Franciscans (frān sis' kānz). The Friars Minor, founded by ST. FRANCIS OF ASSISI in 1209 and now divided into three distinct and independent branches, the Friars Minor, the Friars Minor Conventual and the Friars Minor CAPUCHIN. These constitute the First Order. The Franciscans first appeared in England in 1224 and were called Grey Friars from the indeterminate colour of their habit, which is now brown. They had 65 religious houses in England at the time of the REFORMATION. Especially notable for its preaching among the poor, the distinguishing feature of the order at the outset was insistence on poverty, which later produced dissension. Many of the stricter members called Spirituals or Zealots, the less strict PRATICELLI, and in 1517 the Observants, separated from the Conventuals, and in the 1520s the Capuchins became another Order. Later groups were the Reformati, the Recollects, and the Discalced (see BAREFOOTED). The whole Order was reorganized into its present branches by Pope Leo XIII in 1897. See CORDELIER; TERTIARIES. For the Second Order (or Nuns) see CLARE, ORDER OF ST.

Those nuns following a milder rule instituted by Urban IV in 1263 were called Urbanists, and a reformed order of Colettines founded by St. Colette arose in the 15th century, other offshoots being the Grey Sisters, Capuchin Nuns, Sisters of the Annunciation, and Conceptionists.

Franc-Tireurs (frong tē rēr) (Fr. free-shooters). Sharp-shooters, skirmishers, or irregular troops. Originally unofficial military units or rifle clubs formed in France during the Luxembourg crisis of 1867, they gave notable service in the Franco-German War of 1870-1871. At first wearing no uniform, until brought under proper French military control, they were shot if captured by the Germans.

Frankalmoin, or frankalmoigne tenure (frāngk' āl moin) (free alms). A form of feudal tenure whereby the Church held land granted by pious benefactors in return for some form of praying service, usually praying for the soul of the donor. The Church also held some of its lands by KNIGHT SERVICE. See CHANTRY; MORTMAIN.

Frankenstein. The young student in Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley's romance of that name (1818), a classic horror story. Frankenstein made a soulless monster out of corpses from churchyards and dissecting-rooms and endued it with life by galvanism. The tale shows the creature longed for sympathy, but was shunned by everyone and became the instrument of dreadful retribution on the student who usurped the prerogative of the Creator.

Frankincense. The literal meaning of this is pure or true incense. It is a fragrant gum exuded from several trees of the genus Boswellia, abundant on the Somali coast and in South Arabia. It was ceremonially used by the Egyptians, Persians, Babylonians, Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans and is an ingredient of the modern incense used in certain churches.

Frankpledge. A system originating in Anglo-Saxon times by which all men were to be grouped in a TITHING or frankpledge and to be responsible for each other's actions. If one of their number committed an offence the others would compel him to answer for it or see that reparation was made. Men of position were excused as were freeholders and the system came only to apply to the unfree, when over 12 years of age.

Franks. Free letters for government officials and Members of PARLIAMENT. The privilege of franking a letter was held by numerous court officials in Tudor times. By writing their name and title on the corner of the letter they secured free delivery. This concession was abused from the outset and after the RESTORATION was increasingly exploited by members of both Houses of Parliament signing the letters of friends and others. By an act of 1764 each member of either house of Parliament was permitted to send 10 free letters daily and to receive 15. The abuse still continued and the right was abolished in 1840 on the introduction of the penny post although it still exists in the U.S.A. for Members of Congress and others.

Franks. The Germanic tribe which conquered GAUL after the fall of the Roman Empire, whence the name France.

Frater (frā' ter). The refectory or dining-room of a monastery, where the brothers (Lat. fratres) met together for meals. Also called the fratry.

In old vagabond's slang a frater was much the same as an ABRAM-MAN, a usage derived from the friar's begging habits.

A Frater goeth wyth a Lisence to beg for some Spittelhouse or Hospital. Their pray is commonly upon poore women as they go and come to the markets.

AWDBLEY: Fraternitey of Vacabondes (1575).

Fraternity, The. A term highwaymen used to apply to themselves as a body but the "Gentlemen of the road" were by no means always on friendly terms with one another.

Fratricelli (frāt i chel' ē) (Ital. Little Brethren). A name given to several groups of monks and friars in Italy in the 13th, 14th, and 15th century, many of whom were originally FRANCISCANS. They were mostly fanatical ascetics and came to be branded as HERETICS.

Frazzle. Beaten, or licked to a frazzle. Completely beaten and reduced to a state of exhaustion; an expression of American origin, frazzle being a "frayed edge".

Worn to a frazzle. Reduced to a state of nervous exhaustion.

Free. A free and easy. An informal social gathering where people chat and smoke together. A public-house social and sing-song. Thus in a free and easy way is with entire absence of ceremony.

A free fight. A fight in which all engage, rules being disregarded. A free-for-all is much the same whether applied to a scuffle or an argument.

Free on board, or F.O.B. Used of goods delivered on board ship or into a conveyance at the seller's expense.

I'm free to confess. There's nothing to prevent my admitting.

To have a free hand. See under HAND.

To make free with. To take liberties with; to treat whatever it is as one's own.

Free Bench (francus bancus) (Lat.). A legal term denoting a widow's free right to the interest in a COPYHOLD estate. Called bench because, on acceding, she became a tenant of the MANOR, and entitled to sit on the bench at manorial courts. It was abolished by Acts of 1922 and 1925.

Free Churches. The NONCONFORMIST churches, so called because they are free from any kind of official connexion with the State.

Free companies. A name given to groups of disbanded soldiery who in the mid-14th century roamed France, plundering and pillaging. Conan Doyle's story, The White Company, is based upon the exploits of one of them, which had the white cross for its emblem. Cp. CONDOTTIERI.

Free coup (in SCOTLAND) means a piece of waste land where rubbish may be dumped free of charge; also the right of doing so.

Free French. See FIGHTING FRENCH.

Free House. A public house or inn which is not tied to a brewery; its landlord is thus free to sell any kind of beer he chooses.

Free lance. See under LANCE.

Free Soilers. In the U.S.A. members of the Free Soil Party which arose in 1847-1848 to oppose the extension of slavery into further territories. It was made up of ABOLITIONISTS and BARNBURNERS and ended its separate existence in 1856, being absorbed by the newly formed Republican Party.

Free Trade. The opposite of PROTECTION; when a government does not impose duties on imports to favour the home producer. Such a policy in Britain aroused increasing advocacy from the time of Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations (1776) when he attacked the existing protectionist policies which he called the Mercantile System. As a result largely of Peel's Budgets of 1842 and 1845, the activities of the Anti-Corn Law League and the repeal of the CORN LAWS in 1846, and Gladstone's budgets of 1853 and 1860, Great Britain became a Free Trade country. In spite of changed economic circumstances Free Trade long remained a SACRED COW but the country reverted to Protection in 1932. Free Trade is also an old slang term for smuggling.

The Apostle of Free Trade. Richard Cobden (1804-1865), the principal founder of the Anti-Corn Law League in 1838.

Free Verse. A breakaway from the regular classical metres, which dominated European and English poetry from the later mediæval period, and the substitution of ordinary speech rhythms and little or loose rhyme-patterns, in place of regular stanza forms. Milton experimented with irregular forms and much of Browning's poetry breaks away from the older tradition. From the early 20th century, free verse came into its own through the influence of Ezra Pound, T. S. Eliot, and others. There was a similar trend in France towards vers libre.

Freebooter. A pirate, an adventurer who makes his living by plundering; literally one who obtains his booty free (Dut. vrij, free; buit, booty). See also FILIBUSTER.

Freehold. An estate held in FEE SIMPLE. Cp. COPYHOLD.

Freeman, Mrs. The name assumed by Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough (1660-1744), in her correspondence with Queen Anne. The Queen called herself Mrs. Morley.

Freeman of Bucks. A CUCKOLD. The allusion is to the buck's horn. See HORNS.

Freemasonry. As a secret society has existed for many centuries and professes to trace its origins to the building of SOLOMON'S TEMPLE. In mediæval times stonemasons banded together with their secret signs, passwords and tests. Freemasonry in its modern form, as a body with no trade connexions, began to flourish in the 17th century and it is likely that Sir Christopher Wren was a member. Elias Ashmole (see ASHMOLEAN MUSEUM) was initiated in 1646. The mother Grand Lodge of England was founded in London in 1717 and took under its aegis the many small lodges in the provinces. Even the ancient York Lodge, which has given its name to the rites of the Continent and the U.S.A., acknowledged its authority. From this Grand Lodge of England derive all Masonic lodges throughout the world.

In Britain, Masonry has three degrees, the first is called Entered Apprentice; the second Fellow Craft, the third, Master Mason. Royal Arch Masonry is an adjunct to these, and is peculiar to Britain. Mark Masonry is a comparatively modern addition to the fraternity. In the U.S.A. the first regular lodge was founded at Boston in 1733, though there are minutes extant of a lodge in Philadelphia in 1730. The ritual side of Freemasonry has appealed to American more than it has to British Masons, and many degrees are worked in the U.S.A. with elaborate ritual and mysteries. In addition to the three degrees of British Masonry there are the Cryptic Degrees of Royal and Select Masters; the Chivalric Rite, with three degrees of Knights Red Cross, Temple and of Malta; and the 33 degrees of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. The various Grand Orients of the Continent (all disowned by the Grand Lodge of England on account of their political activities) were founded at different times and work modifications of the Scottish rite. The part played by Masonic lodges in the French Revolution is still obscure; Philippe ÉGALITÉ was head of the Grand Orient, but repudiated it during the TERROR. NAPOLEON was reported to have been initiated at Malta in 1798; he certainly favoured Masonry and during the Empire Cambacérés, Murat, and Joseph Bonaparte were successive Grand Masters. Freemasonry has been condemned by the HOLY SEE, not only for being a secret society, but for its alleged subversive aims—aims that may be cherished by Continental Masons but which are quite unknown to their British and American brethren.

The Lady Freemason. Women were not admitted into FREEMASONRY, but the story goes that a lady was initiated in the early 18th century. She was the Hon. Elizabeth St. Leger, daughter of Lord Doneraile, who hid herself in an empty clock-case when the lodge was held in her father's house, and witnessed the proceedings. She was discovered, and compelled to submit to initiation as a member of the craft.

Freeze Bank. A term of American origin for a refrigerated stock of perishable organic substances, such as human blood and bone, kept in large modern hospitals for surgical use.

Freezing-point. The temperature at which liquid becomes solid; if mentioned without qualification, the freezing-point of water is meant (32° Fahrenheit, 0° Centigrade, and Réaumur). The zero of Fahrenheit's thermometer is 32° below freezing-point, being the lowest temperature recorded by him in the winter of 1709.

Freischütz (fri' shutz) (the freeshooter). A legendary German archer in league with the DEVIL, who gave him seven balls, six of which were to hit infallibly whatever the marksman aimed at, and the seventh was to be directed as the devil wished. Weber's opera, Der Freischütz, based on the legend (libretto by F. Kind) was first produced in Berlin in 1821.

Fremd. Better kinde fremd than fremd kyne. The motto of the Waterton family. It means "better kind strangers than estranged kindred" (cp. Prov. xxvii, 10, "Better is a neighbour that is near than a brother far off"). Fremd is an O.E. word meaning foreign, strange, unfriendly, estranged; kyne is kin.

What says our old Scottish proverb? "Better kind fremit, than fremit kindred."

SCOTT: Quentin Durward, ch. vi.

French. French of Stratford atte Bow. This has often been taken to mean French as spoken by an Englishman, and a COCKNEY at that, but it had no such connotation in Chaucer's day. Stratford and Bromley were then fashionable suburbs, and at Bromley was the convent of ST. LEONARDS' where the daughters of well-to-do citizens and others were taught French by the nuns. French was a common acquirement of the time and freely used at Court and in society; but it was somewhat archaic French, descending from Norman times, and not such as was current in Paris.

And French she [the nun] spake ful faire and fetisly.

After the scole of Stratford atte Bowe,
For French of Paris was to hir unknowe.

CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales, Prologue, 124-6.

To take French leave. To take without asking; also to leave without asking or announcing one's departure. This kind of backhander to the French was once common (cp. "French gout" for venereal disease).

The French returned the compliment similarly. The French equivalent of "to take French leave" is s'en aller (or filer) à l'anglaise. In the 16th century a creditor used to be called un Anglais.

French cream. Brandy: from the custom originating in France of taking a cup of coffee after dinner with brandy in it instead of cream.

French Prophets. The name bestowed upon a group of CAMISARDS who arrived in England in 1706 claiming prophetic and wonder-working gifts and the speedy arrival of the second ADVENT.

French Shore. Parts of the western and northern coasts of Newfoundland, where the French were given the monopoly to catch and dry fish by the Treaty of Utrecht (1713). France gave up her monopoly in 1904 but retained the right to fish.

Frenchman. Nicknames of a Frenchman are CRAPAUD, "Jean", "Mossoo", "ROBERT MACAIRE", and "FROG" or "Grenouille". A French peasant was called "Jacques Bonhomme" and the nickname for a French Canadian is "Jean Baptiste".

Done like a Frenchman, turn and turn again (Henry VI, Pt. I, III, iii). The French were frequently ridiculed as a fickle, wavering nation. Dr. Johnson says he once read a treatise, the object of which was to show that a weathercock is a satire on the word Gallus (a Gaul or cock).

Freyja (frä' yä). In Scandinavian mythology the sister of FREYR, goddess of love, marriage and of the dead. She was the wife of ODIN and always wore the shining necklace called Brisingamen and was consequently called "ornament loving". Her husband is also given in some legends as Odhr, and she shed golden tears when he left her. The counterpart of VENUS, she is also commonly identified with Frigg, wife of Odin, who in Scandinavian myth ranked highest among the goddesses. See FRIDAY.

Freyr. In Norse mythology, god of fruitfulness and of crops, and of the sun and rain. His horse was called Bloodyhoof and his ship SKIDBLADNIR.

Friar (Lat. frater, a brother). A member of one of the mendicant orders, notably the AUGUSTINIANS, CARMELITES, DOMINICANS, and FRANCISCANS. See also CRUTCHED FRIARS.

In printer's slang a friar is a part of the sheet which has failed to receive the ink properly, and is therefore paler than the rest. As CAXTON set up his press in Westminster Abbey, it is but natural that monks and friars should give rise to some of the printer's slang. Cp. MONK.

Crutched Friars. See CRUTCHED.

Curtal Friar. See CURTAL.

Friar Bungay. Thomas de Bungay of Suffolk, a FRANCISCAN who lectured at Oxford and Cambridge in the 13th century, whose story is much overlaid with legend. He came to be portrayed as a magician and necromancer. In the old prose romance, The Famous History of Friar Bacon, and in Greene's Honourable History of Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay (1587), he appears as the assistant to Roger Bacon (d. 1292). He also features in Lytton's Last of the Barons.

Friar Rush. A legendary house-spirit who originated as a kind of ultra-mischievous ROBIN GOODFELLOW in German folk-lore. He later acquired more devilish attributes and appeared in the habit of a Friar to lead astray those under religious vows. Dekker's play, If it be not Good, the Devil is in it (printed 1612), was based upon The Pleasant History of Friar Rush (1567).

Friar Tuck. Chaplain and steward of ROBIN HOOD.

In this our spacious isle I think there is not one
But he hath heard some talk of Hood and Little John;

Of Tuck, the merry friar, which many a sermon made

In praise of Robin Hood, his outlaws, and their trade.

DRAYTON: Polyolbion, xxvi, 311-16.

Friar's Lanthorn. One of the many names given to the Will o' the Wisp. See IGNIS FATUUS.

Friars Major (Fratres majores). Sometimes applied to the DOMINICANS in contrast to the FRIARS MINOR.

Friars Minor (Fratres minores). The FRANCISCANS.

Friars of the Sack. See under SACK.

Friday. The sixth day of the week; in ancient ROME called dies Veneris, the day dedicated to VENUS, hence the French vendredi. The northern nations adopted the same nomenclature and the nearest equivalent to Venus was Frigg or FREYJA, hence Friday (O.E. frige dæg).

Friday was regarded by the Norsemen as the luckiest day of the week, the day of weddings, etc., but among Christians it has been regarded as the unluckiest, because it was the day of the Crucifixion. While no longer a day of compulsory abstinence for Roman Catholics, they are urged to set Friday apart for some voluntary act of self-denial.

Friday is the SABBATH for Mohammedans and they say that ADAM was created on a Friday and it was on Friday that Adam and EVE ate the forbidden fruit, and on a Friday they died. It is also held unlucky among Buddhists and BRAHMINS.

In England the proverb is that "a Friday moon brings foul weather"; but it is not unlucky to be born on this day, since "Friday's child is loving and giving". It is held to be a bad day for ships to put to sea, but in 1492 Columbus set sail on a Friday and sighted land on a Friday. It was also sometimes called Hanging day as it was a common day for executing condemned criminals.

Black Friday. See under BLACK.

Good Friday. See under GOOD.

Friday the Thirteenth. A particularly unlucky Friday. See THIRTEEN.

Long Friday. GOOD FRIDAY was so called by the SAXONS, probably because of the long fasts and offices associated with that day.

Man Friday. The young savage found by ROBINSON CRUSOE on a Friday and kept as his servant and companion on the desert island. Hence a faithful and willing attendant, ready to turn his hand to anything.

Red Friday. See under RED.

He who laughs on Friday will weep on Sunday. Sorrow follows in the wake of joy. The line is taken from Racine's comedy, Les Plaideurs.

Friend. A QUAKER, i.e. a member of the Society of Friends; also one's second in a duel. In the law courts counsel refer to each other as "my learned friend", though they may be entire strangers, just as in the HOUSE OF COMMONS one member speaks of another as "my honourable friend".

A friend at court. A friend who is in a position to help one by influencing those in power or authority.

A friend of the court (amicus curiæ). A legal term to denote anyone not concerned in a case who brings to the attention of the court some point or decision of law which seems to have been overlooked.

A friend in need is a friend indeed. The Latin saying (from Ennius) is, Amicus certus in re incerta cernitur, a sure friend is made known when (one is) in difficulty.

The Friend of Man. The name given to the Marquis de Mirabeau (1715-1789), father of Mirabeau, of French revolutionary fame. His great work was L'ami des Hommes, hence the nickname.

The Prisoner's friend. At a naval court martial, the person (usually an officer) who acts on behalf of, or assists, the accused, unless the person charged conducts his own case.

The Society of Friends. The QUAKERS.

The Society of Friends of the People. A society founded at London (1792) largely of young aristocrats, and which included Lauderdale, Charles Grey, and Sheridan. They advocated reform of PARLIAMENT and estimated that 51 English and Welsh boroughs, with a total voting strength of under 1,500, returned 100 members to Parliament. It dissolved itself in 1795 after one of its members, Thomas Muir, was sentenced to 14 years transportation, it being held by Lord Braxfield that "to agitate for equal representation of the people in the House of the People was in the circumstances of itself sedition".

The soldier's friend. An official appointed to assist soldiers in making out and presenting their claims to the various pension boards.

A friendly suit, or action. An action at law between parties by mutual arrangement with the object of obtaining a legal decision upon some point which concerns them both.

Friendship. The classical examples of lasting friendship between man and man are ACHILLES and PATROCLUS, PYLADES and ORESTES, NISUS and EURYALUS, DAMON and PYTHIAS. To these should be added DAVID and JONATHAN.

Frigg. See FREYJA.

Frills. To put on frills. To give oneself airs, frill being an affectation of dress or manner, similarly we say "to put on airs and graces".

Fringe. The fringes on the garments of the Jewish priests were accounted sacred, and were touched by the common people as a charm. Hence the desire of the woman who had the issue of blood to touch the fringe of Our Lord's garment (Matt. ix, 20-22).

Fringe benefits. Concessions made to workers in many industries in addition to their pay, such as pensions, insurance, and holidays with pay.

The lunatic fringe. The small section of the community who follow and originate AVANT-GARDE ideas, and whose behaviour is often markedly eccentric by conventional standards, but whose influence on the majority is of little account.

Frippery. Rubbish of a tawdry character, worthless finery; foolish levity. A friperer or fripperer was one who dealt in old clothes (cp. Fr. friperie, old clothes, cast-off furniture, etc.).

Old clothes, cast dresses, tattered rags,
Whose works are e'en the frippery of wit.
BEN JONSON: Epig. I, lvi.

Also a shop where odds and ends, old clothes, and so on are dealt in.

Frith. By frith and fell. By wold and wild, wood and COMMON. Frith here means ground covered with scrub or underwood; fell is a common.

Frithof (frit' yof). A hero of Icelandic myth who married Ingeborg, daughter of a minor king of Norway, and widow of Sigurd Ring, to whose dominions he succeeded. His name signifies "the peace-maker" and his adventures are recorded in the sage which bears his name. It was paraphrased by Esaias Tegner in his famous poem (1825) of the same name.

Fritz. Frederick the Great of Prussia (1712, 1740-1786) was known as Old Fritz. In World War I the men in the trenches commonly called any German in the enemy lines Fritz.

Froebel System. The name given to a system of KINDERGARTEN teaching where children's abilities are developed by means of clay-modelling, mat-plaiting, and other forms of self-activity, developed by Friedrich Froebel (1782-1852), a German schoolmaster.

Frog. A frog and a mouse agreed to settle by a single combat their claims to a marsh; but, while they fought, a kite carried them both off. (ÆSOP: Fables, clxviii).

Old Æsop's fable, where he told
What fate unto the mouse and frog befel.
CARY: Dante, xxiii.

In Ovid's Metamorphoses (vi, 4) we are told that the Lycian shepherds were changed into frogs for mocking LATONA.

As when those hinds that were transformed to frogs

Railed at Latona's twin-born progeny.
MILTON: Sonnet, xi.

Frenchmen, properly Parisians, have been nicknamed Frogs or Froggies, from their ancient heraldic device which was three frogs or toads. (See FLEUR-DE-LIS.)

Qu'en disent les grenouilles? What do the frogs (people of Paris) say?—was in 1791 a common court phrase at VERSAILLES. There was point in the pleasantry, Paris having once been a quagmire, called Lutetia (mud-land). Further point is given to the nickname by the fact that the back legs of the edible frog (Rana esculenta) form a delicacy in French cuisine that aroused much disparaging humour from the English. See CRAPAUD.

Nic Frog. The Dutchman in Arbuthnot's History of John Bull (1712). Frogs are called "Dutch Nightingales".

Frog, or frog's march. Carrying an obstreperous prisoner face downwards by his four limbs.

A frog in the throat. A temporary loss of voice.

It may be fun to you, but it is death to the frogs. A caution, meaning that one's sport should not be at the expense of other people's happiness. The allusion is to ÆSOP's fable of a boy stoning frogs for amusement.

Frogmen. In World War II, strong swimmers dressed in rubber suits with paddles on their feet resembling the feet of frogs, who operated in enemy harbours by night attaching explosives to shipping, etc. They have since been used in salvage operations.

Fronde (frond). The name given to a civil contest in France (1648-1653) during the minority of Louis XIV. It began as a struggle against the Court party for the redress of grievances, but soon became a faction fight among the nobles to undo the work of Cardinal Richelieu and to overthrow Cardinal MAZARIN. Fronde means sling and the name arose from the occasion when the Paris mob pelted Cardinal Mazarin's windows with stones.

The Spanish Fronde. The war between France and Spain (1653-1659), which was a sequel of the FRONDE and in which the frondeur Condé fought for Spain.

Frost Saints. See ICE SAINTS.

Frozen Words. A conceit used by the ancient Greeks. Antiphanes applies it to the discourses of PLATO: "As the cold of certain cities is so intense that it freezes the very words we utter, which remain congealed till the heat of summer thaws them, so the mind of youth is so thoughtless that the wisdom of Plato lies there frozen, as it were, till it is thawed by the ripened judgment of mature age." MUNCHAUSEN relates an incident of the "frozen horn" and Rabelais (Bk. IV, ch. lvi) tells how PANTAGRUEL and his friends, on the confines of the Frozen Sea, heard the uproar of a battle, which had been frozen the preceding winter, released by a thaw.

Where truth in person doth appear
Like words congeal'd in northern air.
BUTLER: Hudibras, canto I, 147-8.

Frying-pan. Out of the frying-pan into the fire. In trying to extricate yourself from one evil you fall into a greater. The Greeks used to say, "Out of the smoke into the flame"; and the French say, "Tomber de la poêle dans la braise".

Frying-pan brand. An Australian term of the mid-19th century to describe the large brand superimposed by cattle thieves to blot out the rightful owner's brand.

Fub. See FOB.

Fuchsia (fū' shā). A genus of highly ornamental flowering shrubs coming from Mexico and the Andes, though two species are found in New Zealand. They were so named in 1703 in honour of the German botanist Leonhard Fuchs (1501-1566).

Fudge. A word of contempt meaning "nonsense!", "absurd!" Its derivation is uncertain. It is also a kind of soft candy.

Fudge-box. An attachment on newspaper printing machines to allow of late news being added to the machine while it is running. This news appears in the "Stop-press" column, which is consequently called the fudge-box. In this sense the word is another form of FADGE.

Fuel. Adding fuel to the fire, or flames. Saying or doing something to increase the anger of a person already incensed.

Fugger. A famous family of German merchant bankers, particularly influential in the 15th and 16th centuries, and proverbial for their great wealth, their news-letter and fine library. Rich as a fugger is common in Elizabethan dramatists. Charles V introduced some of the family into Spain, where they superintended the mines.

Fugit irreparabile tempus (Lat.). Time, which cannot be retrieved, is flying. A classic reminder derived from VIRGIL'S Georgics (II, 284).

Führer (fū' rër) (Ger. leader). The title assumed by Adolf Hitler (1889-1945) when he acceded to supreme power in Germany on the death of Hindenburg in 1934.

Fulhams, or Fullams. An Elizabethan name for loaded dice. Dice made with a cavity were called gourds; those made to throw the high numbers were high fullams or gourds, and those made to throw low numbers were low fullams or gourds.

For gourd and fullam holds
And "high" and "low" beguile the rich and poor.
SHAKESPEARE: Merry Wives of Windsor, I, iii.

The name was probably from Fulham, which was a notorious resort of crooks and rogues.

Full. Full dress. Ceremonial dress; court dress, full uniform, academicals, evening dress, etc.

A full dress debate is one for which proper preparations and arrangements have been made, as opposed to one arising casually.

Full house. A term in the game of poker for a hand holding three of one kind and two of another, e.g. 3 tens and 2 sixes.

Full of beans. See under BEAN.

In full cry. Said of hounds that have caught the scent, and give tongue in chorus; hence hurrying in full pursuit.

In full fig. See FIG.

In full swing. See under SWING.

Fum, or Fung-hwang. The PHOENIX of Chinese legend, one of the four symbolical creatures presiding over the destinies of China. It originated from fire, was born in the Hill of the Sun's HALO, and has its body inscribed with the five CARDINAL virtues. It is this curious creature that was embroidered on the dresses of certain MANDARINS.

Fum. See GEORGE IV.

Fumage. Another name for Hearth-money or CHIMNEY-MONEY (Lat. fumus, smoke).

Fume. In a fume. In a bad temper, especially from impatience.

Fun. To make fun of. To make a butt of; to ridicule.

Like fun. Thoroughly, energetically, with delight.

On'y look at the dimmercrats, see what they've done, jest simply by stickin' together like fun.

LOWELL: Biglow Papers (First series, iv, st. v).

Then that the sound stopped all of a sudden, and the bolts went to like fun.

T. HUGHES: Tom Brown's School-days, II, iii.

Fund. The Funds, or The Public Funds. Money lent at interest to Government or Government security.

The Sinking Fund. Money set aside by the Government for paying off the principal of the NATIONAL DEBT. According to Blackstone, it was intended "to sink and lower the National Debt". The first such fund was established at the end of the reign of Queen Anne.

The Sinking Fund's unfathomable sea,
That most unliking liquid, leaves
The debt unsunk, yet sinks all it receives.
BYRON: Don Juan canto XVI, xcix.

To be out of funds. To be out of money.

Fundamentalism. The maintenance of traditional PROTESTANT Christian beliefs based upon a literal acceptance of the SCRIPTURES as fundamentals. Fundamentalism as a religious movement arose in the U.S.A. about 1919 among various denominations. What was new was not so much its ideas and attitudes, but its wide-spread extent and the zeal of its supporters. It opposed all theories of evolution and anthropology, holding that God transcends all laws of nature and that He manifests Himself by exceptional and extraordinary activities, belief in the literal meaning of the Scriptures being an essential tenet. In 1925, John T. Scopes, a science teacher of Rhea High School, Dayton, Tennessee, was convicted of violating the State laws by teaching evolution, an incident arousing interest and controversy far beyond the religious circles of the U.S.A. Their leader was William Jennings Bryan (1860-1925), the politician and orator. Cp. MODERNISM.

Funeral (Late Lat. funeralis, adj. from funus, a burial). Funus is connected with fumus, smoke, and the word seems to refer to the ancient practice of disposing of the dead by cremation. Roman funerals were conducted by torchlight at night, that magistrates and priests might not be made ceremonially unclean by seeing the corpse.

Most of our funeral customs derive from the Romans; as dressing in BLACK, walking in procession, carrying insignia on the bier, raising a mound on the grave (called tumulus, whence tomb), etc. The Greeks crowned the dead body with flowers, and also placed flowers on the tomb; and the Romans had similar customs. In England the PASSING BELL or the Soul Bell used to be tolled from the church when a parishioner was dying and the funeral bell would be tolled as many times as the dead person's years of age.

Public games were held in Greece and Rome in honour of departed heroes; as the games instituted by HERCULES at the death of Pelops, those held by ACHILLES in honour of PATROCLUS (Iliad, Bk. xxiii), those held by ÆNEAS in honour of his father Anchises (Æneid, Bk V), etc. The custom of giving a feast at funerals came to us from the Romans, who not only feasted the friends of the deceased, but also distributed meat to the persons employed. See ISTHMIAN GAMES; NEMEAN GAMES.

Fung-hwang. See FUM.

Funk. To be in a funk or a blue funk, may be the Walloon "In de fonk zun", literally to "be in the smoke". Colloquially, to be in a state of apprehensive fear or abject fear. The phrase first appears at Oxford in the first half of the 18th century.

Pryce, usually brimful of valour when drunk,
Now experienced what schoolboys denominate funk.

BARHAM: Ingoldsby Legends, I.

Funny Bone. A pun on the word humerus, the Latin name for the arm bone. It is the inner condyle or knob at the end of the bone where the ulnar nerve is exposed at the elbow. A knock on this part is naturally painful and produces a tingling sensation.

Furcam et Flagellum (fēr' kām et flā jel' ūm) (Lat. gallows and whip). In the early MIDDLE AGES, the lowest form of tenure, that of the slave, whose life and limbs were at his lord's disposal. Cp. FORKS.

Furies, The. The Roman name (Furiæ) for the Greek ERINYES, said by Hesiod to have been the daughters of GÆA (the Earth) and to have sprung from the blood of URANUS, and by other accounts to be daughters of Night or of Earth and Darkness. They were three in number, Tisiphone (the Avenger of blood), ALECTO (the Implacable), and Magæra (the Jealous one).

They were merciless goddesses of vengeance and punished all transgressors, especially those who neglected filial duty or claims of kinship, etc. Their punishments continued after death. See EUMENIDES.

The Furies of the Guillotine. See TRICOTEUSES.

Furphy. In World War I containers for sanitary purposes were supplied to Australian military camps by the firm of Furphy and Co., whose name appeared on all their products. Hence a "furphy" was a latrine rumour or a report of doubtful reliability.

Furry Dance. Part of the spring festival held at Helston, Cornwall, on 8 May. Furry Day, which is derived from the Lat. Feria (festivals, holidays), was incorrectly changed to Flora in the 18th century and in the 19th century the dance was called the Floral Dance, as in the well-known song. It is derived from a pre-Christian festivity and is copied in some other towns. In its present form prominent townsfolk dance through the town. There is a similar spring festival at Padstow beginning at midnight on 30 April. See under HOBBY.

Fustian. A coarse twilled cotton cloth with a velvety pile, probably so called from Fustat, a suburb of Cairo. It is chiefly used now in a figurative sense meaning inflated or pompous talk, CLAPTRAP, BOMBAST, pretentious words. Cp. FLANNEL.

Discourse fustian with one's own shadow.
SHAKESPEARE: Othello, II, iii.

Some scurvy quaint collection of fustian phrases and uplandish words.
HETWOOD: Faire Maide of the Exchange, II, ii.

Futhorc (fu' thòrk). The ancient Runic alphabet of the Anglo-Saxons and other Teutons; so called (on the same principle as the A B C) from its first six letters, viz., f, u, th, o, r, k.

Futurism. An art movement which originated at Turin in 1909 under the influence of E.F.T. Marinetti. Its adherents sought to introduce into paintings a "poetry of motion" whereby, for example, the painted gesture should become actually "a dynamic condition". The Futurists tried to indicate not only the state of mind of the painter but also that of the figures in the picture. It was another movement to shake off the influence of the past. The original Futurists included Marinetti, Boccioni, Carra, Russolo, and Severini, and they first exhibited at Paris in 1912. Cp. CUBISM; DADAISM; FAUVISM; IMPRESSIONISM; ORPHISM; SYNCHRONISM; VORTICISM.

Fylfot. A mystic sign or emblem known also as the SWASTIKA and GAMMADION, and in HERALDRY as the cross cramponnée, used (especially in Byzantine architecture and among the North American Indians) as an ornament of religious import. It has been found at Hissarlik, on ancient Etruscan tombs, CELTIC monuments, Buddhist inscriptions, Greek coins, etc. It has been thought to have represented the power of the SUN, of the four winds, of lightning, and so on. It is used nowadays in jewellery as an emblem of luck and was also adopted as the NAZI badge. (See diagram 21, p. 280.)

The name fylfot was adopted by antiquaries from a MS. of the 15th century, and is possibly fill foot, signifying a device to fill the foot of a stained-glass window.

G

G. This letter is a modification of the Latin C (which was a rounding of the Greek gamma, Γ); until the 3rd century B.C. the g and k sounds were both represented by the letter C. In the Hebrew and old Phœnician alphabets G is the outline of a camel's head and neck. Heb. gimel, a camel.

G.C.B. See BATH.

G.I. In World War II, American enlisted men called themselves G.I.s, from an abbreviation of Government Issue. After becoming accustomed to G.I. shirts, G.I. blankets, etc., the soldiers began to apply the term to themselves.

G-man, short for Government Man, an agent of the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation.

G.O.M. The initial letters of "Grand Old Man", a nickname of honour given to W. E. Gladstone (1809-1898), in his later years. Lord Rosebery first used the expression in 1882.

G.P.U. See OGPU.

Gab. The gift of the gab, or gob. Fluency of speech, also the gift of boasting. The word gab may be onomatopœic or derive from the identical Gaelic word for mouth.

Gabbara. The giant who, according to Rabelais, was "the first inventor of the drinking of HEALTHS".

Gabble Ratchet. See GABRIEL'S HOUNDS.

Gabelle (gà bel'). The French tax on salt, first levied in 1286 and abolished in 1790. The word was originally applied to any indirect tax. All the salt made in France had to be brought to the royal warehouses and was there sold at a price fixed by the government. The iniquity was that some provinces had to pay twice as much as others and everyone above the age of eight had to purchase a minimum quantity weekly.

Gaberlunzie. A Scottish term of uncertain origin for a mendicant; or one of the king's BEADSMEN. The name has also been given to the wallet carried by the gaberlunzie-man. See BLUE GOWN.

Though I should die at the back of a dike, they'll find as muckle quilted in this auld blue gown as will bury me like a Christian, and gie the lads and lasses a bliithe lykewake too; see there's the gaberlunzie's burial provided for, and I need nae mair.
SCOTT: The Antiquary, ch. xii.

Gabriel (i.e. man of God). One of the ARCHANGELS, sometimes regarded as the ANGEL of death, the prince of fire and thunder, but more frequently as one of God's chief messengers, and traditionally said to be the only angel that can speak Syriac and Chaldee. The Mohammedans call him the chief of the four favoured angels and the spirit of truth. Milton makes him chief of the angelic guards placed over PARADISE (Paradise Lost, IV, 549).

In the TALMUD Gabriel appears as the destroyer of the hosts of Sennacherib, as the man who showed Joseph the way, and as one of the angels who buried MOSES.

According to the KORAN it was Gabriel who took MOHAMMED to heaven on Al BORAQ and revealed to him his "prophetic love". In the Old Testament Gabriel is said to have explained to DANIEL certain visions (Dan. viii, 16-26); in the New Testament he announced to Zacharias the future birth of JOHN THE BAPTIST (Luke i, 13, etc.) and appeared to Mary the mother of Jesus (Luke i, 26, etc.).

Gabriel Bell. In mediæval England, another name for the ANGELUS or AVE Bell, in remembrance of the archangel's salutation of the Virgin Mary.

Gabriel's horse. Haizum.

Gabriel's hounds, called also Gabble Ratchet. Wild geese. The noise of geese in flight is like that of a pack of hounds in full cry. The legend is that they are the souls of unbaptized children wandering through the air till the Day of JUDGMENT.

Gabrielle, La Belle Gabrielle (1573-1599). Daughter of Antoine d'Estrées, grandmaster of artillery, and governor of the Ile de France. Towards the close of 1590, Henri IV happened to sojourn for a night at the Château de Cœuvres, and fell in love with her. She married Liancourt-Damerval, but in 1592 went to live at court as the king's mistress. She was made Duchess of Beaufort.

Gad. By gad. A minced form of God, occurring also in such forms as Gadzooks, Begad, Egad.

How he still cries "Gad!" and talks of popery coming in, as all fanatiques do.

PEPYS: Diary, 24 Nov. 1662.

Gad-steel. Flemish steel. So called from its being wrought in gads, or small bars (O.E. gad, a small bar or spike).

Gæa (jé' á) or Ge. The Greek goddess of the Earth who gave birth to sky, mountains, and sea. By URANUS she brought forth the TITANS, the CYCLOPS and other GIANTS and according to some legends she was the mother of the EUMENIDES.

Gaelic (gá' lik). The language of the Gaelic branch of the CELTIC race. The name is now usually restricted to the Celtic language of the Scottish Highlands, but also includes that of Irish and Manx Celts. See ERSE.

Gaff. Slang for humbug; also for a cheap public entertainment or a low-class MUSIC HALL, often called penny gaffs from the price of admission. Such theatres were once common on the Surrey side of the Thames.

Crooked as a gaff. Here a gaff is an iron hook at the end of a short pole, used for landing salmon, etc., or the metal spur of fighting-cocks (Span. and Port. gafa, a boat-hook).

To blow the gaff. See under BLOW.

To stand the gaff. To bear punishment or raillery with calmness.

Gaffer. An old country fellow; the boss, overseer, or foreman; a corruption of "grandfather". Cp. GAMMER.

Gag. In theatrical parlance, an interpolation. When SHAKESPEARE makes Hamlet direct the players to say no more "than is set down" (III, ii) he cautions them against gagging; also a joke.

Gag-man. One who is employed to supply jokes for films, radio programmes, etc.

That's just a gag. A mere trick or deception. Something to "take one in".

To apply the gag. Said of applying the CLOSURE in the HOUSE OF COMMONS. Here gag is something forced into the mouth to prevent speech.

Gaiety. The Gaiety of Nations. This phrase, now often used ironically, such as "that won't add much to the gaiety of nations", derives from Dr. Johnson's words on hearing of the death of David Garrick—"I am disappointed by that stroke of death which has eclipsed the gaiety of nations and impoverished the public stock of harmless pleasure."

Gaiety Girl. One of the beauty chorus for which the old Gaiety Theatre in the STRAND was famous in the '90s and Edwardian days. Several of them married into the peerage. Cp. GIBSON GIRL.

Gala Day. A festive day; a day when people put on their best attire (Ital. gala, festivity).

Galahad, Sir (gál' a hăd). In Arthurian legend the purest and noblest knight of the ROUND TABLE. He is a late addition and was invented by Walter Map in his Quest of the San Graal. He was the son of LANCELOT and ELAINE. At the institutions of the Round Table one seat (the Siege Perilous) was left unoccupied for the knight who could succeed in the Quest. When Sir Galahad sat there it was discovered that it had been left for him. The story is found in Malory's Morte d'Arthur, Tennyson's The Holy Grail, etc.

Galatea (gál' á tē' a). A sea NYMPH, beloved by the monster POLYPHEMUS, but herself in love with the beautiful ACIS, who was killed by the jealous CYCLOPS. Galatea threw herself into the sea where she joined her sister nymphs. Handel has an opera entitled Acis and Galatea (1720). The Galatea beloved by PYGMALION was a different person.

Galaxy, The (Gr. gala, galaktos, milk). The "Milky Way". A long white luminous track of stars which seems to encompass the heavens like a girdle. It is composed of a vast collection of stars so distant that they are indistinguishable as separate stars, and they appear as a combined light. According to classic fable, it is the path to the palace of ZEUS.

Galen (gā' len). A Greek physician and philosopher of the 2nd century A.D. For centuries he was the supreme authority in medicine. Hence Galenist, a follower of Galen's medical theories; Galenical, a simple, vegetable medicine.

Galen says "Nay" and Hippocrates "Yea". The doctors disagree, and who is to decide? HIPPOCRATES, born at Cos (460 B.C.) was the most celebrated physician of antiquity.

Galère. Que diable allait-il faire dans cette galère? What the devil was he doing in that galley? This is from MOLIERE's comedy of Les Fourberies de Scapin. Scapin wants to bamboozle Géronte out of his money, and tells him that his master (Géronte's son) is detained prisoner on a Turkish galley, where he went out of curiosity. The above was Géronte's reply. The phrase is applied to one who finds himself in difficulties through being where he ought not to be, or in some unexpected predicament.

Vogue la galère. See under VOGUE.

Galilean. An inhabitant of Galilee, and specifically Jesus Christ, who was called "the Galilean". The term was also applied to Christians as his followers. The dying words attributed to the Roman Emperor Julian the Apostate were "Vicisti, Galilæe".

Thou hast conquered, O pale Galilean; the world has grown grey from thy breath.
SWINBURNE: Hymn to Proserpine.

Galimatias (gāl i mā' shās). Nonsense, unmeaning gibberish. The word first appeared in France in the 16th century, but its origin is unknown; perhaps it is connected with GALLIMAUFRY. In his translation of Rabelais, Urquart heads ch. ii of Bk. I a "Galimatias of Extravagant Conceits found in an Ancient Monument".

Gall (gawl). Bile; the very bitter fluid secreted by the liver; hence used figuratively as a symbol for anything of extreme bitterness.

Gall and wormwood. Extremely bitter and mortifying.

And I said, My strength and my hope is perished from the Lord: Remembering mine affliction and my misery, the wormwood and the gall.
Lam. iii, 18, 19.

The gall of bitterness. The bitterest grief; extreme affliction. The ancients taught that grief and joy were subject to the gall as affection was to the heart, and knowledge to the kidneys. The "gall of bitterness" means the bitter centre of bitterness, as the "heart of hearts" means the innermost recesses of the heart or affections. In the Acts it is used to signify "the sinfulness of sin", which leads to the bitterest grief.

For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity.
Acts viii, 23.

Gall of Pigeons. The story goes that pigeons have no gall, because the dove sent from the ark by Noah burst its gall out of grief, and none of the pigeon family has had a gall ever since.

For sin' the Flood of Noah
The dow she has nae ga'.

JAMIESON:

Popular Ballads (Lord of Rorlin's Daughter).

Gallant. The meaning of this word varies with its pronunciation. As Gāl' ānt, it is an adjective meaning brave, grand, fine, chivalrous; as gāl' ānt', it means the cavalier or admirer of women, a flirt, or the adjective and verb implying this.

That gallant spirit hath aspir'd the clouds,
Which too untimely here did scorn the earth.
SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, III, 1.

These two gallants passed Peveril more than once, linked arm in arm . . . staring broadly at Peveril and his female companions.
SCOTT: Peveril of the Peak, ch. xxxii.

Gallery. A gallery hit. In CRICKET is an exceptionally stylish stroke which arouses the crowd's enthusiasm.

To play to the gallery. An appeal to the lower elements of one's audience, to count popularity by such methods as an actor seeking popular applause from the patrons of the cheapest seats in the theatre, these being in the gallery.

The instant we begin to think about success and the effect of our work—to play with one eye on the gallery—we lose power and touch and everything else.—KIPLING: The Light that Failed, ch. VII.

Galley Halfpence. Small silver coin, chiefly from Genoa, brought over by Italian wine merchants ("galley men") in the 15th century. Stowe says they used Galley Quay in Thames Street. The use of such coins was forbidden in England.

Galley men . . . had certain coin of silver amongst themselves, which were halfpence of Genoa, and were called Galley Halfpence; these halfpence were forbidden in the 13th of Henry IV, and again by Parliament in the 4th of Henry V.

STOWE: Survey of London.

Gallia. France, as in Thomson's

Impending hangs o'er Gallia's humbled coast.
The Seasons: Summer.

More properly the Latin name for Gaul, the much more extensive areas then populated by CELTIC peoples.

Gallia Bracata, or Braccata (trousered Gaul). South-western Gaul from the Pyrenees to the Alps, or Gallia Narbonensis (from the Gaulish town of Narbo, the modern Narbonne), part of GALLIA TRANSALPINA. See GENS BRACCATA under GENS.

Gallia Cisalpina, or Citerior. Gaul this side of the Alps, i.e. Northern Italy; also called Gallia Togata from the Roman form of dress worn.

Gallia Comata. That part of Gaul which belonged to the Roman Emperor was so called from the hair (coma) of the inhabitants, which flowed over their shoulders. Also called Tres Provinciae, it included the three provinces Aquitania, Lugdunensis, and Belgica, with a common capital at Lugdunum (Lyon).

Gallia Togata. See GALLIA CISALPINA; TOGA.

Gallia Transalpina, or Uterior. Often called simply GALLIA, it included the modern France, Belgium, and parts of Holland, Germany, and Switzerland.

Gallicism. A phrase or sentence constructed after the French idiom; as, "When you shall have returned home you will find a letter on your table." In Matt. xv, 32, "I have compassion on the multitude, because they continue with me now three days, and have nothing to eat", is a Gallicism. Cp. Mark viii, 2. Also the use of a word in a sense peculiar to the French language, as "assist" in the sense of to "be present", using a word common to both languages in a French sense, etc.

Galligaskins. A loose wide kind of breeches worn by men in the 16th and 17th centuries.

My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The winter's fury and encroaching frosts . . .
A horrid chasm disclos'd, with orifice
Wide, discontinuous.

J. PHILIPS: The Splendid Shilling (1701).

The word is a corruption of Fr. garguesque, which is the Ital. grechesca, Greekish, referring to a Greek article of clothing.

Gallimaufry. A medley; any confused jumble of things; but strictly speaking, a HOTCH-POTCH made of all the scraps of the larder (Fr. galimafrée, the origin of which is unknown, though it is probably related to GALIMATIAS).

They have a kind of dance which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in't.

SHAKESPEARE: Winter's Tale, IV, iii.

Gallio. A name applied to a person, particularly an official whose chief characteristic is one of indifference, especially to things outside his province.

And Gallio cared for none of those things.
Acts xviii, 17.

Gallo-Belgicus (gäl ö bel' ji kūs). An annual register in Latin for European circulation, first published in 1598.

It is believed,
And told for news with as much diligence
As if 'twere writ in Gallo-Belgicus.

THOMAS MAY: The Heir, 1615.

Galloglass, or Gallowglass. An armed servitor of foot-soldier in ancient IRELAND (O.Ir. and Gael. gall, a stranger; oglach, a warrior). SHAKESPEARE speaks of kerns and gallowglasses as coming from the Western Isles of SCOTLAND. See KERN.

The merciless Macdonwald . . . from the Western Isles
Of kerns and gallowglasses is supplied.

Macbeth, I, ii.

Gallup Poll. The best known of the public opinion surveys, instituted by Dr. George Gallup of the American Institute of Public Opinion in 1935. Trained interviewers interrogate a carefully selected but small cross-section of the population. For the British Parliamentary election of 1945, out of 25 million voters, 1,809 were interviewed, but the Gallup Poll forecast was within 1 per cent; but the forecast was wrong for the American Presidential Election of 1948. The LABOUR PARTY victory was forecast for the British Parliamentary Elections in 1964 and 1966. It is held that such polls in themselves influence the result. STRAW POLLS and market research surveys were the forerunners of the Gallup Poll. Cp. MASS OBSERVATION.

Galosh. The word comes from the Span. galocha (wooden shoes); Ger. Galosche; Fr. galoche, which is probably from Gr. kalopous, a shoemaker's last.

It was originally applied to a kind of clog or patten worn as a protection against wet in the days when silk or cloth shoes were worn. It is used in this sense by Langland.

. . . the kynde of Knyght that cometh to be doubed,
To geten hus gilte spores and galoches y-couped.

Piers Plowman, xxi, 12.

Galway Jury. An enlightened, independent jury. The expression has its origin when Thomas Wentworth, Lord Deputy of IRELAND, revived the king's claim to all the lands of Connaught. The juries of Mayo, Sligo, and Roscommon found verdicts in favour of the Crown, but that of Galway stood out against the plan; whereupon the SHERIFF was sentenced to a fine of £1,000 and each of the jurors £4,000.

Gambrel. Also known as cambrel, chambrel, chambren, gambril (O.Fr. gambe, the leg); the hock of a horse or other animal, also a crooked stick somewhat similarly shaped once used by butchers, from which they suspended carcasses. See MANSARD ROOF.

"Gambrel?—Gambrel?"—Let me beg
You'll look at a horse's hinder leg—
First great angle above the hoof,—
That's the gambrel; hence gambrel-roof.

O. W. HOLMES:
Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table, xii.

Game (O.E. gamen, joy, sport). This word is variously used to mean play, sport, contest, trick, jest, etc.; it is also applied collectively to certain wild animals and birds legally protected and pursued for sport. See SPORTING SEASONS.

The game's afoot. The hare has started; the enterprise has begun.

I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. The game's afoot!
Follow your spirit!

SHAKESPEARE: Henry V, III, i.

The game is not worth the candle.
See under CANDLE.

The game is up. The scheme, endeavour, plot, etc., has come to grief; all is at an end. In hunting it has the same significance as THE GAME'S AFOOT.

He's a game 'un. He's got some pluck, he's "a plucked 'un". Another allusion to gamecocks.

He's at his little games again, or at the same old game. He's at his old tricks; he's gone back to his old habits or practices.

To die game. To maintain a courageous attitude to the end. A phrase from COCK-FIGHTING.

To have the game in one's hands. To have such an advantage that success is assured; to hold the winning cards.

To play a waiting game. To bide one's time, knowing that that is the best way of winning; to adopt FABIAN TACTICS (see under FABIAN).

To play the game. To act in a straightforward, honourable manner; to keep to the rules of fair play.

This they all with a joyful mind
Bear through life like a torch in flame,
And falling, fling to the host behind—
"Play up! Play up! and play the game!"

SIR HENRY NEWBOLT: Vitai Lampada.

You are making game of me. You are bamboozling me, holding me up to ridicule. Cp. TO PULL SOMEONE'S LEG under PULL.

Game Chicken. The sobriquet of the pugilist Hen Pearce. Beginning as a pupil of James Belcher, he eventually defeated his teacher in a terrible battle on Barnby Moor near Doncaster, 6 December, 1805.

Game Laws. A series of enactments akin to the old FOREST LAW, designed to protect game for the landowner and to prevent poaching, and formerly noted for their harshness. In 1671 a Game Law was passed which prevented all freeholders killing game except those with lands worth £100 a year. The Extraordinary Black Book of 1831 pointed out that 50 times more property was required to kill a partridge than to vote for a KNIGHT OF THE SHIRE. In the reign of George III 32 Game Laws were passed. The modern game licence for the killing of game stems from the Game Act of 1831, which also demarcated the seasons during which certain game might be taken. From 1671 to 1831 the sale of game was totally prohibited, thus providing a lucrative market for poachers.

A labourer in Christian England,
Where they cant of a Saviour's name,
And yet waste men's lives like the vermin's
For a few more brace of game.

CHARLES KINGSLEY: Yeast, ch. xi.

Game leg. A lame leg. In this instance game is a dialect form of the CELTIC cam, meaning crooked. It is of comparatively modern usage. Gammy is also in this sense.

Gamecock State. An old nickname for South Carolina, from the supposedly warlike nature of its inhabitants. See PALMETTO STATE.

Gamesmanship. A term popularized by Stephen Potter, whose book The Theory and Practice of Gamesmanship (1947) defines the meaning in its sub-title "The Art of Winning Games without actually Cheating".

Gamelyn, The Tale of (gäm' lin). A Middle English metrical romance, found among the Chaucer MSS. and supposed to have been intended by him to form the basis of one of the unwritten Canterbury Tales, although the authorship is still in doubt. Gamelyn is a younger son to whom a large share of property has been bequeathed by his father. He is kept in servitude and tyrannically used by his elder brother until he is old enough to rebel. After many adventures during which he becomes a leader of outlaws in the woods, he comes to his own again with the help of the king, and justice is meted out to the elder brother. Thomas Lodge uses the story in his book, Rosalynde, or Euphues' Golden Legacie (1590), from which SHAKESPEARE drew a large part of As You Like It.

Gammadion (ga mā' di òn). The FYLFOT or SWASTIKA, so called because it resembles four Greek capital gammas (Γ) set at right angles.

Gammer. A former rustic term for an old woman; a corruption of grandmother, with an intermediate form of granmer. Cp. GAFFER.

Gammer Gurton's Needle. The second earliest extant English comedy, which was probably written by William Stevenson of Christ's College, Cambridge, in the early 1550s but not published until 1575. The comedy is vigorous and it closes with the discovery of Gammer Gurton's missing needle in the seat of Hodge's breeches.

Gammon. This word derives from the same original as game and gamble, but in Victorian and later slang it means to impose upon, delude, cheat, or play a game upon. As an exclamation it means, "Nonsense, you're pulling my leg".

A landsman said, "I twig the chap—he's been upon the Mill, And 'cause he gammons so the flats, ve calls him Weeping Bill."

BARHAM:
Ingoldsby Legends (Misadventures at Margate).

Gamp. Sarah Gamp is a disreputable monthly nurse in Dickens's Martin Chuzzlewit, famous for her bulky umbrella and perpetual reference to an imaginary Mrs. Harris, whose opinions always confirmed her own. Hence a gamp as a common term for an umbrella.

Gamut (gām' üt). Originally, the first or lowest note in Guido d'Arezzo's scale, corresponding to G on the lowest line of the modern bass stave; later the whole series of notes recognized by musicians; hence, the whole range or compass.

It is gamma ut; gamma (the third letter of the Greek alphabet) was used by Guido to mark the first or lowest note in the mediæval scale; and ut is the first word in the mnemonic stanza, Ut queant laxis resonare fibris, etc., containing the names of the hexachord. See ARETINIAN SYLLABLES.

Gandermonth. An old term for the month following a wife's confinement, when the husband was at a loose end, and sometimes went *gandermoon*ing or playing the GALLANT. The term possibly derives from the aimless meanderings of the gander when the goose is sitting.

Ganelon. A type of black-hearted treachery, figuring in Dante's Inferno and grouped by Chaucer (Priest's Tale, 407) with JUDAS Iscariot and—

Greek Sinon,
That broghtest Troye al outrely to sorwe.

He was Count of Mayence, and PALADIN of CHARLEMAGNE. Jealousy of ROLAND made him a traitor; and in order to destroy his rival, he planned with Marsillus, the Moorish king, the attack of RONCESVALLES.

Ganesha (gān' esh ā). In Hindu mythology, the god of wisdom and good luck, lord of the Ganas, or lesser deities. He was the son of SIVA and is invoked at the beginning of a journey, or when commencing important work, and on the first pages of books, especially ledgers.

Gang. A gang of saws. A number of power-driven circular saws mounted together so that they can reduce a tree trunk to planks at one operation. Gang is similarly applied to various collections of tools, machines, etc., working in combination.

Apple Tree Gang. See under APPLE.

Gang aley, To (Scot.). To go wrong. The verb to glee, or gley, means to look askint, sideways.

The best-laid schemes of mice and men
Gang aft aley.

BURNS: To a Mouse.

Gang-day. See ROGATION DAYS.

To gang-up. To form a closely-knit group, usually in a spirit of antagonism.

Ganges, The (gān' jéz). So named from ganga or gunga, a river; as in Kishenganga (the black river), Neelganga (the blue river), Narainganga (the river of Naranyana or VISHNU). The Ganges is the Borra Ganga, or great river. This sacred river of the Hindus is said to flow from the toe of Vishnu.

Those who through the curse, have fallen from heaven, having performed ablution in this stream, become free from sin; cleansed from sin by this water and restored to happiness, they shall enter heaven and return again to the gods.

The Ramayana (section xxxv).

Gangway. Originally the boarded way (sometimes called the gang-board) in the old galleys made for the rowers to pass from stem to stern, and where the mast was laid when it was unshipped (gang, an alley). Now the footboards with protecting railings by which passengers enter or leave a ship. When used as an exclamation it means "make way".

Below the gangway. In the HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the farther side of the passageway between the seats which separate the Ministry from the rest of the Members. Thus "to sit below the gangway" is to sit among the members in general, and not among the Ministers or ex-Ministers and leaders of the OPPOSITION.

Ganymede, or Ganymedes. In Greek mythology, the cup-bearer of ZEUS, successor to HEBE, and the type of youthful male beauty. This Trojan youth was taken up to OLYMPUS and made immortal. Hence a cup-bearer generally.

Nature waits upon thee still,
And thy verdant cup does fill;
'Tis fill'd wherever thou dost tread,
Nature's self's thy Ganymede.
COWLEY: The Grasshopper (Anacreontics).

Gaora (gā ōr' a). According to Hakluyt this was a tract of land inhabited by people without heads, with eyes in their shoulders and their mouths in their breasts. Cp. BLEMMYES.

Gape. Looking for gape-seed. Gaping about and doing nothing. A corruption of "Looking agapesing"; gapesing (still used in Norfolk) is staring about with one's mouth open.

Seeking a gape's nest (Devon). A gape's nest is a sight which one stares at with wide-open mouth. Cp. MARE'S NEST.

Garcia (gar' si á). To take a message to Garcia is to be resourceful and courageous, to be able to accept responsibility and carry one's task through to the end. The phrase originated in the exploit of Lieut. Andrew Rowan who, in the Spanish-American War of 1898, made his way through the Spanish blockade into Cuba, made contact with General Calixto Garcia, chief of the Cuban insurgent forces, and carried news from him back to Washington.

Garcias. The soul of Pedro Garcias. Money. The story is that two scholars of Salamanca discovered a tombstone with the inscription "Here lies the soul of the licentiate Pedro Garcias". On searching they found a purse containing a hundred golden ducats (Lesage: Gil Blas, Preface).

Garden, or Garden Sect, The. The disciples of EPICURUS, who taught them in his own garden.

The Garden of Eden. See EDEN. Traditionally supposed to be sited in Mesopotamia.

Garden of the Hesperides. See HESPERIDES.

Garden City. A name given to both Norwich and Chicago; also, as a general name, to model townships specially planned to provide attractive layouts for housing and industry with a surrounding rural belt and adequate open spaces. The term was first used by an American, A. T. Stewart, in 1869, and applied to an estate development on Long Island, New York. The "garden city" movement in England was due to the ideas of Sir Ebenezer Howard (1850-1928) set out in his book To-morrow (1898). The first English garden city was founded at Letchworth, Hertfordshire, in 1903. See GARDEN SUBURB.

Garden Suburb. A name applied to certain model suburbs (e.g. Hampstead Garden Suburb) with certain characteristics of a GARDEN CITY.

The Garden Suburb. The nickname applied to Lloyd George's personal staff of advisers which he established and made increasing use of after he became head of the War Cabinet (December 1916). The name derives from the fact that they were accommodated in huts in St. James's Park. The "Garden Suburb" was dispersed when Bonar Law assumed the premiership in 1922.

Garden. A term commonly applied to the more fertile areas as:

Garden of England. Kent and Worcester are both so called.

Garden of Europe. Italy.

Garden of France. Amboise, in the department of Indre-et-Loire; also Touraine.

Garden of India. Oudh.

Garden of Ireland. Carlow.

Garden of Italy. The island of Sicily.

Garden of Spain. Andalusia.

Garden of Switzerland. Thurgau.

Garden of the Sun. The East Indian (or Malayan) Archipelago.

Garden of the West. Illinois; also applied to Kansas ("the Garden State").

Garden of the World. The region of the Mississippi.

To lead up the garden, or garden path. To deceive, to trick, to entice with false promises of fair prospects, etc.

Gardy loo. The cry of warning formerly given by Edinburgh housewives and servants when about to empty the contents of the slop-pail out of the window into the street below. It is a corruption of the Fr. gare de l'eau, beware of the water.

At ten o'clock at night the whole cargo of the chamber utensils is flung out of a back window that looks into some street or lane, and the maid calls "Gardy loo" to the passengers.

SMOLLETT: Humphry Clinker.

Gargantua. A giant of mediæval or possibly CELTIC legend famous for his enormous appetite (Sp. garganta, gullet), adopted by Rabelais in his great satire (1535), and made the father of PANTAGRUEL. One of his exploits was to swallow five pilgrims, complete with their staves, in a salad. He is the subject of a number of CHAP-BOOKS, and became proverbial as a voracious and insatiable guzzler.

You must borrow me Gargantua's mouth first before I can utter so long a word; 'tis a word too great for any mouth of this age's size.

SHAKESPEARE: As You Like It, III, ii.

Gargouille (gar goo ēl'). The great DRAGON that lived in the Seine, ravaged Rouen, and was slain by St. Romanus, Archbishop of Rouen, in the 7th century.

Garibaldi's red shirt. The famous red shirt worn by Garibaldi and his followers during the liberation of Italy was of accidental origin. When Garibaldi was raising an Italian legion at Montevideo in 1843 a number of red woollen shirts came on the market owing to the difficulties in trade due to the war with Argentina. The government of Uruguay bought them up cheaply and gave them to Garibaldi for his men. When the Italian Legion came over to Italy in 1848 they brought their red shirts with them.

The Garibaldi biscuit, in which currants are mixed in the pastry, was a form of food much favoured by the General on his farm in Caprera.

The name Garibaldi was also given to a loose-fitting blouse for women fashionable in the late 19th century.

Garland. Primarily a wreath of flowers either worn or festooned around something. Its use has also been extended to apply to an anthology of prose or verse.

What I now offer to your lordships is a collection of Poetry, a kind of Garland of Good Will.

PRIOR's dedication to his Poems.

Garlic. The old superstition that garlic can destroy the magnetic power of the LODESTONE has the sanction of Pliny, Solinus, Ptolemy, Plutarch, Albertus, Mathiolus, Rubeus, Rulandus, Renodæus, Langius, and others. Sir Thomas Browne places it among Vulgar Errors (Bk. II, ch. iii).

Martin Rulandus saith that Onions and Garlic ... hinder the attractive power of the magnet and rob it of its virtue of drawing iron, to which Renodæus agrees; but this is all lies.

W. SALMON:

The Complete English Physician, ch. xxv (1693).

Garnish. In old prison slang, the entrance money, to be spent in drink, demanded by gaol-birds from new arrivals. Garnish means embellishment, extra decoration to dress, etc.; hence, it was applied by prisoners to fetters, and the garnish-money was money given for the "honour" of wearing them; the bigger the "garnish", the lighter the fetters.

In its original meaning to garnish was to warn (Fr. garnir), and it is in this sense still used in the legal term garnishee, one warned not to pay money he owes to another, because the latter is in debt to the garnisher who issues the warning.

Garratt. The Mayor of Garratt. The "mayor" of Garratt, Wandsworth, was really the chairman of an association of villagers formed to resist encroachments on the common in the latter part of the 18th century. It became the practice to choose a new "mayor" at the same time as the occurrence of a General Election. These events became popular public occasions and at one such there were more than 80,000 people present—the candidates usually being lively characters. During one election a dead cat was thrown at the hustings and a bystander remarked that it stank "worse than a fox." "That's no wonder", replied Sir John Harper (one of the mayors), "For you see, it's a poll-cat."

The election addresses were written by Garrick, Wilkes, and others, and were satires on electoral corruption and contemporary political life. The first recorded mayor was "Squire Blowme-down"; the last (1796) was "Sir" Harry Dimsdale, a muffin-seller and dealer in tinware.

Foote has a farce called The Mayor of Garratt (1764). The place-name still survives in Garratt Lane.

Garraway's. A famous coffee-house in Change Alley, Cornhill, opened about 1670 by Thomas Garraway (or Garway, etc.) although he was probably trading in the late 1650s in Sweetings Rents. He also sold tea "in leaf and drink" and claimed to be the first vendor (1657) of that commodity to the general public (this claim probably refers to his former premises). Garraway's came to be much frequented by merchants, bankers, the South Sea Company Directors and other City men and was long used by such as a business address. In 1719 and 1720 various "bubble companies" advertised from Garraway's and a wide variety of merchandise was auctioned there, including ships, beaver coats for the Hudson's Bay Company, house property, and lesser merchandise. Garraway's closed in 1866 and the building was demolished about 1873. See SOUTH SEA BUBBLE.

There is an old monastery-crypt under Garraway's (I have been in it among the port wine), and perhaps Garraway taking pity on the mouldy men who wait in its public room all their lives, gives them cool house-room down there over Sundays.

DICKENS: The Uncommercial Traveller, ch. xxii.

Garter. The Most Noble Order of the Garter. The highest order of Knighthood in Great Britain, traditionally instituted by King Edward III about 1348, and reconstituted in 1805 and 1831. The popular legend is that the Countess of Salisbury accidentally slipped her garter at a court ball. It was picked up by the king who, noticing the significant looks of the spectators, rebuked them by binding the blue band round his own knee, saying as he did so, HONI SOIT QUI MAL Y PENSE. The lady has also been named as Joan the FAIR MAID OF KENT, and Queen Philippa. The order is limited to the Sovereign, and other members of the Royal Family, with 25 knights, and such foreign royalties as may be admitted by statute. The only Ladies of the Garter are the Sovereign's Queen and his eldest daughter when she is heir presumptive to the throne. Until Viscount Grey (then Sir Edward Grey) was admitted to the order in 1912, no commoner for centuries had been able to put "K.G." after his name. Sir Winston Churchill received the Order of the Garter from Queen Elizabeth II in 1957.

ST. GEORGE was from the outset the special patron of the Order and it is sometimes called the Order of St. George, and each Knight is allotted a stall in St. George's Chapel, Windsor. The habits and insignia are the garter, mantle, surcoat, hood, star, collar, and GEORGE.

Garters. Wearing the garters of a pretty girl either on the hat or knee was a common custom with our forefathers. Brides usually wore on their legs a host of gay ribbons, to be distributed after the marriage ceremony amongst the bridegroom's friends; and the piper at the wedding dance never failed to tie a piece of the bride's garter round his pipe.

Magic garters. In the old romances, etc., garters made of the strips of a young hare's skin saturated with motherwort. Those who wore them excelled in speed. Prick the garter. An old swindling game, better known as "Fast and Loose". See under FAST.

Garvies. Sprats; perhaps so called from Inch-garvie, the island in the Firth of Forth.

Gasconade. Absurd boasting, vainglorious BRAGGADOCIO. It is said that a Gascon, being asked what he thought of the Louvre in Paris, replied "Pretty well; it reminds me of the back part of my father's stables"; an especially boastful answer when the Gascons were proverbial for their poverty. Another Gascon, in proof of his ancient nobility, asserted that they used no other fuel in his father's house than the batons of the family MARSHALS.

Gat. An American slang term for an automatic pistol. It is a contraction of Gatling, from the machine-gun invented (1861-1862) by Richard Jordan Gatling (1818-1903), of North Carolina.

Gat-tooth. Chaucer's "Wife of Bath" was gat-toothed (see Prolog. to Canterbury Tales, 468, and Wife of Bath's Prolog., 603); this probably means that her teeth were set wide apart, with gats, i.e. openings or gaps between them. Some editors suggest it is gat-toothed (O.E. gat), i.e. lascivious, like a GOAT.

Gate. Gate of Italy. A narrow gorge between two mountain ridges in the valley of the Adige, in the vicinity of Trent and Rovereto.

Gate of Tears. The passage into the Red Sea. So called by the Arabs (Bab-el-Mandeb) from the number of shipwrecks that took place there.

Golden Gate. See under GOLD.

Gate crasher. One who gains entrance to a social function without invitation or ticket of admission. The origin is obvious.

Gate money. Money paid at the door or gate for admission to an enclosure where some entertainment or contest, etc., is to take place.

Gate-posts. The post on which a gate hangs is called the hanging-post; that against which it shuts is called the banging-post.

Gate-post bargain. A "cash down" deal. An old country custom of placing the purchase money on the gate-post before the stock being sold left the field. Cp. LUCK MONEY; TO PAY ON THE NAIL under NAIL.

Between you and me and the gate-post. Strictly confidentially.

Gath. Tell it not in Gath. Don't let your enemies hear it. Gath was famed as the birthplace of the giant GOLIATH.

Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon: lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph.

II Sam. i, 20.

Gatling Gun. See GAT.

Gaudy, or Gaudy-day (gaw' di) (Lat. gaudium, joy). A holiday, a feast-day; especially an annual celebration of some event, such as the foundation of a college.

Gaudy is also one of the beads in the ROSARY marking the five joys or JOYFUL MYSTERIES of the Virgin, and the name given to one of the tapers burnt at the commemoration of the same.

Gaul. The country inhabited by the Gauls. See GALLIA.

Gaunt. John of Gaunt (1340-1399), fourth son of Edward III; so called from his birthplace, Ghent in Flanders.

Gauntlet. To run the gauntlet. To be attacked on all sides, to be severely criticized. The word came into English at the time of the THIRTY YEARS WAR (1618-1648) as gantlope, meaning the passage between two files of soldiers. It is the Swedish gata, a way, passage (cp. GAT-TOOTH) and loop (connected with our leap, a course). The reference is to the former punishment among soldiers and sailors; the company or crew, provided with rope ends, were drawn up in two rows facing each other, and the delinquent had to run between them, while every man dealt him as severe a punishment as he could.

To take up the gauntlet. To accept a challenge. See GLOVE.

To throw down the gauntlet. To challenge. In mediæval times, when one KNIGHT challenged another, the custom was for the challenger to throw his gauntlet on the ground, and if the challenge was accepted the person to whom it was thrown picked it up. Such a challenge was used by the CHAMPION OF ENGLAND.

Gautama (gaw ta' ma). The family name of BUDDHA. His personal name was Siddhartha, his father's name Suddhodana, and his mother's name Maya. He assumed the title Buddha at about the age of 36, when, after seven years of seclusion and spiritual struggle, he believed himself to have attained to perfect truth.

Gauvaine. GAWAIN.

Gavelkind. A system of tenure essentially peculiar to Kent, and probably originating after the Norman Conquest. It was based on the freeman who gave rent or gafol to his lord instead of services. If a person died intestate his property was divided equally among his sons. The dower was a half instead of a third of the husband's land; a widower's curtesy one-half of the wife's land while he remained unmarried. Cp. BOROUGH ENGLISH.

Gawain (gá wān'). One of the most famous of the Arthurian knights, nephew of King ARTHUR and probably the original hero of the GRAIL quest. He appears in the Welsh Triads and in the MABINOGION as Gwalchmei, and in the Arthurian cycle is the centre of many episodes and poems. The Middle English poem Sir Gawain and the Green Knight (c. 1360) is a romance telling how Gawain beheads the Green Knight in single combat.

Gay. A gay deceiver. A LOTHARIO, a LIBERTINE.

The Gay Science. A translation of gai saber, the old Provençal name for the art of poetry. A guild formed at Toulouse in 1323 with the object of keeping in existence the dying Provençal language and culture was called the Gai Saber. Its full title was "The Very Gay Company of the Seven Troubadours of Toulouse".

Gaze. To stand at gaze. To stand in doubt what to do. When a stag first hears the hounds it stands dazed, looking all round, and in doubt what to do. Heralds call a stag represented full-faced, "a stag at gaze".

As the poor frightened deer, that stands at gaze,
Wildly determining which way to fly.
SHAKESPEARE: Rape of Lucrece, II.49.

Gaze-hound. See LYME-HOUND.

Gazette. A newspaper. A word of Italian origin derived from the government newspaper issued in Venice from about 1536. It may be a diminutive of gazza, a magpie, in the sense of gossip, tittle-tattle, chatter (cp. the English Tatler, Chatterbox, Town Talk), or from gazetta, a small coin charged as a fee for reading the Venetian newspaper.

The London Gazette, an official government organ, appeared first as the Oxford Gazette in 1665, when the Court was at Oxford. It was transferred to LONDON in 1666 and has appeared on Tuesdays and Fridays ever since. It contains announcements of pensions, promotions, bankruptcies, dissolutions of partnerships, etc. Cp. NEWS; YELLOW PRESS.

Similar journals are published at Edinburgh and Belfast, the latter being transferred from Dublin after the establishment of the Irish Free State.

Gazetted. Posted in the LONDON GAZETTE as having received some official appointment, service promotion, etc., or on being declared bankrupt, etc.

Gazetteer. A geographical and topographical index or dictionary; so called because the name of one of the earliest such works in English was Laurence Echard's The Gazetteer's or Newsman's Interpreter (1703), i.e. it was intended for the use of journalists, gazetteer being a word applied to writers of news.

Ge. See GÆA.

Gear. Clothing, equipment, etc., as, for example, sports gear (O.E. gearwe, dress). Also the combination of toothed wheels and levers which connect a motor with its work, etc. High gear is the arrangement whereby the driving part moves slowly in relation to the driven part; low gear is when the driving part moves relatively more quickly than the driven.

In good gear. To be in good working order.

Out of gear. Not in working condition; out of health.

Gee-up! and Gee-whoa! Interjections addressed to horses meaning respectively "Go ahead!" and "Stop!" From them came the children's term "gee-gee", a horse, which was adopted by sporting men and others, as in "Backing the gee-gees".

Geese. See GOOSE.

Gehenna (ge hen' à) (Heb.). The place of eternal torment. Strictly speaking, it means the "Valley of Hinnom" (Ge-Hinnom), where sacrifices to BAAL and MOLOCH were offered (Jer. xix, 6, etc.). It came to be regarded as a place of unquenchable fire, possibly from the fires of Moloch.

And made his grove

The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence
And black Gehenna called, the type of hell.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, I, 403.

Gelert (gel' èrt). Llewelyn's dog. See BEDDELERT.

Gemara (ge ma' rà) (Aramaic, completion). The second part of the TALMUD, consisting of annotations, discussions and amplifications of the MISHNA, which is the first part. The Mishna is the codification of the oral law, the Gemara is supplementary and commentary on the Mishna.

The Palestinian or Jerusalem Gemara was completed by the Palestinian academics in the 5th century A.D. and the much fuller Babylonian Gemara by the academics of Babylon during the 4th and 5th centuries A.D.

Gemini. Lat. the Twins, a constellation and one of the signs of the ZODIAC (21 May to 21 June); representing CASTOR AND POLLUX, the "great twin brethren" of classical mythology.

Gen (jen). Give us the gen. Tell us the news, give us the detailed information; hence to gen up means to inform oneself fully or to "swot up" a subject. A phrase from Service slang, especially in the R.A.F.; it comes from either "General information" or "Genuine".

Gendarmes (zhon' darm) (Fr. gens d'armes, men-at-arms), the armed police of France. The term was first applied to an armed KNIGHT or CAVALIER, then to the cavalry. In the time of Louis XIV it was applied to a body of horse charged with the preservation of order, and after the Revolution to a military police chosen from old soldiers of good character; and now to the ordinary police.

Gender Words. These are words which, prefixed to the noun, indicate an animal's sex, e.g.:

Bull, cow: elephant, rhinoceros, seal and whale.

Dog, bitch: ape, fox (the bitch is usually called a vixen), otter, wolf.

Buck, doe: hare, rabbit, deer.

He, she: general gender words for quadrupeds.

Cock, hen: gender words for most birds.

In many cases a different word is used for each of the sexes, e.g.: Boar, sow; cockerel, pullet; colt, filly; drake, duck; drone, bee; gander, goose; hart, roe; ram, ewe; stag, hind; stallion, mare; steer (British: in U.S.A. equivalent of British bullock), heifer.

General Issue. An old legal term for a plea of "not guilty"; the issue formed by a general denial of the plaintiff's charge.

General Warrants. Warrants issued for the arrest of unspecified persons, first by the Court of STAR CHAMBER and subsequently authorized by the Licensing Act of 1662, and continued after its lapse in 1695, when they were used against the authors and publishers of allegedly seditious or libellous writings. They were declared illegal as a result of actions brought against the Crown (1763-1765) by John Wilkes, who was arrested with others after the publication of NUMBER 45 (see under FORTY) of the North Briton.

Generalissimo. The supreme commander, especially of a force drawn from two or more nations, or of a combined military and naval force; the equivalent of Tagus among the ancient Thessalians, Brennus among the ancient Gauls, and PENDRAGON among the ancient Welsh or Celts. The title is said to have been coined by Cardinal Richelieu on taking supreme command of the French armies in Italy, in 1629.

In modern times the title has been applied to Marshal Foch (1851-1929), who commanded the Allied forces in France in 1918; to Joseph Stalin (1879-1953), who was made generalissimo of the Soviet forces in 1943; to General Franco (b. 1892) who proclaimed himself generalissimo of the Spanish army in 1939; and to Marshal Chiang Kai-shek (b. 1888), leader of the KUOMINTANG, who was in power in China from 1927 to 1949.

Generic Names. See BIDDY.

Generous. Generous as Hatim. An Arabian expression. Hatim was a Bedouin chief famous for his warlike deeds and boundless generosity. His son was a contemporary of MOHAMMED.

Let Zal and Rustum bluster as they will,
Or Hatim call to supper—heed not you.
FITZGERALD: Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám, x.

Geneva (je nē' vā). See GIN.

Geneva Bible. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.
The Geneva Bull. A nickname given to Stephen Marshal (c. 1594-1655), a PRESBYTERIAN divine and one of the authors of SMECTYMNUS, because he was a disciple of John Calvin of Geneva, and when preaching "roared like a bull of Bashan". His influence on political and religious affairs was considerable.

Geneva Convention. In 1862, Jean Henri Dunant, a Swiss, published an account of the sufferings of the wounded at the battle of Solferino in 1859. From this sprang the RED CROSS movement and an international conference at Geneva in 1864. The resulting Geneva Convention provided for the care of the wounded and the protection of the military medical services, under the international emblem of the RED CROSS (see under CROSS).

Geneva courage. POT VALOUR; the BRAGGADOCIO resulting from having drunk too much GIN or geneva. Cp. DUTCH COURAGE.

Geneva Cross. See THE RED CROSS under CROSS.

Geneva doctrines. CALVINISM.

Geneviève, St. (je ná vēv) (422-512). Patroness of PARIS. Her day is 3 January, and she is represented in art with the keys of Paris at her girdle, a DEVIL blowing out her candle, and an ANGEL relighting it; or as restoring sight to her blind mother; or guarding her father's sheep. She was born at Nanterre and was influential in saving Paris from the FRANKS and the threatened attack of ATTLA the Hun. Her church has since become the PANTHEON.

Genius (pl. Genii). In Roman mythology the tutelary spirit that attended a man from cradle to grave, governed his fortunes, determined his character. The Genius wished a man to enjoy pleasure in life, thus to indulge one's Genius was to enjoy pleasure. The Genius only existed for man, the woman had her JUNO. Another belief was that a man had two genii, one good and one evil, and bad luck was due to his evil genius. The Roman genii were somewhat similar to the guardian angels spoken of in Matt. xviii, 10. The word is from the Lat. gignere, to beget (Gr. gignesthai, to be born), from the notion that birth and life were due to these dii genitales. Thus it is used for birth-wit or innate talent; hence propensity, nature, inner man.

The Eastern genii (sing. genie) were JINNS, who were not attendant spirits but fallen angels under the dominion of EBLIS.

Genius loci. The tutelary deity of a place.

In the midst of this wreck of ancient books and utensils, with a gravity equal to Marius among the ruins of Carthage, sat a large black cat, which to a superstitious eye, might have presented the genius loci, the tutelary demon of the apartment.

SCOTT: The Antiquary, ch. iii.

Genocide (jen' ō sīd). A word invented by Professor Raphael Lemkin, of Duke University, U.S.A., and used in the drafting of the official indictment of war criminals in 1945. It is a combination of Gr. genos, race; and Lat. cædere, to kill. It is defined as acts intended to destroy, in whole or in part, national, ethnical, racial, or religious groups, and in 1948 was declared by the United Nations General Assembly to be a crime in international law.

Genre Painter (zhon' rē) (Fr. mode, style). A term applied to those who paint scenes of everyday life in the home, the village, the countryside, etc. The Dutch artists of Rembrandt's time were particularly characteristic of this style. The term is sometimes used of drama in the same sense.

Gens (jenz) (Lat. pl. gentes). A CLAN or SEPT in ancient ROME; a number of families deriving from a common ancestor, having the same name, religion, etc.

Gens braccata, or braccata (Lat.). Trousered people. Unlike the Gauls, Scythians, and Persians, the Romans wore no trousers or breeches. Cp. GALLIA BRACCATA.

Gens togata. See TOGA.

Gentle. Belonging to a family of position; well-born; having the manners of genteel persons. The word is from Lat. gentilis, of the same family or gens, through O.Fr. gentil, high-born.

We must be gentle, now we are gentlemen.
SHAKESPEARE: The Winter's Tale, V, ii.

The gentle craft. Shoe-making. CRISPIN and Crispianus, the patron saints of shoemaking, were said to be brothers of noble birth.

As I am a true shoemaker, and a gentleman of the Gentle Craft, buy spurs yourselves, and I'll find ye booties these seven yeeres.

DEKKER: The Shoemaker's Holiday, or the Gentle Craft, I, 1 (1599).

Angling is also known as "the gentle craft". It is a pun on gentle, the maggot of the flesh-fly or blue-bottle, used as a bait.

The gentle sex. Women.

The Gentle Shepherd. A nickname given by the elder Pitt to George Grenville (1712-1770). In the course of a speech on the cider tax (1763) Grenville addressed the HOUSE somewhat plaintively: "Tell me where? Tell me where?" Pitt mimicked him with the words of the song "Gentle shepherd, tell me where?" The House burst into laughter and the name stuck to Grenville. The line is from a song by Samuel Howard (1710-1782).

Gentleman (from O.Fr. gentilz hom). Historically a man entitled to bear arms but not of the nobility; hence one of gentle birth, of some position in society, and with manners, bearing and behaviour appropriate to one in such a position.

Be it spoken (with all reverent reservation of duty) the king who hath power to make Esquires, Knights, Baronets, Barons, Viscounts, Earls, Marquesses, and Dukes, cannot make a gentleman, for Gentilitie is a matter of race, and of blood, and of descent, from Gentle and noble parents and ancestors, which no kings can give to any, but to such as they beget.

EDMUND HOWES (fl. 1607-1631).

In the York Mysteries (c. 1440) we read, "Ther schall a gentilman, Jesu, unjustly be judged."

A gentleman at large. A man of means, who does not have to earn a living, and is free to come and go as he pleases. Formerly the term denoted a gentleman attached to the court but having no special duties.

A gentleman of fortune. A pirate, an adventurer, etc.

A gentleman of the four outs. A vulgar upstart, with-out manners, with-out wit, with-out money, and with-out credit. There are variants of the phrase, and sometimes the outs are increased to five:

Out of money, and out of clothes,
Out at the heels, and out at the toes,
Out of credit—but don't forget,
Never out of but aye in debt!

A gentleman of the road. A highwayman.

A gentleman's agreement. An agreement or understanding as between gentlemen in which the one guarantee is the honour of the parties concerned.

A gentleman's gentleman. A manservant, especially a valet.

Fag: My master shall know this—and if he don't call him out I will.

Lucy: Hal hal hal You gentlemen's gentlemen are so hasty!

SHERIDAN: The Rivals, II, ii.

A nation of gentlemen. So George IV called the Scots when, in 1822, he visited their country and was received with great expressions of loyalty.

Gentleman Commoner. See FELLOW COMMONER.

Gentleman Pensioner. See GENTLEMEN AT ARMS, below.

Gentleman-ranker. In the days of the small regular army before World War I, this term was applied to a well-born or educated man who enlisted as a private soldier. It was considered a last resort of one who had made a mess of things.

We're poor little lambs who've lost our way,
Baal Baal Baal

We're little black sheep who've gone astray,
Baa—aa—aal

Gentleman-rankers out on the spree,
Damned from here to eternity,
God ha' mercy on such as we.
Baal Yah! Bah!

KIPLING: Gentlemen Rankers.

Gentlemen Ushers. Court attendants in the Royal Household. They comprise Gentlemen Ushers, Extra Gentlemen Ushers, the Gentleman Usher to the Sword of State, and the Gentleman Usher of the BLACK ROD.

Gentlemen at Arms, The Honourable Corps of. The Bodyguard of the sovereign (formerly called Gentlemen Pensioners), acting in conjunction with the Yeomen of the Guard (see BEEFEATERS). It has a Captain, Lieutenant, Standard Bearer, Clerk of the Cheque, Sub-officer, and 39 Gentlemen at Arms, chosen from retired officers of ranks from General to Major of the Regular Army and Royal Marines.

The gentleman in black velvet. It was in these words that the JACOBITES used to drink to the mole that made the molehill that caused William III's horse to stumble and so brought about his death.

He urged his horse to strike into a gallop just at a spot where a mole had been at work. Sorrel stumbled on the mole-hill, and went down on his knees. The king fell off and broke his collar bone.
MACAULAY: History of England, ch. xxv.

The Old Gentleman. THE DEVIL; Old Nick (see under NICK). Also a special card in a prepared pack, used for tricks or cheating.

To put a churl upon a gentleman. To drink beer just after drinking wine.

Geomancy (jē' ō mǎn sī) (Gr. ge, the earth; manteia, prophecy). DIVINATION by means of the observation of points on the earth or by the patterns made by throwing some earth into the air and allowing it to fall on some flat surface.

Geopolitics. The name given to the German theories of applied political geography developed by Karl Haushofer in the 1920s and earlier by F. Ratzel, whose pupil Kjellen coined the term. Sir Halford Mackinder (1861-1947) and others formulated similar theories. These teachings were used by the NAZIS to support their demand for LEBENSRAUM.

George. St. George. The patron SAINT of ENGLAND since his "adoption" by Edward III (see GARTER). His day is 23 April. The popularity of St. George in England stems from the time of the early CRUSADES, for he was said to have come to the assistance of the Crusaders at Antioch in 1098. Many of the Normans under Robert CURTHOSE, son of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, took him as their patron.

Gibbon and others argued that George of Cappadocia, the Arian bishop of Alexandria, became the English patron saint but it is more generally accepted that he was a Roman officer martyred (c. 300) near Lydda during the Diocletian persecution. He is also the patron saint of of Aragon and Portugal.

The legend of St. George and the DRAGON is simply an allegorical expression of the triumph of the Christian hero over evil, which ST. JOHN THE DIVINE beheld under the image of a dragon. Similarly, ST. MICHAEL, ST. MARGARET, ST. SYLVESTER, and ST. MARTHA are all depicted as slaying dragons; the Saviour and the Virgin as treading them under their feet; St. John the Evangelist as charming a winged dragon from a poisoned chalice given him to drink; and Bunyan avails himself of the same figure when he makes CHRISTIAN prevail upon APOLLYON.

The legend forms the subject of the ballad St. George for England in PERCY'S RELIQUES.

St. George he was for England, St. Denis was for France. This refers to the battle-cries of the two nations—that of England was "St. George!" that of France, "MONTJOIE ST. DENIS!"

St. George he was for England; St. Denis was for France;

Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.

PERCY'S Reliques: St. George for England.

St. George's Cross. A red cross on a white background.

When St. George goes on horseback St. Yves goes on foot. In times of war it was supposed that lawyers have nothing to do. ST. GEORGE is the patron of soldiers and ST. YVES or Yvo patron of lawyers.

George. A jewelled pendant representing St. GEORGE and the DRAGON, part of the insignia of the GARTER.

Meanwhile Monmouth . . . was flying from the field of battle. At Chedzoy he stopped a moment to mount a fresh horse and to hide his blue ribbon and his George.

MACAULAY: History of England, ch. v.

George IV (1760, 1820–1830) was given many nicknames. As Prince Regent he was known as "Prinny", "Prince Florizel" (the name under which he corresponded with Mrs. Robinson), "The First Gentleman of Europe", "The Adonis of Fifty". As King he was called, among less offensive titles, "Fum the Fourth", as by Byron in Don Juan, xi, 78.

George Eliot. The pseudonym of the author of The Mill on the Floss, Silas Marner, etc.—Mary Ann Evans (1819–1881). She lived with George Henry Lewes from 1854 until his death in 1878, and married her "second" husband John Walter Cross as Mary Ann Evans Lewes.

George Sand. The pen-name of the famous French novelist Amandine Lucile Aurore Dudevant (1804–1876), whose maiden name was Dupin. It was adopted during her liaison with Jules Sandeau.

George Cross and Medal. The George Cross is second only to the VICTORIA CROSS. It consists of a plain silver cross with a medallion showing St. GEORGE and the DRAGON in the centre. The words "For Gallantry" appear round the medallion, and in the angle of each limb of the cross is the royal cipher. It hangs from a dark blue ribbon. The George Cross was founded in 1940 for acts of conspicuous heroism, primarily by civilians.

The George Medal (red ribbon with five narrow blue stripes) is awarded for similar but somewhat less outstanding acts of bravery.

George Cross Island. Malta is so called from the award of the George Cross to the island by King George VI in April 1942, in recognition of the steadfastness and fortitude of its people while under siege in World War II. It had suffered constant aerial attacks from Italian and German bombers.

As good as George-a-Green. Resolute-minded; one who will do his duty come what may. George-a-Green was the mythical Pinder (Pinner or Pindar) or pound-keeper of Wakefield, who resisted ROBIN HOOD, Will Scarlet, and LITTLE JOHN single-handed when they attempted to commit a trespass in Wakefield.

Robert Greene wrote a comedy (published 1599) called George-a-Greene, or the Pinner of Wakefield.

By George. An oath or exclamation. "St. George" was the battle-cry of English soldiers, and from this arose such expressions as "before George", "fore George". In American usage it is "George", which has additional meanings, one of which, applied to any person or thing, has the same significance as the CAT'S PYJAMAS (see under CAT).

Let George do it. Let someone else do it. Derived from Louis XII of France who, when an unpleasant task arose, was apt to say "Let Georges do it", referring to his minister, Cardinal Georges.

Geraint (ge rint'). In Arthurian legend, a tributary prince of Devon, and one of the Knights of the ROUND TABLE. In the MABINGION, he is the son of Erbin, as he is in the French original Erec et Énide, from which Tennyson drew his Geraint and Enid in the Idylls of the King.

Geranium. The Turks say this was a common mallow changed by the touch of MOHAMMED'S garment.

The word is Gr. geranos, a crane; and the wild plant is called "Crane's Bill", from the resemblance of the fruit to the bill of a crane.

Gerda, or Gerdhr (gër' dá). In Scandinavian mythology (the Skirnismal) daughter of the Frost-giant Gymir and wife of Frey. She was so beautiful that the brightness of her naked arms illumined both air and sea.

German, or Germane. Pertaining to, nearly related to, as cousins-german (first cousins), germane to the subject (bearing on or pertinent to the subject). The word is Lat. germanus, of the same germ or stock, and has no connection with the German nation.

Those that are germane to him, though removed fifty times, shall all come under the hangman.

SHAKESPEARE: The Winter's Tale, IV, iii.

Germany. The English name for Deutschland (Fr. Allemagne) is the Lat. Germania, the source of which is uncertain, but possibly a Roman form of a CELTIC or Gaulish name for the TEUTONS; in which case it may be connected with Celt. gair, neighbour, gavin, war-cry, or with ger, spear.

Geoffrey of Monmouth says that Ebrancus, a mythological descendant of BRUTE, and founder of York (Eboracum), had twenty sons and thirty daughters by twenty wives. The twenty sons departed to Germany and obtained possession of it. Thus Spenser, speaking of Ebranck, tells us:

An happy man in his first dayes he was,
And happy father of faire progeny:
For all so many weekes as the year has,
So many children he did multiply:
Of which were twentie sonnes, which did apply
Their minds to prayse and chevalrous desyre:
Those germans did subdew all Germany,
Of whom it hight.

The Faerie Queene, II, x, 22.

German comb. The four fingers and thumb. The Germans were late in adopting periwigs; and while the French were never seen without a comb in one hand, the Germans tidied their hair by running their fingers through it.

He appalled himself according to the season, and afterwards combed his head with an Alman comb.

RABELAIS: Gargantua and Pantagruel, Bk. I, xxi.

German silver. A silvery-looking cheap alloy of copper, zinc and nickel. It was first made in Europe at Hildburghausen, in Germany, in the early 19th century but had long been used by the Chinese.

Gerrymander (jer i män' dër). So to redraw the boundaries of electoral districts as to give one political party undue advantage over others. The word is derived from Elbridge Gerry (1744-1814), governor of Massachusetts, who did this in 1812 in order to preserve control for his party. Gilbert Stuart, the artist, looking at a map of the new distribution, with a little invention converted the outline of one district in Essex County to a salamander and showed it to Benjamin Russell, editor of the Boston Sentinel. "Better say a gerrymander," said Russell, and the name caught on. The practice was not new.

Gertrude of Nivelles, St. The daughter of Pepin of Landen, aunt of Charles Martel's father, Pepin of Heristal. As abbess of Nivelles she was noted for her care of the poor and was reputed to have known most of the BIBLE by heart. In art she is usually represented as so rapt in contemplation that a mouse climbs her pastoral staff unnoticed. She died about 664 and her day is 17 March.

Geryon (gër' i on). In Greek mythology, a monster with three bodies and three heads, whose oxen ate human flesh, and were guarded by Orthrus, a two-headed dog. HERCULES slew both Geryon and the dog.

Gessler, Hermann. The tyrannical Austrian governor of the three Forest Cantons of Switzerland who figures in the TELL legend.

Gesta Romanorum. A collection of popular tales in Latin, each with a moral attached, compiled at the end of the 13th century or beginning of the 14th. The name, meaning "Deeds of the Romans", is merely fanciful and some of the episodes are of Oriental origin. It was first printed at Utrecht and the earliest English edition is that of Wynkyn de Worde about 1510. It is the source of many stories used in later literature.

Chaucer, Shakespeare, Rossetti, Longfellow and many others use tales and plots which are found in it. It seems to have been compiled for the use of preachers.

Gestapo (ge sta' pō). Shortened from the Ger. Geheime Staatspolizei, secret state police, which acquired such sinister fame in NAZI Germany after 1933. It was formed by Goering and later controlled by Himmler and was responsible for terrorizing both the Germans and the peoples of occupied territories. It was declared a criminal organization by the Nuremberg Tribunal in 1946.

Gestas (jes' tās). The traditional name of the impenitent thief. See DYSMAS.

Get. With its past and past participle got, one of the hardest-worked words in the English language, as the following example from a mid-Victorian writer (Dr. Withers) shows:

I got on horseback within ten minutes after I got your letter. When I got to Canterbury I got a chaise for town; but I got wet through, and have got such a cold that I shall not get rid of it in a hurry. I got to the Treasury about noon, but first of all got shaved and dressed. I soon got into the secret of getting a memorial before the Board, but I could not get an answer then; however, I got intelligence from a messenger that I should get one next morning. As soon as I got back to my inn, I got my supper, and then got to bed. When I got up next morning, I got my breakfast, and, having got dressed, I got out in time to get an answer to my memorial. As soon as I got it, I got into a chaise, and got back to Canterbury by three, and got home for tea. I have got nothing for you, and so adieu.

How are you getting on? How do things fare with you? How are you prospering?

To get about. To travel about, to attend many social events. Also used to denote the spreading of news or rumour. To get around, an expression of American origin, has the same meanings.

To get at. To reach; to tamper with, bribe, influence to a wrong end; to attack, tease, to make a butt of, etc.

To get away with it. To do something dangerous, unlawful, wrong, etc., and escape the usual penalty.

To get by. To get along all right, to manage just satisfactorily, to pass MUSTER.

To get cracking. A popular expression with the same meaning as TO GET WEAVING.

To get down to it. To set about a task in downright earnest.

To get it in the neck. To receive a thorough dressing-down, beating, punishment, etc.

To get off. To escape, not to be punished; also (of a girl) to become engaged or to catch a man.

To get over it. To recover from illness, shock, or sorrow.

To get round someone. To persuade by coaxing or flattery.

To get there. To succeed, to "arrive", attain one's object.

To get up. To rise from one's bed. To learn, as, "I must get up my history". To organize and arrange, as "We will get up a bazaar".

To get weaving. To set about a task briskly. A colloquial Services expression in World War II. Weaving implies dexterous movement, as when aircraft make rapid directional changes to escape enemy fire.

To get well on, or well oiled. To become intoxicated.

Your get-up was excellent. Your style of dress was entirely suitable for the part you professed to enact. In the same way, "She was got up regardless". Her dress was splendid—regardless of expense.

For phrases such as You got out of bed the wrong way, To get the mitten, To get the wind up, etc., see the main word in the phrase.

Gethsemane (geth sem' á ni). The word means "oil-press" and the traditional site of the Garden of Gethsemane, the scene of Our Lord's agony, is on the Mount of Olives, east of the ravine of the Kidron. There was presumably an oil-press on this plot of ground.

The Orchis maculata is called "gethsemane" from the legend that it was spotted by the blood of Christ.

Ghebers. See GUEBRES.

Ghibelline. See GUELPH.

Ghost. The Holy Ghost. See under HOLY.

The ghost of a chance. The least likelihood. "He has not the ghost of a chance of being elected", not the shadow of a probability.

The ghost walks. Theatrical slang for "salaries are about to be paid"; when there is no money available actors say "the ghost won't walk this time". The allusion is to Shakespeare's Hamlet, I, i, where Horatio asks the ghost if it "walks" because—

Thou hast uphoarded in thy life
Extorted treasure in the womb of earth.

To give up the ghost. To die. The idea is that life is independent of the body, and is due to the habitation of the ghost or spirit in the material body.

Man dieth, and wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?—Job xiv, 10.

To look like a ghost. To look deathly pale, pale as a ghost.

Ghost-word. A term invented by W. W. Skeat (Philol. Soc. Transactions, 1886) to denote words that had no real existence but are due to the errors of scribes, printers, or editors, etc. Like ghosts we may seem to see them, or may fancy that they exist; but they have no real being. ACRE-FIGHT (see under FIGHT) and SLUG-HORN are examples.

Intrusive letters that have no etymological right in a word but have been inserted through false analogy with words similarly pronounced (like the gh in sprightly or the h in aghost) are sometimes called ghost-letters.

Ghost writer. The anonymous author who writes speeches, articles or books—especially autobiographies—for which another and better-known person gets the credit.

Giants, i.e. persons well above normal height and size, are found as “sports” or “freaks of nature”; but the widespread belief in pre-existing races of giants among primitive peoples is due partly to the ingrained idea that mankind has degenerated—“There were giants in the earth in those days” (Gen. vi. 4)—and partly to the existence from remote antiquity of cyclopæan buildings, gigantic SARCOPHAGI etc., and to the discovery from time to time in pre-scientific days of the bones of extinct monsters which were taken to be those of men. Among instances of the latter may be mentioned:

A 19 ft. skeleton was discovered at Lucerne in 1577. Dr. Plater is our authority for this measurement.

“Teutobochus”, whose remains were discovered near the Rhône in 1613. They occupied a tomb 30 ft. long. The bones of another gigantic skeleton were exposed by the action of the Rhône in 1456. If this was a human skeleton, the height of living man must have been 30 ft.

Pliny records that an earthquake in Crete exposed the bones of a giant 46 cubits (i.e. roughly 75 ft.) in height; he called this the skeleton of ORION, others held it to be that of Otus.

Antæus is said by Plutarch to have been 60 cubits (about 90 ft.) in height. He furthermore adds that the grave of the giant was opened by Serbonius.

The “monster Polypheme”. It is said that his skeleton was discovered at Trapani, in Sicily, in the 14th century. If this skeleton was that of a man, he must have been 300 ft. in height.

Giants of the Bible.

Anak. The eponymous progenitor of the Anakim (see below). The Hebrew spies said they were mere grasshoppers in comparison with these giants (Josh. xv, 14; Judges 1, 20; and Numb. xiii, 33).

GOLIATH of Gath (I Sam. xvii, etc.). His height is given as 6 cubits and a span: the cubit varied and might be anything from about 18 in. to 22 in., and a span was about 9 in.; this would give Goliath a height of between 9 ft. 9 in. and 11 ft. 3 in.

OG, King of Bashan (Josh. xii, 4; Deut. iii, 10, iv, 47, etc.), was “of the remnant of the Rephaim”.

According to tradition, he lived 3,000 years and walked beside the Ark during the Flood. One of his bones formed a bridge over a river. His bed (Deut. iii, 11) was 9 cubits by 4 cubits.

The Anakim and Rephaim were tribes of reputed giants inhabiting the territory on both sides of the Jordan before the coming of the Israelites. The Nephilim, the offspring of the sons of God and the daughters of men (Gen. vi, 4), a mythological race of semi-divine heroes, were also giants.

Giants of Legend and Literature. The giants of Greek mythology were, for the most part, sons of URANUS and GÆA. When they attempted to storm heaven, they were hurled to earth by the aid of HERCULES, and buried under Mount ETNA (see TITANS). Those of Scandinavian mythology dwelt in JOTUNHEIM and these “voracious ones” personified the unbridled forces of nature with super-human powers against which man strove with the help of the gods. Giants feature prominently in nursery tales such as JACK THE GIANT-KILLER and Swift peopled BROBADINGNAG with giants. See ALIFAN-FARON; ANTÆUS; ATLAS; BALAN; BELLERUS; BLUNDERBORE; BRIAREUS; BRONTES; CACUS; COLBRONDE; CORMORAN; COTTUS; CYCLOPS; DESPAIR; ENCELADUS; EPHIALTES; FERRAGUS; FIERABRAS; GARGANTUA; GOG AND MAGOG; IRUS; MORGANTE MAGGIORE; ORGOGLIO; ORION; PALLAS; PANTAIGRUEL; POLYPHEMUS; TYPHEUS; YMIR.

Giants of Other Note.

Andronicus II, grandson of Alexius Comnenus, was 10 ft. in height. Nicetas asserts that he had seen him.

Bamford (Edward) was 7 ft. 4 in. He died in 1768 and was buried in St. Dunstan's churchyard, London.

Bates (Captain) was 7 ft. 11½ in. A native of Kentucky, he was exhibited in London in 1871. His wife, Anne Hannen Swan, a native of Nova Scotia, was the same height.

Blacker (Henry) was 7 ft 4 in. and most symmetrical. A native of Cuckfield, Sussex, he was called “the British Giant”.

Bradley (William) was 7 ft. 9 in. Born in 1787 at Market Weight, Yorkshire, he died in 1820. His right hand is preserved in the museum of the Royal College of Surgeons.

Brice (M. J.), exhibited under the name of Anak, was 7 ft. 8 in. at the age of 26. He was born in 1840 at Ramonchamp in the Vosges and visited England 1862–1865. His arms had a stretch of 95½ in.

Brusted (Von) of Norway was 8 ft. He was exhibited at London in 1880.

Chang, the Chinese giant was 8 ft. 2 in. He was exhibited at London in 1865–1866 and in 1880.

CHARLEMAGNE, according to tradition, was nearly 8 ft. and was so strong that he could squeeze together three horseshoes with his hands.

Cotter (Patrick), an Irish bricklayer, who exhibited as O'Brien, was 8 ft. 7 in. Born in 1761, he died at Clifton, Bristol, in 1806. A cast of his hand is preserved in the museum of the Royal College of Surgeons.

Daniel, the porter of Oliver Cromwell, was a man of gigantic stature.

Eleazer was 7 cubits (nearly 11 ft.). Vitellius sent this giant to Rome. He is mentioned by Josephus who also speaks of a Jew of 10 ft. 2 in.

Eleizegus (Joachim) was 7 ft. 10 in. A Spaniard, he was exhibited in the Cosmorama, Regent Street, London, in the mid-19th century.

Evans (William) was 8 ft. He was a porter of Charles I, and died in 1632.

Frank (Big) was 7 ft. 8 in. He was Francis Sheridan, an Irishman, and died in 1870.

Gabara, the Arabian giant, was 9 ft. 9 in. Pliny says he was the tallest man seen in the days of Claudius.

Gilly was 8 ft. This Swedish giant was exhibited at London in the early part of the 19th century.

Gordon (Alice) was 7 ft. She was a native of Essex, and died in 1737, at the age of 19.

Hale (Robert) was 7 ft. 6 in. and was born at Somerton, Norfolk in 1802. He died in 1862 and was called "the Norfolk Giant".

Hardrada (Harald) was nearly 7 ft. and was called "the Norway Giant". He was slain at Stamford Bridge in 1066.

Holmes (Benjamin) of Northumberland was 7 ft. 7 in. He became sword-bearer to the Corporation of Worcester and died in 1892.

McDonald (James) of Cork, Ireland, was 7 ft 6 in. He died in 1760.

McDonald (Samuel) was 6 ft. 10 in. This Scot was usually called "Big Sam". He was the Prince of Wales's footman, and died in 1802.

Macgrath (Cornelius) was 7 ft. 10 in. at the age of 16. He was an orphan reared by Bishop Berkeley and died in 1760 at the age of 20.

Maximinus I, Roman Emperor (235-238), was 8 ft. 6 in.

Middleton (John) was 9 ft. 3 in. He was born at Hale, Lancashire, in the reign of James I. "His hand was 17 in. long and 8½ in. broad" (Dr. Plot: Natural History of Staffordshire).

Miller (Maximilian Christopher) was 8 ft. His hand measured 12 in., and his forefinger 9 in. He died at London in 1734 at the age of 60.

Murphy, an Irish giant of the late 18th century, was 8 ft. 10 in. He died at Marseilles.

O'Brien, or Charles Byrne (1761-1783), was 8 ft. 4 in. He died in Cockspar Street, London and the skeleton of this Irish giant is preserved in the Royal College of Surgeons.

O'Brien (Patrick). See COTTER above.

Porus was 5 cubits in height (about 7½ ft.). He was an Indian king who fought against ALEXANDER the Great near the Hydaspes. (Quintus Curtius: De rebus gestis Alexandri Magni).

Sheridan. See FRANK above.

Swan (Anne Hannen). See BATES above.

Toller (James) was 8 ft. at the age of 24. He died in 1819.

Winkelmaier (Josef), an Austrian, was 8 ft. 9 in. (1865-1887).

In addition to the above:

Del Rio tells us that he saw a Piedmontese in 1572 more than 9 ft. high.

M. Thevet published (1575) an account of a South American giant, the skeleton of which he measured. It was 11 ft. 5 in.

Gaspard Bauhin (1560-1624), the anatomist and botanist, speaks of a Swiss 8 ft. high.

A Mr. Warren (in Notes and Queries, 14 August 1875) said that his father knew a woman 9 ft. in height, and adds "her head touched the ceiling of a good-sized room".

There is a human skeleton 8 ft. 6 in. in height in the museum of Trinity College, Dublin.

There were over 100 applicants in response to an advertisement in The Times (25 July 1966) for "giants" of minimum height 6 ft. 7 in. for the premiere of Cast a Giant Shadow at the London Pavilion. The tallest was 7 ft. 3 in. Cp. DWARF.

Giants, Battle of the. A name given to the battle of Marignano, or Melegnano (10 miles south-east of Milan), where in 1515 Francis I, after a fierce contest, defeated the Swiss mercenaries defending Milan.

Giants' Cauldrons. See GIANTS' KETTLES.

Giant's Causeway. A formation of some 40,000 basaltic columns, projecting into the sea about 8 miles ENE of Portrush, Co. Antrim, on the north coast of IRELAND. It is fabled to be the beginning of a road to be constructed by the giants across the channel from Ireland to SCOTLAND. Here are to be found the Giants' Loom, the Giants' Well and the Giants' Chair. Other formations in the district are called the Giants' Organ, the Giants' Peep-hole, and the Giants' Granny, also reefs called the Giants' Eye-glass.

Giants' Dance, The. STONEHENGE, which Geoffrey of Monmouth says was removed from Killaurus, a mountain in IRELAND, by Uther PENDRAGON and his men under the direction of MERLIN.

Giants' Kettles, or Giants' Cauldrons.

A name given to glacial pot-shaped cylindrical holes worn in rocks by the rotary currents of sub-glacial streams, often containing water-worn stones, boulders, etc. They are found in Norway, GERMANY, the U.S.A., etc.

Giants' Leap, The. A popular name in many mountainous districts given to two prominent rocks separated from each other by a wide chasm or stretch of open country across which some giant is fabled to have leapt and so baffled his pursuers.

Giants' Ring. A prehistoric circular mound near Milltown, Co. Down, IRELAND. It is 580 ft. in diameter and has a CROMLECH in the centre.

Giants' Staircase. The staircase which rises from the courtyard of the Doge's Palace, Venice. So named from the figures of two giants at its head.

Giants' War with Zeus. The War of the Giants and the War of the TITANS should be kept distinct. The latter was before ZEUS became god of HEAVEN and earth, the former was after that time. The Giants' War was a revolt by the giants against Zeus, which was readily put down by the help of the other gods and the aid of HERCULES.

Giaour (jour). A word used by the Turks for one who was not a Mohammedan, especially a CHRISTIAN. The word was popularized by Byron who wrote a poem called The Giaour.

The city won for Allah from the Giaour,
The Giaour from Othman's race again may wrest.

BYRON:
Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, canto II, stanza 77.

Gib Cat (jib kät). A tomcat. The male cat used to be called Gilbert. Tibert, or TYBALT, is the French form of Gilbert, and hence Chaucer, or whoever it was that translated that part of the Romaunt of the Rose, renders "Thibert le cas" by "Gibbe, our Cat" (line 6204). It is generally used of a castrated cat.

I am as melancholy as a gib cat or a lugged bear.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, I, ii.

Gibeonite (gib' i on it). A slave's slave, a workman's labourer, a farmer's under-strapper, or Jack-of-all-work. The Gibeonites were made "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to the Israelites (Josh. ix, 27).

Gibraltar (jib rawl tär). The "CALPE" of the ancients and one of the PILLARS OF HERCULES. The name is a corruption of Gebel-al-Tarik, the hill of Tarik, Tarik being the SARACEN leader, who utterly defeated RODERICK, the Gothic king of Spain in 711, and built a castle on the Rock. The Spaniards finally took it from the Moors in 1462. It was captured by a combined English and Dutch force under Sir George Rooke in 1704 and unsuccessfully besieged by the Spaniards and French in 1704, 1705 and subsequently, most memorably from 1779 to 1783, when it was heroically defended by General Eliott (later Lord Heathfield).

Gibson Girl. A type of elegant female beauty characteristic of its period depicted by Charles Dana Gibson (1867-1944) in several series of black-and-white drawings dating from 1896. His delineations of the American girl enjoyed an enormous vogue and the series entitled The Adventures of Mr. Pipp, which appeared in Collier's Weekly (1899), formed the basis of a successful play. The Gibson Girl was portrayed in various poses and occupations, her individuality accentuated by the sweeping skirts and large hats of the period.

Her type was based on his wife Irene (née Langhorne) and her sisters, among whom was the late Nancy, Viscountess Astor.

Gibus (ji' bús). An opera-hat named after its inventor, a Parisian hat-maker of the early 19th century. It is a cloth top-hat with a collapsible crown that enables the wearer to fold it up when not in use.

Gichtelians. See ANGELIC BROTHERS.

Gideons. An international association of Christian business and professional men founded in 1899 and now functioning in over 65 countries. They seek to lead others to Christianity, particularly by the distribution of Bibles and New Testaments on a large scale. Bibles are provided in hotel bedrooms and hospitals and New Testaments are presented to pupils in schools. They are named after Gideon's men who overthrew the Midianites (Judges vii).

Giff Gaff. Give and take; good turn for good turn. A variant repetition from give.

Gifford Lectureships. Lectureships in Natural Theology without reference to creed or sect founded in the universities of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, and St. Andrews in 1887 by a bequest of Adam, Lord Gifford.

Gift-horse. Don't look a gift-horse in the mouth. When given a present do not inquire too minutely into its intrinsic value. The normal way of assessing the age of a horse is to inspect its front teeth. The proverb has its counterpart in many languages.

Giggle. Have you found a giggle's nest? A question asked in Norfolk when anyone laughs immoderately and senselessly. The meaning is obvious—have you found the place where giggles abound—a nest of giggling girls? Cp. GAPE'S NEST; TO FIND A MARE'S NEST under MARE.

Gig-lamps. Once popular for spectacles, especially large round ones—an allusion to the lanterns attached to a gig. It is also a local nickname for a fire-fly.

Giglet, or giglot. A light, wanton woman.

If this be
The recompense of striving to preserve
A wanton giglet honest, very shortly
'Twill make all mankind panders.
MASSINGER: The Fatal Dowry, III, i (1619).

Gigman. Used derisively or contemptuously for a quite respectable person; hence gigmanity, smug respectability, a word invented by Carlyle. A witness in the trial for murder of John Thurtell (1824) said, "I always thought him [Thurtell] a respectable man." Being asked by the judge why he thought so, the witness replied, "He kept a gig."

A Princess of the Blood, yet whose father had sold his inexpressibles . . . in a word, Gigmanity disgigged.

CARLYLE: The Diamond Necklace, ch. V.

Gilbertian. A term applied to anything humorously topsy-turvy, any situation such as those W. S. Gilbert (1836-1911) depicted in the Gilbert and Sullivan operas. Of these perhaps the Mikado furnishes the best examples.

Gilbertines. The only mediæval religious order of English origin, founded at Sempringham in Lincolnshire c. 1135 by Gilbert of Sempringham (c. 1083–1189). The monks observed the rule of the AUGUSTINIANS and the nuns that of the BENEDICTINES. There were some 25 houses at the Dissolution.

Gild. To gild the lily. To add superfluous ornament to that which is already beautiful.

To gild the pill. It was the custom of old-time doctors—QUACKS and genuine—to make their nauseous pills more attractive, at least to the sight, by gilding them with a thin coating of sugar. Hence to make an unattractive thing at least appear desirable.

Gilded Chamber, The. A familiar name for the HOUSE OF LORDS.

Gilded Youth. Wealthy and fashionable young men, principally engaged in the pursuit of pleasure. A parallel expression to the Fr. jeunesse dorée.

Gildas (c. 516–c. 570). The earliest British "historian", also called Sapiens and Badonicus. Very little is known about him, but he was most probably an ecclesiastic and much of his writing consists of a tirade against his countrymen. His works contain much scriptural matter, and the history covers the period from the Roman invasion to his own times. Although vague and inaccurate, his sketch is important. Written c. 547, his treatise was first published in modified form by Polydore Virgil in 1525.

Britain has kings, but they are tyrants; she has judges but unrighteous ones . . . they have an abundance of wives, yet they are addicted to fornication and adultery.

The Works of Gildas; III, The Epistle.

Gilderoy. A noted robber and cattle-stealer of Perthshire who was hanged with five of his gang in July 1638, at Gallowlee near Edinburgh. He was noted for his handsome person and his real name was said to be Patrick Macgregor. He is credited with having picked the pocket of Cardinal Richelieu, robbed Oliver Cromwell, and hanged a judge. There are ballads on him in PERCY'S RELIQUES, Ritson's Collection, etc., and a modern one by Campbell.

Oh! sike twa charming een he had,
A breath as sweet as rose,
He never were a Highland plaid,
But costly silken clothes.

PERCY: Reliques: Gilderoy.

To be hung higher than Gilderoy's kite is to be punished more severely than the very worst criminal. The greater the crime, the higher the gallows, was at one time a legal axiom. The gallows of Montrose was 30 ft. high. The ballad in Percy's Reliques says:

Of Gilderoy sac fraid they were,
They bound him mickle strong,
Tull Edenburrow they led him thair,
And on a gallows hung;
They hung him high aboon the rest,
He was sac trim a boy . . .

Giles. A mildly humorous generic name for a farmer; the subject of Bloomfield's poem The Farmer's Boy (1800) was so named.

Giles, St. Patron SAINT of cripples. The tradition is that Childeric, king of France, accidentally wounded the hermit in the knee when hunting; and he remained a cripple for life, refusing to be cured that he might the better mortify the flesh.

His symbol is a hind, in allusion to the "heaven-directed hind", which went daily to his cave near the mouth of the Rhône to give him milk. He is sometimes represented as an old man with an arrow in his hand and a hind by his side.

Churches dedicated to St. Giles were usually situated in the outskirts of a city, and originally without the walls, cripples and beggars not being permitted to pass the gates. Cp. CRIPPLEGATE.

Giles of Antwerp. Gilles Coignet, the Flemish painter (1538–1599).

Gilgamesh Epic. A collection of ancient Babylonian stories and myths, older than HOMER, seemingly brought together around Gilgamesh, king of Erech, as the central hero. He was two-thirds a god, one-third a man. It appears to have covered 12 tablets (c. 3,000 lines), portions of which were found among the relics of the library of Assur-bani-pal, King of Assyria (668–626 B.C.). Some of the tablets date back to c. 2000 B.C. See DELUGE.

Gillie. A Gaelic word for a boy or lad, manservant or attendant, especially one who waits on a sportsman fishing or hunting.

Gillies' Hill. In the battle of Bannockburn (1314), King Robert Bruce ordered all the gillies, drivers of carts, and camp followers to go behind a hill. Those, when the battle seemed to favour the Scots, desirous of sharing in the plunder, rushed from their concealment with such arms as they could lay hands on. The English, thinking them to be a new army, fled in panic. The height was ever after called the Gillies' Hill.

Gillie-wet-foot. A barefooted Highland lad; a running footman who had to carry his master over brooks and watery places when travelling.

These gillie-wet-foots, as they were called, were destined to beat the bushes.

SCOTT: Waverley, ch. xiii.

Gills. Humorous slang for the mouth.

Blue about the gills. Down in the mouth; depressed looking.

Pale about the gills. See WHITE below.

Rosy, or red about the gills. Flushed with liquor.

White about the gills. Showing unmistakable signs of fear or terror or sickness.

Gilpin, John, of Cowper's famous ballad (1782), is a caricature of a Mr. Beyer, a noted linendraper at the end of PATER-NOSTER ROW, where it joins CHEAPSIDE. He died in 1791 at the age of 98. It was Lady Austin who told Cowper the story to divert him from his melancholy. The marriage adventure of Commodore Trun-nion in Smollett's Peregrine Pickle is very similar to that of Gilpin's wedding anniversary.

Gilt. To take the gilt off the gingerbread. See under GINGERBREAD.

Gilt-edged Investments. A phrase introduced in the last quarter of the 19th century to denote securities of the most reliable character, such as CONSOLS and other Government and Colonial Stock, first mortgages, debentures, and shares in first-rate companies, etc.

Gimlet-eyed. Keen-eyed, very sharp-sighted, given to watching or peering into things; eyes which bore through one. A squirt is sometimes called a gimlet-eye.

Gimmick. The first use of this word in U.S.A. slang was to describe some device by which a conjurer or fairground showman worked his trick. In later usage it applied to some distinctive quirk or trick associated with a film or radio star, then to any such.

Gin. A contraction of geneva, the older name of the spirit, from Fr. genièvre (O.Fr. genèvre), juniper, the berries of which are used to flavour the spirit. See HOLLANDS.

This calls the Church to deprecate our sin,
And hurls the thunder of the laws on gin.
POPE: Epilogue to the Satires, I, 130.

Gin-palace. A garishly ornate gin-shop, especially of Victorian and Edwardian times.

Gin-sling. A long drink composed mainly of gin and lemon. It has been attributed to JOHN COLLINS, famous bartender of Limmer's Hotel in London, but it dates from before his time and was found in the U.S.A. by 1800.

Ginger. A hot spicy root used in cooking and in medicine, hence as a nickname applied to someone with red hair.

Ginger group. A small group of people whose object is to stir the more passive majority into activity, especially in politics. The allusion to the spice is obvious. The FOURTH PARTY is a notable example of a political ginger group.

Gingerbread. A cake mixed with treacle and flavoured with ginger made up into toy shapes such as gingerbread men, etc., and with gilded decorations of DUTCH GOLD or gold leaf, it was commonly sold at FAIRS up to the middle of the 19th century. Hence TAWDRY wares, showy but worthless.

Gingerbread-work. A contemptuous term for fanciful shapes, ornate carvings, etc., used to decorate furniture, buildings, etc.

To take the gilt off the gingerbread. To destroy the illusion; to appropriate all the fun or profit and leave the dull base behind; to rob something of its attraction.

Gingerly. Cautiously, with hesitating, mincing, or faltering steps. The word is over 400 years old in English and has nothing to do with ginger. It is probably from O.Fr. gensour, comparative of gent, delicate, dainty.

They spend their goods . . . upon their dansing minions, that mins it fel gingerlie, God wot, tripping like gotes, that an egge would not brek under their feet.

STUBBES: Anatomie of Abuses, II, i (1583).

Ginnunga gap. In Scandinavian mythology, the great abyss between NIFLHEIM, the region of fogs and MUSPELHEIM, the region of intense heat. It was without beginning and without end, there was neither day or night, and it existed before either land or sea, HEAVEN or earth.

Giotto's O. The old story goes that the POPE, wishing to employ artists from all over Italy, sent a messenger to collect specimens of their work. When the man visited Giotto (c. 1267-1337) the artist paused for a moment from the picture he was working on and with his brush drew a perfect circle on a piece of paper. In some surprise the man returned to the Pope, who, appreciating the perfection of Giotto's artistry and skill by his unerring circle, employed Giotto forthwith.

I saw . . . that the practical teaching of the masters of Art was summed up by the O of Giotto.
RUSKIN: Queen of the Air, iii.

Giovanni, Don. See DON JUAN.

Gipsy. See GYPSY.

Giralda (Sp. a weather-vane). The name given to the great square tower of the cathedral at Seville (formerly a Moorish minaret) which is surmounted by a statue of Faith, so pivoted as to turn with the wind.

Gird. To gird up the loins. To prepare for hard work or for a journey. The Jews wore a girdle only when at work or on a journey.

To gird with a sword. To raise to a peerage. It was the SAXON method of investiture to an earldom, continued after the CONQUEST. Thus Richard I "girded with the sword" Hugh de Pudsey, the aged Bishop of Durham, making (as he said) "a young earl of an old prelate".

Girdle. A good name is better than a good girdle. A good reputation is better than money. It used to be customary to carry money in the belt or in a purse suspended from it, and a girdle of gold meant a "purse of gold".

Children under the girdle. Not yet born.

He has a large mouth but small girdle. Great expenses but small means.

He has undone her girdle. Taken her for his wife. The Roman bride wore a chaplet of flowers on her head, and a girdle of sheep's wool about her waist. A part of the marriage ceremony was for the bridegroom to loose this.

If he be angry, he knows how to turn his girdle. A quotation from Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing, V, i. He knows how to prepare himself to fight. Before wrestlers engaged in combat, they turned the buckle of the girdle behind them. Thus, Sir Ralph Winwood writes to Mr. Secretary Cecil:

I said, "What I spake was not to make him angry." He replied, "If I were angry, I might turn the buckle of my girdle behind me."

17 December 1602.

The Girdle of Venus. See CESTUS.

To put a girdle round the earth. To travel to go round it. PUCK says:

I'll put a girdle round about the earth
In forty minutes.

SHAKESPEARE: Midsummer Night's Dream, II, i.

Girdle-cake. A cake cooked over the fire on a girdle or griddle, a circular iron plate, also called a bakestone.

Girl. The word first appears in Middle English and its etymology has given rise to many guesses. It was formerly applicable to a child of either sex (a boy was sometimes distinguished as a "knavegirl"), and is now applied particularly to a young female or young woman. When they become "old girls" is somewhat elastic. It is probably a diminutive of some lost word cognate with Pomeranian goer and Old Low German gor, a child. It appears nearly 70 times in SHAKESPEARE, but only twice in the Authorized Version (Joel iii, 3; Zech. viii, 5).

Girl Guides. The feminine counterpart to the BOY SCOUTS, organized in 1910 by General Baden-Powell, and his sister Miss Agnes Baden-Powell. Their training and organization is essentially the same as the Scouts and is based on similar promises and laws. The three sections of the movement were called Brownies, Guides, and Rangers, but the names and groupings have now been modified to Brownie Guides (7-11 years); Guides (10-16 years); Ranger Guides (14-19 years).

In the U.S.A., where they were formed in 1921, they are called Girl Scouts, with different age groupings and names, other than that of Brownie.

Girondists, or The Gironde. The moderate republicans in the French Revolution (1791-1793). So called from the department of the Gironde which elected for the Legislative Assembly men such as Vergniaud and Gensonné who championed their point of view. Condorcet, Madame Roland, and Pétion were among them. Brissot became their chief spokesman, hence they were sometimes called Brisotins. They were the dominant party in 1792 but were overthrown in the Convention by the MOUNTAIN in 1793 and many of their leaders were guillotined.

Gis. A corruption of Jesus or J.H.S. Ophelia says "By Gis and by St. Charity" (Hamlet, IV, v).

Give. For such phrases as Give the devil his due, Give a dog a bad name and hang him, I'll give him beans, etc., see the principal noun.

A given name. In American usage, a given name is a first or Christian name.

A give-away is a revealing or betraying circumstance.

To give and take. To be fair; to practise forbearance and consideration. In horse-racing a give and take plate is a prize for a race in which the runners which exceed a standard height carry more, and those who come short of it less, than the standard weight.

To give away. To hand the bride in marriage to the bridegroom, to act the part of the bride's father. Also, to let out a secret, inadvertently or on purpose; to betray an accomplice.

To give in. To confess oneself beaten, to yield.

To give it anyone, to give it him hot. To scold or thrash a person. As "I gave it him right and left", "I'll give it you when I catch you".

To give oneself away. To betray oneself by some thoughtless action or remark; to damage one's own cause by carelessly letting something out.

To give out. To make public. Also, to come to an end, to become exhausted; as, "My money has quite given out."

To give way. To break down; to yield.

To give what for. To administer a sound thrashing, to castigate thoroughly.

Gizzard. The strong, muscular second stomach of birds, where the food is ground, attributed humorously to man in some phrases.

That stuck in his gizzard. Annoyed him, was more than he could stomach, or digest.

Glad. To give the glad eye. See EYE.

Glad rags. A slang term for evening dress.

Gladiators (Lat. gladius, a sword). These combatants who fought to the death in Roman arenas were first drawn from condemned criminals and originally appeared at FUNERAL ceremonies in 164 B.C. Slaves and prisoners of war came to be employed as the taste for these revolting spectacles grew, and their employment as hired bodyguards by wealthy patrons became a threat to law and order. They were trained in special schools (ludi) and gladiatorial games spread throughout the provinces. Such combats were suppressed in the Eastern Empire by Constantine in A.D. 325 and in the West by Theodoric in A.D. 500.

Gladstone. A name given to cheap claret after W. E. Gladstone (1809-1898) when CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER reduced the duty on French wines in his famous budget of 1860.

Gladstone bag. A kind of leather portmanteau made in various sizes and named after the great Victorian statesman, W. E. Gladstone.

Glamorgan. The southernmost county of Wales. Geoffrey of Monmouth says that Cunedagius and Margan, the sons of Gonorilla and Regan, divided the Kingdom of Britain between them after the death of their aunt Cordeilla. Margan, resolving to take the whole, attacked Cunedagius but was put to flight and killed "in a town of Kambria, which since his death has been by the country people called Margan to this day". Spenser says:

But fierce Cundah gan shortly to envy
His brother Morgan . . .
Whence as he to those woody hilles did fly,
Which hight of him Glamorgan, there him slew.
The Faerie Queene, II, x, 33.

The name actually appears to be a corruption of Gwlad Morgan, the land or territory of Morgan, alternatively called Morganwg (or Morganwg), the suffix wg after the name indicating the ruler's domain, Morgan probably being a native prince of the 10th century. Geoffrey of Monmouth wrote in the 12th century.

Glasgow, Arms of. See KENTIGERN, ST.

Glasgow magistrate. A salt herring. The phrase is said to have originated when some wag placed a salt herring on the iron guard of the carriage of a well-known magistrate who made up part of a deputation attending on King George IV.

Glass. Glass breaker. A wine bibber. In the early part of the 19th century toppers often threw the empty glass under the table or broke off the stand so that they might not be able to set it down and were compelled to drink it clean off, without HEEL-TAPS.

