"Q". In Biblical criticism, the symbol used for the theoretical document used by MATTHEW or LUKE or both. In the SYNOPSIS GOSPELS there is much material common to both Matthew and Luke, which is designated "Q" (usually held to be the German Quelle, source). These passages mainly consist of the sayings of Jesus.

Q. The nom de plume of Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch (1863-1944), Cornish author and novelist, King Edward VII Professor of English Literature at Cambridge (1912-1944) and editor of the Oxford Book of English Verse.

Old Q. William Douglas, third Earl of March, and fourth Duke of Queensberry (1724-1810), notorious for his dissolute life and escapades, especially on the TURF.

Q in a corner. An old children's game, perhaps the same as our PUSS IN THE CORNER; also something not seen at first but subsequently brought to notice.

In a merry Q (cue). Humour, temper; thus Shakespeare says, "My cue is villainous melancholy" (King Lear, I, ii).

To mind one's P's and Q's. See under P.

Q.C. QUEEN'S COUNSEL.

Q.E.D. (Lat. quod erat demonstrandum, which was to be demonstrated). Appended to the theorems of EUCLID: Thus have we proved the proposition stated above, as we were required to do. In schoolboy parlance, "Quite easily done."

Q.E.F. (Lat. quod erat faciendum, which was to be done). Appended to the problems of EUCLID: Thus have we done the operation required.

Q.P. (Lat. quantum placet). Used in prescriptions to signify that the quantity may be as little or as much as you like. Thus, in a cup of tea we might say, "Milk and sugar q.p."

Q.S. (Lat. quantum sufficit, as much as suffices). Thus, after giving the drugs in minute proportions, the apothecary may be told to "mix in liquorice, q.s."

Q ships. In World War I, the name given to war vessels camouflaged as tramps. These "mystery ships" were used to lure U-BOATS to their destruction.

Q.T. On the strict Q.T. With complete secrecy. "Q.T." stands for "quiet".

Q.V. (Lat. quantum vis). As much as you like, or quantum valeat, as much as is proper.

q.v. (Lat. quod vide). Which see.

Quack, or Quack doctor; once called quacksalver. A puffer of salves; an itinerant drug vendor at FAIRS who "quacked" forth the praises of his wares to the credulous rustics. Hence, a CHARLATAN.

Quad. The university contraction for quadrangle, the college ground; hence, to be in quad is to be confined to your college grounds. The word quad is also applied to one of a family of quadruplets. Cp. QUOD.

Quadragesima

Quadragesima (kwod rá jes' i má). The forty days of LENT.

Quadragesima Sunday. The first Sunday in LENT; so called because it is, in round numbers, the fortieth day before EASTER.

Quadragesimals. The farthings or payments formerly made in commutation of a personal visit to the Mother-church on Mid-Lent Sunday. Cp. PENTECOSTALS. See also MOTHERING SUNDAY.

Quadrant, The. The name given to the curved southern end of Regent Street, London. It was designed by John Nash (1752-1835) in 1813, and when built had two DORIC colonnades, the cast-iron columns being made at the Carron iron-works; these were removed in 1848. The original buildings were, regrettably, demolished in 1928.

Quadriga (kwod' ri ga). A contraction of quadrijugæ (Lat. quattuor, quadri-, four; jugum, yoke). In classical antiquity, a two-wheeled chariot drawn by four horses harnessed abreast. A spirited representation of Peace riding in a quadriga, executed in bronze by Adrian Jones in 1912, surmounts the arch at the west end of Constitution Hill, London.

Quadrilateral. The four fortresses of Peschiera and Mantua on the Mincio, with Verona and Legnago on the Adige. Now demolished.

Lambeth Quadrilateral. The four points suggested by the LAMBETH Conference of 1888 as a basis for Christian reunion; the BIBLE, the Apostolic and NICENE CREEDS, two Sacraments (BAPTISM and the EUCHARIST), and the historic Episcopate.

Quadrille (kwod ril'). An old card game played by four persons with an ordinary pack of cards from which the eights, nines, and tens have been withdrawn. It displaced OMBRE in popular favour about 1730, and was followed by WHIST.

The square dance of the same name was of French origin, and was introduced into England in 1813 by the Duke of Devonshire.

Quadrillion. In English numeration, a million raised to the fourth power, represented by 1 followed by 24 ciphers; in American numeration it stands for the fifth power of a thousand, i.e. 1 followed by 15 ciphers.

Quadrivium (kwod riv' i um). The collective name given by the SCHOOLMEN of the MIDDLE AGES to the four "liberal arts" (Lat. quadri-, four; via, way), viz., arithmetic, music, geography, and astronomy. The quadrivium was the "four-fold way" to knowledge; the TRIVIUM, the "threefold way" to eloquence; both together comprehended the Seven Liberal Arts enumerated in the following hexameter:

Lingua, Tropus, Ratio, Numerus, Tonus, Angulus, Ástra.

And in the two following:

Gram. loquitur, Dia. vera docet, Rhet. verba colorat;
Mus. cadit, Ar. numerat, Geo. ponderat, Ast. colit astra.

Quadroon. See NEGRO.

Quai d'Orsay (ká dôr sã). The quay in Paris running along the left bank of the Seine where are situated the departments of Foreign Affairs and other government offices. The name is applied to the French Foreign Office and sometimes to the French Government as a whole.

Quail. This bird was formerly supposed to be of an inordinately amorous disposition, hence its name was given to a courtesan.

Here's Agamemnon, an honest fellow enough, and one that loves quails.
SHAKESPEARE: Troilus and Cressida, V, i.

Quaker. A familiar name for a member of the Society of Friends, a religious body having no definite creed and no regular ministry, founded by George Fox, who began his preaching in 1647. His followers created an organized society during the 1650s and 1660s. It appears from the founder's Journal that they first obtained the appellation (1650) from the following circumstance: "Justice Bennet, of Derby," says Fox, "was the first to call us Quakers, because I bid them Tremble at the Word of the Lord."

Quakers (that, like to lanterns, bear
Their light within them) will not swear.
BUTLER: Hudibras, II, ii.

The name was previously applied to a sect whose adherents shook and trembled with religious emotion and was generally applied in the COMMONWEALTH period as an abusive term to religious and political radicals. Cp. SHAKERS.

Quaker City. PHILADELPHIA, which was founded by a group of Quakers led by William Penn and intended as a haven of religious freedom.

Quaker guns. Dummy guns made of wood, for drill purposes or camouflage; an allusion to the Quaker reprobation of the use of force.

The Quaker Poet. Bernard Barton (1784-1849); also John Greenleaf Whittier (1807-1892).

Quarantine (Ital. quaranta, forty). The period, originally forty days, that a ship suspected of being infected with some contagious disorder is obliged to lie off port. Now applied to any period of segregation to prevent infection.

In law, the term is also applied to the forty days during which a widow who is entitled to a dower may remain in the chief mansion-house of her deceased husband. See also YELLOW ADMIRAL under ADMIRAL.

To perform quarantine is to ride off port during the time of quarantine.

Quare impedit (Lat., wherefore he hinders). A form of legal action by which the right of presentation to a Church of England BENEFICE is tried (from the opening words of the writ). When a BISHOP has failed to institute a clergyman presented by the patron of the benefice, the latter may apply for a writ of Quare impedit against the bishop. It is now only used where the bishop's objections relate to matters of doctrine and ritual.

Quarrel (O.Fr. quarel; from Late Lat. quadrellus, diminutive of quadrus, a square). A square or lozenge; a small square or diamond-shaped tile, or a similarly shaped pane of glass as used in lattice-windows; also a short stout square-headed bolt or arrow used in the cross-bow.

Quarrel. To engage in contention, to fall out (from O.Fr. querelle; Lat. querela, complaint).

To quarrel over the bishop's cope—over something which cannot possibly do you any good; over goat's wool. A newly appointed Bishop of Bruges entered the town in his cope, which he gave to the people; and the people, to part it among themselves, tore it to shreds, each taking a piece.

To quarrel with your bread and butter. To act against your best interest; to follow a course which may prejudice your livelihood.

Quarry. An object of chase, especially the bird flown at in hawking or the animal pursued by hounds or hunters. Originally the word (O.Fr. cuirée, skinned) denoted the entrails, etc., of the deer which were placed on the animal's skin after it had been flayed, and given to the hounds as a reward.

Your castle is surprized; your wife and babes
Savagely slaughtered; to relate the manner,
Were, on the quarry of these murder'd deer,
To add the death of you.

SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, IV, iii.

The place where slate, stone, etc., is dug out is called a quarry, from O.Fr. quarrière, Lat. quadrare, to square, because the stones were squared on the spot.

Quart d'heure (kar dêr). Un mauvais quart d'heure (Fr., a bad quarter of an hour). Used of a short, disagreeable experience.

Quarter. The fourth part of anything, as of a year or an hour or any material thing.

In weights a quarter is 28 lb., i.e. a fourth of a hundredweight; as a measure of capacity for grain it is 8 bushels, which used to be one-fourth, but is now one-fifth of a load. In the meat trade a quarter of a beast is a fourth part, which includes one of the legs. A quarter in the U.S. coinage is the fourth part of a DOLLAR; in a heraldic shield or on a flag the quarters are the divisions made by central lines drawn at right angles across them. When looking at a shield the 1st and 4th quarters are in the dexter chief and sinister base (left-hand top and right-hand bottom), and the 2nd and 3rd in the sinister chief and dexter base.

Quarter, as exemption from death upon surrender.

To cry quarter. To beg for mercy.

To grant quarter. To spare the life of an enemy in your power. The old suggestion that it derives from an agreement anciently made between the Dutch and Spaniards, that the ransom of a soldier should be the quarter of his pay, is not borne out. It is possibly due to the fact that the victor would have to provide his captive with temporary QUARTERS.

Quarter, Quarters. Residence or place of abode.

A district of a town or city is often known as a quarter, as the poor quarter, the native quarter. The Quartier Latin (Latin quarter) of Paris is the university area. Although popularly renowned as the cosmopolitan and BOHEMIAN quarter, it derives its name from its ancient fame as a centre of learning when Latin was the common language for the students, who came from all over Europe.

Winter quarters is the place where an army lodges during the winter months; married quarters, barrack accommodation, etc., for married service men and their families. Come to my quarters is a common phrase among bachelors as an invitation to their rooms. In the Southern U.S.A. the word was used of that part of a plantation allotted to the Negroes.

There shall no leavened bread be seen with thee, neither shall there be leaven seen . . . in all thy quarters.—Exod. xiii, 7.

Quarter Days. (1) New Style—LADY DAY (25 March), MIDSUMMER DAY (24 June), MICHAELMAS DAY (29 September), and CHRISTMAS DAY (25 December).

(2) Old Style—Lady Day (6 April), Old Midsummer Day (6 July), Old Michaelmas Day (11 October), and Old Christmas Day (6 January).

Quarter Days in Scotland. CANDLEMAS DAY (2 February), WHITSUNDAY (15 May), LAMMAS DAY (1 August), and MARTINMAS DAY (11 November).

Quartered. See DRAWN AND QUARTERED.

Quarterdeck. The upper deck of a ship from the mainmast to the stern. In the Royal Navy it is the promenade reserved for officers. Hence, to behave as though he were on his own quarterdeck, to behave as though he owned the place. The naval custom of saluting the quarterdeck is of uncertain origin, one suggestion being that anciently a shrine was kept in this part of the ship.

Quarterly, The. A common name for the Quarterly Review, a literary and political review first published by John Murray at Edinburgh in 1809. It was a TORY rival of the EDINBURGH REVIEW. Its first editor was William Gifford (1756–1826) and Scott and Southey were principal contributors. J. G. Lockhart took over the editorship from S. T. Coleridge in 1825 and continued in office until 1853. It ceased publication in 1967.

Quartermaster. In the army, the officer whose duty it is to attend to the QUARTERS of the soldiers. He superintends the issue of all stores and equipment.

In the navy, the rating or petty officer who supervises the steering of the ship at sea and in harbour keeps watch under the Officer of the WATCH.

Quarto. A size of paper made by folding the sheet twice, giving four leaves, or eight pages; hence, a book composed of sheets folded thus. Cp. FOLIO; OCTAVO. The word is often written "4to".

Quashee (kwosh' ē). A generic name of a Negro; from West African Kwasi, a name often given to a child born on a Sunday. Cp. QUASSIA.

Quasi (kwā' zi) (Lat., as if). Prefixed to indicate "seeming", "as it were", that what it qualifies is not the real thing but has some of its qualities. Thus a quasi- historical account is seemingly historical but not accurately so, or only partially so.

Quasi contract. In law, an obligation similar to that created by a formal contract.

Quasi tenant. The tenant of a house sublet.

Quasimodo Sunday (kwā zi mō dō'). The first Sunday after EASTER or LOW SUNDAY; so called from the Introit at MASS on this day which begins Quasi modo geniti infantes, as newborn babes (I Pet. ii, 2). Cp. CANTATE SUNDAY.

Quasimodo was also the name of the hunchback in Victor Hugo's Notre-Dame de Paris (1831).

Quassia (kwash' yā or kwosh' yā). An American plant, or rather genus of plants, named after Quassi, a Negro, who, in 1730, was the first to make its medicinal properties known. See QUASHEE.

Linnaeus applied this name to a tree of Surinam in honour of a negro, Quassi . . . who employed its bark as a remedy for fever; and enjoyed such a reputation among the natives as to be almost worshipped by some.

LINDLEY AND MOORE:
Treatise of Botany, Pt. II, p. 947.

Quattrocento (Ital. from Lat. quattuor, four; centum, hundred). An abbreviation of mille quattrocento, 1400. The name given to the Fifteenth Century as a period of art and literature, especially with reference to Italy. Cp. CINQUECENTO.

Que sais-je? (kě sāzh) (Fr., What do I know?). The motto adopted by Michel-Eyquem de Montaigne (1533–1592), the great French essayist, as expressing the sceptical and inquiring nature of his writings.

Queen. A female sovereign or a king's wife (also nowadays, slightly, of a male homosexual); from O.E. cwen, a woman (which also gives quean, a word still sometimes used slightly or contemptuously of a woman), from an ancient Aryan root that gave the Old Teutonic stem kwen-, Zend gena, Gr. gynē, Slavonic zēna, etc., all meaning "woman". Cp. KING; see MAB.

Queen Anne. Daughter of James II and his first wife Anne Hyde. Her reign extended from 1702 to 1714 and her name is still used in certain phrases.

Queen Anne is dead. A slighting retort made to a teller of stale news.

Queen Anne style. The style in buildings, decoration, furniture, silverware, etc., characteristic of her period.

Queen Anne's Bounty. A fund established by Queen Anne in 1704 for the relief of the poorer clergy of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND. It was created out of the firstfruits (see ANNATES) and tenths, formerly given to the papacy, which were annexed to the Crown by Henry VIII. In 1809 there were 860 incumbents still getting less than £50 per annum and the fund was increased by Parliamentary grants (1809–1820). Queen Anne's Bounty was merged with the Ecclesiastical Commission in 1948 to form the Church Commissioners.

Queen Anne's footstool. A name given to St. John's Church, Smith Square, Westminster. This fine specimen of baroque architecture by Thomas Archer, completed in 1728, was burnt out in 1742 and again in 1941. A tower and lantern turret were added to the original design, and Lord Chesterfield likened the church to an elephant thrown on its back with its four feet erect. It was reopened in 1969 as a concert and lecture hall.

Queen Anne's fan. Your thumb to your nose and your fingers spread; "cocking a snook."

Queen City. Cincinnati.

Queen Consort. The wife of a reigning king.

Queen Dick. Richard Cromwell (1626–1712), son of Protector Oliver Cromwell, was sometimes so called; also known as "King Dick".

In the reign of Queen Dick. See QUEEN DICK; also DICK.

Queen Dowager. The widow of a deceased king.

Queen Mab. See MAB.

Queen Mother. The consort of a king is so called after her husband's death and when her son or daughter has succeeded to the throne.

Queen of the Blues. A nickname given by Dr. Johnson to Mrs. Elizabeth Montagu (1720–1800), a noted BLUE-STOCKING.

Queen of Glory. An epithet of the Virgin MARY.

Queen of Hearts. Elizabeth (1596–1662), daughter of James I, wife of the Elector of the PALATINATE, and ill-starred Queen of BOHEMIA; so called in the Low Countries from her amiable character and engaging manners, even in her misfortune.

Queen of Heaven. The Virgin MARY. In ancient times, among the Phœnicians, ASTARTE; Greeks, HERA; Romans, JUNO; HECATE; the Egyptian ISIS, etc., were also so called; but as a general title it applied to DIANA, or the MOON, also called Queen of the Night, and Queen of the Tides. In Jer. vii, 18, we read: "The children gather wood . . . and the women knead dough, to make cakes to the queen of heaven", i.e. the Moon.

Queen of Love. APHRODITE or VENUS.

Poor queen of love in thine own law forlorn
To love a cheek that smiles at thee in scorn
SHAKESPEARE: Venus and Adonis, 251.

Queen of the May. See under MAY.

Queen Regnant. A queen who holds the crown in her own right, in contradistinction to a QUEEN CONSORT.

Queen of Scots' Pillar. A column in the Peak Cavern, Derbyshire, as clear as alabaster. So called because on one occasion when going to throw herself on the mercy of Elizabeth I, the Queen of Scots proceeded thus far and then turned back.

Queen's, or King's Bench. The Supreme Court of COMMON LAW; so called because at one time the SOVEREIGN presided in this court, and the court followed the sovereign when he moved from one place to another. Originally called the Aulia Regia, it is now a division of the High Court of Justice.

Queen's College (Oxford), Queens' College (Cambridge). Note the position of the apostrophe in each case. The Oxford College was founded (1340) by Robert de Eglesfield in honour of Queen Philippa, consort of Edward III, to whom he was confessor. The Cambridge College numbers two Queens as its founders, viz., Margaret of Anjou, consort of Henry VI (1448), and Elizabeth Woodville, Edward IV's consort, who refounded the college in 1465.

Queen's, or King's Colour. The UNION JACK, except in the case of foot guards, the first of the two colours borne by regiments. In the GUARDS it is a crimson flag bearing the royal cipher. The first colour was called "King's" in 1751, "Royal" in 1837, with the accession of Queen Victoria, and "Queen's" in 1892. See also REGIMENTAL COLOURS under COLOUR.

Queen's, or King's Counsel. IN ENGLAND a member of the BAR appointed by the Crown on the nomination of the Lord CHANCELLOR; in SCOTLAND on the recommendation of the Lord Justice General. A Q.C. wears a silk gown and is thus often called a silk. He takes precedence over the junior Bar, and in a case must have a junior barrister with him.

Queen's County. See KING'S COUNTY.

Queen's Day. 17 November, the day of the accession of Queen Elizabeth I, first publicly celebrated in 1570, and for over three centuries kept as a holiday in Government offices and at Westminster School.

17 November at Merchant Taylors' School is a holiday also, now called Sir Thomas White's Founder's Day.

Queen's English. See under ENGLISH.

Queen's Evidence. See EVIDENCE.

Queen's, or King's Messenger is an official of the British Foreign Office whose duty it is to carry personally confidential messages from London to any embassy or legation abroad. He carries as his badge of office a silver greyhound, and though he receives courtesies and help in the countries across which he travels, he enjoys no diplomatic immunities or privileges except that of passing through the customs the "diplomatic bag" he is carrying.

The Queen's, or King's Picture. See under KING.

Queen's, or King's Regulations. See under KING.

Queen's, or King's Remembrancer. Originally an EXCHEQUER clerk sharing the work of establishing and collecting fixed revenues and debts with the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer. In 1323 the King's Remembrancer was assigned to casual crown revenues, proceedings against defaulters, etc., and other duties were added later. In 1877 the office was transferred to the Supreme Court and is now held by the Senior Master of the QUEEN'S BENCH division. His duties are concerned with the selection of SHERIFFS, the swearing-in of the Lord MAYOR of London and with revenue cases.

Queen's, or King's Shilling. See under SHILLING.

The Queen's, or King's Speech. The speech from the throne in the HOUSE OF LORDS made at the opening of a parliamentary session outlining the government's programme for the session. It is always addressed to both Houses but the special clause relating to finance is addressed to the Commons alone.

Queen's, or King's Tobacco-pipe. A jocular name given to a kiln which used to be situated at the corner of the Tobacco Warehouse at the London Docks. It was used for the periodic and wasteful destruction of contraband, and damaged tobacco, tea, smuggled books, etc. It went out of use in the late 19th century.

Queen's ware. Glazed Wedgwood earthenware of a creamy colour.

Queen's weather. When a fête, etc., takes place on a fine day; so called because Queen Victoria was, for the most part, fortunate in having fine weather when she appeared in public.

The White Queen. Mary Queen of Scots; so called because she dressed in white mourning for her French husband, Francis II (1544-1560).

Queen Square Hermit. Jeremy Bentham (1748-1832), the philosopher and father of UTILITARIANISM, who lived at No. 1 Queen Square, London. His embalmed figure, seated and fully clad, is preserved at University College, London.

Queenhithe. The hithe, or landing-place, or wharf off Upper Thames Street, on the north bank of the Thames upstream of SOUTHWARK Bridge. It is mentioned in a charter of ALFRED THE GREAT as Aetheredes hyd and eventually became the property of Queen Adeliza, second wife of Henry I, and subsequently it came to be called queen's hithe or Queenhithe. In early times it was a flourishing port, mainly handling corn and fish.

Queensberry Rules. The regulations governing boxing matches in which gloves were worn, formulated by John Sholto Douglas, eighth Marquess of Queensberry, and John G. Chambers (1843-1883) in 1865. They were fully used at a London tournament in 1872. The present rules governing glove contests are those issued by the British Boxing Board of Control in 1929.

Queer. Colloquial for "out of sorts", "not up to the mark", also thieves' CANT for anything base and worthless, and a modern term for a homosexual.

A queer cove. An eccentric person, a rum customer; also queer card.

As queer as Dick's hatband. See DICK'S HATBAND.

In Queer Street. In financial difficulties. The punning suggestion has been made that the origin of the phrase is to be found in a query (?) with which a tradesman might mark the name of such a one on his ledger.

To come over all queer. To feel suddenly giddy, faint, etc.

To queer one's pitch. To forestall him; to render his efforts nugatory by underhand means; as a street or market vendor might find his trade spoilt by an interloper.

Querno (kwěř' nō). Camillo Querno, of Apulia, hearing that Pope Leo X (1475, 1513-1522) was a great patron of poets, went to ROME with a harp in his hand and sang a poem called Alexias containing 20,000 verses. He was introduced to the POPE as a buffoon, but was promoted to the LAUREL and became a constant frequenter of the Pope's table.

Rome in her Capitol saw Querno sit,
Thron'd on seven hills the Antichrist of wit.
POPE: Dunciad, II, i, 15.

Querpo (kēr' pō). In querpo. In one's shirtsleeves; in undress (Sp. en cuerpo, without a cloak).

Boy, my cloak and rapier; it fits not a gentleman of my rank to walk the streets in querpo.
BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER: Love's Cure, II, i.

Question. When members of the HOUSE OF COMMONS or other debaters call out Question, they mean that the speaker is wandering away from the subject under consideration.

A leading question. See under LEADER.

An open question. A statement, proposal, doctrine, or supposed fact where differences of opinion are permissible. In the HOUSE OF COMMONS every member may vote as he likes, regardless of party considerations, on an open question.

Out of the question. Not worth discussing, not to be thought of, or considered.

The previous question. The question whether the matter under debate shall be put to the vote or not. In the HOUSE OF COMMONS to "move the previous question" is to move "that the question be not now put". If the motion is carried the question that was previously before the house is abandoned, but if not carried the question concerned must be put forthwith. The motion is now rarely used. The previous question may not be moved on an amendment or business motion, nor in committee.

To beg the question. See BEG.

To pop the question. To propose or make an offer of marriage. As this request is supposedly unexpected, the question is said to be "popped".

Questionists. In the examinations for degrees at Cambridge it was customary, at the beginning of the January term, to hold "Acts", and the candidates for the Bachelor's degree were called "Questionists". They were examined by a moderator, and afterwards the fathers of other colleges "questioned" them for three hours in Latin, and the dismissal uttered by the REGIUS PROFESSOR indicated what class each would be placed in, or if a respondent was plucked (see PLUCK), in which case the words were simply Descendus domine.

Quetzalcoatl. An Aztec deity whose name means "feathered serpent", a god of the air or a sun-god and a benefactor of their race who instructed them in the use of agriculture, metals, etc. According to one account, he was driven from the country by a superior god and on reaching the shores of the Mexican Gulf promised his followers that he would return. He then embarked on his magic skiff for the land of Tlapallan. Prescott (Conquest of Mexico, ch. III) tells us that "He was said to have been tall in stature, with a white skin, long, dark hair, and a flowing beard. The Mexicans looked confidently to the return of the benevolent deity; and this remarkable tradition, deeply cherished in their hearts, prepared . . . for the future success of the Spaniards."

Quey (kwā). A female calf, a young heifer (O.Scand. kviga).

Quey calves are dear veal. An old proverb, somewhat analogous to "killing the goose which lays the golden eggs". Female calves should be kept and reared for milking.

Qui s'excuse, s'accuse (Fr.). He who excuses himself, accuses himself.

Qui vive (kē vĕv) (Fr., who lives?). The French sentry's equivalent of Who goes there? which in French would be Qui va là?

To be on the qui vive. On the alert; to be quick and sharp; to be expectantly on the lookout like a sentinel.

Quia Emptores (kwī' á emp tōr ēz) (Lat., because purchasers). A statute passed in the reign of Edward I (1290), taking its name from its opening words, to insure the lord his feudal incidents when tenants sold lands held of them. It allowed free sale on condition that the purchaser should hold from the superior lord thus preventing subinfeudation. It resulted in a great increase of landowners holding direct from the Crown.

Quick. Living; hence, animated, lively; hence, fast, active, brisk (O.E. cwīc, living, alive). "Look alive" means "Be brisk."

Cut to the quick. Figuratively, deeply hurt. The reference here is to the sensitive flesh below the nails or skin, hence the seat of feeling.

The quick and the dead. The living and the dead.

Quicksand is sand which shifts its place as if it were alive. See QUICK.

Quickset is living hawthorn set in a hedge, instead of dead wood, hurdles, and palings. See QUICK.

Quicksilver is argentum vivum (living silver), silver that moves about like a living thing (O.E. cwic seolfor), i.e. mercury.

That, swift as quicksilver, it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body.
SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, v.

Quickie. In film parlance, a cheaply produced film to catch the less discriminating and make a quick return on the money invested. In everyday speech a "quickie" usually means a quick drink as in, "Come and have a quickie (or quick one)."

Quid. Slang for a SOVEREIGN (or a pound note). It occurs in Shadwell's Squire of Alsatia (1688), but its origin is unknown.

In a quid of tobacco, meaning a piece for chewing, quid is another form of cud.

Quids. See QUIDDISTS.

Quids in. Extremely lucky, very profitably, to have everything turn out favourably.

Quidlibet. See QUODLIBET.

Quid pro quo (Lat., something for something). A return made for something, an equivalent, a TIT FOR TAT.

Quid rides? (Lat., Why are you laughing?). It is said that Lundy Foot, a Dublin tobacconist, set up his carriage, and that Curran, when asked to furnish him with a motto, suggested this. The witticism is also attributed to H. Callender, who, it is asserted, supplied it to one Brandon, a London tobacconist. The application of quid to a tobacconist is obvious. In the Latin both syllables of "rides" are pronounced.

Quiddists, or Quids. In the U.S.A., sectionalists of the Democratic-Republican party under John Randolph who sought to maintain the ascendancy of Virginia and its planter aristocracy against the more democratic elements. Active between 1805 and 1811, they opposed Madison's succession to Jefferson as party leader. The name was from tertium quid, "a third something or other" opposed to the Federalists and administration Republicans.

Quiddity. The essence of a thing, or that which differentiates it from other things—"the Correggiosity of Correggio", "the Freeness of the Free". Hence used of subtle, trifling distinctions, quibbles, or captious argumentation. SCHOOLMEN say Quid est? (what is it?) and the reply is, the Quid is so and so, the What or the nature of the thing is as follows. The latter quid being formed into a barbarous Latin noun becomes Quidditas. Hence Quid est? (What is it?). Answer: Talis est quidditas (Its essence is as follows).

He knew . . .
Where entity and quiddity
(The ghosts of defunct bodies) fly.
BUTLER: Hudibras, I, i.

Quidnunc (Lat., What now?). One who is curious to know everything that's going on, or pretends to know it; a self-important newsmonger and gossip. It is the name of the leading character in Murphy's farce The Upholsterer, or What News?

Quién sabe? (kien sa' be) (Sp.). Who knows? Sometimes used as a response in the sense of "How should I know?"

Quieta non movere (Lat.). Literally, do not disturb the peace; i.e. let sleeping dogs lie (see under DOG).

Quietism. A form of religious mysticism based on the doctrine that the essence of religion consists in the withdrawal of the SOUL from external objects, and in fixing it upon the contemplation of God; especially that taught by Miguel Molinos (1640-1696), who taught the direct relationship between the soul and God. His followers were called Molinists or Quietists. Outward acts of mortification were held superfluous and when a person has attained the mystic state by mental prayer, even if he transgresses in the accepted sense, he does not sin, since his will has been extinguished. See MOLINISM.

Quietus (Late Lat. quietus est, he is quit). The writ of discharge formerly granted to those BARONS and KNIGHTS who personally attended the king on a foreign expedition, exempting them also from the claim of SCUTAGE or knight's fee. Subsequently the term was applied to the acquittance which a SHERIFF receives on settling his account at the EXCHEQUER; and, later still, to any discharge, as of an account, or even of life itself.

You had the trick in audit-time to be sick till I had signed your quietus.
WEBSTER: Duchess of Malfi, III, ii (1623).

When he himself might his quietus make
With a bare bodkin?
SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, III, i.

Quill-drivers. Writing clerks.

Quinapalus (kwin äp' ä lus). A high-sounding, pedantic name invented by Feste, the Clown in SHAKESPEARE'S Twelfth Night, when he wished to give some saying the weight of authority. Hence someone "dragged in" when one wishes to clench an argument by some supposed quotation.

What says Quinapalus: "Better a witty fool, than a foolish wit."

Twelfth Night, I, v.

Quinine. See CINCHONA.

Quinquagesima Sunday (kwin kwá jes' i má) (Lat., fiftieth). Shrove Sunday, or the first day of the week which contains ASH WEDNESDAY. It is so called because in round numbers it is the fiftieth day before EASTER.

Quins, or Quints (U.S.A.), The. The popular name for the famous Dionne quintuplets, Marie, Emilie, Yvonne, Cécile, and Annette. Daughters born (1934) to a farmer's wife in Callander, Ontario, they became wards of King George VI, who, with his Queen, received them during his visit to Canada in 1939. There were seven other children in the family.

Quinsy. This is from the Med.Lat. quinancia derived from Gr. kynagkhē, dog-throttling, because those suffering from quinsy throw open the mouth like dogs, especially mad dogs. It appeared in English (14th century) as quinaci, and later forms were quymancy and squimancy. Squimancy-wort is still a name given to the small woodruff (Asperula cynanchica), which was used as a cure for quinsy by the herbalists.

Quintain (kwin' tin). Tilting at the quintain. An ancient military exercise and pastime, particularly practised by mediæval KNIGHTS. A dummy figure or just a head, often representing a Turk or SARACEN, was fastened to pivot or swing horizontally from an upright stake fixed in the ground. The knight tilted at the figure and if he did not strike it in the right place with his lance it moved round at speed and struck him in the back before he could pass on. There were various forms of quintain and in the 14th century Londoners used to tilt from boats, the quintain being fixed to a mast erected in the Thames. Tilting at the quintain remained a rustic sport, associated particularly with wedding festivities, until the outbreak of the English CIVIL WARS. The word is probably from Lat. quintana, fifth, a street in a Roman camp between the fifth and sixth maniples where the camp market was situated, supposedly a place for martial exercise.

Quintessence. The fifth essence. The ancient Greeks said there are four elements or forms in which matter can exist—fire, air, water, and earth (see ELEMENTS); the Pythagoreans (see PYTHAGOREAN SYSTEM) added a fifth, the fifth essence—quintessence—ether, more subtle and pure than fire, and possessed of an orbicular motion, which flew upwards at creation and formed the basis of the stars. Hence the word stands for the essential principle or the most subtle extract of a body that can be procured. HORACE speaks of "kisses that Venus has imbued with the quintessence of her own nectar".

Swift to their several quarters hasted then
The cumbrous elements, earth, flood, aire, fire;
And this ethereal quintessence of heaven
Flew upward . . . and turned to stars
Numberless as thou seest.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, III, 714.

Quintilians (kwin til' yáns). Members of a 2nd-century heretical sect of MON-TANISTS, said to have been founded by one Quintilia, a prophetess. They made the EUCHARIST of bread and cheese, and allowed women to become priests and BISHOPS.

Quintillion (kwin til' yòn). In English, the fifth power of a million, 1 followed by 30 ciphers; in the U.S.A., the cube of a million, a million multiplied by a thousand four times over, 1 followed by 18 ciphers.

Quip Modest, The. "Sir, it was done to please myself," in SHAKESPEARE'S As You Like It (V, iv). Touchstone's reasoning is as follows: If I sent a person word that his beard was not well cut and he replied he cut it to please himself, he would answer with the Quip Modest, which is six removes from the lie direct. Shakespeare is satirizing the formalities and code of honour of the Italianate style of duelling, then in vogue, in which the "lie direct" involved a settlement by fighting. The other degrees of lie provided an opportunity for disputants to wax valiant but to retreat from the risk of bloodshed. See COUNTERCHECK QUARRELSOME; REPLY CHURLISH; RETORT COURTEOUS.

Quipu (ke' poo or kwi' poo). An ancient Peruvian device used for keeping accounts, recording information, etc. The word means a knot, and the quipu was a length of cord, about two feet long, made of different coloured threads and tied with knots. The various threads and knots represented simple objects and numerical combinations.

The Quipus, thus used, might be regarded as the Peruvian system of mnemonics.

PRESCOTT: Conquest of Peru, I, iv.

Quirinal (kwi' ri nal). One of the seven hills of ancient ROME, named after Quirinus, the SABINE name of MARS, and given to ROMULUS after deification. It is now called Monte Cavallo. Also the name of the palace originally built on its slopes as Papal summer residence and subsequently used by the Kings of Italy and now by the President. The term was applied emblematically to the Italian kingdom and government as opposed to the VATICAN, the seat of Papal authority and ecclesiastical government.

Quis (Lat.). Who?

Quis custodiet ipsos custodes? (Lat., Who will watch over the watchers themselves?) The shepherds keep watch over the sheep, but who is there to keep watch over the shepherds? Said when one is uncertain of the person whom one has placed in a position of trust.

Quis separabit? (Lat., Who shall separate us?) The motto adopted by the Most Illustrious ORDER OF ST. PATRICK (see under PATRICK) when it was founded.

Quisling (kwis' ling). A traitor or fifth columnist, from Vidkun Quisling, the Norwegian admirer of Mussolini and Hitler, who acted as advance agent for the German invasion of Norway in 1940. He duly became puppet Minister-President. He surrendered (9 May 1945) after the German defeat and was tried and shot (24 October).

Quit. (Fr. quitter, to leave, to depart). In the U.S.A. this word is more commonly used in the sense of to leave a job or place.

Cry quits. When two boys quarrel, and one has had enough, he says, "Cry Quits", meaning "Let us leave off, and call it a drawn game". So in an unequal distribution, he who has the largest share restores a portion and "cries quits", meaning that he has made the distribution equal. Here quit means "acquittal" or discharge.

Double or quits. See under DOUBLE.

To be quit of. To be free from, to be rid of.

Quit rent. A rent formerly paid to the lord of a manor by freeholders and copyholders which was an acquittal of all other services. Nowadays a token or nominal rent. The ancient ceremony of rendering the quit-rent services due to the Crown by the Corporation of the City of London is still held before the QUEEN'S REMEMBRANCER.

Quixote, Don (kwik' zot). The hero of the famous romance of this name by Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra (1547-1616). It was published at Madrid in 1605 and the continuation or second part in 1615. It ridicules the more tedious chivalric romances. Don Quixote is a gaunt country gentleman of La Mancha, gentle and dignified, affectionate and simple-minded, but so crazed by reading books of knight-errantry that he believes himself called upon to redress the wrongs of the whole world. Hence a quixotic man is a romantic idealist, one with impractical ideas of honour or schemes for the general good. See also SANCHO PANZA.

The Quixote of the North. Charles XII of Sweden (1682, 1697-1718), also called The Madman.

Quiz. One who banters or chaffs another.

The origin of the word, which appeared about 1780, is unknown; but fable accounts for it by saying that a Mr. Daly, manager of a Dublin theatre, laid a wager that he would introduce into the language within twenty-four hours a new word of no meaning. Accordingly on every wall, or all places accessible, were chalked up the four mystic letters, and all Dublin was inquiring what they meant. The wager was won and the word became part of the language.

Quiz is also applied to a test, usually competitive, of knowledge, general or otherwise. Hence the American expression, Quiz Kid, from such children appearing on radio or television in quiz programmes.

Quo vadis? See DOMINE, QUO VADIS?

Quo warranto (kwō war ān' tō) (Lat.). A writ against a defendant (whether an individual or a corporation) who lays claim to something he has no right to; so named because the offender is called upon to show quo warranto (rem) usurpavit (by what right or authority he lays claim to the matter of dispute).

The writ has long been displaced by "the information in the nature of a writ of quo warranto" which can be brought by a private person.

Quoad hoc (kwō' ād hok) (Lat.). To this extent, with respect to this.

Quod. Slang for prison. Probably the same word as QUAD, which is a contraction of quadrangle, the enclosure in which prisoners are allowed to walk, and where whippings used to be inflicted. The word was in use in the 17th century.

Quodlibet, or Quidlibet (Lat., what you please). Originally a philosophical or theological question proposed for purposes of scholastic debate; hence a nice and knotty point, a subtlety.

Quondam (Lat., former). We say, He is a quondam schoolfellow (a former schoolfellow); my quondam friend, the quondam chancellor, etc.

Quorum (kwōr' um) (Lat., of whom). The lowest number of members of a committee or board, etc., the presence of whom is necessary before business may be transacted; formerly, also certain Justices of the Peace, hence known as Justices of the Quorum, chosen for their special ability, one or more of whom had to be on the Bench at trials before the others could act. SHAKESPEARE'S Slender calls Justice Shallow "justice of the peace, and coram" (Merry Wives of Windsor, I, i).

I must not omit that Sir Roger is a justice of the quorum.—ADDISON: Spectator, No. 2.

Quos ego (kwōs eg' ō). A threat of punishment for disobedience. The words, from VIRGIL'S Æneid (I, 135), were uttered by NEPTUNE to the disobedient and rebellious winds, and are sometimes given as an example of aposiopesis, i.e. a stopping short for rhetorical effort. "Whom I—," said Neptune, the "will punish" being left to the imagination.

Quot. Quot homines, tot sententiæ (Lat.). As many minds as men; there are as many opinions as there are men to hold them. The phrase is from Terence's Phormio (II, iv, 14).

Quot linguas calles, tot homines vales (Lat.). As many languages as you know, so many separate individuals you are worth. Attributed to Charles V.

R

R. The eighteenth letter of the English alphabet (seventeenth of the Roman) representing the twentieth of the Phœnician and Hebrew. As a mediæval Roman numeral R stood for 80 and \bar{R} for 80,000. In England it was formerly used as a branding mark for rogues.

It has been called the "snarling letter" or "dog letter", because a dog in snarling utters a sound resembling r-r-r-r, etc., or gt-r-r-r.

Irritata canis quod R R quam plurima dicat.
Lucilius.

In his English Grammar made for the benefit of all Strangers Ben Jonson says:

R is the dog's letter and hurreth in the sound; the tongue striking the inner palate, with a trembling about the teeth.

And see the Nurse's remark about R in SHAKESPEARE'S Romeo and Juliet, II, iv.

R in prescriptions. The ornamental part of this letter is the symbol of JUPITER (♃), under whose special protection all medicines were placed. The letter itself

(Recipe, take) and its flourish may thus be paraphrased: "Under the good auspices of Jove, the patron of medicines, take the following drugs in the proportions set down."

The R months. See under OYSTER.

The three R's. Reading, writing, and arithmetic. The phrase is said to have been originated by Sir William Curtis (1752–1829), an illiterate alderman and Lord MAYOR of London, who gave this as a toast, i.e. "Riting, Reading, and Rithmetic".

Within the limits set by the code [The REVISED CODE, 1862], and by the ideal which most people then had of education for the poor, viz. an elementary knowledge of the three R's, Mr. Lowe had more than redeemed his promises.

H. HOLMAN:

English National Education, ch. viii (1898).

R.A.P. Rupees, annas, and pies, in India; corresponding to £.s.d. in Britain.

R.I.P. Requiescat in pace. Latin for "May he (or she) rest in peace"; a symbol used on mourning cards, tombstones, etc.

Ra, or Re. The sun-god of ancient Egypt, and from the time of Chephren (IVth Dynasty) the supposed ancestor of all the PHARAOHS. His chief centre was at HELIOPOLIS where he was also known as Atum. His great enemy was the serpent Apep with whom he fought continually, but always eventually defeated. According to one legend, Ra was born as a child every morning and died at night as an old man. His name and cult was assimilated with that of Amen (AMEN-RA) and many others and he was commonly represented with the head of a falcon surmounted by a solar disc surrounded with the Uraeus, the sacred flame-spitting asp which destroyed his enemies.

Rabbit. To produce the rabbit out of the hat. To produce unexpectedly an answer or solution, etc., when success appears impossible or the situation seems hopeless. An allusion to the conjuror's art.

Rabelaisian. Coarsely and boisterously satirical; grotesque, extravagant and licentious in language; reminiscent in literary style of the great French satirist François Rabelais (1495–1553). When Rabelaisian is used it implies coarseness and complete frankness and ignores Rabelais's humanism. See PANTAGRUEL.

The English Rabelais. A title somewhat unsuitably given to Dean Swift (1667–1745), Thomas Amory (c. 1691–1788, author of John Bunble), and Laurence Sterne (1713–1768).

Raboin. See TAILED MEN.

Races

Rache (räch). In mediæval England, a hound that hunts by scent (O.E. raecc, a hound); they were later called "running hounds" (canes currentes).

At first I will begin with raches and their nature, and then greyhounds and their nature, and then alaunts and their nature. . . and then I shall devise and tell the sickness of hounds and their diseases.

EDWARD, 2ND DUKE OF YORK:
The Master of Game, Prologue (c. 1410).

Rachel (ra shel'). A French actress whose real name was Elizabeth Felix (1821-1858). She was the daughter of poor Jewish pedlars, but going on the stage as a girl, she won a great triumph in 1843 in the name part of Racine's Phèdre. As Adrienne Lecouvreur, in Scribe's play of that name (1849), she confirmed her position as one of the greatest tragic actresses in Europe. The cosmetics bearing the name "Rachel" immortalize a Parisian beauty specialist of the SECOND EMPIRE.

Rachmanism. RACK-RENTING, extortion, and general exploitation of tenants and purchasers of house-property. After Peter Rachman (1920-1962), a Polish immigrant whose undesirable activities of this kind in the Paddington area of London were brought to light in 1962-1963.

Rack. The instrument of torture so called (connected with Ger. recken, to strain) was a frame in which a man was fastened and his arms and legs stretched by windlass arrangements. Not infrequently the limbs were forced thereby out of their sockets. Its use in England was abolished in 1640. See THE DUKE OF EXETER'S DAUGHTER under DUKE.

Rack and ruin. Utter decay or destitution. Here "rack" is a variant of wrack and wreck.

Rack-rent. Legally regarded as the annual rent which can be reasonably charged for a property, being that which it can command in the open market; an excessive rent, one which is "racked" or stretched.

To lie at rack and manger. To live without thought of the morrow, like cattle or horses whose food is placed before them without themselves taking thought; hence, to live at reckless expense.

To rack one's brains. To strain them to find out or recollect something; to puzzle about something.

Racket. Noise or confusion. The word is probably imitative, like crack, bang, splash, etc. Also, colloquially, game, line of business, BLACKMAIL and extortion.

To stand the racket. To bear the expense; to put up with the consequences.

Radar. A name formed from Radio Detection and Ranging; a means of detecting the direction and range of aircraft, ships, etc., by the reflection of radio waves. It is particularly valuable at night or in fog when the eye is of no avail. It was first developed effectively for these purposes by Sir Robert Watson-Watt in 1934-1935 and was of great importance during World War II, especially during the BATTLE OF BRITAIN.

Radcliffe Library. A library at Oxford, founded with a bequest of £40,000 left for the purpose by Dr. John Radcliffe (1650-1714), and originally intended for a medical library. Dr. Radcliffe was a prominent London physician, famous for his candour. When summoned to QUEEN ANNE he told her that there was nothing the matter with her but "vapours", and he refused to attend her on her death-bed.

Radegonde, or Radegund, St. (räd' e gond). Wife of Clotaire, King of the FRANKS (558-561). Disgusted with the crimes of the royal family, she founded the monastery of St. Croix at Poitiers. Her feast day is 13 August.

St. Radegonde's lifted stone. A stone 60 ft. in circumference, placed on five supporting stones, said by the historians of Poitou to have been so arranged in 1478, to commemorate a great FAIR held on the spot in October of that year. The country people insist that Queen Radegonde brought the impost stone on her head, and the five uprights in her apron, and arranged them all as they appear to this day.

Radevore (räd' e vör). A kind of cloth, probably tapestry, known in the 14th century. It has been suggested (Skeat) that it was named from Vaur, in LANGUEDOC; ras (Eng. rash, a smooth—raised—textile fabric) de Vor.

This woful lady ylern'd had in youthe
So that she worken and embrowden kouthe,
And weven in hire stole the radevore
As hyd of wommen had be y-woved yore.
CHAUCER: Legend of Good Women, 2351.

Radical. A political label denoting an ultra-liberal which came into use about 1816 and is applicable to ORATOR HUNT, Major Cartwright, William Cobbett and many others of that period. The early radicals drew their inspiration mainly from the French Revolution but John Wilkes may be considered representative of a somewhat earlier tradition.

If the Whigs most inclined to popular courses adhere steadily to their determination of having no communication with the Radicals of any description,
I trust the session may pass over without any schism among Opposition. . . .

Letter from Mr. Allen to Mr. Creevey
(20 November 1816).

Rag. A tatter, hence a remnant (as "not a rag of decency", "not a rag of evidence"), hence a vagabond or RAGAMUFFIN.

Lash hence these overweening rags of France.
SHAKESPEARE: Richard III, V, iii.

The word was old CANT for a farthing, and was also used generally to express scarcity—or absence—of money:

Money by me? Heart and goodwill you might,
But surely, master, not a rag of money.
SHAKESPEARE: Comedy of Errors, IV, iv.

In university slang (now general) a rag is a boisterous escapade, jollification, etc., usually involving horseplay and practical jokes. To rag a person is to tease and torment him, to badger him (see under BADGER).

The Rag. The nickname of the Army and Navy Club, PALL MALL. It is said to have originated in the remark of a dissatisfied member who described the entertainment there as "rag and famish". Another suggestion is that the "rag" is the flag.

The local rag. A colloquial term for the local newspaper.

Glad rags. See under GLAD.

To chew the rag. A slang expression for "grousing", complaining, or talking at length on one particular subject. In the U.S.A., it means simply "to chat".

Rag-tag and bob-tail. The RIFF-RAFF, the rabble, "the great UNWASHED". The common expression in the 16th and 17th centuries was the rag and tag.

Ragtime. Fast syncopated music of American Negro origin developed from the late 19th century, characterized by the use of noisy percussion instruments, trumpet, trombone, and saxophone. The name was both popularized and perpetuated by Irving Berlin's tune, Alexander's Ragtime Band (1911). The name "JAZZ" soon took its place.

Rag water. In thieves' jargon, whisky.

Ragamuffin. A muffin is a poor thing of a creature, a "regular muff"; so that a ragamuffin is a sorry creature in rags.

I have led my ragamuffins where they are peppered.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, V, iii.

Ragged Robin. A wild flower (Lychnis flos-cuculi), from the ragged appearance of its fringed petals. The word is used by Tennyson for a pretty damsel in ragged clothes.

The prince
Hath picked a ragged Robin from the hedge.
TENNYSON:

Idylls of the King (The Marriage of Geraint).

Ragged schools. VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS for the education of destitute children, originated by John Pounds, a Portsmouth shoemaker, about 1818. Ragged Sunday Schools, Day Schools, and Evening Schools made an important contribution to the welfare of the STREET ARABS (see under ARABIA) of 19th-century LONDON and elsewhere. The seventh Earl of Shaftesbury was a notable benefactor.

Raglan. An overcoat which has no shoulder seams, the sleeves extending up to the neck. First worn by Lord Raglan, the British commander in the Crimean War.

Ragman Rolls. The returns of each HUNDRED to Edward I's inquest of 1274-1275, also called Hundred Rolls; their colloquial name is from the ragged appearance due to their numerous pendant seals. The roll of Homage and Fealty made by the Scottish clergy and barons to Edward I at Berwick in 1297 is likewise so called. See RIGMAROLE.

Ragnarok (rǣg' na rok). The Götterdämmerung or Twilight of the Gods in Scandinavian mythology. The day of doom, when the old world and all its inhabitants were annihilated. Out of the destruction a new world was born, a world at peace. Of the old gods BALDER returned, and ODIN's two sons Vidar and Vail, Vili and Ve (Odin's brother's sons), Magni and Modi, sons of THOR, and Hœnir (Odin's companion).

Rahu (ra' hū). The demon that, according to Hindu legend, causes eclipses. One day he quaffed some of the NECTAR of immortality, but was discovered by the sun and moon, who informed against him, and VISHNU cut off his head. As he had already taken some of the nectar into his mouth, the head was immortal, and he ever afterwards hunted the SUN and MOON, which he sometimes caught, thus causing eclipses.

Railroad, Railway. Both terms were originally used in England; but railway has long been the normal English usage while railroad is the accepted American form.

Alas! even the giddiness attendant on a journey on this Manchester rail-road is not so perilous to the nerves, as that too frequent exercise in the merry-go-round of the ideal world.

SCOTT:

Count Robert of Paris: Introductory Address
(1832).

To railroad (U.S.A.). To hustle someone through (as of school) or out (as of an assembly) with unseemly haste and without reference to the proper formalities.

Underground Railroad. In the U.S.A. the name given (c. 1830) to the secret and changing system of hiding places and routes organised for helping runaway slaves to escape to the Northern States and Canada. An Underground Road was its forerunner.

The Railway King. George Hudson (1800-1871), chairman of the York and North Midland Railway Company, Midland Railway Company, etc., whose ventures in railway amalgamations and speculations at first proved so profitable that he dominated the market. Thrice Mayor of York and M.P. for Sunderland, the railway mania of 1847-1848 brought his ruin. Accused of "cooking the books", legal proceedings stripped him of his fortune. He remained an M.P. until 1859.

Rain. It never rains but it pours. One occurrence is frequently the harbinger of many such; strokes of good or ill fortune are often accompanied by additional benefits or misfortunes. An 18th-century proverb.

To put something by for a rainy day. To save something against bad times.

To rain cats and dogs. In northern mythology the CAT is supposed to have great influence on the weather and "The cat has a gale of wind in her tail" is a seafarer's expression for when a cat is unusually frisky. Witches that rode on storms were said to assume the form of cats. The DOG is a signal of wind, like the WOLF, both of which were attendants of ODIN, the storm god.

Thus cat may be taken as a symbol of the down-pouring rain, and the dog of the strong gusts of wind accompanying a rainstorm.

Rain Check (U.S.A.). A receipt or the counterfoil of a ticket entitling one to see another baseball game if the original match for which the ticket was purchased is rained off. The phrase is now in general use of a promise to accept an invitation at a later date, e.g. when invited and one cannot accept, one says, "I'll take a rain-check."

Raining-tree, or Rain-tree. Old travellers to the Canaries told of a linden tree from which sufficient water to supply all the men and beasts of the island of Hierro was said to fall. In certain weather conditions moisture condenses and collects on the broad leaves of many trees. The genisaro or guango, Pithecolobium saman, an ornamental tropical tree, one of the Leguminosæ, is known as the rain-tree. In this case ejections of juice by the cicadas are responsible for the "rain" under its branches. Another is the Andira inermis, found in tropical Africa and America.

Rainbow. The old legend is that if one reaches the spot where a rainbow touches the earth and digs there one will be sure to find a pot of GOLD. Hence visionaries, wool-gatherers, day-dreamers, etc., are sometimes called rainbow chasers, because of their habit of hoping for impossible things.

Rainbow Corner. In World War II Messrs. Lyons' Corner House in Shaftesbury Avenue, London, was taken over and turned into a large café and lounge for American servicemen under this name, and it became a general meeting place for Americans in London. The name was in reference to the RAINBOW DIVISION (see UNITED STATES ARMY under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES), and the rainbow in the insignia of SHAEF (Supreme Headquarters Allied Expeditionary Forces).

Raison d'état (rā' zon də tā) (Fr., reason of state). The doctrine that the interests of the State take precedence at the expense of private morality.

Raison d'être (rā' zon də tr) (Fr.). The reason for a thing's existence, its rational ground for being; as, "Once crime were abolished there would be no raison d'être for the police."

Rajah (ra' ja). Sanskrit for king, cognate with Lat. rex. The title of an Indian king or prince, given later to tribal chiefs and comparatively minor rulers; also to Malayan and Javanese chiefs. Maharajah means the "great rajah".

Ralph Robinson. See FARMER GEORGE.

Ralph Roister Doister. The name of the earliest English comedy on classical lines; so called from the chief character. It probably appeared in 1552 or 1553 and was written by Nicholas Udall, headmaster of Eton, 1534-1541, and headmaster of Westminster, 1555-1556.

Ram. Formerly, the usual prize at wrestling matches. Thus Chaucer says of his miller, "At wrastlyng he wolde bere away the ram" (Canterbury Tales: Prologue, 548).

The Ram Feast. Formerly held on MAY morning at Holne, Dartmoor, when a ram was run down in the "Ploy Field" and roasted whole, with skin and fur, close by a granite pillar. At midday, a scramble took place for a slice, which was supposed to bring luck to those who got it. At Kingsteignton, Devon, a decorated carcass is still escorted through the town on Whit Monday and afterwards roasted in the open.

The Ram and Teazle. A PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGN, in compliment to the Clothiers' Company. The ram is emblematical of wool and the teazle is used for raising the nap of woollen cloth.

The Ram of the Zodiac. This is the famous Chrysomallus, whose GOLDEN FLEECE was stolen by JASON. See ARIES.

Rama. The seventh incarnation of VISHNU (see AVATAR). His beautiful wife, Sita, was abducted by Ravana, the demon-king of Ceylon. With the aid of a nation of monkeys who collected trees and rocks, a bridge, Adam's bridge, was built across the straits. Rama and his invading army gradually overcame the enemy and Rama's arrow slew the demon-monster. The story is told in the RAMAYANA.

Ramachandra. See AVATAR.

Ramadan (rām à dān). The ninth month of the Mohammedan year, and the Moslem LENT or Holy Month. It is the month in which the KORAN was revealed. The MOSLEM year being lunar sometimes means that Ramadan falls in midsummer when the fast causes much discomfort, since it involves abstinence from drinking.

Ramayana (ra' ma ya' na) (i.e. the deeds of Rama). The history of RAMA, the great epic poem of ancient India, ranking with the MAHABHARATA, and almost with the ILIAD. It is ascribed to the poet Valmiki and contains 24,000 verses in seven books.

Rambouillet, Hôtel de (rām bwē yā). The house in Paris where, about 1615, the Marquise de Rambouillet, disgusted with the immoral and puerile tone of the time, founded the salon out of which grew the Académie Française. Mme de Sévigné, Malherbe, Corneille, the Duchesse de Longueville, and La Rochefoucauld were among the members. They had a refinement of language of their own, but preciousness, pedantry, and affectation eventually led to disintegration of the coterie. The women were known as Les PRÉCIEUSES and the men as Esprits doux.

Ramille, Ramillies (rām i li). A name given to certain articles of dress in commemoration of the Duke of Marlborough's victory over the French at Ramillies in 1706. The Ramillies hat was the cocked hat worn between 1714 and 1740 with the brim turned up in three equal-sized cocks. The Ramillies wig, that lasted on until after 1760, had a long gradually diminishing plait, called the Ramillies plait, with a large bow at the top and a smaller one at the bottom.

Rampage. On the rampage. Acting in a violently excited or angry manner. The word was originally Scottish, and is probably connected with ramp, to storm and rage.

Rampallion (rām pāl' yon). A term of contempt; probably a "PORTMANTEAU WORD" of ramp and rapscallion; in Davenport's A New Trick to Cheat the Devil (1639) we have: "and bold rampallion-like, swear and drink drunk."

Away, you scullion! you rampallion! you fustilarian! I'll tickle your catastrophe.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. II, II, i.

Rampant. The heraldic term for an animal, especially a LION, shown rearing up with the forepaws in the air; strictly, a LION RAMPANT should stand on the SINISTER hind-leg, with both forelegs elevated, and the head in profile.

Ran. See ÆGIR.

Ranch. A dude ranch. One run as a resort, where city-dwellers can spend their holidays attempting to be COWBOYS.

Randan. On the randan. On the spree; having a high old time in town. Randan is a variant of random.

Randem-tandem. Three horses driven TANDEM fashion.

Ranee, or Rani. A Hindu queen; the feminine of RAJAH.

Ranelagh (răn' è là). An old LONDON place of amusement on the site that now forms part of the grounds of Chelsea Hospital. It was named after Richard Jones, 1st Earl of Ranelagh, who built a house and laid out gardens there in 1690. From 1742 to 1803, Ranelagh rivalled VAUXHALL GARDENS for concerts, masquerades, etc. A notable feature was the Rotunda, built in 1742. It was not unlike the Albert Hall in design, and was 185 ft. across with numerous boxes in which refreshments were served, while the brightly lit floor formed a thronged promenade. There was also a Venetian pavilion in the centre of a lake.

The Ranelagh Club was established in 1894 in Barn Elms Park, S.W., to provide facilities for polo, tennis, golf, etc.

Rangers. Picked men in the U.S. Army who worked with British COMMANDOS. They were named after ROGERS' RANGERS, an intrepid body of frontiersmen organized by Major Robert Rogers (1731-1795). Rangers first appeared at the Dieppe Raid in 1942 on which a small party went as armed observers.

Rank. A row, a line (especially of soldiers); also high station, dignity, eminence, as:

The rank is but the guinea's stamp,
The man's the gowd for a' that!
BURNS: Is there for Honest Poverty? 431.

Rank and fashion. People of high social standing; the "UPPER TEN" (see under TEN).

Rank and file. See under FILE.

Risen from the ranks. Said of a commissioned officer of the army who has worked his way up from a private soldier; often called a ranker. Hence applied to a SELF-MADE MAN in any walk of life.

Ransom. In origin the same word as redemption, from Lat. redemptionem, through O.Fr. rançon, earlier redempçon.

A king's ransom. A very large sum of money.

Rantipole (răn' ti pöl). A HARUM-SCARUM fellow, a madcap. Probably from ranty or randy, riotous, disorderly, etc., and poll, a head or person. NAPOLEON III was called Rantipole for his escapades at Strasbourg and Boulogne.

Ranz des vaches (rans dâ vash). Simple melodies played by the Swiss mountaineers on their Alphorn when they drive their herds to pasture or call them home. Des vaches means "of the cows"; ranz is uncertain but may be a dialectal variant of ranger, the call being made pour ranger les vaches, to bring the cows home.

Rap. Not worth a rap. Worth nothing at all. The rap was a base halfpenny, intrinsically worth about half a FARTHING circulated in Ireland in 1721, because small coin was so very scarce.

Many counterfeits passed about under the name of raps.—SWIFT: Drapier's Letters, i.

Why the coin was so called is not known.

To rap the knuckles. Figuratively, to administer a sharp rebuff. From the once common practice in schools, when children were punished for a misdemeanour in class by a sharp rap on the knuckles from the teacher's ruler.

Rape. One of the six divisions into which Sussex is divided, intermediate between HUNDRED and SHIRE; it is said that each had its own river, forest, and castle. Herepp is Norwegian for a parish district and rape in DOMESDAY BOOK is used for a district under military jurisdiction, but connexion between the two words is doubtful. Cp. LATHE.

Rape of the Lock. Lord Petre, in a thoughtless moment of frolic and gallantry, cut off a lock of Arabella Fermor's hair, and this liberty gave rise to the bitter feud between the two families which Alexander Pope worked up into the best heroic-comic poem of the language. The first sketch was published in 1712 in two cantos, and the complete work, including the most happily conceived machinery of SYLPHS and GNOMES, in five cantos in 1714. Pope, under the name of Esdras Barnevelt, apothecary, later pretended that the poem was a covert satire on QUEEN ANNE and the Barrier Treaty.

Say what strange motive, goddess! could compel
A well-bred lord t'assault a gentle belle?
O say what stranger cause, yet unexplored,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord?

The Rape of the Lock, Canto I, 1.7.

Raphael (răf' ā el). One of the principal ANGELS of Jewish angelology. In the book of TOBIT we are told how he travelled with Tobias into Media and back again, instructing him on the way how to marry

Sara and to drive away the wicked spirit. Milton calls him the "sociable spirit" and the "affable archangel" (Paradise Lost, VII, 40), and it was he who was sent by God to warn ADAM of his danger.

Raphael, the sociable spirit that deigned
To travel with Tobias, and secured
His marriage with the seven-times-wedded maid.
Paradise Lost, V, 221.

Raphael is usually distinguished in art by a pilgrim's staff or carrying a fish, in allusion to his aiding Tobias to capture the fish which performed the miraculous cure of his father's eyesight.

Raphaellesque. In the style of the great Italian painter Raphael (1483-1520), who was specially notable for his supreme excellence in the equable development of all the essential qualities of art—composition, expression, design, and colouring.

Rapparee (răp' á rē'). A wild Irish plunderer; so called from his being armed with a rapaire, or half-pike.

Rappee. A coarse kind of snuff manufactured from dried tobacco by an instrument called in French a râpe, or rasp; so called because it is râpé, rasped.

Rara avis (râr' á â' vis) (Lat., a rare bird). A phenomenon; a prodigy; something quite out of the ordinary. First applied by Juvenal to the black swan, which until its discovery in Australia was unknown.

Rara avis in terris nigroque simillima cygne (a bird rarely seen on the earth, and very like a black swan).—Juvenal, vi, 165.

Rare. Underdone, as of a steak; or lightly cooked, as of an egg. It is the M.E. rere, underdone.

Rare Ben. The inscription on the tomb of Ben Jonson (1573-1637), the dramatist, in the north nave aisle of Westminster Abbey. "O rare Ben Jonson", was, says Aubrey, "done at the charge of Jack Young (afterwards knighted), who, walking there when the grave was covering, gave the fellow eighteenpence to cut it." Rare here is Lat. rarus, uncommon, remarkable.

Rare Show. A peep-show; a show carried about in a box. In the 17th century, most of the travelling showmen were Savoyards, and perhaps this represents their attempt at pronunciation of rare or rarity.

Rascal. Originally a collective term for the rabble of an army, the commonalty, the mob, this word was early (14th century) adopted as a term of the chase, and for long almost exclusively denoted the lean, worthless deer of a herd. In the late 16th century it was retransferred to people, and so to its present meaning, a mean rogue, a scamp, a base fellow. SHAKES-PEARE says, "Horns ? the noblest deer has them as huge as the rascal" (As You Like It, III, iii); and "Come, you thin thing; come, you rascal" (Henry IV, Pt. II, V, iv).

Rascal counters. Pitiful £ s. d., "filthy lucre". Brutus calls money paltry compared with friendship, etc.

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous
To lock such rascal counters from his friends,
Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces!

SHAKESPEARE: Julius Cæsar, IV, iii.

Raspberry, To give the. A 20th-century slang expression for showing contempt of someone. In action, to give a raspberry is to put one's tongue between the closed lips and expel air forcibly with a resulting rude noise. It is otherwise known as a Bronx cheer. Cp. TO COCK A SNOOK under COCK.

Rasputin. Gregory Efimovitch (1871-1916), the Siberian monk notorious for his baneful influence over the Russian monarchy in its last years, was apparently so called by his fellow villagers. Rasputin means "the dissolute" and he lived up to his nickname until the end. His easy conquests over women were helped by his assertion that physical contact with him was itself a purification. His incredible indecencies and disgusting coarseness did not prevent his excessive familiarity with the Empress Alexandra and Tsar Nicholas II which arose from his undoubted success in healing and sustaining the Tsarevich Alexis, a tragic victim of hæmophilia. Rasputin was first called to the palace in 1905 and his power increased steadily until his murder by Prince Yusupov and associates in 1916—itsself a story reminiscent of Hollywood rather than real life.

Rat. The Egyptians and Phrygians deified rats. In Egypt the rat symbolized utter destruction, and also wise judgment, the latter because rats always choose the best bread.

Pliny tells us (VIII, lvii) that the Romans drew presages from rats and to see a white rat foreboded good fortune. Clothing or equipment gnawed by rats presaged ill fortune.

It was an old superstition among sailors that rats deserted a ship before she set out on a voyage that was to end in her loss. Similarly rats were said to leave a falling house.

In few, they hurried us aboard a bark,
Bore us some leagues to sea; where they prepared
A rotten carcass of a butt, not rigg'd,
Nor tackle, sail, nor mast; the very rats
Instinctively have quit it.

SHAKESPEARE: The Tempest, I, ii.

As wet as, or like a drowned rat. Soaking wet; looking exceedingly dejected.

I smell a rat. I perceive some underhand work or treachery afoot. The allusion is to a cat smelling a rat, while unable to see it.

Irish rats rhymed to death. It was once a common belief that rats in pastures could be destroyed by anathematizing them in rhyming verse or by metrical charms. Thus Ben Jonson (Poetaster, Apologetical Dialogue) says: "Rhime them to death, as they do Irish rats." Sir Philip Sidney says (Defence of Poesie): "I will not wish unto you . . . to be rimed to death, as is said to be done in Ireland"; and SHAKESPEARE makes Rosalind say (As You Like It, III, ii): "I was never so be-rhymed since Pythagoras' time, that I was an Irish rat."

Pharaoh's rat. See ICHNEUMON.

Rats! Nonsense! etc.; or an exclamation of annoyance.

Rat, Cat, and Dog.

The cat, the rat, and Lovel our dog,
Rule all England under an hog.

The famous lines affixed to the door of St. Paul's and other places in the City of London in 1484 at the instigation of William Colyngburne, for which, according to the Great Chronicle of London, "he was drawn unto the Tower Hill and there full cruelly put to death, at first hanged and straight cut down and ripped, and his bowels cast into the fire". The rhyme implied that the kingdom was ruled by Francis, Viscount Lovel, the king's "spaniel" or dog; Sir Richard Ratcliffe, the Rat; and William Catesby, SPEAKER of the HOUSE OF COMMONS, the Cat. The Hog was the white boar or cognizance of Richard III.

To rat. To forsake a losing side for the stronger party, as rats are said to forsake unseaworthy ships; to become a renegade; to "squeal" or to inform.

To take a rat by the tail (prendre un rat par la queue). An ancient French colloquialism for "to cut a purse". See CUTPURSE.

Rat-catchers. A colloquial term for unorthodox hunting dress.

Rat-killer. APOLLO received this derogatory title from the following incident: Apollo sent a swarm of rats against Crinis, one of his priests, for neglect of his office; but the priest seeing the invaders coming, repented and obtained pardon and the god annihilated the rats with his far-darting arrows.

Rat-race. The relentless struggle to get ahead of one's rivals, particularly in professional and commercial occupations. Rat is used generally as a derogatory epithet.

Rattening. Destroying or taking away another workman's tools, or otherwise incapacitating him from doing work, with the object of forcing him to join a TRADE UNION or to obey its rules. The term was once common in Yorkshire and is of unknown origin.

Rattler. A train, usually a local one, made up of old rolling stock. A term long used in Australia and the U.S.A., and in the latter, it also denotes a rattlesnake.

Raven. A bird of ill omen; fabled to forebode death, and to bring infection and bad luck. The former notion arises from its following an army in the expectation of corpses to raven on; the latter follows from the former, since pestilence kills as fast as the sword.

The raven himself is hoarse
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements.

SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, I, v.

The boding raven on her cottage sat,
And with hoarse croakings warned us of our fate.

GAY: Pastorals; The Dirge.

CICERO was forewarned of his death by the fluttering of ravens, and Macaulay relates the legend that a raven entered the chamber of the great orator the very day of his murder and pulled the clothes off his bed. Like many other birds, ravens indicate the approach of foul weather. When a flock of ravens forsakes the woods we may look for famine and mortality, because ravens bear the characters of SATURN, the author of these calamities, and have a very early knowledge of the bad disposition of that planet.

According to Roman legend, ravens were once as white as swans and not inferior in size; but one day a raven told APOLLO that Coronis, a Thessalian NYMPH whom he passionately loved, was faithless. The god shot the nymph with his dart; but hating the tell-tale bird:

He blacked the raven o'er,
And bid him prate in his white plumes no more.

ADDISON: Translation of Ovid, Bk. II.

In Christian art, the raven is an emblem of God's Providence, in allusion to the ravens which fed Elijah. St. Oswald holds in his hand a raven with a ring in its mouth; St. Benedict has a raven at his feet; ST. PAUL THE HERMIT is drawn with a raven bringing him a loaf of bread.

The fatal raven, consecrated to ODIN, the Danish war-god, was the emblem on the Danish Standard, Landeyda (the desolation of the country), and was said to have been woven and embroidered in one noontide by the daughters of Ragnar Lodbrok, son of SIGURD. If the Danish arms were destined to defeat, the raven hung his wings; if victory was to attend them, he stood erect and soaring, as if inviting the warriors to follow.

The Danish raven, lured by annual prey,
Hung o'er the land incessant.
JAMES THOMSON: Liberty, Pt. IV.

The two ravens that sit on the shoulders of Odin are called Huginn and Muninn (Mind and Memory).

Ravenstone (Ger. Rabenstein). The old stone gibbet of Germany; so called from the ravens which were wont to perch on it.

Do not think
I'll honour you so much as save your throat
From the Ravenstone, by choking you myself.
BYRON: Werner, II, ii.

Raw. Johnny Raw. A raw recruit; a "new chum", a GREENHORN.

A raw deal. A transaction which is harsh or unfair to a person, perhaps from the idea that it leaves him feeling "raw" or hurt.

To touch one on the raw. To mention something that makes a person wince, like touching a horse on a raw place in currying him.

Rawhead and Bloody-bones. A BOGY at one time the terror of children.

The indiscretion of servants, whose usual method is to awe children and keep them in subjection, by telling them of raw-head and bloody-bones.—LOCKE: Thoughts on Education.

Razee. An old naval term for a ship of war cut down (or razed) to a smaller size, as a seventy-four reduced to a frigate.

Razor. On the razor's edge. To be in a hazardous position or a critical situation.

To cut blocks with a razor. See under CUT.

Razzia (ră' zi á). An incursion made by the military into enemy territory for the purpose of carrying off cattle or slaves, or for enforcing tribute. It is the French form of an Arabic word usually employed in connexion with Algerian and North African affairs.

Razzle-dazzle. A boisterous spree, a jollification.

On the razzle, or razzle-dazzle. On the spree, on a hilarious drunken frolic.

Re (rē) (Lat). Respecting; in reference to; as "re Brown", in reference to the case of Brown.

Reach of a river. The part which lies between two points or bends; so called because it reaches from point to point.

We are now well along Halfway Reach, the portion of the water street to London which is the midway point between the City and Gravesend.

A. G. LINNEY:

The Lore and Lore of London's River, ch. vii.

Read. To read between the lines. See under LINE.

To read oneself in. Said of an Anglican clergyman on entering upon a new incumbency, because one of his first duties is to give a public reading of the THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES in the church to which he has been appointed, and to make the Declaration of Assent.

Reader. The designation of certain senior lecturers at many of the universities; at the INNS OF COURT, one who reads lectures in law. In printing, one who reads and corrects proof sheets before publication. In a publisher's office, one who reads and reports on manuscripts submitted for publication.

Lay Reader. In the CHURCH OF ENGLAND, a layman licensed by the BISHOP to conduct church services; namely, Morning and Evening Prayer (except the Absolution) and the Litany. A Lay Reader may also publish BANS OF MARRIAGE, preach (except at Holy Communion), catechize children, etc. The modern office dates from 1866.

Ready. An elliptical expression for ready money.

Lord Strutt was not flush in ready, either to go to law, or clear old debts.

ARBUTHNOT: History of John Bull.

Real Presence. The doctrine that Christ Himself is present in the bread and wine of the EUCHARIST after consecration, as contrasted with doctrines that maintain the Body and Blood are only symbolically present.

Realism. In mediæval scholastic philosophy the opposite of NOMINALISM; the belief that abstract concepts or universals are real things existing independently of our conceptions and their expression. It was a development from PLATO's metaphysic and was held in varying forms by ERIGENA, REMIGIUS, St. Anselm, ABELARD, Albertus Magnus, Thomas Aquinas, DUNS SCOTUS, and others.

In literature and art it denotes the attempt to present life as it is, however unpleasant, ugly or distasteful. Zola and Maupassant were leaders of this school in France at the end of the 19th century. The brutality and outspokenness of their writings led to an outcry, thus Anatole France described Zola's novel La Terre as "a heap of ordure". Realism often tends to emphasize the crude, the perverted, and the immoral somewhat disproportionately, at the expense of the more balanced, admirable or beautiful.

Realpolitik (rē al po' li tēk') (Ger.). Practical politics, political realism; politics based on national "interests" or material considerations as distinct from moral objectives.

Reaper. The grim reaper. Death; often depicted, like Time, with a scythe.

Rearmouse, or Reremouse. The bat (O.E. hreremus, probably the fluttering-mouse; from hrere-an, to move or flutter). The bat is not, of course, a flying mouse.

Reason. Age of Reason. See under AGE. It stands to reason. It is logically manifest; this is the Lat. constat (constare, to stand together).

The Goddess of Reason. The central figure in an attempt to supersede Christianity during the French Revolution. The first Feast of Reason was held on 20th BRUMAIRE, 1793, when the goddess Mlle Candeille of the Opera was enthroned in the cathedral of Notre-Dame which became the Temple of Reason. She was dressed in white, with a red Phrygian cap and the pike of Jupiter-People in her hand. Mme Momoro, wife of a member of the CONVENTION, was later installed at St. Sulpice. Goddesses of Liberty and Reason were soon set up throughout France, one allegedly wearing a fillet bearing the words "Turn me not into License!" SATURNALIA of a disgusting kind accompanied these installations.

The woman's reason. I think so just because I do think so. (See SHAKESPEARE'S Two Gentlemen of Verona, I, ii.)

First then a woman will, or won't, depend on't; If she will do't, she will, and there's an end on't.
AARON HILL: Epilogue to "Zara".

Rebeccaites (re bek' a its). Bands of Welsh tenant-farmers dressed as women who were responsible for the Rebecca Riots of 1839 and 1842-1843, which were suppressed with military aid. They demolished turnpike gates and were largely a reaction against rates, TITHES, rents and an unfair system of land-holding. These riots occurred in Carmarthenshire, Pembroke, and Brecon, and the rioters took their name from Gen. xxiv, 60; when Rebecca left her father's house, Laban and his family "blessed her", and said, "Let thy seed possess the gate of those which hate them."

Rebellion, The Great. In English history, the period of the Civil Wars which ended in the execution of Charles I in 1649 (30 January). See RESTORATION; FIFTEEN; THE FORTY-FIVE under FORTY.

Rebus (rē' būs) (Lat., with things). A hieroglyphic riddle, non verbis sed rebus. The origin of the word has, somewhat doubtfully, been traced to the lawyers of Paris, who, during the carnival, used to satirize the follies of the day in SQUIBS called De rebus quæ geruntur (on the current events), and, to avoid libel actions, employed hieroglyphics either wholly or in part.

In HERALDRY the name is given to punning devices on a coat of arms suggesting the name of the family to whom it belongs; as the broken spear on the shield of Nicholas Breakspear (Pope Adrian IV).

Recessional. The music or words, or both, accompanying the procession of clergy and choir when they retire after a service. The term is often associated with Rudyard Kipling's well-known verses (1897) beginning:

God of our fathers, known of old—
Lord of our far-flung battle-line—
Beneath whose awful Hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget!

Rechabites (rek' a bits). Members of a teetotal benefit society (the Independent Order of Rechabites), founded in 1835, and so named from Rechab, who enjoined his family to abstain from wine and to dwell in tents (Jer. xxxv, 6, 7).

Recipe, Receipt. Recipe is Latin for "take", and contracted into R is used in doctors' prescriptions. See R.

Reckon. I reckon, in the sense of "I guess", was in use in England by the early 17th century and later became widely used in the U.S.A.

Day of reckoning. Settlement day; when one has to pay up one's account or fulfil one's obligation; also used of the Day of JUDGMENT.

Dead reckoning. See under DEAD.

Out of one's reckoning. Having made a mistake in the date, in one's expectation, etc., or an error of judgment.

To reckon without your hosts. See under HOST.

Recollects. The name given (1) to a reformed branch of the FRANCISCAN Observants first formed in France; and (2) a reformed group of AUGUSTINIAN Hermits founded in Spain. Both orders were first formed in the late 16th century.

Record. That which is recorded, originally "got by heart" (Lat. cor, cordis, heart); hence the best performance or most striking event of its kind recorded, especially in such phrases as to beat, or break the record, to do it in record time, etc.; also the disc on which music or words are recorded for retransmission by gramophone or record-player.

Court of Record. A court where proceedings are officially recorded and can be produced as evidence. The Supreme Court is a superior court of record.

For the record. To make a statement of one's views, etc., for public consumption or publication.

Off the record. Originally a legal term whereby a judge directs that improper or irrelevant evidence shall be struck off the record. This later became commonly synonymous with "in confidence", an unofficial expression of views.

Recrécant is one who yields (from O.Fr. recroire, to yield in trial by combat); alluding to the judicial combats, when the person who wished to give in cried for mercy, and was held a coward and infamous.

Rector. See CLERICAL TITLES.

Recusants (rek' ū zānts). The name given from the reign of Elizabeth I to those who refused to attend the services of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND (Lat. recusare, to refuse). The term commonly denoted "popish recusants" although properly it included PROTESTANT dissenters. Fines were first exacted under statute in 1552 and 1559 at the rate of 1s. per Sunday but raised to the exorbitant sum of £20 per month in 1587. Fortunately they were intermittently imposed, and the last fines for recusancy were those in 1782 on two Yorkshire labourers and their wives.

Red. One of the primary colours (see under COLOURS); in HERALDRY said to signify magnanimity and fortitude; in liturgical use worn at certain seasons; and in popular folklore the colour of magic.

Red is the colour of magic in every country, and has been so from the very earliest times. The caps of fairies and musicians are well-nigh always red.

YEATS:

Fairy and Folk Tales of the Irish Peasantry (The Trooping Fairies—The Merrow).

Nowadays it is more often symbolical of anarchy and revolution—"Red ruin, and the breaking up of laws" (Tennyson: Guinevere, 421). In the French Revolution the Red Republicans were those extremists who never hesitated to dye their hands in blood. In Russia red is supposed to be the beautiful colour, but in general red is regarded as the colour of radicalism, socialism (see RED FLAG, under FLAG), and revolution.

Red is the colour of the royal livery; and it is said that this colour was adopted by huntsmen because fox-hunting was declared a royal sport by Henry II. (See IN PINK under PINK.)

In the old ballads red was frequently applied to gold ("the gude red gowd"), and in thieves' CANT a gold watch is a red kettle, and the chain a red tackle. One of the names given by the alchemists to the PHILOSOPHER'S STONE was the red tincture, because with its help they hoped to transmute the base metals into gold.

In the red. Overdrawn at the bank; in debt; or said of a business running at a loss. From the banking practice of showing overdrawn accounts in red.

To paint the town red. See under PAINT.

To see red. To give way to excessive passion or anger; to be violently moved, TO RUN AMOK (see under RUN).

To see the red light. To be aware of approaching disaster; to realize it is time to desist; to take warning. From the railway signal, where the red light signifies danger.

Admiral of the Red. See under ADMIRAL.

Red Barn, The murder in the. A sensational murder at Polstead, near Ipswich, that achieved lasting notoriety in melodrama and story. The Red Barn or The Gypsy's Curse was first performed at Weymouth in 1828 and gained immediate and widespread popularity. The theme, essentially that of the innocent village maiden, seduced, and later murdered, by a local man of property, next appeared in book form as The Awful Adventure of Maria Monk, and in other titles. They are all founded on the murder of Maria Marten, a mole-catcher's daughter of loose morals who first bore a child to Thomas Corder, the son of a prosperous farmer. Later William Corder, younger brother of Thomas, became enamoured of her with the inevitable consequences, but avoided marriage. In May 1827 it seems that arrangements were made for Maria to meet him at the Red Barn on his farm with the intention of going to Ipswich to be married. Maria was not seen alive again, but Corder decamped to London and married one Mary Moore, who kept a school. Eventually Maria's body was discovered in the Red Barn and William Corder was hanged for her murder at Bury St. Edmunds in August 1828.

Red Biddy. See under BIDDY.

Red Book. A directory relating to the court, the nobility, and the "UPPER TEN" (see under TEN) generally. The Royal Kalendar, published from 1767 to 1893, was known by this name, as also Webster's Royal Red Book, a similar work first issued in 1847.

The name is also given to certain special works covered in red, such as the official parliamentary records of the old Austro-Hungarian Empire, similar to our BLUE BOOKS, etc.

The Red Book of the Exchequer. Liber ruber Scaccarii in the Public Record Office. A collection of Exchequer documents compiled by Alexander of Swerford in the earlier part of the 13th century with subsequent additions. It contains material from the 12th to the 16th centuries and includes such important documents as the Laws of Henry I, the Dialogue of the Exchequer, and the Carte Baronum (the returns of TENANTS-IN-CHIEF in 1166 certifying how many knights' fees they held and the services due to the king, etc.).

The Red Book of Hergest (Llyfr Coch Hergest). A Welsh manuscript of the late 14th or early 15th century containing the MABINOGION, poems by TALIESIN and Llywarch Hen, a history of the world from ADAM to 1318, etc. It is now in the library of Jesus College, Oxford.

Red Button. In the former Chinese Empire, a MANDARIN of the first class wore a button or knob of red coral or ruby as a badge of honour in his cap. Cp. THE NINE RANKS OF MANDARIN under MANDARIN; PANJANDRUM.

Red cent. Not a red cent. No money at all; "stony broke". An Americanism; the cent used to be copper, but is now an alloy of copper, tin and zinc. Hence, not worth a red cent, worth nothing at all.

Red Comyn. Sir John Comyn the younger of Badenoch, nephew of John Balliol, king of SCOTLAND, so called from his ruddy complexion and red hair, and son of Black Comyn, John Comyn the elder, who was swarthy and black-haired. He was stabbed by Robert Bruce in 1306 in the church of the Minorites at Dumfries, and afterwards dispatched by Lindsay and Kirkpatrick.

The Red Crescent, Lion, Sun. The equivalent in non-Christian countries of the RED CROSS, i.e. the military hospital service.

Red Cross. See under CROSS.

The Red Cross Knight in Spenser's Faerie Queene (Bk. I) is a personification of St. GEORGE, the patron saint of ENGLAND. He typifies Christian holiness and his adventures are an allegory of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND. The knight is sent by the Queen to destroy a DRAGON which was ravaging the kingdom of Una's father. After many adventures and trials Una and the knight are united in marriage.

Red Duster. The Red Ensign, the flag of British merchant ships since 1674, but also the senior ensign of the Royal Navy until 1864 where it was used as squadronal colour. Its use was solely reserved for the Merchant Navy in 1864. It is a red flag with a union device in the upper canton, but before 1707 it bore a St. GEORGE'S CROSS.

Red Eye (U.S.A.). Cheap whisky.

Red Feathers. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Red Flag. See under FLAG.

Red Friday. Friday 31 July 1925, when a stoppage in the coal industry, planned to meet the threat of wage cuts, was averted by promise of government subsidies to support wages, etc. It was so called by the Labour press to distinguish it from BLACK FRIDAY of 15 April 1921, when union leaders called off an impending strike of railwaymen and transport workers designed to help the miners who were locked out.

Red Hand of Ulster. See under ULSTER.

The Red Hat. The flat broad-brimmed hat formerly bestowed upon cardinals, hence the office of CARDINAL.

Red Herring. See DRAWING A RED HERRING under HERRING.

Red Indians. The North American Indians; so called because of their copper-coloured skin; also called Redskins and Red men.

The Red Laws. The civil code of ancient ROME. Juvenal says, Per lege rubras majoram leges (Satires, xiv, 193). The civil laws, being written in vermilion, were called rubrica, and rubrica vetavit means: It is forbidden by the civil laws.

The prætor's laws were inscribed in white letters and imperial rescripts were written in purple.

The Red Letter. See THE ZINOVIEV LETTER under FORGERIES.

Red-letter day. A lucky day; a day to be recalled with delight. In ALMANACS, and more commonly in ecclesiastical calendars, important FEAST days and saints' days are printed in red, other days in black; in the CHURCH OF ENGLAND the term denotes those festivals for which the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER includes a collect, epistle, and gospel for that day.

Red Lamp, or Red Light district. The brothel-quarter of a large town; from the red light frequently displayed outside a bawdy-house.

Red Man. A term in ALCHEMY, used in conjunction with "white woman" to express the affinity and interaction of chemicals. In the long list of terms that Surly scoffingly gives (Ben Jonson's The Alchemist, II, iii) "your red man and your white woman" are mentioned.

The French say that a red man commands the elements, and wrecks off the coasts of Brittany those whom he dooms to death. The legend affirms that he appeared to NAPOLEON and foretold his downfall. See also RED INDIANS, above.

Red rag. Old slang for the tongue.

Discovering in his mouth a tongue,
He must not his palaver balk;
So keeps it running all day long,
And fancies his red rag can talk.
PETER PINDAR: Lord B. and his Motions.

Also in the phrase Like a red rag to a bull, anything that is calculated to excite rage. Toreadors' capes are lined with red.

Red Sea. So called by the Romans (Mare rubrum) and by the Greeks, as a translation of the Semitic name, the reason for which is uncertain. One explanation is that it was the "sea of reeds", another that it is from the corals on its bed; or again, from the reflection of the eastern sky in its waters, etc.

Red Shirt. See GARIBALDI.

Red snow. Snow reddened by the presence of a minute alga, Protococcus nivialis, not uncommon in arctic and alpine regions where its sanguine colour formerly caused it to be regarded as a portent of evil.

Red tape. Official formality, or rigid adherence to rules and regulations, carried to excess; so called because lawyers and government officials tie their papers together with red tape. Charles Dickens is said to have introduced the expression; but the scorn poured on this evil of officialdom by Carlyle brought the term into popular use. Hence to have a red tape mind is to be rigidly bound by the rules even if they do not sensibly apply; to be hidebound; to lack imaginative insight.

Redbreasts. The old BOW STREET RUNNERS. Dickens says:

The Bow Street Runners ceased out of the land soon after the introduction of the new police. I remember them very well as standing about the door of the office in Bow Street. They had no other uniform than a blue dress-coat, brass buttons . . . and a bright red cloth waistcoat . . . The slang name for them was "Redbreasts".
Letters, 18 April 1880.

Redbrick. A term much favoured by journalists and often used in scholastic circles; it is loosely applied to all English universities other than those of Oxford and Cambridge. The name was introduced by Bruce Truscot (Professor E. Allison Peers: d. 1952) in his book Redbrick University, 1943. He was primarily dealing with the universities of Birmingham, Bristol, Leeds, Liverpool, Manchester, Reading, and Sheffield, and expressly excluded London. In his Introduction he says: "So unique has the University of London become and so essentially its own are the problems which it has to solve, that in this book very little specific mention will be made of it." Of the term itself: "Though red brick, rather than dingy stone, has been chosen as the symbol of the new foundation it must be categorically stated that no one university alone has been in the author's mind." Cp. CAMFORD; OXBRIDGE.

There is nothing that makes me more angry than to bear the University of London associated with that hideous, snobbish term "Red Brick". The term itself ought not to be used but looking at this Senate House, or indeed at the classical portico of University College, I think it must be some flight of imagination that describes these, even architecturally, as "Red Brick".

SIR IFOR EVANS:

Address to Convocation (University of London),
9 January 1960.

Redcap. A colloquial term for British military police, who wear red covers to their caps; in the U.S.A., a porter at a railway- or bus-station.

Redcoats. British soldiers, from the colour of their uniforms in line regiments before the introduction of KHAKI. Cromwell's New Model Army was the first to wear red coats as a uniform. Regiments were distinguished by the colour of their facings—Blue, Green, Buff, etc. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Red-haired persons. For centuries the red-haired have been popularly held to be unreliable, deceitful, and quick-tempered (see HAIR). The fat of a dead red-haired person used to be in demand as an ingredient for poisons (see Middleton's The Witch, V, ii) and Chapman says that flattery, like the plague—

Strikes into the brain of man,
And rageth in his entrails when he can,
Worse than the poison of a red-hair'd man.
Bussy d'Ambois, III, i.

Red-handed. In the very act; as though with red blood of murder still on his hand.

Red-laced. A red-laced jacket. Old military slang for a flogging.

Red-lattice phrases. Pot-house talk. A red lattice at the doors and windows was formerly the sign that an ale-house was duly licensed; see the page's quip on Bardolph in Henry IV, Pt. II, ii—"a called me e'en now, my lord, through a red lattice, and I could discern no part of his face from the window."

I, I, I myself sometimes leaving the fear of heaven on the left hand . . . am fain to shuffle, to hedge and to lurch; and yet you, rogue, will enconce your rags . . . your red-lattice phrases . . . under the shelter of your honour.

SHAKESPEARE:

The Merry Wives of Windsor, II, ii.

Redneck. In the U.S.A., a disparaging term for one of the "uneducated" masses. Cp. ROOINEK.

Redder. One who tries to separate parties fighting, the adviser, the person who redes or settles a quarrel (M.E. reden, put in order).

"But father," said Jenny, "if they come to lounder ilk ither [thump each other] as they did last time, sildna I cry on you?" "At no hand, Jenny; the redder gets aye the warst lick in the fray."

SCOTT: Old Mortality, ch. iv.

Rede (O.E. raed). Archaic word meaning counsel, advice; also a verb.

To reckon one's own rede. To be governed by one's own better judgment.

Do not, as some ungracious pastors do, Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven, Whilst, like a puffed and reckless libertine, Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads, And recks not his own rede.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, iii.

Ethelred II, King of England (968, 978-1016) was nicknamed the "Redeless" or "Unready", i.e. destitute of counsel.

Redemptioner. An immigrant who was obliged to pay back his passage money out of his earnings after landing in the new country, or who paid the master of the ship by his services.

Redemptionists. Members of a religious order whose object was to redeem Christian captives and slaves from the Mohammedans. They are also known as TRINITARIANS.

Redemptorists. Members of the Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer, a religious order founded at Scala, Italy, in 1732 by St. Alphonsus Marla di Liguori. They are largely concerned with mission work among the poor and foreign missions.

Reductio ad absurdum (Lat.). Proof of the falsity of a principle by demonstrating that its logical consequence involves an absurdity. It is used loosely of taking an argument or principle to impractical lengths. "The more sleep one has the longer one lives. To sleep all the time ensures the longest possible life."

Reduplicated, or Ricochet Words.

There are probably some hundreds of these words in English, which usually have an intensifying force, such as: chit-chat, click-clack, clitter-clatter, dilly-dally, ding-dong, drip-drop, fal-lal, fiddle-faddle, flim-flam, flip-flap, flip-flop, hanky-panky, harum-scarum, helter-skelter, higgledy-piggledy, hob-nob, hodge-podge, hoity-toity, hubble-bubble, hugger-mugger, hurly-burly, mingle-mangle, mish-mash, namby-pamby, niminy-piminy, nosy-posy, pell-mell, ping-pong, pit-pat, pitter-patter, pribbles and prabbles, randem-tandem, randy-dandy, razzle-dazzle, riff-raff, roly-poly, shilly-shally, slip-slop, slish-slosh, tick-tack, tip-top, tittle-tattle, wibble-wobble, wig-wag, wiggle-waggle, wish-wash, wishy-washy.

Ree. An interjection formerly used by teamsters when they wanted the horses to go to the right. "Heck" or "Hey!" was used for the contrary direction. In the U.S.A., the interjections are "Gee! Gee!" and "Haw! Haw!" for right and left respectively.

Who with a hey and ree the beasts command.
MIDDLETON: Micro Cynicon, VIII, 121.

Reed. A broken, or bruised reed. Something not to be trusted for support; a weak adherent. Egypt is called a broken reed, in which Hezekiah could not trust if the Assyrians made war on Jerusalem: "which broken reed if a man leans on, it will go into his hand and pierce it." (See II Kings xviii, 21; Is. xxxvi, 6.)

A reed shaken by the wind. A person blown about by every wind of doctrine. John the Baptist (said Christ) was not a "reed shaken by the wind", but from the very first had a firm belief in the Messiahship of the Son of MARY, and this conviction was not shaken by fear or favour. See Matt. xi, 7.

Reef. He must take in a reef or so. He must retrench; he must reduce his expenses. The reef of a sail is that part which is rolled and tied up by the reef points to reduce the area caught by the wind.

Reefer. An old name for a midshipman because they attended to reefing in the tops; and a closely fitting double-breasted jacket or short coat as worn by seamen. The name also denotes an oyster that grows on reefs; in Australia, one searching for GOLD; and it is slang for a marijuana cigarette, possibly from Mexican grifa or grif, a person intoxicated from this or similar drugs.

Reekie, Auld. See AULD REEKIE.

Reel. Right off the reel. Without intermission, continuously. From the use of a reel for winding rope, etc.

We've been travelling best part of twenty-four hours right off the reel.

BOLDBREWED: Robbery under Arms, ch. xxxi.

The Scottish dance called a reel is from Gaelic righil or ruidhil.

Reeve (O.E. gerefa). The local officer and representative of his lord. The manorial reeve was generally a VILLEIN elected by his fellows. He was responsible for organizing the daily work of the farm and it was his duty to see that people were at their tasks. The shire-reeve or SHERIFF was an official of the SHIRE and the PORT-REEVE, of a town. There was a port-reeve in Tavistock as late as 1886.

His lordes sheep, his cattle, his dayerie,
His swyn, his hors, his store, and his poultrie,
Was wholly in this reeves governynge.

CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales (Prologue).

Reformation, The. Specifically, the religious revolution of the 16th century which destroyed the religious unity of Western Europe and resulted in the establishment of "Reformed" or PROTESTANT churches. It aimed at reforming the abuses in the Roman Church and ended in schism, its chief leaders being Luther, Zwingli, and Calvin (see CALVINISM, ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH).

The Counter-Reformation. A name given by historians to the movement for reform within the Roman Church (much stimulated by the REFORMATION) and the measures taken to combat the spread of Protestantism and to regain lost ground. It is usually reckoned to extend from the mid-16th century, when the Council of Trent (1545-1563) strengthened and re-awakened the life and discipline of the Church, until the time of the THIRTY YEARS WAR (1618-48). The JESUITS played a major role, whilst the INQUISITION and the INDEX strengthened Papal influence.

Refresher. An extra fee paid to a BARRISTER during long cases in addition to his retaining fee, originally to remind him of the case entrusted to his charge.

Refreshment Sunday. See MID-LENT SUNDAY.

Regan. The second of King LEAR's unfilial daughters. In SHAKESPEARE'S King Lear (IV, ii) called "most barbarous, most degenerate". She was married to the Duke of Cornwall, and in Geoffrey of Monmouth, from whose Historia Britonum the story originally comes, she is called Regau. See CORDELIA; GONERIL.

Regard, or Reguard. A forest visitation held triennially to review (regard) the forest boundaries, matters affecting the king's rights, and to inquire of dogs kept in the forest, which had to be lawed (i.e. to have the three talons cut from each front foot). Reguard was carried out by 12 selected KNIGHTS. See FOREST COURTS.

Regatta. A boat-race, or organized series of boat races; the name originally given to the races held between Venetian gondoliers, the Italian regata meaning "strife" or "contention".

Regency. In British history, architecture, and decoration the term is usually applied to the period 1811-1820 when George, PRINCE OF WALES (afterwards George IV), acted as regent during his father's (George III) illness. In French history it refers to the years from 1715 to 1723 when the Duke of Orleans was regent for the minor Louis XV.

Regent's Park (London). This park, formerly called Marylebone Park Fields, covering 410 acres of crown property, was laid out by John Nash from 1812 for the PRINCE REGENT, who had the ultimate intention of building a palace there. Regent Street was the connecting link with Carlton House.

Regicides. The name given to those 67 men who sat in judgment on Charles I in 1649 and especially the 58 who signed his death warrant. After the RESTORATION 10 were executed and 25 others imprisoned, the majority for life. The remainder escaped or were dead. The bodies of Cromwell, Ireton, and Bradshaw were disinterred, and after a solemn trial for treason were dismembered and exhibited at TYBURN and elsewhere.

Regimental and Divisional Nicknames. British Army

Assaye Regiment. The 74th Foot, later 2nd Battalion Highland Light Infantry, now part of the Royal Highland Fusiliers (Princess Margaret's Own Glasgow and Ayrshire Regiment). The regiment distinguished itself at the Battle of Assaye (1803) when 2,000 British and 2,500 Sepoy troops under Wellesley defeated 50,000 Maharrattas.

Belfast Regiment. The old 35th Foot, later 1st Battalion Royal Sussex Regiment, now 3rd Battalion The Queen's Regiment, was raised in Belfast in 1701.

Bengal Tigers. The 17th Foot, later The Royal Leicestershire Regiment, now 4th Battalion Royal Anglian Regiment, was granted a badge of a royal tiger to honour their services in India (1804-1823).

Regimental and Divisional nicknames (British)

Bingham's Dandies. The 17th Lancers, now 17th/21st Lancers. When the regiment was commanded by Lord Bingham (later the Earl of Lucan) from 1826 to 1837, it was noted for its smart appearance.

Bird Catchers. This name is used for three regiments, each of which captured a French EAGLE Standard: (1) 1st Dragoons, later Royal Dragoons (1st Dragoons), captured an Eagle at Waterloo. The regiment merged with the Royal Horse Guards (The Blues) in 1969 to form "The Blues and Royals"; (2) 2nd Dragoons, the GREYS (see below), captured an Eagle at Waterloo; (3) 87th Foot, later Royal Irish Fusiliers, captured an Eagle at Barossa (1811). This regiment became the 3rd Battalion Royal Irish Rangers. Disbanded 1969.

Black Horse. The 7th Dragoon Guards, now the 4th/7th Royal Dragoon Guards, from their black facings.

Black Watch. In 1725, six companies of clansmen loyal to the King were raised, and were stationed in small detachments to keep watch on the HIGHLANDS and the clans. Their tartan was dark, and their name was coined from a combination of this and their function, and was used to distinguish them from the English troops performing the same duty. These companies later became the 42nd Foot, now The Black Watch (Royal Highland Regiment). Black Watch has been a part of the official regimental title for over one hundred years.

Blayney's Bloodhounds. The 87th Foot, the Royal Irish Fusiliers (Princess Victoria's). The regiment received this name for their success in capturing Irish rebels in 1798 when commanded by Lord Blayney. The regiment became the 3rd Battalion Royal Irish Rangers. Disbanded 1969.

Blind Half-Hundred. Many of the men of the 50th Foot suffered from ophthalmia (a common cause of blindness) during the Egyptian campaign of 1801. The regiment later became 1st Battalion Queen's Own Royal West Kent Regiment, and is now part of the 2nd Battalion The Queen's Regiment.

Bloody Eleventh. The 11th Foot, later Devonshire Regiment, now part of the Devonshire and Dorset Regiment. After their stubborn fight in the Battle of Salamanca (1812), the regiment had 71 out of over 400 men left fit for duty, and many of these survivors were wounded.

Blues, The. See OXFORD BLUES, below.

Bob's Own. The Irish Guards. Field-Marshal Earl Roberts (known to the Army as "Bobs") was the first Colonel of the regiment.

Brickdusts. This name is derived from the brick-red facings of the 53rd Foot King's Shropshire Light Infantry. The regiment became the 3rd Battalion The Light Infantry in 1968, and is also known as the "Five and Threepennies", a play on their old number and the old rate of an Ensign's pay.

Buckmaster's Light Infantry. The 3rd West India Regiment (disbanded 1870) was so called after Buckmaster, a tailor who sold unauthorized Light Infantry uniforms to the officers of the regiment.

Bufs, The. The 3rd Foot was descended from a regiment raised for Dutch service in 1572 and the London TRAIN-BANDS, all of which had buff uniform or facings. The name became part of the official regimental title almost 300 years ago, but in recent times the regiment has been titled The Buffs (Royal East Kent Regiment) and is now part of the 2nd Battalion The Queen's Regiment.

Cheesemongers. The 1st Life Guards; from 1788 when the regiment was remodelled, some commissions were refused because certain officers were the sons of merchants and were not "gentlemen". The 1st and 2nd Life Guards were amalgamated in 1922 to form the present regiment.

Cherry-Pickers. This name was given to the 11th Hussars when a detachment was surprised by French cavalry while picking cherries in a Spanish orchard in 1811 and had to fight a dismounted action. This regiment amalgamated with the 10th Royal Hussars to form the Royal Hussars (Prince of Wales's Own) in 1969.

Cherubims. A name naturally given to the 11th Hussars when they adopted crimson overalls (trousers) in 1840 (see also CHERRY-PICKERS).

Crossbelts. 8th Hussars, now part of the Queen's Royal Irish Hussars. During the Battle of Almenara (1710), the regiment almost destroyed a Spanish cavalry regiment. The 8th Hussars removed the Spaniards' crossbelts and wore them over the right shoulder.

Death or Glory Boys. The 17th Lancers, now 17th/21st Lancers. The regimental badge, chosen by the first Colonel in memory of General Wolfe, is a

Regimental and Divisional nicknames (British)

Devil's Head with the motto "Or Glory".

Desert Rats. The name associated with the 7th Armoured Division, whose divisional sign was the desert rat (jerboa), which was adopted during its "scurrying and biting" tactics in Libya. The final design of the badge was a red rat outlined on a black background. The division served throughout the North Africa campaign, and in North-West Europe from Normandy to Berlin.

Devil's Own. Has been given to two regiments. Tradition has it that it was given to the INNS OF COURT Yeomanry (a Territorial unit, now disbanded) by George III when he found that the regiment consisted mainly of lawyers. It was also applied to the 88th Foot, later 1st Battalion Connaught Rangers (disbanded in 1922), by General Picton in honour of their bravery in the Peninsular War.

Die-Hards. At the Battle of Albuera (1811), the 57th Foot, later 1st Battalion Middlesex Regiment, now 4th Battalion The Queen's Regiment, had three-quarters of the officers and men either killed or wounded. Colonel Inglis was badly wounded, but refused to be moved, instead he lay where he had fallen crying, "Die hard, my men, die hard."

Dirty Half-Hundred. The 50th Foot, later 1st Battalion Royal West Kent Regiment, now part of the 2nd Battalion The Queen's Regiment. At Vimiera in 1808, the men wiped their sweating faces on their cuffs, transferring the black dye from their facings.

Dirty Shirts. The 101st Foot, later 1st Battalion Munster Fusiliers (disbanded 1922), fought in their shirt-sleeves at Delhi during the Indian Mutiny (1857).

Duke of Wellington's Bodyguard. The 5th Foot, Royal Northumberland Fusiliers. The name dates from the Peninsular War, when the regiment was attached to Army Headquarters for a long period. The regiment became the 1st Battalion Royal Regiment of Fusiliers in 1968.

Earl of Mar's Grey-Breeks. The 21st Foot, later Royal Scots Fusiliers, now part of the Royal Highland Fusiliers (Princess Margaret's Own Glasgow and Ayrshire Regiment), from the colour of breeches when the regiment was raised by the Earl of Mar in 1678.

Elegant Extracts. The 8th Foot, the King's Shropshire Light Infantry, was remodelled in 1813 when the officers were removed after a number of court-martial. New officers were selected from other regiments to take their places. This regiment became the 3rd Battalion The Light Infantry in 1968.

Elliott's Tailors. The 15th (King's) Hussars, now part of the 15th/19th King's Royal Hussars. In 1759, Lt.-Col. Elliott (later Lord Heathfield) enlisted a large number of London tailors into a new cavalry regiment modelled on the Prussian Hussars. In 1768, the regiment was granted the title of the "King's Light Dragoons"; the later title was adopted in 1806.

Emperor's Chambermaids. The 14th King's Hussars, now the 14th/20th King's Hussars, who captured Joseph Bonaparte's carriage and retained a silver chamber-pot as a trophy after the Battle of Vittoria (1813).

Eversworded 29th. The 29th Foot, the Worcestershire Regiment. When the regiment was serving in North America in 1746, the officers were attacked in their Mess by Indians who had been thought to be loyal. The Indians were beaten off, but to guard against any similar attack in the future, the unique custom of officers wearing swords at dinner in the Mess was instituted. The custom is now observed by the Captain of the Week and the Orderly Officer at dinner and on certain other occasions. This regiment amalgamated with the Sherwood Foresters to form the Worcestershire and Sherwood Foresters' Regiment in 1970.

Fighting Fifth. The 5th Foot, the Royal Northumberland Fusiliers. The name came from a saying attributed to the Duke of Wellington, "The Ever-Fighting, Never-Failing Fifth." The Regiment became the 1st Battalion Royal Regiment of Fusiliers in 1968.

Flamers, The. The 54th Foot, later 2nd Battalion Dorset Regiment, now part of the Devonshire and Dorset Regiment. In September 1781, the 54th Foot was part of a force which captured the privateer base of New London after a fierce fight. The force burnt the town and a number of ships in the harbour.

Green Dragoons. The name given to the 13th Dragoons in the period 1715-1784 when they wore green facings; later the 13th Hussars. Now part of the 13th/18th Royal Hussars (Queen Mary's Own); the facings later changed to buff and are now white. (See also LILYWHITES, below.)

Green Howards. The 19th Foot, from their facings and Sir Charles Howard,

Regimental and Divisional nicknames (British)

Colonel of the Regiment 1738–1748. The name became part of the official title of the regiment in 1920, the present title is The Green Howards (Alexandra, Princess of Wales's Own Yorkshire Regiment).

Green Linnets. The 39th Foot, later 1st Battalion Dorset Regiment, now part of the Devonshire and Dorset Regiment. The name refers to the green facings of the regiment and dates from c. 1741.

Greys, The. The Royal Scots Greys (2nd Dragoons) were raised in 1678. It is now uncertain whether the name comes from their grey horses or uniform, but within 30 years of formation the regiment was known as the "Grey Dragoons". "Scot's Greys" has been part of the official title since 1866, with "Royal" being added 11 years later. By 1971, they will amalgamate with 3rd Carabiniers (Princess of Wales's Dragoon Guards) to form the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers and Greys).

Heavies, The. The heavy cavalry, especially the Dragoon Guards, which consisted of men of greater build and height than Lancers and Hussars. This term has been applied to the larger guns manned by the Royal Artillery and one of its predecessors, the Royal Garrison Artillery.

Hindustan Regiment. The 76th Foot, now the Duke of Wellington's Regiment (West Riding), was so called because the Regiment distinguished itself in the Hindustan campaign of 1803–1805.

Holy Boys. The 9th Foot, later Royal Norfolk Regiment, now part of the 1st Battalion Royal Anglian Regiment. During the Peninsular War, the Spaniards thought that the regimental badge of Britannia represented the Virgin MARY.

Horse Marines. The 17th Lancers, now 17th/21st Lancers. In 1795, two troops of the regiment served on board the frigate H.M.S. Hermione on the West Indies Station. See also under HORSE.

Immortals, The. The 76th Foot, now Duke of Wellington's Regiment (West Riding). During the Mahratta War (1803–1805), almost every man had one or more wounds.

Kiddies, The. A name given to the Scots Guards, when in 1686 James II formed a large camp on Hounslow Heath as a precaution against unrest in London. The (then) three existing Guards regiments were present, and the Scots, being the junior of the three, were given this name.

Kirke's Lambs. The 2nd Foot, later Queen's Royal Regiment (West Surrey), now 1st Battalion The Queen's Regiment. After Sedgemoor (1685), the regiment, under Colonel Percy Kirke, were feared for their cruelty in Somerset and the surrounding area when hunting the rebels. By the time of MONMOUTH'S REBELLION, the regiment was already using the PASCHAL LAMB as its badge.

Lacedæmonians, The. A nickname of the 46th Foot, later 2nd Battalion Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, then part of the Somerset and Cornwall Light Infantry. In 1777, during the American War of Independence, their Colonel is supposed to have made a long speech under heavy fire on Spartan discipline and the military system of the Lacedæmonians. In 1968 this regiment became the 1st Battalion The Light Infantry.

Lilywhites, The. The 13th Hussars, now 13th/18th Hussars. When the regiment was converted from Light Dragoons to Hussars in 1861, buff facings were adopted, but for some reason they were pipeclayed white. When the 13th Hussars and the 18th Hussars were amalgamated in 1922, the nickname was adopted by the new regiment.

Minden Regiments. (1) 12th Foot, later Suffolk Regiment, now 1st Battalion Royal Anglian Regiment. (2) 20th Foot—the Lancashire Fusiliers, known as "the Minden boys", later the (disbanded) 4th Battalion Royal Regiment of Fusiliers. (3) 23rd Foot—the Royal Welch Fusiliers. (4) 25th Foot—King's Own Scottish Borderers. (5) 37th Foot—later Royal Hampshire Regiment, now part of Royal Regiment of Gloucestershire and Hampshire. (6) 51st Foot—King's Own Yorkshire Light Infantry, who became the 2nd Battalion The Light Infantry in 1968.

On 1 August 1759, these six regiments won the most spectacular victory of the SEVEN YEARS WAR by attacking and defeating a superior force of French cavalry. As the regiments advanced to the attack across Minden Heath, the men picked wild roses and stuck them in their caps. To commemorate this victory, the regiments (with the exception of the Royal Welch Fusiliers) wear roses in their caps on Minden Day.

Mutton Lancers. The 2nd Foot, later Queen's Royal Regiment (West Surrey), now 1st Battalion The Queen's Regiment. When the regiment was raised in 1661, the badge of the PASCHAL LAMB (a lamb bearing a flag) was adopted.

Nanny-Goats, or Royal Goats. The 23rd Foot, now the Royal Welch Fusiliers, which has a regimental mascot, a goat, supplied from the Royal herd.

Nutcrackers. The 3rd Foot, later The Buffs (Royal East Kent Regiment), now 2nd Battalion The Queen's Regiment, from their exploits against the French during the Peninsular War.

Old Bold Fifth. The 5th Foot, later Royal Northumberland Fusiliers, now 1st Battalion Royal Regiment of Fusiliers.

Old Braggs. See SLASHERS, below.

Old Dozen. The 12th Foot, later the Suffolk Regiment, now part of the 1st Battalion Royal Anglian Regiment.

Old Fogs. The 87th Foot, the Royal Irish Fusiliers (Princess Victoria's); the name comes from their war-cry at Barossa (1811)—“Faugh-a-Ballagh” (Clear the Way). This regiment became the 3rd Battalion Royal Irish Rangers. Disbanded 1969.

Orange Lilies. 35th Foot, later 1st Battalion Royal Sussex Regiment, now 3rd Battalion The Queen's Regiment. The regiment was raised in Belfast in 1701 by the Earl of Donegal, who chose orange facings in honour of William III. The lilies come from the white plumes which the regiment took from the French Regiment of Royal Roussillon, whom they defeated at Quebec (1759).

Oxford Blues, The. The Royal Horse Guards were so called in 1690, from the Earl of Oxford, their commander, and their blue uniform which dates from 1661. The nickname was later shortened to “The Blues” and was incorporated in the regiment's title as The Royal Horse Guards (The Blues). In March 1969, the regiment amalgamated with the Royal Dragoons (1st Dragoons) to form The Blues and Royals (Royal Horse Guards and 1st Dragoons).

Paget's Irregular Horse. The 4th Hussars, now part of the Queen's Royal Irish Hussars. When the regiment returned to England in 1842 under Colonel Paget, it had lost almost 900 officers and men in its 20 years in India. As the replacements were not as highly trained as the original men, the general standard of drill fell, and the name was coined.

Pompadours, The. The 56th Foot, later 2nd Battalion Essex Regiment, now part of the 3rd Battalion Royal Anglian Regiment. When the regiment was raised in 1755, the facings chosen were purple, the favourite colour of Madame de POMPADOUR, the mistress of Louis XV.

Pontius Pilate's Bodyguard. The 1st Foot, now the Royal Scots (The Royal Regiment). Tradition states that when in French service as Le Régiment de Douglas, a dispute arose with the Régiment de Picardie as to seniority, and an officer of the latter claimed that his regiment was on duty on the night of the crucifixion, to which an officer of Douglas's replied, “Had we been on duty, we would not have slept at our post.”

Queen's Bays. The 2nd Dragoon Guards. From 1767 the regiment was mounted on bay-coloured horses, while other cavalry regiments had black horses. In 1870 the name became official, the regiment being titled 2nd Dragoon Guards (Queen's Bays); it is now part of the 1st (Queen's) Dragoon Guards.

Red Feathers. The 46th Foot, later 2nd Battalion Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, then part of the Somerset and Cornwall Light Infantry. During the American War of Independence, the 46th Foot defeated an American force at Brandywine (1777). The Americans promised to have their revenge, so the regiment dyed their cap feathers red to aid identification by the enemy. The regiment became the 1st Battalion The Light Infantry in 1968.

Ross-Shire Buffs. The 78th Foot, later 2nd Battalion Seaforth Highlanders (Ross-Shire Buffs, the Duke of Albany's), now part of the Queen's Own Highlanders (Seaforth and Camerons). This name became part of the official title soon after the formation of the regiment, and commemorates the colour of their facings and the recruiting area.

Sankey's Horse. The 39th Foot, later 1st Battalion Dorset Regiment, now part of the Devonshire and Dorset Regiment. Sankey was Colonel of the regiment when in Spain (1708-1711), and tradition has it that he mounted the men on mules to enable them to reach the scene of a battle in time to take part.

Saucy Seventh. The 7th Queen's Own Hussars, now part of the Queen's Own Hussars. A regimental recruiting poster of c. 1809 uses this name, an allusion to the regiment's smart appearance.

Saucy Sixth. The 6th Foot, the Royal Warwickshire Regiment. In 1795 the Regiment returned from the West Indies and recruited in Warwickshire, but the required standard was so high that few recruits were found, and the name was coined. In 1968 this regiment became the 2nd Battalion Royal Regiment of Fusiliers.

Slashers, The. The 28th Foot, later

Regimental and Divisional nicknames (British)

Gloucestershire Regiment, now part of the Royal Gloucestershire and Hampshire Regiment. When the regiment was stationed in Canada in 1764, a magistrate harassed the soldiers and their families. A party of heavily disguised soldiers broke into the magistrate's house one night, and during a scuffle the man's ear was cut off. Officially, the identity of the culprits was never discovered, but the 28th acquired the nickname of "The Slashers". Two other names attached to the regiment are "The Braggs" and the "Old Braggs", from Lieut.-General Philip Bragg, Colonel of the regiment 1734-1759.

Snappers, The. The 15th Foot, later East Yorkshire Regiment, now part of the Prince of Wales's Own Regiment of Yorkshire. During the Battle of Brandywine (1777), with ammunition exhausted, the men "snapped" their muskets to give the impression that they were firing; this misled the Americans, and they retired.

Springers, The. The 62nd Foot, later 1st Battalion Wiltshire Regiment, now part of the Duke of Edinburgh's Royal Regiment (Berkshire and Wiltshire). In 1775-1776, during the American War of Independence, the 62nd were used as Light Infantry and the nickname commemorates their alertness and speed in their temporary role.

Tangerines, The. The 2nd Foot, later Queen's Royal Regiment (West Surrey), now 1st Battalion The Queen's Regiment. The regiment was raised in 1661 for service in Tangier, which had become a British possession as part of the dowry of Catherine of Braganza, Queen of Charles II.

Vein-Openers, The. The 29th Foot, later Worcestershire Regiment, now part of the Worcestershire and Sherwood Foresters' Regiment. In 1770, when American colonial discontent with England was increasing, the 29th were in Boston, and while a detachment was guarding the Customs House it was pelted by a mob. During a scuffle a soldier mistook a shout from the crowd for an order and he fired. Other shots followed and four rioters were killed and several wounded. The name was given to the regiment by the Americans for their part in what was called the "Boston Massacre".

Virgin Mary's Bodyguard. The 7th Dragoon Guards, now part of the 4th/7th Royal Dragoon Guards. During the reign of George II the regiment was sent to assist the Archduchess Maria Theresa of Austria.

Wolfe's Own. The 47th Foot, later the Loyal Regiment (North Lancashire), so called for their distinguished service under General Wolfe at Quebec (1759), now, with the Lancashire Regiment (Prince of Wales's Volunteers), the Queen's Lancashire Regiment.

United States Army

In the following representative selection all are Infantry Divisions unless otherwise stated. Unofficial nicknames are marked thus *.

1st: The Big Red One. Name given it by the Germans, who saw the red "1" on their shoulder patch. According to legend, the original red "1" was improvised from the cap of an enemy soldier killed by a 1st Division DOUGHBOY in World War I when the division earned the right to proclaim itself the first American division (1918) in France, first to fire on the enemy, first to suffer casualties, first to take prisoners, first to stage a major offensive, and first to enter Germany.

2nd: Indianhead. A long-forgotten truck driver of the division in World War I adorned the side of his vehicle with a handsome shield framing an Indian head which was adopted by the division as its shoulder insignia. Hence the name "Indian Division".

3rd: Marne Division. In World War I, because of its impregnable stand against the Germans' last counter-offensive. The three diagonal stripes in its insignia symbolize its participation in three major battles in 1918.

4th: Ivy Division. From its insignia. The selection of that design is one of the few known instances of authorized military frivolity. "I-vy" is simply spelling out in a letter form the Roman numeral for "four".

5th: Red Diamond. From its insignia. The Red Diamond was selected at the suggestion of Major Charles A. Meals that their insignia be the "Ace of Diamonds, less the Ace". Originally there was a white "5" in the centre. This was removed when they reached France.

8th: Pathfinder. From their insignia, which is a golden arrow through a figure "8" pointing the way. Also called the "Golden Arrow Division".

9th: Hitler's Nemesis*. A newspaper at home dubbed them this. Also called "Old Reliable"* and "Varsity"*.

10th: Mountaineers (formerly 10th Mountain Division). This division was given the task of dislodging crack German mountain troops from the heights of Mt. Belvedere. It was composed of famous American skiers, climbers, forest rangers, and Wild Life Service men.

Regimental and Divisional nicknames (American)

13th: (Airborne). Blackcats*. Gets its name from its flaunting of superstition. Its number is "13", and it was reactivated on Friday the 13th.

17th: (Airborne). Golden Talon* from its shoulder patch, stretching golden talons on a black field, representing ability to seize; black suggests darkness, under which many operations are effected. Also called "Thunderbolt"*.

24th: Victory. The Filipinos on Leyte greeted them with the "V" sign.

25th: Tropic Lightning. Activated from elements of the Hawaiian Division, Regular Army troops. No other division was so quickly in combat after it was formed.

26th: Yankee. Originally composed of National Guard troops from the New England (YANKEE) States.

28th: Keystone. Troops from Pennsylvania, which is known as the "Keystone State".

29th: Blue and Gray. Organized in World War I from National Guardsmen of New Jersey, Delaware, Virginia, Maryland, and the District of Columbia. Its shoulder patch of blue and grey, the colours of the rival armies in the CIVIL WAR, symbolizes unity of former embattled states. They are combined in a monad, the Korean symbol for eternal life.

30th: Old Hickory. Composed after World War I from National Guardsmen of the Carolinas, Georgia, and Tennessee, Andrew Jackson's old stamping grounds. He was known as "OLD HICKORY".

31st: Dixie. Originally composed of men of the "Deep South" or "Dixie".

32nd: Red Arrow. On tactical maps the enemies' lines are indicated in red. Their patch is a reminder to those who wear it that the enemy has never stopped them. Another name "Les Terribles", was given them by an admiring French general during World War I, when they earned four battle streamers and were first to crack the Hindenberg line.

34th: Red Bull. Its patch is a red bull's skull on an olla, a Mexican water bottle. Inspired by the desert country of the South-west where it trained in World War I.

35th: Santa Fe. So called because the ancestors of its personnel blazed the old Santa Fe trail. Insignia is the original marker used on the trail.

36th: Texas. Personnel was from Oklahoma and Texas. The arrowhead of its insignia represented Oklahoma and the "T" was for Texas.

37th: Buckeye. Composed of Ohio troops. Ohio is known as the "Buckeye State". Insignia is that of the state flag.

38th: Cyclone. Got its name in 1917 at Shelby, Mississippi, when the tent city in which it was bivouacked was levelled by winds. The division struck like a cyclone when it landed in Luzon.

42nd: Rainbow. Nickname originated from the fact that the division was composed of military groups from the District of Columbia, and 25 states, representing several sections, nationalities, religions, and viewpoints. They blended themselves into one harmonious unit. A major in World War I, noting its various origins, said, "This division will stretch over the land like a rainbow."

43rd: Winged Victory. Received its name on Luzon. It is formed from the name of its commanding general, Maj.-Gen. Leonard F. Wing, and the ultimate goal of the division.

43rd: Blood and Fire. When the division was activated in June 1943 following the Casablanca Conference they adopted the Conference's resolution, to make their enemies "bleed and burn in expiation of their crimes against humanity", as their symbol.

65th: Battle-Axe*. Its patch is a white halbert on a white shield. The halbert, a sharp-pointed battle-axe, was a potent weapon of the 15th-century foot soldier, being suitable either for a powerful cutting smash or for a quick thrust. It is an emblem that signifies both the shock action and the speed of the modern infantry division.

66th: Black Panther*. The black panther on its shoulder patch symbolizes the attributes of a good infantryman: ability to kill, to be aggressive, alert, stealthy, cunning, agile, and strong.

70th: Trailblazer. Their insignia combines an axe, a snowy mountain, and a green fir-tree, symbols of the pioneers who blazed the trail to Oregon and the Willamette Valley, where most of their training was accomplished.

76th: Onaway. The alert call of the Chippewa Indians in whose hunting grounds they trained. Also unofficially called "Liberty Bell"* from the shoulder patch of a Liberty Bell worn in World War I. The 76th was the first draft division from civilian ranks and in 1919 their device became a shield with a white label, indicating the eldest son.

Regimental and Divisional nicknames (American)

77th: Statue of Liberty. Their insignia bears the picture of the Statue of Liberty, because most of the personnel in World War I were from New York City.

78th: Lightning. The shoulder patch originated in World War I because the battles of that division were likened by the French to a bolt of lightning, leaving the field blood red.

79th: Cross of Lorraine. Having distinguished itself at Montfaucon in Lorraine, the division selected the CROSS of Lorraine, a symbol of triumph, as its insignia.

80th: Blue Ridge. Its insignia symbolizes the three Blue Ridge states, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia, from which most of its World War I personnel were drawn.

81st: Wildcat. Gets its name from Wildcat Creek that flows through Fort Jackson, S.C. It is generally credited as the first to wear the shoulder patch.

82nd: (Airborne). All American. In World War I the division was composed of men from every state in the union. Originally an infantry division, when it was reactivated as an airborne division it retained its insignia, adding the word "Airborne" above.

84th: Railsplitters. Primarily made up of National Guard units from Illinois, Kentucky and Indiana, the Lincoln states. They called themselves the Lincoln Division. Their insignia is a red disc with a white axe which splits a rail. In World War II they called themselves the "Railsplitters". The Germans called them the "Hatchet-men".

85th: Custer. The initials on its insignia "CD" stand for Custer Division, because they were activated at Camp Custer, Michigan, in World War I.

86th: Blackhawk*. Its insignia is a black hawk with wings outspread superimposed on a red shield. On the breast of the hawk is a small red shield with black letters "BH" for its nickname. Its personnel in World War I were drawn from Illinois, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, the territory inhabited by Chief Blackhawk and his tribe. The bird symbolizes keenness, cunning and tenacity.

87th: Golden Acorn. Their patch is a green field with a golden acorn which symbolizes strength.

88th: Blue Devil. Their patch is a blue four-leaf clover formed from two crossed arabic numerals, "88".

89th: Rolling W*. The "W" on its insignia within a circle forms an "M" when it is inverted, the two letters standing for Middle West, the section of the country from which its personnel were drawn. The circle indicates speed and stability. Also called "Middle West"*.

90th: Tough 'Ombres. The letter "T" of its insignia, standing for Texas, bisects the letter "O" for Oklahoma. The men of the division say it stands for "Tough 'Ombres".

92nd: Buffalo*. Insignia is a black buffalo on an olive drab background with black border. In the days of hostile Indians a troop of Negroes who were on border patrol killed buffaloes in the winter and used them for clothing. The Indians called them the "Black Buffaloes". The men of this Negro division in World War I were trained at Fort Huachuca in the same locality.

96th: Deadeye*. Their name came from their perfect marksmanship while in training.

97th: Trident*. Their insignia is a trident, white on a blue field. NEPTUNE's trident represents the coastal states of Maine, Vermont, and New Hampshire, from which they came. There is a prong for each state. The blue represents their freshwater lakes, and the white their snowy mountains.

98th: Iroquois. Its patch consists of a shield in the shape of the great seal of the State of New York. The head of the Iroquois Indian chief is in orange. These were the colours of the Dutch House of Nassau, which was responsible for the settlement of New Amsterdam, later New York. The five feathers worn by the Indian represent the FIVE NATIONS who formed the Iroquois Confederacy. The personnel were from New York.

99th: Checkerboard*. The blue and white squares resembling a checkerboard formed part of the coat of arms of William Pitt (sable, a fess chequé or and AZURE between 3 BEZANTS). The home station of the division was Pittsburgh.

101st: (Airborne). Screaming Eagle. Its white eagle's head with gold beak on a black shield is based on CIVIL WAR tradition. The black shield recalls the "Iron Brigade", one regiment of which possessed the famous eagle "Old Abe" which went into battle with them as their screaming mascot.

102nd: Ozark. A large golden "O" on a field of blue. Within the "O" is the letter "Z", from which is suspended an arc. This represents the word "Ozark". The personnel came from the Ozark Mountain region.

103rd: Cactus. A green Saguaro cactus in a blue base superimposed on a yellow disc was adopted by this Reserve division which had its headquarters in Denver, Colorado. Yellow disc represents the golden sky, while the green cactus growing in the blue sage-covered earth is characteristic of the South-west.

106th: Golden Lion*. Their patch represents a golden lion's face on a blue background encircled by white and red borders. The blue represents the infantry, red the supporting artillery, and the lion's face strength and power.

Regium donum (Lat., royal gift). An annual grant paid by the Crown from 1670 until 1871 to help PRESBYTERIAN ministers in ULSTER. It was, however, withdrawn by James II and again from 1710 to 1718. An English regium donum was introduced by Walpole in 1723 for the benefit of the widows of Dissenting ministers. NONCONFORMIST unease led to its discontinuance in 1851.

The English "Regium Donum" had all the demoralizing effects of a bribe. For more than a century and a quarter it continued to be a source of weakness, strife, discontent, and reproach.

SKEATS AND MIALL:

History of the Free Churches of England, ch. V.

Regius Professor (Lat. regius, royal). At Oxford and Cambridge, one who holds a professorship founded by Henry VIII and certain others of subsequent foundation. At the Scottish universities, any professorship instituted by the Crown.

Regnal Year. See under YEAR.

Regular (U.S.A.). In the early 19th century this meant thorough, well founded; in the 20th century, more often applied to people as, a regular guy, a straightforward, dependable person.

Regulars. All men of the British (and U.S.) armed forces who adopt their respective service as a career, as opposed to members of reserve forces, and conscripts.

Rehoboam (II Chron. xiii, 7). As a wine measure, the equivalent of six bottles. See BOTTLE; JEROBOAM; TAPPIT-HEN.

Charlotte Brontë—why is not known—applied the name to a clerical SHOVEL HAT.

He [Mr. Helstone] was short of stature [and wore] a rehoboam, or shovel hat, which he did not . . . remove.—Shirley, ch. i.

Reign of Terror. The period in the French Revolution from April 1793 until July 1794, when supreme power was in the hands of the Committee of Public Safety, and the JACOBINS, dominated by Robespierre, St. Just, and Couthon. During this period, Taine estimated that 17,000 people were put to death, although this is perhaps an exaggeration, but some 2,600 were sentenced at Paris alone. The excuse was the external threat from the European coalition, "royalist plots", etc. Robespierre formulated the doctrine that "in times of peace the springs of popular government are in virtue, but in times of revolution, they are both in virtue and terror".

Reilly, To lead a life of. To live luxuriously. From a comic song, "Is That Mr. Reilly", by Pat Rooney, popular in the U.S.A. in the 1880s. The song described what the hero would do if he "struck it rich".

Rein (connected with retain, from Lat. retinere, to hold back). The strap attached to the bit, used in guiding a HORSE.

To draw rein. To tighten the reins; hence to slacken pace, to stop.

To give the reins, or to give free rein to. To let go unrestrained; to give licence.

To take the reins. To assume the guidance of direction; to assume control.

Reins (Lat. renes). The kidneys, supposed by the Hebrews and others to be the seat of knowledge, pleasure, and pain. The Psalmist says (xvi, 7), "My reins instruct me in the night seasons," SOLOMON (Prov. xxiii, 16), "My reins shall rejoice, when thy lips speak right things," and Jeremiah says (Lam. iii, 13), God "caused his arrows to enter into my reins," i.e. sent pain into my kidneys.

Relativity, Theory of. The scientific theory of relativity deals with the question of how the observations of different observers are related to one another, i.e. Are the laws of nature the same to different observers even though the state of motion of the observers is not identical? The theory is very much dependent on the velocity of light and its constancy in empty space.

The Special theory of relativity is concerned with observers in uniform general motion and its analysis is reasonably straightforward; but the General theory deals with general relative motion and presents vast mathematical difficulties.

Relic

Lorentz, Fitzgerald, Poincaré, and notably Einstein were among the greatest contributors in this field.

The relativity of knowledge. A philosophical theory that, since things are only known through their effects on the mind, there can be no knowledge of actual reality.

Relic, Christian. The corpse of a saint, or any part thereof; any part of his clothing; or anything ultimately connected with him. The veneration of Christian relics goes back to the 2nd century and led to many spurious relics being brought back from the HOLY LAND. Miracle-working relics brought wealth to many monasteries and churches and the remains of saints were often dismembered and trickery and violence were used to obtain them. Relics such as the tip of LUCIFER'S tail, the blood of Christ, the candle which the angel of the Lord lit in Christ's tomb, were among the many accepted by the credulous.

Relief Church. A secession from the CHURCH OF SCOTLAND led in 1752 by Thomas Gillespie (1708-1774). He offered passive obedience respecting the settlement of ministers. The "Presbytery of Relief" was constituted in 1761; in 1847 the sect was embodied in the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland.

Religious. His Most Religious Majesty. The title by which the kings of England were formerly addressed by the POPE. It still survives in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER in the Prayer "for the High Court of Parliament under our most religious and gracious Queen at this time assembled" (which was written, probably by hand, in 1625), and in James I's Act for Thanksgiving on the Fifth of November occurs the expression "most great, learned, and religious King".

Similarly the Pope addressed the King of France as "Most Christian", the Emperor of Austria as "Most Apostolic", the king of Portugal as "Most Faithful", etc. See MAJESTY.

Reliquary. A receptacle of various kinds for RELICS. The smaller relics were preserved in monstrances, pyxes, pectoral reliquaries (usually in the form of a cross), shapes of arms and legs, etc. (see ARM-SHRINES). The entire remains of a saint were kept in shrines.

Reliques of Ancient English Poetry. See PERCY'S RELIQUES.

Remember! The last mysterious injunction of Charles I, on the scaffold, to Bishop Juxon. Various imaginative interpretations have been offered as to its implications.

Remembrance Day, Remembrance Sunday. After World War I ARMISTICE DAY, or Remembrance Day, commemorating the fallen was observed on 11 November, also called "Poppy Day" from the artificial poppies (recalling the poppies of Flanders fields) sold by the British Legion in aid of ex-servicemen. From 1945 to 1956 Remembrance Sunday was observed instead on the first or second Sunday of November, commemorating the fallen of World Wars I and II. In 1956 it was fixed on the second Sunday of November.

Remigius, or Remy, St. (re mij' i ùs, re' mi) (438-533), BISHOP and confessor, and apostle of the FRANKS. He is represented as carrying a vessel of holy oil, or in the act of anointing therewith Clovis, who kneels before him. He is said to have given Clovis the power of touching for the KING'S EVIL. His day is 1 October.

Remittance men. In 19th-century Australia and other colonial territories, a name given to middle-class immigrants, well-connected Englishmen, and ne'er-do-wells who were often impractical, unsuccessful, and not at home in the BUSH; so called from their dependence on money sent from home. They were also called "colonial experiencers".

Remonstrants. Another name for the ARMINIANS. In Scottish history, the name is also given to those who presented a remonstrance to the Committee of Estates in 1650 refusing to acknowledge Charles II as king until he had established his good faith and devotion to the Covenant (see COVENANTERS).

Remus. See ROMULUS.

Renaissance (Fr., rebirth). The term applied to the intellectual movement characteristic of that period of European history marking the transition between the mediæval and modern. Chronologically it is usually taken to fall in the 15th and 16th centuries, occurring earliest in Italy and later in England. In a more limited sense it implies what was formerly called the REVIVAL OF LEARNING.

The period is particularly marked by a rediscovery of the classics, questioning of religious dogmas, the growth of a more scientific outlook, major developments in art and literature, new inventions and overseas discoveries, and a general assertion and emancipation of the human intellect.

Renard ren' ard). Une queue de renard (Fr., a fox's tail). A mockery. At one time it was a common practical joke to fasten a fox's tail behind a person against whom a laugh was designed. PANURGE never lost a chance of attaching a fox's tail, or the ears of a leveret, behind a Master of Arts or Doctor of Divinity (Gargantua, II, xvi). See also REYNARD.

C'est une petite vipère
Qui n'épargneroit pas son père
Et qui par nature ou par art
Scait couper la queue au renard.
BEAUCAIRE: L'Embaras de la Foire.

Repenter Curls. The long ringlets of a lady's hair. Repentir is the French for penitence, and les repenties are the girls doing penance for their misdemeanours. MARY MAGDALENE had such long hair that she wiped off her tears from the feet of Jesus therewith. Hence the association of long curls and reformed (repenties) prostitutes.

Reply Churlish. "Sir, you are no judge; your opinion has no weight with me." Or, to paraphrase Touchstone's illustration (SHAKESPEARE: As You Like It, V, iv): "If I tell a courtier his beard is not well cut, and he disables my judgment, he gives me the reply churlish, which is the fifth remove from the lie direct, or rather, the lie direct in the fifth degree." Cp. COUNTERCHECK QUARRELSOME; QUIP MODEST; RE-PROOF VALIANT; RETORT COURTEOUS.

Reproof Valiant. "Sir, allow me to tell you that is not the truth." This is Touchstone's fourth remove from the lie direct, or, rather, the lie direct in the fourth degree. See COUNTERCHECK QUARRELSOME; QUIP MODEST; REPLY CHURLISH; RETORT COURTEOUS.

Republic, The. The English name for PLATO's best-known work, the Politeia (Commonwealth), written in the 4th century B.C. It is his ideal Commonwealth and The Republic is especially regarded for its philosophical and ethical teachings. It gave Sir THOMAS MORE the inspiration for his UTOPIA. See IDEAL COMMONWEALTHS under COMMONWEALTH.

The Republic of Letters. The world of literature; authors generally and their influence. Goldsmith, in The Citizen of the World, No. 20 (1760), says "it is a very common expression among Europeans"; it is found in MOLIÈRE's Le Mariage Forcé, Sc. vi (1664).

The Republican Queen. Sophia Charlotte (1669-1705), wife of Frederick I of Prussia, was so nicknamed on account of her advanced political views. She was the daughter of George I of Britain, the friend of Leibniz, and a woman of remarkable culture. Charlottenburg was named after her.

Requests, Court of. A minor court of equity hearing poor men's causes, which fell into disuse at the time of the CIVIL WARS. Also certain local COURTS OF CONSCIENCE (see under CONSCIENCE).

Requiem (re' kwi em). The first word of the prayer Requiem aeternam dona eis, domine, et lux perpetua luceat eis (Eternal rest give them, O Lord, and let everlasting light shine upon them) used as the introit of a MASS for the Dead; hence a Requiem Mass.

Reremouse. See REARMOUSE.

Resolute. The Resolute Doctor. John Baconthorpe (d. 1346), grand-nephew of Roger Bacon, head of the CARMELITES in England (1329-1333) and commentator on ARISTOTLE, the BIBLE, etc.

The Most Resolute Doctor. Guillaume Durandus de St. Pourçain (d. 1332), a French DOMINICAN philosopher, bishop of Meaux (1326), and author of Commentaires sur Pierre Lombard.

Responsions. See SMALLS.

Rest. Laid to rest. Buried.

Restoration, The. In British history, the recall of the Stuarts to the throne in 1660 in the person of Charles II, thus bringing the Puritan COMMONWEALTH to an end. The Restoration period was marked by a relaxation in standards of conduct but scholarship, science, literature and the arts blossomed and flourished with the cessation of PURITAN restraints.

In France, the royal house of Bourbon was restored after the fall of NAPOLEON in 1815 in the person of Louis XVIII, brother of the late King Louis XVI, whose son, dynastically known as Louis XVII, did not survive to rule.

Resurrectionists, or Resurrection Men. Body-snatchers, those who broke open the coffins of the newly buried to supply the demands of the surgical and medical schools. The practice grew up in the latter half of the 18th century and flourished particularly until the passing of the Anatomy Act of 1832. The Resurrectionist took the corpse naked, this being in law a misdemeanour, as opposed to a felony if garments were taken as well. Murders were sometimes committed for the same market. See BURKE.

Retiarius (rê ti âr' i us) (Lat.). A gladiator who made use of a net (rete), which he threw over his adversary. See also TRIDENT.

As in the thronged amphitheatre of old
The wary Retiarius trapped his foe.

THOMSON: Castle of Indolence, canto ii.

Retort Courteous, The. "Sir, I am not of your opinion; I beg to differ from you"; or, to use Touchstone's illustration (SHAKESPEARE: As You Like It, V, v), "If I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was." The lie seven times removed, or rather, the lie direct in the seventh degree. See COUNTERCHECK QUARRELSOME; QUIP MODEST; REPLY CHURLISH; REPROOF VALIANT.

Returned Letter Office. See BLIND DEPARTMENT.

Reuters. The premier international news agency, reputed for its integrity and impartiality, founded by Paul Julius Reuter (1816-1899), a native of Cassel, Germany. The agency was established at London in 1851, taking full advantage of the developing telegraph service, although links had to be completed by railway and pigeon-post. He developed a world-wide service in the ensuing years and in 1871 was made Baron de Reuter by the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha. It became a private trust in 1916 and was later (1926-1941) taken over by the British Press Association and the Australian and New Zealand Press.

Reveille (re vâl' i) (Fr. réveiller, to awaken). The bugle call used in the armed forces announcing that it is time to rise.

Revenant (rev' e non) (Fr., present participle of revenir, to come back). One who returns after long exile; an apparition, a ghost, one who returns from the dead.

Revenons à nos moutons. See MOUTONS.

Reverend. An archbishop is the Most Reverend (Father in God); a BISHOP, the Right Reverend; a DEAN, the Very Reverend; an archdeacon, the Venerable; all the other CLERGY, the Reverend. A person in orders should always be referred to as "the Reverend Mr. Jones", or "the Reverend John Jones"; never "Reverend", or "the Reverend Jones".

Revised code. The regulations governing English elementary education issued in 1862 when the many existing directives were gathered together and systematically arranged. It introduced the notorious system of "payment by results" whereby the grant to schools was dependent upon tests in THE THREE R'S (see under R) given to the pupils by H.M. Inspectors. Its effects on the teaching of grammar, geography, and history were disastrous as their teaching did not affect a school's revenues.

The Revised Version. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

Revival of Learning, or Letters. A term applied to that aspect of the RENAISSANCE which involved the revival of classical learning, especially of Greek literature, freed from the cramping influences of mediæval SCHOLASTICISM and ecclesiastical restraint. Humanism, which demanded that human reason should be free to pursue its intellectual and aesthetic purposes, was its keynote. Marked by the enthusiastic pursuit of scholarship, the investigation of manuscript sources, and the establishment of libraries and museums, it received added impetus from the invention of printing (c. 1440). Italy was the centre of this European revival, where it was in evidence by the late 14th century, reaching its full development in the early 16th century.

Rexists. A Belgian political party formed by Léon Degrelle in 1936 advocating FASCIST methods. Markedly collaborationist during the German occupation of Belgium, it was accordingly suppressed when the Germans were expelled in 1944. The name is an adaptation of "Christus Rex", Christ the King, the watchword of a Catholic Young People's Action Society founded in 1925. Cp. QUISLING.

Reynard (râ' nard). A fox. Caxton's form of the name in his translation (from the Dutch) of the Roman de Renart (see REYNARD THE FOX, below). Renart was the Old French form, from Ger. Reginhart, a personal name; the Dutch was Reynaerd or Reynaert.

Reynard the Fox. A mediæval beast-epic satirizing contemporary life and events, found in French, Dutch, and German literature. Chaucer's Nun's Priest's Tale is part of the Reynard tradition. Most of the names in the Reynard cycle are German but it found its greatest vogue in France as the Roman de Renart. Caxton's Hystorie of Reynard the Foxe (1481) was based on a Dutch version published at Gouda in 1479. The oldest version (12th century) is in Latin.

Reynard's Globe of Glass. Reynard in REYNARD THE FOX said he had sent this invaluable treasure to her majesty the QUEEN as a present; but it never came to hand as it had no existence except in the imagination of the fox. It was supposed to reveal what was being done—no matter how far off—and also to afford information on any subject that the person consulting it wished to know. Your gift was like the globe of glass of Master Reynard. A great promise but no performance.

Reynard's Wonderful ring. See RINGS NOTED IN FABLE under RING.

Rhodomancy. A form of DIVINATION by means of a rod or wand, dowsing (Gr. rhadomanteia; rhabdos, rod; manteia, prophecy). See DOWSE.

Rhadamanthus. In Greek mythology, one of the three judges of hell; MINOS and Æacus being the other two.

Rhapsody meant originally "songs strung together" (Gr. rhapto, to sew or string together; ode, a song). The term was applied to portions of the ILLIAD and ODYSSEY, which bards recited.

Rhea. In Greek mythology, Mother of the gods, daughter of URANUS and GÆA, and brother of KRONOS by whom she bore ZEUS, HADES, POSEIDON, HERA, Nestia, and DEMETER. She is identified with CYBELE and also known as AGDISTIS.

Rhea Sylvia. The mother of ROMULUS and Remus.

Rheims-Douai Version, The. See THE DOUAI BIBLE, under BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

Rhetorical Question. A question asked for the sake of effect rather than demanding an answer as, "Who worries about that?" i.e. nobody worries.

Rhino (rī' nō). Slang for money; the term was in use in the 17th century. Its origin is uncertain but one plausible suggestion is that it derives from an Eastern belief that the powdered horn of a rhinoceros increased sexual potency and therefore commanded a high price.

Some, as I know,
Have parted with their ready rhino.
The Seaman's Adieu (1670).

Rhodian Bully. The COLOSSUS of Rhodes.

Yet fain wouldst thou the crouching world
bestride,
Just like the Rhodian bully o'er the tide.
JOHN WOLCOT: The Lousiad, canto ii.

The Rhodian Law. The earliest system of maritime law known to history; compiled by the Rhodians about 900 B.C.

Rhopalic Verse (Gr. rhopalon, a club which is much thicker at one end than the other). Verse consisting of lines in which each successive word has more syllables than the one preceding it.

Rem tibi confeci	doctissime	dulcisonorum
Spes deus aeternæ-est	stationis	conciliator
	AUSONIUS.
Hope ever solaces	miserable	individuals.

Rhyme. Neither rhyme nor reason. Fit neither for amusement nor instruction. An author took his book to Sir

Thomas More, CHANCELLOR of Henry VIII, and asked his opinion. Sir Thomas told the author to turn it into rhyme. He did so, and submitted it again to the Lord Chancellor. "Ay! ay!" said the witty satirist, "that will do, that will do. 'Tis rhyme now, but before it was neither rhyme nor reason."

The lines on his pension, traditionally ascribed to Spenser, are well known:

I was promised on a time
To have reason for my rhyme;
From that time unto this season,
I received nor rhyme nor reason.

Rhyming slang. Slang in which the word intended is replaced by one that rhymes with it, as "plates of meat" for feet, "Rory O' More" for door. When the rhyme is a compound word the rhyming part is almost invariably dropped, leaving the uninitiated somewhat in the dark. Thus Chivy (Chevy) Chase rhymes with "face", by dropping "chase" chivy remains. Similarly daisies = boots, thus: "daisy roots" will rhyme with "boots", drop the rhyme and daisy remains. Thus sky is slang for pocket, from the compound "sky-rocket", "Christmas", a railway guard, as "Ask the Christmas", from "Christmas-card", "Raspberry" is heart, contracted from "raspberry-tart".

Rhyming to death. See IRISH RATS under RAT.

Thomas the Rhymer. Thomas Ercildoune, 13th-century border poet and seer, also called Thomas Learmont. He is the reputed author of a number of poems, including one on TRISTRAM (which Scott believed to be genuine), and is fabled to have predicted the death of Alexander III of SCOTLAND, the Battle of Bannockburn, the accession of James VI to the English throne, etc. He is not to be confused with Thomas Rymer (d. 1713), Historiographer Royal to William III.

Ribbon development. Single-depth building, chiefly houses, along main roads extending out of built-up areas. Such development was stopped by the Town and Country Planning Act of 1947.

Ribbonism. The activities, aims, etc., of the Ribbon or Riband societies, secret Irish CATHOLIC associations flourishing from c. 1820 to 1870, and at their peak c. 1835-1855. Ribbonism began in ULSTER to defend Catholics against ORANGEMEN, but spread south and by the 1830s was essentially agrarian; but its character and methods varied somewhat from district to district. It was basically a movement of the lower classes concerned with sporadic acts of outrage and took the place of the

Ribston Pippin

Whitefeet, MOLLY MAGUIRES, TERRY ALTS, etc. The name arose from the green ribbon worn as a badge.

Ribston Pippin. So called from Ribston, in Yorkshire, where the first pippins, introduced from Normandy about 1707, were planted. It is said that Sir Henry Goodriche planted three pips; two died, and from the third came all the Ribston apple-trees in England.

Rice. The custom of throwing rice after a bride comes from India, rice being, with the Hindus, an emblem of fecundity. The bridegroom throws three handfuls over the bride, and the bride does the same over the bridegroom. Cp. MARRIAGE KNOT.

Rice Christians. Converts to Christianity for worldly benefits, such as a supply of rice to Indians. Profession of Christianity born of gain, not faith.

Rice-paper. See MISNOMERS.

Richard Roe. See DOE.

