upon her!°
There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip;
Nay, her foot speaks. Her wanton spirits look out 55
At every joint and motive° of her body.

O, these encounterers, so glib of tongue,
That give a coasting welcome ere it comes,°
And wide unclasp the tables° of their thoughts 60
To every ticklish reader, set them down
For sluttish spoils of opportunity°
And daughters of the game.°

30
Flourish. Enter all of Troy [HECTOR, PARIS, AENEAS, HELENUS, TROILUS, and ATTENDANTS].

ALL
The Troyans' trumpet.°

AGAMEMNON Yonder comes the troop.

AENEAS
Hail, all the state of Greece. What shall be done 65

35
37 I'll . . . live I'll bet my life 40 boot odds 41 odd i.e., single and singular 45 fillip tap 46 It . . . horn your nail, in tapping, would be no match for his hard cuckold's horn 54 Fie . . . her Ulysses' exclamation does not imply disagreement with Nestor's observation; the following nine lines elaborate "quick sense" 57 motive moving part 59 a coasting . . . comes a sidelong, flirtatious greeting before being greeted 60 tables tablets 62 sluttish . . . opportunity harlots who yield at every opportunity 63 daughters
. . . game whores 64 The Troyans' trumpet in the theater, this line becomes a pun on strumpet

6 trumpet trumpeter 8 bias puffed-out 9 the colic . . .
Aquilon the north wind, distended as if by colic 12 days in the day 20 particular single 21 in general (1) by the general
(2) universally 24 that winter i.e., Nestor's kiss (cold from old age) 28 hardiment boldness 29 argument i.e., Helen

To him that victory commands? Or do you purpose
A victor shall be known? Will you the knights Shall to the edge of all extremity
Pursue each other, or shall they be divided°
By any voice or order of the field? 70
Hector bade ask.

AGAMEMNON Which way would Hector have it?

AENEAS

He cares not; he'll obey conditions.

ACHILLES

'Tis done like Hector; but securely° done,
A little proudly, and great deal misprising
The knight opposed.

AENEAS If not Achilles, sir.

What is your name?

ACHILLES If not Achilles, nothing.

AENEAS

Therefore Achilles; but, what'er, know this:
In the extremity of great and little,
Valor and pride excel themselves in Hector;
The one almost as infinite as all,
The other blank as nothing. Weigh him well;
And that which looks like pride is courtesy.
This Ajax is half made of Hector's blood,°
In love whereof half Hector stays at home;
Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek
This blended knight, half Trojan, and half Greek.

ACHILLES

A maiden° battle, then? O, I perceive you.

[Enter DIOMEDES.]

AGAMEMNON

Here is Sir Diomed. Go, gentle knight,
Stand by our Ajax. As you and Lord Aeneas
Consent upon the order of their fight,
So be it; either to the uttermost,
Or else a breath.° The combatants being kin
Half stints their strife before their strokes begin.

[AJAX and HECTOR enter the lists.]

ULYSSES

They are opposed already.

AGAMEMNON

What Trojan is that same that looks so heavy?°

ULYSSES

The youngest son of Priam, a true knight,
Not yet mature, yet matchless; firm of word,
Speaking in deeds and deedless in his tongue,°
Not soon provoked, nor being provoked soon calmed;
His heart and hand both open and both free,° 100
For what he has he gives, what thinks he shows;
Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impare thought° with breath;
Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes 105
To tender objects,° but he in heat of action

Is more vindicative than jealous love.
They call him Troilus, and on him erect
A second hope as fairly built as Hector.
Thus says Aeneas, one that knows the youth 110
Even to his inches,° and with private soul°
Did in great Ilion thus translate him to me.

Alarum. [HECTOR and AJAX fight.]

AGAMEMNON

They are in action.

NESTOR

Now, Ajax, hold thine own!

TROIUS

Hector, thou sleep'st; awake thee!

AGAMEMNON

His blows are well disposed.° There, Ajax!

DIOMEDES

You must no more. Trumpets cease.

AENEAS

Princes, enough, so please you.

AJAX

I am not warm yet; let us fight again.

80

DIOMEDES

As Hector pleases.

HECTOR

Why, then will I no more.

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,

A cousin-german to great Priam's seed;

85

The obligation of our blood forbids

A gory emulation 'twixt us twain.

Were thy commixtion° Greek and Trojan so

That thou couldst say, "This hand is Grecian all,

And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg

All Greek, and this all Troy; my mother's blood

Runs on the dexter° cheek, and this sinister°

Bounds in my father's," by Jove multipotent,° 90

Thou shouldst not bear from me a Greekish member

Wherein my sword had not impressure made

Of our rank feud. But the just gods gainsay

That any drop thou borrow'dst from thy mother,

My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword

Be drained! Let me embrace thee, Ajax—

By him that thunders,° thou hast lusty arms;

Hector would have them fall upon him thus.°

Cousin, all honor to thee!

AJAX

I thank thee, Hector;

Thou art too gentle and too free a man.

95

I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence

A great addition earned in thy death.

HECTOR

Not Neoptolemus° so mirable,°

On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st "Oyes"°

Cries, "This is he!" could promise to himself

A thought of added honor torn from Hector.

AENEAS

There is expectance here from both the sides,

What further you will do.

145

69 divided separated during the fight 73 securely overconfidently 83 Hector's blood see note to II.ii.77 87 maiden bloodless (as of novices or men in training, who do not intend to kill) 92 breath exercise 95 heavy heavyhearted 98 deedless . . . tongue free of boasts 100 free generous 103 impare thought (1) ill-considered thought (2) thought unequal to the dignity of his character 105-06 subscribes . . . objects grants merciful terms to the defenseless

111 Even . . . inches from head to toe; with private soul in confidence 115 well disposed well aimed, well placed 123 commixtion composition 127 dexter right; sinister left 128 multipotent of many powers 135 him that thunders Jove (Zeus) 136 thus i.e., embracing him 141 Neoptolemus this name probably applies here to Achilles himself, and not to his son, Pyrrhus; mirable wonderful 142 Oyes cries beginning the proclamations of heralds or sessions of a court

HECTOR We'll answer it.
The issue° is embracement. Ajax, farewell.

AJAX
If I might in entreaties find success—
As seld° I have the chance—I would desire
My famous cousin to our Grecian tents. 150

DIOMEDES
'Tis Agamemnon's wish; and great Achilles
Doth long to see unarmed the valiant Hector.

HECTOR
Aeneas, call my brother Troilus to me,
And signify° this loving interview
To the expecters of our Trojan part.° 155
Desire them home.° Give me thy hand, my cousin;
I will go eat with thee and see your knights.
[AGAMEMNON and the rest approach them.]

AJAX
Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.

HECTOR
The worthiest of them tell me name by name;
But for Achilles, my own searching eyes 160
Shall find him by his large and portly size.

AGAMEMNON
Worthy of all arms [embraces him], as welcome as to one
That would be rid of such an enemy—
But that's no welcome. Understand more clear,
What's past and what's to come is strewed with husks 165
And formless ruin of oblivion;
But in this extant° moment, faith and troth,
Strained purely from all hollow bias-drawing,°
Bids thee, with most divine integrity,
From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome. 170

HECTOR
I thank thee, most imperious Agamemnon.

AGAMEMNON [To TROILUS.]
My well-famed lord of Troy, no less to you.

MENELAUS
Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting.
You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.

HECTOR
Who must we answer?

AENEAS The noble Menelaus. 175

HECTOR
O, you, my lord? By Mars his gauntlet, thanks!
Mock not that I affect th' untraded° oath;
Your quondam° wife swears still by Venus' glove.
She's well, but bade me not commend her to you.

MENELAUS
Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly theme. 180

HECTOR
O, pardon! I offend.

NESTOR
I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft,

147 issue result, outcome 149 seld seldom 154 signify expound, explain 155 expecters . . . part those on our side, the Trojans, awaiting news 156 Desire them home ask them to go home 167 extant present 168 all hollow bias-drawing all fruitless and tortuous dealings (in the course of the war, as in the course given by the bias of a bowl in bowling) 177 untraded unusual, unfamiliar (Hector, apologizing for what might appear to be an affected oath, gives his reason for using it in the following line, in which he completes a satirical reference to Menelaus and Helen by alluding to the liaison between Mars and Venus) 178 quondam former

Laboring for destiny,° make cruel way
Through ranks of Greekish youth; and I have seen thee,
As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed, 185
Despising many forfeits and subduements,°
When thou hast hung° thy advanced sword i' th' air,
Not letting it decline on the declined,
That I have said to some my standers-by,
"Lo, Jupiter is yonder, dealing life!"° 190
And I have seen thee pause and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have shraped° thee in,
Like an Olympian wrestling. This have I seen;
But this thy countenance, still° locked in steel, 195
I never saw till now. I knew thy grandsire,°
And once fought with him. He was a soldier good;
But, by great Mars, the captain of us all,
Never like thee. O, let an old man embrace thee;
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.

AENEAS
'Tis the old Nestor. 200

HECTOR
Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle,
That hast so long walked hand in hand with time.
Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee.

NESTOR
I would my arms could match thee in contention,
As they contend with thee in courtesy. 205

HECTOR
I would they could.

NESTOR
Ha,
By this white beard, I'd fight with thee tomorrow.
Well, welcome, welcome. I have seen the time—

ULYSSES
I wonder now how yonder city stands, 210
When we have here her base and pillar by us.

HECTOR
I know your favor,° Lord Ulysses, well.
Ah, sir, there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,
Since first I saw yourself and Diomed
In Ilion, on your Greekish embassy. 215

ULYSSES
Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue.
My prophecy is but half his journey yet;
For yonder walls, that pertly front your town,
Yon towers, whose wanton tops do buss° the clouds,
Must kiss their own feet.

HECTOR I must not believe you. 220
There they stand yet, and modestly I think,
The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood. The end crowns all,
And that old common arbitrator, Time,
Will one day end it.

ULYSSES So to him we leave it. 225
Most gentle and most valiant Hector, welcome.
After the general, I beseech you next
To feast with me and see me at my tent.

183 Laboring for destiny working in behalf of destiny, i.e., causing destined deaths 186 Despising . . . subduements ignoring or disdaining those already vanquished, whose lives were forfeit 187 hung held suspended 190 dealing life dispensing life (as a god might do by not causing death) 192 shraped trapped 194 still always 195 grandsire Laomedon, the builder of Troy 212 favor face, features 219 buss kiss

ACHILLES

I shall forestall thee, Lord Ulysses, thou!
Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee;
I have with exact view perused thee, Hector,
And quoted° joint by joint.

HECTOR

Is this Achilles?

ACHILLES

I am Achilles.

HECTOR

Stand fair,° I pray thee; let me look on thee.

ACHILLES

Behold thy fill.

HECTOR

Nay, I have done already.

ACHILLES

Thou art too brief. I will the second time,
As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb.

HECTOR

O, like a book of sport thou'lt read me o'er;
But there's more in me than thou understand'st.
Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye?

ACHILLES

Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body
Shall I destroy him, whether there, or there, or there?
That I may give the local wound a name,
And make distinct the very breach whereout
Hector's great spirit flew. Answer me, heavens!

HECTOR

It would discredit the blessed gods, proud man,
To answer such a question. Stand again.
Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly°
As to prenominate in nice conjecture°
Where thou wilt hit me dead?

ACHILLES

I tell thee, yea.

HECTOR

Wert thou an oracle to tell me so,
I'd not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee well,
For I'll not kill thee there, not there, nor there;
But, by the forge that stithied° Mars his helm,
I'll kill thee everywhere, yea, o'er and o'er.
You wisest Grecians, pardon me this brag.
His insolence draws folly from my lips;
But I'll endeavor deeds to match these words,
Or may I never—

AJAX

Do not chafe thee, cousin;

And you, Achilles, let these threats alone,
Till accident or purpose bring you to't.
You may have every day enough of Hector,
If you have stomach.° The general state,° I fear,
Can scarce entreat you to be odd° with him.

HECTOR

I pray you, let us see you in the field.
We have had pelting° wars since you refused
The Grecians' cause.

ACHILLES

Dost thou entreat° me, Hector?

Tomorrow do I meet thee, fell° as death;
Tonight all friends.

HECTOR

Thy hand upon that match.

232 quoted made exact mental note, scrutinized 234 Stand fair stand openly, face me 248 pleasantly casually, merrily
249 prenominate . . . conjecture name beforehand in detailed conjecture 254 stithied forged 263 stomach inclination, relish; general state commanders in council 264 odd at odds, engaged in combat 266 pelting paltry, petty 267 entreat invite 268 fell fierce

AGAMEMNON

First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent;
There in the full convive° we. Afterwards,
As Hector's leisure and your bounties shall Concur together, severally° entreat him
To taste your bounties. Let the trumpets blow,
That this great soldier may his welcome know.

Exeunt [all except TROILUS and ULYSSES].

TROILUS

My Lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you,
In what place of the field doth Calchas keep°?

ULYSSES

At Menelaus' tent, most princely Troilus.
There Diomed doth feast with him tonight—
Who neither looks upon the heaven nor earth,
But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view
On the fair Cressid.

TROILUS

Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much,
After we part from Agamemnon's tent,
To bring me thither?

ULYSSES

You shall command me, sir.

But gentle tell me, of what honor was
This Cressida in Troy? Had she no lover there
That wails her absence?

TROILUS

O, sir, to such as boasting show their scars
A mock is due. Will you walk on, my lord?
She was beloved, she loved; she is, and doth;
But still sweet love is food for fortune's tooth.

Exeunt.

[A C T V]

[Scene I. The Greek camp.]

255 Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

ACHILLES

I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine tonight,
Which with my scimitar I'll cool tomorrow.
Patroclus, let us feast him to the height.

260 Enter THERSITES.

PATROCLUS

Here comes Thersites.

ACHILLES How now, thou cur of envy!

Thou crusty batch° of nature, what's the news? 5

265 THERSITES Why, thou picture of what thou seemest, and idol of idiot-worshipers, here's a letter for thee.

ACHILLES From whence, fragment?

THERSITES Why, thou full dish of fool, from Troy.

PATROCLUS Who keeps the tent now°?

THERSITES The surgeon's box or the patient's wound.° 10

271 convive feast 273 severally individually 277 keep dwell

V.i.5 batch a mass of anything baked together, or baked without reheating the oven 6 thou . . . seemest i.e., who is nothing more than one glance sufficiently reveals 10 Who . . . now Thersites can no longer taunt Achilles for refusing to leave his tent 11 surgeon's . . . wound from the play on tent, a surgeon's probe for wounds

PATROCLUS Well said, adversity, and what needs these tricks?

THERSITES Prithee, be silent, boy; I profit not by thy talk. Thou art said to be Achilles' male varlet.

PATROCLUS Male varlet, you rogue! What's that?

THERSITES Why, his masculine whore. Now, the rotten diseases of the south,¹⁹ the guts-griping ruptures, catarrhs, loads o' gravel in the back, lethargies, cold palsies,²⁰ raw eyes, dirt-rotten livers, wheezing lungs, bladders full of imposthume,²¹ sciaticas, lime-kilns²² i' the palm, incurable bone-ache, and the riveled²³ fee-simple of the tetter,²⁴ and the like, take and take again such preposterous discoveries!²⁵

PATROCLUS Why, thou damnable box of envy, thou, what means thou to curse thus?

THERSITES Do I curse thee?

PATROCLUS Why, no, you ruinous butt,²⁹ you whoreson indistinguishable³⁰ cur, no.

THERSITES No? Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sleeve silk,³² thou green sarcenet³³ flap for a sore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse, thou? Ah, how the poor world is pestered with such water-flies, diminutives of nature.

PATROCLUS Out, gall!

THERSITES Finch egg!

ACHILLES

My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite
From my great purpose in tomorrow's battle.

Here is a letter from Queen Hecuba,

A token from her daughter, my fair love,

Both taxing⁴² me and gaging⁴³ me to keep

An oath that I have sworn. I will not break it.

Fall Greeks, fail fame, honor or go or⁴⁴ stay,

My major vow lies here; this I'll obey.

Come, come, Thersites, help to trim my tent;

This night in banqueting must all be spent.

Away, Patroclus! Exit, [with PATROCLUS].

THERSITES With too much blood and too little brain, these two may run mad; but if with too much brain and too little blood they do, I'll be a curer of madmen.
Here's Agamemnon, an honest fellow enough, and one that loves quails,⁵³ but he has not so much brain as ear-wax; and the goodly transformation of Jupiter⁵⁴ there, his brother, the bull, the primitive statue and oblique memorial of cuckolds⁵⁵—a thrifty⁵⁶ shoeinghorn in a chain, hanging at his brother's leg⁵⁷—to what form but that he is should wit larded with malice and malice forced⁵⁹ with wit turn him to? To an ass, were nothing; he is both ass and ox. To an ox, were nothing; he is both ox and ass. To be a dog, a mule, a cat, a fitchew,⁶² a toad, a lizard, an owl, a puttock,⁶³ or a herring without a roe, I would not care; but to be Menelaus! I would conspire against destiny. Ask me not what I would be, if I were not Thersites, for I care not to be⁶⁵ the louse of a lazar,⁶⁶ so I were not Menelaus. Hey-day, sprites and fires!

¹⁹ diseases . . . south i.e., venereal diseases ²⁰⁻²¹ gravel . . . palsies kidney stones, apoplectic strokes, paralysis of the limbs ²² imposthume internal abscess; lime-kilns psoriasis (burning red patches covered with scales) ²³ riveled wrinkled ²³⁻²⁴ fee-simple . . . tetter chronic ringworm (?) ("fee-simple" implies unlimited possession) ²⁵ discoveries referring generally to—in Thersites' opinion—such absurd monstrosities as Patroclus ²⁹ ruinous butt dilapidated cask ³⁰ indistinguishable shapeless (here suggesting mongrel) ³² sleeve silk soft silk floss ³³ sarcenet a fine silk taffeta ⁴² taxing censuring; gaging engaging to a promise ⁴⁴ or go or either go or ⁵³ quails prostitutes ⁵⁴ transformation of Jupiter i.e., into a bull, in which shape he seduced Europa ⁵⁵⁻⁵⁶ primitive . . . cuckolds in having horns, the emblem or symbol of cuckoldry, although since Europa was not married, the parallel to Paris' rape of Helen is "oblique" ⁵⁶ thrifty stingy ⁵⁷ hanging . . . leg (1) as Agamemnon's tool, appropriately enough a "horn," his pretext for war (2) as being entirely dependent on Agamemnon

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, [HECTOR, AJAX, TROILUS, MENELAUS,] and DIOMEDES, with lights.

AGAMEMNON

We go wrong, we go wrong.

AJAX No, yonder 'tis;

There, where we see the lights.

HECTOR I trouble you.

AJAX

No, not a whit.

ULYSSES Here comes himself to guide you.

Enter ACHILLES.

ACHILLES

Welcome, brave Hector; welcome, princes all.

AGAMEMNON

So now, fair prince of Troy, I bid good night.

Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

HECTOR

Thanks and good night to the Greeks' general.

MENELAUS

Good night, my lord.

HECTOR

Good night, sweet Lord Menelaus.

THERSITES Sweet draught!⁶⁵ "Sweet," quoth 'a!

Sweet sink, sweet sewer.

ACHILLES

Good night and welcome both at once, to those

That go or tarry.

AGAMEMNON Good night.

Exeunt AGAMEMNON, MENELAUS.

ACHILLES

Old Nestor tarries, and you too, Diomed,

Keep Hector company an hour or two.

DIOMEDES

I cannot, lord; I have important business,

The tide⁸⁵ whereof is now. Good night, great Hector.

HECTOR

Give me your hand.

ULYSSES [Aside to TROILUS.]

Follow his torch; he goes

To Calchas' tent. I'll keep you company.

TROILUS

Sweet sir, you honor me.

HECTOR

And so, good night.

[Exeunt DIOMEDES, then ULYSSES and TROILUS.]

ACHILLES

Come, come, enter my tent.

Exeunt [ACHILLES, HECTOR, AJAX, and NESTOR].

⁵⁹ forced stuffed, intermixed ⁶² fitchew polecat; puttock kite, a small hawk feeding on carrion ⁶⁵⁻⁶⁶ I care . . . be I wouldn't mind being ⁶⁶ lazar leper ⁷⁷ draught privy, cesspool ⁸⁵ tide time

THERSITES That same Diomed's a false-hearted rogue, a most unjust knave; I will no more trust him when he leers than I will a serpent when he hisses. He will spend his mouth and promise like Brabblers the hound;⁹⁴ but when he performs, astronomers foretell it. It is prodigious, there will come some change. The sun borrows of the moon when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leave to see⁹⁵ Hector than not to dog him. They say he keeps a Trojan drab, and uses the traitor Calchas' tent. I'll after—nothing but lechery! 100
All incontinent varlets! [Exit.]

[Scene II. The Greek camp.]

Enter DIOMEDES.

DIOMEDES What, are you up here, ho? Speak.

CALCHAS [Within.] Who calls?

DIOMEDES Diomed. Calchas, I think. Where's your daughter?

CALCHAS [Within.] She comes to you. 5

Enter TROILUS and ULYSSES; [after them THERSITES.]

ULYSSES

Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter CRESSIDA.

TROILUS

Cressid comes forth to him.

DIOMEDES How now, my charge!

CRESSIDA

Now, my sweet guardian! Hark, a word with you.

[Whispers.]

TROILUS Yea, so familiar!

ULYSSES She will sing any man at first sight. 10

THERSITES And any man may sing her, if he can take her cliff;⁹⁶ she's noted.⁹⁷

DIOMEDES Will you remember?

CRESSIDA Remember? Yes.

DIOMEDES Nay, but do, then; 15

And let your mind be coupled with your words.

TROILUS What shall she remember?

ULYSSES List!

CRESSIDA

Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly.

THERSITES Roguery! 20

DIOMEDES

Nay, then—

CRESSIDA I'll tell you what—

DIOMEDES

Foh, foh! Come, tell a pin. You are forsworn.

CRESSIDA

In faith, I cannot. What would you have me do?

THERSITES A juggling trick—to be secretly⁹⁸ open.

94–95 Brabblers the hound a hunting hound who would “spend his mouth” in barking while not on the scent would be called “babbler” or “brabblers” by his master 98 leave to see miss seeing

V.ii.12 cliff clef (signifying the musical key; with an obscene pun on clef; noted reputed a loose woman (with a pun on the sense of musical notes) 24 secretly privately, sexually

DIOMEDES

What did you swear you would bestow on me? 25

CRESSIDA

I prithee, do not hold me to mine oath;

Bid me do anything but that, sweet Greek.

DIOMEDES Good night.

TROILUS Hold, patience!

ULYSSES How now, Trojan? 30

CRESSIDA Diomed—

DIOMEDES

No, no, good night; I'll be your fool no more.

TROILUS

Thy better must.

CRESSIDA

Hark, a word in your ear.

TROILUS

O plague and madness!

ULYSSES

You are moved, prince; let us depart, I pray, 35

Lest your displeasure should enlarge itself

To wrathful terms. This place is dangerous;

The time right deadly. I beseech you, go.

TROILUS

Behold, I pray you!

ULYSSES

Nay, good my lord, go off;

You flow to great distraction. Come, my lord. 40

TROILUS

I prithee, stay.

ULYSSES

You have not patience; come.

TROILUS

I pray you, stay! By hell, and all hell's torments,

I will not speak a word!

DIOMEDES

And so, good night.

CRESSIDA

Nay, but you part in anger.

TROILUS

Doth that grieve thee?

O withered truth!

ULYSSES

How now, my lord!

TROILUS

By Jove, 45

I will be patient.

CRESSIDA

Guardian! Why, Greek!

DIOMEDES

Foh, foh! Adieu; you palter. 15

CRESSIDA

In faith, I do not. Come hither once again.

ULYSSES

You shake, my lord, at something. Will you go?

You will break out.

TROILUS

She strokes his cheek! 20

ULYSSES

Come, come. 50

TROILUS

Nay, stay; by Jove, I will not speak a word.

There is between my will and all offenses

A guard of patience. Stay a little while.

THERSITES How the devil Luxury,⁹⁹ with his fat rump and potato¹⁰⁰ finger, tickles these together. Fry, lechery, 55 fry!

DIOMEDES But will you, then?

CRESSIDA

In faith, I will, la; never trust me else.

DIOMEDES

Give me some token for the surety of it.

54 Luxury lechery 55 potato potatoes were thought to be aphrodisiac

CRESSIDA

I'll fetch you one.

Exit. 60

ULYSSES

You have sworn patience.

TROILUS

Fear me not, my lord;

I will not be myself, nor have cognition

Of what I feel. I am all patience.

Enter CRESSIDA.

THERSITES Now the pledge! Now, now, now!

CRESSIDA Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.

65

TROILUS

O beauty, where is thy faith?

ULYSSES

My lord—

TROILUS

I will be patient; outwardly I will.

CRESSIDA

You look upon that sleeve; behold it well.

He loved me—O false wench! Give't me again.

DIOMEDES

Whose was't?

CRESSIDA It is no matter, now I have't again.

70

I will not meet with you tomorrow night.

I prithee, Diomed, visit me no more.

THERSITES Now she sharpens.^o Well said, whetstone!

DIOMEDES

I shall have it.

CRESSIDA What, this?

DIOMEDES

Ay, that.

CRESSIDA

O, all you gods! O pretty, pretty pledge!

Thy master now lies thinking on his bed

Of thee and me, and sighs, and takes my glove,

And gives memorial^o dainty kisses to it,

As I kiss thee. Nay, do not snatch it from me;

He that takes that doth take my heart withal.

80

DIOMEDES

I had your heart before; this follows it.

TROILUS

I did swear patience.

CRESSIDA

You shall not have it, Diomed; faith, you shall not;

I'll give you something else.

DIOMEDES

I will have this. Whose was it?

CRESSIDA

It is no matter.

85

DIOMEDES

Come, tell me whose it was.

CRESSIDA

'Twas one's that loved me better than you will.

But, now you have it, take it.

DIOMEDES

Whose was it?

CRESSIDA

By all Diana's waiting-women^o yond,

And by herself, I will not tell you whose.

90

DIOMEDES

Tomorrow will I wear it on my helm,

And grieve his spirit that dares not challenge it.

TROILUS

Wert thou the devil, and wor'st it on thy horn,

It should be challenged.

CRESSIDA

Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past. And yet it is not;

95

I will not keep my word.

DIOMEDES

Why then, farewell;

Thou never shalt mock Diomed again.

CRESSIDA

You shall not go. One cannot speak a word

But it straight starts you.^o

DIOMEDES

I do not like this fooling.

THERSITES Nor I, by Pluto; but that that likes^o not 100

you pleases me best.

DIOMEDES What, shall I come? The hour?

CRESSIDA

Ay, come—O Jove!—

Do come—I shall be plagued.^o

DIOMEDES

Farewell till then.

CRESSIDA

Good night. I prithee, come.

Exit [DIOMEDES].

Troilus, farewell. One eye yet looks on thee,

But with my heart the other eye doth see.

105

Ah, poor our sex!^o This fault in us I find,The error^o of our eye directs our mind.

What error leads must err. O, then conclude,

Minds swayed by eyes are full of turpitude.

Exit.

THERSITES

A proof of strength^o she could not publish more,^o

110

Unless she said, "My mind is now turned whore."

ULYSSES

All's done, my lord.

75

TROILUS

It is.

ULYSSES

What stay we, then?

TROILUS

To make a recordation to my soul

Of every syllable that here was spoke.

But if I tell how these two did coact,

115

Shall I not lie in publishing a truth?

Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,

An esperance^o so obstinately strongThat doth invert th' attest^o of eyes and ears,

120

As if those organs had deceptious^o functions,

Created only to calumniate.

Was Cressid here?

ULYSSES

I cannot conjure,^o Trojan.

TROILUS

She was not, sure.

85

ULYSSES

Most sure she was.

TROILUS

Why, my negation^o hath no taste of madness.

ULYSSES

Nor mine, my lord. Cressid was here but now.

125

TROILUS

Let it not be believed for^o womanhood!

Think we had mothers; do not give advantage

99 straight starts you immediately makes you start angrily away 100 likes pleases 103 plagued punished 107 poor our sex our poor sex 108 error wandering (here, physically and morally) 111 proof of strength strong proof; publish more confess more clearly 119 esperance hope 120 attest testimony 121 deceptious deceiving 123 conjure raise spirits 125 negation denial 127 for for the sake of 73 sharpens i.e., whets Diomedes' desire 78 memorial in remembrance 89 Diana's waiting-women the stars clustered about the moon

To stubborn critics, apt, without a theme,
For depravation,^o to square the general sex
By Cressid's rule.^o Rather think this not Cressid.

ULYSSES

What hath she done, prince, that can soil our mothers?

TROILUS

Nothing at all, unless that this were she.

THERSITES

Will 'a swagger himself out on's own eyes?^o

TROILUS

This she? No, this is Diomed's Cressida.

If beauty have a soul, this is not she;

If souls guide vows, if vows be sanctimonies,

If sanctimony be the gods' delight,

If there be rule in unity itself,^o

This was not she. O madness of discourse,^o

That cause sets up with and against itself:

Bifold authority,^o where reason can revolt

Without perdition, and loss assume all reason

Without revolt.^o This is, and is not, Cressid.

Within my soul there doth conduce^o a fight

Of this strange nature that a thing inseparate^o

Divides more wider than the sky and earth;

And yet the spacious breadth of this division

Admits no orifex^o for a point as subtle^o

As Ariachne's broken woof^o to enter.

Instance,^o O instance, strong as Pluto's gates;

Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven.

Instance, O instance, strong as heaven itself;

The bonds of heaven are slipped, dissolved, and loosed,

And with another knot, five-finger-tied,^o

The fractions of her faith, orts^o of her love,

The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy relics

Of her o'ereaten^o faith, are given to Diomed.

ULYSSES

May worthy Troilus be half attached^o

With that which here his passion doth express?

TROILUS

Ay, Greek! And that shall be divulgèd well

In characters as red as Mars his heart

Inflamed with Venus. Never did young man fancy

With so eternal and so fixed a soul.

Hark, Greek. Much as I do Cressid love,

129-30 apt . . . depravation ready and eager to claim the depravity of women, but lacking examples 130-31 square . . . rule take the measure of womankind by Cressida's standard 134 Will . . . eyes Will he bluff himself out of trusting his own sight? 139 If . . . itself i.e., if it is a true principle that one cannot be two (that Cressida may not be divided into two persons) 140 discourse reasonable sequence of thought 141-42 That . . . authority that case of principle wherein divided authority both supports and confutes the question 142-44 where . . . revolt where reason can rebel without subsequent chaos, and loss of understanding assume the appearance of reason without reason itself objecting 145 conduce go on 146 thing inseparate that which is indivisible; i.e., Cressida 149 orifex opening; subtle finely sharp 150 Ariachne's broken woof Arachne was a Lydian woman who challenged Athene to a weaving contest, but the goddess, angered, tore her work to shreds and changed her to a spider 151 Instance example, proof (here, in the sense of "for instance") 155 five-fingered-tied (1) so tied because Cressida's hand is now Diomedes' (?) (2) i.e., impossible to untie (?) 156 orts scraps, pieces (as of food) 158 o'ereaten eaten through, picked over (as a dog will eat the best pieces first, the last scraps left over) 159 half attached i.e., half so much affected (as it appears)

So much by weight hate I her Diomed;

That sleeve is mine that he'll bear on his helm;

Were it a casque^o composed by Vulcan's skill,

My sword should bite it. Not the dreadful spout

Which shipmen do the hurricano call,

Constringed^o in mass by the almighty sun,

Shall dizzy with more clamor Neptune's ear

In his descent than shall my prompted^o sword

Falling on Diomed.

THERSITES He'll tickle it for his concupy.^o

TROILUS

O Cressid! O false Cressid! False, false, false!

Let all untruths stand by thy stained name,

And they'll seem glorious.

ULYSSES O, contain yourself;

Your passion draws ears hither.

Enter AENEAS.

AENEAS

I have been seeking you this hour, my lord.

Hector, by this, is arming him^o in Troy;

Ajax, your guard, stays to conduct you home.

TROILUS

Have with you,^o prince. My courteous lord, adieu.

Farewell, revolted fair; and Diomed,

Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head!

ULYSSES

I'll bring you to the gates.

TROILUS

Accept distracted thanks.

Exeunt TROILUS, AENEAS, and ULYSSES.

THERSITES Would I could meet that rogue Diomed.

I would croak like a raven; I would bode,^o I would bode. Patroclus will give me anything for the intelligence of this whore. The parrot will not do more for an almond than he for a commodious drab.^o Lechery, lechery; still wars and lechery; nothing else holds fashion. A burning devil^o take them! Exit.

[Scene III. Troy; Priam's palace.]

Enter HECTOR and ANDROMACHE.

ANDROMACHE

When was my lord so much ungently tempered,

To stop his ears against admonishment?

Unarm, unarm, and do not fight today.

HECTOR

You train^o me to offend^o you; get you in.

By all the everlasting gods, I'll go.

ANDROMACHE

My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the day.^o

HECTOR

No more, I say.

Enter CASSANDRA.

168 casque helmet 171 Constringed drawn together 173 prompted urged on, as having its own motive 175 He'll

. . . concupy he'll be well tickled for his concupiscence

("it" refers contemptuously to Diomedes) 181 him himself

183 Have with you let's go along 189 bode portend disaster 192 commodious drab serviceable whore 194

burning devil venereal disease

V.iii.4 train tempt; offend injure, insult 6 ominous . . .

day omens applicable to this day

CASSANDRA Where is my brother Hector?

ANDROMACHE

Here, sister; armed and bloody in intent.
Consort with me in loud and dear petition;
Pursue we him on knees, for I have dreamed
Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night
Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter.

CASSANDRA

O, 'tis true.

HECTOR Ho, bid my trumpet sound.

CASSANDRA

No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother.

HECTOR

Be gone, I say; the gods have heard me swear.

CASSANDRA

The gods are deaf to hot and peevish° vows.
They are polluted offerings, more abhorred
Than spotted° livers in the sacrifice.

ANDROMACHE

O, be persuaded! Do not count it holy
To hurt by being just. It is as lawful,
For° we would give much, to use violent thefts,
And rob in the behalf of charity.

CASSANDRA

It is the purpose that makes strong the vow;
But vows to every purpose must not hold.
Unarm, sweet Hector.

HECTOR Hold you still, I say.

Mine honor keeps the weather° of my fate.
Life every man holds dear; but the dear° man
Holds honor far more precious-dear than life.

Enter TROILUS.

How now, young man; mean'st thou to fight today?

ANDROMACHE

Cassandra, call my father to persuade.

Exit CASSANDRA.

HECTOR

No, faith, young Troilus; doff thy harness, youth.
I am today i' the vein of chivalry.
Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong,
And tempt not yet the brushes° of the war.
Unarm thee; go, and doubt thou not, brave boy,
I'll stand today for thee and me and Troy.

TROILUS

Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you,
Which better fits a lion than a man.

HECTOR

What vice is that? Good Troilus, chide me for it.

TROILUS

When many times the captive Grecian falls,
Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword,
You bid them rise and live.

HECTOR

O, 'tis fair play.

TROILUS Fool's play, by heaven, Hector.

HECTOR

How now? How now?

TROILUS For the love of all the gods,

Let's leave the hermit pity with our mother, 45

And when we have our armors buckled on,

The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords,

Spur them to ruthless° work, rein them from ruth.° 10

HECTOR

Fie, savage, fie!

TROILUS

Hector, then 'tis wars.°

HECTOR

Troilus, I would not have you fight today. 50

TROILUS

Who should withhold me?

Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars

Beck'ning with fiery truncheon° my retire;

Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees,

Their eyes o'ergallèd° with recourse° of tears; 55

Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn,

Opposed to hinder me, should stop my way,

But by my ruin.

Enter PRIAM and CASSANDRA.

CASSANDRA

Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast;

He is thy crutch. Now if thou lose thy stay,° 60

Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee,

Fall all together.

PRIAM

Come, Hector, come; go back.

Thy wife hath dreamt, thy mother hath had visions,

Cassandra doth foresee, and I myself

Am like a prophet suddenly enrapt 65

To tell thee that this day is ominous.

Therefore, come back.

HECTOR

Aeneas is afield;

And I do stand engaged to many Greeks,

Even in the faith of valor,° to appear

This morning to them.

PRIAM

Ay, but thou shalt not go. 70

HECTOR

I must not break my faith.

You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir,

Let me not shame respect,° but give me leave

To take that course by your consent and voice,

Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam. 75

CASSANDRA

O Priam, yield not to him!

ANDROMACHE

Do not, dear father.

HECTOR

Andromache, I am offended with you.

Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

Exit ANDROMACHE.

TROILUS

This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl

Makes all these bodements.°

CASSANDRA

O farewell, dear Hector! 80

Look, how thou diest; look, how thy eye turns pale;

Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents!

16 peevish brash, perverse 18 spotted i.e., spoiled 21 For because 24 But . . . hold vows sworn indiscriminately or to unlawful purpose should not bind the swearer 26 keeps the weather i.e., maintains the position of advantage 27 dear valuable, worthy 34 brushes encounters

48 ruthless to be pitied, woeful; ruth pity 49 then 'tis wars that's what war is 53 truncheon a kind of baton used by the referee of a combat to signal the end of the fight 55 o'ergallèd inflamed; recourse repeated coursing down, constant flowing 60 stay support 69 faith of valor a brave man's promise 73 shame respect disgrace the respect due to a parent 80 bodements evil omens

Hark, how Troy roars, how Hecuba cries out,
How poor Andromache shrills her dolours forth!
Behold, distraction, frenzy, and amazement, 85
Like witless antics,^o one another meet,
And all cry Hector! Hector's dead! O Hector!

TROILUS

Away! Away!

CASSANDRA

Farewell. Yet, soft; Hector, I take my leave.
Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive. Exit. 90

HECTOR

You are amazed, my liege, at her exclaim.
Go in and cheer the town. We'll forth and fight;
Do deeds worth praise and tell you them at night.

PRIAM

Farewell. The gods with safety stand about thee.
[Exeunt PRIAM and HECTOR.]

Alarum.

TROILUS

They are at it, hark. Proud Diomed, believe, 95
I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.

Enter PANDAR.

PANDARUS

Do you hear, my lord? Do you hear?

TROILUS

What now?

PANDARUS

Here's a letter come from yond poor girl.

TROILUS

Let me read. 100
PANDARUS A whoreson tisick,^o a whoreson rascally tisick so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl; and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one o' th'se days; and I have a rheum in mine eyes too, and such an ache in my bones that, unless a 105 man were cursed, I cannot tell what to think on't.
What says she there?

TROILUS

Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart;
Th' effect doth operate another way.

[Tearing the letter.]

Go, wind to wind, there turn and change together. 110
My love with words and errors^o still she feeds,
But edifics another with her deeds. Exeunt.

[Scene IV. The battlefield.]

[Alarum.] Enter THERSITES. Excursions.

THERSITES Now they are clapperclawing one another; I'll go look on. That dissembling abominable varlet, Diomed, has got that same scurvy doting foolish young knave's sleeve of Troy there in his helm.
I would fain see them meet, that that same young 5 Trojan ass, that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish whoremasterly villain with the sleeve back to the dissembling luxurious drab, of a sleeveless^o

86 antics madmen 101 tisick cough 111 errors meanderings, i.e., underhanded tricks (?)

V.iv.8 sleeveless futile, fruitless errand. O' the t'other side, the policy of those crafty swearing^o rascals—that stale old mouseeaten dry 10 cheese, Nestor, and that same dog-fox, Ulysses—is not proved worth a blackberry. They set me up, in policy, that mongrel cur, Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind, Achilles; and now is the cur Ajax prouder than 15 the cur Achilles, and will not arm today. Whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarism,^o and policy grows into an ill opinion.

Enter DIOMEDES and TROILUS.

Soft, here comes sleeve, and t'other.

TROILUS

Fly not; for shouldst thou take the river Styx,
I would swim after.

DIOMEDES

Thou dost miscall retire. 20
I do not fly, but advantageous care
Withdrew me from the odds of multitude.^o
Have at thee!

THERSITES

Hold thy whore, Grecian! Now for thy whore, 25
Trojan! Now the sleeve, now the sleeve!
[Exeunt TROILUS and DIOMEDES, fighting.]

Enter HECTOR.

HECTOR

What art thou, Greek? Art thou for Hector's match?
Art thou of blood and honor?

THERSITES No, no, I am a rascal, a scurvy railing knave, a very filthy rogue.

HECTOR I do believe thee; live. [Exit.] 30

THERSITES God-a-mercy, that thou wilt believe me; but a plague break thy neck—for frightening me. What's become of the wenching rogues? I think they have swallowed one another. I would laugh at that miracle —yet, in a sort, lechery eats itself. I'll seek them. Exit. 35

[Scene V. The battlefield.]

Enter DIOMED and SERVANT.

DIOMEDES

Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus' horse;
Present the fair steed to my Lady Cressid.
Fellow, commend my service to her beauty;
Tell her I have chastised the amorous Trojan,
And am her knight by proof.

SERVANT I go, my lord. [Exit.] 5

Enter AGAMEMNON.

AGAMEMNON

Renew, renew! The fierce Polydamas
Hath beat down Menon; bastard Margarelon
Hath Doreus prisoner,
And stands colossus-wise, waving his beam,^o
Upon the pashèd corpses^o of the kings 10
Epistrophus and Cedius; Polyxenes is slain,

9–10 crafty swearing craftily swearing, i.e., crafty to the extent of perjury 16 proclaim barbarism recognize the authority of chaos (to replace policy) 21–22 advantageous . . . multitude care for my own advantage led me to avoid facing absurdly heavy odds

V.v.9 beam spear 10 pashèd corpses battered corpses

Amphimachus and Thoas deadly hurt,
 Patroclus ta'en or slain, and Palamedes
 Sore hurt and bruised. The dreadful Sagittary°
 Appals our numbers. Haste we, Diomed,
 To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter NESTOR.

NESTOR

Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles,
 And bid the snail-paced Ajax arm for shame.
 There is a thousand Hectors in the field;
 Now here he fights on Galathea his horse,
 And there lacks work; anon he's there afoot,
 And there they fly or die, like scaled sculls°
 Before the belching whale; then is he yonder,
 And there the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,°
 Fall down before him, like a mower's swath.
 Here, there, and everywhere, he leaves and takes,
 Dexterity so obeying appetite
 That what he will he does, and does so much
 That proof° is called impossibility.

Enter ULYSSES.

ULYSSES

O, courage, courage, princes! Great Achilles
 Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance!
 Patroclus' wounds have roused his drowsy blood,
 Together with his mangled Myrmidons,
 That noseless, handless, hacked and chipped, come to
 him,
 Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend,
 And foams at mouth, and he is armed and at it,
 Roaring for Troilus, who hath done today
 Mad and fantastic execution,
 Engaging and redeeming of himself
 With such a careless force and forceless° care
 As if that luck, in very spite of cunning,
 Bade him win all.

Enter AJAX.

AJAX

Troilus, thou coward Troilus!

Exit.

DIOMEDES

Ay, there, there.

NESTOR

So, so, we draw together.

Exit.

Enter ACHILLES.

ACHILLES

Where is this Hector?
 Come, come, thou boy-queller,° show thy face;
 Know what it is to meet Achilles angry.
 Hector, where's Hector? I will none but Hector.

Exit.

[Scene VI. The battlefield.]

Enter AJAX.

AJAX

Troilus, thou coward Troilus, show thy head!

Enter DIOMEDES.

DIOMEDES

Troilus, I say, where's Troilus?

AJAX

What wouldst thou?

15

DIOMEDES

I would correct him.

AJAX

Were I the general, thou shouldst have my office
 Ere that correction.° Troilus, I say! What, Troilus!

5

Enter TROILUS.

TROILUS

20

O traitor Diomed! Turn thy false face, thou traitor,
 And pay thy life thou owest me for my horse.°

DIOMEDES

Ha, art thou there?

AJAX

25

I'll fight with him alone. Stand, Diomed.

DIOMEDES

He is my prize; I will not look upon.°

10

TROILUS

Come, both you cogging° Greeks; have at you both!
 [Exeunt, fighting.]

[Enter HECTOR.]

30

HECTOR

Yea, Troilus? O, well fought, my youngest brother!

Enter ACHILLES.

ACHILLES

Now do I see thee, ha! Have at thee, Hector!

35

[They fight; ACHILLES tires.]

HECTOR

Pause, if thou wilt.

ACHILLES

I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan;

15

40

Be happy that my arms are out of use.

My rest and negligence befriends thee now,

But thou anon shalt hear of me again;

Till when, go seek thy fortune.

Exit.

HECTOR

Fare thee well;

I would have been much more a fresher man,

20

Had I expected thee.

Enter TROILUS.

How now, my brother!

TROILUS Ajax hath ta'en° Aeneas! Shall it be?

No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven,

He shall not carry him;° I'll be ta'en too,

45

Or bring him off. Fate, hear me what I say!

25

I reckon not though thou end my life today.

Exit.

Enter one in armor.

HECTOR

Stand, stand, thou Greek; thou art a goodly mark.

No? Wilt thou not? I like thy armor well;

I'll frush° it and unlock the rivets all,

But I'll be master of it. Wilt thou not, beast, abide?

30

Why then, fly on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide.

Exit [in pursuit].

14 Sagittary a centaur (half man, half horse), who was a splendid archer and aided the Trojans 22 scaled sculls scaly schools of fish 24 strawy . . . edge Greeks who are like straw, ripe for the edge of the scythe 29 proof visible fact 40 forceless casual, reckless 45 boy-queller boy-killer

V.vi.5 correction i.e., privilege to correct 7 horse with a pun on whore? 10 look upon stand by 11 cogging deceitful 22 ta'en taken captive 24 carry him prevail over him 29 frush smash [Scene VII. The battlefield.]Enter ACHILLES, with MYRMIDONS.

ACHILLES

Come here about me, you my Myrmidons;
 Mark what I say. Attend me where I wheel.
 Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath.
 And when I have the bloody Hector found,
 Empale him^o with your weapons round about; 5
 In fellest^o manner execute^o your arms.
 Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye;
 It is decreed Hector the great must die.

Exit, [with MYRMIDONS].Enter THERSITES, MENELAUS, PARIS [the last two fighting].

THERSITES The cuckold and the cuckold-maker are at it. Now, bull! Now, dog! 'Loo,^o Paris, 'loo! Now, 10 my double-horned Spartan! 'Loo, Paris, 'loo! The bull has the game;^o 'ware horns, ho!

Exeunt PARIS and MENELAUS.Enter BASTARD [Margarelon].

BASTARD Turn, slave, and fight.

THERSITES What art thou?

BASTARD A bastard son of Priam's. 15

THERSITES I am a bastard too; I love bastards. I am bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard in mind, bastard in valor, in everything illegitimate. One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take heed, the quarrel's most ominous to us. If 20 the son of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts judgment. Farewell, bastard.

BASTARD The devil take thee, coward! Exeunt.[Scene VIII. The battlefield.]Enter HECTOR.

HECTOR

Most putrefied core, so fair without,
 Thy goodly armor thus hath cost thy life.
 Now is my day's work done; I'll take my breath.
 Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death.

[Puts off his helmet, and hangs his shield behind him.]Enter ACHILLES and MYRMIDONS.

ACHILLES

Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set,
 How ugly night comes breathing at his heels. 5
 Even with the vail^o and dark'ning of the sun,
 To close the day up, Hector's life is done.

HECTOR

I am unarmed; forgo this vantage, Greek.

ACHILLES

Strike, fellows, strike. This is the man I seek. 10
 [HECTOR falls.]

V.vii.5 Empale him hem him in 6 fellest cruelest; execute use 10 Now, bull . . . 'Loo Thersites compares the combat of Menelaus and Paris to the baiting of a bull by a dog, as it was done in such arenas as the Paris Garden 12 has the game wins

V.viii.7 vail sinking, going down

So, Ilion, fall thou next! Come, Troy, sink down!
 Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone.
 On, Myrmidons, and cry you all amain,
 "Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain!"

Retreat.

Hark, a retire upon our Grecian part. 15

ONE GREEK

The Troyans' trumpets sound the like, my lord.

ACHILLES

The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the earth.
 And, sticklerlike,^o the armies separates.
 My half-supped sword, that frankly^o would have fed,
 Pleased with this dainty bait, thus goes to bed. 20

[Sheathes his sword.]

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail;
 Along the field I will the Trojan trail. Exeunt.

[Scene IX. The battlefield.]Enter AGAMEMNON, AJAX, MENELAUS, NESTOR, DIOMED, and the rest, marching. [Sound retreat. Shout.]

AGAMEMNON

Hark, hark, what shout is that?

NESTOR

Peace, drums!

SOLDIERS (Within.)

Achilles!

Achilles! Hector's slain! Achilles!

DIOMEDES

The bruit^o is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles.

AJAX

If it be so, yet bragless let it be;
 Great Hector was as good a man as he. 5

AGAMEMNON

March patiently along. Let one be sent
 To pray Achilles see us at our tent.
 If in his death the gods have us befriended,
 Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended.

Exeunt.[Scene X. The battlefield.]Enter AENEAS, PARIS, ANTENOR, DEIPHOBUS.

AENEAS

Stand, ho! Yet are we masters of the field.
 Never go home; here starve we out the night.

Enter TROILUS.

TROILUS

Hector is slain.

ALL

Hector! The gods forbid!

TROILUS

He's dead and at the murderer's horse's tail,
 In beastly sort, dragged through the shameful field. 5
 Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed;
 Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile^o at Troy.
 I say, at once let your brief plagues be mercy,^o
 And linger not our sure destructions on.

18 sticklerlike like an umpire separating combatants, and ordering the field 19 frankly freely, abundantly

V.ix.3 bruit rumor

V.x.7 smile i.e., in derision 8 let . . . mercy be merciful in letting the plagues you send destroy us quickly

AENEAS

My lord, you do discomfort all the host.

TROILUS

You understand me not that tell me so.

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death,

But dare all imminence that gods and men

Address their dangers in.^o Hector is gone.

Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuba?

Let him that will a screech owl^o aye be called

Go in to Troy, and say there Hector's dead.

There is a word will Priam turn to stone,

Make wells and Niobes^o of the maids and wives,

Cold statues of the youth, and in a word

Scare Troy out of itself. But march away.

Hector is dead; there is no more to say.

Stay yet. You vile abominable tents,

Thus proudly pitched upon our Phrygian plains,

Let Titan^o rise as early as he dare,

I'll through and through you! And, thou great-sized coward,^o

No space of earth shall sunder our two hates.

I'll haunt thee like a wicked conscience still,

That moldeth goblins swift as frenzy's thoughts.

Strike a free march to Troy. With comfort go;

Hope of revenge shall hide our inward woe.

Enter PANDARUS.

PANDARUS

But hear you, hear you!

13-14 But . . . in but instead dare whatever imminent dangers gods and men may be preparing 16 screech-owl a bearer of ill omen 19 Niobes Niobe wept for her slain children until she was turned into a column of stone, from which tears continued to flow 25 Titan Helios, the sun, one of the Titans 26 coward Achilles

TROILUS

10 Hence, broker, lackey! Ignominy and shame

Pursue thy life, and live aye with thy name.

Exeunt all but PANDARUS.

PANDARUS A goodly medicine for my aching bones! 35

O world, world! Thus is the poor agent despised. O traders and bawds, how earnestly are you set awork,

15 and how ill requited! Why should our endeavor be so loved, and the performance so loathed? What verse for it? What instance for it? Let me see.

40

Full merrily the humble-bee doth sing,

Till he hath lost his honey and his sting;

20 And being once subdued in armèd tail,

Sweet honey and sweet notes together fail.

Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloths:^o

45

"As many as be here of Pandar's hall,

Your eyes, half out, weep out at Pandar's fall;

Or if you cannot weep, yet give some groans,

Though not for me, yet for your aching bones."

Brethren and sisters of the hold-door trade,^o

50

Some two months hence my will shall here be made.

It should be now, but that my fear is this,

30 Some gallèd goose of Winchester^o would hiss.

Till then I'll sweat^o and seek about for cases,

And at that time bequeath you my diseases. [Exit.] 55

45 painted cloths painted cloth hangings, used in brothels, sometimes bearing mottoes 50 hold-door trade prostitution 53 gallèd . . . Winchester angry prostitute (the Bishop of Winchester had once held jurisdiction over the area of London called Southwark, where many brothels stood; a prostitute—and sometimes a venereal disease—was called a "Winchester goose") 54 sweat a treatment for gout or rheumatism, as well as for venereal disease

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

EDITED BY SYLVAN BARNET

Introduction

It has been customary since the late nineteenth century to call All's Well That Ends Well a "problem play," or a "dark comedy." The first term relates it to the sort of drama we associate chiefly with Ibsen, a play about a social system in need of repair, a system with, say, faulty attitudes toward female emancipation or toward venereal disease. Because All's Well (like much other Elizabethan comedy) includes speeches on the nature of virtue and presents us with a picture of a virtuous but lowborn woman rejected by her snobbish husband, there was enough point in the comparison to give it some life for more than half a century. But what is the problem? Because Shakespeare's Helena seemed to resemble Ibsen's Nora, All's Well gained Shaw's approval (as much of Shakespeare did not), but it is not really very like a nineteenth-century pièce à thèse. It does not move toward a debate in which some commonly held code is called into doubt; it does not preach the abandonment of humbug; it does not suggest that the world will go well if only people will give up romantic ideas. It does not really anatomize the problem of nobility—Does nobility reside in lineage or in deeds?—because the lowborn heroine is so clearly right and the snobbish aristocrat so clearly wrong that there is no debate.

Abandoning the hunt for this sort of "problem," then, we can turn to a different sort of problem that has vexed students of the play: Where does it fit in Shakespeare's career? Here we confront the term "dark comedy," which associates this play with an alleged period in Shakespeare's life, about 1601–06, when he supposedly lost faith in the golden world he had seen about him (and had dramatized in A Midsummer Night's Dream, As You Like It, and Twelfth Night) and fell into the bitter cynicism that—users of the term commonly say—marks this play as well as Measure for Measure, Troilus and Cressida, Hamlet, King Lear, and Timon of Athens. The late E. K. Chambers—a great scholar, with whom one may differ only humbly and reluctantly—in Shakespeare: A Survey puts it this way: All's Well groups itself undeniably with Troilus and Cressida and Measure for Measure, as one of the bitter comedies; for it is a comedy from which all laughter has evaporated, save the grim laughter which follows the dubious sallies of Monsieur Lavache and the contemptuous laughter which presides over the plucking bare of the ineffable Parolles. The spiritual affinities of Helena's story are indeed far less with the radiant humor of Twelfth Night and As You Like It than with the analytic psychology of the great advance-guard of tragedy, Julius Caesar and Hamlet, which was almost contemporary with these.

The theory runs that for some reason Shakespeare became unhappy and turned to tragedy and to bitter comedy. Why he did so is variously explained. For some proponents, the sonnets tell a story of the poet's discovery of betrayal; the friend's infidelity, or the Dark Lady's lust, drove Shakespeare to despair, and the despair is manifested in the plays. Or the fall of Essex shattered Shakespeare's world. (Chambers very tentatively inclines to the suggestion that "Shakespeare's world-sickness" may be most plausibly related to the failure of Essex's conspiracy.) Or the death of Shakespeare's father in 1601 was a crushing blow. Or the advent of the unimpressive James I, following the death of Queen Elizabeth in 1603, was enough to cause the poet great unhappiness. But all these speculations are based on the shaky premise that a professional dramatist's works mirror his state of mind, as a romantic lyric poet's are supposed to. He writes tragedies when tragedy has struck home, and he writes comedies when all is going well. Probably an Elizabethan dramatist would have been surprised to learn that he had been writing autobiography when all along he had thought he was writing tragedy, comedy, history, or whatever else his company wanted or was currently in vogue.

The play was first published in the Folio of 1623, seven years after Shakespeare's death. There is no external evidence of the date of All's Well—no reference to it by any witness, no quotation from it in a datable work, no detected allusion in it to any current event. Conjectures about its date must be based on theories about Shakespeare's progressive use of certain motifs and the development of Shakespeare's style.

To take the question of motif first: most readers find the bed trick, or the "substitute bride motif" (to use the delicate term that folklorists apply to stories in which a wife substitutes herself for another woman to deceive her would-be adulterous husband), so arresting that the play is felt to closely resemble Measure for Measure, in which Angelo beds with Mariana, to whom he was betrothed, rather than with Isabella, whom he thinks he has seduced. In All's Well, the caddish Bertram vows he will not live with his wife Helena until she can get a ring from his finger and show him a child she has had by him; Helena, taking advantage of Bertram's illicit interest in the chaste Diana, is at length able to fulfill these seemingly impossible conditions. Shakespeare, however, was a great user and re-user of folk motifs, and there is really not much strength in the argument that because the "substitute bride" is used in All's Well the play must be close in date to Measure for Measure, given at court in December, 1604. After all, there is a tale of shipwreck at the start of The Comedy of Errors and there is an apparent shipwreck at the start of The Tempest, but some twenty years separate the two. Similarly, there are outlaws in The Two Gentlemen of Verona and in As You Like It, but no one would seriously argue that the plays were written in close proximity. On the other hand, The Comedy of Errors and Love's Labor's Lost—universally agreed to be among Shakespeare's earliest work—share no common motifs; Love's Labor's Lost does not even conclude with the unions or reunions that are almost the sine qua non of Shakespeare's comedies.

The bed trick in Measure for Measure is managed not by the bride but by a duke who advises her how to outwit a would-be seducer. The bed trick in All's Well is the bride's idea, and in its clever heroine All's Well differs from Measure for Measure and resembles the earlier comedies: The Merchant of Venice (in which Portia is more resourceful than all the Venetian men), As You Like It (in which Rosalind, banished to the woods, manipulates two weddings), and Twelfth Night (in which Viola at length weds the man whom she has loved for four and a half acts). Like these comedies, moreover, All's Well is a play about love and marriage: the "dark" Troilus and Cressida, less about love than about dishonor and disillusion, concludes with the lovers separated; Measure for Measure concludes with a strong hint of a marriage, but the play is less about love than it is about lust and justice and mercy.

The subject matter offers no compelling argument to date the play later than the "happy" comedies and along with Measure for Measure, but there are abundant passages in a style more mature than the style (or, rather, styles) typical of the earliest plays. Much of the verse in All's Well has a complexity, weightiness, and forcefulness that resemble the verse in Hamlet and Measure for Measure. Here are two examples:

Why not a mother? When I said "a mother"
Methought you saw a serpent. What's in "mother"
That you start at it? I say I am your mother,
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwombèd mine. 'Tis often seen
Adoption strives with nature, and choice breeds
A native slip to us from foreign seeds.
You ne'er oppressed me with a mother's groan,
Yet I express to you a mother's care. (I.iii.141-49)

That thou didst love her, strikes some scores away
From the great compt; but love that comes too late,

Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great sender turns a sour offense,
Crying, "That's good that's gone." Our rash faults
Make trivial price of serious things we have,
Not knowing them, until we know their grave.

(V.iii.56-62)

But this business of choosing passages is tricky; no play is all of a piece, and in selecting these a fair number in a different style were skipped. There are more than a few passages that are so simple, so jingling, so unsophisticated that they seem like apprentice work:

If she, my liege, can make me know this clearly,
I'll love her dearly, ever, ever dearly. (V.iii.315-16)

Here is my hand; the premises observed,
Thy will by my performance shall be served;
So make the choice of thy own time, for I,
Thy resolved patient, on thee still rely.
More should I question thee, and more I must,
Though more to know could not be more to trust.
(II.i.204-09)

Various explanations can be offered for the rhymes—that here they add to a sense of ritual, that there they are used for a letter (which must be set off), that they deal with the past, that they make a contrast with a previous speech, that they are vestiges of an old play Shakespeare is revising, and so on—but the fact remains that the style is not sufficiently uniform to allow the easy generalization that it resembles the style of Measure for Measure. The most noticeable sign of maturity is the high percentage of run-on lines (giving a flexibility and power lacking in much of the early highly regular verse)—but this percentage is not significantly different from that in The Merchant of Venice, published in 1598 and quite possibly written a year or two earlier. It should be mentioned, too, that some of the least slick, the most "weighty" passages in All's Well may owe part of their weight to the fact that the printer did not correctly decipher the manuscript; the text is not a particularly good one, and some of the obscurity (often associated with maturity) perhaps has its origin in printing house uncertainties.

"Obscurity" gets us back to the idea of a "dark" play. The bed trick has seemed unpleasant to most readers (though it should be noted that by this trick Helena saves Bertram from committing adultery, and ultimately restores to him the wife who, we have seen, is a loving as well as an enterprising woman), but no one in the play minds it. The virtuous Widow, who would avoid "any staining act," pronounces the plan "lawful," and the king is sufficiently delighted by the outcome to reward the Widow's daughter. The other allegedly "dark" aspect of the play that has attracted a good deal of comment is the beginning, which is weighty with talk of death and disease:

COUNTESS In delivering my son from me I bury a second husband.

BERTRAM And I in going, madam, weep o'er my father's death anew; but I must attend his majesty's command. . . .

COUNTESS What hope is there of his majesty's amendment?

LAFEW He hath abandoned his physicians.

(I.i.1-5, 12-14)

The play goes on, with talk of "haggish age" that has brought about the king's illness, the death of Bertram's father, and presumably the death of Helena's father. Yet how do Elizabethan comedies usually open if not with some sorrowful problem at hand, whose dissolution will be the matter of the play? The first speech in The Comedy of Errors is a couplet spoken by a man who knows he will be sentenced to death (it contains the words "fall," "doom of death," and "woes"); when he is assured that he is indeed sentenced to death, he tells a woeful tale of shipwreck and separation from wife and children. The Two Gentlemen of Verona begins with friends separating; Love's Labor's Lost begins with a vigorous speech announcing a method of securing eternal fame, but this very speech is full of awareness of "brazen tombs," "disgrace of death," and "cormorant devouring Time." The fact is that the first scene of All's Well mingles with its references to sorrow references to renewal, rebirth—the happy ending that characterizes comedy. The countess is losing her son, but she is assured she will find in the king "a husband"; Helena's father has died, but his prescription lives in papers that Helena possesses, and the king will soon be restored to health. Helena seems to be grieving for her dead father, but in fact her mind is on the young man whom she loves, and though her love seems hopeless she wins him as her husband. If As You Like It included the bed trick, which is to say if Orlando were a cad, quite possibly the embarrassed and unhappy critics would have found that play, commonly called happy and golden, as dark as All's Well. After all, As You Like It begins with the bitter complaints of a younger brother, quickly moves to a fight between the brothers and to some churlish words ("old dog") spoken to an aged faithful retainer, and then to news that the rightful duke has been banished by his brother: family treachery, the tragic stuff that makes King Lear. Of course Bertram, the young lover in All's Well, is far less engaging than Orlando, but several of Shakespeare's lovers are unamiable people (Proteus in The Two Gentlemen, Claudio in Much Ado About Nothing), yet the comedies are not therefore dark. (It can even be argued that Lysander's delightful transient infidelity in A Midsummer Night's Dream has its affinity with Bertram's perverse desire to seduce Diana when he is furnished with Helena, but it must be admitted that the spirit of holiday foolery, dominant in A Midsummer Night's Dream, is sparse in All's Well.)

An old theory, now rarely held because of the tendency to call it a problem play and to date it about 1602, suggests that All's Well That Ends Well is the play Francis Meres called Love Labor's Won when he listed a dozen of Shakespeare's plays in 1598. Meres says that Shakespeare excels both in comedy and tragedy:

For comedy, witness his Gentlemen of Verona, his Errors, his Love Labor's Lost, his Love Labor's Won, his Midsummer's Night Dream, and his Merchant of Venice; for tragedy his Richard the Second, Richard the Third, Henry the Fourth, King John, Titus Andronicus, and his Romeo and Juliet.

Of these, only Love Labor's Won has not come down to us, or has not come down to us under that title. If Meres was not mistaken (he seems to know what he is talking about), and Shakespeare had indeed written the play, it is reasonable to assume that it is included in the Folio, but under a different title. (The Folio was prepared by long-standing friends of Shakespeare, who sought to collect his plays as his memorial.) The Taming of the Shrew has been the favorite candidate because it is unquestionably early enough for Meres to have known of it in 1598, but the recent discovery of a page from an account book for 1603 lists—among other plays—both The Taming of the Shrew and Love's Labor Won (sic), and so the two cannot be identical. The plot of All's Well makes it an eminently suitable candidate; Helena certainly labors to win her beloved. If the identity of All's Well and Love's Labor's Won (to combine Meres's spelling and that of the account book) were established, it would prove that All's Well had been written by 1598 and published by 1603—but no proof is available. Put it this way: if Meres was correct that Shakespeare wrote Love's Labor's Won, quite possibly it survives (presumably with substantial revision) as All's Well, and we should alter our conception of Shakespeare's development; but if Meres was mistaken, and the play was by another hand (hence omitted from the Folio), we have been wasting our time.

Although the play dramatizes the triumph of love's labor, Helena engages in activities that have distressed some readers. Her dialogue with Parolles (I.i.) in which she bandies jokes about virginity may seem neither witty nor decorous to us, but we ought to recall that Bassanio's Portia, a paragon, makes off-color jokes, as do several of Shakespeare's other chaste comic heroines. This dialogue, moreover, is not mere irrelevant foolery; Helena insists that she will maintain her chastity awhile, as a virtuous heroine should, and the dialogue concludes with Parolles' advice, "Get thee a good husband, and use him as he uses thee." The play deals with Helena's getting a husband; in one sense she does not use him as he uses her (she returns his scorn with love); in another sense she does, for she deceives him—to a good end—as he deceives her. He accepts her as his wife but fabricates a means of leaving her without consummating the marriage, and she fabricates a means of saving him from adultery and of guiding him into what we must assume will be (as in the world of all comedy) a marriage in which they live happily ever after. That Helena engages in deception is not in itself bad. Deception in Elizabethan drama is commonly used to assist a love affair. No one is upset by the "honest slanders" devised to bring Beatrice and Benedick together in Much Ado, and the list of heroines who in one way or another deceive their beloved for a good purpose is a long one. Helena takes advantage of Bertram's pursuit of Diana to substitute herself for Diana:

Why then tonight
Let us assay our plot, which, if it speed,
Is wicked meaning in a lawful deed,
And lawful meaning in a lawful act,
Where both not sin, and yet a sinful fact. (III.vii.43-47)

Because Bertram intends adultery, for him it will be a "wicked meaning," but it will be a lawful deed because a chaste wife will be in bed with her husband; it will be, for Helena, a "lawful meaning in a lawful act," and though Bertram will think he is sinning, there is no sin because he and his partner are husband and wife. Bertram is an "unseasoned courtier," a foolish young prig whom Helena must bring to a healthy condition (he has "sick desires" for Diana) rather as she must heal the king's disease. Like Shakespeare's better-known heroines, Rosalind, Portia, Beatrice, and Viola, Helena is energetic yet thoroughly womanly. If one thinks she is too inclined to wear the pants, what of Julia, Rosalind, and Viola, all of whom—unlike Helena—literally wear pants in their efforts to bring matters to a happy ending? Helena has something of the earnestness of Brutus' Portia combined with the resourcefulness of Bassanio's Portia; she fears that her "ambitious love" has "offended," and that Bertram is "too good and fair" for her, but no character except Bertram ever speaks ill of her, and it is evident to all readers that Bertram is (until the end, when he accepts Helena) far from "good and fair."

Perhaps our chief dissatisfaction with Helena arises from the fact that we cannot laugh at her—unless we feel that Parolles has the better of the argument on virginity. Rosalind (to give only one example) is engaging partly because we enjoy her discomfort when she learns that her beloved Orlando is in the Forest of Arden:

Alas the day! What shall I do with my doublet and hose?
What did he when thou saw'st him? What said he? How looked he? Wherein went he? What makes he here? Did he ask for me? Where remains he? How parted he with thee? And when shalt thou see him again? Answer me in one word.
(As You Like It, III.ii.220–25)

We get nothing like this, and we miss it. But if we never experience the delightful intimacy of laughing at one with whom we sympathize, it does not follow that we must find Helena an unpleasant man-hunter. She feigns death—but in Much Ado and in A Winter's Tale similar false reports of death are issued for the good purpose of restoring a man to his loving wife. The women in those two plays do not themselves contrive the report, but no discredit accrues to the contrivers and none ought to accrue to Helena. It is better to say that Helena resourcefully persists in love than that (E. K. Chambers' words) she "passes from dishonor to dishonor."

The offensive person in the play is not Helena, who loves Bertram and brings him to love her, but Bertram, whose folly is abundantly remarked upon. His mother, Lafew, and the king all rebuke him, and though one can sympathize with his plea that in the choice of a wife he might reasonably be allowed the help of his own eyes, it is clear that he is blind—not only to Helena's goodness but to Parolles' folly. Bertram believes that the cowardly braggart Parolles is a soldier simply because he talks and dresses the part. Bertram squares his guesses by shows (to take a line that appears in another context), values the worthless Parolles and (a sort of corollary) scorns the virtuous Helena. Fortunately, he lives in the world of comedy; "comedy is full of purposes mistook, not 'falling on the inventor's head' but luckily misfiring altogether. In comedy, as often happens in life, people are mercifully saved from being as wicked as they meant to be."¹

¹ Helen Gardner, "As You Like It," in More Talking of Shakespeare, ed. John Garret (1959).

It is commonly said that the world of All's Well, like that of Measure for Measure, is a depraved place, a cynic's vision—again the "dark" realm of an embittered writer. Readers of the essay "Measure for Measure"² by R. W. Chambers (not to be confused with E. K. Chambers) will not be likely to see Measure for Measure as "dark." Nor is the world of All's Well wretched. Bertram is a fool, Parolles is close to a scoundrel, but the rest of the characters—including the Clown, whose bawdry is playful enough—are tolerable and tolerant, endowed with no more than the usual faults of men and (if we keep in mind Helena, Lafew, the king, and the countess) with more than the usual virtues. Bertram's failure to value Helena and his failure to see through Parolles are abundantly remarked upon, but when Parolles has been exposed and Helena is reputed dead, and nothing can come of further dwelling on Bertram's past folly, Lafew, the countess, and the king forgive him. Lafew asserts that Bertram was "misled with [i.e., by] a snipped taffeta fellow," the countess (who had spoken sharply to Bertram when sharp-speaking might have been of some use) now urges the king to make it

Natural rebellion done i' th' blade of youth,
When oil and fire, too strong for reason's force,
O'erbears it and burns on.
(V.iii.5–8)

and the king replies that he has "forgiven and forgotten all." Indeed, despite his immaturity Bertram has won repute in battle and now, apparently aware of his opprobrious behavior, he begs pardon for his "high-repented blames." It is recognized that Bertram has done abundant wrong to the king, to his mother, to Helena, and to himself

The greatest wrong of all. He lost a wife
Whose beauty did astonish the survey
Of richest eyes; whose words all ears took captive;
Whose dear perfection hearts that scorned to serve
Humbly called mistress.
(V.iii.14–19)

But this greatest wrong has not in fact been done; love and Providence have contrived that all shall end well. "What things are we!" exclaims the First Lord, and the Second Lord replies:

Merely our own traitors. And as in the common course of all treasons we still see them reveal themselves till they attain to their abhorred ends, so he that in this action contrives against his own nobility, in his proper stream o'erflows himself.
(IV.iii.21–25)

In another context this is the stuff of tragedy. Macbeth, for example, urged by his wife, contrives against his own nobility and destroys himself. The violence he does to his king recoils upon him and he finds he has achieved not "honor, love, obedience, troops of friends," but only curses, false friends, and sleepless nights. In All's Well men are not angels, but neither are they devils; love and forgiveness are no less evident than folly and youthful lust. The vision is no darker than that radiant moment in The ² In R. W. Chambers, Man's Unconquerable Mind (1952).

Merchant of Venice when Portia, appealing to Shylock to show mercy toward the man who has indeed forfeited his bond, says:

Though justice be thy plea, consider this:
That, in the course of justice, none of us
Should see salvation. We do pray for mercy,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy. (IV.i.197-201)

The world of The Merchant of Venice is more lyrical, filled with moonlight and music—when Shylock is not onstage—but the vision of humanity is no higher; lower, indeed, for Shylock is malevolent where Bertram and Parolles are foolish. In Shakespeare's comedies, folly is not something scourged but something enjoyed. For example, in Love's Labor's Lost, a delightful spoof on the folly of trying to live as though men were disembodied minds, the King of Navarre, leader of the scheme to form a society of scholars who shall give no audience to women, proudly tells his followers that they "war against affections [passions],/And the huge army of the world's desire." How noble, and yet how foolish. Nor is it cynical to say that this is folly; Berowne aptly points out that "every man with his affects is born,/Not by might mastered, but by special grace," and as though to prove his point a constable brings in a clown who has already broken the vow to forswear women. The affects have their place, no less than reason. Even our faults can serve us. "The web of our life," says a French lord in All's Well, "is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together; our virtues would be proud if our faults whipped them not, and our crimes would despair if they were not cherished by our virtues" (IV.iii.71-74). If mortals are fools, Shakespeare seems to cherish them as much for their folly as Puck does, and (notably in Much Ado, where the clowns bring about the denouement) he turns their folly to use. The delightful thing about folly is that it insulates a man from despair and fills him with a zest for living. Othello's occupation is gone when Desdemona is (he thinks) unfaithful, but Parolles can easily enough find another livelihood when his military claims are exposed.

If my heart were great
'Twould burst at this. Captain I'll be no more,
But I will eat and drink and sleep as soft
As captain shall. Simply the thing I am
Shall make me live. Who knows himself a braggart,
Let him fear this; for it will come to pass
That every braggart shall be found an ass.
Rust, sword; cool, blushes; and Parolles live
Safest in shame! Being fooled, by fool'ry thrive!
There's place and means for every man alive.
I'll after them. Exit.
(IV.iii.334-44)

Othello kills himself, "for he was great of heart," but Parolles is protected from Othello's greatness ("If my heart were great") and therefore from murdering a Desdemona and from committing suicide. Lafew, who had been the first to detect Parolles, treats him generously enough at last: "Though you are a fool and a knave you shall eat." Parolles, indeed, in the final act becomes an engaging fool; another comic dramatist would have whipped him from the stage, but Shakespeare exposes Parolles not merely for moral reasons but "for the love of laughter" (twice repeated), and finds a place for the braggart-turned-fool in the abundant comic world.

All ends well, partly because most of the people in the play are decent, but chiefly because of a beneficent Providence. By the time the play reaches its end, not only has the king been restored to health, Parolles cured of his pretensions, Diana equipped with a dowry, and Bertram brought to his senses, but Helena is wed in deed as well as name to a loving husband. Now, it is the nature of a play, or any work of art, in contrast to real life, that the doings of the characters are remarkably coherent. In the theater we look attentively for a few hours at a few people and we see the course of a lifetime, or all that presumably is significant in a lifetime, whereas in life things go on for years, mingled with a good deal of irrelevance. Life may or may not be a chaos; art is a pattern. Something like Fate presides in all plays, however vivid and energetic the characters may be. "Hanging and wiving goes by destiny," Nerissa lightly says, providing us with a tag that summarizes tragedy and comedy. "Who can control his fate?" Othello asks. Surely not the tragic heroes—unless we see them as men who get exactly what they deserve. No fewer than five of Euripides' plays include (with one variation) these lines:

Many indeed the shapes and changes are
Of heavenly beings. Many things the gods
Achieve beyond our judgment. What we thought
Is not confirmed, and what we thought not God
Contrives. And so it happens in this story.³

The comic version of Fate is Fortune or Time or beneficent Providence:

All other doubts, by Time let them be cleared.
Fortune brings in some boats that are not steered.
(Cymbeline, IV.iii.45-46)

O Time, thou must untangle this, not I;
It is too hard a knot for me t' untie.
(Twelfth Night, II.ii.40-41)

In All's Well, numerous references to Providence make explicit the pattern that underlies all comedy. "The very hand of heaven" cures the king. Later, Helena is providentially brought to the very place and persons that can restore her to Bertram:

Doubt not but heaven
Hath brought me up to be your daughter's dower,
As it hath fated her to be my motive [i.e., means]
And helper to a husband. (IV.iv.18-21)

In Shakespeare's source, the heroine "purposed to find means to attain the two things, that thereby she might recover her husband," and she set out for Florence. But in All's Well, when Helena sets out on her pilgrimage to Saint Jaques we are not given any reason to believe that she is pursuing Bertram. Learning of the seemingly impossible conditions Bertram has imposed, she says almost nothing, allowing the countess and others to censure him. When the countess and lords leave the stage, in a soliloquy she blames herself for driving Bertram to the wars where he may "be the mark/Of smoky muskets."

³ Translation by Rex Warner, in Three Great Plays of Euripides, New York: The New American Library of World Literature, Inc. (Mentor Books), 1958.

Shall I stay here to do't? No, no, although
The air of paradise did fan the house
And angels officed all. I will be gone,
That pitiful rumor may report my flight
To console thine ear. Come night, end day;
For with the dark, poor thief, I'll steal away. Exit.
(III.ii.124-29)

We learn (from a letter) that she has set out on a pilgrimage, and that Bertram may thus return to Rousillon. We next meet Helena in Florence, where by chance she engages in conversation a widow who, as it turns out, is the mother of a young girl whom Bertram is courting. We have no right to assume that Helena lied in her soliloquy (to whom could she be lying?) and that she set out to catch Bertram; we can only assume that the hand of heaven has brought about the encounter in Florence with the Widow, her daughter, and Bertram. It is worth mentioning, too, that in the source the heroine meets a Florentine woman who leads her to the widow, but Shakespeare's Helena happens on the Widow unaided. The effect is to increase the sense of Providence precisely because it is so improbable that Helena would encounter the Widow herself. To say that in All's Well there is often a sense of Providence is not, of course, to say that the characters are mindless puppets who undertake nothing for themselves. Helena herself argues (I.i.217-30) to the contrary. Readiness, however, is all:

But with the word the time will bring on summer,
When briars shall have leaves as well as thorns,
And be as sweet as sharp. We must away;
Our wagon is prepared, and time revives us.
All's well that ends well; still the fine's the crown.
Whate'er the course, the end is the renown. (IV.iv.31-36)

("The fine's the crown" is an idea Shakespeare stated more than once; in the second part of Henry VI we get "La fin couronne les oeuvres," in Troilus and Cressida "The end crowns all"; elsewhere there are variations.) The co-operation with time that Helena here urges she urges again at Marseilles, when the Widow despairs that they have come too late.

WIDOW

Lord, how we lose our pains!

HELENA

All's well that ends well yet,
Though time seem so adverse and means unfit.
I do beseech you, whither is he gone?

We must to horse again. (V.i.24-27, 37)

In V.iii the king forgives Bertram and observes that "The time is fair again":

All is whole.

Not one word more of the consumed time.
Let's take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of Time
Steals ere we can effect them. (V.iii.37-42)

But the time (here, with a suggestion of the age, the present state) is not yet "whole," for Helena is still thought dead, hence the appropriateness of the melancholy note introduced by the king's reflections on his old age. The melancholy deepens as thoughts return to the "dead" Helena, whom Bertram now laments. The king repeats his forgiveness:

Well excused.

That thou didst love her, strikes some scores away
From the great compt; but love that comes too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great sender turns a sour offense,
Crying, "That's good that's gone." (V.iii.55-60)

Reluctantly skipping this near-chance to compare the motif of "That's good that's gone" with its occurrence in the tragedies, notably in Antony and Cleopatra, we move on and note that the last lines in the play (excluding the Epilogue) are:

All yet seems well, and if it end so meet,
The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet.

The tragic lesson that the Greek dramatists often preached was "Count no man happy until he is dead"; Oedipus seemed happy, but because he had killed his father and married his mother he was a contaminated wretch whose life was tragic though he did not know it until near the end of the play. His actions (to borrow from Aristotle's ethical theories) were not in accordance with virtue and therefore he was not genuinely happy. Conversely, in All's Well, though Helena is dogged by misfortune, and Bertram is for a while a fool, Helena's persistent virtue, in combination with God's grace, saves Bertram from himself and brings happiness to herself and to a variety of lesser characters. "Choose thou thy husband," the delighted king says to Diana, "and I'll pay thy dower." All has ended well, which means that a happy beginning is in store for Helena and Bertram, and for Diana and whomever she elects. Correspondingly, the end of the play glances back to the beginning. The king's invitation to Diana to choose a husband echoes his earlier agreement to let Helena choose a husband. Still another link between end and beginning is found in the Epilogue; the king says,

The king's a beggar now the play is done, appealing to the audience for applause, but in his sudden loss of power our minds may travel back to the weak king in the first act; and in the full realization that he is a king only insofar as our imagination takes his clothing to be an external symbol of an internal reality, we may recall that Parolles' military garb covered nothing substantial. The story is over, the characters live happily ever after, disembodied from the actors who have presented them and who in the workaday world daily—"with strife"—seek to please the audience. For a moment the audience becomes a benevolent Providence, governing the figures on the stage by bestowing the applause which allows them to depart.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCE

All's Well That Ends Well is derived from the ninth story of the third day of Boccaccio's Decameron (written 1348-58), presumably in William Painter's translation in The Palace of Pleasure (1566). (Nothing is gained by assuming that Shakespeare used a French translation of Boccaccio.) Boccaccio's story, offered as an illustration of the rewards of diligence, was based on an old and widespread folk motif: a woman must perform a seeming impossibility if she is to win the man she desires. Boccaccio tells his story fairly directly; Shakespeare characteristically complicates it, in part working by indirections. He invents several characters, notably the countess, her Clown, Lafew, and Parolles. The countess and Lafew, by approving of Helena and by disapproving of Bertram, help us to see where our sympathies should lie. Parolles serves partly as a misleader of Bertram, thus forming a contrast to Helena, who is something of Bertram's good angel. Bertram finally moves from fellowship with Parolles to fellowship with Helena, thus reflecting the pattern of the old morality plays in which a representative of fallible mankind at last is redeemed. From Boccaccio, then, Shakespeare got the gist of his story, but he reworked it into a plot of his own, or, rather, into a plot more or less along the lines of one of the native dramatic traditions. The "source" is thus not only Boccaccio's short story, but more generally something like the story revised in the light of a secular interpretation of two centuries of English religious drama; and both of these sources are transformed into something uniquely Shakespearean.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

A bookseller's reference in 1603 to "love's labor won" suggests that there was by that date a published version of a play so entitled. No copies survive. Some scholars identify this title with All's Well, but whatever the validity of the identification, the only authoritative text for All's Well is that of the First Folio (1623). Exactly what sort of text for this play the Folio's editors worked from is not certain, but probably it was either Shakespeare's finished manuscript or a scribe's copy of the manuscript. The play seems complete; it is not, for example, notably short, like Timon of Athens, and although it has some loose ends, they do not bulk large, as they do in Timon, which must be incomplete. There are, of course, puzzling words and lines, possibly as a result of a scribe's failure to transcribe accurately, and there are signs that a little tidying up remained to be done. For example, there is some inconsistency in the assignment of speeches to the two French lords, and some of their speeches are puzzlingly designated

"G" and "E"—possibly the initials of actors for whom the speeches were written. And in a stage direction at III.v there is given the name "Violenta," yet no such character speaks or is addressed. Possibly Violenta was Shakespeare's first thought of a name for the Widow's daughter, who is later called Diana, or possibly Violenta is a character that Shakespeare at first believed he would use in the scene but (as he worked further into the scene) decided was of no use. In a way, these minor confusions are reassuring; they suggest we have the play as Shakespeare wrote it, rather than a neat stage version that perhaps omits some of his material.

The present text modernizes spelling and punctuation, expands abbreviations, straightens out some confusion in the assignment of lines to the First and Second Lords, regularizes speech prefixes (for example, the Folio's "Mother," "Mo.," "Coun[tess]," "La[dy]," and so on, all are given as "Countess"), and regularly gives in the stage directions "Bertram" (for the Folio's "Count," or "Count Rosse," and so on) and "Helena" (because the Folio's first stage direction and first reference to her in dialogue call her so, though the Folio later calls her "Helen"). The act divisions are translated from Latin into English. The Folio does not divide the play into scenes, giving only "Actus Primus. Scoena Prima," but the conventional and convenient scene divisions of the Globe text have been given here. These additions and others (locales and necessary stage directions not found in the Folio) have been placed in brackets. The position of an authentic stage direction has occasionally been slightly altered when necessary, and some passages that are printed as prose in the Folio are printed as verse here. Other substantial departures from the Folio are listed below, the present reading given first in boldface type, followed by the original reading in roman.

I.i.131 got goe 150 ten two 160 wear were
 I.iii.19 I w 115 Diana no queen Queene 172 loneliness louelinesse 178 t' one to th' other 'ton tooth to th'other 203 inteemable intemible 236 Haply Happily
 II.i.45 with his cicatrice, an emblem his sicatrice, with an Embleme 65 fee see 147 sits shifts 158 impostor Impostrue
 195 heaven helpe
 II.ii.62 An And
 II.iii.95 her heere 126 when whence 131 it is is is 295 detested detected
 II.v.26 End And 28 one on 50 think not thinke
 III.i.23 the th the
 III.ii.9 sold hold 18 E'en In 110 still-piecing still-peering
 III.v.s.d. her daughter Diana her daughter, Violenta 33 le la 65 warrant write
 III.vi.36 his this 37 ore ours
 III.vii.19 Resolved Resolue
 IV.i.92 art are
 IV.iii.82-85 They . . . midnight [Folio gives to Bertram] 120
 Hush, hush [Folio gives to Bertram] 141 All's . . . him [Folio gives to Parolles] 200 lordship Lord
 IV.iv.9 Marseilles Marcella 16 you your
 IV.v.39 name maine 80 Marseilles Marcellus
 V.i.6 s.d. Gentleman, a stranger gentle Astringer
 V.ii.24 similes smiles
 V.iii.122 tax taze 155 since sir 157 s.d. Widow [and] Diana Widow, Diana, and Parolles 216 inf'nite cunning insuite comming
 Epi.4 strife strift

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

[Dramatis Personae]

KING OF FRANCE
DUKE OF FLORENCE
BERTRAM Count of Rousillon
LAFEW an old lord
PAROLLES a follower of Bertram
STEWARD named Rinaldo
CLOWN named Lavatch
A PAGE

} servants to the countess

TWO FRENCH LORDS the brothers Dumaine, serving in the Florentine army
A GENTLEMAN a stranger
COUNTESS OF ROUSILLON mother to Bertram
HELENA an orphan protected by the countess
A WIDOW of Florence
DIANA daughter to the widow
MARIANA neighbor to the widow
LORDS OFFICERS SOLDIERS ATTENDANTS

Scene: Rousillon; Paris; Florence; Marseilles]

A C T I

Scene I. [Rousillon.° The count's palace.]