We never were glass-breakers in this house, Mr. Lovel.—SCOTT: The Antiquary, ch. ix.

Glass House. Army slang for a military prison. It was originally applied to the prison at North Camp, Aldershot, which had a glass roof.

To live in a glass house. To be in a vulnerable position morally, to be open to attack. An expression arising from the old proverb those who live in glass houses should not throw stones. It is found in varying forms from the time of Chaucer. Cp. also Matt. vii, 1-4.

And forthy, who that hath a head of verre,
From cast of stones wave him in the verre.
CHAUCER: Troilus and Cresseide, Bk. II.

Glass slipper (of Cinderella). See CINDERELLA.

Glasse, Mrs. Hannah. A name immortalized by the reputed saying in her cookery book, FIRST CATCH YOUR HARE (see under CATCH).

Glassites. See SANDEMANIANS.

Glastonbury. An ancient town in Somerset, almost twelve miles from Cadbury Castle, "the many-towered Camelot". It is fabled to be the place where Joseph of Arimathea brought the Christian faith to Britain, and the Holy GRAIL in the year 63. It was here Joseph's staff took root and budded—the famous Glastonbury Thorn, which flowers every Christmas in honour of Christ's birth. The name is now given to a variety of Cratægus or hawthorn, which flowers about old Christmas Day. It is the isle of AVALON, the burial place of King ARTHUR.

Glauber Salts (glou' bër). A strong purgative, so called from Johann Rudolph Glauber (1604-1668), a German chemist who discovered it in 1658 in his search for the PHILOSOPHER'S STONE. It is sodium sulphate, crystallized below 34°C.

Glaucus (glaw' kûs). The name of a number of heroes in classical legend, including:

(1) A fisherman of Bœotia, who became a sea-god endowed with the gift of prophecy from APOLLO. Milton alludes to him in Comus (l. 895), and Spenser mentions him in The Faerie Queene (IV, xi, 13):

And Glaucus, that wise soothsayer understood, and Keats gives his name to the old magician whom ENDYMION met in NEPTUNE's hall beneath the sea (Endymion, Bk. III). See also SCYLLA.

(2) A son of SISYPHUS who would not allow his horses to breed; VENUS so infuriated them that they tore him to pieces. Hence the name is given to one who is so overfond of horses that he is ruined by them.

(3) A commander of the Lycians in the TROJAN WAR (Iliad, Bk. VI) who was connected by ties of ancient family friendship with his enemy, DIOMED. When they met in battle they not only refrained from fighting but exchanged arms in token of amity. As the armour of the Lycian was of GOLD, and that of the Greek of bronze, it was like bartering precious stones for French paste. Hence the phrase A Glaucus swap.

Gleek (Ger. gleich, like). An old card-game popular from the 16th to the 18th century, the object being to get three cards alike, as three aces, three kings, etc. Four cards all alike, as four aces, four kings, etc., is known as mournival.

Gleek is played by three persons. The two and threes are thrown out of the pack; twelve cards are then dealt to each player, and eight are left for stock, which is offered in rotation to the players for purchase. The trumps are called Tiddy, Tumbler, Tib, Tom, and Towser. Cp. DUTCH GLEEK.

Gleipnir (glip' nër) (Old Norse, the fetter). In Scandinavian legend the fetter by which the dwarfs bound the wolf FENRIR. It was extremely light and made of the miaul of a cat, the roots of a mountain, the sinews of a bear, the breath of a fish, the beard of a woman, and the spittle of a bird.

Glengarry. A narrow valley in Inverness-shire after which the Glengarry bonnet or cap is named.

Glim. See DOUSE THE GLIM.

Gloria. A cup of coffee with brandy in it instead of milk.

Gloria in Excelsis (glôr i a in ek sel' sis, ek shel' sis). The opening words of the ANGELIC HYMN, also called the Greater DOXOLOGY. The Latin Gloria in Excelsis Deo, etc., is part of the ORDINARY OF THE MASS and the English translation "Glory be to God on high" forms part of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND service for Holy Communion.

Gloria Patri. See DOXOLOGY.

Gloria Tibi (glôr i a ti bē). The brief DOXOLOGY, Gloria tibi Domine, Glory be to thee, O Lord. In the Roman Catholic Mass the Latin words are used after the announcement of the Gospel. In the CHURCH OF ENGLAND service for Holy Communion the English version is used similarly.

Gloria mundi, Sic transit (Lat.). So passes away the glory of the world. A quotation from De Imitatione Christi (Bk. I, ch. iii) by Thomas à Kempis (c. 1380-1471)—a classic statement on the transitory nature of human vanities. At the coronation ceremony of the POPE, a reed surmounted with flax is burnt, and as it flickers and dies the chaplain intones—Pater sancte, sic transit gloria mundi.

Gloriana. Spenser's name in The Faerie Queene for the typification of Queen Elizabeth I. Gloriana held an annual feast for twelve days, during which time adventurers appeared before her to undertake whatever task she chose to impose upon them. On one occasion twelve knights presented themselves before her, and their exploits form the scheme of Spenser's allegory of which only six and a half books remain.

Glory. Hand of Glory. In folk-lore, a dead man's hand, preferably one cut from the body of a man who has been hanged, soaked in oil, and used as a magic torch by thieves. Robert Graves points out that the Hand of Glory is a translation of the French main de gloire, a corruption of mandragore, the plant mandragora (mandrake), whose roots had a similar magic value to thieves. Cp. DEAD MAN'S HAND.

Glory-hole. A small room, cupboard, etc., where all sorts of odds and ends and junk are dumped.

Glorious. The Glorious First of June.

1 June 1794, when the Channel Fleet under Lord Howe gained a decisive victory over the French under Admiral Villaret Joyeuse. Off Ushant, six French ships were captured and one sunk but the convoy of corn ships, which they were escorting, got through to Brest.

Glorious Fourth, The. See INDEPENDENCE DAY.

Glorious John. John Dryden, the poet (1631-1700). George Borrow also gave this name to the publisher John Murray (1778-1843).

Glorious Revolution, The. The revolution of 1688 which established parliamentary sovereignty, when James II, deserted by his followers, fled to France in December 1688 and William of Orange and his wife Mary (daughter of James II) were declared joint sovereigns.

Glorious Uncertainty of the Law. The toast at a dinner given to the judges and counsel in Serjeant's Hall. The occasion was the elevation of Lord Mansfield to the peerage and to the office of Lord Chief Justice (1756).

Gloucestershire. As sure as God's in Gloucestershire. A strong asseveration. "As sure as God made little apples" is similarly used.

Glove. In the days of CHIVALRY it was customary for knights to wear a lady's glove in their helmets, and to defend it with their life.

One ware on his headpiece his ladies sleve, and another bare on hys helme the glove of his dearynge.—HALL: Chronicle, Henry IV.

On ceremonial occasions gloves are not worn in the presence of royalty, because one is to stand unarmed, with helmet and gauntlets off to show there is no hostile intention.

In mediæval times a folded glove was used as a gage or pledge to fulfil a judgment of a court of law. A glove was also thrown down as a challenge. (See HERE I THROW DOWN MY GLOVE below.) VASSALS were often enfeoffed by investing them with a glove, and fiefs were held by presenting a glove to the sovereign. Gloves used to be worn by the clergy to indicate that their hands were clean and not open for bribes. BISHOPS were sometimes given gloves as a symbol of accession to their SEE. Anciently judges were not allowed to wear gloves on the BENCH; so to give a judge a pair of gloves symbolized that he need not take his seat, and in a MAIDEN ASSIZE the SHERIFF presents the judge with a pair of white gloves.

The ancient Glovers Company of London was refounded in 1556.

Glove money. A bribe, a perquisite: so called from the ancient custom of a client presenting a pair of gloves to a counsel who undertook a cause. Mrs. Croaker presented Sir Thomas More, the Lord Chancellor, with a pair of gloves lined with forty pounds in "angels" as a "token". Sir Thomas kept the gloves but returned the "lining".

A round with gloves. A friendly contest; a fight with gloves.

Hand in glove. Sworn friends; on most intimate terms, like glove and hand.

He bit his glove. He resolved on mortal revenge. On the BORDER, to bite the glove was considered a pledge of deadly vengeance.

Stern Rutherford right little said,
But bit his glove and shook his head.
SCOTT: Lay of the Last Minstrel, VI, vii.

Here I throw down my glove. I challenge you. See TO THROW DOWN THE GAUNTLET under GAUNTLET.

I will throw my glove to Death himself,
That there's no maculation in thy heart.
SHAKESPEARE: Troilus and Cressida, IV, iv.

With the gloves off. Figuratively, to oppose without restraint. An allusion to the old pugilists who fought with bare fists.

Glubbudrib. The land of sorcerers and magicians visited by Gulliver in Swift's Gulliver's Travels.

Gluckists. C. W. von Gluck (1714-1787), the German operatic composer and a notable innovator, came to Paris in 1773 and his controversial Iphigénie en Aulide was produced the following year with the support of the dauphiness, Marie Antoinette. The Italian composer Piccinni (1728-1800) arrived in 1776 at the invitation of Madame du Barry as champion of the Italian school, and in Parisian musical circles a foolish rivalry developed between the adherents of Gluck (Gluckists) and the supporters of Piccinni (Piccinnists). Gluck remained in Paris until 1779 when his Iphigénie en Tauride marked the triumph of the Gluckists.

Glumdalclitch. A girl, nine years old, and forty feet high, who, in Swift's Gulliver's Travels, had charge of Gulliver in BROBDINGNAG.

Glutton, The. Vitellius, the Roman Emperor, who reigned from 2 January to 22 December, A.D. 69. Cp. APICIUS.

Glyndebourne. The country estate, near Lewes in Sussex, where Mr. John Christie (1882-1962) opened the Glyndebourne

Gnome

Festival Theatre in 1934 for operatic and musical performances which became an annual event.

Gnome (nōm). According to the ROSICRUCIAN system, a misshapen elemental spirit, dwelling in the bowels of the earth, and guarding the mines and quarries. Gnomes of various sorts appear in many FAIRY tales and legends. The word seems to have been first used (and perhaps invented) by PARACELsus and is probably the Gr. ge-nomos, earth-dweller. Cp. SALAMANDER.

Gnomes of Zürich. An uncomplimentary name given to those financiers of Zürich controlling international monetary funds. The phrase became popular after its use in November 1964 by Mr. George Brown (then Minister of Economic Affairs) at the time of a sterling crisis.

What most infuriated George Brown, and Labour M.P.s such as John Mendelson and Ian Mikardo . . . was that the men they disparaged as the "gnomes of Zürich" were really giants.

T. R. FEHRENBACH: The Gnomes of Zürich.

Gnomic Verse. Verse characterized by pithy expression of sententious or weighty maxims. The Gr. word gnome, thought, judgment, acquired specialized meanings such as EPIGRAM, proverb, maxim; hence gnomic verse. A group of gnomic poets existed in Greece in the 6th century B.C. An English exemplar is Francis Quarles (1592-1644).

Gnostics (nos' tiks). Various sects, mainly of Christian inspiration, which arose and flourished in the 2nd century and offshoots which survived into the 5th century. The name derives from the Gk. word gnosis, knowledge, but it was usually used by the Gnostics in the sense of "revelation" which gave them certain mystic knowledge for salvation which others did not possess. It was essentially based on oriental dualism, the existence of two worlds, good and evil, the divine and the material. The body was regarded as the enemy of spiritual life. In most Gnostic systems there were seven world-creating powers, in a few their place was taken by one DEMIURGE. Christ was the final and perfect ÆON. The Gnostic movement caused the Christian Church to develop its organization and doctrinal discipline. See also MANICHÆANS; MARCIONITES.

Go (O.E. gan, start, depart, move, etc.). Both the verb and the noun are used in a wide range of expressions, some of which are recorded below. For others such as to go by the board, etc., see under the principal word.

A go. A fix, a scrape; as in here's a go or here's a fine go—here's a mess or awkward state of affairs. Also a share, a portion, or tot, as a go of gin; and an attempt, as have a go at something.

A go-between. One who acts as an intermediary; one who interposes between two parties.

A regular goer. One with plenty of dash, a man of mettle.

All the go. All the fashion, all the rage, quite in vogue.

Her carte is hung in the West-end shops,
With her name in full on the white below;
And all day long there's a big crowd stops
To look at the lady who's "all the go".

SIMS:

Ballads of Babylon (Beauty and the Beast).

Go along with you. A jocular expression of disbelief in what someone is saying, stop fooling, etc., used in the sense of "run off with you". Also, when someone agrees to participate in a course of action suggested by you, he is said to "go along with you".

Go as you please. Not bound by any rules; do as you like; unceremonious.

Go it! An exclamation of encouragement, sometimes ironical.

Go it alone. To play a lone hand; to carry on or do something without help; to assume sole responsibility.

Go to! An exclamation, often of impatience or reproof, or as an exhortation like "come".

Cassius: I am a soldier, I,
Older in practice, abler than yourself
To make conditions.

Brutus: Go to; you are not, Cassius.
SHAKESPEARE: Julius Cæsar, IV, iii.

Go to Halifax. A EUPHEMISM for "Go to hell". The coinage probably derives from association with the saying "From Hull, Hell and Halifax, Good Lord, deliver us".

See HULL.

Go-to-meeting clothes, behaviour, etc. One's best.

I've gone and done it! or I've been and gone and done it! There! I've done the very thing I ought not to have done! I've made a pretty mess of it.

I will go through fire and water to serve you. See under FIRE.

It is no go. It is not workable.

That goes for nothing. It doesn't count; it doesn't matter one way or the other.

That goes without saying. That is self-evident, that is well understood or indisputable. The French say Cela va sans dire.

To give one the go-by. To pass by and ignore someone, to disregard.

To go ahead. To make progress, to prosper, to start.

To give the go ahead. To give permission to proceed in an undertaking.

To go back on one's word. To fail to keep one's promise.

To go down. See under DOWN.

To go farther and fare worse. To take more pains and trouble and find oneself in a worse position.

To go for a man. To attack him, either physically or in an argument, etc.

To go hard with one. To prove a troublesome matter. "It will go hard with me before I give up the attempt", i.e. I won't give up until I have tried every means to success, however difficult, dangerous, or painful it may prove.

To go in for. To follow as a pursuit or occupation, as in "to go in for medicine".

To go into a matter. To explore or investigate it thoroughly.

To go it. To be fast, extravagant, headstrong in one's behaviour and habits.

To go it blind. To act without stopping to consider. In poker, if a player chooses to "go it blind", he doubles the ante before looking at his cards.

To go off one's head, nut, onion, rocker, etc. Completely to lose control of oneself: to go mad, either temporarily or for good; to go out of one's mind.

To go on all fours. See under ALL FOURS.

To go the pace. See FAST.

To go to Birmingham by way of Beachy Head. See BIRMINGHAM.

To go under. To become ruined; to fail utterly, to lose caste.

Also to pass as, to be known as; as, "She goes under the name of 'Mrs. Harlow', but we all know she is really 'Miss Smith'."

To go through the motions. To make a pretence of doing something; to carry out an obligation or duty in a very half-hearted manner.

Go-backs. Would-be settlers in the Far West of the U.S.A. who returned East discouraged and spread gloomy rumours about the difficulties met with.

Go-cart. A device for training toddlers to walk which at the same time combined some of the features of a playpen. They were in use from the later MIDDLE AGES and were introduced into England in the early 17th century. They consisted of a small framework on wheels or rollers splayed out at the base so that they could not be overturned. The top was usually in the form of a tray for containing toys with a circular opening in which the child could stand upright, and be held secure at waist height.

The name was also applied to a kind of two-wheeled cabriolet and to a light children's cart, etc. The name Go kart now denotes a small one-man racing vehicle propelled by a light engine.

Godown (gō' down). In India, China, etc., a warehouse. It is a corruption of the Malay word gadong or godong. The English form of the name may have been influenced by the fact that these storehouses were often partly below ground level.

Go-getter. An enterprising, ambitious, person.

Go-slow. The deliberate slowing down of work or production by employees engaged in an industrial dispute.

Goat. From early times the goat has been associated with the idea of sin (see SCAPEGOAT) and associated with devil-lore. The legend that the DEVIL created the goat may well be due to its destructiveness, and the Devil was frequently depicted as a goat. It is also a type of lust and lechery.

Don't play the giddy goat. Don't make a ridiculous fool of yourself; keep yourself within bounds. The derivation is obvious.

To get one's goat. An old Americanism for annoying one, making one wild.

To separate the sheep from the goats. To divide the worthy from the unworthy, the good from the evil, the favoured from the disfavoured. The allusion is to Matt. xxv, 32:

And before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.

The Goat and Compasses. The origin of this PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGN is uncertain. A once popular suggestion was that it is a corruption of "God encompasseth us". Other suggestions are that it was derived from the arms of the Wine Cooper's Company of Cologne, or merely the addition of the masonic emblem of the compasses to an original sign of a goat.

Goatsucker, or goat-owl. A name popularly given to the nightjar, from the ancient and very widespread belief that this bird sucks the udders of goats. In Greek, Latin, French, German, Spanish, and some other languages its name has the same signification.

Gobelin Tapestry (gō' be lin). So called from a French family of dyers founded by Jehan Gobelin (d. 1476); their tapestry works in the Faubourg St.

Marcel, Paris, were taken over by Colbert as a royal establishment in 1662.

Goblin. A familiar demon, dwelling, according to popular legend, in private houses, chinks of trees, etc. In many parts miners attributed to them the strange noises they heard in the mine. The word is Fr. gobelin, probably a diminutive of the surname Gobel, but perhaps connected with Gr. kobalos, an impudent rogue, a mischievous sprite, or with the Ger. Kobold. Cp. GNOME.

God. A word common, in slightly varying forms, to all Teutonic languages, probably from an Aryan root, gheu—to invoke; it is in no way connected with god.

It was VOLTAIRE who said, "Si Dieu n'existait pas, il faudrait l'inventer." For the various gods listed in this Dictionary see under their individual names.

Greek and Roman gods were divided into Dii Majores and Dii Minores, the greater and the lesser. The Dii Majores were twelve in number:

Greek	Latin
ZEUS	JUPITER (King)
Apollon	APOLLO (the sun)
ARES	MARS (war)
HERMES	MERCURY (messenger)
POSEIDON	NEPTUNE (ocean)
Hephaistos	VULCAN (smith)
HERA	JUNO (Queen)
DEMETER	CERES (tillage)
Artemis	DIANA (moon, hunting)
ATHENE	MINERVA (wisdom)
APHRODITE	VENUS (love and beauty)
Hestia	VESTA (home-life).

Their blood was ICHOR, their food was AMBROSIA, their drink NECTAR.

Four other deities are often referred to:

Dionysos	BACCHUS (wine)
EROS	CUPID (love)
Pluton	PLUTO (the underworld)
KRONOS	SATURN (time).

Persephone (Greek) or PROSERPINE (Latin), was the wife of Pluto, CEYBELE was the wife of Saturn, and RHEA of Kronos.

Hesiod says (i, 250):

Some thirty thousand gods on earth we find
Subjects of Zeus, and guardians of mankind.

The Greeks observed a Feast of the Unknown Gods that none might be neglected.

A god from the machine. See DEUS EX MACHINA.

Among the gods, or up in the gods. In the uppermost gallery of a theatre, just below the ceiling, which was frequently embellished with a representation of a mythological heaven. The French call this the paradis.

God bless the Duke of Argyle. See ARGYLE.

God helps those who help themselves.

To this a wag has added "but God help those who are caught helping themselves". The French say AIDE-TOI, LE CIEL T'AIDERA. Among the Fragments of Euripides (No. 435) is:

Bestir yourself, and then call on the gods,
For heaven assists the man that laboureth.

God-intoxicated man. The name given to Spinoza by Novalis (Friedrich Leopold von Hardenberg).

God made the country and man made the town. So said Cowper in The Task (The Sofa, 749). Cp. Bacon's "God Almighty first planted a garden" (Of Gardens) and Cowley's "God the first garden made, and the first city Cain" (On Gardens). Varro says in De Re Rustica: "Divina Natura dedit agros: ars humana aedificavit urbes." Marx and Engels say that the bourgeoisie "has created enormous cities . . . and has thus rescued a considerable part of the population from the idioy of rural life" (Communist Manifesto, I).

God save the King, or Queen. See NATIONAL ANTHEM.

God sides with the strongest. Fortune favours the strong. NAPOLEON said, "Le bon Dieu est toujours du côté des gros bataillons" (God is always on the side of the big battalions), but the phrase is of much earlier origin. Tacitus (Hist. IV, 17) has Deos fortioribus adesse (the gods are on the side of the strongest); the Comte de Bussy, writing to the Comte de Limoges, used it in 1677, as did VOLTAIRE in his Epître à M. le Riche, 6 February 1770.

God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb. The phrase comes from Sterne's Sentimental Journey (1768) but it was not original, for "Dieu mesure le froid à la brebis tonduë" appears in Henri Estienne's Les Prémices (1594) and Herbert's Jacula Prudentum (1651) has "To a close-shorn sheep God gives wind by measure." Although Sterne's version is more poetical he did not improve the sense by substituting lamb for sheep—lambs are never shorn!

Man proposes, God disposes. An old proverb found in Hebrew, Greek, Latin, etc. In Prov. xvi, 9, it is rendered:

A man's heart deviseth his way; but the Lord directeth his steps; and Publius Syrus (No. 216.) has:

Homo semper aliud, Fortuna aliud cogitat.

Whom God would destroy He first makes mad. A translation of the Latin version (Quos Deus vult perdere, prius dementat) of one of the Fragments of Euripides. Cp. also Stultum facit fortuna quem vult perdere (Publius Syrus, No. 612), He whom Fortune would ruin she robs of his wits.

Whom the gods love die young. A translation of the Latin Quem Di diligunt, adolescens moritur (Plautus, Bacchides, IV, vii, 18). For the popular saying "Only the good die young" see under GOOD.

God's Acre. See under ACRE.

Goddam, or Godon (gò dām', gò don'). A name given by the French to the English at least as early as the 15th century, on account of the favourite oath of the English soldiers. JOAN OF ARC is reported to have used the word on a number of occasions in contemptuous reference to her enemies.

Godfather. To stand godfather. To pay the reckoning, godfathers being sometimes chosen for the sake of the present they are expected to make to the child at christening or in their wills.

Godless Florin. See GRACELESS FLORIN.

Godlike Daniel, The. A nickname given by his followers to Daniel Webster (1782-1852), the famous statesman, lawyer, and orator. In his youth he was known as Black Dan from his raven hair and dark skin.

Godiva, Lady (gò dí' vâ). Patroness of Coventry. In 1040 Leofric, Earl of Mercia and Lord of Coventry, imposed certain exactions on his tenants, which his lady besought him to remove. He said he would do so if she would ride naked through the town. Lady Godiva did so and the Earl faithfully kept his promise.

The legend is recorded by Roger of Wendover (d. 1236), in his Flores Historiarum, and this was adapted by Rapin in his History of England (1723-1727) into the story commonly known. An addition of the time of Charles II asserts that everyone kept indoors at the time, but a certain tailor peeped through his window to see the lady pass and was struck blind as a consequence. He has ever since been called "Peeping Tom of Coventry". Since 1768 the ride has been annually commemorated at Coventry by a procession in which "Lady Godiva" features centrally.

Godolphin Barb. See DARLEY ARABIAN.

Goel (gò' el) (Heb. claimant). Among the ancient Hebrews the goel was the next of kin whose duty it was to redeem the property of a kinsman who had been forced to sell under stress of circumstances; he was also the AVENGER OF BLOOD.

Goemagot, or Goemot. (gò em' á got or gò' mot). The names given in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Britonum (I, xvi), and Spenser's The Faerie Queene (II, x, 10), etc. to the giant who dominated the western horn of England (CORNWALL or Cornubia). He was slain by CORINEUS. See GOG AND MAGOG.

Gog and Magog. In British legend, the sole survivors of a monstrous brood, the offspring of demons and the thirty-three infamous daughters of the Emperor Diocletian, who murdered their husbands. Gog and Magog were taken as prisoners to LONDON after their fellow giants had been killed by BRUTE and his companions, where they were made to do duty as porters at the royal palace, on the site of the Guildhall, where their effigies have stood at least from the reign of Henry V. The old giants were destroyed in the GREAT FIRE, and were replaced by figures 14 ft. high, carved in 1708 by Richard Saunders. These were subsequently destroyed in an air raid in 1940 and new figures were set up in 1953. Formerly wickerwork models were carried in the LORD MAYOR'S SHOWS.

In the BIBLE Magog is spoken of as a son of Japhet (Gen. x, 2), in the Revelation Gog and Magog symbolize all future enemies of the Kingdom of God, and in Ezekiel Gog is prince of Magog, a ruler of hordes to the north of Israel.

Gogmagog Hill. The higher of two hills some 3 miles south-east of Cambridge. The legend is that Gogmagog fell in love with the nymph Granta, but she would have nothing to say to the giant, and he was metamorphosed into the hill (Drayton, Polyolbion, xxi).

Golconda (gol kon' dá). An ancient kingdom and city in India, west of Hyderabad, which was conquered by Aurangzeb in 1687. The name is emblematic of great wealth and proverbially famous for its DIAMONDS, but the gems were only cut and polished there.

Gold. According to the ancient alchemists, gold represented the SUN, and SILVER the MOON. In HERALDRY gold (called "or") is depicted by dots. The gold CARAT is the unit used by goldsmiths, assayers, etc., for expressing the proportion of gold in any article in gold. Gold coins were struck in England as regular currency from the reign of Edward III until 1917.

The gold of Nibelungen. See NIBELUNG-ENLIED.

Dutch gold. See under DUTCH.

Fool's Gold. A name given to iron pyrites or pyrite, which being of a brassy yellow colour was sometimes mistaken for gold. It is often found in coal-seams. Martin Frobisher returned with supposed "gold mineral" from his voyage of 1576 in search of the NORTH-WEST PASSAGE. Two further voyages were made in 1577 and 1578 for cargoes of the supposed ore which proved to be nothing but fool's gold.

Healing gold. Gold given to a monarch for "healing" the KING'S EVIL.

Mannheim gold. A sort of PINCHBECK, made of copper, zinc, and tin, used for cheap jewellery and invented at Mannheim, Germany. Cp. DUTCH GOLD.

The Gold Standard. A currency system based upon keeping the monetary unit at the value of a fixed weight of gold. Great Britain adopted the Gold Standard from 1821 but suspended gold payments in 1914, returned to the Gold Standard in 1925 and abandoned it in 1931 during the slump. Most countries of the world were on the Gold Standard from 1894 to 1914. Gold became the monetary standard of the U.S.A. by the Coinage Act of 1873 but the Gold Standard was abandoned in 1933.

A gold brick. An American phrase descriptive of any form of swindling. It originated in the gold-rush days when a cheat would sell his dupe an alleged (or even a real) gold brick, in the latter case substituting a sham one before making his get-away. In World War II gold-bricking was synonymous with idling, shirking, or getting a comrade to do one's job.

All he touches turns to gold. All his ventures succeed; he is invariably lucky. The allusion is to MIDAS.

All that glisters is not gold (Shakespeare: Merchant of Venice, II, vii). Do not be deceived by appearances.

But al thing which that shyneth as the gold
Nit nat gold, as that I have herd it told.

CHAUCER: Canon's Yeoman's Tale, 243.

He has got gold of Tolosa. His ill-gotten gains will never prosper. Cæpio, the Roman consul, in his march, to Gallia Narbonensis, desecrated the temple of the Celtic APOLLO at Tolosa (Toulouse) and stole from it all the gold and silver vessels and treasure belonging to the Cimbrian DRUIDS. This, in turn, was stolen from him while it was being taken to Massilia (Marseilles). When he encountered the Cimbrians both he and his fellow-consul Maximus were defeated, and 112,000 of their men were left upon the field (106 B.C.).

To be worth its, or his (etc.), weight in gold. To be of great value or use. The phrase is applied both literally and metaphorically to persons and things.

The Gold Purse of Spain. Andalusia, because it is the most fertile area of Spain.

Golden Age. An age in the history of peoples when life was idyllic, or when the nation was at its summit of power, glory, and reputation; the best age, as the golden age of innocence, the golden age of literature. See AGE.

The "Golden Ages" of the various nations are often given as follows:

ASSYRIA. From the reign of Esarhaddon, third son of Sennacherib, to the fall of Nineveh (c. 700 to 600 B.C.).

CHALDAEO-BABYLONIAN EMPIRE. From the reign of Nabopolassar to that of Belshazzar (c. 625-538 B.C.).

CHINA. The era of the T'ang dynasty (618-906).

EGYPT. The reign of Seti I and Rameses II (c. 1312-1235 B.C.).

MEDIA. The reign of Cyaxares (c. 634-594 B.C.).

PERSIA. From the reign of Khosru, or Chosroes I, to that of Khosru II (c. A.D. 531-628).

ENGLAND. The reign of Elizabeth I (1558-1603).

FRANCE. The century including the reign of Louis XIV (1640-1740).

GERMANY. The reign of Charles V (1519-1558).

PORTUGAL. From John I to the close of Sebastian's reign (1383-1578).

PRUSSIA. The reign of Frederick the Great (1740-1786).

ROMAN EMPIRE. Gibbon (Decline and Fall, ch. iii), considered it to be from the death of Domitian to the accession of Commodus (A.D. 96-180).

RUSSIA. The reign of Peter the Great (1672-1725).

SPAIN. The reign of Ferdinand and Isabella when the crowns of Castile and Aragon were united (1474-1516).

SWEDEN. From Gustavus Vasa to the close of Gustavus Adolphus (1523-1632).

Golden Apples. See APPLE OF DISCORD; ATALANTA'S RACE; HESPERIDES.

The Golden Ass, properly, Metamorphoses, a 2nd-century satirical romance by Apuleius, and seemingly called the Golden Ass because of its excellency. It tells the adventures of Lucian, a young man who, being accidentally metamorphosed into an ass while sojourning in Thessaly, fell into the hands of robbers, eunuchs, magistrates, and so on, by whom he was ill-treated; but ultimately he recovered his human form. It contains the story of CUPID AND PSYCHE.

Golden Ball. Edward Hughes Ball, a REGENCY dandy.

The Golden Bull. In particular, an edict the Emperor Charles IV, issued at the Diet of Nuremberg in 1356 for the purpose of regularizing the election to the throne of the Empire. It was sealed with a golden bull or seal. Cp. PAPAL BULL under BULL.

Golden calf, to worship the. To bow down to money, to abandon one's principles for the sake of gain. The reference is to the golden calf made by AARON when Moses was absent on Mount Sinai. For their sin in worshipping the calf the Israelites paid dearly (Exod. xxxii).

The Golden Fleece. The old Greek story is that Ino persuaded her husband Athamus that his son Phryxus was the cause of a famine which desolated the land. Phryxus was thereupon ordered to be sacrificed but, being apprised of this, he made his escape over sea on the winged ram, Chrysomallus, which had a golden fleece (see HELLESPONT). When he arrived at Colchis, he sacrificed the ram to ZEUS, and gave the fleece to king Æetes, who hung it on a sacred OAK. JASON subsequently set out to recover it.

Australia has been called "The Land of the Golden Fleece" from its abundant wool production.

Golden Fleece, The Order of the (Fr. l'ordre de la toison d'or). An historic order of knighthood once common to Spain and Austria, instituted in 1429, for the protection of the Church by Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, on his marriage with the Infanta Isabella of Portugal. It became two separate orders in 1713. Its badge is a golden sheepskin with head and feet attached, adopted in allusion to Greek legend. It has been suggested that it may also have been influenced by the fact that the manufacture of woollens had long been the staple industry of the Netherlands.

... cette Toison rapporte la fable de la conquête faite par Iason Prince Grec, ... & par cette fable est representee l'acquisition de vertu qui ne peut estre sinon avec peine & travail. Autres dient que c'estoit par representation d'une devise amoureuse, comme en ce temps l'ordinaire estoit que les Chevaliers, a l'exemple des Chevaliers errans, prenoient les faveurs des Dames pour leurs emprises au fait d'armes.

GUY COQUILLE:

Histoire du pays ... de Nivernois (1612).

The Golden Gate. The strait forming the entrance to San Francisco Bay. San Francisco is hence called "The City of the Golden Gate". The name was given by John C. Frémont in 1846.

The state entrance to the city of Constantinople built of three arches to commemorate the victory of Theodosius I over Maximus (388), and incorporated in the walls built by Theodosius II, was called the Golden Gate. The 11th-century fortifications of Kiev also incorporated a Golden Gate.

Golden Handshake. A phrase applied to the often considerable terminal payments made to individuals, especially business executives, whose services are prematurely dispensed with. It has also been applied to the final grants made to colonial dependencies on attaining their independence. The derivation is obvious. Cp. TO BE BOWLER-HATTED under BOWLER HAT.

This year promises to be an expensive one for the British taxpayer in "golden handshakes".

The Times, 4 June 1964.

The Golden Hind. The famous ship in which Drake made his voyage of circumnavigation (1577-1580). Originally called the Pelican, it was renamed the Golden Hind at Port St. Julian, near the entrance to the Straits of Magellan, in 1578. Drake was knighted on board the Golden Hind in the presence of Queen Elizabeth I on 4 April 1581.

Golden Horde. The Mongolian TARTARS who in the 13th century established an empire in S.E. Russia under Batu, grandson of Genghis Khan. They overran eastern Europe and parts of western Asia, being eventually defeated by TIMUR in 1395. The name golden derives from Batu's magnificent tent.

The Golden Horn. The inlet of the BOSPORUS around which Istanbul (formerly Constantinople) is situated. Some five miles long, it may have derived its name both from its shape and its abundance of fish which made it a real CORNUCOPIA.

The Golden Legend (Aurea Legenda). A collection of so-called lives of the saints made by the Dominican, Jacobus de Voragine, in the 13th century; valuable for the picture it gives of mediæval manners, customs, and thought. It was translated from the Latin into most of the languages of western Europe and an English edition was published by CAXTON in 1483.

Longfellow's The Golden Legend is based on a story by Hartmann von Aue, a German MINNESINGER of the 12th century.

The Golden-mouthed. St. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM (d. 407), a father of the GREEK CHURCH, was so called for his great eloquence.

Golden Number. The number of the year in the METONIC CYCLE and may therefore consist of any number from 1 to 19. In the ancient Roman and Alexandrian CALENDARS this number was marked in gold, hence the name. The rule for finding the golden number is:

Add one to the Year of our Lord, and then divide by 19; the Remainder, if any, is the Golden Number; but if nothing remaineth, then 19 is the Golden Number.

*Book of Common Prayer
(Table to find Easter Day).*

It is used in determining the EPOCH and the date of EASTER.

Golden ointment. Eye ointment, in allusion to the ancient practice of rubbing a sty on the eye with a gold ring, which was supposed to cure it.

"I have a sty here, Chilax."

"I have no gold to cure it."

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER: Mad Lover, V, iv.

Golden Roses. An ornament made of gold in imitation of a spray of roses, one rose containing a receptacle into which is poured balsam and musk. The rose is solemnly blessed by the POPE on LAETARE SUNDAY, and is conferred from time to time on sovereigns and others, churches and cities distinguished for their services to the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. The last to receive it was Princess Charlotte of Nassau, Grand Duchess of Luxembourg in 1956. That presented by Pius IX to the Empress Eugénie in 1856 is preserved in Farnborough Abbey.

The Golden Rule. "Do as you would be done by."

Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets.—Matt. vii, 12.

Golden Shower, or Shower of Gold. A bribe, money. The allusion is to the classical tale of ZEUS and DANAË.

The Golden State. California. So called from the gold discoveries of 1848. See FORTY-NINERS under FORTY.)

The Golden Stream. St. JOHN DAMASCENE (d. c. 752), author of the first systematic treatise on dogmatic theology, was so called (Chrysorrhoeos) for his flowing eloquence.

The Golden-tongued (Gr. Chrysologos). St. Peter, Archbishop of Ravenna (d. c. 450).

The Golden Town. Mainz or Mayence was so called in CARLOVINGIAN times.

The Golden Valley. The eastern portion of Limerick is so called, from its natural fertility. The name is also given to the valley in mid-Wales from Pontrilas to Hay.

Golden Verses. Greek verses containing the moral rules of PYTHAGORAS, usually thought to have been composed by some of his scholars. He enjoins, among other things, obedience to God and one's rulers, deliberation before action, fortitude, and temperance in exercise and diet. He also suggests making a critical review each night of the actions of that day.

Golden Wedding. The fiftieth anniversary of marriage, husband and wife being both alive.

A good name is better than a golden girdle. See GIRDLE.

The golden bowl is broken. Death. A Biblical allusion:

Or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern; then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.

Eccles. xii, 6, 7.

The golden section of a line. Its division into two such parts that the area of the rectangle contained by the smaller segment and the whole line equals that of the square on the larger segment (Euclid, ii, 11).

The three Golden Balls. See BALLS.

To keep the golden mean. To practise moderation in all things. The wise saw of Cleobulus (see WISE MAN OF GREECE) and a virtue admired by the Romans, the aurea mediocritas of HORACE (Odes II, x, 5).

Goldfish Club. See CATERPILLAR CLUB.

Golgotha (gol' goth à). The place outside Jerusalem where Christ was crucified. The word is Aramaic and means a "skull". It may have been a place of execution where bodies were picked clean by animals or named from the round and skull-like contour of the site. There is no Biblical evidence for supposing that it was a hillock. The traditional site is that recovered by Constantine. Calvaria is the Greek and Latin equivalent of Golgotha. See CALVARY.

Golgotha, at the University church, Cambridge, was the gallery in which the "heads of the houses" sat; so called because it was the place of skulls or heads. It has been more wittily than truly said that Golgotha was the place of empty skulls.

Goliards. Educated jesters and buffoons who wrote ribald Latin verse, and who were noted for riotous behaviour. They flourished mainly in the 12th and 13th centuries. The word comes from the Old Fr. goliard (glutton) which derived from the Lat. gula (gluttony).

Goliath (go li' áth). The Philistine GIANT, slain by the stripling David with a small stone hurled from a sling (I Sam. xvii, 49-51). See GIANTS OF THE BIBLE.

Golosh. See GALOSH.

Gombeen Man. A village usurer, a money-lender. A word of Irish origin.

They suppose that the tenants can have no other supply of capital than from the gombeen man.

EGMONT HAKE: Free Trade in Capital.

Gone. Gone with the Wind. Said of events or persons that have left no trace by which to be remembered. It is also the title of what probably remains America's most widely read novel, a story of the CIVIL WAR as seen through Southern eyes. It was written by Margaret Mitchell (1900-1949) and published in 1936.

Goneril. One of LEAR's three daughters. Having received her moiety of Lear's Kingdom, the unnatural daughter first curtailed the old man's retinue, then gave him to understand that his company was troublesome. In Holinshed she appears as "Gonerilla". Cf. CORDELIA; REGAN.

After two years' stay with his son-in-law, his daughter Gonerilla grudged the number of his men.

GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH: Historia Britonum ch. XII.

Gong. A service nickname for a medal.

To be gonged. To be signalled to stop by motorized police for some breach of the traffic laws. A colloquial usage from the loud electric bell used to attract the offender's attention.

Gonnella's Horse. Gonnella, the domestic jester of the Duke of Ferrara, rode on a horse all skin and bone. The Jests of Gonnella were printed in 1506.

His horse, whose bones stuck out like the corners of a Spanish real, being a worse jade than Gonnella's qui tantum pellis et ossa fuit.

CERVANTES: Don Quixote, ch. I.

Gonville and Caius. See CAIUS.

Good. The Good. Among the many who earned, or were given, this appellation are:

Alfonso VIII (or IX) of León, "The Noble and Good" (1158-1214).

Haco I, King of Norway (c. 920-961).

John II of France, le Bon (1319, 1350-1364).

John III, Duke of Brittany (1286, 1312-1341).

Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy (1396, 1419-1467).

René, called The Good King René,

Duke of Anjou, Count of Provence, Duke of Lorraine, and King of Sicily (1409-1480).

The Prince Consort, ALBERT THE GOOD (1819-1861), husband of Queen Victoria.

Good Duke Humphrey. Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester (1391-1447), youngest son of Henry IV, said to have been murdered by Suffolk and Cardinal Beaufort (Shakespeare, Henry VI, Pt. II, III, ii); so called because of his devotion to the Church. (To Dine with Duke Humphrey. See HUMPHREY.)

Good Friday. The Friday preceding EASTER Day, held as the anniversary of the crucifixion. "Good" here means holy; CHRISTMAS, as well as SHROVE TUESDAY, used to be called "the good tide".

Born on Good Friday. According to old superstition, those born on CHRISTMAS Day or GOOD FRIDAY have the power of seeing and commanding spirits.

The Good Parliament. Edward III's Parliament of 1376; so called because of the severity with which it pursued the unpopular party of the Duke of Lancaster.

The Good Regent. James Stewart, Earl of Moray (d. 1570), a natural son of James V and half-brother of Mary Queen of Scots. He was appointed Regent of Scotland after the abdication of Queen Mary in 1567.

Good Samaritan. See SAMARITAN.

For good and all. Permanently, finally, conclusively.

The good woman never died after this, till she came to die for good and all.

L'ESTRANGE: Fables.

Only the good die young. A popular saying derived ultimately from one of the Greek Gnomonic poets (see GNOMIC VERSE), and echoed by several writers. Plautus says Quem Di deligunt, adolescens moritur (he whom the gods love dies young). Byron says "Heaven gives its favourites early death" (Childe Harold, iv, 102) and "Whom the gods love die young" (Don Juan, iv, 12). Defoe, in Character of the late Dr. S. Ammeseley, has "The good die early and the bad late", and Wordsworth "The good die first" (The Excursion, Bk. I).

There is a good time coming. A long established familiar saying in Scotland. Charles Mackay wrote his once-popular song of this title in 1846.

"I could have wished it had been . . . when I could have better paid the compliments I owe your Grace; but there's a gude time coming."

SCOTT: Rob Roy, ch. xxxii.

Good-bye. A contraction of God be with you. Similar to the French adieu.

Goods

Good-den. See DEN.

Goodfellow. See ROBIN GOODFELLOW.

Goodman. A husband or master. In Matt. xxiv, 43, "If the goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched."

It's like we maun wait then till the gudeman comes hame.—SCOTT: The Antiquary, ch. xv.

Goodman of Ballengeich. The assumed name of James V of Scotland when he made his disguised visits through the country districts around Edinburgh and Stirling, after the fashion of HAROUN-AL-RASCHID, Louis XI, etc.

Goodman's Croft. The name given in SCOTLAND to a strip of ground or corner of a field left untilled in the belief that unless such a place were left the DEVIL (called Goodman as a propitiatory gesture) would spoil the crop.

Goodwife is the feminine counterpart of GOODMAN.

Goods. I carry all my goods with me (omnia mea mecum porto). Said by Bias, one of the Seven Sages (see WISE MEN OF GREECE), when Priene was besieged and the inhabitants were preparing for flight. "He's got the goods on you!" He's got evidence against you.

That fellow's the goods. He's first class, just the man for the job.

To deliver the goods. To perform adequately; to carry out one's promise effectively; to deliver the "real thing".

Goodwin Sands. It is said that these dangerous sandbanks, stretching about 10 miles N.E. and S.W. some 5½ miles off the East Kent coast, consisted at one time of about 4,000 acres of low land called Lomea (the Infera Insula of the Romans) fenced from the sea by a wall, and belonging to Earl Godwin. WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR gave them to the abbey of St. Augustine, Canterbury, but the abbot allowed the sea wall to decay and in 1099 the sea inundated the whole. See TENTERDEN.

Goodwood Races. So called from the park in which they are held in Sussex, the property of the Duke of Richmond. The course has a curious loop at the end of the 5-furlong gallop. The races begin on the last Tuesday of July and last four days, the chief being "Cup Day" (Thursday). The Cup was first run in 1812; the Goodwood Stakes in 1823; the Stewards' Cup in 1840.

Goody. A depreciative, meaning primly or sentimentally virtuous but with no strength of character or independence of spirit; NAMBY-PAMBY. It also denotes a sweet, jam tart, etc. The word is also a rustic variant of goodwife (see GOODMAN) and is sometimes used as a title, like GAMMER, as "Goody Blake", "Goody Dobson".

Goody-goody. A reduplication of GOODY.

Goody Two-shoes. This nursery tale first appeared in 1765. It was written for John Newbery (1713-1767), a notable publisher of children's books, probably by Oliver Goldsmith. She owned but one shoe and when given a pair she was so pleased that she showed them to everyone, saying "Two shoes!"

Googly. In CRICKET, a deceptive delivery depending on hand action by the bowler in which an off-break is bowled to a right-handed batsman with what appears to be a leg-break action. Cp. CHINAMAN.

It was invented and developed by B. J. T. Bosanquet from 1890 and he used it against the Australians in 1903. In Australia it is called a "BOSEY".

Goose. A foolish or ignorant person is called a goose because of the alleged stupidity of this bird; a tailor's smoothing-iron is so called because its handle resembles the neck of a goose. The plural of the iron is gooses not geese.

Come in, tailor; here you may roast your goose.
SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, II, i.

Geese save the Capitol. When the Gauls attacked ROME in 390 B.C. it is said that a detachment advanced up the Capitoline Hill so silently that the foremost man reached the top unchallenged, but when climbing over the rampart disturbed some sacred geese whose cackle awoke the garrison. Marcus Manlius rushed to the wall and hurled the fellow over the precipice. To commemorate this event, the Romans carried a golden goose in procession to the Capitol every year. Manlius was given the name Capitolinus.

Those consecrated geese in orders,
That to the capitol were warders;
And being then upon patrol,
With noise alone beat off the Gaul.
BUTLER: Hudibras, II, iii.

The Goose Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Goose and Gridiron, The. A PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGN, probably in ridicule of the Swan and Harp, a popular sign for the early music-houses (see MUSIC HALL), but properly the coat-of-arms of the Company of Musicians—viz. azure, a swan with wings expanded argent, within double tressure [the gridiron] flory counterflory.

In the United States the name is humorously applied to the national coat-of-arms—the American EAGLE with a gridiron-like shield on its breast.

Goose-egg. See DUCK'S EGG under DUCK: in the U.S.A. a zero.

Goose Fair. A fair formerly held in many English towns about the time of MICHAELMAS, when geese were plentiful. That still held at Nottingham was the most important. Tavistock Goosey Fair is still held, though geese are seldom sold, but goose lunches, etc., are available.

Goose flesh. A rough, pimply condition of the skin especially on the arms and legs like that of a plucked goose or fowl. It is usually occasioned by cold or shock.

Goose-month. The lying-in month for women. Cp. GANDERMONT.

Goose-step. A military step in which the legs are moved from the hips, the knees being kept rigid, each leg being swung as high as possible. (It was introduced as a form of recruit drill in the British army but never became popular; it exists in a modified form in the slow march.) The goose-step (Stechschritt) has been a full-dress and processional march in the German army since the time of Frederick the Great. When the AXIS flourished it was adopted by the Italian army (il passo romano) but was soon ridiculed into desuetude.

Goose-trap. A late-18th-century American colloquialism for a swindle.

Michaelmas Goose. See MICHAELMAS DAY.

Mother Goose. Famous as giving the name to Mother Goose's Nursery Rhymes, which first seems to have been used in Songs for the Nursery: or, Mother Goose's Melodies for Children, published by T. Fleet in Boston, Mass., in 1719. The rhymes were free adaptations of Perrault's Contes de ma mère l'oye (Tales of My Mother Goose) which appeared in 1697.

Tuning Goose. The entertainment given in Yorkshire when the corn at harvest was all safely stacked.

Waygoose. See WAYZGOOSE.

All his geese are swans. He over-estimates, he sees things in too rosy a light, he paints too rosy a picture.

He's cooked his goose. He's done for himself, he's made a fatal mistake, ruined his chances, "DISHED" himself. "To cook someone's goose" is to spoil his plans, to "fix" him, to "SETTLE HIS HASH" (see HASH). It is apparently of 19th-century origin.

At the time of the "Papal Aggression" when Cardinal Wiseman was designated

Archbishop of Westminster and Administrator Apostolic of the Diocese of Southwark a street ballad of 1851 says:

If they come here we'll cook their goose,
The Pope and Cardinal Wiseman.

He can't say Bo! to a goose. See BO.

He killed the goose that laid the golden eggs. He grasped at what was more than his due and lost what was a regular source of supply; he has sacrificed future reward for present gain. The Greek fable says a countryman had a goose that laid golden eggs; thinking to make himself rich, he killed the goose to get the whole stock of eggs at once, thus ending the supply.

He steals a goose, and gives the giblets in alms. He amasses wealth by overreaching, and salves his conscience by giving small sums in charity.

The old woman is plucking her goose. A children's way of saying "it is snowing".

The royal game of goose. The game referred to by Goldsmith (Deserted Village 232) as being present in the ale-house—

The pictures placed for ornament and use,
The twelve good rules, the royal game of goose—was a game of counters in which the player progressed through compartments according to the cast of the dice. At certain divisions a goose was depicted, and if the player fell into one of these he doubled the number of his last throw and moved forward accordingly. See TWELVE GOOD RULES under RULE.

To shoe the goose. To fritter away one's time on unnecessary work; to play about, to trifle.

What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. What's good for one is good for the other; what the husband can do so can the wife.

Gooseberry. Gooseberry fool. A dish made of gooseberries scalded and pounded with cream. The word fool is from the Fr. fouler, to press or crush.

The big gooseberry season. See under BIG.

He played old gooseberry with me. He took great liberties with my property, and greatly abused it; in fact, he played the very deuce with me and my belongings.

To play, or be gooseberry. To act as chaperon; to be an unwanted third when lovers are together. The origin of the phrase is obscure but it may derive from the tact of the chaperon occupying the time in picking gooseberries while the others were more romantically engaged.

Goosebridge. Go to Goosebridge. "Rule a wife and have a wife." Boccaccio (ix, 9) tells us that a man who had married a shrew asked Solomon what he would do to make her more submissive; and the wise king answered, "Go to Goosebridge." Returning home, deeply perplexed, he came to a bridge which a muleteer was trying to induce a mule to cross. The beast resisted, but the stronger will of his master at length prevailed. The man asked the name of the bridge, and was told it was "Goosebridge".

Gopher (gō' fēr). A native of Minnesota, U.S.A. The word probably comes from the prairie rodent of that name.

Gopher wood, the wood of which Noah made his ark (Gen. vi, 14). It was probably some kind of cedar.

Gorboduc. See FERREX AND PORREX.

Gordian Knot. A great difficulty. Gordius, a peasant, being chosen king of Phrygia, dedicated his wagon to JUPITER, and fastened the yoke to a beam with a rope of bark so ingeniously that no one could untie it. ALEXANDER was told that "whoever undid the knot would reign over the whole East". "Well then," said the conqueror, "it is thus I perform the task," and, so saying, he cut the knot in twain with his sword; thus To cut the Gordian Knot is to get out of a difficult position by one decisive step; to resolve a situation by force or by evasive action.

If then such praise the Macedonian got
For having rudely cut the Gordian Knot.
WALLER: To the King.

Turn him to any cause of policy,
The Gordian Knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry V, I, i.

Gore. A triangular or wedge-shaped piece of cloth in dressmaking; also a similarly shaped piece of land, as in the name Kensington Gore. It is the O.E. gara cognate with gar, a spear.

Corners of the fields which, from their shape, could not be cut up into the usual acre or half-acre strips, were sometimes divided into tapering strips pointed at one end, and called "gores", or "gored acres".

SEEBOHM: The English Village Community, ch. I.

Gorgon. Anything unusually hideous, especially such a woman. In classical mythology there were three Gorgons, with serpents on their heads instead of hair. MEDUSA was their chief, the others, Stheno and Euryale, were immortal. They also had brazen claws and monstrous teeth. Their glance turned their victims to stone. Cp. PERSEUS.

Gorham Controversy (gōr' ūm). This arose out of the refusal (1848) of the Bishop of Exeter to institute the Rev. G. C. Gorham to the living of Bramford Speke, "because he held unsound views on the doctrine of baptism". After two years' controversy, the PRIVY COUNCIL decided in favour of Mr. Gorham, whose views were opposed by the HIGH CHURCH party. The PUSEYITES contested the decision of a lay court on a doctrinal matter, the Privy Council having reversed the judgment of the ARCHES Court of Canterbury made in 1849.

The judgement in the Gorham case has enabled Evangelical clergymen to remain with a quiet conscience ministers of the Church of England.

Gospel. From O.E. godspel (good tidings), a translation of the Med. Lat. bonus nuntius. It is used to describe collectively the lives of Christ as told by the EVANGELISTS in the New Testament; it signifies the message of redemption set forth in those books; it is used to denote the entire Christian message; and it is also applied to any doctrine or teaching set forth for some specific purpose.

The first four books of the New Testament, known as The Gospels, are ascribed to MATTHEW, MARK, LUKE and JOHN, although their exact authorship is uncertain. The first three of these are called the Synoptic Gospels as they follow the same lines and may be readily brought under one general view or synopsis. The fourth Gospel stands apart as the work of one mind. There are many Apocryphal Gospels, examples of which are given below.

The Gospel of Nicodemus, or "The Acts of Pilate", is an apocryphal book of uncertain date between the 2nd and 5th centuries. It gives an elaborate and fanciful description of the trial, death, and resurrection of Our Lord; names the two thieves (DYSMAS and GESTAS); PILATE'S wife (Procla); the centurion (Longinus), etc., and ends with an account of the descensus ad inferos of Jesus, by Charinus and Leucius, two men risen from the dead. The title first appears in the 13th century and the Gospel was much used by the writers of Miracle and MYSTERY plays.

The Gospel of Peter is an apocryphal book in fragmentary form, first mentioned by Serapion, bishop of Antioch in the last decade of the 2nd century, and part of which was found in 1892.

The Gospel of Thomas is a Gnostic work, probably of the 2nd century, containing much that is fanciful.

Gospel according to ... The chief teaching of [so-and-so]. The Gospel according to MAMMON is the amassing of wealth or money.

The Gospel side of the altar is to the left of the celebrant facing the altar.

The Gospel of wealth. Wealth is the great end and aim of man, the one thing needful, the Gospel according to MAMMON.

Gospeller. The priest who reads the Gospel in the Communion Service; also a follower of Wyclif, called the "Gospel Doctor".

Hot Gospellers was an old nickname for PURITANS and is now frequently applied to the more energetic and colourful EVANGELISTS and revivalists.

Gossamer. According to legend, this delicate thread is the ravelling of the Virgin Mary's winding-sheet, which fell to earth on her ascension to HEAVEN. It is said to be God's seam, i.e. God's thread. Probably the name is from M.E. gossamer, goose-summer or ST. MARTIN'S SUMMER (early November), when geese are plentiful. Other suggestions are God's summer and gaze à Marie (gauze of Mary).

Gossip. A tattler; formerly a sponsor at baptism, a corruption of God-sibb, a kinsman in the Lord. (O.E. sibb, relationship, whence sibman, kinsman). Cp. ALL STUARTS ARE NOT SIB.

'Tis not a maid, for she hath had gossips sponsors for her child; yet 'tis a maid, for she is her master's servant, and serves for wages.

SHAKESPEARE: Two Gentlemen of Verona, III, i.

Gotch. In East Anglian dialect, a large earthenware jug or pitcher. Fetch the gotch, mor—i.e. fetch the water-jug, my girl.

Gotham. Wise men of Gotham—fools, wisecracs. The village of Gotham in Nottinghamshire was proverbial for the folly of its inhabitants and many tales have been fathered on them, one of which is their joining hands round a thorn-bush to shut in a cuckoo. Cp. COGGESHALL.

It is said that King John intended to make a progress through the town with the view of establishing a hunting lodge but the townsmen had no desire to be saddled with expense of supporting the court. Wherever the royal messengers went they saw the people engaged in some idiotic pursuit and the king, when told, abandoned his intention and the "wise men" cunningly remarked, "We ween there are more fools pass through Gotham than remain in it." The nursery rhyme says:

Three wise men of Gotham
Went to sea in a bowl,
If the bowl had been stronger,
My story would have been longer.

A collection of popular tales of stupidity was published in the reign of Henry VIII as Merie Tales of the Mad Men of Gotam, gathered together by A. B. Phisike, Doctour. This "A.B." is assumed to be Andrew Boorde (c. 1490-1549), physician and traveller, but the use of his initials was probably to promote sales.

Most nations have some locality renowned for fools; thus we have Phrygia as the fools' home of Asia Minor, ABDERA of the Thracians, BŒOTIA of the Greeks, Nazareth of the ancient Jews, Swabia of the Germans, etc.

Gothamites. Inhabitants of New York. The term was in use in 1800. The name of Gotham was given to New York by Washington Irving in his Salmagundi, 1807.

Goths. A Germanic barbarian tribe which invaded and devastated Europe in the 3rd to 5th centuries, establishing kingdoms in Italy, France, and Spain. Hence the use of the name to imply uncultured, uncivilized, destructive. Cp. VANDALS.

Gothic Architecture. The name for the style prevalent in Western Europe from the 12th to the 16th centuries. The name was given contemptuously to imply "barbaric" by the architects of the RENAISSANCE period who revived classical styles. A revival of Gothic architecture was started by wealthy dilettanti such as Horace Walpole in the 18th century and was further popularized by Sir Walter Scott and Ruskin. The works of A. W. Pugin (1812-1852) and Sir G. Gilbert Scott (1811-1878) are notable examples of 19th-century Gothic.

The last of the Goths. See RODERICK.

Gouk. See GOWK.

Gourd. See FULHAMS.

Jonah's gourd. This plant (see Jonah iv, 6-10) was most probably the bottle-gourd, Cucurbita lagenaria, the Karah of the Arabs. This was often planted by such booths as the one in which Jonah sat. It is a very rapid grower and its broad leaves give plenty of shade. That it was such a vine is much more likely than the suggestion that it was the castor-oil plant, called in Hebrew Kikayon.

Gourmand and gourmet (goor' mond, goor' mā) (Fr.). The gourmand is one whose chief pleasure is eating; but a gourmet is a connoisseur of food and wines. The gourmand regards quantity more than quality, the gourmet, the reverse. See APICUS.

The gourmand's prayer. "O Philoxenos, Philoxenos, why were you not Prometheus?" PROMETHEUS was the mythological creator of man, and Philoxenos was a great epicure, whose constant wish was to have the neck of a crane, that he might enjoy the taste of his food longer before it passed into his stomach (Aristotle, Ethics, III, x, 10).

Gout (Fr. goutte, Lat. gutta, a drop). This disease is so called from the belief that it was due to a "drop of acrid matter in the joints".

Goven. St. Goven's Bell. See INCHCAPE ROCK.

Government men. In Australia an early and customary name for convicts.

Government Stroke. A well-established Australian expression for taking a long time over very little work. It is probably derived from the way GOVERNMENT MEN worked.

You may see him do the Gov'ment stroke
At eight bob every day.

C. R. THATCHER: The Bond Street Swell.

Gowk. The cuckoo (from Icel. gaukr); hence a fool, a simpleton.

Hunting the gowk is making one an APRIL FOOL.

A gowk storm is one consisting of several days of tempestuous weather; believed by country-folk to take place periodically in early April, at the time that the gowk arrives in this country; it is also, curiously enough, a storm that is short and sharp, a "STORM IN A TEA-CUP".

Gown. Gown and town row. In university towns scrimmages between the students and citizens were once common. In the reign of King John, 3,000 students left Oxford for Reading owing to a quarrel with the townsmen.

Gownsmen. A university student; so called from his academical robe.

Graal. See GRAIL.

Grace. A courtesy title used in addressing or speaking of dukes, duchesses, and archbishops. "His Grace the Duke of Devonshire", "My Lord Archbishop, may it please Your Grace", etc.

Act of Grace. A pardon; a general pardon granted by Act of Parliament, especially that of 1690, when William III pardoned political offenders; and that of 1784, when the estates forfeited for high treason in connexion with the FORTY-FIVE were restored.

Grace before, or after meat. A short prayer asking a blessing on, or giving thanks for, one's food; as the old college grace Benedictus benedicat before the meal followed by Benedicto benedicatur at the end. Here the word (which used to be plural) is a relic of the old phrase to do graces or to give graces, meaning to render thanks (Fr. rendre grâces; Lat. gratias agere), as in Chaucer's "yeldinge graces and thankinges to hir lord Melibee" (Tale of Melibeus, 71).

The Grace of God. The free and unmerited love and favour of God. It is also an old Cornish term for a shipwreck because, to the poor fishermen and their families, the goods salvaged by them from the beaches seemed a gift of Providence.

There but for the grace of God go I. A phrase used by the self-critical when others are faced with disaster, disgrace etc., through their actions or misdoings. It implies that most of us have committed the same follies, sins etc., but have been fortunate enough to escape the consequences.

Grace card, or Grace's card. The six of hearts is so called in Kilkenny. One of the family of Grace, of Courtstown in Ireland, equipped at his own expense a regiment of foot and a troop of horse in the service of James II. William III promised him high honours for his support, but the indignant nobleman wrote on a card, "Tell your master I despise his offer." The card was a six of hearts.

Grace Cup, or Loving Cup. See LOVING CUP.

Grace Days, or Days of Grace. The three days over and above the time stated in a commercial bill. Thus, if a bill is drawn on 20 June, and is payable in one month, it is due on 20 July, but three "days of grace" are added, bringing the date to 23 July.

Grace Darling. See DARLING.

Grace, Herb of. See HERB OF GRACE.

Grace Notes are musical embellishments not essential to the harmony or melody of a piece; more common in 16th-century music than in music of the present day.

Time of Grace. See SPORTING SEASONS.

To fall from grace. Apart from a theological implication, this means to relapse from a moral position attained or to fall from favour.

To get into one's good graces. To insinuate oneself into the favour of.

To take heart of grace. To take courage because of favour or indulgence shown.

With a good, or bad grace. Gracefully or ungracefully, willingly or unwillingly. With a good grace has an air of rather forced acquiescence.

Year of Grace. The year of Our Lord, Anno Domini. Also the favour of benefiting from a year's delay in resigning an appointment, etc. Cp. GRACE DAYS.

The Three Graces. In classical mythology, the goddesses who bestowed beauty and charm and were themselves the embodiment of both. They were the sisters AGLAIA, THALIA, and Euphrosyne. Cp. MUSES.

They are the daughters of sky-ruling Jove,
By him begot of faire Eurynome, . . .
The first of them hight mylde Euphrosyne,
Next faire Aglaia, last Thalia merry;
Sweete Goddesses all three, which me in mirth do cherry.

SPENSER: Færie Queene, VI, x, 22.

Andrea Appiani (1754–1817), the Italian fresco artist, was known as the Painter of the Graces.

Graceless, or Godless Florin. See under FLORIN.

Grade. In American usage this word commonly replaces the English use of gradient.

Grade crossing. The American equivalent of the English level crossing. From Lat. gradus, a step.

To make the grade, to rise to the occasion, to reach the required standard or level, to overcome obstacles. From the analogy of climbing a hill or gradient.

Gradual. An antiphon sung between the Epistle and the GOSPEL as the deacon ascends the steps (Late Lat. graduales) of the altar or pulpit. Also the book containing the musical portions of the service at mass—the graduals, introits, kyries, GLORIA IN EXCELSIS, credo, etc.

The Gradual Psalms. Ps. cxx to cxxxiv inclusive; probably because they were sung when the priests made the ascent to the inner court of the temple at Jerusalem. In the Authorized Version of the BIBLE they are called Songs of Degrees, and in the Revised Version Songs of Ascents. Cp. HALLEL.

Graffiti (grā fē' tē) (Ital. graffito, a scratching). A name applied originally to the "wall scribblings" found at Pompeii and other Italian cities, the work of school-boys, idlers, etc., many of them obscene and accompanied by rough drawings. A collection of the graffiti of Pompeii was published by Bishop Wordsworth in 1837 and it provides a useful insight into the life of the ancient Romans. Modern graffiti are found on walls, especially in lavatories, on posters, etc. They are usually crude and mostly erotic, but political graffiti are quite common and were much in evidence in the 1930s. See ALEXANDER THE CORRECTOR.

Grahame's, Graham's, Grime's, or Grim's Dyke. A popular name for the remains of the old Roman wall between the Firth of Forth and Firth of Clyde. Grim is an old name for the DEVIL. Scott in his Tales of a Grandfather (ch. i) says that when the Picts and Scots attacked, after the Romans left, Grahame was the first to climb over it.

Grail, The Holy. The cup or chalice traditionally used by Christ at the LAST SUPPER, the subject of a great amount of mediæval legend, romance, and allegory.

According to one account, JOSEPH OF ARIMATHEA preserved the Grail and received into it some of the blood of the Saviour at the Crucifixion. He brought it to England, but it disappeared. According to others it was brought by angels from heaven and entrusted to a body of knights who guarded it on top of a mountain. When approached by anyone not of perfect purity it vanished, and its quest became the source of most of the adventures of the knights of the ROUND TABLE. See also PERCEFOREST.

There is a great mass of literature concerning the Grail Cycle, and it appears to be a fusion of Christian legend and pre-Christian ritual origins. Part of the subject matter appears in the MABINOGION in the story of Peredur son of Efrawg. The first Christian Grail romance was that of the French TROUVÈRE Robert de Borron who wrote his Joseph d'Arimathie at the end of the 12th century, and it next became attached to the Arthurian legend. In Robert de Borron's work the Grail took the form of a dish on which the Last Supper was served.

Malory's Le Morte d'Arthur (printed by CAXTON in 1485) is an abridgement from French sources. The framework of Tennyson's Holy Grail (Idylls of the King) in which the poet expressed his "strong feeling as to the Reality of the Unseen" is based upon Malory.

Grain. A knave in grain. A knave through and through, a complete knave. A phrase from dyeing. The dried bodies of kermes and cochineal insects, from which a brilliant red dye is obtained, have the appearance of grains. The dye being of a very durable and lasting nature, it dyed an article through and through. Hence also the word ingrained as, "an ingrained, ineradicable habit".

How the red roses flush up in her cheekes,
And the pure snow with goodly vermill stayne
Like crimsin dyde in grayne!

SPENSER: Epithalamion, 226.

'Tis in grain, sir; 'twill endure wind and weather.
SHAKESPEARE: Twelfth Night, I, v.

To go against the grain. Against one's inclination. The allusion is to wood which cannot be properly planed the wrong way of the grain.

Your minds,
Pre-occupied with what you rather must do
Than what you should, made you against the grain
To voice him consul.

SHAKESPEARE: Coriolanus, II, iii.

With a grain of salt. See under SALT.

Grammar. Cæsar is not above the grammarians. Suetonius tells us (De Grammaticis, 22) that Tiberius was rebuked by a grammarian for some verbal slip, and upon a courtier remarking that if the word was not good Latin it would be in future, now that it had received imperial recognition, he was rebuked with the words, Tu enim Cæsar civitatem dare potes hominibus, verbis non potes (Cæsar, you can grant citizenship to men, but not to words). Hence the saying, Cæsar non supra grammaticos.

When, however, the German Emperor Sigismund I stumbled into a wrong gender at the Council of Constance (1414), no such limitation was admitted; he replied Ego sum Imperator Romanorum, et supra grammaticam (I am the Roman Emperor and am above grammar!).

Prince of Grammarians. Apollonius the SOPHIST of Alexandria (1st century A.D.), so called by Priscian.

The Scourge of Grammar. So Pope in the Dunciad (iii, 149), called Giles Jacob (1686-1744), a very minor poet, who, in his Register of the Poets, made an unprovoked attack on Pope's friend, Gay.

Grammont. The Count de Grammont's short memory is a phrase arising from a story told of the Count's marriage to Lady Hamilton—La Belle Hamilton—of the RESTORATION court. When leaving England in 1663, after a visit in which this young lady's name had been compromised by him, he was followed by her brothers with drawn swords, who asked him if he had not forgotten something. "True, true," said the Count pleasantly; "I promised to marry your sister." With which he returned to London and married Elizabeth.

Granby, The Marquess of. At one time this was a popular inn-sign, there being in London alone over twenty public-houses of this name. John Manners, Marquess of Granby (1721-1770), commanded the Leicester Blues against the PRETENDER in the FORTY-FIVE; was a Lieutenant-General at Minden (1759), and commander-in-chief of the British army in 1766. He was a very bald man and this was exaggerated on most of the inn-signs. See BALDHEADED.

Grand, Le. (Fr. the Great).

Le Grand Bâtard. Antoine de Bourgogne (d. 1504), a bastard son of Philip the Good, famous for his deeds and prowess.

Le Grand Condé. Louis II of Bourbon, Prince de Condé, one of France's greatest military commanders (1621-1686). The funeral oration pronounced at his death was Bossuet's finest composition.

Le Grand Corneille. Pierre Corneille (1606-1684), the French dramatist.

Le Grand Dauphin. See DAUPHIN.

La Grande Mademoiselle. The Duchesse de Montpensier (1627-1693), daughter of Gaston, Duc d'Orléans, and cousin of Louis XIV.

Le Grand Monarque. Louis XIV, King of France (1638-1715).

Le Grand Pan. VOLTAIRE (1694-1778).

Monsieur le Grand. The Grand Equerry of France in the reign of Louis XIV, etc.

Grand. Grand Alliance. The coalition against Louis XIV consisting of the Empire, Holland, Spain, Great Britain, etc., which fought the War of the Grand Alliance or War of the League of Augsburg (1689-1697) to check French aggression.

Grand Guignol. See GUIGNOL.

Grand Lama. See LAMA.

Grand National. The principal event in English steeplechasing, instituted at Liverpool in 1839, and now run at Aintree on a 4½-mile course of 30 jumps, including the famous Beecher's Brook.

Grand Seigneur. A term applied to the former Sultans of Turkey.

Grand Old Duke of York, The, of nursery rhyme fame was Frederick Augustus, Duke of York and Albany (1763-1827), second son of George III, who commanded the English army in Flanders (1794-1795), co-operating with the Austrians against revolutionary France. His part in the campaign of 1794 was derisively summarized in the rhyme:

The grand old Duke of York
He had ten thousand men
He marched 'em up to the top of the hill
And he marched 'em down again.

In fact, there was no hill, he was young, and he commanded some 30,000 men. In variants of the rhyme he is the "brave" or "rare old Duke". He was made commander-in-chief in 1798. See THE DUKE OF YORK'S COLUMN under COLUMN.

Grandfather. Grandfather clock. The well-established name for the once commonly used weight and pendulum tall-case clock, or long-case clock. It derives from the popular song My Grandfather's Clock (1878) by Henry Clay Work (1832-1884) of Connecticut, author of the temperance song Come Home Father (1864) and Marching through Georgia (1865).

Grandison, Sir Charles, the hero of Samuel Richardson's History of Sir Charles Grandison, published in 1753. Sir Charles is the perfect hero and English Christian gentleman, aptly described by Sir Walter Scott as "a faultless monster that the world never saw". Richardson's model for Sir Charles may have been the worthy Robert Nelson (1656-1715), a religious writer and eminent non-juror, whose life was devoted to good works.

Grandison Cromwell. Mirabeau's nickname for Lafayette (1757-1834), implying that he had all the ambition of a Cromwell, but wanted to appear before men as a Sir Charles Grandison.

Grandmontines. An order of BENEDICTINE hermits, founded by St. Stephen of Thiers in Auvergne about 1100, with its mother house at Grandmont. They came to England soon after the foundation and established a few small houses in remote places as that at Craswall, Herefordshire.

Grange. Properly the granum (granary) or farm of a monastery, where the corn was stored. Houses attached to monasteries where rent was paid in grain were also called granges, and in Lincolnshire and the northern counties the name is given to any lone farm.

Till thou return, the Court I will exchange
For some poor cottage, or some country grange.
DRAYTON: Lady Geraldine to Earl of Surrey.

"The Grange" became a popular name for country houses built for the more prosperous Victorians.

In the U.S.A. The Grange or Patrons of Husbandry is a secret organization of farmers and their families. Founded at Washington, D.C., in 1867 by O. H. Kelley, a clerk in the Department of Agriculture, as a social fraternity it stressed cultural and educational objectives and became politically involved in the agrarian discontent of the 1870s. The name derives from the local lodges called granges.

Granger States. Wisconsin, Illinois, Minnesota, Iowa.

Grangerize. To "extra-illustrate" a book; to supplement it by the addition of illustrations, portraits, autograph letters, caricatures, prints, broadsheets, biographical sketches, anecdotes, scandals, press notices, parallel passages, and any other matter directly or indirectly bearing on the subject. So called from James Granger (1723-1776), vicar of Shiplake, Oxon, who published his Biographical History of England from Egbert the Great to the Revolution . . . "with a preface showing the utility of a collection of engraved portraits". The book went through several editions with added material and it was continued by Mark Noble in 1806. Collectors made this book a core around which to assemble great collections of portraits, etc., and in 1856 two copies were sold in London, one in 27 vols. with 1,300 portraits, the other in 19 vols. with 3,000 portraits. Grangerizing books became a fashion with the result that many excellent editions of biographies, etc., were ruined by having the plates removed for pasting in some dilettante's collection.

Granite. The Granite City. Aberdeen.

Granite Redoubt. The grenadiers of the Consular Guard were so called at the battle of Marengo in 1800, because when the French had given way they formed into a square, stood like stone against the Austrians, and stopped all further advance.

The Granite State. New Hampshire, because the mountainous parts are chiefly granite.

Granny. The affectionate and mildly derisive nickname of the Sydney Morning Herald, from the signature to its front-page column of news snippets and gossip.

Granny-knot. A knot that slips, a fumbled attempt at a reef-knot.

Granny Smith. A green-skinned, crisp-fleshed dessert apple, the best known Australian apple. Named after its first cultivator, Maria Ann Smith of Eastwood, New South Wales.

Grape. Sour grapes. Something disparaged because it is beyond one's reach. The allusion is to ÆSOP'S well-known fable of the fox which tried in vain to get at some grapes, but when he found they were beyond his reach went away saying, "I see they are sour."

Grape shot. A form of projectile, once much used with smooth-bore guns, consisting of cast-iron balls packed between iron plates which were arranged in layers or tiers and held together by a central iron pin. Also called tier-shot. When fired there was a wide spread of shot. The well-known phrase A whiff of grape shot occurs in Carlyle's French Revolution (III, vii, 7) and refers to the ease with which Buonaparte and his artillery dispersed the Paris insurrection of VENDÉMIAIRE, 1795.

Grapevine, or Grapevine telegraph. Somewhat the same as the BUSH TELEGRAPH, the mysterious means and covert whisperings by which information, rumours, etc., are spread around.

Grass. The drug hemp or cannabis is so called. In criminal slang, to grass is to inform. Not to let the grass grow under one's feet. To act with all dispatch, not to delay in taking steps to deal with a matter.

To go to grass, or to be put out to grass. A phrase with several slightly variant wordings meaning primarily to turn out an animal to pasture, especially an old horse too old to work. Hence, to be retired, to rusticate, to be sent on holiday, or even to go to the grave.

A grass hand is a compositor who fills a temporary vacancy; hence to grass, to take only temporary jobs as a compositor.

Grass roots. Used to denote that which is rooted in the earth, i.e. that which has its origins among the peasantry or common folk.

Grass widow. Formerly, an unmarried woman who has had a child; now a wife temporarily parted from her husband; also, by extension, a divorced woman or one deserted by her husband. The origin of the term is unknown; its counterpart is grass widower.

Grasshopper. The grasshoppers used on London signboards of goldsmiths, bankers, etc., commemorated the crest of Sir Thomas Gresham (1519-1579), founder of the ROYAL EXCHANGE, the original building being decorated with stone grasshoppers. The grasshopper still forms part of the crest of Martin's Bank.

Grattan's Parliament. The free Irish Parliament at Dublin between 1782 and 1800, so named after Henry Grattan (1746-1820), who obtained the repeal of Poyning's Law and the Declaratory Act of 1719, thereby theoretically abolishing English control. It came to an end with the Act of UNION (1800), which was a result of English bribery and influence.

Grave. Solemn, sedate, and serious in look and manner. This is Lat. gravis, heavy, grave; but "grave", a place of interment, is O.E. græf, a pit or trench.

Close as the grave. Very secret indeed. It's enough to make him turn in his grave. Said when something happens to which the deceased person would have strongly objected.

Someone is walking over my grave. An exclamation when one is seized with an involuntary convulsive shuddering.

To carry away the meat from graves. See under MEAT.

With one foot in the grave. At the verge of death. The parallel Greek phrase is, "With one foot in the ferry-boat", meaning that of Charon. See CHARON'S TOLL.

Graveyard Shift. In World War II the name given by shift workers in munitions factories, etc., to the shift covering the midnight hours.

Gravelled. I'm regularly gravelled. Nonplussed, like a ship run aground and unable to move.

When you were gravelled for lack of matter.
SHAKESPEARE: As You Like It, IV, i.

Gray. See GREY.

Gray-back. A Confederate soldier in the American CIVIL WAR. So called from the colour of the Confederate army uniform.

Gray's Inn. One of the four INNS OF COURT and formerly the residence of the de Grays, a family which, in the 13th century, had high-ranking legal associations. After the death of the first Lord Grey de Wilton (1308) the property was vacated and at some time in the 14th century it was occupied by the Society of Gray's Inn. In 1594 SHAKESPEARE'S Comedy of Errors was first acted in the hall of Gray's Inn and the walks and gardens were laid out by Sir Francis Bacon, Lord Verulam. The library containing some 30,000 vols. and MSS. and the original hall were destroyed in the air raids of 1940-1941.

Grease. Slang for money, especially that given as a bribe; "PALM-OIL".

Like greased lightning. Very quick indeed.

To grease one's palm, or fist. To give a bribe.

Grease my fist with a tester or two, and ye shall find it in your pennyworth.
QUARLES: The Virgin Widow, IV, i.

To grease the wheels. To make things run smoothly, usually by the application of a little money.

Grease-boy. A LICKSPITTLE or time-server.

Great, The. The term is usually applied to the following:

Abbas I, Shah of Persia (1571, 1587-1629)
Albertus Magnus, the SCHOOLMAN (1206-1280)
Alexander, of Macedon (356, 336-323 B.C.)

 526)
 Theodosius I, Emperor (346, 378-395)
 Matteo Visconti, Lord of Milan (1255, 1295-1322)
 Vladimir, Grand Duke of Russia (c. 956, 973-1015)
 Waldemar I, of Denmark (1131, 1157-1182)

Great Bear, The. See under BEAR.

Great Bible, The. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

Great Bullet-head, Georges Cadoudal (1771-1804), a leader of the CHOUANS.

Great Captain. See CAPITANO, EL GRAN.

Great Cham of Literature. So Smollett called Dr. Johnson (1709-1784).

Great Commoner. William Pitt, 1st Earl of Chatham (1708-1778).

Great Council. The Magnum Concilium of the Norman kings and their successors, the assembly of tenants-in-chief meeting at regular intervals with the king and his principal officers for consultation. It was the curia regis from which governmental, legal, and political institutions derived.

Great Dauphin. See DAUPHIN.

Great Divide. The Rocky Mountains.

To cross the Great Divide, figuratively speaking, is to die.

Great Elector, The. Frederick William, Elector of Brandenburg (1620-1688).

Great Exhibition. The CRYSTAL PALACE exhibition of 1851.

Great Fire. See under FIRE.

Great Go. At Cambridge a familiar term for the B.A. final examinations. At Oxford called Greats, especially in Literæ Humaniores. Cp. LITTLE GO.

Great Harry. The name popularly given to the famous warship Henry Grâce à Dieu built at Erith and launched in 1514. Of about 1,000 tons, the vessel had five masts and 21 guns as well as a multitude of small pieces.

Great Heind. Malcolm III of Scotland (reigned 1057-1093); also called Canmore (Gael. Ceann-mor, Great Head).

Great Lakes. Lakes Erie, Huron, Michigan, Ontario, and Superior.

Great Mogul. The ruler of the former MOGUL Empire.

Great Plains. The area east of the Rocky Mountains from the border of Canada to the mouth of the Arkansas river.

Great Rebellion. In English history the period of the CIVIL WARS, the time of the rebellion against Charles I; also called the PURITAN Revolution.

Great Schism. See SCHISM.

Great Scott, or Scot! An exclamation of surprise, wonder, admiration, indignation, etc. It seems to have originated in America in the late 1860s, perhaps evocative of General Winfield-Scott (1786-1866), a popular figure after his victorious Mexican campaign of 1847.

Great Seal. The chief seal of the Sovereign used to authenticate important state documents. It is always round in shape and one side shows the sovereign crowned and enthroned (i.e. in majesty) and the other the sovereign mounted. The seal is kept by the LORD CHANCELLOR (see under CHANCELLOR).

Great Spirit. See MANITOU.

Great Trek. The exodus of some fifth part of Dutch-speaking South Africans from Cape Colony from 1835 and into the 1840s, leading to the establishment of Boer Republics across the Orange and Vaal rivers and to British control of Natal.

The Great Unknown. Sir Walter Scott, who published Waverley (1814) and the subsequent novels as "by the author of Waverley". It was not until 1827 that he admitted the authorship, though it was then fairly generally known.

Grecian

The Great War. The war of 1914-18 was normally so called until World War II, when the term World War I largely replaced it.

The Great White Way. A once popular name for Broadway, the theatrical district of New York City.

Grecian. A senior boy of Christ's Hospital, the BLUE-COAT SCHOOL.

Grecian bend. An affectation in walking with the body stooped slightly forward, assumed by English women in 1868. Cp. ALEXANDRA LIMP.

Grecian Coffee-House in Devereux Court, Essex Street, was possibly named after one Constantine, a Greek who opened one in Essex Buildings in 1681, but there is no written record of the Grecian until the reign of Anne (1709), and they were not necessarily connected. It is mentioned by Steele in the Tatler and by Addison in the Spectator. There was also a Grecian Coffee-House in King Street, COVENT GARDEN in 1673, and it was possibly older than that in Devereux Court, which closed in 1843.

A Grecian nose, or profile, is one where the line of the nose continues that of the forehead without a dip.

Greco, El (grek' ô), or The Greek. Domenico Theotocopuli, a Cretan, who studied under Titian and MICHELANGELO, and moved to Spain about 1570. He was the foremost 16th-century painter of the Castilian school.

Greegrees. The name given in Africa to AMULETS, CHARMS, PETISHES, etc.

A greegree man. One who sells these.

Greek. A merry Greek. In Troilus and Cressida (I, ii) SHAKESPEARE makes Pandarus, bantering Helen for her love to Troilus, say, "I think Helen loves him better than Paris", to which Cressida, whose wit is to parry and pervert, replies, "Then she's a merry Greek indeed", insinuating that she was a "woman of pleasure". See GRIG.

All Greek to me. Quite unintelligible; quite a foreign language. SHAKESPEARE's Casca says, "For mine own part, it was Greek to me" (Julius Cæsar, I, ii).

Last of the Greeks. Philopœmen, of Megalopolis (252-182 B.C.), whose great object was to infuse into the Achæans a military spirit, and establish their independence.

To play the Greek. To indulge in one's cups. The Greeks have always been considered to have been addicted to CREATURE COMFORTS. The rule in Greek banquets was E pithi e apithi (Quaff, or be off!).

When Greek meets Greek, then is the tug of war. When two men or armies of undoubted courage fight, the contest will be very severe. The line is slightly altered from a 17th-century play, and the reference is to the obstinate resistance of the Greek cities to Philip and Alexander, the Macedonian kings.

When Greeks joined Greeks, then was the tug of war.

NATHANIEL LEE: The Rival Queens, IV, ii.

Greek Anthology. See ANTHOLOGY.

Greek Calends. Never. To defer anything to the GREEK CALENDIS is to defer it sine die. There were no Calends in the Greek months. See NEVER.

Greek Church. A name often given to the Eastern or ORTHODOX Church of which the Greek Church proper is an autocephalous unit, recognized as independent by the Patriarch of Constantinople in 1850.

Greek Cross. See CROSS.

Greek fire. A combination of nitre, sulphur, and naphtha used for setting fire to ships, fortifications, etc. Tow steeped in the mixture was hurled in a blazing state through tubes or tied to arrows. The invention is ascribed to Callinicus of Heliopolis, A.D. 668.

Greek gift. A treacherous gift. The reference is to the WOODEN HORSE OF TROY, or to VIRGIL's Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes (Æneid II, 49), "I fear the Greeks, even when they offer gifts".

Greek trust. No trust at all. Græca fides with the Romans was much the same as PUNIC FAITH.

Green. Young, fresh, as green cheese, cream cheese which is eaten fresh; a green old age, an old age in which the faculties are not impaired and the spirits are still youthful; green goose, a young or mid-summer goose.

Hence, immature in age or judgment, inexperienced (see SALAD DAYS).

Simple, raw, easily imposed upon; the characteristic GREENHORN.

"He is so jolly green," said Charley.
DICKENS: Oliver Twist, ch, ix.

For its symbolism, etc., see COLOURS.

Do you see any green in my eye? See under EYE.

The green-eyed monster. So SHAKESPEARE called jealousy:

Iago: O! beware my lord, of jealousy;
It is the green-ey'd monster which doth mock
The meat it feeds on.

Othello, III, iii.

A greenish complexion was formerly held to be indicative of jealousy, and as all the green-eyed cat family "mock the meat they feed on", so jealousy mocks its victim by loving and loathing it at the same time.

If they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry? (Luke xxiii, 31). If they start like this, how will they finish? Or as Pope says (Moral Essays, Ep. i), "Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined."

Rub of the Green. An expression used in golf, and which has spread thence into ordinary life, meaning a piece of good or ill fortune which is outside the competence of the player (or individual). By way of example, A hits a shot to the green which glances off a stone into the woods; B hits the same stone at a different angle and his ball runs on to the green and into the hole. Since neither was aiming at, or aware of, the stone, the resulting disparity of fortune is "the rub of the green".

To get the green light. To get permission to proceed with an undertaking, green being the "Go sign" on road and rail signals.

To give a girl a green gown. A 16th-century descriptive phrase for romping with a girl in the fields and rolling her on the grass so that her dress is stained green.

There's not a budding Boy or Girl this day,
But is got up, and gone to bring in May . . .
Many a green gown has been given;
Many a kiss, both odde and even.

HERRICK: Corinna's Going a-Maying.

To look through green glasses. To feel jealous of one: to be envious of another's success. Cp. GREEN-EYED MONSTER.

You would have me believe that the moon is made of green cheese. See under MOON.

The Board of Green Cloth. See under BOARD.

Gentlemen of the Green Baize Road. WHIST players. Dickens uses the phrase in Bleak House, ch. xxvi. Gentlemen of the Green Cloth Road, Billiard players. Probably the idea of sharpers is implied. Cp. GENTLEMEN OF THE ROAD.

The wearing of the green. An Irish patriotic and revolutionary song dating from 1798. Green (cp. EMERALD ISLE) was the emblematic colour of Irish patriots.

For they're hangin' men an' women there for wearin' o' the Green.

Green Belt. A stretch of country around a large urban area that has been scheduled for comparative preservation and where building development is restricted.

Green Dragons. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Green fingers. Said of a successful gardener.

Green hands. Inexperienced sailors. Cp. GREENHORN.

The Green Howards. Since 1920, the official name of the Yorkshire Regiment, the 19th of the line. Sir Charles Howard was their colonel from 1738 to 1748 and green is the colour of the regimental facings. The name was originally given to distinguish them from the 3rd BUFFS who were also commanded by a Colonel Howard.

The Green Isle. Ireland. Cp. EMERALD ISLE.

Green Linnets. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Green Man. This common PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGN probably represents either a JACK-IN-THE-GREEN or a forester, who, like ROBIN HOOD, was once clad in green.

But the "Green Man" shall I pass by unsung,
Which mine own James upon his sign-post hung?
His sign, his image—for he once was seen
A squire's attendant, clad in keeper's green.

CRABBE: The Borough.

The public-house sign, The Green Man and Still, is probably a modification of the arms of the Distiller's Company, the supporters of which were two Indians, for which the sign painters usually substituted foresters or green men drinking out of a glass barrel.

On a golf course the green-man is the club employee responsible for the putting greens.

Green Mountain Boys. Vermont (Vert Mont) is called the Green Mountain State from the evergreen forests on its mountains. The Green Mountain Boys were organized on a military basis under Ethan Allen when the settlers of the area found their titles to land in dispute between New York and New Hampshire. From 1775 they fought successfully in the American Revolution and Vermont declared itself an independent state in 1777.

Green Ribbon. A short-lived political club founded c. 1675 as the King's Head Club, after the tavern in Chancery Lane where it met. The name was changed to the Green Ribbon Club about 1679 from the bow of green ribbon which its members wore in their hats. Shaftesbury, Buckingham, Mulgrave, Shadwell, Dandergfield and Oates and others of the WHIG party were among its members. The failure of the Exclusion Bill, the flight of Shaftesbury, and the RYE HOUSE PLOT made membership a risk and by 1688 the club petered out.

Green Ribbon Day in IRELAND is 17 March, ST. PATRICK'S Day, when the SHAMROCK and green ribbon are worn as the national badge.

Green room. In a theatre the common waiting-room for the performers near the stage. Originally such rooms were painted green to relieve the eyes from the glare of the stage.

Green sickness. The old name for chlorosis, a form of anaemia once common in adolescent girls. It was characterized by a greenish pallor.

Green wax. In the old Court of EX-CHEQUER practice, an estreat (certified extract from an official record) formerly delivered to the SHERIFF for levy. It was under the seal of the court, which was impressed upon green wax.

Greenbacks. A legal tender note first issued in the United States in 1862, during the CIVIL WAR, as a war-revenue expedient. So called because the back is printed in green.

Greengage. A variety of plum introduced into England from France by Sir William Gage of Hengrave, Suffolk, about 1725, and named in his honour. Called by the French "reine-claude" out of compliment to the daughter of Anne of Brittany and Louis XII, first wife of Francis I.

Greenhorn. A novice at any trade, profession, sport, etc. In allusion to the "green horns" of a young horned animal. Cp. GREEN; GREEN HANDS.

Greenshirt. A supporter of the Social Credit Movement established in England by Major Douglas in the 1920s, and so named from the green uniform shirt adopted.

Greensleeves. A very popular ballad in the time of Elizabeth I, published in 1581, given in Clement Robinson's Handefull of Pleasant Delites (1584) and mentioned by SHAKESPEARE (Merry Wives, II, i, and V, v). The air is of the same period and was used for many ballads. During the CIVIL WAR it was used by the CAVALIERS as a tune for political ballads, and Pepys (23 April 1660) mentions it under the title of The Blacksmith.

Greenlander. A native of Greenland, discovered by Eric the Red in 985 and called Grœnland "for he said it would make men's minds long to go there if it had a fine name". Greenlander is facetiously applied to a GREENHORN.

Greenwich. Greenwich barbers. Retailers of sand; so called because the inhabitants of Greenwich used to "shave the pits" in the neighbourhood to supply London.

Greenwich Stars. The stars used by astronomers for the lunar computations in the nautical ephemeris.

Greenwich Time. Mean time for the meridian of Greenwich, i.e. the system of time in which noon occurs at the moment of passage of the mean sun over the meridian of Greenwich. It is the standard time adopted by astronomers and was used throughout the British Isles until 18 February, 1968, when clocks were advanced one hour and Summer Time became "permanent". The new system is designated British Standard Time (as from 27th October, 1968). See DAY-LIGHT SAVING; STANDARD TIME.

Gregorian. Gregorian Calendar. See CALENDAR.

Gregorian chant. Plainsong; the traditional ritual melody of the Christian Church of the West, so called because it was reformed and elaborated by GREGORY THE GREAT at the end of the 6th century.

Gregorian Epoch. The epoch or day on which the Gregorian CALENDAR commenced in October 1582. See GREGORIAN YEAR.

Gregorian telescope. The first form of the reflecting telescope, invented in 1663 by James Gregory (1638-1675), professor of mathematics at St. Andrews.

Gregorian tree. The gallows; so named from Gregory Brandon and his son Richard ("Young Gregory"), hanged from the time of James I to 1649. See HANGMEN.

Gregorian Year. The civil year according to the correction introduced by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582. The equinox which occurred on 25 March in the time of Julius Cæsar fell on 11 March in the year 1582. This was because the Julian calculation of 365½ days to a year was 11 min. 14 sec. too long. Gregory suppressed 10 days by altering 5 October to 15 October, thus making the equinox fall on 21 March 1583. Further simple arrangements prevented the recurrence of a similar error in the future. The change was soon adopted by most CATHOLIC countries, but the PROTESTANT countries did not accept it until much later. The Gregorian reform was not adopted by ENGLAND and SCOTLAND until 1752. At the same time the beginning of the civil or legal year, as opposed to the historical, was altered from LADY DAY (25 March) to 1 January, a change adopted in Scotland in 1600. The term style refers to the date of the beginning of the year and it is from the coincidence that the two changes took place at the same time that the designation New Style arose.

Gregories. Hangmen. See GREGORIAN TREE.

Gregory. A feast held on ST. GREGORY'S Day (12 March), especially in IRELAND.

Gregory the Great, or St. Gregory. (540–604), the first Pope of this name, and DOCTOR OF THE CHURCH. The outstanding figure of his age, notable for church and monastic reform, for dealing with heresies, for wise administration, and kindness to the poor. He also re-fashioned the liturgy of the Church and made a lasting contribution to Church music (see GREGORIAN CHANT). He sent St. Augustine on his mission to the Anglo-Saxons, thus earning the title of Apostle of England.

Gremlin. One of a tribe of imaginary elves, to whom the R.A.F. in World War II attributed inexplicable faults in their aeroplanes. The phrase was coined just before this war by a squadron of Bomber Command serving on the N.W. Frontier in India. It was compounded from Grimm's Fairy Tales, the only book available in the mess, and Fremlin, whose beer was the only drink available. It first appeared in print in Charles Graves's Thin Blue Line (1941), the author having heard it previously used by Group Captain Cheshire, V.C., at a Yorkshire airfield.

Grenadier. Originally a soldier, picked for his stature, whose duty in battle was to throw grenades. In time each regiment had a special company of them, and when in the 18th century the use of grenades was discontinued (not to be revived until World War I) the name was retained for the company composed of the tallest and finest men. In the British Army it now survives only in the Grenadier Guards, the First Regiment of Foot Guards, noted for their height, physique, traditions, and discipline.

Grendel. The mythical half-human monster killed by BEOWULF. Grendel nightly raided the king's hall and slew the sleepers.

Gresham, Sir Thomas. See CLEOPATRA AND HER PEARL; GRASSHOPPER.

Gresham's Law can be briefly summarized as stating that bad money drives out good, and was promulgated by Gresham to Elizabeth I in 1558, though the same law had been explained earlier by COPERNICUS.

To dine with Sir Thomas Gresham.

See HUMPHREY.

Greta Hall. The poet of Greta Hall.

Robert Southey (1774–1843), who lived at Greta Hall, Keswick, Cumberland.

Gretna Green Marriages. Runaway marriages. Elopers from England reaching Gretna, near Springfield, Dumfriesshire, 8 miles N.W. of Carlisle, could (up to 1856) get legally married without licence, banns, or priest. All that was required was a declaration before witnesses of the couple's willingness to marry. This declaration was generally made to a blacksmith, landlord, toll-keeper, etc. By an Act of 1856, the residence in Scotland for at least 21 days of one of the parties became essential before a marriage was possible. Gretna Green's prominence arose from the abolition of FLEET MARRIAGES. Although marriage by declaration ceased to be legal in July 1940, Gretna Green and other places in Scotland continue to attract young couples because minors may still marry there without parental consent.

Grève (Grev). Place de Grève. The TYBURN of old PARIS, where for centuries public executions took place, now called the Place de l'Hôtel de Ville. It is on the bank of the Seine, the word grève here meaning the strand of a river.

Who has e'er been at Paris must needs know the Grève,

The fatal retreat of th' unfortunate brave,
Where honour and justice most oddly contribute
To ease heroes' pains by a halter or gibbet.

PRIOR: The Thief and the Cordelier.

Grey. Grey as a badger. Said of one with dark hair thickly sprinkled with grey and white, from the resemblance to the grey brindled fur of the badger.

The Greys. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

The Earl of Mar's Grey Brecks. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Grey Cloak. A City of London alderman who has passed the chair; so called because his official robe is furred with grey amis.

Grey Eminencé. The name given to François Leclerc du Tremblay (1577–1638), or Père Joseph, as he was called, the CAPUCHIN agent and trusty counsellor of Cardinal Richelieu. It was inspired by his influence over Cardinal Richelieu's policies; he was, as it were, a shadowy CARDINAL in the background.

Grey Friars. FRANCISCANS.

Grey goose feather, or wing. The arrow, which is winged with grey goose feathers.

Grey Mare. See under MARE.

Grey Market. In World War II a transaction regarded as a lesser breach of the rationing regulations than the BLACK MARKET.

Grey matter. A pseudo-scientific name for the brain, for common sense. The active part of the brain is composed of a greyish tissue which contains the nerve-endings.

Grey Sisters. See FRANCISCANS.

Greybeard. An old man—generally a doddering old fellow; also an earthen pot for holding spirits; a large stone jar. Cp. BELLARMINE.

Gridiron. The emblem of St. LAWRENCE of ROME. One legend says that he was roasted on a gridiron; another that he was bound to an iron chair and thus roasted alive. He was martyred in 258, under Valerian. See ESCORIAL.

It is also the American term for a football playing field, from the fact that the field was marked with squares or grids. See also GOOSE AND GRIDIRON.

Gridironer. An Australian settler who bought land in strips like the bars of a gridiron, so that the land lying between was of little use and could be acquired later at a bargain price.

Grief. To come to grief. To meet with disaster; to be ruined; to fail in business.

Griffin. A mythical monster; also called Griffon, Gryphon, etc., fabled to be the offspring of the LION and the EAGLE. Its legs and all from the shoulders to the head are like an eagle, the rest of the body is that of a lion. This creature was sacred to the sun and kept guard over hidden treasures. See ARIMASPIANS.

[The Griffin is] an Emblem of valour and magnanimity, as being compounded of the Eagle and Lion, the noblest Animals in their kinds; and so is it applicable unto Princes, Presidents, Generals, and all heroic Commanders; and so is it also born in the Coat-arms of many noble Families of Europe.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE:
Pseudodoxia Epidemica, III, xi.

The Londoner's familiar name for the figure on the site of TEMPLE BAR is The Griffin.

Among Anglo-Indians a newcomer, a GREENHORN, was called a griffin; and the residue of a contract feast, taken away by the contractor, half the buyer's and half the seller's, is known in the trade as griffins.

A griffon is a small rough-haired terrier used in France for hunting.

Grig. Merry as a grig. A grig is a small eel, a cricket or grasshopper; but grig here may be a corruption of Greek, "merry as a Greek". Both phrases were in use in the 16th century. See A MERRY GREEK under GREEK. Among the Romans græcari signified "to play the reveller".

Grim as an element in the naming of ancient earthworks and prehistoric sites derives from Old Norse grimr, a nickname of ODIN, supposedly from their size which made people attribute them to superhuman hands. From the 16th century they were often regarded as works of the DEVIL, with whom Grim was equated. Cp. GRAHAM'S DYKE.

Grim's Ditch, or Grim's Dyke. There are ancient earthworks of this name in Wiltshire, Buckinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Hertfordshire, Berkshire, etc. See also GRAHAM'S DYKE; WANSDYKE.

Grimes' Graves. NEOLITHIC flint quarries at Weeting, Norfolk.

Grimspound. The largest prehistoric work on Dartmoor, consisting of 24 hut circles in an oval enclosure some 150 yards long.

Grimalkin. An old she-cat, especially a wicked or eerie-looking one; from grey and MALKIN. In Shakespeare's Macbeth (I, i) a Witch says "I come, Graymalkin". The cat was supposed to be a witch.

Grimm's Law. The law of permutation of consonants in the Indo-Germanic, Low and High German languages. It was first comprehensively formulated by Jakob L. Grimm, the German philologist, in 1822. Thus what is p in Greek, Latin, or Sanskrit, becomes f in Gothic and b or f in the Old High German; what is t in Greek, Latin or Sanskrit th in Gothic and d in Old High German, etc. Thus changing p into f, and t into th, "pater" becomes "father". Grimm's Law is of the greatest importance in philological studies.

Grin. To grin like a Cheshire cat. See under CAT.

You must grin and bear it. Resistance is hopeless; you may make a face if you like, but you must put up with things.

Grind. To work up for an examination.

He has an axe to grind. See under AXE.

To grind one down. To reduce the price asked; to oppress.

To grind to a halt. To gradually come to a standstill. From the clogging up of a piece of machinery until it can no longer function.

To take a grind. To walk for exercise.

Grinder. To take a grinder. An obsolete gesture of contempt defined by Dickens in Pickwick Papers (ch. xxxi):

Here Mr. Jackson smiled once more upon the company, and, applying his left thumb to the tip of the nose, worked a visionary coffee-mill with his right hand . . . which was familiarly denominated "taking a grinder".

Grindstone. To keep one's nose to the grindstone. See NOSE.

Griselda, or Grisilda, also called Patient Grisel, Grazel, etc. The model of enduring patience and wifely obedience. She was the heroine of the last tale in Boccaccio's Decameron. It was translated into Latin by Petrarch under the title De Obidentia ac Fide uxoria Mythologia and thence used by Chaucer for his Clerkes Tale and by Dekker, Chettle and Haughton for their Patient Grissill (1603). The story is of the Marquis of Saluzzo, who marries a poor girl of great beauty. He subjects her to almost unendurable trials, including the pretence that he has married another. At last convinced of her patience and devotion, Chaucer tells us:

Ful many a yeer in heigh prosperitee
Lyven these two in concord and in reste.

Grist. All's grist that comes to my mill. All is appropriated that comes to me; I can make advantage out of anything or use all that comes my way. Grist is that quantity of corn which is to be ground at one time.

To bring grist to the mill. To bring profitable business or gain; to furnish supplies.

Groaning Chair. An old rustic name for a chair in which a woman sat after her confinement to receive congratulations. Similarly "groaning cake" and "groaning cheese" (called in some dialects KENNO) are the cake and cheese which were provided in GOOSE MONTH, and "groaning malt" was a strong ale brewed for the occasion.

For a nurse, the child to dandle,
Sugar, soap, spiced pots and candle,
A groaning chair and eke a cradle.

Poor Robin's Almanack, 1676.

Groat. The name given in mediæval times to all thick silver coins; derived from denarii grossi, large denarii. In ENGLAND the name was given specifically to the fourpenny piece first made in the reign of Edward I. Later it became a very small silver coin, the issue of which ceased in 1662 although they were still struck as MAUNDY MONEY. In 1836 the small fourpenny piece reappeared as the Britannia Groat (see JOEY).

You half-faced groat. A 16th-century colloquialism for "You worthless fellow". The debased groats issued in the reign of Henry VIII had the king's head in profile, but those in the reign of Henry VII had the king's head with full face.

With that half-face would he have all my land;
A half-fac'd groat five hundred pounds a-year!
SHAKESPEARE: King John, I, i.

Groats. Husked oat or wheat, fragments rather larger than grits (O.E. grut, coarse meal).

Blood without groats is nothing. Family without fortune is worthless. The allusion is perhaps to black pudding which consists chiefly of blood and groats formed into a sausage.

Grog. Spirits. Properly rum diluted with water. In 1740 Admiral Vernon, when Commander-in-Chief West Indies, substituted watered-down rum for the neat spirit then issued to both officers and men. The Admiral was nicknamed Old Grog from his GROGRAM coat and the name was transferred to the new beverage.

But Jack with smiles each danger meets,
Casts anchor, heaves the log,
Trims all the sails, belays the sheets,
And drinks his can of grog.

DIBDIN: The Friendly Tars.

Grog-blossoms. Blotches or pimples on the face produced by heavy drinking.

Grogram. A coarse kind of taffeta made of silk and mohair or silk and wool, stiffened with gum. It is the Fr. gros-grain.

Gossips in grief and programs clad.

PRAED: The Troubadour, c. i, st. v.

The Blood of the Grogams. See under BLOOD.

Grommet. Once a common word for a young serving-man or a ship's boy (O. Fr. gromet). It is also the name of a ring formed from a single strand of rope by crossing the two ends to make a loop of the requisite size and passing the ends round and round in their original lay, the ends being finished off as in a long splice. In this sense the word is from 15th-century Fr. gromette, a curb.

Groom of the Stole. See STOLE.

Groove. To get into a groove. To get into a rut, a narrow undeviating course of life or habit, to become restricted in outlook and ways.

To be in the groove. To be in the right mood, to be doing something successfully; from the accurate reproduction of music by a needle set in the groove of a gramophone record or disc.

Gross. The French word gros, big, bulky, corpulent, coarse, in English has developed many additional meanings. Thus a gross is twelve dozen; a great gross, twelve gross; gross weight is the entire weight without deductions; gross average is the general average. A VILLEIN in gross was the property of his master, and not part of the property of the manor; a common in gross is one which is entirely personal property. Cp. ADVOWSON IN GROSS.

Grotesque. Literally, in "Grotto style". The chambers of ancient buildings revealed in mediæval times in ROME were called grottoes, and as their walls were frequently decorated with fanciful ornaments and outré designs, the word grotesque (grotesco) came to be applied to similar ornamentations.

Grotto. Pray remember the grotto. This cry was raised in the streets (as late as the 1920s in the poorer parts of London) by small children, who collected old shells, bits of coloured stone or pottery, with leaves, flowers, etc., built a little "grotto" and knelt beside it with their caps ready for pennies. The custom should be restricted to 25 July (St. JAMES's Day), for it is a relic of the old shell grottoes which were erected with an image of the saint for the use of those who could not afford the pilgrimage necessary to pay a visit on that day to the shrine of St. James of COMPOSTELA. See COCKLE HAT.

Ground. Ground floor. The storey level with the ground, or, in a basement-house, the floor above the basement. In the U.S.A. known as the first floor.

To get in on the ground floor. To secure an advantageous position in an enterprise through participation at the outset, especially in securing investments before they are available to the general public.

Ground and lofty tumbling. An 18th-century phrase for an acrobatic performance on the ground and upon a tight-rope, or swing.

Ground hog. The wood-chuck or North American marmot.

Ground-hog Day. CANDLEMAS (2 February), from the saying that the ground-hog first appears from hibernation on that day. If he sees his shadow, he goes back for another six weeks—indicating six more weeks of bad weather.

Ground swell. A long, deep rolling or swell of the sea, caused by a recent or distant storm, or by an earthquake.

That suits me down to the ground. See under DOWN.

To break ground. To be the first to commence a project, etc.; to take the first step in an enterprise, as the first stage in siege operations was to break ground to dig trenches.

To gain ground. To make headway; to be improving one's position.

To have the ground cut from under one's feet. To see what one has relied on for support suddenly removed.

To hold one's ground. To maintain one's position, authority, etc. Not to budge or give way.

To lose ground. To become less successful or popular; to drift away from the object aimed at.

To shift one's ground. To try a different plan of attack; to change one's argument or the basis of one's reasoning.

To stand one's ground. Not to yield or give way; to stick to one's COLOURS; to have the courage of one's opinion.

Groundlings. Those who occupied the cheapest part of an Elizabethan theatre, i.e. the pit, which was the bare ground in front of the stage. The actor, who today "plays to the gallery", in Elizabethan times

Split the ears of the groundlings.
SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, III, ii.

Groundnut Scheme. Figuratively, an expensive failure or ill-considered enterprise; from a hastily organized and badly planned British government scheme (1947) to clear large areas of hitherto unprofitable land in Africa to grow groundnuts. The venture was abandoned three years later at considerable cost to the taxpayer.

Growlers. The old four-wheeled horse-drawn cabs were called "growlers" from the surly attitude of their drivers, and "crawlers" from their slow pace.

Grub stake, To. A miner's term for equipping a gold prospector with his requirements in exchange for a share of his finds.

Grub Street. The former name of a London street in the ward of CRIPPLEGATE Without, changed to Milton Street in 1830 after the carpenter and builder who was the ground landlord. It leads north out of Fore Street, Moorfields, to Chiswell Street. Dr. Johnson says it was Much inhabited by writers of small histories, dictionaries, and temporary poems; whence any mean production is called grubstreet.

The name is used allusively for needy authors, literary hacks, and their work. Cp. HACK.

Gruel. A gruelling time, gruelling heat, etc. Exhausting, overpowering.

He had a gruelling. He was given a pasting, he was punished severely (in boxing, etc.).

To take one's gruel. To accept one's punishment, to take what is coming to one.

Grummet. See GROMMET.

Grundy. What will Mrs. Grundy say? What will our strait-laced neighbours say? The phrase is from Tom Morton's Speed the Plough (1798). In the first scene Mrs. Ashfield shows herself very jealous of neighbour Grundy, and farmer Ashfield says to her: "Be quiet, wool ye? Always ding dinging Dame Grundy into my ears—What will Mrs. Grundy say? What will Mrs. Grundy think?"

Gryll. Let Gryll be Gryll and have his hoggish mind (Spenser: The Faerie Queene, xii, 87). Don't attempt to wash a blackamoor white; the leopard will never change his spots. Gryll is the Gr. grullas, a hog. When Sir Guyon disenchanting the forms in the BOWER OF BLISS some were exceedingly angry, and Gryll, who had been metamorphosed by ACRASIA into a hog, abused him most roundly.

Gryphon. See GRIFFIN.

Guadiana. According to the old legend the Spanish river was so called from Durandarte's Squire of this name. Mourning the fall of his master at RONCESVALLES, he was turned into a river (see Don Quixote, ii, 23). Actually, it is Arab. wadi, a river, and Anas, its classical name.

Guard. To be off one's guard. To be careless, to be caught unawares.

To be put on his guard. To "give him the tip", to show him where the danger lies.

Guards, The. See HOUSEHOLD TROOPS.

Guards of the Pole. See GREAT BEAR under BEAR.

Guarneri, or Guarnerius. The name of one of the famous violin-makers of CREMONA of the 17th and 18th centuries. Andreas (c. 1626-1698) was a pupil of Nicolo AMATI. Giuseppe (1687-1745), known as Giuseppe del Gesù, from his habit of inscribing the sacred initials I.H.S. inside his violins, was held the greatest. Cp. STRAD.

Gubbins. The wild and savage inhabitants in the neighbourhood of Brentor, Devon, who according to Fuller in his Worthies (1661)— lived in cots (rather holes than houses) . . . , having all in common, multiplying without marriage into many hundreds . . . Their language is the dross of the dregs of the vulgar Devonian . . . They held together like burrs.

As explanation of the name he says, "We call the shavings of fish (which are little worth) gubbins".

William Browne in a poem on LYDFORD LAW (1644) says:

And near hereto's the Gubbins Cave;
A people that no knowledge have
Of law, of God, or men;
Whom Cæsar never yet subdued;
Who've lawless lived; of manners rude
All savage in their den.

Gudgeon. Gaping for gudgeons. Looking out for things extremely improbable. As a gudgeon is a small fish used as bait, it means here a snare, a lie, a deception.

To swallow a gudgeon. To be bamboozled with a most palpable lie, as silly fish are caught by gudgeons (Fr. goujon; whence the phrase avalier le goujon, to swallow the bait, to die).

Make fools believe in their foreseeing
Of things before they are in being;
To swallow gudgeons ere they're hatched,
And count their chickens ere they're hatched.
BUTLER: Hudibras, II, iii.

Gudrun, or Kudrun. The heroine of the great 13th-century German epic poem of this name founded on a passage in the Prose EDDA. The third part describes how Gudrun, daughter of King Hettel, was carried off by Hochmut of Normandy and made to work like a menial in his mother's house, because she would not break her troth to Herwig, King of Zealand. She was eventually rescued by her brother. This poem is sometimes known as the German ODYSSEY.

Gudule, Gudula, or Gudila, St. Patron saint of Brussels, daughter of Count Witger, died 712. She is represented with a lantern, from a tradition that she was one day going to the church of St. Morzelle with a lantern which went out, but the holy virgin lighted it again with her prayers. Her feast day is 8 January.

Guebres, or Ghebers (gā' bērz). Followers of the ancient Persian religion, reformed by ZOROASTER; fire-worshippers, PARSEES. The name, which was given them by their Arabian conquerors, is now applied to fire-worshippers generally.

Guelphs and Ghibellines (gwelfs, gib' e lēnz). In mediæval Italy two rival factions whose quarrels occupy much of the political history of the period. The Guelphs were the papal and popular party, the Ghibellines, the imperial and aristocratic party. Both names are derived from two rival German factions of the 12th century. Ghibelline is an Italian form of Waiblingen, a small town in Wurtemberg and a possession of the Hohenstaufen Emperor Conrad III, the name of which is said to have been used as a war-cry by his followers at the battle of Weinsberg (1140). Their opponents similarly used the war-cry Welf, the personal name of their leader, Welf VI of Bavaria. Guelph is the Italian form of Welf.

The Guelph dynasty ruled in Hanover until 1866 and the reigning dynasty of Great Britain is descended from it. Guelphs ruled in Brunswick from its erection into a Duchy in 1235 to 1918.

Guenever. See GUINEVERE.

Guerinists (ger' i nists). An early 17th-century sect of French ILLUMINATI, founded by Peter Guérin.

Guernsey Lily. See MISNOMERS.

Guerrilla War (ge ril' à). Irregular warfare carried on by small groups acting independently; especially by patriots when their country is being invaded. From Span. guerrilla, diminutive of guerra, war. See F.F.I.

Gueux, Les (lä ger), or The Beggars. The name adopted by the confederates who rose against Spanish rule in the Netherlands in the 16th century. In 1556 Baron Berlaymont is said to have exclaimed to the Regent, Margaret of Parma: "Is it possible that your highness can entertain fear of these beggars?" (Motley, Rise of the Dutch Republic, II, vi). The name then became an honoured title. The Beggars of the Sea were the Dutch and HUGENOT privateers who harassed Spanish shipping in the same struggle. The Wild Beggars were the bands of marauders and robbers who took advantage of the times to plunder and commit outrage, especially against monasteries and clergy.

Guides. See GIRL GUIDES.

Guignol (gé' nyol). The principal character in a popular 18th-century French puppet-show, similar to PUNCH. As the performance involved macabre and gruesome incidents the name came to be attached to short plays of this nature; hence Grand Guignol, a series of such plays, or the theatre in which they were performed.

Guilds, or Gilds. See LIVERY COMPANIES.

Guillotine (gil' õ tèn). An instrument for inflicting capital punishment by decapitation, so named from Joseph Ignace Guillotin (1738-1814), a French physician, who proposed its adoption to prevent unnecessary pain. It was first used in the Place de GRÈVE, 25 April, 1792. For a time it was known as a Louissette after Antoine Louis (1723-1792), the French surgeon who devised it. Similar instruments had been used in some countries from the 13th century. Cp. MAIDEN.

It is also the name of a paper-cutting machine and a surgical instrument.

In British Parliamentary procedure, a development of the CLOSURE to arbitrarily cut delay by passing a guillotine motion, when, at the committee stage or report stage, a BILL is divided into compartments, each of which has to be dealt with in the specified time. It is also known as closure by compartments.

Guinea. A gold coin current in England from 1663 to 1817 (last struck 1813), originally made of gold from Guinea in West Africa. The early issues bore a small elephant below the head of the king. Its original LEGAL TENDER value was 20s. but from 1717 it was fixed at 21s. The actual value varied, in 1694 it was as high as 30s.

It is still customary for professional fees, subscriptions, the price of race-horses, pictures, and other luxuries to be paid in guineas, though there is no such coin current. See also SPADE GUINEA.

Guinea-dropper. A cheat. It alludes to an old cheating dodge of dropping counterfeit guineas which is of comparable significance to THIMBLE-RIGGING.

Who now the guinea-dropper's bait regards,
Tricked by the sharper's dice or juggler's cards?
GAY: Trivia, III, 249.

Guinea fowl. So called because it was introduced from Guinea, where it is common.

Guinea Grains, or Grains of Paradise. The seeds of Amomum melugueta and Amomum Granum-Paradisi, two West African plants. Aromatic and pungent, they were formerly used in making HIPPOCRAS and are a constituent in some cattle-powders.

Guinea-hen. An Elizabethan synonym for a prostitute, who is won by gold.

Ere . . . I would drown myself for the love of a Guinea-hen, I would change my humanity with a baboon.

SHAKESPEARE: Othello, I, iii.

Guinea-pig. Properly the cavy, a small South American rodent. A former Stock Exchange name for a person of standing who allowed his name to be put on a company director's list for a fee in guineas, but who was inactive. Guinea-pig is also an old name for a midshipman or a clergyman without a cure. The former because he was neither a fully-fledged officer nor a rating, as guinea-pigs are not pigs, nor do they come from Guinea; the latter because he did occasional duty for a guinea a sermon. The word is now used for anyone used in scientific or medical experiments from the fact that guinea-pigs are often used in this way.

Guinevere, Guinever, or Guenever (gwin' e vēr). The wife of King ARTHUR. The name is a corruption of Guanhumara (from Welsh Gwenhwyfar) as she appears in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Britonum, a principal source of ARTHURIAN ROMANCES.

Gule. The Gule of August. 1 August, LAMMAS DAY. The word is probably the Welsh gwyl (Lat. vigilia), a festival.

Gules. The heraldic term for red. In engraving it is shown by perpendicular parallel lines. From the plural of O.E. gole, goule, the mouth, the jaws; the reference is probably to the colour of the open jaws.

With man's blood paint the ground, gules, gules.
SHAKESPEARE: Timon of Athens, IV, iii.

Gulf. At the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, a slang name for the position of a candidate who goes in for honours and is not good enough to be classed but has shown sufficient merit to pass. When the list is made out a line is drawn after the classes, and the few names put below are in the "gulf", those so listed being "gulfed". See also ELEGANT EXTRACTS.

A great gulf fixed. An impassable separation. The allusion is to the parable of DIVES and LAZARUS (Luke xvi, 26).

Gulf Stream. The great warm ocean current which flows out of the Gulf of Mexico (whence its name) and, passing by the eastern coast of the United States, is, near the banks of Newfoundland, deflected across the Atlantic to modify the climate of Western Europe as far north as Spitzbergen and Novaya Zemlya. It washes the shores of the British Isles.

Gulistan (Pers. the garden of roses). The famous collection of moral sentences by Sadi (1184-1291), the most celebrated of Persian poets after OMAR KHAYYAM. It contains sections on kings, dervishes, contentment, love, youth, old age, social duties, etc., with many stories and philosophical sayings.

Gull. An Elizabethan synonym for one who is easily duped, especially a high-born gentleman (cp. BEJAN). Dekker wrote his Gull's Hornbook (1609) as a kind of guide to the behaviour of contemporary GALLANTS.

The most notorious geek and gull
That e'er invention played on.
SHAKESPEARE: Twelfth Night, V, i.

Gully-raker. In early Australian slang, one who combs wild country and appropriates any unbranded cattle he finds there.

Gum. To gum up the works. To clog up the proceedings, to throw an enterprise into confusion.

Gummed. He frets like gummed velvet, or gummed taffety. Velvet and taffeta were sometimes stiffened with gum to make them "sit better" but, being very stiff, they fretted out quickly.

Gun. This word was formerly used for a large stone-throwing military device of the catapult or mangonel type. In the Legend of Good Women (Cleopatra, 58) Chaucer seems to refer to the ballista:

With grisly soun out goth the grete gonne,
And hertely they hurtilen al at ones,
And fro the top down cometh the grete stones.

But in the House of Fame (iii, 553) he says:

As swift as pelet out of gonne
Whan fyr is in the poudre ronne.

The word is perhaps a shortened form of the old Scandinavian female name Gunnildr (gunnr is Icel. for war, and hildr for battle). The bestowing of female names on arms is not uncommon; there are the famous MONS MEG, Queen Elizabeth's pocket pistol (see under POCKET), as well as BIG BERTHA of World War I—the long-range gun that bombarded Paris, named after Bertha Krupp, wife of the head of the great armament factory at Essen.

Barisal guns, or Lake guns. See BARISAL.

Evening, or sunset gun. A gun fired at sunset, or about 9 p.m.

Minute gun. The firing of a gun at minute intervals, generally as a salute at a royal or state funeral.

He's a great gun. A man of note or consequence.

Son of a gun. This familiar designation implying contempt but now used with jocular familiarity derives from the days when women were allowed to live in naval ships. The "son of a gun" was one born in the ship, often near the midship gun, behind a canvas screen. If paternity was uncertain the child was entered in the log as "Son of a gun".

Sure as a gun. Quite certain. It is as certain to happen as a gun is to fire when the trigger is pressed.

To blow great guns. To be very boisterous, rough and windy, as the noise of great guns.

To give it the gun. In R.A.F. parlance during World War II, to open the throttle of an aeroplane suddenly and hard.

To jump the gun. To anticipate, to get started before the proper time, usually with a view to gaining an advantage; as when a competitor in a race starts just before the gun is fired.

To lay a gun. To aim it, to direct it on the target (not used of small-arms).

To run away from one's own guns. To eat one's words; to desert what is laid down as a principle.

To stick to one's guns. To maintain one's position, argument, etc., in spite of opposition.

To gun for someone. To set out deliberately to get at a person and do him a mischief or get even with him.

Gunboat. Gunboat Diplomacy. In the days of the Victorian colonial empire, gunboats and other naval vessels were often called upon to coerce local rulers in the interests of British traders, etc., usually in response to local clamour. Hence "gunboat diplomacy", to imply the settling of issues with weaker powers by the use or threat of force. Cp. PACIFICO.

Gun-cotton. A highly explosive compound, prepared by saturating cotton or other cellulose material with nitric and sulphuric acids.

Gunman. An armed criminal prepared to use his gun recklessly. A term of American origin.

Gun money. Money issued in IRELAND by James II between 1689 and 1690 made from old brass cannon, bells, copper utensils, etc.

Gun room. In a large warship a room for the accommodation of junior officers, originally under the charge of the gunner. Cp. WARD ROOM.

The subordinate officers in a big ship mess together in the gun-room, and the King of the gun room is the Sub-Lieutenant.

GIEVES LTD.

How to Become a Naval Officer, ch. iv (1933).

Gun-runner. One who unlawfully smuggles guns into a country for belligerent purposes.

Gunnar. The Norse form of GUNTHER.

Gunner. Kissing the gunner's daughter. Being flogged on board ship. At one time sailors in the Royal Navy who were to be flogged were tied to the breech of a cannon.

Gunpowder Plot. A plan to destroy James I, with Lords and Commons at the opening of PARLIAMENT, 5 November 1605, as a prelude to a CATHOLIC rising. Barrels of powder were stored in a vault under the HOUSE OF LORDS and Guy Fawkes was to fire the train. Tresham, one of the plotters, warned his Catholic relative, Lord Monteagle, who revealed the plot to the authorities. The cellars were searched and Guy Fawkes was taken. The ceremony of searching the vaults of Parliament prior to the annual opening is a result of this plot.

Gunter. According to Gunter. Carefully and correctly done; with no possibility of a mistake. It is the American counterpart of our "according to COCKER".

Gunter's Chain, for land surveying, is so named from Edward Gunter (1581-1626), the great mathematician and professor of astronomy at Gresham College. It is 66 ft. long, and divided into 100 links. As 10 square chains make an acre, it follows that an acre contains 100,000 square links.

Gunter's scale is a 2-ft. rule having scales of chords, tangents, logarithmic lines, etc., marked on it, used for the mechanical solving of problems in surveying, navigation, etc.

Gunther (gun' ter), or Gunnar. In the Nibelungen saga, a Burgundian king, brother of KRIEMHILD, the wife of SIEGFRIED. He resolved to wed the martial BRUNHILD (or Brynhild) who had made a vow to marry only the man who could ride through the flames that encircled her castle. Gunther failed, but Siegfried did so in the shape of Gunther, and remained with her three nights, his sword between them all the time. Gunther then married Brunhild, but later Kriemhild told Brunhild that it was Siegfried who had ridden through the fire, thus arousing her jealousy. Siegfried was slain at Brunhild's instigation, and she then killed herself, her dying wish being to be burnt at Siegfried's side. Gunther was slain by ATLI because he refused to reveal where he had hidden the hoard of the Nibelungs. Gundaharius, a Burgundian king, who, with his men, perished by the sword of the Huns in 436, is supposed to be the historical character around which these legends collected. See also NIBELUNGEN-LIED.

Gurney Light. See BUDE.

Guru (goo' roo). A Sanskrit word meaning venerable; it is now applied to a Hindu spiritual teacher and leader.

Guthlac, St., of Crowland, Lincolnshire, is represented in Christian art as a hermit punishing demons with a scourge, or consoled by angels while demons torment him. He was a Mercian prince who died as a hermit in 714.

Guthrum. Silver of Guthrum's Lane.

Fine silver was once so called because the chief GOLD and SILVER smiths of London lived there in the 13th and 14th centuries. The street, which is now called Gutter Lane, running from Cheapside into Gresham Street, was originally Godrun Lane. The hall of the Goldsmiths' Company is still in this locality.

Guy. An effigy of a man stuffed with combustibles in mockery of Guy Fawkes, carried round and burnt on 5 November, in memory of the GUNPOWDER PLOT. Hence, any dowdy or fantastic figure. In American usage the word as applied to a person is the equivalent of "CHAP" in English.

Fall Guy. See under FALL.

To do a guy. To decamp.

To guy a person. To chaff him, to make fun of him.

Guy of Warwick. An English hero of legend and romance, whose exploits were first written down by an Anglo-Norman poet of the 12th century and were accepted as history by the 14th century.

To obtain the hand of the fair Félice or Phelis, daughter of the Earl of Warwick, he performed many doughty deeds abroad. Returning to England he married Phelis, but after forty days set off on pilgrimage to the HOLY LAND again performing deeds of prowess. Back in England he slew COLBRONDE, and then the DUN COW. After these achievements he became a hermit near Warwick and daily begged bread of his wife at his own castle gate. On his death-bed he sent her a ring, by which she recognized her lord, and she went to close his dying eyes. The story is told in the Legend of Sir Guy in PERCY'S RELIQUES.

Guy's Hospital. Founded in 1721 by Thomas Guy (c. 1645-1724), bookseller and philanthropist. He amassed an immense fortune in 1720 by speculations in South Sea Stock (see SOUTH SEA BUBBLE) and gave £238,295 to found and endow the hospital which is situated in SOUTH-WARK.

Gwyn, Eleanor, or Nell (1651-1687). Popular actress and mistress of Charles II. She first became known when selling oranges at the Theatre Royal, DRURY LANE, and in 1665 appeared as Clydaria in Dryden's Indian Emperor. An illiterate child of the back streets, she was lively and infectious company. She had two sons by the king, the elder becoming Duke of St. Albans, and the younger James, Lord Beauclerk. She finally left the stage in 1682, and on his death-bed Charles said to his brother James, "Let not poor Nelly starve." James II fulfilled the request. She was buried in St. Martin-in-the-Fields and the funeral sermon was given by Thomas Tenison, later Archbishop of Canterbury.

Nell Gwyn is said to have suggested to her royal lover the building of Chelsea Hospital, and to have made him a present of the ground for it.

LEIGH HUNT: The Town, ch. vii.

Gyges (gī' jēz). A king of Lydia of the 7th century B.C., who founded a new dynasty, warred against Asurbanipal of Assyria, and is memorable in legend for his ring and for his prodigious wealth.

According to PLATO, Gyges went down into a chasm in the earth, where he found a brazen horse; opening the sides of the animal, he found the carcass of a man, from whose finger he drew a brazen ring which rendered him invisible.

Why, did you think that you had Gyges ring
Or the herb that gives invisibility [FERN-SEED] ?
BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER:
Fair Maid of the Inn, I, i.

It was by the aid of the ring that Gyges obtained possession of the wife of CANDAULES and through her, of his kingdom.

Gymnosophists (jim nos' o fists). A sect of ancient Hindu philosophers who went about with naked feet and almost without clothing. They lived in woods, subsisted on roots, and never married. They believed in the TRANSMIGRATION OF SOULS. (Gr. gymnos, naked; sophistes, sage.)

Gyp (jip). At Cambridge (and at Durham) the name for a college servant, who acts as the valet to two or more undergraduates, the counterpart of the Oxford SCOUT. He runs errands, waits at table, wakes men for morning chapel, brushes their clothes, etc. The word is probably from gippo, a 17th-century term for a scullion. Also in American, slang for the verb or noun cheat.

To give a person gyp. To give him a rough time, to make him suffer, as, "I'll give him gyp", "This tooth is giving me gyp", etc. An expression of unknown origin.

Gyp joint. In the U.S.A. an inordinately overpriced business establishment, as for example a restaurant or store.