Richmond. Another Richmond in the field. Said when another unexpected adversary turns up. The reference is to SHAKESPEARE'S Richard III, V, iv, where the king, speaking of Henry of Richmond (afterwards Henry VII), says:

I think there be six Richmonds in the field;
Five have I slain to-day, instead of him.

Rick Mould. Fetching the rick mould. An old catch played during the hay harvest. The GREENHORN was sent to borrow a rick-mould with strict injunctions not to drop it. Something very heavy was put in a sack and hoisted on to his back; when he had carried it carefully in the hot sun to the hayfield he was laughed at for his pains. Cp. ELBOW GREASE; PIGEON'S MILK.

Ricochet (rik' ō shā). The bound of a bullet or other projectile after striking, the skipping of a flung stone over water ("DUCKS AND DRAKES"); hence applied to anything repeated again and again. Marshal Vauban introduced ricochet firing at Philipsburg in 1688.

Ricochet words. See REDUPLICATED.

Riddle. Josephus relates how Hiram, King of Tyre, and SOLOMON once had a contest in riddles, when Solomon won a large sum of money, but subsequently lost it to Abdemon, one of Hiram's subjects.

Plutarch says that HOMER died of chagrin because he could not solve a certain riddle. See SPHINX.

A riddle of claret. Thirteen bottles, a MAGNUM and twelve quarts; said to be so called because in certain old golf clubs, magistrates invited to the celebration dinner presented the club with this amount, sending it in a riddle or sieve.

Riddle me, riddle me ree. Expound my riddle rightly.

Ride (O.E. ridan). To go on horseback, to be carried in a vehicle, etc. In the U.S.A. to ride is also used to mean to oppress, to pick on and irritate a person.

Riding the marches. See BOUNDS, BEATING THE.

To ride abroad with St. George, but at home with St. Michael. Said of a henpecked braggart. ST. GEORGE is represented as riding on a war charger; ST. MICHAEL on a dragon. Away a man rides, like St. George, on a horse which he can control and govern; but at home he has "a dragon" to manage, like St. Michael.

To ride and tie. Said of a couple of travellers with only one horse between them. One rides on ahead and then ties the horse up and walks on, the other taking his turn on the horse when he has reached it.

To ride backwards up Holborn Hill. See under HOLBORN.

To ride bodkin. See under BODKIN.

To ride for a fall. To proceed with one's business recklessly, usually regardless of the consequences; almost to invite trouble by thoughtless or reckless actions.

To ride in the marrow-bone coach. To walk; to go on foot.

To ride roughshod. See under ROUGH.

To take for a ride. "To take for a trot", to pull someone's leg; to make the butt of a joke; but it has also become a gangster EUPHEMISM for murder. The victim is induced or forced into a vehicle and murdered in the course of the ride. Such methods were used by the NAZI régime in Germany.

Rider of the Shires, The. William Cobbett (1762-1835), the warm-hearted countryman and radical journalist, has been so designated. His journeys on horseback through many of the counties of England are described in his Rural Rides, which were written after days in the saddle.

I saw great Cobbett riding,
The horseman of the shires;
And his face was red with judgment
And a light of Luddite fires.

A trailing meteor on the Downs he rides above the rotting towns,
The Horseman of Apocalypse, the Rider of the Shires.

G. K. CHESTERTON: The Old Song.

Ridgeback. A native-born Rhodesian of white stock; probably from the native ridge-backed hunting dog, as a Britisher is sometimes similarly termed a "British BULLDOG".

Ridiculous. There is but one step from the sublime to the ridiculous. In his Age of Reason (1794), Pt. II, note, Tom Paine said, "The sublime and the ridiculous are often so nearly related that it is difficult to class them separately. One step above the sublime makes the ridiculous, and one step above the ridiculous makes the sublime again."

NAPOLEON, who was a great admirer of Tom Paine, used to say, "Du sublime au ridicule il n'y a qu'un pas."

Riding. The three administrative divisions of Yorkshire are so called because each forms a third part of the county, units of local government introduced by the Danes. Originally thriding; the initial th- of the word being lost through the amalgamation with east, west, or north. The divisions of Tipperary are (and those of Lincolnshire formerly were) also called ridings. Cp. LATHE; RAPE.

Ridotto (Ital.). A social assembly; a gathering for music and dancing (cp. Fr. redoute). In music, "reduced" from the full score, i.e. arranged for a smaller group of performers. It is ultimately from Lat. reducere, to bring back, reduce.

Riff-Raff. Sweepings, refuse; the off-scourings of society, the rabble. The old French term was rif et raf, whence the phrase Il n'a laissé ni rif ni raf (he has left nothing behind him). "Raff" may be Swed. rafs, sweepings, rubbish, etc.

Rift in the lute. A rift is a split or crack, hence a defect betokening the beginning of disharmony or incipient dissension.

Unfaith in aught is want of faith in all,
It is the little rift within the lute
That by-and-by will make the music mute,
And ever widening slowly silence all.

TENNYSON: Merlin and Vivien, I. 387.

Rig. There is more than one word rig but their etymology and division are not clear-cut. In the sense of dressing, it was originally applied to a ship which is said to be well-rigged, fully-rigged, etc. The ropes, stays, shrouds, braces, halyards, etc., used to stay its masts and work the sails are its rigging; also the cordage, masts and sails as a whole. Hence, a good rig-out, first-rate outfit in clothes, equipment, etc.

In the U.S.A. before the days of the motor-car a rig was a carriage or private conveyance.

The word was also formerly used of a trumpet, and a lewd woman was said to be riggish.

Also, a hoax or dodge; hence a swindle, and the phrase to rig the market, to arrange prices by underhand methods in order to make a profit.

To run the rig. To have a bit of fun, or indulge in practical jokes.

He little thought when he set out
Of running such a rig.

COWPER: John Gilpin.

Rigadoon. A lively dance for two people, said to have been invented towards the close of the 17th century by a dancing-master of Marseilles called Rigaud.

Dance she would, not in such court-like measures as she had learned abroad, but some high-paced jig, or hopskip rigadoon, befitting the brisk lasses at a rustic merrymaking.

HAWTHORNE: Seven Gables, xiii.

Right. In politics the right is the CONSERVATIVE side. See LEFT.

Petition of Right (1628). A document presented by PARLIAMENT to Charles I which eventually gained his assent. It forbade the raising of gifts, loans, BENEVOLENCES and taxes without parliamentary consent and forbade arbitrary imprisonment, compulsory billeting of soldiers and sailors and the issue of commissions of martial law.

In one's right mind. Sane; in a normal state after mental excitement. The phrase comes from Mark v, 15:

And they . . . see him that was possessed with the devil, and had the legion, sitting and clothed, and in his right mind.

It'll all come right in the end. The cry of the optimist when things go wrong.

Miner's right. The Australian term for a licence to dig for GOLD.

Right as a trivet. Quite right; in an excellent state. The trivet was originally a three-legged stand—a tripod—and the allusion is to it standing firmly on its three legs.

Right foot foremost. It is considered unlucky to enter a house, or even a room, on the left foot, and in ancient ROME a boy was stationed at the door of a wealthy man's home to caution visitors not to cross the threshold with the left foot.

Right-hand man. An invaluable or confidential assistant; originally applied to the cavalry man at the right of the line, whose duties were of great responsibility.

Right Honourable. See under HONOURABLE.

Righto! or Right ho! All right, a colloquial form of cheerful assent; right you are is a similar exclamation.

Right of way. The right of passing through the land of another. A highway is a public right. A private right is either customary or an easement (a legal right for the benefit of an adjoining owner). Rights of way may be for special purposes as an agricultural way, a way to church, a footway, a carriage way, etc.

Right now. At this very moment. Immediately.

To do one right. To be perfectly fair to him, to do him justice.

King Charles, and who'll do him right now?
BROWNING: Cavalier Times, II (Give a Rouse).

In Elizabethan literature the phrase is very common, and meant to answer when one's health had been drunk.

Falstaff [To Silence, who drinks a bumper]:
Why, now you have done me right.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. II, V, iii.

To send one to the right about. To clear him off, send him packing.

Rights. Declaration of Rights. An instrument submitted to William and Mary, after the GLORIOUS REVOLUTION, and accepted by them (13 February 1689). It sought to remove the specific grievances which arose from the arbitrary acts of James II such as the use of the dispensing and suspending power, the maintenance of a standing army in time of peace, taxation without parliamentary consent, freedom of elections, etc. The Declaration, together with a settlement of the succession, etc., was passed into law (October) as the Bill of Rights. It emphasized the importance of PARLIAMENT in the constitution which no king subsequently dared to question. See also RIGHTS OF MAN.

The Rights of Man. According to political philosophers of the 17th and 18th centuries, certain inalienable human rights—as stated by Locke—the right to life, liberty, and property. The social contract theorists also included the right to resistance from tyranny. Such rights were formally embodied in the French DECLARATION OF THE RIGHTS OF MAN and a Declaration of Rights was drawn up by the First American Continental Congress in 1774. The American Declaration of Independence, 1776, says:

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Mazzini, the Italian republican idealist, preached a less popular doctrine:

But I know, and you who are good and unspoiled by false doctrine and riches will understand before long, that every right you have can only spring from a duty fulfilled.
The Duties of Man (To the Italian Working Class.)

Declaration of the Rights of Man. A manifesto of the French National Assembly (August 1789) embodying the "principles" of the revolution. Thus, all citizens are born equal and are equal in the eyes of the law, with rights to liberty, property, and security, and the right to resist tyranny; the nation is sovereign and laws are the expression of the general will; every citizen has the right to freedom of opinion, speech, writing, etc. These rights were not, of course, honoured in practice, as the REIGN OF TERROR was to make manifest.

Universal Declaration of Human Rights. A document adopted by the General Assembly of the UNITED NATIONS in 1948 setting forth basic rights and fundamental freedoms to which all are entitled. They include the right to life, liberty, freedom from servitude, fair trial, marriage, ownership of property, freedom of thought and conscience, freedom of expression; the right to vote, work, education, etc.

To put things to rights. To tidy up, to put everything in its proper place.

Rigmarle (rig ma rē). An old Scottish coin of low value. The word originated from one of the "billion" coins struck in the reign of Queen Mary, which bore the words Reg. Maria as part of the legend.

Billion is mixed metal for coinage, especially silver largely alloyed with copper.

Rigmarole (rig' mà rōl). A rambling discontented account, an unending yarn; said to be a popular corruption of RAGMAN ROLL. It is recorded from the early 18th century.

You never heard such a rigmarole. . . . He said he thought he was certain he had seen somebody by the rick and it was Tom Bakewell who was the only man he knew who had a grudge against Farmer Blaize and if the object had been a little bigger he would not mind swearing to Tom and would swear to him for he was dead certain it was Tom only what he saw looked smaller and it was pitch dark at the time. . . . etc.

MEREDITH: Richard Feverel, ch. ix.

Rigol. A circle or diadem (Ital. rigol, a little wheel).

[Sleep] That from this golden rigol hath divorced
So many English kings,
SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. II, IV, v.

Rig-veda. See VEDAS.

Rile. A dialect word, common in Norfolk and other parts, for stirring up water to make it muddy; hence, to excite or disturb, and hence the colloquial meaning, to vex, annoy, make angry. It comes from O. Fr. roillier, to roll or flow (of a stream).

Rimmon. The Babylonian god who presided over storms. Milton identifies him with one of the fallen angels:

Him followed Rimmon, whose delightful seat
Was fair Damascus, on the fertile bank
Of Abbana and Pharpar, lucid streams.
Paradise Lost, Bk. I, 467.

To bow down in the house of Rimmon. To palter with one's conscience; to do that which one knows to be wrong so as to save one's face. The allusion is to Naaman obtaining Elisha's permission to worship the god when with his master (II Kings v, 18).

Rinaldo. One of the great heroes of medieval romance (also called Renault of Montauban, Regnault, etc.), a PALADIN of CHARLEMAGNE, cousin of ORLANDO, and one of the four sons of AYMON. He was the owner of the famous horse BAYARDO, and is always painted with the characteristics of a borderer—valiant, ingenious, rapacious, and unscrupulous.

Tasso's romantic epic Rinaldo appeared in 1562 and his masterpiece JERUSALEM DELIVERED, in which Rinaldo was the ACHILLES of the Christian army, despising gold and power but craving renown, was published (without permission) in 1581.

In Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO (1516), Rinaldo appears as the son of the fourth Marquis d'Este, Lord of Mount Auban or Albano, eldest son of Amon or Aymon, nephew of Charlemagne. He was the rival of his cousin Orlando.

Ring. The noun (meaning a circlet) is the O.E. hring; the verb (to sound a bell, or as a bell) is from O.E. hringan, to clash, ring, connected with Lat. clangere, to clang.

A ring worn on the forefinger is supposed to indicate a haughty, bold, and overbearing spirit; on the long finger, prudence, dignity and discretion; on the marriage finger, love and affection; on the little finger, a masterful spirit. Cp. WEDDING FINGER.

The wearing of a wedding-ring by married women is now universal in Christian countries, but the custom varies greatly in detail. It appears to have originated in the betrothal rings given as secular pledges by the Romans. Until the end of the 16th century it was the custom in England to wear the wedding-ring on the third finger of the right hand.

As the forefinger was held to be symbolical of the HOLY GHOST, priests used to wear their ring on this in token of their spiritual office. Episcopal rings, worn by CARDINALS, BISHOPS and abbots, are of gold with a stone—cardinals a sapphire, bishops and abbots an amethyst—and are worn upon the third finger of the right hand. The POPE wears a similar ring, usually with a cameo, emerald, or ruby. A plain gold ring is put upon the third finger of the right hand of a nun on her profession.

In ancient ROME, the free Roman had the right to wear an iron ring, only senators, chief magistrates and in later times KNIGHTS (equites), enjoyed the jus annuli aurei, the right to wear a ring of gold. The emperors conferred this upon whom they pleased and Justinian extended the privilege to all Roman citizens. See also CRAMP-RINGS.

Rings noted in Fable and Legend

Agramant's Ring. This enchanted ring was given by Agramant to the dwarf Brunello from whom it was stolen by BRADAMANT and given to Melissa. It passed successively into the hands of ROGERO and ANGELICA, who carried it in her mouth (ORLANDO FURIOSO).

The Ring of Amasis. See AMASIS.

Cambalo's Ring. See CAMBALO.

The Doge's Ring. See BRIDE OF THE SEA.

The Ring of Edward the Confessor. It is said that Edward the Confessor was once asked for alms by an old man, and gave him his ring. In time some English pilgrims went to the HOLY LAND and happened to meet the same old man, who told them he was JOHN THE EVANGELIST, and gave them the identical ring to take to "Saint" Edward. It was preserved in Westminster Abbey.

The Ring of Gyges. See GYGES.

The Ring of Innocent. On 29 May 1205, Innocent III sent John, King of England, four gold rings set with precious stones, and explained that the roundity signifies eternity—"remember we are passing through time into eternity"; the number signifies the four virtues which make up constancy of mind—viz. justice, fortitude, prudence, and temperance; the material signifies "the wisdom from on high", which is as gold purified in the fire; the green emerald is emblem of "faith", the blue sapphire of "hope", the red garnet of "charity", and the bright topaz of "good works" (Rymer: Fœdera, vol. I, 139).

Luned's Ring rendered the wearer invisible. Luned gave it to Owain, one of King ARTHUR's knights.

Take this ring and put it on thy finger, and put this stone in thy hand, and close thy fist over the stone; and so long as thou conceal it, it will conceal thee too.

MABINOGION (Lady of the Fountain).

The Ring of Ogier was given him by MORGAN LE FAY. It removed all infirmities, and restored the aged to youth again.

Otnit's Ring of Invisibility belonged to Otnit, King of Lombardy, and was given to him by the queen-mother when he went to gain the soldan's daughter in marriage. The stone had the virtue of directing the wearer the right road to take in travelling (the HELDENBUCH).

Polycrates' Ring. See AMASIS.

Reynard's Wonderful Ring. This ring, which existed only in the brain of REYNARD, had a stone of three colours—red, white, and green. The red made the night as clear as day; the white cured all manner of diseases; and the green rendered the wearer invisible (Reynard the Fox, ch. xii).

Solomon's Ring enabled the monarch to overcome all opponents, to transport himself to the celestial spheres where he learned the secrets of the universe. It also sealed up the refractory JINN in jars and cast them into the Red Sea, and conferred upon the wearer the ability to understand and converse with the animal world.

The talking ring in Basque legend was given by Tartaro, the Basque CYCLOPS, to a girl whom he wished to marry. Immediately she put it on, it kept incessantly saying, "You there, and I here." In order to get rid of the nuisance, the girl cut off her finger and threw it and the ring into a pond. The story is given in Campbell's Popular Tales of the West Highlands, and in Grimm's Tales (The Robber and His Sons).

Ring of the Fisherman. See FISHERMAN'S RING under FISH.

Ring of the Nibelung, or Ring Cycle. The Festival cycle by Wagner first performed at Bayreuth in 1876. Its constituent parts are Das Rheingold, 1869; Die Walküre, 1870; Siegfried, 1876; Götterdämmerung (The Dusk of the Gods), 1876. Cp. NIBELUNGENLIED.

Ring posies, or mottoes. These were commonly inscribed on the inside of rings in the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries.

- (1) AEI (Greek for "Always").
- (2) For ever and for aye.
- (3) In thee my choice, I do rejoice.
- (4) Let love increase.
- (5) May God above Increase our love.
- (6) Not two but one Till life is gone.
- (7) My heart and I, Until I die.
- (8) When this you see, Then think of me.
- (9) Love is heaven, and heaven is love.
- (10) Wedlock, 'tis said, In heaven is made.

The Ring. Bookmakers or pugilists collectively, and the sports they represent, because the spectators at a prize-fight or race form a ring around the competitors.

Specifically, The Ring was the hall for prize-fights in the Blackfriars Road.

In Australia in the early 19th century The Ring denoted a group of the most hard-bitten convicts at the Norfolk Island penitentiary, who exercised an evil influence over their fellows. This use antedates by some 30 years that of the U.S.A.

Also applied to unscrupulous dealers, as a group, who FORM, or MAKE A RING. Wagner's RING OF THE NIBELUNG is often called The Ring.

A ring of bells. A set of bells from 5 to 12 in number for CHANGE ringing.

It has the true ring. It has intrinsic merit; it bears the mark of real talent. A metaphor taken from the custom of judging genuine coin by its "ring" or sound.

Ring off! The expression commonly used to end a telephone conversation or connexion by hanging up or replacing the receiver, as "I must ring off now", "Ring off please", etc.

Ring up. To ring up is to make a telephone call.

To ring up the curtain. In the theatre, to order the curtain to be raised or opened; the signal originally being the ringing of a bell. Metaphorically, to initiate or inaugurate an enterprise, etc. Similarly to ring down the curtain is to terminate or bring to an end.

Ringing the changes. See CHANGE.

Figuratively the phrase usually means to try many different ways of doing a thing for the sake of variety, but it also means to swindle someone over a transaction by confusing him in the changing of money. For example: a man bought a glass of beer for 1s. 4d. and gave the barmaid a ten-shilling note, receiving 8s. 8d. in change. "Oh!" said the man, "give me the note back, I have such a lot of change". He offered ten shillings in silver when handed the note, but before taking it put note and silver together and said: "There, let's have a QUID instead of the note and silver." If the barmaid was not quick enough to spot the trick she lost ten shillings by the deal.

That rings a bell. That recalls something to mind, that stirs a recollection.

To form, or make a ring. To act together in order to control the price of a given article, usually to enhance the price and ensure greater profit. Dealers at auctions sometimes form such a ring and do not outbid each other, thus ensuring articles being knocked down cheaply. After the auction, the dealers' ring then organizes a sale or distribution among its members.

To make rings, or run rings round one. To defeat him completely in some sport or competition, etc.; to outclass him easily. In Australia the fastest shearer in the shed is called a ringer as he is "the man who runs rings round the rest".

Ringer. A one-ringer, etc. In the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force the rank of an officer is designated by the braided rings worn round the lower part of the sleeve. One ring denotes a Sub-Lieutenant and a Flying Officer; two rings, a Lieutenant and a Flight Lieutenant, etc.; called colloquially a one-ringer, two-ringer, etc. Warrant officers and pilot officers wear a thin ring, hence the term half-ringer. Lieutenant-Commanders and Squadron Leaders wear two rings with a narrow one between them and are thus called two-and-a-half-ringers. In the Navy a four-ringed Captain denotes one of Captain's rank as opposed to the "Captain" of a ship, who may be of much lower rank.

The term ringer is also applied on the racecourse, running-track, etc., to a runner who is entered for a race by means of a false return with regard to the detailed conditions of entry; to a person or thing which closely resembles another: hence, dead ringer (U.S.A.), for an exact resemblance.

Ringleader. The moving spirit, the chief, in some enterprise, especially of a mutinous character; from the old phrase to lead the ring, the ring being a group of associated persons.

Riot. To read the Riot Act. Legally, when 12 or more persons are committing a riot it is the duty of the magistrates to command them to disperse in the Queen's name and anyone who obstructs or continues to riot for one hour afterwards is guilty of a felony. Such a proclamation is read in accordance with the Riot Act of 1715. Figuratively to read the riot act is to check noise, commotion and misbehaviour of children and others by vigorous and forceful protests, to threaten them with the consequences of disobedience, etc.

To run riot. To act without restraint or control; to act in a very disorderly way. The phrase was originally used of hounds which had lost the scent.

Rip. A regular rip. A thorough roisterer, rake, or debauchee; rip seems to be a perversion of rep, rep-robate. Cp. DEMI-REP.

Some forlorn, worn-out old rips, broken-kneed and broken-winded.

GEORGE DU MAURIER: Peter Ibbetson, Pt. VI.

Let her rip. Let it (an engine, etc.) go as fast as it can.

Rip Van Winkle. The famous character whose fabled adventures are recounted in Washington Irving's Sketch Book (1819). The tale is represented as being found among the papers of one Diedrich Knickerbocker, a Dutch antiquary of New York. Rip Van Winkle was a happy-go-lucky, hen-pecked husband of a "well-oiled" disposition. During a ramble on the Kaatskill Mountains he met some quaint personages dressed in the old Flemish style playing at ninepins. Unobserved he took a draught of their Hollands and soon fell asleep. He awoke to find himself alone, even his dog had disappeared and his firearm was heavy with rust. He made his way homewards in trepidation only to find his house deserted and none of his former companions about. He had apparently slept for 20 years and after establishing his identity became a village patriarch. He had set out as a subject of George III and returned as a free citizen of the United States!

Ripon. True as Ripon steel. Ripon, Yorkshire, used to be famous for its steel spurs, which were the best in the world. The spikes of a Ripon spur would strike through a SHILLING piece without turning the point.

Rise. On the rise. Going up in price; becoming more valuable, especially of stocks and shares.

To get a rise. To have an increase in salary or wages.

To take the rise out of one. To raise a laugh at his expense, to make him a butt. Hotten says this is a metaphor from fly-fishing; the fish rise to the fly, and are caught. In the U.S.A. a pay increase is called a raise, and to get a raise out of someone is to call forth the desired reaction or response.

Rising in the air. See LEVITATION.

Risorgimento (ri sôr ji men' tō) (Ital., resurrection). The name given to the 19th-century movement for Italian liberation. It can be said to have had its roots in the enlightened despotism of the 18th century and the influence of the French Revolution and French occupation. The CARBONARI in Naples and Sicily, the Federati in Sardinia, and Mazzini's YOUNG ITALY all played a part, and the Risorgimento was strengthened by the revolutionary events of 1848-1849. Its political aims were largely achieved by Cavour in the events of 1859-1860 and Garibaldi's radicalism made a further contribution, but the idealism of the Risorgimento was submerged by Cavour's realistic policies.

Ritzy. In colloquial usage, fashionable and luxurious. After the standards of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York, the Ritz Hotel, Paris, and the Ritz Hotel, Piccadilly, London, which became identified with wealth. The latter hotel was established by the Swiss hotelier, César Ritz, in 1906.

Rivals. Originally "persons dwelling on opposite sides of a river" (Lat. rivalis, a river-man). Cælius says there was no more fruitful source of contention than river-right, both with beasts and men, not only for the benefit of its waters, but also because rivers are natural boundaries.

River. To be sent up the river. In American colloquial usage, to be sent to prison; from the fact that Sing Sing, one of the most widely known prisons, is up the Hudson River from New York.

To sell down the river. To let down, to betray. From the days when American owners sold domestic slaves to plantation owners lower down the Mississippi, where harsh conditions often prevailed.

Riviera, The. The name given to the Mediterranean coasts of France and Italy for a distance of 300 miles, with its centre at Genoa. From west to east the principal resorts are : Hyères, Cannes, Nice, Monte Carlo, Menton, Bordighera, San Remo, Rapalle, Savona, La Spezia.

Roach. Sound as a roach. An old saying; a translation of the French Sain comme un gardon.

To roach is to trim a horse's mane to within an inch or so of the hide. The word is also applied in this sense to a style of cutting a man's hair.

Road, The. The name by which CHARING CROSS Road, the centre of the second-hand book trade in London, was known in its heyday to booksellers and bibliophiles.

All roads lead to Rome. All efforts of thought converge in a common centre. As from the centre of the Roman world roads radiated to every part of the Empire, so any road, if followed to its source, must lead to the great capital city, ROME.

Gentlemen of the road, or knights of the road. Highwaymen. In parts of North America a highwayman was called a road agent and the term is still sometimes applied to bandits who hold up trains, motorcars, etc.

On the road. Progressing towards; as, "on the road to recovery"; said also of actors on tour and of commercial travellers.

Road hog. See HOG.

Roman roads. See under ROMAN.

The rule of the road.

The rule of the road is a paradox quite,
In riding or driving along;
If you go to the left you are sure to go right,
If you go to the right you go wrong.

This is still the rule in Great Britain, and IRELAND. In all other European countries and in the U.S.A. traffic keeps to the right.

To take to the road. To become a highwayman or a tramp.

Roadhouse. An inn, hotel, etc., by the roadside, usually at some distance outside a town, where parties can go out by car for meals, dancing, etc.

Roads or Roadstead, as "Yarmouth Roads", a place where ships can safely ride at anchor. Road, O.E. rad comes from ridan, to ride.

Roan Barbary. See BARBARY ROAN.

Roar. Roarer. A broken-winded horse is so called from the noise it makes in breathing.

Bull-roarer. See under BULL.

He drives a roaring trade. He does a great business.

Roaring boys. The riotous blades of Ben Jonson's time, whose delight it was to annoy quiet folk. At one time their pranks in London were carried on to an alarming extent.

A very unthrift, master Thorney; one of the Country roaring lads, we have such as well as the city, and as arrant rakehells as they are, though not so nimble at their prizes of wit.

FORD AND DEKKER: Witch of Edmonton, I, ii.

Dekker and Middleton wrote a play (1611) on Moll Cutpurse (see under CUTPURSE), which they called The Roaring Girl. Cp. MOHAWK; MODS AND ROCKERS.

The Roaring Forties. See under FORTY.

The roaring game. Curling, so called because the Scots when playing or watching support their side with noisy cheering, and because the stones (made of granite or whinstone and shaped like a Dutch cheese) roar as they traverse the ice.

Roaring Meg. See under MEG.

Roast. To roast a person is to banter him unmercifully; also to give him a dressing-down.

To rule the roast. To have the chief direction; to be paramount.

The phrase was common in the 15th century and it is possible that roast was originally roost, the reference being to a COCK, who decides which hen is to roost nearest to him; but in Thomas Heywood's History of Women (c. 1630) we read of "her that ruled the roast in the kitchen".

Suffolk, the new-made duke that rules the roast.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. II, I, i.

Ah, I do domineer, and rule the roast.

CHAPMAN: Gentleman Usher, V, i (1606).

Rob. To rob Peter to pay Paul. To take away from one person in order to give to another; or merely to shift a debt—to pay it off by incurring another one. Fable has it that the phrase alludes to the fact that on 17 December 1540 the abbey church of St. Peter, Westminster, was advanced to the dignity of a cathedral by LETTERS PATENT (see under PATENT); but ten years later was joined to the diocese of London, and many of its estates appropriated to the repairs of St. Paul's Cathedral. But it was a common saying long before and was used by Wyclif about 1380:

How should God approve that you rob Peter, and give this robbery to Paul in the name of Christ.—Select Works, III, 174.

The hint of the President Viglius to the Duke of Alva when he was seeking to impose ruinous taxation in the Netherlands (1569) was that:

it was not desirable to rob Saint Peter's altar in order to build one to St. Paul.

MOTLEY:

The Rise of the Dutch Republic, Pt. III, ch. V.

Rob Roy (Robert the Red). Nickname of Robert M'Gregor (1671–1734), Scottish outlaw and FREEBOOTER, on account of his red hair. He assumed the name of Campbell about 1716, and was protected by the Duke of Argyll. He may be termed the ROBIN HOOD of Scotland.

Rather beneath the middle size than above it, his limbs were formed upon the very strongest model that is consistent with agility. . . . Two points in his person interfered with the rules of symmetry:—his shoulders were so broad. . . . as . . . gave him something the air of being too square in respect to his stature; and his arms, tough, round, sinewy, and strong, were so very long as to be rather a deformity.

SCOTT: Rob Roy, ch. xxxiii.

Robert. A name sometimes applied to a policeman, "the man in blue", in allusion to Sir Robert Peel. Cp. BOBBY; PEELER.

Highwaymen and bandits are called Robert's men from ROBIN HOOD.

King Robert of Sicily. A metrical romance taken from the Story of the Emperor Jovinian in the GESTA ROMANORUM, and borrowed from the TALMUD. It is also found in the ARABIAN NIGHTS, the Turkish Tutinameh, the Sanskrit Panchatantra, and was utilized by Longfellow in his Tales of a Wayside Inn.

Robert the Devil, or Le Diable. Robert, sixth Duke of Normandy (1028–1035), father of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR. He supported the English athelings against Canute, and made the PILGRIMAGE to JERUSALEM. He got his name for his daring and cruelty. He is also called Robert the Magnificent. A Norman tradition is that his wandering ghost will not be allowed to rest till the Day of Judgment (see JUDGMENT, THE LAST) and he became a subject of legend and romance. Meyerbeer's opera Roberto il Diavolo (1831) portrays the struggle between the virtue inherited from his mother and the vice imparted by his father.

Robert François DAMIENS (1715–1757), who attempted to assassinate Louis XV, was also called "Robert le Diable".

Robin. A diminutive of Robert.

Robin Goodfellow. Another name for PUCK. His character and activities are given fully in the ballad of this name in PERCY'S RELIQUES, as exemplified in the following verse:

When house or barth doth sluttish lye,
I pinch the maidens black and blue;
The bed-clothes from the bedd pull I,
And lay them naked all to view.

"Twixt sleepe and wake,

I do them take,

And on the key-cold floor them throw.

If out they cry

Then forth I fly,

And loudly laugh out, ho, ho, ho!

Robin Gray, Auld. Words by Lady Anne Lindsay, daughter of the Earl of Balcarres, and afterwards Lady Barnard, written (1771) to an old Scotch tune called "The bridegroom grat when the sun gaed down". Auld Robin Gray was the herdsman of her father. When Lady Anne had written a part, she called her younger sister for advice. She said, "I am writing a ballad of virtuous distress in humble life. I have oppressed my heroine with sundry troubles: for example, I have sent her Jamie to sea, broken her father's arm, made her mother sick, given her Auld Robin Gray for a lover, and want a fifth sorrow; can you help me to one?" "Steal the cow, sister Anne," said the little Elizabeth; so the cow was stolen awa', and the song completed. Lady Anne later wrote a sequel in which Auld Robin Gray died, Jeannie married Jamie and all turned to a happy ending.

Robin Hood. This traditional outlaw and hero of English ballads is mentioned by Langland in the Vision of Piers Plowman, Bk. V, 402 (1377), and there are several mid-15th-century poems about him. The first published collection of ballads about him, A Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode was printed by Wynkyn de Worde (c. 1489). The earliest tales were set in Barnsdale, Yorkshire, or in Sherwood Forest, Nottinghamshire, and his adventures have been variously assigned from the reign of Richard I (1189-1199) to that of Edward II (1307-1327). One popular legend was that he was the outlawed Earl of Huntingdon, Robert Fitzooth, in disguise. The name may have been that of an actual outlaw around whose name the legends accumulated. He suffered no woman to be molested and he is credited with robbing the rich and helping the poor.

Robin's earlier companions included LITTLE JOHN, Will Scarlet, MUCH, the miller's son, Allen-a-dale, George-a-Green (see AS GOOD AS GEORGE-A-GREEN under GEORGE), and later FRIAR TUCK and MAID MARIAN.

The stories formed the basis of early dramatic representations and were later amalgamated with the MORRIS dancers' MAY-DAY revels. Cp. TWM SHÔN CATTI.

Robyn was a proude outlawe,
Whyles he walked on grounde,
So curteyse an outlawe as he was one
Was never none yfounde.

A Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode, I.

Bow and arrow of Robin Hood. The traditional bow and arrow of Robin Hood are religiously preserved at Kirklees Hall, Yorkshire, the seat of the Armytage family; and the site of his grave is pointed out in the park.

Death of Robin Hood. He was reputedly bled to death treacherously by a nun, instigated to the foul deed by his kinswoman, the prioress of Kirklees, near Halifax (1247).

Many talk of Robin Hood who never shot with his bow. Many brag of deeds in which they took no part.

Robin Hood and Guy of Gisborne. A ballad given in PERCY'S RELIQUES. ROBIN HOOD and LITTLE JOHN, having had a tiff, part company, when Little John falls into the hands of the SHERIFF of Nottingham, who binds him to a tree. Meanwhile Robin Hood meets with Guy of Gisborne, sworn to slay the "bold forrester". The two bowmen struggle together, but Guy is slain and Robin Hood rides till he comes to the tree where Little John is bound. The sheriff mistakes him for Guy of Gisborne, and gives him charge of the prisoner. Robin cuts the cord, hands Guy's bow to Little John, and the two soon put to flight the sheriff and his men.

A Robin Hood wind. A cold thaw-wind. Tradition runs that ROBIN HOOD used to say he could bear any cold except that which a thaw-wind brought with it.

Robin Hood's Larder. See under OAK.

Robin Hood's Bay, between Whitby and Scarborough, Yorkshire, is mentioned by Leland. Robin Hood is supposed to have kept fishing boats there to put to sea when pursued by the soldiery. He also went fishing in them in the summer.

To go round Robin Hood's barn. To arrive at the right conclusion by circuitous methods.

To sell Robin Hood's pennyworth is to sell things at half their value. As Robin Hood stole his wares he sold them under their intrinsic value, for what he could get.

Robin Redbreast. The tradition is that when Our Lord was on His way to CALVARY, a robin picked a thorn out of his crown, and the blood which issued from the wound falling on the bird dyed its breast red.

Another fable is that the robin covers the dead with leaves; this is referred to in Webster's White Devil, V, 1 (1612):

Call for the robin-red-breast and the wren,
Since o'er shady groves they hover,
And with leaves and flowers do cover
The friendless bodies of unburied men.

And in the ballad of the Children in the Wood (PERCY'S RELIQUES):

No burial this pretty pair
Of any man receives,
Till Robin-red-breast piously
Did cover them with leaves.

Cp. RUDDOCK.

Robin Redbreasts. See REDBREASTS.

Robin and Makyne. An ancient Scottish pastoral given in PERCY'S RELIQUES. Robin is a shepherd for whom Makyne sighs. She goes to him and tells her love, but Robin turns a deaf ear, and the damsel goes home to weep. After a time the tables are turned, and Robin goes to Makyne to plead for her heart and hand; but the damsel replies:

The man that will not when he may,
Sall have nocht when he wald.

A round robin. See under ROUND.

Robinson Crusoe. The ever-popular castaway of Defoe's novel of this name (1719) was suggested by the adventures of Alexander SELKIRK. Crusoe's Island was not Juan Fernandez in the South Pacific where Selkirk was put ashore, but an imaginary island near Trinidad; Defoe's description most nearly fits Tobago.

Robot (rō' bot) (Czech robota, forced labour). An automaton with semi-human powers and intelligence. From this the term is often extended to mean a person who works automatically without employing initiative. The name comes from the mechanical creatures in Karel Čapek's play R.U.R. (Rossum's Universal Robots), which was successfully produced in London in 1923. The word was also applied to various forms of "flying bombs", "Buzz-bombs" or "Doodle-bugs" sent against England by the Germans in World War II.

Roc. In Arabian legend, a fabulous white bird of enormous size and such strength that it can "truss elephants in its talons", and carry them to its mountain nest, where it devours them. It is described in the ARABIAN NIGHTS (SINBAD THE SAILOR).

Roch, or Roque, St. (rōsh, rōk). Patron of those afflicted with the plague, because "he worked miracles on the plague-stricken, while he was himself smitten with the same judgment". He is depicted in a pilgrim's habit, lifting his dress, to display a plague-spot on his thigh, which an ANGEL is touching that he may cure it. Sometimes he is accompanied by a dog bringing bread in his mouth, in allusion to the legend that a hound brought him bread daily while he was perishing of pestilence in a forest.

His feast day, 16 August, was formerly celebrated in England as a general harvest-home, and styled "the great August festival".

St. Roch et son chien. (Fr., St. Roch and his dog). Inseparables; DARBY AND JOAN.

Rochdale Pioneers, The. The name given to the sponsors of the first financially successful co-operative store. In December 1844, a group of 28 weavers calling themselves the Equitable Pioneers opened their store in Toad Lane, Rochdale, Lancashire, with a capital of £28. They sold their wares at market prices and gave a dividend to purchasers in proportion to their expenditure. It was on this device that the co-operative movement grew.

Roche (rōsh). Sir Boyle Roche's bird. Sir Boyle Roche (1743-1807) was an Irish M.P., noted for his "BULLS". On one occasion in the House, quoting from Jevon's play, The Devil of a Wife, he said, "Mr. Speaker, it is impossible I could have been in two places at once, unless I were a bird." The phrase is probably of earlier origin.

Rochelle Salt. Seidlitz powder, a tartrate of sodium or potassium, so called because it was discovered by an apothecary of La Rochelle, named Seignette, in 1672. In France it is called sel de Seignette or sel des tombeaux.

Rock. A symbol of solidity and strength.

Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

Matt. xvi, 18.

It is the Lat. petra, rock, from which the name Peter is derived. Cp. ROCK OF AGES, below.

Gibraltar is commonly known as "The Rock" (see ROCK ENGLISH below).

In U.S.A. thieves' slang a rock is a diamond or other precious stone. See also ROCK DAY; ROCK 'N' ROLL.

A house builded upon a rock. Typical of a person or a thing whose foundations are sure. The allusion is to Matt. vii, 24.

The Ladies' Rock. A crag under the castle rock of Stirling, where ladies used to witness tournaments.

On the rocks. "Stony broke", having no money; a phrase from seafaring; a ship that is on the rocks will very quickly go to pieces unless she can be floated off.

People of the Rock. The inhabitants of Hejaz or ARABIA Petraea.

Rock Day. "St. Distaff's Day" (see under DISTAFF); Cp. PLOUGH MONDAY.

Rock English. The mixed patois of Spanish and English spoken by the native inhabitants of Gibraltar—colloquially referred to as Rock Lizards or Rock Scorpions. Similarly, Malta or Mediterranean fever, which is common in Gibraltar, is also called Rock fever.

Rock of Ages. Christ, as the unshakeable and eternal foundation. In a marginal note to Is. xxvi, 4, the words "everlasting strength" are stated to be in Hebrew "rock of ages". In one of his hymns Wesley wrote (1788)—

Hell in vain against us rages;
Can it shock
Christ the Rock
Of eternal Ages?

Praise by all to Christ is given.

Southey also has:

These waters are the well of life, and lo!
The Rock of Ages, there, from whence they flow.
Pilgrimage to Waterloo, Pt. II, iii.

The well-known hymn Rock of ages, cleft for me, was written by Augustus Montague TOPLADY (1740-1778) and first published in the Gospel Magazine (1775). One account says that he wrote it while seated by a great cleft of rock near Cheddar, Somerset; a more unlikely story is that the first verse was written on the ten of diamonds in the interval between two rubbers of WHIST at Bath.

That is the rock you'll split on. That is the danger, or the more or less hidden or eventual difficulty. A phrase of nautical origin.

Rocking Stones. See LOGAN STONES.

Rock 'n' roll (Rock and Roll), or just Rock, was the 'pop' music of the latter half of the 1950s, characterized by its swing or rhythm and the style of dancing that went with it. Its fans were called "rockers" and they belonged to the days of the teddy boy (see EDWARDIAN), before the advent of the Mods. Cp. MODS AND ROCKERS.

Rocket. To give someone a rocket. To reprimand severely, "to blow him sky high".

Rococo (rō kō' kō). An 18th-century European decorative style particularly characterized by motifs taken from shells. The name is from Fr. rocaille, rock-work, grotto work, as exemplified in the extravagances at VERSAILLES. It was a development from Baroque, and was seen at its best in the furniture and architecture of France during the reign of Louis XV (1715-1774). At its worst, it was florid and ornate, hence the use of rococo to denote anything in art and literature that is pretentious and tasteless.

Rod. A rod in pickle. A scolding or punishment in store. Birch-rods used to be laid in brine to keep the twigs pliable. Spare the rod and spoil the child. An old saying drawing attention to the folly of allowing childish faults to go un-reproved; founded on Prov. xiii, 24, "He that spareth his rod hateth his son; but he that loveth him chasteneth him betimes."

To kiss the rod. To submit to punishment or misfortune meekly and without murmuring.

Rodeo (rō' di ō, or rō dā' ō) (Span. rodear, to go around). A contest or exhibition of skill among COWBOYS, a feature of the ROUND-UP. As a travelling show it was first introduced by BUFFALO BILL and depends for its popularity upon professional skill with the lasso, the riding of broncos and steers, etc.

Roderick, or Rodrigo. A Spanish hero round whom many legends have collected. He was the last of the Visigothic kings. He came to the throne in 710, and was routed, and probably slain, by the Moors under Tarik in 711. Southey took him as the hero of his Roderick, the last of the Goths (1814), where he appears as the son of Theodofred.

According to legend he violated Florinda, daughter of Count Julian of Ceuta, who called in the SARACENS by way of revenge. It is related that he survived to spend the rest of his life in penance and was eventually devoured by snakes until his sin was atoned for. It was also held that he would return in triumph to save his country.

Rodomontade. Bluster, brag, or a blustering and bragging speech; from Rodomont, the brave but braggart leader of the SARACENS in Boiardo's ORLANDO INNAMORATO and Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO.

Rodrigo. See RODERICK.

Roe, Richard. See DOE.

Rogation Days. Rogation Sunday is the SUNDAY before ASCENSION DAY, the Rogation days are the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday following Rogation Sunday. Rogation is the Latin equivalent of the Greek litaneia, supplication or litany (Lat. rogatio), and in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH on the three Rogation days "the Litany of the Saints" is appointed to be sung by the clergy and people in public procession.

The Rogation Days used to be called Gang Days, from the custom of ganging round the country parishes to beat the BOUNDS at this time. Similarly the weed milkwort is called Rogation or Gangflower from the custom of decorating the pole carried on such occasions with these flowers.

Roger. The Jolly Roger. The black flag with skull and cross-bones, the pirate flag.

Sir Roger de Coverley. The simple, good, and lovable country squire created by Steele as the chief character in the club that was supposed to write for the Spectator, but essentially portrayed by Addison. Sir Roger de Coverley has left his name to a popular country dance which, he tells us, was invented by his great-grandfather. Coverley is intended for Cowley, near Oxford.

As Sir Roger is landlord to the whole congregation, he keeps them in very good order, and will suffer no body to sleep in it besides himself.

ADDISON: A Sunday in the Country.

Rogero, Ruggiero, or Rizieri (ro jár ō, ruj ār' o, ritz i ār' i) of Risa (in Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO), was brother of Marphisa, and son of Rogero and Galacella. His mother was slain by Agolant and his sons, and he was nursed by a lioness. He deserted from the Moorish army to CHARLEMAGNE, and was baptized.

His marriage with BRADAMANTE, Charlemagne's niece, and election to the crown of Bulgaria conclude the poem.

Rogers' Rangers. A body of daring American frontiersmen raised by Major Robert Rogers to fight with the British troops during the French and Indian war of 1756-1763. They took possession of Detroit and other posts. During the War of Independence, the uncertainty of Rogers's allegiance led to his rejection by both sides and his undoubted abilities were wasted. He died at London in drunken obscurity (1795).

Rogue. One of the "canting" words first used in the 16th century to describe sturdy beggars and vagrants (perhaps from some outstanding member of the class named Roger). There is a good description of them in Harman's Caveat for Warening for Commen Corsetors, Vulgarely called Vagabones, ch. iv. The expression rogues and vagabonds has since 1572 been applied in the Vagrancy Acts to all sorts of wandering, disorderly, or dissolute persons.

Rogue elephant. A vicious and dangerous elephant that lives apart from the herd.

Rogue in grain. A Knave in the GRAIN.

Rogue's badge. A race-horse or a hunter that becomes obstinate and refuses to do its work is known as a rogue, and the blinkers that it is made to wear are the rogue's badge.

Rogue's Latin. The same as thieves' Latin. See under LATIN.

Rogue's March. The tune played when an undesirable soldier was drummed out of his regiment; hence, an ignominious dismissal.

Rogue's yarn. The name given to the coloured strand forming part of a government rope inserted to deter thieves. In the former main dockyard roperies yellow denoted Chatham cordage, blue Portsmouth, and red Devonport.

Roi Panade (Fr., King of Slops). Louis XVIII (1755, 1814-1824) was so nicknamed.

Roland, or (in Ital.) Orlando. The most famous of Charlemagne's PALADINS, called "the Christian THESEUS" and "the ACHILLES of the West". He was Count of Mans and knight of Blaives, and son of Duke of Milo of Aiglant, his mother being Bertha, the sister of CHARLEMAGNE. Fable has it that he was eight feet high, and had an open countenance which invited confidence, but inspired respect. When Charlemagne was returning from his expedition against Pamplona and Saragossa the army fell into a natural trap at Roncesvalles, in the Pyrenees, and Roland, who commanded the rear-guard, was slain with all the flower of the Frankish CHIVALRY (778).

His achievements are recorded in the Chronicle attributed to Turpin (d. 794), Archbishop of Rheims, which was not written till the 11th or 12th century. He is the hero of the SONG OF ROLAND (see below), Boiardo's ORLANDO INNAMORATO, and Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO. He is also a principal character in Pulci's MORGANTE MAGGIORE and converts the giant Morgante to Christianity.

A Roland for an Oliver. A blow for a blow, TIT FOR TAT. The exploits of these two PALADINS are so similar that it is difficult to keep them distinct. What Roland did Oliver did, and what Oliver did Roland did. At length the two met in single combat, and fought for five consecutive days, but neither gained the least advantage. SHAKESPEARE alludes to the phrase: "England all Oliver's and Rolands bred" (Henry VI, Pt. I, I, ii) and Edward Hall, the historian, almost a century before Shakespeare, writes:

But to have a Roland to resist an Oliver, he sent solempne ambassadors to the King of Englande, offeryng hym hys daughter in marriage.
Henry VI.

Childe Roland. Youngest brother of the "fair burd Helen" in the old Scottish ballad. Guided by MERLIN, he successfully undertook to bring his sister from Elf-land, whither the fairies had carried her.

Childe Roland to the dark tower came;
His word was still "Fie, foh, fum,
I smell the blood of a British man."

SHAKESPEARE: King Lear, III, iv.

Browning's poem, Child Roland to the Dark Tower Came, is not connected, other than by the first line, with the old ballad. Like the blast of Roland's horn. Roland had a wonderful ivory horn, named "Olivant", that he won from the giant Jutmundus. When he was set upon by the Gascons at Roncesvalles he sounded it to give CHARLEMAGNE notice of his danger. At the third blast it cracked in two, but it was so loud that birds fell dead and the whole SARACEN army was panic-struck. Charlemagne heard the sound at St.-Jean-Pied-de-Port, and rushed to the rescue, but arrived too late.

Oh, for a blast of that dread horn
On Fontarabian echoes borne,
That to King Charles did come.

SCOTT: Marmion, vi, xxxiii.

Roland's sword. Duranda, Durandana or Durandal, etc., which was fabled to have once belonged to HECTOR, and which, like the horn, ROLAND won from the giant Jutmundus. It had in its hilt a thread from the Virgin Mary's cloak, a tooth of ST. PETER, one of ST. DENYS's hairs, and a drop of St. Basil's blood. Legend relates that Roland, after he had received his death wound, strove to break Durandal on a rock to prevent it falling to the SARACENS; but it was unbreakable so he hurled it into a poisoned stream, where it remains for ever.

The Song (Chanson) of Roland. The 11th-century CHANSON DE GESTE ascribed to the Norman TROUVÈRE Théroulde or Turolfus, which tells the story of the death of ROLAND and all the PALADINS at Roncesvalles, and of CHARLEMAGNE'S vengeance. When Charlemagne had been six years in Spain he sent GANELON on an embassy to Marsillus, the pagan king of Saragossa. Ganelon, out of jealousy, betrayed to Marsillus the route which the Christian army designed to take on its way home, and the pagan king arrived at Roncesvalles just as Roland was conducting through the pass a rearguard of 20,000 men. He fought till 100,000 SARACENS lay slain, and only 50 of his own men survived, when another army of 50,000 men poured from the mountains. Roland now blew his enchanted horn. Charlemagne heard the blast but Ganelon persuaded him that Roland was but hunting deer. Thus Roland was left to his fate.

The Chanson runs to 4,000 lines, the oldest manuscript being preserved in the BODLEIAN LIBRARY, and Wace (Roman de Rou) tells us that the Norman minstrel sang parts of this to encourage William's soldiers at the Battle of Hastings.

Taillefer, the minstrel-knight, bestrode
A gallant steed, and swiftly rode
Before the Duke, and sang the song
Of Charlemagne, of Roland strong,
Of Oliver, and those beside Brave knights at Roncesvaux that died.

A. S. Way's rendering.

To die like Roland. To die of starvation or thirst. One legend has it that ROLAND escaped the general slaughter in the defile of Roncesvalles, and died of hunger and thirst in seeking to cross the Pyrenees. He was buried at Blayes, in the church of St. Raymond; but his body was removed afterwards to Roncesvalles.

Rolandseck Tower, opposite the Drachenfels on the Rhine, 22 miles above Cologne. The legend is that when ROLAND went to the wars, a false report of his death was brought to his betrothed, who retired to a convent in the isle of Nonnenwerth. When he returned flushed with glory and found she had taken the veil, he built the castle to overlook the nunnery, that he might gain a glimpse of his lost love.

Roll. The flying roll of Zechariah (v, 1-5). Predictions of evils to come on a nation are likened to the "flying roll of Zechariah" which was 20 cubits long and ten wide and full of maledictions, threats, and calamities about to befall the Jews. The parchment being unrolled fluttered in the air.

A rolling stone. See under STONE.

Rolling stock. All the wheeled equipment of a railway that is fitted to run on rails: the locomotives, passenger coaches, vans, goods trucks, etc.

Rolls. Chapel of the Rolls (Chancery Lane). Formerly the Chapel of the House of the Converts, founded by Henry III in 1232 for the reception of Jewish converts to Christianity. Edward I expelled the Jews and by 1377 the House of the Converts was allocated to the Keeper of the Rolls of CHANCERY, who was an ecclesiastic. The chapel remained a place of worship, but was also increasingly used for storing records. Most of the documents were transferred to the adjoining and newly-built Public Record Office in 1856 and it was replaced by the Museum of the Public Record Office. The name derives from the practice of keeping parchment documents in rolls for convenience of storing.

Master of the Rolls. A title of 15th-century origin for the keeper of CHANCERY records of rolls and legal assistant to the CHANCELLOR. In the 19th century he became the chief judge of the Chancery division and (since 1838) the custodian of all public records. In 1958 his jurisdiction again reverted to Chancery records only.

It runs like a Rolls. It runs perfectly and with the utmost smoothness. Usually said of a motor-car or of other power-driven vehicles; a tribute to the traditional superiority and quality of Rolls-Royce motors.

To be struck off the rolls. To be removed from the official list of qualified solicitors, and so prohibited from practising. This is done in cases of professional misconduct.

Rollright Stones. An ancient stone circle between the villages of Great and Little Rollright on the Oxfordshire-Warwickshire border. The structure consists of the King Stone, a circle of about 70 stones called the King's Men, and a few others called the Whispering Knights. "The King" at this point could look over Oxfordshire and said:

When Long Compton I shall see,
King of England I shall be.

But he and his men were petrified by a witch.

Roly-poly. A crust with jam rolled up into a pudding; a little fat child. Roly is a thing rolled with the diminutive added. In some parts of SCOTLAND the game of ninepins is called rouly-pouly.

Romaic. Modern or romanized Greek.

Roman. Pertaining to ROME, especially ancient Rome, or to the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. As a surname or distinctive title the adjective has been applied to:

Giulio Pippi, Giulio Romano (1492-1546), the Italian artist.

Adrian von Roomen (1581-1615), the famous mathematician, Adrianus Romanus.

Stephen Picart (1631-1721), the French engraver, le Romain.

Jean Dumont (1700-1781), the French painter, le Romain.

Marcus Terentius Varro (116-27 B.C.) was called the Most Learned of the Romans, and Rienzi or Rienzo (1313-1354), the Italian patriot and "last of the Tribunes," was known as Ultimus Romanorum, the LAST OF THE ROMANS (see under LAST).

Roman architecture. A style of architecture distinguished by its massive character and abundance of ornament, largely derived from the Greek and Etruscan. The Greek orders were adapted and the IONIC and CORINTHIAN were combined to form what came to be called the Roman or Composite order. Their greatest works were baths, amphitheatres, basilicas, aqueducts, bridges, triumphal arches and gateways.

Roman birds. Eagles; so called because the ensign of the Roman legion was an EAGLE.

Roman Catholic Church. A name introduced by "non-Catholics" for members of the CATHOLIC or western Church under the jurisdiction of the papacy. The term is a consequence of the REFORMATION and came into use at about the end of the 16th century. See also POPE.

Roman Empire. Properly, the Empire established by AUGUSTUS in 27 B.C., on the ruins of the Republic. It was finally divided into the Western or Latin Empire and the Eastern or Greek in A.D. 395. The Western Empire was eventually extinguished in 475, the last nominal emperor being Romulus Augustulus. The term "Roman empire" is also applied to the territories and dominions of the ROMAN REPUBLIC. See BYZANTINE EMPIRE.

Roman Empire, The Holy. See under HOLY.

Roman figures. See NUMBERS.

Roman holiday. An allusion to Byron's Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, IV, cxli, where he describes the death of a gladiator in the arena, "Butchered to make a Roman holiday".

The Roman Republic was established in 509 B.C. after the overthrow of the last of the seven kings, Tarquinius Superbus. It was superseded by the Empire (27 B.C.).

For a few months in 1849, after the flight of Pius IX, the people of Rome declared themselves a republic under the triumvirate of Mazzini, Saffi, and Armellini. See also YOUNG ITALY.

Roman roads. See ERMINE; FOSSE; ICKNIELD; WATLING.

Roman type. The first printing types were based upon the national or local handwriting. Roman type, the character in which this book is printed, developed from the litera umanistica, the conscious revival of the old Roman capital and the CAROLINGIAN minuscule which the Humanist scholars of the Italian RENAISSANCE considered more appropriate for the transcription of recently discovered Classical manuscripts than the everyday forms of Gothic handwriting. First used in print about 1465, Roman type had virtually superseded Gothic letter in less than 100 years in all parts of Europe except Germany, the British Isles, and Scandinavia.

Romans. King of the Romans. The title usually assumed by the sovereign of the HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE previous to his actual coronation at ROME. NAPOLEON's son, afterwards the Duke of Reichstadt, was styled the King of Rome at his birth in 1811.

Last of the Romans. See under LAST.

Roman de la Rose. See ROSE, ROMANCE OF THE.

Romance. Applied in linguistics (see ROMANCE LANGUAGES, below) to the languages, especially Old French, sprung from the Latin spoken in the European provinces of the ROMAN EMPIRE; hence, as a noun, the word came to mean a mediæval tale in Old French or Provençal describing usually in mixed prose and verse the marvellous adventures of a hero of CHIVALRY. The modern application to a work of fiction containing incidents more or less removed from ordinary life, or to a love story or love affair, followed from this.

The mediæval romances fall into three main groups or cycles, viz. the Arthurian (see under ARTHUR), the CHARLEMAGNE cycle, and the cycle of ALEXANDER THE GREAT.

Romance languages. Those languages which are the immediate offspring of Latin, as the Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, French, and Rumanian. Early French is emphatically so called; hence Bouillet says, "Le roman était universellement parlé en Gaule au dixième siècle".

You are romancing. You are making it up, stretching it, telling falsehoods or stories, etc. From romance as an imaginative story.

Romanes Lecture, at Oxford University, an annual lecture by an eminent authority on a literary or scientific subject. Founded in 1891 by C. J. Romanes (1848-1894).

Romanesque Architecture (rō mán esk'). This term embraces the style of architecture in Western Europe from the virtual collapse of Roman rule in the 6th century until the emergence of the GOTHIC style in the late 12th century. A style with considerable regional variations, e.g. SAXON and Norman in England, CAROLINGIAN and Rhenish in Germany, it is characterized by the round arch, great thickness of walls, shallow (if any) buttressing, and in later phases by profuse decoration of arcades and other features.

Romantic Movement, The. The literary movement that began in Germany in the last quarter of the 18th century, having for its object a return from the AUGUSTAN or classical formalism of the time, to the freer fancies and methods of ROMANCE. It was led by Schiller, Goethe, Novalis, and Tieck, and spread to England where it influenced the work of Collins and Gray and received an impetus from the publication of PERCY'S RELIQUES and Macpherson's OSSIAN. It was immensely stimulated by the French Revolution and effected a transformation of English literature through the writing of Keats, Byron, Wordsworth, Shelley, Coleridge, Scott, etc. In France its chief exponents were Rousseau, Chateaubriand, Mme de Staël, Lamartine, Musset, de Vigny, and Victor Hugo.

Romany. A GYPSY; or the gypsy language, the speech of the Roma or Zincoli. The word is from Gypsy rom, a man, or husband.

"Aukko tu pios adrey Rommanis. Here is your health in Rommany, brother," said Mr. Petulengro; who having refilled the cup, now emptied it at a draught.

BORROW: Lavengro, ch. liv.

Romany rye. One who enters into the GYPSY spirit, learns their language, lives with them as one of themselves, etc. Rye is gypsy for gentleman. George Borrow's book with this title (a sequel to Lavengro) was published in 1857.

Rome. The greatest city of the ancient world, according to legend founded in 753 B.C. by ROMULUS and named after him; but in all probability so called from Greek rhoma (strength), a suggestion supported by its other name Valentia (Lat. valens, strong). It acquired a new significance as the seat of the papacy.

All roads lead to Rome. See under ROAD.

Oh, that all Rome had but one head, that I might strike it off at a blow. Caligula, the Roman Emperor (A.D. 12, 37-41), is said to have uttered this sentiment.

Rome-Berlin Axis. See AXIS.

Rome penny, or Rome scot. The same as PETER'S PENCE.

Rome's best wealth is its patriotism. So said Mettius Curtius (c. 360 B.C.) who jumped into the wide gap which appeared in the Forum when the ORACLE gave out that it would never close till ROME threw therein its most precious possession.

Rome was not built in a day. Achievements of great moment, worthwhile tasks, etc., are not accomplished without patient perseverance and a considerable interval of time. It is an old saying, and occurs in Heywood's Collection (1562).

'Tis ill sitting at Rome and striving with the Pope. Don't TREAD ON SOMEONE'S CORNS when you are living with him or are in close touch with him—especially if he is powerful.

To fiddle while Rome burns. To trifle during an emergency or crisis. An allusion to NERO'S reputed behaviour during the burning of ROME in A.D. 64 when he sang to his lyre and enjoyed the spectacle from the top of a high tower.

When at Rome, do as Rome does. Conform to the manners and customs of those amongst whom you live; "Don't wear a brown hat in Friesland." St. Monica and her son St. Augustine said to St. AMBROSE: "At Rome they fast on Saturday, but not at Milan; which practice ought to be observed?" To which St.

Ambrose replied: "When I am at Milan, I do as they do at Milan; but when I go to Rome, I do as Rome does!" (Epistle xxxvi). Cp. II Kings v, 18.

The saying is to be found in that great storehouse of proverbs, Porter's Two Angry Women of Abingdon (1599).

Romeo and Juliet. A typification of Romantic love as exemplified in SHAKESPEARE'S famous play of this title. Romeo, of the house of Montague, falls in love with Juliet, one of the Capulet family, long-standing enemies of the Montagus. Romeo and Juliet are secretly married, but Romeo is banished from Verona before their wedding day is over as punishment for the unfortunate slaughter of a Capulet in an affray. Old Capulet now orders Juliet to prepare for marriage with Count Paris forthwith, and to avoid this, she drugs herself into a death-like trance. Romeo, hearing of her "death", returns, enters the tomb where Juliet lies, and kills himself. Juliet awakens, sees her lover dead, and dispatches herself with Romeo's dagger. Shakespeare closely based his play upon Arthur Brooke's long narrative poem, The Tragical History of Romeo and Juliet (1562), which was derived ultimately from an earlier Italian story (1535) by Luigi da Porto, through a French version (1559) by Pierre Boistreau.

A regular Romeo. Said banteringly of one who fancies himself as a LADY-KILLER.

Romulus (rom' úlus). With his twin brother Remus, the legendary and eponymous founder of ROME. They were sons of MARS and Rhea Sylvia (Ilia), who, because she was a VESTAL virgin, was condemned to death, while the sons were exposed. They were, however, suckled by a she-wolf, and eventually set about founding a city, but quarrelled over the plans, and Remus was slain by his brother in anger. Romulus was later taken to the heavens by his father, MARS, in a fiery chariot, and was worshipped by the Romans under the name of Quirinus.

The Second Romulus. Camillus was so called because he saved ROME from the Gauls, 365 B.C.

The Third Romulus. Caius Marius, who saved ROME from the Teutons and Cimbri in 101 B.C.

We need no Romulus to account for Rome. We require no hypothetical person to account for a plain fact.

Roncesvalles. See THE SONG OF ROLAND, under ROLAND.

Ronyon, or Runnion (ron' yón, rún' yon). A term of contempt for a woman. It is probably the Fr. rogneux (scabby, mangy). Shakespeare has:

You hag, you baggage, you polecat, you ronyon! out, out!

The Merry Wives of Windsor, IV, ii.

"Aroint thee, witch!" the rump-fed ronyon cries.

Macbeth, I, iii.

Rood (connected with rod). The Cross of the Crucifixion; or a crucifix, especially the large one that was formerly set on the stone or timber rood-screen that divides the nave from the choir in churches. This is usually richly decorated with statues and carvings of saints, emblems, etc., and frequently surmounted by a gallery called the rood-loft.

And then to see the rood-loft,
Zo bravely zet with saints.

PERCY:

Reliques (Plain Truth, and Blind Ignorance).

By the rood; by the holy rood. Old expletives used by way of asseveration. In SHAKESPEARE'S Hamlet, when the Queen asks Hamlet if he has forgotten her, he answers "No, by the rood, not so" (III, iv).

Rood Day. HOLY ROOD DAY; 14 September, the EXALTATION OF THE CROSS, or 3 May, the INVENTION OF THE CROSS (see under CROSS).

Roof of the World. A name given to the Pamirs, the great region of mountains covering 30,000 square miles, devoid of trees and shrubs, and most of it in the Soviet Socialist Republic of Tadzhikistan. The name is a translation of Bam-i-Dunya, bestowed by the natives of this region. The name also applies to Tibet.

To raise the roof. To be very noisy; to make a real hullabaloo.

Rooinek (Afrikaans, "red-neck"). A name given by the Boers to the British in the South African War, and used later to mean any British or European immigrant to South Africa.

Rook, a cheat. "To rook", to cheat; "to rook a pigeon", to fleece a GREENHORN. Sometimes it simply means to win from another at a game of chance or skill.

Rook, the castle in CHESS, is through Fr. and Span. from Persian rukh, which is said to have meant a warrior.

Rookery. Any low, densely populated neighbourhood, especially one frequented by thieves and vagabonds. The allusion is to the way in which rooks build their nests closely together. Colonies of seals, and places where seals or seabirds collect in their breeding season are also known as ROOKERIES.

Rookie. In army slang, a recruit, a novice or GREENHORN. In the U.S.A., the name given to a raw beginner in professional baseball. It is probably from rook, a rookie being a guileless greenhorn who is easily rooked, swindled, or "taken in".

Room. Your room is better than your company. Your absence is more to be wished than your presence. An old phrase; it occurs in Stanyhurst's Description of Ireland (1577), Greene's Quip for an Upstart Courtier (1592), etc.

Roost. To rule the roost. See under ROAST.

Root, Root and Branch. The whole of it without any exceptions or omissions; "LOCK, STOCK, AND BARREL". The Puritans who supported the Root and Branch Bill of 1641 to abolish EPISCOPACY were known as "Root-and-branch men", or "Rooters", and the term has since been applied to other political factions who are anxious TO GO THE WHOLE HOG (see under HOG).

The root of the matter. Its true inwardness, its actual base and foundation. The phrase comes from Job xix, 28:

But ye should say, Why persecute we him, seeing the root of the matter is found in me?

To root for (U.S.A.). To support a sporting team. Also used of giving active support to a campaigning politician.

To take, or strike root. To become permanently or firmly established.

Rope. Fought back to the ropes. Fought to the bitter end. A phrase from the prize-ring, the "ropes" forming the boundary of the "ring". Hence the expression on the ropes, meaning on the verge of ruin or collapse.

It is a battle that must be fought game, and right back to the ropes.

BOLDREWOOD:

Robbery Under Arms, ch. xxxiii.

Money for old rope. Easy money, money for nothing or very little; something which can be effected easily. The derivation is obvious.

Ropes of sand. See SAND.

She is on her high ropes. In a distant and haughty temper; "HIGH AND MIGHTY". The allusion is to a rope-dancer, who looks down on the spectators.

A taste of the rope's end. A flogging. A nautical expression, where it was formerly a routine punishment to administer a flogging with the end of a rope.

To come to the end of one's rope, or tether. See TETHER.

To fight with a rope round one's neck.

To fight with a certainty of death if you lose.

You must send in a large force; . . . for, as he fights with a rope round his neck, he will struggle to the last.

KINGSTON: The Three Admirals, ch. viii.

To give one rope enough. To allow a person to continue on a certain course of action (usually evil) till he reaps the consequences of his folly or wrongdoing. "Give him enough rope and he will hang himself" is the common saying.

To know the ropes. To be thoroughly familiar with what is to be done; to be up to all the tricks and dodges.

To rope one in. To get him to take part in some scheme, enterprise, etc. An expression from the cattle lands of America, where animals are roped in with a lasso.

You carry a rope in your pocket. Said of a person very lucky at cards, from the superstition that a bit of rope with which a man has been hanged, carried in the pocket, secures luck at cards.

The Rope-walk. Former barristers' slang for an OLD BAILEY practice. Thus "Gone into the Rope-walk" means, he has taken up practice in the OLD BAILEY. The allusion is to the murder trials there, and to the convicted murderer "getting the rope".

Ropeable. In Australia, a term now applied to one who is in a bad temper. Originally it meant cattle so wild that they could be controllable only by roping.

Ropey. A slang expression meaning inferior, worn-out, tatty, dubious, etc., as a "ropey outfit", a "ropey character".

Roper. Mistress Roper. A CANT name given to the MARINES by British sailors, from the allegedly awkward way Marines handle the ship's ropes—a fiction rather than fact.

To marry Mistress Roper is to enlist in the Royal Marines.

Roque, St. See ROCH.

Roquelaure (rök' lör). A cloak for men, reaching to the knees. It was worn in the 18th century, and so named from Antoine-Gaston, Duc de Roquelaure (1656-1738), a Marshal of France.

"Your honour's roquelaure", replied the corporal, "has not once been had on since the night before your honour received your wound."

STERNE:

Tristram Shandy; Story of Le Fever.

Rory O'More. See RHYMING SLANG.

Rosabelle. The favourite palfrey of Mary Queen of Scots.

Rosalia, or Rosalie, St. (rō zā' li a, roz' a lē). The patron saint of Palermo, in art depicted in a cave with a CROSS and skull, or else in the act of receiving a ROSARY or chaplet of roses from the Virgin. She lived in the 13th century, and is said to have been carried by ANGELS to an inaccessible mountain, where she dwelt for many years in the cleft of a rock, a part of which she wore away with her knees in her devotions. A CHAPEL has been built there, with a marble statue, to commemorate the event.

Rosamond, The Fair (roz' a mund). Higden, monk of Chester, writing about 1350, says: "she was the fayre daughter of Walter, Lord Clifford, concubine of Henry II, and poisoned by Queen Eleanor, A.D. 1177. Henry made for her a house of wonderful working, so that no man or woman might come to her. This house was named Labyrinthus, and was wrought like unto a knot in a garden called a maze. But the queen came to her by a clue of thredde, and so dealt with her that she lived not long after. She was buried at Godstow, in an house of nunnes, with these verses upon her tombe:

Hic jacet in tumba Rosa mundi, non Rosa munda;
Non redolet, sed olet, quæ redolere solet."

Here Rose the graced, not Rose the chaste, reposes;
The smell that rises is no smell of roses.—E.C.B.

The legend of her murder by Queen Eleanor first appears in the 14th century and the story of the LABYRINTH even later. There is no evidence to support the stories that Fair Rosamond was the mother of William Longsword and Geoffrey, Archbishop of York. A subterranean labyrinth in Blenheim Park near Woodstock, is still pointed out as "Rosamond's Bower".

Jane Clifford was her name, as books aver:
Fair Rosamond was but her nom de guerre.
DRYDEN: Epilogue to Henry II.

Rosary (rō' zār i) (Lat. rosarium, rose garden, garland). The bead-roll used by Roman Catholics for keeping count of the recitation of certain prayers; also the prayers themselves. The usual modern rosary consists of five decades of ten recitations, or one-third of the complete rosary known as a corona or chaplet. The full rosary comprises 15 decades of Aves (Hail Marys—small beads), each preceded by a Pater (Our Father—large bead), and followed by a Gloria (Glory be to the Father—large bead). While the first chaplet is being recited the five joyful MYSTERIES are contemplated; during the second chaplet, the five sorrowful mysteries; and during the third, the five glorious mysteries. Only one group of five mysteries is usually contemplated. Traditionally the devotion of the rosary is said to have begun with St. DOMINIC early in the 13th century but this is not established. Sometimes the Venerable BEDE is credited with its introduction but quite erroneously; the idea is based upon the fanciful derivation of bead from Beda. Cp. GAUDY; PATERNOSTER.

Rosciad, The (ros' i ád). A satire by Charles Churchill, published in 1761, on well-known metropolitan actors. Churchill was a member of the HELL-FIRE CLUB.

Roscius (ros' i us). A first-rate actor; after Quintus Roscius (d. c. 62 B.C.), the Roman actor unrivalled for his grace of action, melody of voice, conception of character, and delivery.

What scene of death hath Roscius now to act?
SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. III, V, vi.

Another Roscius. So Camden terms Richard Burbage (d. 1619).

The British Roscius. Thomas Betterton (1635-1710), of whom Cibber says, "He alone was born to speak what only Shakespeare knew to write." Garrick was also given the title.

The Roscius of France. Michel Boyron (1635-1729), generally called Baron.

The Young Roscius. William Henry West Betty (1791-1834). He first appeared publicly in 1803 as Oswyn in Zara, and after achieving astonishing success, left the stage in 1824.

Rose. Mediæval legend asserts that the first roses appeared miraculously at Bethlehem as the result of the prayers of a "fayre Mayden" who had been falsely accused and sentenced to death by burning. As Sir John Mandeville tells the tale (Travels, ch. vi), after her prayer:

sche entered into the Fuyer; and anon was the Fuyr quenched and oute; and the Bronδες that weren brennyng, becomen red Roseres; and the Bronδες that weren not kyndled, becomen white Roseres, fulle of Roses. And these weren the first Roseres and Roses, both white and rede, that evere any Man saughe. And thus was this Mayden saved be the Grace of God.

In Christian symbolism the Rose, as being emblematic of a paragon or one without peer, is peculiarly appropriated to the Virgin MARY, one of whose titles is "The Mystical Rose". It is also the attribute of St. DOROTHEA, who carries roses in a basket; of St. Casilda, St. Elizabeth of Portugal, and St. Rose of Viterbo, who carry roses in either their hands or caps; of St. Thérèse of Lisieux, who scatters red roses; and of St. Rosalie, St. Angelus, St. Rose of Lima, St. Ascyllus, and St. Victoria, who wear crowns of roses.

The Rose is an emblem of ENGLAND and in HERALDRY is used as the mark of cadency for a seventh son. See RED ROSE; TUDOR ROSE; WHITE ROSE, below.

In the language of flowers, different roses have a different signification as:

The Burgundy Rose signifies simplicity and beauty.

The China Rose, grace or beauty ever fresh.

The Daily Rose, a smile.

The Dog Rose, pleasure mixed with pain.

A Faded Rose, beauty is fleeting.

The Japan Rose, beauty your sole attraction.

The Moss Rose, voluptuous love.

The Musk Rose, capricious beauty.

The Provence Rose, my heart is in flames.

The White Rose Bud, too young to love.

The White Rose full of buds, secrecy.

A Wreath of Roses, beauty and virtue rewarded.

The Yellow Rose, infidelity.

Golden Rose. See under GOLDEN.

The Red Rose was one of several badges of the House of Lancaster, but not especially the most prominent. It was used by Edmund, Earl of Lancaster (1245-1296), called Crouchback, second son of Henry III, and it was one of the badges of Henry IV and Henry V, but it does not appear to have been used by Henry VI. The rose-plucking scene in SHAKESPEARE's Henry VI, Pt. I, II, iv, is essentially a fiction.

The Tudor Rose. Henry of Richmond (1457-1509), son of Edmund Tudor, Earl of Richmond, and head of the House of Lancaster after the death of Henry VI, adopted the red rose to emphasize his LANCASTRIAN claims. After his victory at Bosworth (1485), he became king as Henry VII and in 1486 married Princess Elizabeth of York. The union of the two Houses gave rise to the Tudor Rose, a superimposition of the white rose on the red. See WARS OF THE ROSES, below.

The White Rose was used as a badge by Richard, Duke of York (1411-1460), and was derived from his Mortimer ancestors. It was one of the numerous badges used by his son Edward IV and was used by his descendants, but Richard III's badge was the white BOAR. It was also adopted by the JACOBITES as an emblem of the PRETENDER, because his adherents were obliged to abet him SUB ROSA (see below). Cecily Neville, wife of Richard, Duke of York, and grand daughter of John of Gaunt, was known as The White Rose of Raby. Cp. RED ROSE, above; WARS OF THE ROSES, below.

The Rose Alley Ambuscade. The attack on Dryden by masked ruffians, probably in the employ of Rochester and the Duchess of Portsmouth, on 18 December 1679, in revenge for an anonymous Essay on Satire attacking King Charles II, Rochester, and the Duchesses of Cleveland and Portsmouth, which was erroneously attributed to Dryden but actually written by Lord Mulgrave.

The Rose Coffee-House. The tavern standing at the corner of Russell Street and Bridge Street, COVENT GARDEN, from about 1651. It was the scene of many brawls and was visited by Pepys and Gibbon. It was demolished in 1766 to provide space for an extension to the DRURY LANE Theatre.

The Rose of Jericho. The popular name of Anastatica hierochuntina, a small branching plant, native to the sandy deserts of ARABIA, Egypt, and Syria. When it is dry, if it is exposed to moisture, the branches uncurl. Also called the rose of the Virgin, or Rosa Mariae.

Rose Noble. A gold coin, also called a ryal, or royal, so named because it bore a rose in a sun on the reverse. It was first minted in 1465 and was valued at 10s., but the issue ceased by 1470. It was revived by Henry VII and again by Mary and Elizabeth I. A rose-ryal was issued by James I.

Rose, The Romance of the. An early French poem of over 20,000 lines; an elaborate allegory on the Art of Love beneath which can be seen a faithful picture of contemporary life. It was begun by Guillaume de Lorris in the latter half of the 13th century, and continued by Jean de Meung in the early part of the 14th. The poet is accosted by Dame Idleness, who conducts him to the Palace of Pleasure, where he meets Love, accompanied by Sweet-looks, Riches, Jollity, Courtesy, Liberality, and Youth, who spend their time in dancing, singing and other amusements. By this retinue the poet is conducted to a bed of roses, where he singles out one and attempts to pluck it, when an arrow from CUPID's bow stretches him fainting on the ground, and he is carried far from the flower of his choice. As soon as he recovers, he finds himself alone, and resolves to return to his rose. Welcome goes with him; but Danger, Shame-face, Fear and Slander obstruct him at every turn. Reason advises him to abandon the pursuit, but this he will not do; whereupon Pity and Liberality aid him in reaching the rose of his choice, and VENUS permits him to touch it with his lips. Meanwhile Slander rouses up Jealousy, who seizes Welcome, whom he casts into a strong castle, and gives the key of the castle door to an old hag. Here the poet is left to mourn over his fate, and the original poem ends.

In the second part—which is much the longer—the same characters appear, but the spirit of the poem is altogether different, the author being interested in life as a whole instead of solely love; and directing his satire especially against women.

An English version, The Romaunt of the Rose, was translated by Chaucer, but in the extant version (first printed in 1532) it is generally held that only the first 1,700 lines or so are his.

Rose Sunday. The fourth Sunday in LENT, when the POPE blesses the GOLDEN ROSE.

A rose by any other name would smell as sweet. The name is of little consequence, it does not affect the inherent qualities of the person or thing under consideration. Thus SHAKESPEARE'S Juliet says:

What's in a name? that which we call a rose,
By any other name would smell as sweet;
So Romeo would, were he not Romeo call'd.
Romeo and Juliet, II, ii.

The expression is now commonly used sarcastically.

No rose without a thorn. There is always something to detract from pleasure—"every sweet has its sour", "there is a crook in every lot" (see under CROOK).

Sing Old Rose and burn the bellows. "Old Rose" was the title of a song now unknown; Isaak Walton refers to it:

And now let's go to an honest alehouse, where we may have a cup of good barley wine, and sing "Old Rose", and all of us rejoice together.
The Compleat Angler, Pt. I, ch. ii (1653).

Burn the bellows may be a schoolboys' perversion of burn libellos. At breaking-up time the boys might say, "Let's sing Old Rose and burn our libellos" (schoolbooks). This does not accord ill with the meaning of the well-known catch:

Now we're met like jovial fellows,
Let us do as wise men tell us,
Sing Old Rose and burn the bellows.

Sub rosa (Lat.), or Under the rose. In strict confidence. The origin of the phrase is obscure but the story is that CUPID gave HARPOCRATES (the god of silence) a ROSE, to bribe him not to betray the amours of VENUS. Hence the flower became the emblem of silence and was sculptured on the ceilings of banquet-rooms, to remind the guests that what was spoken sub vino was not to be repeated sub divo. In the 16th century it was placed over confessionals.

A bed of roses. See under BED.

The Wars of the Roses. The usual name given to the CIVIL WARS in England (1455-1485) between LANCASTRIANS and YORKISTS which ended in the triumph of Henry Tudor at Bosworth. The wars were partly dynastic and partly private wars of the nobility, occasioned by the weakness of government and the collapse of law and order. The name is not really historical and appears to derive from Scott.

He now turned his eyes to the regaining of those rich and valuable foreign possessions which had been lost during the administration of the feeble Henry VI, and the civil discords so dreadfully prosecuted in the wars of the White and Red Roses.
Anne of Geierstein, ch. vii.

There is no contemporary record of the use of the term for these struggles for political control. See THE RED ROSE; THE TUDOR ROSE; THE WHITE ROSE, above.

Rosemary (rōz' mā ri) (Lat. Ros marinus, sea-dew). The shrub (Rosmarinus officinalis) is said to be useful in love-making. As VENUS, the love goddess, was sprung from the foam of the sea, rosemary or sea-dew would have amatory qualities.

The sea his mother Venus came on;
And hence some rev'rend men approve
Of rosemary in making love.
BUTLER: Hudibras, Pt. II, Canto i, l. 843.

Rosemary, an emblem of remembrance. In SHAKESPEARE'S Hamlet (IV, v) Ophelia says, "There's rosemary, that's for remembrance." According to Culpeper, "It quickens a weak memory, and the senses." As HUNGARY WATER, it was once extensively taken to quieten the nerves. It was much used in weddings, and to wear rosemary in ancient times was as significant of a wedding as to wear a white favour. When the Nurse in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet (II, iv) asks, "Doth not rosemary and Romeo begin both with a [i.e. the same] letter?" She refers to the emblematical characteristics of the herb. In the language of flowers it means "Fidelity in love".

Rosemodres Circle. The MERRY MAIDENS.
Rosetta Stone, The (rō zet' á). A stone found in 1799 by M. Boussard, a French officer of engineers, in an excavation made at Fort St. Julien, near Rosetta, in the Nile delta. It has an inscription in three different languages—the hieroglyphic, the demotic, and the Greek. It was erected 195 B.C. in honour of Ptolemy Epiphanes, because he remitted the dues of the sacerdotal body. The great value of the stone is that it furnished the key whereby the Egyptian hieroglyphics were deciphered.

Rosherville Gardens. In Victorian times "the place to spend a happy day". These gardens were established by Mr. Rosher in disused chalk quarries at Gravesend. A theatre, zoological collections, and music formed part of their attraction, and the gardens were particularly favoured by river excursionists. The site has long been given over to industry.

Rosicrucians (roz i kroo' sháns). A secret society of CABBALISTS, occultists and alchemists that is first heard of in 1614 when the anonymous Fama fraternitatis des löblichen Ordens des Rosenkreuzes was published at Cassel. It was reputed to have been founded by a certain Christian Rosenkreuz in the mid-15th century but nothing is known of him. In FREEMASONRY there is still a degree known as the Rose Croix.

It has been suggested that the title is from ros crux, dew cross. Dew was considered the most powerful solvent of GOLD; and cross in ALCHEMY is the symbol of light.

As for the Rosicross philosophers,
Whom you will have to be but sorcerers,
What they pretend to is no more
Than Trismegistus did before,
Pythagoras, old Zoroaster,
And Apollonius their master.

BUTLER: Hudibras, Pt. II, iii, l. 651.

Rosicrucian societies still exist.

Rosin Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Rosinante. See ROZINANTE.

Ross. The Man of Ross. A name given to John Kyrle (1637-1724), a native of Whitehouse, in Gloucestershire. He was famous for his benevolence and for supplying needy parishes with churches. The KYRLE SOCIETY was named in his honour.

Who taught the heaven-directed spire to rise?
"The Man of Ross", each lisping babe replies.
Behold the market-place with poor o'erspread!
He feeds yon alms-house, neat, but void of state,
Where Age and Want sit smiling at the gate;
Him portioned maids, apprenticed orphans blest,
The young who labour, and the old who rest.

POPE: Moral Essays, Epistle III, l. 261.

Rosse. A famous sword which the dwarf ALBERICH gave to Otwit, King of Lombardy. It struck so fine a cut that it left no "gap", shone like glass, and was adorned with gold.

This sword to thee I give: it is all bright of hue;
Whatever it may cleave, no gap will there ensue,
From Almari I brought it, and Rosse is its name;
Wherever swords are drawn, 'twill put them all to shame.

The Heldenbuch.

Rostrum. A pulpit, or stand for public speakers. The Lat. rostrum is the bill or beak of a bird, also the beak or curved prow of a ship. In the Forum at ROME, the platform from which orators addressed the public was ornamented with rostra, or ship-prows taken from the Antiates in 338 B.C., hence this use of the word.

Rota (rō' tá). A short-lived political club founded in London in 1659 by James Harrington. Its republican principles are outlined in his Oceana and it advocated rotation of government offices and voting by ballot. It met at the Turk's Head in New Palace Yard and did not survive the RESTORATION.

Rota Sacra Romana. A Roman Catholic ecclesiastical court of mediæval origin composed of auditors under the presidency of a DEAN. It was reconstituted by Pius X in 1908 and appears to take its name from the circular table originally used by the judges at Avignon. It tries cases and hears appeals from ecclesiastical tribunals.

Rotary Club. A movement among business men which takes for its motto "Service above Self". The idea originated with Paul Harris, a Chicago lawyer, in 1905. In 1911 it took root in Britain and there are now clubs in most towns, membership being limited to one member each of any trade, calling, or profession. Lectures are delivered at weekly meetings by guest speakers. The name derives from the early practice of holding meetings in rotation at the offices or business premises of its members. The Rotary Clubs are now members of one association called Rotary International.

Rote. To learn by rote is to learn by means of repetition, i.e. by going over the same beaten track or route again and again. Rote is really the same word as route.

Rothschild. I am not a Rothschild. I am not a millionaire, I am not "rolling in money". This and similar phrases are in allusion to the great wealth of the famous international banking family of Rothschild, whose name derives from the red shield by which their parent house at Frankfurt was known. The family banking business really stems from the activities of Meyer Amschel Rothschild (1743-1812) who made a fortune during the Napoleonic wars. His five sons separated, extending the business throughout Europe. Nathan Meyer Rothschild (1777-1836) established a branch at London in 1798 and made a financial scoop by his advance knowledge of the defeat of NAPOLEON at Waterloo. His son Lionel (1808-1879) was best known for his work for Jewish emancipation in Great Britain. Lionel's son Nathaniel Meyer (1840-1915) was made a baron in 1885.

Rotten Row. The famous equestrian track in Hyde Park, London, is said to be so called from O. Fr. route le roi or route du roi, because it formed part of the old royal route from the palace of the PLANTAGENET Kings at WESTMINSTER to the royal forests. Camden derives the word from rotteran, to muster, as the place where soldiers mustered. The reason for the name is obscure.

Roué (roo' ä). The profligate Duke of Orleans, Regent of France, first used this word in its modern sense about 1720. It was his ambition to collect round him companions as worthless as himself, and he used facetiously to boast that there was not one of them who did not deserve to be broken on the wheel; hence these profligates went by the name of Orlean's roués. The most notorious roués were the Dukes of Richelieu, Broglie, Biron, and Brancas, together with Canillac and Nocé.

Rouen (roo' on). Aller à Rouen. To go to ruin. A French pun comparable to our You are on the road to NEEDHAM (a market town in Suffolk), i.e. your courses will lead you to poverty.

The Bloody Feast of Rouen (1356). Charles the DAUPHIN (later Charles V) gave a banquet to his friends at Rouen, to which his brother-in-law Charles the Bad of Navarre was invited. While the guests were at table King John the Good entered the room with an escort, exclaiming, "Traitor, thou art not worthy to sit at table with my son!" Then, turning to his guards, he added, "Take him hence! By holy Paul, I will neither eat nor drink till his head be brought to me!" Then, seizing an iron mace from one of the men-at-arms, he struck another of the guests between the shoulders, saying, "Out, proud traitor! by the soul of my father, thou shalt not live!" Four of the guests were beheaded on the spot and Charles of Navarre was taken a prisoner to Paris.

Rouge (roozh) (Fr., red). Rouge Croix. One of the PURSUVANTS of the Heralds' College. So called from the red cross of St. GEORGE, the patron saint of ENGLAND. Rouge Croix was instituted by Henry V. Rouge Dragon. The PURSUVANT established by Henry VII. The Red Dragon was the ensign of the Welsh princes from whom Henry VII traced his ancestry.

Rouge et Noir (Fr., red and black). A game of chance; so called because of the red and black diamond-shaped compartments on the board. After the stakes have been placed on the table the cards are dealt in the prescribed manner and the player whose "pips" amount nearest to 31 is the winner. The game is also called Trent-et-un (31) or Trente-et-Quarante (30 and 40).

Rough. A rough diamond. See under DIAMOND.

A rough house. A disorderly scrimmage or brawl.

Rough music. A din or noisy uproar made by clanging together pots and pans and other noise-producing instruments usually as a protest outside the house of a person who has outraged propriety. In Somersetshire it was called skimmity-riding, by the Basques toberac, and in France CHARIVARI. Cp. SKIMMINGTON.

Rough Riders. The First Regiment of U.S. Cavalry Volunteers under Colonel Leonard Wood and Lieut.-Colonel Theodore Roosevelt were so designated in the Spanish-American War (1898), noted for their successful charge up San Juan Hill. The force was made up from COWBOYS, Indians, rangers, and college students.

Rough and Ready. Rough in manner but prompt in action; not elaborate, roughly adequate. General Zachary Taylor (1784-1860), twelfth president of the United States, was called Old Rough and Ready, a name he won in the Seminole Wars.

To cut up rough. See under CUT.

Rough-hewn. Shaped in the rough, not finished, unpolished, ill-mannered, raw; as a "rough-hewn seaman".

There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, V, ii.

Riding rough-shod over one. Treating one without the least consideration; to completely disregard another's interests or feelings, etc. The shoes of a horse that is rough-shod have the nails projecting to prevent it slipping.

Rouncival, or Rounceval (rown' si val). Very large or strong; of gigantic size.

Certain large bones said to have been dug up at Roncesvalles (see THE SONG OF ROLAND under ROLAND) were believed to have belonged to the heroes who fell with Roland, hence this usage. "Rouncival peas" are the large marrowfat peas and a very big woman is called a rouncival.

Round. There is an archaic verb to round (O.E. runian), meaning to whisper, or to communicate confidentially. Browning used it more than once:

First make a laughing-stock of me and mine,
Then round us in the ears from morn to night
(Because we show wry faces at your mirth)
That you are robbed, starved, beaten and what not!
The Ring and the Book, iv, 599.

SHAKESPEARE has:

And France . . . rounded in the ear
With that same purpose-changer, that sly devil;
That broker, that still breaks the pate of faith . . .
King John, II, i.

Cp. also:

And ner the feend he drough as nought ne were,
Full privily, and round in his eere,
"Herke, my brother, herke, by thi faith . . ."
CHAUCER: Friar's Tale, 249.

The Round Table. The Table fabled to have been made by MERLIN at Carduel for Uther Pendragon. Uther gave it to King Leodegraunce of Camelard, who gave it to King ARTHUR when the latter married GUINEVERE, his daughter. It was circular to prevent any jealousy on the score of precedence; it seated 150 knights, and a place was left in it for the SANGRAIL. The first reference to it is in Wace's Roman de Brut (1155); these legendary details are from Malory's Morte d'Arthur, III, i and ii.

The table shown at Winchester was recognized as ancient in the time of Henry III, but its anterior history is unknown. It is of wedge-shaped oak planks, and is 17 ft. in diameter and 2½ in. thick. At the back are 12 mortice holes in which 12 legs probably used to fit. It was for the accommodation of 12 favourite knights. Henry VIII showed it to Francis I, telling him that it was the one used by the British king. The Round Table was not peculiar to the reign of Arthur. Thus the king of Ireland, father of the fair Cristabelle, says in the ballad given in PERCY'S RELIQUES:

Is there never a Knighte of my round table
This matter will undergo?
Sir Cauline (Part the Second).

In the eighth year of Edward I, Roger de Mortimer established a Round Table at Kenilworth for "the encouragement of military pastimes". At this foundation, 100 knights and as many ladies were entertained at the founder's expense. About 70 years later, Edward III erected a splendid table at Windsor. It was 200 ft. in diameter, and the expense of entertaining the knights thereof amounted to £100 a week. Cp. JOHN O'GROATS.

Knights of the Round Table. According to Malory (Morte d'Arthur, III, i and ii) there were 150 knights who had "sieges" at the table. King Leodegraunce brought 100 when he gave the table to King ARTHUR; MERLIN filled up 28 of the vacant seats, and the king elected GAWAIN and Tor; the remaining 20 were left for those who might prove worthy.

A list of the knights (151) and a description of their armour is given in the Theatre of Honour (1622) by Andrew Fairne. These knights went forth in quest of adventures, but their chief exploits were concerned with the quest of the Holy GRAIL.

Sir LANCELOT is meant for a model of fidelity, bravery, frailty in love, and repentance; Sir GALAHAD of chastity; Sir GAWAIN of courtesy; Sir KAY of a rude, boastful knight, and Sir MODRED of treachery.

There is still a "Knights of the Round Table" Club, which claims to be the oldest social club in the world, having been founded in 1721. Garrick, Dickens, Toole, Sir Henry Irving, and Tenniel are among those who have been members.

A round table conference. A conference in which no participant has precedence and at which it is agreed that the questions in dispute shall be settled amicably with the maximum amount of "give and take" on each side.

The expression came into prominence in connexion with a private conference in the house of Sir William Harcourt, 14 January 1887, with the view of trying to reunite the Liberal party after the split occasioned by Gladstone's advocacy of Irish Home Rule. Other politically notable Round Table Conferences were those on Indian government held in London (1931-1932).

A good round sum. A large sum of money.

Three thousand ducats; 'tis a good round sum.
SHAKESPEARE: Merchant of Venice, I, iii.

A round peg in a square hole. The same as a square peg in a round hole. See PEG.

A round robin. A petition or protest signed in a circular form, so that no name heads the list. The device is French, and the term seems to be a corruption of ronde (round), ruban (a ribbon), and originally used by sailors.

At a round pace, or rate. Briskly, rapidly, smartly.

He cried again,
"To the wilds!" and Enid leading down the tracks . . .
Round was their pace at first, but slacken'd soon.
TENNYSON: Geraint and Enid.

In round figures, or numbers. Disregarding fractions, units, etc., in tens, hundreds, etc., thus with the quantity ending in an 0 or round number. Thus we say, "His income in round figures was £5,000", although strictly accurately it may be £4,975, or, "The population of Haiti in 1962 was four millions in round numbers."

In the round. In the theatre, the production of plays on a central stage surrounded by the audience as in an arena, without proscenium arch or curtains.

Round dealing. Honest, straightforward dealing, without branching off into underhand tricks. The same as square dealing.

Round-up (Western U.S.A.). The gathering up of cattle by riding round them and driving them in. Hence, a gathering-in of scattered objects, or persons such as criminals. See RODEO.

Sellinger's round. See SELLINGER.

To get round one. To take advantage of him by cajoling or flattery; to have one's own way through deception.

To round on one. To turn on him; to inform against him.

To walk the Round. Lawyers used frequently to give interviews to their clients in the Round Church in the TEMPLE; and "walking the Round" meant loitering about the church, in the hope of being hired for a witness.

Roundabout. A large revolving machine at FAIRS, circuses, etc., with wooden horses or the like which go round and round and are ridden by passengers to the strains of music, known in the U.S.A. as a carousel. From this arises the device at crossroads, whereby traffic circulates in one direction only.

What you lose on the swings you gain on the roundabouts. See under SWING.

Roundel, or Roundle, in HERALDRY, is a change of a circular form. There are a number of varieties, distinguished by their colours or tinctures, as—a Bezant, tincture "or"; Plate, "argent"; Torteau, "gules"; Hurt, "azure"; Ogress or Pellet, "sable"; Pomey (because supposed to resemble an apple, Fr. pomme), "vert"; Golpe, "purpure"; Guze, "sanguine"; Orange, "tenney".

Roundheads. PURITANS of the time of the CIVIL WARS; especially Cromwell's soldiers. So called from their close-cropped hair as contrasted with the long hair fashionable among the Royalists or CAVALIERS. The name appears in 1641 in the affrays at WESTMINSTER when the mobs of apprentices were demonstrating against the EPISCOPACY.

Roup, a name given to an auction in SCOTLAND. It is of Scandinavian origin and is connected with M. Swed. ropa, to shout.

Rout. A common term in the 18th century for a large evening party or fashionable assemblage. Cp. DRUM; HURRICANE, etc.

Routiers, or Rutters (roo' ti erz, rut' erz). Mediæval adventurers who made war a trade and let themselves out to anyone who would pay them. So called because they were always on the route or moving from place to place. (Cp. CONDOTTIERI.) Also the name given to early manuals of pilotage.

Rove. The original meaning was to shoot with arrows at marks that were selected at haphazard, the distance being unknown, with the object of practising judging distance.

Running at rovers. Running wild, at random, being without restraint.

To shoot at rovers. To shoot at random, without any distinct aim.

Rowan, or Mountain Ash (rou'an, rō'an). Called in Westmorland the "Wiggentree". It was greatly venerated by the DRUIDS and was formerly known as the "Witchen" because it was supposed to ward off WITCHES.

Rowan-tree or reed
Put the witches to speed.

Many mountain-ash berries are said to denote a deficient harvest. In Aberdeenshire it was customary to make crosses of rowan twigs on the eve of the INVENTION OF THE CROSS (see under CROSS) and to put them over doors and windows to ward off witches and evil spirits.

Rowley. Old Rowley. Charles II was so called after his favourite stallion. A portion of the Newmarket race-course is still called Rowley Mile and the Rowley Stakes are also held there.

"Old Rowley himself, madam," said the King, entering the apartment with his usual air of easy composure.

SCOTT: Peveril of the Peak, ch. xxxi.

The Rowley Poems. See FORGERIES.

Roxburghe Club, The (roks' brō). An association of bibliophiles founded in 1812 for the purpose of printing rare works or MSS. It was named after John, Duke of Roxburghe, a celebrated collector of ancient literature (1740–1804), and remains the most distinguished gathering of bibliophiles in the world. It was the forerunner of a number of similar printing societies, as the Camden, Chet-ham, Percy, Shakespeare, Surtees, and Wharton, in ENGLAND; the Abbotsford, BANNATYNE, Maitland, and Spalding, in SCOTLAND; and the Celtic Society of IRELAND.

Roy, Le, or La Reine s'avisera (The king [or queen] will consider it). This is the royal veto on a parliamentary bill, last put into force 11 March 1707, when Queen Anne refused her assent to a Scottish Militia Bill. See ROYAL ASSENT.

Royal. A standard size of writing paper measuring 19 × 24 in. In printing it is 20 × 25 in. or 20 × 25½ in.; hence a royal octavo book measures 10 × 6¼ in. (untrimmed).

Super Royal in printing papers measures (with slight variations) 20 × 27 in., and in writing papers 19 × 27 in.

Royal Academy. Founded in 1768, with Sir Joshua Reynolds as the first president, "for the purpose of cultivating and improving the arts of painting, sculpture and architecture".

Royal American Regiment. The original name of the King's Royal Rifle Corps, which was first raised under that title in Maryland and Pennsylvania, 1755. Now the 2nd Battalion The Royal Green Jackets.

Royal and Ancient. The name by which the game of golf has been known since early days when the Scottish kings practised it. James IV of SCOTLAND is the first recorded royal patron and Mary, Queen of Scots, was playing golf when news was brought to her of Lord Darnley's death.

Royal Assent to parliamentary bills is still given in Norman French. The form of assent to public and private bills is Le Roy, or La Reine le veult; to personal bills Soit fait comme il est désiré; and to taxation and supply, Le Roy or La Reine remercie ses bons sujets, accepte leur benevolence, et ainsi le veult. Cp. LE ROY S'AVISERA.

Royal Bounty. A part of the CIVIL LIST out of which the British sovereign makes gifts to charities and pays for official subscriptions.

Royal Exchange, Cornhill, London. The original exchange, founded by Sir Thomas Gresham, whose crest was a GRASSHOPPER, was opened by Queen Elizabeth I in 1568 and was modelled on the Bourse at Antwerp as a place for London Merchants to transact their business. It was burnt down during the GREAT FIRE and a new exchange was opened in 1670 but this was again destroyed by fire in 1838. It is said that before the bells fell they had chimed There's nae luck aboot the hoose. The third building was opened by Queen Victoria in 1844. In 1928 the building was taken over by the Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation which had occupied offices there since 1720.

Royal Flush. In poker, a hand consisting of the ace, king, queen, jack, and ten of one suit.

Royal game of goose. See under GOOSE.

Royal Merchants. The wealthy, mediæval families such as the MEDICI of Florence and the Grimaldi of Genoa.

Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so huddled on his back,
Enow to press a royal merchant down.
SHAKESPEARE: Merchant of Venice, IV, 1.

Sir Thomas Gresham, founder of the ROYAL EXCHANGE, was called a "royal merchant" from his wealth and influence; and in 1677, Fletcher's comedy, The Beggar's Bush (1622), was produced as an opera with the title The Royal Merchant.

Royal Oak. See OAK-APPLE DAY.

Royal road to learning, etc. A direct and easy way. Royal roads were generally straighter and better than most roads.

Royal Society. The premier scientific society in Great Britain. It was established in 1660 and incorporated as the Royal Society in 1662, but its origins can be traced to the meetings of philosophers and scientists held at Gresham College in 1645. It met at the college until 1710 and then moved to Crane Court, FLEET STREET. In 1780 it transferred to SOMERSET HOUSE and thence to Burlington House in 1857. Fellowship of the Royal Society is the most coveted honour among scientists.

Royal Titles. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

Royston. A Royston horse and Cambridge Master of Arts will give way to no one. A Cambridgeshire proverb. Royston was famous for malt which was sent to LONDON on horseback. These heavy-laden beasts never moved out of the way. The Masters of Arts, or Cambridge dons, had the wall conceded to them by the townsfolk out of courtesy.

Rozinante, Rocinante (roz i nán' tí). The wretched JADE of a riding-horse belonging to DON QUIXOTE. Although it was nothing but skin and bone—and worn out at that—he regarded it as a priceless charger surpassing “the BUCEPHALUS of ALEXANDER and the Babieca of the CID”. The name, which is applied to similar hacks, is from Span. rocin, a jade, the ante (before) implying that once upon a time, perhaps, it had been a horse.

Rub. An impediment. The expression is taken from bowls where “rub” means that something hinders the free movement of your wood.

We sometimes had those little rubs which Providence sends to enhance the value of its favours.

GOLDSMITH: The Vicar of Wakefield, ch. i.

Don't rub it in! Yes, I know I've made a mistake, but you needn't go on emphasizing the fact.

Rub of the green. See under GREEN.

To rub shoulders with. To mix closely in company.

To rub up the wrong way. To annoy, to irritate by lack of tact, etc.; as a cat is irritated when its fur is rubbed the wrong way.

Rubaiyát (plural of Ruba'i), means quatrains, much used by Arabic poets, and familiar to English readers through Fitzgerald's Rubaiyát of Omar Khayyam (1859).

Rubber. In WHIST, bridge, and some other games, a set of three games, the best two of three, or the third game of the set. The origin of the term is uncertain, but it may be a transference from bowls, in which the collision of two woods is a rubber, because they RUB against each other.

Those who play at bowls must look out for rubbers. There is always some risk in anything you undertake, and you've got to be prepared to meet it; you must take the rough with the smooth.

To rubber-stamp. To authorize as a matter of routine, to approve automatically, without any personal examination or check. From the use of rubber stamps on routine documents, etc., in place of a written authorization.

Rubberneck-wagon. An excursion or sightseeing-bus in which the passengers stretch their necks to look at views or monuments.

Rübezahl. A mountain spirit of German folk-lore, also called Herr Johannes, whose home is in the Riesengebirge (Giant Mountains), the mountain range which separates Prussian Silesia (now in Poland) and Bohemia (Czechoslovakia).

Rubicon. To cross the Rubicon. To take an irrevocable step; as when the Germans crossed the Belgian frontier in August 1914, which led to war with Great Britain. The Rubicon was a small river which separated ancient Italy from Cisalpine GAUL (the province allotted to Julius CÆSAR). When Cæsar crossed this stream in 49 B.C. he passed beyond the limits of his province and became an invader in Italy, thus precipitating war with Pompey and the Senate.

Rubric (roo'brik) (Lat. rubrica, red ochre or vermilion). The Romans called an ordinance or law a rubric, because it was written with vermilion, in contradistinction to prætorian edicts or rules of the court which were posted on a white ground (Juvenal, xiv, 192).

The liturgical directions, titles, etc., in a Prayer Book are known as the Rubrics because these were (and sometimes still are) printed in red (cp. RED-LETTER DAY).

No date prefix'd

Directs me in the starry rubric set.

MILTON: Paradise Regained, IV, 392.

The directions given on formal examination papers concerning the selection of questions to be answered, etc., are called the rubrics.

Ruby. The ancients considered the ruby to be an antidote to poison, to preserve persons from plague, to banish grief, to repress the ill effects of luxuries, and to divert the mind from evil thoughts.

It has always been a valuable stone, and even today a fine Burma ruby will cost more than a diamond of the same size.

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.

Prov. xxxi, 10; cp. also Job xxviii, 18, and Prov. viii, 11.

Marco Polo said that the king of Ceylon had the finest ruby he had ever seen. “It is a span long, as thick as a man's arm, and without a flaw.” Kublai Khan offered the value of a city for it, but the king would not part with it, though all the treasures of the world were to be laid at his feet.

The perfect ruby. An alchemist's term for the ELIXIR, or PHILOSOPHER'S STONE.

He that has once the flower of the sun,
The perfect ruby which we call elixir, . . .
Can confer honour, love, respect, long life,
Give safety, valour, yea, and victory,
To whom he will.

BEN JONSON: The Alchemist, II, i.

Rudder. Who won't be ruled by the rudder must be ruled by the rock. He who won't listen to reason must bear the consequences, like a ship that runs upon a rock if it will not answer the helm.

Ruddock. The redbreast "sacred to the household gods"; see ROBIN REDBREAST. The word is ultimately from O.E. rudu, redness, whence ruddy. SHAKESPEARE makes Arviragus say over Imogen:

Thou shalt not lack
The flower that's like thy face, pale primrose; nor
The azur'd hare-bell . . . the ruddock would,
With charitable bill . . . bring thee all this.

Cymbeline, IV, ii.

Rudolphine Tables, The (roo dol' fin). Astronomical calculations begun by Tycho Brahe, continued by Kepler, and published in 1627. They were named after Kepler's patron, Kaiser Rudolph II.

Rue (roo), called HERB OF GRACE, because it was employed for sprinkling holy water. See also DIFFERENCE. Ophelia says:

There's rue for you, and here's some for me!
we may call it "herb of grace" o' Sundays.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, IV, v.

Ruff. An early forerunner of WHIST, very popular in the late 16th and early 17th centuries, later called slamm. The act of trumping at whist, etc., especially when one cannot follow suit, is still called "the ruff".

Ruffian's Hall. A CANT term for West SMITHFIELD.

The field commonly called West-Smith field, was for many yeares called Ruffians Hall, by reason it was the usual place of Frayes and common fighting, during the Time that Sword-and-Bucklers were in use.

Howe's continuation of Stow's "Annals"
(1631), p. 1024.

Rufus (The Red). William II of England (1056, 1087-1100).

Otto II of Germany (955, 967-983), son of the emperor Otto the Great.

Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester (1243-1295).

Ruggiero. See ROGERO.

Rule, or Regulus, St. A priest of Patrae in Achaia, who is said to have come to SCOTLAND in the 4th century, bringing with him relics of ST. ANDREW, and to have founded the town and bishopric of St. Andrews. The name Killrule (Cella Regul.) perpetuates his memory.

Rule. Rule of the Road. See under ROAD.

Rule of thumb. See under THUMB.

Rule the roost. See under ROAST.

Rule, Britannia. Words by James Thomson (1700-1748), author of The Seasons; music by Dr. Arne (1710-1778). It first appeared in a masque entitled Alfred produced in August 1740 at Maidenhead at Cliefden House. It was written at the command of the PRINCE OF WALES and performed before him. The original opening was:

When Britain first, at Heaven's command,
Arose from out the azure main,
This was the charter of the land,
And guardian angels sung this strain:
"Rule, Britannia, rule the waves;
Britons never will be slaves."

In the rising of 1745 "Rule, Britannia" was sung by the JACOBITES with modifications appropriate to their cause.

Rule nisi (ni'si). A "rule" is an order from one of the superior courts, and a "rule nisi" (cp. NISI) is such an order "to show cause". That is, the rule is to be held absolute unless the party to whom it applies can "show cause" why it should not be so.

Twelve Good Rules. (1) Urge no healths; (2) Profane no divine ordinances; (3) Touch no state matters; (4) Reveal no secrets; (5) Pick no quarrels; (6) Make no comparisons; (7) Maintain no ill opinions; (8) Keep no bad company; (9) Encourage no vice; (10) Make no long meals; (11) Repeat no grievances; (12) Lay no wagers.

The rules were framed and displayed in many taverns in the 18th century and derived from a broadside showing a rough-cut of the execution of Charles I and were said to have been "found in the study of King Charles the First, of Blessed Memory". Goldsmith refers to them in The Deserted Village (line 232).

Rulers, Titles of. The following titles are (1) designations that approximately correspond to our King or Emperor (e.g. Bey, Mikado, Sultan), and (2) appellatives that were originally the proper name of some individual ruler (e.g. Cæsar). Some are now, of course, obsolete.

Abgarus. A title of the kings of Edessa (99 B.C.-A.D. 217).

Abimelech (father of counsel). A title of the king of the ancient Philistines.

Akhoond. King and high priest of the Swat (N.W. provinces of India).

Ameer, Amir. Ruler of Afghanistan, Sind, and certain other Mohammedan princes.

Antiochus. A title of the kings of ancient Syria.

Archon. Chief of the nine magistrates of ancient ATHENS. The next in rank was called Basileus.

Augustus. The title of the Roman Emperor when the heir-presumptive was styled Cæsar.

Beglerbeg. See BEY below.

Begum. A queen, princess, or lady of high rank in India.

Bey—of Turis. In the Turkish Empire, a bey was usually a superior military officer, or the governor of a minor province or sarjak.

Brenn, or Brenhin. A war-chief of the ancient Gauls. A dictator appointed by the DRUIDS in times of danger.

Bretwalda. See BRETWALDA.

Cacique. See CAZIQUE, below.

Cæsar. Originally a surname of the Julian family, then assumed by successive Roman emperors and later by the heir-presumptive. Cp. AUGUSTUS, above.

Caliph, or Calif (successor). Successors of MOHAMMED in temporal and spiritual affairs. After the first four successors the caliphate passed to the Omayyad dynasty (660), thence to the ABBASSIDES (670-1538). The supposed transfer to the OTTOMANS is not authenticated and, in 1924, the caliphate was suppressed by the Turkish assembly.

Candace. A title of the queens of Meroe in Upper Nubia.

Caudillo. See CAUDILLO.

Cazique, or Cacique. A native prince of the ancient Peruvians, Cubans, Mexicans, etc.

Chagan. The chief of the Avars.

Cham. See KHAN, below.

Czar. See TSAR, below.

Dey. Governor of Algiers before it was annexed to France in 1830; also the 16th-century rulers of Tunis and Tripoli.

Diwan. The native chief of Palanpur, India.

Doge (Duke). The ruler of the old Venetian Republic (c. 700-1797); also that of Genoa (1339-1797).

Duce. See DUCE.

Duke. The ruler of a duchy (Lat. dux, a leader); formerly in many European countries of sovereign rank.

Elect. A prince of the HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE of sovereign rank entitled to take part in the election of the Emperor.

Emir. The independent chieftain of certain Arabian provinces as Bokhara, Nejd, etc.; also given to Arab chiefs who claim descent from MOHAMMED.

Emperor. The ruler of an empire, especially of the HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE from Lat. Imperator, one who commands.

Exarch. The title of a viceroy of the BYZANTINE EMPIRE, especially the Exarch of Ravenna, who was de facto governor of Italy.

Führer. See FÜHRER.

Gaekwar. Formerly the title of the ruler of the Mahrattas; then that of the ruler of Baroda (his son being Gaekwad). The word is Marathi for a cowherd.

Gauleiter (Ger., "region leader"). The ruler of a province under the NAZI régime (1933-45).

Holkar. The title of the Maharajah of Indore.

Hospodar. The title borne by the princes of Moldavia and Wallachia before their union with Rumania (Slavic, "lord, master").

Imperator. See EMPEROR, above.

Inca. The title of the sovereigns of Peru up to the conquest by Pizarro (1532).

Kabaka. The native ruler in the Buganda province of Uganda.

Kaiser. The German form of CÆSAR (see above); the old title of the HOLY ROMAN EMPEROR and of the later Austrian and German Emperors.

Khan. The chief rulers of Tartar, Mongol, and Turkish tribes, as successors of Genghis Khan (d. 1227). The word means "lord" or "prince".

Khedive. The title meaning "prince" or "sovereign" conferred in 1867 by the SULTAN of Turkey on the viceroy or governor of Egypt. It was abandoned in favour of Sultan in 1914. Cp. VALI, below.

King. See KING.

Lama. See LAMA.

Maharajah. (Hind., "the great king"). The titles of many of the native rulers of Indian states.

Maharao. The title of the rulers of Cutch, Kotah, and Sirohi, India.

Maharao Rajah. The ruler of Bundi, India.

Maharawal. The rulers of Banswana, Durgapur, Jaisalmer, and Partabgarh, India.

Mikado. See MIKADO. Cp. SHOGUN; TYCOON.

Mir. The ruler of Khairpur, India.

Mogul. See MOGUL.

Mpret. The old title of the Albanian rulers (from Lat. imperator), revived in 1913 in favour of Prince William of Wied, whose Mpretship lasted only a few months.

Nawab. The native rulers of Bhopal, Tonk, Jaora, etc.; and formerly of Bengal.

Negus (properly Negus Negust, "King of Kings"). The native name of the Emperor of Ethiopia

Nizam. The title of the ruler of Hyderabad.

Padishah (Pers., "protecting lord"). A title of the former SULTAN of Turkey, the Shah of Persia, and of the former Great MOGULS.

Pendragon. See PENDRAGON.

Pharaoh. See PHARAOH.

Prince. Formerly in common use as the title of a reigning sovereign, and still used in a few cases, e.g. the Prince of Monaco, the Prince of Liechtenstein.

Rajah. Hindustani for "King" (cp. MAHARAJAH, above); the title of the rulers of Cochin, Ratlam, Tippera, Chamba, Faridkot, Mandi, Pudukota, Rajgarh, Rajpipla, Sailana, and Tehri (Garhwal). Cp. REX, below.

Rex. The Latin equivalent of "King", connected with regere, to rule, and with Sans. rajan (whence RAJAH), a king.

Sachem, Sagamore. Chieftains of certain tribes of Northern American Indians.

Satrap. The governor of a province in ancient Persia.

Shah (Pers., king). The supreme ruler of Persia and some other Eastern countries. Cp. PADISHAH, above.

Shaikh or Sheikh. An Arab chief, or head man of a tribe.

Shogun. See SHOGUN.

Sindhia. The special title of the Maharajah of Gwalior.

Sirdar. The commander-in-chief of the Egyptian army and military governor of Egypt (a British officer during the occupation, 1882-1922). Also applied to certain nobles in India (Pers. sardur, leader, officer).

Stadtholder. Originally a provincial viceroy in the Netherlands, later the chief executive officer of the United Provinces.

Sultan (also Soldan). The title of the rulers of certain Mohammedan states.

Tewarch. The governor of the fourth part of a province in the ancient Roman Empire.

Thakur Sahib. The title of the native ruler of Gondal, India.

Tsar, or Czar. The common title of the former Emperors of Russia, first assumed by Ivan the Terrible in 1547 (Lat. Cæsar). His wife was the Tsarina, his son the Tsarevitch, and his daughter the Tsarevna. The latter titles were eventually reserved for the eldest son and his wife respectively.

Tycoon. See TYCOON.

Vali. The title of the governors of Egypt prior to their holding of the style KHEDIVE (see above).

Voivode, or Vauvode (Russ., "the leader of an army"). A title once used by the princes of Moldavia and Wallachia, later called HOSPODARS (see above).

Wali. A title of the ruler or Khan of Kalat, India.

Rum-Runners. During the prohibition era in the U.S.A., those engaged in smuggling illicit liquor by speedboats across the lakes from Canada or from ships outside the THREE-MILE LIMIT. Cp. BOOTLEGGER; MOONSHINER.

Ruminare. To think, to meditate upon some subject; literally, "to chew the cud" (Lat. rumino; from rumen, the throat).

He chew'd
The thrice-turn'd cud of wrath, and cook'd his spleen.

TENNYSON: The Princess, Pt. I, l.64.

Rump, The. The end of the backbone, with the buttocks. The term was applied contemptuously to the remnant of the LONG PARLIAMENT that was left after PRIDE'S PURGE. It first numbered less than 60 M.P.s and, when augmented, not more than 125. It abolished the HOUSE OF LORDS and the monarchy and declared England a COMMONWEALTH. It was dismissed by Cromwell in 1653, but resumed its sitting in 1659 and in 1660 Monk secured the recall of its purged members. It was finally dissolved in March 1660.

Rump and dozen. A rump of beef and a dozen of CLARET; or a rump steak and a dozen oysters. A not uncommon wager among sportsmen of the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

Rumpelstiltskin, or Rumpelstilzchen (rum pel stilt's chen). A passionate little deformed DWARF of German folk-tale. A miller's daughter was enjoined by a king to spin straw into gold, and the dwarf did it for her, on condition that she would give him her first child. The maiden married the king, and grieved so bitterly when the child was born that the dwarf promised to relent if within three days she could find out his name. Two days were spent in vain guesses, but the third day one of the queen's servants heard a strange voice singing:

Little dreams my dainty dame
Rumpelstilzchen is my name.

The child was saved, and the dwarf killed himself with rage.

Run. A long run, a short run. Said of a theatrical or film show. "It had a long run" means it was performed repeatedly over a long period, owing to its popularity. The allusion is to a long-distance run or race. A short run means that the show did not take on with the public and was soon withdrawn.

He that runs may read. The BIBLE quotation in Hab. ii, 2, is, "Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it." Cowper says:

But truths, on which depends our main concern . . .
Shine by the side of every path we tread
With such a lustre, he that runs may read.

Tirocinium, l.77.

In the long run. Eventually, in the final result. The allusion is to the runner who may be outpaced at the start but who draws ahead before the finish. The hare got the start, but in the long run the patient perseverance of the tortoise won the race.

On the run. Moving from place to place and hiding from the authorities; said especially of criminals, etc.

Run of the mill. The expected or usual type, or sequence of events. Provided that a steady flow of water issued from the mill-pond, the mill would run smoothly and normally.

To be run in. To be arrested and taken to the lock-up.

To give someone a run for his money. To make him expend considerable effort, to lead him a pretty dance.

To go with a run. To go swimmingly; "without a hitch". (cp. GO WITH A HITCH under HITCH). As a rope goes with a run when let go free, instead of being paid out gradually.

To have a run for one's money. To obtain satisfaction or pleasure from one's expenditure or efforts, even if the outcome is not entirely successful; as a bet on a horse may give the backer some excitement whether it wins or not.

To have the run of the house. To have free access and liberty to make full use of what it offers.

To run amok, or amuck. To indulge in physical violence while in a state of frenzy. Amuck or amok is the Malay amog, a state of frenzy.

To run down. To cease to go or act from lack of motive force, as a clock when the spring is fully unwound. See also TO RUN A MAN DOWN under DOWN.

To run into the ground. To pursue too far; to exhaust a topic.

To run rings round. To outclass completely. To be so much better than one's rival that one can run round him and still reach the winning post first.

To run riot. See under RIOT.

To run the rig. See under RIG.

To run the show. To take charge of it, to make oneself responsible for its success.

To run through. "To run through one's inheritance" is to squander it at a rapid rate; "to run through one's part in a play" is to read or rehearse it; "to run through the accounts" is to make a quick general survey of them. "To run a person through" is to pass one's sword or rapier through his body.

To run to earth. To discover in a hiding-place; to get to the bottom of a matter.

A METAPHOR from fox-hunting when the quarry is run to its "earth" or lair.

Runner-up. The competitor or team that finishes in second place; after the winner.

Runners. See REDBREASTS.

Runners of Classic Renown. See HUNTERS AND RUNNERS under HUNT.

Running. Running footmen. Men servants in the early part of the 18th century whose duty was to run beside the slow-moving coach horses and advise the inn-keeper of his approaching guests, bear torches, pay turnpikes, etc. The pole which they carried was to help the cumbersome coach out of the numerous sloughs. OLD Q (see under Q) was said to be the last to employ them. The "Running Footman" used as a public-house sign derives from the old Tudor foot postmen.

Running the Hood, or the Hood Game. It is said that (in the 13th century) Lady Mowbray was passing over Haxey Hill (Lincolnshire) when the wind blew away her hood. It was recovered by 12 rustics who tossed it from one to the other. The event is celebrated annually on 6 January, when the participants called boggans play a curious kind of rugby with rolled canvas hoods.

Running Thursday. 13 December 1688, two days after the flight of James II. A rumour ran that the French and Irish papists had landed; panic ensued and many people ran for their lives into the country.

Running water. No enchantment can subsist in a living stream; if, therefore, a person can interpose a brook betwixt himself and the witches, sprites, or GOBLINS chasing him, he is in perfect safety. Burn's tale of Tam o' Shanter turns upon this superstition.

His shoes are made of running leather. See under SHOE.

Quite out of the running. Quite out of the competition; not worthy of consideration; like a horse that has been SCRATCHED for a race and is thus not "in the running".

To make the running. To set the pace or standard.

Runcible Hat, Spoon. In Edward Lear's How Pleasant to know Mr. Lear there is mention of a runcible hat and in the Owl and the Pussycat a runcible spoon. What runcible denotes is not apparent. Some who profess to know describe the spoon as a kind of fork having three broad prongs, one of which has a sharp cutting edge.

They dined on mince and slices of quince
Which they ate with a runcible spoon.
The Owl and the Pussycat.

Rune (roon). A letter or character of the earliest alphabet in use among the Gothic tribes of northern Europe. Runic inscriptions most commonly occur in Scandinavia and parts of the British Isles. Runes were employed for purposes of secrecy, charms, or DIVINATION; and the word is also applied to ancient lore or poetry expressed in runes. Rune is related to O.E. rūn, secret. The deeds of warriors were recorded on runic staves and knowledge of rune writing was supposed to have been introduced by ODIN. See FUTHORC; OGAM.

Runic Staff, or Wand. See CLOG ALMANAC.

Rupert. Prince Rupert's drops. Bubbles made by dropping molten glass into water. Their form is that of a tadpole, and if the smallest portion of the "tail" is nipped off, the whole flies into fine dust with explosive violence. They were introduced into ENGLAND by Prince Rupert (1619-1682), grandson of James I and Royalist cavalry leader during the CIVIL WARS. Prince's metal, seemingly an alloy of brass or copper, was also his invention.

Rupert of Debate. Edward Stanley, fourteenth Earl of Derby (1799-1869). It was when he was Mr. Stanley, and the opponent of Daniel O'Connell, that Lord Lytton so described him, in allusion to the brilliant Royalist cavalry leader, Prince Rupert.

The brilliant chief, irregularly great,
Frank, haughty, bold—the Rupert of Debate.
LYTTON: New Timon, Pt. VI.

Ruptured Duck. The nickname in World War II for the American ex-service lapel button issued to all demobilized from the forces.

Ruritania (roo ri tā' nya). An imaginary kingdom in pre-World I Europe where Anthony Hope placed the adventures of his hero in the novels The Prisoner of Zenda (1894) and Rupert of Hentzau (1898). The name is frequently applied to any small state where politics and intrigues of a melodramatic and romantic interest are the natural order of the day.

Rush. Friar Rush. See under FRIAR.

It's a regular rush. A barefaced swindle, an exorbitant charge. Said when one is "rushed" into paying a good deal more for something than it is worth.

Not worth a rush. Worthless; not worth a STRAW. When floors used to be strewn with rushes, distinguished guests were given clean rushes, but those of inferior standing were left with used rushes or none at all, being considered "not worth a rush".

Rush-bearing Sunday. A SUNDAY, generally near the festival of the SAINT to whom the church is dedicated, when anciently it was customary to renew the rushes with which the church floor was strewn. The custom is still observed at St. Mary Redcliffe, Bristol, on WHIT SUNDAY and at Ambleside, Grasmere, and elsewhere in Westmorland. At Ambleside, a rush-bearing procession is held on the Saturday nearest St. Anne's Day (26 July), the church being dedicated to St. Anne.

Russel. A common name given to a fox, from its russet colour.

And daun Russell the fox stirte up at ones
And by the gargat hente Chauntecleer,
And on his bak toward the wode hym beer.
CHAUCER: The Nonnes Preestes Tale, l. 568.

Russia leather. A fine leather of a smooth texture, originally produced in Russia. It is extensively used in bookbinding, and usually dyed red; the distinctive smell comes from the distillation of birch bark used in the manufacture.

Rustam, or Rustem. The Persian HERCULES, the son of Zal, prince of Sedjistan, famous for his victory over the white dragon Asdeev. His combat for two days with Prince Isfendiar is a favourite subject with the Persian poets. Matthew Arnold's poem Sohrab and Rustam gives an account of Rustam fighting with and killing his son Sohrab.

Let Zal and Rustrum bluster as they will,
Or Hatim call to Supper—heed not you.
FITZGERALD: Omar Khayyām, x.

Rusty. To turn rusty. Like a rusty bolt, which sticks and will not move; to become obstinate, or surly and ill-tempered. To cut up rusty is a similar expression.

Rye-house Plot. A conspiracy in 1683 to murder Charles II and his brother James on their return from Newmarket near the Rye House, Hoddesdon, Hertfordshire, the home of Rumbold, a Cromwellian, where the plot was hatched. It was the work of WHIG extremists and former Cromwellians but miscarried because the royal party left sooner than planned. Lord William Russell and Algernon Sidney, although not active participants, were executed for complicity.

Rymenhild. See KING HORN.

S

S. The nineteenth letter of the English alphabet (eighteenth of the ancient Roman), representing the Greek sigma from the Phoenician and Hebrew shin. As a mediæval Roman numeral S stood for 7, also 70; and \bar{S} for 70,000.

Collar of S.S., S's or Esses. See under COLLAR.

'S. A euphemistic abbreviation of God's, formerly common in oaths and expletives; as 'Sdeath (God's death), 'Sblood (God's blood), 'Sdeins (God's dignes, i.e. dignity), 'Sfoot, etc.

'Sdeins, I know not what I should say to him, in the whole world! He values me at a crack'd three farthings, for aught I see.

BEN JONSON: Every Man in His Humour, II, i.

§ The typographical sign for the DOLLAR, is thought to be a variation of the 8 with which pieces of eight were stamped, and was in use in the United States before the adoption of the Federal currency in 1785. Another, perhaps fanciful, derivation is from the letters U.S.

S.A. See S.S.; NIGHT OF THE LONG KNIVES.

S.J. (Societas Jesu). The Society of Jesus; denoting that the priest after whose name these letters are placed is a JESUIT.

S O S. The Morse code signal (3 dots, 3 dashes, 3 dots, . . . — — — . . .) used by shipping, etc., in distress to summon immediate aid; hence any urgent appeal for help.

The letters, in morse a convenient combination, have been popularly held to stand for save our souls or save our ship.

S.P.Q.R. Senatus Populusque Romanus (The Roman Senate and People). Letters inscribed on the standards, etc., of ancient ROME. Facetiously, "small profits and quick returns".

S.S. (Ger.). Schutz Staffeln, an armed force that originated as part of Hitler's bodyguard in 1923 with the predominant S.A. (Sturm Abteilung). In 1929, Heinrich Himmler took on the S.S. and defining its duties as "to find out, to fight and to destroy all open and secret enemies of the FÜHRER, the National Socialist Movement, and our racial resurrection", raised it to a position of dominating power and great numerical strength. During World War II, S.S. Divisions fought with fanatical zeal. See also NIGHT OF THE LONG KNIVES.

S.T.P. (Sacræ Theologiæ Professor). "Professor of Sacred Theology". "D.D."—i.e. Doctor of Divinity—is the English equivalent of "S.T.P."

Sabæans, Sabceans (sá bē' anz). The ancient people of Yemen in southwestern Arabia; from Arabic Saba', or SHEBA (see Job vi, 19).

Sabaism (sáb' á izm). The worship of the stars, or the "host of heaven" (from Heb. caba, host). The term is also sometimes applied to the religion of the SABIANS.

Sabaoth (sá bá' oth). The Bible phrase Lord God of Sabaoth means Lord God of Hosts, not of the Sabbath, Sabaoth being Hebrew for "armies" or "hosts". The epithet has been frequently misunderstood, as in the last stanza of Spenser's Faerie Queene (VII, viii, 21):

All that moveth doth in change delight:
But thenceforth all shall rest eternally
With him that is God of Sabaoth hight:
O! that great Sabaoth God, grant me that Sabbath's sight!

Sabbatæans. The disciples of Sabbatai Sebi (1626–1676) or Zebi of Smyrna who proclaimed himself MESSIAH in 1648. He was arrested at Constantinople in 1666 and accepted the MOSLEM faith. His learning and personal appeal were extraordinary and in his heyday he had thousands of followers. He was a Jew of Spanish descent.

Sabbath (sáb' áth) (Heb. shabath, to rest). Properly, the seventh day of the week, enjoined on the ancient Hebrews by the fourth Commandment (Exod. xx, 8–11) as a day of rest and worship; the Christian SUNDAY, "the Lord's Day", the first day of the week, is often inaccurately referred to as "the Sabbath". For Mohammedans, FRIDAY is the weekly day of rest.

A Sabbath Day's Journey (Acts i, 12) with the Jews was not to exceed the distance between the ark and the extreme end of the camp. This was 2,000 cubits, about 1,000 yards. It arose from the injunction (Exod. xvi, 29) against journeying on the Sabbath with that (Yos. iii, 4) providing for a distance of 2,000 cubits between the ark and the people when they travelled in the wilderness. As their tents were this distance from the ark, it was held that they might properly travel this distance, since the injunction could not have been intended to prevent their attendance at worship.

Sabbatarians. Those who observe the day of rest with excessive strictness, a peculiar feature of English and Scottish Puritanism enforced during the period of the COMMONWEALTH when sport and recreation was forbidden. Some relaxation occurred after the RESTORATION, but the Lord's Day Observance Act of 1782 closed all places of entertainment on a

Sabbatians

Sunday where an admission fee was charged. A Sunday Entertainments Act, 1932, empowered local authorities to license the Sunday opening of cinemas and musical entertainments; the opening of museums, etc., was permitted. The Bill was opposed by the Lord's Day Observance Society.

Sabbatians. Members of a 4th-century NOVATIAN sect, followers of Sabbatius. They followed the Quartodeciman rule.

Sabbatical Year (sá băt' i kál). One year in seven, when all the land, according to Mosaic law, was to lie fallow (Exod. xxiii, 10, etc.; Lev. xxv, 2-7; Deut. xv, 1-11). The term is used in universities, etc., for a period of freedom from academic duties every seventh year, during which time a professor or lecturer is free to study or travel.

Sabean. See SABÆANS.

Sabellianism (sá bel' i án izm). The tenets of the Sabellians, an obscure sect founded in the 3rd century by Sabellius, a Libyan priest. Little is known of their beliefs, but they were UNITARIANS and held that the TRINITY merely expressed three relations or states of one and the same God. See CONFOUNDING THE PERSONS under PERSON.

Sabians. A semi-Christian sect of Babylonia, akin to the MANDÆANS or Christians of St. John, a Gnostic sect which arose in the 2nd and 3rd centuries and still survives south of Baghdad.

Sabines, The (sáb' inz). An ancient people of central Italy, living in the Apennines, N. and NE. of ROME, and subjugated by the Romans about 290 B.C.

The Rape of the Sabine Women. The legend, connected with the foundation of ROME, is that, as ROMULUS had difficulty in providing his followers with wives, he invited the men of the neighbouring tribes to a festival. In the absence of the menfolk, the Roman youths raided the Sabine territory and carried off all the women they could find. The incident has frequently been depicted in art; Rubens's canvas in the National Gallery, London, is one of the best known examples.

Sable. The heraldic term for black, shown in engraving by horizontal lines crossing perpendicular ones. The fur of the animal of this name is brown, but it is probable that in the 15th century, when the heraldic term was first used, the fur was dyed black, as seal fur is today. Sable fur was always much sought after, and very expensive.

A suit of sables. A rich courtly dress.

By the Statute of Apparel (24 Henry VIII c.13) it is ordained that none under the degree of EARL shall use sables. Ben Jonson says (Discoveries), "Would you not laugh to meet a great councillor of state in a flat cap, with trunk hose . . . and yond haberdasher in a velvet gown trimmed with sables?"

So long? Nay, then, let the devil wear black, for I'll have a suit of sables.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, III, ii.

Sabotage (sáb' ō tazh). Wilful and malicious destruction of machinery, plant, disruption of plans and projects, etc., by strikers, rebels, fifth columnists, etc. The term came into use after the great French railway strike in 1912, when the strikers cut the shoes (sabots) holding the railway lines.

Sabreur (sa brer'). Le beau sabreur (Fr.), the handsome swordsman. This was the name given to Joachim Murat (1767-1815), King of Naples and brother-in-law of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. He was the cavalry commander in many of Napoleon's greatest battles.

Sabrina (sa brí' ná). The Roman name of the river Severn, but according to Geoffrey of Monmouth (Historia Britonum) it is from Sabre, daughter of Loclin and his concubine Estrildis, whom he married after divorcing Guendolœna. The ex-Queen gathered an army and Loclin was slain. Estrildis and Sabre were consigned to the waters of the Severn. NEREUS took pity on Sabre, or Sabrina, and made her the river goddess.

There is a gentle nymph not far from hence,
That with moist curb sways the smooth Severn stream,

Sabrina is her name, a virgin pure.

MILTON: Comus, 824.

Sac and Soc. Sac is O.E. sacu, strife, contention, litigation; soc is O.E. soc, the inquiry or investigation, a jurisdiction. The expression was common both before and after the Norman CONQUEST and used in grants of land to denote the conveyance of rights of private jurisdiction to the grantee.

Saccharissa (sák á ris' á). A name bestowed by Edmund Waller on Lady Dorothy Sidney (b. 1617), eldest daughter of the Earl of Leicester, who, in 1639, married Lord Spencer of Wormleighton, afterwards Earl of Sunderland. Aubrey says that Waller was passionately in love with the lady, but the poems themselves give the impression that the affair was merely a poetical pose.

Sacco Benedetto, or San Benito (sák' ō ben é det' ō, sán bê nê' tō) (Span., the blessed sack, or cloak). The yellow linen robe with two crosses on it, and painted over with flames and devils, worn by those going to the stake after condemnation by the Spanish INQUISITION. See AUTO DA FÉ. Penitents who had been taken before the Inquisition had to wear this habit for a stated period. Those worn by Jews, sorcerers, and renegades bore a St. Andrew's CROSS in red on back and front.

Sachem (să' chem). A chief among some of the North American Indian tribes. Sagamore is a similar title. Sachem was also applied to certain high officials of the TAMMANY Society of New York.

Sacheverell. The Sacheverell Affair. On 5 November 1709, the anniversary of William III's landing at Torbay, Dr. Henry Sacheverell (c. 1674-1724) preached a sermon in St. Paul's before the Lord Mayor of London reasserting the doctrine of non-resistance and by implication attacking the principles of the GLORIOUS REVOLUTION and the DISSENTERS. The sermon, The Perils of False Brethren, was subsequently printed and the WHIG ministry ill-advisedly impeached him (1710). The affair aroused tremendous excitement; Queen Anne attended Westminster Hall daily, and the London mob burnt Dissenters' chapels. Sacheverell was declared guilty by 69 votes to 52 and sentenced to abstain from preaching for three years and to have his sermon burnt by the common hangman. It was substantially a moral victory for Sacheverell and his TORY adherents.

Sack (Lat. saccus). A bag. According to tradition, it was the last word uttered before the tongues were confounded at BABEL. Also applied to certain loose garments and ladies' gowns hanging from the shoulders.

Friars of the Sack (Lat. fratres saccati). Also known as De Penitencia, or friars of the Penance of Jesus Christ, and so called from their sackcloth garment. They were abolished in 1274 but some remained in England until 1317.

A sack race. A village sport in which each runner is put up to the armpits in a sack to jump or run as well as the size of the sack permits.

To get the sack, or To be sacked. To be dismissed from employment. The phrase was current in 17th-century France (On luy a donné son sac); and the probable explanation of the term is that workmen carried their implements in a bag or sack, and when discharged took up their bag of tools and departed to seek a job elsewhere. The SULTAN used to put in a sack, and throw into the BOSPORUS any one of his harem he wished to be rid of; but there is no connexion between this and the phrase.

To wear sackcloth and ashes. Metaphorically, an expression of contrition and penitence. An allusion to the Hebrew custom of wearing sackcloth and ashes as a suitable humble attire for religious ceremonies, mourning, penitence, etc. The sackcloth in question was a coarse dark haircloth from which sacks were made.

And I set my face unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes.—Dan. ix. 3.

Sack. The old name for dry wines of the sherry type such as Madeira sack, Canary sack, Palm sack. It appears to be derived from Span. saca, export, not from Fr. sec, dry.

Sackerson. The famous bear kept at PARIS-GARDEN in SHAKESPEARE'S time.

Sacrament (Lat. sacramentum). Originally "a military oath" taken by the Roman soldiers not to desert their standard, turn their back on the enemy, or abandon their general. Traces of this meaning survive in early Christian usage but its present meaning comes from its employment in the Latin New Testament to mean "sacred mystery". Hence its application to baptism, confirmation, the EUCHARIST, etc.

The five sacraments are Confirmation, Penance, Orders, Matrimony, and EXTREME UNCTION. These are not counted "Sacraments of the GOSPEL". (See Book of Common Prayer, Articles of Religion, XXV.)

The seven sacraments are BAPTISM, Confirmation, the EUCHARIST, Penance, Orders, Matrimony, and EXTREME UNCTION.

The two sacraments of the PROTESTANT Churches are BAPTISM and the Lord's Supper.

Sacramentarians. The name given by Luther to those who maintained that no change took place in the eucharistic elements after consecration but that the bread and wine are only the body and blood of Christ in a metaphorical sense. The name was thus applied in the 16th century to those who did not accept the REAL PRESENCE.

Sacred (Lat. sacrare, to consecrate). That which is consecrated or dedicated to religious use.

The Sacred Band. A body of 300 Theban "Ironsides" who fought against Sparta in the 4th century B.C. They specially distinguished themselves at Leuctra (371), and the Band was annihilated at Chæronea (338).

The Sacred City. See HOLY CITY.

The Sacred College. The College of Cardinals (see under CARDINAL).

A sacred cow. Any institution, long-cherished practice, custom, etc., treated as immune from criticism, modification, or abolition. An allusion to the fact that the cow is held sacred by the Hindus.

The Sacred Heart. See under HEART.

The Sacred Isle, or Holy Island. IRELAND was so called from its many saints and Guernsey from its many monks. The island referred to by Moore in his Irish Melodies is Scattery, to which St. Senanus retired and vowed no woman should set foot thereon.

Oh, haste and leave this sacred isle,
Unholy bark, ere morning smile.
St. Senanus and the Lady.

Enhallow (Norse Eyinhalsa, holy isle) is a small island in the Orkney group where cells of the Irish anchorite fathers are still said to exist. See also HOLY ISLE.

Sacred Majesty. See MAJESTY.

The Sacred War. In Greek history, one of the wars waged by the AMPHICTYONIC League in defence of the temple and ORACLE of DELPHI.

(1) Against the Cirrhræans (594–587 B.C.).

(2) For the restoration of Delphi to the Phocians, from whom it had been taken (448–447 B.C.).

(3) Against Philip of Macedon (346 B.C.).

The Sacred Way. See VIA SACRA.

The Sacred Weed. VERVAIN (see also HERBA SACRA), or—humorously—tobacco.

Sacring Bell (săk' ring). From the obsolete verb to sacre, to consecrate, used especially of sovereigns and BISHOPS. The bell rung in churches to draw attention to the most solemn parts of the MASS. In mediæval times it served to announce to those outside that the Mass was in progress, and for this purpose often a hand-bell was rung out of a side window. It is more usually called the Sanctus bell because it was rung at the saying of the Sanctus at the beginning of the CANON OF THE MASS (see under CANON), and also at the Consecration and Elevation and other moments. It is still used in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH and certain other Churches.

He heard a little sacring bell ring to the elevation of a to-morrow mass.
REGINALD SCOTT: Discoverie of Witchcraft (1584).

Sacy's Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Sad. He's a sad dog. A playful way of saying a man is a debauchee.

Sad bread (Lat. panis gravis). Heavy bread, bread that has not risen properly. SHAKESPEARE calls it "distressful bread"—not the bread of distress, but the panis gravis or ill-made bread eaten by those who cannot get better. In America unleavened cakes are known as sad cakes.

Saddle. A saddle of mutton. The two loins with the connecting vertebræ.

Boot and saddle. See under BOOT.

I will lose the horse or win the saddle. See under HORSE.

Saddle-bag furniture. Chairs, etc., upholstered in a cheap kind of carpeting, the design of which is based on that of saddle-bags carried by camels in the East.

Set the saddle on the right horse. Lay the blame on those who deserve it.

To be in the saddle. To be in office, to be in a position of authority; also to be ready for work and eager to get on with it.

To saddle with responsibility. To put the responsibility on, to make responsible for.

Sadducees (săd' ū sēz). A Jewish party opposed to the PHARISEES. They did not accept oral tradition, but only the written Law, denied the existence of ANGELS and spirits and rejected the idea of future punishments in an after-life, as well as the resurrection of the body. They were major opponents of Christ and His disciples and in the events leading to His death. Substantially, they represented the interests and attitudes of the privileged and wealthy and nothing more is heard of them after the destruction of Jerusalem (A.D. 70).

The name is said to be from Zadok (see II Sam. viii, 17), who was high priest at the time of SOLOMON.

Sadism. The term for the obtaining of sexual satisfaction through the infliction of pain or humiliation on another person, or even an animal; also the morbid pleasure those in certain psychological states experience in being cruel or in watching certain acts of cruelty. The name derives from the Marquis de Sade (1740–1814), a vicious pervert and writer of plays and obscene novels, notably Justine (1791), Philosophie dans le boudoir (1793), and Les Crimes de l'amour (1800).

Sadler's Wells. There was once a Holy Well at this place belonging to St. John's Priory, CLERKENWELL, and it was blocked up at the REFORMATION but rediscovered by Mr. Sadler in 1683 when workmen were digging for gravel. The waters were pronounced to be chalybeate and the discovery was turned to immediate profit, but when attendance at the well declined, MUSIC HALL entertainment was provided; and from the 1690s this became the chief attraction under James Miles. In 1765, a builder named Rosoman erected a proper theatre which became famous for burlettas, musical interludes, and PANTOMIMES. Edmund Kean, Dibdin, and Grimaldi all appeared there. In 1844 Samuel Phelps took over and produced SHAKESPEARE, but after his retirement the boom in WEST END theatres cast the Wells into the shade and it eventually became a cinema, which closed in 1916. A new theatre was built with the help of the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust which opened in 1931 under Lilian Baylis of the OLD VIC and it became one of the leading houses in London for the production of ballet and opera. In 1946 the ballet company transferred to the Royal Opera House, COVENT GARDEN, and in 1968 the opera company moved to the London Coliseum (see COLOSSEUM).

Sadler's Wells features in Smollett's Humphry Clinker.

Safari. On safari (Swahili from Arab. safar, journey). On a hunting expedition in Africa; often used in the sense of "on trek" in the wilds with a company of followers.

Safety. Safety bicycle. See PENNY FARTHING.

Safety Matches. Matches which only light when struck on the specially prepared surface on the side of the box, i.e. the match head only contains part of the ingredients of combustion. They derive from the discovery of amorphous phosphorus by Anton von Schrotte in 1845. J. E. Lundstrom of Sweden is credited with their introduction. Cp. LUCIFER-MATCH; PROMETHEAN.

Saffron. He hath slept in a bed of saffron (Lat. dormivit in sacco croci). He has a very light heart, in reference to the exhilarating effects of saffron.

Saga (pl. sagas) (sa' gá). In Icelandic the word is applied to any kind of narrative, but in English it particularly denotes heroic biographies written in Iceland and Norway mainly during the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries. From this comes its English application to a story of heroic adventure.

The sagas are a compound of history and myth in varying proportions, the King's Sagas being the oldest, the First Saga of King Olaf dating from 1180. Other notable examples are the Saga of Hallfred, the Saga of Björn, the Grettis Saga, the Saga of Burnt Njáll, the Egils Saga, the Islandinga Saga, the Ynglinga Saga, the Volsunga Saga, Tristram's Saga, and the Karlamagnus Saga. Snorri Sturluson's Hæmskringla (Orb of the World) is a collection of biographies of Norwegian kings from the 9th to the 12th century. See EDDA.

Sagamore. See SACHEM.

Sages, The Seven. See WISE MEN OF GREECE.

Sagittarius (săj i târ' iùs) (Lat. the archer). One of the old constellations, the ninth sign of the ZODIAC, which the sun enters about 22 November. See CHIRON.

Sagittary (săj' i tâ ri). The name given in mediæval romances to the CENTAUR, whose eyes sparkled like fire and struck dead like lightning, fabled to have been introduced into the TROJAN armies.

The dreadful Sagittary
Appals our numbers.

SHAKESPEARE: Troilus and Cressida, V, v.

The "sagittary" referred to in Othello I, i:

Lead to the Sagittary the raised search,
And there will I be with him, was probably an inn, but may have been the arsenal.

Sahib (sab, sa' ib) (Urdu, friend). A form of address used by Hindus to Europeans in India corresponding to our "Sir" in "Thank you, sir." Also an Englishman or European, a woman being Mem-sahib. The word is also used colloquially to describe a cultured, refined man. Pukka sahib denotes a gentleman.

Sail. Sailing under false colours. Pretending to be what you are not with the object of personal advantage. The allusion is to pirate vessels sailing under false colours to escape detection.

To sail against the wind. To swim against the tide, to oppose popular or current trends, opinions, etc.

To sail before the wind. To prosper, to go on swimmingly, to meet with great success, as a ship sails smoothly and rapidly with a following wind.

To sail close to the wind. To keep the vessel's head as near the quarter from which the wind is blowing as possible yet keeping the sails filled; figuratively to go to the verge of what decency or propriety allow; to act so as just to escape the letter or infringement of the law; to take a risk.

Sailor King, The

To sail into. "To sail into someone" is to attack or reprimand him forcefully, "to sail into a task", etc., is to set about it vigorously, as the attackers "sailing into" the enemy to commence a naval engagement.

To set sail. To start a voyage.

To strike sail. To acknowledge oneself beaten; to eat humble pie (see under EAT). When a ship in a fight, or on meeting another ship, lowered her topsails at least half-mast high, she was said to strike, meaning that she submitted or paid respect to another.

Now Margaret
Must strike her sail, and learn awhile to serve
Where kings command.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. III, III, iii.

To trim one's sails. To modify or re-shape one's policy or opinion to meet the circumstances, as the sails of a ship are "trimmed" or adjusted according to the wind.

You may hoist sail. Be off. Maria saucily says to Viola, dressed in man's apparel:

Will you hoist sail, sir? Here lies your way.

SHAKESPEARE: Twelfth Night, I, v.

Sailor King, The. William IV of England (1765, 1830-1837), also called Silly Billy, who entered the navy as a midshipman in 1779, and was made Lord High Admiral in 1827.

Saint. Individual saints are entered under their respective names.

The title of saint was from early Christian times applied to APOSTLES, EVANGELISTS, MARTYRS and Confessors of remarkable virtue, especially martyrs. In due course the need arose for BISHOPS to intervene against local recognition of the undeserving and eventually Pope Alexander III (1159-1181) asserted the exclusive right of the Papacy to add to the roll of saints. Nowadays canonization is dependent upon a lengthy legal process where the case for the canonization of a particular person is thoroughly explored and contested. JOAN OF ARC was canonized in 1920; Sir Thomas More (1478-1535) and John Fisher (1459-1535), Bishop of Rochester, in 1935.