Enter young BERTRAM, Count of Rousillon, his mother [the COUNTESS], and HELENA, Lord LAFEW, all in black.

COUNTESS In delivering° my son from me I bury a second husband.

BERTRAM And I in going, madam, weep o'er my father's death anew; but I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward,° evermore in s subjection.

LAFEW You shall find of° the king a husband, madam; you, sir, a father. He that so generally° is at all times good must of necessity hold° his virtue to you, whose

The decorative border shown above appeared on the first page of All's Well That Ends Well in the First Folio edition of Shakespeare's plays, 1623.

I.i.s.d. Rousillon formerly a province in southern France (usually spelled "Rossillion" in the Folio; the accent is on the second syllable, and -llion was probably pronounced -yun) 1 delivering sending away (with pun on the sense "giving birth") 5 to . . . ward whose ward I now am 7 of in 8 generally impartially 9 hold continue worthiness would stir it up where it wanted,° rather 10 than lack it where there is such abundance.

COUNTESS What hope is there of his majesty's amendment?

LAFEW He hath abandoned his physicians, madam, under whose practices he hath persecuted time with 15 hope, and finds no other advantage in the process but only the losing of hope by time.

COUNTESS This young gentlewoman had a father—O, that "had," how sad a passage° 'tis—whose skill was almost as great as his honesty; had it stretched so 20 far, would have made nature immortal, and death should have play for lack of work. Would for the king's sake he were living! I think it would be the death of the king's disease.

LAFEW How called you the man you speak of, 25 madam?

COUNTESS He was famous, sir, in his profession, and it was his great right to be so: Gerard de Narbon.

LAFEW He was excellent indeed, madam. The king very lately spoke of him admiringly and mourningly; 30 he was skillful enough to have lived still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality.

10 where it wanted i.e., even if it (virtue) were lacking 19 passage (1) incident (2) passing away

BERTRAM What is it, my good lord, the king languishes of?

LAFEW A fistula,^o my lord. 35

BERTRAM I heard not of it before.

LAFEW I would it were not notorious. Was this gentlewoman the daughter of Gerard de Narbon?

COUNTESS His sole child, my lord, and bequeathed to my overlooking.^o I have those hopes of her good that 40 her education promises; her dispositions she inherits, which makes fair gifts fairer; for where an unclean mind carries virtuous qualities,^o there commendations go with pity; they are virtues and traitors too. In her they are the better for their simpleness;^o she derives^o 45 her honesty and achieves her goodness.

LAFEW Your commendations, madam, get from her tears.

COUNTESS 'Tis the best brine a maiden can season^o her praise in. The remembrance of her father never 50 approaches her heart but the tyranny of her sorrows takes all livelihood^o from her cheek. No more of this, Helena; go to,^o no more, lest it be rather thought you affect^o a sorrow than to have—

HELENA I do affect a sorrow indeed, but I have it too. 55

LAFEW Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead, excessive grief the enemy to the living.

COUNTESS If the living be enemy to the grief, the excess makes it soon mortal.

BERTRAM Madam, I desire your holy wishes. 60

LAFEW How understand we that?^o

COUNTESS

Be thou blessed, Bertram, and succeed thy father In manners^o as in shape! Thy^o blood and virtue Contend for empire in thee, and thy goodness Share with thy birthright! Love all, trust a few, 65 Do wrong to none; be able for thine enemy Rather in power than use,^o and keep thy friend Under thy own life's key. Be checked for silence, But never taxed^o for speech. What heaven more will, That thee may furnish and my prayers pluck down, 70 Fall on thy head! Farewell. My lord, 'Tis an unseasoned courtier; good my lord, Advise him.

LAFEW He cannot want^o the best That shall attend his love.

COUNTESS Heaven bless him! Farewell, Bertram. 75 [Exit.]

BERTRAM The best wishes that can be forged in your thoughts be servants to you! [To HELENA.] Be comfortable^o to my mother, your mistress, and make much of her.

LAFEW Farewell, pretty lady; you must hold the credit 80 of your father. [Exit, with BERTRAM.]

35 fistula abscess 40 overlooking guardianship 43 virtuous qualities skills (not moral qualities) 45 their simpleness being single, unmixed; derives inherits 49 season preserve 52 livelihood (1) vitality (2) nourishment 53 go to a remonstrance, "Stop" 54 affect feign (Helena enigmatically replies that she both feigns a sorrow—for her father, we later learn—and has one; her use of the word also includes another meaning, "love") 61 Lafew . . . that perhaps this line is misplaced, and should begin Lafew's previous speech 63 manners morals; Thy may thy 66–67 be able . . . use let your strength equal your foe's in potentiality, but do not use it 69 taxed censured 73 want lack 77–78 comfortable comforting

HELENA

O, were that all! I think not on my father, And these great tears grace his remembrance more Than those I shed for him. What was he like?

I have forgot him; my imagination 85 Carries no favor^o in't but Bertram's.

I am undone; there is no living, none, If Bertram be away; 'twere all one That I should love a bright particular star, And think to wed it, he is so above me. 90

In his bright radiance and collateral light Must I be comforted, not in his sphere.^o

Th' ambition in my love thus plagues itself: The hind that would be mated by the lion

Must die for love. 'Twas pretty, though a plague, 95 To see him every hour, to sit and draw

His archèd brows, his hawking^o eye, his curls, In our heart's table;^o heart too capable

Of^o every line and trick of his sweet favor.

But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy^o 100 Must sanctify his relics. Who comes here?

Enter PAROLLES.^o

One that goes with him. I love him for his sake, And yet I know him a notorious liar,

Think him a great way fool, solely a coward; Yet these fixed evils sit so fit in him, 105

That they take place^o when virtue's steely bones Looks bleak i' th' cold wind; withal,^o full oft we see

Cold wisdom waiting on superfluous folly.^o

PAROLLES Save^o you, fair queen!

HELENA And you, monarch! 110

PAROLLES No.

HELENA And no.

PAROLLES Are you meditating on virginity?

HELENA Ay. You have some stain^o of soldier in you; let me ask you a question. Man is enemy to virginity; 115 how may we barricado it against him?

PAROLLES Keep him out.

HELENA But he assails; and our virginity, though valiant, in the defense yet is weak. Unfold to us some warlike resistance. 120

PAROLLES There is none. Man, setting down before^o you, will undermine you and blow you up.^o

HELENA Bless our poor virginity from underminers and blowers-up! Is there no military policy how virgins might blow up men? 125

PAROLLES Virginity being blown down, man will quickly be blown up;^o marry,^o in blowing him down again, with the breach yourselves made you lose your city. It is not politic in the commonwealth of nature to preserve virginity. Loss of virginity is rational increase, 130

86 favor (1) face (2) love token 91–92 In his bright . . . sphere I must content myself with his light; parallel to ("collateral") but above me; I cannot be in his orbit 97 hawking hawklike, keen 98 table flat surface on which a picture is drawn 98–99 capable Of receptive to 100 fancy lover's fantasy 101 s.d. Parolles cf. French paroles = words, i.e., Talker, Braggart 106 take place find acceptance (?) 107 withal besides 108 Cold . . . folly i.e., a threadbare wise servant attending on a rich fool 109 Save God save 114 stain tincture 121 setting down before laying siege to 122 blow you up (1) explode you (2) make you pregnant 127 be blown up be swollen, i.e., reach an orgasm; marry a mild oath, "By the Virgin Mary"

and there was never virgin got^o till virginity was first lost. That^o you were made of is metal^o to make virgins. Virginity by being once lost may be ten times found; by being ever kept it is ever lost. 'Tis too cold a companion; away with't!

HELENA I will stand for't a little, though therefore I die a virgin.

PAROLLES There's little can be said in't; 'tis against the rule of nature. To speak on the part of virginity, is to accuse your mothers, which is most infallible disobedience. He that hangs himself is a virgin; virginity murders itself, and should be buried in highways out of all sanctified limit,^o as a desperate offendress against nature. Virginity breeds mites, much like a cheese, consumes itself to the very paring, and so dies with feeding his own stomach.^o Besides, virginity is peevish, proud, idle, made of self-love which is the most inhibited sin in the canon.^o Keep^o it not; you cannot choose but lose by't. Out with't! Within ten year it will make itself ten, which is a goodly increase, and the principal itself not much the worse. Away with't!

HELENA How might one do, sir, to lose it to her own liking?

PAROLLES Let me see. Marry, ill, to like him that ne'er it likes. 'Tis a commodity will lose the gloss with lying; the longer kept, the less worth. Off with't while 'tis vendible; answer the time of request. Virginity, like an old courtier, wears her cap out of fashion, richly suited, but unsuitable,^o just like the brooch and the toothpick, which wear not now.^o Your date is better in your pie and your porridge than in your cheek; and your virginity, your old virginity, is like one of our French withered pears: it looks ill, it eats drily; marry, 'tis a withered pear; it was formerly better; marry, yet 'tis a withered pear. Will you anything with it?

HELENA

Not my virginity yet!^o

There shall your master have a thousand loves,

A mother, and a mistress, and a friend,

A phoenix,^o captain, and an enemy,

A guide, a goddess, and a sovereign,

A counselor, a traitress, and a dear;

His humble ambition, proud humility;

His jarring, concord, and his discord, dulcet;

His faith, his sweet disaster;^o with a world

Of pretty, fond, adoptious christendoms

That blinking Cupid gossips.^o Now shall he—

I know not what he shall. God send him well!

The court's a learning place, and he is one—

PAROLLES

What one, i' faith?

HELENA That I wish well. 'Tis pity—

131 got begotten 132 That that which; metal (1) substance (2) coin (3) mettle, spirit 143 sanctified limit consecrated ground 146 stomach pride 148 inhibited . . . canon prohibited sin in the Scripture; Keep hoard 159 unsuitable unfashionable 160 wear not now are not now in fashion 167 yet possibly there are missing some ensuing lines in which Helena comments on Bertram's departure, possibly the abrupt transition reveals that Helena's thoughts have not been on Parolles' talk 170 phoenix i.e., rarity (literally, a fabulous bird) 175 disaster unfavorable star 176–77 fond . . . gossips foolish, adopted names that blind ("blinking") Cupid gives as godfather ("gossips")

PAROLLES

What's pity?

HELENA

That wishing well had not a body in't,

Which might be felt, that we, the poorer born,

Whose baser stars^o do shut us up in wishes,

Might with effects of them follow our friends,

And show what we alone must think, which never

Returns us thanks.

Enter PAGE.

PAGE Monsieur Parolles, my lord calls for you. [Exit.]

PAROLLES Little Helen, farewell. If I can remember thee, I will think of thee at court.

HELENA Monsieur Parolles, you were born under a charitable star.

PAROLLES Under Mars, ay.

HELENA I especially think, under Mars.

PAROLLES Why under Mars?

HELENA The wars hath so kept you under,^o that you must needs be born under Mars.

PAROLLES When he was predominant.

HELENA When he was retrograde,^o I think rather.

PAROLLES Why think you so?

HELENA You go so much backward when you fight.

PAROLLES That's for advantage.

HELENA So is running away, when fear proposes the safety; but the composition^o that your valor and fear makes in you is a virtue of a good wing, and I like the wear^o well.

PAROLLES I am so full of businesses, I cannot answer thee acutely. I will return perfect courtier, in the which my instruction shall serve to naturalize^o thee, so thou wilt be capable of a courtier's counsel, and understand what advice shall thrust upon thee; else thou diest in thine unthankfulness, and thine ignorance makes thee away. Farewell. When thou hast leisure, say thy prayers; when thou hast none, remember thy friends. Get thee a good husband, and use him as he uses thee. So, farewell. [Exit.]

HELENA

Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie,

Which we ascribe to heaven; the fated sky^o

Gives us free scope; only doth backward pull

Our slow designs when we ourselves are dull.

What power is it which mounts my love so high,

That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye?

The mightiest space in fortune nature brings

To join like likes, and kiss like native^o things.

Impossible be strange attempts to those

That weigh their pains in sense, and do suppose

What hath been cannot be.^o Who ever strove

To show her merit that did miss her love?

The king's disease—my project may deceive me,

But my intents are fixed, and will not leave me. Exit.

184 baser stars lower destinies 196 under in low fortune

199 retrograde moving backward (astrological term) 204

composition (1) union, mixture (2) truce, surrender 206 wear fashion (if "wing" has referred not only to Parolles' flight but to a flap on his clothing, "wear" puns—like the modern "fashion"

—on habit and clothing) 209 naturalize familiarize 218 fated sky sky (heaven) that exerts influence 224 native closely related 225–27 Impossible . . . cannot be remarkable deeds are impossible to persons who cautiously calculate the efforts and who believe that unusual happenings cannot take place

[Scene II. Paris. The king's palace.]

Flourish° cornets. Enter the KING of France with letters, and divers ATTENDANTS.

KING

The Florentines and Senoys° are by th' ears,°
Have fought with equal fortune, and continue
A braving war.°

FIRST LORD So 'tis reported, sir.

KING

Nay, 'tis most credible. We here receive it
A certainty, vouched from our cousin° Austria,
With caution, that the Florentine will move° us
For speedy aid; wherein our dearest friend
Prejudicates the business, and would seem
To have us make denial.

FIRST LORD His love and wisdom,
Approved° so to your majesty, may plead
For amplest credence.KING He hath armed our answer,
And Florence is denied before he comes;
Yet, for our gentlemen that mean to see
The Tuscan service,° freely have they leave
To stand on either part.°SECOND LORD It well may serve
A nursery° to our gentry, who are sick
For breathing° and exploit.

Enter BERTRAM, LAFEW, and PAROLLES.

KING What's he comes here?

FIRST LORD

It is the Count Rousillon, my good lord,
Young Bertram.

KING Youth, thou bear'st thy father's face.
Frank° nature, rather curious° than in haste,
Hath well composed thee. Thy father's moral parts Mayst thou inherit too! Welcome to Paris.

BERTRAM

My thanks and duty are your majesty's.

KING

I would I had that corporal soundness now,
As when thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership. He did look far Into the service of the time,° and was Discipled of the bravest. He lasted long,
But on us both did haggish age steal on,
And wore us out of act.° It much repairs me
To talk of your good father; in his youth
He had the wit which I can well observe
Today in our young lords; but they may jest
Till their own scorn return to them unnoted
Ere they can hide their levity in° honor.
So like a courtier, contempt nor bitterness
Were in his pride or sharpness; if they were,

I.ii.s.d. Flourish musical notes heralding an important person
1 Senoys Sienese; by th' ears quarreling 3 braving war war of challenges 5 cousin fellow sovereign 6 move petition 10 Approved proven 14 The Tuscan service the campaign in Tuscany (N. Italy) 15 stand . . . part serve on either side 16 nursery training school 16–17 sick For breathing eager for exercise 20 Frank bounteous; curious careful 26–27 He . . . time he had insight into war (?) he served long in wars (?) 30 act action 35 hide . . . in i.e., join . . . with (?)

His equal had awaked them, and his honor,
Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception° bid him speak, and at this time 40
His tongue obeyed his hand. Who° were below him
He used as creatures of another place,°
And bowed his eminent top to their low ranks,
Making them proud of his humility,
In their poor praise he humbled. Such a man 45
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, followed well, would demonstrate them now
But goes backward.

BERTRAM His good remembrance, sir,
Lies richer in your thoughts than on his tomb;
So in approof lives not his epitaph 50
As in your royal speech.°

KING

Would I were with him! He would always say—
Methinks I hear him now; his plausible° words
He scattered not in ears, but grafted them,
To grow there, and to bear—"Let me not live," 55
This his good melancholy oft began,
On the catastrophe and heel of pastime,°
When it was out—"Let me not live," quoth he,
"After my flame lacks oil, to be the snuff°
Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive° senses 60
All but new things disdain; whose judgments are Mere fathers of their garments; whose constancies Expire before their fashions." This he wished.
I, after him, do after him° wish too,
Since I nor wax nor honey can bring home, 65
I quickly were dissolvèd from my hive
To give some laborers room.

SECOND LORD You're loved, sir;
They that least lend it you shall lack you first.

KING

I fill a place, I know't. How long is't, count,
Since the physician at your father's died? 70
He was much famed.

BERTRAM Some six months since, my lord.

KING

If he were living, I would try him yet.
Lend me an arm. The rest have worn me out
With several applications.° Nature and sickness
Debate it at their leisure. Welcome, count, 75
My son's no dearer.

BERTRAM

Thank your majesty.
Exit [the KING, with the rest]. Flourish.

[Scene III. Rousillon. The count's palace.]

Enter COUNTESS, STEWARD, and CLOWN.

COUNTESS I will now hear. What say you of this gentlewoman?

40 Exception disapproval 41 Who those who 42 another place i.e., a higher rank 50–51 So . . . speech the validity of his epitaph is in no way better confirmed than in your words 53 plausible laudable 57 On . . . pastime at the end ("catastrophe," "heel") of pleasure 58 out ended (perhaps punning on the idea "out at heel") 59 snuff burnt wick that causes the lamp to smell and smolder, preventing the lower ("younger") wick from burning brightly 60 apprehensive perceptive, apt 64 after him . . . after him later than he
. . . in accordance with him 74 several applications various treatments

STEWARD Madam, the care I have had to even° your content I wish might be found in the calendar° of my past endeavors, for then we wound our modesty, and 5 make foul the clearness of our deservings, when of ourselves we publish them.

COUNTESS What does this knave here? Get you gone, sirrah.° The complaints I have heard of you I do not all believe; 'tis my slowness that I do not, for I know 10 you lack not folly to commit them, and have ability enough to make such knaveries yours.

CLOWN 'Tis not unknown to you, madam, I am a poor fellow.

COUNTESS Well, sir. 15

CLOWN No, madam, 'tis not so well that I am poor, though many of the rich are damned; but, if I may have your ladyship's good will to go to the world,° Isbel the woman and I will do° as we may.

COUNTESS Wilt thou needs be a beggar? 20

CLOWN I do beg your good will in this case.

COUNTESS In what case?

CLOWN In Isbel's case° and mine own. Service is no heritage,° and I think I shall never have the blessing of God till I have issue o' my body; for they say barnes° 25 are blessings.

COUNTESS Tell me thy reason why thou wilt marry.

CLOWN My poor body, madam, requires it. I am driven on by the flesh, and he must needs go that the devil drives. 30

COUNTESS Is this all your worship's reason?

CLOWN Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons,° such as they are.

COUNTESS May the world know them?

CLOWN I have been, madam, a wicked creature, as 35 you and all flesh and blood are, and indeed I do marry that I may repent.

COUNTESS Thy marriage, sooner than thy wickedness.

CLOWN I am out o' friends, madam, and I hope to 40 have friends for my wife's sake.

COUNTESS Such friends are thine enemies, knave.

CLOWN Y'are shallow, madam, in great friends, for the knaves come to do that for me which I am awear of. He that ears° my land spares my team, and gives me 45 leave to in° the crop; if I be his cuckold,° he's my drudge. He that comforts my wife is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he that cherishes my flesh and blood loves my flesh and blood; he that loves my flesh and blood is my friend: ergo, he that kisses my wife is 50 my friend. If men could be contented to be what they are, there were no fear in marriage; for young Charbon the puritan and old Poysam° the papist, howsome'er their hearts are severed in religion, their heads are both one; they may jowl° horns together like any deer i' th' 55 herd.

COUNTESS Wilt thou ever be a foul-mouthed and calumnious knave?

CLOWN A prophet I, madam, and I speak the truth the next° way: 60

For I the ballad will repeat,
Which men full true shall find,
Your marriage comes by destiny,
Your cuckoo sings by kind.°

COUNTESS Get you gone, sir. I'll talk with you more 65 anon.

STEWARD May it please you, madam, that he bid Helen come to you. Of her I am to speak.

COUNTESS Sirrah, tell my gentlewoman I would speak with her—Helen I mean. 70

CLOWN

Was this fair face the cause, quoth she,
Why the Grecians sackèd Troy?
Fond° done, done fond,

Was this King Priam's joy?
With that she sighèd as she stood, 75
With that she sighèd as she stood,
And gave this sentence° then:

Among nine bad if one be good,
Among nine bad if one be good,
There's yet one good in ten. 80

COUNTESS What, one good in ten? You corrupt the song, sirrah.

CLOWN One good woman in ten, madam, which is a purifying o' th' song. Would God would serve the world so all the year! We'd find no fault with the 85 tithe-woman,° if I were the parson. One in ten, quoth 'a!° And° we might have a good woman born but or every blazing star, or° at an earthquake, 'twould mend the lottery well; a man may draw his heart out, ere 'a pluck one. 90

COUNTESS You'll be gone, sir knave, and do as I command you!

CLOWN That man should be at woman's command, and yet no hurt done! Though honesty be no puritan, yet it will do no hurt; it will wear the surplice of 95 humility over the black gown of a big heart.° I am going, forsooth. The business is for Helen to come hither. Exit.

COUNTESS Well, now.

STEWARD I know, madam, you love your gentle- 100 woman entirely.

COUNTESS Faith, I do. Her father bequeathed her to me, and she herself, without other advantage,° may lawfully make title to as much love as she finds. There is more owing her than is paid, and more shall be paid 105 her than she'll demand.

I.iii.3 even make even, satisfy 4 calendar record 9 sirrah term of address used to an inferior 18 go . . . world get married 19 do punning on the bawdy meaning "have intercourse" 23 case another bawdy pun, "pudendum" 23-24 Service . . . heritage i.e., servants acquire no wealth (proverbial) 25 barnes bairns, children 32 holy reasons probably there is a bawdy pun not only on "holy" but on "reasons," pronounced much like "raisings" 45 ears plows 46 in bring in; cuckold deceived husband (traditionally said to wear horns) 52-53 Charbon . . . Poysam Flesh-eater . . . Fish-eater (from French, chair bonne = good flesh; poisson = fish)

55 jowl knock 60 next nearest 64 by kind according to nature (the cuckoo allegedly sang to men that they were cuckolds) 73 Fond foolishly 77 sentence wise saying 86 tithe-woman tenth woman (sent as part of the tithe, like a tithe-pig) 86-87 quoth 'a says he 87 And if 87-88 or . . . or either . . . or 95-96 wear . . . heart i.e., conform outwardly, masking its pride (the Church of England required the wearing of the surplice, but clerics inclined toward Calvinism asserted their independence by wearing beneath the surplice the black Geneva gown) 103 advantage interest accruing to a sum of money

STEWARD Madam, I was very late^o more near her than I think she wished me. Alone she was, and did communicate to herself her own words to her own ears. She thought, I dare vow for her, they touched not any stranger sense.^o Her matter was, she loved your son. Fortune, she said, was no goddess, that had put such difference betwixt their two estates; Love no god, that would not extend his might only where qualities were level; Diana no queen of virgins, that would suffer her poor knight^o surprised without rescue in the first assault or ransom afterward. This she delivered in the most bitter touch of sorrow that e'er I heard virgin exclaim in, which I held my duty speedily to acquaint you withal, sithence^o in the loss that may happen it concerns you something to know it.

COUNTESS You have discharged this honestly; keep it to yourself. Many likelihoods informed me of this before, which hung so tott'ring in the balance that I could neither believe nor misdoubt. Pray you leave me. Stall this^o in your bosom, and I thank you for your honest care. I will speak with you further anon.

Exit STEWARD.

Enter HELENA.

[Aside.]

Even so it was with me, when I was young;
If ever we are nature's, these^o are ours; this thorn
Doth to our rose of youth rightly belong;
Our blood^o to us, this to our blood is born.
It is the show and seal of nature's truth,
Where love's strong passion is impressed in youth.
By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults, or then we thought them none.
Her eye is sick on't; I observe her now.

HELENA

What is your pleasure, madam?

COUNTESS

You know, Helen,

I am a mother to you.

HELENA

Mine honorable mistress.

COUNTESS

Nay, a mother.

Why not a mother? When I said "a mother"
Methought you saw a serpent. What's in "mother"
That you start at it? I say I am your mother,
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwombèd mine. 'Tis often seen
Adoption strives with nature, and choice breeds
A native slip to us from foreign seeds.^o
You ne'er oppressed me with a mother's groan,
Yet I express to you a mother's care.
God's mercy, maiden, does it curd thy blood
To say I am thy mother? What's the matter,
That this distempered^o messenger of wet,
The many-colored Iris,^o rounds thine eye?
Why, that you are my daughter?

107 late lately 110-11 touched . . . sense reached no stranger's ear 116 knight i.e., chaste follower of Diana 120 sithence since 127 Stall this keep this enclosed 130 these sorrows (?) passions (?) 132 blood passion (?) disposition (?) 146-47 choice . . . seeds a slip that is chosen for grafting from foreign stock becomes native to us 152 distempered disturbed 153 many-colored Iris i.e., teardrop (Iris was goddess of the rainbow)

HELENA

That I am not.^o

COUNTESS

I say I am your mother.

HELENA

Pardon, madam;

The Count Rousillon cannot be my brother.

I am from humble, he from honored name;

No note upon my parents, his all noble.

My master, my dear lord he is, and I

His servant live, and will his vassal die.

He must not be my brother.

COUNTESS

Nor I your mother?

HELENA

You are my mother, madam; would you were—

So that my lord, your son, were not my brother—

Indeed my mother! Or were you both our mothers

I care no more for than I do for heaven,

So I were not his sister. Can't no other^o

But, I your daughter, he must be my brother?

COUNTESS

Yes, Helen, you might be my daughter-in-law.

God shield^o you mean it not! "Daughter" and "mother"

So strive upon your pulse! What, pale again?

My fear hath caught your fondness!^o Now I see

The myst'ry of your loneliness, and find

Your salt tears' head.^o Now to all sense 'tis gross:^o

You love my son! Invention is ashamed

Against the proclamation of thy passion,

To say thou dost not. Therefore tell me true;

But tell me then, 'tis so; for look, thy cheeks

Confess it, t' one to th' other, and thine eyes

See it so grossly shown in thy behaviors,

That in their kind^o they speak it; only sin

And hellish obstinacy tie thy tongue,

That truth should be suspected. Speak, is't so?

If it be so, you have wound a goodly clew;^o

If it be not, forswear't; howe'er, I charge thee,

As heaven shall work in me for thine avail,

To tell me truly.

HELENA

Good madam, pardon me!

COUNTESS

Do you love my son?

HELENA

Your pardon, noble mistress!

COUNTESS

Love you my son?

HELENA

Do not you love him, madam?

COUNTESS

Go not about; my love hath in't a bond

Whereof the world takes note. Come, come, disclose

The state of your affection, for your passions

Have to the full appeached.^o

HELENA

Then I confess,

Here on my knee, before high heaven and you,

That before you, and next unto high heaven,

I love your son.

My friends^o were poor but honest; so's my love.

Be not offended, for it hurts not him

That he is loved of me; I follow him not

154 That I am not Helena plays on the sense "daughter-in-law"

166 Can't no other can it not be otherwise 169 shield forbid

171 fondness foolishness 173 head source; gross obvious

180 in their kind according to their nature, i.e., with tears

183 clew ball of string 192 appeached accused 196 friends relatives

By any token of presumptuous suit,
 Not would I have him till I do deserve him;
 Yet never know how that desert should be.
 I know I love in vain, strive against hope;
 Yet, in this captious° and inteemable° sieve,
 I still pour in the waters of my love,
 And lack not to lose still.° Thus, Indian-like,
 Religious in mine error, I adore
 The sun that looks upon his worshipper
 But knows of him no more. My dearest madam,
 Let not your hate encounter with my love
 For loving where you do; but if yourself,
 Whose agèd honor cites° a virtuous youth,
 Did ever, in so true a flame of liking,
 Wish chastely, and love dearly that your Dian
 Was both herself and Love, O, then give pity
 To her whose state is such that cannot choose
 But lend and give where she is sure to lose;
 That seeks not to find that° her search implies,
 But, riddle-like, lives° sweetly where she dies.

COUNTESS

Had you not lately an intent—speak truly—
 To go to Paris?

HELENA Madam, I had.

COUNTESS Wherefore? Tell true. 220

HELENA

I will tell truth, by grace itself, I swear.
 You know my father left me some prescriptions
 Of rare and proved effects, such as his reading
 And manifest experience had collected
 For general sovereignty;° and that he willed me
 In heedfull'st reservation° to bestow them,
 As notes whose faculties inclusive were
 More than they were in note.° Amongst the rest,
 There is a remedy, approved,° set down,
 To cure the desperate languishings whereof
 The king is rendered lost.

COUNTESS This was your motive
 For Paris, was it? Speak.

HELENA

My lord your son made me to think of this;
 Else Paris, and the medicine, and the king,
 Had from the conversation of my thoughts
 Haply been absent then.

COUNTESS But think you, Helen,
 If you should tender your supposed aid,
 He would receive it? He and his physicians
 Are of a mind; he, that they cannot help him;
 They, that they cannot help. How shall they credit
 A poor unlearnèd virgin, when the schools,
 Emboweled of their doctrine,° have left off
 The danger to itself?

HELENA There's something in't

200 More than my father's skill, which was the great'st
 Of his profession, that his good receipt 245
 Shall for my legacy be sanctified
 By th' luckiest stars in heaven; and would your honor
 But give me leave to try success,° I'd venture
 The well-lost life of mine on his grace's cure
 205 By such a day, an hour.

COUNTESS Dost thou believe't? 250

HELENA

Ay, madam, knowingly.

COUNTESS

210 Why, Helen, thou shalt have my leave and love,
 Means and attendants, and my loving greetings
 To those of mine in court. I'll stay at home
 And pray God's blessing into thy attempt. 255
 Be gone tomorrow; and be sure of this,
 215 What I can help thee to, thou shalt not miss. Exeunt.

ACT II

[Scene I. Paris. The king's palace.]

Enter the KING, with divers young LORDS taking leave for the Florentine war; BERTRAM and PAROLLES; [ATTENDANTS]. Flourish cornets.

KING

Farewell, young lords! These warlike principles
 Do not throw from you; and you, my lords, farewell!
 225 Share the advice betwixt you; if both gain all,
 The gift doth stretch itself as 'tis received,
 And is enough for both.

FIRST LORD 'Tis our hope, sir, 5
 After well-ent'red soldiers,° to return
 230 And find your grace in health.

KING

No, no, it cannot be; and yet my heart
 Will not confess he owes° the malady
 That doth my life besiege. Farewell, young lords! 10
 Whether I live or die, be you the sons
 Of worthy Frenchmen: let higher Italy—
 235 Those bated that inherit but the fall
 Of the last monarchy°—see that you come
 Not to woo honor, but to wed it, when 15
 The bravest questant° shrinks: find what you seek,
 That fame may cry you loud. I say, farewell.

FIRST LORD

Health, at your bidding, serve your majesty! 240

KING

Those girls of Italy, take heed of them.
 They say our French lack language to deny 20
 If they demand; beware of being captives
 Before you serve.

BOTH LORDS Our hearts receive your warnings.

KING

Farewell. [To ATTENDANTS.] Come hither to me.
 [Exit, with ATTENDANTS.]

248 try success test the outcome

II.i.6 After well-ent'red soldiers after becoming experienced soldiers 9 owes owns 13-14 Those . . . monarchy except for those who gain by the fall of the monarchy (?) except for those who continue in the decadent ways of the past (?) 16
 questant seeker

203 captious (1) capacious (2) deceitful; inteemable incapable of pouring forth (the sieve is capacious enough to accept all the love poured into it, but is deceptive because it cannot pour forth love) 205 lack . . . still (1) fail not to go on losing (2) lack not a supply to go on losing 211 cites demonstrates 217 that what 218 lives i.e., stays in one place 225 general sovereignty universal excellence 226 In heedfull'st reservation i.e., sparingly 227-28 notes . . . in note i.e., prescriptions ("notes") more powerful in fact than they were reported ("in note") to be 229 approved tested 242
 Emboweled . . . doctrine emptied of their knowledge

FIRST LORD

O my sweet lord, that you will stay behind us!

PAROLLES

'Tis not his fault, the spark.

SECOND LORD

O, 'tis brave wars! 25

PAROLLES

Most admirable! I have seen those wars.

BERTRAM I am commanded here,° and kept a coil° with "Too young," and "The next year," and "'Tis too early."

PAROLLES And° thy mind stand to't, boy, steal away 30 bravely.

BERTRAM

I shall stay here the forehorse to a smock,°
Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry,
Till honor be bought up, and no sword worn
But one to dance with! By heaven, I'll steal away. 35

FIRST LORD

There's honor in the theft.

PAROLLES

Commit it, count.

SECOND LORD

I am your accessory; and so farewell.

BERTRAM I grow to you, and our parting is a tortured body.

FIRST LORD Farewell, captain. 40

SECOND LORD Sweet Monsieur Parolles!

PAROLLES Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin. Good sparks and lustrous, a word, good metals.°
You shall find in the regiment of the Spinii one Captain Spurio,° with his cicatrice,° an emblem of 45 war, here on his sinister° cheek; it was this very sword entrenched it. Say to him I live, and observe his reports for me.

FIRST LORD We shall, noble captain.

[Exeunt LORDS.]

PAROLLES Mars dote on you for his novices!° [To 50
BERTRAM.] What will ye do?

BERTRAM Stay° the king.

PAROLLES Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords; you have restrained yourself within the list° of too cold an adieu. Be more expressive to them, for 55 they wear themselves in the cap of the time; there do muster true gait, eat, speak, and move under the influence of the most received° star; and though the devil lead the measure,° such are to be followed. After them, and take a more dilated° farewell. 60

BERTRAM And I will do so.

PAROLLES Worthy fellows, and like to prove most sinewy sword-men.

Exeunt [BERTRAM and PAROLLES].

Enter [the KING and] LAFEW.

LAFEW [Kneeling.]

Pardon, my lord, for me and for my tidings.

KING

I'll fee thee to stand up.° 65

LAFEW [Rising.]

Then here's a man stands that has brought his pardon.
I would you had kneeled, my lord, to ask me mercy,
And that at my bidding you could so stand up.

KING

I would I had, so I had broke thy pate°
And asked thee mercy for't.

LAFEW

Good faith, across!° 70

But, my good lord, 'tis thus: will you be cured
Of your infirmity?

KING

No.

LAFEW

O, will you eat
No grapes, my royal fox?° Yes, but you will
My noble grapes, and if my royal fox
Could reach them. I have seen a medicine 75
That's able to breathe life into a stone,
Quicken° a rock, and make you dance canary°
With sprightly fire and motion, whose simple touch
Is powerful to araise King Pippen,° nay,
To give great Charlemain a pen in's hand, 80
And write to her a love-line.

KING

What "her" is this?

LAFEW

Why, Doctor She! My lord, there's one arrived,
If you will see her. Now, by my faith and honor,
If seriously I may convey my thoughts
In this my light deliverance,° I have spoke 85
With one that, in her sex, her years, profession,°
Wisdom and constancy, hath amazed me more Than I dare blame my weakness. Will you see her,
For that is her demand, and know her business?
That done, laugh well at me.

KING

Now, good Lafew, 90

Bring in the admiration,° that we with thee
May spend our wonder too, or take off thine
By wond'ring how thou took'st it.

LAFEW

Nay, I'll fit° you,

And not be all day neither.

[Goes to door.]

KING

Thus he his special nothing ever prologues. 95

LAFEW

Nay, come your ways.

Enter HELENA.

KING

This haste hath wings indeed.

LAFEW

Nay, come your ways!

This is his majesty; say your mind to him.

A traitor you do look like, but such traitors

27 commanded here ordered to stay here; kept a coil bothered 30 And if 32 the forehorse . . . smock i.e., in the service of women ("forehorse" = leader in a team of horses)
43 metals with the additional sense of "mettles," spirits 45
Spurio from Italian = "false"; cicatrice scar 46 sinister left 50 Mars . . . novices May the god of war watch over you as his pupils 52 Stay support 54 list boundary (literally the selvage of cloth) 58 received fashionable 59 measure dance 60 dilated extended

65 I'll . . . up i.e., please arise ("fee" = reward) 69 pate head 70 across clumsily (an unskilled tilter might break a lance "across" instead of head-on) 73 royal fox alluding to Aesop's fox who said he did not want grapes, when he could not reach them; Lafew suggests that the king says he does not want to be cured because he thinks he cannot be cured 77
Quicken endow with life; canary a lively dance 79 Pippen
Pepin (died 768) 85 light deliverance jesting utterance 86 profession claims 91 admiration wonder 93 fit satisfy

His majesty seldom fears. I am Cressid's uncle,^o 100
That dare leave two together. Fare you well. Exit.

KING

Now, fair one, does your business follow us?

HELENA

Ay, my good lord.

Gerard de Narbon was my father;

In what he did profess, well found.^o

KING

I knew him. 105

HELENA

The rather will I spare my praises towards him;
Knowing him is enough. On's bed of death
Many receipts he gave me, chiefly one,
Which as the dearest issue of his practice
And of his old experience th' only darling, 110
He bade me store up as a triple^o eye,
Safer than mine own two; more dear I have so,
And, hearing your high majesty is touched
With that malignant cause wherein the honor
Of my dear father's gift stands chief in power, 115
I come to tender^o it and my appliance,^o
With all bound humbleness.

KING

We thank you, maiden,

But may not be so credulous of cure,
When our most learnèd doctors leave us, and
The congregated College^o have concluded 120
That laboring art^o can never ransom nature
From her inaidable estate. I say we must not
So stain our judgment or corrupt our hope,
To prostitute our past-cure malady
To empirics,^o or to dissever so 125
Our great self and our credit,^o to esteem
A senseless help, when help past sense we deem.

HELENA

My duty then shall pay me for my pains.
I will no more enforce mine office on you,
Humbly entreating from your royal thoughts 130
A modest one to bear me back again.

KING

I cannot give thee less, to be called grateful.
Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give
As one near death to those that wish him live.
But what at full I know, thou know'st no part, 135
I knowing all my peril, thou no art.

HELENA

What I can do can do no hurt to try,
Since you set up your rest^o 'gainst remedy:
He that of greatest works is finisher,
Oft does them by the weakest minister. 140
So holy writ in babes hath judgment shown,
When judges have been babes; great floods have flown
From simple sources; and great seas have dried
When miracles have by the great'st^o been denied.
Oft expectation fails, and most oft there 145

100 Cressid's uncle Pandarus (who served as go-between for his niece and Troilus 105 well found found to be skilled 111 triple third, i.e., the remedy was as valuable as her eyes 116 tender offer; appliance (1) service (2) application, treatment 120 congregated College assembled College of Physicians 121 art human skill 125 empirics quacks 126 credit reputation 138 set . . . rest stake all (gambling term) 144 the great'st if Helena has been thinking of the Red Sea, "the great'st" = Pharaoh

Where most it promises, and oft it hits
Where hope is coldest and despair most sits.

KING

I must not hear thee; fare thee well, kind maid.

Thy pains not used must by thyself be paid.

Proffers not took reap thanks for their reward. 150

HELENA

Inspirèd merit so by breath^o is barred.

It is not so with Him that all things knows,

As 'tis with us that square our guess by shows;^o

But most it is presumption in us when

The help of heaven we count the act of men. 155

Dear sir, to my endeavors give consent;

Of heaven, not me, make an experiment.

I am not an impostor, that proclaim

Myself against the level of mine aim,^o

But know I think, and think I know most sure, 160

My art is not past power, nor you past cure.

KING

Art thou so confident? Within what space

Hop'st thou my cure?

HELENA

The greatest grace lending grace,

Ere twice the horses of the sun shall bring

Their fiery torcher his diurnal ring,^o 165

Ere twice in murk and occidental damp^o

Moist Hesperus^o hath quenched her sleepy lamp,

Or four and twenty times the pilot's glass^o

Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass,

What is infirm from your sound parts shall fly, 170

Health shall live free, and sickness freely die.

KING

Upon thy certainty and confidence

What dar'st thou venture?

HELENA

Tax^o of impudence,

A strumpet's boldness, a divulgèd shame,

Traduced by odious ballads; my maiden's name 175

Seared^o otherwise; ne^o worse of worst, extended^o

With vilest torture, let my life be ended.

KING

Methinks in thee some blessèd spirit doth speak

His powerful sound within an organ weak;

And what impossibility would slay 180

In common sense, sense saves another way.

Thy life is dear, for all that life can rate

Worth name of life in thee hath estimate:^o

Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, all

That happiness and prime^o can happy call. 185

Thou this to hazard needs must intimate

Skill infinite or monstrous desperate.

Sweet practicer, thy physic^o I will try,

That ministers thine own death if I die.

HELENA

If I break time, or flinch in property^o

190

151 breath i.e., your words (contrast to God's breathing into Helen is implicit in "inspirèd") 153 square . . . shows make decisions by appearances 158-59 that . . . aim although I announce I will hit the target even before I take aim 165 diurnal ring daily circuit 166 occidental damp alluding to the sun's alleged setting in the ocean 167 Hesperus the evening star 168 glass hourglass 173 Tax accusation 176 Seared branded; ne nor; extended stretched (on the rack) 183 estimate value 185 prime springtime (of life), i.e., youth 188 physic medicine 190 flinch in property i.e., fail in any detail

Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die,
And well deserved. Not helping, death's my fec,
But if I help what do you promise me?

KING

Make thy demand.

HELENA

But will you make it even?

KING

Ay, by my scepter and my hopes of heaven.

195

HELENA

Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand
What husband in thy power I will command:
Exempted be from me the arrogance
To choose from forth the royal blood of France
My low and humble name to propagate
With any branch or image of thy state;
But such a one, thy vassal, whom I know
Is free for me to ask, thee to bestow.

200

KING

Here is my hand; the premises observed,
Thy will by my performance shall be served;
So make the choice of thy own time, for I,
Thy resolved patient, on thee still rely.
More should I question thee, and more I must,
Though more to know could not be more to trust;
From whence thou cam'st, how tended on—but rest
Unquestioned, welcome, and undoubted blest.
Give me some help here, ho! If thou proceed
As high as word, my deed shall match thy deed.

205

210

Flourish. Exit [KING, with HELENA].

[Scene II. Rousillon. The count's palace.]

Enter COUNTESS and CLOWN.

COUNTESS Come on, sir. I shall now put you to the height of° your breeding.

CLOWN I will show myself highly fed and lowly taught. I know my business is but to the court.

COUNTESS To the court! Why, what place make you special, when you put off that with such contempt?
"But to the court"!

CLOWN Truly, madam, if God have lent a man any manners, he may easily put it off at court. He that cannot make a leg,° put off's cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap; and indeed such a fellow, to say precisely, were not for the court. But for me, I have an answer will serve all men.

COUNTESS Marry, that's a bountiful answer that fits all questions.

15

CLOWN It is like a barber's chair that fits all buttocks:
the pin-buttock, the quatch-buttock,° the brawn-
buttock, or any buttock.

COUNTESS Will your answer serve fit to all questions?

20

CLOWN As fit as ten groats° is for the hand of an attorney, as your French crown° for your taffety punk,° as Tib's rush° for Tom's forefinger, as a pan-

194 make it even fulfill it

II.ii.1-2 put . . . of test 10 make a leg make obeisance (by drawing back one leg and bending the other) 17 quatchbuttock fat behind 21 ten groats a groat was worth four-pence; ten groats was the usual attorney's fee 22 French crown (1) coin (2) bald or scabby head (caused by syphilis,
"the French disease") 22-23 taffety punk finely dressed prostitute 23 rush ring made of rush (used in mock weddings) cake for Shrove Tuesday,° a morris° for May Day, as the nail to his hole, the cuckold to his horn, as a scolding quean° to a wrangling knave, as the nun's lip to the friar's mouth; nay, as the pudding° to his skin.

COUNTESS Have you, I say, an answer of such fitness for all questions?

CLOWN From below your duke to beneath your constable, it will fit any question.

25

COUNTESS It must be an answer of most monstrous size that must fit all demands.

CLOWN But a trifle neither,° in good faith, if the learned should speak truth of it. Here it is, and all that belongs to't. Ask me if I am a courtier; it shall do you no harm to learn.

35

COUNTESS To be young again, if we could, I will be a fool in question, hoping to be the wiser by your answer. I pray you, sir, are you a courtier?

40

CLOWN O Lord, sir!° There's a simple putting off.
More, more, a hundred of them.

COUNTESS Sir, I am a poor friend of yours, that loves
you.

CLOWN O Lord, sir! Thick,° thick! Spare not me.

45

COUNTESS I think, sir, you can eat none of this homely meat.

CLOWN O Lord, sir! Nay, put me to't, I warrant you.

COUNTESS You were lately whipped, sir, as I think.

CLOWN O Lord, sir! Spare not me.

50

COUNTESS Do you cry, "O Lord, sir!" at your whipping, and "spare not me"? Indeed, your "O Lord, sir!" is very sequent to° your whipping; you would answer very well to a whipping, if you were but bound to't.

55

CLOWN I ne'er had worse luck in my life in my "O Lord, sir!" I see things may serve long, but not serve ever.

COUNTESS

I play the noble housewife with the time,
To entertain it so merrily with a fool.

60

CLOWN O Lord, sir! Why, there't serves well again.

COUNTESS

An end, sir! To your business: give Helen this,
And urge her to a present° answer back.

Commend me to my kinsmen and my son.

This is not much.

65

CLOWN Not much commendation to them?

COUNTESS Not much employment for you. You understand me?

CLOWN Most fruitfully.° I am there before my legs.

COUNTESS Haste you again. Exeunt.

70

[Scene III. Paris. The king's palace.]

Enter BERTRAM, LAFEW, and PAROLLES.

LAFEW They say miracles are past, and we have our 24 Shrove Tuesday day preceding Ash Wednesday, hence a day of feasting immediately before Lent; morris country dance 26 quean prostitute 27 pudding sausage 34 neither indeed (negating the Countess' conjecture) 41 O

Lord, sir a phrase associated with courtiers 45 Thick quickly 53 is . . . to i.e., would quickly follow 55 bound to't (1) bound by oath to answer (2) tied to a whipping post 63 present immediate 69 fruitfully perhaps a bawdy punning reply, if "understand" means "have intercourse with" philosophical persons, to make modern° and familiar, things supernatural and causeless. Hence is it that we make trifles of terrors, ensconcing° ourselves into seeming knowledge, when we should submit ourselves to an unknown fear.°

PAROLLES Why, 'tis the rarest argument of° wonder that hath shot out in our latter times.

BERTRAM And so 'tis.

LAFEW To be relinquished of the artists—° 10

PAROLLES So I say—both of Galen and Paracelsus.°

LAFEW Of all the learned and authentic fellows—

PAROLLES Right; so I say.

LAFEW That gave him out incurable—

PAROLLES Why, there 'tis; so say I too. 15

LAFEW Not to be helped—

PAROLLES Right, as 'twere a man assured of a—

LAFEW Uncertain life and sure death.

PAROLLES Just; you say well. So would I have said.

LAFEW I may truly say it is a novelty to the world. 20

PAROLLES It is indeed; if you will have it in showing, you shall read it in what-do-ye-call there?

LAFEW [Reading.] "A showing of a heavenly effect in an earthly actor."

PAROLLES That's it, I would have said the very same. 25

LAFEW Why, your dolphin is not lustier;° 'fore me,° I speak in respect—

PAROLLES Nay, 'tis strange, 'tis very strange; that is the brief and the tedious of it, and he's of a most facinerious° spirit that will not acknowledge it to be 30 the—

LAFEW Very hand of heaven.

PAROLLES Ay, so I say.

LAFEW In a most weak—

PAROLLES And debile° minister; great power, great 35 transcendence, which should indeed give us a further use to be made than alone the recov'ry of the king, as to be—

LAFEW Generally thankful.

Enter KING, HELENA, and ATTENDANTS.

PAROLLES I would have said it. You say well. Here 40 comes the king.

LAFEW Lustig, as the Dutchman° says. I'll like a maid the better whilst I have a tooth in my head. Why, he's able to lead her a coranto.°

PAROLLES Mor du vinager!° Is not this Helen? 45

LAFEW 'Fore God, I think so.

KING

Go, call before me all the lords in court.

[Exit ATTENDANT.]

Sit, my preserver, by thy patient's side,

And with this healthful hand, whose banished sense

Thou hast repealed,° a second time receive 50

The confirmation of my promised gift,

Which but attends thy naming.

Enter three or four LORDS.

Fair maid, send forth thine eye. This youthful parcel
Of noble bachelors stand at my bestowing,
O'er whom both sovereign power and father's voice 55
I have to use. Thy frank election° make;
Thou hast power to choose, and they none to forsake.

HELENA

To each of you one fair and virtuous mistress

Fall, when Love please! Marry, to each but one!

LAFEW

I'd give bay curtal and his furniture,° 60

My mouth no more were broken° than these boys',
And writ° as little beard.

KING

Peruse them well:

Not one of those but had a noble father.

HELENA [She addresses her to a LORD.]

Gentlemen,

Heaven hath through me restored the king to health. 65

ALL

We understand it, and thank heaven for you.

HELENA

I am a simple maid, and therein wealthiest

That I protest I simply am a maid.

Please it your majesty, I have done already.

The blushes in my cheeks thus whisper me, 70

"We blush that thou shouldst choose; but, be refused,

Let the white death sit on thy cheek forever,

We'll ne'er come there again."

KING

Make choice and see,

Who shuns thy love shuns all his love in me.

HELENA

Now, Dian, from thy altar do I fly, 75

And to imperial Love, that god most high,

Do my sighs stream. [To FIRST LORD.] Sir, will you hear my suit?

FIRST LORD

And grant it.

HELENA

Thanks, sir; all the rest is mute.

LAFEW I had rather be in this choice than throw ames-ace° for my life. 80

HELENA [To SECOND LORD.]

The honor, sir, that flames in your fair eyes,

Before I speak, too threat'ningly replies.

Love make your fortunes twenty times above

Her that so wishes and her humble love!

SECOND LORD

No better, if you please.

HELENA

My wish receive, 85

Which great Love grant; and so, I take my leave.

LAFEW Do all they deny her?° And they were sons of mine, I'd have them whipped, or I would send them to th' Turk to make cunuchs of.

HELENA [To THIRD LORD.]

Be not afraid that I your hand should take, 90

I'll never do you wrong, for your own sake.

II.iii.2 modern commonplace 4 ensconcing fortifying 6 unknown fear i.e., inexplicable mystery 7 argument of subject for 10 artists physicians 11 Galen . . . Paracelsus renowned physicians; the former was a Greek of the second century B.C., the latter a German of the sixteenth century 26 lustier more vigorous; 'fore me on my soul 30 facinerious villainous 35 debile weak 42 Dutchman German 44 coranto lively dance 45 Mor du vinager death of vinegar (a meaningless pseudo-French oath) 50 repealed recalled from banishment

56 frank election free choice 60 bay . . . furniture my bay horse with the docked tail, and his trappings 61 broken broken to the bit, i.e., tamed (?) missing some teeth (?) 62 writ claimed (?) 80 ames-ace two aces, the lowest throw in dicing (the line is ironical, as one might say I would rather be in this lottery than at death's door) 87 deny her Lafew, at a distance, does not understand that Helena denies the men

Blessing upon your vows, and in your bed
Find fairer fortune if you ever wed!

LAFEW These boys are boys of ice, they'll none have her. Sure they are bastards to the English; the French 95 ne'er got° 'em.

HELENA [To FOURTH LORD.]

You are too young, too happy, and too good,
To make yourself a son out of my blood.

FOURTH LORD

Fair one, I think not so.

LAFEW There's one grape yet. I am sure thy father 100 drunk wine.° But if thou be'st not an ass, I am a youth of fourteen; I have known thee already.

HELENA [To BERTRAM.]

I dare not say I take you, but I give Me and my service, ever whilst I live,
Into your guiding power. This is the man. 105

KING

Why then, young Bertram, take her, she's thy wife.

BERTRAM

My wife, my liege? I shall beseech your highness,
In such a business give me leave to use
The help of mine own eyes.

KING

Know'st thou not, Bertram,

What she has done for me?

BERTRAM

Yes, my good lord;

But never hope to know why I should marry her. 110

KING

Thou know'st she has raised me from my sickly bed.

BERTRAM

But follows it, my lord, to bring me down
Must answer for your raising? I know her well;
She had her breeding° at my father's charge:
A poor physician's daughter my wife! Disdain 115
Rather corrupt me ever!°

KING

'Tis only title thou disdain'st in her, the which I can build up. Strange is it that our bloods,
Of color, weight, and heat, poured all together, 120
Would quite confound distinction, yet stands off
In differences so mighty. If she be

All that is virtuous, save what thou dislik'st—

A poor physician's daughter—thou dislik'st

Of virtue for the name. But do not so:

From lowest place when virtuous things proceed, 125

The place is dignified by th' doer's deed.

Where great additions swell's° and virtue none,

It is a dropsied honor. Good alone

Is good, without a name; vileness is so:

The property° by what it is should go,

Not by the title. She is young, wise, fair;

In these to nature she's immediate heir;

And these breed honor. That is honor's scorn

Which challenges itself as honor's born° 135

And is not like the sire. Honors thrive

When rather from our acts we them derive

Than our foregoers. The mere word's a slave,

Deboshed° on every tomb, on every grave

96 got begot 101 drunk wine i.e., was manly 115 breeding upbringing 116-17 Disdain . . . ever May my disdain of her ruin me forever 128 additions swell's titles inflate us 131 property quality (here, "good" or "vileness") 135 challenges . . . born claims honor by descent
139 Deboshed debauched, debased

A lying trophy, and as oft is dumb 140
Where dust and damned oblivion is the tomb
Of honored bones indeed. What should be said?
If thou canst like this creature as a maid,
I can create the rest. Virtue and she
Is her own dower; honor and wealth from me. 145

BERTRAM

I cannot love her, nor will strive to do't.

KING

Thou wrong'st thyself, if thou shouldst strive to choose.

HELENA

That you are well restored, my lord, I'm glad;
Let the rest go.

KING

My honor's at the stake,° which to defeat, 150
I must produce my power. Here, take her hand,
Proud, scornful boy, unworthy this good gift,
That dost in vile misprision° shackle up
My love and her desert; that canst not dream
We, poisoning us in her defective scale, 155
Shall weigh thee to the beam;° that wilt not know,
It is in us to plant thine honor where
We please to have it grow. Check thy contempt;
Obey our will, which travails in thy good;
Believe not thy disdain, but presently° 160
Do thine own fortunes that obedient right
Which both thy duty owes and our power claims;
Or I will throw thee from my care forever
Into the staggers° and the careless lapse
Of youth and ignorance; both my revenge and hate, 165
Loosing upon thee in the name of justice,
Without all terms of pity. Speak. Thine answer.

BERTRAM

Pardon, my gracious lord; for I submit
My fancy° to your eyes. When I consider
What great creation and what dole° of honor 170
Flies where you bid it, I find that she, which late
Was in my nobler thoughts most base, is now
The praised of the king; who, so ennobled,
Is as 'twere born so.

KING

Take her by the hand,

And tell her she is thine; to whom I promise 175

A counterpoise, if not to thy estate,

A balance more replete.°

BERTRAM

I take her hand.

KING

Good fortune and the favor of the king
Smile upon this contract; whose ceremony
Shall seem expedient° on the now-born brief,° 180
And be performed tonight. The solemn feast
Shall more attend upon the coming space,
Expecting absent friends.° As thou lov'st her,

150 at the stake the figure is from bearbaiting; a bear was tied to a stake, and dogs were set upon him 153 misprision contempt (with a pun on the sense of "false imprisonment") 155-56 We . . . beam i.e., my (royal "we") word added to Helena will outweigh your objection 160 presently immediately 164 staggers giddiness (disease of animals) 169 fancy love 170 dole portion 176-77 A counterpoise . . . replete a reward that, if it does not equal your estate, will outweigh it (?) 180 expedient swift; brief royal edict 181-83 The solemn . . . friends the ceremonious ("solemn") feast shall await ("attend") until absent friends arrive

Thy love's to me religious; else, does err.

Exeunt. PAROLLES and LAFEW stay behind, commenting of this wedding.

LAFEW Do you hear, monsieur? A word with you. 185

PAROLLES Your pleasure, sir?

LAFEW Your lord and master did well to make his recantation.

PAROLLES Recantation! My lord! My master!

LAFEW Ay; is it not a language I speak? 190

PAROLLES A most harsh one, and not to be understood without bloody succeeding.° My master!

LAFEW Are you companion to the Count Rousillon?

PAROLLES To any count, to all counts; to what is man.° 195

LAFEW To what is count's man; count's master is of another style.

PAROLLES You are too old, sir; let it satisfy you, you are too old.

LAFEW I must tell thee, sirrah, I write man; to which 200 title age cannot bring thee.

PAROLLES What I dare too well do, I dare not do.

LAFEW I did think thee, for two ordinaries,° to be a pretty wise fellow; thou didst make tolerable vent° of thy travel; it might pass. Yet the scarves° and the 205 bannerets about thee did manifoldly dissuade me from believing thee a vessel of too great a burden.° I have now found thee;° when I lose thee again I care not. Yet art thou good for nothing but taking up, and that 210 thou'rt scarce worth.

PAROLLES Hadst thou not the privilege of antiquity° upon thee—

LAFEW Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, lest thou hasten thy trial; which if—Lord have mercy on thee for a hen! So, my good window of lattice, fare 215 thee well; thy casement I need not open, for I look through thee. Give me thy hand.

PAROLLES My lord, you give me most egregious indignity.

LAFEW Ay, with all my heart, and thou art worthy 220 of it.

PAROLLES I have not, my lord, deserved it.

LAFEW Yes, good faith, every dram of it, and I will not bate thee a scruple.°

PAROLLES Well, I shall be wiser. 225

LAFEW Ev'n as soon as thou canst, for thou hast to pull at a smack o' th' contrary.° If ever thou be'st bound in thy scarf and beaten, thou shall find what it is to be proud of thy bondage. I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge, 230 that I may say, in the default,° "He is a man I know."

PAROLLES My lord, you do me most insupportable vexation.

LAFEW I would it were hell-pains for thy sake, and my poor doing eternal; for doing° I am past, as I will 235

by thee, in what motion age will give me leave. Exit.

PAROLLES Well, thou hast a son shall take this disgrace off me; scurvy, old, filthy, scurvy lord! Well, I must be patient, there is no fettering of authority. I'll beat him, by my life, if I can meet him with any convenience,° and he were double and double a lord. I'll have no more pity of his age than I would have of— I'll beat him, and if I could but meet him again. 240

Enter LAFEW.

LAFEW Sirrah, your lord and master's married; there's news for you; you have a new mistress. 245

PAROLLES I most unfeignedly beseech your lordship to make some reservation of your wrongs. He is my good lord; whom I serve above is my master.

LAFEW Who? God?

PAROLLES Ay, sir. 250

LAFEW The devil it is that's thy master. Why dost thou garter up thy arms o' this fashion? Dost make hose of thy sleeves? Do other servants so? Thou wert best set thy lower part where thy nose stands. By mine honor, if I were but two hours younger I'd beat thee. 255
Methink'st thou art a general offense, and every man should beat thee. I think thou wast created for men to breathe° themselves upon thee.

PAROLLES This is hard and undeserved measure, my lord. 260

LAFEW Go to, sir. You were beaten in Italy for picking a kernel out of a pom'granate. You are a vagabond and no true traveler. You are more saucy with lords and honorable personages than the commission of your birth and virtue gives you heraldry. You are not 265 worth another word, else I'd call you knave. I leave you. Exit.

Enter BERTRAM.

PAROLLES Good, very good, it is so then. Good, very good, let it be concealed awhile.

BERTRAM

Undone and forfeited to cares forever! 270

PAROLLES

What's the matter, sweetheart?

BERTRAM

Although before the solemn priest I have sworn, I will not bed her.

PAROLLES

What, what, sweetheart?

BERTRAM

O my Parolles, they have married me! 275
I'll to the Tuscan wars and never bed her.

PAROLLES

France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits The tread of a man's foot; to th' wars!

BERTRAM

There's letters from my mother; what th' import is, I know not yet. 280

PAROLLES

Ay, that would be known. To th' wars, my boy, to th' wars!

He wears his honor in a box unseen,

240-41 convenience advantage 258 breathe exercise

192 succeeding consequences 195 man manly (but Lafew gives it another sense, "servingman") 203 ordinaries tavern meals 204 vent free talk 205 scarves military men wore scarves, usually over the shoulder; cf. the modern fourragère 207 burden capacity 208 found thee found you out 211 antiquity old age 224 bate . . . scruple i.e., diminish by one drop what I have said of you 227 pull . . . contrary i.e., take a good taste of your folly 231 in the default when you fail 235 doing perhaps with the bawdy meaning, "copulating"

That hugs his kinky-wicky° here at home,
 Spending his manly marrow in her arms,
 Which should sustain the bound and high curvet° 285
 Of Mars's fiery steed. To other regions!
 France is a stable, we that dwell in't jades;°
 Therefore to th' war!

BERTRAM

It shall be so. I'll send her to my house,
 Acquaint my mother with my hate to her, 290
 And wherefore I am fled; write to the king
 That which I durst not speak. His present gift
 Shall furnish me to those Italian fields
 Where noble fellows strike. Wars is no strife
 To the dark house and the detested wife. 295

PAROLLES

Will this capriccio° hold in thee, art sure?

BERTRAM

Go with me to my chamber and advise me.
 I'll send her straight away. Tomorrow
 I'll to the wars, she to her single sorrow.

PAROLLES

Why, these balls bound; there's noise in it. 'Tis hard; 300
 A young man married is a man that's marred.
 Therefore away, and leave her bravely; go.
 The king has done you wrong; but hush 'tis so.

Exit, [with BERTRAM].

[Scene IV. Paris. The king's palace.]

Enter HELENA and CLOWN.

HELENA

My mother greets me kindly. Is she well?°

CLOWN She is not well, but yet she has her health;
 she's very merry, but yet she is not well. But thanks be given she's very well and wants nothing i' th' world; but yet she is not well. 5

HELENA If she be very well what does she ail that she's not very well?

CLOWN Truly, she's very well indeed, but for two things.

HELENA What two things? 10

CLOWN One, that she's not in heaven, whither God send her quickly; the other, that she's in earth, from whence God send her quickly.

Enter PAROLLES.

PAROLLES Bless you, my fortunate lady!

HELENA I hope, sir, I have your good will to have 15 mine own good fortune.

PAROLLES You had my prayers to lead them on, and to keep them on have them still. O, my knave, how does my old lady?

CLOWN So that you had her wrinkles and I her 20 money, I would she did as you say.

PAROLLES Why, I say nothing.

283 kinky-wicky woman (but apparently an obscene term, perhaps from French quelque chose = "something," a euphemism for pudendum) 285 curvet prancing 287 jades nags 296 capriccio caprice (an affected Italian word)

II.iv.1 well in his reply, the Clown plays on the Elizabethan euphemism in which the dead are said to be well, i.e., well-off, being in heaven

CLOWN Marry, you are the wiser man; for many a man's tongue shakes out his master's undoing. To say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to have 25 nothing, is to be a great part of your title°—which is within a very little of nothing.

PAROLLES Away, th' art a knave.

CLOWN You should have said, sir, "Before a knave
 th' art a knave"; that's "Before me,° th' art a knave." 30
 This had been truth, sir.

PAROLLES Go to, thou art a witty fool; I have found thee.

CLOWN Did you find me in° yourself, sir, or were you taught to find me? The search, sir, was profitable; and 35 much fool may you find in you, even to the world's pleasure and the increase of laughter.

PAROLLES

A good knave, i' faith, and well fed.

Madam, my lord will go away tonight,

A very serious business calls on him. 40

The great prerogative and rite of love,

Which as your due time claims, he does acknowledge,

But puts it off to a compelled restraint;

Whose want, and whose delay, is strewed with sweets,

Which they distil now in the curbed time,° 45

To make the coming hour o'erflow with joy,

And pleasure drown the brim.

HELENA

What's his will else?

PAROLLES

That you will take your instant leave o' th' king,

And make this haste as your own good proceeding,°

Strength'ned with what apology you think 50
 May make it probable need.

HELENA

What more commands he?

PAROLLES

That, having this obtained, you presently

Attend his further pleasure.

HELENA

In everything I wait upon his will.

PAROLLES

I shall report it so.

Exit PAROLLES. 55

HELENA

I pray you. Come, sirrah.

Exit, [with CLOWN].

[Scene V. Paris. The king's palace.]

Enter LAFEW and BERTRAM.

LAFEW But I hope your lordship thinks not him a soldier.

BERTRAM Yes, my lord, and of very valiant approof.°

LAFEW You have it from his own deliverance.°

BERTRAM And by other warranted testimony. 5

LAFEW Then my dial goes not true; I took this lark for a bunting.°

BERTRAM I do assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge, and accordingly valiant.

LAFEW I have then sinned against his experience and 10

26 title possession 30 Before me punning on the sense "on my soul" 34 in by 45 curbed time delay (?) time spent in the confining still (?) 49 as . . . proceeding as if it originated from you

II.v.3 very valiant approof great proven valor 4 deliver- ance speech 6-7 took . . . bunting i.e., underestimated him transgressed against his valor; and my state that way is dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart to repent. Here he comes. I pray you make us friends; I will pursue the amity.

Enter PAROLLES.

PAROLLES [To BERTRAM.] These things shall be done, 15
sir.

LAFEW Pray you, sir, who's his tailor?

PAROLLES Sir?

LAFEW O, I know him well. Ay sir, he, sir, 's a good workman, a very good tailor. 20

BERTRAM [Aside to PAROLLES.]

Is she gone to the king?

PAROLLES She is.

BERTRAM

Will she away tonight?

PAROLLES As you'll have her.

BERTRAM

I have writ my letters, casketed my treasure,
Given order for our horses; and tonight,
When I should take possession of the bride, 25
End ere I do begin.

LAFEW [Aside.] A good traveler is something at the latter end of a dinner, but one that lies three thirds and uses a known truth to pass a thousand nothings with, should be once heard and thrice beaten. [Aloud.] 30
God save you, captain.

BERTRAM Is there any unkindness between my lord and you, monsieur?

PAROLLES I know not how I have deserved to run into my lord's displeasure. 35

LAFEW You have made shift^o to run into't, boots and spurs and all, like him that leaped into the custard; and out of it you'll run again rather than suffer question for your residence.^o

BERTRAM It may be you have mistaken him, my lord. 40

LAFEW And shall do so ever, though I took him at's prayers. Fare you well, my lord, and believe this of me, there can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes. Trust him not in matter of heavy consequence; I have kept of them tame^o and 45 know their natures. Farewell, monsieur; I have spoken better of you than you have or will to deserve at my hand, but we must do good against evil. [Exit.]

PAROLLES An idle^o lord, I swear.

BERTRAM I think not so. 50

PAROLLES Why, do you not know him?

BERTRAM

Yes, I do know him well, and common speech
Gives him a worthy pass.^o Here comes my clog.

Enter HELENA.

HELENA

I have, sir, as I was commanded from you,
Spoke with the king, and have procured his leave 55
For present parting; only he desires
Some private speech with you.

BERTRAM I shall obey his will.

36 made shift managed 38-39 suffer . . . residence put up with questions on why you are there 45 kept . . . tame had some of them as pets 49 idle foolish 53 pass reputation

You must not marvel, Helen, at my course,
Which holds not color with the time,^o nor does
The ministration and requirèd office 60

On my particular. Prepared I was not
For such a business; therefore am I found
So much unsettled. This drives me to entreat you
That presently you take your way for home,
And rather muse than ask why I entreat you, 65

For my respects^o are better than they seem,
And my appointments^o have in them a need
Greater than shows itself at the first view
To you that know them not. [Gives a letter.] This to my mother.

'Twill be two days ere I shall see you, so 70
I leave you to your wisdom.

HELENA Sir, I can nothing say
But that I am your most obedient servant.

BERTRAM

Come, come; no more of that.

HELENA And ever shall
With true observance^o seek to eke out that Wherein toward me my homely stars^o have failed 75
To equal my great fortune.

BERTRAM Let that go:
My haste is very great. Farewell; hie home.

HELENA Pray sir, your pardon.

BERTRAM Well, what would you say?

HELENA I am not worthy of the wealth I owe,^o
Nor dare I say 'tis mine—and yet it is; 80
But like a timorous thief most fain would steal
What law does vouch mine own.

BERTRAM What would you have?

HELENA Something, and scarce so much: nothing, indeed.
I would not tell you what I would, my lord.
Faith, yes— 85
Strangers and foes do sunder and not kiss.

BERTRAM I pray you, stay not, but in haste to horse.

HELENA I shall not break your bidding, good my lord.
Where are my other men? Monsieur, farewell. Exit.

BERTRAM Go thou toward home, where I will never come 90
Whilst I can shake my sword or hear the drum.
Away, and for our flight.

PAROLLES Bravely, coragio!^o [Exeunt.]

A C T I I I

[Scene I. Florence. The duke's palace.]

Flourish. Enter the DUKE of Florence, the two FRENCH-MEN, with a troop of SOLDIERS.

59 holds . . . time does not match the situation 66 respects reasons 67 appointments purposes 74 observance dutiful service 75 homely stars fate of low birth 79 owe own 92 coragio courage (Italian)

DUKE

So that from point to point now have you heard
The fundamental reasons of this war,
Whose great decision hath much blood let forth,
And more thirsts after.

FIRST LORD Holy seems the quarrel
Upon your grace's part; black and fearful
On the opposer.

DUKE

Therefore we marvel much our cousin France
Would in so just a business shut his bosom
Against our borrowing prayers.

SECOND LORD Good my lord,
The reasons of our state I cannot yield,^o
But like a common and an outward man
That the great figure of a council frames
By self-unable motion;^o therefore dare not Say what I think of it, since I have found Myself in my incertain grounds to fail
As often as I guessed.

DUKE Be it his pleasure.

FIRST LORD

But I am sure the younger of our nature,
That surfeit on^o their ease, will day by day
Come here for physic.

DUKE

Welcome shall they be;
And all the honors that can fly from us
Shall on them settle. You know your places well;
When better fall, for your avails they fell:^o
Tomorrow to the field! Flourish; [exeunt].

[Scene II. Rousillon. The count's palace.]

Enter COUNTESS and CLOWN.

COUNTESS It hath happened all as I would have had it, save that he comes not along with her.

CLOWN By my troth,^o I take my young lord to be a very melancholy man.

COUNTESS By what observance, I pray you?

CLOWN Why, he will look upon his boot and sing, mend the ruff and sing, ask questions and sing, pick his teeth and sing. I know a man that had his trick of melancholy sold a goodly manor for a song.

COUNTESS Let me see what he writes, and when he means to come.

[Reads a letter.]

CLOWN I have no mind to Isbel, since I was at court.
Our old lings^o and our Isbels o' th' country are nothing like your old ling and your Isbels o' th' court. The brains of my Cupid's knocked out, and I begin to love as an old man loves money, with no stomach.^o

COUNTESS What have we here?

CLOWN E'en that you have there. Exit.

COUNTESS [Reads] a letter. "I have sent you a daughter-in-law. She hath recovered the king, and undone me. I have wedded her, not bedded her, and sworn to make the 'not'^o eternal. You shall hear I am run away; know it before the report come. If there be breadth enough in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty to you.

Your unfortunate son,
Bertram."

This is not well, rash and unbridled boy,
To fly the favors of so good a king,
To pluck his indignation on thy head
By the misprizing^o of a maid too virtuous
For the contempt of empire.

Enter CLOWN.

CLOWN O madam, yonder is heavy news within,
between two soldiers and my young lady.

COUNTESS What is the matter?

CLOWN Nay, there is some comfort in the news, some comfort; your son will not be killed so soon as I thought he would.

COUNTESS Why should he be killed?

CLOWN So say I, madam, if he run away, as I hear he does. The danger is in standing to't;^o that's the loss of men, though it be the getting of children. Here they come will tell you more. For my part, I only hear your son was run away.

Enter HELENA and two [French] GENTLEMEN.

FIRST LORD Save you, good madam.

HELENA

Madam, my lord is gone, forever gone.

SECOND LORD Do not say so.

COUNTESS

Think upon patience. Pray you, gentlemen,
I have felt so many quirks of joy and grief,
That the first face of neither, on the start,
Can woman me^o unto't. Where is my son, I pray you?

SECOND LORD

Madam, he's gone to serve the Duke of Florence.
We met him thitherward, for thence we came,
And, after some dispatch in hand at court,
Thither we bend again.

HELENA Look on his letter, madam, here's my passport.^o

[Reads.]

"When thou canst get the ring upon my finger, which never shall come off, and show me a child begotten of thy body that I am father to, then call me husband; but in such a 'then' I write a 'never.'" This is a dreadful sentence.

COUNTESS

Brought you this letter, gentlemen?

FIRST LORD Ay, madam,
And for the contents' sake are sorry for our pains.

COUNTESS

I prithee, lady, have a better cheer.
If thou engrossest^o all the griefs are thine,

III.i.10 yield produce 13 self-unable motion impotent guess 18 surfeit on grow sick from 22 When . . . fell when better places fall vacant, for you they will have fallen III.ii.3 troth truth 13 lings salt cod (but also with the sense of "lecherous men") 16 stomach appetite

22 not with pun on knot, the symbol of marriage 31 mis-prizing despising 41 standing to't (1) standing one's ground
(2) having sexual intercourse 51 woman me make me weep 56-57 passport license to wander as a beggar 66 thou engrossest you monopolize

Thou robb'st me of a moiety.^o He was my son,
But I do wash his name out of my blood
And thou art all my child. Towards Florence is he?

SECOND LORD

Ay, madam.

COUNTESS And to be a soldier?

SECOND LORD

Such is his noble purpose, and, believe't,
The Duke will lay upon him all the honor
That good convenience^o claims.

COUNTESS

Return you thither?

FIRST LORD

Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed.

HELENA [Reads.]

"Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France."

'Tis bitter.

COUNTESS Find you that there?

HELENA

Ay, madam.

FIRST LORD 'Tis but the boldness of his hand, haply,^o which his heart was not consenting to.

COUNTESS

Nothing in France, until he have no wife!
There's nothing here that is too good for him
But only she, and she deserves a lord
That twenty such rude boys might tend upon
And call her, hourly, mistress. Who was with him?

FIRST LORD

A servant only, and a gentleman
Which I have sometime known.

COUNTESS

Parolles, was it not?

FIRST LORD

Ay, my good lady, he.

COUNTESS

A very tainted fellow, and full of wickedness.
My son corrupts a well-derived nature
With his inducement.^o

FIRST LORD

Indeed, good lady,

The fellow has a deal of that too much,
Which holds^o him much to have.

COUNTESS

Y'are welcome, gentlemen.

I will entreat you, when you see my son,
To tell him that his sword can never win
The honor that he loses; more I'll entreat you
Written to bear along.

SECOND LORD

We serve you, madam,

In that and all your worthiest affairs.

COUNTESS

Not so, but as we change our courtesies.^o
Will you draw near?

Exit, [with LORDS and CLOWN].

HELENA

"Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France."

Nothing in France until he has no wife!

Thou shalt have none, Rousillon,^o none in France;

Then hast thou all again. Poor lord! Is't I

That chase thee from thy country and expose

Those tender limbs of thine to the event^o

Of the none-sparing war? And is it I

That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou
Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
Of smoky muskets? O you leaden messengers,
That ride upon the violent speed of fire,
Fly with false aim, move the still-piecing^o air

That sings with piercing; do not touch my lord!

Whoever shoots at him, I set him there.

Whoever charges on his forward breast,

I am the caitiff^o that do hold him to't.

And though I kill him not I am the cause

His death was so effected. Better 'twere

I met the ravin^o lion when he roared

With sharp constraint of hunger; better 'twere

That all the miseries which nature owes^o

Were mine at once. No; come thou home, Rousillon,

Whence honor but of danger wins a scar,

As oft it loses all.^o I will be gone;

My being here it is that holds thee hence.

Shall I stay here to do't? No, no, although

The air of paradise did fan the house

And angels officed^o all. I will be gone,

That pitiful rumor may report my flight

To console thine ear. Come night, end day;

For with the dark, poor thief, I'll steal away. Exit.

[Scene III. Florence.]

Flourish. Enter the DUKE of Florence, BERTRAM, drum and trumpets, SOLDIERS, PAROLLES.

DUKE

The general of our horse thou art, and we,
Great in our hope, lay^o our best love and credence
Upon thy promising fortune.

BERTRAM

Sir, it is

A charge too heavy for my strength; but yet
We'll strive to bear it for your worthy sake
To th' extreme edge of hazard.

DUKE

Then go thou forth,

And fortune play upon thy prosperous helm,^o
As thy auspicious mistress!

BERTRAM

This very day,

Great Mars, I put myself into thy file!

Make me but like my thoughts and I shall prove

A lover of thy drum, hater of love. Exeunt omnes.

[Scene IV. Rousillon. The count's palace.]

Enter COUNTESS and STEWARD.

COUNTESS

Alas! And would you take the letter of her?

Might you not know she would do as she has done,
By sending me a letter? Read it again.

[STEWARD reads the] letter.

67 moiety share 73 convenience propriety 77 haply perhaps 89 his inducement i.e., Parolles' influence 91 holds profits 97 Not . . . courtesies No, you may serve me only if I may serve you (a courteous reply) 101 Rousillon
Bertram, Count of Rousillon 104 event outcome

110 still-piecing ever-repairing 114 caitiff wretch 117 ravin ravenous 119 owes owns, has 121-22 Whence . . .
all from where honor at best gains from danger a scar, and may lose everything 126 officed served
III.iii.2 lay wager 7 helm helmet

"I am Saint Jaques' pilgrim,^o thither gone.
 Ambitious love hath so in me offended 5
 That barefoot plod I the cold ground upon,
 With sainted vow my faults to have amended.
 Write, write, that from the bloody course of war
 My dearest master, your dear son, may hie.^o
 Bless him at home in peace, whilst I from far 10
 His name with zealous fervor sanctify.
 His taken^o labors bid him me forgive;
 I, his despiteful Juno,^o sent him forth
 From courtly friends with camping foes to live,
 Where death and danger dogs the heels of worth. 15
 He is too good and fair for death and me,
 Whom^o I myself embrace to set him^o free."

[COUNTESS.]

Ah, what sharp stings are in her mildest words!
 Rinaldo, you did never lack advice^o so much
 As letting her pass so; had I spoke with her, 20
 I could have well diverted her intents,
 Which thus she hath prevented.

STEWARD Pardon me, madam.
 If I had given you this at overnight,^o
 She might have been o'erta'en; and yet she writes,
 Pursuit would be but vain.

COUNTESS What angel shall 25
 Bless this unworthy husband? He cannot thrive,
 Unless her prayers, whom heaven delights to hear
 And loves to grant, relieve him from the wrath
 Of greatest justice. Write, write, Rinaldo,
 To this unworthy husband of his wife; 30
 Let every word weigh heavy of her worth
 That he does weigh too light. My greatest grief,
 Though little he do feel it, set down sharply.
 Dispatch the most convenient messenger.
 When haply he shall hear that she is gone, 35
 He will return; and hope I may that she,
 Hearing so much, will speed her foot again,
 Led hither by pure love. Which of them both
 Is dearest to me, I have no skill in sense
 To make distinction. Provide this messenger. 40
 My heart is heavy and mine age is weak;
 Grief would have tears, and sorrow bids me speak.

Exeunt.

[Scene V. Outside Florence.]

A tucket^o afar off. Enter old WIDOW of Florence, her daughter [DIANA], and MARIANA, with other CITIZENS.

WIDOW Nay come, for if they do approach the city,
 we shall lose all the sight.

DIANA They say the French count has done most honorable service.

WIDOW It is reported that he has taken their great'st 5 commander, and that with his own hand he slew the

III.iv.4 Saint Jaques' pilgrim making a pilgrimage to Saint James's shrine (at Compostela, in Spain; "Jaques" is disyllabic: Jā-kis) 9 hie hurry 12 taken undertaken 13 despiteful Juno alluding to Juno's persecution of Hercules, on whom she imposed the legendary twelve labors 17 Whom death; him Bertram 19 advice discretion 23 at overnight last night III.v.s.d. tucket trumpet call heralding the approach of an important person duke's brother. [Tucket.] We have lost our labor; they are gone a contrary way. Hark! You may know by their trumpets.

MARIANA Come, let's return again, and suffice our- 10 selves with the report of it. Well, Diana, take heed of this French earl. The honor of a maid is her name, and no legacy is so rich as honesty.^o

WIDOW I have told my neighbor how you have been solicited by a gentleman his companion. 15

MARIANA I know that knave, hang him, one Parolles; a filthy officer he is in those suggestions for the young earl. Beware of them, Diana: their promises, enticements, oaths, tokens, and all these engines^o of lust, are not the things they go under;^o many a maid hath been 20 seduced by them. And the misery is, example, that so terrible shows in the wrack of maidenhood, cannot for all that dissuade succession,^o but that they are limed^o with the twigs that threatens them. I hope I need not to advise you further, but I hope your own grace will 25 keep you where you are, though there were no further danger known but the modesty which is so lost.

DIANA You shall not need to fear me.

Enter HELENA [disguised as a pilgrim].

WIDOW I hope so. Look, here comes a pilgrim. I know she will lie^o at my house; thither they send one 30 another. I'll question her. God save you, pilgrim!
 Whither are you bound?

HELENA

To Saint Jaques le Grand. 30
 Where do the palmers^o lodge, I do beseech you?

WIDOW

At the Saint Francis here beside the port.^o 35

HELENA

Is this the way? 35

WIDOW

Ay, marry, is't. (A march afar.) Hark you! They come this way.

If you will tarry, holy pilgrim,

But till the troops come by,

I will conduct you where you shall be lodged; 40

The rather for I think I know your hostess

As ample^o as myself.

HELENA

Is it yourself?

WIDOW

If you shall please so, pilgrim.

HELENA

I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure.^o

WIDOW

You came, I think, from France?

HELENA

I did so. 45

WIDOW

Here you shall see a countryman of yours

That has done worthy service.

HELENA

His name, I pray you.

DIANA

The Count Rousillon. Know you such a one?

13 honesty chastity 19 engines devices 20 go under masquerade as 23 dissuade succession prevent others from following; limed caught (as by birdlime, a sticky substance smeared on twigs to trap birds) 30 lie lodge 34 palmers pilgrims 35 port city gate 42 ample well 44 stay . . .
leisure wait until convenient for you

HELENA
But by the ear, that hears most nobly of him;
His face I know not.

DIANA Whatsome'er he is,
He's bravely taken° here. He stole from France,
As 'tis reported, for the king had married him
Against his liking. Think you it is so?

HELENA
Ay, surely, mere° the truth. I know his lady.

DIANA
There is a gentleman that serves the count
Reports but coarsely of her.

HELENA What's his name?

DIANA
Monsieur Parolles.

HELENA O, I believe with him,
In argument of praise, or to the worth
Of the great count himself, she is too mean
To have her name repeated; all her deserving
Is a reservèd honesty,° and that I have not heard examined.

DIANA Alas, poor lady!
'Tis a hard bondage to become the wife
Of a detesting lord.

WIDOW
I warrant, good creature, wheresoe'er she is,
Her heart weighs sadly. This young maid might do her
A shrewd turn,° if she pleased.

HELENA How do you mean?
Maybe the amorous count solicits her
In the unlawful purpose.

WIDOW He does indeed,
And brokes° with all that can in such a suit
Corrupt the tender honor of a maid;
But she is armed for him, and keeps her guard
In honestest defense.

MARIANA The gods forbid else!

Drum and colors. Enter BERTRAM, PAROLLES, and the whole ARMY.

WIDOW
So, now they come.
That is Antonio, the duke's eldest son;
That, Escalus.

HELENA Which is the Frenchman?

DIANA He—
That with the plume; 'tis a most gallant fellow.
I would he loved his wife. If he were honester
He were much goodlier. Is't not a handsome gentleman?

HELENA
I like him well.

DIANA
'Tis pity he is not honest. Yond's that same knave
That leads him to these places. Were I his lady
I would poison that vile rascal.

HELENA Which is he?

DIANA
That jackanapes with scarves. Why is he melancholy?

HELENA
Perchance he's hurt i' th' battle. 85

PAROLLES Lose our drum! Well.

50 MARIANA He's shrewdly° vexed at something. Look, he has spied us.

WIDOW Marry, hang you!

MARIANA And your curtsy, for a ring-carrier!° 90
Exit [BERTRAM, with PAROLLES and the ARMY].

WIDOW
The troop is past. Come, pilgrim, I will bring you
Where you shall host;° of enjoined° penitents
There's four or five, to great Saint Jaques bound,
Already at my house.

HELENA I humbly thank you.
Please it this matron and this gentle maid 95
To eat with us tonight, the charge and thanking Shall be for me; and, to requite you further,
I will bestow some precepts of° this virgin
60 Worthy the note.

BOTH We'll take your offer kindly.
Exeunt.

[Scene VI. The Florentine camp.]

65 Enter BERTRAM and the [two] FRENCHMEN, as at first.

FIRST LORD Nay, good my lord, put him to't;° let him have his way.

SECOND LORD If your lordship find him not a hilding,° hold me no more in your respect.

FIRST LORD On my life, my lord, a bubble. 5

BERTRAM Do you think I am so far deceived in him?

70 FIRST LORD Believe it, my lord, in mine own direct knowledge, without any malice, but to speak of him as my kinsman,° he's a most notable coward, an infinite and endless liar, an hourly promise-breaker, 10 the owner of no one good quality worthy your lordship's entertainment.°

SECOND LORD It were fit you knew him, lest reposing too far in his virtue which he hath not, he might at some great and trusty business in a main 15 danger fail you.

75 BERTRAM I would I knew in what particular action to try him.

SECOND LORD None better than to let him fetch off his drum,° which you hear him so confidently under- 20 take to do.