Gypped. Many of the rivers and creeks in the cattle country of the U.S.A. contain so much gypsum, or alkali salts, that anyone drinking immoderately therefrom suffers a stomach attack, and is referred to as "gypped".

Gypsy, or Gipsy. A dark-skinned nomadic people which first appeared in England in the 16th century, called Romanies by George Borrow from their native name Rom (fem. Romni). Their language is called Romani. Originally of low-caste Indian origin, they migrated to Persia and thence to Europe, reaching Germany and France in the 15th century. As they were first thought to have come from Egypt they were called Egyptians, which became corrupted to Gypcians, and so to the present form. The largest group of European Gypsies is Atzigan. In Turkey and Greece this became Tshingian, in the Balkans and Rumania Tsigan, in Hungary Czigany, in Germany Zigeuner, in Italy Zingaro, in Portugal Cigano, and in Spain Zincalo. The original name is said to mean "dark man". See also BOHEMIAN; ZINGARI.

Under the NAZIS they suffered the same fate as the Jews and large numbers were exterminated. Gypsies have an old reputation as smiths, tinkers, horse-dealers, fortune-tellers, and musicians. They practise a wide variety of crafts in many countries.

That the Egyptians and Chaldean strangers,
Known by the name of Gipsies, shall henceforth
Be banished from the realm, as vagabonds.

LONGFELLOW: The Spanish Student, III, ii.

Gyromancy. A kind of DIVINATION performed by walking round in a circle or ring until one fell from dizziness, the direction of the fall being of significance. (Gr. gyros, ring; mantia, divination.)

Gytrash. A north of England spirit, which in the form of horse, mule, or large dog, haunts solitary ways, and sometimes comes upon belated travellers.

I remembered certain of Bessie's tales, wherein figured a . . . spirit called a Gytrash.

CHARLOTTE BRONTË: Jane Eyre, ch. xii.

H

H. The form of our capital H is through the Roman and Greek directly from the Phœnician (Semitic) letter Heth or Cheth, which, having two crossbars instead of one, represented a fence. The corresponding Egyptian hieroglyph was a sieve, and the Anglo-Saxon RUNE is called hægl, hail.

Habeas Corpus (hā' bē ās kôr' pūs) (Lat. have the body). The name given to a prerogative writ (from the opening words) to one who detains a person in custody ordering him to produce or "have the body" of the accused before the Court. Various forms of this writ developed from the 13th century, and by Charles I's reign such writs were the established means of testing illegal imprisonment. The freedom of the subject from wrongful imprisonment was formally established by the Habeas Corpus Act of 1679 and the Habeas Corpus Act of 1816 provided for the issue of such writs in vacation as well as in term. By an Act of 1862 the writ of Habeas Corpus runs in all dominions of the Crown excepting such dominions where there is a court having authority to issue such a writ. An Irish Habeas Corpus Act was passed in 1782. In Scotland its place is taken by the Wrongs Imprisonment Act of 1701.

The Habeas Corpus Act has been suspended in times of political and social disturbance and its importance is that it prevents people being imprisoned on mere suspicion or left in prison an indefinite time without trial.

Haberdasher. A dealer in small articles of dress, etc. The word is of uncertain etymology. The Haberdashers' Company was one of the "twelve great" LIVERY COMPANIES and was noted for its benefactions, especially in the field of education.

An Haberdasher and a Carpenter,
A Webbe, a Dyer, and a Tapiser,
Were with us eke, cloth'd in one livery,
Of a solemn and great fraternity.

CHAUCER: Prologue.

Habit is Second Nature. The wise saw of DIOGENES.

French: L'habitude est une seconde nature.

Latin: Usus est optimus magister.

SHAKESPEARE (Hamlet, III, iv) says: "Use almost can change the stamp of nature."

Habsburg, or Hapsburg. The name of the famous dynasty which ruled in Austria, Hungary, Bohemia, Spain, etc., is a contraction of Habichts-burg (Hawk's Castle). So called from the castle built in the 11th century on the right bank of the Aar by Werner, Bishop of Strassburg, whose nephew, Werner, was the first to assume the title of "Count of Hapsburg". See EMPEROR.

Habsburg Lip. See AUSTRIAN LIP.

Hack. Short for HACKNEY, a horse let out for hire; hence, one whose services are for hire, especially a literary drudge, compiler, furbisher-up of other men's work. Cp. GRUB STREET. Goldsmith, who well knew from experience what the life was, wrote this epitaph on Edward Purdon:

Here lies poor Ned Purdon, from misery freed,
Who long was a bookseller's hack:
He led such a damnable life in this world,
I don't think he'll wish to come back.

Hackell's Coit. A huge stone said to weigh about 30 tons, near Stanton Drew, Somerset; so called from a tradition that it was a quoit or coit thrown by Sir John Hautville (13th century). In Wiltshire three huge stones near Kennet are called the Devil's Coits and there is a DOLMEN at St. Breock, Wadebridge, Cornwall, called the Giant's Quoit.

Hackney (O. Fr. haquenée, ambling horse). Originally (14th cent.) the name given to a class of medium-sized horses, distinguishing them from war-horses. They were used for riding, and later the name was applied to a horse let out for hire, whence hackney carriage. Cp. HACK.

The name of the London borough of Hackney has no etymological connexion with the foregoing.

Had it, To have. A colloquial expression widely popularized during World War II and possibly of Australian origin. It is applied to that which is "finished with" or "done for". Thus a man seriously wounded was said to "have had it". At Roman gladiatorial combats the spectators cried hoc habet or habet (he has it, he is hit) when a gladiator was wounded or received his death-wound. It is also applied to one who has missed his chance or opportunity.

To have never had it so good. An Americanism popularized in Great Britain by Harold Macmillan (Prime Minister 1957-1964), when speaking of the overall prosperity and standards of living of the masses under CONSERVATIVE government in the WELFARE STATE.

Haddock. Traditionally it was in a haddock's mouth that St. PETER found the piece of money, the stater or shekel (Matt. xvii, 27), and the two marks on the fish's neck are said to be impressions of the finger and thumb of the apostle. Haddocks, however, cannot live in the fresh water of the Lake of Gennesaret. Cp. JOHN DORY.

Hades (hā' dēz). In HOMER, the name of the god (PLUTO) who reigns over the dead; but in later classical mythology the abode of the departed spirits, a place of gloom but not necessarily a place of punishment and torture. As the state or abode of the dead it corresponds to the Heb. Sheol, a word which, in the Authorized Version of the BIBLE, has frequently been translated by the misleading HELL. Hence Hades is often used as a EUPHEMISM for Hell. Cp. INFERNO.

Hadith (hā' dith) (Arab., a saying or tradition). A 10th-century compilation by the Moslem jurists Moshin and Bokhari of the traditional sayings and doings of MOHAMMED. It forms a supplement to the KORAN, as the TALMUD does to the Jewish Scriptures. Originally the Hadith was not allowed to be committed to writing, but this became necessary later for its preservation.

Hadj (haj). The pilgrimage to the KAABA which every Mohammedan feels bound to make once at least before death. Those who neglect to do so "might as well die Jews or Christians". These pilgrimages take place in the twelfth month of each year, Dhu'l-Hijja, roughly corresponding to our AUGUST.

Until comparatively recent times none but a MOSLEM could make this pilgrimage except at risk of life, and the Hadj was only performed by Burckhardt, Burton, and a few other intrepid travellers in the guise of Moslems.

Hadji (ha' jē). A MOSLEM who has made the HADJ and who is therefore entitled to wear a green turban.

Hadrian's Wall. The Roman wall that runs for 73½ miles between Wallsend-on-Tyne and Bowness on the Solway Firth. It was built between A.D. 122 and 127, after the Emperor Hadrian had inspected the site, to keep back the PICTS. It was 16 ft. high with mile-castles and turrets between the castles. There were 17 forts on the south side and a parallel vallum or ditch (c. 10 ft. deep and 30 ft. wide) on the north. It was attacked and overrun in the 2nd and 3rd century and ceased to be an effective barrier by the latter part of the 4th century. Cp. ANTONINE'S WALL.

Hafiz. Shams-ud-din Mohammed, a 14th-century Persian poet, "the Persian ANACREON". His ghazels (i.e. songs, odes) tell of love and wine, nightingales, flowers, the instability of all things human, of ALLAH and the PROPHET, etc. He was a professed dervish and his tomb at Shiraz is still the resort of pilgrims. Hafiz is Arabic for one who knows the KORAN and HADITH by heart.

Hag. A witch or sorceress, an ugly old woman.

How now, you secret, black, and midnight hags?
SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, IV, 1.

Hag-knots. Tangles in the manes of horses and ponies, supposed to be used by witches for stirrups.

Hag's teeth. A seaman's term to express those parts of a matting, etc., which spoil its general uniformity.

Hagarenes (håg a rēnz). An old name for the Saracens, Arabs, or Moors, who were supposed to be descendants of Hagar, ABRAHAM's bondwoman. See ISHMAEL.

Haggadah (Heb., narrative). The variety of MIDRASH which contains rabbinical interpretations of the historical and legendary, ethical, parabolic, and speculative parts of the Hebrew Scriptures. The variety devoted to law, practice, and doctrine is called Halakhah (rule by which to walk).

Haganah. A clandestine Jewish militia organized in Palestine, when under British mandate, in preparation for the coming struggle for Zionist independence at the end of World War II. It formed the nucleus of the army of Israel which was established as an independent state in 1948.

Hail. An exclamation of welcome like the Lat. salve. It is from the Icel. heill, hale, healthy, and represents the O.E. greeting wes hal (may you) be in whole (or good) health. Hail (the frozen rain) is O.E. hagol. Cp. WASSAIL.

All hail, Macbeth! Hail to thee, thane of Glamis!
SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, I, iii.

Hail fellow well met. One on easy, familiar terms; an intimate acquaintance.

Hail Mary. See AVE MARIA.

To hail a ship. To call to those on board.

To hail an omnibus, or a cab, etc. To attract the driver's attention in order to board or hire the vehicle.

To hail from. To come from or belong to a place by birth or residence. An expression of nautical origin from the custom of hailing passing ships to ascertain their port of departure.

Within hail. Within calling distance.

Hair. One single tuft is left on the shaven crown of a Moslem for MOHAMMED to grasp hold of when drawing the deceased to PARADISE.

The scalp-lock on the otherwise bald head of North American Indians is for a conquering enemy to seize when he tears off the scalp.

The ancients believed that till a lock of hair is devoted to PROSERPINE, she refuses to release the SOUL from the dying body. When DIDO mounted the funeral pile, she lingered in suffering till JUNO sent IRIS to cut off a lock of her hair; THANATOS did the same for Alcestis when she gave her life for her husband; and in all sacrifices a forelock was first cut off from the head of the victim as an offering to the black queen.

It was an old idea that a person with red hair could not be trusted, from the tradition that JUDAS had red hair. Shakespeare says:

Rosalind: His very hair is of the dissembling colour.

Celia: Something browner than Judas's.
As You Like It, III, iv.

See also RED-HAIRED PERSONS.

A man with black hair but a red beard was the worst of all.

The old rhyme says:

A red beard and a black head,
Catch him with a good trick and take him dead.

BYRON says in The Prisoner of Chillon:

My hair is grey, but not with years,
Nor grew it white
In a single night,
As men's have grown from sudden fears.

It is a well-authenticated fact that this can happen, and has happened. It is said that Ludovico Sforza became grey in a single night; Charles I, also, while he was undergoing trial, and Marie Antoinette grew grey from grief during her imprisonment.

Adoption by Hair. See under ADOPTION.

Against the hair. Against the grain, contrary to its nature.

If you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions.

SHAKESPEARE: Merry Wives of Windsor, II, iii.

Both of a hair. As like as two peas or hairs; also, similar in disposition, taste, or trade, etc.

Hair-breadth escape. A very narrow escape from some danger or evil. In measurement the forty-eighth part of an inch is called a "hair-breadth".

Wherein I spake of most disastrous chances
Of moving accidents by flood and field,
Of hair-breadth 'scapes i' th' imminent deadly breach.

SHAKESPEARE: Othello, I, iii.

Hair by hair you will pull out the horse's tail. Slow and sure wins the race. Plutarch says that Sertorius, in order to teach his soldiers that "perseverance is irresistible", had two horses brought before them, one old and feeble, the other large and strong. Two men were set to pull at their tails. One of the men, robust and strong, pulled the tail of the weak horse with no effect; the other, a contemptible little fellow, plucked out the hairs from the great horse's tail one by one and soon stripped it bare.

The hair of the dog that bit you. The idea that the thing which causes the malady is the best cure or means of relief, as another drink in the morning is considered by some the best answer to a HANGOVER. The allusion is to the old notion that the burnt hair of a dog is an antidote to its bite. Simila similibus curantur.

Keep your hair on! Don't lose your temper, don't get excited. Keep your wool on is an alternative form.

To a hair, or To the turn of a hair. To a nicety.

To comb his hair the wrong way. To cross him or vex him by running counter to his prejudices, opinions, or habits.

To let one's hair down. To behave in a free informal manner; to give free vent to private opinions, etc., among friends. The allusion is to the days when women wore long hair pinned up in various ways over their head for their public appearances, but occasionally "let it down" and let it flow freely in the privacy of their homes.

To make one's hair stand on end. To terrify. Dr. Andrews, once of Beresford Chapel, Walworth, who attended an execution said: "When the executioner put the cords on the criminal's wrists, his hair, though long and lanky, of a weak iron-grey, rose gradually and stood perfectly upright, and so remained for some time, and then fell gradually down again."

Fear came upon me and trembling . . . and the hair of my flesh stood up.

Job iv, 14, 15.

To split hairs. To argue over petty points, make fine, cavilling distinctions, quibble over trifles.

To tear one's hair. To show signs of extreme vexation, anxiety, anguish, or grief. Tearing the hair was anciently a sign of mourning.

Without turning a hair. Without indicating any sign of distress or agitation, to be quite unruffled.

Hair-brained. See HARE-BRAINED.

Hair shirt. A garment of coarse hair-cloth (made from horsehair and wool or cotton) worn next the skin by ascetics and penitents.

Hair-spring. The fine spiral spring in a clock or a watch for regulating the movement of the balance.

Hair Stane. See HOARSTONE.

Hair trigger. A trigger that allows the firing mechanism of a rifle or revolver to be operated by a very slight pressure. Invented in the 16th century.

Hake. We lose in hake, but gain in herring. Lose one way, but gain in another. Herring are persecuted by the hake, which are therefore driven away from a herring fishery.

Halakhah. See HAGGADAH.

Halcyon Days (hál' si on). Times of happiness and prosperity. Halcyon is the Greek for a kingfisher, compounded of hals (the sea) and kuo (to brood on). The ancient Sicilians believed that the kingfisher laid its eggs, and incubated for fourteen days on the surface of the sea, during which period, before the winter SOLSTICE, the waves were always unruffled.

And wars have that respect for his repose

As winds for halcyons when they breed at sea.

DRYDEN: Stanzas on Oliver Cromwell, xxxvi.

Half. Half and half. A mixture of two liquors in equal quantities, such as PORTER and ALE, old and mild, mild and bitter, etc.

Half an eye. See under EYE.

Half a mind. To have half a mind. To be disposed to, to have an inclination towards doing something.

Half cock. To go off at half cock. To act or start unexpectedly, before one is ready; as a gun goes off when the hammer is set at half cock and supposedly secure.

Half done, as Elgin was burnt. In the wars between James II of SCOTLAND and the Douglasses in 1452, the Earl of Huntly burnt one half of the town of Elgin, being the side which belonged to the Douglasses, but left the other side standing because it belonged to his own family (Scott: Tales of a Grandfather, xxii).

Half is more than the whole. This is what Hesiod said to his brother Perseus, when he wished him to settle a dispute without going to law. He meant, "Half of the estate without the expense of law will be better than the whole estate after the lawyers have had their pickings." The remark, however, has a wide signification. Thus a large estate, to one who cannot keep it up, is impoverishing.

Unhappy they to whom God has not revealed,
By a strong light which must their sense control,
That half a great estate's more than the whole.

COWLEY: Essays in Verse and Prose, iv.

Half-seas over. Well on the way, pretty far gone. Usually applied to a person half drunk.

Our Friend the Alderman was half Seas over.

Spectator, No. 616 (Nov. 5th, 1714).

Half the Battle. See under BATTLE.

He is only half-baked. He is raw or soft, i.e. of weak mind, a noodle.

My better half. See under BETTER.

Not half. Very much; "Rather! I should think so." Not half bad means "not at all bad"; pretty good in fact.

To do a thing by halves. To do it in a SLAPDASH manner, very imperfectly.

To go halves. To share something equally with another.

Halgaver

Half-deck. In old sailing ships the quarters of the second mate, carpenters, coopers, boatswain, and all secondary officers. The afterpart of the deck below the spar-deck, extending to the cabin bulkheads. Cp. QUARTERDECK.

Half Joe. A Portuguese coin (worth about $4) current on the Atlantic coast of the U.S.A. in the 18th century. A Johannes was an eight-escudo piece first struck in the reign of John V, and popularly called a Joe in America.

Half-mast high. See TO HANG THE FLAG AT HALF-MAST under FLAG.

Half-life. As a scientific term, the time taken for half the atoms of a given amount of radioactive substance to disintegrate. This time may vary from a fraction of a second to millions of years according to the given substance. A knowledge of this process has enabled archaeologists and geologists, etc., to date materials with considerable accuracy.

Half-timer. One engaged in some occupation for only half the usual time; the term formerly applied to a child attending school for half time and working the rest of the day. This practice was terminated by the Education Act of 1918.

Half-tone block. A typographic printing-block for illustrations, produced by photographing on to a prepared plate through a screen or grating which breaks up the picture of the object to be reproduced into small dots of varying intensity, thus giving the lights and shades, or tones.

Half-way House. A fairly common name for an inn situated midway between two towns or villages. It is figuratively used for a compromise or moderate policy.

Half-world. See DEMI-MONDE.

Halgaver. Summoned before the mayor of Halgaver. The mayor of Halgaver is an imaginary worthy, and the threat for those whose offence is slovenliness and untidiness. Halgaver or Goat's Moor near Bodmin, CORNWALL, was famous for an annual carnival held there in the middle of July. Charles II was so pleased with the diversions when he passed through on his way to Scilly that he became a member of the "self-constituted" corporation. Cp. MAYOR OF GARRATT under GARRATT.

Halifax. Halifax Gibbet Law. By this local law, whoever committed theft above the value of 13½d. in the liberty of Halifax, Yorkshire, was to be executed on the Halifax gibbet, a kind of GUILLOTINE. Originally enacted against those who stole cloth from the tenters or drying frames, it ceased to operate after 1650.

At Halifax the law so sharpe doth deale,
That whoso more than thirteen pence doth steale,
They have a jyn that wondrous quick and well
Sends thieves all headless into heaven or hell.
JOHN TAYLOR: Works, II (1630).

Go to Halifax. See under GO.

Hull, Hell, and Halifax. See HULL.

Hall Mark. The official mark stamped on gold and silver articles after they have been assayed, so called because the assaying or testing and stamping was done at the Goldsmiths' Hall. The hall mark includes (1) the standard mark, (2) the assay office, or "hall" mark, (3) the date letter, and sometimes (4) the duty mark. With it is found (5) the maker's mark.

(1) The standard mark. For GOLD, a crown in ENGLAND and a thistle in SCOTLAND; for 22 and 18 CARAT gold, followed by the number of carats in figures. In IRELAND, a crowned harp for 22 carat, three feathers for 20 carat and a unicorn's head for 18 carat. Lower standards of gold have the number of carats in figures, without the device.

For SILVER, a lion passant in England, a thistle in Edinburgh, a lion rampant in Glasgow, a crowned harp in Dublin.

(2) The Assay Office mark.

London—a leopard's head (see LEOPARD).

Birmingham—an anchor.

Sheffield—A York Rose for gold, a crown for silver.

Edinburgh—a castle.

Glasgow—the city arms: a tree, a bird, a bell, and a salmon with a ring in its mouth.

Dublin—Hibernia.

Marks of Assay Offices now closed, and dates of closing:

Chester—three sheaves and a sword (1962).

Exeter—a castle (1883).

Newcastle—three castles (1884).

Norwich—castle over lion (1697).

York—five lions on a cross (1856).

(3) The date letter. A letter of the alphabet indicates the date of an article. The London Assay Office uses 20 letters of the alphabet, Glasgow 26 and most of the others 25. The letter is changed annually and a new type-face is adopted and the shape of the letter's frame is changed. Given the date letter and the Assay Office mark, the date of manufacture may be easily discovered on referring to a table.

(4) The duty mark. Articles on which duty has been paid are stamped with the head of the reigning sovereign.

(5) The maker's mark. A device or set of initials which the maker has registered at the Assay Office, and which he stamps on goods he intends to send for hall marking.

Hall Sunday. The Sunday before SHROVE TUESDAY; the next day is called Hall Monday or Hall Night. Hall is a contraction of hallow meaning holy. Hall Monday is also known as Collop Monday from the custom of celebrating with a dish of collops.

Hallel (hāl' el). A Jewish hymn of praise recited at certain festivals, consisting of Ps. cxiii to cxviii inclusive, also called the Egyptian or Common Hallel. The name Great Hallel is given to Ps. cxxxvi and sometimes to Ps. cxx-cxxxvi, thus including the GRADUAL PSALMS.

Hallelujah is the Heb. halelu-Jah, "Praise ye Jehovah". Alleluia is one of the several variant spellings.

Hallelujah Lass. In the early days of the SALVATION ARMY, a name given to female members. Defined somewhat censoriously by Dr. Brewer as: "A young woman who wanders about with what is called 'The Salvation Army'."

Hallelujah Victory. A victory by the Britons in c. 429 over the combined Picts and Saxons probably somewhere in the North Midlands. The Britons, many newly baptized, were led by Germanus, Bishop of Auxerre, and when they raised the war-cry "Hallelujah" the Picts and Saxons, seeing themselves surrounded, fled without fighting.

Halloween (hāl ō 'n'). 31 October, which in the old CELTIC calendar was the last day of the year, its night being the time when all the witches and warlocks were abroad. On the introduction of Christianity it was taken over as the Eve of ALL HALLOWS or All Saints.

Hallstatt. The name given to a culture marking the transition between the Bronze and Iron Ages in central and western Europe and the Balkans. It takes its name from Hallstatt in Upper Austria, where between 1846 and 1899 over 2,000 graves were found, the earliest dating from c. 900 B.C. They contained many objects typical of the earliest IRON AGE.

Halo. In Christian art the same as a NIMBUS. The luminous circle round the SUN or MOON caused by the refraction of light through a mist is called a halo. Figuratively it implies the ideal or saintly glory surrounding a person and is often used derisively, as "you ought to be wearing a halo". It is the Gr. halos, originally a circular threshing-floor, then the sun or moon's disk. Cp. AUREOLE.

Ham Actor. A ranting, inferior actor. Among the suggested contributory origins of the term are (1) that in the 19th century theatrical make-up was removed with the fat of ham chops; (2) that one Hamish McCullough (1835-1885), who toured with his troupe in Illinois, was known as "Ham" and his company as "Ham's actors"; (3) there was also a popular American minstrel song "The Hamfat Man", about an inept actor; (4) an allusion to the word "amateur"; (5) the tradition that down-at-heel actors had performed Hamlet in better days.

Shakespeare's Hamlet may well be the original source, since Hamlet in his speech to the players (III, ii) describes the essence of ham acting: to "saw the air too much with your hand", to "tear a passion to tatters" and to "strut and bellow".

Hamadryads. See DRYAD.

Haman. To hang as high as Haman. To be well and truly hanged, to be hoist with one's own PETARD. Haman, having gained favour with King Ahasuerus (XERXES) of Persia, was provoked by the Jew Mordecai's refusal to bow before him, and obtained permission to exterminate all Jews in the kingdom. He prepared a gallows fifty cubits high on which to hang Mordecai. Queen Esther, aware of the threat to her former guardian, secured the downfall of Haman, who was hanged on his own gallows. (Esther, vii, 9). Cp. HARM SET, HARM GET.

Hambletonian. The name given to a superior strain of horse bred in the U.S.A. for trotting and descended from the stallion Hambletonian (1849-1876).

Hamburgers, or Hamburg Steaks. This popular American dish of fried minced beef, onion, egg, etc., takes its name from Hamburg in Germany. It appears to have originated in the Baltic region some centuries ago and was introduced into America in the 19th century by sailors from Hamburg and subsequently "naturalized". The infelicitous beefburger is an attempt by caterers to avoid confusion by association with the name of ham.

Hamet. See CID HAMET.

Hamiltonian System. A method of teaching foreign languages by interlinear translations suggested by James Hamilton (1769-1829).

Hamlet. It's Hamlet without the Prince. Said when the person who was to have taken the principal place at some function is absent. SHAKESPEARE's Hamlet would lose all its meaning if the part of the Prince were omitted.

Hammer. In personal appellatives:

Pierre d'Ailly (1350-1420), Le Marteau (hammer) des Hérétiques, president of the council that condemned John Hus.

John Faber (1478-1541), the German controversialist, was surnamed Malleus Hereticorum, from the title of one of his works.

St. Hilary, Bishop of Poitiers (d. 368), was known as "The Hammer of the ARIANS".

Charles the Hammer. See MARTEL.

Edward I (1239-1307), nicknamed "Longshanks" and called "The Hammer of the Scots". The inscription on his tomb in Westminster Abbey reads "Edwardus Primus Malleus Scotorum hic est".

The second name of Judas MACCABÆUS, the son of Mattathias the Hasmonean, is thought by some to denote that he was a "Hammer" or "Hammerer" and to be derived from Heb. makkabah, hammer.

Hammer and Sickle. Since 1923, the emblem of the U.S.S.R., symbolic of productive work in the factory and on the land.

Knight of the Hammer. A blacksmith. Throwing the hammer. An athletic contest involving the throwing of a 16 lb. hammer. The original hammer used was a blacksmith's sledge.

To be hammered. A Stock Exchange term, used of one who is in the "HOUSE" officially declared a defaulter. This is done by the "Head Waiter", who goes into the rostrum and attracts the attention of the members present by striking the desk with a hammer before making the announcement.

To come, or sell under the hammer, or Gone to the hammer. Said of goods and property sent for sale by auction; from the rap of the auctioneer's hammer to denote that a lot is sold.

To go at it hammer and tongs. To go at it with might and main, to fight or quarrel vigorously.

To hammer away at anything. To go at it doggedly; to persevere.

To hammer out. To arrive at the final form of a plan or scheme by effort, careful thought, and discussion. A METAPHOR from the blacksmith's shop.

To live hammer and tongs. To be always quarrelling.

Hampden Clubs. A series of clubs centred on the Hampden Club set up in London in 1811 by the veteran agitator Major Cartwright (1740-1824). Their aim was to agitate for reform of PARLIAMENT and the extension of the franchise to all payers of direct taxes, although some years later they became more democratic, extending membership to all willing to pay a penny per week subscription. Each club was technically a separate organization in order to evade the existing law which forbade societies with affiliated branches. The name is derived from the famous 17th-century parliamentarian, John Hampden, of SHIP MONEY fame.

Hampton Court Conference. Discussions held at Hampton Court in 1604 between James I, the BISHOPS, and four PURITAN clergy in the presence of the Council. The bishops would make no concessions of importance and their most valuable decision was to effect a new translation of the BIBLE, which became the Authorized Version of 1611.

Hanaper. Hanap was the mediæval name for a goblet or wine-cup, and the hanaper (connected with hamper) was the wicker-work case that surrounded it. Hence the name was given to any round wicker basket and especially to one kept in the Court of CHANCERY containing documents that had passed the GREAT SEAL. The office was under the charge of the Clerk of the Hanaper until its abolition in 1842.

Hancock. See JOHN HANCOCK.

Hand. A symbol of fortitude in Egypt, of fidelity in ROME. Two hands symbolize concord; by a closed hand ZENO represented dialectics and by an open hand eloquence.

In early art the Deity was frequently represented by a hand extended from the clouds, with rays issuing from the fingers, but generally it was in the act of benediction, i.e. two fingers raised.

In card-games the word is used for the game itself, for an individual player (as "a good hand at WHIST") or the cards held by him.

A saint in heaven would grieve to see such hand Cut up by one who will not understand.

CRABBE: The Borough.

Also for style of workmanship, hand-writing, etc. ("he is a good hand at carpentry", "he writes a good hand"). Workmen are also called hands.

As a measure of length a hand equals 4 inches. Horses are measured up the foreleg to the shoulder, and their height is expressed in hands.

Dead Hand. See under DEAD.

Dead Man's hand. See under DEAD.

Hand of Glory. See GLORY.

The Red Hand, or Bloody Hand, in coat armour is the device of ULSTER and is carried as a charge on the coats of arms of English and Irish BARONETS (not on those of SCOTLAND or Nova Scotia). The "bloody hand" is also borne privately by a few families when its presence is generally connected with some traditional tale of blood. Cp. BLOODY HAND.

Hand gallop. A slow and easy gallop, in which the horse is kept well in hand.

Hand paper. A particular kind of paper well known in the Record Office, and so called from its watermark, which goes back to the early 16th century.

Also a hand-made paper.

A bird in the hand. See under BIRD.

A dab hand. One who is adept.

An empty hand is no lure for a hawk. You must not expect to receive anything without giving a return.

A note of hand. A promise to pay made in writing and duly signed.

An old hand at it. One who is experienced at it.

A poor hand. An unskilful one.

All hands. The nautical term for the whole crew.

It is believed on all hands. It is generally or universally believed.

At first, or second hand. As the original (first) purchaser, owner, hearer, or (second) as one deriving, learning, etc., through another party.

At hand. Conveniently near. "Near at hand", quite close by.

By hand. Without the aid of machinery or an intermediate agent. A letter "sent by hand" is one delivered by a personal messenger, not sent through the post. But a child "brought up by hand" is one reared on the bottle instead of being breast-fed.

Cap in hand. See under CAP.

From hand to hand. From one person to another.

Hand and thigh. An ancient Irish form of inheritance of land by daughters in default of sons was known as inheritance of hand and thigh.

Hand in hand. In friendly fashion; unitedly.

Hand-out. Primarily something handed out or given away, as oranges or buns at a children's party or gifts of food or clothing, etc., to tramps. It is now more commonly used to designate (1) free advertising material, brochures, etc., given to potential customers, (2) a press release by a news service, and (3) a prepared statement to the Press by a government, official body, publicity agent, etc.

Hand over hand. To put one hand above the other, as when climbing a rope or ladder; also to overtake or overhaul rapidly. Sailors when hauling a rope put one hand before the other alternately and rapidly. The French say main sur main.

Hands up! The order given by captors when taking prisoners, etc. The hands are to be held high above the head to preclude possibility of resistance, the use of firearms, etc.

He is my right hand. My principal assistant, my best and most trustworthy man.

In hand. Under control, in possession, in progress.

In one's own hands. In one's sole control, ownership, management, responsibility, etc.

Kings have long hands. See under KING.

Laying on of hands. In church usage the imposition of hands is the laying on or touch of a BISHOP's hands in confirmation and ordination.

Among the Romans, a hand laid on the head of a person indicated the right of property, as when someone laid claim to a slave in the presence of the prætor. Cp. TO LAY HANDS ON, below.

Many hands make light work. An old proverb (given in Ray's Collection, 1670) enshrining the wisdom of the division of labour. The Romans had a similar saying, Multorum manibus magnum levatur onus, by the hands of many a great load is lightened.

My hands are full. I am fully occupied; I have as much work as I can manage.

My hands are tied. I am not free to act.

Offhand. In a casual, unceremonious fashion, curt, rude; extempore, without premeditation.

Off one's hands. No longer one's responsibility. If something or somebody is left on one's hands one has to take full responsibility.

On the one hand . . . on the other hand. Expressions used to introduce contrasting viewpoints, etc., with the meaning of, "from this point of view . . . from that point of view".

Out of hand. At once; done with, over:

We will proclaim you out of hand.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI Pt. III, IV, vii.

And were these inward wars once out of hand,
We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. II, III, i.

Also meaning "beyond control" as, "These children are quite out of hand."

The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world. The line is from The Hand that Rules the World by the American poet, William Ross Wallace (1819-1881):

They say that man is mighty,
He governs land and sea,
He wields a mighty sceptre
O'er lesser powers that be;
But a mightier power and stronger
Man from his throne has hurled,
And the hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rules the world.

To be hand in glove with. To be inseparable companions, of like tastes and affections; thick as thieves; to fit each other like hand and glove.

To ask, or give the hand of so-and-so. To ask or give her hand in marriage.

To bear a hand. To come and help.

To bite the hand that feeds you. To wound or upset one on whom you depend; to treat a benefactor cavalierly, as a surly dog snaps at the hand of a person offering food.

To change hands. To pass from one possessor to another.

To come to hand. To be received, to come within reach.

To come to one's hand. To do or perform with ease.

To force one's hand. To make a person reveal his intentions, plans, etc., earlier than intended, as in card-playing.

To get one's hand in. To familiarize oneself with the task; to begin to take over a task or duty.

To get the upper hand. To obtain mastery.

To give one's hand upon something. To take one's oath on it; to pledge one's honour to keep the promise.

To hand down to posterity. To leave for future generations.

To hand in one's checks, or chips. To die. A phrase of American origin derived from poker, etc. Checks (counters) were handed in when one had finished or was "cleaned out". Variants are, to pass in or cash one's checks.

To hand in sail. To take it in, to furl it.

To hand it to someone. To give well-merited credit to someone. A colloquial usage.

To hand round. To pass from one person to another, to distribute.

To have clean hands. See under CLEAN.

To have a free hand. To have freedom of action without the need of referring to others for agreement or approval.

To have a hand in the matter. To be associated with; to have a finger in the pie (see under FINGER).

To keep one's hand in. To maintain one's skill by practice.

To kiss hands. See under KISS.

To lay hands on. To apprehend; to lay hold of. Cp. LAYING ON OF HANDS, above.

To lend a hand. To help, to give assistance.

To live from hand to mouth. Improvidently, without thought for the morrow. The phrase implies the ready consumption of whatever one gets.

To play into someone's hands. To act unwittingly or carelessly, thus giving the advantage to the other party; to do just what will help him and not advance your own cause.

To play one's own hand. To look after NUMBER ONE; to act entirely for self-advantage.

To serve someone hand and foot. To be at his beck and call; to be his slave.

To shake hands. To greet by giving the hand clasped into your own a shake; to bid farewell.

Fortune and Antony part here; even here
Do we shake hands,
SHAKESPEARE: Antony and Cleopatra, IV, xii.

It is also an old custom to shake hands after settling a quarrel, to confirm an agreement or a business deal.

To show one's hand. To reveal one's intentions or resources, as when exposing a hand of cards to an opponent.

To strike hands. To make a contract, to become surety for another. See Prov. xvii, 18, and xxii, 26.

To take a hand. To play a part, especially in a game of cards.

To take in hand. To undertake to do something; to take charge of.

To take something off one's hands. To relieve one of something troublesome.

To wash one's hands of a thing. To have nothing to do with it after having been concerned in the matter; to abandon it entirely. The allusion is to PILATE'S washing his hands at the trial of Jesus.

When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person: see ye to it.—Matt. xxvii, 24.

To win hands down. To win easily. A jockey rides with hands down when he is winning comfortably and easily.

With a heavy hand. Oppressively; without sparing.

It is a damned and a bloody work;
The graceless action of a heavy hand,
If that it be the work of any hand.
SHAKESPEARE: King John, IV, iii.

With a high hand. Arrogantly.

Handcuff King. The nickname of Harry Houdini (1873–1926), American entertainer and expert escapist, especially from handcuffs.

Handfasting. A marriage “on approval”, was formerly in vogue on the BORDER. A fair was at one time held in Dumfriesshire, at which a young man was allowed to pick a female companion to live with. If they both liked the arrangement after 12 months they became man and wife. This was called hand-fasting or hand-fastening. Cp. BUNDLING.

This sort of contract was common among the Romans and Jews.

Handiron. See ANDIRON.

Handkerchief. With handkerchief in one hand and sword in the other. Pretending to be sorry at a calamity, but prepared to make capital out of it.

Maria Theresa stands, with the handkerchief in one hand, weeping the woes of Poland; but with the sword in the other hand, ready to cut Poland in sections, and take her share.

CARLYLE: The Diamond Necklace, ch. iv.

Handle. A handle to one's name. Some title, as “lord”, “sir”, “doctor”, etc.

To fly off the handle. See under FLY.

To give a handle to. To give grounds for suspicion, as, “He certainly gave a handle to the rumour.”

To go off the handle. To die, a 19th-century colloquial Americanism.

My old gentleman means to be Mayor or Governor or President or something or other before he goes off the handle.

O. W. HOLMES;

The Poet at the Breakfast Table (ch. x).

Dead Man's Handle. See under DEAD.

Handsel (O.E. handselen, delivery into the hand). A gift for luck; earnest-money; the first money received in a day. Hence Handsel Monday, the first MONDAY of the year, when small gifts were given, before Boxing Day (see CHRISTMAS BOX) took its place. To “handsel a sword” is to use it for the first time; to “handsel a coat”, to wear it for the first time, etc.

Handsome. Handsome is as handsome does. It is one's actions that count, not merely one's appearances or promises. The proverb is in Ray's Collection, and is also found in Goldsmith's The Vicar of Wakefield (ch. i).

Handwriting on the wall. The sign of impending calamity or disaster. The allusion is to the handwriting on Belshazzar's palace wall announcing the loss of his kingdom (Dan. v).

Hang. Hang it all, I'll be hanged! Exclamations of astonishment or annoyance; mild imprecations. A mincing form of “damned”.

Hanged, drawn and quartered. See under DRAW.

Hanging and wiving go by destiny. This comforting proverb is given in Heywood's Collection (1546) as, “Wedding's destiny and hanging likewise.”

The ancient saying is no heresy,
Hanging and wiving goes by destiny.
SHAKESPEARE: Merchant of Venice, II, ix.

Hanging Day. See FRIDAY.

To get the hang of a thing. To understand the drift or connexion; to acquire the knack.

To hang a jury. To reduce them to disagreement so that they fail to bring in a verdict.

To hang about, or around. To loiter, loaf, wait about.

To hang back. To hesitate to proceed.

To hang by a thread. To be in a very precarious situation. The allusion is to the sword of DAMOCLES.

To hang fire. See under FIRE.

To hang in the balance. A state of doubt or suspense with regard to the outcome of a situation; not knowing on which side the scales of fate may descend.

To hang in the bell ropes. To have one's marriage postponed after the BANNs have been published in church.

To hang on. To cling to; to persevere; to be dependent on.

To hang on by the eyelids is to maintain one's position only with the greatest difficulty or by the slightest holds.

To hang on like grim death. To cling tenaciously, literally or metaphorically; not to be shaken off, as death persists having once marked down its victim.

Where do you hang out? Where are you living or lodging? The phrase may arise from the old custom of innkeepers, shopkeepers, tradesmen, etc., hanging a sign outside their premises.

“I say old boy, where do you hang out?” Mr. Pickwick replied that he was at present suspended at the George and Vulture.

DICKENS: Pickwick Papers, ch. xxx.

In the U.S.A. it implies, “Where do you pass your spare time?”

Hangdog look. A guilty, shame-faced look.

Hanging Gardens of Babylon. A square garden (according to Diodorus Siculus), 400 ft. each way, rising in a series of terraces, and provided with earth to a sufficient depth to accommodate trees of a great size. Water was lifted from the Euphrates by a screw and they were irrigated from a reservoir at the top. These famous gardens were one of the SEVEN WONDERS OF THE WORLD (see under WONDERS) and were said to have been built by Queen Semiramis and by NEBUCHADNEZZAR, to gratify his wife Amyitis, who felt weary of the flat plains of Babylon, and longed for something to remind her of her native Median Hills. They may have been associated with the great ziggurat of Babylon.

Hangmen and Executioners. Some practitioners have achieved a particular notice, e.g.:

BULL (c. 1593), the earliest hangman whose name survives.

DERRICK (q.v.), who cut off the head of Essex in 1601.

GREGORY BRANDON and his son RICHARD (1640), who executed Charles I, known as "the two Gregories". (See GREGORIAN TREE.)

SQUIRE DUN, mentioned in Hudibras (Pt. III, ii).

JACK KETCH (? 1663) executed Lord Russell and the Duke of Monmouth. His name became a generic word for a hangman.

ROSE, the butcher (1686).

EDWARD DENNIS (1780), introduced in Dickens's Barnaby Rudge.

THOMAS CHESHIRE, nicknamed "Old Cheese".

WILLIAM CALCRAFT (1800-1879) was appointed hangman in 1829 and was pensioned off in 1874.

WILLIAM MARWOOD (1820-1883), who invented the "long drop".

Of French executioners, the most celebrated are Capeluche, headsman of Paris during the days of the Burgundians and Armagnacs; and the two brothers Sanson who worked the GUILLOTINE during the French Revolution.

The fee given to the hangman at TYBURN used to be 13½d., with 1½d. for the rope.

For half of thirteen-pence ha'penny wages
I would have cleared all the town cages,
And you should have been rid of all the stages
I and my gallows groan.
The Hangman's Last Will and Testament

Noblemen who were to be beheaded were expected to give the executioner from £7 to £10 for cutting off their head; any peer who came to the halter could claim the privilege of being suspended by a silken rope.

Hangover. Something remaining from a previous occasion; especially the headache and nausea experienced the "morning after the night before", i.e. the morning after an evening of alcoholic indulgence.

Hanky-panky. Jugglery, underhand dealing. Cp. HOCUS FOCUS.

Hannah. In World War II a nickname given to a Wren serving with the Royal Marines, after Hannah Snell, the female Marine (see HANNAH).

Hansard. The printed official report of the proceedings and debates in the British Houses of PARLIAMENT and its standing committees and also those of some of the COMMONWEALTH parliaments.

The name is derived from T. C. Hansard (1776-1833), printer, then publisher, of the unofficial Parliamentary Debates begun by William Cobbett in 1803. After 1855 the firm was helped by government grants, until 1890, when the work was undertaken by several successive printers working at a loss. The name "Hansard" was omitted from the title page in 1891 and restored in 1943. Luke Hansard, the father of T. C. Hansard, was the printer of the HOUSE OF COMMONS Journals from 1774 until his death in 1828.

Hanse, or Hanseatic League. Originating in the 13th century as an organization of German merchants trading in northern Europe, it became a loose federation of nearly 100 towns by the mid-14th century, headed by Lübeck. It acquired a monopoly of the Baltic trade and dominated the North Sea routes until challenged by English, Dutch, and Scandinavian competitors in the 15th century. The last Diet of the Hanse met in 1669 and only Lübeck, Bremen and Hamburg remained in the League. Its London STEELYARD was sold in 1853 and its Antwerp premises in 1863.

Hanse Towns. Member towns of the HANSEATIC LEAGUE.

Hansel. See HANDSEL.

Hänsel and Gretel. The inseparables of the famous fairy story found among the tales of the brothers Grimm. Hänsel was a woodcutter's son and the little girl Gretel was found in the forest. When starvation threatened the household the woodcutter, at his wife's behest, abandoned the children in the forest. Hänsel laid a trail by which they found their way home, but they were subsequently again cast adrift.

After several escapes from the machinations of a wicked fairy, Hänsel was at last transformed into a fawn and taken with Gretel to the king's castle, where Hänsel was restored to human form and enabled to marry Gretel. The story forms the basis of Humperdinck's opera (1893) of this name.

Hansom. A light two-wheeled cab, very popular in London before the introduction of taxicabs early in the 20th century. It was invented in 1834 by J. Aloysius Hansom (1803-1882), the architect of Birmingham Town Hall. The original vehicle had two very large wheels with sunk axle trees and a seat for the driver beside the passenger. The size of the wheels was subsequently reduced and the driver placed in a DICKEY at the rear.

Happy, Bomb Happy. A World War II expression to describe one in a state of near hysteria induced by bombing, which often took the form of wild elation of the spirits.

Happy as a clam. See CLAM.

Happy as Larry. Very happy. An Australian expression. It is suggested that the original Larry may have been Larry Foley (1847-1917), the noted boxer.

Happy dispatch. See HARA-KIRI.

A happy expression. A well-turned phrase; one especially apt.

Happy Family. In travelling menageries, etc., the name given to an assortment of animals living together peaceably. The phrase is now more usually associated with the children's card game.

Happy-go-lucky. Thoughtless, indifferent, carefree.

Happy hunting ground. The North American Indians' HEAVEN. Figuratively, where one finds happy leisure occupation.

Happy is the country that has no history. The old proverb implies that such a nation avoids the wars, rebellions, etc., that form so much of human history. Gibbon in The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire (ch. iii) says:

History, which is, indeed, little more than the register of the crimes, follies, and misfortunes of mankind.

Hapsburg. See HABSBERG.

Hara-Kiri (Jap. Hara, the belly; kiri, to cut). A method of suicide by disembowelling practised by Japanese military and governmental officials, daimios, etc., when in serious disgrace, or when their honour was seriously impugned. Hara-kiri or Happy-Dispatch was practised from mediæval times but ceased to be obligatory in 1868. The act was performed with due ceremony.

Hard, Hard and fast. Strict, unalterable, fixed. A "hard and fast rule" is one that must be rigidly kept. Originally a nautical phrase, used of a ship run aground.

Hard-bitten. Tough, doggedly stubborn, unyielding. Probably derived from "hard-bitten", a term used of horses, hard-mouthed and difficult to control.

Hard-boiled. One who is toughened by experience, a person with no illusions or sentimentalities.

Hard by. In close proximity to. Hard here means close, pressed close together.

Hard cash. Money; especially actual currency as opposed to cheques or promises—"down on the nail" (see ON THE NAIL under NAIL); formerly coin as distinguished from banknotes.

Hard currency. Now usually refers to currency of a country which is hard to obtain by another country having an adverse balance of payments with it. The term has also been used to mean metallic money (see HARDS AND SOFTS) and to mean currency which is stable and unlikely to depreciate suddenly or change its value.

Hard-headed. Shrewd, intelligent, and businesslike. Not easily bamboozled.

Hard hit. Badly affected, especially by monetary losses.

Hard-hearted. Unfeeling, callous, pitiless.

Hard of hearing. Somewhat deaf.

Hard labour. A punishment of enforced labour additional to that of imprisonment, introduced by statute in 1706. For long it consisted of working the treadmill, stone-breaking, oakum picking, etc. Hard labour was abolished by the Criminal Justice Act of 1948.

Hard lines. A hard lot, hard luck. Lines here means one's lot or portion marked off as if by a line, "one's lot in life", as, "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage." (Ps. xvi. 6).

Hard-shell Baptists. Extreme Calvinistic Baptists in the Southern U.S.A. who opposed all missionary activities and benevolent schemes. Also known as Anti-Mission Baptists. Hard-shell here is the colloquial American term meaning rigid, uncompromising, narrowly orthodox.

Hard tack. Ship's biscuit; coarse, hard bread.

Hard up. Short of money. Originally a nautical phrase; when a vessel was forced by stress of weather to turn away from the wind the helm was put hard up to windward to alter course. So, when a man is "hard up" he has to weather the storm as best he may.

To go hard with. To fare ill with; to result in danger, hardship, etc.

Hards and Softs. In the U.S.A. in the 19th century the advocates of "Hard" and "Soft" money policies; the former meaning metallic currency with emphasis on gold and silver and the latter, paper money.

Hardy. Brave or daring, hence the phrase hardi comme un lion. Among those surnamed "The Hardy" are:

William Douglas, defender of Berwick (d. 1298).

Philip III of France (1245, 1270-85).

Philip II, Duke of Burgundy (1342, 1363-1404).

Kiss me, Hardy. These famous words, often used facetiously, if somewhat irreverently, were uttered by the dying Lord Nelson when taking leave of his Flag-Captain, Thomas Masterman Hardy, in the moment of victory. Hardy knelt down and kissed his cheek. They were preceded by the request, "Take care of poor Lady Hamilton."

"You revolt me," said Lypiatt.

"Not mortually, I 'ope?" Coleman turned with solicitude to his neighbour; then shook his head. "Mortually I fear. Kiss me 'Ardy, and I die happy." He hlew a kiss into the air.

ALDOUS HUXLEY: Antic Hay, ch. iv.

Hare. Burke and Hare. See BURKE.

Hare. It is unlucky for a hare to cross your path, because witches were said to transform themselves into hares.

Geo.: A witch is a kind of hare.

Scath.: And marks the weather
As the hare doth.

BEN JOHNSON: Sad Shepherd, II, iii.

The superstitious is fond in observation, servile in feare . . . This man dares not stirre forth till his breast be crossed, and his face sprinkled: if hut an hare crosse him the way, he returnes.

BP. HALL:

Characters of Virtues and Vices (1608).

According to mediæval "science", the hare was a melancholy animal, and ate wild succory in the hope of curing itself; its flesh was supposed to generate melancholy in any who partook of it.

Fal.: 'Sblood, I am so melancholy as a gih cat, or a lugged bear.

Prince: Or an old lion, or a lover's lute.

Fal.: Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe.

Prince: What sayest thou to a hare, or the melancholy of Moor-ditch?

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, I, ii.

Another superstition was that hares are sexless, or that they change their sex annually.

Snakes that cast your coats for new,
Camelions, that alter hue,
Hares that yearly sexes change.

FLETCHER: Faithful Shepherdess, III, i.

Among the Hindus the hare is sacred to the MOON, because, as they affirm, the hare is distinctly visible in the full disk.

First catch your hare. See UNDER CATCH.

Hare and Hounds. The name given to a form of cross-country running when one or two runners act as hares and set off in advance scattering a trail of paper; the remainder, the hounds, duly set off in pursuit. It is also a fairly common public-house sign.

"Well, my little fellows," began the Doctor . . . "what makes you so late?"

"Please sir, we've been out Big-side Hare-and-hounds, and lost our way."

THOMAS HUGHES:

Tom Bratten's Schooldays, I, vii.

The Hare and the Tortoise. An allusion to the well-known fable of the race between them, which was won by the tortoise; the moral being, "Slow and steady wins the race."

Mad as a March Hare. Hares are unusually shy and wild in March, which is their rutting season.

"The March Hare will be much the more interesting, and perhaps, as this is May, it won't be raving mad—at least not so mad as it was in March."

LEWIS CARROLL: Alice in Wonderland, ch. vi.

Erasmus in his Aphorisms says "Mad as a marsh hare", and adds, "Hares are wilder in marshes from the absence of hedges and cover."

To hold with the hare and run with the hounds, or To run with the hare and hunt with the hounds. To play a double game, to try to keep in with both sides.

To kiss the hare's foot. To be late for anything, to be a DAY AFTER THE FAIR. The hare has gone by and left its footprint for you to salute. A similar phrase is To kiss the post.

To start a hare. To introduce or raise an irrelevant issue in an argument or discussion. To start a hare in the literal sense is to rouse a hare from its form.

Hare-brained. Giddy, foolhardy, MAD AS A MARCH HARE (see above).

Let's leave this town for they are hair-brained slaves.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. I, I, ii.

Harefoot. The surname given to Harold son of Canute and Ælfgifu of Northampton, King of England, 1035-1040.

Hare-lip. A cleft lip; so called from its resemblance to the upper lip of a hare.

It was fabled to be caused at birth by an ELF or malicious FAIRY.

This is the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet. He begins at curfew, and walks till the first cock. He . . . squints the eye and makes the hare-lip.

SHAKESPEARE: King Lear, III, iv.

Hare-stone. Another form of HOAR-STONE.

Harikiri. See HARA-KIRI.

Hark back, To. To return to the subject. A call to dogs in fox-hunting, when they have overrun the scent, "Hark, dogs, come back"; so "hark for'ards!", "Hark away!" etc.

Harleian (har lē' an). Robert Harley, Earl of Oxford (1661-1724), and his son Edward, the second earl (1689-1741), were great collectors of manuscripts, scarce tracts, etc. The widow of the second earl sold his prints and printed books to Thomas Osborne, the Gray's Inn bookseller, for £13,000 (considerably less than the cost of their binding alone) in 1742, and in 1753 the manuscript books, charters and rolls were purchased at the bargain price of £10,000 for the BRITISH MUSEUM, where the Harleian MSS. are among its most valuable literary and historical possessions. The Harleian Miscellany (10 vols.; first published 1744-1746 in 8 vols.) contains reprints of nearly 700 tracts, etc., mostly of the 16th and 17th centuries. Since 1870 the Harleian Society has published numerous volumes of Registers, Herald's Visitations, and Pedigrees.

Harlem. The main Negro district of New York City, so named by the original Dutch settlers after the town of Haarlem in the Netherlands.

Harlequin (har' le kwīn). In British PANTOMIME, a mischievous fellow supposed to be invisible to all eyes but those of his faithful COLUMBINE. His function is to dance through the world and frustrate all the knavish tricks of the Clown, who is supposed to be in love with Columbine. He wears a tight-fitting spangled or parti-coloured dress and is usually masked. He derives from Arlecchino, a stock character of Italian comedy (like PANTALON and SCARAMOUCH), whose name was in origin probably that of a sprite or HOB-Goblin. One of the demons in Dante is named "Alichino", and another devil of mediæval demonology was "Hennequin".

What Momus was of old to Jove
The same a Harlequin is now,
The former was buffoon above,
The latter is a Punch below.

SWIFT: The Puppet Show.

The prince of Harlequins was John Rich (1682-1761).

Harlequin. So the Emperor Charles V or Charles Quint (1500-1558) was called by Francis I of France.

Harley Street. A street in Marylebone, London, which is popularly regarded as the necessary place of residence for fashionable medical specialists. Wimpole Street is somewhat similarly esteemed.

Harm. Harm set, harm get. Those who lay traps for others get caught themselves. HAMAN (see Esther, vii, 10) was hanged on his own gallows. Our Lord says, "They that take the sword shall perish with the sword." (Matt. xxvi, 52).

Harmonia. Harmonia's Necklace. An unlucky possession, something that brings evil to all who possess it. Harmonia was the daughter of MARS and VENUS and she received such a necklace on her marriage to King CADMUS. VULCAN, to avenge the infidelity of her mother, also made the bride a present of a robe dyed in all sorts of crimes which infused wickedness and impiety into all her offspring. Cp. NESSUS. Both Harmonia and Cadmus, having suffered many misfortunes, were changed into serpents.

MEDEA, in a fit of jealousy, likewise sent Creusa a wedding robe, which burnt her to death. Cp. FATAL GIFTS.

Harmonious Blacksmith, The. The name given, after his death, to a well-known air by Handel. An ingenious but completely baseless fabrication ascribed its origin to the hammering at his forge of a blacksmith, William Powell (d. 1780), and the ringing of his hammer set Handel to work on this air.

Harmonists. A sect founded in Württemberg by George and Frederick Rapp. They emigrated to western Pennsylvania in 1803 and moved to Indiana, founding New Harmony in 1815. This was sold to Robert Owen in 1824 and they returned to Pennsylvania. They looked forward to the second Advent, practised strict economy and self-denial, amassed wealth and favoured celibacy.

Harness. Out of harness. Not in practice, retired. A horse out of harness is one not at work.

To die in harness. To continue in one's work or occupation till death. The allusion is to a horse working and dying in harness, or to soldiers in armour or harness.

At least we'll die with harness on our back.
SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth. V, v.

Haro (hã' rō). Clameur de haro. To cry out haro to anyone (haro being in O.Fr. an exclamation or call for help). This cry is an ancient practice in the Channel Islands, usually as a form of protest against trespass, which must then cease until the matter is settled in court. It dates from the time of the first Duke of Normandy. The cry, Haro, to my aid, my prince, wrong is being done to me, was raised in the Guernsey PARLIAMENT in January 1966 by a government employee seeking redress.

Haroun al Raschid (há roon' ál rāsh' id). CALIPH of Baghdad. See ABASSIDES.

Harp. The cognizance of IRELAND. Traditionally, one of the early Irish kings was named David, and this king took the harp of the Psalmist as his badge. King John, to distinguish his Irish coins from the English, had them marked with a triangle, either in allusion to St. PATRICK's explanation of the TRINITY, or to signify that he was king of England, Ireland, and France. The harp may have originated from this. Henry VIII was the first to adopt it as the Irish device, and James I to place it in the third quarter of the royal achievement of Great Britain.

To harp forever on the same string. To reiterate, to return continually to one point of argument.

Harpocrates (har pok' rá tēz). The Greek form of the Egyptian Harpa-Khruti (HORUS the child). Represented as a naked boy sucking his finger, the Greeks made him the god of silence and secrecy.

I assured my mistress she might make herself perfectly easy on that score for I was the Harpocrates of trusty valets.

A. R. LESAGE: Gil Blas, IV, ii.

Harp. In classical mythology, a winged monster with the head and breasts of a woman, very fierce, starved-looking and loathsome, living in an atmosphere of filth and stench and contaminating everything it came near. HOMER mentions but one harpy, Hesiod gives two and later writers three. Their names, Aello (storm), Celeno (blackness) and Ocypete (rapid), indicate their early association with whirlwinds and storms.

A regular harpy. A merciless sponger; one who wants to appropriate everything.

I will . . . do you any embassy . . . rather than hold three words conference with this harpy.

SHAKESPEARE: Much Ado about Nothing, II, i.

Harriet Lane. A merchant navy term for canned meat, especially Australian, because of its chopped-up character. One Harriet Lane was purported to have been thus disposed of. It is the merchant service equivalent of FANNY ADAMS.

Harringtons. FARTHINGs. More correctly, Harringtons, so called from John, 1st

Baron Harrington (d. 1613), to whom James I granted a patent (1613) for making these coins of brass. The patent was stopped in 1643, having finally passed to Lord Maltravers.

I will not bate a Harrington of the sume.
BEN JOHNSON: The Devil is an Ass, II, i.

Harry. Bell Harry. The splendid late-15th century central tower of Canterbury Cathedral is so called after the one bell called "Harry" contained therein. It replaced the square Norman tower of Lanfranc's day known as the Angel Tower.

Great Harry. See under GREAT.

Old Harry. A familiar name for the DEVIL; probably from the personal name (cp. OLD NICK under NICK), but perhaps with some allusion to the word harry, meaning to plunder, harass, lay waste, from which comes the old harrow, as in the title of the 13th-century MIRACLE-PLAY, The Harrowing of Hell.

Pitch Greek to Old Harry, and stick to conundrums!!—R. H. BARHAM: Ingoldsby Legends, II (The Merchant of Venice).

By the Lord Harry. A mild imprecation, Lord Harry here being the equivalent of the DEVIL.

By the Lord Harry, he says true.
CONGREVE: Old Bachelor, II, ii.

To play Old Harry. To play the devil; to ruin, or seriously damage.

Hart. In Christian art, the emblem of solitude and purity of life. It was the attribute of St. HUBERT, St. JULIAN, and St. Eustace. It was also the type of piety and religious aspiration (Ps. xlii, 1). Cp. HIND.

Hart of grease. A hunter's phrase for a fat venison; a stag full of the pasture, called by Jaques in SHAKESPEARE's As You Like It (II, i) "a fat and greasy citizen".

Hart Royal. A male red deer, when the crown of the antler has made its appearance, and the creature has been hunted by a king.

The White Hart, or Hind, with a golden chain in PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGNS, is the badge of Richard II, which was worn by his adherents. It was adopted by his mother, Joan of Kent, whose cognizance it was.

Harum Scarum. Giddy, HARE-BRAINED; or a person so constituted. From the old hare, to harass, and scare; perhaps with the additional allusion to the madness of a March hare (see under HARE).

Haruspex (pl. haruspices). Officials among the Etruscans who interpreted the will of the gods by inspecting the entrails of animals offered in sacrifice (O.Lat.

haruga, a victim; specio, I inspect). Cato said, "I wonder how one haruspex can keep from laughing when he sees another." Cp. AUSPICES.

Harvard University. The senior university in the U.S.A., situated at Cambridge, Mass., and founded in 1636 by the general court of the colony in Massachusetts Bay. In 1638 it was named after John Harvard (1607-1638), who left to it his library and half his estate.

Harvest Home. In former days the bringing in of the last load of the corn of the harvest with the harvesters singing the Harvest Home song; or the supper provided by the farmer followed by a general jollification. It is also a common PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGN.

Harvest Moon. The full moon nearest the autumnal equinox, which rises for several days at about the same time (nearly sunset) giving a longer proportion of moonlit evenings than usual.

Hash. A mess, a muddle; as, "a pretty hash he made of it". An allusion to the dish of re-cooked mixed-up meat and potatoes, etc.

I'll soon settle his hash for him. I will soon deal with him; ruin his schemes; "cook his goose"; "put my finger in his pie" (see FINGER); "make mincemeat of him" (see MINCE). Our slang is full of such phrases. See COOKING.

About earls as goes mad in their castles
And females what settles their hash.

G. R. SIMS: The Dragonet Ballads.

Hasideans (Heb. Chasidim, the pious).

The forerunners of the PHARISEES. A religious party in Palestine who, in the 2nd century B.C., sought to maintain strict adherence to the Hebrew law and Mosaism against Greek influences.

Hasmonæan. The family afterwards known as the MACCABEES.

Hassan-ben-Sabah, or Hassan-ibn-Sabah. The OLD MAN OF THE MOUNTAIN (see under MOUNTAIN), founder of the sect of the ASSASSINS.

Hat. According to the story, Lord Kingsale is supposed to have acquired the right of wearing his hat in the royal presence when King John and Philip II of France agreed to settle a dispute respecting the duchy of Normandy by single combat. John de Courcy, conqueror of ULSTER and founder of the Kingsale family, was the English champion and no sooner appeared than the French champion put spurs to his horse and fled. The King asked the EARL what reward he would like, and he replied, "Titles and lands I want not, of these I have enough; but in remembrance of this day I beg the boon, for myself and successors, to remain covered in the presence of your highness and all future sovereigns of the realm."

Motley informs us that all the Spanish grandees had the privilege of being covered in the presence of the reigning monarch; and to this day, in England, any peer of the realm has the right to sit in a court of justice with his hat on.

In the HOUSE OF COMMONS, whilst a division is proceeding, a member may speak on a point of order arising out of or during a division, but if he does so he must speak sitting and with his head covered.

It was a point of principle with the early QUAKERS not to remove the hat, the usual mark of respect, even in the presence of royalty. The story goes that William Penn once entered the presence of Charles II and kept his hat on; whereupon Charles removed his own hat. "Friend Charles," said Penn, "Why dost thou uncover thy head?" "Friend Penn," answered Charles with a smile, "it is the custom here that only one person wears his hat in the King's presence."

A cockle hat. See COCKLE.

A white hat. A white hat used to be emblematical of RADICAL proclivities, because the radical, Orator Hunt (1773-1835), wore one during the Wellington administration.

Hats and Caps. In the 18th century two political factions in the Swedish Rikstag. The Hats (Hattar) favoured war with Russia to regain the provinces (Livonia, Esthonia, Ingria and part of Karelia) surrendered by the Peace of Nystad (1721). The Caps (Mussorna) were the peace party, who were nicknamed the "Nightcaps" by their opponents because they were averse to action and war. The Hats were so named from their three-cornered officer's hats and controlled Sweden until the 1760s.

As black as your hat. Quite black, black being a common colour for hats.

At the drop of a hat. On a signal, immediately, without delay; from the American frontier practice of dropping a hat as a signal for a fight to begin, usually the only formality observed. Races are sometimes started by the downward sweep of a hat.

The man's [Lord Radcliffe's] personal charm, clarity of mind, and unruffled equanimity certainly did an enormous amount to save the public from being put into blinkers during the Second World War, when D notices were invoked at the drop of a brasshat.—The Times, 15 June 1967.

Hatches

Knocked into a cocked hat. See COCKED. Never wear a brown hat in Friesland. WHEN AT ROME DO AS ROME DOES (see under ROME). In Friesland the inhabitants used to cover the head with a knitted cap, a high silk skull-cap, then a metal turban, and over all a huge flaunting bonnet. A traveller once passed through the province with a common brown WIDE-AWAKE, and was hustled, jeered at, and pelted by the boys, because of his unusual attire.

Old hat. Outworn or obsolete. The expression probably arises from the fact that hats tend to date long before they are worn out.

To pass round the hat. To gather subscriptions into a hat.

To eat one's hat. Indicative of strong emphasis. "I'd eat my hat first," "I'd be hanged first."

To hang up one's hat in a house. To make oneself at home; to become one of the family.

To keep something under one's hat. To keep something to oneself, not to divulge it; to keep it under cover.

To take off one's hat to someone. Figuratively, to express admiration for a person's achievements, etc. From the custom of removing the hat as a mark of deference.

To throw one's hat into the ring. To enter a contest or to become a candidate for office. From the custom of throwing one's hat into the ring as the sign of accepting a pugilist's challenge.

Where did you get that hat? A catchphrase of the early 1890s originating from J. J. Sullivan's comic song of 1888, with the refrain:

Where did you get that hat?
Where did you get that tile?
Isn't it a nobby one
And just the proper style?

You are only fit to wear a steeple-crowned hat. To be burnt as a heretic. The victims of the INQUISITION were always decorated with such headgear.

You are talking through your hat. You are talking nonsense; what you say is rubbish; you don't know what you are talking about.

Hat-trick. In CRICKET, the taking of three wickets with three successive balls. A bowler who did this used to be entitled to a new hat at the expense of the club. The phrase is now also applied to a variety of thrice repeated successes or achievements.

Hatches. Batten down the hatches. Figuratively, to make oneself secure, to shut out the weather, etc., as the hatches of a ship are secured for sea by battens and wedges.

Put on the hatches. Figuratively, shut the door (O.E. haec, a gate).

Under hatches. Down in the world, depressed; under arrest; dead. The hatches of a ship are the coverings over the hatchways and to be under hatches is to be below deck—with various implications.

For, though his body's under hatches,
His soul is gone aloft.

DIBDIN: Tom Bowling.

These lines were also inscribed on Dibdin's tombstone at St. Martin-in-the-Fields.

Hatchet. To bury the hatchet. See BURY.

To throw the hatchet. To exaggerate heavily, to tell falsehoods. In allusion to an ancient game where hatchets were thrown at a mark. Cp. TO DRAW THE LONGBOW under BOW.

Hatter. In Australia, a lone dweller in the OUTBACK. Possibly from association with the phrase MAD AS A HATTER (See under MAD).

Hatto. A 10th-century archbishop of Mainz, a noted statesman and counsellor of Otto the Great, who, according to some, was noted for his oppression of the poor. In time of famine, that there might be more for the rich, he was legendarily supposed to have assembled the poor in a barn and burnt them to death, saying: "They are like mice, only good to devour the corn." Presently an army of mice came against the archbishop, who removed to a tower on the Rhine to escape the plague, but the mice followed in their thousands and devoured him. The tower is still called the MOUSE TOWER. Southey has a ballad on Bishop Hatto.

Many similar legends, or versions of the same legend, are told of the mediæval Rhineland:

Count Graaf raised a tower in the midst of the Rhine, and if any boat attempted to avoid payment of toll, the warders shot the crew with crossbows. In a famine year the count profiteered greatly by cornering wheat, but the tower was invaded by hungry rats who worried the old baron to death and then devoured him.

Widerolf, Bishop of Strassburg (in 997), was devoured by mice because he suppressed the convent of Seltzen, on the Rhine.

Bishop Adolf of Cologne was devoured by mice or rats in 1112.

Freiherr von Güttingen collected the poor in a great barn and burnt them to death. He was pursued to his castle of Güttingen by rats and mice who ate him clean to the bones. His castle then sank to the bottom of the lake "where it may still be seen". Cp. PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN.

Hausmannization. The demolition of buildings, whole districts, etc., and the construction on the site of new streets and cities; after Baron Haussmann (1809–1891) who remodelled PARIS between 1835 and 1870. By 1868 he had saddled Paris with a debt of £34 million and was dismissed from his office of Prefect of the Seine in 1870.

Hautville Coit. See HACKELL'S COIT.

Havelock. A white cloth covering for a soldier's cap with a flap hanging down, worn in hot climates to protect the back of the neck from the sun. So called after General Sir Henry Havelock (1795–1857), who effected the first relief of Lucknow (1857) during the INDIAN MUTINY.

Havelock the Dane (Häv' lok). A hero of mediæval romance, the orphan son of Birkabegn, King of Denmark. He was cast adrift on the sea through the treachery of his guardians and the raft bore him to the Lincolnshire coast. He was rescued by a fisherman called Grim and brought up as his son. He eventually became King of Denmark and part of England; Grim was suitably rewarded and with the money built Grim's town or Grimsby.

Haver-cakes. Oaten cakes (Icel. hafr. oats).

Haversack. Originally a bag to carry oats in (see HAYER-CAKES). Hence any small canvas bag for rations, etc., slung over the shoulder.

Havock. An old military command to massacre without quarter. This cry was forbidden in the ninth year of Richard II on pain of death. In a 14th-century tract entitled The Office of the Constable and Mareschall in the Tyme of Werre (contained in the Black Book of the Admiralty), one of the chapters is, "The peyne of hym that crieth havock, and of them that followeth him"—Item si quis inventus fuerit qui clamorem inceperit qui vocatur havok.

Cry Havoc, and let slip the dogs of war,
SHAKESPEARE: Julius Cæsar, III, i.

Hawcubites. Street bullies in the reign of Queen Anne who molested and ill-treated the old watermen, women and children who chanced to be in the streets after sunset. The succession of these London pests after the RESTORATION was: The Muns, the TITYRE TUS, the Hectors, the SCOWERERS, the Nickers, then the Hawcubites (1711–1714), and worst of all the MOHOCKS. The name is probably a combination of Mohawk and JACOBITE. Cp. MODS AND ROCKERS.

From Mohock and from Hawcubite,
Good Lord deliver me,
Who wander through the streets at nighte,
Committing cruelty.
They slash our sons with bloody knives,
And on our daughters fall:
And, if they murder not our wives,
We have good luck withal.

Haw-haw, Lord. In World War II, the name given (originally by a FLEET STREET journalist in allusion to his accent) to William Joyce, who broadcast anti-British propaganda in English from Germany. He was hanged for treason in 1946.

Hawk. Falconry as a sport for kings and gentry had a tremendous vogue and it retained its popularity until the advent of the shot-gun. The various hawks employed in England mostly came from Norway and the chief market was the fair of St. Botolph, Boston, Lincs. Their maintenance was very expensive. In recent times there has been a serious revival of the sport.

(1) Different parts of a hawk:

Arms. The legs from the thigh to the foot.
Beak. The upper and crooked part of the bill.
Beams. The long feathers of the wings.
Clap. The nether part of the bill.
Feathers summed and unsummed. Feathers full or not full grown.
Flags. The next to the principals.
Glu. The slimy substance in the pannel.
Gorge. The crop or crop.
Hoglurs. The spots on the feathers.
Mails. The breast feathers.
Nares. The two little holes on the top of the beak.
Pannel. The pipe next to the fundament.
Pendant feathers. Those behind the toes.
Petty singles. The toes.
Pounces. The claws.
Principal feathers. The two longest.
Sails. The wings.
Sear or sere. The yellow part under the eyes.
Train. The tail.

(2) Different sorts of hawk:

Gerfalcon. A Gerfalcon (esp. the Tercel, or male) is for a king.
Falcon or Tercel gentle. For a prince.
Falcon of the rock. For a duke.
Falcon peregrine. For an earl.
Bastard hawk. For a baron.
Sacre and sacret. For a knight.
Lanner and Lanneret. For a squire.
Merlin. For a lady.
Hobby. For a young man.
Goshawk. For a yeoman.
Tercel. For a poor man.
Sparrow-hawk. For a priest.
Musket. For a holy-water clerk.
Kestrel. For a naive or servant.

This somewhat fanciful list of hawks proper to the various individuals is taken from the Boke of St. Albans (1486) by "Dame Juliana Berners".

The "Sore-hawk" is a hawk of the first year; so called from the French, sor or saure, brownish-yellow.

(3) The dress of a hawk:

Bewits. The leathers with the hawk-bells, buttoned to the bird's legs.

Creanse. A packthread or thin twine fastened to the leash in disciplining a hawk.

Hood. A cover for the head, to keep the hawk in the dark. A rufster hood is a wide one, open behind. To unstrike the hood is to draw the strings so that the hood may be in readiness to be pulled off.

Jesses. The little straps by which the leash is fastened to the legs.

Leash. The leather thong for holding the hawk.

(4) Terms used in falconry:

Casting. Something given to a hawk to cleanse her gorge.

Cawking. Treading.

Cowering. When young hawks, in obedience to their elders, quiver and shake their wings.

Crabbing. Fighting with each other when they stand too near.

Hack. The place where a hawk's meat is laid.

Imping. Repairing a hawk's wing by engraving a new feather.

Inke or ink. The breast and neck of a bird that a hawk preys on.

Intermetwing. The time of changing the coat.

Lure. A figure of a fowl made of leather and feathers.

Make. An old staunch hawk that sets an example to young ones.

Manitling. Stretching first one wing then the other over the legs.

Mew. The place where hawks sit when moulting.

Muting. The dung of hawks.

Pelf or pill. What a hawk leaves of her prey.

Pelt. The dead body of a fowl killed by a hawk.

Perch. The resting-place of a hawk when off the falconer's wrist.

Plumage. Small feathers given to a hawk to make her cast.

Quarry. The fowl or game that a hawk flies at.

Rangle. Gravel given to a hawk to bring down her stomach.

Sharp set. Hungry.

Tiring. Giving a hawk a leg or wing of a fowl to pull at.

The peregrine when full grown is called a blue-hawk.

I know a hawk from a handsaw (Hamlet, II, ii). Handsaw is probably a corruption of hernshaw (a young heron). I know a hawk from a heron, the bird of prey from the game flown at; I know one thing from another.

Neither hawk nor buzzard. Of doubtful social position—too good for the kitchen, and not good enough for the family; not hawks to be fondled and petted as the "tasselled gentlemen" of the days of falconry, nor yet buzzards—a dull kind of falcon synonymous with dunce or plebeian. Cp. NEITHER FISH, FLESH, NOR GOOD RED HERRING under HERRING.

Hawker's News. "PIPER'S NEWS", news known to all the world. Un secret de polichinelle.

Hawkeye. An inhabitant of the state of Iowa. See also LEATHERSTOCKING NOVELS.

Hawse-hole. He has crept through the hawse-hole, or hawse-pipe, or He has come in at the hawse-hole, or hawse-pipe. A naval phrase meaning entered the service in the lowest grade; he has risen from the ranks. The hawse-hole of a ship is the hole in the bows through which the anchor cable runs.

Hawthorn. The symbol of "Good Hope" in the language of flowers because it shows that winter is over and spring at hand. The Athenian girls used to crown themselves with hawthorn flowers at weddings, and the marriage-torch was made of hawthorn. The Romans considered it a charm against sorcery, and placed leaves of it on the cradles of newborn infants.

The hawthorn was chosen by Henry VII as his device, because Richard III's crown was recovered from a hawthorn bush at Bosworth.

Hay. Antic Hay. The hay was an old English country dance (O.E. haga, hedge, bush), somewhat of the nature of a reel, with winding movements around other dancers or bushes, etc., when danced in the open.

My men, like satyrs grazing on the lawns,
Shall with their goat-feet dance an antic hay.
MARLOWE: Edward II, I, i.

Aldous Huxley has a novel of this title.

Hay, Hagh, or Haugh (all pron. ha). An enclosed estate; rich pasture-land, especially a royal park; as Bilhagh (Billa-haugh), Beskwood- or Bestwood-hay, Lindeby-hay, Welley-hay or Wel-hay.

Hay. In the following phrases hay (O.E. hiegh) is the cut, dried, grass used as fodder.

Between hay and grass. Too late for one and too soon for the other.

Neither hay nor grass. That awkward stage when a youth is neither boy nor man.

To look for a needle in a bottle of hay, or in a haystack. See under BOTTLE.

To make hay of something. To disorganize and throw things into confusion and disorder. Before the days of the hay-baler, it was tossed around with a pitchfork before being gathered in.

To make hay while the sun shines. To strike while the iron is hot; to take advantage of the opportunity. Cp. TAKE TIME BY THE FORELOCK under TIME.

Haybote. The right of a tenant of an estate to take wood for repairing hedges and fences. Other estovers are HOUSEBOTE and PLOUGHBOTE.

Hayseed. An American term for a rustic, a countryman.

Haysugge. See ISAAC.

Hayward. A manorial and village officer whose duty it was to look after the hedges and boundaries and to impound straying livestock. He sometimes regulated the use of the common.

Other haue an horne and be haywarde and ligger oute a nyghtes
And kepe my corn in my croft fro pykers and theeves.

Piers Plowman: (Text C), vi, 16.

Haywire. To go haywire is to run riot, to behave in an uncontrolled manner. This American phrase probably arises from the difficulty of handling the coils of wire used for binding bundles of hay, which easily became entangled and unmanageable if handled unskillfully.

Hazazel. The scapegoat. See AZAZEL.

Haze. To bully, to punish by hard work. A nautical expression.

Every shifting of the studding-sails was only to "haze" the crew.

R. H. DANA:

Two Years Before the Mast (1840), ch. viii.

In the U.S.A., to subject to horseplay or punishment in school or fraternity initiations.

He Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Head. Cattle are counted by the head; labourers by hands, as "How many hands do you employ?"; soldiers once by their arms, as "So many rifles, bayonets, etc."; guests at dinner by the cover, "Covers for ten", etc.

People are sometimes counted by heads as when a caterer undertakes to provide for a party at so much "a head".

Better be the head of an ass than the tail of a horse. Better be foremost amongst commoners than the lowest of the aristocracy; Milton says "Better to reign in hell than serve in Heav'n" (Paradise Lost, I, 263).

Get your head shaved. You are a dotard. Go and get your head shaved like other lunatics. See BATH.

Thou thinkst that monarchs never can act ill,
Get thy head shaved, poor fool, or think so still.

PETER PINDAR: Ode upon Ode.

Head and shoulders. A phrase of sundry shades of meaning. Thus "head and shoulders taller" means considerably taller; "to turn one out head and shoulders" means to drive one out forcibly.

Heads I win, tails you lose. Descriptive of a one-sided arrangement. See HEADS OR TAILS below.

Heads or tails. Guess whether the coin spun up will come down with head-side uppermost or not. The word "tail" includes all the various devices appearing on the reverse of a coin. The Romans said "Heads or ships".

He has a head on his shoulders. He is a clever fellow, he has got brains.

He has quite lost his head. He is so excited and confused that he does not know the right thing to do.

He has quite turned her head. She is so infatuated with him that she is unable to take a reasonable view of the situation.

I can make neither head nor tail of it. I cannot understand it at all. I can make nothing of it.

Off one's head. Deranged; delirious; extremely excited.

Over head and ears. See under EAR.

To bite a person's head off. A scathing or irritable answer to a mild remark or request.

To bury one's head in the sand. To shirk facing realities. Ostriches were popularly reputed to hide their head in the sand when pursued, and by thus not seeing their enemy believing that they themselves were not seen.

To come to a head. To reach a crisis. The allusion is to the ripening, or coming to a head of a boil, ulcer, etc.

To eat its head off. See under EAT.

To give one his head. To allow him complete freedom, let him go just as he pleases. A phrase from horse management.

To head off. To intercept; get ahead of and force to turn back.

To hit the nail on the head. To guess aright; to arrive at the exact conclusion. The allusion is obvious. The French say, Vous avez frappé au but (You have hit the mark); the Italians, Avete dato in brocca (You have hit the pitcher), alluding to a game where a pitcher took the place of AUNT SALLY. The Lat. rem acu tetigisti (You have touched the thing with a needle), refers to the custom of probing sores.

To keep one's head. To remain calm in an emergency; to keep one's wits about one. Not to lose one's head is another way of saying the same thing.

To keep one's head above water. To avoid insolvency. The derivation is obvious.

Heal

To go to one's head. To be unduly influenced, to become conceited, etc., as a result of success, praise, etc. A figure based on the heady effect of intoxicating drinks.

To make head, or headway. To get on, to struggle effectually against something, as a ship makes headway against a tide or current.

To run one's head against a brick, or stone wall. To make fruitless attempts against insuperable difficulties.

To take it into one's head. To conceive a notion.

To talk a person's head off. To weary a person with so much talking that he is mentally benumbed; to talk incessantly.

Heal. To heal the breach. To effect a reconciliation.

Health. Drinking Healths. This custom, of immemorial antiquity, William of Malmesbury says, took its rise from the death of young Edward the Martyr (978), who was traitorously stabbed in the back while drinking a horn of wine presented by his mother Ælfthryth. (See also GABBARA.)

The Greeks handed the cup to the person toasted and said, "This to thee." Our holding out the wineglass is a relic of this Greek custom.

The Romans in drinking the health of a mistress used to drink a bumper to each letter of her name. Butler (Hudibras, II, i), satirizes this custom in the line, "And spell names over beer-glasses." In Plautus (Stich. V, iv) we read of a man drinking to his mistress with these words: Bene vos, bene nos, bene te, bene me, bene nostram etiam Stephanium (Here's to you, here's to us all, here's to thee, here's to me, here's to our dear—). Martial, Ovid, HORACE, etc. refer to the same custom.

The Saxons were great health-drinkers, and Geoffrey of Monmouth (Historia Britonum, Bk. VI, xii) says that Hengist invited King Vortigern to a banquet to see his new levies. After the banquet, Rowena, Hengist's beautiful daughter, entered with a golden cup full of wine, and curtsying said to him, "Lauerd king wacht heil!" (Lord King, your health). The king then drank and replied, "Drinc heil!" (Here's to you). See WASSAIL.

Heap. Struck all of a heap. Struck with astonishment.

Hear, hear! An exclamation approving what a speaker says. Originally disapproval was marked by humming; those supporting the speaker protested by saying "Hear him", which eventually became "Hear, hear!"

Heart. In Christian art the heart is an attribute of St. TERESA of Avila.

The flaming heart is a symbol of charity, and an attribute of St. Augustine, denoting the fervency of his devotion. The heart of the Saviour is sometimes so represented.

Heart of Midlothian. The old TOL-BOOTH of Edinburgh. This old prison was demolished in 1817.

"Then the tolbooth of Edinburgh is called the Heart of Midlothian?" said I. "So termed and reputed, I assure you."

SCOTT: Heart of Midlothian, ch. i.

Heart of Oak. This famous sea song and naval march is from Garrick's pantomime, Harlequin's Invasion, with music by Dr. Boyce. It was written in 1759, "the year of victories" (Quiberon Bay, Quebec, Minden), hence the allusion to "this wonderful year" in the opening lines.

Come, cheer up my lads! 'tis to glory we steer,
To add something more to this wonderful year.

The Immaculate Heart of Mary. In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, devotion to the heart of Mary is a special form of devotion to Our Lady which developed from the 17th century. In 1947 Pius XII recognized 22 August as the Feast of the Immaculate Heart of Mary.

The Sacred Heart. In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, essentially directed at the Saviour himself. It originated from a vision experienced by a French nun, Marguerite Marie Alacoque (1647-1690). This devotion in France was approved by Clement XIII in 1758 and extended to the whole church in 1856 by Pius IX. The festival is celebrated on the Friday after the Octave of CORPUS CHRISTI. There are various Congregations of the Sacred Heart. Cp. IMMACULATE HEART.

A heart to heart talk. A confidential talk in private; generally one in which good advice is offered, or a warning or reprimand given.

After my own heart. Just what I like; in accordance with my wish.

At heart. At bottom; substantially; in real character.

Be of good heart. Cheer up.

From the bottom of one's heart. Fervently; with absolute sincerity.

His heart is in the right place. He is kind and sympathetic, in spite, perhaps, of appearances.

His heart sank into his boots. In Latin, Cor illi in genua decidit. In French Avoir la peur au ventre. The last two phrases are very expressive: fear makes the knees shake, and it gives one a stomach-ache; but the English phrase suggests that his heart or spirits sank as low as possible short of absolutely deserting him.

His heart was in his mouth. That choky feeling in the throat which arises from fear, conscious guilt, shyness, etc.

In one's heart of heart. In the innermost, most secure recesses of one's heart.

Give me that man

That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core, ay in my heart of heart.

Hamlet, III, ii.

The phrase is often heard of as "heart of hearts", but this is incorrect, as will be seen from SHAKESPEARE'S clear reference to the "heart's core". Cp. also:

Even the very middle of my heart
Is warmed.—Cymbeline, I, vi.

Out of heart. Despondent; without sanguine hope.

Set your heart at rest. Be quite easy about the matter.

Take heart. Be of good courage. At one time moral courage was supposed to reside in the heart, physical courage in the stomach, wisdom in the head, affection in the REINS, melancholy in the BILE, spirit in the blood, etc.

To break one's heart. To waste away or die of disappointment. "Broken-hearted", hopelessly distressed. It is not impossible to die "of a broken heart".

To eat one's heart out. To brood over some trouble to such an extent that one wears oneself out with the worry of it; to suffer from hopeless disappointment in expectations.

To have at heart. To cherish as a great hope or desire; to be earnestly set on.

To learn by heart. By rote, to memorize.

To lose one's heart to. To fall in love with somebody.

To set one's heart upon. To earnestly desire it.

To take heart of grace. To pluck up courage; not to be disheartened or downhearted when all seems to go against one. This expression may be based on the promise, "My grace is sufficient for thee" (II Cor. xii, 9); by this grace St. PAUL says, "When I am weak then am I strong." Take grace into your heart, rely on God's grace for strength.

To take to heart. To feel deeply pained at something which has occurred; to appreciate fully the implications of.

To warm the cockles of one's heart. See under COCKLE.

To wear one's heart upon one's sleeve. To expose one's secret thoughts or intentions to general notice; to show plainly one's feelings. The reference is to the custom of tying your lady's favour to your sleeve, and thus exposing the secret of the heart. Iago says:

For when my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart
In compliment extern, 'tis not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve.

SHAKESPEARE: Othello, I, i.

With all my heart, or With my whole heart and soul. With all the energy and enthusiasm of which I am capable.

With heart and hand. With enthusiastic energy.

Heart-breaker. A flirt. Also a particular kind of curl. A loose ringlet worn over the shoulders, or a curl over the temples.

Heartsease. The Viola tricolor. It has a host of fancy names; as the "Butterfly flower", "Kiss me quick", a "Kiss behind the garden gate", "LOVE-IN-IDLENESS", "Pansy", "Three faces under one hood", the "Variegated Violet", "Herba Trinitatis", etc.

Hearth money. See CHIMNEY MONEY.

Hearth-penny. An old name for PETER'S PENCE, a tax of one penny on every household.

Heat. One course of a race; that part of a race when the competitors are too numerous to run at the same time.

Feign'd Zeal, you saw, set out the speedier pace,
But, the last Heat, Plain Dealing won the Race.

DRYDEN: Albion and Albanus, Epilogue.

A dead heat. When two or more competitors in a race cross the line together.

The heat of the day. The hottest part of the day; that part of the day when the heat is oppressive.

To turn the heat on. To subject to a severe cross-examination, to grill.

Heath Robinson, or Heath Robinsonian, is a phrase commonly applied to complicated, ingenious, and fantastic contraptions of machinery, etc., after W. Heath Robinson (1872-1944). His amusing drawings of such absurdities in Punch and elsewhere were distinctive of their kind.

Heaven (O.E. heofon). The word properly denotes the abode of the Deity and His ANGELS—"heaven is my throne" (Is. lxvi, 1, and Matt. v, 34)—but it is also used in the BIBLE and elsewhere for the air, the upper heights, as "the fowls of heaven", "the dew of heaven", "the clouds of heaven"; "the cities are walled up to heaven" (Deut. i, 28); and a tower whose top should "reach unto heaven" (Gen. xi, 4); the starry firmament, as, "Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven" (Gen. i, 14).

In the PTOLEMAIC SYSTEM the heavens were the successive spheres surrounding the central earth. See also EMPYREAN; PARADISE.

The Seven Heavens (of the Moham-medans).

The first heaven is of pure SILVER, and here the stars, each with its angel warder, are hung out like lamps on golden chains. It is the abode of ADAM and EVE.

The second heaven is of pure GOLD and is the domain of JOHN THE BAPTIST and Jesus.

The third heaven is of PEARL, and is allotted to JOSEPH. Here AZRAEL is stationed, and is forever writing in a large book (the names of the new-born) or blotting names out (those of the newly dead).

The fourth heaven is of white gold, and is Enoch's. Here dwells the ANGEL of Tears, whose height is "500 days' journey", and he sheds ceaseless tears for the sins of man.

The fifth heaven is of silver and is AARON's. Here dwells the Avenging Angel, who presides over elemental fire.

The sixth heaven is composed of ruby and garnet, and is presided over by MOSES. Here dwells the Guardian Angel of heaven and earth, half-snow and half-fire.

The seventh heaven is formed of divine light beyond the power of tongue to describe, and is ruled by ABRAHAM. Each inhabitant is bigger than the whole earth, and has 70,000 heads, each head 70,000 faces, and each face 70,000 mouths, each mouth 70,000 tongues and each tongue speaks 70,000 languages, all for ever employed in chanting the praises of the Most High.

To be in the seventh heaven. Supremely happy. The CABBALISTS maintained that there are seven heavens, each rising above the other, the seventh being the abode of God and the highest class of ANGELS.

Heavy, Heavy man. In theatrical parlance, an actor who plays foil to the hero, such as the King in SHAKESPEARE's Hamlet, or Iago to Othello.

The Heavies. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Hebe (hē' bi). In Greek mythology, daughter of ZEUS and HERA, goddess of youth, and cup-bearer to the gods. She had the power of restoring youth and vigour to gods and men.

Hecate (hek' à ti). In Greek mythology, daughter of the TITAN Perses and of Asteria, and high in favour with ZEUS. Her powers extended over HEAVEN and HELL, the earth and the sea. She came to combine the attributes of SELENE, ARTEMIS, and PERSEPHONE and to be identified with them. She was represented as a triple goddess sometimes with three heads, one of a horse, one of a dog, and one of a boar; sometimes with three bodies standing back to back. As goddess of the lower world she became the goddess of magic, ghosts, and WITCHCRAFT. Her offerings consisted of dogs, honey and black lambs, which were sacrificed to her at cross-roads. SHAKESPEARE refers to the triple character of this goddess:

And we fairies that do run
By the triple Hecate's team.
Midsummer Night's Dream, V, ii.

Hecatomb (hek' à tom, or toom). In ancient Greece, originally the sacrifice of a hundred head of oxen (Gr. hekatombe; hekaton, a hundred, bous, an ox); hence any large sacrifice or large number. Keats speaks of "hecatombs of vows", and Shelley of "hecatombs of broken hearts".

It is said that PYTHAGORAS, who, we know, would never take life, offered up 100 oxen when he discovered that the square of the hypotenuse of a right-angled triangle equals the sum of the squares of the other two sides. See DULCARNON.

Hector. Eldest son of PRIAM, the noblest and most magnanimous of all the Trojan chieftains in Homer's ILIAD. After holding out for ten years, he was slain by ACHILLES, who lashed him to his chariot, and dragged the dead body in triumph thrice round the walls of TROY.

Somewhat curiously his name has come to be applied to a swaggering bully, and "to hector" means to browbeat, bully, bluster.

The Hector of Germany. Joachim II, Elector of Brandenburg (1505, 1535-1571).

You wear Hector's cloak. You are paid in your own coin for trying to deceive another. When Thomas Percy, Earl of Northumberland, was routed in 1569, he hid in the house of Hector Graham of Harlaw, who betrayed him for the reward offered. Fortune never favoured this traitor thereafter, and he eventually died a beggar on the roadside.

Hecuba (hek' ū bà). Second wife of PRIAM and mother of nineteen children, including HECTOR. When TROY was taken she fell to the lot of ULYSSES. She was afterwards metamorphosed into a bitch and finding she could only bark, threw herself into the sea. Her sorrows and misfortunes are featured in numerous Greek tragedies.

Hedge. To hedge, in betting, is to protect oneself against loss by cross bets. It is also to prevaricate.

He [Godolphin] began to think . . . that he had betted too deep on the Revolution and that it was time to hedge.

MACAULAY: History of England, ch. xvii.

The word is used attributively for persons of low origin, vagabonds who plied their trade in the open, under or between the hedges, etc.; hence hedge-priest, a poor or vagabond parson; hedge-writer, a GRUB-STREET author; hedge-marriage, a clandestine union, one performed by a hedge-priest; hedge-born swain, a person of mean or illegitimate birth (as in Shakespeare's Henry VI, Pt. I, IV, i); hedge-school, a school conducted in the open air, as in IRELAND in former days.

To hedge-hop. An airman's term for flying so low as almost to skim the hedge-tops.

Hedonism. The doctrine of Aristippus, that pleasure or happiness is the chief good and end of man (Gr. hedone, pleasure). Cp. EPICURUS.

Heebie-jeebies. An American slang term descriptive of intense nervousness or JITTERS.

Heel. In American slang a heel is a CAD, a despicable fellow with no sense of decency or honour.

The heel of Achilles. See under ACHILLES.

Down, or out at heels. See under DOWN.

To cool, or kick one's heels. To be kept waiting a long time, especially after an appointment has been given one.

To lay by the heels. To render powerless. The allusion is to the stocks, in which vagrants and other petty offenders were confined by the ankles.

To lift up the heel against. To spurn, physically or figuratively; to treat with contumely or contempt; to oppose, to become an enemy.

Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me.—Ps. xli, 9.

To show a clean, or fair pair of heels.

To abscond, run away and get clear.

To take to one's heels. To run off.

Heeled in Western U.S.A. means supplied with all necessities, particularly money and firearms. It derives from the metal spurs or "heels" fitted to the spurs of fighting cocks.

A heeler is the hanger-on of a political boss.

Heel-taps. Bumpers all round and no heel-taps. The bumpers are to be drained to the bottom of the glass. A heel-tap is the small amount left in the glass after the bulk has been drunk.

Heep, Uriah. An abject toady and a malignant hypocrite, making a great play of being "umble", but in the end falling a victim of his own malice (Dickens: David Copperfield).

Hegira (hej' i ra, hē jī' ra) (Arab. hejira, the departure). The flight of MOHAMMED from MECCA to Jathrib, 16 July 622, which soon came to be called MEDINA, the City of the Prophet. The Mohammedan CALENDAR starts from this event.

Heidelberg Man. A type of Prehistoric man found near Heidelberg in 1907, possibly of the genus Pithecanthropus. A chinless jaw was found along with other extinct mammal fossils of the Pleistocene period.

Heimdall (him' dal). In Scandinavian mythology, a god of light who guards the rainbow bridge, BIFROST. He was the son of the nine daughters of ÆGIR, and in many attributes identical with TIW.

Heimskringla (him skring' lá) (Orb of the world). An important collection of sixteen sagas on the lives of the early kings of Norway to 1184, the work of Snorri Sturluson (1179-1241). See EDDA.

Heir-apparent. The actual heir who will succeed if he outlives the present holder of the crown, title, etc., as distinguished from the heir-presumptive, whose succession may be broken by the birth of someone nearer akin, or of a son (who takes priority over daughters) to the holder. Thus the Princess Royal was heir-presumptive to Queen Victoria until the Prince of Wales (the future Edward VII), was born and became heir-apparent. At the death of his predecessor the heir-apparent becomes heir-at-law.

Hel. In early Scandinavian mythology the name of the abode of the dead and of its goddess; later, the home of those not slain in battle; slain warriors entered VALHALLA. Hel and her realm eventually acquired more sinister attributes after the advent of Christianity.

Heldenbuch (hel' den buk) (Ger., Book of Heroes). The name given to a collection of 13th-century German epic poetry.

Helen

The stories are based upon national sagas, DIETRICH OF BERN being a central figure.

Helen. The type of female beauty. In Greek legend, she was the daughter of ZEUS and LEDA, and wife of MENELAUS, King of Sparta. She eloped with PARIS and thus brought about the siege and destruction of TROY.

For which men all the life they here enjoy
Still fight, as for the Helens of their Troy.
FULKE GREVILLE, LORD BROOKE:
Treatise of Humane Learning.

Helen's fire. See CORPOSANT.

Helena (hel' en à). The type of lovely woman, patient and hopeful, strong in feeling, and sustained through trials by her enduring and heroic faith (SHAKESPEARE: All's Well that Ends Well).

St. Helena. Mother of Constantine the Great (c. 250–c. 330). She is represented in royal robes, wearing an imperial crown as an empress, sometimes carrying a model of the HOLY SEPULCHRE, sometimes a large cross (see INVENTION OF THE CROSS under CROSS). Sometimes she also bears the three nails by which the Saviour was affixed to the cross. Her day is 18 August.

The island of St. Helena in the South Atlantic was discovered by the Portuguese on 21 May 1502 (St. Helena's Day as observed in the Eastern Church). It was the place of NAPOLEON's exile from 1815 until his death in 1821.

Helicon. The home of the MUSES, a part of PARNASSUS. It contained the fountains of AGANIPPE and HIPPOCRENE, connected by "Helicon's harmonious stream". The name is used allusively of poetic inspiration.

From Helicon's harmonious springs
A thousand rills their mazy progress take.
The laughing flowers, that round them blow,
Drink life and fragrance as they flow.
GRAY: The Progress of Poesy.

Heliogabalus. See ELAGABALUS.

Heliopolis, the City of the Sun, a Greek form of (1) Baalbek, in Syria, and (2) On, in ancient Egypt (to the north-east of Cairo), where the sun was worshipped in the name of Re or RA or Aton.

Helios (Hē' li os). The Greek sun-god, who climbed the vault of HEAVEN in a chariot drawn by snow-white horses to give light, and in the evening descended into the Ocean. He is called HYPERION by HOMER, and in later times, APOLLO.

Heliotrope (Gr., "turn-to-sun"). For the story of the flower see CLYTIE.

The bloodstone, a greenish quartz with veins and spots of red, used to be called "heliotrope", the story being that if thrown into water it turned the rays of the sun to blood-colours. This stone also had the power of rendering its bearer invisible.

Nor hope had they of crevice where to hide,
Or heliotrope to charm them out of view.

DANTE:

Vision, Hell, xxiv (Cary's Translation).

Hell. The abode of the dead, then traditionally the place of torment or punishment after death (O.E. hel, hell, from root hel-, hide).

According to the KORAN, Hell has seven portals leading into seven divisions (Surah XV, 44).

True Buddhism admits of no Hell properly so called (cp. NIRVANA), but certain of the more superstitious acknowledge as many as 136 places of punishment after death, where the dead are sent according to their deserts.

Classic authors tell us that the INFERNO is encompassed by five rivers: ACHERON, COCYTUS, STYX, PHLEGETHON, and LETHE. See also AVERNUS, GEHENNA, HADES, HEAVEN, PURGATORY, TARTARUS.

Hell and Chancery are always open. There's not much to choose between lawyers and the DEVIL. An old saying.

Hell, Hull and Halifax. See HULL.

Hell is paved with good intentions. This occurs as a saying of Dr. Johnson (Boswell's Life, entry for 16 April 1775), but it is a good deal older. It is given by George Herbert (Jacula Prudentum, 1633) as, "Hell is full of good meanings and wishings." The usual form today is, "The road to hell is paved with good intentions."

It was all hell broken loose. Said of a state of anarchy or disorder.

The road to hell is easy. Facilis descensus Averno. See AVERNUS.

The Vicar of Hell. See VICAR.

To give one hell. To make things very unpleasant for one.

To Hell or Connaught. This phrase arose after the Act for the Settlement of IRELAND, 1652, following the Cromwellian defeat of the Irish insurrection. After September 1653, every Irish CATHOLIC owning property over the annual value of £10, and not guiltless of involvement in the revolt, was to be dispossessed and transplanted to the poorer parts of Connaught. Those remaining must speak English and rear their children as PROTESTANTS.

To lead apes in hell. See under APE.

To ride hell for leather. To ride with the utmost speed, "all out".

To work, play, etc., like hell. To do it with all the power at one's disposal, with the utmost vigour.

Hell broth. A magical mixture prepared for evil purposes (SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, IV, i).

Hell's Corner. The triangle of Kent about Dover was so called in World War II from its being both under fire from German cross-channel gunnery and the scene of so much of the fiercest air combat during the BATTLE OF BRITAIN, 1940.

Hell-fire Club. A notorious 18th-century coterie founded about 1755 by Sir Francis Dashwood, afterwards Baron Le Despencer. Its thirteen members conducted their profanities and revelries at Medmenham Abbey, Buckinghamshire, which formed part of the Dashwood property. Among the "Monks of Medmenham" were John Wilkes, Paul Whitehead, the satirist, who was secretary and steward, Charles Churchill and the Earl of Sandwich. The motto of the fraternity was: "Fay ce que voudras."

Hell Gate. A dangerous passage in the East River between Long Island and New York City. The Dutch settlers called it Hoellgat (whirling-gut), which was corrupted into Hell Gate. Flood Island, its most dangerous reef, was removed by mining and blasting in 1885.

Hellenes (hel' ēnz). "This word had in Palestine three several meanings: sometimes it designated the pagans; sometimes the Jews, speaking Greek and dwelling among the pagans; and sometimes proselytes of the gate, that is, men of pagan origin converted to Judaism, but not circumcised (John vii, 35, xii, 20; Acts xiv, 1, xvii, 4, xviii, 4, xxi, 28)" (Renan: Life of Jesus, xiv).

The Greeks were called Hellenes, from Hellen, son of DEUCALION AND PYRRHA, their legendary ancestor; the name has descended to the modern Greeks, and their sovereign is not "King of Greece", but "King of the Hellenes". The ancient Greeks called their country "Hellas"; it was the Romans who called it "Græcia", which, among the inhabitants themselves, referred only to Epirus.

Hellenic. The common dialect of the Greek writers after the age of ALEXANDER THE GREAT. It was based on the ATTIC.

Hellenistic. The dialect of the Greek language used by the Jews. It was full of Oriental idioms and METAPHORS.

Hellenists. Those Jews who used the Greek or Hellenic language; also a Greek scholar.

Hellespont (hel' es pont). The "sea of Helle"; so called because Helle, the sister of Phryxus, was drowned there. She was fleeing with her brother through the air to Colchis on the golden ram to escape from INO, her mother-in-law, who most cruelly oppressed her, but, turning giddy, she fell into the sea. It is the ancient name of the Dardanelles and is celebrated in the legend of HERO AND LEANDER. See also GOLDEN FLEECE.

Helmet. The helmets of Saragossa were in most repute in the days of CHIVALRY.

Bever, or drinking-piece. One of the movable parts, which was lifted up when the wearer ate or drank. It comes from the old Italian verb bevete, to drink.

Close helmet. The complete head-piece, having in front two movable parts, which could be lifted up or down at pleasure.

Morion. A low iron cap, worn only by infantry.

Visor. One of the movable parts; it was to look through.

The helmet in Heraldry, resting on the chief of the shield, and bearing the crest, indicates rank.

Gold, with six bars, or with the visor raised (in full face), for royalty.

Silver, with five bars (in full face), for a duke or marquis.

Silver, with four bars, with visor raised (in profile), for an earl, viscount, or baron.

Steel, without bars, and with visor open (in full face), for a knight or a baronet.

Steel, with visor closed (in profile), for a squire or a gentleman.

A helmet is never put over the arms of a woman, other than the sovereign.

The helmet of Mohammed. MOHAMMED wore a double helmet; the exterior one was called al-mawashah (the wreathed garland).

The helmet of Perseus rendered the wearer invisible. This was the "helmet of HADES", which with winged sandals and magic wallet he took from certain NYMPHS; but after he had slain MEDUSA he restored them again, and presented the GORGON'S head to ATHENE, who placed it in the middle of her ÆGIS.

Heloise. See ABELARD.

Helot. A drunken helot. The Spartans used to make a helot (slave) drunk as an object-lesson to the youths of the evils of intemperance. Dr. Johnson said of one of his old acquaintances:

He is a man of good principles; and there would be no danger that a young gentleman should catch his manner; for it is so very bad, that it must be avoided. In that respect he would be like the drunken Helot.

BOSWELL'S Life: 2 April 1779.

Help-ale. See BID ALE.

Helve. To throw the helve after the hatchet. To be reckless, to throw away what remains because your losses have been so great. The allusion is to the fable of the wood-cutter who lost the head of his axe in a river and threw the handle in after it.

Hempe. When hempe is spun England is done. Bacon says he heard the prophecy when he was a child, and he interpreted it thus: Hempe is composed of the initial letters of Henry, Edward, Mary, Philip, and Elizabeth. At the close of the last reign "England was done", for the sovereign no longer styled himself "King of England", but "King of Great Britain and Ireland". See NOTARIKON.

Hempen caudle, collar, etc. A hangman's rope.

Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the help of hatchet.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. II, IV, vii.

Hempen fever. Death on the gallows, the rope being of hemp.

Hempen widow. The widow of a man that has been hanged.

Hen. A grey hen. A stone bottle for holding liquor. Large and small pewter pots mixed together are called "hen and chickens".

A dirty leather wallet lay near the sleeper . . . also a grey-hen which had contained some sort of strong liquor.

EMMA ROBINSON: Whitefriars, ch. viii.

A whistling maid and a crowing hen is fit for neither God nor men. A whistling maid is a WITCH, who whistles to call up the winds and was supposed to be in league with the DEVIL. The crowing of a hen was supposed to forbode a death. The usual interpretation is that masculine qualities in women are undesirable.

As fussy as a hen with one chick. Over-anxious about small matters; over-particular and fussy. A hen with one chick is for ever clucking it and never leaves it alone.

A hen on a hot griddle. A Scottish phrase descriptive of a restless person.

Hen and chickens. In Christian art this device is emblematical of God's providence. See also GREY HEN, above.

Hen-pecked. A man who submits to the lectures and nagging of his wife and is domineered by her.

Tappit-hen. See TAPPIT.

Hengist and Horsa. The semi-legendary leaders who led the first Saxon war-band to settle in England. They are said to have arrived in Kent in 449 at the invitation of Vortigern, who offered them land on the understanding that they would help against the PICTS. Horsa is said to have been slain at the battle of Aylesford (c. 455), and Hengist to have ruled in Kent till his death in 488. The name Horsa is connected with our word horse and Hengist is the Ger. hengst, a stallion.

Henry Grâce à Dieu. See GREAT HARRY.

Hep, or Hip. American slang of uncertain origin meaning "aware of, informed of, wise to".

Hep-cat. One who is fond of and moved by fast and noisy music.

Hepatoscopy. A very ancient form of DIVINATION based upon inspection of the liver from the animal sacrificed (Gr. hepar, hepatos, liver). It rested on the belief that the liver was the seat of vitality and of the soul.

For the king of Babylon stood at the parting of the way . . . to use divination: he made his arrows bright, he consulted with images, he looked in the liver.—Ezek. xxi, 21.

Hephæstus (hê fes' tus). The Greek VULCAN.

Heptameron, The. A collection of Italian and other mediæval stories written by, or ascribed to, Marguerite of Angoulême, Queen of Navarre (1492-1549), and published posthumously in 1558. They were supposed to have been related in seven days (Gr. hepta, seven; hemera, day). Cp. DECAMERON, HEXAMERON.

Heptarchy (Gr., seven governments). The term is used of the seven English kingdoms of Kent, Sussex, Wessex, Essex, East Anglia, Mercia, and Northumbria during the period of their co-existence, i.e. from the 6th to the 8th centuries. This is the period when overlordship was exercised by a BRETWALDA.

Heptateuch. (Gr. hepta, seven; teuchos, a tool, book). A name given to the first seven books of the BIBLE, the PENTATEUCH plus Joshua and Judges.

Hera (hê' rá) (Gr. haireo, chosen one). The Greek JUNO, the wife of ZEUS.

Herald. (O.Fr. heralt, heraut). The herald was an officer whose duty it was to proclaim war or peace, carry challenges to battle, and messages between sovereigns, etc. Heralds had their attendants called pursuivants. Nowadays war or peace is still proclaimed by the heralds, but their chief duty as court functionaries is to superintend state ceremonies such as coronations, installations, etc., and also to grant arms, trace genealogies, attend to matters of precedence, honours, etc.

Edward III appointed two heraldic kings-at-arms for south and north—

Surroy and Norroy. The English College of Heraldry was incorporated by Richard III in 1483-1484. It consists of three kings of arms, and four pursuivants, under the Earl Marshal, which office is hereditary in the line of the Dukes of Norfolk.

The three Kings of Arms are Garter (blue), Clarenceux, and Norroy and Ulster (purple).

The six heralds are styled Somerset, Richmond, Lancaster, Windsor, Chester, and York.

The four pursuivants are Rouge Dragon, Blue Mantle, Portcullis, and Rouge Croix.

Garter King of Arms is so called from his special duty to attend at the solemnities of election, investiture, and installation of Knights of the GARTER; he is Principal King of Arms for all England.

Clarenceux King of Arms. So called from the Duke of Clarence, brother of Edward IV. His jurisdiction extends over England south of the Trent.

Norroy and Ulster King of Arms has jurisdiction over England on the north side of the Trent and over Northern Ireland.

The "Bath King of Arms" is not a member of the Herald's College, and is concerned only with the Order of the BATH.

In Scotland heraldry is the function of the Lyon office and it consists of the Lord Lyon King of Arms, three Heralds (Albany, Marchmont, and Rothsay), three ordinary Pursuivants (Unicorn, Carrick, Dingwall or Kintyre) and two Pursuivants Extraordinary (Linlithgow and Falkland).

Heraldry. Originally a term applied to the science and functions of a HERALD but now more usually restricted to the knowledge or science of armorial bearings, formerly known as Armory.

A coat of arms consists of the shield, the HELMET, crest, mantling and supporters. The motto is not strictly part of the coat of arms or armorial achievement.

The shield is the main part of the achievement and the colours used upon it are azure (blue); gules (red); purpure (purple); sable (black); vert (green). Argent (silver) and or (gold) are known as metals and the other tinctures are called furs (ermine, *ermine*s, *ermine*ois, pean, potent, and vair). The items put on the ground of the shield are called charges (e.g., bends, chevrons, *pile*s, fesses, bars, crosses, animals, birds, reptiles, and inanimate objects, etc.).

Differencing is the alteration of a coat to distinguish between the various members and branches of a family.

Marshalling is the science of bringing together the arms of several families in one escutcheon.

In heraldry, punning on names and words is called canting.

The following are some of the principal terms used in heraldry:

Bars, horizontal bands (more than one) across the middle of the shield.

Bend, a diagonal stripe.

Bordure, an edge of a different colour round the whole shield.

Chevron, a bent stripe, as worn by non-commissioned officers in the army, but the point upwards.

Chief, the upper one-third of the shield divided horizontally.

Cinquefoil, a five-petalled formalized flower.

Couchant, lying down.

Counter-passant, moving in opposite directions.

Couped, cut off straight at the stem or neck.

Coward, coué, with tail hanging between the legs.

Displayed (of birds), with wings and talons outspread.

Dormant, sleeping.

Endorse, a very narrow vertical stripe; see PALE.

Erased, with nothing below the stem or neck, which ends roughly as opposed to the sharp edge of couped.

Fesse, a broad horizontal stripe across the middle of the shield.

File, a horizontal bar from which normally depend one or more smaller bars called labels.

Gardant, full-faced.

Hauriant, standing on its tail (of fishes).

Issuant, rising from the top or bottom of an ordinary.

Lodged, reposing (of stags, etc.).

Martlet, a swallow with no feet.

Mullet, a star of a stated number of points.

Naïant, swimming (of fishes).

Nascent, rising out of the middle of an ORDINARY.

Ordinary. A primary charge (e.g., bend, pale, fesse, chevron, pile, cross, lozenge, roundel, etc.).

Pale, a wide vertical stripe down the centre of the shield.

Pallet, a narrow vertical stripe.

Passant, walking, the face in profile (emblematic of resolution).

Passant gardant, walking, with full face (emblematic of resolution and prudence).

Passant regardant, walking and looking behind.

Pile, a narrow triangle.

Rampant, rearing, with face in profile (emblematic of magnanimity).

Rampant gardant, erect on the hind legs, full face (emblematic of prudence).

Rampant regardant, erect on the hind legs, side face looking behind (emblematic of circumspection).

Regardant, looking back (emblematic of circumspection).

Sahent, springing (emblematic of valour).

Sejant, seated (emblematic of counsel).

Statant, standing still.

Trippant, running (of stags, etc.).

Volant, flying.

Herb. Herb of Grace. Rue is so called probably because (owing to its extreme bitterness) it is the symbol of repentance.

Here did she fall a tear; here in this place,
I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace;
Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen.

SHAKESPEARE: Richard II, III, iv.

Jeremy Taylor, in A Dissuasive from Popery, I, ii, 9 (1664), says:

First, they are to try the devil by holy water, incense, sulphur, rue, which from thence, as we suppose, came to be called "herb of grace",—and especially St. John's wort, which therefore they call "devils' fight", with which if they cannot cast the devil out, yet they may do good to the patient.

Herba sacra. The "divine weed", vervain, said by the Romans to cure the bites of all rabid animals, to arrest the progress of venom, to cure the plague, to avert sorcery and WITCHCRAFT, to reconcile enemies, etc. So highly esteemed was it that feasts called Verbenalia were annually held in its honour. HERALDS wore a wreath of vervain when they declared war; and the DRUIDS are supposed to have held it in veneration.

Lift your boughs of vervain blue,
Dipt in cold September dew;
And dash the moisture, chaste and clear,
O'er the ground, and through the air,
Now the place is purged and pure.

w. MASON: Caractacus (1759).

Herb Trinity. A popular name for the pansy, Viola tricolor. See HEARTSEASE.

Hercules (hēr' kū lēz). In Greek mythology, a hero of superhuman physical strength, son of ZEUS and ALCMENA. He is represented as brawny, muscular, short-necked, and of huge proportions. In a fit of madness inflicted on him by JUNO, he slew his wife and children, and as penance was ordered by APOLLO to serve for 12 years the Argive king, Eurystheus, who imposed upon him twelve tasks of great difficulty and danger:

- (1) To slay the NEMEAN LION.
- (2) To kill the Lernean HYDRA.
- (3) To catch and retain the Arcadian stag.
- (4) To destroy the Erymanthian boar.
- (5) To cleanse the AUGEAN STABLES.
- (6) To destroy the cannibal birds of the Lake Stymphalis.
- (7) To take captive the Cretan bull.
- (8) To catch the horses of the Thracian Diomedes.
- (9) To get possession of the girdle of HIPPOLYTA, Queen of the Amazons.
- (10) To capture the oxen of the monster GERYON.
- (11) To obtain the apples of the HESPERIDES.
- (12) To bring CERBERUS from the infernal regions.

After these labours and many other adventures he was rewarded with immortality.

The Attic Hercules. THESEUS, who went about like Hercules, destroying robbers and achieving wondrous exploits.

The Farnese Hercules. See under FARNESE.

Hercules and his load. The sign of the Globe Theatre showing Hercules carrying the globe upon his shoulders. SHAKESPEARE alludes to it in Hamlet, II, ii:

Ham.: Do the boys carry it away?
Ros.: Ay, that they do, my lord; Hercules and his load too.

Hercules' choice. Immortality, the reward of toil in preference to pleasure. Xenophon tells us that when Hercules was a youth he was accosted by Virtue and Pleasure, and asked to choose between them. Pleasure promised him all carnal delights, but Virtue promised immortality. Hercules gave his hand to the latter, and, after a life of toil, was received amongst the gods.

Hercules' horse. See FAMOUS HORSES under HORSE.

Hercules' Pillars. See under PILLAR.

Hercules Secundus. Commodus, the Roman Emperor (A.D. 180-192), gave himself this title. Dissipated and inordinately cruel, he claimed divine honours and caused himself to be worshipped as Hercules. It is said that he killed 100 lions in the amphitheatre, and that he slew over 1,000 defenceless gladiators.

Herculean knot (hēr' kū lē' ān). A snaky complication on the rod or CADUCEUS of MERCURY, adopted by Grecian brides as the fastening of their woollen girdles, which only the bridegroom was allowed to untie. As he did so he invoked JUNO to render his marriage as those of Hercules, whose numerous wives all had families, among them being the 50 daughters of Thestius, all of whom conceived in one night. See TRUE LOVER'S KNOT under KNOT.

Ex pede Herculem. See under EX.

Herefordshire kindness. A good turn rendered for a good turn received. Thomas Fuller says the people of Herefordshire "drink back to him who drinks to them".

Heretic. From a Greek word meaning "one who chooses". A heretic is one who holds unorthodox opinions in matters of religion, i.e. he chooses his own creed.

The principal heretical sects of the first six centuries were:

FIRST CENTURY: The Simonians (from Simon Magus), Cerinthians (Cerinthus), EBIONITES (Ebion), and Nicolaitans (Nicholas, deacon of Antioch).

SECOND CENTURY: The Basilidians (Basilides), Carpocratians (Carpocrates), Valentinians (Valentinus), GNOSTICS (Knowing Ones), NAZARENES, MILLENNARIANS, CAINITES (Cain), Sethians (Seth), Quartodecimans who kept EASTER on the 14th day of Nisan, our April), Cerdonians (Cerdon), MARCIONITES (Marcion), MON-TANISTS (Montanus), Alogians (who denied the "Word"), Angelics (who worshipped angels), Tatianists (Tatian).

THIRD CENTURY: The Patri-passians, Arabici, Aquarians, NOVATIANS, Origenists (followers of Origen), Melchisedechians (who believed Melchisedec was the Messiah), SABELLIANS (from Sabellius), and MANICHEANS (followers of Mani).

FOURTH CENTURY: The ARIANS (from Arius), Colluthians (Colluthus), MACE-DONIANS, AGNOETÆ (they denied that God knew the past and the future), APOLLI-NARIANS (Apollinaris), Collyridians (who offered cakes to the Virgin Mary), Seleucians (Seleucus), Priscillians (Priscillian), Anthropomorphites (who ascribed to God a human form), Jovinianists (Jovinian), Messalians, and Bonosians (Bonosus).

FIFTH CENTURY: The PELAGIANS (Pela-gius), NESTORIANS (Nestorius), EUTYCHIANS (Eutychus), MONOPHYSITES (who held that Christ had but a single, and that a Divine, nature), Predestinarians, Timotheans (Timothy, Monophysite Patriarch of Alexandria).

SIXTH CENTURY: Theopaschites (Mono-physites who held that God was crucified in Christ's Passion), the new Agnoetæ (Monophysite followers of Themistus). See also ALBIGENSES; BOGOMILS; WALD-ESIANS.

Heriot. A feudal kind of death duty. The lord of the manor's right to the best beast or chattel of a deceased VILLEIN. Freeman also owed heriots to their overlords of horses and armour. The word is from the O.E. here geatu, military apparel, which was originally on loan to the tenant.

Hermæ. See HERMES.

Hermaphrodite (hēr mǎf' rō dīt). A per-son or animal with indeterminate sexual organs, or those of both sexes; a flower containing both male and female repro-ductive organs. The word is derived from Hermaphroditus, son of HERMES and APHRODITE. The nymph Salmacis became enamoured of him, and prayed that she might be so closely united that "the twain might become one flesh". Her prayer being heard, the NYMPH and boy became one body (Ovid: Metamorphoses, IV, 347-88).

According to fable, all persons who bathed in the fountain Salmacis, in Caria, became hermaphrodites.

Hermas. One of the APOSTOLIC FATHERS (2nd century), author of The Shepherd which consists of Visions, Command-ments, and Similitudes or Parables.

Hermes. The Greek MERCURY, whose busts, known as Hermæ, were affixed to pillars and set up as boundary marks at street corners, etc. The Romans also used them for garden ornaments.

Among alchemists Hermes was the usual name for quicksilver or mercury (see Milton: Paradise Lost, III, 603).

Hermetic Art, or Philosophy. The art or science of ALCHEMY; so called from Hermes Trismegistus (the Thrice Great-est Hermes), the name given by the Neo-platonists to the Egyptian god THOTH, its hypothetical founder.

Hermetic books. Forty-two books fabled to have been written from the dictation of Hermes Trismegistus, dealing with the life and thought of ancient Egypt. They state that the world was made out of fluid; that the SOUL is the union of light and life; that nothing is destructible; that the soul transmigrates; and that suffering is the result of motion.

Hermetic powder. A sympathetic powder, supposed to possess a healing influence from a distance; so called by mediæval philosophers out of compliment to Hermes Trismegistus (Sir Kenelm Digby: Discourse Touching the Cure of Wounds by the Powder of Sympathy, 1658).

For by his side a pouch he wore
Replete with strange hermetic powder,
That would nine miles point-blank would solder.

BUTLER: Hudibras, I, ii.

Hermetically sealed. Closed securely; from sealing a vessel hermetically, i.e. as a chemist, a disciple of Hermes Trismegistus, would, by heating the neck of the vessel till it is soft, and then twisting it till the aperture is closed up.

Hermit. Peter the Hermit. See under PETER.

Hermit's Derby. One of the famous races in the history of the TURF, when Hermit, belonging to Henry Chaplin (1840-1923), later Viscount Chaplin, won the DERBY STAKES of 1867 against all expectations, and the notorious Marquess of Hastings lost £120,000 in bets.

Herne the Hunter. See WILD HUNTSMAN.

Hero. No man is a hero to his valet. An old saying. The idea is found in Plutarch and Montaigne (Essays, Bk. III, ii), but Bacon in his essay Of Honour and Reputation says, "Discreet followers and servants help much to reputation: 'Omnis fama a domesticis emanat.'" (All fame comes from one's own household.) Cp. Matt. xiii, 57, "A prophet is not without honour save in... his own house."

Hero and Leander. The old Greek tale is that Hero, a priestess of VENUS, fell in love with Leander, who swam across the HELLESPOINT every night to visit her. One night he was drowned, and heart-broken Hero drowned herself in the same sea. The story is told in one of the poems of Musæus, and in Marlowe and Chapman's Hero and Leander.

Lord Byron and Lieutenant Ekenhead repeated the experiment of Leander in 1810 and accomplished it in 1 hour 10 minutes. The distance, allowing for drifting, would be about four miles. In Don Juan (Canto II, cv), BYRON says of his hero:

A better swimmer you could scarce see ever,
He could, perhaps, have pass'd the Hellespont,
As once (a feat on which ourselves we prided)
Leander, Mr. Ekenhead, and I did.

Heroic age. That age of a nation which comes between the purely mythical period and the historic. This is the age when the sons of the gods were said to take unto themselves the daughters of men, and the offspring partake of the twofold character.

Heroic size in sculpture denotes a stature superior to ordinary life, but not colossal.

Heroic verse. That verse in which epic poetry is generally written. In Greek and Latin it is hexameter verse, in English it is ten-syllable iambic verse, either in rhymes or not; in Italian it is the ottava rima. So called because it is employed to celebrate heroic exploits.

Herod. To out-herod Herod. To outdo in wickedness, violence, or rant, the worst of tyrants. Herod, who destroyed the babes of Bethlehem (Matt. ii. 16), was made (in the old mediæval MYSTERIES) a ranting, roaring tyrant.

Herrenvolk. A German word meaning broadly "master race". In NAZI usage it implied the superiority of the German peoples.

Herring. A shotten herring. One that has shot off or ejected its spawn, and hence is worthless.

Go thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt. If manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten herring. There live not three good men unchanged in England, and one of them is fat and grows old.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, II, iv.

Drawing a red herring across the path. Trying to divert attention from the main question by some side issue. A red herring (i.e. one dried, smoked, and salted) drawn across a fox's path destroys the scent and sets the dogs at fault.

Neither barrel the better herring. Much of a muckness; not a pin to choose between you; SIX OF ONE AND HALF A DOZEN OF THE OTHER. The herrings of both barrels are so much alike that there is no choice whatever.

Neither fish, flesh, nor good red herring. See under FISH.

The Battle of the Herrings (12 February 1429). During the HUNDRED YEARS WAR Sir John Fastolf was conveying provisions to the English besiegers of Orleans and was unsuccessfully attacked by superior French forces seeking to intercept the supplies. The English used the barrels of herrings with which their wagons were loaded, as a defence; hence the name.

The King of the Herrings. The Chimæra, or sea-ape, a cartilaginous fish which accompanies a shoal of herrings in their migrations.

Herring-bone (in building). Courses of stone laid angularly, thus: ◀ ◀ ◀ ◀. Also applied to strutting placed between thin joists to increase their strength.

In needlework an embroidery stitch, or alternatively a kind of cross-stitch used to fasten down heavy material.

The Herring-pond. The ocean or dividing seas, especially the Atlantic which separates America from the British Isles.

'I'll send an account of the wonders I meet on the Great Herring Pond.

JOHN DUNTON:
Letters from New England, 1686.

Hershey Bar. In the U.S.A. a Hershey Bar is a trade-marked form of sweetmeat; in U.S. army slang the term was applied to the narrow gold bar worn by troops on the left sleeve to indicate that they had done six months' overseas service.

Hertha. See NERTHUS.

Hesperia (hes pēr' i à) (Gr. western). Italy was so called by the Greeks, because it was to them the "Western Land"; and afterwards the Romans, for a similar reason, transferred the name to Spain.

Hesperides (hes per' i dēz). Three sisters who guarded the golden apples which HERA received as a marriage gift. They were assisted by the dragon LADON. HERCULES, as the eleventh of his "twelve labours", slew the DRAGON and carried some of the apples to Eurystheus.

Many poets call the place where these golden apples grew the "Garden of the Hesperides". SHAKESPEARE (Love's Labour's Lost, IV, iii) speaks of "climbing trees in the Hesperides". (Cp. Milton's Comus, lines 393-7.)

Hesperus (hes' per' us). The evening star, because it sets in the west. See HESPERIA.

Ere twice in murk and occidental damp
Moist Hesperus hath quenched his sleepy lamp.
SHAKESPEARE: All's Well that Ends Well, II, I.

The Wreck of the Hesperus. An episode made famous by Longfellow's ballad of 1840, formerly widely learnt by schoolchildren. The Hesperus was wrecked on Norman's Woe, near Gloucester, Massachusetts, in 1839.

It was the schooner Hesperus,
That sailed the wintry sea;
And the skipper had taken his little daughter,
To bear him company.

Hessian. A coarse, strong cloth made from jute or hemp, originally made in Hesse in Germany.

Hessian boots were first worn by troops in Germany and became fashionable in England in the 19th century.

While a lover's professions,
When uttered in Hessian,
Are eloquent ev'rywhere.

W. S. GILBERT: Patience.

Hesychasts. In the Eastern Church, supporters of the ascetic mysticism propagated by the monks of Mount Athos in the 14th century. Also called Palamists after Gregory Palamas (c. 1296-1350), who became the chief exponent of Hesychasm. The object of their exercises was to attain a vision of the "Divine Light" which they held to be God's "energy". Hesychasm lasted until the 17th century; the name is from the Gr. hesychos, quiet.

Hexameron (Gr). A period of six days, especially the six days of the Creation.

Hexameter. The metre in which Greek and Latin epics were written, and which has been imitated in English in such poems as Longfellow's Evangeline, Clough's Bothie, Kingsley's Andromeda (probably the best), etc.

The line consists of six feet, dactyls or spondees for the first four, the fifth is almost always a dactyl (but sometimes a spondee), and the sixth a spondee or trochee.

Verse consisting of alternate hexameters and pentameters is known as ELEGIAC. Coleridge illustrates this in his:

In the hexameter rises the fountain's silvery column;
In the pentameter aye falling in melody back.
The Ovidian Elegiac Metre.

Hexateuch. See ELOHISTIC; cp. HEPTATEUCH, PENTATEUCH.

Hiawatha. The Iroquois name of a hero of miraculous birth who came (under a variety of names) among the North American Indian tribes to bring peace and goodwill to man.

In Longfellow's poem (1855) he is an Ojibway, son of Mudjkeewis (the west wind) and Wenonah, and married Minnehaha, "Laughing Water". He represents the progress of civilization among his people. When the white man landed and taught the Indians the faith of Jesus, Hiawatha exhorted them to receive the words of wisdom, to reverence the missionaries who had come so far to see them.

Hibernia. The Latin name for IRELAND, a variant of the old CELTIC Erin, common in poetic usage.

Hic Jacets. Tombstones, so called from the first two words of the Latin inscription: Hic Jacet (Here lies . . .)

And by the cold Hic Jacets of the dead.

TENNYSON:

Idylls of the King (Merlin and Vivien).

Hickathrift, Tom. A hero of nursery rhyme and mythical strong man, fabled to have been a labourer at the time of the CONQUEST. Armed with an axle-tree and cartwheel he killed a giant who dwelt in a marsh at Tilney, Norfolk. He was knighted and made a governor of Thanet. Cp. JACK THE GIANT-KILLER.

Hickory

Hickory. Hickory cloth. Cloth dyed with hickory juice.

Hickory Mormons. MORMONS of half-hearted persuasion.