In Christian art, saints are often depicted with a NIMBUS, AUREOLE, or glory and individual symbols by which they can be recognized. See SYMBOLS OF SAINTS, below.

Popes numbered among the saints.

From the time of St. Peter to the end of the 4th century all the Popes (with a few minor and doubtful exceptions) are popularly entitled "Saint"; since then the following are the chief of those given the honour:

Innocent I (402-417).
Leo the Great (440-461).
John I (523-526).
GREGORY THE GREAT (590-604).
Deusdedit I (615-619).
Martin I (649-654).
Leo II (682-683).
Sergius I (687-701).
Zacharias (741-752).
Paul I (757-767).
Leo III (795-816).
Paschal I (817-824).
Nicholas the Great (858-867).
Leo IX (1049-1054).
Gregory VII, HILDEBRAND (1073-1085).
Celestine V (1294).
Pius V (1566-1572).
Pius X (1903-1914).

Kings and Queens honoured as Saints. Among them are:

Edward the Martyr (961, 975-978).
Edward the Confessor (1004, 1042-1066).
Eric VIII of Sweden (1150-1160).
Ethelred I, King of Wessex (866-871).
Ferdinand III of Castile and Leon (1200, 1217-1252).
Louis IX of France (1215, 1226-1270).
Margaret, Queen of Scotland (d. 1093), wife of Malcolm III.
Olaf II of Norway (1015-1030).
Stephen I of Hungary (979, 997-1038).

Symbols of Saints. The symbol common to all saints is the NIMBUS which encircles the head. MARTYRS alone have the common symbols of the CROWN of eternal life won by their heroism and the PALM of triumph. With these is generally associated some symbol peculiar to the individual saint, often the instrument of his martyrdom, such as the GRIDIRON of St. LAWRENCE or the windlass on which the bowels were drawn from St. Erasmus' body.

Saints not martyrs will be depicted with an object symbolizing their particular virtue (St. AMBROSE has the beehive emblematic of eloquence) or relating to some incident in their lives (as St. DUNSTAN pinching the DEVIL's nose). All saints are depicted in their proper dress, as soldiers in armour, bishops or priests in appropriate vestments, kings robed and crowned, religious in the habits of their order.

Below is a selection of some of the many symbols of saints with some of the saints to which they are applied. (See also APOSTLES, MARY and entries for individual saints.)

Alms-box: hung round his neck: St. JOHN OF GOD
Anchor: SS. Clement, Felix, NICHOLAS
Angel(s): Singly or in their host, angels have constantly appeared to aid and protect the saints and are their companions in sacred iconography.
For example:
Angel holding plough: St. Isidore of Madrid;
— fish on a plate: St. Bertold; — crozier: St. BERNARD; — basket of flowers: St. DOROTHEA;
— bottle: St. Leontius; Angel playing violin: St. FRANCIS of Assisi; — organ: St. CECILIA;

The Battle of the Saints (12 April 1782). Rodney's victory over the French fleet during the American War of Independence which restored British supremacy in the West Indies. It was fought off Les Saintes near Guadeloupe.

The City of Saints. See under CITY.

The Island of Saints. So Ireland was called in the MIDDLE AGES.

The Latter-day Saints. See MORMONS.

Saint-Simonism. The social and political theories derived from the teachings of Claude Henri, Comte de Saint-Simon (1760–1825), the French utopian socialist. He advocated a social order based on large-scale industrial production controlled by benevolent industrial leaders. The aim of his society was to improve the lot of the poorest. His disciples advocated that the State should become the sole proprietor, and a form of socialism in which social groups were to manage the state properties. Each man was to be placed and rewarded in their social hierarchy according to his capacities.

Sake. A form of the obsolete word sac. See SAC AND SOC.

In the common phrases For God's sake, for goodness' sake, for conscience's sake, etc., it means "out of consideration for" God, goodness, etc.

For old sake's sake. For the sake of old acquaintance, past times.

For one's name's sake. Out of regard for one's reputation or good name.

Sakes! or Sakes alive! Expression of surprise, admiration, etc. Commoner in the United States than in England.

Saker (sā' ker). A piece of light artillery, used especially on board ship, in the 16th and 17th centuries. The word is borrowed from the saker hawk (falcon).

The cannon, blunderbuss, and saker, He was the inventor of and maker.

BUTLER: Hudibras, I, ii, 355.

Saki. The pseudonym of H. H. Munro (1870–1916), the author of The West-minster Alice (1902), Reginald (1904), The Chronicles of Clovis (1911), The Unbearable Bassington (1912), etc., and numerous other short stories. His style was often biting satirical.

Sakuntala (sā kun' ta la). The heroine of Kalidasa's great Sanskrit drama Abhijnanasakuntala. She was the daughter of a sage, Viswamita, and Menaka, a water-nymph, and was brought up by a hermit. One day King Dushyanta came to the hermitage during a hunt, and persuaded her to marry him; and later, giving her a ring, returned to his throne. A son was born and Sakuntala set out with him to find his father. On the way, while bathing, she lost the ring, and the king did not recognize her owing to enchantment. Subsequently it was found by a fisherman in a fish he had caught (cp. KENTIGERN), the king recognized his wife, she was publicly proclaimed his queen, and Bharata, his son and heir, became the founder of the glorious race of the Bharatas. Sir William Jones (1746-1794) translated it into English.

Sakya-Muni. One of the names of Gautama Siddhartha, the BUDDHA.

Salad. A pen'orth of salad oil. A strapping; a castigation. It was a joke on All Fools' Day (see APRIL FOOL) to send one to the saddler's for "a pen'orth of salad oil" (cp. ELBOW GREASE; PIGEON'S MILK). The pun is between "salad oil", and the French avoir de la salade, "to be flogged". The French salader and salade are derived from the O.Fr. word for the saddle on which schoolboys were at one time birched.

Salad days. Days of inexperience, when persons are very green.

My salad days,
When I was green in judgment.
SHAKESPEARE: Antony and Cleopatra, I, v.

Saladin (Arab. Salah ud-Din, "Honour of the Faith") (1138-1193). SULTAN of Egypt and Syria and founder of the Ayubite dynasty, whose capture of JERUSALEM in 1187 led to the Third CRUSADE. He appears in Scott's Talisman as a chivalrous warrior.

Saladin tithe. The tax levied by Henry II in 1188 for the recovery of JERUSALEM after its capture by SALADIN.

Salamander (säl' ä män der) (Gr. salamandra, a kind of lizard). The name is now given to a genus of amphibious Urodela (newts, etc.), but anciently to a mythical lizard-like monster that was supposed to be able to live in fire, which, however, it quenched by the chill of its body. Pliny refers to this belief (Nat. Hist. x, 86; xxix, 23). It was adopted by PARACELsus as the name of the elemental being inhabiting fire (GNOMES being those of the earth, SYLPHS of the air, and UN-DINES of the water), and was hence taken over by the ROSICRUCIAN system, from which source Pope introduced salamanders into his Rape of the Lock (i, 60).

Francis I of France adopted as his badge a lizard in the midst of flames, with the legend Nutrisco et extinguo (I nourish and extinguish). The Italian motto from which it derived was Nutrisco il buono e spengo il reo (I nourish the good and extinguish the bad). Fire purifies good metal, but consumes rubbish.

SHAKESPEARE'S Falstaff calls Bardolph's nose "a burning lamp", "a salamander", and the drink that made such "a fiery meteor" he calls "fire".

I have maintained that salamander of yours with fire any time this two-and-thirty years.
Henry IV, Pt. I, III, iii.

Salamander's wool. Asbestos, a fibrous mineral, affirmed by the TARTARS to be made "of the root of a tree". It is sometimes called "mountain flax", and is not combustible.

Salary. Originally "salt rations" Lat. salarium from sal, salt). The ancient Romans served out rations of salt and other necessities to their soldiers and civil servants. These were collectively known as sali, and when money was substituted for the rations, the stipend went by the same name.

The salariat. Salaried employees collectively, such as civil servants, etc.

Sales promotion. A commercial term for all the methods used to increase the sale of commodities and to break down sales resistance, the negative attitude of a possible buyer which hinders or prevents the sale of a commodity.

Salic (säl' ik). Pertaining to the Salian FRANKS, a tribe of Franks who in the 4th century established themselves on the banks of the Sala (now known as the Yssel), and from whom the MEROVINGIAN Kings of France descended.

Which Salique, as I said, 'twixt Elbe and Sala,
Is at this day in Germany called Meisen.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry V, I, ii.

The Salic Law. The compilation of laws of the Salian Franks supposedly begun in the 5th century, with later additions. Several Latin texts of what was essentially a penal code still exist. Les Salica LIX stated that a wife could not inherit the land of her husband. This proviso regarding Salic lands in no way applied to the succession to the French crown. The so-called "Salic Law" invoked in 1316 to exclude the daughters of Louis X and later Philip V from the throne of France never existed. Subsequent exclusions of females from European thrones rested on precedent rather than Salic Law. The so-called "Spanish Salic Law", an Act of Philip V published in 1713 giving preference to male succession, was to satisfy European pressure and aimed at preventing the future union of the French and Spanish thrones. This law was abrogated by Charles IV in 1789, although it was not made public until 1830.

Salli, or The Salliens. In ancient ROME, a college of twelve priests of MARS traditionally instituted as guardians of the ANCILE. Every year these young patricians paraded the city with song and dance, finishing the day with a banquet, inasmuch that saliare cæna became proverbial for a sumptuous feast. The word saliens means dancing.

Nunc est bibendum . . .

. . . nunc Saliaribus

Ornare pulvinar Deorum

Tempus est dapibus sodales.

HORACE: I Odes, xxxvii, 1-4.

Salisbury Crags. The range of cliffs on the flank of ARTHUR'S SEAT, Edinburgh, are so called from the Earl of Salisbury who accompanied Edward III in an expedition against the Scots.

Sallee-man, or Sallee rover. A pirate-ship; so called from Sallee, a seaport near Rabat on the west coast of Morocco, formerly a notorious nest of pirates.

Sally Army. A nickname of the SALVATION ARMY.

Sally Lunn. A tea cake; so called from a woman pastrycook of that name who used to cry them in the streets of Bath at the close of the 18th century. Dalmer, the baker, bought her recipe, and made a song about the buns.

Salmacis. See HERMAPHRODITE.

Salmagundi (säl' má gún' di). A mixture of minced veal, chicken, or turkey, anchovies or pickled herrings, and onions, all chopped together and served with lemon-juice and oil. The word appeared in the 17th century; its origin is unknown, but fable has it that it was the name of one of the ladies attached to the suite of Marie de' MEDICI, wife of Henry IV of France, who either invented or popularized the dish.

In 1807 Washington Irving published a humorous periodical with this as the title.

Salon des Refusés. The exhibition of paintings opened at PARIS in 1863 at the instigation of NAPOLEON III, of works from artists (especially Claude Monet) rejected by the French Salon. Monet's picture Impressions gave rise to the term IMPRESSIONISM which was coined in derision by a journalist.

Salop. See SHROPSHIRE.

Salt. Flavour, smack. The "salt of youth" is that vigour and strong passion which then predominates.

Though we are justices and doctors, and churchmen, Master Page, we have some salt of our youth in us.

SHAKESPEARE:

The Merry Wives of Windsor, II, iii.

Shakespeare uses the term on several occasions for strong amorous passion. Thus Iago refers to it as "hot as monkeys, salt as wolves in pride" (Othello, III, iii). The Duke calls Angelo's base passion his "salt imagination", because he supposed his victim to be Isabella, and not his betrothed wife whom the Duke forced him to marry (Measure for Measure, V, i).

Salt Hill. The mound at Eton where the scholars used to collect money for the Captain at the MONTEM. All the money collected was called salt (see SALARY).

Salt lick. A place where salt is found naturally and in a position where animals which resort thither may lick it from the rocks, etc.

The salt of the earth. The perfect, the elect; the best of mankind. Our Lord told his disciples they were "the salt of the earth" (Matt. v, 13).

To salt an account, invoice, etc. To put the extreme value upon each article, and even something more, to give it piquancy and raise its market value.

To salt a mine. To introduce pieces of ore, etc., into the workings so as to delude prospective purchasers or shareholders into the idea that a worthless mine is in reality a profitable investment.

To salt away, or down. To store or preserve for future use, especially money.

Attic salt. See under ATTIC.

An old salt. A long-experienced sailor. One who has been well salted by the sea.

A covenant of salt (Numb. xviii, 19). A covenant which could not be broken. As salt was a symbol of incorruption it symbolized perpetuity.

The Lord God of Israel gave the kingdom . . . to David . . . by a covenant of salt.

II Chron. xiii, 5.

The Pillar of Salt. Lot's wife, when escaping from Sodom with her husband and daughters, looked back on the cities of SODOM AND GOMORRAH against God's command and "She became a pillar of salt" (Gen. xix, 26). Our Lord, when teaching indifference to worldly affairs and material possessions, refers to the episode saying, "Remember Lot's wife" (Luke xvii, 32).

To eat a man's salt. To partake of his hospitality. Among the Arabs, to eat a man's salt created a sacred bond between host and guest. No one who has eaten of another's salt should speak ill of him or do him an ill turn.

Why dost thou shun the salt? that sacred pledge,
Which, once partaken, blunts the sabre's edge,
Makes even contending tribes in peace unite,
And hated hosts seem brethren to the sight!
BYRON: The Corsair: II, iv.

He won't earn salt for his porridge. He will never earn a penny.

If the salt have lost its savour, where-with shall it be salted? (Matt. v, 13). If men fall from grace, how shall they be restored? The reference is to rock salt which loses its saltiness if exposed to the hot sun.

Not worth your salt. Not worth your wages. The reference is to the SALARY issued to Roman soldiers, etc.

Put some salt on his tail. Catch or apprehend him. The phrase is from the advice given to young children to lay salt on a bird's tail if they want to catch it.

To sit above the salt. To sit in a place of distinction. Formerly the family saler (salt cellar) was of massive silver, and placed in the middle of the table. Persons of distinction sat above the "saler"—i.e. between it and the head of the table; dependants and inferior guests sat below.

Spilling salt was held to be an unlucky omen by the Romans, and the superstition remains, but evil may be averted if he who spills the salt throws a pinch of it over the left shoulder with the right hand. In Leonardo da Vinci's picture of the LAST SUPPER, JUDAS Iscariot is known by the salt-cellar knocked over accidentally by his arm. Salt was used in sacrifice by the Jews, as well as by the Greeks and Romans. It was an emblem of purity and the sanctifying influence of a holy life on others owing to its preservative quality; also a sign of incorruptibility. It is used for the preparation of HOLY WATER and it was not uncommon to put salt into a coffin; for it is said that SATAN hates salt. It was long customary to throw a handful of salt on the top of the mash when brewing to keep the witches from it.

True to his salt. Faithful to his employers. Here salt means salary.

With a grain, or pinch of salt. (Lat. cum grano salis). With great reservations or limitation; allowing it a mere grain of truth. A pinch of salt with something may help one to swallow it.

To row a man up Salt River (U.S.A.). To discomfit or defeat him, especially a political opponent at an election. There is a story that when Henry Clay was Presidential candidate in 1832, the boatman hired to row him up the Ohio to Louisville, to address a meeting, took him up the Salt River, a tributary, instead. This caused him to lose Kentucky and the election. The phrase, however, is older than this.

Salutation, Salute (Lat. salutare, to keep safe, to greet). Military salutes take various forms according to the occasion, and include touching the CAP, presenting arms, the lowering of sword-points, lowering the FLAG, the firing of guns, etc. The number of guns fired for a Royal Salute in the Royal Navy is 21, in the Army 101. The lowering of swords indicates a willingness to put yourself in the power of the person saluted, as does the presenting of arms.

Other common forms of salutation are the kiss, rubbing noses, bowing, curtseying, shaking hands, the removal or touching of the hat, etc.

Salvation Army. A religious organization founded by William Booth (1829-1912), originally a METHODIST minister. Its origins are to be found in 1865 in his Christian Mission, WHITECHAPEL, and the movement took its present name in 1878. Booth himself became the "General" and the "Army" was planned on semi-military lines. The motto adopted was "Through Blood and Fire" and the activities were directed at the poor, out-cast, and destitute. The movement became world-wide, and its brass bands and open-air meetings became a familiar feature of the street scene, as did the bonnets of the Salvation Army "lasses". Immense good has been done by the selfless devotion of its rank and file.

Salve. Latin, "hail", "welcome". The word is sometimes woven on door-mats.

Salve, Regina. An ancient antiphonal hymn recited at the end of the canonical hours and still widely used in ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCHES. So called from the opening words, Salve, regina mater misericordiæ (Hail, O Queen, Mother of Mercy).

Sam. To stand Sam. To pay the reckoning. The phrase is said to have arisen from the letters U.S. on the knapsacks of American soldiers. The government of "Uncle Sam" has to pay, or "stand Sam" for all; hence also the phrase Nunkey pays for all.

Uncle Sam. Nickname for the collective citizens of the U.S.A. It arose in the neighbourhood of Troy, N.Y., about 1812 partly from the frequent appearance of the initials U.S. on government supplies to the army, etc. The other contributory factor to the derivation is puzzling, but some have maintained that there was someone in the district who had a connexion with army supplies and who was actually known as Uncle Sam.

Upon my Sam, or Sammy! A humorous form of asseveration; also, 'pon my sacred Sam!

Sam Browne belt. The leather belt with a strap over the shoulder and originally with a sword-frog, compulsory for officers and warrant officers in the British Army up to 1939, when it was declared optional. This belt was invented by General Sir Sam Browne, V.C. (1824-1901), a veteran of the INDIAN MUTINY. Its pattern has been adopted by almost every military power in the world.

Samanids. A Persian dynasty founded by Ismail al Samani. They ruled from 892 to 1005 and were notable patrons of Persian literature.

Samaritan. A good Samaritan. A philanthropist, one who helps the poor and needy (see Luke x, 30-7).

The Samaritans. An organization founded by the Rev. Chad Varah of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, London, in 1953, to help the despairing and suicidal, which now has branches in a number of towns. Volunteers under the trained guidance of doctors, psychiatrists, and clergy make their help available at any hour to those who make their need known by a telephone call.

Sambo. A pet name given to one of NEGRO race; properly applied to the male offspring of a Negro and mulatto (Span. zambo, bow-legged).

Samian (sā'mi ān). The Samian letter. The letter Y, the Letter of Pythagoras (see under PYTHAGORAS).

When reason doubtful like the Samian letter,
Points him two ways, the narrower the better.
POPE: Dunciad, IV.

The Samian Poet. Simonides of Amorgos, Greek iambic poet and native of Samos, who flourished in the mid-7th century B.C.

The Samian Sage, or The Samian. PYTHAGORAS, who was born at Samos.

Not so the Samian sage; to him belongs
The brightest witness of recording Fame.
THOMSON: Liberty, Pt. III.

Samite (sām' it). A rich silk fabric with a warp of six threads, generally interwoven with gold, held in high esteem in the MIDDLE AGES. So called after the Gr. hexamiton: hex, six; mitos, a thread. Cp. DIMITY.

But ere he dipt the surface, rose an arm
Clothed in white samite, mystic, wonderful,
And caught him by the hilt, . . .
TENNYSON: Morte d'Arthur.

Sampford Ghost. An uncommonly persistent POLTERGEIST which haunted a thatched house (destroyed by fire c. 1942) at Sampford Peverell, Devon, for about three years until 1810. Besides the usual knockings the inmates were beaten, curtains agitated and damaged, levitations occurred, and in one instance an "unattached arm" flung a folio Greek Testament from a bed into the middle of the room. The Rev. Charles Caleb Colton, rector of Prior's Portion, Tiverton (credited as author of these freaks), offered £100 to anyone who could explain the matter except on supernatural grounds. No one claimed the reward.

Sampo. See KALEVALA.

Sampson. A Dominic Sampson. A humble, pedantic scholar, awkward, irascible, and very old-fashioned. A character in Scott's Guy Mannering.

Samson. Any man of unusual strength; so called from the ancient Hebrew hero (Judges xiii-xvi). The name has been specially applied to Thomas Topham, the "British Samson", son of a London carpenter. He lifted three hogsheads of water (1,836 lb.) in the presence of thousands of spectators at COLDBATH FIELDS, 28 May 1741. He stabbed his wife and committed suicide in 1749; also to Richard Joy, the "Kentish Samson", who died in 1742 at the age of 67. His tombstone is in St. Peter's churchyard, Isle of Thanet.

Samurai (sām' ū rī). The military class of old Japan. In early feudal times the term (which means "guard") was applied to all who bore arms, but eventually the Samurai became warrior knights and administrators as retainers of the daimyo or nobles. From 1872 the rigid feudal stratification of society came to an end, and in 1876 they were forbidden to wear two swords, the symbol of a warrior. With the creation of a new nobility in 1884 they became shizoku ("gentry") and many took posts in administration and industry.

San Benito. See SACCO BENEDETTO.

Sance Bell. The Sanctus Bell. See SACRING BELL.

Sancho Panza (sān' chō pān' zá). The squire of Don QUIXOTE in Cervante's romance. A short pot-bellied rustic, full of common sense, but without a grain of "spirituality", he became governor of BARATARIA. He rode upon an ass, DAPPLE, and was famous for his proverbs. Panza, in Spanish, means paunch. Hence a Sancho Panza as a rough-and-ready, sharp and humorous justice of the peace. Sanchoniathon (sang ko ni' á thon). The Fragments of Sanchoniathon are the literary remains of a supposed ancient Phœnician philosopher (alleged to have lived before the TROJAN WAR), which are incorporated in the Phœnician History by Philo of Byblos (1st and 2nd centuries A.D.), and which was drawn upon by Eusebius (c. 260–c. 340), the "Father of Church History". The name is Greek and may mean "the whole law of Chon" or alternatively may be a proper name. It is likely that the name was invented by Philo to give ancient authority to his writings.

Sanctuary, Right of. In Anglo-Saxon ENGLAND all churches and churchyards generally provided refuge for fugitives for 40 days; while permanent refuge was available at the great LIBERTIES of Beverley, Durham, and Ripon. Sanctuary for treason was disallowed in 1486 and most of the remaining rights were severely restricted by Henry VIII. Eight cities of refuge were finally provided on the biblical model—Chester, Derby, Launceston, Northampton, Norwich, Wells, Westminster, and York. Sanctuary for criminals was abolished in 1623 and for civil offenders by acts of 1697 and 1723. These latter measures were aimed at such rokeries as ALSATIA, the SAVOY, the CLINK, the MINT, etc.

In SCOTLAND the most famous sanctuaries were those of the church of Wedale (Stow), near Galashiels, and that of Lesmahagow, Lanark. These were abolished at the REFORMATION. The abbey of Holyrood House remained a sanctuary for debtors until the late 19th century.

Sanctum Sanctorum. Latin for the HOLY OF HOLIES.

Sanctus Bell. See SACRING BELL.

Sancy Diamond, The. A famous diamond (55 carats), said to have once belonged to Charles the Bold of Burgundy, and named after the French ambassador in Constantinople, Nicholas de Harlay, Sieur de Sancy, who about 1575 bought it for 70,000 francs. Later it was owned by Henri III and Henri IV of France, then by Queen Elizabeth I; James II took it with him in his flight to France in 1688 and sold it to Louis XIV for £25,000. Louis XV wore it at his coronation, but during the French Revolution it was stolen and, in 1828, sold to Prince Paul Demidoff for £80,000. In 1865, it was bought by Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, but was in the market again in 1889 and rumoured to have been subsequently acquired by the Tsar of Russia. Its present fate is unknown.

Sand. A rope of sand. A proverbially weak link or tie, a union which is easily broken; that which is virtually worthless and untrustworthy.

The sands are running out. Time is getting short; there will be little opportunity for doing what you have to do unless you take the chance now. Often used in reference to one who has evidently not much longer to live. The allusion is to the hour-glass.

To plough, or to number the sands. To undertake an endless or impossible task.

Alas! poor duke, the task he undertakes
Is numbering sands and drinking oceans dry.
SHAKESPEARE: Richard II, II, ii.

Sand-blind. Dim-sighted; not exactly blind, but with eyes of very little use. Sand here is a corruption of the obsolete prefix sam- meaning "half", as in the old sam-dead, sam-ripe, etc., and sam-sodden, which still survives in some dialects. In SHAKESPEARE'S Merchant of Venice (II, ii) Launcelot Gobbo connects it with sand, the gritty earth—

This is my true-begotten father, who, being more than sand-blind, high-gravel blind, knows me not.

The sand-man is about. A playful remark addressed to children who are tired and "sleepy-eyed". Cp. THE DUST-MAN HAS ARRIVED under DUST.

Sand, George Sand. See under GEORGE.

Sandabar, or Sindibad. Names given to a mediæval collection of tales much the same as those in the Greek Syntipas the Philosopher and the Arabic Romance of the Seven Viziers (known in Western Europe as The Seven Sages (SEVEN WISE MASTERS), and derived from the Fables of Bidpay. These names probably result from Hebrew mistransliterations of the Arabic equivalent of Bidpay or PILPAY.

Sandal. A man without sandals. A prodigal; so called by the ancient Jews, because the seller gave his sandals to the buyer as a ratification of his bargain (Ruth iv, 7).

He wears the sandals of Theramenes. Said of a TRIMMER, an opportunist. Theramenes (put to death c. 404 B.C.) was one of the Athenian oligarchy, and was nicknamed Cothurnus (i.e. a sandal or boot which might be worn on either foot), because no dependence could be put on him. He "blew hot and cold with the same breath" (see under BLOW).

Sandemanians, or Glacites (sánd e' mán' i ánz). A religious party expelled from the CHURCH OF SCOTLAND under John Glas (1695-1773) for maintaining that national churches, being "kingdoms of this world", are unscriptural. He was suspended in 1728 and expelled in 1730. Eventually the leadership passed to his son-in-law Robert Sandeman, whence the more common name Sandemanians. They believe in salvation through grace and abstain from all animal food which has not been drained of blood. Love feasts (AGAPE) are held and the kiss of charity is enjoined.

Sandford and Merton. The schoolboy heroes of Thomas Day's old-fashioned children's tale of this name (published in three parts, 1783-1789). "Master" Tommy Merton is rich, selfish, untruthful, and generally objectionable; Harry Sandford, the farmer's son, is depicted as being the reverse in every respect.

Sandgropers. Nickname for the inhabitants of Western Australia.

Sandwich. Meat or other filling between two slices of bread, so called from the fourth Earl of Sandwich (1718-1792), the notorious "JEMMY TWITCHER". He passed whole days in gambling, bidding the waiter to bring him for refreshment a piece of ham between two slices of bread, which he ate without stopping play.

Sandwich man. A perambulating advertisement displayer, "sandwiched" between advertisement boards carried before and behind.

Sang-de-bœuf (säng de berf) (Fr., bullock's blood). The deep red with which ancient Chinese porcelain is often coloured.

Sang-froid (Fr., cold blood). Freedom from excitement or agitation. One does a thing "with perfect sang-froid" when one does it coolly and collectedly.

... cross-legg'd, with great sang-froid
Among the scorching ruins he sat smoking
Tobacco on a little carpet.

BYRON: Don Juan, VIII, cxxi.

Sanger's Circus. One of the most spectacular entertainments of Victorian England. In 1845 the brothers John (1816-1889) and George (1827-1911) Sanger began a conjuring exhibition at Birmingham and from this they ventured into a travelling circus business. Their success was such that they were eventually able to lease the Agricultural Hall, Islington, and in 1871 purchased Astley's. Their mammoth shows were a distinctive feature of the entertainment world but they subsequently dissolved partnership and after John's death only "Lord" George's circus continued on the road.

Sangrado, Dr. (sán gra' dô). A name applied to an ignorant or "fossilized" medical practitioner, from the humbug in Le Sage's Gil Blas (1715), a tall, meagre, pale man, of very solemn appearance, who weighed every word he uttered, and gave an emphasis to his sage "dicta". "His reasoning was geometrical, and his opinions angular." He prescribed warm water and bleeding for every ailment, for his great theory was that, "It is a gross error to suppose that blood is necessary for life."

Sangrail, or Sangreal (sán gräl). The Holy GRAIL. Popular etymology used to explain the word as meaning the real blood of Christ, sang-real, or the wine used in the LAST SUPPER; and a tradition arose that part of this wine-blood was preserved by JOSEPH OF ARIMATHÆA in the Saint, or Holy Grail.

Sanguine (säng' gwin) (Lat. sanguis, sanguinis, blood). The term used in HERALDRY for the deep red or purplish colour usually known as murrey (from the mulberry). In engravings it is indicated by lines of vert and purple crossed, that is, diagonals from left to right. This is a word with a curious history. Its actual meaning is bloody, or of the colour of blood; hence it came to be applied to one who was ruddy, whose cheeks were red with good health and well-being. From this it was easy to extend the meaning to one who was full of vitality, vivacious, confident and hopeful.

Sanhedrin (sán i drin), or Sanhedrim (Gr. syn, together; hedra, a seat; i.e. a sitting together). The supreme council and highest court of justice of the ancient Jews held at JERUSALEM. It consisted of 70 priests and elders and a president, dealt with religious questions, and acted as a civil court for Jerusalem. It was the Sanhedrin that condemned Christ to death. The Sanhedrin proper came to an end with the fall of the Jewish state (A.D. 70). Some authorities, taking their authority from the MISHNA, hold that there was a Great Sanhedrin of 71 members possessing civil authority and a little Sanhedrin of 23 with religious authority under the High Priest.

In Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel, the Sanhedrin stands for the English PARLIAMENT.

Sans (Fr., without). SHAKESPEARE (As You Like It, II, vii) describes second childhood as "sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans everything".

Sans Culottes (Fr., without knee-breeches). A name given during the French Revolution to the extremists of the working classes. Hence Sansculottism, the principles, etc., of "red republicans".

Sans culottides. The five complementary days added to the 12 months of the Revolutionary Calendar (see under CALENDAR), each month being made to consist of 30 days. The days were named in honour of the sans culottes, and made idle days or holidays.

Sans-Gêne, Madame. The nickname of the wife of Lefebvre, Duke of Dantzic (1755-1820), one of NAPOLEON'S marshals. She was originally a washerwoman, and followed her husband—then in the ranks—as a VIVANDIÈRE. She was kind and pleasant, but her rough-and-ready ways and ignorance of etiquette soon made her the butt of the court, and earned her the nickname, which means "without constraint" or "free and easy".

Sans peur et sans reproche (Fr., without fear and without reproach). The Chevalier Bayard (see under BAYARD) was known as Le chevalier sans peur et sans reproche.

Sans Souci (Fr.). Free and easy, void of care. It is the nickname given by Frederick the Great to the palace he built near Potsdam (1747).

The Philosopher of Sans-Souci. Frederick the Great (1712, 1740-1786).

Enfants Sans Souci. A mediæval French society of actors, mainly young men of good family, largely devoted to the production of the Sotie, a kind of political comedy in which public characters and the manners of the day were turned to ridicule. The head of the "Care-for-Nothings" (sans souci) was called "The Prince of Fools" (Prince des Sots), an office held for years by Pierre Gringoire (c. 1475-1539). Cp. BASOCHIANS.

Sansel (sân' sâ). An American citizen whose grandparents were immigrants to the U.S.A.; from a Japanese word meaning "third generation". Cp. NISEI.

Santa Casa. See LORETO.

Santa Claus. A contraction of Santa Nikolaus (St. NICHOLAS), the patron saint of German children. His feast-day is 6 December, and the vigil is still held in some places, but for the most part his name is now associated with Christmas-tide. The custom used to be for someone, on 5 December, to assume the costume of a BISHOP, and distribute small gifts to "good children". The present custom, introduced into England from Germany about 1840, is to put toys and other small presents into a stocking late on CHRISTMAS Eve, when the children are asleep, and when they wake on Christmas morn they find at the bedside the gifts brought by Santa Claus, who supposedly travels around in a sleigh pulled by reindeer.

Santa Fe Trail, The. The wagon trail between Independence, Missouri, and Santa Fe, New Mexico, used by Missouri traders. The first wagon train traversed the trail in 1821-1822 and a steady trade in mules, furs, silver, etc., developed. For several years detachments of troops were used to protect the caravans against Indian attacks. The railway reached Santa Fe in 1880.

Sapho (sâf' ô). Mlle de Scudéry (1607-1701), the French novelist and poet, went by this name among her own circle.

Sappho (sâf' ô). The Greek poetess of Lesbos, known as "the Tenth MUSE". She lived about 600 B.C., and is fabled to have thrown herself into the sea from the Leucadian promontory in consequence of her advances having been rejected by the beautiful youth Phaon.

Pope used the name in his Moral Essays (II) for Lady Mary Wortley Montagu (cp. ATOSSA). See also SAPHO, above.

The Sappho of Toulouse. Clémence Isaure, a lady of Toulouse who composed an Ode to Spring and who is legendarily supposed to have founded and endowed the Jeux Floraux, the Toulouse Academy which gives an annual prize for poetry. In fact the Academy was founded by the TROUBADOURS in 1323 and originally known as the Consistoire du Gai Savoir.

Sapphics. A four-lined stanza-form of classical lyric poetry, named after SAPPHO of Lesbos, who employed it, the fourth line being an Adonic. There must be a cæsura after the fifth syllable of each of the first three lines which run thus:

— — | — — | — || — — | — — | — —

The Adonic is:

— — — | — — or — —

The first and third stanzas of the famous Ode of HORACE, Integer vitæ (i, 22), may be translated thus, preserving the metre:

He of sound life, who ne'er with singers wendeth,
Needs no Moorish bow, such as malice bendeth,
Nor with poisoned darts life from harm
defendeth,

Fuscus, believe me.

Once I, unarmed, was in a forest roaming,
Singing love lays, when i' the secret gloaming Rushed a huge wolf, which though in fury foaming,
Did not aggrieve me.

E.C.B.

Probably the best example of Sapphics in English is Canning's Needy Knife-grinder.

Sapphism. Another name for Lesbianism. See LESBIAN.

Saracen (sär' á sen) (Late Gr. Sarakenos, possibly from Arab. sharqui, an "oriental"). Applied to Arabs generally by mediæval writers, especially those of Syria and Palestine; also applied to all infidel nations who opposed the CRUSADERS. The name was given by the Greeks and Romans to the nomadic tribes of the Syro-Arabian desert.

Saragossa (sär á gos' á). The Maid of Saragossa. Agustina, a young Spanish girl (d. 1857) noted for her bravery in the defence of Saragossa against the French, 1808. She was only 22 when, her lover being shot, she mounted the battery in his place.

Sarah. The Divine Sarah. Sarah Bernhardt (1845-1923), French actress of international repute. Her original name was Rosine Bernard.

Saratoga Trunk (sär á tō' gá). A huge trunk, such as used to be taken by fashionable ladies to the watering place of that name in New York State.

Sarcenet. See SARSENET.

Sarcophagus (sar kof' á gus) (Gr. sarx, flesh; phagein, to eat). A stone coffin; so called because it was made of stone which, according to Pliny, consumed the flesh in a few weeks. The stone was sometimes called lapis Assius, because it was found at Assos in Lycia.

Sardanapalus. A name applied to any luxurious, extravagant, self-willed tyrant. It is the Greek name of Asurbanipal (mentioned in Ezra iv, 10, as Asnappar), king of Assyria in the 7th century B.C. Byron, in his poetic drama of the name, makes him a voluptuous tyrant whose effeminacy led Arbaces, the Mede, to conspire against him. Myrra, his favourite concubine, roused him to appear at the head of his armies. He won three successive battles, but was then defeated, and was induced by Myrra to place himself on a funeral pyre. She set fire to it, and jumping into the flames, perished with him.

Sardonic smile, or laughter. A smile of contempt; bitter, mocking laughter; so used by HOMER.

The Herba Sardomia (so called from Sardis, in Asia Minor) is so arid that it produces a convulsive movement of the nerves of the face, resembling a painful grin; but the word is probably Gr. sardamos, a bitter laugh.

Tis envy's safest, surest rule
To hide her rage in ridicule;
The vulgar eye the best beguiles
When all her snakes are decked with smiles,
Sardonic smiles by rancour raised.

SWIFT: Pheasant and Lark.

Sardonyx (sar' don iks). A precious stone composed of white chalcedony alternating with layers of sard, which is an orange-brown variety of cornelian. Pliny says it is called sard from Sardis, in Asia Minor, where it is found, and onyx, the nail, because its colour resembles that of the skin under the nail (Nat. Hist. xxxvii, 31).

Sarsen Stones (sar' sen). The sandstone boulders of Wiltshire and Berkshire are so called. The early Christian Saxons used the word Saresyn (i.e. SARACEN) as a synonym of pagan or heathen, and as these stones were popularly associated with DRUID worship, they were called Saresyn (or heathen) stones. Robert Ricart says of Duke Rollo, "He was a Saresyn come out of Denmark into France."

Sarsenet (sar' sen et). A very fine, soft, silk material, so called from its Saracenic or Oriental origin. The word is sometimes used adjectivally of soft and gentle speech.

Sassanides (säs án' i dēz). A powerful Persian dynasty, ruling from about A.D. 225 to 641; so named because Artashir, the founder, was son of Sassan, a lineal descendant of XERXES.

Sassenach (säs' nāk). The common form of Sassunnach, Gaelic for "English" or "an Englishman".

Satan (sā' tån), in Hebrew, means adversary or enemy, and is traditionally applied to the DEVIL, the personification of evil.

To whom the Arch-enemy
(And thence in heaven called Satan).
MILTON: Paradise Lost, Bk. I, 81.

He appears as the SERPENT, tempter of mankind in Gen. iii, 1, and the existence of Satan as the centre of evil is part of the teaching of both the Old and New Testament.

But when they have heard, Satan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was sown in their hearts.—Mark iv, 15.

The name is often used of a tempter or of a person of whom one is expressing abhorrence. Thus the Clown says to Malvolio:

Fie, thou dishonest Satan! I call thee by the most modest terms; for I am one of those gentle ones that will use the devil himself with courtesy.
SHAKESPEARE: Twelfth Night, IV, ii.

Satan rebuking sin. THE POT CALLING THE KETTLE BLACK (under POT).

The Satanic School. So Southey called BYRON, Shelley, and those of their followers who set at defiance the generally received notions of religion. See the Preface to his Vision of Judgment.

Satire (săt' ir). Scaliger's derivation from SATYR is quite untenable. It is Lat. satura (full of variety); originally lanx satura, a dish of varied fruits, a medley. The term was applied to a medley or hotchpotch in verse; later to compositions in verse or prose in which folly, vice, or individuals are held up to ridicule. See Dryden's Dedication prefixed to his Satires.

Father of Satire. Archilochus of Paros, 7th century B.C.

Father of French Satire. Mathurin Régnier (1573-1613).

Father of Roman Satire. Lucilius (c. 175-103 B.C.).

Lucilius was the man who, bravely bold,
To Roman vices did this mirror hold;
Protected humble goodness from reproach,
Showed worth on foot, and rascals in a coach.
DRYDEN: Art of Poetry, c. ii.

Saturday. The seventh day of the week; called by the Anglo-Saxons Sæterdæg, after the Latin Saturni dies, the day of SATURN. See BLACK SATURDAY.

Saturn (săt' ūrn). A Roman deity, identified with the Greek KRONOS (time). He devoured all his children except JUPITER (air), NEPTUNE (water), and PLUTO (the grave). These Time cannot consume. The reign of Saturn was celebrated by the poets as a "GOLDEN AGE". According to the old alchemists and astrologers Saturn typified lead, and was a very evil planet to be born under. He was the god of seedtime and harvest and his symbol was a scythe, and he was finally banished from his throne by his son Jupiter.

Saturn red. Red lead.

Saturn's tree. An alchemist's name for the Tree of DIANA, or PHILOSOPHER'S TREE.

Saturnalia. The ancient Roman festival of SATURN, celebrated on 19 December and eventually prolonged for seven days, was a time of freedom from restraint, merrymaking, and often riot and debauchery. During its continuance public business was suspended, the law courts and schools were closed and no criminals were punished.

Saturnian. Pertaining to Saturn; with reference to the "GOLDEN AGE", to the god's sluggishness, or to the baleful influence attributed to him by the astrologers.

Then rose the seed of Chaos and of Night
To blot out order and extinguish light.
Of dull and venal a new world to mould,
And bring Saturnian days of lead and gold.
POPE: Dunciad, IV, 13.

Saturnian verses. A rude metre in use among the Romans before the introduction of Greek metres. Also a peculiar metre consisting of three iambs and a syllable over, joined to three trochees, as:

The queen was in the par-lour . . .
The maids were in the garden. . .

The Fescennine and Saturnian were the same, for as they were called Saturnian from their ancientness, when Saturn reigned in Italy, they were called Fescennine, from Fescennia [sic] where they were first practised.

DRYDEN: Essay on Satire.

Saturnine. Grave, phlegmatic, gloomy, dull and glowering. Astrologers affirm that such is the disposition of those who are born under the influence of the leaden planet SATURN.

Satyr (săt' ir). One of a body of forest gods or demons who, in classical mythology, were the attendants of BACCHUS. Like the fauns, they are represented as having the legs and hind-quarters of a GOAT, budding horns, and goat-like ears, and they were very lascivious.

Hence, the term is applied to a brutish or lustful man; and the psychological condition among males characterized by excessive venereal desire is known as satyriasis.

Sauce (Lat. salsus) means "salted food", for giving a relish to meat, as pickled roots, herbs, etc.

In familiar usage it means "cheek", impertinence, of the sort one expects from an impudent youngster or saucebox. The sauce was better than the fish. The accessories were better than the main part.

To serve the same sauce. To retaliate; to give as good as you get; to serve in the same manner.

What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. The same principle applies in both cases; what is fitting for the husband, should be fitting for the wife.

Saucer. Originally a dish for holding sauce, the Roman salsarium.

Saucer eyes. Big, round, glaring eyes.

Yet when a child (good Lord!) I thought
That thou a pair of horns had'st got
With eyes like saucers staring.

PETER PINDAR: Ode to the Devil.

Saucer oath. When a Chinese is put in the witness-box, he says: "If I do not speak the truth may my soul be cracked and broken like this saucer." So saying, he dashes the saucer on the ground. The Jewish marriage custom of breaking a wineglass is of a similar character.

Flying saucers. Alleged mysterious objects resembling revolving, partially luminous discs that shoot across the sky at a high velocity and at a great height. "Flying saucers" have been reported on a number of occasions in recent years but their actuality remains as elusive as that of the LOCH NESS MONSTER. Cp. U.F.O.

Saul. Is Saul also among the prophets?

(I Sam. x, 11). Said of one who unexpectedly bears tribute to a party or doctrine that he has hitherto vigorously assailed. At the conversion of Saul, afterwards called Paul, the Jews said in substance, "Is it possible that Saul can be a convert?" (Acts ix, 21).

Sauve qui peut (sōv kē pèr) (Fr., save himself who can). One of the first uses of the phrase is by Boileau (1636-1711).

The phrase thus came to mean a rout. Thackeray (The Four Georges, ch. 41) writes of "that general sauve qui peut among the Tory party".

Save. To save appearances. To do something to obviate or prevent embarrassment or exposure.

Save the mark! See GOD BLESS under MARK.

To save one's bacon, skin, face. See under these words.

Savoir-faire (sāv' wa fâr) (Fr.). Readiness in doing the right thing; address, tact, skill.

Savoir-vivre (sāv' wa vèvr). Good breeding; being at ease in society and knowing what to do.

Savonarola. See WEEPERS.

Savoy, The. A precinct off the STRAND, London, between the present ADELPHI and the TEMPLE; so called after Peter of Savoy, the uncle of Henry III's queen, Eleanor. Henry granted it to Peter in 1245 and, after his departure in 1263, it became the residence of Eleanor of Castile, wife of Prince Edward (afterwards Edward I) and she later gave it to her second son, Edmund of Lancaster. On the accession of Henry IV in 1399, it was annexed to the crown as part of the estates of the Duchy of Lancaster. Most of the original buildings were destroyed by Wat Tyler's followers in 1381, but Henry VII bequeathed funds for reconstruction of the palace as a hospital for the poor under the name of St. John's Hospital. It became a military hospital, then a barracks under Charles II, but this was demolished with the construction of Rennie's Waterloo Bridge (1811-1817).

In the late 17th century, the Savoy precinct became a notorious ROOKERY for evil-doers claiming rights of SANC-TUARY (cp. ALSATIA). The Savoy Hotel and Savoy Theatre now occupy part of the area.

The Savoy Chapel was first built in 1505 and, after the destruction of St. Mary le Strand by Protector Somerset, became known as St. Mary le Savoy. It was repaired and restored several times in the 18th century and again by Queen Victoria in 1843 and 1864. In 1924 the dignity of Chapel Royal was withdrawn. Savoy Conference. After the RESTORATION, the conference at the Savoy (1661) between the BISHOPS and PRESBYTERIAN clergy to review the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER. It only resulted in minor changes which were included in the revised book of 1662. Most of the Presbyterian demands were rejected and attempts at comprehension came to naught.

Savoy Hill. The site of the first studios of the British Broadcasting Company (1922) and until 1932 the headquarters of the British Broadcasting Corporation, the original B.B.C. call sign being 2LO.

Savoy Operas. The comic operas with words by W. S. Gilbert (1836-1911) and music by Arthur Sullivan (1842-1900), produced by R. D'Oyly Carte; most of them first appeared at the Savoy Theatre which D'Oyly Carte built for these productions. The players performing in these operas were known as "Savoyards".

Saw. In Christian art an attribute of ST. SIMON and ST. JAMES THE LESS, in allusion to the tradition of their being sawn to death.

Sawbuck. In American usage, a ten-dollar bill; origin unknown.

Saxifrage (sàks' i frāj). A member of a genus of small plants (Saxifraga) probably so called because they grow in the clefts of rocks (Lat. saxum, a rock; frangere, to break). Pliny, and later writers following him, held that the name was due to the supposed fact that the plant had a medicinal value in the breaking up and dispersal of stone in the bladder.

Saxons. A Germanic people who invaded Britain in the late 5th and early 6th centuries; also the general name given by the Romans to the Teutonic raiders who from the 2nd century ravaged the coasts of Roman Britain. Essex, Sussex, Middlesex, and Wessex are names that commemorate their settlements.

Saxon Shore. The coast of Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, Kent, Sussex and Hampshire, fortified by the Romans against the attacks of Saxon and Frisian pirates, under the charge of the Count of the Saxon Shore (Comes Littoris Saxonici per Britanniam). His garrisons were at Brancaster (Branodunum) in Norfolk, Burgh Castle (Gariannonum) and Walton Castle in Suffolk; Bradwell (Othona) in Essex; Reculver (Regulbium), Richborough (Rutupia), Dover (Dubria), and Lympne (Portus Lemannis) on the Kent coast, Pevensey (Anderida) on the Sussex coast, and [?] Portchester (Portus Adurni) near Portsmouth.

Say. To take the say. To taste meat or wine before it is presented, in order to prove that it is not poisoned. Say is short for assay, a test; the phrase was common in the reign of Queen Elizabeth I.

Scævola (skē'vō lā) (Lat., left-handed). So Gaius Mucius and his house were called because he had burnt off his right hand. Purposing to kill Lars Porsena, who was besieging ROME, he entered that king's camp but slew Porsena's secretary by mistake. He was captured and taken before the king and sentenced to the flames. He deliberately held his hand over the sacrificial fire till it was destroyed to show the Etruscan he would not shrink from torture. This fortitude was so remarkable that Porsena at once ordered his release and made peace with the Romans.

Scales. From time immemorial the scales have been one of the principal attributes of Justice, it being impossible to outweigh even a little Right with any quantity of Wrong.

... first the right he put into the scale,
And then the Giant strove with puissance strong
To fill the other scale with so much wrong.
But all the wrongs that he therein could lay,
Might not it peise.

SPENSER: The Faerie Queene, V, ii, 46.

According to the KORAN, at the Judgment Day everyone will be weighed in the scales of the archangel GABRIEL. The good deeds will be put in the scale called "Light", and the evil ones in the scale called "Darkness", after which they have to cross the bridge AL-SIRAT, not wider than the edge of a scimitar. The faithful will pass over in safety, but the rest will fall into the dreary realms of GEHENNAM.

To hold the scales even, or true.
To judge impartially.

King Providence attends with generous aid . . .
And weighs the nations in an even scale.
COWPER: Table Talk, 251.

The scales fell from his eyes. The cause of his inability to recognise the truth having been removed, he now saw the facts clearly. Scale here is the shell or thin covering, a scab; it is cognate with the scale or dish of a balance.

After Ananias put his hands on Saul (ST. PAUL) we are told:

And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales; and he received sight forthwith.
ACTS ix, 18.

To turn the scale. Just to outweigh the other side.

Thy presence turns the scale of doubtful fight,
Tremendous God of battles, Lord of Hosts!
WORDSWORTH: Ode (1815), 112.

Scallop shell. The emblem of St. JAMES of Compostela, adopted, says Erasmus, because the shore of the adjacent sea abounds in them; also the emblem of the pilgrims to his shrine and of mediæval pilgrims generally. See COCKLE HAT.

Give me my scallop-shell of quiet,
My staff of faith to walk upon,
My scrip of joy, immortal diet,
My bottle of salvation,
My gown of glory, hope's true gage,
And thus I'll take my pilgrimage.
SIR WALTER RALEIGH: The Pilgrimage.

Scalp Lock. A long lock of hair allowed to grow on the scalp by men of certain North American Indian tribes as a challenge to their scalp-hunting enemies.

Scambling Days. See SKIMBLE-SKAMBLE.

Scamozzi's Rule (skā mo' ziz). The jointed two-foot rule used by builders, and said to have been invented by Vincenzo Scamozzi (1552-1616), the famous Italian architect.

Scandal (Gr. skandalōn) means properly a pitfall or snare laid out for an enemy; hence a stumbling-block, and morally an aspersion.

In Matt. xiii, 41-2, we are told that the angels "shall gather all things that offend . . . and shall cast them into a furnace"; here the Greek word is skandalon, and scandals is given as an alternative in the margin; the REVISED VERSION renders the word "all things that cause stumbling". Cp. also I Cor. i, 23.

The Hill of Scandal. So Milton (Paradise Lost, I, 415) calls the Mount of Olives, because King SOLOMON built thereon "an high place for Chemosh, the abomination of the children of Ammon" (IKings xi, 7).

Scandal broth. Tea. The reference is to the gossip held by some of the women-folk over their tea. Also called "chatter-broth".

Scandalum Magnatum (skån' dá lum mág ná' túm) (Lat., scandal of magnates). Words in derogation of the Crown, PEERS, judges, and other great officers of the realm, made a legal offence in the time of Richard II. What St. PAUL calls "speaking evil of dignities"; popularly contracted to scarmag.

Scanderbeg. A name given by the Turks to George Castriota (1403-1468), the patriot chief of Epirus. The name is a corruption of Iskander (Alexander) beg or bey.

Scanderbeg's sword must have Scanderbeg's arm. None but ULYSSES can draw Ulysses' bow. MOHAMMED I wanted to see Scanderbeg's scimitar, but when presented no one could draw it; whereupon the Turkish emperor, deeming himself imposed upon, sent it back; Scanderbeg replied he had sent his majesty his sword, not the arm that drew it.

Scapegoat. Part of the ancient ritual among the Hebrews for the DAY OF ATONEMENT laid down by Mosaic Law (see Lev. xvi) was as follows: two goats were brought to the altar of the TABERNACLE and the high priest cast lots, one for the Lord, and the other for AZAZEL. The Lord's goat was sacrificed, the other was the scapegoat; and the high priest having, by confession, transferred his own sins and the sins of the people to it, it was taken to the wilderness and suffered to escape.

Scaphism (skā' fizm) (Gr. skaphe, anything scooped out). A mode of torture formerly practised in Persia. The victim was enclosed in the hollowed trunk of a tree, the head, hands, and legs projecting. These were anointed with honey to invite the wasps. In this situation the sufferer must linger in the burning sun for several days.

Scarab (scá' ráb). A trinket in the form of a dung-beetle, especially Scarabæus sacer. It originated in ancient Egypt as an AMULET, being made of polished or glazed stone, metal, or glazed faience, and was perforated lengthwise for suspension. By the XIIIth Dynasty, scarabs became used as seals, worn as pendants, or mounted on signet rings. The insect was supposed to conceal in itself the secret of eternal life, since the scarab was believed to be only of the male sex, hence their use as amulets. They are still the most popular of Egyptian souvenirs.

Scaramouch (skår' á mouch). The English form of Ital. Scaramuccia (through Fr. Scaramouche), a stock character in old Italian farce, introduced into England soon after 1670. He was a braggart and fool, very valiant in words, but a POLTROON, and was usually dressed in a black Spanish costume caricaturing the dons. The Neapolitan actor Tiberio Fiorelli (1608-1694) was surnamed Scaramouch Fiorelli. He came to England in 1673, and astonished JOHN BULL with feats of agility.

Stout Scaramoucha with rush lance rode in,
And ran a tilt at centaur Arlequin.
DRYDEN: Epilogue to the University of Oxford.

Scarborough Warning. No warning at all; blow first, warning after. In Scarborough robbers were said to be dealt with in a very summary manner by a sort of HALIFAX GIBBET-LAW, LYNCH LAW, or an à la lanterne. (See under LANTERN.)

Fuller says that the expression arose from Thomas Stafford's unexpected seizure of Scarborough Castle in 1557, but the phrase occurs earlier than this.

Scarlet. The colour of certain official costumes as those of judges, CARDINALS, holders of certain academic qualifications, etc.; hence sometimes applied to these dignitaries. Cp. PINK; PURPLE.

Dyeing scarlet. Heavy drinking, which in time will dye the face scarlet.

They call drinking deep, dyeing scarlet.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, II, iv.

Scarlet Hat. A CARDINAL; from his once traditional red hat.

The Scarlet Lancers. The 16th Lancers, whose tunic was red. Now the 16th/5th The Queen's Royal Lancers. They were the only Lancer regiment to retain the DRAGOON's scarlet tunic in the latter half of the 19th century.

Scarlet Letter. In the early days in Puritan New England a scarlet "A" for "adulteress" used to be branded or sewn on a guilty woman's dress.

She turned her eyes downwards at the scarlet letter, and even touched it with her finger, to assure herself that the infant and the shame was real.

HAWTHORNE: The Scarlet Letter, ch. II.

Scarlet Pimpernel. A plant of the primrose family, Angallis arvensis. The hero of Baroness Orczy's novel, The Scarlet Pimpernel (1905), and of several others in the series, took his nickname from the use of the pimpernel as his emblem.

The Scarlet Woman, or Scarlet Whore. The woman seen by St. JOHN in his vision "arrayed in purple and scarlet colour", sitting "upon a scarlet coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns", "drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs", upon whose forehead was written "Mystery, Babylon the Great, The Mother of Harlots and Abominations of The Earth" (Rev. xvii, 1-6).

St. John was probably referring to ROME, which, at the time he was writing, was "drunken with the blood of the saints"; some controversial PROTESTANTS have applied the words to the Church of Rome, and some ROMAN CATHOLICS to the Protestant churches generally.

Will Scarlet. One of the companions of ROBIN HOOD.

Scat singing. In JAZZ a form of singing without words, using the voice as a musical instrument. Said to have been started by Louis Armstrong in the 1920s when he forgot the words or dropped the paper on which they were written while singing a number; Jelly Roll Morton, on the other hand, claimed to have sung scat as early as 1906.

Scavenger's Daughter. An instrument of torture invented by Sir Leonard Skevington, Lieutenant of the TOWER in the reign of Henry VIII. The machine compressed the body by bringing the head to the knees, and so forced blood out of the nose and ears.

Scent. We are not yet on the right scent. We have not yet got the right clue. The allusion is to dogs following game by scent.

Sceptic (skep' tik) literally means one who thinks for himself, and does not receive on another's testimony (from Gr. skeptesthai, to examine). Pyrrho founded the philosophic sect called "Sceptics", and Epictetus combated their dogmas. In theology we apply the word to those who do not accept revelation. See PYRRHONISM.

Sceptre (sep' ter) (Gr., a staff). The GOLD and jewelled wand carried by a SOVEREIGN as emblem of royalty; hence, royal authority and dignity.

This wand was made to handle nought but gold:
I cannot give due action to my words,
Except a sword, or sceptre, balance it.
A sceptre shall it have, have I a soul,
On which I'll toss the flower-de-luce of France.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. II, V, i.

The sceptre of the kings and emperors of ROME was of ivory, bound with gold and surmounted by a golden eagle; the British sceptre is of richly jewelled gold, and bears immediately beneath the cross and ball the great CULLINAN DIAMOND.

HOMER says that AGAMEMNON's sceptre was made by VULCAN, who gave it to the son of SATURN. It passed successively to JUPITER, MERCURY, PELOPS, Atreus and THYESTES till it came to Agamemnon. It was looked on with great reverence, and several miracles were attributed to it.

Schadenfreude (sha' den froi dē) (Ger.). A malicious delight in the bad luck of others (Schade, damage, Freude, joy).

Scheherazade (she hēr' à zād). The mouth-piece of the tales related in the ARABIAN NIGHTS, daughter of the grand VIZIER of the Indies. The SULTAN Schahriah, having discovered the infidelity of his sultana, resolved to have a fresh wife every night and have her strangled at daybreak. Scheherazade entreated to become his wife, and so amused him with tales for a thousand and one nights that he revoked his cruel decree, bestowed his affection on her, and called her "the liberator of the sex".

I had noticed that the young girl—the story writer, our Scheherazade, as I called her—looked as if she had been crying or lying awake half the night.

O. W. HOLMES:

The Poet at the Breakfast-table, ch. iii.

Schellhorn's Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Schiedam (skī dām'). Hollands gin, so called from Schiedam, a town where it is principally manufactured.

Schism, The Great. The split in the CATHOLIC CHURCH when there were rival popes at Avignon and ROME. It began in 1378 and ended in 1417. After the death of Gregory XI, the last of the AVIGNON POPES proper, Urban VI (1378-1389) alienated the French cardinals and their adherents, and they established an anti-pope, Clement VII, at Anagni. Clement soon retired to Avignon with his supporters, where the ANTI-POPE remained until the schism ended.

Schlemihl, Peter (shlem' il). The man who sold his shadow to the DEVIL, in Chamisso's tale so called (1814). The name is a synonym for any person who makes a desperate and silly bargain.

Scholasticism. The term usually denotes the philosophy and doctrines of the mediæval SCHOOLMEN from the 9th to the early 15th century. It was very much concerned with applying Aristotelian logic to Christian theology. On the whole, reason took second place to faith and the apparent reconciliation and harmony between the two established by St. THOMAS AQUINAS in his Summa Theologica was undermined by Duns Scotus and WILLIAM OF OCCAM. Scholasticism owed much of its decline to its own internal quibblings, verbal subtleties, and intellectual exhaustion, but it never completely lost its vitality and still attracts theologians, especially in the ROMAN CATHOLIC Church. Cp. NOMINALISM; REALISM; DIALECTIC.

Schoolboards. The name given to the special local committees elected under Forster's Education Act of 1870 to administer the elementary schools set up under the Act, hence the term BOARD SCHOOLS. Schoolboards were abolished by the Balfour Act of 1902 and their work was taken over by education committees of the various local government authorities.

Schoolgirl. That schoolgirl complexion. A popular phrase used in compliment or in jest which owes its familiarity to its long use in advertisements for a well-known soap.

Schoolmaster. The schoolmaster is abroad. Education is spreading and it will bear fruit. Lord Brougham, a champion of popular education, said in a speech to the HOUSE OF COMMONS (1828) on the general diffusion of education, and of the intelligence arising therefrom, "Let the soldier be abroad, if he will; he can do nothing in this age. There is another personage abroad . . . the schoolmaster is abroad, and I trust to him, armed with his primer, against the soldier in full military array." It must be noted that the phrase lends itself to ironical usage to explain a state of ignorance.

Schoolmen. The name given to the teachers of philosophy and theology who lectured in the ecclesiastical schools attached to certain abbeys and cathedrals as instituted by CHARLEMAGNE, and in the mediæval universities (see SCHOLASTICISM). Among the most famous are:

- Flaccus Albinus Alcuin (c. 735-804).
- John Scotus Erigena (c. 810-c. 877).
- Gerbert of Aurillac (940-1003), Pope Sylvester II (999-1003).
- Berengar of Tours (999-1088).
- Lanfranc (c. 1005-1098), Archbishop of Canterbury (1070-1089).
- Anselm (c. 1033-1109), Archbishop of Canterbury and Doctor Scholasticus.
- Roscellinus of Compiègne (d. c. 1125).
- Peter ABELARD (1079-1142).

Peter Lombard (c. 1100-1160). Master of the Sentences.

John of Salisbury (c. 1115-1180).

Alain de Lille (c. 1128-1203). Doctor Universalis.

Alexander of Hales (c. 1170-1245). Doctor Irrefragabilis.

Albertus Magnus (c. 1200-1280).

Giovanni di Fidanza Bonaventure (1221-1274). Doctor Seraphicus.

THOMAS AQUINAS (1224-1274). Doctor Angelicus.

Johannes Duns Scotus (c. 1264-1308). Doctor Subtilis (see DUNCE).

Durandus de Saint-Pourçain (c. 1270-1332). Doctor Resolutissimus.

Thomas Bradwardine (1290-1349), Archbishop of Canterbury, Doctor Profundus.

Jean Buridan (c. 1295-c. 1367).

Gregory of Rimini (d. 1358). Doctor Authenticus.

Robert Holcot (d. 1349). English Dominican theologian.

Raymond Lully (1235-c. 1315). Doctor Illuminatus.

WILLIAM OF OCCAM (c. 1300-c. 1349). Doctor Invincibilis.

School-pence. The small weekly sum paid for tuition in elementary schools. The Education Act of 1870 limited them to ninepence per week and a permissive Act of 1891, giving parents the right to claim free education for their children, practically resulted in their abolition, but such fees were not legally abolished until 1918.

If a child came to school one Monday morning without the school-pence, what was the teacher to do?

ODGERS AND NALDRETT:
Local Government, ch. vii.

Schooner (skoo' ner). In the U.S.A. a tall glass for beer, etc.; it is also applied to a standard pint-size beer glass in Australia.

Prairie schooner. A name given to the large covered wagon in which American pioneers moved west across the prairies in the mid-19th century.

Science. Literally "knowledge", it is Lat. scientia from scire, to know. SHAKESPEARE uses it in this old, wide meaning:

Plutus himself,
That knows the tinct and multiplying medicine,
Hath not in nature's mystery more science
Than I have on this ring.

All's Well That Ends Well, V, iii.

The Science. Pugilism.

The Dismal Science. Economics, so named by Carlyle:

The social science—not a “gay science”, but a rueful—which finds the secret of this Universe in “supply and demand” . . . what we might call, by way of eminence, the dismal science.

CARLYLE: On the Nigger Question (1849).

The Gay Science. See under GAY.

Natural Science. Empirical science as distinct from mathematics, logic, mental and moral science, etc. Its general principles are commonly called “the laws of nature”.

The Noble Science. Boxing, or fencing; the “noble art of self-defence”.

The Seven Sciences, or Seven Liberal Sciences. The same as the Seven Liberal Arts. See QUADRIVIUM.

Science Persecuted. Anaxagoras of Clazomenæ (d. c. 430 B.C.) held opinions in NATURAL SCIENCE (see above) so far in advance of his age that he was accused of impiety and condemned to death. Pericles, with great difficulty, got his sentence commuted to fine and banishment.

Galileo (1564–1642) was imprisoned by the INQUISITION for maintaining that the earth moved, but recanted to gain his liberty. See BPPUR SI MUOVE.

Roger Bacon (c. 1214–1294) was excommunicated and imprisoned for diabolical knowledge, chiefly on account of his chemical researches. Dr. DEE was imprisoned under Queen Mary for using enchantments to compass the Queen's death. Averroes, the Arabian philosopher, who flourished in the 12th century, was denounced as a lunatic and degraded solely on account of his great eminence in natural philosophy and medicine.

Scio's Blind Old Bard (si' o). HOMER. Scio is the modern name of Chios, in the Ægean Sea, one of the “seven cities” that claimed the honour of being his birthplace.

Smyrna, Chios, Colophon, Salamis, Rhodos, Argos, Athenæ,
Your just right to call Homer your son you must settle between ye.

Scire facias (si' re fā' si ás) (Lat., make [him] to know). A writ founded upon record (i.e. judgment, letters PATENT, etc.) directing the SHERIFF to make known (scire facias) to the person against whom it is brought to show cause why the person bringing the writ should not have the benefit of the record. It is now largely obsolete.

Sciron (si' ron). A robber of Greek legend, slain by THESEUS. He infested the parts about Megara, and forced travellers over the rocks into the sea, where they were devoured by a sea monster.

Scissors. Scissors and paste. Compilation as distinct from original literary work. The allusion is obvious.

Scissors to grind. Work to do; purpose to serve. I have my own scissors to grind is a way of saying, “I've got my own work to do, or my own troubles, and can't be bothered with yours.”

Scogan's jests (skō' gán). A popular jest-book in the 16th century, said by Andrew Boorde (who published it) to be the work of one John Scogan, reputed to have been court fool to Edward IV. He is referred to (anachronously) by Justice Shallow in Henry IV, Pt. II, III, ii, and must not be confused with Henry Scogan (d. 1407), the poet-disciple of Chaucer to whom Ben Jonson alludes:

Scogan? What was he?

Oh, a fine gentleman, and a master of arts
Of Henry the Fourth's times, that made disguises
For the king's sons, and writ in ballad royal Daintily well.

The Fortunate Isles (1642).

Sconce (skons). A word with several meanings: a lantern, a candlestick, a wall candle-bracket for one or more candles (from O. Fr. esconse, lantern); a small fortified earthwork or fort (from Dut. schans, a fort); also a noun meaning a fire, and a verb meaning to mulct (derivation uncertain).

To be sconced. At Oxford, to pay a forfeit of ale to the company for a breach of table etiquette. Formerly, university officials imposed sconces or fines for breaches of discipline.

To build up a sconce. To incur or run-up a bill and dodge payment; to defraud.

Scone (skoon). The Stone of Scone. The great coronation stone, the Stone of Destiny, on which the Scottish kings were formerly crowned at Scone, near Perth. It was removed by Edward I in 1296 and brought to Westminster Abbey, and has ever since been housed under the Chair of St. Edward. It was stolen on the night of 24–25 December 1950, but restored to its place in February 1952.

It is also, traditionally, called JACOB'S STONE. It is of reddish-grey sandstone and is fabled to have been once kept at Dunstaffnage in Argyll and removed to Scone by Kenneth MacAlpin in 843. Cp. TANIST STONE.

Scorched Earth Policy. A policy of burning and destroying crops and anything that may be of use to an invading force.

Score. Twenty; a reckoning; to make a reckoning; so called from the custom of marking off "runs" or "lengths" in games by the score feet.

To pay off old scores. To settle accounts; used sometimes of money debts, but usually in the sense of revenging an injury, "getting even" with one.

Scorpio, Scorpion (skôr' pi ð). Scorpio is the eighth sign of the ZODIAC, which the sun enters about 24 October. ORION had boasted that he could kill any animal the earth produced. A scorpion was sent to punish his vanity and it stung Orion to death. JUPITER later raised the scorpion to HEAVEN.

Fable has it that scorpions (Cp. THE TOAD) carry with them an oil which is a remedy against their stings.

'Tis true, a scorpion's oil is said
To cure the wounds the venom made,
And weapons dress'd with salves restore
And heal the hurts they gave before.

BUTLER: Hudibras, III, ii, 1029.

The oil was extracted from the flesh and given to the sufferer as a medicine; it was also supposed to be very useful to bring away the descending stone of the kidneys. Another belief was that if a scorpion was surrounded by a circle of fire it would sting itself to death with its own tail. Byron, in the Giaour (I.422), extracts a simile from the legend:

The mind that broods o'er guilty woes
Is like the Scorpion girt by fire; . . .
One sad and sole relief she knows,
The sting she nourished for her foes,
Whose venom never yet was vain,
Gives but one pang, and cures all pain.

A lash, or scourge of scorpions. A specially severe punishment, in allusion to the Biblical passage:

My father hath chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

I Kings xii, 11.

In the MIDDLE AGES a scourge of four or five thongs set with steel spikes and leaden weights was called a scorpion.

Scot. Payment, reckoning. The same word as SHOT; we still speak of paying one's shot.

Scot and lot. The rough equivalent of the modern rates, i.e. payments by householders for local and national purposes. They became in due course a qualification for the franchise. Scot is the tax and lot the allotment or portion allotted. Scot came from the Old Norse skot, a contribution, corresponding to O.E. sceot. Cp. CHURCH SCOT.

To go scot-free. To be let off payment; to escape payment or punishment, etc.

Scotch, Scots, Scottish. These three adjectives all mean belonging to, native of, or characteristic of SCOTLAND, but their application varies and the Scots usually prefer Scottish rather than Scotch, which is applied to whisky and A Scotch breakfast, a substantial meal of sundry good things to eat and drink. Scotch, however, is a proper English word for the Scottish.

Broad Scotch (Braid Scots). The vernacular of the lowlands of SCOTLAND; very different from the enunciation of Edinburgh and from the peculiarity of the Glasgow dialect.

A Scotch mist. A thick fog with, drizzling rain, as common in Scotland.

Scotch Plot. An alleged conspiracy, called the Queensberry Plot in SCOTLAND, for a JACOBITE rising and invasion of Scotland in 1703. Simon Fraser, Lord Lovat, after intriguing at St. Germain and VERSAILLES, returned to Scotland with a letter from Mary of Modena (James II's widow) to be delivered to an unnamed nobleman. He addressed it to John Murray, Duke of Atholl, his personal enemy, and then took it to the Duke of Queensberry, Atholl's rival in the Scottish Ministry. This broke up the ministry and drove Atholl over to the Jacobites. It led to disputes between the English and Scottish parliaments but no punitive action was taken.

Scotch-Irish. The American name for the PRESBYTERIAN immigrants from ULSTER who mainly settled in Pennsylvania and the Carolinas during the 18th century. The name derives from the Scottish ancestry of the Ulstermen.

A pound Scots. English and Scottish coins were of equal value until 1355 after which the Scottish coinage steadily depreciated, and when James VI of SCOTLAND became James I of ENGLAND (1603) the pound Scots was worth 1s. 8d., one-twelfth the value of an English pound. A pound Scots was divided into 20 Scots shillings each worth an English penny. The Scottish Mint closed in 1709.

The Scots Greys. See GREYS under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

A Scots pint was about equivalent to three English imperial pints.

Scotch. To make a scotch is to cut with shallow incisions, to slash. SHAKESPEARE'S Macbeth (III, ii) has, "We have scotch'd the snake, not killed it", but in the 1st Folio the word appears as scorch'd. Isaac Walton's Compleat Angler tells us that to dress a chub, "Give him three or four scotches or cuts on the back with your knife, and boil him on charcoal." The derivation of the word is uncertain. Out of all scotch and notch. Beyond all bounds; scotch was the line marked upon the ground in certain games, as hopscotch.

The word scotch is also applied to a wedge or block placed under a wheel, etc., to prevent it moving.

Scotists (skō' tists). Followers of Duns Scotus (see DUNCE), who maintained the doctrine of the IMMACULATE CONCEPTION in opposition to THOMAS AQUINAS.

Scotland. St. ANDREW is the patron saint of Scotland and tradition says that his remains were brought by Regulus (St. RULE) to the coast of Fife in 368.

The old royal arms of Scotland were: Or, a lion rampant gules, armed and langued azure, within a double tressure flory counter-flory of fleur-de-lis of the second. Crest. An imperial crown proper, surmounted by a lion sejant affronté gules crowned or, holding in his dexter paw a naked sword and in the sinister a sceptre both proper. Supporters. Two UNICORNS argent, armed, crined, and unguled or, imperially crowned, gorged with open crowns with chains reflexed over the back of the last; the dexter supporting a banner charged with the arms of Scotland, the sinister supporting a similar banner azure, thereupon a saltire argent. Mottoes. NEMO ME IMPUNE LACESSIT and over the crest In Defens.

In Scotland now, the royal arms of Great Britain are used with certain alterations; the collar of the THISTLE encircles that of the GARTER, the Scottish crest takes the place of the English, and the unicorn supporter crowned and gorged takes precedence of the lion (see HERALDRY).

The last Scottish coronation was that of Charles II at SCONE, 1 January 1651.

Scotland Yard. As commonly used it denotes the Criminal Investigation Department of the Metropolitan Police; from the fact that Great Scotland Yard, WHITEHALL, was the headquarters of the Metropolitan Police from c. 1842 to 1891 and thereafter New Scotland Yard, Parliament Street, until 1967 when "Scotland Yard" was transferred to Broadway, WESTMINSTER. The name of the original Scotland Yard comes from the fact that it was the residence of the kings of Scotland when they came to London.

To call in Scotland Yard, or the Yard. To summon the aid of the C.I.D. at Metropolitan Police Headquarters, the centre of crime detection.

Norris was already at the factory when the Yard men arrived and reported that Holman was in the building and had been at work for about half an hour.

JOSEPHINE BELL:
The Port of London Murders, ch. XI.

Scotus, Duns. See DUNCE; SCOTISTS.

Scourge. A whip or lash; commonly applied to disease that carry off great numbers, as "the scourge of influenza", etc., and to persons who seem to be the instruments of divine punishment, etc. Spenser, in his Sonnet upon Scanderbeg, calls him "The Scourge of the Turkes and plague of infidels".

The Scourge of God (Lat. flagellum Dei). ATTLA (d. 453), king of the HUNS, so called by mediæval writers because of the widespread havoc and destruction caused by his armies.

The Scourge of Homer. The carping critic ZOILUS.

The Scourge of Princes. Pietro Aretino (1492-1556), the Italian satirist.

Scouse (skous). A name applied to a native of the port of Liverpool; also to Liverpoolian speech and mannerisms. The word is the shortened form of labscouse, a sailor's name for a stew, particularly of meat, vegetables, and ship's biscuit.

Scout. This word comes from the old French escoute, a spy or eavesdropper, akin to the modern French écouter, to listen. It is applied to an individual, an aeroplane, warship, etc., sent to observe enemy movements or to obtain information. In the early days of CRICKET, the fielders were called scouts; college servants at Oxford are still called scouts; and it was also used for a member of the BOY SCOUTS whose association is now officially called the Scout Association.

Scowerers. A set of rakes (c. 1670-1720), who with the Nickers (see NICK) and MOHOCKS, committed great annoyances in London and other large towns.

Who has not heard the Scowerers' midnight fame?
Who has not trembled at Mohocks' name?
Was there a watchman took his hourly rounds,
Safe from their blows and new-invented wounds?
GAY: Trivia, III, 325.

Scrap. The Scrap of Paper. The Treaty of 1839 maintaining the independence of Belgium; signed by Lord Palmerston for Great Britain; Count Sebastiani for France; Baron Bulow for Prussia; Count Pozzi di Borgo for Russia; Count Senfft for Austria; and M. Van de Weyer for Belgium. It was this treaty that the Germans violated when they invaded Belgium in August 1914. This brought Great Britain into the struggle and the German Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg declared that Great Britain had entered the war "just for a scrap of paper".

Scrape. Bread and scrape. Bread and butter with the butter spread very thinly. I've got into a bad scrape. An awkward predicament, an embarrassing difficulty.

To scrape along. To get along in the world with difficulty, finding it hard to "make both ends meet".

To scrape an acquaintance with. To get on terms of familiarity with by currying favour and by methods of insinuation. The Gentleman's Magazine (N.S. xxxix, 230), says that Hadrian went one day to the public baths and saw an old soldier, well known to him, scraping himself with a potsherd for want of a flesh-brush. The emperor sent him a sum of money. Next day Hadrian found the bath crowded with soldiers scraping themselves with potsherds, and said, "Scrape on, gentlemen, but you'll not scrape acquaintance with me."

To scrape through. To pass an examination, etc., "by the skin of one's teeth", just to escape failure.

Scratch. There are two colloquial sporting uses of this word: (1) a horse or other entrant in a race or sporting event when withdrawn is said to be scratched; (2) a person starting from scratch in a sporting event is one starting from the usual starting point (i.e. the line marked—originally scratched out), whereas his fellow competitors would be starting ahead of him with handicaps awarded to their respective merits. In golf the term par is used instead of scratch. To start from scratch in general usage means to start from nothing or without particular advantages.

Scratch cradle. Another form of CAT'S CRADLE. See under CAT.

A scratch crew, side, etc. One scraped together ad hoc; not a regular team.

Old Scratch. OLD NICK (see under NICK), the DEVIL. From skratia, an old Scandinavian word for a GOBLIN or monster (modern Icelandic skratti, a devil).

A scratch race. A race of horses, men, boys, etc., without restrictions as to age, weight, previous winnings, etc., who all start from scratch.

To come up to (the) scratch. To be ready or good enough in any test; to make the grade. Under the London Prize Ring Rules, introduced in 1839, a round in a prize fight ended when one of the fighters was knocked down. After a 30-second interval this fighter was allowed eight seconds in which to make his way unaided to a mark scratched in the centre of the ring; if he failed to do so, he "had not come up to scratch" and was declared beaten.

Screw. Slang for wages, salary; possibly because in some employments it was handed out "screwed up in paper" or because it was "screwed out" of one's employer; it is also slang for a prison warder, from the days when the locks were operated with a screw-like movement.

An old screw. A skinflint; a miser who has amassed his wealth by "putting on the screw" (see below), and who keeps his money tight.

He has a screw loose. He is not quite "all there", "he's a little touched" or mad. His mind, like a piece of machinery, is in need of adjustment.

His head is screwed on the right way. He is clear-headed and right-thinking; he knows what he's about.

There's a screw loose somewhere All is not quite right, there's something amiss. A figurative phrase from machinery, where one screw not tightened up may be the cause of a disaster.

To put on the screw. A phrase surviving from the days when the thumb-screw was used as a form of torture to extract confessions or money. To press for payment, as a screw presses by gradually increasing pressure. Hence to apply the screw, to give the screw another turn, to take steps (or additional steps) to enforce one's demands.

To screw oneself up to it. To force oneself to face it, etc.; to get oneself into the right frame of mind for doing some unpleasant or difficult job.

Screw-ball. A colloquial term for an erratic, eccentric, or unconventional person. It is also a baseball term for a ball pitched to break with a particular kind of slant away from the apparent curve of flight.

Screwed. Intoxicated. A playful synonym of tight.

The Screw Plot. The story is that before Queen Anne went to St. Paul's in 1708 to offer thanksgiving for the victory of Oudenarde, conspirators removed certain screw-bolts from the roof beams of the cathedral that the fabric might fall on the queen and her suite and kill them. In fact it appears that certain iron fastenings were omitted by one of the workmen as he thought the timbers were already sufficiently secured.

Scribe, in the New Testament, means a Jewish doctor of the law, and Scribes were generally coupled with the PHARISEES as upholders of the ancient ceremonial tradition. In Matt. xxii, 35, we read, "then one of them, which was a lawyer, asked Him . . . which is the great commandment in the law?" Mark (xii, 28) says, "And one of the scribes came, and . . . asked him, Which is the first commandment of all?"

In the Old Testament the word has a wider application. In II Sam. viii, 17, it is used in the sense of "secretary", and again in Jer. xxxvi, 10, 12, 20, 21, etc. In II Kings xxv, 19, it applied to the military muster-master and Is. xxxiii, 18, a tax-official, etc. More commonly it denotes those occupied in literary study, copying, and editing of the Scripture, and especially of the Law, this being akin to the New Testament usage.

Scriblerus, Martinus (mar ti nûs skrib lër' ús). A merciless satire on the false taste in literature current in the time of Pope, for the most part written by Arbuthnot, and published in 1741. Cornelius Scriblerus, the father of Martin, was a pedant, who entertained all sorts of absurdities about the education of his son. Martin grew up a man of capacity; but though he had read everything, his judgment was vile and taste atrocious. Pope, Swift, and Arbuthnot founded a Scriblerus Club with the object of pillorying all literary incompetence.

Scrimshaw. A word from sailing ship days (derivation unknown) applied to carved or scratched engraving on shells, bone, ivory, etc., to while away the time at sea. To scrimshaw is to make any ingenious useful article on shipboard.

Scriptores Decem (skrip tór' êz dê' sem). A collection of ten ancient chronicles on English history edited by Sir Roger Twysden (1597-1672) and published in 1652 as Historiæ Anglicanæ Scriptores Decem with the "Glossary" of William Somner, the first Anglo-Saxon word-list. The chroniclers are Simeon of Durham, John of Hexham, Richard of Hexham, Ailred of Rieval, Ralph de Diceto (Archdeacon of London), John Brompton of Jorval, Gervase of Canterbury, Thomas Stubbs, William Thorn of Canterbury, and Henry Knighton of Leicester.

Thomas Gale (c. 1635-1702) published a similar collection of five chronicles, Historiæ Anglicanæ, Scriptores Quinque in 1687, and in 1691 Historiæ Britannicæ Saxonicæ Danicæ Scriptores Quindecim.

Scriptorium (skrip tór' i ùm) (Lat. from scriptus, past part. of scribere, to write). A writing-room, especially the chamber set apart in the mediæval monasteries for the copying of MSS., etc. Sir James Murray (1837-1915) gave the name to the corrugated-iron outhouse in his garden at Mill Hill, in which he started the great New English Dictionary.

Scriptures, The, or Holy Scripture (Lat. scriptura, a writing). The BIBLE; hence applied allusively to the sacred writings of other creeds, as the KORAN, the Scripture of the Mohammedans, the VEDAS and ZEND-AVESTA, of the Hindus and Persians, etc.

Scripturists. A name given to the Karaites ("Readers of the Scripture"), those Jewish literalists who kept Biblical injunctions, etc., to the letter. For them "an eye for an eye" meant just this, and "Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the sabbath day" (Exod. xxxv, 3) left them to shiver in the winter. The movement began in the 8th century under Anan ben David, and spread from Babylonia to Persia and Egypt. Its decline set in from the 10th century, although it has lingered on in isolated pockets.

Scruple. The name of the weight (20 grains, or $\frac{1}{4}$ oz.), and the term for doubt or hesitation (as in a scruple of conscience), both come from Lat. scrupulus, meaning a sharp little pebble, such as will cause great uneasiness if it gets into one's shoe. The second is the figurative use; with the name of the little weight compare that of the big one—stone.

Scullabogue. The Barn of Scullabogue, (skùl á bôg). In the Irish rebellion of 1798 which largely degenerated into a war between CATHOLICS and PROTESTANTS, revenge was taken after the repulse of the rebels at New Ross. The barn at Scullabogue, containing over 180 Protestant loyalists, was set on fire and all its inmates perished.

Scunner. A Scottish term for a feeling of distaste amounting almost to loathing. To take a scunner at something is to conceive a violent dislike to it.

Scurry. In horse-racing, a SCRATCH RACE for inferior mounts, etc.; a short, quick race.

Hurry-scurry. A confused bustle through lack of time; in a confused bustle. A RICOCHET word.

Scutage (skū' tij), or Escuage. In feudal times, a payment in commutation of KNIGHT-SERVICE (i.e. military service). It developed after the Norman CONQUEST but the term, from Lat. scutum, a shield, did not come into use until the beginning of the 12th century. The method of assessment was regularized in the reign of Henry II and TENANTS-IN-CHIEF passed on the levy to their tenants. Scutage came to an end in 1327.

Scuttle. The scuttle for coals is O.E. scutel, a dish, from Lat. scutella, a dish or platter. The scuttle or opening in the side or deck of a ship is Sp. escotilla, a hatch-way.

To scuttle a ship is to hole it in order to make it sink. This is from SCUTTLE in the sense of a hatch-opening or hole.

To scuttle off. To make off hurriedly. This was originally to scuddle off, scuddle being a frequentative of scud, to run or skim along.

Scylla. In Greek legend the name of a daughter of King Nisus of Megara; also a sea monster.

The daughter of Nisus promised to deliver Megara into the hands of her lover, MINOS, and, to effect this, cut off a golden hair on her father's head while he was asleep. Minos despised her for this treachery, and Scylla threw herself from a rock into the sea. Other accounts say she was changed into a lark by the gods and her father into a hawk.

Scylla, the sea monster, was a beautiful NYMPH beloved by GLAUCUS, who applied to CIRCE for a love-potion, but Circe became enamoured of him and metamorphosed her rival into a hideous creature with twelve feet and six heads, each with three rows of teeth. Below the waist her body was made up of hideous monsters, like dogs, which barked unceasingly. She dwelt on the rock of Scylla, opposite CHARYBDIS, on the Italian side of the Straits of Messina and was a terror to ships and sailors. Whenever a ship passed, each of her heads would seize one of the crew.

Avoiding Scylla, he fell into Charybdis. See CHARYBDIS.

Between Scylla and Charybdis. See CHARYBDIS.

To fall from Scylla into Charybdis—out of the FRYING-PAN into the fire. See CHARYBDIS.

Scythian (sith' i ãn). Pertaining to the peoples or region of Scythia, the ancient name of a great part of European and Asiatic Russia.

Scythian defiance. When DARIUS approached Scythia, an ambassador was sent to his tent with a bird, a frog, a mouse, and five arrows, then left without uttering a word. Darius, wondering what was meant, was told by Gobrias it meant this: Either fly away like a bird, hide your head in a hole like a mouse, or swim across the river like a frog, or in five days you will be laid prostrate by the Scythian arrows.

The Scythian, or Tartarian Lamb. The Russian barometz, the creeping root-stock and frond-stalks of Cibotium barometz, a woolly fern, which, when inverted, was supposed to have some resemblance to a lamb. It was supposed to be a fabulous creature, half plant, half animal.

'Sdeath, 'Sdeins. See 's.

Sea. Any large expanse of water, more or less enclosed; hence the expression "molten sea" meaning the great brazen vessel which stood in SOLOMON'S TEMPLE (II Chron. iv, 2, and I Kings, vii, 23); even the NILE, the Euphrates, and the Tigris are sometimes called sea by the prophets. The world of water is the Ocean.

At sea, or all at sea. Wide of the mark, in a state of uncertainty or error; like one at sea who has lost his bearings.

The four seas. The seas surrounding Great Britain, on the north, south, east, and west.

Half-seas over. See under HALF.

The high seas. The open sea, the "main"; especially that part of the sea beyond "the THREE-MILE LIMIT", which forms a free highway to all nations.

The Old Man of the Sea. See under OLD.

The Seven Seas. See under SEVEN.

Sea Deities. In classical myth, besides the fifty NEREIDS, the OCEANIDS, the SIRENS, etc., there were numerous deities connected with the sea. Chief among them are: AMPHITRITE; GLAUCUS; Ino (see LEUCOTHEA); NEPTUNE; NEREUS and his wife TETHYS; Portumnus (see PALÆMON); POSEIDON (the Greek Neptune); PROTEUS; THETIS; TRITON.

Sea Lawyer. A seaman who is constantly arguing about his rights, a captious person, a troublemaker. It is also nautical slang for a shark.

Sea legs. To get one's sea legs. To acquire the ability to walk steadily in a ship at sea despite the rolling and pitching of the vessel.

Sea serpent. A serpentine monster supposed to inhabit the depths of the ocean. Many reports of such a creature have been made by mariners over the centuries but its existence has never been established; thus J. G. Lockhart (Mysterics of the Sea: The Great Sea-Serpent) writes: "We thus conclude with at least three sea-serpents, one in 1857, one in 1875, and one in 1905, for which we have reasonably satisfactory evidence . . . Most of the witnesses agree on certain outstanding features; it is a long serpentine creature; it has a series of humps; its head is rather like a horse's; its colour is dark on the top and light below; it appears during the summer months; and unlike the sea monster it is harmless, for it never actually attacked anybody even under provocation". Cp. LOCH NESS MONSTER.

The Sea-born City. Venice.

The Sea-born goddess. APHRODITE.

The Sea-girt isle. ENGLAND. So called because, as SHAKESPEARE has it, it is "hedged in with the main, that water-walled bulwark" (King John, II, i).

This precious stone set in the silver sea,
Which serves it in the office of a wall,
Or as a moat defensive to a house,
Against the envy of less happier lands.
Richard II, II, i.

Sea-green Incorruptible, The. So Carlyle called Robespierre in his French Revolution. He was of a sallow, unhealthy complexion.

Sea-island cotton. A fine long-stapled cotton, so called from its being grown on the islands off the coast of South Carolina and Georgia.

Seal. The sire is called a bull, his females are cows, the offspring are called pups; the breeding-place is called a rookery, a group of young seals a pod, and a colony of seals a herd. The immature male is called a bachelor. A sealer is a seal-hunter, and seal-hunting is called sealing.

Seal (O. Fr. seel from Lat. sigillum). An impressed device, in wax, lead, etc.

Great Seal. See under GREAT.

Solomon's Seal. See under SOLOMON.

To set one's seal to. To give one's authority, to authenticate. From the affixing of seals to documents as an official sign of their authenticity.

Under my hand and seal. A legal phrase indicating that the document in question is both signed and sealed by the person on whose behalf it has been drawn up.

Sealed Orders. Orders delivered in a sealed package to naval and military commanders which they must not open before a certain time, or reaching a certain locality, etc.

Seamy side. The "wrong" or worst side; as the "seamy side of London", "the seamy side of life". In velvet, Brussels carpets, tapestry, etc., the "wrong" side shows the seams or threads of the pattern exhibited on the right side.

Seasons, The Four. Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter. Spring starts (officially) on 21 March, the Spring Equinox, when the sun enters ARIES; Summer on 22 June, the Summer SOLSTICE, when the sun enters CANCER; Autumn on 23 September, the Autumn Equinox, the sun entering LIBRA; and Winter on 22 December, when the sun enters CAPRICORN. See ZODIAC.

The ancient Greeks characterized Spring by MERCURY, Summer by APOLLO, Autumn by BACCHUS, and Winter by HERCULES.

James Thomson's poetic series The Seasons was not published as a collection until 1730. Winter first appeared in 1726 and fetched three guineas from the publisher, but gave Thomson a reputation. Summer, dedicated to Bub Dodington, was published in 1727, Spring in 1728, and Autumn in 1730.

In and out of season. Always or all the time, constantly.

The London Season. The part of the year when the Court and fashionable society generally is in town—May, June, July.

The silly season. See under SILLY.

Season-ticket. A ticket giving the holder certain specified rights (in connection with travelling, entrance to an exhibition, etc.) for a certain specified period.

Seat. To take a back seat. See under BACK.

Sebastian, St. Patron SAINT of archers, martyred in 288. He was bound to a tree and shot at with arrows and finally beaten to death. As the arrows stuck in his body as pins in a pin-cushion, he was also made the patron saint of pin-makers. As he was a captain of the guard, he is the patron saint of soldiers. His feast, coupled with that of St. Fabian, is kept on 20 January.

The English St. Sebastian. St. Edmund, the martyr-king of East Anglia (855-870) who is said to have been tied to a tree by the Danes and shot dead with arrows at Hoxne, Suffolk, because he refused to rule as a Danish vassal. His body was taken to the royal manor of Bedricsworth which came to be called St. Edmund's Burgh and his remains, miraculously incorrupt, became the chief relic of the abbey of Bury St. Edmunds.

Second. The next after the first (Lat. secundus).

In duelling the second is the representative of the principal; he carries the challenge, selects the ground, sees that the weapons are in order, and is responsible for all the arrangements.

A second of time is so called because the division of the minute into sixtieths is the second of the sexagesimal operations, the first being the division of the hour into minutes.

One's second self. His ALTER EGO; one whose tastes, opinions, habits, etc., correspond so entirely with one's own that there is practically no distinction.

The Second Adam. Jesus Christ.

Second Adventists. Those who believe that the Second Coming of Christ (cp. I Thess., iv, 15) will precede the MILLENNIUM; hence sometimes also called Premillenarians.

Second Empire. See NAPOLEON III.

Second floor. Two flights above the ground floor. In the U.S.A. the second floor is the English first floor.

Second-hand. Not new or original; what has already been the property of another, as "second-hand" books, clothes, opinions, etc.

Second nature. Said of a habit, way of doing things, etc., that has become so ingrained that it is instinctive.

Second pair back. The back room on the floor two flights of stairs above the ground floor; similarly the front room is called the second pair front.

Second sight. The power of seeing things invisible to others; the power of foreseeing future events.

Second Wind. See under WIND.

To second an officer (accent on last syllable) is, in military parlance, to remove him temporarily from his present duties to take up another extra-regimental or staff appointment.

Secondary colours. See under COLOURS.

Secret. An open secret. A piece of information generally known, but not formally announced.

Un secret de polichinelle. No secret at all; an open secret. Polichinelle is the PUNCH of the old French puppet-shows, and his secrets are stage whispers told to all the audience.

Secret Service. The popular name for governmental intelligence, espionage and counter-espionage organizations. The U.S. Secret Service, under the Treasury Department, is mainly concerned with Federal crime.

Secular. From Lat. saecularis, pertaining to a saeculum or age, a generation; also a period of 100 years (the longest duration of man's life), any long period of indefinite length. This gives us our meanings of "occurring once in an age", "lasting indefinitely", "occurring once in a hundred years" and "lasting for a hundred years". The meaning "lay", "temporal", "of this world", is from Late Latin when saecularis had acquired the meaning of "belonging to the world", "worldly".

Secular clergy. Clergy living "in the world" as opposed to the regular clergy of the cloister, who live under a rule. In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH secular clergy take precedence over the regular clergy.

Secular games (Lat. Ludi saeculares). In ancient ROME, the public games lasting three days and three nights, that took place once in an age (saeculum) or every 100 years (sometimes every 110 years).

They were instituted in obedience to the SIBYLLINE verses with the promise that "the empire should remain in safety so long as this admonition was observed". They derived from the Tarentine Games instituted in 249 B.C. to propitiate PLUTO and PROSERPINE.

Date, quæ precamur

Tempore sacro

Quo Sibyllini monuerunt versus.

HORACE: Carmen Saeculare, A.U.C. 737.

Secularism. The name given in 1846 by George Jacob Holyoake (1817-1906) to an ethical system founded on "natural morality" and opposed to the tenets of revealed religion and ecclesiasticism.

Security. Security Risk. Governmental security is concerned with the prevention of leakages of confidential information, and a security risk denotes one of doubtful loyalty, whose background and associations make employment in state service inadvisable, especially in posts which involve access to confidential information likely to be of use to a potentially hostile government.

The abrupt departure of two young Foreign Office officials, Burgess and Maclean, to their spiritual home in Moscow on 25 May 1951 could also not be blamed on Morrison, but it did reflect on the security arrangements for which his predecessor had been responsible.

W. N. MEDLICOTT:

Contemporary England, ch. 12.

Sedan chair (se dän'). The covered seat, so called, carried by two bearers back and front originated in Italy in the late 16th century, and was introduced into England by Sir S. Duncombe in 1634.

The name is probably derived from Lat. sedere, to sit; but Johnson's suggestion that it is connected with the French town, Sedan, is a possibility.

The Man of Sedan. NAPOLEON III was so called because he surrendered his sword to William, King of Prussia, after the battle of Sedan (2 September 1870).

Sedulous. To play the sedulous ape to.

To study the style of another, and model one's own on his as faithfully and meticulously as possible; said, usually with more or less contempt, of literary men. The phrase is taken from R. L. Stevenson, who, in his essay, "A College Magazine" (Memories and Portraits), said that he had:

Played the sedulous ape to Hazlitt, to Lamb, to Wordsworth, to Sir Thomas Browne, to Defoe, to Hawthorne; to Montaigne, to Baudelaire, and to Obermann . . . That, like it or not, is the way to learn to write.

See (Lat. sedes). The seat or throne of a BISHOP, hence the town or place where the bishop's cathedral is located and from which he takes his title; and so has to be distinguished from diocese, the territory over which he has jurisdiction.

The Holy See. See under HOLY.

See (O.E. seon). To perceive by the eye.

To see a person through. To help him through a difficulty.

To see into the matter. To investigate.

To see off. To accompany someone to the point of departure on a journey; also, colloquially, to outwit or get the better of someone by sharp practice, etc.; or to get the better of someone physically, as a dog "sees off" unwanted prowlers.

To see through a person. To perceive his true character and motives, "not to be taken in".

To see to. To attend to.

Seeded players. Those players regarded by the organizers of a tournament (e.g. lawn tennis at the All England Club, Wimbledon) as likely to reach the final stages, and who are so placed in the order of play that they do not meet each other until the closing rounds. These players are numbered in the order of likelihood. Of course it sometimes happens that seeded players are defeated early in the tournament.

Seekers. A 17th-century PURITAN sect akin to the QUAKERS in their outlook who rejected the existing church and claimed to seek the true church which God would reveal in his own time. Rôger Williams (c. 1603-1683) founded Providence, NEW ENGLAND, as a refuge for the sect.

Seel. To close the eyelids of a HAWK by running a thread through them; to hood-wink (Fr. ciller; cil, the eyelash).

She that so young could give out such a seeming,
To seel her father's eyes up, close as oak.

SHAKESPEARE: Othello, III, iii.

Seian Horse, The (sī ān). A possession which invariably brought ill luck with it. Hence the Latin proverb Ille homo habet equum Seianum. Cneius Seius had an Argive horse, of the breed of Diomed, of a bay colour and surpassing beauty, but it was fatal to its possessor. Seius was put to death by Mark Antony. Its next owner, Cornelius Dolabella, who bought it for 100,000 sesterces, was killed in Syria during the civil wars. Caius Cassius, who next took possession of it, perished after the battle of Philippi by the very sword which stabbed CÆSAR. Antony had the horse next, and after the battle of Actium slew himself.

Likewise the gold of Tolosa (see under GOLD) and HARMONIA'S NECKLACE were fatal possessions. Cp. NESSUS; OPAL.

Selah (sē la). A Hebrew word occurring often in the Psalms (and three times in Habakkuk iii), indicating some musical or liturgical direction, such as a pause, a repetition, or the end of a section.

Select men. Town officers in NEW ENGLAND deputed to be responsible for certain local concerns. They are elected annually at town meetings and their office derives from the select vestrymen of former days.

Selene (se lé' nē). The moon goddess of Greek mythology, daughter of HYPERION and Theia, corresponding approximately to the Roman DIANA. Selene had 50 daughters by ENDYMION and three by ZEUS, including Erse, the Jew. Selene is represented with a diadem and wings on her shoulders, driving in a chariot drawn by two white horses; Diana is represented with bow and arrow running after a stag.

Seleucidæ (se lū' si dē). The dynasty of Seleucus Nicator (c. 358-281 B.C.), one of ALEXANDER'S generals who in 312 conquered Babylon and succeeded to part of Alexander's vast empire. The monarchy consisted of Syria, a large part of Asia Minor, and all the eastern provinces (Persia, Bactria, etc.). The last of the line was dispossessed by the Romans in 64 B.C.

Self. The Self-denying Ordinance. The measure passed by the LONG PARLIAMENT

(April 1645) providing that Members of either House should give up their military commands and civil offices within 40 days. Nothing was said to prevent their reappointment. The indecisive second battle of Newbury in 1644 led to this measure which was directed against incompetent commanders, particularly in the House of Lords.

Self-determination. In politics, the concept that every nation, no matter how small or weak, has the right to decide upon its own form of government and to manage its own affairs. The phrase acquired this significance during the attempts to resettle Europe after World War I.

A self-made man. One who has risen from poverty and obscurity to comparative opulence or a position of importance by his own efforts. A phrase of American origin.

Seljuks (sel' jüks). The name of several Turkish dynasties descendent from Seljuk, a Ghuzz chieftain, and which ruled in Persia, Syria and Asia Minor between the 11th and 13th centuries. In 1055 Togrul Beg, grandson of Seljuk, was made "Commander of the Faithful" (see CALIPH) for coming to the assistance of the ABBASSIDE Caliph of Baghdad. His successor Alp Arslan took Syria and Palestine, and a large part of Anatolia from the BYZANTINE Emperor. The territories were eventually partitioned among branches of the family, but were subject to Mongol onslaughts from 1243. Their power steadily declined and their place was eventually taken by the OTTOMANS.

Sell. Slang for a swindle, a hoax, a first-of-April trick; and the person hoaxed is said to be sold.

To sell down the river. See RIVER.

Selling out. In stockbroking, to sell in open exchange shares which a purchaser failed to take up at the specified time, the original purchaser having to make good the difference between the original contract price and the price at which they are actually sold. Also applied to officers' retirement from the Army in the days when commissions were bought and sold.

To sell short. See under SHORT.

To sell a person up. To dispose of his goods by order of the court because he cannot pay his debts, the proceeds going to his creditors.

A selling race. See SELLING PLATE under PLATE.

Selling the pass. Betraying one's own side. The phrase was originally Irish and applied to those who turned King's EVIDENCE, or who impeached their comrades for money. The tradition is that a regiment was sent by Crotha, "lord of Atha", to hold a pass against the invading army of Trathal, "King of Cael". The pass was betrayed for money; the Fírbolgs (see MILESIAKS) were subdued, and Trathal assumed the title of "King of Ireland".

Sellinger's Round. An old country dance, very popular in Elizabethan times, in which:

the dancers take hands, go round twice and back again; then all set, turn, and repeat; then lead all forward, and back, and repeat; two singles and back, set and turn single and repeat; arms all and repeat.

JOHN PLAYFORD:

The English Dancing Master (1651).

It is said to be so called either from Sir Thomas Sellynger, buried in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, about 1470, or from Sir Anthony St. Leger, Lord Deputy of Ireland (d. 1559).

Semele (sem' e lē). In Greek mythology, the daughter of CADMUS and HARMONIA. By ZEUS she was the mother of DIONYSUS and was slain by lightning when he granted her request to visit her in his majesty.

Semiramis (se mir' á mis). In ancient legend, daughter of the goddess Derceto and a young Assyrian. She married Menones, but he hanged himself when Ninus, king of Assyria and founder of Nineveh, demanded Semiramis from him. She forthwith married Ninus who was so enamoured that he resigned the crown to her. After this she put him to death, but was herself ultimately slain by her son Ninyas. She is sometimes identified with ISHTAR and her doves. These and other legends accumulated round an Assyrian princess of this name who lived c. 800 B.C.

The Semiramis of the North. Margaret of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway (1353-1412), and Catherine II of Russia (1729-1796) have both been so called.

Semitic (se mit' ic). Pertaining to the descendants of Shem (see Gen. x), viz., the Hebrews, Arabs, Assyrians, Aramæans, etc.; nowadays applied to the Jews.

The Semitic languages are the ancient Assyrian and Chaldee, Aramaic, Syriac, Arabic, Hebrew, Samaritan, Ethiopic, and old Phœnician. The great characteristic of this family of languages is that the roots of words consist of three consonants.

Senatus consultum (sen a' tus kon sül' tum). A decree of the Senate of Ancient ROME. The term was sometimes applied to a decree of any senate, especially that of the First Empire in France.

Send. That sends me. Amateurs of JAZZ use this phrase, meaning: The music sends me out of myself, or into ecstasies.

Se'nnight. A week; seven nights. Fort'-night, fourteen nights. These words are relics of the ancient CELTIC custom of beginning the day at sunset, a custom observed by the ancient Greeks, Babylonians, Persians, Syrians, and Jews, and by the modern heirs of these peoples. In Gen. i, 5, we find the evening precedes the morning: as, "The evening and the morning were the first day", etc.

He shall live a man forbid:
Weary se'n-nights nine times nine
Shall he dwindle, peak and pine.

SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, I, iii.

Sense. Common sense. See under COMMON.

Scared out of my seven senses. Utterly scared, scared out of my wits. See SEVEN SENSES.

Sensitive Plant. See MIMOSA.

Sentences, Master of the. The SCHOOLMAN, Peter Lombard (c. 1100-1160), an Italian theologian and BISHOP of Paris, author of The Four Books of Sentences (Sententiarum libri IV), a compilation from the Fathers of the leading arguments PRO AND CON, bearing on the hair-splitting theological questions of the MIDDLE AGES.

The mediæval graduates in theology, of the second order, whose duty it was to lecture on the Sentences, were called Sententiatory Bachelors.

Separatists. A name given to the BROWNISTS and the Independents of the 17th century who separated from the Established Church.

Sephardim. The Jews of Spain and Portugal, as distinct from those of Poland and Germany called Ashkenazim (from the location given in Gen. x, 3). The name is from Sepharad (Obad. 20) where Jews were in captivity. The TARGUM of Jonathan wrongly identified it with Spain, possibly from some similarity with Hesperis, hence the application of the name to Spanish Jews.

Sept from O.Fr. septe, possibly a variant of secte or sect; a term especially applied to an Irish CLAN which was a division of the tribe. The freemen of the sept bore the clan name with the prefix "Ua", grandson, written in English as "O'".

September. The seventh month from MARCH, where the year used to commence.

The old Dutch name was Herst-maand (autumn-month); the old Saxon, Gerst-monath (barley-month), or Hæfest-monath; and after the introduction of Christianity Hahig-monath (holy-month, the nativity of the Virgin MARY being on the 8th, the EXALTATION OF THE CROSS or Holy Cross Day on the 14th and St. MICHAEL'S Day on the 29th). In the French Republican CALENDAR it was called Fructidor (fruit-month, 18 August to 16 September).

September Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

September Massacres. An indiscriminate slaughter during the French Revolution, directed at the royalists confined in the Abbaye and other prisons, lasting from 2 to 7 September 1792. Over 1,500 were massacred with revolting brutalities. It was occasioned by the dismay at the fall of Verdun to the Prussians. Those taking part in the atrocities were called Septembrists.

Septentrional Signs (sep ten' tri ð näl). The first six signs of the ZODIAC, because they belong to the northern celestial hemisphere. The north was called the septentrion from the seven stars of the Great Bear (Lat. septem, seven; triones, plough oxen). Cp. URSA MAJOR.

Septuagesima Sunday (sep tū á jes' i má). The third Sunday before LENT; in round numbers, 70 (in fact 64) days (Lat. septuagesima dies) before EASTER.

Septuagint (sep' tū á jint) (Lat. septuaginta, seventy). The most important Greek version of the Old Testament and APOCRYPHA, so called because it was traditionally said to have been translated from the Hebrew Scriptures by 72 learned Jews in the 3rd century B.C., at the command of Ptolemy Philadelphus for the Alexandrian LIBRARY. They worked on the island of PHAROS and completed the task in 72 days.

The name Septuagint is commonly abbreviated as LXX. It is probably the work of Jewish scholars at Alexandria working over a long period of time.

Sepulchre, The Holy. The cave outside the walls of old JERUSALEM in which the body of Christ is believed to have lain between His burial and Resurrection. The tomb is said to have been discovered by St. HELENA and from at least the 4th century (see INVENTION OF THE CROSS under CROSS) the spot has been covered by a Christian Church, where today Greek, Catholic, Armenian, Syrian, and Coptic Christians have their rights of occupation.

Knights of the Holy Sepulchre. An order of military knights founded by Godfrey of Bouillon in 1099 to guard the Holy Sepulchre.

Seraglio (sé ra' lyô). The word is Italian and means "enclosure" and especially denotes the former palace of the SULTANS at Constantinople, situated on the GOLDEN HORN and enclosed by walls containing many buildings. The chief entrance was the Sublime Gate (see PORTE); and the chief edifice the Harem or "forbidden spot" which contained numerous dwellings, for the sultan's wives, and for his concubines. The Seraglio might be visited by strangers, not so the Harem.

Seraphic (se ráf' ik). Seraphic Blessing. The blessing written by St. FRANCIS OF ASSISI at the request of Brother Leo on Mt. Alverna in 1224. It is based on Numbers vi, 24: "May the Lord bless thee and keep thee. May he show His face to thee and have mercy on thee. May he turn his countenance on thee and give thee peace. May the Lord bless thee, Brother Leo."

The Seraphic Doctor. The Scholastic philosopher, St. Bonaventura (1221-1274).

The Seraphic Father, or Saint. St. FRANCIS OF ASSISI (1182-1226); whence the FRANCISCANS are sometimes called the Seraphic Order.

The Seraphic Hymn. The Sanctus, "Holy, holy, holy" (Is. vi, 3), which was sung by the SERAPHIM.

Seraphim. The highest of the nine choirs of ANGELS, so named from the seraphim of Is. vi, 2. The word is probably the same as saraph, a serpent, from saraph, to burn (in allusion to its bite); and this connexion with burning suggested to early Christian interpreters that the seraphim were specially distinguished by the ardency of their zeal and love.

Seraphim is a plural form; the singular, seraph, was first used in English by Milton. ABDIEL was,

The flaming Seraph, fearless, though alone,
Encompassed round with foes.

Paradise Lost, V, 875.

Serapis (se rá' pis). The Ptolemaic form of APIS, an Egyptian deity who, when dead, was honoured under the attributes of OSIRIS and thus became "osirified Apis" or [O]Sorapis. He was lord of the underworld, and was identified by the Greeks with HADES.

Serat, Al-. See AL-SIRAT.

Serbonian Bog, The (sér bô' ni án). A great morass, now covered with shifting sand, between the isthmus of Suez, the MEDITERRANEAN, and the delta of the Nile, that in Strabo's time was a lake stated by him to be 200 stadia long and 50 broad, and by Pliny to be 150 miles in length. TYPHON was said to dwell at the bottom of it, hence its other name, Typhon's Breathing Hole.

A gulf profound as that Serbonian bog,
Betwixt Damiatia and Mount Cassius old,
Where armies whole have sunk.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, II, 592.

The term is used figuratively of a mess from which there is no way of extricating oneself.

Serendipity (se ren dip' i ti). A happy coinage by Horace Walpole to denote the faculty of making lucky and unexpected "finds" by accident. In a letter to Mann (28 January 1754) he says that he formed it on the title of a fairy story, The Three Princes of Serendip, because the princes:

were always making discoveries, by accidents and sagacity, of things they were not in quest of.

Serendip is an ancient name of Ceylon.

Serene (Lat. serenus, clear, calm). A title mainly given formerly to certain German princes. Those who used to hold it under the empire were entitled Serene or Most Serene Highnesses.

It's all serene, or all sereno. All right, all is well (Span. sereno, all right—the sentinel's countersign).

The drop serene. See under DROP.

Sergeanty, or Serjeanty. Various forms of land tenure akin to KNIGHT service involving military service or some form of household service for the king or lord, sometimes nominal. Serjeanty comes from Norman French serjantie (Lat. serviens, a servant). They eventually came to be classed as Grand serjeanties and Petty Serjeanties, the latter involving some obligation such as the rendering of a bow or a sword. (Woodstock was granted to the Duke of Marlborough in grand serjeanty, in return for the rendering of a French standard to the crown on the anniversary of Blenheim.) These services were retained when military tenures were abolished in 1661. The incidents were preserved by the Law of Property Acts, 1922 and 1925.

Serjeants-at-Arms. Officials of the Royal HOUSEHOLD with certain ceremonial functions, eight in number. In addition there is the SPEAKER'S Serjeant-at-Arms in the HOUSE OF COMMONS, who carries the MACE and acts as the disciplinary officer, and another who carries the mace of the Lord CHANCELLOR in the HOUSE OF LORDS.

Serjeants-at-law. A superior order of barristers superseded by QUEEN'S COUNSEL in 1877. From the Low Latin servientes ad legem, one who serves the king in matters of law. They formed an Inn called Serjeants Inn which was in FLEET STREET and later Chancery Lane. See COIF.

Serpent. The serpent is symbolical of:

(1) Deity, because, says Plutarch, "it feeds upon its own body; even so all things spring from God, and will be resolved into deity again" (De Iside et Osiride, i, 2, p. 5; and Philo Byblius).

(2) Eternity, as a corollary of the former. It is represented as forming a circle, holding its tail in its mouth.

(3) Renovation and the healing art. It is said that when old it has the power of growing young again "like the eagle", by casting its slough, which is done by squeezing itself between two rocks. It was sacred to ÆSCULAPIUS, and was supposed to have the power of discovering healing herbs. See CADUCEUS.

(4) Guardian spirit. It was thus employed by the ancient Greeks and Romans, and not infrequently the figure of a serpent was depicted on their altars.

In the temple of Athena at ATHENS, a serpent, supposed to be animated by the soul of Erichthonius, was kept in a cage, and called "the Guardian Spirit of the Temple".

(5) Wisdom. "Be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves" (Matt. x, 16).

(6) Subtlety. "Now the serpent was more subtil than any beast of the field" (Gen. iii, i).

(7) The DEVIL. As the Tempter (Gen. iii, 1-6). In early pictures the serpent is sometimes placed under the feet of the Virgin, in allusion to the promise made to EVE after the fall (Gen. iii, 15).

In Christian art it is an attribute of St. CECILIA, St. Euphemia, St. PATRICK, and many other saints, either because they trampled on SATAN, or because they miraculously cleared some country of snakes.

Fable has it that the cerastes (horned viper) hides in sand that it may bite the horse's foot and get the rider thrown. In allusion to this belief, Jacob says, "Dan shall be . . . an adder in the path, that biteth the horse heels, so that his rider shall fall backward" (Gen. xlix, 17). The Bible also tells us that the serpent stops up its ears that it may not be charmed by the charmers, "charming never so wisely" (Ps. lviii, 4).

Another old idea about snakes was that when attacked they would swallow their young and not eject them until reaching a place of safety.

It was in the form of a serpent, says the legend, that Jupiter AMMON appeared to OLYMPIA and became by her the father of ALEXANDER THE GREAT. See also SNAKE.

The old Serpent. SATAN.

And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years.

Rev. xx, 2.

Pharaoh's serpent. See under PHARAOH.

Sea serpent. See under SEA.

The serpent of old Nile. CLEOPATRA, so called by Antony.

He's speaking now,
Or murmuring "Where's my serpent of old Nile?"
For so he calls me.

SHAKESPEARE: Antony and Cleopatra, I, v.

Their ears have been serpent-licked.

They have the gift of foreseeing events, the power of seeing into futurity. This is a Greek superstition. It is said that CASSANDRA and Helenus were gifted with the power of prophecy, because serpents licked their ears while sleeping in the temple of APOLLO.

To cherish a serpent in your bosom.

To show kindness to one who proves ungrateful. The Greeks say that a husbandman found a frozen serpent, which he put into his bosom. The snake was revived by the warmth, and stung its benefactor. SHAKESPEARE applies the tale to a serpent's egg:

Therefore think him as a serpent's egg
Which, hatched, would (as his kind) grow dangerous.

Julius Caesar, II, i.

Serpentine Verses. Such as end with the same word as they begin with. The following are examples:

Crescit amor nummi, quantum ipsa pecunia crescit.

(Greater grows the love of pelf, as pelf itself grows greater).

Ambo florentes ætastibus, Arcades ambo.

(Both in the spring of life, Arcadians both).

The allusion is to the old representations of snakes with their tails in their mouths—no beginning and no end.

Serve. I'll serve him out—give him a good QUID PRO QUO. This is the French desservir, to do an ill turn to one.

Serves you right! You've got just what you deserved.

To serve a mare. To place a stallion to her.

To serve a rope is to wind it round with spun yarn, or other suitable cord or twine, to protect it from wet or chafe. Serving is always put on against the lay of the rope.

To serve a sentence. To undergo the punishment awarded.

To serve a writ on. To deliver into the hands of the person concerned a legal writ.

To serve its turn. Said of something which is used to satisfy a purpose or fulfil a need, and then discarded.

To serve one out. To punish, to get revenge on, to get one's own back.

To serve one's time. To hold an office or appointment for the full period allowed; to go through one's apprenticeship; to go through one's length of service in the armed forces; to serve one's sentence in a prison.

Servus servorum (sĕr' vŭs sĕrv vŏr' ūm) (Lat.). The slave of slaves, the drudge of a servant. Servus servorum Dei (the servant of the servants of God) is one of the honorific epithets of the POPE; it was first adopted by GREGORY THE GREAT (540, 590-604).

Sesame (ses' á mi). Open, Sesame! The password at which the door of the robbers' cave flew open in the tale of The Forty Thieves (ARABIAN NIGHTS); hence, a key to a mystery, or anything that acts like magic in obtaining favour, admission, recognition, etc.

Sesame is an East Indian annual herb, with an oily seed which is used as food, a laxative, etc. In Egypt they eat sesame cakes, and the Jews frequently add the seed to their bread.

Sesquipedalian (ses kwi pé dā' li án) is sometimes applied in heavy irony to cumbersome and pedantic words. It comes from HORACE's sesquipedalia verba, words a foot and a half long.

Session, Court of. See under COURT.

Sestina (ses tē' ná). A set form of poem, usually rhymed, with six stanzas of six lines each and a final triplet. The terminal words of stanzas 2-6 are the same as those of stanza 1 but arranged differently. Sestinas were invented by the Provençal TROUBADOUR Arnaut Daniel (13th century); DANTE, Petrarch, and others employed them in Italy, Cervantes and Camoëns in the Peninsula, and an early use in English was by Drummond of Hawthornden. Swinburne's sestinas are probably the best in English.

Set, or Seth. The Egyptian original of the Greek TYPHON. He was the jealous brother of OSIRIS whom he murdered by tricking him into a coffer, nailing the lid, and having it sealed with molten lead. He was later castrated by HORUS and came to be regarded as the incarnation of evil. He is represented as having the body of a man with a thin curved snout and square-shaped ears, and sometimes with a tail and the body of an animal which has not been identified with any certainty.

Set. All set. All ready to begin.

He'll never set the Thames on fire. See under THAMES.

A set scene. In theatrical parlance, a scene built up by the stage carpenters, or a furnished interior, as a drawing-room, as distinguished from an ordinary or shifting scene. To set the scene is to indicate to an audience where the action of the play is taking place, and what has prompted it.

A set to. A fight; a real tussle, literally or verbally. In pugilism the combatants were by their seconds "set to the scratch" or line marked on the ground (see TO COME UP TO (THE) SCRATCH under SCRATCH).

To set off to advantage. To display a thing in its best light.

To set on foot. See under FOOT.

To set one's face against something. See under FACE.

To set one's hand to. To sign; to begin a task.

To set one's heart upon. See under HEART.

Setting a hen. Giving her a certain number of eggs to hatch. The clutch of eggs is called a sitting.

Setting a saw. Bending the teeth alternately to the right and left in order to make it clear a path through the wood or metal to prevent jamming.

Setting her cap at him. See under CAP.

The setting of a jewel. The frame or mount of GOLD or SILVER surrounding a jewel in a ring, brooch, etc.

This precious stone set in the silver sea.

SHAKESPEARE: Richard II, II, I.

The setting of the sun, moon, or stars. Their sinking below the horizon.

The Empire on which the sun never sets. This, and similar phrases applied to the British Empire in the imperialist heyday, was not original. Thus in the Pastor Fido (1590) Guarini speaks of Philip II of Spain as "that proud monarch to whom when it grows dark [elsewhere], the sun never sets." Captain John Smith in his Advertisements for the Unexperienced notes that:

the brave Spanish soldiers brag, The sunne never sets in the Spanish dominions, but ever shineth on one part or other we have conquered for our king:

and Thomas Gage in his Epistle Dedicatory to his New Survey of the West Indies (1648) writes:

It may be said of them [the Dutch], as of the Spaniards, that the Sun never sets upon their Dominions.

Setebos (set' e bos). A god or DEVIL worshipped by the Patagonians, and introduced by SHAKESPEARE into his Tempest as the god of Sycorax, CALIBAN's mother.

His art is of such power,
It would control my dam's god, Setebos,
And make a vassal of him.

The Tempest, I, ii.

The cult of Setebos was first known in Europe through MAGELLAN's voyage round the world, 1519-1521.

Settler. Settler's clock. The Laughing Jackass or Kookaburra, the Australian Great Kingfisher; so called because it tends to utter its cry more especially at sunrise and sunset than at other times.

Settler's matches. The long strips of stringy bark which hang from the eucalyptus are so called in Australia, since they make easily ignited kindling.

The remnant of an old Bush Ballad says:

Stringy-bark will light your fire
Green hide will never fail yer,
Stringy-bark and green-hide
Are the mainstay of Australia.

Greenhide or untanned hide had a wide variety of uses among the early settlers.

Seven. A mystic or sacred number; it is composed of four and three, which among the Pythagoreans were, and from time immemorial have been, accounted lucky numbers. Among the Babylonians, Egyptians, and other ancient peoples there were seven sacred planets; and the Hebrew verb to swear means literally "to come under the influence of seven things"; thus seven ewe lambs figure in the oath between Abraham and Abimelech at Beersheba (Gen. xxi, 28), and Herodotus (III, viii) describes an Arabian oath in which seven stones are smeared with blood.

There are seven days in creation, seven days in the week, seven VIRTUES, seven divisions in the Lord's Prayer, seven ages in the life of man, CLIMACTERIC years are seven and nine with their multiples by odd numbers, and the seventh son of a seventh son was always held notable.

Among the Hebrews every seventh year was SABBATICAL, and seven times seven years was the JUBILEE. The three great Jewish feasts lasted seven days, and between the first and second were seven weeks. Levitical purifications lasted seven days. The number is associated with a variety of occurrences in the Old Testament.

In the Apocalypse we have SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA, seven candlesticks, seven stars, seven trumpets, seven spirits before the throne of God, seven horns, seven vials, seven plagues, a seven-headed monster, and the Lamb with seven eyes.

The old astrologers and alchemists recognized seven PLANETS, each having its own "heaven":

The bodies seven, eek, lo hem heer anoon;
Sol gold is, and Luna silver we threpe,
Mars yren, Mercurie quyksilver we clepe;
Saturnus leed, and Jubitur is tyn;
And Venus coper, by my fader kyn.
CHAUCER: The Canon's Yeoman's Tale, 472.

The Seven. Used of groups of seven people, especially (1) the "men of honest report" chosen by the APOSTLES to be the first Deacons (Acts vi, 5), viz. Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicolas; (2) the SEVEN BISHOPS (see below); or (3) the Seven Sages of Greece (see WISE MEN).

The members of the European Free Trade Association (EFTA) formed in 1959, namely, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Austria, Portugal, Switzerland, and the UNITED KINGDOM, are known as "The Seven" as distinct from the SIX.

The Seven against Thebes. The seven Argive heroes (ADRASTUS, Polynices, Tydeus, Amphiarus, Capaneus, Hippomedon and Parthenopæus), who, according to Greek legend, made war on Thebes with the object of restoring Polynices (son of ŒDIPUS), who had been expelled by his brother Eteocles. All perished except Adrastus, and the brothers slew each other in single combat. The legend is the subject of one of the tragedies of ÆSCHYLUS. See NEMEAN GAMES.

The Seven Bishops. Archbishop Sancto of Canterbury, and Bishops Lloyd of St. Asaph, Turner of Ely, Ken of Bath and Wells, White of Peterborough, Lake of Chichester, and Trelawney of Bristol, who petitioned James II against the order to have his second Declaration of Indulgence read in every church on two successive Sundays (May 1688). James foolishly sent them to the TOWER and had them duly tried on a charge of seditious libel; they were acquitted amidst universal rejoicing. Cf. NONJURORS.

And have they fix'd the where and when?
And shall Trelawny die?
Here's twenty thousand Cornish men will know the reason why.

Song of the Western Men.

The Seven Champions. The mediæval designation of the national patron saints of ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, WALES, IRELAND, France, Spain, and Italy. In 1596, Richard Johnson published a chap-book, The Famous History of the Seven Champions of Christendom. In this he relates that St. GEORGE of England was seven years imprisoned by the Almidor, the black king of Morocco; St. DENYS of France lived seven years in the form of a hart; St. JAMES of Spain was seven years dumb out of love for a fair Jewess; St. Anthony of Italy, with the other champions, was enchanted into a deep sleep in the Black Castle, and was released by St. George's three sons, who quenched the seven lamps by water from the enchanted fountain; St. ANDREW of Scotland delivered six ladies who had lived seven years under the form of white swans; St. PATRICK of Ireland was immured in a cell where he scratched his grave with his own nails; and St. DAVID of Wales slept seven years in the enchanted garden of Ormandine, and was redeemed by St. George.

The Seven Churches of Asia. Those mentioned in Rev. i, 11, viz.:

- (1) Ephesus, founded by St. PAUL, 57, in a ruinous state in the time of Justinian.
- (2) Smyrna. Polycarp was its first bishop.
- (3) Pergamos, renowned for its library.
- (4) Thyatira, now called Ak-hissar (the White Castle).
- (5) Sardis, now Sart, a small village.
- (6) Philadelphia, now called Allah Shehr (City of God).
- (7) Laodicea, now a deserted place called Eski-hissar (the Old Castle).

Seven cities warred for Homer being dead. See HOMER.

The Island of the seven Cities. A land of Spanish fable, where seven BISHOPS, who quitted Spain during the dominion of the MOORS, founded seven cities. The legend says that many have visited the island, but no one has ever quitted it.

The Seven Deacons. In Acts vi, 1-6, the "seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom" (see THE SEVEN). These are held to be the first deacons of the Church.

The Seven Deadly, or Capital Sins. Pride, Wrath, Envy, Lust, Gluttony, Avarice, Sloth.

Seven Dials, St. Giles in the Fields, HOLBORN. When first developed in the reign of Charles II a DORIC pillar with (actually) six sun-dials stood facing the seven streets radiating therefrom, two of the streets opening on one face of the dialstone. The column and dials were removed in 1773 and later set up on Weybridge Green.

The district came to be notorious for squalor, vice, crime, and degradation generally and was long the headquarters of the ballad printers and ballad-mongers.

Where famed St. Giles's ancient limits spread,
An in-rail'd column rears its lofty head;
Here to seven streets seven dials count their day,
And from each other catch the circling ray.

GAY: Trivia, ii.

The Seven Gifts of the Spirit, or Holy Ghost. Wisdom, Understanding, Counsel, Fortitude, Knowledge, Righteousness, Fear of the Lord.

The Seven Gods of Luck. In Japanese folklore, Benten, goddess of love; Bishamon, god of war; Daikoku, of wealth; Ebisu, of self-effacement; Fukurokuji and Jorin, gods of longevity; and Hotei, of joviality.

The Seven Heavens. See under HEAVEN.

To be in the Seventh Heaven. See under HEAVEN.

The Seven Hills of Rome. The Palatine, Capitoline, Aventine, Cælian, Esquiline, Viminal, and QUIRINAL or Colline. The walls of ancient ROME were built about them.

The Seven Joys of Mary, or the Virgin. See MARY.

The Seven Liberal Arts. See QUADRIVIVIUM.

The Seven Planets. See PLANETS.

The Seven Sacraments. See under SACRAMENT.

The Seven Sages of Greece. See WISE MEN OF GREECE.

The Seven Sciences. The same as the Seven Liberal Arts. See QUADRIVIVIUM.

The Seven Seas. The Arctic and Antarctic, North and South PACIFIC, North and South ATLANTIC, and the Indian Oceans.

The Seven Senses. According to ancient teaching the SOUL of man, or his "inward holy body" is compounded of seven properties which are under the influence of the seven PLANETS. Fire animates, earth gives the sense of feeling, water gives speech, air gives taste, mist gives sight, flowers give hearing, the south wind gives smelling. Hence the seven senses are animation, feeling, speech, taste, sight, hearing, and smelling (see Ecclus. xvii, 5).

The Seven Sisters. An old name of the PLEIADES; also given to a set of seven cannon, cast by one Robert Borthwick and used at Flodden (1513); and to the chalk cliffs between Cuckmere Haven and Beachy Head on the Sussex coast.

The Seven Sleepers. Seven Christian youths of Ephesus, according to the legend, who fled during the Diocletian persecution (250) to a cave in Mt. Celion. The cave was walled up by their pursuers and they fell asleep. In the reign of Theodosius II, some 200 years later, they awoke and one of them went into the city for provisions. They fell to sleep again, this time until the resurrection. Their names are given as Constantius, Dionysius, Joannes, Maximianus, Malchus, Martinianus, and Serapion. The legend was current in the 6th century and is referred to by Gregory of Tours.

The Seven Sorrows. See MARY.

The Seven Stars. Used formerly of the PLANETS; also of the PLEIADES and the GREAT BEAR (see under BEAR).

Fool: The reason why the seven stars are no more than seven is a pretty reason.

Learn: Because they are not eight?

Fool: Yes, indeed; thou wouldst make a good fool.
SHAKESPEARE: King Lear, I, v.

The Seven Virtues. See VIRTUES.

The Seven Weeks' War. The war between Austria and Prussia, 14 June–26 July 1866. Austria and her allies were decisively defeated at Sadowa or Königgrätz (3 July) and the war ended with the Treaty of Prague (23 August). Austria withdrew from the German Confederation and Prussia was left to assume the leadership of Germany.

The Seven Wise Masters. A collection of oriental tales (see SANDABAR) supposed to be told to the king by his advisers. The king's son returned to court after being educated in the SEVEN LIBERAL ARTS by the Seven Wise Masters. By consulting the stars, he learned that his life was in danger if he spoke before the elapse of seven days. One of the royal consorts then endeavoured to seduce him without success, whereupon she denounced him to the sovereign and the prince was condemned to death. The Wise Masters, by their tales against women, secured a suspension of the sentence for one day. The woman then told a contrary tale to secure the confirmation of Lucien's punishment. The Wise Masters counteracted this with further tales and so on, until the seventh day, when the prince revealed the truth and his accuser was sentenced to death instead. There are numerous variant versions of these stories, which date from the 10th century.

The Seven Wonders of the World. See under WONDER.

The Seven Works of Mercy. See MERCY.

The Seven Years War (1756–1763). A war fought over European and colonial and commercial rivalries by France, Austria, the Empire, Russia, Poland and Sweden against Prussia, Great Britain, and Hanover. Spain joined in 1761 and attacked Portugal. It began with Frederick the Great's invasion of Saxony and was ended by the Treaty of Paris between Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Spain, which gave Canada and other colonial territories to Great Britain, New Orleans to Spain, etc. By the Peace of Hubertusburg between Austria and Prussia, the latter retained Silesia.

Seveners. The Isma'ilis, a SHI'ITE following of Isma'il, whom they hold to be the seventh IMAM; they include the ASSASSINS, Carmathians, DRUSES, and FATIMITES. Cp. TWELVERS.

Seventh-day Adventists. A sect of Adventists which grew out of a movement begun by William Miller in the United States in 1831. He preached that the present world would end about 1843. The Seventh-day Adventists adopted their name in 1860, and were formally organized from 1863. They observe Saturday as their SABBATH and insist on temperance and abstinence from alcohol, tobacco, etc., and a strict adherence to the SCRIPTURES.

Seventh-day Baptists. In the U.S.A., a group of German baptist brethren who keep Saturday, the seventh day of the week, as their SABBATH.

The Seventh son of a seventh son. See SEVEN.

Severn. See SABRINA.

Severus. The Wall of Severus. The Emperor Severus (146–211), who spent the last three years of his life in Britain, thoroughly strengthened the fortified line between the Tyne and Solway originally constructed by Hadrian. His work was so extensive that some ancient authorities speak of him as its original builder. See HADRIAN'S WALL.

Sèvres Ware (sevr). Fine-quality porcelain made at the French state factory at Sèvres near Paris. It was first opened at Vincennes in 1745, and moved to Sèvres in 1756, and the King (Louis XV) became the proprietor in 1760. The king took a personal interest in the manufactory, and expositions were held at VERSAILLES for the sale of the products to the nobility at court. There is a story that Louis XV one day noticed a nobleman quietly pocket a pretty cup; the next day a servant attended upon him and presented him with the saucer together with an invoice.

Sexagesima Sunday (seks á jes' i má). The second Sunday before LENT; so called because in round numbers it is 60 days (Lat. sexagesima dies) before EASTER.

Sextile (seks' til). The aspect of two PLANETS when distant from each other 60 degrees or two signs. This position is marked by astrologers thus *.

In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite Of noxious efficacy.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, X, 659.

At Eton a sixth-form boy is called a Sextile.

Sez (says) you. A contemptuous exclamation expressing disbelief in what someone has said, holding it up to ridicule. An expression of American origin popular in England in the 1930s.

Shades. The abode of the departed or HADES; also the spirits or ghosts of the departed.

Peter Bell excited his spleen to such a degree that he evoked the shades of Pope and Dryden.

MACAULAY: Moore's Life of Lord Byron.

Wine vaults with a bar attached are often known as shades. The term originated at Brighton, when the Old Bank in 1819 was turned into a smoking room and bar. There was an entrance by the Pavilion Shades, or Arcade, and the name was soon transferred to the bar.

To put someone in the shade. To outdo him; eclipse him; to attract to yourself all the applause and encomiums he had been enjoying.

Shadow. A word with numerous figurative and applied meanings, such as, a ghost; Macbeth says to the ghost of Banquo:

Hence, horrible shadow! unreal mockery, hence! SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth, III, iv.

An imperfect or faint representation, as, "I haven't the shadow of a doubt"; a constant attendant, as in Milton's "Sin and her shadow Death" (Paradise Lost, IX, 12); moral darkness or gloom, as, "He has outsoar'd the shadow of our night" (Shelley: Adonais, xl, 1); protecting influence:

Hither, like yon ancient Tower,
Watching o'er the River's bed,
Flung the shadow of thy power,
Else we sleep among the dead.

WORDSWORTH: Hymn (Jesu! bless).

Gone to the bad for the shadow of an ass. "If you must quarrel let it be for something better than the shadow of an ass." See WRANGLE FOR AN ASS'S SHADOW under ASS.

May your shadow never grow less!

May your prosperity always continue and increase. A phrase of Eastern origin. Fable has it that, when those studying the black arts had made certain progress, they were chased through a subterranean hall by the DEVIL. If he caught only their shadow, or part of it, they lost all or part of it, but became first-rate magicians. This would make the expression mean, "May you escape wholly and entirely from the clutches of the devil", but a more simple explanation is, "May you never waste away, but always remain healthy and robust." See SCHLEMIHL.

To be reduced to a shadow. Of people, to become thoroughly emaciated; of things, to become an empty form from which the substance has departed.

To shadow. To follow about like a shadow, especially as a detective, with the object of spying out all one's doings.

Shady. A shady character. A person of very doubtful reputation; one whose character would scarcely bear investigation in the light of day.

On the shady side of forty. The wrong side, meaning more than forty.

Shaggy. A shaggy dog story. A would-be funny story told laboriously at great length with an unexpected twist at the end. So called from the shaggy dog featured in many stories of this genre popular in the 1940s.

Shagroon. In New Zealand, an original settler, other than those from England, who were called Pilgrims. The word is probably from the Irish seachran, wandering.

Shah. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

Shake (O.E. scacan). To agitate more violently or quickly.

Give me a shake. Wake me up (at the requested time).

A good shake up. Something sudden that startles one out of his lethargy and rouses him to action.

I'll do it in a brace of shakes. Instantly, as soon as you can shake the dice-box twice.

In two shakes of a lamb's tail. Instantly. An expression originating in the U.S.A. in the early 19th century.

No great shakes. Nothing extraordinary; no such mighty bargain. The reference is probably to gambling with dice.

A shake of the head. An indication of refusal, disapproval, annoyance, etc.

To shake hands. A very old method of salutation and farewell; when one was shaking hands one could not get at one's sword to strike a treacherous blow. When Jehu asked Jehonadab if his "heart was right" with him, he said, "If it be, give me thine hand", and Jehonadab gave him his hand (II Kings x, 15). NESTOR shook hands with ULYSSES on his return to the Grecian camp with the stolen horses of Rhesus; ÆNEAS, in the temple of DIDO, sees his lost companions enter, who avidī conjugere dextrās ardebant (Æneid, I, 514); and HORACE, strolling along the VIA SACRA, shook hands with an acquaintance: Arreptaque manu, "Quid agis dulcissime rerum?"

To shake in one's shoes. See under SHOE.

To shake one's sides. To be convulsed with laughter; cp. Milton's "Laughter holding both his sides" (L'Allegro).

To shake the dust from one's feet. See under DUST.

Come and have a shakedown at my place. A bed for the night, especially a makeshift one on the floor, sofa, etc. The allusion is to the time when men slept upon litter or clean straw.

Shake-out. On the Stock Exchange a crisis which drives the weaker speculators out of the market; also currently applied to the reduction of the labour force in an industry, trade, etc., by manipulative taxation, etc.

Shakers. A sect of Adventists started by James and Jane Wardley at Manchester in 1747 who seceded from the QUAKERS, and from their excited behaviour were derisively dubbed "Shakers". Ann Lee, known as Mother Ann, the "bride of the Lamb" and the "Female Christ", soon became their acknowledged leader and the sect left for America in 1774. They practised celibacy, temperance, communal living, etc., and a few small communities still survive.

Another sect of English Shakers was founded at Battersea by Mary Anne Girling (1827-1886), a farmer's daughter. The "Children of God" settled in the New Forest but the sect petered out after Mrs. Girling's death.

Shakespeare, William (1564-1616). The greatest poetic dramatist. The Shakespearean canon comprises the 36 plays of the First Folio (1623), which include collaborative contributions that cannot be determined with certainty; the Sonnets, The Rape of Lucrece, Venus and Adonis, a few lyrics and the 16 lines contributed to the play of Sir Thomas More.

The theory that Shakespeare was not the writer of the works attributed to him, based on the assumption that he did not possess the knowledge and culture revealed in those works, was first put forward by Herbert Lawrence in 1769. In 1857 William Henry Smith suggested that the only writer of that age competent to produce such writings was Francis Bacon, thus the Baconian theory began its lengthy career. In 1887 Ignatius Donnelly published The Great Cryptogram which professed to show that cryptograms in the plays revealed Bacon as the undoubted author, and the cryptographic method was further advanced by Sir Edwin Durning-Lawrence and others. The Baconians still persist and others have put forward many additional candidates, including a distributist school of thought which assigns Shakespeare's work to a group of seven writers.

The German Shakespeare. Kotzebue (1761-1819) has been so styled.

The Spanish Shakespeare. Calderón (1600-1681).

The Shakespeare of Divines. Jeremy Taylor (1613-1667).

The Shakespeare of Eloquence. So Barnave happily characterized the Comte de Mirabeau (1749-1791).

Shakuntala. See SAKUNTALA.

Shalott, The Lady of (shá lot'). A maiden in the ARTHURIAN ROMANCES (see under ARTHUR), who fell in love with Sir LANCELOT OF THE LAKE, and died because her love was not returned. Tennyson has a poem on the subject; and the story of ELAINE is substantially the same.

Shamanism (sha' má nizm). A primitive form of religion, in which it is believed that the world is governed by good and evil spirits who can be propitiated through the intervention of a Shaman, a priest or sorcerer. The word is Slavonic, the cult being practised by the Samoyeds and other Siberian peoples.

Shamrock. The symbol of IRELAND, because it was selected by St. PATRICK to illustrate to the Irish the doctrine of the TRINITY. According to the elder Pliny no serpent will touch this plant.

Shamus. U.S. slang for a policeman or private detective. It may derive from Shammash, the sexton of a SYNAGOGUE, or be an Anglicization of the Irish Séamas (James), or a mixture of both.

Shan Van Voght. This excellent song (composed in 1798) has been called the Irish MARSEILLAISE. The title is a corruption of An t-sean bhean bhocht (the poor old woman—i.e. IRELAND). The last verse is:

Will Ireland then be free?
Said the Shan Van Voght. [repeat]
Yes, Ireland shall be free
From the centre to the sea,
Hurrah for liberty!
Said the Shan Van Voght.

Shandean (shǎn' dē ān). Characteristic of Tristram Shandy or the Shandy family in Sterne's novel, Tristram Shandy (9 vols., 1759-1767). Tristram's father, Walter Shandy, is a metaphysical Don QUIXOTE in his way, full of superstitious and idle conceits. He believes in long noses and propitious names, but his son's nose is crushed, and his name becomes Tristram instead of Trismegistus. Tristram's Uncle Toby was wounded at the siege of Namur, and is benevolent and generous, simple as a child, brave as a lion, and gallant as a courtier. His modesty with Widow Wadman and his military tastes are admirable. He is said to be drawn from Sterne's father. The mother was the beau idéal of nonentity; and of Tristram himself we hear almost more before he was born than after he had burst upon an astonished world.

Shandon, The Bells of. Those of St. Anne's Church, Shandon, Cork, made famous in the lines of "Father Prout" (1804-1866).

... the bells of Shandon
That sound so grand
On the quiet waters
Of the river Lee.

The old church was destroyed in the siege of 1690 and rebuilt (1722-1726).

There is an old saying given in Lean's Collectanea:

Party-coloured like the people,
Red and white stands Shandon's steeple.

Shanghai, To (shang hi'). An old nautical phrase, meaning to make a man drunk or to drug him insensible and to get him on board an outward bound vessel in need of crew. It would appear to have originated in the phrase "ship him to Shanghai", i.e. send him on a long voyage.

Shangri La (shǎng gri la'). The hidden Buddhist lama PARADISE described in James Hilton's Lost Horizon (1933). The name was applied to F. D. Roosevelt's mountain refuge in Maryland, and to the secret "base" used for the great American air raid on Tokyo in 1942.

Shank's Mare. To ride Shank's mare is to walk or go on foot, the shanks being the legs; the same as "Going by the marrow-bone stage" or by "Walker's bus".

Shannon. Dipped in the Shannon. One who has been dipped in the Shannon is said to lose all bashfulness.

Shanties, Chanties. Songs of the days of sail sung by a "shanty man" to help rhythmical action among sailors hauling on ropes, working the capstan, etc. The workers joined in the choruses. The word is probably from Fr. chanter, to sing. The chorus of one of the most popular runs thus:

Then away, love, away,
Away down Rio.
O fare ye well my pretty young gel,
For we're bound for the Rio Grande.

A shanty is also a small wooden house or hut, from Canadian-French chantier, log-hut, workshop (Fr., timber-yard).

Sharecropper (U.S.A.). After the CIVIL WAR, Southern plantations were divided into one-man holdings worked by a freedman and his family, or by a white, usually planting cotton or tobacco. They were called sharecroppers because the planter or storekeeper, from whom they obtained their supplies, usually took up to one-half of their crops. They became a depressed class and sharecropping still acts as a brake on improvements in the South.

Shark. A swindler, a pilferer, an extortionate dealer, landlord, etc.; one who snaps up things like a shark, which swallows its food alive or dead, regardlessly.

To shark up. To get a number of people, etc., together promiscuously, without consideration of their fitness.

Now sir, young Fortinbras . . .
Hath in the skirts of Norway here and there
Shark'd up a list of lawless resolute,
For food and diet, to some enterprise
That hath a stomach in't.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, i.

Sharp. A regular Becky Sharp. An unprincipled, scheming young woman, who by cunning, hypocrisy, and low smartness raises herself from obscurity and poverty to some position in SOCIETY, and falls therefrom in due course after having maintained a more or less precarious foothold. Of course she is good-looking, and superficial amiability is a SINE QUA NON. Becky Sharp, the original of this, is the principal character in Thackeray's Vanity Fair (1848).

Sharp practice. Over-smart, underhand or dishonourable dealing; low-down trickery intended to advantage oneself.

Sharp's the word! Look alive, there! no hanging about.

Sharp-set. Hungry; formerly used of HAWKS when hungry for their food.

Shave. Just a grazing touch; a near or close shave, a narrow escape; to shave through an examination, only just to get through, narrowly to escape being plucked (see PLUCK). At Oxford a pass degree was sometimes called a shave.

A good lather is half the shave. Your work is half done if you've laid your plans and made your preparations properly.

To shave a customer. It was once a draper's expression for overcharging; it is said that when the manager saw a chance of doing this he stroked his chin as the sign to the assistant that he might fleece the customer.

To shave an egg. To attempt to extort the uttermost FARTHING; to "SKIN a flint".

Shaveling. Used in contempt of a young man and—especially after the REFORMATION—of a priest. At a time when the laity wore beards and moustaches the clergy were not only usually clean shaven but they also wore large shaven TONSURES.

It maketh no matter how thou live here, so thou have the favour of the pope and his shavelings.

JOHN BRADFORD (1510-1555):
Works, II (Parker Soc., 1853).

Shavian (shá' vi án). After the manner of George Bernard Shaw (1856-1950), or descriptive of his philosophy and style of humour.

She. The She Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

The She-Wolf of France. See under WOLF.

Shear. God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb. See under GOD.

Ordeal by sieve and shears. See SIEVE.

Sheathe. To sheathe the sword. To cease hostilities, make peace.

Sheba, The Queen of (shé' bá). The queen who visited SOLOMON (I Kings x) is known to the Arabs as Balkis, Queen of Sheba (KORAN, ch. xxvii). Sheba was thought by the Romans to have been the capital of what is now YEMEN; and the people over whom the queen reigned were the SABÆANS.

She thinks she's the Queen of Sheba. She thinks she is somebody; she gives herself airs. We are told (I Kings x, 2): "she came to Jerusalem with a very great train".

Shebang (she báng). Fed up with the whole shebang. Tired of the whole concern and everything connected with it. Shebang is American slang for a hut or one's quarters; also for a cart; and in a humorous depreciatory way, for almost anything.

Shebeen (she bēn'). A place (originally only in IRELAND) where liquor is sold without a licence; hence applied to any low-class public house. Possibly from Irish sibin, a little drinking mug.

You've been takin' a dhrop of the crathur' an' Danny says "Troth, an' I been Dhinking yer health wid Shamus O'Shea at Katty's shebeen."

TENNYSON: To-morrow, ii.

Shedeem. See MAZIKEEN.

Sheep. Ram or tup, the sire; ewe, the dam; lamb, the young till weaned, when it is called a tup-hogget or ewe-hogget, as the case may be, or, if the tup is castrated, a wether-hogget.

After the removal of the first fleece, the tup-hogget becomes a shearling, the ewe-hogget a gimmer, and the wether-hogget a dinnmont.

After the removal of the second fleece, the shearling becomes a two-shear tup, the gimmer an ewe, and the dinnmont a wether.

After the removal of the third fleece, the ewe is called a twinter-ewe; and when it ceases to breed, a draft-ewe.

Vegetable sheep. See SCYTHIAN LAMB.

The Black Sheep (Kara-Koyunlu) and the White Sheep (Ak-Koyunlu). Two rival confederacies among the Turkomans of Azerbaijan and Armenia in the late 14th and the 15th centuries. They were so called from the devices on their standards.

The black sheep of the family. The ne'er-do-well; the one who brings disgrace on the family.

There's a black sheep in every flock. In every group or community of people there is sure to be at least one shady character.

As well be hanged for a sheep as a lamb. Don't stop at half measures; in for a PENNY in for a POUND; if we are destined for trouble let's have our fling first.

To cast, or make sheep's eyes. To look askance, in a SHEEPISH way, at a person to whom you feel lovingly inclined.

A fig for their nonsense and chatter!—suffice it, her Charms will excuse one for casting sheep's eyes at her!

BARHAM: Ingoldsby Legends, II
(The Knight and the Lady).

Sheepish. Awkward and shy; bashful through not knowing how to deport oneself in the circumstances.

Sheep's head. A fool, a simpleton.

What, no more compliment? Kiss her, you sheep's head!

CHAPMAN: All Fools, II, i.

Sheepskin (U.S.A.). A college diploma.

Sheer, or Shere Thursday. MAUNDY THURSDAY. It is generally supposed to be from M.E. schere, clean, i.e. free from guilt, from the custom of receiving absolution, or of cleansing the altars on this day. The Liber Festivalis, however, says:

Hit is also in English tong "Schere Thursday", for in ovr elde fadur days men wold on y^t day makon scheron hem honest, and dode here hedes ond clypon here berdes and poll here hedes, ond so makon hem honest agen Estur day.

Sheet. Three sheets in the wind. Very drunk. The sheet is the rope attached to the clew of a sail used for trimming sail. If the sheet is quite free, leaving the sail free to flap without restraint, the sheet is said to be "in the wind", and "a sheet in the wind" is a colloquial nautical expression for being tipsy; thus to have "three sheets in the wind" is to be very drunk.