FIRST LORD I, with a troop of Florentines, will suddenly surprise him; such I will have whom I am sure he knows not from the enemy. We will bind and hoodwink° him so, that he shall suppose no other but 25 that he carried into the leaguer° of the adversaries when we bring him to our own tents. Be but your lordship present at his examination; if he do not for the promise of his life and in the highest compulsion of base fear offer to betray you and deliver all the 30

87 shrewdly bitterly 90 ring-carrier bawd 92 host lodge; enjoined bound by oath 98 of on
III.vi.1 put him to't test him 4 hilding worthless fellow 9 as my kinsman i.e., impartially 12 entertainment maintenance 19-20 fetch . . . drum recapture his drum (the loss of the drum was a military disgrace) 25 hoodwink blindfold 26 leaguer camp

51 bravely taken well esteemed 54 mere absolutely 61 reservèd honesty preserved chastity 67 shrewd turn nasty deed (with sexual implication in "turn") 70 brokes bargains intelligence° in his power against you, and that with the divine forfeit of his soul upon oath; never trust my judgment in anything.

SECOND LORD O, for the love of laughter, let him fetch his drum. He says he has a stratagem for't. When your lordship sees the bottom of his success in't, and to what metal this counterfeit lump of ore will be melted, if you give him not John Drum's entertainment° your inclining cannot be removed. Here he comes. 40

Enter PAROLLES.

FIRST LORD O, for the love of laughter, hinder not the honor of his design; let him fetch off his drum in any hand.

BERTRAM How now, monsieur! This drum sticks sorely in your disposition. 45

SECOND LORD A pox° on't, let it go, 'tis but a drum.

PAROLLES "But a drum!" Is't "but a drum"? A drum so lost! There was excellent command: to charge in with our horse upon our own wings, and to rend our own soldiers! 50

SECOND LORD That was not to be blamed in the command of the service; it was a disaster of war that Caesar himself could not have prevented if he had been there to command.

BERTRAM Well, we cannot greatly condemn our success;° some dishonor we had in the loss of that drum, but it is not to be recovered. 55

PAROLLES It might have been recovered.

BERTRAM It might, but it is not now.

PAROLLES It is to be recovered. But that the merit of 60 service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer, I would have that drum or another, or hic jacet.°

BERTRAM Why, if you have a stomach,° to't, monsieur. If you think your mystery° in stratagem can 65 bring this instrument of honor again into his native quarter, be magnanimous in the enterprise, and go on; I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit. If you speed° well in it, the duke shall both speak of it and extend to you what further becomes his greatness, 70 even to the utmost syllable of your worthiness.

PAROLLES By the hand of a soldier, I will undertake it.

BERTRAM But you must not now slumber in it.

PAROLLES I'll about it this evening, and I will presently 75 pen down my dilemmas,° encourage myself in my certainty, put myself into my mortal preparation;° and by midnight look to hear further from me.

BERTRAM May I be bold to acquaint his grace you are gone about it? 80

PAROLLES I know not what the success will be, my lord, but the attempt I vow.

BERTRAM I know, th'art valiant; and to the possibility° of thy soldiership will subscribe for thee. Farewell.

31 intelligence information 38-39 John Drum's entertainment manhandling 46 pox plague (literally, syphilis) 55-56 success outcome, fortune (either good or bad) 62-63 hic jacet here lies (Latin, beginning an epitaph) 64 stomach appetite 65 mystery art, skill 69 speed prosper 76 dilemmas arguments 77 my mortal preparation preparation for my death (?) my weapons for killing (?) 83-84 possibility capacity

PAROLLES I love not many words.

Exit. 85

FIRST LORD No more than a fish loves water. Is not this a strange fellow, my lord, that so confidently seems to undertake this business, which he knows is not to be done, damns himself to do, and dares better be damned than to do't. 90

SECOND LORD You do not know him, my lord, as we do. Certain it is that he will steal himself into a man's favor and for a week escape a great deal of discoveries, but when you find him out you have him ever after. 95

BERTRAM Why, do you think he will make no deed at all of this that so seriously he does address himself unto?

FIRST LORD None in the world, but return with an invention, and clap upon you two or three probable 100 lies; but we have almost embossed him.° You shall see his fall tonight, for indeed he is not for your lordship's respect.

SECOND LORD We'll make you some sport with the fox ere we case° him. He was first smoked° by the old 105 lord Lafew. When his disguise and he is parted, tell me what a sprat° you shall find him; which you shall see this very night.

FIRST LORD I must go look my twigs; he shall be caught. 110

BERTRAM Your brother, he shall go along with me.

FIRST LORD As't please your lordship: I'll leave you. Exit.

BERTRAM

Now will I lead you to the house and show you The lass I spoke of.

SECOND LORD But you say she's honest.

BERTRAM

That's all the fault. I spoke with her but once, And found her wondrous cold, but I sent to her, By this same coxcomb that we have i' th' wind,° Tokens and letters which she did re-send, And this is all I have done. She's a fair creature; Will you go see her? 115

SECOND LORD With all my heart, my lord. 120

Exeunt.

[Scene VII. Florence. The Widow's house.]

Enter HELENA and WIDOW.

HELENA

If you misdoubt me that I am not she, I know not how I shall assure your further, But I shall lose the grounds I work upon.°

WIDOW

Though my estate be fall'n, I was well born, Nothing acquainted with these businesses, And would not put my reputation now In any staining act. 5

HELENA

Nor would I wish you.

First give me trust the count he is my husband,

101 embossed him exhausted him (hunting term) 105 case skin; smoked exposed (like a fox smoked out) 107 sprat small fish 117 have . . . wind are hunting III.vii.3 But . . . upon i.e., unless ("But") I reveal myself to Bertram

And what to your sworn counsel I have spoken°
Is so from word to word; and then you cannot,
By the good aid that I of you shall borrow,
Err in bestowing it.

WIDOW I should believe you,
For you have showed me that which well approves
Y' are great in fortune.

HELENA Take this purse of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
Which I will over-pay and pay again
When I have found it. The count he woos your daughter,

Lays down his wanton siege before her beauty,
Resolved to carry° her; let her in fine° consent
As we'll direct her how 'tis best to bear it.
Now his important° blood will nought deny
That she'll demand; a ring the county° wears,
That downward hath succeeded in his house
From son to son some four or five descents
Since the first father wore it. This ring he holds
In most rich choice; yet, in his idle fire,
To buy his will° it would not seem too dear,
Howe'er repented after.

WIDOW Now I see
The bottom of your purpose.

HELENA You see it lawful then. It is no more
But that your daughter, ere she seems as won,
Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter;
In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
Herself most chastely absent. After,
To marry her° I'll add three thousand crowns
To what is passed already.

WIDOW I have yielded.
Instruct my daughter how she shall persevere°
That time and place with this deceit so lawful
May prove coherent.° Every night he comes
With musics of all sorts, and songs composed
To her unworthiness. It nothing steads° us
To chide him from our eaves, for he persists
As if his life lay on't.

HELENA Why then tonight
Let us assay our plot, which, if it speed,°
Is wicked meaning° in a lawful deed,
And lawful meaning in a lawful act,
Where both not sin, and yet a sinful fact.
But let's about it.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV

[Scene I. Outside the Florentine camp.]

Enter one of the Frenchmen, [FIRST LORD], with five or six other SOLDIERS in ambush.

FIRST LORD He can come no other way but by this hedge-corner. When you sally upon him, speak what terrible language you will; though you understand it not yourselves, no matter; for we must not seem to understand him, unless someone among us whom we must produce for an interpreter.

FIRST SOLDIER Good captain, let me be th' interpreter.

FIRST LORD Art not acquainted with him? Knows he not thy voice?

FIRST SOLDIER No sir, I warrant you.

FIRST LORD But what linsey-woolsey° hast thou to speak to us again?

FIRST SOLDIER E'en such as you speak to me.

FIRST LORD He must think us some band of strangers° i' th' adversary's entertainment. Now he hath a smack of all neighboring languages; therefore we must everyone be a man of his own fancy, not to know what we speak one to another; so we seem to know is to know straight our purpose; choughs° language, gabble enough and good enough. As for you, interpreter, you must seem very politic. But couch, ho! Here he comes to beguile two hours in a sleep, and then to return and swear the lies he forges.

Enter PAROLLES.

PAROLLES Ten o'clock. Within these three hours
'twill be time enough to go home. What shall I say I have done? It must be a very plausible° invention that carries it. They begin to smoke me, and disgraces have of late knocked too often at my door. I find my tongue is too foolhardy, but my heart hath the fear of Mars before it and of his creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.

FIRST LORD [Aside.] This is the first truth that e'er thine own tongue was guilty of.

PAROLLES What the devil should move me to undertake the recovery of this drum, being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing I had no such purpose?
I must give myself some hurts, and say I got them in exploit. Yet slight ones will not carry it. They will say,
"Came you off with so little?" And great ones I dare not give. Wherefore, what's the instance? Tongue, I must put you into a butter-woman's° mouth, and buy myself another of Bajazet's mule° if you prattle me into these perils.

FIRST LORD [Aside.] Is it possible he should know what he is, and be that he is?

PAROLLES I would the cutting of my garments would serve the turn, or the breaking of my Spanish sword.

FIRST LORD [Aside.] We cannot afford you so.°

IV.i.12 linsey-woolsey nonsense (literally, a coarse fabric of linen and wool) 15-16 strangers foreigners 20 choughs' jackdaws' 27 plausible plausible 42 butter-woman's i.e., shrill-voiced woman's 43 Bajazet's mule mules were proverbial for muteness, but "Bajazet" is inexplicable 49 afford you so let you off thus

9 to . . . spoken I have confided to you, upon your oath of secrecy 19 carry conquer; in fine finally 21 important importunate, pressing 22 county count 27 will lust 35 To marry her i.e., as a dowry to help her marry 37 persevere accent on second syllable 39 coherent in accordance 41 steads helps 44 speed prosper 45 meaning intention (the point of this passage is that Bertram's intention is wicked, though his deed—copulating with his wife —will be lawful; Helena's intention and her act will be good, and the deed will not be a sin though in Bertram's mind he will be sinning)

PAROLLES Or the baring of my beard, and to say it 50 was in stratagem.

FIRST LORD [Aside.] 'Twould not do.

PAROLLES Or to drown my clothes, and say I was stripped.

FIRST LORD [Aside.] Hardly serve. 55

PAROLLES Though I swore I leaped from the window of the citadel—

FIRST LORD [Aside.] How deep?

PAROLLES Thirty fathom.

FIRST LORD [Aside.] Three great oaths would scarce 60 make that be believed.

PAROLLES I would I had any drum of the enemy's; I would swear I recovered it.

FIRST LORD [Aside.] You shall hear one anon.°

PAROLLES A drum now of the enemy's— 65

Alarum° within.

FIRST LORD Throca movousus, cargo, cargo, cargo.

ALL Cargo, cargo, cargo, villianda par corbo, cargo.

PAROLLES O, ransom, ransom! Do not hide mine eyes.

[They blindfold him.]

INTERPRETER Boskos thromuldo boskos. 70

PAROLLES

I know you are the Muskos' regiment,

And I shall lose my life for want of language.

If there be here German, or Dane, low Dutch,

Italian, or French, let him speak to me,

I'll discover° that which shall undo the Florentine. 75

INTERPRETER Boskos vauvado. I understand thee, and can speak thy tongue. Kerelybonto. Sir, betake thee to thy faith, for seventeen poniards are at thy bosom.

PAROLLES O! 80

INTERPRETER O, pray, pray, pray! Manka revania dulche.

FIRST LORD Oscorbidulchos volivorco.

INTERPRETER

The general is content to spare thee yet,

And, hoodwinked as thou art, will lead thee on 85

To gather from thee. Haply thou mayst inform

Something to save thy life.

PAROLLES O, let me live!

And all the secrets of our camp I'll show,

Their force, their purposes; nay, I'll speak that

Which you will wonder at.

INTERPRETER But wilt thou faithfully? 90

PAROLLES

If I do not, damn me.

INTERPRETER Acordo linta.

Come on, thou art granted space.

Exit, [with PAROLLES guarded].

A short alarum within.°

FIRST LORD

Go, tell the Count Rousillon and my brother

We have caught the woodcock° and will keep him muffled

Till we do hear from them.

SOLDIER Captain, I will. 95

FIRST LORD

'A° will betray us all unto ourselves;

Inform on that.

SOLDIER So I will, sir.

FIRST LORD

Till then, I'll keep him dark, and safely locked.

Exit, [with the others].

[Scene II. Florence. The Widow's house.]

Enter BERTRAM and the maid called DIANA.

BERTRAM

They told me that your name was Fontibell.

DIANA

No, my good lord, Diana.

BERTRAM Titled goddess;

And worth it, with addition.° But, fair soul,

In your fine frame hath love no quality?

If the quick fire of youth light not your mind 5

You are no maiden but a monument.

When you are dead you should be such a one

As you are now; for you are cold and stern,

And now you should be as your mother was

When your sweet self was got. 10

DIANA

She then was honest.

BERTRAM So should you be.

DIANA No.

My mother did but duty; such, my lord,

As you owe to your wife.

BERTRAM No more o' that!

I prithee, do not strive against my vows;

I was compelled to her, but I love thee 15

By love's own sweet constraint, and will forever

Do thee all rights of service.

DIANA

Ay, so you serve us

Till we serve you; but when you have our roses,

You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves,

And mock us with our bareness.

BERTRAM How have I sworn! 20

DIANA

'Tis not the many oaths that makes the truth,

But the plain single° vow that is vowed true.

What is not holy, that we swear not by,

But take the High'st to witness; then, pray you, tell

me:

If I should swear by Jove's great attributes 25

I loved you dearly, would you believe my oaths

When I did love you ill?° This has no holding,

To swear by Him whom I protest to love

That I will work against Him. Therefore your oaths

Are words and poor conditions but unsealed,° 30

At least in my opinion.

BERTRAM Change it, change it;

Be not so holy-cruel. Love is holy,

94 woodcock stupid bird 96 'A he

IV.ii.3 addition further distinguished title 27 ill not well, not at all 30 but unsealed merely invalid

64 anon soon 65 s.d. Alarum call to arms 75 discover reveal 92 s.d. A . . . within perhaps Parolles is taken off to a ruffle of drums

And my integrity ne'er knew the crafts
That you do charge men with. Stand no more off,
But give thyself unto my sick desires,
Who then recovers. Say thou art mine, and ever
My love as it begins shall so persevere.

DIANA

I see that men make rope's in such a scarre,^o
That we'll forsake ourselves. Give me that ring.

BERTRAM

I'll lend it thee, my dear, but have no power
To give it from me.

DIANA

Will you not, my lord?

BERTRAM

It is an honor 'longing to our house,
Bequeathèd down from many ancestors,
Which were the greatest obloquy i' th' world
In me to lose.

DIANA

Mine honor's such a ring;

My chastity's the jewel of our house,
Bequeathèd down from many ancestors,
Which were the greatest obloquy i' th' world
In me to lose. Thus your own proper^o wisdom Brings in the champion Honor on my part Against your vain assault.

BERTRAM

Here, take my ring.

My house, mine honor, yea, my life be thine,
And I'll be bid by thee.

DIANA

When midnight comes, knock at my chamber-window:
I'll order take my mother shall not hear.

Now will I charge you in the band^o of truth,
When you have conquered my yet maiden bed,
Remain there but an hour, nor speak to me.

My reasons are most strong and you shall know them
When back again this ring shall be delivered;

And on your finger in the night I'll put Another ring, that what in time proceeds

May token to the future our past deeds.

Adieu till then; then fail not. You have won

A wife of me, though there my hope be done.

BERTRAM

A heaven on earth I have won by wooing thee.

[Exit.]

DIANA

For which live long to thank both heaven and me!
You may so in the end.

My mother told me just how he would woo,
As if she sat in's heart. She says all men

Have the like oaths. He had sworn to marry me
When his wife's dead; therefore I'll lie with him

When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so braid,^o
Marry that will, I live and die a maid.

Only, in this disguise, I think't no sin

To cozen^o him that would unjustly win.

Exit.

[Scene III. The Florentine camp.]

Enter the two French CAPTAINS, and some two or three SOLDIERS.

FIRST LORD You have not given him his mother's letter?

35 SECOND LORD I have delivered it an hour since.
There is something in't that stings his nature, for on the reading it he changed almost into another man.

FIRST LORD He has much worthy blame laid upon him for shaking off so good a wife and so sweet a lady.

SECOND LORD Especially he hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the king, who had even tuned his bounty to sing happiness to him. I will tell you a 10 thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly with you.

FIRST LORD When you have spoken it, 'tis dead, and I am the grave of it.

SECOND LORD He hath perverted a young gentlewoman here in Florence, of a most chaste renown, and 15 this night he fleshes his will in the spoil of her honor;
he hath given her his monumental^o ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition.^o

FIRST LORD Now, God delay our rebellion! As we are ourselves, what things are we!

SECOND LORD Merely^o our own traitors. And as in the common course of all treasons we still see them 20 reveal themselves till they attain to their abhorred ends, so he that in this action contrives against his own nobility, in his proper^o stream o'erflows^o himself.

FIRST LORD Is it not meant damnable in us to be trumpeters of our unlawful intents? We shall not then have his company tonight?

SECOND LORD Not till after midnight, for he is dietet^o to his hour.

FIRST LORD That approaches apace. I would gladly have him see his company anatomized,^o that he might take a measure of his own judgments, wherein so curiously he had set this counterfeit.^o

SECOND LORD We will not meddle with him till he^o
35 come, for his presence must be the whip of the other.

FIRST LORD In the meantime, what hear you of these wars?

SECOND LORD I hear there is an overture of peace.

FIRST LORD Nay, I assure you, a peace concluded.

SECOND LORD What will Count Rousillon do then?

Will he travel higher, or return again into France?

FIRST LORD I perceive by this demand you are not altogether of his council.

SECOND LORD Let it be forbid, sir; so should I be a 45 great deal of his act.

FIRST LORD Sir, his wife some two months since fled from his house. Her pretense^o is a pilgrimage to Saint Jaques le Grand; which holy undertaking with most austere sanctimony^o she accomplished; and, there 50 residing, the tenderness of her nature became as a prey to her grief; in fine, made a groan of her last breath, and now she sings in heaven.

SECOND LORD How is this justified?^o

FIRST LORD The stronger part of it by her own letters, 55 which makes her story true even to the point of her

IV.iii.17 monumental serving as a memento 18 composi- tion bargain 21 Merely utterly 25 proper own; o'erflows
(1) betrays in talk (2) drowns 30 dietet restricted 32 com- pany anatomized companion (i.e., Parolles) minutely analyzed 33-34 wherein . . . counterfeit in which he has so elaborately set this false jewel 35 him . . . he Parolles . . .
Bertram 48 pretense intention 50 sanctimony holiness
54 justified made certain

38 I . . . scarre possibly "scarre" means "splice" and thus "snare," but the text is probably corrupt 49 proper personal 56 band bond 73 braid deceitful (?) 76 cozen deceive death. Her death itself, which could not be her office to say is come, was faithfully confirmed by the rector° of the place.

SECOND LORD Hath the count all this intelligence?° 60

FIRST LORD Ay, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the verity.

SECOND LORD I am heartily sorry that he'll be glad of this.

FIRST LORD How mightily sometimes we make us 65 comforts of our losses!

SECOND LORD And how mightily some other times we drown our gain in tears! The great dignity that his valor hath here acquired for him shall at home be encount'ed with a shame as ample. 70

FIRST LORD The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together; our virtues would be proud if our faults whipped them not, and our crimes would despair if they were not cherished by our virtues.

Enter a MESSENGER.

How now! Where's your master? 75

SERVANT He met the duke in the street, sir, of whom he hath taken a solemn leave. His lordship will next morning for France. The duke hath offered him letters of commendations to the king.

SECOND LORD They shall be no more than needful 80 there, if they were more than they can commend.°

FIRST LORD They cannot be too sweet for the king's tartness.

Enter BERTRAM.

Here's his lordship now. How now, my lord? Is't not after midnight? 85

BERTRAM I have tonight dispatched sixteen businesses, a month's length apiece. By an abstract of success:° I have congied with° the duke, done my adieu with his nearest, buried a wife, mourned for her, writ to my lady mother I am returning, entertained my con- 90 voy,° and between these main parcels of dispatch° effected many nicer° needs; the last was the greatest, but that I have not ended yet.

SECOND LORD If the business be of any difficulty, and this morning your departure hence, it requires 95 haste of your lordship.

BERTRAM I mean the business is not ended, as fearing to hear of it hereafter. But shall we have this dialogue between the Fool and the Soldier? Come, bring forth this counterfeit module° has deceived me like a double- 100 meaning prophet.

SECOND LORD Bring him forth. [Exeunt SOLDIERS.] Has sat i' th' stocks all night, poor gallant° knave.

BERTRAM No matter, his heels have deserved it, in usurping his spurs so long. How does he carry him- 105 self?

58 rector ruler (?) priest (?) 60 intelligence news 80-81 They shall . . . commend the recommendations to the king will not be more than needed, even if they commend Bertram excessively (?) 87 abstract of success summary of my successes (?) list, in sequence (?) 88 congied with taken leave of 90-91 entertained my convoy hired my transportation 91 parcels of dispatch things to be settled 92 nicer (1) more trivial (2) lascivious (alluding to his affair with Diana) 100 module image 103 gallant finely dressed

SECOND LORD I have told your lordship already; the stocks carry him. But to answer you as you would be understood, he weeps like a wench that had shed her milk. He hath confessed himself to Morgan, whom 110 he supposes to be a friar, from the time of his remembrance to this very instant disaster of his setting i' th' stocks. And what think you he hath confessed?

BERTRAM Nothing of me, has 'a?

SECOND LORD His confession is taken, and it shall be 115 read to his face. If your lordship be in't, as I believe you are, you must have the patience to hear it.

Enter PAROLLES [guarded], with his INTERPRETER.

BERTRAM A plague upon him! Muffled!° He can say nothing of me.

FIRST LORD [Aside to BERTRAM.] Hush, hush! 120 Hoodman comes!° [Aloud.] Portotartarossa.

INTERPRETER He calls for the tortures. What will you say without 'em?

PAROLLES I will confess what I know without constraint. If ye pinch me like a pasty I can say no more. 125

INTERPRETER Bosko chimurcho.

FIRST LORD Boblibindo chicurmurco.

INTERPRETER You are a merciful general. Our general bids you answer to what I shall ask you out of a note. 130

PAROLLES And truly, as I hope to live.

INTERPRETER "First demand of him how many horse the duke is strong." What say you to that?

PAROLLES Five or six thousand, but very weak and unserviceable. The troops are all scattered and the 135 commanders very poor rogues, upon my reputation and credit, and as I hope to live.

INTERPRETER Shall I set down your answer so?

PAROLLES Do. I'll take the sacrament on't, how and which way you will. 140

BERTRAM [Aside.] All's one to him. What a past-saving slave is this!

FIRST LORD [Aside to BERTRAM.] Y' are deceived, my lord; this is Monsieur Parolles, the gallant militarist—that was his own phrase—that had the whole 145 theoric of war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape° of his dagger.

SECOND LORD [Aside.] I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean, nor believe he can have everything in him by wearing his apparel neatly. 150

INTERPRETER Well, that's set down.

PAROLLES "Five or six thousand horse," I said—I will say true—"or thereabouts" set down, for I'll speak truth.

FIRST LORD [Aside.] He's very near the truth in this. 155

BERTRAM [Aside.] But I con° him no thanks for't, in the nature he delivers it.

PAROLLES "Poor rogues," I pray you say.

INTERPRETER Well, that's set down.

PAROLLES I humbly thank you, sir; a truth's a truth; 160 the rogues are marvelous poor.

INTERPRETER "Demand of him of what strength they are a-foot." What say you to that?

118 Muffled blindfolded 121 Hoodman comes the blind man comes (customary call in the game blindman's buff) 147 chape metal plate on a scabbard covering the point 156 con give (literally, "learn")

PAROLLES By my troth, sir, if I were to live this present hour, I will tell true. Let me see: Spurio, a hundred and fifty; Sebastian, so many; Corambus, so many; Jaques, so many; Guiltian, Cosmo, Lodowick, and Gratii, two hundred fifty each; mine own company, Chitopher, Vaumond, Bentii, two hundred fifty each; so that the muster-file, rotten and sound, upon my life, amounts not to fifteen thousand poll,^o half of the which dare not shake the snow from off their cassocks^o lest they shake themselves to pieces.

BERTRAM [Aside.] What shall be done to him?

FIRST LORD [To BERTRAM.] Nothing, but let him have thanks. [To INTERPRETER.] Demand of him my condition, and what credit I have with the duke.

INTERPRETER Well, that's set down. "You shall demand of him whether one Captain Dumaine be i' th' camp, a Frenchman; what his reputation is with the duke, what his valor, honesty, and expertness in wars; or whether he thinks it were not possible with well-weighting sums of gold to corrupt him to a revolt." What say you to this? What do you know of it?

PAROLLES I beseech you, let me answer to the particular of the inter'gatories. Demand them singly.

INTERPRETER Do you know this Captain Dumaine?

PAROLLES I know him; 'a was a botcher's^o prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipped for getting the shrieve's fool^o with child, a dumb innocent that could not say him nay.

BERTRAM [Aside to DUMAINE.] Nay, by your leave, hold your hands, though I know his brains are forfeit to the next tile that falls.^o

INTERPRETER Well, is this captain in the Duke of Florence's camp?

PAROLLES Upon my knowledge he is, and lousy.

FIRST LORD [Aside.] Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear of your lordship anon.

INTERPRETER What is his reputation with the duke?

PAROLLES The duke knows him for no other but a poor officer of mine, and writ to me this other day to turn him out o' th' band. I think I have his letter in my pocket.

INTERPRETER Marry, we'll search.

PAROLLES In good sadness,^o I do not know; either it is there or it is upon a file with the duke's other letters in my tent.

INTERPRETER Here 'tis; here's a paper; shall I read it to you?

PAROLLES I do not know if it be it or no.

BERTRAM [Aside.] Our interpreter does it well.

FIRST LORD [Aside.] Excellently.

INTERPRETER "Dian, the count's a fool, and full of gold."

PAROLLES That is not the duke's letter, sir; that is an advertisement^o to a proper maid in Florence, one Diana, to take heed of the allurements of one Count Rousillon, a foolish idle boy, but for all that very ruttish.^o I pray you, sir, put it up again.

INTERPRETER Nay, I'll read it first, by your favor.

PAROLLES My meaning in't, I protest, was very honest in the behalf of the maid; for I knew the young count to be a dangerous and lascivious boy, who is a whale to virginity, and devours up all the fry^o it finds.

BERTRAM [Aside.] Damnable both-sides rogue!

INTERPRETER [Reads a letter.]

"When he swears oaths, bid him drop gold, and take it;

After he scores, he never pays the score.

Half won is match well made; match and well make it;^o

He ne'er pays after-debts, take it before.

And say a soldier, Dian, told thee this:

Men are to mell^o with, boys are not to kiss:

For count of this, the count's a fool, I know it,

Who pays before, but not when he does owe it.

Thine, as he vowed to thee in thine ear,

Parolles."

BERTRAM [Aside.] He shall be whipped through the army with this rhyme in's forehead.

SECOND LORD [Aside.] This is your devoted friend, sir, the manifold linguist, and the armipotent^o soldier.

BERTRAM [Aside.] I could endure anything before but a cat, and now he's a cat to me.

INTERPRETER I perceive, sir, by your general's looks, we shall be fain to hang you.

PAROLLES My life, sir, in any case! Not that I am afraid to die, but that my offenses being many I would repent out the remainder of nature. Let me live, sir, in a dungeon, i' th' stocks, or anywhere, so I may live.

INTERPRETER We'll see what may be done, so you confess freely. Therefore once more to this Captain Dumaine: you have answered to his reputation with the Duke and to his valor: what is his honesty?

PAROLLES He will steal, sir, an egg out of a cloister; for rapes and ravishments he parallels Nessus.^o He professes not keeping of oaths, in breaking 'em he is stronger than Hercules. He will lie, sir, with such volubility that you would think truth were a fool; drunkenness is his best virtue, for he will be swine-drunk, and in his sleep he does little harm, save to his bedclothes about him; but they know his conditions^o and lay him in straw. I have but little more to say, sir, of his honesty—he has everything that an honest man should not have; what an honest man should have, he has nothing.

FIRST LORD [Aside.] I begin to love him for this.

BERTRAM [Aside.] For this description of thine honesty? A pox upon him for me, he's more and more a cat.

INTERPRETER What say you to his expertness in war?

PAROLLES Faith, sir, has led the drum before the English tragedians^o—to belie him I will not—and more of his soldiership I know not, except in that country he had the honor to be the officer at a place

226 fry small fish 230 Half . . . it you are halfway to success if you bargain well; so bargain well, and you will prosper (?) 233 mell mingle 241 armipotent mighty in arms (a huffing word, like "manifold") 255 Nessus centaur who attempted to rape Deianira, Hercules' wife 261 conditions traits 271-72 led . . . tragedians i.e., been a low drummer, leading strolling actors rather than soldiers

171 poll head 172 cassocks soldiers' cloaks 189 botcher's mender's (e.g., tailor's or cobbler's) 191 shrieve's fool idiot girl placed under a sheriff's charge 195 tile that falls i.e., accident 207 sadness seriousness 218 advertisement advice 221 ruttish lustful

there called Mile-end,^o to instruct for the doubling of 275 files.^o I would do the man what honor I can, but of this I am not certain.

FIRST LORD [Aside.] He hath out-villained villainy
so far that the rarity redeems him.

BERTRAM [Aside.] A pox on him! He's a cat still. 280

INTERPRETER His qualities being at this poor price, I need not to ask you if gold will corrupt him to revolt.

PAROLLES Sir, for a cardecue^o he will sell the fee-simple^o of his salvation, the inheritance of it, and cut th' entail^o from all remainders, and a perpetual suc- 285 cession for it perpetually.

INTERPRETER What's his brother, the other Captain Dumaine?

SECOND LORD [Aside.] Why does he ask him of me?

INTERPRETER What's he? 290

PAROLLES E'en a crow o' th' same nest; not altogether so great as the first in goodness, but greater a great deal in evil. He excels his brother for a coward, yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is. In a retreat he outruns any lackey; marry, in coming on he 295 has a cramp.

INTERPRETER If your life be saved will you undertake to betray the Florentine?

PAROLLES Ay, and the captain of his horse, Count
Rousillon. 300

INTERPRETER I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure.

PAROLLES [Aside.] I'll no more drumming. A plague of all drums! Only to seem to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy, 305 the count, have I run into this danger. Yet who would have suspected an ambush where I was taken?

INTERPRETER There is no remedy, sir, but you must die. The general says you that have so traitorously discovered the secrets of your army and made such 310 pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serve the world for no honest use; therefore you must die.
Come, headsman, off with his head.

PAROLLES O Lord, sir, let me live, or let me see my death! 315

INTERPRETER
That shall you, and take your leave of all your friends.

[Unmuffles PAROLLES.]

So, look about you. Know you any here?

BERTRAM Good morrow, noble captain.

SECOND LORD God bless you, Captain Parolles.

FIRST LORD God save you, noble captain. 320

SECOND LORD Captain, what greeting will you to my Lord Lafew? I am for France.

FIRST LORD Good captain, will you give me a copy of the sonnet you writ to Diana in behalf of the Count Rousillon? And I were not a very coward I'd 325 compel it of you, but fare you well.

Exeunt [BERTRAM and LORDS].

INTERPRETER You are undone, captain, all but your scarf; that has a knot on't yet.

PAROLLES Who cannot be crushed with a plot?

INTERPRETER If you could find out a country where 330
but women were that had received so much shame, you might begin an impudent nation. Fare ye well, sir. I am for France too; we shall speak of you there.

Exit, [with other SOLDIERS].

PAROLLES

Yet am I thankful. If my heart were great
'Twould burst at this. Captain I'll be no more, 335
But I will eat and drink and sleep as soft
As captain shall. Simply the thing I am
Shall make me live. Who knows himself a braggart,
Let him fear this; for it will come to pass
That every braggart shall be found an ass. 340
Rust, sword; cool, blushes; and Parolles live
Safest in shame! Being fooled, by fool'ry thrive!
There's place and means for every man alive.
I'll after them. Exit.

[Scene IV. Florence. The Widow's house.]

Enter HELENA, WIDOW, and DIANA.

HELENA

That you may well perceive I have not wronged you,
One of the greatest in the Christian world
Shall be my surety; 'fore whose throne 'tis needful,
Ere I can perfect mine intents, to kneel. 5
Time was, I did him a desired office,
Dear almost as his life, which gratitude
Through flinty Tartar's bosom would peep forth,
And answer thanks. I duly am informed
His grace is at Marseilles, to which place
We have convenient convoy.^o You must know 10
I am supposed dead. The army breaking,^o
My husband hies him home, where, heaven aiding,
And by the leave of my good lord the king,
We'll be before our welcome.

WIDOW

Gentle madam,
You never had a servant to whose trust 15
Your business was more welcome.

HELENA

Nor you, mistress,
Ever a friend whose thoughts more truly labor
To recompense your love. Doubt not but heaven
Hath brought me up to be your daughter's dower,
As it hath fated her to be my motive^o 20
And helper to a husband. But, O strange men,
That can such sweet use make of what they hate,
When saucy^o trusting of the cozened^o thoughts
Defiles the pitchy night! So lust doth play
With what it loathes for that which is away. 25
But more of this hereafter. You, Diana,
Under my poor instructions yet must suffer
Something in my behalf.

DIANA

Let death and honesty^o
Go with your impositions,^o I am yours
Upon your will to suffer.

HELENA

Yet, I pray you; 30
But with the word^o the time will bring on summer,

275 Mile-end because the citizen militia drilled at Mile-end, the place was a byname for military incompetence 275-76 doubling of files drill maneuver in which pairs of men separate 283 cardecue quart d'écu (French coin of little value) 283-84 fee-simple absolute possession 285 entail right of succession

IV.iv.10 convoy transportation II breaking disbanding 20 motive means (?) 23 saucy lascivious; cozened deceived 28 death and honesty an honest death 29 impositions tasks imposed on me 31 with the word soon (?) as the proverb says (?)

When briars shall have leaves as well as thorns,
And be as sweet as sharp. We must away;
Our wagon is prepared, and time revives us.
All's well that ends well; still the fine's the crown.^o 35
Whate'er the course, the end is the renown. Exeunt.

[Scene V. Rousillon. The count's palace.]

Enter CLOWN, old lady [the COUNTESS], and LAFEW.

LAFEW No, no, no, your son was misled with a snipped taffeta^o fellow there, whose villainous saffron^o would have made all the unbaked and doughy youth of a nation in his color. Your daughter-in-law had been alive at this hour, and your son here at home, 5 more advanced by the king than by that red-tailed humble-bee I speak of.

COUNTESS I would I had not known him; it was the death of the most virtuous gentlewoman that ever nature had praise for creating. If she had partaken of 10 my flesh and cost me the dearest groans of a mother,
I could not have owed her a more rooted love.

LAFEW 'Twas a good lady, 'twas a good lady. We may pick a thousand sallets^o ere we light on such another herb. 15

CLOWN Indeed, sir, she was the sweet-marjoram of the sallet, or rather, the herb of grace.^o

LAFEW They are not^o herbs, you knave, they are nose-herbs.

CLOWN I am no great Nebuchadnezzar, sir; I have 20 not much skill in grace.^o

LAFEW Whether^o dost thou profess thyself, a knave or a fool?

CLOWN A fool, sir, at a woman's service, and a knave at a man's. 25

LAFEW Your distinction?

CLOWN I would cozen the man of his wife and do his service.

LAFEW So you were a knave at his service indeed.

CLOWN And I would give his wife my bauble,^o sir, 30 to do her service.

LAFEW I will subscribe for thee; thou art both knave and fool.

CLOWN At your service.

LAFEW No, no, no. 35

CLOWN Why, sir, if I cannot serve you, I can serve as great a prince as you are.

LAFEW Who's that? A Frenchman?

CLOWN Faith, sir, 'a has an English name, but his fisnomy^o is more hotter in France than there. 40

LAFEW What prince is that?

CLOWN The Black Prince,^o sir, alias the prince of darkness, alias the devil.

35 the fine's the crown the end is the crown (cf. the Latin proverb, Finis coronat opus, "The end crowns the work")

IV.v.2 snipped taffeta cloth slashed to show the colors beneath; saffron yellow dye (used to dye starch—for ruffs—and also dough) 14 sallets salads 17 herb of grace rue 18 not pun on knot = flower bed, leading to the contrasting "nose-herbs" = fragrant but not tasty herbs 21 grace pun on grass, following the allusion to the King of Babylon who in Daniel 4:28-37 is said to have insanely eaten grass 22
Whether which 30 bauble fool's stick (bawdy innuendo) 40 fisnomy physiognomy 42 Black Prince (1) son of Edward III, foe of the French (2) devil

LAFEW Hold thee, there's my purse. I give thee not this to suggest thee from^o thy master thou talk'st of; 45 serve him still.

CLOWN I am a woodland fellow, sir, that always loved a great fire, and the master I speak of ever keeps a good fire. But sure he is the prince of the world; let his nobility remain in's court. I am for the house with 50 the narrow gate,^o which I take to be too little for pomp to enter; some that humble themselves may, but the many will be too chill and tender, and they'll be for the flow'ry way that leads to the broad gate and the great fire. 55

LAFEW Go thy ways; I begin to be weary of thee, and I tell thee so before, because I would not fall out with thee. Go thy ways; let my horses be well looked to, without any tricks.

CLOWN If I put any tricks upon 'em, sir, they shall 60 be jades' tricks,^o which are their own right by the law of nature. Exit.

LAFEW A shrewd^o knave and an unhappy.

COUNTESS So 'a is. My lord that's gone made himself much sport out of him; by his authority he remains 65 here, which he thinks is a patent for his sauciness; and indeed he has no pace, but runs where he will.

LAFEW I like him well, 'tis not amiss. And I was about to tell you, since I heard of the good lady's death and that my lord your son was upon his return home, I 70 moved the king my master to speak in the behalf of my daughter; which, in the minority of them both, his majesty out of a self-gracious remembrance did first propose. His highness hath promised me to do it—and to stop up the displeasure he hath conceived against 75 your son there is no fitter matter. How does your lady-ship like it?

COUNTESS With very much content, my lord, and I wish it happily effected.

LAFEW His highness comes post^o from Marseilles, of 80 as able body as when he numbered thirty. 'A will be here tomorrow, or I am deceived by him that in such intelligence hath seldom failed.

COUNTESS It rejoices me that I hope I shall see him ere I die. I have letters that my son will be here tonight. 85
I shall beseech your lordship to remain with me till they meet together.

LAFEW Madam, I was thinking with what manners I might safely be admitted.

COUNTESS You need but plead your honorable privi- 90
lege.

LAFEW Lady, of that I have made a bold charter;^o but I thank my God it holds yet.

Enter CLOWN.

CLOWN O madam, yonder's my lord your son with a patch of velvet on's face; whether there be a scar 95 under't or not, the velvet knows, but 'tis a goodly patch of velvet.^o His left cheek is a cheek of two pile and a half, but his right cheek is worn bare.

45 suggest thee from tempt you away from 50-51 house
. . . gate heaven (with bawdy reference to vulva?) 61 jades' tricks mischievous doings (like those of undesirable horses) 63 shrewd bitter 80 post by rapid relays of horses 92 charter claim 97 patch of velvet bandage (but it might cover an honorable scar or dishonorable signs of syphilis)

LAFEW A scar nobly got, or a noble scar, is a good liv'ry° of honor; so belike is that. 100
CLOWN But it is your carbonadoed° face.
LAFEW Let us go see your son, I pray you. I long to talk with the young noble soldier.
CLOWN Faith, there's a dozen of 'em with delicate fine hats and most courteous feathers which bow the 105 head and nod at every man. Exeunt.

ACT V

[Scene I. Marseilles.]

Enter HELENA, WIDOW, and DIANA, with two ATTENDANTS.

HELENA

But this exceeding posting° day and night
Must wear your spirits low; we cannot help it.
But since you have made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold° you do so grow in my requital° 5
As nothing can unroot you.

Enter a GENTLEMAN, a stranger.

In happy time!°

This man may help me to his majesty's ear,
If he would spend his power. God save you, sir.

GENTLEMAN And you.

HELENA

Sir, I have seen you in the court of France. 10

GENTLEMAN

I have been sometimes there.

HELENA

I do presume, sir, that you are not fall'n
From the report that goes upon your goodness,
And therefore, goaded with most sharp occasions
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to
The use of your own virtues, for the which 15
I shall continue thankful.

GENTLEMAN

What's your will?

HELENA

That it will please you
To give this poor petition to the king,
And aid me with that store of power you have 20
To come into his presence.

GENTLEMAN

The king's not here.

HELENA

Not here, sir?

GENTLEMAN

Not indeed.

He hence removed last night, and with more haste
Than is his use.

WIDOW

Lord, how we lose our pains!

HELENA

All's well that ends well yet, 25
Though time seem so adverse and means unfit.
I do beseech you, whither is he gone?

GENTLEMAN

Marry, as I take it, to Rousillon, Whither I am going.

HELENA

I do beseech you, sir,
Since you are like to see the king before me, 30
Commend the paper to his gracious hand,
Which I presume shall render you no blame
But rather make you thank your pains for it.
I will come after you with what good speed
Our means will make us means.

GENTLEMAN

This I'll do for you. 35

HELENA

And you shall find yourself to be well thanked,
Whate'er falls° more. We must to horse again.
Go, go, provide. [Exeunt.]

[Scene II. Rousillon. The count's palace.]

Enter CLOWN and PAROLLES.

PAROLLES Good Master Lavatch,° give my Lord Lafew this letter. I have ere now, sir, been better known to you, when I have held familiarity with fresher clothes; but I am now, sir, muddled in Fortune's mood,° 5 and smell somewhat strong of her strong displeasure. 5

CLOWN Truly, Fortune's displeasure is but sluttish if it smell so strongly as thou speak'st of. I will henceforth eat no fish of Fortune's butt'ring. Prithee, allow the wind.°

PAROLLES Nay, you need not to stop your nose, sir; 10
I spake but by a metaphor.

CLOWN Indeed, sir, if your metaphor stink, I will stop my nose, or against any man's metaphor. Prithee, get thee further.

PAROLLES Pray you, sir, deliver me this paper. 15

CLOWN Foh! Prithee, stand away. A paper from Fortune's close-stool,° to give to a nobleman! Look, here he comes himself.

Enter LAFEW.

Here is a pur° of Fortune's, sir, or of Fortune's cat, but not a musk-cat,° that has fall'n into the unclean 20 fishpond of her displeasure, and, as he says, is muddled withal. Pray you, sir, use the carp as you may, for he looks like a poor, decayed, ingenious,° foolish, rascally knave. I do pity his distress in my similes of comfort, and leave him to your lordship. [Exit.] 25

PAROLLES My lord, I am a man whom Fortune hath cruelly scratched.

LAFEW And what would you have me to do? 'Tis too late to pare her nails now. Wherein have you played the knave with Fortune that she should scratch you, 30 who of herself is a good lady and would not have knaves thrive long under? There's a cardcue° for you.

37 falls befalls

V.ii.1 Lavatch apparently from French la vache = the cow, or lavage = slop 4 mood displeasure (with pun on mud) 8-9 allow the wind let me have the windward side 17 close-stool toilet 19 pur (1) dung (2) cat's sound (3) knave in a card game (Lafew picks up this last meaning when he speaks) 20 musk-cat musk deer (which yields perfume) 23 ingenious stupid (as though written "un-genius") 32
cardcue French coin

100 liv'ry badge of noble service 101 carbonadoed slashed
(with incisions to drain venereal ulcers)

V.i.1 exceeding posting excessive haste 5 bold assured;
requital debt 6 In happy time just at the right moment

Let the justices make you and Fortune friends;° I am for other business.

PAROLLES I beseech your honor to hear me one single word. 35

LAFEW You beg a single penny more. Come, you shall ha't; save your word.

PAROLLES My name, my good lord, is Parolles.

LAFEW You beg more than "word" then. Cox my passion!° Give me your hand. How does your drum? 40

PAROLLES O my good lord, you were the first that found me.°

LAFEW Was I, in sooth? And I was the first that lost thee. 45

PAROLLES It lies in you, my lord, to bring me in some grace, for you did bring me out.

LAFEW Out upon thee, knave! Dost thou put upon me at once both the office of God and the devil? One brings thee in grace and the other brings thee out. 50 [Trumpets sound.] The king's coming; I know by his trumpets. Sirrah, inquire further after me. I had talk of you last night; though you are a fool and a knave you shall eat. Go to, follow.

PAROLLES I praise God for you. [Exeunt.] 55

[Scene III. Rousillon. The count's palace.]

Flourish. Enter KING, old lady [the COUNTESS], LAFEW, the two French LORDS, with ATTENDANTS.

KING

We lost a jewel of her, and our esteem°
Was made much poorer by it; but your son,
As mad in folly, lacked the sense to know
Her estimation home.°

COUNTESS

'Tis past, my liege,
And I beseech your majesty to make it 5
Natural rebellion done i' th' blade° of youth,
When oil and fire, too strong for reason's force,
O'erbears it and burns on.

KING

My honored lady,
I have forgiven and forgotten all,
Though my revenges were high bent upon him 10
And watched the time to shoot.

LAFEW

This I must say—
But first I beg my pardon—the young lord
Did to his majesty, his mother, and his lady
Offense of mighty note, but to himself 15
The greatest wrong of all. He lost a wife
Whose beauty did astonish the survey
Of richest eyes; whose words all ears took captive;
Whose dear perfection hearts that scorned to serve
Humbly called mistress.

KING

Praising what is lost
Makes the remembrance dear. Well, call him hither; 20
We are reconciled, and the first view shall kill
All repetition.° Let him not ask our pardon;

The nature of his great offense is dead,
And deeper than oblivion we do bury
Th' incensing relics° of it. Let him approach, 25
A stranger, no offender; and inform him
So 'tis our will he should.

GENTLEMAN

I shall, my liege. [Exit.]

KING

What says he to your daughter? Have you spoke?

LAFEW

All that he is hath reference° to your highness.

KING

Then shall we have a match. I have letters sent me, 30
That sets him high in fame.

Enter BERTRAM.

LAFEW

He looks well on't.

KING

I am not a day of season,
For thou mayst see a sunshine and a hail
In me at once. But to the brightest beams
Distracted clouds give way; so stand thou forth; 35
The time is fair again.

BERTRAM

My high-repented blames,°
Dear sovereign pardon to me.

KING

All is whole.
Not one word more of the consumed time.
Let's take the instant by the forward top;°
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees 40
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of Time
Steals ere we can effect them. You remember
The daughter of this lord?

BERTRAM

Admiringly, my liege. At first
I stuck my choice upon her, ere my heart 45
Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue;
Where, the impression of mine eye infixing,
Contempt his scornful perspective° did lend me,
Which warped the line of every other favor,°
Scorned a fair color or expressed it stol'n, 50
Extended or contracted all proportions
To a most hideous object. Thence it came
That she whom all men praised and whom myself,
Since I have lost, have loved, was in mine eye
The dust that did offend it.

KING

Well excused. 55
That thou didst love her, strikes some scores away
From the great compt;° but love that comes too late,
Like a remorseful° pardon slowly carried,
To the great sender turns a sour offense,
Crying, "That's good that's gone." Our rash faults 60
Make trivial price of serious things we have,
Not knowing them, until we know their grave.
Oft our displeasures, to ourselves unjust,
Destroy our friends and after weep their dust;
Our own love waking cries to see what's done, 65
While shameful hate sleeps out the afternoon.
Be this sweet Helen's knell, and now forget her.
Send forth your amorous token for fair Maudlin.

33 Let . . . friends i.e., appeal to the justices for alms 40-41 Cox my passion mild oath, from "God's my passion," i.e., by God's suffering 43 found me found me out V.iii.1 esteem value, i.e., reputation 4 home fully 6 blade green shoot (editors distressed by the mixed metaphor produced by "fire" emend to "blaze") 22 repetition i.e., mention of what is past

25 incensing relics reminders that (would) anger 29 hath reference is submitted 36 blames blameworthy deeds 39 take . . . top seize Time by the forelock 48 perspective optical instrument that distorts (accented on first syllable) 49 favor face 57 compt account 58 remorseful compassionate

The main consents are had, and here we'll stay
To see our widower's second marriage-day,
Which better than the first, O dear heaven, bless!
Or, ere they meet, in me, O nature, cesse!°

LAFEW

Come on, my son, in whom my house's name
Must be digested;° give a favor° from you
To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter,
That she may quickly come. [BERTRAM gives a ring.]

By my old beard,
And ev'ry hair that's on't, Helen that's dead
Was a sweet creature; such a ring as this,
The last that e'er I took her leave at court,
I saw upon her finger.

BERTRAM

Hers it was not.

KING

Now pray you let me see it; for mine eye,
While I was speaking, oft was fastened to't.
This ring was mine, and when I gave it Helen
I bade her, if her fortunes ever stood Necessitied to help, that by this token
I would relieve her. Had you that craft to reave° her

Of what should stead° her most?

BERTRAM

My gracious sovereign,

Howe'er it pleases you to take it so,
The ring was never hers.

COUNTESS

Son, on my life,

I have seen her wear it, and she reckoned it
At her life's rate.

LAFEW

I am sure I saw her wear it.

BERTRAM

You are deceived, my lord; she never saw it.
In Florence was it from a casement thrown me,
Wrapped in a paper which contained the name
Of her that threw it. Noble she was, and thought
I stood engaged;° but when I had subscribed
To mine own fortune° and informed her fully
I could not answer in that course of honor
As she had made the overture, she ceased
In heavy satisfaction° and would never Receive the ring again.

KING

Plutus° himself,

That knows the tinct and multiplying med'cine,°
Hath not in nature's mystery more science°
Than I have in this ring. 'Twas mine, 'twas Helen's,
Whoever gave it you; then if you know
That you are well acquainted with yourself,
Confess 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. She called the saints to surety
That she would never put it from her finger
Unless she gave it to yourself in bed,
Where you have never come, or sent it us
Upon her great disaster.

BERTRAM

She never saw it.

72 cesse cease 74 digested swallowed up (?) assimilated (?); favor token 86 reave deprive 87 stead help 96 engaged not pledged (to another woman) 96-97 subscribed . . . fortune admitted my condition, i.e., that I was married 100 heavy satisfaction sorrowful acceptance 101 Plutus god of wealth 102 tinct . . . med'cine elixir that transmutes base metals to gold and multiplies gold 103 science knowledge

KING

Thou speak'st it falsely, as I love mine honor,
And mak'st conjectural fears to come into me
Which I would fain shut out. If it should prove That thou art so inhuman—'twill not prove so,
And yet I know not—thou didst hate her deadly,
And she is dead, which nothing but to close
Her eyes myself could win me to believe,
More than to see this ring. Take him away.
My fore-past proofs, howe'er the matter fall,
Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
Having vainly feared too little.° Away with him,
We'll sift this matter further.

BERTRAM

If you shall prove

This ring was ever hers, you shall as easy
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was. [Exit guarded.]

KING

I am wrapped in dismal thinkings.

Enter a GENTLEMAN [the stranger].

GENTLEMAN

Gracious sovereign,

Whether I have been to blame or no, I know not:
Here's a petition from a Florentine
Who hath for four or five removes° come short
To tender it herself. I undertook it,
Vanquished thereto by the fair grace and speech
Of the poor suppliant, who, by this, I know
Is here attending; her business looks in her
With an importing° visage, and she told me,
In a sweet verbal brief, it did concern
Your highness with herself.

[KING reads] a letter. "Upon his many protestations to marry me when his wife was dead, I blush to say it, he won me. Now is the Count Rousillon a widower, his vows are forfeited to me, and my honor's paid to him.
He stole from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his country for justice. Grant it me, O king!
In you it best lies; otherwise a seducer flourishes and a poor maid is undone.

Diana Capilet."

LAFEW I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll for° this. I'll none of him.

KING

The heavens have thought well on thee, Lafew,
To bring forth this discov'ry. Seek these suitors.

[Exeunt ATTENDANTS.]

Go, speedily and bring again the count.
I am afeard the life of Helen, lady,
Was foully snatched.

COUNTESS

Now, justice on the doers!

Enter BERTRAM, [guarded].

KING

I wonder, sir, since wives are monsters to you,
And that you fly them as you swear them lordship,

121-23 My fore-past . . . too little the evidence already established, however the affair turns out, will rebuke ("tax") my lightweight ("of little vanity") fears; I have unreasonably feared too little 131 removes stopping places (changes of residence) on the king's journey 136 importing significant 148-49 toll for put up for sale

Yet you desire to marry.

Enter WIDOW [and] DIANA.

What woman's that?

DIANA

I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine,
Derivèd from the ancient Capilet.
My suit, as I do understand, you know,
And therefore know how far I may be pitied.

WIDOW

I am her mother, sir, whose age and honor
Both suffer under this complaint we bring,
And both shall cease, without your remedy.^o

KING

Come hither, count—do you know these women?

BERTRAM

My lord, I neither can nor will deny
But that I know them. Do they charge me further?

DIANA

Why do you look so strange upon your wife?

BERTRAM

She's none of mine, my lord.

DIANA

If you shall marry,
You give away this hand, and that is mine;
You give away heaven's vows, and those are mine;
You give away myself, which is known mine;
For I by vow am so embodied yours
That she which marries you must marry me,
Either both or none.

LAFEW Your reputation comes too short for my daughter; you are no husband for her.

BERTRAM

My lord, this is a fond^o and desp'rate creature, Whom sometime I have laughed with. Let your highness

Lay a more noble thought upon mine honor,
Than for to think that I would sink it here.

KING

Sir, for my thoughts, you have them ill to friend
Till your deeds gain them; fairer prove your honor
Than in my thought it lies.

DIANA

Good my lord,
Ask him upon his oath if he does think
He had not my virginity.

KING

What say'st thou to her?

BERTRAM

She's impudent, my lord,
And was a common gamester^o to the camp.

DIANA

He does me wrong, my lord; if I were so,
He might have bought me at a common price.
Do not believe him. O, behold this ring,
Whose high respect and rich validity
Did lack a parallel; yet for all that
He gave it to a commoner o' th' camp,
If I be one.

COUNTESS He blushes, and 'tis hit!

Of six preceding ancestors, that gem,
Conferred by testament to th' sequent issue,^o

Hath it been owed^o and worn. This is his wife,
That ring's a thousand proofs.

KING

Methought you said

You saw one here in court could witness it.

200

DIANA

I did, my lord, but loath am to produce
So bad an instrument. His name's Parolles.

160 LAFEW

I saw the man today, if man he be.

KING

Find him and bring him hither.

[Exit an ATTENDANT.]

BERTRAM

What of him?

He's quoted for^o a most perfidious slave,
With all the spots o' th' world taxed and deboshed,^o
Whose nature sickens but to speak a truth.
Am I or that or this for what he'll utter,
That will speak anything?

205

KING

She hath that ring of yours.

BERTRAM

I think she has. Certain it is I liked her,
And boarded her i' th' wanton way of youth.
She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint,
As all impediments in fancy's^o course
Are motives of more fancy; and in fine
Her inf'nite cunning with her modern^o grace
Subdued me to her rate. She got the ring,
And I had that which any inferior might
At market-price have bought.

210

DIANA

I must be patient:

You that have turned off a first so noble wife,
May justly diet^o me. I pray you yet—
Since you lack virtue I will lose a husband—
Send for your ring, I will return it home,
And give me mine again.

220

BERTRAM

I have it not.

KING

What ring was yours, I pray you?

DIANA

Sir, much like

225

The same upon your finger.

KING

Know you this ring? This ring was his of late.

DIANA

And this was it I gave him, being abed.

KING

The story then goes false you threw it him
Out of a casement?

DIANA

I have spoke the truth.

230

Enter PAROLLES.

BERTRAM

My lord, I do confess, the ring was hers.

KING

You boggle shrewdly;^o every feather starts you.
Is this the man you speak of?

195 DIANA

Ay, my lord.

KING

Tell me, sirrah, but tell me true, I charge you,

164 both . . . remedy both my life ("age") and honor will die unless you give us relief (by having Bertram marry Diana)
178 fond foolish 188 gamester prostitute 197 sequent issue next heir

198 owed owned 205 quoted for known as 206 taxed and deboshed censured as debauched 214 fancy's love's 216 modern commonplace 221 diet restrain yourself from 232 boggle shrewdly startle excessively

Not fearing the displeasure of your master,
Which on your just proceeding I'll keep off—
By him and by this woman here what know you?
PAROLLES So please your majesty, my master hath been an honorable gentleman. Tricks he hath had in him, which gentlemen have. 240
KING Come, come, to th' purpose: did he love this woman?
PAROLLES Faith, sir, he did love her; but how?
KING How, I pray you?
PAROLLES He did love her, sir, as a gentleman loves 245
a woman.
KING How is that?
PAROLLES He loved her, sir, and loved her not.
KING As thou art a knave and no knave. What an equivocal companion^o is this! 250
PAROLLES I am a poor man, and at your majesty's command.
LAFEW He's a good drum, my lord, but a naughty^o orator.
DIANA Do you know he promised me marriage? 255
PAROLLES Faith, I know more than I'll speak.
KING But wilt thou not speak all thou know'st?
PAROLLES Yes, so please your majesty. I did go between them as I said; but more than that, he loved her, for indeed he was mad for her and talked of Satan and 260 of Limbo and of Furies and I know not what; yet I was in that credit with them at that time that I knew of their going to bed and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and things which would derive me ill will to speak of; therefore I will not speak what I 265 know.
KING Thou hast spoken all already, unless thou canst say they are married. But thou art too fine^o in thy evidence; therefore stand aside.
This ring, you say, was yours?
DIANA Ay, my good lord. 270
KING
Where did you buy it? Or who gave it you?
DIANA
It was not given me, nor I did not buy it.
KING
Who lent it you?
DIANA It was not lent me neither.
KING
Where did you find it then?
DIANA I found it not.
KING
If it were yours by none of all these ways, 275
How could you give it him?
DIANA I never gave it him.
LAFEW This woman's an easy glove, my lord; she goes off and on at pleasure.
KING
This ring was mine; I gave it his first wife.
DIANA
It might be yours or hers for aught I know. 280

246 woman in contrast to a highborn lady 248 not perhaps punning on knot = maidenhead 250 equivocal companion equivocating fellow ("companion" is contemptuous) 253 naughty (1) worthless, worth naught (2) wicked 268 fine subtle

235 KING
Take her away; I do not like her now.
To prison with her. And away with him.
Unless thou tell'st me where thou hadst this ring
Thou diest within this hour.
DIANA I'll never tell you.
KING
Take her away.
DIANA I'll put in bail, my liege. 285
KING
I think thee now some common customer.
DIANA
By Jove, if ever I knew man, 'twas you.
KING
Wherefore hast thou accused him all this while?
DIANA
Because he's guilty and he is not guilty:
He knows I am no maid, and he'll swear to't: 290
I'll swear I am a maid and he knows not.
Great King, I am no strumpet; by my life
I am either maid or else this old man's wife.
KING
She does abuse our ears. To prison with her!
DIANA
Good mother, fetch my bail. [Exit WIDOW.] Stay, royal sir, 295
The jeweler that owes the ring is sent for
And he shall surety me. But for this lord
Who hath abused me as he knows himself,
Though yet he never harmed me, here I quit^o him.
He knows himself my bed he hath defiled, 300
And at that time he got his wife with child.
Dead though she be, she feels her young one kick.
So there's my riddle: one that's dead is quick.
And now behold the meaning.
Enter HELENA and WIDOW.
KING Is there no exorcist^o
Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes? 305
Is't real that I see?
HELENA No, my good lord,
'Tis but the shadow of a wife you see,
The name and not the thing.
BERTRAM Both, both. O, pardon!
HELENA
O, my good lord, when I was like^o this maid,
I found you wondrous kind. There is your ring, 310
And, look you, here's your letter. This it says:
"When from my finger you can get this ring,
And are by me with child," &c. This is done.
Will you be mine, now you are doubly won?
BERTRAM
If she, my liege, can make me know this clearly, 315
I'll love her dearly, ever, ever dearly.
HELENA
If it appear not plain and prove untrue,
Deadly divorce step between me and you!
O, my dear mother, do I see you living?
LAFEW
Mine eyes smell onions, I shall weep anon. 320
286 customer prostitute 299 quit acquit 303 quick (1) alive
(2) pregnant 304 exorcist summoner of spirits 309 like i.e.. substitute for

[To PAROLLES.]

Good Tom Drum, lend me a handkercher. So, I thank thee. Wait on me home, I'll make sport with thee. Let thy curtsies alone, they are scurvy ones.

KING

Let us from point to point this story know,
To make the even truth in pleasure flow.

325

[To DIANA.]

If thou be'st yet a fresh uncroppèd flower,
Choose thou thy husband, and I'll pay thy dower,
For I can guess that by thy honest aid
Thou kept'st a wife herself, thyself a maid.
Of that and all the progress more and less
Resolvedly° more leisure shall express.

330

331 Resolvedly so that doubt is removed

All yet seems well, and if it end so meet,
The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet.
Flourish.

[E P I L O G U E]

The king's a beggar° now the play is done.
All is well ended if this suit be won,
That you express content; which we will pay
With strife° to please you, day exceeding day.
Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts,° 5
Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts.

Exeunt omnes.

Epi.1 beggar i.e., for applause 4 strife striving 5 Ours
. . . parts we will silently listen, as you have done, and you are now the performers

THE TRAGEDY OF OTHELLO

THE MOOR OF VENICE

EDITED BY ALVIN KERNAN

Introduction

When Shakespeare wrote Othello, about 1604, his ability to present human nature in all its complexity was at its height. The play offers, even in its minor characters, a number of unusually full and profound studies of humanity: Brabantio, the sophisticated, civilized Venetian senator, unable to comprehend that his delicate daughter could love and marry a Moor, speaking excitedly of black magic and spells to account for what his mind cannot understand; Cassio, the gentleman-soldier, polished in manners and gracious in bearing, wildly drunk and revealing a deeply rooted pride in his ramblings about senior officers being saved before their juniors; Emilia, the sensible waiting woman, making small talk about love and suddenly remarking that though she believes adultery to be wrong, still if the price were high enough she would sell—and so, she believes, would most women. The vision of human nature that the play offers is one of ancient terrors and primal drives—fear of the unknown, pride, greed, lust—underlying smooth, civilized surfaces—the noble senator, the competent and well-mannered lieutenant, the conventional gentlewoman.

The contrast between surface manner and inner nature is even more pronounced in two of the major characters. “Honest Iago” conceals beneath his exterior of the plain soldier and blunt, practical man of the world a diabolism so intense as to defy rational explanation—it must be taken like lust or pride as simply a given part of human nature, an anti-life spirit that seeks the destruction of everything outside the self. Othello appears in the opening acts as the very personification of self-control, of the man with so secure a sense of his own worth that nothing can ruffle the consequent calmness of mind and manner. But the man who has roamed the wild and savage world unmoved by its terrors, who has not changed countenance when the cannon killed his brother standing beside him, this man is still capable of believing his wife a whore on the slightest of evidence and committing murders to revenge himself. In Desdemona alone do the heart and the hand go together: she is what she seems to be. Ironically, she alone is accused of pretending to be what she is not. Her very openness and honesty make her suspect in a world where few men are what they appear, and her chastity is inevitably brought into question in a world where every other major character is in some degree touched with sexual corruption.

Most criticism of Othello has concerned itself with exploring the depths of these characters and tracing the intricate, mysterious operations of their minds. I should like, however, to discuss, briefly, what might be called the “gross mechanics” of the play, the larger patterns in which events and characters are arranged. These patterns are the context within which the individual characters are defined, just as the pattern of a sentence is the context that defines the exact meaning of the individual words within it.

Othello is probably the most neatly, the most formally constructed of Shakespeare’s plays. Every character is, for example, balanced by another similar or contrasting character. Desdemona is balanced by her opposite, Iago; love and concern for others at one end of the scale, hatred and concern for self at the other. The true and loyal soldier Cassio balances the false and traitorous soldier Iago. These balances and contrasts throw into relief the essential qualities of the characters. Desdemona’s love, for example, shows up a good deal more clearly in contrast to Iago’s hate, and vice versa. The values of contrast are increased and the full range of human nature displayed by extending these simple contrasts into developing series. The essential purity of Desdemona stands in contrast to the more “practical” view of chastity held by Emilia, and her view in turn is illuminated by the workaday view of sensuality held by the courtesan Bianca, who treats love, ordinarily, as a commodity. Or, to take another example, Iago’s success in fooling Othello is but the culmination of a series of such betrayals that includes the duping of Roderigo, Brabantio, and Cassio. Each duping is the explanatory image of the other, for in every case Iago’s method and end are the same: he plays on and teases to life some hitherto controlled and concealed dark passion in his victim. In each case he seeks in some way the same end, the symbolic murder of Desdemona, the destruction in some form of the life principle of which she is the major embodiment.

These various contrasts and parallelisms ultimately blend into a larger, more general pattern that is the central movement of the play. We can begin to see this pattern in the “symbolic geography” of the play. Every play, or work of art, creates its own particular image of space and time, its own symbolic world. The outer limits of the world of Othello are defined by the Turks—the infidels, the unbelievers, the “general enemy” as the play calls them—who, just over the horizon, sail back and forth trying to confuse and trick the Christians in order to invade their dominions and destroy them. Out beyond the horizon, reported but unseen, are also those “anters vast and deserts idle” of which Othello speaks. Out there is a land of “rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads touch heaven” inhabited by “cannibals that each other eat” and monstrous forms of men “whose heads grow beneath their shoulders.” On the edges of this land is the raging ocean with its “high seas, and howling winds,” its “guttered rocks and congregated sands” hidden beneath the waters to “enclog the guiltless keel.”

Within the circle formed by barbarism, monstrosity, sterility, and the brute power of nature lie the two Christian strongholds of Venice and Cyprus. Renaissance Venice was known for its wealth acquired by trade, its political cunning, and its courtesans; but Shakespeare, while reminding us of the tradition of the “supersubtle Venetian,” makes Venice over into a form of The City, the ageless image of government, of reason, of law, and of social concord. Here, when Brabantio’s strong passions and irrational fears threaten to create riot and injustice, his grievances are examined by a court of law, judged by reason, and the verdict enforced by civic power. Here, the clear mind of the Senate proves the actions of the Turks, penetrates through their pretenses to their true purposes, makes sense of the frantic and fearful contradictory messages that pour in from the fleet, and arranges the necessary defense. The Senate scene—I.iii—focuses on the magnificent speeches of Othello and Desdemona as they declare their love and explain it, but the lovers are surrounded, guarded, by the assembled, ranked governors of Venice, who control passions that otherwise would have led to a bloody street brawl and being justice out of what otherwise would have been riot. The solemn presence and ordering power of the Senate would be most powerfully realized in a stage production, where the senators would appear in their rich robes, with all their symbols of office, seated in ranks around several excited individuals expressing such primal passions as pride of race, fear of dark powers, and violent love. In a play where so much of the language is magnificent, rich, and of heroic proportions, simpler statements come to seem more forceful; and the meaning of The City is perhaps nowhere more completely realized than in Brabantio’s brief, secure answer to the first fearful cries of theft and talk of copulating animals that Iago and Roderigo send up from the darkness below his window:

What tell’st thou me of robbing? This is Venice;
My house is not a grange. (I.i.102–03)

Here then are the major reference points on a map of the world of Othello: out at the far edge are the Turks, barbarism, disorder, and amoral destructive powers; closer and more familiar is Venice, The City, order, law, and reason. Cyprus, standing on the frontier between barbarism and The City, is not the secure fortress of civilization that Venice is. It is rather an outpost, weakly defended and far out in the raging ocean, close to the “general enemy” and the immediate object of his attack. It is a “town of war yet wild” where the “people’s hearts [are] brimful of fear.” Here passions are more explosive and closer to the surface than in Venice, and here, instead of the ancient order and established government of The City, there is only one man to control violence and defend civilization—the Moor Othello, himself of savage origins and a converted Christian.

The movement of the play is from Venice to Cyprus, from The City to the outpost, from organized society to a condition much closer to raw nature, and from collective life to the life of the solitary individual. This movement is a characteristic pattern in Shakespeare’s plays, both comedies and tragedies: in A Midsummer Night’s Dream the lovers and players go from the civilized, daylight world of Athens to the irrational, magical wood outside Athens and the primal powers of life represented by the elves and fairies; Lear moves from his palace and secure identity to the savage world of the heath where all values and all identities come into question; and everyone in The Tempest is shipwrecked at some time on Prospero’s magic island, where life seen from a new perspective assumes strange and fantastic shapes. At the other end of this journey there is always some kind of return to The City, to the palace, and to old relationships, but the nature of this return differs widely in Shakespeare’s plays. In Othello the movement at the end of the play is back toward Venice, the Turk defeated; but Desdemona, Othello, Emilia, and Roderigo do not return. Their deaths are the price paid for the return.

This passage from Venice to Cyprus to fight the Turk and encounter the forces of barbarism is the geographical form of an action that occurs on the social and psychological levels as well. That is, there are social and mental conditions that correspond to Venice and Cyprus, and there are forces at work in society and in man that correspond to the Turks, the raging seas, and “cannibals that each other eat.”

The exposure to danger, the breakdown and the ultimate reestablishment of society—the parallel on the social level to the action on the geographical level—is quickly traced. We have already noted that the Venetian Senate embodies order, reason, justice, and concord, the binding forces that hold The City together. In Venice the ancient laws and the established customs of society work to control violent men and violent passions to ensure the safety and well-being of the individual and the group. But there are anarchic forces at work in the city, which threaten traditional social forms and relationships, and all these forces center in Iago. His discontent with his own rank and his determination to displace Cassio endanger the orderly military hierarchy in which the junior serves his senior. He endangers marriage, the traditional form for ordering male and female relationships, by his own unfounded suspicions of his wife and by his efforts to destroy Othello’s marriage by fanning to life the darker, anarchic passions of Brabantio and Roderigo. He tries to subvert the operation of law and justice by first stirring up Brabantio to gather his followers and seek revenge in the streets; and then when the two warlike forces are met, Iago begins a quarrel with Roderigo in hopes of starting a brawl. The nature of the antisocial forces that Iago represents are focused in the imagery of his advice to Roderigo on how to call out to her father the news of Desdemona's marriage. Call, he says, with like timorous [frightening] accent and dire yell

As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spied in populous cities. (I.i.72-74)

Fire, panic, darkness, neglect of duty—these are the natural and human forces that destroy great cities and turn their citizens to mobs.

In Venice, Iago's attempts to create civic chaos are frustrated by Othello's calm management of himself and the orderly legal proceedings of the Senate. In Cyprus, however, society is less secure—even as the island is more exposed to the Turks—and Othello alone is responsible for finding truth and maintaining order. Here Iago's poison begins to work, and he succeeds at once in manufacturing the riot that he failed to create in Venice. Seen on stage, the fight on the watch between Cassio and Montano is chaos come again: two drunken officers, charged with the defense of the town, trying to kill each other like savage animals, a bedlam of voices and shouts, broken, disordered furniture, and above all this the discordant clamor of the "dreadful" alarm bell—used to signal attacks and fire. This success is but the prologue for other more serious disruptions of society and of the various human relationships that it fosters. The general is set against his officer, husband against wife, Christian against Christian, servant against master. Justice becomes a travesty of itself as Othello—using legal terms such as "It is the cause"—assumes the offices of accuser, judge, jury, and executioner of his wife. Manners disappear as the Moor strikes his wife publicly and treats her maid as a procuress. The brightly lighted Senate chamber is now replaced with a dark Cyprus street where Venetians cut one another down and men are murdered from behind. This anarchy finally gives way in the last scene, when Desdemona's faith is proven, to a restoration of order and an execution of justice on the two major criminals.

What we have followed so far is a movement expressed in geographical and social symbols from Venice to a Cyprus exposed to attack, from The City to barbarism, from Christendom to the domain of the Turks, from order to riot, from justice to wild revenge and murder, from truth to falsehood. It now remains to see just what this movement means on the level of the individual in the heart and mind of man. Of the three major characters, Desdemona, Othello, and Iago, the first and the last do not change their natures or their attitudes toward life during the course of the play. These two are polar opposites, the antitheses of each other. To speak in the most general terms, Desdemona expresses in her language and actions an innocent, unselfish love and concern for others. Othello catches her very essence when he speaks of her miraculous love, which transcended their differences in age, color, beauty, and culture:

She loved me for the dangers I had passed,
And I loved her that she did pity them. (I.iii.166-67)

This love in its various forms finds expression not only in her absolute commitment of herself to Othello, but in her gentleness, her kindness to others, her innocent trust in all men, her pleas for Cassio's restoration to Othello's favor; and it endures even past death at her husband's hands, for she comes back to life for a moment to answer Emilia's question, "Who hath done this deed?" with the unbelievable words,

Nobody.—I myself. Farewell.

Commend me to my kind lord. O, farewell!

(V.ii.124-25)

Iago is her opposite in every way. Where she is open and guileless, he is never what he seems to be; where she thinks the best of everyone, he thinks the worst, usually turning to imagery of animals and physical functions to express his low opinion of human nature; where she seeks to serve and love others, he uses others to further his own dark aims and satisfy his hatred of mankind; where she is emotional and idealistic, he is icily logical and cynical. Desdemona and Iago are much more complicated than this, but perhaps enough has been said to suggest the nature of these two moral poles of the play. One is a life force that strives for order, community, growth, and light. The other is an anti-life force that seeks anarchy, death, and darkness. One is the foundation of all that men have built in the world, including The City; the other leads back toward ancient chaos and barbarism.

Othello, like most men, is a combination of the forces of love and hate, which are isolated in impossibly pure states in Desdemona and Iago. His psychic voyage from Venice to Cyprus is a passage of the soul and the will from the values of one of these characters to those of the other. This passage is charted by his acceptance and rejection of one or the other. He begins by refusing to have Iago as his lieutenant, choosing the more "theoretical" though less experienced Cassio. He marries Desdemona. Though he is not aware that he does so, he expresses the full meaning of this choice when he speaks of her in such suggestive terms as "my soul's joy" and refers to her even as he is about to kill her, as "Promethean heat," the vital fire that gives life to the world. Similarly, he comes to know that all that is valuable in life depends on her love, and in the magnificent speech beginning, "O now, forever/Farewell the tranquil mind" (III.iii.344-45), he details the emptiness of all human activity if Desdemona be proved false. But Iago, taking advantage of latent "Iagolike" feelings and thoughts in Othello, persuades him that Desdemona is only common clay. Othello then gives himself over to Iago at the end of III.iii, where they kneel together to plan the revenge, and Othello says, "Now art thou my lieutenant." To which Iago responds with blood-chilling simplicity, "I am your own forever." The full meaning of this choice is expressed, again unconsciously, by Othello when he says to Desdemona,

Perdition catch my soul
But I do love thee! and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again. (III.iii.90-92)

The murder of Desdemona acts out the final destruction in Othello himself of all the ordering powers of love, of trust, of the bond between human beings.

Desdemona and Iago then represent two states of mind, two understandings of life, and Othello's movement from one to the other is the movement on the level of character and psychology from Venice to Cyprus, from The City to anarchy. His return to The City and the defeat of the Turk is effected, at the expense of his own life, when he learns what he has killed and executes himself as the only fitting judgment on his act. His willingness to speak of what he has done—in contrast to Iago's sullen silence—is a willingness to recognize the meaning of Desdemona's faith and chastity, to acknowledge that innocence and love do exist, and that therefore The City can stand, though his life is required to validate the truth and justice on which it is built.

Othello offers a variety of interrelated symbols that locate and define in historical, natural, social, moral, and human terms those qualities of being and universal forces that are forever at war in the universe and between which tragic man is always in movement. On one side there are Turks, cannibals, barbarism, monstrous deformities of nature, the brute force of the sea, riot, mobs, darkness, Iago, hatred, lust, concern for the self only, and cynicism. On the other side there are Venice, The City, law, senates, amity, hierarchy, Desdemona, love, concern for others, and innocent trust. As the characters of the play act and speak, they bring together, by means of parallelism and metaphor, the various forms of the different ways of life. There is, for example, a meaningful similarity in the underhanded way Iago works and the ruse by which the Turks try to fool the Venetians into thinking they are bound for Rhodes when their object is Cyprus. Or, there is again a flash of identification when we hear that the reefs and shoals that threaten ships are "ensteeped," that is, hidden under the surface of the sea, as Iago is hidden under the surface of his "honesty." But Shakespeare binds the various levels of being more closely together by the use of imagery that compares things on one level of action with things on another. For example, when Iago swears that his low judgment of all female virtue "is true, or else I am a Turk" (II.i.112), logic demands, since one woman, Desdemona, is true and chaste, that we account him "a Turk." He is thus identified with the unbelievers, the Ottoman Turks, and that Asiatic power, which for centuries threatened Christendom, is shown to have its social and psychological equivalent in Iago's particular attitude toward life. Similarly, when Othello sees the drunken brawl on the watchtower, he exclaims,

Are we turned Turks, and to ourselves do that
Which heaven hath forbid the Ottomites? (II.iii.168-69)

At the very time when the historical enemy has been defeated, his fleet providentially routed by the great storm, his characteristics—drunken loss of control, brawling over honor, disorder—begin to conquer the island only so recently and fortuitously saved. The conquest continues, and the defender of the island, Othello, convinced of Desdemona's guilt, compares his determination to revenge himself to "the Pontic Sea,/Whose icy current and compulsive course/Nev'r keeps retiring ebb" (III.iii.450-52). The comparison tells us that in his rage and hatred he has become one with the savage seas and the brute, amoral powers of nature that are displayed in the storm scene at the beginning of Act II. But most important is Othello's identification of himself at the end of the play as the "base Judean" who "threw a pearl away richer than all his tribe." The more familiar quarto reading is "base Indian," but both words point toward the barbarian who fails to recognize value and beauty when he possesses it—the primitive savage who picks up a pearl and throws it away not knowing its worth; or the Jews (Judas may be specifically meant) who denied and crucified another great figure of love, thinking they were dealing with only a troublesome rabble-rouser. A few lines further on Othello proceeds to the final and absolute identification of himself with the infidel. He speaks of a "malignant and a turbaned Turk" who "beat a Venetian and traduced the state," and he then acknowledges that he is that Turk by stabbing himself, even as he once stabbed the other unbeliever. So he ends as both the Turk and the destroyer of the Turk, the infidel and the defender of the faith.

When Iago's schemes are at last exposed, Othello, finding it impossible for a moment to believe that a man could have contrived such evil, stares at Iago's feet and then says sadly, "but that's a fable." What he hopes to find when he looks down are the cloven hoofs of the devil, and had they been there he would have been an actor in a morality play, tempted beyond his strength, like many a man before him, by a supernatural power outside himself. In some ways I have schematized Othello as just such a morality play, offering an allegorical journey between heaven and hell on a stage filled with purely symbolic figures. This is the kind of abstraction of art toward which criticism inevitably moves, and in this case the allegorical framework is very solidly there. But Othello does not see the cloven hoofs when he looks down; he sees a pair of human feet at the end of a very human body; and he is forced to realize that far from living in some simplified, "fabulous" world where evil is a metaphysical power raiding human life from without, he dwells where evil is somehow inextricably woven with good into man himself. On his stage the good angel does not return to heaven when defeated, but is murdered, and her body remains on the bed, "cold, cold." He lives where good intentions, past services, psychic weaknesses, and an inability to see through evil cannot excuse an act, as they might in some simpler world where more perfect justice existed. In short, Othello is forced to recognize that he lives in a tragic world, and he pays the price for having been great enough to inhabit it.

Here is the essence of Shakespeare's art, an ability to create immediate, full, and total life as men actually live and experience it; and yet at the same time to arrange this reality so that it gives substance to and derives shape from a formal vision of all life that comprehends and reaches back from man and nature through society and history to cosmic powers that operate through all time and space. His plays are both allegorical and realistic at once; his characters both recognizable men and at the same time devils, demigods, and forces in nature. I have discussed only the more allegorical elements in Othello, the skeleton of ideas and formal patterns within which the characters must necessarily be understood. But it is equally true that the exact qualities of the abstract moral values and ideas, their full reality, exist only in the characters. It is necessary to know that Desdemona represents one particular human value, love or charity, in order to avoid making such mistakes as searching for some tragic flaw in her that would justify her death. But at the same time, if we would know what love and charity are in all their fullness, then our definition can only be the actions, the language, the emotions of the character Desdemona. She is Shakespeare's word for love. If we wish to know not just the obvious fact that men choose evil over good, but why they do so, then we must look both analytically and feelingly at all the evidence that the world offers for believing that Desdemona is false and at all the biases in Othello's mind that predispose him to believe such evidence. Othello's passage from Venice to Cyprus, from absolute love for Desdemona to extinguishing the light in her bedchamber, and to the execution of himself, these are Shakespeare's words for tragic man.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCE

Othello is based on a story in Giraldi Cinthio's Hecatommithi (III, 7), a collection of a hundred tales printed in Italy in the sixteenth century. So far as is known, there was no English translation of the source story in Shakespeare's time, and while he may have read it in a French translation of Gabriel Chappuys, it seems probable that he read the original Italian. For a discussion of the evidence for this view and a good comparison of the story and the play, see Kenneth Muir, Shakespeare's Sources (1957), Vol. I, "Comedies and Tragedies," pp. 122-23.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

Othello contains some of the most difficult editorial problems of any Shakespearean play. The play was entered in The Stationer's Register on October 6, 1621, and printed in a quarto edition, Q1, by Thomas Walkley in 1622, some eighteen or nineteen years after it was first staged. More curiously, at the time that Walkley printed his quarto edition, the plans for printing the folio edition of Shakespeare's collected works were completed and printing was well along. The Folio, F, appeared in late 1623, and the text of Othello included in it differs considerably from Q1. A second quarto, Q2, was printed from F in 1630. The chief differences between the two major texts, Q1 and F, are: (1) there are 160 lines in F that are not in Q1; some of these omissions affect the sense in Q1, but others seem to be either intentional cuts in Q1 or additions in F; (2) there are a number of oaths in Q1 that are not in F; this fact can be interpreted in a number of ways, but all arguments go back to the prohibition in 1606 of swearing on stage—but apparently not in printed editions; (3) the stage directions in Q1 are much fuller than in F; (4) there are a large number of variant readings in the two texts, in single words, in phrases, and in lineation; where Q1, for example, reads "toged" (i.e., wearing a toga), F reads "tongued"; where Q1 reads "Worships," F reads "Moorships."

These may seem petty problems, but they present an editor with a series of most difficult questions about what to print at any given point where the two texts are in disagreement. The usual solution in the past has been for the editor to include all material in F and Q1, and where the two texts are in disagreement to select the reading he prefers. The result is what is known as an eclectic text. But modern bibliographical studies have demonstrated that it is possible to proceed, in some cases at least, in a more precise manner by examining the conflicting texts carefully in order to arrive at something like a reasonable judgment about their relative authority. Shakespearean bibliography has become a most elaborate affair, however, and in most cases it has become necessary to take the word of specialists on these matters. Unfortunately, in the case of Othello the experts are not in agreement, and none of their arguments has the ring of certainty. Here is, however, the most general opinion of how the two different texts came into being and how they are related.

After Shakespeare wrote the play, his original draft, usually termed "foul papers," was copied, around 1604, by a scribe and made into what is known as the "promptbook," the official copy of the play used in the theater as the basis for production. This promptbook was the property of the players' company, the King's Men in this case, and remained in their possession to be used, and perhaps revised, whenever they produced Othello. Being a repertory company, they would present a play for a few performances, then drop it for a time, and then present it again when conditions seemed favorable. At some time around 1620, another copy was made of the original foul papers, or some later copy of them, and this served as the basis for the 1622 quarto. Later, when the publishers of the Folio got around to printing Othello, they took a copy of Q1 and corrected it by the original promptbook, and this corrected copy was then given to the compositors who were setting type for F. There are genuine objections to this theory, the most telling raised by the most recent editor of the play, M. R. Ridley, in The Arden Shakespeare edition of Othello; but the theory does explain certain difficult facts, and most bibliographers seem to accept some version of it.

The end of this line of argument is to establish fairly reasonably the authority of the F text as being the closest either to what Shakespeare wrote originally or to the play as he finally left it after playhouse revisions. This agrees with what most scholars find in reading the two texts. Sir Walter Greg puts this common belief in the superiority of F in the strongest terms: "In the great majority of cases there can be no doubt that F has preserved the more Shakespearean reading." (The Shakespeare First Folio, 1955, p. 365.) For practical purposes what this means is that where an F reading makes sense, then an editor has no choice but to accept it—even though he "likes" the Q1 reading better and would have used it if he had written, instead of only edited, the play. But while an editor may be aided and comforted by the bibliographers' decision that F is more authoritative than Q1, his problems are by no means solved. There are places where F does not make sense but Q1 does, places where F is deficient in some way and Q1 is clear and complete, and places where both fail to make sense or seem to point to a common failure to transcribe correctly their original. When this occurs an editor must try to understand how the trouble occurred and then fall back on his judgment. This will force him to try to reconstruct the original manuscript from which we are told Q1 and F both derive, and he must attempt to deduce the original reading that both scribes mangled or that the typesetters in the different printing houses misread or made a mistake in setting.

This editorial process is endlessly complicated, but the general basis of this edition is as follows: F is taken for the copy text and its readings are preserved wherever they make sense. Oaths and stage directions are, however, taken from Q1, since they were presumably part of the original manuscript, but were deleted by the promptbook transcriber to comply with the prohibition against swearing on stage and because the prompt copy did not require such elaborate stage directions as a reading version—somewhat contrary to common sense, this last, but the bibliographers insist upon it. Where mislineation occurs in F, but Q1 has it correctly, the Q1 lineation is used on the theory that it has a better chance of being the original than any hypothetical reconstruction of my own. Finally, where F and Q1 both produce nonsense, changes, based on the above theory about the transmission of the text and on the work of previous editors, have been made.