Old Hickory. General Andrew Jackson (1767-1845), President of the United States (1829-1837). He was first called "Tough", from his great powers of endurance, then "Tough as hickory", and lastly, "Old Hickory". Cp. STONEWALL JACKSON.

Hicksites. QUAKERS in the U.S.A. who seceded from the main body in 1827 under the leadership of Elias Hicks.

Hide of land. In feudal England the term denoted the amount of land that was sufficient to support a family; usually varying between 60 and 120 acres according to the locality or quality of the land. A hide of good land was smaller than one of poorer quality. It was long used as the basis for assessing taxes.

To hide one's light under a bushel. See BUSHEL.

Hieroglyphs (hi' ér õ glifs). The name applied to the picture characters of ancient Egyptian writing (Gr. hieros, sacred; glyph, what is carved). For many years these inscribed symbols of beasts and birds, men and women, etc. were indecipherable, until 1822, when J. F. Champollion pieced together an alphabet from the ROSETTA STONE. Since then our knowledge of Egyptian history and civilization has been transformed.

High. An all-time high. A record achievement, an expression of American origin.

High and dry. Stranded, left out of the current of events. A nautical metaphor.

High and low. People of all estates and conditions.

High and mighty. Powerful, or more usually, arrogant and overbearing.

High days and holidays. Special occasions, a high day being a festival or great occasion.

High falutin'. Oratorical bombast, affected pomposity.

To be on one's high horse. See under HORSE.

With a high hand. Arrogantly.

High Church. That section of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND distinguished by its "high" conception of Church authority, upholding sacerdotal claims and asserting the efficacy of the SACRAMENTS. It also stresses the historical links with CATHOLIC Christianity. It has its origins in the reign of Elizabeth I, although the name is of the late 17th century. Archbishop Laud was of this persuasion and High Church opinions were again strengthened and re-established by the OXFORD MOVEMENT. Cp. LOW CHURCH under LOW.

High German. Official and literary German, derived from the language of High or South Germany. Low German is the name applied to all other German dialects, or the language of Low or North Germany.

High Heels and Low Heels. The names of two factions in Swift's tale of Lilliput (Gulliver's Travels), satirizing the HIGH and LOW CHURCH parties.

High places. In the Authorized Version of the BIBLE this is a literal translation of the Heb. bamah and applied to the local places of sacrifice where JEHOVAH was worshipped. Such sites were often on a hilltop or mound, which may account for the origin of the name. Because of their association with forms of idolatry, and sometimes immoral rites, they were denounced by Hosea. Hezekiah removed the high places (II Kings xviii, 4), so did Asa (II Chron. xiv, 3) and others. Cp. HILLS.

High seas. As defined in international law, all the area of sea not under the sovereignty of any state. Cp. TERRITORIAL WATERS.

High table. In a college dining-hall, the table at which the dons sit.

High tea. A meal of a substantial character served about the usual tea-time which can include fish, meats, pastry, etc. It is common in Scotland and the North of England and in agricultural areas.

High words. Angry words.

High-ball, the American term for whisky, diluted with water, soda-water or ginger ale and served in a tall glass with ice.

High-brow. A learned person, an intellectual. The term originated in the U.S.A. about 1911 and is also used to denote cultural, artistic, and intellectual matters above one's head. Derivatives are low-brow and middle-brow.

Highbinders. The name given to those rowdies, ruffians, and members of malevolent gangs who troubled New York and other American cities from the early 19th century.

Higher Criticism. The critical inquiry into the literary composition and sources, especially of the BIBLE, also called historical criticism. The term is used in contradistinction to textual or verbal criticism which is to establish the correctness of the text.

Highgate. Sworn at Highgate. In public houses at Highgate it was once customary to administer an oath to all travellers who called. They were sworn on a pair of horns fastened to a stick—(1) Never to kiss a maid when the mistress could be kissed. (2) Never to eat brown bread when white could be got. (3) Never to drink small beer when strong could be got (unless preferred).

Highlands, The. That part of SCOTLAND lying north of the line approximately Dumbarton to Stonehaven. Stirling is known as the "gateway to the Highlands"; in the wars between ENGLAND and Scotland, possession of this strong point gave great advantage.

Highland bail. Fists and cuffs; to escape the constable by knocking him down with the aid of a companion.

Highland Mary. The most shadowy of Robert Burns's sweethearts, but the one to whom he addressed some of his finest poetry, including "The Highland Lassie, O", "Highland Mary", "To Mary in Heaven", and perhaps "Will ye go to the Indies, my Mary?"

She is said to have been a daughter of Archibald Campbell, a Clyde sailor, and to have died young about 1784 or 1786.

Highness. Royal Highness. In Great Britain this title is now confined (since 1917) to the sovereign and his or her Consort, to the children of the sovereign, to grandchildren in the male line, and the eldest son of the eldest son of the PRINCE OF WALES. It was formerly granted to a somewhat wider group of relations.

Hijacker (hi' jāk ər). A term of American origin denoting a bandit who preys on BOOTLEGGERS and other criminals; now applied more generally to one who steals goods in transit, particularly lorries loaded with valuable merchandise. The name may derive from the gunman's command to his victim, "Stick 'em up high, Jack," meaning that the arms were to be raised well above the head.

Hilary Term. The former legal term, and the university term at Oxford, Cambridge, and Trinity College Dublin corresponding to the LENT term elsewhere. It is named in honour of St. Hilary whose day is 13 January (14 January in the R.C. Church), near which day these terms begin. The Hilary Law Sittings usually begin on 11 January, and end on the Wednesday before EASTER.

Hildebrand (hil' de brand). A celebrated character of German romance whose story is told in Das Hildebrandslied, an old German alliterative poem (written c. 800), and he also appears in the NIBELUNGENLIED, DIETRICH VON BERN, etc. He is an old man, who returns home after many years among the Huns through following his master Theodoric, only to be challenged to single combat by his own son Hadubrand.

The name is better known as that of the great reforming pope St. Gregory VII (c. 1020–1085) whose attempts to prohibit lay investiture brought Henry IV to CANOSSA and made him many enemies. He did much to remove abuses and to regenerate the Church.

Hildesheim (hil' des him). Legend relates that a monk of Hildesheim, an old city of Hanover, doubting how with God a thousand years could be as one day, listened to the singing of a bird in a wood, as he thought for three minutes, but found the time had been three hundred years. Longfellow makes use of the story in his Golden Legend (II), calling the monk Felix.

Hill. Hill-billy. An American rustic or countryman of the hilly regions; also applied to the characteristic traditional songs of the hill regions of the south-eastern parts of the U.S.A.

Hill folk. So Scott calls the CAMERONIAN Scottish COVENANTERS, who met clandestinely among the hills. Sometimes the Covenanters generally are so called.

In Scandinavian tradition they are a type of being between elves and human beings. The "hill people" were supposed to dwell in caves and small hills.

Hills. Prayers were offered on the tops of high hills, and temples built on "HIGH PLACES", from the notion that the gods could better hear prayer on such places, as they were nearer heaven. It will be remembered that Balak (Num. xxiii, xxiv) took Balaam to the top of Peor and other high places when Balaam wished to consult God. We often read of "idols on every high hill" (Ezek. vi, 13).

Old as the hills. Very old indeed.

Hinc illæ lachrymæ (hink il ē lāk' ri mē) (Lat., "hence those tears", Terence: Andria, I, i, 99). This was the real offence; this was the true secret of the annoyance; the real source of the vexation.

Lady Loadstone: He keeps off all her suitors, keeps the portion Still in his hands; and will not part withal,
On any terms.

Palate: Hinc illæ lachrymæ,
Thence flows the cause of the main grievance.
BEN JONSON: Magnetic Lady, I, i.

Hind. Emblematic of St. Giles. See under GILES. Cp. HART.

The Hind of Sertorius. Sertorius (c. 122–72 B.C.), Marian governor of Hispania Citeriora was proscribed by Sulla and forced to flee. Later he was invited to return by the Lusitani and held Spain against the Senatorial party until his death through treachery. He had a tame white hind, which he taught to follow him, and from which he pretended to receive the instructions of DIANA. By this artifice, says Plutarch, he imposed on the superstition of the people.

The milk-white hind, in Dryden's Hind and the Panther, means the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, milk-white because "infallible". The panther, full of the spots of error, is the CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Without unspotted, innocent within,
She fear'd no danger, for she knew no sin.

Part I, 3, 4.

Hindustan. Hindustan Regiment. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Hinny. See MULE.

Hip. See HEP.

Hip. To have one on the hip. To have the mastery over him in a struggle, a term derived from a throw in wrestling.

Now, infidel, I have thee on the hip.
SHAKESPEARE: Merchant of Venice, IV, i.

To smite hip and thigh. To slay with great carnage. A Biblical phrase.

And he smote them hip and thigh with a great slaughter.—Judges xv, 8.

Hip! Hip! Hurrah! The old fanciful explanation of the origin of this cry is that hip is a NOTARIKON, composed of the initials Hierosolyma est perditā, and that when German knights headed a Jew-hunt in the MIDDLE AGES, they ran shouting "Hip! Hip!" as much as to say "Jerusalem is destroyed."

Hurrah was similarly derived from Slavonic hu-raj (to Paradise), so that Hip! Hip! Hurrah! would mean "Jerusalem is lost to the infidel, and we are on the road to Paradise."

Hipped. Melancholy, low-spirited, suffering from a "fit of the blues". The hip was formerly a common expression for morbid depression (now superseded by the pip); it is an abbreviation of hypochondria.

Hipper-switches. A dialect name for coarse willow withies. A hipper is a coarse osier used in basket-making, and an osier field is a hipperholm. A suburb of Halifax, Yorks, is called Hipperholme-cum-Brig-house.

Hippie. One of the names adopted by DROP-OUTS of the 1960s of the BEATNIK type. Irresponsibility and drug-addiction are common characteristics.

Hippocampus (hip' ō kām' pūs) (Gr. hippos, horse; kampos, sea monster). A seahorse, having the head and fore-quarters resembling those of a horse, with the tail and hindquarters of a fish or dolphin. It was the steed of NEPTUNE.

Hippocras (hip' ō krās). A cordial of the late MIDDLE AGES and down to Stuart times, made of Lisbon and Canary wines, bruised spices, and sugar; so called from being passed through HIPPOCRATES' SLEEVE.

When these [i.e. other wines] have had their course which nature yeeldeth, sundrie sorts of artificiall stuffe as yppocras and wormewood wine, must in like maner succeed in their turnes.

HARRISON:

Description of England, II, vi (1577).

Hippocrates (hip ok' rā tēz). A Greek physician (c. 460–c. 375 B.C.), known as the Father of Medicine. He was a member of the famous family of priest-physicians, the Asclepiadae, and was an acute and indefatigable observer, practising as both physician and surgeon. More than seventy treatises known as the Hippocratic Collection are extant, but their authorship is uncertain. In the MIDDLE AGES he was called "Ypocras" or "Hippocras". Thus:

Wel knew he th'olde Esculapius,
And Deiscorides, and eek Rufus,
Old Ypocras, Haly, and Galien.

CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales (Prologue, 431).

Hippocratean School. The "Dogmatic" school of medicine, founded by HIPPOCRATES. See EMPIRICS.

Hippocrates' sleeve. A woollen bag of a square piece of flannel, having the opposite corners joined, so as to make it triangular. Used by apothecaries for straining syrups, decoctions, etc., and anciently by vintners, whence the name of HIPPOCRAS.

Hippocratic Oath. An outstanding code of medical ethics contained in the Hippocratic Collection (see HIPPOCRATES). The oath related particularly to the inviolability of secrecy concerning any communication made by a patient during consultation, and demanded absolute integrity concerning the patient's welfare. It also enjoined members of the profession not to aid a woman to procure an abortion.

Hippocrene (hip' ō krēn) (Gr. hippos, horse; krene, fountain). The fountain of the MUSES on Mount HELICON, produced by a stroke of the hoof of PEGASUS; hence, poetic inspiration.

O for a beaker full of the warm South,
Full of the true, the blushful Hippocrene.
KEATS: Ode to a Nightingale.

Hippodamia. See BRISEIS.

Hippogriff (Gr. hippos, a horse; gryphos, a griffin). The winged horse, whose father was a GRIFFIN and mother a filly. A symbol of love (Ariosto: Orlando Furioso, iv, 18, 19).

So saying, he caught him up, and without wing
Of hippogriff, bore through the air sublime,
Over the wilderness and o'er the plain.
MILTON: Paradise Regained, IV, 541-3.

Hippolyta (hip ol' i tà). Queen of the AMAZONS, and daughter of MARS. SHAKESPEARE has introduced the character in his A Midsummer Night's Dream, where he betroths her to THESEUS, Duke of Athens. In classic fable it is her sister Antiope who married Theseus, although some writers justify Shakespeare's account. Hippolyta was famous for a girdle given her by her father, and it was one of the twelve labours of HERCULES to possess himself of this prize.

Hippolytus (hip ol' it ús). Son of THESEUS, King of Athens; when he repulsed his stepmother PHÆDRA's advances she accused him of attempting her seduction. In anger his father sought NEPTUNE's aid, who sent a sea monster which so terrified Hippolytus' horses that they dragged him to death. He was restored to life by ÆSCULAPIUS.

Hippomenes (hip om' en ēz). In Bœotian legend, the Greek prince who won the race with Atalanta. See ATALANTA'S RACE.

Hipster. A skirt or trousers hanging from the hips instead of the waist; also one of the terms denoting young people of the BEATNIK type. Cp. HIPPIE.

Hiram Abif (hī rām á bif') is a central figure in the legend and ritual of FREEMASONRY, the craftsman builder of King Solomon's TEMPLE who died rather than yield up the secrets of masonry. He appears as Hiram, the alternative form of the name, in II Chron. ii and iv. He must not be confused with Hiram or Huram, King of Tyre, who supplied much of the material.

Hiren. A strumpet. She was a character in Greene's lost play (c. 1594), The Turkish Mahomet and Hyren the Fair Greek, and is frequently referred to by Elizabethan dramatists. See Henry IV, Pt. II, II, iv, Dekker's Satiromastix, IV, iii, Mas-singer's Old Law, IV, i, Chapman's Eastward Hoe, II, i, etc. The name is a corruption of the Greek "Irene".

Hiring Fair. See under FAIR.

Hiroshima (hi rō shē' má). A Japanese city and military base, the target of the first atomic bomb dropped in warfare (6 August 1945). Over 160,000 people were killed or injured and far more rendered homeless. The flash of the explosion was seen 170 miles away and a column of black smoke rose over the city to a height of 40,000 feet. Hiroshima remains a solemn portent of the fate overshadowing mankind in the event of major world conflict.

Historia Augusta. See AUGUSTAN HISTORY.

History. The Father of History, Ecclesiastical History, English History, see under FATHER.

Father of French History. André Duchesne (1584-1640).

Father of Historic Painting. Polygnotus of Thaos (c. 500-440 B.C.).

The Muse of History. CLIO.

To make history. To take part in events and actions that will shape the future, or which will be of such significance as to become part of the historical record.

Happy is the country that has no history. See under HAPPY.

Historical Materialism. See under MATERIALISM.

Hit. A capital, or great hit. A great success, a piece of good luck. From the game hit and miss or the game of backgammon, where "two hits equal a gammon".

Hit hard, or hard hit. Hurt or distressed by adversities of fortune.

Hitting on all six. Doing well, giving a fine performance. A motor-car engine when running well is described as having the pistons in all six cylinders hitting perfectly (cp. FIRING ON ALL FOUR).

Hit or miss. See HOB-NOB.

To hit below the belt. To hurt another unfairly, to ignore the rules of fair play; an allusion to the boxing ring.

To hit it off. To describe a thing tersely and epigrammatically; to make a sketch truthfully and quickly.

To hit it off together. To agree or get on well with each other.

To hit the high spots, to excel or to go to excesses in "gay living". In American parlance, to do something superficially.

To hit the nail on the head. See under HEAD.

To make a hit. To meet with great approval, to meet with unexpected success.

Hitch. Hitch your wagon to a star. Aim high; don't be content with low aspirations. The phrase is from Emerson's essay, Civilization (Society and Solitude). Young expressed much the same idea in his Night Thoughts (viii):

Hitlerism

Too low they build who build beneath the stars.

There is some hitch. Some impediment. A horse is said to have a hitch in his gait when he is lame.

To get hitched. To get married.

To hitch. To get on smoothly; to fit in consistently; also to harness: as, "You and I hitch on well together"; "These two accounts do not hitch in with each other."

To hitch-hike. To travel from place to place by getting lifts from passing vehicles.

Hitched land. Part of the common field in which common rights were withdrawn or suspended to allow the cultivation of special crops such as turnips, clover, or potatoes. In Wiltshire such land was said to be "hooked".

Hitlerism. A generic term for the whole doctrine and practice of Fascism as exemplified by the NAZI régime of Adolf Hitler (1889-1945), who became German Chancellor in 1933 and ruled until his death. His régime was marked by tyranny, aggression, and mass persecution of Communists and Jews.

Heil Hitler (Hail Hitler). The familiar salutation to the FÜHRER, often used derisively of one adopting dictatorial methods or attempting dictatorial policies.

Hoarstone. A stone marking out the boundary of an estate, properly an old, grey, lichen-covered stone. They are also called "Hour-stones", and in Scotland, "Hare-stanes". They have been wrongly taken for Druidical remains.

Hob. An abbreviated form of Robin.

Hob and nob. See HOB-NOB.

Hob's Pound. Difficulties, great embarrassment. To be in Hob's pound is to be in the pound of a hob or hoberd—i.e. a fool or ne'er-do-well—paying for one's folly.

Hobbema (hob' e má). Meindert Hobbema (1638-1709), the Dutch landscape painter.

The English Hobbema, John Crome (1768-1821), "Old Crome", of Norwich, whose last words were, "O Hobbema, my dear Hobbema, how I have loved you!"

The Scottish Hobbema. Patrick Nasmyth (b. at Edinburgh, 1787, d. 1831), the landscape painter, was so called.

Hobbism. The principles of Thomas Hobbes (1588-1679), author of Leviathan (1651). He was a sceptic noted for his MATERIALISM and ERASTIANISM. He emphasized the doctrine of state sovereignty based on the theory of a social contract which he used as a support for absolutism. Man, according to Hobbes, was motivated by self-interest and the urge for self-preservation. Many regarded Hobbism as subversive freethinking.

Hobbit. A benevolent hospitable burrow people, two to four feet high, and fond of bright colours, the creation of Professor J. R. Tolkien. They are featured in his two works, The Hobbit (1937) and The Lord of the Rings (1954-1955).

Hobble Skirts. This women's fashion of skirts so tight around the ankles that the wearer was impeded in walking (much as a horse is hobbled) was at its height in 1912 and was gone by 1914.

Hobblers. A light-cavalry soldier, probably from his mount, a hobby or small horse. It was a feudal obligation for tenants of a certain class to provide hobblers for military service. They were often used to carry intelligence, to act as sentinels, and to reconnoitre.

Hobby. A favourite pursuit; a personal pastime that interests or amuses one. There are two words hobby. The earlier, meaning a small or medium-sized horse, is the M.E. hoby (cp. DOBBIN); the later, a small species of falcon, is the O.Fr. hobé, from Lat. hobetus, a falcon. It is from the first that our "hobby", a pursuit, comes. It is through hobby-horse, a light wickerwork frame, appropriately draped, in which someone gambolled in the old MORRIS DANCES. Padstow in Cornwall has a famous Hobby Horse parade during its spring festival. The horse is preceded by a man dressed as a woman, known as the teaser. The name is also applied to the child's plaything, consisting of a stick, across which he straddles, with a horse's head at one end.

To ride a hobby-horse was to play an infantile game of which one soon tired. It now implies to dwell to excess on a pet theory; the transition is shown in a sentence in one of John Wesley's sermons (No. lxxxiii):

Every one has (to use the cant term of the day) his hobby-horse!

Hobgoblin. An impish, ugly, and mischievous sprite, particularly PUCK or ROBIN GOODFELLOW. The word is a variant of Rob-goblin—i.e. the goblin Robin (cp. HODGE).

Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck,
You do their work, and they shall have good luck.

SHAKESPEARE:
A Midsummer Night's Dream, II, i.

Hob-nob. A corruption of Hab-nab, meaning "have or not have". Hence, hit or miss, at random; and, give or take, whence also an open defiance.

The citizens in their rage shot habbe or nabbe

HOLINSHED: History of Ireland.

He is a devil in private brawl . . . hob, nob, is his word give't or take't.

SHAKESPEARE: Twelfth Night, III, iv.

Not of Jack Straw with his rebellious crew,
That set King, realm and laws at hab or nab

SIR J. HARRINGTON: Epigrams, IV.

To hobnob, or hob and nob together.
To be on intimate terms of good fellowship, hold close and friendly conversation with, etc.; especially to drink together as cronies—probably with the meaning of "give and take".

"Have another glass!" "With you hob and nob," returned the sergeant. "The top of mine to the foot of yours—the foot of yours to the top of mine —Ring once, ring twice—the best tune on the Musical Glasses! Your health."

DICKENS: Great Expectations, ch. v.

Hobo. In American usage, a migratory worker who likes to travel, in contrast to a tramp, who travels without working, and a BUM, who neither travels nor works. It derives probably from hoe-boy, which meant a migratory farm worker.

Hobson's Choice means no choice at all. The saying derives eponymously from Thomas Hobson (1544 ?–1631), a Cambridge carrier well known in his day (he is celebrated in Fuller's Worthies and in two epitaphs by Milton), who refused to let out any horse except in its proper turn.

Hoccamore. An old name for hock or hockheimer (the wine of Hockheim on the River Main), at one time called Rhenish.

Restor'd the fainting high and mighty
With brandy-wine, and aqua-vitæ:
And made 'em stoutly overcome
With Bacrack, Hoccamore, and Mum.

BUTLER: Hudibras, III, iii, 297.

Hock cart. The last cartload of harvest. The word, like HOCKEY, is of unknown origin.

The Harvest Swaines, and Wenches bound
For joy, to see the Hock-cart crown'd.

HERRICK:

Hesperides (The Hock-cart, or Harvest home).

Hock-day, or Hock Tuesday. The second Tuesday after EASTER Day, long held as a festival in England and observed until the 16th century. According to custom, on Hock Monday, the women of the village seized and bound men, demanding a small payment for their release. On the Tuesday of Hocktide the men similarly waylaid the women. The takings were paid to the churchwardens for parish work. This was later modified, as shown below:

Hock Monday was for the men and Hock Tuesday for the women. On both days the men and women, alternately, with great merriment, intercepted the public roads with ropes, and pulled passengers to them, from whom they exacted money, to be laid out in pious uses.

BRAND: Antiquities, vol. I.

Hock-shop. A pawnshop. In America to hock is to pawn. It derives from the earlier English Hocktide when small ransoms were demanded from those caught and bound.

Hockey, or Horkey is the old name in the eastern counties for the HARVEST-HOME feast.

Hockey cake. The cake given out to the harvesters when the HOCK CART reached home.

Hockley-in-the-Hole. A well-known resort in former days for bear-baiting, bull-baiting, and prize-fighting in what was then a squalid locality near Clerkenwell Green. It was closed about 1730. Mrs. Peachum, in Gay's Beggar's Opera, says, "You should go to Hockley-in-the-Hole to learn valour."

Hocus Pocus (hō' kūs pō' kūs). Words formerly uttered by conjurers when performing a trick: hence the trick or deception itself, also the juggler himself.

The phrase dates from the early 17th century, and is the opening of a ridiculous string of mock Latin used by the performer (Hocus pocus, toutous talontus, vade celerita jubes), the first two words possibly being a parody of the words of consecration in the Mass (Hoc est Corpus), while the remainder was reeled off to occupy the attention of the audience.

Our word hoax is probably a contraction of hocus pocus, which also supplies the verb to hocus, to bamboozle, to cheat, etc.

Hodge. A familiar and condescending term for a farm labourer or peasant; an abbreviated form of Roger.

Hodge-podge. A medley, a mixed dish of "bits and pieces" all cooked together. The word is a corruption of HOTCH-POT.

Hodmandod. See DODMAN.

Hoe-cake (U.S.A.). Flat cake of coarse bread, originally baked on the blade of a cotton-field hoe.

Hog. A swine, properly a male swine castrated, and, as it is solely raised for slaughter, killed young. The origin of the word is uncertain. The name is also applied to a gelded boar, a sheep in its first year unshorn, and yearling colts and bullocks are also termed hogs or hoggetts. A hog-steer is a three-year-old boar.

In slang use, a hog is a gluttonous, greedy or unmannered person, thus a selfish, reckless, thrusting motorist is termed a road-hog.

Hog was also slang for a SHILLING or sixpence, or (in the U.S.A.) a ten-cent piece.

As independent as a hog on ice. Supremely confident, cocky, self-assured. A phrase used in America, of unknown origin, though it may be Scottish, having connexion with the hog used in curling. The phrase is discussed in detail by Charles Earle Funk in his book A Hog on Ice (1950).

To drive one's hog to market. To snore very loudly.

To go the whole hog. To do the thing completely and thoroughly; without compromise or reservation; to go the whole way. William Cowper says (The Love of the World; or Hypocrisy Detected, 1779) that the Moslem divines sought to ascertain which part of the hog was forbidden as food by the PROPHET.

But for one piece they thought it hard
From the whole hog to be debarred.

Unable to reach a decision, each thought to be excepted the portion of the meat he most preferred. As the tastes of the worthy IMAMS differed:

Thus conscience freed from every clog,
Mahometans eat up the hog.

A more probable origin of the phrase is that "to go the whole hog" was to spend the whole hog or SHILLING at one go.

In the U.S.A. the phrase became popular during Andrew Jackson's campaign for the presidency in 1828. Hence the expression whole-hogger, one who will see the thing through to the bitter end, and "damn the consequences". During Joseph Chamberlain's Protectionist campaign (1903, et seq.) the advocates of complete protection were called whole-hoggers.

To hear as a hog in harvest. In at one ear and out at the other; to hear without registering or paying attention. Giles Firmin says, "If you call hogs out of the harvest stubble, they will just lift up their heads to listen, and fall to their shack again." (Real Christian, 1670).

To hog it, or to pig it, in colloquial usage means to live in a rough, uncouth fashion or to eat unceremoniously and greedily in a piggish fashion; also to act selfishly and greedily, to grasp everything for oneself.

You have brought your hogs to a fine market. You have made a pretty KETTLE OF FISH; said in derision when one's project turns out badly.

Hog and hominy (U.S.A.). Pork and maize, the latter being coarsely ground and boiled and considered poor food.

Hog in armour. A person of awkward manner dressed so finely that he cannot move easily; perhaps a corruption of "Hodge in armour". See HODGE.

Hog-shearing. Much ado about nothing. "Great cry and little wool." (See under CRY.)

Hog-wallows. American prairie which has become a series of mounds and depressions through the alternate action of rain and drought.

Hog wild. In American parlance to go berserk (see BERSERKER).

Hog's Back. The western end of the North Downs, the chalk ridge from Guildford to Farnham in Surrey; so called from its outline.

Hogs-Norton. A village in Oxfordshire, now called Hook Norton. The name owes its more recent fame to Gillie Potter, the English comedian and broadcaster, who described in mock erudite fashion a long series of unlikely events taking place in this village.

I think you were born at Hogs-Norton. A reproof to an ill-mannered person.

I think thou wast born at Hoggs-Norton where piggs play upon the organs.

HOWELL: English Proverbs.

Hogen Mogen. Holland or the Netherlands; so called from Hooge en Mogende (high and mighty), the Dutch style of addressing the STATES-GENERAL.

But I have sent him for a token
To your low country Hogen-Mogen.

BUTLER: Hudibras, III, i.

It has a secondary meaning "Dutch".

Well, in short, I was drunk; damnably drunk with Ale;

Great Hogen Mogen bloody Ale.
DRYDEN: The Wild Gallant, I, i.

Hogmanay. In SCOTLAND, the last day of the year; also, a repast, or a present given on that day. The word is of unknown origin.

It is still the custom in parts of Scotland for persons to go from door to door on New Year's Eve asking in rough rhymes for cakes or money; and in Galloway the chief features are "taking the cream off the water" (wonderful luck being attached to a draught thereof); "the FIRST FOOT", and giving something to drink to the first person who enters the house.

Hoi polloi (Gr., the many). The masses, usually used in a slighting sense. At Cambridge, a name given to poll men. See POLL.

If by the people you understand the multitude, the hoi polloi, 'tis no matter what they think; They are sometimes in the right, sometimes in the wrong; their judgement is a mere lottery.

DRYDEN: Essay of Dramatic Poesy (1668).

Hoi-toity. A reduplicated word (like harum-scarum, mangle-mangle, hugger-mugger, etc.), probably formed from the obsolete verb hoit, to romp about noisily. It is used as an adjective, meaning "stuck up", haughty, or petulant; as a noun, meaning a good romp or frolic; and as an interjection expressing disapproval or contempt of one's airs, assumptions, etc.

See the quotation from Selden given under CUSHION DANCE, where hoyte-cum-toyte is used of rowdy behaviour.

Hokey cokey. A light-hearted dance popular during the 1940s dependent on the song and tune of this name.

Hokey-pokey. An early form of cheap ice-cream sold by street-vendors until the 1920s. Possibly a corruption of "Ecce, Ecce" (Look, Look), a cry with which Italian hawkers in London used to call attention to their wares; others derive it from HOCUS FOCUS.

Holborn. A thoroughfare and district of London taking its name from the Holebourne (the stream in the hollow), which was the name of the upper part of the Fleet River.

To ride backwards up Holborn Hill.

To go to be hanged. The way to TYBURN from NEWGATE was up Holborn Hill which led steeply from Farringdon Street to what is now Holborn Circus, and criminals used to sit or stand with their backs to the horse when drawn to the place of execution.

The spanning of the valley by Holborn Viaduct (1867-1869) did away with the old hill.

Hold. He is not fit to hold a candle to him. See under CANDLE.

Hold hard! Stop; go easy; keep a firm hold, seat, or footing, or else there is danger of being overthrown.

Hold off! Keep at a distance.

Hold the fort! Maintain your position at all costs. Immortalized as a phrase by General Sherman (during the American CIVIL WAR), who signalled it to General Corse from the top of Kennesaw in 1864. To hold the fort means to be left to keep things running during the absence of others.

Hold your horses. See under HORSE.

To be left holding the baby, or bag. To be left in the LURCH, to carry the responsibility for faults committed by others.

To cry hold. To give the order to stop; in the old TOURNAMENTS, when the umpires wished to stop the contest they cried out, "Hold!"

Lay on, Macduff
And damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough!"

SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, V, viii.

To have, or hold under one's girdle. To have in subjection.

To hold the candle to one, a candle to the devil. See under CANDLE.

To hold forth. To speak in public, to harangue, to declaim. An author also holds forth certain opinions or ideas in his book, i.e. exhibits, or holds them out to view.

To hold good. To be valid, or applicable.

To hold in. To restrain. The allusion is to horses reined in tightly.

To hold in esteem. To regard with esteem.

To hold on one's way. To proceed steadily; to go on without heeding interruptions.

To hold one guilty. To adjudge or regard as guilty.

To hold one in hand, or in play. To keep control of; keep in expectation; to amuse in order to get some advantage.

To hold one's own. To maintain one's own position, opinion, advantage; to stand one's ground.

To hold one's tongue. To keep silence. In Coverdale's BIBLE, where the Authorized Version has, "But Jesus held his peace" (Matt. xxvi, 63), the reading is, "Jesus helde his tonge."

To hold out. To endure, persist, not to succumb.

To hold over. To keep back, retain in reserve, defer.

To hold up. To stop, as a highwayman did, with the intention of robbing. In this connexion the order "Hold 'em up!" or "Hold up your hands!" means that the victim must hold them above his head to ensure that he is not reaching for a weapon. Cp. HIJACKER. A hold-up is therefore an outdoor robbery where people or vehicles are held up. It also means a delay or obstacle.

To hold water. To bear close inspection; to be thoroughly sound and consistent, as a vessel that holds water is sound. In this sense it is usually used negatively, as "That statement will not hold water," i.e., on examination it will be proved faulty. The expression also means to stay the progress of a boat by stemming the current with the oars.

Holdfast. That which is used to secure something in place, a cramp, a hook, etc.; a support.

Brag is a good dog, but Holdfast is better. See BRAG.

Hole. A better 'ole. Any situation that is better than the present one. It originated in World War I from a drawing by Bruce Bairnsfather, depicting "Old Bill" taking cover in a wet and muddy shell-hole and rebutting the complaints of his companion with the remark, "If you know a better 'ole go to it."

A hole and corner business. Something clandestine and underhand.

In a hole. In an awkward predicament; in a mess.

To hole out. In golf, to drive the ball into the appropriate hole of the course.

To make a hole in something. To consume a considerable portion of it.

To pick holes in. To find fault with. The older phrase was to pick a hole in one's coat, thus a hole in one's coat is a blot on one's reputation.

And shall such mob as thou, not worth a groat,
Dare pick a hole in such a great man's coat.

PETER PINDAR: Epistle to John Nichols.

Foxhole. An American name for a small slit-trench to hold one man.

There are no atheists in foxholes. See ATHEISTS.

Holger Danske. The national hero of Denmark. See OGIER THE DANE.

Holiday. Give the boys a holiday. A phrase attributed to Anaxagoras (see DYING SAYINGS). The old custom of so marking a noteworthy event has always been popular with pupils, but the unexpected holiday is less readily given now that most schools are subject to closer bureaucratic regulation.

Holiday speeches. Fine or well-turned speeches or phrases; complimentary speeches. We have also "holiday manners", "holiday clothes", meaning the best we have.

With many holiday and lady terms
He question'd me.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, I, iii.

Holidays, or Holy days of Obligation.

Days on which Roman Catholics are bound to hear MASS and to abstain "from servile work". These Feasts of Obligation vary slightly in different countries. In ENGLAND and WALES they are: all SUNDAYS, CHRISTMAS DAY, the EPIPHANY (6 January), ASCENSION DAY (40th day after EASTER Sunday), CORPUS CHRISTI (Thursday after Trinity Sunday), SS. PETER and PAUL (29 June), the ASSUMPTION of B.V.M. (15 August), ALL SAINTS (1 November), St. JOSEPH (19 March) and St. PATRICK (17 March) are observed in IRELAND and SCOTLAND, the former and the feasts of the Octave Day of Christmas (1 January) and the IMMACULATE CONCEPTION (8 December). Epiphany, Corpus Christi, SS. Peter and Paul, and St. Joseph are not kept in the U.S.A.

Holland, the cloth, is so called because it was originally made in, and imported from, Holland; its full name was holland cloth.

Hollands, or properly Hollands gin, is the Dut. Hollandsch geneveer.

Hollow. I beat him hollow. Completely, thoroughly. Hollow here is perhaps a corruption of Wholly.

Holly. The custom of decorating churches and houses with holly at CHRISTMAS-time is of great antiquity and may derive from its earlier use by the Romans in the festival of the SATURNALIA, which occurred at the same season, or from the old Teutonic custom. It is held to be unlucky by some to bring it into the house before Christmas Eve.

See also IVY; MISTLETOE.

Holmes. See SHERLOCK HOLMES.

Holy. Holy Alliance. A treaty signed originally by the rulers of Austria, Prussia, and Russia in 1815 (after the fall of NAPOLEON) and joined by all the kings of Europe, except Great Britain and the President of the Swiss Republic. Sponsored by the Tsar Alexander, the rulers undertook to base their relations "upon the sublime truths which the Holy religion of Our Saviour teaches". In effect it became a reactionary influence seeking to maintain autocratic rule.

Holy Boys, The. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Holy City. That city which the religious consider most especially connected with their faith. Thus:

Benares is the Holy City of the Hindus.

Cuzco of the ancient Incas.

Fez of the Western Arabs.

Jerusalem of the Jews and Christians.

Mecca and Medina as the places of the birth and burial of MOHAMMED.

Figuratively, the Holy City is HEAVEN.

Holy Club. The nickname given to the group of earnest Christians formed at Oxford in 1729 by Charles and John Wesley and joined by George Whitefield. They held meetings to study the Scriptures, fasted, and carried out pastoral work. See METHODISTS.

Holy Coat. Both the cathedral at Trèves (Trier) and the parish church of Argenteuil claim the ownership of Christ's seamless coat, which the soldiers would not rend, and therefore cast lots for it (John xix, 23, 25). The traditions date from about the 12th century and the coat was supposed to have been found and preserved by the Empress HELENA in the 4th century. There are other places claiming this relic.

Holy Cross, or Holy Rood Day. 14 September, the day of the Feast of the EXALTATION OF THE CROSS, called by the Anglo-Saxons "Roodmass-day".

It was on this day that Jews in ROME used to be compelled to go to church and listen to a sermon—a custom abolished about 1840 by Pope Gregory XVI. It is the subject of Browning's Holy-Cross Day (1845).

Holy Family. Properly the infant Jesus, MARY, and JOSEPH; in art the infant Saviour and His attendants, usually Joseph, Mary, Elisabeth, Anne the mother of Mary, and JOHN THE BAPTIST.

Holy Ghost. The third person of the TRINITY, the Divine Spirit, also called the Holy Spirit; represented in art as a dove.

The seven gifts of the Holy Ghost are: (1) Counsel, (2) the fear of the Lord, (3) fortitude, (4) piety, (5) understanding, (6) wisdom, and (7) knowledge.

The Procession of the Holy Ghost. See FILIOQUE CONTROVERSY.

The Sin against the Holy Ghost. Much has been written about this sin, the definition of which has been based upon several passages in the GOSPELS such as Matt. xii, 31, 32, and Mark iii, 29, and it has been interpreted as the wilful denouncing as evil that which is manifestly good, thus revealing a state of heart beyond the divine influence. Borrow in his Lavengro draws a graphic picture inspired by fear of this sin and its consequences, the danger of "eternal damnation".

The Order of the Holy Ghost. A French order of knighthood (Ordre du Saint-Esprit), instituted by Henry III in 1578 to replace the Order of St. MICHAEL. It was limited to 100 KNIGHTS and was not revived after the revolution of 1830. Cp. CORDON BLEU.

Holy Grail. See GRAIL.

Holy Innocents, or Childermas. This Feast is celebrated on 28 December, to commemorate Herod's massacre of the children of Bethlehem of two years old and under, with the design of killing the infant Jesus (Matt. ii, 16). It used to be the custom on Childermas to whip the children (and even adults) "that the memory of Herod's murder of the Innocents might stick the closer". This practice forms the plot of several tales in the DECAMERON.

Holy Island, or Lindisfarne, in the North Sea, some 9 miles south-east from Berwick-on-Tweed. It became the SEE of St. Aidan in 635 and a missionary centre. St. CHAD, St. Oswy, St. Egbert and St. WILFRID were among those educated there. It was the see of St. CUTHBERT (685-687) and is now in the diocese of Durham. At low-water it can be reached across the sands by a causeway.

IRELAND was called the Holy Island on account of its numerous saints.

Guernsey was so called in the 10th century in consequence of the great number of monks residing there.

The Holy Land (1) Christians call Palestine the Holy Land, because it was the scene of Christ's birth, ministry, and death.

(2) Mohammedans call MECCA the Holy Land, because MOHAMMED was born there.

(3) The Chinese Buddhists call India the Holy Land, because it was the native land of Sakya-muni, the BUDDHA.

(4) The Greeks considered Elis as Holy Land, from the temple of Olympian ZEUS and the sacred festival held there. See OLYMPIC GAMES.

The Holy League. A combination formed by Pope Julius II in 1511 with Venice, Ferdinand of Aragon and the Emperor Maximilian of Germany to drive the French out of Italy. ENGLAND joined subsequently.

Among other leagues of the same name, that formed by Henry III of France in 1576, with the support of Henry of Guise and the JESUITS, is noteworthy. It was to defend the Holy Catholic Church against the encroachments of the reformers, i.e. to destroy the HUGUENOTS.

The Holy Maid of Kent. Elizabeth Barton (c. 1506-1534) who incited the Roman Catholics to resist the REFORMA-

TION, and imagined that she acted under inspiration. Having announced the doom and speedy death of Henry VIII for his marriage with Anne Boleyn, she was hanged at TYBURN in 1534.

Holy of Holies. The innermost apartment of the Jewish temple, in which the Ark of the Covenant was kept, and into which only the high priest was allowed to enter, and that but once a year on the Day of Atonement (see YOM KIPPUR). Hence, a private apartment, a sanctum sanctorum.

The Holy Office. See INQUISITION.

Holy Orders. See ORDERS.

Holy Places. A name particularly applied to those places in Palestine and especially Jerusalem, associated with some of the chief events in the life of Christ, his death, and Resurrection. Jerusalem is also a HOLY CITY for Jews and MOSLEMS and in the course of history this has produced bitter quarrels. Christian pilgrimages to the Holy Places were a familiar feature of mediæval life and the CRUSADES began when Moslems interfered with pilgrims visiting the HOLY SEPULCHRE.

The Crimean War (1854-1856) had its origins in a dispute between Orthodox and Roman Catholic rights over the Holy Places, which included the churches of the Holy Sepulchre and the Virgin in Jerusalem, GOLGOTHA, and the church of the Nativity at Bethlehem.

Holy Roman Empire. The mediæval Western Empire, said to be neither Holy, nor Roman, nor an Empire. See EMPEROR.

Holy Rood Day. See HOLY CROSS DAY.

Holy Saturday. See HOLY WEEK.

Holy See. The SEE of ROME. Often used to denote the Papacy and Papal jurisdiction, authority, etc.

Holy Sepulchre. The cave in Jerusalem, where according to tradition Christ was entombed, said to have been found by St. HELENA. Successive churches have been built on the site which includes that of CALVARY.

The Holy Spirit. See HOLY GHOST.

Holy Thursday. In England an old name for ASCENSION DAY, the Thursday next but one before WHITSUN; by Roman Catholics and others MAUNDY THURSDAY, i.e. the Thursday before GOOD FRIDAY, is meant. See also IN CENA DOMINI.

Holy Trinity. See TRINITY.

Holy War. A war in which religious motivation plays, or is purported to play, a prominent part. The CRUSADES, the THIRTY YEARS WAR, the wars against the ALBIGENSES, etc., were so called.

The Jehad, or Holy War of the Moslems, is a call to the whole Islamic world to take arms against the Unbelievers.

John Bunyan's Holy War, published in 1682, tells of the capture of Mansoul by SATAN and its recapture by the forces of Shaddai (Emmanuel).

Holy Water. Water blessed by a priest for religious purposes. It is particularly used in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH at the Asperges, the sprinkling of the altar and congregation before High MASS, and generally in the Church at blessings, dedications, etc., and kept in Holy Water stoups near church doors for the use of those entering.

As the Devil loves Holy Water. See DEVIL PHRASES under DEVIL.

Holy water sprinkler. A military club of mediæval times, set with spikes. So called facetiously because it makes the blood to flow as water sprinkled by an aspergillum.

Holy Week. The last week in LENT. It begins on PALM SUNDAY; the fourth day is called SPY WEDNESDAY; the fifth is MAUNDY THURSDAY; the sixth is GOOD FRIDAY; and the last "Holy Saturday", or the "Great Sabbath".

Holy Week has been called Hebdomada Muta; Hebdomada Inofficiosa; Hebdomada Penitentialis; Hebdomada Indulgentiæ; Hebdomada Luctuosa; Hebdomada Nigra; and Hebdomada Ultima.

Holy Writ. The BIBLE.

Holy Year. See JUBILEE.

Homburg. A soft felt hat popularized by Edward VII. It was originally made at Homburg in Prussia where the king "took the waters" (see under WATER).

Home. At home. At one's own home and prepared to receive visitors. An at home is a more or less informal reception for which arrangements have been made. To be at home to somebody is to be ready and willing to receive him; to be at home with a subject is to be quite conversant with it.

Not at home. A familiar locution for "not prepared to receive visitors"; it does not necessarily mean "away from home". "Say I am not at home", is an instruction often given to the person sent to fob off a caller.

There is an old story that Scipio Nasica called on the poet Ennius and was told by a slave "Ennius is not at home," although Nasica espied him in the house. When Ennius returned the visit later, Nasica called out, "Not at home." Ennius recognized the voice and remonstrated. Nasica replied, "You are a nice fellow, why, I believed your slave, and you won't believe me."

Home, sweet home. This popular English song first appeared in the opera Clari, the Maid of Milan (COVENT GARDEN, 1823). The words were by John Howard Payne (an American), and the music by Sir Henry Bishop, who professed to have founded it on a Sicilian air.

One's long home. The grave.

Man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets.—Eccles, xii, 5.

To come home to one. To reach one's heart; to become thoroughly understood or realized.

I doe now publish my Essayes; which, of all my other workes have benee most Currant: For that, as it seemes they come home to Mens Businesse, and Bosomes.

BACON:

Epistle Dedicatorie to the "Essayes" (1625).

To come home to roost. Usually said of a lie, fault, misdeed, etc., which eventually rebounds or "catches up" on its perpetrator. "His chickens have come home to roost" is a common form of the expression, "his chickens" being his misdeeds, mistakes, etc.

To make oneself at home. To dispense with ceremony in another person's house, to act as though one were at home.

Who goes home? When the HOUSE OF COMMONS adjourns at night the door-keeper asks this question of the members. In bygone days, when danger lurked in the unlit streets from cut-throats and thieves, the cry was raised to enable them to depart in groups, and to escort the SPEAKER to his residence.

Home Counties. The counties nearest London; formerly Kent, Surrey, Essex, Middlesex; now Buckinghamshire, Berkshire, Hertfordshire and Sussex are usually also included in the term, but Middlesex was swallowed up by the Greater London Council in 1965.

Home Guard. In Britain, the force of volunteers raised early in World War II and trained for defence against the threat of invasion. Originally known as the L.D.V. (Local Defence Volunteers), it was renamed the "Home Guard" at Winston Churchill's suggestion.

Home Rule. The name given by Isaac Butt, its first leader, to the movement for securing governmental independence for IRELAND under the British crown, after failures of earlier movements to secure the repeal of the Act of Union of 1800. The Home Government Association was founded in 1870 (renamed the Home Rule Association in 1873) and when C. S. Parnell became leader in 1879 its policy of obstruction in PARLIAMENT became a growing bugbear to English governments. A Home Rule Bill was eventually passed in 1914 but its implementation postponed by the advent of World War I. The Easter rising of 1916, the activities of SINN FÉIN and resistance in ULSTER led to the establishment of the Irish Free State in 1921, but Northern Ireland continued to be represented in the British Parliament.

Homer. The traditional author of the ILIAD and the ODYSSEY. Estimates of his birth date vary between 685 B.C. and 1159 B.C. In antiquity seven cities claimed the honour of being Homer's birthplace (Argos, ATHENS, Chios, COLOPHON, Rhodes, Salamis in Cyprus, and Smyrna). See also MÆONIDES; SCIO'S BLIND OLD BARD.

PLATO has been called the Homer of philosophers, Milton the English Homer, and OSSIAN the Gaelic Homer. BYRON called Fielding the prose Homer of human nature, and Dryden said that "SHAKESPEARE was the Homer, or father, of our dramatic poets."

The Casket Homer. An edition corrected by ARISTOTLE, which ALEXANDER THE GREAT always carried about with him, and laid under his pillow at night with his sword. After the battle of Arbela, a golden casket richly studded with gems was found in the tent of DARIUS; and Alexander being asked to what purpose it should be assigned, replied, "There is but one thing in the world worthy of so costly a depository," saying which he placed therein his edition of Homer.

Homer a cure for the ague. Among the old cures it was held that, if the fourth book of the ILIAD was laid under the head of a patient, it would provide instant remedy. This book contains the cure of MENELAUS (when wounded by Pandarus) by Machaon, "a son of ÆSCULAPIUS".

Homer sometimes nods. Even the best of us is liable to make mistakes. The line is from HORACE's De Arte Poetica (359):

Indignor quandoque bonus dormitat Homerus,
Verum operi longo fas est obrepere somnum.

(I think it shame when the worthy Homer nods; but in so long a work it is allowable if drowsiness comes on.)

Honeysuckle. See MISNOMERS.

Hong Merchants. Those Chinese merchants who, under licence from the Imperial Government of China, held the monopoly of trade with Europeans, and under the Hong system, were restricted to Canton. The restriction was abolished in 1842 after the OPIUM WAR. Hong or hang means row, range; hence a warehouse, particularly one for foreign merchants.

Honi soit qui mal y pense (on' ē swa kē māl ē pons). The motto of the Most Noble Order of the GARTER, usually rendered as "Evil be to him who evil thinks," although "shame to him" would be more accurate.

Honky-tonk. A disreputable night club or low roadhouse. A place of cheap entertainment. A honky-tonk piano is one from which the felts of the hammers have been removed, thus making the instrument more percussive and giving it a noticeably different tone quality. Such pianos are often used for playing ragtime and popular melodies in public houses.

Honor. A feudal term for a number of KNIGHT's fees administered as a unit, an aggregation of manors. It gave "honour" to its holder, hence the name.

Honorificabilitudinitatibus. A made-up word on the Lat. honorificabilitudo, honourableness, found in SHAKESPEARE and elsewhere. See LONG WORDS.

Thou art not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatibus.—Love's Labour's Lost, V, i.

Honour. An affair of honour. A dispute to be settled by a duel.

Duels were generally provoked by offences against the arbitrary rules of courtesy and etiquette, not recognized at law and thus to be settled by private combat. See LAWS OF HONOUR, below.

Debts of honour. Debts contracted by betting or gambling, so called because these debts cannot be enforced as such by law.

Last honours. Funeral rites; last tributes of respect to the dead.

Laws of honour. Certain conventional rules which the fashionable world tacitly holds with regard to honourable conduct; the accepted conventions for the conducting of duels.

Legion of Honour. See under LEGION.

Point of honour. An obligation which is binding because its violation would offend some conscientious scruple or notion of self-respect.

Word of honour. A pledge which cannot be broken without disgrace.

Honours. Titles, distinctions, civilities, etc. At bridge the honours are the five highest trump cards—ace, king, queen, knave (or jack), and ten.

Crushed by his honours. The allusion is to the legend of the Roman damsel, Tarpeia, who agreed to open the gates of Rome to King Tattius, provided his soldiers would give her the ornaments which they wore on their arms (meaning their bracelets). As they entered, they threw their shields on her and crushed her, saying as they did so, "These are the ornaments worn by Sabines on their arms." See also TARPEIAN ROCK.

Draco, the Athenian legislator (see DRACONIAN CODE), was crushed to death in the theatre of Ægina, by the number of caps and cloaks showered on him by the audience, as a mark of their high appreciation of his merits. A similar story is told of the mad Emperor, ELAGABALUS, who smothered the leading citizens of Rome with roses.

Honours of war. The privilege, allowed to an enemy on capitulation, of being allowed to retain his weapons. This is the highest honour a victor can pay a vanquished foe. Sometimes the troops so treated are allowed to march with all their arms, drums beating, and colours flying.

To do the honours. To render necessary civilities, courtesies, hospitalities, etc., as at a reception or entertainment.

Honourable. As applied to the nobility, see COURTESY TITLES. This title of honour is also given to the children of life peers, to MAIDS OF HONOUR, and to Justices of the High Court, except Lords Justices and Justices of Appeal. In the HOUSE OF COMMONS one member speaks of another as "the honourable member for—". In the U.S.A. "honourable" is a courtesy title applied to persons of distinction in legal or civic life. The title was also borne by the East India Company (see JOHN COMPANY).

Most Honourable. The form of address for a MARQUESS.

Right Honourable. A prefix to the title of EARLS, VISCOUNTS, BARONS, and the younger sons of DUKES and MARQUESSSES, Lords Justices and Justices of Appeal, all privy councillors, some lord mayors and lord provosts, and certain other civic dignitaries, and some COMMONWEALTH ministers.

Honourable Artillery Company. A very ancient regiment in the British Army, having been founded by Henry VIII, in 1537, as the Guild of St. George. In Tudor and Stuart days the officers for the TRAIN-BANDS of London were supplied by the H.A.C., in whose ranks Milton, Wren, and Samuel Pepys served at one time or another. It has the privilege of marching through the CITY with fixed bayonets.

In 1638 Robert Keayne, a member of the London company, founded the Ancient and Honourable Artillery Company of Boston, Mass., the oldest military unit in the U.S.A.

Hooch. An American slang term for whisky or crude raw spirits, often made surreptitiously or obtained illegally. The word comes from the Alaskan Indian hoochinoo, a crude distilled liquor.

Hood. The hood, or cowl does not make the monk. It is a man's way of life, not what he professes to be, that really matters; from the Lat. Cucullus non facit monachum. The expression is probably derived from the lines in St. Anselm's Carmen de Contemptu Mundi (11th century):

Non tonsura facit monachum, non horrida vestis;
Sed virtus animi, perpetuusque rigor.

Hood, Robin. See ROBIN HOOD.

Hoodman Blind. Now called BLIND-MAN'S BUFF.

What devil was't

That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman-blind?

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, III, iv.

Hook. Above your hook. Beyond your comprehension; beyond your mark. Perhaps an allusion to hat-pegs fixed in rows, the higher ones being beyond the reach of small people.

By hook or by crook. Either rightfully or wrongfully; by some means or other; one way or another. It possibly derives from an old manorial custom which authorized tenants to take as much firewood as could be reached down by a shepherd's crook and cut down with a bill-hook.

Dynmure wood was ever open and common to the . . . inhabitants of Bodmin . . . to bear away upon their backs a burden of lop, crop, hook, crook, and bag wood.

Bodmin Register (1525).

He is off the hooks. Unhinged, done for, laid on the shelf, superseded, dead; the hooks being the pieces of iron on which the hinges of a gate rest.

Hook it! Take your hook! Sling your hook! Be off! Buzz off! Go away!

Hook, line and sinker. To swallow a tale hook, line and sinker is to be extremely gullible, like the hungry fish that swallows not only the baited hook, but the lead weight, and some of the line as well.

On one's own hook. On one's own responsibility or account. An angler's phrase.

To be hooked. To be caught, usually of a man "hooked" by a woman, i.e., secured for marriage.

With a hook at the end. Assent given with a mental reservation. It was a custom in some parts for a witness, when he swore the oath falsely, to crook his finger into a sort of hook, with the idea of annulling the perjury. It is a crooked oath, an oath "with a hook at the end".

A hook-up is a radio term for an arrangement of wiring for extended transmission or reception; it is applied to a network of radio stations connected for the transmission of the same programme.

Hookey Walker. See WALKER.

Hookey, or hooky. To play hookey. To play truant, from the idea that "to hook" something is to make off with it.

Hooligan. A violent young rough; of late 19th-century origin from the name of a family of such people. Hence the word hooliganism.

The original Hooligans were a spirited Irish family of that name whose proceedings enlivened the drab monotony of life in Southwark about fourteen years ago. The word is younger than the Australian larrikin, of doubtful origin, but older than Fr. apache.

ERNEST WEEKLEY: Romance of Words (1912).

Hooped Pots. Drinking pots at one time were marked with bands or hoops, set at equal distances, so that when two or more drank from the same tankard no one should take more than his share. Jack Cade promises his followers that "there shall be in England seven halfpenny loaves sold for a penny; the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops; and I will make it a felony to drink small beer." (SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. II, IV, ii.)

I beleeve hoopes in quart pots were invented to that ende, that every man should take his hoopes, and no more.

NASH: Pierce Pennilesse (1592).

Hooray. Normally used as an exclamation of joy, approbation, etc., but in Australia and New Zealand it is used as a farewell. Why this has come about is obscure, but it may have the implication of encouragement as a joyful send-off.

Hoosier. An inhabitant of the state of Indiana, the Hoosier State. Probably from hoosier, a mountaineer, an extension of hoojee, hoojin, a dirty person or tramp. The south of Indiana was mainly settled by Kentucky mountaineers.

Hoover. The trade name of a firm of vacuum-cleaner makers which has come to be used as a noun and a verb relating to vacuum-cleaners and vacuum-cleaning in general.

Hop. Hop it. Be off with you, buzz off, go away.

To hop the twig. Usually to die; but sometimes to run away from one's creditors, as a bird eludes a fowler.

There are numerous phrases to express the cessation of life; for example, "to kick the bucket" (see under BUCKET); "to lay down one's knife and fork"; "to peg out" (from cribbage); "to snuff it" (see under SNUFF); "to fall asleep"; "to enter Charon's boat"; "to give up the ghost" (see under GHOST); etc.

Hopping mad. Very angry, jumping mad. So mad as to jump or hop about.

Hop-o'-my-thumb. A pygmy or dwarf. Cp. TOM THUMB.

Plaine friend, Hop-o'-my-Thumb, know you who we are?—Taming of a Shrew (Anon., 1594).

Hope. See PANDORA'S BOX.

Band of Hope. See BAND OF HOPE.

Bard of Hope. Thomas Campbell (1777-1844) was so called on account of his poem The Pleasures of Hope (1799).

Hopkinsians. A sect of Independent Calvinists (see CALVINISM) who followed the teachings of Samuel Hopkins (1721-1803) a minister of Newport, Rhode Island. He was one of the first NEW ENGLAND Congregational ministers to oppose slavery. His theological teachings are to be found in his System of Doctrines contained in Divine Revelation (1793).

Horace. Quintus Horatius Flaccus (65 B.C.—8 B.C.), the Roman lyric poet.

Horace of England. George, Duke of Buckingham, preposterously declared Cowley to be the PINDAR, Horace, and VIRGIL of England. Ben Jonson was nicknamed Horace by Dekker in the so-called "War of the Theatres".

Horace of France. Jean Macrinus, or Salmon (1490-1557); and Pierre Jean de Béranger (1780-1857), also called the French Burns.

Horace of Spain. The brothers Lupericio (1559-1613) and Bartolomé de Argensola (1562-1631).

Horn. Astolpho's horn. Logistilla gave Astolpho at parting a horn that had the virtue of being able to appal and put to flight the boldest KNIGHT or most savage beast (ARIOSTO: Orlando Furioso, Bk. VIII).

The Horn Gate. See DREAMS, THE GATES OF.

Horn of Fidelity. MORGAN LE FAY sent a horn to King ARTHUR, which had the following "virtue": No lady could drink out of it who was not "to her husband true"; all others who attempted to drink were sure to spill what it contained. This horn was carried to King MARK, and "his queene with a hundred ladies more" tried the experiment, but only four managed to "drink cleare". ARIOSTO's enchanted cup possessed a similar spell.

Horn of Plenty. AMALTHEA's horn, an emblem of plenty. CERES is drawn with a ram's horn in her left arm, filled with fruits and flowers; sometimes they are being poured on the earth, and sometimes they are piled high in the horn as in a basket.

The horns of a dilemma. See DILEMMA.

The horns of Moses' face. See MOSES.

Horn with horn, or horn under horn. The promiscuous feeding of bulls and cows, or, in fact, all horned beasts that are allowed to run together on the same common.

Horne and Thorne shall make England forlorne. An old saying popularly held to have been fulfilled by the enclosures of the 16th century, when sheep and quickthorn hedges seemed to be devouring the open fields at an ever-increasing rate.

My horn hath He exalted (I Sam. ii, 10; Ps. lxxxix, 24, etc.). He has given me the victory, increased my sway. Thus, Lift not up your horn on high (Ps. lxxv, 5) means, do not behave scornfully, maliciously, or arrogantly. In these passages "horn" symbolizes power, and its exaltation signifies victory or deliverance. In Daniel's vision (Dan. vii, 7) the "fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly," had ten horns, symbolic of its great might.

To come, or be squeezed out at the little end of the horn. To come off badly in some affair; get the worst of it; fail conspicuously.

To draw in one's horns. To retrench, to curtail one's expenditure; to retract or mitigate an expressed opinion; to restrain pride. The allusion is to the snail.

To make horns at. To thrust out the fist with the first and fourth fingers extended, the others doubled in. An ancient gesture of insult to a person implying that he is a CUCKOLD.

He would have laine withe the Countess of Nottingham, making horns in derision at her husband the Lord High Admiral.

SIR B. PEYTON: The Divine Catastrophe of the . . . House of Stuarts (1652).

To put to the horn. To denounce as a rebel or pronounce as an outlaw, for not answering to a summons. In SCOTLAND the messenger-at-arms used to go to the Cross at Edinburgh and give three blasts with his horn when proclaiming judgment of outlawry.

To show one's horns. To let one's evil intentions appear. The allusion, like that in "to show the cloven hoof", is to the DEVIL—"Old Hornie" (see under AULD).

To take the bull by the horns. See under BULL.

To the horns of the altar. Usque ad aras amicus, Your friend even to the horns of the altar, i.e. through thick and thin. In swearing the ancient Romans held the horns of the altar, and one who did so in testimony of friendship could not break his oath without incurring the vengeance of the gods.

The altar in the TEMPLE OF SOLOMON had a projection at each of the four corners called a "horn". The "horns" were regarded as specially sacred, and were probably ornamental. They were smeared with the blood of sacrifices (Exod. xxix, 12) and criminals were safe from vengeance if they grasped these horns.

And Adonijah feared because of Solomon, and arose, and went, and caught hold on the horns of the altar.

I Kings i, 50.

To wear the horns. To be a CUCKOLD. This old term is connected with the chase. In the rutting season one stag selects several females for his consorts. If challenged and beaten by another stag he is without associates unless he defeats another stag in turn. As stags are horned, and have their mates taken from them by their fellows, the application is palpable. See also ACTÆON.

Another explanation is that it is due to the former practice of engrafting the spurs of a castrated cock on the root of the excised comb, where they grew and became "horns." In support of this it is noteworthy that Hahnrei, the German equivalent for cuckold, originally signified a capon.

Auld Hornie. See AULD.

Cape Horn. So named by Schouten, a Dutch mariner, who first doubled it (1616). He was a native of Hoorn, in north Holland, and named the cape after his native place.

Horn Child. An early 14th-century metrical romance with a story closely related to that of KING HORN.

Horn Dance. See ABBOTTS BROMLEY.

Hornbook. A thin board about nine inches long and five or six wide (with a handle) serving as backing to a leaf of vellum or sheet of paper on which was usually written (later printed) the alphabet, an exorcism, the Lord's Prayer, and the Roman numerals, the whole being covered by a thin piece of transparent horn. The handle had a hole in it so that it could be tied to a schoolchild's girdle. Hornbooks continued to be used in England until well into the 18th century. See CHRIS-CROSS.

He teaches boys the hornbook.

SHAKESPEARE: Love's Labour's Lost, V, i.

Hornpipe. An obsolete wooden pipe with a reed mouthpiece at one end and horn at the other. The dance of this name, once particularly associated with mariners, was originally accompanied by this instrument.

Horner, Little Jack. See under JACK.

Horoscope (Gr. horoskopos, hora, an hour; skopos, observer). The observation of the heavens at the hour of a person's birth, used by astrologers for predicting the future events of his life. Also the figure or diagram of the twelve houses of heaven, showing the positions of the planets at a given time as used by astrologers for calculating nativities and working out answers to horary questions. See HOUSES, ASTROLOGICAL.

Hors de combat (ôr di kom' ba) (Fr. out of battle). Incapable of taking any further part in the fight; disabled.

He [Cobbett] levels his antagonists, he lays his friends low, and puts his own party hors de combat.

HAZLITT: Table Talk, Essay VI.

Hors d'œuvre (ôr dêrvr) (Fr., outside the work). Something served as a relish at the beginning of a dinner to whet the appetite, such as anchovies, caviar, continental sausages, ham, soused herrings, etc. In French the expression also means an outbuilding and a literary digression.

Horsa. See HENGIST.

Horse. According to classical mythology, POSEIDON created the horse; and according to VIRGIL, the first person that drove a four-in-hand was ERICHTONIUS. In Christian art, the horse is held to represent courage and generosity. It is an attribute of St. MARTIN, St. Maurice, St. GEORGE, and St. VICTOR, all of whom are represented on horseback.

It is a not uncommon emblem in the CATACOMBS and probably typifies the swiftness of life.

The use of horse attributively usually denotes something that is coarse, inferior, unrefined, as in horse-parsley, horse-radish, horse mushroom.

The fifteen points of a good horse:

A good horse sholde have three propyrties of a man, three of a woman, three of a foze, three of a hare, and three of an asse.

Of a man. Bolde, prowde, and hardye.

Horse

Of a woman. Fayre-breasted, faire of haire, and easy to move.

Of a foxe. A fair taylle, short eers, with a good trotte.

Of a hare. A grate eye, a dry head, and well rennyng.

Of an asse. A bygge chynn, a flat legge, and a good hoof.

Wynkyn de Worde (1496).

The brazen horse. A magic horse given to CAMBUSCAN by the king of Arabia and India. By giving it instructions and turning a pin in its ear it would carry its rider anywhere.

Or, if you list to bid him thennes gon,
Trill this pin, and he will vanish anon.

CHAUCER: The Squire's Tale (Pars Prima).

Iron horse. A steam locomotive.

Flesh-eating horses. The horses of Diomedes, tyrant of Thrace, who fed his horses on the strangers who visited his kingdom. HERCULES vanquished the tyrant and gave the carcass to the horses to eat.

The Pale Horse. Death. "I looked and behold a pale horse; and his name that sat on him was Death" (Rev. vi, 8). See also FOUR HORSEMEN OF THE APOCALYPSE under FOUR.

The White Horse. The standard of the ancient Saxons; hence the emblem of Kent.

The name is also given to the hillside figures formed by removing the turf, thus revealing the underlying chalk. The most famous of these is at Uffington, Berkshire, traditionally said to commemorate ALFRED THE GREAT's victory over the Danes in 871. It measures some 350 feet from nose to tail and gives its name to the Vale of White Horse, west of Abingdon. The scouring of the White Horse was once a local ceremony.

There are other white horses, that at Westbury, Wiltshire, being the best known.

A galloping white horse is the device of the House of Hanover and, during the reign of the first two Georges, the White Horse replaced the Royal Oak of Stuart fame on many PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGNS.

White horses. A poetic phrase for the white-capped breakers as they roll in from the sea.

O'Donohue's white horses. Waves which come on a windy day, crested with foam. The hero reappears every seventh year on MAY-DAY, and is seen gliding, to sweet but unearthly music, over the lakes of Killarney, on his favourite white horse. He is preceded by fairies who strew spring flowers in his path. Moore has a poem on the subject in his Irish Melodies.

Winged horse. See PEGASUS.

The Wooden Horse, called Clavileno el

Aligero, in DON QUIXOTE, is governed by a peg in its forehead and has the same magical qualities as the BRAZEN HORSE given to CAMBUSCAN. The similar Magic Horse in the ARABIAN NIGHTS was of ivory and ebony.

A former instrument of military punishment was called a wooden horse. The victim was seated on the horse's back, a beam of ridged oak, with a firelock tied to both feet to keep him in this painful position. This was known as riding the wooden horse.

Before the days of iron and steel construction a ship was sometimes called a wooden horse.

The Wooden Horse of Troy. VIRGIL tells us that, after the death of HECTOR, ULYSSES had a monster wooden horse made by Epios and gave out that it was an offering to the gods to secure a prosperous voyage back to Greece. The Trojans dragged the horse within their city, but it was full of Grecian soldiers, including MENELAUS, who stole out at night, slew the guards, opened the city gates, and set fire to TROY.

Famous Horses of Myth and History.

In classical mythology the names given to the horses of HELIOS, the Sun, are:

Actæon (effulgence); Æthon (fiery red); Amethea (no loiterer); Bronte (thunderer); Lrythreos (red producer); Lampos (shining like a lamp); Phlegon (the burning one); and Purocis (fiery hot).

AURORA's horses were: Abraxa, Edos (dawn), and Phaethon (the shining one).

PLUTO's horses were: Abaster (away from the stars); Abatos (inaccessible); Æton (swift as an eagle); and Nonios.

The ensuing list is arranged alphabetically:

Aarvak, or Arvak (Early-waker). In Norse mythology, the horse that draws the sun's chariot driven by the maiden Sol.

Alborak. See BORAK.

Alfana ("mare"). Gradasso's horse, in ORLANDO FURIOSO.

Alsvid, or Alsviðer (All-swift). The horse that draws the chariot of the moon (Norse mythology).

Aquiline ("like an eagle"). Raymond's steed, bred on the banks of the Tagus (Tasso: Jerusalem Delivered).

Arion ("martial"). HERCULES' horse, given to ADRASTUS. Formerly the horse of NEPTUNE, brought out of the earth by striking it with his trident; its right feet were those of a man, it spoke with a human voice, and ran with incredible swiftness.

Arundel. The horse of BEVIS OF HAMPTON. The word means "swift as a swallow" (Fr. hirondelle).

Balios (Gr., "swift"). One of the horses given by NEPTUNE to Peléus. It afterwards belonged to ACHILLES. Like Xanthos (see below), its sire was the west wind, and its dam Swift-foot the HARPY.

Barbary. See BARBARY ROAN.

Baviaca. The CID's horse. He survived his master two years and a half, during which time no one was allowed to mount him; he was buried before the gate of the monastery at Valencia and two elms were planted to mark the grave.

Bayard. See BAYARD.

Bayardo. See BAYARDO.

Black Agnes. A palfrey of Mary Queen of Scots, given her by her brother Moray, and named after Agnes of Dunbar.

Black Bess. The mythical mare, created for Dick TURPIN by Harrison Ainsworth in his Rookwood, which carried him from London to York.

Black Saladin. Warwick's famous coal-black horse. Its sire was Malech, and according to tradition, when the race of Malech failed, the race of Warwick would fail also. And thus it was.

Brigadore, or Brigliadore ("golden bridle"). Sir Guyon's horse in Spenser's Faerie Queene (V, iii, etc.). It had a distinguishing black spot on its mouth, like a horseshoe.

ORLANDO's famous charger, second only to Bayardo in swiftness and wonderful powers, was called Brigliadoro.

Bucephalus ("ox-head"). The famous charger of ALEXANDER THE GREAT, who was the only person who could mount him, and he always knelt down to take up his master. He was 30 years old at death and Alexander built the city of Bucephala for a mausoleum.

Carman. The Chevalier BAYARD's horse, given him by the Duke of Lorraine. It was a Persian horse from Kerman or Carmen (Laristan).

Celer ("swift"). The horse of the Roman Emperor Lucius Verus. It was fed on almonds and raisins, covered with royal purple, and stalled in the imperial palace.

Cerus ("fit"). The horse of ADRASTUS, swifter than the wind.

Clavileno. See WOODEN HORSE under HORSE.

Copenhagen. See COPENHAGEN.

Cyllaros. Named from Cylla in Troas, a celebrated horse of CASTOR AND POLLUX.

Dapple. SANCHE PANZA's ass in Don Quixote, so called from its colour.

Dinos ("the marvel"). Diomedes' horse.

Ethon ("fiery"). One of the horses of HECTOR.

Fadda. MOHAMMED's white mule.

Ferrant d'Espagne ("the Spanish traveller"). The horse of OLIVER.

Galathe ("cream-coloured"). One of the horses of HECTOR.

Grani ("grey-coloured"). SIRGFRIED's horse, of marvellous swiftness.

Grizzle. All skin and bone, the horse of Dr. SYNTAX.

Haizum. The horse of the archangel GABRIEL (KORAN).

Harpagus ("one that carries off rapidly"). One of the horses of CASTOR AND POLLUX.

Hippocampus. One of NEPTUNE's horses. It had only two legs, the hind quarter being that of a dragon or fish.

Hrimfaxi ("frost-mane"). The horse of Night, from whose bit fall the "rime-drops" which nightly bedew the earth (Scandinavian legend).

Incitatus ("spurred-on"). The Roman Emperor CALIGULA's horse, made priest and consul. It had an ivory manger and drank wine from a golden pail.

Kantaka. The white horse of Prince GAUTAMA, the BUDDHA.

Lanpon ("the bright one"). One of Diomedes' horses.

Lanri ("the curvetter"). King ARTHUR's mare.

Malech. See BLACK SALADIN, above.

Marengo. The white stallion which Napoleon rode at Waterloo. It is represented in Vernet's picture of Napoleon Crossing the Alps.

Marocco. See BANKS'S HORSE.

Pegasus. See PEGASUS.

Phallus ("stallion"). The horse of Heraclius.

Phemicos ("intelligent"). The horse of Hiero of Syracuse, that won the prize for single horses in the 73rd OLYMPIAD.

Podarge ("swift-foot"). One of the horses of HECTOR.

Roan Barbary. See BARBARY ROAN.

Rosabelle. The favourite palfrey of Mary Queen of Scots.

Rosinante ("formerly a hack"). DON QUIXOTE's horse, all skin and bone. Cp. GRIZZLE, above.

Savoy. The favourite black horse of Charles VIII of France; so called from its donor, the Duke of Savoy. It had but one eye, and "was mean in stature".

Shibdz. The Persian BUCEPHALUS, fleetier than the wind; charger of Chosroes II.

Skinfaxi ("shining-mane"). The horse of day (Norse legend). Cp. HRIMPAXI, above.

Sleipnir. ODIN's eight-footed grey horse which could traverse both land and sea. The horse typifies the wind which blows from the eight principal points.

Sorrel. The horse of William III was blind in one eye and "mean of stature" (cp. SAVOY, above). It stumbled over a mole-hill and the king's fall led to his death. See GENTLEMAN IN BLACK VELVET.

Strymon. The horse immolated by XERXES before he invaded Greece. It came from the vicinity of the river Strymon in Thrace.

Tachebrune. The horse of OGER THE DANE.

Trebizond. The grey horse of Guarinos, one of the French Knights taken at RONCESVALLES.

Veghantino ("the little vigilant one"). ORLANDO's famous steed, called in Fr. romance Veillantif, Orlando there appearing as ROLAND.

White Surrey. Richard III's favourite horse.

Saddle White Surrey for the field to-morrow. SHAKESPEARE: Richard III, V, iii.

Xanthos. See XANTHUS.

A dark horse. One whose capabilities are not known to the general public; hence a person whose abilities are undisclosed or who conceals them till he can reveal them to the best advantage.

A horse of another colour. A different affair altogether.

A horse wins a kingdom. It is said that on the death of Smerdis (522 B.C.) the several competitors for the throne of Persia agreed that he should be king whose horse neighed first when they met on the following day. The groom of Darius showed his horse a mare on the place appointed, and as soon as it arrived at the spot the following day, the horse began to neigh and won the crown for DARIUS.

A nod is as good as a wink to a blind horse. The hint is sufficient, I understand, and MUM'S THE WORD. It also has the contrary sense when said of one who is determined not to take a hint, or to see a point.

As strong as a horse. Very strong. Horse is often used with intensive effect; as, to work, or to eat like a horse.

A Trojan horse. A deception, a concealed danger. See WOODEN HORSE OF TROY, above.

Don't look a gift horse in the mouth. See GIFT-HORSE.

Flogging a dead horse. Trying to revive interest in a worn-out topic, matter, etc.

Hold your horses. Be patient, wait a moment; don't be too precipitate; hold up for a while on whatever you are doing.

Horse and foot. The cavalry and infantry; hence all one's forces; with all one's might.

I will win the horse or lose the saddle.

NECK OR NOTHING; DOUBLE OR QUILTS. The story is that a man made the bet of a horse that another could not say the Lord's Prayer without a wandering thought. The bet was accepted, but before being half-way through the reciter looked up and said, "By the by, do you mean the saddle also?"

One man may steal a horse, while another may not look over the hedge. Some people are specially privileged, and can take liberties, or commit offences, etc., with impunity, while others get punished for trivialities. An old proverb given by Heywood (1546).

Straight from the horse's mouth. Direct from the highest source, which cannot be questioned. The only certain way of discovering the age of a horse is by examining its lower jaw.

The grey mare is the better horse.
See under MARE.

They cannot draw, or set horses together. They cannot agree together.

'Tis a good horse that never stumbles. Everyone makes mistakes sometimes; HOMER SOMETIMES NODS.

To back the wrong horse. To make an error in judgment. A phrase from the Turf.

To be on one's high horse, to ride the high horse. To be overbearing and arrogant; to give oneself airs. Formerly people of rank rode on tall horses or chargers.

To ride on the horse with ten toes. To walk; to ride on SHANKS'S MARE.

To lock the stable door after the horse is stolen, or has bolted. To take precautions after the mischief has happened.

To put the cart before the horse.
See CART.

Working with a dead horse. Doing work which has already been paid for. Such work is a dead horse, because you can get no more out of it.

You can take a horse to the water but you cannot make him drink. There is always some point at which it is impossible to get an obstinate or determined man to proceed farther in the desired direction. The proverb is found in Heywood (1546).

Horse bridge. Another name for a pack-horse bridge, sometimes called a riding bridge or bridle bridge. The hamlet of Horsebridge on the Tamar above Gunnislake takes its name from such a bridge.

Horse-chestnut. Gerard tells us in his Herball (1597) that the tree is so called

For that the people of the East countries do with the fruit thereof cure their horses of the cough . . . and such like diseases.

Another explanation is that when a leaf-stalk is pulled off it presents a miniature of a horse's hock and foot with shoe and nail marks.

Horse Latitudes. A region of calms around 30° North and South; perhaps from the fact that sailing ships carrying horses to America and the West Indies were sometimes obliged to jettison their cargoes when becalmed in these latitudes through shortage of water for the animals.

Horse-laugh. A coarse, vulgar laugh.

Horse-leech. A type of insatiable voracity; founded on the blood-sucking habits of the worm and the passage in the BIBLE: "The horseleach hath two daughters, crying, Give, give" (Prov. xxx, 15).

Marbeck, commenting in 1581, explains the "two daughters"—

That is, two forks in her tongue, which he heere calleth her two daughters, whereby she sucketh the blood, and is never satiate.

Horse Marines. Go and tell that to the horse marines! Said in derision to the teller of some "tall" yarn or unbelievable story, the horse marine being an apparent absurdity (but see under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES). The more common phrase is "tell that to the marines" (see under MARINES). To belong to the "Horse Marines" is the virtual equivalent of belonging to the "AWKWARD SQUAD". Cp. CREDAT JUDÆUS.

Horsemen. Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse. See under FOUR.

Horse-milliner. One who makes up and supplies decorations for horses; hence a horse-soldier more fit for the toilet than the battlefield. The expression was used by Chatterton in his Excelente Balade of Charitie (ROWLEY POEMS), and Scott revived it.

Horse-power. The common unit of power measurement as applied to machines, engines, motors, etc., equal to the raising of 33,000 lb. one foot high in one minute. It was first fixed by Watt when seeking a suitable way of indicating the power exerted by his steam engine. He estimated that a strong dray horse working at a gin for eight hours a day averaged 22,000 foot-pounds per minute. He increased this by 50 per cent, and this has been the recognized unit ever since.

Horseshoes. The belief that it is lucky to pick up a horseshoe is from the idea that it was a protection against WITCHES and evil generally. According to Aubrey, the reason is "since MARS (iron) is the enemy of SATURN (God of the Witches)". Consequently they were nailed to the house door with the two ends uppermost, so that the luck did not "run out". Nelson had one nailed to the mast of the Victory.

One legend is that the DEVIL one day asked St. DUNSTAN, who was noted for his skill as a farrier, to shoe his "single hoof". Dunstan, knowing who his customer was, tied him tightly to the wall, and proceeded with the job, but purposely put the devil to such pain that he roared for mercy. Dunstan at last agreed to release his captive on condition that he would never again enter a place where he saw a horseshoe displayed.

Horse-trading. Hard, shrewd bargaining.

Horse-wrangler. A western American term for a breaker-in and herder of horses.

Hortus Siccus (Lat., a dry garden). A collection of plants dried and arranged in a book.

Horus. One of the major gods of the ancient Egyptians, originally a great sky-god and sun-god, who became merged with Horus the son of OSIRIS and ISIS, and Horus the Child (see HARPOCRATES). He was also identified with the King himself and the Horus-name was the first of the five names of the Egyptian King. He was the most famous of the Falcon-gods and was represented in hieroglyphics by the winged sun-disk.

Hospital (Lat. hospitale, hospitium, from hospes, a guest). Originally a hospice or hostel for the reception of pilgrims; later applied to a charitable institution for the aged and infirm (as in Greenwich Hospital, Chelsea Hospital), to charitable institutions for the education of children (as in Christ's Hospital, Emmanuel Hospital, Greycoat Hospital) and finally to the present institution for treatment of the sick and injured. Hotel and spital are related forms. See also LOCK HOSPITAL; MAGDALENE.

Hospitaliers. First applied to those whose duty it was to provide hospitium (lodging and entertainment) for pilgrims. The most noted institution of the kind was founded at Jerusalem (c. 1048), which gave its name to an order called the Knights Hospitallers or the Knights of St. John at Jerusalem; later they were styled the Knights of Rhodes; and then the Knights of Malta; the islands of Rhodes (1310) and Malta (1529) being, in turn, their headquarters. The order became predominantly military in the 12th century but in the late 18th century reverted to its earlier purposes of tending the sick and poor, moving to Rome in 1834.

The order came to an end in England after the REFORMATION but a branch was revived in 1831 which declared itself an independent order in 1858, now styled the Order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem. It founded the St. John Ambulance Association in 1877.

Host (Lat. hostia, a sacrifice). The consecrated bread of the EUCHARIST regarded as the sacrifice of the Body of Christ.

The Elevation of the Host. At the Eucharist, the raising by the celebrant of the sacred elements immediately after consecration to symbolize the offering to God and to show them for adoration.

Host, as an army or multitude, is from the Lat. hostis, enemy. In Med. Lat. hostem facere came to mean "to perform military service". Hostis (military service) then came to mean the army that went against the foe, whence our word host.

The heavenly host. The ANGELS and ARCHANGELS.

The Lord God of Hosts, Lord of Hosts, JEHOVAH, the hosts being the ANGELS and celestial spheres.

Host as one who entertains guests is from the Lat. hospes, a guest.

To reckon without your hosts. To reckon from your own standpoint only; not to allow for what the other man may do or think or decide.

Found in few minutes to his cost,
He did but count without his host.

BUTLER: Hudibras, I, iii, 21.

Hostler, or Ostler (os' lèr). The name given to the man who looked after the horses of travellers at an inn was originally applied to the innkeeper (hosteller) himself. It has been jokingly derived from oat-stealer for obvious reasons.

Hot. Hot air. Empty talk, boasting, threats, etc.; bombast. Hence a hot-air merchant, one whose utterances are "full of sound and fury, signifying nothing"; a declamatory WINDBAG.

Hot and hot. Food cooked and served in hot dishes straight from the stove.

Hot cockles. A CHRISTMAS game. One player kneels down with his eyes covered and lays his head in another's lap and on being struck has to guess who gave the blow.

As at Hot cockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown,
Buxoma gave a gentle tap, and I
Quick rose, and read soft mischief in her eye.
GAY: Shepherd's Week (Monday).

Hot cross buns. See BUN.

Hot-foot. With speed; rapidly.

Hot jazz is the term used for JAZZ music when the tone is less pure than in "cool" jazz, and when vibrato is prominently employed.

Hot-pot. A dish of mutton or beef with sliced potatoes cooked in a tight-lidded pot in an oven. A popular dish in the North of England.

Hot rod. An old car stripped and tuned for speed, and, by transference, the owner of such a vehicle or other unruly youth.

Hot stuff. Formerly said of a girl or woman of amorous inclinations and flirtatious habits.

I'll give it him hot and strong. I'll rate him most soundly and severely. To get it hot is to get severe punishment.

I'll make this place too hot to hold him. I'll "show him up", or otherwise make things so unpleasant that he will not be able to endure it.

Like hot cakes. Very rapidly; as in "to sell like hot cakes".

Not so hot. Not so good, not very satisfactory.

To blow hot and cold. See under BLOW.

To get into hot water. To get into trouble.

Hotch-pot, Hotchpotch (Fr. hochepot; hocher, to shake, and pot). A thick broth containing meat and vegetables and other mixed ingredients; a confused mixture or jumble. Hodge-podge is another alternative form and hotchpot is also a legal term. When a fund or estate has to be divided among certain beneficiaries and one of the number has already received a share that person may be required to bring his special share into hotchpot, i.e. to add it to the total before the individual shares are computed. A hotchpot provision is a clause in a settlement requiring the carrying out of the above procedure.

Hotspur. A fiery person of uncontrolled temper. Harry Percy (1364-1403), son of the first Earl of Northumberland (see Shakespeare's Henry IV, Pt. I), was so called. The 14th Earl of Derby, the CON-SERVATIVE Prime Minister, was sometimes called the "Hotspur of Debate". See also RUPERT OF DEBATE.

Hound. To hound a person is to harass and persecute him as hounds worry a fox or stag.

Hour. Book of Hours. A book of devotions for private use, especially during the CANONICAL HOURS (see under CANON). Such books in the later MIDDLE AGES were often beautifully and lavishly illuminated and have a particular importance in the history of the book arts.

Canonical Hours. See under CANON.

A bad quarter of an hour. A short disagreeable experience.

At the eleventh hour. Just in time; only just in time to obtain some benefit. The allusion is to the parable of the labourers hired for the vineyard (Matt. xx).

My hour is not yet come. The time for action has not yet arrived; properly, the hour of my death is not yet fully come; from the idea that the hour of one's death is pre-ordained.

When Jesus knew that his hour was come.
John xiii, 1.

In an evil hour. Acting under an unfortunate impulse. In ASTROLOGY there are lucky and unlucky hours.

In the small hours (of the morning). One, two, and three, after midnight.

Their finest hour. The famous phrase from Winston Churchill's speech (18 June, 1940) given at the time when the collapse of France was imminent and the BATTLE OF BRITAIN about to begin.

Let us therefore brace ourselves to our duties, and so bear ourselves that, if the British Empire and its Commonwealth last for a thousand years, men will say: "This was their finest hour."

To keep good hours. To go home early every night; to go to bed betimes; to be punctual at one's work.

Houri (hoo' ri). One of the black-eyed damsels of the Mohammedan Paradise, possessed of perpetual youth and beauty, whose virginity is renewable at pleasure, and who are the reward of every believer; hence, in English use, any dark-eyed attractive beauty.

House. The House. A familiar name for Christ Church, Oxford, the London Stock Exchange, the HOUSE OF LORDS, HOUSE OF COMMONS, etc.

The House of . . . denotes a royal or noble family with its ancestors and branches, as the House of Windsor (the British Royal Family), the House of Hanover, etc.; also a commercial establishment such as the House of Rothschild, the bankers, the House of Cassell, the publishers, etc.

House of Assembly. The lower legislative chamber in the Republic of South Africa.

A house of call. Some house, frequently a public house, that one visits or uses regularly; a house where journeymen and workmen assembled for hire when out of work.

House of Commons. The elected house of the British PARLIAMENT. It is also the lower house in the Canadian Parliament.

A house of correction. A jail. Originally a place where vagrants were made to work and offenders were kept in ward for the correction of small offences.

The House of God. A church or place of worship; also any place sanctified by God's presence. Thus Jacob in the wilderness, where he saw the ladder leading from earth to HEAVEN, said, "This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven" (Gen. xxviii, 17).

House of ill fame, or repute. A brothel.

House of Issue. An investment banking house which advertises, underwrites, and sells stocks or bonds on behalf of a corporation.

House of Keys. See TYNWALD.

House of Lords. The Upper House of PARLIAMENT, consisting of the lords spiritual and temporal, namely: hereditary peers, life peers (Lords of Appeal and those created under the Life Peerages Act of 1958), Scottish Representative Peers, the archbishops and certain BISHOPS of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

House of Office. A 17th-century term for a privy.

House of Representatives. The lower legislative chamber in the U.S.A., Australia, and New Zealand.

The House that Jack built.

This is the man, all tattered and torn,
That kissed the maiden all forlorn,
That milked the cow with the crumpled horn
That tossed the dog
That worried the cat . . .
That lay in the house that Jack built.

There are numerous similar constructions. For example the Hebrew parable of The Two Zuzim, the summation of which runs thus:

10. Then came the Most Holy, blessed be He,
and slew
9. The angel of death who had slain
8. The slaughterer who had slaughtered
7. The ox which had drunk
6. The water which had extinguished
5. The fire which had burned

4. The staff which had smitten
3. The dog which had bitten
2. The cat which had devoured
1. The kid which my father had bought for two zuzim.

(Two zuzim was about a halfpenny.)

Cat house. American slang for a brothel.

Clearing House. See CLEARING HOUSE.

A disorderly house. A brothel.

The Lower House. The HOUSE OF COMMONS, a term in use in the 15th century; in the U.S.A. the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Sponging House. See under SPONGE.

The Upper House. The HOUSE OF LORDS, in the 15th century termed the "higher house". It developed from the GREAT COUNCIL of magnates. The term is also used in the U.S.A. for the Senate.

House to house. Calling at every house, one after another; as a "house-to-house canvass".

Like a house afire. Very rapidly. The old houses of timber and thatch burned very swiftly.

To bring down the house. See under BRING.

To cry, or proclaim from the housetop. To announce something in the most public manner possible. Jewish houses had flat roofs, where their owners often slept, held gatherings, and from which public announcements were made.

That which ye have spoken in the ear . . .
shall be proclaimed upon the housetops.

Luke xii, 3.

To eat one out of house and home. See under EAT.

To keep house. To maintain an establishment. "To go into housekeeping" is to start a private establishment.

To keep a good house. To supply a bountiful table.

To keep open house. To dispense hospitality freely and generously at all times.

To throw the house out of the windows. To throw all things into confusion from exuberance of spirit.

House-bote. Under the manorial system, a form of estover, denoting the amount of wood that a tenant was allowed to take for fuel and for repairs to his dwelling. Bote is O.E. profit. See I WILL GIVE YOU THAT TO BOOT under BOOT.

House-leek. Grown formerly on house-roofs from the notion that it ward off lightning, fever, and evil spirits; also called Jove's Beard. An edict of CHARLEMAGNE ordered that every one of his subjects should have a house-leek on his roof (Et habet quisque supra domum suam Jovis barbam).

If the herb house-leek or syngren do grow on the housetop, the same house is never stricken with lightning or thunder.

THOMAS HILL:

Natural and Artificial Conclusions (1586).

Houses, Astrological. In judicial ASTROLOGY the whole HEAVEN is divided into twelve portions by means of great circles crossing the north and south points of the horizon, through which the heavenly bodies pass every twenty-four hours. Each of these divisions is called a house; and in casting a HOROSCOPE the whole is divided into two parts (beginning from the east), six above and six below the horizon. The eastern ones are called the ascendant, because they are about to rise; the other six are the descendant, because they have already passed the zenith. The twelve houses each have their special functions—(1) the house of life; (2) fortune and riches; (3) brethren; (4) parents and relatives; (5) children; (6) health; (7) marriage; (8) death; (9) religion; (10) dignities; (11) friends and benefactors; (12) mystery and uncertainty.

Three houses were assigned to each of the four ages of the person whose horoscope was to be cast, and his lot in life was governed by the ascendancy of these at the various periods, and by the stars which ruled in the particular "houses".

Houses of Life. In ancient Egypt, centres of priestly learning attached to the large temples where scribes copied religious texts, the art of medicine was furthered, etc.

Household, The. Specifically, the immediate members of the Royal Family, but more particularly the retinue of court officials, servants, and attendants attached to the sovereign's and other royal households. The principal officials of the sovereign's Household are the Lord Chamberlain, Lord Steward, Master of the Horse and Treasurer of the Household, all of whom are personally appointed. The higher members of the Household in SCOTLAND are mostly hereditary.

Household gods. The LARES AND PENATES who presided over the dwellings and domestic concerns of the ancient Romans; hence, in modern use, the valued possessions of home, all those things that go to endear it to one.

Household Troops. Those troops whose special duty it is to attend the sovereign. They consist of the Household Cavalry (the LIFE GUARDS and Royal Horse Guards or Blues) and the Brigade of Guards (five regiments of Foot Guards: GRENADIER, COLDSTREAM, Scots, Irish, and Welsh).

Housel (hou' zel). To give the Sacrament (O.E. husel, sacrifice). Cp. UNANELED.

Unhouseled is without having had the EUCHARIST, especially at the hour of death.

Houssain, or Housain, etc., in the ARABIAN NIGHTS, brother of Prince AHMED and owner of the MAGIC CARPET (see under CARPET).

Houyhnhnms (whinims). In Gulliver's Travels, a race of horses endowed with reason and all the finer qualities of man. Swift coined the word in imitation of "whinny".

Howard. The Female Howard. Miss Elizabeth Fry (1780-1845), the QUAKER philanthropist and prison reformer. So called after John Howard (1726-1790), her famous predecessor in this field.

Howleglass. An old form of Owlglass. See EULENSPIEGEL.

Hoyle. According to Hoyle. According to the best usage, on the highest authority. Edmond Hoyle's A Short Treatise on the Game of Whist (1742) remained the standard authority on the game for many years. Cp. COCKER.

Hrimfaxi. See FAMOUS HORSES under HORSE.

Hub. The nave of a wheel; a boss; a centre of activity.

In the U.S.A. The Hub is Boston, Mass.

Boston State-house is the hub of the solar system. HOLMES: Autocrat of the Breakfast Table, ch. vi.

Up to the hub. Fully, entirely, as far as possible. If a cart sinks in the mire up to the hub, it can sink no lower; if a quoit strikes the hub, it is not possible to do better.

Hubert, St. Patron saint of huntsmen (d. 727), reputedly son of Bertrand, Duke of Guienne. He so neglected his religious duties for the chase that one day a stag bearing a crucifix menaced him with eternal perdition unless he reformed. Upon this he entered the cloister and duly became Bishop of Liège, and the apostle of Ardennes and Brabant. Those who were descended of his race were supposed to possess the power of curing the bite of a mad dog.

In art he is represented as a BISHOP with a miniature stag resting on the book in his hand, or as a huntsman kneeling to the miraculous crucifix borne by the stag. His day is 3 November.

Hudson, Jeffrey (1619–1682). The famous DWARF served up in a pie at an entertainment given to Charles I by the Duke of Buckingham, who afterwards gave him to Queen Henrietta Maria for a page. He was 18 in. high until the age of thirty but afterwards reached 3 ft. 6 in. or so. He was a captain of horse in the CIVIL WAR, was captured by pirates, and imprisoned for supposed complicity in the POPISH PLOT. His portrait was painted by Van Dyck, and he is featured in Scott's Pevenil of the Peak.

Hue and Cry. An early system for apprehending suspected criminals. Neighbours were bound to join in a hue and cry and to pursue a suspect to the bounds of the manor. It became the old common law process of pursuing "with horn and with voice" (O.Fr. huer, to shout).

Huer. (O. Fr. hu, a cry). In Cornwall, the man who directs fishermen to the pilchard shoals; a BALKER.

Hug. To hug the shore. To keep as close to the shore as is compatible with a ship's safety.

To hug the wind. To keep a ship close-hauled.

Hugh of Lincoln, St. There are two saints so designated.

(1) St. Hugh (c. 1140–1200), a Burgundian by birth, and founder of the first CARTHUSIAN house in England. He became bishop of Lincoln in 1186. He was noted for his charitable works and kindness to the Jews. His day is 17 November.

(2) St. Hugh (13th century), the boy of about ten years of age allegedly tortured and crucified in mockery of Christ. The story goes that the affair arose from his having driven a ball through a Jew's window while at play with his friends. The boy was finally thrown into a well from which he spoke miraculously. Eighteen Jews were purported to have been hanged. The story is paralleled at a number of other places in England and on the Continent (cp. WILLIAM OF NORWICH), and forms the subject of Chaucer's The Prioress's Tale. It is also found in Matthew Paris and elsewhere.

Huguenot. The French Calvinists (see CALVINISM) of the 16th and 17th centuries. The name is usually derived incorrectly from the Ger. Eidgenossen, confederates, but according to Henri Estienne (Apologie pour Hérodote, 1566) it is from Hugo, from the fact that the PROTESTANTS of Tours used to meet at night near the gate of King Hugo. See also BARTHOLOMEW, MASSACRE OF ST.; CALAS.

Philippe de Mornay (1549–1623), their great supporter, was nicknamed "the Huguenot Pope".

Huitzilopochtli. See MEXITL.

Hulda. The old German goddess of marriage and fecundity. The name means "the Benignant".

Hulda is making her bed. It snows.

Hulks, The. Old dismantled men-of-war anchored in the Thames and off Portsmouth and used as prison ships, first established as a "temporary expedient" in 1778 and remaining until 1857. An impression of the Hulks is given by Dickens in the opening chapters of Great Expectations.

Hull, Hell, and Halifax. An old beggars' and vagabonds' "prayer" quoted by Taylor the WATER POET (1580–1653) as

From Hull, Hell and Halifax
Good Lord, deliver us.

It is said that Hull was to be avoided because the beggars had little chance of getting anything there without doing hard labour for it, and Halifax (q.v.) because anyone caught stealing cloth there was beheaded without further ado.

Hulled (U.S.A.). Made a prisoner after capitulating; from the surrender of General Hull to the British at Detroit, 16 August 1812. The term is now archaic.

Hulsean Lectures. Since 1777, a course of lectures on Christian evidences, etc., delivered annually at Cambridge, instituted and endowed by the Rev. John Hulse (1708–1790) of Cheshire.

Hum, or Hem and Haw, To. To hesitate to give a positive answer; to speak with frequent pauses and interjections of such sounds.

Huma (hū' má). A fabulous oriental bird which never alights, but is always on the wing. It is said that every head which it overshadows will wear a crown. The bird suspended over the throne of Tippoo Sahib at Seringapatam represented this poetical fancy.

Humanitarians. A name given to certain ARIANS who held that Christ was only man. The name is also used of the UNITARIANS, and of the followers of Saint-Simon (1760–1825), an early exponent of socialism.

Nowadays the term is usually applied to philanthropists in general.

Humanities. Grammar, rhetoric, and poetry, with Greek and Latin (literæ humaniores); in contradistinction to divinity (literæ divinæ). Also of more general application to polite scholarship in general.

The use of 'humanities' . . . to designate those studies which are esteemed the fittest for training the true humanity in man.

TRENCH: Study of Words, Lect. iii.

Humanity Martin. Richard Martin (1754-1834), one of the founders of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. He secured the passage of several laws for the suppression of cruelty to animals.

Humber. The legendary king of the HUNS, fabled by Geoffrey of Monmouth to have invaded Britain about 1000 B.C. He was defeated in a great battle by LOCRIN near the river which bears his name. "Humber made towards the river in his flight, and was drowned in it, on account of which it has since borne his name."

Humble. A man of humble birth is one of low estate, born of the common people. Here "humble" is from the Lat. humilis, lowly.

A humble bee, a bumble bee, or dumble-dor. Here "humble" is probably a derivative of hum in imitation of the droning noise of the bee. Cf. Ger. Hummel.

A humble cow is a polled cow, a cow without horns. Here "humble" is a variant of humble, to mutilate.

To eat humble pie. See under EAT.

Humming Ale. Strong liquor that froths well and causes a humming in the head of the drinker.

Let us fortify our stomachs with a slice or two of hung beef, and a horn or so of humming stingo.

PIERCE EGAN: Tom and Jerry, ch. vii.

Hummums. The old hotel and COFFEEHOUSE of this name on the south-west corner of Russell Street, COVENT GARDEN, was on the site of the Turkish-bath house founded about 1631 and a fashionable resort after the RESTORATION. The name is from the Persian humoun, a sweating or Turkish bath. The hotel lasted until 1865.

"Now," says my friend, "we are so near, I'll carry you to see the Hummums . . . and if you will pay your club towards eight shillings, we'll go in and sweat."

NED WARD: The London Spy, 1703.

Humour. Good humour, ill, or bad humour, etc. According to the ancients there are four principal humours in the body: phlegm, blood, choler and black BILE. As any one of these predominates it determines the temper of the mind and body; hence the expressions sanguine, choleric, phlegmatic, melancholic humours. A just balance made a "good humour" and a preponderance of any one of the four an "ill" or "evil humour". See Ben Jonson's Every Man Out of His Humour (Prologue).

Humpback, The. Geronimo Amelunghi, Il Gobbo di Pisa, an Italian burlesque poet of the mid-16th century.

Andrea Solario, the Italian painter, Del Gobbo (c. 1460-c. 1520).

Humphrey. To dine with Duke Humphrey. To have no dinner to go to. The Good Duke Humphrey (see under GOOD) was renowned for his hospitality. At death it was reported that a monument would be erected to him in St. Paul's, but he was buried at St. Alban's. The tomb of Sir John Beauchamp (d. 1358), on the south side of the nave of old St. Paul's, was popularly supposed to be that of the Duke, and when the promenaders left for dinner, the poor stay-behinds who had no dinner to go to, or who feared arrest for debt if they left the precincts, used to say, when asked by the gay sparks if they were going, that they would "dine with Duke Humphrey" that day.

The expression was once very common, as was the similar one To sup with Sir Thomas Gresham, the Exchange built by Sir Thomas being a common lounge.

Though little coin thy purseless pocket line,
Yet with great company thou art taken up;
For often with Duke Humphrey thou dost dine,
And often with Sir Thomas Gresham sup.

HAYMAN:

Quadrilicets (Epigram on a Loafer), 1628.

Humpty Dumpty. Short and broad, like the egg-shaped figure of the nursery rhyme; also a gypsy drink made of ale boiled with brandy.

Hun. An uncivilized brute; from the barbarian tribe of Huns who invaded the East Roman Empire in the 4th and 5th centuries. In World War I a slang name applied to the Germans.

Hundred. From pre-CONQUEST times, a division of the English shire, corresponding to the WAPENTAKE of Danish areas. Originally the Hundred probably consisted of 100 hides, hence the name (see HIDE). The Hundred Court or MOOT, which survived until late in the 19th century, met regularly in mediæval times to deal with private pleas, criminals, matters of taxation, etc.

The equivalent unit in Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmorland and Durham was called a WARD.

Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, Leicestershire and Rutland were divided into WAPENTAKES. Yorkshire has also three larger divisions called RIDINGS. Similarly Kent was divided into five LATHES and Sussex into six RAPES, each with subordinate hundreds.

Chiltern Hundreds. See CHILTERN.

Great, or Long hundreds. Six score, a hundred and twenty.

The Hundred Days. The days between 20 March 1815, when NAPOLEON reached the TUILERIES (after his escape from Elba) and 28 June, the date of the second restoration of Louis XVIII. Napoleon left Elba, 26 February; landed near Cannes, 20 March; and finally abdicated 22 June.

The address of the prefect of PARIS to Louis XVIII on his second restoration begins: "A hundred days, sire, have elapsed since the fatal moment when your majesty was forced to quit your capital in the midst of tears." This is the origin of the phrase.

Hundred Years War. The long series of wars between England and France, beginning in the reign of Edward III, 1337, and ending in that of Henry VI, 1453.

The first battle was the naval victory of Sluys, 1340, and the last a defeat at Castillon, 1453. It originated in English claims to the French crown and resulted in the English losing all their possessions except Calais, which was held until 1558.

Old Hundred, or Old Hundredth. A famous and dignified Psalm tune that owes its name to its being so designated in the Tate and Brady Psalter of 1696 to indicate the retention of the setting of Kethe's version of the 100th Psalm in the Psalter of 1563 (by Sternhold and Hopkins). The tune is of older origin and is found as a setting to the 134th psalm in Marot and Beza's Genevan Psalter of 1551.

Hero of the hundred fights. Conn, a semi-legendary Irish king, of the 2nd century.

Hundreds and thousands. A name given by confectioners to very tiny comfits.

It will all be the same a hundred years hence. An exclamation of resignation—it doesn't much matter what happens. It is an old saying and occurs in Ray's Collection.

Not a hundred miles off. An indirect way of saying "in this very neighbourhood" or "very spot". The phrase is used when it would be indiscreet or dangerous to refer more directly to the person or place hinted at.

The hundred-eyed. ARGUS in Greek and Latin fable. JUNO appointed him guardian of IO (the cow), but JUPITER caused him to be put to death; whereupon Juno transplanted his eyes into the tail of her peacock.

The Hundred-handed. Three of the sons of URANUS, namely, Ægæon or BRIAREUS, Cottys or COTTUS, and Gyges or Gyes. After the TITANS were overcome during the war with ZEUS and hurled into TARTARUS, the Hundred-handed ones were set to keep watch and ward over them.

CERBERUS is sometimes so called because from its three necks sprang writhing snakes instead of hair.

Hungary Water. Made of ROSEMARY flowers and spirit, said to be so called because a hermit gave the recipe to a Queen of Hungary.

Hunger. Hunger march. A march of the unemployed to call attention to their grievances, as those of 1932, the year in which Wal Hannington, the leader of the National Union of Unemployed Workers, led a march on London. The biggest of the marches organized by the N.U.W.M. was that against the MEANS TEST in 1936.

The march of the Blanketeers (see under BLANKET) was in effect the first such march.

Hunger Strike. The refusal of prisoners to take food in order to embarrass the authorities or to secure release; a notable SUFFRAGETTE tactic. See CAT AND MOUSE ACT.

Hungry. There are many common similes expressive of hunger, including—hungry as a hawk, a hunter, a church mouse, a dog. James Thomson (The Seasons: Winter) has "Hungry as the grave" and Oliver Wendell Holmes, "Hungry as the chap that said a turkey was too much for one, not enough for two."

Hungry dogs will eat dirty puddings. See under DOG.

The Hungry Forties. The 1840s in Great Britain, from the widespread distress among the poor, especially before 1843. Characterized by bad harvests, dear bread, and unemployment, it was the period of CHARTISM. 1847 and 1848 were also bad years; but the 1820s were probably worse than the 1840s. The situation was helped by the railway boom and Peel's financial measures.

Hunkers. In the 1840s, the conservative faction of the Democratic Party in New York, so named because they "hunkered" for the spoils of office (Dut. hunkerer, a self-seeker). See BARNBURNERS.

Hunks. An old hunks. An OLD SCREW, a hard, selfish, mean fellow. In the late 16th century it was a name commonly given to performing bears (cp. CROSS AS A BEAR under CROSS) and may have its origin in some unknown person of cross or miserly character.

Hunky. Hunky dory (Amer.). An expression of approval, all's right or satisfactory. It is an elaborated form of "hunky", derived from Dut. honk, goal, station, or "home" as in TAG and other games; hence, adjectivally, to be in a good or satisfactory position.

Hunt. Like Hunt's dog, he would neither go to church nor stay at home. A Shropshire saying. The story is that one Hunt, a labouring man, kept a mastiff, which, on being shut up while his master went to church, howled and barked so as to disturb the whole congregation. Hunt thought he would take him to church the next Sunday, but the dog positively refused to enter. The proverb is applied to a self-willed person, who will neither be led nor driven.

He who hunts two hares leaves one and loses the other. No one can do well or properly two things at once, he "falls between two stools". "No man can serve two masters."

Like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin
And both neglect.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, III, iii.

To hunt with the hounds and run with the hare. See under HARE.

Hunters and Runners of classic renown:

ACASTUS, who took part in the famous Calydonian hunt (see under BOAR).

ACTÆON, the famous buntsman who was transformed by DIANA into a stag, because he chanced to see her bathing.

ADONIS, beloved by VENUS, slain by a wild boar while bunting.

ADRASTUS, who was saved at the siege of Thebes by the speed of his horse Arion, given him by HERCULES.

ATALANTA, who promised to marry the man who could outstrip her in running.

CAMILLA, the swiftest-footed of all the companions of DIANA.

LADAS, the swiftest-footed of all the runners of ALEXANDER THE GREAT.

MELEAGER, who took part in the great Calydonian boar-hunt (see under BOAR).

ORION, the great and famous hunter, changed into the constellation so conspicuous in November.

PHEIDIPIDES, who ran 150 miles in two days.

The mighty hunter. NIMROD was so called (Gen. x, 9). The meaning seems to be a conqueror. Jeremiah says, "I [the Lord] will send for many hunters [warriors], and they shall hunt [chase] them [the Jews] from every mountain . . . and out of the holes of the rocks." (xvi, 16).

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began—
A mighty hunter, and his prey was man.

POPE: Windsor Forest.

Hunting the gowk, snark, etc. See these words.

Huntingdonians. Members of "the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion", a sect of Calvinistic METHODISTS founded in 1748 by Selina, widow of the ninth Earl of Huntingdon, and George Whitefield, who had become her chaplain. The churches founded by the countess, numbering some 36, are mostly affiliated with the Congregational Union.

Hurdy-gurdy. A stringed musical instrument, the music of which is produced by the friction of a rosined wheel on the strings, which are stopped by means of keys. It had nothing to do with the barrel-organ or piano-organ of the streets which is sometimes so called, probably from its being played by a handle.

Hurlo-thrumbo. A ridiculous burlesque, which in 1729-1730 had an extraordinary run at the Haymarket Theatre. So great was its popularity that a club called "The Hurlo-Thrumbo Society" was formed. The author was Samuel Johnson (1691-1773), a half-mad dancing master, who put this motto on the title-page when the burlesque was printed:

Ye sons of fire, read my Hurlo-Thrumbo,
Turn it betwixt your finger and your thumb,
And being quite undone, be quite struck dumb.

Hurricane. A very violent storm of wind, a West Indian word introduced through Spanish. In the 18th century the word was used for a large private party or ROUT; so called from its hurry, bustle, and noise. Cp. DRUM.

Hurry. Don't hurry, Hopkins. A satirical reproof to those who are not prompt in their payments. It is said that one Hopkins of Kentucky gave a creditor a promissory note on which was written, "The said Hopkins is not to be hurried in paying the above."

Husband. The word is from O.E. hus, house, and Old Norse bondi, a freeholder or yeoman, from buā, to dwell; hence literally husband is a house-owner in his capacity as head of the household, and so it came to be applied to a married man, who was the natural head of the household. When Sir John Paston, writing to his mother in 1475, said:

I purpose to leeffe alle beer, and come to you, and be your hosbonde and balyff,

he was proposing to come and manage her household for her. We still use the word in this sense in such phrases as To husband one's resources.

Ship's husband. A man who has the care of a ship in port or one who oversees the general interests of a vessel in clearing and entering, berthing and provisioning, etc.

Husbandry is merely the occupation of the husband (in the original sense), the management of the household; later restricted to farm management, and the husband became the husbandman.

I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house.
SHAKESPEARE: Merchant of Venice, III, iv.

Hush. Hush-hush. A term that came into use in World War I to describe very secret operations, designs, or inventions; from the exclamation "hush" enjoining silence. Cp. TOP SECRET.

Hush-money. Money given as a bribe for silence or "hushing" a matter up.

Husking. Husking-bee, Husking frolic, Corn husking. In North America in the 18th century this was a gathering for husking Indian corn, usually with feasting and merrymaking.

Hussites. Followers of John Hus, the Bohemian religious reformer (1369-1415), sometimes called WYCLIFFITES from the fact that much of the teachings of John Hus were derived from those of Wyclif.

Hussy. Nowadays a word implying an ill-balanced girl, a "jade" or "minx", it is no other than the honourable appellation housewife from the pronunciation "hussif". The portable sewing outfit or "housewife" is so pronounced.

Hustings. A Norse word hus-thing (hus, house; thing, assembly); hence the assembly of a KING, EARL or chief. Hence its application to open-air meetings connected with Parliamentary elections. In many towns the hustings courts transacted some legal business, particularly that of the City of London, which still exists and is presided over by the Lord Mayor and sheriffs although shorn of most of its former powers. The use of the word for the platform on which nominations, etc., of Parliamentary candidates were made (until the passing of the Ballot Act of 1872) derives from its first application to the platform in the Guildhall on which the London court was held. A realistic impression of the old hustings at a Parliamentary election is given by Dickens in Pickwick Papers (ch. xiii).

To be beaten at the hustings is to lose an election.

Hutin (ū' tan). Louis le Hutin. Louis X of France (1289, 1314-16) was so called. It means "the quarreller", "the stubborn or headstrong one", and it is uncertain how he gained this epithet.

Hyacinth (hī'á sinth). According to Greek fable, the son of Amyclas, a Spartan king. The lad was beloved by APOLLO and ZEPHYR, and as he preferred the sun-god, Zephyr drove Apollo's quoit at his head, and killed him. The blood became a flower, and the petals are inscribed with the signature AI, meaning woe (VIRGIL: Ecloques, iii, 106).

The hyacinth bewrays the doleful "A I",
And culls the tribute of Apollo's sigh.
Still on its bloom the mournful flower retains
The lovely blue that dyed the stripling's veins.
CAMOËNS: Lusiad, ix.

Hyades (h' á dēz) (Gr. hœin, to rain). Seven NYMPHS, daughters of ATLAS and Pleione, placed among the stars, in the constellation TAURUS, which threaten rain when they rise with the sun. The fable is that they wept the death of their brother Hyas so bitterly that ZEUS out of compassion took them to HEAVEN. Cp. PLEIADES.

The seaman sees the Hyades
Gather an army of Cimmeric clouds . . .
All-fearful folds his sails, and sounds the main,
Lifting his prayers to the heavens for aid
Against the terror of the winds and waves.
MARLOWE: Tamburlaine, Pt. I, III, ii.

Hybla. A city and mountain in Sicily famous for its honey. Cp. HYMETTUS.

Hydra. A many-headed water-snake of the Lernaean marshes in Argolis. It was the offspring of TYPHON and ECHIDNA and was variously reputed to have one hundred heads, or fifty, or nine. It was one of the twelve labours of HERCULES to kill it, and, as soon as he struck off one of its heads, two shot up in its place. Hence hydra-headed applied to a difficulty which goes on increasing as it is combated. The monster was eventually destroyed by Hercules with the assistance of his charioteer, who applied burning brands to its wounds as soon as each head was severed by his master.

Hyena (hī ē' ná). Held in veneration by the ancient Egyptians, because it is fabled that a certain stone, called the "hyænia", is found in the eye of the creature, and Pliny asserts (Nat. Hist., xxxvii, 60) that when placed under the tongue it imparts the gift of prophecy.

The skilful Lapidarists of Germany affirm that this beast hath a stone in his eye (or rather his head) called Hyæna or Hyænius.

TOPSELL:
Historie of Foure-footed Beastes (1607).

Hygeia (hī jē' ā). Goddess of health in Greek mythology, and the daughter of ÆSCULAPIUS. Her symbol was a serpent drinking from a cup in her hand.

Hyksos. The so-called "Shepherd Kings" who ruled Egypt from the end of the 18th century B.C. to the beginning of the 16th, the period between the Middle and New Kingdoms. They were Asiatic invaders, and the name derives from a mistranslation of the Egyptian word, which more correctly means "foreign princes".

Hylas (hī' lās). A boy beloved by HERCULES, carried off by the NYMPHS while drawing water from a fountain in Mysia.

Hymen (hī' men). Properly, a marriage song of the ancient Greeks; later personified as the god of marriage, represented as a youth carrying a torch and veil—a more mature EROS, or CUPID.

Hymettus (hī met' ūs). A mountain in Attica, famous for its honey. Cp. HYBLA.

There, flowery hill, Hymettus, with the sound
Of bees' industrious murmur, oft invites
To studious musing.

MILTON: Paradise Regained, IV, 247.

Hyperboreans. In Greek legend, a happy people dwelling beyond the North Wind, BOREAS, from which their name was supposedly derived. They were said to live for a thousand years under a cloudless sky, knowing no strife or violence. The word is applied in general to those living in the extreme north.

Hyperion. In Greek mythology, one of the TITANS, son of URANUS and GÆA, and father of HELIOS, SELENE, and Eos (the Sun, Moon, and Dawn). The name is sometimes given by poets to the sun itself, but not by Keats in his "Fragment" of this name.

Hypermnestra. Wife of LYNCEUS and the only one of the fifty daughters of Danaus who did not murder her husband on their bridal night. See DANAIDES.

Hypnotism. The art of producing trance-sleep, or the state of being hypnotized. Dr. James Braid of Manchester gave it this name (1843), after first calling it neuro-hypnotism (Gr., an inducing to sleep of the nerves).

Hypocrite. Prince of Hypocrites. Tiberius Cæsar (42 B.C., A.D. 14-37) was so called because he affected a great regard for decency, but indulged in the most detestable lust and cruelty.

Abdullah Ibn Obba and his partisans were called The Hypocrites by MOHAMMED, because they feigned to be friends, but were in reality foes.

Hypostatic Union. The union of the three Persons in the TRINITY; also the union of the Divine and Human in Christ, in which the two elements, although inseparably united, each retain their distinctness. The hypostasis (Gr. hypo, under; stasis, standing; hence foundation, essence) is the personal existence as distinguished from both nature and substance.

Hyssop. David says (Ps. li, 7): "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean." The reference is to the custom of ceremonially sprinkling the unclean with a bunch of hyssop (marjoram or the thorny caper) dipped in water in which had been mixed the ashes of a red heifer. This was done as they left the Court of the Gentiles to enter the Court of the Women (Numb. xix, 17, 18).

Hysteron proteron (his' tēr on prō' tēr on), from the Greek meaning "hinder foremost", is a term used in rhetoric to describe a figure of speech in which the word that should come last is placed first, or the second of two consecutive propositions is stated first, e.g. "Moriatur, et in media arma ruamus"—Let us die, and rush into the midst of the fray (VIRGIL, Æneid, ii, 353).

In logic, the offering of what is essentially an axiom as a proof of some theorem the proof of which depends upon the axiom. Cp. PETITIO PRINCIPII.

I

I. The ninth letter of the alphabet, also of the FUTHORC, representing the Greek iota and Semitic yod. The written and printed i and j were for long interchangeable; it was only in the 19th century that in dictionaries, etc., they were treated as separate letters (in Johnson's Dictionary, iambic comes between jamb and jangle), and hence in many series—such as the signatures of sheets in a book, hallmarks on plate, etc.—either i or j is omitted. Cp. U. I is number one in Roman notation.

The dot on the small i was introduced about the 11th century as a diacritic in cases where two i's came together (e.g. filii), to distinguish between these and u.

i in logic denotes a particular affirmative.

To dot the i's and cross the t's. See DOT.

Iambic. An iamb, or iambus, is a metrical foot consisting of a short syllable followed by a long one, as away, deduce, or an unaccented followed by an accented, as be gone! Iambic verse is verse based on iambus, as for instance, the ALEXANDRINE measure, which consists of six iammbuses:

I think the thoughts you think; and if I have the knack
Of fitting thoughts to words, you peradventure lack,
Evny me not the chance, yourselves more fortunatel

BROWNING: Fifine at the Fair. lxxvi.

Father of Iambic verse. Archilochos of Paros (fl. c. 700 B.C.).

Ianthe. A Cretan girl who, as told in Ovid's METAMORPHOSES: ix. 714-797, married Iphis, who had been transformed for the purpose from a girl into a young man. The Ianthe to whom Lord BYRON dedicated his Childe Harold was Lady Charlotte Harley, born 1801, and only eleven years old at the time. Shelley gave the name to his eldest daughter.

Iapetos (äp' é tos). Son of URANUS and GÆA, father of ATLAS, PROMETHEUS, Epimetheus, and Menœtius, and ancestor of the human race, hence called genus Iapeti, the progeny of Iapetus.

Iberia (bër' i ä). Spain, the country of the Iberus, the ancient name of the river Ebro.

Iberia's Pilot. Christopher Columbus (c. 1446-1506), a Genoese by birth but a servant of Spain from 1492.

Ibis (i' bis). A sacred bird of the ancient Egyptians, with white body and black head and tail. It was the incarnation of THOTH. It is still found in the Nile marshes of the upper Sudan. The sacred ibis was often mummified after death.

Iblis. See EBLIS.

Ibn Sina. See AVICENNA.

Ibrahim. The ABRAHAM of the Koran.

Ibsenism. A concern in drama with social problems, realistically rather than romantically treated, as in the works of the Norwegian dramatist Henrik Ibsen (1828-1906), whose plays, translated by William Archer and championed by G. B. Shaw (1856-1950), infused new vigour into English drama.

Icarius. In Greek legend an Athenian who was taught the cultivation of the vine by DIONYSUS. He was slain by some peasants who had become intoxicated with wine he had given them, and who thought they had been poisoned. They buried him under a tree; his daughter Erigone, searching for her father, was directed to the spot by the howling of his dog Mœra, and when she discovered the body she hanged herself for grief. Icarus, according to this legend, became the constellation BOÛTES, Erigone the constellation VIRGO, and Mœra the star PROCYON, which rises in July, a little before the dog-star.

Icarus. Son of DÆDALUS. He flew with his father from Crete; but the sun melted the wax with which his wings were fastened on, and he fell into the sea. Those waters of the Ægean were thenceforward called the Icarian Sea.

Ice. Ice Age. This term is usually applied to the earlier part of the existing geological period, the Pleistocene, when a considerable portion of the northern hemisphere was overwhelmed by ice caps. PALÆOLITHIC man was contemporary with at least the latter periods of the Ice Age, his remains having been found, together with the mammoth and reindeer, in glacial deposits.

The Antarctic continent was also more completely ice-covered and glaciers existed on the heights of Hawaii, New Guinea, and Japan. The Ice Age is also called the glacial epoch.

A sword of ice-brook temper. Of the very best quality. The Spaniards used to plunge their swords and other weapons, while hot from the forge, into the brook Salo (Xalon), near Bibilis, in Celtiberia, to harden them. The water of the brook is very cold.

It is sword of Spain, the ice-brook's temper.
SHAKESPEARE: Othello, V, ii.

Ice Saints, or Frost Saints. Those saints whose days fall in what is called "the blackthorn winter"—that is, the second week in May (between 11 and 14). Some give only three days, but whether 11, 12 13, or 12, 13, 14 is not agreed. 11 May is the day of St. Mamertus, 12 May of St. PANCRAS, 13 May of St. Servatius, and 14 May of St. BONIFACE.

The ice-blink. The mariner's name for a luminous appearance of the sky, caused by the reflection of light from ice. If the sky is dark or brown, the navigator may be sure there is water; if it is white, rosy, or orange-coloured he may be certain there is ice. The former is called a "water sky", the latter an "ice sky".

The Danish name for the great ice-cliffs of Greenland is "The Ice-blink".

Ice-house. In the days before the domestic refrigerator, large private houses often had their own stores of ice kept in a specially constructed chamber, usually below ground level, which was known as an ice-house.

To break the ice. See under BREAK.

To cut no ice. To make no impression on others or have no influence or effect.

To skate over thin ice. To take unnecessary risks, especially in conversation or argument; to touch on a dangerous subject very lightly.

Iceni. See BOADICEA.

Ich Dien (ish dēn) (Ger., I serve). The motto of the PRINCE OF WALES since the time of Edward, the BLACK PRINCE (1330-1376); said, without foundation, to have been adopted, together with the three white ostrich feathers, from John, King of Bohemia, who fell at the battle of Crécy in 1346.

According to Welsh tradition Edward I promised to provide WALES with a prince "who could speak no word of English", and when his second son Edward (later Edward II) was born at Caernarvon he presented him to the assembly, saying in Welsh Eich dyn (Your Man).

Ichabod (ik' á bod). A son of Phinehas, born just after the death of his father and grandfather (I Sam. iv, 19). The name ("no glory") is translated "The glory has departed", hence the use of Ichabod as an exclamation.

Ichneumon. A species of mongoose venerated by the ancient Egyptians and called "Pharaoh's rat" because it fed on vermin, crocodiles' eggs, etc. The word is Gr. and means "the tracker".

Ichor (í' kôr). In classical mythology, the colourless blood of the gods. (Gr. juice).

[St. Peter] patter'd with his keys at a great rate,
And sweated through his apostolic skin;
Of course his perspiration was but ichor,
Or some such other spiritual liquor.

BYRON: Vision of Judgment, xxv.

Ichthys (ik' this). (Gr. ichthus, fish). From the 2nd century the fish was used as a symbol of Christ, and the word forms the initial letters of the acrostic Jesous CHristos, THEou Uios, Soter (Jesus Christ, Son of God, Saviour). Whether the fish symbol arose from the acrostic, or the reverse, is a matter of conjecture.

Icknield Way. An ancient trackway from the Wash to the source of the river Kennet in Wiltshire, running through Cambridgeshire, Letchworth, Tring, and the Berkshire Downs (crossing the Thames near Goring). Part of it in East Anglia became a Roman road. The origin of the name is unknown.

Icon, or Ikon (Gr. eikon, an image or likeness). A representation in the form of painting, low-relief sculpture or mosaic of Our Lord, The Blessed Virgin, or a SAINT, and held as objects of veneration in the EASTERN CHURCH. Excepting the face and hands, the whole is often covered with an embossed metal plaque representing the figure and drapery.

Icon Basilike. See EIKON BASILIKE.

Iconoclasts (Gr., image-breakers). In the 8th century reformers, essentially in the EASTERN CHURCH, opposed to the use of sacred pictures, statues, emblems, etc. The movement against the use of images was begun by the Emperor Leo III, the Isaurian, who was strongly opposed by the monks and also by Pope Gregory II and Pope Gregory III. The controversy continued under successive Iconoclast Emperors, notably Constantine VI, called insultingly "Copronymus" by his opponents. It was finally ended by the Empress Theodora in 843 in favour of the image-lovers, and Iconoclasm was proscribed.

Id, in Freudian psychology, is the whole reservoir of impulsive reactions that forms the mind, of which the EGO is a superficial layer. It is the totality of impulses or instincts comprising the true unconscious mind.

Ida, Mount Ida. A mountain or ridge of mountains in the vicinity of TROY; the scene of the Judgment of PARIS. See APPLE OF DISCORD.

Ideæan Dactyls. See DACTYLS.

Ideal Commonwealths. See COMMONWEALTHS.

Idealism, as a philosophical theory, takes a variety of forms, all of which agree that the mind is more fundamental than matter and that mind does not originate in matter; also that the material world is less real than that of the mind or spirit. Modern idealism has its roots in the philosophy of Bishop Berkeley (1685-1753), sometimes called theistic idealism. The more important theories of idealism are:

Transcendental Idealism taught by I. Kant (1724-1804); Subjective Idealism taught by J. G. Fichte (1762-1814); Absolute Idealism taught by G. W. F. Hegel (1770-1831); and Objective Idealism taught by F. W. J. von Schelling (1775-1854).

Idealism in the general sense is applied to ethical and aesthetic concepts, etc., which adopt "ideal" or perfectionist standards. Cp. MATERIALISM.

Identikit. A method of identifying criminals from composite photographs based on an assemblage of individual features selected by witnesses from a wide variety of drawings. The method was developed by Hugh C. McDonald and first used at Los Angeles in 1959.

Ides. In the ancient Roman CALENDAR the 15th of March, May, July, and October, and the 13th of all the other months; always eight days after the NONES.

Beware the Ides of March. Said as a warning of impending and certain danger. The allusion is to the warning received by Julius CÆSAR before his assassination:

What is still more extraordinary, many report that a certain soothsayer forewarned him of a great danger which threatened him on the ides of March, and that when the day was come, as he was going to the senate-house, he called to the soothsayer, and said, laughing, "The ides of March are come"; to which he answered, softly, "Yes; but they are not gone."

PLUTARCH: Julius Cæsar (Langhorne trans.).

Id est (Lat., that is). Normally abbreviated to i. e.

Idiot. Originally (in Greece), a private person, one not engaged in any public office, hence an uneducated, ignorant individual. The Greeks have the expressions, "a priest or an idiot" (layman), "a poet or an idiot" (prose-writer). In I Cor. xiv, 16, where the AUTHORIZED VERSION reads, "how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say Amen . . . ?" Wyclif's version reads, "who fillith the place of an idyot, how schal he seie amen . . . ?"

Idiot cards. In the U.S.A., the name given to large cards held up in the wings of a theatre to give a comedian on stage the cue for his next joke.

Idle Bible, The. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Idomeneus. King of Crete and ally of the Greeks at TROY. After the city was burnt he made a vow to sacrifice whatever he first encountered if the gods granted him a safe return to his kingdom. He met his own son and duly sacrificed him, but a plague followed, and the king was banished from Crete as a murderer. Cp. IPHIGENIA.

Iduna. In Scandinavian mythology, daughter of the dwarf Svold and wife of BRAGI. She was guardian of the golden apples which the gods tasted whenever they wished to renew their youth. Iduna was lured away from ASGARD by LOKI, but eventually restored, and the gods were once more able to grow youthful again and Spring came back to the earth.

Ifreet. See AFREET.

Ifs and Ans.

If ifs and ans
Were pots and pans
Where would be the tinker?

An old-fashioned jingle to describe wishful thinking; "if wishes were horses beggars could ride". The "ans", often erroneously written "ands", are merely the old use of "an" for "if".

Igernna. See IGRAINE.

Ignatius, St. According to tradition St. Ignatius was the little child whom our Saviour set in the midst of his disciples for their example. He was a convert of St. JOHN THE EVANGELIST, was consecrated Bishop of Antioch by St. PETER, and is said to have been thrown to the beasts in the amphitheatre by TRAJAN about 107. His day is 17 October and he is represented in art with lions, or chained and exposed to them.