Captain Cuttle looking, candle in hand, at Bunsby more attentively, perceived that he was three sheets in the wind, or, in plain words, drunk. DICKENS: Dombey and Son, ch. xxxix.

That was my sheet anchor. My best hope, chief stay, last refuge. The sheet anchor, once the heaviest anchor carried, but long since the same weight as the bower anchors, is a spare bower anchor available for use in emergency when the ship is moored. It is carried abaft the starboard bower anchor and in the days of sail abaft the fore rigging. Sheet is probably a corruption of shoot or shot, from the fact that it was shot, or let go, from the ship when needed.

Sheffield. Sheffield Plate. A process of fusing silver on copper discovered by Thomas Boulsover, a Sheffield cutler, about 1742. Domestic articles such as candlesticks, coffee-pots, trays and dishes of quality were produced by Sheffield craftsmen until the industry gave way to electro-plated products and came to an end about 1865.

A Sheffield whittle. So the general-purpose knife was often called in Chaucer's day.

Sheikh (shāk). A title of respect among the Arabs (like the Ital. signore, Fr. sieur, Span. señor, etc.), but properly the head of a BEDOUIN clan, family, or tribe, or the headman of an Arab village.

Sheikh-ul-Islam. The Grand MUFTI, or supreme head of the Mohammedan hierarchy in Turkey.

Shekels (shek' elz). Colloquial for money. It was anciently part of the Babylonian weight and monetary systems, and in general use among the peoples of Mesopotamia and Syria. The Hebrew heavy gold shekel weighed c. 252 grains TROY and the light gold shekel c. 126 grains; the heavy silver shekel weighed c. 224 grains troy and the light silver shekel c. 112 grains. The standard English gold SOVEREIGN was c. 123 grains troy. Phœnician shekels of c. 224 and c. 112 grains were also commonly found throughout the Near East.

Shekinah (she ki' nā) (Heb., that which dwells or resides). A word used frequently in the TARGUMS as an equivalent for the Divine Being or God. It does not occur in the BIBLE. The Shekinah is God's omnipresence and is everywhere. God is not identical with the world, He is of the world and yet afar off. Thus when Jacob says (Gen. xxviii, 16), "The Lord is in this place", the Targum says, "The glory of the Shekinah of J is in this place".

Sheldonian Theatre. The Senate House of Oxford University; so called from Gilbert Sheldon (1598-1677), Archbishop of Canterbury, who provided the money for the building designed by Sir Christopher Wren and opened in 1699. Formerly their meetings were held in St. Mary's Church. See ENCÆNIA.

Shelf. Laid, or put on the shelf. Put aside as of no further use; superannuated. Said of officials and others no longer actively employed; a project, etc., begun and set aside; also, a pawn at the brokers. A SPINSTER beyond the average age of marriage is said to be on the shelf.

Shell (O.E. scell). The hard outside covering of nuts, eggs, molluscs, etc.; hence applied to other hollow coverings, as the hollow projectile filled with explosives. It is also applied to a form or class in some public and endowed schools, usually an intermediate form of some kind.

Cockle shell. See under COCKLE.

Eggshells. Many persons, after eating a boiled egg, break or crush the shell. This, according to Sir Thomas Browne:

is but a superstitious relict . . . and the intent thereof was to prevent witchcraft; for lest witches should draw or prick their names therein, and veneficially mischief their persons, they broke the shell.

Pseudodoxia Epidemica, V, xxiii.

Scallop shells. See SCALLOP.

To lie in a nutshell. See under NUT.

To retire into one's shell. To become reticent and uncommunicative, to withdraw from the society of one's fellows. The allusion is to the tortoise, which, once it has "got into its shell", is quite unget-at-able. To come out of one's shell is the reverse process, i.e. to become friendly and communicative.

To shell out. To pay or "stump up", to "fork out"; as peas are shelled out of a pod.

Shellback. Nautical slang for an old and seasoned sailor, an "old salt".

Shell jacket. An undress military jacket, fatigue jacket.

Shell shock. An acute neurasthenic condition due to the explosion of a shell or bomb at close quarters. A term originating in World War I.

Shem. The traditional ancestor of the Hebrews and other kindred peoples. Semite and Semitic derive from Shem, the eldest of the three sons of Noah (Gen. ix, 18).

Shemozzle (shi moz'l). There was a bit of a shemozzle. There was something of a fuss, a bit of a rumpus or a rough and tumble. Shemozzle (bad luck) is a YIDDISH term.

Sheol. See HADES.

Shepherd. The Good Shepherd. Jesus Christ.

I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.

John x, 11.

The Ettrick Shepherd. See ETRICK.

The Shepherd Lord. Henry, fourteenth Baron Clifford (c. 1455-1523), sent by his mother to be brought up as a shepherd, in order to save him from the fury of the YORKISTS. At the accession of Henry VII he was restored to all his rights and seigniories. He is celebrated in Wordsworth's The Song for the Feast of Brougham Castle, and The White Doe of Rylstone.

The Shepherd of Banbury. The ostensible author of a Weather Guide (published 1744), written by John Claridge, which attained considerable popularity at the time.

The Shepherd of Hermas. An allegorical work of the mid-2nd century, essentially a collection of instructions and revelations from an angelic guide for the benefit of good Christians. It has been called "the Pilgrim's Progress of the Early Church". The identity of Hermas is largely a matter of conjecture.

The Shepherd of the Ocean. So Sir Walter Raleigh was called by Spenser.

Whom when I asked from what place he came,
And how he hight, himselfe he did ycleepe
The shepheard of the Ocean, by name,
And said he came far from the main-sea deepe.
Colin Clout's Come Home Againe, 64.

The Shepherd of Salisbury Plain. A famous religious tract by Mrs. Hannah More, first published in The Cheap Repository (1795), a series of moral "tales for the people". It had enormous popularity; and the story is said to be founded on the life of one David Saunders, who was noted for his homely wisdom and practical piety, whom she turns into a sort of Christian ARCADIAN.

The Shepherd's Sundial. The SCARLET PIMPERNEL, which opens at a little past seven in the morning and closes at a little past two. When rain is at hand, or the weather is unfavourable, it does not open at all. It is also called the Shepherd's Calendar, Clock, and Watch, and the Shepherd's Weatherglass.

The Shepherd's Warning.

Red sky at night is the shepherd's delight,
Red sky in the morning is the shepherd's warning.

The Italian saying in Sera rossa e bianco mattino, allegro il pellegrino (a red evening and a white morning rejoice the pilgrim).

Sheppard, Jack (1702-1724). A notorious thief, son of a carpenter in SMITHFIELD and brought up in Bishopsgate workhouse. He was famous for his prison escapes, especially when he broke out of "the Castle" of NEWGATE via the chimney. He was soon afterwards taken and hanged at TYBURN.

"I say, master, did you ever hear tell of Mr. Wood's famous 'prentice?"

"What apprentice?" asked the stranger, in surprise.

"Why, Jack Sheppard, the notorious house-breaker—him as has robbed half Lunnon to be sure."

W. H. AINSWORTH: Jack Sheppard, III, i.

Shere Thursday. See SHEER.

Sherif (she réf'). A descendant of the Prophet MOHAMMED through his daughter FATIMA, also formerly applied to the chief magistrate of MECCA. The title was also adopted by the rulers of Morocco, who claimed descent from the Prophet through his grandson Hasan.

Sheriff (sher' if) (O.E. scirgerefa). In mediæval and later times the sheriff (shire REEVE) was an official who looked after the royal demesne in the SHIRE and, by the 11th century, the chief official for local administration. After the 13th century, the sheriffs declined in importance with the rise of new courts and officials, and today they are largely of ceremonial and minor judicial importance. The sheriff is still the chief officer of the Crown in the County. The City of London has two sheriffs and certain ancient cities (Norwich, Bristol, York, Oxford, etc.) still have one. In the U.S.A. the sheriff, usually elected, has administrative and limited judicial functions. See PRICKING FOR SHERIFFS under PRICK.

Sheriffmuir. There was mair lost at the Shirramuir. Don't grieve for your losses, for worse have befallen others before now. The battle of Sheriffmuir, in 1715, between the JACOBITES and Hanoverians was very bloody; both sides sustained heavy losses, and both sides claimed the victory.

Sherlock Holmes. The most famous figure in detective fiction, the creation of Arthur Conan Doyle (1859-1930). His solutions of crimes and mysteries were related in a series of 60 stories that appeared in the Strand Magazine between 1891 and 1927. The character was based on Dr. Joseph Bell of the Edinburgh Infirmary, whose methods of deduction suggested a system that Holmes developed into a science—the observation of the minutest details and apparently insignificant circumstances scientifically interpreted. Dr. Watson, Holmes's friend and assistant, was a skit on Doyle himself and Baker Street acquired lasting fame through his writings.

Let me have a report by wire at Baker Street before evening.

And now, Watson, it only remains for us to find out by wire the identity of the cabman.

SIR A. CONAN DOYLE:

The Hound of the Baskervilles, ch. iv.

Sherrick. Yorkshire for something very small. Used in Australia for a small amount of anything, particularly money.

Sherry. See JEREZ; SACK.

Shewbread. The name adopted by Tyndale, modelled on Luther's Schaubrot; more correctly presence-bread. Tyndale explains it as "always in the presence and sight of the Lorde". Shewbread denotes the 12 loaves for the 12 tribes, arranged in two piles on the table of shittim wood set beside the altar each week and when they were removed only the priest was allowed to partake of them. This ancient oblation is referred to in Exod. xxv, 30; Lev. xxiv, 5-9, etc.

Shibboleth (shib' o leth). A test word; a catchword or principle to which members of a group adhere long after its original significance has ceased; hence a worn-out or discredited doctrine. Shibboleth (meaning "ear of wheat", "stream", or "flood") was the word the Ephraimites could not pronounce when they were challenged at the ford on the Jordan by their pursuers, Jephthah and the Gileadites. The Ephraimites could only say Sibboleth, thus revealing themselves to the enemy (see Judges xii, 1-6).

Shick-shack Day. Royal Oak Day, 29 May, also called shig-shag. The origin of the name is obscure. See OAK-APPLE DAY.

Shield. The most famous shields in story are the Shield of ACHILLES described by HOMER, of HERCULES described by Hesiod, of ÆNEAS described by Virgil, and the ÆGIS.

Others are that of:

AGAMEMNON, a GORGON.

Amycos (son of POSEIDON), a crayfish, symbol of prudence.

CADMUS and his descendants, a DRAGON, to indicate their descent from the dragon's teeth.

Eteocles, a man scaling a wall.

HECTOR, a LION.

IDOMENEUS, a COCK.

Menelaus, a SERPENT at his heart; alluding to the elopement of his wife with PARIS.

Parthenopæus, one of the SEVEN AGAINST THEBES, a SPHINX holding a man in its claws.

ULYSSES, a DOLPHIN. Whence he is sometimes called Delphinosemos.

Servius says that in the sieges of TROY the Greeks had, as a rule, NEPTUNE on their bucklers, and the Trojans MINERVA.

It was a common custom, after a great victory, for the victorious general to hang his shield on the wall of some temple.

The clang of shields. When a CELTIC chief doomed a man to death, he struck his shield with the blunt end of his spear by way of notice to the royal BARD to begin his death-song.

Cairbar rises in his arms,

The clang of shields is heard.

OSSIAN: Temora, I.

The Gold and Silver Shield. A mediæval allegory tells how two knights coming from opposite directions stopped in sight of a shield suspended from a tree branch, one side of which was GOLD and the other SILVER, and disputed about its metal, proceeding from words to blows. Luckily a third knight came up: the point was referred to him, and the disputants were informed that the shield was silver on one side and gold on the other. Hence the sayings, The other side of the shield, It depends on which side of the shield you are looking at, etc.

The Shield of Expectation. The perfectly plain shield given to a young warrior in his maiden campaign. As he achieved glory, his deeds were recorded or symbolized on it.

Shi'ites (Arab. shi'ah, a sect). Those Mohammedans who regard ALI, MOHAMMED'S son-in-law, as the first rightful IMMAM and CALIPH. They reject the first three Sunni caliphs and all SUNNITE tradition.

Shillelagh (shi lă' la). The conventional cudgel of the Irishman made from OAK or blackthorn; so called from the village of this name in County Wicklow which is supposed to have supplied the roof timbers for WESTMINSTER Hall from its once extensive oak forest.

Shilling (O.E. scilling; which is connected with O. Teut. skel-, to resound or ring, or skil-, to divide). The shilling, as such, dates from 1504, and was originally made with a deeply indented cross, and could be easily divided into halves and quarters.

Cut off with a shilling. See under CUT.

To take the Queen's or King's shilling. To enlist; in allusion to the former practice of giving each recruit a shilling when he was sworn in.

Shilling shocker. See PENNY-DREADFUL.

Shilly shally. To hesitate, act in an undecided, irresolute way; a corruption of "Will I, shall I," or "Shall I, shall I?"

There's no delay, they ne'er stand shall I, shall I, Hermogenes with Dalila doth dally.

JOHN TAYLOR: Workes, iii, 3 (1630).

Shin. Shin Plaster. An old American and also Australian phrase still occasionally used for paper tokens issued by rural stores as small change. It is said that some storekeepers baked them to make them brittle so that they would powder to nothing in the recipients' pockets.

Shindig (shin' dig). A slang term for a dance, a noisy celebration party, etc.

Shindy. To kick up a shindy. To make a row or to create a disturbance. The word is probably connected with shinty or shimmy, a primitive kind of hockey played in SCOTLAND and the north of ENGLAND.

Shine. To take the shine out of one. To humiliate him, "take him down a PEG or two"; to outshine him.

Shingle. To hang out one's shingle. An American colloquialism meaning "to begin one's professional career". Shingle, properly a kind of wooden tile, refers to the small signboard displayed outside premises by professional men and others.

Shintoism ("The way of the Gods"). The ancient national religion of Japan, now partly supplanted by BUDDHISM. The chief of innumerable deities is Amaterasu-ōmikami, the sun goddess, from whom the imperial dynasty supposedly descended. In 1946 the Emperor divested himself of any divine attributes.

Ship. In the printing-house, the body of compositors engaged for the time being on one definite piece of work is known as a ship; this is said to be short for companionship, but it is worth noting that many printing-house terms (cp. CHAPEL; FRIAR; MONK) have an ecclesiastical origin, and ship was an old name for the nave of a church.

Private ship. In the Royal Navy, a ship other than a FLAG SHIP. A term in use by the early 17th century.

The Ship of the Desert. The camel.

The Ship of Fools. Alexander Barclay's adaptation of Sebastian Brant's Narrenschiff (1494), published as The Shyp of Follys of the Worlde (1509). The ship was manned by fools of various types and the device was used for a satire on the vices and follies of the times. It had a considerable vogue and was imitated by W. H. Ireland in his Modern Ship of Fools (1807). See COCK LORELL'S BOTE.

Ship of the line. A man-of-war with sufficient gun-power to take place in "line of battle". Fighting ships were not grouped specifically for this purpose before the mid-18th century when line battleships were divided into First Rates (three-deckers with at least 100 guns), Second Rates (three-deckers with 90 guns), Third Rates (two-deckers with 64 or 74 guns).

Losing, or spoiling a ship for a ha'porth o' tar. By saving a little to lose much. To mar a job, etc., in order to skimp. 'Ship' here is a dialect version of sheep and refers to the smearing of tar on sheep against various infections—a practice common in SHAKESPEARE'S day, e.g.:

And they [the hands] are often tarred over with the surgery of our sheep.

As You Like It, III, ii.

Ships that pass in the night. Chance acquaintances only encountered once. The phrase is from Longfellow.

Ships that pass in the night, and speak each other in passing,
Only a signal shown and a distant voice in the darkness;

So on the ocean of life we pass and speak one another,

Only a look and a voice; then darkness again and a silence.

Tales of a Wayside Inn, III. Theologian's Tale.

To take shipping. To embark, to take passage in a ship.

When my ship comes home. When my fortune is made. The allusion is to the ARGOSY returning from foreign parts laden with rich freight, and so enriching the merchant who sent it forth.

And I have better news in store for you
Than you expect: unseal this letter soon;
There you shall find three of your argosies
Are richly come to harbour suddenly.

SHAKESPEARE: The Merchant of Venice, V, I.

Ship money. An old established levy exacted from maritime towns and counties to strengthen the navy in time of need. Charles I extended the demand to inland areas in 1635, which resulted in John Hampden's famous refusal (1637) to pay his due of 20s. The judges decided against Hampden, contrary to the Petition of Right. Ship-money was made illegal by the LONG PARLIAMENT in 1641.

Shipshape. In proper order, as methodically as things in a ship. When a sailing vessel was properly rigged and equipped it was said to be "shipshape". Cp. ALL SHIPSHAPE AND BRISTOL FASHION under ALL.

Ship's husband. The agent on land who represents the owners and arranges the berthing, repairs, provisioning, etc., of the ship.

Ship keeper. The watchman who takes care of a ship in port.

Shipton, Mother. A prophetess and witch of legendary fame first recorded in a pamphlet of 1641, who is said to have foretold the death of Wolsey, Lord Percy, and others, and to have predicted the steam-engine and telegraph, etc. In 1677 Richard Head brought out a Life and Death of Mother Shipton. She was born in a cave at Knaresborough, Yorks, in 1488, baptized as Ursula Southiel and married Tony Shipton when she was 24. There is a fake "Mother Shipton's tomb" at Williton, Somerset.

Shire (O.E. scir). The main unit of local government in Anglo-Saxon England, presided over by an ealdorman but from the 10th century by a SHERIFF. Shires were divided into HUNDREDS or WAPENTAKES and after the NORMAN CONQUEST the name county was applied to a shire.

The Shires. The English counties whose names terminate in -shire; but, in a narrower sense, the Midland counties noted for fox-hunting, especially Leicestershire, Northamptonshire, and Rutland. The inhabitants of East Anglia, Kent, Sussex, Essex and Surrey apply this term to the rest of ENGLAND.

To come out of the shires. To come from a considerable distance; a phrase from Kent, which was surrounded by Surrey, Sussex, Middlesex, and Essex, none of which is suffixed with shire.

Knight of the Shire. See under KNIGHT.

The Rider of the Shires. See RIDER.

Shire horse. The old breed of large, heavily built cart-horse, originally bred in the Midlands.

Shire Moot. See MOOT.

Shirt. A boiled shirt. A white shirt, or more usually nowadays, one with a starched front.

Hair shirt. A shirt made of haircloth worn by penitents. See TO WEAR SACK-CLOTH AND ASHES under SACK.

The shirt of Nessus. See NESSUS.

A stuffed shirt. Said of a pompous non-entity; a bore.

Close sits my shirt, but closer my skin. An old proverb meaning that self-interest comes first.

Not a shirt to one's name. "Not a rag to one's back." Penniless.

To give the shirt off one's back. All one has.

To keep one's shirt on. To keep one's temper.

To put one's shirt on a horse. To back it with all the money one possesses.

Shirts as party emblems. See BLACK-SHIRTS; BLUE SHIRTS; BROWN SHIRTS; GARIBALDI'S RED SHIRT; GREENSHIRT.

Shirty. Bad-tempered; very cross and offended; in the state you are in when somebody has "got your shirt out".

Shiva. See SIVA.

Shivaree (shiv' ěrĕ). The word is a corruption of CHARIVARI, and in the U.S.A. means the mocking serenade accorded to newly married people.

Shiver. Shiver my timbers. An imprecation used by "stage-sailors" and popular with children's story writers.

Shivering Mountain. Mam Tor, a hill on the Peak of Derbyshire; so called from the waste of its mass by "shivering"—that is, breaking away in "shivers" or small pieces. This has been going on for ages, as the hill consists of alternate layers of shale and gritstone. The former, being soft, is easily reduced to powder, and as it crumbles small "shivers" of the gritstone break away for want of support.

Shoe. It was once thought unlucky to put on the left shoe before the right, or to put either shoe on the wrong foot.

It has long been a custom to throw an old shoe at the bride and bridegroom when they depart from the wedding breakfast or when they go to church to get married. Now it is more usual to tie an old shoe to their carriage or motor-car. To throw a shoe after someone is an ancient way of bringing good luck. The custom has been variously interpreted.

In Anglo-Saxon marriages, the father delivered the bride's shoe to the bridegroom who touched her on the head with it to show his authority.

Loosing the shoe (cp. Josh. v, 15) is a mark of respect in the East. The MOSLEM leaves his slippers at the door of the mosque. In Deut. xxv, 5-10, we read that the widow refused by her husband's surviving brother, asserted her independence by "loosing his shoe"; and in the story of Ruth (iv, 7) we are told that it was the custom in exchange to deliver a shoe in token of confirmation. "A man without sandals" was a proverbial expression among the Jews for a prodigal, from the custom of giving one's sandals in confirmation of a bargain.

Scot (Discoverie of Witchcraft, 1584) tells us that "many will go to bed again if they sneeze before their shoes be on their feet".

Another man's shoes. "To stand in another man's shoes" is to occupy the place of another. Among the ancient Northmen, when a man adopted a son, the person adopted put on the shoes of the adopter.

In REYNARD THE FOX, Reynard, having turned the tables on Sir Bruin the Bear, asked the queen to let him have the shoes of the disgraced minister; so Bruin's shoes were torn off and put upon the new favourite.

Another pair of shoes. A different thing altogether; quite another matter.

His shoes are made of running leather. He is given to roving.

Over Edom will I cast out my shoe (Ps. lx, 8; cviii, 9), i.e. will I march and triumph.

Over shoes, over boots. "In for a penny, in for a pound." See under PENNY.

Where true courage roots
The proverb says, "once over shoes, o'er boots."
JOHN TAYLOR: Workes, ii, 145 (1630).

A shoe too large trips one up. A Latin proverb, Calceus major subvertit. An empire too large falls to pieces; a business too large comes to grief; an ambition too large fails altogether.

To die in one's shoes. To die a violent death, especially one on the scaffold.

And there is M'Fuze, and Lieutenant Tregooze,
And there is Sir Carnaby Jenks of the Blues,
All come to see a man die in his shoes.

BARHAM:
Ingoldsby Legends (The Execution).

To shake in one's shoes. To be in a state of fear or nervous terror.

To shoe the anchor. To cover the flukes of an anchor with a broad triangular piece of a plank, in order that the anchor may have a stronger hold in soft ground.

To shoe the cobbler. To give a quick peculiar movement with the front foot in sliding.

To shoe a goose. To engage in a silly and fruitless task.

To shoe the wild colt. To exact a fine called "footing" from a newcomer, who is called the "colt". Colt is a common synonym for a GREENHORN, or a youth not broken in.

Waiting for dead men's shoes. Looking out for a legacy; waiting to take the place of another when he has passed on to retirement or death.

Where the shoe pinches. "No one knows where the shoe pinches like the wearer" is the reputed saying of a Roman sage who was blamed for divorcing his wife, with whom he seemed to live happily.

For, God it wot, he sat ful still and song
When that his scho ful bitterly him wrong.

CHAUCER:
Wife of Bath's Tale, Prologue, 492.

The cause of the trouble, or where the difficulty lies, is called "the place where the shoe pinches".

Whose shoes I am not worthy to bear (Matt. iii, 11). This means, "I am not worthy to be his humblest slave." It was the business of a slave recently purchased to loose and carry his master's sandals.

Shoemakers. Shoemaking is called the GENTLE CRAFT and its patron saint is CRISPIN.

Shoestring. To live on a shoestring. To manage on very little money.

Shofar (shō' far). A Hebrew trumpet still used in the modern SYNAGOGUE. It is made of the horn of a ram or any ceremonially clean animal, and produces only the natural series of harmonics from its fundamental note.

Shogun (shō' gūn) ("Army leader"). The Shoguns were hereditary commanders-in-chief who seized political power in Japan at the end of the 12th century. The MIKADO did not fully regain power until 1868. Cp. TYCOON.

Shoot (M.E. shoten, dart forth, rush). See also SHOT.

Shoot! Go ahead; say what you have to say. Let's have it! In film studios it is the word used for the cameras to begin turning.

To go the whole shoot. To do all there is to do, go the whole HOG, run through the gamut.

To shoot down in flames. To refute the arguments of an opponent devastatingly and completely. A METAPHOR from aerial warfare.

To shoot a line. To boast extravagantly.

To shoot one's linen. To display an unnecessary amount of shirt-cuff; to show off.

To shoot the moon. To remove one's household goods by night to avoid distraint; to "do a moonlight flit".

To shoot Niagara. To embark on a desperate enterprise.

To shoot the sun. A nautical colloquialism meaning to take the sun's meridional altitude with a sextant.

Shooting-iron. Slang (originally American) for a firearm, especially a revolver.

Shooting stars. Incandescent meteors shooting across the sky, formerly, like comets, fabled to presage disaster:

A little ere the mightiest Julius fell,
The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted dead
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets;
As stars with trains of fire and dews of blood,
Disasters in the sun.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, i.

They were called in ancient legends the "fiery tears of St. LAWRENCE"; because one of the periodic swarms of these meteors is between 9 and 14 AUGUST, about the time of St. Lawrence's festival, which is on the 10th. Other periods are from 12 to 14 November, and from 6 to 12 December.

Shooting stars are said by the Arabs to be firebrands hurled by the ANGELS against the inquisitive genii, who are forever clambering up on the constellations to peep into HEAVEN.

Shooting war. A real war as distinct from a COLD WAR.

Shop. The Shop. In military slang, the former Royal Military Academy at Woolwich which removed to Sandhurst in 1946; on the Stock Exchange it is the South African gold market.

All over the shop. Scattered in every direction, all over the place; or pursuing an erratic course.

Closed shop. A term, first used in the U.S.A., to characterize shops or factories from which non-union labour is excluded.

Open shop. The reverse of a CLOSED SHOP.

To shop a person. To put him in prison, or inform against him so that he is arrested; similarly, a billiard player will speak of "shopping the white", i.e. putting his opponent's ball down in the pocket.

To shut up shop. To retire or withdraw from participation in an undertaking.

To talk shop. To talk about one's trade, occupation, business, etc.

You've come to the wrong shop. I can't help you, I can't give you the information, and so on, you require.

Shop steward. The elected trade union representative of a factory or workshop who acts as the link with the local union branch, keeps watch on union membership, etc., and has certain negotiating functions with the management.

Shopkeepers. A nation of shopkeepers. This phrase, applied to Englishmen by NAPOLEON in contempt, comes from Adam Smith's The Wealth of Nations (iv, 7). This book, well known to the Emperor, says:

To found a great empire for the sole purpose of raising up a people of customers, may at first sight appear a project fit only for a nation of shopkeepers.

Shoreditch. The legend that this LONDON district takes its name from Edward IV's mistress, Jane Shore, derives from a ballad in the Pepys' collection, a version of which is given in PERCY'S RELIQUES:

Thus, weary of my life, at length
I yielded up my vital strength
Within a ditch of loathsome scent,
Where carrion dogs did much frequent:
The which now since my dying daye,
Is Shoreditch called, as writers saye.

It is also suggested that the name comes from Soerdich, or Shorditch, the family who once held the manor, and Bishop Percy says it is "from its being a common sewer (vulgarly 'shore' or drain); but it is most probably "the ditch leading to the shore" (of the Thames). According to the old ballad it was in Shoreditch that George Barnwell was led astray:

Good Barnwell, then quoth she,
Do thou to Shoreditch come,
And ask for Mrs. Millwood's house,
Next door unto the Gun.

The Duke of Shoreditch. An archer of this parish is said to have been so called by Henry VIII for his success in an archery contest at Windsor. The title was long playfully applied to the Captain of the Company of Archers of London.

Shorne, or Schorne, John. Rector of North Marston, Buckinghamshire (c. 1290-1314), in the church of which was once a shrine in his honour. He was renowned for his piety and miraculous powers. He blessed a local well giving it legendary healing properties and also "conjured the DEVIL into a boot". His shrine became so frequented by pilgrims that, in 1481, the DEAN and CHAPTER of Windsor, owners of the ADVOWSON, with papal permission, removed his shrine and relics to Windsor.

Short. Pepin, or Pippin the Short. Pippin III, MAYOR OF THE PALACE, father of CHARLEMAGNE and founder of the CAROLINGIAN dynasty of French kings. He deposed the last of the MEROVINGIANS, Childeric III, in 751 and reigned as King of the FRANKS until 768. He was the son of Charles Martel.

Short commons. See COMMONS.

Short Parliament (13 April-5 May 1640). The abortive PARLIAMENT summoned by Charles I after his ELEVEN YEARS' TYRANNY to procure supplies to fight the Scots. The Commons insisted on redress of grievances and Charles dissolved Parliament.

Short thigh. See CURTHOSE.

A drop of something short. A tot of whisky, gin, etc., as opposed to a "long drink" such as a glass of beer.

Cut it short! Don't be so prolix, come to the point; "cut the cackle and come to the 'osses". Said to a speaker who goes round and round his subject.

My name is Short. I'm in a hurry and cannot wait.

Well, but let us hear the wishes (said the old man); my name is short, and I cannot stay much longer.

W. B. YEATS: Fairy Tales of the Irish Peasant (The Devil, The Three Wishes).

The short cut is often the longest way round. It does not always pay to avoid taking a little trouble; short cuts don't always pay. Francis Bacon says:

It is in life, as it is in ways, the shortest way is commonly the foulest, and surely the faire way is not much about.

Advancement of Learning.

To break off short. Abruptly, without warning, but completely.

To make short work of it. To dispose of it quickly, to deal summarily with it.

To sell short. A Stock Exchange phrase meaning to sell stock that one does not at the moment possess, on the chance that it may be acquired at a lower rate before the date of delivery; the same as "selling for a fall", or "selling a BEAR".

To win by a short head. Only just to outdistance one's competitors, to win with practically nothing to spare. The phrase is from horse-racing.

To short-circuit. Metaphorically to take a short cut, especially when dealing with officialdom; a figure from electricians in which a short-circuit is a deviation of current along a path of lower resistance.

Shorter Catechism. One of the two Catechisms (the Larger and Shorter) drawn up by the WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY in 1647 and adopted by the English PARLIAMENT and the Scottish General Assembly. The Shorter Catechism proved its instructional worth and came into regular use among PRESBYTERIANS, Baptists, and later, WESLEYANS.

Shot (O.E. sceot, arrow, dart, etc.). A missile weapon.

A big shot. An important person. A development of the 19th-century "great gun" or "big bug".

He shot wide of the mark. He was altogether wrong. The allusion to target-shooting is obvious.

I haven't a shot in the locker. My last resources are spent; I've run right out of food, drink, money, etc. The reference is to the ammunition locker of a warship.

Like a shot. With great rapidity; or, without hesitation; most willingly.

A long shot. A remote chance, such as hazarding a highly improbable guess.

Parthian shot. See PARTHIAN.

A shot in the arm. A drink of whisky, etc., something which puts new life into one; an allusion to hypodermic injections of morphine, cocaine, etc.

A shot in the dark. A wild guess, a random conjecture.

To have a shot at. To have a try, to make an attempt at something particular in which you make no claim to expertise.

Shot. Akin to Scot (see SCOT AND LOT). A reckoning, share of an ale-house bill, etc.

To stand shot. To pay the bill.

Shotgun wedding. One forced upon the couple by the bride's pregnancy.

Shotten Herring. A lean, spiritless creature, a JACK-O'-LENT, like a herring that has shot, or ejected, its spawn. Herrings gutted and dried are likewise so called.

Though they like shotten-herrings are to see,
Yet such tall soldiers of their teeth they be,
That two of them, like greedy cormorants,
Devour more than six honest Protestants.

TAYLOR: Workes, iii, 5 (1630).

Shoulder. The government shall be upon his shoulder (Is. ix, 6). An allusion to the key slung on the shoulder of Jewish stewards on public occasions. See THE KEY SHALL BE UPON HIS SHOULDER under KEY.

Straight from the shoulder. With full force, physically, or verbally. A term from boxing.

To set, or put one's shoulder to the wheel. See under PUT.

Shout, To (Austr.). To stand a round of drinks.

All over but the shouting. Success is so certain that only the applause is lacking. The phrase, perhaps, derives from elections.

Shovel Board. In the 16th and 17th centuries a popular game in which three counters or coins were shoved or slid over a smooth board. The "two Edward shovel-boards" mentioned in SHAKESPEARE'S Merry Wives of Windsor (I, i), were the broad shillings of Edward VI used in playing the game.

Shovel Hat. A broad-brimmed black hat curved up at the sides producing a shovel-like projection at back and front; formerly favoured by CLERGY. Hence shovel-hat as a colloquialism for an ecclesiastic.

Show (Austr.). A gold mine. "Give him a show", give him a chance, i.e. originally, let him stake out his own claim.

To have a show-down. To reveal the strength of one's position; to have a final confrontation in a dispute to settle the matter or to clear the air. As in poker, cards are put face upwards on the table.

To show one's hand. To reveal one's motives or intentions, as in displaying one's hand at cards.

Shrew-mouse. This small insectivorous animal was fabled to have the power of harming cattle, etc., by running over their backs and to lame the foot over which it ran. Gilbert White tells of a shrew-ash, the twigs of which, if applied to the limbs of beasts harmed by the shrew-mouse, give relief. This tree was one in which a deep hole had been bored and a shrew-mouse thrust in alive; the hole was then plugged. (Natural History of Selborne, Letter xxviii). It was also ill luck to encounter a shrew-mouse when beginning a journey.

Shrift, Shrive. To shrive a person was to prescribe penance after confession and to absolve. Cp. SHROVETIDE.

To give short shrift to. To make short work of. Short shrift was the few minutes in which a criminal about to be executed was allowed to make his confession.

Shrivatsa. See VISHNU.

Shropshire. The O.E. name for the county was Scrobbesbyrigscir, "the shire with Shrewsbury as its head". The Norman name was Salopescira, hence Salop as a synonym for the county and Salopian for a native.

Shrovetide. The three days just before the opening of LENT, when people went to confession and afterwards indulged in all sorts of sports and merry-making.

Shrove Tuesday. The day before ASH WEDNESDAY; "PANCAKE DAY". It used to be the great "DERBY DAY" of COCK-FIGHTING in England.

Or martyr beat, like Shrovetide cocks, with bats. PETER PINDAR: Subjects for Painters: Scene, The Royal Academy, III.

Shun-pike (U.S.A.). A side-road is so called because it is used to avoid the pike, or turnpike, where toll had to be paid.

Shut up. Slang for "HOLD your tongue"; shut up your mouth.

Shy. To have a shy at anything. To fling at it.

Shylock, A (shi' lok). A grasping, stony-hearted moneylender; in allusion to the Jew in SHAKESPEARE'S Merchant of Venice.

A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From all dreams of mercy.

IV, i.

Si (sē). See ARETINIAN SYLLABLES.

Si Quis (si kwis) (Lat., if anyone). A notice to all whom it may concern, given in the parish church before ordination, that a resident means to offer himself as a candidate for HOLY ORDERS (see under ORDERS); and if anyone knows any just cause or impediment thereto, he is to declare the same to the BISHOP.

Sibyl (sib'il). A prophetess of classical legend, who was supposed to prophesy under the inspiration of a deity; the name is now applied to any prophetess or woman fortune-teller. There were a number of sibyls, and they had their seats in widely separate parts of the world—Greece, Italy, Babylonia, Egypt, etc.

PLATO mentions only one, viz. the Erythraean—identified with AMALTHEA, the Cumæan Sibyl, who was consulted by ÆNEAS and accompanied him into HADES and who sold the SIBYLLINE BOOKS to TARQUIN; Martin Capella speaks of two, the Erythraean and the Phrygian; Ælian of four, the Erythraean, Samian, Egyptian, and Sardinian; Varro tells us that there were ten, viz. the Cumæan, the Delphic, Egyptian, Erythraean, Hellespontine, Libyan, Persian, Phrygian, Samian, and Tiburtine.

How know we but that she may be an eleventh
Sibyl or a second Cassandra?
RABELAIS: Gargantua and Pantagruel, III, xvi.

The mediæval monks "adopted" the sibyls—as they did so much of pagan myth; they made them 12, and gave to each a separate prophecy and distinct emblem:

(1) The Libyan: "The day shall come when men shall see the King of all living things." Emblem, a lighted taper.

(2) The Samian: "The Rich One shall be born of a pure virgin." Emblem, a rose.

(3) The Cuman: "Jesus Christ shall come from heaven, and live and reign in poverty on earth." Emblem, a crown.

(4) The Cumæan: "God shall be born of a pure virgin, and hold converse with sinners." Emblem, a cradle.

(5) The Erythraean: "Jesus Christ, Son of God, the Saviour." Emblem, a horn.

(6) The Persian: "Satan shall be overcome by a true prophet." Emblem, a dragon under the sibyl's feet, and a lantern.

(7) The Tiburtine: "The Highest shall descend from heaven, and a virgin be shown in the valleys of the deserts." Emblem, a dove.

(8) The Delphic: "The Prophet born of the virgin shall be crowned with thorns." Emblem, a crown of thorns.

(9) The Phrygian: "Our Lord shall rise again." Emblem, a banner and a cross.

(10) The European: "A virgin and her Son shall flee into Egypt." Emblem, a sword.

(11) The Agrippine: "Jesus Christ shall be outraged and scourged." Emblem, a whip.

(12) The Hellespontic: "Jesus Christ shall suffer shame upon the cross." Emblem, a T cross.

Sibylline Books, The. A collection of oracular utterances preserved in ancient ROME and consulted by the Senate in times of emergency or disaster. According to Livy, there were originally nine books offered to TARQUIN by the SIBYL of Cumæ but the offer was rejected, and she burnt three of them. She offered the remaining six at the same price. Again, being refused, she burnt three more. The remaining three were then bought by the King for the original sum.

The three books were preserved in a vault of the temple of JUPITER Capitolinus, and committed to the charge of custodians, ultimately 15 in number. These books were destroyed by fire in 83 B.C. A new collection of verses was made from those preserved in the cities of Greece, Italy, and Asia Minor, and deposited in the rebuilt temple. These were transferred to the temple of APOLLO by AUGUSTUS in 12 B.C. and were said to have been destroyed by Stilicho (c. 405).

Sibylline Oracles. A collection of 15 books, 12 of which are extant, of 2nd- and 3rd-century authorship, and written by Jews and Christians in imitation of the SIBYLLINE BOOKS. Their aim was to gain converts to their respective faiths.

Sic (sik) (Lat., thus, so). A word used by reviewers, quoters, etc., after a doubtful word or phrase, or a misspelling, to indicate that it is here printed exactly as in the original and to call attention to the fact that it is wrong in some way.

Sic transit gloria mundi. See under GLORIA.

Sicilies, The Two. The old name for the Spanish Bourbon Kingdom of Naples and Sicily formerly united under their Angevin rulers in the 13th century. The Two Sicilies were annexed to the Kingdom of Italy in 1860.

Sicilian Vespers. The massacre of the French in Sicily on EASTER Monday (30 March) 1282, which began on the stroke of the vesper-bell. It was occasioned by the brutality and tyranny of Charles of Anjou's rule.

Sick Man, The. So Nicholas I of Russia (in 1844 and subsequently) called the Turkish Empire, which had long been in decline. His hints to Great Britain in 1853 of a partition were ignored.

I repeat to you that the sick man is dying; and we must never allow such an event to take us by surprise.

Annual Register, 1853.

Don John, Governor-General of the Netherlands, so spoke of his charge when writing to his master Philip II in 1579.

"Money is the gruel," said he, "with which we must cure this sick man."

MOTLEY:

Rise of the Dutch Republic, Pt. V, ch. ii.

Side. On the side of the angels. The famous phrase with which Disraeli thought he had settled the problems raised by Darwin's theory of the origin of species. It occurred in his speech at the Oxford Diocesan Conference in 1864:

The question is this: Is man an ape or an angel? Now I am on the side of the angels.

It was the same statesman who said in the HOUSE OF COMMONS (14 May 1866), "Ignorance never settles a question."

Putting on side. Giving oneself airs; being bumptious. To put on side in billiards is to give your ball a twist or spin with the cue as you strike it.

To side-track. Originally an American RAIL-ROAD term; hence to divert, to put on one side, to shelve.

Sideburns. Short side-whiskers, originally called burnsides after the American Federal General Ambrose Everett Burnside (1824-1881) who wore side-whiskers.

Siege Perilous. In the cycle of ARTHURIAN ROMANCES a seat at the ROUND TABLE which was kept vacant for him who should accomplish the quest of the Holy GRAIL. For any less a person to sit in it was fatal. At the crown of his achievement Sir GALAHAD took his seat in the Siege Perilous.

Siegfried (zēg' frēd), or Sigurd. Hero of the first part of the NIBELUNGENLIED. He was the youngest son of Siegmund and Sieglind, King and Queen of the Netherlands.

Siegfried's cloak of invisibility, called "tarnkappe" (tarnen, to conceal; Kappe, a cloak). It not only made the wearer invisible, but also gave him the strength of 12 men.

Siegfried Line. The defences built by the Germans on their western frontier before and after 1939 as a reply to France's MAGINOT LINE. The British song, popular in 1939, "We're gonna hang out the washing on the Siegfried Line" was somewhat premature. When Canadian troops penetrated the Line in 1945 they hung up a number of sheets with a large notice on which was written "The Washing".

Sieve and Shears. An ancient form of DIVINATION mentioned by THEOCRITUS. The points of the shears were stuck in the wooden rim of the sieve and two persons supported it upright with the tips of their two fingers. Then a verse of the BIBLE was read aloud, and St. PETER and St. PAUL were asked if the guilty person was A, B, or C (naming those suspected). When the guilty person was named the sieve would suddenly turn round. This method was also used to tell if a couple would marry, etc.

Searching for things lost with a sieve and shears.
BEN JONSON: Alchemist, I, 1.

Sight. In archaic usage, it often denotes a "multitude" or large number of persons or objects.

Second sight. See under SECOND.

A sight for sore eyes. Something that it is very pleasurable to see or witness, especially something unexpected.

Though lost to sight, to memory dear. This occurs in a song by George Linley (c. 1835), but is found as an "axiom" in the Monthly Magazine, January, 1827, and is probably earlier than this.

To do a thing on sight. At once, without any hesitation.

Sign. Royal Sign Manual. The signature of the monarch used on orders, commissions, and warrants. The earliest known royal signature is that of Edward III, prior to which marks or seals were used. Under certain restrictions a stamp is used for minor documents.

To sign off. In the 9th century this denoted finally leaving one religious organisation for another. It is generally used to mean "finishing" or terminating a performance, etc.

To sign on the dotted line. To fully accept the terms offered; from the space indicated by dots reserved for a person's signature on printed forms.

Signature tune. A musical theme played regularly as a means of identification to introduce a dance band, artist, or regularly broadcast programme, etc.

Significavit (sig ni fi cā' vit). An obsolete CHANCERY writ given by the ORDINARY to keep an excommunicate (see EXCOMMUNICATION) in prison till he submitted to the authority of the Church. From its opening words Significavit nobis venerabilis pater. Chaucer says of his Somp-nour:

And also ware him of a significavit.
Canterbury Tales (Prologue), 664.

Sigurd. The SIEGFRIED of the Volsunga SAGA, the Scandinavian version of the NIBELUNGENLIED. He falls in love with BRUNHILD but under the influence of a love-potion marries GUDRUN, a union with fateful consequences.

Sikes, Bill. The type of a ruffianly house-breaker, from the character of that name in Dickens's Oliver Twist.

Silence. Amyclæan Silence. See AMYCLÆAN.

The Argument of Silence (Lat. argumentum e silentio). The conclusion that, if the works of an author omit all reference to a particular subject, the writer was unaware of it.

Silence gives consent. A saying, common to many languages, founded on the old Latin legal maxim—Qui tacet consentire videtur (who is silent is held to consent).

But that you shall not say I yield, being silent,
I would not speak.

SHAKESPEARE: Cymbeline, II, iii.

Silence is golden. See SPEECH.

The rest is silence. The last words of the dying Hamlet (SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, V, ii).

Towers of Silence. The small towers on which the PARSEES and ZOROASTRIANS place their dead to be consumed by birds of prey. The bones are picked clean in the course of a day, and are then thrown into a receptacle covered with charcoal.

Parsees do not burn or bury their dead, because they consider a corpse impure, and they will not defile any of the elements. They carry it on a bier to the tower. At the entrance they look their last on the body, and the corpse-bearers carry it within the precincts and lay it down to be devoured by vultures which are constantly on the watch.

Two-minute silence. The cessation of traffic and all other activities for two minutes at 11 a.m. on 11 November to commemorate those who died in World War I. First observed in 1919, it remained a central feature of REMEMBRANCE DAY.

William the Silent. William IX, of Orange (1533-1584), so called because when (1559) Henry II of France, thinking that he would be a ready accomplice, revealed to him the plans for a general massacre of PROTESTANTS:

the Prince, although horror-struck and indignant at the Royal revelations, held his peace, and kept his countenance. . . . William of Orange earned the name of "the Silent", from the manner in which he received the communications of Henry without revealing to the monarch by word or look, the enormous blunder which he had committed.

MOTLEY:

The Rise of the Dutch Republic, Pt. II, i.

Silenus (si lē' nūs). The drunken attendant and nurse of BACCHUS, represented as a fat, jovial old man, always full of liquor, riding an ass.

Within his car, aloft, young Bacchus stood,
Trifling his ivy-dart, in dancing mood,
With sidelong laughing; . . .
And near him rode Silenus on his ass,
Pelted with flowers as he on did pass
Tipsisly quaffing.

KEATS: Endymion, IV, 209.

Silhouette. A profile drawing of a person giving the outline only, and all within the outline in black; hence a shadow and, figuratively, a slight literary sketch of a person or other subject. Derived from the French minister of Finance, Etienne de Silhouette (1709-1767), noted for his parsimony in public expenditure. His name was applied to things made cheaply.

Silk. To take silk. Said of a BARRISTER who has been appointed a QUEEN'S COUNSEL (Q.C.) because he then exchanges his stuff gown for a silk one.

You cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear. You cannot make something good of what is by nature bad or inferior in quality. "You cannot make a horn of a pig's tail."

Silly is the German selig (blessed) and used to mean in English "happy through being innocent"; whence the infant Jesus was termed "the harmless silly babe", and sheep were called "silly". As the innocent are easily taken in by worldly cunning, the word came to signify "gullible", "foolish".

Silly Billy. A nickname applied to William IV (1765, 1830-1837).

Silly-how. An old name—still used in SCOTLAND—for a child's caul. It is a rough translation of the German term Glückshaube, lucky cap. The caul has always been supposed to bring luck to its original possessor.

The silly season. An obsolescent journalistic expression for the part of the year when PARLIAMENT and the Law Courts are not sitting (about August and September), when, through lack of news, the papers had to fill their columns with trivial items—such as news of giant gooseberries and sea serpents—and long correspondence on subjects of evanescent (if any) interest.

Silly Suffolk. Possibly so called from its many churches and religious houses. See SILLY above.

Silurian. Of or pertaining to the ancient British tribe, the Silures, or the district they inhabited, viz. Monmouth, Glamorgan, Brecon, Radnor and Hereford. The "sparkling wines of the Silurian vats" are cider and perry.

From Silurian vats, high-sparkling wines
Foam in transparent floods.

THOMSON: The Seasons (Autumn, 656).

Silurian rocks. A name given by Sir Roderick Murchison (1835) to what miners call gray-wacke and Werner termed transition rocks, because it was in the SILURIAN district (English-Welsh border) that he first investigated their structure.

The Silurist. A surname adopted by the mystical poet Henry Vaughan (1621-1695), who was born and died in Brecknockshire.

Silver. In England standard silver (i.e. that used for coinage) formerly consisted of thirty-seven-fortieths of fine silver and three-fortieths of alloy (finesness, 925); in 1925 the proportions were changed to one-half silver, one-half alloy (finesness, 500). In 1946 cupronickel coins were introduced to replace silver. See HALL MARK; LEGAL TENDER.

Among the ancient alchemists silver represented the MOON or DIANA; in HERALDRY it is known by its French name ARGENT (which also gives its chemical symbol, Ag), and is indicated on engravings by the silver (argent) portion being left blank.

The Silver Age. According to Hesiod and the Greek and Roman poets, the second of the AGES of the World; fabled as a period that was voluptuous and godless, and much inferior in simplicity and true happiness to the GOLDEN AGE.

The silver cooper. A kidnapper. "To play the silver cooper", to kidnap. A cooper is one who "coops up" another.

Silver of Guthrum. See GUTHRUM.

Silver Star. A United States military decoration for gallantry in action. It consists of a bronze star bearing a small silver star in its centre.

The Silver Streak. The English Channel.

Silver Wedding. The twenty-fifth anniversary, when presents of silver plate (in Germany a silver wreath) are given to the happy pair.

Thirty pieces of silver. The sum of money that Judas Iscariot received from the chief priests for the betrayal of his Master (Matt. xxvi, 15); hence used proverbially of a bribe or "BLOOD-MONEY" (see under BLOOD).

Born with a silver spoon in one's mouth. See under BORN.

A silver lining. The prospect of better things and happier times. The saying Every cloud has a silver lining is an old one; thus in Milton's Comus (I, 274) the lady lost in the wood resolves to hope on, and sees:

A sable cloud
Turn forth its silver lining on the night.

Speech is silver. See under SPEECH.

With silver weapons you may conquer the world. The Delphic ORACLE to Philip of Macedon, when he went to consult it. Philip, acting on this advice, sat down before a fortress which his staff pronounced to be impregnable. "You shall see," said the king, "how an ass laden with silver will find an entrance."

The Silver-Fork School. A name given in amused contempt (c. 1830) to the novelists who were sticklers for the etiquette and graces of the UPPER TEN (see under TEN) and showed great respect for the affectations of gentility. Theodore Hook, Lady Blessington, and Bulwer Lytton might be taken as representatives of it.

Silver-tongued. An epithet bestowed on many persons famed for eloquence; especially William Bates, the PURITAN divine (1625-1699); Anthony Hammond, the poet (1688-1738); Henry Smith, preacher (c. 1550-1591); and Joshua Sylvester (1563-1618), translator of Du Bartas.

Simeon, St. (sim' ē ōn), the son of Cleophas, is usually depicted as bearing in his arms the infant Jesus or receiving Him in the TEMPLE. His feast day is 18 February.

St. Simeon Stylites. See STYLITES.

Similia similibus curantur (sim il' ia si mil' i būs kū rān' ter) (Lat.). Like cures like; or as we say, "Take a hair of the dog that bit you." (See under HAIR.)

Sim(p)kin. Anglo-Indian for champagne — of which word it is an Urdu mispronunciation.

Simnel Cakes. Rich cakes formerly eaten (especially in Lancashire) on MID-LENT SUNDAY (MOTHERING SUNDAY), EASTER, and CHRISTMAS DAY. They were ornamented with scallops, and were eaten at Mid-Lent in commemoration of the banquet given by Joseph to his brethren, which forms the first lesson of Mid-Lent Sunday, and the feeding of the five thousand, which forms the GOSPEL of the day.

The word simnel is through O. Fr. from Late Lat. siminellus, fine bread, Lat. simila, the finest wheat flour.

Simon, St. (Zelotes) is represented with a saw in his hand, in allusion to the instrument of his martyrdom. He sometimes bears fish in his other hand, in allusion to his occupation as a fisherman. His feast day is 28 October.

Simon Magus. Isidore tells us that Simon Magus died in the reign of NERO, and adds that he had proposed a dispute with PETER and PAUL, and had promised to fly up to HEAVEN. He succeeded in rising high into the air, but at the prayers of the two APOSTLES he was cast down to earth by the evil spirits who had enabled him to rise.

Milman, in his History of Christianity (ii) tells another story. He says that Simon offered to be buried alive, and declared that he would reappear on the third day. He was actually buried in a deep trench, "but to this day," says Hippolytus, "his disciples have failed to witness his resurrection".

His followers were known as Simonians, and the sin of which he was guilty, viz. the trafficking in sacred things, the buying and selling of ecclesiastical offices (see Acts viii, 18) is still called simony.

Simon Pure. The real man, the authentic article, etc. In Mrs. Centlivre's Bold Stroke for a Wife, a Colonel Feignwell passes himself off for Simon Pure, a QUAKER, and wins the heart of Miss Lovely. No sooner does he get the assent of her guardian than the Quaker turns up, and proves beyond a doubt he is the "real Simon Pure". In modern usage, a hypocrite, making a great parade of virtue.

Simple Simon. A simpleton, a gullible booby; from the character in the well-known anonymous nursery tale, who "met a pie-man".

Simonism. See SAINT-SIMONISM.

Simple, The. Charles III of France (879, 893-929).

The simple life. A mode of living in which the object is to eliminate as far as possible all luxuries and extraneous aids to happiness, etc., returning to the simplicity of life as imagined by the pastoral poets.

Sin, according to Milton, is twin keeper with Death of the gates of HELL. She sprang full-grown from the head of SATAN.

... Woman to the waist, and fair
But ending foul in many a scaly fold
Voluminous and vast, a serpent armed With mortal sting.

Paradise Lost, II, 650-3.

Original Sin. That corruption which is born with us, and is the inheritance of all the offspring of ADAM. Theology teaches that as Adam was founder of his race when Adam fell the taint and penalty of his disobedience passed to all posterity.

The Man of Sin (II Thess. ii, 3). Generally held to signify ANTICHRIST, and applied by the PURITANS to the POPE, by the FIFTH MONARCHY MEN to Cromwell, etc.

The seven deadly sins. Pride, Wrath, Envy, Lust, Gluttony, Avarice, and Sloth. "Sin on" Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Sin-eaters. Persons hired at funerals in olden days, to eat beside the corpse and so take upon themselves the sins of the deceased, that the soul might be delivered from PURGATORY. In Carmarthen-shire the sin-eater used to rest a plate of salt on the breast of the deceased and place a piece of bread on the salt. After saying an incantation over the bread it was consumed by the sin-eater and with it he ate the sins of the dead.

To earn the wages of sin. To be hanged or condemned to death.

The wages of sin is death.
Rom. vi, 23.

To sin one's mercies. To be ungrateful for the gifts of Providence.

Sinbad the Sailor. The hero of the story of this name in THE ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS. He was a wealthy citizen of Baghdad, called "The Sailor" because of his seven voyages in which, among many adventures, he discovered the ROC's egg and the Valley of Diamonds, and killed the OLD MAN OF THE SEA.

Sine (Lat.). Without.

Sine die (Lat.). No time being fixed; indefinitely in regard to time. When a proposal is deferred sine die, it is deferred without fixing a day for its reconsideration, which is virtually "for ever".

Sine qua non (Lat.). An indispensable condition. Lat. Sine qua non potest esse or feri (that without which [the thing] cannot be, or be done).

Sinecure (Lat. sine cura, without cure, or care). An enjoyment of the emoluments attached to a benefice without having the trouble of the "cure"; applied to any office to which a salary is attached without any duties to perform. Government sinecures were a particular feature of 18th-century political life. Cp. PLACEMENT.

Sinews of War. Essential funds for the prosecution of a war. Troops have to be paid and fed and the materials of war are costly.

The English phrase comes from Cicero's Nervos belli pecuniam (Phil. V, ii, 5), money makes the sinews of war. Rabelais (I, xlvi) uses the same idiom—Les nerfs des batailles sont les pécunes.

Victuals and ammunition,
And money too, the sinews of the war,
Are stored up in the magazine.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER:
Fair Maid of the Inn, I, i.

Sing. Singing bread (Fr. pain à chanter). An old term for the larger altar bread used in celebration of the MASS, because singing or chanting was in progress during its manufacture; also called singing cake and singing loaf.

Swans sing before they die. See SWAN.

To make one sing another tune. To make him change his behaviour altogether; to make him submit or humble himself.

To sing in agony, or tribulation. Old slang for to confess when put to the torture.

One of the guards said to him, "Signor Cavalier, to sing in agony means, in the cant of these rogues, to confess upon the rack."

CERVANTES: Don Quixote, xviii.
(Translation by Motteux).

To sing out. To cry or squeal from chastisement; to shout or call out.

To sing Placebo. See PLACEBO.

To sing small. To cease boasting and assume a quieter tone.

Singe. Singeing the King of Spain's beard. Sir Francis Drake's daring attack on the Spanish ships and stores at Cadiz (1587), which delayed the sailing of the Armada until 1588. He referred to it as his "singeing of the Spanish King's beard".

Single. Single-speech Hamilton. William Gerard Hamilton (1729-1796), who was Chancellor of the Exchequer in IRELAND, 1763-1784. So called from his maiden speech in Parliament (1755), a masterly torrent of eloquence which astounded everyone.

Single Tax. The doctrine that land rent alone should be subject to taxation, propounded by Henry George in Progress and Poverty (1879).

Sinis (si' nis). A Corinthian robber of Greek legend, known as the Pinebender, because he used to fasten his victims to two pine-trees bent towards the earth, and then leave them to be rent asunder when the trees were released. He was captured by THESEUS and put to death in the same way.

Sinister (sin' is ter) (Lat., on the left hand). Foreboding of ill; ill-omened. According to AUGURY, birds, etc., appearing on the left-hand side forbode ill luck; but on the right-hand side, good luck. Plutarch, following PLATO and ARISTOTLE, gives as the reason that the west (or left side of the augur) was towards the setting or departing sun.

In HERALDRY it denotes the left side of the shield viewed from the position of its bearer, i.e. in illustrations it is the right-hand side.

Bar Sinister. See under BAR.

Cornix sinistra (Lat., a crow on the left hand) is a sign of ill luck which belongs to English superstitions as much as to the ancient Roman or Etruscan (VIRGIL, Eclogues, ix, 15).

That raven on yon left-hand oak (Curse on his ill-betiding croak)
Bodes me no good.

GAY: Fable xxxvii, 27.

Sinking Fund. The name given to the government fund established in 1717, the interest from which was to "sink" or pay off the NATIONAL DEBT. The fund was re-established by Pitt the Younger in 1786, which, as a result of French Revolutionary Wars, created a loss and was abandoned in 1828. A new fund was set up in 1875 which was remodelled in 1923 and 1928.

Sinn Fein (shin fân) (Irish, "Ourselves alone"). The Irish nationalist movement formed in 1905 which set up the Irish Republic (1919) under De Valera and carried on guerrilla warfare with the English until the treaty of 1922. Disagreements over this settlement disrupted the party, which still aims to bring ULSTER into the Republic.

Sinon (si' non). The Greek who induced the Trojans to receive the WOODEN HORSE (VIRGIL, Aeneid, II, 102, etc.).

Anyone deceiving to betray is called "a Sinon".

Sir. Lat. senex; Span. senór; Ital. signore; Fr. sieur, sirc.

As a title of honour prefixed to the Christian name of BARONETS and KNIGHTS, Sir is of great antiquity; and the CLERGY had at one time Sir prefixed to their name. This is merely a translation of the university word dominus given to graduates, as "Dominus Hugh Evans", etc. Spenser uses the title as a substantive, meaning a parson:

But this, good Sir, did follow the plaine word.
Mother Hubbard's Tale, 390.

Sirat, Al. See AL-SIRAT.

Siren (si' ren). One of the mythical monsters, half woman and half bird, said by Greek poets (see Odyssey, XII) to entice seamen by the sweetness of their song to such a degree that the listeners forgot everything and died of hunger (Gr. sirenes, entanglers); hence applied to any dangerous, alluring woman.

In Homeric mythology there were but two sirens; later writers name three, viz. PARTHENOPE, Ligea, and Leucosia; and the number was still further augmented by others.

ULYSSES escaped their blandishments by filling his companions' ears with wax and lashing himself to the mast of his ship.

What Song the Syrens sang, or what name Achilles assumed when he hid himself among women, though puzzling questions, are not beyond all conjecture.

SIR THOS. BROWNE: Urn Burial, v.

PLATO says there were three kinds of sirens — the celestial, the generative, and the cathartic. The first were under the government of JUPITER, the second under that of NEPTUNE, and the third of PLUTO. When the SOUL is in HEAVEN the sirens seek, by harmonic motion, to unite it to the divine life of the celestial host; and when in HADES, to conform it to the infernal regimen; but on earth they produce generation, of which the sea is emblematic (Proclus: On the Theology of Plato, Bk. VI).

In more recent times the word has been applied to the loud mechanical whistle sounded at a factory, etc., to indicate that work is to be started or finished for the day. Sirens with two or more recognizable notes were employed in World War II to give warning of the approach or departure of hostile aircraft.

Siren suit. A one-piece lined and warm garment on the lines of a boiler suit, sometimes worn in London during the air raids of World War II. It was much favoured by Sir Winston Churchill and so named from its being slipped on over night clothes at the first wail of the SIREN.

Sirius (sir' i ūs). The DOG-STAR; so called by the Greeks from the adjective seirios, hot and scorching. The Romans called it canicula, whence our CANICULAR DAYS, and the Egyptians sept, which gave the Greek alternative sothis. See SOTHIC YEAR.

Sirloin. Properly surloin, from Fr. sur-longe, above the loin. The mistaken spelling sir- has given rise to a number of stories of the joint having been 'knighted' because of its estimable qualities. Thomas Fuller (1608-1661) tells us that Henry VIII did so:

Dining with the Abbot of Reading, he [Henry VIII] ate so heartily of a loin of beef that the abbot said he would give 1,000 marks for such a stomach. "Done!" said the king, and kept the abbot a prisoner in the Tower, won his 1,000 marks, and knighted the beef.

Church History, VI, ii (1655).

Another tradition fathers the joke on James I:

"I vow, 'tis a noble sirloin!"

"Ay, here's cut and come again."

"But prsy, why is it called a sirloin?"

"Why you must know that our King James I, who loved good eating, being invited to dinner by one of his nobles, and seeing a large loin of beef at his table, he drew out his sword, and in a frolic knighted it. Few people know the secret of this."

JONATHAN SWIFT: Polite Conversation, ii.

And yet another on Charles II.

In any case the joke is an old one; in Taylor the WATER POET's Great Eater of Kent (1680), we read of one who:

should presently enter combat with a worthy knight, called Sir Loyne of Beefe, and overthrow him.

Sirocco. See AUSTER.

Sise Lane. See TOOLEY STREET.

Sistine (sis' tin, sis' tĕn). The Sistine Chapel. The principal chapel in the VATICAN, reserved for ceremonies at which the POPE is present, so called because it was built by Pope Sixtus IV (1471-1484). It is decorated with the frescoes of MICHELANGELO and others.

Sistine Madonna, The. (Madonna di San Sisto). The Madonna painted by Raphael (c. 1518) for the church of St. Sixtus (San Sisto) at Piacenza; St. Sixtus is shown kneeling at the right of the Virgin. The picture is now in the Royal Gallery, Dresden.

Sisyphus (sis' i fŭs) ("The Crafty"). In Greek legend, the son of ÆOLUS and husband of MEROPE; in post-Homeric legend, the father of Odysseus (ULYSSES). His punishment in the world of the SHADES was to roll a huge stone up a hill to the top. As it constantly rolled down again his task was everlasting; hence "a labour of Sisyphus" or "Sisyphean toil" is an endless, heart-breaking job. The reasons given for this punishment vary. See AUTOLYCUS.

Sit. To sit down under. To submit tamely to; to put up with.

To make one sit up. To astonish or disconcert him considerably; to subject to punishment or hard work.

To sit on, or upon. To snub, squash, smother, put in his place. Sit on has other meanings also; thus to sit on a corpse is to hold a coroner's inquest on it; to sit on the bench is to occupy a seat as a judge or magistrate.

To sit on the fence. See under FENCE.

To sit tight. Not to give up your seat; to keep your counsel; to remain in or as in hiding. The phrase is from poker, where, if a player does not want to continue betting and at the same time does not wish to throw in his cards, he "sits tight".

To sit under. To be one of the congregation of the clergyman named; to listen to.

There would also appear in pulpits other visages, other gestures, and stuff otherwise wrought than what we now sit under, oft-times to as great a trial of our patience as any other than they preach to us.

MILTON: Of Education (1644).

Sit-down strike. A strike in which the workers remain at their factory, etc., but refuse to work themselves or allow others to do so. A tactic begun in the 1930s.

A Sit-in. Similar to a sit-down strike, currently applied to students occupying college premises, but boycotting lectures, etc., with the object of redressing grievances or dictating policy. See BOYCOTT.

Sitting Bull. (c.1834-1890). A famous Sioux chief who resisted the governmental policy of reservations for his tribe. He defeated Custer in 1876 (see CUSTER'S LAST STAND) and later appeared in BUFFALO BILL's show. He was killed while resisting arrest during the Sioux rebellion of 1890.

Sitzkrieg (sits' krĕg). The "sitting war", the descriptive term applied (in contrast to Blitzkrieg) to the period of comparative quiet and seeming military inactivity at the outset of World War II (September 1939-April 1940); the period of the PHONEY war.

Siva, or Shiva (s ě' va, sh ě' va). The third member of the Hindu TRIMURTI, representing the distractive principle in life and also the reproductive or renovating power. He has other contrasting qualities, being a god of ascetics as well as of music, dancing, and learning; in all a god of many attributes and functions. Siva, which means "The Benevolent", is only one of his many names. He is generally represented with three eyes and four arms and his symbol is the lingam.

Six. The Six. The six countries—Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, and Luxemburg, who are participants in three economic communities. These are: the European Coal and Steel Community, 1951 (ECSC); the European Economic Community or Common Market, (EEC), set up by the Treaty of Rome, 1957; and the European Atomic Energy Community or Euratom, 1957. Cp. THE SEVEN.

Les Six. A group of French composers formed at Paris in 1918 under the ÆGIS of Jean Cocteau and Erik Satie, in order to further their interests and those of modern music generally. The group lost its cohesion in the 1920s. Its members were Honegger, Milhaud, Poulenc, Durey, Auric, and Tailleferre.

The Six Acts. The name given to the six measures sponsored by the Liverpool Ministry in 1819 to curb RADICAL agitation and popular disorder after PETERLOO. They were not all unreasonable. These measures restricted public meetings; shortened procedures in bringing cases to trial (to deal with political agitators more speedily); forbade the drilling of private persons; empowered magistrates to seize blasphemous and seditious literature; authorized the seizure of arms; and extended the stamp duties on newspapers and periodicals.

The Six Articles. The so-called "Whip with six strings", otherwise known as the "Bloody Bill", the Statute of Six Articles passed in 1539 to secure uniformity in matters of religion. It was repealed in 1547 under Edward VI. The articles maintained (1) TRANSUBSTANTIATION (2) the sufficiency of Communion in one kind; (3) clerical celibacy; (4) the obligation of monastic vows; (5) the propriety of private masses; (6) the necessity of auricular confession. Penalties were imposed for non-observance including death at the stake for those who spoke against transubstantiation.

Six Clerks Office. An old name for the Court of CHANCERY, from the six clerks who received and filed all Chancery proceedings, each of whom had ten subordinates. The Six Clerks, who also had charge of causes in court, were abolished in 1842.

The Six Counties. Another name for ULSTER or Northern Ireland, i.e. Armagh, Antrim, Down, Derry, Fermanagh and Tyrone.

The Six Nations. THE FIVE NATIONS together with the Tuscaroras.

The Six Points of Ritualism. Altar lights, eucharistic vestments, the mixed chalice, incense, unleavened bread, and the eastward position. So called when English ritualists and upholders of the OXFORD MOVEMENT sought to reintroduce them in the 1870s.

The six-foot way. The strip of ground between two sets of railway lines.

A six-hooped pot. A two-quart pot. Quart pots were bound with three hoops, and when three men joined in drinking, each man drank his hoop. Mine host of the Black Bear (Scott: Kenilworth, ch. iii), calls Tressilian "a six-hooped pot of a traveller", meaning a first-class guest, because he paid freely, and made no complaints.

Six-Principle Baptists. A sect of Arminian Baptists, founded about 1639, who based their creed on the six principles enunciated in Heb. vi, 1-2: repentance, faith, BAPTISM, laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment.

The Six-stringed Whip. THE SIX ARTICLES (see above).

At sixes and sevens. Higgledy-piggledy; in a state of confusion; or of persons, unable to come to an agreement. The phrase comes from dicing.

The goddess would no longer wait,
But rising from her chair of state,
Left all below at six and seven,
Harness'd her doves and flew to heaven.
SWIFT: Cadmus and Vanessa (closing lines).

The six-o'clock swill. In parts of Australia bars formerly closed at 6 p.m. Drinkers leaving their jobs at 5.30 therefore tended to guzzle rapidly to beat the clock. This was termed the six o'clock swill.

Six of one and half a dozen of the other. There is nothing to choose between them, they are both in the wrong—ARCADES AMBO.

Sixteen-string Jack. John Rann, a highwayman (hanged 1774), noted for his foppery. He wore 16 tags, eight at each knee.

Sixty-four dollar question (U.S.A.). The last and most difficult question; the crux of the problem, from the stake money awarded in a QUIZ for answering the final question.

Sizar (si' zár). An undergraduate of Cambridge, or of Trinity College, Dublin, who receives a grant from his college to assist in paying his expenses. Formerly sizars were expected to undertake certain menial duties now performed by college servants; and the name is taken to show that one so assisted received his sizes or SIZINGS free.

Sizings. The allowance of food provided by the college for undergraduates at a meal; a pound loaf, two inches of butter, and a pot of milk used to be the "sizings" for breakfast; meat was provided for dinner, but any extras had to be sized for. The word is a contraction of assize, a statute to regulate the size or weight of articles sold.

Skains-mate. The meaning of the word is uncertain but skene or skean is the long dagger formerly carried by the Irish and Scots, so it may mean a dagger-comrade or fellow cut-throat. Swift, describing an Irish feast (1720), says, "A cubit at least the length of their skains", and Greene, in his Quip for an Upstart Courtier (1592), speaks of "an ill-favoured knave, who wore by his side a skane, like a brewer's bung-knife".

Scurry, Knave! I am none of his flirt-gills
I am none of his skains-mates.

SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, II, iv.

Skanda. See KARTTIKEYA.

Skeleton. The family skeleton, or the skeleton in the cupboard. Some domestic source of worry or shame which the family conspires to keep to itself; every family is said to have at least one!

The story is that someone without a single care or trouble in the world had to be found. After long and unsuccessful search a lady was discovered who all thought would "fill the bill"; but to the great surprise of the inquirers, after she had satisfied them on all points and the quest seemed to be achieved, she took them upstairs and there opened a closet which contained a human skeleton. "I try", said she, "to keep my trouble to myself, but every night my husband compels me to kiss that skeleton." She then explained that the skeleton was once her husband's rival, killed in a duel.

The skeleton at the feast. The thing or person that acts as a reminder that there are troubles as well as pleasures in life. Plutarch says in his Moralia that the Egyptians always had a skeleton placed in a prominent position at their banquets.

Skevington's daughter. See SCAVENGER'S. Skid Row (U.S.A.). A district populated by vicious characters or down-and-outs, i.e. those who have skidded from the path of virtue.

Skidbladnir. In Scandinavian mythology, the magic ship made by the DWARFS for FREYR. It was big enough to take all the ÆSIR with their weapons and equipment, yet when not in use could be folded up and carried by Freyr in his pouch. It sailed through both air and water, and went straight to its destination as soon as the sails were hoisted. Cp. CARPET.

Skiddaw (skid' aw). Whenever Skiddaw hath a cap, Scruffell wots full well of that (Fuller, Worthies). When my neighbour's house is on fire mine is threatened; when you are in misfortune I am also a sufferer; when you mourn I have cause also to lament. When Skiddaw is capped with clouds, it will be sure to rain ere long at Scawfell.

Skiffle. A name given to a style of JAZZ of the 1920s, and more recently to a type of jazz folk-music current in Britain in the late 1950s played by a skiffle group, consisting of guitar, drums, kazoo, wash-board, and other improvised instruments.

Skill. It skills not (archaic). It makes no difference; it doesn't matter one way or the other.

Whether he [Callimachus] be now lying I know not but whether he be or no, it skilleth not.

LYLY: Euphues and His England (1580).

Similarly, What skills talking? What is the use of talking.

Skimble-skamble. Rambling, worthless. "Skamble" is merely a variant of scramble, hence "scambling days", those days in LENT when no regular meals are provided, but each person "scrambles" or shifts for himself. "Skimble" is added to give force.

And such a deal of skimble-skamble stuff

As put me from any faith.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, III, i.

Skimmington. It was an old custom in rural ENGLAND and SCOTLAND to make an example of nagging wives by forming a ludicrous procession through the village accompanied by rough music to ridicule the offender. A man, mounted on a horse with a distaff in his hand, rode behind the woman with his face to the horse's tail, while the woman beat him about the jowls with a ladle. As the procession passed a house where the woman was paramount the participants gave the threshold a sweep. The event was called riding the Skimmington (cp. To ride the STANG). The origin of the name is uncertain, but in an illustration of 1639 the woman is shown belabouring her husband with a skimming-ladle. Unfaithful husbands were similarly put to scorn. The procession is fully described in Butler's Hudibras, II, ii:

Near whom the Amazon triumphant
Bestrid her beast, and, on the rump on't,
Sat face to tail and bum to bum,
The warrior whilom overcome,
Arm'd with a spindle and a distaff,
Which, as he rode, she made him twist off:
And when he loiter'd, o'er her shoulder
Chastis'd the reformado soldier.

Scott alludes to it in the Fortunes of Nigel, ch. xxi:

"Remember I am none of your husband—and, if I were, you would do well not to forget whose threshold was swept when they last rode the Skimmington upon such another scolding jade as yourself."

For another example see Hardy's Mayor of Casterbridge, ch. xxxix, where the skim-mity ride causes the death of Lucetta Farfrae.

Skin. By the skin of one's teeth. Only just, by a mere hair's breadth. The phrase comes from the book of Job (xix, 20):

My bone cleaveth to my skin, and to my flesh, and I am escaped with the skin of my teeth.

Coverdale's rendering of the passage is:

My bone hangeth to my skynne, and the flesh is awaye only there is left me the skynne aboute my teth.

To get under one's skin. To irritate, to annoy. Probably an allusion to the activities of such larvæ as harvest-bugs, etc., which cause intense irritation "under the skin".

To have a thick skin. To be insensitive or be indifferent to jibes, criticisms or even insults; "to have a hide like a rhinoceros". Similarly to have a thin skin is to be hypersensitive about such things.

To save one's skin. To get off with one's life.

To sell the skin before you have caught the bear. To count your chickens before they are hatched. SHAKESPEARE alludes to a similar practice:

The man that once did sell the lion's skin
While the beast lived, was killed with hunting him.
Henry V, IV, iii.

To skin a flint. To be very exacting in making a bargain. The French say, Tondre sur un œuf. The Latin lana caprina (goat's wool) means something as worthless as the skin of a flint or fleece of an eggshell. Hence a skinflint, a pinch-farthing, a niggard.

Skin game. A swindling trick. Presumably from the sense of skin meaning to fleece or strip someone of their money by sharp practice or fraud. John Galsworthy has a play of the title (1920).

Skinnera. A predatory band in the American Revolutionary War which roamed over Westchester County, New York, robbing and fleecing those who refused to take the oath of fidelity to the Republic.

Skirt. A skirt, or a piece of skirt is English slang for a girl or young woman.

To sit upon one's skirt. To insult, or seek occasion of quarrel. Tarlton, the clown, told his audience the reason why he wore a jacket was that "no one might sit upon his skirt". Sitting on one's skirt is, like "stamping on one's coat" in IRELAND a fruitful source of quarrels, often provoked. Cp. To trail one's COAT.

Crosse me not, Liza, neither be so pette,
For if thou dost, I'll sit upon thy skirte.
The Abortive of an Idle Hours (1620).

Skull. Skull and Crossbones. An emblem of mortality; specifically, the pirate's flag. The "crossbones" are two human thigh-bones laid across one another.

Sky. RHYMING SLANG for pocket, the missing word being rocket.

If the sky falls we shall catch larks. A bantering reply to those who suggest some very improbable or wild scheme.

Lauded to the skies. Extravagantly praised; praised to the heights.

Out of a clear sky. Unexpectedly, without warning, "out of the blue".

Sky-pilot. A soldier's term for a padre or parson, current in World War I. The allusion is obvious.

Skysail. In a square-rigged ship, a sail next above the fore-royal, the main-royal, or the mizzen-royal.

Skyscraper. A very tall building, especially one in New York or some other American city. Some of them run to a hundred floors, and more. Also applied by sailors to a SKYSAIL.

To skylark about. To amuse oneself in a frolicsome way, jump around and be merry, indulge in mild horseplay. The phrase was originally nautical and referred to the sports of the boys among the rigging after work was done.

Slam. A term in card-playing denoting winning all the tricks in a deal. In bridge this is called Grand slam, and winning all but one, Little or Small slam. Cp. RUFF.

Slam. To slam the door (in someone's face). To refuse discussion; to dismiss abruptly; to put an end to the possibility of further negotiations.

Slang. As denoting language or jargon of a low or colloquial type the word first appeared in the 18th century; it is perhaps connected with sling (cp. mud-slinging, for hurling abuse). Slang is of various kinds, professional, sporting, schoolboy, nautical, thieves', etc., and usually has some element of humour about it. See BACK-SLANG; CANT; RHYMING SLANG.

To slang a person. To abuse him, give him a piece of your mind.

Slap. Slap-bang. At once, without hesitation—done with a slap and a bang. The term was formerly applied to cheap eating-houses, where one slapped one's money down as the food was banged on the table.

They lived in the same street, walked to town every morning at the same hour, dined at the same slap-bang every day.

DICKENS: Sketches by Boz, iii, 36.

Slap-dash. In an off-hand manner, done hurriedly as with a slap and a dash. Rooms used to be decorated by slapping and dashing the walls so as to imitate paper, and at one time slap-dash walls were very common.

Slap-happy. Foolish and irresponsible, as one who is dazed, akin to PUNCH-DRUNK.

Slapstick. Literally the two or more laths bound together at one end with which HARLEQUINS, CLOWNS, etc., strike other performers with a resounding slap or crack; but more often applied to any broad comedy with knock-about action and horseplay.

Slap-up. First-rate, grand, stylish.

The more slap-up still have the two shields painted on the panels with the coronet over.

THACKERAY: The Newcomes, xxxi.

Slate. On the slate. On the account, to be paid for later. From the custom of chalking up debts on a slate in shops and public houses.

Slate Club. A sick benefit club for working-men. Originally the names of the members and the money paid in were entered on a folding slate.

To have a slate, or tile loose. See under TILE.

To slate one. To reprove, abuse, or criticize him savagely. It is not known how the term arose, but perhaps it is because at school the names of bad boys were chalked up on the slate as an exposure.

The journalists there lead each other a dance, If one man "slates" another for what he has done, It is pistols for two, and then coffin for one.

Punch (The Pugnacious Penmen), 1885.

To start with a clean slate. To be given another chance, one's past misdeeds having been forgiven and expunged, as writing is sponged from a slate. To wipe the slate clean is a similar expression, meaning to cancel past debts or offences.

Slave. An example of the way words acquire changed meanings. The Slavi or Slavs were a tribe which once dwelt on the banks of the Dnieper; but as, in later days of the Roman Empire, many of them were spread over Europe as captives, the word acquired its present meaning.

The Slave Coast. The west coast of Africa around the Bight of Benin, between the River Volta and Mount Cameron; for 350 years the chief source of African slaves.

The Slave States. A phrase current in the period before the American CIVIL WAR (1861-1865) and applied to the states where domestic slavery was practised, i.e. Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, Kentucky, and Tennessee.

Sledge-hammer. A sledge-hammer argument. A clincher; an argument which annihilates opposition at a blow. The sledge-hammer (O.E. slecge) is the largest hammer used by smiths, etc., and is wielded in both hands.

To use a sledge-hammer to crack a nut. See under NUT.

Sleep. To let sleeping dogs lie. See under DOG.

To put to sleep. Commonly used as a EUPHEMISM for painlessly putting to death pet animals.

To sleep away. To pass away in sleep, to consume in sleeping; as "To sleep one's life away."

To sleep like a log, or top. To sleep very soundly, excellently, go the night through without waking or discomfort. When peg-tops are at the ACME of their gyration, they become so steady and quiet that they do not seem to move; in this state they are said to "sleep". Congreve plays on the two meanings:

Hang him, no, he a dragon! If he be, 'tis a very peaceful one. I can ensure his anger dormant, or should he seem to rouse, 'tis but well lashing him and he will sleep like a top.

Old Bachelor, I, v.

To sleep off. To get rid of by sleep, especially the after-effects of alcohol.

To sleep on a matter. To let a decision on it stand over until tomorrow.

The Sleeper. EPIMENIDES, the Greek poet, is said to have fallen asleep in a cave when a boy, and not to have waked for 57 years, when he found himself possessed of all wisdom.

In mediæval legend, stories of those who have gone to sleep and have been—or are to be—awakened after many years are very numerous. Such legends hang round the names of King ARTHUR, CHARLEMAGNE, and BARBAROSSA. Cp. also the stories of the SEVEN SLEEPERS of Ephesus, TANNHÄUSER, OGIER THE DANE, and RIP VAN WINKLE.

The Sleeper Awakened. See SLY, CHRISTOPHER.

Sleepers. In Britain the supports for the chairs (usually of timber) which carry railway lines (from the Norwegian sleip, a roller or timber laid along a road). In the U.S.A. these supports are called ties. A sleeper also denotes a railway sleeping-car.

The Sleeping Beauty. This charming nursery tale comes from the French La Belle au Bois Dormant, by Charles Perrault (1628–1703) (Contes de ma mère l'Oye, 1697). The Princess is shut up by enchantment in a castle, where she sleeps a hundred years, during which time an impenetrable wood springs up around. Ultimately she is released by the kiss of a young prince, who marries her.

Sleeping partner. A partner in a business who takes no active share in running beyond supplying capital; also called a silent partner in the U.S.A.

Sleeping sickness. A West African disease caused by a parasite, Trypanosoma gambiense, characterized by fever and great sleepiness, and usually terminating fatally. The disease known in England, which shows similar symptoms, is usually called Sleeping illness or Sleepy sickness as a means of distinction; its scientific name is Encephalitis lethargica.

Sleepy. Said of pears and other fruits when they are beginning to rot.

Sleepy Hollow. Any village far removed from the active concerns of the outside world. From Washington Irving's story "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" (Sketch Book), which deals with a quiet old-world village on the Hudson.

Sleepy sickness. See SLEEPING SICKNESS above.

Sleeve. To hang on one's sleeve. To listen devoutly to what one says; to surrender your freedom of thought and action to the judgment of another.

To have up one's sleeve. To hold in reserve; to have ready to bring out in a case of emergency. The allusion is to conjurers, who frequently conceal in the sleeve the means by which they do the trick.

To laugh in, or up one's sleeve. To laugh inwardly; to hold in derision secretly. At one time it was quite possible to conceal amusement by hiding one's face in the large loose sleeves one wore. The French say, rire sous cape.

To pin to one's sleeve, as, "I shan't pin my faith to your sleeve", meaning, "I shall not slavishly believe or follow you". The allusion is to the practice of KNIGHTS, in the days of CHIVALRY, pinning to their sleeve some token given them by their lady-love. This token was a pledge that he would do or die.

To wear one's heart on one's sleeve. To expose all one's feelings to the eyes of the world; to be lacking in normal reserve.

But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at: I am not what I am.
SHAKESPEARE: Othello, I, i.

Sleeveless. In the 16th and 17th centuries sleeveless was commonly used to signify fruitless, bootless, unprofitable, as a sleeveless message, a sleeveless errand, etc. The reason for this usage is uncertain.

Sleuth-hound. A blood-hound which follows the sleuth (Old Norse sloth, our more modern slot) or track of an animal. Hence used, especially in America, of a detective.

Sliding scale. A scale of duties, prices, payments, etc., which "slides" upwards and downwards in relation to the fluctuations in the cost of the article, etc., to which it relates. Thus in the famous Sliding-scale CORN LAW (see under CORN) of 1828, the duty varied inversely to the home price of corn, i.e. as the price of corn went up the duty went down.

Slip. Many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip. Everything is uncertain till you possess it. Cp. ANCÆUS.

To give one the slip. To steal off unperceived; to elude pursuit. Probably from the idea of a hound slipping its collar or from the slipping of an anchor when it is necessary to get away quickly from an uncomfortable berth. The normal practice in such circumstances is to buoy the cable before letting it slip through the hawse-pipe, so that anchor and cable are recoverable subsequently.

To let it slip through one's fingers. To fail to seize a chance at the favourable moment, as an unprepared fielder drops a catch in CRICKET.

To let slip. To tell unintentionally when off one's guard, as a hound might be let slip unintentionally in coursing.

To slip one over on. To deceive or hoodwink; to "put one over" on someone; to "pull a fast one" (see under FAST).

To slip up. Metaphorically, to make a mistake, usually through an oversight.

Slogan (slō' gán). The war-cry of the old Highland CLANS (Gael. shuagh, host; ghairm, outcry). Hence, any war-cry; and in later use, a political party cry, an advertising catchphrase, etc. Cp. SLUGHORN.

Slop, Dr. So William Hone called Sir John Stoddart (1773-1856), a choleric lawyer and journalist who assailed NAPOLEON most virulently in The Times (1812-1816). The allusion was to Dr. Slop, the ignorant man-midwife in Sterne's Tristram Shandy.

Slope. The slippery slope. The broad and easy way "that leadeth to destruction". See AVERNUS.

Slops. Police; originally "ecilop". See BACK-SLANG.

I dragged you in here and saved you,
And sent out a gal for the slops;
Hal they're acomin', sir! Listen!
The noise and the shoutin' stops.
SIMS: Ballads of Babylon
(The Matron's Story).

Slops is also an old name for a loose garment (O.E. slyp, slype) and in the Royal Navy the term slops has long been applied to the clothing, towels, blankets, etc., sold from the ship's store which is known as the slop-shop.

Slough of Despond. A period of, or fit of, great depression. In Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, Pt. I, it is a deep bog which Christian has to cross in order to get to the Wicket Gate. Help comes to his aid, but Neighbour Pliable turns back.

Slow. Slow-coach. A dawdler; also one who is mentally slow. A usage from the old coaching days.

Slow-worm. See MISNOMERS.

Slubberdegullion (slüb er de gül' yon). A base fellow, a nasty oaf. To slubber is to do things carelessly, in a slovenly way; degullion is a fanciful addition, gullion being a variant of cullion, a base fellow.

Quoth she, Although thou hast deserved,
Base-slubber degullion, to be served
As thou didst vow to deal with me.

BUTLER: Hudibras, I, iii.

Slugabed. A late riser. To slug used to be quite good English for to be thoroughly lazy. Sylvester has:

The Soldier, slugging long at home in Peace
His wonted courage quickly doth decrease.

DU BARTAS:

Collected Works, I, vii, 340 (1592).

Slug-horn. A battle-trumpet; the word being the result of an erroneous reading by Chatterton of the GAELIC slogan. He thought the word sounded rather well; and as he did not know what it meant, gave it a meaning that suited him:

Some caught a slughorne and an onsett wounde.
The Battle of Hastings, ii, 99.

Browning adopted it in the last line but one of his Childe Rolande in the Dark Tower Came, and thus this "GHOSTWORD" got a footing in the language.

Sly, Christopher. A keeper of bears and a tinker, son of a pedlar, and a sad drunken sot in the Induction of The Taming of the Shrew. SHAKESPEARE mentions him as a well-known character of Wincot, a hamlet near Stratford-on-Avon, and it is more than probable that in him we have an actual portrait of a contemporary.

Sly is found dead drunk by a lord, who commands his servants to put him to bed, and on his waking to attend upon him like a lord and bamboozle him into the belief that he is a great man; the play is performed for his delectation. The same trick was played by the Caliph HAROUN AL-RASCHID on ABOU HASSAN, the rich merchant, in The Sleeper Awakened (ARABIAN NIGHTS), and by Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, on his marriage with Eleanor, as given in Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy (Pt. II, sec. ii, num. 4).

Sly. On the sly. In a sly, secretive manner.

You're a sly dog. You're a knowing one; you pretend to be discontented, but I can "read between the lines". (See under LINE.)

Sly-boots. A cunning one, a WAG. A similar compound to lazy-boots, clumsy-boots, etc.

Small. Small arms (Lat. arma, arms, fittings). Weapons fired from the hand or shoulder such as revolvers and rifles, also light portable machine-guns, etc.

Small-back. Death. So called because he is usually drawn as a skeleton.

Small beer. Properly, beer of only slight alcoholic strength; hence, trivialities, persons or things of small consequence.

Small clothes. An obsolete term for breeches.

Small coal. Coal in very small pieces, slack.

Small endians. See BIG-ENDIANS.

Small fry. A humorous way of referring to a number of small children, from the numerous fry or young of fish and other creatures.

Small holding. A small plot of agricultural land bigger than an allotment, but not big enough to be called a farm. The term received legal significance under the Small Holdings Act of 1892, which permitted County Councils to provide them for letting. The Small Holdings and Allotments Act of 1926 defined them as of not less than one acre and not more than 50, and of not more than £100 in annual value.

The small hours. The hours from 1 a.m. to 4 or 5 a.m., when you are still in the small, or low numbers.

The small of the back. The slenderer, narrower part, just above the buttocks.

Small talk. Trifling conversation, social chit-chat.

A small and early. An evening party on a modest scale, with not a lot of guests, and not late hours.

To feel small. To feel humiliated, "taken down a PEG or two".

To sing small. To adopt a humble tone; to withdraw some sturdy assertion and apologize for having made it.

Smalls. The undergraduate name at Oxford for Responsions, at one time the first of the three examinations for the B.A. degree, similar to the Cambridge LITTLE-GO; the final examination being called Greats (see GREAT-GO). It later became the official university entrance examination until the growing use of the School Certificate, and later General Certificate of Education, examinations, led to its discontinuance. Smalls were last held in September 1960.

Smart Alec(k). An American term for a bumptious, conceited know-all. The name goes back to the 1860s, but no record now remains of Alec's identity.

Smart Money. Money paid by a person to obtain exemption from some disagreeable office or duty. It was applied to money paid by an army recruit to obtain release before being sworn in, and also to money paid to soldiers and sailors for wounds. In law it denotes heavy damages. It is something which makes the person "smart" (i.e. suffer), or which is received in payment for "smarting".

Smectymnuus (smek tim' nū ūs). The name under which was published (1641) an anti-episcopal tract in answer to Bishop Hall's Humble Remonstrance. The name was composed of the initials of its authors, viz. Stephen Marshall, Edward Calamy, Thomas Young, Matthew Newcomen, and William Spurstow.

Thomas Young was Milton's former tutor, and Milton seems to have had a part in it and wrote pamphlets in defence of the Smectymnuans.

The handkerchief about the neck,
Canonical cravat of Smec.

BUTLER: Hudibras, I, iii, 1165.

Smell, To. Often used figuratively for to suspect, to discern intuitively, as in I smell a rat, I smell treason, etc.

SHAKESPEARE has, "Do you smell a fault?" (King Lear, I, i); and Iago says to Othello, "One may smell in such a will most rank" (III, iii). St. JEROME says that St. Hilarion had the gift of knowing what sins and vices anyone was inclined to by smelling either the person or his garments, and by the same faculty could discern good feelings and virtuous propensities.

It smells of the lamp. See under LAMP.

Smiler. Another name for shandy-gaff—a mixture of ale and lemonade or ginger-beer.

Smith of Nottingham. Applied to conceited persons who imagine that no one is able to compete with themselves. Ray, in his Collection of Proverbs, has the following couplet:

The little Smith of Nottingham
Who doth the work that no man can.

Smithfield. The smooth field (O.E. smethe, smooth), called in Latin Campus Planus and described by Fitz-Stephen in the 12th century as a "plain field where every Friday there is a celebrated rendezvous of fine horses brought thither to be sold". It was originally outside the CITY wall and used for races, QUINTAIN-matches, TOURNAMENTS, etc., as well as a market. BARTHOLOMEW FAIR was held here until 1855, at which time the cattle market was transferred to the CALEDONIAN MARKET. Its less pleasant associations were the gibbet and the stake, and most of the Marian MARTYRS suffered death at Smithfield. It is now the central meat market of London.

The fires of Smithfield. An allusion to the burning of HERETICS at Smithfield during the Marian persecution of PROTESTANTS. Death at the stake was used at Smithfield as late as 1611.

Smoke, or Big Smoke, The. London. An old slang name of obvious origins.

Cape smoke. A cheap and villainous kind of whisky sold in South Africa.

Smoke-farthings, smoke silver. An old church rate, the contribution of each house or hearth; also another name for PENTECOSTALS, the WHITSUNTIDE offering to the parish priest. Also called smoke-money, and smoke-penny, it appears in records as a contribution to the parochial purse as well as to the priest.

Much smoke, little fire. Said of one who makes a great fuss, commotion or protest but whose actions do not correspond.

No smoke without fire. Every slander or rumour has some foundation. The reverse proverb, No fire without smoke, means no good without some drawback.

Put that in your pipe and smoke it. See under PIPE.

To end in, or up in smoke. To come to no practical result; to come to nothing.

To smoke out. To drive someone out of hiding, literally or metaphorically.

To smoke the pipe of peace. See CALUMET.

To put up a smokescreen. To take steps to conceal one's basic motives from one's opponents or rivals, or from the public at large. The allusion is obvious.

Snack (a variant of snatch).

To go snacks. To share and share alike.

To take a snack. To have a little to eat; "snatch a bite of something".

Snag. To come against a snag. To encounter some obstacle in your progress.

Snake. RHYMING SLANG for a looking-glass, the missing portion being "in the grass".

It was an old idea that snakes in casting their sloughs annually gained new vigour and fresh strength; hence SHAKESPEARE'S allusion:

When the mind is quicken'd out of doubt,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerity.

Henry V, IV, i.

Another notion was that one could regain one's youth by feeding on snakes:

You have eat a snake
And are grown young, gamesome and rampant.
BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER:
Elder Brother, IV, iv.

A snake in the grass. A hidden or hypocritical enemy, a disguised danger. The phrase is from VIRGIL (Ecl. iii, 93), Latet anguis in herba, a snake is lurking in the grass.

Great snakes! An exclamation of surprise.

To see snakes, to have snakes in one's boots, etc. To suffer from delirium tremens. This is one of the delusions common to those so afflicted.

Snake-eyes (U.S.A.). In throwing dice, a double one.

Snake stones. AMMONITES, from the old belief that these were coiled snakes petrified.

Snap. A snap vote. A vote taken unexpectedly, especially in PARLIAMENT. The result of a "snap vote" has, before now, been the overthrow of a ministry.

Not worth a snap of the fingers. Utterly worthless and negligible.

To snap a person's head off. Virtually the same as To snap one's nose off. See TO BITE ONE'S NOSE OFF under NOSE.

To snap one's fingers at. To brush aside contemptuously, to disregard authority.

To snap out of it. To shake off a fit of depression, to regain one's good humour, to pull oneself together, etc.

Snapdragon. The same as FLABDRAGON; also a plant of the genus Antirrhinum with a flower opening like a dragon's mouth.

Snapshot. Formerly applied to a shot fired without taking aim, but now almost exclusively to an instantaneous photograph. Hence to snapshot a person, to take an instantaneous photograph of him.

Snark. The imaginary animal invented by Lewis Carroll as the subject of his mock-heroic poem The Hunting of the Snark (1876). It was most elusive and gave endless trouble, and when eventually the hunters thought they had tracked it down their quarry proved to be but a Boojum. The name (a "PORT-MANTEAU WORD" of snake and shark) has sometimes been given to the quests of dreamers and visionaries.

It was one of Rossetti's delusions that in The Hunting of the Snark Lewis Carroll was caricaturing him.

Snarling Letter (Lat. litera canina). The letter r, see R.

Sneck posset. To give one a sneck posset is to give him a cold reception, to slam the door in his face (Cumberland and Westmorland). The "sneck" is the latch of the door, and to "sneck the door in one's face" is to shut a person out.

Snell, Hannah. See THE FEMALE MARINE under MARINE.

Sneeze. St. GREGORY has been credited with originating the custom of saying "God bless you" after sneezing, the story being that he enjoined its use during a pestilence in which sneezing was a mortal symptom. ARISTOTLE, however, mentions a similar custom among the Greeks; and Thucydides tells us that sneezing was a crisis symptom of the great Athenian plague.

The Romans followed the same custom, their usual exclamation being Absit omen! The PARSEES hold that sneezing indicates that evil spirits are abroad, and we find similar beliefs in India, Africa, ancient and modern Persia, among the North American Indian tribes, etc.

We are told that when the Spaniards arrived in FLORIDA the Cacique sneezed, and all the court lifted up their hands and implored the sun to avert the evil omen. The nursery rhyme says:

If you sneeze on Monday you sneeze for danger;
Sneeze on Tuesday, kiss a stranger,
Sneeze on Wednesday, sneeze for a letter,
Sneeze on Thursday, something better,
Sneeze on Friday, sneeze for sorrow,
Sneeze on Saturday, see your sweetheart tomorrow.

It is not to be sneezed at. Not to be despised.

Snood. The lassie lost her silken snood.

The snood was a ribbon with which a Scots lass braided her hair, and was the emblem of her maiden character. When she married, she changed the snood for the curch or coif; but if she lost the name of virgin before she obtained that of wife, she "lost her silken snood" and was not privileged to assume the curch.

In more recent times the word has been applied to the net in which women confine their hair.

Snooks. An exclamation of incredulity or derision.

To cock or pull a snook is to make a gesture of contempt by putting the thumb to the nose and spreading the fingers; also called Queen Anne's Fan.

Snottie. Naval slang for a midshipman; allegedly from their habit of wiping their noses on their sleeves; and it is said that the three buttons on the cuffs of their jackets were to prevent them doing this. New entries were called warts and the Lieutenant who overlooked the gun-room was known as the snottie nurse.

Snow King, The. So the Austrians called Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden (1594, 1611-1632), because, said they, he "was kept together by the cold, but would melt and disappear as he approached a warmer soil".

Snow-line. The line above which a mountain is continually under snow.

Snuff. To be snuffed out. Put down, eclipsed, killed.

To snuff it is to die, the allusion being to the snuffing out of a candle.

'Tis strange the mind, that very fiery particle,
Should let itself be snuffed out by an article.
BYRON: Don Juan, xi, 60.

Took it in snuff. In anger, in huff, expressed by sneezing. Snuff here being the powder made from tobacco, which may make the unwary sneeze.

Who, therewith angry, when it next came there,
Took it in snuff.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, I, iii.

Up to snuff. Wide awake, knowing, sharp; not easily taken in or imposed upon. An allusion to the tobacco preparation.

So. So what? What of it? A colloquialism of American origin.

Soap, or Soft soap. Flattery, especially of an oily, unctuous kind.

How are you off for soap? A common street-saying of the mid-19th century, of indeterminate meaning. It may mean "What are you good for?" in the way of cash, or anything else; and it was often just a general piece of cheek. Cp. "What! No soap?" in Foote's nonsense passage (see PANJANDRUM).

In soaped-pig fashion. Vague; a method of speaking or writing which always leaves a way of escape. The allusion is to the custom at FAIRS, etc., of soaping the tail of a pig before turning it out to be caught by the tail.

He is vague as may be; writing in what is called the "soaped-pig" fashion.

CARLYLE:

The Diamond Necklace, ch. iv (Footnote).

Soap-box oratory. Tub-thumping, demagogic utterance. From the use of a "soap-box" as a stand or platform.

Soap-lock (U.S.A.). A lock of HAIR worn on the temple and kept in position with soap, a 19th-century fashion; any such lock of hair.

Soap opera. A disparaging term for a type of play, usually in episodic serial form, used by commercial radio and television in advertising soap and other commodities.

Soapy Sam. Samuel Wilberforce (1805-1873), Bishop of Oxford, and afterwards of Winchester; so called because of his persuasive and unctuous way of speaking. It is somewhat remarkable that the floral decorations above the stall of the bishop and of the principal of Cuddesdon were S.O.A.P., the initials of Sam Oxon and Alfred Port.

Someone asking the bishop why he was so called received the answer, "Because I am often in hot water and always come out with clean hands."

Sob stuff. A phrase describing newspaper, film, or other stories of a highly sentimental kind; cheap or tear-jerking pathos.

Sob sister. A journalist who conducts an "answers to correspondents" column in a woman's magazine; one who writes tear-provoking sentimentalities.

Sobersides. A grave, steady-going, serious-minded person, called by some "a stick-in-the-mud"; usually Old Sobersides.

Socage (sok' aj). A free feudal non-military tenure, held in FEB SIMPLE (see under FEB), service being in the form of rent or some form of agricultural duty. It is from O.E. soc, jurisdiction, franchise.

Sociable. A horse-drawn carriage so named because its side seats faced each other; also a tricycle for two to ride side by side.

The Queen has had a most providential escape. The carriage, a sociable, very low and safe, was overturned last night after dark, on her way back from an expedition of seven or eight hours.

Gladstone's Diary, 8 October 1863.

Society. In the restricted sense, the world of fashion, high society; the UPPER TEN (see under TEN).

Society of Friends. See QUAKERS.

Society verse. See VERS DE SOCIÉTÉ.

Socinianism (so sin' yán izm). A form of Unitarianism (see UNITARIANS) which, on the one hand, does not altogether deny the supernatural character of Christ, but, on the other, goes farther than Arianism (see ARIANS) which, while upholding His divinity, denies that He is coequal with the Father. So called from the Italian theologians Laeolio Socinus (1525-1562) and his nephew Faustus Socinus (1539-1604) who developed these tenets. Socinus is the latinized form of Sozzini.

Sock. The light shoe worn by the comic actors of Greece and ROME (Lat. soccus); hence applied to comedy itself.

Then to the well-trod stage anon,
If Jonson's learned sock be on,

MILTON: L'Allegro.

The difference between the sock of comedy and the BUSKIN of tragedy was that the sock reached only to the ankle, but the buskin extended to the knee.

Socrates (sok' rá tēz). The great Greek philosopher of ATHENS (c. 470-399 B.C.). He used to call himself "the midwife of men's thoughts"; and out of his intellectual school sprang those of PLATO and the Dialectic system, EUCLID and the MEGARIAN, Aristippus and the Cyrenaic, ANTISTHENES and the CYNIC, and the Elean and Eretrian schools. Phædo and Xenophon were also among his disciples. Cicero said of him, "he brought down philosophy from the heavens to earth"; and he was the first to teach that "the proper study of mankind is man". He was condemned to death for the corruption of youth by introducing new gods (thus being guilty of impiety) and drank hemlock in prison in the presence of his followers.

Socratic irony. Leading on your opponent in an argument by simulating ignorance, so that he "ties himself in knots" and eventually falls an easy prey—a form of procedure used with great effect by Socrates.

The Socratic method. The method of conducting an argument, imparting information, etc., by means of question and answer.

Soda-jerker. An attendant at an ice-cream soda fountain in the U.S.A.

From Soda to hock. A western U.S.A. phrase. In Faro the first card shown face-up before the bets are placed is known as Soda, while the last card left in the box is said to be "in hock", i.e. in pawn. The phrase is thus equivalent to "from A to Z".

Sodom and Gomorrah. Figuratively, any town or towns regarded as exceptional centres of vice and immorality. An allusion to the cities which God destroyed (see Gen. xviii, xix).

Soft, or softy. A mentally retarded or undeveloped person; one whose brain shows signs of softening.

A soft fire makes sweet malt. Too much hurry or precipitation spoils work, just as too fierce a fire would burn the malt and destroy its sweetness. "Soft and fair goes far", "the more haste the less speed", are sayings of similar meaning.

Soft sawder. Flattery, adulation. Sawder being solder, and soft solder a combination of tin and lead used for soldering zinc, lead, and tin. Its origin is obscure.

A soft touch. One who is soft-hearted and easily imposed upon, especially one easy to "touch" for money.

Soho! An exclamation used by huntsmen, especially in hare-coursing when a hare has been started. It is a very old call dating from at least the 13th century, and corresponds to the "TALLY-HO!" of fox-hunters when the fox breaks cover. It was the pass-word used by Monmouth's forces in their ill-starred night attack at Sedgemoor in 1685. (See MONMOUTH'S REBELLION.)

Soho. This famous cosmopolitan area of LONDON apparently derives its name from the old hunting cry when Soho fields were used for hunting. Its first use as a place-name is found in 1636. Its first foreign influx was that of the HUGUENOTS after the revocation of the EDICT OF NANTES in 1685 and in the 1860s and 1870s Germans and Italians came to settle, followed by Swiss, Russians, Poles, and Greeks, etc. It has long been a noted centre for foreign restaurants and delicatessen shops and a haunt of gastronomes, but in recent years they have given ground to STRIP-TEASE shows, near-beer clubs and CLIP-JOINTS.

Soi-disant (swa dé' zon) (Fr.). Self-styled, would-be.

Soil. A son of the soil. One native to a district whose family has well-established local roots; one who works on the land.

To take soil. A hunting term, signifying that the quarry, usually a deer, has taken to the water. Soil here is Fr. souille, the mire in which a wild boar wallows.

Fida went downe the dale to seeke the hinde,
And founde her taking soyle within a flood.

WM. BROWNE:

Britannia's Pastorals, I, iv, 40.

Sol (Lat. sol, sun). The Roman SUN god; the sun itself. In Scandinavian mythology Sol was the maiden who drove the chariot of the sun.

The name was given by the alchemists to GOLD and in HERALDRY it represents or (gold). It is also the monetary unit of Peru. In music sol is the fifth note of the diatonic scale.

Solano (so la' nō). Ask no favour during the solano. A popular Spanish proverb meaning—Ask no favour during a time of trouble or adversity. The solano is an extremely hot south-east wind loaded with fine dust which produces giddiness and irritation. Cp. AUSTER.

Sold down the river. See TO SELL DOWN THE RIVER under RIVER.

Soldier. Originally a hireling; one paid a wage, especially for military service (Med. Lat. solidus, a gold coin, hence pay).

An old soldier. An empty bottle. Cp. DEAD MARINES.

Soldiers' battles. Engagements which are essentially hand-to-hand encounters between the opposing soldiers themselves, the commander usually being prevented by circumstances from making effective dispositions. Inkerman (1854), which was fought in a fog, is known as the Soldiers' Battle.

Soldiers of fortune. Men who live by their wits; chevaliers d'industrie. Referring to those men in mediæval times who let themselves for hire to any army.

Soldier's wind. See under WIND.

To come the old(er) soldier over one. To dictate peremptorily and profess superiority of knowledge and experience; also to impose on one.

But you needn't try to come the old soldier over me, I'm not quite such a fool as that.

HUGHES: Tom Brown at Oxford, II, xvii.

To soldier on. To keep going in spite of discouragements and difficulties; to plod on steadily like a good soldier.

Solecism (sō' lē sizm). A deviation from correct idiom or grammar; from the Greek soleikos, speaking incorrectly, so named from Soloi, a town in Cilicia, the ATTIC colonists of which spoke a debased form of Greek.

The word is also applied to any impropriety or breach of good manners.

Solemn. The Solemn League and Covenant. An agreement between the English PARLIAMENT and the Scots in 1643 to strengthen their position in the struggle against Charles I. Presbyterianism was to be established in England and Ireland and the Scots undertook to provide an army in return for payment. Charles II swore to abide by the Covenant when he was crowned at SCONE in 1651, but after the RESTORATION it became a dead letter. See COVENANTERS.

Sol-fa. See TONIC SOL-FA.

Solicitor. See ATTORNEY.

Solicitor-General. The second law officer of the Crown and deputy of the ATTORNEY-GENERAL. He is a member of the HOUSE OF COMMONS and his period of office terminates with the fall of the ministry. It is customary to confer a knighthood on the holder of this office.

Solid (Lat. solidus, firm, dense, compact). As applied to individuals it commonly denoted soundness, as in a "man of solid worth", or grave and profound; also a man of substance. In more recent colloquial usage it implies mental slowness, obtuseness, as in such expressions as, "he is solid from the neck up".

The Solid Doctor. Richard Middleton (fl. 1280), a Franciscan SCHOOLMAN, author of works on theology and canon law. Solid here means profound.

Solipsism (sō lip' sizm) (Lat. solus, alone; ipse, self). Absolute egoism; the metaphysical theory that the only knowledge possible is that of oneself.

Solomon. King of Israel (d. c. 930 B.C.). He was specially noted for his wisdom, hence his name has been used for wise men generally.

The English Solomon. James I (1566, 1603-1625), who was a Scot, was called by Sully "the wisest fool in Christendom".

The Solomon of France. Charles V (1338, 1364-1380), le Sage.

Solomon's Carpet. See CARPET.

Solomon's Ring. See under RING.

Solomon's Seal. Polygonatum multiflorum, a plant with drooping white flowers. As the stems decay, the root-stock becomes marked with scars that have some resemblance to seals; this is one explanation of the name; another is that the root has medicinal value in sealing up and closing green wounds. It is also another name for the STAR OF DAVID.

Solon. Athenian statesman and sage (c. 638-c. 558 B.C.), a great law giver and one of the Seven Sages of Greece (see WISE MEN).

The Solon of Parnassus. So VOLTAIRE called Nicolas Boileau (1636-1711), in allusion to his Art of Poetry.

Solstice (sol' stis). The summer solstice is 21 JUNE; the winter solstice is 22 DECEMBER; so called because on or about these dates the sun reaches its extreme northern and southern points in the ECLIPTIC and appears to stand still (Lat. sol, sun; stetit, stands) before it turns back on its apparent course.

Soma (sō' ma). An intoxicating drink anciently made, with mystic rites and incantations, from the juice of some Indian plant by the priests, and drunk by the BRAHMINS as well as offered as libations to their gods. It was fabled to have been brought from HEAVEN by a falcon, or by the daughters of the SUN; and it was itself personified as a god, and represented the MOON. The plant was probably a species of Asclepias.

To drink the Soma. To become immortal, or as a god.

Some. Some pumpkins (U.S.A.). Substantial, important; the opposite of "small potatoes".

Somerset House. The present building off the STRAND, housing the Board of Inland Revenue, the offices of the Registrar General, and the Principal Probate Registry, was built (1776-1786) by Sir William Chambers. It occupies the site of the former princely mansion of Protector Somerset, brother of Jane Seymour and uncle of Edward VI. It became crown property after Somerset's execution (1552) and was later renamed Denmark House by James I, in honour of his queen, Anne of Denmark. It was occupied in turn by three Queens, Anne of Denmark, Henrietta Maria, and Catherine of Braganza.

Somoreen. See ZAMORIN.

Son. Son of God. Christ; one of the regenerate.

As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.

Rom. viii, 14.

Son of a gun. See under GUN.

Sons of Liberty. American secret radical associations formed after the passing of the Stamp Act (1765) to resist British attempts at taxation. They had considerable influence in arousing revolutionary feeling.

Son of Man. In the GOSPELS, a title of Christ.

Every mother's son. All, without exception; every one of you.

Song. A song or an old song. A mere trifle, something hardly worth reckoning, as "it went for a song"; it was sold for practically nothing. It probably derives from the trifling cost of the old ballad sheets or the small change given to itinerant songsters outside inns and public houses.

The Songs of Degrees. Another name for the GRADUAL PSALMS.

The Song of Roland. See under ROLAND.

The Song of Songs. The Song of Solomon in the Old Testament, also known as Canticles.

The Song of the Three Children. An apocryphal book in the SEPTUAGINT and the VULGATE included as part of the Book of Daniel. It contains the prayer of Azarias and a narrative of the three Hebrews in the fiery furnace ending with the thanksgiving for their deliverance. The canticle known as the Benedicite is taken from this.

Don't make such a song about it! Be more reasonable in your complaints; don't make such a fuss about it.

What! all this for a song? The reputed comment of Lord Burghley, the Lord High Treasurer when he heard of Queen Elizabeth I's proposed bounty of £500 to Edmund Spenser, author of the Faerie Queene. The story is told by Edward Phillips in his Theatrum Poetarum Anglicanorum (1675), and he says that Burghley owed Spenser a grudge and had the grant cut to £100. An earlier account in Fuller's Worthies of England (1662) says that Elizabeth initially commanded the treasurer to give Spenser £100 but Burghley objected to the amount. So the Queen told him to give "what is reason". Payment was neglected so Spenser presented this petition to the Queen:

I was promis'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme;
From that time unto this season,
I receiv'd nor rhyme nor reason.

"Hereupon the queen gave strict order . . . for the present payment of the hundred pounds the first intended unto him."

Sonnet, Prince of the Sonnet. Joachim du Bellay, "Apollo of the PLEIAD" (1522-1560), French sonneteer, was so called.

Dark Lady of the Sonnets. See under LADY.

Sooner. Slang for a sponger, one who lives on his wits and will do anything sooner than work for his living.

In America the term was applied to settlers in the western districts who peg out their claims in the territory before the time appointed by the Government.

Sooterkin. A kind of false birth fabled to be produced by Dutch women through sitting over their stoves; hence an abortive proposal or scheme, and, as applied to literature, an imperfect or a supplementary work.

For knaves and fools being near of kin
As Dutch boors are t'a sooterkin,
Both parties join'd to do their best
To damn the public interest.

BUTLER: Hudibras, III, ii, 145.

Sop. A sop in the pan. A tit-bit, dainty morsel; a piece of bread soaked in the dripping of meat caught in the dripping pan; a bribe.

To give a sop to Cerberus. To give a bribe; to quiet a troublesome customer. CERBERUS is PLUTO's three-headed dog, stationed at the gates of the infernal regions. When persons died the Greeks and Romans used to put a cake in their hands as a sop to Cerberus, to allow them to pass without molestation.

Soph. A contraction of sophister. At Cambridge, a second-year student was formerly called a Junior Soph and in his third year a Senior Soph. These students had to maintain a given question in the schools by opposing the orthodox view of it (see ACT OF OPPOSITION). The word is from Greek and Latin sophister, a sophist.

In American universities Soph is an abbreviation of Sophomore, a term applied to second-year students.

Sophia, Santa (sō fi' á). The great metropolitan cathedral of the ORTHODOX CHURCH at Istanbul. It was built by Justinian (532-537), but since the capture of the city by the Turks (1453) has been used as a mosque and is now a museum. It was not dedicated to a saint named Sophia, but to the "Logos", or Second Person of the TRINITY, called Hagia Sophia (Sacred Wisdom).

Sophist, Sophistry, Sophism, Sophisticator, etc. These words have quite departed from their original meaning. The seven sages (see WISE MEN OF GREECE) were called sophists (wise men) and in the 4th and 5th centuries B.C. the term denoted those who made a profession of teaching the various branches of learning. PYTHAGORAS (fl. c. 540-c. 510 B.C.) out of modesty called himself a PHILOSOPHER (a wisdom-lover). A century later Protagoras of Abdera resumed the title and the sophists became hostile to the philosophers. Their hypercritical attitudes eventually led to sophistry falling into contempt, as the less able increasingly appeared as a set of quibblers. Hence sophos and its derivatives came to be applied to "wisdom falsely so called", and philo-sophos to the "modest search after truth". The current use of the word sophisticated to mean "up-to-date", etc., is another step in its degeneration.

Sophy, The. An old title of the rulers of Persia, first given as an epithet to Sheik Junaid, whose grandson, Ismail I, founded the Safawid dynasty (1502-1736). It is derived from Arab. Ḥafi-ud-din, purity of religion. See also RULERS, TITLES OF.

Sorbonne. The usual name for the University of Paris, which derives from the ancient college of this name, the Collegium Pauperum Magistrorum founded by Robert de Sorbon in c.1257. He was confessor of St. LOUIS and the college was for the advanced study of theology. It was suppressed in 1792, but re-established by NAPOLEON in 1808 as a theological faculty which lasted until 1882.

Sorites (sō ri' tēz). A "heaped-up" (Gr. soros, a heap) or cumulative SYLLOGISM, the predicate of one forming the subject of that which follows, the subject of the first being ultimately united with the predicate of the last. The following will serve as an example:

All men who believe shall be saved.

All who are saved must be free from sin.

All who are free from sin are innocent in the sight of God.

All who are innocent in the sight of God are meet for HEAVEN.

All who are meet for heaven will be admitted into heaven.

Therefore all who believe will be admitted into heaven.

The famous Sorites of Themistocles was:

That his infant son commanded the whole world, proved thus:

My infant son rules his mother.

His mother rules me.

I rule the Athenians.

The Athenians rule the Greeks.

The Greeks rule Europe.

And Europe rules the world.

Sorrow. The Seven Sorrows of the Virgin. See MARY.

Sort. Out of sorts. Not in good health and spirits. The French être dérangé explains the METAPHOR. If cards are out of sorts they are deranged, and if a person is out of sorts the health or spirits are out of order.

In printers' language sorts is applied to particular pieces of type considered as part of the fount, and a printer is out of sorts when he has run short of some particular letters, figures, stops, etc.

To run upon sorts. In printing, said of work which requires an unusual number of certain letters, etc.; as an index, which may require a disproportionate number of capitals.

Sortes (sôr' tēz) (Lat. sors, sortis, chance, lot). A species of DIVINATION performed by selecting passages from a book haphazard. VIRGIL'S Aeneid was anciently the favourite work for the purpose (Sortes Virgilianæ), but the BIBLE (Sortes Biblicæ) has also been in common use.

The method is to open the book at random, and the passage you touch by chance with your finger is the oracular response. Severus consulted Virgil, and read these words: "Forget not thou, O Roman, to rule the people with royal sway." Gordianus, who reigned only a few days, hit upon this verse: "Fate only showed him on this earth, and suffered him not to tarry"; and Dr. Wellwood gives an instance respecting Charles I and Lord Falkland, to amuse the king, suggested this kind of AUGURY, and the king hit upon IV, 615-20, the gist of which is that "evil wars would break out, and the king lose his life". Falkland, to laugh the matter off, said he would show his Majesty how ridiculously the "lot" would foretell the next fate, and he lighted on XI, 152-81, the lament of Evander for the untimely death of his son Pallas. King Charles soon after mourned over his noble friend who was slain at Newbury (1643).

In Rabelais (III, x), PANURGE consults the Sortes Virgilianæ et Homerice on the burning question, whether or not he should marry. In Cornelius Agrippa's De Vanitate Scientiarum, c. iv, there is a passage violently reprobating the Sortes.

S O S. See under s.

Soter (sô' tēr). Ptolemy I of Egypt (d. 283 B.C.) was given this surname, meaning the Preserver, by the Rhodians because he compelled Demetrius to raise the siege of Rhodes (304 B.C.).

Sothic Period, Year. The Sothic year was the fixed year of the ancient Egyptians, the canicular year, determined from one heliacal rising of the DOG-STAR Sirius (Sothis) to the next. Since Sothis rose one day later every four years their CALENDAR did not accord with the solar year until after 1,460 (365 × 4) solar years when their first day of the year had worked through the seasons and come back into line. This was the Sothic or CANICULAR PERIOD.

Soul. The idea of the soul as the immaterial and immortal part of man surviving after death as a ghost or spirit was an ancient and widespread belief. The ancient Egyptians represented it as a bird with a human head. With ARISTOTLE the soul is essentially the vital principle and the Neoplatonists held that it was located in the whole body and in every part. It has also been located in the blood, the heart, the brain, bowels, liver, kidneys, etc.

The MOSLEMS say that the souls of the faithful assume the forms of snow-white birds, and nestle under the throne of ALLAH until the resurrection.

All Souls' Day. 2 November, the day following All Saints' Day, set apart by the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH for a solemn service for the repose of the departed. In England it was formerly observed by ringing the soul bell (see PASSING-BELL under BELL), by making and distributing SOUL CAKES, blessing beans, etc.

Soul Cakes. Sweet cakes formerly distributed at the church door on ALL SOULS' DAY to the poor who went a-souling, i.e. begging for soul cakes. The words used were:

Soul, soul, for soul-cake,
Pray you, good mistress, a soul cake.

Soul-papers. Papers requesting prayers for the souls of the departed named thereon which were given away with SOUL CAKES.

Soup. In the soup. In a mess, in trouble.

Sour grapes. See GRAPES.

South Bank religion. A journalistic label for the religious activities in the diocese of SOUTHWARK associated with its BISHOP, Dr. Arthur Mervyn Stockwood, Dr. John Robinson, SUFFRAGAN bishop of Woolwich, and some of their diocesan clergy. Characterized by outspokenness on moral and political issues often from a socialist angle, and energetic attempts to bring the Church into closer relation to contemporary society and its problems, South Bank religion is not without its critics and the label is often applied disparagingly by opponents. Dr. Stockwood was appointed under Mr. Macmillan's TORY government in 1958 and the appellation South Bank derives from the fact that the Southwark diocese borders on the south bank of the Thames.

South Sea Bubble. The speculative mania associated with South Sea Company and other stock in 1720 which ended disastrously in the ruin of many. The South Sea Company, founded in 1711, was given the monopoly of trade with Spanish America in return for an undertaking to convert part of the NATIONAL DEBT to a lower rate of interest. In 1720 the company's monopoly was extended to the South Seas and at the same time it offered to take over the whole National Debt. This led to gross over-speculation and many other preposterous companies were floated. £100 shares of the company ran up to £890 and ultimately £1,000 with the inevitable consequences, and Ministers were involved. The South Sea Company continued its existence until 1856. Cp. MISSISSIPPI BUBBLE.

Southcottians. The followers of Joanna Southcott (1750-1814), one-time domestic servant at Exeter. Starting as a METHODIST, she became a prophetess and declared herself to be the "woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars" (Rev. xiii, 1). At the age of 64 she announced that she was to be delivered of a son, the Shiloh of Gen. xlix, 10—

The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be.

19 October 1814 was the date fixed for the birth, which did not take place, but the prophetess died in a trance soon afterwards and was buried in the churchyard of St. John's Wood Chapel. She left a locked wooden box usually known as Joanna Southcott's Box which was not to be opened until a time of national crisis, and then only in the presence of all the bishops in England. Attempts were made to persuade the episcopate to open it during the Crimean War and again in World War I. It was opened in 1927 in the presence of one reluctant prelate, and found to contain a few oddments and unimportant papers, and among them a lottery ticket. It is claimed by some that the box opened was not the authentic one.

Southpaw. In American usage, a left-handed baseball player, especially a pitcher; also meaning sometimes any left-handed person. In both American and British usage it describes a boxer who leads with his right hand.

Southwark. The ancient suburb on the south bank of the Thames annexed to the City of London in 1327 and once known as "The BOROUGH". It has a wealth of historical associations including the site of the TABARD INN of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, the Globe Theatre on BANKSIDE, the CLINK, the MARSHALSEA, and PARIS GARDEN, as well as the church of St. Mary OVERIE, the George Inn, etc. Southwark possessed two MINTS and an annual fair (1550-1763), and it became an independent borough in 1899. As a DIOCESE, it was formed out of Rochester in 1905. The name means "Southern fort" and is of Saxon origin.

Sovereign. A strangely evolved word from Lat. superanus, supreme; the last syllable being assimilated to reign. The Fr. souverain is nearer the Latin; Ital. souvrano; Span. soberano.

The gold coin of this name valued at 20 shillings, first issued by Henry VII, was so called from its representation of the monarch enthroned and was replaced by the UNITE in the reign of James I. A smaller sovereign was issued from 1817 until 1917.

Sow (sou). A pig of my own sow. Said of that which is the result of one's own action.

A still sow. A cunning and selfish man; one wise in his own interest; one who avoids talking at meals that he may enjoy his food the better. So called from the old proverb, "The still sow eats the wash" or "draff".

We do not act that often jest and laugh;
'Tis old, but true, "Still swine eats all the draff."
SHAKESPEARE: Merry Wives of Windsor, IV, ii.

As drunk as David's, or Davy's sow.
See DAVY'S SOW.

To get the wrong sow by the ear. To capture the wrong individual, to take "the wrong end of the STICK", hit upon the wrong thing.

To send a sow to Minerva. To "teach your grandmother to suck eggs" (see under EGG), to instruct one more learned in the subject than yourself. From the old Latin proverb, Sus Minervam docet (a pig teaching MINERVA); Minerva being the goddess of wisdom.

You cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear. See under SILK.

Sow (sō). Sow the wind and reap the whirlwind. To provoke serious consequences through one's heedless actions.

Spade. The spade of playing-cards is so called from Span. espada, a sword, the suit in Spanish packs being marked with short swords; in French and British cards the mark—largely through similarity in name—has been altered to the shape of a pointed spade.

Spade guinea. An English gold coin, value 2s., minted 1787-1799, so called because it bears a shield shaped like the spade on playing-cards on the reverse. The legend is M.B.F. ET. H. REX. F.D.B. ET. L. D.S.R.I.A.T. ET. E.—Magnæ Britannæ, Franciæ, et Hiberniæ Rex; Fidei Defensor; Brunsvicensis et Lunenburgensis Dux; Sacri Romani Imperii Archi Thesaurarius et Elector.

To call a spade a spade. To be outspoken, blunt, even to the point of rudeness; to call things by their proper names without any "beating about the bush" (see under BEAT).

Spagyric (spâ jir' ik). Pertaining to ALCHEMY; the term seems to have been invented by PARACELUS. Alchemy is "the spagyric art", and an alchemist a "spagyrist".

Spagyric food. CAGLIOSTRO's name for the ELIXIR of immortal youth.

Spain. Castles in Spain. See CASTLE.

Patron Saint of Spain. St. JAMES the Great, who is said to have preached the GOSPEL in Spain and to have his relics preserved at COMPOSTELA.

Spanish fly. The cantharis, a coleopterous insect used in medicine. Cantharides are dried and used externally as a blister and internally as a stimulant to the genito-urinary organs; they were formerly considered to act as an aphrodisiac.

The Spanish Main. Properly, the north-east coast of South America from the mouth of the Orinoco to the Isthmus of Panama; the mainland bordering the Caribbean Sea, called by the Spanish conquerors Tierra Firme. The term is often more loosely applied to the area of the Caribbean Sea and its islands.

Then up and spake an old Sailor,
Had sailed the Spanish Main.

LONGFELLOW: The Wreck of the Hesperus.

Spanish moss. A plant of the family Bromeliaceæ which hangs in long grey festoons from the branches of trees, especially the live oak, in tropical and sub-tropical American forests.

Spanish worm. An old name for a nail concealed in a piece of wood, against which a carpenter jars his saw or chisel.

To ride the Spanish mare. An old nautical punishment. The victim was put astride a boom with the stay slackened off when the ship was at sea. A hazardous position and of great discomfort.

To walk Spanish. To walk on tiptoe, being lifted and pushed by a more powerful person; to walk under compulsion; to walk GINGERLY. From the behaviour of pirates of the SPANISH MAIN towards captives.

Span New. See SPICK.

Spaniel. The "Spanish dog", from español, through the French.

Spanker. Used of a fast horse, also colloquially—of something or someone that is an exceptionally fine specimen, a "stunner".

In nautical language the spanker is the fore-and-aft sail set upon the mizen-mast of a three-masted vessel, and the jigger-mast of a four-masted vessel. There is no spanker in a one- or two-masted vessel of any rig.

Spare the rod and spoil the child. See under ROD.

Sparker, or Sparks. A colloquial term for a ship's wireless operator; in the Royal Navy formerly called a Telegraphist, now called a Radio Operator.

Spartacists. An extreme Socialist group in Germany that flourished between 1916 and 1919. It was founded by Karl Liebknecht who, with Rosa Luxemburg, led an attempted revolution in January of the latter year, in the suppression of which they were both killed. The movement was finally crushed by Ebert's government in the April. It took its name from the Thracian GLADIATOR, Spartacus, who in 90 B.C. led a slave rebellion against ROME, which was not suppressed until 71 B.C. During the uprising, he defeated five Roman armies and devastated whole tracts of Italy.

Spartan. The inhabitants of ancient Sparta, one of the leading city-states of Greece, were noted for their frugality, courage, and stern discipline; hence one who can bear pain unflinchingly is termed "a Spartan", a very frugal diet is "Spartan".

fare", etc. It was a Spartan mother, who, on handing her son the shield he was to carry into battle, said that he was to come back either with it or on it.

Spartan dog. A blood-hound; a blood-thirsty man.

O Spartan dog
More fell than anguish, hunger or the sea.
SHAKESPEARE: Othello, V, ii.

Spasmodic School, The. A name applied by W. E. Aytoun in 1854 to certain writers of the 19th century whose style was marked by sentimentality, forced conceits, and a certain lack of taste. Among them were P. J. Bailey, Sydney Dobell, Ernest Jones, Ebenezer Jones, and Alexander Smith.

Speak. To speak the same language. To understand each other perfectly, to hold the same views.

English as she is spoke. Used of ungrammatical or unidiomatic English. Andrew White Tuer (1838-1900) chose this as a title of a reprint of the English part of a book purporting to be a guide to conversation in English and Portuguese by Cavolino (first published at Paris, 1855). The gross distortions of English are said to have suggested the title.

Speak-easy. A place where alcoholic liquors are sold without a licence, or in some illegal way.

Speaker. The title of the presiding officer and official spokesman of the British HOUSE OF COMMONS, the United States House of Representatives, and of some other legislative assemblies.

The Speaker of the House of Commons has autocratic power in the control of debates and internal arrangements of the House, etc.; he is elected by the members irrespective of party, and ceases to be a "party man", having no vote—except in cases of a tie, when he can give a CASTING VOTE. He holds office for the duration of that PARLIAMENT, but by custom (not law) is reappointed unless he wishes to resign (in which case he goes to the HOUSE OF LORDS).

The LORD CHANCELLOR (see under CHANCELLOR) is ex officio Speaker of the HOUSE OF LORDS.

To catch the Speaker's eye. The rule in the HOUSE OF COMMONS is that the member whose rising to address the House is first observed by the SPEAKER is allowed precedence.

Speaking. A speaking likeness. A very good and lifelike portrait; one that makes you imagine that the subject is just going to speak to you.

Speaking Heads. Fables and romance tell of a variety of artificial heads that could speak; among the best known are:

The statue of MEMNON, in Egypt, which uttered musical sounds when the morning sun darted on it (see THEBES).

That of ORPHEUS, at Lesbos, which is said to have predicted the bloody death that terminated the expedition of Cyrus the Great into Scythia.

The head of MINOS, fabled to have been brought by ODIN to Scandinavia, and to have uttered responses.

The BRAZEN HEAD of Roger Bacon, and that of Gerbert, afterwards Pope Sylvester II (10th century).

An earthen head made by Albertus Magnus in the 13th century, which both spoke and moved. THOMAS AQUINAS broke it, whereupon the mechanist exclaimed: "There goes the labour of thirty years!"

Alexander's statue of ÆSCULAPIUS; it was supposed to speak, but Lucian says the sounds were uttered by a concealed man, and conveyed by tubes to the statue.

The "Ear of Dionysius" communicated to Dionysius, Tyrant of Syracuse, whatever was uttered by suspected subjects shut up in a state prison. This "ear" was a large black opening in a rock, about 50 ft. high, and the sound was communicated by a series of channels not unlike those of the human ear.

They are not on speaking terms. Said of those who have fallen out.

Spear. If a KNIGHT kept the point of a spear forward when he entered a strange land, it was a declaration of war; if he carried it on his shoulder with the point behind him, it was a token of friendship. In OSSIAN (Temora, I), Cairbar asks if FINGAL comes in peace, to which Morannal replies: "In peace he comes not, king of ERIN, I have seen his forward spear."

The spear of Achilles. See ACHILLES' SPEAR.

The spear side. The male line of descent, called by the Anglo-Saxons spere-healfe. Cp. DISTAFF SIDE; SPINDLE SIDE.

To break a spear. To fight a TOURNAMENT.

To pass under the spear. To be sold by auction, sold "under the hammer". Writing to Pepys (12 August 1689), Evelyn speaks of "the noblest library that ever passed under the spear". The phrase is from the Lat. sub hasta vendere.

Special Pleading. Quibbling; making your own argument good by forcing certain words and phrases from their obvious and ordinary meaning. A pleading in law means a written statement of a cause PRO AND CON, and "special pleaders" are persons who have been called to the BAR, but do not speak as advocates. They advise on evidence, draw up affidavits, state the merits and demerits of a cause, and so on. After a time most special pleaders go to the bar and many get advanced to the BENCH.

Specie, Species, means literally "what is visible" (Lat. species, appearance). As things are distinguished by their visible forms, it has come to mean kind or class. As drugs and condiments at one time formed the most important articles of merchandise, they were called species—still retained in the French épices, and English spices. Again, as banknotes represent money, money itself is called specie, the thing represented.

Spectacles. In CRICKET, when a batsman makes no score in either innings of a match, he is said to make a pair of spectacles. Cp. DUCK'S EGG under DUCK.

Spectre of the Brocken. An optical illusion, first observed on the Brocken (the highest peak of the Hartz range in Saxony), in which shadows of the spectators, greatly magnified, are projected on the mists about the summit of the mountain opposite. In one of De Quincey's opium-dreams, there is a powerful description of the Brocken spectre.

Speculum Humanæ Salvationis (The Mirror of Human Salvation). A similar book to the BIBLIA PAUPERUM on a somewhat more extensive scale, telling pictorially the BIBLE story from the fall of LUCIFER to the Redemption of Man, with explanations of each picture in Latin rhymes. Its illustrations were copied in church sculptures, wall paintings, altarpieces and stained-glass windows. Copies of the 13th century and earlier are extant and it was one of the earliest of printed books (c. 1467). See also BLOCK BOOKS.

Speech. Parts of Speech. See under PART.

Speech Day. The annual prize-giving day at a school when it is customary to invite a guest to make a speech and to distribute the prizes. The Headmaster or Headmistress also makes a report on the school's record for the preceding year, and sundry other worthies manage to contribute (often lengthy) votes of thanks, etc.

The speech from the throne. See QUEEN'S OR KING'S SPEECH.

Speech is silver, or silvern, silence is golden. An old proverb, said to be of oriental origin, pointing to the advantage of keeping one's own counsel. The Hebrew equivalent is: "If a word be worth one shekel, silence is worth two."

Speech was given to man to disguise his thoughts. This epigram was attributed to Talleyrand by Barrère in his Memoirs; but though Talleyrand no doubt used it, he was not its originator. VOLTAIRE, in his XIVth Dialogue (Le Chapon et la Poularde), had said:

Men use thought only as authority for their injustice, and employ speech only to conceal their thoughts.

and Goldsmith in The Bee, III (1759), has:

The true use of speech is not so much to express our wants as to conceal them.

Speenhamland System. The system of outdoor relief initiated by the magistrates of Speenhamland, Berkshire, in 1795 to counter distress among the agricultural labourers. Wages were to be supplemented by rate-aid according to a minimum-wage scale related to the price of bread and the size of the family. Outdoor relief was not new, but the Speenhamland System spread rapidly, particularly in the south. It tended to depress wages and demoralize its beneficiaries and sharply increased the poor rate. The Poor Law Amendment Act (1834) sought to terminate outdoor relief, but never wholly succeeded.

Speewah, The. A mythical cattle station somewhere in Australia where everything is bigger and better than anywhere else in the world. A series of legends comparable only with the adventures of Baron MÜNCHAUSEN are associated with it.

Spell. Spell hol An exclamation to signify that the allotted time has expired for a spell of work, and the men are to be relieved by others. Spell here is from O.E. spelian. To spell meaning to relieve another at work is now rare. To spell, meaning to write or name the letters that make a word, is from O. Fr. espeler.

Spell (O.E. spel, a saying, fable, etc.). Spells as charms and incantations are found the world over in folk-lore and superstition. They form part of the stock-in-trade of WITCHES, WIZARDS, magicians, sorcerers, GYPSY crones, etc., and many fairy stories revolve round their use.

The component words of the spells used by mediæval sorcerers were usually taken from Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, but mere gibberish was often employed.

Cp. ABRACADABRA; ABRAXAS.

Spellbinders. Orators who hold their audience spellbound, that is fascinated, charmed. The word came into use in America in the presidential election of 1888.

Spencean Philanthropists. Followers of Thomas Spence (1750-1814) who, in 1775, devised a system of land nationalization on socialist lines. They formed the Society of Spencean Philanthropists in 1812 and thought that their plan heralded the MILLENNIUM. Spence denounced the landed aristocracy and was constantly in trouble for his views and pamphlets. It was the Spenceans who advocated seizing power by force; they addressed the Spa Fields meeting of 2 December 1816 which ended in the plundering of gunsmiths' shops, and they were prominent in the CATO STREET CONSPIRACY of 1820.

Spencer. Now applied to a close-fitting bodice worn by women, but formerly the name of an outer coat without skirts worn by men; so named from the second Earl Spencer (1758-1834).

Spencerian Handwriting is the name given to a style of calligraphy introduced by Platt Rogers Spencer (1800-1861), an American calligrapher. Written with a fine pen, with the down-strokes tapering from top to bottom and large loops, the writing has a forward slope and marked terminal flourishes. Spencer taught this style in many parts of U.S.A. and it is said to have had a marked influence on American calligraphy.

Spenserian Stanza. The stanza devised by Edmund Spenser for the Faerie Queene (1590). It may have been founded on the Italian ottava rima, or on Chaucer's stanza in the Monk's Tale. The Old French ballad has been suggested as another source. It is a stanza of nine IAMBIC lines, all of ten syllables except the last, which is an ALEXANDRINE. Only three different rhymes are admitted into a stanza and these are disposed: a b a b b c b c c.

Among those who used this stanza are Akenside (Virtuoso), Thomson (Castle of Indolence), Byron (Childe Harold), Shelley (Adonais, The Revolt of Islam), and Keats (The Eve of St. Agnes).

Spheres. In the PTOLEMAIC SYSTEM of astronomy the nine spheres were those carrying (1) DIANA or the MOON, (2) MERCURY, (3) VENUS, (4) APOLLO or the SUN, (5) MARS, (6) JUPITER, (7) SATURN, (8) the fixed stars—the Starry Sphere, and (9) the CRYSTALLINE SPHERE—introduced by Hipparchus, to account for the precession of the equinoxes. The PRIMUM MOBILE was added in the MIDDLE AGES.

The Music, or Harmony of the Spheres. PYTHAGORAS, having ascertained that the pitch of notes depends on the rapidity of vibrations, and also that the planets move at different rates of motion, concluded that the planets must make sounds in their motion according to their different rates; and that, as all things in nature are harmoniously made, the different sounds must harmonize; whence the old theory of the "harmony of the spheres". Kepler has a treatise on the subject.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st
 But in his motion like an angel sings,
 Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubims.
 SHAKESPEARE: Merchant of Venice, V, i.

Sphinx (sfinks). The sphinx of Greek mythology, quite distinct from the Egyptian sphinx, was a monster with the head and breasts of a woman, the body of a dog or LION, the wings of a bird, a SERPENT's tail, and lion's paws. It had a human voice and was said to be the daughter of Orthos and TYPHON (or the CHIMÆRA). She inhabited the vicinity of THEBES, setting the inhabitants riddles and devouring those unable to find solutions. The Thebans were told by the oracles that she would kill herself if the following riddle was solved:

What goes on four feet, on two feet, and three,
 But the more feet it goes on the weaker it be?

It was at length solved by ŒDIPUS with the answer that it was a man, who as an infant crawls upon all fours, in manhood goes erect on two feet, and in old age supports his tottering legs with a staff. Thus were the Thebans delivered and this is the riddle of the sphinx.

The Egyptian sphinx was a lion, usually with a PHARAOH's head, symbolizing royal power and came to be associated with "HORUS in the Horizon" or Harmakhis. The famous Sphinx at Gizeh was hewn out of limestone rock by order of Khephren or Khafre (c. 2620 B.C.) and is some 60 ft. high and 180 ft. long.

Spice Islands. The Moluccas and most of the islands of the Malay Archipelago, whose chief products are spices of all kinds, much sought-after by 15th- and 16th-century navigators and traders when spices were highly prized commodities in Europe.

Spick and Span New. Quite and entirely new. A spic is a spike or nail, and a span is a chip. So that a spick and span new ship is one in which every nail and chip is new. The more common expression today is spick and span, meaning all neat, clean, bright, and tidy.

Spider. There are many old wives' tales about spiders, the most widespread being that they are venomous.

Let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,
And heavy-gaited toads lie in their way.

SHAKESPEARE: Richard II, III, ii.

There may be in the cup
A spider steep'd, and one may drink, depart,
And yet partake no venom.

SHAKESPEARE: The Winter's Tale, II, i.

During the examination into the murder (1613) of Sir Thomas Overbury, one of the witnesses deposed "that the countess wished him to get the strongest poison that he could . . .". Accordingly he brought seven great spiders.

Other tales were that fever could be cured by wearing a spider in a nutshell round the neck, and a common cure for jaundice was to swallow a large live house-spider rolled up in butter. In IRELAND this was a remedy for ague. A spider on one's clothes was a sign of good luck or that money was coming and the very small spider is called a money-spider.

Yet another story was that spiders spin only on dark days.

The subtle spider never spins,
But on dark days, his slimy gins.

S. BUTLER: On a Nonconformist, iv, 445.

Bruce and the spider. In 1306 Robert Bruce began a resistance to Edward I's domination of SCOTLAND and was crowned King at SCONE. The story is that, when in hiding in the island of Rathlin, he noticed a spider try six times to fix its web on a beam in the ceiling. "Now shall this spider (said Bruce) teach me what I am to do, for I also have failed six times." The spider made a seventh effort and succeeded. Bruce thereupon left the island (1307), with 300 followers, landed at Carrick, and at midnight surprised the English garrison in Tumberry Castle. His successes steadily grew until, in 1314, he routed the English at the great victory of Bannockburn.

Frederick the Great and the spider. While Frederick II was at SANS-SOUCI, he went into his ante-room to drink a cup of chocolate, but set his cup down to fetch a handkerchief. On his return he found a great spider had fallen from the ceiling into his cup. He called for fresh chocolate and the next moment heard the report of a pistol. The cook had been suborned to poison the chocolate and, supposing he had been found out, shot himself. On the ceiling of the room in Sans-Souci a spider has been painted (according to tradition) in remembrance of this event.

Mohammed and the spider. When MOHAMMED fled from MECCA he hid in a certain cave, with the Koreishites close upon him. Suddenly an acacia in full leaf sprang up at the mouth of the cave, a wood-pigeon had its nest in the branches, and a spider had woven its net between the tree and the cave. When the Koreishites saw this, they felt persuaded that no one could have entered recently, and went on.

Spigot. Spare at the spigot and spill at the bung. To be parsimonious in trifles and wasteful in great matters, like a man who stops his beer-tub at the vent-hole and leaves it running at the bung-hole.

Spike. Slang for the workhouse; to go on the spike, to become a workhouse inmate. A spike is also a colloquialism for a high churchman, and the Church Times is colloquially known as Spiky Bits.

To spike a drink. To add strong spirits to increase the alcoholic content.

To spike one's guns for him. To render his plans abortive, frustrate the scheme he has been laying, "draw his teeth". The allusion is to the old way of making a gun useless by driving a spike into the touch-hole.

Spill. To spill the beans. To reveal a secret prematurely.

It's no good crying over spilt milk.
See under CRY.

Spin a yarn. To. To tell a story. A nautical expression, from the days when sailors whiled away the time telling stories while sitting on deck making spun yarn and other rope work.

Spindle side. The female line of descent. The spindle was the pin on which the thread was wound from the spinning-wheel. Cp. DISTAFF SIDE; SPEAR SIDE; SPINSTER.

Spinner. Come in, Spinner. From the Australian national game of "Two Up"—spinning two coins, on which enormous sums are bet. When all bets are laid against the man who wishes to spin, he is told to come in (or spin) by the "boxer" (referee in charge of the game). The phrase is used derisively by one who has been taken in by a joke or trick.

Spinster. An unmarried woman. In Saxon times, spinning was a routine winter occupation of the female section of the household. ALFRED THE GREAT, in his will, calls the female part of his family the SPINDLE SIDE; and it was reckoned by our forefathers that no young woman was fit to be a wife till she had spun for herself a set of body, table, and bed linen. Hence the maiden was termed a spinner or spinster.

It is said that the heraldic lozenge, in which the armorial bearings of a woman are depicted originally represented a spindle. Among the Romans the bride carried a distaff, and HOMER tells us that Kryseis was to spin and share the king's bed.

Spirit. Properly, the breath of life, from Lat. spiritus (spirare, to breathe, blow):

And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.
Gen. ii, 7.

Hence, life or the life principle, the SOUL; a disembodied soul (a ghost or apparition), or an immaterial being that never was supposed to have had a body (sprite), as a GNOME, ELF, or FAIRY; also, the temper or disposition of mind as animated by the breath of life, as in good spirits, high-spirited, a man of spirit.

The mediæval physiological notion (adopted from Galen) was that spirit existed in the body in three kinds, viz. (1) the Natural spirit, the principle of the "natural functions"—growth, nutrition, and generation, said to be a vapour rising from the blood and having its seat in the liver; (2) the Vital spirit, which arose in the heart by a mixture of the air breathed in with the natural spirit and supplied the body with heat and life; and (3) the Animal spirit, which was responsible for the power of motion and sensation, and for the rational principle generally; this was a modification of the vital spirit, effected in the brain.

The Elemental spirits of PARACELSUS and the ROSICRUCIANS, i.e. those which presided over the four elements, were—the SALAMANDERS (or fire), GNOMES (earth), SYLPHS (air), and UNDINES (water).

Spirit also came to mean any volatile agent or essence; and hence, from the alchemists, is still used of solutions in alcohol and of any strong alcoholic liquor. The alchemists named four substances only as "spirits"—MERCURY, arsenic, sal ammoniac, and sulphur.

The first spirit quyksilver called is:

The second ornament; the third y-wis

Sal armoniac; and the feth bremstoon.

CHAUCER: Canon's Yeoman's Tale, 102.

To spirit away. To kidnap, abduct; to make away with speedily and secretly. The phrase first came into use in the 17th century, in connexion with kidnapping youths and transporting them to the West Indian plantations.

Spiritualism. The belief that communication between the living and the spirits of the departed can and does take place, usually through the agency of a specially qualified person (a medium) and often by means of rapping, table-turning, or automatic writing; the system, doctrines, practice, etc., arising from this belief. Cp. OUIJA.

In philosophy, spiritualism—the antithesis of materialism—is the doctrine that the spirit exists as distinct from matter, or as the only reality.

Spit. The dead spit of his father, etc. The exact counterpart; the equivalent of SPIT AND IMAGE.

Spit and image, or spitting image. An exact likeness or resemblance—just as if one person were to spit out of another's mouth.

Spit and polish. To give something "a bit of spit and polish" is to clean it up, to make it shine, etc. To spit on leather, etc., and rub it to give it a shine was once common practice; an expression of army origin, the army being properly concerned with the maintenance of smartness of equipment. See BULL.

Spitting for luck. Spitting was a charm against enchantment among the ancient Greeks and Romans. Pliny says it averted WITCHCRAFT, and availed in giving an enemy a shrewder blow. People sometimes spit for luck on a piece of money given to them or found; boxers spit on their hands, and traders were wont to spit on the first money taken in the day. There are numerous other instances of spitting for luck and it was also common to spit for defiance or as a challenge, etc.

Spitting image. See SPIT AND IMAGE.

Spital, or Spittle. Contractions for hospital. The London district of Spital-fields which included parts of Bethnal Green, SHOREDITCH, WHITECHAPEL, and Mile End, was named from its being the property of the Priory and hospital of St. Mary Spittle founded by Walter Brune and his wife Rosia in 1197. HUGUENOT refugees settled there after the revocation (1685) of the EDICT OF NANTES (see under NANTES) and it became a centre for silk and velvet manufacture.

Spital Sermons. Sermons preached formerly on EASTER Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday from the Pulpit cross, Spitalfields, which were attended by the Lord MAYOR and Aldermen. The pulpit was destroyed in the CIVIL WARS and at the RESTORATION the Spital sermons were revived at St. Bride's, FLEET STREET. In 1797 they were reduced to two and delivered at Christ Church, Newgate Street. The boys of Christ's Hospital, Horsham, still attend Christ Church on St. MATTHEW's Day for the Spital Sermon.