Where F is deficient, the reading adopted and printed in this text is given below first in boldface type; unless otherwise stated it is taken from Q1. The original F reading that has been changed follows in roman. Obvious typographical errors in F, expansions of abbreviations, spelling variants ("murder," "murther"), and changes in punctuation and lineation are not noted. The act and scene divisions are translated from Latin, and the division at II.iii is from the Globe edition rather than from F; otherwise the divisions of F and the Globe edition are identical. "The Names of the Actors," here printed at the beginning of the play, in F follows the play.

I.i.1 Tush, Never Never 4 'Sblood, but But 26 other others 27 Christian Christen'd 30 God bless blesse 63 full fall; thick-lips Thicks-lips 83 Zounds, sir Sir 105 Zounds, sir Sir 110 germans Germaines 143 produced producted 151 hell-pains [ed.] hell apines [hells paines Q1]
I.ii.33 duke dukes 37 Even even 49 carack [ed.] Carract [Carrick Q1] 50 he's made he' made 57 Come Cme 67 darlings Deareling 74 weaken weakens 83 Whither Whether 86 if I do if do
I.iii.53 nor hor 74 your yonr 99 maimed main'd 106 Duke [F omits] 107 overt test oer Test 110 First Senator Sen. 122 till tell 138 travel's trauellours 140 rocks, and hills Rocks,

Hills; heads head 142 other others 146 thence hence 154 intently instinctively 203 preserved presern'd 227 couch [ed.] Coach [Cooch Q1] 229 alacrity Alacartie 259 me my [F and Q1] 272 First Senator Sen. 286 First Senator Sen. 321 balance braine 327 scion [ed.] Seyen [seyen Q1] 374 snipe snpe 377 H' as She ha's
II.i.9 mortise [ed.] morties [morties Q1] 33 prays praye 40 Third Gentleman Gent. 53 First Gentleman Gent. 56 Second Gentleman Gent. 59 Second Gentleman Gent. 65 ingener Ingeniuer 66 Second Gentleman Gent. 93 Second Gentleman Gent. 168 gyve [ed.] giue [catch Q1] 173 An and 175 clyster cluster 212 hither thither 241 has he's 260 mutualities mutabilities 298 wife wist 306 nightcap Night-Cape
II.iii.41 unfortunate infortunate 60 to put put to 64 God heauen 75 God Heauen 80 Englishman Englishmen 97 thine thy 99 'Fore God Why 103 God's heaven's 112 God forgive Forgiue 145 Help . . . within [F omits; Q1 reads "Helpe, helpe, within"] 146 Zounds, you You 156 God's will Alas 160 God's will Fie, fie 162 Zounds, I I 216 leagued [ed.] league [F and Q1] 259 God Heauen 273 to ro 287 O God Oh 340 were't were to 359 enmesh en-mash 375 By the mass In troth
III.i.1 s.d. [F includes the Clown] 20 Exit Musicians Exit Mu. 25 general's wife Generall 30 Cassio [no speech ascription in F]
III.ii.6 We'll Well
III.iii.74 By'r Lady Trust me 94 you he 106 By heaven Alas 135 free to free 136 vile vild 139 But some Wherein 148 Shape [ed.] Shapes 162 By heaven I'll Ile 170 fondly [ed.] soundly [strongly Q1] 175 God heauen 182 exsufflicate [ed.] exufflicate [F and Q1]; blown blowd 217 my your 222 vile vilde 248 hold him him 258 qualities Quantities 259 human humane 281 to too 335 of in 347 makes make 372 b' wi' buy 392 supervisor supervision 437 that was [Malone's ed.] it was [F and Q1]
III.iv.77 God Heauen 81 Heaven Blesse 96 I' faith In sooth 169 I' faith Indeed 185 by my faith in good troth
IV.i.21 infected infectious 37 Zounds, that's that's 78 unsuiting resulting 102 conster conserue 108 power dowre 112 i' faith indeed 123 win winnes 131 beckons becomes 162 Faith, I I 216 God save Save 246 an obedient obedient IV.ii.16 requite requit 30 Nay May 48 kinds kind 154 in [Q2] or 168 stay stays
IV.iii.15 bade bid 53 hie high
V.i.1 bulk Barke 22 hear heard 34 hies highes 35 Forth For 50 heaven's heaven 105 out o' th' o' th'
V.ii.13 the rose thy Rose 35 say so say 57 Then Lord O Heauen 101 Should Did 117 O Lord Alas 127 heard heare 209 reprobation Reprobance 218 O God! O heavenly God O Heauen! Oh heauenly powres 219 Zounds Come

THE TRAGEDY OF OTHELLO

THE MOOR OF VENICE

The Names of the Actors

OTHELLO the Moor
BRABANTIO father to Desdemona
CASSIO an honorable lieutenant
IAGO a villain
RODERIGO a gulled gentleman
DUKE OF VENICE
SENATORS
MONTANO Governor of Cyprus
GENTLEMEN of Cyprus

LODOVICO and GRATIANO two noble Venetians SAILORS
CLOWN
DESDEMONA wife to Othello
EMILIA wife to Iago
BIANCA a courtesan
[MESSENGER HERALD OFFICERS
GENTLEMEN MUSICIANS ATTENDANTS]

Scene: Venice and Cyprus]

A C T I

Scene I. [Venice. A street.]

Enter RODERIGO and IAGO.

RODERIGO

Tush! Never tell me? I take it much unkindly
That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse
As if the strings were thine, shouldst know of this.

IAGO

'Sblood,° but you'll not hear me! If ever I did dream
Of such a matter, abhor me.

RODERIGO

Thou told'st me

5

Thou didst hold him in thy hate.

IAGO

Despise me

If I do not. Three great ones of the city,
In personal suit to make me his lieutenant,
Off-capped° to him; and, by the faith of man,
I know my price; I am worth no worse a place.
But he, as loving his own pride and purposes,
Evades them with a bombast circumstance,°

10

Horribly stuffed with epithets of war;
Nonsuits° my mediators. For, "Certes," says he,
"I have already chose my officer." And what was he? 15
Forsooth, a great arithmetician,°
One Michael Cassio, a Florentine,
(A fellow almost damned in a fair wife)°
That never set a squadron in the field,
Nor the division of a battle knows 20
More than a spinster; unless the bookish theoretic,
Wherein the tonguè° consuls can propose
As masterly as he. Mere prattle without practice
Is all his soldiership. But he, sir, had th' election;
And I, of whom his eyes had seen the proof 25
At Rhodes, at Cyprus, and on other grounds
Christian and heathen, must be belee'd and calmed
By debtor and creditor. This counter-caster,°
He, in good time, must his lieutenant be,
And I—God bless the mark!—his Moorship's ancient.° 30

14 Nonsuits rejects 16 arithmetician theorist (rather than practitioner) 18 A . . . wife a much-disputed passage, which is probably best taken as a general sneer at Cassio as a dandy and a ladies' man; but in the story from which Shakespeare took his plot the counterpart of Cassio is married, and it may be that at the beginning of the play Shakespeare had decided to keep him married but later changed his mind 22 tonguèd eloquent 28 counter-caster i.e., a bookkeeper who "casts" (reckons up) figures on a "counter" (abacus) 30 ancient standard-bearer; an underofficer

The decorative border shown above was used in the First Folio edition of Shakespeare's plays, 1623.

I.i.4 'Sblood by God's blood 9 Off-capped doffed their caps (as a mark of respect) 12 bombast circumstance stuffed, roundabout speech

RODERIGO

By heaven, I rather would have been his hangman.

IAGO

Why, there's no remedy. 'Tis the curse of service:
Preferment goes by letter and affection,^o
And not by old gradation,^o where each second Stood heir to th' first. Now, sir, be judge yourself, 35
Whether I in any just term am affined^o
To love the Moor.

RODERIGO I would not follow him then.

IAGO

O, sir, content you.
I follow him to serve my turn upon him.
We cannot all be masters, nor all masters
Cannot be truly followed. You shall mark 40
Many a duteous and knee-crooking^o knave
That, doting on his own obsequious bondage,
Wears out his time, much like his master's ass,
For naught but provender; and when he's old,
cashiered. 45

Whip me such honest knaves! Others there are
Who, trimmed in forms and visages of duty,
Keep yet their hearts attending on themselves,
And, throwing but shows of service on their lords,
Do well thrive by them, and when they have lined their coats, 50

Do themselves homage. These fellows have some soul;
And such a one do I profess myself. For, sir,

It is as sure as you are Roderigo,
Were I the Moor, I would not be Iago.
In following him, I follow but myself. 55
Heaven is my judge, not I for love and duty,
But seeming so, for my peculiar^o end;
For when my outward action doth demonstrate
The native^o act and figure of my heart
In complement extern,^o 'tis not long after 60
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at; I am not what I am.

RODERIGO

What a full fortune does the thick-lips owe^o
If he can carry't thus!

IAGO

Call up her father,
Rouse him. Make after him, poison his delight,
Proclaim him in the streets, incense her kinsmen,
And though he in a fertile climate dwell,
Plague him with flies; though that his joy be joy,
Yet throw such chances of vexation on't
As it may lose some color. 70

RODERIGO

Here is her father's house. I'll call aloud.

IAGO

Do, with like timorous^o accent and dire yell
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spied in populous cities.

RODERIGO

What, ho, Brabantio! Signior Brabantio, ho! 75

IAGO

Awake! What, ho, Brabantio! Thieves! Thieves!

Look to your house, your daughter, and your bags!
Thieves! Thieves!

BRABANTIO above^o [at a window].

BRABANTIO

What is the reason of this terrible summons?
What is the matter there? 80

RODERIGO

Signior, is all your family within?

IAGO

Are your doors locked?

BRABANTIO

Why, wherefore ask you this?

IAGO

Zounds, sir, y'are robbed! For shame. Put on your gown!

Your heart is burst, you have lost half your soul.
Even now, now, very now, an old black ram 85
Is tupping your white ewe. Arise, arise!
Awake the snorting citizens with the bell,
Or else the devil will make a grandsire of you.
Arise, I say.

BRABANTIO What, have you lost your wits?

RODERIGO

Most reverend signior, do you know my voice? 90

BRABANTIO

Not I. What are you?

RODERIGO

My name is Roderigo.

BRABANTIO

The worsè welcome!

I have charged thee not to haunt about my doors.
In honest plainness thou hast heard me say 95
My daughter is not for thee; and now, in madness,
Being full of supper and distemp'ring draughts,^o
Upon malicious knavery dost thou come
To start^o my quiet. 60

RODERIGO

Sir, sir, sir—

BRABANTIO But thou must needs be sure

My spirits and my place^o have in their power 100
To make this bitter to thee.

RODERIGO

Patience, good sir.

BRABANTIO

What tell'st thou me of robbing? This is Venice;
My house is not a grange.^o 65

RODERIGO

Most grave Brabantio,

In simple and pure soul I come to you.

IAGO Zounds, sir, you are one of those that will not 105 serve God if the devil bid you. Because we come to do you service and you think we are ruffians, you'll have your daughter covered with a Barbary^o horse, you'll have your nephews^o neigh to you, you'll have coursers for cousins,^o and gennets for germans.^o 110

BRABANTIO

What profane wretch art thou?

IAGO I am one, sir, that comes to tell you your

78 s.d. above i.e., on the small upper stage above and to the rear of the main platform stage, which resembled the projecting upper story of an Elizabethan house 96 dis-temp'ring draughts unsettling drinks 98 start disrupt 100 place rank, i.e., of senator 103 grange isolated house 108 Barbary Arabian, i.e., Moorish 109 nephews i.e., grandsons 110 cousins relations; gennets for germans Spanish horses for blood relatives

33 letter and affection recommendations (from men of power) and personal preference 34 old gradation seniority 36 affined bound 42 knee-crooking bowing 57 peculiar personal 59 native natural, innate 60 complement extern outward appearances 63 owe own 72 timorous frightening daughter and the Moor are making the beast with two backs.

BRABANTIO

Thou art a villain.

IAGO

You are—a senator.

BRABANTIO

This thou shalt answer. I know thee, Roderigo.

RODERIGO

Sir, I will answer anything. But I beseech you,
If't be your pleasure and most wise consent,
As partly I find it is, that your fair daughter,
At this odd-even° and dull watch o' th' night,
Transported, with no worse nor better guard
But with a knave of common hire, a gondolier,
To the gross clasps of a lascivious Moor—
If this be known to you, and your allowance,
We then have done you bold and saucy wrongs;
But if you know not this, my manners tell me
We have your wrong rebuke. Do not believe
That from the sense of all civility°
I thus would play and trifle with your reverence.
Your daughter, if you have not given her leave,
I say again, hath made a gross revolt,
Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes
In an extravagant° and wheeling stranger
Of here and everywhere. Straight satisfy yourself.
If she be in her chamber, or your house,
Let loose on me the justice of the state
For thus deluding you.

BRABANTIO

Strike on the tinder, ho!

Give me a taper! Call up all my people!

This accident° is not unlike my dream.

Belief of it oppresses me already.

Light, I say! Light!

Exit [above].

IAGO

Farewell, for I must leave you.

It seems not meet, nor wholesome to my place,

To be produced—as, if I stay, I shall—

Against the Moor. For I do know the state,

However this may gall him with some check,°

Cannot with safety cast° him; for he's embarked

With such loud reason to the Cyprus wars,

Which even now stands in act,° that for their souls

Another of his fathom° they have none

To lead their business; in which regard,

Though I do hate him as I do hell-pains,

Yet, for necessity of present life,

I must show out a flag and sign of love,

Which is indeed but sign. That you shall surely find
him,

Lead to the Sagittary° the raised search;

And there will I be with him. So farewell. Exit.

Enter BRABANTIO [in his nightgown], with SERVANTS and torches.

BRABANTIO

It is too true an evil. Gone she is;

And what's to come of my despised time

120 odd-even between night and morning 128 sense . . . civility feeling of what is proper 133 extravagant vagrant, wandering (Othello is not Venetian and thus may be considered a wandering soldier of fortune) 139 accident happening 145 check restraint 146 cast dismiss 148 stands in act takes place 149 fathom ability 155 Sagittary probably the name of an inn

Is naught but bitterness. Now, Roderigo,
Where didst thou see her?—O unhappy girl!—
With the Moor, say'st thou?—Who would be a father?—

115

How didst thou know 'twas she?—O, she deceives me Past thought!—What said she to you? Get moe°
tapers!

Raise all my kindred!—Are they married, think you?

RODERIGO

Truly I think they are.

BRABANTIO

120

O heaven! How got she out? O treason of the blood!
Fathers, from hence trust not your daughters' minds
By what you see them act.° Is there not charms
By which the property° of youth and maidhood
May be abused? Have you not read, Roderigo,
Of some such thing?

125

RODERIGO

Yes, sir, I have indeed.

BRABANTIO

Call up my brother.—O, would you had had her!—

Some one way, some another—Do you know 130

Where we may apprehend her and the Moor?

RODERIGO

I think I can discover him, if you please

To get good guard and go along with me.

BRABANTIO

135

Pray you lead on. At every house I'll call;

I may command at most.—Get weapons, ho!

And raise some special officers of might.—

On, good Roderigo; I will deserve your pains.°

Exeunt.

Scene II. [A street.]

Enter OTHELLO, IAGO, ATTENDANTS with torches.

IAGO

145

Though in the trade of war I have slain men,
Yet do I hold it very stuff° o' th' conscience
To do no contrived murder. I lack iniquity
Sometime to do me service. Nine or ten times
I had thought t' have yerked° him here, under the ribs. 5

150

OTHELLO

'Tis better as it is.

IAGO

Nay, but he prated,

And spoke such scurvy and provoking terms
Against your honor, that with the little godliness I have
I did full hard forbear him. But I pray you, sir, 155

Are you fast married? Be assured of this,
That the magnifico° is much beloved,
And hath in his effect a voice potential
As double as the duke's.° He will divorce you,
Or put upon you what restraint or grievance
The law, with all his might to enforce it on,
Will give him cable.°

10

OTHELLO

Let him do his spite.

My services which I have done the Signiory°

15

163 moe more 168 act do 169 property true nature 180 deserve your pains be worthy of (and reward) your efforts I.ii.2 stuff essence 5 yerked stabbed 11 magnifico nobleman 12-13 hath . . . duke's i.e., can be as effective as the duke 16 cable range, scope 17 Signiory the rulers of Venice

Shall out-tongue his complaints. 'Tis yet to know°—
Which when I know that boasting is an honor
I shall promulgate—I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege;° and my demerits°
May speak unbonneted to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reached.° For know, Iago,
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhousèd° free condition
Put into circumscription and confine
For the seas' worth. But look, what lights come yond?

Enter CASSIO, with [OFFICERS and] torches.

IAGO

Those are the raisèd father and his friends.
You were best go in.

OTHELLO Not I. I must be found.
My parts, my title, and my perfect soul°
Shall manifest me rightly. Is it they?

IAGO

By Janus, I think no.

OTHELLO

The servants of the duke? And my lieutenant?
The goodness of the night upon you, friends.
What is the news?

CASSIO The duke does greet you, general; 35
And he requires your haste-posthaste appearance
Even on the instant.

OTHELLO What is the matter, think you?

CASSIO

Something from Cyprus, as I may divine.
It is a business of some heat. The galleys
Have sent a dozen sequent° messengers
This very night at one another's heels,
And many of the consuls, raised and met,
Are at the duke's already. You have been hotly called for.

When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The Senate hath sent about three several° quests
To search you out.

OTHELLO 'Tis well I am found by you.

I will but spend a word here in the house,

And go with you. [Exit.]

CASSIO Ancient, what makes he here?

IAGO

Faith, he tonight hath boarded a land carack.°
If it prove lawful prize, he's made forever.

CASSIO

I do not understand.

IAGO

He's married.

CASSIO

To who?

[Enter OTHELLO.]

IAGO

Marry,° to—Come, captain, will you go?

OTHELLO

Have with you.

CASSIO

Here comes another troop to seek for you.

Enter BRABANTIO, RODERIGO, with OFFICERS and torches.

IAGO

It is Brabantio. General, be advised.

He comes to bad intent.

OTHELLO

Holla! Stand there!

RODERIGO

Signior, it is the Moor.

BRABANTIO

Down with him, thief!

[They draw swords.]

IAGO

You, Roderigo? Come, sir, I am for you.

OTHELLO

Keep up your bright swords, for the dew will rust them.
Good signior, you shall more command with years
Than with your weapons.

BRABANTIO

O thou foul thief, where hast thou stowed my daughter?

Damned as thou art, thou hast enchanted her!

For I'll refer me to all things of sense,°

If she in chains of magic were not bound,

Whether a maid so tender, fair, and happy,

So opposite to marriage that she shunned

The wealthy, curlèd darlings of our nation,

Would ever have, t' incur a general mock,°

Run from her guardage to the sooty bosom

Of such a thing as thou—to fear, not to delight.

Judge me the world if 'tis not gross in sense°

That thou hast practiced° on her with foul charms,

Abused her delicate youth with drugs or minerals

That weaken motion.° I'll have't disputed on;

'Tis probable, and palpable to thinking.

I therefore apprehend and do attach° thee

For an abuser of the world, a practicer

Of arts inhibited and out of warrant.°

Lay hold upon him. If he do resist,

Subdue him at his peril.

OTHELLO

Hold your hands,

Both you of my inclining and the rest.

Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter. Whither will you that I go

To answer this your charge?

BRABANTIO

To prison, till fit time

Of law and course of direct session

Call thee to answer.

OTHELLO

What if I do obey?

How may the duke be therewith satisfied,

Whose messengers are here about my side

Upon some present° business of the state

To bring me to him?

OFFICER

'Tis true, most worthy signior.

18 yet to know unknown as yet 21 siege rank; demerits deserts 22–23 May . . . reached i.e., are the equal of the family I have married into 25 unhousèd unconfined 30 perfect soul clear, unflawed conscience 40 sequent successive 45 several separate 49 carack treasure ship 52 Marry an interjection, from "By the Virgin Mary"

63 refer . . . sense base (my argument) on all ordinary understanding of nature 68 general mock public shame 71 gross in sense obvious 72 practiced used tricks 74 motion thought, i.e., reason 76 attach arrest 78 inhibited . . .
warrant prohibited and illegal (black magic) 89 present immediate

The duke's in council, and your noble self
I am sure is sent for.

BRABANTIO How? The duke in council?
In this time of the night? Bring him away.
Mine's not an idle cause. The duke himself,
Or any of my brothers° of the state, 95
Cannot but feel this wrong as 'twere their own;
For if such actions may have passage free,
Bondslaves and pagans shall our statesmen be. Exeunt.

Scene III. [A council chamber.]

Enter DUKE, SENATORS, and OFFICERS [set at a table, with lights and ATTENDANTS].

DUKE
There's no composition° in this news
That gives them credit.°

FIRST SENATOR Indeed, they are disproportioned.
My letters say a hundred and seven galleys.

DUKE
And mine a hundred forty.

SECOND SENATOR And mine two hundred. 5
But though they jump° not on a just accmpt°—
As in these cases where the aim° reports
'Tis oft with difference—yet do they all confirm
A Turkish fleet, and bearing up to Cyprus.

DUKE
Nay, it is possible enough to judgment.°
I do not so secure me in the error,
But the main article I do approve
In fearful sense.°

SAILOR (Within.) What, ho! What, ho! What, ho!

Enter SAILOR.

OFFICER
A messenger from the galleys.

DUKE Now? What's the business?

SAILOR
The Turkish preparation makes for Rhodes. 15
So was I bid report here to the State
By Signior Angelo.

DUKE
How say you by this change?

FIRST SENATOR This cannot be
By no assay of reason. 'Tis a pageant°
To keep us in false gaze.° When we consider 20
Th' importancy of Cyprus to the Turk,
And let ourselves again but understand
That, as it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question° bear it,
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,°
But altogether lacks th' abilities 25

95 brothers i.e., the other senators

I.iii.1 composition agreement 2 gives them credit makes them believable 5 jump agree; just accmpt exact counting
6 aim approximation 9 to judgment when carefully considered 10-12 I . . . sense i.e., just because the numbers disagree in the reports, I do not doubt that the principal information (that the Turkish fleet is out) is fearfully true 18 pageant show, pretense 19 in false gaze looking the wrong way 23 facile question easy struggle 24 warlike brace "military posture"

That Rhodes is dressed in. If we make thought of this,
We must not think the Turk is so unskillful
To leave that latest which concerns him first,
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain
To wake and wage a danger profitless. 30

DUKE

Nay, in all confidence he's not for Rhodes.

OFFICER

Here is more news.

Enter a MESSENGER.

MESSENGER

The Ottomites, reverend and gracious,
Steering with due course toward the isle of Rhodes,
Have there injointed them with an after° fleet. 35

FIRST SENATOR

Ay, so I thought. How many, as you guess?

MESSENGER

Of thirty sail; and now they do restem
Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance
Their purposes toward Cyprus. Signior Montano,
Your trusty and most valiant servitor, 40
With his free duty° recommends° you thus,
And prays you to believe him.

DUKE

'Tis certain then for Cyprus.
Marcus Luccicos, is not he in town?

FIRST SENATOR

He's now in Florence. 45

DUKE

Write from us to him; post-posthaste dispatch.

FIRST SENATOR

Here comes Brabantio and the valiant Moor.

Enter BRABANTIO, OTHELLO, CASSIO, IAGO, RODERIGO, and OFFICERS.

DUKE

Valiant Othello, we must straight° employ you
Against the general° enemy Ottoman.

[To BRABANTIO.]

I did not see you. Welcome, gentle signior. 50
We lacked your counsel and your help tonight.

BRABANTIO

So did I yours. Good your grace, pardon me.
Neither my place, nor aught I heard of business, Hath raised me from my bed; nor doth the general care 20

Take hold on me; for my particular grief 55
Is of so floodgate and o'erbearing nature
That it engulfs and swallows other sorrows,
And it is still itself.

DUKE

Why, what's the matter?

BRABANTIO

My daughter! O, my daughter!

SENATORS

Dead?

BRABANTIO

Ay, to me.

She is abused, stol'n from me, and corrupted 60
By spells and medicines bought of mountebanks;
For nature so prepost'rously to err,

35 after following 41 free duty unlimited respect; recom- mends informs 48 straight at once 49 general universal

Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
Sans° witchcraft could not.

DUKE

Whoe'er he be that in this foul proceeding
Hath thus beguiled your daughter of herself,
And you of her, the bloody book of law
You shall yourself read in the bitter letter
After your own sense; yea, though our proper° son Stood in your action.°

BRABANTIO

Humbly I thank your grace.

Here is the man—this Moor, whom now, it seems,
Your special mandate for the state affairs
Hath hither brought.

ALL

We are very sorry for't.

DUKE [To OTHELLO.]

What in your own part can you say to this?

BRABANTIO

Nothing, but this is so.

OTHELLO

Most potent, grave, and reverend signiors,
My very noble and approved° good masters,
That I have ta'en away this old man's daughter,
It is most true; true I have married her.
The very head and front° of my offending
Hath this extent, no more. Rude am I in my speech,
And little blessed with the soft phrase of peace,
For since these arms of mine had seven years' pith°
Till now some nine moons wasted,° they have used
Their dearest° action in the tented field;
And little of this great world can I speak
More than pertains to feats of broils and battle;
And therefore little shall I grace my cause
In speaking for myself. Yet, by your gracious patience,
I will a round° unvarnished tale deliver
Of my whole course of love—what drugs, what charms,
What conjuration, and what mighty magic,
For such proceeding I am charged withal,
I won his daughter—

BRABANTIO

A maiden never bold,

Of spirit so still and quiet that her motion
Blushed at herself;° and she, in spite of nature,
Of years, of country, credit, everything,
To fall in love with what she feared to look on!
It is a judgment maimed and most imperfect
That will confess perfection so could err
Against all rules of nature, and must be driven
To find out practices of cunning hell
Why this should be. I therefore vouch again
That with some mixtures pow'rful o'er the blood,
Or with some dram, conjured to this effect,
He wrought upon her.

DUKE

To vouch this is no proof,

Without more wider and more overt test
Than these thin habits° and poor likelihoods
Of modern° seeming do prefer against him.

FIRST SENATOR

But, Othello, speak.

110

Did you by indirect and forcèd courses
Subdue and poison this young maid's affections?
Or came it by request, and such fair question°
As soul to soul affordeth?

OTHELLO

I do beseech you,

Send for the lady to the Sagittary
And let her speak of me before her father.

115

If you do find me foul in her report,
The trust, the office, I do hold of you
Not only take away, but let your sentence
Even fall upon my life.

DUKE

Fetch Desdemona hither.

120

OTHELLO

Ancient, conduct them; you best know the place.

[Exit IAGO, with two or three ATTENDANTS.]

And till she come, as truly as to heaven
I do confess the vices of my blood,
So justly to your grave ears I'll present
How I did thrive in this fair lady's love,
And she in mine.

125

DUKE

Say it, Othello.

80

OTHELLO

Her father loved me; oft invited me;
Still° questioned me the story of my life
From year to year, the battle, sieges, fortune
That I have passed.

130

85

I ran it through, even from my boyish days
To th' very moment that he bade me tell it.
Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents by flood and field,
Of hairbreadth scapes i' th' imminent° deadly breach,
Of being taken by the insolent foe
And sold to slavery, of my redemption thence
And portance° in my travel's history,
Wherein of anters° vast and deserts idle,° Rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads touch heaven,

140

95

It was my hint to speak. Such was my process.
And of the Cannibals that each other eat,
The Anthropophagi,° and men whose heads
Grew beneath their shoulders. These things to hear
Would Desdemona seriously incline;
But still the house affairs would draw her thence;
Which ever as she could with haste dispatch,
She'd come again, and with a greedy ear
Devour up my discourse. Which I observing,
Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,° 150

105

Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not intentively.° I did consent,
And often did beguile her of her tears
When I did speak of some distressful stroke
That my youth suffered. My story being done,
She gave me for my pains a world of kisses.

155

She swore in faith 'twas strange, 'twas passing° strange;

64 Sans without 69 proper own 70 Stood . . . action were the accused in your suit 77 approved tested, proven by past performance 80 head and front extreme form ("front" = forehead) 83 pith strength 84 wasted past 85 dearest most important 90 round blunt 95-96 her . . . herself she was so modest that she blushed at every thought (and movement) 108 habits clothing 109 modern trivial

113 question discussion 128 Still regularly 135 imminent threatening 138 portance manner of acting 139 anters caves; idle empty, sterile 143 Anthropophagi man-eaters 152 dilate relate in full 154 intentively at length and in sequence 159 passing surpassing

'Twas pitiful, 'twas wondrous pitiful.
 She wished she had not heard it; yet she wished That heaven had made her such a man. She thanked me,
 And bade me, if I had a friend that loved her,
 I should but teach him how to tell my story,
 And that would woo her. Upon this hint I spake.
 She loved me for the dangers I had passed,
 And I loved her that she did pity them.
 This only is the witchcraft I have used.
 Here comes the lady. Let her witness it.

Enter DESDEMONA, IAGO, ATTENDANTS.

DUKE

I think this tale would win my daughter too.
 Good Brabantio, take up this mangled matter at the best.
 Men do their broken weapons rather use
 Than their bare hands.

BRABANTIO

I pray you hear her speak.

If she confess that she was half the wooer,
 Destruction on my head if my bad blame
 Light on the man. Come hither, gentle mistress.
 Do you perceive in all this noble company
 Where most you owe obedience?

DESDEMONA

My noble father,

I do perceive here a divided duty.
 To you I am bound for life and education;
 My life and education both do learn me
 How to respect you. You are the lord of duty,
 I am hitherto your daughter. But here's my husband,
 And so much duty as my mother showed
 To you, preferring you before her father,
 So much I challenge^o that I may profess
 Due to the Moor my lord.

BRABANTIO

God be with you. I have done.

Please it your grace, on to the state affairs.
 I had rather to adopt a child than get^o it.
 Come hither, Moor.
 I here do give thee that with all my heart
 Which, but thou hast already, with all my heart
 I would keep from thee. For your sake,^o jewel,
 I am glad at soul I have no other child,
 For thy escape would teach me tyranny,
 To hang clogs on them. I have done, my lord.

DUKE

Let me speak like yourself and lay a sentence^o
 Which, as a grise^o or step, may help these lovers.
 When remedies are past, the griefs are ended
 By seeing the worst, which late on hopes depended.^o 200
 To mourn a mischief that is past and gone
 Is the next^o way to draw new mischief on.
 What cannot be preserved when fortune takes,
 Patience her injury a mock'ry makes.
 The robbed that smiles, steals something from the 205
 thief;
 He robs himself that spends a bootless^o grief.

160 BRABANTIO

So let the Turk of Cyprus us beguile:
 We lose it not so long as we can smile.
 He bears the sentence well that nothing bears
 But the free comfort which from thence he hears; 210
 But he bears both the sentence and the sorrow
 That to pay grief must of poor patience borrow.
 These sentences, to sugar, or to gall,
 Being strong on both sides, are equivocal.
 But words are words. I never yet did hear 215
 That the bruised heart was piercèd^o through the ear.
 I humbly beseech you, proceed to th' affairs of state.

DUKE The Turk with a most mighty preparation makes for Cyprus. Othello, the fortitude^o of the place is best known to you; and though we have there a 220 substitute^o of most allowed sufficiency,^o yet opinion, a more sovereign mistress of effects, throws a more safer voice on you.^o You must therefore be content to slubber^o the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and boisterous^o expedition. 225

OTHELLO

The tyrant Custom, most grave senators,
 Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
 My thrice-driven^o bed of down. I do agnize^o
 A natural and prompt alacrity
 I find in hardness and do undertake 230
 These present wars against the Ottomites.
 Most humbly, therefore, bending to your state,
 I crave fit disposition for my wife,
 Due reference of place, and exhibition,^o
 With such accommodation and besort 235
 As levels with^o her breeding.

185 DUKE

Why, at her father's.

BRABANTIO

I will not have it so.

OTHELLO

Nor I.

DESDEMONA

Nor would I there reside,

To put my father in impatient thoughts
 By being in his eye. Most gracious duke,
 To my unfolding^o lend your prosperous^o ear, 240
 And let me find a charter^o in your voice,
 T' assist my simpleness.

DUKE

What would you, Desdemona?

195

DESDEMONA

That I love the Moor to live with him,
 My downright violence, and storm of fortunes,
 May trumpet to the world. My heart's subdued 245
 Even to the very quality of my lord.^o

216 piercèd some editors emend to "pieced," i.e., "healed"; but "pierced" makes good sense: Brabantio is saying in effect that his heart cannot be further hurt (pierced) by the indignity of the useless, conventional advice the duke offers him; "pierced" can also mean, however, "lanced" in the medical sense, and would then mean "treated"
 219 fortitude fortification 221 substitute viceroy; most allowed sufficiency generally acknowledged capability 221-23 opinion . . . you the general opinion, which finally controls affairs, is that you would be the best man in this situation 224 slubber besmear 225 stubborn and boisterous rough and violent 228 thrice-driven i.e., softest; agnize know in myself 234 exhibition grant of funds 236 levels with is suitable to 240 unfolding explanation; prosperous favoring 241 charter permission 245-46 My . . . lord i.e., I have become one in nature and being with the man I married (therefore, I too would go to the wars like a soldier)

171 take . . . best make the best of this disaster 186 challenge claim as right 189 get beget 193 For your sake because of you 197 lay a sentence provide a maxim 198 grise step 200 late . . . depended was supported by hope (of a better outcome) until lately 202 next closest, surest 206 bootless valueless

I saw Othello's visage in his mind,
And to his honors and his valiant parts
Did I my soul and fortunes consecrate.
So that, dear lords, if I be left behind,
A moth of peace, and he go to the war,
The rites^o for why I love him are bereft me,
And I a heavy interim shall support
By his dear absence. Let me go with him.

OTHELLO

Let her have your voice.^o
Vouch with me, heaven, I therefore beg it not
To please the palate of my appetite,
Nor to comply with heat^o—the young affects^o
In me defunct—and proper satisfaction;^o
But to be free and bounteous to her mind;
And heaven defend^o your good souls that you think
I will your serious and great business scant
When she is with me. No, when light-winged toys
Of feathered Cupid seel^o with wanton^o dullness
My speculative and officed instrument,^o
That my disports corrupt and taint my business,
Let housewives make a skillet of my helm,
And all indign^o and base adversities
Make head^o against my estimation!^o—

DUKE

Be it as you shall privately determine,
Either for her stay or going. Th' affair cries haste,
And speed must answer it.

FIRST SENATOR

You must away tonight.

OTHELLO

With all my heart.

DUKE

At nine i' th' morning here we'll meet again.
Othello, leave some officer behind,
And he shall our commission bring to you,
And such things else of quality and respect
As doth import you.

OTHELLO

So please your grace, my ancient;

A man he is of honesty and trust.
To his conveyance I assign my wife,
With what else needful your good grace shall think
To be sent after me.

DUKE

Let it be so.

Good night to every one. [To BRABANTIO.] And,
noble signior,
If virtue no delighted^o beauty lack,
Your son-in-law is far more fair than black.

FIRST SENATOR

Adieu, brave Moor. Use Desdemona well.

BRABANTIO

Look to her, Moor, if thou hast eyes to see:
She has deceived her father, and may thee.

[Exeunt DUKE, SENATORS, OFFICERS, &c.]

OTHELLO

My life upon her faith! Honest Iago,
My Desdemona must I leave to thee.

I prithee let thy wife attend on her,
And bring them after in the best advantage.^o
Come, Desdemona. I have but an hour
Of love, of worldly matter, and direction
To spend with thee. We must obey the time.

Exit [OTHELLO, with DESDEMONA].

RODERIGO Iago?

IAGO What say'st thou, noble heart?

RODERIGO What will I do, think'st thou?

255 IAGO Why, go to bed and sleep.

RODERIGO I will incontinently^o drown myself.

300

IAGO If thou dost, I shall never love thee after. Why, thou silly gentleman?

260 RODERIGO It is silliness to live when to live is torment; and then have we a prescription to die when death is our physician.

305

265 IAGO O villainous! I have looked upon the world for four times seven years, and since I could distinguish betwixt a benefit and an injury, I never found man that knew how to love himself. Ere I would say I would drown myself for the love of a guinea hen, I would change my humanity with a baboon.

310

RODERIGO What should I do? I confess it is my shame to be so fond, but it is not in my virtue^o to amend it.

270 IAGO Virtue? A fig! 'Tis in ourselves that we are thus, or thus. Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that if we will plant nettles or sow lettuce, set hyssop and weed up thyme, supply it with one gender of herbs or distract^o it with many—either to have it sterile with idleness or manured with industry—why, the power and corrigible^o authority of this lies in our wills. If the balance of our lives had not one scale of reason to poise another of sensuality, the blood and baseness of our natures would conduct us to most prepost'rous conclusions.^o But we have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings or unbitted^o lusts, whereof I take this that you call love to be a sect or scion.^o

315

325

320

RODERIGO It cannot be.

280 IAGO It is merely a lust of the blood and a permission of the will. Come, be a man! Drown thyself? Drown cats and blind puppies! I have professed me thy friend, and I confess me knit to thy deserving with cables of perdurable toughness. I could never better stead^o thee than now. Put money in thy purse.
Follow thou the wars; defeat thy favor^o with an usurped^o beard. I say, put money in thy purse. It cannot be long that Desdemona should continue her love of the Moor. Put money in thy purse. Nor he his to her. It was a violent commencement in her and thou shalt see an answerable^o sequestration—put but money in thy purse. These Moors are changeable in their wills—fill thy purse with money. The food that to him now is as luscious as locusts^o shall be to him shortly as bitter as coloquintida.^o She must change for youth; when she is sated with his body, she will 340

345

252 rites may refer either to the marriage rites or to the rites, formalities, of war 255 voice consent 258 heat lust; affects passions 259 proper satisfaction i.e. consummation of the marriage 261 defend forbid 264 seel sew up; wanton lascivious 265 speculative . . . instrument i.e., sight (and, by extension, the mind) 268 indign unworthy 269 Make head form an army, i.e., attack; estimation reputation 284 delighted delightful

292 advantage opportunity 300 incontinently at once 313 virtue strength (Roderigo is saying that his nature controls him) 318 distract vary 320 corrigible corrective 324 conclusions ends 326 unbitted uncontrolled 327 sect or scion offshoot 334 stead serve 335 defeat thy favor disguise your face 336 usurped assumed 340 answerable similar 343 locusts a sweet fruit 344 coloquintida a purgative derived from a bitter apple find the errors of her choice. Therefore, put money in thy purse. If thou wilt needs damn thyself, do it a more delicate way than drowning. Make all the money thou canst. If sanctimony^o and a frail vow betwixt an erring^o barbarian and supersubtle Venetian be not too hard for my wits, and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her. Therefore, make money. A pox of drowning thyself, it is clean out of the way. Seek thou rather to be hanged in compassing^o thy joy than to be drowned and go without her.

RODERIGO Wilt thou be fast to my hopes, if I depend on the issue?

IAGO Thou art sure of me. Go, make money. I have told thee often, and I retell thee again and again, I hate the Moor. My cause is hearted;^o thine hath no less reason. Let us be conjunctive^o in our revenge against him. If thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, me a sport. There are many events in the womb of time, which will be delivered. Traverse, go, provide thy money! We will have more of this tomorrow. Adieu.

RODERIGO Where shall we meet i' th' morning?

IAGO At my lodging.

RODERIGO I'll be with thee betimes.

IAGO Go to, farewell. Do you hear, Roderigo?

RODERIGO I'll sell all my land.

Exit.

IAGO

Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;
For I mine own gained knowledge^o should profane
If I would time expend with such snipe
But for my sport and profit. I hate the Moor,
And it is thought abroad that 'twixt my sheets
H' as done my office. I know not if't be true,
But I, for mere suspicion in that kind,
Will do, as if for surety.^o He holds me well;
The better shall my purpose work on him.
Cassio's a proper^o man. Let me see now:
To get his place, and to plume up my will^o
In double knavery. How? How? Let's see.
After some time, to abuse Othello's ears
That he is too familiar with his wife.
He hath a person and a smooth dispose^o
To be suspected—framed^o to make women false.
The Moor is of a free and open nature
That thinks men honest that but seem to be so;
And will as tenderly be led by th' nose
As asses are.
I have't! It is engendered! Hell and night
Must bring this monstrous birth to the world's light.

[Exit.]

349 sanctimony sacred bond (of marriage) 350 erring wandering 354 compassing encompassing, achieving 360 hearted deep-seated in the heart 361 conjunctive joined 373 gained knowledge i.e., practical, worldly wisdom 379 surety certainty 381 proper handsome 382 plume . . . will many explanations have been offered for this crucial line, which in Q1 reads "make up my will"; the general sense is something like "to make more proud and gratify my ego" 386 dispose manner 387 framed designed

A C T I I

Scene I. [Cyprus.]

Enter MONTANO and two GENTLEMEN [one above].^o

MONTANO

What from the cape can you discern at sea?

FIRST GENTLEMAN

Nothing at all, it is a high-wrought flood.

I cannot 'twixt the heaven and the main
Descry a sail.

MONTANO

Methinks the wind hath spoke aloud at land;

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements.

If it hath ruffianed so upon the sea,

What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,

Can hold the mortise? What shall we hear of this?

SECOND GENTLEMAN

A segregation^o of the Turkish fleet.

For do but stand upon the foaming shore,

The chidden billow seems to pelt the clouds;

The wind-shaked surge, with high and monstrous
main,^o

Seems to cast water on the burning Bear

And quench the guards of th' ever-fixèd pole.^o

I never did like molestation view

On the enchainèd flood.

MONTANO

If that the Turkish fleet

Be not enseltered and embayed, they are drowned;

It is impossible to bear it out.

Enter a [THIRD] GENTLEMAN.

THIRD GENTLEMAN

News, lads! Our wars are done.

The desperate tempest hath so banged the Turks

That their designment halts. A noble ship of Venice

Hath seen a grievous wrack and sufferance^o

On most part of their fleet.

MONTANO

How? Is this true?

THIRD GENTLEMAN The ship is here put in,

A Veronesa; Michael Cassio,

Lieutenant to the warlike Moor Othello,

Is come on shore; the Moor himself at sea,

And is in full commission here for Cyprus.

MONTANO

I am glad on't. 'Tis a worthy governor.

THIRD GENTLEMAN

But this same Cassio, though he speak of comfort

Touching the Turkish loss, yet he looks sadly

And prays the Moor be safe, for they were parted

With foul and violent tempest.

MONTANO

Pray heavens he be;

For I have served him, and the man commands

Like a full soldier. Let's to the seaside, ho!

As well to see the vessel that's come in

II.i.s.d. the Folio arrangement of this scene requires that the First Gentleman stand above—on the upper stage—and act as a lookout, reporting sights that cannot be seen by Montano standing below on the main stage 10 segregation separation 13 main both "ocean" and "strength" 14–15 Seems . . . pole the constellation Ursa Minor contains two stars that are the "guards," or companions, of the "pole," or North Star 23 sufferance damage

As to throw out our eyes for brave Othello,
Even till we make the main and th' aerial blue
An indistinct regard.^o

THIRD GENTLEMAN Come, let's do so; 40
For every minute is expectancy
Of more arrivancie.^o

Enter CASSIO.

CASSIO
Thanks, you the valiant of the warlike isle,
That so approve^o the Moor. O, let the heavens
Give him defense against the elements, 45
For I have lost him on a dangerous sea.

MONTANO
Is he well shipped?

CASSIO
His bark is stoutly timbered, and his pilot
Of very expert and approved allowance;^o
Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death,^o 50
Stand in bold cure.^o
(Within.) "A sail, a sail, a sail!"

CASSIO
What noise?

FIRST GENTLEMAN
The town is empty; on the brow o' th' sea
Stand ranks of people, and they cry, "A sail!"

CASSIO
My hopes do shape him for the governor. 55
[A shot.]

SECOND GENTLEMAN
They do discharge their shot of courtesy:
Our friends at least.

CASSIO I pray you, sir, go forth
And give us truth who 'tis that is arrived.

SECOND GENTLEMAN
I shall.

Exit.

MONTANO
But, good lieutenant, is your general wived? 60
CASSIO
Most fortunately. He hath achieved a maid
That paragon^o description and wild fame;^o
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens,^o
And in th' essential vesture of creation^o
Does tire the ingener.^o

Enter [SECOND] GENTLEMAN.

How now? Who has put in? 65

SECOND GENTLEMAN
'Tis one Iago, ancient to the general.

CASSIO
H'as had most favorable and happy speed:
Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling winds,

The guttered^o rocks and congregated^o sands,
Traitors ensteeped^o to enclog the guiltless keel, 70
As having sense^o of beauty, do omit
Their mortal^o natures, letting go safely by
The divine Desdemona.

MONTANO What is she?

CASSIO
She that I spake of, our great captain's captain,
Left in the conduct of the bold Iago, 75
Whose footing^o here anticipates our thoughts
A se'nnight's^o speed. Great Jove, Othello guard,
And swell his sail with thine own pow'rful breath,
That he may bless this bay with his tall^o ship,
Make love's quick pants in Desdemona's arms, 80
Give renewed fire to our extincted spirits.

Enter DESDEMONA, IAGO, RODERIGO, and EMILIA.

O, behold! The riches of the ship is come on shore!
You men of Cyprus, let her have your knees.

[Kneeling.]

Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heaven,
Before, behind thee, and on every hand, 85
Enwheel thee round.

DESDEMONA I thank you, valiant Cassio.
What tidings can you tell of my lord?

CASSIO
He is not yet arrived, nor know I aught
But that he's well and will be shortly here.

DESDEMONA
O but I fear. How lost you company?

CASSIO
The great contention of sea and skies 90
Parted our fellowship.

(Within.) "A sail, a sail!" [A shot.]

But hark. A sail!

SECOND GENTLEMAN
They give this greeting to the citadel;
This likewise is a friend.

CASSIO See for the news.
[Exit GENTLEMAN.]
Good ancient, you are welcome. [To EMILIA.] Welcome, mistress. 95

Let it not gall your patience, good Iago,
That I extend^o my manners. 'Tis my breeding^o
That gives me this bold show of courtesy.

[Kisses EMILIA.]

IAGO
Sir, would she give you so much of her lips
As of her tongue she oft bestows on me, 100
You would have enough.

DESDEMONA Alas, she has no speech.

IAGO
In faith, too much.
I find it still when I have leave to sleep.^o

69 guttered jagged; congregated gathered 70 ensteeped submerged 71 sense awareness 72 mortal deadly 76 footing landing 77 se'nnight's week's 79 tall brave 97 extend stretch; breeding careful training in manners (Cassio is considerably more the polished gentleman than Iago, and aware of it) 103 still . . . sleep even when she allows me to sleep she continues to scold

39-40 the main . . . regard the sea and sky becomes indistinguishable 42 arrivancie arrivals 44 approve "honor" or, perhaps, "are as warlike and valiant as your governor" 49 approved allowance known and tested 50 not . . .
death not so great as to be in danger 51 Stand . . . cure are likely to be restored 62 paragons exceeds; wild fame extravagant report 63 quirks . . . pens ingenuities of praising pens 64 essential . . . creation essential human nature as given by the Creator 65 tire the ingener a difficult line, which probably means something like "outdo the human ability to imagine and picture"

Marry, before your ladyship,^o I grant,
 She puts her tongue a little in her heart
 And chides with thinking.

EMILIA You have little cause to say so.

IAGO
 Come on, come on! You are pictures^o out of
 door,
 Bells in your parlors, wildcats in your kitchens,
 Saints in your injuries,^o devils being offended, Players in your housewifery,^o and housewives in your beds.

DESDEMONA
 O, fie upon thee, slanderer!

IAGO
 Nay, it is true, or else I am a Turk:
 You rise to play, and go to bed to work.

EMILIA
 You shall not write my praise.

IAGO No, let me not.

DESDEMONA
 What wouldst write of me, if thou shouldst praise
 me?

IAGO
 O gentle lady, do not put me to't,
 For I am nothing if not critical.

DESDEMONA
 Come on, assay. There's one gone to the harbor?

IAGO
 Ay, madam.

DESDEMONA [Aside.]
 I am not merry; but I do beguile
 The thing I am by seeming otherwise.—
 Come, how wouldst thou praise me?

IAGO
 I am about it; but indeed my invention Comes from my pate as bird lime^o does from frieze^o—
 It plucks out brains and all. But my Muse labors,
 And thus she is delivered:
 If she be fair^o and wise: fairness and wit,
 The one's for use, the other useth it.

DESDEMONA
 Well praised. How if she be black^o and witty?

IAGO
 If she be black, and thereto have a wit,
 She'll find a white that shall her blackness fit.

DESDEMONA
 Worse and worse!

EMILIA
 How if fair and foolish?

IAGO
 She never yet was foolish that was fair,
 For even her folly helped her to an heir.

DESDEMONA These are old fond^o paradoxes to make fools laugh i' th' alehouse. What miserable praise hast thou for her that's foul and foolish?

IAGO
 There's none so foul, and foolish thereunto,
 But does foul pranks which fair and wise ones do.

DESDEMONA O heavy ignorance. Thou praisest the worst best. But what praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed—one that in the authority of her merit did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself?^o

IAGO
 She that was ever fair, and never proud;
 Had tongue at will, and yet was never loud;
 Never lacked gold, and yet went never gay;
 Fled from her wish, and yet said "Now I may";
 She that being angered, her revenge being nigh,
 Bade her wrong stay, and her displeasure fly;
 She that in wisdom never was so frail
 To change the cod's head for the salmon's tail;^o
 She that could think, and nev'r disclose her mind;
 See suitors following, and not look behind:
 She was a wight^o (if ever such wights were)—

DESDEMONA To do what?

IAGO
 To suckle fools and chronicle small beer.^o
 DESDEMONA O most lame and impotent conclusion.
 Do not learn of him, Emilia, though he be thy husband.
 How say you, Cassio? Is he not a most profane and liberal^o counselor?

CASSIO He speaks home,^o madam. You may relish him more in^o the soldier than in the scholar. [Takes Desdemona's hand.]

IAGO [Aside.] He takes her by the palm. Ay, well said, whisper! With as little a web as this will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do! I will gyve^o thee in thine own courtship.—You say true;
 'tis so, indeed!—If such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenantry, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so oft—which now again you are most apt to play the sir^o in. Very good! Well kissed! An excellent curtsy!^o 'Tis so, indeed. Yet again your fingers to your lips? Would they were clyster pipes^o for your sake! [Trumpets within.] The Moor! I know his trumpet.^o

CASSIO 'Tis truly so.

DESDEMONA Let's meet him and receive him.

CASSIO Lo, where he comes.

Enter OTHELLO and ATTENDANTS.

OTHELLO
 O my fair warrior!

DESDEMONA My dear Othello.

104 before your ladyship in your presence 107 pictures models (of virtue) 109 in your injuries when you injure others 110 housewifery this word can mean "careful, economical household management," and Iago would then be accusing women of only pretending to be good housekeepers, while in bed they are either (1) economical of their favors, or more likely (2) serious and dedicated workers 124 bird lime a sticky substance put on branches to catch birds; frieze roughcloth 127 fair light-complexioned
 129 black Brunette

136 fond foolish 143-45 one . . . itself a woman so honest and deserving that even malice would be forced to approve of her 153 To . . . tail to exchange something valuable for something useless 156 wight person 158 chronicle small beer keep household accounts (the most trivial of occupations, in Iago's opinion) 162 liberal licentious 163 speaks home thrusts deeply with his speech 163-64 relish . . . in enjoy him more as 168 gyve bind 172 the sir the fashionable gentleman 173 curtsy courtesy, i.e., bow 175 clyster pipes enema tubes 176 his trumpet great men had their own distinctive calls

OTHELLO

It gives me wonder great as my content
 To see you here before me. O my soul's joy!
 If after every tempest come such calms,
 May the winds blow till they have wakened death.
 And let the laboring bark climb hills of seas 185
 Olympus-high, and duck again as low
 As hell's from heaven. If it were now to die,
 'Twere now to be most happy; for I fear
 My soul hath her content so absolute
 That not another comfort like to this 190
 Succeeds in unknown fate.

DESDEMONA

The heavens forbid

But that our loves and comforts should increase
 Even as our days do grow.

OTHELLO

Amen to that, sweet powers!

I cannot speak enough of this content;
 It stops me here [touches his heart]; it is too much of joy. 195
 And this, and this, the greatest discords be [They kiss.]

That e'er our hearts shall make!

IAGO [Aside.]

O, you are well tuned now!

But I'll set down the pegs° that make this music,
 As honest as I am.

OTHELLO

Come, let us to the castle.

News, friends! Our wars are done; the Turks are drowned. 200

How does my old acquaintance of this isle?
 Honey, you shall be well desired in Cyprus;
 I have found great love amongst them. O my sweet,
 I prattle out of fashion, and I dote
 In mine own comforts. I prithee, good Iago, 205
 Go to the bay and disembark my coffers.
 Bring thou the master to the citadel;
 He is a good one, and his worthiness
 Does challenge° much respect. Come, Desdemona,
 Once more well met at Cyprus. 210

Exit OTHELLO and DESDEMONA [and all but IAGO and RODERIGO].

IAGO [To an ATTENDANT.]

Do thou meet me presently at the harbor. [To RODERIGO.] Come hither. If thou be'st valiant (as they say base men being in love have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them), list me. The lieutenant tonight 215 watches on the court of guard.° First, I must tell thee, this: Desdemona is directly in love with him.

RODERIGO With him? Why, 'tis not possible.

IAGO Lay thy finger thus [puts his finger to his lips], and let thy soul be instructed. Mark me with what 220 violence she first loved the Moor but for bragging and telling her fantastical lies. To love him still for prating? Let not thy discreet heart think it. Her eye must be fed. And what delight shall she have to look on the devil? When the blood is made dull with the 225 act of sport, there should be a game° to inflame it and to give satiety a fresh appetite, loveliness in favor,° sympathy in years,° manners, and beauties;

all which the Moor is defective in. Now for want of these required conveniences,° her delicate tenderness 230 will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge,° disrelish and abhor the Moor. Very nature will instruct her in it and compel her to some second choice. Now, sir, this granted—as it is a most pregnant° and unforced position—who stands so eminent 235 in the degree of this fortune as Cassio does? A knave very voluble; no further conscionable° than in putting on the mere form of civil and humane° seeming for the better compass of his salt° and most hidden loose° affection. Why, none! Why, none! A slipper° and 240 subtle knave, a finder of occasion, that has an eye can stamp and counterfeit advantages, though true advantage never present itself. A devilish knave. Besides, the knave is handsome, young, and hath all those requisites in him that folly and green minds look after. 245
 A pestilent complete knave, and the woman hath found him already.

RODERIGO I cannot believe that in her; she's full of most blessed condition.

IAGO Blessed fig's-end! The wine she drinks is made 250 of grapes. If she had been blessed, she would never have loved the Moor. Blessed pudding! Didst thou not see her paddle with the palm of his hand? Didst not mark that?

RODERIGO Yes, that I did; but that was but courtesy. 255

IAGO Lechery, by this hand! [Extends his index finger.]
 An index° and obscure prologue to the history of lust and foul thoughts. They met so near with their lips that their breaths embraced together. Villainous thoughts, Roderigo. When these mutualities so 260 marshal the way, hard at hand comes the master and main exercise, th' incorporate° conclusion: Pish!
 But, sir, be you ruled by me. I have brought you from Venice. Watch you tonight; for the command, I'll lay't upon you. Cassio knows you not. I'll not be 265 far from you. Do you find some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or tainting° his discipline, or from what other course you please which the time shall more favorably minister.

RODERIGO Well. 270

IAGO Sir, he's rash and very sudden in choler,° and haply may strike at you. Provoke him that he may; for even out of that will I cause these of Cyprus to mutiny, whose qualification shall come into no true taste° again but by the displanting of Cassio. So 275 shall you have a shorter journey to your desires by the means I shall then have to prefer them; and the impediment most profitably removed without the which there were no expectation of our prosperity.

RODERIGO I will do this if you can bring it to any 280 opportunity.

IAGO I warrant thee. Meet me by and by at the citadel.
 I must fetch his necessaries ashore. Farewell.

RODERIGO Adieu.

Exit.

198 set . . . pegs loosen the strings (to produce discord) 209 challenge require, exact 216 court of guard guardhouse 226 game sport (with the added sense of "gamey," "rank") 228 favor countenance, appearance; sympathy in years sameness of age

230 conveniences advantages 231 heave the gorge vomit
 234-35 pregnant likely 237 no further conscionable having no more conscience 238 humane polite 239 salt lecherous; loose immoral 240 slipper slippery 257 index pointer 262 incorporate carnal 267 tainting discrediting 271 choler anger 274-75 qualification . . . taste i.e., appeasement will not be brought about (wine was "qualified"
 by adding water)

IAGO

That Cassio loves her, I do well believe 't;
 That she loves him, 'tis apt and of great credit.
 The Moor, howbeit that I endure him not,
 Is of a constant, loving, noble nature,
 And I dare think he'll prove to Desdemona
 A most dear^o husband. Now I do love her too;
 Not out of absolute^o lust, though peradventure^o
 I stand accountant for as great a sin,
 But partly led to diet^o my revenge,
 For that I do suspect the lusty Moor
 Hath leaped into my seat; the thought whereof
 Doth, like a poisonous mineral, gnaw my inwards;
 And nothing can or shall content my soul
 Till I am evened with him, wife for wife.
 Or failing so, yet that I put the Moor
 At least into a jealousy so strong
 That judgment cannot cure. Which thing to do,
 If this poor trash of Venice, whom I trace^o
 For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,
 I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip,
 Abuse him to the Moor in the right garb^o
 (For I fear Cassio with my nightcap too),
 Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me
 For making him egregiously an ass
 And practicing upon^o his peace and quiet,
 Even to madness. 'Tis here, but yet confused:
 Knavery's plain face is never seen till used. Exit.

Scene II. [A street.]

Enter Othello's HERALD with a proclamation.

HERALD It is Othello's pleasure, our noble and valiant general, that upon certain tidings now arrived importing the mere perdition^o of the Turkish fleet, every man put himself into triumph. Some to dance, some to make bonfires, each man to what sport and revels his addition^o leads him. For, besides these beneficial news, it is the celebration of his nuptial. So much was his pleasure should be proclaimed. All offices^o are open, and there is full liberty of feasting from this present hour of five till the bell have told eleven.
 Bless the isle of Cyprus and out noble general Othello!
Exit.

Scene III. [The citadel of Cyprus.]

Enter OTHELLO, DESDEMONA, CASSIO, and ATTENDANTS.

OTHELLO

Good Michael, look you to the guard tonight.
 Let's teach ourselves that honorable stop,
 Not to outsport discretion.

290 dear expensive 291 out of absolute absolutely out of; peradventure perchance 293 diet feed 302 trace most editors emend to "trash," meaning to hang weights on a dog to slow his hunting; but "trace" clearly means something like
 "put on the trace" or "set on the track" 305 right garb
 "proper fashion" 309 practicing upon scheming to destroy
 II.ii.3 mere perdition absolute destruction 6 addition rank
 8 offices kitchens and storerooms of food

CASSIO

285 Iago hath direction what to do;
 But notwithstanding, with my personal eye
 Will I look to't. 5

OTHELLO Iago is most honest.

Michael, good night. Tomorrow with your earliest 290 Let me have speech with you. [To DESDEMONA.]

Come, my dear love,
 The purchase made, the fruits are to ensue,
 That profit's yet to come 'tween me and you. 10
 Good night.

295 Exit [OTHELLO, with DESDEMONA and ATTENDANTS].

Enter IAGO.

CASSIO Welcome, Iago. We must to the watch.

300 IAGO Not this hour, lieutenant; 'tis not yet ten o' th' clock. Our general cast^o us thus early for the love of his Desdemona; who let us not therefore blame. He 15 hath not yet made wanton the night with her, and she is sport for Jove.

305 CASSIO She's a most exquisite lady.

IAGO And, I'll warrant her, full of game.

CASSIO Indeed, she's a most fresh and delicate 20 creature.

IAGO What an eye she has! Methinks it sounds a parley to provocation.

310 CASSIO An inviting eye; and yet methinks right modest. 25

IAGO And when she speaks, is it not an alarum^o to love?

CASSIO She is indeed perfection.

IAGO Well, happiness to their sheets! Come, lieutenant, I have a stoup^o of wine, and here without are a 30 brace of Cyprus gallants that would fain have a measure to the health of black Othello.

CASSIO Not tonight, good Iago. I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking; I could well wish courtesy would invent some other custom of enter- 35 tainment.

IAGO O, they are our friends. But one cup! I'll drink
 for you.

CASSIO I have drunk but one cup tonight, and that was craftily qualified^o too; and behold what innovation 40 it makes here. I am unfortunate in the infirmity and dare not task my weakness with any more.

IAGO What, man! 'Tis a night of revels, the gallants desire it.

CASSIO Where are they?

IAGO Here, at the door. I pray you call them in.

CASSIO I'll do't, but it dislikes me. Exit. 45

IAGO

If I can fasten but one cup upon him
 With that which he hath drunk tonight already,
 He'll be as full of quarrel and offense 50
 As my young mistress' dog. Now, my sick fool
 Roderigo,
 Whom love hath turned almost the wrong side out,
 To Desdemona hath tonight caroused
 Potations pottle-deep;^o and he's to watch.

II.iii.14 cast dismissed 26 alarum the call to action, "general quarters" 30 stoup two-quart tankard 40 qualified diluted 54 pottle-deep to the bottom of the cup

Three else° of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
That hold their honors in a wary distance,
The very elements of this warlike isle,
Have I tonight flustered with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Now, 'mongst this flock of drunkards

Am I to put our Cassio in some action
That may offend the isle. But here they come.

Enter CASSIO, MONTANO, and GENTLEMEN.

If consequence do but approve my dream,
My boat sails freely, both with wind and stream.

CASSIO 'Fore God, they have given me a rouse° already.

MONTANO Good faith, a little one; not past a pint, as I am a soldier.

IAGO Some wine, ho! [Sings.]
And let me the canakin clink, clink;
And let me the canakin clink.
A soldier's a man;
O man's life's but a span,
Why then, let a soldier drink.

Some wine, boys!

CASSIO 'Fore God, an excellent song!

IAGO I learned it in England, where indeed they are most potent in potting. Your Dane, your German, and your swag-bellied° Hollander—Drink, ho!—are nothing to your English.

CASSIO Is your Englishman so exquisite° in his drinking?

IAGO Why, he drinks you with facility your Dane dead drunk; he sweats not to overthrow your Almain;
he gives your Hollander a vomit ere the next pottle can be filled.

CASSIO To the health of our general!

MONTANO I am for it, lieutenant, and I'll do you justice.

IAGO O sweet England! [Sings.]
King Stephen was and a worthy peer;
His breeches cost him but a crown;
He held them sixpence all too dear,
With that he called the tailor lown°.
He was a wight of high renown,
And thou art but of low degree:
'Tis pride that pulls the country down;
And take thine auld cloak about thee.

Some wine, ho!

CASSIO 'Fore God, this is a more exquisite song than the other.

IAGO Will you hear't again?

CASSIO No, for I hold him to be unworthy of his place that does those things. Well, God's above all;
and there be souls must be saved, and there be souls must not be saved.

IAGO It's true, good lieutenant.

CASSIO For mine own part—no offense to the general,
nor any man of quality—I hope to be saved.

IAGO And so do I too, lieutenant.

CASSIO Ay, but, by your leave, not before me. The lieutenant is to be saved before the ancient. Let's have 55 no more of this; let's to our affairs.—God forgive us our sins!—Gentlemen, let's look to our business. Do not think, gentlemen, I am drunk. This is my ancient; this is my right hand, and this is my left. I am not drunk now. I can stand well enough, and I speak well enough. 115

60 GENTLEMEN Excellent well!

CASSIO Why, very well then. You must not think then that I am drunk. Exit. 120

MONTANO

To th' platform, masters. Come, let's set the watch.

IAGO

You see this fellow that is gone before.
He's a soldier fit to stand by Caesar
And give direction; and do but see his vice.
'Tis to his virtue a just equinox°,
The one as long as th' other. 'Tis pity of him. 125
I fear the trust Othello puts him in,
On some odd time of his infirmity,
Will shake this island.

MONTANO But is he often thus?

IAGO

'Tis evermore his prologue to his sleep;
He'll watch the horologe a double set°
If drink rock not his cradle. 130

MONTANO It were well

The general were put in mind of it.
Perhaps he sees it not, or his good nature
Prizes the virtue that appears in Cassio
And looks not on his evils. Is not this true? 135

Enter RODERIGO.

IAGO [Aside.]

How now, Roderigo?
I pray you after the lieutenant, go!
[Exit RODERIGO.]

MONTANO

And 'tis great pity that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place as his own second
With one of an ingraft° infirmity. 140
It were an honest action to say so
To the Moor.

IAGO Not I, for this fair island!
I do love Cassio well and would do much
To cure him of this evil.

("Help! Help!" Within.)

But hark! What noise? 145

Enter CASSIO, pursuing RODERIGO.

CASSIO

Zounds, you rogue! You rascal!

MONTANO

What's the matter, lieutenant?

CASSIO

A knave teach me my duty? I'll beat the knave into a twiggen° bottle.

RODERIGO

Beat me?

55 else others 56 hold . . . distance are scrupulous in maintaining their honor 64 rouse drink 78 swag-bellied hanging 80 exquisite superb 93 lown lout

125 just equinox exact balance (of dark and light) 131 watch . . . set stay awake twice around the clock 141 ingraft ingrained 148 twiggen wicker-covered

CASSIO

Dost thou prate, rogue?

150

[Strikes him.]

MONTANO

Nay, good lieutenant! I pray you, sir, hold your hand.

[Stays him.]

CASSIO

Let me go, sir, or I'll knock you o'er the mazzard.^o

MONTANO

Come, come, you're drunk!

CASSIO

Drunk?

[They fight.]

IAGO [Aside to RODERIGO.]

Away, I say! Go out and cry a mutiny!

155

[Exit RODERIGO.]

Nay, good lieutenant. God's will, gentlemen!

Help, ho! Lieutenant. Sir. Montano.

Help, masters! Here's a goodly watch indeed!

[A bell rung.]

Who's that which rings the bell! Diablo, ho!

The town will rise. God's will, lieutenant,

You'll be ashamed forever.

160

Enter OTHELLO and ATTENDANTS.

OTHELLO

What is the matter here?

MONTANO

Zounds, I bleed still. I am hurt to the death. He dies.

[He and CASSIO fight again.]

OTHELLO

Hold for your lives!

IAGO

Hold, ho! Lieutenant. Sir. Montano. Gentlemen!

Have you forgot all place of sense and duty?

165

Hold! The general speaks to you. Hold, for shame!

OTHELLO

Why, how now, ho? From whence ariseth this?

Are we turned Turks, and to ourselves do that

Which heaven hath forbid the Ottomites?^o

For Christian shame put by this barbarous brawl!

170

He that stirs next to carve for his own rage

Holds his soul light;^o he dies upon his motion.

Silence that dreadful bell! It frights the isle

From her propriety.^o What is the matter, masters?

175

Honest Iago, that looks dead with grieving,

Speak. Who began this? On thy love, I charge thee.

IAGO

I do not know. Friends all, but now, even now,

In quarter^o and in terms like bride and groom

Devesting them for bed; and then, but now—

180

As if some planet had unwitting men—

Swords out, and tilting one at other's breasts

In opposition bloody. I cannot speak

Any beginning to this peevish odds,^o

And would in action glorious I had lost

Those legs that brought me to a part of it!

185

OTHELLO

How comes it, Michael, you are thus forgot?

CASSIO

I pray you pardon me; I cannot speak.

OTHELLO

Worthy Montano, you were wont to be civil;

The gravity and stillness of your youth

The world hath noted, and your name is great 190

In mouths of wisest censure.^o What's the matter

That you unlace^o your reputation thus

And spend your rich opinion^o for the name

Of a night-brawler? Give me answer to it.

MONTANO

Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger.

195

Your officer, Iago, can inform you,

While I spare speech, which something now offends^o

me,

Of all that I do know; nor know I aught

By me that's said or done amiss this night,

Unless self-charity be sometimes a vice,

200

And to defend ourselves it be a sin

When violence assails us.

OTHELLO

Now, by heaven,

My blood begins my safer guides to rule,

And passion, having my best judgment collied,^o

Assays to lead the way. If I once stir

205

Or do but lift this arm, the best of you

Shall sink in my rebuke. Give me to know

How this foul rout began, who set it on;

And he that is approved in this offense,

Though he had twinned with me, both at a birth,

210

Shall lose me. What? In a town of war

Yet wild, the people's hearts brimful of fear,

To manage^o private and domestic quarrel?

In night, and on the court and guard of safety?

'Tis monstrous. Iago, who began't?

215

MONTANO

If partially affined, or leagued in office,^o

Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,

Thou art no soldier.

IAGO

Touch me not so near.

I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth

Than it should do offense to Michael Cassio.

220

Yet I persuade myself to speak the truth

Shall nothing wrong him. This it is, general.

Montano and myself being in speech,

There comes a fellow crying out for help,

175

And Cassio following him with determined sword

225

To execute upon him. Sir, this gentleman

Steps in to Cassio and entreats his pause.

Myself the crying fellow did pursue,

Lest by his clamor—as it so fell out—

The town might fall in fright. He, swift of foot,

230

Outran my purpose; and I returned then rather

For that I heard the clink and fall of swords,

152 mazzard head 169 heaven . . . Ottomites i.e., by sending the storm which dispersed the Turks 172 Holds . . . light values his soul lightly 174 propriety proper order 178 In quarter on duty 183 odds quarrel

191 censure judgment 192 unlace undo (the term refers specifically to the dressing of a wild boar killed in the hunt) 193 opinion reputation 197 offends harms, hurts 204 collied darkened 213 manage conduct 216 If . . . office if you are partial because you are related ("affined") or the brother officer (of Cassio)

And Cassio high in oath; which till tonight
I ne'er might say before. When I came back—
For this was brief—I found them close together
At blow and thrust, even as again they were
When you yourself did part them.
More of this matter cannot I report;
But men are men; the best sometimes forget.
Though Cassio did some little wrong to him,
As men in rage strike those that wish them best,
Yet surely Cassio I believe received
From him that fled some strange indignity,
Which patience could not pass.^o

OTHELLO I know, Iago,
Thy honesty and love doth mince^o this matter,
Making it light to Cassio. Cassio, I love thee;
But never more be officer of mine.

Enter DESDEMONA, attended.

Look if my gentle love be not raised up.
I'll make thee an example.

DESDEMONA What is the matter, dear?

OTHELLO
All's well, sweeting; come away to bed. 250

[To MONTANO.]

Sir, for your hurts, myself will be your surgeon.
Lead him off. [MONTANO led off.]

Iago, look with care about the town
And silence those whom this vile brawl distracted.
Come, Desdemona; 'tis the soldiers' life 255
To have their balmy slumbers waked with strife.
Exit, [with all but IAGO and CASSIO].

IAGO
What, are you hurt, lieutenant?

CASSIO
Ay, past all surgery.

IAGO
Marry, God forbid!

CASSIO Reputation, reputation, reputation! O, I have 260 lost my reputation! I have lost the immortal part of myself, and what remains is bestial. My reputation, Iago, my reputation.

IAGO As I am an honest man, I had thought you had received some bodily wound. There is more sense^o 265 in that than in reputation. Reputation is an idle and most false imposition,^o oft got without merit and lost without deserving. You have lost no reputation at all unless you repute yourself such a loser. What, man, there are more ways to recover the general 270 again. You are but now cast in his mood^o—a punishment more in policy^o than in malice—even so as one would beat his offenseless dog to affright an imperious lion. Sue to him again, and he's yours.

CASSIO I will rather sue to be despised than to deceive 275 so good a commander with so slight, so drunken, and so indiscreet an officer. Drunk! And speak parrot!^o And squabble! Swagger! Swear! and discourse fustian^o with one's own shadow! O thou invisible spirit of wine, if thou hast no name to be known by, 280

let us call thee devil!

235 IAGO What was he that you followed with your sword? What had he done to you?

CASSIO I know not.

IAGO Is't possible? 285

240 CASSIO I remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly: a quarrel, but nothing wherefore. O God, that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains! that we should with joy, pleasance, revel, and applause transform ourselves into 290 beasts!

IAGO Why, but you are now well enough. How came you thus recovered? 245

CASSIO It hath pleased the devil drunkenness to give place to the devil wrath. One unperfectness shows me 295 another, to make me frankly despise myself.

IAGO Come, you are too severe a moraler. As the time, the place, and the condition of this country stands, I could heartily wish this had not befall'n; but since it is as it is, mend it for your own good. 300

CASSIO I will ask him for my place again: he shall tell me I am a drunkard. Had I as many mouths as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast!
O strange! Every inordinate cup is unblest, and the 305 ingredient is a devil.

IAGO Come, come, good wine is a good familiar creature if it be well used. Exclaim no more against it.
And, good lieutenant, I think you think I love you.

CASSIO I have well approved it, sir. I drunk? 310

IAGO You or any man living may be drunk at a time, man. I tell you what you shall do. Our general's wife is now the general. I may say so in this respect, for that he hath devoted and given up himself to the contemplation, mark, and devotement of her parts^o 315 and graces. Confess yourself freely to her; importune her help to put you in your place again. She is of so free, so kind, so apt, so blessed a disposition she holds it a vice in her goodness not to do more than she is requested. This broken joint between you and her 320 husband entreat her to splinter;^o and my fortunes against any lay^o worth naming, this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before.

CASSIO You advise me well.

IAGO I protest, in the sincerity of love and honest 325 kindness.

CASSIO I think it freely; and betimes in the morning I will beseech the virtuous Desdemona to undertake for me. I am desperate of my fortunes if they check^o me.

IAGO You are in the right. Good night, lieutenant; I 330 must to the watch.

CASSIO Good night, honest Iago. Exit CASSIO.

IAGO

And what's he then that says I play the villain,
When this advice is free^o I give, and honest,
Probal to^o thinking, and indeed the course 335
To win the Moor again? For 'tis most easy
Th' inclining^o Desdemona to subdue

244 pass allow to pass 245 mince cut up (i.e., tell only part of) 265 sense physical feeling 267 imposition external thing 271 cast . . . mood dismissed because of his anger 272 in policy politically necessary 277 speak parrot gabble without sense 278–79 discourse fustian speak nonsense (fustian was a coarse cotton cloth used for stuffing)

315 devotement . . . parts devotion to her qualities 321 splinter splint 322 lay wager 329 check repulse 334 free generous and open 335 Probal to provable by 337
inclining inclined (to be helpful)

In any honest suit; she's framed as fruitful°
 As the free elements.° And then for her
 To win the Moor—were't to renounce his baptism, 340
 All seals and symbols of redeemed sin—
 His soul is so enfeathered to her love
 That she may make, unmake, do what she list,
 Even as her appetite° shall play the god
 With his weak function.° How am I then a villain 345
 To counsel Cassio to this parallel course,
 Directly to his good? Divinity of hell!
 When devils will the blackest sins put on,°
 They do suggest at first with heavenly shows,°
 As I do now. For whiles this honest fool
 Plies Desdemona to repair his fortune,
 And she for him pleads strongly to the Moor,
 I'll pour this pestilence into his ear:
 That she repeals him° for her body's lust;
 And by how much she strives to do him good, 355
 She shall undo her credit with the Moor.
 So will I turn her virtue into pitch,
 And out of her own goodness make the net
 That shall enmesh them all. How now, Roderigo?

Enter RODERIGO.

RODERIGO I do follow here in the chase, not like a 360 hound that hunts, but one that fills up the cry.° My money is almost spent; I have been tonight exceedingly well cudgeled; and I think the issue will be, I shall have so much experience for my pains; and so, with no money at all, and a little more wit, return again to 365 Venice.

IAGO
 How poor are they that have not patience!
 What wound did ever heal but by degrees?
 Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft;
 And wit depends on dilatory time. 370
 Does't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee,
 And thou by that small hurt hath cashiered Cassio.
 Though other things grow fair against the sun,
 Yet fruits that blossom first will first be ripe.
 Content thyself awhile. By the mass, 'tis morning! 375
 Pleasure and action make the hours seem short.
 Retire thee; go where thou art billeted.
 Away, I say! Thou shalt know more hereafter.
 Nay, get thee gone! Exit RODERIGO.

Two things are to be done:
 My wife must move° for Cassio to her mistress; 380
 I'll set her on;
 Myself awhile° to draw the Moor apart
 And bring him jump° when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife. Ay, that's the way!
 Dull not device by coldness and delay. Exit. 385

ACT III

Scene I. [A street.]

Enter CASSIO [and] MUSICIANS.

CASSIO

Masters, play here. I will content your pains.° Something that's brief; and bid "Good morrow, general."

[They play.]

[Enter CLOWN.°]

350 CLOWN Why, masters, have your instruments been in Naples° that they speak i' th' nose thus?

MUSICIAN How, sir, how? 5

CLOWN Are these, I pray you, wind instruments?

MUSICIAN Ay, marry, are they, sir.

355 CLOWN O, thereby hangs a tale.

MUSICIAN Whereby hangs a tale, sir?

CLOWN Marry, sir, by many a wind instrument that I 10 know. But, masters, here's money for you; and the general so likes your music that he desires you, for love's sake, to make no more noise with it.

MUSICIAN Well, sir, we will not.

CLOWN If you have any music that may not be heard, 15 to't again. But, as they say, to hear music the general does not greatly care.

MUSICIAN We have none such, sir.

CLOWN Then put up your pipes in your bag, for I'll away. Go, vanish into air, away! Exit MUSICIANS. 20

CASSIO Dost thou hear me, mine honest friend?

CLOWN No. I hear not your honest friend. I hear you.

CASSIO Prithee keep up thy quilllets.° There's a poor piece of gold for thee. If the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her there's one 25 Cassio entreats her a little favor of speech. Wilt thou do this?

CLOWN She is stirring, sir. If she will stir hither, I shall seem to notify unto her.° Exit CLOWN.

Enter IAGO.

CASSIO

In happy time, Iago.

IAGO You have not been abed then? 30

CASSIO

Why no, the day had broke before we parted.

I have made bold, Iago, to send in to your wife;

My suit to her is that she will to virtuous Desdemona
 Procure me some access.

IAGO I'll send her to you presently, 35

And I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor

Out of the way, that your converse and business
 May be more free.

CASSIO

I humbly thank you for't.

Exit [IAGO].

I never knew

A Florentine° more kind and honest.

338 framed as fruitful made as generous 339 elements
 i.e., basic nature 344 appetite liking 345 function thought 348 put on advance, further 349 shows appearances
 354 repeals him asks for (Cassio's reinstatement) 361 fills . . . cry makes up one of the hunting pack, adding to the noise but not actually tracking 380 move petition 382 awhile at the same time 383 jump at the precise moment and place

III.i.1 content your pains reward your efforts 2 s.d. Clown fool 4 Naples this may refer either to the Neapolitan nasal tone, or to syphilis—rife in Naples—which breaks down the nose 23 quilllets puns 29 seem . . . her the Clown is mocking Cassio's overly elegant manner of speaking 39 Florentine i.e., Iago is as kind as if he were from Cassio's home town, Florence

Enter EMILIA.

EMILIA

Good morrow, good lieutenant. I am sorry
For your displeasure;° but all will sure be well. 40
The general and his wife are talking of it,
And she speaks for you stoutly. The Moor replies
That he you hurt is of great fame in Cyprus
And great affinity,° and that in wholesome wisdom 45
He might not but refuse you. But he protests he loves
you,
And needs no other suitor but his likings
To bring you in again.

CASSIO Yet I beseech you,
If you think fit, or that it may be done,
Give me advantage of some brief discourse 50
With Desdemona alone.

EMILIA Pray you come in.
I will bestow you where you shall have time
To speak your bosom° freely.

CASSIO I am much bound to you.
[Exeunt.]

Scene II. [The citadel.]

Enter OTHELLO, IAGO, and GENTLEMEN.

OTHELLO
These letters give, Iago, to the pilot
And by him do my duties to the Senate.
That done, I will be walking on the works;
Repair° there to me.

IAGO Well, my good lord, I'll do't.

OTHELLO
This fortification, gentlemen, shall we see't? 5
GENTLEMEN We'll wait upon your lordship. Exeunt.

Scene III. [The citadel.]

Enter DESDEMONA, CASSIO, and EMILIA.

DESDEMONA
Be thou assured, good Cassio, I will do
All my abilities in thy behalf.

EMILIA
Good madam, do. I warrant it grieves my husband
As if the cause were his.

DESDEMONA
O, that's an honest fellow. Do not doubt, Cassio, 5
But I will have my lord and you again
As friendly as you were.

CASSIO Bounteous madam,
Whatever shall become of Michael Cassio,
He's never anything but your true servant.

DESDEMONA
I know't; I thank you. You do love my lord. 10
You have known him long, and be you well assured

He shall in strangeness stand no farther off
Than in a politic distance.°

CASSIO Ay, but, lady,
That policy may either last so long, 15
Or feed upon such nice° and waterish diet,
Or breed itself so out of circumstances,°
That, I being absent, and my place supplied,°
My general will forget my love and service.

DESDEMONA
Do not doubt° that; before Emilia here 20
I give thee warrant of thy place. Assure thee,
If I do vow a friendship, I'll perform it
To the last article. My lord shall never rest;
I'll watch him tame° and talk him out of patience;
His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrift;°
I'll intermingle everything he does 25
With Cassio's suit. Therefore be merry, Cassio,
For thy solicitor shall rather die
Than give thy cause away.

Enter OTHELLO and IAGO [at a distance].

EMILIA
Madam, here comes my lord.

CASSIO
Madam, I'll take my leave. 30

DESDEMONA
Why, stay, and hear me speak.

CASSIO
Madam, not now. I am very ill at ease,
Unfit for mine own purposes.

DESDEMONA
Well, do your discretion. Exit CASSIO.

IAGO
Ha! I like not that. 35
OTHELLO What dost thou say?

IAGO
Nothing, my lord; or if—I know not what.

OTHELLO
Was not that Cassio parted from my wife?

IAGO
Cassio, my lord? No, sure, I cannot think it
That he would steal away so guilty-like,
Seeing you coming.

OTHELLO I do believe 'twas he. 40

DESDEMONA [Coming to them.]
How now, my lord?

I have been talking with a suitor here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure.

OTHELLO
Who is't you mean?

DESDEMONA
Why, your lieutenant, Cassio. Good my lord, 45
If I have any grace or power to move you,
His present° reconciliation take.
For if he be not one that truly loves you,
That errs in ignorance, and not in cunning,

41 displeasure discomforting 45 affinity family 53 bosom inmost thoughts
III.ii.4 Repair go

III.iii.12-13 He . . . distance he shall act no more distant to you than is necessary for political reasons 15 nice trivial 16
Or . . . circumstances or grow so on the basis of accidental happenings and political needs 17 supplied filled 19 doubt imagine 23 watch him tame animals were tamed by being kept awake 24 board a shrift table (seem) a confessional 47 present immediate

I have no judgment in an honest face.
I prithee call him back.

OTHELLO Went he hence now?

DESDEMONA
I' sooth so humbled
That he hath left part of his grief with me
To suffer with him. Good love, call him back.

OTHELLO
Not now, sweet Desdemon; some other time.

DESDEMONA
But shall't be shortly?

OTHELLO The sooner, sweet, for you.

DESDEMONA
Shall't be tonight at supper?

OTHELLO No, not tonight.

DESDEMONA
Tomorrow dinner then?

OTHELLO I shall not dine at home;
I meet the captains at the citadel.

DESDEMONA
Why then, tomorrow night, on Tuesday morn,
On Tuesday noon, or night, on Wednesday morn.
I prithee name the time, but let it not Exceed three days. In faith, he's penitent;
And yet his trespass, in our common reason (Save that, they say, the wards must make example
Out of her best), is not almost a fault
T' incur a private check.^o When shall he come?
Tell me, Othello. I wonder in my soul
What you would ask me that I should deny
Or stand so mamm'ring^o on. What? Michael Cassio, 70
That came awooing with you, and so many a time,
When I have spoke of you dispraisingly,
Hath ta'en your part—to have so much to do
To bring him in? By'r Lady, I could do much—

OTHELLO
Prithee no more. Let him come when he will!
I will deny thee nothing.

DESDEMONA Why, this is not a boon;
'Tis as I should entreat you wear your gloves,
Or feed on nourishing dishes, or keep you warm,
Or sue to you to do a peculiar profit^o
To your own person. Nay, when I have a suit
Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed,
It shall be full of poise^o and difficult weight,
And fearful to be granted.

OTHELLO I will deny thee nothing!
Whereon I do beseech thee grant me this,
To leave me but a little to myself.

DESDEMONA
Shall I deny you? No. Farewell, my lord.

OTHELLO
Farewell, my Desdemona: I'll come to thee straight.^o

DESDEMONA
Emilia, come. Be as your fancies teach you;
Whate'er you be, I am obedient. Exit, [with EMILIA].

OTHELLO
Excellent wretch! Perdition catch my soul 90

50 But I do love thee! And when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again.

IAGO
My noble lord—

OTHELLO What dost thou say, Iago?

IAGO
Did Michael Cassio, when you wooed my lady,
Know of your love? 95

55 OTHELLO
He did, from first to last. Why dost thou ask?

IAGO
But for a satisfaction of my thought,
No further harm.

OTHELLO Why of thy thought, Iago?

IAGO
I did not think he had been acquainted with her.

OTHELLO
O, yes, and went between us^o very oft. 100

IAGO
Indeed?

60 OTHELLO
Indeed? Ay, indeed! Discern'st thou aught in that?
Is he not honest?

IAGO Honest, my lord?

OTHELLO Honest? Ay, honest.

65 IAGO
My lord, for aught I know.

OTHELLO
What dost thou think?

IAGO Think, my lord?

OTHELLO Think, my lord? 105

By heaven, thou echoest me,
As if there were some monster in thy thought
Too hideous to be shown. Thou dost mean something.
I heard thee say even now, thou lik'st not that,
When Cassio left my wife. What didst not like? 110

75 And when I told thee he was of my counsel^o
Of my whole course of wooing, thou cried'st, "Indeed?"
And didst contract and purse thy brow together,
As if thou then hadst shut up in thy brain
Some horrible conceit.^o If thou dost love me, 115

80 Show me thy thought.

IAGO
My lord, you know I love you.