Ignatius Loyola, St. See LOYOLA.

Father Ignatius. The Rev. Joseph Leycester Lyne (1837-1908), a deacon of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND, who founded a pseudo-BENEDICTINE monastery at Capel-y-ffin, near Llanthony, Monmouthshire, in 1870. He was an eloquent preacher, but his ritualistic practices brought him into conflict with his ecclesiastical superiors who would not admit him to priests orders. In 1898 he was ordained by Joseph Villatte, a wandering BISHOP who had been consecrated by a schismatic "JACOBITE" prelate in Ceylon.

The Rev. and Hon. Geo. Spencer (1799-1864), a clergyman of the Church of England, who joined the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH and became Superior of the English province of the Congregation of Passionists, was also known as "Father Ignatius".

Ignis Fatuus. The "Will o' the wisp" or "Friar's lantern", a flame-like phosphorescence flitting over marshy ground (due to the spontaneous combustion of gases from decaying vegetable matter), and deluding people who attempt to follow it; hence any delusive aim or object, or some Utopian scheme that is utterly impracticable. The name means "a foolish fire" and is also called "Elf-fire", "Jack o'lantern", "Peg-a-lantern", "Kit o' the canstick", "Spunkie", "Walking Fire", "Fair Maid of Ireland", "John in the Wad".

When thou rannest up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus or a ball of wildfire, there's no purchase in money.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, III, iii.

According to Russian folklore, these wandering fires are the spirits of still-born children which flit between HEAVEN and the INFERNO.

Ignoramus (Lat., we take no notice of it). The grand jury used to write ignoramus on the back of indictments "not found" or not to be sent to court. This was often construed as an indication of the stupidity of the jury, hence its present meaning.

Ignorantines. A name given to the Brothers of the Christian Schools, a Roman Catholic religious fraternity founded at Reims by the Abbé de la Salle in 1680 for giving free education to the children of the poor. They now carry out teaching work in many countries. A clause in their constitution prohibited the admission of priests with theological training, hence the name, which was also given to a body of Augustinian mendicants, the Brothers of Charity, or Brethren of Saint Jean-de-Dieu, founded in Portugal in 1495.

Igraine. In ARTHURIAN ROMANCE, the wife of Gerlois, Duke of Tintagel, in CORNWALL, and mother of King ARTHUR. His father, UTHUR Pendragon, married Igraine the day after her husband was slain.

Ihram (i rām). The ceremonial garb of Mohammedan pilgrims to MECCA; also the ceremony of assuming it.

We prepared to perform the ceremony of Al-Ihram (assuming the pilgrim garb) . . . we donned the attire, which is nothing but two new cotton cloths, each six feet long by three and a half broad, white with narrow red stripes and fringes. . . . One of these sheets, technically termed the Rida, is thrown over the back, and, exposing the arm and shoulder, is knotted at the right side in the style Wishah. The Izar is wrapped round the loins from waist to knee, and knotted or tucked in at the middle, supports itself.

BURTON:

Pilgrimage to Al-Madinah and Mecca, xxvi.

I.H.S. The Greek I H Σ, meaning IΗΣΟΥΣ (Jesus), the long ε (H) being mistaken for capital H, the abbreviation 'ihs' was often expanded as 'Ihesus'. St. Bernardine of Siena in 1424 applied them to Jesus Hominum Salvator (Jesus, the Saviour of men). Other explanations were In Hac Salus (safety in this, i.e. the Cross) and In Hoc Signo [vincis] (in this sign [ye shall conquer]). See CONSTANTINE'S CROSS under CROSS.

Il Millione. See MILIONE.

Iliad (Gr. Iliados, of Ilium or Troy). The epic poem of twenty-four books attributed to HOMER, recounting the siege of TROY. PARIS, son of King PRIAM of Troy, when guest of MENELAUS, King of Sparta, ran away with his host's wife, HELEN. Menelaus induced the Greeks to lay siege to Troy to avenge the perfidy, and the siege lasted ten years. The poem begins in the tenth year with a quarrel between AGAMEMNON, King of Mycenae and commander-in-chief of the allied Greeks, and ACHILLES, the hero who had retired from the army in ill temper. The Trojans now prevail and Achilles sends his friend PATROCLUS to oppose them, but Patroclus is slain. Achilles in a desperate rage rushes into the battle and slays HECTOR, the commander of the Trojan army. The poem ends with the funeral rites of Hector.

An Iliad of woes. A number of evils falling one after another; virtually the whole catalogue of human ills finds mention in the Iliad.

Demosthenes used the phrase (Ilias kakon) and it was adopted by CICERO (Ilias malorum) in his Ad Atticum, viii, 11.

It opens another Iliad of woes to Europe.
BURKE: On a Regicide Peace, ii.

The "Iliad" in a nutshell. See NUT-SHELL.

The French Iliad. The Romance of the Rose (see under ROSE) has been so called. Similarly the NIBELUNGENLIED has been called the German Iliad, and the Lusiad, the Portuguese Iliad.

Ilk, Of that (O.E. ilca, the same). This phrase is often misused to mean "of the same kind", but is only correctly used when the surname of the person spoken of is the same as the name of his estate; Bethune of that ilk means "Bethune of Bethune". Used adjectivally it means "every", "each"; as in "Ilka lassie has her laddie."

Ill May-Day. See EVIL MAY-DAY.

Ill-starred. Unlucky; fated to be unfortunate. In SHAKESPEARE'S Othello (v, ii), Othello says of Desdemona, "O ill-starr'd wench!" The allusion is to the astrological dogma that the stars influence the fortunes of mankind.

Illegitimates. An old Australian slang name for free settlers who came voluntarily, and not for "legal" reasons—i.e. as convicts.

Illuminated Doctor. See DOCTORS OF LEARNING.

Illuminati. The baptized were at one time so called, because a lighted candle was given them to hold as a symbol that they were illuminated by the HOLY GHOST.

The name has been given to, or adopted by, several sects and secret societies professing to have superior enlightenment, especially to a republican society of deists founded by Adam Weishaupt (1748-1830), at Ingoldstadt in Bavaria in 1776, to establish a religion consistent with "sound reasons". They were also called Perfectibilists.

Among others to whom the name has been applied are the HESYCHASTS; the Alombrados of 16th-century Spain; the French GUERINISTS; the ROSICRUCIANS; the French and Russian MARTINISTS; and in the U.S.A. to the Jeffersonians, etc.

The Illuminator. The surname given to St. Gregory of Armenia (c. 240–322), the apostle of Christianity among the Armenians.

Illustrious, The. Albert V, Duke of Austria, and Emperor Albert II (1397, 1438–1439). Ptolemy V, Epiphanes (Illustrious), King of Egypt (c. 210, 205–180 B.C.).

JAMSHID (Jam the Illustrious), fourth king of the mythical Pishdadian dynasty of Persia.

Ch'ien-lung, fourth of the Manchu dynasty of China (1711, 1736–1796).

Image-breakers, The. ICONOCLASTS.

Imagism. A school of poetry founded by Ezra Pound (b. 1885), derived from the concepts of the philosopher T. E. Hulme (1883–1917). The imagist poets were in revolt against excessive romanticism, and proclaimed that poetry should use the language of common speech, create new rhythms, be uninhibited in choice of subject, and present an image.

Imam. An Arabic word meaning “leader”, i.e. one whose example is to be followed. The title is given to the head of the MOSLEM community but is more familiar through its application to those leading the prayers in the Mosques, the lesser Imams. The name is also given as an honorary title and to the ruler of the Yemen.

Hidden Imam. See MAHDI.

Imbroccata, or imbrocata (Ital.). An old fencing term for a thrust over the arm.

The special rules, as your punto, your reverso, your staccato, your imbroccato, your passato, your montanto.

JONSON: Every Man in His Humour, iv, 5.

Immaculate Conception. This dogma, that the Blessed Virgin Mary was “preserved immaculate from all stain of original sin” from “the first moment of her conception” was not declared by the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH to be an article of faith until 1854 when Pius IX issued the Bull Ineffabilis Deus. It has a long history as a belief and was debated by the SCHOOLMEN. It was denied by St. Thomas Aquinas (see THOMISTS), but upheld by Duns Scotus. (See DUNCE.)

The Feast of the Immaculate Conception is on 8 December and it is one of the HOLIDAYS OF OBLIGATION.

Immolate. To sacrifice (Lat. immolare, to sprinkle with meal). The reference is to the ancient Roman custom of sprinkling wine and fragments of the sacred cake (mola salsa) on the head of a victim to be offered in sacrifice.

Immortal. The Immortal. Yung-Cheng, 3rd Manchu Emperor of China (1723–1733), assumed this title.

The Immortal Tinker. John Bunyan (1628–1688), a tinker by trade.

The Immortals. The bodyguard of the kings of ancient Persia. See also REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

The Forty Immortals. The forty members of the French Academy are so nicknamed.

Imp. Lincoln Imp. See LINCOLN.

Impanation. The dogma that the body and blood of Christ are locally present in the consecrated bread and wine of the EUCHARIST, just as God was present in the body and soul of Christ. The word means “putting into the bread” and is found as early as the 11th century. Cp. TRANSUBSTANTIATION.

Imperial. From the Lat. imperialis (from imperium), meaning pertaining to an emperor or empire. The following are some of its special and particular applications:

A standard size of printing and writing paper measuring 22 × 30 in.

A Russian gold coin of the 18th century, 10 roubles in value.

A trunk for luggage of former days adapted for the roof of a coach or diligence.

A tuft of hair on the chin, all the rest being clean-shaven. So called from the fashion set by the Emperor NAPOLEON III (1808–1873).

Imperial Conference. The name given to the conferences held in London between the prime ministers of the various dominions of the British Empire between 1907 and 1946 inclusive. These conferences had their origin in the first Colonial Conference which met in 1887 on the occasion of Queen Victoria's JUBILEE. Since 1948 the COMMONWEALTH Prime Ministers' Conference has replaced the Imperial Conference.

The Imperial Service Order was instituted by Edward VII in 1902 for Civil Servants with long and meritorious records.

Imposition. Imposition of hands. See LAYING ON OF HANDS under HAND.

Impositions, as duties levied on imports under royal prerogative, were a point of dispute between James I and the Commons. Charles I continued to levy them until the fall of Strafford in 1642, when he consented to an ACT OF PARLIAMENT rendering them illegal.

Impossibilities

Impossibilities. Examples of the many familiar expressions denoting the impossible are:

Gathering grapes from thistles.
Fetching water in a sieve.
Washing a blackamoor white.
Catching wind in cabbage nets.
Flaying eels by the tail.
Making cheese of chalk.
Squaring the circle.
Turning base metal into gold.
Making a silk purse of a sow's ear.

Impressionism. The first of the modern art movements, taking its name from a condemnatory criticism of Claude Monet's painting Impressions, shown in 1863. Edouard Manet, Auguste Renoir, Camille Pissarro and Edgar Degas were the leading impressionist painters who upheld the new approach. As the name implies, they rejected the established conventions and sought to capture the impression of colour of transitory and volatile nature rather than its form. It broke down the distinction between a sketch and a finished painting.

Imprimatur (Lat., let it be printed). An official licence to print a book. Such a licence or royal imprimatur was required under the Licensing Act of 1662 to secure ecclesiastical conformity. The act was initially for two years, was not renewed after 1695, and was in abeyance from 1679 to 1685.

In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, if a priest writes on theological and moral subjects the book has to receive an imprimatur and NIHIL OBSTAT. The former is granted by the BISHOP or his delegate. Cp. INDEX.

Impropriation (Lat. impropriare, to take as one's own). Profits of an ecclesiastical BENEFICE in the hands of a layman, who is called the impropriator. When the benefice is in the hands of a spiritual corporation it is called appropriation. At the REFORMATION, many appropriated monastic benefices passed into the hands of lay rectors, who usually paid only a small part of the TITHES to incumbents, hence the need for QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY.

In. To be in for it. To be due for something unpleasant; to be due for a telling off; punishment is to be expected.

To have it in for a person is to be planning to work off a grudge against him; to be waiting the opportunity to get one's own back.

Ins and outs. All the details of a subject, event, etc.

In camera. A meeting or hearing held in private (L.Lat. camera, chamber or room).

In Cœna Domini (in chā' na dom' i ni) (Lat., on the Lord's Supper). A papal BULL issued from the 13th century until its suspension in 1773 owing to the opposition of the civil authorities. It contained excommunications and censures against heresies, schism, sacrilege, and the infringement of papal and ecclesiastical privileges by temporal powers, etc. Its publication came to be restricted to MAUNDY THURSDAY and many of its ecclesiastical censures were incorporated in Pius IX's bull Apostolica Sedis (1869).

In commendam (in kom en' dām) (Lat., in trust). The holding of church preferment for a time, during a vacancy; and later restricted to livings held by a BISHOP in conjunction with his SEE. There were many abuses, and the practice was ended in England in 1836.

In esse (in es' i) (Lat. esse, to be). In actual existence, as opposed to in posse, in potentiality. Thus a living child is "in esse", but before birth is only "in posse".

In extenso (Lat.). At full length, word for word, without abridgement.

In extremis (in eks trē' mis). At the very point of death; in articulo mortis.

In flagrante delicto (Lat., while the offence is flagrant). RED-HANDED; in the very act.

In forma pauperis. See FORMA PAUPERIS.

In gremio legis (in grē' mi ō lē' jis) (Lat., in the bosom of the law). Under the protection of the law.

In loco parentis (in lō' kō pa ren' tis) (Lat., in place of a parent). Usually applied to those having temporary charge of minors in some capacity and therefore taking over parental functions.

In medias res (in mē' di ās rāz) (Lat., in the middle of things). In novels and epic poetry, the author generally begins in medias res. Cp. AB OVO.

In memoriam (Lat.). In memory of.

In partibus (infidelium) (Lat., in the regions of the faithless). A "bishop in partibus" was a Roman Catholic BISHOP in any country, Christian or otherwise and usually without a diocese, whose title was from some old SEE fallen away from the Catholic faith. Pope Leo XIII abolished the designation in 1882 and substituted that of "titular bishop".

In petto (Ital.). Held in reserve, kept back, something done privately and not announced to the general public. (Lat. in pectore, in the breast.)

Cardinals in petto. CARDINALS chosen by the POPE, but not yet proclaimed publicly. Their names are in pectore [of the Pope].

In posse. See IN ESSE.

In propria persona (Lat.) personally, and not by deputy or agents.

In re (in rē) (Lat.). In the matter of; on the subject of; as In re Jones v. Robinson.

In rem, against the property or thing referred to.

In situ (Lat.). In its original place.

I at first mistook it for a rock in situ, and took my compass to observe the direction of its cleavage.

CHARLES DARWIN:

The Voyage of the "Beagle", ch. ix.

In statu quo (in stăt' ū kwō) or, In statu quo ante (Lat.). In the state in which things were before the change took place. To maintain the status quo is to keep things as they are.

In statu pupillari (L. Lat.). Under guardianship.

In toto (in tō' tō) (Lat.). Entirely, altogether.

In vacuo (in vāk' ū ō) (Lat.). In a vacuum.

In vino veritas (Lat.). See VINO.

In-and-In. A game for three, played with four dice, once very common. "In" is a throw of doubles, "in-and-in" a throw of double doubles, which sweeps the board.

He is a merchant still, adventurer,
At in-and-in.

B. JONSON: New Inn, iii, 1.

Inaugurate. To install into some office with appropriate ceremonies; to open formally. From Lat. inaugurare, which meant first to take OMENS by AUGURY, and then to consecrate or install after taking such omens.

Inbread. See BAKER'S DOZEN.

Inca. A king or royal prince of the dynasty governing Peru before the Spanish conquest; a member of the tribe in Peru at that time. The capital of their extensive empire was at Cuzco, and the dynasty was mythologically descended from Manco Capac, who was high priest of the Sun. His brothers were Cachi (Salt), Uchu (Pepper), and Auca (Pleasure). It was prophesied that Manco's golden rod would sink into the ground on reaching their destined home. This happened at Cuzco—

Here the children of the Sun . . . soon entered upon their beneficent mission among the rude inhabitants of the country; Manco Capac teaching the men the arts of agriculture, and Mama Oello initiating her own sex in the mysteries of weaving and spinning.

H. M. PRESCOTT: The Conquest of Peru, I, i.

The last of the Inca dynasty Atahualpa was murdered by the Spaniards in 1533.

Incarnation. The Christian doctrine that the Son of God took human flesh and that Jesus Christ is truly God and truly man (L.Lat. incarnari, to be made flesh).

Inchcape Rock. A dangerous rocky reef (also called the Bell Rock) about 12 miles from Arbroath in the North Sea (Inch or Innis means island). The abbot of Arbroath or "Aberbrothok" fixed a bell on a float as a warning to mariners. Southey's ballad of this name tells how the pirate Ralph the Rover cut the bell adrift and was himself wrecked on the very rock as a consequence.

A similar tale is told of St. Govan's bell in Pembrokeshire. In the chapel was a silver bell, which was stolen one summer evening by pirates, but no sooner had their boat put to sea than it was wrecked.

Incog.—i.e. Incognito (Ital.) Under an assumed name or title. When a royal person, public figure, or a celebrity travels and does not wish to be treated ceremoniously or desires to avoid the public gaze he temporarily adopts another name and travels incog.

Incorruptible, The. Robespierre. See SEA-GREEN.

Incubus. A nightmare, anything that weighs heavily on the mind. In mediæval times it denoted an evil demon who was supposed to have sexual intercourse with women during their sleep (L.Lat. incubus, a nightmare). Cp. SUCCUBUS.

Women may now go sauffy up and down;
In every bush or under every tree,
There is noon oother incubus but he,
And he ne wol doon hem but dishonour.

CHAUCER: Wife of Bath's Tale, 1.24.

Incunabula (Lat., swaddling clothes; from cunae, a cradle). The cradle, birthplace, origins, or early stages of anything. The word is particularly and arbitrarily applied to early days of printing and book production up to 1500, although this date does not mark any significant change in these crafts. The middle of the 16th century is a much more satisfactory termination of the early period of printing and book production.

The word incunabula was first used in connexion with printing by Bernard von Mallinckrodt . . . in a tract, De ortu et progressu artis typographicæ (Cologne, 1639), which he contributed to the second centenary of Gutenberg's invention. Here he describes the period from Gutenberg to 1500 as 'prima typographiæ incunabula', the time when typography was in its swaddling-clothes.

S. H. STEINBERG:

Five Hundred Years of Printing, ch. I.

Indenture

Indenture. A document or agreement devised to prevent forgery; especially one between an apprentice and his master. So called because they were duplicated on a single sheet and separated or indented by a zigzag cut so that each party held identical documents. Their authenticity could be proved by joining the cuts.

Independence Day. 4 July, which is kept as a national holiday in the United States of America, because the Declaration of Independence asserting the sovereign independence of the former British colonies was adopted on 4 July 1776.

Independents. A collective name for the various PROTESTANT separatist sects, especially prominent in 17th-century England, who rejected both Presbyterianism and EPISCOPACY, holding that each congregation should be autonomous or independent. The earliest were the BARROWISTS and BROWNISTS of Elizabeth I's reign, and the Baptists and CONGREGATIONALISTS became the two main groups, but there were others more eccentric such as the FIFTH-MONARCHY MEN. They were notably strong in the Cromwellian army.

Index, The (Index Librorum Prohibitorum). The "List of Prohibited Books" of the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH which members were forbidden to read except in special circumstances. The first Index was made by the INQUISITION in 1557, although Pope Gelasius issued a list of prohibited writings in 494 and there had been earlier condemnations and prohibitions. In 1571 Pius V set up a Congregation of the Index to supervise the list, and in 1917 its duties were transferred to the Holy Office. The Index was abolished 14 June 1966. In addition to the Index there was the Codex Expurgatorius of writings from which offensive doctrinal or moral passages were removed. Since 1897 diocesan bishops were given greater responsibility in the control of literature and the Index became less prominent.

All books likely to be contrary to faith and morals, including translations of the BIBLE not authorized by the Church, were formerly placed on the Index. Among authors wholly or partly prohibited were Chaucer, Bacon, Milton, Addison, Goldsmith, Locke, Gibbon; Montaigne, Descartes, VOLTAIRE, Hugo, Renan; Savonarola, Croce, D'Annunzio; and for a long time Galen, Copernicus, and Dante. Cp. IMPRIMATUR.

India is so named from Indus, in Sanskrit Sindhu (the river), in O.Persian Hindu. Hindustan is the stan or "country" of the river Hindus.

India paper. A creamy-coloured printing-paper originally made in China and Japan from vegetable fibre, and used for taking off the finest proofs of engraved plates; hence India proof, the proof of an engraving on India paper, before lettering.

The India paper (or Oxford India paper) used for printing Bibles and high-class "thin paper" and "pocket" editions is a very thin, tough, and opaque imitation. The name "India" given to these papers arises from their original importation through the "India trade" which brought in the products of the Far East.

Indian. American Indians. When Columbus left Spain in 1492 he set out to reach India and China, etc., by sailing west. When he reached the Bahamas the natives were called Indians in the belief that he had reached the fringes of the East. Hence the later name West Indies. See AMERINDIANS.

The Indian drug, or weed. Tobacco. Here the reference is to the West Indies.

His breath compounded of strong English beere,
And th' Indian drug, would suffer none come neere.

JOHN TAYLOR, The Water Poet, 1630.

Indian file. Singly, one after another. From the American Indian practice of progressing in single file, each one of the column stepping in his predecessor's footprints, and the last man obliterating them. Thus neither the track nor the number of warriors could be traced.

Indian giver. An expression of U.S. origin, one who gives a present and later asks for its return, as American Indians did, if they got nothing in exchange for their gifts.

Indian Mutiny. The name given to the revolt in parts of British India (1857-1859) which was primarily a mutiny of sepoys in the East India Company's Bengal army rather than a national revolt against British rule.

Indian ringworm. Dhobie itch.

Indian summer. A term of American origin now generally applied to a period of fine sunny weather in late autumn. In America it is applied to such a period of mild dry weather usually accompanied by a haze. The name arose from the fact that such weather was more pronounced in the lands formerly occupied by the Indians than in the eastern regions inhabited by the white population.

Indirect taxation is the levying of a tax on consumer commodities as opposed to direct taxation on land and incomes.

Indo-European. A term invented by Thomas Young, the Egyptologist, in 1813, and later adopted by scientists, anthropologists, and philologists to describe the racial and linguistic origins of the main Indian and European peoples. Philologists have classified the Indo-European languages in groups such as Indo-Iranian, Greek, Italic, CELTIC, Germanic, etc.

Indra. An ancient Hindu god of the sky, originally the greatest, who was the hurler of thunderbolts and giver of rain, a god of warriors and of nature. He is represented as four-armed and his steed is an elephant. He is the son of HEAVEN and Earth and lives on the fabulous Mount MERU, the centre of the earth, north of the Himalayas.

Induction (Lat., the act of leading in). When a clergyman is inducted to a living he is led to the church door, and his hand is laid on the key by the archdeacon. The new incumbent then tolls the bell.

Indulgence. In the CATHOLIC Church, the remission before God of the temporal punishment due for those sins of which the guilt has been forgiven in the sacrament of Penance. Such indulgences are granted out of the TREASURY OF THE CHURCH; they are either plenary or partial. In the later MIDDLE AGES the sale of indulgences by PARDONERS became a grave abuse and it was the hawking of indulgences by Tetzels and the DOMINICANS in Germany that roused Luther and precipitated the REFORMATION.

Declarations of Indulgence. Declarations issued by Charles II (1662 and 1672) and James II (1687 and 1688) suspending the penal laws against DISSENTERS and Roman Catholics. Except that of 1662, they were issued under royal prerogative; that of 1688 led to the trial of the SEVEN BISHOPS.

Industrial Revolution. A term popularized by Arnold Toynbee whose Lectures on The Industrial Revolution of the 18th century in England were published in 1884, although used half a century earlier by French observers. It generally denotes the whole range of technological and economic changes which transformed Great Britain from an essentially rural society into an urban industrialized state. The limiting dates usually assigned to this period of change vary somewhat, between 1750 to 1780 as the beginning and 1830 to 1850 as the end. The Industrial Revolution in this country occurred earlier than elsewhere.

Inexpressibles. A 19th-century EUPHEMISM for trousers, also called unmentionables. This absurdity is attributed to PETER PINDAR (see PINDAR) who used it in a biting LAMPOON on the DANDY Prince Regent.

Infallibility. In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, the POPE, when speaking EX CATHEDRA on a question of faith and morals is held to be free from error. This dogma was adopted by the VATICAN COUNCIL of 1870 (many members dissenting or abstaining from voting) and was publicly announced by Pius IX at St. Peter's.

Infant (Lat. infans; ultimately from in, negative, and fari, to speak). Literally, one who is unable to speak; a child. It was used as a synonym of CHILDE, as "The Infant hearkened wisely to her tale" (Spenser, The Faerie Queene, VI, viii, 25). Hence Infanta, any princess of the royal blood in Spain and Portugal except an heiress of the crown; and Infante, any son of the sovereigns of Spain and Portugal except the crown prince who, in Spain, was called the Prince of the Asturias.

Infantry. Foot-soldiers. This is the same word as INFANT; it is the Ital. infanteria, from infante, a youth; hence one young and inexperienced who acted as a page to a KNIGHT, hence a foot-soldier.

Inferiority complex. A psycho-analytical term for a complex resulting from a sense of inferiority dating from childhood. It is supposed to cause an exaggerated desire for success and power, and frequently a conceited and pushing manner.

Infernal Column. So the corps of Latour d'Auvergne (1743-1800)—"THE FIRST GRENADIER OF THE REPUBLIC"—was called, from its terrible charges with the bayonet.

The same name—Colonnes infernales—was given, because of their brutality, to the twelve bodies of republican troops which "pacified" La Vendée in 1793, under General Turreau.

Inferno. We have Dante's notion of the infernal regions in his INFERNO; HOMER's in the ODYSSEY, Bk. XI; VIRGIL's in the ÆNEID, Bk. VI; Spenser's in The Faerie

Queene, Bk. II, canto vii; Ariosto's in ORLANDO FURIOSO, Bk. XVII; Tasso's in JERUSALEM DELIVERED, Bk. IV; Milton's in PARADISE LOST; Fénelon's in Télémaque, Bk. XVIII; and Beckford's in his romance of VATHEK. See HELL; HADES.

Infra dig. Not befitting one's position and public character. Short for Lat. infra dignitatem, beneath (one's) dignity.

Infralapsarian. The same as SUBLAPSARIAN.

Ingoldsby. The pseudonym of the Rev. Richard Harris Barham (1788–1845) as author of the Ingoldsby Legends, which appeared in Bentley's Miscellany and the New Monthly Magazine, and in 1840 in book form.

Ingrained. See KNAVE IN GRAIN under GRAIN.

Ink. From Lat. encaustus, burnt in, encaustic.

Inkhorn terms. A common 16th-century term for pedantic expressions which smell of the lamp (see under LAMP). The inkhorn was the receptacle of horn, wood or metal which pedants and pedagogues carried with them.

I know them that thinke Rhetorique to stande whole upon darke wordes; and hee that can catch an ynke horn terme by the taile him they coumpt to be a fine Englishman.

WILSON: Arte of Rhetorique (1533).

SHAKESPEARE uses the phrase, an "Ink-horn mate" (Henry VI, Pt. I, III, i).

Ink-slinger (U.S.A., ink-jerker). A contemptuous term for a writer, especially a newspaper journalist.

Inn. The word is Old English and originally meant a private dwelling-house or lodging. Hence Clifford's Inn, once the mansion of De Clifford; Lincoln's Inn, the abode of the Earls of Lincoln; GRAY'S INN. The word then came to be applied to a public house giving lodging and entertainment, or a tavern.

Now when as Phæbus with his fiery waime
Unto his Inne began to draw apace.

SPENSER: The Faerie Queene, VI, iii, 29.

Inns of Court. The four voluntary societies in London which have the exclusive right of calling to the English BAR. They are the Inner Temple, The Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn and GRAY'S INN. Each is governed by a board of BENCHERS.

Innings. He has had a long, or a good innings. A good long run of luck, a long time in office, etc. An innings in cricket is the time that the eleven or an individual has in batting at the wicket.

Inniskillings. In 1689, one cavalry and one infantry regiment were raised in Enniskillen to defend the town in the cause of William III, the former becoming the 6th (Inniskilling) Dragoons in 1751. These latter amalgamated with the 5th Dragoon Guards in 1922 to form the 5th/6th Dragoons and were renamed the 5th Inniskilling Dragoon Guards in 1927. The title "Royal" was granted on the occasion of George V's silver JUBILEE (1935).

In 1751, the infantry regiment became the 27th (Inniskilling) Regiment of Foot. In 1881, they were renamed the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, with the 108th Foot as their 2nd battalion, becoming in 1968 the 1st Battalion Royal Irish Rangers.

Innocent, An. An idiot or born fool was formerly so called.

Although he be in body deformed, in minde foolish, an innocent borne, a beggar by misfortune, yet doth he deserve a better then thy selfe.—LYLY: Euphues (1579).

The Feast of the Holy Innocents. See under HOLY.

The massacre of the Innocents. A facetious name in parliamentary circles for BILLS that are left over at the end of a session for lack of time to deal with them. The allusion is to Herod's murder of the Innocents. See FEAST OF THE HOLY INNOCENTS under HOLY.

Ino. See LEUCOTHEA.

Inquisition, The (Lat. inquisitio, an enquiry). The name given to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction in the CATHOLIC Church dealing with the prosecution of heresy. In the earlier days of the Church excommunication was the normal punishment, but in the later 12th and early 13th centuries, disturbed by the growth of the Cathari (see ALBIGENSES), the Church began to favour seeking the aid of the State. The Inquisition as such was instituted by the Emperor Frederick II in 1232 when he entrusted the seeking out of heretics to state officers. Consequently Pope Gregory IX appointed Inquisitors, chiefly from the DOMINICAN and FRANCISCAN Orders, to uphold the authority of the Church in these matters. They held court in the local monastery of their order. Proceedings were in secret, and torture, as a means of breaking the will of the accused, was authorized by Pope Innocent IV in 1252. Obstinate heretics were handed over to the secular authorities for punishment which usually meant death at the stake (see AUTO DA FÉ). In 1542 the Congrega- tion of the Inquisition was set up as the final court of appeal in trials of heresy, and its title was changed to the Holy Office in 1908.

The famous Spanish Inquisition was established in 1479, closely bound up with the State, and at first directed against converts from Judaism and ISLAM. Its famous first Grand Inquisitor was Torquemada (1420-1498), and during his term of office some 2,000 heretics were burned. The Spanish Inquisition was abolished by Joseph Bonaparte in 1808; reintroduced in 1814 and finally terminated in 1834.

I.N.R.I. The initial letters of the inscription affixed to the CROSS of Christ by order of Pontius Pilate—Iesus Nazarenus, Rex Iudæorum, Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews (John xix, 19). It was written in Greek, Latin, and Hebrew (Luke xxiii, 38).

Insane Root, The. A plant, probably henbane or hemlock, supposed to deprive of his senses anyone who partook of it. Banquo says of the witches:

Were such things here as we do speak about?
Or have we eaten of the insane root
That takes the reason prisoner?

SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, I, iii.

Similar properties were attributed to MANDRAKE, BELLADONNA, poppy, etc. Cp. MOLY.

Inscription (on coins). See LEGEND.

Inspired Idiot, The. Oliver Goldsmith (1728-1774) was so called by Horace Walpole.

Installation. The correct term for the induction of a CANON or prebendary to his stall in a cathedral or collegiate church. Members of certain orders of CHIVALRY are also installed.

Institutes (Lat. instituere, to set up). A digest of the elements of a subject, especially law, as Coke's Institutes of the Laws of England and Erskine's Institutes of the Laws of Scotland. The most celebrated is the Institutes of Justinian completed in 533. It was intended as an introduction to the PANDECTS and was closely based on the earlier Institutes of Gaius and also on those of Callistratus, Paulus, Ulpian, and Marcian. Calvin's doctrines were summarily expressed in his famous Institutio Religionis Christianæ, or Institutes.

Insult. Literally, to leap on (the prostrate body of a foe); hence, to treat with contumely (Lat. insultare, to leap upon). Terence says, Insultare fores calceibus (Eumuchus, II, ii, 54). The priests of BAAL, to show their indignation against their gods, "leaped upon the altar which they had made" (I Kings xviii, 26). Cp. DESULTORY.

Intelligence Quotient, or I.Q., is the ratio, expressed as a percentage, of a person's mental age to his actual age, the former being the level of test performance which is median for that age tested by the Binet type scale or some similar system. Thus if a 10-year-old has a mental age of 9, his I.Q. is 90. 100 indicates average intelligence. The term was introduced by William Stern and popularized by L. M. Terman.

Inter alia (Lat.). Among other things or matters.

Intercalary (Lat. inter, between; calare, to proclaim solemnly). An intercalary day is a day inserted between two others, as 29 February in a LEAP YEAR; so called because, among the Romans, this was a subject of solemn proclamation. Cp. CALENDs.

Interdict. In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, an ecclesiastical punishment placed upon individuals, particular places, or a district, restrictions being placed upon participation in, or performance of, certain SACRAMENTS, solemn services and public worship. Some notable historical instances are:

1081. Poland was put under an interdict by Pope Gregory VII because Boleslaw II, the Bold, slew Stanislas, Bishop of Cracow, on the altar steps of his church.

1180. SCOTLAND was similarly treated by Pope Alexander III for the expulsion of the Bishop of St. Andrews.

1200. France was interdicted by Pope Innocent III because Philip Augustus had his marriage with Ingelburge annulled.

1208. ENGLAND was put under an interdict lasting until 1213 by Innocent III for King John's refusal to admit Stephen Langton as archbishop of Canterbury.

Interest (Lat. interesse, to be a concern to). The interest on money is the sum which a borrower agrees to pay a lender for its use. Simple interest: is interest on the principal, or money lent, only; compound interest is interest on the principal plus the interest as it accrues.

In an interesting condition. Said of an expectant mother. The phrase came into use in the 18th century.

Interlard (O.Fr. entrelarder). Originally to "lard" meat, i.e. to put strips of fat between layers of lean meat; hence, metaphorically, to mix irrelevant matter with the solid part of a discourse. Thus we say, "To interlard with oaths", "to interlard with compliments", etc.

International

They interlard their native drinks with choice
Of strongest brandy.

JOHN PHILIPS: Cyder II.

International, or Internationale. The recognized international socialist and communist anthem. The words were written in 1871 by Eugène Pottier, a woodworker of Lille, and set to music by P. Degeyter.

Internationals. The name usually applied to the international federations of Socialist and Communist parties (see under COMMUNISM), the first of which was set up under the auspices of Karl Marx in 1864 as the International Working Men's Association, lasting till 1872. The INTERNATIONALE was adopted as its anthem. The Second, or Social-Democratic International, was formed in 1889 and the Third or Communist International was set up by Lenin in 1919 and lasted until 1941. The abortive Trotskyite Fourth International dates from 1936.

Intolerable Acts. The American name for a group of British measures directed against Massachusetts in 1774, after the BOSTON TEA PARTY. They consisted of the Boston Port Act, closing the port of Boston; the Massachusetts Government Act, increasing British control; the Transportation Act, permitting British officials accused of capital offences to be tried outside Massachusetts; and the Quartering Act, which stationed royal troops in the barracks of Boston.

Invalides (an' vâ léd). Hôtel des Invalides. The great institution founded by Louis XIV at Paris in 1670 for infirm soldiers. It contains a museum of military objects and notably the parish church of Saint-Louis containing the tomb of NAPOLEON, whose body was brought thither from St. Helena in 1840. Close by are the tombs of his son, the Duc de Reichstadt (L'Aiglon), and Marshal Foch (1851-1929). Others buried there are Joseph Bonaparte (1768-1844), King of Naples and Spain; Jerome Bonaparte (1784-1860), King of Westphalia; Marshal Turenne (1611-1675); General Bertrand (1773-1844); Marshals Duroc (1772-1813) and Grouchy (1766-1847); General Kleber (1753-1800).

Invention of the Cross. See under CROSS.

Inventors. Among the inventors and innovators "hoist with their own petard" (see PETARD), the following examples are of interest, although some no doubt belong to the realm of fable.

Bastille. Hugues Aubriot, Provost of Paris, who built the BASTILLE (c. 1369), was the first person confined therein. The charge against him was heresy.

Brazen Bull. Perillus of Athens made a brazen bull for PHALARIS, Tyrant of Agrigentum, intended for the execution of criminals, who were shut up in the bull, fires being lighted under the belly. Phalaris admired the invention and tested it on Perillus, who was the first person baked to death in the horrible monster.

Eddystone Lighthouse. Henry Winstanley erected the first Eddystone lighthouse. It was a wooden polygon, 100 feet high, on a stone base. The architect perished in his own edifice when it was washed away by a storm in 1703.

Gallows and gibbet. We are told in the Book of Esther (vii, 9) that HAMAN devised a gallows 50 cubits high on which to hang Mordecai, by way of commencing the extirpation of the Jews; but the favourite of Ahasuerus was himself hanged thereon. Similarly Enguerrand de Marigny, Minister of Finance to Philip the Fair (1284-1314), was hanged on the gibbet which he had caused to be erected at Montfaucon for the execution of certain felons; four of his successors in office suffered the same fate.

Guillotine. Dr. J. B. V. Guillotin of Lyons was guillotined, but he was not the man after whom the GUILLOTINE was named.

Iron Cage. The Bishop of Verdun, who invented the Iron Cage, too small to allow the person confined in it to stand upright or lie at full length, was the first to be shut up in one. Cardinal La Balue, who recommended them to Louis XI, was himself confined in one for ten years.

Ostracism. Cleisthenes of Athens introduced the practice of OSTRACISM and was the first to be banished thereby.

Sanctuary. Eutropius induced the Emperor Arcadius to abolish the benefit of SANCTUARY; but a few days afterwards he committed some offence and fled for safety to the nearest church. St. Chrysostom told him that he had fallen into his own net, and he was put to death.

Turret-ship. Cowper Coles, inventor of the Turret-ship, perished in the Captain off Finisterre, 7 September 1870.

Witch-finding. Matthew Hopkins, the witch-finder, was himself tried by his own tests, and put to death as a WIZARD in 1647. Cp. DEATH FROM STRANGE CAUSES.

Investiture (Med.Lat. investitura, investing; from vestire, to clothe). The ceremonial clothing or investing of an official, dignitary, etc., with the special robes or insignia of his office.

Investiture Controversy. The name given to disputes between the Church and the Emperor and other princes over the right to invest abbots and BISHOPS with the ring and staff and to receive homage. The political and religious issues were strongly contested in the 11th and 12th centuries, especially between HILDEBRAND and the Emperor Henry IV (see CANOSSA). A compromise was reached in 1122, when the Emperor gave up his claim to invest with the ring and the staff but continued to grant the temporalities. In England the controversy between Anselm and Henry I over lay investiture was settled in a similar fashion in 1107.

Invincible Doctor. William of Occam (c. 1280-1349) or Ockham (a village in Surrey), FRANCISCAN friar and scholastic philosopher. He was also called Doctor Singularis, and Princeps Nominalium, for he was the reviver of NOMINALISM.

Invincibles. An Irish secret society of FENIANS founded in Dublin in 1881 with the object of doing away with the English "tyranny" and killing the "tyrants". They were responsible for the PHOENIX PARK MURDERS.

Invisibility, according to fable, was obtainable in many ways. For example:

Alberich's cap, "Tarnkappe", which SIEGFRIED obtained, rendered him invisible (NIBELUNGENLIED).

The helmet of PERSEUS, loaned by PLUTO and made by the CYCLOPS for the god of the underworld, rendered its wearer invisible.

JACK THE GIANT-KILLER had a cloak of invisibility as well as a cap of knowledge.

Otnit's ring. The ring of Otnit, King of Lombardy, according to the HELDENBUCH, rendered its wearer invisible.

Reynard's wonderful ring, according to REYNARD THE FOX, had three colours, one of which (green), made the wearer invisible.

See also FERN SEED; GYGES; HELIOTROPE; DEAD MAN'S HAND.

Invulnerability. There are many fabulous instances of this having been acquired. According to Greek legend, a dip in the river STYX rendered ACHILLES invulnerable, and MEDEA rendered JASON, with whom she had fallen in love, proof against wounds and fire by anointing him with the PROMETHEAN UNGUENT.

SIEGFRIED was rendered invulnerable by anointing his body with dragon's blood.

Io. The priestess of JUNO of whom JUPITER became enamoured. When Juno discovered his liaison, Jupiter transformed Io into a heifer and she wandered over the earth, finally settling in Egypt, when she was restored to human form.

Ionic Order. One of the three Greek orders of architecture, so called from Ionia, where it took its rise. The capitals are decorated with volutes, which are the characteristic feature of this order. Cp. CORINTHIAN ORDER; DORIC ORDER.

Ionic School. A school of philosophy that arose in the 6th century B.C. in Ionia, notable as the nursery of Greek philosophy. It included Thales, Anaximander, Anaximenes, Heraclitus, Anaxagoras, and Archelaus. They sought a primal substance from which the infinite diversity of phenomena have evolved. Thales said it was water, Anaximenes thought it was air, Heraclitus maintained that it was fire. Anaxagoras developed a theory of fragments or particles from which all things emerged by process of aggregation and segregation.

Iota. See I; JOT.

I.O.U., i.e. "I owe you." The memorandum of a debt given by the borrower to the lender. It requires no stamp unless it specifies a day of payment, when it becomes a bill and must be stamped.

Iphigenia. In classical legend, the daughter of AGAMEMNON and CLYTEMNESTRA. One account says that her father, having offended ARTEMIS by killing her favourite stag, vowed to sacrifice the most beautiful thing the year brought forth; this was his infant daughter. He deferred the sacrifice till the Greek fleet that was proceeding to TROY reached AULIS and Iphigenia had grown to womanhood. Then CALCHAS told him that the fleet would be wind-bound till he had fulfilled his vow; accordingly the king prepared to sacrifice his daughter, but Artemis at the last moment snatched her from the altar and carried her to HEAVEN, substituting a hind in her place. Euripides wrote a tragedy on Iphigenia. Cp. IDOMENEUS.

Ipsa dixit (Lat., he himself said so). A mere assertion, wholly unsupported. "It is his ipse dixit" implies that there is no guarantee that what he says is so.

Ipsa facto (Lat., by the very fact). Irrespective of all external circumstances of right or wrong; absolutely. It sometimes means the act itself carries the consequences. Thus by burning the PAPAL BULL (see under BULL), Luther ipso facto denied the POPE's supremacy.

I.R.A. The Irish Republican Army which confronted the forces of the Royal Irish Constabulary and the BLACK AND TANS from 1919 to 1923. Reconstituted under the Leadership of Michael Collins from the former National Volunteers, it relied on guerrilla warfare and the only uniform of its members was a trench coat. After the CIVIL WAR, extremists kept it in being as a secret organization and, although proclaimed in 1936, it continues to make occasional raids into ULSTER.

I.R.B. The Irish Republican Brotherhood, the Irish section of the Fenian Brotherhood. See FENIANS.

Ireland. Iar-en-land, the land of the west. Called by the natives Erin, i.e. Erinis or Iar-innis, west island; by the Welsh Iwerddon, west valley; by Apuleius Hibernia, which is Iernia, a corruption of Iar-inn-a; by Juvenal (ii, 160) Iuverna, the same as Ierna or Iernia; and by Claudian Ouernia.

The fair maid of Ireland. Another name for the IGNIS FATUUS.

The three great saints of Ireland. St. PATRICK, St. Columba, and St. Bridget.

Ireland forgeries. See FORGERIES.

Irene (I rē' nē). The Greek goddess of peace and wealth (Gr. Eirene). She is represented as a young woman carrying PLUTUS in her arms. Among her attributes are the OLIVE branch and CORNUCOPIA.

Iris. Goddess of the rainbow, or the rainbow itself. In classical mythology she was the messenger of the gods, and of JUNO in particular, and the RAINBOW is the bridge or road let down from heaven for her accommodation.

Besides being poetically applied to the rainbow, the name, in English, is given to the coloured membrane surrounding the pupil of the eye, and to a family of plants (Iridaceæ) having large, bright-coloured flowers and tuberous roots.

Iron. The Iron Age. An archaeological term denoting the cultural phase conditioned by the introduction of the use of iron for edged-tools, implements, weapons, etc. In the Near East the preceding Bronze Age ended about 1200 B.C. and by 1000 B.C. the Iron Age was established. North of the Alps the first Iron Age, known as the HALLSTATT period, began about 750 B.C., in England about 500 B.C. and in Scotland the Bronze Age lasted till about 250 B.C. See LA TÈNE.

The era between the death of CHARLEMAGNE and the close of the Carolingian dynasty (814-987) is sometimes so called from its ceaseless wars. It is sometimes called the lead age for its worthlessness. Cp. DARK AGES. See also AGE.

Iron Chancellor. The name given to Prince Bismarck (1815-1898), the creator of the German Empire. See BLOOD AND IRON POLICY under BLOOD.

The Iron Cross. A Prussian military decoration (an iron Maltese CROSS, edged with silver), instituted by Frederick William II in 1813 during the struggle against NAPOLEON. Remodelled by William I in 1870 with three grades, in civil and military divisions, some 3,000,000 Iron Crosses were awarded in World War I.

The Iron Crown of Lombardy. See under CROWN.

Iron Curtain. The phrase denoting the barrier of secrecy created by the U.S.S.R. and her satellites along the Stettin-Trieste line, the Communist countries east of this line having cut themselves off from Western Europe after World War II. The phrase was popularized by Sir Winston Churchill in his Fulton Speech (5 March 1946) but it was used previously in Germany by Count Schwerin von Krosigk on 2 May 1945; and by Lord Conesford in February of that year. It has an earlier antecedent, Ethel Snowden used it in 1920 with reference to BOLSHEVIK Russia, and the Queen of the Belgians, in 1914, spoke of a "bloody iron curtain" between her and the Germans.

From Stettin on the Baltic to Trieste on the Adriatic, an iron curtain has descended across Europe.—SIR WINSTON CHURCHILL: Fulton Speech.

The Iron Duke. The Duke of Wellington (1769-1852) was so called from his iron will.

Iron Gates. The narrowing of the Danube below Orsova in South-west Rumania is so called. It is about 1½ miles long, with great rapids and an island in midstream. More popularly the term refers to the rocky bed of the river in this stretch which was dangerous to navigation until a ship canal was opened in 1898.

Iron Guard. The title adopted by the Rumanian FASCIST party of the 1930s.

The Iron Horse. The railway locomotive.

The Iron Maiden of Nuremberg. A mediæval instrument of torture used in Germany for traitors, heretics, parricides, etc. It was a box big enough to admit a man, with folding doors, the whole studded with sharp iron spikes. When the doors were closed on him these spikes were forced into the body of the victim, and he was left to die.

Iron Mask, The Man in the. In the reign of Louis XIV a mysterious state prisoner held for over forty years in various gaols until he finally died in the BASTILLE on 19 November, 1703. When travelling from prison to prison he always wore a mask of black velvet, not iron. His name was never revealed but he was buried under the name of "M. de Marchiel". Many conjectures have been made about his identity, one of them being that he was the Duc de Vermandois, an illegitimate son of Louis XIV. Dumas, in his romantic novel on the subject, adopted VOLTAIRE's suggestion that he was an illegitimate elder brother of Louis XIV with Cardinal Mazarin for his father. The most plausible suggestion is that of the historians Lord Acton and Funck-Brentano, who suggested a minister of the Duke of Mantua (Count Mattiolo, b. 1640), who, in his negotiations with Louis XIV, was found to be treacherous, and imprisoned at Pignerol.

Iron rations. BULLY BEEF; tinned meat; emergency rations.

Iron-arm. François de la Noue (1531-1591), Bras de fer, the HUGUENOT soldier, was so called. FIERABRAS is another form of the name.

Iron-hand, or the Iron-handed. Goetz von Berlichingen (c. 1480-1562), a German baron, who lost his right hand and had one made of iron to supply its place. Some accounts say that it was lost at the siege of Landshut, others that it was struck off in consequence of his having disregarded a law prohibiting duels.

Iron-man. An American colloquialism for a DOLLAR.

Ironsides. Edmund II (c. 998-1016), King of England from April to November, 1016, was so called from his iron armour.

Ironsides. Cromwell's soldiers were so called after 1644. Their resolution at Marston Moor caused Prince Rupert to nickname Cromwell "Old Ironsides", and the name was thereafter applied to his men.

"Old Ironsides" was also the nickname of the famous U.S. frigate Constitution, said to have been so called by American sailors when the British shot failed to penetrate her oaken sides during her victory over the Guerrrière in 1812. She was saved from the breakers by Oliver Wendell Holmes' poem Old Ironsides (1828).

Iron-tooth. Frederick II, Elector of Brandenburg (1440-1470).

Shooting-iron. Slang for a small fire-arm, especially a pistol or revolver.

The iron entered his soul. This expression, used of one experiencing the pangs of anguish and embitterment, is found in the Prayer Book Version of Ps. cv (verse 18). It is a mistranslation of the Hebrew which appeared in the VULGATE. It was corrected in the Authorized Version of the BIBLE which says "whose feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in iron", i.e. he was put in irons or fetters. Coverdale, following the Vulgate, says—"They hurte his feet in the stocks, the yron pearsed his herte."

The iron fist, or hand in the velvet glove. Ruthlessness, extreme severity, or or tyranny covered by a polite and courteous manner.

In irons. In fetters. A sailing vessel is said to be in irons when head to wind without way and will not pay off on either tack. The vessel is temporarily unmanageable.

Strike while the iron is hot. Don't miss a good opportunity; take action while the situation lends chance of success. An allusion to the blacksmith's shop.

Too many irons in the fire. More affairs in hand than you can properly attend to. The allusion is to the smithy.

To rule with a rod of iron. To rule tyrannically.

Irony (í' ron i) (Gr. eironeia, simulated ignorance). The use of expressions having a meaning different from the ostensible one; a subtle form of sarcasm understood correctly by the initiated.

Socratic irony. The assumption of ignorance as a means of leading on and eventually confuting an opponent.

The irony of fate. That which brings about quite the opposite of what might have been expected. Thus by an irony of fate Joseph became the saviour of his brethren who had cast him into the pit.

Iroquois (ir' ò kwa). The French form of the Indian name of the FIVE NATIONS.

Irredentism. The name given to national minority movements seeking to break away from alien rule and to join up with neighbours of their own nationality and language. It derives from Italia Irredenta (unredeemed Italy), the name given by the Italians, between 1861 and 1920, to those Italian-speaking areas still under foreign rule. When the kingdom of Italy was formed in 1861 Venetia, ROME, Trieste, the Trentino, Nice, etc., were not included.

Irrefragable Doctor

Irrefragable Doctor. Alexander of Hales (d. 1245), an English FRANCISCAN, author of Summa Universæ Theologiæ. See DOCTORS OF LEARNING.

Irresistible. ALEXANDER THE GREAT, before starting on his expedition against Persia, went to consult the Delphic ORACLE on a day when no responses were made. Nothing daunted he sought out PYTHIA and when she refused to attend took her to the temple by force. "Son," said the priestess, "thou art irresistible." "Enough," cried Alexander, "I accept your words as an answer."

Irus. The gigantic beggar who carried out the commissions of the suitors of PENELOPE. When he sought to hinder the returning ULYSSES, he was felled to the ground by a single blow. "Poorer than Irus" was a classical proverb.

Irvingites. Members of the CATHOLIC AND APOSTOLIC CHURCH. Edward Irving, a friend of the Carlyles, claimed to revive the college of the Apostles, and established a complex hierarchy, with such symbolical titles as "Angel", "Prophet", etc. In their early days they claimed to have manifested the gift of tongues.

Isaac. A hedge-sparrow; a dialect form of haysuck (in Chaucer heisugge). The name meant a sucker (small thing) that lived in a hay (hedge).

Isabel. See SHE-WOLF OF FRANCE under WOLF.

Isabel, or Isabelle. The colour so called is the yellow of soiled calico. A yellow-dun horse is, in France, un cheval isabelle. According to Isaac D'Israeli (Curiosities of Literature) Isabel of Austria, daughter of Philip II, at the siege of Ostend vowed not to change her linen till the place was taken. The siege lasted three years!

Another story, equally unlikely, attaches to Isabella of Castile, who, we are told, made a vow to the Virgin not to change her linen till Granada fell into her hands.

There is no reason for accepting these fanciful derivations. The word appears in an extant list of Queen Elizabeth's clothes of July, 1600 ("one rounde gowne of Isabella-colour satten").

Isenbras, or Isumbras, Sir. A hero of mediæval romance who made visits to the HOLY LAND and slaughtered thousands of SARACENS. At first proud and presumptuous, when he was visited by all sorts of punishments; afterwards penitent and humble when his afflictions were turned into blessings. It was in this latter stage that he one day carried on his horse two children of a poor woodman across a ford.

Iseult. See YSOLDE.

Ishbosheth, in Dryden and Tate's ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, is meant for Richard Cromwell. His father Oliver is Saul.

The biblical Ishbosheth (man of shame) was the son of Saul, who was proclaimed King of Israel at his father's death (see II Sam. iv), and was almost immediately superseded by David.

Ishmael. An outcast. From the son of ABRAHAM and Hagar, handmaid of his wife Sarah. Hagar was driven into the wilderness by Sarah's harshness before her son was born. The Arabs regard Ishmael as their ancestor. See HAGARENES.

And he will be a wild man; his hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him.—Genesis xvi, 12.

Ishtar. The Babylonian goddess of love and war (Gr. Astarte), corresponding to the Phœnician ASHTORETH, except that, while the latter was identified with the moon, Ishtar was more frequently identified with the planet VENUS.

Isidorian Decretals. See DECRETALS.

Isis (i' sis). The principal goddess of ancient Egypt, sister and wife of OSIRIS, and mother of HORUS, she typified the faithful wife and devoted mother. The cow was sacred to her, and she is represented as a queen, her head being surmounted by horns and the solar disc or by the double crown (see EGYPT). Her chief shrines were at Abydos and Busiris; later a splendid temple was built at Philæ. Proclus mentions a statue of her which bore the inscription "I am that which is, has been, and shall be. My veil no one has lifted. The fruit I bore was the Sun", hence to lift the veil of Isis is to pierce the heart of a great mystery.

She was worshipped as a nature goddess throughout the Roman world and was identified with JUNO, IO, APHRODITE, ASTARTE and others, and in due course she became an embodiment of the universal goddess. Milton, in Paradise Lost (I, 478), places her among the fallen ANGELS.

Isis, River. See THAMES.

Islam. The Mohammedan religion, the whole body of Mohammedans. The word means resignation or submission to the will of God.

Islam involves five duties:

- (1) Recital of the creed (There is but one God and MOHAMMED is his Prophet).
- (2) Reciting daily prayers.
- (3) Fasting in the month of RAMADAN.
- (4) Giving the appointed legal alms.
- (5) Making a pilgrimage to MECCA at least once in a lifetime.

Islands of the blest. See FORTUNATE ISLANDS.

Isle of Dogs. A peninsula on the left bank of the THAMES between LIMEHOUSE and Blackwall reaches, opposite Greenwich. Traditionally said to be named from the fact that Edward III kept hounds here for hunting in Waltham Forest. Another explanation is that it is a corruption of Isle of Ducks, from the number of wild fowl inhabiting the marshes. It has long been part of dockland.

The working men of the Isle of Dogs number some 15,000, engaged in the numerous factories and shipyards; for whose recreation has been formed a Free Library, to provide them with amusement for evenings too often spent in dissipation.

JOHN TIMBS: Curiosities of London, 1867.

Ismene. In Greek legend, daughter of ŒDIPUS and Jocasta. ANTIGONE was to be buried alive by order of King Creon for burying her brother Polynices (slain in combat with his brother Eteocles) against the tyrant's express command. Ismene declared that she had aided her sister and asked to share the same fate.

Isocrates (i sok' rá tēz). One of the great orators of ATHENS, distinguished as a teacher of eloquence. He died 338 B.C.

The French Isocrates. Esprit Fléchier (1632-1710), Bishop of Nîmes, specially famous for his funeral orations.

Israel, in Dryden and Tate's ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, stands for ENGLAND.

Israfil. The angel of music for the Mohammedans. He possesses the most melodious voice of all God's creatures, and is to sound the Resurrection Trump which will ravish the ears of the saints in PARADISE. Israfil, GABRIEL, and MICHAEL were the three ANGELS that, according to legend, warned ABRAHAM of Sodom's destruction.

In Heaven a spirit doth dwell
Whose heart-strings are a lute;
None sing so wildly well
As the ange! Israfe!,
And the giddy stars (so legends tell),
Ceasing their hymns, attend the spell
Of his voice, all mute.

E. A. POE: Israfil

Issachar, in Dryden and Tate's ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, means Thomas Thynne

Issachar's ears. Ass's ears. The allusion is to Gen. xlix, 14: "Issachar is a strong ass couching down between two burdens."

Is't possible that you, whose ears
Are of the tribe of Issachar's . . .
Should be deaf against a noise
So roaring as the public voice?
SAMUEL BUTLER: Hudibras to Sidrophel.

Issue. The point in debate or in question, especially in law.

At issue. Under dispute.

Side issues. Subsidiary issues; those of secondary importance to the main issue.

To join, or take issue. To dispute or take opposite views of a question, or opposite sides in a suit.

To join issues. In law is to leave a suit to the decision of the court because the parties interested cannot agree.

Istanbul. The official name of the former city of Constantinople since the founding of the Turkish Republic in 1923.

Istar. ISHTAR.

Isthmian Games. One of the four national festivals of the ancient Greeks, held every alternate spring, the second and fourth of each OLYMPIAD. They took place on the isthmus of Corinth, hence the name. According to one legend they were instituted as FUNERAL games in honour of MELICERTES. They included gymnastics, horse racing, and contests in music.

Isumbras. See ISENBRAS.

It. A humorous synonym for sex appeal, popularized by the novelist Elinor Glyn in It (1927), though Kipling had used the word earlier in the same sense in his story Mrs. Bathurst (Traffics and Discoveries, 1904).

It, I'm it! I'm a person of some importance; also an expression used in children's games such as TAG by the one claiming the right to chase and touch the others, etc. It is also used as the name of the game.

In for it. About "to catch it" or be in trouble. In this phrase, and others, as to come it strong, to rough it, etc., it is the definite object of the verb.

To be with it. A much-used mid-20th-century phrase meaning to be completely in with current trends, fashions, music, etc., especially of the kind popular with certain sections of the young.

Its. One of the words by the use of which

Italia Irredenta

Chatterton betrayed his forgeries (see ROWLEY POEMS under FORGERY). In a poem, purporting to be the work of a 15th-century priest, he wrote, "Life and its goods I scorn," but the word was not in use till more than two centuries later, it (hit) and his being the possessive case.

For love and devocion towards god also hath it infancie and it hath it comyng forewarde in groweth of age.

Udal's Erasmus: Luke, vii (1542).

Learning hath his infancie, when it is but beginning and almost childish; then his youth . . . then his strength of years . . . and, lastly, his old age.

BACON: Essays; Of Vicissitude of Things (1625).

Its does not occur in any play of SHAKESPEARE published in his lifetime, but there is one instance in the First Folio of 1623 (Measure for Measure, I, ii), as well as nine instances of it's. Nor does its occur in the Authorized Version of the BIBLE (1611), the one instance of it in modern editions (Lev. xxv, 5) having been substituted for it in the Bible printed for Hills and Field in 1660.

Italia Irredenta. See IRREDENTISM.

Italian hand. I see his fine Italian hand in this may be said of a picture in which certain characteristics reveal the particular artist, or it may be remarked of an intriguer in which the characteristics of a particular plotter are apparent. The Italian hand was the cancelleresca type of handwriting used by the Apostolic Secretaries, and distinguishable by its grace and fineness from the Gothic styles of Northern Europe.

Italic. Pertaining to Italy, especially ancient Italy and the parts other than ROME.

Italic School of Philosophy. The Pythagorean, because PYTHAGORAS taught in Italy.

Italic type, or italics. The type in which the letters, instead of being erect, as in roman, slope from the left to right, thus. It was first used by Aldus Manutius in 1501, being the work of his type-designer, Francesco Griffo of Bologna, and based on the cancelleresca corsiva of the papal chancery. Cp. ITALIAN HAND.

Italic version. An old Latin version of the BIBLE, prepared from the SEPTUAGINT. It preceded the VULGATE.

The words italicized in the Bible have no corresponding words in the originals but were supplied by the translators to make the sense of the passage clearer.

Itch, To. Properly, to have an irritation of the skin which gives one a desire to scratch the part affected; hence, figuratively, to feel a constant teasing desire for something. The figure of speech enters into many phrases; as, to itch or to have an itch for gold, to have a longing desire for money; an itching palm means the same thing.

Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemned to have an itching palm.
SHAKESPEARE: Julius Caesar, IV, iii.

To have itching ears. To be very desirous for news or novelty.

For the time will come when they will not endure the sound doctrine; but, having itching ears, will heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts.—II Tim. iv, 3 (R.V.).

My fingers itch to be at him. I am longing to give him a sound thrashing.

In popular belief, itching of various parts foretold certain occurrences; for instance, if your right palm itched you were going to receive money, the itching of the left eye betokened grief, and of the right pleasure. Itching of the lips foretold kissing; of the nose, that strangers were at hand, and the thumb, that evil approaches:

By the pricking of my thumbs,
Something wicked this way comes.
SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, IV, i.

ITMA (initials of "It's That Man Again").

The famous and once most popular of British radio features, and one which did much to brighten up the dreariness of the BLACK-OUT years of World War II. It was devised and maintained by the comedian Tommy Handley (1896-1949), the script being written by Ted Kavanagh. It ran from 1939 until Handley's death in 1949. Mrs. Mopp and Funf were among the characters in this hilarious weekly skit on English life.

Ivan Ivanovitch. Used of a Russian, as Johnny CRAPAUD was of a Frenchman.

Ivan the Terrible. Ivan IV of Russia (1530, 1533-1584), infamous for his cruelties, but a man of great energy. He first adopted the title of Tsar (1547).

Ivanhoe. Sir Walter Scott took the name and hero from the village of Ivinghoe in Bucks.; he recalled an old rhyme but misspelt the place-name.

Tring, Wing and Ivinghoe
For striking of a blow
Hampden did forego
And glad he could escape so.

The Hampden of this tradition, ancestor of the squire of SHIP-MONEY fame, is said to have quarrelled with the BLACK PRINCE at tennis and struck him with his racket.

Ivory, Ivory Gate. See DREAMS, GATES OF.
Ivory shoulder. See under PELOPS.

Ivory tower. A place of refuge from the world and its strivings and posturings. This is a symbol first used by Sainte-Beuve as une tour d'ivoire.

Ivories. Teeth; also dice, keys of the piano, billiard balls, dominoes, etc.

Ivy (O.E. ifig). Dedicated to BACCHUS from the notion that it is a preventive of drunkenness. In Christian symbolism ivy typifies the everlasting life, from its remaining continually green.

Like an owl in an ivy-bush. See under OWL.

Ixion. In Greek legend, a treacherous king of the LAPITHÆ who was bound to a revolving wheel of fire in the Infernal regions for boasting of having won the favours of HERA, ZEUS having sent a cloud to him in the form of Hera, and the cloud having become by him the mother of the CENTAURS.

J

J. The tenth letter of the alphabet, a modern introduction, only differentiated from I in the 17th century, and not completely separated till the 19th. It was a mediæval practice to lengthen the I when it was the initial letter, usually with the consonantal function now assumed by J. There is no roman J or j in the Authorized Version of the BIBLE. In the Roman system of numeration it was (and in medical prescriptions still is) used in place of i as the final figure in a series—ij, vij, etc., for iii, vii.

Jabberwocky. The eponymous central figure of a strange, almost gibberish poem in Lewis Carroll's Through the Looking-glass. It contains many significant PORTMANTEAU WORDS, as subsequently explained to Alice by HUMPTY DUMPTY.

Jachin and Boaz (jā' kin, bō' āz). The two great bronze pillars set up at the entrance of the TEMPLE of SOLOMON—Jachin being the right-hand (southern) pillar, and the name probably expressing permanence, immovability, and Boaz being the left-hand (northern) pillar, typifying the Lord of all strength. See I Kings vii, 21; Ezek. xl, 49.

Jack. (1) A personal name, a diminutive of John, but perhaps from the French JACQUES; a generic name for a man, husband, etc., and a familiar term of address among sailors, workmen, etc.

In Australia, Jack has several connotations. It is slang for a policeman and in schoolboy parlance denotes an expert, as "a jack at games" (one who excels at games). See JACK SYSTEM below.

Cheap Jack. See CHEAP.

Cousin Jack. See under COUSIN.

Jack Adams. A fool.

Jack Amend-All. One of the nicknames given to Jack Cade, leader of the Kentish rebellion of 1450. He promised to remedy all abuses.

Jack-a-dandy. A smart, foppish, bright little fellow.

Tom did not understand French, but . . . despised it as a jack-a-dandy acquirement.
SAMUEL LOVER: Handy Andy, xix.

Jack-a-dandy is also rhyming slang for brandy.

Jack-a-dreams. See JOHN-A-DREAMS.

Jack-a-Lent. A kind of AUNT SALLY which was thrown at in LENT; hence a puppet, a sheepish booby. SHAKESPEARE says: "You little Jack-a-Lent, have you been true to us?" (Merry Wives of Windsor, III, iii).

Jack among the maids. A favourite with the ladies; a ladies' man.

Jack-a-Napes. The nickname of William de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk, who was beheaded at sea (off Dover) in 1450, possibly at the instigation of the Duke of York. The name arose from his badge, the clog and chain of an ape, which also gave rise to his name "Ape-clogge". See JACKANAPES.

Jack and the Beanstalk. A nursery tale found among many peoples in varying forms. In the English version Jack exchanges his poor mother's cow for a handful of beans which miraculously produce stalks reaching the sky. Jack climbs up them and steals treasures from the ogre's castle—a bag of gold, a wonderful lamp, and the hen that lays the golden eggs; thus redeeming their poverty.

Jack and Jill. In the familiar nursery rhyme Jack and Jill who went up the hill "to fetch a pail of water" are probably generic names for lad and lass. Somewhat unconvincingly attempts have been made to link them with Norse legend.

Jack-at-a-pinch. One who lends a hand in an emergency (pinch).

Jack Brag. See under BRAG.

Jack Drum's Entertainment. See under DRUM.

Jack Dusty. A stores rating in the Royal Navy, formerly called a Supply Assistant, is so named. Handling naval stores is sometimes a dusty job.

Jack Frost. The personification of frost or frosty weather.

Jack the Giant-killer. The hero of the old nursery tale owed much of his success to his four marvellous possessions. When he put on his coat no eye could see him; when he had his shoes on no one could overtake him; when he put on his cap he knew everything he required to know, and his sword cut through everything. The story is given by Walter Map (d. c. 1209), who obtained it from a French source.

Jack Horner. A very fanciful explanation of the old nursery rhyme "Little Jack Horner" is that Jack was steward to the Abbot of Glastonbury at the time of the Dissolution of the Monasteries, and that by a subterfuge he gained the deeds of the Manor of Mells. It is said that these deeds, with others, were sent to Henry VIII concealed, for safety, in a pasty; that "Jack Horner" was the bearer and that on the way, he lifted the crust and extracted this "plum".

Jack-in-the-basket. The basket or kindred device on the top of a pole which serves as a leading mark to shipping.

To approach the entrance to Lymington river in the deepest water, bring Jack-in-the-basket beacon in line with Lymington church.

Channel Pilot, Pt. I (H.M.S.O.).

Jack-in-the-box. A toy consisting of a box out of which "Jack" springs, when the lid is raised.

Jack in the cellar. Old slang for an unborn child; a translation of the Dutch expression for the same, Hans in Kelder.

Jack-in-the-green. A youth or boy who moves about concealed in a wooden framework covered with leaves and boughs as part of the chimney-sweeps' revels on MAY DAY. An obsolete English custom.

Jack in office. A pompous overbearing official, usually with a RED-TAPE MIND, who uses his powers unimaginatively.

Jack Ketch. A notorious hangman and executioner, who was appointed about 1663 and died in 1686. He was the executioner of William, Lord Russell, for his share in the RYE HOUSE PLOT (1683), and of Monmouth (1685). In 1686 he was removed from office for insulting a SHERIFF and succeeded by a butcher named Rose, who was himself hanged within four months, when Ketch was reinstated. As early as 1678 his name had appeared in a ballad, and by 1702 was associated with the PUNCH AND JUDY puppet-play, which had recently been introduced from Italy.

Jack-knife. Phrases from the similitude of a jack-knife in which the big blade doubles up into the handle.

- (1) In logging, where two logs join end to end and hold up the rest;
- (2) In swimming, a form of fancy dive;
- (3) In road transport, when the main chassis of an articulated lorry swings back towards the cab; a common cause of accidents.

Jack o' the bowl. The BROWNIE or house spirit of Switzerland; so called from the nightly custom of placing for him a bowl of fresh cream on the cowhouse roof. The contents are sure to disappear before morning.

Jack-o'-the clock, or clock-house. The figure which, in some old public clocks, comes out to strike the hours on the bell.

Must I strike like Jack o' th' clock-house, never but in season.

WM. STRODE: Floating Island I, ii (1655).

Jack-o'-lantern. The IGNIS FATUUS; in the U.S.A., the hollowed pumpkin of HALLOWEEN games.

Jack of both sides. One who tries to favour two antagonistic parties, either from fear or for profit.

Jack of cards. The knave or servant of the king and queen of the same suit.

Jack of Dover. Some unidentified eatable mentioned by Chaucer in the Cook's Prologue. "Our host", addressing the cook, says:

For many a pastee hastow laten blood,
And many a Jakke of Dover hastow sold
That hath been twyes hoot and twyes cold.

SteaK says that it is "probably a pie that has been cooked more than once"; another suggestion is that it is some sea-fish (cp. JOHN DORY).

Jack of Newbury. John Winchcombe alias Smallwood (d. 1520), a wealthy clothier in the reign of Henry VIII. He was the hero of many CHAP-BOOKS, and is said to have kept 100 looms in his own house at Newbury, and equipped at his own expense 100-200 of his men to aid the king against the Scots at Flodden Field.

Jack out of Office. One no longer in office; one dismissed from his employment.

I am left out; for me nothing remains,
But long I will not be Jack-out-of-office.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. I, I, I.

Jack-pot. In poker, a pot which cannot be opened until a player has a pair of jacks, or better. Generally applied to the "pool" disgorged by ONE-ARMED BANDITS, etc.

To play the Jack. To play the rogue, the knave. To deceive or lead astray like Jack-o'-lantern, or IGNIS FATUUS.

Your fairy which you say, is a harmless fairy, has done little better than played the Jack with us.
SHAKESPEARE: The Tempest, IV, i.

Jack (2), applied to animals, usually denotes the male sex or smallness of size; hence, Jackass; Jack-baker (a kind of owl); Jack, or dog fox; Jack hare; Jack rat; Jack shark; Jack snipe; Jack-curlew, the whimbrel, a small species of curlew. A young pike is called a Jack, so also were the male birds used in falconry.

Jack-in-a-bottle. The long-tailed titmouse, or bottle-tit; so called from the shape of its nest.

Jack-rabbit. A large prairie-hare of North America; shortened from Jackass-rabbit, a name given to it on account of its very long ears and legs.

Jack (3) also forms part of the name of certain common wild plants, as in: Jack-at-the-hedge or cleavers; Jack-by-the-hedge or garlic mustard; Jack-go-to-bed-at-noon or goat's beard; etc. Jack-in-the-pulpit is a North American woodland plant, Arisæma triphyllum, so called from its upright spadix overarched by the spathe.

Jack (4) when applied to certain articles usually implies smallness or inferiority of some kind. The Jack is the flag smaller than the ensign, worn on the jackstaff in the bows of a warship, although the Union flag is usually called the UNION JACK. The small waxed leather vessel for liquor was called a jack (cp. BLACK JACK). Jack was also the inferior kind of armour consisting of a leather surcoat worn by foot soldiers, formed by overlapping pieces of metal fastened between two layers of canvas, leather or quilted material. The jack at bowls is so called because it is small in comparison with the bowls themselves. A jack is an obsolete term for a FARTHING and a jack and half-jack were names given to counters, used in gambling, resembling a SOVEREIGN and half-sovereign.

To be upon their jacks. To have the advantage over one. The reference is to the jack, or jerkin worn by soldiers of olden times.

Jack rafter. A rafter in a hipped roof, shorter than a full-sized one.

Jack rib. An inferior rib in an arch, being shorter than the rest.

Jack timbers. Timbers in a building shorter than the rest.

Jack (5). Numerous appliances and contrivances which obviate the use of an assistant, etc., are called Jacks. A jack is used for lifting heavy weights and is also applied to the rough stool or horse used for sawing timber on; a bottle-jack, or roasting-jack was used for turning the meat when roasting before an open fire. Some others are:

Boot-jack. An appliance for pulling off boots.

Jack-block. A block attached to the mast-head of a sailing ship for sending the top-gallant yards up and down.

Jack-roll. The cylinder round which the rope of a well coils; a windlass.

Jack-screw. A large screw rotating in a threaded socket, used for lifting heavy weights.

Smoke-jack. An apparatus in a chimney-flue for turning a spit, made to revolve by the upward draught.

Jackal. A toady. One who does the dirty work for another. It was once thought that the jackal hunted in troops to provide the lion with prey. See LION'S PROVIDER.

Jackanapes. A pert, vulgar, apish little fellow; a prig. It is uncertain whether the -napes is connected originally with the ape or with Naples, Jackanapes being a Jack (monkey) of (imported from) Naples, just as fustian-a-napes was fustian from Naples. By the 16th century Jackanapes was in use as a proper name for a tame ape. See JACK-A-NAPES above.

I will teach a scurvy jackanape priest to meddle or make.

SHAKESPEARE: Merry Wives of Windsor, I, iv.

Jackass. An unmitigated fool.

Jackdaw. A prating nuisance.

The Jackdaw of Rheims. One of the best known of the INGOLDSBY Legends in which the cardinal's ring mysteriously vanished and he solemnly cursed the thief by BELL, BOOK, AND CANDLE. The jackdaw's bedraggled appearance brought on by the curse revealed him as the culprit.

Jackeroo. A name used in Australia in the first half of the 19th century to describe a young Englishman newly arrived to learn farming, derived, according to some, from the Queensland ichareroo, the shrike, noted for its garrulity. Others derive it from Jack Carew; Jack and Kangaroo; etc. Later the name was applied simply to a station hand. Jilleroo, its feminine counterpart, was applied to the Australian land girls of World War II.

Jacket. Diminutive of jack, a surcoat. Potatoes when cooked unpeeled are said to be "cooked in their jackets".

To dust one's jacket, or to give one a good jacketing. See I'LL DUST YOUR JACKET FOR YOU under DUST.

Jackey. A monkey. Cp. JACKANAPES.

Jackie Howe (Austr.) A sleeveless shirt worn by sheep shearers in Queensland, after Jack Howe (1855-1922), a champion shearer. His unbeaten record (1892) of hand shearing 321 merinos in one working day was not beaten by a machine shearer until 58 years later.

Jackstones. A children's game played with a set of small stones and a small ball or marble. They are thrown up and caught on the back of the hand in various ways, etc.

Jackstraws. In the U.S.A., a children's game similar to Spillikanes or Pik-a-Stik, but played with straws.

Jacob, Jacob's ladder. The ladder seen by Jacob leading up to HEAVEN (Gen. xxviii, 12); hence its application to steep ladders and steps, especially the rope ladder with wooden rungs slung from a ship's boom to the water. There is also a garden plant of this name so called from the ladder-like arrangement of its leaflets.

Jacob's staff. A pilgrim's staff; from the Apostle JAMES (Lat. Jacobus), who is usually represented with a staff and SCALLOP SHELL.

As he had traveld many a sommers day
Through boyling sands of Arabie and Ynde;
And in his hand a Jacobs staffe, to stay
His wearie limbes upon.

SPENSER: The Faerie Queene, I, vi, 35.

Also a surveyor's rod, used instead of a tripod, and an obsolete instrument for taking heights and distances.

Reach then a soaring quill, that I may write
As with a Jacob's staff to take a height.

CLEVELAND: The Hecatomb to his Mistress.

Jacob's stone. The Coronation stone of SCONE is sometimes so called, from the legend that Jacob's head had rested on this stone when he had the vision of the ANGELS ascending and descending the ladder (Gen. xxviii, 11).

Jacobins. The DOMINICANS were so called in France from the "Rue St. Jacques", the location of their first house in PARIS. The famous French Revolutionary Jacobin Club, founded at Versailles in 1789 as the Breton Club, removed to Paris and met in a former Jacobin convent, hence the name. Among its famous members were Mirabeau, Robespierre, St. Just, Marat, and Couthon. It controlled the country at one stage through its hundreds of daughter societies in the provinces. The club was suppressed in November 1794, after the fall of Robespierre. Their badge was the Phrygian CAP OF LIBERTY.

Jacobites. A sect of Syrian MONOPHYSITES, so called from Jacobus Baradæus, BISHOP of Edessa in the 6th century. The present head of their church is called the PATRIARCH of Antioch. The term is also applied to Monophysite Christians in Egypt.

Jacobites. The name given to the supporters of James II (Lat. Jacobus) and of his descendants who claimed the throne of Great Britain and IRELAND. They came into existence after the flight of James II in 1688 and were strong in SCOTLAND and the north of ENGLAND. They were responsible for the risings of 1715 and 1745, the latter rising marking their virtual end as a political force. The last male representative of the Stuarts was Henry (IX), a cardinal and a pensioner of George III, who died in 1807.

Jacobus. The unofficial name of a hammered gold coin struck in the reign of James I, originally worth 20s. It was properly called a UNITE. (Lat. Jacobus, James.)

Jacquard Loom (jăk' ard). So called from Joseph Marie Jacquard (1752-1834), of Lyons, its inventor. Its particular importance was in facilitating the weaving of patterns, especially in silks.

Jacques (zhak) (Fr., James, Jim). A generic name for the French peasant, the equivalent of HODGE. Jacques Bonhomme is similarly used.

Jacquerie (zhăk' e rē). An insurrection of the French peasantry in 1358, provoked by the hardships caused by the HUNDRED YEARS WAR, the oppressions of the privileged classes and Charles the Bad of Navarre. The Jacquerie committed many atrocities and savage reprisals followed. The name derives from JACQUES.

Jactitation of Marriage. A false assertion by a person of being married to another. This is actionable. Jactitation means literally "a throwing out", and here means "to utter", i.e. "to throw out publicly". The term comes from the old CANON LAW.

Jade. The fact that in mediæval times this ornamental stone was supposed, if applied to the side, to act as a preservative against colic is enshrined in its name, for jade is from the Spanish pedra de ijada, stone of the side; and its other name, nephrite, is from Gr. nephros, kidney.

Among the North American Indians it is still worn as an AMULET against the bite of venomous snakes, and to cure the gravel, epilepsy, etc.

Jade. A word of unknown etymology applied to a worthless horse, an old woman (contemptuously), and a young woman (often in the sense of "HUSSY" but not necessarily contemptuously).

Jagganath. See JUGGERNAUT.

Jahveh, or Jahweh. See JEHOVAH.

Jains. A sect of dissenters from Hinduism, of as early origin as BUDDHISM. Jains, being largely traders, are usually wealthy, and therefore influential for their numbers.

Jakes. An old word for a privy.

Jakes-farmer. A contractor for cleaning out privies, a scavenger.

Jam. Used colloquially for something really nice or which comes very easily, especially if unexpected.

Money for jam. Money (or money's worth) for nothing or very little; an unexpected bit of luck.

Jam session. A meeting of JAZZ musicians improvising spontaneously without rehearsal.

To be in a jam. To be in a predicament; from the verb jam, to compress, to squeeze or press down, to block, etc., akin to champ.

James. See JACOBUS.

St. James. The APOSTLE St. James the Great is the patron saint of Spain. One legend states that after his death in Palestine his body was placed in a boat with sails set, and that next day it reached the Spanish coast. At Padron, near COMPOSTELA, they used to show a huge stone as the veritable boat. Another legend says that it was the relics of St. James that were miraculously conveyed from Jerusalem, where he was BISHOP, to Spain, in a marble ship. A KNIGHT saw the ship entering port and his horse took fright and plunged into the sea and the knight saved himself by boarding the vessel to find his clothes entirely covered with SCALLOP SHELLS.

The saint's body was discovered in 840 by Bishop Theudemirus of Iria through divine revelation, and a church was built at Compostela for its shrine.

St. James is commemorated on 25 July and is represented in art sometimes with the sword by which he was beheaded, and sometimes attired as a pilgrim, with his cloak covered with shells. Cp. GROTTTO. St. James the Less, or James the Little. He has been identified both with the apostle James, the son of Alphæus, and with James the brother of the Lord. He is commemorated with St. PHILIP on 3 May.

The Court of St. James. The British court to which foreign ambassadors are officially credited. St. James's Palace, PALL MALL, stands on the site of an ancient leper hospital dedicated to ST. JAMES THE LESS. The palace was begun by Henry VIII in 1532 and was used as a residence by various monarchs and their children. After the burning of WHITEHALL in 1697, it came to be used for state ceremonies, hence the Court of St. James. It ceased to be a monarchical residence in 1837, but was used for LEVEES and other functions. The office of the BOARD OF GREEN CLOTH was at St. James's.

Jesse James (1847-1882). A notorious American bandit. In 1867 he organized a band of bank and train robbers who perpetrated a number of infamous murders and daring crimes. A reward of $10,000 was put on his head. He retired to St. Joseph, Missouri, under the name of Howard and was shot by a reward-seeker while hanging a picture in his house. He undeservedly passed into legend as another ROBIN HOOD.

Poor Jesse left a wife to mourn all her life, His children three were brave, But the dirty little coward that shot Mr. Howard, He laid Jesse James in his grave.

Jameson Raid. A foolhardy attempt by Dr. L. S. Jameson to overthrow the Transvaal government of Paul Kruger. On 29 December, 1895, Jameson crossed the border with 470 men in the expectation of a simultaneous UTLANDER rising in the Transvaal. He was surrounded at Doornkop (2 January, 1896) and subsequently handed over to the British authorities. Rhodes, the Cape Prime Minister, was involved and the Colonial Secretary, Joseph Chamberlain, almost certainly implicated. See KRUGER TELEGRAM.

Jamshid. In Persian legend, the fourth king of the Pishdadian, or earliest, dynasty who reigned for 700 years and had Devs or demons as his slaves. He was credited with 300 years of beneficent rule, but when he forgot God, was driven out and remained hidden for 100 years. He was eventually sawn apart. Among his magical possessions was a cup containing the elixir of life which is mentioned in Fitzgerald's Omar Khayyâm and Moore's Lalla Rookh.

Jane. A small Genoese silver coin; so called from Fr. Gênes, Genoa.

Because I could not give her many a jane.
SPENSER: The Faerie Queene, III, vii, 58.

A jane is a slang term for a woman, derived from the name.

Jane-of-apes. The female equivalent of JACKANAPES.

Janissaries, or Janizaries (Turk. yeni-tscheri, new corps). A celebrated militia of the OTTOMAN EMPIRE, raised by Orchan in 1330; originally, and for some centuries, compulsorily recruited from Christian subjects of the Sultan. It was blessed by Hadji Bechtash, a saint, who cut off the sleeve of his fur mantle and gave it to the captain, who put it on his head. Hence the fur cap worn by these footguards. In 1826 the Janissaries, long a tyrannical military caste, rebelled when their privileges were threatened, and they were abolished by total massacre.

Janissary music. Military music of the Turkish kind. Also called Turkish music.

Jannes, and Jambres (jän' êz, jãm' brêz). The names under which St. PAUL (II Tim. iii, 8) referred to the two magicians of PHAROAH who imitated some of the miracles of MOSES (Exod. vii). The names are not mentioned in the Old Testament, but they appear in the TARGUMS and other rabbinical writings, where tradition has it that they were sons of BALAAM, and that they perished either in the crossing of the Red Sea, or in the tumult after the worship of the GOLDEN CALF.

Jansenists. A sect of Christians, who held the doctrines of Cornelius Jansen (1585-1638), Bishop of Ypres. Jansen professed to have formulated the teaching of Augustine, which resembled CALVINISM in many respects. He taught the doctrines of "irresistible grace", "original sin" (see under SIN), and "the utter helplessness of the natural man to turn to God". Louis XIV took part against them, and they were put down by Pope Clement XI, in 1713, in the famous Bull UNIGENITUS.

Januarius, St. The patron saint of Naples, a bishop of Benevento who was martyred during the Diocletian persecution, 304. He is commemorated on 19 September, and his head and two vials of his blood are preserved in the cathedral at Naples. This congealed blood is said to liquefy several times a year.

January. The month dedicated by the Romans to JANUS, who presided over the entrance to the year and, having two faces, could look back to the year past and forward on the current year.

The Dutch used to call this month Lauwmaand (frosty-month); the Saxons, Wulf-monath, because wolves were very troublesome then from the great scarcity of food. After the introduction of Christianity, the name was changed to Se æftera geola (the after-yule); it was also called Forma monath (first month). In the French Revolutionary CALENDAR of the first French Republic it was called Nivôse (snow-month, 21, 22 or 23 December to 20, 21 or 22 January).

It's a case of January and May. Said when an old man marries a young girl. The allusion is to the Merchant's Tale in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, in which May, a lovely girl, married January, a Lombard baron sixty years of age.

Janus (jā' nūs). The ancient Roman deity who kept the gate of HEAVEN; hence the guardian of gates and doors. He was represented with two faces, one in front and one behind, and the doors of his temple in ROME were thrown open in times of war and closed in times of peace. The name is used allusively both with reference to the double-facedness and to war. Thus Milton says of the Cherubim:

Four faces each
Had, like a double Janus.
Paradise Lost, XI, 129.

And Tennyson:

State-policy and church-policy are conjoint,
But Janus-faces looking diverse ways.
Queen Mary, III, ii.

While Dante says of the Roman eagle that it:

composed the world to such a peace,
That of his temple Janus barr'd the door.
Paradiso, vi, 83 (Cary's tr.).

Japanese vellum. An extremely costly handbeaten Japanese paper manufactured from the inner bark of the mulberry tree.

Japhetic. An adjective sometimes applied to the ARYANS, from their supposed descent from Japheth, one of the sons of Noah.

Jarkman. Sixteenth-century slang for an ABRAM-MAN, especially an educated beggar able to forge passes, licences, etc. Jark was rogues' CANT for a seal, whence also a licence of the Bethlehem Hospital to beg.

Jarnac. Coup de Jarnac. A treacherous and unexpected attack; so called from Guy Chabot, Sieur de Jarnac, who, in a duel with La Châteigneraine, on 1 July 1547, in the presence of Henry II, first "hamstrung" his opponent, and then, when he was helpless, slew him.

Jarndyce v. Jarndyce. An interminable CHANCERY suit, in Bleak House. Dickens probably founded his story on the long-drawn-out Chancery suit of Jennens v. Jennens, which related to property in Nacton, Suffolk, belonging to an intestate miser who died in 1798. The case was only finally concluded more than eighty years after its start.

Jarvey. Old slang for a HACKNEY-coach driver; from the personal name Jarvis, with a possible allusion to St. Gervaise, whose symbol in art is a whip.

I pity them 'ere jarvies sitting on their boxes all the night and waiting for the nobbs what is dancing.
DISRAELI: Sybil V, vii (1845)

Jason. The hero of Greek legend who led the ARGONAUTS in the quest of the GOLDEN FLEECE, the son of Æson, King of Iolcus, brought up by the centaur CHIRON. When he demanded his kingdom from his uncle Pelias who had deprived him of it, and was told he could have it in return for the Golden Fleece, Jason gathered around him the chief heroes of Greece and set sail in the ARGO. After many tests and trials, including sowing the remaining dragon's teeth left unsown by CADMUS, he was successful through the help of MEDEA, whom he married. He later deserted her and subsequently killed himself through melancholy. Another account says he was crushed to death by the stern of his old ship Argo, while resting beneath it.

Jaundice. A jaundiced eye. A prejudiced eye which only sees faults. It was a popular belief that to the eye of a person who had jaundice (Fr. jaune, yellow), everything looked yellow.

All seems infected that the infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundiced eye.
POPE: Essay on Criticism, ii, 358-359.

Jaunty. In the Royal Navy the usual nickname for a Chief Petty Officer of the Regulating Branch, officially called a Master-at-Arms, who carries out disciplinary and police functions. It is a corruption of the Fr. gendarme.

Java man. See PITHECANTHROPUS.

Javan. In the BIBLE, the collective name of the Greeks (Is. lxvi, 19, and elsewhere), who were supposed to be descended from Javan, the son of Japheth (Gen. x, 2).

Jaw. To jaw, to annoy with words, to jabber, wrangle, etc.

Like a sheep's head, all jaw. Said of one who never stops talking but does little.

A break-jaw word; a jaw-breaker. A very long word, or one hard to pronounce.

Pi jaw. A contemptuous term for pious talk, or for an ostentatious GOODY-GOODY.
Jaw-box, or Jaw-hole (Scotch). A sewer or sink.

Before the door of Saunders Jaup . . . yawned that odoriferous gulf, ycleped, in Scottish phrase, the jawhole, in other words an uncovered common sewer.

SCOTT: ST. ROMAN'S WELL, ch. xxviii.

Jay. Old slang for a frivolous person, a wanton.

Some jay of Italy . . . hath betrayed him.
SHAKESPEARE: Cymbeline, III iv.

Jay hawker. In old Australian slang, a bandit.

Jaywalker. One who crosses a thoroughfare thoughtlessly, regardless of passing traffic.

Jazey. A WIG; a corruption of Jersey, so called because wigs were once made of Jersey flax and fine wool.

Jazz. A development of RAGTIME, both being dance music manifestations originating in the folk-music of the American Negro of the cotton plantations. It developed in New Orleans and thence spread up the Mississippi to Chicago and is now world-wide. It is characterized by syncopation and the noisy use of percussion instruments, together with the trombone, trumpet and saxophone. Bert Kelly's "Jazz Band", the first to be so called, was engaged at the Boosters' Club, Chicago, in March 1916. It has grown from the 1880s and made its impact on the European world with Irving Berlin's Alexander's Rag Time Band (1911).

Je ne sais quoi (zhe ne sā kwa) (Fr., I know not what). An indescribable something; as, "There was a je ne sais quoi about him which made us dislike him from the first."

Jeames. A flunkey. A former colloquial form of James. Thackeray's Diary of C. Jeames de la Pluche, Esq. first appeared in Punch.

O Evns! it was the best of sights,
Behind his Master's coach and pair,
To see our Jeames in red plush tights,
A driving hoff from Buckley Square.
THACKERAY: Jeames's Diary.

The old Morning Post used sometimes to be called Jeames because of its concern for the "flunkey-employing" classes and for its supposed subservience towards them.

Jean Crapaud. See CRAPAUD.

Jeddart, Jedburgh, or Jedwood Justice. Putting a person to death and trying him afterwards. From Jedburgh, the Scottish border town where MOSSTROOPERS were given this kind of treatment. The same as CUPAR JUSTICE and Abingdon law.

We will have Jedwood justice,—hang in haste, and try at leisure.

SCOTT: The Fair Maid of Perth, xxxii.

Jeep. A small all-purpose car first developed by the U.S.A. during World War II and known as G.P., i.e. General Purposes Vehicle, hence the name. Its four-wheel drive and high and low gear-boxes gave it astonishing cross-country performance. The experimental models were also called Beeps, Peeps, and Blitz Buggies, but the name Jeep came to stay in 1941.

Jehad. See HOLY WAR.

Jehovah. The name Jehovah is an instance of the extreme sanctity with which the name of God was invested, for this is a disguised form of JHVH, the TETRAGRAMMATON which was too sacred to use, so the scribes added the vowels of ADONAI, thereby indicating that the reader was to say Adonai instead of JHVH. At the time of the RENAISSANCE these vowels and consonants were taken for the sacred name itself and hence Jehovah or Yahweh.

Jehovah's Witnesses. A religious movement founded in 1872 by Charles Taze Russell in Philadelphia, and known as International Bible Students until 1931. It does not ascribe divinity to Jesus Christ, regarding him as the perfect man and agent of God. Recognition of JEHOVAH as their sole authority involves the Witnesses in refusal to salute a national flag or to do military service. The Watch Tower is their official organ.

Jehovistic. See ELOHISTIC.

Jehu. A coachman, especially one who drives at a rattling pace.

The watchman told, saying . . . the driving is like the driving of Jehu the son of Nimshi; for he driveth furiously.—II Kings, ix, 20.

Jekyll (jek' il). Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

Two aspects of one man. Jekyll is the "would do good", Hyde is "the evil that is present". The phrase comes from R. L. Stevenson's The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, first published in 1886.

Jellyby, Mrs. The type of the enthusiastic, unthinking philanthropist who forgets that charity should begin at home (Dickens: Bleak House).

Jemmy (a diminutive of James). Slang for a number of things, as a burglar's crowbar (see JIMMY); a sheep's head, boiled or baked, said to be so called from the tradition that James IV of Scotland breakfasted on one just before the battle of Flodden (1513); also, a greatcoat; and, as an adjective, spruce, dandified. See JEMMY JESSAMY.

Jemmy Dawson. See DAWSON.

Jemmy Jessamy. A JACK-A-DANDY; a lady's fondling, "sweet as sugar-candy".

This was very different language to that she had been in the habit of hearing from her Jemmy Jessamy adorers.

THACKERAY: Barry Lyndon, ch. xiii.

Jemmy O'Goblin. Slang for a sovereign.

Jemmy Twitcher. See TWITCHER.

Jenkins's Ear. The name given to an incident that largely helped to provoke war between England and Spain in 1739, which became merged into the War of the Austrian Succession (1740-1748) since Spain and Britain took opposite sides. Captain Robert Jenkins, of the brig Rebecca, claimed to have been attacked by a Spanish guarda costa off Havana in 1731, when homeward bound from the West Indies; and that his ship was plundered and his ear severed. He carried his complaint to the king on reaching London. The case was revived in 1738 and Walpole was forced to yield to the general clamour for war backed by the trading interests. The main incidents of this maritime war, basically caused by Spanish interference with British shipping, occasioned by large-scale illicit trading, were Vernon's capture of Portobello (1739) and Anson's voyage round the world (1740-1744).

Jeofail. An old legal term for an error, omission, or oversight in proceedings at law. The word is the Anglo-French, jeo fail, O.Fr. je faille, I am at fault. There were several statutes of Jeofail for the remedy of irregularities and mistakes.

Jeremiah. A doleful prophet; from allusion to the Lamentations of Jeremiah, the Old Testament prophet.

The British Jeremiah. Gildas (fl. 6th cent.), author of Lamentations over the Destruction of Britain, was so called by Gibbon.

Jeremiad. A pitiful tale, a tale of woe to produce compassion; so called from the Lamentations of Jeremiah.

Jerez. Jerez-de-la-Frontera, in southern Spain, once a frontier fortress between Moors and Christians, was the centre which produced the best SACK, which in the early 17th century came to be called "sherry", from Scheris, the Moorish rendering of Jerez. Drake brought home some 3,000 butts of Jerez wine when returning from the sack of Cadiz in 1587. See SINGEING THE KING OF SPAIN'S BEARD.

Jericho (jer' i kō). Used in various phrases to give verbal location to some altogether indefinite place, possibly in allusion to II Sam. x, 5, and I Chron. xix, 5.

Go to Jericho. The equivalent of "Go to HALIFAX," "Go and hang yourself," "Go to hell," etc.

Gone to Jericho. No one knows where.
I wish you were at Jericho. Anywhere out of my way.

Jerked Beef. "Jerked" is here a corruption of Chilian charqui, meat cut into strips and dried in the sun.

Jerkwater. An early American term for a small train on a branch railway; also a small town of insufficient importance to warrant a station where provision was made for water to be "jerked" into the tender as it passed through. Hence any unimportant or insignificant town.

Jeroboam. A very large wine bottle, flagon or goblet, so called in allusion to the "mighty man of valour" of this name who "made Israel to sin" (I Kings xi, 28, and xiv, 16). Its capacity is not very definite but it usually contains the equivalent of four bottles. An English wine bottle contains approximately one-sixth of a gallon or 26½ fluid ounces, also called a reputed quart. Cp. JORUM; MAGNUM; REHOBOAM; TAPPIT-HEN.

Jerome, St. A father of the Western Church, and compiler of the VULGATE (c. 340-420). He died at Bethlehem and is usually represented as an aged man in a cardinal's dress, writing or studying, with a lion seated beside him. His day is 30 September.

Jerrikan. A 4½-gallon petrol or water container which would stand rough handling and stack easily, developed by the Germans for the Afrika Korps in World War II. Borrowed by the British in Libya, it became the standard unit of fuel replenishment throughout the Allied armies. The name is an allusion to its origin. See JERRY.

Jerry. Since World War I a nickname for a German, or Germans collectively. Also an old colloquialism for a chamber-pot.

Jerry-built. Unsubstantial. A "jerry-builder" is a speculative builder of cheap unsubstantial properties. The name is probably in some way connected with Jeremiah, or with JERICHO, of which the walls collapsed at the sound of the trumpet.

Jerry, or Jeremy Diddler. In Kenny's farce Raising the Wind (1803) one, who frequently borrowed small sums of money which he failed to return. The word diddle in the sense of to swindle is probably based on this name.

Jerry-shop, or Tom and Jerry shop. A low-class beerhouse.

Jerrymander. See GERRYMANDER.

Jersey Lily, The. Emily Charlotte Langtry (1852-1929), or Lillie Langtry, was so called after her debut on the professional stage in 1881. A famous Edwardian beauty and one-time intimate of the Prince of Wales (later Edward VII), she was the wife of Edward Langtry and daughter of W. C. Le Breton, Dean of Jersey. After Langtry's death she married Sir Hugo Gerald de Bathe in 1899.

Jerusalem. JULIAN THE APOSTATE, the Roman Emperor (d. 363), to please the Jews and humble the Christians, said that he would rebuild the temple and city, but was mortally wounded before the foundations were laid, and his work set at naught by "an earthquake, a whirlwind, and a fiery eruption" (see Gibbon's Decline and Fall, ch. xxiii).

Much has been made of this by early Christian writers, who dwell on the prohibition and curse pronounced against those who should attempt to rebuild the city. The fate of Julian is cited as an example of Divine wrath.

The New Jerusalem. The paradise of Christians, in allusion to Rev. xxi.

Jerusalem artichoke. Jerusalem is here a corruption of Ital. girasole. Girasole is the sunflower, which this vegetable resembles in leaf and stem. Cp. HELIOTROPE.

Jerusalem Chamber. This chamber adjoins the south tower of the west front of Westminster Abbey and probably owes its name to the tapestries hung on its walls depicting scenes of Jerusalem. Henry IV died there, 20 March 1413.

It hath been prophesied to me many years,
I should not die but in Jerusalem.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. II, IV iv.

The WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY (1643-1649) which drew up the Calvinistic WESTMINSTER CONFESSION met in the Jerusalem Chamber, as did the compilers of the Revised Version of the BIBLE. It is now the chapter-room.

Jerusalem Cross. A CROSS potent.

Jerusalem Delivered. An Italian epic poem in twenty books by Torquato Tasso (1544-1595). Published in 1581, it was translated into English by Edward Fairfax in 1600. It tells the story of the First CRUSADE and the capture of Jerusalem by Godfrey of Bouillon in 1099.

Jerusalem pony. A donkey.

Jess (through Fr. from Lat. jactus, a throw). A short strap of leather tied about the legs of a HAWK to hold it on the fist. Hence, metaphorically, a bond of affection, etc.

If I do prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my dear heart-strings,
I'd whistle her off.

SHAKESPEARE: Othello, III, iii.

Jessamy Bride. The fancy name given by Goldsmith to Mary Horneck when he fell in love with her in 1769. Cp. JEMMY JESSAMY.

Jesse, or Jesse Tree. A genealogical tree, usually represented as a large vine or as a large brass candlestick with many branches, tracing the ancestry of Christ, called a "rod out of the stem of Jesse" (Is. xi, 1). Jesse is himself sometimes represented in a recumbent position with the vine rising out of his loins; hence a stained glass window representing him thus with a tree shooting from him containing the pedigree of Jesus is called a Jesse window.

Jessie. More hide than Jessie at the zoo (Austr.). Insensitive. Jessie being an elephant, the phrase is similar to the English "having a hide like a rhinoceros".

Jesters. See COURT FOOLS under FOOLS.

Jesuit. The name given to members of the Society of Jesus, begun by Ignatius Loyola in 1534, and formally approved by Pope Paul III in 1540. It was founded to combat the REFORMATION and to propagate the faith among the heathen. Through its discipline, organization, and methods of secrecy it acquired such power that it came into conflict with both the civil and religious authorities. It was driven from France in 1594, from Portugal in 1759, and from Spain in 1767 and was suppressed by Pope Clement XIV in 1773; but formally reconstituted by Pius VII in 1814.

Owing to the casuistical principles maintained by many of its leaders, the name Jesuit acquired an opprobrious signification and a Jesuit or Jesuitical person means (secondarily) a deceiver, a prevaricator, etc. Such associations have often obscured the extent of their achievements.

Jesuit's bark. See PERUVIAN BARK.

Jesus Paper. Paper of large size (about 28½ in. × 21½ in.) chiefly used for engravings. Originally it was stamped with the initials I.H.S.

Jetsam, or Jetson. Goods cast into the sea to lighten a ship. See FLOTSAM.

Jettatura (Ital.). The evil eye, a superstition that certain persons have the power, by looking at one, of casting a malevolent spell.

Jeu d'esprit (zhèr des prē) (Fr.). A witticism.

Jeu de mots (zhèr dá mō) (Fr.). A pun; a play on some words or phrase.

Jeune Cupidon. See BEAU D'ORSAY.

Jeanne Dorée (zhèr nes' dôr' ā) (Fr.). The "gilded youth" of a nation; the rich, fashionable young bachelors.

Jew. A Hebrew. Used opprobriously to denote a mean or hard-fisted person.

Ebrew Jew. See EBREW.

Wandering Jew. See WANDERING.

Jews born with tails. See TAILED MEN.

Jew's ear. A fungus that grows on the JUDAS-TREE; its name is due to a mis-translation of its Latin name, Auricula Judæ, i.e. Judas's ear.

Jew's harp. A simple musical instrument held between the teeth and twanged with the hand. The origin of the name is a matter of surmise, hence jaw's harp as a popular supposition. It has also been called Jew's trump. Hakluyt uses the former term and the latter is used by Fletcher (Humerous Lieutenant, V, ii). It is also applied to a shackle from its similarity of shape.

Jew's myrtle. Butcher's Broom is so called, from the popular notion that it formed the crown of thorns placed by the Jews on the head of the Saviour.

Worth a Jew's eye. Something precious or highly prized. An allusion to the torture by which money was extracted from Jews in the days of King John. There is a story of a Bristol Jew who resisted the tallage of 10,000 marks demanded of him. He was condemned to have one tooth tugged out every day until he paid up. He gave up after the seventh had been extracted. John is supposed to have jestingly remarked, "A Jew's eye may be a quick ransom, but a Jew's teeth give the richer harvest."

There will come a Christian by,
Will be worth a Jewess' eye.
SHAKESPEARE: Merchant of Venice, II, v.

Jewels. See PRECIOUS STONES.

These are my jewels! See CORNELIA; cp. TREASURE.

Jezebel. A painted Jezebel. A flaunting woman of bold spirit but loose morals; so called from Jezebel, wife of Ahab, King of Israel (see II Kings, ix, 30).

Jezreelites. A small sect founded in 1875 by James White (1849-1885), a one-time army private, who took the name James Jershom Jezreel. They were also called the "New and Latter House of Israel" and believed that Christ redeemed only souls, and that the body is saved by belief in the Law. Their object was to be numbered among the 144,000 (see Rev. vii, 4) who, at the Last JUDGMENT, were endowed with immortal bodies. Their headquarters were at Gillingham, Kent, where their Tower of Jezreel was formerly a familiar landmark.

Jib. The cut of his jib. The expression of a person's face. "Jib" here is the triangular foresail. Sailors used to recognize vessels at sea by the "cut of their jibs".

Jib is also applied to the lower lip. Thus to hang the jib, or to make, or pull a jib is to protrude the lower lip in an ill-tempered or discontented fashion.

To jib. To start aside, to back out; a "jibbing horse" is one that is easily startled. It is probably from the nautical gybe, which, with a fore-and-aft rig, is to bring a vessel so much by the lee (i.e. when the wind begins to blow on the same side as she is carrying her mainsail) that the mainsail swings to the other side. Accidental gybing can be dangerous.

Jiffy. In a jiffy. In a moment; in a brace of shakes; before you can say "Jack Robinson". (See under JACK.) The origin of the word is unknown.

Jig (Fr. gigue). A lively tune or dance in six-eight time.

You jig, you amble, and you lisp.
SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, III, i.

The jig is up. Your trickery is discovered. "Jig" was old slang for a joke or trick.

Jiggery. An American slang term for a dance-hall.

Jiggery-pokery. Fraud, "wangling", "fiddling", etc.

Jigot (jig' ot). A Scots term for a leg of mutton or lamb. It is the Fr. gigot, and is one of the Scottish words arising from the close connexion between the two countries in the 16th and 17th centuries.

Jill. A generic name for a lass, a sweetheart. See JACK AND JILL under JACK.

Jilleroo. See JACKAROO.

Jim Crow. A popular "nigger minstrel" song first introduced in Louisville by Thomas D. Rice (Daddy Rice) in 1828. It was brought to the Surrey Theatre, London, in 1836. A renegade or TURN-COAT was called a "Jim Crow", from the burden of the song:

Wheel about and turn about
And do jis so,
Ebry time I wheel about
I jump Jim Crow.

The song was so popular that it was translated into French:

Je tourne, re-tourne, je caracole,
Je fais des sauts;
Chaque fois je fais le tour,
Je saute 'Jim Crow'.

Jim Crow cars. Railway coaches set apart for the segregation of Negroes.

Jim Crow Regulations. Any regulations which prohibit Negroes from associating with or enjoying the same privileges as white people.

Jimmy. In the U.S.A., the burglar's JEMMY is called a "jimmy" and to jimmy is to force an entry.

Jimmy Woodser (Austr.). A solitary drinker; possibly based on the name of a bibulous "Jimmy Woods" or his drink. In Victoria a solitary drinker goes Ballarat.

Jingo. A word from the patter and jargon of 17th-century conjurors (cp. HOCUS-POCUS) probably substituted for God, in the same way as Gosh, Golly, etc. See JINGOISM, below.

Jingoism. Aggressive "patriotism", the equivalent of the Fr. chauvinisme. The term derives from the popular musical-hall song by G. W. Hunt which appeared at the time of the Russo-Turkish War (1877-1878) when anti-Russian feeling ran high and Disraeli ordered the Mediterranean fleet to Constantinople.

We don't want to fight, but by Jingo if we do,
We've got the ships, we've got the men, and got the money too.

We've fought the Bear before, and while we're Britons true,
The Russians shall not have Constantinople.

The Russophobes became known as Jingoes, and a noisy war-mongering policy has been labelled jingoism ever since.

Jinks. High Jinks. Nowadays the phrase expresses the idea of pranks, fun, and jollity.

The frolicsome company had begun to practise the ancient and now forgotten pastime of high jinks. This game was played in several different ways. Most frequently the dice were thrown by the company, and those upon whom the lot fell were obliged to assume and maintain for a time, a certain fictitious character, or to repeat a certain number of fescennine verses in a particular order. If they departed from the characters assigned . . . they incurred forfeits, which were . . . compounded for by swallowing an additional bumper. . . .

SCOTT: Guy Mannering, xxxvi.

Jinn. Demons of Arabian mythology fabled to dwell in the mountains of Kâf, which encompass the earth; they were created two thousand years before ADAM and assume the forms of serpents, dogs, cats, monsters and even human shape.

The evil jinn are hideously ugly, but the good are singularly beautiful. The word is plural; its singular is jinnē; genii is a variant form.

Jitters. To have the jitters. A phrase of American origin meaning to be nervously apprehensive; in a state of nerves. Jittery is nervous or jumpy.

Jive. A canting name for the livelier and debased forms of JAZZ music, largely accomplished by the uninspired improvisations of short phrases. Jive-talk is the specialized vocabulary of its adepts.

Jix. The nickname of Sir William Joynson-Hicks, first Viscount Brentford (1865-1932), noted puritan and tactless speaker. He was Home Secretary (1924-1929), and was prominent in defeating the adoption of the Revised Prayer Book of 1928.

We mean to tread the Primrose Path,
In spite of Mr. Joynson-Hicks.
We're People of the Aftermath
We're girls of 1926.

JACQUES REVAL:

Mother's advice on Father's fears (The Woman of 1926).

Joachim, St. (jō' á kim). The father of the Virgin Mary. Generally represented as an old man carrying in a basket two turtle-doves, in allusion to the offering made for the purification of his daughter. His wife was St. Anne.

Joan of Arc, St. (1412-1431), the Maid of Orleans (La Pucelle d'Orléans). Born at Domrémy in Lorraine, the daughter of a peasant, she was directed by heavenly voices to undertake her mission to deliver France, then undergoing the ravages of the HUNDRED YEARS WAR. She convinced the DAUPHIN of her sincerity, donned male dress, and inspired the French army in the relief of Orléans (1429) and then to advance to Rheims. She was captured by the Burgundians at Compiègne (May 1430) and handed over to the English. She was condemned to death by the Bishop of Beauvais for witchcraft and heresy and burned at the stake at Rouen (30 May 1431). Her last words were the name of Jesus repeated thrice. She was canonized in 1920 as the second patron of France.

Pope Joan. A mythical female POPE first mentioned in the 13th century by the DOMINICAN chronicler Jean de Mailly. The story was widely believed in the MIDDLE AGES and many writers produced versions of her story. She was supposed to have been born in England and educated at Cologne, passing under the name of Johannes Anglicus, and to have been enthroned as John VIII about 855. The ecclesiastical historian David Blondel exposed the myth in 1647 and in 1863 Döllinger explained that it arose from an ancient folk-tale.

Also the name of a game at cards.

Job (jōb). The personification of poverty and patience, in allusion to the PATRIARCH whose history is given in the BIBLE.

I am as poor as Job, my lord, but not so patient.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV. Pt. II, I, ii.

Job's comforter. One who means to sympathize with you in your grief, but says that you brought it on yourself, thus adding to your sorrow. An allusion to the rebukes Job received from his "comforters".

Job's post. A bringer of bad news.

Job's Pound. BRIDEWELL; prison.

As poor as Job's turkey. An expression invented by "Sam Slick" (Thomas Chandler Haliburton, 1796-1865), Canadian judge and humorous writer, to denote someone even poorer than JOB.

Jobation. A scolding; so called from the patriarch JOB.

Job (jōb). Employment, work, something managed for undue private gain, etc.

A bad job. An unfortunate happening, a bad speculation.

A job lot. A collection of miscellaneous goods sold as one lot and usually bought as a speculation at a low price.

A ministerial job. According to Sheridan: "Whenever any emolument, profit, salary or honour is conferred on any person not deserving it—that is a job; if from private friendship, personal attachment, or any view except the interest of the public, anyone appointed to any public office . . . that is a job."

To do a job. Colloquially, to commit a robbery.

A jobber. One who does small jobs; a job-master hiring out horses or carriages by the week or by the month; one who buys from merchants to sell to retailers, a middle-man.

Nobody in fact was paid. Not the blacksmith who opened the lock; nor the glazier who mended the pane; nor the jobber who let the carriage.

THACKERAY: Vanity Fair, ch. xxxvii.

A stock-jobber is a member of the Stock Exchange who acts as an intermediary between buying and selling stockbrokers; only a jobber can actually buy and sell shares in the Stock Exchange itself. The relationship between the jobber and the broker is much the same as between the wholesaler and retailer in trade.

Jocasta. See OEDIPUS.

Jock. A popular nickname for a Scotsman.

Jockey. Properly "a little Jack". So the Scots say, "Ilka Jeanie has her Jockie."

All fellows, Jockey and the laird. All fellows, man and master (Scots proverb).

To jockey. To deceive in trade; to cheat; to indulge in sharp practice.

To jockey for position. To manoeuvre for position, literally or figuratively, as in a horse race.

Jockey Club. The select body which controls the English TURF. Its headquarters are at Newmarket. It arose from a group of "noblemen and gentlemen" who first met in 1750 at the Star and Garter coffee-house in PALL MALL to remedy the abuses at Newmarket. It also controls the General Stud Book and, since 1902, the Racing Calendar. Its French counterpart was formed in 1833 and the American Jockey Club in 1880.

Jockey of Norfolk. Sir John Howard (c. 1430-1485), the first Howard to be Duke of Norfolk, and a firm adherent of Richard III. On the night before the battle of Bosworth where he was slain, he found in his tent the warning couplet:

Jockey of Norfolk, be not too bold,
For Dickon thy master is bought and sold.

Joe. American slang for the man in the street, and as a form of address for someone whose name is unknown (cp. JACK). G.I. Joe was applied to an American soldier but G.I. is more general.

In Australian usage it was once an insult and a digger's name for a policeman, after Charles Joseph La Trobe, Lieutenant-Governor of Victoria in 1851, whose unpopularity was occasioned by setting the police to check up on every diggers' licence. Hence "Joe!" was a warning cry at the approach of the law. It is also suggested that the cry was formed on "Yo ho!"

Joe Miller. See MILLER.

Joey. The small silver GROAT struck between 1836 and 1855 at the suggestion of Joseph Hume, M.P. (1777-1855), who advocated their usefulness for paying short cab fares, etc. The name was sometimes later colloquially applied to the silver threepenny piece.

In Australia a young kangaroo is called a joey.

Jog. Jog away; jog off; jog on. Get away; be off; keep moving. SHAKESPEARE uses the word shog in the same sense, as, "Will you shog off?" (Henry V, II, i); and again in the same play "Shall we shog?" (II, iii). The word is connected with shock and shake.

Give his memory a jog. Remind him about it.

Jog-trot. A slow but regular pace.

Joggis, or Joggles. See JOUGS.

John. The English form of Lat. and Gr. Johannes, from Heb. Jochanan, meaning "God is gracious". The feminine form, Johanna or Joanna, is nearer the original. The French equivalent of "John" is Jean (formerly Jehan), the Italian Giovanni, Russian Ivan, Gaelic Ian, Irish Sean or Shaun, Welsh Evan, German Johann or Johannes, which is contracted to Jan, Jahn, and Hans. "John" is also American slang for water-closet.

For many centuries John has been one of the most popular of masculine names in England—probably because it is that of ST. JOHN THE EVANGELIST, ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST and many other saints.

The name John has been used by Popes more than any other, its last holder being John XXIII. The most famous "Johns" of history are probably King John of England (c. 1167, 1199-1216); John of Gaunt (1340-1399), the fourth son of Edward III; and Don John of Austria (1547-1578), illegitimate son of the Emperor Charles V, celebrated as a military leader, for his naval victory over the Turks at Lepanto (1571), and as Governor of the Netherlands.

Among the SAINTS of this name are:

St. John the Evangelist, or the Divine. The "beloved disciple". Tradition says that he took the Virgin Mary to Ephesus after the Crucifixion and that in the persecution of Domitian (A.D. 93-96) he was plunged into a cauldron of boiling oil but was delivered unharmed, and afterwards banished to the Isle of Patmos where he wrote the Book of Revelation. He died at Ephesus. His day is 27 December, and he is usually represented bearing a chalice from which a serpent issues, in allusion to his driving the poison from a cup presented to him to drink.

St. John the Baptist. The forerunner of Jesus, who was sent "to prepare the way of the Lord". His day is 24 June, and he is represented in a coat of sheepskin (in allusion to his life in the desert), either holding a rude wooden CROSS with a pennon bearing the words, Ecce Agnus Dei; or with a book on which a lamb is seated; or holding in his right hand a lamb surrounded by a HALO, and bearing a cross on the right foot.

St. John of Beverley (c. 640-721). Bishop of Hexham and subsequently Archbishop of York. The Venerable BEDE was one of his pupils. His healing gifts are recorded by his biographers and his shrine at Beverley Minster (which he founded) became a favourite resort of pilgrims. His day is 7 May.

St. John Chrysostom (c. 347–407) (Golden tongued), Bishop of Constantinople and DOCTOR OF THE CHURCH, he did much to purify the life of his see. He was banished by his enemies in 403 and died in exile. He was noted for his holiness and liturgical reforms. His day is 13 September.

St. John of the Cross (1542–1591). Founder of the Discalced CARMELITES under the influence of St. TERESA. He is noted for his mystical writings, The Ascent of Mount Carmel, The Dark Night, The Spiritual Canticle, etc. He was canonized in 1726, his day being 14 December.

St. John Damascene (c. 675–c. 749). DOCTOR OF THE CHURCH and a defender of images during the Iconoclastic controversy. (See ICONOCLAST.) His day is 4 December.

St. John of God (1495–1550). Patron of hospitals, nurses and the sick, and a native of Portugal. In IRELAND he is also held popularly to be the patron of alcoholics, through association with the Dublin clinic devoted to their cure and bearing his name. He founded the Order of Charity for the Service of the Sick, or Brothers Hospitalers. His day is 8 March.

St. John of Nepumuk (c. 1340–1393). Patron saint of Bohemia, he was drowned by order of the dissolute King Wenceslaus IV, allegedly because he refused to reveal to the king the confessions of the queen. His day is 16 May.

General John. A nickname of John Churchill (1650–1722), first Duke of Marlborough.

John Anderson, my Jo. Burns's well-known poem is founded on an 18th-century version given in PERCY'S RELIQUES and said to be sung in derision of a Catholic Latin hymn. The first verse is:

John Anderson my jo, cum in as ze gae bye,
And ze zall get a sheip's heid weel baken in a pye;
Weel baken in a pye, and the haggis in a pat;
John Anderson my jo, cum in, and ze's get that.

Jo is an old Scottish word for a sweetheart.

John Audley. See AUDLEY.

John Barleycorn. See under BARLEY.

John Brown (1800–1859). An American abolitionist who led a body of men to free Negro slaves at Harper's Ferry, Virginia, 16 October 1859, and who was subsequently executed for treason. The famous Union song of the CIVIL WAR, John Brown's Body, made him a legend. It arose among the soldiers at Fort Warren, Boston, in 1861, around Sergeant John Brown of their regiment, who was jokingly connected with the "martyr" of Harper's Ferry.

John Bull. The nickname for an Englishman or Englishmen collectively. The name was used in Dr. John Arbuthnot's satire, Law is a Bottomless Pit (1712), republished as The History of John Bull. Arbuthnot did not invent the name but established it.

John Chinaman. A Chinaman or the Chinese as a people.

John Collins. A long drink of gin, lemon or lime, and soda-water, sugar and a lump of ice. Curaçao is sometimes added. Possibly the name of the bar-tender who originally dispensed it. In the U.S.A. it is called a Tom Collins.

John Doe. See DOE.

John Drum's Entertainment. See DRUM.

John Hancock. American slang for one's own signature, derived from the fact that John Hancock (1737–1793), the first of the signatories to the Declaration of Independence (1776), had an especially large and clear signature.

John o' Groats. The site of a legendary house 1½ miles west of Duncansby Head, Caithness, SCOTLAND. The story is that Malcolm, Gavin, and John o'Groat (or Jan de Groot), three Dutch brothers, came to this part of Scotland in the reign of James IV. There came to be eight families of the name and they met annually to celebrate. On one occasion a question of precedence arose, consequently John o'Groat built an eight-sided room with a door to each side and placed an octagonal table therein so that all were "head of the table". This building went ever after with the name of John o'Groat's House.

From Land's End to John o'Groats. From one end of Great Britain to the other; from DAN TO BEERSHEBA.

John Roberts. Obsolete slang for a very large tankard, supposed to hold enough for any ordinary drinker to last through Saturday and Sunday. It was introduced in Wales in 1886 to compensate toppers for Sunday closing of public houses, and derived its name from John Roberts, M.P., author of the Sunday Closing Act.

John with the leaden Sword. John of Lancaster, Duke of Bedford (1389–1435), third son of Henry IV, who acted as regent of France from 1422 to 1429, was so called by Earl Douglas.

John-a-Dreams. A stupid, dreamy fellow, always in a BROWN STUDY and half asleep.

Yet I,

A dull and muddy-mettled rascal, peak,
Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, II, ii.

John-a-Droyens. A 16th-century term for a country bumpkin. There is a foolish character in Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra (1578), who, being seized by informers, stands dazed, and suffers to be quietly cheated out of his money.

John-a-Nokes and John-a-Stiles. Names formerly given, instead of the very impersonal "A and B", to fictitious persons in an imaginary action at law; hence either may stand for "just anybody". Cp. DOE.

And doth the Lawyer lye then, when under the names of John a stile and John a noaks, hee puts his case?

SIDNEY: An Apologie for Poetrie (1595).

John Company. The old Honourable East India Company. It is said that "John" is a perversion of "Hon"; but it is possible that "John Company" is allied to the familiar JOHN BULL. The Company was founded in 1600 and finally abolished in 1858.

John Dory. A golden yellow fish, the Zeus faber, common in the Mediterranean and round the south-western coasts of England. Its name was dory (Fr. doré, golden) long before the John was added.

There is a tradition that it was from this fish that ST. PETER took the stater or SHEKEL and it has an oval black spot on each side, said to be his finger-marks when he held the fish to extract the coin. It is called in France le poisson de St. Pierre, and in Gascon the golden or sacred cock, meaning St. Peter's cock. Cp. HADDOCK.

John in the Wad. The IGNIS FATUUS.

John Tamson's man. A henpecked husband; one ordered about here, there, and everywhere. Tamson is a Tame-son, a spiritless character.

John Scotus. See ERIGENA.

Little John. See ROBIN HOOD.

Prester John. In mediæval legend a fabulous Christian emperor of Asia who occurs in documents from the 12th century onwards. In Marco Polo's Travels he is lord of the TARTARS. From the 14th century he becomes the Emperor of Ethiopia or Abyssinia where he was apparently still reigning in the time of Vasco da Gama.

To wait for John Long, the carrier.
To wait a long time.

Johnnie Cope, or Hey, Johnnie Cope. This famous Scottish song celebrates the Young PRETENDER's victory at Prestonpans (20 September 1745). Sir John Cope, who led the Government troops, was surprised by the Highlanders at daybreak and routed. He escaped and brought the news of his own defeat to Berwick.

Hey, Johnnie Cope, are ye wauking yet?

Or are ye sleeping, I would wit?

Oh, haste ye, get up, for the drums do beat!

O fy, Cope, rise in the morning.

The Scots attacked before the English were awake.

Johnny. A superfine, dandified youth was known as a Johnny, in the latter part of the 19th century. Vesta Tilley in the days of the MUSIC HALL used to sing about, "Algy, or the Piccadilly Johnny with the little glass eye." The name is also used generally in the sense of "fellow".

Johnny-cake. An American name for a cake made of maize-meal, once much esteemed as a delicacy. It is said to be a corruption of journey-cake.

Johnny Crapaud. A Frenchman. See FLEUR-DE-LIS.

Johnny Raw. A nervous novice, a raw recruit.

Johnny Reb. In the American CIVIL WAR a Federal name of a CONFEDERATE soldier, a rebel from the Northern standpoint.

Johnstone. St. Johnstone's Tippet. A halter; so called from Johnstone the HANGMAN.

Joint, in U.S.A. slang, originally a sordid place where illicit spirits were drunk, etc.; hence, disparagingly, any cheap restaurant, dive, etc.

To case a joint. See under CASE.

Out of joint. Figuratively, a disrupted or confused state of affairs, as a broken joint is out of order.

The time is out of joint.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, v.

To put one's nose out of joint. See under NOSE.

Jolly. A sailor's nickname for a marine. A militiaman was called a tame jolly.

To stand and be still to the Birken'ead drill is a damn tough bullet to chew,

An' they done it, the Jollies,—'Er Majesty's Jollies —soldier and sailor too!

KIPLING: Soldier an' Sailor Too.

The noun is also slang for a man who bids at an auction with no intention of buying, but merely to force up the price.

In American usage to jolly is to chaff or banter and "to jolly someone along" is to wheedle him, to keep him in a good humour in order to coax something out of him.

A jolly dog. A bon vivant, a jovial fellow.

The jolly god. BACCHUS. The BIBLE speaks of wine "that maketh glad the heart of man" (Ps. civ, 15).

A jolly good fellow. A very social, popular, or thoroughly commendable person. When toasts are drunk "with musical honours" the chorus usually is—

For he's a jolly good fellow [thrice],
And so say all of us [thrice],
For he's a jolly good fellow [thrice],
And so say all of us!

The Jolly Roger. See under ROGER.

Jolly-boat. A small clinker-built ship's boat. Jolly is probably the Dan. jolle or Dut. jol, our yawl.

Jonah. A person whose presence brings misfortune upon his companions as did Jonah to the mariners when he took ship to Tarshish to "flee from the presence of the Lord". (Jon. i.) Jonas is also similarly used, being an alternative name of the prophet Jonah.

Jonathan. See BROTHER JONATHAN.

Jonathan's. A noted COFFEE house in Change Alley described in the Tatler as the general mart of stock-jobbers. In 1773 those brokers who used Jonathan's moved to premises in Sweeting's Alley which came to be known as the Stock Exchange coffee house. In 1801 they raised capital to build the Stock Exchange in CAPEL COURT.

Jonathan's arrows. They were shot to give warning, and not to hurt (I Sam. xx, 36).

Jones, Davy. See DAVY JONES.

Jones, Paul. See PAUL JONES.

Joneses, Keeping up with the. See under KEEP.

Jongleur (zhong' glër). A mediæval minstrel who recited verses to his own musical accompaniment. They wandered from castle to castle performing the CHANSONS DE GESTE and are linked with the TROUBADOURS. The word is O. Fr. juglere, Lat. joculator, our juggler.

Jophiel. See ARCHANGEL.

Jordan. A name anciently given to the pot used by alchemists and doctors, then transferred to a chamber-pot. It was perhaps originally Jordan-bottle, i.e. a bottle in which pilgrims and crusaders brought back water from the River Jordan.

Why, they will allow us ne'er a jordan, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamber-lic breeds fleas like a loach.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, II, i.

Jordan almond. Here Jordan has nothing to do with the river (cp. JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE), but is a corruption of Fr. jardin, garden. The Jordan almond is a fine variety which comes chiefly from Malaga.

Jordan passed. Death over. The Jordan separated the wilderness of the world from the PROMISED LAND, and thus came to be regarded as the Christian STYX.

Jorum. A large drinking-bowl, intended especially for PUNCH. The name is thought to be connected with King Joram (cp. JEROBOAM), who "brought with him vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and vessels of brass" (II Sam. viii, 10).

Josaphat. See BARLAAM AND JOSAPHAT.

Joseph. One not to be seduced from his continency by the severest temptation is sometimes so called. The reference is to Joseph in Potiphar's house (Gen. xxxix). Cp. BELLEROPHON.

A form of great-coat used to be known by the same name, in allusion to Joseph's coat of many colours (Gen. xxxvii, 3).

Joseph, St. Husband of the Virgin Mary and the lawful father of Jesus. He is patron saint of carpenters, because he was of that craft.

In art Joseph is represented as an aged man with a budding staff in his hand. His day is 19 March, and in 1955 Pope Pius II instituted the feast of St. Joseph the Workman on 1 May.

Joseph of Arimathea, St. The rich Jew, probably a member of the SANHEDRIN, who believed in Christ, but feared to confess it, and, after the Crucifixion, begged the body of the Saviour and deposited it in his own tomb (see Matt. xxvii, 57-60; Mark xv, 43-46). His day is 17 March.

Legend relates that he was imprisoned for 12 years and was kept alive miraculously by the Holy GRAIL, and that on his release by Vespasian, about the year 63, he brought the Grail and the spear with which Longinus wounded the crucified Saviour to Britain, and founded the abbey of GLASTONBURY, whence he commenced the conversion of Britain.

The origin of these legends is to be found in a group of apocryphal writings of which the Evangelium Nicodemi is the chief; these were worked upon at Glastonbury and further established by Robert de Borron in the 13th century, the latter version (by way of Walter Map) being woven by Malory into his Morte d'Arthur.

Josephus (c. A.D. 37–95). Flavius Josephus, the celebrated Jewish historian, and PHARISEE, took a prominent part in the last Jewish revolt against the Romans (A.D. 66–70) and later wrote his History of the Jewish War. According to his own account, his prophecy that Vespasian, the captor of Jerusalem, would become emperor of ROME, saved his life. The most important of his other writings was his Jewish Antiquities, dealing with the history of the Jews down to the end of Nero's reign.