Spiv. A shady character who lives by his wits without working. A word used by race-course gangs since the 1890s. Probably an abbreviation of spiffing, an old slang word meaning "fine", "excellent"; an allusion to the flash, dandified appearance of the characteristic spiv.

Spleen. The soft vascular organ placed to the left of the stomach and acting on the blood, once believed to be the seat of melancholy and ill humour. The fern splenwort was supposed to remove splenic disorders.

Splice. To marry, to join together. A phrase of nautical origin. Splice is probably derived from Ger. spleissen, to split, as ropes are split or unlayed prior to their being united or interwoven or "spliced".

To splice the main brace. See MAIN-BRACE.

Split. Colloquially, to give away one's accomplices, to betray secrets, to tell tales, to PEACH.

To split hairs. See under HAIR.

To split the infinitive. To interpose words between to and the verb, as, "to thoroughly understand the subject". This construction is branded as a SOLE-CISM by pedants and purists, but it is long established and has been used by many accomplished writers.

Without permitting himself to actually mention the name.

MATTHEW ARNOLD: On Translating Homer, iii.

It becomes a truth again, after all, as he happens to newly consider it.

BROWNING: A Soul's Tragedy, Pt. II.

To split with laughter. To laugh uproariously or unrestrainedly; to "split one's sides".

Spoils System. The practice in the United States by which the victorious party in an election rewards its supporters by appointments to public office. It takes its name from the phrase "to the victor belong the spoils" which was popularized by Senator Marcy in 1831. Andrew Jackson was not the originator of the practice, nor did he noticeably extend it. It was first used by Jefferson (1801-1809) and used on a big scale from 1841. The Pendleton Act of 1883 and subsequent legislation proved ineffective checks.

To spoil the Egyptians. To plunder one's enemies by force or trickery, as the Jewish women were instructed to do (Exod. iii, 22) before their departure from Egypt.

And the Lord gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they lent unto them such things as they required. And they spoiled the Egyptians.

Exod. xii, 36.

To spoil the ship for a ha'porth o' tar. See under SHIP.

Spoke. To put a spoke in one's wheel. To interfere with his projects and frustrate them; to thwart him. When solid wheels were used, the driver was provided with a pin or spoke, which he thrust into one of the three holes made to receive it, to skid the cart when it went down-hill.

Sponge. To sponge on a man. To live on him like a parasite, sucking up all he has as a dry sponge will suck up water.

To throw up the sponge. Give up; confess oneself beaten. The METAPHOR is from boxing matches, for when a second tossed a sponge (used to refresh a contestant) into the air it was a sign that his man was beaten.

A sponger is a mean parasite who is always accepting the hospitality of those who will give it and never makes any adequate return.

A Sponging House. A house where persons arrested for debt were kept for 24 hours, before being sent to prison. They were generally kept by a bailiff, and the person lodged was "sponged" of all his money before leaving.

Spoon. A simpleton, a shallow prating duffer used to be called a spoon, and hence the name came to be applied to one who indulged in foolish, sentimental love-making, and such a one is said to be spooky, and to be spoons on the girl.

In nautical phrase to spoon is to scud before the wind; and in sculling, to dip the sculls so lightly in the water as to do little more than skim the surface.

Apostle spoons. See under APOSTLE.

Love spoons. The giving of elaborately carved love spoons by a lover to his lady as a token during courtship was common in 18th-century Wales and later.

Born with a silver spoon in his mouth. See under BORN.

He needs a long spoon who sups with the Devil. You will want all your wits about you if you ally or associate yourself with evil. SHAKESPEARE alludes to this proverb in the Comedy of Errors, IV, iii, and again in The Tempest, II, ii, where Stephano says: "Mercy! mercy! this is a devil . . . I will leave him, I have no long spoon."

Therefor behoveth hire a ful long spoon
The schal ete with a feend.

CHAUCER: Squire's Tale, 594.

Spoonerism. A form of METATHESIS that consists of transposing the initial sounds of words so as to form some ludicrous combination, often the accidental result of mental tiredness or absent-mindedness; so called from the Rev. W. A. Spooner (1844-1930), Warden of New College, Oxford. Some of the best attributed to him are: "We all know what it is to have a half-warmed fish within us" (for "half-formed wish"); "Yes, indeed; the Lord is a shoving leopard"; and, "Kinkering Kongs their titles take." Sometimes the term is applied to the accidental transposition of whole words, as when the tea-shop waitress was asked for "a glass bun and a bath of milk". Cp. MALAPROP.

Sport. To sport one's oak. See under OAK.

Sporting Seasons in England. The lawful season for venery, which began at Midsummer and lasted till HOLY ROOD DAY, used to be called the Time of Grace. The fox and wolf might be hunted from the NATIVITY to the ANNUNCIATION; the roebuck from EASTER to MICHAELMAS; the roe from Michaelmas to CANDLEMAS; the hare from Michaelmas to Midsummer; and the boar from the Nativity to the PURIFICATION.

The times for hunting and shooting are now fixed as follows: those marked thus (*) are fixed by Act of Parliament.

BLACK GAME*, from 20 August to 10 December; but in Somerset, Devon, and the New Forest, from 1 September to 10 December.

Deer, about 12 August to 12 October for stags and from 10 November to 31 March for hinds.

Fox-hunting, early November until April.

Grouse shooting*, 12 August to 10 December.

Otter hunting, mid-April to mid-September.

Partridge shooting*, 1 September to 1 February.

Pheasant shooting*, 1 October to 1 February.

There is no close season for the shooting of rabbits, hares, woodcock, snipe, quail, etc., but it is illegal for shops to sell hares between 1 March and 31 July.

There are special game laws for IRELAND and SCOTLAND and permitted seasons for the taking of trout, salmon, oysters, chub, carp, etc.

Spot. In a spot. In a jam or difficulty, up against it.

On the spot. Immediately, then and there, ready and alert; without having time to move away or do anything else. "He answered on the spot", immediately, without hesitation. To put on the spot (U.S.A.), to mark down for assassination; to give one a grilling.

To knock spots off one. To excel him completely in something; originally an Americanism.

Spot cash. Ready money, money down.

Spot check. A surprise check on the spot without notice being given; a random check to serve as a basis for conclusions on a wider basis.

Spot dance. A dance in which the couple focused in the spotlight gain the prize.

Spot on. Exactly right, right on the mark.

Spouse, one who has promised (Lat. sponsus, past part. of spondere, to promise). In ancient ROME, the friends of the parties about to be married met at the house of the woman's father to settle the marriage contract. This contract was called sponsalia (espousal); the man, sponsus, and the woman, sponsa.

The spouse of Jesus. St. TERESA of Avila (1515-1582) was given this title by some of her contemporaries.

All thy good works . . . shall

Weave a constellation

Of Crowns with which the King thy spouse

Shall build up thy triumphant brows.

CRASHAW: Hymn to St. Theresa (1652).

Spout. To spout. To utter in a bombastic, declamatory manner; to declaim.

Up the spout. At the pawnbroker's or more usually nowadays "down the drain", gone, lost, ruined, etc. An allusion to the "spout" up which brokers sent the articles ticketed. When redeemed they returned down the spout—i.e. from the storeroom to the shop. It is also a vulgarism meaning "pregnant".

Sprat. To throw a sprat to catch a mackerel. To give a trifle, to make a concession, etc., in the hope of a bigger return.

Spread-eagle, spread-eaglim, spread-eagled. See under EAGLE.

Spring, Tom (1795-1851). One of the great pugilists of the English prize ring who claimed the title of English champion on the retirement of Tom Cribb. His real name was Winter, and on retiring (1828) he became landlord of the Castle Tavern, HOLBORN.

Hail to thee, Tom of Bedford, or to by whatever name it may please thee to be called, Spring or Winter. . . . Hail to thee, last of England's bruisers . . . 'Tis a treat to see thee, Tom of Bedford, in thy "public" in Holborn way, whither thou hast retired with thy well-earned bays.

BORROW: Lavengro, ch. xxvi.

Spring Tides. The tides that spring or rise up higher than other tides. They occur just after new and full MOON, when the gravitational attraction of both SUN and moon acts in a direct line. Cp. NEAP TIDES.

Springers, The. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Sprite. See SPIRIT.

Spruce. Smart, dandified. The word is from the old Fr. Pruce (Ger. Preussen), Prussia, and was originally (16th century) applied to Prussian leather of which particularly neat and smart-looking jerkins were made.

And after them came, syr Edward Haward, then admiral, and with him sir Thomas Parre, in dobles of Crimosin velvet, voyded lowe on the backe, and before to the cannell bone, laced on the breastes with chaynes of silver, and over that shorte clokes of Crimosyn satyne, and on their heades hattes after dauncers fashion, with fesauntes fethers in them; They were appareyled after the fashion of Prussia or Spruce.

Hall's Chronicle: Henry VIII, year 1 (1542).

Spruce beer is made from the leaves of the spruce fir, this being a rendering of the German name of the tree, Sprossen-fichte, literally "sprouts-fir".

Spunging House. See SPONGING HOUSE.

Spur. The Battle of the Spurs. A name given (1) to the Battle of Courtrai (1302) when the French were defeated by the Flemings, so called from the thousands of spurs collected as trophies after the battle; (2) to the Battle of Guinegate (1513) when the French spurred away from their vanquishers, the forces of Henry VIII of England and the Emperor Maximilian.

On the spur of the moment. Instantly; without stopping to take thought.

Spur money. A small fine formerly imposed on those who entered a church wearing spurs, because of the interruption caused to divine service by their ringing. It was collected by the choir-boys or the BEADLES.

To dish up the spurs. In SCOTLAND, during the times of the BORDER feuds, when any of the great families had come to the end of their provisions, the lady of the house sent up a pair of spurs for the last course, to intimate that it was time to put spurs on the horses and make a raid upon ENGLAND for more cattle.

To ride whip, or switch and spur. To ride with all possible speed; to trample down obstacles ruthlessly.

To win his spurs. To gain the rank of knighthood; hence to win entitlement to recognition by one's efforts. When a man was knighted, the person who dubbed him presented him with a pair of gilt spurs.

Sputnik (Russ. travelling-companion). A Russian man-made earth satellite. Sputnik 1 launched 4 October, 1957, was the first satellite to be projected successfully into orbit round the earth.

Spy Wednesday. A name given in IRELAND to the Wednesday before GOOD FRIDAY, when JUDAS bargained to become the spy of the Jewish SANHEDRIN (Matt. xxvi, 3-5, 14-16).

Squab. Short and fat, plump; a person, cushion, etc., like this (a fat woman is squabba in Swedish). A young pigeon—especially an unfledged one—is called a squab.

Poet Squab. So Rochester called Dryden, who was very corpulent.

Squab-pie. Pigeon pie, or a pie of mutton, apples and onions.

Cornwall squab-pie and Devon white-pot brings, And Leicester beans and bacon, fit for kings.

WILLIAM KING: Art of Cookery.

Squad, Squadron. See AWKWARD SQUAD.

Squalls. Look out for squalls. Expect to meet with difficulties. A nautical term, a squall being a succession of sudden violent gusts of wind (Icel. skvata).

Square, A. In modern slang, one who likes orthodox music and not JAZZ and its derivatives; one of "bourgeois" tastes; one who is not in with current trends, fashions, and hence old-fashioned. There are several suggestions for the origin of these usages none of which is particularly convincing, the most likely being associated with the patrons of the traditional square dance as opposed to the devotees of rocking and rolling, jiving and twisting, etc.

A square deal. A fair deal, one that is straight and above board. Similarly a square meal is one that is adequate and satisfying. In both these expressions "square" conveys the idea of "straight", "right", and hence "satisfying".

To square a person. To bribe him, or to pay him for some extra trouble he has taken.

To square an account. To settle it; to pay the amount owing.

To square accounts with a person. To get even with; to be revenged upon.

To square the circle. To attempt an impossibility. The allusion is to the impossibility of exactly determining the precise ratio (π) between the diameter and the circumference of a circle, and thus constructing a circle of the same area as a given square. Approximately π is 3.14159, but the next decimals would be 26537, and the numbers would go on ad infinitum.

To square up to a person. To put oneself in a fighting attitude.

Are you such fools
To square for this?
SHAKESPEARE: Titus Andronicus, II, i.

Square rig. See FORE AND AFT.

Squib. A small firework thrown by hand; a LAMPOON, a short SATIRE.

A damp squib. Said of an enterprise or joke, etc., that fails to come off or satisfy the expectations aroused, just as a damp squib disappointingly fails to explode.

Squinancy. See QUINSY.

Squantum, Doctor. George Whitefield (1714-1770), so called by Foote in his farce The Minor.

Theodore Hook applied the sobriquet to Edward Irving the preacher (1792-1834), who had an obliquity of the eyes.

Squire. In mediæval times a youth of gentle birth attendant on a KNIGHT (see ESQUIRE). From the latter 16th century the term is applied to country landowners who exercised sway, mostly paternal, over a district. The squirearchy as such has largely been extinguished by the rise of a more democratic urbanized society on the one hand and rapacious taxation on the other. Addison's benevolent Sir ROGER DE COVERLEY, Fielding's Squire Western in Tom Jones and Jorrocks, the creation of Surtees, himself a Northumbrian squire, provide lively portraits of varying traditions.

Squire of dames. Any CAVALIER who is devoted to ladies. Spenser introduces "the Squire of Dames" in the Faerie Queene (Bk. III, Canto vii, stanza 51). Cp. CAVALIERE SERVENTE.

Stabat Mater (sta' bāt ma' ter) (Lat., The Mother was standing). The Latin hymn reciting the SEVEN SORROWS of the Virgin at the Cross, so called from its opening words, forming part of the service during Passion week in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. It is of unknown authorship and in addition to its traditional plain-song there are settings by Palestrina, Pergolesi, Haydn, Rossini, and others.

Stable. To lock the stable door, etc. See under HORSE.

Stadium. This word is from Gr. stadion, a length of 600 Greek feet (about 606 English feet), which was the length of the foot-race course at OLYMPIA; hence applied to the race, then the place where it was run. The Olympic stadium had terraced seats along its length and the length of the course was traditionally said to have been fixed by HERCULES.

Staff. I keep the staff in my own hand. I keep possession; I retain the right. The staff was the ancient SCEPTRE, and therefore, figuratively, it means power, authority, dignity, etc.

Give up your staff, sir, and the king his realm.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. II, ii, iii.

The staff of life. Bread, which is the support of life.

"Bread," says he, "dear brothers, is the staff of life."

SWIFT: Tale of a Tub, iv.

To put down one's staff in a place. To abide for a while, to set down one's staff, as a traveller at an inn. The phrase introduced by Thomas Adams (fl. 1612-1653), a divine, called by Southey "the prose SHAKESPEARE of PURITAN theologians".

To strike staff. To lodge for the time being.

Stafford. He has had a treat in Stafford Court. He has been thoroughly cudgelled, a pun on the word staff, a stick. The French have a similar phrase: Il a été au festin de Martin Baston (he has been to JACK DRUM'S ENTERTAINMENT).

Similarly, Stafford law is club law—a good beating.

Stag. The reason why a stag symbolizes Christ is from the ancient idea that by its breath it draws SERPENTS from their holes, and then tramples hem to death (Pliny: Natural History, vi, 50).

The Stag in Christian art. The attribute of St. JULIAN Hospitaller, St. Felix of Valois, and St. Aidan. When it has a crucifix between its horns it alludes to the legend of St. HUBERT. When luminous it belongs to St. Eustachius.

Stag line. An American term for the line of men at the edge of the dance floor, without partners, and waiting to claim one from among those dancing.

Stag party. A gathering of men only—usually out on the spree.

Stags, in Stock Exchange phraseology, are persons who apply for new shares, etc., on allotment, not because they wish to hold the shares, but because they hope to sell the allotment at a premium.

Stage whisperers. A "whisper" intended to be heard by other than those to whom it is addressed, as one on the stage is heard by the audience.

Stagirite, or Stagyrite, The (stāj' rit). ARISTOTLE, who was born at Stagira, in Macedon (4th century B.C.).

And rules as strict his laboured work confine
As if the Stagirite o'erlooked each line.

POPE: Essay on Criticism, I. 137.

Stairs. Below stairs. In the basement among the servants. In most of the town houses built from the end of the 18th century for the well-to-do, the kitchens and servants' day-time quarters were in the basement, hence the phrase. Above stairs has the opposite implications and associations. Cp. UPSTAIRS.

Stakhanovism (stāk ān' ō vizm). In the U.S.S.R., a movement for specially raising the output of labour on a basis of specialized efficiency, after Alexei Stakhanov, a Donetz coal-miner who substantially increased his daily output by rationalization. In 1935 Stalin held a conference of Stakhanovites in which he extolled the working-man.

Stalemate. To stalemate a person. To bring him to a standstill, render his projects worthless or abortive. The phrase is from CHESS, stalemate being the position in which the king is the only moveable piece and he, though not in CHECK, cannot move without becoming so. Stale in this word is probably from O. Fr. estal (our stall), a fixed position.

Stalingrad. Formerly Tsaritsyn, on the Volga, renamed to commemorate its defence by Stalin, in 1917, against the WHITE RUSSIANS. Stalin died in 1953 and in 1962 the name was changed to Volgograd. In 1943 it was the scene of the decisive defeat of the German VI Army.

Stalking-horse. A mask to conceal some design; a person put forward to mislead; a sham. Sportsmen often used to conceal themselves behind horses, and go on walking step by step till they got within shot of the game.

He uses his folly like a stalking-horse, and under the presentation of that he shoots his wit.
SHAKESPEARE: As you Like It, V, iv.

Stammerer, The. Louis II of France, le Bègue (846, 877-879).

Michael II, Emperor of the East (820-829).
Balbus Notker, monk of St. Gall (surnamed Balbulus) (c. 840-912).

Stamp. 'Tis of the right stamp. Has the stamp of genuine merit. A METAPHOR taken from current coin, which is stamped with a recognized stamp and superscription.

I weigh the man, not his title; 'tis not the king's stamp can make the metal heavier or better.
WYCHERLEY: The Plain Dealer, I, i (1677).

The rank is but the guinea's stamp;
The man's the gowd for a' that!
BURNS: Is There for Honest Poverty?

Stand. To be at a stand. To be in doubt as to further progress, perplexed at what to do next.

To let a thing stand over. To defer consideration of it to a more favourable opportunity.

To stand by. To be ready to give assistance in case of need. A stand-by is a person or thing on which one can confidently rely.

To stand for a child. To be sponsor for it; to stand in its place and answer for it.

To stand in with. To go shares, to become a party to.

To stand it out. Persist in what one says. A translation of "persist" (Lat. per-sisto or per-sto).

To stand off and on. A nautical phrase for tacking in and out along the shore.

To stand Sam, stand to reason, stand treat, etc. See these WORDS.

To stand to one's guns. To persist in a statement; not to give way. A military phrase.

To stand up for. To support, to uphold.

To stand up for one's privilege, or on punctilios. Quietly to insist on one's position, etc., being recognized; this is the Latin insisto.

A stand-in. A substitute.

Stand-offish. Unsociable, rather snobbishly reserved.

Standing orders. Rules or instructions constantly in force, as those of a commanding officer or those rules of the Houses of PARLIAMENT for the conduct of proceedings which stand in force till they are rescinded or superseded. The suspension of the latter is generally caused by a desire to hurry through a BILL with unusual expedition.

The Standing Fishes Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Standard. Properly a large flag tapering towards the fly, slit at the end and flown by personages of rank. It bore the owner's badges and its length depended upon the owner's rank.

The personal Royal Standard of the British Sovereign is a banner in shape and quarterings. The word is from Lat. extendere, to stretch out, through O. Fr. estandard. See THE BATTLE OF THE STANDARD, below.

Standard is also applied to a measure of extent, weight, value, etc., which is established by law or custom as an example or criterion for others; and, in figurative use from this, to any criterion or principle, as, "the standard of political rectitude". The weights and measures were formerly known as "the king's standard", as being official and recognized by royal authority.

In uses such as an electric-light standard (the lamp-post), standard rose (i.e. one that stands on its own stem and is not trained to a wall or espalier), etc., the word is the result of confusion with stand.

The Battle of the Standard. Between the English and Scots at Cowton Moor, near Northallerton (22 August 1138). Here David I, fighting on behalf of Matilda, was defeated by King Stephen's army under Thurstan, Archbishop of York, and Raoul, Bishop of Durham. It received its name from the mast (erected on a wagon) carrying the banners of St. PETER of York, St. JOHN OF BEVERLEY, and St. WILFRED of Ripon, surmounted by a PYX containing the HOST. It was this occasion which introduced the word standard into the English language.

Gold Standard. See under GOLD.

The standard of living. A conventional term to express the supposed degree of comfort or luxury usually enjoyed by a man, a family, or a nation: this may be high or low according to circumstances.

Standard Time, or Zone Time. A system of time-keeping in most parts of the world based on 24 meridians, each 15° apart, starting from Greenwich, thus giving an exact difference of an hour between any two adjacent zones (certain countries have adopted zones involving half-hour differences). Such a system was first adopted by the chief railway companies of Canada and the U.S.A. in 1883 to overcome the obvious inconveniences caused by the differing local times on their routes. Cp. DAYLIGHT SAVING; GREENWICH TIME.

Stang. To ride the stang. At one time in SCOTLAND and the north of ENGLAND a man who ill-treated his wife (or sometimes a HEN-PECKED husband) was made to sit on a stang (O.E. staeng, a pole) hoisted on men's shoulders. On this uneasy conveyance the "stanger" was carried in procession amidst the hootings and jeerings of his neighbours. Cp. SKIMMINGTON.

Stanhope (stán' óp). The Stanhope lens, a cylindrical lens with spherical ends of different radii, and the Stanhope press, the first iron printing press to be used (1798), are so called from the inventor, Charles, third Earl of Stanhope (1753-1816).

Stannaries, The. The tin-mines of Devon and Cornwall (Lat. stannum, tin), an apauage of the Crown, and after 1337 of the Duchy of Cornwall. A warden was appointed in 1198 and in 1201 King John issued their first charter confirming the tanners' privileges and making the Warden the only magistrate to have jurisdiction over them. The tanners had their own representative meetings or "parliaments" as late as 1752 and were subject to special Stannary Courts which were not finally abolished until 1897. The courts, under the Lord Warden, vice-warden, and stewards were also concerned with regulation of the trade. The miners were anciently called stannators.

Star. In ecclesiastical art a number of SAINTS are depicted with a star; thus, St. Bruno bears one on his breast, St. DOMINIC, St. Humbert, St. Peter of Alcantara, one over their head, or on their forehead, etc.

A star of some form constitutes part of the insignia of every order of knighthood; the Star and Garter, a common public-house sign, being in reference to the Most Noble Order of the GARTER.

Star is also figuratively applied to a noted performer, especially a film actor; hence the star part, the part taken by the leading actor, who is the star turn.

The stars were said by the old astrologers to have almost omnipotent influence on the lives and destinies of man (cp. Judges, v, 20: "The stars in their courses fought against Sisera"), and to this belief is due a number of phrases as: Bless my stars! You may thank your lucky stars, star-crossed (not favoured by the stars, unfortunate), to be born under an unlucky star, etc.

Star Chamber. A court of mediæval origin, composed of the King's Council, reinforced by judges, which developed criminal jurisdiction. So named from its meeting place, the Star Chamber in the Palace of WESTMINSTER, the ceiling or roof of which was decorated with stars. The reputation it acquired for harshness was largely unjustified and it was frequently attacked by the Common Lawyers who resented its jurisdiction. It was abolished by the LONG PARLIAMENT in 1641.

Star of Bethlehem. A bulbous plant of the lily family (Ornithogallum umbellatum), with star-shaped white flowers. The French peasants call it La dame d'onze heures, because it opens at eleven o'clock.

Star of David, or Shield of David. A symbol of obscure origin (also called SOLOMON'S SEAL) made up of two superimposed equilateral triangles forming a hexagon or six-pointed star. It is used as the symbol of Judaism and is incorporated on the flag of the State of Israel. It is found as early as the 3rd century but is not mentioned in the BIBLE or the TALMUD. Jews were made to wear such a cloth star under the NAZI régime and, to show his disapproval of this racial indignity, King Christian X of Denmark wore a Star of David during the German occupation of his country.

Star of India. A British order of knighthood, The Most Exalted Order of the Star of India, instituted by Queen Victoria in 1861. Its motto is "Heaven's Light our Guide" and it was a means of recognizing services to India and the loyalty of its princely rulers. No appointments have been made since 1947 and it is now obsolescent.

Stars and Bars. The flag of the 11 CONFEDERATE STATES of America which broke away from the UNION in 1861. It consisted of two horizontal red bars with a narrow white bar between them; in the top left corner a blue union bearing eleven white stars arranged in a circle.

Stars and Stripes, or the Star-spangled Banner, the flag of the United States of America. The stripes are emblematic of the original 13 states, and the stars—of which there are 50—of the States that now constitute the UNION. It is also popularly called Old Glory, a name said to have been given by William Driver, a Salem skipper, in 1831.

At the outset of the American Revolution each state adopted its own flag, that of Massachusetts bearing a pine tree and that of South Carolina a rattlesnake with the words "Don't tread on me". In 1776 a national flag of 13 red and white stripes with crosses of St. GEORGE and St. ANDREW in a canton was adopted.

By act of Congress, 14 June 1777, a flag of 13 alternate red and white stripes, with a union of 13 white stars on a blue field was adopted, the stars arranged in a circle representing "a new constellation". It was apparently designed by Francis Hopkinson and the story that it was first embroidered by Betsy Ross is now discredited.

In 1794 (after the admission of Vermont and Kentucky), the stripes and stars were increased to 15, but in 1818 it was decided that the original 13 stripes should be restored, and stars added to signify the number of States in the Union. The stars were also squared up for the first time.

The Stars and Stripes forever is the name of Sousa's most popular military band tune, and the Star-Spangled Banner was adopted as the official anthem of the United States in 1931. The words were written by Francis Scott Key in 1814, the tune being that of "ANACREON in Heaven", a popular drinking song composed by J. S. Smith for the Anacreontic Society of London.

His star is in the ascendant. He is in luck's way; said of a person to whom some good fortune has fallen and who is very prosperous. According to ASTROLOGY, those leading stars which are above the horizon at a person's birth influence his life and fortune; when those stars are in the ASCENDANT, he is strong, healthy, and lucky; but when they are in the descendant below the horizon, his stars do not shine on him, he is in the shade and subject to ill fortune. Cp. HOUSES, ASTROLOGICAL.

I'll make you see stars! "I'll put you through it"; literally, will give you such a blow in the eye with my fist that, when you are struck, you'll experience the optical illusion of seeing brilliant streaks, radiating and darting in all directions.

Star-gazy, or Starry-gazy pie. An old Cornish dish of pilchards baked in a pie with their heads poking through the crust.

Starboard and Larboard. Star- is the O.E. steor, paddle, rudder, and bord, side. Larboard is perhaps from ladebord, the lading side. See PORT.

Stare. To stare like a stuck pig. See under PIG.

Starvation Dundas. Henry Dundas, first Viscount Melville (1742–1811), was so called. He first used the word starvation or brought it to popular notice in a Parliamentary speech (1775) concerned with the placing of restrictions on American colonial trade.

Starved with cold. Half dead with cold (O.E. steorfan, to die).

States, The. A common term for the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

States General. In France, the national consultative assembly (États Généraux), of 14th-century origin, but not summoned between 1614 and 1789. It consisted of three estates, Clergy, Nobility and Third Estate (le tiers état) or bourgeoisie. It was the latter which began the Revolution in 1789.

The name is still applied to the PARLIAMENT of the Netherlands consisting of two chambers, the upper elected by members of the Provincial States and the second chamber elected by the people.

Station (Lat. statio, a place of standing, station, etc.). This word with the meaning of a place where people assemble for a specific duty or purpose has many applications; e.g. a railway station (U.S.A. depot); a police station, a lifeboat station, etc. In Australia, it was used as early as 1830 in the sense of a cattle farm or ranch. Thus, station black, an aboriginal; station super, a manager; station mark, a brand; station jack, a sort of meat pudding.

The Stations of the Cross; known as the via Calvaria or via Crucis. Each station represents, by fresco, picture, or otherwise, some incident in the passage of Christ from the judgment hall to CALVARY, and at each prayers are offered up in memory of the event represented. They are as follows:

- (1) The condemnation to death.
- (2) Christ is made to bear His cross.
- (3) His first fall under the cross.
- (4) The meeting with the Virgin.
- (5) Simon the Cyrenean helps to carry the cross.
- (6) Veronica wipes the sacred face.
- (7) The second fall.
- (8) Christ speaks to the daughters of Jerusalem.
- (9) The third fall.
- (10) Christ is stripped of His garments.
- (11) The nailing to the cross.
- (12) The giving up of the Spirit.
- (13) Christ is taken down from the cross.
- (14) The deposition in the sepulchre.

Stator (stā' tōr) (Lat., the stopper or arrester). When the Romans fled from the SABINES, they stopped at a certain place and made terms with the victors. On this spot they afterwards built a temple to JUPITER, and called it the temple of Jupiter Stator, or Jupiter who caused them to stop in their flight.

Status quo (stā' tūs kwō) (Lat.). The state in which, the existing state or condition.

Status quo ante (Lat.). The previous position.

In statu quo (Lat.). In the same state (as before).

Status symbol. A possession, privilege, etc., which is a mark of one's social standing; generally used caustically of a fashionable, expensive, material object, the possession of which is designed to impress others and to flatter one's own self-esteem. Cp. KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES under KEEP.

Statute (Lat. statutum; from statuere, to cause to stand; the same word, etymologically, as statue). A law enacted by a legislative body, an ACT OF PARLIAMENT; also laws enacted by the king and council before there were any regular parliaments. Hence, a statute mile, a statute ton, etc., is the measure as by law established and not according to local custom.

On the statute book. Included among the laws of the nation; the statute book is the whole body of the laws.

Statute fair. A mop fair. See HIRING FAIR under FAIR.

Steaks, Sublime Society of the. See BEEFSTEAK CLUB.

Steal. One man may steal a horse, while another may not look over the hedge. See under HORSE.

To steal a march on one. To obtain an advantage by stealth, as when an army appears unexpectedly before an enemy.

Stolen sweets are always sweeter. Things procured by stealth, and game illicitly taken, have the charm of illegality to make them the more palatable. SOLOMON says, "Stolen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant" (Prov. ix, 17). In one of the songs in Act III, sc. iv, of Randolph's Amyntos (1638) are the lines:

Furto cuncta magis bella,
Furto dulcior Puella,
Furto omnia decora,
Furto poma dulciora, which were translated by Leigh Hunt as:

Stolen sweets are always sweeter,
Stolen kisses much completer,
Stolen looks are nice in chapels,
Stolen, stolen, be your apples.

Steam. To let off steam. To give vent to anger; to work off one's feelings; to work off energy; as steam pressure is released from an engine or boiler.

Steelboys. Bands of ULSTER insurgents who committed agrarian outrages in protest against the TITHES system in the early 1770s. Probably named from their "hearts of steel". Cp. OAK BOYS; WHITE-BOYS.

Steelyard. The London depot of the HANSE from 1320, occupying premises between Upper Thames Street and the river. The buildings were ultimately sold in 1853 and demolished ten years later to make way for Cannon Street Station. The name is a mistranslation of Ger. Staalhaf, a sample yard or hall.

Steelyard, the weighing machine with unequal arms, in which the article to be weighed is hung from the shorter arm and a weight moved along the other till they balance, is named from the metal and the measure (O.E. gyrd, gerd, a stick).

Steenie. A nickname given by James I to his handsome favourite, George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, with whom he was infatuated. "Steenie" is a Scotticism for STEPHEN, the allusion being to Acts vi, 15, where those who looked on Stephen the martyr "saw his face as it had been the face of an angel".

Steeplechase. A horse-race across fields, hedges, ditches, and other obstacles. The term is said to have originated from the frolic of a party of foxhunters in IRELAND (1803) who decided to race in a straight line to a distant steeple. The term is also applied to a cross-country race of this kind on foot. See RACES.

Steeple house. An old PURITAN epithet for a church.

Steering committee. A committee which decides the programme and order of business. A term of American origin.

Stentor (sten' tór). The voice of a Stentor. A very loud voice. Stentor was a Greek herald in the Trojan war. According to HOMER (Iliad, V, 783), his voice was as loud as that of 50 men combined; hence stentorian, loud-voiced.

Step-. A prefix used before father, mother, brother, sister, son, daughter, etc., to indicate that the person spoken of is a relative only by the marriage of a parent, and not by blood (O.E. steop, connected with astieped, bereaved). Thus, a man who marries a widow with children becomes stepfather to those children and, if he has children by her, these and those of the widow's earlier marriage are stepbrothers or stepsisters. The latter are also called half-brothers and half-sisters; but some make a distinction between the terms, half-brother being kept for what we have already defined as a stepbrother, this latter term being applied only between the children of former marriages when both parents have been previously married.

I feel like a stepchild. Said by one who is being left out of the fun or getting none of the titbits. Stepchildren are proverbially treated by the step-parent with somewhat less consideration than the others.

Stephen, St. (d. c. 35). The first Christian martyr—the "protomartyr". He was accused of blasphemy and stoned to death (see Acts vi–viii). He is commemorated on 26 December; the name means "wreath" or "crown" (Gr. stephanos).

The Crown of St. Stephen. The crown of Hungary, this St. Stephen being the first King of Hungary (975, 998–1038). He became a Christian in 985 and set out to convert his country. He was canonized in 1083 and his day is 16 August.

St. Stephen's. PARLIAMENT is still sometimes so called, because for nearly 300 years prior to its destruction by fire in 1834, the Commons used to sit in the Chapel of St. Stephen's in the Palace of WESTMINSTER.

St. Stephen's loaves. Stones.

Fed with St. Stephen's bread. Stoned.

Sterling. A term applied to British money and also to GOLD and SILVER plate denoting that they are of standard value or purity; hence applied figuratively to anything of sound intrinsic worth, as A man of sterling qualities. The word, first met with in the 12th century, has been held to be a corruption of Easterling, a name given to the HANSE merchants trading with England; but it is probably from O.E. steorling, a coin with a star, from the fact that some of the early Norman pennies had a small star on them.

Stern reality. See BISHOP.

Stern. To sit at the stern; At the stern of public affairs. Having the management of public affairs. The stern (O.E. steorne) is the steering place, hence the helm.

Sit at chiefest stern of public weal.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. I, I, i.

Sternhold and Hopkins. The old metrical version of the Psalms that used to be bound up with the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER and sung in churches. They were mainly the work of Thomas Sternhold (d. 1549) and John Hopkins (d. 1570). The completed version appeared in 1562.

Mistaken choirs refuse the solemn strain
Of ancient Sternhold.

CRABBE: The Borough, III, l. 130.

Stet (Lat., let it stand). A direction to cancel a correction or deletion previously made in a MS., proof, etc.

Stetson. A large-brimmed hat habitually worn by cattle-men in the U.S.A., so called from the best-known manufacturer, John B. Stetson.

Stew. In a stew. In a fix, a flurry; in a state of mental agitation.

Irish stew. A stew of mutton, onions, and potatoes; called "Irish" from the predominance of potatoes, regarded as the Irishman's staple diet.

To stew in one's own juice. To suffer the natural consequences of one's own actions; to reap as you have sown. Chaucer has:

In his own gress I mad him frie

For anger and for very jalousie.

Wife of Bath's Tale (Prologue), l. 487.

Stick. An old stick-in-the-mud. A dull, unprogressive person, sometimes but not always "old". Cp. SQUARE.

It sticks out a mile! It is absolutely obvious, one cannot miss it, there is no mistake about it, as, "Anyone can see he's a rogue—it sticks out a mile!"

Over the sticks. Over the hurdles; hence a hurdle-race or STEEPLECHASE.

The policy of the big stick. One backed by threat of force. See BIG STICK DIPLOMACY under BIG.

To have, or get the dirty end of the stick. To come off badly; to be left to bear the brunt of things; not to be treated fairly.

To stick at it. To persevere.

To stick at nothing. To be heedless of all obstacles in accomplishing one's desire; to be utterly unscrupulous.

To stick in one's gullet. Something difficult to swallow or digest, literally or metaphorically; something repugnant or unacceptable. To stick in one's gizzard and to stick in one's craw (a bird's crop) are similar expressions.

To stick it up. Old slang for leaving one's "SCORE" at the tavern to be paid later; a note of it was stuck, or chalked up, at the back of the door.

To stick to, or in his fingers. To appropriate improperly or unlawfully (usually money); to embezzle.

To stick up. To waylay and rob a coach, etc.; originally Australian BUSH-RANGER'S slang; in common use nowadays for armed robbery when the victims are covered with revolvers and told to "stick 'em up", i.e. to hold their hands above their heads.

The sticks. An American colloquialism meaning "countryside"; "rural area"; "wilds", etc. Cp. OUTBACK.

Stuck up. Said of pretentious people who give themselves airs, nobodies who assume to be somebodies. The allusion is to the peacock, which sticks up its train to add to its "importance" and overawe antagonists.

The wrong end of the stick. Not the true facts; a distorted version. To have got hold of the wrong end of the stick is to have misunderstood the story.

The sticking-place. The point at which a screw becomes tight; hence, the point aimed at. SHAKESPEARE'S use of the word is probably an allusion from the peg of a musical instrument, which is not much use unless it is actually in the "sticking-place".

We fail!

But screw your courage to the sticking-place,
And we'll not fail.

Macbeth, I, vii.

Stickit. A Scotticism for "stuck (stick-ed) half-way", as a stickit job, one that is unfinished or unsatisfactory; hence, applied to persons who have given up their work through lack of means or capacity or some other reason, as a stickit minister, one who has failed to get a pastoral charge, or to obtain preferment. S. R. Crockett wrote a novel called The Stickit Minister (1893).

Stickler. A stickler over trifles. One particular about things of no moment. Sticklers were the umpires in tournaments, or seconds in single combats, very punctilious about the minutest points of etiquette. The word is connected with O.E. stihstan, to arrange, regulate.

Stiff. Slang for a corpse; also for a horse that is sure to lose in a race; also (with reference to the stiff interest exacted by moneylenders) an I O U, a bill of acceptance.

His "stiff" was floating about in too many directions, at too many high figures.

OUIDA: Under Two Flags, ch. vii.

Stigmata (stig' má tà). Marks developed on the body of certain persons, which correspond to some or all of the wounds received by our Saviour in His trial and crucifixion. It is a well-known psychological phenomenon and has been demonstrated in many modern instances. From Gr. stigma, the brand with which slaves and criminals in ancient Greece and ROME were marked; hence our verb stigmatize, to mark as with a brand of disgrace.

Among those who are said to have been marked with the stigmata are: (1) Men. St. PAUL, who said "I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus" (Gal. vi, 17); Angelo del Paz (all the marks); Benedict of Reggio (the crown of thorns), 1602; Carlo di Saeta (the lance-wound); FRANCIS of Assisi (all the marks), 15 September 1224; and Nicholas of Ravenna. (2) Women. Bianca de Gazeran; Catherine of Siena; Catharine di Racconisco (the crown of thorns), 1583; Cecilia di Nobili of Nocera, 1655; Clara di Pugny (mark of the spear), 1514; "Estatica" of Caldaro (all the marks), 1842; Gabriella da Piezolo of Aquila (the spear-mark), 1472; Hieronyma Carvaglio (the spear-mark, which bled every Friday); Joanna Maria of the Cross; Maria Razzi of Chio (marks of the thorny crown); Maria Villani (ditto); Mary Magdalen di Pazzi; Mechtildis von Stanz; Ursula of Valencia; Veronica Giuliani (all the marks), 1694; Vincenza Ferreri of Valencia; Anna Emmerich, of Dülmen, Westphalia (d. 1824); Maria von Mörl (in 1839); Louise Lateau (1868), and Anne Girling, the foundress of the English SHAKERS. Theresa Neumann, of Kennersreuth, Germany (1898-1962), received her first stigmata on the tops of her hands and feet, on GOOD FRIDAY, 1926. In subsequent years more marks appeared, on her side, shoulders, and brow. Stigmata, as studied in her case, never heal and never suppurate.

Stilo Novo (sti' lö nō' vō) (Lat., in the new style). Newfangled notions. When the CALENDAR was reformed by Gregory XIII (1582), letters used to be dated stilo novo, which grew in time to be a CANT phrase for any innovation.

And so I leave you to your stilo novo.
BRAUMONT AND FLETCHER:
Woman's Prize, IV, iv.

Stir Up Sunday. The last SUNDAY after TRINITY. So called from the first two words of the collect: "Stir up, we beseech thee, O Lord, the wills of thy faithful people . . .". It was an old custom to stir the CHRISTMAS plum pudding on this day, hence the old schoolboy rhyme beginning, "Stir up, we beseech thee, the pudding in the pot."

Stirrup. Literally, a rope to climb by (O.E. stirap; from stigan, to climb, and rap, a rope).

Stirrup cup. A "parting cup" given to guests on leaving, when their feet were in the stirrups. Cp. DOCH-AN-DORIS.

Lord Marmion's bugles blew to horse;
Then came the stirrup-cup in course;
Between the baron and his host,
No point of courtesy was lost.

SCOTT: Marmion, I, 31.

Among the ancient Romans a "parting cup" was drunk to ensure sound sleep (see Ovid, Fasti, ii, 35).

Stirrup oil. A beating; a variety of STRAP OIL.

Stiver (sti' vēr). Not a stiver. Not a penny, not a cent. The stiver (stuiver) was a Dutch coin, equal to about a penny.

Set him free,
And you shall have your money to a stiver
And present payment.

FLETCHER: Beggars' Bush, I, iii.

Stock. Originally a tree-trunk, or stem (connected with stick); hence, in figurative use, something fixed, also regarded as the origin of families, groups, etc.; as He comes of a good stock, from a good stem, of good line of descent, Languages of Indo-Germanic stock, etc.

To worship stocks and stones is to worship idols, stock here being taken as a type of a motionless, fixed thing like a tree-stump. The village stocks, in which petty offenders were confined by the wrists and ankles, are so called from the stakes or posts at the side. Stock in the sense of a fund or capital derives from that part of the old wooden TALLY which the creditor took with him as evidence of the king's debt, the other portion, known as the counterstock, remaining in the EXCHEQUER. The word was then applied to the money which this tally represented, i.e. money lent to the government.

His stocks are good. His reputation is sound, he is held in good estimation. An allusion to stocks as investments.

It is on the stocks. It is in hand, but not yet finished. The stocks is the frame in which a ship is placed while building and so long as it is in hand it is said to be, or to lie, on the stocks.

Live stock. In colloquial usage, lice or other parasitic vermin.

Lock, stock, and barrel. See LOCK.

Stock in trade. The goods kept for sale by a shopkeeper; the equipment, tools, etc., for a trade or profession.

To take stock. To ascertain how one's business stands by taking an inventory of all goods and so on in hand, balancing one's books, etc.; hence, to survey one's position and prospects.

Stock-broker, stock-jobber. The broker is engaged in the purchase of stocks and shares for clients on commission; the jobber speculates in stocks and shares so as to profit by market fluctuations, and acts as an intermediary between buying and selling brokers. The jobber must be a member of a Stock Exchange; but a broker need not necessarily be; if he is not, he is known as an "outside broker" or a "kerbstone operator". Cp. BUCKET-SHOP.

Stockdove. The wild pigeon; so called because it nests in the stocks of hollow trees.

Stockfish. Dried cod, cured without salt, supposed to derive the name from its being beaten with a stock or club to make it more tender. Till beaten it was very tough and was called buckhorn. Hence the expression I will beat thee like a stockfish.

Peace, thou'lt be beaten like a stockfish else.
JONSON: Every Man in his Humour, III, i.

In SHAKESPEARE's day the word was often used as abuse; thus Falstaff shouts at Prince Henry:

'Sblood, you starveling, you elf-skin, you dried neat's tongue, you bull's pizzle, you stock-fish!
Henry IV, Pt. I, II, iv.

Stock-rider. The Australian term for one in charge of cattle, i.e. stock. He uses a stock-whip, and herds his beasts in a stock-yard.

Stocking. Used of one's savings or "NEST-EGG", because formerly money used to be hoarded up in an old stocking, which was frequently hung up the chimney for safety. See LONG STOCKING under LONG.

Blue stocking. See under BLUE.

Stockwell Ghost. A supposed ghost that created a great sensation in Stockwell (London) in 1772, then a village. The author of the strange noises was Anne Robinson, a servant. Cp. COCK LANE GHOST; SAMPFORD GHOST.

Stoic (stō' ik). A school of Greek philosophers founded by ZENO (c. 308 B.C.) who held that virtue was the highest good, and that the passions and appetites should be rigidly subdued. See PORCH. The later Stoic school of the Romans is represented by Seneca, Epictetus, and Marcus Aurelius.

The ancient Stoics in their porch
With fierce dispute maintained their church,
Beat out their brains in fight and study
To prove that virtue is a body,
That bonum is an animal,
Made good with stout polemic brawl.

BUTLER: Hudibras, II, ii, 15.

Stole (Lat. stola). An ecclesiastical vestment, also called the Orarium. Deacons wear the stole over the left shoulder like a sash. Priests normally wear it round the neck, both ends hanging loose in front. With Eucharistic vestments the ends are crossed over the chest.

Stole, Groom of the. Formerly, the first lord of the bedchamber, a high officer of the Royal HOUSEHOLD ranking next after the vice-chamberlain. In the reign of Queen Anne it was held by a woman, and on the accession of Queen Victoria the office was replaced by that of the Mistress of the Robes.

Stole here is not connected with Lat. stola, a robe, but refers to the King's stool or privy. As late as the 16th century, when the king made a royal progress his close-stool formed part of the baggage and was in charge of a special officer or groom.

Stolen sweets. See under STEAL.

Stomach. Used figuratively of inclination. Thus SHAKESPEARE has:

He which hath no stomach for this fight.
Henry V, IV, iii.

He [Wolsey] was a man of an unbounded stomach.
Henry VIII, IV, ii.

Let me praise you while I have the stomach.
Merchant of Venice, III, v.

To stomach an insult. To swallow or put up with an insult.

Stone. Used figuratively when some characteristic of a stone is implied as, stone blind, stone cold, stone dead, stone deaf, stone still, etc., as blind, cold, dead, deaf, or still as a stone.

I will not struggle; I will stand stone still.
SHAKESPEARE: King John, IV, i.

In all parts of the world primitive peoples have set up stones, especially those of meteoric origin (fabled to have fallen from HEAVEN), in connection with religious rites. Anaxagoras mentions a stone that fell from JUPITER in Thrace, a description of which is given by Pliny. The Ephesians asserted that their image of DIANA came from Jupiter. The stone at Emessa, in Syria, worshipped as a symbol of the SUN, was a similar meteorite, and there were similar stones at Abydos and Potidæa. At Corinth one was venerated as ZEUS, and Tacitus describes one in Cyprus dedicated to VENUS. The famous BLACK STONE set in the KAABA is also a meteorite.

The great stone circles of Avebury, STONEHENGE, and the STANDING STONES OF STENNESS, are particularly noteworthy examples of the industry and ingenuity of early man, each having their mythological and religious associations. See also ÆTITES; PHILOSOPHER'S STONE; PRECIOUS STONES; TOUCHSTONE; etc.

Hag-stones. Flints naturally perforated used in country places as charms against witches, the EVIL EYE, etc. They are hung on the key of an outer door, round the neck for luck, on the bed-post to prevent nightmare, on a horse's collar to ward off disease, etc.

The Standing Stones of Stenness, in Orkney some 4 miles from Stromness, comprise a NEOLITHIC stone-circle 340 ft. in diameter of which only 13 stones of a probable 60 are still standing, the tallest being 14 ft. high. Scott in a note (The Pirate, ch. xxxviii) says "One of the pillars . . . is perforated with a circular hole, through which loving couples are wont to join hands when they take the Promise of Odin." The Eyrbyggja Saga gives an account of the setting apart of the Helga Fels, or Holy Rock, by the pontiff Thorolf for solemn meetings.

The Stone Age. The period when stone implements were used by primitive man, before the discovery of metals. Its dating varies considerably over the continents, the use of bows and arrows, stone axes, bone tools, etc., persisting in Papua,

Stonehenge

New Guinea, etc., in the present century. See PALÆOLITHIC; NEOLITHIC.

The Stone of Destiny. See SCONE.

Stone frigate. A sailor's name for barracks, or a shore establishment. Cp. BARRACK STANCHION.

The stone jacket, or jug. See JUG.

Stone lilies. See St. CUTHBERT'S BEADS.

Stone soup, or St. Bernard's soup. The story goes that a beggar asked alms at a lordly mansion, but was told by the servants that they had nothing to give him. "Sorry for it," said the man, "but will you let me boil a little water to make some soup of this stone?" This was so novel a proceeding, that the curiosity of the servants was aroused, and the man was readily furnished with a saucepan, water, and a spoon. In he popped the stone, and begged for a little salt and pepper for flavouring. Stirring the water and tasting it, he said it would be the better for any fragments of meat and vegetables they might happen to have. These were supplied, and ultimately he asked for a little ketchup or other sauce. When ready the servants tasted it, and declared that "stone soup" was excellent.

This story, which was a great favourite in the 16th and 17th centuries, was told with many variations, horseshoes, nails, ram's-horns, etc., taking the place of the stone as narrated above.

A rolling stone gathers no moss. One who is always on the move and does not settle down and will never become prosperous or wealthy. A common proverb. Tusser in his Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandrie (1573) has:

The stone that is rolling can gather no moss,
For master and servant oft changing is loss.

Stone of stumbling. An obstacle, stumbling-block, or an occasion for being hindered. The phrase is from Is. viii, 14:

He shall be . . . for a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence to both the houses of Israel.

To cast the first stone. To take the lead in criticizing, fault-finding, quarrelling, etc. The phrase is from John viii, 7:

He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.

To kill two birds with one stone. See under BIRD.

To leave no stone unturned. To spare no trouble, time, expense, etc., in endeavouring to accomplish your aim. After the defeat of Mardonius at Plataea (477 B.C.), a report was current that the Persian general had left great treasures in his tent. Polycrates the Theban sought long, but found them not. The ORACLE of Delphi, being consulted, told him "to leave no stone unturned", and the treasures were discovered.

You have stones in your mouth. Applied to one who stutters or speaks very indistinctly. Demosthenes cured himself of stuttering by putting pebbles in his mouth and declaiming on the seashore.

The orator who once
Did fill his mouth with pebble stones
When he harangued.

BUTLER: Hudibras, I, i, 115.

Stony Arabia. A mistranslation of Arabia Petraea, where Petraea is supposed to be an adjective formed from Gr. petros, a stone. The name really derives from the city of Petra, the capital of the Nabathæans. Cp. YEMEN.

Stonehenge. The most famous prehistoric monument in Britain, although covering a smaller area than Avebury. It is situated on Salisbury Plain, 2 miles west of Amesbury. The name is from O.E. hengen, in reference to something hung up, in this case the horizontal lintel stones. At various times regarded as having been built by the DRUIDS, the Romans and the Danes, it is originally of late NEOLITHIC construction and was later reconstructed by the Beaker folk and subsequently. It seems to have last been used c. 1400 B.C. It finally consisted of an outer circle of local sarsen stones and two inner circles of Blue Stones, apparently from the Prescelly Mountains in Pembrokeshire. The first and third circles are capped with stone lintels. The whole is surrounded by a ditch, inside the bank of which are 56 pits known as Aubrey holes. The Hele Stone, over which the sun rises on MIDSUMMER Day, stands in isolation outside the circles. It is certain that Stonehenge was a centre of worship, probably connected with the sun, and it has recently been suggested that it was a massive kind of astronomical clock. Scientific examination of the site did not begin until 1901.

Three years after this, he himself [Constantine, King of Britain] . . . was killed by Conan, and buried close by Uther Pendragon within the structure of stones, which was set up with wonderful art not far from Salisbury, and called in the English tongue, Stonehenge.

GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH:
Historia Britonum, XI, iv.

Stonewall, To. A cricketer's term for adopting purely defensive measures when at the wicket, blocking every ball and not attempting to score. It was originally Australian political slang and was used of obstructing business.

Stonewall Jackson. Thomas J. Jackson (1824-1863), one of the Confederate generals in the American CIVIL WAR; so called from his firmness at the Battle of Bull Run (1861), when a fellow officer observed him with his brigade standing "like a stone wall".

Stool Pigeon. A police spy or informer; a decoy.

Stool of Repentance. The cutty stool, a low stool placed in front of the pulpit in Scottish churches, on which persons who had incurred ecclesiastical censure were placed during divine service. When the service was over the penitent had to stand on the stool and receive the minister's rebuke.

Store. Store cattle. Beasts kept on a farm for breeding purposes, or lean cattle bought for fattening.

Store is no sore. Things stored up for future use are no evil. Sore means grief as well as wound, our sorrow.

To set store by. To value highly.

Stork. According to Swedish legend, the stork received its name from flying round the cross of the crucified Redeemer, crying Styrka! styrka! (Strengthen, strengthen!) Lyly in his Euphues (1580) says of this bird:

Ladies use their lovers as the stork doth her young ones who pecketh them till they bleed with her bill, and then healeth them with her tongue.

Also:

Constancy is like unto the stork, who where-soever she fly cometh into no nest but her own.

And:

It fareth with me . . . as with the stork, who, when she is least able, carrieth the greatest burden.

It is an old tale to children that babies are brought by storks and they still feature prominently on cards of congratulation to a baby's parents. It was also a belief that a stork will kill a snake "on sight".

King Stork. A tyrant that devours his subjects, and makes them submissive with fear and trembling. The allusion is to the fable of The Frogs desiring a King. See A KING LOG under LOG.

Storm (Austr.). Young grass which has grown after a rainfall in dry areas. Travelling from storm to storm is to storm along.

The Cape of Storms. So Bartholomew Diaz named the south cape of Africa in 1486, but John II of Portugal (d. 1495) changed it to the Cape of Good Hope.

A storm in a teacup. A mighty to-do about a trifle; making a great fuss about nothing.

Storm and Stress. See STURM UND DRANG.

To take by storm. To seize by a sudden and irresistible attack; a military term used figuratively, as of one who becomes suddenly famous or popular; an actor, suddenly springing to fame, "takes the town by storm".

Stormy Petrel. See PETREL.

A Brain-storm. A sudden and violent upheaval in the brain, causing temporary loss of control, or even madness. Nerve-storm is used in much the same way of the nerves.

Storting or Stirthing, (stór' ting). The Norwegian PARLIAMENT, elected every fourth year (stor, great; thing, assembly).

Stout. A dark beer made with roasted malt. Porter, a light stout, is still sold on draught in Ireland and stout derives its name from being a strong or stout porter. See ALE; ENTIRE.

Stove plants. An old name for hothouse plants which need artificial heat.

Stovepipe Hat. An old-fashioned tall silk hat, a chimney-pot hat. A name of American origin.

Strad. A colloquial name for a violin made by Antonio Stradivarius (1644-1737) of CREMONA, now much prized. His best violins were made between 1700 and 1725. Cp. AMATI.

Strafe (straf) (Ger. strafen, to punish). A word borrowed in good-humoured contempt from the Germans during World War I. One of their favourite slogans was Gott strafe England! The word was applied to any sharp and sudden bombardment.

Strain. The quality of mercy is not strained (SHAKESPEARE: Merchant of Venice, IV, i)—not constrained or forced, but comes down freely as the rain, which is God's gift.

To strain a point. To go beyond one's usual, or the proper limits; to give way a bit more than one has any right to.

To strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. To make much fuss about little peccadilloes, but commit offences of real magnitude. The proverb comes from Matt. xxiii, 24, which in Tyndale's, Coverdale's, and other early versions of the BIBLE reads strain out, i.e. to filter out a gnat before drinking the wine. The REVISED VERSION also adopts this form but the AUTHORIZED VERSION's rendering is which strain at a gnat, which was not a mistake but established usage at the time. Greene in his Mamillia (1583) speaks of "straining at a gnat and letting pass an elephant".

To strain courtesy. To stand upon ceremony. Here strain is to stretch, as parchment is strained on a drum-head.

Strand, The. One of the most famous of London's thoroughfares joining the City of London to WESTMINSTER along the riverside, whence its name. Its many great inns or houses had riverside approaches (the Victoria Embankment was not begun until 1864). Its many historic buildings have almost entirely ceased to exist although names still survive as in Essex Street, the SAVOY Hotel, etc. There is still a Roman bath in Strand Lane. Its boundary with FLEET STREET was formerly marked by the gateway at TEMPLE BAR.

Through the long Strand together let us stray;
With thee conversing, I forget the way.
Behold that narrow street which steep descends,
Whose building to the slimy shore extends.

There Essex's stately pile adorned the shore,
There Cecil's, Bedford's, Villiers',—now no more.
GAY: Trivia.

Stranger. Originally, a foreigner; from O. Fr. estrangier (Mod. Fr. étranger), which is the Lat. extraneus, one without.

It is said that BUSIRIS, King of Egypt sacrificed to his gods all strangers who set foot on his territories. DIOMEDES gave strangers to his horses for food.

Floating tea-leaves in one's cup, charred pieces of wick that make the candle gutter, little bits of soot hanging from the grate, etc., are called "strangers", because they are supposed to foretell the coming of visitors.

I spy strangers! The recognized form of words by which a Member of PARLIAMENT conveys to the SPEAKER the information that there is an unauthorized person in the House.

The little stranger. A new-born infant.
The stranger that is within thy gates.
See PROSELYTES.

Strap. A taste of the strap. A strapping or flogging, properly with a leather strap.

A strapping young fellow. A big sturdy chap; just as we speak of a "thumping" or "whacking great chap"; a vigorous young woman is similarly called a strapper.

Straphanger. One who stands in a bus, train, etc., when the seats are fully occupied, holding to the strap hanging from the roof.

Strap oil. Slang for a thrashing with a strap.

Strappado (strá pā' dō) (Ital. strappare, to pull). A mode of torture formerly practised for extracting confessions, retractions, etc. The hands were tied behind the back, and the victim was pulled up to a beam by a rope tied to them and then let down suddenly; by this means a limb was not infrequently dislocated.

An I were at the strappado, or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, II, iv.

Strassburg Goose. A goose fattened, crammed, and confined in order to enlarge its liver, from which is made true pâté de foie gras.

Straw. Straw is generally worthless, something blown about by the wind; hence used in phrases as, Not worth a straw, quite valueless, not worth a RAP, a FIG, etc.; to care not a straw, not to care at all.

Straw Polls. An early form of public opinion poll sponsored by the American press as early as 1824 when reporters of the Harrisburg Pennsylvaniaian were sent to inquire from the townsmen of Wilmington which candidate they favoured for the presidency. Such polls were subsequently used on a much larger scale and postal voting came to be employed. The name derives from the idea of a straw "showing which way the wind blows". Cp. GALLUP POLL.

Straw vote. A vote of no official value taken casually at a meeting, etc., as an indication of opinion.

I have a straw to break with you. I have something to quarrel with you about; I am displeased with you; I have a reproof to give you. An obsolete expression.

In the straw. Applied to women in childbirth. The allusion is to the straw with which beds were once stuffed before the introduction of feather beds.

The last straw. "This is the last straw that breaks the camel's back." There is an ultimate point of endurance beyond which calamity breaks a man down.

A man of straw. A man without means, with no more substance than a straw doll; also, an imaginary or fictitious person put forward for some reason.

A straw shows which way the wind blows. Mere trifles often indicate the coming of momentous events. They are shadows cast before coming events.

To catch at a straw. A FORLORN HOPE. A drowning man will catch at a straw.

To make bricks without straw. To attempt to do something without the proper or necessary materials. The allusion is to the exaction of the Egyptian taskmasters mentioned in Exod. v, 6-14.
To pick straws. To show fatigue or weariness, as birds pick up straws to make their nests (or bed).

Their eyelids did not once pick straws,
 And wink, and sink away;
 No, no; they were as brisk as bees,
 And loving things did say.

PETER PINDAR: Orson and Ellen, canto v.

To stumble at a straw. To be pulled up short by a trifle.

To throw straws against the wind. To contend uselessly and feebly against what is irresistible; to "sweep back the Atlantic with a besom".

Strawberry. Of this fruit Izaak Walton (Compleat Angler, ch. v.) says:

We may say of angling as Dr. Boteler said of strawberries, "Doubtless God could have made a better berry, but doubtless God never did."

Crushed strawberry. A crimson red colour of dullish hue.

The strawberry leaves. A dukedom; the honour, rank, etc., of a DUKE. The ducal CORONET is ornamented with eight strawberry leaves.

Strawberry mark. A birthmark something like a strawberry. In J. M. Morton's BOX AND COX the two heroes eventually recognize each other as long-lost brothers through one of them having a strawberry-mark on his left arm.

Strawberry preachers. So Latimer called the non-resident country clergy, because they "come but once a year and tarry not long" (Sermon on the Plough, 1549).

Stream of Consciousness. A technique of novel writing, first deliberately employed by Dorothy Richardson in Pointed Roofs (1915) and developed by James Joyce and Virginia Woolf. By this technique the writer presents life as seen through impressions on the mind of one person.

To swim with the stream. See under SWIM.

Street. Right up my street. "Just my handwriting", in my particular province or field; "just my line of country": As familiar to a person as his own street.

Streets ahead. Well ahead; much in advance. The phrase conveys the idea of long distance.

Street Arab. See under ARABIA. Cp. BEDOUINS.

Strenia (stré' ni á). A SABINE goddess identified with the Roman Salus, to whom gifts (strenæ) were taken at the New Year, consisting of figs, dates, and honey. The custom is said to have been instituted by the Sabine King Tatius, who entered ROME on NEW YEAR'S DAY and received from some augurs palms cut from the sacred grove dedicated to her. The French étrenne, a New Year's gift, is from this goddess.

Strephon (stref' òn). A stock name for a rustic lover; from the languishing lover of that name in Sidney's Arcadia.

Strike (O.E. strican, to go, advance swiftly, to strike). This verb is now mainly used in the sense of to hit, to deliver a blow, or to act swiftly.

The noun strike has numerous specialized meanings, e.g. an old grain measure varying locally from half a bushel to four bushels; also the wooden straight-edged implement for levelling off a measure of grain by "striking it off"; but it is most commonly used nowadays to denote a cessation of work by a body of employees for coercive purposes; strikes over delayed payment were not unknown among the workmen employed on the royal tombs in ancient Egypt.

It strikes me that . . . It occurs to me that . . ., it comes into my mind that . . .

Strike-a-light. The flint formerly used with tinder-boxes for striking fire; also, the shaped piece of metal used to strike the flint. The latter's similarity with the links of the collar of the Order of the GOLDEN FLEECE gave rise to the nickname "the collar of strike-a-lights". Strike a light is also commonly used as an exclamation.

Strike, but hear me! (Lat. verbera, sed audi). Carry out your threats—if you must—but at least hear what I have to say. The phrase comes from Plutarch's life of Themistocles. He strongly opposed the proposal of Eurybiades to quit the Bay of Salamis. The hot-headed SPARTAN insultingly remarked that "those who in the public games rise up before the proper signal are scourged". "True," said Themistocles, "but those who lag behind win no laurels." On this, Eurybiades lifted up his staff to strike him, when Themistocles earnestly exclaimed, "Strike, but hear me!"

Bacon (Advancement of Learning, ii) calls this "that ancient and patient request".

Strike me dead! blind! etc. Vulgar expletives, or exclamations of surprise, dismay, wonder, and so on. Strike me dead is also sailor's slang for thin, wishy-washy beer.

String

Strike while the iron is hot. Act while the time or the opportunity presents; a METAPHOR from the blacksmith's shop. Similar proverbs are: "Make hay while the sun shines", "Take time by the forelock".

To be struck all of a heap. See HEAP.

To be struck on a person. To like or be much interested in him; inclined to be enamoured of him.

To strike an attitude. To pose, to assume an exaggerated or theatrical attitude.

To strike a balance. See under BALANCE.

To strike a bargain (Cp. Lat. foedus ferire). To make or conclude a transaction; "I have just struck a bargain" is also used in the sense, "I have just come across an advantageous purchase".

To strike hands upon a bargain is to confirm it by shaking or "striking hands".

To strike at the foundations. To attempt to undermine the whole thing, to overthrow it utterly.

To strike camp. To take down the tents and move off.

To strike the flag. See under FLAG.

To strike lucky. To have unexpected good fortune; a phrase from the miners' camps. Cp. TO STRIKE OIL under OIL.

To strike out in another direction. To open up a new way for oneself, to start a new approach, to open out into a new line of business.

To strike sail. See under SAIL.

To strike up. To begin, start operations; as to strike up an acquaintance, to set acquaintanceship going. Originally of an orchestra or company of singers, who "struck up" the music.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike. Said of one who dare not do the injury or take the revenge that he wishes. The "tag" is from Pope's Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot, l.204 (1735).

Strike-breaker. A "BLACKLEG", a "scab"; a worker induced by the employer to carry on when the other employees are on strike.

String. Always harping on one string. Always talking on the same subject; always repeating or referring to the same thing. The allusion is obvious.

He has two strings to his bow. See under BOW.

To pull the strings. See under PULL.

To string along with. To accompany;

to join up with, i.e. to join the line or "string".

Stringy-bark. See SETTLER'S MATCHES.

Strip. Comic strip; strip cartoon. A series or strip of drawings in a newspaper, telling a story, usually one episode per issue.

To strip a cow. To milk it to the last drop.

To tear someone off a strip. To give one a severe castigation; to reprimand angrily.

Strip Jack Naked. Another name for "Beat Your Neighbour Out of Doors" a simple card game popular with children.

Strip-tease. A theatrical or cabaret performance in which an actress slowly and provocatively undresses herself. One who does this is called a stripper.

Stroke. The oarsman who sits on the bench next the COXSWAIN and sets the time of the stroke for the rest.

To stroke one (up) the wrong way. To vex him, ruffle his temper.

Strong. A strong verb is one that forms inflexions by internal vowel-change (bind, bound; speak, spoke); weak verbs add a syllable, or letter (as love, loved; refund, refunded).

Going strong. Prospering, getting on famously; in an excellent state of health.

To come it strong. See under COME.

Struldbrugs (strüld' brügz). Wretched inhabitants of Luggnagg (in Swift's Gulliver's Travels), who had the privilege of immortality without having eternal vigour, strength, and intellect.

Stubble Geese. The geese turned into the stubble-fields to pick up the corn left after harvest.

Stuck up. See under STICK.

Stuff. A bit, or piece of stuff. The same as a SKIRT.

Stuff Gown. A BARRISTER who has not yet taken SILK.

Stumer (stü' mer). A swindle, or a swindler, a forged banknote or "dud" cheque; a fictitious bet recorded by the book-makers, and published in the papers, to deceive the public by running up the odds on a horse which is not expected to win. The word is of unknown origin.

Stump. The Black Stump. This side of the Black Stump or The other side of the Black Stump are Australian expressions implying "a long way off", "a considerable, but unspecified distance". The Black Stump refers to the undefined stump left after a bush fire. There is an actual place bearing the name, south of Hillston in New South Wales.

A stump speaker, or orator. A speaker who harangues all who will listen to him from some improvised vantage point; often with the implications of rant and bombast of the tub-thumping variety. The phrase is of American origin, where it has not necessarily derogatory implications. It originates from the days when a tree stump was often the most readily available platform for political speeches. Hence such phrases as to stump the country, to take to the stump, to go from place to place making inflammatory or provocative speeches, etc. So called stump speeches were once favoured by entertainers, minstrel shows, etc., and usually somewhat laboured in their humour.

To be stumped. Outwitted; at a loss, defeated. A term borrowed from CRICKET.

To stir one's stumps. To get on faster; to set about something expeditiously. Stumps here are one's legs; also the wooden stump or peg-leg once fastened to mutilated limbs, or the mutilated limbs themselves.

For Witherington needs must I wayle, as one in doleful dumps;

For when his leggs were smitten off, He fought upon his stumpes.

PERCY: Reliques

(The More Modern Ballad of Chevy Chase).

To stump up. To pay one's reckoning, to pay what is due. Ready money is called stumpy or stumps. An Americanism, meaning money paid down on the spot—i.e. on the stump of a tree. Cp. On the NAIL.

Stupor Mundi (Lat., "The amazement of the world"). So the Emperor Frederick II (1194, 1215–1250) was called as being the greatest sovereign, soldier, and patron of artists and scholars in the 13th century.

Sturm und Drang (shtoorrm unt drüng) (Ger., storm and stress). The name given to the German literary movement of the late 18th century with which Goethe, Schiller, and Herder were closely associated, from a tragedy of this title (1776) by Frederick Maximilian von Klinger (1752–1831). The dramas of the period are typified by the extravagant passion of the characters, and the movement had considerable effect upon the subsequent ROMANTIC MOVEMENT.

Stygian (sti' ji än). Infernal, gloomy; pertaining to the river STYX.

At that so sudden blaze the Stygian throng
Bent their aspect.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, X, 453.

Style is from the Latin stylus (a metal pencil for writing on waxen tablets, etc.).

The characteristic of a person's writing is called his style. Metaphorically it is applied to composition and speech. Good writing is stylish, and, by extension, smartness of dress and deportment is so called.

Style is the dress of thoughts, and well-dressed thought, like a well-dressed man, appears to great advantage.

Lord Chesterfield's Letters, clvi (1751).

New Style, Old Style. See OLD STYLE under OLD.

The style is the man. A mistranslation of "Le style est l'homme même" from the discourse of Buffon (1707–1788) on his reception into the French Academy.

To do a thing in style. To do it splendidly, regardless of expense.

Styles. Tom Styles, or John a Styles, connected with JOHN-A-NOKES, an imaginary plaintiff or defendant in a lawsuit in the same way as John DOE and Richard ROE.

And, like blind Fortune, with a sleight
Convey men's interest and right
From Stiles's pocket into Nokes's.

BUTLER: Hudibras, III, iii, l. 713.

Stylites, or Pillar Saints (sti li' tēz). A class of ascetics found especially in Syria, Mesopotamia, Egypt and Greece between the 5th and 10th centuries. They took up their abode on the tops of pillars, which were sometimes equipped with a small hut, from which they never descended. They take their name from St. Simeon Stylites of Syria (390–459) who spent some 30 years on a pillar which was gradually increased to the height of 40 cubits. St. Daniel, his most famous disciple, spent 33 years on a pillar near Constantinople. Tennyson wrote a poem on St. Simeon Stylites.

Stymie. A golfing term, obsolete since 1952. A player was laid a stymie if, on the putting-green, the opponent's ball fell in the line of his path to the hole (providing the balls were not within 6 in. of each other). To hole out could only be achieved by a very difficult lofting stroke. Hence several still current expressions. A stymie is a frustrating situation, a discouragingly difficult position and to be stymied is to be in such a position; and to stymie is to hinder or thwart; also to put one in the position of having to negotiate.

Styx (stiks). The river of Hate (Gr. stugein, to hate)—called by Milton "abhorred Styx, the flood of deadly hate" (Paradise Lost, II, 577)—that, according to classical mythology, flowed nine times round the infernal regions. Some say it was a river in ARCADIA whose waters were poisonous and dissolved any vessel put upon them. When a god swore falsely by the Styx, he was made to drink a draught of its water which made him lie speechless for a year. The river was said to take its name from Styx, the eldest daughter of OCEANUS and TETHYS, and wife of Pallas, by whom she had three daughters, Victory, Strength, and Valour. See CHARON'S TOLL.

By the black infernal Styx I swear
(That dreadful oath which binds the Thunderer)
'Tis fixed!

POPE: Thebais of Statius, I, 411.

Suaviter (swā vi ter) in modo, fortiter in re (Lat.). Gentle in manner, resolute in action. Said of one who does what is to be done with unflinching firmness, but in the most inoffensive manner possible. Lord Chesterfield takes it as his theme in one of his letters (ch. xi).

He is firm, but gentle; and practises that most excellent maxim, suaviter in modo, fortiter in re.
Lord Chesterfield's Letters, cxciv (1752).

Sub hasta (süb hās' tá) (Lat.). By auction. When an auction took place among the Romans, it was customary to stick a spear in the ground to give notice of it to the public; literally, under the spear. Cp. SPEAR.

Sub Jove (Lat.). Under Jove; in the open air. JUPITER is the god of the upper regions of the air, as JUNO is of the lower regions, NEPTUNE of the waters of the sea, VESTA of the earth, CERES of the surface soil, and HADES of the invisible or underworld.

Sub judice (süb joo' di sē) (Lat.). Under consideration; not yet decided in a court of law.

Sub rosa. See under ROSE.

Subject and Object. In METAPHYSICS the Subject is the ego, the mind, the conscious self, the substance or substratum to which attributes must be referred; the Object is an external as distinct from the ego, a thing or idea brought before the consciousness. Hence subjective criticism, art, etc., is that which proceeds from the individual mind and is consequently individualistic, fanciful, imaginative; while objective criticism is that which is based on knowledge of the externals.

Subject-object. The immediate object of thought, the thought itself as distinct from the object-object, the real object as it is in fact.

Sublapsarian, or Infralapsarian (süb läp sār' i än). A Calvinist who maintains that God devised His scheme of redemption after He had permitted the "lapse" or fall of ADAM, when He elected some to salvation and left others to run their course. The supralapsarian maintains that all this was ordained by God from the foundation of the world, and therefore before the "lapse" or fall of Adam.

Sublime. From Lat. sub, up to, limen, the lintel; hence, lofty, elevated in thought or tone.

The Sublime Porte. See PORTE.

The Sublime Society of Steaks. See BEEFSTEAK CLUB.

There is but one step from the sublime to the ridiculous. See under RIDICULOUS.

Submarine. See BUSHNELL'S TURTLE.

Submerged. The Submerged Tenth. The very poor; sunk or submerged in poverty.

Subpœna (süb pē' nā) (Lat., under penalty) is a writ commanding a man to appear in court, usually unwillingly, to bear witness or give evidence on a certain trial named. It is so called because the party summoned is bound to appear sub pœna centum librorum (under a penalty of £100). We have also the verb to subpœna.

Subsidy (Lat. sub-sedere, to sit down).

The subsidiū of the Roman army were the troops held in reserve, the auxiliaries, supports; hence the word came to be applied to a support granted by PARLIAMENT to the King. It now usually applies to state aid in support of industries, etc., of public importance. Subsidiary, auxiliary, supplemental, is of the same origin.

Subtle Doctor. See DOCTORS OF LEARNING; DUNCE.

Subtopia. A word coined (from suburb and Utopia) by Ian Nairn in 1954 to denote the sprawling suburban housing estates built to satisfy the town workers' yearning for country surroundings while clinging to the amenities of the town. The term includes all the paraphernalia of concrete posts, lamp standards, chain link fencing, and other uglinesses associated with a disfigured landscape.

Succotash (U.S.A.). A dish of Indian corn and beans boiled together. Originally an American-Indian dish.

Succoth, or Sukkoth (Heb. sukkoth, booths). The Jewish name for the feast of the Tabernacles (see under TABERNACLE).

Succubus (suk 'ū bus) (Med. Lat. masculine form of Late Lat. succuba, from succumbere, to lie under). A female demon fabled to have sexual relations with sleeping men. Cp. INCUBUS.

Suck, or Suck-in, Suck-up. A swindle, hoax, deception, fiasco. To be sucked in is to be taken in, deceived, tricked, and one who is thus gulled is said to be a sucker. A suck-up or sucker-up is a TOADY or creep.

Sucking was formerly used (after sucking-pig) of the young and inexperienced, those in training, etc., as a sucking lawyer (an articulated clerk), etc.

The very curates . . . she, in her pure, sincere enthusiasm, looked upon as sucking saints.

CHARLOTTE BRONTË: Shirley, xiv.

Teach your grandmother to suck eggs. See under EGG.

To suck the monkey. See under MONKEY.

Suède (swād). Undressed kid-skin; so called because the gloves made of this originally came from Sweden (Fr. gants de Suède).

Suffering. The Meeting for Sufferings.

The standing representative committee of the Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends, so called because originally its chief function was to relieve the sufferings imposed upon QUAKERS by distraint of TITHES and other petty persecutions.

Suffragan (sūf' rā gān). An auxiliary BISHOP; one who has not a see of his own but is appointed to assist a bishop in a portion of his see. In relation to a METROPOLITAN or archbishop all bishops are suffragans; and they were so called because they could be summoned to a synod to give their SUFFRAGE.

Suffrage. One's vote, approval, consent; or one's right to vote, especially at parliamentary and municipal elections. The word is from Lat. suffragium, voting tablet, probably from suffrago, the hock or ankle-bone of a horse, which may have been used by the Romans for balloting. Cp. BEANS; CALCULATE.

Hence Suffragettes as the name for the militant women who agitated for the parliamentary vote, in the period 1906-1914. See CAT AND MOUSE ACT.

Sugar. Sugar Daddy. An elderly, wealthy man who lavishes expensive gifts on a much younger woman. From U.S. slang.

Sui generis (sū' i jen' er is) (Lat., of its own kind). Having a distinct character of its own; unlike anything else.

Sui juris (Lat.). Of one's own right; the state of being able to exercise one's legal rights—i.e. freedom from legal disability.

Suicide (Lat. sui, of oneself; -cidium, from cedere, to kill). Until 1823, a suicide was buried at the CROSS-ROADS with a stake thrust through the body.

Suit. A suit of dittoes. See under DITTO.

To follow suit. To follow the leader; to do as those do who are taken as your exemplars. The term is from games of cards.

Sukkoth. See SUCCOTH.

Sultan (Arab., King). Until 1923 the title of the ruler of the former Turkish Empire and, until 1957, of the King of Morocco. It is still in use in certain lesser Mohammedan states, as Muscat and Oman, Kishen and Socotra, etc. In mediæval writings sultan is often corrupted to Soldan or Sowdan. The wife (also mother, sister or concubine) of the sultan is called Sultana, a name which is also sometimes applied to a mistress.

While Charles flirted with his three sultanas, Hortensia's French page, a handsome boy, whose vocal performances were the delight of Whitehall, . . . warbled some amorous verses.

MACAULAY: History of England, ch. iv.

Sultana is also the name of a seedless raisin; a form of necklace worn by women in the latter half of the 18th century; an old musical instrument like a zither; both sultan and sultana denote the hyacinthine gallinule, a brilliantly coloured bird of the Rallidæ family, and a kind of white domestic hen.

Summer. In Britain, June, July, and August; astronomically, from the summer SOLSTICE to the autumn equinox.

From bright'ning fields of ether fair disclosed,
Child of the Sun, refulgent Summer comes.

THOMSON: The Seasons (Summer).

St. LUKE's little summer is a period of mild weather around mid-October, St. LUKE's Day being 18 October. See also ALL-HALLOWS SUMMER; INDIAN SUMMER.

Summer Time. See DAYLIGHT SAVING.

Summit. A summit conference. One between the chief representatives of the participating powers.

Summum bonum (sūm' ūm bō' nūm) (Lat., the highest good). The chief excellence; the highest attainable good.

SOCRATES said knowledge is virtue, and ignorance is vice.

ARISTOTLE said that happiness is the greatest good.

Bernard de Mandeville and Helvetius contended that self-interest is the perfection of the ethical end.

Bentham and Mill were for the greatest happiness of the greatest number.

Herbert Spencer placed it in those actions which best tend to the survival of the individual and the race; and Robert Browning (see his poem of this name) "in the kiss of one girl".

Sumptuary Laws. Laws to limit the expenses of food and dress, or any luxury. The Romans had their leges sumptuarii, and they have been enacted in many states at various times. Those of England were all repealed by 1 James I, c. 25; but during the two World Wars, with the rationing of food, coals, etc., and the compulsory lowering of the strength of beer and whisky, we had a temporary return to sumptuary legislation.

Sun. The source of light and heat, and consequently of life to the whole world; hence regarded as a deity and worshipped as such by all primitive peoples and having a leading place in their mythologies. Shamash was the principal sun-god of the Assyrians and Babylonians, MITHRAS of the Persians, RA of the Egyptians, Tezcatlipoca (Smoking Mirror) of the Aztecs, HELIOS of the Greeks, known to the Romans as SOL and usually identified with PHŒBUS and APOLLO.

The City of the Sun. See under CITY.

The empire on which the sun never sets. See under SET.

The Southern Gate of the Sun. The sign Capricornus or winter SOLSTICE. So called because it is the most southern limit of the sun's course in the ECLIPTIC.

The Sun of Righteousness. Jesus Christ (Mal. iv, 2).

Heaven cannot support two suns, nor earth two masters. So said ALEXANDER the Great when DARIUS (before the battle of Arbela) sent to offer terms of peace. Cp. SHAKESPEARE:

Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere;
Nor can one England brook a double reign,
Of Harry Percy and the Prince of Wales,
Henry IV, Pt. I, V, iv.

More worship the rising than the setting sun. More persons pay honour to ascendant than to fallen greatness. The saying is attributed to Pompey.

I should fear those that dance before me now
Would one day stamp upon me; it has been done;
Men shut their doors against a setting sun.
SHAKESPEARE: Timon of Athens, I, ii.

A place in the sun. A favourable position that allows for development; a share in what one has a natural right to. The phrase achieved a particular significance when William II of Germany spoke of his nation taking steps to ensure that "no one can dispute with us the place in the sun that is our due."

Out of God's blessing into the warm sun. One of Ray's proverbs, meaning from good to less good. In Shakespeare's Hamlet (I, ii), when the king says to Hamlet, "How is it that the clouds still hang on you?" the prince answers, "Not so, my lord; I am too much i' the sun", meaning, "I have lost God's blessing, for too much of the sun"—i.e. this far inferior state.

Thou out of heaven's benediction comest
To the warm sun.

SHAKESPEARE: King Lear, II, i.

To have been out in the sun, or to have the sun in one's eyes. To be slightly inebriated.

To make hay while the sun shines. See under HAY.

Sundowner. In Australia, a tramp. In the early days one who went from one settlement to another arriving at sundown, so it is said, to be too late for work, but in time for food. In Africa and India, a sundowner denotes a drink of spirits, etc., taken just after sundown; in the U.S.A., an official who works late at the office.

Sunday (O.E. sunnendæg). The first day of the week, anciently dedicated to the SUN. See WEEK, DAYS OF THE; SABBATH.

Sunday Letters. See DOMINICAL LETTERS.

Not in a month of Sundays. Not in a very long time.

One's Sunday best, Sunday suit, Sunday-go-to-meeting togs. One's best clothes, as worn on Sundays.

Sunday saint. One who observes the ordinances of religion, and goes to church on a Sunday, but is worldly, grasping, "indifferent honest", the following six days.

When three Sundays come together. NEVER.

Sunflower State. Kansas.

Sunna (Arab., custom, divine law). The traditional sayings and example of MOHAMMED and his immediate followers as set forth in the HADITH.

Sunnis, Sunnites. Orthodox MOSLEMS who consider the SUNNA as authentic as the KORAN itself and acknowledge the first four CALIPHS to be the rightful successors of MOHAMMED. They form by far the largest section of Mohammedans. Cp. SHI'ITES.

Sup. To sup with Sir Thomas Gresham. See HUMPHREY.

Supererogation, Works of. A theological expression for good works which are not enjoined or of obligation and therefore "better" (Lat. super, over, above; erogare, to pay out). The phrase is commonly applied to acts performed beyond the bounds of duty.

Superman. A hypothetical superior human being of high intellectual and moral attainment, fancied as evolved from the normally existing type. The term (Übermensch) was invented by the German philosopher Nietzsche (d. 1900), and was popularized in England by G. B. Shaw's play, Man and Superman (1903).

The wide popularity of the term gave rise to many compounds, such as superwoman, super-critic, super-tramp, super-Dreadnought, and super-tax.

Supernaculum. The very best wine. Sham Latin for "upon the nail" (Ger. auf den Nagel), meaning that the wine is so good the drinker leaves only enough in his glass to make a bead on his nail. The French say of first-class wine, Faire rubis sur l'ongle, "It is only fit to make a ruby on the nail." Nashe (Pierce Penilesse, 1592) says that after a man had drunk his glass, it was usual, in the North, to turn the cup upside down, and let a drop fall upon the thumb-nail. If the drop rolled off, the drinker was obliged to fill and drink again.

Hence to drink supernaculum is to leave no HEEL-TAPS; to leave just enough not to roll off one's thumb-nail if poured upon it.

Supplies. In Parliamentary parlance, the various grants and moneys authorized annually by PARLIAMENT other than those paid out of the CONSOLIDATED FUND or permitted by an Act during the session.

Supply. The law of supply and demand. The economic statement that the competition of buyers and sellers tends to make such changes in price that the demand for any article in a given market will become equal to the supply. In other words, if the demand exceeds the supply the price rises, operating so as to reduce the demand and so enable the supply to meet it, and VICE VERSA.

Supralapsarian. See SUBLAPSARIAN.

Surfeit Water. An old name for a "water" used to cure "surfeits", i.e. the effects of gluttony. Hannah Glasse's 18th-century recipe requires 4 gallons of brandy and 27 other ingredients, mostly herbs. This surfeit water was drunk from special tapering fluted glasses, and two spoonfuls was the dose of this highly alcoholic pick-me-up.

Surloin. See SIRLOIN.

Surname. The name added to, or given over and above, the Christian name (O. Fr. sur-; from Lat. super-, over, above). Surnames, as names passed from father to son, were not widespread until the 13th century, and grew from the custom of adding the place of domicile or provenance, trade or some descriptive characteristic, to the Christian name to assist identification, e.g. York, Butcher, Large, Russell (red-haired), etc. Yet another category derives from family relationship, e.g. Williamson, Macgregor, O'Brien.

Surplice. Over the pelisse or fur robe (Lat. superpellicium, from pellis, skin). The white linen vestment worn by CLERGY, acolytes, choristers, etc., so fashioned for its ease of wearing over fur dress worn in northern Europe in mediæval times. The shorter cotta is a development from this.

Surplice fees. The fees for marriage and burials which are the right of the incumbent of a BENEFICE.

With tithes his barns replete he sees,
And chuckles o'er his surplice fees.

T. WARTON:

The Progress of Discontent, 89 (1750).

Surrealism. A movement in art and the literary world which began in 1924 and flourished between the two World Wars under the leadership of the poet André Breton. In painting it falls into two groups: hand-painted dream scenes as exemplified by Chirico, Dali, and Magritte; and the creation of abstract forms by the practice of complete spontaneity of technique as well as subject-matter by the use of contrast as with Arp, Roy, Mirò, and Dali. They sought to express thought uncontrolled by reason and aesthetic and moral concepts.

Susanna and the Elders. See DANIEL.

Sussex weeds. A name for oak-trees, still plentiful in Sussex.

Sutras (sū' trās) (Sansk. sutra, a thread). In Sanskrit literature, certain aphoristic writings giving the rules of systems of philosophy, grammar, etc.; and in Brahmanic use, directions concerning religious ritual and ceremonial customs which are part of the VEDA.

Suttee (Sansk. sati, a virtuous wife). The Hindu custom of burning the widow on the funeral pyre of her deceased husband; also, the widow so put to death. Women with child and mothers of children not yet of age could not perform suttee. This ancient practice was prohibited in British India by Lord William Bentinck in 1829, but was practised as late as 1877 in Nepal.

Sutton Hoo Treasure. An Anglo-Saxon ship-burial of the early 7th century, discovered at Sutton Hoo near Woodbridge, Suffolk, in 1939. It is one of the richest ever found and the treasure, consisting of a sword and sheath, helmet, bowls and other objects in precious metals, is now in the BRITISH MUSEUM. The find is of considerable archæological and historical importance.

Swaddlers

Swaddlers. An early nickname for Wesleyans, and applied later by ROMAN CATHOLICS to DISSENTERS and PROTESTANTS generally. Southey (Life of Wesley, ii) explains its origin as follows:

It happened that Cennick, preaching on Christmas Day, took for his text these words from St. Luke's Gospel: "And this shall be a sign unto you; ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes lying in a manger." A Catholic who was present, and to whom the language of scripture was a novelty, thought this so ridiculous that he called the preacher a swaddler in derision, and this unmeaning word became a nickname for "Protestant", and had all the effect of the most opprobrious appellation.

Swag (connected with Norwegian svagga, to sway from side to side). One's goods carried in a pack or bundle; hence the booty obtained from a burglary, often carried away in a sack. To get away with the swag is used figuratively to imply profiting by one's cleverness or sharp practice.

Swagman. The Australian term for the numerous itinerant labourers who tramped from sheep station to sheep station in former times carrying their "swag" (i.e. bundle of clothes, blanket, etc.), seeking employment from the squatters. Cp. SUNDOWNER.

And you think of the days out on the track when you and Tom sat on your swags under a mulga at mid-day, and ate mutton and johnny-cake with clasp-knives, and drank by turns out of the old, battered, leaky Billy.

HENRY LAWSON:
On the Track (Meeting Old Mates).

Swag-shop. A place kept by a "FENCE", where thieves can dispose of their "SWAG"; also, a low-class shop where cheap and trashy articles are sold.

Swagger (frequentative of SWAG). To strut about with a superior or defiant air; to bluster, make oneself out a very important person; hence, ostentatiously smart or "SWELL"; as a swagger dinner, a swagger car, etc.

Swagger-stick. The small cane a soldier was formerly obliged to carry when walking out.

Swainmote. See SWANIMOTE.

Swallow. According to Scandinavian tradition, this bird hovered over the cross of our Lord, crying "Svala! svala!" (Console! console!), whence it was called svalow (the bird of consolation).

Ælian says that the swallow was sacred to the PENATES or household gods, and therefore to injure one would be to bring wrath upon your own house. It is still considered a sign of good luck if a swallow or martin builds under the eaves of one's house.

Perhaps you failed in your foreseeing skill,
For swallows are unlucky birds to kill.
DRYDEN: Hind and Panther, Pt. III.

Longfellow refers to another old fable regarding this bird:

Seeking with eager eyes that wondrous stone which the swallow
Brings from the shore of the sea to restore the sight of its fledglings.
Evangeline, Pt. I, 119.

One swallow does not make a summer. You are not to suppose summer has come to stay just because you have seen a swallow; nor that the troubles of life are over because you have surmounted one difficulty. The Greek proverb, "One swallow does not make a spring", is to be found in ARISTOTLE's Nicomachean Ethics (I, vii, 16).

Swan. The fable that the swan sings beautifully just before it dies is very ancient, but baseless. The only one for which a song of any kind can be claimed is the Whistling Swan (Cygnus musicus). The superstition was credited by PLATO, ARISTOTLE, Euripides, Cicero, Seneca, Martial, etc., and doubted by Pliny and Ælian. SHAKESPEARE refers to it more than once; Emilia, just before she dies, says:

I will play the swan,
And die in music.
Othello, V, ii.

Spenser speaks of the swan as a bird that sings:

He, were he not with love so ill bedight,
Woulde mount as high and sing, as soote [sweetly] as Swanne.
Shepherde's Calendar (October, 89).

Coleridge, referring to poetasters of the time, gives the old superstition an epigrammatic turn:

Swans sing before they die; 'twere no bad thing
Did certain persons die before they sing.

One Greek legend has it that the soul of APOLLO, the god of music, passed into a swan, hence the Pythagorean fable that the souls of all good poets passed into swans (See SWAN OF AVON, MANTUA, etc., below).

The male swan is called a cob, the female, a pen; a young swan, a cygnet. See also FIONNUALA; LEDA; LOHENGRIIN.

The Knight of the Swan. LOHENGRIIN.

The Order of the Swan. An order of knighthood founded by Frederick II of Brandenburg in 1440 (and shortly after in Cleves) in honour of the LOHENGRIN legend. It died out in the 16th century but was revived by Frederick William IV of Prussia in 1843. After the arrival of Anne of Cleves in ENGLAND the White Swan was adopted as a PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGN. The badge of the Order was a silver swan surmounted by an image of the Virgin.

The Swan of Avon. SHAKESPEARE; so called (by Ben Jonson) in allusion to his birthplace at Stratford-upon-Avon and the legend that APOLLO was changed into a swan.

The Swan of Lichfield. The name given to Anna Seward (1747-1809), the poetess.

The Swan of Mantua. VIRGIL, who was born at Mantua.

The Swan of Meander. HOMER, who is supposed to have lived on the banks of the MEANDER.

The Swan of Usk. So Henry Vaughan, the SILURIST (1622-1695), was called, having given one of his volumes of verse this name: Olor Iscanus.

The Swan with Two Necks. An old tavern sign, said to be a corruption of "two nicks" with which the Vintners' Company mark the beaks of their swans. In coaching days, the Swan with Two Necks in Lad Lane (now Gresham Street) was the chief London departure point for the North.

All your swans are geese. All your fine promises or expectations have proved fallacious. "Hope told a flattering tale."

The converse, All your geese are swans, means all your children are paragons, and whatever you do is in your own eyes superlative work.

To swan about, or around. To move around aimlessly. A phrase popular among troops in World War II to describe a tank moving apparently aimlessly across the battlefield or to denote taking a vehicle off for a meandering drive when off duty.

Swan-maidens. Fairies of northern folklore, who can become maidens or swans at will by means of the swan shift, a magic garment of swan's feathers. Many stories are told of how the swan shift was stolen, and the FAIRY was obliged to remain thrall to the thief until rescued by a KNIGHT.

Swan song. The song fabled to be sung by a dying swan; hence, the last work or appearance of a poet, composer, actor, etc.

Swan-umping. A taking up of swans and placing the marks of ownership on their beaks. The term is specially applied to annual expeditions for this purpose up the THAMES, when the marks of the owners (viz. the Crown and the Dyers' and Vintners' Companies) are made. The royal swans are marked with five nicks—two lengthwise, and three across the bill—and the Companies' swans with two nicks. Also called swan-hopping.

Swanmote (swān' i mōt). A court held thrice a year before forest verderers by the steward of the court. So called from O.E. swangemot, a meeting of swineherds, because, under the Charta de Foresta (1217), it was a meeting of the keepers of the royal forests to arrange for the depasturing of pigs in autumn, the clearance of cattle during the deer's fawning season, etc. See FOREIGN COURTS.

Swap. To swap, or change horses in midstream. To change leaders at the height of a crisis. Abraham Lincoln, in an address, 9 June 1864, referring to the fact that his fellow Republicans, though many were dissatisfied with his conduct of the CIVIL WAR, had renominated him for President, said that the Convention had concluded "that it is best not to swap horses while crossing the river".

Swashbuckler. A ruffian; a swaggerer, "From swashing," says Fuller (Worthies, III, 1662), "and making a noise on the buckler." The sword-players used to "swash" or tap their shield as fencers tap their foot upon the ground when they attack. Cp. SWINGE-BUCKLER.

Swastika. The GAMMADION or FYLFOT, an elaborate cross-shaped design (see CROSSES, p. 280) used as a charm to ward off evil and bring good luck. It was adopted by Hitler as the NAZI emblem about 1920, probably from the German Baltic Corps, who wore it on their helmets after service in Finland, where it was used as a distinguishing mark on Finnish aeroplanes. It is from Sanskrit svasti, good fortune.

Swear, To. Originally used only of solemn affirmations by the invocation of God or some sacred personage, etc.; hence to take an oath. Later extended to profanities and bad language by the use of sacred expressions as intensives and expletives.

To swear black is white. To swear to any falsehood.

To swear like a trooper. To indulge in very strong blasphemy or profanity, as a soldier sometimes does.

Sweat. An old sweat. An experienced soldier of long service, an old soldier.

To sweat a coin was to shake up GOLD or SILVER coins to remove particles of metal from them without the diminution of weight being noticeable.

To sweat a person is to exact the maximum amount of labour out of a person for a minimum wage. Also to bleed or fleece a person. Hence sweating system to denote the overworking of operatives in the clothing trades, etc., of earlier days. In the U.S. to sweat it out of a person is to extort a confession by threats and violence.

Sweater girl. A young woman with a well-developed bust, which is made apparent by the wearing of a clinging sweater or jumper.

Sweating sickness, or English sweat. A fatal disease characterized by its symptoms—the onset of shivers followed by intense sweating, etc., which brought death in a few hours. It first appeared in England in 1485, and the last outbreak was in 1551. Although infrequent in its occurrence (five visitations in all), the mortality was considerable. It first reached the Continent in 1528. Cp. BLACK DEATH.

Swedenborgians (swē' den bôr ji ânz). Followers of Emanuel Swedenborg (1688–1772), Swedish scientist and mystic, who held himself appointed to reveal the Lord's teachings to mankind. In ENGLAND, the New Jerusalem Church was set up in 1787 to propagate his teachings, which differ widely from those of Christianity, and are a complex of THEOSOPHY and PANTHEISM. There are branches of the New Church in the U.S.A., Australia, and in Europe, but membership is small. Swedenborg wrote all his works in Latin and he claimed to have witnessed the Last JUDGMENT.

Sweep. To sweep the board. In gaming, to win everything, to pocket all the stakes. Hence applied to one who carries all before him, wins all the prizes, etc.

To sweep the threshold. To announce to the world that the woman of the house is paramount. See SKIMMINGTON.

Sweepstakes. A race in which stakes are made by the owners of horses engaged, to be awarded to the winner or other horse in the race. Entrance money has to be paid to the race fund. If the horse runs, the full stake must be paid; but if it is withdrawn, a forfeit only is imposed.

Also a gambling arrangement in which a number of persons stake money on some event (usually a horse-race), each of whom draws a lot for every share bought, the total sum deposited being divided among the drawers of winners (or sometimes of starters).

St. Leger Sweepstakes. A horse-race for three-year-olds run at Doncaster early in September. It was instituted in 1776 by Colonel Anthony St. Leger, of Park Hill, near Doncaster, but was not called the "St. Leger" till two years later. See CLASSIC RACES; RACES.

Sweet. The sweet singer of Israel. King David, traditional author of the PSALMS. To be sweet on. To be enamoured of, in love with.

To have a sweet tooth. To be very fond of dainties and sweet things generally.

Sweetness and light. A phrase much favoured by Matthew Arnold, particularly in his Culture and Anarchy:

What we want is a fuller harmonious development of our humanity, a free play of thought upon our routine notions, spontaneity of consciousness, sweetness and light, and these are just what culture generates (ch. V).

The phrase was used by Swift (BATTLE OF THE BOOKS, 1697) in an imaginary fable by ÆSOP as to the merits of the bee (the ancients) and the spider (the moderns). It concludes:

The difference is that instead of dirt and poison, we have rather chosen to fill our hives with honey and wax, thus furnishing mankind with the two noblest of things, which are sweetness and light. (Preface).

Swell. A person showily dressed; one who puffs himself out beyond his proper dimensions, like the frog in the fable; hence, a fashionable person, one of high standing or importance. In American usage as an adjective, fine, stylish, first rate, just right.

Swell mob. An old term for the better-dressed thieves and pickpockets.

Swellled head. An exaggerated sense of one's own dignity, usefulness, importance, etc.

Swim. In the swim. In a favourable position in SOCIETY of any kind; in with those who matter or from whom advantages may be gained; a phrase from angling. A lot of fish gathered together is called a swim, and when an angler can pitch his hook in such a place he is said to be "in a good swim".

Sink or swim. No matter what happens; convicted WITCHES were thrown into the water to "sink or swim"; if they sank they were drowned; if they swam it was clear proof they were in league with the Evil One; so it did not much matter, one way or the other.

To swim with the stream. To allow one's actions and principles to be guided solely by the force of public opinion.

Swindle. To cheat, defraud, gain a mean advantage by trickery. The verb is formed from the noun swindler, which was introduced into England by German Jews about 1760, from Ger. Schwindler, a cheating company promoter (from schwindeln, to act heedlessly or extravagantly).

Swing, with reference to JAZZ music, denotes a phase ushered in by musicians who wished to emphasize rhythmic urge. The solo work of this phase, which lasted from about 1925 to 1940, was characterized by exhibitionism, but demanded a high standard of performance.

Captain Swing. The name assumed (1830-1833) by those who promoted the Swing Riots in the southern counties, resulting from the distressed condition of the agricultural labourers, and touched off by the introduction of new threshing machines which threatened to aggravate their situation. Menacing letters were sent to farmers, the machines were smashed, and ricks fired, and Captain Swing became the bogey of the propertied countryfolk. Although lives of Captain Swing appeared in 1830 and 1831, he seems to have been an imaginary character.

The neighbours thought all was not right,
Scarcely one with him ventured to parley,
And Captain Swing came in the night,
And burnt all his beans and his barley.

BARHAM:

Ingoldsby Legends (Babes in the Wood).

I don't care if I swing for him! A bitterly vengeful remark implying that the speaker will go to any length to get even—even if hanging be the consequence!

In full swing. Going splendidly; everything prosperous and in perfect order.

It went with a swing. Said of a ceremony, function, entertainment, etc., that passed off without a hitch and was a great success.

The swing-it-till-Monday basket. See under MONDAY.

To swing a ship. To check the compass deviation of a ship by swinging the vessel in as small a circle as possible through the points of the compass and taking bearings on suitable distant objects, and comparing the apparent with the true bearings. This is best done when the vessel is riding at a single anchor or at a buoy. There are other methods.

What you lose on the swings you gain on the roundabouts. What you lose on one venture you recoup on another. A way of stating the law of averages.

Swinge-buckler. A roisterer, a rake, a SWASHBUCKLER.

There was I, and Little John Doit of Staffordshire, and black George Barnes, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Squele, a Cotswold man; you had not four such swinge-bucklers in all the Inns-of-Court; and, I may say to you, we knew where the bona-robas were.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. II, III, ii.

Swiss. Swiss Guard. The Bourbon kings of France maintained a Guard of Swiss mercenaries until the Revolution. Pope Julius II (1503-13) instituted a Swiss Guard supplied by the cantons of Lucerne and Zürich. Some 100 men are still maintained as a papal escort drawn from the various Swiss cantons. Their formal uniform is still of MICHELANGELO's design.

No money—no Swiss—i.e. no assistance. The Swiss were for centuries the mercenaries of Europe—willing to serve anyone for pay—and were usually called in England Switzers, as in SHAKESPEARE's "Where are my Switzers? Let them guard the door" (Hamlet IV, v). In France an hotel-porter—also the BEADLE of a church—is called un suisse. Cp. GNOMES OF ZÜRICH.

Swipes. An old name for a thin, washy, cheap beer; now used in slang for beer in general.

Swithin, St. If it rains on St. Swithin's Day (15 July), there will be rain for forty days.

St. Swithin's day, gif ye do rain, for forty days it will remain;

St. Swithin's day an ye be fair, for forty days 'twill rain nae mair.

The legend is that St. Swithin (or Swithun), Bishop of Winchester and adviser of Egbert of Wessex, who died in 862, desired to be buried in the churchyard of the minster, that the "sweet rain of heaven might fall upon his grave". At CANONIZATION, the monks thought to honour the SAINT by removing his body into the cathedral choir and fixed 15 July 964 for the ceremony, but it rained day after day for 40 days, thereby, according to some, delaying the proceedings. His shrine was destroyed during the REFORMATION and a new one was dedicated in 1962. Those who hold to this superstition ignore the fact that it is based upon the dating of the JULIAN Calendar and therefore could not hold for 40 days from the current 15 July which is based on the GREGORIAN YEAR.

The St. Swithin of France is St. Gervais (see also St. MÉDARD). The rainy saint in Flanders is St. Godeliève; in Germany, the SEVEN SLEEPERS have this attribute.

Switzers. See SWISS.

Sword. In the days of CHIVALRY and romance a KNIGHT's horse and sword were his two most carefully prized possessions and it was customary to give each a name. Among the most noted of such swords are:

Balisarda, ROGERO's sword, made by a sorceress.
Balmung, one of the swords of SIEGFRIED, made by Wieland.

Chrysaor (sword as good as gold), ARTEGAL's sword in Spenser's Faerie Queene.
Corrouge, Otuel's sword.

Courtain (the short sword), one of the swords of OGERIE THE DANE; Sauvagine was the other, and they both took Munifican three years to make.

Durandal. See ROLAND'S SWORD under ROLAND.
Flamberge or Floberge (the flame-cutter), the name of one of CHARLEMAGNE'S swords, and also of RINALDO and Maugis.

Frusberta, RINALDO'S sword.
Glorious, OLIVER'S sword, which hacked to pieces the nine swords made by Ansias, Galas, and Munifican.

Gram (grief), one of the swords of SIEGFRIED.
Greysteel, the sword of Koli the Thrall.

Haut-claire (very bright), both OLIVER'S and Closamont's swords were so called.

Mimung, the sword that Wittich lent SIEGFRIED.
Morglay (big glaive), Sir BEVIS'S sword.

Nagelring (nail-ring), DIETRICH'S sword.
Philippan, the sword of Antony, one of the triumphs.

Quern-biter (a foot-breadth), both Haco I and Thoralf Skolinson had a sword of this name.

Sanglamore (the big bloody glaive), BRAGGADUCHIO'S sword (Spenser's Faerie Queene).
Sauvagine (the relentless), see COURTAINE above.

Tizona, the CID'S sword.
 See also ANGURVADEL; ARONDIGHT; AZOTH; CALIBURN; CURTANA; EXCALIBUR; JOYEUSE; MERVEILLEUSE; ROSSE.

Sword dance. A Scottish dance performed over two swords laid crosswise on the floor, or sometimes danced among swords placed point downwards in the ground; also a dance in which the men brandish swords and clash them together, the women passing under them when crossed.

Sword dollar. A Scottish silver coin of James VI marked with a sword on the reverse. It was worth 30s. Scots (2s. 6d. English) in contemporary coin.

The Sword of Damocles. See DAMOCLES.

The Sword of God. Khaled-ibn-al-Walid (d. 642), Mohammedan leader, was so called for his prowess at the battle of Muta (629), when he defeated the Emperor Heraclius, after a fierce two days' engagement.

The Sword of Rome. Marcellus, who opposed Hannibal (216-214 B.C.).

The Sword of the Spirit. The Word of God (Eph. vi, 17). Also the name of a ROMAN CATHOLIC social movement founded in 1940.

At sword's point. In deadly hostility, ready to fight each other with swords.

Fire and sword. Rapine and destruction perpetrated by an invading army.

Flaming swords. See FLAMING.

Poke not fire with a sword. This was a precept of PYTHAGORAS, meaning add not fuel to fire, or do not irritate an angry man by sharp words which will only increase his rage. (See Iamblichus: Protrepticus, symbol ix.)

Sword and buckler. An old epithet for brag and bluster; as a sword and buckler voice, sword and buckler men, etc. Hotspur says of the future Henry V:

And that same sword and buckler Prince of Wales,

 I'd have him poisoned with a pot of ale.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, i, iii.

To put to the sword. To slay.

To sheathe the sword. Figuratively, to put aside enmity, to make peace.

Your tongue is a double-edged sword. Whatever you say wounds; your argument cuts both ways. The allusion is to the double-edged sword out of the mouth of the Son of Man—one edge to condemn, and the other to save (Rev. i, 16).

Yours is a Delphic sword—it cuts both ways. Erasmus says a Delphic sword is that which accommodates itself to the PRO OR CON of a subject. The reference is to the double meanings of the DELPHIC ORACLES.

Sybarite (sí' bár it). A self-indulgent person; a wanton. The inhabitants of Sybaris, in south Italy, were proverbial for their luxurious living and self-indulgence. A tale is told by Seneca, of a Sybarite who complained that he could not rest comfortably at night, and being asked why, replied, "He found a rose-leaf doubled under him, and it hurt him."

Sybil. A perverted spelling of SIBYL, in classical mythology a prophetess, especially the prophetesses of APOLLO (see SIBYLLINE BOOKS). GEORGE ELIOT was known to her friends as The Sybil.

Sycophant (sik' õ fánt). A SPONGER, parasite or servile flatterer; the Greek sukophantes (sukon, fig; phainein, to show), which is said to have meant one who informed against those who exported figs contrary to law or robbed the sacred fig-trees. Hence, by extension, a tale-bearer, flatterer, etc. This explanation is difficult to substantiate.

At ATHENS, sycophantes were a class of professional prosecutors who often blackmailed the wealthy with threats of prosecution or litigation and thus their name may include the added allusion of "shaking a fig-tree" to expose the fruit, as a blackmailing might shake his wealthy victim to produce the cash. This has no direct connexion with our use of the word.

Syllogism (sil' ð jizm). A form of argument consisting of three propositions, a major premise or general statement, a minor premise or instance, and the conclusion, which is deduced from these.

Sylph (silf). An elemental spirit of air; so named in the MIDDLE AGES by the ROSICRUCIANS and CABBALISTS, from the Greek silphe, beetle or larva. Cp. SALAMANDER.

Any mortal who has preserved inviolate chastity might enjoy intimate familiarity with these gentle spirits, and deceased coquettes were said to become sylphs, "and sport and flutter in the fields of air".

Whoever, fair and chaste,
Rejects mankind, is by some sylph embraced.
POPE: The Rape of the Lock, i, 67.

Symbolists. A group of French writers who, towards the end of the 19th century, revolted against Naturalism and Parnassianism (see PARNASSIAN SCHOOL under PARNASSUS). Their aim was to suggest rather than to depict or transcribe, and their watchword was Verlaine's, "Pas de couleur, rien que la nuance." Their precursors were Baudelaire, Banville, G. de Nerval and Villiers de l'Isle-Adam. Chief Symbolists: in verse, Verlaine, Rimbaud, Mallarmé; in prose, Huysmans.

Symbols of Saints. See under SAINTS.

Synplegades. Another name for the CYANEAN ROCKS.

Symposium (sim pō' zi ùm). Properly, a drinking together (Gr. syn, together; posis, drink); hence, a convivial meeting for social and intellectual entertainment; hence, a discussion upon a subject, and the collected opinions of different authorities printed and published in a review, etc.

The Symposium is the title given to a dialogue by PLATO, and another by XENOPHON, in which the conversation of SOCRATES and others is recorded.

Synagogue (Gr. synagoge, assembly or place of assembly). In Jewish communities, the institution for worship, the study of Judaism, and social life and service which had its origins at the time of the BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY. The most notable of its special symbols are the Ark, in which scrolls of the Law are kept, the ever-burning lamp, and the Reading Desk, usually in the middle of the building. It is managed by a board of elders. See TABERNACLE; TEMPLE.

The Great Synagogue. According to Jewish tradition a body of 120 men in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah (5th century B.C.) who were engaged in remodelling the religious life of the Jews after the return from exile and in establishing the text and canon of the Hebrew SCRIPTURES.

Synchronism. A form of abstract art resembling ORPHISM begun by two Americans, Morgan Russell and S. MacDonald Wright, in 1913, characterized by movements of pure colour moving by gradations or rhythms from the primaries to the intermediary colours. Their painting depended on colour and its immediate effects.

Syndicalism (Fr. syndicalisme, trade unionism). A trade-union movement originating in France about 1890 where it was known as Syndicalisme révolutionnaire. It was opposed to State socialism, the means of production being taken over by the TRADE UNIONS and not by the State, and government was to be by a federation of trade-union bodies. The syndicalists aimed at achieving their objectives by widespread STRIKES, GO-SLOWS, etc. Syndicalism played an important part in fomenting the trade-union unrest in Great Britain immediately preceding World War I, and syndicalists were a prominent element in Spain in the 1930s.

Synecdoche (si nek' dō ki). The figure of speech which consists of putting a part for the whole, the whole for the part, a more comprehensive for a less comprehensive term, or vice versa. Thus, a hundred bayonets (for a hundred soldiers), the town was starving (for the people in the town).

Now will I remember you farther of that manner of speech which the Greeks call Synecdoche, and we the figure of quick conceite . . . as when one would tell me how the French king was overthrown at Saint Quintans, I am enforced to think that it was not the king himself in person, but the Constable of Fraunce with the French kings power.

PUTTENHAM: Arte of English Poesie, Bk. III, ch. xviii (1589).

Synoptic Gospels. Those of MATTHEW, MARK, and LUKE; so called because, taken together and apart from that of JOHN, they form a synopsis (Gr., a seeing together), i.e. a general and harmonized account of the life of Christ.

The Synoptic Problem. The problems of the origin and relationship of the three SYNOPTIC GOSPELS arising from large sections of material, and often phrasing, being common to them. There is general agreement that MARK is the earliest of the GOSPELS, and that it provides much of the material for MATTHEW and LUKE. The latter two contain material not found in Mark (see "Q"). There are varying theories among Biblical scholars to account for this parallelism, etc.

Syntax, Dr. (sin' taks). The pious, hen-pecked clergyman, very simple-minded, but of excellent taste and scholarship, created by William Combe (1741-1823) to accompany a series of coloured comic illustrations by Rowlandson. His adventures are told in eight-syllabled verse in the Three Tours of Dr. Syntax (1812, 1820, and 1821).

Syrinx (si' rings). An Arcadian NYMPH of Greek legend. On being pursued by PAN she took refuge in the river Ladon, and prayed to be changed into a reed; the prayer was granted, and of the reed Pan made his pipes. Hence the name is given to the PAN-PIPE, or reed mouth-organ, and also to the vocal organ of birds.

T

T. The twentieth letter of the alphabet, representing Semitic and Greek tau, which meant "a sign or a mark". Our T is a modification of the earlier form, X. See also TAU.

As a mediæval numeral T represents 160, and \bar{T} 160,000.

It fits to a T. Exactly. The allusion is to the use of a T-square for the accurate drawing of right-angles, parallel lines, etc.

Marked with a T. Notified as a felon. Persons convicted of felony, and admitted to the BENEFIT OF CLERGY, were branded on the thumb with the letter T (thief). The law authorizing this was abolished in 1827.

Taal (tahl). Cape Dutch, later known as Afrikaans, derived from 17th-century Dutch of the province of South Holland.

Tab. A flap, tag; a tally.

To keep tabs on someone is to keep check on him.

Tabard. An outer coat of rough, heavy material once worn by poor people; also a loose outer garment, with or without short sleeves, worn like a cloak by KNIGHTS over their armour—what Chaucer called cote-armour, often emblazoned with heraldic devices. It survives in the tabard worn by Heralds and PURSUIVANTS.

The Tabard Inn. The inn where pilgrims from LONDON used to set out on their journey to Canterbury; it was on the London estate of the abbots of Hyde (near Winchester), and lay in the SOUTH-WARK (now BOROUGH) High Street, a little to the south of LONDON BRIDGE. The site is marked by a commemorative plaque. The inn and its host Harry Baily, are immortalized in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales.

Tabardar, or Taberder. A scholar on the foundation of Queen's College, Oxford; so called because they wore gowns with tabard sleeves—that is, loose sleeves, terminating a little below the elbow in a point.

Tabby. Originally the name (from Arabic) of a silk material with a "watered" surface, giving an effect of wavy lines; applied to the brownish cat with dark stripes, because its markings resemble this material.

Demurest of the tabby kind,
The pensive Selima reclined.

GRAY: On the Death of a Favourite Cat.

Tabernacle (Lat. tabernaculum, a tent).

The portable shrine instituted by MOSES during the wanderings of the Jews in the wilderness. It was divided by a veil or hanging, behind which, in the "HOLY OF HOLIES", was the Ark. The outer division was called the Holy Place. When set up in camp the whole was surrounded by an enclosure. See Exod. xxv-xxxii; xxxiii, 7-10; xxxv-xl.

In ROMAN CATHOLIC churches, the tabernacle is the ornamental receptacle on the High Altar, in which the vessels containing the Blessed Sacrament are reserved. The name derives from the application of the word tabernaculum in church ornamentation to a variety of canopied forms.

The Feast of the Tabernacles. One of the three main feasts of the Jewish year lasting seven days, followed by an eighth day of "holy convocation" (see Lev. xxiii, 34-43; Numb. xxix, 12-34). It commemorates the way the Jews dwelt in booths or tents in the wilderness and also celebrates the final ingathering of the harvest and the vintage. It begins on the 15th Tishri (September-October).

Table, Apelles' Table. A pictured board (Lat. tabula) or table, representing the excellency of sobriety on the one side and the deformity of intemperance on the other.

The Lord's Table. The communion table or ALTAR.

The Round Table, or Table Round. See under ROUND.

Table d'hôte (Fr., the host's table). The "ORDINARY" at an hotel or restaurant; the meal for which one pays a fixed price whether one partakes of all the courses or not. In the MIDDLE AGES, and even down to the reign of Louis XIV, the landlord's or host's table was the only public dining-place known in Germany and France.

Table of Pythagoras. The common multiplication table, carried up to ten. The table is divided into a hundred little squares. The name is taken from a corrupt text of Boethius, who was really referring to the ABACUS.

Alphonsine Tables. See ALPHONSINE; TABULÆ TOLETANÆ.

Table of Cebes. Cebes was a Theban philosopher and disciple of SOCRATES. His Tabula presents a picture of human life depicted with great accuracy of judgment and splendour of sentiment.

The Tables of Toledo. See TABULÆ TOLETANÆ.

The Twelve Tables. The tables of the Roman laws engraved on brass, brought from ATHENS to ROME by the decemvirs.

Table money, or charge. A charge additional to that of the meal made at restaurants, etc., towards the cost of attendance; or a small fee charged to players at Bridge clubs; also, in the Army and Navy, an allowance made to senior officers to assist in meeting the expenses of official entertaining.

Table-talk. Small talk, chit-chat, familiar conversation.

Table-turning. The turning of tables without the application of mechanical force, which in the early days of SPIRITUALISM was commonly practised at seances, and sank to the level of a parlour trick. It was said by some to be the work of departed spirits, and by others to be due to a force akin to MESMERISM.

To fence the tables. In Scottish usage, to debar those unworthy from communion.

To lay on the table. The parliamentary phrase for postponing consideration of a motion, proposal, BILL, etc., indefinitely. Hence to table a matter is to defer it sine die.

To turn the tables. To reverse the conditions or relations; as, for instance, to rebut a charge by bringing forth a counter-charge. The phrase comes from the old custom of reversing the table or board, in games such as CHESS and draughts, so that the opponent's relative position is altogether changed.

Tableaux vivants (Fr., living pictures). Representations of staturary groups by living persons; said to have been invented by Madame de Genlis (1746-1830) while she had charge of the children of the Duc d'Orleans.

Taboo, tabu. A Polynesian word signifying that which is banned; the prohibition of the use of certain persons, animals, things, etc., or the utterance of certain names and words. Thus a temple is taboo, and so is he who violates a temple and everyone and everything connected with what is taboo becomes taboo also. Captain Cook was made taboo when he tried to set up an observatory in the Sandwich Islands. The idea of taboo is not, of course, peculiar to the Polynesians and is found among the ancient Egyptians, Jews, etc. Hence a person who is ostracized or an action, custom, etc., that is altogether forbidden by society, is said to be taboo or tabooed.

For several days after entering the valley I had been saluted at least fifty times in twenty-four hours with the talismanic word "Taboo" shrieked in my ears, at some gross violation of its provisions, of which I had unconsciously been guilty.

HERMAN MELVILLE: Typee, ch. xxx.

Tabouret, Right of (tăb' oo ret). In the old French court certain ladies of the highest rank had the droit de tabouret (the right of sitting on a tabouret or low stool) in the presence of the queen. Gentlemen similarly privileged had the droit de fauteuil (the right of sitting in an armchair).

Tabula rasa (tăb' ū lâ rā' ză) (Lat., a scraped tablet). A clean slate—literally and figuratively—on which anything can be written. Thus, we say that the mind of a person who has been badly taught must become a tabula rasa before he can learn anything properly.

Tabulæ Toletanæ. The ALPHONSINE TABLES, so called because they were compiled at Toledo.

His Tables Tolletanes forth he brought,
Ful wel corrected ne ther lakked nought.

CHAUCER: Franklin's Tale, 545.

Tace is Latin for candle. Silence is most discreet. "MUM'S THE WORD". Tace is Latin for "be silent", and candle is symbolical of light. The phrase means "keep it dark", do not throw light upon it. Fielding, in Amelia (ch. x), has—"Tace, madam," answered Murphy, "is Latin for a candle".

It was customary at one time to express disapprobation of a play or an actor by throwing a candle on to the stage and sometimes causing the curtain to be drawn.

Tack. The use of the word, particularly by sailors, soldiers, etc., to denote food is of unknown origin. It is used in such phrases as poor tack, hard tack (especially ship's biscuit) as opposed to soft tack (bread or other more palatable fare).

On the right tack, or on the wrong tack. Taking the right (or wrong) line or course of action. A nautical phrase, tack here being the course of a ship when "tacking", i.e. steering a zigzag course when sailing to windward.

Taffeta, or taffety (täf' e tà, täf' e ti). A material made of silk; at one time it was watered; hence Taylor says, "No taffaty more changeable than they." The word is from the Persian tafian, to twist or cure.

The fabric has often changed its character. At one time it was silk and linen, at another silk and wool. In the 18th century it was lustrous silk, sometimes striped with gold.

Taffeta phrases. Smooth, sleek phrases, EUPHEMISMS. We also use the words FUSTIAN, stuff, silken, shoddy, BUCKRAM, velvet, etc., to qualify phrases and literary compositions spoken or written.

Taffeta phrases, silken terms precise,
Three-piled hyperboles.
SHAKESPEARE: Love's Labour's Lost, V, ii.

Taffy. A Welshman, from Davy (Daffydd, David), a common name in Wales; perhaps it is best known among the English from the old rhyme in allusion to the days of border cattle raids.

Taffy was a Welshman,
Taffy was a thief,
Taffy came to my house
And stole a leg of beef.

Tag. A children's game of catch in which from the outset each person touched or "caught" joins the line to catch those remaining.

Tag Days. The American equivalent of British FLAG DAYS.

Tag, rag, and bobtail. See RAG-TAG AND BOBTAIL.

Tages (tä' jēz). In Etruscan mythology, a mysterious boy with the wisdom of an old man who was ploughed up, or who sprang from the ground, at Tarquinii. He is said to have been the grandson of JUPITER and to have instructed the Etruscans in the art of AUGURY. The latter wrote down his teaching in 12 books, which were known as "the books of Tages", or "the Acherontian books".

Tail. According to an old fable lions wipe out their footsteps with their tail, that they may not be tracked.

Out of the tail of one's eye. With a sidelong glance; just to see a thing "out of the corner of your eye".

Tail male, tail female. See ENTAIL.

To put salt on the tail. See PUT SOME SALT ON HIS TAIL under SALT.

To tail a person is to follow someone and not to lose sight of them.

To turn tail. To turn one's back and make off.

To twist the lion's tail. See under LION.

With his tail between his legs. Very dejected, quite downcast. The allusion is to dogs.

With a sting in its tail. In speech or writing, that which contains a sting or rebuke at the end. The bee has its sting in the tail, as does the sting-ray and the scorpion. See TELEGONUS.

Tailed men. It was an old belief in mediæval times that such creatures existed and among continentals Englishmen were once reputed to have tails. It was long a saying that the men of Kent were born with tails, as a punishment for the murder of Thomas à Becket.

A Warwickshire Man will be known by his Grinn,
as Roman-Catholics imagine a Kentish man by his Tail.

ADDISON: Spectator, 173.

Peter Pindar (Epistle to the Pope, 41) fastens the legend on the town of Strood:

As Becket that good saint, sublimely rode,
Thoughtless of insult, through the town of Strode,
What did the mob? Attacked his horse's rump
And cut the tail, so flowing, to the stump.
What does the saint? Quoth he, "For this vile trick
The town of Strode shall heartily be sick."
And lo! by power divine, a curse prevails—
The babes of Strode are born with horse's tails.

Jews and Cornishmen were also held to have tails, the appendage also being borne by the DEVIL. In the former case from a confusion of rabbi with raboin or rabuino, the devil, from Span. rabo, a tail.

Tail-end Charlie. An R.A.F. phrase in World War II for the rear-gunner in the tail of an aircraft; also for the aircraft at the rear of a group.

Taillefer (ti à fâr). The Norman TROUVÈRE who accompanied William of Normandy's army to England in 1066. He begged leave to strike the first blow and rode far ahead of the other horsemen singing of CHARLEMAGNE and ROLAND and playing like a juggler with his sword. After overcoming his first two opponents he charged into the Saxon host and was cut to pieces.

Tailor. Nine tailors make a man. An old expression of contempt at the expense of tailors, implying such physical feebleness that it would take nine of them to make a man of good physique, the occupation not being conducive to sound physical development. It has been suggested that tailor is a facetious adaptation of teller, a teller being a stroke on the funeral bell, three being given for a child, six for a woman, and nine for a man.

The number mentioned is sometimes only three:

Some foolish knave, I think, at first began
The slander that three tailors are one man.
TAYLOR: Workes, iii, 73 (1630).

The Three Tailors of Tooley Street. Canning says that three tailors of Tooley Street, SOUTHWARK, addressed a petition of grievances to the HOUSE OF COMMONS, beginning: "We, the people of England". Hence the phrase is used of any pettifogging coterie that fancies it represents the nation.

Tai-ping. The word means "Great peace", and the Tai-pings were the Chinese followers of Hung Hsiu-ch'uan (Heavenly Prince) in the rebellion of 1851-1864 against the Manchu dynasty. Hung, a Christian of a kind, who claimed to be the Younger Brother of Christ, set out to establish the "Great Peace" and captured Nanking in 1853. The rebellion was finally crushed, after millions had been killed by the Emperor's forces aided by CHINESE GORDON and his EVER-VICTORIOUS ARMY.

Take. To be taken aback. To be momentarily quite surprised, flabbergasted. When a ship's sails are so caught by the wind that they press against the mast they are said to be aback, a situation which stays the ship's progress.

To have taking ways. To be of an ingratiating disposition; readily able to make oneself liked. Fetching ways, winning ways amount to the same thing.

To take after. To have a strong resemblance to, physically, mentally, etc. "Doesn't little Johnny take after his father?" "Most of Lawrence's paintings seem to take after Romney."

To take back one's words. To withdraw them; to recant.

To take in. To deceive, gull. Hence, a regular take-in, a hoax, swindle.

To take in one's stride. Effortlessly or unflurriedly, without disrupting one's normal activities or routine.

To take it. To withstand suffering, hardship, punishment, insult, etc. "Britain can take it" was a popular slogan during the air attacks of World War II.

To take it lying down. To submit to insult or oppression without protest or resistance, like a dog when it is cowed.

To take it out of someone. To exact the utmost from, to give someone a real drubbing; to exact satisfaction from, to get one's own back. Also to become thoroughly exhausted, as, "Working after midnight does take it out of me."

To take it out on someone. Colloquially, to work off one's irritation, frustration, etc., by being unpleasant to someone else.

To take it upon oneself. To make oneself responsible (perhaps unwarrantably), to assume control.

To take off. To mimic or ridicule; also to start, especially of an aeroplane or of one in an athletic contest, as jumping or racing.

To take on. To undertake to perform, to assume, or, colloquially, to be upset or considerably affected as in, "Don't take on so" (i.e. don't distress yourself so); to make a fuss.

To take one down a peg. See under PEG.

To take over. To assume the management, control, or ownership.

To take someone at his word. To regard what he has said as trustworthy.

To take to. To develop an immediate liking for someone; to begin to develop a habit, as, "He has taken to drink since his wife absconded."

To take to task. To blame or censure, to call to account.

To take up. To pick up, to raise; to arrest; to begin to cultivate a hobby, study, etc.; also used of beginning to patronize or "adopt" people, usually for their advancement in society or business, etc.

"Yes, Lady Rockminster has took us up," said Lady Clavering.

"Taken us up, Mamma," cried Blanche, in a shrill voice.

"Well, taken us up, then," said my lady, "it's very kind of her, and I dare say we shall like it when we get used to it, only at first one don't fancy being took—well, taken up, at all."

THACKERAY: Pendennis, Ch. xxxvii.

To take up with. To commence to associate with.

Take-home pay. That which is left to the wage earner after the depredations of the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER and the exaction of the various levies for social insurance.

A take-over bid. A favourable offer to the shareholders of a company by another company which wishes to secure control of it.

Tale (O.E. talū). A number, a reckoning; a story. In Exod. v, 8, we have tale of bricks, a measure by number, as of a shepherd counting sheep:

And every shepherd tells his tale
Under the hawthorn in the dale.
MILTON: L'Allegro, 67.

An old wives' tale. Legendary lore, or a story usually involving the marvellous, and only accepted by the credulous. George Peele has a play The Old Wives' Tale (1595) and Arnold Bennett a novel (1908) of the same title.

A tale of a tub. See under TUB.

To tell tales out of school. To utter abroad affairs not meant for the public ear; to reveal confidential matters.

Out of tale, without tale. More than can be numbered.

Talent. Ability, aptitude, a "gift" for something or other. The word is borrowed from the parable in Matt. xxv, 14-30, and was originally the name of a weight and piece of money in Assyria, Greece, ROME, etc. (Gr. talanton, a balance). The value varied, the later Attic talent weighing about 57 lb. troy, and being worth about £250.

The Ministry of All the Talents. See ALL THE TALENTS.

Tales (tā' lēz). Persons in the court from whom selection is made to supply the place of jurors who have been empanelled, but are not in attendance. It is the first word of the Latin sentence providing for this contingency—Tales de circumstantibus, i.e. "from such (persons) as are standing about". Those who supplement the jury are called talesmen and their names are set down in the talesbook.

To serve for jurymen or tales.
BUTLER: Hudibras, III, viii.

To pray a tales. To pray that the number of jurymen may be completed.

In the celebrated action Bardell v. Pickwick:

It was discovered that only ten special jurymen were present. Upon this, Mr. Serjeant Buzfuz prayed a tales; the gentlemen in black then proceeded to press into the special jury, two of the common jurymen; and a greengrocer and a chemist were caught directly.

DICKENS: Pickwick Papers, ch. xxxiv.

Taliesin (tāl i ēs' in). A Welsh BARD of the late 6th century about whom very little is known. The so-called Book of Taliesin is of the 13th century and its contents are the work of various authors. The village of Taliesin in Cardiganshire is named after him. The story is that Prince Elphin, son of the king of Gwynedd, was given the right to net a certain weir near the mouth of the Dovey once a year, and on this occasion his net was brought ashore without a single salmon in it. While bewailing his constant misfortune, he noticed a leather wallet suspended from the timber of the weir and upon opening it found therein a youth of such lustrous brow that Elphin named him Taliesin (radiant brow). Taliesin brought wonderful prosperity to Elphin and became the greatest of the British bards at the court of King ARTHUR at CAERLEON.

Talisman. A charm or magical figure or word, such as the ABRAXAS, which is cut on metal or stone under the influence of certain planets; it is supposed to be sympathetic and to communicate to the wearer influence from the planets.

"Know, then, that the medicine to which thou, Sir King, and many one beside, owe their recovery, is a talisman, composed under certain aspects of the heavens, when the Divine Intelligences are most propitious. I am but the poor administrator of its virtues."

SCOTT: The Talisman, xviii.

In order to free a place of vermin, a talisman consisting of the obnoxious creature was made in wax or consecrated metal, in a planetary hour.

Swore you had broke, and robb'd his house,
And stole his talismanic louse.

BUTLER: Hudibras, III, i.

The word is the Arabic tilsam from late Greek telesma, mystery.

Tall. A tall story. An incredible tale.

Tally, To. To correspond. In England the tally, a notched piece of wood (Fr. taille, a notch or incision) used for reckoning, had a particular importance as an EXCHEQUER record and receipt down to 1826 (usually of money loaned to the Government). The notch on one side was an acknowledgment of the sum paid, two other sides were marked with the date, the name of the payer, etc., and the whole was cleft longitudinally so that each half contained one written side and the half of every notch. One part was retained at the Exchequer (the counter-stock) and the other (the stock) was issued. When payment was required the two parts were compared and if they "tallied" all was in order.

In 1834, the mass of these valuable records were burnt in the stoves which heated the HOUSE OF LORDS; an unintelligent action causing the disastrous fire which destroyed the old PARLIAMENT buildings.

Tallyman. A travelling hawkler who calls at private houses to sell wares on the tally system—that is, part payment on account, and other parts when the man calls again; so called because he keeps a tally or SCORE of his transactions.

To live tally, or make a tally bargain. Said of a couple who live together as man and wife without being married—presumably because they do so as their tastes tally, and not from any reason of compulsion.

Tally-ho! The cry of fox-hunters on catching sight of the fox. It is an English form of Fr. taiout, which was similarly used in deer-hunting.

Talmud, The (tāl' mūd) (Heb., instruction). The collection of Jewish civil and religious law, religious and moral doctrine, and ritual founded on Scripture. It consists of the MISHNAH and the GEMARA and there are two recensions, the Babylonian and the Palestinian, or Jerusalem. The Babylonian Talmud, about three times the volume of the Palestinian, is held to be the more important and it was completed towards the end of the 5th century A.D. The Palestine Talmud was produced in the mid-4th century A.D. After the BIBLE, the Talmud is the most important influence in Jewish life.

Talus (tā' lūs). See MAN OF BRASS under BRASS.

Tamberlane, Tamerlane. Names under which the renowned Tartar conqueror Timur, or Timur i Leng, i.e. Timur the Lame (1336–1405), is commonly known. He had his capital at Samarkand, and conquered most of Persia and India, Georgia and other Caucasian lands, and was preparing to conquer China when he died. The story of his confinement of the Sultan Bayezid, or Bajazet, in an iron cage is probably legendary. He is the hero of Marlowe's blank verse tragedy Tamburlaine the Great (acted 1587). In Rowe's play Tamerlane (1702), the warrior appears as a calm philosophic prince—out of compliment to William III.

Tammany Hall. The headquarters (in 14th Street, New York) of the Democratic Party organization in New York City and State. In the 19th century, it became a powerful influence in the party as a whole and in the 1870s, under W. M. Tweed, was associated with widespread corruption, and this and other incidents has led to Tammany Hall being used figuratively for wholesale and widespread political or municipal malpractice.

Tammany Hall was the survivor of numerous Tammany societies which sprang up at the time of the American Revolution as patriotic anti-British organizations and "St. Tammany" became the patron of the SONS OF LIBERTY clubs.

Tammuz. See THAMMUZ.

Tam-o'-Shanter. The hero of Burns's poem of that name; the soft cloth head-dress is so called from him.

Remember Tam-o'-Shanter's mare. You may pay too dear for your whistle, as Meg lost her tail, pulled off by Nannie of the "CUTTY-SARK", in Burns's poem.

Think, ye may buy the joys owre dear—
Remember Tam-o'-Shanter's mare.
BURNS: Tam-o'-Shanter.

Tancred (d. 1112). One of the chief heroes of the First CRUSADE, and a leading character in TASSO'S JERUSALEM DELIVERED. He was the son of Otho the Good and Emma (sister of Robert Guiscard). In the epic he was the greatest of all Christian warriors except RINALDO.

Disraeli's strange romance, Tancred (1847), tells of an early-19th-century hero to a dukedom who went on a "New Crusade" to the HOLY LAND.

Tangie. A water-spirit of the Orkneys appearing as a man covered with seaweed (Dan. tang, seaweed) or as a little seahorse.

Tanist (Ir. and Gael., tanaiste). The lord or chief of a territory, or his elected heir. It was an ancient custom in IRELAND and among CELTIC peoples for the family or CLAN to elect a successor to the lands from among their number, usually the nearest male relative of the existing chieftain unless he were a minor or otherwise unsuitable. This mode of tenure is called tanistry.

Tanist Stone. The monolith erected by the ancient GÆLIC kings at their coronation, especially that called LIA-FAIL, which, according to tradition, is identical with the famous Stone of SCONE. It is said to have been set up at Icolmkil for the coronation of Fergus I of SCOTLAND, a contemporary of ALEXANDER THE GREAT and son of Ferchard, King of IRELAND.

Tank. The heavily armoured motorized combat vehicle running on caterpillar tracks was first introduced on the battlefield by the British in the Battle of the Somme (1916). It owes its name to tank being used as a code word for these vehicles in order not to arouse enemy suspicions and to achieve a complete surprise.

Tanner. Slang for a sixpenny piece. The term has been in use for over a hundred years.

Tannhäuser (tăn' hoi zer). A lyrical poet, or MINNESINGER, of Germany, who flourished in the second half of the 13th century. He led a wandering life, and is said even to have visited the Far East; this fact, together with his Buszlied (song of repentance), and the general character of his poems, probably gave rise to the legend about him—which first appeared in a 16th-century German ballad. This relates how he spends a voluptuous year with VENUS, in the VENUSBERG, a magic land reached through a subterranean cave; at last he obtains leave to visit the upper world, and goes to POPE Urban for absolution. "No," says His Holiness, "you can no more hope for mercy than this dry staff can be expected to bud again." Tannhäuser departs in despair; but on the third day the papal staff bursts into blossom; the Pope sends in every direction for Tannhäuser, but the KNIGHT is nowhere to be found, for, mercy having been refused, he has returned to end his days in the arms of Venus.

Wagner's opera of this name was first produced in 1845.

Tantalus (tăn' tà lus). In Greek mythology, the son of ZEUS and a NYMPH. He was a Lydian king, highly honoured and prosperous; but, because he divulged to mortals the secrets of the gods, he was plunged up to the chin in a river of HADES, a tree hung with clusters of fruit being just above his head. As every time he tried to drink the waters receded from him, and as the fruit was just out of reach, he suffered agony from thirst, hunger, and unfulfilled anticipation.

Hence, our verb, to tantalize, to excite a hope and disappoint it; and hence the name tantalus applied to a lock-up spirit chest in which the bottles are visible but un-get-at-able without the key.

Tantivy, or Tantivy Men (tăn tiv' i). A name given TORY High Churchmen in the time of James II. They were caricatured as being mounted on the CHURCH OF ENGLAND riding "tantivy" to ROME. To ride tantivy is a hunting term meaning to ride at full gallop.

Tantony pig. The smallest pig of a litter, which, according to the old proverb, will follow its owner anywhere. So called in honour of St. ANTHONY, who was the patron saint of swineherds, and is frequently represented with a little pig at his side.

Tantony is also applied to a small church bell—or to any hand bell—for there is usually a bell round the neck of St. Anthony's pig or attached to the TAU-CROSS he carries.

Tantras, The. Sanskrit religious books (6th and 7th century A.D.) of the Shaktas, a Hindu cult whose adherents worship the female principle, usually centering round Siva's wife, Parvati. They are mostly in the form of a dialogue between SIVA and his wife.

Tantra is Sanskrit for thread, or warp, and hence is used of groundwork, order, or doctrine of religion.

Taoism (tă' ō izm) (tao, the way). One of the three religious systems of China along with Confucianism and BUDDHISM. It derives from the philosophical system of Lao-tsze (6th century B.C.).

Tap. On tap. Available, ready for use; as liquor is from a cask when it has been tapped.

To tap the admiral. To broach a cask of liquor surreptitiously. From the story of the sailors who are supposed to have tapped the cask of spirits in which an admiral's body was being brought back to England.

Tap-up Sunday. An old local name for the Sunday preceding 2 October, when a fair was held on St. Catherine's Hill, near Guildford. So called because any person, with or without a licence, might open a "tap", or sell beer on the hill for that one day.

Taped. To have a person taped. Fully appraised or summed up, completely "weighed up" or assessed; as if measured with a tape. When one has a situation "taped" it also implies having things under control.

Tapis (tăp' ē). On the tapis. Literally, on the table-cloth, hence under consideration. An English-French phrase.

My business comes now upon the tapis.
FARQUHAR: The Beaux' Stratagem, III, iii.

Tapley, Mark. Martin's servant and companion in Dickens's Martin Chuzzlewit; sometimes taken to typify anyone cheerful under all circumstances.

Tappit-hen. A Scots term, properly for a hen with a crest or tuft on its head, but generally used for a large beer or wine measure. Readers of Scott's Waverley will remember (in ch. xi) the Baron Bradwardine's tappit-hen of claret "containing at least three English quarts".

Weel she lo'ed a Hawick gill
And leugh to see a tappit-hen.

Cp. JEROBOAM.

To have a tappit-hen under the belt is to have swallowed three quarts.

Tar. Jack Tar. See under JACK.

A touch of the tar brush. A strain of Negro blood in one's ancestry indicated by dark skin. It is used less frequently of Indian or other coloured ancestry.

All tarred with the same brush. All alike to blame, all having the same faults; all sheep of the same flock. The allusion is to the former treatment of sores, etc., on sheep, with a brush dipped in tar.

Tarred and feathered. Stripped to the skin, daubed with tar, and then rolled in feathers so that the feathers adhere; a common popular punishment in primitive communities, and still occasionally resorted to.

The first record of this punishment is in 1189 (1 Rich. I). A statute was made that any robber voyaging with the crusaders "shall be first shaved, then boiling pitch shall be poured on his head, and a cushion of feathers shook over it". The wretch was then to be put on shore at the very first place the ship came to (Rymer: Fœdera, I, 65).

Tar-heel. The colloquial name for a native of North Carolina, the Tar-heel State; so called from the early production of rosin, turpentine, and tar from its pine-woods.

Tara. The Hill of Tara, County Meath, some 20 miles north of Dublin, was the ancient seat of the High Kings of IRELAND until the 6th century A.D. Only a series of earthworks now remain to mark the site of "Tara's halls". Here was held a national assembly, the Feis of Tara, and gatherings for music, games and literary contests. Here too was the LIA-FAIL which is supposed to have been Jacob's pillow taken from Tara to SCOTLAND. See TANIST STONE.

The harp that once through Tara's halls
The soul of music shed
Now hangs as mute on Tara's walls
As if that soul were fled.

T. MOORE.

Tarantella (târ ên tel' à). A very quick Neapolitan dance (or its music) for one couple, said to have been based on the gyrations practised by those whom the TARANTULA had poisoned.

Tarantula (tâ rân' tû lâ). A large and hairy venomous spider (so called from Taranto, Lat. Tarentum, a town in Apulia, Italy, where they abound), whose bite was formerly supposed to be the cause of the dancing mania hence known as tarantism. This was an hysterical disease, common, epidemicly, in southern Europe from the 15th to the 17th centuries.

Targums (Aramaic, interpretations). The name given to the various Aramaic (Chaldean) interpretations and translations of the Old Testament, made in Babylon and Palestine when Hebrew was ceasing to be the everyday speech of the Jews. They were transmitted orally and the oldest, that of Oneklos on the PENTATEUCH, is probably of the 2nd century A.D.

Tariff Reform. A political movement in Great Britain inaugurated in 1903 by Joseph Chamberlain (1836-1914) for the reintroduction of a tariff or scale of duties on imported goods, originally with the idea of strengthening the bonds of empire on a basis of Imperial Preference. Return to protection did not take place on any scale until 1932 consequent upon the financial crisis of 1931.

Tarot, or Tarok Cards. Italian playing-cards, first used in the 14th century and still occasionally employed in fortunetelling. The pack originally contained 78 cards: four suits of numeral cards with four COAT CARDS, i.e. king, queen, chevalier, and valet, and in addition to the four suits 22 atutti cards, or trumps, known as tarots.

The modern pack contains 54 cards: 32 suit cards, 21 tarots, and 1 joker.

Tarpeian Rock (tar pē' ân). An ancient rock or peak (no longer in existence) of the Capitoline Hill, ROME; so called from Tarpeia, the faithless daughter of the governor of the citadel (see CRUSHED BY HIS HONOURS under HONOUR), who was flung from this rock by the SABINES. It became the traditional place from which traitors were hurled.

Bear him to the rock Tarpeian, and from thence Into destruction cast him.

SHAKESPEARE: Coriolanus, III, i.

Tarquin (tar' kwin). The family name of a legendary line of early Roman kings. Tarquinius Priscus, the fifth king of ROME, is dated 617-578 B.C. His son, Tarquinius Superbus, was the seventh (and last) king of Rome, and it was his son, Tarquinius Sextus, who committed the rape on Lucretia, in revenge for which the Tarquins were expelled from Rome and a Republic established.

Tarquin is also the name of a "recreant knight" figuring in the ARTHURIAN ROMANCES.

Tart. As applied to a harlot or girl of loose sexual morals this word, a contraction of "sweetheart", came into use in the later Victorian period.

Tartar, or Tatar. The Asiatic tribes of this name are properly called Tatars, the form Tartar probably deriving from association with TARTARUS, HELL, the Tatars being part of the Asiatic host under Jenghiz Khan which threatened 13th-century Europe. Hence a savage, irritable or excessively severe person is called a tartar; when applied to a woman it denotes a VIXEN or shrew.

To catch a tartar. See under CATCH.

Tartarian Lamb. See SCYTHIAN.

Tartarus. The infernal regions of classical mythology; used as equivalent to HADES by later writers, but by HOMER placed as far beneath Hades as Hades is beneath the earth. It was here that ZEUS confined the TITANS. Cp. HELL.

Tassel-gentle. The male goshawk trained for falconry; tassel being a corruption of tiercel, a male hawk, which is a third (tierce) less in size than the female, and called gentle because of its tractable disposition.

SHAKESPEARE uses the term figuratively for a sweetheart:

O for a falconer's voice
To lure this tassel-gentle back again!
Romeo and Juliet, II, ii.

Tassies. Tasmanians. See APPLE-ISLANDERS.

Tasso, Torquato (1544-1595). The celebrated Italian poet, author of Rinaldo (1562) and JERUSALEM DELIVERED (1575). He became the idol of the brilliant court of Ferrara but his exhausting literary labours and the excitements and stresses of court life caused mental breakdown, and he spent most of the rest of his life in confinement, exile, and poverty. His Jerusalem Delivered was pirated in 1580 and he received no payment for his masterpiece. He died as a pensioner of Pope Clement VIII.

Tattoo. The beat of the drum at night to recall soldiers to barracks is from Dutch taptoe, and "to beat the taptoe" was the signal to put the tap to, i.e. shut, public houses. When the word came into use in the mid-17th century it was written tap-100, tapp-100, etc.

Tattoo, as the indelible marking of the skin, is one of our few words from Polynesian. It is the Tahitian tatau, mark, and was introduced by Captain Cook in 1769.

Beating the devil's tattoo. See under DEVIL (phrases).

Torchlight tattoo. A military entertainment, carried out at night in the open air with illuminations, evolutions, and martial music.

Tau. The letter T in Greek and the SEMITIC languages. Anciently it was the last letter of the Greek alphabet (as it still is of the Hebrew); and in Middle English literature the phrase Alpha to Omega was not infrequently rendered Alpha to Tau.

Tau cross. A T-shaped CROSS, especially ST. ANTHONY'S CROSS.

Tauchnitz (touch' nits). The famous library of British and American books in English, bound in paper for circulation on the Continent of Europe, was founded by the Freiherr Christian Bernhard Tauchnitz (1816-1895) in 1841, at Leipzig. He came of a family which had been in the publishing business for several generations.

Taurus (taw' rûs) (Lat., the bull). The second zodiacal constellation, and the second sign of the ZODIAC, which the sun enters about 21 April.

As bees
In spring-time, when the sun with Taurus rides,
Pour forth their populous youth about the hive
In clusters.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, I, 768.

Taverner's Bible. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

Tawdry. A corruption of St. Audrey (Audrey itself being a corruption of Etheldrida). At the annual fair of St. Audrey, in the Isle of Ely, cheap jewellery and showy lace called St. Audrey's lace were sold; hence tawdry, which is applied to anything gaudy, in bad taste, and of little value. Cp. TANTONY.

Come, you promised me a tawdry lace and a pair of sweet gloves.

SHAKESPEARE: The Winter's Tale, IV, iv.

Taxi, short for taximeter, is the accepted term for a motor-cab, which takes its name from the meter which was installed on French horse-drawn cabs or fiacres long before motor-cabs appeared on the road. In Britain it only became common with the introduction of motor-cabs and was thus associated with them.

An aeroplane is said to taxi when it moves along the ground under its own power.