OTHELLO I think thou dost;
And, for I know thou'rt full of love and honesty
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath, 85

Therefore these stops^o of thine fright me the more;
For such things in a false disloyal knave
Are tricks of custom;^o but in a man that's just They're close dilations,^o working from the heart
That passion cannot rule. 120

IAGO For Michael Cassio,
I dare be sworn, I think that he is honest. 125

OTHELLO
I think so too.

IAGO Men should be what they seem;

66-67 is . . . check is almost not serious enough for a private rebuke (let alone a public disgrace) 70 mamm'ring hesitating 79 peculiar profit particularly personal good 82 poise weight 87 straight at once

100 between us i.e., as messenger 111 of my counsel in my confidence 115 conceit thought 120 stops interruptions 122 of custom customary 123 close dilations expressions of hidden thoughts

Or those that be not, would they might seem none!

OTHELLO

Certain, men should be what they seem.

IAGO

Why then, I think Cassio's an honest man.

OTHELLO

Nay, yet there's more in this?

130

I prithee speak to me as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate, and give thy worst of thoughts
The worst of words.

IAGO

Good my lord, pardon me:

Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that all slaves are free to.

135

Utter my thoughts? Why, say they are vile and false,
As where's that palace whereinto foul things
Sometimes intrude not? Who has that breast so pure
But some uncleanly apprehensions

Keep leets and law days,^o and in sessions sit
With meditations lawful?

140

OTHELLO

Thou dost conspire against thy friend, Iago, '
If thou but think'st him wronged, and mak'st his ear
A stranger to thy thoughts.

IAGO

I do beseech you—

Though I perchance am vicious in my guess
(As I confess it is my nature's plague
To spy into abuses, and of my jealousy
Shape faults that are not), that your wisdom
From one that so imperfectly conceits
Would take no notice, nor build yourself a trouble
Out of his scattering and unsure observance.

145

It were not for your quiet nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, and wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts.

150

OTHELLO

What dost thou mean?

IAGO

Good name in man and woman, dear my lord,
Is the immediate jewel of their souls.
Who steals my purse steals trash; 'tis something,
nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name
Robs me of that which not enriches him
And makes me poor indeed.

155

OTHELLO

By heaven, I'll know thy thoughts!

IAGO

You cannot, if my heart were in your hand;
Nor shall not whilst 'tis in my custody.

OTHELLO

Ha!

IAGO

O, beware, my lord, of jealousy!
It is the green-eyed monster, which doth mock
The meat it feeds on. That cuckold lives in bliss
Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger;
But O, what damned minutes tells^o he o'er
Who dotes, yet doubts—suspects, yet fondly^o loves!

165

170

OTHELLO

O misery.

IAGO

Poor and content is rich, and rich enough;

140 leets . . . days meetings of local courts 169 tells counts

170 fondly foolishly

But riches fineless^o is as poor as winter
To him that ever fears he shall be poor.
Good God the souls of all my tribe defend
From jealousy!

175

OTHELLO Why? Why is this?

Think'st thou I'd make a life of jealousy,
To follow still^o the changes of the moon
With fresh suspicions? No! To be once in doubt
Is to be resolved. Exchange me for a goat
When I shall turn the business of my soul
To such exsufflicate and blown^o surmises,
Matching thy inference. 'Tis not to make me jealous
To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances;
Where virtue is, these are more virtuous.
Nor from mine own weak merits will I draw
The smallest fear or doubt of her revolt,
For she had eyes, and chose me. No, Iago;
I'll see before I doubt; when I doubt, prove;
And on the proof there is no more but this:
Away at once with love or jealousy!

180

185

190

IAGO

I am glad of this; for now I shall have reason
To show the love and duty that I bear you
With franker spirit. Therefore, as I am bound,
Receive it from me. I speak not yet of proof.
Look to your wife; observe her well with Cassio;
Wear your eyes thus: not jealous nor secure.
I would not have your free and noble nature
Out of self-bounty^o be abused. Look to't.
I know our country disposition well:
In Venice they do let heaven see the pranks
They dare not show their husbands; their best conscience

195

200

Is not to leave't undone, but kept unknown.^o

OTHELLO

Dost thou say so?

205

IAGO

She did deceive her father, marrying you;
And when she seemed to shake and fear your looks,
She loved them most.

OTHELLO

And so she did.

IAGO

Why, go to then!

She that so young could give out such a seeming
To seel^o her father's eyes up close as oak^o—
He thought 'twas witchcraft. But I am much to blame.
I humbly do beseech you of your pardon
For too much loving you.

210

OTHELLO

I am bound to thee forever.

IAGO

I see this hath a little dashed your spirits.

OTHELLO

Not a jot, not a jot.

IAGO

Trust me, I fear it has.

215

I hope you will consider what is spoke
Comes from my love. But I do see y' are moved.
I am to pray you not to strain^o my speech

173 fineless infinite 178 To follow still to change always (as the phases of the moon) 182 exsufflicate and blown inflated and flyblown 200 self-bounty innate kindness (which attributes his own motives to others) 203–04 their . . . unknown their morality does not forbid adultery, but it does forbid being found out 210 seel hoodwink; oak a close-grained wood 218 strain enlarge the meaning of

To grosser issues, nor to larger reach°
Than to suspicion.

220

O T H E L L O

I will not.

I A G O Should you do so, my lord,

My speech should fall into such vile success

Which my thoughts aimed not. Cassio's my worthy friend—

My lord, I see y' are moved.

O T H E L L O

No, not much moved.

I do not think but Desdemona's honest.

225

I A G O

Long live she so. And long live you to think so.

O T H E L L O

And yet, how nature erring from itself—

I A G O

Ay, there's the point, as (to be bold with you)

Not to affect many proposèd matches

Of her own clime, complexion, and degree,°

230

Whereto we see in all things nature tends°—

Foh! one may smell in such a will most rank,

Foul disproportions, thoughts unnatural.

But, pardon me, I do not in position°

Distinctly° speak of her; though I may fear

235

Her will, recoiling to her better judgment,

May fall to match° you with her country forms,°

And happily° repent.

O T H E L L O

Farewell, farewell!

If more thou dost perceive, let me know more.

Set on thy wife to observe. Leave me, Iago.

240

I A G O

My lord, I take my leave.

[Going.]

O T H E L L O

Why did I marry? This honest creature doubtless

Sees and knows more, much more, than he unfolds.

I A G O [Returns.]

My lord, I would I might entreat your honor

To scan this thing no farther. Leave it to time.

245

Although 'tis fit that Cassio have his place,

For sure he fills it up with great ability,

Yet, if you please to hold him off awhile,

You shall by that perceive him and his means.

Note if your lady strain his entertainment°

With any strong or vehement importunity;

Much will be seen in that. In the meantime

Let me be thought too busy in my fears

(As worthy cause I have to fear I am)

And hold her free, I do beseech your honor.

255

O T H E L L O

Fear not my government.°

I A G O

I once more take my leave.

Exit.

O T H E L L O

This fellow's of exceeding honesty,

And knows all qualities,° with a learnèd spirit

Of human dealings. If I do prove her haggard,°

Though that her jesses° were my dear heartstrings,

260

I'd whistle her off and let her down the wind°

To prey at fortune. Haply for° I am black

And have not those soft parts° of conversation

That chamberers° have, or for I am declined

Into the vale of years—yet that's not much—

265

She's gone. I am abused, and my relief

Must be to loathe her. O curse of marriage,

That we can call these delicate creatures ours,

And not their appetites! I had rather be a toad

And live upon the vapor of a dungeon

270

Than keep a corner in the thing I love

For others' uses. Yet 'tis the plague to great ones;

Prerogativèd are they less than the base.

'Tis destiny unshunnable, like death.

Even then this forkèd° plague is fated to us

275

When we do quicken.° Look where she comes.

Enter DESDEMONA and EMILIA.

If she be false, heaven mocked itself!

I'll not believe't.

DESDEMONA How now, my dear Othello?

Your dinner, and the generous islanders

By you invited, do attend° your presence.

280

O T H E L L O

I am to blame.

DESDEMONA Why do you speak so faintly?

Are you not well?

240

O T H E L L O

I have a pain upon my forehead, here.°

DESDEMONA

Why, that's with watching; 'twill away again.

Let me but bind it hard, within this hour

285

It will be well.

O T H E L L O Your napkin° is too little;

[He pushes the handkerchief away, and it falls.]

Let it° alone. Come, I'll go in with you.

245

DESDEMONA

I am very sorry that you are not well.

Exit, [with O T H E L L O].

EMILIA

I am glad I have found this napkin;

250

This was her first remembrance from the Moor.

290

My wayward husband hath a hundred times

Wooed me to steal it; but she so loves the token

(For her conjured her she should ever keep it)

That she reserves it evermore about her

To kiss and talk to. I'll have the work ta'en out°

295

And give't Iago. What he will do with it,

258 qualities natures, types of people 259 haggard a partly trained hawk which has gone wild again 260 jesses straps which held the hawk's legs to the trainer's wrist 261 I'd . . . wind I would release her (like an untamable hawk) and let her fly free 262 Haply for it may be because 263 soft parts gentle qualities and manners 264 chamberers courtiers—or, perhaps, accomplished seducers 275 forkèd horned (the sign of the cuckold was horns) 276 do quicken are born 280 attend wait 283 here he points to his imaginary horns 286 napkin elaborately worked handkerchief 287 it it makes a considerable difference in the interpretation of later events whether this "it" refers to Othello's forehead or to the handkerchief; nothing in the text makes the reference clear 295 work ta'en out needlework copied

219 reach meaning 230 degree social station 231 in . . . tends all things in nature seek out their own kind 234 position general argument 235 Distinctly specifically 237 fall to match happen to compare; country forms i.e., the familiar appearances of her countrymen 238 happily by chance 250 strain his entertainment urge strongly that he be reinstated 256 government self-control

Heaven knows, not I; I nothing° but to please his fantasy.°

Enter IAGO.

IAGO
How now? What do you here alone?

EMILIA
Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.

IAGO
You have a thing for me? It is a common thing— 300

EMILIA Ha?

IAGO
To have a foolish wife.

EMILIA
O, is that all? What will you give me now
For that same handkerchief?

IAGO What handkerchief?

EMILIA
What handkerchief! 305
Why, that the Moor first gave to Desdemona,
That which so often you did bid me steal.

IAGO
Hast stol'n it from her?

EMILIA
No, but she let it drop by negligence,
And to th' advantage,° I, being here, took't up. 310
Look, here 'tis.

IAGO A good wench. Give it me.

EMILIA
What will you do with't, that you have been so earnest
To have me filch it?

IAGO Why, what is that to you?

[Takes it.]

EMILIA
If it be not for some purpose of import,° Give't me again. Poor lady, she'll run mad 315
When she shall lack° it.

IAGO Be not acknown on't.°
I have use for it. Go, leave me. Exit EMILIA.

I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin
And let him find it. Trifles light as air
Are to the jealous confirmations strong 320
As proofs of Holy Writ. This may do something.
The Moor already changes with my poison:
Dangerous conceits are in their natures poisons,
Which at the first are scarce found to distaste,°
But, with a little,° act upon the blood, 325
Burn like the mines of sulfur. I did say so.

Enter OTHELLO.

Look where he comes! Not poppy nor mandragora,°
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou owedst° yesterday.

OTHELLO Ha! ha! False to me? 330

297 I nothing I wish nothing; fantasy fancy, whim 310 to th' advantage being lucky 314 import importance 316 lack miss; Be . . . on't Forget your ever saw it 324 are . . . distaste scarcely can be tasted 325 with a little in a short time 327 poppy nor mandragora soporifics 330 owedst possessed

IAGO
Why, how now, general? No more of that.

OTHELLO
Avaunt! be gone! Thou hast set me on the rack.
I swear 'tis better to be much abused
Than but to know't a little.

IAGO How now, my lord?

OTHELLO
What sense had I of her stol'n hours of lust? 335
I saw't not, thought it not, it harmed not me;
I slept the next night well, fed well, was free and merry;
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips.
He that is robbed, not wanting° what is stol'n,
Let him not know't, and he's not robbed at all. 340

IAGO
I am sorry to hear this.

OTHELLO
I had been happy if the general camp,
Pioners° and all, had tasted her sweet body,
So I had nothing known. O now, forever
Farewell the tranquil mind! Farewell content! 345
Farewell the plumed troops, and the big wars
That makes ambition virtue! O, farewell!
Farewell the neighing steed and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, th' ear-piercing fife,
The royal banner; and all quality, 350
Pride, pomp, and circumstance° of glorious war!
And O you mortal engines° whose rude throats
Th' immortal Jove's dread clamors° counterfeit,
Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone!

IAGO
Is't possible, my lord? 355

OTHELLO
Villain, be sure thou prove my love a whore!
Be sure of it; give me the ocular proof;
Or, by the worth of mine eternal soul,
Thou hadst been better have been born a dog
Than answer my waked wrath!

IAGO Is't come to this? 360

OTHELLO
Make me to see't; or at the least so prove it
That the probation° bear no hinge nor loop
To hang a doubt on—or woe upon thy life!

IAGO
My noble lord—

OTHELLO
If thou dost slander her and torture me, 365
Never pray more; abandon all remorse;
On horror's head horrors accumulate;
Do deeds to make heaven weep, all earth amazed;
For nothing canst thou to damnation add
Greater than that.

IAGO O grace! O heaven forgive me! 370
Are you a man? Have you a soul or sense?
God b' wi' you! Take mine office. O wretched fool,
That lov'st to make thine honesty a vice!
O monstrous world! Take note, take note, O world,
To be direct and honest is not safe. 375

339 wanting missing 343 Pioners the basest manual laborers in the army, who dug trenches and mines 351 circumstance pageantry 352 mortal engines lethal weapons, i.e., cannon 353 clamors thunder 362 probation proof

I thank you for this profit, and from hence
I'll love no friend, sith° love breeds such offense.

OTHELLO

Nay, stay. Thou shouldst be honest.

IAGO

I should be wise; for honesty's a fool
And loses that it works for.

OTHELLO

By the world,

380

I think my wife be honest, and think she is not;
I think that thou art just, and think thou art not.
I'll have some proof. My name, that was as fresh
As Dian's° visage, is now begrimed and black
As mine own face. If there be cords, or knives,
Poison, or fire, or suffocating streams,
I'll not endure it. Would I were satisfied!

IAGO

I see you are eaten up with passion.
I do repent me that I put it to you.
You would be satisfied?

OTHELLO

Would? Nay, and I will.

390

IAGO

And may; but how? How satisfied, my lord?
Would you, the supervisor,° grossly gape on?
Behold her topped?

OTHELLO

Death and damnation! O!

IAGO

It were a tedious° difficulty, I think,
To bring them to that prospect.° Damn them then,
If ever mortal eyes do see them bolster°
More than their own! What then? How then?
What shall I say? Where's satisfaction?
It is impossible you should see this,
Were they as prime° as goats, as hot as monkeys,
As salt° as wolves in pride,° and fools as gross
As ignorance made drunk. But yet, I say,
If imputation and strong circumstances
Which lead directly to the door of truth
Will give you satisfaction, you might have't.

395

400

405

OTHELLO

Give me a living reason she's disloyal.

IAGO

I do not like the office.°
But sith I am entered in this cause so far,
Pricked° to't by foolish honesty and love,
I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately,
And being troubled with a raging tooth,
I could not sleep.
There are a kind of men so loose of soul
That in their sleeps will mutter their affairs.
One of this kind is Cassio.
In sleep I heard him say, "Sweet Desdemona,
Let us be wary, let us hide our loves!"
And then, sir, would he gripe° and wring my hand,
Cry "O sweet creature!" Then kiss me hard,
As if he plucked up kisses by the roots
That grew upon my lips; laid his leg o'er my thigh,
And sigh, and kiss, and then cry, "Cursèd fate
That gave thee to the Moor!"

377 sith since 384 Dian's Diana's (goddess of the moon and of chastity) 392 supervisor onlooker 394 tedious hard to arrange 395 prospect sight (where they can be seen) 396 bolster go to bed 400-01 prime, salt lustful 401 pride heat 407 office duty 409 Pricked spurred 418 gripe seize

OTHELLO

O monstrous! monstrous!

IAGO

Nay, this was but his dream.

OTHELLO

But this denoted a foregone conclusion,°
'Tis a shrewd doubt,° though it be but a dream.

425

IAGO

And this may help to thicken other proofs
That do demonstrate° thinly.

OTHELLO

I'll tear her all to pieces!

IAGO

Nay, yet be wise. Yet we see nothing done;
She may be honest yet. Tell me but this:
Have you not sometimes seen a handkerchief
Spotted with strawberries in your wife's hand?

385

430

OTHELLO

I gave her such a one; 'twas my first gift.

IAGO

I know not that; but such a handkerchief—
I am sure it was your wife's—did I today
See Cassio wipe his beard with.

390

435

OTHELLO

If it be that—

IAGO

If it be that, or any that was hers,
It speaks against her with the other proofs.

OTHELLO

O, that the slave had forty thousand lives!
One is too poor, too weak for my revenge.
Now do I see 'tis true. Look here, Iago:
All my fond love thus do I blow to heaven.
'Tis gone.
Arise, black vengeance, from the hollow hell!
Yield up, O Love, thy crown and hearted° throne
To tyrannous hate! Swell, bosom, with thy fraught,°
For 'tis of aspics'° tongues.

395

440

400

405

445

IAGO

Yet be content.°

OTHELLO

O, blood, blood, blood!

IAGO

Patience, I say. Your mind may change.

OTHELLO

Never, Iago. Like to the Pontic Sea,°
Whose icy current and compulsive course
Nev'r keeps retiring ebb, but keeps due on
To the Propontic and the Hellespont,
Even so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace,
Shall nev'r look back, nev'r ebb to humble love,
Till that a capable and wide° revenge
Swallow them up. [He kneels.] Now, by yond marble
heaven,
In the due reverence of a sacred vow
I here engage my words.

410

450

415

455

IAGO

Do not rise yet.

[IAGO kneels.]

420

Witness, you ever-burning lights above,

460

425 foregone conclusion consummated fact 426 shrewd doubt penetrating guess 428 demonstrate show, appear 445 hearted seated in the heart 446 fraught burden 447 aspics' asps'; content patient, quiet 450 Pontic Sea the Black Sea (famous for the strong and constant current with which it flows through the Bosphorus into the Mediterranean, where the water level is lower) 456 capable and wide sufficient and far-reaching

You elements that clip° us round about,
 Witness that here Iago doth give up
 The execution° of his wit, hands, heart
 To wronged Othello's service! Let him command,
 And to obey shall be in me remorse,°
 What bloody business ever.° [They rise.]

OTHELLO I greet thy love,
 Not with vain thanks but with acceptance bounteous,°
 And will upon the instant put thee to't.°
 Within these three days let me hear thee say
 That Cassio's not alive.

IAGO
 My friend is dead. 'Tis done at your request.
 But let her live.

OTHELLO Damn her, lewd minx! O, damn her!
 Damn her!

Come, go with me apart. I will withdraw
 To furnish me with some swift means of death
 For the fair devil. Now art thou my lieutenant.

IAGO
 I am your own forever. Exeunt.

Scene IV. [A street.]

Enter DESDEMONA, EMILIA, and CLOWN.

DESDEMONA Do you know, sirrah, where Lieutenant Cassio lies?°

CLOWN I dare not say he lies anywhere.

DESDEMONA Why, man?

CLOWN He's a soldier, and for me to say a soldier lies, 5
 'tis stabbing.

DESDEMONA Go to. Where lodges he?

CLOWN To tell you where he lodges is to tell you where I lie.

DESDEMONA Can anything be made of this? 10

CLOWN I know not where he lodges, and for me to devise a lodging, and say he lies here or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat.°

DESDEMONA Can you enquire him out, and be edified° by report? 15

CLOWN I will catechize the world for him; that is,
 make questions, and by them answer.

DESDEMONA Seek him, bid him come hither. Tell him I have moved° my lord on his behalf and hope all will be well. 20

CLOWN To do this is within the compass° of man's wit, and therefore I will attempt the doing it.

Exit CLOWN.

DESDEMONA
 Where should° I lose the handkerchief, Emilia?

EMILIA
 I know not, madam.

DESDEMONA
 Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse 25

Full of crusadoes.° And but my noble Moor
 Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness
 As jealous creatures are, it were enough
 To put him to ill thinking.

465 EMILIA Is he not jealous?

DESDEMONA
 Who? He? I think the sun where he was born 30
 Drew all such humors° from him.

EMILIA Look where he comes.

Enter OTHELLO.

DESDEMONA
 I will not leave him now till Cassio
 Be called to him. How is't with you, my lord?

OTHELLO
 Well, my good lady. [Aside.] O, hardness to dissemble!°—

How do you, Desdemona?

475 DESDEMONA Well, my good lord. 35

OTHELLO
 Give me your hand. This hand is moist,° my lady.

DESDEMONA
 It hath felt no age nor known no sorrow.

OTHELLO
 This argues° fruitfulness and liberal° heart,
 Hot, hot, and moist. This hand of yours requires 40
 A sequester° from liberty; fasting and prayer;
 Much castigation; exercise devout;
 For here's a young and sweating devil here
 That commonly rebels. 'Tis a good hand,
 A frank one.

DESDEMONA You may, indeed, say so;
 For 'twas that hand that gave away my heart. 45

OTHELLO
 A liberal hand! The hearts of old gave hands,
 But our new heraldry° is hands, not hearts.

DESDEMONA
 I cannot speak of this. Come now, your promise!

OTHELLO
 What promise, chuck?

DESDEMONA
 I have sent to bid Cassio come speak with you. 50

OTHELLO
 I have a salt and sorry rheum° offends me.
 Lend me thy handkerchief.

DESDEMONA Here, my lord.

OTHELLO That which I gave you.

DESDEMONA I have it not about me.

OTHELLO
 Not?

DESDEMONA
 No, indeed, my lord.

OTHELLO That's a fault.

461 clip enfold 463 execution workings, action 465 remorse pity 466 ever soever 467 bounteous absolute 468 to't i.e., to the work you have said you are prepared to do III.iv.2 lies lodges 13 lie . . . throat to lie in the throat is to lie absolutely and completely 15 edified enlightened (Desdemona mocks the Clown's overly elaborate diction)
 19 moved pleaded with 21 compass reach 23 should might

26 crusadoes Portuguese gold coins 31 humors characteristics 34 hardness to dissemble Othello may refer here either to the difficulty he has in maintaining his appearance of composure, or to what he believes to be Desdemona's hardened hypocrisy 36 moist a moist, hot hand was taken as a sign of a lustful nature 38 argues suggests; liberal free, open (but also with a suggestion of "licentious"; from here on in this scene Othello's words bear a double meaning, seeming to be normal but accusing Desdemona of being unfaithful) 40 sequester separation 47 heraldry heraldic symbolism 51 salt . . .
 rheum heavy, running head cold

That handkerchief
 Did an Egyptian to my mother give.
 She was a charmer,^o and could almost read
 The thoughts of people. She told her, while she kept it
 'Twould make her amiable^o and subdue my father
 Entirely to her love; but if she lost it
 Or made a gift of it, my father's eye
 Should hold her loathèd, and his spirits should hunt
 After new fancies. She, dying, gave it me,
 And bid me, when my fate would have me wived,
 To give it her. I did so; and take heed on't;
 Make it a darling like your precious eye.
 To lose't or give't away were such perdition
 As nothing else could match.

DESDEMONA Is't possible?

O T H E L L O
 'Tis true. There's magic in the web^o of it.
 A sibyl that had numbered in the world
 The sun to course two hundred compasses,
 In her prophetic fury^o sewed the work;
 The worms were hallowed that did breed the silk,
 And it was dyed in mummy^o which the skillful
 Conserved of maidens' hearts.

DESDEMONA Indeed? Is't true?

O T H E L L O
 Most veritable. Therefore look to't well.

DESDEMONA
 Then would to God that I had never seen't!

O T H E L L O Ha! Wherefore?

DESDEMONA
 Why do you speak so startingly and rash?

O T H E L L O
 Is't lost? Is't gone? Speak, is it out o' th' way?

DESDEMONA Heaven bless us!

O T H E L L O Say you?

DESDEMONA
 It is not lost. But what an if it were?

O T H E L L O How?

DESDEMONA
 I say it is not lost.

O T H E L L O Fetch't, let me see't!

DESDEMONA
 Why, so I can; but I will not now.

This is a trick to put me from my suit:

Pray you let Cassio be received again.

O T H E L L O
 Fetch me the handkerchief! My mind misgives.

DESDEMONA

Come, come!

You'll never meet a more sufficient^o man—

O T H E L L O

The handkerchief!

DESDEMONA A man that all his time
 Hath founded his good fortunes on your love,
 Shared dangers with you—

O T H E L L O

The handkerchief!

DESDEMONA

I' faith, you are to blame.

55 O T H E L L O Away! Exit O T H E L L O.

EMILIA Is not this man jealous?

DESDEMONA

I nev'r saw this before.

Sure there's some wonder in this handkerchief;

60 I am most unhappy in the loss of it.

EMILIA

'Tis not a year or two shows us a man.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;

They eat us hungerly, and when they are full,

65 They belch us.

Enter I A G O and C A S S I O.

Look you, Cassio and my husband. 105

I A G O

There is no other way; 'tis she must do't.

And lo the happiness! Go and importune her.

70 DESDEMONA

How now, good Cassio? What's the news with you?

C A S S I O

Madam, my former suit. I do beseech you

That by your virtuous means I may again

Exist, and be a member of his love

75 Whom I with all the office^o of my heart

Entirely honor. I would not be delayed.

If my offense be of such mortal kind

That nor my service past, nor present sorrows,

Nor purposed merit in futurity,

Can ransom me into his love again,

But to know so must be my benefit.^o

So shall I clothe me in a forced content,

And shut myself up in some other course

80 To fortune's alms.

DESDEMONA Alas, thrice-gentle Cassio,

My advocacy^o is not now in tune.

My lord is not my lord; nor should I know him

Were he in favor^o as in humor altered.

So help me every spirit sanctified

As I have spoken for you all my best

And stood within the blank^o of his displeasure

85 For my free speech. You must awhile be patient.

What I can do I will; and more I will

Than for myself I dare. Let that suffice you.

I A G O

Is my lord angry?

EMILIA He went hence but now,

And certainly in strange unquietness.

I A G O

90 Can he be angry? I have seen the cannon

When it hath blown his ranks into the air

And, like the devil, from his very arm

Puffed his own brother. And is he angry?

Something of moment^o then. I will go meet him.

There's matter in't indeed if he be angry.

DESDEMONA

I prithee do so. Exit [I A G O]. Something sure of state,^o

95 Either from Venice or some unhatched practice^o

Made demonstrable here in Cyprus to him,

Hath puddled^o his clear spirit; and in such cases

57 charmer magician 59 amiable desirable 69 web weaving 72 prophetic fury seized by the spirit and able to prophesy 74 mummy liquid drained from embalmed bodies
 91 sufficient complete, with all proper qualities

112 office duty 118 benefit good 122 advocacy advocacy
 124 favor countenance 127 blank bull's-eye of a target 137 moment importance 139 of state state affairs 141 unhatched practice undisclosed plot 142 puddled muddled

Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
 Though great ones are their object. 'Tis even so.
 For let our finger ache, and it endues°
 Our other, healthful members even to a sense
 Of pain. Nay, we must think men are not gods,
 Nor of them look for such observancy
 As fits the bridal. Beshrew me much, Emilia,
 I was, unhandsome warrior as I am,
 Arraigning his unkindness with my soul;
 But now I find I had suborned the witness,
 And he's indicted falsely.

EMILIA . . . Pray heaven it be
 State matters, as you think, and no conception
 Nor no jealous toy° concerning you.

DESDEMONA
 Alas the day! I never gave him cause.

EMILIA
 But jealous souls will not be answered so;
 They are not ever jealous for the cause,
 But jealous for they're jealous. It is a monster
 Begot upon itself, born on itself.

DESDEMONA
 Heaven keep the monster from Othello's mind!

EMILIA Lady, amen.

DESDEMONA
 I will go seek him. Cassio, walk here about.
 If I do find him fit,° I'll move your suit
 And seek to effect it to my uttermost.

CASSIO
 I humbly thank your ladyship.
Exit [DESDEMONA, with EMILIA].

Enter BIANCA.

BIANCA
 Save you, friend Cassio!
 CASSIO . . . What make you from home?
 How is't with you, my most fair Bianca?
 I' faith, sweet love, I was coming to your house.

BIANCA
 And I was going to your lodging, Cassio.
 What, keep a week away? Seven days and nights?
 Eightscore eight hours? And lovers' absent hours
 More tedious than the dial eightscore times?
 O weary reck'ning.°

CASSIO . . . Pardon me, Bianca.
 I have this while with leaden thoughts been pressed,
 But I shall in a more continue° time
 Strike off this score° of absence. Sweet Bianca,

[Gives her Desdemona's handkerchief.]

Take me this work out.

BIANCA . . . O Cassio, whence came this?
 This is some token from a newer friend.
 To the felt absence now I feel a cause.
 Is't come to this? Well, well.

CASSIO . . . Go to, woman!
 Throw your vile guesses in the devil's teeth,
 From whence you have them. You are jealous now

That this is from some mistress, some remembrance.
 No, by my faith, Bianca.

145 BIANCA . . . Why, whose is it? 185

CASSIO
 I know not neither; I found it in my chamber.
 I like the work well; ere it be demanded,°
 As like enough it will, I would have it copied.
 150 Take it and do't, and leave me for this time.

BIANCA . . . Leave you? Wherefore? 190

CASSIO
 I do attend here on the general
 And think it no addition, nor my wish,
 155 To have him see me womaned.

BIANCA . . . Why, I pray you?

CASSIO
 Not that I love you not.

BIANCA . . . But that you do not love me!
 I pray you bring° me on the way a little,
 And say if I shall see you soon at night. 195

160 CASSIO
 'Tis but a little way that I can bring you,
 For I attend here; but I'll see you soon.

BIANCA
 'Tis very good. I must be circumstanced.°

Exeunt omnes.

A C T I V

Scene I. [A street.]

Enter OTHELLO and IAGO.

IAGO
 Will you think so?
 OTHELLO . . . Think so, Iago?
 IAGO . . . What,

To kiss in private?
 170 OTHELLO . . . An unauthorized° kiss?

IAGO
 Or to be naked with her friend in bed
 An hour or more, not meaning any harm?

OTHELLO
 Naked in bed, Iago, and not mean harm? 5
 It is hypocrisy against the devil.
 They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,
 The devil their virtue tempts, and they tempt heaven.

IAGO
 If they do nothing, 'tis a venial slip.
 But if I give my wife a handkerchief— 10

OTHELLO . . . What then?

IAGO
 Why, then 'tis hers, my lord; and being hers,
 She may, I think, bestow't on any man.

OTHELLO
 She is protectress of her honor too.
 May she give that? 15

145 endues leads 155 toy trifle 164 fit receptive 174 reck'ning addition 176 continue uninterrupted 177 Strike . . . score pay this bill (the "score" being the account of drinks kept in a tavern)

187 demand asked for (by the person who lost it) 195 bring accompany 199 be circumstanced accept things as they are

IV.i.2 unauthorized illicit

IAGO
Her honor is an essence that's not seen;
They have it very oft that have it not.
But for the handkerchief—

O T H E L L O
By heaven, I would most gladly have forgot it!
Thou said'st—O, it comes o'er my memory 20
As doth the raven° o'er the infected house,
Boding to all—he had my handkerchief.

IAGO
A y, what of that?

O T H E L L O That's not so good now.

IAGO
What if I had said I had seen him do you wrong?
Or heard him say—as knaves be such abroad° 25
Who having, by their own importunate suit,
Or voluntary dotage° of some mistress,
Convincèd or supplied° them, cannot choose
But they must blab—

O T H E L L O Hath he said anything?

IAGO
He hath, my lord; but be you well assured, 30
No more than he'll unswear.

O T H E L L O What hath he said?

IAGO
Why, that he did—I know not what he did.

O T H E L L O What? what?

IAGO Lie—

O T H E L L O
With her?

IAGO With her, on her; what you will. 35

O T H E L L O Lie with her? Lie on her?—We say lie on her when they belie her.—Lie with her! Zounds, that's fulsome.° — Handkerchief — confessions — handkerchief!—To confess, and be hanged for his labor— first to be hanged, and then to confess! I tremble at it. 40 Nature would not invest herself in such shadowing passion without some instruction.° It is not words that shakes me thus.—Pish! Noses, ears, and lips? Is't possible?—Confess—Handkerchief?—O devil!

Falls in a trance.

IAGO
Work on. 45
My med'cine works! Thus credulous fools are caught,
And many worthy and chaste dames even thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach.° What, ho! My Lord!
My lord, I say! Othello!

Enter CASSIO.

How now, Cassio?

CASSIO
What's the matter? 50

IAGO
My lord is fall'n into an epilepsy.
This is his second fit; he had one yesterday.

21 raven a harbinger of death 25 abroad i.e., in the world
27 voluntary dotage weakness of the will 28 Convincèd or supplied persuaded or gratified (the mistress) 38 fulsome foul, repulsive 41–42 Nature . . . instruction i.e., my mind would not become so darkened (with anger) unless there were something in this (accusation); it should be remembered that Othello believes in the workings of magic and supernatural forces 48 reproach shame

CASSIO
Rub him about the temples.

IAGO
The lethargy° must have his quiet course.
If not, he foams at mouth, and by and by 55
Breaks out to savage madness. Look, he stirs.
Do you withdraw yourself a little while.
He will recover straight. When he is gone,
I would on great occasion° speak with you.
[Exit CASSIO.]

How is it, general? Have you not hurt your head? 60

O T H E L L O
Dost thou mock° me?

IAGO I mock you not, by heaven.

Would you would bear your fortune like a man.

O T H E L L O
A hornèd man's a monster and a beast.

IAGO
There's many a beast then in a populous city,
And many a civil° monster. 65

O T H E L L O
Did he confess it?

IAGO Good, sir, be a man.
Think every bearded fellow that's but yoked
May draw° with you. There's millions now alive
That nightly lie in those unproper° beds
Which they dare swear peculiar.° Your case is better. 70
O, 'tis the spite of hell, the fiend's arch-mock,
To lip a wanton in a secure couch,
And to suppose her chaste. No, let me know;
And knowing what I am, I know what she shall be.

O T H E L L O
O, thou art wise! 'Tis certain.

IAGO Stand you awhile apart; 75
Confine yourself but in a patient list.°
Whilst you were here, o'erwhelmèd with your grief—
A passion most unsuited such a man—
Cassio came hither. I shifted him away°
And laid good 'scuses upon your ecstasy;° 80
Bade him anon return, and here speak with me;
The which he promised. Do but encave° yourself
And mark the fleers,° the gibes, and notable° scorns
That dwell in every region of his face.
For I will make him tell the tale anew: 85
Where, how how oft, how long ago, and when
He hath, and is again to cope your wife.
I say, but mark his gesture. Marry patience,
Or I shall say you're all in all in spleen,°
And nothing of a man.

O T H E L L O Dost thou hear, Iago? 90
I will be found most cunning in my patience;
But—dost thou hear?—most bloody.

IAGO That's not amiss;
But yet keep time in all. Will you withdraw?

54 lethargy coma 59 great occasion very important matter 61 mock Othello takes Iago's comment as a reference to his horns—which it is 65 civil city-dwelling 68 draw i.e., like the horned ox 69 unproper i.e., not exclusively the husband's 70 peculiar their own alone 76 a patient list the bounds of patience 79 shifted him away got rid of him by a stratagem 80 ecstasy trance (the literal meaning, "outside oneself," bears on the meaning of the change Othello is undergoing) 82 encave hide 83 fleers mocking looks or speeches; notable obvious 89 spleen passion, particularly anger

[OTHELLO moves to one side, where his remarks are not audible to CASSIO and IAGO.]

Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,
A huswife^o that by selling her desires
Buys herself bread and cloth. It is a creature
That dotes on Cassio, as 'tis the strumpet's plague
To beguile many and be beguiled by one.
He, when he hears of her, cannot restrain
From the excess of laughter. Here he comes.

Enter CASSIO.

As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbookish^o jealousy must conster^o
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviors
Quite in the wrong. How do you, lieutenant?

CASSIO
The worser that you give me the addition^o
Whose want even kills me.

IAGO
Ply Desdemona well, and you are sure on't.
Now, if this suit lay in Bianca's power,
How quickly should you speed!

CASSIO Alas, poor caitiff!^o

OTHELLO
Look how he laughs already!

IAGO
I never knew woman love man so.

CASSIO
Alas, poor rogue! I think, i' faith, she loves me.

OTHELLO
Now he denies it faintly, and laughs it out.

IAGO
Do you hear, Cassio?

OTHELLO Now he importunes him
To tell it o'er. Go to! Well said, well said!

IAGO
She gives it out that you shall marry her.
Do you intend it?

CASSIO Ha, ha, ha!

OTHELLO
Do ye triumph, Roman? Do you triumph?

CASSIO I marry? What, a customer?^o Prithee bear some charity to my wit; do not think it so unwholesome. Ha, ha, ha!

OTHELLO So, so, so, so. They laugh that win.

IAGO
Why, the cry goes that you marry her.

CASSIO Prithee, say true.

IAGO I am a very villain else.

OTHELLO Have you scored^o me? Well.

CASSIO This is the monkey's own giving out. She is persuaded I will marry her out of her own love and flattery, not out of my promise.

OTHELLO Iago beckons me; now he begins the story.

[OTHELLO moves close enough to hear.]

CASSIO She was here even now; she haunts me in every place. I was the other day talking on the sea bank 95 huswife housewife (but with the special meaning here of "prostitute") 102 unbookish ignorant; conster construe 105 addition title 109 caitiff wretch 120 customer one who sells, a merchant (here, a prostitute) 127 scored marked, defaced

with certain Venetians, and thither comes the bauble,^o and falls me thus about my neck—

OTHELLO Crying "O dear Cassio!" as it were. His gesture imports it.

95 CASSIO So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me; so shakes and pulls me! Ha, ha, ha!

OTHELLO Now he tells how she plucked him to my chamber. O, I see that nose of yours, but not that dog
I shall throw it to.

100 CASSIO Well, I must leave her company.

IAGO Before me!^o Look where she comes.

Enter BIANCA.

CASSIO 'Tis such another fitchew!^o Marry a perfumed one? What do you mean by this haunting of me?

BIANCA Let the devil and his dam haunt you! What did you mean by that same handkerchief you gave me even now? I was a fine fool to take it. I must take out the work? A likely piece of work that you should find it in your chamber and know not who left it there! This is some minx's token, and I must take out the work? There! [She throws down the handkerchief.]
Give it your hobbyhorse.^o Wheresoever you had it,
I'll take out no work on't.

110 CASSIO How now, my sweet Bianca? How now?
how now?

OTHELLO By heaven, that should be my handkerchief!

BIANCA If you'll come to supper tonight, you may; if you will not, come when you are next prepared for.^o

Exit.

IAGO After her, after her!

CASSIO Faith, I must; she'll rail in the streets else.

IAGO Will you sup there?

CASSIO Yes, I intend so.

115 IAGO Well, I may chance to see you, for I would very fain speak with you.

CASSIO Prithee come. Will you?

IAGO Go to, say no more. [Exit CASSIO.]

OTHELLO [Comes forward.] How shall I murder him,
Iago?

IAGO Did you perceive how he laughed at his vice?

OTHELLO O Iago!

IAGO And did you see the handkerchief?

OTHELLO Was that mine?

IAGO Yours, by this hand! And to see how he prizes the foolish woman your wife! She gave it him, and he hath giv'n it his whore.

125 OTHELLO I would have him nine years a-killing!—A fine woman, a fair woman, a sweet woman?

IAGO Nay, you must forget that.

OTHELLO Ay, let her rot, and perish, and be damned tonight; for she shall not live. No, my heart is turned to stone; I strike it, and it hurts my hand. O, the world hath not a sweeter creature! She might lie by an emperor's side and command him tasks.

180 IAGO Nay, that's not your way.^o

OTHELLO Hang her! I do but say what she is. So delicate with her needle. An admirable musician. O,

134 bauble plaything 144 Before me an exclamation of surprise 145 fitchew polecat, i.e., strong-smelling creature 154 hobbyhorse prostitute 160 next prepared for next expected—i.e., never 186 way proper course she will sing the savageness out of a bear! Of so high and plenteous wit and invention°— 190

IAGO She's the worse for all this.

OTHELLO O, a thousand, a thousand times. And then, of so gentle a condition?°

IAGO Ay, too gentle.

OTHELLO Nay, that's certain. But yet the pity of it, 195
Iago. O Iago, the pity of it, Iago.

IAGO If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend; for if it touch° not you, it comes near nobody.

OTHELLO I will chop her into messes!° Cuckold me! 200

IAGO O, 'tis foul in her.

OTHELLO With mine officer!

IAGO That's fouler.

OTHELLO Get me some poison, Iago, this night. I'll not expostulate with her, lest her body and beauty 205 unprovide my mind° again. This night, Iago!

IAGO Do it not with poison. Strangle her in her bed, even the bed she hath contaminated.

OTHELLO Good, good! The justice of it pleases. Very good! 210

IAGO And for Cassio, let me be his undertaker.° You shall hear more by midnight.

OTHELLO

Excellent good! [A trumpet.]

What trumpet is that same?

IAGO

I warrant something from Venice.

Enter LODOVICO, DESDEMONA, and ATTENDANTS.

'Tis Lodovico.

This comes from the duke. See, your wife's with him. 215

LODOVICO

God save you, worthy general.

OTHELLO With° all my heart, sir.

LODOVICO

The duke and the senators of Venice greet you.

[Gives him a letter.]

OTHELLO

I kiss the instrument of their pleasures.

[Opens the letter and reads.]

DESDEMONA

And what's the news, good cousin Lodovico?

IAGO

I am very glad to see you, signior. 220

Welcome to Cyprus.

LODOVICO

I thank you. How does Lieutenant Cassio?

IAGO Lives, sir.

DESDEMONA

Cousin, there's fall'n between him and my lord

An unkind° breach; but you shall make all well.

OTHELLO Are you sure of that? 225

DESDEMONA My lord?

190 invention imagination 193 so . . . condition (1) so well born (2) of such a gentle nature 198 touch affects 200 messes bits 206 unprovide my mind undo my resolution 211 undertaker not "burier," but "one who undertakes to do something" 216 With i.e., I greet you with 224 unkind unnatural

OTHELLO [Reads.] "This fail you not to do, as you will—"

LODOVICO

He did not call; he's busy in the paper.

Is there division 'twixt my lord and Cassio?

DESDEMONA

A most unhappy one. I would do much

T' atone° them, for the love I bear to Cassio. 230

OTHELLO

Fire and brimstone!

DESDEMONA

My lord?

OTHELLO

Are you wise?

DESDEMONA

What, is he angry?

LODOVICO

May be th' letter moved him;

For, as I think, they do command him home,

Deputing Cassio in his government.° 235

DESDEMONA

Trust me, I am glad on't.

OTHELLO

Indeed?

DESDEMONA

My lord?

OTHELLO

I am glad to see you mad.

DESDEMONA

Why, sweet Othello—

OTHELLO Devil!

[Strikes her.]

DESDEMONA

I have not deserved this.

LODOVICO

My lord, this would not be believed in Venice, 240

Though I should swear I saw't. 'Tis very much.

Make her amends; she weeps.

OTHELLO

O devil, devil!

If that the earth could teem° with woman's tears,

Each drop she falls° would prove a crocodile.°

Out of my sight!

DESDEMONA

I will not stay to offend you. 245

[Going.]

LODOVICO

Truly, an obedient lady.

I do beseech your lordship call her back.

OTHELLO

Mistress!

DESDEMONA

My lord?

OTHELLO

What would you with her, sir?

LODOVICO

Who? I, my lord?

OTHELLO

Ay! You did wish that I would make her turn. 250

Sir, she can turn, and turn, and yet go on

And turn again; and she can weep, sir, weep;

And she's obedient; as you say, obedient.

Very obedient. Proceed you in your tears.

Concerning this, sir—O well-painted passion! 255

I am commanded home.—Get you away;

I'll send for you anon.—Sir, I obey the mandate

And will return to Venice.—Hence, avaunt!

[Exit DESDEMONA.]

231 atone reconcile 235 government office 243 teem conceive 244 falls drops; crocodile the crocodile was supposed to shed false tears to lure its victims

Cassio shall have my place. And sir, tonight
I do entreat that we may sup together. 260
You are welcome, sir, to Cyprus.—Goats and monkeys! Exit.

LODOVICO

Is this the noble Moor whom our full Senate
Call all in all sufficient? Is this the nature Whom passion could not shake? whose solid virtue
The shot of accident nor dart of chance 265
Could neither graze nor pierce?

IAGO

He is much changed.

LODOVICO

Are his wits safe? Is he not light of brain?

IAGO

He's that he is; I may not breathe my censure.
What he might be (if, what he might, he is not)
I would to heaven he were!

LODOVICO

What, strike his wife? 270

IAGO

Faith, that was not so well; yet would I knew
That stroke would prove the worst.

LODOVICO

Is it his use?°

Or did the letters work upon his blood°
And new-create his fault?

IAGO

Alas, alas!

It is not honesty in me to speak 275
What I have seen and known. You shall observe him,
And his own courses° will denote him so That I may save my speech. Do but go after
And mark how he continues.

LODOVICO

I am sorry that I am deceived in him. Exeunt. 280

Scene II. [The citadel.]

Enter OTHELLO and EMILIA.

OTHELLO

You have seen nothing then?

EMILIA

Nor ever heard, nor ever did suspect.

OTHELLO

Yes, you have seen Cassio and she together.

EMILIA

But then I saw no harm, and then I heard
Each syllable that breath made up° between them. 5

OTHELLO

What, did they never whisper?

EMILIA

Never, my lord.

OTHELLO

Nor send you out o' th' way?

EMILIA

Never.

OTHELLO

To fetch her fan, her gloves, her mask, nor nothing?

EMILIA

Never, my lord. 10

OTHELLO

That's strange.

EMILIA

I durst, my lord, to wager she is honest,
Lay down my soul at stake° If you think other,
Remove your thought. It doth abuse your bosom.

If any wretch have put this in your head, 15
Let heaven requite it with the serpent's curse,°
For if she be not honest,° chaste, and true,
There's no man happy. The purest of their wives
Is foul as slander.

OTHELLO

Bid her come hither. Go.

Exit EMILIA.

She says enough; yet she's a simple bawd° 20
That cannot say as much. This is a subtle whore,
A closet lock and key of villainous secrets,
And yet she'll kneel and pray; I have seen her do't.

Enter DESDEMONA and EMILIA.

DESDEMONA

My lord, what is your will?

OTHELLO

Pray you, chuck, come hither.

DESDEMONA

What is your pleasure?

OTHELLO

Let me see your eyes. 25

Look in my face.

DESDEMONA

What horrible fancy's this?

OTHELLO [To EMILIA.]

Some of your function,° mistress:

Leave procreants alone and shut the door;

Cough or cry hem if anybody come.

Your mystery,° your mystery! Nay, dispatch! 30

Exit EMILIA.

DESDEMONA

Upon my knee, what doth your speech import?

I understand a fury in your words.°

OTHELLO

Why, what art thou?

DESDEMONA

Your wife, my lord; your true

And loyal wife.

OTHELLO

Come, swear it, damn thyself;

Lest, being like one of heaven, the devils themselves 35

Should fear to seize thee. Therefore be double-damned:

Swear thou art honest.

DESDEMONA

Heaven doth truly know it.

OTHELLO

Heaven truly knows that thou art false as hell.

DESDEMONA

To whom, my lord? With whom? How am I false?

OTHELLO

Ah, Desdemon! Away! Away! Away! 40

DESDEMONA

Alas the heavy day! Why do you weep?

Am I the motive° of these tears, my lord?

If haply° you my father do suspect

An instrument of this your calling back,

Lay not your blame on me. If you have lost him, 45

I have lost him too.

OTHELLO

Had it pleased heaven

To try me with affliction, had they rained

All kinds of sores and shames on my bare head,

Steeped° me in poverty to the very lips,

16 serpent's curse God's curse on the serpent after the fall in Eden 17 honest chaste 20 bawd procuress 27 Some . . . function do your proper work (as the operator of a brothel) 30 mystery trade 32 words Q1 adds to this line, "but not the words" 42 motive cause 43 haply by chance 49 Steeped submerged

272 use habit 273 blood passion 277 courses actions
IV.ii.5 that . . . up spoken 13 at stake as the wager

Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes,
I should have found in some place of my soul
A drop of patience. But, alas, to make me
The fixèd figure for the time of scorn°
To point his slow and moving finger at.
Yet could I bear that too, well, very well.
But there where I have garnered up my heart,
Where either I must live or bear no life,
The fountain from the which my current runs
Or else dries up—to be discarded thence,
Or keep it as a cistern for foul toads
To knot and gender° in—turn thy complexion there,
Patience, thou young and rose-lipped cherubin!
I here look grim as hell!°

DESDEMONA

I hope my noble lord esteems me honest.

OTHELLO

O, ay, as summer flies are in the shambles,°
That quicken even with blowing.° O thou weed,
Who art so lovely fair, and smell'st so sweet,
That the sense aches at thee, would thou hadst never been born!

DESDEMONA

Alas, what ignorant° sin have I committed?

OTHELLO

Was this fair paper, this most goodly book,
Made to write "whore" upon? What committed?
Committed? O thou public commoner,°
I should make very forges of my cheeks
That would to cinders burn up modesty,
Did I but speak thy deeds. What committed?
Heaven stops the nose at it, and the moon winks;°
The bawdy wind that kisses all it meets
Is hushed within the hollow mine of earth
And will not hear't. What committed?

DESDEMONA

By heaven, you do me wrong!

OTHELLO

Are not you a strumpet?

DESDEMONA

No, as I am a Christian!

If to preserve this vessel for my lord
From any other foul unlawful touch
Be not to be a strumpet, I am none.

OTHELLO

What, not a whore?

DESDEMONA

No, as I shall be saved!

OTHELLO

Is't possible?

DESDEMONA

O, heaven forgive us!

OTHELLO

I cry you mercy° then.

I took you for that cunning whore of Venice
That married with Othello. [Calling.] You, mistress, Enter EMILIA.

50

That have the office opposite to Saint Peter
And keep the gate of hell! You, you, ay, you!
We have done our course; there's money for your pains.

55

[Throws her some coins.]

I pray you turn the key and keep our counsel. Exit.
EMILIA

Alas, what does this gentleman conceive?

How do you, madam? How do you, my good lady? 95

60

DESDEMONA Faith, half asleep.

EMILIA

Good madam, what's the matter with my lord?

DESDEMONA With who?

EMILIA Why, with my lord, madam.

DESDEMONA

Who is thy lord?

65

EMILIA He that is yours, sweet lady. 100

DESDEMONA

I have none. Do not talk to me, Emilia.

I cannot weep, nor answers have I none

But what should go by water.° Prithee tonight

Lay on my bed my wedding sheets, remember;

And call thy husband hither.

EMILIA

Here's a change indeed! 105

Exit.

DESDEMONA

'Tis meet I should be used so, very meet.

How have I been behaved, that he might stick

The small'st opinion on my least misuse?°

75

Enter IAGO and EMILIA.

IAGO

What is your pleasure, madam? How is't with you?

DESDEMONA

I cannot tell. Those that do teach young babes 110

Do it with gentle means and easy tasks.

He might have chid me so; for, in good faith,

I am a child to chiding.

IAGO

What is the matter, lady?

EMILIA

Alas, Iago, my lord hath so bewhored her,

Thrown such despite° and heavy terms upon her 115

That true hearts cannot bear it.

DESDEMONA

Am I that name, Iago?

IAGO

What name, fair lady?

DESDEMONA

Such as she said my lord did say I was.

EMILIA

He called her whore. A beggar in his drink

Could not have laid such terms upon his callet.° 120

IAGO

Why did he so?

DESDEMONA

I do not know; I am sure I am none such.

IAGO

Do not weep, do not weep. Alas the day.

EMILIA

Hath she forsook so many noble matches,

53 The . . . scorn the very image of scorn in our time
61 knot and gender twist in bunches and procreate 61-63 turn . . . hell the rough sense would seem to be, "even Patience would grow pale ("turn complexion") at Desdemona's perfidy, but that Othello looks grimly on" 65 shambles abattoirs 66 quicken . . . blowing become impregnated as soon as they lay their eggs 69 ignorant unknowing 72 commoner prostitute 76 winks closes its eyes (the moon was the symbol of chastity) 87 cry you mercy ask your pardon

103 water tears 107-08 stick . . . misuse base any doubt on my smallest fault 115 despite abuse 120 callet slut

Her father and her country, and her friends,
To be called whore? Would it not make one weep?

DESDEMONA

It is my wretched fortune.

IAGO Beshrew^o him for't!

How comes this trick upon him?

DESDEMONA Nay, heaven doth know.

EMILIA

I will be hanged if some eternal villain,
Some busy and insinuating rogue,
Some cogging,^o cozening slave, to get some office,
Have not devised this slander. I will be hanged else.

IAGO

Fie, there is no such man! It is impossible.

DESDEMONA

If any such there be, heaven pardon him.

EMILIA

A halter pardon him! And hell gnaw his bones!
Why should he call her whore? Who keeps her company?
What place? What time? What form? What likelihood?
The Moor's abused by some most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow.
O heavens, that such companions^o thou'dst unfold,^o
And put in every honest hand a whip
To lash the rascals naked through the world
Even from the east to th' west!

IAGO Speak within door.^o

EMILIA

O, fie upon them! Some such squire^o he was
That turned your wit the seamy side without
And made you to suspect me with the Moor.

IAGO

You are a fool. Go to.

DESDEMONA

Alas, Iago,
What shall I do to win my lord again?
Good friend, go to him, for, by this light of heaven,
I know not how I lost him. Here I kneel:
If e'er my will did trespass 'gainst his love
Either in discourse of thought^o or actual deed,
Or that mine eyes, mine ears, or any sense
Delighted them in any other form;
Or that I do not yet, and ever did,
And ever will (though he do shake me off
To beggarly divorcement) love him dearly,
Comfort forswear me. Unkindness may do much,
And his unkindness may defeat^o my life,
But never taint my love. I cannot say "whore."
It does abhor me now I speak the word;
To do the act that might the addition earn
Not the world's mass of vanity could make me.

IAGO

I pray you be content. 'Tis but his humor.^o

The business of the state does him offense.

DESDEMONA

If 'twere no other.

IAGO

It is but so, I warrant.

[Trumpets within.]

Hark how these instruments summon to supper.

The messengers of Venice stay the meat.^o

Go in, and weep not, All things shall be well.

[Exeunt DESDEMONA and EMILIA.]

Enter RODERIGO.

How now, Roderigo?

RODERIGO I do not find that thou deal'st justly with
me.

IAGO What in the contrary?

RODERIGO Every day thou daff'st^o me with some device,^o Iago, and rather, as it seems to me now, keep'st from me all conveniency^o than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. I will indeed no longer endure it; nor am I yet persuaded to put up^o in peace what already I have foolishly suffered.

IAGO Will you hear me, Roderigo?

RODERIGO I have heard too much, and your words and performances are no kin together.

IAGO You charge me most unjustly.

RODERIGO With naught but truth. I have wasted myself out of my means. The jewels you have had from me to deliver Desdemona would half have corrupted a votarist.^o You have told me she hath received them, and returned me expectations and comforts of sudden respect^o and acquaintance; but I find none.

IAGO Well, go to; very well.

RODERIGO Very well? Go to? I cannot go to, man; nor 'tis not very well. Nay, I think it is scurvy, and begin to find myself fopped^o in it.

IAGO Very well.

RODERIGO I tell you 'tis not very well. I will make myself known to Desdemona. If she will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit and repent my unlawful solicitation. If not, assure yourself I will seek satisfaction of you.

IAGO You have said now?

RODERIGO Ay, and said nothing but what I protest^o intendment of doing.

IAGO Why, now I see there's mettle^o in thee, and even from this instant do build on thee a better opinion than ever before. Give my thy hand, Roderigo. Thou hast taken against me a most just exception;^o but yet I protest I have dealt most directly^o in thy affair.

RODERIGO It hath not appeared.

IAGO I grant indeed it hath not appeared, and your suspicion is not without wit and judgment. But, Roderigo, if thou hast that in thee indeed which I have greater reason to believe now than ever—I mean purpose, courage, and valor—this night show it. If thou the next night following enjoy not Desdemona, take me from this world with treachery and devise engines for^o my life.

RODERIGO Well, what is it? Is it within reason and compass?^o

168 stay the meat await the meal 174 daff'st put off 175 device scheme 176 conveniency what is needful 178 put up accept 187 votarist nun 189 sudden respect immediate consideration 194 fopped duped 202 protest aver 204 mettle spirit 207 exception objection 208 directly straight-forwardly 217 engines for schemes against

127 Beshrew curse 131 cogging cheating 140 companions fellows, rogues; unfold disclose 143 within door more quietly and moderately 144 squire a term of contempt 152 discourse of thought thinking 159 defeat destroy 164 humor mood

IAGO Sir, there is especial commission come from 220
 Venice to depute Cassio in Othello's place.
 RODERIGO Is that true? Why, then Othello and Desdemona return again to Venice.
 IAGO O, no; he goes into Mauritania and taketh away with him the fair Desdemona, unless his abode be 225 lingered here by some accident; wherein none can be so determinate^o as the removing of Cassio.
 RODERIGO How do you mean, removing him?
 IAGO Why, by making him incapable of Othello's place—knocking out his brains. 230
 RODERIGO And that you would have me to do?
 IAGO Ay, if you dare do yourself a profit and a right.
 He sups tonight with a harlotry,^o and thither will I go to him. He knows not yet of his honorable fortune. If you will watch his going thence, which I will fashion 235 to fall out^o between twelve and one, you may take him at your pleasure. I will be near to second^o your attempt, and he shall fall between us. Come, stand not amazed at it, but go along with me. I will show you such a necessity in his death that you shall think 240 yourself bound to put it on him. It is now high supper time, and the night grows to waste. About it.
 RODERIGO I will hear further reason for this.
 IAGO And you shall be satisfied. Exeunt.

Scene III. [The citadel.]

Enter OTHELLO, LODOVICO, DESDEMONA, EMILIA, and ATTENDANTS.

LODOVICO
 I do beseech you, sir, trouble yourself no further.
 OTHELLO
 O, pardon me: 'twill do me good to walk.
 LODOVICO
 Madam, good night. I humbly thank your ladyship.
 DESDEMONA
 Your honor is most welcome.
 OTHELLO
 Will you walk, sir? O, Desdemona. 5
 DESDEMONA My lord?
 OTHELLO Get you to bed on th' instant; I will be returned forthwith. Dismiss your attendant there.
 Look't be done.
 DESDEMONA I will, my lord. 10
Exit [OTHELLO, with LODOVICO and ATTENDANTS].
 EMILIA How goes it now? He looks gentler than he did.
 DESDEMONA
 He says he will return incontinent,^o
 And hath commanded me to go to bed,
 And bade me to dismiss you.
 EMILIA Dismiss me? 15
 DESDEMONA
 It was his bidding; therefore, good Emilia,
 Give me my nightly wearing, and adieu.
 We must not now displease him.
 EMILIA I would you had never seen him!

DESDEMONA
 So would not I. My love doth so approve him 20
 That even his stubbornness, his checks,^o his frowns—
 Prithee unpin me—have grace and favor.
 EMILIA I have laid these sheets you bade me on the bed.
 DESDEMONA
 All's one.^o Good Father, how foolish are our minds! 25
 If I do die before, prithee shroud me
 In one of these same sheets.
 EMILIA Come, come! You talk.
 DESDEMONA
 My mother had a maid called Barbary.
 She was in love; and he she loved proved mad
 And did forsake her. She had a song of "Willow"; 30
 An old thing 'twas, but it expressed her fortune,
 And she died singing it. That song tonight
 Will not go from my mind; I have much to do
 But to go hang my head all at one side
 And sing it like poor Barbary. Prithee dispatch. 35
 EMILIA
 Shall I go fetch your nightgown?
 DESDEMONA
 No, unpin me here.
 This Lodovico is a proper man.
 EMILIA A very handsome man.
 DESDEMONA He speaks well. 40
 EMILIA I know a lady in Venice would have walked barefoot to Palestine for a touch of his nether lip.
 DESDEMONA [Sings.]
 "The poor soul sat singing by a sycamore tree,
 Sing all a green willow;
 Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee, 45
 Sing willow, willow, willow.
 The fresh streams ran by her and murmured her moans;
 Sing willow, willow, willow;
 Her salt tears fell from her, and soft'ned the stones—
 Sing willow, willow, willow—" 50
 Lay by these.
 [Gives EMILIA her clothes.]
 "Willow, Willow"—
 Prithee hie^o thee; he'll come anon.^o
 "Sing all a green willow must be my garland.
 Let nobody blame him; his scorn I approve"— 55
 Nay, that's not next. Hark! Who is't that knocks?
 EMILIA It is the wind.
 DESDEMONA [Sings.]
 "I called my love false love; but what said he then?
 Sing willow, willow, willow:
 If I court moe^o women, you'll couch with moe men." 60
 So, get thee gone; good night. Mine eyes do itch.
 Doth that bode weeping?
 EMILIA 'Tis neither here nor there.
 DESDEMONA
 I have heard it said so. O, these men, these men.
 Dost thou in conscience think, tell me, Emilia,
 That there be women do abuse their husbands 65
 In such gross kind?
 EMILIA There be some such, no question.

219 compass possibility 227 determinate effective 233
 harlotry female 236 fall out occur 237 second support
 IV.iii.13 incontinent at once

21 checks rebukes 25 All's one No matter 53 hie hurry;
 anon at once 60 moe more

DESDEMONA

Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the world?

EMILIA

Why, would not you?

DESDEMONA

No, by this heavenly light!

EMILIA

Nor I neither by this heavenly light.

I might do't as well i' th' dark. 70

DESDEMONA

Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the world?

EMILIA The world's a huge thing; it is a great price for a small vice.

DESDEMONA

In troth, I think thou wouldst not.

EMILIA In troth, I think I should; and undo't when I 75 had done. Marry, I would not do such a thing for a joint-ring,^o nor for measures of lawn,^o nor for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition,^o but for all the whole world? Why, who would not make her husband a cuckold to make him a monarch? I 80 should venture purgatory for't.

DESDEMONA

Beshrew me if I would do such a wrong
For the whole world.EMILIA Why, the wrong is but a wrong i' th' world; and having the world for your labor, 'tis a wrong in 85 your own world, and you might quickly make it right.

DESDEMONA I do not think there is any such woman.

EMILIA Yes, a dozen; and as many to th' vantage as would store^o the world they played for. 90
But I do think it is their husbands' faults
If wives do fall. Say that they slack their duties
And pour our treasures into foreign^o laps;
Or else break out in peevish jealousies,
Throwing restraint upon us; or say they strike us, 95
Or scant our former having in despite^o—
Why, we have galls; and though we have some grace,
Yet have we some revenge. Let husbands know
Their wives have sense like them. They see, and smell,
And have their palates both for sweet and sour, 100
As husbands have. What is it that they do
When they change^o us for others? Is it sport?
I think it is. And doth affection^o breed it?
I think it doth. Is't frailty that thus errs?
It is so too. And have not we affections? 105
Desires for sport? and frailty? as men have?
Then let them use us well; else let them know,
The ills we do, their ills instruct us so.^o

DESDEMONA

Good night, good night. Heaven me such uses^o send,
Not to pick bad from bad, but by bad mend. Exeunt. 110

A C T V

Scene I. [A street.]Enter IAGO and RODERIGO.

IAGO

Here, stand behind this bulk;^o straight will he come.

Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home.

Quick, quick! Fear nothing; I'll be at thy elbow.

It makes us, or it mars us, think on that,

And fix most firm thy resolution. 5

RODERIGO

Be near at hand; I may miscarry in't.

IAGO

Here, at thy hand. Be bold, and take thy stand.

[Moves to one side.]

RODERIGO

I have no great devotion to the deed,

And yet he hath given me satisfying reasons.

'Tis but a man gone. Forth my sword! He dies! 10

IAGO

I have rubbed this young quat^o almost to the sense,^o

And he grows angry. Now, whether he kill Cassio,

Or Cassio him, or each do kill the other,

Every way makes my gain. Live Roderigo,

He calls me to a restitution large 15

Of gold and jewels that I bobbed^o from him

As gifts to Desdemona.

It must not be. If Cassio do remain,

He hath a daily beauty in his life

That makes me ugly; and besides, the Moor 20

May unfold me to him; there stand I in much peril.

No, he must die. But so, I hear him coming.

Enter CASSIO.

RODERIGO

I know his gait. 'Tis he. Villain, thou diest!

[Thrusts at CASSIO.]

CASSIO

That thrust had been mine enemy indeed

But that my coat^o is better than thou know'st. 25

I will make proof of thine.

[Fights with RODERIGO.]

RODERIGO

O, I am slain!^o

CASSIO

I am maimed forever. Help, ho! Murder! Murder!

Enter OTHELLO [to one side].

OTHELLO

The voice of Cassio. Iago keeps his word.

77 joint-ring a ring with two interlocking halves; lawn fine linen 78 exhibition payment 89–90 to . . . store in addition as would fill 93 foreign alien, i.e., other than the wife 96 scant . . . despite reduce, in spite, our household allowance (?) 102 change exchange 103 affection strong feeling, desire 108 instruct us so teach us to do likewise 109 uses practices

V.i.i bulk projecting stall of a shop 11 quat pimple; to the sense raw 16 bobbed swindled 25 coat i.e., a mail shirt or bulletproof vest 26 slain most editors add here a stage direction which has Iago wounding Cassio in the leg from behind, but remaining unseen, however, nothing in the text requires this, and Cassio's wound can be given him in the fight with Roderigo, for presumably when Cassio attacks Roderigo the latter would not simply accept the thrust but would parry, since Iago enters again at line 46, he must exit at some point after line 22

RODERIGO

O, villain that I am!

OTHELLO

It is even so.

CASSIO

O help, ho! Light! A surgeon!

OTHELLO

'Tis he. O brave Iago, honest and just,
 That hast such noble sense of thy friend's wrong!
 Thou teachest me. Minion,^o your dear lies dead,
 And your unblest^o fate hies.^o Strumpet, I come.
 Forth of my heart those charms, thine eyes, are blotted. 35
 Thy bed, lust-stained, shall with lust's blood be spotted. Exit OTHELLO.

Enter LODOVICO and GRATIANO.

CASSIO

What, ho? No watch? No passage?^o Murder! Murder!

GRATIANO

'Tis some mischance. The voice is very direful.

CASSIO O, help!

LODOVICO Hark!

RODERIGO O wretched villain!

LODOVICO

Two or three groan. 'Tis heavy night.
 These may be counterfeits. Let's think't unsafe
 To come into the cry without more help.

RODERIGO

Nobody come? Then shall I bleed to death.

LODOVICO Hark!

Enter IAGO [with a light].

GRATIANO

Here's one comes in his shirt, with light and weapons.

IAGO

Who's there? Whose noise is this that cries on murder?

LODOVICO

We do not know.

IAGO Do not you hear a cry?

CASSIO

Here, here! For heaven's sake, help me!

IAGO What's the matter? 50

GRATIANO

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.

LODOVICO

The same indeed, a very valiant fellow.

IAGO

What are you here that cry so grievously?

CASSIO

Iago? O, I am spoiled, undone by villains.
 Give me some help. 55

IAGO

O me, lieutenant! What villains have done this?

CASSIO

I think that one of them is hereabout
 And cannot make away.

IAGO O treacherous villains!

[To LODOVICO and GRATIANO.]

What are you there? Come in, and give some help.

RODERIGO

O, help me there! 60

CASSIO

That's one of them.

30 IAGO O murd'rous slave! O villain!

[Stabs RODERIGO.]

RODERIGO

O damned Iago! O inhuman dog!

IAGO

Kill men i' th' dark?—Where be these bloody thieves?—

How silent is this town!—Ho! Murder! Murder!—

What may you be? Are you of good or evil? 65

LODOVICO

As you shall prove us, praise us.

IAGO Signior Lodovico?

LODOVICO He, sir.

IAGO

I cry you mercy. Here's Cassio hurt by villains.

GRATIANO Cassio? 70

IAGO How is't, brother?

CASSIO

My leg is cut in two.

IAGO Marry, heaven forbid!

Light, gentlemen. I'll bind it with my shirt.

Enter BIANCA.

BIANCA

What is the matter, ho? Who is't that cried?

IAGO

Who is't that cried? 75

BIANCA

O my dear Cassio! My sweet Cassio!

O Cassio, Cassio, Cassio!

IAGO

O notable strumpet!—Cassio, may you suspect
 Who they should be that have thus mangled you?

CASSIO No. 80

GRATIANO I am sorry to find you thus. I have been to seek you.

IAGO

Lend me a garter. So. O for a chair
 To bear him easily hence.

BIANCA

Alas, he faints! O Cassio, Cassio, Cassio! 85

IAGO

Gentlemen all, I do suspect this trash

To be a party in this injury.—

Patience awhile, good Cassio.—Come, come.

Lend me a light. Know we this face or no?

Alas, my friend and my dear countryman 90

Roderigo? No.—Yes, sure.—Yes, 'tis Roderigo!

GRATIANO What, of Venice?

IAGO

Even he, sir. Did you know him?

GRATIANO

Know him? Ay.

IAGO

Signior Gratiano? I cry your gentle pardon.

These bloody accidents must excuse my manners 95

That so neglected you.

GRATIANO

I am glad to see you.

33 Minion hussy, i.e., Desdemona 34 unblest unsanctified;
hies approaches swiftly 37 passage passers-by

IAGO

How do you, Cassio?—O, a chair, a chair!

GRATIANO Roderigo?

IAGO

He, he, 'tis he! [A chair brought in.] O, that's well said;°
the chair.

Some good man bear him carefully from hence. 100

I'll fetch the general's surgeon. [To BIANCA.] For you, mistress,Save you your labor. [To CASSIO.] He that lies slain here, Cassio,

Was my dear friend. What malice was between you?

CASSIO

None in the world; nor do I know the man.

IAGO

What, look you pale?—O, bear him out o' th' air. 105

[CASSIO is carried off.]

Stay you, good gentlemen.—Look you pale, mistress?

Do you perceive the gastness° of her eye?

Nay, if you stare, we shall hear more anon.

Behold her well; I pray you look upon her.

Do you see, gentlemen? Nay, guiltiness will speak, 110

Though tongues were out of use.°

[Enter EMILIA.]

EMILIA

Alas, what is the matter? What is the matter, husband?

IAGO

Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Roderigo and fellows that are scaped.
He's almost slain, and Roderigo quite dead. 115

EMILIA

Alas, good gentleman! Alas, good Cassio!

IAGO

This is the fruits of whoring. Prithee, Emilia, Go know of Cassio where he supped tonight.[To BIANCA.]

What, do you shake at that?

BIANCA

He supped at my house; but I therefore shake not. 120

IAGO

O, did he so? I charge° you go with me.

EMILIA

Oh fie upon thee, strumpet!

BIANCA

I am no strumpet, but of life as honest

As you that thus abuse me.

EMILIA

As I? Fie upon thee!

IAGO

Kind gentlemen, let's go see poor Cassio dressed.° 125

[To BIANCA.]

Come, mistress, you must tell's another tale.

Emilia, run you to the citadel

And tell my lord and lady what hath happed.

[Exit EMILIA.]Will you go on afore? Exeunt [all but IAGO]. This is the nightThat either makes me or fordoes me quite.° [Exit.] 130Scene II. [Desdemona's chamber.]Enter OTHELLO [with a light]; and DESDEMONA in her bed.

OTHELLO

It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul.

Let me not name it to you, you chaste stars.

It is the cause. Yet I'll not shed her blood,

Nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow,

And smooth as monumental alabaster. 5

Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men.

Put out the light, and then put out the light.

If I quench thee, thou flaming minister,°

I can again thy former light restore,

Should I repent me; but once put out thy light, 10

Thou cunning'st° pattern of excelling nature,

I know not where is that Promethean heat°

That can thy light relume.° When I have plucked the rose,

I cannot give it vital° growth again;

It needs must wither. I'll smell thee on the tree. 15

[He kisses her.]

O balmy breath, that dost almost persuade

Justice to break her sword. One more, one more!

Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee,

And love thee after. One more, and that's the last!

So sweet was ne'er so fatal. I must weep, 20

But they are cruel tears. This sorrow's heavenly;

It strikes where it doth love. She wakes.

DESDEMONA

Who's there? Othello?

OTHELLO

Ay, Desdemona.

DESDEMONA

Will you come to bed, my lord?

OTHELLO

Have you prayed tonight, Desdemona?

DESDEMONA

Ay, my lord. 25

OTHELLO

If you bethink yourself of any crime

Unreconciled as yet to heaven and grace,

Solicit for it straight.

DESDEMONA

Alack, my lord, what may you mean by that?

OTHELLO

Well, do it, and be brief; I will walk by.° 30

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit.

No, heavens forfend! I would not kill thy soul.

DESDEMONA

Talk you of killing?

OTHELLO

Ay, I do.

DESDEMONA

Then heaven

Have mercy on me!

OTHELLO

Amen, with all my heart.

DESDEMONA

If you say so, I hope you will not kill me. 35

OTHELLO

Humh.

V.ii.8 minister worker, servant 11 cunning'st most intricate and skillfully wrought (by nature excelling itself) 12 Promethean heat divine fire (Prometheus is the Titan who stole fire from heaven and gave it to man) 13 relume relight 14 vital living 30 by nearby

99 well said well done 107 gastness terror 111 tongues
... use men no longer spoke 121 charge command 125
dressed bandaged 130 fordoes me quite completely ruins me

DESDEMONA

And yet I fear you; for you're fatal then
When your eyes roll so. Why I should fear I know not, Since guiltiness I know not; but yet I feel I fear.

OTHELLO

Think on thy sins.

DESDEMONA They are loves I bear to you.

40

OTHELLO

Ay, and for that thou diest.

DESDEMONA

That death's unnatural that kills for loving.
Alas, why gnaw you so your nether lip?
Some bloody passion shakes your very frame.
These are portents; but yet I hope, I hope,
They do not point on me.

45

OTHELLO

Peace and be still.

DESDEMONA

I will so. What's the matter?

OTHELLO

That handkerchief which I so loved and gave thee,
Thou gav'st to Cassio.

DESDEMONA

No, by my life and soul!

Send for the man and ask him.

OTHELLO

Sweet soul, take heed, 50

Take heed of perjury; thou art on thy deathbed.

DESDEMONA

Ay, but not yet to die.

OTHELLO

Presently.^o

Therefore confess thee freely of thy sin,
For to deny each article^o with oath
Cannot remove nor choke the strong conception
That I do groan withal. Thou art to die.

55

DESDEMONA

Then Lord have mercy on me.

OTHELLO

I say, amen.

DESDEMONA

And have you mercy too. I never did
Offend you in my life; never loved Cassio
But with such general warranty^o of heaven
As I might love. I never gave him token.

60

OTHELLO

By heaven, I saw my handkerchief in's hand!
O perjured woman! thou dost stone^o my heart,
And mak'st me call what I intend to do
A murder, which I thought a sacrifice.
I saw the handkerchief.

65

DESDEMONA

He found it then.

I never gave it him. Send for him hither.

Let him confess a truth.

OTHELLO

He hath confessed.

DESDEMONA What, my lord?

OTHELLO

That he hath used thee.

DESDEMONA

How? Unlawfully?

OTHELLO

Ay.

70

DESDEMONA

He will not say so.

OTHELLO

No, his mouth is stopped.

Honest Iago hath ta'en order for't.^o

DESDEMONA

O, my fear interprets. What, is he dead?

OTHELLO

Had all his hairs been lives, my great revenge
Had stomach^o for them all.

75

DESDEMONA

Alas, he is betrayed, and I undone!

OTHELLO

Out, strumpet! Weep'st thou for him to my face?

DESDEMONA

O, banish me, my lord, but kill me not!

OTHELLO

Down, strumpet!

DESDEMONA

Kill me tomorrow; let me live tonight!

80

OTHELLO

Nay, if you strive—

DESDEMONA

But half an hour!

OTHELLO

Being done, there is no pause.

DESDEMONA

But while I say one prayer!

OTHELLO

It is too late.

Smothers her.

EMILIA at the door.

EMILIA [Calls within.]

My lord, my lord! What, ho, my lord, my lord!

OTHELLO

What noise is this? Not dead? Not yet quite dead?
I that am cruel am yet merciful;
I would not have thee linger in thy pain.
So, so.

85

EMILIA [Within.]

What, ho! My lord, my lord!

OTHELLO

Who's there?

EMILIA [Within.]

O, good my lord, I would speak a word with you.

90

OTHELLO

Yes, 'tis Emilia.—By and by.—She's dead.—
'Tis like she comes to speak of Cassio's death.
The noise was high.^o Ha! No more moving?
Still as the grave.—Shall she come in? Were't good?—
I think she stirs again. No.—What's best to do?
If she come in, she'll sure speak to my wife.
My wife! My wife! What wife? I have no wife.
O, insupportable! O heavy hour!
Methinks it should be now a huge eclipse
Of sun and moon, and that th' affrighted globe
Should yawn^o at alteration.

95

100

EMILIA [Within.] I do beseech you

That I may speak with you, O good my lord!

OTHELLO

I had forgot thee. O, come in, Emilia.

Soft, by and by.—Let me the curtains draw.—

[Draws the bed hangings and then opens the door.]

52 Presently immediately 54 article item (of the charge of adultery, Othello makes heavy use of legal terms in this scene)
60 warranty allowance 63 stone turn to stone 72 ta'en order for't made sure of it

75 stomach appetite 93 high loud (Q1 reads "here")
99–101 Methinks . . . alteration the Elizabethans believed that great changes in human affairs were reflected by disorders in nature 101 yawn gape open (as in an earthquake)

Where art thou?

Enter EMILIA.

What's the matter with thee now? 105

EMILIA

O my good lord, yonder's foul murders done!

OTHELLO What? Now?

EMILIA But now, my lord.

OTHELLO

It is the very error° of the moon.

She comes more nearer earth than she was wont 110

And makes men mad.

EMILIA

Cassio, my lord, hath killed a young Venetian

Called Roderigo.

OTHELLO Roderigo killed?

And Cassio killed?

EMILIA No, Cassio is not killed.

OTHELLO

Not Cassio killed? Then murder's out of tune, 115

And sweet revenge grows harsh.

DESDEMONA

O, falsely, falsely murdered!

EMILIA O Lord! What cry is that?

OTHELLO That? What?

EMILIA

Out and alas! that was my lady's voice.

Help! Help, ho! Help! O lady, speak again! 120

Sweet Desdemona! O sweet mistress, speak!

DESDEMONA

A guiltless death I die.

EMILIA

O, who hath done this deed?

DESDEMONA

Nobody—I myself. Farewell.

Commend me to my kind lord. O, farewell! 125

[She dies.]

OTHELLO

Why, how should she be murd'red?

EMILIA Alas, who knows?

OTHELLO

You heard her say herself, it was not I.

EMILIA

She said so. I must needs report the truth.

OTHELLO

She's like a liar gone to burning hell!

'Twas I that killed her.

EMILIA O, the more angel she, 130

And you the blacker devil!

OTHELLO

She turned to folly, and she was a whore.

EMILIA

Thou dost belie her, and thou art a devil.

OTHELLO

She was false as water.

EMILIA Thou art rash as fire to say

That she was false. O, she was heavenly true! 135

OTHELLO

Cassio did top her. Ask thy husband else.

O, I were damned beneath all depth in hell

109 error wandering out of regular course (disorders in the heavens were believed by some to cause disorders on earth, as well as vice versa)

But that I did proceed upon just grounds

To this extremity. Thy husband knew it all.

EMILIA My husband? 140

OTHELLO Thy husband.

EMILIA

That she was false to wedlock?

OTHELLO

Ay, with Cassio. Had she been true,

If heaven would make me such another world

Of one entire and perfect chrysolite,° 145

I'd not have sold her for it.

EMILIA My husband?

OTHELLO

Ay, 'twas he that told me on her first.

An honest man he is, and hates the slime

That sticks on filthy deeds.

EMILIA My husband?

OTHELLO

What needs this iterance? Woman, I say thy husband. 150

EMILIA

O mistress, villainy hath made mocks with love!

My husband say she was false?

OTHELLO

He, woman.

I say, thy husband. Dost understand the word?

My friend, thy husband; honest, honest Iago.

EMILIA

If he say so, may his pernicious soul 155

Rot half a grain a day! He lies to th' heart.

She was too fond of her most filthy bargain.

OTHELLO Hah?

EMILIA

Do thy worst.

This deed of thine is no more worthy heaven 160

Than thou wast worthy her.

OTHELLO Peace, you were best.°

EMILIA

Thou hast not half that pow'r to do me harm

As I have to be hurt. O gull! O dolt!

As ignorant as dirt! Thou hast done a deed—

[OTHELLO moves to draw his sword.]

I care not for thy sword; I'll make thee known, 165

Though I lost twenty lives. Help! Help! Ho! Help!

The Moor hath killed my mistress! Murder! murder!

Enter MONTANO, GRATIANO, and IAGO [and others].

MONTANO

What is the matter? How now, general?

EMILIA

O, are you come, Iago? You have done well,

That men must lay their murders on your neck. 170

GRATIANO

What is the matter?

EMILIA

Disprove this villain, if thou be'st a man.

He says thou told'st him that his wife was false.

I know thou didst not; thou'rt not such a villain.

Speak, for my heart is full. 175

IAGO

I told her what I thought, and told no more

Than what he found himself was apt and true.

145 chrysolite topaz 161 Peace . . . best You had better be silent

EMILIA

But did you ever tell him she was false?

IAGO I did.

EMILIA

You told a lie, an odious damnèd lie!

Upon my soul, a lie! A wicked lie!

She false with Cassio? Did you say with Cassio?

IAGO

With Cassio, mistress. Go to, charm^o your tongue.

EMILIA

I will not charm my tongue; I am bound to speak:

My mistress here lies murdered in her bed.

ALL

O heavens forbend!

EMILIA

And your reports have set the murder on.

OTHELLO

Nay, stare not, masters. It is true indeed.

GRATIANO

'Tis a strange truth.

MONTANO

O monstrous act!

EMILIA

Villainy, villainy, villainy!

I think upon't—I think I smell't!—O villainy!

I thought so then.—I'll kill myself for grief.—

O villainy, villainy!

IAGO

What, are you mad? I charge you get you home.

EMILIA

Good gentlemen, let me have leave to speak.

'Tis proper I obey him, but not now.

Perchance, Iago, I will ne'er go home.

OTHELLO

O! O! O! [Falls on the bed.]

EMILIA

Nay, lay thee down and roar,

For thou hast killed the sweetest innocent

That e'er did lift up eye.

OTHELLO

O, she was foul!

[Rises.]

I scarce did know you, uncle. There lies your niece,

Whose breath, indeed, these hands have newly stopped.

I know this act shows horrible and grim.

GRATIANO

Poor Desdemon! I am glad thy father's dead.

Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief

Shore his old thread in twain. Did he live now,

This sight would make him do a desperate turn;

Yea, curse his better angel from his side,

And fall to reprobation.^o

OTHELLO

'Tis pitiful; but yet Iago knows

That she with Cassio hath the act of shame

A thousand times committed. Cassio confessed it;

And she did gratify his amorous works

With that recognizance and pledge of love,

Which I first gave her. I saw it in his hand.

It was a handkerchief, an antique token

My father gave my mother.

EMILIA

O God! O heavenly God!

IAGO

Zounds, hold your peace!

EMILIA

'Twill out, 'twill out! I peace?

No, I will speak as liberal as the north.^o

180

Let heaven and men and devils, let them all,

All, all, cry shame against me, yet I'll speak.

IAGO

Be wise, and get you home.

EMILIA

I will not.

[IAGO draws and threatens EMILIA.]

185

GRATIANO

Fie! Your sword upon a woman?

EMILIA

O thou dull Moor, that handkerchief thou speak'st of 225

I found by fortune, and did give my husband;

For often with a solemn earnestness—

More than indeed belonged to such a trifle—

He begged of me to steal't.

IAGO

Villainous whore!

EMILIA

She give it Cassio? No, alas, I found it,

190

And I did give't my husband.

IAGO

Filth, thou liest!

EMILIA

By heaven, I do not, I do not, gentlemen.

O murd'rous coxcomb! What should such a fool

Do with so good a wife?

OTHELLO

Are there no stones^o in heaven

195

But what serves for the thunder? Precious villain! 235

[OTHELLO runs at IAGO, but is disarmed by MONTANO.IAGO kills his wife.]

GRATIANO

The woman falls. Sure he hath killed his wife.

EMILIA

Ay, ay. O, lay me by my mistress' side. [Exit IAGO.]

200

GRATIANO

He's gone, but his wife's killed.

MONTANO

'Tis a notorious^o villain. Take you this weapon,

Which I have recovered from the Moor.

205

Come, guard the door without. Let him not pass,

But kill him rather. I'll after that same villain,

For 'tis a damnèd slave.

Exit, [with all but OTHELLO and EMILIA].

OTHELLO

I am not valiant neither;

But every puny whipster^o gets my sword.

But why should honor outlive honesty?

210

Let it go all.

EMILIA

What did thy song bode, lady?

Hark, canst thou hear me? I will play the swan,

And die in music. [Sings.] "Willow, willow, willow."

Moor, she was chaste. She loved thee, cruel Moor,

So come my soul to bliss as I speak true.

215

So speaking as I think, alas, I die.

[She dies.]

OTHELLO

I have another weapon in this chamber;

220 liberal . . . north freely (and biting) as the north wind blows
 234 stones thunderbolts 239 notorious out-and-out
 244 puny whipster small top-whipping boy (?)