Joss. A Chinese god or idol. The word is probably a PIDGIN-ENGLISH corruption of Port. deos, Lat. deus, god. A temple is called a joss-house, and a joss-stick is a stick made from clay mixed with the powder of various scented woods burnt as incense.

Jot. A very little, the least possible. The iota (see I) is the smallest letter of the Greek alphabet, called the Lacedæmonian letter.

This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood.
SHAKESPEARE: Merchant of Venice, IV, i.

Jot or tittle. A tiny amount. The jot is i or iota, and the tittle, from Lat. titulus, is the mark or dot over the i.

Jotunheim (jô' tùn him). The land of the Scandinavian Jotuns or GIANTS.

Jougs (joogz). The Scottish PILLORY, or more properly an iron ring or collar fastened to a wall by a short chain, and used as a pillory (O. Fr. joug, a yoke).

Jourdain, Monsieur. The type of bourgeois placed by wealth in the ranks of gentlemen, who makes himself ridiculous by his endeavours to acquire their accomplishments. The character is from MOLIÈRE'S Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme (1670). He is chiefly remembered for his delight in discovering that, whereas some men write poetry, he had been speaking prose all his life.

Journal (O. Fr. from Lat. diurnalis, diurnal; dies, a day). Applied to newspapers, the word strictly means a daily paper; but it has come to be applied to weekly and other periodicals.

Journey-weight (Fr. journée, a day). Originally the quantity of coins that could be minted in a day. A journey-weight of gold is fifteen pounds troy, which was coined into 701 SOVEREIGNS or double that number of half-sovereigns. A journey of silver is sixty pounds troy, which, before the alteration in the silver coinage of 1920, was coined into 3,960 shillings. The trial of the Pyx (see under PYX) depends on these journey-weights.

Jove. Another name of JUPITER, being Jovis pater, father Jove. Milton, in Paradise Lost, makes Jove one of the fallen angels (I, 512).

Jovial. Merry and sociable, like those born under the planet JUPITER, which astrologers considered the happiest of the natal stars. Cp. SATURNINE.

Our Jovial star reign'd at his birth.
SHAKESPEARE: Cymbeline, V, iv.

Joy. To get no joy. Not to meet with any success.

The Five Joyful Mysteries. The first chaplet of the ROSARY, made up of the ANNUNCIATION, the Visitation, the Nativity of Christ, the Presentation of Christ in the TEMPLE, and the finding of the Child Jesus in the Temple.

The seven joys of the Virgin. See MARY.

Joy-ride. A pleasure-ride or stolen ride in a motor-car or other vehicle, especially when driven fast.

Joy-stick. The control column of an aeroplane or glider, which is linked to the elevators and ailerons to control them.

Joyeuse (zhwa yêrz). A name given to more than one famous sword in romance, especially to CHARLEMAGNE'S, which bore the inscription Decem præceptorum custos Carolus, and was buried with him.

Joyeuse Entrée (Fr., joyous entry; Dut. blyde inkomst). The name given to the constitution granted to Brabant by Duke John III in 1354. It checked the power of the Church and the appointment of foreigners to offices of state. The dukes were obliged to swear to uphold these privileges before entering the ducal residence. Should the prince violate these privileges, "the inhabitants of Brabant, after regular protest entered, are discharged of their oaths of allegiance, and . . . may conduct themselves exactly as seems to them best." Motley tells us (The Rise of the Dutch Republic, Pt. II, ch. II) "that mothers came to the province in order to give birth to their children, who might thus enjoy, as birthright, the privileges of Brabant."

Joyeuse Garde, or Garde-Joyeuse. The estate given by King ARTHUR to Sir LANCELOT of the Lake for defending the Queen's honour against Sir Mador. It is supposed to have been at Berwick-on-Tweed.

Juan, Don. Don Juan Tenorio, the legendary hero of many plays, poems, stories and operas, was the son of a notable family in 14th-century Seville. The story is that he killed the commandant of Ulloa after seducing his daughter. He then invited the statue of the murdered man (erected in the FRANCISCAN convent) to a feast, at the end of which the sculptured figure delivered him over to HELL. He is presented as the complete profligate.

His name is synonymous with rake, roué and aristocratic libertine, and in Mozart's opera Don Giovanni (1787) the valet says that his master had "in Italy 700 mistresses, in Germany 800, in Turkey and France 91, in Spain 1,003". Don Juan's dissolute life was dramatized by the monk Gabriel Tellez in the 17th century, followed by MOLIERE, Corneille, Shadwell and others. BYRON, the elder Dumas, Balzac, de Musset, and Shaw (Man and Superman) all utilized the story and helped to maintain its popularity.

Juan Fernandez. See ROBINSON CRUSOE.

Jubilate (joo bi la' ti) (Lat., Cry aloud) is the name given to two psalms which begin with this word in the VULGATE (lxv and xcix). In the English psalter they are Psalms lxvi and c.

Jubilate Sunday is the third Sunday after EASTER, when the introit at the MASS begins with two verses of the former of the Jubilate Psalms.

Jubilee. In Jewish history the year of jubilee was every fiftieth year, which was held sacred in commemoration of the deliverance from Egypt. In this year the fields were allowed to lie fallow, land that had passed out of the possession of those to whom it originally belonged was restored to them, and all who had been obliged to let themselves out for hire were released from bondage. The jubilee was proclaimed with trumpets of ram's horn (see Lev. xxv, 11-34, 39-54, and xxvii, 17-24).

Hence any fiftieth anniversary, especially one kept with great rejoicings, is called a Jubilee, and the name has been applied to other outbursts of joy or celebrations, such as the Shakespeare Jubilee, held at Stratford-upon-Avon in 1769, and the Protestant Jubilee, celebrated in Germany in 1617, the centenary of Luther's protest.

King George III's Jubilee was on 25 October 1809, the day before the commencement of the fiftieth year of his reign, Queen Victoria celebrated hers on 21 June 1887, and kept her Diamond Jubilee ten years later. George V celebrated the twenty-fifth year of his accession by a Silver Jubilee on 6 May 1935.

In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH Pope Boniface VIII instituted a jubilee in 1300 and INDULGENCES were granted to pilgrims visiting ROME. It was to be held at intervals of 100 years but in 1343 Clement VI altered it to 50 years and in 1389 Urban IV to 33. In 1470 Paul II reduced the interval to 25 years. There was such a jubilee in 1950. The jubilee is the only occasion when the Porta Santa (Holy Door) of St. Peter's, Rome, is opened. PILGRIMAGE to Rome ceased to be obligatory in 1500. A jubilee is also known as a Holy Year.

Jubilee Juggins. A nickname given to Ernest Benzoni, a foolish and wealthy young man about town who squandered a fortune on horse-racing about the time of Queen Victoria's JUBILEE (1887). The name Juggins is generally applied to any simpleton.

Judas. Judas Iscariot, who betrayed Christ, his Master; hence a traitor.

Judas Kiss. A deceitful act of courtesy or simulated affection. JUDAS betrayed his Master with a kiss (Matt. xxvi, 49).

So Judas kiss'd his Master,
And cried, all hail when as he meant all harm.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. III, V, vii.

Judas slits, or holes. The peep-holes in a prison door which the guard uncovers to check up on the prisoners.

Judas tree. A leguminous tree of southern Europe (Cercis siliquastrum) which flowers before the leaves appear, so called from a Greek tradition that Judas hanged himself on such a tree. Cp. ELDER-TREE, which is sometimes also so named. The American Judas tree is the Cercis canadensis or redbud.

Judas-coloured hair. Fiery red. In the MIDDLE AGES Judas Iscariot was represented with red hair and beard. Cp. CAIN-COLOURED BEARD.

Ros; His very hair is of the dissembling colour.
Cel: Something browner than Judas's: marry, his kisses are Judas's own children.
SHAKESPEARE: As You Like It, III, iv.

Judas's Ear. See JEW'S EAR.

Jude, St. One of the twelve apostles, brother of JAMES THE LESS. He is represented in art with a club or staff, and a carpenter's square in allusion to his trade. His day, 28 October, coincides with that of St. SIMON, with whom he suffered martyrdom in Persia.

Judge, Judge Lynch. See LYNCH LAW.

Judge's black cap. See BLACK CAP.

Judge's robes. In the English criminal courts, where the judges represent the sovereign, they appear in full court dress, and wear a scarlet robe; but in NISI PRIUS courts the judge sits merely to balance the law between citizens, and therefore appears in his judicial undress, or violet gown.

Judgment, The Last, or General Judgment, is God's final sentence on mankind on the LAST DAY. The Particular Judgment is the judgment on each individual soul after death.

Judgment of Paris. See PARIS.

Judica Sunday (joo' di kâ). The fifth Sunday in LENT (also known as Passion Sunday) is so called from the first word of the Introit at the MASS, Judica me, Deus, Give sentence with me, O God (Ps. xliiii).

Judicial Astrology. See ASTROLOGY.

Judicium Crucis (jū dis' i um kroo' sis). Trial of the CROSS. A form of ORDEAL which consisted in stretching out the arms before a cross, till one party could hold out no longer, and lost his cause.

Judy. See PUNCH, MR.

Jug, or Stone Jug. A prison. Cp. JOUGS.

To be jugged, or to be in the jug. To be imprisoned.

Bottle and jug. A once common name for a public-house bar where beer was sold in bottles and draught beer could be collected in jugs for consumption off the premises.

Jugged hare. Hare stewed with wine and seasoning, properly in a jug or jar.

Juggernaut, or Jagganath. A Hindu god, "Lord of the World", having his temple at Puri in Orissa. It is a cult-title of VISHNU, and the pyramidal temple was erected in the 12th century and held the Golden Tooth of BUDDHA. The chief festival is the car festival when Jagganath is dragged in his car (35 feet square and 45 feet high) over the sand to another temple. The car has sixteen wheels, each seven feet in diameter. The belief that fanatical pilgrims cast themselves under the wheels of the car to be crushed to death on the last day of the festival is largely without foundation. However, it has led to the phrase the car of the juggernaut, used to denote customs, institutions, etc., beneath which people are ruthlessly and unnecessarily crushed. The word juggernaut is also applied humorously to any wheeled "monster".

Juggins. See JUBILEE JUGGINS.

Juggler (Lat. joculator, a jester, joker). In the MIDDLE AGES, jugglers accompanied the MINSTRELS and TROUBADOURS and added to their musical talents sleight of hand, antics and feats of prowess to amuse their audience. In time the music was omitted and tricks became their staple. Cp. JONGLEUR.

Juke Box. An American term for an automatic musical box or record-player that churns out selected pieces when coins are inserted.

Julian. Pertaining to Julius CÆSAR (100-44 B.C.).

Julian the Apostate (332, 361-363). Flavius Claudius Julianus, Roman Emperor, and nephew of Constantine the Great. So called from his attempts to restore paganism, having abandoned Christianity at about the age of 20. He set an example by the austerity of his life and zeal for the public welfare and was notable for his literary and philosophical interests. Christians were not actively persecuted but there was discrimination against them. See GALILEAN.

Julian Calendar. The calendar instituted by Julius CÆSAR in 46 B.C., which was in general use in Western Europe until it was corrected by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582, and still used in England until 1752 and until 1918 in Russia. To allow for the odd quarter of a day, Cæsar ordained that every fourth year should contain 366 days, the additional day being introduced after the 6th before the CALENDS of March, i.e. 24 February. Cæsar also divided the months into the number of days they at present contain. See JULY.

Julian Year. The average year of 365½ days, according to the Julian Calendar.

Julian, St. A patron SAINT of travellers and of hospitality, looked upon in the MIDDLE AGES as the epicure of saints. Thus Chaucer says that the Franklin was "Epicurus owne sone", and:

An house holdere, and that a greet was he;
Seint Julian in his contree,
Canterbury Tales: Prologue, 339.

He seems to be essentially a mythical saint. He is supposed to have unwittingly slain his parents and devoted his life to helping strangers by way of atonement.

Juliet. See ROMEO.

Julium Sidus. The comet which appeared at the death of Julius CÆSAR, and which in court flattery was called the apotheosis of the murdered man.

Jullien's Concerts were features of the London season in the 1840s and 1850s. Louis Antoine Jullien came to London in 1838 from PARIS and began a series of summer concerts at DRURY LANE, and later winter concerts, at which the best artists were engaged. He raised the level of musical appreciation and introduced the PROMENADE CONCERT. He went bankrupt in 1857, returned to Paris and died in a lunatic asylum in 1860.

July. The seventh month, named by Mark Anthony in honour of Julius CÆSAR. It was formerly called Quintilis, as it was the fifth month of the Roman year. The old Dutch name for it was Hooy-maand (hay-month); the old Saxon, Mædd-Monath (because the cattle were turned into the meadows to feed) and Lida æftevr (the second mild or genial month). In the French Revolutionary CALENDAR it was called Messidor (harvest-month, 19 June to 18 July).

Until the 18th century, July was accented on the first syllable. Even as late as 1798 Wordsworth wrote:

In March, December, and in July,
'Tis all the same with Harry Gill;
The neighbours tell, and tell you truly,
His teeth they chatter, chatter still.
Goody Blake and Harry Gill.

The July Monarchy. That of Louis Philippe, also called the Orleanist monarchy. See JULY REVOLUTION.

The July Revolution. The French revolution of 1830 (27-29 July) which overthrew Charles X and gave the throne to Louis Philippe, Duke of Orleans, the CITIZEN KING.

Jumbo. The name of an exceptionally large African elephant, which, after giving rides to thousands of children in the London Zoo, was sold to Barnum's "Greatest Show on Earth" in 1882. He weighed 6½ tons and was accidentally killed by a railway engine in 1885. His name is now synonymous with elephant in children's minds.

Jumbuck (Austr.). A sheep, formerly applied to a shaggy kangaroo. Possibly from the native word jimbuc.

Jump. As well as meaning "to leap" or "move quickly" it also means "to go along", "agree with", "coincide", "tally".

In some sort it jumps with my humour.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV. Pt. I, I, ii.

To jump a claim. An expression from the miners' camps meaning to seize someone else's claim or diggings in his absence; hence to seize that which properly belongs to another by stealing a march on the owner.

To jump at an offer. To accept eagerly.

To jump at, or to conclusions. To draw inferences too hastily from insufficient evidence.

To jump bail. To forfeit bail by absconding before trial.

To jump down a person's throat. See under THROAT.

To jump from the frying-pan into the fire. See FRYING-PAN.

To jump over the broomstick. To live together without the proper ceremony of marriage. To "jump the besom" is an alternative form. The derivation is uncertain.

To jump the gun. See under GUN.

To jump upon someone. To come down upon them heavily with a crushing remark, etc.

Counter-jumper. See COUNTER.

Jumping-off place. The edge of the earth, the end of civilization from which one leaped into nothingness. Thus used by settlers of any remote, desolate spot. Also a starting point from which to begin an enterprise, etc.

Jumpers. A nickname applied to the SHAKERS, and also to Welsh METHODISTS who were supposed to "jump for joy" during divine service.

June. The sixth month, named from the Roman Junius, a gens or clan name akin to juvenis, young. Ovid says Junius a juvenum nomine dictus (Fasti, v, 79). Alternatively, it may derive from JUNO.

The old Dutch name was Zomer-maand (summer-month); the old Saxon, Sere-monath (dry-month) and Lida ærra (joy time). In the French Revolutionary CALENDAR the month was called Prairial (meadow month, 20 May to 18 June).

June marriages lucky. "Good to the man and happy to the maid." This is an old Roman superstition. The festival of Juno Moneta was held on the CALENDI of JUNE, and JUNO was the great guardian of women from birth to death.

Junius. Junius Brutus. Son of M. Junius and Tarquinia and nephew of Tarquin. When his father and elder brother were murdered by Tarquin the Proud, he feigned insanity, thereby saving his life, and was called Brutus for his apparent stupidity. He later inspired the Romans to get rid of the Tarquins and became a consul. Cp. AMYRIS PLAYS THE FOOL.

The Letters of Junius. A series of anonymous letters, the authorship of which has never been finally settled, which appeared in the London Public Advertiser from 21 November 1768 to 21 January 1772. They were directed against Sir William Draper, the Duke of Grafton, and the Ministers generally. The author said in his Dedication, "I am the sole depository of my own secret, and it shall perish with me." Among the many suggested authors are Edmund Burke, John Wilkes, George Grenville, Lord Temple,

Chatham, Henry Grattan, Edward Gibbon, Alexander Wedderburn, Lord George Sackville, Horne Tooke, Philip Francis, and Lord Shelburne. The two latter find most favour at present. The vitriolic quality of the writer is evidenced by the following extract from Letter lxvii, addressed to the Duke of Grafton:

The unhappy baronet [Sir James Lowther] has no friends even among those who resemble him. You, my Lord, are not yet reduced to so deplorable a state of dereliction. Every villain in the kingdom is your friend: and, in compliment to such amity, I think you should suffer your dismal countenance to clear up. Besides, my Lord, I am a little anxious for the consistency of your character. You violate your own rules of decorum, when you do not insult the man whom you have betrayed.

Junk. Nautically speaking is old, discarded or condemned cordage; salt junk, the salt meat supplied to ships for long voyages, from its toughness and likeness to old rope-ends. The term probably derives from Lat. juncus, a rush, once used in the making of cordage (cp. JUNKET). The word is now applied generally to a miscellany of cast-off articles. The word is now also the slang term for narcotic drugs and an addict of such is called a junker or junkie.

Junker (yung' ker). A German landowning aristocrat or squire, who formerly provided most of the officer class. Bismarck, the German chancellor, came from the Prussian junker class. See also JUNK.

Junket. Curdled cream with spice, etc.; any dainty. So called because it was originally made in a rush basket (Ital. giuncata; from Lat. juncus, a rush).

You know there wants no junks at the feast.
SHAKESPEARE: Taming of the Shrew, II, ii.

Juno. In Roman mythology "the venerable ox-eyed" wife and sister of JUPITER, and queen of heaven. She is identified with the Greek HERA, was the special protectress of marriage and of woman, and was represented as a war goddess. Cp. GENIUS.

Junonian Bird. The peacock, dedicated to the goddess-queen.

Junta (Sp. juntar, to join, congregate). In Spain a committee or council, especially a consultative or legislative assembly for the whole or part of the country. The best known being the Junta of Regency set up under Murat's presidency after NAPOLEON had secured King Ferdinand's abdication; and the local Juntas, backed by a central Junta at Seville, formed to resist the French. A group of army officers who seize political power is called a "military junta".

The name was also applied by Sidney and Beatrice Webb to a group of TRADE UNION general secretaries in London who were influential in trade union affairs in the 1860s. Their contemporaries called them the "Clique".

Junto. A corruption of JUNTA, denoting a clique or faction. It is particularly used of the WHIG leaders of the reigns of William III and Anne. The lords of the Whig Junto were Wharton, Somers, Sunderland, Orford, and Halifax. Cp. CABAL.

Jupiter. Also called JOVE, the supreme god of Roman mythology, corresponding to the Greek ZEUS, son of SATURN or Kronos (whom he dethroned) and Ops or Rhea. He was the special protector of Rome, and as Jupiter Capitolinus (his temple being on the Capitoline Hill) presided over the Roman games. He determined the course of human affairs and made known the future through signs in the heavens, the flight of birds, etc. See AUGURY.

As Jupiter was lord of heaven and bringer of light, white was the colour sacred to him; hence among the alchemists Jupiter designated tin. In HERALDRY Jupiter stands for AZURE, the blue of the heavens.

His statue by Phidias at OLYMPIA was one of the Seven Wonders of the World (see under WONDER). It was removed to Constantinople by Theodosius I and destroyed by fire in 475.

Jupiter is also the name of the largest of the planets.

Jupiter Ammon. A name under which JUPITER was worshipped in Libya where his temple was famous for its oracle which was consulted by HERCULES. Cp. AMMON.

Jupiter Scapin. A nickname of NAPOLEON, given him by the Abbé de Pradt. Scapin is a valet famous for his knavish tricks, in MOLIÈRE's comedy Les Fourberies de Scapin.

Jupiter tonans (the thundering Jupiter). A complimentary nickname given to The Times in the mid-19th century.

Jupiter's beard. HOUSE LEEK.

Jury mast. A temporary mast erected to replace one that has been carried away. Similarly jury rudder, jury rig, etc., and humorously jury leg for a wooden leg. The etymology of "jury" here is a matter of surmise.

Jus. Latin for law.

Jus civile (Lat.). Civil law; Roman law.

Jus divinum (Lat.). Divine law.

Jus gentium (Lat.). The law of nations or law common to all nations; used by moderns as an expression for international law for which the Roman term was jus feciale.

Jus mariti (Lat.). The right of the husband to the wife's property.

Jus naturæ, or naturale (Lat.). Natural law, originally virtually the same as Jus gentium. The law of reason common to nature and man.

Jus primæ noctis (Lat. right of the first night). The same as droit du seigneur (lord's right), the right of the lord to share the bed of the bride of any one of his vassals on the wedding night. The custom seems to have existed in early mediæval Europe to a limited extent but was more often the excuse for levying dues in lieu.

Just, The. Among rulers and others who have been given this surname are:

Aristides, the Athenian (d. c. 468 B.C.).

Bahram II (276-293), fifth of the Sassanidæ.

Casimir II, King of Poland (1177-1194).

Chosroes I, or Khosru of Persia (531-579), called by the Arabs Malk-al-adel (the Just King).

Ferdinand I, King of Aragon (1412-1416).

Haroun al-Raschid (Aaron the Just). The most renowned of the Abbassid caliphs (786-809) (see under ABBASSIDES). He appears in the ARABIAN NIGHTS stories.

James II, King of Aragon (1291-1327).

Peter I, King of Portugal (1356-1367).

Juste milieu (zhoost mil yër) (Fr.). The golden mean.

Le mot juste (lë mó zhoost) (Fr.). The word or phrase which exactly conveys the meaning desired.

Justice. See JEDDART.

Justices in Eyre. See EYRE.

Poetic justice. The ideal justice which poets exercise in making the good happy and the bad unsuccessful.

Juvenal (Lat. juvenis). A youth; common in SHAKESPEARE, as "The juvenal, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fledged" (Henry IV, Pt. II, I, ii).

Juveniles. In theatrical parlance, actors playing young men's parts; in the journalistic and book-trade, periodicals or books intended for the young.

K

K. The eleventh letter of the alphabet, representing the Greek kappa and the Hebrew kaph. The Egyptian hieroglyphic for K was a bowl. The Romans, after the

C was given the K sound, only used the latter for abbreviated forms of a few words from Greek; thus, false accusers were branded on the forehead with a K (Kalumnia), and the Carians, Cretans, and Cilicians were known as the three bad K's. K is the recognized abbreviation of Knight in British Orders but the abbreviation of KNIGHT per se is Kt.

K.B. or Kt.Bach. Knight Bachelor.

Ka me, ka thee. You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours; one good turn deserves another; do me a service, and I will give you a helping hand when you require one. It is an old proverb, and appears in Heywood's collection (1546).

Kaaba (ka' bâ) (Arab. kabah, a cube). The ancient stone building said to have been first built by ISHMAEL and ABRAHAM and incorporated in the centre of the Great Mosque at MECCA. It forms a rough square and is about 40 feet high, containing the BLACK STONE in the east corner. The present Kaaba was built in 1626 and is covered with a cloth of black brocade that is replaced with annual ceremony.

Kabbalah. See CABBALA.

Kaf, Mount. See JINN.

Kaffir (käf' ür) (Arab. kafir, an infidel). A name given to all Africans who were not MOSLEMS. The British and other Europeans restricted the term to the Bantu races.

Kaffir King. A nickname given to Barney Barnato (1852-1897) the South African diamond magnate and speculator, who became an associate of Cecil Rhodes. See KAFFIRS.

Kaffirs, Kaffir market. The Stock exchange term for South African mining shares, etc., and for the market dealing with them.

Kailyard School. A school of writers flourishing in the 1890s, who took their subjects from Scottish humble life. It included Ian Maclaren, J. J. Bell, S. R. Crockett, and J. M. Barrie. The name is from the motto—"There grows a bonnie brier bush in our Kailyard"—used by Maclaren for his Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush (1894).

Kaiser (ki' zer). The German form of CÆSAR; the title formerly used by the head of the HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE, and by the Emperors of Austria and Germany. It was Diocletian (c. 284) who ordained that Cæsar should be the title of the Emperor of the West.

Kalevala. The national epic of the Finns, compiled from popular songs and oral tradition by the Swedish philologist, Elias Lönnroth (1802-1884), who published his first edition of 12,000 verses in 1835, and a second, of some 22,900 verses, in 1849. Its name is taken from the three sons of Kalewa (Finland), who are the heroes of the poem—Väinämöinen, Ilmarenin, and Lemminkainen. Prominent in the action is the magical mill, the Sampo, an object that grants all one's wishes. The epic is influenced by Teutonic and Scandinavian mythology, and to a lesser extent by Christianity. It is written in unrhymed alliterative trochaic verse, and is the prototype both in form and content of Longfellow's Hiawatha.

Kali (ka' lē). The cult name of the Hindu goddess Durga, wife of SIVA, goddess of death and destruction. Calcutta receives its name from her, Kali-ghat, the steps of Kali, by which her worshippers descended from the bank to the waters of the Ganges. It was to her that the THUGS sacrificed their victims. Her idol is black, besmeared with blood; she has red eyes, four arms, matted hair, huge fang-like teeth, and a protruding tongue that drips with blood. She wears a necklace of skulls, ear-rings of corpses, and is girdled with serpents.

Kalki. See AVATAR.

Kalyb (ká' lib). The "Lady of the Woods", who stole ST. GEORGE from his nurse, and endowed him with gifts. St. George enclosed her in a rock, where she was torn to pieces by spirits. The story occurs in the Famous History of the Seven Champions of Christendom, Pt. I. See SEVEN CHAMPIONS.

Kam. Crooked; a CELTIC word. Clean kam, perverted into kim kam, means wholly awry, clean from the purpose.

Sic: This is clean kam.

Brut: Merely awry.

SHAKESPEARE: Coriolanus, III, i.

Kamerad (Ger., comrade, mate). A word used by the Germans in World War I as an appeal to quarter. It is now used in English with the meaning, "I surrender."

Kami (ka' mē). A god or divinity in SHINTOISM, the native religion of Japan; also the title given to daimios and governors, comparable to our "lord".

Kamikaze (ka mi ka zi). A Japanese word meaning "divine wind", in reference to the providential typhoon which once balked a Mongol invasion. In World War II it was applied to "suicide" aircraft and suicidal resistance.

Kamsin, or Khamsin. A simoom or hot, dry south-east wind, which prevails in Egypt and the deserts of Africa for about fifty days, from mid-March to early May. (Arab., khamsin, fifty.)

Kangaroo, or Kangaroo Closure. In British Parliamentary procedure, the process by which the SPEAKER (on the Report stage of a bill), or the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House (or standing committee) selects the amendments to be debated. So named because the debate leaps from clause to clause. Cp. CLOSURE; GUILLOTINE.

Kangaroo Court. An irregular court or tribunal conducted in disregard of proper legal procedure, as a mock court held among prisoners in a gaol. "To kangaroo" means to convict a person on false evidence. The term, which probably arose from some likening of the "jumps" of the kangaroo to the progress of "justice" in such courts, was common in the U.S.A. during the 19th century. It obtained wide currency in England in 1966 when applied to the irregular punitive measures taken by certain TRADE UNIONS against their members.

Kansa. See KRISHNA.

Karaites. See SCRIPTURISTS.

Karma (Sans., action, fate). In Buddhist philosophy, the name given to the results of action, especially the cumulative results of a person's deeds in one stage of his existence as controlling his destiny in the next.

Among Theosophists the word has a rather wider meaning, viz. the unbroken sequence of cause and effect; each effect being, in its turn, the cause of a subsequent effect.

Karmathians. A 9th-century Mohammedan sect in Iraq founded by Karmut, a labourer who professed to be a prophet. They were socialistic pantheists and rejected the forms and ceremonies of the KORAN, which they regarded as a purely allegorical work.

Karttikeya. The Hindu god of war. He is shown riding on a peacock, with a bow in one hand and an arrow in the other, and is known also as Skanda and Kumara.

Kaswa, Al. MOHAMMED'S favourite camel, which fell on its knees when the prophet delivered the last clause of the KORAN to the assembled multitude at MECCA.

Katerfelto. A generic name for a QUACK or CHARLATAN. Gustavus Katerfelto was a celebrated quack who became famous during the influenza epidemic of 1782, when he exhibited his solar microscope at London and created immense excitement by showing the infusoria of muddy water. He was a tall man, dressed in a long black gown and square cap, and accompanied by a black cat. He died in 1799.

And Katerfelto, with his hair on end,
At his own wonders, wondering for his bread.
COWPER: The Task; The Winter Evening (1785).

Kathay. See CATHAY.

Kay, Sir. In ARTHURIAN ROMANCE, son of Sir Ector and foster-brother of King ARTHUR, who made him his seneschal.

Keblah. See KIBLAH.

Kedar's Tents (kē' dá). This world. Kedar was a son of ISHMAEL (Gen. xxv, 13), and was the ancestor of an important tribe of nomadic Arabs. The phrase means "houses in the wilderness of this world", and comes from Ps. cxx, 5: "Woe is me, that I sojourn in Mesech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar!"

Keel. Keel-hauling. An old naval punishment consisting of dragging the offender under the keel of the ship from one side to the other by means of ropes and tackles attached to the yards. The result was often fatal. Figuratively it is "to haul over the coals" (see under COAL), to castigate harshly.

On an even keel. Figuratively, a state of stability or balance.

Keening. A weird lamentation for the dead, once common in Ireland, practised at funerals. It is from the Irish word caoine, pronounced keen, and was a similar musical dirge to the Scottish coronach.

Keep. One's keep is the amount that it takes to maintain one; heard in such phrases as You're not worth your keep. The keep of a mediæval castle was the main tower or stronghold of the donjon.

Keep, or save your breath to cool your porridge. Look after your own business, and do not put your SPOKE into another person's wheel.

Keep your hair on. See under HAIR.

Keep your powder dry. Keep prepared for action; keep your courage up. The phrase comes from a story told of Oliver Cromwell. During his campaign in IRELAND, he concluded an address to his troops, who were about to cross a river before attacking, with the words: "Put your trust in God; but be sure to keep your powder dry."

To keep, or set a good table. To provide a good and generous standard of fare at one's table.

To keep a stiff upper lip. To preserve a resolute appearance; not to give way to grief.

To keep at arm's length. To keep at a distance from one; to prevent another from being too familiar.

To keep at it. To continue hard at work; to persist.

To keep body and soul together. See under BODY.

To keep company with. A friendship preliminary to courtship.

To keep down. To prevent another from rising to an independent position; to keep in subjection; also to keep expenses low.

To keep good hours. See under HOUR.

To keep house, open house, etc. See under HOUSE.

To keep in. To repress, to restrain; also to confine pupils in the classroom for punishment after school hours.

To keep in countenance, etc. See under COUNTEenance.

To keep it dark, etc. See under DARK.

To keep oneself to oneself. To avoid the society of others; to keep aloof.

To keep one's hand in. See under HAND.

To keep one's terms. To reside in college, attend the INNS OF COURT, etc., during the recognized term times.

To keep tab, to keep tabs on. To keep a record; to keep a check on.

To keep the pot a-boiling. See under POT.

To keep up. To continue, as, "to keep up a discussion"; to maintain, as, "to keep up one's courage"; "to keep up appearances"; to continue PARI PASSU, as, "to keep up with the rest".

Keeper of the King's conscience. The LORD CHANCELLOR. (See under CHANCELLOR).

Keeping up with the Joneses. Trying to keep up the social level or to keep up appearances with your neighbours. The phrase was invented by Arthur R. ("Pop") Momand, the comic-strip artist, for a series which began in the New York Globe in 1913, and ran in that and other papers for 28 years. It was originally based on the artist's own attempts to keep up with his neighbours.

Keeping-room. The common sitting-room of a family.

Kells, The Book of. Kells is an ancient Irish town in County Meath, once the residence of the kings of IRELAND and the SEE of a BISHOP until the 13th century. Among its antiquities, but now preserved in Trinity College, Dublin, is the 8th-century Book of Kells, one of the finest extant illuminated manuscripts of the Gospels in Latin.

Kelly. As game as Ned Kelly. The phrase refers to the noted Australian desperado and BUSHRANGER, Ned Kelly (1855-1880) who, after a legendary career of crime, was captured in a suit of armour of his own making, and hanged at Melbourne. He died bravely, his last words being, "Such is life."

Kelmscott Press. A private printing press founded in 1890 by William Morris (1834-1896) in a cottage adjoining his residence, Kelmscott House, Hammer-smith. Assisted by Emery Walker, who initially gave Morris the inspiration, and Sidney Cockerell, the aim was to revive good printing as an art, and their publications made a serious impact on printing and book production.

Kelpie, or kelpy. A spirit of the waters in the form of a horse, in Scottish fairy-lore. It was supposed to delight in the drowning of travellers, but also occasionally helped millers by keeping the mill-wheel going at night.

Every lake has its Kelpie or Water-horse, often seen by the shepherd sitting upon the brow of a rock, dashing along the surface of the deep, or browsing upon the pasture on its verge.

GRAHAM: Sketches of Perthshire.

Kendal Green. Green cloth for foresters; so called from Kendal, Westmorland, formerly famous for its manufacture. LINCOLN was also famous for its green cloth.

Kenelm, St. An English SAINT, son of Kenwulf, King of Mercia in the early 9th century. He was only seven years old when, by his sister's order, he was murdered at Clent, Worcestershire. The murder, says Roger of Wendover, was miraculously notified at ROME by a white dove, which alighted on the altar of St. Peter's, bearing in its beak a scroll with

In Clent cow pasture, under a thorn,
Of head bereft, lies Kenelm, King-born.

His day is 17 July.

Kenne. A stone, fabled by mediæval naturalists to be formed in the eye of a stag. It was used as an antidote to poison. Cp. HYENA.

Kenno. A dialect name for a large rich cheese made by the women of the family for the refreshment of the gossips who were in the house at the birth of a child, any remnant being divided among them and taken home. Said to be derived from ken, to know, and so called because its making was kept secret. Cp. GROANING CHAIR.

Kensal Green. Churchyard burials in London had presented problems long before suburban cemeteries were established by joint-stock companies. Kensal Green, off the Harrow Road, was the first such cemetery and was opened in 1832.

It contains the tombs of many notable 19th-century figures, including Thomas Hood and the Duke of Sussex, sixth son of George III.

For there is good news yet to hear and fine things to be seen,
Before we go to Paradise by way of Kensal Green.
G. K. CHESTERTON: The Rolling English Road.

Kent. A man of Kent. One born east of the Medway. These men went out with green boughs to meet the CONQUEROR, and obtained in consequence a confirmation of their ancient privileges from the new King.

A Kentish man. A native of West Kent.

The Fair Maid of Kent. See under FAIR.

The Holy Maid of Kent. See under HOLY.

Kent cap. A standard size of brown paper measuring 21 in. × 18 in.

Kentish Fire. Rapturous applause, or three times three and one more. The expression probably originated with the protracted cheers given in Kent to the No-Popery orators in 1828-1829. Lord Winchelsea, proposing the health of the Earl of Roden on 15 August 1834, said: "Let it be given with the Kentish Fire."

Kentish Rag. A dark-coloured tough limestone used for building, found in parts of Kent.

Kentishman's Tails. See TAILED MEN.

Kent's Cavern. A limestone cave at Torquay, Devon, a mile eastward from the harbour, once known as Kent's Hole. Apart from the fascination of its natural features, including the beauty of its stalagmite grotto, it is of major importance to students of prehistory. Many relics, human and animal, have been found, including those of the mammoth and sabre-toothed tiger. The origin of the cave's name is a matter for surmise.

Kentigern, St. (kent' i jern). The patron SAINT of Glasgow (c. 510-c. 600); apostle of north-west ENGLAND and south-east SCOTLAND, and traditional founder of Glasgow Cathedral. He is represented with his episcopal cross in one hand, and in the other a salmon and a ring in allusion to the popular legend:

Queen Langoureth had been false to her husband, King Roderich, and had given her lover a ring. The king, aware of the fact, stole upon the knight in sleep, abstracted the ring, threw it into the Clyde, and then asked the queen for it. The queen, in alarm, applied to St. Kentigern, who after praying, went to the Clyde, caught a salmon with the ring in its mouth, handed it to the queen and was thus the means of restoring peace to the royal couple.

The Glasgow arms include the salmon with the ring in its mouth, an oak-tree with a bell hanging on one of the branches, and a bird at the top of the tree:

The tree that never grew,
The bird that never flew,
The fish that never swam,
The bell that never rang.

The oak and the bell are in allusion to the story that St. Kentigern hung a bell upon an oak to summon the wild natives to worship.

St. Kentigern is also known as "St. Mungo", for Mungho (dearest) was the name by which St. Servan, his first preceptor, called him.

His day is 13 January.

Kentucky Derby. One of the classic races in the U.S.A., run since 1875 at Churchill Downs, Louisville, Ky. It is a mile and a half, for three-year-olds.

Kentucky Pill. A bullet.

Kepler's Laws. Astronomical laws first enunciated by Johann Kepler (1571-1630). They formed the basis of Newton's work, and are the starting-point of modern astronomy. They are:

(1) That the orbit of a planet is an ellipse, the sun being in one of the foci.

(2) That every planet so moves that the line drawn from it to the sun describes equal areas in equal times.

(3) That the squares of the times of the planetary revolutions are as the cubes of their mean distances from the sun.

Kermesse, Kermis, or Kirmess. Originally the Kirkmass or church mass held in most towns of the Low Countries on the anniversary of the dedication of the parish church. It was accompanied by processions, and by feasting, and sports and games often of a somewhat riotous nature. It still survives, essentially as a FAIR.

Kern (M.E. kerne from Ir. ceithern). In mediæval Ireland, a light-armed foot soldier, one of the lowest grade. Cp. GALLOGLOSS.

Kernel. The kernel of the matter. Its gist, true import; the core or central part of it. The word is O.E. cyrnel, diminutive of corn.

Kersey. A coarse cloth, usually ribbed, and woven from long wool; said to be originally made at Kersey in Suffolk. Hence, figuratively, "homely", "homespun".

Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd
In russet yeas, and honest kersey noes.

SHAKESPEARE: Love's Labour's Lost, V, ii.

Kerton. See EXTER.

Kestrel. A common European falcon, or small hawk, once regarded as of a mean or base variety; hence contemptuously, a worthless fellow.

Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His baser breast; but in his kestrell kynd
A pleasing vaine of glory he did fynd.
SPENSER: The Faerie Queene, II, iii, 4.

Ketch. See JACK KETCH under JACK.

Kettle. As well as meaning the vessel used for boiling water and cooking, it is old thieves' slang for a watch; a tin kettle is a silver watch and a red kettle a gold one.

A kettle of fish. An old Border name for a kind of fête champêtre or riverside picnic where a newly caught salmon is boiled and eaten. The discomfort of this sort of party may have led to the phrase, "A pretty kettle of fish", meaning an awkward state of affairs, a mess, a muddle.

As the whole company go to the water-side today to eat a kettle of fish, there will be no risk of interruption.

SCOTT: St. Ronan's Well, ch. XII.

Kettledrum. A drum made of a thin hemispherical shell of brass or copper with a parchment top. Also an obsolete name for an afternoon tea party, on a somewhat smaller scale than the regular DRUM, and also in playful allusion to the presence of the tea kettle.

Kevin, St. An Irish saint of the 6th century, of whom legend relates that he retired to an island where he vowed no woman should ever land. A girl named Kathleen followed him, but the saint flogged her with a bunch of nettles or, according to the more romantic story, hurled her from a rock and her ghost never left the place where he lived. A rock at Glendalough, Wicklow, is shown as the bed of St. Kevin. Moore has a poem on this tradition (Irish Melodies IV).

Key. Metaphorically, that which explains or solves some difficulty, problem, etc., as the key to a problem, the means of solving it, Keys to the Classics, a well-known title for a series of CRIBS or literal translations. Also a place which commands a large area of land or sea, as Gibraltar is the Key to the Mediterranean, and, in the Peninsular War, Ciudad Rodrigo was known as the Key to Spain.

In music the lowest note of a scale is the keynote, and gives its name to the scale or key itself: hence the figurative phrases in key, out of key, in or out of harmony with.

St. Peter's Keys. The cross-keys, the insignia of the Papacy borne saltire-wise, one of gold and the other of silver, symbolizing the POWER of THE KEYS.

The Cross Keys. The emblem of St.

PETER and also St. Servatius, St. Hippolytus, St. GENEVIÈVE, St. Petronilla, St. Osyth, St. MARTHA, and St. Germanus of Paris. They also form the arms of the Archbishop of York. The Bishop of Winchester bears two keys and a sword in saltire and the bishops of St. Asaph, Gloucester, Exeter, and Peterborough bear two keys in saltire. The Cross Keys are also used as a PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGN.

The Power of the Keys. The supreme ecclesiastical authority claimed by the POPE as the successor of St. PETER. The phrase is derived from Matt. xvi, 19:

And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

The Gold Key. The office of GROOM OF THE STOLE (see under STOLE), the holder of which had a golden key as his emblem.

The queen's keys. An old legal phrase for the crowbars, hammers, etc., used to force an entrance so that a warrant could be executed.

The Ceremony of the Keys. When the gates of the TOWER OF LONDON are locked at 10 p.m. each night by the Chief Yeoman Warder and his escort the party is challenged on its return by the sentry with the words "Halt, who comes there?" The Chief Warder answers, "The Keys." The sentry asks, "Whose keys?" "Queen Elizabeth's keys", is the reply. The guard presents arms and the Chief Warder calls "God preserve Queen Elizabeth," to which the guard says "Amen," and the keys are deposited in the Queen's House. See BEEFEATERS.

The House of Keys. See TYNWALD.

To have the key of the door. A symbol of independence; much favoured on 21st birthday cards.

To have the key of the street. To be locked out of doors; to be turned out of one's home.

The key shall be on his shoulder. He shall have the dominion, shall be in authority, have the keeping of something. It is said of Eliakim that God would lay upon his shoulder the key of the house of David (Is. xxii, 22). The cumbersome wooden or iron keys of Biblical times were often carried across the shoulder.

Key-cold. Deadly cold, lifeless. A key, on account of its metallic coldness, is still sometimes used to stop bleeding at the nose.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!
Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood!
SHAKESPEARE: Richard III, I, ii.

The Keystone State. Pennsylvania; so called from its position and importance.

Keystone Comedies. Mack Sennett's notable early film comedies made by the Keystone Comedy Company at Hollywood. The first of their slapstick burlesques appeared in 1913. Charlie Chaplin worked with this company between 1916 and 1918.

Keyne, St. A CELTIC saint of the 5th century, daughter of Brychan, King of Brecknock. St. Keyne's Well, near Liskeard, Cornwall, is reputed to give the upper hand to the first of the marriage partners to drink from it.

Khaki (ka' ki). A Hindu word, meaning dusty, or dust-coloured, from khak, dust. Khaki uniform was first used by an irregular corps of Guides raised by the British at Meerut during the INDIAN MUTINY known as the Khaki Risala (khaki squadron). It was adopted as an active service uniform by several regiments and in the Omdurman campaign, etc., but was not generally introduced until the South African War of 1899-1902.

Khaki Election. The name given to the General Election of 1900 (28 September-24 October) by which the CONSERVATIVES sought to profit from the recent military victories in the South African War. It was promoted by Joseph Chamberlain and the Conservatives won, although the gain in seats was very slight. See KHAKI.

Khalifa (ka lē' fā). An Arabic word meaning "successor", and the title adopted by Abdullah el Taashi, the successor of the MADHI in 1885. His power was broken by Kitchener at the battle of Omdurman in 1898.

Khamsin. See KAMSIN.

Khedive (ke dēv'). The title, meaning "prince" or "sovereign", by which the ruler of Egypt as viceroy of the Turkish Sultan was known from 1867 to 1914. In 1914, when Turkey joined the Central Powers, Khedive Abbas II was deposed by the British and Hussein Kamil set up as SULTAN. The title of King was adopted by Fuad in 1922 when the British terminated their Protectorate.

Kiblah. The point towards which Mohammedans turn when they worship, i.e. the KAABA at MECCA; also the niche or slab (called the mihrab) on the interior wall of a mosque indicating this direction.

Kibosh (ki' bosh). To put the kibosh on. To put an end to; to dispose of. It has been suggested that it is derived from the Irish cie bais (the last word being pronounced "bosh"), cap of death.

Kick. Slang for a sixpence, but only in compounds, as, "Two-and-a-kick", two shillings and sixpence.

He's not got a kick left in him. He's done for, DOWN AND OUT. The phrase is from pugilism.

More kicks than ha'pence. More abuse than ha'pence. Called "monkey's allowance" in allusion to the monkeys once led about to collect ha'pence by performing tricks. The monkeys got kicks if they performed unsatisfactorily, but their owners collected the ha'pence.

Quite the kick. Quite dandy. The Italians called a dandy a chic. The French chic means knack, as avoir le chic, to have the knack of doing a thing smartly.

I cocked my hat and twirled my stick,
And the girls they called me quite the kick.
GEORGE COLMAN THE YOUNGER.

To get a kick out of something. To derive pleasurable excitement from it. Young people of the 1960s "do it for kicks".

To get the kick, or kick out. To be summarily dismissed; TO GET THE SACK (see under SACK) or the "order of the boot".

To kick against the pricks. To struggle against fate; to protest when the odds are against one. See Acts ix, 5, and xxvi, 14, where the reference is to an ox kicking when goaded, or a horse when pricked with the rowels of a spur. Cp. also I Sam. ii, 29—"Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice and at mine offering?"

To kick one's heels. See under HEEL.

To kick over the traces. To break away from control; to throw off restraint; as a horse refusing to run in harness kicks over the traces.

To kick the beam. To be of light weight; to be of inferior consequence. When one scale-pan is weighted less than the other, it flies upwards and "kicks the beam" of the scales.

To kick the bucket. See BUCKET.

To kick up a dust, row, etc. To create a disturbance.

Kick-off. In football, the start or resumption of a game by kicking the ball from the centre of the field.

Kickshaws. Made dishes, odds and ends, dainty trifles of small value. Formerly written "kickshose" (Fr. quelque chose).

Some pigeons, Davy, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV. Pt. II V, i.

Kicksy-wicksy. Full of whims and fancies, uncertain; hence, figuratively, a wife. Taylor, the WATER FOET, calls it kicksie-winsie, but Shakespeare spells it kicky-wicky.

Kid. A faggot or bundle of firewood. To kid is to bind up faggots. In the parish register of Kneesal church there is the following item: "Leading kids to church, 2s. 6d.," that is, carting faggots to church.

Kid. A young child; in allusion to kid, the young of the goat, a very playful and frisky little animal.

The verb to kid means to make a fool of, to hoax, and in the U.S.A. to tease or banter.

Kiddies, The. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Kidnapping. A slang word of 17th-century origin. "Nabbing" a "kid" or a child was the popular term for the stealing of young children and selling them to sea captains and others who transported them to the colonial plantations. In modern times stealing children and holding them for ransom; the most infamous example is the stealing and murder of Colonel Lindbergh's infant son in 1932.

Kidd, Captain. William Kidd (c. 1645-1701), famous privateer and pirate, about whom many stories and legends have arisen. Commissioned with LETTERS OF MARQUE in 1696 to attack the French and seize pirates, he turned the expedition into one of piracy. He was eventually arrested at Boston and subsequently hanged at Execution Dock, Wapping.

Kidney. Temperament, disposition, stamp, as men of another kidney, or of the same kidney. The REINS or kidneys were formerly supposed to be the seat of the affections.

Kildare's Holy Fane. Famous for the "Fire of St. Bridget" which the nuns never allowed to go out. Every twentieth night St. Bridget was fabled to return to tend the fire. St. Bridget founded a nunnery at Kildare in the 5th century. Part of the chapel still remains and is called "The Firehouse".

Kill. To kill by kindness. To overwhelm with benevolence, etc. It is said that Draco, the Athenian legislator, was killed by his popularity, being smothered in the theatre of Ægina by the number of caps and cloaks showered on him by the spectators (590 B.C.). Thomas Heywood wrote a play called A Woman Killed by Kindness (1607).

Killing. Irresistible, overpowering, fascinating, or bewitching; so as to compel admiration and notice.

A killing pace. Too strong or hot to last; exhausting.

Killing no murder. A pamphlet published in Holland and sent over to England in 1657 advising the assassination of Oliver Cromwell. It purported to be by one William Allen, a JESUIT, and has frequently been attributed to Silas Titus (later made a colonel and Groom of the Bedchamber by Charles II), but it was actually by Col. Edward Sexby, a LEVELLER, who had gone over to the Royalists, and who, in 1657, narrowly failed in an attempt to murder Cromwell.

Kilroy. During World War II, the phrase "Kilroy was here" was found written up wherever the Americans (particularly Air Transport Command) had been. Like CHAD in Britain its origin is a matter of conjecture. One suggestion is that a certain shipyard inspector at Quincy, Mass., chalked up the words on equipment he had inspected.

Kilter. Out of Kilter. Out of order. The origin of the word is uncertain.

Kin. See KITH; FREMD.

Kindergarten, meaning in German "garden of children", is a name applied to schools for training young children where the child is led rather than taught through play materials, handwork, songs, etc. The system was initiated by Friedrich Froebel (1782-1852) when he opened his first kindergarten at Blankenburg in 1837.

Milner's Kindergarten. The nickname given to the notable group of young men gathered together by Sir Alfred (Viscount) Milner, High Commissioner for South Africa, for the work of reconstruction after the South African War (1899-1902). Among them were L. S. Amery, Robert Brand, Lionel Curtis, F. S. Oliver, Philip Kerr, and John Buchan. They duly became advocates of closer imperial ties, both political and economic, and remained an important propagandist group for the imperial idea in the years before World War I.

Kindhart. A jocular name for a tooth-drawer in the time of Elizabeth I. Kindhart, the dentist, is mentioned by Rowland in his Letting of Humours—Blood in the Bead-vaine (1600); and in Rowley's New Wonder (Act I, i).

Mistake me not, Kindhart . . .
He calls you tooth-drawer.

The dedication in Chettle's Kindheartes Dreame (1592) begins:

Gentleman and good-fellowes (whose kindnes having christened mee with the name of kindheart, . . . let it not seeme strange (I beseech ye) that he that all dayes of his life hath beene famous for drawing teeth, should now in drooping age hazard contemptible infamie by drawing himselfe into print.

King. The O.E. cyning, from cyn, a nation or people, and the suffix -ing, meaning "of" in the sense of "belonging to". In the game of chess a king is the chief piece; in draughts a crowned man is called a King, and in cards it is a card carrying a picture of a king.

The Factory King. See FACTORY.

King Alfred, H.M.S. The name given to the shore establishment at Brighton where R.N.V.R. officers were trained during World War II.

King Charles's head. A phrase applied to an obsession, a fixed fancy. It comes from Mr. Dick, the harmless half-wit in Dicken's David Copperfield, who, whatever he wrote or said, always got round to the subject of King Charles's head, about which he was composing a memorial—he could not keep it out of his thoughts.

King Charles's Spaniel. A small black and tan spaniel with a rounded head, short muzzlé, and full eyes, silky coat and long, soft, drooping ears. The variety came into favour at the RESTORATION, but the colour of the dogs at that time was liver and white.

King Cole. See COLE.

King Cotton. Cotton, the staple of the American South, called at one time the Cotton Kingdom. The expression was first used by James H. Hammond in the United States Senate in 1858. See COTTON.

King Dick. See under DICK. Richard John Seddon, Liberal Prime Minister of New Zealand (1893-1906), was also so called because his leadership appeared to some to partake of the nature of benevolent despotism.

King Franconi. Joachim Murat (1767-1815), NAPOLEON's great cavalry leader who became king of Naples, was so named after the gold-laced circus-master.

King Horn. The hero of a late 13th-century English metrical romance. His father, king of Sudenne, was killed by SARACEN pirates who set young Horn adrift in a boat with twelve other children. After many adventures he reconquers his father's kingdom and marries Rymenhild, daughter of King Aylmer of Westernesne. Cp. HORN CHILDE under HORN.

King James's Bible. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

King Kong. A towering ape-like monster. From the gigantic character of this kind which played the title role in Cooper and Schoedsack's horror film of this name (1933).

King Log and King Stork. See under LOG.

King Pétaud. See PÉTAUD.

King of Arms. See HERALD.

The King of Bath. See under BATH.

King of the Bean. See BEAN-KING under BEAN.

King of the Beasts. The lion.

King of the Beggars. See under BEGGARS.

The King of the Border. A nickname of Adam Scott of Tushielaw (executed 1529), a famous border outlaw and chief.

The King of the Dunces. In his first version of the Dunciad (1712), Pope gave this place of honour to Lewis Theobald (1688-1714); but in the edition of 1742 Colley Cibber (1671-1757) was put in his stead.

The King of the Forest. The OAK.

King of Kings. The Deity. The title has also been assumed by various Eastern rulers, especially the sovereigns of Ethiopia.

King of the King. Cardinal Richelieu (1585-1642) was so called, because of his influence over Louis XIII of France.

The King of Men. A title given to both ZEUS and AGAMEMNON.

The King of Metals. GOLD.

King of Misrule. In mediæval and Tudor times the director of the Christmas-time horseplay and festivities, called also the Abbot, or Lord, of Misrule, and in SCOTLAND the Abbot of Unreason. A King of Misrule was appointed at the royal court, and at Oxford and Cambridge one of the Masters of Arts superintended the revelries. Stow tells us that the Lord Mayor of London, the sheriffs, and the noblemen each had their Lord of Misrule. Philip Stubbs (Anatomie of Abuses, 1595) says that these mock dignitaries had from twenty to a hundred officers under them, furnished with HOBBY-HORSES, dragons, and musicians. They first paraded in church with such a babble of noise that no one could hear his own voice. Polydore Vergil says that the Feast of Misrule was derived from the Roman SATURNALIA. According to Stow, "this pageant potentate began his rule at ALL-HALLOWS' EVE, and continued the same till the morrow after the Feast of the Purification."

The King of Painters. A title assumed by Parrhasius, the painter, a contemporary of Zeuxis (c. 400 B.C.). Plutarch says he wore a purple robe and a golden crown.

The King of Rome. A title conferred by NAPOLEON on his son Francis Charles Joseph Napoleon, Duke of Reichstadt (1811-1832), on the day of his birth. His mother was the Empress Marie Louise. He was called L'Aiglon (the young eagle) by Edmond Rostand in his play. His ashes were transferred to the INVALIDES in 1940.

The King of Spain's Trumpeter. A donkey. A pun on the word don, a Spanish magnate.

The King of Terrors. Death.

The King of Waters. The river Amazon, in South America. Although not as long as the Mississippi-Missouri (the longest river in the world), it discharges a greater volume of water.

The King of the World. The title (in Hindi Shah Jehan) assumed by Khorrum Shah, third son of Selim Jehangir, and fifth of the MOGUL Emperors of Delhi (reigned 1627-1658).

King of Yvetot. See YVETOT.

The King over the Water. The name given by JACOBITES to James II after his flight to France; to his son the Old PRETENDER (James III), and to his grandsons Charles Edward the Young Pretender (Charles III), and Henry, Cardinal of York (Henry IX).

My father . . . so far compromised his loyalty as to announce merely "The King," as his first toast after dinner, instead of the emphatic "King George". . . . Our guest made a motion with his glass, so as to pass it over the water-decanter which stood beside him, and added, "Over the water."

SCOTT: Redgauntlet, Letter V.

The Three Kings of Cologne. THE MAGI.

King's, or Queen's Bench. See under QUEEN.

The King's Book. The usual name given to Henry VIII's Necessary Doctrine and Evolution for any Christian Man (1543) issued after presentation to Convocation. It was based on the Bishops' Book of 1537 and the royal supremacy was more strongly emphasized. Its doctrinal tone was more CATHOLIC than that of its predecessor. It was probably the work of Cranmer, although Henry VIII seems to have contributed the preface.

The King's Cave. On the west coast of the Isle of Arran; so called because it was here that King Robert Bruce and his retinue are said to have lodged before they landed in Carrick (1307).

King's Champion. See CHAMPION OF ENGLAND.

King's, or Queen's Colour. See under QUEEN.

King's, or Queen's Counsel. See under QUEEN.

King's County in the province of Leinster in Eire was so called in 1556 when planted by English settlers, but is now called Offaly, its former name. Similarly Queen's County is once more called Leix.

King's Crag. Fife in SCOTLAND, so called because Alexander III of Scotland was killed there in 1286.

As he was riding in the dusk of the evening along the sea-coast of Fife, betwixt Burnt-island and King-horn, he approached too near the brink of the precipice, and his horse starting or stumbling, he was thrown over the rock and killed on the spot. . . . The people of the country still point out the very spot where it happened, and which is called "the King's Crag".

SCOTT: Tales of a Grandfather, vi.

The King's, or Queen's English. See under ENGLISH.

King's, or Queen's Evidence. See EVIDENCE.

King's Evil. Scrofula; supposedly cured by the royal touch, hence the name. The custom existed in France long before its introduction into England by Edward the Confessor. Ceremonial touching was introduced by Henry VII and the sufferers were presented with gold coins, although Charles I sometimes gave silver touch pieces instead of gold. The practice reached its height under Charles II, who, according to Macaulay (History of England, ch. xiv) touched nearly 100,000 people and in 1682 alone some 8,500. "In 1684, the throng was such that six or seven of the sick were trampled to death." William III called it "a silly superstition" and it was last practised by Queen Anne who touched Dr. Johnson without effecting a cure in 1712. Between the reign of Charles I and 1719 the Book of Common Prayer contained an office for the touching. The PRETENDERS also claimed this power.

King's Friends. In the early years of George III the name given to those politicians, mainly Tories, who for various reasons supported the crown and its ministries. The term was used with derogatory implications by the WHIGS. Their subservience to the king has been over-estimated as well as their importance as a coherent political group.

King's, or Queen's Messenger. See under QUEEN.

The King's Oak. The OAK under which Henry VIII sat in Epping Forest, while Queen Anne (Boleyn) was being executed.

The King's, or Queen's picture. Money; so called because it bears the portrait of the reigning sovereign.

King's, or Queen's Proctor. The Treasury Solicitor who represents the Crown in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division. In a divorce case his duty is to intervene to prevent a decree NISI from being made absolute if he finds collusion, etc.

King's, or Queen's Regulations. Regulations governing the organization and discipline of the Royal Navy, the Army and the Royal Air Force.

King's, or Queen's Remembrancer. See under QUEEN.

The King's or Queen's Shilling. See under SHILLING.

The King's, or Queen's Speech. See under QUEEN.

The books of the four kings. A pack of cards.

A cat may look at a king. See under CAT.

Days fatal to kings. Certain days were superstitiously held to be fatal to the sovereigns of Great Britain, but with little resemblance to the facts. Of those who have died since 1066 Sunday has been the last day of the reign of seven, Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday that of six each, Friday and Wednesday of five, and Saturday of four.

Sunday: Henry I, Edward III, Henry VI, James I, William III, Anne, George I.

Monday: Stephen, Richard II, Henry IV, Henry V, Richard III, George V.

Tuesday: Richard I, Edward II, Charles I, James II, William IV, Victoria.

Wednesday: John, Henry III, Edward IV, Edward V, George VI.

Thursday: William I, William II, Henry II, Edward VI, Mary I, Elizabeth I.

Friday: Edward I, Henry VIII, Charles II, Mary II, Edward VII.

Saturday: Henry VII, George II, George III, George IV.

A king of shreds and patches. In the old MYSTERIES, Vice used to be dressed in the motley of a clown or buffoon, as a mimic king in a parti-coloured suit. Thus SHAKESPEARE says (Hamlet, III, iv)—

A vice of kings;

A cutpurse of the empire and the rule . . .

A king of shreds and patches.

Gilbert and Sullivan's Mikado has—

A wandering minstrel I—

A thing of shreds and patches.

The phrase has also been applied to HACKS who compile books for publishers but supply no originality of thought or matter. Cp. GRUB STREET.

A king should die standing. The reputed DYING SAYING of Louis XVIII.

A King's, or Queen's bad, or hard bargain. Said of a soldier who turns out to be a malingerer or to be of no use; in allusion to the SHILLING formerly given to the serviceman on enlistment.

The king's cheese goes half in paring. A king's income is half consumed by the numerous calls on his purse.

Kings are above grammar. See GRAMMAR.

Kings have long hands. Do not quarrel with the king, as his power and authority reach to the end of his dominions. The Latin proverb is, An nescis longas regibus esse manus (Ovid, Heroides, XVII, 166).

Like a king. When Porus, the Indian prince, was taken prisoner, ALEXANDER THE GREAT asked him how he expected to be treated. "Like a king," he replied; and Alexander made him his friend, restoring Porus to his kingdom.

King-maker, The. Richard Neville, Earl of Warwick (1428-1471); so called because when he supported Henry VI, Henry was King, but when he sided with Edward IV, Henry was deposed and Edward crowned. He was killed at the battle of Barnet after seeking to re-establish Henry VI. He was apparently first called "the king-maker" by John Major in his History of Greater Britain, both England and Scotland, 1521.

King-pin. In skittles, etc., the pin in the centre when all the pins are in place, or the pin at the front apex, because if struck successfully it knocks down the others. Figuratively the word is applied to the principal person in a company, enterprise, etc.

Kingdom come. The next world.

And forty pounds be theirs, a pretty sum,
For sending such a rogue to kingdom come.
PETER PINDAR: Subjects for Painters.

Kingsale. See HAT.

Kingston Bridge. A card bent so that when the pack is cut, it is cut at this card.

Kinless Loons. The judges whom Cromwell sent into SCOTLAND were so termed, because they had no relations in that country and so were free from temptations to nepotism.

Kirk of Skulls. Gamrie Church in Banffshire; so called because the skulls and other bones of the Norsemen who fell in the neighbouring field, the Bloody Pots, were built into its walls.

Kirke's Lambs. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Kismet. Fate, destiny; or the fulfilment of destiny; from Turk. qismet, portion, lot.

Kiss (O.E. cyssan). An ancient and widespread mode of salutation frequently mentioned in the BIBLE as an expression of reverence and adoration, and as a greeting or farewell among friends. Esau embraced Jacob, "fell on his neck, and kissed him" (Gen. xxxiii, 4), the repentant woman kissed the feet of Christ (Luke, vii, 45), and the disciples of Ephesus "fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him" (Acts, xx, 37). In the New Testament the kiss becomes a token of Christian brotherhood, "Salute one another with an holy kiss" (Rom. xvi, 16). Kissing between the sexes occurs in Prov. vii, 13, "So she caught him, and kissed him, and with an impudent face said unto him."

The old custom of "kissing the bride" comes from the Salisbury rubric concerning the PAX.

In billiards (and bowls) a kiss is a very slight touch of one moving ball on another, especially a second touch; and the name also used to be given to a drop of sealing-wax accidentally let fall beside the seal.

Kiss - behind - the - garden - gate. A country name for a pansy.

Kiss it better, or kiss the place and make it well. Said to be a relic of the custom of sucking poison from wounds. St. MARTIN of Tours observed at the city gates of Paris a leper covered with sores; he went up to him and kissed the sores and the leper instantly became whole (Sulpicius Severus: Dialogues). There are many such stories.

Who ran to help me when I fell,
And would some pretty story tell,
Or kiss the place to make it well.

ANN TAYLOR: My Mother.

Kiss of Life. The name applied to the mouth-to-mouth method of artificial respiration. SLEEPING BEAUTY was awakened from her death-like sleep by the Prince's kiss.

Kissing the Pope's toe. Matthew of Westminster (15th century) says it was customary formerly to kiss the hand of his Holiness; but that a certain woman in the 8th century not only kissed the POPE's hand but "squeezed it". Seeing the danger to which he was exposed, the Pope cut off his hand, and was compelled in future to offer his foot. In reality the Pope's foot (i.e. the cross embroidered on his right shoe) may be kissed by the visitor; BISHOPS kiss the knee as well.

Kist of Whistles

This is an old sign of respect and does not imply servility. It is customary to bend the knee and kiss the ring of a CARDINAL, bishop, or abbot.

To kiss the book. To kiss the BIBLE, or the New Testament, after taking an oath; the kiss of confirmation or promise to act in accordance with the words of the oath and a public acknowledgment of its sanctity.

In the English courts, the Houses of PARLIAMENT, etc., non-Christians are permitted to affirm without kissing the book, as a result of the struggle waged by the atheist Charles Bradlaugh to take his seat in the HOUSE OF COMMONS. First elected in 1880 he was finally admitted to the House in 1886. Previously, in 1858, Baron Lionel de Rothschild, the first Jew to be admitted to Parliament, as a Jew, had been allowed to swear on the Old Testament. He had been elected as WHIG M.P. for the City of London in 1847. The position was legalized by the Oaths Act of 1888.

To kiss, or lick the dust. To be completely overwhelmed and humiliated; to be slain.

His enemies shall lick the dust.—Ps. lxxii, 9.

To kiss the gunner's daughter. See GUNNER.

To kiss hands. To kiss the hand of the sovereign either on accepting or retiring from office.

Kissing the hand of, or one's own hand to, an idol, etc., was a usual form of adoration. God said he had in Israel seven thousand persons who had not bowed unto Baal, "every mouth which hath not kissed him" (I Kings xix, 18).

To kiss the hare's foot. See under HARE.

To kiss the rod. See under ROD.

Kissing-comfit. The candied root of the Sea Holly (Eryngium maritimum) prepared as a lozenge, to perfume the breath.

Kissing-crust. The crust where the lower lump of a cottage loaf kisses the upper. In French, baisure de pain.

Kist of Whistles. A church-organ (Scots). Kist is the same word as cist (a chest).

Kit-Cat Club. A club formed about 1700 by the aristocratic WHIGS of the day who dined in the house of Christopher Cat, a pastrycook of Shire Lane. His famous mutton pies, called kit-kats, always formed part of their repasts. Among the distinguished noblemen and gentlemen were Steele, Addison, Congreve, Garth, Vanbrugh, Manwaring, Stepney, Walpole, Pulteney and the Duke of Somerset.

Jacob Tonson, the publisher, was the secretary.

Sir Godfrey Kneller painted forty-two portraits (now in the National Portrait Gallery) of the club members for Tonson, in whose villa at Barn Elms the meetings were latterly held. The paintings were made three-quarter length (36 in. × 28 in.) in order to accommodate them to the size of the club-room. Hence a three-quarter-length portrait came to be called a kit-cat. The club ceased about 1720.

Kit's Coty House. A great CROMLECH, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. north-west of Maidstone on the Rochester road, consisting of a 12-foot-long block of sandstone resting on three standing blocks. The name may be British for "the tomb in the wood" (Wel. coed, a wood). It is near the ancient battlefield where Vortigern is supposed to have fought HENGIST AND HORSIA.

Kitchen. An old Scottish term for a cooked relish, as toasted cheese, eggs, sausages, bacon, etc.

Kitchen cabinet. An American term for an informal group of advisers used by a president and given more weight than the proper cabinet. The term was first used of such an unofficial group advising President Andrew Jackson in 1829.

Kitchen-middens. Prehistoric mounds (referred to the NEOLITHIC AGE) composed of sea-shells, bones, kitchen refuse, stone implements, and other relics of ancient man. They were first noticed on the coast of Denmark, but have since been found in the British Isles, North America, etc.

Kite. In lawyer's slang, a junior counsel who is allotted at an assize court to advocate the cause of a prisoner who is without other defence.

In R.A.F. slang, any aircraft.

In Stock Exchange slang, an accommodation bill.

Go fly a kite. The American equivalent to "buzz off".

To fly a kite. In commercial slang, to raise money by means of accommodation bills, etc. The phrase is more commonly used nowadays to denote an experiment to test public opinion.

Kith and Kin (O.E. cyth, relationship; cynn, kind, family). One's own people and kindred; friends and relations.

Kiwanis. An organization founded in the U.S.A. in 1915 aiming to improve business ethics and provide leadership for raising the level of business and professional ideals. There are many Kiwanis clubs in the U.S.A. and Canada.

Kiwi. A New Zealand bird incapable of flight. In flying circles the word is applied to a man of the ground staff of an aerodrome. It also denotes a New Zealander.

Klephts, or Klepts (Gr., robbers). The name given to those Greeks who maintained their independence in the mountains after the Turkish conquest in the 15th century. After the War of Independence (1821-1828) they relapsed into brigandage.

Klondike. A river and district of the Yukon, Canada. The rich gold-bearing gravel found at Bonanza Creek in 1896 resulted in a wild rush of prospectors. GOLD production reached its peak in 1900.

Knave (O.E. cnafa; Ger. Knabe). Originally a boy or male child, then a male servant, or one in low condition, and subsequently a dishonourable rascal.

The tyme is come, a knave-child she ber;
Mauricius at the font-stoon they him calle.

CHAUCER: Man of Lawe's Tale, 722.

Three misbegotten knaves in Kendal green came at my back.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, II, iv.

In cards the knave (or jack), the lowest court card of each suit, is the common soldier or servant of the royalties.

He lived like a knave and died like a fool. Said by Warburton of Henry Rich, first Earl of Holland (1590-1649), the TURNCOAT. He went to the scaffold dressed in white satin, trimmed with silver.

Knave of hearts. A flirt.

Knee. Housemaid's knee. Inflammation and swelling of the knee-cap. Housemaids of former times were prone to this disability from constant kneeling while scrubbing floors.

Knee tribute. Adoration or reverence by bending the knee; an act of homage. Cp. LIP-SERVICE.

Coming to receive from us
Knee-tribute yet unpaid, prostration vile.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, V, 781-2.

Weak-kneed. Irresolute, infirm of purpose or conviction, as a weak-kneed Christian, a LAODICEAN, neither hot nor cold.

Knickerbockers, or knickers. Loose-fitting breeches, gathered in below the knees, once worn by boys, cyclists, sportsmen, etc., and by women as an undergarment. So named from George Cruickshank's illustrations of Knickerbocker's History of New York (1809) by Washington Irving, where the Dutch worthies wore such knee-breeches. The name probably signified a baker of knickers, i.e. clay marbles. Cp. BLOOMERS.

Knife. The emblem of St. AGATHA, St. Albert, and St. Christina.

The flaying knife is the emblem of St. BARTHOLOMEW, because he was flayed.

He is a capital knife-and-fork. He has a good appetite.

To live on a knife's edge. Metaphorically, to occupy such a precarious position that the slightest false move may result in disaster.

His [Mr. Wilson's] tactical appreciation of the problems of living on a knife-edge through the next few months in Parliament could not be cooler.

The Times (24 May 1965).

War to the knife. Deadly strife.

Knifeboard. The long, back-to-back seats that used to run longitudinally along the top of the old horse omnibuses. In the 1890s transverse "garden seats" gradually took their place. The allusion is to the old board used for cleaning steel table-knives.

Knight (O.E. cniht). Originally a boy or servant, the word came to denote a man of gentle birth who, after serving at court or in the retinue of some lord as a page and ESQUIRE, was admitted with appropriate ceremonies to an honourable degree of military rank and given the right to bear arms. See BACHELOR; BANNERET; BARONET.

Since the disappearance of KNIGHT-SERVICE, knights, as men of standing in England, continued to give service as KNIGHTS OF THE SHIRE, SHERIFFS, etc. Titles have long been bestowed on administrative officials, professional men, politicians, scholars, artists, etc., as well as those serving in the armed forces, and trade union officials and professional sportsmen have joined the throng in the present century.

There are nine existing British Orders of Knighthood, the oldest being that of the GARTER, which takes precedence. The others are (in order of precedence): the THISTLE (1687); St. PATRICK (1788); the BATH (1399, but revived in 1715 and subsequently reorganized); the STAR OF INDIA (1861); St. MICHAEL AND St. GEORGE (1818); the Indian Empire (1877); the Royal Victorian Order (1896); the British Empire (1917-1918).

The modern Knights Bachelor do not constitute an order and rank lowest in precedence. The wife of a Knight is designated "Dame", or more usually "Lady".

The word knight is used jocularly to denote a member of some trade, calling, etc. Thus we have Knight of the blade, a roystering bully; Knight of the cleaver, a butcher; Knight of the cue, a billiard player; Knight of the needle, a tailor; Knight of the pestle, a druggist; Knight of the road, a footpad or highwayman; Knight of the spigot, a tapster; Knight of the wheel, a cyclist; etc., etc.

Carpet-knight. See under CARPET.

Cross-legged Knights. See CROSS-LEGGED.

Knight Bachelor. See KNIGHT above; BACHELOR.

Knight Banneret. See BANNERET.

Knight Baronet. The original title of a BARONET.

Knights of Columbus. A Roman Catholic fraternal and philanthropic society in the U.S.A., founded in 1882 with the aim of uniting laymen of that Church in corporate religious and civic usefulness.

Knight errant. A mediæval knight, especially a hero of those long romances satirized by Cervantes in Don QUIXOTE, who wandered about the world in quest of adventure and in search of opportunities of rescuing damsels in distress and performing other chivalrous deeds.

Knights Hospitallers. See HOSPITAL-CLERS.

Knight Marshal. See MARSHALSEA.

Knights of the Golden Circle. In the U.S.A. a COPPERHEAD secret society in the Middle West which opposed the war policy of the Republicans and sought to end the CIVIL WAR.

Knight of Grace. A member of the lower order of the Knights of MALTA.

Knight of Industry. Slang for a sharper; one who lives on his wits.

Knights of Labor. An organization of working men (at first secret), founded at Philadelphia in 1869, which subsequently played an important part in the early development of the AMERICAN TRADE UNION movement. It secured the recognition of LABOR DAY (see under LABOUR) and sought to organize all workers, but it was eclipsed by the American Federation of Labor (founded 1886) and rapidly declined.

Knight of the post. A man who had stood in the pillory or had been flogged at the whipping-post was so called; hence one who haunted the purlieus of the courts, ready to give false witness, go bail for a debtor for pay, etc.

"A knight of the post," quoth he, "for so I am termed; a fellow that will swear you anything for twelve pence."

NASHE: Pierce Penilesse (1592).

Knights of the Round Table. See ROUND TABLE.

The Knight of the Rueful Countenance. DON QUIXOTE.

Knight of the Shire. The original name for the two men of the rank of knight who formerly represented a shire or county in PARLIAMENT. The boroughs were represented by burgesses.

Knight of the square flag. A knight BANNERET in allusion to cutting off the points of his pennon when he was raised to this rank on the battlefield.

The Knight of the Swan. LOHENGRIN.

Knights Templar. See TEMPLARS.

Knights of the White Camelia. See KU KLUX KLAN.

Knights of Windsor. Originally a small order of knights founded by Edward III in 1349 as the "Poor Knights of the Order of the Garter". It was first formed of 26 veterans, but since the time of Charles I the numbers have been fixed at 13 for the Royal Foundation and 5 for the Lower (since abolished) with a Governor. The members are meritorious military officers who are granted apartments in Windsor Castle with small pensions. They have to be in residence for nine months of the year, attend St. George's Chapel on saints' days, and occasionally act as guards of honour. Every Knight of the GARTER on appointment has to give a sum of money for distribution among them. Their present uniform was designed by William IV, who made their title "Military Knights of Windsor".

Knight Service. The tenure of land in feudal times, on the condition of rendering military service to the Crown for 40 days, etc. By the reign of Edward III knights were paid for their military service.

Knight's fee (Lat. feodum). The amount of land for which, under the FEUDAL SYSTEM, the services of a knight were due to the Crown. It was probably determined by valuation rather than area, in any case the number of HIDES in a Knight's Fee varied.

Knightenguild. The guild of thirteen "cnihts" (probably youthful scions of noble houses attached to the court) to which King Edgar, or, according to other accounts, Canute, gave that portion of the City of London now called PORTSOKEWARD on the following conditions: (1) Each knight was to be victorious in three combats—one on the earth, and one under, and one in the water; and (2) each was, on a given day, to run with spears against all comers in East Smithfield. WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR confirmed the same unto the heirs of these knights, whose descendants, in 1125, gave all the property and their rights to the newly founded Priory of the Holy Trinity.

Knipperdollings. ANABAPTIST followers of Bernard Knipperdolling (c. 1490-1536), who was one of the leaders of the Munster theocracy (1532-1535). After the city was taken by the Bishop and his supporters, Knipperdolling was tortured to death with red-hot pincers.

Knobstick. A knobstick wedding. The name given to an 18th-century practice whereby the churchwardens of a parish used their authority virtually to enforce the marriage of a pregnant woman, which they attended officially. The term "knobstick" was in allusion to the churchwardens' staff, his symbol of office.

Knock, To. In slang, to create a great impression, to be irresistible; as in Albert Chevalier's song "Knocked 'em in the Old Kent Road" (1892), i.e. astonished the inhabitants, filled them with admiration. See ALBERT THE GREAT.

To be knocked into a cocked hat, or into the middle of next week. To be thoroughly beaten. See under COCK.

To get a knock, or a nasty knock. To receive a blow, literally or figuratively, that finishes one off.

To knock about, or around. To wander about the town "seeing life" and enjoying oneself; to be in the vicinity or in the neighbourhood.

To knock the bottom, or the stuffing out of anything. To confound, bring to naught; especially to show that some argument or theory is invalid and "won't hold water". (See under WATER.)

To knock down. To dispose of an article to the highest bidder at an auction when a sale is indicated by a knock of the auctioneer's gavel.

To knock for six. To completely demolish an argument or to completely defeat an opponent figuratively or literally. In CRICKET the ball is "knocked for six" when the batsman, by hitting it over the boundary of the cricket field, scores six runs, and shows, in that instance, an easy mastery of the bowling.

To knock off. To cease work; to purloin.

To knock out of the box. In baseball, to score so highly against a pitcher that he is replaced by another in the box. Figuratively, to achieve an easy and decisive victory over an opponent.

To knock out of time. To settle one's HASH, to double him up. A phrase from pugilism referring to disabling an opponent so that he is unable to resume when the referee calls, "Time".

To knock spots off someone, or something. To beat him soundly, to get the better of it. The allusion is probably to pistol-shooting at a playing-card, when a good shot will knock out the pips or spots.

To knock under. Virtually the same as to KNUCKLE UNDER.

You could have knocked me down with a feather. I was overcome with surprise.

A knock-about turn. A MUSIC HALL term for a noisy boisterous act usually involving horseplay and SLAPSTICK.

Knock-kneed. With the knees turned inwards so that they virtually knock or rub together in walking.

Knock-out. A disabling blow, especially in boxing, on the point of the chin, or under the ear, etc., which puts the receiver to sleep, thus finishing the fight. Hence a complete surprise is "a fair knock-out".

In the auction room a knock-out is a sale at which a ring of dealers combine to keep prices artificially low to obtain the goods for subsequent profit divided among themselves.

Knockers. GOBLINS or KOBOLDS who dwell in mines and indicate rich veins of ore by their presence. In Cardiganshire and elsewhere miners attributed the strange noises so frequently heard in mines to these spirits.

Knot (Lat. nodus, Fr. nœud, Dan. Knude, Dut. knot, O.E. cnotta, allied to knit).

Gordian knot. See GORDIAN.

Knots of May. See HERE WE GO GATHERING NUTS IN MAY under NUT.

True lovers' knot. Sir Thomas Browne thinks the knot owes its origin to the nodus Herculanus, a snaky complication in the CADUCEUS or rod of MERCURY, in which form the woollen girdle of the Greek brides was fastened (Pseudodoxia Epidemica, V, xxii). This interlacing knot is a symbol of interwoven affection.

He has tied a knot with his tongue he cannot untie with his teeth. He has got married. He has tied the marriage knot by saying "I take thee to my wedded wife", etc., but it is not to be untied so easily.

She was making 15 knots. The vessel was travelling 15 nautical miles per hour. The nautical MILE varies in different latitudes owing to the irregular shape of the earth but in practice it is 6,080 ft., its value in latitude 48°. The knot, as a speed, is from the knots tied on the LOG line formerly used in conjunction with the sand glass, the speed being the number of such knots run out during the sand glass interval.

Know Nothings

To seek for a knot in a rush. Seeking for something that does not exist.

Knotgrass. This plant, Polygonum aviculare, was formerly supposed, if taken in an infusion, to stop growth.

Get you gone, you dwarf;
You minimus of hindering knotgrass made.

SHAKESPEARE:

Midsommer Night's Dream, III, ii.

Know Nothings. An anti-Catholic, anti-immigrant movement which developed in the U.S.A. after 1852 but which faded out after 1856. Properly known as the Native American party, their nickname came from their stock reply to any awkward question on what they stood for, i.e. "I know nothing."

Know Thyself. The admonition of the oracle of APOLLO at DELPHI; also attributed (Diogenes Laertius, I, xl) to Thales; also to SOLOON the Athenian lawgiver, SOCRATES, PYTHAGORAS, and others.

To know all the answers. To be well informed, resourceful, and intelligent. One who thinks he knows all the answers is one who conceitedly assumes a knowledge he does not really possess, a "clever dick".

Knuckle. To knuckle down to. To submit to.

To knuckle down to it. To work away at it; to get on with it.

To knuckle under. To acknowledge defeat, to give in, to submit; in allusion to the old custom of striking the under side of a table with the knuckles when defeated in an argument. Cp. TO KNOCK UNDER.

Knuckle-duster. A loop of heavy, shaped brass, gripped in the hand and fitting over the knuckles, used as an offensive weapon. Its origin goes back to the days of Roman pugilism.

Knurr and Spell. An old English game resembling trap ball and played with a knurr or wooden ball which is released from a little brass cup at the end of a tongue of steel called a spell or spill. After the player has touched the spring the ball flies into the air and is struck with the bat.

Knut. See NUT.

Kobold. A house-spirit in German folklore; similar to our ROBIN GOODFELLOW and the Scots BROWNIE. Also a GNOME who works in mines and forests. Cp. KNOCKERS.

Kochlani (kok la' ni). Arabian horses of royal stock, of which the genealogies have been preserved for more than 2,000 years. It is said that they are the offspring of SOLOMON's stud.

Koh-i-Noor (kó i nôr) (Pers., mountain of light). A famous diamond, so called by Nadir Shah, and now kept in the TOWER OF LONDON. Its early history is uncertain, but when Aurangzeb (d. 1707), MOGUL Emperor of India, possessed the stone it was used for the eye of a peacock in his famous peacock throne at Delhi. In 1739 it was acquired by Nadir Shah of Persia and later passed to Afghanistan, but when Shah Shuja was deposed he gave it to Ranjit Singh of the Punjab for promised assistance towards his recovery of the Afghan throne. Ten years after Ranjit's death (1839) the Punjab was annexed to the British Crown and in 1849, by stipulation, it was presented to Queen Victoria. At this time it weighed 186 $\frac{1}{16}$ carats, but was subsequently cut down to 106 $\frac{1}{16}$ carats. There is a tradition that it always brings ill luck to its possessor.

Kon-Tiki Expedition. The unique voyage made by the Norwegian Thor Heyerdahl with five companions in 1947, who sailed a balsa raft from Callao in Peru to Tuamotu Island in the South Pacific. Their object was to support the theory that the Polynesian race reached the Pacific islands in this fashion and were descendants of the Incas of Peru. Their raft was called Kon-Tiki after the INCA sun-god.

Koppa. An ancient Greek letter, disused as a letter in classical Greek, but retained as the sign for the numeral 90.

Koran, or Al Koran (Arab. Qu'ran, recitation). The sacred book of the Mohammedans, containing the religious teaching of the prophet with instructions on morality and Islamic institutions. The Koran, which contains 114 chapters or Suras, is said to have been communicated to the prophet at MECCA and MEDINA by an angel, to the sound of bells. It is written in Arabic and was compiled from MOHAMMED's own lips. The present text is of the 7th century, the chapters being arranged, except the first, in descending order of length.

Kosher (kó' sher). A Hebrew word denoting that which is "right", "fit" or "proper". It is applied usually to food—especially meat which has been slaughtered and prepared in the prescribed manner. Food must not be obtained from the animals, birds, and fish prohibited in Lev. xi and Deut. xiv and animals must be killed by cutting the windpipe.

Kraken. A fabulous sea-monster supposed to have been seen off the coast of Norway and probably founded on an observation of a gigantic cuttle-fish. It was first described by Pontoppidan in his History of Norway (1752). It was supposed to be capable of dragging down the largest ships and when submerging could suck down a vessel by the whirlpool it created. Cp. LOCH NESS MONSTER.

Kralitz Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Kratim. The dog of the SEVEN SLEEPERS, more correctly called Katmir or Ketmir, which according to MOHAMMED sleeps with them and is one of the ten animals to be admitted into his PARADISE.

Kremlin (Russ. kremi, a citadel). The Moscow Kremlin is on a scale of its own, comprising buildings of many architectural styles (Arabesque, Gothic, Greek, Italian, Chinese, etc.) enclosed by battlemented and many-towered walls 1½ miles in circuit. The Tsars and the PATRIARCH lived in the Kremlin until Peter the Great's reign when the court moved to St. Petersburg (Leningrad). Much of it was damaged in the revolution of 1917 but considerable repairs have been made. Its bells now ring out the INTERNATIONAL at 12 o'clock daily. The Imperial Palace was built in 1849.

As the seat of government of the U.S.S.R. the word is used symbolically of that government, just as the VATICAN is for the Papacy.

Kreutzer, or Kreuzer. An old German copper or silver coin marked with a cross (Ger. Kreuz, cross). There is a modern Austrian copper coin of this name.

Kriegspiel. See WAR GAME.

Kriemhild (krēm' hild). The legendary heroine of the NIBELUNGENLIED, a woman of unrivalled beauty, daughter of King Dankrat and sister of GUNTHER, Gernot, and Giselher. She first married SIEGFRIED and next Etzel (Attila), King of the Huns.

Krishna (the black one). A popular Hindu deity and an avatar of VISHNU. One myth says he was the son of Vasudeva and Devaki and was born at Mathura between Delhi and Agra. His uncle King Kamsa, who had been warned that one of his nephews would kill him, murdered Devaki's children on birth; accordingly

Krishna was smuggled away and brought up among cow-herds and lived to kill his uncle. He was the APOLLO of India and the idol of women. He features in the MAHABHARATA, the BHAGAVAD-GITA and the Bhagavata-Purana. Another story is that Vishnu plucked out two of his own hairs, one white and one black, and the black one became Krishna.

Kronos, or Cronos. One of the TITANS of Greek mythology, son of URANUS and GE, father (by RHEA) of Hestia, DEMETER, HERA, HADES, POSEIDON, and ZEUS. He dethroned his father as ruler of the world, and was in turn dethroned by his son Zeus. By the Romans he was identified with SATURN.

Kruger Telegram. The famous congratulatory message sent by Kaiser William II to President Kruger (3 January 1896) after the defeat of the JAMESON RAID. It embittered Anglo-German relations and encouraged Kruger in his policies.

Ku Klux Klan. An American secret society founded at Pulaski, Tennessee, in 1866 at the close of the CIVIL WAR as a social club with a fanciful ritual and hooded white robes. The name is a corruption of the Gr. kuklos, a circle. It soon developed into a society to overawe the newly emancipated Negroes, and similar societies such as the Knights of the White Camelia, the White League, the Pale Faces and the Invisible Circle sprang up in 1867-1868. Its terroristic activities led to laws against it in 1870 and 1871. Although it had been disbanded by the Grand Wizard in 1869 local activities continued for some time.

In 1915 a new organization, The Invisible Empire, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, was founded by the Rev. William Simmonds, preacher, near Atlanta, Georgia. He adopted much of the ritual of the original, adding further puerile ceremonies, titles, nomenclature, etc., of his own. Klansmen held Klonvocations and their local dens were ruled by an Exalted Cyclops, a Klalfif, etc., etc. As well as anti-Negro it was anti-Catholic, anti-Jewish, and xenophobic. Advocating Protestant supremacy for the native-born whites, it grew rapidly from 1920 and gained considerable political control in the Southern States by unsavoury methods. By 1930 it had shrunk again to small proportions but a revival began before World War II and the Klan became noted for its FASCIST sympathies. In 1944 it was again disbanded but continued locally and in 1965 a Congressional Committee was set up to investigate Klan activities.

Kufic. Ancient Arabic letters, so called from Kufa, on the Hindiya branch of the Euphrates and capital of the CALIPHS before the building of Baghdad. It was noted for its skilled copyists. The KORAN was originally written in Kufic.

Kufic coins. Early Mohammedan coins inscribed in Kufic, which was superseded by Nashki characters in the 13th century A.D. Their inscriptions carry much useful information for the historian.

Kultur (Ger., civilization). When used in English it implies civilization as conceived by the Germans. The English word "culture" is translated by Bildung.

Kulturkampf (Ger. Kampf, struggle). The Kulturkampf, or so-called struggle for civilization, was the name used for Chancellor Bismarck's struggle with the Roman Catholic hierarchy in the 1870s to assert the supreme authority of the State over the individual and the Church, at a time when the latter, under Pope Pius IX, was asserting CATHOLIC claims. The conflict began over the control of education and developed into a wider attack on the Church, but Bismarck eventually (1879) effected a reconciliation with the Catholic Centre Party in order to avoid control by the National Liberal Party.

Kuomintang (kwō min täng). The National People's Party, a Chinese political party formed by Sun Yat-sen in 1905 which, after his death in 1925, passed under the control of General Chiang Kai-shek. From 1927 to 1949 the Kuomintang was in power in China when it was driven out by the Communist Party under Mao Tse-tung. The Nationalists still maintain themselves in Formosa (Taiwan) under American protection.

Kurma. See AVATAR.

Kyle. The central district of Ayrshire.

Kyle for a man, Carrick for a coo [cow],
Cunningham for butter, Galloway for woo' [wool].

Kyle, a strong corn-growing soil; Carrick, a wild hilly portion, only fit for feeding cattle; Cunningham, a rich dairy land, and Galloway, long famous as pastoral country.

Kyrie Eleison (ki ri ā e li' son) (Gr., "Lord have mercy"). The short petition used in the liturgies of the Eastern and Western Churches, as a response at the beginning of the MASS and in the Anglican Communion Service. Also, the musical setting for this.

Kyrie Society, The (kērl). Founded 1877 for decorating the walls of hospitals, schoolrooms, mission-rooms, cottages, etc.; for the cultivation of small open spaces, window gardening, the love of flowers, etc.; and improving the artistic taste of the poorer classes. See MAN OF ROSS under ROSS.

L

L. The twelfth letter of the alphabet. In Phœnician and Hebrew it represents an ox-goad, lamedh, and in the Egyptian hieroglyphic a lioness.

L, for a pound sterling is the Lat. libra, a pound. In the Roman notation it stands for 50, and with a line drawn above the letter, for 50,000.

LL.D. Doctor of Laws—i.e. both civil and canon. The double L is the plural, as in MSS., the plural of MS., pp., pages, etc.

L.S. Lat. locus sigilli, that is, the place for the seal.

L.S.D. Lat. libra, a pound; solidus, a shilling; and denarius, a penny; introduced by the Lombard merchants, from whom we also have Cr., creditor; Dr., debtor, BANKRUPT, do. or DITTO, etc.

L.S.D. also stands for Dextro-lysergic acid diethylamide 25, a powerful drug inducing hallucinations, used by certain drug addicts of today. Those who take this drug are said to "take a trip" and to have PSYCHEDELIC EXPERIENCES.

La Belle Sauvage (la bel sō vazh'). The site on the north side of LUDGATE Hill occupied by the House of Cassell from 1852 until 11 May, 1941, when the whole area was demolished in an air raid. The name is a corruption of "Savage's Bell Inn" and the French form appears to have been first used by Addison in The Spectator (No. 82). There seems to have been an inn on the site from about the 14th century, originally called "The Bell on the Hope", the Hope or hoop being the garlanded ivy-bush (see IVY). From its position just outside LUDGATE its yard became a rendezvous for bear-baiting, play-acting, etc., and, from the 17th century until the mid-19th, it was a starting place for coach traffic. The inn licence was not renewed after 1857. The present COLOPHON of La Belle Sauvage is after a design by Walter Crane.

La Fontaine. Jean de la Fontaine (1621-1695) essentially depends for his fame on his Contes (1664-1671) and his Fables (1668-1693), the first six books of the latter being dedicated to the DAUPHIN.

The complete collection comprises twelve books.

Je chante les héros dont Ésope est le père;
Troupe de qui l'histoire, encore que mensongère,
Contient des vérités qui servent de leçons.
A Monseigneur le Dauphin.

La Mancha, The Knight of (la man'chá). Don QUIXOTE de la Mancha, the hero of Cervantes' romance Don Quixote. La Mancha was a province of Spain now the main part of Ciudad Real, an arid land with much heath and waste, and the most thinly populated part of Spain.

La-di-da. A yea-nay sort of fellow, with no backbone; an affected fop with a drawl in his voice. Also used adjectivally, as "in a la-di-da sort of way".

The phrase was popularized by a song sung by the once famous Arthur Lloyd, the refrain of which was:

La-di-da, la-di-do, I'm the pet of all the ladies,
The darlings like to flirt with Captain La-di-da-di-do.

Labarum. The standard of the later Roman emperors. It consisted of a gilded spear, with an eagle on the top, while from a cross-staff hung a splendid purple streamer, with a gold fringe, adorned with precious stones. See also CONSTANTINE'S CROSS under CROSS.

Labour. Independent Labour Party. A small socialist party formed by Keir Hardie in 1893 to establish independent labour candidates in PARLIAMENT. It played a prominent part in the early days of the LABOUR PARTY and continued to advocate more radical policies. In 1923 it had 46 members in the Commons. When James Maxton, then its Leader, died in 1946, it petered out as a parliamentary party. See CLYDESIDERS.

Labor Day. A legal holiday in the U.S.A. and some provinces of Canada, held on the first Monday in September (see KNIGHTS OF LABOR). Labour rallies in Great Britain and elsewhere are held on MAY DAY.

Labour Party. One of the major political parties of Great Britain and aiming to promote socialism; so called from 1906 but first formed as the Labour Representation Committee in 1900 from such elements as the INDEPENDENT LABOUR PARTY (see above), the TRADE UNIONS, and the FABIAN SOCIETY (see under FABIVS). The first Labour Government was that of Ramsay MacDonald in 1924, the second lasted from 1929 to 1931, when the party split over the cuts in unemployment benefit (see NATIONAL GOVERNMENT). It was not returned to power again until 1945 and was replaced by the CONSERVATIVES in October 1951. It was again in office in 1964.

A labour of love. See under LOVE.

The labourer is worthy of his hire (Luke x, 7). In Latin: Digna canis pabulo. "The dog must be bad indeed that is not worth a bone." Hence the Mosaic law, "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn."

The Statute of Labourers. An attempt made in 1351 to fix the rate of wages consequent upon the demand for labour after the BLACK DEATH. It attempted to hold them at their pre-plague levels. The ensuing discontent helped to bring about the PEASANTS' REVOLT.

Labyrinth (lăb'í rinth). A Greek word of unknown (but probably Egyptian) origin, denoting a structure with complicated passages through which it is baffling to find one's way. The maze at Hampton Court, formed of high hedges, is a labyrinth on a small scale. The chief labyrinths of antiquity were:

(1) The Egyptian, by Petesuchis or Tithoes, near the Lake Meris. It had 3,000 apartments, half of which were underground (1800 B.C.).—Pliny, xxxvi, 13; and Pomponius Mela, I, ix.

(2) The Cretan, by DÆDALUS, for imprisoning the MINOTAUR. The only means of finding a way out was by help of a skein of thread. (See Virgil: Aeneid, V.)

(3) The Cretan conduit, which had 1,000 branches or turnings.

(4) The Lemnian, by the architects Smillis, Rhodus, and Theodorus. It had 150 columns, so nicely adjusted that a child could turn them. Vestiges of this labyrinth were still in existence in the time of Pliny.

(5) The labyrinth of Clusium, made by Lars Porsena, King of Etruria, for his tomb.

(6) The Samian, by Theodorus (540 B.C.). Referred to by Pliny; by Herodotus, II, 145; by Strabo, X; and by Diodorus Siculus, I.

(7) The labyrinth at Woodstock, built by Henry II to protect Fair ROSAMOND.

Lace. I'll lace your jacket for you, beat you, flog you severely. Perhaps a play on the word lash.

Laced mutton. See MUTTON.

Tea, or coffee laced with spirits. Tea or coffee fortified with brandy or whisky.

Deacon Bearcliff . . . had his pipe and his tea-cup, the latter being laced with a little spirits.

SCOTT: Guy Mannering, ch. xi.

Lacedæmonians. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Lacedæmonian Letter. The Greek ι (iota), the smallest of the letters. See JOT.

Laches (lăch' iz). A legal term for negligence and delay in enforcing a right, from the O.Fr. laschesse, negligence.

Lachesis (lăk' e sis). The Fate who spins life's thread and determines its length. See FATES.

Lack-learning, or Unlearned Parliament. The PARLIAMENT held at Coventry (October 1404) by Henry IV; so called because SHERIFFS were directed not to return any lawyers as members, in the hope that it would be more tractable.

Laconic. Pertaining to Laconia or Sparta; hence very concise and pithy, for the Spartans were noted for their brusque and aphoristic speech. When Philip of Macedon wrote to the SPARTAN magistrates, "If I enter Laconia, I will level Lacedæmon to the ground," the ephors sent back the single word, "If." CÆSAR's words "VENI, VIDI, VICI" and Sir Charles Napier's apocryphal "PECCAVI" are well-known laconicisms.

Ladon. The name of the DRAGON which guarded the apples of the HESPERIDES, also one of the dogs of ACTÆON.

Ladrones (la' drōnz) (Thieves' Islands). The name given to the Marianas by Magellan's sailors in 1521, owing to the thievish habits of the natives.

Lady. Literally "the bread-maker", from O.E. hlæfdige (hlaf, loaf; and supposed noun dige, to knead). The original meaning was simply the female head of the family, the house-wife. Cp. LORD. See COURTESY TITLES, COUSIN.

Dark Lady of the Sonnets. The woman about whom SHAKESPEARE wrote the sonnets numbered cxxvii-clii. Among the candidates favoured by the critics for this claim to fame are Mary Fitton, Penelope Rich and Mrs. Davenant, wife of an Oxford innkeeper. Dr. Leslie Hotson arrives at Black Lucy or Luce, alias Lucy Negro, née Morgan, married to one Parker; she was a former gentlewoman to Queen Elizabeth I and had become a notorious bawd and brothel keeper at CLERKENWELL.

A lady of easy virtue. A lady of the town, an unchaste woman.

Naked Lady. See NAKED BOY.

Ladybird, Ladyfly, or Ladycow. The small red coleopterous insect with black spots, Coccinella septempunctata, called also Ladybug and BISHOP BARNABEE, and in Yorkshire, the Cushcow Lady. The name means bird or beetle of Our Lady because of the wonderful service it performs by feeding exclusively on greenfly, one of the worst plant pests.

Lady Bountiful. The original character comes from Farquhar's Beaux' Stratagem (1706), and about a century later the term acquired the generic application of a village benefactress now in use.

Lady Chapel. See under CHAPEL.

Lady Day. 25 March, to commemorate the ANNUNCIATION of Our Lady, the Virgin Mary; formerly called "St. Mary's Day in Lent", to distinguish it from other festivals in honour of the Virgin which were also, properly speaking, "Lady Days". Until 1752, Lady Day was the legal beginning of the year and dates between 1 January and that day are shown with the two years, e.g. 29 January 1648/9, on present reckoning 29 January 1649. See GREGORIAN YEAR.

The Lady of England and Normandy. The Empress Maud, or Matilda (1102-1167), daughter of Henry I of England and wife of the Emperor Henry V of Germany, who died in 1125. She then married Geoffrey of Anjou and long contested Stephen's possession of the crown on the death of her father. She was acknowledged as "Lady of England and Normandy" by a council at Winchester in 1141, but finally withdrew to Normandy in 1145. Her son by Geoffrey of Anjou became king, as Henry II, in 1154.

Charlotte M. Tucker (1823-1893), a writer for children, used the signature "A.L.O.E.", meaning "A Lady of England".

The Lady of the Lake. In Arthurian legend, Vivien, the mistress of MERLIN. She lived in the midst of a lake surrounded by knights and damsels. See LANCELOT OF THE LAKE.

In Scott's poem of this name (1810), the lady is Ellen Douglas, who lived with her father near Loch Katrine.

The Lady of the Lamp. A name given to Florence Nightingale (1820-1910), from her nightly rounds of the hospital wards at Scutari during the Crimean War, carrying a lighted lamp.

Our Lady of Mercy. A Spanish order of knighthood instituted in 1218 by James I of Aragon, for the deliverance of Christian captives among the Moors.

The Lady of Shalott. See SHALOTT.

Our Lady of the Snows. A fanciful name given by Kipling in The Five Nations (1903) to Canada. Wordsworth has a poem Our Lady of the Snow (1820).

Lady's Mantle. See ALCHEMILLA.

Lady's Smock. A common name for the Cuckoo-Flower or Bittercress (Cardamine pratensis), so called because the flowers are supposed to resemble linen exposed to bleach on the grass. There are many other such names of plants, e.g.: Lady's bedstraw, Lady's cushion, Lady's delight, Lady's glove, Lady's gown, Lady's hair, Lady's tresses, etc., etc.

The Ladies' Mile. A stretch of the road on the north side of the Serpentine, Hyde Park, much favoured in Victorian days by "equestriennes". The Coaching and Four-in-Hand Clubs held their meets there in spring.

Lady's Man. One who is fond of the company of women and very attentive to them; usually without the more amorous implications of LADY-KILLER.

Lady-Killer. A male flirt; a great favourite with the ladies, or one who devotes himself to their conquest.

Læstrygones. See LESTRIGONS.

Lætare Sunday (Lat., rejoice). The fourth Sunday in LENT, so called from the first word of the Introit, which is from Is. lvi, 10: "Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that love her."

It is also known as MOTHERING SUNDAY.

Lagado. In Swift's Gulliver's Travels, the capital of Balnibarbi, celebrated for its grand academy of projectors, where the scholars spend their time in such projects as making pincushions from softened rocks, extracting sunbeams from cucumbers, and converting ice into gunpowder.

Lagan, or Ligan. See FLOTSAM AND JET-SAM.

Laid. Laid paper. Paper having a ribbed appearance due to manufacture on a mould or by a DANDY on which the wires are laid side by side, instead of being woven transversely.

Lais (lā' is). The name of three celebrated Greek courtesans. One flourished in Corinth in the 5th century B.C. and was visited by Aristippus the philosopher, but the best known was the daughter of Timandra, the mistress of Alcibiades. She was born c. 420 B.C. and came to Corinth as a child. She was patronized by princes, philosophers, and plebeians alike. Her charges were sufficiently exorbitant to deter Demosthenes. Her later success in Thessaly so enraged the women that they pricked her to death with their bodkins. There was a third Lais, contemporary with ALEXANDER THE GREAT, who sat for Apelles.

Laissez faire (lā sâ fâr) (Fr., let alone). The principle of allowing things to look after themselves, especially the non-interference by government in economic affairs. The originator of the phrase may have been Legendre, a contemporary of Colbert, or possibly D'Argenson, a one-time minister of Louis XV. It became the accepted maxim of the French PHYSIOCRATS in the 18th century and as a reaction against Colbertism and MER-

CANTILISM. Adam Smith was its advocate in Britain, as the prophet of FREE TRADE. The principle was extended to politics by Jeremy Bentham, the leader of the individualist school and philosopher of UTILITARIANISM. Since the 1870s the doctrine has steadily been eroded by collectivist policies which ever increasingly limit the freedoms and activities of the individual in the name of public good. Laissez passer, laissez aller are similar phrases.

Lake. Lake District. The picturesque and mountainous district of Cumberland and Westmorland and part of Lancashire (Furness) which contains the principal English lakes, including Windermere, Grasmere, Derwentwater and Ullswater. Noted as the home of the Lake Poets, Lowell called it Wordsworthshire, and it has many literary associations.

Lake Poets. See LAKE SCHOOL.

Lake School. The name applied derisively by the Edinburgh Review to Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Southey, who lived in the LAKE DISTRICT and sought inspiration in nature, and to the writers who followed them. Charles Lamb, Charles Lloyd and Christopher North (John Wilson) are sometimes placed among the "Lake Poets" or "Lakers".

Lady of the Lake. See LADY.

Lancelot of the Lake. See LANCELOT.

Lakin. By'r lakin. An oath, meaning "By our Ladykin" or Little Lady, where little does not refer to size, but is equivalent to dear.

By'r lakin, a parlous fear.—SHAKESPEARE: A Midsummer Night's Dream, III, 1.

Laksmi, or Lakshmi. One of the consorts of VISHNU, and mother of Kama. She is the goddess of beauty, wealth and pleasure, and the RAMAYANA describes her as springing from the foam of the sea. Cp. APHRODITE.

Lamaism (Tibetan, blama, spiritual teacher, lord). A modified form of BUDDHISM, the religion of Tibet and Mongolia. The name is from the title given to monks in the higher ranks. The Grand Lama or Dalai Lama (the Sacred Lama) was the ruler of Tibet, although it came under Chinese control (1720) during the time of the 7th Dalai Lama. This control declined to nominal suzerainty, but the Chinese again invaded in 1950, and in 1959 the 14th Dalai Lama fled to India. There is another Grand Lama, the Tashi Lama or Panchen Lama, whose authority was confined to one province but who was supported by the Chinese as rival to the Dalai Lama. The priests are housed in lamaseries.

Lamb. In Christian art, the emblem of the Redeemer, in allusion to John i, 29, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world."

It is also the attribute of St. AGNES, St. CATHERINE, St. GENEVIÈVE, and St. Regina. JOHN THE BAPTIST either carries a lamb or is accompanied by one.

Paschal Lamb. See under PASCH.

Lamb-ale. The "ale" or merry-making given by the farmer when his lambing was over. Cp. CHURCH-ALE.

Lamb's wool. An old beverage consisting of the juice of apples roasted with ale, sugar, and nutmeg. Probably in allusion to its "softness".

The Vegetable, Tartarian, or Scythian Lamb. The woolly rootstalk of a fern (Cibotium barometz), found in Asia, and supposed in mediæval times to be a kind of hybrid animal and vegetable. The down is used in India for staunching wounds.

Lambert, Daniel (1770-1809). The most corpulent man on record. In 1793, at 23 years of age, he weighed 32 stone, and at his death no less than 52½ stone. From 1791 until 1805 he was keeper of Leicester Gaol, afterwards he came to London where he exhibited himself to "select company".

Lambert's Day, St. 17 September. St. Lambert, a native of Maestricht, lived in the 7th century. He supported the missionary work of St. Willibrord and was energetic in suppressing vice.

Be ready, as your lives shall answer it,
At Coventry, upon St. Lambert's day.
SHAKESPEARE: Richard II, I, i.

Lambeth. A LONDON borough on the south side of the THAMES, once part of Surrey. The name is commonly derived from lam, mud, and hyihe, haven. It includes the districts of VAUXHALL, Kennington, and Brixton.

Lambeth Palace. The London residence of the archbishops of Canterbury since the 12th century. The oldest part is the chapel built by Archbishop Boniface in 1245 and the buildings have been steadily added to and modified through the centuries. Originally called Lambeth House, it came to be called Lambeth Palace about 1658 owing to the decay of the palace at Canterbury. It is the archbishop's principal residence, but he now has another palace at Canterbury. The library and chapel were badly damaged in an air raid in 1940.

Lambeth Degrees in divinity, arts, law, medicine, music, etc., are conferred by the Archbishop of Canterbury, who was empowered to do so by a statute of 1533.

Lambeth Walk, a thoroughfare in Lambeth leading from Black Prince Road to the Lambeth Road. It gave its name to an immensely popular "COCKNEY" dance featured by Lupino Lane (from 1937) in the musical show Me And My Gal at the Victoria Palace.

Lamia. Among the Greeks and Romans a female demon who devoured children and whose name was used to frighten them. She was a Libyan queen beloved by JUPITER, but, robbed of her offspring by the jealous JUNO, she became insane and vowed vengeance on all children, whom she delighted to entice and devour. The race of Lamiæ, in Africa, were said to have the head and breasts of a woman and the body of a serpent and they enticed strangers into their embraces to devour them.

Witches in the MIDDLE AGES were called Lamiæ, and Keats' poem Lamia (1820) relates the story of how a bride, when recognized by APOLLONIUS as a serpent or lamia, vanished in an instant. Keats took the substance of his poem from Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy (Pt. III, sect. ii, memb. i, subsect. i) whose source was Philostratus (De Vita Apollonii, Bk. IV). Cp. LILITH.

Lammas Day. 1 August, one of the regular QUARTER-DAYS in SCOTLAND and a half-quarter or cross-quarter-day in ENGLAND, the day on which, in Anglo-Saxon times, the FIRST-FRUITS were offered. So called from O.E. hlafmæsse, the loaf-mass. It is also the feast of ST. PETER ad Vincula.

At latter Lammas. Another way of saying "Never".

Lamourette's Kiss (la moo ret'). A French term (baiser Lamourette) to denote an insincere or ephemeral reconciliation. On 7 July 1792, the Abbé Lamourette induced the different factions of the Legislative Assembly to lay aside their differences and give the kiss of peace; but the reconciliation was unsound and very short-lived.

The Assembly dispersed in tears. And within the space of a few short hours they were all "tearing each other's eyes again".

LOUIS MADELIN: The French Revolution, ch. xix.

Lamp. The Lamp of Heaven. The MOON. MILTON calls the stars "lamps":

Why shouldst thou . . .
 In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
 That Nature hung in heaven, and filled their lamps
 With everlasting oil, to give due light
 To the misled and lonely traveller?
Comus, 196-200.

The Lady of the Lamp. See under LADY.

The Lamp of Phœbus. The sun. PHŒBUS is the mythological personification of the sun.

The Lamp of the Law. Irnerius, the Italian jurist, was so called. He was the first to lecture on the PANDECTS OF JUSTINIAN after their discovery at Amalfi in 1137.

It smells of the lamp. Said of a literary composition that bears manifest signs of midnight study; one that is over-laboured. In Lat., olet lucernam.

Lampadion. The received name of a lively, petulant courtesan, in the later Greek comedy.

Lampoon. A sarcastic or scurrilous personal satire, so called from Fr., lampons, let us drink, which formed part of the refrain of a 17th-century French drinking song. According to Scott:

These personal and scandalous libels, carried to excess in the reign of Charles II, acquired the name of lampoons from the burden sung to them: "Lampone, lampone, camarada lampone"—"Guzzler, guzzler, my fellow guzzler".

Lampos. One of the steeds of AURORA, also the name of one of the horses of DIOMEDES, and of HECTOR.

Lancasterian. Of or pertaining to Joseph Lancaster (1778-1838), the QUAKER educational reformer, who claimed to have invented the MONITORIAL SYSTEM. His supporters founded the Royal Lancasterian Society in 1808, which later became The British and Foreign School Society. See MADRAS SYSTEM; VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS.

Lancastrian. An adherent of the Lancastrian line of kings, or one of those kings (Henry IV, V, VI), who were descendants of Edward III. See RED ROSE, WARS OF THE ROSES under ROSE; YORKIST.

Lance. An attribute in Christian art of St. MATTHEW and St. THOMAS, the apostles; also of St. Longinus, St. GEORGE, St. ADALBERT, St. BARBARA, St. MICHAEL, and others.

A free lance. One who acts on his own judgment and is not bound to party; a journalist, musician, writer, etc., who is not definitely attached to, or on the salaried staff of, any one organization. The reference is to the FREE COMPANIES of the MIDDLE AGES which were free to sell themselves to any cause or master.

Lance-corporal. The lowest grade of N.C.O. in the army; a lance-sergeant is a corporal performing (on probation) the duties of a sergeant.

Lance-knight. An old term for a foot-soldier; a corruption of Landsknecht, a German mercenary foot-soldier of the 16th century, the French equivalent being lansquenet.

Lancers. The dance so called, an amplified kind of QUADRILLE, was introduced by Laborde in Paris in 1836 and brought over to England in 1850.

Lancelot du Lac, or of the Lake. One of the Knights of the ROUND TABLE, son of King BAN of Brittany, and stolen in infancy by the LADY OF THE LAKE. She plunged with the baby into the lake (whence the cognomen du Lac), and when her protégé was grown to manhood, presented him to King ARTHUR. Sir Lancelot went in search of the GRAIL and twice caught sight of it. Though always represented in ARTHURIAN ROMANCE as the model of CHIVALRY, bravery, and fidelity, Sir Lancelot was the adulterous lover of Queen GUINEVERE, and it was through this liaison that war resulted which led to the disruption of the Round Table and the death of King Arthur.

Land. The Land of Beulah (Is. lxii, 4). In Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress it is that land of heavenly joy where the pilgrims tarry till they are summoned to enter the CELESTIAL CITY.

The Land of Cakes. See under CAKE.

Land of Enchantment. A name given to Mexico.

Land of Hope and Glory. Great Britain was so portrayed in the heyday of imperialism in Elgar's famous melody with words by A. C. Benson. Sung by Dame Clara Butt in 1902, and widely used at EMPIRE DAY celebrations and other occasions. The tune was taken from the first of the Pomp and Circumstance marches (1901). The words were originally used in Benson's Coronation Ode of 1902.

Land of Hope and Glory, Mother of the Free,
 How shall we extol thee, who are born of thee?
 Wider still and wider shall thy bounds be set;
 God, who made thee mighty, make thee mightier yet.

Land of Nod. This was the land to which Cain was exiled after he had slain Abel (Gen. iv, 16). Swift, in A Complete Collection of Genteel and Ingenious Conversation, said that he was "going into the land of Nod", meaning that he was going to sleep, which meaning it has retained ever since.

The Land o' the Leal. The land of the faithful or blessed; a Scotticism for a Happy Land or HEAVEN, as in Lady Nairn's song of this title:

I'm wearin' awa'
To the land o' the leal.

Land of the Midnight Sun. Norway. In the Arctic and Antarctic during summer the sun shines at midnight, a phenomenon observable from several lands within the high latitudes of the Arctic Circle. The name has been applied only to Norway where this phenomenon has been observed most by visitors.

Land of My Fathers. In particular, Wales, from the song Hen Wlad fy Nhadau, Land of My Fathers, which is the national anthem of Wales. The Welsh words are by Evan James and the tune by James James, first published in 1860.

The Land of Promise, or the Promised Land. Canaan, which God promised to give to Abraham for his obedience. See Ex. xii, 25, Deut. ix, 28, etc.

Land of the White Eagle. Poland. The White Eagle, with a crown on its head, formed part of the Polish coat-of-arms. An old legend tells us that Prince Lech, when out hunting, came to a great oak-tree, where he saw a pair of huge white eagles over their nest. The prince regarded this as a prophetic sign and decided to establish his capital there. He called it Gniezno (meaning "Nest-town"), saying, "Here shall be our nest."

Land League. An Irish association formed in 1879 under the leadership of Michael Davitt, with Parnell as president and two FENIANS as secretaries. It stimulated agrarian revolt and aimed to secure peasant proprietorship by forceful methods. It was declared illegal in 1881, but renewed as the National League in 1882.

Land Office business. The U.S. government land office of the 19th century was overburdened with work allotting land to a multitude of land-seekers. Hence the use of the phrase to mean a tremendous amount of business, a rush of business.

See how the land lies. See whether things are propitious or otherwise; see in what state the land is that we have to travel over.

Land-girl. Girls or women recruited for farm-work during the two World Wars. In World War II they were organized as a "Women's Land Army".

Land-grabber. One who grabs or seizes land rapaciously. Particularly used in late 19th-century Ireland of one who took over the land of an evicted tenant, in the 18th century usually called a land pirate.

Land-hunger. Desire to acquire land or to extend territory.

Land-loupers. Vagrants. Louper is from the Dut. looper, to run. Persons who abscond for crime or debt and rove the country. Louper, looper, loafer, and luffer are variants of the Ger. Laufer, a vagrant, a runner.

Land-lubber. An awkward or inept sailor is so called, a mere landsman. A lubber is a heavy, clumsy fellow, a looby.

Land-slide. Used metaphorically of a crushing defeat at the polls, or a complete reversal of votes or support.

Landau (län dö). A four-wheeled carriage, the top of which may be thrown back. Said to have been first made in the 18th century at Landau in Bavaria.

Landulette. An early type of motor-car with a similar top to a LANDAU.

Landscape. A country scene or a picture representing this. The word is from the Dut. scape, connected with our shape. The old word in English was land-skip.

Father of landscape gardening. André Lenôtre (1631-1700), who landscaped VERSAILLES.

Landsknecht. See LANCE-KNIGHT.

Landsturm (lant' shtoom). German forces of the militia type not used as first-line troops but usually employed on garrison duties or as labour forces, etc. Usually formed from those unfit for full military service or from the older age-groups.

Landtag (lant' tak). The legislative assembly of a German state.

Landwehr (lant' vār). In Germany, reserve forces used only in time of war.

Lane. 'Tis a long lane that has no turning. Every calamity has an ending, things will eventually improve.

Lang syne (Scot., long since). In the olden time, in days gone by.

Auld Lang Syne. This song, commonly sung at the conclusion of dances and revelries and usually attributed to Robert Burns, is really a new version by him of a very much older song. In Watson's Collection (1711), it is attributed to Francis Sempill (d. 1682), but is probably older. Burns says in a letter to Thomson "It is the old song of the olden times, which has never been in print. . . . I took it down from an old man's singing."

And in another letter, "Light be on the turf of the heaven-inspired poet who composed this glorious fragment."

Langtry, Lillie. See JERSEY LILY.

Language. Language was given to men to conceal their thoughts. See SPEECH. The three primitive languages. The Persians say that Arabic, Persian, and Turkish are three primitive languages. Legend has it that the serpent that seduced EVE spoke Arabic, the most suasive language in the world; that ADAM and Eve spoke Persian, the most poetic of all languages; and that the angel GABRIEL spoke Turkish, the most menacing.

Langue d'oc; langue d'oïl (lang dok; lang doil) (Fr. langue, tongue). The former is the old Provençal language, spoken south of the River Loire; the latter, Northern French, spoken in the MIDDLE AGES to the north of that river, the original of modern French. So called because our "yes" was in Provençal oc, and in the northern speech oil, which later became oui (from Lat. hoc illud).

Lansbury's Lido. See LIDO.

Lansquenet. See LANCE-KNIGHT.

Lantern. In Christian art, the attribute of St. GUDULE and St. Hugh.

À la lanterne! (Fr., to the lamp-post). Hang him from the lamp-post! A cry and practice at Paris during the French Revolution. Many of the street lamp brackets were suitable for this purpose.

The Feast of Lanterns. A popular Chinese festival, celebrated annually at the first full moon. Tradition says that the daughter of a famous mandarin one evening fell into a lake. Her father and his neighbour took lanterns to look for her, and happily she was rescued. A festival was ordained to commemorate the rescue, which in time developed into the "Feast of Lanterns".

Lantern jaws. Cheeks so thin and hollow that one may almost see daylight through them, as light shone through the horn of the lantern.

Lantern Land. The land of literary charlatans, pedantic graduates in arts, doctors, professors, prelates, etc., ridiculed as "Lanterns" by Rabelais (with a side allusion to the divines assembled in conference at the Council of Trent) in his Pantagruel, v, 33. Cp. CITY OF LANTERNS.

Laocoön. A son of PRIAM and priest of APOLLO, famous for the tragic fate of himself and his two sons, who were squeezed to death by serpents while he was sacrificing to POSEIDON. Their death was said to be in consequence of his having offended Apollo, or for having sought to prevent the entry of the WOODEN HORSE into TROY. The group representing these three in their death agony, now in the VATICAN, was discovered in 1506 at ROME. It is a single block of marble, and is attributed to Agesandrus, Athenodorus, and Polydorus of the School of Rhodes in the 2nd century B.C.

Lessing called his treatise on the limits of poetry and the plastic arts (1766) Laocoön, because he uses the famous group as the peg on which to hang his dissertation.

Since I have, as it were, set out from the Laocoön, and several times return to it, I have wished to give it a share also in the title.—Preface.

Laodamia. The wife of Protesilaus, who was slain before TROY by HECTOR. According to one account, she begged to be allowed to converse with her dead husband for only three hours, and her request was granted; she afterwards voluntarily accompanied the dead hero to the shades. Wordsworth has a poem on the subject (1814).

Laodicean. One indifferent to religion, caring little or nothing about the matter, like the Christians of that church mentioned in the Book of Revelation (iii, 14-18).

Lao-tse. See TAOISM.

Lap. In the lap of the gods. The unknown chances of the future, whatever may fall from the lap of the gods. The lap of fortune expresses the same idea.

To live in the lap of luxury is to have every material comfort and need supplied; "lap" here is a place for repose "in luxury".

Lapithæ. A people of Thessaly, noted in Greek legend for their defeat of the CENTAURS at the marriage-feast of HIPPODAMIA, when the latter were driven out of PELION. The contest was represented on the PARTHENON, the Theseum at ATHENS, the Temple of APOLLO at Bassæ, and on numberless vases.

Lapsus Linguae (Lat.). A slip of the tongue, a mistake in uttering a word, an imprudent word inadvertently spoken. Similar adoptions from Latin are lapsus calami, a slip of the pen; and lapsus memoriæ, a slip of the memory.

Laputa. The flying island inhabited by scientific quacks, and visited by Gulliver in his "travels". These dreamy philosophers were so absorbed in their speculations that they employed attendants called "flappers", to flap them on the mouth and ears with a blown bladder when their attention was to be called off from "high things" to vulgar mundane matters.

Lapwing. SHAKESPEARE refers to two peculiarities of this bird: (1) to allure persons from its nest, it flies away and cries loudest when farthest from its nest; and (2) the young birds fly from their shells with part thereof still sticking to their heads.

Far from her nest the lapwing cries away.
Comedy of Errors, IV, ii.

This lapwing runs away with the shell on his head.
Hamlet, V, ii.

The first peculiarity made the lapwing a symbol of insincerity, and the second that of a forward person, one who is scarcely hatched.

Lar. See LARES.

Larboard. See STARBOARD AND LARBOARD.

Larder. A place for keeping bacon (Lat. lardum), from O.Fr. lardier or lardoir, a storeroom for bacon. This shows that swine were the chief animals salted and preserved in olden times.

The Douglas Larder. See under DOUGLAS.

Robin Hood's Larder. See SOME FAMOUS OAKS under OAK.

Wallace's Larder. Similar to the DOUGLAS LARDER. It consisted of the dead bodies of the garrison of Ardrossan, in Ayrshire, cast into the dungeon keep. The castle was surprised by Wallace in the reign of Edward I.

Lares and Penates. Used as a collective expression for home, and for those personal belongings that make it homely and individual. In ancient ROME the lares (sing. lar) were the household gods, usually deified ancestors or heroes, and the lar familiaris was the spirit of the founder of the house which never left it. The penates were the gods of the store-room and guardian deities of the household and the state, whose duty was to protect and ward off dangers. Their images stood in a special shrine in each house and offerings were made to them of wine, incense, cakes and honey on special family occasions.

Large. A vulgarism for excess, as That's all very fine and large, that's a trifle steep, "coming it a bit thick", etc.; to talk large, to brag or swank in conversation, to talk big; a large order, an exaggerated claim or statement, a difficult undertaking.

By and large. See under BY.

Set at large. At liberty. It is a French phrase; prendre la large is to stand out to sea so as to be free to move.

To sail large. To stand before the wind with the wind free or on the quarter.

We continued running large before the north-east trade-winds for several days.

R. H. DANA: Two Years before the Mast, ch. iv.

Lark. A spree or frolic. The word is a modern adaptation (c. 1800) of the dialectical lake, sport, from M.E. laik, play, and O.E. lac, contest. Skylark, as in skylarking about, etc., is a more recent extension.

When the sky falls we shall catch larks. See under SKY.

Larrikin. An Australian term dating from the 19th century denoting a young ruffian or rowdy given to acts of hooliganism. They flourished particularly in the 1880s and were known by their own style of dress, recognizable by its excessive neatness and severe colours. Possibly derived from the name Larry or from an Irishman's pronunciation of "larking".

Larvæ. Among the ancient Romans, a name for malignant spirits and ghosts. The larva or ghost of Caligula was often seen (according to Suetonius) in his palace.

[Fear] sometimes representeth strange apparitions, as their fathers and grandfathers ghosts, risen out of their graves, and in their winding sheets; and to others it sometimes sheweth Larves, Hobgoblins, Robbin-good-fellowes, and such other Bug-beares and Chimeraes.

Florio's Montaigne, I, xvii.

Last. Last Day. The final day of the present dispensation when Christ is to return to earth for the last judgment; the day of judgment. Cp. BALANCE.

The Last Judgment. See JUDGMENT.

Last Light. See FIRST LIGHT.

The Last Man. Charles I was so called by the Parliamentarians, meaning that he would be the last king of Great Britain. His son, Charles II, was called The Son of the Last Man.

The Last Supper. The last meal Christ partook with his disciples on the night before the Crucifixion and the institution of the EUCHARIST.

Leonardo da Vinci's famous picture of this was painted on a wall of the refectory of the Convent of Santa Maria delle Grazie, Milan, in 1494-1497. Although the refectory was reduced to ruins by Allied bombs in August 1943, the wall on which the Last Supper is painted was practically undamaged and the picture left quite intact. It has worn badly with time and is now protected against further deterioration.

The Last Trump. See TRUMP.

The Last Word. That which is conclusive or definite; also, like the Fr. le dernier cri it has the meaning of the latest, most fashionable, and up-to-date style in anything.

To have the last word. To have the final say or decision; to make the last rejoinder in an argument.

Last Words. See DYING SAYINGS.

The Last of the Barons. Warwick the KING-MAKER. Lord Lytton has a novel of this title (1843).

The Last of the Dandies. A title given to Count Alfred D'Orsay (1801-1852).

The Last of the English. Hereward the Wake (fl. 1070-1071) who led the rising of the English at Ely against William the Conqueror.

The Last of the Fathers. St. Bernard (1090-1153), Abbot of Clairvaux.

The Last of the Goths. Roderick (d. 711), last king of the Visigoths in Spain. Southey has a poem on him.

The Last of the Greeks. The general, Philopœmen of Arcadia (253-183 B.C.).

The Last of the Knights. The Emperor Maximilian I (1459-1519).

The Last of the Mohicans. The Indian chief Uncas is so called by Fenimore Cooper in his novel of this title (1826).

The Last of the Romans. A title given to a number of historical characters, including:

Marcus Junius Brutus (c. 85-42 B.C.), one of the murderers of Julius Cæsar.

Caius Cassius Longinus (d. 42 B.C.), so called by Brutus.

Stilicho (c. 359-408), VANDAL, and Roman general under Theodosius.

Ætius, the general who defended the Gauls against the FRANKS and other barbarians and defeated Attila near Châlons in 451. So called by Procopius.

François Joseph Terrasse Desbillons (1711-1789), a French Jesuit; so called from the elegance and purity of his Latin.

Pope called Congreve Ultimus Romanorum, and the same title was conferred on Dr. Johnson, Horace Walpole and C. J. Fox. See also ROMAN.

The Last of the Saxons. King Harold (1022-1066), who was defeated and slain at the Battle of Hastings. Lord Lytton has this as a sub-title for his novel Harold (1848).

The Last of the Tribunes. Cola di

Rienzi (c. 1313-1354), who led the Roman people against the barons.

The Last of the Troubadours. Jacques Jasmin of Gascony (1798-1864).

La Tène (la tăn), or the Shallows, is a site at the eastern end of the Lake of Neuchâtel, Switzerland, where extensive remains of the late IRON AGE have been found. The term covers a period of CELTIC culture from the 5th century B.C. to about the beginning of the Christian era.

Lateran. The ancient palace of the Laterani family which was appropriated by NERO (A.D. 66) and later given to St. Sylvester by the Emperor Constantine. It remained the official residence of the Popes until the departure to AVIGNON in 1309. The present palace is now a museum. Fable derives the name from lateo, to hide, and rana, a frog, and accounts for it by saying that Nero once vomited a frog covered with blood, which he believed to be his own progeny, and had it hidden in a vault. The palace built on its site was called the "Lateran", or the palace of the hidden frog.

Lateran Council. The name given to each of five ŒCUMENICAL COUNCILS held in the Lateran church at ROME. They are (1) 1123, held under Calixtus II; it confirmed the Concordat of Worms which ended the INVESTITURE CONTROVERSY; (2) 1139, when Innocent II condemned Anacletus II and Arnold of Brescia; (3) 1179, convoked by Alexander III to regularize papal elections; (4) 1215, when Innocent III condemned the ALBIGENSES and further defined CATHOLIC doctrine; and (5) 1512-1517, under Julius II and Leo X, to invalidate the work of the anti-papal Council of Pisa.