Te Deum, The (tê dê' um). So called from the opening words Te Deum laudamus (Thee, God, we praise). This Latin hymn was traditionally assigned to SS. AMBROSE and Augustine, and was supposed to have been improvised by St. Ambrose while baptizing St. Augustine (386). Hence it is sometimes called "the Ambrosian Hymn" and in some early psalters it is entitled "Canticum Ambrosii et Augustini". It is now generally thought to have been written by Niceta, Bishop of Remesiana (d. c. 414). It is used in various offices and at MATTINS.

Te Igitur (Lat.). "Thee therefore". In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, the first words of the old form of the CANON OF THE MASS, and consequently the name for the first section of the canon.

Oaths upon the Te Igitur. Oaths sworn on this part of the MISSAL, which were regarded as especially sacred.

Tea. A nice old cup of tea. Sometimes applied ironically to awkward occurrences, unpleasant situations, or muddles, but when we say "she's a nice old cup of tea" we mean "she is a dear" or "pleasant old soul".

Not my cup of tea. Not at all in my line, not what I want or am suited for.

A tea fight. A tea-party; especially a church or chapel gathering at which tea and buns, etc., are provided.

A storm in a teacup. See under STORM.

That's another cup of tea. That is a very different matter.

Tea-kettle broth. "Poor man's soup", consisting of hot water, bread, and a small lump of butter, with pepper and salt; the French soup maigre.

Teapoy (tē' poi). A small, three- or four-legged occasional table. Though largely used for standing a tea-tray upon, the teapoy has really nothing to do with tea, the name coming from Hindustani teen, three, and the Persian paē, a foot.

Teach-in. An American name for a series of lectures and discussions on a particular theme led by experts. The expression became current in England in the late 1960s.

Teague. A contemptuous name for an Irishman (from the Irish personal name), rarely used nowadays but common in the 17th and 18th centuries.

Was't Carwell, brother James, or Teague,
That made thee break the Triple League?
ROCHESTER: History of Inspids.

Tear (târ). To tear Christ's body. To use imprecations. The common oaths of mediæval times were by different parts of the Lord's body; hence the preachers used to talk of "tearing God's body by imprecations".

Hir othes been so grete and so dampnable
That it is grisly for to heere hem swere;
Our blissed Lordes body thay to-tere.
CHAUCER: Pardoner's Tale, 144.

To tear someone off a strip. See under STRIP.

Tear (têr). St. LAWRENCE's tears. See SHOOTING STARS.

Tears of Eos. The dewdrops of the morning were so called by the Greeks.

Eos was the mother of MEMNON, and wept for him every morning.

The Vale of Tears. This world. Cp. BACA.

Tear-jerker. A novel, play, or film with a very sad or sentimental theme.

Ted, or Teddy. A pet-form of Edward.

A ted, teddy boy, teddy girl. See EDWARDIAN.

Teddy-bear. A child's toy bear, named after Theodore (Teddy) Roosevelt, who was fond of bear-hunting.

Teeth. See TOOTH.

Teetotal. A word expressive of total abstinence from alcoholic liquors. The origin of the word has two explanations. Dick Turner, a Lancashire artisan of Preston, coined it about 1833 (some accounts say that he stuttered!) and his tombstone bears this inscription:

Beneath this stone are deposited the remains of Richard Turner, author of the word Teetotal as applied to abstinence from all intoxicating liquors, who departed this life on the 27th day of October, 1846, aged 56 years.

The word also seems to have arisen independently in America, perhaps a little earlier, from the practice introduced by a New York Temperance Society of getting members to sign the pledge. "O.P." against a name stood for "Old Pledge" (abstinence from distilled spirits only) and "T" for total abstinence. Frequent reference to "T-total" gave rise to the word.

Teian Muse, The (ti' ân). ANACREON, who was born at Teos, Asia Minor.

The Scian and the Teian muse,
The hero's heart, the lover's lute,
Have found the fame your shores refuse.
BYRON: The Isles of Greece, ii.

Telamones (tel a mō' nêz). Large, sculptured male figures (cp. ATLANTES; CARYATIDES) serving as architectural columns or pilasters. So called from the Greek legendary hero Telamon (father of AJAX) who took part in the Calydonian hunt (see CALYDONIAN BOAR under BOAR), and the expedition of the ARGONAUTS.

Telegonus (tê leg' on ùs). The son of ULYSSES and CIRCE, who was sent to find his father. On coming to Ithaca, he began to plunder the fields when Ulysses and TELEMACHUS appeared in arms to prevent him. Telegonus killed his father, who was unknown to him, with a lance pointed with the spine of a trygon or sting-ray which Circe had given him. He subsequently married PENELOPE.

Telemachus (te lem' á kus). The only son of ULYSSES and PENELOPE. After the fall of

Telepathy

TROY he went, attended by ATHENE in the guise of MENTOR, in quest of his father. He ultimately found him, and the two returned to Ithaca and slew Penelope's suitors.

Telepathy (tè lep' à thi). The word invented in 1882 by F. W. H. Myers to describe "the communication of impressions of any kind from one mind to another independently of the recognized channels of sense". The term "thought-transference" is often used for this phenomenon and more nearly expresses its implications, for it indicates the communication of thought from one person to another without the medium of speech.

Telephus. See ACHILLEA.

Tell, William. The legendary national hero of Switzerland whose deeds appear to be an invention of the 15th century and are paralleled in numerous European myths and legends.

The story is that Tell was the champion of the Swiss in the struggle against Albert I (slain 1308), Duke of Austria. Tell refused to salute the cap of Gessler, Albert's tyrannical steward, and for this act of independence was sentenced to shoot with his bow and arrow an apple from the head of his own son. He achieved this feat and Gessler demanded what his second arrow was for, whereupon Tell boldly replied, "To shoot you with, had I killed my son." Gessler had him conveyed to Küssnacht castle, but he escaped on the way and later killed Gessler in ambush. A rising followed which established the independence of Switzerland.

The story has been systematically exposed as having no foundation in fact, and similar feats are recorded in Norse legend of Toki. The popularity of tales of the "master shot" is evidenced by the stories of Adam Bell, CLYM OF THE CLOUGH, WILLIAM CLOUDESLEY and EGIL.

Teller. Anciently, one who kept the tallies (Anglo-Fr. talier) and counted the money; now, a bank-clerk who receives and pays out money at the counter.

Up to 1834 there were four officers of the EXCHEQUER known as Tellers of the Exchequer, whose duty was to receive and pay out moneys. See TALLY.

When shall our prayers end?
I tell thee (priest) . . .
When proud surveyors take no parting pence,
When Silver sticks not on the Teller's fingers,
And when receivers pay as they receive.
GASCOIGNE: The Steele Glas (1576).

Telstar. The name given to the satellite launched in 1962 for relaying transatlantic telephone messages and television pictures.

Temperance, The Apostle of. See MATHEW.

Templars, or Knights Templar. In 1119, nine French KNIGHTS bound themselves to protect pilgrims on their way to the HOLY PLACES and took monastic vows. They received the name TEMPLARS because they had their headquarters in a building on the site of the old TEMPLE OF SOLOMON at JERUSALEM.

Their habit was a long white mantle ornamented with a red cross on the left shoulder. Their seal showed two knights riding on one horse, the story being that the first Master was so poor that he had to share a horse with one of his followers. Their banner, called Le Beauseant or Bauceant (an old French name for a piebald horse), was half black, half white, and charged with a red cross.

Their bravery in the field was unquestionable, as was in due course the wealth and power of the Order which had houses throughout Europe, but the fall of Acre (1291) marked the ultimate failure of their efforts. Jealousy of their power and wealth rather than the internal corruption of their Order resulted in their suppression and extinction in 1312, in France accompanied by particular cruelties.

In England the Order had its first house (c. 1121) near Holborn Bars, London, but it later settled on the site still called the TEMPLE.

At Paris, the stronghold of the Knights Templar was taken over by the Knights of St. John. The old tower later became a prison where, in 1792, the royal family of France was incarcerated prior to execution and the DAUPHIN (Louis XVII) probably died within its walls. See THE SOCIETY OF THE TEMPLE, below.

Temple. This is the Lat. templum, from Gr. temenos, a sacred enclosure, i.e. a space cut off from its surroundings (Gr. temnein, to cut). The Lat. templum originally denoted the space marked out by the augurs within which the sign was to occur.

Temple, The. The site between FLEET STREET and the THAMES formerly occupied by the buildings of TEMPLARS (c. 1160-1312) of which the Temple Church, one of the four circular churches built in England by them, is the only portion remaining. On the suppression of the Order, the site was granted to the Knights HOSPITALLERS and, from 1346, it has been occupied by practitioners and students of law who, since 1609, have formed two separate INNS OF COURT known as the Inner and Middle Temples. The badge of the former is the Winged Horse (Pegasus), that of the latter the Lamb (Agnus Dei).

Temple Bar. The old FLEET STREET gateway into the CITY, formerly situated close to the entrance into the TEMPLE, on the spot since 1880 occupied by the monument known as the "Griffin". The old "bar" was destroyed in the GREAT FIRE and a new one erected (1670-1672) by Sir Christopher Wren. This was removed and re-erected in Theobald's Park, Herts, in 1878. Until 1746, heads of rebels and conspirators were displayed on iron spikes above the pediment; the last shrivelled head seems to have fallen off about 1772.

The Temple, or The Society of the Temple. At Paris in the early 18th century, a gay and dissipated coterie at the Temple (see TEMPLARS), presided over by the Duke of Vendôme and his brother Philippe, Grand Prior of the Knights of Malta in France. The Abbé Chauvieu was a prominent member and VOLTAIRE was introduced to it in his youth.

Anacreon of the Temple. See under ANACREON.

The Temple of Solomon. The national shrine of the Jews at JERUSALEM, erected by SOLOMON and his Tyrian workmen on Mount Moriah in the 10th century B.C. It was destroyed in the siege of Jerusalem by NEBUCHADNEZZAR (588 B.C.), and some 70 years later the new Temple of Zerubbabel was completed on its site. The third building begun by HEROD in 20 B.C. was grandest of them all and was that of New Testament times. It was utterly destroyed by the Romans under Titus A.D. 70. The site has long been covered by a MOSLEM shrine.

The Temple of Herod is said to have covered 19 acres. In the holy place were kept the golden candlestick, the altar of incense, and the table of the SHEWBREAD; within the HOLY OF HOLIES, the ark of the covenant and the mercy-seat. See JACHIN AND BOAZ.

Tempora mutantur (Lat., the times are changed). The tag is founded on Omnia mutantur, nos et mutamur in illis (all things are changed, and we with them), a saying of Nicholas Borbonius, a Latin poet of the 16th century. Lothair, EMPEROR of the HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE, had, it is stated, already said, Tempora mutantur, nos et mutamur in illis.

Tempus fugit (tem' pus fū' jit) (Lat.). Time flies.

Ten. The Council of Ten. A secret tribunal exercising unlimited powers in the old Venetian republic. Instituted in 1310 with ten members, it was later enlarged to 17, and continued in active existence till the fall of the republic in 1797.

The Ten Commandments. A humorous expression for the ten fingers, especially when used by an angry woman for scratching her opponent's face.

Could I come near your beauty with my nails,
I'd set my ten commandments in your face.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. II, 1, iii.

Ten to one. The chances are very much in favour of; there is a very strong probability that, as, "It's ten to one that it will rain tonight," i.e. there is a ten to one chance of rain.

The Upper Ten. The aristocracy, the cream of society. Short for the upper ten thousand. The term was first used by N. P. Willis (1806-1867), a spirited American journalist, in speaking of the fashionables of New York.

Tenner. A ten-pound note; as fiveer is a five-pound note. In the U.S.A. a tenner is a ten-dollar note or bill.

Ten-cent Jimmy. James Buchanan (1791-1868), fifteenth President of the U.S.A. (1857-1861), was so nicknamed on account of his advocacy of low tariffs and low wages.

Ten-gallon hat. The original tall-crowned, wide-brimmed hat worn by cowboys. Doubtless a jocular allusion to its capacity.

Tenpenny nails. Large-sized nails, originally so called because they were sold at 10d. a hundred. Smaller nails used to be known as eightpenny, sixpenny, fourpenny nails.

Tenth. The Submerged, or Tenth Legion. See SUBMERGED.

The Tenth Muse. A name given originally to SAPPHO, there being nine true MUSES, and afterwards applied to literary women, as Mme de la Garde Deshoulières (1638-1694), Mlle de Scudéry (1607-1701), Queen Christina of Sweden (1626-1689), and the English novelist and essay writer, Hannah More (1745-1833).

The tenth wave. See WAVE.

Tenths. In English ecclesiastical usage, the tenth part of the annual profit of every living, originally paid to the POPE and transferred to the Crown after the breach with ROME, later to QUEEN ANNE'S

Tenant

BOUNTY. Cp. ANNATES. Also, in former days, a tax levied by the Crown of one-tenth of every man's personal property.

Tenant (Fr. tenant, holding, from tenir, to hold). One who holds property or premises.

Tenant at will. One who at any moment can be dispossessed of his tenancy at the will of the landlord or lessor.

Tenant in chief. One who held land direct from the king.

Tenant-right. The right of an outgoing tenant to claim compensation from an incoming tenant for improvements, manuring, crops left in the ground, etc. In earlier times, the term denoted the right of passing on the tenancy, at decease, to the eldest surviving issue, and it is now also applied to the right of a well-behaved tenant to compensation if deprived of his tenancy.

Tender. See LEGAL TENDER.

Tendon of Achilles. See ACHILLES TENDON.

Tenebræ (ten' ē brē) (Lat., darkness, gloom). In the Western Church the MATTINS and LAUDS of the following day sung on the Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of HOLY WEEK. The lights of 15 candles are extinguished one by one at the end of each psalm, the last after the Benedictus. The MISERERE is then sung in darkness. This ritual goes back to the 8th century and symbolizes dramatically Christ's PASSION and Death.

Tennis-Court Oath, The (20 June 1789). The famous oath taken by the Third ESTATE in the Tennis Court at VERSAILLES—never to separate, and to meet wherever circumstances might make it necessary for it to meet, until the Constitution had been established and set on a firm foundation. The occasion was when Louis XVI excluded the deputies from their assembly hall and they met in the neighbouring building, the royal tennis court. It was another step towards revolution.

Tenson. A contention in verse between rival TROUBADOURS before a court of love; a metrical dialogue consisting of smart repartees, usually on women and love; also a subdivision of the troubadours' love lyrics (Lat. tensio, a struggle).

Tenterden. Tenterden steeple was the cause of Goodwin Sands. A satirical remark when some ridiculous reason is given for a thing. The story, according to one of Latimer's sermons, is that Sir Thomas More, being sent into Kent to ascertain the cause of the GOODWIN SANDS, called together the oldest inhabitants to ask their opinion. A very old man said, "I believe Tenterden steeple is the cause," and went on to explain that in his early days there was no Tenterden steeple, and there were no complaints about the sands. This reason seems ridiculous enough, but the fact seems to be that the Bishops of Rochester applied to the building of Tenterden steeple moneys raised in the county for the purpose of keeping Sandwich haven clear, so that when they found the harbour was getting blocked up there was no money for taking the necessary counter-measures.

Tenterhooks. To be on tenterhooks.

In suspense, most curious or anxious to hear the outcome. An allusion to newly-woven cloth being stretched or "tentered" on hooks passed through the selvages (Lat. tentus, stretched, hence "tent", canvas stretched).

Teraphim (ter' à fim). The idols or images of the ancient Hebrews and other Semitic peoples, worshipped by them as household gods or individual protecting deities. It was her father Laban's teraphim that Rachel stole and hid in the camel's saddle in Gen. xxxi, 17-35. Cp. LARES AND PENATES.

Teresa, St. The name of two Carmelite nuns of remarkable qualities: (1) St. Teresa of Avila (1515-1582) or St. Teresa of Jesus, whose life combined great practical achievement with continual prayer and religious sanctity in which she reached a state of "spiritual marriage". She was responsible for the reform of the Carmelite Order and founded 32 convents as well as writing outstanding works on prayer and meditation. She was canonized in 1622 and her day is 15 October. (2) St. Teresa of Lisieux (1873-1897), a Carmelite nun, professed in 1890, who died of tuberculosis, and who is associated with miracles of healing and prophecy. Her autobiography, L'Histoire d'une âme, made her famous and she was canonized in 1925. She was associated with JOAN OF ARC as patroness of France in 1947 and in England she is known as "The Little Flower".

Term. To be on good (or bad) terms with a person is to be on a good (or bad) footing with them.

To bring to terms. To force a person to accept one's conditions.

To come to terms. To make an agreement with; decide the terms of a bargain.

To keep a term. To attend a term of study at a college or university.

Termagant. The name given by the Crusaders, and in mediæval romances, to an idol or deity that the SARACENS were popularly supposed to worship. He was introduced into the MORALITY PLAYS as a most violent and turbulent person in long, flowing Eastern robes, a dress that led to his acceptance as a woman, whence the name came to be applied to a shrewish, violently abusive VIRAGO. The origin of the word is uncertain.

"Twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant Scot [Douglas] had paid me scot and lot too.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, V, iv.

O'erdoing Termagant (Hamlet, III, ii). In old drama, the degree of rant was the measure of villainy. TERMAGANT and HEROD, being considered the beau ideal of all that is bad, were represented as settling everything by CLUB-LAW, and bawling so as to split the ears of the groundlings.

That beats Termagant. Your ranting, raging pomposity, or exaggeration, surpasses that of TERMAGANT of the old MORALITY PLAYS.

Terpsichore (têrp sik' ôr i). One of the nine MUSES of ancient Greece, the Muse of dancing and the dramatic chorus, and later of lyric poetry. Hence Terpsichorean, pertaining to dancing. She is usually represented seated, and holding a lyre.

Terra firma (Lat.). Dry land—in opposition to water; the continents as distinguished from islands. The Venetians so called the mainland of Italy under their sway, and the continental parts of America belonging to Spain were called by the same term.

Terrapin War (ter' a pin). An American name for the war with Britain of 1812–1814, so called because, through the blockade, the U.S.A. was shut up in its shell like a terrapin (a tide-water turtle).

Terrible, The. Ivan IV (or II) of Russia (1530, 1547–1584).

Terrier. A dog that "takes the earth", or unearths his prey (Lat. terra, earth); also formerly applied to the burrows of foxes, badgers, rabbits, etc.

A land-roll or list of lands belonging to an individual or corporation, especially the latter, is called a terrier (O. Fr. papier terrier, a register of the lord's tenants).

Terrier is also the popular name for a member of the Territorial Army, which under the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act (1907) superseded the old Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers on a territorial basis until its abolition in 1968.

Terror, The, or The Reign of Terror. See REIGN.

Terry Alts. One of the numerous secret societies of Irish insurrectionists similar to the Lady Clares and MOLLY MAGUIRES, etc. It was active in County Clare in the early 19th century. See WHITEBOYS.

Ter-Sanctus. See TRISAGION.

Tertiaries. Members of "a third order", an institution which began with the FRANCISCANS in the 13th century for lay folk who wished to strive for Christian perfection in their day-to-day life in accordance with the spirit and teaching of St. FRANCIS. The system spread to other Orders such as the DOMINICANS, AUGUSTINIANS, and CARMELITES. Tertiaries are obedient to a rule and take a solemn promise. There are also Regular Tertiaries who live in communities under vows and are fully "religious" in the technical sense. The name Third Order arises from the Friars and Nuns being classed as the First and Second Orders.

Tertium quid. A third party which shall be nameless; a third thing resulting from the combination of two things, but different from both. Fable has it that the expression originated with PYTHAGORAS, who, defining bipeds, said:

Sunt bipes homo, et avis, et tertium quid.

A man is a biped, so is a bird, and a third thing (which shall be nameless).

Iamblichus said this third thing was Pythagoras himself.

In chemistry, when two substances chemically unite, the new substance is called a tertium quid, as a neutral salt produced by the mixture of an acid and an alkali.

Terza Rima. An Italian verse-form in triplets, the second line rhyming with the first and third of the succeeding triplet. In the first triplet lines 1 and 3 rhyme, and in the last there is an extra line, rhyming with its second.

Dante's Divine Comedy is in this metre; it was introduced into ENGLAND by Sir Thomas Wyatt in the 16th century, and was largely employed by Shelley, as also by Byron in The Prophecy of Dante.

Test Acts. A name given to the various Acts of PARLIAMENT designed to exclude Roman Catholics, Protestant NONCONFORMISTS, and "disaffected persons" from public offices, etc. They include Acts of Abjuration, Allegiance, and Supremacy, the Corporation Act, 1661, the Act of Uniformity, 1662, as well as those specifically named Test Acts. Those named "Test Acts" were: (1) that of 1673 which insisted that all holders of civil and military office must be communicants of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND as well as taking the oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy; (2) that of 1678 which excluded all Roman Catholics, other than the Duke of York, from Parliament; (3) that for Scotland (1681) which made all state and municipal officials affirm their belief in the Protestant faith. These Acts were repealed in 1828. See also UNIVERSITY TESTS ACT.

Test Match. In CRICKET, one of the matches between selected national teams arranged by the International Conference, which replaced the Imperial Cricket Conference (1909-1965) after South Africa left the COMMONWEALTH (1961). See THE ASHES under ASHES.

England v. Australia. First played, 1876.

England v. South Africa. First played, 1888.

England v. West Indies. First played, 1928.

England v. New Zealand. First played, 1929.

England v. India. First played, 1932.

England v. Pakistan. First played, 1952.

Tester. A sixpenny piece; so-called from the teston or testoon (a shilling) first introduced by Henry VII. As the coinage depreciated, it later came to be applied to a sixpence. The teston took its name from the sovereign's head (Ital. testa) stamped on one side. Similarly the head canopy of a bed is called its tester.

Hold, there's a tester for thee.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. II, III, ii.

Testers are gone to Oxford, to study at Brasenose. When Henry VIII debased the silver testers, the alloy broke out in red pimples through the silver, giving the royal likeness in the coin a blotchy appearance; hence the punning proverb.

Testudo. See TORTOISE.

Tête-à-tête (Fr., head to head). A confidential conversation, a heart-to-heart talk.

Tête-de-mouton (Fr., sheep's head). A 17th-century head-dress, the hair being arranged in short, thick curls.

Tête du pont. The barbican or watchtower placed on the head of a drawbridge.

Tether. He has come to the end of his tether. He has come to the end of his resources; he has exhausted his fortune, etc. The reference is to a tethered animal which can only graze as far as the rope allows.

HORACE calls the end of life ultima linea rerum, the final goal, referring to the white chalk mark at the end of a race-course. Cp. BITTER END.

Tethys. A sea goddess, wife of OCEANUS; hence, the sea itself. She was the daughter of URANUS and GÆA, and mother of the OCEANIDES.

Tetragrammaton. A word of four letters, especially the Jewish name of the Deity, JHVH, which the Jews never pronounced but substituted the word ADONAI instead (usually rendered in the BIBLE as Lord). Its probable pronunciation was Yahweh and from the 16th century was corrupted into JEHOVAH by combining the vowels of Adonai with JHVH.

PYTHAGORAS called Deity a Tetrad or Tetracys, meaning the "four sacred letters". The Greek Zeus and θεος, in Latin Jove and Deus; Fr. Dieu, Ger. Gott, Sansk. Deva, Span. Dios, Scand. Odin, and our Lord are tetragrams.

Such was the sacred Tetragrammaton.

Things worthy silence must not be revealed.

DRYDEN: Britannia Rediviva, 197.

Tetrarch (tet'rank). Originally meaning the ruler of one of four parts of a region (Gr. tettares, four; archein, to rule), under the Roman Empire the term came to be applied to minor rulers, especially to the princes of Syria subject to the Roman Emperor.

Teucer. In the ILIAD, the son of Telamon, and stepbrother of AJAX; he went with the allied Greeks to the siege of TROY, and on his return was banished by his father for not avenging on ULYSSES the death of his brother.

Teutons. The name of an ancient tribe of northern Europe called by the Romans Teutones or Teutoni. The adjective Teutonic is also applied to the Germanic peoples generally and in the widest sense includes both Scandinavians and Anglo-Saxons.

Teutonic Cross. A CROSS potent, the badge of the order of TEUTONIC KNIGHTS. See POTENT.

Teutonic Knights. The third great military crusading Order which has its origin in the time of the Third CRUSADE. It developed from the provision of a hospital service by Germans at the siege of Acre (1190) which became the German Hospital of St. Mary at JERUSALEM. It was made a Knightly Order in 1198, thenceforward confined to those of noble birth. In 1229 they began the conquest of heathen Prussia and after 1291 their contact with the East ceased. They survived as a powerful and wealthy body until their disastrous defeat by the Poles and Lithuanians at Tannenburg in 1410. The Order lingered on until its suppression in 1809, but was revived in Austria in 1840 while under HABSBURG influence.

Texas Rangers. A constabulary force first organized in Texas in 1835 and much developed by General Sam Houston a few years later. They wore no uniform and especially proved their worth in 1870 against rustlers and raiders. Their resourcefulness in the saddle, their toughness, and colourful exploits have given them legendary fame.

Th (θ, theta). The sign given in the verdict of the AREOPAGUS of condemnation to death (THANATOS).

Thais (thā' is). The Athenian courtesan who, it is said, induced ALEXANDER THE GREAT, when excited with wine, to set fire to the palace of the Persian kings at Persepolis. After Alexander's death, she married Ptolemy Lagus, king of Egypt, by whom she had seven children.

The king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy;
Thais led the way to light him to his prey,
And, like another Helen, fired another Troy.
DRYDEN: Alexander's Feast, vi.

This is also the title of an historico-political novel (1890) by Anatole France, and of an opera by Massenet (1894) based upon it.

Thales. See WISE MEN OF GREECE.

Thalestris (thá les' tris). A queen of the AMAZONS, who went with 300 women to meet ALEXANDER THE GREAT, in the hope of raising a race of Alexanders.

Thalia (thá lí' á). One of the MUSES, who presided over comedy and pastoral poetry. She also favoured rural pursuits and is represented holding a comic mask and a shepherd's crook. Thalia is also the name of one of THE THREE GRACES (see under GRACE) or Charites.

Thames (temz). The second longest river in Britain, called Tamesis by the Romans, who based the name on the existing British name. At Oxford and upstream it is often called Isis, an artificial development from Tamesis.

He'll never set the Thames on fire.
He'll never make any figure in the world;
never do anything wonderful and print his footsteps on the sands of time. The popular explanation is that the word

Thames is a pun on the word temse, a corn-sieve; and that the parallel French locution He will never set the Seine on fire is a pun on seine, a drag-net; and these solutions are not tenable. There is a Latin saw, Tiberum accendere nequaquam potest, which is probably the fons et origo of other parallel sayings; and the Germans had Den Rhein anzünden (to set the Rhine on fire) as early as 1630.

Thammuz (thām' ūz). A Sumerian, Babylonian and Assyrian god who died every year and rose again in the spring. He is identified with the Babylonian MARDUK and the Greek ADONIS. In Ezek. viii, 14, reference is made to the heathen "women weeping for Tammuz".

Tammuz came next behind,
Whose annual wound on Lebanon allured
The Syrian damsels to lament his fate
In amorous ditties all a summer's day,
While smooth Adonis from his native rock
Ran purple to the sea, supposed with blood
Of Thammuz yearly wounded.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, I, 446.

Thamyris (thām' i ris). A Thracian bard mentioned by HOMER (Iliad, II, 595). He challenged the MUSES to a trial of skill, and, being overcome in the contest, was deprived by them of his sight and powers of song. He is represented with a broken lyre in his hand.

Blind Thamyris and blind Mæonides [Homer]
And Tiresias and Phineus, prophets old,

MILTON: Paradise Lost, II, 35.

Thanatos. The Greek personification of death, twin brother of Sleep (Hypnos). Hesiod says he was born of Night with no father.

Thane. The name given in Anglo-Saxon England to a class of soldiers and landholders ranking between the earl and the churl. The rank of thane could be obtained by a man of lower degree. After the Norman Conquest the word disappeared in ENGLAND, giving place to KNIGHT. In SCOTLAND, a thane ranked with an earl's son, holding his land direct from the king; the title was given also to the chief of a CLAN who became one of the king's barons.

Thanksgiving Day. An annual holiday in the U.S.A. usually held on the last Thursday in NOVEMBER and observed as an acknowledgement of the divine favours received during the year. It was first celebrated by the Plymouth Colony in 1621. After the Revolution, its observance became general and from 1863 it was annually recommended by the President. In 1941 it was fixed as a public holiday for the fourth Thursday in November. Pumpkin pies and turkey are part of the traditional fare.

That. Seven "thats" may follow each other, and make sense.

For be it known that we may safely write Or say that "that that" that that man wrote was right;

Nay, e'en that that that, that "that THAT" has followed,

Through six repeats, the grammar's rule has hallowed;

And that that that that that "that THAT" began
Repeated seven times is right, deny't who can.

My Lords (says he) with humble Submission,
That that I say is this; that That that, that gentleman has advanced is not That, that he should have proved to your Lordships. Spectator, No. 80.

And that's that! A colloquial way of emphatically and triumphantly making one's point, closing the argument, etc.

Thaumaturgus (thaw ma tēr' gus) (Gr., a wonder-worker). A miracle-worker; applied to saints and others who are reputed to have performed miracles, and especially Gregory, Bishop of Neo-Cæsarea, called Thaumaturgus (c. 213-c. 270) whose miracles included the moving of a mountain. St. BERNARD of Clairvaux (1090-1153) was called "The Thaumaturgus of the West".

Thé dansant. An afternoon tea party with dancing.

Thebes, called The Hundred-Gated, was not Thebes of Bœotia, but the chief town of the Thebaid, on the Nile in Upper Egypt, said to have extended over 23 miles of land. HOMER says out of each gate the Thebans could send forth 200 war-chariots.

The world's great empress on the Egyptian plain,
That spreads her conquests o'er a thousand states,
And pours her heroes through a hundred gates,
Two hundred horsemen and two hundred cars
From each wide portal issuing to the wars.

POPE: Iliad, I.

It is here that the vocal statue of MEMNON stood. The sound was caused by internal vibrations resulting from a split in the statue after an earthquake. Here too is the VALLEY OF THE KINGS, including the tomb of TUTANKHAMUN, the Temple of Luxor and those of Karnak. It is now a favourite tourist centre.

The Seven against Thebes. An expedition in Greek legend fabled to have taken place against Thebes of Bœotia before the TROJAN WAR. The Seven were the Argive chiefs ADRASTUS, Polynices, Tydeus, Amphiarus, Hippomedon, Capaneus, and Parthenopæus.

When ÆDIPUS abdicated his two sons agreed to reign alternate years; but at the expiration of the first year, the elder, Eteocles, refused to give up the throne, whereupon Polynices, the younger brother, induced the six chiefs to espouse his cause. The allied army laid siege to Thebes, but without success, and all the heroes perished except Adrastus. Subsequently, seven sons of the chiefs, resolved to avenge their fathers' deaths, marched against the city, took it, and placed Terpander, one of their number, on the throne. These are known as the Epigoni (Gr., descendants). The Greek tragic poets ÆSCHYLUS and Euripides dramatized the legend.

Theban Bard, or Eagle, The. PINDAR, born at Thebes (c. 522-443 B.C.).

Theban Legion, The. Another name for the THUNDERING LEGION, which was raised in the Thebaid of Egypt, led by St. Maurice.

Theban Sphinx. See SPHINX.

Thecla, St. (thek' lā). One of the most famous saints of the 1st century, the first woman martyr. All that is known of her is from the Acts of Paul and Thecla, pronounced apocryphal by Pope Gelasius. According to the legend, she was born of a noble family at Iconium and was converted by St. PAUL.

Theist, Deist, Atheist, Agnostic. A theist believes there is a God who made and governs all creation; Christians, Jews, and Mohammedans are included among theists.

A deist believes there is a God who created all things, but does not believe in His superintendence and government. He thinks the Creator implanted in all things certain immutable laws, called the Laws of Nature, which act per se, as a watch acts without the supervision of its maker. He does not believe in the doctrine of the TRINITY, nor in a divine revelation.

The atheist disbelieves even the existence of a God. He thinks matter is eternal, and what we call "creation" is the result of natural laws.

The agnostic believes only what is knowable. He rejects revelation and the doctrine of the Trinity as "past human understanding". He is neither theist, deist, nor atheist, as all these subscribe to doctrines that are incapable of scientific proof.

Thellusson Act (thel' u son). The 39th and 40th George III, cap. 98. An Act (1800) to prevent testators from leaving their property to accumulate for more than 21 years. It was passed in reference to the will of Peter Thellusson, a London banker who died in 1797 and left £600,000 and £4,500 a year to accumulate for the benefit of his eldest great-grandson after the death of all his sons and grandsons. The last grandson died in 1856, and the expense of the legal actions that followed swallowed up all the accumulated interest, so that Thellusson's eldest son's eldest grandson received barely the amount of the original legacy.

Theme song. A song which re-occurs during the course of a musical play or film which generally reflects the mood or theme of the production.

Themis. A daughter of URANUS and GÆA and a wife of JUPITER, mother of the Horæ and Parcæ. With Jupiter she presides over law and order. She also is protector of hospitality and the oppressed and has oracular powers.

Theocritus. A Greek poet of Syracuse (3rd century B.C.), the creator of pastoral poetry, whose verse was imitated by VIRGIL.

Theodoric (thē od' ō rik). King of the Ostrogoths (c. 454-526), who became celebrated in German legend as DIETRICH OF BERN, and also has a place in the Norse romances and the Nibelungen Saga. He invaded Italy, slew Odoacer (493), and became sole ruler.

Theon (thē' on). A satirical poet of ancient ROME, noted for his mordant writings. Hence Theon's tooth, the bite of an ill-natured or carping critic.

Dente Theonino circumroditur (HORACE: I Epist. xviii, 82), is slandered, calumniated.

Theophany. See TIFFANY.

Theosophy (Gr., the wisdom of God). The name adopted by the Theosophical Society (founded in 1875 by Mme Blavatsky, Mrs. Besant, Col. Olcott, and others) to define their religious or philosophical system, which aims at the knowledge of God by means of intuition and contemplative illumination, or by direct communion. Esoteric Buddhism is another name for it; and its adherents claim that the doctrines of the great world religions are merely the exoteric expressions of their own esoteric traditions.

The Theosophist is a man who, whatever be his race, creed, or condition, aspires to reach this height of wisdom and beatitude by self-development.

OLCOTT: Theosophy, p. 144 (1885).

The name was formerly applied to the philosophical system of Boehme (d. 1624).

Théot, Catherine. See under CATHERINE.

Theramenes. See HE WEARS THE SANDALS OF THERAMENES under SANDAL.

Therapeutæ (thēr a pū' tē) (Gr., servants, ministers). A sect of Jewish ascetics in Egypt described in Philo's De Vita Contemplativa. They lived in a community near Alexandria run on monastic lines which was developed long before the rise of Christianity. Cp. ESSENES.

Thermidor (thēr' mi dōr). The eleventh month of the French Republican CALENDAR, 20 July-18 August. So named from Gr. therme, heat; doron, a gift.

Thermidorians. The French Revolutionaries who took part in the COUP D'ÉTAT which effected the fall of Robespierre, on 9th Thermidor of the second Republican Year (27 July 1794), thus ending the REIGN OF TERROR.

Thermopylæ (thēr mop' i li). The famous pass from Thessaly to Locris, only 25 ft. wide at its narrowest part, celebrated for its heroic defence (480 B.C.) by LEONIDAS, with some 300 Spartans and 700 Thespians against XERXES and the Persian host. Eventually, treachery allowed the Persians to get to the rear of the Greeks and the Spartan king and his band were all slain. The pass took its name from the hot baths nearby.

Thermopylæ of America. See ALAMO.

Thersites (thēr sī' tēz). A deformed, scurrilous officer in the Greek army at the siege of TROY. He was always railing at the chiefs; hence the name is applied to any dastardly, malevolent, impudent railer against the powers that be. ACHILLES felled him to the earth with his fist and killed him.

In SHAKESPEARE'S Troilus and Cressida (I, iii) he is "A slave whose gall coins slanders like a mint."

Theseus (thē' sūs). The chief hero of Attica in ancient Greek legend; son of ÆGEUS, and the centre of countless exploits. Among them are the capture of the Marathonian bull, the slaying of the MINOTAUR, his war against the AMAZONS, and the hunting of the CALYDONIAN BOAR (see under BOAR). He was eventually murdered by Lycomedes in Scyros. See SINIS.

Theseus is also the name of the Duke of Athens in Chaucer's Knight's Tale. He married Hippolita, and as he returned home with his bride, and Emily her sister, was accosted by a crowd of female suppliants who complained of Creon, King of Thebes. The duke forthwith set out for Thebes, slew Creon, and took the city by assault. Many captives fell into his hands, amongst whom were the two knights, Palamon and ARSITE.

SHAKESPEARE gives the same name to the Duke of Athens in A Midsummer Night's Dream.

Thespians (thes' pi ánz). Actors; so called from Thespius, an Attic poet of the 6th century B.C., reputed to be the father of Greek TRAGEDY.

Thespius, the first professor of our art,
 At country wakes sang ballads from a cart.
 DRYDEN: Prologue to Sophonisba.

Thestylis (thes' ti lis). A stock poetic name for a rustic maiden; from a young female slave of that name in the Idylls of THEOCRITUS.

And then in haste her bower she leaves,
 With Thestylis to bind the sheaves.
 MILTON: L'Allegro, 87.

Thetis (thé' tis). The chief of the NEREIDS of Greek legend. By Peleus she was the mother of ACHILLES.

Thetis's hair-stone. A fancy name given to pieces of rock-crystal enclosing hair-like filaments.

Thick. It's a bit thick. More than one can be expected to tolerate.

Thick 'un. Slang for a SOVEREIGN.

Those two are very thick. They are very good friends, on excellent terms with one another. As thick as thieves is a similar saying.

Through thick and thin. Despite all difficulties; under any conditions; unwaveringly.

A griesly foster forth did rush . . .
 Through thick and thin, both over bank and bush
 In hope her to attain by hook or crook.
 SPENSER: Faerie Queene, III, i, 17.

To be thick. Not to be very bright or intelligent; to be slow in the uptake.

To lay it on thick. To flatter extravagantly; also to blame or punish excessively.

Thick-skinned. Not sensitive; not irritated by rebukes or slanders. Thin-skinned, on the contrary, means impatient of reproof or censure, having skin so thin that it is an annoyance to be touched.

Thief, The Penitent. See DYSMAS.

Thieves' Latin. Slang; gibberish.

Thimble. From O.E. thymel, a thumb-stall; so called because it was originally worn on the thumb, as is the "thimble" of a sailmaker's palm.

Just a thimble or thimbleful. A very little drop, just a taste—usually with reference to spirits.

'Tis true to her cottage still they came . . .
 And never swallow'd a thimble the less
 Of something the Reader is left to guess.
 HOOD: A Tale of a Trumpet, 130.

Thimble-rigging. A form of cheating, carried on with three thimbles and a pea, formerly mainly practised on or about race-courses. A pea is put on a table, and the manipulator places three thimbles over it in succession, and then, setting them on the table, asks you to say under which thimble the pea is. You are sure to guess wrong.

The term thimble-rigging is used allusively of any kind of mean cheating or JIGGERY-POKERY.

Thin. It's a lot too thin! Said of an excuse, explanation, story, etc., that sounds plausible but is quite unacceptable. The idea is that it is so thin as to be transparent—it is easily seen through.

The thin red line. See under LINE.

The thin end of the wedge. An action, innovation, etc., of apparently small consequence which may lead to major undesirable developments. The reference is to wedges used for splitting blocks of stone or wood.

Thin-skinned. See THICK-SKINNED.

Thing. The Old Norse word for the assembly of the people, PARLIAMENT, etc. It is etymologically the same word as our thing (an object), the original meaning of which was a discussion (from thingian, to discuss), hence a cause, an object.

The Parliament of Norway is still called the Storting which divides itself into the Lagting and the Odelsting.

Just the thing, or the very thing. Just what I was wanting; exactly what will meet the case.

A poor thing. A person (or, sometimes an inanimate object) that is regarded with pity or disparagement. Touchstone's remark about Audrey—"An ill-favoured thing, sir, but mine own" (SHAKESPEARE: As You Like It, V, iv)—is frequently misquoted, "A poor thing, but mine own", when employed in half-ironical disparagement of one's own work.

Old thing. A familiar mode of address between friends.

One's things. One's minor belongings, especially clothes, or personal luggage.

The thing. The proper thing to do; as, "It's not the thing to play leapfrog down Bond Street in a top-hat and spats."

To do the handsome thing. To treat generously.

To know a thing or two. To be sharp, shrewd, not easily taken in; knowing, experienced.

To make a good thing of. To make a success of; to develop into something worthwhile; to make a profit out of.

You can have too much of a good thing. "Enough is as good as a feast."

People may have too much of a good thing—
Full as an egg of wisdom thus I sing.

PETER PINDAR:

The Gentleman and His Wife, i.

Third. See also THREE.

Third Degree. The highest degree, that of Master Mason, in British FREEMASONRY. In U.S.A. the term is applied to the use of exhaustive questioning and cross-questioning by the police in an endeavour to extort a confession or compromising information from a criminal, accomplice, or witness.

Third Estate. See under ESTATE.

Third Order. See TERTIARIES.

Third Republic. The French Republic established in 1870 after the capitulation of NAPOLEON III at Sedan (4 September). It came to an end with another French capitulation to Germany in 1940, when a collaborationist government was set up under Marshal Pétain at VICHY.

Thirteen. It is said that the origin of sitting down 13 at a table being deemed unlucky is because, at a banquet in VALHALLA, LOKI once intruded, making 13 guests, and BALDER was slain.

In Christian countries, the superstition was confirmed by the LAST SUPPER of Christ and His Twelve APOSTLES.

Addison, On Popular Superstitions (Spectator) says:

I remember I was once in a mixed assembly that was full of noise and mirth, when on a sudden an old woman unluckily observed there were thirteen of us in company. This remark struck a panic terror into several who were present, inasmuch that one or two of the ladies were going to leave the room; but a friend of mine, taking notice that one of our female companions was big with child, affirmed there were fourteen in the room, and that, instead of portending one of the company should die, it plainly forebode one of them should be born. Had not my friend found this expedient to break the omen, I question not but half the women in the company would have fallen sick that night.

It is traditionally regarded as unlucky for a ship to begin a voyage on the 13th, especially if it happens to be a FRIDAY.

Thirteenpence-halfpenny. A hangman. So called because thirteenspence-halfpenny was at one time his wages for hanging a man.

Thirty. The Thirty Tyrants. See under TYRANT.

The Thirty Years War. The wars in Germany which began in Bohemia in 1618 and were terminated by the peace of Westphalia in 1648. Traditionally regarded as a struggle initially between German PROTESTANTS and CATHOLICS, which was exploited by foreign powers, it was more essentially part of a contest between BOURBON and HABSBURG dynastic interests combined with constitutional struggles inside the Habsburg Empire waged under the cloak of religion. The idea that Germany was universally devastated is largely a myth.

The Thirty-nine Articles. The Articles of Religion in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER largely defining the CHURCH OF ENGLAND's position in certain matters of dogma which were in dispute at the time. They were first issued in 1563, based on the Forty-two Articles of 1553, and revised in 1571. Clergy had to subscribe to them, but since 1865 a more general affirmation was substituted.

Thirty-six-Line Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

A man at thirty must be either a fool or a physician. A saying attributed by Tacitus (Annals, VI, xlv) to the Emperor Tiberius, who died at the age of 78 in A.D. 37 (Plutarch gives the story, but changes the age to 60). The idea seems to be that if a man has not learned to look after his health by the time he is 30 he must be a fool.

Thisbe. See PYRAMUS.

Thistle. The heraldic emblem of SCOTLAND which seems to have been adopted by James III (1451, 1460–1488), possibly as a symbol of defence. The motto Nemo me impune lacessit, "Nobody touches (or provokes) me with impunity", first appeared on the coinage of James VI (1566, 1567–1603).

Thistles, especially "Our Lady's Thistle", are said to be a cure for stitch in the side. According to the doctrine of signatures, Nature has labelled every plant, and the prickles of the thistle tell us that the plant is efficacious for prickles or the stitch. The species called Silybum marianum, we are told, owes the white markings on its leaves to milk from Our Lady's breast, some of which fell thereon and left a white mark behind.

The "Most Ancient" Order of the Thistle. This Scottish Order of knighthood (ranking second to the Order of the GARTER) is not very ancient, being instituted by James VII and II in 1687. It is inaccurately said to have been "re-founded" then; legend has it that it was founded by Achaius, King of the Scots in 787. It fell into abeyance after 1688 but was revived by QUEEN ANNE in 1703 and now consists of 16 KNIGHTS (besides royalty). Its officers are the DEAN, the secretary, the LYON KING OF ARMS, and the Gentleman Usher of the Green Rod. Its insignia comprise the Badge (an elongated eight-pointed star with a figure of St. ANDREW and his CROSS), Star, Collar of golden thistles and sprigs of rue, Mantle, and dark green ribbon.

It is sometimes called the Order of St. Andrew.

Thomas. St. Thomas. The Apostle who doubted (John xx, 25); hence the phrase, a doubting Thomas, applied to a sceptic.

The story told of him in the Apocryphal Acts of St. Thomas is that he was deputed to go as a missionary to India, and, on refusing, Christ appeared and sold him as a slave to an Indian prince who was visiting JERUSALEM. He was taken to India, where he baptized the prince and many others, and was finally martyred at Mylapur.

Another legend has it that Gundaphorus, an Indian king, gave him a large sum of money to build a palace. St. Thomas spent it on the poor, "thus creating a superb palace in heaven". On account of this he is the patron SAINT of masons and architects, and his symbol is a builder's square.

Another story is that he once saw a huge beam of timber floating on the sea near the coast, and the king unsuccessfully endeavouring, with men and elephants, to haul it ashore. St. Thomas desired leave to use it in building a church, and, his request being granted, he dragged it easily ashore with a piece of packthread.

His feast day is 3 July. His relics are now said to be at Ortona in the Abruzzi.

Christians of St. Thomas. According to tradition, St. THOMAS founded the Christian churches of Malabar and then moved on to Mylapur (Madras), thus Christian communities were there to welcome the Portuguese when Vasco da Gama arrived in 1498. They called themselves "Christians of St. Thomas" and may be descendants of Christians converted by NESTORIAN missions, although the claim that they were evangelized by St. Thomas is not entirely improbable.

Thomasing. Collecting small sums of money or obtaining drink from employers on St. Thomas's Day. In the City of London, every one of the Common Council has to be elected or re-elected on St. Thomas's Day, which used to be observed on 21 December.

Thomas Aquinas, St. (c. 1225-1274). DOMINICAN scholastic philosopher and theologian, of outstanding authority and intellectual distinction among his contemporaries, and whose teachings have been a major influence on the doctrines of the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. He was the youngest son of Count Landulf of Aquino (midway between ROME and Naples) and became a Dominican in the face of strong family opposition. He was a pupil of Albertus Magnus and subsequently taught at Paris, Rome, Bologna, and Pisa. First nicknamed the DUMB OX, he became Doctor Angelicus and "the Fifth Doctor of the Church". Among his many writings his Summa Theologica is his classic work. He drew a clear distinction between Faith and Reason and was considerably influenced by the philosophy of ARISTOTLE. He was canonized in 1323 and his feast day is 28 January.

Thomists. Followers of St. THOMAS AQUINAS (c. 1225-1274). They were opponents of the Scotists, or followers of Duns Scotus (see DUNCE).

Scotists and Thomists now in peace remain.
POPE: Essay on Criticism, 444.

Thomas the Rhymer. See under RHYME.

Thone, or Thonis. In Greek mythology, the governor of a province of Egypt to which, it is said by post-Homeric poets, PARIS took HELEN, who was given by Polydamnia, wife to Thone, the drug NEPENTHES, to make her forget her sorrows.

Not that nepenthes which the wife of Thone
In Egypt gave to low-lorn Helena,
Is of such power to stir up joy as this.
MILTON: Comus, 695-7.

Thopas, Rime of Sir (thō' pās). A burlesque on contemporary metrical romances, told as Chaucer's own tale in the Canterbury Tales.

Thor (thôr). Son of WODEN, god of war, and the second god in the PANTHEON of the ancient Scandinavians—their VULCAN, and god of thunder. He had three principal possessions, a Hammer (Mjólnir), typifying thunder and lightning, and having the virtue of returning to him after it was thrown; a Belt (Meginjardir) which doubled his strength; and Iron Gloves to aid him in throwing his hammer.

He was a god of the household, and of peasants, and was married to Sif, a typical peasant woman. His name is still perpetuated in our THURSDAY, and in a number of place-names such as Thorsby (Cumberland), Torthorwald (Dumfries), and Thurso (Caithness).

Thorn. The Crown of Thorns. That with which Our Saviour was crowned in mockery (Matt. xxvii, 29); hence sometimes used of a very special affliction with which one is unjustly burdened.

Calvin (Admonitio de Reliquiis) gives a long list of places claiming to possess one or more of the thorns which composed the Saviour's crown. See GLASTON-BURY.

Glastonbury Thorn. See GLASTON-BURY.

A thorn in the flesh. A source of constant irritation, annoyance, or affliction; said of objectionable and parasitical acquaintances, obnoxious conditions, of a "SKELETON in the cupboard", etc. There was a sect of the PHARISEES which used to insert thorns in the borders of their gaberdines to prick their legs in walking and make them bleed. The phrase is taken from St. PAUL's reference to some physical complaint or misfortune (II Cor. xii, 7).

On thorns. In a state of painful anxiety and suspense; "on pins"; fearful that something is going wrong. Cp. TENTERHOOKS.

Thorough. The name given to the methods of government associated with Stafford and Laud, especially the former's policy in IRELAND (1632-1639). It was characterized by firm, efficient and orderly government, but was also associated with corruption and tyrannical methods. Thorough and thorough were then interchangeable terms.

Thoroughbred. Of pure or unmixed breed, especially said of horses and cattle. A thoroughbred is a racehorse of English breed remotely derived by crossing with Arab and other strains.

Thoth. The Egyptian lunar god, usually with the head of an IBIS but sometimes that of a baboon. His chief centre was Hermopolis (modern Ashmunein) and he was identified with HERMES by the Greeks. He was the master over writing, languages, laws, annals, calculations, etc., and patron of scribes and magicians. He made the CALENDAR and his control over HIEROGLYPHS and divine words enhanced his magical powers. He acted as secretary of the gods. At the judgment after death he weighed the heart.

Thousand. Thousand and One Nights. See ARABIAN NIGHTS.

He's one in a thousand. Said of a man who is specially distinguished by his excellent qualities; similarly, a wife in a thousand, a perfect wife, or one that exactly suits the speaker's ideas of what a wife should be.

Thrash. To thrash out. To decide and settle by discussion and argument the points at issue. A METAPHOR from the threshing of corn to separate the grain from the chaff.

Thread. The thread of destiny. That on which destiny depends; the imaginary thread or span of life provided by the FATES.

The Triple Thread. Brahminism. The ancient Brahmins wore a symbol of three threads, reaching from the right shoulder to the left. João de Faria says that their religion sprang from fishermen, who left the charge of the temples to their successors on the condition of their wearing some threads of their nets in remembrance of their vocation.

To lose the thread. To lose the train of thought or issue of argument, etc., owing to a digression, interruption, mental aberration, etc.

To pick up the threads. To resume one's line of argument, etc., also to get back into the way of things after absence, illness, etc.

Threadneedle Street. The street in the City of LONDON leading from Bishops-gate to the BANK of England. The name first appears as Three needle Street in 1598, and previously it seems to have been called Broad Street, forming part of the present Old Broad Street. The name is usually said to derive from a sign-board with three needles on it, or from the arms of the Needle-makers' Company; but it may derive from the children's game of thread-the-needle having been played there.

The Old Lady of Threadneedle Street. A synonym for the BANK of England, which stands in this street. The term dates from the late 18th century, and there is a caricature by Gilray, dated 22 May 1797, entitled The Old Lady in Threadneedle Street in Danger, which refers to the temporary stopping of cash payments, 26 February 1797, and to the issue of one-pound banknotes on 4 March of the same year.

The directors of the Bank of England were called Old Ladies of Threadneedle Street by William Cobbett, because, like Mrs. PARTINGTON, they tried with their broom to sweep back the Atlantic waves of national progress.

Three. PYTHAGORAS calls three the perfect number, expressive of "beginning, middle, and end", wherefore he makes it a symbol of Deity.

A TRINITY is by no means confined to the CHRISTIAN creed. The BRAHMINS represent their god with three heads; the world was supposed by the ancients to be under the rule of three gods, viz. JUPITER (HEAVEN), NEPTUNE (sea), and PLUTO (HADES). Jove is represented with three-forked lightning, Neptune with a trident, and Pluto with a three-headed dog. The FATES are three, the FURIES three, the GRACES three (see under GRACE), the HARPIS three (see HARPY), the SIBYLLINE BOOKS three times three (of which only three survived); the fountain from which HYLAS drew water was presided over by three NYMPHS; the MUSES were three times three; in Scandinavian mythology we hear of "the Mysterious Three", viz. "Har" (High), "Jafenhar" (Equally High), and "Thridi" (the third), who sat on three thrones in ASGARD.

Man is threefold (body, mind, and spirit); the world is threefold (earth, sea, and air); the enemies of man are threefold (the world, the flesh, and the DEVIL); the Christian graces are threefold (Faith, Hope, and Charity); the Kingdoms of Nature are threefold (animal, vegetable, and mineral); the CARDINAL colours are three in number (RED, YELLOW, and BLUE), etc. Cp. NINE, which is three times three.

Rule of Three. The method of finding the fourth term of a proportion when three are given, the numbers being such that the first is to the second as the third is to the fourth. By multiplying the second and third terms together and dividing the result by the first, the fourth term is arrived at.

Three acres and a cow. A phrase particularly associated with Jesse Collings (1831-1920), and his advocacy of radical agrarian policies in the 1880s and the small holdings movement in general.

The Three Bashaws of Somerset House. See under BASHAW.

Three Choirs Festival. Musical festival for the performance of sacred music given since 1724 by the choir of the cathedrals of Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford, held in each of the three cities in rotation.

Three Emperors. The Battle of the Three Emperors. The Battle of Austerlitz (2 December 1805), when the French Emperor NAPOLEON routed the Emperors of Austria and Russia, all three being personally present on the field.

The League of the Three Emperors. The Dreikaiserbund of 1872 whereby the Emperors of Germany, Austria, and Russia agreed to co-operate in maintaining the STATUS QUO in Europe, and a formal treaty was signed at Berlin in 1881 on policy with regard to possible war between one of them and a fourth Great Power, and also on matters in the Near East. The treaty was renewed in 1884, but terminated in 1888.

The Three Estates of the Realm. See ESTATES OF THE REALM.

The Three F's. Fair rent, free sale, and fixity of tenure, which were demanded by the Irish LAND LEAGUE and conceded by Gladstone's Land Act of 1881.

Three Kings' Day. EPIPHANY or Twelfth Day, designed to commemorate the visit of the "three kings" or Wise Men of the East to the infant Jesus. See MAGI.

Three-Mile Limit. The usual limit of territorial waters around their coasts claimed by maritime states including Great Britain and the U.S.A. Some states claim much wider jurisdiction and disputes over territorial waters are not infrequent.

The Three Musketeers. Athos, Porthos, and Aramis, the three heroes of Dumas's novels The Three Musketeers, 1844; Twenty Years After, 1845; and Vicomte de Bragelonne, 1848-1850. The Musketeers were a mounted guard of gentlemen in the service of the kings of France from 1661 until the Revolution caused their abolition in 1791. They formed two companies, called the Grey and the Black from the colour of their horses. The uniform was scarlet, hence their quarters were known as La Maison Rouge. In peacetime the Musketeers formed the king's bodyguard, but in war they fought on foot or on horseback with the army. Their ranks included many Scots, either JACOBITE exiles or mere soldiers of fortune.

The Three R's. See under R.

The Three Tailors of Tooley Street. See under TAILOR.

The Three Tongues. Those in which the inscription on the Cross was written, viz. Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. In the MIDDLE AGES it was considered that a thorough knowledge of these was necessary before one could begin to understand theology.

A three-cornered fight. A parliamentary (or other) contest in which there are three participants.

A three-decker. Properly, in the days of sail, a warship having three gun decks. Also applied to other triplicates arranged in tiers such as the old-fashioned pulpit, reading-desk, and clerk's desk arranged one above the other; and to the three-volume novel—the usual way of publishing the 19th-century novel.

In the early 'eighties there had never been fewer than 190 three-deckers published annually in London; in 1888 for the first time the figure dropped to 165, in 1895 it was 52, in 1897 four.

S. NOWELL-SMITH:
The House of Cassell, ch. viii.

The name is also given to a sandwich with three slices of bread.

Three-field system. The system of crop rotation under the old OPEN-FIELD SYSTEM of agriculture which persisted from manorial times until well into the reign of George III. The three open arable fields were successively used for wheat or rye, then peas, beans, barley, oats, etc., and left fallow for the third season.

The three-legged mare. In obsolete slang, the gallows, which at TYBURN was a triple erection in triangular plan.

Three score years and ten. A ripe old age—not necessarily (in allusive use) exactly 70 years. The reference is to Ps. xc, 10:

The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labour and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away.

Three-tailed Bashaw. See under BASHAW.

Three sheets in the wind. See SHEET.

To give one three times three. To give him a rousing ovation, cheer after cheer.

We three. "Did you never see the picture of We Three?" asks Sir Andrew Ague-cheek (SHAKESPEARE: Twelfth Night, II, iii)—not meaning himself, Sir Toby Belch, and the clown, but referring to a PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGN of Two LOGGERHEADS, with the inscription, "We three logger-heads be," the third being the spectator. "When shall we three meet again?"—the title of a picture of two asses—is a similar "joke".

Throat. Clergyman's throat. Chronic inflammation of the pharynx, to which clergymen and others who habitually overstrain the vocal organs are specially liable.

To cut one's own throat. Figuratively, to adopt a policy, or take action that ruins one's own chances, plans, etc. Similarly, to cut one another's throat is to ruin one another by excessive competition.

To have a bone in one's throat. A pretended excuse for being unwilling to talk.

To jump down a person's throat. To interrupt and affront him, suddenly, sharply, and decisively.

To lie in one's throat. To lie most outrageously, well knowing that you are lying, and meaning to do so.

To ram, or thrust down a person's throat. To force an opinion or point of view upon another which he may be reluctant to accept or "swallow"; to assert insistently without allowing an opportunity for reply or being prepared to listen.

The words stuck in his throat. See under WORD.

Throgmorton Street. The financial world at large, or the Stock Exchange, which is situated in this narrow LONDON street. So named from Sir Nicholas Throgmorton (1515-1571), head of the ancient Warwickshire family, and ambassador to France in the reign of Elizabeth I.

Throne, The. A comprehensive name for the office of King, e.g. The throne is above party politics.

The Speech from the Throne. See QUEEN'S SPEECH.

Thrones, Principalities, and Powers. According to Dionysius the Areopagite, three of the nine orders of ANGELS. These names or their linguistic counterparts occur frequently in Jewish-Christian writings around New Testament times.

The host of the heavens and all the holy ones above, and the host of God . . . all the angels of power, and all the angels of principalities.
Enoch vi, 10.

Through. See THOROUGH.

Throw. To throw a spanner in the works. To deliberately sabotage a plan or enterprise or spoil a scheme by creating difficulties, obstructions, etc., designed to promote failure, as some machinery can be wrecked by literally throwing a spanner or a piece of metal into moving parts.

To throw away one's money. To spend it carelessly, recklessly, extravagantly.

To throw back. To revert to ancestral traits; a throw-back is one who does this. "To throw back at someone" is to retort.

To throw good money after bad. Having already lost money on a scheme, investment or project, to continue to spend more on what is bound to result in loss.

To throw in one's hand. To abandon a project; to give up. A METAPHOR from card-playing.

To throw oneself on someone. To commit oneself to his protection, favour, mercy, etc.

To throw the helve after the hatchet. See HELVE.

To throw to the wolves. See under WOLF.

To throw up the sponge. See SPONGE.

Thrums. The fringe of warp threads left when the web has been cut off; weaver's ends and fag-ends of carpet, used for common rugs.

Thug

Thread and thrum. Everything, good and bad together.

O Fates, come, come, cut thread and thrum;
Quail, crush, conclude and quell!

SHAKESPEARE:

A Midsummer Night's Dream, V, i.

The town featured by Sir James Barrie in A Window in Thrums (1889) is Kirriemuir, Forfarshire, his birthplace.

Thug. A worshipper of KALI, who practised thuggee, the strangling of human victims in the name of religion. Robbery of the victim provided the means of livelihood. They were also called Phansigars (Noose operators) from the method employed. Vigorous suppression was begun by Lord William Bentinck in 1828, but the fraternity did not become completely extinct for another 50 years or so.

In common parlance the word is used for any violent "tough".

Thule. The name given by the ancients to an island, or point of land, six days sail north of Britain, and considered by them to be the extreme northern limit of the world. The name is first found in the account by Polybius (c. 150 B.C.) of the voyage made by Pytheas in the late 4th century B.C. Pliny says, "It is an island in the Northern Ocean discovered by Pytheas, after sailing six days from the Orcaades." Others, like Camden, consider it to be Shetland, in which opinion they agree with Marinus, and the descriptions of Ptolemy and Tacitus; and still others that it was some part of the coast of Norway. The etymology of the word is unknown.

Ultima Thule. The end of the world; the last extremity.

Tibi serviat Ultima Thule.

VIRGIL: Georgics, I, 30.

Thumb. In the ancient Roman combats, when a GLADIATOR was vanquished it rested with the spectators to decide whether he should be slain or not. If they wished him to live, they shut up their thumbs in their fists (pollice compresso favor judicabatur); if to be slain they turned out their thumbs. See Juvenal, iii, 36; Horace, I Epist. xviii, 66.

Influenced by the rabble's bloody will,
With thumbs bent back they popularly kill.

DRYDEN: Third Satire of Juvenal.

Our popular saying Thumbs up! expressive of pleasure or approval is probably a development from this custom.

Tom Thumb. See under TOM.

Every honest miller has a thumb of gold. Even an honest miller grows rich with what he filches; for he simply cannot help some of the flour that ought to go into the loaf sticking to his thumb! Chaucer says of his miller:

Wel koude he stelen corn and tollen thries,
And yet he hadde a thombe of gold, pardee.

Canterbury Tales: Prologue, 562.

The pricking of one's thumb. In popular superstition, a portent of evil. The Second Witch in SHAKESPEARE'S Macbeth (IV, i) says:

By the pricking of my thumbs
Something wicked this way comes.

And Macbeth enters.

Another proverb says, My little finger told me that. When your ears tingle it is to indicate that someone is speaking about you; when a sudden fit of shivering occurs, it is because someone is treading over the place which is to form your grave; when the eye twitches, it indicates the visit of a friend; when the palm itches it shows that a present will shortly be received; and when the bones ache a storm is prognosticated. Sudden pains and prickings are the warnings of evil on the road; sudden glows and pleasurable sensations are the couriers to tell us of joy close at hand.

In ancient ROME, the augurs (see AUGURY) took special notice of the palpitation of the heart, the flickering of the eye, and the pricking of the thumb. In regard to the last, if the pricking was on the left hand it was considered a very bad sign, indicating mischief at hand.

Rule of thumb. A rough, guesswork measure; practice or experience, as distinguished from theory; in allusion to the use of the thumb for rough measurements.

Thumb index. Grooves cut in the pages of a book showing initial letters or other particulars to enable the reader to find a reference easily.

Thumb-nail. Used attributively of various things, especially sketches, portraits, and so on, that are on a very small scale.

To bite one's thumb at one. To insult him. Formerly a way of expressing defiance and contempt by snapping the finger or putting the thumb in the mouth. Both these acts are termed a FICO. Cp. HE BIT HIS GLOVE under GLOVE.

I will bite my thumb at them; which is a disgrace to them, if they bear it.

SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, I, i.

To thumb a lift. To ask for or to "scrounge" a ride from a passing vehicle by holding out the hand with the thumb pointing upwards and moving in the direction of intended travel.

To thumb the nose. To COCK A SNOOK.
To twiddle one's thumbs. To sit in a state of bored inactivity, often against one's inclination; to be wasting time or to have to waste one's time. An allusion to the habit at such times, of sitting with the hands interlaced in one's lap idly rotating the thumbs round each other.

Under one's thumb. Under the influence or power of the person named.

Thumbikins, Thumbscrew. An instrument of torture used largely by the INQUISITION, whereby the thumbs are compressed between two bars of iron, by means of a screw. William Carstares (1649-1715) was the last person put to the torture in Britain; as the Law of ENGLAND would not permit torture, he was sent by the PRIVY COUNCIL for examination in Edinburgh, to elicit the names of the accomplices in the RYE HOUSE PLOT.

Thunder. Used figuratively of any loud noise, also of vehement denunciations or threats, as, "the thunders of the VATICAN", meaning the anathemas and denunciations of the POPE.

THOR was the Scandinavian god of thunder, and JUPITER in Roman mythology; hence Dryden's allusion to the inactivity of Louis XIV:

And threatening France, placed like a painted Jove,
 Kept idle thunder in his lifted hand,
Annus Mirabilis, XXXIX.

Sons of Thunder. See BOANERGES.

To steal one's thunder. To forestall him; or to adopt his own special methods as one's own. The phrase comes from the anecdote of John Dennis (1657-1734), the critic and playwright who invented an effective device for producing stage thunder for his play Appius and Virginia. The play was a failure and was withdrawn, but shortly afterwards Dennis heard his thunder used in a performance of Macbeth. "My God," he exclaimed, "The villains will play my thunder but not my plays!"

Thunderbolt. A missile or mass of heated matter that was formerly supposed to be discharged from thunder-clouds during a storm; used figuratively of an irresistible blow, a sudden and overwhelming shock. Cp. A BOLT FROM THE BLUE under BOLT.

JUPITER was depicted by the ancients as a man seated on a throne, holding a sceptre in his left hand and thunderbolts in his right.

Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts;
 Dash him to pieces!

SHAKESPEARE: Julius Cæsar, IV, iii.

The Thunderbolt of Italy. Gaston de Foix, Duc de Nemours (1489-1512), nephew of Louis XII, was so called because of his brilliant campaign in Italy (1512).

Thunderday. See THURSDAY.

Thunderer, The. A name facetiously applied to The Times newspaper in the mid-19th century, in allusion to an article by the assistant editor, Edward Sterling (1773-1847), which began, "We thundered forth the other day an article on the subject of social and political reform."

He [Edward Sterling], more than any other man or circumstance, was the Times Newspaper, and thundered through it to the shaking of the spheres.

CARLYLE: John Sterling, III, v (1851).

Thundering Legion, The. The XIIth Legion of the Roman army; probably so called because its ensign was a representation of JUPITER TONANS.

The name Fulminata dates from the time of Augustus (31 B.C.-A.D. 14) but fable relates it to the time of Marcus Aurelius. The story is that in this emperor's expedition against the Marcomanni, Quodi, etc. (172), the XIIth Legion, consisting of Christians, saved the whole army from a disastrous drought by praying for rain. A terrible thunderstorm burst and not only provided abundance of water but dispersed the enemy with lightning and THUNDERBOLTS. Hence the legion's name.

What wonders, yea, what apparent miracles did the prayers of former Christians procure! hence the Christian soldiers in their Army was called the Thundering Legion; they could do more by their prayers than the rest by their arms.

BAXTER: Saints' Everlasting Rest, II, vi, 6.

Thursday. The day of the god THOR, called by the French jeudi, that is, Jove's day. Both JOVE and Thor were gods of thunder, and formerly Thursday was sometimes called Thunderday. See also BLACK, HOLY, MAUNDY THURSDAY.

When three Thursdays come together. One of the many circumlocutions for NEVER.

Thyestes (Thi' es tēz). Brother of Atreus, and son of PELOPS and HIPPODAMIA. He seduced his brother's wife and also contrived a situation which led to Atreus slaying his own son. By way of revenge, Atreus invited Thyestes to a banquet in which the limbs of two of his sons, slain by Atreus, were served as a dish. Hence a Thyestean feast: one at which human flesh is served.

Thyrsus (ther' sus). The staff carried by DIONYSUS and his attendants, topped with a pine cone and decorated with vine and ivy leaves. See TORSO.

Ti. See ARETINIAN SYLLABLES.

Tiara (tē ar' à). Anciently the turban-like head-dress worn erect by the Persian kings and turned down by lords and priests; now applied to a coronet-like head ornament, especially to the triple crown of the POPE. The latter resembles the old-style beehive in shape and is worn on other than liturgical occasions. It typifies the temporal or sovereign power of the Papacy and is composed of gold cloth encircled by three crowns and surmounted by a golden globe and CROSS. It is first mentioned in the early 8th century and was a kind of cap called camelaucum. By the 11th century, a coronet had been added to the rim with two pendants or lappets hanging down at the back. The second circlet was added by Boniface VIII (1294-1303), perhaps to symbolize both temporal and spiritual powers, and the third coronet seems to have been added either by Benedict XI (1303-1304) or Clement V (1305-1314). An early representation of the triple crown is in an effigy of Benedict XII (d. 1342) and its symbolism is variously interpreted. The tiara is very richly ornamented and contains 146 jewels of all colours, 11 brilliants, and 540 pearls.

Tib. The ace of trumps in the game of GLEEK. Tom is the knave.

That gamester needs must overcome,
That can play both Tib and Tom.

RANDOLPH: Hermaphrodite.

St. Tib's Eve. NEVER. There is no such saint in the CALENDAR, her eve is non-existent like the GREEK CALENDS.

Tich. A diminutive person; from the celebrated dwarfish music-hall comedian Harry Ralph (1868-1928), known as Little Tich. As a podgy infant at the time of the TICHBORNE CASE, he was nicknamed "Tichborne" or "Tich" in allusion to the Tichborne claimant, who was very corpulent. As he remained a "TOM THUMB" he came to be called "Little Tich", a name he used professionally. He first appeared at ROSEVILLE GARDENS playing a tin-whistle and then as a NIGGER-MINSTREL. He became renowned for his stage pranks and satirical humour and in due course appeared at the DRURY LANE with Dan Leno and Marie Lloyd. His popularity in Paris gained him the LEGION OF HONOUR.

Tichborne Case. The most celebrated impersonation case in English law. In March 1853, Roger Charles Tichborne, heir to an ancient Hampshire baronetcy, sailed for Valparaiso, and after travelling a while in S. America embarked on 20 April 1854 in a sailing ship named the Bella, bound for Jamaica. The ship went down and nothing more was heard or seen of Roger Tichborne. In October 1865, "R. C. Tichborne" turned up at Wagga Wagga, in Australia, in the person of a man locally known as Tom Castro. On Christmas Day 1866, he landed in England as a claimant to the Tichborne baronetcy, asserting that he was the lost Roger. Lady Tichborne, the real Roger's mother, professed to recognize him, but the family could not be deceived. The case came into the courts where the fellow's claims were proved to be false and he himself identified as Arthur Orton, the son of a Wapping butcher. A further trial for perjury, lasting 188 days, ended in his being sentenced to 14 years penal servitude. See B. OF B.K.

Tichborne Dole. An ancient charity maintained by the Tichborne family said to have been instituted by Lady Mabel Tichborne in 1150. The legend is that, when dying, she begged her husband to provide for the poor from the produce of the estate and he promised to give the value of the land she could encircle while holding a burning torch. She rose from her deathbed and encompassed 23 acres and prophesied that if the charity were allowed to lapse, seven sons would be born to the family followed by seven daughters and the title would lapse. The dole was stopped after 644 years and the then baronet had seven sons and his heir seven daughters. The third son changed his name to Doughty and revived the dole and escaped the full consequences of the curse. The title became extinct in 1968 with the death of Sir Anthony Doughty-Tichborne, the fourteenth baronet.

Tick. To get, or go on tick. To get on credit, to owe for what one buys. In the 17th century ticket was the ordinary term for the written acknowledgement of a debt, and one living on credit was said to be living on ticket or tick.

A poor wretch that goes on tick for the paper he writes his Lampons on, and the very Ale and Coffee that inspires him, as they say.

WYCHERLEY: Love in a Wood, iii, 1.

To tick someone off. To rebuke or "tell off" sharply; both "tick off" and "tell off" involve the idea of enumerating or checking off a list of complaints or offences.

What makes it tick? The child's question, asked about a watch or clock, has given rise to a figurative use: "What makes him (her or it) tick?" meaning, "What keeps him on the go?" Sometimes the question is asked with wider implications, such as, what are a person's beliefs and interests and what does he want out of life?

Ticket (U.S.A.). The party list of candidates in an election. "I intend to vote for the straight Republican ticket."

Ticket of leave. A warrant given to convicts to have their liberty on condition of good behaviour; hence, Ticket-of-leave man, a convict freed from prison but obliged to report himself to the police from time to time until his sentence was completed. The system is now discontinued.

That's the ticket, or that's the ticket for soup. That's the right thing, that's just what is wanted, from the custom among 19th-century charities of issuing to the needy tickets exchangeable for soup, clothing, coal, etc.

To get one's ticket. In the Merchant Service the expression denotes becoming a qualified mate or master, etc., of a ship, i.e. to get one's certificate as such.

To work one's ticket. An army expression meaning to secure one's discharge before the contract of service has expired.

Tide (O.E. tīd, time, season, tide of the sea). The word is cognate with TIME. See also TIDY. It is used figuratively of a tendency, a current or flow of events, etc., as in a tide of feeling, and in SHAKESPEARE'S:

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune.
Julius Caesar, IV, iii.

Lose not a tide. Waste no time; set off at once on the business.

Time and tide wait for no man. See under TIME.

To tide over a difficulty, hard times, etc. To surmount the difficulty, to get by.

Tide-waiter. Also called a tidesman, a Customs officer who boards ships entering port to ensure that the customs regulations are observed. The term is figuratively applied to one who waits to see the trend of events before taking action, or which way the "tide of opinion is flowing".

Tidy means in TIDE, in season, in time, as in eventide, springtide, etc. Tusser has the phrase, "If the weather be fair and tidy", meaning seasonable. Things done in their proper season are sure to be done orderly and properly; hence, by association, tidy came to imply methodical, neat, well arranged.

The word is also used in the sense of a thing being worth consideration: a tidy penny, quite a good sum; a tidy fortune, an inheritance worth having.

Tied House. A retail business, especially a public house tied by agreement to obtain its supplies from a particular firm.

Tiercel. See TASSEL-GENTLE.

Tiffany. A kind of thin silk-like gauze. The word is supposed to be a corruption of Theophany (Gr. theos, god; ephainein, to show), the manifestation of God to man, the EPIPHANY; and the material was so called because it used to be worn at the TWELFTH NIGHT (Epiphany) revels.

Tiffin. An old north of ENGLAND provincialism for a small draught of liquor; also a lunch or slight repast between breakfast and dinner. In Anglo-Indian usage it denotes a light meal or lunch, especially of curried dishes, chutney and fruit.

"I bought a pineapple at the same time, which I gave to Sambo. Let's have it for tiffin; very cool and nice this hot weather."

THACKERAY: Vanity Fair, iv.

Tiger. The NICKNAME of the French statesman Georges Clémenceau (1841-1929).

A liveried servant who rides out with his master used to be called a tiger, also a boy in buttons, a page. In America it is applied to a final yell in a round of cheering.

In poker, tiger is the lowest hand that can be drawn—seven high, ace low, without pair, straight or flush. Great nerve is required to hold and bluff on such a hand, and the expression is responsible for the title of the famous JAZZ classic Tiger Rag. Cp. YARBOROUGH.

Tight. In colloquial usage, "intoxicated".

Blow me tight! An old expression of surprise, wonder, incredulity, etc.

If there's a soul will give me food or find me in employ,
By day or night, then blow me tight! (he was a vulgar boy).

BARHAM: Ingoldsby Legends
(Misadventures at Margate, 21).

Tike, or Tyke. A provincial word (from Old Norse) for a dog or cur; hence used of a low or rough-mannered fellow, as in the contemptuous insult "you dirty tike".

A Yorkshire tike. An established name for a Yorkshireman, nowadays without any derogatory implications; it formerly specially denoted a rustic of that county.

Tilbury. A two-wheeled horse carriage without a top or cover named after its designer, a London coach-maker of the early 19th century.

Tile. Old slang for a hat, this being to the head what the tiles are to a house. The once very popular MUSIC HALL song by J. Rolmaz begins, "Where did you get that hat? Where did you get that tile?"

To have a tile loose. To be not quite compos mentis, not "all there".

To tile a lodge, in FREEMASONRY, is to close and guard the doors to prevent anyone uninitiated from entering, the officer who does this being called the Tiler, sometimes spelled tyler.

Tilt. At full tilt. At full speed. From the encounter at full gallop of KNIGHTS in a tilt. See QUINTAIN.

To tilt at windmills. See under WINDMILL.

Tim Bobbin. A native of Lancashire.

Timber. To take the tall timber. To depart or escape suddenly and unceremoniously (U.S.A.).

Belly timber. See under BELLY.

Timber-toes. A name for a person with a wooden leg.

Timbuctoo, or Timbuktu. An ancient African city on the southern edge of the Sahara, "the part of the Sudan in the Sahara", which first began as a settlement in the 11th century and subsequently developed as a mart for GOLD, etc., and achieved legendary repute. It was the last great goal of 19-century European travellers searching for fabulous wealth and splendour. Major Gordon having reached it from Tripoli in 1826 was decapitated before his departure, but René Caillé of Bordeaux, to whom its then ruinous condition became apparent, made a safe return in 1828. It was occupied by the French in 1894 and is now in the Republic of Mali.

Go to Timbuctoo. Virtually the same as "GO TO HALIFAX".

Time. Greenwich Time. See under GREENWICH. Summer Time. See DAY-LIGHT SAVING.

Time lag. The term given to the pause that elapses between a cause and its effect.

Time of Grace. See SPORTING SEASONS.

Time of Troubles. In Russian history, the years 1584-1613, a period of monarchical instability, foreign intervention, social disorder and economic crises. It began with the accession of Ivan IV's son Feodor, who was incapable of exercising his office, with resultant intrigues among the boyars, and did not end until the accession of Michael Romanov in 1613. Boris Godunov was proclaimed Tsar in 1598 and ruled until his death in 1605, but from 1604 various Pretenders intrigued for the throne. In 1609 King Sigismund of Poland intervened until Patriarch Hermogen stimulated national resistance, which led to the election of Michael by the Zemsky Sobor, and the expulsion of the Poles.

Time zone. See STANDARD TIME.

Take time by the forelock. Seize the present moment; CARPE DIEM. Time, called by SHAKESPEARE "that bald sexton" (King John, III, i), is represented with a lock of hair on his forehead but none on the rest of his head, to signify that time past cannot be used, but time present may be seized by the forelock. The saying is attributed to Pittacus of Mitylene, one of the SEVEN SAGES OF GREECE. It is also suggested that the statue of Opportunity by Lysippus inspired the phrase.

Time and tide wait for no man. One of many sayings pointing the folly of procrastination. It appears in Ray's Scottish Proverbs as, "Time bides na man."

Time, gentlemen, please! The traditional announcement for closing time in bars and public houses.

Time Immemorial. Since ancient times, beyond memory. In English law, beyond "legal memory", i.e. before the reign of Richard I (1189-1199), because the Statute of Westminster of 1275 fixed this reign as the time limit for bringing certain types of action.

Time is, Time was, Time's past. See BRAZEN HEAD.

Time out of mind. TIME IMMEMORIAL; time longer than anyone can remember.

To have had one's time. In World War II, a British soldier's expression for being ripe for death, to expect imminent disaster. In the Royal Navy, part of the traditional "Wakey, Wakey" chant when calling the hands is, "You've had your time", i.e. your allotted period of rest.

To know the time o'day. To be smart, wide awake.

Time-expired. Applied to soldiers whose term of service is completed. Also used of convicts who have served their sentences.

Time-honoured Lancaster. Old John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster (c. 1340-1339), so called by SHAKESPEARE (Richard II, I, i) because his memory had been honoured by Time. His father was Edward III, his son Henry IV, his nephew Richard II, and through his great-granddaughter, Margaret Beaufort, he is the ancestor of all our sovereigns from Henry VII, Margaret's son. Shakespeare calls him “old”; he was only 59 at his death.

Timeo Danaos. See GREEK GIFT.

Timoleon (tī mō' lē òn). The Greek general and statesman (d. c. 336 B.C.) who so hated tyranny that he voted for the death of his own brother Timophanes when he attempted to make himself absolute in Corinth.

The fair Corinthian boast,
Timoleon, happy temper, mild and firm,
Who wept the brother while the tyrant bled.
THOMSON: The Seasons (Winter), 476.

Timon of Athens (tī' mon). An Athenian misanthrope of the late 5th century B.C., and the principal figure in SHAKESPEARE'S play so called.

Macaulay uses the expression to “out-Timon Timon”—i.e. to be more misanthropical than even Timon.

Timur. See TAMBERLANE.

Tin. Money. A depreciating synonym for SILVER, called by alchemists “JUPITER”.

Tin fish. Naval slang for a torpedo.

Tin hat. A soldiers' name for a metal shrapnel helmet. To put the tin hat on it, to bring something to an abrupt and conclusive end.

Tin topee. See BATTLE BOWLER.

Tin-pan Alley. The district of New York City, originally in the area of 14th Street, where popular music is published. In England, Denmark Street, off CHARING CROSS Road, is so called for the same reason. The phrase is often used generically of the composers of this type of music. The term dates from about 1900.

Tintype. A positive photograph taken on a sensitized sheet of enamelled tin. Tintypes were cheap and very popular at FAIRS, amusement parks, etc.

Tincture. In HERALDRY, the hues or colours of the shield and its charges. It includes metals, colours, and furs.

Tine-man, The. Archibald Douglas, 4th Earl of Douglas, who died in 1424.

In old Scottish a tiner was a loser, and Douglas was said to have lost almost every battle or skirmish in which he took part.

Tinker. Not worth a tinker's damn, or curse. Absolutely worthless. It has been suggested that the term derives from the old-time tinker's custom of blocking up the hole in the article he was mending with a pellet of bread, thus making a dam which would prevent the solder from escaping. This pellet was discarded as useless when the job was finished.

Tintagel (tin tāj' èl). The castle on the north coast of Cornwall fabled as King ARTHUR'S Castle and according to Geoffrey of Monmouth (Historia Britonum, XIX) the birthplace of King Arthur. The present ruin upon the cliff is of mid-12th-century origin.

Tip. A small present of money, such as that given to a waiter, porter, or school-boy; from the CANT verb (common in the 16th and 17th centuries) to tip, meaning to hand over, which also gives rise to the other signification of the verb, viz. private warning, such secret information as may guide the person tipped to make successful bets or gain some other advantage. A straight tip comes straight or direct from the owner or trainer of a horse, or from one in a position to know.

Tip and Run raid. A phrase used in World War II to denote a hurried and often indiscriminate air raid when the enemy sped homeward after jettisoning their bombs. So called from the light-hearted form of CRICKET in which the batsman is forced to run every time he hits the ball.

Tip-off. To warn or give a hint, especially timely warning of a police raid.

To have a thing on the tip of one's tongue. See under TONGUE.

To tip one the wink. To give a signal to another by a wink; to tip one off, i.e. to give him a hint or warning.

Tip-top. First rate, capital, splendid.

Tiphany. The name given in the old romances to the mother of the MAGI. It is a corruption of EPIPHANY. Cp. TIFFANY.

Tiphys. The pilot of the ARGONAUTS, hence a generic name for pilots.

“Tipperary”. This song, inseparably associated with World War I, was composed by Jack Judge (d. 1938), of Oldbury, Birmingham. The words were by Harry J. Williams of Temple Balsall, Warwickshire, and the first line of the refrain was engraved on his tombstone. It was composed in 1912 and was already popular in the MUSIC HALL by 1914, and was sung by troops embarking for France and on the front.

It's a long way to Tipperary,
It's a long way to go,
It's a long way to Tipperary,
To the sweetest girl I know;
Goodbye, Piccadilly; farewell, Leicester Square;
It's a long, long way to Tipperary,
But my heart's right there.

Tippling House

Tipperary Rifle. A SHILLELAGH or stick made of blackthorn.

Tippling House. A contemptuous name for a tavern or public house. A tippler was formerly a tavern-keeper or tapster, and the tavern was called a tippling house. At Boston, Lincolnshire, in 1577, five persons were appointed "tipplers of Lincoln beer", and no "other tippler [might] draw or sell beer ..." under penalties.

Tipstaff. A constable, BAILIFF, or SHERIFF's officer; so called because he carried a staff tipped with a bull's horn or with metal. In the documents of Edward III allusion is often made to his staff.

Tirant lo Blanch. A romance of CHIVALRY by Jehannot Martorell and Johan de Galba, written in Catalan and produced at Valencia in 1490. A favourite book of Cervantes, and one which figures in Don QUIXOTE's library.

Tiresias (ti ré' si ás). A Theban of Greek legend, who by accident saw ATHENE bathing, and was therefore struck with blindness by her splashing water in his face. She afterwards repented, and, as she could not restore his sight, conferred on him the power of soothsaying and of understanding the language of birds, and gave him a staff with which he could walk as safely as if he had his sight. He found death at last by drinking from the well of Tilphosa.

Another story is that he had been temporarily changed into a woman (for seven years) and was therefore called upon by JUPITER and JUNO to settle an argument as to which of the sexes derived the greatest pleasure from the married state. Tiresias, speaking from experience, declared in favour of the female, whereupon Juno struck him blind.

Tirl. A Scottish variant of twirl.

To tirl at the pin. To twiddle or rattle the latch before opening the door. The pin was part of the door-latch and it was a signal that one wished to enter.

Tironian (ti rō' ni án). Pertaining to a system of shorthand said to have been invented by Tiro, the freedman and amanuensis of CICERO. Our "&" (see AMPERSAND) is still sometimes called the Tironian sign, for it represents the contraction of Latin et introduced by Tiro.

Tirynthian (ti rin' thi án). HERCULES is called by Spenser the Tirynthian Swain (Faerie Queene, VI, xii, 35), and the Tirynthian Groom (Epithalamum, 329), because he generally resided at Tiryns, an ancient city of Argolis in Greece.

Tisiphone. See FURIES.

Tit for Tat. Retaliation; probably representing tip for tap, i.e. blow for blow. J. Bellenden Ker says this is the Dutch dit vor dat (this for that), Lat. QUID PRO QUO. Heywood uses the phrase tit for tat, perhaps the French tant pour tant.

Titania (ti tan' yà). Wife of OBERON, and Queen of the Fairies. SHAKESPEARE uses the name in his A Midsummer Night's Dream.

Titans (ti' tánz). In Greek mythology, children of URANUS and GÆA, of enormous size and strength, and typical of lawlessness and the power of force. There were 12, six male (OCEANUS, Cœus, Crius, CRONUS, HYPERION, and Japetus or IAPETOS) and six female (THEIA, RHEA, THEMIS, MNEMOSYNE, PHOEBE, and TETHYS). This is according to Hesiod, but the number is variously given by other writers.

Incited by their mother, they overthrew Uranus and emasculated him, and set up Cronus as king. Cronus was in turn overthrown by his son ZEUS. After the long struggle which some of the Titans carried on against Zeus, they were finally hurled down into TARTARUS. Cp. GIANTS' WAR WITH ZEUS.

By VIRGIL and Ovid the SUN was sometimes surnamed Titan; hence SHAKESPEARE's:

And flecked Darkness like a drunkard reels
From forth Day's path and Titan's fiery wheels.
Romeo and Juliet, II, iii.

Tithes. One-tenth of the produce of the land given to the Church, at first voluntarily but made compulsory by the end of the 8th century. The great tithes were those of the major crops, and the small consisting of lesser produce. With the growth of the parochial system, they became an important item in the income of the parson and source of friction between clergy and their parishioners. With the rise of the PURITANS and later Nonconformity a new grievance arose. Commutation of tithes began before 1600, and an attempt to commute tithes to a single rent charge was begun by an Act of 1836. Acts of 1937 and 1951 commuted them to a lump sum redeemable by instalments up to A.D. 2000. See VICAR.

Tithing. King Cnut (1017-1035) provided that all free men over the age of 12 should be put in a tithing, a group of ten upon which rested the responsibility of securing the good behaviour of the group, etc.

Tithonus (ti thō' nūs). A beautiful Trojan of Greek legend, brother to Laomedon, and beloved by Eos (AURORA). At his prayer, the goddess granted him immortality, but as he had forgotten to ask for youth and vigour he grew old, and life became insupportable. He now prayed Eos to remove him from the world; this, however she could not do, but she changed him into a GRASSHOPPER.

Titi, Prince (tē' tē). The nickname of Frederick, PRINCE OF WALES (1707-1751), eldest son of George II. In constant opposition to his father, he wrote an Histoire du Prince Titi (1735) which contained gross and unmanly caricatures of his father and mother. Two English translations of this offensive work appeared in 1736.

Titles of Kings. See RULERS; RELIGIOUS.

Title-Role, in a play, opera or film, is the part or role from which the title is taken, e.g. HAMLET, Carmen, KING KONG.

Titmouse. See MISNOMERS.

Titular Bishops. The Roman Catholic dignitaries formerly known as bishops IN PARTIBUS.

Titus (ti' tūs). An alternative name for DYSMAS. Also the name of one of St. PAUL's disciples to whom he wrote one of his Epistles.

The Arch of Titus. The arch built in Rome in commemoration of the capture of JERUSALEM (A.D. 70) by Titus and his father Vespasian. Titus became Emperor in A.D. 79. The arch is richly sculptured, and the trophies taken at the destruction of the TEMPLE are shown in relief.

Tityrus (tit' i rus). A poetical surname for a shepherd; from its use in Greek idylls and VIRGIL's first Eclogue. In the Shepherd's Calendar (Feb., June, and Dec.) Spenser calls Chaucer by this name.

Heroes and their feats

Fatigue me, never weary of the pipe
Of Tityrus, assembling as he sang
The rustic throng beneath his favourite beech.

COWPER:

The Task (The Winter Evening), 705.

Tityre Tus (tit' i rê tūz). Dissolute young scapegraces of the late 17th century (cp. MOHOCKS) whose delight was to annoy the watchmen, upset SEDANS, wrench knockers off doors, and insult pretty women. The name comes from the first line of VIRGIL's first Eclogue, Tityre, tu patulae recubans sub tegmine fagi, because the Tityre Tus loved to lurk in the dark night looking for mischief.

Tityus (tit' i ūs). In Greek mythology, a gigantic son of ZEUS and GÆA whose body covered nine acres of land. He tried to defile LATONA, but APOLLO cast him into TARTARUS, where a vulture fed on his liver which grew again as fast as it was devoured (cp. PROMETHEUS).

Tiu, Tiw, or Tyr. In Scandinavian mythology, son of ODIN, and a younger brother of THOR. He had his hand bitten off when chaining up the wolf FENRIR. He was identified with MARS, the Roman god of war, and his name is found in our Tuesday (Fr. mardi). Philologists have generally equated the name with Gr. ZEUS, Lat. Deus, Sansk. devas.

Tizzy. A sixpenny-piece; a variant of TESTER.

Tmesis (tme' sis). The grammatical term for the separation of the parts of a compound word by inserting between them other words, or the rearrangement in this manner of the words of a phrase; e.g. A large meal and rich, instead of, "A large, rich meal"; The greatness of his power to us-ward (Eph. i, 19), instead of, "The greatness of his power toward us".

To-do. Here's a pretty to-do. Here's a fine rumpus or disturbance.

To-remain Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Toads. The device of Clovis was three toads (or botes, as they were called in O. Fr.); legend relates that after his conversion and BAPTISM the ARIANS assembled a large army under King Candat against him. While on his way to meet the heretics, Clovis saw in the heavens his device miraculously changed into three lilies or on a banner azure. He instantly had such a banner made, and called it his ORIFLAMME, and even before his army came in sight of King Candat, the host of the HERETIC lay dead, slain, like the army of Sennacherib, by a blast from the God of Battles (Raoul de Presles, Grans Croniques de France).

The toad, ugly and venomous, wears yet a precious jewel in its head. Nashe (Anatomie of Absurditie, 1589) says, "It fareth with finer wits as it doth with the pearl, which is affirmed to be in the head of the toad", and SHAKESPEARE says:

Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in its head.

As You Like It, II, i.

Thomas Lupton, in his One Thousand Notable Things (1579), speaks of the virtues of the toadstone which the toad carried inside its head. "A toad-stone (crapaudina) touching any part envenomed, hurt, or stung with rat, spider, wasp, or any other venomous beast, ceaseth the pain or swelling thereof." Such stones, toad-like in shape or colour, believed to have come from the toad, were used as amulets and set in rings.

Toast

Toads were also generally held to be poisonous.

Toads unknown in Ireland. It is said that St. PATRICK cleared the island of all vermin by his malediction.

Toad-eater or Toady. A cringing parasite, an obsequious lickspittle. The old MOUNTEBANKS used to take around with them a boy who ate—or pretended to eat—toads, then believed to be poisonous. This gave the master the chance to exhibit his skill in expelling poison.

Be the most scorn'd Jack-Pudding of the pack,
And turn toad-eater to some foreign quack.

TOM BROWN: Satire on an Ignorant Quack
(Works, I, 71).

Toad-in-the-hole. A piece of beef, sausage, chop, etc., baked in batter.

Toast. The person, cause, object, etc., to which guests are invited to drink in compliment, as well as the drink itself. The word is taken from the piece of toast which used at one time to be put into the tankard, and which still floats in the LOVING-CUPS at the ancient universities.

The story goes that, in the reign of Charles II, a certain beau pledged a noted beauty in a glass of water taken from her bath; whereupon another roysterer cried out he would have nothing to do with the liquor, but would have the toast—i.e. the lady herself (Tatler, No. 24).

Let the toast pass, drink to the lass.

SHERIDAN: School for Scandal, III, iii.

Say, why are beauties praised and honoured most,
The wise man's passion and the vain man's toast.

POPE: The Rape of the Lock, canto V, 9.

Toast-master. The official who announces the after-dinner speakers at a formal banquet. He must be a man of stentorian voice and enjoy a nice knowledge of precedence.

Toaster. Toasting-iron. See CHEESE-TOASTER.

Tobacco Baron. In prison slang a baron is a prisoner who traffics in various items such as sweets, cigarettes, tobacco, etc. Tobacco is the most sought-after commodity, and rations, etc., are often mortgaged for a smoke. The term Tobacco baron, for one who wields power by trading in tobacco, or snout, is a term more commonly used by journalists than the prisoners themselves.

Tobit. The central character of the popular story in the Book of Tobit, in the Old Testament APOCRYPHA. Tobit is a scrupulous and pious Jew who practised good works, but, while sleeping in his courtyard, being unclean from burying a Jew found strangled in the street, was blinded by sparrows which "muted warm dung in his eyes". His son Tobias was attacked on the Tigris by a fish, which leapt out of the water and which he caught at the bidding of the angel RAPHAEL, his mentor. Tobit's blindness was cured by applying to his eyes the gall of the fish. Father and son prepared to reward Azarias (Raphael), whereupon the ANGEL revealed his identity and returned to HEAVEN.

Tobit's dog. See CAMEL.

Toby. The dog in the puppet-show of PUNCH AND JUDY. He wears a frill garnished with bells to frighten away the DEVIL from his master.

The high toby, the high road; the low toby, the by-road. A highwayman is a "high tobyman"; a mere footpad is a "low tobyman". This is probably from the Shelta (i.e. tinkers' jargon) word for road, tobar.

Toby jug. A small jug in the form of a squat old man in 18th-century dress, wearing a three-cornered hat, one corner of which forms the lip. The name comes from a poem (1761) about one "Toby Philpot", adapted from the Latin by Francis Fawkes; and the design of the jug from a print sold by Carrington Bowles, a London print-seller, to Ralph Wood, the potter, who turned out a great number of Toby Jugs.

Toc H. The morse pronunciation of the letters T.H., the initials of Talbot House. The term was used in World War I, when the first Talbot House was founded, in December 1915, at Poperinghe, in memory of Gilbert Talbot, son of the Bishop of Winchester, who had been killed at Hooze in the preceding July. The Rev. P. B. Clayton, M.C., made it a famous rest and recreation centre. In 1920, he founded a similar centre in London, also known as Toc H, which developed into an interdenominational association for Christian social service.

Toddy. Properly the juice obtained by tapping certain palms, fermented so as to become intoxicating (Hindu tadi; from tar, a palm). It is also applied to a beverage compounded of spirits, hot water, and sugar, a kind of PUNCH.

Toe. From top to toe. From head to foot.

To toe the line. To submit to discipline or regulations, to come into line with the rest. In foot races the runners are made to assemble with toes up to the starting line.

To tread on someone's toes. To upset, to offend; to vex or annoy.

To turn up one's toes. To die.

Tofana. See AQUA TOFANA.

Toga. The distinctive public garb of the Roman citizen consisting of a single semicircular piece of white woollen cloth worn in a flowing fashion round the shoulders and body. The Romans were hence the Gens togata, the "togae'd people". It was also worn by freedwomen and prostitutes. Respectable women wore the stola.

Toga candida. A new toga whitened with chalk, worn by candidates for public office when they appeared before the people.

Toga picta. The toga embroidered with golden stars that was worn by the emperor on special occasions, by a victorious general at his "TRIUMPH", etc.

Toga praetexta. The toga bordered (praetexta) with purple that was worn by children, by those engaged in sacred rites, magistrates on duty, etc.

Toga virilis. The toga worn by men (virilis, manly), assumed at the age of 15.

Togs. Slang for clothes; hence togged out in his best, dressed in his best clothes; togger, finery. The word may be connected with TOGA.

Token payment. A small payment made as a formal and binding acknowledgment of indebtedness. The word "token" is often used to describe some action or phrase used in lieu of—but acknowledging—a greater obligation.

Tokyo Rose. The name given by U.S. servicemen to a woman broadcaster of propaganda from Japan during World War II. Several U.S.A.-born Japanese (NISEI) girls were identified as taking part in these broadcasts, notably Iva Togori, of California, and Ruth Hayakawa.

Tolbooth, or Tollbooth (tōl' booth). Originally a booth or stall where taxes were collected.

And whanne Jesus passide fro thennis, he saw a man, Matheu bi name, sittinge in a tolbothe.
WYCLIFF, Matt. ix, 9.

In SCOTLAND, the term was applied to the town gaol, from the custom of confining offenders against the laws of a fair or market in the booth where market dues were collected.

Toledo (tō lē' dō). A sword made at Toledo in Spain, which place, long before and after the MIDDLE AGES, was specially famous for them.

I give him three years and a day to match my Toledo,
And then we'll fight like dragons.

MASSINGER: The Maid of Honour, II, ii.

Tolosa (to lō' sâ). He has got gold of Tolosa. See under GOLD.

Tolpuddle Martyrs. Six agricultural labourers of Tolpuddle, Dorset, who formed a TRADE UNION to resist wage cuts. They were sentenced to seven years transportation to Australia in 1834 on a concocted charge of administering illegal oaths. After continuous protests they were pardoned in 1836.

Tom, Tommy. Short for Thomas; used for the male of certain animals (especially the cat), and generically, like JACK, for a man. It sometimes has a somewhat contemptuous implication, as in TOM O' BENDLAM, TOM-FOOL.

The man that hails you Tom or Jack,
And proves by thumps upon your back
How he esteems your merit,
Is such a friend, that one had need
Be very much his friend indeed
To pardon or to bear it.

COWPER: Friendship, 169.

Great Tom of Lincoln. A bell at Lincoln Cathedral weighing 5 tons 8 cwt.

Great Tom of Oxford. A bell in TOM GATE Tower, Oxford, tolled every night. It weighs 7 tons 12 cwt.

Long Tom. A familiar term for any gun of great length; especially the naval 4.7s used on land in the South African War (1899-1902). A brush for painting, on a long handle of the broomstick variety, is also called a long tom.

Old Tom. A specially potent gin. The story goes that a Thomas Norris, employed in Messrs. Hodges' distillery, opened a GIN-PALACE in Great Russell Street, COVENT GARDEN, in the late 18th century, and called the gin concocted by Thomas Chamberlain, one of the firm of Hodges, "Old Tom", in compliment to his former master.

Tom and Jerry. Types of the roystering young men about town; from Pierce Egan's Life in London; or, The Day and Night Scenes of Jerry Hawthorn, Esq., and his Elegant Friend Corinthian Tom (1821). Cp. JERRY-SHOP.

Also a hot, spiced drink made from eggs, sugar, rum, cinnamon, etc.

Tom Collins. See JOHN COLLINS.

Tom, Dick and Harry. A Victorian term for the "MAN IN THE STREET", more particularly persons of no note; persons unworthy of notice. BROWN, JONES AND ROBINSON are far other men; they are the vulgar rich, who give themselves airs, especially abroad, and look with scorn on all foreign manners and customs which differ from their own.

Tom Fool. A clumsy, witless fool, fond of stupid practical jokes; hence tomfoolery.

Tom Gate. The great gate of Christ Church, Oxford, begun by Wolsey and completed (1682) by Wren. In its tower is GREAT TOM (see above).

Tom Long. Any lazy, dilatory man. To be kept waiting for Tom Long is to be kept hanging about for a wearisome time.

Tom Noddy. A puffing, fuming, stupid creature.

Tom o' Bedlam. A mendicant who levies charity on the plea of insanity. In the 16th and 17th centuries many harmless inmates of BEDLAM were let out to beg and such a beggar was called an ABRAM-MAN.

One of the greatest of Elizabethan anonymous poems is called Tom of Bedlam's Song.

Tom Quad. The great quadrangle of Christ Church, Oxford.

Tom Thumb. Any dwarfish or insignificant person is so called from the tiny hero of the old nursery tale, popular in the 16th century. The History of Tom Thumb was published by Richard Johnson in 1621, and there was a similar tale by Perrault, Le Petit Poucet, 1697.

The American dwarf Charles Sherwood Stratton (1838-1883) was popularly called "General Tom Thumb"; and Fielding wrote a burlesque (acted 1730) entitled Tom Thumb the Great. See also BOAST OF ENGLAND.

Tom Tiddler's Ground. A place where it is easy to pick up a fortune or make a place in the world for oneself; from the old children's game in which a base-keeper, who is called Tom Tiddler, tries to keep the other children who sing:

Here we are on Tom Tiddler's ground
Picking up gold and silver.

from crossing the boundary into his base.

Tom Tiler, or Tyler. A hen-pecked husband.

Tom's. A noted coffee-house of the late 18th century, that was in existence in Russell Street, COVENT GARDEN, as late as 1865. It was owned and named after Thomas West; and here in 1764 was founded Tom's Club, which included most of the literary and social notabilities of the time.

Tomboy. A romping girl. The word was also used of a loose or immodest woman, whence the slang, Tom, applied to a prostitute.

A lady
So fair . . . to be partner'd
With tomboys.

SHAKESPEARE: Cymbeline, I, vi.

Tommy, or Tommy Atkins. A British private soldier, as a JACK TAR is a British sailor. At one time all recruits were served out with manuals in which were to be entered the name, age, date of enlistment, length of service, wounds, medals, and so on of the holder. With each book was sent a specimen form showing how the one in the manual should be filled in, and the hypothetical name selected was Thomas Atkins.

Tommy bar. This is a small bar of rounded metal used for inserting into and turning box-spanners and similar tools.

Tommy-cooker. A small individual stove using solid fuel invented in the time of World War I and issued to Allied troops in World War II. It was also the name given by the Germans to the Sherman tank, which caught fire very easily when hit.

Tommy Dodd. The "odd" man who, in tossing up, either wins or loses according to agreement with his confederate.

To go to Tommy Dodd for drinks, etc., is to toss "odd man out", the odd man dropping out until there are only two left, who toss for who pays.

Tommy gun. A Thompson short-barrelled sub-machine-gun.

Tommy rot. Utter nonsense, rubbish; a COCK AND BULL STORY.

Tommy shop. A shop where vouchers, given by an employer in lieu of money, can be exchanged for goods; commonly run by large employers of labour before the TRUCK SYSTEM was made illegal. Tommy here is a slang term for bread, provisions, etc.

Tomahawk (tom' á hawk). The war axe of the North American Indians, pre-historically made of stone or deer-horn, but after the coming of the white man of iron or steel with a wooden handle. Sometimes the blunt end of the head was hollowed into a pipe-bowl, the handle being bored to form a stem. See BURY THE HATCHET.

Tongue. Confusion of tongues. According to the BIBLE (Gen. xi, 1-9), the people of the earth originally spoke one language and lived together. They built a city and a tower as a rallying point, but God, seeing this as the beginning of ambition, "did confound the language of all the earth" and scattered them abroad and hence the town was called BABEL. This was taken as an explanation of the diversity of languages and the dispersal of mankind and the origin of the name BABYLON.

The gift of tongues. Command of foreign languages; also the power claimed by the early church and by some later mystics (as the IRVINGITES) of conversing in and understanding unknown tongues (from the miracle at PENTECOST—Acts ii, 4, the implications of which are obscure). One's mother tongue. One's native language.

The Three Tongues. See under THREE.

The tongue of the trump. The spokesman or leader of a party. The trump here is the JEW'S HARP and the tongue is its most important part.

The tongue o' the trump to them a'
BURNS: Mr. Heron's Election Ballads, ii, 10.

A lick with the rough side of the tongue. A severe reprimand, a good slating.

To bite one's tongue. To repress one's speech, to remain silent under provocation.

To find one's tongue. To speak after recovery from initial shyness.

To give someone the length of one's tongue. To tell him in unmeasured language what you really think of him.

To give tongue. Properly used of a dog barking when on the scent; hence sometimes applied to people. Thus POLONIUS says to his son:

Give thy thoughts no tongue,
Nor any unproportioned thought his act.
SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, iii.

To have a long tongue. To be talkative or indiscreet in one's utterance.

To have something on the tip of one's tongue. To be just about to utter it or to have it on the verge of one's memory but escaping utterance.

To hold one's tongue. To keep silent when one might speak; to keep a secret.

To lose one's tongue. To become tonguetied or speechless through shyness, fear, etc.

To speak with one's tongue in one's cheek. Insincerely; saying one thing and meaning another.

To wag one's tongue. To talk continuously or indiscreetly.

Tonic Sol-fa. A system of musical notation and sight singing in which diatonic scales are written always in one way (the keynote being indicated), the tones being represented by syllables or initials, and time and accents by dashes and colons. Tonic is a musical term denoting pertaining to or founded on the keynote; sol and fa are two of the ARETINIAN SYLLABLES. See also DOH; GAMUT.

The system was developed about 1850 by the Rev. John Curwen (1816–1860), a CONGREGATIONALIST minister who made use of the earlier work of Miss Sarah Ann Glover (1785–1867).

Tonquin Bean. See MISNOMERS.

Tonsure (Lat. tonsura, a shearing). The shaving of part of the head among CATHOLIC clergy became customary in the 6th and 7th centuries as a mark of the clerical state. It is not retained in such countries as Britain and the U.S.A. where it is not in accordance with custom. The western form of tonsure leaving a circle of hair around the head is supposed to symbolize the crown of thorns. The CELTIC tonsure consisted of shaving off all the hair in front of a line extending over the head from ear to ear. In the East the whole head was shorn. The modern Roman Catholic tonsure varies among the different Orders and that of the secular clergy is a small circle on the crown of the head.

Tontine (ton' tēn). A form of annuity shared by several subscribers, in which the shares of those who die are added to the holdings of the survivors till the last survivor inherits all. So named from Lorenzo Tonti, a Neapolitan banker who introduced the system into France in 1653. In 1765 the HOUSE OF COMMONS raised £300,000 by way of tontine annuities at 3 per cent; and as late as 1871 the Daily News announced a proposed tontine to raise £650,000 to purchase the Alexandra Palace and 100 acres of land (see ALLY PALLY).

Tool. To tool a coach. To drive; generally applied to a gentleman who undertook stage-coach driving for his own amusement. Tool here is a fanciful application implying the use of skill.

Tooley Street. A corruption of St. Olaf—i.e. 'T-olaf, Tolay, Tooley. Similarly, Sise Lane is St. Osyth's Lane.

The three tailors of Tooley Street. See under TAILOR.

Toom Tabard (Scot., empty jacket). A NICKNAME given to John Baliol (1249–1315), because of his poor spirit, and sleeveless appointment to the throne of Scotland. The honour was an "empty jacket", which he enjoyed only from 1292 to 1296. He died in Normandy.

Tooth, Teeth. Milk teeth. A child's first set of teeth.

By the skin of one's teeth. See SKIN.

From the teeth outwards. Merely talk; insincerity, not from the heart. An archaic expression.

He has cut his eye-teeth. He is "wide awake"; he has acquired worldly wisdom, is quite sophisticated. The eye-teeth are cut late, the first set at about 16 months, the second set at 12 years. Cp. WISDOM TEETH under WISDOM.

His teeth are drawn. His power of doing mischief is taken from him. The phrase comes from the fable of the LION in love, who consented to have his teeth drawn and his claws cut, in order that a fair damsel might marry him. When this was done the girl's father fell on the lion and slew him.

In spite of his teeth. In opposition to his settled purpose or resolution; even though he snarl and show his teeth like an angry dog. Cp. WORTH A JEW'S EYE under JEW.

In despite of the teeth of all the rhyme and reason.

SHAKESPEARE: Merry Wives of Windsor, V, iv.

In the teeth of the wind. With the wind dead against one, blowing in or against one's teeth.

To strive with all the tempest in my teeth.

POPE: Epistles of Horace, II, ii.

To cast into one's teeth. To utter reproaches; to throw it back at him.

All his faults observed,

Set in a note-book, learned, and conned by rote,
To cast into my teeth.

SHAKESPEARE: Julius Cæsar, IV, iii.

To draw one's eye-teeth. To take the conceit out of a person; to fleece without mercy.

To get one's teeth into something. To get to grips with it, to set to work with energy and determination.

To have a sweet tooth. To be addicted to sweet things.

To lie in one's teeth. To lie flagrantly.

To put teeth into. Said of a law, regulation, etc., when steps are taken to make it effective.

To set one's teeth on edge. See under EDGE.

To show one's teeth. To adopt a menacing tone or attitude; as a dog shows its teeth when it snarls.

To take the bit between one's teeth. See BIT.

With tooth and nail. In right good earnest, with one's utmost power; as though biting and scratching.

Tooth and egg. An obsolete corruption of tutenag (from Arab. tutiya), an alloy rich in zinc, coming from the East Indies, much used for the lining of tea chests.

Top. See also MIZZENTOP.

The Big Top. The great circus tent in which the main performance takes place.

Can you top that? (U.S.A.) Can you beat or surpass that, especially in the telling of outlandish stories.

Out of the top drawer. See under DRAWER.

To be on top of the world. Said of the feeling of elation experienced when one is in the best of care-free good health and when all one's affairs are flourishing.

To blow one's top. To lose one's temper excessively; to lose all self-control.

To go over the top. To take the final plunge. A phrase from the trench warfare of World War I, when, at ZERO HOUR, troops climbed over the parapet of the front-line trenches to advance across NO-MAN'S LAND to attack the enemy front line.

To sleep like a top. See under SLEEP.

The top o' the morning to ye! A cheery greeting on a fine day, especially in IRELAND. It is about the same as, "The best of everything to you!"

Top dog. The one who by skill, personality or violence obtains the mastery, as the dog who is on top of his adversary in a fight.

Top-heavy. Liable to tip over because the centre of gravity is too high; intoxicated.

Top sawyer. A first-rate fellow, a distinguished man. Literally, the sawyer who works the upper handle in a saw-pit; hence one who holds a superior position.

Top secret. Service or governmental information about which the greatest secrecy is to be observed. Cp. HUSH-HUSH.

Topping out. Traditional drinking ceremony when the framework of a building is completed.

Topham. Take him, Topham. Catch him if you can; lay hold of him, TIPSTAFF.

Topham was the BLACK ROD of the HOUSE OF COMMONS in the reign of Charles II, very active in apprehending suspects during the supposed conspiracy revealed by Titus Oates. "Take him, Topham," became a proverbial saying of the time.

Tophet (tō' fet). The valley of the children of Hinnom through which children were made "to pass through the fire to MOLECH" (II Kings xxiii, 10). Isaiah (xxx, 31), in prophesying the destruction of the Assyrians, foretold that their king would be destroyed by fire in Tophet. It is a loathsome place associated with horror and defilement, a place of human sacrifice, but its location is a matter of surmise. The name is taken as symbolical of HELL.

and it may mean "a place to be spat upon" or "the place of burning".

The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence
And black Gehenna call'd the Type of Hell.
MILTON: Paradise Lost, I, 404.

Toplady Ring. A ring set with stones in the form of the pips on the ten of diamonds; named after Augustus Montagu Toplady in allusion to the story of his beginning to write the ROCK OF AGES on this playing card.

Topsy. The little slave girl in Harriet Beecher Stowe's Uncle Tom's Cabin (1852); chiefly remembered because when asked by "Aunt Ophelia" about her parents she maintained that she had neither father nor mother, her solution of her existence being, "I 'spect I grow'd."

Topsy-turvy. Upside down; probably top, with so and obsolete terve, connected with O.E. tearfian, to turn or roll over. SHAKESPEARE says (Henry IV, Pt. I, iv, i), "Turn it topsy-turvy down."

Torah (tor' á) (Heb., the law). The Jewish term for the PENTATEUCH which contains the Mosaic Law; the revealed will of God as contained in the Jewish Scriptures.

Torch. The code-name for the Allied plan for the North African landings which began on 8 November 1942.

To carry the torch (U.S.A.). To suffer unrequited love, the torch being the torch of love. A torch singer is a female who sings sentimental ditties of such love.

To hand on the torch. To maintain and transmit knowledge, learning, etc., to the succeeding generation. The allusion is to the runners at ancient Greek festivals passing on the torch in relays.

Torpids. The name given to the LENT boat races at Oxford, between the second crews of colleges. A second-class racing boat is called a torpid.

Torricelli. An Italian mathematician (1608-1647), noted for his explanation of the rise of mercury in a common barometer. Galileo explained the phenomenon by the IPSE DIXIT of "Nature abhors a vacuum."

Hence Torricellian tube, the barometer, and Torricellian vacuum, the vacuum above the mercury in this.

Torso. A statue or human body devoid of head and limbs. The word is Ital. for a trunk or stalk, from Lat. thyrsus, the attribute of BACCHUS.

The Torso Belvedere, the famous torso of HERCULES in the VATICAN, was discovered in the 15th century. It is said that MICHAELANGELO greatly admired it.

Tortoise. This animal is frequently taken as the type of plodding persistence—"slow but sure".

In Hindu myth, the tortoise Chukwa supports the elephant Maha-pudma, which in its turn supports the world.

The name tortoise (Lat. testudo) is also given to the ancient Roman protective shelter formed by soldiers with shields overlapped above their heads when attacking a fort.

Achilles and the tortoise. See under ACHILLES.

The hare and the tortoise. See under HARE.

Tory (tôr' i) (Irish toiridhe, toruidhe, a pursuer, plunderer). The name applied in the 17th century to Irish ROMAN CATHOLIC outlaws and bandits who harassed the English in IRELAND. In the reign of Charles II, the name came to be applied as an abusive term to the supporters of the Crown and its prerogatives at the time of the struggle over the Exclusion Bills. As supporters of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND they opposed NON-CONFORMIST and Roman Catholic alike, but most of them acquiesced in the Revolution of 1688. Tory extremists remained JACOBITES at the time of the Hanoverian succession which led to a WHIG monopoly of political power during the reign of George I and George II, after which they regained office under Pitt the Younger and remained dominant throughout the period of the French Revolutionary and Napoleonic Wars. From about 1830, the Tory party under the leadership of Peel came to be called CONSERVATIVE, the older name being associated with reaction. Nowadays Tory and Conservative are essentially interchangeable terms. Cp. DIEHARD; LIBERAL; UNIONIST.

Toss. A toss up. An even chance; a matter of heads or tails as in the spinning of a coin.

Totem (tō' tem). A North American Indian (Algonkin) word for some natural object, usually an animal, taken as the emblem of a person or CLAN on account of a supposed relationship. Persons bearing the same totem were not allowed to marry, thus totemism prevented intermarriage between near relations. The animal borne as one's totem must neither be killed nor eaten. Totemism is common among primitive peoples.

Totem pole. The post standing before a dwelling on which grotesque and frequently brilliantly coloured representations of the TOTEM were carved or hung. It is often of great size, and sometimes so broad at the base that an archway is cut through it.

Touch. Touch pieces. See KING'S EVIL.

To be in, or keep in touch. To maintain contact with someone either in person, or by correspondence, etc.

Touch and go. A very narrow escape; a METAPHOR derived, perhaps, from driving when the wheel of one vehicle touches that of another passing vehicle without doing mischief. It was a touch, but neither vehicle was stopped, each could go on.

Touch down. In Rugby and American football, to score by touching the ball on the ground within a certain defined area behind the opponent's goal posts.

When an aircraft lands it is said to touch down.

Touché (too' shā) (Fr., touched). An acknowledgement of a telling remark or rejoinder by one's opponent in an argument. It is the fencing term denoting a hit or touch.

Touchstone. A dark, flinty schist, jasper, or basanite (the Lapis Lydius of the ancients); so called because GOLD was assayed by comparing the streak made on it by the sample of gold with those made by touch-needles of known gold content, after all the streaks had been treated with nitric acid. The needles were made of varying proportions of gold and SILVER, gold and copper, or of all three metals. Hence the use of touchstone as any criterion or standard.

Ovid (Metamorphoses, Bk. II, xi) tells us that Battus saw MERCURY steal APOLLO's oxen, and Mercury gave him a cow to secure his silence, but, being distrustful of the man, changed himself into a peasant, and offered him a cow and an ox if he would tell him where he got the cow. Battus, caught in the trap, told the secret, and Mercury changed him into a touchstone.

Men have a touchstone whereby to try gold; but gold is the touchstone whereby to try men.

FULLER: The Holy State and the Profane State (The Good Judge).

Touchstone is the name given to the clown in SHAKESPEARE'S As You Like It.

Tour. The Grand Tour. In the 17th, 18th, and early 19th centuries it was the custom of families of rank and substance to finish their sons' education by sending them under the guardianship of a tutor or BEAR-LEADER on a tour through France, Switzerland, Italy, and home through western Germany. This was known as the Grand Tour and sometimes a couple of years or more were devoted to it. The young men were supposed to study the history, language, etc., of each country they visited and such travel was a distinguishing mark between the great landowners and the ordinary squire.

Tour de force (Fr.). A feat of strength or skill.

Tournament (O. Fr. torneiment; from Lat. tornare, to turn). In the days of CHIVALRY, a martial sport or contest among knights of jousting or tilting; the chief art being to manœuvre or turn your horse away to avoid the adversary's blow. Usually blunted weapons were used and the contests came to be associated with elaborate pageantry. See QUINTAIN.

The Eglinton Tournament. A revival or replica of a mediæval tournament at Eglinton Castle, Ayrshire, in August 1839. Lady Seymour was made Queen of Love and Beauty and the ladies wore fashions of the 14th and 15th centuries. The Marquess of Londonderry was King of the Tournament and society men practised the role of KNIGHT, among them Prince Louis Napoleon (afterwards NAPOLEON III). The affair is substantially depicted in Disraeli's Endymion.

Then on a barded Arab, herself dressed in cloth of gold parti-coloured with violet and crimson, came, amid tremendous cheering, the Queen of Beauty herself. Twelve attendants bore aloft a silken canopy, which did not conceal from the enraptured multitude the lustre of her matchless loveliness.

Endymion, ch. lix.

The tournament of Tottenham. A comic romance, given in PERCY'S RELIQUES. A number of clowns are introduced, practising warlike games, and making vows like KNIGHTS of high degree. They tilt on cart-horses, fight with plough-shares and flails, and wear for armour wooden bowls and saucepan-lids.

Tours (toor). Geoffrey of Monmouth (Historia Britonum, xvi) says that BRUTUS had a nephew called Turonus who slew 600 men before being overwhelmed by the Gauls. "From him the city of Tours derived its name, because he was buried there." The name, in fact, derives from the Turones, a people of Gallia Lugdunensis.

Tout ensemble (too ton sombl) (Fr.). The whole massed together; the general effect.

Tower, The. Specifically, the Tower of London, the oldest part of which is the great keep known as the WHITE TOWER, built by WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, traditionally on the site of a fort erected by Julius CÆSAR.

Ye Towers of Julius, London's lasting shame,
With many a foul and midnight murder fed,
GRAY: The Bard.

As well as a fortress, it has a special place in English history, both as a royal residence down to the reign of James I, and as a state prison. It has also housed the Royal MINT (until 1810), a menagerie and the Public Records, and is still the home of the Crown Jewels. Among those buried in its chapel are Protector Somerset, the Duke of Northumberland, Anne Boleyn, Katharine Howard, Lord Guildford Dudley, Lady Jane Grey, the Duke of Monmouth, and Lords Kilmarnock, Balmerino, and Lovat (supporters of the FORTY-FIVE REBELLION). State prisoners confined there range from Ralf Flambard to Sir Walter Raleigh, Sir Roger Casement, and Rudolf Hess. See also BEEFEATERS; CEREMONY OF THE KEYS under Key.

The Princes in the Tower. The boy King Edward V and his younger brother Richard, Duke of York, who were lodged in the TOWER (May-June 1483), after which their uncle Richard, Duke of Gloucester, assumed the crown as Richard III. The princes disappeared at this time and are generally presumed to have been murdered by their uncle, but there is no conclusive evidence. Bones found during excavations near the WHITE TOWER in 1674 were transferred to Westminster Abbey. In 1933, experts proclaimed them to be bones of children of ages corresponding to those of the the princes.

Tower Liberty. The Tower of London with the fortifications and Tower Hill. This formed part of the ancient demesne of the Crown, with jurisdiction and privileges distinct from and independent of the CITY. Its bounds are still beaten triennially by choirboys and children after a service in the Royal Chapel of St. Peter ad Vincula. Governor, Chaplain, Wardens and residents accompany them and at each of the 31 boundary stones the Chaplain exclaims, "Cursed is he who removeth his neighbours' landmark." The Chief Warder then says: "Whack it, boys, whack it."

Tower of Babel. See BABEL; CONFUSION OF TONGUES under TONGUE.

Towers of Silence. See under SILENCE.

Tower pound. The legal pound of 5,400 grains (11½ oz. TROY WEIGHT), used in England until the adoption of the Troy pound in 1526. So called from the standard pound kept in the TOWER of London. See PENNYWEIGHT.

Town (O.E. tun, Ger. Zaun, a hedge or enclosure). Originally a group of dwellings surrounded by a hedge or wall.

Town and Gown. The two sections of a university town; composed of those not connected with the university and those who are members of it; hence a town and gown row, a collision or brawl between the students and non-gownsmen. See PHILISTINES.

Here another Town and Gown party had fought their way from the Corn-market; and the Gown getting considerably the worse of the conflict, had taken refuge within Exeter College by the express order of the Senior Proctor, The Rev. Thomas Tozer, more familiarly known as "old Towser".

CUTHBERT BEDE:

The Adventures of Mr. Verdant Green, II, iv.

Town bull. The parish bull, kept for breeding purposes.

And so, brother Toby, this poor Bull of mine . . . might have been driven into Doctors' Commons and lost his character—which to a Town Bull, brother Toby, is the very same thing as his life.

STERNE: Tristram Shandy, IX, xxxiii.

Town crier, also called a bellman, a town official, usually in a robe, ringing a bell and crying OYEZ! OYEZ! to attract attention to his public announcements and proclamations. The earlier bellman was a night watchman whose duty was to parade the streets at night and call out the hours, etc.

Going to town. Letting oneself go in a lighthearted fashion. To go to town on something is to GO THE WHOLE HOG (see under HOG), to exploit the situation to the full. The expression is of American origin, probably originating among those in the backwoods who went to town for a spree.

A man about town. See under MAN.

Town is empty. The season is over; SOCIETY has left town for the country. See LONDON SEASON under SEASON.

A woman of the town. A prostitute.

Toyshop of Europe, The. So Burke called Birmingham. Here the word "toy" does not refer to playthings for children, but to trinkets, knick-knacks, and similar articles.

Trachtenberg System. A system of speedy mathematical calculations based upon simple counting according to prescribed keys or formulæ which need to be memorized. There is no division or multiplication as such, and complicated calculations can be more easily and rapidly handled than by normal processes. The system was devised by Jakow Trachtenberg (b. 1888) during his seven long years in the NAZI concentration camp. He was born at Odessa and trained as an engineer and became a refugee in Germany after the Russian Revolution. See CALCULATOR.

Tractarians. See OXFORD MOVEMENT.

Tracy. All the Tracys have the wind in their faces. Those who do wrong will always meet with punishment. William de Tracy was the most active of the four KNIGHTS who slew Thomas à Becket, and for this misdeed all who bore the name were saddled by the Church with this ban:

Wherever by sea or land they go
For ever the wind in their face shall blow.

Trade. The Trade. Usually the liquor trade, especially those engaged in brewing and distilling; also applied to those engaged in the particular trade under consideration.

The Balance of Trade. See under BALANCE.

Board of Trade. A government department concerned with the various aspects of trade, first set up in 1786. It developed from the various PRIVY COUNCIL Committees of Trade appointed from 1622 onwards which were then much concerned with colonial matters.

Free Trade. See under FREE.

Trade board. A committee representing workers and management set up under Act of PARLIAMENT to regulate conditions of labour in a particular industry.

Trade dollar. A United States silver DOLLAR formerly coined specially for Oriental trade. It weighed 420 gr., instead of the 412.5 gr. of the ordinary dollar, and has not been coined since 1887.

Trade mark. The name or distinctive device for an article made for sale indicating that it was made by the holder of that device. Trade marks are usually registered and protected by law.

Trade Union. An association of employees formed for the promotion and protection of their working conditions, wages, etc., by collective bargaining, and sometimes also acting as Friendly Societies to their members. Nowadays they constitute powerful pressure groups. They are essentially a by-product of the INDUSTRIAL REVOLUTION. Cp. TOLPUDDLE MARTYRS.

Trade winds. Winds that blow trade, i.e. regularly in one track or direction (Low Ger. Trade, track). In the Northern Hemisphere they blow from the north-east, and in the Southern Hemisphere from the south-east, about 30 degrees each side of the Equator. In some places they blow six months in one direction, and six months in the opposite.

To blow trade. See TRADE WINDS above.

To trade something in. To hand over a part-worn article (e.g. a cooking stove or motor-car) in part payment for a new one).

To trade something off. To barter or exchange it; to sell it as a "JOB LOT".

To trade upon. To make use of so as to gain some advantage, as in making unscrupulous use of private knowledge, or using a personal affliction to arouse sympathy, other people's kindness and generosity, etc.

Trade follows the flag. Wherever the flag flies trade with the mother country develops and prospers; where the flag is established trade will grow up.

Colonists did not follow the flag; they pushed forward into new fields from the centres that had first been annexed, and the flag had to follow them despite the reluctance of the Home Government to extend its territorial responsibilities.

A. P. NEWTON:
A Hundred Years of the British Empire, I.

Tragedy. Literally, a goat-song (Gr. tragos, goat; ode, song), though why so called is not clear. HORACE (Ars Poetica, 220) says, because the winner at choral competitions received a goat as a prize, but the explanation has no authority. Cp. COMEDY.

It was ARISTOTLE (in his Poetics) who said that tragedy should move one "by pity and terror":

The plot ought to be so constructed that, even without the aid of the eye, he who hears the tale told will thrill with horror and melt to pity at what takes place.

ARISTOTLE: Poetics, xix (Butcher).

The Father of Tragedy. A title given to ÆSCHYLUS (d. 456 B.C.), author of the Orestean trilogy and many other tragedies, and to Thespis. See THESPIANS.

Trail. To trail one's coat. See under COAT.

Train-bands. Locally-raised bodies of citizen soldiers or MILITIA of little military value, with the exception of those of London. They derived from an order of Elizabeth I (1573) that a "convenient number" in every county were to be organized in bands and trained. They were not willing to leave their districts and were seldom suitably trained.

John Gilpin was a citizen
Of credit and renown,
A train-band captain eke was he
Of famous London town.

COWPER: John Gilpin.

Traitor's Gate. The old water gate under St. Thomas's Tower to the THAMES under which many state prisoners were brought to imprisonment or death in the TOWER of London. An old proverb says:

A loyal heart may be landed at the Traitor's Gate.

Trajan (trā' ján). Marcus Ulpius Trajanus, Roman Emperor (c. 53, 88-117), notable for his campaigns against the Dacians and Parthians, and for his buildings and public works.

Trajan's Arch. There are two arches known by this name, commemorating the triumphs of Trajan. One, the finest ancient arch in existence, was erected in A.D. 114 over the APPIAN WAY at Benevento, and the other in 112 at Ancona. Both are of white marble.

Trajan's Column. See under COLUMN.

Trajan's Wall. A line of fortifications stretching across the Dobrudja from Czernavoda to the BLACK SEA.

Tram. The old "popular" derivation of this word from the name of Benjamin Outram, who ran vehicles on stone rails at Little Eaton, Derbyshire, in 1800, is discredited. The word is connected with Low Ger. Traam, a baulk or beam, and was applied as early as the 16th century to trucks used in coal mines, and run on long wooden beams as rails.

Trams are a kind of sledge on which coals are brought from the place where they are hewn to the shaft. A tram has four wheels but a sledge is without wheels.

BRAND: History of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, vol. II, p. 681 (1789).

Tramontana (tra mon ta' na). The north wind; so called by the Italians, because to them it comes from over the mountains (Lat. trans, across; montem, mountain).

Tramontane (tra mon' tăn). Beyond the mountain, i.e. on the other side of the Alps from ROME; hence, barbarous, foreign; as a noun, a barbarian or foreigner. See ULTRAMONTANE.

Transept. An architectural term (from the Lat. trans, across; septum, enclosure) for the transverse portion of any building lying across the main body of that building. The transept became common in ecclesiastical architecture in the MIDDLE AGES and almost universal in the GOTHIC period. The CROSS is often surmounted by a tower, spire, or dome. In a BASILICA church the transept is the transverse portion in front of the choir.

Translator-General. So Fuller, in his Worthies (1662), calls Philemon Holland (1552-1637), who translated works by Pliny, Livy, Plutarch, and a large number of other Greek and Latin classics.

Transmigration of Souls. An ancient belief concerning the transition of the soul after death to another body or substance, usually human or animal; also known as metempsychosis. BRAHMINS and Buddhists accept human descent into plants as well as animals, and the BUDDHA underwent 550 births in different forms. The ancient Egyptians held to a form of transmigration in which the soul could inhabit another form to allow temporary revisiting of the earth. See PYTHAGORAS.

Transubstantiation. (trăn sub stan shi ā' shon). A change from one substance into another. Theologically, the change of the whole substance of the bread and wine in the EUCHARIST to the body and blood of Christ, only their outward form or accidents remaining.

Trap. Slang for the mouth; also old slang for a policeman; shut your trap, be quiet.

Trappists. Properly, the CISTERCIANS of the French abbey at Soligny La Trappe (founded 1140) after their reform and reorganization in 1664. They were absorbed by the Cistercians of the Strict Observance in 1892, to whom the name is now applied. They are noted for extreme austerity, their rule including absolute silence, a common dormitory, and no recreation.

Traps. Luggage; one's personal belongings, etc., as in Leave your traps at the station.

Traps being short for trappings, bits of additional finery for decoration, especially the ornamental harness or caparison of a horse (Fr. drap, cloth).

Traskites. A sect of Puritan SABBATARIANS founded by John Trask, a Somerset man, about 1620. They believed that the law as laid down for the ancient Hebrews was to be taken literally and applied to themselves and all men. Trask was brought before the STAR CHAMBER and pilloried. He is said to have recanted later and to have become an ANTINOMIAN, and his followers became absorbed by the SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

Travellers' Tales. Tall yarns; exaggerated stories of wonderful adventures and sights. Telling such tales used to be called tipping one the traveller.

Travelogue (trăv' è log). A lecture or running commentary delivered to accompany a moving picture of travel.

Tre, Pol, Pen. See CORNISH NAMES.

Treacle properly means an antidote against the bite of wild beasts (Gr. theriake; from ther, a wild beast). The ancients gave the name to several sorts of antidotes, but ultimately it was applied chiefly to Venice treacle (theriaca androchi), a compound of some 64 drugs in honey.

Sir Thomas More speaks of "a most strong treacle [i.e. antidote] against these venomous heresies". See also TREACLE BIBLE, under BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Tread. To tread on his corns. See under CORN.

To tread the boards. To perform on the stage; to be an actor; the boards being the planks of the stage.

Treason. Betrayal of a trust or of a person.

High treason is an act of treachery against the SOVEREIGN or the State, a violation of one's allegiance; Petty treason is the same against a subject, as the murder of a master by his servant. See also MISPRISION OF TREASON.

Treasure. These are my treasures; meaning the sick and the poor. So said St. LAWRENCE when the Roman prætor commanded him to deliver up his treasures. See also CORNELIA.

Treasure trove (O. Fr. trove, found). The term applied to coins and other valuables of GOLD or SILVER found in the ground or other place of concealment. Gold ornaments, etc., found in tombs where there is no purpose of concealment are not treasure trove. Treasure trove belongs to the Crown, but in practice the finder is usually given the market value of his find. A recent find is thus reported (The Times, 25 Sept. 1968):

Mainly nobles, they are part of the "Fishpool Hoard" of 1,237 coins, which were found on a building site near Newstead Abbey in Nottinghamshire in March, 1966.

The hoard, which is described by the British Museum as "the largest find of mediæval gold coins so far recorded in England and of quite exceptional importance," was declared to be treasure trove by a coroner's jury.

Treasury. Treasury Bills are a form of British government security issued in multiples of £1,000 and repayable in 3, 6, 9, or 12 months.

Treasury Bonds are for money borrowed for a number of years.

Treasury Notes were issued by the Treasury from 1924 to 1928 for £1 and 10s. Their place was then taken by notes issued by the Bank of England.

Treasury of the Church, Treasury of Merits, or of Satisfactions. The theological term for the superabundant store of merits and satisfactions of Christ which were beyond the needs of the salvation of the human race. To these are added the excess of merits and satisfactions of the B.V.M. and the SAINTS.

It is by drawing on this treasury that the Church grants INDULGENCES.

Treat. To stand treat. To pay the expenses of some entertainment; especially to pay for drinks consumed by others.

Tree. For particulars of some famous and patriarchal trees see under OAK and YEW.

In the Natural History Museum, South Kensington, is the section of a Sequoia gigantea with 1,335 rings, representing that number of years, and the Jardin des Plantes at Paris has a similar section. There are yet older trees still in full life in the forests of America.

The CROSS on which Our Lord was crucified is frequently spoken of in hymns and poetry as the tree. See Acts v, 30, ". . . Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree"; and I Pet. ii, 24, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree".

The gallows is also called the tree, or the fatal tree. See TYBURN TREE.

One proverb says, "If on the trees the leaves still hold, the coming winter will be cold," and another, "When caught by the tempest, wherever it be, if it lightens and thunders beware of a tree."

The Tree of Buddha, or of Wisdom. The BO-TREE.

The Tree of Diana. See PHILOSOPHER'S TREE.

The Tree of Knowledge. The tree which God planted, together with the Tree of Life, in the Garden of EDEN.

"But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Gen. ii, 17). EVE partook of the forbidden fruit and gave some to ADAM; "And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever" (Gen. iii, 22); and so the first man and the first woman were driven from the garden and the woes of mankind began.

The Tree of Liberty. A post or tree set up by the people, hung with flags and devices and crowned with a CAP OF LIBERTY. In the United States, poplars and other trees were planted during the War of Independence "as growing symbols of growing freedom". The JACOBINS in Paris planted their first trees of liberty in 1790, and used to decorate them with tri-coloured ribbons, circles to indicate unity, triangles to signify equality, and Caps of Liberty. Trees of liberty were also planted by the Italians in the revolution of 1848.

The Tree of Life. See TREE OF KNOWLEDGE.

The Tree of the Universe. YGGDRASIL.
At the top of the tree. At the highest position attainable in one's profession, calling, etc.

The tree is known by its fruit. One is judged by what one does, not by what one says. The saying is from Matt. xii, 33.

A tree must be bent while it is young. "You can't teach an old dog new tricks." (See under DOG). The Scots say, "Thraw the wand while it is green."

The treeness of the tree. The essential qualities that compose a tree; in the absence of which the tree would cease to be a tree. Hence, the absolute essentials of anything. The phrase is evidently modelled on Sterne's "Correggiosity of Correggio" (Tristram Shandy, III, xii).

Up a tree. In a difficulty, in a mess, nonplussed. An American phrase, from 'coon hunting. As soon as the 'coon is driven up a tree he is helpless.

It is said that Spurgeon used to practise his students in extempore preaching, and that one of his young men, on reaching the desk and opening the note containing his text, read the single word "Zacchæus". He thought for a minute or two, and then delivered himself thus:

Zacchæus was a little man, so am I; Zacchæus was up a tree, so am I; Zacchæus made haste and came down, and so do I.

You cannot judge of a tree by its bark. Don't go by appearances; an old proverb.

Tregeagle (Trē gā' gul). A kind of Cornish BLUEBEARD who sold his soul to the DEVIL and married and murdered numerous rich heiresses, and whose ghost haunts various parts of Cornwall. His allotted task is to bale out Dozmary Pool on Bodmin Moor with a leaky limpet shell. Hence to bale out Dozmary Pool with a limpet shell as a local expression for an impossibility. When the wintry blast howls over the moor, the people say it is Tregeagle roaring, and a child crying lustily is said to be "roaring worse than Tregeagle".

Trench fever. A remittent or relapsing fever affecting men living in trenches, dug-outs, etc., and transmitted by the excrement of lice. It first appeared in World War I, in the static warfare on the Western Front.

Trencher. Trencher cap. The MORTARBOARD worn at college; so called from the trenched or split boards which form the top.

Trencher friends. Persons who cultivate the friendship of others for the sake of sitting at their board, and the good things they can get.

Trencher knight. A table KNIGHT, a suitor from CUPBOARD LOVE.

A good trencher-man. Usually said of a good eater, his opposite being a poor trencher-man. The trencher was the platter on which food was cut (Fr. trencher, to cut) or served, and the term trencher-man is sometimes applied to a cook or table companion.

He that waits for another's trencher eats many a late dinner. He who is dependent on others must wait, and wait, and wait, happy if after waiting he gets anything at all.

Trenchmore. A popular dance in the 16th and 17th centuries.

Like one dancing the trenchmore he stamped up and downe the y^{ard} holding his hips in his hands.
T. DELONEY: The Gentle Craft, Pt. II, ii (1597).

Trente et quarante. See ROUGE ET NOIR.

Tressure. A border within an heraldic shield and surrounding the bearings. The origin of the "double tressure flory-counterflory gules" in the royal arms of SCOTLAND is traced by old heralds to the 9th century. They assert that CHARLEMAGNE granted it to King Achaius of Scotland in token of alliance, and as an assurance that "the lilies of France should be a defence to the lion of Scotland".

Trèves. The Holy Coat of Trèves. See under HOLY.

Tria Juncta in Uno (Lat., three combined in one). The motto of the Order of the BATH. It refers to the three classes of which the order consists, viz. Knights Grand Cross, Knights Commander, and Companions.

Triads. Three subjects more or less connected, treated as a group; as the Creation, Redemption, and Resurrection; BRAHMA, VISHNU, and SIVA; ALEXANDER THE GREAT, JULIUS CÆSAR, and NAPOLEON; Law, Physic, and Divinity.

The Welsh Triads are collections of historic facts, mythological traditions, moral maxims, or rules of poetry disposed in groups of three for mnemonic purposes.

Trial at Bar. See under BAR.

Tribune (trib' ūn). A chief magistrate, and very powerful official among the ancient Romans. During the revolt of the plebs in 494 B.C. they appointed two tribunes as protectors against the patricians' oppression; later the number was increased to ten and their office put on a proper footing. They were personally inviolable, and could separately VETO measures and proceedings.

Trice

As a military title tribune denoted the commander of a cohort.

A tribune of the people. A democratic leader.

The Last of the Tribunes. See under LAST.

Trice. In a trice. In an instant; in a twinkling.

To tell you what conceyte
I had then in a tryce
The matter were too nyse.

SKELTON: Phyllyp Sparowe, 1130 (c. 1505).

It is probably trice, to haul, to tie up; the idea being "at a single tug". The older expression was at a trice.

At door where this trull was,
I was at a tryce.

JOHN T. HEYWOOD: Play of Love, 1534.

Tricolour. A FLAG of three broad stripes of different colours, especially the national standard of France, blue, white, and red. The first flag of the Republicans was green. The tricolour was adopted 11 July 1789, when the people were disgusted with the king for dismissing Necker; the popular tale is that the insurgents had adopted for their flag the two colours, red and blue (the colours of the city of Paris), but that Lafayette persuaded them to add the BOURBON white, to show that they bore no hostility to the king.

Other tricolours are the flags of:

- * Afghanistan, black, red, green; divided vertically.
- * Andorra, blue, yellow, red; vertically.
- Belgium*, black, yellow, red; vertically.
- * Bolivia, red, yellow, green; horizontally.
- * Bulgaria, white, green, red; horizontally.
- * Cameroun, green, red, yellow; vertically.
- Chad*, blue, yellow, red; vertically.
- Colombia*, yellow, blue, red; horizontally.
- Dahomey*, vertical green in hoist, then horizontal yellow and red.
- * Ecuador, yellow, blue, red; horizontally.
- * Ethiopia, green, yellow, red; horizontally.
- Gabon*, green, gold, blue; horizontally.
- * German Democratic Republic, black, red, gold; horizontally.
- German Federal Republic*, black, red, gold; horizontally.

- * Ghana, red, gold, green; horizontally.
- Guinea*, red, yellow, green; vertically.
- Hungary*, red, white, green; horizontally.
- * India, saffron, white, green; horizontally.
- * Iran, green, white, red; horizontally.
- * Iraq, red, white, black; horizontally.
- Ireland*, green, white, orange; vertically.
- Italy*, green, white, red; vertically.
- Ivory Coast*, orange, white, green; vertically.
- * Libya, red, black, green; horizontally.
- Luxembourg*, red, white, blue; horizontally.
- Malagasy Republic*, vertical white in hoist, then horizontal red and green.
- * Malawi, black, red, green; horizontally.
- * Mali, green, gold, black; vertically.
- * Mexico, green, white, red; vertically.
- Netherlands*, red, white, blue; horizontally.
- * Niger, orange, white, green; horizontally.
- * Paraguay, red, white, blue; horizontally.
- Rumania*, blue, yellow, red; vertically.
- * Rwanda, red, green, yellow; vertically.
- * Senegal, green, gold, red; vertically.
- Sierra Leone*, green, white, blue; horizontally.
- * South Africa, orange, white, blue; horizontally.
- Sudan*, blue, yellow, green; horizontally.
- * Syria, red, white, black; horizontally.
- Upper Volta*, black, white, red; horizontally.
- * United Arab Republic, red, white, black; horizontally.
- * Venezuela, yellow, blue, red; horizontally.
- * Yemen, black, white, red; horizontally.
- Yugoslavia*, blue, white, red; horizontally.

Those bearing devices and emblems are marked thus *

Tricoteuses (trê kot êrz'). Parisian women who, during the French Revolution, used to attend the meetings of the CONVENTION and, while they went on with their tricotage (knitting), encouraged the leaders in their bloodthirsty excesses. They gained for themselves the additional title, Furies of the Guillotine.

Trident. In Greek mythology, the three-pronged spear which POSEIDON (Roman NEPTUNE), god of the sea, bore as the symbol of his sovereignty. It has come to be regarded as the emblem of sea power and as such is borne by BRITANNIA. In gladiatorial combats in ROME, the trident was used by the RETIARIUS, whose skill lay in entangling his opponent in a net, and then despatching him with his trident.

Trigon (tri' gon). In ASTROLOGY, the junction of three signs. The ZODIAC is partitioned into four trigons, named respectively after the four elements: the watery trigon includes CANCER, SCORPIO, and Pisces; the fiery, ARIES, Leo, and SAGITTARIUS; the earthy, TAURUS, Virgo (see VIRGIN), and CAPRICORN; and the airy, GEMINI, LIBRA, and AQUARIUS.

Trilogy (tri' ò jì). A group of three tragedies. Everyone in Greece who took part in the poetic contest had to produce a trilogy and a satiric drama. The only complete specimen extant contains the Agamemnon, the Choephoræ, and the Eumenides, by ÆSCHYLUS.

Hence, any literary, dramatic, or operatic work consisting of three self-contained parts but related to a central theme, such as SHAKESPEARE'S Henry VI or Schiller's Wallenstein.

Trimalchio (tri mál' ki ò). The vulgar, ostentatious, and fabulously rich parvenu of Petronius Arbiter's satirical romance, Petronii Arbitri Satiricon (1st century A.D.); the subject of allusion on account of the colossal and extravagant banquet (Dinner of Trimalchio) that he gave.

Trimmer. One who "runs with the hare and hunts with the hounds." (See under HARE.) George Savile, Marquis of Halifax (1633-1695), circulated a pamphlet in 1688 called On the Character of a Trimmer in which he defended his policy of "trimming" or avoiding party extremes and excesses. Owing to his frequent changes of side he was called Halifax the Trimmer.

Trimurti (Sansk. tri, three; mirti, form). The Hindu TRIAD of BRAHMA, VISHNU, and SIVA as a unity, represented as one body with three heads. It bears only a forced resemblance to the idea of a TRINITY.

Trine (Lat. trinus, threefold). In ASTROLOGY, a PLANET distant from another one-third of the circle is said to be in trine; one-fourth, it is in square; one-sixth or two signs, it is in sextile; but when one-half distant, it is said to be "opposite".

In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite Of noxious efficacy.
MILTON: Paradise Lost, X, 659.

Planets distant from each other six signs or half a circle have opposite influences, and are therefore opposed to each other.

Trinitarians. Believers in the doctrine of the Holy TRINITY as distinct from UNITARIANS. Also, members of the Order of the Most Holy Trinity, or Mathurins, founded by St. John of Matha and St. Felix of Valois in 1198, concerned with the ransoming of captives and slaves and sometimes known as REDEMPTIONISTS. Their rule is an austere form of the AUGUSTINIAN.

Trinity, The. The three Persons in one God—God the Father, God the Son, and God the HOLY GHOST. See also CONFOUNDING THE PERSONS under PERSON; THREE.

And in this Trinity none is afore, or after other; none is greater, or less than another; but the whole three Persons are co-eternal together: and co-equal.

The Athanasian Creed.

The term TRIAD was first used by Theophilus of Antioch (c. 180) for this concept; the term Trinity was introduced by Tertullian about 217 in his treatise Adversus Praxean.

Trinity, or Trinity Sunday. The SUNDAY next after WHIT SUNDAY, widely observed as a feast in honour of the Trinity since the MIDDLE AGES and its general observance enjoined by Pope John XXII in 1334. The EPISTLE and GOSPEL used in the CHURCH OF ENGLAND on this day are the same as those in the Lectionary of St. JEROME, and the Collect comes from the Sacramentary of St. GREGORY. The Church of England follows the Sarum Use in reckoning Sundays after Trinity, the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH reckons them after PENTECOST.