It was a sword of Spain, the ice-brook's temper.
O, here it is.—Uncle, I must come forth.

GRATIANO [Within.]

If thou attempt it, it will cost thee dear.
Thou hast no weapon, and perforce must suffer.

OTHELLO

Look in upon me then and speak with me,
Or, naked as I am, I will assault thee.

[Enter GRATIANO.]

GRATIANO

What is the matter?

OTHELLO Behold, I have a weapon;

A better never did itself sustain
Upon a soldier's thigh. I have seen the day
That with this little arm and this good sword
I have made my way through more impediments
Than twenty times your stop. But O vain boast!
Who can control his fate? 'Tis not so now.
Be not afraid, though you do see me weaponed.
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,^o
And very seamark of my utmost sail.^o
Do you go back dismayed? 'Tis a lost fear.
Man but a rush^o against Othello's breast,
And he retires. Where should Othello go?
Now, how dost thou look now? O ill-starred wench!
Pale as thy smock! When we shall meet at compt,^o
This look of thine will hurl my soul from heaven,
And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl?
Even like thy chastity.

O cursèd, cursèd slave! Whip me, ye devils,
From the possession of^o this heavenly sight!
Blow me about in winds! roast me in sulfur!
Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire!
O Desdemon! Dead Desdemon; dead. O! O!

*Enter LODOVICO, CASSIO, MONTANO, and IAGO
[as prisoner,] with OFFICERS.*

LODOVICO

Where is this rash and most unfortunate man?

OTHELLO

That's he that was Othello? Here I am.

LODOVICO

Where is that viper? Bring the villain forth.

OTHELLO

I look down towards his feet^o—but that's a fable.
If that thou be'st a devil, I cannot kill thee.

[Wounds IAGO.]

LODOVICO

Wrench his sword from him. [OTHELLO is disarmed.]

IAGO

I bleed, sir, but not killed.

OTHELLO

I am not sorry neither. I'd have thee live;
For in my sense, 'tis happiness to die.

LODOVICO

O thou Othello that was once so good,

267 butt target, stopping place 268 seamark . . . sail marker of my farthest journey 270 Man . . . rush attack with only a reed 273 compt Judgment Day 278 the possession of being possessed by 285 towards his feet i.e., for his cloven hoofs

Fall'n in the practice^o of a cursèd slave,
What shall be said to thee?

OTHELLO Why, anything:

255 An honorable murderer, if you will;
For naught I did in hate, but all in honor.

LODOVICO

This wretch hath part confessed his villainy.
Did you and he consent in Cassio's death?

295

OTHELLO Ay.

CASSIO

Dear general, I never gave you cause.

OTHELLO

I do believe it, and I ask your pardon.
Will you, I pray, demand that demi-devil
Why he hath thus ensnared my soul and body?

260

300

IAGO

Demand me nothing. What you know, you know.
From this time forth I never will speak word.

265

LODOVICO

What, not to pray?

GRATIANO

Torments will ope your lips.

OTHELLO

Well, thou dost best.

305

LODOVICO

Sir, you shall understand what hath befall'n,
Which, as I think, you know not. Here is a letter
Found in the pocket of the slain Roderigo;
And here another. The one of them imports
The death of Cassio to be undertook
By Roderigo.

270

275

310

OTHELLO

O villain!

CASSIO Most heathenish and most gross!

LODOVICO

Now here's another discontented paper
Found in his pocket too; and this, it seems,
Roderigo meant t' have sent this damnèd villain;
But that, belike, Iago in the interim
Came in and satisfied him.

280

315

OTHELLO

O thou pernicious caitiff!

How came you, Cassio, by that handkerchief

That was my wife's?

CASSIO

I found it in my chamber;

And he himself confessed it but even now

That there he dropped it for a special purpose

Which wrought to his desire.

285

OTHELLO

O fool! Fool! Fool!

CASSIO

There is besides in Roderigo's letter,
How he upbraids Iago that he made him
Brave me upon the watch; whereon it came
That I was cast; and even but now he spake,
After long seeming dead—Iago hurt him,
Iago set him on.

325

LODOVICO

You must forsake this room and go with us.
Your power and your command is taken off,
And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this slave,
If there be any cunning cruelty
That can torment him much and hold him long,
It shall be his. You shall close prisoner rest 330

291 practice plotting

Till that the nature of your fault be known
To the Venetian state. Come, bring away.

O T H E L L O

Soft you, a word or two before you go.
I have done the state some service, and they know't.
No more of that. I pray you, in your letters,
When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me as I am. Nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice. Then must you speak
Of one that loved not wisely, but too well;
Of one not easily jealous, but, being wrought,
Perplexed in the extreme; of one whose hand,
Like the base Judean,^o threw a pearl away
Richer than all his tribe; of one whose subdued eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drops tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their med'cinable gum. Set you down this.
And say besides that in Aleppo once,
Where a malignant and a turbaned Turk
Beat a Venetian and traduced the state,
I took by th' throat the circumcised dog
And smote him—thus.

346 Judean most editors use the Q1 reading, "Indian," here, but F is clear; both readings point toward the infidel, the unbeliever

335 [He stabs himself.]

L O D O V I C O

O bloody period!^o

G R A T I A N O All that is spoke is marred.

O T H E L L O

340 I kissed thee ere I killed thee. No way but this, Killing myself, to die upon a kiss.

[He falls over Desdemona and dies.]

C A S S I O

345 This did I fear, but thought he had no weapon;
For he was great of heart.

L O D O V I C O [To IAGO.] O Spartan dog, 360

More fell^o than anguish, hunger, or the sea!

Look on the tragic loading of this bed.

This is thy work. The object poisons sight;

350 Let it be hid. [Bed curtains drawn.] Gratiano, keep^o the house,

And seize upon the fortunes of the Moor, 365

For they succeed on you. To you, lord governor,

Remains the censure of this hellish villain,

355 The time, the place, the torture. O, enforce it!

Myself will straight aboard, and to the state

This heavy act with heavy heart relate.

Exeunt. 370

356 period end 361 fell cruel 364 keep remain in

MEASURE FOR MEASURE

EDITED BY S. NAGARAJAN

Introduction

Measure for Measure was first published in 1623 in the Folio of Shakespeare's works. It was probably written in 1604, for it is on record that a play called Mesure for Mesure, by "Shaxberd" was performed before King James I on December 26 of that year, when it was presumably a new play. It was thus composed just before the writing of the great tragedies in which Shakespeare's powers are seen at their height. It does not seem to have been performed again until 1662, and in fact, until recently, it was not popular on the stage in spite of its theatrical craftsmanship.

For many years it was not popular with the critics either. Coleridge, to whom we owe some of our most penetrating Shakespeare criticism, found it "a hateful work," indeed "the only painful play" that Shakespeare ever wrote. Its comedy disgusted him and its tragedy seemed merely horrible. His sense of justice was revolted by the pardon of Angelo, the corrupt deputy who is virtually guilty of both murder and rape. The heroine, Isabella, was an unamiable character who primly preferred her own chastity to her brother's life. As for that brother, he was a weak, vacillating youth who expected his sister to come to his rescue when he was overtaken by the consequences of his own immorality. The entire play lurched and slithered to an unearned happy ending that was altogether unconvincing. With the notable exception of Walter Pater, who wrote a fine essay on the play in Appreciations, most of the nineteenth-century critics of Shakespeare thought the play was a regrettable performance, a dark comedy, full of un-Shakespearean satire and cynicism. The only explanations they could think of were that some personal calamity or disillusionment had befallen the dramatist at the time he wrote the play or that the early sixteenth-century Zeitgeist was responsible for the gloom of the play.

In our own day a very different view of the play is favored. Most critics hold that the play should be read not as naturalistic drama in the nineteenth-century mode, but as a dramatic parable, symbolic in character and event, embodying some of the noblest precepts of the Christian faith. (The foremost exponent of this view has been G. Wilson Knight, though it was foreshadowed in the introduction to the play in the American First Folio edition of Charlotte Porter and Helen A. Clarke, 1903-12.) The new interpretation may occasionally claim a consistency of impression that the play does not quite warrant, but it is more coherent than the old view, which implicitly accused Shakespeare of confusing art with life. While this is the majority view, some modern critics, such as Mary M. Lascelles, feel that the play is uneven, though great at times. They think that Shakespeare's artistic experience has raised questions that cannot properly be answered, sometimes even asked, in the restrictive medium of tragic-comedy. As for the religious significance of the play, they feel that its action and characterization are more intimately inspired by Shakespeare's immediate sources in drama and folklore than by Christianity. The Italian storybook that he probably consulted contains several tales on the theme of a woman forgiving an enemy who has done her an irreparable wrong, and the folklore of Shakespeare's day had popularized the legend of a good monarch who, like the duke in our play, moves among his people in disguise to find out the truth for himself and to protect the good and punish the wicked.

Shakespeare's chief source was almost certainly George Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra (1578), an earnest but dull and tedious play in two parts of five acts each. Whetstone made a prose version of the story for his collection of stories called the Heptameron of Civil Discourses (1582). In addition to these works, Shakespeare very probably knew the Italian source of Whetstone, the Hecatommithi (1565) of Giraldi Cinthio, and Cinthio's dramatized version of the story, Epitia (1583). For summaries of these sources, see A Note on the Sources (pp. 1141-42).

When Shakespeare took up Whetstone's tale of Cassandra and Promos, he made certain far-reaching changes. (And let us add here that none of these changes would amount to much but for Shakespeare's poetry, a fact that source-study should not take for granted.) In the first place, Cassandra's enforced acceptance of the loathsome and virtually illusory choice thrust on her by Promos wounds our moral feelings, and her last-minute marriage, by royal fiat, to the violator of her honor merely adds insult to injury. Even in Shakespeare's day Puritan moralists, to mention only one group, held that there were certain wrongs that no marriage could redress. Moreover, Cassandra's sudden change from hatred to love as soon as she is married to Promos is incredible. Very properly, therefore, Shakespeare made his heroine refuse to yield to Angelo. But since the story required that Angelo's condition somehow be met, he created the character of Mariana and substituted her for Isabella by means of an old folk-tale device that was presumably acceptable to the original audience. The bed trick, as it is usually called, had already been used in what is very likely an earlier play, All's Well That Ends Well. The bed trick does not commend itself to modern taste and does not quite agree with the temper of the play, but we must remember that Mariana is deeply in love with Angelo, and the consummation of her love leads to her marriage to him at the end. Our sympathies are so firmly engaged in her behalf that we want her to be happy, and we wink at this otherwise dubious method of securing her happiness.

Shakespeare also altered the significance of the brother's offense. In Whetstone's play, Andrugio is guilty of fornication, committed, as in Shakespeare's play, with the girl's consent. Cassandra attributes her brother's offense partly to the irresistible force of love and partly to his youth. In Measure for Measure, however, Claudio explains the reason for his arrest differently:

From too much liberty, my Lucio, liberty.
As surfeit is the father of much fast,
So every scope by the immoderate use
Turns to restraint. Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that ravin down their proper bane,
A thirsty evil, and when we drink, we die. (I.ii.128-33)

In our very nature there is something that drives us into acts of "too much liberty," which we loathe even while we indulge in them. It is the old problem stated by Paul in his Epistle to the Romans:

For that which I do, I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. . . . For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not. For the good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do. . . . I find then a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me.

Claudio is angry and disgusted with himself, as we see from the simile that he uses. Self-restraint is essential, but seems impossible. He does not know what to do about his problem. His friend, Lucio, described in the original list of actors as "a fantastic," does not see that there is a problem. His view of the matter is reflected in the imagery of his speech describing Claudio's offense:

Your brother and his lover have embraced;
As those that feed grow full, as blossoming time
That from the seedness the bare fallow brings
To teeming foison, even so her plenteous womb
Expreseth his full tilth and husbandry. (I.iv.40-44)

Juliet's "fertility" was realized by Claudio's "tilth." Not to do as Claudio did is to be guilty of a lack of "husbandry." Man must be natural in his sexual life, even as nonhuman nature is. Later Lucio implies that sex will stop only when men give up eating; "one fruitful meal will set me to it." There is enough truth in this view of human sex to make it superficially attractive, but Shakespeare puts us on our guard by showing us its consequences. Corruption boils and bubbles in Vienna. Lucio himself, it transpires, has seduced a girl after promising to marry her, and has abandoned her and the child. (Incidentally, the child has been looked after by a bawd, a fact that should make us distrust theories of Shakespeare's cynicism in Measure for Measure.) He has degenerated into a coarse sensualist, bent on his own pleasures and heedless of all the essential obligations of a decent life in society. Even his interest in Claudio's pardon is not altogether unselfish. He tells Claudio that he prays Isabella may persuade Angelo to pardon Claudio "as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand under grievous imposition, as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost at a game of tick-tack" (I.ii.190-94).

Shakespeare's heroine, Isabella, is a novice of the order of Saint Clare. Why Shakespeare made this change is difficult to explain. It has been argued that he did so in order to make clear to his original audience, brought up, as it were, on heroines who gave up their chastity to save condemned brothers, that his heroine was a chip off a much different block, and that she could not yield to the judge because she was going to be a nun. But Shakespeare's young women do not require motivation or cause for chastity. It is an absolute value with them. Her novitiate may be related to the problem raised by her brother: Is self-control possible when the blood prompts? The "prompture of the blood" is one of her own phrases (II.iv.177), and she seems not ignorant of it personally, if we may judge from the accents of her admission to Angelo that women, no less than men, are frail:

Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
Which are as easy broke as they make forms.
Women! Help heaven! Men their creation mar
In profiting by them. Nay, call us ten times frail;
For we are soft as our complexions are,
And credulous to false prints. (II.iv.124-29)

And then there is the "singular rigidity of her bearing" when she denounces her brother in the prison for daring to suggest that she yield to Angelo:

O you beast,
O faithless coward, O dishonest wretch!
Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?
Is't not a kind of incest, to take life
From thine own sister's shame? What should I think?
Heaven shield my mother played my father fair,
For such a warpèd slip of wilderness
Ne'er issued from his blood. Take my defiance,
Die, perish! Might but my bending down
Reprieve thee from thy fate, it should proceed.
I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death,
No word to save thee. (III.i.135-46)

It is not her basic stand, her refusal to yield, that one objects to here—though Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch was moved to declare that there was something rancid in her chastity—but the harsh tone she takes with her poor brother when he is trembling on the brink of the grave. This harshness, I think, reflects her bitterness at being asked to abet the "prompture of the blood." The only rule of the convent that we hear of in the play relates to receiving male visitors, and Isabella desires an even "stricter restraint" upon the votarists of Saint Clare, though that order of nuns has the reputation of being the strictest of the Roman Catholic Church. At the end of the play the duke makes her a proposal which, he says, "much imports her good." It surely cannot be the rank of Duchess of Vienna, because she is not presented in the play as a girl with whom such material considerations would weigh. Presumably she accepts the duke's proposal, for, though the text is silent on that point, the stage action called for when the duke says, "Give me your hand, and say you will be mine" is suggestive. (In Shakespeare's day it was perfectly in order for a novice to go back to secular life.) The novitiate of Isabella, I suggest, is her response to the problem of the prompture of the blood, and it is attractive to believe that she finally discovered that the problem could be resolved in the state of marriage also.

She could have learned this from Mariana. The creation of the character, Mariana, it has been noted above, is another change that Shakespeare made in his source. In spite of Angelo's perfidy, which, says the duke, "in all reason should have quenched her love" for him, she continues to cherish him. Nevertheless she hesitates to substitute herself for Isabella in Angelo's bed until she is assured by her spiritual adviser that it is no sin. Hers is a love marked by the depth and not the tumult of the soul; it is a fervent but not ungovernable love. And it is so because it is devoted to the welfare of the beloved's soul. In the last act, when she pleads with the duke to pardon her husband, she claims that "best men are molded out of faults;/And, for the most, become much more the better/For being a little bad" (V.i.441-43). Mariana's love, we may say without undue exaggeration, is a humble human instance of that divine love which, Isabella reminds Angelo in II.ii, found out the remedy when "all the souls that were, were forfeit." We know that Isabella is deeply moved as she listens to the story of Mariana's lovelorn misery, and perhaps Isabella learns from Mariana that a love centered on the soul of the beloved is free from the prompture of the blood.

There is a curious resemblance between Isabella and Angelo. It is intimated, when the duke summons Angelo to take up the reins of office, that he too has lived a life of some seclusion. Lucio tells us that Angelo has tried to "blunt his natural edge/With profits of the mind, study and fast" (I.iv.60-61); the duke admits that Angelo is "precise" and "scarce confesses/That his blood flows" (I.iii.51-52); and Lucio adds irreverently that his "blood/Is very snow-broth" (I.iv.57-58) and "his urine is congealed ice" (III.ii.111-12)! This strictness of conduct is not hypocrisy. Isabella herself allows in V.i that "a due sincerity" governed his official actions until he set eyes on her. But when she appears before him, the prompture of the blood overcomes him. He says, "Never could the strumpet,/With all her double vigor, art and nature,/Once stir my temper" (II.ii.183-85); but the very virtue of Isabella proves his undoing. The truth seems to be that he has identified his virtue wholly with a mode of external conduct. His correct conduct does not represent a transformed will, but is merely a factitious creation. It is not a habit of the soul. He explains to the duke in the last act that he rejected Mariana because he suspected her of levity. It is altogether characteristic of him that he should make this mistake. His ear, coarsened by a strident moralistic code that is throttling the instincts, cannot catch the quiet melody of an ethic that has educated the very rhythm of the blood. So "the natural guiltiness" that Isabella speaks of remains, subverting virtue itself to effect Angelo's downfall. He too is a victim of the problem of "we would, and we would not," as he himself points out (IV.iv.34). And the problem arises, he adds, when we have forgotten our "grace," a word that may have a specific Christian sense in view of Isabella's charge that he is not "new made." The duke's death sentence releases Angelo from an intolerable, meaningless existence, and he welcomes it. We may stretch our belief a bit and take it that he is a new-made man after he is pardoned. To detest him and to quarrel with Shakespeare for letting him off is perhaps natural, for the process of his contrition is not fully presented, but we must try to recognize duly his part in the design of the play.

Angelo's ignorance of the true inwardness of virtue is also the cause of the excessive legalism of his rule. At bottom, the rule of law as Angelo interprets it is ultimately futile. Its severity is aimless, and its achievements are transitory. "There is so great a fever on goodness, that the dissolution of it must cure it," says the disguised duke to Escalus (III.ii.223-24). At best, law can only regulate our outward conduct; it cannot change "the old man" in us. And as long as that change does not take place, sensuality will prevail in Vienna—and elsewhere. The wise old Escalus, the most genial character in the play, tries to deal with the problem in his gentle, humanitarian way, but he discovers that Mistress Overdone is "still forfeit in the same kind" after "double and treble admonition" (III.ii.194-95). Pompey refuses to change at all. The duke himself, as it happens, intervenes to save Claudio's life precisely when Claudio sues to be rid of it. In dealing with Barnardine, the duke reveals his essentially spiritual approach to the problem of law and justice. Barnardine is a murderer and has "a stubborn soul,/That apprehends no further than this world" (V.i.482-83), and he has lived accordingly. When the duke pardons all Barnardine's earthly faults, he entrusts him to a friar for advice. There seems to be some difference between the duke and Isabella in their attitudes toward dealing with criminals. When Isabella first appears before Angelo, she does not plead, as Cassandra had done before Promos in Whetstone's play, that her brother is willing to marry the girl and that the marriage should be taken as setting right the wrong done. Lucio has told her that what the law seeks is not to enforce marriage between sexual offenders, to regularize irregular sexual unions by means of marriage ex post facto, but "to give fear to use and liberty" (I.iv.62). So she pleads simply for mercy. Angelo's reply is that he cannot pardon Claudio because Claudio is a forfeit of the law, not of Angelo. She reminds him that "all the souls that were were forfeit once;/And He that might the vantage best have took/Found out the remedy" (II.ii.74-76). And so would Angelo now, she implies, if he were "new made." Angelo's reply is that he did not make the law, but merely administers it; hence her reference to the remedy is irrelevant. Then she shifts her argument: though many have committed this offense, nobody has died for it. Angelo retorts that that is precisely why the law should be enforced now so that intending offenders might take note. She then exclaims: "O, it is excellent/To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous/To use it like a giant" (II.ii.108-10). The punishment should be related not to the strength of the punisher, but to the nature of the offense and the capacity of the offender to bear the punishment. If man knew his "glassy essence," he would know in whose image he had been made, and the knowledge would teach him how to exercise his authority. Then she goes on to remind Angelo of the dependence of justice on the social status of the offender. She ends the first day's argument by declaring that none is qualified to judge who himself suffers from "the natural guiltiness." On the second day Angelo opens the argument with the proposition that murder and fornication are equally culpable. When Isabella objects that "'tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth," he invites her to commit fornication to save her brother. She is forced to make a distinction between "lawful mercy" and "foul redemption." Thus the question is raised: What is "lawful mercy"? We have seen the duke's answer: it is "lawful mercy" when the criminal is reformed by means of his spiritual reeducation. The case for lawful mercy to Claudio, his "free pardon," must rest on the fact that Claudio is "new made." How? Once again we must turn to the duke, to what he says and does in the play.

In fact, one of the most significant changes that Shakespeare made from his sources was to enlarge the role of the ruler in the story to make him a disguised spectator of the action of the play, and later an active participant in it, instead of a fifth-act deus ex machina solving all the otherwise insoluble problems of the play. Duke Vincentio has been rather slack in his public duties, loving his subjects not wisely but too well, and this is, as he himself rather ruefully confesses, a serious fault in him. But he is a scholar, and his supreme concern has always been to know himself. When he contributes in his indirect way to the debate initiated by Claudio, he implies that self-restraint is both essential and possible. In II.iii he goes to the prison, disguised as a friar, to console "the afflicted spirits" there, and requests the Provost to inform him of the nature of the crimes committed by the condemned prisoners so that he may "minister to them accordingly." With Claudio, the ministration takes the significant form of setting him free from "the deceiving promises of life" and of creating in him a calm resolution to face the approaching end. Sir Thomas More, the Tudor statesman and saint about whom Shakespeare may have helped to write a play, declares in his little treatise, The Four Last Things, written to teach the art of "dying well," that nothing can more effectively withdraw the human soul from the wretched affections of the body than a sincere remembrance of death. "The thirsty evil" that Claudio bemoans is the consequence of an excessive attachment to life. The duke succeeds with Claudio to the extent that, after a momentary lapse that shows how strong the hold of life is, Claudio says, "I am so out of love with life, that I will sue to be rid of it" (III.i.170-71). After this scene Claudio appears very briefly only once more, but the three lines that he speaks (IV.ii.67-69) have a calmness of image and rhythm that is reassuring.

With Angelo the duke seemingly decides on "measure for measure." He also reminds Isabella that the ghost of her brother, whom she supposes to be dead, cries out for vengeance. In condemning Angelo, the duke thus seems to observe the law of the Old Testament—an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. But actually he is testing Isabella's adherence to the New Law, which commands that one's enemy shall be loved as a friend, and that good shall be returned for evil. How superbly she meets the test! She does not plead for Angelo's pardon, for she has seen Mariana's plea for mercy disallowed. With a boldness that takes the breath away, she asserts that Angelo is not guilty at all. There are three charges against him: his "salt imagination" wronged her honor; he violated sacred chastity; and he broke his promise that he would pardon Claudio if the foul ransom was paid. On the first charge, the duke himself has recommended that Angelo be pardoned because that "salt imagination" provided the opportunity for doing a service to Mariana. The second charge is not true, since Mariana was Angelo's wife on "a precontract." As for the "promise-breach," it cannot be denied that Isabella did not in fact lie with Angelo, or that her brother was guilty, after all, of the crime for which he was sentenced. The type of betrothal which Claudio and Juliet had entered upon did not in law give them any marital rights, whereas Mariana's contract with Angelo did, at least in law. Finally, it is true that Angelo intended to violate her, but the intention never became an act, and the law cannot take cognizance of thoughts. "Thoughts are no subjects,/Intents but merely thoughts" (V.i.455-56). Counsel for the defense submits therefore that the accused is not guilty on any count, does not need a pardon, and cannot be punished with "measure for measure." The prosperous art Isabella shows in playing with reason and discourse could hardly go further. These arguments convince the duke not of Angelo's guiltlessness, of course, but of Isabella's adherence to the New Law. When Angelo is pardoned, it is because he, like Claudio earlier, is deeply repentant. We must believe that his evil has quit him.

Such, then, are some of the themes and characters of the play before us. Shakespeare's contemporaries would probably have called it a tragi-comedy, a new genre in those days. Tragi-comedy is not a loose combining of tragedy and comedy, but an independent form of dramatic composition with an aesthetic of its own. As the Italian playwright Giambattista Guarini, who had himself written a tragi-comedy, stated in his Compendium of Tragi-Comic Poetry (published in 1601): "He who makes a tragi-comedy does not intend to compose separately either a tragedy or a comedy, but from the two a third thing that will be perfect of its kind, and may take from the others the parts that with most verisimilitude can stand together." From tragedy, said Guarini, tragi-comedy takes the movement but not the disturbance of the feelings, the pleasure and not the sadness, the danger but not the death; from comedy, it takes laughter that is not excessive, modest amusement, feigned difficulty, happy reversal, and, above all, the comic order. Speaking of the style proper to tragi-comedy, Guarini said that the magnificent was its norm, combined not with the grave as in a tragedy, but with the polished. There is something in this description of tragi-comedy that fits Measure for Measure. For instance, our awareness of the immanence of the duke, with his declared objective of testing whether power will change purpose effectively, diverts the first part of the play from the tragic course. The intrigue of the fourth act, the "feigned difficulty," does not exist for its own sake, but serves to establish the control of the duke over the action and to lead to a happy conclusion. (The duke has been often compared to Prospero in The Tempest, but Prospero's control over what is happening is never in doubt. The same consideration should make us hesitate to accept the extreme conclusion in the Christian interpretation of the play that the duke is Providence; Providence never had such a narrow escape from defeat at human hands.) We have not spoken much of the "modest amusement" of tragi-comedy in Measure for Measure, but it is there in plenty, in character, situation, and dialogue; Measure for Measure is a funny play, though some of the jokes, admittedly, sail very close to the wind. As for the style, its norm is indeed magnificent, but its range is wide: from the passionate conjurations of Isabella, the tortured self-examinations of Angelo, the exploratory dialectic of Angelo and Isabella in which we see character developing, the relentless meditative analysis of the duke, and the surging thrill of terror in Claudio as he gazes into the dark void of the beyond—from all these to the gay, irreverent bawdry of Lucio, which sets up a rival social order and morality, and the petty cunning of Pompey's coiled speech with Escalus. All may not easily agree with F. R. Leavis that Measure for Measure is "the most consummate of Shakespeare's achievements," but we must acknowledge with Coleridge that it is Shakespearean throughout.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCES

The principal sources of Measure for Measure are George Whetstone's play of Promos and Cassandra (1578) and its prose redaction in the same author's Heptameron of Civil Discourses (1582). Whetstone's own source was Giraldi Cinthio's Hecatomithi (1565); and Shakespeare almost certainly knew this work, which contains the story of Othello. He may, in addition, have also known Cinthio's posthumously published play of Epitia (1583). Brief summaries of these sources are given here for comparison with Shakespeare's treatment of the story.

GIRALDI CINTHIO's Hecatomithi, DECADE 8, NOVELLA 5

The Emperor Maximian appoints one of his trusted men, Juriste, to rule over the city of Innsbruck. He charges him particularly to observe justice scrupulously. Juriste, who lacks all self-knowledge, accepts the grave responsibility with alacrity and for a while he is a model ruler.

A young man called Vico is brought before Juriste for violating a virgin, and is condemned to death according to the laws of the city. Vico's sister, Epitia, who is a student of philosophy and has a sweet way of speaking, pleads for her brother: her brother is very young; he was moved by the impulse of love; the ravished maiden is unmarried and Vico is willing to marry her; the law was made so severe only to deter would-be offenders, not really to be enforced. Captivated by Epitia's beauty and eloquence, Juriste promises to reconsider the case. When she meets him again, he proposes that she should lie with him if she wants her brother's sentence to be mitigated. Epitia refuses unless Juriste is willing to marry her afterward. Juriste does not promise to do this, though he hints at the possibility.

When Epitia goes to the prison to prepare her brother for his fate, Vico pleads passionately with her and appeals to her sisterly affection to save him. So Epitia reluctantly consents to Juriste's proposal. Juriste, however, orders the execution of Vico before lying with her.

In the morning Epitia goes home to find that Juriste has indeed kept his promise to release her brother—dead. She thinks of revenge, but instead appeals to the emperor. The emperor sends for Juriste and finds that the complaint is true. He first forces Juriste to marry Epitia, who is quite unwilling, and then he orders that Juriste be put to death. Now that Juriste is her husband, Epitia is in a cruel dilemma. She discourses to the emperor on the superiority of clemency to justice. The emperor is impressed with her forgiving nature and pardons Juriste. Epitia and her husband live happily ever after.

GIRALDI CINTHIO's Epitia

The story is much the same as that in the Hecatomithi, but there are some new characters and the brother is secretly saved by the captain of the prison. The latter announces this fact at the end of the play, to the astonishment of the other characters and also the reader, who is not given a hint of it in the prefatory "argument."

Principal among the new characters are Angela, Juriste's sister, who conveys an offer of marriage from him to Epitia and testifies against him before the emperor when Juriste breaks his word; a secretary and a podesta who argue respectively for and against forgiving Vico; a messenger who reports how Vico was put to death on special commission from the podesta, who had Juriste's authority to do so; and the captain of the prison, who brings the supposed head of Vico to Epitia.

Epitia refuses to plead for Juriste until she learns that her brother is alive. Believing that Juriste should be punished for evil intent, the emperor is at first unwilling to pardon him even after Vico reappears, but he finally grants Epitia's suit in order that she may have "complete contentment."

WHETSTONE's Promos and Cassandra AND Heptameron

In the play, Promos is appointed to rule over the city of Julio, and declares his resolve to render justice impartially. Reviving a defunct law, he sentences Andrugio to death for incontinence. The law will not accept marriage as sufficient recompense for the wrong. Andrugio's sister, Cassandra, weeps over the hard fate of her young brother, who appeals to her to plead with Promos. She therefore meets Promos and obtains a postponement of the execution. After she has left, Promos reveals in a soliloquy that he has fallen in love with her but is determined to overcome the temptation. However, having been encouraged by his corrupt servant, Phallax, to believe that Cassandra might be overcome, he is unable to subdue his desire for her. When she meets him again to learn his final decision, he first defends the law and then, when she pleads for mercy, makes his infamous proposal.

Amazed and horrified, Cassandra refuses. Promos promises to make her his wife and gives her two days in which to think it over. She goes to her brother's cell to inform him of Promos' vile condition and to prepare him for death. Andrugio, taken aback that a judge of Promos' supposed integrity has been corrupted by the same lust for which he would condemn another, appeals to his sister to accept the proposed terms and thereby save his life. Brother and sister argue, but finally Cassandra is won over.

After satisfying his desire, Promos decides to break his word, since no one knows of his promise and Cassandra cannot reveal her own shame. He orders that Andrugio should be executed secretly and his head sent to Cassandra. While the girl is eagerly looking forward to welcoming her brother, the jailer brings her the severed head. She conceals her grief, pretending to be quite satisfied. She thinks of suicide, but later decides to appeal to the king. The jailer has in fact brought her the head of an executed criminal and released Andrugio, who goes into hiding. Promos is secretly troubled at what he has done.

In the second part of the play, the king comes to Julio. He hears Cassandra's story and promises to see that justice is done. Upon examination, Promos at once confesses, and the king orders that he first be married to Cassandra and then put to death. Promos pleads for mercy, but in vain. In the meantime, Andrugio, hiding in the woods, comes to know what is happening. Cassandra bewails her hard fate. Duty commands that she should love the husband for whose sentence she has been responsible. She appeals to the king to pardon him, but the ruler is adamant. Andrugio, now in the city under a disguise, sees his sister's unhappiness and resolves to surrender himself to the king at the risk of being put to death. Promos makes a sincere confession of his misdeeds and is led out to execution. Andrugio's boy enters with the news that his master is alive. The king pardons Andrugio, and then pardons Promos for the sake of Cassandra, exhorting Promos always to measure grace with justice. He restores him to the governorship of the city. "The lost sheep found, for joy the feast was made."

Whetstone's play also has a comic underplot, involving a courtesan, unscrupulous officers, informers, and bawds. With the corruption of the magistrates, all the city becomes corrupt.

The version in the Heptameron is substantially the same as that of the play. Andrugio is disguised as a hermit, and reveals himself after hearing the king say that Promos might be pardoned if Andrugio were alive. The entire story is narrated by one Isabella.

Summary

Measure for Measure is generally closer to Whetstone's versions than to Epitia; but it does show significant correspondences with Cinthio's play at certain points where Whetstone differs markedly. "The relation of Measure for Measure to Giraldi's novella is ambiguous, since some of the correspondences to that might have come through Whetstone, some through Epitia."¹ Among the similarities between Measure for Measure and Epitia may be mentioned the following: the secretary in Epitia protests to the podesta of the harshness of the law and the severity of its enforcement; in a soliloquy he comments on the rigor of those in power (compare Escalus' protests to Angelo in II.i); the criminal whose head is substituted for that of Vico is hopelessly evil (compare Ragozine, described as a notorious pirate); like Isabella, Epitia also distinguishes between act and intention. Some close verbal parallels have been noted by Kenneth Muir.²

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

Our only authority for the text of Measure for Measure is the First Folio, whose text is on the whole a good one, probably based on a transcript of Shakespeare's manuscripts made by Ralph Crane, the scrivener of the King's Players. It seems a little disturbed in Act IV; the duke's speech on "place and greatness" in this act would be more appropriate preceding his lines in III.ii, after the exit of Lucio, and Kenneth Muir has made the attractive suggestion that its place should be taken by the duke's soliloquy ending Act III. In the present text the act and scene divisions are translated from Latin and in two places depart from the Folio in order to correspond to the Globe text (the Globe's divisions are used in most books on Shakespeare): Globe I.ii is split in the Folio into a new scene after the exit of Pompey, and Globe III.ii is not marked in the Folio. The present edition corrects obvious typographical errors, modernizes spelling and punctuation, expands and regularizes speech prefixes, adjusts the lineation of a few passages, transfers the indication of locale ("The Scene: Vienna") and the dramatis personae ("The Names of All the Actors") from the end to the beginning, and slightly alters the position of a few stage directions. Other substantial departures from the Folio are listed below, the present reading in boldface type and then the Folio reading in roman.

I.iii.27 Becomes more More 43 it in

I.iv.54 givings-out giuing-out

II.i.12 your our 39 breaks brakes

II.ii.97 new now 112 ne'er neuer

II.iv.9 sere feard 52 or, to and to 75 Let me be Let be 93

all-binding all-building

III.i.31 serpigo Sapego 52 Bring me to hear them Bring them to heare me 68 Though Through 129 penury periury 214 by oath oath

III.ii.26 eat, array eate away 48 extracting it extracting 152 dearer deare 225 and it and as it 276 strings stings

IV.i.62 quests Quest 64 dreams dreame

IV.ii.45-48 if it be too little . . . fits your thief [F gives to Pompey]

IV.iii.16 Forthright Forthlight 90 yonder yond

IV.iv.6 redeliver reliuer

V.i.13 me we 168 her face your face 425 confiscation confutation 541 that's that

¹ Madeleine Doran, Endeavors of Art: A Study of Form in Elizabethan Drama (1954), pp. 386-87.

² Shakespeare's Sources (1957), Vol. I, pp. 104-05.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE

The Scene: Vienna

The Names of All the Actors:

VINCENTIO the Duke
ANGELO the Deputy
ESCALUS an ancient lord
CLAUDIO a young gentleman
LUCIO a fantastic
TWO OTHER LIKE GENTLEMEN
PROVOST
THOMAS } two friars
PETER } [A JUSTICE]
[VARRUS]

ELBOW a simple constable
FROTH a foolish gentleman
CLOWN [Pompey, servant to Mistress Overdone]
ABHORSON an executioner
BARNARDINE a dissolute prisoner
ISABELLA sister to Claudio
MARIANA betrothed to Angelo
JULIET beloved of Claudio
FRANCISCA a nun
MISTRESS OVERDONE a bawd
[LORDS OFFICERS CITIZENS BOY
ATTENDANTS]

A C T I

Scene I. [The duke's palace.]

Enter DUKE, ESCALUS, LORDS, [and ATTENDANTS].

DUKE Escalus.

ESCALUS My lord.

DUKE

Of government the properties° to unfold,
Would seem in me t' affect speech and discourse,
Since I am put to know° that your own science°
Exceeds, in that, the lists° of all advice
My strength can give you. Then no more remains.
But that, to your sufficiency as your worth is able°,
And let them work. The nature of our people,
Our city's institutions, and the terms

5

10

For common justice, y' are as pregnant in°
As art and practice hath enrichèd any
That we remember. There is our commission,
From which we would not have you warp.° Call hither,
I say, bid come before us Angelo.

15

[Exit an ATTENDANT.]

What figure° of us, think you, he will bear?°
For you must know, we have with special soul°
Elected him our absence to supply;
Lent him our terror, dressed him with our love,
And given his deputation all the organs°
Of our own pow'r. What think you of it?

20

ESCALUS

If any in Vienna be of worth
To undergo° such ample grace and honor,
It is Lord Angelo.

Enter ANGELO.

DUKE

Look where he comes.

II pregnant in full of knowledge of 14 warp deviate 16
figure image; bear represent 17 soul thought 20 organs means of action 23 undergo enjoy

The decorative border shown above was used in the First Folio edition of Shakespeare's plays, 1623.

I.1.3 properties characteristics 5 put to know given to understand; science knowledge 6 lists limits 8 to . . . able perhaps a line is missing after this line

ANGELO

Always obedient to your grace's will,
I come to know your pleasure.

DUKE

Angelo,

There is a kind of character° in thy life,
That to th' observer doth thy history
Fully unfold. Thyself and thy belongings°
Are not thine own so proper° as to waste
Thyself upon thy virtues, they on thee.
Heaven doth with us as we with torches do,°
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touched 35
But to fine issues,° nor Nature never lends
The smallest scruple° of her excellence
But like a thrifty goddess she determines Herself the glory of a creditor,
Both thanks and use.° But I do bend° my speech 40
To one that can my part in him advertise.°
Hold therefore, Angelo:
In our remove° be thou at full ourself;
Mortality and mercy in Vienna
Live in thy tongue and heart. Old Escalus,
Though first in question,° is thy secondary.°
Take thy commission.

ANGELO

Now, good my lord,

Let there be some more test made of my mettle°
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamped upon it.

DUKE

No more evasion.

We have with a leavened° and prepared choice
Proceeded to you; therefore take your honors.
Our haste from hence is of so quick condition
That it prefers itself,° and leaves unquestioned°
Matters of needful value. We shall write to you, 55
As time and our concernings shall importune,
How it goes with us, and do look to know
What doth befall you here. So fare you well.
To th' hopeful execution do I leave you
Of your commissions.

ANGELO

Yet give leave, my lord,

That we may bring° you something on the way.

DUKE

My haste may not admit it;
Nor need you, on mine honor, have to do
With any scruple; your scope is as mine own,
So to enforce or qualify the laws 65
As to your soul seems good. Give me your hand.
I'll privily away; I love the people,
But do not like to stage me to their eyes.
Though it do well, I do not relish well

27 character secret handwriting 29 belongings endowments
30 proper exclusively 32 Heaven . . . do see Luke 11:33,
"No man, when he hath lighted a candle, putteth it in a secret place, neither under a bushel, but on a candlestick that they which come in may see the light"; also Matthew 7:16,
"Ye shall know them by their fruits" 35-36 Spirits . . .
issues great qualities are bestowed only so that they may lead to great achievements 37 scruple 1/24 oz. 40 use interest; bend address 41 advertise display prominently 43 remove absence 46 question consideration; secondary officer just below the chief officer 48 mettle pun on metal, i.e., material 51 leavened i.e., long-pondered 54 prefers itself takes precedence; unquestioned unexamined 61 bring escort

Their loud applause and aves° vehement. 70
Nor do I think the man of safe discretion
That does affect it. Once more, fare you well.

ANGELO

The heavens give safety to your purposes.

ESCALUS

Lead forth and bring you back in happiness.

DUKE

I thank you; fare you well. Exit. 75

ESCALUS

I shall desire you, sir, to give me leave
To have free speech with you; and it concerns me
To look into the bottom of my place.°
A pow'r I have, but of what strength and nature,
I am not yet instructed. 80

ANGELO

'Tis so with me. Let us withdraw together,
And we may soon our satisfaction have Touching that point.

ESCALUS

I'll wait upon your honor.

*Exeunt.*Scene II. [A street.]

Enter LUCIO and two other GENTLEMEN.

LUCIO If the duke, with the other dukes, come not to composition° with the King of Hungary,° why then all the dukes fall upon the king.

FIRST GENTLEMAN Heaven grant us its peace, but not the King of Hungary's! 5

SECOND GENTLEMAN Amen.

LUCIO Thou conclud'st like the sanctimonious pirate, that went to sea with the Ten Commandments, but scraped one out of the table.

SECOND GENTLEMAN "Thou shalt not steal"? 10

LUCIO Ay, that he razed.

FIRST GENTLEMAN Why, 'twas a commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions: they put forth to steal. There's not a soldier of us all that, in the thanksgiving before meat, do relish 15 the petition well that prays for peace.

SECOND GENTLEMAN I never heard any soldier dislike it.

LUCIO I believe thee, for I think thou never wast
where grace was said. 20

SECOND GENTLEMAN No? A dozen times at least.

FIRST GENTLEMAN What, in meter?

LUCIO In any proportion,° or in any language.

FIRST GENTLEMAN I think, or in any religion.

LUCIO Ay, why not? Grace is grace, despite of all 25 controversy: as, for example, thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of all grace.

FIRST GENTLEMAN Well, there went but a pair of shears between us.°

LUCIO I grant; as there may between the lists° and 30
the velvet. Thou art the list.

70 aves salutations 78 To look . . . place to examine carefully the range of my authority

I.ii.2 composition agreement; Hungary perhaps a pun on hungry 23 proportion length 28-29 there . . . us i.e., we are cut from the same cloth 30 lists selvage or border of a cloth (usually of a different material from the body)

FIRST GENTLEMAN And thou the velvet. Thou art good velvet; thou'rt a three-piled° piece, I warrant thee. I had as lief be a list of an English kersey,° as be piled, as thou art piled, for a French velvet.° Do I 35 speak feelingly° now?

LUCIO I think thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling° of thy speech. I will, out of thine own confession, learn to begin thy health; but, whilst I live, forget to drink after thee.° 40

FIRST GENTLEMAN I think I have done myself wrong, have I not?

SECOND GENTLEMAN Yes, that thou hast, whether thou art tainted or free.

Enter bawd [MISTRESS OVERDONE].

LUCIO Behold, behold, where Madam Mitigation 45 comes! I have purchased as many diseases under her roof as come to—

SECOND GENTLEMAN To what, I pray?

LUCIO Judge.

SECOND GENTLEMAN To three thousand dolours° a 50 year.

FIRST GENTLEMAN Ay, and more.

LUCIO A French crown° more.

FIRST GENTLEMAN Thou art always figuring diseases in me, but thou art full of error. I am sound. 55

LUCIO Nay, not as one would say, healthy, but so sound as things that are hollow. Thy bones are hollow; impiety° has made a feast of thee.

FIRST GENTLEMAN How now! Which of your hips has the most profound sciatica? 60

MISTRESS OVERDONE Well, well; there's one yonder arrested and carried to prison was worth five thousand of you all.

SECOND GENTLEMAN Who's that, I pray thee?

MISTRESS OVERDONE Marry,° sir, that's Claudio, 65 Signior Claudio.

FIRST GENTLEMAN Claudio to prison? 'Tis not so.

MISTRESS OVERDONE Nay, but I know 'tis so. I saw him arrested; saw him carried away, and which is more, within these three days his head to be chopped 70 off.

LUCIO But, after all this fooling, I would not have it so. Art thou sure of this?

MISTRESS OVERDONE I am too sure of it; and it is for getting Madam Julietta with child. 75

LUCIO Believe me, this may be. He promised to meet me two hours since, and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.

SECOND GENTLEMAN Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to such a purpose. 80

FIRST GENTLEMAN But, most of all, agreeing with the proclamation.

LUCIO Away! Let's go learn the truth of it.

Exit [LUCIO, with GENTLEMEN].

MISTRESS OVERDONE Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat,° what with the gallows, and 85 what with poverty, I am custom-shrunk.

Enter clown [POMPEY].

How now? What's the news with you?

POMPEY Yonder man is carried to prison.

MISTRESS OVERDONE Well; what has he done?

POMPEY A woman. 90

MISTRESS OVERDONE But what's his offense?

POMPEY Groping for trouts in a peculiar° river.

MISTRESS OVERDONE What? Is there a maid with child by him?

POMPEY No, but there's a woman with maid by him. 95

You have not heard of the proclamation, have you?

MISTRESS OVERDONE What proclamation, man?

POMPEY All houses in the suburbs° of Vienna must be plucked down.

MISTRESS OVERDONE And what shall become of 100 those in the city?

POMPEY They shall stand for seed: they had gone down too, but that a wise burgher put in for them.

MISTRESS OVERDONE But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pulled down? 105

POMPEY To the ground, mistress.

MISTRESS OVERDONE Why, here's a change indeed in the commonwealth! What shall become of me?

POMPEY Come, fear not you; good counselors lack no clients. Though you change your place, you need 110 not change your trade; I'll be your tapster° still. Courage, there will be pity taken on you; you that have worn your eyes almost out in the service, you will be considered.

MISTRESS OVERDONE What's to do here, Thomas 115 Tapster? Let's withdraw.

POMPEY Here comes Signior Claudio, led by the provost to prison; and there's Madam Juliet. Exeunt.

Enter PROVOST, CLAUDIO, JULIET, OFFICERS, LUCIO, and two GENTLEMEN.

CLAUDIO

Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to th' world?

Bear me to prison, where I am committed. 120

PROVOST

I do it not in evil disposition,

But from Lord Angelo, by special charge.

CLAUDIO

Thus can the demigod Authority

Make us pay down for our offense by weight.

The words of heaven: on whom it will, it will; 125

On whom it will not, so. Yet still 'tis just.°

LUCIO

Why, how now, Claudio! Whence comes this restraint?

85 sweat sweating sickness, plague 92 peculiar private 98 suburbs in Shakespeare's London, the area of the brothels 111 tapster bartender, waiter (here, pimp) 125-26 The words . . . just see Romans 9:15, 18, "For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion. . . . Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth"

33 three-piled (1) pile of a treble thickness (2) "piled" (bald) as a result of venereal disease 34 kersey coarse cloth (therefore "plain and honest") 35 French velvet (1) excellent velvet (2) French prostitute (syphilis was also known as "the French disease") 35-36 Do . . . feelingly i.e., Do I touch you there? 38 feeling personal experience 39-40 learn . . . thee drink to your health but not after you from the same cup (to avoid the infection) 50 dolours pun on dollars 53 French crown (1) écu (2) head that has gone bald from venereal disease 58 impiety immorality 65 Marry a light oath, from "By the Virgin Mary"

CLAUDIO

From too much liberty, my Lucio, liberty.
As surfeit is the father of much fast,
So every scope by the immoderate use
Turns to restraint. Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that ravin down their proper bane,^o
A thirsty evil, and when we drink, we die.

LUCIO If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors. And yet, to say the truth, I had as lief have the foppery^o of freedom as the mortality of imprisonment. What's thy offense, Claudio?

CLAUDIO

What but to speak of would offend again.

LUCIO What, is't murder?

CLAUDIO No.

LUCIO Lechery?

CLAUDIO Call it so.

PROVOST Away, sir, you must go.

CLAUDIO

One word, good friend. Lucio, a word with you.

LUCIO A hundred, if they'll do you any good. Is lechery so looked after?

CLAUDIO

Thus stands it with me: upon a true contract
I got possession of Julietta's bed.

You know the lady, she is fast my wife,
Save that we do the denunciation^o lack
Of outward order. This we came not to,
Only for propagation^o of a dower
Remaining in the coffer of her friends,^o
From whom we thought it meet to hide our love
Till time had made them for us. But it chances
The stealth of our most mutual entertainment
With character too gross is writ on Juliet.

LUCIO

With child, perhaps?

CLAUDIO Unhappily, even so.

And the new deputy now for the duke—
Whether it be the fault and glimpse of newness,^o
Or whether that the body public be
A horse whereon the governor doth ride,
Who, newly in the seat, that it may know
He can command, lets it straight feel the spur;
Whether the tyranny be in his place,
Or in his eminence that fills it up,
I stagger in^o— but this new governor
Awakes me all the enrollèd^o penalties
Which have, like unsoured armor, hung by th' wall
So long, that nineteen zodiacs^o have gone round,
And none of them been worn; and, for a name,
Now puts the drowsy and neglected act
Freshly on me. 'Tis surely for a name.

LUCIO I warrant it is, and thy head stands so tickle^o on thy shoulders, that a milkmaid, if she be in love, may sigh it off. Send after the duke, and appeal to him.

132 ravin . . . bane greedily devour what is poisonous to them 136 foppery foolishness 151 denunciation formal announcement 153 propagation increase 154 friends relatives 161 fault . . . newness i.e., weakness arising from the sudden vision of new authority 168 stagger in am not sure 169 enrollèd inscribed in the rolls of the laws 171 zodiacs
i.e., years 175 tickle insecure

CLAUDIO

I have done so, but he's not to be found.

I prithee, Lucio, do me this kind service:

This day my sister should the cloister enter,
And there receive her approbation.^o

Acquaint her with the danger of my state;
Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends
To the strict deputy; bid herself assay^o him.

I have great hope in that; for in her youth
There is a prone^o and speechless dialect,
Such as move men; beside, she hath prosperous art
When she will play with reason and discourse,
And well she can persuade.

LUCIO I pray she may; as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand under grievous imposition, as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost at a game of tick-tack.^o I'll to her.

CLAUDIO

I thank you, good friend Lucio.

LUCIO

Within two hours.

CLAUDIO

Come, officer, away! Exeunt.

Scene III. [A monastery.]

Enter DUKE and FRIAR THOMAS.

DUKE

No, holy father; throw away that thought;
Believe not that the dribbling dart^o of love
Can pierce a complete^o bosom. Why I desire thee
To give me secret harbor, hath a purpose
More grave and wrinkled^o than the aims and ends
Of burning youth.

FRIAR THOMAS May your grace speak of it?

DUKE

My holy sir, none better knows than you
How I have ever loved the life removed,
And held in idle price to haunt assemblies
Where youth and cost, witless bravery^o keeps.
I have delivered to Lord Angelo,
A man of stricture^o and firm abstinence,
My absolute power and place here in Vienna,
And he supposes me traveled to Poland;
For so I have strewed it in the common ear,^o
And so it is received. Now, pious sir,
You will demand of me why I do this.

FRIAR THOMAS

Gladly, my lord.

DUKE

We have strict statutes and most biting laws,
The needful bits and curbs to headstrong weeds,
Which for this fourteen^o years we have let slip,
Even like an o'ergrown lion in a cave,

181 approbation novitiate 184 assay test, i.e., attempt to persuade 186 prone winning 194 tick-tack a game using a board into which pegs were fitted I.iii.2 dribbling dart arrow feebly shot 3 complete protected, independent 5 wrinkled mature, aged 10 witless bravery senseless show 12 stricture strictness 15 common ear the ear of the people 21 fourteen in I.ii.171 the time was "nineteen" years; doubtless the printer's copy in both lines had either xiv or xix and in one line was misread

That goes not out to prey. Now, as fond fathers,
 Having bound up the threat'ning twigs of birch,
 Only to stick it in their children's sight
 For terror, not to use; in time the rod
 Becomes more mocked than feared; so our decrees,
 Dead to infliction,^o to themselves are dead,
 And Liberty^o plucks Justice by the nose;
 The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart
 Goes all decorum.

FRIAR THOMAS It rested in your grace
 To unloose this tied-up Justice when you pleased,
 And it in you more dreadful would have seemed
 Than in Lord Angelo.

DUKE I do fear, too dreadful:
 Sith^o 'twas my fault to give the people scope,
 'Twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them
 For what I bid them do; for we bid this be done
 When evil deeds have their permissive pass,
 And not the punishment. Therefore, indeed, my father,

I have on Angelo imposed the office,
 Who may, in th' ambush^o of my name, strike home,
 And yet my nature never in the fight
 To do it slander. And to behold his sway,
 I will, as 'twere a brother of your order,
 Visit both prince and people. Therefore, I prithee,
 Supply me with the habit^o and instruct me
 How I may formally in person bear
 Like a true friar. Moe^o reasons for this action
 At our more leisure shall I render you;
 Only, this one: Lord Angelo is precise,^o
 Stands at a guard with envy;^o scarce confesses
 That his blood flows, or that his appetite
 Is more to bread than stone. Hence shall we see,
 If power change purpose, what our seemers be.

Exit, [with FRIAR].

Scene IV. [A nunnery.]

Enter ISABELLA and FRANCISCA, a nun.

ISABELLA
 And have you nuns no farther privileges?

FRANCISCA
 Are not these large enough?

ISABELLA
 Yes, truly. I speak not as desiring more,
 But rather wishing a more strict restraint
 Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of Saint Clare.^o

LUCIO (Within.)
 Ho! Peace be in this place!

ISABELLA Who's that which calls?

FRANCISCA
 It is a man's voice. Gentle Isabella,
 Turn you the key, and know his business of him.
 You may, I may not: you are yet unsworn.
 When you have vowed, you must not speak with men
 But in the presence of the prioress:

Then, if you speak, you must not show your face,
 Or, if you show your face, you must not speak.
 He calls again; I pray you, answer him. [Exit.]

ISABELLA
 Peace and prosperity! Who is't that calls?
 [Enter LUCIO.]

LUCIO
 Hail, virgin—if you be, as those cheek-roses
 Proclaim you are no less! Can you so stead^o me
 As bring me to the sight of Isabella,
 A novice of this place and the fair sister
 To her unhappy brother, Claudio?

ISABELLA
 Why "her unhappy brother"? Let me ask,
 The rather for I now must make you know
 I am that Isabella and his sister.

LUCIO
 Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets you.
 Not to be weary with you, he's in prison.

ISABELLA
 Woe me! For what?

LUCIO
 For that which, if myself might be his judge,
 He should receive his punishment in thanks:
 He hath got his friend with child.

ISABELLA
 Sir! Make me not your story.^o

LUCIO 'Tis true.
 I would not, though 'tis my familiar sin
 With maids to seem the lapwing,^o and to jest,
 Tongue far from heart, play with all virgins so.
 I hold you as a thing enskied and sainted,
 By your renouncement, an immortal spirit;
 And to be talked with in sincerity,
 As with a saint.

ISABELLA
 You do blaspheme the good in mocking me.

LUCIO
 Do not believe it. Fewness and truth,^o 'tis thus:
 Your brother and his lover have embraced;
 As those that feed grow full, as blossoming time
 That from the seedness^o the bare fallow brings
 To teeming foison,^o even so her plenteous womb
 Expresseth his full tilth and husbandry.

ISABELLA
 Someone with child by him? My cousin Juliet?

LUCIO
 Is she your cousin?

ISABELLA
 Adoptedly, as schoolmaids change their names
 By vain, though apt, affection.

LUCIO She it is.

ISABELLA
 O, let him marry her.

LUCIO This is the point:
 The duke is very strangely gone from hence;
 Bore many gentlemen, myself being one,
 In hand and hope of action,^o but we do learn

28 Dead to infliction utterly unenforced 29 Liberty license 35 Sith since 41 in th' ambush under cover 46 habit garment 48 Moe more 50 precise fastidiously strict 51 Stands . . . envy defies all malicious criticism
 I.iv.5 Saint Clare a notably strict order

17 stead help 30 story subject for mirth 32 lapwing pewit (a bird that runs away from its nest to mislead intruders)
 39 Fewness and truth briefly and truly 42 seedness sowing 43 foison harvest 51–52 Bore . . . action deluded . . .
 with the hope of military action

By those that know the very nerves of state,
His givings-out were of an infinite distance
From his true-meant design. Upon his place,
And with full line of his authority,
Governs Lord Angelo, a man whose blood
Is very snow-broth; one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense,
But doth rebate and blunt his natural edge
With profits of the mind, study and fast.
He—to give fear to use and liberty,^o
Which have for long run by the hideous law,
As mice by lions—hath picked out an act,
Under whose heavy sense^o your brother's life
Falls into forfeit; he arrests him on it,
And follows close the rigor of the statute,
To make him an example. All hope is gone,
Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer
To soften Angelo. And that's my pith of business
'Twixt you and your poor brother.

ISABELLA

Doth he so? Seek his life?

LUCIO

Has censured^o him

Already, and, as I hear, the provost hath
A warrant for's execution.

ISABELLA

Alas, what poor ability's in me
To do him good?

LUCIO

Assay the pow'r you have.

ISABELLA

My power? Alas, I doubt—

LUCIO

Our doubts are traitors,

And makes^o us lose the good we oft might win,
By fearing to attempt. Go to Lord Angelo,
And let him learn to know, when maidens sue,
Men give like gods; but when they weep and kneel,
All their petitions are as freely theirs
As they themselves would owe^o them.

ISABELLA

I'll see what I can do.

LUCIO

But speedily.

ISABELLA

I will about it straight,
No longer staying but to give the Mother
Notice of my affair. I humbly thank you;
Commend me to my brother; soon at night
I'll send him certain word of my success.^o

LUCIO

I take my leave of you.

ISABELLA

Good sir, adieu.

Exeunt. 90

A C T I I

Scene I. [A room.]Enter ANGELO, ESCALUS, and SERVANTS, JUSTICE.

ANGELO

We must not make a scarecrow of the law,
Setting it up to fear the birds of prey,

62 use and liberty habitual license 65 sense interpretation
72 censured pronounced judgment on 78 makes a plural subject sometimes takes a verb ending in -s 83 owe own 89 success outcome

And let it keep one shape, till custom make it
Their perch and not their terror.

55

ESCALUS

Ay, but yet

Let us be keen, and rather cut a little, 5
Than fall,^o and bruise to death. Alas, this gentleman
Whom I would save had a most noble father.
Let but your honor know,
Whom I believe to be most strait^o in virtue, 10
That, in the working of your own affections,^o
Had time cohered with place or place with wishing,
Or that the resolute acting of your blood
Could have attained th' effect of your own purpose,
Whether you had not sometime in your life 15
Erred in this point which now you censure him,
And pulled the law upon you.

ANGELO

'Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalus,
Another thing to fall. I not deny,
The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two 20
Guiltier than him they try. What's open made to Justice,

That Justice seizes. What knows the laws
That thieves do pass on thieves? 'Tis very pregnant,^o
The jewel that we find, we stoop and take't.

75

Because we see it; but what we do not see 25
We tread upon, and never think of it.
You may not so extenuate his offense
For I have had such faults; but rather tell me,
When I, that censure him, do so offend,
Let mine own judgment pattern out my death, 30
And nothing come in partial. Sir, he must die.

ESCALUS

Be it as your wisdom will.

ANGELO

Where is the provost?

Enter PROVOST.

PROVOST

Here, if it like your honor.

ANGELO

See that Claudio

Be executed by nine tomorrow morning.

85

Bring him his confessor, let him be prepared, 35
For that's the utmost of his pilgrimage.

[Exit PROVOST.]

ESCALUS

Well, heaven forgive him, and forgive us all.
Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall:
Some run from breaks of ice,^o and answer none;
And some condemnèd for a fault^o alone. 40

Enter ELBOW, FROTH, CLOWN [POMPEY], OFFICERS.

ELBOW Come, bring them away. If these be good people in a commonweal that do nothing but use their abuses in common houses, I know no law. Bring them away.

ANGELO How now, sir! What's your name? And 45
what's the matter?

ELBOW If it please your honor, I am the poor duke's constable, and my name is Elbow. I do lean upon

II.i.6 fall let fall 9 strait strict 10 affections passions 23 pregnant clear 39 Some . . . ice i.e., some escape after gross violations of chastity 40 fault (1) small crack in the ice
(2) act of sex

justice, sir, and do bring in here before your good honor two notorious benefactors. 50
 ANGELO Benefactors? Well, what benefactors are they? Are they not malefactors?
 ELBOW If it please your honor, I know not well what they are, but precise villains they are, that I am sure of, and void of all profanation in the world that good 55 Christians ought to have.
 ESCALUS This comes off well; here's a wise officer.
 ANGELO Go to: what quality° are they of? Elbow is your name? Why dost thou not speak, Elbow?
 POMPEY He cannot, sir; he's out at elbow.° 60
 ANGELO What are you, sir?
 ELBOW He, sir! A tapster, sir, parcel-bawd,° one that serves a bad woman whose house, sir, was, as they say, plucked down in the suburbs, and now she professes a hothouse,° which, I think, is a very ill house too. 65
 ESCALUS How know you that?
 ELBOW My wife, sir, whom I detest° before heaven and your honor—
 ESCALUS How! Thy wife?
 ELBOW Ay, sir—whom, I thank heaven, is an honest° 70 woman—
 ESCALUS Dost thou detest her therefore?
 ELBOW I say, sir, I will detest myself also, as well as she, that this house, if it be not a bawd's house, it is pity of her life, for it is a naughty° house. 75
 ESCALUS How dost thou know that, constable?
 ELBOW Marry, sir, by my wife, who, if she had been a woman cardinally° given, might have been accused in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanness there.
 ESCALUS By the woman's means? 80
 ELBOW Ay, sir, by Mistress Overdone's means; but as she spit in his face, so she defied him.
 POMPEY Sir, if it please your honor, this is not so.
 ELBOW Prove it before these varlets here, thou honorable man; prove it. 85
 ESCALUS Do you hear how he misplaces?
 POMPEY Sir, she came in great with child; and longing, saving your honor's reverence, for stewed prunes.° Sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were, in a fruit dish, a dish of 90 some threepence; your honors have seen such dishes; they are not china dishes, but very good dishes—
 ESCALUS Go to, go to; no matter for the dish, sir.
 POMPEY No, indeed, sir, not of a pin; you are therein in the right; but to the point. As I say, this Mistress 95 Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great-bellied, and longing, as I said, for prunes; and having but two in the dish, as I said, Master Froth here, this very man, having eaten the rest, as I said, and, as I say, paying for them very honestly; for, as you know, 100 Master Froth, I could not give you threepence again.
 FROTH No, indeed.
 POMPEY Very well, you being then, if you be rememb'ed, cracking the stones of the foresaid prunes—
 FROTH Ay, so I did indeed. 105
 POMPEY Why, very well; I telling you then, if you be rememb'ed, that such a one and such a one were past cure of the thing you wot° of, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you—

 FROTH All this is true. 110
 POMPEY Why, very well, then—
 ESCALUS Come, you are a tedious fool; to the purpose. What was done to Elbow's wife, that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her. 115
 POMPEY Sir, your honor cannot come to that yet.°
 ESCALUS No, sir, nor I mean it not.
 POMPEY Sir, but you shall come to it, by your honor's leave. And, I beseech you, look into Master Froth here, sir, a man of fourscore pound a year, 120 whose father died at Hallowmas.° Was't not at Hallowmas, Master Froth?
 FROTH All-hallond Eve.°
 POMPEY Why, very well; I hope here be truths. He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair, sir, 'twas in the 125 Bunch of Grapes,° where, indeed, you have a delight to sit, have you not?
 FROTH I have so, because it is an open room, and good for winter.
 POMPEY Why, very well, then; I hope here be truths. 130
 ANGELO
 This will last out a night in Russia,
 When nights are longest there. I'll take my leave,
 And leave you to the hearing of the cause,
 Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.
 ESCALUS
 I think no less. Good morrow to your lordship. 135
Exit [ANGELO].
 Now, sir, come on: what was done to Elbow's wife, once more?
 POMPEY Once, sir? There was nothing done to her once.
 ELBOW I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did 140 to my wife.
 POMPEY I beseech your honor, ask me.
 ESCALUS Well, sir; what did this gentleman to her?
 POMPEY I beseech you, sir, look in this gentleman's face. Good Master Froth, look upon his honor; 'tis for 145 a good purpose. Doth your honor mark his face?
 ESCALUS Ay, sir, very well.
 POMPEY Nay, I beseech you, mark it well.
 ESCALUS Well, I do so.
 POMPEY Doth your honor see any harm in his face? 150
 ESCALUS Why, no.
 POMPEY I'll be supposed° upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him. Good, then; if his face be the worst thing about him, how could Master Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of 155 your honor.
 ESCALUS He's in the right. Constable, what say you to it?
 ELBOW First, and° it like you, the house is a respected° house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his mistress 160 is a respected woman.

58 quality profession 60 out at elbow somewhat seedy 62 parcel-bawd partly a bawd 65 hothouse bathhouse 67 detest he means protest 70 honest chaste 75 naughty immoral 78 cardinally he means carnally 88 stewed prunes a fruit commonly provided in brothels

108 wot know 114-16 Come me . . . yet the verbs carry a sexual innuendo 121 Hallowmas All Saints' day, November 1 123 All-hallond Eve October 31 126 Bunch of Grapes the name of a room at the tavern 152 supposed he means deposed 159 and if; respected he means suspected

POMPEY By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.

ELBOW Varlet, thou liest; thou liest, wicked varlet! The time is yet to come that she was ever respected 165 with man, woman, or child.

POMPEY Sir, she was respected with him before he married with her.

ESCALUS Which is the wiser here, Justice or Iniquity?° Is this true? 170

ELBOW O thou caitiff! O thou varlet! O thou wicked Hannibal!° I respected with her before I was married to her! If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the poor duke's officer. Prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, or I'll have 175 mine action of batt'ry on thee.

ESCALUS If he took you a box o' th' ear, you might have your action of slander too.

ELBOW Marry, I thank your good worship for it. What is't your worship's pleasure I shall do with this 180 wicked caitiff?

ESCALUS Truly, officer, because he hath some offenses in him that thou wouldst discover if thou couldst, let him continue in his courses till thou know'st what they are. 185

ELBOW Marry, I thank your worship for it. Thou see'st, thou wicked varlet, now, what's come upon thee. Thou art to continue now, thou varlet; thou art to continue.

ESCALUS Where were you born, friend? 190

FROTH Here in Vienna, sir.

ESCALUS Are you of fourscore pounds a year?

FROTH Yes, and't please you, sir.

ESCALUS So. [To POMPEY.] What trade are you of, sir? 195

POMPEY A tapster, a poor widow's tapster.

ESCALUS Your mistress' name?

POMPEY Mistress Overdone.

ESCALUS Hath she had any more than one husband?

POMPEY Nine, sir; Overdone by the last. 200

ESCALUS Nine! Come hither to me, Master Froth. Master Froth, I would not have you acquainted with tapsters: they will draw you,° Master Froth, and you will hang them. Get you gone, and let me hear no more of you. 205

FROTH I thank your worship. For mine own part, I never come into any room in a taphouse, but I am drawn in.

ESCALUS Well, no more of it, Master Froth; farewell. [Exit FROTH.] Come you hither to me, Master 210 Tapster. What's your name, Master Tapster?

POMPEY Pompey.

ESCALUS What else?

POMPEY Bum, sir.

ESCALUS Troth, and your bum is the greatest thing 215 about you; so that, in the beastliest sense, you are Pompey the Great. Pompey, you are partly a bawd, Pompey, howsoever you color° it in being a tapster, are you not? Come, tell me true; it shall be the better for you. 220

POMPEY Truly, sir, I am a poor fellow that would live.

ESCALUS How would you live, Pompey? By being a bawd? What do you think of the trade, Pompey? Is it a lawful trade?

POMPEY If the law would allow it, sir. 225

ESCALUS But the law will not allow it, Pompey; nor it shall not be allowed in Vienna.

POMPEY Does your worship mean to geld and splay all the youth of the city?

ESCALUS No, Pompey. 230

POMPEY Truly, sir, in my poor opinion, they will to't, then. If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds.

ESCALUS There is pretty orders beginning, I can tell you; it is but heading° and hanging. 235

POMPEY If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten year together, you'll be glad to give out a commission for more heads; if this law hold in Vienna ten year, I'll rent the fairest house in it after threepence a bay;° if you live to see this come to pass, 240 say Pompey told you so.

ESCALUS Thank you, good Pompey; and, in requital of your prophecy, hark you: I advise you, let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever; no, not for dwelling where you do. If I do, Pompey, 245 I shall beat you to your tent, and prove a shrewd Caesar to you; in plain dealing, Pompey, I shall have you whipped. So, for this time, Pompey, fare you well.

POMPEY I thank your worship for your good counsel; [aside] but I shall follow it as the flesh and fortune shall 250 better determine.

Whip me? No, no; let carman whip his jade.° The valiant heart's not whipped out of his trade. Exit.

ESCALUS Come hither to me, Master Elbow; come hither, master constable. How long have you been in 255 this place of constable?

ELBOW Seven year and a half, sir.

ESCALUS I thought, by the readiness in the office, you had continued in it some time. You say, seven years together? 260

ELBOW And a half, sir.

ESCALUS Alas, it hath been great pains to you. They do you wrong to put you so oft upon't.° Are there not men in your ward sufficient to serve it?

ELBOW Faith, sir, few of any wit in such matters. As 265 they are chosen, they are glad to choose me for them; I do it for some piece of money, and go through with all.

ESCALUS Look you bring me in the names of some six or seven, the most sufficient of your parish. 270

ELBOW To your worship's house, sir?

ESCALUS To my house. Fare you well. [Exit ELBOW.] What's o'clock, think you?

JUSTICE Eleven, sir.

ESCALUS I pray you home to dinner with me. 275

JUSTICE I humbly thank you.

ESCALUS

It grieves me for the death of Claudio, But there's no remedy.

169 Justice or Iniquity personified characters in morality plays 172 Hannibal he means cannibal = fleshmonger (?) 203 draw you (1) draw drinks for you (2) empty you, disembowel you 218 color camouflage

235 heading beheading 240 bay space under a single gable 252 carman . . . jade the cartman whipped the whore after carting her through the streets; a "jade" is literally a nag 263 put . . . upon't impose on you the task of being constable

JUSTICE

Lord Angelo is severe.

ESCALUS

It is but needful:

Mercy is not itself, that oft looks so;

Pardon is still° the nurse of second woe.

But yet—poor Claudio! There is no remedy.

Come, sir.

*Exeunt.*Scene II. [A room.]Enter PROVOST, [and a] SERVANT.

SERVANT

He's hearing of a cause; he will come straight:

I'll tell him of you.

PROVOST Pray you, do. [Exit SERVANT.] I'll know

His pleasure; maybe he will relent. Alas,

He hath but as offended in a dream.

All sects,° all ages smack of this vice; and he

To die for't!

Enter ANGELO.

ANGELO Now, what's the matter, provost?

PROVOST

Is it your will Claudio shall die tomorrow?

ANGELO

Did not I tell thee yea? Hadst thou not order?

Why dost thou ask again?

PROVOST

Lest I might be too rash.

Under your good correction, I have seen,

When, after execution, judgment hath

Repented o'er his doom.

ANGELO

Go to; let that be mine.°

Do you your office, or give up your place,

And you shall well be spared.

PROVOST

I crave your honor's pardon.

What shall be done, sir, with the groaning Juliet?

She's very near her hour.

ANGELO

Dispose of her

To some more fitter place, and that with speed.

[Re-enter SERVANT.]

SERVANT

Here is the sister of the man condemned

Desires access to you.

ANGELO

Hath he a sister?

PROVOST

Ay, my good lord, a very virtuous maid

And to be shortly of a sisterhood,

If not already.

ANGELO

Well, let her be admitted.

[Exit SERVANT.]

See you the fornicatress be removed;

Let her have needful, but not lavish, means;

There shall be order for't.

Enter LUCIO and ISABELLA.

PROVOST

'Save your honor.

ANGELO

Stay a little while. [To ISABELLA.] Y' are welcome:

what's your will?

ISABELLA

I am a woeful suitor to your honor,

Please but your honor hear me.

280

ANGELO

Well; what's your suit?

ISABELLA

There is a vice that most I do abhor,

And most desire should meet the blow of justice,

For which I would not plead, but that I must,

For which I must not plead, but that I am

At war 'twixt will and will not.

30

ANGELO

Well: the matter?

ISABELLA

I have a brother is condemned to die.

I do beseech you, let it be his fault,°

And not my brother.

35

PROVOST [Aside.] Heaven give thee moving graces.

ANGELO

Condemn the fault, and not the actor of it?

Why, every fault's condemned ere it be done.

Mine were the very cipher of a function,

To fine the faults whose fine stands in record,

And let go by the actor.

40

ISABELLA

O just but severe law!

I had a brother, then. Heaven keep your honor.

LUCIO [Aside to ISABELLA.]

Give't not o'er so. To him again, entreat him,

Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown;

You are too cold; if you should need a pin,

You could not with more tame a tongue desire it.

45

To him, I say!

10

ISABELLA

Must he needs die?

ANGELO

Maiden, no remedy.

ISABELLA

Yes; I do think that you might pardon him,

And neither heaven nor man grieve at the mercy.

50

ANGELO

I will not do't.

ISABELLA

But can you, if you would?

ANGELO

Look what° I will not, that I cannot do.

ISABELLA

But might you do't, and do the world no wrong,

If so your heart were touched with that remorse°

As mine is to him?

ANGELO

He's sentenced; 'tis too late.

55

LUCIO [Aside to ISABELLA.]

You are too cold.

20

ISABELLA

Too late? Why, no: I, that do speak a word,

May call it again. Well, believe this:

No ceremony° that to great ones 'longs,

Not the king's crown, nor the deputed sword,

The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,

Become them with one half so good a grace

As mercy does.

If he had been as you, and you as he,

You would have slipped like him; but he, like you,

Would not have been so stern.

65

ANGELO

Pray you, be gone.

35 let . . . fault condemn his fault, not him 52 Look what whatever 54 remorse compassion 59 ceremony insignia of greatness

281 still always

II.ii.5 sects classes 12 mine i.e., my responsibility

ISABELLA

I would to heaven I had your potency,
And you were Isabel; should it then be thus?
No; I would tell what 'twere to be a judge,
And what a prisoner.

LUCIO [Aside to ISABELLA.]

Ay, touch him; there's the vein.

ANGELO

Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words.

ISABELLA

Alas, alas!

Why, all the souls that were were forfeit once;
And He that might the vantage best have took Found out the remedy. How would you be,
If He, which is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are? O, think on that,
And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man new made.

ANGELO

Be you content, fair maid;

It is the law, not I, condemn your brother.
Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son,
It should be thus with him; he must die tomorrow.

ISABELLA

Tomorrow! O, that's sudden! Spare him, spare him!
He's not prepared for death. Even for our kitchens
We kill the fowl of season:° shall we serve heaven
With less respect than we do minister
To our gross selves? Good, good my lord, bethink you:
Who is it that hath died for this offense?
There's many have committed it.

LUCIO [Aside to ISABELLA.] Ay, well said.

ANGELO

The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept.
Those many had not dared to do that evil,
If the first that did th' edict infringe
Had answered for his deed. Now 'tis awake,
Takes note of what is done, and, like a prophet,
Looks in a glass,° that shows what future evils,
Either new, or by remissness new conceived,°
And so in progress to be hatched and born,
Are now to have no successive degrees,
But here they live, to end.

ISABELLA

Yet show some pity.

ANGELO

I show it most of all when I show justice,
For then I pity those I do not know,
Which a dismissed° offense would after gall;
And do him right that, answering one foul wrong,
Lives not to act another. Be satisfied;
Your brother dies tomorrow; be content.

ISABELLA

So you must be the first that gives this sentence,
And he, that suffers. O, it is excellent
To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.

LUCIO [Aside to ISABELLA.] That's well said.

ISABELLA

Could great men thunder
As Jove himself does, Jove would ne'er be quiet,

86 of season in season 96 glass magic glass 96-97 future
. . . conceived evils that will take place in future, but that are either now planned or may be planned later ("remissness" = careless omission of duty) 103 dismissed forgiven

For every pelting,° petty officer
Would use his heaven for thunder.
Nothing but thunder. Merciful heaven,
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulfurous bolt
Splits the unwedgeable and gnarlèd oak
Than the soft myrtle. But man, proud man,
Dressed in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assured,
His glassy essence,° like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven
As makes the angels weep; who, with our spleens,°
Would all themselves laugh mortal.

LUCIO [Aside to ISABELLA.]

O, to him, to him, wench! He will relent;
He's coming; I perceive't.

PROVOST [Aside.] Pray heaven she win him.

ISABELLA

We cannot weigh our brother with ourself:
Great men may jest with saints; 'tis wit in them;
But in the less, foul profanation.

LUCIO

Thou'rt i' th' right, girl; more o' that.

ISABELLA

That in the captain's but a choleric word,
Which in the soldier is flat blasphemy.

LUCIO [Aside to ISABELLA.]

Art avised° o' that? More on't.

ANGELO

Why do you put these sayings upon me?

ISABELLA

Because authority, though it err like others,
Hath yet a kind of medicine in itself,
That skins the vice° o' th' top; go to your bosom,
Knock there, and ask your heart what it doth know
That's like my brother's fault; if it confess
A natural guiltiness such as is his,
Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue
Against my brother's life.

ANGELO [Aside.] She speaks, and 'tis
Such sense, that my sense breeds with it. [Aloud.] Fare you well.

ISABELLA

Gentle my lord, turn back.

ANGELO

I will bethink me; come again tomorrow.

ISABELLA

Hark how I'll bribe you; good my lord, turn back.

ANGELO

How? Bribe me?

ISABELLA

Ay, with such gifts that heaven shall share with you.

LUCIO [Aside to ISABELLA.]

You had marred all else.

ISABELLA

Not with fond sicles° of the tested gold,
Or stones whose rate are either rich or poor
As fancy values them; but with true prayers

113 pelting paltry 121 glassy essence the rational soul which reveals to man, as in a mirror, what constitutes him a human being (?) fragile nature (?) 123 spleens the spleen was believed the seat of mirth and anger 133 avised informed 137 skins the vice i.e., covers the sore of vice with a skin, but does not heal it (or perhaps "skins off the visible layer of vice") 150 sicles shekels

That shall be up at heaven, and enter there
Ere sunrise, prayers from preservèd souls,
From fasting maids whose minds are dedicate
To nothing temporal.

ANGELO Well; come to me tomorrow.

LUCIO [Aside to ISABELLA.]

Go to; 'tis well; away.

ISABELLA

Heaven keep your honor safe.

ANGELO [Aside.] Amen:

For I am that way going to temptation,
Where prayers cross.°

ISABELLA At what hour tomorrow

Shall I attend your lordship?

ANGELO At any time 'fore noon.

ISABELLA

'Save your honor.

[Exeunt ISABELLA, LUCIO, and PROVOST.]

ANGELO From thee, even from thy virtue!

What's this? What's this? Is this her fault or mine?

The tempter or the tempted, who sins most?

Ha, not she. Nor doth she tempt; but it is I

That, lying by the violet in the sun,

Do as the carrion does, not as the flow'r,

Corrupt with virtuous season.° Can it be

That modesty may more betray our sense

Than woman's lightness? Having waste ground enough,

Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary,

And pitch our evils° there? O fie, fie, fie!

What dost thou, or what art thou, Angelo?

Dost thou desire her foully for those things

That make her good? O, let her brother live:

Thieves for their robbery have authority

When judges steal themselves. What, do I love her,

That I desire to hear her speak again,

And feast upon her eyes? What is't I dream on?

O cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,

With saints dost bait thy hook! Most dangerous

Is that temptation that doth goad us on

To sin in loving virtue. Never could the strumpet,

With all her double vigor, art and nature,

Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid

Subdues me quite. Ever till now,

When men were fond,° I smiled, and wond' red how.

Exit.

Scene III. [The prison.]

Enter DUKE [disguised as a friar] and PROVOST.

DUKE

Hail to you, provost—so I think you are.

PROVOST

I am the provost. What's your will, good friar?

DUKE

Bound by my charity and my blest order,

I come to visit the afflicted spirits

Here in the prison. Do me the common right

5

To let me see them, and to make me know
The nature of their crimes, that I may minister
To them accordingly.

155

PROVOST

I would do more than that, if more were needful.

Enter JULIET.

Look, here comes one: a gentlewoman of mine,

10

Who, falling in the flaws° of her own youth,

Hath blistered° her report:° she is with child;

And he that got it, sentenced; a young man

More fit to do another such offense

Than die for this.

15

DUKE

When must he die?

PROVOST

As I do think, tomorrow.

[To JULIET.]

I have provided for you; stay awhile,

And you shall be conducted.

DUKE

Repent you, fair one, of the sin you carry?

JULIET

I do, and bear the shame most patiently.

20

DUKE

I'll teach you how you shall arraign° your conscience,

And try your penitence, if it be sound

Or hollowly put on.

JULIET

I'll gladly learn.

DUKE

Love you the man that wronged you?

JULIET

Yes, as I love the woman that wronged him.

25

DUKE

So, then, it seems your most offenseful act

Was mutually committed?

JULIET

Mutually.

180

DUKE

Then was your sin of heavier kind than his.

JULIET

I do confess it, and repent it, father.

DUKE

'Tis meet so, daughter. But lest you do repent

30

As that the sin hath brought you to this shame—

Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not heaven,
Showing we would not spare heaven as we love it,

But as we stand in fear—

JULIET

I do repent me, as it is an evil,

35

And take the shame with joy.

DUKE

There rest.

Your partner, as I hear, must die tomorrow,

And I am going with instruction to him.

Grace go with you, Benedicite!°

Exit.

JULIET

Must die tomorrow! O injurious love,

40

That respites° me a life, whose very comfort

Is still a dying horror.

PROVOST

'Tis pity of him.

Exeunt.

160 cross are at cross-purposes 168 Corrupt . . . season go bad in the season that blossoms the flower 172 evils evil structures (e.g., perhaps whorehouses or privies) 187 fond infatuated

II.iii.II flaws sudden gusts of wind 12 blistered whores were branded on the forehead; report reputation 21 arraign interrogate 39 Benedicite bless you 41 respites saves

Scene IV. [A room.]Enter ANGELO.

ANGELO

When I would pray and think, I think and pray
 To several^o subjects: heaven hath my empty words,
 Whilst my invention,^o hearing not my tongue,
 Anchors on Isabel: heaven in my mouth,
 As if I did but only chew his name,
 And in my heart the strong and swelling evil
 Of my conception.^o The state,^o whereon I studied,
 Is like a good thing, being often read,
 Grown sere^o and tedious; yea, my gravity,
 Wherein, let no man hear me, I take pride,
 Could I with boot^o change for an idle plume
 Which the air beats for vain. O place, O form,
 How often dost thou with thy case,^o thy habit,^o
 Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls
 To thy false seeming! Blood, thou art blood.
 Let's write "good angel" on the devil's horn,
 'Tis not the devil's crest. How now, who's there?

Enter SERVANT.

SERVANT

One Isabel, a sister, desires access to you.

ANGELO

Teach her the way. [Exit SERVANT.] O heavens,
 Why does my blood thus muster to my heart,
 Making both it unable for itself,
 And dispossessing all my other parts
 Of necessary fitness?
 So play the foolish throngs with one that swoonds,^o
 Come all to help him, and so stop the air
 By which he should revive; and even so
 The general,^o subject to a well-wished king,
 Quit their own part, and in obsequious fondness
 Crowd to his presence, where their untaught love
 Must needs appear offense.

Enter ISABELLA.

How now, fair maid?

ISABELLA

I am come to know your pleasure.

ANGELO

That you might know it, would much better please me
 Than to demand what 'tis. Your brother cannot live.

ISABELLA

Even so. Heaven keep your honor.

ANGELO

Yet may he live awhile, and it may be,
 As long as you or I; yet he must die.

ISABELLA

Under your sentence?

ANGELO

Yea.

ISABELLA

When? I beseech you that in his reprieve,
 Longer or shorter, he may be so fitted
 That his soul sicken not.

ANGELO

Ha! Fie, these filthy vices! It were as good

II.iv.2 several separate 3 invention imagination 7 conception thought; state attitude (?) statecraft (?) 9 sere worn out 11 boot profit 13 case either "chance" or "outside"; habit either "behavior" or "garment" 24 swoonds swoons
 27 general multitude

To pardon him that hath from nature stol'n
 A man already made, as to remit
 Their saucy sweetness^o that do coin heaven's image
 In stamps that are forbid: 'tis all as easy
 Falsely to take away a life true made,
 As to put metal in restrainèd^o means
 To make a false one.

ISABELLA

5 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth.

ANGELO

Say you so? Then I shall pose^o you quickly.
 Which had you rather: that the most just law
 Now took your brother's life; or, to redeem him,
 10 Give up your body to such sweet uncleanness
 As she that he hath stained?

ISABELLA

Sir, believe this:

I had rather give my body than my soul.

ANGELO

15 I talk not of your soul; our compelled sins
 Stand more for number than for accompt.^o

ISABELLA

How say you?

ANGELO

Nay, I'll not warrant that; for I can speak
 Against the thing I say. Answer to this:
 I, now the voice of the recorded law,
 20 Pronounce a sentence on your brother's life;
 Might there not be a charity in sin
 To save this brother's life?

ISABELLA

Please you to do't,

I'll take it as a peril to my soul,

It is no sin at all, but charity.

ANGELO

25 Pleased you to do't at peril of your soul,
 Were equal poise^o of sin and charity.

ISABELLA

That I do beg his life, if it be sin,
 Heaven let me bear it. You granting of my suit,
 If that be sin, I'll make it my morn prayer
 70 To have it added to the faults of mine,
 And nothing of your answer.

ANGELO

Nay, but hear me.

Your sense pursues not mine; either you are ignorant,
 Or seem so, crafty; and that's not good.

ISABELLA

Let me be ignorant, and in nothing good,
 But graciously to know I am no better.

ANGELO

Thus wisdom wishes to appear most bright
 35 When it doth tax^o itself, as these black masks
 Proclaim an enshield^o beauty ten times louder
 Than beauty could, displayed. But mark me;
 To be receivèd plain, I'll speak more gross:
 Your brother is to die.