Lateran Treaty. A treaty concluded between the Holy See and the Kingdom of Italy in 1929, establishing the VATICAN CITY as a sovereign state, thus ending the "Roman Question" begun in 1870 when the temporal power of the papacy was finally abrogated and ROME became the capital of the Italian Kingdom. See PRISONER OF THE VATICAN under VATICAN.

St. John Lateran is called the Mother and Head of all Churches and is the cathedral church of ROME. It occupies part of the site of the old Lateran palace.

Lathe (O.E. laeth, estate, district). An ancient unit of local government in Kent, which was ultimately divided into five lathes. These still exist and the divisions for petty sessions are based on them. Cp. RAPE.

Spenser in his View of the Present State of Ireland (1596), uses lathe or lath for the division of a HUNDRED.

If all that thything failed, then all that lath was charged for that thything; and if the lath failed, then all that hundred was demanded for them, and if the hundred, then the shire.

Latin. The language of the ancient inhabitants of Latium in Italy and spoken by the ancient Romans (Alba Longa was head of the Latin League and ROME was a colony of Alba Longa). According to one story Latium is from lateo, I lie hid, and was so called because SATURN lay hid there, when he was driven out of HEAVEN by the gods. According to Roman tradition the Latini were the aborigines. See LATINUS.

The earliest known specimen of the Latin language is an inscription on the Præneste fibula (a gold brooch) found in 1886; it dates from the 6th century B.C. Classical Latin. The Latin of the best authors centred around the Golden or AUGUSTAN AGE, as Livy, CICERO, etc. (prose); HORACE, VIRGIL, Ovid, etc. (poets).

Dog-Latin. See under DOG.

Late Latin. The period which followed the AUGUSTAN AGE to about A.D. 600; it includes the works of the Church FATHERS.

Law Latin. The debased Latin used in legal documents. Cp. DOG-LATIN.

Low Latin. MEDIÆVAL LATIN.

Mediæval, or Middle Latin. Latin from the 6th to the 16th century, both inclusive. In this Latin prepositions frequently supply the cases of nouns.

New Latin. Latin written since c. 1500, especially that used in scientific classifications, and in theological and philosophical works.

Thieves' Latin. Cant or jargon employed as a secret language by rogues and vagabonds.

The Latin Church. The Western Church, in contradistinction to the Greek or Eastern Church.

The Latin Cross. See under CROSS.

Latin Quarter. See QUARTERS.

The Latin Races. The peoples whose language is based on Latin; i.e. the Italians, Spanish, Portuguese, French, Rumanians, etc.

Latinus. Legendary king of the Latini, the ancient inhabitants of Latium (see LATIN). According to Virgil, he opposed ÆNEAS on his first landing, but later formed an alliance with him, and gave him his daughter, Lavinia, in marriage. Turnus, King of the Rutuli, declared that Lavinia had been betrothed to him and the issue was decided by single combat. Æneas, being the victor, became the husband of Lavinia and ancestor of ROMULUS and Remus (Virgil, Æneid, VII).

Latitudinarians. In the CHURCH OF ENGLAND a name applied, at first opprobriously, from the mid-17th century to those clergy attaching little importance to dogma and practice in religion, which in the 18th century encouraged laxity and indifference. The Cambridge Platonists were prominent among them. Latitudinarianism was checked by the advent of the EVANGELICALS and the OXFORD MOVEMENT. The term is widely applied to those attaching little importance to dogma and orthodoxy.

Latium. See LATIN.

Latona. The Roman name of the Gr. Leto, mother by JUPITER of APOLLO and DIANA. Milton (Sonnet XII) refers to the legend that when she knelt with her infants in arms by a fountain at Delos to quench her thirst, some Lycian clowns insulted her and were turned into frogs.

As when those hinds that were transformed to frogs
Railed at Latona's twin-born progeny,
Which after held the sun and moon in fee.

Latria and Dulia. Greek words adopted by the Roman Catholics; the former to express that supreme reverence and adoration which is offered to God alone; and the latter, that secondary reverence which is offered to saints. Latria is from the Greek suffix -latreia, worship, as in idolatry; dulia is the reverence of a doulos or slave. Hyperdulia is the special reverence paid to the Virgin Mary.

Latter-day Saints. See MORMONS.

Lattice. See RED-LATTICE PHRASES.

Lauds. In the Western Church, the traditional morning prayer, so called from the repeated occurrence of the word laudate (praise ye) in Pss. cxlviii-cl which form part of the office. It is said in the early morning by religious orders who rise for the Night Office, otherwise it is nowadays coupled with MATINS and said overnight. It forms part of the BREVIARY of the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, and the service of Morning Prayer, in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, is essentially composed of parts of Lauds and Matins.

Laugh. He laughs best that laughs last. Don't crow too soon, a game's not finished till it's won; to have the last laugh. In Ray's Collection (1742) is, "Better the last smile than the first laughter," and the French have the proverb Rira bien qui rira le dernier.

Laugh and grow fat. An old saw, expressive of the wisdom of keeping a cheerful mind. Taylor, the WATER POET, has a poem Laugh and be Fat (c. 1625), and in Trapp's Commentaries (1647), on II Thess. iii, 11, he says, "Whose life is to eat and drink . . . and laugh themselves fat."

To have the laugh on one. To be able to make merry at another's expense, generally to that other's surprise and confusion.

To laugh in one's sleeve. See under SLEEVE.

To laugh like a drain. To gurgle or laugh noisily, as water gurgles down a drain.

To laugh off. To dismiss a matter lightly; to shake off embarrassment with a jest.

To laugh on the wrong side, or on the other side of one's mouth. To be made to feel vexation and annoyance after mirth or satisfaction; to be bitterly disappointed; to cry.

To laugh out of court. To cover with ridicule, and so treat as not worth considering.

To laugh to scorn. To treat with the utmost contempt.

All they that see me laugh me to scorn; they shoot out the lip, they shake the head.

Ps. xxii, 7.

Laughing Murderer of Verdun. Friedrich Wilhelm, Crown Prince of Germany, who commanded the armies that tried to capture Verdun in World War I. He is said to have taken lightly the enormous casualties sustained on both sides, hence the nickname. British troops also called him "Little Willie".

Laughing Philosopher. Democritus of ABDERA (5th century B.C.), who viewed with supreme contempt the feeble powers of man. Cp. WEEPING PHILOSOPHER.

No laughing matter. Something to be treated seriously. The expression is an example of LITOTES.

Laughing stock. A butt for jokes.

Lancelot. See LANCELOT.

Launching-pad. Figuratively, the place which gives an impetus to, or sees the start of, an important enterprise. From the technical term in rocketry.

Launfal, Sir. One of the Knights of the ROUND TABLE. His story is told in a metrical romance written by Thomas Chestre in the reign of Henry VI. James Russell Lowell has a poem entitled The Vision of Sir Launfal (1845).

Laura. The girl of this name was immortalized by Petrarch (1304-1374) in his poems, but her identity is uncertain. He first saw her in the church of St. Clara, Avignon, on 6 April 1327, and it was this event which, he says, made him a poet. Her identification with the wife of Hugues de Sade is suspect.

Laura (Gr. laura, an alley). In early monachism, a collection of separate cells under a superior, their occupants meeting in chapel and for a common meal in the refectory. Monastic life proper was a much more communal affair.

Laureate. See POET LAUREATE.

Laurel. The Greeks gave a wreath of laurels to the victor in the PYTHIAN GAMES, but the victor in the OLYMPIC GAMES had a wreath of wild olives, in the NEMEAN GAMES, a wreath of green parsley, and in the ISTHMIAN GAMES, a wreath of dry parsley or green pine leaves.

The ancients held that laurel communicated the spirit of prophecy and poetry, hence the custom of crowning the Pythoness (the PYTHIA) and poets, and of putting laurel leaves under one's pillow to acquire inspiration. Another superstition was that the bay laurel was antagonistic to the stroke of lightning; but Sir Thomas Browne, in his Vulgar Errors, tells us that Vicomereatus proves from personal knowledge that this is untrue.

The Laurel in modern times is a symbol of victory and peace, and of excellence in literature and the arts. St. GUDULE, in Christian art, carries a laurel crown.

To look to one's laurels. To have to try to maintain the lead in any field in which one has already excelled.

To rest on one's laurels. To be satisfied with the degree of success one has already achieved and to refrain from further effort.

Laurence, St. See LAWRENCE.

Laurentian Library. A library opened by Cosimo de' MEDICI in 1571, noted for its collection of Greek and Latin MSS., and named after Laurentius or Lorenzo de' Medici. It was designed by MICHEL-ANGELO and formed from the collections of Cosimo the Elder, Pietro de' Medici, and Lorenzo the Magnificent.

Laurin. The dwarf-king in the German folk-legend Laurin, or Der Kleine Rosengarten. He possesses a magic ring, girdle, and cap, and is attacked by DIETRICH OF BERN in his rose-garden, which no one may enter on pain of death. The poem belongs to the late 13th century and is attributed to Heinrich von Ofterdingen.

Lavender. The earliest form of the word is Med. Lat. livendula, and is probably, like our livid, from livere, to make bluish; as, however, the plant has been used by laundresses for scenting linen, and in connection with the bath, later forms of the word are associated with lavare, to wash. The modern botanical name is Lavendula. It is a token of affection.

He from his lass him lavender hath sent,
Showing her love and doth requital crave.
DRAYTON: Ninth Eclogue, 17.

Laid up in lavender. Taken great care of, laid away.

The poore gentleman paises so deere for the lavender it is laid up in, that if it lies long at the broker's house he seems to buy his apparel twice.
GREENE: A Quip for an Upstart Courtier (1592).

Lavinia. See LATINUS.

Lavolta (Ital., the turn). A lively dance, in which was a good deal of jumping or capering, whence its name. Troilus says: "I cannot sing, nor heel the high lavolt" (SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida, IV, iv). It originated in 16th-century Provence or Italy, and is thus described:

A lofty jumping or a leaping round,
Where arm in arm two dancers are entwined,
And whirl themselves with strict embracements bound,

And still their feet an anapest do sound.
SIR JOHN DAVIES: The Orchestra (1594).

Law. In-Laws. A way of referring to one's relations by marriage—mother-in-law, sisters-in-law, etc. In-law is short for in CANON LAW, the reference being to the degrees of affinity within which marriage is allowed or prohibited.

Law-calf. A bookseller's term for a special kind of binding in plain sheep or calf used largely for law books.

Other gentlemen who had no briefs to show carried under their arms goodly octavos, with a red label behind, and that under-done-pie-crust-coloured cover, which is technically known as "law-calf".

DICKENS: Pickwick Papers, ch. xxxiv.

Law Latin. See under LATIN.

Law Lords. The Lords of Appeal in Ordinary; also, additionally, those members of the HOUSE OF LORDS who are qualified to deal with the judicial business of the House, i.e. the Lord CHANCELLOR, the Lord Chief Justice, the Master of the ROLLS, and any peer who has held high judicial office. The Lords of Appeal in Ordinary were instituted in 1877 as life BARONS, being now seven to nine in number. Until 1873 the appellate jurisdiction of the Lords was open to the whole House.

Law Merchant. Formerly, the practice of merchants as established by judicial decisions and administered in the Courts of markets and FAIRS such as a PIE-POWDER COURT. From the time of Lord Mansfield (Lord Chief Justice, 1756-1788), Law Merchant became assimilated to the COMMON LAW.

The Law of Moses, or Mosaic Law. See under MOSES.

Law's Bubble. See MISSISSIPPI BUBBLE.

The laws of the Medes and Persians. Unalterable laws.

Now, O King, establish the decree, and sign the writing, that it be not changed, according to the law of the Medes and Persians, which altereth not.

Dan. vi, 8.

Possession is nine points of the law. See under NINE.

Quips of the law. See CEPOLA.

To give one law. A sporting term, "law" meaning the chance of saving oneself. Thus a hare or a stag is allowed "law"—i.e. a certain start before any hound is permitted to attack it; and a tradesman allowed "law" is one to whom time is given to "find his legs".

To go to law, to have the law on someone. To take legal proceedings.

To take the law into one's own hands.

To try to secure satisfaction by force or personal action; to punish, reward, etc., entirely on one's own responsibility.

Lawless Parliament. See PARLIAMENT OF DUNCES under DUNCE.

Lawn. Fine, thin cambric, used for the rochets of Anglican BISHOPS, ladies' handkerchiefs, etc. So called from Laon (O.Fr. Lan), a town in the Aisne department of France, once noted for its linen manufacture.

Man of lawn. A BISHOP.

Lawn-market. The higher end of High Street, Edinburgh, once a place for executions; hence, to go up the lawn-market is to go to be hanged.

They [the stolen clothes] may serve him to gang up the Lawn-market in, the scoundrel.

SCOTT: Guy Mannerling, ch. xxxii.

Lawrence, St. (of Rome). The patron saint of carriers, who was roasted on a GRIDIRON. He was deacon to Sixtus I and was charged with the care of the poor, the orphans, and the widows. When summoned by the prætor to deliver up the treasures of the church, he produced the poor, etc., under his charge, and said, "These are the church's treasures." His day is 10 August. (Cp. CORNELIA). Fragments of his relics were taken to the ESCORIAL.

The phrase Lazy as Lawrence is said to originate from the story that when being roasted over a slow fire he asked to be turned, "For", said he, "that side is quite done." This expression of Christian fortitude was interpreted by his torturers as evidence of the height of laziness, the martyr being too indolent to wriggle.

"Flo and I have got a new name for you; it's 'Lazy Laurence.' How do you like it?"
 LOUISA M. ALCOTT: Good Wives, ch. xxxix.

St. Laurence's tears or The fiery tears of St. Laurence. See SHOOTING STARS.

Lawyer's Bags, or, more properly Barrister's Bags, since they are not used by solicitors. Counsel traditionally use bags made of cotton damask to carry their robes from home or Chambers to Court. The ordinary bag of a junior Counsel is blue but it is customary for a Q.C. to present a junior who has given him outstanding assistance in a particular case with a red bag, which that junior thereafter always uses, during the remainder of a career both as a junior and as a Q.C. Bags are normally carried from Chambers to Court by Counsel's Clerk. The bag is closed by pulling the ends of a cord which is threaded round the mouth. It is carried over the shoulder, the ends of the cord being held in one hand.

Lay. Pertaining to the people or laity (Lat. laicus) as distinguished from the clergy. Thus, a lay brother is one who, though not in HOLY ORDERS (see under ORDERS), is received into a monastery and is bound by its vows.

A layman is, properly speaking, anyone not in HOLY ORDERS; (see under ORDER); it is also used by professional men, especially doctors and lawyers, to denote one not of their particular calling or specialized learning.

Lay Days. Days allowed to a charter party for loading and unloading a ship.

Lay figures. Wooden figures with free joints, used by artists chiefly for the study of how drapery falls. The word was earlier layman from Dut. leeman, a contraction of ledenman (led, a joint). Horace Walpole uses layman (1762), but lay figure had taken its place by the end of the 18th century. Hence, figuratively, a character who is a mere foil or puppet.

Lay investiture. See INVESTITURE CONTROVERSY.

Lay (the verb). To lay about one. To strike out lustily on all sides.

He'll lay about him today.
 SHAKESPEARE: Troilus and Cressida, I, ii.

To lay into. To attack vigorously, either physically or verbally.

To lay it on thick. To flatter or over-praise.

To lay it on with a trowel. To flatter excessively.

Well said; that was laid on with a trowel.
 SHAKESPEARE: As You Like It, I, ii.

To lay off. To dismiss workmen, usually temporarily; to cease to annoy, attack, tease, etc.

To lay, or put oneself out. To go to a great deal of trouble; to go to especial pains.

To lay out. To disburse; to display goods, to arrange, etc.; to prepare a corpse for the coffin; to disable or render unconscious.

To lay to one's charge. To attribute an offence to a person; a Biblical phrase, see Deut. xxi, 8; Rom. viii, 33, etc.

And he [Stephen] kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge.
 Acts vii, 60.

To lay up. To store away; to dismantle and berth a vessel for a period of disuse. A person temporarily incapacitated through injury or illness is said to be "laid up", especially if confined to bed.

Laylock. Ancient rustic name for lilac.

Lazar House, or Lazaretto. See under LAZARUS.

Lazarillo de Tormes. A Spanish PICA-RESQUE novel something in the Gil Blas style, published in 1554, and of uncertain authorship, although formerly attributed to Diego Hurtado de Mendoza. Its full title is Vida de Lazarillo de Tormes y de sus fortunas y adversidades. Lazarillo, a light, jovial, audacious manservant, sees his masters in their undress and exposes their foibles.

Lazarus. Any poor beggar; so called from the Lazarus of the parable, who was laid daily at the rich man's gate See DIVES.

Lazar house, or Lazaretto. A house for lazars or poor persons affected with contagious diseases; so called from LAZARUS.

Lazy. Lazy as Ludlam's dog, which leaned his head against the wall to bark. Ludlam was reputed to be a sorceress who lived in a cave near Farnham, Surrey. Her dog was so lazy that when the rustics came to consult her it would hardly condescend to announce their approach, even with the ghost of a bark (Ray: Proverbs). Lazy as Lawrence's dog is a similar saying to the above. See LAWRENCE.

Lazy man's load. One too heavy to be carried; so called because lazy people are apt to overload themselves to save a second journey.

Lazzarone (lāts à rō ni) (Ital.) Originally applied to Neapolitan vagrants who lived in the streets and idled about begging, etc. So called from the hospital of St. LAZARUS which served as a refuge for the destitute of Naples. Every year they elected a chief, called the Capo Lazzaro. In 1647 Masaniello effected a revolution with the support of these vagabonds, and in 1798 Michele Sforza, at the head of the Lazzaroni, successfully resisted Championnet, the French general.

L'état, c'est moi (lā ta sā mwa) (Fr., I am the State). The reply traditionally ascribed to Louis XIV when the President of the PARLEMENT of Paris objected "in the interests of the State" to the King's fiscal demands. This was in 1655, when Louis was only 17 years old. He acted on this principle with fair consistency throughout his long reign (1643-1714).

Le roy, or La reyne le veult (O.Fr., The King, or Queen wills it). The form of royal assent to Parliamentary Bills. The dissent is expressed by Le roy (La reyne) s'avisera, the King (Queen) will give it consideration, but this has not been used since 1707. The formula for money bills is Le roy (la reyne) remercie ses bons sujets, accepte leur benevolence, et ainsi, le veult, and for personal bills, Soit fait comme il est désiré.

Leach. See LEECH.

Lead (led) was, by the ancient alchemists, called SATURN.

The lead, or blacklead, of a lead pencil contains no lead at all, but is composed of plumbago or graphite, an almost pure carbon with a touch of iron. It was so named in the 16th century when it was thought to be or to contain the metal.

Swinging the lead. Malingering, usually by concocting some plausible yarn, or by feigning an indisposition.

To strike lead. To make a good hit.

The Leads. The famous prison in Venice in which CASANOVA was incarcerated and from which he escaped.

Lead (lēd) (the verb) (O.E. lædan).

To lead apes in hell. See under APE.

To lead by the nose. See LED BY THE NOSE under NOSE.

To lead one a pretty dance. See DANCE.

Leader. The first violin of an orchestra, the first cornet of a military band, etc., is called the leader.

Bear-leader. See under BEAR.

Leading article, or Leader. A newspaper article by the editor or a special writer. It takes the lead or chief place as commentary on current issues, and expresses the policy of the paper.

Leading case. A lawsuit that forms a precedent in deciding others of a similar kind.

Leading counsel in a case, the senior counsel on a circuit.

Leading lady, or man. The actress or actor who takes the chief role in a play.

Leading note (music). The seventh note of the diatonic scale, which leads to the octave, only half a tone higher.

Leading question. A question so worded as to suggest an answer. "Was he not dressed in a black coat?" leads to the answer "Yes." In cross-examining a witness, leading questions are permitted, because the chief object of a cross-examination is to obtain contradictions.

To be in leading-strings is to be under the control of another. Infants just learning to walk are held up by "leading-strings".

Leaf. Before the invention of paper, leaves of certain plants were among the materials used for writing upon. The reverse and obverse pages are still called leaves; and the double page of a ledger is termed a "FOLIO", from Lat. folium, a leaf. Cp. the derivation of paper itself, from papyrus; and book from boc, a beech-tree.

To take a leaf out of my book. To imitate me; to do as I do. The allusion is to literary plagiarisms.

To turn over a new leaf. To amend one's ways, to start afresh.

League. The Holy League. Several leagues are so called. The best-known are: (1) 1511, between Pope Julius II, Ferdinand of Aragon, Henry VIII and Venice to drive the French out of Italy, and joined by the Emperor Maximilian and the Swiss; (2) 1526, the Holy League of Cognac between Clement VII and Francis I of France against the Emperor Charles V; (3) 1576, formed by Henry, Duke of Guise, and the JESUITS and joined by Henry III against the HUGUENOTS and for the defence of the CATHOLIC Church.

The League of Nations. A league, having at one time about 60 member nations with headquarters at Geneva, with the essential aim of preventing war as well as promoting other forms of international co-operation. It was formed on 10 January 1920, after the close of World War I, but was weakened from the outset by the refusal of the U.S.A. to participate (although President Woodrow Wilson had played a major part in its foundation), and the exclusion of Russia. Its achievements were considerable in many fields, but it failed in its primary purpose. It last met on 18 April 1946, being replaced by the UNITED NATIONS Organization which had been inaugurated on 24 October 1945.

Leak. To leak out. To come surreptitiously to public knowledge. As a liquid leaks out of an unsound vessel, so the secret filters through.

To spring a leak. Said of ships, etc., that open at the seams, etc., to admit water.

Leal. Anglo-French and O.Fr. leel, our loyal; trusty, law-abiding; now practically confined to SCOTLAND.

Land o' the leal. See LAND.

Leander. See HERO AND LEANDER.

Leaning Tower. While there are a number of leaning campanili, or bell-towers, in Italy, the most celebrated is that of the cathedral of Pisa which stands apart from the main building. It is 179 ft. high, 57½ ft. in diameter at the base, and leans about 17 ft. from the perpendicular. It was begun in 1174 and the sinking commenced during construction, but it still stands because the centre of gravity is within its walls. Galileo availed himself of the overhanging tower to make his experiments in gravitation. Caerphilly Castle, Glamorganshire, has a tower which leans 11 ft. in 80, said to be due to Royalist attempts to blow it up with gunpowder during the CIVIL WAR. The church spires at Chesterfield, Derby, and Ermington, Devonshire, also lean.

Leap. The Leap in the Dark. The famous phrase used by Lord Derby, the Prime Minister, of his government's policy in promoting the Parliamentary Reform Act of 1867. He adopted the expression from Lord Cranborne who first "taunted the government with taking a leap in the dark" (Justin McCarthy, Short History of Our Own Times, ch. xxi). Thomas Hobbes is also supposed to have used it (see DYING SAYINGS).

Leap Year. A year of 366 days, a BISSEXTILE year; i.e., in the Julian and Gregorian calendars (see CALENDAR), any year whose date is exactly divisible by 4 except those which are divisible by 100 but not by 400. Thus 1900 (though divisible by 4) was not a leap year, but 2000 will be.

In ordinary years, the day of the month which falls on Monday this year will fall on Tuesday next year, and Wednesday the year after; but the fourth year will leap over Thursday to Friday. This is because a day is added to February, the reason being that the astronomical year (i.e. the time that it takes the earth to go round the sun) is approximately 365¼ days (365.2422), the difference between .25 and .2422 being righted by the loss of the three days in 400 years.

It is an old saying that during leap year the ladies may propose, and, if not accepted, claim a silk gown. A Scottish law of 1288 says that "during the rein of hir maist blissit Megeste, for ilke yeare knowne as lepe yeare, ilk mayden ladye . . . shal hae liberte to bespeke ye man she like, albeit he refuses to taik hir to be his lawful wyfe, he shall be mulcted in ye sum of ane pundis. . . ." There was a similar law passed in France and it became legal custom in Genoa and Florence in the 15th century.

Lear, King. A legendary king of Britain whose story is told by SHAKESPEARE. His immediate source was Holinshed, who in turn derived it from Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Britonum. It is also given in the GESTA ROMANORUM and in PERCEFOREST. Spenser uses it in his Faerie Queene (II, x) and Camden tells a similar story of Ina, King of the West Saxons. According to Shakespeare's version, King Lear in his old age divided his kingdom between his daughters GONERIL and REGAN, who professed great love for him but then harassed him into madness. CORDELIA, left portionless, succoured him and came with an army to dethrone her sisters, but was captured and slain. King Lear died over her body. See LIR.

Learn. To learn a person a thing, or to do something is now a provincialism or regarded as illiterate speech, but was formerly quite good English. In the Prayer Book version of the Psalms we have "Lead me forth in thy truth and learn me," and "such as are gentle, them shall he learn his way" (xxv, 4, 8). Other examples of this use of learn as an active verb will be found in Ps. cxix, 66, and cxxxii, 13.

The new plague rid you
For learning me your language.
SHAKESPEARE: The Tempest, I, ii.

"I'll learn you" or "I'll larn you" is still frequently used as a threat, especially by indignant housewives to troublesome children.

The Learned. Kalman, or Koloman,

King of Hungary (1095-1116), was so called. Cp. BEAUCLERC.

The learned Blacksmith, Elihu Burritt (1810-1879), the American philanthropist, a one-time blacksmith, who by the age of 30 could read nearly 50 languages.

The learned Painter, Charles Lebrun (1619-1690), so called from the great accuracy of his costumes.

The learned Tailor, Henry Wild of Norwich (1684-1734), who mastered, while he worked at his trade, Greek, Latin, Hebrew, Chaldaic, Syriac, Persian and Arabic.

Leash. To strain at the leash. To be eager to be off; to be impatient of restraint or delay. From the lead used to restrain hounds in coursing.

Leather. Nothing like leather. The story is that a man in danger of a siege called together a council of the chief inhabitants to know what defence they recommended. A mason suggested a strong wall, a ship-builder advised "WOODEN WALLS", and when others had spoken, a currier arose and said, "There's nothing like leather."

Another version is, "Nothing like leather to administer a thrashing."

It's all leather or prunella. Nothing of any moment, all rubbish; through a misunderstanding of the lines by Pope, who was drawing a distinction between the work of a cobbler and that of a parson.

Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow; The rest is all but leather or prunella.

POPE: Essay on Man, iv, 203.

Prunella is a worsted stuff, formerly used for clergymen's gowns, etc., and for the uppers of ladies' boots, and is probably so called because it was the colour of a prune.

Leather medal. An American colloquial term for a booby prize.

To give one a leathering. To flog him with a leather strap; to give him a drubbing.

Leatherneck. A MARINE.

Leatherstocking Novels. The novels by Fenimore Cooper (1789-1851) in which Natty Bumppo, nicknamed Leatherstocking and Hawkeye, is a leading character. They are The Pioneers (1823), The Last of the Mohicans (1826), The Prairie (1827), The Pathfinder (1840), and The Deerslayer (1841). "Leatherstocking" was a hardy backwoodsman, a type of North American pioneer, ignorant of books but a philosopher of the woods.

Leave in the lurch. See LURCH.

Leave well alone. Do not try to alter a state of affairs which is reasonably satisfactory lest you make things worse. "Why not let it alone" was a maxim of Lord Melbourne, the WHIG Prime Minister (1835-1841); and the motto of his 18th-century predecessor, Sir Robert Walpole, was virtually the same—Quæta non movere, the equivalent of "let sleeping dogs lie".

To take French leave. See under FRENCH.

Lebensraum (lā bēnz roum'). A German phrase (room for living), somewhat akin to LAND HUNGER. It is applied especially to the territory required by a nation for overseas expansion, both for settlement and trade, to meet the population pressures in the mother country.

Leda. In Greek mythology, the wife of Tyndarus. JUPITER came to her in the guise of a swan when she was bathing, and in due time she brought forth two eggs, from one of which came CASTOR and CLYTEMNESTRA, and from the other POLLUX and HELEN. The two former are usually held to be the children of Tyndarus.

Leda Bible, The. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Lee (O.E. hleō, hleow, a covering or shelter). Nautically, the side or quarter opposite to that against which the wind blows; the side away from the windward or weather side; the sheltered side.

Lee board. A wooden board fixed on the side of a vessel and lowered on the lee side when on a wind, to prevent making too much leeway. The once familiar THAMES sailing barge was equipped with lee boards.

Lee shore. The shore under the lee of a ship, or that towards which the wind blows. It is very dangerous for a vessel to come close to a lee shore.

Lee side. See LEEWARD.

Lee tide. A tide running in the same direction as the wind blows; if in the opposite direction it is called a tide under the lee.

To lay a ship by the lee. An obsolete phrase for heaving-to, i.e. to bring a vessel up into the wind by suitably trimming sail so that she lies nearly head to wind. The vessel is then practically motionless, comparable to marking time in marching.

Under the lee of the land. Under the shelter of the land.

Under the lee of a ship. On the side away from the wind, so that the ship provides shelter and breaks the force of the wind.

Leeward (loo' árd). Towards the LEE, or that part towards which the wind blows; windward is the opposite direction. See A-WEATHER under WEATHER.

Leech. One skilled in medicine or "leechcraft", a doctor; the word, now obsolete, is the O.E. læce, one who relieves pain, from lacnian, to heal. The blood-sucking worm, the leech, gets its name, the healer, probably from the same word.

And straightway sent, with carefull diligence,
To fetch a leech the which had great insight
In that disease.

SPENSER: The Faerie Queene, I, x, 23.

Leech-finger. See MEDICINAL FINGER.

Leek. The national emblem of WALES. (Cp. DAFFODIL.) The story is that St. DAVID, on one occasion, caused his countrymen under King Cadwaladr to distinguish themselves from their Saxon foes by wearing a leek in their caps.

Shakespeare makes out that the Welsh wore leeks at the battle of Poitiers, for Fluellen says:

If your majesties is remembered of it, the Welshmen did goot service in a garden where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps; which, your majesty knows, to this hour is an honourable padge of the service; and I do believe your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy's Day.

Henry V, IV, vii.

To eat the leek. To be forced to eat your own words, or retract what you have said. Fluellen (in Shakespeare's Henry V, V, i) is taunted by Pistol for wearing a leek in his hat. "Hence," says Pistol, "I am qualmish at the smell of leek." Fluellen replies "I peseech you . . . at my desires . . . to eat . . . this leek." The ancient answers, "Not for Cadwallader and all his goats." Then the peppery Welshman beats him, nor desists till Pistol has swallowed the entire abhorrence.

Lees. There are lees to every wine. Everything has its dregs; the best things have some defect. A French proverb.

Settling on the lees. Making the best of a bad job; settling down on what is left, after having squandered the main part of one's fortune.

Leet. In East Anglia, a division of the HUNDRED formed of a group of villis for local government and taxation. The word occurs in DOMESDAY and is probably from the Dan. lægd, a division of the country for purposes of military service.

Court-leet. A manorial court of record held by the lord or his steward, substantially the same as a court baron from which the VESTRY took over certain functions. It dealt with petty offences and a variety of administrative work.

Who has a breast so pure,
But some uncleanly apprehensions
Keep leets and law-days, and in sessions sit
With meditations lawful?

SHAKESPEARE: Othello, III, iii.

Left. The left side of anything is frequently considered to be unlucky, of bad omen (cp. AUGURY; SINISTER), the right the reverse.

In politics the left denotes the more RADICAL political group, and today is usually applied to Socialists and Communists (see COMMUNISM). Within a particular party the left wing is made up of the "progressives" or "radicals". Communists are often known as the "extreme left". In many legislatures the radicals sit on the left-hand side (as seen from the chair) and in most of the British Commonwealth assemblies the opposition sits on the left.

In the French National Assembly of 1789, the reactionaries sat on the right, the moderates in the centre, and the democrats and extremists on the left, and this established the custom.

A left-handed compliment. A compliment which insinuates a reproach.

A left-handed oath. One not intended to be binding.

Over the left. In early Victorian days, a way of expressing disbelief, incredulity, or a negative.

Each gentleman pointed with his right thumb over his left shoulder. This action, imperfectly described in words by the very feeble term "over the left", when performed by any number of ladies or gentlemen who are accustomed to act in unison, has a very graceful and airy effect; its expression is one of light and playful sarcasm.

DICKENS: Pickwick Papers, ch. xlii.

Leg. In many phrases, e.g. "to find one's legs", "to put one's best leg foremost", leg is interchangeable with FOOT.

Leg and leg. Equal, or nearly so, in a race, game, etc. Cp. NECK AND NECK.

On its last legs. Moribund; obsolete; about to collapse or break up; practically worn out.

Shake a leg! Hurry up! Also, to shake a leg is to dance.

Show a leg. Jump out of bed and be sharp about it. A naval phrase, from the monologue used to call the hands from their hammocks, "Wakey Wakey, rise and shine, the morning's fine . . . show a leg, show a leg, show a leg, etc." It comes from the days when women were allowed to sleep on board; they were allowed to "lie in" and had to "show a leg" to ensure that no rating was still turned in. To give a leg up. To render timely assistance, "to help a lame dog over a stile". Originally from horsemanship—to help one into the saddle.

To have good sea-legs. To be a good sailor, to be able to stand up to the ship's motion without getting seasick.

To make a leg. To make a bow, especially an old-fashioned obeisance by advancing the right leg.

The pursuivant smiled at their simplicity,
And making many leggs, tooke their reward.

PERCY:
Reliques (The King and the Miller of Mansfield, Pt. II).

To set on his legs. To be independent, to be earning one's own living. The allusion is to being nursed, and standing "alone".

To stretch one's legs. To take a walk for exercise, particularly after long sitting.

Without a leg to stand on. Having no excuse; no hope of getting away with it.

Leg-bail. A runaway. To give leg-bail, to abscond, make a "get-away".

Leg-break. In CRICKET, a ball which, after striking the ground from the batsman's leg side, turns towards the wicket.

Leg bye. In CRICKET, a run scored from a ball which has glanced off any part of a batsman's person except his hand.

Leg-pulling means teasing, chaffing, or fooling.

Legal tender. Money which, by the law of a particular country, constitutes payment which a creditor is bound to accept; in England the tender of gold, Bank of England notes, silver up to 40s., and bronze up to one shilling.

Legem Pone (lē' jem pō ne). Old slang for money paid down on the NAIL, ready money; from the opening words of the first of the PSALMS appointed to be read on the twenty-fifth morning of the month—Legem pone mihi, Domine, viam justificationum tuarum (Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes, Ps. cxix, 33). 25 March is the first QUARTER-DAY and Settlement Day of the year, and thus the phrase became associated with cash down.

Use legem pone to pay at thy day,
But use not oremus for often delay.
TUSSER: Good Husbandry (1557).

Oremus (let us pray) occurs frequently in the Roman Catholic liturgy. Its application to a debtor who is suing for further time is obvious.

Legend (Lat. legenda; from legere, to read). Literally and originally "something to be read"; hence the narratives of saints and martyrs were so termed from their being read, especially at MATINS, and after dinner in monastic refectories. Exaggeration and a love for the wonderful so predominated in these readings, that the word came to signify a traditional story, a fable, a myth.

In numismatics the legend is the inscription impressed in letters on the edge or rim of a coin or medal and often used synonymously with inscription, which is strictly the words on the field of a coin. The field is the whole part of a coin not occupied by the device. Legend is also applied to the title on a map or under a picture.

Legenda Aurea. See GOLDEN LEGEND.

Leger. St. Leger Sweepstakes. One of the CLASSIC RACES, run at Doncaster early in September. It was instituted in 1776 by Colonel Anthony St. Leger, of Park Hill near Doncaster, and called the "St. Leger" two years later.

Legion. My name is Legion: for we are many (Mark v, 9). A proverbial expression somewhat similar to hydra-headed (see HYDRA). Thus we say of a plague of rats, "Their name is legion."

Foreign Legion. A body of volunteer sympathizers fighting to aid a foreign cause. The name is now particularly associated with the French Foreign Legion, a regular force composed of volunteers of many nationalities.

The Thundering Legion. See THUNDERING.

Legion of Honour. An order of distinction and reward instituted by NAPOLEON in 1802, for either military or civil merit.

It was originally limited to 15 cohortes, each composed of 7 grands officiers, 20 commandants, 30 officiers, and 350 légionnaires, making in all 6,105 members; it was reorganized by Louis XVIII in 1814, and again by Napoleon III in 1852, and now comprises 80 grands-croix, 200 grands officiers, 1,000 commandeurs, 4,000 officiers, with chevaliers to whose creation there is no fixed limit.

The badge is a five-branched cross with a medallion bearing a symbolical figure of the republic and round it the legend, "République Française". This is crowned by a LAUREL wreath, and the ribbon is of red watered silk.

Leglen-girth. To cast a leglen-girth. To have made a faux pas, particularly by having an illegitimate child; to have one's reputation blown upon. Leglen is Scottish for a milk-pail, and a leglen-girth is the girth of a milk pail.

Did you ever hear of the umquhile Lady Huntinglen, the departed Countess of this noble earl, ganging a wee bit gleed in her walk through the world; I mean in the way of slipping a foot, casting a leglen-girth, ye understand me?
SCOTT: The Fortunes of Nigel, ch. xxxii.

Leitmotiv (lit' mō tēf'). A German word meaning the "leading motive", and it is applied in music to a theme associated with a personality in an opera or similar work, repeatedly recurring to emphasize the dramatic situation. The term first came into use with Wagner. In general usage it describes any phrase or turn of thought that continually recurs with a certain association.

Lemnos. The island where VULCAN fell, when JUPITER flung him out of HEAVEN. One myth connected with Lemnos tells how the women of the island, in revenge for being forsaken by their husbands, murdered all the men, and of the men killing the children of their Athenian consorts; hence Lemnian actions signifies barbarous and inhuman actions. The ARGONAUTS were received with great favour by the women of Lemnos and as a result of their short stay the island was repopulated; the queen Hypsipyle became the mother of twins by JASON.

Lemnian earth. A kind of bole or clayey earth of reddish colour found in the island of Lemnos, said to cure festering wounds and snake bites. This medicinal earth was made into blocks and anciently stamped with the head of DIANA and hence called terra sigillata ("sealed earth"). It is still used locally, and a ceremonial digging of this earth took place on a particular day under the supervision of a priestess. The ceremony eventually became fixed on 6 August, the feast of Christ the Saviour in the GREEK CHURCH.

Lemon. Salts of Lemon. See MISNOMERS.

Lemon sole. The name of the flatfish has nothing to do with the lemon but is from Fr. limande, a flat board, though it may also be from Lat. limus, mud, the fish being essentially a bottom fish.

The answer's a lemon. Nothing doing; a suitable answer to an unreasonable or ridiculous request or question.

Lemures (lem' ū rēz). The name given by the Romans to evil spirits of the dead, especially spectres which wandered about at night-time to terrify the living. Cp. LARVÆ.

The jars and lemures moan with midnight plaint.

MILTON: On the Morning of the Christ's Nativity (The Hymn xxi).

Lemuria. The lost land that is supposed to have connected Madagascar with India and Sumatra in prehistoric times. The German biologist E. H. Haeckel (1834-1919) thought that it was the original habitat of the lemur. See W. Scott Elliott's The Lost Lemuria (1904). Cp. ATLANTIS; LYONESSE.

Lend-Lease. An agreement by which the United States lent or leased arms and military supplies, etc., to Britain and other powers during World War II. The Lend-Lease Act was passed by Congress on 11 March 1941, and terminated on 22 August 1945. During this period the U.S.A. spent about £12,000,000,000 and received back about £1,836,000,000. Over 60 per cent of the total went to the British COMMONWEALTH.

Leningrad. The name given in 1924 to Petrograd which, until 1914, was known as St. Petersburg, the former capital of Tsarist Russia founded by Peter the Great in 1703.

Lens (Lat., a lentil or bean). Glasses used in optical instruments are so called because the double convex one, which may be termed the perfect lens, is of a bean shape.

Lent (O.E. lencten, the spring). The Saxons called MARCH lencten monath because in this month the days noticeably lengthen. As the chief part of the great fast, from ASH WEDNESDAY to EASTER, falls in March, it received the name Lencten-faesten or Lent.

The fast of 36 days was introduced in the 4th century, but it did not become fixed at 40 days until the early 7th century, thus corresponding with Our Lord's fast in the wilderness.

Lent lily. The daffodil, which blooms in LENT.

Lenten. Frugal, stinted, as food in LENT. SHAKESPEARE has "lenten entertainment" (Hamlet, II, ii); "a lenten answer" (Twelfth Night, I, v); "a lenten pye" (Romeo and Juliet, II, iv).

Lenten curtain, or Lenten veil. In the mediæval Western Church, a white curtain hung down in parish churches between the altar and the nave, and parted on feast days kept during LENT. It was taken down in the last three days of HOLY WEEK and said to betoken "the prophecy of Christ's Passion, which was hidden and unknown till these days" (Liber Festivalis). Similarly, all crucifixes and images were covered.

Leo. A constellation, and fifth sign of the ZODIAC.

Leonard, St. A Frank at the court of Clovis in the 6th century, founder of the monastery of Noblac and patron saint of prisoners, Clovis having given him permission to release all whom he visited. He is usually represented as a deacon holding chains or broken fetters in his hand. His day is 6 November.

Leonidas. King of Sparta, who defended the pass of THERMOPYLAE against the Persians in 480 B.C. Only one of the 300 SPARTANS survived.

The Leonidas of Modern Greece. Marco Bozzaris, who with 1,200 men put to rout 4,000 Turco-Albanians at Kerpenisi, but was killed in the attack (1823). He was buried at Missolonghi.

Leonine (lē' ð nin). Lion-like; also relating to one of the popes named Leo (especially Leo I), as the Leonine City, the part of ROME surrounding the VATICAN, which was fortified by Leo IV in the 9th century. Leonine contract. A one-sided agreement; so called in allusion to the fable of The Lion and His Fellow Hunters. Cp. GLAUCUS SWAP.

Leonine verses. Latin HEXAMETERS, or alternate hexameters and PENTAMETERS rhyming at the middle and end of each respective line. These fancies were common in the 12th century, and are said to have been popularized by and so called from Leoninus, a canon of the church of St. Victor, in Paris; but there are many such lines in the classic poets, particularly Ovid. In English verse, any metre which rhymes middle and end may be called Leonine verse.

Leopard. So called because it was thought in mediæval times to be a cross between the lion (leo) and the pard, which was the name given to a panther that had no white specks on it.

In Christian art, the leopard represents that beast spoken of in Revelation xiii, 1-8, with seven heads and ten horns; six of the heads bear a NIMBUS, but the seventh, being "wounded to death", lost its power, and consequently is bare.

And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion.

Rev. xiii, 2.

The leopard's head, or King's Mark, on silver is really a lion's head. It is called a leopard, because the O.Fr. heraldic term leopard means a lion passant gardant. See also THE LION IN HERALDRY under LION.

The leopard can never change its spots. A person's character never changes fundamentally; what's "bred in the bone" remains. The allusion is to Jeremiah xiii, 23.

K. Richard: Lions make leopards tame.
Norfolk: Yea, but not change his spots.
SHAKESPEARE: Richard II, I, i.

Leopolita Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Leprechaun (lep' râ kawn). The fairy shoemaker of Ireland, so called because he is always seen working at a single shoe (leith, half; brog, a shoe or brogue). Another of his peculiarities is that he has a purse that never contains more than a single shilling.

Do you not catch the tiny clamour,
Busy click of an elfin hammer,
Voice of the Leprecaun singing shrill,
As he merrily plies his trade.

WM. ALLINGHAM:

The Leprecaun; or Fairy Shoemaker.

He is also called lubrican, CLURICAUNE, etc. In Dekker and Middleton's Honest Whore (Pt. II, III, i), Hippolito speaks of Bryan, the Irish footman, as "your Irish lubrican".

Lernæan Hydra. See HYDRA.

Lesbian. Pertaining to Lesbos, one of the islands of the Greek Archipelago, or to SAPPHO, the famous poetess of Lesbos, and to the homosexual practices attributed to her.

The Lesbian Poets. Terpander, Alcæus, Arion, and SAPPHO, all of Lesbos.

The Lesbian rule. A flexible rule used by ancient Greek masons for measuring curved mouldings, etc.; hence, figuratively, a pliant and accommodating principle or rule of conduct.

Lèse-majesté (lez mazh' estâ) (Fr. from Lat. læsa majestas, injured or violated majesty). A phrase commonly applied to presumptuous conduct on the part of inferiors who do not show sufficient respect for their "betters". The legal phrase Lèse-majesty (lêz) denotes TREASON, a crime against the sovereign.

Lestrigons, or Læstrygones. A fabulous race of cannibal giants who lived in Sicily. ULYSSES (Odys., X) sent two sailors and a messenger to request that he might land, but the king of the place ate one for dinner and the others fled. The Lestrigons gathered on the coast and threw stones at Ulysses and his crew; they departed with all speed, but many men were lost. Cp. POLYPHEMUS.

Let. Let her go, Gallagher! (Austr.). Let's get going, let's start without delay. Tom Gallagher was a well-known driver in Queensland for COBB AND CO.

Letter-gae. A jocular Scottish name (after Allan Ramsay, 1686-1758) for the preceptor of a kirk, he who leads off the singing, and lets go.

There were no sae many hairs on the warlock's face as there's on Letter-gae's ain at this moment.
SCOTT: Guy Mannering, ch. xi.

To let down. To disappoint; not to keep faith or trust; to fail in an obligation.

To let off steam. To give vent to pent up feelings in words, or to work off superabundant energy and high spirits in vigorous physical activity. From the noisy escape of steam from the safety valve of a steam locomotive.

To let up. To relax; to cease to act vigorously; to ease up.

Lethe (lē' thi). In Greek mythology, one of the rivers of HADES, which the souls of all the dead are obliged to taste, that they may forget everything said and done when alive. The word means "forgetfulness".

Here, in a dusky vale where Lethe rolls
Old Bavius sits, to dip poetic souls,
And blunt the sense.

POPE: Dunciad, III, 23.

Letter. The name of a character used to represent a sound, and of a missive or written message. Through O.Fr. lettre, from Lat. littera, a letter of the alphabet, the plural of which (litteræ) denoted an epistle. The plural, with the meaning literature, learning, erudition (as in man of letters, republic of letters, etc.), dates in English at least from the time of King Alfred, and is seen in CICERO'S otium literatum, lettered ease.

There are 26 letters in the English alphabet, but in a fount of type over 200 characters are required; these being made up of small letters (LOWER CASE, capitals, and small capitals; included also are the diphthongs (Æ, æ, etc.) and ligatures (fi, fi, fl, ff, ff), accented letters, figures, fractions, points (, ; : ! ? , etc.), brackets, reference marks, and the common commercial and mathematical signs (£, %, +, ÷ etc.). See FONT.

Letter of Bellerophon. See BELLEROPHON.

Letter of Credit. A letter written by a merchant or banker to another, requesting him to credit the bearer with certain sums of money. Circular notes are letters of credit carried by travellers.

Letter of Licence. An instrument in writing made by a creditor, allowing a debtor longer time for payment of his debt.

Letter of Marque. A commission authorising a PRIVATEER to take reprisals on a hostile nation till satisfaction for injury has been duly made. Marque is from Provençal marcar, Med. Lat. marcare, to seize as a pledge.

Letter of safe conduct. A writ under the GREAT SEAL, guaranteeing safety to and fro to the person named in the passport.

Letter of Slains. In old Scottish law, a petition to the crown from the relatives of a murdered person, declaring that they have received satisfaction (assythment), and asking pardon for the murderer.

Letter of Uriah. See URIAH.

Letter-lock. A lock that cannot be opened unless letters on exterior movable rings are arranged in a certain order.

A strange lock that opens with A M E N.
BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER: The Noble Gentleman.

Letters Missive. An official letter from the Lord CHANCELLOR to a peer requesting him to put in an appearance to a bill filed in CHANCERY and sent in lieu of a summons; also a letter from the sovereign to a DEAN and CHAPTER nominating the person to be elected BISHOP.

Letters Patent, or Overt. See PATENT.

Letters of Administration. The legal instrument granted by the Probate Court to a person appointed administrator to one who has died intestate.

Letters of Credence, or Letters Credential. Formal documents with which a diplomatic agent is furnished accrediting him on his appointment to a post at the seat of a foreign government. They are signed by the sovereign or head of the state and he is not officially recognized until his letters have been presented.

Letters of Horning. In Scottish law, a process issued under the signet instructing a messenger to charge a debtor to pay under penalty of caption if he fails to do so. Cp. TO PUT TO THE HORN under HORN.

Letters of Junius. See JUNIUS.

Lettres de Cachet. See CACHET.

Leucothea (The White Goddess). So Ino, the mortal daughter of CADMUS and wife of Athamas, was called after she became a sea goddess. Athamas in a fit of madness slew one of her sons; she threw herself into the sea with the other, imploring assistance of the gods, who deified both of them. Her son, then renamed PALÆMON, was called by the Romans Portunus or Portumnus, and became the protecting genius of harbours.

Levant (le vǎnt'). He has levanted, i.e. made off, decamped. A levanter is an absconder, especially one who makes a bet and runs away without paying if he loses. From Span. levantar el campo, or la casa, to break up the camp or house.

Levant and Couchant (lev' ánt, kou' chánt) (Fr. rising up and lying down). In legal parlance, cattle which have strayed into another's field, and have been there long enough to lie down and sleep. The owner of the field can demand compensation for such intrusion.

Levant and Ponent Winds. The east wind is the Levant, and the west wind the Ponent. The former is from Lat. levare, to raise (sunrise), and the latter from ponere, to set (sunset).

Forth rush the Levant and the Ponent winds.
MILTON: Paradise Lost, X, 704.

Levant, the region, strictly, applies to the eastern shore of the Mediterranean, but is often used to denote the lands from Greece to Egypt. In the 16th and 17th centuries the Far East was sometimes known as the High Levant.

Levéé (le' vi) (Fr. lever, to rise). A morning assembly or reception. In Britain the word is particularly associated with the royal levees formerly held at St. James's Palace, official occasions when the sovereign received men only, most usually in the afternoon. Before the French Revolution, it was customary for the French monarch to receive visitors (court physicians, nobles, messengers, etc.) at the time of his levée—i.e. while making his morning toilet on rising from bed.

The word levee is also applied to an embankment.

Levéé en masse (Fr.). A levy of all the able-bodied men of a country for its defence or other military service.

On the twenty-third of August, Committee of Public Salvation, as usual through Barrère, had promulgated in words . . . their Report, which is soon made into a Law, of Levy in Mass.

CARLYLE: The French Revolution, Pt. III, Bk. iv, ch. vi.

Level. On the level. Honest and sincere in whatever one is doing or saying. A term from FREEMASONRY.

To do one's level best. To do one's utmost. An expression originating in the Californian gold-diggings.

To find one's own level. To arrive at that position in society, or in an occupation, etc., best suited to one's gifts and attainments.

To level up, or down. To raise or lower to another level, status, or condition.

Your levellers wish to level down as far as themselves; but they cannot bear levelling up to themselves.

DR. JOHNSON: Remark to Boswell, 1763.

Level-headed. Shrewd, business-like, full of common sense; said of one who "has his head screwed on the right way".

Levellers. In Cromwellian times, a group of RADICAL republicans who wanted the franchise for "freeborn Englishmen" (this did not necessarily include servants and labourers) and who were prominent at London and in the ranks of the Army until their power was broken by Cromwell, after the mutinies of 1647 and 1649. Their influence waned steadily, especially after the suppression (1652-1653) of their leader, John Lilburne.

In Irish history, the WHITEBOYS were also called Levellers. Cp. ACEPHALITES.

Lever de Rideau (lev' á de rē' dō) (Fr. curtain-raiser). A short sketch, etc., performed on the stage before the main play begins.

Leviathan (le vi' á thán). The Hebrew name for a monster of the waters. In Job xli, 1, and Ps. lxxiv, 14, it appears to refer to the crocodile; in Ps. civ, 26, it is probably the whale; and in Is. xxvii, 1, it is a sea-serpent.

This great and wide sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both small and great beasts. There go the ships: there is that leviathan, whom thou hast made to play therein.

Ps. civ, 26.

Hence the name is applied to any huge sea-animal or ship of great size.

Like leviathans afloat,

Lay their bulwarks on the brine.

T. CAMPBELL: The Battle of the Baltic.

Hobbes took the name as the title for his famous treatise on "the Matter, Forme, and Power of a Commonwealth Ecclesiastical and Civil" (1651) from the Scriptures as he also did for his BEHEMOTH. His Leviathan is the absolute state.

I have set forth the nature of man (whose Pride and other Passions have compelled him to submit himself to Government;) together with the great power of his Governour, whom I compared to Leviathan, taking that comparison out of the two last verses of the one and fortieth of Job; where God having set forth the great power of Leviathan, calleth him King of the Proud.

Leviathan: Pt. II, ch. xxviii.

The Leviathan of Literature. Dr. Johnson (1709-1784). Cp. CHAM.

Levitation is a term applied to the phenomenon of heavy bodies rising and floating in the air. It is frequently mentioned in Hindu and other writings, and is a not uncommon attribute of Roman Catholic saints. Joseph of Cupertino (1603-1663) was the subject of such frequent levitation that he was forbidden by his superiors to attend choir, and performed his devotions privately where he would not distract others. D. D. Home was alleged by Sir W. Crookes to have this power. Science has not yet found an explanation.

Lex (Lat., law).

Lex non scripta (Lat., unwritten law). The COMMON LAW as distinct from STATUTE or written law. It does not derive its force from being recorded, such compilations being simply remembrancers.

Lex talionis (Lat.). The law of retaliation; TIT FOR TAT.

Lia-fail. The Irish name of the Coronation Stone, or Stone of Destiny, of the ancient Irish Kings. See SCONE; TANIST STONE.

Liars. Liars should have good memories. An old proverb in many languages, quoted by St. JEROME in the 4th century and traced to Quintilian's Mendacem memorem esse oportet, "It is fitting that a liar should be a man of good memory" (Institutes IV, ii, 91). It also occurs in Erasmus's Proverbs (1539) and Montaigne's Essays (I, ix).

Libel. Originally the word denoted a little book (Lat. libellus), as in The Libel of English Policy (c. 1436), the title of a poetical essay advocating a strong navy. Also a plaintiff's statement of his case, which often "defames" the defendant, was called a libel, for it made a "little book". Today it usually applies to a written defamation and is actionable.

In 1637 the three PURITANS, Prynne, Burton and Bastwick, among other punishments, were branded on the cheeks and forehead with the letters "S.L." for "seditious libeller", Prynne later interpreted them as representing Stigmata Laudi.

The greater the truth, the greater the libel, a dictum of Lord Ellenborough (1750-1818), who amplified it by the explanation—"if the language used were true, the person would suffer more than if it were false."

Burns, in The Reproof, attributes the saying to Lord Mansfield:

Do not know that old Mansfield, who writes like the Bible,

Says: "The more 'tis a truth, sir, the more 'tis a libel"?

Liber (Lat., a book).

Liber Albus (Lat., the white book). A compilation of the laws and customs of the City of LONDON, made in 1419 by John Carpenter, town clerk.

Liber Niger. See BLACK BOOK.

Liberal, as a political term, came to be applied to the more "advanced" Whigs in the early 19th century and acquired respectability after the Reform Act of 1832, when the name gradually supplanted that of WHIG. The first administration generally called Liberal was that of Gladstone (1868-1874), the last, that of Asquith (1908-1915).

Liberal Nationals, or National Liberals. Those Liberals who supported the NATIONAL GOVERNMENTS formed after the financial crisis of 1931 and who remained in close co-operation with the CONSERVATIVE party.

Liberal Unionists. Those Liberals who supported the maintenance of the parliamentary union with IRELAND and who opposed Gladstone's HOME RULE measures. From 1886, under Lord Hartington and Joseph Chamberlain, they supported the CONSERVATIVES.

Liberator, The. Simon Bolivar (1783-1830), who established the independence of Bolivia, Columbia, Ecuador, Panama, Peru and Venezuela from Spain in 1825.

Daniel O'Connell (1775-1847), who secured emancipation for Roman Catholics in 1829, was also thus styled. The title derived from the "Order of Liberators" which he founded in 1826 and which was open to anyone who had done an act of service to Ireland. He was also known as "The Counsellor".

Liberator of the World. A name given to Benjamin Franklin (1706-1790).

Libertine. A free-thinker in religion and morals, hence (more commonly) a debauchee, a profligate; one who puts no restraint on his personal indulgence. The application of the word to 16th-century ANABAPTIST sects in the Low Countries and certain of Calvin's opponents at Geneva had derogatory implications. In the New Testament (Acts vi, 9) it is probably used to mean a freedman (Lat. libertinus):

Then there arose certain of the synagogue, which is called the synagogue of the Libertines, . . . disputing with Stephen.

Liberty. Freedom from restraint or control (Lat. liber, free).

Cap of Liberty. See under CAP.

Civil liberty. Freedom from arbitrary restraint in the citizen's conduct of his own affairs; limited only by the laws established on behalf of the community.

Natural liberty. Unrestricted liberty limited only by the laws of nature.

Political liberty. The freedom of a nation from any unjust abridgement of its rights and independence; also the right of the citizen to participate in political government and public office.

Press, Liberty of the. The right to publish without censorship or restraint, subject to the laws of LIBEL and proper judicial processes.

Religious liberty. The freedom to adopt whatever religious beliefs or opinions one chooses and to practise them, provided such freedom in no way interferes with the equal liberty of others.

Liberty Enlightening the World. The colossal statue standing on Bedloe's (or Liberty) Island at the entrance of New York Harbour, presented to the American people by the Republic of France in commemoration of the centenary of the American Declaration of INDEPENDENCE. It was unveiled in 1886 and is the work of the Alsatian sculptor Auguste Bartholdi (1834-1904). The bronze, 151 ft. high (standing on a pedestal 154 ft. high) is of a woman, draped, and holding a lighted torch in her upraised hand.

The statue of Liberty, placed over the entrance of the Palais Royal, Paris, was modelled from Mme Tallien, "Notre-Dame-de-Thermidor".

The price of liberty is eternal vigilance. This oft-quoted maxim is found in a speech made in 1790 by the Irish judge John Philpot Curran (1750-1817), in which he said that "The condition upon which God hath given liberty to man is eternal vigilance." The phrase "eternal vigilance is the price of Liberty" was apparently first used by Wendell Phillips (1811-1884), the American reformer, in 1852.

Liberty boat. The boat taking seamen from a ship for shore leave, such passengers being designated liberty men.

Liberty Hall. The numerous applications of this descriptive phrase may be gathered from Goldsmith's definition—

This is Liberty-hall, gentlemen. You may do just as you please here.

She Stoops to Conquer, II, i.

Dibdin has an opera Liberty Hall, which was first performed in 1785.

Liberty horses. Circus horses that perform evolutions without riders.

Liberty Ships. Standardized prefabricated cargo ships of about 10,000 tons much used by the U.S.A. during World War II.

Liberty Tree, or Pole. In America, the first so called was an elm on Boston Common. A pole inscribed "To his Gracious Majesty George III, Mr. Pitt, and Liberty" was set up in New York in 1766. It was cut down by the British four times, but the fifth remained for ten years.

Liberties. In mediæval England, areas of varying extent free from royal jurisdictions in whole or in part, such as the Marcher lordships (see MARCHES) and Palatine earldoms (see PALATINATE). The areas belonging to the City of London immediately without the City walls were called liberties and in course of time were attached to the nearest ward within the walls. Cp. TOWER LIBERTY.

The Liberties of the Fleet. See under FLEET.

To take liberties. To be unduly familiar, to over-presume; not to be over-scrupulous in handling facts or observing rules.

Libitina. In ancient Italy, the goddess who presided over funerals, her name often being a synonym for death itself. The Romans identified her with PROSERPINA.

Libra (Lat., the balance). The seventh sign of the ZODIAC and the name of one of the ancient constellations, which the SUN enters about 22 September and leaves about 22 October. At this time the day and night being "weighed" would be found equal.

Library. Before the invention of paper the thin inner bark of certain trees was used for writing on; this was in Lat. called liber, which came in time to signify also a "book". Hence our library, the place for books; and librarian, the keeper of books.

A circulating library. A library from which books may be borrowed and taken by members to their homes.

Famous libraries. Strabo says that ARISTOTLE was the first to own a private library. From an uncertain date, there were public libraries in ATHENS, and these were known to Demetrius of Phalerum (4th century B.C.) who suggested to Ptolemy I the founding of a library at Alexandria. This was begun but greatly increased by Ptolemy II and Alexandria became the great library centre of the Greek world. It continued to flourish under the Romans but decline and destruction set in from the end of the 4th century A.D.

Among the numerous great libraries of modern Europe, the VATICAN Library is especially notable for its antiquity and manuscript wealth. The present building was erected by Sixtus V in 1588 and it contains some 905,000 vols. and 60,000 MSS. The Biblioteca Mediceo-Laurenziana, Florence (opened to the public in 1571), has a particularly fine collection of precious classical MSS. Others are the great national libraries, such as the Biblioteca Nazionale Centrale at ROME, founded in 1875; the Biblioteca Nacional, Madrid (founded 1716, formerly the Royal Library); the Bibliothèque Nationale, PARIS (originating in the Petite Librairie of Louis XI); the Lenin State Library, Moscow (formerly the Rumyantsov Museum Collection), among the largest in the world with some 10,000,000 vols. The library of the Academy of Sciences in Leningrad is a noteworthy example of the specialized library.

In the British Isles, the BRITISH MUSEUM library (1753) is a world-famous research centre with about 6,500,000 vols. and 75,000 MSS. The BODLEIAN LIBRARY, Oxford (1598), includes the original University Library based on the collection of Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, and has c. 2,250,000 vols. and a large MSS. collection. Cambridge University Library (15th century) has 2,000,000 vols., 225,000 maps, and some 17,000 MSS. John Rylands Library, Manchester, founded 1888, has a notable collection of MSS. The oldest library in Scotland is that of St. Andrews University, founded in 1456. The National Library of Scotland was founded as the ADVOCATES LIBRARY. The National Library of Wales was founded at Aberystwyth in 1907. The Library of Trinity College, Dublin, possesses many valuable MSS. as well as the BOOK OF KELLS. All these libraries (except John Rylands and St. Andrews) possess the copyright privilege.

The oldest library in the U.S.A. is that of Harvard University (1638) which has over 7,245,000 vols. The Library of Congress, founded in 1800, has some 14,000,000 books and pamphlets and over 18,000,000 MSS., plus maps (over 2,000,000) and music (over 3,000,000 volumes and pieces) and is probably the largest library in the world. New York Public Library has c. 7,000,000 vols. and 9,000,000 manuscript letters and documents. The Henry E. Huntington Library and Art Gallery, San Marino, California, is noted for rare books, and the Pierpont Morgan Library, New York, for INCUNABULA and MSS. Folger Shakespeare Library, Washington, D.C., with 250,000 vols., has the largest collection of Shakespeareana in the world. It must, however, be stressed that figures for holdings of larger libraries can only be approximate and comparison is difficult due to different methods of computation.

Lich. A body (O.E. lik).

Lich fowls. Birds that feed on carrion, as night-ravens, etc.

Lich-gate. The covered entrance to churchyards intended to afford shelter to the coffin and mourners while awaiting the clergyman who is to conduct the cortège into church.

Lich-owl. The screech-owl, superstitiously supposed to foretell death.

Lich-wake, or Lyke-wake. The funeral feast or the waking of a corpse, i.e. watching it all night.

In a pastoral written by Ælfric in 998 for Wilfsige, Bishop of Sherborne, the attendance of the clergy at lyke-wakes is forbidden.

Lich-way. The path by which a funeral is conveyed to church, which not infrequently deviates from the ordinary road. It was long supposed that wherever a dead body passed became a public thoroughfare.

Lick. A lick and a promise. A superficial wash or clean up, as a cat might give a quick lick to its face.

I licked him. I flogged or beat him. A licking is a thrashing, or, in games, a defeat.

To go at a great lick. To run, ride, etc., at a great speed.

To lick a man's shoes, etc. To be humble or abjectly servile towards him. Cp. LICKSPITTLE.

To lick into shape. To make presentable; to bring children up well, etc. Derived from the widespread mediæval belief that bear cubs are born shapeless and have to be licked into shape by their mothers. The story gained currency apparently from the Arab physician AVICENNA (979-1037) who tells it in his encyclopædia.

To lick one's lips. To give evident signs of the enjoyment of anticipation.

To lick the dust, or the ground. See TO KISS THE DUST under KISS.

Lickpenny. Something or someone that makes the money go—that "licks up" the pennies. Lydgate (c. 1370-c. 1451) wrote a humorous poem called London Lyckpenny in which he shows that life in London makes the money fly.

Lickspittle. A toady; the meanest of sycophants.

Lictors. Binders (Lat. ligo, I bind or tie). These Roman officers were so called because they bound the hands and feet of criminals before they executed the sentence of the law.

Lido (lē' dō). An outdoor bathing-place, usually with sunbathing facilities and often providing entertainments, etc. The name is taken from the sandy island called the Lido, facing the Adriatic outside Venice, and a fashionable bathing resort.

Lansbury's Lido. The bathing-place on the bank of the Serpentine in Hyde Park sponsored by George Lansbury when First Commissioner of Works in the second Labour government (1929-1931).

Lie. A falsehood (O.E. lyge; from leogan, to lie).

The greatest lie. In Heywood's Four P's, an interlude (c. 1544), a Palmer, a Pardoner, a Poticary, and a Pedlar disputed as to which could tell the greatest lie. The Palmer said he had never seen a woman out of patience; whereupon the other three threw up the SPONGE, saying such a falsehood could not possibly be outdone.

The lie circumstantial, direct, etc. See COUNTERCHECK QUARRELSOME.

A lie hath no feet. Because it cannot stand alone. In fact, a lie wants twenty others to support it, and even then is in constant danger of tripping. Cp. LIARS SHOULD HAVE GOOD MEMORIES.

A white lie. A conventional lie, such as telling a caller that Mrs. X is not at home (see under HOME).

To give one the lie. To accuse him to his face of telling a falsehood.

To give the lie to. To show that such a statement is false; to belie.

The Father of Lies. SATAN (John viii, 44).

Lie detector. An American invention which records the heart beats of a man under questioning. It is based on the supposedly proven assumption that a human being cannot tell a lie without the pulse of his heart increasing, and this increase of pulsation is recorded. In some States of the Union, the findings of this device are accepted as legal evidence.

Lie (O.E. licgan, to bide or rest).

To lie at the catch. In Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress (ch. xii), Talkative says to Faithful, "You lie at the catch, I perceive." To which Faithful replies, "No, not I; I am only for setting things right." To lie at or on the catch is to lie in wait or to lay a trap to catch one.

To lie in. To be confined in childbirth; to stay in bed beyond one's usual time of rising.

To lie in state. Said of a corpse of a royal or distinguished person that is displayed to the general public.

To lie low. To conceal oneself or one's intentions; to avoid notice.

All this while Brer Rabbit lay low,
JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS: Uncle Remus.

To lie over. To be deferred; as, "This question must lie over till next sessions."

To lie to. To stop the progress of a vessel at sea by reducing the sails and counter-bracing the yards (in a power-driven vessel, to slow down the engines) and to keep head to wind; hence to cease from doing something.

To lie to one's work. To work energetically.

To lie up. To refrain from work, especially through ill health; to rest.

To lie with one's fathers. To be buried in one's native place or with one's ancestors.

I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt.—Gen. xlvii, 30.

Lieutenant (in the British Army, lef ten' ant; in the U.S.A., loo ten' ant; in the Royal Navy, là ten' ant). It is from the Lat. locum-tenens through the Fr. In combination with other ranks and offices it has the general implication of deputy or subordinate as, Lord Lieutenant, Lieutenant Governor, Lieutenant-General.

Life (O.E. lif). Drawn from life. Drawn or described from some real person or object.

High life. The life of high society.

For life. As long as life continues.

For the life of me. True as I am alive. Even if my life depended on it.

Nor could I for my life see how the creation of the world had anything to do with what I was talking about.

GOLDSMITH: Vicar of Wakefield, ch. xiv.

Large as life. Of the same size as the object represented, life size; in person, in the flesh, "Here she is, large as life."

Low life. The life of the poor and lower grades of society.

On my life. I will answer for it by my life.

To bear a charmed life. To escape accidents or danger with amazing good luck.

To see life. To "KNOCK ABOUT" town, where life may be seen at its fullest; to move in smart or fast society.

To the life. In exact imitation. "Done to the life."

Life Guards. The two senior cavalry regiments of the HOUSEHOLD TROOPS, the members of which are not less than six feet tall; hence, a fine, tall, manly fellow is called "a regular Life Guardsman".

Life preserver. A loaded short stick for self-defence; also a buoyant jacket, belt, etc., to support the human body in water.

Still life. In artistic representation, inanimate objects such as books, furniture, fruit, etc.

Lift. To have one at a lift is to have one in your power. When a wrestler has his antagonist in his hands and lifts him from the ground, he has him "at a lift", or in his power.

"Sirra," says he, "I have you at a lift.
Now you are come unto your latest shift."
PERCY: Reliques (Guy and Amaranth).

Air-lift. An organized manœuvre to transport troops or stores to a destination by air. The Berlin air-lift, to victual the British and American zones of the city after the Russian embargo on all land transport, began 26 June 1948, and ended 12 May 1949, having made 195,530 flights and carried 1,414,000 tons of food, coal and other stores.

Lifter. A thief, one who lifts to purloin. We still speak of a "shop-lifter" and lifter is a Scottish term for a cattle-stealer.

Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter?
SHAKESPEARE: Troilus and Cressida, I, ii.

In 18th-century English "a lifter" denoted a heavy drinker. Cp. ELBOW-LIFTING.

Lifting the little finger. See under FINGER.

Ligan, or Lagan. See FLOTSAM AND JET-SAM.

Light (O.E. leoht). The O.E. is the same for both senses of this word, i.e. illumination and smallness of weight, but in the former sense it is the O.H.Ger. liohht and in the latter O.H.Ger. liht.

Ancient lights. See under ANCIENT.

Inner Light. Inward or spiritual light; knowledge divinely imparted; as used by QUAKERS, the light of Christ in the soul.

Quakers (that, like to lanterns, bear
Their light within 'em) will not swear.
BUTLER: Hudibras, II, ii.

The Light of the Age. Maimonides or Rabbi Moses ben Maimon of Cordova (1135-1204).

The Light of Asia. Gautama BUDDHA. The Light of Asia, or the Great Renunciation was the name given by Sir Edwin Arnold to his famous narrative poem dealing with the life and teachings of Buddha (1879).

The Light of the World (Lat. Lux Mundi). Jesus Christ; allegorically portrayed by Holman Hunt in his famous picture (1854) showing Christ carrying a lantern knocking at the door of the soul. Sir Arthur Sullivan has an oratorio of this title (1873); and Sir Edwin Arnold a poem (1891) in which Christ is the central figure as the founder of Christianity. Cp. LIGHT OF ASIA.

Then spake Jesus unto them, saying, I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.
John viii, 12.

The light of thy countenance. God's smile of approbation and love.

Lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us.
Ps. iv, 6.

According to his lights. According to his information or knowledge of the matter; according to his way of looking at things.

Before the lights. In theatrical parlance, on the stage, i.e. before the foot-lights.

Light o' love. An inconstant capricious or loose-woman; a harlot.

Men of light and leading. Men capable of illuminating the way and guiding the steps of others. The phrase is Burke's:

The men of England, the men, I mean, of light and leading in England . . . would be ashamed . . . to profess any religion in name, which by their proceedings, they appear to contemn.—Reflections on the Revolution in France.

He seems to have derived it from Milton, who, in his Address to the Parliament, prefixed to his notes on the Judgment of Martin Bucer Concerning Divorce, says:

I owe no light, or leading received from any man in the discovery of this truth, what time I first undertook it in "the Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce".

Light gains make a heavy purse. Small profits and a quick return is the best way of gaining wealth.

To bring to light. To discover and expose; to reveal.

The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answered; he would never bring them to light.
SHAKESPEARE: Measure for Measure, III, ii.

To light upon. To come across by chance; to discover by accident. Thus, Dr. Johnson wrote to Mrs. Thrale: "How did you light upon your specifick for the tooth-ach?"

To make light of. To treat as of no importance; to take little notice of.

Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come unto the marriage.

Lighthouse

But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandise.

Matt. xxii, 4, 5.

To put out one's light. To kill him, "send him into the outer darkness". SHAKESPEARE's Othello says, "Put out the light and then put out the light" (V, ii), meaning first the light in the room and then Desdemona's light (life).

To see the light. To be born; to be converted; to come to a full understanding or realization of something.

To stand in one's own light. To act in such a way as to hinder one's own advancement.

To throw, or shed light upon. To elucidate, to explain.

Light comedian. One who takes humorous, but not low parts.

Light-fingered. See under FINGER.

Light Horse Harry. Nickname of Henry Lee (1756-1818), American cavalry officer and father of the Confederate Commander-in-Chief, Robert E. Lee. He defeated the British at Paulus Hook in the War of Independence.

Light Infantry. In the British Army, infantry carrying less equipment than normal and trained to manœuvre at high speed. They were introduced into the British Army by Sir John Moore (1761-1809).

Light troops. A term formerly applied to light cavalry, i.e. lancers and hussars, who were neither such large men as the "Heavies" or DRAGOONS, nor so heavily equipped: it also applies to lightly equipped forces generally.

Light Year. A scientific unit for measuring stellar distances. Light travels at the rate of 186,000 miles per second; a light year, or the distance travelled by light in a year, is about 6 million million miles.

Lighthouse. See PHAROS.

Lighthouse of the Mediterranean. The name given to the volcano Stromboli, one of the Lipari Islands in the Tyrrhenian Sea.

Lightning. Hamilcar (d. 228 B.C.), the Carthaginian general, was called "Barca", the Phœnician for "lightning" (Heb. Barak), both on account of the rapidity of his march and for the severity of his attacks.

Chain lightning. Two or more flashes of lightning repeated without intermission.

Forked lightning. Zigzag lightning.

Globular lightning. A ball of fire which sometimes falls on the earth and flies off with an explosion.

Sheet lightning. A diffuse discharge over a wide area.

Lightning conductor. A metal rod raised above a building in metallic contact with the earth, to carry off the lightning and prevent its injuring the building.

Lightning preservers. The EAGLE, the sea-calf, and the LAUREL were the most approved classical preservatives against lightning. JUPITER chose the first, Augustus CÆSAR the second, and Tiberius the third (Columella, x; Suetonius in Vit. Aug., xc; ditto in Vit. Tib., lxi). Cp. HOUSE-LEEK.

Liguria. The ancient name of a part of Cisalpine GAUL, and now a modern territorial division of Italy including the provinces of Genoa, Imperia, Savona, and Spezia. NAPOLEON founded a "Ligurian Republic" with Genoa as its capital, and embracing also Venetia and a part of Sardinia. It was annexed to France in 1805.

The Ligurian Sage. Aulus Persius Flaccus (A.D. 34-62), born at Volaterræ, in Etruria, and famous for his Satires.

Like Billyo, or Billio. With great gusto or enthusiasm. Among the suggested origins of this slang term are (1) that Joseph Billio, rector of Wickham Bishops, ejected for nonconformity and first NON-CONFORMIST minister of Maldon (1696), was noted for his energy and enthusiasm; (2) one of Garibaldi's Lieutenants, a SWASHBUCKLER, Nino Biglio, used to dash enthusiastically into action shouting "I am Biglio! Follow me you rascals, and fight like Biglio!" (3) that it has arisen from George Stephenson's locomotive "Puffing Billy" and "Puffing like Billy-o" and "Running like Billy-o" were common phrases.

Lilburne. If no one else were alive, John would quarrel with Lilburne. John Lilburne was a leader of the LEVELLERS and much given to quarrelling with authority in many forms.

Is John departed? and is Lilburne gone?
Farewell to both—to Lilburne and to John.
Yet, being gone, take this advice from me.
Let them not both in one grave buried be.
Here lay ye John, lay Lilburne thereabout;
For if they both should meet, they would fall out.

Epigrammatic Epitaph.

Lilith. A female demon, probably of Babylonian origin, supposed to haunt wildernesses in stormy weather, and to be especially dangerous to children. The name is from a Semitic root meaning "night" which was the special time of this demon's activities. In Rabbinical writings, she is supposed to have been the first wife of ADAM. See THE DEVIL AND HIS DAM under DEVIL. She is referred to in Is. xxxiv, 14, as the "screech-owl" in the Authorized Version; in the Revised Version as the "night-monster"; and in the Vulgate as LAMIA. A superstitious cult of Lilith persisted among certain Jews until the 7th century. Goethe introduced her in his Faust, and Rossetti in his Eden Bower made the serpent the instrument of Lilith's vengeance—

"Help, sweet snake, sweet lover of Lilith!
(Alas the hour!)
And let God learn how I loved and hated
Men in the image of God created."

Lilli-Burlero (lil' i bĕr lĕr' ō). Said to have been with "Bullen-a-la" the watchwords of the Irish Roman Catholics in their massacres of the PROTESTANTS in 1641. They were adopted as the refrain of a piece of political doggerel written by Lord Wharton, satirizing James II, which influenced popular sentiment at the time of the GLORIOUS REVOLUTION of 1688. Burnet says, "It made an impression on the [King's] army that cannot be imagined. . . . The whole army, and at last the people, both in city and country, were singing it perpetually. . . . never had so slight a thing so great an effect."

The song is referred to in Tristram Shandy, and is given in PERCY'S RELIQUES. The air is attributed to Purcell, but it is probably an adaptation of an older tune.

(Wharton afterwards boasted that he had sung a king out of three kingdoms.) But in truth, the success of Lilliburlero was the effect, and not the cause, of that excited state of public feeling which produced the Revolution.

MACAULAY: History of England, ch. ix.

Lilli Marlene. A German song of World War I (based on a poem written by a German soldier, Hans Leip, in 1917) composed by Norbert Schultze in 1938 and sung by the Swedish singer Lale Anderson. It became very popular during World War II, especially with the Afrika Korps, and the recorded version was played nightly by Radio Belgrade from the late summer of 1941 virtually until the end of hostilities. Other German stations plugged it and it was picked up and adopted by the British 8th Army, the English version of the lyric being by T. Connor. There were French, Italian and numerous other renderings of what became the classic song of the war.

Underneath the lantern
By the barrack gate,
Darling I remember
The way you used to wait

My Lilli of the lamplight,
My own Lilli Marlene.

Lilliput. The land of pigmies or Lilliputians (Swift: Gulliver's Travels).

Lily, The. There is a tradition that the lily sprang from the repentant tears of EVE as she went forth from PARADISE.

In Christian art the lily is an emblem of chastity, innocence, and purity. In pictures of the ANNUNCIATION, GABRIEL is sometimes represented as carrying a lily-branch, while a vase containing a lily stands before the Virgin who is kneeling in prayer. St. JOSEPH holds a lily-branch in his hand, indicating that his wife Mary was a virgin.

The lily in the field in Matt. vi, 29, "that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these", is the wild lily, probably a species of iris. Our "lily of the valley", with which this is sometimes confused, is a different plant, one of the genus Convallaria.

Lily of France. The device of Clovis was three black toads, but the story goes that an aged hermit of Joye-en-valle saw a miraculous light stream into his cell one night and an ANGEL appeared to him holding an azure shield of wonderful beauty, emblazoned with three gold lilies that shone like stars. This he was commanded to give to Queen Clothilde, who gave it to her husband, and his arms were everywhere victorious. The device thereupon became the emblem of France (see Les Petits Bollandistes, Vol. VI). Cp. FLEUR-DE LIS.

The City of Lilies. Florence is so called from its coat-of-arms.

To paint, or gild the lily. See PAINT.

Limbo. Slang for a mischievous rascal, a young imp; it is short for the older Limb of the Devil, where the word implies "agent" or "scion". Dryden called Fletcher "a limb of Shakespeare".

Limb of the law. A clerk articulated to a lawyer, or SHERIFF's officer, a police officer, or other agent of the law; they obey the head of their office or department.

Limbo (Lat. limbus, border, fringe, edge). The borders of HELL; that portion assigned by the SCHOOLMEN to those departed spirits to whom the benefits of redemption did not apply through no fault of their own.

The Limbo of Children (Lat. limbus infantium). The limbo for children who die before baptism or before they are responsible for their actions.

Limbo of the Fathers (Lat. limbus patrum). The half-way house between earth and HEAVEN, where the PATRIARCHS and prophets who died before Christ's crucifixion await the last day, when they will be received into HEAVEN. Some hold that this is the "HELL" into which Christ descended after He gave up the ghost on the cross.

SHAKESPEARE (Henry VIII, V, iv) uses limbo patrum for "QUOD", jail, confinement.

I have some of 'em in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three days.

The Limbus of Fools, or Paradise of Fools. As fools or idiots are not responsible for their works, the SCHOOLMEN held that they were not punished in PURGATORY and cannot be received into HEAVEN, so they go to a special "Paradise of Fools" (cp. FOOL'S PARADISE under FOOL).

Then might you see
Cowls, hoods, habits, with their wearers tossed
And fluttered into rags; then relics, beads,
Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. All these, upwhirled aloft,
Fly o'er the backside of the world far-off,
Into a Limbo large and broad, since called
The Paradise of Fools.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, III, 498.

Limbus of the Moon. See MOON.

Limehouse, or Limehousing. Once common for violent abuse of one's political opponents: so called from a speech by Lloyd George at Limehouse, London, on 30 July 1909, when he poured forth scorn and abuse on dukes, landlords, financial magnates, etc.

Lime-light. A vivid light, giving off little heat, produced by the combustion of oxygen and hydrogen on a surface of lime. Also called Drummond Light, after Thomas Drummond (1797-1840), who invented it in 1826. It was tried at the South Foreland lighthouse in 1861, but its main use developed in the theatre, where it was used to throw a powerful beam upon one player on the stage to the exclusion of others. Hence the phrase to be in the lime-light, to be in the full glare of public attention.

Limerick. A nonsense verse in the metre popularized by Edward Lear in his Book of Nonsense (1846), of which the following is an example:

There was a young lady of Wilts,
Who walked up to Scotland on stilts;
When they said it was shocking
To show so much stocking,
She answered, "Then what about kilts?"

The name has been said to come from the chorus "Will you come up to Limerick" which was supposed to follow each verse as it was improvised by a member of a convivial party, but there is no real evidence for this.

Limey. In American and Australian slang, a British sailor or ship, or just a Briton. It derives from the practice of issuing lime juice to a ship's crew to combat scurvy.

Limp. This word, formed from the initials of Louis (XIV), James (II), his wife Mary (of Modena), and the Prince (of Wales) was used as a JACOBITE toast in the time of William III. Cp. NOTARIKON.

Alexandra limp. See ALEXANDRA.

Lincoln. The devil looking over Lincoln. See under DEVIL.

Lincoln Green. Lincoln was noted formerly for its light green, as was Coventry for its blue, and Yorkshire for its grey cloth. Cp. KENDAL GREEN.

Lincoln Imp. A grotesque carving, having long ears and only one leg, in the Angel Choir of Lincoln Cathedral.

Lincoln's Inn. One of the four INNS OF COURT in London. The inn takes its name from its landlord Thomas de Lincoln, king's serjeant, and is probably of late 14th-century origin. The Old Hall dates from the reign of Henry VII. The chapel was completed by Inigo Jones in 1643.

Lindabrides (lin dá bri' dez). A heroine in The Mirror of Knighthood, whose name at one time was a synonym for a kept mistress or courtesan.

"Well—I have my Master Tressilian's head under my belt by this lucky discovery, that is one thing certain; and I will try to get a sight of this Lindabrides of his, that is another."

SCOTT: Kenilworth, ch. xxviii.

Linden. The German name (widely used in England) for lime-trees. Unter den Linden (under the limes) is the name of the principal street in Berlin.

Baucis (see PHILEMON) was converted into a linden tree.

Lindor. One of the conventional names given by the classical poets to a rustic swain, a lover en bergère.

Line. The Line. The Equator; also in the British Army all regular infantry regiments except the Foot Guards, and the Rifle Brigade, are called line regiments. The term sometimes includes cavalry regiments.

All along the line. In every particular, as, "The accuracy of the statement is contested all along the line by persons on the spot."

Crossing the line. Sailing across the Equator; advantage is usually taken of this for ceremonial practical joking aboard ship. Those who have not previously crossed the line are summoned to the court of NEPTUNE for trial, and are usually ducked, sometimes lathered and roughly shaved, given "soap pills" to swallow, etc. As at present practised the whole affair constitutes a good-humoured and amusing interlude, but in former days some of the buffoonery and horse-play was decidedly rough. Such performances have a long history and may have begun as propitiatory rites to the deities of the ocean. At one time similar ceremonies were performed when a ship entered the thirty-ninth parallel and also when passing the Straits of GIBRALTAR and the Cape of Good Hope.

Hard lines. Hard luck, a hard lot. Here lines means an allotment measured out.

Line of battle. The order of troops drawn up for action. In the old set-piece battle, there were three lines—the van, the main body, and the rear. Fleets are drawn up in line of battle, also in line abreast, line abreast, etc. To break the enemy's line is to derange his order of battle, and so put him to confusion.

Line of beauty. In art, a line of undulating curvature, usually in the form of a slender elongated letter S.

Line of country. One's business or occupation or specialism.

Line of direction. In mechanics, the line in which a body moves, a force acts, or motion is communicated; or the line drawn from the centre of gravity of a body perpendicular to the horizon.

Line of life. In palmistry, the crease in the left hand beginning above the web of the thumb, and running towards or up to the wrist. The nearer it approaches the wrist, the longer will be the life, according to palmists. If long and deeply marked, it indicates long life with very little trouble; if crossed or cut with other marks, it indicates sickness.

Line upon line. Admonition or instruction repeated little by little (a line at a time).

Line upon line, line upon line, here a little and there a little.—Is. xxviii, 10.

No day without its line. A saying attributed to the Greek artist Apelles (nulla dies sine linea), who said he never passed a day without doing at least one line, and to this steady industry owed his great success. The words were adopted by Anthony Trollope as his motto.

On the line. Said of a picture that, at the Royal Academy, is hung in a position that places its centre about the level of the spectator's eye.

The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places (Ps. xvi, 6). The part allotted to me and measured off by a measuring line. The allusion is to drawing a line to mark out the lot of each tribe, hence line became the synonym of lot, and lot means position or destiny.

The thin red line. British infantrymen in action. The old 93rd Highlanders were so described at the battle of Balaclava (1854) by W. H. Russell, because they did not take the trouble to form into a square. Their regimental magazine was later called The Thin Red Line.

To fall into line with. To agree with; to act in conformity with. Derived from the falling-in of soldiers into straight lines. See also TO FALL IN under FALL.

To lay it on the line. In American usage means "to give money"; "to give the information required"; "to speak openly, or frankly about something".

To read between the lines. To discern the hidden meaning; to draw certain conclusions which are not apparent on the surface. One method of cryptography is to write so that the hidden message is revealed only when alternate lines are read.

To shoot a line. To exaggerate; to tell a tall story; to boast.

To toe the line. To obey orders; to conform with. Athletes awaiting the starting signal of a race line up with their toes just touching the starting line.

What line are you in? What is your trade or profession? Commercial travellers are said to be in the "grocery line", "the hardware line", etc. Cp. LINE OF COUNTRY above.

Line engraving. The incising of lines on a metal plate for subsequent printing. It differs from etching in that no chemicals are used. The process dates from the first half of the 15th century. See LITTLE MASTERS.

Line-up. A phrase with various meanings; a parade of persons, especially criminals, for inspection or recognition; an arrangement of players at the start of a game; the deploying of opposing forces before a battle.

Lingua Franca. A species of Italian mixed with French, Greek, Arabic, etc., spoken on the coasts of the Mediterranean; also any mixture of languages serving as a means of communication between different peoples. Cp. PIDGIN ENGLISH.

Lining. Lining of the Pocket. Money.

When the court tailor wished to obtain the patronage of BEAU BRUMMEL, he made him a present of a dress-coat lined with bank-notes. Brummel wrote a letter of thanks stating that he quite approved of the coat, and especially admired the lining.

Linnaean System. The system of classification adopted by the great Swedish botanist Linnæus (1707-1778), who arranged his three kingdoms of animals, vegetables, and minerals into classes, orders, genera, species, and varieties, according to certain characteristics.

Linne, The Heir of. The hero of an old ballad given in PERCY'S RELIQUES, which tells how he wasted his substance in riotous living, and, having spent all, sold his estates to his steward, keeping only a poor lodge. When no one would lend him more money he tried to hang himself but fell to the ground instead. When he came to he espied two chests full of beaten gold, and a third full of white money, over which was written:

Once more, my sonne, I sette thee clere;
Amend thy life and follies past;
For but thou amend thee of thy life,
That rope must be thy end at last.

He now returned to his old hall, where he was refused the loan of forty pence by his quondam steward; one of the guests remarked to the steward that he ought to have lent it, as he had bought the estate cheap enough. "Cheap call you it?" said the steward, "why, he shall have it back for 100 marks less." "Done," said the heir of Linne, and recovered his estates.

Lion. An honourable nickname. Among its recipients are:

Ali, son of Abu Taleb, and son-in-law of MOHAMMED, called The Lion of God (c. 597-661). His mother called him at birth Al Haidara, "the Rugged Lion".

Ali Pasha, called The Lion of Janina (1741, 1788-1822).

Damelowicz, Prince of Halicz, who founded Lemberg (Lion City) in 1259.

Gustavus Adolphus, called The Lion of the North (1594, 1611-1632).

Henry, Duke of Bavaria and Saxony, was called The Lion for his courage and daring (1129, 1142-1195).

Louis VIII of France was called The Lion because he was born under the sign LEO (1187, 1223-1226).

Mohammed ibn Daud, nephew of Togrul Beg, the Perso-Turkish monarch (c. 1029, 1063-1072), was surnamed Alp Arslan, The Valiant Lion.

Richard I Cœur de Lion (Lion's Heart), so called for his bravery (1157, 1189-1199).

William of Scotland, The Lion, so called because he chose a red lion rampant for his cognizance (1143, 1165-1214).

St. MARK the EVANGELIST is symbolized by a lion because he begins his gospel with the scenes of St. JOHN THE BAPTIST and Christ in the wilderness.

A lion is the emblem of the tribe of Judah; Christ is called "the Lion of the tribe of Judah".

Judah is a lion's whelp: . . . he couched as a lion, and as an old lion; who shall rouse him up?
Gen. xlix, 9.

Among the titles of the Emperor of Ethiopia are, Conquering Lion of the tribe of Judah, Elect of God, King of Kings of Ethiopia.

A lion is a symbol of Britain.

The Lion in Story and Legend.

CYBELE is represented as riding in a chariot drawn by two lions.

Hippomenes and ATALANTA (fond lovers) were metamorphosed into lions by Cybele.

HERCULES is sometimes represented clad in the skin of the NEMEAN LION.

The story of ANDROCLES and the lion has many parallels, the most famous of which are those related of St. JEROME and St. Gerasimus:

While St. Jerome was lecturing one day, a lion entered the schoolroom, and lifted up one of its paws. All his disciples fled; but Jerome, seeing that the paw was wounded, drew a thorn out of it and dressed the wound. The lion, out of gratitude, showed a wish to stay with its benefactor. Hence the SAINT is represented as accompanied by a lion.

St. Gerasimus, says the story, saw on the banks of the Jordan a lion coming to him limping on three feet. When it reached the saint it held up to him the right paw, from which St. Gerasimus extracted a large thorn. The grateful beast attached itself to the saint, and followed him about as a dog.

Similar tales are told by the BOLLANDISTS in the Acta Sanctorum; and in more recent times a story was told of Sir George Davis, an English consul at Florence at the beginning of the 19th century, when he went to see the Duke of Tuscany's lions. There was one that the keepers could not tame; but no sooner did Sir George appear than it showed every symptom of joy. He entered its cage, and the lion licked his face and wagged its tail. Sir George told the duke that he had brought up the creature, but had sold it when it became older and more dangerous.

Sir Iwain de Galles, a hero of romance, was attended by a lion which he had delivered from the attacks of a serpent.

Sir Geoffrey de Latour was aided by a lion against the SARACENS, but it was drowned on attempting to board the vessel which was carrying Sir Geoffrey away from the HOLY LAND.

George Adamson, a game warden of Kenya, and his wife brought up the lioness Elsa. After returning to the jungle and rearing cubs she frequently visited the Adamsons. She died in 1961.

The Lion in Heraldry.

Ever since 1164, when it was adopted as a device by Philip I, Duke of Flanders, the lion has figured prominently as an emblem in HERALDRY and consequently in PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGNS. The earliest and most important attitude of the heraldic lion is rampant (the device of SCOTLAND), but it is also shown as passant, passant gardant (as in the shield of ENGLAND), salient, sejant, etc., and even dormant. A lion statant gardant is the device of the Duke of Norfolk; a lion rampant, with the tail between the legs and turned over its back, the badge of Edward IV as Earl of March; a sleeping lion, the device of Richard I; and a crowned lion the badge of Henry VIII.

The lions in the arms of England. Three lions passant gardant, i.e. walking and showing full face. The first was that of Rollo, Duke of Normandy, and the second that of Maine, which was added to Normandy. These were the two lions borne by WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR and his descendants. Henry II added a third to represent the Duchy of Aquitaine, which came to him through his wife Eleanor. Any lion not rampant is called a lion leopardé, and the French call the lion passant a léopard; accordingly NAPOLEON said to his soldiers "Let us drive these leopards (the English) into the sea."

Since 1603 the royal ARMS have been supported by (DEXTER) the English lion and (SINISTER) the Scottish UNICORN, but prior to the accession of James I the sinister supporter was a family badge. Edward III, with whom supporters began, had a lion and an EAGLE; Henry IV, an antelope and SWAN; Henry V, a lion and antelope; Edward IV, a lion and bull; Richard III, a lion and boar; Henry VII, a lion and DRAGON; Henry VIII, Mary I, and Elizabeth I, a lion and greyhound.

The lion in the arms of Scotland is derived from the earls of Northumberland and Huntingdon, from whom some of the Scottish monarchs were descended. See LYON KING OF ARMS.

The Lion as an emblem of the Resurrection. According to tradition, the lion's whelp is born dead, and remains so for three days, when the father breathes on it and it receives life.

A lion at the feet of crusaders, or martyrs, in effigy, signifies that they died for their cause.

The Lion of St. Mark, or of Venice.

A winged lion sejant, holding an open book with the inscription Pax tibi, Marce, Evangelista Meus. A sword-point rises above the book on the DEXTER side, and the whole is encircled by an AUREOLE.

Lions in Public-house Signs. See PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGNS.

The lion will not touch the true prince (Shakespeare, Henry IV, Pt. I, II, iv). This is an old superstition, and has been given a Christian significance, the "true prince" being the MESSIAH. It is applied to any prince of blood royal, supposed at one time to be hedged around with a sort of divinity.

Fetch the Numidian lion I brought over;
If she be sprung from royal blood, the lion
He'll do her reverence, else . . .
He'll tear her all to pieces.

JOHN FLETCHER: The Mad Lover, IV, v.

To lionize a person is either to show him the LIONS, or to make a lion of him by fêting him and treating him as a celebrity. To meet a lion in one's path. To encounter a daunting obstacle.

To place oneself in the lion's mouth. To expose oneself to danger needlessly and recklessly.

To twist the Lion's tail. To insult or impose humiliating treatment on Great Britain when she is unable to retaliate; the lion being a British national emblem.

Lion-hunter. One who hunts up a celebrity, especially to adorn or give prestige to a party. Mrs. Leo Hunter in Dickens's Pickwick Papers is a good satire on the name and character of a lion-hunter.

The Lion Sermon. Preached annually in October at St. Katharine Cree Church, Leadenhall Street, LONDON, to commemorate "the wonderful escape" of Sir John Gayer from a lion which he met in the desert whilst travelling in Turkish dominions. Sir John was Lord Mayor of London in 1646.

Lion's Head. In fountains the water is often made to issue from the mouth of a lion, an ancient custom. The Egyptians thus symbolized the inundation of the Nile, which happens when the SUN is in LEO (23 July to 22 August), and the Greeks and Romans adopted the device for their fountains.

Lion's Provider. A JACKAL; a foil to another man's wit, a humble friend who plays into your hand to show you to the best advantage. The jackal feeds on the lion's leavings, and is said to yell to advise the lion that it has roused up his prey, serving the lion in much the same way as a dog serves a sportsman.

... the poor jackals are less foul,
As being the brave lion's keen providers
Than human insects catering for spiders.
BYRON: Don Juan, ix, 27.

Lion's share. The larger part: all or nearly all. In Æsop's Fables, several beasts joined the lion in a hunt; but, when the spoil was divided, the lion claimed one quarter in right of his prerogative, one for his superior courage, one for his dam and cubs, "and as for the fourth, let who will dispute it with me". Awed by his frown, the other beasts silently withdrew.

Lions. The lions of a place are the sights worth seeing, or the celebrities; so called from the ancient custom of showing visitors the lions at the TOWER, as chief of LONDON sights. The Tower menagerie was abolished in 1834.

Lip. Austrian lip. See AUSTRIAN LIP.

Lip homage, or service. Verbal devotion; insincere regard; honouring with the lips while the heart takes no part or lot in the matter. See Matt. xv, 8; Is. xxix, 13.

To bite one's lip. To express vexation and annoyance, or to suppress some emotion as anger or laughter.

To curl the lip. To express contempt or disgust with the mouth.

To keep a stiff upper lip. To be self-reliant; to bear difficulties and danger with fortitude.

To give someone lip. To be cheeky or abusive.

To hang the lip. To drop the under lip in sullenness or contempt.

A foolish hanging of thy nether lip,
SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, II, iv.

To shoot out the lip. To show scorn.

All they that see me laugh me to scorn; they shoot out the lip, they shake the head.
Ps. xxii, 7.

Lir, King. The earliest known original of the king in SHAKESPEARE's King Lear, an ocean god of early Irish and British legend. He figures in the romance The Fate of the Children of Lir as the father of FIONNUALA. On the death of Fingula, the mother of his daughter, he married the wicked Aoife, who, through spite, transformed the children of Lir into swans.

Lir appears in the MABINOGION as Llŷr and in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Britonum as Leir, the founder of Leicester, from which latter source Shakespeare derived his plot. See LEAR, KING.

Lisbon. Camoëns, in the LUSIADS, derives the name from Ulyssippo (Ulysses' polis, or city), and says that it was founded by ULYSSES; it is in fact the Phœnician Olisippo, the walled town.

Lit de justice (lê dĕ zhus tĕs) (Fr., bed of justice). Properly the bed on which the French king reclined when he attended the deliberations of a parlement (a judicial body, which also registered royal edicts, etc.); hence the session itself. When the king was present he was the fount of authority. The first lit de justice is supposed to have been held by Louis XI and the last was that of Louis XVI in 1787.

Litotes (li tō' tĕz). Understatement, especially emphasizing an affirmative by a negative of its contrary, as, "a citizen of no mean city", i.e. a citizen of a great or illustrious city.

Little. Little by little. Gradually; a little at a time.

Many a little makes a mickle. The real Scottish proverb is: "A wheen o' mickles mak's a muckle", where mickle means little and muckle much; but the O.E. micel or mycel means "much", so that if the Scots proverb is accepted we must give a forced meaning to the word "mickle".

Little Britain. The name given in the old romances to Armorica, now Brittany; also called Benwic.

Also a street in the City of LONDON, originally Bretton-Strete, becoming eventually Lyttell Bretton in late Elizabethan times. It is said to be named from a Duke of Brittany who had a residence there. It was once noted for its booksellers.

Little Britain may truly be called the heart's core of the city, the stronghold of true John Bullism.

WASHINGTON IRVING: The Sketch Book (Little Britain).

Little Corporal. NAPOLEON Bonaparte. So called after the battle of Lodi in 1796, from his low stature, youthful age, and great courage. He was barely 5 ft. 2 in. in height.

Little-endians. See BIG ENDIANS under BIG.

Little Englanders. An uncomplimentary term first applied in Victorian times to critics and opponents of imperialism and overseas expansion.

That is why I distrust . . . the late Government, because in their ranks were men who notoriously were "Little England" men, who took every opportunity of carping at and criticizing those brave Englishmen who have made for us homes across the sea, men who are opposed to any extension of the responsibilities and obligations of Empire, men who are unworthy sons of the ancestors who have made this country what it is.

JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN:
Speech at Walsall (15 July 1895).

Little Entente. The name given to the political alliance formed between Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, and Rumania (1920-1922). Originally to prevent the restoration of HABSBURG power, it became broader in scope. It was brought to an end by the destruction of Czechoslovakia after the Munich Agreement (1938).

Little Gentleman in Velvet. A favourite JACOBITE toast in the reign of Queen Anne. The reference was to the mole that raised the molehill against which William III's horse Sorrel stumbled (21 February 1702). The king broke his collar-bone and died at Kensington (8 March).

Little go. A nickname for the former Previous (Entrance) Examination for undergraduates at Cambridge, unless excused on account of successes at other examinations. It ceased to operate after 1961, owing to new regulations. Cp. SMALLS.

Little Jack Horner. See JACK HORNER under JACK.

Little John. A character in the ROBIN HOOD cycle, a big stalwart man whose surname was also said to be Nailor. On his first encounter with Robin Hood he "tumbl'd him into the brook" and the outlaws changed the victor's name from John Little to "Little John".

He was, I must tell you, but seven foot high,
And, maybe, an ell in the waste;
A sweet pretty lad; much feasting they had;
Bold Robin the christ'ning grac'd.

Robin Hood and Little John (given in RITSON'S Robin Hood).

Little Magician. The nickname of Martin van Buren, President of the U.S.A. (1837-1841).

Little Mary. See under MARY.

Little Master. A name applied to certain German designers who worked for engravers, etc., in the 16th century, because their designs were on a small scale, fit for copper or wood. They were Hans Sebald, the two Behams, Bartel, George Pencz, Jacob Binck, Heinrich Aldegraver, and Albrecht Altdorfer.

They continued in the tradition begun by Albrecht Dürer of Nuremberg (1471-1528). See LINE ENGRAVING.

Little Parliament. BAREBONES PARLIAMENT.

Little People. Fairies (see FAIRY).

Little Red Ridinghood. This nursery story is also common to Sweden, Germany, and France. It comes from the French Le Petit Chaperon Rouge, in Charles Perrault's Contes des Temps, and was probably derived from Italy. The finale, which tells of the arrival of a huntsman who slits open the wolf and restores Little Red Ridinghood and her grandmother to life, is a German addition.

Little Rhody. The State of Rhode Island, U.S.A.

Little Willie. See LAUGHING MURDERER.

Liver. In the AUSPICES taken by the Greeks and Romans before battle, if the liver of the animals sacrificed was healthy and blood-red, the OMEN was favourable; but if pale it augured defeat.

The liver was anciently supposed to be the seat of love; hence, in SHAKESPEARE'S Love's Labour's Lost (IV, iii), when Longaville reads the verses, Biron says in an aside, "This is the liver-vein, which makes flesh a deity." In the Merry Wives of Windsor (II, i) Pistol speaks of Falstaff as loving Ford's wife "with liver burning hot".

Another superstition was that the liver of a coward contained no blood; hence such expressions as white-livered, lily-livered, and Sir Toby's remark in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night (III, ii):

For Andrew, if he were opened, and you find so much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.

Liverpool. A native of Liverpool is called a Liverpudlian, a Dicky Sam, or SCOUSE.

Livery. What is delivered. The clothes of a manservant delivered to him by his master. The stables to which a horse is delivered for keep. Splendid uniforms were formerly given to members of royal households. BARONS and KNIGHTS gave them to their retainers, but in the reign of Edward IV a statute of 1468 forbade the latter practice and Henry VII prosecuted those giving or receiving liveries.

The colours of the livery of manservants were those of the field and principal charge of the armorial shield; hence the royal livery is scarlet trimmed with gold.

What liverye is we by common use in England knowe well enough, namelye, that it is allowance of horse-meate, as they commonly use the woord in stabling, as to keepe horses at livereye; the which woord, as I gess, is derived of livering or delivering forth theyr nightlye foodes.

SPENSER: A view of the Present State of Ireland.

Livery Companies. The modern representatives in the City of LONDON of the old City Craft Gilds, which were originally associations for religious and social purposes and later trade organizations for fixing wages, standards of craftsmanship, etc. They also acted as Friendly Societies. Their members wore distinctive livery on special occasions, hence the name livery company.

The twelve "great" companies in order of precedence are:

Mercers (1393)	Merchant Taylors (1326)
Grocers (1345)	Haberdashers (1448)
Drapers (1364)	Salters (1558)
Fishmongers (1364)	Ironmongers (1454)
Goldsmiths (1327)	Vintners (1436)
Skinner (1327)	Clothworkers (1528)

The Pepperers and Spicers amalgamated in 1345 to become later known as the Grocers, and the Haberdashers were originally known as the Hurrers. Samuel Pepys was Master (1677) of the Clothworkers, which was a 16th-century incorporation of the Shearman and Fullers.

Among the seventy-odd lesser livery companies are:

Apothecaries (1606)	Farmers (1952)
Armourers and	Furniture Makers (1963)
Brasiers (1453)	Glovers (1639)
Blacksmiths (1571)	Leathersellers (1444)
Butchers (1606)	Plasterers (1501)
Cordwainers (1438)	Stationers and Newspaper
Dyers (1471)	Makers (1556)

The Weavers (1184) claim to be the oldest company. Many still have their halls in the City and contribute largely from their funds to charities, especially to almshouses and education. Merchant Taylors' School, the Haberdashers' schools, St. Paul's School, Goldsmiths' College and numerous such institutions, owe much to their benevolence.

Liverymen. The freemen of the London LIVERY COMPANIES are so called because they were entitled to wear the livery of their respective companies.

Livy. The Livy of Spain. Juan de Mariana (1536-1624), author of Historia de Rebus Hispaniæ in 35 books.

The Livy of Portugal. João de Barros (1496-1570), the great Portuguese historian.

Lizard. Supposed, at one time, to be venomous, hence a "lizard's leg" was an ingredient of the witches' cauldron in Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Poison be their drink! . . .
Their chiefest prospect murd'ring basilisks!
Their softest touch as smart as lizard's stings!
SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. II, III, 4.

Lounge lizard. A popular phrase in the 1920s to describe a young man who spent his time, or often made his living, by dancing and waiting upon elderly women.

Lloyd's. An international insurance market in the City of LONDON and the world centre of shipping intelligence that began in the 17th-century coffee house of Edward Lloyd in LOMBARD Street. Originally a market for marine insurance only, it now deals with nearly all forms of insurance. Lloyd's was incorporated by Act of PARLIAMENT in 1871.

Insurance is accepted at Lloyd's by individual underwriters, not by Lloyd's, which provides the premises, intelligence, and other facilities. Lloyd's Agents throughout the world send shipping information which is published in Lloyd's List and Lloyd's Shipping Index.

Load line. Another name for the PLIMSOLL LINE.

Loaf. In sacred art, a loaf held in the hand is an attribute of St. PHILIP the Apostle, St. Osyth, St. Joanna, St. NICHOLAS, St. Godfrey, and other saints noted for their charity to the poor.

Half a loaf is better than no bread. If you can't get all you want, try to be content with what you do get; something is better than nothing. Heywood (1546) says:

Throw no gift at the giver's head;
Better is half a loaf than no bread.

Never turn a loaf in the presence of a Menteith. An old Scottish saying. It was Sir John Menteith who betrayed WALLACE to the English. When he turned a loaf set on the table, his guests were to rush upon the patriot and secure him (SCOTT: Tales of a Grandfather, vii).

Use your loaf. A slang expression meaning "use your brains", use "your headpiece". Loaf here signifies one's head.

With an eye to the loaves and fishes. With a view to the material benefits to be derived. The allusion is to the GOSPEL story of the crowd following Christ, not for His spiritual teachings but for the food He distributed among them.

Jesus answered them and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled.

John vi, 26.

Loamshire. An imaginary county of southern England used as a setting by writers of fiction to avoid identification with actual towns and villages. Hence the Loamshires as an equally fictitious regiment of the LINE.

Loamshire dialect. Said of a rustic dialogue used by a writer with no real knowledge of the forms of speech peculiar to a given district.

Loathly Lady. A stock character of old romance who is so hideous that everyone is deterred from marrying her. When, however, she at last finds a husband her ugliness, the effect of enchantment, disappears, and she becomes a model of beauty. Her story is the feminine counterpart of BEAUTY AND THE BEAST.

Lob. Old thieves' slang for a till. Hence lobsnake, one who robs the till; lob-crawling, on the prowl to rob tills.

Lob's Pound. Old slang for prison, the stocks, or any other place of confinement.

Lobby. A vestibule or corridor, from Med. Lat. lobia, lodge, a covered way. In the HOUSE OF COMMONS, the large hall to which the public are admitted, especially for interviews with members. Division Lobbies are the corridors to which members retire to vote and to lobby is to solicit the vote of a member or to seek to influence members; a lobbyist is one who does this.

The Bill will cross the lobbies. Be sent from the HOUSE OF COMMONS to the HOUSE OF LORDS.

Loblolly. A sailor's term for spoon-virtuals, pap, gruel, etc.

Loblolly boy. A surgeon's mate of former days, a lad not yet out of his spoon-meat. Also a ship's steward.

I not only suffered from the rude insults of the sailors and petty officers, among whom I was known by the name of Loblolly Boy.

SMOLLETT: Roderick Random, xxvii.

Lobsters. Soldiers were popularly so called because they were "turned red" when they enlisted (i.e. they wore red coats). The name is also applied to Royal MARINES. The term was originally given to a troop of Parliamentary horse in the GREAT REBELLION.

Sir William Waller, having received from London (in 1643) a fresh regiment of 500 horse . . . which were so prodigiously armed that they were called by the king's party "the regiment of lobsters", because of their bright iron shells with which they were covered, being perfect cuirassiers, and were the first seen so armed on either side.

CLARENDON:

History of the Great Rebellion, III, 91.

Died for want of lobster sauce. Sometimes said of one who dies or suffers severely because of some trifling disappointment, pique, or wounded vanity. At a grand feast given by the great Condé to Louis XIV at Chantilly, Vatel, the chef, was told that the lobsters intended for sauce had not arrived, whereupon he retired to his room and ran his sword through his body, unable to survive the disgrace thus brought upon him.

Local, The. In colloquial parlance, the local hostelry; also the local paper.

Local Defence Volunteers. See HOME GUARD.

Local option is the choice allowed to a local authority to decide what course it shall take on a given question, specifically the sale of liquor. In 1913 Scotland was given local option. Parishes, small towns, and wards of large towns were allowed to vote on liquor licensing—for no licence, reduction of licences, or no change. Very few places went "dry".

Loch Ness Monster. In April 1933, a motorist driving along the shore of Loch Ness, Scotland, saw a strange object at some distance out, subsequently described as being 30 ft. long with two humps, a snake-like head at the end of a long neck, and two flippers about the middle of the body. It was "seen" by others and much featured by the newspapers. Investigations showed no substantial evidence of the existence of the supposed prehistoric monster but more recent observations have increased the belief in its presence.

Lochiel (loch ēl). The title of the head of the CLAN Cameron.

The hero of Thomas Campbell's poem, Lochiel's Warning (1802), is Donald Cameron, known as The Gentle Lochiel. He was one of the Young PRETENDER's staunchest adherents, and escaped to France with him after Culloden (1746). He took service with the French army, but died two years later.

Lock hospital. A hospital for the treatment of venereal diseases. Such a hospital was established in the Harrow Road, London, in 1746, and that at Kingsland had a sundial which bore the inscription "Post voluptatem misericordia". The name was originally used in mediæval times for a leper hospital and probably comes from the word lock meaning to shut in or seclude, a necessary precaution with lepers.

Lock, Stock, and Barrel. The whole of anything; in entirety. The lock, stock, and barrel of a gun is the complete firearm.

Lockhart. Legend has it that the good Lord James, on his way to the HOLY LAND with the heart of King Robert Bruce, was killed in Spain fighting against the

Locksmith's Daughter

MOORS. Sir Simon Locard of Lee was commissioned to carry the heart back to SCOTLAND and it was interred in Melrose Abbey. In consequence he changed his name to Lock-heart, and adopted the device of a heart within a fetterlock, with the motto Corda serrata pando (Locked hearts I open).

Locksmith's Daughter. A key.

Locofoco. An American name for a self-igniting cigar patented in New York in 1834 and soon applied to a friction or LUCIFER MATCH. The name is seemingly based on locomotive, taken to mean "self-moving"; thus loco-foco was intended to mean "self-lighting". The name was then applied to the RADICAL wing of the Democratic Party and then to the Democratic Party generally. It arose from an incident which occurred at a party meeting in TAMMANY HALL (1835) when the gas lights were turned out by the opponents of the radicals to break up the assembly, but the radicals produced candles which they lit with loco-focos.

Here's full particulars of the patriotic loco-foco movement yesterday in which the Whigs was a chewed up.

DICKENS: Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xvi (1843).

Locrin. Father of SABRINA, and eldest son of the mythical BRUTUS, King of Britain. On the death of his father he became King of LOEGRIA (Geoffrey of Monmouth: Historia Britonum, ch. I-V).

An anonymous tragedy, based on Holinshed and Geoffrey of Monmouth, called Locrine was published in 1595 bearing Shakespeare's initials (W.S.). This tragedy contains borrowings from Spenser, and Marlowe has also been suggested as its author. It is almost certainly not by SHAKESPEARE.

Locum tenens, or locum (Med. Lat., one holding place). One acting temporarily for another, especially a doctor or a clergyman. See LIEUTENANT.

Locus (Lat., a place).

Locus classicus (Lat.). The most cited or most authoritative passage on a subject.

Locus delicti. The place where a crime was committed (Lat. delictum, crime).

Locus in quo (Lat., the place in which). The place in question, the spot mentioned.

Locus pœnitentiæ (Lat., a place or opportunity of repentance). The interval when it is possible to withdraw from a bargain or course before being committed to it. In the interview between Esau and his father Isaac, St. PAUL says that the former "found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears" (Heb. xii, 17)—i.e. no means whereby Isaac could break his bargain with Jacob.

Locus sigilli (Lat., the place of the seal). The place where the seal is to be set; usually abbreviated in documents to "L.S.", or designated by a small circle.

Locus standi (Lat., a place of standing). Recognized position, acknowledged right or claim. In law, the right to be heard in court. We say of a person that he has no locus standi in society.

Locusta. A woman who murders those she professes to nurse, or those whom it is her duty to take care of. Locusta lived in the early days of the Roman Empire, poisoned Claudius and Britannicus, and attempted to destroy NERO. Being found out, she was put to death.

Lode. Originally a ditch that guides or leads water into a river or sewer, from O.E. lad, way, course (connected with to lead); hence in mines the vein that leads or guides to ore.

Lodestar. The North Star or Pole Star; the leading-star by which mariners are guided (see LODE). Cp. CYNOSURE.

Your eyes are lodestars.

SHAKESPEARE: A Midsummer Night's Dream, I, i.

Lodestone, Loadstone. The MAGNET or stone that guides, the magnetic oxide of iron. In the MIDDLE AGES pilots were called lodesmen.

Among the ancients the lodestone was believed to have many strange virtues. Placed on the pillow of a guilty wife, it would make her confess her iniquities while she slept. It could be used for the treatment of many ailments and also as a contraceptive. There was a curious belief that its effect could be countered by garlic or onion. It was said that sailors ought to be forbidden to eat these vegetables in case their breath should demagnetize the compass needles.

HITCHENS and MAY:

From Lodestone to Gyro-Compass, ch. i.

Lodona. The Loddon, an affluent entering the Thames at Shiplake. Pope, in Windsor Forest, says it was a NYMPH, fond of the chase, like DIANA. It chanced one day that PAN saw her, and tried to catch her; but Lodona fled from him, imploring CYNTHIA to save her. No sooner had she spoken than she became "a silver stream" which "virgin coldness keeps".

Loegria, or Logres (lo eg' ri á, ló' gres). ENGLAND is so called by Geoffrey of Monmouth, from LOCRIN.

Thus Cambria to her right, what would herself restore,

And rather than to lose Loegria, looks for more.
DRAYTON: Polyolbion, iv.

Log. An instrument for measuring the speed of a ship. In its simplest form it is a flat piece of wood, some 6 in. in radius, in the shape of a quadrant, and made so that it will float perpendicularly. To this is fastened the log-line, knotted at intervals. See KNOT.

A King Log. A king who rules in peace and quietness, but never makes his power felt. In allusion to the FABLE of The Frogs desiring a King: JUPITER first threw them down a log of wood, but they grumbled at so spiritless a King. He then sent them a stork, which devoured them eagerly. See KING STORK under STORK.

Log-book. In a ship, the journal in which the "logs" are entered (see LOG). It also contains the general record of proceedings on board, especially the navigational and meteorological records.

To be logged. To have one's name recorded in the ship's log for some misdemeanour or offence.

Log-cabin and Hard Cider Campaign (U.S.A.). The name given to the Presidential campaign of 1840. The WHIGS adopted General W. H. Harrison of Ohio and the Democrats ridiculed him as a "log-cabin candidate". The Whigs turned the situation against them by making a popular parade of portable log cabins and barrels of cider and succeeded in popularizing the old general.

Log-rolling. Applied in politics to the "give and take" principle, by which one party will further certain interests of another in return for help given in passing their own measures.

In literary circles it means mutual admiration, the mutual admirers being called "log-rollers". The allusion, originally American, is to neighbours who assist a new settler to roll away the logs of his clearing.

Logs. An early Australian name for prison, changed with time and circumstances to The Bricks.

Logan Stones. Rocking stones; large masses of stone so delicately poised by nature that they will rock to and fro at a touch. There are many such, especially in Cornwall, Derbyshire, Yorkshire and Wales; also in Scotland and Ireland.

The famous Logan Rock (about 70 tons) at Land's End was displaced by Lieutenant Goldsmith, R.N. (nephew of the poet Oliver Goldsmith) and his boat's crew in 1824. It cost him over £2,000 to get it replaced.

Pliny tells of a rock near Harpasa which might be moved with a finger.

Ptolemy says the Gygonian rock might be stirred with a stalk of ASPHODEL.

Half a mile from St. David's is a Logan stone, mounted on divers other stones, which may be shaken with one finger.

Loggerheads. Fall to loggerheads, to squabbling and fisticuffs. The word is used by SHAKESPEARE (Taming of the Shrew, IV, i.) Logger was the name given to the heavy wooden clog fastened to the legs of grazing horses to prevent their straying.

To be at loggerheads with someone is to be in a state of disagreement or dispute.

Logres, Logria. See LOEGRIA.

Logris. Same as LOCRI.

Lohengrin. A son of PERCIVAL in the German legend of the Knight of the Swan and attached to the GRAIL cycle. In France it was used to enhance the family of Godfrey of Bouillon. He appears at the close of Wolfram von Eschenbach's Parzival (c. 1210), and in other German romances, where he is the deliverer of Elsa, Princess of Brabant, who has been dispossessed by Tetramund and Ortrud. He arrives at Antwerp in a skiff drawn by a swan, champions Elsa, and becomes her husband on the sole condition that she shall not ask him his name or lineage. She is prevailed upon to do so on the marriage night, and he, by his vows to the Grail, is obliged to disclose his identity, but at the same time disappears. The swan returns for him, and he goes; but not before retransforming the swan into Elsa's brother Gottfried, who, by the wiles of the sorceress Ortrud, had been obliged to assume that form. Wagner's opera of this name was first produced in 1850.

Loins. Gird up your loins. Brace yourself for vigorous action, or energetic endurance. The Jews wore loose garments, which they girded about their loins when travelling or working.

Gird up the loins of your mind.—I Pet. i, 13.

My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins (I Kings xii, 10). My lightest tax shall be heavier than the most oppressive tax of my predecessor. Rehoboam's arrogant answer to the deputation which waited on him to entreat an alleviation of "the yoke" laid on them by SOLOMON. The reply caused the revolt of all the tribes, except those of Judah and BENJAMIN.

Loki. The god of strife and spirit of evil in Norse mythology, son of the GIANT Farbauti and Laufey, and father of the MIDGARD snake, HEL, and FENRIR. It was he who artfully contrived the death of BALDER. He was finally chained to a rock and, according to one legend, there to remain until the Twilight of the Gods, when he will break his bonds; the heavens will disappear, the earth be swallowed up by the sea, fire shall consume the elements, and even ODIN, with all his kindred deities, shall perish. Another story has it that he was freed at RAGNAROK, and that he and HEIMDALL fought till both were slain.

Lollards. A name given to the followers of John Wyclif, and earlier to a sect in the Netherlands. It is probably from the Mid. Dut. lollaerd, one who mumbles prayers or hymns. The word is recorded as having been used by William Courtenay, Archbishop of Canterbury, when he condemned their teachings in 1382.

The Lollards condemned TRANSUBSTANTIATION, INDULGENCES, clerical celibacy, the ecclesiastical hierarchy, and the temporal possessions of the church.

Lollipop Man. A schoolchildren's name for the traffic warden who conducts them across the road; from the striped pole, surmounted by a brightly coloured disk, which he carries.

Lombard. A banker or moneylender. In mediæval LONDON, Lombard Street became the home of Lombards and other Italian merchants who set up as goldsmiths, moneylenders, and bankers. From the 13th century they flourished as pawnbrokers and the three golden balls of the pawnshop are said to be taken from the armorial bearings of the MEDICI of Florence. See BALLS, THE THREE GOLDEN.

This merchant, which that was ful war and wys,
Creanced hath, and payd eek in Parys
To certain Lumbardes reddy in hir hond,
The somme of gold, and hadde of hem his bond.
CHAUCER: Shipman's Tale, i, 367.

All Lombard Street to a China orange. An old saying, implying very long odds, Lombard Street being the great centre of banking and mercantile transactions. To stake the wealth of LONDON against an orange is to stake great wealth against a trifle.

"It is Lombard Street to a China orange," quoth Uncle Jack.

BULWER LYTTON: The Caxtons, IV, iii.

London. The first surviving reference to London is to be found in Tacitus (Annals, Lib. XIV, ch. xxxiii) written A.D. 115-17, and referring to events in A.D. 61. It is the Roman name Londinium, which is from a CELTIC name of uncertain derivation.

London Bridge was built upon wool-packs. An old saying commemorating the fact that in the reign of Henry II the construction of a new stone bridge over the THAMES was begun, to be paid for by a tax on wool.

London Gazette. The official organ of the British government and the appointed medium for all official announcements. It dates from 1665 when Henry Muddiman started it as a daily newsletter or newspaper. It is now published on Tuesdays and Fridays. The Iris Oifigiúil (Dublin), and the Belfast Gazette are similar official organs.

London Group. A society of artists founded in 1913 by some painters associated with Walter Sickert (1860-1942). Its aim was to break away from academic tradition and to draw inspiration from French Post-IMPRESSIONISM.

London Pride is the little red-and-white Saxifraga umbrosa, also called None-so-pretty and St. Patrick's Cabbage.

London Regiment. This regiment, now disbanded, comprised two regular battalions of the City of London Regiment (Royal Fusiliers) and a number of territorial battalions including the London Rifle Brigade, Kensingtons, Artists Rifles and London Scottish.

London Stone in Cannon Street is a most ancient relic of uncertain history. Camden thought it to be the point from which the Romans measured distances and another theory is that it is a Saxon ceremonial stone.

According to Holinshed, Jack CADE struck it with his sword when proclaiming himself master of the city and the incident is mentioned in Shakespeare's Henry VI, Pt. II, IV, vii. The stone was placed against the wall of St. SWITHIN'S Church in 1798 as a safeguard against its destruction.

Jack Straw at London-stone with all his rout
Struck not the city with so loud a shout.

DRYDEN: The Cock and the Fox, I, 742.

Londonderry. The Northern Ireland county and city of this name took their prefix "London" when in 1609 the confiscated lands of native chieftains were assigned to some of the London LIVERY COMPANIES and to the Corporation of LONDON.

Lone Star State. The State of Texas, U.S.A.

Long. Long chalk, dozen, odds, etc.,
see these words.

The long and the short of the matter.

All that need be said; the essence or whole sum of the matter in brief.

So long. Good-bye, till we meet again.

To draw the longbow. See under BOW.

To make a long arm. To stretch for something, especially across the table.

Long Meg of Westminster. A noted virago in the reign of Henry VIII, around whose exploits a comedy (since lost) was performed in LONDON in 1594.

Lord Proudly: What d'ye this afternoon?

Lord Feesimple: Faith, I have a great mind to see Long Meg and The Ship at the Fortune.

NATHANIEL FIELD:

Amends for Ladies, II, i (1618).

Her name has been given to several articles of unusual size. Thus, the large blue-black marble in the south cloister of Westminster Abbey, over the grave of Gervasius de Blois, is called "Long Meg of Westminster". Fuller says the term is applied to things "of hop-pole height, wanting breadth proportionable thereunto", and refers to a great gun in the TOWER OF LONDON, so called, taken to Westminster in troublesome times; and in the Edinburgh Antiquarian Magazine (September 1769) we read of Peter Branan, aged 104, who was 6 ft. 6 in. high, and was commonly called Long Meg of Westminster. Cp. MEG.

Long Meg and her daughters. In the neighbourhood of Penrith, Cumberland, is a prehistoric circle of 64 stones, some of them 10 ft. high. Some 17 paces off, on the south side, is a single stone, 15 ft. high, called Long Meg, the shorter ones being called her daughters.

Long Melford. A long stocking purse, such as was formerly carried by country folk. In boxing, according to Isopel Berners, it was a straight right-handed blow (Borrow: Lavengro, bxxv).

Long Parliament. The most familiar of this name is the PARLIAMENT summoned by Charles I (3 November 1640), the remnant of which was not dissolved until 16 March 1660 (see RUMP). It was especially notable for its resistance to the king and its part in the GREAT REBELLION. The name is also applied to Henry IV's Parliament of 1406 (1 March—22 December), and to the CAVALIER PARLIAMENT (1661—1679) in Charles II's reign.

Long Range Desert Group. A British military force of volunteers in World War II who penetrated behind the enemy's lines in North Africa and carried out invaluable reconnaissance work through the uncharted desert. They helped to guide various forces to their objectives and facilitated the exploits of the Special Air Service. Cp. POPSKI'S PRIVATE ARMY.

Long stocking. To have a long stocking. To have a long purse; to have considerable monetary resources. Cp. LONG MELFORD.

Longchamps (long shong). The race-course at the end of the Bois de Boulogne, Paris. An abbey formerly stood there, and it was long celebrated for the parade of smartly dressed Parisians which took place on the Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of HOLY WEEK.

The custom dates from the time when all who could do so went to the abbey to hear the TENEBRE sung in HOLY WEEK; and it survives as an excellent opportunity to display the latest spring fashions.

Long-headed. Clever, sharp-witted. A long head was supposed to indicate shrewdness.

Longsword (Longespée, Longepée, Longspée, etc.). The surname of William, the first Duke of Normandy (d. 943). He was the great-great-grandfather of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR. The name was also given to William, third Earl of Salisbury (d. 1226), a natural son of Henry II and (according to late tradition) Fair ROSAMOND.

Longtail. Cut and Longtail. One and another, all of every description. The phrase had its origin in the practice of cutting the tails of certain dogs and horses, and leaving others in their natural state, so that the cut and long-tail horses or dogs included all the species. Master Slender in Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor (III, iv) says he will maintain Anne Page like a gentlewoman. "Ay!" says he, "That I will, come cut and long tail under the degree of a squire" [i.e. as well as anyone below the rank of squire].

How about the long-tailed beggar? A reproof to one who is drawing the longbow too freely (see under BOW). The tale is that a boy on returning from a short voyage pretended to have forgotten everything belonging to his home and asked his mother what she called that "long-tailed beggar", meaning the cat.

Long words. "Honorificabilitudinitatibus" has often been called the longest word in the English language; "quadrimensionality" is almost as long, and "antidisestablishmentarianism" beats it by one letter. While there is some limit to the coining of polysyllabic words by the conglomeration of prefixes, combining forms, and suffixes (e.g. deanthropomorphization, inanthropomorphizability), the chemists furnish us with such concatenations as "nitrophenylenediamine", and "tetramethyldiamidobenzhydrols". They are far surpassed, however, by the nonsense words found in Urquhart and Motteux's translation of Rabelais. The following comes from Ch. xv. of Bk. IV:

He was grown quite esperruquanchurebloubouzerireliced down to his very heel . . . (J. M. Cohen in Penguin Classics. . . bruisedblueandcontused . . .)