Trinity House, Corporation of. The chief pilotage authority of the UNITED KINGDOM controlling the lighting and marking of British coastal waters and certain maritime charities. Its headquarters are at Tower Hill, London, and its work is controlled by Elder Brethren consisting of nine master mariners and one senior officer of the Royal Navy. It developed from the gild of mariners and lodesmen of Deptford Strond, Kent, who obtained a charter from Henry VIII in 1512, and it acquired the Lord High Admiral's rights of buoyage and beaconage in 1594. Private lighthouses were acquired under an Act of 1836.

Trinity Term. The period of law sittings in England from the first TUESDAY after TRINITY SUNDAY to the end of JULY.

Trinobantes (trin ò bän' tēz). A tribe, referred to in Cæsar's Gallic Wars, inhabiting the area of Essex and the southern part of Suffolk. The name was corrupted into Trinovantes. See TROYNOVANT.

Tripehound. In Australian slang, a DOG on a sheep station; in England the word has been adopted as a term of opprobrium.

Tripitaka (trip it' a ka) (Pali, "the three-fold basket"). The three classes into which the sacred writings of the Buddhists are divided—viz. the Vinayapitaka, (Basket of Disciplinary Directions for the monks), the Sutrapitaka (Basket of Aphorisms or Discourses), and the Abhidhammapitaka (Basket of Metaphysics).

Tripes (tri' pos) (Lat. tripus, a three-footed stool). A Cambridge term, meaning the three honour classes in which candidates are grouped at the final examination, whether of Mathematics, Law, Theology, or Natural Science, etc. So called because the B.A. who disputed with the "Father" in the Philosophy School on ASH WEDNESDAY sat on a three-legged stool and was called "Mr. Tripes".

Triptolemus (trip tol' ē mūs). A Greek hero and demi-god who was born at Eleusis and taught the arts of agriculture by CERES. He established the ELEUSINIAN MYSTERIES and festivals.

Trisagion (tris āg' i on) (Gr., thrice holy). A hymn in the liturgies of the Greek and Eastern Churches in which (after Is. vi, 3) a threefold invocation to the Deity is the burden—"Holy God, Holy and Mighty, Holy and Immortal, have mercy on us."

The name is sometimes applied to Bishop Heber's hymn for Trinity Sunday—

Holy, Holy, Holy! Lord God Almighty,
Early in the morning our song shall rise to Thee—which is more properly called the Ter-Sanctus.

Triskellon (tri skel' i on) (Gr., three-legged). The emblem of the Isle of MAN, and of Sicily; three human legs, bent at the knee, and joined at the thigh.

Trismegistus. See HERMETIC ART.

Tristram, Sir (Tristram, Tristan, or Tristem). A hero of mediæval romance whose exploits, though originally unconnected with it, became attached to the ARTHURIAN cycle, he himself being named as one of the Knights of the ROUND TABLE. There are many versions of his story, which is, roughly, that he was cured of a wound by Iseult, or YSOLDE, daughter of the king of IRELAND, and on his return to CORNWALL told his uncle, King MARK, of the beautiful princess. Mark sent him to solicit her hand in marriage, and was accepted. Tristram escorted her to ENGLAND, but on the way they both unknowingly partook of a magic potion and became irretrievably enamoured of each other. Iseult married the king, and on Mark's discovering their liaison Tristram fled to Brittany and married Iseult, daughter of the Duke of Brittany. Wounded by a poisoned weapon, he sent for Iseult of Ireland to come and heal him. The vessel in which she was to come had orders to hoist a white sail if she was on board, otherwise a black sail. Tristram's wife, seeing the vessel approach, told her husband, from jealousy, that it bore a black sail. In despair Tristram died; Iseult of Ireland, arriving too late, killed herself.

The name was originally Drystan, from the Pictish name Drostan, and the initial was changed to T apparently to connect it with Lat. tristis, sad. Wagner's opera Tristan and Isolde was first produced in 1865.

Triton. Son of POSEIDON and AMPHITRITE, represented as a fish with a human head. It is this sea-god that makes the roaring of the ocean by blowing through his shell. A Triton among the minnows. A great man among a host of inferiors.

Triumph. A word formed from Gr. thriambos, the Dionysiac hymn, Triumph being an exclamation used in the solemn processions of the ARVAL BROTHERS.

Some . . . have assigned the origin of . . . triumphal processions to the mythic pomps of Dionysus, after his conquests in the East, the very word triumph being . . . the Dionysiac hymn.

PATER: Marius the Epicurean, ch. xii.

The old Roman triumphus was the solemn and magnificent entrance of a general into ROME after having obtained a great or decisive victory. Cp. OVATION.

Triumvir (tri ūm 'vēr). In ancient ROME, one of a group of three men (Lat. trium, gen. of tres, three; vir, man) acting as joint magistrates for some special purpose or function. In Roman history the most famous triumvirate was that of Octavian, Antony, and Lepidus (43 B.C.), which was known as the Second Triumvirate to distinguish it from the combination of CÆSAR, Pompey, and Crassus in 60 B.C., which is known as the First Triumvirate.

Trivet. Right as a trivet. See under RIGHT.

Trivia. Gay's name for his invented goddess of streets and ways (Lat. trivius, of three roads). His burlesque in three books so entitled (1716) is a mine of information on the outdoor life of QUEEN ANNE's time.

I sing: Thou, Trivia, Goddess, aid my song.
Through spacious streets conduct thy bard along . . .
To pave thy realm, and smooth the broken ways.
Earth from her womb a flinty tribute pays.

Trivia, Bk. I, 5.

Trivium (Lat. tres, three; via, a road). In the MIDDLE AGES, the three roads to learning, i.e. Grammar, Rhetoric, and Logic; forming the lower division of the seven liberal arts. See QUADRIVIUM.

Trochilus. A small Egyptian bird said by the ancients to enter with impunity the mouth of the CROCODILE and to pick its teeth, especially of a leech which greatly tormented the creature. It is now known as the Crocodile-bird, Pluvianus ægyptus, a species of plover which not only picks the crocodile's teeth but by its cry gives warning of an approaching foe.

Troglodytes (Gr. troglo, cave; duein, to go into). A name given by the ancient Greeks to races of uncivilized men who dwelt in caves or holes in the ground. Strabo mentions troglodytes in Syria and Arabia, and Pliny (v, 8) asserts that they fed on serpents. The best-known were those of southern Egypt and Ethiopia. The term is applied to other cave-dwellers, and, figuratively, to those who dwell in seclusion.

In ornithology, wrens, which mostly build their nests in holes, are named troglodytes.

Troilus. The prince of CHIVALRY, one of the sons of PRIAM, killed by ACHILLES in the TROJAN WAR.

The loves of Troilus and CRESSIDA, celebrated by Chaucer and SHAKESPEARE, form no part of the old classic tale. This story appears for the first time in the Roman de Troie by the 12th-century TROUVÈRE Benoit de Ste. More. Guido delle Colonne included it in his Historia Trojana (1287), it thence passed to Boccaccio, whose Il Filostrato (1338)—where Pandarus first appears—was the basis of Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde.

As true as Troilus. Troilus is meant by SHAKESPEARE to be the type of constancy, and Cressida the type of female inconstancy.

After all comparisons of truth . . .
"As true as Troilus" shall crown up the verse,
And sanctify the numbers.

Troilus and Cressida, III, ii.

Trojan. Trojan Horse. See WOODEN HORSE OF TROY.

Trojan War. The legendary war sung by HOMER in the ILIAD as having been waged for ten years by the confederated Greeks against the men of TROY and their allies, in consequence of PARIS, son of PRIAM, the Trojan king, having carried off HELEN, wife of MENELAUS. The last year of the siege is the subject of the Iliad; the burning of Troy and the flight of ÆNEAS is told by VIRGIL in his ÆNEID.

There is no doubt that the story of the siege of Troy, much doubted in the 19th century, has an historical basis and probably took place during the 13th or 12th centuries B.C.

He is a regular Trojan. A fine fellow, with courage and spirit, who works very hard, usually at some uncongenial task, indeed, doing more than could be expected of him. The Trojans in Homer's ILIAD and Virgil's ÆNEID are described as truthful, brave, patriotic, and confiding.

There they say right, and like true Trojans.
BUTLER: Hudibras, I, i.

Troll-madam, or Troll-my-dames. A popular indoor game in the 16th and 17th centuries (also known as trunks, pigeon-holes, or mine-holes), borrowed from the French and called by them trou (hole) madame. It resembled bagatelle, and was played on a board having at one end a number of arches, like pigeon-holes, into which the balls were rolled. SHAKESPEARE has a reference to it in The Winter's Tale (IV, ii).

Trolls. In Icelandic myth, malignant one-eyed giants; in Scandinavian folklore, mischievous DWARFS, some cunning and treacherous, some fair and good to men, akin to the Scottish BROWNIE. They were wonderfully skilled in working metals and lived in the hills, and had a propensity for stealing, even carrying off women and children. They were especially averse to noise, from a recollection of the time when THOR used to be forever flinging his hammer after them.

Trooping. The trooping season. The season when the annual reliefs of the British forces in India were made, usually beginning in late FEBRUARY or MARCH.

Trooping the Colour. The annual ceremony on Horse Guards Parade, WHITEHALL, in which the colour or regimental flag is carried between files of troops and received by the sovereign. It takes place on the sovereign's official birthday.

The ceremony dates from the 18th century (probably from Marlborough's time), and was originally a guard-mounting ceremony, the battalion providing the guards for the day "trooping" the colour to be carried on King's guard.

Trophonius (trō fō' ni us). An architect, celebrated in Greek legend as the builder of the TEMPLE of APOLLO at DELPHI. After his death he was deified, and had an ORACLE in a cave near Lebadeia, Bœotia, which was so awe-inspiring that those who entered and consulted the oracle never smiled again. Hence a melancholy or habitually terrified man was said to have visited the cave of Trophœnius.

Trophy. Originally the arms of a vanquished foe, collected and set up by the victors on the field of battle. The captured standards were hung from the branches of an OAK-tree, a portion of the booty being laid at the foot of the tree and dedicated to the tutelary deity. The Romans frequently bore their trophies to ROME; under the Empire the triumphs of the victorious generals were also celebrated with arches and columns.

Troubadours. Poets of the south of France in the 11th to 14th centuries whose works were often performed and sung by wandering minstrels or JONGLEURS; so called from the Provençal verb trobar, to find or invent (cp. "poet", which means "a maker"). They wrote in the LANGUE D'OC or Provençal, principally on love and CHIVALRY. Cp. TROUVÈRES.

Trouble-shooter. An American coinage for one expert in locating and mending "trouble", mechanical or otherwise; hence its application to those brought into industry to mend relations between employer and employee.

Trouvères (troo' vâ). Court poets in central and northern France in the 12th to 14th centuries, writing chiefly of love. So called from Fr. trouver, to find or invent (cp. TROUBADOURS). They wrote in the LANGUE D'OÏL or langue d'oui.

Trows, or Drows. DWARFS of Orkney and Shetland mythology, similar to the Scandinavian TROLLS. There are land-trows and sea-trows. "Trow tak' thee" is a phrase still used by the island women when angry with their children.

When I hung around thy neck that gifted chain, which all in our isles know was wrought by no earthly artist, but by the Drows, in the secret recesses of their caverns, thou wert then but fifteen years old.

SCOTT: The Pirate, ch. x.

Troy. The fortress city of Homer's ILIAD in the extreme north-west corner of Asia Minor overlooking the strait of the Dardanelles; also the land of Troy or the Troad, with Ilium as its chief city.

The siege of Troy. See ACHILLES; ILIAD; HELEN; TROJAN WAR; ULYSSES; WOODEN HORSE OF TROY (under HORSE), etc.

Troy Town. A Cornish expression for a labyrinth of streets, a regular maze. Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch in his writings uses the name for a disguise for Fowey (pronounced Foy). Troy was formerly used figuratively of any scene of disorder or confusion; thus a room in disarray would be called a Troy fair.

Troy weight. The system of weights used in weighing precious metals and gems, the pound of 12 ounces weighing 5,760 grains as compared with the pound avoirdupois which weighs 7,000 grains and is divided into 16 ounces. Why it is so called is not certainly known, but probably it was the system used at the great FAIRS at Troyes, in France. 1 lb. troy = 0.822861 lb. av., rather over four-fifths. See TOWER POUND.

Troynovant. The name given by the early chroniclers to LONDON, anciently the city of the TRINOBANTES; a corruption of Trinovant, and Troynovant was assumed to mean The New Troy, which Geoffrey of Monmouth (Historia Britonum, Bk. I, ch. xvii) tells us was built by BRUTUS, a Trojan refugee (from whom is derived the name Britain). Afterwards LUD surrounded it with walls and called it Caer-Lud, or the City of Lud (London).

For noble Britons sprung from Trojans bold,
And Troynovant was built of old Trojans ashes cold.
SPENSER: The Faerie Queene, III, ix, 38.

Truce of God. In the MIDDLE AGES, a suspension of private warfare decreed by the Church on certain days or for certain seasons such as ADVENT and LENT. In 1027 hostilities between Saturday night and Monday morning were forbidden and the Truce of God was reaffirmed and extended by various Councils including the LATERAN COUNCIL of 1179. It was only partly effective and was eventually superseded by the King's peace.

Truck System, The. The system of paying employees wholly or in part in goods and tokens valid only at a TOMMY SHOP connected with their employers. The system was controlled and essentially abolished by insisting on payment in coin by Acts of 1831, 1881, and 1896. An Act of 1960 authorized payment other than in current coin, i.e. by cheque, or bank transfer.

True. A true bill. See under BILL.

True blue, i.e. lasting blue; hence a type of constancy. A true blue is one who is constant, steadfast, loyal, faithful, etc. There are other allusions as in True as Coventry Blue (see COVENTRY), 'Twas Presbyterian true blue. (See under BLUE.)

True-lovers' knot. A complicated double knot with two interlacing bows on each side and two ends, used as a symbol of love.

Three times a true-love's knot I tie secure;
Firm be the knot, firm may his love endure.
GAY: Pastorals, The Spell, 506.

Truepenny. An honest fellow, true as a genuine penny.

Ha, ha, boy! say'st thou so? art thou there truepenny?

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, v.

True Thomas. THOMAS THE RHYMER (see under RHYME).

Trump. This word in such phrases as a trumped-up affair (falsely concocted, etc.), trumpery (showy finery, worthless stuff), etc., is the same word as trumpet; from Fr. trompe, a trumpet, whence tromper, which, originally meaning "to play on a trumpet", came to mean to beguile, deceive, impose upon.

Trump in cards, is from Fr. triomphe (triumph), the name of an old variant of écarté.

Jew's trump. A JEW'S HARP.

The last trump. The final end of all things earthly; the Day of JUDGMENT.

We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump.

I Cor. xv, 51, 52.

To play one's last trump. To be reduced to one's last expedient; a phrase from card-playing.

To turn up trumps. Unexpectedly to prove very friendly and helpful; to be much better than anticipated. An allusion to card-playing.

Trumpet. See TRUMP.

The Feast of Trumpets. A Jewish festival held on the first two days of Tishri (about mid-SEPTEMBER to mid-OCTOBER), the beginning of the Jewish ecclesiastical year, at which the blowing of trumpets formed a prominent part of the ritual. See Num. xxix, 1.

A flourish of trumpets. An ostentatious introduction, preliminary, or arrival. From the fanfare announcing the arrival of one of high rank or distinction.

To blow one's own trumpet. To indulge in self advertisement, to publish one's own praises, etc. The allusion is to HERALDS, who used to announce with a flourish of trumpets the KNIGHTS who entered a list. Similarly, Your trumpeter is dead means that you are obliged to sound your own praises because no one will do it for you.

Trunk. In its sense of denominating the main body as opposed to the roots and branches, the word is used to describe the main lines of railway, postal, and telephone systems, from which branch lines radiate. A trunk call is a telephone call on a trunk line from one town to another. Trunk road is a main highway between two principal towns. Trunk hose were a style of breeches worn in the 16th and 17th centuries, reaching from the waist to the middle of the thigh.

Trunk drawers, or trunks, are pants reaching only to the knee or, more recently, men's bathing-drawers.

Trust. A combination of a number of companies or businesses doing similar trade, for the purpose of defeating competition or creating a monopoly, under one general control. So called because each member is on trust not to undersell the others, but to remain faithful to the terms agreed on.

Truth. PILATE said, "What is truth?" (John xviii, 38). This was the great question of the Platonists. PLATO said we could know truth if we could sublimate our minds to their original purity. Arcesilaus said that man's understanding is not capable of knowing what truth is. Carneades maintained that not only our understanding could not comprehend it, but even our senses are wholly inadequate to help us in the investigation. Gorgias the SOPHIST said, "What is right but what we prove to be right? and what is truth but what we believe to be truth?"

"What is truth?" said jesting Pilate, and would not stay for an answer.

BACON: Essays, Of Truth.

Truth drug. Alkaloid scopolamine. An American doctor, R. E. House (1875-1930), used this drug to induce a state of lethargic intoxication in which the patient lost many of his defences and spoke the truth concerning matters about which he would normally have lied or prevaricated. The value of this and other truth drugs in penology has by no means been established.

Truth lies at the bottom of the well. This expression has been attributed to Heraclitus, Cleanthes, DEMOCRITUS the Derider, and others.

Naturam accusa, quæ in profundo veritatem (ut ait Democritus) penitus abstruserit.
CICERO: Academics, i, 10.

Trygon. See TELEGONUS.

Tu autem (tū aw' tem) (Lat., But thou). A hint to leave off; "hurry up and come to the last clause". In the long Latin grace at St. John's College, Cambridge, the last clause used to be Tu autem miserere mei, Domine. Amen, and it was not unusual, when a scholar read slowly, for the senior Fellow to whisper Tu autem, i.e. Skip all the rest and give us only the last sentence.

Tu quoque (tū kwo' kwē) (Lat., You too). A retort implying that the one addressed is in the same case as the speaker—no better and no worse.

The tu quoque style of argument. Personal invective; the argument of personal application; argumentum ad hominem.

Tuatha De Danann (twā' thā de dān' ān). A legendary race of superhuman heroes which invaded IRELAND, overthrew the Firbolgs and Fomors, and were themselves overthrown by the MILESANS, who later worshipped them as gods.

Tub. Tubs, in college rowing slang, are gig pairs of college boat clubs, who practise for the term's races, and tubbing is taking out pairs under the supervision of a coach for training.

A tale of a tub. A COCK-AND-BULL STORY, a RIGMAROLE; a nonsensical romance.

There is a comedy of this name by Ben Jonson (produced 1633), and a prose satire by Swift (1704) which portrays allegorically the failings of the English, Roman, and Presbyterian Churches.

To throw a tub to the whale. To create a diversion in order to avoid a real danger; to bamboozle or mislead an enemy. In whaling, according to Swift, when a ship was threatened by a school of whales, it was usual to throw a tub into the sea to divert their attention.

A tub of naked children. Emblematical in religious paintings of St. NICHOLAS, in allusion to the two boys murdered and placed in a pickling tub by a landlord, but raised to life again by the saint.

Tub-thumper. A ranter, a SOAP-BOX ORATOR or STUMP ORATOR; in allusion to the upturned tub once used as a platform at open-air meetings.

Tuck. In the sense of eatables tuck is a mid-18th-century slang word, especially used by boys in boarding schools whose tuck-box, supplied from home, supplemented the school fare. To tuck in is to eat heartily and with relish. In Australia the word became tucker for any kind of food, especially that carried on journeys in one's tucker bag.

To tuck one up. To finish him, do for him. Possibly from the duellist's rapier formerly called a tuck (O. Fr. estoc, stock), or from tuck up in the sense of to draw up, this being old slang meaning to hang a person.

Tuck, Friar. See FRIAR TUCK.

Tuckahoe (tūk' ā hō) (U.S.A.). An inhabitant of that part of the State of Virginia that lies east of the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Tucker. The ornamental frill of lace or muslin worn by women in the 17th and 18th centuries round the top of their dresses to cover the neck and shoulders. Hence, with clean bib and tucker, nicely dressed, looking fresh and spruce. See also TUCK.

Tuesday. The third day of the week. See TIU.

Tuffet. A dialect variant of tuft, which was formerly used of a small grassy mound or hillock.

Little Miss Muffet
Sat on a tuffet
Eating her curds and whey.
Nursery Rhyme.

Tuft. The name formerly given at Oxford University to a peer's son or a fellow COMMONER, because he wore a gold tassel or tuft on his college cap. The practice was discontinued in 1870.

Tuft-hunter. One who tries to curry favour with the wealthy or great for the sake of feeding on the crumbs which fall from the rich man's table. See TUFT.

Tug. A name by which Collegers are known at Eton; from the tog (i.e. toga) worn by them to distinguish them from the rest of the school.

Tug of war. A sporting activity in which a number of men, divided into two teams, lay hold of a strong rope and pull against each other till one side has tugged the other over the dividing line.

When Greek meets Greek then is the tug of war. See under GREEK.

Tuileries (twē' lè rē). A former palace in Paris, so named from the tile-yards (tuileries) once on the site. It stood between the LOUVRE and the Place de la Concorde. The palace was designed by Philibert de l'Orme for Catherine de' MEDICI, 1564, and long served as a residence for the sovereigns of France. In 1871 it was burned down by the Communards, but the gardens remain as a pleasant public open space.

Tulchan Bishops. Certain titular Scottish BISHOPS introduced by the PRESBYTERIANS in 1572 and whose office had ceased by 1580. A tulchan is a stuffed calf-skin placed under a cow that withholds her milk to deceive her into yielding into the pail. The bishops were contemptuously so called because their title was but an empty one, their revenues being mainly absorbed by nobles as lay patrons.

Tulip Mania. A reckless mania for the purchase of tulip-bulbs that arose in Holland in the 17th century and was at its greatest height about 1633-1637. A bulb of the species called Viceroy sold for £250; Semper Augustus, more than double that sum. The mania spread all over Europe, and became a mere stock-jobbing speculation.

To number the streaks of the tulip. To devote too much attention to minute details—characteristic, in the view of 18th-century critics, of a bad poet. The phrase comes from Imlac's dissertation on poetry in Johnson's Rasselas (ch. x) where the principle is laid down that a poet must examine not the individual but the species, and concern himself with the general rather than the particular.

Tumbledown Dick. Anything that will not stand firmly. "Dick" is Richard Cromwell (1626-1712), the Protector's son, who was but a tottering wall at best.

Tumbler. The flat-bottomed stemless glass derives its name from the fact that it was originally made with a rounded bottom which made it tumble over if set down on a table; hence requiring that it should be held till emptied.

Tune. The man who pays the piper calls the tune. He who foots the bill decides what is to be done. An old proverb.

To change one's tune, or to make one sing another tune. See under SING.

The tune the old cow died of. Advice instead of relief; remonstrance instead of help.

The reference is to the song:

There was an old man, and he had an old cow,
But he had no fodder to give her,
So he took up his fiddle and played her the tune;
"Consider, good cow, consider,
This isn't the time for the grass to grow,
Consider, good cow, consider."

To the tune of. To the amount of; as, "I had to pay up to the tune of £500."

Tuneful Nine, The. The nine MUSES.

When thy young Muse invok'd the tuneful Nine,
To say how Louis did not pass the RHINE,
What Work had we with WAGENINGHEN, ARNHEIM,
Places that could not be reduced to Rhime?

PRIOR: Letter to Boileau Despréaux, l. 18 (1704).

Tunkers, Dunkers, or Dunkards (Ger., dippers). A religious sect also known as the German Baptists, founded in Germany in 1708 by Alexander Mack. In 1719 they emigrated to Pennsylvania and spread westwards and into Canada. They reject infant baptism, the taking of oaths or bearing of arms, and practise triple immersion, the AGAPE, etc. They are now called the Church of the Brethren. The SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS (1728) are an offshoot.

Turf, The. The race-course, horse-racing; the horse-racing world; in allusion to the turf or grass of the course. A turfite is a devotee of horse-racing or one who gets his living from it; a supporter of the turf.

Turk. Formerly applied to the barbarous, savage, and cruel, from the European association of the Old Ottoman Empire with barbaric practices, from mediæval times until the early years of the 20th century; now usually applied to mischievous and unruly children; as, You little Turk! or, You young Turk!

Fierce revolt against intolerable misrule slowly blazed upon Bosnia and Herzegovina, and a rising in Bulgaria, not dangerous in itself, was put down by Turkish troops despatched for the purpose from Constantinople, with deeds described by the British agent who investigated them on the spot, as the most heinous crimes that had stained the history of the century.

MORLEY: Life of Gladstone, VII, iv.

The Young Turks. A Turkish reforming party seeking to transform the decadent Turkish Empire into a modern European state and to give it a parliamentary constitution. It had its origins in a committee formed at Geneva in 1891 and the party, considerably supported by students, raised the standard of revolt at Salonika in 1908, deposed Sultan Abdul Hamid, and replaced him by his brother as Mohammed V (1909). Their "liberalism" was not dominant but they remained the major force in Turkish politics until the end of World War I, when the party was dissolved. Turkey was proclaimed a republic in 1923.

Turk Gregory. Falstaff's ne plus ultra of military valour—a humorous combination of the SULTAN with Gregory VII (HILDEBRAND), probably the strongest of all the POPES.

Turk Gregory never did such deeds in arms as I have done this day.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, V, iii.

To turn Turk. To become a MOSLEM, to turn renegade, to change very much for the worse.

Turkey. See MISNOMERS.

To talk turkey (U.S.A.). To talk plainly or seriously. Also, that's cold turkey, the frank details, the straight truth.

Turkey-work. Knotted carpeting work used for covering chairs and stools, especially in the first half of the 17th century, introduced as a result of the importation of Turkish carpets.

Turn. Done to a turn. Cooked exactly right; another turn on the spit would be too much.

Turnip

He felt that the hour for the upturning of his glass was at hand. He knew that the sand of life was nearly run out, and that death was about to turn his hour-glass upside down.

One good turn deserves another. A benefit received ought to be repaid.

To serve its turn. To answer the purpose; to be sufficient for the occasion; sometimes with the implication of being a makeshift or barely meeting requirements.

To turn down. To reject, as, "She turned down his marriage proposal", or, "His application for the post was turned down."

In Eastern countries a glass is turned down at convivial gatherings as a memento of a recently departed companion.

And when thyself with shining feet shalt pass
Among the guests star-scattered on the grass
And in the joyous errand reach the spot
Where I made one—turn down an empty glass!
FITZGERALD: Omar Khayyám (1859).

To turn in. Colloquially, to go to bed.

To turn to. To carry on with one's work; to get to work.

To turn turtle. To turn completely over, upside down, TOPSY-TURVY. Usually said of boats, from the fact that a turtle, when turned on its back, is quite helpless.

To turn up. To arrive, often unexpectedly; to appear.

A turn-up for the book. A bit of good luck, unexpected good fortune.

Waiting for something to turn up. Expectant that luck will change, that good fortune will arrive without much effort on one's own part. Mr. MICAWBER'S philosophy of life:

"And then", said Mr. Micawber, who was present, "I have no doubt I shall, please Heaven, begin to be beforehand with the world, and to live in a perfectly new manner, if—in short, if anything turns up."

DICKENS: David Copperfield, ch. xi.

Turncoat. A renegade; one who deserts his principles or party.

Fable has it that a certain Duke of Saxony, whose dominions were bounded in part by France, hit upon the device of a coat blue one side, and white the other. When he wished to be thought in the French interest he wore the white outside; otherwise the blue. Hence a SAXON was nicknamed Emmanuel Turncoat.

Turnspit. One who has all the work but none of the profit; he turns the spit but eats not of the roast. The allusion is to the turnspit, a small dog which was used to turn the roasting-spit by means of a kind of tread-wheel. Topsell says, "They go into a wheel, which they turn round about with the weight of their bodies, so diligently . . . that no drudge . . . can do the feat more cunningly" (1607).

Turnip. Common slang for a large, old-fashioned silver watch.

Turpin. Archbishop of Rheims, who appears in several CHANSONS DE GESTE as a friend and companion of CHARLEMAGNE. He was formerly supposed to be the writer of the Historia de vita Caroli et Rolandi. In the Chanson de Roland Turpin dies with the hero and is buried with him. He is most likely the same as Tilpin, archbishop of Rheims in the 8th century (c. 753-c. 800).

Dick Turpin (1705-1739). The "King of the Road" was born at the Bell Inn, Hempstead, Essex, and apprenticed to a butcher at WHITECHAPEL at the age of 16. He soon became a footpad to supplement his earnings and, after his marriage in 1728, set up as a butcher in Essex. He took to stocking his shop with stolen cattle and sheep and, on discovery, joined a gang of smugglers near Canvey Island and there turned to housebreaking with Gregory's Gang in Epping Forest. In 1735 he became a highwayman working around the south of LONDON, and in 1736 began his partnership with Tom King; his effrontery became a public legend as did his activities in Epping Forest and Hounslow Heath. After the death of King in 1737, he shifted to Lincolnshire and thence to Yorkshire where he was finally apprehended and hanged at the Mount, outside the walls of York. The legend of Black Bess and the ride to York derives from Harrison Ainsworth's Rookwood (1834) although the legend of the ride has historical precedents.

And the fame of Dick Turpin had been something ^{less}
If he'd ne'er rode to York on his bonnie Black Bess.
ELIZA COOK: Black Bess.

Tusitala. Teller of tales; the name given by the Samoans to R. L. Stevenson.

Tut. A word used in Lincolnshire for a phantom, as the Spittal Hill Tut. Tom Tut will get you is a threat to frighten children. Tut-gotten is panic-struck.

Tutankhamun. See VALLEY OF THE KINGS.

Tutivillus, or Titivil (tū ti vil' ūs). The demon of mediæval legend who collects all the words skipped over or mutilated by priests in the celebration of the MASS. These scraps or shreds he deposits in that pit which is said to be paved with "good intentions" never brought to effect.

Tuxedo. The American name for a dinner-jacket; so called because it was first taken to the U.S.A. from ENGLAND by Griswold Lorillard, in 1886, and introduced by him at the Tuxedo Club, Tuxedo, N.Y.

Twain, Mark. The pen-name of Samuel Langhorne Clemens (1835-1910), the famous humorist, creator of Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn. The name "Mark Twain" is from the calls used by Mississippi pilots when taking soundings—in this case the two-fathom mark on the lead-line.

Tweed. The origin of this name of a woollen cloth used for garments is to be found in a blunder. It should have been tweel, the Scots form of twill; but when the Scottish manufacturer sent a consignment to James Locke of London, in 1826, the name was badly written and misread; and as the cloth was made on the banks of the Tweed, tweed was accordingly adopted. Twill, like DIMITY, means "two-threaded".

The Tweed Ring. In American history, the political ring under W. M. ("Boss") Tweed which by wholesale graft and corruption controlled the New York Democratic party and municipal finances (1869-1871). Boss Tweed died in prison (1878). See TAMMANY HALL.

Tweedledum and Tweedledee. Names invented by John Byrom (1692-1763) to satirize two quarrelling schools of musicians between whom the real difference was negligible. Hence used of people whose persons or opinions are "as like as two peas".

Some say compared to Bononcini
That mynheer Handel's but a ninny;
Others aver that he to Handel
Is scarcely fit to hold a candle.
Strange all this difference should be "Twixt Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

J. BYROM: Feuds between Handel and Bononcini.

The Duke of Marlborough and most of the nobility took the side of G. B. Bononcini (d. c. 1752), but the Prince of Wales, with Pope and Arbuthnot, was for Handel. Cp. GLUCKISTS.

Lewis Carroll uses the names for two fat little men in his Through the Looking-Glass.

Twelve, Twelfth. The Twelfth. The 12th of AUGUST, "St. Grouse's Day"; the first day of grouse-shooting.

Twelfth man. The reserve chosen for a team of 11, especially in CRICKET, hence, anyone who just misses distinction.

Twelfth Night. 5 January, the eve of the Twelfth Day after CHRISTMAS or Feast of the EPIPHANY. Formerly this was a time of great merrymaking when the BEAN-KING was appointed, and the celebrations and festivities seemingly derive from the SATURNALIA of old Roman times which was held at the same season. By the JULIAN CALENDAR Twelfth Day is Old CHRISTMAS Day.

SHAKESPEARE'S play of this name (produced 1600-1601) was so called because it was written for acting at the Twelfth Night revels.

The Twelve Tables. The earliest code of Roman law, compiled by the Decemviri (451-450 B.C.), and engraved on 12 tablets. Originally ten, to which two were added, they were supposed to comprise the basis of all Roman law. In CICERO'S boyhood it was still customary for them to be learnt by heart (Livy: III, lvii; Diodorus, xii, 56).

Each English archer carries twelve Scotsmen under his girdle. This was a common saying at one time, because the English were unerring archers, and each carried 12 arrows in his belt.

The Twelvers. A sect of SHI'ITES who accept twelve of the descendants of ALI as Imams. The 12th IMAM, MOHAMMED, it is held, disappeared (c. 874) but is still alive and will return at the end to set up the Shi'ite faith through the world.

Twickenham. The Bard of Twickenham. Alexander Pope (1688-1714), who lived there for 25 years. Contemporaries sometimes call him the Wasp of Twickenham because of his acerbity.

Twig. I twig you. I catch your meaning; I understand (Irish tuigim, I understand). The Irish word is pronounced tigim.

Twilight. Twilight of the Gods. See RAGNAROK.

Twilight Sleep. A state of semi-consciousness produced by injection of scopolamine and morphia in which a woman can undergo childbirth with comparatively little pain. See also TRUTH DRUG.

Twins, The. See GEMINI.

Twirl. In prison parlance, the same as a SCREW, and for a similar reason.

Twist. The twist. A dance popular about 1962, so called from the contortions performed.

Like Oliver Twist, asking for more. Oliver Twist, the workhouse-boy hero of Dickens's famous novel of that name (1838), astonished the workhouse-master and caused general consternation by once actually asking for more gruel (see chap. ii).

Twitcher, Jemmy

To twist a person. Slang for to swindle him or to bamboozle him to one's own advantage. Also (with allusion to giving the screw another twist), to extract from a person all one can and a bit over.

To twist a person round one's (little) finger. To be able to influence him at will; to have him in complete subjection.
To twist the lion's tail. See under LION.

Twitcher, Jemmy. A cunning, treacherous highwayman in Gay's Beggar's Opera. The name was given about 1765, in a poem by Gray, to John, Lord SANDWICH (1718-1792), noted for his liaison with Miss Ray, who was shot by the Rev. "Captain" Hackman out of jealousy.

Twm Shon Catti (Toom Shòn Kati). A kind of Welsh ROBIN HOOD who was born about 1530. He is mentioned in George Borrow's Wild Wales. There are many tales of his exploits and he is said to have eventually married an heiress and ended up as a squire and magistrate.

Two. The evil principle of PYTHAGORAS. Accordingly the second day of the second month of the year was sacred to PLUTO, and was esteemed unlucky.

Two bits. American term for 25 cents, otherwise known as a quarter. The origin of the term is in British slang "bit" (e.g. threepenny bit), which was adopted in the south and west of the U.S.A. for the old Mexican real worth 12½ cents.

The two eyes of Greece. ATHENS and Sparta.

He has two strings to his bow. See under BOW.

To put two and two together. To come to an inference or conclusion (usually fairly obvious) from the facts of the matter.

Two heads are better than one. Another's advice is often very useful. To the saying is sometimes added—or why do folks marry?

Two is company, three is none. An old saying, much used by lovers; it is given in Heywood's collection of proverbs (1546).

Two of a trade did never agree. A very old proverb (it occurs in Hesiod's Works and Days).

In every age and clime we see
Two of a trade can ne'er agree.

GAY: Fables, I, xxi, 43.

Two may keep counsel—if one of them's dead. A caustic saying expressive of the great difficulty of being certain that a secret is not told once it is imparted to someone else. SHAKESPEARE has:

Two may keep counsel when the third's away.
Titus Andronicus, IV, ii.

In Thomas Usk's Testament of Love (formerly attributed to Chaucer) is:

For thre may kepe a counsel, if twain be awaie.

When two Fridays come together. One of a number of circumlocutions for NEVER!

Twopenny. Often used slightly of things of very little value.

Twopenny Damn. See DAMN.

The Twopenny Tube. The Central London Railway was so called, because for some years after its opening (1900) the fare between any two stations was 2d.

Tuck in your twopenny! Mind your head! A schoolboy's warning to the boy over whose back the leap is to be made in leap-frog.

Tybalt (tib' ált). An old name given to a cat (see GIB CAT). Hence the allusions to cats in connexion with Tybalt, one of the CAPULET family in SHAKESPEARE's Romeo and Juliet (III, i). Mercutio says, "Tybalt, you rat-catcher, will you walk?"; and again, when Tybalt asks, "What wouldst thou have with me?" Mercutio answers, "Good King of Cats! nothing but one of your nine lives."

Tyburn (ti' bērn). A famous tributary of the THAMES rising at Hampstead, which gave its name to the village that was later called MARYLEBONE and to a place of execution. Hence Tyburn tree, the gallows (at Tyburn); to take a ride to Tyburn, to go to one's hanging; Lord of the Manor of Tyburn, the common hangman, etc.

The site of the gallows is marked by three brass triangles let into the pavement at the corner of Edgware Road and Bayswater Road. The last criminal to be hanged there was John Austin in 1783; after that executions were carried out at NEWGATE until its demolition.

Tyburn ticket. A certificate which, under a statute of William III, was granted to prosecutors who had secured a capital conviction against a criminal, exempting them from all parish and ward offices within the parish in which the felony had been committed. This, with the privilege it conferred, might be sold once, and once only, and the Stamford Mercury for 27 March 1818 announced the sale of one for £280. The Act was repealed in 1818, but as late as 1856 Mr. Pratt of Bond Street claimed exemption from serving on an OLD BAILEY jury on the strength of the possession of a Tyburn Ticket and was successful.

Tyburnia. A district of LONDON near the old TYBURN gallows was so called. It comprised approximately the area between what is now Paddington Station and MARBLE ARCH.

Tycoon (ti koon'). A title of the SHOGUN; also applied to an industrial or business magnate.

Tyke. See TIKE.

Tyler gripe. An obsolescent American term for influenza. When John Tyler was President (1841-1845) of the U.S.A. a man called at the WHITE HOUSE and a few hours later contracted influenza, which is also, but less familiarly, known by the Fr. word grippe. This man jokingly told his friends that he had caught cold from shaking hands with the President, who was noted for the formality of his manners. The play on the words grip and grippe led to influenza being called the Tyler gripe.

Tyler's Insurrection. The main rebellion of the English PEASANTS' REVOLT.

Tylwyth Teg (tul with tåg) (Welsh tylwyth, family; teg, fair). The fairies of Welsh folklore, friendly but mischievous, who live in caves and on the mountains, who communicate by signs and never speak. They are versed in country lore, but if they touch iron, vanish away.

Tyndale's Bible. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

Tynwald. The Court of Tynwald constitutes the governing body of the Isle of MAN. It consists of the Lieutenant-Governor, a Crown appointment; the Legislative Council, consisting of the Bishop of Sodor and Man, two DEEMSTERS, the Attorney-General, two of the Governor's nominees, and five members of the House of Keys; and the House of Keys, which is composed of 24 members elected by adult suffrage. No British Act of PARLIAMENT applies to the island unless specifically stated. The House of Keys was self-elected until 1866. Tyn is from THING and Wald, the wold or down on which it assembled. The origin of Keys is a matter of conjecture; in the 15th century the 24 keys are referred to as Keys of Man and Keys of the Law.

Typhæus (ti fē' ūs), or Typhon (ti' fon). A monster of Greek mythology, son of GÆA and TARTARUS, with a hundred heads, each with a terrible voice. He made war on ZEUS, who killed him with a THUNDERBOLT. According to one legend, he lies buried under Mount ETNA. By ECHIDNA he fathered ORTHOS, CERBERUS, the Lernæan HYDRA, the CHIMÆRA, the Theban SPHINX, and the NEMEAN LION. See SET.

Tyr. See TIU.

Tyrant. In ancient Greece the tyrant was merely the absolute ruler, the despot, of a state, and at first the word had no implication of cruelty or what we call tyranny. Many of the Greek tyrants were pattern rulers, as Pisistratus and Pericles of ATHENS; Periander of Corinth; Dionysius the Younger, Gelon, and his brother Hiero of Syracuse; Phidion of Argos; Polycrates of Samos (see AMASIS), etc. The word (tyrannos) soon, however, obtained much the same meaning as it has with us.

The Thirty Tyrants. The 30 magistrates appointed by Sparta over ATHENS, at the termination of the Peloponnesian War. This "reign of terror", after one year's continuance, was overthrown by Thrasybulus (403 B.C.).

In Roman history, those military leaders who endeavoured in the reigns of Valerian and Gallienus (A.D. 253-268) to make themselves independent princes are also known as the Thirty Tyrants, although the number is loosely applied.

A tyrant's vein. A ranting, bullying manner. In the old MORALITY PLAYS the tyrants were made to rant, and the loudness of their rant was proportionate to the villainy of their dispositions.

Tyrian Purple. See PURPLE.

Tyrtæus (tēr tē' ūs). A lame schoolmaster and elegiac poet of ATHENS who is said to have so inspired the Spartans by his songs that they defeated the Messenians (7th century B.C.). The name has hence been given to many martial poets who have urged on their countrymen to deeds of arms and victory.

U

U. The twenty-first letter of the English alphabet; in form a modification of V with which for many centuries it was interchangeable. Words beginning with U and V were (like those in I and J) not separated in English dictionaries till about 1800 and later. A Dictionary of the English Language published by Henry Washbourne, London, 1847, still adhered to the old practice. In 16th- and early 17th-century books spellings such as vpon and haue are the rule rather than the exception. The following from the title-page of Polymantheia (anon., 1595) is a good example of the confusion:

Polymantheia, or, The meanes . . . to iudge of the fall of a Commonwealth, against the friuolous and foolish coniectures of this age. Whereunto is added, a Letter . . . perswading them to a constant vnitie . . . for the defence of our . . . natiue country . . . Printed by John Legate, Printer to the Vniuersitie of Cambridge, 1595.

U.F.O. Unidentified flying object; the name given to objects claimed to have been sighted in the sky such as FLYING SAUCERS (see under SAUCER) etc., or picked up on radar screens, the exact nature of which is uncertain. Study and observation of U.F.O.s is termed ufology by enthusiasts.

U and Non-U. A semi-humorous mark of distinction between social classes in England based on the usage of certain words. "U" is Upper Class, "Non-U" being non-Upper Class. It is "U" to say "luncheon" for what "Non-U" folk call "lunch"; "napkin" and "serviette", "cycle" and "bike" are samples of this snobism. The terms owe their popularity to Nancy Mitford, who quoted them in an article in the magazine Encounter in September 1955.

U-boat. A German submarine; the term is adapted from the German Unterseeboot (under-water vessel). Cp. E-BOAT.

Uberrimæ fidel (Lat., of the fullest confidence, complete faith). A legal expression used of contracts in which the fullest and frankest information must be disclosed by the applicant or promisee. All insurance contracts are governed by this principle in order that the insurers may judge whether or not to accept the proposal.

Udal Tenure (Icel. othal). More correctly odal tenure, the same as "allodial tenure", a sort of FREEHOLD tenure depending on attested long-term undisturbed possession, as in the ORKNEYS and Shetlands. It was quite distinct from feudal forms of tenure. A Udaller is one holding such a tenure.

The Udallers are the allodial possessors of Zetland, who hold their possessions under the old Norwegian law, instead of the feudal tenures introduced among them from Scotland.

SCOTT: The Pirate, ch. I (footnote).

Ugly Duckling. An unpromising child who develops into a beautiful or handsome adult; also anything of an unprepossessing character that may change with time into something attractive. The expression is taken from Hans Andersen's story of the Ugly Duckling that endured many embarrassments but grew into a beautiful swan.

Uisnech. See USNECH.

Uitlander (oit lan' dêr). The Boer term for a foreigner (Outlander), and especially those Europeans resident in the Transvaal and Orange Free State (mostly British subjects) after the discoveries of GOLD, who were not given political rights.

Their situation led to the JAMESON RAID of 1895 and the subsequent Boer War of 1899-1902.

Ulema (û lê' mâ). The learned classes in Mohammedan countries, interpreters of the KORAN and the law, from whose numbers came the MULLAHS, MUFTIS, IMAMS, CADIS, etc. (teachers of religion, of law, and administrators of justice). Ulema is the plural of Arab. alim, a wise man.

Ullage (ûl' âj). The difference between the amount of liquid a vessel can contain and what it actually does contain (O. Fr. œiller, to fill up). The term is applied to a bottle of wine of which part of the contents have evaporated. Colloquially it is applied to dregs, or rubbish generally.

Ulster. The northernmost province of IRELAND which was forfeited to the Crown in James I's reign in consequence of the rebellions of Tyrconnell and Tyrone and planted by English and Scottish settlers (1609-1612). Under Acts of 1920 and 1922, as Northern Ireland, it was made a separate political division of the United Kingdom with its own PARLIAMENT still sending 12 M.P.s to WESTMINSTER.

The Red, or Bloody Hand of Ulster. The badge of ULSTER, a sinister hand, erect, open, and couped at the wrist, gules; the Red Hand of the O'Neills. See BARONET.

Ulster King of Arms. Formerly the chief heraldic officer for IRELAND and Registrar to the ORDER OF ST. PATRICK (see under PATRICK), created by Edward VI in 1553. The office was united with that of the NORROY King of Arms in 1943. His present jurisdiction is restricted to the SIX COUNTIES. Eire appointed its own Chief Herald of Ireland in 1943 who occupies the former office of the Ulster King in Dublin Castle.

Ultima Thule. See under THULE.

Ultimus Romanorum (ûl' ti mûs rô má nôr' ùm) (Lat.). The LAST OF THE ROMANS.

Ultor (ûl' tôr) (Lat., the Avenger). A title given to MARS when, after defeating the murderers of Julius CÆSAR at Philippi, Augustus built a temple to him in the Forum at ROME.

Ultra vires (ūl' tra vī' rēz) (Lat. ultra, beyond; vires, the powers). In excess of the authority given by law, hence invalid in the legal sense. Thus if the BANK of England were to set up a MINT on its premises it would be acting ultra vires.

Ultramontane Party. The extreme party in the Church of ROME. Ultramontane opinions or tendencies are those which favour the high "Catholic" party. Ultramontane (beyond the mountains, i.e. the Alps) means Italy or the old Papal States. The term was first used by the French, to distinguish those who look upon the POPE as the fountain of all power in the Church, in contradistinction to the Gallican school, which maintained the right of self-government by national churches. Cp. TRAMONTANE.

Ulysses, or Odysseus (ū' lis ēz, o dis' ūs) ("the hater"). A mythical king of Ithaca, a small rocky island of Greece, one of the leading chieftains of the Greeks in HOMER'S ILIAD, and the hero of his ODYSSEY, represented by Homer as wise, eloquent, and full of artifices.

According to VIRGIL, it was he who suggested the device of the WOODEN HORSE (see under HORSE) through which TROY was ultimately taken. See TELE-GONUS.

Ulysses' Bow. Only ULYSSES could draw his own bow, and he could shoot an arrow through 12 rings. By this sign PENELOPE recognized her husband after an absence of 20 years.

The bow was prophetic. It belonged at one time to Eurytus of Œchalia.

Umble pie. See TO EAT HUMBLE PIE under EAT.

Umbrage. To take umbrage (Lat. umbra, shade). Originally to feel overshadowed, slighted, and hence to take offence.

Umbrella (Lat. umbra, shade). Used in ancient China, Babylon, Egypt, etc., but not commonly in use in England until after Jonas Hanway (1712-1786), the philanthropist, publicized it from about 1750 by carrying one regularly in the streets of London to keep off the rain. He incurred a good deal of ridicule in the process.

Umbrellas were not, however, unknown. Drayton says in his Muses' Elizium (1630):

And like umbrellas, with their feathers,
Shield you in all sorts of weathers.

Quarles in his Emblems (1635) used the word to signify the Deity hidden in the manhood of Christ—"Nature is made th'umbrella of the Deity" (iv, 14). Further mention is in Swift's City Shower (1710), in Gay's Trivia (1716), and The Female Tatler (12 Dec. 1709) contains this notice:

The young gentleman belonging to the Custom House, that for fear of rain, borrowed the Umbrella at Will's Coffee House in Cornhill of the Mistress, is herby advertised that to be dry from head to foot on the like occasion he shall be welcome to the Maid's pattens.

Under the umbrella of So-and-so. Under his dominion, regimen, influence, protection. The allusion is to the umbrella carried over certain African potentates as an emblem of sovereignty. In 1876, the sacred umbrella of King Koffee of the Ashantis was captured and placed in the South Kensington Museum.

In World War II the term umbrella was used to denote air-cover to ground or sea operations.

Umlaut (um' lout). The change or modification of sound characteristic of certain Germanic languages occasioned when a vowel is influenced by a following vowel. The second or modifying vowel can appear, or it can be replaced by a diæresis, itself called an umlaut, as Goethe, Göthe; Duerer, Dürer. The word was invented by Grimm, the philologist.

Umpire. See APRON.

Unam sanctam (Lat., One holy). The opening words of Boniface VIII's BULL of 1302 declaring that there was "One holy Catholic and Apostolic Church", membership of which was necessary for salvation. It is notable for its assertion of papal claims and of the authority of the spiritual power over the temporal.

Unaneled. Unanointed; without having had extreme unction (O.E. ele, oil; from Lat. oleum). See HOUSEL.

Unhouseled, disappointed, unaneled.
SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, v.

Uncials (ün' si älz). A form of majuscule (large) script used in MSS. dating from about the 4th century A.D. to the 8th century; so called from Lat. uncia, twelfth part, inch, because the letters were about an inch high. There were also half-uncials.

Uncle. Slang for a pawnbroker, in use as early as 1756. Its origin is unknown. An article that has gone to uncle's is in pawn.

Old Uncle Tom Cobleigh. The last named of the seven village worthies who borrowed Tom Pearce's grey mare on which to ride to Widdecombe Fair and whose names form the refrain of the famous ballad of that name which has become as much the county song of Devon as "D'ye ken John Peel" is of Cumberland.

Unclubable

When the wind whistles cold on the Moor of a night,

All along, down along, out along lee,
Tom Pearce's old mare doth appear gashly white,
Wi' Bill Brewer, Jan Stewer, Peter Gurney,
Peter Davy, Dan'l Whidden, Harry Hawk,
Old Uncle Tom Cobleigh and all,
Old Uncle Tom Cobleigh and all.

Uncle George. King George III (1738, 1760-1820).

Uncle Joe. A British (World War II) nickname for Joseph Stalin, head of the Government of the U.S.S.R. (1941-1953).

Uncle Remus (rē'mūs). The old plantation negro whose quaint and proverbial wisdom, and stories of Brer Rabbit and Brer Fox, were related by Joel Chandler Harris (1848-1908) in Uncle Remus, his Songs and Sayings (1880), and Nights with Uncle Remus (1883).

Uncle Sam. See under SAM.

Uncle Tom's Cabin. A story by Harriet Beecher Stowe (1811-1896) that appeared in 1852. It tells of the sale of a pious and faithful old Negro slave to a bad owner. By its emphasis on the worst sides of Negro slavery, the book helped in no small degree to arouse the American nation to an understanding of the iniquities of the system. The original of Uncle Tom was a slave subsequently ordained as the Rev. J. Henson. He came to London in 1876 and was presented to Queen Victoria. Uncle here signifies a worthy old man. Uncle Tom is now used by Black Nationalists to denote Negroes who are over-subservient to the white ESTABLISHMENT.

Welsh uncle. The husband of a parent's cousin; sometimes a parent's first cousin. Don't come the uncle over me. In Latin, Ne sis patrius mihi (HORACE, II Sat., iii, 88), i.e. do not overdo your privilege of reproving or castigating me. The Roman notion of a patrius or uncle acting as guardian was that of a severe castigator. Similarly their idea of a STEP-mother was a woman of stern and unsympathetic nature, often unjust to her stepchildren.

To talk like a Dutch uncle. To reprove firmly but kindly.

Unclubable, or unclubbable. "A very unclubable man." One who is very unsocial, lacking in urbanity. A word coined by Dr. Johnson and applied by him to Sir John Hawkins, one of the original members of the Literary CLUB founded in 1763, which met at the Turk's Head, Gerrard Street, SOHO.

Unco. A Scottish variant of uncouth (unknown; hence, strange, extraordinary). It has two meanings: as an adjective it means unknown, strange, unusual; but as an adverb it means very—as unco good, unco glad, etc. The "unco guid" are the PINCHBECK saints, too good by half.

Unconscious, The. In psychology, the mental processes which the individual cannot bring into consciousness—they are, indeed, often unknown to him.

Uncumber, St. The Portuguese St. Wilgefortis, about whom little is known with any accuracy and so called according to Sir Thomas More "because they [women] reckon that for a peck of oats she will not fail to uncumber them of their husbandys". Traditionally, she was one of seven beautiful princesses, and wishing to lead a single life prayed that she might have a beard. The prayer was granted and she was no more cumbered with suitors, but one of them, a prince of Sicily, was so enraged that he had her crucified.

Undecimilla. See URSULA, ST.

Under. Under the counter. Said of actions that are surreptitious and savouring of dishonest practice; in World War II, rationing led to considerable "under the counter" transactions by some shopkeepers who kept back goods for privileged customers or BLACK MARKET transactions "under the counter".

Under cover. Working out of sight, in secret. An under-cover agent is one who pursues his inquiries or work unknown to any but his employer.

Underground. A political or military movement carried on in secret against an oppressor government of an occupying enemy administration, especially in World War II.

Underground Railroad. See under RAILROAD.

Undertaker. Originally any contractor. The application of this word to one who carries out funerals—in the U.S.A. termed a mortician—dates from the 17th century. The principal English and Scottish grantees of land during the plantation of ULSTER (1609-1612) were called Undertakers, as were those who undertook to secure the return to PARLIAMENT of members favourable to the policies of James I in 1614. The term was also applied to the 18th-century magnates who monopolized political power in Ireland and who controlled the Irish Parliament.

"There's a Providence in it all," said Sam. "O' course there is," replied his father with a nod of grave approval. "Wot 'ud become of the undertakers without it, Sammy?"
DICKENS: Pickwick Papers, ch. lii.

Underwriter. One who engages to buy at a certain prearranged price all the stock in a new company, of a new issue, etc., that is not taken up by the public. An underwriter at LLOYD'S is one who insures a ship or its merchandise and undertakes other insurance to a stated amount. So called because he writes his name under the policy.

Undine (ün' dën). One of the elemental spirits of PARACELSUS, the spirit of the waters. She was created without a soul; but had this privilege, that by marrying a mortal and bearing him a child she obtained a soul, and with it all the pains and penalties of the human race. She is the subject of a tale (Undine, 1811) by de la Motte Fouqué (1777-1843). Cp. SYLPH.

Unearned increment. The increase in the value of land, houses, etc., not attributable to the owner's efforts or outlay, as from the building of roads, growth of population, etc.

Unfinished Symphony. Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B Minor (1822), of which only two movements were completed. The phrase is applied figuratively and humorously to various unfinished compositions.

Unfrock. In ecclesiastical parlance, to deprive a priest of his clerical robes and reduce him to lay estate.

Unguem (ün' gwem). Ad unguem. To the minutest point. To finish a statue ad unguem is to finish it so smoothly and perfectly that when the nail is run over the surface it can detect no imperfection. See TO HAVE IT AT ONE'S FINGERS' ENDS under FINGER.

Unhinged. To be quite unhinged. To have one's nerves badly shaken, one's balance of mind disturbed; like a door which has lost one of its hinges.

Unhoused. See under HOUSEL.

Uniat, or Uniate Churches (Lat. unus, one). Churches of Eastern Christendom which are in communion with ROME but retain their own rights, languages, and canon law.

Unicorn (ü' ni kôrn) (Lat. unum cornu, one horn). A mythical and heraldic animal, represented by mediæval writers as having the legs of a buck, the tail of a LION, the head and body of a HORSE, and a single horn, white at the base, black in the middle, and red at the tip, in the middle of its forehead. The body is white, the head red, and eyes blue. The earliest author that describes it is Ctesias (400 B.C.); the mediæval notions concerning it are well summarized in the following extract:

The unicorn has but one horn in the middle of its forehead. It is the only animal that ventures to attack the elephant; and so sharp is the nail of its foot, that with one blow it can rip the belly of that beast. Hunters can catch the unicorn only by placing a young virgin in his haunts. No sooner does he see the damsel, than he runs towards her, and lies down at her feet, and so suffers himself to be captured by the hunters. The unicorn represents Jesus Christ, who took on Him our nature in the virgin's womb, was betrayed by the Jews, and delivered into the hands of Pontius Pilate. Its one horn signifies the Gospel of Truth.

Le Bestiaire Divin de Guillaume, Clerc de Normandie (13th century).

Another popular belief was that the unicorn by dipping its horn into a liquid could detect whether or not it contained poison. In the designs for GOLD and SILVER plate made for the Emperor Rudolph II by Ottavio Strada is a cup on which a unicorn stands as if to assay the liquid.

The supporters of the old royal ARMS of SCOTLAND are two Unicorns; when James VI of Scotland came to reign over ENGLAND (1603) he brought one of the Unicorns with him, and with it supplanted the Red DRAGON which, as representing WALES, was one of the supporters of the English shield, the other being the Lion.

The animosity which existed between the lion and the unicorn referred to by Spenser in his Faerie Queen (II, v, 10):

Like as a lyon, whose imperiall power
A proud rebellious unicorn defyes—is allegorical of that which once existed between England and Scotland.

Driving unicorn. Two wheelers and one leader. The leader is the one horn.

Unigenitus (ü ni jen' i tus) (Lat., the Only-Begotten). A Papal BULL, so called from its opening sentence Unigenitus, Dei Filius, issued in 1713 by Clement XI in condemnation of Quesnel's Réflexions Morales, which favoured Jansenism. It was a dammatio in globo—i.e. a condemnation of the whole book without exception. It was confirmed in 1725, but in 1730 was condemned by the civil authorities of PARIS and the controversy died out.

Union, The. A short term for the United States of America; in England, a once familiar colloquialism for the workhouse, from its being maintained by a group of parishes formed into a Union in accordance with the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1834.

The Act of Union. Specifically the Act of Union of 1707 declaring that on and after 1 May 1707 ENGLAND and SCOTLAND "for ever after be united into One

Unitarians

Kingdom by the Name of Great Britain". It provided for one PARLIAMENT for both countries. There had been a common sovereign since 1603.

The term also applies to the Act of 1536, incorporating WALES with England, and the Act of 1800, which united the Kingdoms of Great Britain and IRELAND on and after 1 January 1801, a union which came to an end in 1922.

Union Jack. The national banner of Great Britain and IRELAND. It consists of three united crosses—that of St. GEORGE for ENGLAND, the saltire of St. ANDREW for Scotland (added by James I), and the CROSS of St. PATRICK for Ireland (added at the Union in 1801).

The white edging of St. George's cross shows the white field. In the saltire the cross is reversed on each side, showing that the other half of the cross is covered over. The broad white band is the St. Andrew's cross and should be uppermost at the top left-hand corner of the flag (i.e. the hoist). The narrow white edge is the white field of St. Patrick's cross.

The Union Jack is technically described thus:

The Union Flag shall be azure, the Crosses saltire of St. Andrew and St. Patrick quarterly per saltire, counter-changed, argent and gules, the latter fimbriated of the second, surmounted by the Cross of St. George of the third, fimbriated as the saltire.—By order of the Council.

See JACK (4).

Union of South Africa. The union of the former self-governing colonies of the Cape of Good Hope, Natal, the Transvaal, and the Orange River Colony, with its PARLIAMENT at Cape Town. The title was changed to the Republic of South Africa on 31 May 1961, when South Africa left the British COMMONWEALTH.

The Union Rose. The Tudor Rose. See under ROSE.

Union is strength (Lat. unitate fortior). The wise saw of Periander, tyrant of Corinth between c. 627 and 586 B.C.

Unionists. In 1886, when Gladstone introduced his first Home Rule Bill for Ireland, 78 LIBERALS under Joseph Chamberlain and Lord Hartington allied with the CONSERVATIVES as Liberal Unionists to uphold the union with IRELAND (see ACT OF UNION, above). Since 1886, the Conservative Party was also called the Unionist Party, which adopted the official name of Conservative and Unionist Party, in 1909.

Unitarians. Originally Christians who denied the existence of the TRINITY, maintaining that God existed in one person only. Many of the early heretical sects were unitarian in belief if not in name, and at the time of the REFORMATION unitarianism had numerous exponents who may be regarded as the founders of the modern movement.

In England, John Biddle (1615–1662) is generally regarded as the founding father and among the famous men who have been Unitarians are Dr. Samuel Clarke, Joseph Priestley, Dr. Lardner, James Martineau, Sir Edgar Bowring, and Joseph Chamberlain. Modern Unitarianism is not based on Scriptural authority, but on reason and conscience and includes AGNOSTICS and humanists among its members. There is no formal dogma or creed.

Unite. A GOLD coin worth 20s., also called a broad, from its size. It was first minted by James I in 1604 in place of the SOVEREIGN, and named from the union of the crowns of ENGLAND and SCOTLAND (1603), and bore the motto "Faciam eos in gentem unam" (I will make them one people. Ezek. xxxvii, 22). It was replaced by the GUINEA in 1663. See JACOBUS.

United. United Empire Loyalists.

Many of those American colonists who remained loyal to the mother country during the American War of Independence subsequently migrated to Ontario and the Maritime Provinces. They formed the nucleus of British Canada and were given the honourable title of United Empire Loyalists.

United Irishmen. A society formed by Theobald Wolfe Tone in 1791 with its first headquarters at Belfast and with the objects of securing a representative national parliament, to unite all Irishmen against British influence, etc. Membership included both PROTESTANTS and ROMAN CATHOLICS, but it soon became revolutionary and was largely responsible for the rebellion of 1798.

United Kingdom. The name adopted on 1 January 1801, when Great Britain and IRELAND were united. See ACT OF UNION under UNION.

United Nations. The successor to the LEAGUE OF NATIONS as a world organization primarily concerned with the maintenance of peace but with numerous other functions and agencies. It sprang from the Dumbarton Oaks conversations (1944) between the UNITED STATES, Great Britain, and Soviet Russia, and was formally inaugurated in 1945 with headquarters in New York City.

United Provinces. Guelderland, Utrecht, Friesland, Overijssel, Groningen, Zealand, and Holland; the seven provinces whose independence was recognized by Spain in 1648 and who first came together in the Union of Utrecht (1579), thus laying the foundation of the United Kingdom of the Netherlands. They became the Batavian Republic in 1795 and the Kingdom of Holland under Louis Bonaparte in 1806. At the end of the Napoleonic Wars (1814), the Kingdom of the Netherlands was reconstituted with the addition of the Southern Netherlands. Belgium secured its independence after the revolt in 1830 and was formally recognized in 1839.

The United Provinces of Agra and Oudh (1902) were entitled the United Provinces in 1935, changed to Uttar Pradesh in 1950.

United States of America. The Federal republic of 50 States and one Federal District which has developed from the original 13 States (marked with an asterisk in the list below) which secured their independence from Great Britain in 1783. Its government is based upon the Constitution of 1787.

There are other outlying territories and other nicknames.

Unities, The Dramatic. See under DRAMA.

Universal Doctor. Alain de Lille (c. 1128–1202), French theologian, so called for his varied learning.

Albertus Magnus (c. 1206–1280), the scholastic philosopher, was also called doctor universalis.

University. Generally applied to collegiate societies of learning from the 14th century, from Med. Lat. universitas, a community or corporation, in this case a corporation of teachers and scholars. Oxford University has its origins in the 12th century and that of Cambridge early in the 13th century. The more common and earlier term was studium or studium generale, places of instruction of general resort, i.e. for students from all parts. They were essentially ecclesiastical institutions.

The University Tests Act. An Act passed in 1871 abolishing in the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham subscriptions to the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion, all declarations and oaths concerning religious belief, and all compulsory attendance at public worship except for those taking divinity degrees. The Act also applied to all holders of lay posts.

Unknown

Unknown. The Great Unknown. Sir Walter Scott. So called (first by his publisher, James Ballantyne) because the Waverley Novels were published anonymously.

The Unknown Prime Minister. A name given to A. Bonar Law (1858–1923), who held office as CONSERVATIVE leader in 1922–1923.

The Unknown Warrior. The body of an unknown British soldier of World War I brought home from one of the battlefields of the Western Front and “buried among the kings” in Westminster Abbey (11 November 1920). Part of the inscription on the gravestone reads: “Thus are commemorated the many multitudes who during the Great War of 1914–1918 gave the most that man can give Life itself . . .”. Similar tombs were set up in the National Cemetery at Arlington, Virginia; beneath the Arc de Triomphe at Paris; and in the Unter den Linden, Berlin. In 1958 the bodies of two more unknown American servicemen were placed in the Tomb of the Unknowns at Arlington—one who died in World War II, and one in the Korean war.

Unlearned Parliament, The. Henry IV’s second PARLIAMENT of 1404, also called the Lawless Parliament, and Parliament of Dunces, because the king hoped for a more tractable assembly by directing the sheriffs not to return any lawyers.

Unmentionables. One of the 19th-century humorous colloquialisms for trousers, pantaloons, breeches; also known as inexpressibles.

Unmerciful Parliament, The. The MERCILESS PARLIAMENT (see under MERCY); also called the WONDERFUL PARLIAMENT.

Unready, The. Ethelred II, King of England (978–1016), called the redeless, or deficient in counsel. Unready is a modern corruption. Ethelred means “noble-counsel”. His nickname is first found in the 13th century.

Unrighteous Bible, The. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Untouchables. The lowest CASTE in India, excluded from social and religious contact with Hinduism and subjected to many indignities. Their touch was supposed to sully the higher castes. Largely through the teaching of Mahatma Gandhi, untouchability was legally ended in 1949. Cp. PARIAH.

Unwashed, The Great. Usually a derogatory reference to the lower classes of former days or to the less hygienic habits of our ancestors.

There are individuals still alive who sneer at the people and speak of them with epithets of scorn. Gentlemen, there can be but little doubt that your ancestors were the Great Unwashed.

THACKERAY: Pendennis, ch. xxxix.

Unwritten Law. Uncodified custom which rests for its authority on the supposed right of the individual to take into his hands the avenging of personal wrongs; also applied to understood and long-standing custom or convention. COMMON LAW is sometimes so called, which rests upon judicial decision as opposed to written statute.

Up. A.B. is up. A.B. is actually making a speech in PARLIAMENT.

The House is up. The business of the day is ended, and members of PARLIAMENT may go home.

It is up to him. It is for him to take the initiative or decide what is to be done.

Up country. In the interior, away from the coast, inland. The term is sometimes used in America and Australia with slighting implications, meaning unsophisticated, rustic.

“Up, Guards, and at them!” The somewhat apocryphal order attributed to Wellington as his order to the Guards at the battle of Waterloo (18 June 1815). Creasy gives this rendering in his Fifteen Decisive Battles.

Up stage. As a technical theatrical direction this means at the back of the stage which in many theatres slopes down slightly to the footlights. Colloquially the phrase up-stage means aloof, putting on airs of consequence or superiority; an actor up stage of another has the advantage, the latter having to act with his back to the audience.

Up State. In the U.S.A., the part of a State farthest north or distant from the coast; the term is used more particularly of the northern parts of New York State.

The Upper House. See under HOUSE.

The Upper Ten. See under TEN.

On one’s uppers. Impoverished; as typified by the worn-out condition of one’s footwear. Cp. DOWN AT HEEL.

Upanishads (ū pān’ i shād̄z). Part of the oldest speculative literature of the Hindus, a collection of treatises on the nature of the universe, the deity, and of man. They form the VEDANTA, or last part of the VEDA, and date from about 500 B.C. The name is Sanskrit, and means “a sitting down” (at another’s feet), hence “a confidential talk”, “esoteric doctrine”.

Upas Tree (ū’ pās). The Javanese tree, Aniarius toxicaria, the milky juice of which contains a virulent poison and is used for tipping arrows.

Fable has it that a putrid steam rises from it, and that whatever the vapour touches dies. Foersch, a Dutch physician, wrote in 1783, “Not a tree, nor blade of grass is to be found in the valley or surrounding mountains. Not a beast or bird, reptile or living thing, lives in the vicinity.” He adds that on “one occasion 1,600 refugees encamped within 14 miles of it, and all but 300 died within two months”. This “traveller’s tale” has given rise to the figurative use of upas for a corrupting or pernicious influence.

Upsee. Used in combination with Dutch, Freeze, English, as jesting terms for drunk or tipping. Upsee Dutch is “in the manner of the Dutch”, upsee Freeze, “in the manner of a Frisian”, etc.

I do not like the dulness of your eye,
It hath a heavy cast; ’tis upsee-Dutch,
And says you are a lumpish whoremaster.
BEN JONSON: The Alchemist, IV, iv.

Upset price. The price at which goods sold by auction are first offered for competition. If no advance is made they fall to the person who made the upset price. Reserved bid is virtually the same thing.

Upstairs. To kick upstairs. To get rid of an embarrassing colleague in the CABINET or HOUSE OF COMMONS by giving him a peerage, thereby removing him to the HOUSE OF LORDS. Thus any promotion given to get rid of someone.

Urania (ū rā’ ni ā). One of the MUSES in Greek mythology who presides over ASTROLOGY; usually represented pointing at a celestial globe with a staff. Also an epithet of APHRODITE or VENUS. The name means “heavenly” or “celestial”. Milton (Paradise Lost, VII, 1-39) makes her the spirit of the loftiest poetry, and calls her “heavenly born” and the sister of Wisdom.

Uranus (ū’ rā nus). In Greek mythology, the personification of HEAVEN, son and husband of GÆA, and father of the TITANS, the CYCLOPS, etc. He hated his children and confined them in the body of Earth who begged them to avenge her, and his son KRONOS unmaned him with a sickle and dethroned him.

The planet Uranus was discovered in 1781 by Herschel, and named by him Georgium Sidus in honour of George III. Its four satellites are named Ariel, Umbriel, Titania, and Oberon.

Urbanists. See FRANCISCANS.

Urbi et Orbi (ēr’ bi et ör’ bi) (Lat., to the city [Rome] and the world). A phrase applied to the solemn blessing publicly given by the POPE from the balcony of St. Peter’s on special occasions, such as his election. The custom fell into abeyance after 1870 but was revived by Pope Pius XI after his election in 1922.

Urdu. The form of Hindustani spoken by Mohammedans and Hindus in contact with them; from urdu zaban, “the language of the camp”, which grew up as the means of communication between the MOSLEM conquerors and their subject population.

Uriah (ū ri’ ā). Letter of Uriah. A treacherous letter, importing friendship but in reality a death warrant. (See II Sam. xi, 15.)

Uriel (ū’ ri ēl). One of the seven ARCHANGELS of rabbinical angelology, sent by God to answer the questions of Esdras (II Esdras iv). In Milton’s Paradise Lost (III, 690) he is the “Regent of the Sun”, and “sharpest-sighted spirit of all in heaven”.

Urim and Thummim (ū’ rim, thüm’ im). Sacred lots of unknown nature used for DIVINATION by the ancient Hebrews as a means of ascertaining the will of God. They are mentioned in Exod. xxviii, 30; Deut. xxxiii, 8; I Sam. xxviii, 6; Ezra ii, 63, etc., but fell out of use as more spiritual conceptions of the Deity developed and there is no mention of them after the time of David.

Ursa Major. The GREAT BEAR (see under BEAR), or CHARLES’S WAIN, the most conspicuous of the northern constellations.

Boswell’s father used to call Dr. Johnson Ursa Major.

Ursa Minor. The Little Bear; the northern constellation known also as Cynosura or Dog’s tail, from its circular sweep. The Pole star is α in the tail. See CYNOSURE; GREAT BEAR under BEAR.

Ursula, St. A 5th-century British princess, according to legend, who went with 11,000 virgins on a pilgrimage to ROME and was massacred with all her companions by the Huns at Cologne. One explanation of the story is that Undecimilla (mistaken for undecim millia, 11,000) was one of Ursula’s companions.

Ursulines. An order of nuns founded by St. Angela Merici of Brescia in 1535, from their patron saint, St. URSULA. They are primarily concerned with the education of girls.

Use. To have no use for a person. Used idiomatically, implies active dislike mingled with contempt—one is not prepared to make use of him for any purpose. "To have no time for a person" is a similar expression.

Useless Parliament, The. The PARLIAMENT convened by Charles I, on 8 June 1625; adjourned to Oxford, 1 August; and dissolved 12 August; having done nothing but quarrel with the king.

Usher. From Fr. huissier, a door-keeper.

Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. See BLACK ROD.

Usher of the Green Rod. An officer in attendance on the Knights of the Thistle at their chapters. (See THE "MOST ANCIENT" ORDER OF THE THISTLE under THISTLE.)

Usnech, or Uisnech, The Sons of. Naoise (or Noisi), Ainle, and Ardan. DEIRDRE was told by her foster-father that she would fall in love with a man who had hair as black as a raven, cheeks as red as blood, and a body white as snow. Naoise was such a man and Deirdre ran off with him.

Usquebaugh (us' kwē baw). Whisky (Ir. uisgebeatha, water of life). Similar to the Lat. aqua vitæ, and Fr. eau de vie.

Utgard. In Scandinavian mythology, the abode of the giants, where Utgard-LOKI had his castle.

Uther. According to Geoffrey of Monmouth (Historia Britonum), King of Britain and father of King ARTHUR by an adulterous amour with Igera, wife of Gorlois, Duke of Cornwall, at TINTAGEL. See PENDRAGON.

Uti possidetis (ū' tī pos i dé' tis) (Lat., as you possess). The principle that the property remains with its present possessor; in international law that the belligerents retain possession of their acquisitions in war.

Uticensis (ū tī sen' sis). Cato the Younger (95–46 B.C.) was so called from Utica, the place of his death.

Utility. The official name given during and after World War II to clothing, furniture, etc., made according to government specification and sold at controlled prices. The name was a sign of the austerity of the times, practical qualities being more important than ornamentation, etc.

Utilitarianism. The ethical doctrine that actions are right in proportion to their usefulness or as they tend to promote happiness; the doctrine that the end and criterion of public action is "the greatest happiness of the greatest number".

The term originated with Jeremy Bentham (1748–1832), whose ideas were expounded by his disciple James Mill (1773–1836) and by his son John Stuart Mill (1806–1873), in his Utilitarianism (1869), who also introduced quantitative and qualitative distinctions in pleasures.

Utnapishtim. The Babylonian counterpart of Noah, whose story is told in the GILGAMESH EPIC, and which has many notable resemblances to the BIBLE story. The Hebrews almost certainly derived their account from Babylonia.

Utopia. Nowhere (Gr. ou, not; topos, a place). The name given by Sir Thomas More to the imaginary island in his political romance of the same name (1516), where everything is perfect—the laws, the morals, the politics, etc., and in which the evils of existing laws, etc., are shown by contrast. See IDEAL COMMONWEALTHS under COMMONWEALTH.

Hence Utopian, applied to any idealistic but impractical scheme.

Rabelais (Bk. II, ch. xxiv) sends PANTAGRUEL and his companions to Utopia, where they find the citizens of its capital, Amaurot, most hospitable.

Utraquists (Lat. utraque specie, in both kinds). HUSSITES or CALIXTENES, so called because they insisted that both elements should be administered to communicants in the EUCHARIST.

Utter and Inner Barristers. An utter or outer BARRISTER is one who has not taken SILK. An inner barrister means a student.

Uzziel. One of the principal ANGELS of rabbinical angelology, the name meaning "Strength of God". He was next in command to GABRIEL, and in Milton's Paradise Lost (IV, 782) is commanded by Gabriel to "coast the south with strictest watch".

V

V. The twenty-second letter of the alphabet formerly sharing its form with U.

In the Roman notation it stands for 5 and represents ideographically the four fingers and thumb with the latter extended. \bar{V} represents 5,000.

V for Victory. On 14 January 1941, M. Victor de Lavaleye, a member of the exiled Belgian government in London, proposed in a broadcast to Belgium that the letter V, standing for Victory in all European languages, be substituted for the letters R.A.F. which were being chalked up on walls, etc., in Belgium. The plan was immediately adopted and the Morse Code V (···—) was featured in every B.B.C. broadcast to Europe followed by the opening bar of Beethoven's 5th Symphony which has the same rhythm. "Colonel Britton" (D. E. Ritchie), director of the B.B.C. European news service, was responsible for the diffusion of the V-sign propaganda which gave hope to those under the NAZI yoke. Sir Winston Churchill greatly popularized the sign of two upraised fingers in the form of a V.

V-1. Jet-propelled ROBOT plane bomb sent against Britain by the Germans, June-August 1944; subsequently sent by them against Antwerp. V = Vergeltungswaffe (reprisal weapon).

V-2. Long-range rocket with an explosive warhead, projected against England by the Germans in autumn, 1944.

V.C. See VICTORIA CROSS.

V.D.M.I.Æ. Lat. Verbum Dei manet in æternum, i.e. the word of God endureth for ever. The inscription on the liveries of the servants of the Duke of Saxony and Landgrave of Hesse, the Lutheran princes, at the Diet of Spires in 1526.

V.E. Day. The end of hostilities in Europe after World War II, 8 May 1945.

V.I.P. Very Important Person. This well-established usage was coined by a Station Commander of Transport Command in 1944 who was responsible for the movement of a plane-load of important individuals, including Lord Mountbatten, to the Middle East and so described them in his movement orders to avoid disclosing their identity.

V.J. Day. The end of hostilities in the Far East, 15 August 1945.

V.P. Vice-President. In U.S.A. often called Veep.

Vacuum (Lat. vacare, to be empty). The word is commonly used for a vacuum-cleaner and to vacuum is to clean up with this instrument.

Nature abhors a vacuum. This maxim is used by Spinoza in his Ethics (1677) and by Rabelais in its LATIN form, natura abhorret vacuum, in his GARGANTUA (ch. V). See TORRICELLI.

Vade mecum (vā' dē mē' kūm) (Lat., go-with-me). A pocket-book, memorandum-book, pocket cyclopædia, lady's pocket companion, or anything else which contains many things of daily use in a small compass.

Væ Victis! (vē vik' tis) (Lat.). Woe to the vanquished! So much the worse for the conquered! This was the exclamation of Brennus, the Gaulish chief, on throwing his sword into the balance as a make-weight, when determining the price of peace with ROME (390 B.C.).

Vagitanus. See BABES, PROTECTING DEITIES OF.

Vail. To lower; to cast down. From Fr. avaler, to descend.

The time is come

That France must vail her lofty plumed crest.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. I, v, iii.

Vails, or Vales, an obsolete term for a tip given to servants, from Fr. valoir, Lat. valere, to be worth. The older form was avails.

2. Fish: Ay, but hark you, my friend; 'twas we that made up this garment through the rough seams of the waters: there are certain condolements, certain vails. I hope, sir, if you thrive, you'll remember from whence you had it.

SHAKESPEARE: Pericles, II, i.

Vale! Farewell! 2nd pers. sing. imp. of Lat. valere, to be worth, or to fare well.

I thought once againe heere to have made an end, with a heartie Vale of the best fashion.

SPENSER: Letter to Gabriel Harvey (1580).

Ave atque vale! Hail and farewell! The words of Catullus at his brother's tomb.

Vale of the White Horse. See under HORSE.

Valentine, St. A priest of ROME who was imprisoned for succouring persecuted Christians. He became a convert and, although he is supposed to have restored the sight of the gaoler's blind daughter, he was clubbed to death (c. 270). His day is 14 February, as is that of St. Valentine, bishop of Terni, who was martyred a few years later.

The ancient custom of choosing Valentines has only accidental relation to either saint, being essentially a relic of the old Roman Lupercalia (see LUPERCAL), or from association with the mating season of birds. It was marked by the giving of presents and nowadays by the sending of a card on which CUPIDS, transfixed hearts, etc., are depicted.

Chaucer refers to this in his Assembly of Fowls (310):

For this was on Saint Valentine's Day,

When ev'ry fowl cometh to choose her make,

and SHAKESPEARE (Midsummer Night's Dream, IV, i) has:

Good morrow, friends! St. Valentine is past;
Begin these wood-birds but to couple now?

Valentine and Orson. An old French ROMANCE connected with the Carolingian cycle.

The heroes, from whom it is named, were the twin sons of Bellisant, sister of King Pepin and Alexander, and were born in a forest near Orléans. Orson (Fr. ourson, a little bear) was carried off by a bear and became a wild man and the terror of France. While the mother was searching for him, Valentine was carried off by his uncle, the King. The brothers had many adventures and Orson was reclaimed by Valentine. Orson married Fezon, daughter of Duke Savary of Aquitaine, and Valentine, Clerimond, sister of the Green Knight.

Valhalla. In Scandinavian mythology, the hall in the celestial regions whither the souls of heroes slain in battle were borne by the VALKYRIES, to spend eternity in joy and feasting (valr, the slain, and hall).

Hence the name is applied to buildings, such as Westminster Abbey, used as the last resting-place of a nation's great men.

Valkyries (Old Norse, the choosers of the slain). The nine (or seven, or 12) handmaidens of ODIN, who, mounted on swift horses and holding drawn swords, rushed into the mêlée of battle and selected those destined to death. These heroes they conducted to VALHALLA, where they waited upon them and served them with mead and ALE in the skulls of the vanquished.

Vallary Crown (Lat. vallum, a mound, rampart). The same as a mural CROWN.

Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes. A volcanic valley in the region of Mount Katmai, Alaska. Shortly before Mount Katmai blew up on 6 June 1912 there were many bursts of molten matter in the valley, and these fissures have since discharged hot gases, hence the name of the valley. It has been a National Monument since 1918.

The Valley of the Kings. A site in the Theban Hills, north-west of THEBES, Egypt, containing the tombs of PHARAOKHS of the New Kingdom. Thutmosis I (1530-1520 B.C.) was the first to build his tomb there. The wadi was guarded by small forts and the tombs were walled up with rubble, but pillaging began as the New Kingdom declined. The many tombs uncovered include that of Tutankhamun, revealed with its remarkable treasures in 1922-3 by Howard Carter who, with Lord Carnarvon, had been engaged in excavations there since 1906.

The Valley of the Queens. The less spectacular cemetery of the wives and daughters of Pharaohs of the XXth Dynasty. It lies to the south of the VALLEY OF THE KINGS.

Valois (vâl' wa). The reigning dynasty in France from 1328 to 1589, taking its name from Philip, Duke of Valois, the first of the line. They were a branch of the CAPET family and were succeeded by the BOURBON line when Henry of Navarre, husband of Marguerite of Valois, became King as Henry IV in 1589.

Valois head-dress. A mid-19th-century women's hair style, the hair being pulled back from the forehead to form a roll on the crown of the head.

Vamana. See AVATAR.

Vamp. To Vamp is properly to put new uppers to old boots; and vamps were short hose covering the feet and ankles (Fr. avant-pied, the forepart of the foot).

To vamp up an old story, to refurbish it; to vamp an accompaniment to a song is to improvise as one goes along.

Another verb to vamp, derived from VAMPIRE, means to flirt outrageously or allure with the intent of gaining some personal end.

Vampire. A fabulous being, supposed to be the ghost of a heretic, criminal, etc., who returned from the grave in the guise of a monstrous bat to suck the blood of sleeping persons who usually become vampires themselves. The only way to destroy them was to drive a stake through their body. The superstition is essentially Slavonic.

But first on earth, as vampire sent,
Thy corpse shall from its tomb be rent,
Then ghastly haunt thy native place
And suck the blood of all thy race.

BYRON: The Giaour, 755.

The word is applied to one who preys upon his fellows—a "blood-sucker".

One of the classic horror stories, Bram Stoker's Dracula (1897), centres on vampires.

Van Diemen's Land. The former name for Tasmania, given by its Dutch discoverer Abel Jans Tasman in 1642 in honour of his patron, the Dutch Governor-General of Batavia. It became a British settlement in 1803, and its name was changed to Tasmania in 1853, to obliterate memories of its associations with BUSHRANGERS and convicts, transportation having ceased at that time.

Vandals. A Teutonic race first recorded in north-east Germany which in the 5th century ravaged GAUL, Spain, and North Africa, and in 455 ROME itself, when they despoiled it of its treasures of art and literature.

The name is hence applied to those who willfully or ignorantly indulge in destruction of works of art, etc. Vandalism is now applied to most forms of wanton damage.

Vandyke (vån dik'). To scallop an edge after the fashion of the collars painted by Van Dyck in the reign of Charles I. The scalloped edges are said to be vandyked.

Vandyke beard. A pointed beard such as those frequently shown in Van Dyck's portraits, especially of Charles I.

Vanessa (vå nes' å). Dean Swift's name for his friend and correspondent, Esther Vanhomrigh, made by compounding Van, the first syllable of her surname, with Essa, the pet form of Esther. Swift called himself Cadenus, an anagram on Decanus (Lat. for DEAN).

Vanguard. See AVANT-GARDE.

Vanir. A Scandinavian race of gods of peaceful and benevolent functions in contrast to the ÆSIR, who were essentially warriors. Among them were NJÖRD, FREYR, and FREYJA.

Vanity Fair. In Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, a fair established by BEELZEBUB, Apollyon, and Legion, in the town of Vanity, and lasting all the year round. Here were sold houses, lands, trades, places, honours, preferments, titles, countries, kingdoms, lusts, pleasures, and delights of all sorts.

Thackeray adopted the name for the title of his novel (1847) satirizing the weaknesses and follies of human nature.

Vantage loaf. The thirteenth loaf of a baker's dozen.

Varaha. See AVATAR.

Variorum Edition (Lat. variorum, of various persons). An edition of a literary text giving the variant readings, notes, and comments of different scholars.

Varsity. A shortened form of university; but, in England, properly used only of Oxford or Cambridge.

Varuna. In Hindu mythology, the brother of Mitra, one of the ADITYAS. Varuna shines at night and is linked with the MOON. He is represented as a white man riding on a sea monster, is the witness of everything, orders the seasons and controls the rains. Mitra is linked with the sun and sees by day.

Vassal. A feudal TENANT with military obligations to his superior; hence, a dependant, retainer, servant, etc.

Vathek. The hero of the outstanding oriental novel of this name by William Beckford (1760-1844) of Fonthill. It was written in French and first appeared in English in 1786. Vathek, the ninth caliph of the ABBASSIDE dynasty, is a haughty, effeminate monarch, induced by a malignant genius to commit all sorts of crimes. He abjured faith, and offered allegiance to EBLIS, under the hope of obtaining the throne of the pre-Adamite sultans. This he gained, only to find that it was a place of torture and that he was doomed to remain in it for ever.

Vatican (våt' i kån). The palace of the POPE; so called because it stands on the Vaticanus Mons (Vatican Hill) of ancient ROME, which got its name through being the headquarters of the vaticinatores, or soothsayers.

The Vatican City State. The area of ROME occupied by the city of the VATICAN, recognized by the LATERAN TREATY (1929) as constituting the territorial extent of the temporal power of the HOLY SEE. It consists of the Papal palace, the library, archives, and museums, the Piazza of St. PETER, and contiguous buildings including a railway station, in all an area of just under a square mile. It has about 900 inhabitants and its own coinage. Certain other buildings outside the Vatican enjoy extraterritorial rights.

The Vatican Council. The twentieth ŒCUMENICAL COUNCIL of the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH (1869-1870), summoned by Pius IX and suspended when the Italians occupied ROME during the Franco-Prussian War. It was notable for its definition of Papal INFALLIBILITY which was limited to when the Pope speaks ex cathedra regarding faith or morals.

A second Vatican Council was opened by Pope John XXIII in October 1962 and concluded by Paul VI in December 1965. Among numerous controversial proposals for change, it was notably concerned with the need for Christian unity, liturgical reforms, and matters of church government. One special feature was the presence of observers from non-Roman Catholic Churches. See ŒCUMENICAL COUNCILS.

The Prisoner of the Vatican. The POPE was so called after 1870, when Pius IX retired into the VATICAN after the occupation of ROME. He proclaimed himself a prisoner for conscience' sake and his successors remained in the precincts of the Vatican until the LATERAN TREATY of 1929.

The Thunders of the Vatican. See THUNDER.

Vaudeville (vō' divil). A corruption of Val de vire or in O. Fr. Vau de vire, valley of the Vire, the native valley of Olivier Basselin, a Norman poet (d. 1418) and author of convivial songs which were so named from the place where he composed them. It is now applied to variety entertainment made of songs, dances, sketches, etc.

Vaudois. See WALDENSIANS. Cp. VOODOO.

Vauxhall (vawks' or vox' awl). A part of LAMBETH, London, so called from Falke de Bréauté who was lord of the manor in the early 13th century.

Vauxhall Gardens. A very popular pleasure resort for Londoners, first laid out in 1661 as Spring Gardens and finally closed in 1859. Pepys refers to it as Fox Hall. It finds mention in the Spectator, Dickens's Sketches by Boz, Thackeray's Vanity Fair, etc. It provided ample refreshment, musical entertainment, fireworks, displays of pictures and statuary, etc., and at night was lit by over 1,000 lamps.

Vedanta (Sansk., "The end of the Veda"). The UPANISHADS, the philosophy of the Upanishads; the system of Hindu philosophy based on the VEDAS.

Vedas. The four sacred books of the BRAHMINS, comprising (1) the Rigveda; (2) the Samaveda; (3) the Yajurveda; and (4) the Atharvaveda. The first consists of hymns, the second of chants, the third mainly of sacrificial prayers in prose and verse, and the fourth largely of hymns and spells concerned with superstitious practices.

The word Veda means knowledge.

Veep. See V.P. under V.

Vehmgerichte (vām' ge rich te). Courts of justice, or tribunals, held in Germany (especially Westphalia) from the 14th to the 16th centuries for the suppression of crime, heresy, WITCHCRAFT, etc. The proceedings were conducted in secrecy, but civil offences were dealt with in open court. The judges misused their power and were gradually brought under control.

"And was that opinion", said the presiding Judge, "favourable or otherwise to the Holy and Secret Vehme-gericht? Let truth rule your tongue—remember, life is short, Judgment is eternal."

SCOTT: Anne of Geierstein, ch. xx.

Veil. Beyond the veil. The unknown state of those who have departed this life.

To take the veil. To become a nun; from the traditional head-dress of women in religious orders.

Velvet. The iron hand in the velvet glove. Absolute firmness concealed by mildness of approach.

The little gentleman in velvet. The mole. See under LITTLE.

Velveteens. An old nickname for a game-keeper, from his once common velveteen jacket—velveteen being a sort of fustian of twilled cotton with a pile.

"I'm the new under-keeper, and master's told me to keep a sharp look-out on all o' you young chaps. And I tells 'ee I means business, and you'd better keep on your own side, or we shall fall out."

"Well, that's right, Velveteens—speak out, and let's know your mind at once."

HUGHES: Tom Brown's Schooldays, I, ix.

Vendémiaire (von dā mē âr). The first month in the FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR (see under CALENDAR); from 22 SEPTEMBER to 21 OCTOBER. The word means "Vintage month".

Vendue (ven dū') (U.S.A.). A word of obvious French origin for a public auction sale, used from about the mid-18th century to the mid-19th century.

Venerable (Lat. venerabilis, worthy of honour). The title applied to archdeacons in formally addressing them ("The Venerable the Archdeacon of Barset", or "The Venerable E. L. Brown"); and in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, the title of one who has attained the first of the three degrees of CANONIZATION.

It belongs especially to BEDE, the monk of Jarrow, an English ecclesiastical historian (d. 735), and to William of Champeaux (d. 1121), the French scholastic philosopher and opponent of ABELARD.

Veni, Creator Spiritus (vā nē' krā a' tōr spē' ri tūs). A hymn to the HOLY GHOST in the Roman BREVIARY, probably of the 9th century and often attributed to Rabanus Maurus (d. 856), Archbishop of Mainz. It is sung at VESPERS and Terce during PENTECOST and on other occasions such as the consecration of a church or of a BISHOP. The popular English version beginning "Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire" is by John Cosin (1594-1672), Bishop of Durham.

Veni, Sancte Spiritus (Lat., Come, Holy Spirit). A mediæval Latin hymn, used as a sequence at PENTECOST in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Veni, vidi, vici (Lat., I came, I saw, I conquered). According to Plutarch, it was thus that Julius CÆSAR announced to his friend Amintius his victory at Zela (47 B.C.), in Asia Minor, over Pharnaces, son of Mithridates, who had rendered aid to Pompey.

Suetonius, however, says that the words were displayed before his title after his victories in Pontus, and does not ascribe them to Cæsar himself.

They are often used as an example of laconism, extreme concision.

Venial Sin. One that does not forfeit grace. In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH sins are of two sorts, MORTAL and venial (Lat. venia, grace, pardon). See Matt. xii, 31.

Venice Glass. The drinking-glasses of the MIDDLE AGES, made at Venice, were said to break into shivers if poison were put into them.

Doge: 'Tis said that our Venetian crystal has Such pure antipathy to poison, as
To burst, if aught of venom touches it.
BYRON: The Two Foscari, V, i.

Venire facias (Lat., cause to come). An ancient writ directing a SHERIFF to assemble a jury.

Venison. Anything taken in hunting or by the chase. Hence Isaac bids Esau to go and get venison such as he loved (Gen. xxvii, 3), meaning the wild kid. The word is the Lat. venatio, hunting, but is now restricted to the flesh of deer.

Venite (vē nī' tē). Psalm 95, from its opening words Venite, exultemus Domino, "O come, let us sing unto the Lord". It is said or sung at MATTINS.

Venner's Rising. The last futile attempt of some 80 men under Thomas Venner to set up the FIFTH MONARCHY in January 1661. They fought desperately and Venner and 16 of his accomplices were executed.

Venom. The Venom is in the tail. The real difficulty is the conclusion; with a sting in its tail is a similar expression. (See under TAIL.)

Ventôse (von' tōz) (Fr., windy). The sixth month of the FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR (see under CALENDAR).

Ventre-saint-Grise (vontr sāng grē). The usual oath of Henri IV of France, Grise being a euphemism for Christ, and ventre, stomach. Oaths not infrequently took this form of blasphemy—God's nails, God's teeth, etc., were common in England.

A similar oath is Par le ventre de Dieu. Rabelais has Par saint Grise; and the suggestion has been made that the allusion was to FRANCIS of Assisi, who was ceint (girdled) and clad in gris (grey).

Ventriloquism. The trick of producing vocal sounds so that they appear to come, not from the person producing them, but from some other quarter. So called from Lat. venter, belly, loqui, to speak (speaking from the belly), with the erroneous notion that the voice of the ventriloquist proceeded from his stomach.

Venus. The Roman goddess of beauty and sensual love, identified with APHRODITE, in some accounts said to have sprung from the foam of the sea, in others to have been the daughter of JUPITER and DIONE, a NYMPH. VULCAN was her husband, but she had amours with MARS and many other gods and demigods. By MERCURY she was the mother of CUPID, and by the hero Anchises, the mother of ÆNEAS, through whom she was regarded by the Romans as the foundress of their race. Her chief festival is 1 April. See VENUS VERTICORDIA, below.

Her name is given to the second planet from the SUN, and in ASTROLOGY "signifieth the white men or browne . . . joyfull, laughter, liberall, pleasers, dauncers, entertayners of women, players, perfumers, musitions, messengers of love".

Venus loveth ryot and dispense.
CHAUCER: Wife of Bath's Prol., 700.

By the alchemists copper was designated Venus, probably because mirrors were anciently made of copper. A mirror is still the astronomical symbol of the planet Venus.

The best cast at dice (three sixes) used to be called Venus, and the worst (three aces), Canis (dog); hence the phrase, "His Venus has turned out a whelp", equivalent to, "ALL HIS SWANS ARE GEESE" (see under GOOSE).

Venus Anadyomene. VENUS rising from the sea, accompanied by dolphins. The name is given to the famous lost painting by Apelles, and to that by Botticelli in the Accademia delle Belle Arti at Florence.

Venus Callipyge (Gr., with the beautiful buttocks). The name given to a late Greek statue in the Museo Nazionale at Naples. There is no real ground for connecting the statue with VENUS.

Venus de' Medici. A famous statue, since 1860 in the Uffizi Gallery, Florence, ranking as a canon of female beauty. It is supposed to date from the time of AUGUSTUS, and was dug up in the 17th century in the villa of Hadrian, near Tivoli, in 11 pieces. It was kept in the MEDICI Palace at ROME till its removal to Florence by Cosimo III.

Venus Genetrix (Lat., she that has borne). VENUS worshipped as a symbol of marriage and motherhood. CÆSAR erected a temple to Venus Genetrix in the Forum at ROME and there are several statues of this name. She is represented as raising her light drapery and holding an apple, the emblem of fecundity.

Venus of Cnidus. The nude statue of Praxiteles, purchased by the ancient Cnidians, who refused to part with it, although Nicomedes, king of Bithynia, offered to pay off their national debt as its price. It was subsequently removed to Constantinople, and perished in the great fire during the reign of Justinian (A.D. 532); but an ancient reproduction is in the VATICAN.

Venus of Milo, or Melos. This statue, with three of HERMES, was discovered by the French admiral Dumont d'Urville in Milo or Melos, one of the Greek islands. It dates from the 2nd century B.C. and is probably the finest single work of ancient art extant. It is now in the LOUVRE.

Venus Verticordia. One of the surnames of VENUS because she was invoked to "turn the hearts" of women to virtue and chastity (Lat. vertere, to turn; cor, cordis, heart).

Venus Victrix. VENUS, as goddess of victory, represented on numerous Roman coins.

Venus's Fly-trap. A plant (Dionæa muscipula) which feeds on insects, and is found in Carolina.

Venus's girdle. The CESTUS.

Venus's hair. The maidenhair fern, Adiantum Capillus-Veneris.

Venus's hair-stone, or pencil. Rock-crystal or quartz penetrated by acicular crystals of rutile which show through as hair-like filaments.

Venusberg. The Horselberg, or mountain of delight and love, situated between Eisenach and Gotha, in the caverns of which, according to mediæval German legend, the Lady Venus held her court. Human visitors were sometimes allowed in, such as Thomas of Ercildoune and TANNHÄUSER, but they ran the risk of eternal perdition. ECKHARDT the Faithful sat outside to warn them against entering.

Vera causa (vē' rá kaw' zâ) (Lat., a true cause). A cause in harmony with other causes already known. A fairy godmother may be assigned in story as the cause of certain marvellous effects, but is not a vera causa. The revolution of the earth round the sun may be assigned as the cause of the four seasons, and is a vera causa.

Verb. sap., or Verb. sat. The abbreviations of the Lat. verbum sapienti sat est, a word to the wise is enough. A hint is sufficient to any intelligent person.

Verbatim et litteratim (Lat.). "Word for word and letter for letter." Accurately rendered.

Verbena. See VERVAIN.

Verdant Green. An excessively "green" or unsophisticated young man. The character was epitomized in The Adventures of Mr. Verdant Green (1853) by "Cuthbert Bede, B.A." (Rev. Edward Bradley). Verdant's adventures at Oxford, whither he goes as a very green freshman, the victim of endless practical jokes and impostures, make an entertaining and enlightening commentary on life at the University in the mid-19th century.

"Looks ferociously mild in his gig-lamps!" remarked a third, alluding to Mr Verdant Green's spectacles. "And jolly green all over!" wound up a fourth. (ch. iii).

Verderer. In English forest law (see under FOREST COURTS), an official having jurisdiction in the royal forests with especial charge of trees and undergrowth.

Vere adeptus (Lat., one who has truly attained). A title assumed by one admitted to the fraternity of the ROSI-CRUCIANS.

In Rosycrucian lore as learned
As he the Vere-adeptus earned.
BUTLER: Hudibras, I, i 539.

Verger. The BEADLE in a church who carries the rod or staff, which was formerly called the verge (Lat. virga, a rod).

Vergil. See VIRGIL.

Vermeer Forgery. See under FORGERY.

Veronica, St. According to late mediæval legend, a woman of JERUSALEM who handed her head-cloth to Our Lord on his way to CALVARY. He wiped his brow and returned it to the giver when it was found to bear a perfect likeness of the Saviour impressed upon it and was called Vera-Icon (true likeness); the woman became St. Veronica. It is one of the relics at St. Peter's, ROME. In Spanish bull-fighting the most classic movement with the cape is called the Veronica, the cape being swung so slowly before the face of the charging bull that it resembles St. Veronica's wiping of the Holy Face.

Vers de société (Fr., Society verse). Light poetry of a witty or fanciful kind, generally with a slight vein of social satire running through it.

Vers libre. See FREE VERSE.

Versailles (vâr sí'). The great palace built by Louis XIV, in the town of that name to the S.W. of Paris. It was begun by Louis XIII, but the great enlargement was started in 1661 that made it the greatest palace in Europe. The gardens were planned by Le Nôtre and the original park contained the Grand Trianon and the Petit Trianon. Its fountains, water-courses, statuary, and shrubberies were all on a grand scale.

It was the scene of many historic occasions including the signing of the armistice between Great Britain and the United States in 1783 and the taking of the TENNIS COURT OATH by the States General in 1789. Here, too, in the famous Galerie des Glaces, William I of Prussia was crowned first German Emperor, and the Treaty of Versailles between the Allied Powers and Germany was signed after World War I. See also CÉIL-DE-BEUF.

Versi Berneschi. See BERNESQUE.

Vert (vērt). The heraldic term (from French) for green, said to signify love, joy, and abundance; in engravings it is indicated by lines running diagonally across the shield from right to left.

Vertumnus (vēr tūm' nus). The ancient Roman god of the seasons, and the deity presiding over gardens and orchards. He was the husband of POMONA. 12 August was his festival.

Vervain (vēr' vān). Called "holy herb", from its use in ancient rites. Also called "pigeons' grass", "Juno's tears", and "simpler's joy". Verbena is its botanical name. See HERBA SACRA.

Vesica Piscis (ves' i ka pis' is) (Lat., fish-bladder). The ovoidal frame or glory which, in the 12th century, was much used, especially in painted windows, to surround pictures of the Virgin Mary and of Our Lord. It is meant to represent a fish, from the anagram ICHTHUS.

Vespers. The sixth of the canonical hours in the Greek and Roman Churches; sometimes also used of the Evening Service in the English Church. From Lat. vesperus, the evening, cognate with HESPERUS, Gr. Hesperos, the evening star.

The Fatal Vespers. 26 October 1623. A congregation of some 300 had assembled in an upper room in the residence of the French ambassador, in Blackfriars, to hear Father Drury, a JESUIT, preach. The flooring gave way, and Drury with another priest and about 100 of the congregation were killed. This accident was attributed to God's judgment against the Jesuits.

The Sicilian Vespers. See SICILIAN.

Vesta. The virgin goddess of the hearth in Roman mythology, corresponding to the Greek Hestia, one of the 12 great Olympians. She was custodian of the sacred fire brought by ÆNEAS from TROY, which was never permitted to go out lest a national calamity should follow.

Wax matches are named from her.

Vestals. The six spotless virgins who tended the sacred fire brought by ÆNEAS from TROY, and preserved by the state in a sanctuary in the Forum at ROME. They were chosen by lot from maidens between the ages of six and ten and served under strict discipline for 30 years, after which they were free to marry, although few took this step. In the event of their losing their virginity they were buried alive.

The word vestal has been figuratively applied by poets to any woman of spotless chastity. SHAKESPEARE bestowed the epithet on Elizabeth I.

A fair vestal enthroned by the west.

A Midsummer Night's Dream, II, i.

Vestiarian Controversy. The name given to the dispute about the wearing of clerical vestments raised by puritan-minded clergy in the reign of Edward VI and again in the reign of Elizabeth I. The simplest vestments such as the surplice and gown were described as the livery of ANTICHRIST. Archbishop Parker sought to enforce conformity by his Advertisements of 1566 ordering the wearing of the four-cornered cap, scholar's gown, and surplice, but many refused and deprivations followed. Diversity of practice remained and the controversy became merged with the puritan agitation against episcopacy.

Vestry (Lat. vestiarium, robing-room). A room in a church in which the vestments, registers, altar vessels, etc., are kept and used as a robing-room by the clergy. Some larger churches contain a priests' vestry, wardens' vestry, and choir vestry. From the habit of parishioners meeting to conduct parish business in the vestry, both the body of parishioners and the meeting were called the Vestry.

Up to 1894 the Vestry was the final authority in all parish matters, civil and ecclesiastical. The parish priest presided over the meeting which elected churchwardens and other parish officers and the property of the parish was usually vested in the churchwardens. The Common Vestry consisted of the general assembly of ratepayers and the Select Vestry of a body of vestrymen elected to represent the parish, the usual procedure in many of the larger parishes. With the passing of the Local Government Act of 1894, secular Parish Councils were elected to take over the civil administrative functions of the rural parishes and in the towns such work was subsequently transferred to Urban Councils. In 1921 ecclesiastical administration passed to the newly created Parochial Church Councils, although the meeting which elects the churchwardens is still called a Vestry Meeting.

Veteran. In Britain this word is applied only to soldiers with long experience under arms, but in the U.S.A. it is bestowed upon one who has had any service, however brief, in some field of warfare. In the U.S.A. the abbreviation vet. stands for veteran and veterinarian, but in Britain it is only short for veterinary surgeon.

Veto (vē' tō) (Lat., I forbid). Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette were called Monsieur and Madame Veto by the Republicans, because the CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY (1791) allowed the king to have the power, which he abused, of putting his veto upon any decree submitted to him.

Vexillum (vēks il' ūm) (Lat., a standard). The standard borne by troops of the Roman army. In particular it was the red flag flown on the general's tent as a signal for marching or for battle.

Via (Lat., a way). Our use of the word, in I'll go via Chester, i.e. "by way of Chester", is the ablative of via.

Sacra Via (Lat., The Holy Street). The street in ancient ROME where ROMULUS and TATIUS (the SABINE) swore mutual alliance.

Via Appia. The APPIAN WAY.

Via Dolorosa (Lat., Dolorous way). The route Our Lord went from the place of judgment to CALVARY, now marked by the fourteen STATIONS OF THE CROSS.

Via Flaminia. The FLAMINIAN WAY.

Via Lactea (Lat.). The Milky Way. See GALAXY.

Via Media (Lat., The Middle Way). The mean between two extremes. The Elizabethan Church Settlement of the 16th century is often so called, the CHURCH OF ENGLAND being regarded as the mean between extreme Protestantism and Roman Catholicism.

Vial. Vials of wrath. Vengeance, the execution of wrath on the wicked. The allusion is to the seven ANGELS who pour out upon the earth their vials full of wrath (Rev. xvi).

Vaticum (Lat.). The EUCHARIST administered to the dying. The word means "provision for a journey", and its application is obvious.

Vicar (Lat. vicarius, a substitute). The priest of a parish where the TITHES were appropriated in pre-REFORMATION times, usually to monasteries. The monastery retained the Rectorial or great tithes and reserved the small tithes (Vicarial tithes) for the incumbent. After the Dissolution such Rectorial tithes were granted to CHAPTERS, COLLEGES, laymen, etc., known as impropiators (see IMPROPRIATION), who were under obligation to appoint vicars to carry out the ecclesiastical duties. The title is also given to Perpetual Curates. Cp. CLERICAL TITLES.

In the U.S. Episcopal Church a vicar is head of a chapel dependent on a parish church. In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH he is an ecclesiastic representing a BISHOP.

Lay Vicar. A cathedral officer who sings those portions of the liturgy not reserved for the clergy. Formerly called a clerk vicar.

Vicar Apostolic. In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, a titular BISHOP appointed to a place where no episcopate has been established, or where the succession has been interrupted. From 1623 until 1850 the Roman Catholic Church in ENGLAND was governed by vicars apostolic. The term formerly denoted a bishop to whom the POPE delegated some part of his jurisdiction.

Vicar Choral. One of the minor clergy, or a layman, attached to a cathedral for singing certain portions of the service.

Vicar Forane. A priest appointed by a Roman Catholic BISHOP to exercise limited (usually disciplinary) jurisdiction in a particular part of his diocese. The office is similar to that of RURAL DEAN (see under DEAN). Forane is a form of "foreign", hence outlying, rural.

Vicar-General. An ecclesiastical functionary assisting a BISHOP or archbishop in the exercise of his jurisdiction. In 1535 Thomas Cromwell was appointed Vicar-General to carry out Henry VIII's ecclesiastical policies.

The Vicar of Bray. This popular (probably early 18th-century) song depicting a time-serving VICAR of the 17th-18th century is based upon a 16th-century Vicar of Bray, Berkshire, who managed to retain his living during the religious changes of the reigns of Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary, and Elizabeth.

And this is the law I will maintain,
Until my dying day, Sir,
That whatsoever king shall reign,
I'll still be the Vicar of Bray, Sir.

The Vicar of Christ. A title given to the POPE, an allusion to his claim to be the representative of Christ on earth.

The Vicar of Hell. A name playfully given by Henry VIII to John Skelton, his "poet laureate", perhaps because Skelton was rector of Diss, in Norfolk, the pun being on Dis (PLUTO). Milton refers to the story in his Areopagitica:

I name not him for posterity's sake, whom Henry the Eighth named in merriment his vicar of hell.

Vice. The buffoon in the old English MORALITY PLAYS. He wore a cap with ass's ears, and was generally named after some particular vice, Gluttony, Pride, etc.

Vice versa (vi' si vēr' sà) (Lat. vicis, change; versa, turned). The reverse; the terms of the case being reversed.

Vichy (vē shē). A town in the Department of Allier, in central France, formerly fashionable on account of its thermal and medicinal springs, Vichy water being a considerable export and taken for various forms of indigestion, catarrh, etc.

Vichy acquired a new significance during World War II as the seat of Marshal Pétain's collaborationist government (1940-1944), after the German occupation.

Vicious circle. A chain of circumstances, in which the solving of a problem creates a new problem, which makes the original problem more difficult of solution.

In logic, the fallacy of proving one statement by another which itself rests on the first for proof.

Vicisti, Galilæe. See GALILEAN.

Victoria Cross. The premier British award for conspicuous bravery in the presence of the enemy, instituted by Queen Victoria in 1856. The ribbon is now claret coloured, but was formerly blue for the Royal Navy and red for the Army. It is a bronze Maltese CROSS with the royal crown surmounted by a LION in its centre under which is a scroll bearing the words "For Valour". It is worn on the left breast and takes precedence over all other decorations. Until 1942 the crosses were made from the metal of guns captured in the Crimean War at Sebastopol (1855).

Victory Medal. A bronze medal with a double rainbow ribbon, awarded to Allied soldiers who served in a field of war in World War I.

Vidar. In Scandinavian mythology, a son of ODIN, noted for his taciturnity and fearless destruction of FENRIR.

Videlicet (vi del' i set) (Lat. videre licet, it is permitted to see). To wit, that is to say, namely. Abbreviated to VIZ.

Vigilance Committee. A privately formed citizen group taking upon themselves to assist in the maintenance of law and order, etc.; sometimes found in the Southern States of the U.S.A. as a body intimidating Negroes. During the CIVIL WAR (1861-1865) they also strove to suppress the activities of loyalists to the Northern cause. Members of such committees are called Vigilantes.

Vigiliæ. See MATTINS.

Villain, or Villein (Late Lat. villanus, a farm-servant, from villa, a farm). Originally the unfree peasant of feudal times was called a villein. He was bound to the MANOR and owed service to its lord. As the latter's personal chattel, he could be sold or transferred, but he had shares in the village fields. From the time of the BLACK DEATH shortage of labour led to the villein improving his status into that of a copyholder. Cp. BORDAR; COTTAR.

The notion of rascality, wickedness, and worthlessness now associated with villain is a result of aristocratic condescension and sense of superiority.

I am no villain; I am the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Boys; he was my father, and he is thrice a villain that says such a father begot villains.

SHAKESPEARE: As You Like It, I, i.

Vim. Slang for energy, force, "go"; usually in the phrase vim and vigour. It is the accusative of Lat. vis, strength.

Vin (Fr., wine). Vin ordinaire. The French name for inexpensive table wine of no particular regional origin. It is often a blend of different regional wines and not usually of any particular VINTAGE. It is generally a red wine, but not necessarily so.

Vin rosé. Pink wine, usually made by leaving the black skins of the grape in the juice long enough to produce the required colour, but sometimes from a mixture of red and white wine or by the addition of artificial colouring. In certain parts of France this is called vin gris.

Vinalia. Roman wine festivals in honour of JUPITER and also associated with VENUS as a goddess of vineyards. The first such festival was held on 23 APRIL when the wine of the previous season was broached and the second on 19 AUGUST when the VINTAGE began (Lat. vinalis, pertaining to wine).

Vinayapitaka. See TRIPITAKA.

Vincent, St. A deacon of Saragossa, martyred in c. 304 during the persecution under Diocletian. His day is 22 January. He is a patron saint of drunkards for no apparent reason; an old rhyme says:

Vincentian

If on St. Vincent's Day the sky is clear
More wine than water will crown the year.

Vincentian. A Lazarist or Lazarite, a member of the Congregation of Priests of the Mission founded (1625) by St. Vincent de Paul (c. 1580-1660).

Vine. The Rabbis say that the fiend buried a LION, a LAMB, and a hog at the foot of the first vine planted by NOAH; and that hence men receive from wine ferocity, mildness, or wallowing in the mire.

Vinegar. Livy tells us that when Hannibal led his army over the Alps from Spain into Italy in 218 B.C. he splintered the rocks with fire and vinegar to create a zigzag road for the descent. The vinegar or sour wine may have been used for lack of water.

The Vinegar Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Vinegar Joe. The World War II nickname of General Joseph W. Stilwell (1883-1946), U.S. Commander of troops in China.

Vingt-et-un (vant' ā ün') (Fr., twenty-one). A card game in which the object is to get as near as possible to 21 without exceeding it. The court cards count as ten and the ace as one or 11.

Vinland. The name (Wineland) given to that portion of North America known to the Norsemen and first discovered by Lief Ericsson about A.D. 1000. Its location is uncertain and is generally held to have been in the region of Newfoundland, but its estimated position ranges between Labrador and VIRGINIA. Some account for much of the discrepancy in Scandinavian writings by positing a Vinland I and Vinland II. Vinland may well refer to pasture-land, thus obviating the difficulties presented by the association of the name with the vine.

Vino. In vino veritas (Lat.). In wine is truth, meaning when persons are intoxicated they utter many things they would at other times seek to conceal or disguise.

Vintage (Fr. vendange). The gathering of the grapes; the year in which a certain wine was made. The wine of a good vintage year is known as vintage wine and hence "a vintage year" is a memorable and notable year in any context.

Vintry Ward. One of the 25 electoral WARDS of the City of LONDON. So called, according to Stowe, from the site occupied by the wine-merchants from Bordeaux, who anciently settled on this part of the THAMES bank around QUEENHITHE. The Vintners built large houses with vaults and the great house built by Sir John Stodie (Mayor in 1357) was called The Vintry.

Vinum Theologicum (vī' num thē ō loj' i kum) (Lat.). An old term for the best wine obtainable. Holinshed says it was so called because religious men would be sure "neither to drinke nor be served of the worst, or such as was anie wais vined by the vintner; naie, the merchant would have thought that his soule would have gone streightwaie to the devil if he would have served them with other than the best."

Violet. A flower usually taken as the type of modesty, but fabled by the ancients to have sprung from the blood of the boaster AJAX.

The colour indicates the love of truth and the truth of love. For ecclesiastical and symbolical uses, see COLOURS.

In the language of flowers the white violet is emblematical of innocence, and the blue violet for faithful love.

The City of the Violet Crown. See under CITY.

Corporal Violet. NAPOLEON Bonaparte; because when banished to Elba he told his friends he would return with the violets. "Corporal Violet" became a favourite toast of his partisans, and when he reached Fréjus a gang of women assembled with violets, which were freely sold. The SHIBBOLETH was, "Do you like violets?" If the answer given was "Oui," the person was known not to be a confederate; but if the answer was "Eh bien," the respondent was recognized as an adherent.

The violet on the tyrant's grave (Tennyson, "Aylmer's Field", line 845). The reference is to NERO. It is said that some unknown hand went by night and strewed violets over his grave. We are told that at his death his statues were "crowned with garlands of flowers".

Violin. See AMATI; CREMONA; STRAD; FIDDLE.

Viper (U.S.A.). A slang term for a smoker of marijuana.

Viper and File. The biter bit. ÆSOP says a viper found a file, and tried to bite it, under the supposition that it was good food; but the file said that its province was to bite others, and not to be bitten.

Virago (vi ra' gō). Literally a man-like woman, but a term usually employed to designate a turbulent or scolding shrew.

Viraj. See MANU.

Virgate (Lat. virga, a rod). An old English measure of land, usually about 30 acres—i.e. one-quarter of a HIDE; but differing considerably in different districts. Also called yardland.

Virgil (vēr' jil). The greatest poet of ancient ROME, Publius Virgilius Maro (70-19 B.C.), born near Mantua (hence called The Mantuan Swan), a master of epic, didactic, and idyllic poetry. His chief works are the ÆNEID, the Eclogues or Bucolics, and the Georgics. From the Æneid, grammarians illustrated their rules and rhetoricians selected the subjects of their declamations; and even Christians looked on the poet as half inspired; hence the use of his poems in DIVINATION. See SORTES.

In the MIDDLE AGES Virgil came to be represented as a magician and enchanter, hence Dante's conception in his Divina Comedia of making Virgil, as the personification of human wisdom, his guide through the infernal regions.

Virgil was wise, and as craft was considered a part of wisdom, especially overreaching the spirit of evil, so he is represented by mediæval writers as outwitting the demon. Much of this legend grew out of Neapolitan folklore and one story says that he beguiled the DEVIL into a glass bottle and kept him there until he had learned the devil's magic arts. The tale has much in common with that of the Fisherman and the Genie in the ARABIAN NIGHTS. Virgil's magical exploits are recounted in numerous mediæval romances and poems and there is an account of Virgil's NECROMANCY in the Gesta Romanorum.

The Christian Virgil. Marco Girolamo Vida (d. 1566), an Italian Latin poet, author of Christiads in six books (1535), an imitation of the ÆNEID.

The Virgil and Horace of the Christians. So Bentley calls Aurelius Clemens Prudentius (fl. c. 400). He was a native of Spain and the author of several Latin hymns and religious poems reminiscent of VIRGIL and HORACE.

Virgin. The Virgin Birth. The belief that Christ had no human father and that His miraculous birth did not impair the virginity of his mother, the Blessed Virgin Mary (see Matt. i, 18; Luke i, 27-35).

The Virgin Mary's Bodyguard. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

The Virgin Queen. Elizabeth I (1558-1603); also called by SHAKESPEARE "the fair Vestal" (see VESTALS).

Virginal. A quilled keyboard instrument of the harpsichord family in use in the 16th and early 17th century; often referred to as a pair of virginals. It has been suggested that it was so called because it was used in convents to lead the virginals or hymns to the Virgin, but its name probably arises from the fact that it was mostly played by girls.

Virginia. The first securely established English colony in North America, founded at Jamestown in 1607. It took its name from the earlier attempt (1584-1587) of Sir Walter Raleigh to found a colony on Roanoke Island (now in North Carolina) which was named after the VIRGIN QUEEN. In the early days of settlement, the name Virginia was applied to the whole coast between FLORIDA and NOVA SCOTIA.

Virginia fence. An irregular fence made of roughly laid logs. Benjamin Franklin describes a drunkard's uncertain progression as resembling a Virginia fence.

Virgo (Lat., Virgin). One of the ancient constellations and the sixth sign of the ZODIAC (23 August-22 September). The constellation is the metamorphosis of ASTRÆA. See also ICARIUS.

Virtue. Moral virtue. An ethical virtue as opposed to the theological virtues. See below.

The Seven Virtues. Faith, Hope, Charity, Justice, Fortitude, Prudence, and Temperance. The first three are called the supernatural, theological or Christian virtues; the remaining four are PLATO's Cardinal or Natural virtues. Cp. SEVEN DEADLY SINS.

Virtuosi. See ST. LUKE'S CLUB under LUKE.

Virtuoso (vēr tū ō' zō). An Italian word meaning one who excels; it is applied to those with expert knowledge or appreciation for works of art or virtu. It is especially applied to instrumental performers of the highest ability; hence virtuoso music, that which demands exceptional skill from the performer.

Vis à vis (vēz' a vē') (Fr., face to face). Properly applied to persons facing one another, as in a railway carriage; also an old name for a carriage or couch which enables the occupants to face one another. The phrase is now often used in the sense of "in relation to", "as regards".

Vis inertiae (vis in ěr' shē) (Lat., the power of inactivity). It is a common mistake to imagine that inertia means absence of motion; inertia is that property of matter which makes it resist any change. Thus it is hard to set in motion what is still, or to stop what is in motion. Figuratively, it applies to that unwillingness of change which makes men rather bear those ills they have than fly to others that they know not of.

Viscount (vī' kount) (O. Fr. viconte from Lat. vice, comes, the deputy of a count). In Britain, a peer ranking next below an EARL and above a BARON. The title was first granted to John Lord Beaumont in 1440. The CORONET of a Viscount bears 16 pearls set around the rim. He is styled "Right Honourable" and addressed by the Sovereign as "Our right trusty and well-beloved Cousin". See also COURTESY TITLES.

Vishnu. The Preserver; the second in the Hindu TRIMURTI, though worshipped by many Hindus as the supreme deity. He originally appears as sun-god. He is beneficent to man and has made numerous incarnations or "descents", ten being the number most generally reckoned. (See AVATAR.) He is usually represented as four-armed and carrying a mace, a conch-shell, a disc, and a lotus, and often riding the eagle Garuda. His wife is Lakshmi, born from the sea.

Vision of Piers Plowman, The. A long allegorical poem in Middle English alliterative verse, written by William Langland (c. 1332-c. 1400), who was born probably near the Malvern Hills. The poet's dream or vision gives a vivid insight into 14th-century conditions and the current social and religious evils. Properly, The Vision of William concerning Piers the Plowman; in the earlier part Piers typifies the simple, pious English labourer, and in the latter, Christ himself. Piers is the subject, not the author of the poem. There are several texts and there is some disagreement among scholars as to authorship.

Visitation, The, or The Visitation of Our Lady. The Blessed Virgin's visit to her cousin St. Elisabeth before the birth of St. JOHN THE BAPTIST (Luke I, 39-56). It is celebrated on 2 July.

The Order of the Visitation, or Visitandines. A contemplative Order for women founded by St. Francis de Sales and St. Jane Frances de Chantal in 1610. They adopted a modification of the AUGUSTINIAN Rule and their chief work is now concerned with education.

Vital Statistics. Properly, population statistics concerned with births, marriages, deaths, divorces, etc. (Lat. vita, life). It is now applied humorously to a woman's bust, waist, and hip measurements.

Vitex (Lat. vitis, a vine, from viere, to twist). A genus of plants of the family Verbenaceæ; the Agnus castus (Lat., chaste lamb) or chaste-tree, also called Abraham's balm, monk's pepper-tree, and hemp-tree. In the language of flowers it means "insensibility to love". Dioscorides, Pliny, and Galen mention the plant as a mild anaphrodisiac and say that Grecian ladies used to strew their couches with its leaves as a guard against impure thoughts. A syrup concocted from its fruits was also used in convents for similar reasons.

And wreaths of Agnus castus others bore;
These last, who with those virgin crowns were dressed,

Appeared in higher honour than the rest.
DRYDEN: The Flower and the Leaf, 172.

Vitus, St. (vī' tús). A Sicilian youth who was martyred with Modestus, his tutor, and Crescentia, his nurse, during the Diocletian persecution, c. 303.

St. Vitus's Dance. In Germany in the 17th century it was believed that good health for the year could be secured by anyone who danced before a statue of St. VITUS on his feast-day; such dancing to excess is said to have come to be confused with chorea, hence its name, St. Vitus's Dance, the SAINT being invoked against it.

Viva! (vī' vâ, vē' vâ). An exclamation of applause or joy; Italian, meaning (long) live. A VIVA VOCE examination is usually called a "viva".

Viva voce (Lat., with the living voice). Orally; by word of mouth. A viva voce examination is one in which the respondent answers by word of mouth.

Vivat regina, or rex! (Lat.). Long live the Queen, or King! At the coronation of British sovereigns the boys of Westminster School have the privilege of acclaiming the King or Queen with shouts of "Vivat Rex, or Regina!"

Vivandière (vē von dē ār'). A woman formerly officially attached to a French (and other continental) regiment for the purpose of selling liquor and food to the soldiers. OUIDA portrays the vivandière, Cigarette, in Under Two Flags (1866).

Vivien. An enchantress of ARTHURIAN ROMANCE, the LADY OF THE LAKE.

Vixen (O.E. fyxen). A female fox. Metaphorically, a shrewish woman, one of villainous and ungovernable temper.

Vixere fortes ante Agamemnona. See under AGAMEMNON.

Viz. A contraction of VIDELICET. The z represents 3, a common mark of contraction in writing in the MIDDLE AGES; as om̄ib3—omnibus.

Vizier (vi zēr', viz' i ěr) (Arab. wazir, bearer of the burden). A name given to the chief minister of the ABBASSIDE caliphs and to officials serving other MOSLEM rulers. The title was also formerly given to Turkish ministers and governors; the chief minister (until 1878) was called the Grand Vizier.

Vogue (vôg). A loan-word from the French. In vogue means in fashion, in popular favour, current, etc. The verb voguer means to be carried forward on the water by oar or by sail, hence the idea of sailing with the tide.

Vogue la galère (Fr., lit., row the galley). Let the world go how it will; let us keep on, whatever happens; advienne que pourra.

Vol-au-vent (vol' ô von) (Fr., flight on the wind). A small case of very light puff-pastry with a savoury filling.

Volapük (vol' á pük). An artificial language invented in 1879 by a German pastor, F. Schleyer. It was based on European languages, about one-third from English, and the remainder from Latin, German, and the ROMANCE LANGUAGES. The words were cut down so that no original is recognizable: Volapük is supposed to be Vol, from "English" world; pük, from "English" speech.

Vole (Fr. voler, to fly). He has gone the vole. He has been everything by turns. Vole is a deal at cards that draws the whole tricks. To vole is to win all the tricks.

Voltaire. The assumed name of François Marie Arouet (1694-1778), the great French philosopher, poet, dramatist, and author. He began to use the name on his release from imprisonment in the Bastille in 1718. It is probably an anagram of Arouet l(e) j(eune). See CANDIDE.

Volte-face (vol' fas) (Fr., a turning of the head, a turn-about). Used of a complete about-face or change of front in argument, opinions, views, etc.

Volume. The word shows its ancestry for it comes from Lat. volvere, to roll. The ancient form of books was of written sheets fastened together and rolled up on a stick or roller.

Volund. See WAYLAND.

Voluntary Schools. The name for schools established by the Voluntary Societies such as the NATIONAL SOCIETY and the British and Foreign Schools Society, religious bodies, etc., as opposed to those established by local public authorities which were formerly called council schools, and until 1902, BOARD SCHOOLS. All primary and secondary schools maintained by a local education authority are still classified as county or voluntary schools according to their origins, although the voluntary principle in education has largely been submerged.

Voodoo, or Voodooism. A mixture of superstition, magic, WITCHCRAFT, serpent-worship, etc., derived from African rites and some Christian beliefs. It still survives among some Negro groups in Haiti, and other parts of the West Indies and the Americas.

The name is said to have been first given to it by missionaries, from Fr. Vaudois, a WALDENSIAN, as these were accused of sorcery; but Sir Richard Burton derived it from vodun, a dialect form of Ashanti obosum, a fetish or tutelary spirit. Cp. OBEAH.

Vorticism. An artistic movement which began in England in 1914, somewhat akin to CUBISM and FUTURISM and including art and literature. It was iconoclastic and regarded the question of representation as irrelevant; its designs are in straight lines and angular patterns.

Votive offerings. See ANATHEMA.

Vox. Vox et prætereā nihil (Lat., a voice, and nothing more). Empty words—"full of sound and fury, signifying nothing"; a threat not followed out. When the Lacedæmonian plucked the nightingale, on seeing so little substance he exclaimed, Vox tu es, et nihil prætereā (Plutarch, Apophthegmata Laconica).

Vox populi vox Dei (Lat., the voice of the people is the voice of God). This does not mean that the voice of the many is wise and good, but only that it is irresistible. After Edward II had been dethroned by the people in favour of his son (Edward III), Walter Reynolds (d. 1327), Archbishop of Canterbury, preached at the coronation of Edward III with these words as his text.

Voyageur (vwa ya zhër'). A French Canadian or half-breed, accustomed to portage his canoe when necessary; formerly employed by the Hudson's Bay Company and Northwest Company to maintain supplies and communications between their trading stations.

The voyageurs were a hardy class of men, trained from boyhood to use the paddle. Many of them were Iroquois Indians—pure or with an admixture of white blood. But the French Canadians, too, became noted for their expert management of the canoe . . .

GEORGE BRYCE: The Remarkable History of the Hudson's Bay Company, ch. xxxi.

Vulcan. A son of JUPITER and JUNO, and god of fire, and the working of metals, and patron of handicraftsmen in metals, identified with the Gr. Hephæstus, and called also MULCIBER, i.e. the softener.

His workshops were under Mount ETNA and other volcanoes where the CYCLOPS assisted him in forging thunderbolts for JOVE. It is said that he took the part of Juno against Jupiter who hurled him out of HEAVEN. He was nine days in falling and was saved by the people of Lemnos from crashing to earth, but one leg was broken, hence his lameness. VENUS was his wife and, in consequence of her amour with MARS, he came to be regarded as the special patron of CUCKOLDS. He was the father of CUPID and the Cecrops, and created PANDORA from clay.

Vulcanist. One who supports the Vulcanian or Plutonian theory, which ascribes the changes on the Earth's surface to the agency of fire. These theorists say the earth was once in a state of igneous fusion, and that the crust has gradually cooled down to its present temperature. Cp. NEPTUNIAN.

Vulgate, The. The Latin translation of the Bible, made about 384-404 by St. JEROME, originally to establish a standard text. The first printed edition was the MAZARIN BIBLE (1456) (see BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS). A revised edition was issued by Clement VIII in 1592 and a new edition was commissioned by Pius X in 1908. Genesis was published in 1926 and the work is still in progress. The name is the Lat. editio vulgata, the common edition sanctioned by the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

VXL. A punning monogram on lockets, etc., standing for UXL (you excel). U and V were formerly interchangeable.

W

W. The twenty-third letter of the English alphabet. The form is simply a ligature of two Vs (VV); hence the name; for V was formerly the symbol of U (q.v.) as well as of V.

Waac (wāk). The familiar name of a member of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, a body of women raised for non-combatant army service in World War I. In World War II they were termed A.T.S., Auxiliary Territorial Service.

Waaf (wāf). The familiar name of a member of the Women's Auxiliary Air Force, or the force itself, which was established in 1939.

W.A.C. (U.S.A.). In World War II the Women's Army Corps, equivalent to the British A.T.S. Cp. WAVES.

Wad. A roll of paper money, and hence the money itself.

Wade. General Wade. The old rhyme:

Had you seen but these roads before they were made,
You would hold up your hands and bless General
Wade,

refers to Field-Marshal George Wade (1673-1748), famous for his construction of military roads in the HIGHLANDS (c. 1724-1730) as a precaution against JACOBITE insurrection.

Soon afterwards we came to the General's Hut, so called because it was the temporary abode of Wade, while he superintended the works upon the road.

JOHNSON:

A Journey to the Western Highlands, etc.
(Lough Ness).

Wade's boat.

They can so mochê craft of Wadês boot,
So mochê broken harm than that hem list,
That with hem schuld I never lÿv in rest.
CHAUCER: Merchant's Tale, 180.

Wade was a hero of mediæval romance, whose adventures were a favourite theme in the 16th century. His famous boat was named Guingelot.

Wafer. Ecclesiastically a thin disc of unleavened bread used in the EUCHARIST.

Before the device of gummed envelope flaps was introduced, thin round discs of dried paste or gelatine were inserted between the flap and the envelope—or earlier still, between the outer sides of the folded letter—and having been moistened and pressed with a seal served the same purpose of keeping the paper closed.

Wag. Meaning a humorous person, one given to jest, is the O.E. wagge, probably from the facetious use of waghalter, a droll, a rascal—one who wags or shakes a halter.

To hop, or play the wag. To play truant—probably some allusion to waghalter (see WAG above).

Wager (wā' jēr). Anything staked or hazarded on the event of a contest, etc. Connected with gage and wage (Low Lat. wadiare, to pledge).

Wager of battle. See ORDEAL OF BATTLE.

Waga blanket. A sort of sleeping-bag made of two corn sacks cut open and stitched together. The name is taken from the town of Wagga Wagga, N.S.W., Australia.

Waggoner. An old name for a volume of sea-charts, Dalrymple's Charts being known as the English Waggoner. A corruption of Wagenaar, from a collection of such charts published at Leyden by Lukas Wagenaar (1584).

Wagoner. See BOÏTES.

Wahabis, or Wahabites. Adherents of a MOSLEM movement seeking to purify ISLAM and restore it to its primitive simplicity; so called from the founder Ibn-abd-ul-Wahab who began his activities about 1760. The sect centres upon Saudi Arabia.

Wailing Wall. The length of high stone wall at Jerusalem, said to be a relic of the TEMPLE OF HEROD which was destroyed in A.D. 70. After the Jews returned it eventually became a tradition to gather there every FRIDAY for prayer and lamentations for the Dispersion and lost glories of Israel.

Wait. Wait and See. A phrase often humorously used with reference to H. H. Asquith (Earl of Oxford and Asquith), thus "What did Asquith say?" is another way of saying "Wait and see." Asquith used the phrase in answer to a question in the HOUSE OF COMMONS, 4 April 1910, and took to repeating it—subsequently when faced with an awkward question. Eventually the OPPOSITION took it up and chanted it back at him when questions were put to him.

Lords in Waiting, Gentlemen in Waiting, Grooms in Waiting, etc., are functionaries in the Royal HOUSEHOLD for personal attendance upon the sovereign.

Ladies in Waiting (in the Queen's Household) are officially styled Ladies of the Bedchamber, Bedchamber Women, and MAIDS OF HONOUR.

Waits. A name now given to parties of singers and musicians who perform outside people's houses at CHRISTMAS-time. They derive their name from those watchmen of former times called waits who sounded a horn or played a tune to mark the passing hours. Waits were employed at the royal court "to pipe the watch" and also by town corporations. The household expenses of Edward IV provide for "A wayte, that nightelye from Mychelmas to Shreve Thorsdaye pipe the watche within this courte fower tymes in the somere nightes three tymes" (Rymer, Fædera). Waits duly came to provide a uniformed band for their town for civic occasions, and played to the public at Christmas-time, hence the current usage. The hautboy was also called a wayte or wait, from its being their chief instrument.

I had scarcely got into bed when a strain of music seemed to break forth in the air just below the window. I listened, and found it proceeded from a band which I concluded to be the waits from some neighboring village.

IRVING: Sketch Book (Christmas Eve).

Wake. A watch or vigil. The name was early applied to the all-night watch kept in church before certain holy days and to the festival kept at the annual commemoration of the dedication of a church. In due course the festive element predominated and the name came to be associated with annual FAIRS and revelries held at such times. Some towns in the North country still observe local holidays called wakes.

In IRELAND, the term denotes the watching of the body of the deceased before the funeral, and the feasting which follows, a custom formerly also common in WALES and SCOTLAND.

Wake-robin. In ENGLAND an arum, usually the cuckoo-pint. In the U.S.A. a trillium, or jack-in-the-pulpit.

Waking a witch. If a witch were obdurate, the most effectual way of obtaining a confession was by what was termed waking her. An iron bridge or hoop was bound across her face with prongs thrust into her mouth; this was fastened to the wall by a chain in such a manner that the victim was unable to lie down; and men were constantly by to keep her awake, sometimes for several days.

Waldensians, or Waldenses (wol den' sianz, wol den' sêz). Also known by their French name as the Vaudois. Followers of Peter Waldo of Lyons who sought to govern their life by the teaching of the GOSPELS and who came to be known as the "Poor Men of Lyons". The movement began about 1170 and papal prohibition of their preaching culminated in Waldo's EXCOMMUNICATION. Various heretical teachings followed and papal authority was completely rejected. Active persecution scattered them to other parts of France, Italy, and Spain, etc., and it continued till the late 17th century. Their doctrinal descendants still exist, principally in the Alpine Valleys of Piedmont.

Avenge O Lord thy slaughter'd Saints, whose bones Lie scatter'd on the Alpine mountains cold.

MILTON:

On the Late Massacre in Piedmont (1655).

Waler. A strong, heavy horse bred in Australia specially for the Indian army of former days. So called from the fact that about 1840 when the breed was developed most Australian life centred in New South Wales, which then also included Victoria and Queensland.

Wales. From O.E. Wealas, plural of wealh, foreigner, applied to the Britons by the Anglo-Saxons. The O.E. name for CORNWALL was Cornwealas (the Welsh in Cornwall). The WELSH name for their own land is CYMRU (kŭm' rē).

The Prince of Wales. When Edward I extinguished WELSH independence (1282-1283) he is popularly said to have presented WALES with a new prince in the form of his son Edward who was born at Caernarvon (1284). In fact Edward was created Prince of Wales in 1301. The last native prince, Llywelyn ap Gruffydd, was killed at Builth in 1282.

Since 1337 the king's eldest son has been born Duke of Cornwall and the title Prince of Wales has been conferred upon him subsequently.

The Prince of Wales's feathers. See ICH DIEN.

Walhalla. See VALHALLA.

Walk. This word comes from O.E. wealcan, to roll; whence we get wealcere, a fuller of cloth, and thus the surname Walker has the same origin as Fuller.

She curst the weaver and the walker
The clothe that they had wrought,
PERCY: Reliques (The Boy and the Mantle).

Cock of the Walk. See under COCK.

To make a man walk Spanish. See under SPANISH.

To walk into. To attack vigorously, to thrash; also to eat heartily of, as, "He walked into the apple tart." To wade into has similar meanings. To walk into a trap, either verbal or physical, is to be caught unsuspectingly.

To walk off with. To filch and decamp with.

To walk out with. To court, as a preliminary to marriage.

A walk-out. A strike.

To walk the chalk. An old-established method of testing sobriety by making the suspected inebriate walk between two parallel lines chalked on the floor without stepping on either line.

To walk the hospitals. To attend the hospitals as a medical student; from the practice of accompanying the hospital doctors when visiting patients in the wards.

To walk the plank. See under PLANK.

To walk through one's part. To repeat one's part at rehearsal verbally, but without dressing for it or acting it; to do anything appointed you in a listless, indifferent manner.

Walk not in the public ways. The fifth symbol of the Protreptics of Iamblichus, meaning, follow not the multitude in their evil ways; or, wide is the path of sin and narrow the path of virtue, few being those who find it.

Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction.
Matt. vii, 13.

A walk-over. A very easy victory; as in a running-match when one's rivals could be beaten effortlessly—as though by walking.

Hookey Walker! An early Victorian derisive exclamation meaning Nonsense! Incredible! used when hearing a "tall story" or some statement that cannot be trusted. Many ingenious and patently inaccurate stories have been advanced to explain this phrase; its origin is unknown.

To go by Walker's bus. To walk. Similar expressions are, "To go by the MARROW-BONE stage", "To ride SHANKS'S MARE or pony".

Walkie-Talkie. A small portable short-range wireless containing receiver and transmitter as used by the fighting services, the police, etc.

Walking Stewart. The nickname of John Stewart (1749-1822). The son of a LONDON linen-draper, he secured a post in the East India Company and went to Madras. After serious quarrels with his superiors, he resigned and started out on his travels. During the following years he went on foot through Hindustan, Persia, Nubia, Abyssinia, across the Arabian Desert, through Europe from Constantinople to England, passing through most of the continental countries. In 1791 he crossed to America and walked through what was then known of Canada and the United States: De Quincey says of him:

A most interesting man . . . contemplative and crazy . . . yet sublime and divinely benignant in his visionariness. This man as a pedestrian traveller had seen more of the earth's surface than any man before or since.

A walking-on part. A part in a play in which the actor has only to walk about on the stage, sometimes with a word or two to say.

Walking-out dress. Uniform, smarter than that used on duty, worn by British soldiers when out of barracks, etc.

Wall. The Roman Wall. See ANTONINE'S WALL; HADRIAN'S WALL; SEVERUS.

Wall Street. The thoroughfare in New York City which contains the Stock Exchange. The name is hence used as a synonym for the American stock market.

To give the wall. To allow another, as a matter of courtesy, to pass by on the pavement at the side furthest from the gutter; hence, to be courteous. At one time pedestrians gave the wall to persons of a higher rank than themselves. Nathaniel Bailey says (1721) it is:

a compliment paid to the female sex, or those to whom one would show respect, by letting them go nearest the wall or houses, upon a supposition of its being the cleanest. This custom is chiefly peculiar to England, for in most parts abroad they will give them the right hand, though at the same time they thrust them into the kennel.

Cp. TO TAKE THE WALL, below.

To go to the wall. To be put on one side; to be shelved. This is in allusion to another phrase, laid by the wall, i.e. dead but not buried; put out of the way.

To hang by the wall. To hang up neglected; not to be made use of.

To take the wall. To take the place of honour.

I will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's.

SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, I, i.

Cp. TO GIVE THE WALL, above.

Walls have ears. Things uttered in secret get rumoured abroad; there are listeners everywhere, and you'd better be careful. Certain rooms in the LOUVRE were said to be so constructed in the time of Catherine de' MEDICI, that what was said in one room could be heard distinctly in another. It was by this contrivance that the suspicious queen became acquainted with state secrets and plots. The tubes of communication were called the auriculaires. Cp. DIONYSIUS'S EAR, under EAR.

The weakest go to the wall. The saying is explained by Halliwell as deriving from the placing of beds along the side of the room and putting the youngest or feeblest in the safest place—i.e. against the wall. Another explanation is that, in the days before many churches had pews, except perhaps for the gentry, there were benches along the walls for the aged. Pews were not installed in many churches until the late 17th century and subsequently.

Wall-eyed. The M.E. wald-eyed, a corruption of Icel. vald eygthr, having a beam in the eye (vagl, beam). Persons are wall-eyed when the white is unusually large, and the sight defective, due to opacity of the cornea, or when they have a divergent squint. SHAKESPEARE has wall-eyed wrath or staring rage (King John, IV, iii).

Wallflower. So called because it grows on old walls, etc. Similarly wall-cress, wall creeper, etc., are plants which grow on dry, stony places, or on walls. Wall fruit is fruit trained against a wall. Cp. WALNUT.

Girls who sit along the wall without partners during a dance are called wall-flowers.

Wallaby. A small Australian kangaroo.

On the wallaby, or, on the wallaby track. On the tramp—usually because out of work.

Wallace, Sir William (c. 1274–1305). The Scottish hero who won a great victory over the English at Stirling Bridge in 1297 but was eventually hanged, disembowelled, beheaded and quartered at West SMITHFIELD.

Wallace's Larder. See under LARDER.

Wallace's Line. A line of demarcation running between Bali and Lombok, through the Straits of Macassar, between Borneo and the Celebes, then north-eastward between Mindanao and Gilolo, separating the fauna of the Indo-Malayan region from the widely divergent species of the Australian region which includes New Guinea and the islands to the eastward. It is named after Alfred Russel Wallace (1823–1913), the famous naturalist who defined it.

Wallah (wol' a). Anglo-Indian for a man of specified attributes or duties, as dhobi-wallah, the Indian washerman; bathroom-wallah, the man who looks after the bathrooms in an hotel; punka-wallah, the man who waves a fan, etc. A Competition wallah was the old nickname for a successful competitor in the Indian Civil Service examinations introduced in 1856, in contrast to those who obtained their appointments under the old system of influence. Wallah is a Hindu suffix denoting an agent, as -er in English.

Walloon. A people of mixed ITALIC, Teutonic, and CELTIC stock descended from the Belgæ of ancient GAUL. They occupied the low tract along the frontiers of the German-speaking territory, as Artois, Hainault, Namur, Liège, Luxembourg, with parts of Flanders and Brabant.

Wallop (wol' òp). To thrash; properly, to boil with a noisy bubbling sound. The word is the same as gallop. It is also a slang term for ALE.

To pack a (powerful) wallop (U.S.A.). To have great power.

Walnut. The foreign nut; called in M.E. walnute, from O.E. wealh, foreign, since it came from Persia.

Some difficulty there is in cracking the name thereof. Why walnuts, having no affinity to a wall, should be so called. The truth is, gual or wall, in the old Dutch signifieth "strange" or "exotic" (whence Welsh foreigners; these nuts being no natives of England or Europe.

FULLER: Worthies of England.

Walpurgis Night

It is said that the walnut tree thrives best if the nuts are beaten off with sticks, and not picked. There is an old saying that:

A woman, a dog, and a walnut tree,
The more you beat them the better they be.

Walpurgis Night (wol pēr' gis). The eve of MAY DAY, when the witch-world was supposed to hold high revelry under its chief, the DEVIL, on certain high places, particularly the Brocken, the highest point of the Harz Mountains. Walpurgis was an English nun who went as a missionary to Germany and became abbess of Heidenheim (d. c. 788). Her day is 1 May, hence her coincidental association with the rites of an earlier pagan festival.

Walpurgis oil. A bituminous kind of oil exuding from the rock at Eichstatt in which the relics of St. Walpurgis were deposited. It was supposed to have miraculous healing and curative properties.

Walstan, St. In ENGLAND, the patron SAINT of husbandmen. He worked as a farm labourer in Norfolk and was noted for the austerity and piety of his life and for his charity. He died in 1016 and is usually depicted with a scythe in his hand and cattle in the background.

Waltham Blacks. See BLACK ACT.

Waltzing Matilda. An Australian phrase made famous by the Australian poet A. B. (Banjo) Paterson (1864-1941). It means carrying or humping one's bag or pack as a tramp does. Henry Lawson (The Romance of Song) says, "Travelling with SWAG in Australia is variously and picturesquely described as 'humping bluey', 'walking Matilda', 'humping Matilda', 'humping your drum', 'being on the wallaby' . . ."

The reason for the tramp's roll being called a "Matilda" is obscure; to waltz conveys the impression of tramping along with one's pack jogging up and down with one's steps.

Once a jolly swagman camped by a billabong
Under the shade of a coolibah tree,
And he sang as he watched and waited till his billy boiled,
"You'll come a-waltzing Matilda with me."

Wampum (wom' pum). Shell beads made and strung for ornament, currency, ceremonial gift belts, etc., by North American Indian tribes. They were used as money as late as the 19th century, but machine-made mass-produced "wampum" with resultant inflation first caused its obsolescence in the eastern states. The name comes from the Algonquin wompi, white.

When he came in triumph homeward
With the sacred Belt of Wampum.
LONGFELLOW: The Song of Hiawatha, II.

Wandering Jew, The. The central figure of the widespread later-mediæval legend which tells of a Jew who insulted or spurned Christ when He was bearing the cross to CALVARY, and was condemned to wander over the face of the earth till JUDGMENT Day.

The usual form of the legend says that he was AHASUERUS, a cobbler, who refused to allow Christ to rest at his door, saying, "Get off! Away with you, away!" Our Lord replied, "Truly I go away, and that quickly, but tarry thou till I come."

An earlier tradition has it that the Wandering Jew was Cartaphilus, the doorkeeper of the judgment hall in the service of Pontius Pilate. He struck our Lord as he led him forth, saying, "Go on faster, Jesus"; whereupon the MAN OF SORROWS replied, "I am going, but thou shalt tarry till I come again." (Chronicle of St. Alban's Abbey, 1228.) The same Chronicle, continued by Matthew Paris, tells us that Cartaphilus was baptized by Ananias, and received the name of Joseph. At the end of every hundred years he falls into a trance, and wakes up a young man about 30.