ISABELLA So.

ANGELO

And his offense is so, as it appears,
 40 Accountant^o to the law upon that pain.^o

43-44 to remit . . . sweetness to pardon their lascivious pleasures 47 restrainèd forbidden 50 pose baffle (with a difficult question) 57 Stand . . . accompt are enumerated but not counted against us 67 poise balance 78 tax censure 79 enshield concealed 85 Accountant accountable; pain punishment

ISABELLA True.

ANGELO

Admit no other way to save his life—
As I subscribe° not that, nor any other,
But in the loss of question°—that you, his sister,
Finding yourself desired of such a person
Whose credit with the judge, or own great place,
Could fetch your brother from the manacles
Of the all-binding law; and that there were
No earthly mean to save him, but that either
You must lay down the treasures of your body
To this supposed, or else to let him suffer:
What would you do?

ISABELLA

As much for my poor brother as myself:
That is, were I under the terms of death,
Th' impression of keen whips I'd wear as rubies,
And strip myself to death as to a bed
That longing have been sick for, ere I'd yield
My body up to shame.

ANGELO Then must your brother die.

ISABELLA

And 'twere the cheaper way.
Better it were a brother died at once
Than that a sister, by redeeming him,
Should die forever.

ANGELO

Were not you, then, as cruel as the sentence
That you have slandered so?

ISABELLA

Ignomy in ransom and free pardon
Are of two houses; lawful mercy
Is nothing kin to foul redemption.

ANGELO

You seemed of late to make the law a tyrant,
And rather proved the sliding of your brother
A merriment than a vice.

ISABELLA

O, pardon me, my lord. It oft falls out,
To have what we would have, we speak not what we mean.

I something do excuse the thing I hate
For his advantage that I dearly love.

ANGELO

We are all frail.

ISABELLA Else let my brother die,

If not a fedary, but only he Owe and succeed thy weakness.°

ANGELO

Nay, women are frail too.

ISABELLA

Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
Which are as easy broke as they make forms.°
Women! Help heaven! Men their creation mar
In profiting by them. Nay, call us ten times frail;
For we are soft as our complexions are,
And credulous° to false prints.

ANGELO

I think it well,

88 subscribe assent to 89 But . . . question except to keep alive the argument 121–22 If . . . weakness probably a line has been omitted, but perhaps the meaning is, "Let my brother die if he is the only inheritor of human frailty instead of being a mere vassal to it" 125 forms images, appearances 129 credulous receptive

And from this testimony of your own sex— 130

Since, I suppose, we are made to be no stronger
Than faults may shake our frames—let me be bold:
I do arrest your words.° Be that you are,
That is, a woman; if you be more, you're none;
If you be one, as you are well expressed° 135
By all external warrants, show it now,
By putting on the destined livery.°

ISABELLA

I have no tongue but one; gentle my lord,
Let me entreat you speak the former language.

ANGELO

Plainly conceive, I love you. 140

ISABELLA

My brother did love Juliet,
And you tell me that he shall die for't.

100 ANGELO

He shall not, Isabel, if you give me love.

ISABELLA

I know your virtue hath a license in't,
Which seems a little fouler than it is, 145
To pluck on° others.

ANGELO

Believe me, on mine honor,

105 My words express my purpose.

ISABELLA

Ha! Little honor to be much believed,
And most pernicious purpose. Seeming, seeming!
I will proclaim thee, Angelo; look for't: 150
Sign me a present pardon for my brother,
Or with an outstretched throat I'll tell the world aloud
What man thou art.

110

ANGELO

Who will believe thee, Isabel?

My unsoiled name, th' austereness of my life,
My vouch° against you, and my place i' th' state, 155
Will so your accusation overweigh,
That you shall stifle in your own report,

115

And smell of calumny. I have begun,
And now I give my sensual race the rein.
Fit thy consent to my sharp appetite, 160
Lay by all nicety and prolixious° blushes,

That banish what they sue for; redeem thy brother
By yielding up thy body to my will,°

Or else he must not only die the death,
But thy unkindness° shall his death draw out 165
To ling'ring sufferance.° Answer me tomorrow,

Or, by the affection° that now guides me most,
I'll prove a tyrant to him. As for you,

Say what you can, my false o'erweighs your true.

Exit.

ISABELLA

To whom should I complain? Did I tell this, 170
Who would believe me? O perilous mouths,
That bear in them one and the selfsame tongue,
Either of condemnation or approof;°
Bidding the law make curtsy to their will,
Hooking both right and wrong to th' appetite, 175
To follow as it draws. I'll to my brother.

133 I . . . words I take you at your word 135 expressed shown to be 137 the destined livery the dress that it is the destiny of a woman to wear 146 pluck on draw on 155 vouch testimony 161 prolixious tediously drawn-out
163 will carnal appetite 165 unkindness unnatural behavior 166 sufferance torture 167 affection passion 173 approof approval

Though he hath fall'n by prompture of the blood,
 Yet hath he in him such a mind of honor,
 That, had he twenty heads to tender down
 On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up, 180
 Before his sister should her body stoop
 To such abhorred pollution.
 Then, Isabel, live chaste, and, brother, die:
 "More than our brother is our chastity."
 I'll tell him yet of Angelo's request, 185
 And fit his mind to death, for his soul's rest. Exit.

A C T I I I

Scene I. [The prison.]

Enter DUKE [as a friar], CLAUDIO, and PROVOST.

DUKE

So then, you hope of pardon from Lord Angelo?

CLAUDIO

The miserable have no other medicine
 But only hope:
 I have hope to live, and am prepared to die.

DUKE

Be absolute^o for death; either death or life 5
 Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with life:
 If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing
 That none but fools would keep; a breath thou art,
 Servile to all the skyey influences,^o
 That dost this habitation, where thou keep'st,^o 10
 Hourly afflict; merely, thou art death's fool,^o
 For him thou labor'st by thy flight to shun,
 And yet run'st toward him still. Thou art not noble,
 For all th' accommodations^o that thou bear'st
 Are nursed by baseness. Thou'rt by no means valiant, 15
 For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork^o
 Of a poor worm. Thy best of rest is sleep,
 And that thou oft provok'st;^o yet grossly fear'st
 Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thyself;
 For thou exists on many a thousand grains 20
 That issue out of dust. Happy thou art not,
 For what thou hast not, still thou striv'st to get,
 And what thou hast, forget'st. Thou art not certain,^o
 For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,
 After the moon.^o If thou art rich, thou'rt poor. 25
 For, like an ass whose back with ingots bows,
 Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
 And death unloads thee. Friend hast thou none,
 For thine own bowels,^o which do call thee sire,
 The mere effusion of thy proper loins,^o 30
 Do curse the gout, serpigo,^o and the rheum,^o
 For ending thee no sooner. Thou hast nor youth nor age,

III.i.5 absolute unconditionally prepared 9 skyey influ- ences influence of the stars 10 keep'st dwellest 11 fool the professional jester in a nobleman's household, whose job was to keep his master amused 14 accommodations necessities
16 fork forked tongue (of a snake) 18 provok'st invokest
23 certain invariable 24-25 For . . . moon your temperament (desire?) moves to numerous things, changeable as (or "influenced by") the moon 29 bowels offspring 30 The mere . . . loins the very issue of your own loins 31
serpigo a skin disease; rheum catarrh

But, as it were, an after-dinner's sleep,
 Dreaming on both; for all thy blessed youth 35
 Becomes as agèd, and doth beg the alms
 Of palsied eld,^o and when thou art old and rich,
 Thou has neither heat, affection,^o limb, nor beauty,
 To make thy riches pleasant. What's yet in this
 That bears^o the name of life? Yet in this life 40
 Lie hid moe thousand deaths; yet death we fear,
 That makes these odds all even.

CLAUDIO I humbly thank you.
 To sue to live, I find I seek to die,
 And seeking death, find life: let it come on.

Enter ISABELLA.

ISABELLA

What, ho! Peace here; grace and good company!

PROVOST

Who's there? Come in, the wish deserves a welcome. 45

DUKE

Dear sir, ere long I'll visit you again.

CLAUDIO

Most holy sir, I thank you.

ISABELLA

My business is a word or two with Claudio.

PROVOST

And very welcome. Look, signior, here's your sister.

DUKE

Provost, a word with you. 50

PROVOST

As many as you please.

DUKE

Bring me to hear them speak, where I may be concealed. [DUKE and PROVOST withdraw.]

CLAUDIO

Now, sister, what's the comfort?

ISABELLA

Why,
 As all comforts are, most good, most good indeed. 55
 Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,
 Intends you for his swift ambassador,
 Where you shall be an everlasting leiger:^o
 Therefore your best appointment^o make with speed;
 Tomorrow you set on.

CLAUDIO Is there no remedy? 60

ISABELLA

None, but such remedy as, to save a head,
 To cleave a heart in twain.

CLAUDIO But is there any?

ISABELLA

Yes, brother, you may live;
 There is a devilish mercy in the judge,
 If you'll implore it, that will free your life, 65
 But fetter you till death.

CLAUDIO Perpetual durance?^o

ISABELLA

Ay, just; perpetual durance, a restraint,
 Though all the world's vastidity^o you had,
 To a determined scope.^o

CLAUDIO But in what nature?

36 eld old age 37 affection feeling 39 bears deserves
58 leiger resident ambassador 59 appointment preparation 66 durance imprisonment 68 vastidity vast spaces 69 determined scope fixed limit

ISABELLA

In such a one as, you consenting to't,
Would bark your honor from that trunk you bear,
And leave you naked.

CLAUDIO Let me know the point.

ISABELLA

O, I do fear thee, Claudio, and I quake,
Lest thou a feverous life shouldst entertain,
And six or seven winters more respect
Than a perpetual honor. Dar'st thou die?
The sense° of death is most in apprehension,°
And the poor beetle that we tread upon
In corporal sufferance finds a pang as great
As when a giant dies.

CLAUDIO Why give you me this shame? 80

Think you I can a resolution fetch
From flow'ry tenderness? If I must die,
I will encounter darkness as a bride,
And hug it in mine arms.

ISABELLA

There spake my brother, there my father's grave
Did utter forth a voice. Yes, thou must die,
Thou art too noble to conserve a life
In base appliances.° This outward-sainted deputy,
Whose settled visage and deliberate word
Nips youth i' th' head, and follies doth enmew°
As falcon doth the fowl, is yet a devil;
His filth within being cast,° he would appear
A pond as deep as hell.

CLAUDIO The prenzie° Angelo!

ISABELLA

O, 'tis the cunning livery of hell,
The damned'st body to invest and cover
In prenzie guards.° Dost thou think, Claudio,
If I would yield him my virginity,
Thou mightst be freed?

CLAUDIO O heavens, it cannot be.

ISABELLA

Yes, he would give't thee, from this rank offense,
So to offend him still. This night's the time
That I should do what I abhor to name,
Or else thou diest tomorrow.

CLAUDIO Thou shalt not do't.

ISABELLA

O, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance
As frankly as a pin.

CLAUDIO Thanks, dear Isabel.

ISABELLA

Be ready, Claudio, for your death tomorrow.

CLAUDIO

Yes. Has he affections° in him,
That thus can make him bite the law by th' nose,
When he would force° it? Sure, it is no sin,
Or of the deadly seven° it is the least.

ISABELLA

Which is the least?

CLAUDIO

70 If it were damnable, he being so wise,
Why would he for the momentary trick
Be perdurably fined?° O Isabel!

ISABELLA

What says my brother?

CLAUDIO

Death is a fearful thing.

115

ISABELLA

75 And shamèd life a hateful.

CLAUDIO

Ay, but to die, and go we know not where,
To lie in cold obstruction° and to rot,
This sensible° warm motion° to become
A kneaded clod; and the delighted° spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling region of thick-ribbèd ice;
To be imprisoned in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about
The pendent° world; or to be worse than worst
Of those that lawless and incertain thought
Imagine howling—'tis too horrible!
The weariest and most loathèd worldly life
That age, ache, penury, and imprisonment
Can lay on nature is a paradise
To what we fear of death.

120

125

130

90 ISABELLA

Alas, alas.

CLAUDIO Sweet sister, let me live:

What sin you do to save a brother's life,
Nature dispenses with° the deed so far
That it becomes a virtue.

ISABELLA

95 O you beast, 135

O faithless coward, O dishonest wretch!
Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?
Is't not a kind of incest, to take life
From thine own sister's shame? What should I think?
Heaven shield my mother played my father fair,
For such a warpèd slip of wilderness°
Ne'er issued from his blood. Take my defiance,
Die, perish! Might but my bending down
Reprieve thee from thy fate, it should proceed.
I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death,
No word to save thee.

140

145

CLAUDIO

Nay, hear me, Isabel.

ISABELLA

O, fie, fie, fie!

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade.

105 Mercy to thee would prove itself a bawd,

'Tis best that thou diest quickly.

CLAUDIO

O, hear me, Isabella! 150

[The DUKE comes forward.]

DUKE

Vouchsafe a word, young sister, but one word.

110 ISABELLA What is your will?

DUKE Might you dispense with your leisure, I would by and by have some speech with you: the satisfaction
I would require is likewise your own benefit.

155

77 sense feeling; apprehension imagination 88 appliances devices 90 enmew drive into the water (as a hawk drives a fowl) 92 cast vomited up 93 prenzie meaning unknown; perhaps a slip for princely 96 guards trimmings 107 affections sensual appetites 109 force enforce 110 deadly seven pride, envy, wrath, sloth, avarice, gluttony, lechery

113-14 Why . . . fined Why for the momentary trifle (of sexual intercourse) would he be eternally damned? 118 obstruction motionlessness 119 sensible endowed with feeling; motion organism 120 delighted capable of delight 125 pendent hanging in space 134 dispenses with grants a dispensation for 141 wilderness wild nature without nurture

ISABELLA I have no superfluous leisure; my stay must be stolen out of other affairs, but I will attend you awhile.

DUKE [Aside to CLAUDIO.] Son, I have overheard what hath passed between you and your sister. Angelo 160 had never the purpose to corrupt her; only he hath made an assay^o of her virtue to practice his judgment with the disposition of natures. She, having the truth of honor in her, hath made him that gracious denial which he is most glad to receive. I am confessor to 165 Angelo, and I know this to be true; therefore prepare yourself to death. Do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are fallible. Tomorrow you must die; go to your knees, and make ready.

CLAUDIO Let me ask my sister pardon. I am so out 170 of love with life, that I will sue to be rid of it.

DUKE Hold you there; farewell. [Exit CLAUDIO.] Provost, a word with you.

[Enter PROVOST.]

PROVOST What's your will, father?

DUKE That now you are come, you will be gone. 175 Leave me awhile with the maid. My mind promises with my habit^o no loss shall touch her by my company.

PROVOST In good time.^o Exit.

DUKE The hand that hath made you fair hath made 180 you good. The goodness that is cheap in beauty makes beauty brief in goodness; but grace, being the soul of your complexion,^o shall keep the body of it ever fair. The assault that Angelo hath made to you, fortune hath conveyed to my understanding, and, but that 185 frailty hath examples for his falling, I should wonder at Angelo. How will you do to content this substitute, and to save your brother?

ISABELLA I am now going to resolve^o him. I had rather my brother die by the law than my son should 190 be unlawfully born. But O, how much is the good duke deceived in Angelo! If ever he return and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or discover his government.^o

DUKE That shall not be much amiss. Yet, as the matter 195 now stands, he will avoid your accusation: he made trial of you only. Therefore fasten your ear on my advisings; to the love I have in doing good a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe that you may most uprighteously do a poor wronged lady a merited 200 benefit; redeem your brother from the angry law; do no stain to your own gracious person; and much please the absent duke, if peradventure he shall ever return to have hearing of this business.

ISABELLA Let me hear you speak farther. I have spirit 205 to do anything that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.

DUKE Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful. Have you not heard speak of Mariana, the sister of Frederick, the great soldier who miscarried at sea? 210

ISABELLA I have heard of the lady, and good words went with her name.

DUKE She should this Angelo have married; was affianced to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed: 215 between which time of the contract and limit of the solemnity,^o her brother Frederick was wracked at sea, having in that perished vessel the dowry of his sister. But mark how heavily this befell to the poor gentlewoman: there she lost a noble and renowned brother, 220 in his love toward her ever most kind and natural; with him, the portion and sinew of her fortune, her marriage dowry; with both, her combinate^o husband, this well-seeming Angelo.

ISABELLA Can this be so? Did Angelo so leave her?

DUKE Left her in her tears, and dried not one of them 225 with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending in her discoveries of dishonor: in few, bestowed her on her own lamentation, which she yet wears for his sake; and he, a marble to her tears, is washed with them, but relents not. 230

ISABELLA What a merit were it in death to take this poor maid from the world! What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live! But how out of this can she avail?^o

DUKE It is a rupture that you may easily heal, and the 235 cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonor in doing it.

ISABELLA Show me how, good father.

DUKE This forenamed maid hath yet in her the con- 240 tinuance of her first affection; his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo; answer his requiring with a plausible obedience; agree with his demands to the point; only refer yourself to this 245 advantage: first, that your stay with him may not be long; that the time may have all shadow and silence in it; and the place answer to convenience. This being granted in course—and now follows all—we shall advise this wronged maid to stead up^o your appoint- 250 ment, go in your place. If the encounter^o acknowledge itself hereafter, it may compel him to her recompense: and here, by this, is your brother saved, your honor untainted, the poor Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy scaled.^o The maid will I frame^o and 255 make fit for his attempt. If you think well to carry this, as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. What think you of it?

ISABELLA The image of it gives me content already, and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfec- 260 tion.

DUKE It lies much in your holding up. Haste you speedily to Angelo: if for this night he entreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to Saint Luke's; there at the moated grange^o 265 resides this dejected Mariana. At that place call upon me, and dispatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.

ISABELLA I thank you for this comfort. Fare you well, good father. Exit.

162 assay test 177 habit religious dress 179 In good time very well 183 complexion character 189 resolve answer 193–94 discover his government expose his rule

215–16 limit of the solemnity date set for the marriage ceremony 222 combinate betrothed 234 avail benefit 250 stead up keep 251 encounter i.e., sexual union 255 scaled weighed; frame prepare 265 grange farm

[Scene II. Before the prison.]

Enter, [to the DUKE,] ELBOW, clown [POMPEY, and] OFFICERS.

ELBOW Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard.^o

DUKE O heavens! What stuff is here?

POMPEY 'Twas never merry world since, of two usuries,^o the merriest was put down, and the worsè allowed by order of law a furred gown to keep him warm; and furred with fox and lamb skins too, to signify that craft, being richer than innocency, stands for the facing.^o

ELBOW Come your way, sir. 'Bless you, good father friar.

DUKE And you, good brother father. What offense hath this man made you, sir?

ELBOW Marry, sir, he hath offended the law; and, sir, we take him to be a thief too, sir; for we have found upon him, sir, a strange picklock, which we have sent to the deputy.

DUKE
Fie, sirrah, a bawd, a wicked bawd!
The evil that thou causest to be done,
That is thy means to live. Do thou but think
What 'tis to cram a maw^o or clothe a back
From such a filthy vice; say to thyself,
From their abominable and beastly touches
I drink, I eat, array myself, and live.
Canst thou believe thy living is a life,
So stinkingly depending? Go mend, go mend.

POMPEY Indeed, it does stink in some sort, sir; but yet, sir, I would prove—

DUKE
Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs for sin,
Thou wilt prove his. Take him to prison, officer.
Correction and instruction must both work
Ere this rude beast will profit.

ELBOW He must before the deputy, sir; he has given him warning. The deputy cannot abide a whore-master; if he be a whoremonger, and comes before him, he were as good go a mile on his errand.^o

DUKE
That we were all, as some would seem to be,
From our faults, as faults from seeing, free!

Enter LUCIO.

ELBOW His neck will come to your waist—a cord,^o sir.

POMPEY I spy comfort; I cry bail. Here's a gentleman and a friend of mine.

LUCIO How now, noble Pompey! What, at the wheels of Caesar? Art thou led in triumph? What, is there none of Pygmalion's images,^o newly made woman, to be had now, for putting the hand in the pocket and extracting it clutched? What reply, ha? What say'st thou to this tune, matter and method? Is't not drowned i' th' last rain, ha? What say'st thou, Trot? Is the world as it was, man? Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words? Or how? The trick of it?

DUKE Still thus, and thus; still worse.

LUCIO How doth my dear morsel, thy mistress? Procures she still, ha?

POMPEY Troth, sir, she hath eaten up all her beef,^o and she is herself in the tub.^o

LUCIO Why, 'tis good. It is the right of it; it must be so: ever your fresh whore and your powdered bawd, an unshunned consequence; it must be so. Art going to prison, Pompey?

POMPEY Yes, faith, sir.

LUCIO Why, 'tis not amiss, Pompey. Farewell; go, say I sent thee thither. For debt, Pompey? Or how?

ELBOW For being a bawd, for being a bawd.

LUCIO Well, then, imprison him. If imprisonment be the due of a bawd, why, 'tis his right. Bawd is he doubtless, and of antiquity too, bawd-born. Farewell, good Pompey. Commend me to the prison, Pompey, you will turn good husband^o now, Pompey, you will keep the house.

POMPEY I hope, sir, your good worship will be my bail.

LUCIO No, indeed, will I not, Pompey, it is not the wear.^o I will pray, Pompey, to increase your bondage. If you take it not patiently, why, your mettle^o is the more. Adieu, trusty Pompey. 'Bless you, friar.

DUKE And you.

LUCIO Does Bridget paint still, Pompey, ha?

ELBOW Come your ways, sir, come.

POMPEY You will not bail me then, sir?

LUCIO Then, Pompey, nor now. What news abroad, friar, what news?

ELBOW Come your ways, sir, come.

LUCIO Go to kennel, Pompey, go. [Exeunt ELBOW, POMPEY, and OFFICERS.] What news, friar, of the duke?

DUKE I know none. Can you tell me of any?

LUCIO Some say he is with the Emperor of Russia; other some, he is in Rome: but where is he, think you?

DUKE I know not where; but wheresoever, I wish him well.

LUCIO It was a mad fantastical trick of him to steal from the state, and usurp the beggary^o he was never born to. Lord Angelo dukes it well in his absence; he puts transgression to't.

DUKE He does well in't.

LUCIO A little more lenity to lechery would do no harm in him; something too crabbed that way, friar.

DUKE It is too general a vice, and severity must cure it.

LUCIO Yes, in good sooth, the vice is of a great

III.ii.4 bastard sweet Spanish wine 6-7 two usuries lechery is a form of usury, since it exacts a high interest 10-11 stands . . . facing represents the trimming 23 maw belly 38 he . . . errand i.e., he has a hard (or fruitless?) journey ahead 41 His . . . cord He will be dropped down to your waist (a reference to the cord around a friar's waist) 46 Pygmalion's images i.e., prostitutes (Pompey is compared to Pygmalion, sculptor of a female statue that came to life)

56 beef prostitutes (who serve as flesh-food) 57 in the tub taking the cure for venereal disease (a tub was also used for corning beef, hence the reference to powdering—pickling—in Lucio's next speech) 70 husband housekeeper, manager 75 wear fashion 76 mettle spirit (with pun on metal, i.e., of chains) 94 usurp the beggary in reference to the duke's voluntary life in vagabondage kindred, it is well allied; but it is impossible to extirp it quite, friar, till eating and drinking be put down. They say this Angelo was not made by man and woman after this downright way of creation. Is it true, think you?

DUKE How should he be made, then?

LUCIO Some report a sea maid^o spawned him; some, that he was begot between two stockfishes.^o But it is certain that when he makes water his urine is congealed ice; that I know to be true. And he is a motion generative;^o that's infallible.

DUKE You are pleasant, sir, and speak apace.

LUCIO Why, what a ruthless thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a codpiece to take away the life of a man! Would the duke that is absent have done this? Ere he would have hanged a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand. He had some feeling of the sport; he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.

DUKE I never heard the absent duke much detected for^o women; he was not inclined that way.

LUCIO O, sir, you are deceived.

DUKE 'Tis not possible.

LUCIO Who, not the duke? Yes, your beggar of fifty, and his use was to put a ducat in her clack-dish;^o the duke had crotchets^o in him. He would be drunk too; that let me inform you.

DUKE You do him wrong, surely.

LUCIO Sir, I was an inward^o of his. A shy fellow was the duke, and I believe I know the cause of his withdrawing.

DUKE What, I prithee, might be the cause?

LUCIO No, pardon; 'tis a secret must be locked within the teeth and the lips; but this I can let you understand, the greater file^o of the subject held the duke to be wise.

DUKE Wise! Why, no question but he was.

LUCIO A very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow.

DUKE Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaking. The very stream of his life and the business he hath helmed must, upon a warranted need,^o give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testimonied in his own bringings-forth,^o and he shall appear to the envious a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier. Therefore you speak unskillfully; or if your knowledge be more, it is much dark'ned in your malice.

LUCIO Sir, I know him, and I love him.

DUKE Love talks with better knowledge, and knowledge with dearer love.

LUCIO Come, sir, I know what I know.

DUKE I can hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But, if ever the duke return, as our prayers are he may, let me desire you to make your answer before him. If it be honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintain it. I am bound to call upon you, and I pray you, your name?

109 sea maid which would explain his fish-like coldness

110 stockfishes dried cod 112-13 motion generative masculine puppet 122-23 detected for accused of 127

clack-dish beggar's bowl (metaphorical here) 128 crotchets whims 131 inward intimate companion 137 greater file majority 144 upon . . . need if proof be demanded

146 bringings-forth public actions

LUCIO Sir, my name is Lucio, well known to the duke. 160

DUKE He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to report you.

LUCIO I fear you not.

DUKE O, you hope the duke will return no more, or you imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. But, indeed, I can do you little harm; you'll forswear this again. 165

LUCIO I'll be hanged first; thou art deceived in me, friar. But no more of this. Canst thou tell if Claudio die tomorrow or no? 170

DUKE Why should he die, sir?

LUCIO Why? For filling a bottle with a tundish.^o I would the duke we talk of were returned again; this ungenitured^o agent will unpeople the province with continency; sparrows must not build in his house-eaves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answered; he would never bring them to light. Would he were returned! Marry, this Claudio is condemned for untrussing.^o Farewell, good friar; I prithee, pray for me. The duke, I say to thee again, would eat mutton on Fridays.^o He's now past it, yet, and I say to thee, he would mouth with a beggar, though she smelled brown bread and garlic. Say that I said so. Farewell. Exit. 175 180

DUKE

No might nor greatness in mortality
Can censure 'scape; back-wounding calumny
The whitest virtue strikes. What king so strong
Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue?
But who comes here? 185

Enter ESCALUS, PROVOST, and [OFFICERS, with] bawd [MISTRESS OVERDONE].

ESCALUS Go, away with her to prison! 190

MISTRESS OVERDONE Good my lord, be good to me. Your honor is accounted a merciful man, good my lord.

ESCALUS Double and treble admonition, and still forfeit in the same kind! This would make mercy swear, and play the tyrant. 195

PROVOST A bawd of eleven years' continuance, may it please your honor.

MISTRESS OVERDONE My lord, this is one Lucio's information against me. Mistress Kate Keepdown was with child by him in the duke's time; he promised her marriage; his child is a year and a quarter old, come Philip and Jacob;^o I have kept it myself, and see how he goes about to abuse me. 200

ESCALUS That fellow is a fellow of much license; let him be called before us. Away with her to prison. Go to, no more words. [Exeunt OFFICERS, with MISTRESS OVERDONE.] Provost, my brother Angelo will not be altered; Claudio must die tomorrow. Let him be furnished with divines, and have all charitable preparation. If my brother wrought by my pity, it should not be so with him. 205 210

172 tundish funnel 174 ungenitured sexless 179 untrussing undressing 181 eat . . . Fridays the duke allegedly ate mutton on a Friday, which was a fast day, and also practiced venery; "mutton" also means "harlot," and Friday is the day of the planet Venus 203 Philip and Jacob May 1

PROVOST So please you, this friar hath been with him, and advised him for th' entertainment of death.

ESCALUS Good even, good father. 215

DUKE Bliss and goodness on you!

ESCALUS Of whence are you?

DUKE

Not of this country, though my chance is now

To use it for my time; I am a brother

Of gracious order, late come from the Sec 220

In special business from his Holiness.

ESCALUS What news abroad i' th' world?

DUKE None, but that there is so great a fever on goodness, that the dissolution of it must cure it,° novelty is only in request,° and it is as dangerous to be aged° in 225 any kind of course as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking. There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure, but security° enough to make fellowships° accursed. Much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world. This news is old enough, yet it 230 is every day's news. I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the duke?

ESCALUS One that, above all other strifes, contended especially to know himself.

DUKE What pleasure was he given to? 235

ESCALUS Rather rejoicing to see another merry, than merry at anything which professed to make him rejoice: a gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous, and let me desire to know how you find 240 Claudio prepared. I am made to understand that you have lent him visitation.

DUKE He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice; yet had he framed 245 to himself, by the instruction of his frailty, many deceiving promises of life; which I, by my good leisure, have discredited to him, and now is he resolved to die.

ESCALUS You have paid the heavens your function, 250 and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. I have labored for the poor gentleman to the extremest shore of my modesty,° but my brother justice have I found so severe, that he hath forced me to tell him he is indeed Justice. 255

DUKE If his own life answer the straitness of his proceeding, it shall become him well; wherein if he chance to fail, he hath sentenced himself.

ESCALUS I am going to visit the prisoner. Fare you well. 260

DUKE Peace be with you!

[Exeunt ESCALUS and PROVOST.]

He who the sword of heaven will bear

Should be as holy as severe;

Pattern in himself to know,

Grace to stand, and virtue go;° 265

More nor less to others paying

223-24 fever . . . cure it i.e., the dissolution of the fever alone can now restore goodness to its pristine health 224-25 novelty . . . request change is urgently needed 225 aged old and worn out 228 security heedlessness 229 fellowships human societies 252-53 extremest . . . modesty as far as is proper 264-65 Pattern . . . go He should have a model in himself of grace which will stand if virtue elsewhere ebbs

Than by self-offenses weighing.

Shame to him whose cruel striking

Kills for faults of his own liking.

Twice treble shame on Angelo, 270

To weed my° vice and let his grow.

O, what may man within him hide,

Though angel on the outward side!

How may likeness made in crimes,

Making practice on the times, 275

To draw with idle spiders' strings

Most ponderous and substantial things?

Craft against vice I must apply:

With Angelo tonight shall lie

His old betrothèd but despisèd; 280

So disguise shall, by th' disguisèd,

Pay with falsehood false exacting,

And perform an old contracting. Exit.

A C T I V

Scene I. [The moated grange.]

Enter MARIANA and BOY singing.

Song.

Take, O, take those lips away,

That so sweetly were forsworn;

And those eyes, the break of day,

Lights that do mislead the morn;

But my kisses bring again, bring again; 5

Seals of love, but sealed in vain, sealed in vain.

Enter DUKE [disguised as before].

MARIANA

Break off thy song, and haste thee quick away.

Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice

Hath often stilled my brawling discontent.

[Exit BOY.]

I cry you mercy, sir; and well could wish 10

You had not found me here so musical.

Let me excuse me, and believe me so,

My mirth it much displeased, but pleased my woe.

DUKE

'Tis good; though music oft hath such a charm

To make bad good, and good provoke to harm. 15

I pray you, tell me, hath anybody inquired for me here today? Much upon this time have I promised here to meet.

MARIANA You have not been inquired after; I have sat here all day. 20

Enter ISABELLA.

DUKE I do constantly believe you. The time is come even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little; may be I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.

MARIANA I am always bound to you. Exit. 25

DUKE

Very well met, and well come.

What is the news from this good deputy?

271 my used impersonally

ISABELLA

He hath a garden circummured^o with brick,
Whose western side is with a vineyard backed;
And to that vineyard is a planchèd^o gate,
That makes his opening with this bigger key.
This other doth command a little door
Which from the vineyard to the garden leads.
There have I made my promise
Upon the heavy middle of the night
To call upon him.

DUKE

But shall you on your knowledge find this way?

ISABELLA

I have ta'en a due and wary note upon't.
With whispering and most guilty diligence,
In action all of precept,^o he did show me
The way twice o'er.

DUKE

Are there no other tokens

Between you 'greed concerning her observance?

ISABELLA

No, none, but only a repair i' th' dark,
And that I have possessed^o him my most stay
Can be but brief; for I have made him know
I have a servant comes with me along,
That stays upon^o me, whose persuasion^o is
I come about my brother.

DUKE

'Tis well borne up.

I have not yet made known to Mariana
A word of this. What, ho, within! Come forth.

Enter MARIANA.

I pray you, be acquainted with this maid;
She comes to do you good.

ISABELLA

I do desire the like.

DUKE

Do you persuade yourself that I respect you?

MARIANA

Good friar, I know you do, and have found it.

DUKE

Take, then, this your companion by the hand,
Who hath a story ready for your ear.
I shall attend your leisure, but make haste;
The vaporous night approaches.

MARIANA

Will't please you walk aside? Exit, [with ISABELLA].

DUKE

O place and greatness, millions of false eyes
Are stuck upon thee; volumes of report
Run with these false and most contrarious quests^o
Upon thy doings; thousand escapes^o of wit
Make thee the father of their idle dreams,
And rack thee in their fancies.

Enter MARIANA and ISABELLA.

Welcome, how agreed? 65

ISABELLA

She'll take the enterprise upon her, father,
If you advise it.

IV.i.28 circummured walled around 30 planchèd planked 40 In . . . precept teaching by gestures 42 her observance what she must do 44 possessed informed 47 stays upon waits for; persuasion conviction 62 quests cry of the hound on the scent 63 escapes sallies

DUKE

It is not my consent

But my entreaty too.

ISABELLA

Little have you to say

When you depart from him, but, soft and low,
"Remember now my brother."

MARIANA

Fear me not.

70

DUKE

Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all.

He is your husband on a precontract;^o
To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin,
Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Come, let us go:
Our corn's to reap, for yet our tithe's^o to sow.

75

Exeunt.

Scene II. [The prison.]

Enter PROVOST and clown [POMPEY].

PROVOST Come hither, sirrah. Can you cut off a man's head?

POMPEY If the man be a bachelor, sir, I can; but if he be a married man, he's his wife's head,^o and I can never cut off a woman's head.

5

PROVOST Come, sir, leave me your snatches,^o and yield me a direct answer. Tomorrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine. Here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper.
If you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your gyves;^o if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliverance with an unpitied whipping, for you have been a notorious bawd.

10

POMPEY Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd time out of mind, but yet I will be content to be a lawful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

15

PROVOST What, ho, Abhorson!° Where's Abhorson, there?

20

Enter ABHORSON.

ABHORSON Do you call, sir?

PROVOST Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you tomorrow in your execution. If you think it meet, compound^o with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present, and dismiss him. He cannot plead his estimation^o with you; he hath been a bawd.

25

ABHORSON A bawd, sir? Fie upon him! He will discredit our mystery.^o

PROVOST Go to, sir; you weigh equally; a feather will turn the scale.

30

Exit.

POMPEY Pray, sir, by your good favor—for surely, sir, a good favor^o you have, but that you have a hanging look—do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery?

35

ABHORSON Ay, sir; a mystery.

72 precontract legally binding betrothal agreement 76
tithe tithe corn

IV.ii.4 he's . . . head see Ephesians 5:23, "For the husband is the head of the wife" 6 snatches quibbles 11 gyves shackles 19 Abhorson pun on ab-whore-son, son from a whore 23–24 compound settle 26 estimation reputation 29 mystery craft 33 favor countenance

POMPEY Painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; and your whores, sir, being members of my occupation, using painting, do prove my occupation a mystery; but what mystery there should be in hanging, 40 if I should be hanged, I cannot imagine.

ABHORSON Sir, it is a mystery.

POMPEY Proof?

ABHORSON Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it 45 big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough: so every true man's apparel fits your thief.°

Enter PROVOST.

PROVOST Are you agreed?

POMPEY Sir, I will serve him; for I do find your 50 hangman is a more penitent trade than your bawd; he doth oft'ner ask forgiveness.°

PROVOST You, sirrah, provide your block and your ax tomorrow four o'clock.

ABHORSON Come on, bawd. I will instruct thee in 55 my trade; follow.

POMPEY I do desire to learn, sir; and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn,° you shall find me yare;° for, truly, sir, for your kindness I owe you a good turn. 60

PROVOST

Call hither Barnardine and Claudio.

Exit [POMPEY, with ABHORSON].

Th' one has my pity; not a jot the other,
Being a murderer, though he were my brother.

Enter CLAUDIO.

Look, here's the warrant, Claudio, for thy death.
'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight tomorrow 65
Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine?

CLAUDIO

As fast locked up in sleep as guiltless labor
When it lies starkly° in the traveler's bones;
He will not wake.

PROVOST Who can do good on him?

Well, go, prepare yourself. [Knocking within.] But, 70
hark, what noise?—

Heaven give your spirits comfort. [Exit CLAUDIO.]

By and by.

I hope it is some pardon or reprieve

For the most gentle Claudio. Welcome, father.

Enter DUKE [disguised as before].

DUKE

The best and wholesom'st spirits of the night
Envelop you, good provost! Who called here of late? 75

PROVOST

None since the curfew rung.

DUKE

Not Isabel?

PROVOST No.

DUKE They will, then, ere't be long.

44-48 Every . . . thief interpretation uncertain 52 ask forgiveness the executioner always asked the condemned man to forgive him 58 turn execution (pun) 59 yare ready 68 starkly stiffly

PROVOST

What comfort is for Claudio?

DUKE

There's some in hope.

PROVOST

It is a bitter deputy. 80

DUKE

Not so, not so; his life is paralleled
Even with the stroke and line of his great justice.
He doth with holy abstinence subdue
That in himself which he spurs on his pow'r 85
To qualify° in others; were he mealed° with that
Which he corrects, then were he tyrannous;
But this being so, he's just. [Knocking within.] Now are they come. [Exit PROVOST.]

This is a gentle provost—seldom when
The steelèd jailer is the friend of men.

[Knocking within.]

How now, what noise? That spirit's possessed with haste 90
That wounds th' unsisting° postern° with these strokes.

[Enter PROVOST.]

PROVOST

There he must stay until the officer
Arise to let him in; he is called up.

DUKE

Have you no countermand for Claudio yet,
But he must die tomorrow?

PROVOST

None, sir, none. 95

DUKE

As near the dawning, provost, as it is,
You shall hear more ere morning.

PROVOST

Happily

You something know; yet I believe there comes
No countermand; no such example have we.
Besides, upon the very siege° of justice 100
Lord Angelo hath to the public ear
Professed the contrary.

Enter a MESSENGER.

This is his lord's man.

DUKE

And here comes Claudio's pardon.

MESSENGER My lord hath sent you this note, and by me this further charge, that you swerve not from the 105 smallest article of it, neither in time, matter, or other circumstance. Good morrow; for, as I take it, it is almost day.

PROVOST I shall obey him. [Exit MESSENGER.]

DUKE [Aside.]

This is his pardon, purchased by such sin 110
For which the pardoners himself is in.
Hence hath offense his quick celerity,
When it is borne in high authority.
When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended,
That for the fault's love is th' offender friended. 115
Now, sir, what news?

PROVOST I told you. Lord Angelo, belike° thinking

85 qualify moderate; mealed stained 91 unsisting perhaps "unassisting," perhaps a printer's slip for "resisting"; postern small door 100 siege seat 117 belike perhaps me remiss in mine office, awakens me with this unwonted putting-on;° methinks strangely, for he hath not used it before.

DUKE Pray you, let's hear.

PROVOST [Reads] the letter. "Whatsoever you may hear to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by four of the clock; and in the afternoon Barnardine. For my better satisfaction, let me have Claudio's head sent me by five. Let this be duly performed with a thought that more depends on it than we must yet deliver. Thus fail not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril."

What say you to this, sir?

DUKE What is that Barnardine who is to be executed in th' afternoon?

PROVOST A Bohemian born, but here nursed up and bred; one that is a prisoner nine years old.

DUKE How came it that the absent duke had not either delivered him to his liberty or executed him? I have heard it was ever his manner to do so.

PROVOST His friends still wrought reprieves for him; and, indeed, his fact,° till now in the government of Lord Angelo, came not to an undoubtful proof.

DUKE It is now apparent?

PROVOST Most manifest, and not denied by himself.

DUKE Hath he borne himself penitently in prison? How seems he to be touched?

PROVOST A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come; insensible of mortality, and desperately mortal.°

DUKE He wants° advice.

PROVOST He will hear none. He hath evermore had the liberty of the prison; give him leave to escape hence, he would not: drunk many times a day, if not many days entirely drunk. We have very oft awaked him, as if to carry him to execution, and showed him a seeming warrant for it; it hath not moved him at all.

DUKE More of him anon. There is written in your brow, provost, honesty and constancy: if I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguiles me; but, in the boldness of my cunning,° I will lay myself in hazard.° Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo who hath sentenced him. To make you understand this in a manifested effect,° I crave but four days' respite, for the which you are to do me both a present° and a dangerous courtesy.

PROVOST Pray, sir, in what?

DUKE In the delaying death.

PROVOST Alack, how may I do it, having the hour limited,° and an express command, under penalty, to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's, to cross this in the smallest.

DUKE By the vow of mine order I warrant you, if my instructions may be your guide. Let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.

PROVOST Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favor.°

120 DUKE O, death's a great disguiser; and you may add to it. Shave the head, and tie the beard; and say it was the desire of the penitent to be so bared° before his death; you know the course is common. If anything fall to you upon this, more than thanks and good fortune, by the saint whom I profess, I will plead against it with my life.

PROVOST Pardon me, good father; it is against my oath.

DUKE Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?

PROVOST To him, and to his substitutes.

DUKE You will think you have made no offense, if the duke avouch the justice of your dealing?

PROVOST But what likelihood is in that?

DUKE Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet since I see you fearful,° that neither my coat, integrity, nor persuasion can with ease attempt° you, I will go further than I meant, to pluck all fears out of you. Look you, sir, here is the hand and seal of the duke. You know the character,° I doubt not, and the signet is not strange to you.

PROVOST I know them both.

DUKE The contents of this is the return of the duke.

You shall anon overread it at your pleasure, where you shall find, within these two days he will be here. This is a thing that Angelo knows not; for he this very day receives letters of strange tenor, perchance of the duke's death, perchance entering into some monastery, but by chance nothing of what is writ. Look, th' unfolding star° calls up the shepherd. Put not yourself into amazement how these things should be: all difficulties are but easy when they are known. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine's head; I will give him a present shrift,° and advise him for a better place. Yet you are amazed; but this shall absolutely resolve° you. Come away; it is almost clear dawn.

Exit, [with PROVOST].

Scene III. [The prison.]

Enter clown [POMPEY].

POMPEY I am as well acquainted here as I was in our house of profession: one would think it were Mistress Overdone's own house, for here be many of her old customers. First, here's young Master Rash; he's in for a commodity° of brown paper and old ginger, ninescore and seventeen pounds, of which he made five marks,° ready money; marry, then ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. Then is there here one Master Caper, at the suit of 176-77 discover the favor recognize the face 180 bared shaved 194 fearful full of fear 195 attempt move 198 character handwriting 208 unfolding star morning star (signaling the shepherd to lead the sheep from the fold) 212 shrift absolution 214 resolve convince

IV.iii.5 commodity worthless goods whose purchase at a heavy price was forced on a debtor in dire need by a usurious creditor, who thus circumvented the contemporary laws against usury 7 marks a mark was about two-thirds of a pound

119 putting-on urging 139 fact evil deed 148 desperately mortal about to die without hope of the future 149 wants needs 159 cunning knowledge; lay . . . hazard take a risk 162-63 in . . . effect by open proof 164 present immediate 169 limited determined

Master Three-pile the mercer, for some four suits of 10 peach-colored satin, which now peaches° him a beggar.
 Then have we here young Dizzy, and young Master
 Deep-vow, and Master Copper-spur,° and Master Starve-lackey, the rapier and dagger man, and young
 Drop-heir that killed lusty Pudding, and Master 15 Forthright the tilter,° and brave Master Shoe-tie° the great traveler, and wild Half-can° that stabbed Pots, and, I think, forty more; all great doers in our trade, and are now "for the Lord's sake."°

Enter ABHORSON.

ABHORSON Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither. 20

POMPEY Master Barnardine! You must rise and be hanged, Master Barnardine!

ABHORSON What, ho, Barnardine!

BARNARDINE (Within.) A pox o' your throats! Who makes that noise there? What are you? 25

POMPEY Your friends, sir; the hangman. You must be so good, sir, to rise and be put to death.

BARNARDINE [Within.] Away, you rogue, away! I am sleepy.

ABHORSON Tell him he must awake, and that quickly 30
 too.

POMPEY Pray, Master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.

ABHORSON Go into him, and fetch him out.

POMPEY He is coming, sir, he is coming; I hear his 35 straw rustle.

Enter BARNARDINE.

ABHORSON Is the ax upon the block, sirrah?

POMPEY Very ready, sir.

BARNARDINE How now, Abhorson? What's the news with you? 40

ABHORSON Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers; for, look you, the warrant's come.

BARNARDINE You rogue, I have been drinking all night; I am not fitted for't.

POMPEY O, the better, sir: for he that drinks all 45 night, and is hanged betimes° in the morning, may sleep the sounder all the next day.

Enter DUKE [disguised as before].

ABHORSON Look you, sir; here comes your ghostly° father. Do we jest now, think you?

DUKE Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how 50 hastily you are to depart, I am come to advise you, comfort you, and pray with you.

BARNARDINE Friar, not I: I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my brains with billets.° I will 55 not consent to die this day, that's certain.

DUKE

O, sir, you must; and therefore I beseech you
 Look forward on the journey you shall go.

BARNARDINE I swear I will not die today for any man's persuasion. 60

II peaches betrays 13 Copper-spur i.e., Master Pretentious (copper was a bogus substitute for gold) 16 tilter fighter;
Shoe-tie rosette (worn by gallants) 17 Half-can a larger vessel than a pot 19 for . . . sake the cry of prisoners begging alms from passers-by 46 betimes early 48 ghostly spiritual 55 billets cudgels

DUKE But hear you—

BARNARDINE Not a word. If you have anything to say to me, come to my ward, for thence will not I today. Exit.

Enter PROVOST.

DUKE

Unfit to live or die. O gravel heart! 65
 After him, fellows; bring him to the block.

[Exeunt ABHORSON and POMPEY.]

PROVOST

Now, sir, how do you find the prisoner?

DUKE

A creature unprepared, unmeet for death;
 And to transport him in the mind he is
 Were damnable.

PROVOST

Here in the prison, father, 70
 There died this morning of a cruel fever
 One Ragozine, a most notorious pirate,
 A man of Claudio's years, his beard and head
 Just of his color. What if we do omit
 This reprobate till he were well inclined, 75
 And satisfy the deputy with the visage
 Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio?

DUKE

O, 'tis an accident that heaven provides.
 Dispatch it presently;° the hour draws on Prefixed° by Angelo. See this be done, 80
 And sent according to command, whiles I
 Persuade this rude wretch willingly to die.

PROVOST

This shall be done, good father, presently;
 But Barnardine must die this afternoon,
 And how shall we continue Claudio, 85
 To save me from the danger that might come
 If he were known alive?

DUKE

Let this be done:
 Put them in secret holds,° both Barnardine and
 Claudio.

Ere twice the sun hath made his journal° greeting 90
 To yonder generation, you shall find
 Your safety manifested.

PROVOST

I am your free dependant.°

DUKE

Quick, dispatch, and send the head to Angelo.
Exit [PROVOST].

Now will I write letters to Angelo—
 The provost, he shall bear them—whose contents 95
 Shall witness to him I am near at home,
 And that by great injunctions I am bound
 To enter publicly. Him I'll desire
 To meet me at the consecrated fount,
 A league below the city; and from thence, 100
 By cold gradation° and well-balanced form,
 We shall proceed with Angelo.

Enter PROVOST.

PROVOST

Here is the head; I'll carry it myself.

79 presently at once 80 Prefixed predetermined 88 holds cells 89 journal daily 92 your free dependant freely at your service 101 cold gradation deliberate steps

DUKE

Convenient is it. Make a swift return,
For I would commune with you of such things
That want^o no ear but yours. 105

PROVOST

I'll make all speed. Exit.

ISABELLA (Within.)

Peace, ho, be here!

DUKE

The tongue of Isabel. She's come to know
If yet her brother's pardon be come hither.
But I will keep her ignorant of her good,
To make her heavenly comforts of despair
When it is least expected.

Enter ISABELLA.

ISABELLA

Ho, by your leave!

DUKE

Good morning to you, fair and gracious daughter.

ISABELLA

The better, given me by so holy a man.
Hath yet the deputy sent my brother's pardon?

DUKE

He hath released him, Isabel, from the world;
His head is off, and sent to Angelo.

ISABELLA

Nay, but it is not so.

DUKE

It is no other. Show your wisdom, daughter,
In your close^o patience.

ISABELLA

O, I will to him and pluck out his eyes!

DUKE

You shall not be admitted to his sight.

ISABELLA

Unhappy Claudio, wretched Isabel,
Injurious world, most damnèd Angelo!

DUKE

This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot;
Forbear it therefore, give your cause to heaven.
Mark what I say, which you shall find
By every syllable a faithful verity.
The duke comes home tomorrow—nay, dry your eyes—

One of our covent,^o and his confessor,
Gives me this instance:^o already he hath carried
Notice to Escalus and Angelo,
Who do prepare to meet him at the gates,
There to give up their pow'r. If you can, pace^o your wisdom

In that good path that I would wish it go,
And you shall have your bosom^o on this wretch,
Grace of the duke, revenges to your heart,
And general honor.

ISABELLA

I am directed by you.

DUKE

This letter, then, to Friar Peter give;
'Tis that he sent me of the duke's return.
Say, by this token, I desire his company
At Mariana's house tonight. Her cause and yours
I'll perfect him withal, and he shall bring you

Before the duke; and to the head of Angelo

Accuse him home and home. For my poor self, 145

I am combinèd^o by a sacred vow,
And shall be absent. Wend you with this letter;
Command these fretting waters from your eyes
With a light heart; trust not my holy order,
If I pervert your course. Who's here? 150

Enter LUCIO.

LUCIO Good even. Friar, where's the provost?

110 DUKE Not within, sir.

LUCIO O pretty Isabella, I am pale at mine heart to see thine eyes so red; thou must be patient. I am fain to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for 155 my head fill my belly; one fruitful meal would set me to't. But they say the duke will be here tomorrow. By my troth, Isabel, I loved thy brother. If the old fantastical duke of dark corners had been at home, he had lived. [Exit ISABELLA.] 160

DUKE Sir, the duke is marvelous little beholding to your reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.

115 LUCIO Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do; he's a better woodman^o than thou tak'st him for.

DUKE Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well. 165

LUCIO Nay, tarry, I'll go along with thee: I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

DUKE You have told me too many of him already,
sir, if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

120 LUCIO I was once before him for getting a wench 170 with child.

DUKE Did you such a thing?

LUCIO Yes, marry, did I; but I was fain to forswear it: they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.^o 175

DUKE Sir, your company is fairer than honest. Rest
you well.

125 LUCIO By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end.
If bawdy talk offend you, we'll have very little of it.
Nay, friar, I am a kind of burr; I shall stick. Exeunt. 180

Scene IV. [A room.]

130 Enter ANGELO and ESCALUS.

ESCALUS Every letter he hath writ hath disvouched other.

ANGELO In most uneven and distracted manner. His actions show much like to madness; pray heaven his wisdom be not tainted. And why meet him at the 5 gates, and redeliver our authorities there?

135 ESCALUS I guess not.

ANGELO And why should we proclaim it in an hour before his ent'ring, that if any crave redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street? 10

140 ESCALUS He shows his reason for that: to have a dispatch of complaints, and to deliver us from devices^o hereafter which shall then have no power to stand against us.

146 combinèd bound 164 woodman hunter (here, of women) 175 medlar applelike fruit edible only when partly decayed (here, a prostitute)

IV.iv.12 devices false complaints

106 want need 120 close deep, secret 130 covent convent
131 instance proof 134 pace conduct 136 bosom desire

ANGELO

Well, I beseech you, let it be proclaimed. 15
 Betimes i' th' morn I'll call you at your house.
 Give notice to such men of sort and suit°
 As are to meet him.

ESCALUS I shall, sir. Fare you well. Exit.

ANGELO Good night.

This deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant,° 20
 And dull to all proceedings. A deflow' red maid,
 And by an eminent body that enforced
 The law against it! But that her tender shame
 Will not proclaim against her maiden loss,°
 How might she tongue me! Yet reason dares her no; 25
 For my authority bears of a credent bulk,°
 That no particular scandal once can touch
 But it confounds the breather. He should have lived,
 Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,°
 Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge, 30
 By so receiving a dishonored life
 With ransom of such shame. Would yet he had lived!
 Alack, when once our grace we have forgot,
 Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not.
Exit.

Scene V. [Outside the town.]

Enter DUKE [in his own habit] and FRIAR PETER.

DUKE

These letters at fit time deliver me.°
 The provost knows our purpose and our plot.
 The matter being afoot, keep your instruction,
 And hold you ever to our special drift,
 Though sometimes you do blench° from this to that, 5
 As cause doth minister. Go call at Flavius' house,
 And tell him where I stay; give the like notice
 To Valencius, Rowland, and to Crassus,
 And bid them bring the trumpets to the gate;
 But send me Flavius first.

FRIAR PETER It shall be speeded well. 10
[Exit.]

Enter VARRIUS.

DUKE

I thank thee, Varrius; thou hast made good haste.
 Come, we will walk. There's other of our friends
 Will greet us here anon, my gentle Varrius. Exeunt.

Scene VI. [Near the city gate.]

Enter ISABELLA and MARIANA.

ISABELLA

To speak so indirectly I am loath:
 I would say the truth; but to accuse him so,
 That is your part. Yet I am advised to do it,
 He says, to veil full purpose.

MARIANA Be ruled by him.

ISABELLA

Besides, he tells me that, if peradventure 5

17 men . . . suit noblemen 20 unpregnant unreceptive 24 maiden loss loss of maidenhood 26 bears . . . bulk is derived from trusted material 29 sense feeling
 IV.v.i me for me 5 blench deviate

He speak against me on the adverse side,
 I should not think it strange; for 'tis a physic
 That's bitter to sweet end.

MARIANA

I would Friar Peter—

Enter FRIAR PETER.

ISABELLA

O peace! The friar is come.

FRIAR PETER

Come, I have found you out a stand most fit 10
 Where you may have such vantage° on the duke,
 He shall not pass you. Twice have the trumpets sounded.
 The generous° and gravest citizens
 Have hent° the gates, and very near upon
 The duke is ent'ring: therefore, hence, away! Exeunt. 15

A C T V

Scene I. [The city gate.]

Enter DUKE, VARRIUS, LORDS, ANGELO, ESCALUS, LUCIO, [PROVOST, OFFICERS, and] CITIZENS, at several doors.

DUKE

My very worthy cousin,° fairly met.
 Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you.

ANGELO, ESCALUS

Happy return be to your royal grace.

DUKE

Many and hearty thankings to you both.
 We have made inquiry of you, and we hear 5
 Such goodness of your justice, that our soul
 Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks,
 Forerunning more requital.°

ANGELO

You make my bonds still greater.

DUKE

O, your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong it 10
 To lock it in the wards of covert bosom,°
 When it deserves, with characters of brass,
 A fortified residence 'gainst the tooth of time
 And razure° of oblivion. Give me your hand,
 And let the subject see, to make them know
 That outward courtesies would fain proclaim 15
 Favors that keep° within. Come, Escalus,
 You must walk by us on our other hand—
 And good supporters are you.

Enter [FRIAR] PETER and ISABELLA.

FRIAR PETER

Now is your time: speak loud, and kneel before him.

ISABELLA

Justice, O royal duke! Vail your regard° 20
 Upon a wronged—I would fain have said, a maid.

IV.vi.ii vantage advantageous position 13 generous high-born 14 hent gathered at V.i.i cousin a sovereign's address to a nobleman 8 Fore-running more requital preceding additional reward 10
 To . . . bosom to keep it locked hidden in my heart 13 razure erasure 16 keep dwell 20 Vail your regard cast your attention

O worthy prince, dishonor not your eye
By throwing it on any other object
Till you have heard me in my true complaint,
And given me justice, justice, justice, justice!

DUKE

Relate your wrongs. In what? By whom? Be brief.
Here is Lord Angelo shall give you justice;
Reveal yourself to him.

ISABELLA

O worthy duke,
You bid me seek redemption of the devil.
Hear me yourself, for that which I must speak
Must either punish me, not being believed,
Or wring redress from you. Hear me, O hear me, here!

ANGELO

My lord, her wits, I fear me, are not firm.
She hath been a suitor to me for her brother
Cut off by course of justice—

ISABELLA

By course of justice!

ANGELO

And she will speak most bitterly and strange.

ISABELLA

Most strange, but yet most truly, will I speak.
That Angelo's forsworn, is it not strange?
That Angelo's a murderer, is't not strange?
That Angelo is an adulterous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin-violator;
Is it not strange, and strange?

DUKE

Nay, it is ten times strange.

ISABELLA

It is not truer he is Angelo
Than this is all as true as it is strange.
Nay, it is ten times true, for truth is truth
To th' end of reck'ning.

DUKE

Away with her! Poor soul,

She speaks this in th' infirmity of sense.

ISABELLA

O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believ'st
There is another comfort than this world,
That thou neglect me not, with that opinion
That I am touched with madness. Make not impossible
That which but seems unlike. 'Tis not impossible
But one, the wicked'st caitiff^o on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute^o
As Angelo; even so may Angelo,
In all his dressings, caracts,^o titles, forms,
Be an arch-villain. Believe it, royal prince;
If he be less, he's nothing; but he's more,
Had I more name for badness.

DUKE

By mine honesty,

If she be mad, as I believe no other,
Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense,
Such a dependency of thing on thing,
As e'er I heard in madness.

ISABELLA

O gracious duke,

Harp not on that; nor do not banish reason
For inequality,^o but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear where it seems hid,
And hide the false seems^o true.

DUKE

Many that are not mad

Have, sure, more lack of reason. What would you say?

ISABELLA

I am the sister of one Claudio,
Condemned upon the act of fornication
To lose his head, condemned by Angelo.
I, in probation^o of a sisterhood,
Was sent to by my brother, one Lucio
As then the messenger—

LUCIO

That's I, and't like^o your grace.

I came to her from Claudio, and desired her
To try her gracious fortune with Lord Angelo
For her poor brother's pardon.

ISABELLA

That's he indeed.

DUKE

You were not bid to speak.

LUCIO

No, my good lord,

Nor wished to hold my peace.

DUKE

I wish you now, then;

Pray you, take note of it, and when you have
A business for yourself, pray heaven you then
Be perfect.^o

LUCIO

I warrant your honor.

DUKE

The warrant's^o for yourself; take heed to't.

ISABELLA

This gentleman told somewhat of my tale—

LUCIO

Right.

DUKE

It may be right; but you are i' the wrong
To speak before your time. Proceed.

ISABELLA

I went

To this pernicious caitiff deputy—

DUKE

That's somewhat madly spoken.

ISABELLA

Pardon it;

The phrase is to the matter.^o

DUKE

Mended again. The matter: proceed.

ISABELLA

In brief, to set the needless process by,
How I persuaded, how I prayed, and kneeled,
How he refell^o me, and how I replied—
For this was of much length—the vild^o conclusion
I now begin with grief and shame to utter.

DUKE

He would not, but by gift of my chaste body
To his concupiscible intemperate lust,
Release my brother; and after much debatement,
My sisterly remorse^o confutes mine honor,
And I did yield to him; but the next morn betimes,
His purpose surfeiting,^o he sends a warrant
For my poor brother's head.

DUKE

This is most likely!

ISABELLA

O, that it were as like as it is true!

DUKE

By heaven, fond wretch, thou know'st not what thou speak'st,
Or else thou art suborned against his honor
In hateful practice.^o First, his integrity

53 caitiff wretch 54 absolute perfect 56 caracts symbols of office 65 inequality injustice 67 seems which seems

72 probation novitiate 74 and't like if it please 82 perfect thoroughly prepared 83 warrant warning 90 to the matter appropriate 94 refell^o refuted 95 vild vile 100 remorse pity 102 surfeiting satiating 107 practice plot

Stands without blemish. Next, it imports^o no reason
That with such vehemency he should pursue
Faults proper^o to himself: if he had so offended,
He would have weighed thy brother by himself,
And not have cut him off. Someone hath set you on;
Confess the truth, and say by whose advice
Thou cam'st here to complain.

ISABELLA And is this all?
Then, O you blessed ministers above,
Keep me in patience, and with ripened time
Unfold the evil which is here wrapped up
In countenance. Heaven shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wronged, hence unbelieved go!

DUKE
I know you'd fain be gone. An officer,
To prison with her! Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us? This needs must be a practice.
Who knew of your intent and coming hither?

ISABELLA
One that I would were here, Friar Lodowick.

DUKE
A ghostly father, belike. Who knows that Lodowick?

LUCIO
My lord, I know him; 'tis a meddling friar,
I do not like the man. Had he been lay,^o my lord,
For certain words he spake against your grace
In your retirement, I had swung^o him soundly.

DUKE
Words against me! This's a good friar, belike!
And to set on this wretched woman here
Against our substitute! Let this friar be found.

LUCIO
But yesternight, my lord, she and that friar,
I saw them at the prison; a saucy friar,
A very scurvy^o fellow.

FRIAR PETER
Blessed be your royal grace!
I have stood by, my lord, and I have heard
Your royal ear abused. First, hath this woman
Most wrongfully accused your substitute,
Who is as free from touch or soil with her
As she from one ungot.

DUKE We did believe no less.
Know you that Friar Lodowick that she speaks of?

FRIAR PETER
I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler,^o
As he's reported by this gentleman;
And, on my trust, a man that never yet
Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace.

LUCIO
My lord, most villainously; believe it.

FRIAR PETER
Well, he in time may come to clear himself,
But at this instant he is sick, my lord,
Of a strange fever. Upon his mere request,
Being come to knowledge that there was complaint
Intended 'gainst Lord Angelo, came I hither,
To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth know

Is true and false; and what he with his oath
And all probation^o will make up full clear,
Whensoever he's convented.^o First, for this woman,
To justify this worthy nobleman,
So vulgarly and personally accused,
Her shall you hear disproved to her eyes,
Till she herself confess it.

DUKE Good friar, let's hear it.
[ISABELLA is carried off guarded.]

Enter MARIANA.

Do you not smile at this, Lord Angelo?
O heaven, the vanity of wretched fools!
Give us some seats. Come, cousin Angelo,
In this I'll be impartial; be you judge
Of your own cause. Is this the witness, friar?
First, let her show her face, and after speak.

MARIANA
Pardon, my lord; I will not show my face
Until my husband bid me.

DUKE What, are you married?

MARIANA No, my lord.

DUKE Are you a maid?

MARIANA No, my lord.

DUKE A widow, then?

MARIANA Neither, my lord.

DUKE Why, you are nothing, then: neither maid, widow, nor wife?

LUCIO My lord, she may be a punk;^o for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife.

DUKE
Silence that fellow. I would he had some cause
To prattle for himself.

LUCIO Well, my lord.

MARIANA
My lord, I do confess I ne'er was married,
And I confess, besides, I am no maid.

I have known^o my husband; yet my husband
Knows not that ever he knew me.

LUCIO He was drunk, then, my lord; it can be no better.

DUKE For the benefit of silence, would thou wert so
too!

LUCIO Well, my lord.

DUKE
This is no witness for Lord Angelo.

MARIANA
Now I come to't, my lord:
She that accuses him of fornication,
In selfsame manner doth accuse my husband,
And charges him, my lord, with such a time
When I'll depose I had him in mine arms
With all th' effect of love.

ANGELO
Charges she moe than me?

MARIANA Not that I know.

DUKE
No? You say your husband?

MARIANA
Why, just, my lord, and that is Angelo,

108 imports signifies 110 proper belonging 128 lay a layman 130 swung thrashed 136 scurvy worthless 145 temporary meddler meddler in temporal affairs

157 probation proof 158 convented sent for 179 punk harlot 186 known had intercourse with

Who thinks he knows that he ne'er knew my body,
But knows he thinks that he knows Isabel's.

ANGELO

This is a strange abuse. Let's see thy face.

MARIANA

My husband bids me; now I will unmask.

[Unveiling.]

This is that face, thou cruel Angelo,
Which once thou swor'st was worth the looking on;
This is the hand which, with a vowed contract,
Was fast belocked in thine; this is the body
That took away the match^o from Isabel,
And did supply thee at thy garden house
In her imagined person.

DUKE Know you this woman?

LUCIO

Carnally, she says.

DUKE Sirrah, no more!

LUCIO

Enough, my lord.

ANGELO

My lord, I must confess I know this woman:
And five years since there was some speech of marriage
Betwixt myself and her, which was broke off,
Partly for that her promised proportions^o
Came short of composition,^o but in chief,
For that her reputation was disvalued
In levity;^o since which time of five years
I never spake with her, saw her, nor heard from her,
Upon my faith and honor.

MARIANA

Noble prince,

As there comes light from heaven and words from
breath,

As there is sense in truth and truth in virtue,
I am affianced this man's wife as strongly
As words could make up vows; and, my good lord,
But Tuesday night last gone in's garden house
He knew me as a wife. As this is true,
Let me in safety raise me from my knees,
Or else forever be confixèd^o here,
A marble monument.

ANGELO

I did but smile till now;

Now, good my lord, give me the scope of justice;
My patience here is touched. I do perceive
These poor informal^o women are no more
But instruments of some more mightier member
That sets them on. Let me have way, my lord,
To find this practice out.

DUKE

Ay, with my heart,

And punish them to your height of pleasure.
Thou foolish friar and thou pernicious woman,
Compact^o with her that's gone, think'st thou thy oaths,
Though they would swear down each particular saint,
Were testimonies against his worth and credit,
That's sealed in approbation?^o You, Lord Escalus,
Sit with my cousin; lend him your kind pains
To find out this abuse, whence 'tis derived.

There is another friar that set them on;
Let him be sent for.

FRIAR PETER

205 Would he were here, my lord, for he, indeed,
Hath set the women on to this complaint:
Your provost knows the place where he abides,
And he may fetch him.

DUKE

Go, do it instantly.

[Exit PROVOST.]

And you, my noble and well-warranted cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
210 Do with your injuries as seems you best,
In any chastisement. I for a while
Will leave you, but stir not you till you have
Well determined upon these slanderers.

ESCALUS

My lord, we'll do it thoroughly. Exit [DUKE]. 260

Signior Lucio, did not you say you knew that Friar Lodowick to be a dishonest person?

LUCIO Cucullus non facit monachum;^o honest in 215 nothing but in his clothes, and one that hath spoke most villainous speeches of the duke. 265

ESCALUS We shall entreat you to abide here till he come, and enforce them against him; we shall find this friar a notable^o fellow.

LUCIO As any in Vienna, on my word.

220 ESCALUS Call that same Isabel here once again; I would speak with her. [Exit an ATTENDANT.] Pray you, my lord, give me leave to question; you shall see how I'll handle her.

LUCIO Not better than he, by her own report.

ESCALUS Say you?

LUCIO Marry, sir, I think, if you handled her privately, she would sooner confess; perchance, publicly, she'll be ashamed.

Enter DUKE [as a friar], PROVOST, ISABELLA, [and OFFICERS].

ESCALUS I will go darkly^o to work with her.

LUCIO That's the way; for women are light at midnight. 280

ESCALUS Come on, mistress, here's a gentlewoman denies all that you have said.

235 LUCIO My lord, here comes the rascal I spoke of—here with the provost. 285

ESCALUS In very good time. Speak not you to him till we call upon you.

LUCIO Mum.

ESCALUS Come, sir, did you set these women on to slander Lord Angelo? They have confessed you did. 290

DUKE 'Tis false.

ESCALUS How! Know you where you are?

DUKE

Respect to your great place; and let the devil
Be sometime honored for his burning throne.
Where's the duke? 'Tis he should hear me speak. 295

ESCALUS

The duke's in us, and we will hear you speak.
Look you speak justly.

211 match meeting 219 proportions dowry 220 composition previous agreement 221-22 disvalued In levity discredited for lightness 232 confixèd fixed firmly 236 informal
(1) rash (2) informing 242 Compact in collusion 245 approbation attested integrity

263 Cucullus . . . monachum the cowl does not make the monk (Latin) 268 notable notorious 279 darkly slyly, subtly

DUKE

Boldly, at least. But, O poor souls,
Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox?
Good night to your redress. Is the duke gone?
Then is your cause gone too. The duke's unjust,
Thus to retort^o your manifest^o appeal,
And put your trial in the villain's mouth
Which here you come to accuse.

LUCIO

This is the rascal; this is he I spoke of.

ESCALUS

Why, thou unreverend and unhallowed friar,
Is't not enough thou hast suborned these women
To accuse this worthy man, but in foul mouth,
And in the witness of his proper^o ear,
To call him villain? And then to glance from him
To th' duke himself, to tax him with injustice?
Take him hence; to th' rack with him. We'll touse^o
you
Joint by joint, but we will know his purpose.
What, "unjust"!

DUKE

Be not so hot. The duke
Dare no more stretch this finger of mine than he Dare rack his own: his subject am I not,
Nor here provincial.^o My business in this state
Made me a looker-on here in Vienna,
Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble
Till it o'errun the stew. Laws for all faults,
But faults so countenanced, that the strong statutes
Stand like the forfeits^o in a barber's shop,
As much in mock as mark.^o

ESCALUS

Slander to th' state! Away with him to prison!

ANGELO

What can you vouch against him, Signior Lucio?
Is this the man that you did tell us of?

LUCIO 'Tis he, my lord. Come hither, goodman baldpate; do you know me?

DUKE I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice. I met you at the prison, in the absence of the duke.

LUCIO O, did you so? And do you remember what you said of the duke?

DUKE Most notedly, sir.

LUCIO Do you so, sir? And was the duke a fleshmonger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him to be?

DUKE You must, sir, change persons with me, ere you make that my report. You, indeed, spoke so of him; and much more, much worse.

LUCIO O thou damnable fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches?

DUKE I protest I love the duke as I love myself.

ANGELO Hark, how the villain would close^o now, after his treasonable abuses.

ESCALUS Such a fellow is not to be talked withal.
Away with him to prison! Where is the provost?
Away with him to prison, lay bolts enough upon him,

302 retort refer back; manifest clear 309 proper very 312
touse pull 317 provincial belonging to the province or state 322 forfeits extracted teeth (barbers acted as dentists) 323 As much . . . mark to be mocked at as much as to be seen 344 close come to agreement

let him speak no more. Away with those giglets^o too, and with the other confederate companion.

DUKE [To the PROVOST.] Stay, sir; stay awhile.

ANGELO What, resists he? Help him, Lucio.

LUCIO Come, sir; come, sir; come, sir; foh, sir! Why, you bald-pated, lying rascal, you must be hooded, must you? Show your knave's visage, with a pox to you. Show your sheep-biting^o face, and be hanged an hour. Will't not off?

[Pulls off the friar's hood, and discovers the DUKE.]

DUKE

Thou art the first knave that e'er mad'st a duke.
First, provost, let me bail these gentle three.

[To LUCIO.]

Sneak not away, sir; for the friar and you Must have a word anon. Lay hold on him.

LUCIO

This may prove worse than hanging.

DUKE [To ESCALUS.]

What you have spoke I pardon. Sit you down.
We'll borrow place of him. [To ANGELO.] Sir, by your leave.

Hast thou or word, or wit, or impudence,
That yet can do thee office?^o If thou hast,
Rely upon it till my tale be heard,
And hold no longer out.

ANGELO

O my dread lord,
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness,
To think I can be undiscernible,
When I perceive your grace, like pow'r divine,
Hath looked upon my passes.^o Then, good prince,
No longer session^o hold upon my shame,
But let my trial be mine own confession.
Immediate sentence then, and sequent death,
Is all the grace I beg.

DUKE

Come hither, Mariana.
Say, wast thou e'er contracted to this woman?

ANGELO

I was, my lord.

DUKE

Go take her hence, and marry her instantly.
Do you the office, friar, which consummate,
Return him here again. Go with him, provost.

Exit [ANGELO, with MARIANA, FRIAR PETER, and PROVOST.]

ESCALUS

My lord, I am more amazed at his dishonor
Than at the strangeness of it.

DUKE

Come hither, Isabel.
Your friar is now your prince. As I was then
Advertising and holy^o to your business,
Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attorneyed at your service.

ISABELLA

O, give me pardon,
That I, your vassal, have employed and pained
Your unknown sovereignty!

DUKE

You are pardoned, Isabel:
And now, dear maid, be you as free to us.

349 giglets wanton women 356 sheep-biting currish 366 office service 372 passes trespasses 373 session trial 385
Advertising and holy attentive and devoted

Your brother's death, I know, sits at your heart,
 And you may marvel why I obscured myself,
 Laboring to save his life, and would not rather
 Make rash remonstrance of my hidden pow'r
 Than let him so be lost. O most kind maid, 395
 It was the swift celerity of his death,
 Which I did think with slower foot came on,
 That brained my purpose. But, peace be with him.
 That life is better life, past fearing death,
 Than that which lives to fear. Make it your comfort, 400
 So happy is your brother.

Enter ANGELO, MARIANA, [FRIAR] PETER, PROVOST.

ISABELLA I do, my lord.

DUKE
 For this new-married man, approaching here,
 Whose salt° imagination yet hath wronged
 Your well-defended honor, you must pardon
 For Mariana's sake. But as he adjudged your brother, 405
 Being criminal, in double violation,
 Of sacred chastity, and of promise-breach,
 Thereon dependent, for your brother's life,
 The very mercy of the law cries out
 Most audible, even from his proper tongue, 410
 "An Angelo for Claudio, death for death!"
 Haste still pays haste, and leisure answers leisure;
 Like doth quit like, and Measure still for Measure.°
 Then, Angelo, thy fault's thus manifested;
 Which, though thou wouldst deny, denies thee vantage. 415
 We do condemn thee to the very block
 Where Claudio stooped to death, and with like haste.
 Away with him.

MARIANA O my most gracious lord,
 I hope you will not mock me with a husband.

DUKE
 It is your husband mocked you with a husband. 420
 Consenting to the safeguard of your honor,
 I thought your marriage fit; else imputation,°
 For that he knew you, might reproach your life,
 And choke your good to come. For his possessions,
 Although by confiscation they are ours, 425
 We do instate and widow you withal,
 To buy you a better husband.

MARIANA O my dear lord,
 I crave no other, nor no better man.

DUKE
 Never crave him; we are definitive.°

MARIANA
 Gentle my liege— [Kneeling.]

DUKE You do but lose your labor. 430 Away with him to death! [To LUCIO.] Now, sir, to
 you.

MARIANA
 O my good lord! Sweet Isabel, take my part,
 Lend me your knees, and all my life to come
 I'll lend you all my life to do you service.

DUKE

Against all sense you do importune her; 435
 Should she kneel down in mercy of this fact,°
 Her brother's ghost his pavèd° bed would break,
 And take her hence in horror.

MARIANA Isabel,
 Sweet Isabel, do yet but kneel by me,
 Hold up your hands, say nothing, I'll speak all. 440
 They say, best men are molded out of faults;
 And, for the most, become much more the better
 For being a little bad; so may my husband.
 O Isabel, will you not lend a knee?

DUKE

He dies for Claudio's death.

ISABELLA [Kneeling.] Most bounteous sir, 445
 Look, if it please you, on this man condemned,
 As if my brother lived. I partly think
 A due sincerity governèd his deeds,
 Till he did look on me. Since it is so,
 Let him not die. My brother had but justice, 450
 In that he did the thing for which he died.
 For Angelo,
 His act did not o'ertake his bad intent,
 And must be buried but as an intent
 That perished by the way. Thoughts are no subjects,° 455
 Intent but merely thoughts.

MARIANA Merely, my lord.

DUKE

Your suit's unprofitable; stand up, I say.
 I have bethought me of another fault.
 Provost, how came it Claudio was beheaded
 At an unusual hour?

PROVOST It was commanded so. 460

DUKE

Had you a special warrant for the deed?

PROVOST

No, my good lord; it was by private message.

DUKE

For which I do discharge you of your office;
 Give up your keys.

PROVOST

Pardon me, noble lord.

I thought it was a fault, but knew it not;° 465

Yet did repent me, after more advice;°
 For testimony whereof, one in the prison,
 That should by private order else have died,
 I have reserved alive.

DUKE

What's he?

PROVOST

His name is Barnardine.

DUKE

I would thou hadst done so by Claudio. 470

Go fetch him hither; let me look upon him.

[Exit PROVOST.]

ESCALUS

I am sorry, one so learnèd and so wise
 As you, Lord Angelo, have still° appeared,
 Should slip so grossly, both in the heat of blood,
 And lack of tempered judgment afterward. 475

ANGELO

I am sorry that such sorrow I procure,
 And so deep sticks it in my penitent heart,

403 salt lecherous 413 Measure still for Measure see Matthew 7:1-2, "Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again" 422 imputation accusation 429 definitive determined

436 fact crime 437 pavèd slab-covered 455 no subjects
 i.e., not subject to law 465 knew it not was not sure 466 advice thought 473 still ever

That I crave death more willingly than mercy;
'Tis my deserving, and I do entreat it.

Enter BARNARDINE and PROVOST, CLAUDIO
[muffled], JULIET.

DUKE

Which is that Barnardine?

PROVOST This, my lord. 480

DUKE

There was a friar told me of this man.
Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world,
And squar'st° thy life according. Thou'rt condemned;
But, for those earthly faults, I quit° them all, 485
And pray thee take this mercy to provide
For better times to come. Friar, advise him;
I leave him to your hand. What muffled fellow's that?

PROVOST

This is another prisoner that I saved,
Who should have died when Claudio lost his head; 490
As like almost to Claudio as himself.

[Unmuffles CLAUDIO.]

DUKE [To ISABELLA.]

If he be like your brother, for his sake
Is he pardoned; and, for your lovely sake,
Give me your hand, and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too; but fitter time for that. 495
By this Lord Angelo perceives he's safe;
Methinks I see a quick'ning° in his eye.
Well, Angelo, your evil quits you well;
Look that you love your wife; her worth, worth yours.
I find an apt remission° in myself, 500
And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon.

[To LUCIO.]

You, sirrah, that knew me for a fool, a coward,
One all of luxury,° an ass, a madman;
Wherein have I so deserved of you,
That you extol me thus? 505

LUCIO 'Faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to 484 squar'st regulate 485 quit pardon 497 quick'ning animation 500 remission wish to forgive 503 luxury lust

the trick.° If you will hang me for it, you may; but I had rather it would please you I might be whipped.

DUKE

Whipped first, sir, and hanged after.
Proclaim it, provost, round about the city, 510
If any woman wronged by this lewd fellow—
As I have heard him swear himself there's one Whom he begot with child—let her appear,
And he shall marry her. The nuptial finished,
Let him be whipped and hanged. 515

LUCIO I beseech your highness, do not marry me to a whore. Your highness said even now, I made you a duke: good my lord, do not recompense me in making me a cuckold.

DUKE

Upon mine honor, thou shalt marry her. 520
Thy slanders I forgive; and therewithal
Remit thy other forfeits. Take him to prison,
And see our pleasure herein executed.

LUCIO Marrying a punk, my lord, is pressing to death, whipping, and hanging. 525

DUKE

Slandering a prince deserves it.

[Exeunt OFFICERS, with LUCIO.]

She, Claudio, that you wronged, look you restore.°
Joy to you, Mariana. Love her, Angelo;
I have confessed her, and I know her virtue.
Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much goodness; 530
There's more behind° that is more grate.°
Thanks, provost, for thy care and secrecy;
We shall employ thee in a worthier place.
Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragozine for Claudio's; 535
Th' offense pardons itself. Dear Isabel,
I have a motion° much imports your good,
Whereto if you'll a willing ear incline,
What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine.
So, bring us to our palace, where we'll show 540
What's yet behind, that's meet° you all should know.

[Exeunt.]

507 trick fashion 527 restore i.e., by marriage 531 behind to come; grate gratifying 537 motion proposal 541 meet fitting

THE TRAGEDY OF KING LEAR

EDITED BY RUSSELL FRASER

Introduction

In structure King Lear differs significantly from the other tragedies of Shakespeare. It is like them in this: it dramatizes the fall of a hero who, assailed by the rebel passion, gives it sovereign sway and masterdom, and is in consequence destroyed. That is the case of Brutus, Othello, and Macbeth. But the resemblance is more ostensible than real. Ostensibly the play is one long denouement. In fact the declining action, which is the dogging of the hero to death, is complemented by a rising action, which is the hero's regeneration. Yeats' metaphor of the gyres is apposite. As the one wanes to nothing, the other, which lives within it, emerges. This emergent, or renascent, action is a condition of the hero's loss of the world. The play fools us. Its primary story is not the descent of the king into hell, but the ascent of the king as he climbs the mountain of purgatory and is fulfilled. The suspense the play develops is a function of the ascending action, which is not material but spiritual. Battles and thrones are nugatory. What does it profit a man if he gain the whole world and suffer the loss of his soul?

The rising and falling curves, the hero tasting his folly, the hero triumphing over it, intersect in the center of the play, in the fourth scene of Act III. It is on the heath that Lear reaches his nadir. His characteristic utterance is the imperative mood; the wonted reversal follows: he is made less than the slave and sumpter to a detested groom. These are the injuries that he himself has procured. So far the parallel is precise to the action of the other tragedies.

But now the crucial difference. It is also on the heath that Lear is made pregnant to pity. That is another and an unexpected kind of reversal. "In, boy; go first." These words, addressed to the Fool, who stands shivering in the rain before a hovel that is the refuge of a madman, constitute the real, as opposed to the apparent, hinge of the play. They do not signal the decay but the metamorphosis of the king: Lear in a red shirt. The great apostrophe to the poor follows at once. From this point, the action turns upward.

The structure of the subplot duplicates and so of course clarifies and confirms that of the central story. As the king is limed, and by his own folly, so are Gloucester and Edgar: "A credulous father, and a brother noble." The one is, initially, an unthinking sensualist. The other, the younger, is initially a kind of clown: "and pat he comes like the catastrophe of the old comedy." But the degradation of Gloucester is not ratified. He also undergoes a miraculous transformation. The critical point or pivot at which this transformation is announced is located, like Lear's, in the mathematical center of the play (III.iii), which is also, with a fit symmetry, the metaphysical center. The placatory man, who would have all well between the contending parties, is emboldened suddenly to choose. "If I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved." In that decision is his death, but also his salvation.

The retrieving of Edgar is more spectacular, if not so abruptly achieved. Edgar is conceded the chance to grow and prosper. He seizes his chance; he makes himself over. "Bear free and patient thoughts." The dupe of the opening scenes is the philosopher who dominates in the close of the play.

This is not to pretend that the close is thereby made happy. "All's cheerless, dark, and deadly." Kent's somber valediction is approved. If the kindness of the one daughter hints at the redemption of Nature, it does not deprecate entirely the general curse which twain have brought her to. The implication is uneasy in Edgar's assertion (as of one who is saying "what we ought to say") that man must obey the weight of the time. His flawed heart, on the evidence of the play, is too weak to support it. His nature cannot carry the affliction or the fear.

What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise? (Othello, II.i.8-9)

Man endures until he expires, dying the pain of death every hour, in a night that pities neither wise man nor fool. What is more unsettling, to be wise is not to be provident. "Man may his fate foresee, but not prevent." And thus Webster's conclusion, in The White Devil: "'Tis better to be fortunate than wise." Man is the natural fool of fortune. That is the title he is born with. It is the stars, and not our own endeavors, that govern. After all we are their tennis balls, struck and bandied which way please them. We do not get our deserts. The optimism is foolishness, to which we are prone.

I would not take this from report: it is,
And my heart breaks at it. (IV.vi.141-42)

The wry conjunctions contrived by the playwright—who knows out of what bitterness or whimsy—attest to its fatuity. Edgar, in a sanguine mood, is sure that the worst returns to laughter. He is confronted at once with the bleeding visage of his father.

The worst is not
So long as we can say, "This is the worst." (IV.i.27-28)

But Shakespeare is not done with him yet. "If ever I return to you again, I'll bring you comfort." That is Edgar's promise to Gloucester before the battle. It is a rash promise, and poor comfort attends on it. A hiatus ensues, filled up with alarums and excursions. Then Edgar reenters and speaks again: "Away, old man. . . . King Lear hath lost."

The optimism of Albany, as it is more eupeptic, is more sternly reprovéd.

All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deservings. (V.iii.304-06)

In that cheerful saying his philosophy is embodied. But the pentameter line wants its conclusion. Albany, rather cruelly, is made to supply it: "O, see, see!" It is the last agony of Lear to which his attention is directed.

Albany, as he presents the hopeful man who insists, a little too suavely, that God's in His heaven, is Shakespeare's particular butt. It is he who cries, of Cordelia: "The gods defend her!" The stage direction follows, enforcing the most monstrous conjunction in the play: "Enter Lear with Cordelia in his arms." The gods do not defend us. Perhaps they are unable to do so. "The gods reward your kindness," says Kent to Gloucester. That is the reading of the Folio, and surely it is the right reading. But the reading of the quarto provokes speculation: "The gods deserve your kindness." It is as if the gods are weak, and require that man collaborate with them in wielding the world (Shakespeare imitating Will James). Lear, as his ardor for the right grows upon him, shakes the superflux to the wretched. His intent is, as he says, to show the heavens more just. It is at least tenable to interpret: his intent is to justify their feckless ways as he can.

Maybe the heavens are worse than insufficient. What is said of the king,

If Fortune brag of two she loved and hated,
One of them we behold. (V.iii.282-83)

suggests not merely a lack of capacity in the ordering of things, but a malevolent purpose, as if the gods had marked us down for their sport. On this reading, Lear's reference to himself and Cordelia as "God's spies" will mean, as Warburton suggested long ago, "spies placed over God Almighty, to watch his motions." Maybe there is need of surveillance, if the human sacrifices on which the gods themselves throw incense are offered up for their delectation; if the brand of fire that parts the predestined victims is handed down, and with an antique malice, from heaven. Tantaene animis coelestibus irae! The chill that invades us as, huddled with the others against the roaring wind and rain, we await the advent of unaccommodated man: "What art thou that dost grumble there i' th' straw?" is occasioned by the wild surmise, so much more fearful because it is involuntary, that the fiend is really walking up and down in the earth, and with the sufferance and even the connivance of heaven. In the pitiless conclusion of King Lear,

Thou'lt come no more,
Never, never, never, never, never. (V.iii.309-10)

the dominion of the Prince of Darkness seems confirmed, and his presence a substantial presence as, with his terrible vans, he enshadows and overwhelms the just and the unjust alike.

That is, I daresay, only an apparition, the disnatured child of night thoughts, and as such may be dispelled. But it needs more than to rub one's eyes, or to mutter a pious ejaculation. To such a degree is this true that even critics so tough-minded as Dr. Johnson have averted their eyes rather than acquiesce in the final horror with which the dramatist confronts them. It is too literal, too realistic for "dramatick exhibition." And yet it is remarkable that this play, in which Shakespeare's unremitting fidelity to fact is almost an occasion for scandal, manifests in its beginning a studied and a deliberate indifference to fact. If subsequent scenes are so realistic as hardly to be endured, the opening scenes have not to do with realism but with ritual and romance. Their abiding characteristic is a niggling formality. They do not wear the aspect of life so much as the aspect of art. Kent, lapsing into rude rhyme as he takes his departure, catches and communicates that aspect. His language is gnomic, admonitory, and simple—not naively but consciously simple: "artificial." He is not, for the moment, a real (an eccentric) man who displaces air like Hamlet or Parolles. He is, and by design, a flat character, highly conventionalized, who figures in a mumming or mystery. He would speak a prophecy before he goes.

The language of the other protagonists is of a piece with his. It does not evoke—not yet—the savage business of dragons of the prime (for all that the dragon is portentous in the comminatory speeches of the king), so much as the ceremonious (the otherworldly!) business of proceedings at law and finance. Legal and fiscal metaphors reverberate. Gloucester, treating of his sons, asserts that the elder is no more dear than the younger, in his account. Lear, enacting his intention to abdicate the throne, renounces interest of territory, or possession. In lieu of Kent's insistence that he reserve his state, he stipulates his troop of knights as reservation, explicitly a legalism, in which the action of retaining a privilege is denoted. He would extend his largest bounty where nature challenges merit, or makes title to it. Regan, whose tenders of affection aim at that title, finds that Goneril had anticipated her very deed of love. The king, in whose lexicon love is a commodity, urges his youngest daughter to discover what portion her protestations can draw. But Cordelia loves only according to her bond. Failing to please, her price is fallen. Goneril pleases, in that she is taken as permitting to her father twice the retinue permitted by Regan. Her devotion may therefore be measured. She is precisely twice her sister's love.

Lear is not easily persuaded of his error, that devotion—in his psychology, a ponderable thing—is to be assessed and ought to be requited in ponderable ways. The inadmissible equation is there still, in the crass appeal to Regan when his agony is upon him:

Thy half o' th' kingdom hast thou not forgot,
Wherein I thee endowed. (II.iv.177-78)

He is appropriately answered, since that respects of fortune are his love: "Good sir, to th' purpose" (II.iv.178).

This patina of the unreal and the ritualistic, overlaying the initial action of the play, is not peculiar to the love test. The characters themselves move in an air of unreality. There is about them a felt sense of disjunction, as between what they are and what they seem to be. Lear is not a king but the show of a king. It is an insubstantial pageant over which he presides, recalling, in its unreality, the specious parade with which an earlier tragedy of Shakespeare's commences, that of Richard II, the mockery king of snows. Kent's acumen is verified when, with a lack of respect that is intended to shock and thereby to quicken perception, he sees and salutes his master, not as a monarch but as an old man.

But if Lear is a simulacrum, so are the wicked daughters. Their essential vacuity, echoing to the touch, announces itself as it issues in their fulsome avowals of love. Kent points to it obliquely in his praise of Cordelia:

Nor are those empty-hearted whose low sounds
Reverb no hollowness. (I.i.153-54)

Gloucester discerns it, magnified to cosmic proportions, in the disordered state of the macrocosm, riven by machinations, by the hollowness that is hypocrisy. All that glisters is taken for gold. The pretension of the hypocrite, who professes herself an enemy to all other joys

Which the most precious square of sense professes
(I.i.73-74)

weighs more than the practice of the candid and guileless retainer, who professes himself to be no less than he seems. The vizard is everything, and hence what is lifelike and vital is eclipsed. The characters are cut in alabaster. The same metaphor describes the fool and the knave and the paragon of virtue, divesting each of human personality. Gloucester, who seems a good old man, is brazed by self-indulgence, become like hard metal. Regan, in whom nature appears tender-hefted, is hardened to insensibility, made of that self metal as her sister. Cordelia is, conversely, a little-seeming substance. But Cordelia is rendered also in nonhuman terms: her love, a precious metal, is more ponderous than her tongue.

Stylization of language and gesture is notable in such a play as The Tempest, and for excellent and obvious reasons. Shakespeare's resort to it in King Lear seems, however, gratuitous, and even antipathetic to the spirit of the play. King Lear is not masquelike nor, certainly, romantic, in the harrowing story it tells. But observe that The Tempest begins, not formally, but realistically, with the faithful depicting of a ship driving on the rocks, a wild and literal scene in which the blasphemy and execration of real and affrighted persons bass the throbbing of the storm. And then the scene shifts abruptly. The auditor or reader, whose belief is purchased at the outset by a terrific glimpse of the real world, is brought safe to shore: is induced to enter, and willingly, the world of enchantment and romance. The fact of the transition, and the implausibility attendant on it, elude him. The tempest is still dinning in his ears.

In King Lear the dramatic problem is exactly reversed. It is to ensure that those whose disenchantment the playwright is already preparing, who are to be compelled to look on the Gorgon features, will not evince incredulity or petrification. The problem is resolved by emphasizing at the outset the elements of unreality and romance. The impelling action of King Lear is made to resemble a fairy tale, which is, I suppose, its ultimate provenance. The auditor or reader is cozened. Before he is aware, he has become a participant in the fierce and excessively painful dispute between damnation and impassioned clay.

But there is more than craft to Shakespeare's design in thus introducing his drama. He makes his characters unreal initially because he means them, at least in part, to be symbolic. The stylized quality of the beginning, as of a charade, its legalistic and ceremonious nature, the exalting in it of appearance as against reality, all work to the fulfilling of that primary intention. And though King Lear is essentially representational drama, though realism very quickly takes precedence over ritual, the element of the symbolic is never dissipated altogether but figures in important ways until the end. Just as in Twelfth Night, whose burden is mistaken identity and the hocus-pocus of identical twins, realism intrudes persistently to temper and give substance to romance—

In nature there's no blemish but the mind;
None can be called deformed but the unkind.
Virtue is beauty, but the beauteous evil
Are empty trunks o'erflourished by the devil
(III.iv.370-73)

—so in King Lear, an antiromantic play in that its burden is a relentless anatomizing of evil, the symbolic declines to yield entirely to the representational. It persists, not to give substance to the real, which is substantial enough—

Out, vile jelly.
Where is thy luster now? (III.vii.85-86)

—but to order the real and make it meaningful, to avoid a confounding of it with the merely sensational. Not to grasp this ordering function is, necessarily, to run counter, to smell a fault where no fault is. Thus the embarrassment of critics so estimable as Goethe (for whom the action of the play was a tissue of the improbable and absurd), and Coleridge (who saw the first scene as dispensable), and A. C. Bradley (who detected and enumerated in the whole, more and grosser inconsistencies than in any other of the great tragedies).

Misconstruction of the role and character of Cordelia typifies this failure to come to terms with the symbolic. Cordelia is, of old, a deeply disquieting figure. Why does she love, and yet remain silent? The question has engendered a little galaxy of answers. It is a question not to be asked. The first principle of good dramatic manners is to concede to the dramatist his given, so long as he is able to exploit it. Here, the given is the heroine's fatal reserve. It is the lever or prise that starts the play on its progress. As such, it may not be queried, any more than the procedure that governs in chess or in the writing of an Italian sonnet.

But "reserve" is after all the wrong word. It suggests the wrong frame of reference. It leads to the rationalization of conduct, on realistic grounds. To make the horrid point, this judgment of a contemporary critic may be cited, that Cordelia loved her father "less than she loved her own way and hated her sisters." That is a fair sample of the appeal to realism. It is at all costs to be avoided. Cordelia does not betray, what Coleridge thought to perceive, "some little faulty admixture of pride and sullenness." No faintest stain of guilt or responsibility attaches to her. She is not imperious, like the king, not headstrong, not intractable. The appeal to heredity is a variation of the appeal to realism, and is, in this context, equally and altogether inapposite. Shakespeare's characters, unlike Eugene O'Neill's, have no antecedents. It is of no use to say that Cordelia is her father's daughter. The reason she will not speak is because she cannot speak; and she cannot because the heart of a fool is in his mouth but the mouth of the wise is in his heart.

This is to say that the muteness of Cordelia (like the fantastic credulity of Gloucester) is not so much a reflection of character as it is the embodiment of an idea. Less real than symbolic, her affinity is more to a creature of fairy tale like Cinderella than to a heroine of the realistic drama like Blanche DuBois. In delineating her behavior the playwright may be, psychologically, so penetrating and exact as really to catch the manners living as they rise: that is partly a gratuity. More important is his intention, not to portray a veritable woman, but to dramatize the proposition that plainness is more than eloquence, that beauty is to be purchased by the weight, that meager lead, which rather threatens than promises aught, buys more than silver and gold. The agitation of those who worry the details of the love test in an attempt to make it credible, which means to make it conformable to the canons of the realistic theater, is founded on their misapprehension of symbolic action.

When Cordelia is depicted as the last and least, it is not her slightness of stature that the dramatist is glancing at—or not that, decisively. He is preparing an ironic and a pregnant echo, to amplify Kent's assertion, a little later: "Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least" (I.i.152). But more than that, he is invoking the promise of Scripture, unspoken in the play, and yet close to the theme, which is the heart (but not the moral!) of the play: the first shall be last and the last shall be first. When Cordelia herself exclaims, as she prepares to engage the British powers,

O dear father,
It is thy business that I go about (IV.iv.23-24)

it is not altogether the realistic business of an imminent battle to which she is adverting. (Certainly that business does not much preoccupy Shakespeare.) And therefore we are not to wonder why the King of France was, so inopportunist, called back to his kingdom, nor whether Shakespeare's allegiance or circumspection dictated the victory of the English. We want to catch in what is said an anterior saying, the sentence of the Evangelist, so much more than a literary reminiscence, and estimate accordingly the symbolic role the speaker plays: "Knew ye not that I must go about my father's business." It may be that Cordelia is that quintessence of womanhood celebrated reverentially (and with an appropriate taciturnity as to particulars) by critics like A. W. Schlegel: "Of Cordelia's heavenly beauty of soul, I do not dare to speak." But it is not after all the literal woman to whom Shakespeare is holding up the mirror. Compare Beatrice in Much Ado About Nothing, or Rosalind in As You Like It.

It is a nice but an indispensable point to adjudicate, just when the dramatist intends that the canons of ordinary realism are to be set aside or, better, transcended. Pretty clearly he wishes to transcend them when, in Act II, Kent is made to sleep in the stocks, and Edgar, unmindful of him, to step forward and tell of his purposed transformation. Bradley is bemused: "One cannot help asking . . . whether Edgar is mad that he should return from his hollow tree . . . to his father's castle in order to soliloquize." But Shakespeare, in juxtaposing the two characters, is not concerned with motivation or, certainly, with locale. No doubt the Bedlam is understood to remain on the heath. But precisely where he is, is not a question that ought to detain us. Neither are we to ask why he fails to perceive that someone else is up there with him on stage, in full view of the audience, and so, presumably, of himself; nor how Kent, for all his travails, can sleep undisturbed through twenty lines of blank verse. In the bringing together of the two good men, each of whom has been driven to the lowest and most dejected point of fortune, a dramatic emblem is achieved, a speaking picture, whose purport is not realistic but symbolic. What Shakespeare is after is this dark collocation, or sequence:

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels. (II.ii.160)

Edgar I nothing am. (II.iii.21)

In the same way the symbolic overtops the conventionally real when, in the final act, Edgar issues his challenge to Edmund. One is not to belabor the improbability of Edmund's failure to recognize his brother, though, in point of fact, the failure is itself symbolic: the villain is indeed cozened and beguiled, and not for reasons of dramatic exigency but by virtue of his own willful behavior. But what is central to the scene is the intimation one hears, in the blast of the trumpet that announces the combat, of that final trump that vindicates the right and summons the perpetrator of wrong to the Judgment. When—another illustration—Edgar, opposing Oswald, assumes the character of a rustic, the clownish dialect he speaks is, realistically, absurd: what is its occasion? Symbolically, however, it is deeply congruous. The power of truth is attested to, however ludicrous its aspect, and the frailty which is falsehood exposed, in this meeting of the ragged fellow, whose West Country accent gives him out to be a bumpkin, but who intrinsically merits and possesses all honors, and the gilded courtier, whose extrinsic show and sophistication betoken all honors and are as paste and cover to none. "The Prince of Darkness is a gentleman"

(III.iv.141). In Edgar's vanquishing of Oswald, which is the triumph of the lowly and the unprepossessing over the world of robes and furred gowns, Lear's great social speeches are enacted and answered.

A similar intention, to effect on stage a symbolic tableau, dictates the grouping of the protagonists at the end of the play. All are there in the resolution, occupying, I think, the same positions they assumed at first, and not least the wicked sisters, whose dead bodies are brought on, no doubt to exemplify this judgment of the heavens, but more, to direct the attention of the audience back and back, over all the dreadful ground that has been traced, to the opening scene. In their beginning is their ending. Perhaps the great wheel of the play, now come full circle, is impelled in its progress by something more than mechanical law.

What this other law may be is the central question Shakespeare poses and endeavors to answer. Lear, as is fitting, is made to enunciate it: "Who is it that can tell me who I am?" But the question is not peculiar to Lear but is implicit in the utterance and conduct of all those who inhabit the darkness with him. Kent as Caius is interrogated by the king:

What art thou?

A man, sir. (I.iv.9-11)

But what is it, to be a man? What is man to profess? To what law are his services bound? Gloucester interrogates Edgar: "Now, good sir, what are you?" and is answered:

A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows;

Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,

Am pregnant to good pity. (IV.vi.222-24)

Cornwall, whose disposition will not be rubbed or stopped, does not manifest that pity. It is ascendant, though tardily, in Gloucester, who, if he dies for it, must relieve his master. Why is that? And why had Kent rather break his own heart than the king's? How does one construe that fitness to which Albany appeals, in declining to let his hands obey his blood; or that pleasure, a more intriguing word, which inclines the Old Man to succor the blinded Gloucester, "Come on't what will"? What point inheres in Albany's characterization of Oswald, as Oswald reports it:

he called me sot,

And told me I had turned the wrong side out (IV.ii.8-9)

and in what manner does it comment on the Captain's decision to collaborate in the killing of the king and Cordelia: "If it be man's work, I'll do't" (V.iii.40).

There ought here to ensue a brief though perceptible silence, in token of the irony and expectation with which these laconic words are charged. The dramatist is bidding us essay a definition of the nature of man's work and, concomitantly, of the nature of man. Edmund, with his customary sang-froid, addresses himself to the task:

men

Are as the time is. (V.iii.31-32)

Kent speaks to it, describing Oswald: "A tailor made thee" (II.ii.56-57). So in whimsical ways does the Fool, begging pardon of Goneril: "Cry you mercy, I took you for a joint stool" (III.vi.51), and also the king, whose confusion is at once real and assumed: "Your name, fair gentlewoman?" (I.iv.237), and, in sterner ways, the First Servant, drawing his sword against Cornwall: "Nay, then, come on, and take the chance of anger" (III.vii.81). To divine the way in which these lines reticulate is to resolve at least a corner of the mystery which is the play.

A NOTE ON THE SOURCE

King Lear was probably written between 1603 and 1606. The evidence is as follows. Under the date of November 26, 1607, the printers Nathaniel Butter and John Busby entered the play in the Stationers' Register, thereby asserting their right to print it. That right was exercised in the following year, with the appearance of the first quarto of 1608. The title page of that quarto (Q1) announces a performance of the play as having taken place before the king on Saint Stephen's Night (December 26) in the Christmas holidays. The entry in the Stationers' Register (1607), since it refers to the Court performance as occurring on "Christmas Last," fixes the date of that performance as December 26, 1606. This date is therefore the terminus ad quem for the composition of the play. The earliest date, that of 1603, is more difficult to establish. Probably it is fixed by the entry in the Stationers' Register, on March 16, 1603, of Samuel Harsnett's Declaration of Egregious Popishe Impostures. Harsnett's work, a treatise on diabolism and an attack on the Jesuits, was written in 1602-03. It is utilized by Shakespeare in his play, chiefly for the names of the demons who lurk about Poor Tom. Assume—and it is reasonable to do so—that Shakespeare did not have access to Harsnett's Declaration before the date of publication, and 1603 becomes the terminus a quo for the writing of King Lear.

Astrological reference furnishes another clue. Gloucester, citing as portentous "These late eclipses in the sun and moon" (I.ii.106-07), is commonly thought to be speaking of a contemporary event. There were in fact eclipses in 1601 and, more pertinently, in September (the moon) and October (the sun) of 1605. It has been suggested, moreover, that a publication of 1606, telling of "The Earth's and Moone's late and horrible obscurations," lies directly behind Gloucester's superstitious mutterings. The pamphlet in question, translated from the High Dutch and edited by the almanac writer Edward Gresham, is entitled Strange fearful & true news which happened at Carlstadt, in the Kingdome of Croatia. Its preface is dated February 11, 1606.

Finally, there is the reemergence, in the period just before the first recorded performance of Shakespeare's play, of the older dramatic version of his story, The True Chronicle History of King Leir. Though this play was probably written about 1590, and was on the boards in 1594, it was published and perhaps acted again in 1605: on May 8, 1605, it is entered in the Stationers' Register. Presumably Shakespeare used the edition appearing in that year, in writing his own play.

The publication, then, of the old chronicle history in 1605, the notable eclipses occurring in the fall of the same year, and the appearance of Gresham's pamphlet early in 1606 seem to point to the winter of 1605-06 as the period in which Shakespeare wrote King Lear.

The ultimate source of the play is an ancient folk tale existing in many versions. It first appears as literature in the twelfth-century Historia Regum Britanniae (ii, 11-15), by Geoffrey of Monmouth. Throughout the Middle Ages and on into the Renaissance, the Lear story retained its popularity, appearing in some fifty different accounts. Shakespeare was familiar with it from the retelling in what is perhaps his most important source book, the second edition (1587) of The Chronicles of England, Scotlande, and Irelande by Raphael Holinshed, first compiled in 1577. From Edmund Spenser, in The Faerie Queene (1590), Shakespeare derived the name of Cordelia in its present form, and also the detail of her death by hanging (II.x. 27-32). Other suggestions were furnished by John Higgins, in A Mirror for Magistrates (1574), that immensely popular collection of stories of the falls of princes; and of course, by The True Chronicle History of King Leir and his three daughters. John Marston, in The Malcontent (1604), dramatizes a feigned suicide (4.3) that seems to parallel Gloucester's, at the Cliffs of Dover (IV.vi). The author of The London Prodigal (1605), a play once attributed to Shakespeare and performed by his company, anticipates the rustic dialogue affected by Edgar in his combat with Oswald (IV.vi). As previously noted, Harsnett and, possibly, Gresham were also of use to Shakespeare. So, in less tangible ways, was his great French contemporary, Montaigne, whose Essais were translated into English by John Florio in 1603. Numerous words and passages in Florio's translation (which Shakespeare may have read in manuscript) are echoed in King Lear. More impressive, however, is the impact on Shakespeare of Montaigne's skeptical thought, as expressed particularly in the Apology for Raymond Sebonde.

None of these sources of Lear includes the analogous story of Gloucester and his two sons. That story Shakespeare adapted from Sir Philip Sidney's account of the unhappy King of Paphlagonia, in his famous romantic narrative Arcadia (ii, 10), written early in the 1580's but not published until 1590. The typing of the subplot to the old and sufficiently horrid tale of King Lear and his daughters has, of course, the effect of engrossing the horror, until the audience is almost persuaded that ferocious cruelty is not so much an aberration as the norm. Certainly, if Lear is childed as Edgar is fathered it is no longer possible to see as merely sensational or idiosyncratic the evil that Shakespeare anatomizes in the play. Earlier writers, handling one or the other story, allow of that view. Shakespeare, in fusing the two stories, is at pains to controvert it. What is more, he darkens consistently, in manipulating his sources, whatever dark suggestion is latent in them. In the old Leir, in Holinshed, in Spenser, in the Mirror for Magistrates, the travails of the king are intermitted at last. Vice is punished and virtue rewarded: Cordelia triumphs over her wicked sisters; her father, restored to the throne, dies at the apogee, and in peace. It is true that, in some sources, Cordelia ends a suicide. But that is an irrelevant epilogue: the chief business of the tale is happily resolved.

It is left to Shakespeare to cancel that happy resolution. He is the first to educe tragedy from what is essentially a melodramatic romance. The madness of Lear is altogether his own contribution. So is the pathetic figure of the Fool. So is the murder of Cordelia, that cruelest stroke of all, which is made to fall just as the good are preparing to taste the wages of their virtue.

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

The earliest extant version of Shakespeare's King Lear is the first quarto of 1608. This premier edition is known as the Pied Bull Quarto, after the sign which hung before the establishment of the printer. The title page reads as follows: "M. William Shak-speare:/HIS/True Chronicle Historie of the life and/death of King Lear and his three/Daughters./With the vnfortunate life of Edgar, sonne/and heire to the Earle of Gloster, and his/sullen and assumed humor of/Tom of Bedlam:/As it was played before the Kings Maiestie at Whitehall vpon/S. Stephans night in Christmas Hollidayes./By his Maiesties seruants playing vsually at the Gloabe/on the Bancke-side./LONDON,/Printed for Nathaniel Butter, and are to be sold at his shop in Pauls/Church-yard at the signe of the Pide Bull neere/S^t. Austin's Gate. 1608." Twelve copies of the first quarto survive. They are, however, in ten different states, because proofreading, and hence correcting, took place as the play was being printed. The instances (167 in all) in which these copies of Q1 differ one from another have been enumerated by contemporary scholarship.¹

In 1619 the second quarto appeared, known as the N. Butter Quarto, and falsely dated in the same year as the first (the title page reads: "Printed for Nathaniel Butter, 1608"). The source of Q2 was apparently a copy of Q1 in which a number of sheets had been corrected.

Four years later King Lear was reprinted once more, this time in the first collection of Shakespeare's works, the First Folio of 1623. The source of the Folio text seems to have been, again, a corrected copy of Q1. The corrections in this copy, however, do not duplicate those in the presumptive source of Q2, but are at once more and less extensive. In some cases the quarto that lies behind the Folio offers corrections not found in the source of Q2. In other cases, corrections incorporated in the course of Q2 are not included in the source of F1. The Folio text, moreover, omits some 300 lines found in the quarto, and thus leads to the supposition that the copy used in preparing the Folio had been collated with the promptbook—a shorter, acting version of the play—in the possession of Shakespeare's company. The Folio text would seem, then, to stand in close relation to Shakespeare's play as it was actually performed. On the other hand, the Folio does include some 100 lines not found in the quarto.

It is now very generally, though not unanimously, agreed that the Folio is superior to the quarto, and ought to serve as the basis of any modern edition. The present text of King Lear is based, therefore, on the First Folio of 1623, except when the Folio is guilty of an obvious misprinting, or when it omits pertinent material found in the quarto, or when its version seems to the editor so inferior to the quarto version as to demand precedence for the latter, or when an emendation, even though perhaps unnecessary (like Edwards' "top th' legitimate"), has been canonized by use and wont.

¹ W. W. Greg, The Variants in the First Quarto of "King Lear," London, 1940 (for 1939).

In the preparation of this text, the spelling of Folio and quarto has been modernized; punctuation and capitalization have been altered, when alteration seemed suitable; character designations have been expanded or clarified (F "Cor." becomes "Cordelia," F "Bastard" and "Steward" become "Edmund" and "Oswald"); contractions not affecting pronunciation have been eliminated (F "banish'd" becomes "banished"); necessary quotation marks (as in the reading of a letter) have been supplied; as have diacritical marks whenever a syllable that is normally unemphasized must be stressed (as in "oppressèd"). Act and scene divisions have been translated from Latin. These changes are not recorded.

All other departures from the Folio appearing in this text are recorded below in boldface type. Unless specifically noted, these departures derive in every case from the first quarto [Q]. If some other source is levied on, such as the second quarto [Q2] or Second Folio [F2] or the conjecture of an editor (for example, [Theobald]), that source is given, within brackets, immediately after the reading. There follows next, in roman type, the Folio reading that has been superseded. If an editor's emendation has been preferred to both Folio and quarto readings, the emendation, with its provenance, is followed by the folio and quarto readings it replaces.

Stage directions are not given lineation. Reference to them in these notes is determined, therefore, by the line of text they follow. If a stage direction occurs at the beginning of a scene, reference is to the line of text it precedes. On occasion, the stage direction in the present text represents a conflation of Folio and quarto. In that case, both Folio and quarto readings are set down in the notes. Stage directions and notations of place, printed within brackets, are, unless otherwise noted, substantially from the Globe edition. The list of dramatis personae, first given by Rowe, is taken also from the Globe edition.

I.i.5 equalities qualities 33 s.d. Sound . . . Attendants Sennet. Enter King Lear, Cornwall, Albany, Gonerill, Regan, Cordelia, and attendants [F] Sound a Sennet, Enter one bearing a Coronet, then Lear, then the Dukes of Albany, and Cornwall, next Gonerill, Regan, Cordelia, with followers [Q] 68 Speak [F omits] 96 loved me. I loved me 97 Return I return 104 To love my father all [F omits] 110 mysteries [F2] miseries [F] mistress [Q] 155 as a pawn as pawn 156 nor nere [i.e., "ne'er"] 163 the thy 170 sentence sentences 174 diseases disasters 188 Gloucester Cor[delia] 206 on in 214 best object object 225 well will 233 Better thou Better thou hadst 248 respects of fortune respect and Fortunes 266 s.d. Lear . . . Attendants [Capell] Exit Lear and Burgundy [Q] 281 shame them derides with shame derides 289 hath not been hath been 296 ingrafted ingrafted 302 let's hit let us sit

I.ii.21 top th' [Edwards] to' th' [F] tooth' [Q] 98–100 Edmund . . . earth [F omits] 134 Fut [F omits] 136 Edgar [F omits] 137 and pat [Steevens] Pat [F] and out [Q] 147–55 as . . . come [F omits] 156 Why, the 169 brother [F omits] 176 Go armed [F omits] 182 s.d. Exit Edgar Exit

I.iii.17–21 Not . . . abused [F omits] 25–26 I would . . . speak [F omits] 27 Go, prepare prepare

I.iv.1 well will 51 daughter Daughters 99 Fool my Boy 114 Lady the Brach [Steevens] the Lady Brach [F] Ladie oth'e brach [Q] 142–57 That . . . snatching [F omits] 155 on't [Q2] [F omits] an't [Q] 156 ladies [Q corrected] [F omits] lodes [Q uncorrected] 164 crown Crownes 179 fools Foole 191 Methinks [F omits] 217 it had it's had 220 Come, sir [F omits] 229 or his his 233–36 I . . . father [F omits] 259

O . . . come [F omits] 293 the cause more of it 306 Yea . . . this [F omits] 345 You are [F2] Your are [F] Y'are [Q]; attasked for [Q corrected: "attaskt"] at task for [F] alapt [Q uncorrected]

I.v.1 s.d. Enter . . . Fool [Q2] Enter Lear, Kent, Gentleman, and Foole 17 Why . . . boy What can'st tell Boy

II.i.20 s.d. Enter Edgar [placed by Theobald] [F prints after line 19] 54 But And 71 I should should I 72 ay [F omits] 79 I . . . him [F omits] 79 s.d. Tucket within [placed by Malone] [F prints after line 78] 80 why wher 88 strange news strangenesse

II.ii.23 clamorous [Q corrected] clamours [F] clamarous [Q uncorrected] 44 s.d. Enter . . . drawn Enter Bastard, Cornwall, Regan, Gloster, Servants [F] Enter Edmund with his rapier drawne, Gloster the Duke and Dutchesse [Q] 77 too t' 80 Reneg Revenge 81 gale gall 110 flick'ring [Pope: "flickering"] flicking [F] flitkering [Q] 125 dread dead 132 respect respects 141 s.d. Stocks brought out [placed by Dyce] [F prints after line 139] [Q omits] 143–47 His . . . with [F omits] 145 contennèd'st [Capell] [F omits] contaned [Q uncorrected] temnest [Q corrected] 153 For . . . legs [F omits] 154 Come . . . away [F assigns to Cornwall]; my good lord my Lord 154 s.d. Exeunt . . . Kent Exit [F] [Q omits] 155 duke's Duke 176 s.d. Sleeps [F omits]

II.iii. Scene III [Steevens] [F, Q omit] 4 unusual unusall 15 mortified bare arms mortified Armes 18 sheepcotes Sheeps-Cotes

II.iv.1 s.d. Scene IV [Steevens] [F, Q omit] 2 messenger Messengers 6 thy ahy 9 man's man 18–19 No . . . have [F omits] 30 panting painting 33 whose those 62 the the the 74 have hause 85 s.d. Enter . . . Gloucester [F prints after line 83] 128 mother's Mother 165 her pride [F omits] 181 s.d. Enter Oswald [placed by Dyce] [F and Q print after line 179] 183 fickle fickly 186 s.d. Enter Goneril [placed by Johnson] [F and Q print after line 184] 280 s.d. Storm and tempest [F prints after line 281] [Q omits] 283 s.d. Exeunt . . . Fool [Q2] Exeunt [F] Exeunt Lear, Leister, Kent, and Foole [Q] 292 s.d. Enter Gloucester [F and Q print after line 291]

III.i.7–15 tears . . . all [F omits] 30–42 But . . . you [F omits]

III.ii.3 drowned drown 71 That And 78 True . . . boy True boy

III.iv.7 skin: so [Rowe] skinso [F] skin, so [Q] 10 thy they 27 s.d. Exit [placed by Johnson] [F prints after line 26] [Q omits] 38 s.d. Enter Fool [Duthie] Enter Edgar, and Foole [F, which prints after line 36] [Q omits] 44 s.d. Enter Edgar Enter Edgar, and Foole [F, which prints after line 36] [Q omits] 46 blows . . . wind blow the windes 47 thy cold bed thy bed 52 ford Sword 57 Bless Blisse 58 Bless blisse 62 What, has Ha's 90 deeply deerely 99 sessa [Malone] Sesey [F] caese [Q] cease [Q2] 112 s.d. Enter . . . torch [F prints after line 108] Enter Gloster [Q, which prints after line 112] 113 foul fiend Flibbertigibbet foule Flibbertigibbet 114 till . . . cock at first Cocke 133 hath had hath

III.v.13 his this 26 dearer deere

III.vi.5 s.d. Exit [placed by Capell] [F prints after line 3] 17–55 The . . . 'scape [F omits] 22 Now [Q2] [F omits] no [Q] 25 bourne [Capell] [F omits] broome [Q] 34 cushions [F omits] cushings [Q] 47 she kicked [Q2] [F omits] kicked [Q] 53 made on [Capell] [F omits] made an [Q] 68 lym [Hanmer] Hym [F] him [Q] 69 tike, or trundle tight, or Troudle 73 Sessa! [Malone] sese [F] [Q omits] 84 s.d. Enter Gloucester [placed by Capell] [F prints after line 80] 96–100 Oppressèd . . . behind [F omits] 101–14 When . . . lurk [F omits]

III.vii.21 s.d. Exit Oswald [Staunton] [F and Q omit] 23 s.d. Exeunt . . . Edmund [Staunton] [F (Exit) and Q (Exit Gon. and Bast.) print after line 22] 28 s.d. Enter . . . three [Q, which prints after "traitor"] Enter Gloucester, and Servants [F, which prints as here after "control"] 60 rash sticke 65 dearn sterne 80 s.d. Draw and fight [F omits] 82 s.d. She . . . him Killes him [F] Shee . . . behind [Q] 101–09 I'll . . . him [F omits] 101 Second Servant [Capell] [F omits] Servant [Q] 102 Third Servant [Capell] [F omits] 2 Servant [Q] 105 Second Servant [Capell] [F omits] 1 Ser. [Q] 106 roguish [Q2] [Q omits] 108 Third Servant [Capell] [F omits] 2 Ser. [Q] 109 s.d. Exeunt severally [F omits] Exit [Q]

IV.i.9 s.d. led by an Old Man [Q, which prints after line 12] and an Old man [F, which places after line 9, as here] 41 Then, prithe, get thee gone Get thee away 59-63 Five . . . master [F omits] 61 Flibbertigibbet [Pope] Stiberdigebit [Q] 62 mopping and mowing [Theobald] Mobing, & Mohing [Q]

IV.ii.1 s.d. Enter Goneril and Edmund Enter Gonerill, Bastard, and Steward 2 s.d. [after "way"] Enter Oswald [placed by Theobald] [Q prints after "master," line 2] [F omits] 26 s.d. Exit Edmund [placed by Rowe] Exit [F, which prints after "death"] [Q omits] 29 s.d. Exit [F omits] Exit Stew. [Q] 32-51 I . . . deep [F omits] 33 its ith [Q] 46 benefited [Q corrected] beniflicted [Q uncorrected] 48 these [Jennens; Heath conj.] the [Q uncorrected] this [Q corrected] 50 Humanity [Q corrected] Humanly [Q uncorrected] 54-60 that . . . so [F omits] 57 noiseless [Q corrected] noystles [Q uncorrected] 58 thy state begins to threat [Jennens] thy slayer begin threats [Q uncorrected] thy state begins thereat [Q corrected] thy slaier begins threats [Q2] 59 Whilst [Q corrected] Whil's [Q uncorrected] 63-70 Thou . . . news [F omits] 66 dislocate [Q3] dislecate [Qq. 1, 2] 69 mew [Q corrected] now [Q uncorrected] 69 s.d. Enter a Messenger [F prints after line 62] Enter a Gentleman [Q, which prints after line 70; and Q2, which prints after line 69, as here] 76 thereat enraged threat-enrag'd 80 justicers [Q corrected] Iustices [F, Q] 88 s.d. Exit [F omits]
IV.iii. Scene III Scena Tertia [for Scene IV] 1 s.d. Enter . . . Gentleman [F omits the entire scene] 13 sir [Theobald] say 18 stroke [Pope] streme 22 seemed [Pope: "seem'd"] seeme 31 believed [Q2] beleeft 33 moistened [Capell] moystened her 57 Exeunt [Pope] Exit
IV.iv. Scene IV [Pope] Scena Tertia [F] [Q omits] 1 s.d. Cordelia, Doctor, and Soldiers Cordelia, Gentlemen, and Souldiours [F] Cordelia, Doctor and others [Q] 3 femiter Fenitar 6 century Centery 18 distress desires 28 right Rite
IV.v. Scene V [Pope] Scena Quarta [F] [Q omits] 39 meet him meet
IV.vi. Scene VI [Pope] Scena Quinta [Q omits] 17 walk walk'd 34 s.d. He kneels [F omits] 41 s.d. He falls [F omits] 71 whelked wealk'd; enridgèd enraged 83 coining crying 97 had white had the white 164 Through Thorough; small great 165 Plate sin [Theobald] Place sinnes [Q omits] 197 Ay . . . dust [F omits] 198 Good sir [Q2] [F and Q omit] 204 s.d. Exit . . . follow Exit [F] Exit King running [Q] 206 one a 242 I'se [Johnson: "Ise"] ice [F] ile [Q] 244 s.d. They fight [F omits] 252 s.d. He dies [F omits] 271 and . . . venture [Q reads "Venter"] [F omits] [This line, from the First Quarto, is almost universally omitted from editions of the play] 273

indistinguished indinguish'd 286 s.d. Drum afar off [F prints after line 284] A drum a farre off [Q, which prints as here]
IV.vii.1 s.d. Enter . . . Gentleman Enter Cordelia, Kent, and Gentleman [F] Enter Cordelia, Kent, and Doctor [Q] 24 doubt not doubt 24-25 Very . . . there [F omits] 32 warring iarring 33-36 To . . . helm [F omits] 79-80 and . . . lost [F omits] 84 s.d. Exeunt . . . Gentleman Exeunt 85-97 Holds . . . fought [F omits]
V.i.11-13 That . . . hers [F omits] 16 Fear me not Feare not 18-19 I . . . me [F omits] 23-28 Where . . . nobly [F omits] 33 I . . . tent [F omits] 36 pray you pray 40 s.d. To those going out [F and Q omit]; To Edgar [F and Q omit]; Exeunt [placed by Cambridge edition] [Q prints after "word," line 39] [F omits] 47 love loues 51 s.d. Exit [placed by Dyce] [F and Q print after line 50]
V.iii.13 hear poor rogues heere (poore Rogues) [reference in F is to Lear and Cordelia] 26 s.d. Exeunt . . . guarded Exit [F] [Q omits] 39-40 I . . . do't [F omits] 40 s.d. Exit Captain [F prints after line 38] [Q omits] 48 and appointed guard [Q corrected, and Q2] [F and Q omit] 55-60 At . . . place [F omits] 56 We [Q corrected, and Q2] mee [Q] 58 sharpness [Q corrected, and Q2] sharpes [Q] 84 attaint arrest 85 sister Sisters 98 he is hes 103 Edmund . . . ho, a herald [F omits] 107 s.d. Enter a Herald [placed by Hanmer] [F prints after line 102] [Q omits] 110 Sound, trumpet [F omits] 110 s.d. A trumpet sounds [F prints after line 109] [Q omits] trumpet [F2] Tumpet 116 Sound [F omits] 116 s.d. First trumpet [F prints after line 115] [Q omits] 118 s.d. Enter . . . him Enter Edgar armed [F] Enter Edgar at the third sound, a trumpet before him [Q] 137 illustrious illustirous 145 some say (some say) 152 s.d. fight Fights [F, which prints after line 153, "him"] [Q omits] 162 Ask . . . know [F gives to Edmund] 162 s.d. Exit [placed here by Q: "Exit. Gonorill"] [F prints after line 161, "for't"] 206-23 This . . . slave [F omits] 215 him [Theobald] me [Q] [F omits] 223 s.d. Enter . . . knife Enter a Gentleman [F] Enter one with a bloudie knife [Q] 234 s.d. Enter Kent [placed by Q2] [F prints after line 231, "Kent"] [Q prints after "allow" in line 235] 240 s.d. The . . . in Gonerill and Regans bodies brought out [F, which prints after line 232] 253 s.d. Exit Messenger [Theobald] [F and Q omit] 259 Howl, howl, howl, howl Howle, howle, howle; you are your are 279 them him 291 You are [Q2] Your are [F] You'r [Q] 296 s.d. Enter a Messenger [F, which prints after "him"] Enter Captaine [Q, placed as here]

THE TRAGEDY OF KING LEAR

[Dramatis Personae]

LEAR King of Britain
KING OF FRANCE
DUKE OF BURGUNDY
DUKE OF CORNWALL husband to Regan
DUKE OF ALBANY husband to Goneril
EARL OF KENT
EARL OF GLOUCESTER
EDGAR son to Gloucester
EDMUND bastard son to Gloucester
CURAN a courtier
OSWALD steward to Goneril
OLD MAN tenant to Gloucester

DOCTOR
LEAR'S FOOL
A CAPTAIN subordinate to Edmund
GENTLEMEN attending on Cordelia
A HERALD
SERVANTS to Cornwall
GONERIL } daughters to Lear
REGAN }
CORDELIA }
KNIGHTS attending on Lear OFFICERS
MESSENGERS SOLDIERS ATTENDANTS

Scene: Britain]

A C T I

Scene I. [King Lear's palace.]

Enter KENT, GLOUCESTER, and EDMUND.

KENT I thought the king had more affected° the Duke of Albany° than Cornwall.

GLOUCESTER It did always seem so to us; but now, in the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most, for equalities are so weighed that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety.°

KENT Is not this your son, my lord?

GLOUCESTER His breeding,° sir, hath been at my charge. I have so often blushed to acknowledge him 10 that now I am brazed° to't.

KENT I cannot conceive° you.

GLOUCESTER Sir, this young fellow's mother could; whereupon she grew round-wombed, and had indeed, sir, a son for her cradle ere she had a husband for her 15 bed. Do you smell a fault?

KENT I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue° of it being so proper.°

GLOUCESTER But I have a son, sir, by order of law, some year elder than this, who yet is no dearer in my 20 account:° though this knave° came something saucily° to the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair, there was good sport at his making, and the whoreson° must be acknowledged. Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund? 25

EDMUND No, my lord.

GLOUCESTER My Lord of Kent. Remember him hereafter as my honorable friend.

11 brazed made brazen, hardened 12 conceive understand (pun follows) 17 issue result (child) 18 proper handsome 21 account estimation; knave fellow (without disapproval); saucily (1) insolently (2) lasciviously 24 whoreson fellow (literally, son of a whore)

The decorative border shown above appeared on the first page of King Lear in the First Folio edition of Shakespeare's plays, 1623.

I.i.i affected loved 2 Albany Albanacte, whose domain extended "from the river Humber to the point of Caithness" (Holinshed) 5-7 equalities . . . moiety shares are so balanced against one another that careful examination by neither can make him wish the other's portion 9 breeding upbringing

EDMUND My services to your lordship.

KENT I must love you, and sue° to know you better. 30

EDMUND Sir, I shall study deserving.

GLOUCESTER He hath been out° nine years, and away he shall again. The king is coming.

Sound a sennet.° Enter one bearing a coronet,° then King LEAR, then the Dukes of CORNWALL and ALBANY, next GONERIL, REGAN, CORDELIA, and ATTENDANTS.

LEAR

Attend the lords of France and Burgundy, Gloucester.

GLOUCESTER

I shall, my lord.

Exit, [with EDMUND]. 35

LEAR

Meantime we shall express our darker purpose.°

Give me the map there. Know that we have divided

In three our kingdom; and 'tis our fast° intent

To shake all cares and business from our age,

Conferring them on younger strengths, while we 40

Unburthened crawl toward death. Our son of Cornwall,

And you our no less loving son of Albany,

We have this hour a constant will to publish°

Our daughters' several° dowers, that future strife

May be prevented° now. The princes, France and

Burgundy,

45

Great rivals in our youngest daughter's love,

Long in our court have made their amorous sojourn,

And here are to be answered. Tell me, my daughters

(Since now we will divest us both of rule,

Interest° of territory, cares of state), 50

Which of you shall we say doth love us most,

That we our largest bounty may extend

Where nature doth with merit challenge.° Goneril,

Our eldest-born, speak first.

GONERIL

Sir, I love you more than word can wield° the matter; 55

Dearer than eyesight, space,° and liberty;

Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare;

No less than life, with grace, health, beauty, honor;

As much as child e'er loved, or father found;

A love that makes breath° poor, and speech unable:° 60

Beyond all manner of so much° I love you.

CORDELIA [Aside.]

What shall Cordelia speak? Love, and be silent.

LEAR

Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,

With shadowy forests, and with champains riched,°

With plenteous rivers, and wide-skirted meads,° 65

We make thee lady. To thine and Albany's issues°

Be this perpetual.° What says our second daughter,

Our dearest Regan, wife of Cornwall? Speak.

REGAN

I am made of that self mettle° as my sister,

And prize me at her worth.° In my true heart 70

I find she names my very deed of love;°

Only she comes too short, that° I profess

Myself an enemy to all other joys

Which the most precious square of sense professes,°

And find I am alone felicitate° 75

In your dear highness' love.

CORDELIA [Aside.]

Then poor Cordelia!

And yet not so, since I am sure my love's

More ponderous° than my tongue.

LEAR

To thee and thine hereditary ever

Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom, 80

No less in space, validity,° and pleasure

Than that conferred on Goneril. Now, our joy,

Although our last and least;° to whose young love

The vines of France and milk° of Burgundy

Strive to be interest;° what can you say to draw 85

A third more opulent than your sisters? Speak.

CORDELIA

Nothing, my lord.

LEAR Nothing?

CORDELIA Nothing.

LEAR

Nothing will come of nothing. Speak again. 90

CORDELIA

Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave

My heart into my mouth. I love your majesty

According to my bond,° no more nor less.

LEAR

How, how, Cordelia? Mend your speech a little,

Lest you may mar your fortunes.

CORDELIA

Good my lord,

95

You have begot me, bred me, loved me. I

Return those duties back as are right fit,°

Obey you, love you, and most honor you.

Why have my sisters husbands, if they say

They love you all? Haply,° when I shall wed, 100

That lord whose hand must take my plight° shall carry

Half my love with him, half my care and duty.

Sure I shall never marry like my sisters,

To love my father all.

LEAR

But goes thy heart with this?

CORDELIA

Ay, my good lord.

105

LEAR

So young, and so untender?

CORDELIA

So young, my lord, and true.

LEAR

Let it be so, thy truth then be thy dower!

For, by the sacred radiance of the sun,

69 self mettle same material or temperament 70 prize . . .

worth value me the same (imperative) 71 my . . . love

what my love really is (a legalism) 72 that in that 74 Which

. . . professes which the choicest estimate of sense avows 75

felicitate made happy 78 ponderous weighty 81 validity

value 83 least youngest, smallest 84 milk i.e., pastures

85 interest closely connected, as interested parties 93 bond filial obligation 97 Return . . . fit i.e., am correspondingly dutiful 100 Haply perhaps 101 plight troth plight

30 sue entreat 32 out away, abroad 33 s.d. sennet set of notes played on a trumpet, signaling the entrance or departure of a procession; coronet small crown, intended for Cordelia 36 darker purpose hidden intention 38 fast fixed 43 constant . . . publish fixed intention to proclaim 44 several separate 45 prevented forestalled 50 Interest legal right 53 nature . . . challenge natural affection contends with desert for (or lays claim to) bounty 55 wield handle 56 space scope 60 breath language; unable impotent 61 Beyond . . . much beyond all these comparisons 64 champains riched enriched plains 65 wide-skirted meads extensive grasslands 66 issues descendants 67 perpetual in perpetuity

The mysteries of Hecate° and the night,
 By all the operation of the orbs°
 From whom we do exist and cease to be,
 Here I disclaim all my paternal care,
 Propinquity and property of blood,°
 And as a stranger to my heart and me
 Hold thee from this for ever. The barbarous Scythian,°
 Or he that makes his generation messes°
 To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom
 Be as well neighbored, pitied, and relieved,
 As thou my sometime° daughter.

KENT Good my liege—

LEAR

Peace, Kent!

Come not between the dragon° and his wrath.

I loved her most, and thought to set my rest°

On her kind nursery.° Hence and avoid my sight!

So be my grave my peace, as here I give

Her father's heart from her! Call France. Who stirs?

Call Burgundy. Cornwall and Albany,

With my two daughters' dowers digest° the third;

Let pride, which she calls plainness, marry her.°

I do invest you jointly with my power,

Preeminence, and all the large effects

That troop with majesty.° Ourselves,° by monthly course,

With reservation° of an hundred knights,

By you to be sustained, shall our abode

Make with you by due turn. Only we shall retain

The name, and all th' addition° to a king. The sway,

Revenue, execution of the rest,

Belovèd sons, be yours; which to confirm,

This coronet° part between you.

KENT Royal Lear,

Whom I have ever honored as my king,

Loved as my father, as my master followed,

As my great patron thought on in my prayers—

LEAR

The bow is bent and drawn; make from the shaft.°

KENT

Let it fall° rather, though the fork° invade

The region of my heart. Be Kent unmannerly

When Lear is mad. What wouldst thou do, old man?

Thinkst thou that duty shall have dread to speak

When power to flattery bows? To plainness honor's bound

When majesty falls to folly. Reserve thy state,°

And in thy best consideration° check

110 This hideous rashness. Answer my life my judgment,°
 Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least,
 Nor are those empty-hearted whose low sounds
 Reverb° no hollowness.°

LEAR Kent, on thy life, no more!

115 KENT

My life I never held but as a pawn°

To wage° against thine enemies; nor fear to lose it,

Thy safety being motive.°

LEAR

Out of my sight!

KENT

See better, Lear, and let me still° remain

The true blank° of thine eye.

LEAR

Now by Apollo—

KENT

Now by Apollo, king,

Thou swear'st thy gods in vain.

125 LEAR

O vassal! Miscreant!°

[Laying his hand on his sword.]

ALBANY, CORNWALL Dear sir, forbear!

KENT

130 Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow

Upon the foul disease. Revoke thy gift,

Or, whilst I can vent clamor° from my throat,

I'll tell thee thou dost evil.

LEAR

Hear me, recreant!°

On thine allegiance,° hear me!

That thou hast sought to make us break our vows,

Which we durst never yet, and with strained° pride

To come betwixt our sentence° and our power,

Which nor our nature nor our place can bear,

Our potency made good,° take thy reward.

Five days we do allot thee for provision°

To shield thee from diseases° of the world,

And on the sixth to turn thy hated back

Upon our kingdom. If, on the tenth day following,

Thy banished trunk° be found in our dominions,

The moment is thy death. Away! By Jupiter,

This shall not be revoked.

KENT

140 Fare thee well, king. Sith° thus thou wilt appear,

Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here.

[To CORDELIA.]

The gods to their dear shelter take thee, maid,

That justly think'st, and hast most rightly said.

[To REGAN and GONERIL.]

And your large speeches may your deeds approve,°

That good effects° may spring from words of love.

110 mysteries of Hecate secret rites of Hecate (goddess of the infernal world, and of witchcraft) 111 operation . . .
orbs astrological influence 114 Propinquity . . . blood relationship and common blood 116 Scythian type of the savage 117 makes . . . messes eats his own offspring 120 sometime former 122 dragon (1) heraldic device of Britain (2) emblem of ferocity 123 set my rest (1) stake my all (a term from the card game of primero) (2) find my rest 124 nursery care, nursing 128 digest absorb 129
Let . . . her Let her pride be her dowry and gain her a husband 131–32 effects . . . majesty accompaniments that go with kingship 132 Ourselves the royal “we” 133 reserva- tion the action of reserving a privilege (a legalism) 136 addition titles and honors 139 coronet the crown that was to have been Cordelia's 143 make . . . shaft avoid the arrow 144 fall strike; fork forked head of the arrow 149 Reserve thy state retain your kingly authority 150 best consideration most careful reflection

151 Answer . . . judgment I will stake my life on my opinion 154 Reverb reverberate; hollowness (1) emptiness
 (2) insincerity 155 pawn stake in a wager 156 wage (1) wager (2) carry on war 157 motive moving cause 158 still always 159 blank the white spot in the center of the target (at which Lear should aim) 161 vassal! Miscreant! base wretch! Misbeliever 165 vent clamor utter a cry 166 recreant traitor 167 On thine allegiance to forswear, which is to commit high treason 169 strained forced (and so excessive) 170 sentence judgment, decree 172 Our . . .
good my royal authority being now asserted 173 for pro- vision for making preparation 174 diseases troubles 177 trunk body 180 Sith since 184 approve prove true 185 effects results

Thus Kent, O princes, bids you all adieu;
He'll shape his old course° in a country new. Exit.

Flourish. Enter GLOUCESTER, with FRANCE and BURGUNDY; ATTENDANTS.

GLOUCESTER

Here's France and Burgundy, my noble lord.

LEAR

My Lord of Burgundy,
We first address toward you, who with this king 190
Hath rivaled for our daughter. What in the least
Will you require in present° dower with her,
Or cease your quest of love?

BURGUNDY

Most royal majesty,

I crave no more than hath your highness offered,
Nor will you tender° less.

LEAR

Right noble Burgundy, 195

When she was dear° to us, we did hold her so;
But now her price is fallen. Sir, there she stands.
If aught within that little seeming substance,°
Or all of it, with our displeasure pieced,°
And nothing more, may fitly like° your grace, 200
She's there, and she is yours.

BURGUNDY

I know no answer.

LEAR

Will you, with those infirmities she owes,° Unfriended, new adopted to our hate,
Dow' red with our curse, and strangered° with our
oath,
Take her, or leave her?

BURGUNDY

Pardon me, royal sir. 205

Election makes not up° on such conditions.

LEAR

Then leave her, sir; for, by the pow'r that made me,
I tell you all her wealth. [To FRANCE.] For you, great
king,
I would not from your love make such a stray
To° match you where I hate; therefore beseech° you 210
T' avert your liking a more worthier way°
Than on a wretch whom nature is ashamed
Almost t' acknowledge hers.

FRANCE

This is most strange,

That she whom even but now was your best object,° 215
The argument° of your praise, balm of your age,
The best, the dearest, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous to dismantle°
So many folds of favor. Sure her offense
Must be of such unnatural degree
That monsters it,° or your fore-vouched° affection 220
Fall into taint;° which to believe of her

Must be a faith that reason without miracle
Should never plant in me.°

CORDELIA

I yet beseech your majesty,

If for° I want that glib and oily art 225
To speak and purpose not,° since what I well intend I'll do't before I speak, that you make known
It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action or dishonored step,
That hath deprived me of your grace and favor;
But even for want of that for which I am richer, 230
A still-soliciting° eye, and such a tongue
That I am glad I have not, though not to have it Hath lost° me in your liking.

LEAR

Better thou

Hadst not been born than not t' have pleased me better.

FRANCE

Is it but this? A tardiness in nature° 235
Which often leaves the history unspoke°
That it intends to do. My Lord of Burgundy,
What say you° to the lady? Love's not love
When it is mingled with regards° that stands
Aloof from th' entire point.° Will you have her? 240
She is herself a dowry.

BURGUNDY

Royal king,

Give but that portion which yourself proposed,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Duchess of Burgundy.

LEAR

Nothing. I have sworn. I am firm. 245

BURGUNDY

I am sorry then you have so lost a father
That you must lose a husband.

CORDELIA

Peace be with Burgundy.

Since that respects of fortune° are his love,
I shall not be his wife.

FRANCE

Fairest Cordelia, that art most rich being poor, 250
Most choice forsaken, and most loved despised,
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon.
Be it lawful I take up what's cast away.
Gods, gods! 'Tis strange that from their cold'st neglect
My love should kindle to inflamed respect.° 255
Thy dow' rless daughter, king, thrown to my chance,°
Is queen of us, of ours, and our fair France.
Not all the dukes of wat' rish° Burgundy
Can buy this unprized precious° maid of me.
Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind. 260
Thou lovest here,° a better where° to find.

LEAR

Thou hast her, France; let her be thine, for we Have no such daughter, nor shall ever see

187 shape . . . course pursue his customary way 187 s.d. Flourish trumpet fanfare 192 present immediate 195 tender offer 196 dear (1) beloved (2) valued at a high price 198 little seeming substance person who is (1) inconsiderable (2) outspoken 199 pieced added to it 200 fitly like please by its fitness 202 owes possesses 204 strangered made a stranger 206 Election . . . up no one can choose 209-10 make . . . To stray so far as to 210 beseech I beseech 211 avert . . . way turn your affections from her and bestow them on a better person 214 your best object the one you loved most 215 argument subject 217 dis- mantle strip off 220 That monsters it as makes it monstrous, unnatural; fore-vouched previously sworn 221 Fall into taint must be taken as having been unjustified all along; i.e., Cordelia was unworthy of your love from the first

222-23 reason . . . me my reason would have to be supported by a miracle to make me believe 224 for because 225 pur- pose not not mean to do what I promise 231 still-soliciting always begging 233 lost ruined 235 tardiness in nature natural reticence 236 leaves . . . unspoke does not announce the action 238 What say you i.e., will you have 239 regards considerations (the dowry) 239-40 stands . . . point have nothing to do with the essential question (love) 248 respects of fortune mercenary considerations 255 in- flamed respect more ardent affection 256 chance lot 258 wat' rish (1) with many rivers (2) weak, diluted 259 unprized precious unappreciated by others, and yet precious 261 here in this place; where other place

That face of hers again. Therefore be gone,
Without our grace, our love, our benison.^o 265
Come, noble Burgundy.

Flourish. Exeunt [LEAR, BURGUNDY, CORNWALL, ALBANY, GLOUCESTER, and ATTENDANTS].

FRANCE

Bid farewell to your sisters.

CORDELIA

The jewels of our father,^o with washed^o eyes
Cordelia leaves you. I know you what you are,
And, like a sister,^o am most loath to call 270
Your faults as they are named.^o Love well our father.

To your professèd^o bosoms I commit him.

But yet, alas, stood I within his grace,

I would prefer^o him to a better place.

So farewell to you both. 275

REGAN

Prescribe not us our duty.

GONERIL

Let your study

Be to content your lord, who hath received you

At Fortune's alms.^o You have obedience scanted,^o

And well are worth the want that you have wanted.^o

CORDELIA

Time shall unfold what plighted^o cunning hides, 280

Who covers faults, at last shame them derides.^o

Well may you prosper.

FRANCE

Come, my fair Cordelia.

Exit FRANCE and CORDELIA.

GONERIL Sister, it is not little I have to say of what most nearly appertains to us both. I think our father will hence tonight. 285

REGAN That's most certain, and with you; next month with us.

GONERIL You see how full of changes his age is. The observation we have made of it hath not been little.
He always loved our sister most, and with what poor 290 judgment he hath now cast her off appears too grossly.^o

REGAN 'Tis the infirmity of his age; yet he hath ever but slenderly known himself.

GONERIL The best and soundest of his time^o hath been but rash; then must we look from his age to 295 receive not alone the imperfections of long-ingrafted^o condition,^o but therewithal^o the unruly waywardness that infirm and choleric years bring with them.

REGAN Such unconstant starts^o are we like to have from him as this of Kent's banishment. 300

GONERIL There is further compliment^o of leave-taking between France and him. Pray you, let's hit^o together; if our father carry authority with such disposition as he bears,^o this last surrender^o of his will but offend^o us. 305

REGAN We shall further think of it.

GONERIL We must do something, and i' th' heat.^o

Exeunt.

Scene II. [The Earl of Gloucester's castle.]

Enter EDMUND [with a letter].

EDMUND

Thou, Nature,^o art my goddess; to thy law

My services are bound. Wherefore should I

Stand in the plague of custom,^o and permit

The curiosity^o of nations to deprive me,

For that^o I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines^o 5

Lag of^o a brother? Why bastard? Wherefore base?

When my dimensions are as well compact,^o

My mind as generous,^o and my shape as true,

As honest^o madam's issue? Why brand they us 10

With base? With baseness? Bastardy? Base? Base?

Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take

More composition^o and fierce^o quality

Than doth, within a dull, stale, tired bed,

Go to th' creating a whole tribe of fops^o

Got^o 'tween asleep and wake? Well then, 15

Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land.

Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund

As to th' legitimate. Fine word, "legitimate."

Well, my legitimate, if this letter speed,^o

And my invention^o thrive, Edmund the base 20

Shall top th' legitimate. I grow, I prosper.

Now, gods, stand up for bastards.

Enter GLOUCESTER.

GLOUCESTER

Kent banished thus? and France in choler parted?

And the king gone tonight? prescribed^o his pow'r?

Confined to exhibition?^o All this done 25

Upon the gad?^o Edmund, how now? What news?

EDMUND

So please your lordship, none.

GLOUCESTER

Why so earnestly seek you to put up^o that letter?

EDMUND

I know no news, my lord.

GLOUCESTER

What paper were you reading?

30

EDMUND Nothing, my lord.

265 benison blessing 268 The jewels . . . father you creatures prized by our father; washed (1) weeping (2) clear-sighted 270 like a sister because I am a sister, i.e., loyal, affectionate 271 as . . . named by their right and ugly names 272 professèd pretending to love 274 prefer recommend 278
At Fortune's alms as a charitable bequest from Fortune (and so, by extension, as one beggared or cast down by Fortune); scanted stinted 279 worth . . . wanted deserve to be denied, even as you have denied 280 plighted pleaded, enfolded 281 Who . . . derides Those who hide their evil are finally exposed and shamed ("He that hideth his sins, shall not prosper") 291 grossly obviously 294 of his time period of his life up to now 296 long-ingrafted implanted for a long time 297 condition disposition; therewithal with them 299 unconstant starts impulsive whims 301 compliment formal courtesy 302 hit agree

303-04 carry . . . bears continues, and in such frame of mind, to wield the sovereign power 304 last surrender recent abdication 305 offend vex 307 i' th' heat while the iron is hot

I.ii.1 Nature Edmund's conception of Nature accords with our description of a bastard as a natural child 3 Stand . . .
custom respect hateful convention 4 curiosity nice distinctions 5 For that because; moonshines months 6
Lag of short of being (in age) 7 compact framed 8 generous gallant 9 honest chaste 12 composition completeness; fierce energetic 14 fops fools 15 Got begot 19 speed prosper 20 invention plan 24 prescribed limited 25 exhibition an allowance or pension 26 Upon the gad on the spur of the moment (as if pricked by a gad or goad)
28 put up put away, conceal

GLOUCESTER No? What needed then that terrible dispatch° of it into your pocket? The quality of nothing hath not such need to hide itself. Let's see. Come, if it be nothing, I shall not need spectacles. 35

EDMUND I beseech you, sir, pardon me. It is a letter from my brother that I have not all o'er-read; and for so much as I have perused, I find it not fit for your o'erlooking.°

GLOUCESTER Give me the letter, sir. 40

EDMUND I shall offend, either to detain or give it. The contents, as in part I understand them, are to blame.°

GLOUCESTER Let's see, let's see.

EDMUND I hope, for my brother's justification, he 45 wrote this but as an essay or taste° of my virtue.

GLOUCESTER (Reads.) "This policy and reverence° of age makes the world bitter to the best of our times;° keeps our fortunes from us till our oldness cannot relish° them. I begin to find an idle and fond° bondage 50 in the oppression of aged tyranny, who sways, not as it hath power, but as it is suffered.° Come to me, that of this I may speak more. If our father would sleep till I waked him, you should enjoy half his revenue° for ever, and live the beloved of your brother, 55

Edgar."

Hum! Conspiracy? "Sleep till I waked him, you should enjoy half his revenue." My son Edgar! Had he a hand to write this? A heart and brain to breed it in? When came you to this? Who brought it? 60

EDMUND It was not brought me, my lord; there's the cunning of it. I found it thrown in at the casement of my closet.°

GLOUCESTER You know the character° to be your brother's? 65

EDMUND If the matter were good, my lord, I durst swear it were his; but in respect of that,° I would fain° think it were not.

GLOUCESTER It is his.

EDMUND It is his hand, my lord; but I hope his 70 heart is not in the contents.

GLOUCESTER Has he never before sounded° you in this business?

EDMUND Never, my lord. But I have heard him oft maintain it to be fit that, sons at perfect° age, and 75 fathers declined, the father should be as ward to the son, and the son manage his revenue.

GLOUCESTER O villain, villain! His very opinion in the letter. Abhorred villain, unnatural, detested,° brutish villain; worse than brutish! Go, sirrah,° seek him. 80 I'll apprehend him. Abominable villain! Where is he?

EDMUND I do not well know, my lord. If it shall please you to suspend your indignation against my brother till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you should run a certain course;° where, 85 if you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap° in your own honor and shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. I dare pawn down° my life for him that he hath writ this to feel° my affection to your honor, and to no 90 other pretense of danger.°

GLOUCESTER Think you so?

EDMUND If your honor judge it meet,° I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an auricular assurance° have your satisfaction, and that 95 without any further delay than this very evening.

GLOUCESTER He cannot be such a monster.

EDMUND Nor is not, sure.

GLOUCESTER To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him. Heaven and earth! Edmund, seek 100 him out; wind me into him,° I pray you; frame° the business after your own wisdom. I would unstate myself to be in a due resolution.°

EDMUND I will seek him, sir, presently;° convey° the business as I shall find means, and acquaint you withal.° 105

GLOUCESTER These late° eclipses in the sun and moon portend no good to us. Though the wisdom of nature° can reason° it thus and thus, yet nature finds itself scourged by the sequent effects.° Love cools, 110 friendship falls off,° brothers divide. In cities, mutinies;° in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and the bond cracked 'twixt son and father. This villain of mine comes under the prediction,° there's son against father; the king falls from bias of nature,° there's father against child. We have seen the best of our time.° Machina- 115 tions, hollowness,° treachery, and all ruinous disorders follow us disquietly° to our graves. Find out this villain, Edmund; it shall lose thee nothing.° Do it carefully. And the noble and true-hearted Kent banished; his offense, honesty. 'Tis strange. Exit. 120

EDMUND This is the excellent foppery° of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behavior,° we make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and stars; as if we were villains on° necessity; fools by heavenly compulsion; knaves, 125 thieves, and treachers by spherical predominance;° drunkards, liars, and adulterers by an enforced obedience of planetary influence;° and all that we are evil in,

85 run . . . course proceed safely, know where you are going 87 gap breach 89 pawn down stake 90 feel test 91 pretense of danger dangerous purpose 93 meet fit 95 auricular assurance proof heard with your own ears 101 wind . . . him insinuate yourself into his confidence for me; frame manage 102-03 unstate . . . resolution forfeit my earldom to know the truth 104 presently at once; convey manage 105 withal with it 106 late recent 107-08 wisdom of nature scientific learning 108 reason explain 108-09 yet . . . effects nonetheless our world is punished with subsequent disasters 110 falls off revolts; mutinies riots 112-13 This . . . prediction my son's villainous behavior is included in these portents, and bears them out 114 bias of nature natural inclination (the metaphor is from the game of bowls) 115 best . . . time our best days 116 hollowness insincerity 117 disquietly unquietly 118 it . . . nothing you will not lose by it 121 foppery folly 122-23 often . . . behavior often caused by our own excesses 124 on of 126 treachers . . . predominance traitors because of the ascendancy of a particular star at our birth 127-28 by . . . influence because we had to submit to the influence of our star

32-33 terrible dispatch hasty putting away 39 o'erlooking inspection 42-43 to blame blameworthy 46 essay or taste test 47 policy and reverence policy of reverencing (hendiadys) 48 best . . . times best years of our lives (i.e., our youth) 50 relish enjoy; idle and fond foolish 51-52 who . . . suffered which rules, not from its own strength, but from our allowance 54 revenue income 62-63 casement
. . . closet window of my room 64 character handwriting 67 in . . . that in view of what it is; fain prefer to 72 sounded sounded you out 75 perfect mature 79 detested detestable 80 sirrah sir (familiar form of address) by a divine thrusting on.° An admirable evasion of whoremaster° man, to lay his goatish° disposition on 130 the charge of a star. My father compounded° with my mother under the Dragon's Tail,° and my nativity° was under Ursa Major,° so that it follows I am rough and lecherous. Fut!° I should have been that° I am, had the maidenliest star in the firmament twinkled 135 on my bastardizing. Edgar—

Enter EDGAR.

and pat he comes, like the catastrophe° of the old comedy. My cue is villainous melancholy, with a sigh like Tom o' Bedlam.°—O, these eclipses do portend these divisions. Fa, sol, la, mi.° 140

EDGAR How now, brother Edmund; what serious contemplation are you in?

EDMUND I am thinking, brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these eclipses.

EDGAR Do you busy yourself with that? 145

EDMUND I promise you, the effects he writes of succeed° unhappily: as of unnaturalness° between the child and the parent, death, dearth, dissolutions of ancient amities,° divisions in state, menaces and maledictions against king and nobles, needless diffi- 150 dences,° banishment of friends, dissipation of cohorts,° nuptial breaches, and I know not what.

EDGAR How long have you been a sectary astronomical?°

EDMUND Come, come, when saw you my father last? 155

EDGAR Why, the night gone by.

EDMUND Spake you with him?

EDGAR Ay, two hours together.

EDMUND Parted you in good terms? Found you no displeasure in him by word nor countenance?° 160

EDGAR None at all.

EDMUND Bethink yourself wherein you may have offended him; and at my entreaty forbear his presence° until some little time hath qualified° the heat of his displeasure, which at this instant so rageth in him that 165 with the mischief of your person it would scarcely allay.°

EDGAR Some villain hath done me wrong.

EDMUND That's my fear, brother. I pray you have a continent forbearance° till the speed of his rage goes 170 slower; and, as I say, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will fitly° bring you to hear my lord

129 divine thrusting on supernatural compulsion 130 whoremaster lecherous; goatish lascivious 131 com- pounded (1) made terms (2) formed (a child) 132 Dragon's
Tail the constellation Draco; nativity birthday 133 Ursa
Major the Great Bear 134 Fut 'S foot (an impatient oath); that what 137 catastrophe conclusion 138–39 My . . .
Bedlam I must be doleful, like a lunatic beggar out of Bethlehem (Bedlam) Hospital, the London madhouse 140 Fa, sol, la, mi Edmund's humming of the musical notes is perhaps prompted by his use of the word division, which describes a musical variation 146–47 succeed follow 147 unnatural- ness unkindness 149 amities friendships 150–51 diffidences distrusts 151 dissipation of cohorts falling away of supporters 153–54 sectary astronomical believer in astrology 160 countenance expression 163 forbear his presence keep away from him 164 qualified lessened 166–67 with
. . . allay even an injury to you would not appease his anger 169–70 have . . . forbearance be restrained and keep yourself withdrawn 172 fitly at a fit time

175 speak. Pray ye, go; there's my key. If you do stir abroad, go armed.

EDGAR Armed, brother?

EDMUND Brother, I advise you to the best. Go armed.
I am no honest man if there be any good meaning toward you. I have told you what I have seen and heard; but faintly, nothing like the image and horror° of it. Pray you, away. 180

EDGAR Shall I hear from you anon?°

EDMUND I do serve you in this business.

Exit EDGAR.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harms
That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty 185
My practices° ride easy. I see the business.
Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit.
All with me's meet° that I can fashion fit.° Exit.

Scene III. [The Duke of Albany's palace.]

Enter GONERIL, and [OSWALD, her] steward.

GONERIL Did my father strike my gentleman for chiding of his Fool?°

OSWALD Ay, madam.

GONERIL

By day and night he wrongs me. Every hour
He flashes into one gross crime° or other 5
That sets us all at odds. I'll not endure it.
His knights grow riotous,° and himself upbraids us
On every trifle. When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him. Say I am sick.
If you come slack of former services,° 10
You shall do well; the fault of it I'll answer.°

[Horns within.]

OSWALD He's coming, madam; I hear him.

GONERIL

Put on what weary negligence you please,
You and your fellows. I'd have it come to question.° 15
If he distaste° it, let him to my sister,
Whose mind and mine I know in that are one,
Not to be overruled. Idle° old man,
That still would manage those authorities
That he hath given away. Now, by my life,
Old fools are babes again, and must be used 20
With checks as flatteries, when they are seen abused.°
Remember what I have said.

OSWALD Well, madam.

GONERIL

And let his knights have colder looks among you.
What grows of it, no matter; advise your fellows so.
I would breed from hence occasions, and I shall, 25
That I may speak.° I'll write straight° to my sister
To hold my course. Go, prepare for dinner. Exeunt.

179 image and horror true horrible picture 181 anon in a little while 186 practices plots 188 meet proper; fashion fit shape to my purpose

I.iii.2 Fool court jester 5 crime offense 7 riotous dissolute 10 come . . . services are less serviceable to him than formerly 11 answer answer for 14 come to question be discussed openly 15 distaste dislike 17 Idle foolish 21
With . . . abused with restraints as well as soothing words when they are misguided 25–26 breed . . . speak find in this opportunities for speaking out 26 straight at once

Scene IV. [A hall in the same.]Enter KENT [disguised].

KENT

If but as well I other accents borrow
 That can my speech defuse,^o my good intent
 May carry through itself to that full issue^o
 For which I razed my likeness.^o Now, banished Kent,
 If thou canst serve where thou dost stand condemned, 5
 So may it come,^o thy master whom thou lov'st
 Shall find thee full of labors.

Horns within.^o Enter LEAR, [KNIGHTS,] and ATTENDANTS.

LEAR Let me not stay^o a jot for dinner; go, get it ready. [Exit an ATTENDANT.] How now, what art thou? 10

KENT A man, sir.

LEAR What dost thou profess?^o What wouldst thou with us?

KENT I do profess^o to be no less than I seem, to serve him truly that will put me in trust, to love him that is 15 honest, to converse with him that is wise and says little, to fear judgment,^o to fight when I cannot choose, and to eat no fish.^o

LEAR What art thou?

KENT A very honest-hearted fellow and as poor as 20 the king.

LEAR If thou be'st as poor for a subject as he's for a king, thou art poor enough. What wouldst thou?

KENT Service.

LEAR Who wouldst thou serve? 25

KENT You.

LEAR Dost thou know me, fellow?

KENT No, sir, but you have that in your countenance^o which I would fain^o call master. 30

LEAR What's that? 30

KENT Authority.

LEAR What services canst thou do?

KENT I can keep honest counsel,^o ride, run, mar a curious tale in telling it,^o and deliver a plain message bluntly. That which ordinary men are fit for, I am 35 qualified in, and the best of me is diligence.

LEAR How old art thou?

KENT Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing, nor so old to dote on her for anything. I have years on my back forty-eight. 40

LEAR Follow me; thou shalt serve me. If I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet. Dinner, ho, dinner! Where's my knave?^o my Fool? Go you and call my Fool hither.

[Exit an ATTENDANT.]Enter OSWALD.

I.iv.2 defuse disguise 3 full issue perfect result 4 razed my likeness shaved off, disguised my natural appearance 6 So . . . come so may it fall out 7 s.d. within offstage 8 stay wait 12 What . . . profess What do you do? 14 profess claim 17 judgment by a heavenly or earthly judge 18 eat no fish i.e., (1) I am no Catholic, but a loyal Protestant (2) I am no weakling (3) I use no prostitutes 28 countenance bearing 29 fain like to 33 honest counsel honorable secrets 33-34 mar . . . it i.e., I cannot speak like an affected courtier ("curious" = elaborate, as against plain) 43 knave boy

You, you, sirrah, where's my daughter? 45

OSWALD So please you— Exit.

LEAR What says the fellow there? Call the clotpoll^o back. [Exit a KNIGHT.] Where's my Fool? Ho, I think the world's asleep.

[Reenter KNIGHT.]

How now? Where's that mongrel? 50

KNIGHT He says, my lord, your daughter is not well.

LEAR Why came not the slave back to me when I called him?

KNIGHT Sir, he answered me in the roundest^o manner, he would not. 55

LEAR He would not?

KNIGHT My lord, I know not what the matter is; but to my judgment your highness is not entertained^o with that ceremonious affection as you were wont. There's a great abatement of kindness appears as well 60 in the general dependants^o as in the duke himself also and your daughter.

LEAR Ha? Say'st thou so?

KNIGHT I beseech you pardon me, my lord, if I be mistaken; for my duty cannot be silent when I think 65 your highness wronged.

LEAR Thou but rememb'rest^o me of mine own conception.^o I have perceived a most faint neglect^o of late, which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity^o than as a very pretense^o and purpose of un- 70 kindness. I will look further into't. But where's my Fool? I have not seen him this two days.

KNIGHT Since my young lady's going into France, sir, the Fool hath much pined away.

LEAR No more of that; I have noted it well. Go you 75 and tell my daughter I would speak with her. Go you, call hither my Fool. [Exit an ATTENDANT.]

Enter OSWALD.

O, you, sir, you! Come you hither, sir. Who am I, sir?

OSWALD My lady's father. 80

LEAR "My lady's father"? My lord's knave, you whoreson dog, you slave, you cur!

OSWALD I am none of these, my lord; I beseech your pardon.

LEAR Do you bandy^o looks with me, you rascal? 85

[Striking him.]OSWALD I'll not be stricken,^o my lord.KENT Nor tripped neither, you base football^o player.[Tripping up his heels.]

LEAR I thank thee, fellow. Thou serv'st me, and I'll love thee.

KENT Come, sir, arise, away. I'll teach you differ- 90 ences.^o Away, away. If you will measure your lubber's^o

47 clotpoll clodpoll, blockhead 54 roundest rudest 58 entertained treated 61 dependants servants 67 rememb'-rest remindest 67-68 conception idea 68 faint neglect i.e., "weary negligence" (I.iii.13) 69-70 mine . . . curiosity suspicious concern for my own dignity 70 very pretense actual intention 85 bandy exchange insolently (metaphor from tennis) 86 stricken struck 87 football a low game played by idle boys, to the scandal of sensible men 90-91 differences of rank 91 lubber's lout's length again, tarry; but away. Go to!° Have you wisdom?° So.° [Pushes OSWALD out.]

LEAR Now, my friendly knave, I thank thee. There's earnest° of thy service. 95

[Giving KENT money.]

Enter FOOL.

FOOL Let me hire him too. Here's my coxcomb.°

[Offering KENT his cap.]

LEAR How now, my pretty knave? How dost thou?

FOOL Sirrah, you were best° take my coxcomb.

KENT Why, Fool?

FOOL Why? For taking one's part that's out of favor. 100

Nay, an° thou canst not smile as the wind sits,° thou'lt catch cold shortly. There, take my coxcomb. Why, this fellow has banished° two on's daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will. If thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb.—How now, 105

nuncle?° Would I had two coxcombs and two daughters.

LEAR Why, my boy?

FOOL If I gave them all my living,° I'd keep my coxcombs myself. There's mine; beg another of thy 110

daughters.

LEAR Take heed, sirrah—the whip.

FOOL Truth's a dog must to kennel; he must be whipped out, when Lady the Brach° may stand by th'

fire and stink. 115

LEAR A pestilent gall° to me.

FOOL Sirrah, I'll teach thee a speech.

LEAR Do.

FOOL Mark it, nuncle.

Have more than thou showest, 120

Speak less than thou knowest,

Lend less than thou owest,°

Ride more than thou goest,°

Learn more than thou trowest,°

Set less than thou throwest;° 125

Leave thy drink and thy whore,

And keep in-a-door,

And thou shalt have more

Than two tens to a score.°

KENT This is nothing, Fool. 130

FOOL Then 'tis like the breath of an unfee'd° lawyer

—you gave me nothing for't. Can you make no use of nothing, nuncle?

LEAR Why, no, boy. Nothing can be made out of

nothing. 135

FOOL [To KENT.] Prithee tell him, so much the rent

of his land comes to; he will not believe a fool.

92 Go to expression of derisive incredulity 92-93 Have you wisdom i.e., Do you know what's good for you? 93 So good 95 earnest money for services rendered 96 coxcomb professional fool's cap, shaped like a coxcomb 98 you were best you had better 101 an if; smile . . . sits ingratiate yourself with those in power 103 banished alienated (by making them independent) 106 nuncle contraction of "mine uncle" 109 living property 114 Brach bitch 116 gall sore 122 owest ownest 123 goest walkest 124 trowest knowest 125 Set . . . throwest bet less than you play for (get odds from your opponent) 128-29 have . . . score i.e., come away with more than you had (two tens, or twenty shillings, make a score, or one pound) 131 unfee'd unpaid for

LEAR A bitter° fool.

FOOL Dost thou know the difference, my boy, between a bitter fool and a sweet one? 140

LEAR No, lad; teach me.

FOOL That lord that counseled thee

To give away thy land,

Come place him here by me,

Do thou for him stand. 145

The sweet and bitter fool

Will presently appear;

The one in motley° here,

The other found out° there.°

LEAR Dost thou call me fool, boy? 150

FOOL All thy other titles thou hast given away; that thou wast born with.

KENT This is not altogether fool, my lord.

FOOL No, faith; lords and great men will not let me.°

If I had a monopoly° out, they would have part on't. 155

And ladies too, they will not let me have all the fool to myself; they'll be snatching. Nuncle, give me an egg, and I'll give thee two crowns.

LEAR What two crowns shall they be?

FOOL Why, after I have cut the egg i' th' middle and 160 eat up the meat, the two crowns of the egg. When thou clovest thy crown i' th' middle and gav'st away both parts, thou bor'st thine ass on thy back o'er the dirt.°

Thou hadst little wit in thy bald crown when thou gav'st thy golden one away. If I speak like myself° 165 in this, let him be whipped° that first finds it so.

[Singing.]

Fools had ne'er less grace in a year,

For wise men are grown foppish,

And know not how their wits to wear,

Their manners are so apish.° 170

LEAR When were you wont to be so full of songs, sirrah?

FOOL I have used° it, nuncle, e'er since thou mad'st thy daughters thy mothers; for when thou gav'st them the rod, and put'st down thine own breeches, 175

[Singing.]

Then they for sudden joy did weep,

And I for sorrow sung,

That such a king should play bo-peep°

And go the fools among.

Prithee, nuncle, keep a schoolmaster that can teach 180

thy Fool to lie. I would fain learn to lie.

LEAR And° you lie, sirrah, we'll have you whipped.

FOOL I marvel what kin thou and thy daughters are.

They'll have me whipped for speaking true; thou'lt have me whipped for lying; and sometimes I am 185

138 bitter satirical 148 motley the drab costume of the professional jester 149 found out revealed; there the Fool points at Lear, as a fool in the grain 154 let me i.e., let me have all the folly to myself 155 monopoly James I gave great scandal by granting to his "snatching" courtiers-royal patents to deal exclusively in some commodity 163 bor'st . . . dirt like the foolish and unnatural countryman in Aesop's fable 165 like myself like a fool 166 let . . . whipped i.e., let the man be whipped for a fool who thinks my true saying to be foolish 167-70 Fools . . . apish i.e., fools were never in less favor than now, and the reason is that wise men, turning foolish, and not knowing how to use their intelligence, imitate the professional fools and so make them unnecessary 173 used practiced 178 play bo-peep (1) act like a child (2) blind himself 182 And if whipped for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind o' thing than a fool, and yet I would not be thee, nuncle: thou hast pared thy wit o' both sides and left nothing i' th' middle. Here comes one o' the parings.

Enter GONERIL.

LEAR How now, daughter? What makes that frontlet^o 190 on? Methinks you are too much of late i' th' frown.

FOOL Thou wast a pretty fellow when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning. Now thou art an O without a figure.^o I am better than thou art now: I am a fool, thou art nothing. [To GONERIL.] Yes, forsooth, 195
I will hold my tongue. So your face bids me, though you say nothing. Mum, mum,

He that keeps nor crust nor crum,^o
Weary of all, shall want^o some.

[Pointing to LEAR.]

That's a shealed peascod.^o 200

GONERIL

Not only, sir, this your all-licensed^o Fool,
But other^o of your insolent retinue
Do hourly carp and quarrel, breaking forth
In rank^o and not-to-be-endured riots. Sir,
I had thought by making this well known unto you 205
To have found a safe^o redress, but now grow fearful,
By what yourself too late^o have spoke and done,
That you protect this course, and put it on
By your allowance;^o which if you should, the fault
Would not 'scape censure, nor the redresses sleep,^o 210
Which, in the tender of^o a wholesome weal,^o
Might in their working do you that offense,
Which else were shame, that then necessity
Will call discreet proceeding.^o

FOOL For you know, nuncle, 215
The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo^o so long
That it had it head bit off by it^o young.

So out went the candle, and we were left darkling.^o

LEAR Are you our daughter?

GONERIL

Come, sir, 220
I would you would make use of your good wisdom
Whereof I know you are fraught^o and put away
These dispositions^o which of late transport you
From what you rightly are.

FOOL May not an ass know when the cart draws the 225 horse? Whoop, Jug,^o I love thee!

LEAR

Does any here know me? This is not Lear.
Does Lear walk thus? Speak thus? Where are his eyes?

Either his notion^o weakens, or his discernings^o
Are lethargied^o—Ha! Waking? 'Tis not so. 230

Who is it that can tell me who I am?

FOOL Lear's shadow.

LEAR I would learn that; for, by the marks of sovereignty,^o knowledge, and reason, I should be false^o persuaded I had daughters. 235

FOOL Which^o they will make an obedient father.

LEAR Your name, fair gentlewoman?

GONERIL

This admiration,^o sir, is much o' th' savor^o
Of other your^o new pranks. I do beseech you
To understand my purposes aright. 240
As you are old and reverend, should be wise.
Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disordered, so deboshed,^o and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shows^o like a riotous inn. Epicurism^o and lust 245
Makes it more like a tavern or a brothel
Than a graced^o palace. The shame itself doth speak
For instant remedy. Be then desired^o
By her, that else will take the thing she begs,
A little to disquantity your train,^o 250
And the remainders^o that shall still depend,^o
To be such men as may besort^o your age,
Which know themselves, and you.

LEAR Darkness and devils!
Saddle my horses; call my train together.
Degenerate^o bastard, I'll not trouble thee: 255
Yet have I left a daughter.

GONERIL

You strike my people, and your disordered rabble
Make servants of their betters.

Enter ALBANY.

LEAR

Woe, that too late repents. O, sir, are you come?
Is it your will? Speak, sir. Prepare my horses. 260
Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous when thou show'st thee in a child
Than the sea-monster.

ALBANY Pray, sir, be patient.

LEAR

Detested kite,^o thou liest.
My train are men of choice and rarest parts,^o 265
That all particulars of duty know,
And, in the most exact regard,^o support
The worships^o of their name. O most small fault,
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!
Which, like an engine,^o wrenched my frame of nature 270
From the fixed place;^o drew from my heart all love,

190 frontlet frown (literally, ornamental band) 194 figure digit, to give value to the cipher (Lear is a nought) 198 crum soft bread inside the loaf 199 want lack 200 shealed peascod empty pea pod 201 all-licensed privileged to take any liberties 202 other others 204 rank gross 206 safe sure 207 too late lately 208–09 put . . . allowance promote it by your approval 209 allowance approval 210 redresses sleep correction fail to follow 211 tender of desire for; weal state 212–14 Might . . . proceeding as I apply it, the correction might humiliate you; but the need to take action cancels what would otherwise be unfilial conduct in me 216 cuckoo which lays its eggs in the nests of other birds 217 it its 218 darkling in the dark 222 fraught endowed 223 dispositions moods 226 Jug Joan (a quotation from a popular song?)