In German legend he is associated with John Buttadæus, seen at Antwerp in the 13th century, again in the 15th, and the third time in the 16th. His last appearance was in 1774 at Brussels. In the French version he is named Isaac Laquedom or Lakedion; another story has it that he was Salathiel ben-Sadi, who appeared and disappeared towards the close of the 16th century at Venice, in so sudden a manner as to attract the notice of all Europe; and another connects him with the WILD HUNTSMAN.

"I'll rest, sayd hee, but thou shalt walke;"
So doth this wandring Jew
From place to place, but cannot rest
For seeing countries newe.
PERCY: Reliques (The Wandering Jew).

There are several plants called The Wandering Jew.

Wanion. With a wanion. An old imprecation; the word is the present participle of wanion, to wane, and meant misfortune, ill-luck.

Look how thou stirrest now! come away, or I'll fetch thee with a wanion.

SHAKESPEARE: Pericles, II, i.

Wansdyke. Woden's dyke. A system of dykes, perhaps built by the Romano-Britons, stretching some 60 miles from Inkpen in Berkshire to Maesbury in Somerset. It was probably a defence against the English invaders. See GRIM'S DITCH; OFFA'S DYKE.

Wantley, The Dragon of. An old story, preserved in PERCY'S RELIQUES, tells of this monster who was slain by More of More Hall. He procured a suit of armour studded with spikes, and kicked the DRAGON in the backside, where alone it was vulnerable. Percy says the Dragon stands for a greedy renter of the TITHES of the Wortley family who attempted to take the tithes in kind from the parishioners and More was the man who conducted the suit against him. There are other theories. Wantley is Wharncliffe in Yorkshire.

Wapenshaw, Wappenshaw, or Wapinsshaw, etc. A weapon show, the early spelling being Wappinschaw. Formerly the Scottish term for the review of men under arms to check that they were properly equipped according to rank. It is now used of a rifle-shooting competition.

Wapentake (wop'en tāk). A subdivision of a county similar to a HUNDRED, found in Yorkshire and other areas of once strong Danish influence—Derbyshire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire and Rutland. The word is of Scandinavian origin meaning "a taking" or "grasping of weapons" signifying the clash of arms made by an assembly to signify assent.

War. Civil War. See under CIVIL.

Cold War. See under COLD.

A holy war. Properly a war undertaken from religious motives, such as the CRUSADES. As such wars were fiercely and often bitterly contested the expression is often colloquially applied to relentless crusades of various kinds.

Hundred Years War. See under HUNDRED.

Thirty Years War. See under THIRTY.

The War of the Brown Bull. Also known as the "Cattle raid of Cooley" or "Cuailnge". In Irish legend, the struggle provoked by Queen MAEVE (Medb) of Connaught who led the forces of four provinces to capture the great bull, the Brown One of Cuailnge belonging to an ULSTER chief. Her husband Ailill had a great white bull called Fimnbennach and she wished to equal his possessions. The Brown Bull was taken by stratagem but Maeve's forces were driven into retreat by CUCHULAIN and the men of Ulster. The Brown One fought the White Bull all over Ireland until the latter was slain, and the Brown Bull then rushed northwards until its heart burst.

The Wars of the Roses. See under ROSE.

War game. Originally known by its German name Kriegsspiel, it was introduced by a Prussian officer, Lieutenant von Reiswitz, in 1824 who completed and improved upon his father's design. It depends upon the use of maps as battle-field in miniature and blocks or counters representing troops, etc., for the purpose of instructing officers in military tactics. In modern times the computer is used to this end.

War baby. A baby born in wartime; especially the illegitimate offspring of a serviceman.

War-head. The explosive head of a torpedo or bomb.

War-hawk (U.S.A.). One who is eager for war.

War-horse. A veteran or old warrior; a "FIRE-EATER". An allusion to the charger formerly used in battle.

War-paint. The paint applied to their faces by RED INDIANS and other peoples to make their appearance terrifying before going out ON THE WARPATH. Putting on one's war paint is a phrase applied figuratively to getting ready to enter energetically into a dispute or, of a woman, to putting on lipstick, powder, etc., in order to overcome her rivals.

On the warpath. Thoroughly roused and incensed; looking for one's adversary or victim with every intention of exacting retribution.

War of nerves. Planned measures to undermine morale by threats, rumours, SABOTAGE, etc.

Ward (O.E. weard, keeping watch, guard, etc.). A district under the charge of a warden. The word is applied to subdivisions of Cumberland, Westmorland, and Durham, also in some counties of SCOTLAND. In mediæval times, the Wardens were appointed by the English and Scottish governments to watch over the border districts.

The word is also applied to administrative divisions of a town or city, a large room or division of a hospital; a part of a lock or of a key which prevents the door being opened by the wrong key; a minor placed under the care of a guardian, etc. See WATCH AND WARD.

Ward room. In British warships, a mess shared by the Commander, unless he is the captain of the ship, and other officers.

The name is not found before the 18th century and derives from the compartment known as the Ward Robe which was used as a store for valuables captured from prizes. It came to be used for officers of the rank of Lieutenant upwards. Cp. GUN ROOM.

Warden Pie

Warden Pie. Pie made of the Warden pear; a pear said to be so called from Warden in Bedfordshire, but quite probably from O.Fr. wardant, keeping, because they are good keeping pears.

My self by denial I mortify,
With a good dainty bit of Warden pie.
JOHN O'KEEFE: The Friar of Orders Grey.

Wardour Street English. The affected use of archaic words and phrases. A term first applied by William Morris in 1888 to a translation of the ODYSSEY, couched in language which reminded him of the pseudo-antique furniture that in those days was sold in Wardour Street, London. This thoroughfare in the present century has come to be associated with the film industry.

Warlock. An evil spirit; a WIZARD. O.E. warloga, a traitor, one who breaks his word.

Warm. Used colloquially with much the same force as HOT, as a warm member, said of a man who "goes the pace", of a sharper, or of one who is particularly notable in connexion with whatever happens to be the subject of discussion. Warm thanks are hearty thanks; he's in a warm corner means he's in an awkward position.

Warming the bell. See under BELL.

A house-warming. An entertainment given by new occupiers of a house; a first welcoming of friends to a fresh residence.

A British warm. A thick overcoat worn by army officers.

Warming-pan. One who holds a place temporarily for another; sometimes applied to a clergyman who officiates while the actual holder of the living is qualifying. In public schools it used to be the custom to make a FAG warm his "superior's" bed by lying in it till the proper occupant was ready to turn him out.

The Warming-pan baby. The Old PRETENDER, because of the widely circulated story that he was introduced into the lying-in chamber of Mary of Modena, queen of James II, in a warming-pan, and that her own child was stillborn. Hence warming-pans as a nickname for JACOBITES.

Warrior Queen, The. BOADICEA.

Wart. Warts and all. Said of a description, biography, etc., which seeks to give the rounded portrait, including the blemishes and defects.

Warwick the King-maker. See KING-MAKER under KING.

Wash. It will all come out in the wash. Everything will turn out all right in the end, as dirt and stains, etc., are removed by washing.

It's got lost in the wash. It has just disappeared in the welter of things, in the proceedings, etc., as items get lost in the laundry. The expression is also sometimes punningly used with reference to King John's loss of royal treasure and baggage when his convoy of horses and waggons was caught and swallowed up by the incoming tide on the sands of the Wash in 1216.

That (story) won't wash. That story or excuse won't do at all; you'll have to think of a better tale than that! Said of an explanation or excuse that is palpably false, far-fetched, or exaggerated.

To take in one another's washing. To do each other reciprocal favours; to help each other out.

To wash a brick. To engage in an utterly unprofitable enterprise; to do useless work. An old Latin proverbial expression (laterem lavem, Terence's Phormio, I, iv, 9).

To wash one's dirty linen in public. To expose the family SKELETON to the public gaze; openly to discuss private affairs that are more or less discreditable.

To wash one's hands of a thing. See under HAND.

To give one's head for the washing. To yield, to submit to insult.

Washed out. Exhausted, done up, with no strength or spirit left. Washed up has similar implications.

Head-washing. An old provincialism for drinking a new infant's health. To wet the baby's head is a colloquialism for the same thing.

A wash-out. A fiasco, a failure. As an imperative verb, it means cancel, disregard, from the times when naval signal messages were taken down on a slate which was washed clean when the message had been transmitted to the proper quarters.

Wassail (O.E. Wæs hæl, be whole, be well). A salutation, especially over the spiced ale cup at the New Year, hence called the "wassail bowl". See also HEALTH.

Strutt (Sports and Pastimes of the People of England, III, iv) says: "Wassail, or rather the wassail bowl, which was a bowl of spiced ale, formerly carried about by young women on New-year's eve, who went from door to door in their several parishes singing a few couplets of homely verses composed for the purpose, and presented the liquor to the inhabitants of the house where they called, expecting a small gratuity in return . . .”

The King doth wake tonight and takes his rouse, keeps wassail.—SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, iv.

Hence wassailers, those who join a wassail; revellers, drunkards.

Wat. An old name for a hare, short for Walter. Cp. TOM for cat, NEDDY for a donkey, Jenny wren, etc.

By this poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
Stands on his hinder legs, with listening ear.
SHAKESPEARE: Venus and Adonis, 697.

Watch. In nautical usage, the time during which part of a ship's complement is on duty; usually four hours except during the DOG WATCHES of two hours each, by which the variation in the watches kept by any individual is effected. Ships' companies are arranged in two watches, port and starboard, each of which is usually subdivided thus providing four groups for normal watch-keeping duties. The day is regulated according to the following watches:

1200-1600 (12 noon to 4 p.m.)	Afternoon Watch
1600-1800 (4 to 6 p.m.)	First Dog Watch
1800-2000 (6 to 8 p.m.)	Second Dog Watch
2000-2400 (8 to 12 midnight)	First Watch
2400-0400 (12 to 4 a.m.)	Middle Watch
0400-0800 (4 to 8 a.m.)	Morning Watch
0800-1200 (8 to 12 noon)	Forenoon Watch

Sometimes duties are arranged in three watches but this does not, of course, affect the time-keeping system shown above. See also AT THREE BELLS; ONE BELL IN THE LAST DOG WATCH, under BELL.

Historically, the Watch refers to the body of men in towns who patrolled the streets at night before the introduction of police forces, which, in the boroughs, were under the control of the Watch Committee until their amalgamation with the County Police in 1967. See also COCK-CROW; WATCH AND WARD.

The Black Watch. See under BLACK.

Watch Night. 31 December, to see the Old Year out and the New Year in by a religious service. John Wesley introduced it among the METHODISTS and it has been adopted by other Christian denominations.

The Watch on the Rhine (Die Wacht am Rhein). A German national song which achieved a place of honour with Deutschland über Alles (Germany over all) in the former German Empire. It was written by Max Schneckenburger in 1840 at a time when French policies were suspect.

Watch and Ward. Continuous vigilance; watch and ward being the terms formerly used to denote guard by night and by day respectively. Townships were made responsible for appointing watchmen in the 13th century. See WATCH.

Watchful waiting. The phrase used by Woodrow Wilson in 1913 to describe his policy of non-recognition of the Mexican Government of General Huerta. It did not last long as, in 1914, the Americans occupied Vera Cruz.

Watchword. A word given to sentries as a signal that one has the right of admission, a password; hence, a motto, word, or phrase symbolizing or epitomizing the principles of a party, etc. Cp. SHIBBOLETH.

Water. The Father of the Waters. The Mississippi, the chief river of North America. The Missouri is its child. The Irrawaddy (in Burma) is also thus named.

Territorial Waters. See THREE-MILE LIMIT.

The Water of Jealousy. If a woman was known to have committed adultery she was to be put to death, according to the Mosaic law (Deut. xxii, 22). If, however, the husband had no proof, but only suspected his wife of infidelity, he might take her before the SANHEDRIN to be examined, and “bitter water” was prepared from holy water and the dust of the floor of the tabernacle. The priest then said to the woman, “If thou hast not gone aside to uncleanness with another instead of thy husband, be thou free from this bitter water that causeth the curse.” If she had “gone aside” the priest wrote the curses on a roll, sprinkled it with the water, and gave the woman the “water of jealousy” to drink (Numb. v, 11-29).

The Water Poet. John Taylor (1580-1654), the witty and sometimes scurrilous Thames WATERMAN who early left Gloucester Grammar School for London, having failed at Latin accidence. He wrote fourscore books and verse pamphlets and in his closing days kept an alehouse in Long Acre.

Taylor, their better Charon, lends an oar,
(Once swan of Thames, tho' now he sings no more).

POPE: Dunciad, III, 19.

Blood is thicker than water. See under BLOOD.

Court holy water. Fair but empty words. In French, eau bénite de cour.

I am for all waters (SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night, IV, ii). I am a JACK OF ALL TRADES, can turn my hand to anything. Like a fish which can live in salt or fresh water.

In deep water. In difficulties; in great perplexity; similarly, in smooth water means all is PLAIN SAILING, one's troubles and anxieties are things of the past.

In low water. Hard up; in a state of financial (or other) depression.

It makes my mouth water. It is very alluring; it makes me long for it. Saliva is excited in the mouth by appetizing food.

More water glideth by the mill than wots the miller. The Scots say, "Mickle water goes by the miller when he sleeps". See under MILLER.

Of the first water. Of the highest type, superlative. See A DIAMOND OF THE FIRST WATER under DIAMOND.

Smooth, or still waters run deep. Deep thinkers are persons of few words; he (or she) thinks a good deal more than is suspected; silent conspirators are the most dangerous; BARKING DOGS SELDOM BITE. A calm exterior is far more to be feared than a tongue-doughty BOBADIL.

Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep; And in his simple show he harbours treason. The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb; No, no, my sovereign, Gloucester is a man Unsonded yet, and full of deep deceit.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. II, III, i.

That won't hold water. That is not correct; it is not tenable. It is a vessel which leaks.

To back water. To row backwards in order to reverse or stay a boat's motion; hence, to go easy, to retrace one's steps, to retreat.

To carry water to the river. To carry coals to Newcastle. See under COAL.

To fish in troubled waters. To seek to turn a state of disturbance to one's own advantage.

To get into hot water. See under HOT.

To keep one's head above water. See under HEAD.

To pour oil on troubled waters. See under OIL.

To take the waters. To visit a spa for health reasons, a common routine among fashionable folk in the 18th and 19th centuries.

To throw cold water on a scheme. To discourage the proposal; to dwell upon its weaknesses and disadvantages; to speak slightly of it.

To tread water. In swimming, to keep the body erect moving the hands and feet up and down, thus keeping one's head above water.

To turn on the waterworks. To cry, to blubber.

To water stock. To add extra shares. Suppose a trust consists of 1,000 shares of £50 each, and the profit available for dividend is 40 per cent; the managers "water the stock", that is, add another 1,000 fully paid-up shares to the original 1,000. There are now 2,000 shares, and the dividend, instead of £40 per cent, is reduced to £20; but the shares are more easily sold, and the shareholders are increased in number.

Water-gall. The dark rim round the eyes after much weeping; a peculiar appearance in a rainbow which indicates more rain at hand.

And round about her tear-distained eye
Blue circles streamed, like rainbows in the sky;
These watergalls . . . foretell new storms.

SHAKESPEARE: The Rape of Lucrece, l. 1586.

Water-sky. The term used by Arctic navigators to denote a dark or brown sky, indicating an open sea. An ice-sky is a white one, or a sky tinted with orange or rose-colour, indicative of a frozen sea (cp. ICE-BLINK).

Water-witch. Another name for a dowser (see DOWSE).

Waterman. A boatman, especially one who rows a boat for hire. The Thames watermen were a feature of old London. See DOGGET.

Hackney-coach stands and cab ranks were each supplied with a licensed waterman whose duty it was to water the cab-horses, etc.

Watermark. A design impressed into paper by fine wire during manufacture and while the paper is still wet. Watermarks were used as early as 1282 and served to identify the products of each paper mill.

The water mark has in many instances been the origin of paper-trade nomenclature; thus the mark of the cap and bells gave us Fools'cap, the Post-horn, Post, the Pot, Pott, and the Crown and Elephant similarly came to denote sizes of paper.

Waterloo. He met his Waterloo. He came up against it; he suffered a crushing defeat; an allusion to the final defeat of NAPOLEON by WELLINGTON and Blücher (see FORWARDS, MARSHAL) at Waterloo (1815).

The Waterloo Cup. The "Derby" (see DERBY STAKES) of the coursing fraternity; the great dog-race held annually at Altcar during three days in February. It was founded in 1836 by a man named Lynn, the sporting owner of the Waterloo Hotel in Liverpool (whence its name). Lynn was also the founder of the GRAND NATIONAL, run at Aintree.

Watling Street. The great Roman road extending east and west across Britain. Beginning at Dover, it ran through Canterbury to LONDON, thence through St. Albans, Dunstable, along the boundary of Leicester and Warwick to Wroxeter on the Severn. The origin of the name is not known and there are several other sections of road so called. In the late 9th century it became the boundary between English and Danish territory.

Watson, Dr. See SHERLOCK HOLMES.

Watson's Plot. See BYE PLOT.

Wattle. Australian settlers built wattle-and-daub huts after the English manner from twigs of the abundant acacia trees which hence became known as wattles. Wattle Day is a national festival in Australia, held on 1 August or 1 September, according to the peak of the flowering of the wattle in each State.

Wave. The tenth wave. A notion prevails that the waves keep increasing in regular series till the maximum arrives, and then the series begins again. No doubt when two waves coalesce they form a large one, but this does not occur at fixed intervals.

The most common theory is that the tenth wave is the largest, but Tennyson says the ninth:

And then the two
Dropt to the cove, and watch'd the great sea fall,
Wave after wave, each mightier than the last,
Till last, a ninth one, gathering half the deep
And full of voices, slowly rose and plunged
Roaring, and all the wave was in a flame.
Idylls of the King, The Coming of Arthur.

Waves. In the U.S.A., the women's section of the Naval Reserve. The name is formed by the initial letters of Women Appointed for Voluntary Emergency Service.

Wavy Navy. The popular name for the former Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve (R.N.V.R.), whose officers wore gold braid distinguishing lace made in wavy lines instead of straight, as worn on the sleeves of regular officers belonging to the "Straight Navy". The R.N.V.R. lost its separate existence, after a brilliant wartime record, in December 1957, when it was combined with the Royal Naval Reserve (R.N.R.). Cp. WRENS; WAVES.

Waverley Novels. The novels of Sir Walter Scott (1771-1832), which took their name from the first of the series. They were published anonymously "By the Author of Waverley" until 1827, when the author disclosed his identity as "The Great UNKNOWN" at a public dinner at Edinburgh. It seems that Scott took his title from Waverley Abbey in Surrey.

Wax. Slang for temper, anger; he's in an awful wax, he's in a regular rage. Hence waxy, irritated, vexed, angry.

A man of wax. A model man; like one fashioned in wax. HORACE speaks of the "waxen arms of Telephus", meaning model arms, or of perfect shape and colour; and in SHAKESPEARE's Romeo and Juliet (I, iii), the nurse says of Paris, "Why, he's a man of wax," which she explains by saying, "Nay, he's a flower, i' faith a very flower."

A nose of wax. Of a pliable and yielding character; mutable and accommodating. A waxen nose may be twisted in any way.

Way. In the family way. With child, pregnant.

The way of all flesh. To die. Samuel Butler has a novel of this title published posthumously in 1903.

The Way of the Cross. See STATIONS OF THE CROSS.

To mend one's ways. To improve one's hitherto unsatisfactory habits and behaviour; TO TURN OVER A NEW LEAF (see under LEAF).

Under way. Said of a ship in motion, one which is making headway. To lose way is to lose speed when sailing and to gather way is to pick up speed.

Way enough! The call to oarsmen to complete their stroke and cease rowing, i.e. the boat has enough way on (motion through the water) for the given circumstances.

Ways and means. Methods and means of accomplishing one's purposes; resources, facilities.

The Committee of Ways and Means. The name given in the HOUSE OF COMMONS to a Committee of the whole House which authorizes the Government to raise money for the upkeep of public services and approves new, altered, or revised forms for taxation. It also authorizes payments from the CONSOLIDATED FUND for these purposes. The uses to which the money is put are controlled by the Committee of Supply.

The Chairman of Ways and Means is the Chairman of Committees, the Deputy SPEAKER.

Wayland Smith. The English form of the Scandinavian Volund (Ger. Wieland), a wonderful and supernatural smith and lord of the elves (see ELF), a kind of VULCAN. The legend is found in the EDDA and is alluded to in BEOWULF. He was bound apprentice to Mimir, the smith. King Nidung cut the sinews of his feet in order to retain his services but he eventually flew away in a feather robe which had been first tested out by his brother EGIL. The legend has much in common with that of DÆDALUS.

Tradition has placed his forge in a megalithic monument known as Wayland Smith's Cave near the WHITE HORSE in Berkshire, where it was said that if a traveller tied up his horse there, left sixpence for fee, and retired from sight, he would find the horse shod on his return.

Neither the tradition of Alfred's Victory, or of the celebrated Pusey Horn, are better preserved in Berkshire than the wild legend of Wayland Smith.
SCOTT: Kenilworth, ch. xiii.

Wayzgoose. An annual dinner, picnic, or BEANFEAST especially one given to, or held by, those employed in a printing-house. Wayz (wase) is an obsolete word for a bundle of hay, straw, stubble; hence a "STUBBLE GOOSE", a harvest goose or fat goose, which is the crowning dish of the entertainment.

We. Used of himself by a Sovereign, the "royal we", said to have been used first by Richard I. His Charter to Winchester (1190) reads, "Sciatis nos concessisse civibus nostris Wintoniæ . . ." while an earlier charter of his father, Henry II, reads "Sciatis me concessisse civibus meis Wyntonæ . . .".

We is also used by the editor of a newspaper or the writer of unsigned articles, as representing the journal for which he is writing and to avoid the appearance of egotism.

"We are not amused!" A reproof attributed to Queen Victoria and frequently used as an ironical rebuke. There appears to be no evidence that Queen Victoria ever used the expression.

Weapon Salve. A salve said to cure wounds by sympathy; applied not to the wound, but to the instrument which gave the wound. The direction "Bind the wound and grease the nail" is still common. Sir Kenelm Digby says the salve is sympathetic, and quotes several instances to prove that "as the sword is treated the wound inflicted by it feels. Thus, if the instrument is kept wet, the wound will feel cool; if held to the fire, it will feel hot"; etc.

But she has ta'en the broken lance,
And wash'd it from the clotd gore,
And salvd the splinter o'er and o'er.

SCOTT: The Lay of the Last Minstrel, III, xxiii.

Weapon-schaw. See WAPENSHAW.

Wearing of the Green, The. See under GREEN.

Weasel. Weasels suck eggs; hence SHAKESPEARE'S:

I can suck melancholy out of a song, as a weasel sucks eggs.

As You Like It, II, v.

Pop goes the Weasel. Now regarded as a children's song, was obviously originally intended for their parents:

Up and down the City Road,
In and out the Eagle,
That's the way the money goes,
Pop goes the weasel.

The Eagle was an old-time MUSIC HALL in the City Road, London, and a popular rendezvous for singing and Saturday night drinking, which explains the need to "pop" or pawn the "weasel". Whatever the "weasel" was is not clear, but it may have been slang for a tailor's iron.

To catch a weasel asleep. To deceive a very vigilant person or to catch him off his guard.

Weasel words. Words of convenient ambiguity, or a statement from which the original meaning has been sucked or retracted. Theodore Roosevelt popularized the term by using it in a speech in 1916 when criticizing President Wilson. A quotation from the speech provides a good example: "You can have universal training, or you can have voluntary training, but when you use the word voluntary to qualify the word universal, you are using a weasel word; it has sucked all the meaning out of universal. The two words flatly contradict one another."

Roosevelt was indebted to a story by Stewart Chaplin, "Stained-Glass political Platform", which appeared in the Century Magazine in June 1900, and in which occurs the sentence: "Why, weasel words are words that suck the life out of the words next to them, just as a weasel sucks the egg and leaves the shell." In the U.S.A. a politician who sits on the fence is sometimes called a weasler.

Weather. Clerk of the Weather. See under CLERK.

Fair weather friends. Those that stick to you when you are flourishing but desert as soon as your fortunes change.

I have my weather-eye open. I have my wits about me, I am keeping a good look out, I am on my guard. The weather-eye is towards the wind, supposedly to observe the weather.

The peasant's, or shepherd's weather-glass. Another name for the SHEPHERD'S SUNDIAL.

Queen's weather. See under QUEEN.

To get the weather-gage of a person. To get the advantage over him. In the days of sail a fighting-ship that had the weather-gage of an enemy was to windward of him, thus having the tactical advantage.

Then, were the line
Of Rokeby once combined with mine,
I gain the weather-gage of fate.

SCOTT: Rokeby, xxiv.

To keep the weather of. To get round, or get the better of. A phrase from the seaman's vocabulary.

Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate:
Life every man holds dear; but the dear man
Holds honour far more precious dear than life.

SHAKESPEARE: Troilus and Cressida, V, iii.

To make fair weather. To flatter, conciliate; to make the best of things.

But I must make fair weather yet awhile,
Till Henry be more weak, and I more strong.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. II, V, 1.

To make heavy weather of something. To find it a trial, to make a burden of it; to make heavy going of it.

Under the weather. To feel unwell or out of sorts; a condition affected by the weather. Also a colloquialism for being tipsy.

A Weather breeder. A day of unusual fineness coming suddenly after a series of damp, dull days, especially at the time of year when such a genial day is not looked for. Such a day is generally followed by foul weather.

Weathercock. By a Papal enactment made in the middle of the 9th century, the figure of a cock was set up on every church steeple as the emblem of St. PETER. The emblem is in allusion to his denial of our Lord thrice before the cock crew twice. On the second crowing of the cock the warning of his Master flashed across his memory, and the repentant apostle "went out and wept bitterly".

A person who is always changing his mind is, figuratively, a weathercock.

There is no feith that may your herte embrace;
But, as a wedercock, that turneth his face
With every wind, ye fare.

CHAUCER (?):

Balade Against Women Unconstant.

Web. The Web of Life. The destiny of an individual from the cradle to the grave. An allusion to the three FATES who, according to Roman mythology, spin the thread of life, the pattern being the events which are to occur.

Web and pin. An old name for cataract, or a disease of the eye caused by some excrescence on the ball.

This is the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet . . . he gives the web and pin, squints the eye, and makes the hare-lip.

SHAKESPEARE: King Lear, III, iv.

Wed, Wedding. Wed is Old English, and means a pledge. The ring is the pledge given by the man to avouch that he will perform his part of the contract. See MARRIAGE.

The Blood-red wedding. The marriage of Henry of Navarre and Margaret of Valois (18 August 1572), which was followed a week later by the Massacre of St. BARTHOLOMEW.

Penny Weddings. See under PENNY.

Wedding anniversaries. Fanciful names have been given to many wedding anniversaries, the popular idea being that they designate the nature of the gifts suitable for the occasion. The following list is fairly complete, but of these very few except the twenty-fifth and fiftieth are ever noticed.

First	..	Cotton Wedding.
Second	..	Paper Wedding.
Third	..	Leather Wedding.
Fifth	..	Wooden Wedding.
Seventh	..	Woollen Wedding.
Tenth	..	Tin Wedding.
Twelfth	..	Silk and Fine Linen Wedding.
Fifteenth	..	Crystal Wedding.
Twentieth	..	China Wedding.
Twenty-fifth	..	Silver Wedding.
Thirtieth	..	Pearl Wedding.
Fortieth	..	Ruby Wedding.
Fiftieth	..	Golden Wedding.
Seventy-fifth	..	Diamond Wedding.

The sixtieth anniversary is often reckoned the "Diamond Wedding" in place of the seventy-fifth; as the sixtieth anniversary of Queen Victoria's accession was her "Diamond Jubilee".

Wedding Finger. The fourth finger of the left hand. Macrobius says the thumb is too busy to be set apart, the forefinger and little finger are only half protected, the middle finger is called medicus, and is too opprobrious for the purpose of honour, so the only finger left is the pronubus.

Aulus Gellius tells us that Appianus asserts in his Egyptian books that a very delicate nerve runs from the fourth finger of the left hand to the heart, on which account this finger is used for the marriage ring.

The finger on which this ring [the wedding-ring] is to be worn is the fourth finger of the left hand, next unto the little finger; because by the received opinion of the learned... in ripping up and anatomising men's bodies, there is a vein of blood, called vena amoris, which passeth from that finger to the heart.

HENRY SWINBURNE: Treaties of Spousals (1680).

In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, the thumb and next two fingers represent the TRINITY; thus the bridegroom says, "In the name of the Father," and touches the thumb; "in the name of the Son," and touches the index finger; and "in the name of the Holy Ghost," and he touches the long or third finger; with the word "Amen" he then puts it on the fourth finger and leaves it there. In some countries the wedding ring is worn on the right hand; this was the custom generally in ENGLAND until the end of the 16th century, and among Roman Catholics until much later.

In the Hereford, York, and Salisbury missals, the ring is directed to be put first on the thumb, then on the index finger, then on the long finger, and lastly on the ring-finger, quia in illo digito est quedam vena procedens usque ad cor.

No herring, no wedding. A bad fishing season discourages marriage among fisherfolk.

Wedlock. This word comes from O.E. wed, a pledge, and lac, action, the whole meaning the marriage vow and hence the married state. It does not imply the unopenable lock of marriage, as has sometimes been supposed.

Wednesday. The fourth day of the week, Woden's Day or ODIN's Day, called by the French Mercredi, Mercury's Day. The Persians regard it as a "RED-LETTER DAY" because the MOON was created on the fourth day (Gen. i, 14-19).

Weeds. Widow's weeds. The mourning worn by a widow; from O.E. wæde, a garment. Spenser (Faerie Queene, II, iii, 21) speaks of "A goodly lady clad in hunter's weed".

SHAKESPEARE (Midsummer Night's Dream, II, i) has:

And there the snake throws her enamell'd skin,
Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in.

And in Titus Andronicus (I, i) we get the modern meaning:

Hail, Rome, victorious in thy mourning weeds!

Week, Days of the. The names of these days are of Anglo-Saxon origin while those of the months are derived from the Romans. See the individual entries SUNDAY, MONDAY, etc., also JANUARY, FEBRUARY, etc.

A week of Sundays. A long time, an indefinite period.

Week-work. Under FEUDALISM, compulsory work by the unfree TENANT on his lord's land for so many days a week, usually three days. It was the chief mark of serfdom or villeinage. See VILLEIN.

Weep. Weeper. In the more elaborate and formal funeral ceremonial of the 19th century, undertakers attending (called mutes) and the principal male mourners wore long black streamers hanging from the hatband; these were commonly known as weepers, as was also the widow's long black veil. In humorous allusion to the former, the long side whiskers in fashion in the 1860s were called Piccadilly weepers.

Weepers. The derisive title (Ital. Piagnoni, weepers or snivellers) given to the supporters of Savonarola (1452-1498) and the popular government in Florence in the 1490s, from their penitential practices and professions.

Weeping. A notion long prevailed in this country that it augured ill for future married happiness if the bride did not weep profusely at the wedding.

As no WITCH could shed more than three tears, and those from her left eye only, a copious flow of tears gave assurance to the husband that the lady had not "plighted her troth" to SATAN, and was no witch.

Weeping Cross. A cross set up by the roadside for penitential devotions.

To come home, or to go, or to return by Weeping Cross. To suffer grievous disappointment, defeat, or failure; hence, to repent of one's actions.

The tyme will come when comming home by weeping crosse, thou shalt confesse, that it is better to be at home in the cave of an Hermit than abroad in the court of an Emperour.

LYLY: Euphues and his England (1580).

The Weeping Philosopher. Heraclitus (d. c. 475 B.C.), so called because he grieved at the folly of man.

The Weeping Saint. St. SWITHIN, because of the tradition of forty days' rain if it rains on his day.

Weigh (O.E. wegan, to carry). To weigh anchor. To haul up the anchor preparatory to sailing.

Weighed in the balance and found wanting. Tested, and proved to be at fault, or a failure. The phrase is from Daniel's interpretation of the vision of Belshazzar (Dan. v, 27).

Dead weight. See under DEAD.

A weight-for-age race. A sort of handicap in which the weights carried are apportioned according to certain conditions. Horses of the same age carry similar weights, ceteris paribus.

Weimar Republic, The. The German federal republic established under the Constitution of 1919, which lasted until it was overthrown by Hitler in 1933. So called from the Thuringian town, particularly associated with Goethe, where the constitution was adopted by the National Assembly.

Welch. An old spelling of Welsh; surviving in such names as the Welch Fusiliers, the Welch Regiment, etc.

Welcome Nugget. One of the largest nuggets of gold ever discovered. It was found at Baker's Hill, Ballarat, 11 June 1858, and weighed 2,217 oz.

Welcome Stranger. The largest gold nugget found to date. It weighed 2,520 oz. and was found in Victoria, Australia, in 1869.

To wear out one's welcome. To visit too frequently or to stay too long so that one's presence is no longer appreciated or desired.

Welfare State, The. A term applied to Britain after the implementation of the Beveridge Report (1942) providing for nation-wide social security services for sickness, unemployment, retirement, want, etc., and essentially based upon the National Insurance Act of 1946. The system depends upon compulsory contributions and taxation and was built up on the less sweeping Liberal legislation of 1908-14.

Well, Well-beloved. Charles VI of France, le Bien-aimé (1368, 1380-1422); also applied to Louis XV (1710, 1715-1764). See also COUSIN.

Well heeled. Materially prosperous as indicated by one's being well shod; the reverse of DOWN-AT-HEEL.

Wellington. The Duke of Wellington (1769-1852) is commemorated in the name of kinds of riding-boots and top-boots, a tree of the sequoia family (the Wellingtonia), and as a term in cards. Thus in "Nap" a call of Wellington doubles Napoleon—i.e. the caller has to take all five tricks and wins (or loses) double stakes. Wellington College (opened 1853, as a public school for the sons of officers) was also named after him, as were also many thoroughfares, public-houses, etc.

Wells-Fargo. The famous American company founded by William George Fargo (1818-1881) and Henry Wells (1805-1878) in 1852. It carried on the stage express business between New York and

San Francisco via the isthmus of Panama. It absorbed the PONY EXPRESS and took over the Overland Mail Company in 1866, and was also an agency for the transport of bullion. It amalgamated with the Adams Express in 1918 as the American Railway Express Company. Cp. COBB AND CO.

Welsh. See WALES; TAFFY.

Welsh, welshe. To welsh is to decamp from a racecourse without settling one's debts; to avoid settling a debt. A welshe is one who does this. The origin of the term is uncertain.

Welsh cake. A small, flat cake or GIRDLE CAKE cooked on a bakestone, or an iron pan. It is made from flour, fat, currants, egg, milk, salt, and sugar.

Welsh harp. The musical instrument of the ancient Welsh bards; a large harp with three rows of strings, two tuned diatonically in unison, the third supplying the chromatic sharps and flats. Also applied loosely to the Brent Reservoir, in Middlesex, from the public-house of that name in the vicinity.

Welsh Main. In COCKFIGHTING, a form of BATTLE ROYAL in which eight pairs were matched, next the eight winners, then four, and finally the last two, until only one was left alive.

Welsh mortgage. A pledge of land in which no day is fixed for redemption.

Welsh rabbit. Cheese melted with butter, milk, Worcester sauce, etc., spread on buttered toast. Rabbit is not a corruption of rare-bit; the term is on a par with "mock-turtle", "BOMBAY DUCK", etc.

Welter-weight. A boxer between light and middle weight, about 147 lb. In racing the term is applied to any extra heavy weight.

Weltpolitik (velt pol' i tik). The German phrase (world politics) for the policy a nation pursues in its relations with the world at large.

Wen, The, or The Great Wen. London, a name used by William Cobbett (1762-1835) in his Rural Rides, meaning that it was an abnormal growth or blotch on the land. To him the sprawl and growth of any town was "a wen". Thus he says: "Chatham has had some monstrous wens stuck on to it by the lavish expenditure of the war" (4 December 1821); and, "Croydon is a good market-town; but is, by the funds, swelled out into a wen" (8 January 1822).

Wenceslas, St. (c. 907-929). The Bohemian martyr-prince made famous in England by the 19th-century carol Good King Wenceslas. He was noted for his piety and was murdered by Boleslav, his brother. He became recognized as the patron of Bohemia and his day is 28 September.

Werewolf. See WERWOLF.

Wergild. The BLOOD-MONEY (wer, man; gild, payment) paid in Anglo-Saxon times by the kindred of the slayer to the kindred of the slain to avoid a blood-feud in cases of murder or manslaughter. There was a fixed scale, as 1,200 shillings for a thegn, 200 shillings for a ceorl, etc.

Werwolf. A "man-wolf" (O.E. wer, man), i.e. a man who, according to ancient superstition, was turned—or could at will turn himself—into a WOLF (the loup-garou of France). It had the appetite of a wolf, and roamed about at night devouring infants and sometimes exhuming corpses. Its skin was proof against shot or steel, unless the weapon had been blessed in a chapel dedicated to St. HUBERT.

Ovid tells the story of LYCAON, King of ARCADIA, turned into a wolf because he tested the divinity of JUPITER by serving up to him a "hash of human flesh"; Herodotus describes the Neuri as having the power of assuming once a year the shape of wolves; Pliny relates that one of the family of ANTÆUS was chosen annually, by lot, to be transformed into a wolf, in which shape he continued for nine years; and St. PATRICK, we are told, converted Veretius, King of WALES, into a wolf.

Hence the term lycanthropy (Gr. lukas, wolf; anthropus, man) for this supposed transformation and for the form of insanity in which the subject exhibits depraved animal traits.

Tigers, hyenas, and leopards had the same associations in other parts of the world, and after the disappearance of the wolf in England WITCHES were commonly "transformed" into cats.

Wesleyan. A member of the NONCONFORMIST church which grew out of the evangelical movement started by John Wesley (1703-1791) and his associates, although there was no real break with the CHURCH OF ENGLAND until 1795. See METHODISTS.

Wessex. The ancient kingdom of the West Saxons, founded by Cerdic in the 6th century. Its nucleus was the modern Berkshire and Hampshire, and it later spread to CORNWALL in the west and to Kent and Essex in the east. The Danish invasions of the 9th century destroyed the other English kingdoms and ALFRED THE GREAT came to be recognized as King of all the English outside the Danish areas. The subsequent reconquest of the DANELAW resulted in the king of Wessex becoming king of ENGLAND.

The Novelist of Wessex. Thomas Hardy (1840-1928), the scenes of whose novels are set in this area.

West. The West End. The western district of inner LONDON, noted for its fashionable shopping, theatres, clubs, hotels, restaurants, the expensive residential district of MAYFAIR, SOHO, etc. It includes largely the area between Hyde Park and CHARING CROSS Road. Cp. EAST END under END.

To go west. Of persons, to die; of things, to be lost, rendered useless or unattainable, as, "My chance of promotion has gone west." The reference is to the setting sun, which "goes west", and then sinks or expires.

West, Mae. See MAE WEST.

The Western Church. The CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The Western Empire. The western division of the ROMAN EMPIRE with ROME as its capital, after the division into the Eastern and Western Empire by Theodosius in 395.

Westminster. The seat of government in England since the time of Canute (1016-35). From the time of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR the sovereign has been crowned in Westminster Abbey and it later became the home of the Mother of Parliaments. Hence, like WHITEHALL and DOWNING STREET, it is sometimes used as a synonym for government or PARLIAMENT.

The Palace of Westminster. Until 1512, a royal residence and the place to which PARLIAMENT was summoned; now the seat of Parliament. In 1547 St. Stephen's Chapel within the Palace became the home of the HOUSE OF COMMONS until the fire of 1834, when new buildings were erected. The House of Commons Chamber was again destroyed by enemy bombing in 1940. The LORDS occupied other parts of the Palace which ceased to be a royal residence after a serious fire in 1512. STAR CHAMBER stood in these precincts, but the only ancient building now remaining is Westminster Hall, parts of which date from 1097.

The Westminster Assembly. The assembly appointed by the LONG PARLIAMENT to reform the English Church. It consisted of 30 laymen and 120 clergy and met in Westminster Abbey precincts (1643-53). Its most important achievement was the WESTMINSTER CONFESSION. See also ERASTIANISM.

The Westminster Confession. The PRESBYTERIAN Confession of faith adopted by the WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY in 1646 and approved by PARLIAMENT in 1648. It became a standard definition of Presbyterian doctrine.

Wet. Slang for a drink; hence to have a wet is to have a drink, and to wet one's whistle means the same thing; Chaucer has, "So was her joly whistle wel y-wet" (Reeve's Tale, 235).

In the U.S.A. wet States were those which did not support the prohibition of the sale of alcoholic drinks.

In colloquial speech wet also denotes stupidity, foolishness, thus he is pretty wet means he is fairly stupid and don't talk wet means don't talk such nonsense, don't be silly.

A wet blanket. See under BLANKET.

Wetback. An illegal immigrant to the U.S.A. from Mexico. The term originates in the fact that such interlopers usually had to swim the Rio Grande.

Wet bob. At Eton, a wet bob is a boy who goes in for boating; a dry bob one who chooses CRICKET.

Wet nurse. A woman employed to suckle children not her own.

To wet the baby's head. To celebrate a baptism with a social gathering to drink to the health of the newly born baby.

W. H., Mr. When SHAKESPEARE'S Sonnets appeared in 1609 they were dedicated to a Mr. W. H., called their "onlie begetter". The identity of Shakespeare's friend is uncertain. Various names have been put forward and for long the most favoured were William Herbert, third Earl of Pembroke, to whom (with his brother) the First Folio Shakespeare was dedicated, and Henry Wriothesley, third Earl of Southampton, to whom Venus and Adonis and Lucrece were dedicated. In 1964 Dr. Leslie Hotson put forward a case for William Hatcliffe of Lincolnshire, "Prince of Purpoole" in the GRAY'S INN revels of 1588. According to Dr. A. L. Rowse, Master W. H. is Sir William Harvey, the Earl of Southampton's stepfather.

Whale. To throw a tub to a whale. See under TUBS.

Very like a whale. Very much like a COCK-AND-BULL STORY. In SHAKESPEARE'S Hamlet (III, ii), the Prince chaffs POLONIUS by comparing a cloud to a camel, and then to a weasel, and when the courtier assents Hamlet adds, "Or like a whale"; to which Polonius answers, "Very like a whale."

A whale of a lot. A great amount. Colloquially whale is used of something very fine or big as we had a whale of a time, a fine time, or a whale of a job, a very considerable task.

Whalebone. See MISNOMERS.

White as whalebone. An old simile; whalebone is far from white. Our forefathers seemed to confuse walrus with whale; and "white as whalebone" is really a blunder for "white as walrus-ivory".

What. He knows what's what. He is a shrewd fellow, not to be imposed upon. One of the senseless questions of logic was Quid est quid?

He knew what's what, and that's as high
As metaphysic wit can fly.

BUTLER: Hudibras, I, i.

What makes it tick. See under TICK.

What we gave we have. The epitaph on "the Good Earl of Courtenay" (see Gibbon's Decline and Fall, vol. VI, ch. lxi):

What wee gave, wee have;
What wee spent, wee had;
What wee left, wee lost.

is a free rendering of Martial's:

Extra fortunam est quidquid donatur amicis
Quas dederis, solas semper habebis opes.

There are similar epitaphs in many churches; one in St. George's, Doncaster, runs thus:

How now, who is here?
I, Robin of Doncastere
And Margaret, my feere.
That I spent, that I had;
That I gave, that I have;
That I left, that I lost.

Whatever are you at? So Dr. W. G. Grace is reported to have called out when, in 1896, Ernest Jones, the Australian fast bowler, bowled through W.G.'s beard.

What-not. A small stand with shelves for photographs, knick-knacks, china ornaments, and "what-not" (i.e. etc.), popular in Victorian and Edwardian times.

Wheat-ear. A bird with a white tail, one of the thrush family. The name has no connection with either wheat or ear, but it is the O.E. hwit, white; ears—still in vulgar use as arse—the buttocks or rump. The French name of the bird, culblanc, signifies exactly the same thing.

Wheel. Emblematical of St. CATHERINE, who was broken on a wheel.

St. Donatus bears a wheel set round with lights.

St. Euphemia and St. Willigis both carry wheels.

St. Quintin is sometimes represented with a broken wheel at his feet.

Broken on the wheel. See TO BREAK ON THE WHEEL under BREAK.

To break a butterfly on a wheel. See under BREAK.

To put a spoke in one's wheel. See SPOKE.

To put one's shoulder to the wheel. See under PUT.

The wheel is come full circle. Just retribution has followed. The line is from SHAKESPEARE'S King Lear, V, iii.

The wheel of Fortune. Fortuna, the goddess, is represented on ancient monuments with a wheel in her hand, emblematical of her inconstancy.

Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. III, IV, iii.

See also PRAYING-WHEEL, below.

Wheels within wheels. A complex of motives and influences and circumstances at work which are not always apparent. The allusion is to Ezekiel i, 16.

Praying-wheel. A revolving wheel or cylinder, used for purposes of prayer among Buddhists, upon which written prayers are set, each turn of the wheel being reckoned as a prayer. In Europe, a wheel with bells (sometimes called a Wheel of Fortune), used as a means of DIVINATION, a favourable or unfavourable response being indicated by the position at which it came to rest.

Wheel-horse, or Wheeler. Figuratively, one who does the hard work or bears the brunt. The wheel-horse is the one nearest the front wheels of a vehicle and is harnessed to the pole or shafts, as distinct from the leader who is the front horse.

Wherewithal. In older writings this is a form of wherewith as in:

Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way?
Ps. cxix, 9.

It is now used as a noun in the sense of means, money.

Whetstone. See ACCIUS NAEVIUS.

Lying for the whetstone. Said of a person who is grossly exaggerating or falsifying a statement. One of the WHITSUN amusements of our forefathers was the lie-wage or lie-match; he who could tell the greatest lie was rewarded with a whetstone to sharpen his wit. The nature of these contests may be illustrated by the following: one of the combatants declared he could see a fly on the top of a church steeple; the other replied, "Oh, yes, I saw him wink his eye."

The Whetstone of Witte. A famous treatise on algebra (1557) by Robert Recorde. The old name for algebra was the "Cossic Art", and Cos ingenii rendered into English is "the Whetstone of Wit". In Scott's Fortunes of Nigel (ch. xxiv), the servant told Nigel that she knew of no other books in the house "than her mistress's Bible . . .; and her Master's Whetstone of Witte, being the second part of Arithmetic, by Robert Record, with the Cossike Practice and Rule of Equation."

Whig. A name applied to Scottish cattle rustlers and horse thieves, then to the Presbyterian COVENANTERS and later, in the reign of James II (1685-8), to those seeking to exclude the Duke of York from succession to the throne. The name was used abusively by their TORY opponents. From the time of the GLORIOUS REVOLUTION the Whigs were upholders of parliamentary supremacy and toleration for NONCONFORMISTS. They supported the Hanoverian succession and enjoyed a monopoly of political power until the reign of George III, when they were superseded by the Tories after 1783 and did not recover the ascendancy until 1830, the time of the Reform Bill. By 1868 the name LIBERAL had largely replaced that of Whig.

The origin of the word is obscure but it is probably a shortened form of whiggamore, a horse drover.

In American usage, Whig denotes a supporter of the American Revolution; also a member of the American Whig party formed in 1834 from the old National Republican Party against President Andrew Jackson and "executive tyranny". The party disintegrated by 1854 over the question of "free soil" and slavery.

The Whig Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Whip. In British Parliamentary usage, M.P.s appointed by a party, whose duty it is to see that the members of their party vote at important divisions and to discipline them if they do not attend, or vote against the party.

Whip also denotes the notice sent by party whips to members requesting their attendance in the HOUSE, and the degree of urgency is indicated by one, two, or three lines shown under the summons. The name derives from the whipper-in at a fox-hunt.

The whip with six strings. See THE SIX ARTICLES under SIX.

Whip-dog Day. 18 October, St. LUKE's day. Brand (Popular Antiquities, II), says that it is so called because a priest about to celebrate mass on St. Luke's Day happened to drop the PYX, which was snatched up by a dog.

A whip-round. An impromptu collection for some benevolent object.

To whip-saw. To have or take the advantage over an opponent; especially in faro, to win two different bets at one turn.

Whip-sawing is also an American term for accepting bribes from two opposing interests at the same time. The whip-saw is a long narrow frame-saw with a handle at either end so that it cuts both ways.

Whipper-snapper. An inexperienced—and often cheeky—young man. The word probably derives from whip snapper, one who has nothing to do but crack a whip.

Whipping Boy. A boy kept to be whipped when a prince deserved chastisement. Fuller (Church History, II) says Barnaby Fitzpatrick so stood for Edward VI, and Mungo Murray for Charles I. When Henry IV of France abjured Protestantism and was received into the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH in 1593, two ambassadors (D'Ossat and Du Perron, afterwards cardinals) were sent to ROME and knelt in the portico of St. Peter's singing the MISERERE. At each verse a blow with a switch was given on their shoulders.

Whisky. See USQUEBAUGH. The light one-horse gig called a whisky is from whisk, to move briskly.

Whisky Money. The name given to the money diverted to county and county borough councils in 1890, for the development of technical education in accordance with the Technical Instruction Act, 1889. It was derived from the extra duty (6d. per gallon) levied on spirits in 1890 as part of an abortive scheme to compensate licensees of redundant public-houses, but was used instead for technical and secondary education. As a consequence, temperance did not help education.

Whisper. Pig's whisper. See under PIG.

To give the whisper. To give the tip, the warning; to pass some bit of secret information.

Whist. The card game originated in England (16th century) and was first called Triumph (whence trump), then Ruff or Honours, and then, early in the 17th century, Whisk, in allusion to the sweeping up of the cards. Whist, the later name, appears in Butler's Hudibras (1663), and was adopted through confusion with Whist! meaning Hush! Silence!

Let nice Piquette the boast of France remain,
And studious Ombre be the pride of Spain!
Invention's praise shall England yield to none,
While she can call delightful Whist her own.
ALEXANDER THOMSON: Whist (2nd edn., 1792).

See WHITECHAPEL.

Whistle. To wet one's whistle. See WET.
To whistle down the wind. To abandon; to talk or argue purposely. From the practice of releasing a HAWK down wind.

To whistle for it. It was an old superstition among sailors that when a ship was becalmed a wind could be raised by whistling. By a perversion of sense, the phrase "You can whistle for it" now means, "You won't get it."

Worth the whistle. Worth calling; worth inviting; worth notice. The dog is worth the pains of whistling for. Thus Heywood, in one of his dialogues consisting entirely of proverbs, says, "It is a poor dog that is not worth the whistling." Goneril says to Albany:

I have been worth the whistle.
SHAKESPEARE: King Lear, IV, ii.

You paid too dearly for your whistle. You paid dearly for something you fancied, but found that it did not answer your expectation. The allusion is to a story told by Benjamin Franklin of his nephew, who set his mind on a common whistle, which he bought of a boy for four times its value.

Whistle-stop tour. In the U.S.A., to conduct a brief campaign, usually political, by travelling the country visiting the smaller communities, often talking from the rear platform of a train. A whistle-stop being a small town on a railroad where the train only stopped on a given signal.

Whit Sunday. White Sunday. The seventh SUNDAY after EASTER, to commemorate the descent of the HOLY GHOST on the day of PENTECOST. It was one of the great seasons for baptism and the candidates wore white garments, hence the name.

Whitsuntide. The whole week following WHIT SUNDAY.

Whitsun farthings. See PENTECOSTALS.

Whitsun-ale. The most important CHURCH-ALE, celebrated with much revelry.

White denotes purity, simplicity, and candour; innocence, truth, and hope. For its ecclesiastical use, symbolism, etc., see COLOURS.

Generally, the priests of antiquity wore white vestments, and Bardic costume, supposedly derived from the DRUIDS, is always white.

OSIRIS, the ancient Egyptian god, wore a white crown, and the priests of JUPITER were clad in white, and at the death of a CÆSAR the national mourning was white. The Persians affirm that the divinities are clothed in white.

The white bird. Conscience, or the SOUL of man. The Mohammedans have preserved the old idea that the souls of the just lie under the throne of God, like white birds, till the resurrection morn. Cp. DOVE.

The White Cockade. The badge worn by the followers of Charles Edward, the Young PRETENDER.

The White Company. In 13th-century France, a band of cut-throats organized by Folquet, bishop of Toulouse, to extirpate heretics in his diocese. The name is better known for its association with the FREE COMPANIES of the late 14th century: that which Bertrand du Guesclin led against Pedro the Cruel of Castile in 1367, whose members wore a white CROSS on the shoulder; and that under Sir John Hawkwood in Italy. See also CONDOTTIERI.

White elephant. See under ELEPHANT.

White Ensign. A St. George's CROSS on a white ground with the UNION JACK in a canton, since 1864 the ensign of the Royal Navy but also used by members of the Royal Yacht Squadron who have the requisite warrant. See ADMIRAL.

White Fathers. Members of the French Society of Missionaries of Africa established at Algiers in 1868. So called from their white tunic.

White flag. An all-white flag is universally used as the signal of surrender or desiring to parley and its bearer is by international custom immune from harm.

White Friars. The CARMELITES, so called from their white mantle worn over a brown habit. One of their houses founded in London on the south side of FLEET STREET in 1241 gave its name to the district called Whitefriars or ALSATIA which was long a SANCTUARY.

White harvest. A late harvest, when the ground is white of a morning with hoar frost.

The White Horse. See under HORSE.

White horses. See under HORSE.

The White House. The presidential mansion at Washington, D.C. It is a building of freestone, painted white. The cornerstone was laid by George Washington. Figuratively it means the Presidency of the U.S.A.

White Lady. A kind of spectre, the appearance of which generally forebodes death in the house. It is a relic of Teutonic mythology, representing HULDA or BERCHTA, the goddess who received the SOULS of maidens and young children. She is dressed in white and carries a bunch of keys at her side.

The first recorded instance of this apparition was in the 15th century, and the name given to the lady is Bertha von Rosenberg. She last appeared, it is said, in 1879. German legend says that when the castle of Neuhaus, Bohemia, was being built a white lady appeared and promised the workmen a sweet soup and a carp on the completion of the castle. In remembrance thereof, these dainties were for long given to the poor on MAUNDY THURSDAY.

In Normandy the White Ladies lurk in ravines, fords, bridges, etc., and ask the wayfarer to dance, and if refused fling him into a ditch. The most famous of these ladies are La Dame d'Aprigny, who used to occupy the site of the Rue St. Quentin, at Bayeux, and La Dame Abonde.

The White Lady of Avenel, in Scott's The Monastery, is based upon these legends.

White Ladies. A popular name for the CISTERCIAN nuns in mediæval ENGLAND, from the colour of their habit, and for the Magdalenes. Also applied to the French Order of the Sisters of the Presentation of Mary (1796).

White League. A name for the KU KLUX KLAN.

A white lie. See under LIE.

White magic. Sorcery in which the DEVIL was not invoked and played no part, as distinct from black magic.

A white man. A thoroughly straightforward and honourable man.

The White Man's Burden. In the days of imperialism, the duty supposed to be imposed upon the white races, especially the British, to govern and to educate the less-civilized or backward coloured peoples.

Take up the White Man's Burden—
Send forth the best you breed,
Go bind your sons to exile
To serve the captives' need.

KIPLING: The White Man's Burden.

The White Man's Grave. The unhealthy areas of equatorial West Africa, especially Sierra Leone.

White Monks. The CISTERCIAN monks, whose habit was made from white wool.

A white night. A sleepless night; the French have the phrase Passer une nuit blanche.

White Paper. A government publication printed for the information of PARLIAMENT. Such a report, statement of policy, etc., is not bulky enough to warrant the protective covers of a BLUE BOOK. White Papers are available to the public through H.M. Stationery Office.

White rent. Rent paid in silver money. Also the duty of eightpence per head formerly paid by the tin-miners of Devon and CORNWALL to the Duke of Cornwall. These dues were abolished in 1838.

The White Rose. See under ROSE.

White Russian. An inhabitant of White Russia or Byelorussia (Russ. byely, white), one of the republics of the U.S.S.R. A "White" Russian also denotes a counter-revolutionary or émigré at the time of the BOLSHEVIK revolution, and their army was known as the White Army.

White Satin. An old nickname for GIN.

White sheep. See BLACK SHEEP under SHEEP.

The White Ship. The ship carrying Henry I's son William from Normandy to England, which struck a rock off Barfleur (25 November 1120) and sank. William was drowned with the resultant conflict for the crown between Stephen and Matilda. The disaster was due to the drunken laxity of the crew.

White Sisters. The Congregation of the Daughters of the HOLY GHOST, founded in Brittany in 1706, so called from the colour of their habit. Also the Congregation of the Missionary Sisters of Our Lady of Africa (1869), the counterpart of the WHITE FATHERS.

White Slave. A woman who is sold or forced into prostitution, especially when taken abroad.

A white squall. One which produces no diminution of light, in contradistinction to a black squall, in which the clouds are black and heavy. Also a small whirlwind, usually occurring in the tropics.

White tincture. The alchemist's name for a preparation that should convert any base metal into SILVER. It is also called the Stone of the Second Order, the Little Elixir, and the Little Magisterium. See RED.

The White Tower. The approximately square keep of the TOWER of London, which is the oldest part of the fortress, begun by WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR. There is a turret at each corner, and the sides are over 100 ft. wide, the walls being 15 ft. thick in their lower parts and 11 ft. thick in the upper storey. Many illustrious prisoners have been accommodated within. See THE PRINCES IN THE TOWER under TOWER.

White wedding. A wedding in which the bride wears the traditional white wedding dress veil, white symbolizing purity and virginity. For the same reason, grey horses were formerly used for the wedding carriage and the post-boys wore white hats. Wedding cake is coated with white icing and invitations, etc., are usually printed in silver. It is also said to be unlucky to be married in anything but white.

White wine. Any wine of a light colour as distinct from red wine, e.g.: Champagne, hock, Sauternes, Moselle, Graves, Chablis, etc.

White witch. One who practised WHITE MAGIC only.

Days marked with a white stone. Days to be remembered with gratification. The Romans used a white stone or piece of chalk to mark their lucky days on the calendar. Unlucky days were marked with charcoal. Cp. RED-LETTER DAY.

To hit the white. To be quite right, make a good shot. The phrase is from the old days of archery, the white being the inner circles of the target—the BULL'S EYE.

To show the white feather. To show cowardice; a phrase from COCKFIGHTING, a white feather in a gamecock's tail being taken as a sign of degenerate stock, not a true game-bird.

To stand in a white sheet. Part of the ancient penance for incontinence was to stand before the congregation at MASS robed in a white sheet. The term now designates the utmost penitence.

Washing the Blackamoor white. See BLACKAMOOR.

White collar worker. The professional or clerical worker, whose calling demands a certain nicety of attire typified by the wearing of a white shirt and collar.

A white tie affair. A social function at which the men wear formal evening dress with a white bow-tie and swallow-tailed coat.

A whited sepulchre. A hypocrite, especially one who conceals wickedness under a cloak of virtue. In Biblical times, Jewish sepulchres were whitened to make them conspicuous so that passers-by might avoid ritual defilement by near approach. Thus Jesus (Matt. xxiii, 27) says: "Ye are like unto whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness."

White-face. A nickname for a man from Hereford; from the white faces of Herefordshire cattle.

White-livered. Cowardly, from the old notion that the livers of cowards were bloodless.

How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars,
Who, inward search'd, have livers white as milk!
SHAKESPEARE: Merchant of Venice, III, ii.

Whitebait Dinner. A dinner of CABINET Ministers and prominent politicians which, until the early 1890s, was held at Blackwall or Greenwich towards the close of the parliamentary session. The time of meeting was TRINITY Monday, or as near Trinity Monday as was convenient. Blackwall and Greenwich were formerly much resorted to by Londoners to enjoy whitebait.

Whiteboys. Irish Catholic peasant organizations first appearing in Munster in the 1760s, whose outrages were a protest against RACK-RENTING, TITHES, enclosures, etc. They again terrorized southern IRELAND from the late 1780s until the end of the century. So called because they wore white frocks over their clothing.

Whitechapel. A district of Stepney in the East End of London, east of Aldgate, and a noted Jewish quarter. It contains part of PETTICOAT LANE and was the scene of the notorious Whitechapel Murders by JACK THE RIPPER. It is also notable for its bell-foundry. It takes its name from the colour of the original chapel-of-ease to Stepney built there.

In WHIST, Whitechapel denotes unskillful play such as leading out with winning cards, or leading from a one-card suit in order to trump.

Whitechapel cart. A light, two-wheeled spring cart, once used by tradesmen for delivering goods.

Whitehall. This famous thoroughfare takes its name from the royal palace sited there, which was in use from the time of Henry VIII to William III. It was mostly destroyed by fire in 1698 and only the banqueting hall, built by Inigo Jones, still stands. From its being the site of the major Government offices the name is often used as a synonym for the British government. The palace was formerly Wolsey's mansion called York Place, but was named White Hall after its confiscation by Henry VIII.

You must no more call it York Place, that's past:
For, since the cardinal fell, that title's lost;
'Tis now the King's, and call'd Whitehall.

SHAKESPEARE: King Henry VIII, IV, i.

Whitewash. Figuratively, excuses made in palliation of bad conduct; a false colouring given to a person's character or memory, a stained reputation, etc.

The term is also applied to the clearance by a bankrupt of his debts, not by paying them but by judicial process.

Whitsun. See under WHIT.

Whittington, Dick. According to the popular legend and PANTOMIME story, a poor boy who made his way to LONDON when he heard that the streets were paved with GOLD and SILVER. He found shelter as a scullion in the house of a rich merchant who permitted each of his servants to partake in sending a cargo of merchandise to Barbary. Dick sent his CAT, but subsequently ran away owing to ill-treatment below stairs. He was recalled by BOW BELLS seeming to say:

Turn again Whittington
Thrice Lord Mayor of London.

He returned to find his cat had been purchased for a vast sum by the King of Barbary, who was much plagued by rats and mice. He married his master's daughter Alice, prospered exceedingly, and became thrice Lord Mayor.

In fact, he was the youngest son of Sir William Whittington of Pauntley in Gloucestershire and duly became a mercer of London, having married Alice, the daughter of Sir Ivo Fitzwaryn. He became very wealthy, the richest merchant of his day, and was made MAYOR of London in 1397-1398, 1406-1407, and 1419-1420. He died in 1423 leaving his vast wealth for charitable and public purposes.

The part of the cat in the story has been carefully explained: that he traded in coals brought to London in cats (a type of sailing-vessel), and that it is a confusion with Fr. achat, "purchase" (a term then used for trading at a profit). Whatever be the truth, Dick Whittington and his cat are now inseparable.

Who dun it. A colloquialism originating in the U.S.A. for a detective story (in American usage, a mystery).

Whoopee (woo pē'). To make whoopee. To enjoy oneself uproariously, to go on the RAZZLE or spree.

Wicked. Probably connected with O.E. wicca, a WIZARD.

The Wicked Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

The Wicked Prayer Book. Printed 1686, octavo. In the Epistle for the Fourteenth Sunday after TRINITY the following passage occurs:

Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, idolatry . . . they who do such things shall inherit the kingdom of God.

("shall inherit" should be "shall not inherit".)

Wicket. To bat on a sticky wicket. To be confronted with a difficult situation which demands coolness and judgment. An allusion to the game of CRICKET when a soft pitch causes greater difficulties for the batsman when the ball is delivered.

Wide. Slang for cunning, artful, or for one who is very wide-awake. Hence wide boy, a plebeian type of SMART-ALEC who needs watching, one who tries "to see you off." Cp. SPIV.

Wideawake. Types of felt hat, with a low crown and wide brim, common in Victorian times. Punningly so called because they never had a nap.

Widow, The. Old slang for the gallows. Also Victorian slang for champagne, in allusion to the well-known brand Veuve Clicquot, so called from "Widow" Clicquot who, at the age of 27, took over the firm in 1806 on the death of her husband François, and with her associates made it an outstanding success. The House of Clicquot was founded by Philippe Clicquot in 1772 and eventually renamed Veuve Clicquot-Ponsardin in 1810.

The Widow at Windsor. A name applied to Queen Victoria whose husband Albert, the PRINCE CONSORT, died at the end of 1861. Her remaining 39 years were largely spent in seclusion and she never ceased to mourn her loss. The name The Widow at Windsor was applied by Rudyard Kipling in his Barrack-Room Ballad of that name (1892).

Then 'ere's to the Widow at Windsor,
An' 'ere's to the stores an' the guns,
The men an' the 'orses what makes up the forces
O' Missis Victorier's sons.

Widow bench. An obsolete law term for the share of her husband's estate allowed to a widow over and above her jointure.

The widow's cruse. A small supply of anything which, by good management, is made to go a long way and to be apparently inexhaustible. In allusion to the miracle of the cruse of oil in II Kings iv.

Widow's man. Old naval slang for a non-existent seaman whose name was borne on the ship's book, his pay, PRIZE-MONEY, etc., going to Greenwich Hospital or to a fund for widows.

Widow's mite. An offering, small in itself but representing self-sacrifice on the part of the giver; a small contribution from one who is unable to give much. An allusion to Mark xii, 42.

Widow's peak. A V-shaped point of hair over the forehead reminiscent of the front cusp of the cap formerly worn by widows.

Widow's weeds. See WEEDS.

Wicland. See WAYLAND SMITH.

Wife. O.E. wif, a woman. The ultimate root of the word is obscure; but it is "certainly not allied to weave (O.E. weafn), as the fable runs" (Skeat).

The old meaning, a woman, still appears in such combinations as fish-wife, house-wife, etc., and old wives' tales for unconvincing stories or proverbial legend.

But refuse profane and old wives' fables, and exercise thyself rather unto godliness.

I Tim. iv, 7.

The Wife-hater Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Wig. A shortened form of periwig (earlier, perwig), from Fr. perruque. The long flowing wig of Louis XIV's time was called the allonge (lengthening) and in the 18th century there were thirty or forty different styles and names: as the artichoke, bag, barrister's, bishop's, Blenheim, brush, buckle, bushy, bush (buzz), campaign, cauliflower, chain, chancellor's corded, Count Saxe's mode, crutch, cut bob, Dalmahoy (a bob wig worn by tradesmen), detached buckle, drop, Dutch, full, half natural, Jansenist bob, judge's, ladder, long bob, Louis, pigeon's wing, rhinoceros, rose, she-dragon, small back, spinach seed, staircase, wild boar's back, wolf's paw.

A bigwig. A magnate, someone of importance; in allusion to the large wigs that in the 17th and 18th centuries encumbered the head and shoulders of the aristocracy of England and France, etc. They are still worn by the Lord CHANCELLOR, judges, and the SPEAKER of the HOUSE OF COMMONS; BISHOPS continued to wear them in the HOUSE OF LORDS until 1880.

Scratch wig. A small one just large enough to cover the bald patch, as opposed to the full-bottomed wig.

Tie-wig. The small wig as worn by barristers.

Welsh wig. A worsted cap.

Dash my wig! A mild imprecation, formerly very common.

Wigs on the green. A serious disagreement likely to lead to a scrimmage; a rumpus.

Wigging. A scolding, a reprimand. Possibly from the idea of dislodging or ruffling someone's wig, or from a reproof by a BIGWIG or a wigged superior.

Wiggen tree. See ROWAN.

Wight (wit). An Old English word meaning a person, a human being. It chiefly survives in the phrase "a luckless wight", a man for whom everything goes wrong.

Wild. Wildcat. A female of fierce and uncontrolled temper is often called a wildcat for obvious reasons and the expression is variously applied to reckless, uncontrolled, and unsound activities, ventures, etc. Thus, wildcat strike, an impromptu or unofficial strike; wildcat scheme, a rash and hazardous scheme, especially financial; wildcat banking, financially unsound; etc. The usage is of colloquial American origin and in the U.S.A. a prospect well for oil or natural gas is also called a wildcat.

The Wild Huntsman. A spectral hunter of mediæval legend, who with a pack of spectral dogs frequents certain forests and occasionally appears to mortals. It takes numerous forms in Germany, France, and England, and the wild huntsman is often identified with various heroes of national legend. In England, there is notably Herne the Hunter, one-time keeper in Windsor Forest. SHAKESPEARE says he "walks" in winter-time, about midnight, blasts trees and takes cattle. He wears horns and rattles a chain (Merry Wives of Windsor, IV, iv). Herne is also featured in Harrison Ainsworth's Windsor Castle. See HERNE OAK under OAK.

There is a Midnight Hunter of Dartmoor accompanied by the WISH HOUNDS. Cp. GABRIEL'S HOUNDS; MAUTHE DOG.

A wild-geese chase. An impracticable or useless pursuit of something; an absurd enterprise. A wild-geese is very difficult to catch. Cp. WILDCAT.

To sow one's wild oats. See OATS.

Wildfire. A very old English description of a composition of inflammable materials that catch fire quickly. It is now used figuratively in the phrase To catch like wildfire, to take on with the public instantaneously.

Wild men. A term often applied in politics to party intransigents or extremists. Women who took part in the campaign for women's rights, especially the militant SUFFRAGETTES, were sometimes called wild women.

Wild West. In 19th-century America, the moving western frontier, before orderly settlement was established under governmental control. It was an area of action and adventure, of desperadoes and cattle rustlers, noted for hard drinking, gambling, and violence and crime generally. Since romanticized in stories and films (called Westerns), it has its own folk heroes varying from the Lone Ranger to Deadwood Dick.

Wilderness. To go into the Wilderness. A figurative description of being deprived of political office through a change of government.

Wilfrid, St. (c. 634-709). A Northumbrian, educated at Lindisfarne, he subsequently visited Canterbury and ROME, learning the Roman liturgy. He became Abbot of Ripon and was largely responsible for the adoption of Roman usages in preference to CELTIC at the Synod of Whitby, 664. Soon afterwards he became BISHOP of York and finally of Hexham. His day is 12 October.

St. Wilfrid's Needle. A narrow passage in the crypt of Ripon cathedral, built by Odo, Archbishop of Canterbury, and said to have been used to test a women's chastity, as none but a virgin was able to squeeze through.

Wilgefortis. See UNCUMBER.

Wilhelmstrasse (vil' helm shtra se). A street in Berlin where the principal government offices, including the Foreign Office, were situated. Hence used figuratively for the German Foreign Office and its policies. Most of the street was destroyed by Allied bombing in World War II.

Will-o'-the-wisp. See IGNIS FATUUS.

William. One of the most popular of Christian names; Fr. Guillaume, Ger. Wilhelm, it means a protector; literally, a resolute helmet (Ger. Wille Helm).

St. William of Maleval. A Frenchman of the 12th century who died in Tuscany in 1157. He went as a pilgrim to the HOLY LAND and on his return adopted the religious life. He was noted for his piety and asceticism and for his gifts of prayer and prophecy. His day is 10 February.

St. William of Montevergine. A 12th-century hermit of Piedmont who built himself a cell on Montevergine and subsequently founded several monasteries. He died in 1142 and his day is 25 June.

St. William of Norwich (1132-1144). A tanner's apprentice of Norwich, alleged to have been crucified and murdered by Jews during the PASSOVER. It was said at the time that it was part of Jewish ritual to sacrifice a Christian every year. (See Drayton's Polyolbion, song xxiv.)

St. William of York (d. 1154). William Fitzherbert, chaplain to King Stephen and Archbishop of York (1142). He was canonized by Honorius III in 1227, largely on account of the miracles reported to have been performed at his tomb.

William of Cloudeslie. A noted outlaw and archer of the "north country". See CLYM OF THE CLOUGH.

William of Occam (c. 1300-c. 1349). The famous NOMINALIST philosopher, a native of Ockham, Surrey; also called Doctor Invincibilis. See OCCAM'S RAZOR.

William of Malmesbury (c. 1080-1143). A monk and librarian of Malmesbury Abbey and noted chronicler and historian. Among his numerous works his two most important are his De Gestis Regum Anglorum (Chronicle of the Kings of England, to 1125) and De Gestis Pontificum Anglorum (The History of the Prelates of England, to 1122).

William of Wykeham. See WYKEHAMIST.

William Rufus (the Red). King William II of England (1087-1100); so called from his ruddy complexion.

William the Conqueror. King William I of England (1066-1087), who as Duke of Normandy invaded and conquered the English in 1066. Also called William the Bastard, from his parentage.

William the Lyon. King of SCOTLAND (1143, 1165-1214). The reason for this appellation is not known, but it is popularly supposed that he was the first Scottish king to adopt the LION as his achievement.

William the Silent. See under SILENCE.

William Tell. See TELL.

Sweet William. An old English garden flower, Dianthus barbatus, a member of the pink family.

Some with sweet-williams red, some with bear's-foot, and the like low flowers, being withal sweet and sightly.

BACON: Essays (Of Gardens).

The William pear. Properly the William's pear, or Bon Chrétien, so called from the name of its introducer into England. For a like reason it is known in the U.S.A. as the Bartlett pear.

Willie-Wastle. This child's game is said to be named from William Wastle, governor of Hume Castle, Haddington. When Cromwell summoned him to surrender, he is said to have replied:

Here I, Willie Wastle,
Stand firm in my castle,
And all the dogs in the town
Shan't pull Willie Wastle down.

Willis's Rooms. See ALMACK'S.

Willow. Willow Pattern. This celebrated design for porcelain in blue and white was introduced by Thomas Turner of Caughley in 1780. It initiated the Chinese style of decoration but was not an exact copy of any Chinese original. It takes its name from the willow tree being a main feature of the design.

To handle, or wield the willow. To play CRICKET, cricket-bats being made of willow; hence the game is sometimes called King Willow (see the Harrow School song of that name).

To wear the willow. To go into mourning, especially for a sweetheart or bride, to bewail a lost lover.

The willow, especially the weeping willow, has anciently been associated with sorrow and ever since the BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY the latter is said to have drooped its branches. Psalm cxxxvii says:

By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion.

We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof.

and the refrain of the well-known song There is a Tavern in a Town has the phrase, "I'll hang my harp on the weeping willow tree."

In SHAKESPEARE'S Othello (IV, iii), Desdemona says:

My mother had a maid call'd Barbara;
She was in love, and he she lov'd prov'd mad
And did forsake her; she had a song of "willow";
An old thing 'twas, but it expressed her fortune,
And she died singing it.

And then comes the song:

The poor soul sat sighing by a sycamore tree,
Sing all a green willow;
Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee,
Sing willow, willow, willow;
The fresh streams ran by her, and murmur'd her moans;
Sing willow, willow, willow;
Her salt tears fell from her, and soften'd the stones;
Sing willow, willow, willow.

which reminds us of W. S. Gilbert's song The Suicide's Grave in the Mikado (Willow, tit-willow, tit-willow).

Will's Coffee House. A famous resort in the time of Dryden, who added much to its popularity. It stood on the corner of Bow Street and Russell Street, COVENT GARDEN. Formerly called the Red Cow, then the Rose, it took its name from Will Urwin who was its proprietor at the time of the RESTORATION. Known as the "Wits Coffee House", it was the headquarters of TORY men of letters but from 1714 was rivalled by BUTTON'S COFFEE HOUSE, the home of the WHIG literati. Pepys in his Diary (3 February 1664) notes meeting "Dryden, the poet I knew at Cambridge, and all the wits of the town". Confusion sometimes arises from the coexistence of five or more coffee houses of this name but this is undoubtedly the Will's associated with the Spectator. It closed some time before the middle years of the 18th century.

Willy-nilly

Willy-nilly. Nolens volens; willing or not. Will-he, nill-he, nill being n' (negative) will, just as Lat. nolens is n'-volens.

Willy-nilly. The Australian aboriginal term for the sudden whirlwinds which are common on the north-west coast. They can be seen approaching in a high circular column of leaves and dust from a great distance.

Wimbledon. A name synonymous with lawn tennis and tennis championships; a London suburb, and home of the All England Croquet Club. In the middle of the 1870s the Club, being in low water, added "Lawn Tennis" to its title, this being then a new game increasing in popularity. On the Club's courts, the first lawn tennis Championship in the world was held in 1877. The annual tournament run by the All England Club at Wimbledon ranks as the premier championship.

Win, To. Colloquially, to acquire, often by dubious means, to filch surreptitiously; a somewhat more questionable form of "scrounging", which does not always bear inspection.

Winchester. Identified by Malory and other old writers with the CAMELOT of ARTHURIAN ROMANCE.

Wind. According to classical mythology, the north, south, east, and west winds (BOREAS, Notus, EURUS, and ZEPHYRUS) were under the rule of ÆOLUS, who kept them confined in a cave on Mount Hæmus, Thrace. Other strong winds of a more destructive nature were the brood of TYPHÆUS.

The story says that Æolus gave ULYSSES a bag tied with a silver string, in which were all the hurtful and unfavourable winds, so that he might arrive home without being delayed by tempests. His crew, however, opened the bag in the belief that it contained treasure, the winds escaped, and a terrible storm at once arose, driving the vessel out of its course and back to the island of Æolus.

Aquilo is another Latin name for the north wind, as AUSTER is of the south and FAVONIUS of the west. Thrascias is a north-north-west wind and Libs a west-south-west wind, CAURUS or Corus a north-west wind (also personified as Argestes), Volturnus a south-east wind and Africus and Afer ventus a south-west wind.

Boreas and Cæcias, and Argestes loud,
And Thrascias rend the woods, and seas upturn;
Notus and Afer, black with thunderous clouds,
From Serralliona, Thwart of these, as fierce,
Forth rush . . . Eurus and Zephyr . . .
Sirocco and Libeccio.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, X, 699-706.

See also ETESIAN WIND; KAMSIN; PAMPERO; SOLANO; TRADE WINDS.

Soldier's wind. A nautical term for a fair wind for going and returning, i.e. a side wind.

A wind egg. An egg without a shell, or with a soft shell, or an unfertilized one; from the old superstition that the hen that lays it was impregnated, like the "Thracian mares", by the wind.

Wind of change. A new current of opinion, a markedly reformist or novel trend, etc. A phrase popularized by Harold Macmillan in his speech to the South African Parliament in 1960, with reference to the social and political ferment in the African continent.

In the wind's eye. See under EYE.

There's something in the wind. There are signs that something is about to happen; something is being prepared or concocted without one's knowledge.

Three sheets in the wind. See SHEET.

'Tis an ill wind that blows nobody any good. Someone profits by every loss; someone usually benefits by every misfortune.

To get one's second wind. To recover and go about one's pursuits with renewed vigour; as a runner, after initial breathlessness, warms up and regains more regular respiration known as his second wind.

To get the wind up. To become thoroughly alarmed, nervous, over anxious, and frightened.

To get wind of something. To get advance knowledge of something which has not yet happened. From an animal's ability to detect the approach of others by their scent on the wind.

To have the wind. See TO TAKE, etc., below.

To know which way the wind blows. To be aware of the true state of affairs.

To raise the wind. To obtain necessary money or funds.

To sail against, or before the wind,

To sail close to the wind, etc. See under SAIL.

To take, or have the wind. To get or keep the upper hand. To have the wind also means to have flutulence.

To take the wind out of one's sails.

To forestall him, "to steal his thunder" (see under THUNDER), frustrate him by utilizing his own material methods. Literally, it is to sail to windward of a ship and to rob its sails of the wind.

To whistle down the wind. See under WHISTLE.

Windbag. A long-sided, bombastic speaker, who uses inflated phrases and promises far more than he can perform.

Windfall. An unexpected piece of good luck, especially an unexpected legacy; something worth having that comes to one without any personal exertion—like fruit which has fallen from the tree and so does not have to be picked.

Windjammer. A sailing ship, or one of its crew. The term is a modern one, born since steam superseded sail.

Windy City. Chicago.

Windmill. To have windmills in your head. To be full of fancies; TO HAVE A BEE IN YOUR BONNET (see under BEE). SANCHO PANZA says:

Did I not tell you they were windmills, and that nobody could think otherwise, unless he had also windmills in his head?

CERVANTES: Don Quixote, Pt. I, ch. viii.

To tilt at windmills. To face imaginary adversaries, combat CHIMÆRAS. The allusion is to Don QUIXOTE (Pt. I, ch. viii) when the crazy knight imagines them to be GIANTS and gives battle.

Window. Window Dressing. Properly the display of goods in a shop window for the purpose of attracting customers. Figuratively, a specious display to present oneself or one's case, etc., in a favourable light.

Window Tax. A tax first imposed in 1691 and abolished in 1851, which accounts for the blocked-up window spaces in many old houses. It took the place of the Hearth Tax and was greatly increased in 1782 and 1797, and reduced in 1823. Houses with less than seven windows were exempt in 1782 and with less than eight in 1825.

All his goods in the window is much the same as WINDOW DRESSING, implying that a man is displaying all his superficial merits, etc., to view with nothing substantial to back them up.

Windsor. The House of Windsor. The style of the British Royal House adopted in 1917 in deference to anti-German sentiment to replace the then existing style of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha derived from Albert the PRINCE CONSORT. It was changed in 1960 to Mountbatten-Windsor for the descendants of Queen Elizabeth II, other than those entitled to the style of Royal Highness or of Prince and Princess.

After his abdication, 11 December 1936, King Edward VIII was created Duke of Windsor.

The Knights of Windsor. See under KNIGHT.

Windsor Herald. One of six heralds of the College of Arms, the others being Chester, Lancaster, Richmond, Somerset and York. See HERALDRY.

The Widow at Windsor. See under WIDOW.

Wine. A wine. At the old universities a once-common name for a wine-party.

Wine of Ape. In Chaucer's Prologue to the Manciple's Tale, the Manciple says, "I trow that ye have drunken wine of ape,"—i.e. wine to make you foolishly drunk; in French vin de singe. According to Rabbinical tradition SATAN came to Noah when he was planting vines, and slew a lamb, a lion, a pig, and an ape, to teach Noah that man, in turn, reveals the characteristics of all four according to the amount of liquor consumed.

To put new wine in old bottles. To impose new practices, principles, etc., on people or things too old or unfit to stand the strain. A reference to the un wisdom of putting new fermentations in old wine-skins which are bound to crack under the pressure.

Neither do men put new wine into old bottles; else the bottles break, and the wine runneth out, and the bottles perish: but they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preserved.

Matt. ix, 17.

Wing. In the R.A.F., a group of three squadrons.

The wings of Azrael. See under AZRAEL.

Don't try to fly without wings. Attempt nothing you are not fit for or until you are properly equipped to do so. A Latin saying; Plautus has (Pænulus, IV, ii, 47): Sine pennis volare haud facile est, It is by no means easy to fly without wings.

On the wing. Flying, in motion, or about to depart or take flight.

To clip one's wings. To take down one's conceit; to hamper one's freedom of action.

To lend wings. To spur one's speed.

To take one under your wing. To assume patronage of, to protect. The allusion is to a hen gathering her chicks under her wing.

Winifred, or Winefride, St.

To take wing. To fly away; to depart without warning.

Oh, God! it is a fearful thing
To see the human soul take wing.

BYRON: The Prisoner of Chillon, 176.

Winifred, or Winefride, St. Patron saint of North Wales and virgin martyr. According to the story she was the daughter of a Welsh chieftain and was instructed by St. Beuno. Prince Caradoc made violent advances to her and she fled to the church for safety. Caradoc pursued her and struck off her head, but it was replaced on her body by St. Beuno who breathed life into her again. She died a second time about 660. The miraculous healing spring of Holywell (Flintshire) gushed forth where her head had come to rest, and it became a regular resort of pilgrims.

Wink. Forty winks. A short nap, a doze.

Like winking. Very quickly, in a flash.

A nod is as good as a wink to a blind horse. See NOD.

To tip one the wink. To give him a hint privately; to give a signal or secret hint.

To wink at. To connive at, or to affect not to notice.

He knows not how to wink at human frailty
Or pardon weakness that he never felt.

ADDITION: Cato, 102.

Winkle, Rip Van. See RIP VAN WINKLE.

Winkle-pickers. Shoes with very elongated and pointed toes, affected by some in the early 1960s. The allusion is to the use of a pin for picking winkles out of their shells.

Winter. Winter's King and Queen.

Frederick V, Elector Palatine, and his wife Elizabeth, who reigned in Bohemia from November 1619 to November 1620. Elizabeth was the daughter of James I of England and her beauty inspired Sir Henry Wotton's lyric, Elizabeth of Bohemia.

Wipe. Old slang for a pocket-handkerchief.

To wipe one's nose. To affront him; to give him a blow on the nose. Similarly, to wipe a person's eye, to steal a march on him; to fetch one a wipe over the knuckles, to give him a good rap.

To wipe the floor with someone. To defeat him completely and ignominiously, literally or figuratively; to demolish utterly all his arguments, to floor him absolutely.

Wiped out. Destroyed, annihilated; quite obliterated.

Wire. Used as a verb, meaning to telegraph. "Wire me without delay", telegraph to me at once.

To pull the wires, wire-pulling. The same as TO PULL THE STRINGS (see under PULL).

Wireless. Applied to radio transmission or broadcasting, since the signals are not transmitted along wires.

Wisdom. The Wisdom of Solomon. A book of the Old Testament APOCRYPHA, probably written by an Alexandrian Jew between 100 B.C. and A.D. 50. It seems to be a reply to the Stoicism and Epicureanism reflected in the Book of Ecclesiastes, and is designed to reawaken loyalty and zeal for the old Jewish faith among apostates and waverers.

The wisdom of many and the wit of one. Lord John Russell (1792-1878) thus defined a proverb.

Wisdom tooth. The popular name for the third molar in each jaw. Wisdom teeth usually appear between the ages of 17 and 25, hence the name from association with years of discretion.

To cut your wisdom teeth. To reach the years of discretion.

Wise, The. The following have been thus surnamed:

Albert II, Duke of Austria, called The Lame and Wise (1293, 1330-1358).

Alfonso X of Leon, and IV of Castile, called The Wise and The Astronomer (1202, 1252-1284).

Charles V of France, called Le Sage (1337, 1364-1380).

Frederick II, Elector Palatine (1482, 1544-1556).

Frederick III, Elector of Saxony (1463, 1486-1525).

The Wise Men of Greece. Also known as The Seven Sages, all of whom flourished in the 6th century B.C.

Bias of Priene, one of whose sayings was: "Most men are bad."

Chilo of Sparta. "Consider the end."
See DE MORTUIS.

Cleobulus of Lindos. "The golden mean" or "Avoid extremes."

Periander of Corinth. "Nothing is impossible to industry."

Pittacus of Mitylene. "Seize time by the forelock."

Solon of Athens (c. 640-c. 558 B.C.). "Know thyself."

Thales of Miletus. "Who hateth suretyship is sure."

The Wisest Man of Greece. So the Delphic ORACLE pronounced SOCRATES to be, and Socrates modestly made answer: "'Tis because I alone of all the Greeks know that I know nothing."

Wise Men of Gotham. See GOTHAM.

Wise Men of the East. See MAGI.

The Wisest fool in Christendom. James I of England (1566, 1603-1625); so called by Henry IV of France.

Wisecre (Ger. Weissager, a soothsayer or prophet). This word, like SOPHIST, has quite lost its original meaning and is applied to dunces, wise only in their own conceit.

There is a story told that Ben Jonson, at the Devil, in FLEET STREET, said to a country gentleman who boasted of his estates, "What care we for your dirt and clods? Where you have an acre of land, I have ten acres of wit." The landed gentleman retorted by calling Ben "Good Mr. Wisecre." The story may pass for what it is worth.

Wisecrack. A colloquialism for a facetious or witty remark.

Wish. Wish Hounds, or Yell Hounds.

Spectral hounds that hunt the wildest parts of Dartmoor on moonless nights, urged on by the "Midnight Hunter of the Moor" on his huge horse which breathes fire and flame. The baying of these hounds, held by some to be headless, if heard, spells death to the hearer within the year. The Abbot's Way, an ancient track across the southern part of the moor, is said to be their favourite path. See WILD HUNTSMAN.

To wish one farther. To prefer his room to his company; to wish him gone.

The wish is father to the thought. We are always ready to believe what we most want to believe. When the Prince says to his dying father, "I never thought to hear you speak again," Henry IV replies:

Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought.
I stay too long for thee, I weary thee.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. II, IV, iv.

Wishful thinking. A popular psycho-analytical term describing the unconscious expression of one's desire in accordance with one's wishes; the thinking of a thing to be true because one wants it to be so.

Wishing bone. See MERRYTHOUGHT.

Wishing Cap. See FORTUNATUS.

Wit. Understanding, from O.E. witan, to know.

The five wits. See under FIVE.

At one's wits' end. Quite at a loss as to what to say or what to do next; "flummoxed".

To live on one's wits. To live by temporary shifts and expedients rather than by honest work.

To have one's wits about one. To be wide awake; observant of all that is going on and prepared to take advantage of any opportunity that offers.

To wit. Namely; that is to say.

Witch. Waking a witch. See WAKING.

Witchcraft. (O.E. wiccian, to practise sorcery). Belief in witchcraft, prevalent into the 18th century and later, was a legacy from pagan times and is found in the BIBLE (see WITCH OF ENDOR). Even St. Augustine believed in it and, in 1258, Pope Alexander IV instructed the INQUISITION to deal with witchcraft when allied to heresy and Innocent VIII's celebrated bull (Summis Desiderantes, 1484) encouraged the Inquisition to severe measures against witches. Countless people suffered death from this superstition, especially old women. Witchcraft was made a felony in ENGLAND in 1542, causing death by witchcraft became a capital offence in 1563, and in the same year witchcraft became subject to the death penalty in SCOTLAND.

Witch-hunting was a particular pastime of 17th-century PRESBYTERIANS until after the RESTORATION. The notorious "witchfinder" Matthew Hopkins travelled through the eastern counties in the 1640s to hunt out witches and is said to have hanged 60 in one year in Essex alone. In 1647 he was tested by his own methods; when cast into the river, he floated, and so was hanged as a WIZARD. Cp. MCCARTHYISM.

The last trial for witchcraft in England occurred in 1712, and in Scotland in 1722. English and Scottish laws against witchcraft were repealed in 1736.

Witch balls. The popular name for the lusted glass globes in use since the 16th century as domestic ornaments. They mirror in miniature the contents of a room, and the name is probably a fanciful corruption of watch ball. The inside of the ball was usually coated with a preparation largely made up of mercury.

The Witch of Endor. The woman who had "a familiar spirit" through whom Saul sought communication with the dead Samuel. She brought Samuel up "out of the earth" having first secured a promise from Saul that he would take no action against her as a witch (see I Sam. xxviii).

The Witch of Wookey. See WOOKEY HOLE.

Witches' Sabbath. A midnight meeting of witches, demons, etc., supposed to have been held annually. Mediæval devotees of the witchcraft cult held sabbaths at CANDLEMAS, ROODMAS, LAMMAS, and ALL HALLOWS' EVE, and their celebrations lasted until dawn. The rites were led by the "Coven", a group of 12 members and one DEVIL.

Witch-hunting. In political usage it denotes the searching out and exposure of opponents alleged to be disloyal to the State, often amounting to persecution.

Witchen. See ROWAN.

Witenagemot (wit' e na ge' mōt). The Anglo-Saxon national assembly of higher clerics and laymen (ealdormen, thegns, etc.) which gave advice and consent on legislation, taxation, important judicial matters, etc., and which formally elected a new king. Witan is O.E. for wise men (connected with wit, knowledge); gemote is ge- together; moot, meet; hence "an assembly of wise men".

Withershins. An old English word, still in use in SCOTLAND and in north-country dialects, denoting a movement in a contrary direction to that of the SUN—as of a clock whose hands are going backwards (Icel. vithr, against; sinni, movement). Hence, contrariwise, topsy-turvy.

The opposite of withershins is deiseal, a Gaelic word meaning "right-handwise".

Wivern (wī' vern). A fabulous creature of HERALDRY consisting of a winged DRAGON ending in a barbed, serpent's tail.

Wizard. A magician, one adept in the black arts; the male counterpart of a WITCH. It is derived from wise.

Wizard is popularly used to express admiration, etc., as, a wizard performance, a wonderful performance; absolutely wizard, absolutely splendid.

The Wizard of Oz. The central figure in the very popular children's book, The Wonderful Wizard of Oz (1900), by Lyman Frank Baum (1856-1919), a well-known American journalist. The musical comedy of the same name (1901) was a great success, which was carried on to the film of some years later.

The Wizard of the North. A nickname given to Sir Walter Scott.

Wobblies, The. The Industrial Workers of the World or I.W.W. were so nicknamed. This American revolutionary labour organization was formed in 1905 and reached its peak before World War I, but largely petered out after the war. They drew their main support from migratory farmers, textile workers, and dockers. Noted for their songs, the best-known are "Pie in the Sky" and "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum." They were also known as "The Bummery".

Wobbly is apparently derived from Wov (workers of the world).

Woden. See ODIN; WEDNESDAY.

Woden's dyke. See WANSDYKE.

Woe. Woe worth the day! Cursed be the day! Evil betide it. Worth here is O.E. weorthan, to become.

Thus saith the Lord God: Howl ye, Woe worth the day!—Ezek. xxx, 2.

Woebegone. Overwhelmed by woe, especially applied to the appearance—A woebegone countenance. It does not mean "woe, go away, be gone"; begone here is from the O.E. verb began, to beset, surround. It thus means "beset with woe."

Wog. A disrespectful name applied to an Arab, Egyptian, etc. Perhaps a contraction of golliwog. In naval parlance held to stand for wily oriental gentleman.

Wolf. WILLIAM OF MALMESBURY (Chronicles of the Kings of England, Bk. II, ch. viii) says that the tribute of 300 wolves payable yearly by the king of WALES to Edgar the Peaceful (959-75) ceased after the third year because "he could find no more"; but they are recorded in ENGLAND as late as the 15th century and in IRELAND and SCOTLAND they seem to have lingered on until the 18th century.

Dryden gave the name to the Presbytery in The Hind and the Panther (l. 152).

Unkennelled range in the Polonian plains
A fiercer foe the insatiate Wolf remains.

In music, a discordant sound (due to the system of tuning or temperament), in certain keyboard instruments, was called a wolf; also the jarring note sometimes heard from bowed instruments. Said by Ferne (Blazon of Genurie, 1586), in the case of a harp, to be caused by the use of a string made from the entrails of a wolf. The squeak made in reed instruments by unskilled players is termed a "goose".

The She-wolf of France. Isabella of France (1292-1358), daughter of Philip the Fair and adulterous wife of Edward II. She executed the Despensers and procured her husband's death (1327) at Berkeley Castle. His murderers are said to have thrust a hot iron into his bowels.

She-wolf of France, with unrelenting fangs
That tear't the bowels of thy mangled Mate.
GRAY: The Bard, II, i.

Wolf Cub. The long-established and original name for a member of the junior branch of the SCOUT Movement, now called Cub Scouts (age range 8-11 years). The conception owes much to Kipling's Jungle Books.

Wolf month, or Wolf-monath. See JANUARY.

A wolf pack. A term applied in World War II to German submarines in a group.

Wolf whistle. An oafish call made by a male at the sight of a female. It implies admiration.

Between dog and wolf. Neither daylight nor dark, the BLIND MAN'S HOLIDAY. Generally applied to the evening dusk. In Latin, Inter canem et lupum; in French, Entre chien et loup.

Dark as a wolf's mouth. Pitch dark.

He has seen a wolf. Something or other has frightened him; formerly said of a person who had lost his voice. Our forefathers believed that if a man saw a wolf before the wolf saw him, he became dumb, at least for a time.

To see a wolf was also a good sign, inasmuch as the wolf was dedicated to ODIN, the giver of victory. See FENRIR.

He put his head into the wolf's mouth. He exposed himself to needless danger. The allusion is to ÆSOP's fable of the crane that put its head into a wolf's (or fox's) mouth in order to extract a bone.

Holding a wolf by the ears. An old Greek saying; AUGUSTUS used it of his situation at ROME, meaning it was equally dangerous to keep hold or to let go.

He that goes to law (as the proverb is) holds a wolf by the ears.

BURTON:

Anatomy of Melancholy (Democritus to the Reader).

To cry "Wolf!" To give a false alarm. The allusion is to the fable of the shepherd lad who so often called "Wolf!" merely to make fun of the neighbours, that when at last the wolf came no one would believe him. This fable appears in almost every nation the world over.

To keep the wolf from the door. To ward off starvation. We say of a ravenous person, "He has a wolf in his stomach", and one who eats voraciously is said to wolf his food. French manger comme un loup is to eat voraciously.

To throw to the wolves. To sacrifice someone (a companion, colleague, subordinate), usually to divert criticism or opposition from the "thrower"; to make someone the SCAPEGOAT. As a traveller in a sleigh, pursued by a pack of wolves, might throw food or other objects in the hope of gaining his escape.

Wake not a sleeping wolf! (SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. II, I, ii). A variant of "Let sleeping dogs lie!"—Let well alone.

A wolf in sheep's clothing. An enemy posing as a friend. The phrase is taken from the well-known fable of ÆSOP.

Wolfe's Own. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Woman. Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned. A popular saying derived from Congreve's The Mourning Bride (1697), III, viii.

Heav'n has no rage, like love to hatred turn'd,
Nor Hell a fury, like a woman scorn'd.

Colley Cibber's Love's Last Shaft (1696) has, "we shall find no fiend in hell can match the fury of a disappointed woman,—scorned, slighted, dismissed without a parting pang."

Womble cropped. An expression current in America about 1800, denoting a feeling of uneasiness about anything. It is found as wamblecropt in Richard Huloet's Abecedarium (1552).

Wonder. The Seven Wonders of the World. In the ancient world:

The PYRAMIDS of Egypt.

The HANGING GARDENS OF BABYLON.

The Tomb of Mausolus (MAUSOLEUM).

The Temple of DIANA at Ephesus.

The COLOSSUS of Rhodes.

The Statue of JUPITER by Phidias.

The PHAROS of Alexandria.

A later list gives:

The Coliseum of Rome (see COLOSSEUM).

The Catacombs of Alexandria.

The Great Wall of China.

STONEHENGE.

The LEANING TOWER of Pisa.

The Porcelain Tower of Nanking.

The Mosque of San Sophia at Constantinople (Istanbul).

The Wonder of the World. The title given to Otto III, Holy Roman EMPEROR (980, 983-1002), on account of his brilliant intellectual endowments. The title was also applied to Frederick II (see STUPOR MUNDI).

The Wonderful Doctor. Roger Bacon, also called the ADMIRABLE DOCTOR.

The Wonderful, or Wondermaking Parliament. Also called the MERCILESS PARLIAMENT (1388), when Richard II's favourites were condemned for treason.

Wonder-worker. See THAUMATURGUS.

Wonky. This slang word, meaning unsteady, unsound, unstable, comes from O.E. wancol of the same meaning.

Wood. Don't cry, or halloo till you are out of the wood. Do not rejoice for having escaped danger till the danger has passed away. "Don't count your CHICKENS before they are hatched"; "there's many a slip 'twixt the CUP and the lip."

Drawn from the wood. Said of beer and wines served directly from the cask. Beer barrels have now largely been supplanted by metal containers and their contents dispensed through pressurised beer-engines, a matter of regret to connoisseurs of good ALE.

One can't see the wood for the trees. It is difficult to pick out the essentials from the surrounding mass of detail; the main issues are not readily apparent.

Wooden. Used of one who is awkward or ungainly; or of a spiritless, emotionless person.

The Wooden Horse. See under HORSE.

The Wooden Horse of Troy. See under HORSE.

The Wooden Mare. An instrument used for military punishments, also called the WOODEN HORSE (see under HORSE).

Wooden Nickels. Like WOODEN NUTMEGS, these were said to have been made in the U.S.A. by those unwilling to earn an honest living. As the nickel piece of 1857 was only worth a cent it was an unrewarding enterprise, but it gave rise to the phrase Don't take any wooden nickels as a friendly warning to the unsuspecting or easily duped.

Wooden nutmegs. In the early 19th century Connecticut, the Nutmeg State, was referred to derisively as the land of wooden nutmegs because certain dishonest merchants were said to have exported nutmegs made of wood.

Wooden Walls. The wooden warships of the Royal Navy were so called before the days of ironclads, and it is said that some 3,500 oak-trees were used in the construction of the big THREE-DECKERS. The Victory now at Portsmouth is perhaps the most famous of these vessels. The screw wood ship H.M.S. Duncan was launched in 1869 and the well-known training ship Mercury, associated with C. B. Fry, was built as late as 1878.

When the Greeks consulted the Delphic ORACLE to ask how they were to defend themselves against XERXES, who had invaded their country, the evasive answer was to this effect:

Pallas hath urged, and Zeus, the sire of all,
Hath safety promised in a wooden wall;
Seed-time and harvest, weeping sires shall tell
How thousands fought at Salamis and fell.

The wooden wedge. Last in the classical TRIPOS. When, in 1824 the classical Tripos was instituted at Cambridge, it was debated by what name to call the last on the list. It so happened that the last on the list was Wedgwood, and the name was adopted in this slightly modified form.

Woodbine. A common name for the wild honeysuckle, Lonicera periclymenum; also applied in other plants that bind or wind themselves around trees.

Woodbine Willie. The Rev. G. A. Studdert-Kennedy (1883-1929) was so called from the popular brand of small cigarettes named Woodbines, which he gave to the men in the trenches in the Great War of 1914-18 when serving as Chaplain to the Forces (1916-19). He was perhaps the most popular and well-known padre of the war.

Woodcock. Old slang for a simpleton; from the ease with which he is ensnared. POLONIUS tells his daughter that protestations of love are "springs to catch woodcocks" (SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, iii).

Wood's Halfpence. The copper coinage which William Wood began to introduce into IRELAND (1723) under a patent purchased from the Duchess of Kendal, George I's mistress, to whom it had been granted. The outcry against Wood's Halfpence, supported by Swift in his DRAPIER'S LETTERS, led to the withdrawal of the patent in 1725. The Irish PARLIAMENT and government were not informed of the scheme in advance and it was feared that the flood of copper coins would drive out the existing small stocks of GOLD and SILVER.

Woodser. See JIMMY WOODSER.

Wookey Hole. A famous cavern near Wells in Somerset, which has given rise to numerous legends. Wicked as the Witch of Wookey is an old local simile. Her repulsiveness led to her directing her spells against "the youth of either sex" as well as blasting every plant and blistering every flock. She was turned into a stone by a "lerner wight" from "Glaston" but left her course behind, since the girls of Wookey found "that men are wondrous scant".

Here's beauty, wit and sense combin'd,
With all that's good and virtuous join'd
Yet hardly one gallant.
PERCY: Reliques (The Witch of Wookey).

Wool. All wool and a yard wide. Genuine, of real quality; no sham or substitute.

Dyed in the wool. Cloth which is wool-dyed, not piece-dyed, and true throughout. Hence the phrase is used to mean through and through, genuine, out and out, as "a dyed-in-the-wool teetotaler", a completely convinced and genuine teatotaler. Cp. A KNAVE IN THE GRAIN under GRAIN.

Great cry and little wool. See under CRY.

No wool is so white that a dyer cannot blacken it. No one is so free from faults that slander can find nothing so say against him; no book is so perfect as to be free from adverse criticism.

To be wool-gathering. To let one's mind wander from the matter in hand; to be absent-minded. As children sent to gather wool from hedges wander hither and thither, apparently aimlessly.

To go for wool and come home shorn. To have the tables turned on one.

To pull the wool over one's eyes. To delude or deceive; from the idea of obscuring one's vision.

Burial in Woollen. Under Acts of 1666 and 1678 corpses were not to be buried "in any suit, sheet, or shroud" other than of wool nor was the coffin to be lined with any other material. It was intended for the encouragement of English woollen manufactures and was eventually repealed in 1814, after it had largely fallen into abeyance; it had long been ignored by those able and willing to pay the fines for its non-observance:

"Odious! in woollen! 'twould a saint provoke!"
(Were the last words that poor Narcissa spoke).
"No! let a charming chintz and Brussels lace
Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face.
One would not, sure, be frightful when one's dead;
And—Betty—give this cheek a little red."
POPE: Moral Essays, Ep. I, iii (1733).

The Woolsack. The official seat of the Lord CHANCELLOR as SPEAKER of the HOUSE OF LORDS. It is a large red square bag of wool, rather like an enlarged hassock. There were originally four, probably introduced in the reign of Edward III as symbols of England's staple trade, on which sat the Judges, the Barons of the EXCHEQUER, the SERJEANTS-AT-LAW, and the Masters in CHANCERY. The woolsacks were technically outside the precincts of the House, as these officials had no voice in the proceedings; thus when the Lord Chancellor wishes to speak as a peer he goes to his place in the House. The term woolsack is often applied to the office of Lord Chancellor.

Woomera. The name of the rocket testing range in South Australia, appropriately an aborigine word for a spear-throwing stick.

Wop. In the original American slang usage it meant an uncouth or aggressive person and was later used as a derogatory term for Italians and those of similar complexion.

Word. The Word. The SCRIPTURES; Christ as the Logos.

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.
John i, 1.

By word of mouth. Orally. As, "the message was passed by word of mouth", i.e. orally, not in writing.

I take you at your word. I accept what you say and rely on what you tell me.

Make no words about it. Don't mention it; make no fuss about it.

A man of his word. One whose word may be depended on; trustworthy; "he is as good as his word", and "his word is as good as his bond".

Many words will not fill a bushel. Mere promises will not help the needy. If we say to a beggar, "Be thou filled," is he filled?

The object of words is to conceal thoughts. See SPEECH WAS GIVEN TO MAN TO CONCEAL HIS THOUGHTS.

Put in a good word for me, please! Do your best to get me some privilege or favour; put my claims, my deeds, etc., in the best light possible.

Soft words butter no parsnips. See BUTTER.

To eat one's words. See under EAT.

To give, or pass one's word. To give a definite undertaking, make a binding promise.

To have words with one. To quarrel; to have an angry discussion. To have a word with one is to have a brief conversation with him.

To take the words out of one's mouth. When someone else says what one is about to say oneself.

Upon my word. Assuredly; by my troth. As an exclamation it implies outraged surprise or irritation.

Upon my word and, or of honour. A strong affirmation of the speaker as to the truth of what he has asserted.

A word to the wise! Said when giving advice as a hint that it would be well for the recipient to follow it. The Latin Verbum satis sapienti, a word is enough to the wise.

The words stuck in his throat. He was unable to utter them owing to nervousness or great reluctance.

Work. Seven Works of Mercy. See MERCY.

To give someone the works. To subject a person to rigorous or extreme treatment, either verbally or physically, even to the point of murder. A slang phrase of American origin.

To have one's work cut out. To have difficulty in completing or carrying out a task owing to circumstances.

To shoot the works. To stake one's all in a game of chance; to make an all-out effort. A slang phrase from the U.S.A.

To work double tides. See under DOUBLE.

To work to rule. In trade-union parlance, to fulfil all the regulations relating to one's work literally and pedantically, in order to bring about delays in working, and frustration generally; another form of GO-SLOW tactics.

World. All the world and his wife. Everyone without exception.

A man, or woman of the world. One who is acquainted with the "ways of the world", a socially experienced, practical person. A worldly man, or woman, denotes one who only cares for the material things of this world.

In SHAKESPEARE'S time a woman of the world signified a married woman.

Touchstone: To-morrow will we be married.
Audrey: I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire to be a woman of the world.

As You Like It, V, iii.

Out of this world. Something quite exceptional, quite out of the ordinary, indescribably luxurious, beautiful, etc. A 20th-century vogue phrase.

To be on top of the world. See under TOP.

To go to the world. To be married. See A MAN OF THE WORLD, above.

The world, the flesh, and the devil. "The world" is the material things of this world as opposed to the things of the spirit; "the flesh", sensual pleasures; "the DEVIL", evil of every kind.

From all the deceits of the world, the flesh, and the devil, Good Lord, deliver us.

The Litany (Book of Common Prayer).

The World Turned Upside Down. An inn-sign illustrating an unnatural state of affairs, and also an allusion to the antipodes. It often took the form of a man walking at the South Pole. It was also the name of the tune played by the military band when Cornwallis surrendered to the Americans at Yorktown in 1781.

World Wars. The name now usually given to the two great wars, of 1914-1918 (The Great War) and 1939-1945, in which most nations of the world participated, and which were global in scope, especially the second.

Worm. The word was formerly used of DRAGONS and great SERPENTS, especially those of Teutonic and old Norse legend; it is now figuratively applied to miserable, grovelling creatures; also to the ligament under a dog's tongue.

Even a worm will turn. The most abject of creatures will turn upon its tormentors if driven to extremity.

Idle worms. It was once supposed that little worms were bred in the fingers of idle servants. To this SHAKESPEARE alludes:

A round little worm
Pricked from the lazy finger of a maid,
Romeo and Juliet, I, iv.

To be food for worms. To be dead.

Your worm is your only emperor for diet, we fat all creatures else, to fat us; and we fat ourselves for maggots.—SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, IV, iii.

To have a worm in one's tongue. To be cantankerous; to snarl and bite like a mad dog.

There is one easy artifice
That seldom has been known to miss—
To snarl at all things right or wrong,
Like a mad dog that has a worm in's tongue.
BUTLER: Upon Modern Critics, IV.

To satisfy the worm. To appease one's hunger.

To worm oneself into another's favour. To insinuate oneself into the good graces of another.

To worm out information. To extract it piecemeal or indirectly.

Wormwood. The common name for the aromatic herbs of the genus Artemisia, especially A. absinthium, from which absinthe and vermouth are concocted. Culpeper recommends it as a specific against worms. It is said to have been so called because this plant, according to legend, sprang up in the track of the serpent as it writhed along the ground when driven out of PARADISE. The word is also used figuratively to denote bitterness or its cause.

Worship. Literally "worth-ship", honour, dignity, reverence; in its highest and now usual sense, the respect and reverence man pays to God.

At one time the word carried a sense of personal respect, as in, "Thou shalt have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee" (Luke xiv, 10), and in the marriage service (Book of Common Prayer), the man says to the woman: "With my body I thee worship, and with all my worldly goods I thee endow."

Magistrates and MAYORS are addressed as Your worship and referred to as the Worshipful Mayor of . . .

Worst. If the worst comes to the worst. Even if the very worst occurs.

To get the worst of it. To be beaten, defeated; to come off second best.

Worsted (wus' ted). This variety of woollen thread formed of regular parallel strands takes its name from Worsted (now Worstead) near Norwich, once an important woollen centre. The name occurs as early as the 13th century.

Worthies, The Nine. Nine heroes—three from the BIBLE, three from the classics, and three from romance; or three pagans, three Jews, and three Christians, who were bracketed together by writers like the SEVEN WONDERS OF THE WORLD (see under WORLD). They are usually given as HECTOR, ALEXANDER, and Julius CÆSAR; Joshua, David, and Judas MACCABÆUS; ARTHUR, CHARLEMAGNE, and Godfrey of Bouillon. SHAKESPEARE's Pageant of the Nine Worthies in Love's Labour's Lost (V, ii) has an incomplete list of five which includes Pompey and Hercules, who are not on the traditional list.

Nine worthies were they called, of different rites,
Three Jews, three pagans, and three Christian Knights.

DRYDEN: The Flower and the Leaf, 535.

The Nine Worthies of London. A kind of chronicle-history in mixed verse and prose of nine prominent citizens of LONDON, published in 1592 by Richard Johnson, author of The SEVEN CHAMPIONS of Christendom. His worthies are:

Sir William Walworth, who stabbed Wat Tyler the rebel, and was twice Lord Mayor of London (1374, 1381).

Sir Henry Pritchard, who (in 1356) feasted Edward III (with 5,000 followers), Edward the BLACK PRINCE, John, King of Austria, the King of Cyprus, and David, King of SCOTLAND.

Sir William Sevenoake, who fought with the DAUPHIN of France and was Lord Mayor in 1418 and who endowed a grammar school.

Sir Thomas White, a merchant tailor, who was Lord Mayor in 1553 and founder of St. John's College, Oxford; also a founder of Merchant Taylor's School.

Sir John Bonham, entrusted with a valuable cargo for the Danish market, and made commander of an army raised to stop the progress of the great Solymán.

Christopher Croker, famous at the siege of Bordeaux, and companion of the Black Prince when he helped Don Pedro to the throne of Castile.

Sir John Hawkwood, famous soldier and commander of the WHITE COMPANY in Italy. He died in 1394 and is known in Italian history as Giovanni Acuto Cavaliere.

Sir Hugh Calveley (d. 1393), soldier and commander of FREE COMPANIES. He fought under the Black Prince against the French and became governor of the Channel Islands and famous for ridding Poland of a monstrous bear.

Sir Henry Maleverer, generally called Henry of Cornhill, who lived in the reign of Henry IV. He was a crusader, and became the guardian of "Jacob's well".

The above are essentially noted for military rather than civic achievement.

Wound. Bind the wound, and grease the weapon. A Rosicrucian maxim. See WEAPON SALVE.

Wove. Applied to papers made on an ordinary dandy roll or mould in which the wires are woven. Used in contradistinction to LAID.

Wraf. A member of the Women's Royal Air Force, until 1949, called the W.A.A.F.

Wraith (rāth). The phantom or spectral appearance of one still living, usually taken as a warning that this person's death is imminent. It appears to persons at a distance and forewarns them of the event. In general, a spectre, a ghost.

Wrangler. The Cambridge term for one who has obtained a place in the highest class of the mathematical TRIPOS. The first man was (until 1909) called the Senior Wrangler. A wrangler is a disputant and the name arises from the former public disputations in which candidates were required to take part. See ACT OF OPPOSITION; OPTIME.

"Senior Wrangler, indeed; that's at the other shop."

"What is the other shop, my dear child?" said the lady.

"Senior Wrangler's at Cambridge, not Oxford," said the scholar, with a knowing air.

THACKERAY: Vanity Fair, XXXIV.

In the western U.S.A. a wrangler is the herder of the saddle horses.

Wrath money. See WROTH.

Wren. A member of the Women's Royal Naval Service. Cf. WAAC; W.A.C., WAAF, etc.

Wrenning Day. St. Stephen's Day (26 December) used to be so called, because it was a local custom among villagers to stone a wren to death on that day in commemoration of the stoning of St. STEPHEN.

Wright. Do you know Dr. Wright of Norwich? A reproof given to a person who stops the decanter at dinner. Dr. Wright of Norwich was said to have been a great diner-out and an excellent talker. When a person stops the bottle and is asked this question, it implies that Dr. Wright had this privilege because of his entertaining conversation, but you are no Dr. Wright, except in stopping the circulation of the wine.

Write. O.E. writan, connected with Icel. rita, to tear, cut, scratch out, etc.

To write down, to commit to writing, also to criticize unfavourably, to depreciate. Contrariwise to write up is to puff, to bring into public notice or estimation by favourable criticisms or accounts.

To write off a debt. To cancel it.

To write oneself out. To exhaust one's powers of literary production.

Writer. In SCOTLAND, a legal practitioner in a small town. In the Royal Navy a writer is a rating engaged for clerical duties.

Writer to the Signet. A member of an anciently-established society of solicitors in Scotland who still have the sole right of preparing crown writs.

The writing on the wall. Said of something foreshadowing trouble or disaster. The reference is to Dan. v., 5-31, when a mysterious hand appeared writing on the wall while Belshazzar was feasting. Daniel interpreted the words to him as portending his downfall and that of his kingdom. Belshazzar was slain that night.

Wrong. The king can do no wrong. The legal and constitutional principle that the Crown acts on the advice and consent of ministers and therefore the Sovereign cannot be held responsible. It is another way of expressing the principle of ministerial responsibility. Nor, according to Dicey (Law of the Constitution), "can the king be made personally responsible at law for any act done by him."

Wrong 'un. A swindler, a cheat, a palpably dishonest person; also applied to false coin and other fakes; also a horse which has run in any flat-race meeting not recognized by the JOCKEY CLUB, and so is boycotted by the Club.

In CRICKET, a wrong 'un is a ball which breaks the opposite way from what the batsman is led to expect from his observation of the bowler's grip of the ball and manner of delivery.

Wroth Money, or Wroth Silver. Money paid to the lord in lieu of castleward, i.e. a feudal obligation in return for protection, castle ward or guard being KNIGHT SERVICE for defending the lord's castle. It was a local name for what is also called warth money or ward silver. Such a feudal rent was collected by the Duke of Buccleuch as lord of the HUNDRED of Knightlow in Warwickshire.

Wulfstan, or Wulstan. There are two English saints of this name. (1) Wulfstan, Archbishop of York (d. 1023), and formerly Bishop of Worcester, best known for his homily in Old English prose Lupi Sermo ad Anglos, etc., portraying the miseries of the year 1014 during the Danish onslaught. (2) Wulfstan, Bishop of Worcester (d. 1095), noted, in association with Lanfranc, for suppression of the slave trade between ENGLAND and IRELAND.

Wuyck's Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Wyclif's Bible. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

Wycliffite (wik' lif it). A LOLLARD, a follower of Wyclif (c. 1320-1384), who was called "The Morning Star of the REFORMATION". He condemned TRANSUBSTANTIATION, and monasticism, and held that only the righteous have the right to dominion and property. He attacked the Papacy and the BISHOPS, and advocated the use of the BIBLE in English.

Wykehamist (wik' am ist). A member of Winchester College, past or present, which was founded in 1378 by William of Wykeham (1324-1404), Bishop of Winchester and CHANCELLOR of England. He also founded New College, Oxford, and was born at Wykeham in Hampshire.

Wyvern. See WIVERN.

X

X. The twenty-fourth letter of the alphabet, representing the twenty-second letter of the Greek alphabet (chi), and denoting in Roman numeration 10, or, on its side (X) 1,000 and with a dash over it (\bar{X}) 10,000.

In algebra and mathematics generally x denotes an unknown quantity. The reason for this is that algebra came into use in Europe from Arabia and that the Arab, shei, a thing, a something, used to designate the mathematically "unknown" was transcribed as xei. (Cp. COSS.)

X as an abbreviation stands for Christ as in Xmas.

X on beer casks formerly indicated beer which had paid the old 10s. duty, and hence it came to mean beer of a given quality. Two or three crosses are mere trade-marks intended to convey an impression of its extra strength.

Xanthian Marbles, The (zân' thi ân). A collection of ancient sculptures and friezes discovered by Sir Charles Fellows in 1838 at Xanthus, a Greek city of Lycia, Asia Minor, and now in the BRITISH MUSEUM.

Xanthippe, or Xantippe (zǎn tip' i). Wife of the philosopher SOCRATES. Her bad temper shown towards her husband has rendered her name proverbial for a conjugal scold.

Be she as foul as was Florentius' love,
As old as Sibyl, and as curst and shrewd
As Socrates' Xanthippe, or a worse,
Sbe moves me not.

SHAKESPEARE: Taming of the Shrew, I, ii.

Xanthus, or Xanthos (zǎn' thūs) (Gr., reddish-yellow). ACHILLES' wonderful HORSE, brother of Balios, Achilles' other horse, and offspring of ZEPHYRUS and the harpy, Podarge. Being chid by his master for leaving PATROCLUS on the field of battle, Xanthus turned his head reproachfully, and told Achilles that he also would soon be numbered with the dead, not from any fault of his horse, but by the decree of inexorable destiny (ILIAD, XIX).

Xanthus is also the ancient name of the Scamander, and of a city on its banks. Ælian and Pliny say that HOMER called the Scamander "Xanthos", or the "Gold-red river", because it coloured with such a tinge the fleeces of sheep washed in its waters. Others maintain that it was so called because a Greek hero of this name defeated a body of TROJANS on its banks, and pushed half of them into the stream.

Xaverian Brothers, The (zǎv ēr i ān). A Roman Catholic congregation founded at Bruges in 1839, concerned chiefly with the education of youth. It was founded by Theodore James Ryken who took the name Brother Francis Xavier after St. Francis Xavier (1506-1552), one of the earliest of the JESUITS, celebrated as the "Apostle of the Indies" and "the Apostle of Japan".

Xenocratic (zen ō krāt' ik). Pertaining to the doctrine of Xenocrates (396-314 B.C.), a disciple of PLATO, noted for his continence and contempt of wealth. He combined Pythagoreanism with Platonism. Even the courtesan LAIS failed to tempt him from the path of virtue.

Warmed by such youthful beauty, the severe
Xenocrates would not have more been chaste.

ARIOSTO: Orlando Furioso, xi, 3.

Xerxes (zerks' ēz). A Greek way of writing the Persian Ksathra or Kshatra. Xerxes I, the great Xerxes, is identical with the Ahasuerus of the BIBLE.

When Xerxes invaded Greece he constructed a pontoon bridge across the Dardanelles, which was swept away by the force of the waves; this so enraged the Persian despot that he "inflicted 300 lashes on the rebellious sea, and cast chains of iron across it". This story is a Greek myth, founded on the peculiar construction of Xerxes' second bridge, which consisted of 300 boats, lashed by iron chains to two ships serving as supporters.

Another story told of him is that when he reviewed his enormous army before starting for Greece, he wept at the thought of slaughter about to take place. "Of all this multitude, who shall say how many will return?"

Ximena (zim ē' nā). The CID's bride.

Xiphias (zif' i ás) (Gr. xiphios, a sword). The name used in mediæval times for a sword-shaped comet; also for the southern constellation now called Dorado; and a poetical name given to the swordfish (genus Xiphias).

Strong is the horse upon his speed;
Strong in pursuit the rapid glede,
Which makes at once his game;
Strong the tall ostrich on the ground;
Strong through the turbulent profound
Shoots Xiphias to his aim.

CHRIS. SMART: Song to David, LXXV.

Xylomancy (zi lō mǎn' si). A form of DIVINATION using twigs, rods, etc. (Gr. xylon, wood; manteia, prophecy).

X.Y.Z. Affair. In 1797 the American President, John Adams, sent his commissioners, Pinckney, Marshall, and Gerry to France to negotiate on certain maritime frictions. From Paris they reported that three French agents had intercepted them and demanded a large sum of money and an American loan before the DIRECTORY would receive them. The Americans refused and the whole correspondence with the three French agents, designated X, Y, and Z, was published at Washington. This led to undeclared maritime hostility with France (1798-1800).

Y

Y. The twenty-fifth letter of the alphabet, derived from the Greek γ (upsilon), added by the Greeks to the Phœnician alphabet. See SAMIAN LETTER. It is used to represent both consonantal and vowel sounds.

As a mediæval numeral Y represents 150 and Ÿ, 150,000.

In algebra it denotes the second unknown quantity (cp. x). See also YE.

Y-Gun. A Y-shaped gun mounted in ships for firing a pair of depth-charges.

Yahoo (ya' hoo). Swift's name, in Gulliver's Travels, for brutes with human forms and vicious propensities. They are subject to the HOUYNHNMS, the horses with human reason. Hence applied to coarse, brutish or degraded persons.

Yahweh. See JEHOVAH.

Yama. In Hindu mythology, the first of the dead, born from the SUN, judge of men and king of the dead. His kingdom is the PARADISE for the worthy where friends and relations are reunited. His twin sister is called Yami and he is usually represented as four-armed and riding a buffalo.

Yank, Yankee (yǎng' ki). A citizen of the U.S.A., properly a New Englander. The derivation is probably from Dut. Janke, a diminutive of John, perhaps used originally of the Dutch of New Amsterdam. The word was popularized by the song YANKEE DOODLE. America is often referred to as Yankee-land.

Yankee Doodle. A popular mid-18th-century song perhaps first introduced by British troops during the Anglo-French war (1755-63). It is now a quasi-national air of the United States.

There are several suggested origins of the tune which was first printed in England in 1778 and in America in 1794, but none is conclusive.

Yarborough. A hand at bridge in which there is no card higher than a nine. So called because the second Lord Yarborough (1809-1862) used to lay 1,000 to 1 against such an occurrence in any named hand. The actual mathematical odds are 1,827 to 1 against. Cp. TIGER.

Yardland. See VIRGATE.

Yarra-yabbies. Nickname for the inhabitants of Victoria, Australia, who are also known as the Cabbage-patchers. The Yarra-Yarra flows through Melbourne into Port Phillip Bay.

Yclept (i klept'). An old English word meaning called, named, styled. It is now only used in a sort of arch facetiousness that Fowler calls "Worn-out Humour".

Ye. An archaic way of writing the, the y representing O.E. ȝ. Early printers used y as a substitute for the letter p, the character representing our th, hence the use of ye for the and yt as an abbreviation for that. It was always pronounced the.

Ye is also, of course, the archaic nominative plural of the second person.

Year (connected with Gr. horos, a season, and Lat. hora, an hour). The period of time occupied by the revolution of the Earth round the SUN.

The Astronomical, Equinoctial, Natural, Solar, or Tropical year is the time taken by the Sun in returning to the same equinox, in mean length, 365 days 5 hours 48 min. and 46 sec.

The Astral or Sidereal year is the time in which the Sun returns from a given star to the same star again: 365 days 6 hours 9 min. and 9.6 sec.

The Platonic, Great, or Perfect year (Annus magnus), a great cycle of years (estimated by early Greek astronomers at about 26,000 years) at the end of which all the heavenly bodies were imagined to return to the same places as they occupied at the Creation. See also CALENDAR; CANICULAR PERIOD; EMBOLISMIC; LEAP YEAR; SOTHIC PERIOD; SABBATICAL YEAR.

Academic Year. The university year, usually beginning in October.

Fiscal, or Financial Year. In the United Kingdom, the year beginning from 6 April, when the Income Tax year begins in accordance with an Act of PARLIAMENT of 1798.

Regnal Year. The year beginning with a monarch's accession. In Great Britain Acts of PARLIAMENT are still referred to by the regnal year in which they were passed; thus the Local Government Act, 1929, is also dated 19 Geo. 5, the 19th year of the reign of George V.

Year of Confusion. A.D. 46, when the JULIAN CALENDAR was introduced, a year of 445 days.

Year of Grace. See under GRACE.

Year of Our Lord. A year of the Christian era.

Year Books. The name given to annual publications summarizing the events, changes, etc., of the preceding year in the world at large, or some particular subject, profession, trade, industry, etc., e.g. The Statesman's Year Book, Whitaker's Almanack, Debrett's Peerage, The Brewers' Almanack, The Mining Year Book.

Historically, the term denotes the unique series of reports of cases decided in the courts of COMMON LAW, written in Norman French, and covering the period 1292-1534.

For a year and a day. In law the period of time which in certain matters determines a right or liability. Thus the Crown formerly had the right to hold the land of felons for a year and a day, and if a person wounded does not die within a year and a day, the assailant is not guilty of murder.

Year in year out. Continuously, all the time.

Yell Hounds. See WISH HOUNDS.

Yellow (O.E. geolo, connected with Gr. chloros, green, and with gall, the yellowish fluid secreted by the liver). In symbolism it indicates jealousy, inconstancy, adultery, perfidy, and cowardice. In France, the doors of traitors used to be daubed with yellow and in some countries the laws ordained that Jews must be clothed in yellow, because they betrayed Jesus, and in mediæval pictures JUDAS is arrayed in yellow. In Spain at an AUTO DA FE, the victims wore yellow, to denote heresy and treason.

In HERALDRY and ecclesiastical symbolism yellow is frequently used in place of GOLD.

Yellow Admiral. See under ADMIRAL.

The Yellow Book. A yellow-covered quarterly magazine published in London (1894-1897), among its contributors being Henry James, Arnold Bennett, and Oscar Wilde. Aubrey Beardsley and Max Beerbohm contributed drawings, Beardsley's work having erotic implications. The Yellow Book became the AVANT-GARDE reading of the NAUGHTY NINETIES.

Yellow Books. Official documents, Government reports, etc., in France, corresponding to British BLUE BOOKS; so called from the colour of their covers.

Yellowboy. Slang for a golden SOVEREIGN, once fairly common in Great Britain.

John did not starve the cause: there wanted not yellow-boys to see counsel.

ARBUTHNOT: John Bull (1712).

Yellow dog contracts. An American name for agreements made by employers with employees to prevent the latter from joining labour unions. Such contracts became invalid under an Act of 1932.

Yellow fever. A tropical fever accompanied by jaundice and black vomit; also called YELLOW JACK. In Australia the name was given to the gold-prospecting mania of colonial days.

Yellow Jack. The YELLOW FEVER; also the flag displayed from lazarettos, and vessels in quarantine.

The Yellow Peril. A scare, originally raised in Germany in the late 1890s, that the yellow races of China and Japan would rapidly increase in population and overrun the territories occupied by the white races with fearful consequences.

The Yellow Press. The sensationalist newspapers. The name arose in the United States when W. R. Hearst's Journal, during the circulation battle with Pulitzer's World, introduced a comic picture feature called "The Yellow Kid".

This rivalry was dubbed "yellow journalism" and came to be characterized by scare headlines, sensational articles, lavish illustrations, comic features, Sunday supplements, etc.

The Yellow River. The Hwang-Ho in China, so called from the yellow earth or loess that it carries in suspension. It is also an epithet of the Tiber.

Yellow-back. A cheap novel, especially of the sensational kind. So called from the yellow board binding familiar on the railway bookstalls of Victorian days.

Yellow-bellies. A name given to people of the fenlands of the counties of Lincoln, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Suffolk, and Norfolk. The Mexicans are also so called.

Yellow-hammer. A bunting with yellowish head, neck, and breast (O.E. amore; Ger. Ammer, a bunting). The tradition is that the bird fluttered about the CROSS, and got its plumage stained with the Blood; by way of punishment its eggs were doomed ever after to bear marks of blood. Because the bird was "cursed", boys were taught that it was right and proper to destroy its eggs.

Yen. To have a yen for. An expression of American origin, to have an intense desire or longing for. From the Chinese yen, opium smoke.

Yeoman. Historically, a middle class of small freeholders, variously defined at different periods and later applied to the class of "forty-shilling freeholders".

Yeoman service. Effectual service, characterized by hard and steady work. The reference is to the service of yeomen in the English armies of former days.

It did one yeoman's service.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, V, ii.

Yeoman of the Guard. See BEEF-EATERS.

Yeomanry. British volunteer cavalry units were so called from 1761, although not effectively formed until 1794. The Yeomanry were absorbed in the Territorial Army in 1907. See TERRIER.

Yes-man. An expressive colloquialism for one who always expresses agreement with his superior, irrespective of his private opinions.

Yew. The yew is a native British tree (Taxus baccata), and is commonly planted in churchyards because, as an evergreen, it is a symbol of immortality. The practice was also encouraged to provide a supply of bow-staves from the hard, elastic wood resulting from the slow growth of this tree, which lives to a great age. To decorate the house with yew was held to lead to a death in the family. Yew leaves are poisonous.

Some famous Yews.

That of Brabourne, in Kent; in Evelyn's time reputed to be nearly 59 ft. in girth.

That of Darley churchyard, Derbyshire; claimed to be well over 2,000 years old and 33 ft. in girth.

The Scotch Yew at Fortingal, in Perthshire; it was claimed to be between 2,000 and 3,000 years old.

The three at Fountains Abbey, Yorkshire, are said to have existed before the abbey was built in the 12th century.

J. Lowe's The Yew Trees of Great Britain and Ireland (1897) lists the oldest and biggest Yew trees and of the 211 given of over 10 ft. in girth, 36 of them were in Wales. The largest tree in the famous grove at Mamhilad, Monmouthshire, is over 31 ft. in girth.

Yggdrasil (ig drá sil). The world tree of Scandinavian mythology that, with its roots and branches, binds together heaven, earth, and hell. It is an ash, and is evergreen, and at the root is a fountain of wonderful virtues. In the tree, which drops honey, sit an EAGLE, a squirrel, and four stags. It is the tree of life and knowledge, and of time and space.

Yiddish (Ger. jüdisch, Jewish). A Middle German dialect developed in Poland under Hebrew and Slavonic influence, written in Hebrew characters, and used as a language by Eastern European Jews. As a result of the latter's widespread dispersal Yiddish became the lingua franca of world Jewry. Hence Yid as a term for a Jew.

Ymir (im ir). The primæval being of Scandinavian mythology, father of all the GIANTS. He was nourished by the four milky streams which flowed from the cow Audhumla. From his body the world was created and his skull became the vault of the heavens.

Yob. See BACK-SLANG.

Yodel (yō dél). To sing with frequent alternations between the ordinary voice and falsetto. It is properly peculiar to Switzerland and is a development of the RANZ DES VACHES.

Yoga (yō' gá). A practice of Hindu philosophy, the withdrawal of the physical senses from external objects. Adepts in yoga are able to hold their breath for protracted periods and do other things in apparent contravention of natural requirements. Hypnotism and self-mortification are part of the cult. Union with the Deity became its object (Sans. yoga, union, devotion). A yogi is one who practises yoga.

Yoke. To pass under the yoke. To make a humiliating submission; to suffer the disgrace of a vanquished army. The Romans made a yoke of three spears—two upright and one resting on them. When an army was vanquished, the soldiers had to lay down their arms and pass under this archway of spears.

Yom Kippur (yom ki pēr'). The Jewish Day of Atonement, on the 10th day of the first month, Tishri. It is observed by a strict fast and ceremonies of supplication, the whole day being spent in prayer and confession.

Yorkist. A partisan of the House of York in the WARS OF THE ROSES (see under ROSE).

Yorkshire. I'se Yorkshire, too. See TO COME YORKSHIRE OVER ONE under COME.

Yorkshire slavery. See FACTORY KING.

The Yorkshireman's toast. "Here's tiv us, all on us; may we never want nowt, noan on us; nor me nawther."

Yorker. In CRICKET, a deceptive ball delivered so that it pitches directly beneath the bat and is thus likely to be missed by the batsman. Perhaps from its first being developed by a Yorkshire bowler.

Young. Often used as an epithet in the names of political parties who aim to effect sweeping political changes or to re-awaken the national spirit.

Young England. A group of young TORY politicians of the early 1840s who sought to revive a somewhat romantic concept of paternal feudalism and to idealize the functions of the territorial aristocracy. They saw their movement as a safeguard against revolution and the triumph of the LAISSEZ FAIRE doctrines of the MANCHESTER SCHOOL. Their leaders were Lord John Manners and George Smythe and Disraeli joined their ranks. The EGLINTON TOURNAMENT (see under TOURNAMENT) was one of their more extravagant ventures.

Young Germany. A German school of the 1830s, whose aim was to liberate politics, religion and manners from the old conventional trammels. Heinrich Heine was its most prominent representative.

Young Ireland. An Irish nationalist movement of the 1840s taking its name in imitation of Mazzini's YOUNG ITALY. Their aims included the revival of Irish language and literature and national independence. Mainly PROTESTANTS, they were responsible for the futile rising of 1848. Their leaders included Smith O'Brien, Gavan Duffy, George Mitchel, Francis Meagher, and Fintan Lalor.

Young Italy (Giovine Italia). A republican nationalist movement inspired by the exiled Mazzini and seeking to promote an Italian revolution. Founded in 1831 and imbued by its leader with fervent idealism, it never gained the support of the masses, but it did much to develop the spirit of nationalism in the 1830s and 1840s. See CARBONARI.

Young Pretender. See under PRETENDER.

The Young Turks. See under TURK.

Yours truly. This conventional ending to letters is sometimes used to indicate the speaker—"There were X, Y, and Yours truly."

Ysolde (Yseult, Isolde, etc.). The name of two heroines of ARTHURIAN ROMANCE, Ysolde the Fair, daughter of the king of Ireland, wife of King MARK and lover of TRISTRAM, the other Ysolde of the White Hands or Ysolde of Brittany.

Yuga. One of the four ages of the world into which, according to Hindu cosmogony, mundane time is divided.

Yule, Yuletide. CHRISTMAS-TIME. O.E. gēol, from Icel. jól, the name of a heathen festival at the winter SOLSTICE.

Yule log, or Yule clog. A great log of wood formerly laid across the hearth with great ceremony on Christmas Eve and lit with a brand from the previous year's log. There followed drinking and merriment.

Yves, or Yvo, St. (ēv, é' vō) (1253-1303). Patron SAINT of lawyers, being himself a lawyer. He became an ecclesiastical judge at Rennes and in 1285 entered the priesthood. His work for orphans and widows earned him the title of "Advocate of the Poor". He was canonized in 1347 and his day is 19 May.

Yvetot (ēv' tō). The King of Yvetot. A man of mighty pretensions but little merit. Yvetot is a town in Normandy; the "King" was the lord of the town, and the title was in use from the 14th to the 16th century. The ballad of this title by Béranger, with satirical allusions to NAPOLEON, appeared in 1813 and became a type of the "roi bon enfant".

Z

Z. The last letter of the alphabet, called zed in England, but in America zee. Its older English name was izzard. It was the seventh letter of the Greek alphabet, zeta.

Thou whoreson zed! thou unnecessary letter!
SHAKESPEARE: King Lear, II, ii.

In mathematics it denotes the third unknown quantity; and as a mediæval numeral it represents 2,000. It is also used as a contraction mark as in viz., oz.

Zadkiel (zād' ki el). In Rabbinical angelology, the ANGEL of the planet JUPITER. The name was adopted as a pseudonym by the astrologer Richard James Morrison (1795-1874), a naval lieutenant, author of the Herald of Astrology (1831), continued as Zadkiel's Almanack.

Zamorin (zām' or in). The title of the one-time ruler of Calicut.

Zany (zā' ni). The buffoon who mimicked the clown in the Commedia dell'Arte; hence, a simpleton, one who "acts the goat". The name is the Ital. zanni, a buffoon, a familiar form of Giovanni (i.e. John).

For indeed,
He's like the zani to a tumbler
That tries tricks after him to make men laugh.
JONSON: Every Man out of his Humour, IV, i.

Zarathustra. See ZOROASTER.

Zealots, or Cananæans. A Jewish sect founded by Judas of Gamala in the early years of the 1st century A.D., who fiercely opposed Roman domination. They fought fanatically during the great rebellion which ended in the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. See MASADA.

Zebi. See SABBATÆANS.

Zedland. An old designation of the West-country shires of Devon, Dorset, and Somerset, where s is still often pronounced as z.

Zeitgeist (zit' gīst) (Ger. Zeit, time; Geist, spirit). The spirit of the time; the moral or intellectual tendency characteristic of the period.

Zem Zem. The sacred well near the KAABA at MECCA. According to Arab tradition, this is the very well that was shown to Hagar when ISHMAEL was perishing of thirst.

Zemindar. Under the MOGUL emperors of India, one of a class of tax farmers, responsible for the revenues of land held in common. They were treated as landlords by the British and made proprietors paying a fixed annual tax. This change, introduced by Lord Cornwallis in Bengal in 1793, did not prevent RACK-RENTING of the peasantry by the zemindars.

Zemstvo (Russ. zemlya, land). The name given to the elected District Assemblies and provincial councils (elected by the District Assemblies) in Russia introduced by Alexander II in 1864. They dealt with local taxation, primary education, famine precautions, roads and bridges, etc.

Zen. A Japanese Buddhist sect which believes that the ultimate truth is greater than word and is therefore not to be wholly found in the sacred writings, but must be sought through the "inner light" and self-mastery. It originated in the 6th century in China.

Zend-Avesta. The sacred writings of ZOROASTER that formed the basis of the religion that prevailed in Persia from the 6th century B.C. to the 7th century A.D. Avesta means the lore, or sacred writings, and Zend, the commentary. Hence the application of Zend to the ancient Iranian language in which the Zend-Avesta is written.

Zenith, Nadir (Arab.). Zenith is the point of the heavens immediately over the head of the spectator. NADIR is the opposite point immediately beneath the spectator's feet. Hence, to go from the zenith of one's fortunes to the nadir is to fall from the height of fortune to the depth of poverty.

Zeno. The name of several PHILOSOPHERS. Zeno of Elia, who flourished about 500 B.C., was a disciple of Parmenides and one of the ELEATIC school. He is said to have been the inventor of DIALECTIC. When tortured for conspiring against the tyrant Nearchus he bit off his tongue and spat it in the tyrant's face.

Zeno of Citium (342-270 B.C.) was founder of the STOIC school at ATHENS. One of his maxims was that we are given two ears, and only one mouth, to tell us that we should listen more than we should speak.

Zeno of Tarsus, the STOIC, and Zeno of Sidon, an Epicurean, are of lesser note.

Zephyr (zef' ir), Zephyrus. In classical mythology, the west wind, son of Astræus and AURORA, and lover of Flora, identified with the Roman FAVONIUS; hence, any soft, gentle wind.

Fair laughs the Morn and soft the Zephyr blows,
While proudly riding o'er the azure realm
In gallant rim the gilded vessel goes;
Youth on the prow, and Pleasure at the helm.

GRAY: The Bard, 71.

Zero (zé' rō) (Arabic, a cipher). The figure 0; nothing; especially the point on a scale (such as that of a thermometer) from which positive and negative quantities are measured; on the Centigrade and Réaumur thermometers fixed at the freezing-point of water; on the Fahrenheit 32° below freezing-point.

Absolute Zero is the point at which it would be impossible to get any colder; i.e. that at which it is totally devoid of heat (estimated at about -273° C).

Zero hour. A military term (first used in World War I) for the exact time at which an attack, etc., is to be begun. From this are timed the subsequent operations, e.g. zero + 3 means 3 minutes after zero hour. Succeeded in World War II by H-hour.

Zeugma (zūg' má) (Gr. zeugnumi, yoke). In grammar and logic, a term for a phrase in which one word modifies or governs two or more not connected in meaning. A well-known example is, "Miss Bolo went straight home in a flood of tears and a sedan chair." (Dickens, Pickwick Papers, xxxv.)

Zeus (zūs). The Greek equivalent of JUPITER. The root meaning of the word is "bright".

Zimri. The name given by Dryden in ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL to George Villiers, 2nd Duke of Buckingham (1628-1687), in allusion to the King of Israel who "slew his master" and was himself overthrown (I Kings xvi).

Zingari. Gypsies; so called in Italy. The name is thought to derive from Sinte or Sind (India) and calo (black).

Zingaro is Sanscrit, and signifies a man of mixed race, a mongrel.

BORROW: Lavengro (Preface of 1872).

I Zingari (I.Z.). An exclusive nomadic CRICKET club, founded in 1845 by William Bolland. The club has no ground of its own, no subscription is payable, and Bolland is its perpetual president.

Zinoviev Letter. See under FORGERIES.

Zion (Heb. Tsiyon, a hill). Figuratively, the chosen people, the Israelites; the church of God, the kingdom of Heaven. The city of David stood on Mount Zion.

In Pilgrim's Progress Bunyan calls the Celestial City (i.e. HEAVEN) Mount Zion.

Daughter of Zion. Jerusalem or its people.

Zionism. The Jewish movement for the establishment of the "national home" in Palestine. The Zionist movement was founded by Dr. Theodore Herzl of Vienna in 1895 and the Balfour Declaration of 1917 recognized Zionist aspirations. From 1920 to 1948 Palestine was a British mandate, administered under great difficulties arising from the friction between Jews and Arabs. The independent state of Israel was established in 1948.

Zodiac (Gr. zodiakos, pertaining to animals; from zoon, an animal). The imaginary belt or zone of the heavens, extending about eight degrees each side of the ECLIPTIC, which the SUN traverses annually.

Signs of the Zodiac. The zodiac was divided by the ancients into 12 equal parts, proceeding from west to east, each part of 30 degrees, and distinguished by a sign; these originally corresponded to the zodiacal constellations bearing the same names, but now, through the precession of the equinoxes, they coincide with the constellations bearing the names next in order.

Beginning with ARIES, we have first six on the north side and six on the south side of the Equator; beginning with CAPRICORNUS, we have six ascending and then six descending signs—i.e. six which ascend higher and higher towards the north, and six which descend lower and lower towards the south. The six northern signs are: Aries (the ram), TAURUS (the bull), GEMINI (the twins), spring signs; CANCER (the crab), Leo (the lion), VIRGO (the virgin), summer signs. The six southern are: LIBRA (the balance), SCORPIO (the scorpion), SAGITTARIUS (the archer), autumn signs; Capricornus (the goat), AQUARIUS (the water-bearer), and Pisces (the fishes), winter signs.

Our vernal signs the RAM begins,
Then comes the BULL, in May the TWINS;
The CRAB in June, next LEO shines,
And VIRGO ends the northern signs.
The BALANCE brings autumnal fruits,
The SCORPION stings, the ARCHER shoots;
December's GOAT brings wintry blast,
AQUARIUS rain, the FISH come last.

—E. C. B.

Zoilus. A Greek rhetorician of the 4th century B. C., a literary THERSITES, shrewd, witty, and spiteful, nicknamed Homermastix (Homer's scourge), because he mercilessly assailed the epics of HOMER, and called the companions of ULYSSES in the island of CIRCE "weeping porkers". He also attacked PLATO and ISOCRATES. His name is applied to a spiteful and carping critic. See THRACIAN DOG under DOG.

Zollverein (Ger. Zoll, duty; Verein, union). A customs union. In German history, the Prussian Zollverein, which developed from 1819, is of particular importance. By 1852 it included practically the whole of Germany with the notable exclusion of Austria. Attempts to form rival unions were stillborn and the Zollverein was used by Prussia as an economic prelude to the struggle with Austria.

Zombie. The python god of certain West African tribes. Its worship was carried to the West Indies with the slave trade, and still somewhat covertly survives in VOODOO ceremonies in Haiti and some of the Southern States of the U.S.A. The word zombie is also applied to an alleged dead body brought to life in a more or less cataleptic or automaton state by Voodoo magic; also, colloquially, to a half-wit or thick-head.

Zone time. See STANDARD TIME.

Zoot-suit (U.S.A.). An exaggerated style of clothing adopted in the late 1930s by HEP-CATS and followers of fashionable SWING music. It usually consisted of baggy trousers caught in at the bottom, a long coat resembling a frock coat, a broad-brimmed hat, and a flowing tie, all in vivid colours. An essential article of equipment was a vast key-chain.

Zoroastrians. Followers of Zoroaster or Zarathustra, founder of the ancient Persian religion called Zoroastrianism. Zoroaster's teachings are contained in the AVESTA and he taught that ORMUZD, the creator and ANGEL of good, will triumph over AHRIMAN, the spirit of evil. Man's state after death will depend on the good and evil in his life. Sacred fire-altars were used in their ritual, hence their inaccurate appellation of "fire-worshippers". See GUEBRES; PARSEES.

Zounds! A minced oath, euphemistic for God's wounds.

Zucchetto (zu ket' ò). The small skullcap worn by Roman Catholic clergy; white for the POPE, red for a CARDINAL, purple for a BISHOP, and black for others.

Zuleika. The name traditionally ascribed to POTIPHAR'S WIFE, and a very common name in Persian poetry.

Zurich. The Zurich Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Gnomes of Zurich. See under GNOME.

Zwickau Prophets, The. An early sect of ANABAPTISTS at Zwickau in Saxony, who sought to establish a Christian commonwealth. See also ABECDARIAN.

Zwinglian. Pertaining to the teachings of Ulrich (Huldreich) Zwingli (1484-1531), the Swiss religious reformer and minister at Zurich. The term Zwinglianism refers especially to his teachings on the EUCHARIST. He maintained a completely symbolic interpretation and rejected all forms of local or corporeal presence, including Luther's doctrine of Consubstantiation. See IMPANATION; TRANSUBSTANTIATION.

The Wordsworth
Dictionary of Phrase & Fable

Revised by Ivor H. Evans

THE Wordsworth Dictionary of Phrase & Fable explains the origins of the familiar and the unfamiliar in everyday speech and literature, including the colloquial and the proverbial, and embracing archaeology, history, religion, the arts, science, mythology and characters from fiction. This invaluable dictionary, which is taken from the Centenary Edition of the original work created by Dr Ebenezer Cobham Brewer, also includes expressions from current English usage and encompasses a wide range of phrase from the United States and the Commonwealth and fable from the lore of Ireland and Wales. The inclusion of quotations which accompany and illustrate many of the entries adds hugely to the value of this legendary work of reference.