The film Mary Poppins (1963) provides us with "supercalifragilisticexpialidocious".

The longest place-name in Britain is that of a village in Anglesey, Llanfair-pwllgwyngyllgogerychwyrndrobwlllantysiliogogoch (58 letters). It is usually shortened to Llanfair P.G. The meaning is, "The church of St. Mary in a hollow of white hazel, near to the rapid whirlpool and St. Tysilio church, near to a red cave".

The longest English surname is said to be Featherstonehaugh, often pronounced "Fanshaw".

The German language lends itself to extensive agglomerations and the following would be hard to beat—"Lebensmittelzuschusseinstellungskommissionsvorsitzenderstellvertreter", i.e. Deputy-President of the Food-Rationing-Winding-up-Commission.

Longevity (lon jev'i ti). The oldest man of modern times was Thomas Carn, if we may rely on the parish register of St. Leonard's Shoreditch, where it is recorded that he died in the reign of Queen Elizabeth I, aged 207. He was born in 1381, in the reign of Richard II, lived in the reigns of twelve sovereigns, and died in 1588. Thomas Parr died in 1635 at the reputed age of 152. William Wakley (according to the register of St. Andrew's Church, Shifnal, Salop) was at least 124 when he died. He was baptized at Idsal 1590, and buried at Adbaston, 28 November 1714, and he lived in the reigns of eight sovereigns. Mary Yates, of Lizard Common, Shifnal, married her third husband at the age of 92, and died in 1776, at the age of 127.

It must be noted that all these cases belong to the days before the Registration Act of 1836 ensured a really efficient system of recording births, marriages, and deaths.

Longinus, or Longius. The traditional name of the Roman soldier who smote Our Lord with his spear at the Crucifixion. The only authority for this is the apocryphal Acts of Pilate, dating from the 6th century. According to Arthurian Legend, this spear was brought by JOSEPH OF ARIMATHEA to Listenise, when he visited King Pellam, "who was nigh of Joseph's kin". Sir Balin the Savage seized this spear, with which he wounded King Pellam and destroyed three whole countries with that one stroke. William of Malmesbury says the spear was used by CHARLEMAGNE against the SARACENS.

Longwood. The residence on the island of St. Helena where the Emperor NAPOLEON passed the last years of his life in exile, dying there 5 May 1821.

Look. Black looks, To look blue, daggers, a gift-horse, etc., see these words.

Look alive! Make haste; be on the alert.

Look before you leap. Consider well before you act.

And look before you ere you leap
For as you sow, you're like to reap.
BUTLER: Hudibras, Pt. II, canto ii, 502.

To look through blue glasses, or coloured spectacles. To regard actions in a wrong light; to view things distorted by prejudice.

To look through rose-coloured spectacles. To take an unduly favourable view of things which the circumstances do not warrant; to be over-optimistic.

To look up. To seek information in books; to visit an acquaintance; to pay a call. Things or persons are said to "look up" when they are improving.

It is unlucky to break a looking-glass. The nature of the ill-luck varies; thus, if a maiden, she will never marry; if a married woman, it betokens death, etc. This superstition arose from the use made of mirrors in former times by magicians, etc. If in their operations the mirror used was broken, the unlucky inquirer could receive no answer.

Loop. Looping the loop. The airman's term for the evolution which consists of describing a perpendicular circle in the air; at the top of the circle, or loop, the airman is upside down. The term is from a kind of switchback once popular at fairs in which a moving car or bicycle performed a similar evolution on a perpendicular circular track.

Loose. Figuratively, of lax morals; dissolute; dissipated.

A loose fish. See under FISH.

At a loose end. Without employment, or uncertain what to do next. The loose ends of any agreement or transaction are the final details requiring settlement, and to tie up the loose ends is to settle the outstanding points of detail.

Having a tile loose. See under TILE.

On the loose. Behaving in a dissolute fashion.

To cut loose. To break away from conventional restraints.

To play fast and loose. See under FAST.

Loose-strife. This name of several species of plants of the genera Lysimachia and Lythrum is due to mistranslation. The Greek name was lusimachion from the personal name Lusimachos, and this was treated as though it were lusi-, from luain, to loose, and mache, strife. Pliny says that the plant has a soothing effect upon oxen that will not draw in the same yoke and that it keeps off flies and gnats, thus relieving horses and oxen from their irritation. Similarly in Fletcher's Faithful Shepherdess (II, ii) we read:

Yellow Lysimachua, to give sweet rest
To the faint shepherd, killing, where it comes,
All busy gnats, and every fly that hums.

Lord. A nobleman, a peer of the realm; formerly (and in some connexions still), a ruler, a master, the holder of a manor. It is the O.E. hlaford, hlaf, loaf, and modern ward, i.e. the bread-guardian or -keeper, the head of the household (cp. LADY).

All members of the HOUSE OF LORDS are Lords; the archbishops and BISHOPS are Lords Spiritual, and the lay peers Lords Temporal. The word is used in COURTESY TITLES and as a title of honour to certain official personages, as the Lord Chief Justice and other Judges, the Lord Mayor, Lord Advocate, Lord Rector, etc. A BARON is called by his title of peerage (either a surname or territorial designation), prefixed by the title "Lord", as "Lord Dawson" or "Lord Islington". It may also be substituted in other than strictly ceremonial use for "MARQUESS", "EARL", or "VISCOUNT", the of being dropped, "Lord Salisbury" (for "The Marquess of Salisbury"), "Lord Derby" ("The Earl of Derby"), etc.; this cannot be done in the case of dukes.

Drunk as a lord. See under DRUNK.

In the year of our Lord. See ANNO DOMINI.

Lord Harry. See HARRY.

Lord Mayor's Day. Originally the Lord Mayor of LONDON was elected on the Feast of St. SIMON and St. JUDE (28 October), and although the election day was altered, admittance to office continued to take place on that day until 1751. From 1752, owing to the adoption of the Gregorian CALENDAR, Lord Mayor's Day became 9 November. In recent years the Lord Mayor has been sworn in at Guildhall on the second Friday in November, being presented to the Lord Chief Justice on the following day (Saturday).

The Lord Mayor's Show. The annual procession which accompanies the Lord Mayor through the city to the Royal Courts of Justice on the second Saturday in November. It has developed in scale over the years, and from 1453 until 1856 a river pageant was part of the proceedings. A few days later the Lord Mayor's Banquet is held in the GUILDHALL where it is now customary for the Prime Minister to make a political speech. The bill for the Procession and Banquet is settled by the Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs.

Lord of the Ascendant. See under ASCENDANT.

Lord of Creation. Man.

Replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth. . . . Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed . . . and every tree.
Gen. i, 28, 29.

Lord of Hosts. In the Old Testament, a frequently used title for JEHOVAH, no doubt arising from the belief that He led their armies in battle.

Lord of the Isles. A title once borne by descendants of Somerled, Lord of Argyll, who ruled the Western Isles of Scotland as VASSALS of the King of Scotland in the 14th and 15th centuries. The Lordship of the Isles was taken over by the Scottish crown in 1540 and it subsequently became one of the titles of the Prince of WALES. Scott has a poem called The Lord of the Isles (1814).

Lord of Misrule. See KING OF MISRULE.

The Lord's Day. SUNDAY.

The Lord's Prayer. The words in which Jesus taught his disciples to pray (Matt. vi, 9-13). See PATERNOSTER.

The Lord's Supper. A name given to the Holy Communion which commemorates the LAST SUPPER of Jesus with his disciples.

Lords and Ladies. The popular name of the wild arum, Arum maculatum. See CUCKOO FLOWERS under CUCKOO.

My Lord. The correct form to use in addressing Judges of the Supreme Court (usually slurred to "M'Lud"), also the respectful form of address to BISHOPS, noblemen under the rank of DUKE, Lord Mayors, Lord Provosts, and the Lord Advocate.

The Lord knows who, what, where, etc. Flippant expressions used to denote one's own entire ignorance of the matter.

Great families of yesterday we show,
And lords, whose parents were the Lord knows who.

DEFOE: The True-Born Englishman, 374.

Ask where's the north? At York, 'tis on the Tweed;
In Scotland, at the Orcaides; and there,
At Greenland, Zembla, or the Lord knows where.

POPE: Essay on Man, ii, 222.

To live like a lord. To fare luxuriously; to live like a fighting-cock (see under COCK).

To lord it, or lord it over. To play the lord; to rule tyrannically, to domineer.

You grey towers that still Rise up as if to lord it over air.

WORDSWORTH:

Sonnets upon the Punishment of Death, I.

When our Lord falls in our Lady's lap. When EASTER Sunday falls on the same date as LADY DAY (25 March). This is said to bode ill for England. In the 19th century this occurred in 1883 and 1894; in the 20th, its sole occurrence has been in 1951.

Lord's. The Headquarters of the Marylebone Cricket Club (M.C.C.), and of CRICKET generally, is at St. John's Wood, London. Its founder, Thomas Lord (1757-1832), was groundsman at the White Conduit Club, London, in 1780. In 1797 he started a cricket ground of his own on the site of what is now Dorset Square, moving the turf in 1811 to a new site near Regent's Canal, whence in 1814 he transferred to the present ground.

I doubt if there be any scene in the world more animating or delightful than a cricket-match—I do not mean a set match at Lord's Ground for money, hard money, between a certain number of gentlemen and players, as they are called.

MISS MITFORD:

Our Village (A Country Cricket-Match) (1832).

Lorel. Also losel, a worthless person; a rake or profligate. The word is from loren, also losen, from the old lesen, to lose. It is chiefly remembered through "Cock Lorell". See COCK LORELL'S BOTE.

Here I set before the good Reader the leud, lousey language of these lewtering Luskes and lasy Lorels, wherewith they bye and sell the common people as they pas through the country. Whych language they term Peddelar's French.

Harman's Caveat (1567).

Lorelei. The name of a steep rock, some 430 ft. high, on the right bank of the Rhine near St. Goar, noted for its remarkable echo. It is the traditional haunt of a SIREN who lures boatmen to their death. Heine and others have poems on it, and Max Bruch made it the subject of an opera, Die Lorelei, produced in 1864.

Mendelssohn has an incomplete opera of the same title.

Loreto. The house of Loreto. The Santa Casa or Holy House, the reputed house of the Virgin Mary at Nazareth. It was said to have been miraculously moved to Dalmatia in 1291, thence to Recanati in Italy in 1294, and finally to a site near Ancona in 1295. It was reputed to have been transported by ANGELS to prevent its destruction by the Turks. The name is from the Lat. lauretum, a grove of laurels, in which it stood in Recanati. The Holy House itself is a small stone building, now surrounded by a high marble screen.

Losel. See LOREL.

Loss. To be at a loss. To be unable to decide. To be puzzled or embarrassed.

Lost causes, The Home of. Oxford. Referred to as such by the poet Matthew Arnold (1822-1888) in his Essays in Criticism (Preface to the 1st Series).

Whispering from her towers the last enchantments of the Middle Ages. . . Home of lost causes, and forsaken beliefs, and unpopular names, and impossible loyalties!

Lost Generation. A name sometimes applied to the young men, especially of the cultivated upper and middle classes, who lost their lives in World War I. Rupert Brooke became their symbol, he was 27 when he died (not in battle, but of blood-poisoning).

Lost Tribes. The term applied to the ten tribes of Israel who were carried away from North Palestine (721 B.C.) into Assyria, about 140 years before the BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY (586 B.C.) exiled the tribes of Judah. Their disappearance has caused much speculation, especially among those who look forward to a restoration of the Hebrews as foretold in the Old Testament. In 1649, John Sadler suggested that the English were of Israelitish origin. This theory was expanded by Richard Brothers, the half-crazy enthusiast who declared himself Prince of the Hebrews and Ruler of the World (1792), and has since been developed by others. The British Israelite theory is still held by some without any serious supporting evidence.

Lost Sunday. Another name for SEP-TUAGESIMA SUNDAY, from its having no special name.

Lothario. A gay Lothario. A gay LIBERTINE, a seducer of women, a debauchee. The character is from Rowe's tragedy The Fair Penitent (1703). He probably got the name from Davenant's Cruel

Brother (1630) in which there is a similar character with this name. Cp. LOVELACE.

Is this that haughty, gallant, gay Lothario?
Fair Penitent, V, i.

Lothian, in SCOTLAND, traditionally takes its name from King Lot, or Lothus Llew, the brother-in-law of ARTHUR, and father of MODRED.

Lotus. A name given to many plants, e.g. by the Egyptians to various species of water-lily, by the Hindus and Chinese to the Nelumbo (a water-bean), their "sacred lotus", and by the Greeks to Zizyphus lotus, a North African shrub of the order Rhamnaceæ, the fruit of which was used for food.

According to MOHAMMED, a lotus-tree stands in the seventh HEAVEN, on the right hand of the throne of God, and the Egyptians pictured the creator springing from the heart of a lotus flower. Iamblichus says the leaves and fruit of the lotus-tree, being round, represent "the motion of intellect", its towering up through mud symbolizes the eminency of divine intellect over matter; and the Deity sitting on it implies His intellectual sovereignty (On the Egyptian Mysteries, sec. vii, cap. ii).

The classic myth is that Lotis, a daughter of NEPTUNE, fleeing from PRIAPUS was changed into a tree, called Lotus after her. Another story is that Dryope of Æchalia and her infant son Amphibus were each changed into a lotus.

Lotus-eaters, or Lotophagi, in Homeric legend, are a people who ate of the lotus-tree, the effect of which was to make them forget their friends and homes, and to lose all desire of returning to their native country, their only wish being to live in idleness in Lotus-land (Odyssey, XI). Hence a lotus-eater is one living in ease and luxury. One of Tennyson's greatest poems is The Lotos-Eaters.

Louis, St. Louis IX of France (1214, 1226–1270) is usually represented as holding the Saviour's crown of thorns and the cross; sometimes he is pictured with a pilgrim's staff and sometimes with the standard of the cross, the allusion in all cases being to the CRUSADES. He was canonized in 1297, his feast day being 25 August.

Louissette. See GUILLOTINE.

Louisiana in the U.S.A. was named in compliment to Louis XIV of France and was originally applied to the French possessions in the Mississippi valley.

The Louisiana Purchase. The acquisition by the U.S. Government in 1803 of the French territory of Louisiana for the sum of about $15,000,000. Some 828,000 square miles, between the Mississippi and the Rocky Mountains, were thus obtained.

Lounge Lizard. See LIZARD.

Lourdes (loord). A famous centre of pilgrimage situated in the south-west of France. In 1858 Bernadette Soubirous, a simple peasant girl, claimed that the Virgin Mary had appeared to her on eighteen occasions. Investigations failed to shake her narrative, and a spring with miraculous healing properties that appeared at the same time began to draw invalids from all over the world. The pilgrimage received ecclesiastical recognition in 1862 and Bernadette was canonized in 1933.

Louvre (loo' vrè). The former royal palace of the French kings in Paris. Dagobert is said to have built there a hunting seat, but the present buildings were begun by Francis I in 1541. Since the French Revolution, the greater part of the Louvre has been used for the national museum and art gallery.

He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry V, II, iv.

Love. The word is from O.E. lufu, connected with Sans. lubh, to desire, and Lat. lubet, it pleases, etc.

The Abode of love. See AGAPEMONE.

Cupboard love. See CUPBOARD.

The Family of Love. See FAMILISTS.

The God of Love. Generally implies either EROS or CUPID. Among the Scandinavians FREYJA was the goddess of sexual love, and among the Hindus Kama is the approximate equivalent of Eros.

Love's Girdle. The CESTUS.

A labour of love. Work undertaken for the love of the thing without regard to payment.

Remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father.

I Thess. i, 3.

Love and lordship never like fellowship. Neither lovers nor princes can brook a rival.

Love in a cottage. A marriage for love without sufficient means to maintain one's social status. "When poverty comes in at the door, love flies out at the window."

Love in a hut, with water and a crust,
Is—Love, forgive us!—cinders, ashes, dust.

Love in a palace is, perhaps, at last
More grievous torment than a hermit's fast.

KEATS: Lamia, Pt. II, i.

Love is blind. Lovers cannot see each other's weaknesses and shortcomings. See CUPID.

Love me, love my dog. If you love anyone, you will like all that belongs to him. St. BERNARD quotes this proverb in Latin, Qui me amat, amat et canem meam.

Not for love or money. Unobtainable, either for payment or for entreaties; not under any circumstances.

There is no love lost between so and so. The persons referred to dislike each other. Formerly the phrase was used in exactly the opposite sense—it was all love between them, and none of it went amissing. In the old ballad The Children in the Wood given in PERCY'S RELIQUES we have—

No love between these two was lost,
Each was to other kind.

To play for love. To play without stakes.

Love-apple. The tomato. The name was given by the Spaniards who introduced it to Europe from South America. It was alleged to have aphrodisiac properties.

Love-in-a-mist. The fennel flower, Nigella damascena, also called devil-in-a-bush and love-in-a-puzzle.

Love-in-idleness. The HEARTSEASE, Viola tricolor. Fable has it that it was originally white, but was changed to purple by Cupid.

Yet marked I where the bolt of Cupid fell,
It fell upon a little western flower.
Before, milk-white, now purple with love's wound;
And maidens call it Love-in-idleness.

SHAKESPEARE:

A Midsummer Night's Dream, II, i.

Love-lies-bleeding. The red AMARANTHs from their hanging inflorescences of small crimson flowers.

Love-lock. A small curl worn by women, fastened to the temples, also called a BOW-CATCHER. At the end of the 16th century the love-lock was a long lock of hair hanging in front of the shoulders, curled and decorated with bows and ribbons.

Loving, or Grace Cup. A large cup, tankard or goblet passed round from guest to guest at formal banquets. Agnes Strickland (1786-1874) says that Margaret Atheling, wife of Malcolm Canmore, in order to induce the Scots to remain for grace, devised the grace cup, which was filled with the choicest wine, and of which each guest was allowed to drink ad libitum, after grace had been said.

The monks took over the WASSAIL bowl of their heathen predecessors and called it poculum caritatis, or the loving-cup. At the Lord Mayor's or City Companies' banquets the loving-cup is a silver bowl with two handles, a napkin being tied to one of them. Two persons stand up, one to drink and the other to defend the drinker. Having taken his draught, the first wipes the cup with the napkin and passes it to his "defender", when the next person rises up to defend the new drinker, and so on.

At the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, the term Grace Cup is more general. The name is also applied to a strong brew of beer flavoured with lemon-peel, nutmeg and sugar, and very brown toast.

Level, the Dog. See RAT, CAT, AND DOG under RAT.

Lovelace. A LIBERTINE, a LOTHARIO. The name is taken from the principal male character in Richardson's Clarissa, or the History of a Young Lady (1748). He is a selfish voluptuary, a man of fashion, whose sole ambition is to seduce young women.

Low. To lay low is transitive, and means to overthrow or to kill; to lie low is intransitive, and means to be abased, or dead; and colloquially, to bide one's time, to do nothing for the moment.

In low water. Financially embarrassed; or in a bad state of health. The phrase comes from seafaring; cp. "stranded", "left HIGH AND DRY".

To give someone the lowdown. A colloquial expression meaning to impart inside information, to explain what the matter is really about. Possibly from the idea that it was mean, disreputable, or "low down" to give such information.

To lower your sail. To salute; to admit yourself submissive or conquered; to humble oneself. A nautical phrase.

Low-bell. A bell formerly used in night-fowling. The birds were first roused from their slumber by its tinkling, and then dazzled by a low, i.e., a blaze or flame (Scottish and provincial English). The word low-bell was also applied to a small bell such as a sheep bell.

There is also another method of fowling, which . . . is performed with nets, and in the night time; and the darker the night the better.—"This sport we call in England, most commonly bird-batting, and some call it lowbelling; and the use of it is to go with a great light of cressets . . . and carry it before you, on your breast, with a bell in your other hand, and of great bigness, made in the manner of a cow-bell."

STRUTT: Sports and Pastimes, Bk. I, ch. ii (1801).

Low Church. The essentially PROTESTANT section of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND which gives a relatively low place to the claims of the priesthood, episcopate, etc., and has more in common with NONCONFORMIST than CATHOLIC teaching. It is used in contrast to HIGH CHURCH.

Low German. See HIGH GERMAN.

Low Latin. See under LATIN.

Low Mass. In the Western Church, MASS said by the celebrant without the assistance of other clergy. No part of the service is sung.

Low Sunday. The Sunday next after EASTER. So called probably because of the contrast to the "high" feast of EASTER Sunday. Cp. QUASIMODO SUNDAY.

Lower case. The printer's name for the small letters (minuscules) of a fount of type (see FONT) as opposed to the capitals; these were, in a type-setter's "case", on a lower level than the others.

Lower deck. In the Royal Navy, the rank and file of the ship's company as distinct from the officers. In the ships of former days the lower deck, above the orlop, was the lowest of the continuous gun decks where the crew had their messes and slung their hammocks.

Lower Empire. The later Roman, especially the Western Empire, from about the time of the foundation of the Eastern Empire in 330 to the fall of Constantinople in 1453.

The Lower House. The second of any two legislative chambers; in England, the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Loyal. The Loyal North Lancashire Regiment was so called in 1793, the only British regiment given this designation.

The Loyal Toast. This time-honoured toast to the King (or the Queen) is normally drunk while standing, but it is the Royal Navy's privilege to drink it sitting. The story is, that this custom arose when George IV (or William IV), when acknowledging the toast in a ship, bumped his head on a beam as he stood up. However apocryphal such stories may be, it is probably due to the difficulty of standing upright between decks in the old wooden warships.

Loyola, St. Ignatius (1491-1556). Founder of the Society of Jesus, is depicted in art with the sacred monogram I.H.S. on his breast, or as contemplating it, surrounded by glory in the skies, in allusion to his claim that he had a miraculous knowledge of the mystery of the TRINITY vouchsafed to him. He was the son of the Spanish ducal house of Loyola and, after being severely wounded at the siege of Pamplona (1521), left the army and dedicated himself to the service of the Virgin. See JESUIT.

Lubber's Hole. In sailing ships the open space in the top near the head of a lower mast through which seamen ascend to the top, to avoid the danger and difficulties of climbing over the rim by the futtock shrouds. It was once held only a fit method for timid GREENHORNS or lubbers. Hence, some way of evading or wriggling through one's difficulties.

Lubberkin, or Lubrican. See LEPRECHAUN.

Luce. Flower de luce. A corruption of FLEUR-DE-LYS.

Lucian. The personification of the follies and vices of the age. Such was Lucian, the chief character in the GOLDEN ASS of Apuleius (2nd century A.D.).

Lucifer (Lat., lightbringer). VENUS, as the morning star. When she follows the sun, and is an evening star, she is called HESPERUS.

Isaiah applied the epithet "Day-star" to the King of Babylon who proudly boasted he would ascend to the heavens and make himself equal to God, but who was fated to be cast down to the uttermost recesses of the pit. This epithet was translated into "Lucifer"—

Take up this proverb against the king of Babylon, and say, . . . How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning!
Is. xiv, 4, 12.

By St. JEROME and other Fathers the name was applied to SATAN. Hence poets feign that Satan, before he was driven out of heaven for his pride, was called Lucifer. Milton, in Paradise Lost (X, 425), gives this name to the demon of "Sinful Pride", hence the phrase Proud as Lucifer.

Lucifer-match, or Lucifer. A match. The friction match was invented by John Walker in 1826 and first called a "friction light". The invention was copied by Samuel Jones of the STRAND and sold as the "Lucifer" (c. 1829). The term match was taken over from the name given to the spill used as secondary tinder in the days of the tinder-box. Cp. CONGREVES; LOCOFOCO; PROMETHEAN; SAFETY MATCHES.

Pack up your troubles in your old kit-bag,
And smile, smile, smile.
While you've a lucifer to light your fag,
Smile, boys, that's the style.

Army Song (World War I).

Luciferians. A 4th-century sect, so called from their leader Lucifer, Bishop of Cagliari in Sardinia. They resisted all conciliation with repentant ARIANS.

Lucius. One of the mythical kings of Britain, the son of Coillus, and fabled as the first Christian British King according to Geoffrey of Monmouth.

Luck. Accidental good fortune (Dut. luk; Ger. Glück).

Down on one's luck. In adverse circumstances; short of funds, etc.

Give a man luck and throw him into the sea. Meaning that his luck will save him even in the greatest extremity. JONAH and ARION were cast into the sea, but were carried safely to land, the one by a whale and the other by a dolphin.

He has the luck of the Devil, or the Devil's own luck. He is extraordinarily lucky; everything he attempts is successful.

Luck money, or luck penny. A trifle returned to a purchaser for good luck after a deal; also a penny with a hole in it, supposed to ensure good luck. Picking up a pin or a piece of coal is also supposed to be lucky.

Not in luck's way. Not promoted unexpectedly, enriched, or otherwise benefited.

The luck of Eden Hall. See EDEN HALL.

There's luck in odd numbers. See ODD.

Luckie, or Lucky. In Scotland a term of familiar but respectful endearment for any elderly woman; often used of the landlady of an ale-house; a luckie dad is a grandfather.

A lucky dip, or bag. A tub or other container, in which are placed various articles covered with bran, etc., much in use at bazaars and children's parties. The visitors "dip" and take what they get.

A lucky stone. A stone with a natural hole through it. John Aubrey (1697) tells us that flints with holes in them were hung on a horse or in its stall as a preservative against its being hag-ridden. Cp. LUCK PENNY.

The lucky bone. The small bone of a sheep's head; once prized by beggars and tramps as it was supposed to bring good luck for the day of its acquisition.

To cut one's lucky (old slang). To decamp or make off quickly; to "cut one's stick". As luck means chance, the phrase may signify, "I must give up my chance and be off."

To strike lucky. See STRIKE.

Lucullus sups with Lucullus (lūk ūl' ūs). Said of a glutton who gourmandizes alone. Lucius Lucullus (c. 117-56 B.C.) was a successful Roman military leader and administrator whose latter years were given over to rich and elegant living. On one occasion a superb supper was prepared, and when asked who were to be his guests he replied, "Lucullus will sup tonight with Lucullus."

He was essentially a man of cultural tastes and more likely a gourmet than a GOURMAND.

Lucus a non lucendo (lū' kūs ā non loo-sen' dō). An etymological contradiction; a phrase used by etymologists who accounted for words by deriving them from their opposites. It means literally "a grove (called lucus) from not being lucent" (lux, light; luceo, to shine). It was the Roman grammarian Honoratus Maurus (fl. end of 4th century A.D.) who provided this famous etymology. In the same way ludus, a school, may be said to come from ludere, to play, and our word linen from lining, because it is not used for linings.

One Tryphiodorus . . . composed an Epick Poem . . . of four and twenty books, having entirely banished the letter A from his first book, which was called Alpha (as Lucus a non lucendo) because there was not an Alpha in it.

ADDISON: Spectator, No. lix.

Lucy, St. Patron SAINT for those afflicted in the eyes. She is supposed to have lived in Syracuse and to have suffered martyrdom there about 304. One legend relates that a nobleman wanted to marry her for the beauty of her eyes; so she tore them out and gave them to him, saying, "Now let me live to God." Hence she is represented in art carrying a palm branch and a platter with two eyes on it.

Lucy Stoner. An American colloquialism for a married woman who insists on using her maiden name; after Lucy Stone (1818-1893), a famous U.S. SUFFRAGETTE. Her married name was Blackwell.

Lud. A mythical king of Britain. According to Geoffrey of Monmouth, the beautifier of LONDON who was buried by the gate which bears his name. It is also suggested that the name is that of a CELTIC river god.

General Lud. See LUDDITES.

Lud's Town. LONDON; so called from King LUD.

And on the gates of Lud's town set your heads. SHAKESPEARE: Cymbeline, IV, ii.

Ludgate. One of the former western gates of the City of London, first mentioned in the 12th century. It stood halfway up Ludgate Hill, was rebuilt after extensive damage in 1586, and demolished 1760-1762. It was used as a prison for several centuries. The statues of LUD and his two sons which once adorned the gate are now in the entrance of St. Dunstan's School. The name probably derives from the O.E. ludgeat, a postern.

Luddites. The name given to the machine-breaking rioters in the manufacturing districts of Nottinghamshire, Lancashire, Cheshire, and Yorkshire, in the years 1811 to 1816. The textile workers blamed the new machinery for their unemployment and distress. They were called Luddites after their legendary leader, Ned Ludd, and the leadership of such rioters was often attributed to "General Ludd". Cp. CAPTAIN SWING under SWING.

Ludlam. See LAZY.

Luff (Dut. loef, weather-gauge). The luff of a fore-and-aft sail is its fore edge and the broadest part of a ship's bow is called the luff as well as the weather-gauge or part of the ship towards the wind. A tackle consisting of two hook blocks, one double and one single, is a luff.

Luff upon luff is to use a luff purchase with a second tackle on its hauling part, thus trebling or quadrupling the power.

To keep the luff is to continue close to the wind.

To luff is to bring the ship's head nearer the wind. A ship is said to spring her luff when she yields to the helm by sailing nearer the wind.

Lugs. To put on the lugs. 19th-century American slang for conceit, swank.

Luke, St. Patron SAINT of artists and physicians. Tradition says he painted a portrait of the Virgin Mary and Col. iv, 14, states that he was a physician. His day is 18 October. See also SYMBOLS OF SAINTS.

St. Luke's Club, or The Virtuosi. An artist's club, established in England by Vandyck about 1638, and held at the Rose Tavern, FLEET STREET. There was an academy of St. Luke founded by artists at Paris in 1391; one at ROME, founded in 1593, but based on the "Compagnia di San Luca" of Florence, founded in 1345; a similar one was established at Siena in 1355.

St. Luke's Summer. The latter end of autumn. See SUMMER.

As light as St. Luke's bird. Not light at all. In art St. LUKE is represented with an ox lying near him.

Luke's Iron Crown. A symbol of tyranny.

The lifted axe, the agonising wheel,
Luke's iron crown, and Damien's bed of steel,
To men remote from power but rarely known,
Leave reason, faith, and conscience all our own.
GOLDSMITH: The Traveller, 435.

George and Luke Dosa headed an unsuccessful revolt in Hungary in the early part of the 16th century. George underwent the torture of the red-hot iron crown, as a punishment for allowing himself to be proclaimed king. Goldsmith errs in attributing the incident to Luke.

Lumber. Formerly a pawnbroker's shop (from LOMBARD). Thus Lady Murray (Lives of the Bailies, 1749) writes: "They put all the little plate they had in the lumber, which is pawning it, till the ships come home."

From its use as applied to old broken boards and bits of wood the word was extended to mean timber sawn and split, especially when the trees have been felled and sawn in situ.

Lump. If you don't like it, you may lump it. Whether you like to do it or not, no matter; you must take it as it is; you must put up with it, i.e. take it in a lump.

Lunar Month. From new moon to new moon, i.e. the time taken by the moon to revolve round the earth, about 29½ days. Popularly, the lunar month is 28 days. In the JEWISH and MOHAMMEDAN CALENDARS (see under CALENDAR), the lunar month commences at sunset of the day when the new moon is first seen after sunset, and varies in length, being sometimes 29 and sometimes 30 days.

Lunar Year. Twelve lunar months, i.e. about 354½ days.

Lunatics. Literally, moon-struck persons. The Romans believed that the mind was affected by the moon, and that lunatics grew more and more frenzied as the moon increased to its full (Lat. luna, moon).

Lundi, St. See ST. MONDAY under MONDAY.

Lupercal, The (lū' pēr kál). In ancient ROME the spot where ROMULUS and Remus were suckled by the wolf (lupus). An annual festival, the Lupercalia was held there on 15 February, in honour of Luperkus the Lycæan PAN (so called because he protected the flocks from wolves). The name Lupercal is sometimes, inaccurately, used for the Lupercalia. It was on one of these occasions that Antony thrice offered JULIUS CÆSAR the crown, but he refused, saying, "JUPITER alone is king of Rome."

You all did see that on the Lupercal,
I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
Which he did thrice refuse.

SHAKESPEARE: Julius Cæsar, III, ii.

Lurch. To leave in the lurch. To desert a person in a difficulty. In cribbage, one is left in the position called the lurch, when one's adversary has run out his score of fifty-one holes before one has oneself turned the corner (or pegged out one's thirty-first hole).

Lush. Beer and other intoxicating drinks.

A word of uncertain origin, said by some to be derived from the name of a London brewer called Lushington. Up to about 1895, there was a convivial society of actors called "The City of Lushington," which met in the Harp Tavern, Russell Street, and claimed to be 150 years old. It may also be the O.Fr. vin lousche, thick or unsettled wine. Lush is also American slang for an alcoholic.

Lusians, The. The Portuguese national epic, written by Camoëns, and published in 1572. It relates the stories of illustrious actions of the Lusians or Portuguese (see LUSUS), and primarily the exploits of Vasco da Gama and his comrades in their "discovery of India" (1497-1499). The intervention of VENUS and BACCHUS and other classical deities makes it far more than the narrative of a voyage. It has been said that Camoëns did for the Portuguese language what Dante did for Italian, and Chaucer for English. See LUSUS.

Lustral. Properly, pertaining to the LUSTRUM; hence purificatory, as lustral water, the water used in Christian as well as many pagan rites for aspersing worshippers. In ROME the priest used a small OLIVE or LAUREL branch for sprinkling infants and the people.

Lustrum. In ancient ROME the purificatory sacrifice made by the censors for the people once in five years, after the census had been taken (from luere, to wash, to purify); hence a period of five years.

Lusus. Pliny (III, i) tells us that Lusus was the companion of BACCHUS in his travels, and settled a colony in Portugal; whence the country was called Lusitania, and the inhabitants Lusians, or the sons of Lusus.

Lutestring. A glossy silk fabric; the French lustrine (from lustre).

Speaking in lutestring. Flash, or affected speech. Junius in Letter XLVIII says: "I was led to trouble you with these observations by a passage, which, to speak in lutestring, I met with this morning in the course of my reading." SHAKESPEARE has "taffeta phrases and silken terms precise". We call inflated speech "FUSTIAN" or "BOMBAST"; say a man talks stuff; term a book or speech SHODDY; sailors call telling a story "spinning a yarn", etc.

Lutetia (Lat. lutum, mud). The ancient name of PARIS, which, in Roman times, was a collection of mud hovels. CÆSAR called it Lutetia Parisiorum (the mud-town of the Parisii), which gives the present name Paris.

Lutin. A GOBLIN in the folklore of Normandy; similar to the house-spirits of Germany. The name was formerly netun, and is said to be derived from NEPTUNE. When the lutin assumes the form of a horse ready equipped, it is called Le Cheval Bayard. See BAYARD.

To lutin. To twist hair into ELF-LOCKS. These mischievous urchins are said to tangle the mane of a horse or the locks of a child so that the hair must be cut off.

Lutine Bell. H.M.S. Lutine, a captured French warship, re-commissioned by the British, left Yarmouth for Holland on 9 October 1799 with bullion and specie to the value of some £500,000. The same night, she was wrecked on a sandbank off the Zuyder Zee with the loss of every soul on board save one, who died as soon as rescued. It was a black day for LLOYD'S underwriters. In 1858 some £50,000 was salvaged, as well as the Lutine's bell and rudder, among other things. The latter was made into the official chair for Lloyd's chairman and a secretary's desk. The bell was hung at Lloyd's and is rung once whenever a total wreck is reported, and twice for an overdue ship.

It was rung in 1963 to signal the death of President Kennedy and in 1965 for that of Sir Winston Churchill, who was an honorary member of Lloyd's.

Luz (lüz). The indestructible bone of the human body according to Rabbinical legend; the nucleus of the resurrection body. A bone in the spine and the sacrum (sacred bone) may have been so called in allusion to it.

LXX. A common abbreviation for the SEPTUAGINT.

Lycanthropy (li kán' thrō pi). The insanity afflicting one who imagines himself to be some kind of animal and exhibits the tastes, voices, etc., of that animal. Formerly, the name given by the ancients to those who imagined themselves to be wolves (Gr. lukos, wolf; anthropos, man). The WEREWOLF has sometimes been called a lycanthrope; and lycanthropy was sometimes applied to the form of witchcraft by which WITCHES transformed themselves into wolves.

Lycaon (li ká' on). In classical mythology, a king of ARCADIA, who, desirous of testing the divine knowledge of JOVE, served up human flesh on his table; for which the god changed him into a wolf. His daughter, CALISTO, was changed into the constellation the Bear, which is sometimes called Lycaonis Arctos.

Lycopodium (lī kō pō' di ūm). A genus of perennial plants comprising the club-mosses, so called from their fanciful resemblance to a wolf's foot (Gr. lukos, wolf; pous, podos, foot). The powder from the spore-cases of some of these is used in surgery as an absorbent and also (as it is highly inflammable) for stage-lighting.

Lyddite. A high explosive composed of picric acid and gun-cotton; so called from Lydd in Kent, where it was first tested on the artillery ranges in 1888.

Lydford Law. Punish first and try afterwards. Lydford was one of the four Saxon boroughs of Devon and its Norman castle became the prison of the STANNARIES. Offenders were confined in a dungeon so loathsome and dreary that they frequently died before they could be brought for trial. Cp. CUPAR JUSTICE.

Lying for the whetstone. See WHETSTONE.

Lyke-wake. See LICH-WAKE.

Lyme-, or Lyam-hound (lim). The bloodhound, so called from lyme, or lyam, the leash (Lat. ligare, to tie). The lymehound was used by mediæval huntsmen for tracking down the wounded buck, and the gaze-hound for killing it.

Lynceus (lin' sūs). One of the ARGONAUTS. He was so sharp-sighted that he could see through the earth, and distinguish objects that were miles off.

Non possis oculo quantum contendere Lynceus.
HORACE: I Epistles, i, 28.

Also the name of the husband of HYPERMNESTRA. See DANAIDES.

Lynch Law. Mob-law, law administered by private individuals, and followed by summary execution. The origin of the term is unknown; none of the suggested derivations from James Lynch, a 15th-century Mayor of Galway in Ireland, or Charles Lynch (1736-1796) of Virginia, has been substantiated. From the 18th century the practice was particularly associated with the more lawless districts of the U.S.A. Cp. CUPAR JUSTICE; JEDWOOD JUSTICE; LYDFORD LAW.

Lynx (lingks). The animal proverbial for its piercing eyesight is a fabulous beast, half dog and half panther, but not like either in character. The cat-like animal now called a lynx is not remarkable for keen-sightedness. The word is probably related to Gr. lussein, to see. Cp. LYNCEUS.

Lyon King of Arms, Lord. The chief heraldic officer for SCOTLAND; so called from the lion rampant in the Scottish royal arms. See HERALDRY; THE LION IN HERALDRY under LION.

Lyonesse. A rich tract of land fabled to stretch between Land's End and the Scilly Isles on which stood the City of Lions and some 140 churches. King ARTHUR came from this mythical country. "That sweet land of Lyonesse" was, according to Spenser (The Faerie Queene), the birthplace of TRISTRAM, and, according to Tennyson, the scene of King Arthur's death.

Of Faery damsels met in forest wide
By knights of Logres, or of Lyones,
Lancelot, or Pelleas, or Pellenoire

MILTON: Paradise Regained, II, 359.

Lyre. The most ancient of all stringed instruments. That of Terpander and Olympus had only three strings; the Scythian lyre had five; that of Simonides had eight, and that of Timotheus had twelve. It was played either with the fingers or with a plectrum. The lyre is called by poets a "shell", because the cords of the lyre used by ORPHEUS, AMPHION, and APOLLO were stretched on the shell of a tortoise. HERCULES used boxwood.

Amphion built Thebes with the music of his lyre.

Arion charmed the dolphins by the music of his lyre, and when the bard threw himself into the sea one of them carried him safely to Tænarus.

Hercules was taught music by Linus. One day, being reproved, the strong man broke the head of his master with his own lyre.

Orpheus charmed savage beasts, and even the infernal gods with the music of his lyre. Mountains moved to hear his song and rivers ceased to flow.

Lysenkoism. See MICHURINISM.

M

M. The thirteenth letter of the English alphabet (the twelfth of the ancient Roman, and twentieth of the FUTHORC). M in the Phœnician character represented the wavy appearance of water, and is called in Hebrew mem (water). The Egyptian hieroglyphic represented the owl. In English M is always sounded, except in words from Greek in which it is followed by n, as mnemonics, Mnason (Acts xxi, 16).

In Roman numerals M stands for 1,000 (Lat. mille): MCMLXX = one thousand, nine hundred and seventy.

Persons convicted of manslaughter, and admitted to BENEFIT OF CLERGY, used to be branded with an M. It was burnt on the brawn of the left thumb.

What is your name? N or M. See under N.

M, to represent the human face. Add two dots for the eyes, thus, .M. These dots being equal to O's, we get OMO (homo), Latin for man.

Who reads the name,
For man upon his forehead, there the M
Had traced most plainly.

DANTE: Purgatory, xxiii.

M'. The first letter of certain CELTIC surnames (M'Cabe, M'Ian, M'Mahon, etc.) represents Mac (son) and should be so pronounced.

M.B. Waistcoat. A clerical cassock waistcoat was so called (c. 1830) when first introduced by the HIGH CHURCH party. M.B. means "MARK OF THE BEAST". He smiled at the folly which stigmatised an M.B. waistcoat.

MRS. OLIPHANT: Phæbe Junior, II, iii.

MS. (pl. MSS.). Manuscript; applied to literary works, etc., in handwriting, but erroneously to typescript (Lat. manuscriptum, that which is written by hand).

Mab (perhaps the Welsh maban, a baby). The "fairies' midwife"—i.e. employed by the fairies as midwife to deliver man's brain of dreams. Thus when ROMEO says, "I dreamed a dream tonight," Mercutio replies, "Oh, then, I see Queen Mab hath been with you." When Mab is called "queen" it does not mean sovereign, for TITANIA as wife of King OBERON was Queen of Faery, but simply "female" (O.E. quén or cwén, modern quean).

Excellent descriptions of Mab are given by SHAKESPEARE (Romeo and Juliet, I, iv), by Ben Jonson, by Herrick, and by Drayton in Nymphideæ.

Mabinogion. A collection of eleven mediæval CELTIC stories of which the Four Branches of the Mabinogi are the most outstanding. Originally they were probably essentially concerned with the life and death of Pryderi, but a considerable amount of additional material has complicated the structure. The tales are basically Welsh mythology and folklore together with ARTHURIAN ROMANCE. The title "Mabinogion" was given by Lady Charlotte Guest to her translations of these stories (1838-1849); but this only properly applies to the Four Branches (Pwyll, Branwen, Manawydan, and Math) and not the remainder. The last three stories, The Lady of the Fountain, Peredur, and Gereint son of Erbin, show marked Norman-French influence, often attributed to Chrétien de Troyes, but it is now thought that his material may have derived from Welsh sources.

Mabinogi is derived from mab (youth) and was applied to a "tale of youth", then to any "tale". Lady Guest's translation long held the field, but the best and most complete English translation is now that of Gwyn Jones and Thomas Jones (1948).

Macaber, or Macabre, The Danse. See DANCE OF DEATH.

Macadamize. A method of road-making introduced after 1810 by John L. Macadam (1756-1836), consisting of layers of broken stones of nearly uniform size, each being separately crushed into position by traffic, or (later) by a heavy roller.

Macaire. A French CHANSON DE GESTE of the 12th century. Macaire was the name of the murderer of Aubry de Montdidier and he was brought to justice by the sagacity of AUBRY'S DOG (see under DOG). The story was transferred to the 14th century in another version and a 15th-century mural painting of the legend in the chateau of Montargis gave rise to Aubry's dog being called the "dog of Montargis".

Robert Macaire. A typical villain of French comedy; from the play of this name (a sequel to L'Auberge des Adrets, 1834) by Frédéric Lemaître and Benjamin Antier. Macaire is—le type de la perversité, de l'impudence, de la friponnerie audacieuse, le héros fanfaron du vol et de l'assassinat.

Macaroni. A COXCOMB (Ital. un maccherone, see next entry). The word is derived from the Macaroni Club, instituted in London about 1760 by a set of flashy men who had travelled in Italy, and introduced at ALMACK'S subscription table the new-fangled Italian food, macaroni. The Macaronies were exquisite fops; vicious, insolent, fond of gambling, drinking and duelling, and were (c. 1773) the curse of VAUXHALL GARDENS.

An American regiment raised in Maryland during the War of Independence was called The Macaronies from its showy uniform.

Macaronic Latin. DOG-LATIN. From the Ital. maccheroni (macaroni), a mixture of coarse meal, eggs and cheese.

Macaronic verse. Verses in which foreign words are ludicrously distorted and jumbled together, as in Person's lines on the threatened invasion of England by NAPOLEON or J. A. Morgan's

"translation" of Canning's The Elderly Gentleman, the first two verses of which are—

Prope ripam fluvii solus
A senex silently sat
Super caput ecce his wig
Et wig super, ecce his hat.
Blew Zephyrus alte, acerbus,
Dum elderly gentleman sat;
Et a capite took up quite torve
Et in rivum projecit his hat.

It seems to have been originated by Odaxius of Padua but was popularized by his pupil, Teofilo Folengo or Merlinus Coccaius (1491–1544), a Mantuan monk of noble family whose Liber Macaronicorum (1520), a poetical rhapsody, made up of words of different languages, treated of "pleasant matters" in a comical style.

Skelton's Phyllyp Sparowe (1512) contained somewhat similar verse. It begins—

Pla ce bo,
Who is there, who?
Di le xi,
Dame Margery.

and Dunbar's Testament of Andrew Kennedy (1508)—

I will na priestis for me sing,
Dies illa, Dies iræ,
Na yet na bellis for me ring,
Sicut semper solet fieri—

though not true macaronic, is a near approach.

In 1801, A. Cunningham published Delectus Macaronicorum Carminum, a history of macaronic poetry.

Maccabæus. The surname given to Judas, the central figure in the Jewish struggle (c. 170–160 B.C.) against the SELUCIDÆ, and hence to his family or clan. He was the third son of Mattathias the Hasmonæan. The most probable derivation of the name is from Heb. makkabah, hammer, just as Edward I was called 'Scotorum malleus'.

The Maccabees. The family of Jewish heroes descended from Mattathias the Hasmonæan and his five sons, John, Simon, Judas, Eleazar, and Jonathan, which delivered its race from the persecutions of the Syrian King, Antiochus Epiphanes (175–164 B.C.). It established a line of priest-kings which lasted till supplanted by Herod in 37 B.C. Their exploits are told in the four Books of the Maccabees, of which two are in the APOCRYPHA.

McCarthyism. Political witch-hunting; the hounding of Communist suspects to secure their removal from office and public affairs. So called after U.S. Senator Joseph McCarthy (1909–1957) who specialized in these activities somewhat unscrupulously.

McCoy, or McKoy, The Real, as used in the U.S.A., but formerly in Britain it was the Real MacKay. Various stories about an American boxer of the 1890s have been suggested as the origin of the phrase, but Eric Partridge in From Sanskrit to Brazil (1952), says with more probable truth that it dates from the 1880s and originated in SCOTLAND where it was applied to whisky, men, and things of the highest quality. The whisky was exported to both the U.S.A. and Canada where people of Scottish origin drank the whisky and kept the phrase alive. In the 1890s, however, there is no doubt that it was applied to an outstanding boxer whose name happened to be McCoy.

Macdonald. Lord Macdonald's breed.

Parasites. It is said that Lord Macdonald (son of the LORD OF THE ISLES) once made a raid on the mainland. He and his followers replaced their own rags with the smarter clothes stripped off their enemies, with the result of being overrun with parasites.

Mace. Originally a club armed with iron, and used in war; now a staff of office pertaining to certain dignitaries, as the SPEAKER of the HOUSE OF COMMONS, Lord Mayors, MAYORS, etc. Both sword and mace are symbols of dignity, suited to the times when men went about in armour, and sovereigns needed champions to vindicate their rights.

Macedonia's Madman. See under MAD.

Macedonians. A religious sect named after Macedonius (d. c. 362), Bishop of Constantinople, an upholder of semi-Arianism. He was deposed by the ARIAN Council of Constantinople in 360.

MacFarlane's Geese. The proverb is that, "MacFarlane's geese like their play better than their meat." The wild geese of Inch-Tavoe (Loch Lomond) used to be called MacFarlane's Geese because the MacFarlanes had a house on the island, and it is said that the geese never returned after the destruction of that house. One day James VI visited the chieftain and was highly amused by the gambols of the geese, but one served at table was so tough that the king exclaimed, "MacFarlane's geese like their play better than their meat."

MacGregor (mä greg' ör). The motto of the MacGregors is, "E'en do and spair nocht," said to have been given them in the 12th century by a king of SCOTLAND. While the king was hunting, he was attacked by a wild boar and Sir Malcolm asked permission to encounter the creature. "E'en do," said the king, "and spair nocht." Whereupon the baronet tore up an oak sapling and dispatched the enraged animal. For this the king gave Sir Malcolm permission to use the said motto, and, in place of a Scots fir, to adopt for crest an oak tree eradicate, proper.

Another motto of the MacGregors is Srioghal mo dhream, i.e. "Royal is my tribe."

The MacGregors furnish the only instance of a clan being deprived of its family name. In 1603, as a result of their ruthless ferocity at the battle of Glenfruin against the Colquhouns of Luss, it was proscribed by James VI and the clan assumed the names of neighbouring families such as the Campbells, Buchanans, Grahams, Murrays, etc. The laws against them were annulled by Charles II in 1661, but in 1693, under William and Mary, similar measures were enacted against them. These penalties were finally abolished by the British PARLIAMENT and John Murray of Lanrick resumed the name MacGregor as chief of the clan in 1822. See ROB ROY.

Robert (Rob Roy) MacGregor. See ROB ROY.

Machiavelli, Niccolò (ma kyá vel' i) (1469-1527). The celebrated Florentine statesman and author of Il Principe (The Prince), a treatise on the art of government addressed to Lorenzo de' MEDICI, putting forward the view that only a strong and ruthless prince could free Italy from devastation by foreigners. In view of the distracted state of the country, he held that terrorism and deceit were justifiable means of achieving a peaceful and prosperous Italy. Hence the use of his name as an epithet or synonym for an unscrupulous politician; and Machiavellianism and Machiavellism to denote political deceit and intrigue and the use of unscrupulous methods generally.

Am I politic? am I subtle? am I a Machiavel?
SHAKESPEARE:
The Merry Wives of Windsor, III, i.

The Imperial Machiavelli. Tiberius, the Roman Emperor (42 B.C.-A.D. 37). His political axiom was: "He who knows not how to dissemble knows not how to reign." It was also the axiom of Louis XI of France.

Mach Number. An expression of the ratio of flight speed to the speed of sound, devised by the Austrian physicist and psychologist, Ernst Mach (1838-1916). An aircraft flying at Mach 2 is travelling at twice the speed of sound.

Macintosh. Cloth waterproofed with rubber by a process patented in 1823 by Charles Macintosh (1766-1843); also a coat made of this or, loosely, any raincoat.

Mackerel. Mackerel Sky. A sky dappled with detached rounded masses of white cloud, something like the markings of a mackerel.

To throw a sprat to catch a mackerel.
See SPRAT.

Mackworth's Inn. See BARNARD'S INN.

Macmillanites. A religious sect in Scotland which seceded from the CAMERONIANS in 1743 because they wished for stricter adherence to the principles of the REFORMATION in Scotland; so named from John Macmillan (1670-1753), their leader. They called themselves the "Reformed Presbytery".

MacPherson (màc fēr' son). Fable has it that during the reign of David I of Scotland (1084, 1124-1153) a younger brother of the chief of the powerful clan Chattan became abbot of Kingussie. His elder brother died childless, and the chieftainship devolved on the abbot. He is supposed to have obtained a papal dispensation (a most improbable story) to marry the daughter of the thane of Calder. A swarm of little "Kingussies" was the result. The people of Inverness-shire called them the Mac-phersons, i.e. the sons of the parson.

Macquarie Style. The late Georgian style of architecture favoured by General Lachlan Macquarie when Governor of New South Wales (1809-1821). His chief architect was Francis Howard Greenway, an ex-convict, who designed St. James's Church, Sydney.

Macrocosm (Gr., the great world). The ancients looked upon the universe as a living creature and the followers of PARACELUSUS considered man a miniature representation of the universe. The one was termed the Macrocosm, the other the MICROCOSM.

Mad. Mad as a hatter. A phrase popularized by Lewis Carroll in Alice in Wonderland, (1865). It is found in Thackeray's Pendennis (1850) and is recorded in America in 1836. Mercurous nitrate was used in the making of felt hats and its effects can produce St. VITUS'S DANCE or lesser tremulous manifestations, hence the likely origin of the phrase. It has also been suggested that the original "mad hatter" was Robert Crab, a 17th-century eccentric living at Chesham, who gave all his goods to the poor and lived on dock leaves and grass.

Mad as a March hare. See under HARE.
The Mad Cavalier. Prince Rupert (1619-1682), noted for his impetuous courage and impatience of control as the Royalist cavalry leader during the English CIVIL WAR. He was the son of James I's daughter, Elizabeth, and Frederick, the Elector of the PALATINATE.

The Mad Parliament. The parliament which met at Oxford in 1258 and which produced the Provisions of Oxford to limit the power of Henry III. The epithet "Mad" seems to have arisen through error, probably a substitution of insane for insigne (famous) in a contemporary description.

The Mad Poet. Nathaniel Lee (c. 1653-1692), who towards the end of his life lost his reason through intemperance and was confined for five years in BEDLAM.

The Brilliant Madman, or Madman of the North. Charles XII of Sweden (1682, 1697-1718).

Heroes are much the same, the point's agreed
 From Macedonia's madman to the Swede.

POPE: Essay on Man, Epistle iv.

Macedonia's Madman. ALEXANDER the Great.

Madame. The wife of Philippe, Duc d'Orléans (1640-1701), brother of Louis XIV, was so styled; the title was usually reserved for the eldest daughter of the king or the DAUPHIN. Cp. MONSIEUR.

Mademoiselle, La Grande. Anne, Duchesse de Montpensier (1627-1693), cousin to Louis XIV, and daughter of Gaston, Duc d'Orléans, noted for her wealth, position, and strength of character.

Madge. A MAGPIE; the abbreviated form of Margaret. Cp. MAG.

Madge-howlet, or Madge-owl. The barn owl.

I'll sit in a barn with madge-howlet, and catch mice first.

BEN JONSON: Every Man in his Humour, II, ii.

Madoc, or Madog. A Welsh prince, son of Owain Gwynedd, and legendary discoverer of America in 1170. He is supposed to have sailed from Aber-Cerrig-Gwynion near Rhos-on-Sea with two ships and reached Mobile Bay, Alabama. The Mandan Indians (extinct since the mid-19th century) may have been the descendants of Madoc's voyagers, and there are fortifications north of Mobile Bay resembling Welsh pre-Norman castles. Madoc is also supposed to have made a second voyage.

Southey has a poem called Madoc (1805) which also embodies the foundation of the Mexican Empire by the Aztecs from Aztlan. The story is first found in a 15th-century Welsh poem.

Madonna (Ital., my lady). A title especially applied to the Virgin MARY.

Madras System. The MONITORIAL SYSTEM devised by Andrew Bell (1753-1832), when superintendent of the Madras Orphanage for sons of soldiers (1789-1797). The so-called LANCASTERIAN system was derived from it. Bell subsequently became Superintendent for the NATIONAL SOCIETY.

Mæander. See MEANDER.

Mæcenas (mê sê' nās). A patron of letters; so called from the Roman statesman G. Mæcenas (d. 8 B.C.), who kept an open house for men of letters in the reign of Augustus. He was the special friend and patron of HORACE and VIRGIL. Nicholas Rowe so dubbed the Earl of Halifax on his installation to the Order of the GARTER (1714).

The last English Mæcenas. Samuel Rogers (1763-1855), poet and banker.

Maelduin, or Maeldune, The Voyage of.

In early Irish romance, Maeldune was the son of Ailill, who had been killed by a robber from Leix. As a young man, he set sail to seek the murderer and voyaged for three years and seven months visiting many islands and seeing marvels hitherto unknown. He eventually found the culprit, but took no vengeance, out of gratitude to God for his deliverance from such a variety of great dangers. The story has much in common with the voyage of St. BRANDAN.

Mænads (frenzied women). The Bacchæ or Bacchantes, female attendants of BACCHUS. The name arises from their extravagant gestures and frenzied rites.

Mæonides (mê on' i dêz), or The Mæonian Poet. HOMER, either because he was the son of Mæon, or because he was born in Mæonia (Asia Minor).

Mæra, or Mœra. The dog of ICARIUS.

Mæve, or Medb. In Irish legend, a mythical queen of Connacht, wife of Ailill and mother of FINDABAIR, who sought the downfall of CUCHULAIN and trained sorcerers to help bring this about. She instigated the Cattle Raid of Cuailnge, thus initiating the WAR OF THE BROWN BULL.

Mæviad. See BAVIAD.

Mae West. The name given by aircraft personnel in World War II to the inflatable life-jacket or vest worn when there was danger of being forced into the sea. It was an allusion to the somewhat buxom charms of the famous film star of this name.

Mafficking. Extravagant and boisterous celebration of an event, especially on an occasion of national rejoicing. From the uproarious scenes and unrestrained exultation that took place in the centre of London on the night of 18 May, 1900, when the news of the relief of Mafeking (besieged by the Boers for 217 days) became known. The "heroic" character of Baden-Powell's defence has been questioned, but the impact made at the time is not in dispute.

Mafia. A Sicilian secret criminal organization which became increasingly powerful during the 19th century. "Protection" by blackmail, boycotting, terrorization and the vendetta are characteristic, and Sicilian politics came to be dominated by the mafiosi. Its power was largely broken under Mussolini in the 1920s but it has not been exterminated. Sicilian immigrants introduced it into the United States, where it became a growing nuisance from the 1890s, and Mussolini's firm measures caused a fresh influx to join the BOOTLEGGERS and gangsters of the AL CAPONE era.

Mafia is apparently an Arabic word denoting "a place of refuge", and as a result of the Arab conquest of Sicily in the 9th century, many Sicilian families found a mafia in the hills where they duly became peasant bandits, with patriotic and family loyalties. Their resistance continued after the Norman conquest of the 11th century and later control by Spain. After the liberation and unification of Italy the Mafia made crime a full-time pursuit. Cp. CAMORRA.

Mag A contraction of MAGPIE. What a mag you are! You chatter like a magpie. A prating person is called "a mag".

Maga. A once familiar name for Blackwood's Magazine.

Magazine. A place for stores (Arab. makhzan, a storehouse) and this meaning is still retained in military usage. The word now commonly denotes a periodical publication containing contributions by various authors. How this came about is seen from the Introduction to The Gentleman's Magazine (1731)—the first to use the word in this way:

This Consideration has induced several Gentlemen to promote a Monthly Collection to treasure up, as in a Magazine, the most remarkable Pieces on the Subjects above mention'd.

Magdalene (mäg' dá lën). An asylum for reclaiming prostitutes; so called from Mary Magdalene, or Mary of Magdala,

"out of whom He had cast seven devils" (Mark xvi, 9). It is probably a MISNOMER since the identification of Mary Magdalene with the sinner in Luke vii is very problematical. See MAUDLIN.

Magdalen College, Oxford (1458) and Magdalene College, Cambridge (1542), are pronounced mawd' lin.

Magdalenian (mäg dé lë' nian). The name given to the late (upper) PALÆOLITHIC period from the district of La Madeleine, lower Vézère, France, where representative relics have been found. These people used wood and bone as well as flint, including bone needles and barbed harpoons. The cave paintings of Altamira in Spain belong to this period. In England, the Creswellian culture is akin to the Magdalenian.

Magdeburg Centuries. The first great PROTESTANT history of the Christian Church, compiled in Magdeburg under the direction of Matthias Flacius Illyricus (1520-1575). It was written in Latin and first published at Basle (1559-1574) as the Historia Ecclesiae Christi, and takes the story to 1400.

Magellan, Straits of (mä jel' än). So called after Fernão de Magelhães (1480-1521), the Portuguese navigator, who undertook the first expedition to circumnavigate the globe, and who discovered them in 1520. He was killed in the Philippines.

Magenta (mä jen' tá). A brilliant red aniline dye derived from coal-tar, named in commemoration of the bloody battle of Magenta, when the Austrians were defeated by the French and Sardinians. This was just before the dye was discovered in 1859.

Maggot. There was an old idea that whimsical or crotchety persons had maggots in their brains:

Are you not mad, my friend? What time o' th' moon is't?

Have not you maggots in your brain?

JOHN FLETCHER: Women Pleas'd, III, iv (1620).

Hence maggoty, whimsical, full of fancies. Fanciful dance tunes used to be called maggots, as in The Dancing Master (1716), where there are such titles as "Barker's maggots", "Cary's maggots", "Draper's maggots", etc., and in 1685 Samuel Wesley, father of John and Charles Wesley, published a volume called Maggots; or Poems on Several Subjects.

When the maggot bites. When the fancy takes us. Swift, making fun of the notion, says that if the bite is hexagonal it produces poetry; if circular, eloquence; if conical, politics.

Instead of maggots the Scots say, "His head is full of bees"; the French Il a des rats dans la tête (cp. our "rats in the garret" and "bats in the belfry"); and in Holland, "He has a mouse's nest in his head."

Magi (mā' jī) (Lat., pl. of magus). Literally "wise men"; specifically, the Three Wise Men of the East who brought gifts to the infant Saviour. Tradition calls them Melchior, Gaspar, and Balthazar, three kings of the East. The first offered GOLD, the emblem of royalty; the second, FRANKINCENSE, in token of divinity; and the third, myrrh, in prophetic allusion to the persecution unto death which awaited the "Man of Sorrows".

Melchior means "king of light".

Gaspar or Caspar means "the white one".

Balthazar means "the lord of treasures".

Mediæval legend calls them the Three Kings of Cologne, and the cathedral there claims their relics. They are commemorated on 2, 3, and 4 January, and particularly at the Feast of the EPIPHANY.

Among the ancient Medes and Persians, the Magi were members of a priestly caste credited with great occult powers, and in Camoëns' LUSIAD the term denotes Indian BRAHMINS. Ammianus Marcellinus says the Persian magi derived their knowledge from the Brahmins of India (i, 23), and Arianus expressly calls the Brahmins "magi" (i, 7).

Magic Lantern. The old name for an optical instrument for the projection of slides and pictures. It is said to have been invented in 1636 by Athanasius Kircher.

Magic Rings, Wands, etc. See RING, WAND, etc.

The Great Magician, or Wizard of the North. Professor John Wilson ("Christopher North") gave Sir Walter Scott the name, because of the wonderful fascination of his writings.

Magician of the North. The title assumed by Johann Georg Hamann (1730-1788), a German philosopher and theologian.

Maginot Line (ma' zhi no). A zone of fortifications built along the eastern frontier of France between 1929 and 1934 and named after André Maginot (1877-1932), Minister of War, who sponsored its construction. The line, essentially to cover the returned territories of Alsace-Lorraine, extended from the Swiss border to that of Belgium and lulled the French into a belief that they were secure from any German threat of invasion. In the event, Hitler's troops entered France through Belgium in 1940.

Maginot mentality. Belief in a strategy of defence; also used contemptuously of one whose tactics are regarded as out of date.

Magna Carta (Lat.). The Great Charter of liberties extorted from King John in 1215. Its main effect was to secure the liberties of the English Church, the rights of the baronial classes, and to restrict abuses of royal power. It gained a new, but historically inaccurate, importance in the constitutional quarrels of the 17th century as a charter of "English liberty".

Magnanimous, The. Alfonso V of Aragon (c. 1394, 1416-1458).

Magnet. The loadstone or LODESTONE; so called from Magnesia in Lydia, where the magnetic iron ore was said to abound.

Magnetic Island. An island in Halifax Bay, Queensland, Australia, so named by Captain Cook because he thought his compass was affected by metallic ore in the rocks, although later navigators found no confirmation of this.

Magnetic Mountain. A mountain of mediæval legend which drew out the nails of any ship that approached within its influence. It is referred to in Mandeville's Travels and in other stories.

Magnificat. The hymn of the Virgin (Luke i, 46-55) beginning "My soul doth magnify the Lord" (Magnificat anima mea Dominum), used as part of the daily service of the Church since the beginning of the 6th century, and at Evening Prayer in England for over 800 years.

To correct Magnificat before one has learnt Te Deum. To try to do that for which one has no qualifications; to criticize presumptuously.

To sing the Magnificat at matins. To do things at the wrong time, or out of place. The Magnificat belongs to VESPERS, not to MATINS.

Magnificent, The. Lorenzo de' MEDICI (1449-1492), Il Magnifico, Duke of Florence. Robert, Duke of Normandy (1028-1035), also called Le Diable.

Soliman or Suleiman I (c. 1494, 1520-1566), greatest of the Turkish sultans.

C'est magnifique, mais ce n'est pas la guerre. A magnificent gesture, but not really warfare. Admirable, but not according to rule. The comment on the field made by the French General Bosquet to A. H. Layard on the charge of the Light Brigade at Balaclava. It has frequently been attributed to Marshal Canrobert.

Magnolia. A genus of North American flowering trees, so called from Pierre Magnol (1638-1715), professor of Botany at Montpellier.

Magnum. A wine bottle, twice the size of an ordinary bottle or two "reputed quarts". A Double Magnum holds the contents of four ordinary bottles. Cp. JEROBOAM.

Magnum bonum (Lat., "great and good"). A name given to certain choice potatoes and also plums.

Magnum opus. The chief or most important of one's literary works.

My magnum opus, the "Life of Dr. Johnson" . . . is to be published on Monday, 16th May.
BOSWELL: Letter to Rev. W. Temple, 1791.

Magpie. Formerly "maggot-pie", maggot representing Margaret (cp. Robin red-breast, Tom-tit, and the old Phyllyp-sparrow), and pie being pied, in allusion to its white and black plumage.

Augurs and understood relations have (By maggot pies, and choughs, and rooks) brought forth

The secret'st man of blood.

SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, III, iv.

The magpie has generally been regarded as an uncanny bird; in Sweden it is connected with WITCHCRAFT; in Devonshire it was a custom to spit three times to avert ill luck when the bird was sighted; in SCOTLAND magpies flying near the windows of a house foretold death. The old rhyme about magpies seen in the course of a walk says:

One's sorrow, two's mirth,
Three's a wedding, four's a birth,
Five's a christening, six a dearth,
Seven's heaven, eight is hell,
And nine's the devil his ane sel'.

In target-shooting the score made by a shot striking the outermost division but one is called a maggie because it was customarily signalled by a black and white flag; and formerly BISHOPS were humorously or derisively called maggies because of their black and white vestments.

Lawyers as Vultures, had soared up and down;
Prelates, like Magpies, in the Air had flown.

Howell's Letters:

Lines to the Knowing Reader (1645).

Magus. See SIMON MAGUS; MAGI.

Mahabharata (ma ha ba ra' tā). One of the two great epic poems of ancient India, the other being the RAMAYANA. It is about eight times the combined length of the ILIAD and ODYSSEY. Its main story is the war between the Kauravas (descendants of Dhritarashtra) and the Pandavas (descendants of Pandu), but there are innumerable episodes. Dhritarashtra and Pandu were sons of Kuru, a descendant of Bharata from whom the poem gets its name. It contains the BHAGAVAD GITA.

Maha-pudma. See TORTOISE.

Mahātma (mā hāt' mā) (Sansk., "great soul").

Max Müller tells us that:

Mahātma is a well-known Sanskrit word applied to men who have retired from the world, who, by means of a long ascetic discipline, have subdued the passions of the flesh, and gained a reputation for sanctity and knowledge. That these men are able to perform most startling feats, and to suffer the most terrible tortures, is perfectly true.

Nineteenth Century, May, 1893.

By the Esoteric Buddhists the name is given to adepts of the highest order, a community of whom is supposed to exist in Tibet, and by Theosophists (see THEOSOPHY) to one who has reached perfection spiritually, intellectually, and physically. As his knowledge is perfect he can produce effects which, to the ordinary man, appear miraculous.

The title is particularly associated with Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi (1869-1948), the Hindu nationalist leader who identified himself with the poor, practised prayer and fasting, and sought to achieve his political ends by non-violence.

Mahayana ("Great Vehicle"). A development from the earlier form of BUDDHISM, which occurred about two thousand years ago. It enjoined, besides the pursuit of NIRVANA, that each individual should strive to become a Buddha, thereby becoming able to preach and serve the welfare of others.

Mahdi (Arab., "the divinely directed one"). The expected MESSIAH of the Mohammedans. There have been numerous bearers of this title since early on in the Mohammedan era and the Hidden IMAM (head of the true faith) of the Ismaelis was another such. The most popularly known to the British was Mohammed Ahmed, who led the revolt in the Sudan and who died in 1885. His tomb was destroyed after the battle of Omdurman in 1898. The most famous was Obaidallah al-Mahdi, first CALIPH of the Fatimite dynasty, who reigned from 909 to 933.

Mah-jongg. A Chinese game played with "tiles" like dominoes, made of ivory and bamboo, with usually four players. The tiles (136 or 144 in all) are made up of numbered bamboos, circles, and characters; honours (red, green and white dragons), winds (north, east, south and west), and additionally flowers and seasons.

It appears to be of 19th-century origin. The game was introduced to the U.S.A. by Joseph Babcock about 1919 under the trade name Mah-jongg, which he coined.

Mahomet. See MOHAMMED.

Mahoun, Mahound. Name of contempt for MOHAMMED, a Moslem, a Moor, particularly in the romances of the CRUSADES. The name is sometimes used as a synonym for the DEVIL.

Off-times by Termagant and Mahound swore.
SPENSER: The Faerie Queene VI, vii, 47.

Maia. The eldest and most lovely of the PLEIADES and mother, by JUPITER, of MERCURY. See MAY.

Maid. Maid Marian. A female character in the old May games and MORRIS DANCES, usually as Queen of the May. In the later ROBIN HOOD ballads she became attached to the cycle as the outlaw's sweetheart, probably through the performance of Robin Hood plays at MAY-DAY festivities. The part of Maid Marian, both in the games and the dance, was frequently played by a man in female costume.

[The Courtier] must, if the least spot of morpheus come on his face, have his oil of tartar, his lac virginis, his camphor dissolved in verjuice, to make the foole as faire, for sooth, as if he were to play Maid Marian in a May-game or moris-dance.
GREENE: Quip for an Upstart Courtier (1592).

Maid of all work. A female servant doing work of all kinds.

Maid of Athens. The girl immortalized in Byron's poem was Theresa Macri.

Maid of Honour. An unmarried lady in attendance upon a queen or princess. Also the name of a small almond-flavoured cheesecake.

Maid of Kent. See HOLY MAID OF KENT under HOLY.

Maid of Norway. Margaret (c. 1283-1290), daughter of Eric II and Margaret of Norway, acknowledged Queen of Scotland on the death of her maternal grandfather, Alexander III of Scotland (1285). She was betrothed to Prince Edward, son of Edward I of England, but died on the voyage to Scotland (1290).

Maid of Orleans. JOAN OF ARC.

Maid of Saragossa. Augustina Zaragoza, distinguished for her heroism when Saragossa was besieged in 1808 and 1809. (See Byron, Childe Harold I, liv, lvi.)

Old Maid. A spinster who remains unmarried, and also the name of a card game. The lapwing is so called, from the fancy that old maids are changed into lapwings after death.

Maiden. A form of GUILLOTINE used in SCOTLAND in the 16th and 17th centuries for beheading criminals; also called "the widow". It was introduced by Regent Morton for the purpose of beheading the laird of Pennycuik.

He who invented the maiden first hannelsed it. Morton is erroneously said to have been the first to suffer by it; but Thomas Scott, one of Rizzio's murderers, was beheaded by it in 1566, and Morton not until 1581.

Maiden Assize. When there is nobody to be brought to trial. In a maiden assize, the sheriff of the county presents the judge with a pair of white gloves. We also have maiden castle, or fortress, one never taken; maiden over, an over in CRICKET from which no runs are made; maiden speech, one's first public speech; maiden tree, one never lopped; maiden voyage, the initial voyage of a ship; etc. Maiden conveys the sense of unspotted, unpolluted, innocent; thus Hubert says to the king:

This hand of mine
Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand,
Not painted with the crimson spots of blood.
SHAKESPEARE: King John, IV, ii.

Maiden Castle, Dorset, is the best surviving IRON AGE fortification in Britain occupying 120 acres and the site of earlier NEOLITHIC settlement.

Maiden King, The. Malcolm IV of Scotland (1141, 1153-1165).

Malcolm . . . son of the brave and generous Prince Henry . . . was so kind and generous in his disposition, that he was usually called Malcolm the Maiden.

SCOTT: Tales of a Grandfather, iv.

Maiden, or Virgin Queen. Elizabeth I, Queen of England, who never married. (1533, 1558-1603).

Maiden Town. A town never taken by the enemy, but specifically Edinburgh, from the tradition that the maiden daughters of a Pictish king were sent there for protection during an intestine war.

Mail-cart. A small two-wheeled cart, drawn by one horse, in which mailbags were brought in from outlying districts in the 18th and early 19th centuries. The name was later applied to small vehicles and pushchairs in which children were taken for walks after they grew too large for a PERAMBULATOR.

Mailed Fist, The. Aggressive military might; from a phrase (gepanzerte Faust) used by William II of Germany when bidding adieu to Prince Henry of Prussia as he was starting on his tour of the Far East (16 December 1897):

Should anyone essay to detract from our just rights or to injure us, then up and at him with your mailed fist.

Maillotins (mī yō tan). Parisians who, in 1382, rose up against the taxes imposed by the Regent, the Duc d'Anjou. They seized iron mallets (maillets) from the arsenal and killed the tax collectors.

Main. The main chance. Profit or money, probably from the game called hazard in which the first throw of the dice is called the main, which must be any number from 5 to 9 inclusive, the player then throwing his chance, which determines the main.

To have an eye to the main chance.
See under EYE.

Main Plot. Lord Cobham's plot (1603) to replace James I by his English-born cousin Arabella Stuart. Sir Walter Raleigh was one of the conspirators and there were contacts with Spanish agents. They were tried with the contrivers of Watson's plot (see BYE PLOT). The names Main Plot and Bye Plot arose from their supposed connection.

Main Street. The principal thoroughfare in many of the smaller towns and cities of the U.S.A. Sinclair Lewis's novel of this name (1920) epitomized the social and cultural life of these towns and gave the phrase a significance of its own.

Mainbrace. To splice the mainbrace. A naval expression denoting an extra tot of GROG all round, a very rare occurrence. Possibly from the issue of an extra rum ration to those who performed the hard and difficult task of splicing the mainbrace, the brace attached to the main yard. It is also used more generally for celebrating and indulging in strong drink.

Maintenance (Fr. main tenir, to hold in the hand, maintain). Means of support or sustenance; in law, officious intermeddling in litigation with which one has rightfully nothing to do. It is not actionable except on proof of special damage.

Cap of Maintenance. See under CAP.

Maitland Club. A club of literary antiquaries, instituted at Glasgow in 1828. It published or reprinted works of Scottish historical and literary interest.

Maize. American superstition had it that if a damsel found a blood-red ear of maize, she would have a suitor before the year was out.

Even the blood-red ear to Evangeline brought not her lover.

LONGFELLOW: Evangeline, II, iv.

Majesty. In mediæval England it was usual to refer to the king as "the Lord King". Henry VIII was the first English king styled "His Majesty", though it was not till the time of the Stuarts that this form of address became stereotyped, and in the Dedication to James I prefixed to the Authorized Version of the BIBLE (1611) the king is addressed also as "Your Highness".

The Lord of Heaven and earth blesse your Majestie with many and happy dayes, that as his Heavenly hand has enriched your Highnesse, etc.

Henry IV was "His Grace"; Henry VI, "His Excellent Grace"; Edward IV, "High and Mighty Prince"; Henry VII, "His Grace" and "His Highness"; Henry VIII in the earlier years of his reign "His Highness". "His Sacred Majesty" was a title assumed by subsequent sovereigns, but was afterwards changed to "Most Excellent Majesty". The king of Spain was "His Catholic Majesty", and the king of France "His most Christian Majesty".

In HERALDRY, an eagle crowned and holding a sceptre is said to be "an eagle in his majesty".

Major. To Major Mitchell (Austr.) To ride a zigzag course across country, after Major Sir Thomas Mitchell (1792-1855), Surveyor-General to New South Wales, who made explorations into the Australian interior and proved the junction of the Murray and Darling, which he had set out to disprove. He also went adrift from his proper route.

Majority. He has joined the majority. He is dead. Blair says, in his Grave, "Tis long since Death had the majority."

Make (O.E. macian). In America this word is more frequently used with the meaning "put ready for use" than in England; as in Have you made my room? (i.e. put it tidy). We have to make the bed and cp. Shakespeare's make the door (see under DOOR). To make good, to make one's pile, to make a place (i.e. to arrive there) are Americanisms, as is to make a die of it (to die).

Why, Tom, you don't mean to make a die of it?
R. M. BIRD: Nick of the Woods (1837).

Make and break. A device which alternately closes (makes) and opens (breaks) an electric circuit.

Make and mend. In the Royal Navy, an afternoon free from work, originally, and still often, used for mending clothes.

Make dead men chew. An 18th-century naval expression, used of pursers who supposedly sold tobacco to dead men, thereby taking the profit. It was applied to the pay and victuals dishonestly drawn for men who were dead or had run.

Make or break. This will either make or break you means this will either bring you success or failure, ruin, etc.

On the make. Looking after one's own personal advantage or gain; intent on the MAIN CHANCE.

To make a board. In sailing, to make a distance, leg or tack when heeling to windward.

To make away with. To take away, run off with; to squander; also, to murder; to make away with oneself is to commit suicide.

To make believe. To pretend; to play a game at. Make-believe is also a noun meaning "pretence".

To make bold. See under BOLD.

To make for. To conduce; as, "His actions make for peace"; also, to move towards; hence, in slang, to attack.

To make free with. To take liberties with, use as one's own.

To make good. To fulfil one's promises or to come up to expectations; to achieve success, often after an unpromising start.

Whether or not the new woman Mayor would "make good" was of real interest to the country at large.

Evening Post (New York), 14 September, 1911.

Also to replace, repair, or compensate for; as, "My car was damaged through your carelessness and you will have to make it good".

To make heavy weather of. To make an undue labour of, from the labouring of a ship in rough seas.

To make it. To succeed in catching a train, keeping an appointment, etc., on time.

To make it up. To become reconciled.

To make off. To run away, to abscond.

To make out. To obtain an understanding of, as, "I can barely make out the meaning"; to assert, to establish by evidence or argument, as, "to make out one's case"; to draw up, prepare, as, "I am sick of making out income-tax returns." In the U.S.A., it is to achieve one's purposes, particularly amorous.

To make over. To transfer ownership; to refashion or renovate a garment.

To make tracks. To hurry away; to depart.

To make up to. To approach; to try to make friends with, usually for personal ends, to court.

Young Bullock, . . . who had been making up to Miss Maria the last two seasons.

THACKERAY: Vanity Fair, xii.

What make you here? What do you want? What have you come here for?

'Twas in Margate last July, I walk'd upon the pier,
I saw a little vulgar boy—I said, "What make you here?"

BARHAM:

Ingoldsby Legends (Misadventures at Margate).

Makeshift. A temporary improvisation during an emergency.

Make-up. As a verb and a noun denoting face cosmetics and their application the term is of theatrical origin; an actor is said to be made-up for the stage after the requisite applications of greasepaint, etc. Hence, colloquially, the sum of one's characteristics, idiosyncrasies, etc. In printing the make-up is the arrangement of the printed matter in columns, pages, etc.

Make-weight. A small addition as compensation or an "extra", as a piece of meat, cheese, etc., put into the scale to make the weight correct.

Malachi Malagrowther. The signature of Sir Walter Scott to a series of letters contributed to the Edinburgh Weekly Journal in 1826 upon the lowest limitation of paper money to £5. They caused a great sensation at the time. Cp. DRAPIER'S LETTERS.

Malakoff. This fortification, which was captured by the French (8 September 1855) during the Crimean War, was named from a Russian, Alexander Ivanovitch Malakoff, who kept a liquor-shop outside Sebastopol. Other houses sprang up round it and "Malakoff", as the settlement came to be called, was ultimately fortified.

Malaprop, Mrs. The famous character in Sheridan's The Rivals. Noted for her blunders in the use of words (Fr. mal à propos). "As headstrong as an allegory [alligator] on the banks of the Nile", (III, iii), is one of her grotesque misapplications. Hence the words malaprop and malapropism to denote such mistakes.

Malbrouk, or Marlborough. The old French song, "Malbrouk s'en va-t-en guerre" (Marlborough is off to the wars), is said to date from 1709 when the Duke of Marlborough was winning his battles in Flanders, but it did not become popular till it was applied to Charles Churchill, 3rd Duke of Marlborough, at the time of his failure against Cherbourg (1758). It was popularized by becoming a favourite of Marie Antoinette about 1780, and by its being introduced by Beaumarchais into Le Mariage de Figaro (1784). In Britain it is sung to the tune of "We won't go home till the morning" or "For he's a jolly good fellow". According to a tradition recorded by Chateaubriand, the air came from the Arabs, and the tale is a legend of Mambroun, a crusader.

Malbrouk s'en va-t-en guerre,
Mironton, mironton, mirontaine;
Malbrouk s'en va-t-en guerre,
Ne sait quand reviendra.
Il reviendra z'à Pâques—
Mironton, mironton, mirontaine . . .
Ou à la Trinité.

Male. Applied in the vegetable kingdom to certain plants which were supposed to have some masculine property or appearance, as the male fern (Aspidium filix-mas), the fronds of which cluster in a kind of crown; and to precious stones—particularly sapphires—that are remarkable for their depth or brilliance of colour.

Malebolge (ma là bol' jā). The eighth circle of Dante's Inferno (Canto xviii), containing ten bolge or pits. The name is used figuratively of any cesspool of filth or iniquity.

Malice. In addition to its common meaning malice is a term in English law to designate a wrongful act carried out against another intentionally, without just cause or excuse—this is commonly known as malice prepense or malice aforethought. Malicious damage is a legal term meaning damage done to property wilfully and purposely; malicious prosecution means the preferring a criminal prosecution or the presentation of a bankruptcy petition, maliciously and without reasonable cause.

Malignants. A term applied by the Parliamentarians to the Royalists who fought for Charles I and Charles II. They were also called DELINQUENTS.

Malkin. An old diminutive of Matilda; formerly used as a generic term for a kitchen-wench or untidy slut; also for a cat (see GRIMALKIN), and for a scarecrow or grotesque puppet.

All tongues speak of him . . .
The kitchen malkin pins
Her richest lochram 'bout her recchy neck,
Clambering the walls to eye him.
SHAKESPEARE: Coriolanus, II, i.

The name was also sometimes given to the Queen of the May (see MAID MARIAN).

Put on the shape of order and humanity,
Or you must marry Malkin, the May lady.
BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER:
Monseur Thomas, II, ii.

Mall, The. A broad thoroughfare in St. James's Park, London, so called because the game of PALL-MALL used to be played there by Charles II and his courtiers. The mall was the mallet with which the ball was struck.

Noe persons shall after play carry their malls out of St. James's Parke without leave of the said keeper.

Order Book of General Monk (1662).

Mallaby-Deeleys. A once popular term for "off the peg" clothes and suits; after Sir H. Mallaby-Deeley (1863-1937), M.P., who founded a firm for making cheap well-cut "ready-mades" for the middle classes after World War I. The venture ended in failure.

Malley's Cow (Austr.). Someone who disappears leaving no clue to his whereabouts. The story is that a certain Malley, who could not explain the disappearance of a cow he had been told to hold at a cattle muster, said, "She's a goner."

Malmesbury, The Philosopher of (mamz' bëri). Thomas Hobbes (1588-1679), author of LEVIATHAN, who was born in the vicinity of Malmesbury.

Malmsey (mam' zi or malm' zi). A strong, sweet wine from Greece, Spain, etc.; originally the wine of Malvasia (Gr. Monemvasia), in the Morea, which is the same name as Malvoisie.

George, Duke of Clarence, son of Richard, Duke of York, was, according to a London chronicle, put to death in the TOWER in 1478 by being drowned in a butt of malmsey by order of his brother, Edward IV. It is more likely that he was drowned in a bath. See Shakespeare's Richard III, I, iv.

It is one of the more enjoyable freaks of history that the names of [Glarentza] . . . and that of Monemvasia . . . should both be familiar in their anglicized forms thanks to an incident in which the Duke of the former was drowned in a butt of the latter.
OSBERT LANCASTER: Classical Landscape with Figures, (1947).

Malt. A malt worm. A toper, especially a well-soaked beer drinker.

I am joined with no foot-landrakers, no long-staff sixpenny strikers, none of these mad mustachio purple-hued malt worms: but with nobility and tranquillity.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, II, i.

In meal or in malt. See MEAL.

When the malt gets aboon the meal. When persons, after dinner, get more or less fuddled.

Sermon on Malt. A famous sermon attributed to the PURITAN divine, John Dod (c. 1549-1645), rector of Fawsley, Northants, called Decalogue Dod from his exposition of the Ten Commandments (1604).

Malta. See GEORGE CROSS ISLAND.

Knights of Malta, or Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem. See HOSPITALIERS.

Maltese Cross. Made thus: ✠. Originally the badge of the Knights of Malta, formed of four barbed arrow-heads with their points meeting in the centre. In various forms it is the badge of many well-known Orders, etc., as the British VICTORIA CROSS and Order of MERIT, and the German Iron Cross. See CROSS.

Maltese dog. An ancient breed of lap-dog somewhat resembling a Skye terrier, but usually with long white hair.

Malthusian Doctrine. The idea that population tends to outrun the means of subsistence put forward by the Rev. T. R. Malthus (1766–1834) in his Essay on Population (1798). It was not novel, but his systematic exposition drew attention to the population problem.

Malum in Latin means an apple and malus, mala, malum, means evil. Southey, in his Commonplace Book, quotes a witty etymon given by Nicolson and Burn, making the noun derive from the adjective, in allusion possibly to the apple eaten by EVE. There is also the schoolboy quatrain:

Malo, I would rather be Malo, Up an apple tree
Malo, Than a bad man
Malo, In adversity.

Malum in se (Lat.) What is of itself is wrong, and would be even if no law existed against its commission, as lying, murder, theft.

Malum prohibitum (Lat.). What is wrong merely because it is forbidden, as eating a particular fruit was wrong in ADAM and EVE, because they were commanded not to do so.

Mambrino. A pagan king of old romance, introduced by Ariosto into ORLANDO FURIOSO. He had a helmet of pure gold which made the wearer invulnerable, and was taken possession of by RINALDO. This is frequently referred to in DON QUIXOTE, and we read that when the barber was caught in a shower, and clapped his brazen basin on his head, Don Quixote insisted that this was the enchanted helmet of the Moorish king.

Mamelukes (Arab. mamluc, a slave). The slaves brought from the Caucasus and Asia Minor to Egypt and formed into a bodyguard for the SULTAN, a descendant of SALADIN. In 1250 they set up one of their number as Sultan and the Mamelukes reigned until overthrown by the Turkish Sultan Selim I in 1517. The country was subsequently governed by twenty-four Mameluke beys under the PASHA, but they retained virtual control. In 1811 they were exterminated by Mohammed Ali.

Mammet, or Maumet. An idol; hence a puppet or doll (as in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet, III, v, and Henry IV, Pt. I, II, iii). The word is a corruption of Mahomet, hence to Christians it became a generic word to designate any false faith; even idolatry is called mammetry.

Mammon. The god of this world. The word in Syriac means riches, and it occurs in the BIBLE (Matt. vi, 24; Luke xvi, 13): "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Spenser (Faerie Queene, II, vii), and Milton, who identifies him with VULCAN or MULCIBER (Paradise Lost, I, 738–51), both make Mammon the personification of the evils of wealth and miserliness.

Mammon led them on—
Mammon the least erected spirit that fell
From Heaven; for even in Heaven his looks and thoughts
Were always downward bent, admiring more
The riches of Heaven's pavement, trodden gold,
Than aught divine or holy.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, I, 678.

The Mammon of Unrighteousness. Money; see Luke xvi, 9.

Mammoth Cave. In Edmonson county, Kentucky; the largest known in the world, reputedly discovered in 1809, but known earlier. It comprises many chambers with connecting passages said to total 150 miles, and covers an area of nearly 10 miles in diameter. Rivers, streams, and lakes, add to the majesty and scenic variety of this vast limestone cave.

Man. Man in the Moon, Man of Blood, Brass, December, Sin, Straw, etc. See these words.

Man about town. A fashionable idler.

Man Friday. See under FRIDAY.

Man in the Iron Mask. See IRON MASK.

The Man in the Street. The ordinary citizen, the man or woman who in the aggregate makes public opinion.

The Man of Destiny. NAPOLEON I (1769–1821). He regarded himself as an instrument in the hands of destiny.

G. B. Shaw used the epithet as the title of a play about Napoleon.

Man of letters. An author, a literary scholar.

Man of Ross. See ROSS.

Man of Sorrows. Jesus Christ, from the prophecy in Isaiah liii, 3 that the MESSIAH would be "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief".

Man of the world. One versed in the ways of the world; no GREENHORN. Henry Mackenzie brought out a novel (1773) with this title and Charles Macklin a comedy (1781).

Man-of-war. A warship. Like other ships, a man-of-war is always referred to as "she". Formerly the term denoted a fighting man ("the Lord is a man of war", Exod. xv. 3).

The name of the "Man of War Rock", in the Scilly Isles, is a corruption of the Cornish men (maen) an vawr, meaning "big rock".

The popular name of the marine hydrozoan, Physalia pelagica, is the Portuguese man-of-war, or simply, man-of-war.

Man-of-war bird. The frigate-bird.

Man to man. Frankly, as one man to another; in a manly fashion, as when two individuals fight "man to man".

The man who broke the bank at Monte Carlo. Joseph Hobson Jagger, who, in 1886, won over 2,000,000 francs in 8 days. An expert on spindles, he suspected one of the roulette wheels of a faulty spindle and had it watched for a week. Thereafter he staked on the numbers which were turning up with much more than mathematical probability and won a fortune. He died in 1892, probably mainly from boredom. His exploit became the subject of the famous Victorian MUSIC HALL ballad in the repertoire of the inimitable Charles Coborn, written and composed by Fred Gilbert.

As I walk along the Bois Boolong, with an independent air,

You can hear the girls declare—"He must be a millionaire";

You can hear them sigh and wish to die,

You can see them wink the other eye

At the man who broke the bank at Monte Carlo.

The New Man. The regenerated man.

Scripture phrase the unregenerated state is called the old man.

The Threefold Man. According to Diogenes Laertius, the body was composed of (1) a mortal part; (2) a divine and ethereal part called the phren; (3) an ethereal and vaporious part, called the thumos.

According to the Romans, man has a threefold soul, which at the dissolution of the body resolves itself into (1) the MANES; (2) the Anima or Spirit; (3) the Umbra. The Manes went either to ELYSIUM or TARTARUS; the Anima returned to the gods; but the Umbra hovered about the body as unwilling to quit it.

According to the Jews, man consists of body, SOUL, and spirit.

To a man. Without exception, all together, everyone, unanimously, as, "The audience applauded to a man."

To be one's own man again. To fully recover good health after illness, shock, etc.

Man proposes but God disposes. So we read in the Imitatio Christi (Homo proponit, sed Deus disponit, i, xix, 2). Herbert (Jacula Prudentum) has nearly the same words; as also has Montluc: L'homme propose et Dieu dispose (Comédie de Proverbes, iii, 7); and there are others.

Man, Isle of. One explanation of the name is that given by Richard of Cirencester—"Midway between the two countries [Britain and Ireland] is the island called Monæda, but now Monavia", i.e. that it is from menagh or meanagh meaning middle. Another is that it is from Mannanan, a wizard who kept the Land of Mann under mists when marauders threatened it.

Mañana (mãn ya' na) (Span., tomorrow). A word frequently used to imply some vague unspecified future date.

Mancha, La. See LA MANCHA.

Manchester. The name is formed from the old British Mamucion and ceaster, O.E. form of Lat. castra, denoting that it was once a Roman walled town. A native of Manchester is a Mancunian, from Mancunium, the mediæval Latin name of the city. See COTTONOPOLIS.

Manchester Martyrs. The name given to the three Irishmen who were hanged for attempting to rescue two FENIAN prisoners in Manchester (November 1867). In the course of the struggle a policeman was killed.

The Manchester Massacre. See PETERLOO.

The Manchester Poet. Charles Swain (1801-1874).

The Manchester School. A term applied to a group of RADICALS and free traders originating from business men of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce and sponsors of the Anti-Corn Law League. They were supporters of LAISSEZ-FAIRE and against the growth of the colonial empire. Led by Cobden and Bright, they were derisively so called by Disraeli in 1848, and the name came to be applied to Victorian advocates of FREE TRADE and a pacific foreign policy generally.

Mancus. An Anglo-Saxon coin in both gold and silver. In the reign of Ethelbert of Kent, money accounts were kept in pounds, mancuses, shillings, and pence. Five pence = one shilling; 30 pence = one mancus.

Mandæans. A Gnostic sect, also called Nasoreans and Christians of St. John, which arose in the 1st or 2nd century and still found near Baghdad. Their teachings were akin to those of the MANICHÆANS, and St. JOHN THE BAPTIST featured prominently in their writings. They favoured frequent baptism.

Mandamus (Lat., we command). A writ of QUEEN'S BENCH, commanding the person or corporation, etc., named to do what the writ directs. So called from the opening word.

Mandarin. A name given by the Portuguese to the official called by the Chinese Kuan. It is from the Malay and Hindi mantri, a counsellor, or minister of state. The word is sometimes used derisively for over-pompous officials, as, "The mandarins of our Foreign Office."

The nine ranks of mandarins were distinguished by the button in their cap: (1) ruby, (2) coral, (3) sapphire, (4) an opaque blue stone, (5) crystal, (6) an opaque white shell, (7) wrought gold, (8) plain gold, (9) silver.

Mandate (Lat. mandatum; mandare, to command). An authoritative charge or command. Also, the authority conferred upon certain "advanced nations" by the LEAGUE OF NATIONS after World War I, to administer the former German colonies and Turkish dependencies outside Europe. In practice "advanced nations" meant the victorious powers. After World War II, under the UNITED NATIONS, Mandates became Trusteeships.

Mandrake. The root of the mandrake, or mandragora, often divides in two, presenting a rough appearance of a man. In ancient times human figures were cut out of the root and wonderful virtues ascribed to them, such as the production of fecundity in women (Gen. xxx, 14-16). They could not be uprooted without supposedly producing fatal effects, so a cord used to be fixed to the root and round a dog's neck, and the dog when chased drew out the mandrake and died. A small dose was held to produce vanity in one's appearance, and a large dose, idiocy. The mandrake screamed when uprooted.

Of this latter property Thomas Newton, in his Herball to the Bible, says, "It is supposed to be a creature having life, engendered under the earth of the seed of some dead person put to death for murder."

Shrieks like mandrakes, torn out of the earth.
SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, IV, iii.

He has eaten mandrake. Said of a very indolent and sleepy man, from the narcotic and stupefying properties of the plant, well-known to the ancients.

Give me to drink mandragora . . .
That I might sleep out this great gap of time
My Antony is away.

SHAKESPEARE: Antony and Cleopatra, I, v.

Mandrakes called love-apples. From the old notion that they were aphrodisiacs. Hence VENUS is called Mandragoritis, and the Emperor Julian, in his epistles, tells Calixenes that he drank its juice nightly as a love-potion.

Manes (mā' nēz). To appease his Manes. To do when a person is dead what would have pleased him or was due to him when alive. The spirit or ghost of the dead was called by the Romans his Manes, which never slept quietly in the grave while survivors left its wishes unfulfilled. 19 February was the day when all the living sacrificed to the shades of dead relations and friends—a kind of pagan ALL SOULS' DAY.

Mangi. The name used by Marco Polo for southern China. Cp. CATHAY.

Manhattan. A COCKTAIL made from whisky and vermouth, with a dash of Angostura bitters and Curaçao or Maraschino. Named from Manhattan Island, New York.

Mani (ma' nē). The MOON. In Scandinavian mythology, the beautiful boy driver of the moon-car, the son of Mundilfœri. He is followed by a wolf, which, when time shall be no more, will devour both Mani and his sister SOL.

Mani, Manes, or Manichæus. The founder of MANICHÆISM, born in Persia (c. 215) and prominent in the reign of Shapur or Sapor I (c. 241-272). Mani began his teaching c. 240 and was put to death in 275.

Manichæans, or Manichees. Followers of Mani, who taught that the universe is controlled by two antagonistic powers, light or goodness (identified with God), and darkness, chaos, or evil. The system was based on the old Babylonian religion modified by Christian and Persian influences. St. Augustine was for nine years a Manichæan and Manichæism influenced many Christian heretical sects and was itself denounced as a heresy. One of Mani's claims was that, though Christ had been sent into the world to restore it to light and banish darkness, His apostles had perverted his doctrine, and he, Mani, was sent as the PARACLETE to restore it. Manichæism survived in Turkestan until the 13th century.

Manitou (mān' i too). The Great Spirit of certain American Indians, either the Great Good Spirit or the Great Evil Spirit. The word is Algonkin, meaning mystery, supernatural.

Manna. The miraculous food provided for the children of Israel on their journey from Egypt to the HOLY LAND.

And when the children of Israel saw it, they said to one another, It is manna: for they wist not what it was. And Moses said unto them, This is the bread which the Lord hath given you to eat.
Exod. xvi. 15.

The word is popularly said to be a corrupt form of man-hu (What is this?) but is more probably the Egyptian mennu, a waxy exudation of the tamarisk (Tamarix gallica).

And the house of Israel called the name thereof Manna: and it was like coriander seed, white; and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey.
Exod. xvi. 31.

Manna of St. Nicholas of Bari. AQUA TOFANA.

Manoa. The fabulous capital of EL DORADO, the houses of which city were said to be roofed with gold. There were numerous attempts by Sir Thomas Roe, Raleigh and others to locate it during the reign of James I.

Manor (O.Fr. manoir, from Lat. manere, to remain). A word introduced after the Norman Conquest and used of a dwelling of a man of substance, but not necessarily a large holding. It ultimately came to denote the self-contained estate in which the demesne (domain) land was worked for the lord's private benefit, the remainder being worked by free and unfree tenants (VILLEINS) who were subject to the court-baron. Cp. MANSION.

Lord of the Manor. The person or corporation in whom the rights of a manor are vested.

Mansard Roof, also called curb roof. It was named after the French architect François Mansart (1598-1666), although used by Pierre Lescot at the Louvre c. 1550. Instead of forming an inverted V, the rafters are broken and the lower slope is almost perpendicular, the upper more nearly flat. It was in use in America in the old colonial days and there the term denotes a double-pitched roof, sloping up from the four sides of a building; where it ends in two gables it is called a GAMBREL roof.

Mansfield. The King and the Miller of Mansfield. This old ballad, given in PERCY'S RELIQUES, tells how Henry II, having lost his way, met a miller, who took him home to his cottage. Next morning the courtiers tracked the king, and the miller discovered the rank of his guest, who in merry mood knighted his host as "Sir John Cockle". On St. GEORGE'S Day, Henry II invited the miller, his wife and son to a royal banquet, and after being amused with their rustic ways, made Sir John overseer of Sherwood Forest, with a salary of £300 a year.

Mansion (Lat. mansio, from manere, to remain, dwell). The Latin word means a stay or continuance, a halting-place or night-quarters; hence an inn or dwelling-place. Cp. MANOR.

The Mansion House. The official residence of the Lord Mayor of London, first used in 1753.

Mantle. The Mantle of Elijah. A symbol of authority or leadership; when someone succeeds to the established authority of a predecessor, he is said to assume "the mantle of Elijah". Elijah the prophet cast his mantle upon Elisha to show he was his chosen successor (I Kings xix, 19).

Mantle of Fidelity. The old ballad The Boy and the Mantle in PERCY'S RELIQUES tells how a little boy showed King ARTHUR a curious mantle which should become no wife "that once hath been to blame". Queen GUINEVERE tried it, but it changed from green to red, and red to black, and seemed rent into shreds. Sir KAY's lady tried it, but fared no better; others followed, but only Sir Cradock's wife could wear it. The theme is a very common one in old story and was used by Spenser in the incident of Florimel's girdle. Cp. BRAWN.

Mantuan Swan, or Bard. VIRGIL.

Manu. In Hindu philosophy, one of a class of DEMIURGES of whom the first is identified with BRAHMA. Brahma divided himself into male and female, these produced Viraj, from whom sprang the first Manu, a kind of secondary creator. He gave rise to ten Prajapatis ("lords of all living"); from these came seven Manus, each of these presiding over a certain period, the seventh of these being Manu Vaivasvata ("the sun-born") who is now reigning and who is looked upon as the creator of the living races of beings. To him are ascribed the Laws of Manu, now called Manavadharmashastra, a section of the VEDAS containing a code of civil and religious law compiled by the Manavans. See DELUGE.

Manual seal. A signet. See SIGN.

Manumit (mán' ū mit). To set free; properly "to send from one's hand" (Lat. e manu mittere). One of the Roman ways of freeing a slave was to take him before the chief magistrate and say, "I wish this man to be free." The LICTOR or master then turned the slave round in a circle, struck him with a rod across the cheek, and let him go. The ancient ceremony has a relic in the Roman Catholic rite of Confirmation when the BISHOP strikes the candidate lightly on the cheek, saying, "Peace be with you."

Manure (O.Fr. manoverer). Literally "hand-work", hence tillage by manual labour, hence the dressing applied to land. Milton uses the word in its original sense in Paradise Lost, IV, 628:

 You flowery arbours . . . with branches overgrown
 That mock our scant manuring.

And in XI, 28, says that the repentant tears of ADAM brought forth better fruits than all the trees of PARADISE that his hands "manured" in the days of innocence.

Manx Cat. A tailless species of cat found in the Isle of MAN, where it is popularly known as a rumpee. It was a practice to dock other cats in order to sell them to visitors as Manx cats.

Many a little makes a mickle. See under LITTLE.

Many men, many minds, i.e. there are as many opinions as there are men, as Terence says, Quot homines tot sententiae (Phormio, II, iv, 14).

Too many for me, or One too many for me. More than a match. Il est trop fort pour moi.

Maple Leaf. The emblem of Canada.

Maquis (ma' kē). The thick scrub-land in Corsica and Mediterranean coastal lands, to which bandits retreat to avoid capture. Such a bandit on the run is called a maquisard. See F.F.I.

Marabou. A large stork or heron of western Africa, from Arab. murabit, a hermit, because among the Arabs these birds were held sacred.

Marabouts. A priestly order of Morocco (Arab. murabit, a hermit) which in 1075 founded a dynasty and ruled over Morocco and part of Spain till it was put an end to by the Almohads in the 12th century.

Marais, Le. See PLAIN.

Maranatha (Syriac, the Lord will come—i.e. to execute judgment). A word which, with ANATHEMA, occurs in I Cor. xvi, 22, and has been erroneously taken as a form of anathematizing among the Jews; hence used for a terrible curse.

Marathon Race. A long-distance race, named after the battle of Marathon (490 B.C.), the result of which was announced at ATHENS by an unnamed courier who fell dead on his arrival, having run nearly 23 miles. This runner is sometimes cited as Pheidippides (or Philippides), who actually ran from ATHENS to Sparta to seek help against the Persians before the battle. In the modern OLYMPIC GAMES, the Marathon race was instituted in 1896, the distance being standardized at 26 miles 385 yards in 1924.

Maravedi (Span., ultimately from Arab. Murabitin, the name of a Moorish dynasty of Spain in the 11th and 12th centuries). Originally (11th century) a gold coin, later (16th–19th century) a very small Spanish copper coin worth less than a farthing.

Not worth a maravedi. Worthless.

Marble Arch. This famous LONDON landmark was originally erected in front of Buckingham Palace and moved to its present position at Cumberland Gate (formerly TYBURN Gate) in 1851. It is now on an "island" and contains a police station. It was designed by John Nash and is said to be modelled on Constantine's Arch at ROME. The central entrance gates cost 3,000 guineas and the statue of George IV by Chantry (9,000 guineas), now in Trafalgar Square, was to have been placed upon it.

The marble single arch in front of the Palace cost £100,000 and the gateway in Piccadilly cost £40,000. Can one be surprised at people becoming Radical with such specimens of royal prodigality before their eyes? to say nothing of the characters of such royalties themselves.

CREEVEY: Letter to Miss Ord, 20 May, 1835.

Marbles. See ARUNDELIAN; ELGIN.

March. The month is so called from MARS.

The old Dutch name for it was Lent-maand (see LENT); the old Saxon name was Hreth-monath (rough-month, from its boisterous winds), subsequently changed to Length-monath (lengthening month); it was also called Hlyd-monath (boisterous month). In the French Republican CALENDAR it was called Ventôse (windy month, 20 February to 20 March).

A bushel of March dust is worth a king's ransom. Because we want plenty of dry, windy weather in March for good tillage, it is worth much.

Mad as a March hare. See under HARE.

March borrowed three days from April. See BORROWED DAYS.

March. He may be a rogue, but he's no fool on the march. Though his honesty may be in question he is a useful sort of person to have about.

To steal a march on one. See STEAL.

Marches

March table. A British military term for the instruction setting out the order in which parts of a convoy should proceed, the exact time each should pass a given starting point, and the average speed at which each should proceed.

Marching Watch. The guard of civilians enrolled in mediæval LONDON to keep order in the streets on the Vigils of St. PETER and St. JOHN THE BAPTIST during the festivities; used also of the festivities themselves.

Marches. The O.E. mearc, a mark, border; O.Fr. marche, a frontier. The boundaries between ENGLAND and WALES, and England and SCOTLAND, were called marches. Hence Marcher lords, the powerful vassals with special rights who guarded the Welsh Marches at Hereford, Shrewsbury and Chester. The title Earl of March held by certain great feudal families is similarly derived. Cp. MARQUIS.

The word is still applied in the sense that a boundary is shared, e.g. Kent marches with Sussex, that is, the two counties are contiguous.

A territorial and historic division of Italy is called the Marches, which include Pesaro and Urbino, Ancona, Macerata, and Ascoli Piceno.

Beating the marches. In SCOTLAND, riding the BOUNDS of the parish.

Marchington (Staffordshire). Famous for a crumbling shortcake. Hence the saying that one of crusty temper is "as short as Marchington wake-cake".

Marchpane. The old name for the confection of almonds, sugar, etc., that we call marzipan, this being the German form of the original Ital. marzapane, which was adopted in the 19th century in preference to our well-established word because this confection was largely imported from Germany.

First Serv. Away with the joint-stools, remove the court-cupboard, look to the plate.
Good thou, save me a piece of march-pane.
SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, I, v.

Marcionites. An heretical sect founded by Marcion of Sinope in the 2nd century, and largely absorbed by the MANICHÆANS in the late 3rd century. They rejected the God of DEMI-URGE of the Old Testament as a God of Law, and worshipped only Jesus Christ as the God of Love, whose mission was to overthrow the Demi-urge. Much of the New Testament was regarded by them as uncanonical and they had a certain kinship with Gnosticism (see under GNOSTICS).

Marcley Hill. Legend states that this hill in Herefordshire, at six o'clock in the evening on 7 February 1571, "roused itself with a roar, and by seven next morning had moved 40 paces". It kept on the move for three days, carrying all with it. It overthrew Kinnaston chapel and diverted two high roads at least 200 yards from their former route. Twenty-six acres of land are said to have been moved 400 yards (Speed: Herefordshire).

Marconigram. A message transmitted by wireless telegraphy, after Guglielmo Marconi (1874-1937), the inventor of this means of communication.

Mardi Gras (mar dē grā) (Fr., "fat Tuesday"). SHROVE TUESDAY, the last day of the LENT Carnival in France. At Paris, a fat ox, crowned with a fillet, used to be paraded through the streets. It was accompanied by mock priests and a band of tin instruments in imitation of a Roman sacrificial procession.

Marduk. The Babylonian god of heaven and earth, light and life, and god of battle. He was identified with numerous other Babylonian deities. See BEL.

Mare. Away with the mare. Off with the blue devils, goodbye to care. This mare is the INCUBUS, called the nightmare.

The grey mare is the better horse. The woman is paramount, "she wears the trousers"; said of a wife who "bosses" her husband.

As long as we have eyes, or hands, or breath,
We'll look, or write, or talk you all to death,
Yield, or she-Pegasus will gain her course.
And the grey mare will prove the better horse.
PRIOR: Epilogue to Mrs. Manley's "Lucius."

The grey mare's tail. A cataract that is made by the stream which issues from Lochskene, in SCOTLAND, so called from its appearance.

Money will make the mare go. You can do anything if only you have the money. As the old song says:

"Will you lend me your mare to go a mile?"
"No, she is lame leaping over a stile."
"But if you will her to me spare,
You shall have money for your mare."
"Oh ho! say you so?"
Money will make the mare to go."

Shanks's mare. One's legs or SHANKS.
The two-legged mare. The gallows.

To cry the mare (Herefordshire and Shropshire). In harvesting, when the ingathering was complete, a few blades of corn left for the purpose had their tops tied together. The reapers then placed themselves at a certain distance and flung their sickles at the "mare". He who cut the knot cried out "I have her!" "What have you?" "A mare". "Whose is she?" The name of some farmer whose field had been reaped was mentioned. "Where will you send her?" The name of a farmer whose corn was not yet harvested was given, and then all the reapers gave a final shout.

To find a mare's nest is to make what you suppose to be a great discovery, but which proves to be no discovery or else all MOONSHINE. In some parts of SCOTLAND the expression is a skate's nest; in CORNWALL, you have found a wee's nest and are laughing over the eggs; in Devon nonsense is called a blind mare's nest.

To win the mare or lose the halter. To play DOUBLE OR QUILTS; all or nothing.

Whose mare's dead? What's the matter? Thus in Shakespeare's Henry IV, Pt. II, II, i, when Sir John Falstaff sees Mistress Quickly with the sheriff's officers, evidently in a state of great discomposure, he cries,

How now? Whose mare's dead? What's the matter?

Mare (mar' i). The Latin word for sea. Mare clausum is a closed sea or one that is closed by a certain power or powers to the unrestricted passage of foreign shipping. Mare liberum is the free and open sea. In 1635 John Selden (1584-1654) published a treatise called Mare Clausum.

FASCIST Italy called the Mediterranean Mare Nostrum, "our sea", in their expansionist heyday.

Marforio. See PASQUINADE.

Margaret. A country name for the MAGPIE; also for the daisy, marguerite (O.Fr. for a pearl), so called from its pearly whiteness.

St. Margaret. Virgin martyr of the 3rd century, known as St. Marina among the Greeks. It is said that Olybrius, governor of Antioch, captivated by her beauty, sought her in marriage but, being rejected, threw her into a dungeon, where the DEVIL came to her in the form of a DRAGON. She held up the cross and the dragon fled. Sometimes she is delineated as coming from the dragon's mouth, for one legend says that the monster swallowed her, but on her making the sign of the cross he suffered her to quit his maw.

She is the chosen type of female innocence and meekness, represented as a young woman of great beauty, bearing the martyr's palm and crown, or with the dragon as an attribute, sometimes standing upon it. She is the patron saint of the ancient borough of King's Lynn.

St. Margaret of Scotland (c. 1045-1093). The wife of Malcolm III of SCOTLAND and granddaughter of Edmund Ironside, King of England. She was noted for her services to the Church in Scotland and for her religious benefactions. She was canonized in 1250 and died on 16 November, which is her feast day.

Margin. In many old books a commentary was printed in the margin (as in the BIBLE); hence the word was often used for a commentary itself, as in Shakespeare's—

His face's own margent did quote such amazes.
Love's Labour's Lost, II, i.

I knew you must be edified by the margent.
Hamlet, V, ii.

Marguerite des Marguerites (the pearl of pearls). So Francis I called his sister, Marguerite d'Angoulême (1492-1549), authoress of the HEPTAMERON and a collection of poems entitled Les Marguerites de la marguerite des princesses, etc. She married twice; first the Duc d'Alençon, and then Henri d'Albret, King of Navarre, and was known for her PROTESTANT leanings.

Mari Lwyd (ma ri loo ed). Singing with Mari Lwyd (Holy Mary) is an old Welsh Christmastide custom still surviving at Llangynwyd, Glamorganshire, and may have derived from the old miracle plays (see MYSTERIES). The chief character wears a white cowl and a horse's skull bedecked with ribbons and is accompanied by two or three fantastically dressed followers. They sing outside houses, demanding an entrance. This is, at first, refused until the callers give evidence of their worth in song and repartee. They are then made welcome and suitably refreshed or recompensed.

Maria Marten. See RED BARN.

Mariage de convenance (Fr., marriage of expediency). A marriage for money and position. Cp. SHOTGUN WEDDING.

Marian Year. The method of reckoning 25 March, the Feast of the ANNUNCIATION, as the first day of the year. This was used until the reform of the CALENDAR in 1752. The beginning of the financial year follows this reckoning: the eleven days added in 1752 make it 5 April.

Marie Celeste. A brigantine found abandoned with sails set between the Azores and Portugal in 1872. The ship's one boat, sextant, chronometer, register and crew were missing and no trace of them was ever found. It remains one of the unsolved mysteries of the sea.

Marigold

Marigold. The plant Calendula officinalis with its bright yellow or orange flowers is so called in honour of the Virgin Mary.

This riddle, Cuddy, if thou can'st, explain . . .
What flower is that which bears the Virgin's name,
The richest metal joined with the same?
JOHN GAY: The Shepherd's Week (Monday).

In 17th-century slang a marigold (or "marygold") meant a SOVEREIGN.

Marine. A "Sea-soldier". In the Royal Navy, the Marines have been an established force since 1755 although they had earlier origins in the Duke of York and Albany's Maritime Regiment of Foot (1664). A marine is familiarly known as a "Jolly", "leatherneck", "bootneck", etc.

Empty bottles were at one time called "marines" (because the scamen regarded them as useless) but now, more usually, dead marines, or, in the U.S.A., dead soldiers.

According to the story, the Duke of York, when dining in the mess, said to the servant, "Here, take away these marines." A marine officer present asked for an explanation, when the duke replied, "They have done their duty, and are prepared to do it again."

A GREENHORN or land-lubber afloat is sometimes contemptuously called "a marine" by seamen.

The female Marine. Hannah Snell of Worcester (1723-1792) who, passing herself off as a Marine, took part in the attack on Pondicherry. It is said that she ultimately opened a public-house in Wapping, but retained her male attire. See HANNAH.

Marine Store. A place where old ship's materials and fittings such as canvas, cordage, and ironwork, were sold. Also applied generally to a junk shop or second-hand shop. Cp. DOLLY SHOP.

Tell that to the Marines. Said of a far-fetched yarn. The story is that Pepys, when re-telling stories gathered from the Navy to Charles II, mentioned flying fish. The courtiers were sceptical, but an officer of the Maritime Regiment of Foot said that he too had seen such. The king accepted this evidence and said, "From the very nature of their calling no class of our subjects can have so wide a knowledge of seas and lands as the officers and men of Our Loyal Maritime Regiment. Henceforward ere ever we cast doubts upon a tale that lacks likelihood we will first 'Tell it to the Marines.'" Cp. HORSE MARINES under HORSE.

Mariner's Compass. China traditionally claims the invention of the compass in 2634 B.C. but the earliest authentic reference to the LODESTONE is in A.D. 121, and not until the 12th century is there mention of a compass in a ship. Claims for its discovery have also been made for the Arabs, Greeks, Italians, etc., but it may have arrived independently in both Europe and China. The belief that Marco Polo introduced it from China in 1260 is unfounded, as it was in use in Europe a century before this. See FLEUR-DE-LIS.

Marinism. Excessive literary ornateness and affectation. So name from Giambattista Marini (1569-1625), the Neapolitan poet, famous for his whimsical comparisons and pompous and overwrought descriptions.

Maritimes. The Maritime Provinces of Canada: Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island.

Marivaudage (ma rê vō dazh). An imitation of the style of Pierre Marivaux (1688-1763), author of several comedies and novels; an excessively refined style.

Ce qui constitue le marivaudage, c'est une recherche affectée dans le style, une grande subtilité dans les sentiments, et une grande complication d'intrigues.

BOUILLET: Dict. Universel, etc.

Marjoram. As a pig loves marjoram. Not at all. "How did you like it?" "Well, as a pig loves marjoram." Lucretius tells us (VI, 974), Amaricinum fugitat sus, swine shun marjoram.

Mark. Government equipment of various kinds issued to the armed services in the original form is labelled Mark I. Subsequent modifications of the same are labelled Mark II, Mark III, etc.

A man of mark. A notable or famous man; one who has "made his mark" in some walk of life.

Beside the mark. Not to the point; a phrase from archery, in which the mark was the target.

God bless, or save the mark! A kind of apology for introducing a disagreeable subject. Hotspur, apologizing to the king for not sending the prisoners according to command (SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, I, iii), says the messenger was a "popinjay", who made him mad with his unmanly ways, and who talked

So like a waiting-gentlewoman
Of guns and drums and wounds,—God save the mark!

and in Othello (I, i) Iago says he was "God bless the mark! his Moorship's ancient", expressive of derision and contempt.

Sometimes the phrase is used to avert ill fortune or an evil omen, as in Merchant of Venice (II, ii):

To be ruled by my conscience, I should stay with the Jew my master, who, God bless the mark! is a kind of devil.

It is suggested that the "mark" is possibly the sign of the cross and the phrase a kind of supplication.

The mark of the beast. To set the "mark of the beast" on an object of pursuit (such as dancing, gambling, drinking, etc.) is to denounce it as an evil. The allusion is to Rev. xvi, 2; xix, 20.

The coloured flashes worn on the lapels of a midshipman's jacket are jocularly known as "marks of the beast".

See also M.B. WAISTCOAT under M.

Mark time! Raising the feet alternately as in marching, but without advancing or retreating.

Near the mark. Nearly correct, fairly close to the truth; a phrase derived from archery.

To make one's mark. To distinguish oneself, to achieve note.

It is an ancient practice for persons who cannot write to "make their mark". In old documents, the mark was the sign of the cross, which was followed by the name of the person concerned.

To toe the mark. To line up abreast of the others; so, to "fall in" and do one's duty.

Up to the mark. Generally used in the negative as "Not quite up to the mark", not good enough, not quite well; not up to the standard fixed by the ASSAY office for gold and silver articles.

Marks of gold and silver. See HALL MARK.

Marks in Printing. The various symbols used for styling a manuscript or typescript for the printer and for correcting printer's proofs.

Mark Banco. See BANCO.

Mark, as a name.

King Mark. In ARTHURIAN ROMANCE, a king of Cornwall, Sir TRISTRAM's uncle. He lived at TINTAGEL, and is principally remembered for his treachery and cowardice, and as the husband of Isolde the Fair, who was passionately enamoured of Tristram.

Mark Twain. The pseudonym of the American novelist and humorist Samuel L. Clemens (1835-1910), who adopted it from the Mississippi river pilots' cry, "Mark twain!" when taking soundings.

St. Mark. The GOSPEL writer who died in prison c. 68 is represented in art as in the prime of life, sometimes habited as a BISHOP, and with a lion at his feet and a scroll on which is written, "Peace be to thee, O Mark, My Evangelist." He is also represented with a pen in his right hand and in his left the Gospel. His day is 25 April.

St. Mark's Eve. An old custom in North-country villages was for people to sit in the church porch on this day (24 April) from 11 p.m. till 1 a.m. for three years running, in order to see on the third year the ghosts of those who were to die that year, pass into the church. In other parts this custom was observed on MIDSUMMER-EVE.

Poor Robin's Almanack for 1770 refers to another superstition:

On St. Mark's Eve, at twelve o'clock,
The fair maid will watch her smock,
To find her husband in the dark,
By praying unto good St. Mark.

Keats has an unfinished poem on the subject, and he also refers to it in Cap and Bells (lvi).

Market-penny. A toll surreptitiously exacted by servants sent out to buy goods for their master; secret commission on goods obtained for an employer.

Maro. VIRGIL.

Marocco, or Morocco. The name of BANKS'S HORSE.

Maronites. A UNIAT body, mainly in the Lebanon, in communion with ROME and having their own liturgy. Although probably of 7th century origin, according to tradition, they arose in the early 5th century as followers of Maro, an anchorite living near Antioch. They became MONOTHELITES, but recognized Rome's authority in the 12th century.

Marplot. An officious person who defeats some design by gratuitous meddling. The name is given to a silly, cowardly, inquisitive Paul PRY, in The Busybody (1709), by Mrs. Centlivre. Similarly we have SHAKESPEARE'S "Sir Oliver Martext", the clergyman in As You Like It, and "Sir Martin Mar-All", the hero of Dryden and the Duke of Newcastle's comedy of that name, which was based on MOLIÈRE'S L'Etourdi.

Marprelate Controversy. The name given to the vituperative pamphlet war between the PURITAN writer "Martin Marprelate" and the supporters of the established Church. The Marprelate Tracts (1587-1589) were scurrilous attacks on the BISHOPS secretly printed and distributed. They threatened to establish a "young Martin" in every parish "to mar a prelate". The Church commissioned John Lyly, Thomas Nashe and Robert Greene to launch a counter-attack. The tracts led to a Conventicle Act and another against seditious writings and the presumed chief author, John Penry, was caught and hanged in 1593.

Marque. See under LETTER.

Marquess, or Marquis (O.Fr. marchis, warden of the marches). A title of nobility in England below that of DUKE. It was first conferred on Richard II's favourite, Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford, who was created Marquess of Dublin in 1385. A marquess is addressed as "The Most Honourable the Marquess of —". See COURTESY TITLE; COUSIN; MARCH.

Marriage. The Marriage knot. The bond of marriage effected by the legal marriage ceremony. The Latin phrase is nodus Hercules, and part of the marriage service was for the bridegroom to loosen (solvere) the bride's girdle, not to tie it. In the Hindu marriage ceremony the bridegroom knots a ribbon round the bride's neck. Before the knot is tied the bride's father may refuse consent, but immediately it is tied the marriage is indissoluble. The PARSEES bind the hands of the bridegroom with a sevenfold cord, seven being a sacred number. The ancient Carthaginians tied the thumbs of the betrothed with a leather lace. See RICE.

Close seasons for marriage. These were of old, from ADVENT to St. Hilary's Day (13 January); SEPTUAGESIMA to LOW SUNDAY; ROGATION SUNDAY to TRINITY SUNDAY. They continued to be upheld in the English Church after the REFORMATION, but lapsed during the COMMONWEALTH.

Advent marriage doth thee deny,
But Hilary gives thee liberty.
Septuagesima says thee nay,
Eight days from Easter says you may.
Rogation bids thee to contain,
But Trinity sets thee free again.

The ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH does not allow nuptial MASS during what is left of the "close season", i.e. between the first Sunday of Advent and the Octave of the EPIPHANY, and from ASH WEDNESDAY to Low Sunday.

Marriages are made in Heaven. This implies that partners joined in marriage were foreordained to be so united. E. Hall (c. 1499-1547) says, "Consider the old proverbe to be true that saith: Marriage is destinie." Cp. HANGING AND WIVING, etc. under HANG.

Married women take their husband's surname. This was a Roman custom. Thus Julia, Octavia, etc., married to Pompey, CICERO, etc., would be called Julia of Pompey, Octavia of Cicero. Our practice is similar.

Marrow. A Scots and North-country word (obsolete except in dialect) for a mate or companion, hence a husband or wife, and (of things) an article that makes a pair with another.

Busk ye, busk ye, my bonnie bonnie bride,
Busk ye, busk ye, my winsome marrow.
W. HAMILTON: The Braes of Yarrow (1724).

Down on your marrow-bones! Down on your knees! A good-humoured way of telling a person he had better beg pardon.

The marrow-bone stage. Walking. The leg-bone is the marrow-bone of beef and mutton, and the play is on MARYLEBONE (London) formerly pronounced "Marrybun".

Marrow Controversy. A controversy in the CHURCH OF SCOTLAND arising from the General Assembly's condemnation in 1720 of The Marrow of Modern Divinity, a book by "E.F." which first appeared in 1645 and which was considered to uphold ANTINOMIAN doctrines and too free in its offer of salvation. Who "E.F." was is not known.

Marrow-men. The twelve ministers in the MARROW CONTROVERSY who protested against the General Assembly condemnation of the "Marrow". Thomas Boston, Ralph and Ebenezer Erskine were prominent among them.

Marry! An oath, meaning by Mary, the Virgin.

Marry come up! An exclamation of surprise, disapproval or incredulity, etc. May Mary come up to my assistance, or to your discomfort!

Mar's Year. The year 1715, that of the Earl of Mar's rebellion on behalf of the Old PRETENDER.

Auld uncle John wha wedlock's joys
Sin Mar's year did desire.
BURNS: Hallowe'en, xxvii.

Mars. The Roman god of war; identified in certain aspects with the Greek ARES. He was also the patron of husbandmen.

The planet of this name was early so called because of its reddish tinge, and under it, says the Compost of Ptholomeus, "is borne theves and robbers . . . nyght walkers and quarell pykers, bosters, mockers, and skoffers; and these men of Mars causeth warre, and murder, and batayle. They will be gladly smythes or workers of yron . . . lyers, gret swerers."

Among the alchemists Mars designated iron, and in Camoëns' LUSIADS typified divine fortitude. See also MARTIANS.

The Mars of Portugal. Alfonso de Albuquerque (1453-1515), Viceroy of India.

Marseillaise (Eng. mar se lāz'; Fr. mar sā yāz'). The hymn of the French Revolution and the national anthem of France. The words and music were written by Claude Rouget de Lisle (1760-1835), an artillery officer in the garrison at Strasbourg in 1792. It was first made known in Paris by troops from Marseilles, hence the name. Cp. CHANT DU DÉPART.

Marshal (O.E. mere, mare; scealc, servant; O.Fr. mareschal). Originally a groom or farrier; now the title of high officials about the Court, in the armed forces, etc. In the Army, Field-Marshal is the highest rank, in the R.A.F., Marshal of the Royal Air Force; Air Chief Marshal, Air Marshal, and Air Vice-Marshal correspond to General, Lieutenant-General, and Major-General respectively. The military rank of Marshal of France was revived by NAPOLEON I who gave the baton to some of his most able generals. No Marshals were created after 1870 until 1916 when the title was given to General Joffre (1852-1931). Generals Foch (1851-1929), Lyautey (1854-1934), and Pétain (1856-1951) were also Marshals of France.

Marshal of the Army of God, and of Holy Church. The BARON Robert Fitzwaller, appointed by his brother barons to lead their forces in 1215, to obtain redress of grievances from King John. MAGNA CARTA was the result.

Marshal Vorwärts. See FORWARDS.

Marshal Plan. The popular name for the European Recovery Programme sponsored by U.S. Secretary of State G. C. Marshall, to bring economic aid to stricken Europe after World War II. It was inaugurated in June 1947. Most states other than Russia and her satellites participated. Britain ceased to receive Marshall Aid in 1950.

Marshalsea Prison. An old prison in High Street, SOUTHWARK, the prison of the Marshalsea Court, which was originally a court of the HOUSEHOLD presided over by the Earl Marshal. The Court, with the Knight-Marshal for judge, existed until December 1849. From the 1430s, the prison also received admiralty prisoners and debtors. It moved to newer premises in 1799 and was closed in 1842. In 1381, its marshal was beheaded by rebels under Wat Tyler; and Charles Dickens's father was imprisoned there in 1824.

Necessarily, he was going out again directly, because the Marshalsea lock never turned upon a debtor who was not.

DICKENS: Little Dorrit, ch. vi.

Marsyas (Mar' si ás). The Phrygian flute-player who challenged APOLLO to a contest of skill, and, being beaten by the god, was flayed alive for his presumption. From his blood arose the river so called. The flute on which Marsyas played had been discarded by MINERVA, and, being filled with the breath of the goddess, discoursed most beautiful music. The interpretation of this fable is as follows:

The DORIAN MODE, employed in the worship of Apollo, was performed on lutes; and the Phrygian mode, employed in the rites of CYBELE, was executed by flutes, the reeds of which grew on the river Marsyas. As the Dorian mode was preferred by the Greeks, they said that Apollo beat the flute-player.

Martel. The surname given to Charles (c. 688-741), son of Pippin II (MAYOR OF THE PALACE), probably because of his victory over the SARACENS, who had invaded France under Abd-el-Rahman in 732. It is said that Charles "knocked down the foe, and crushed them beneath his axe, as a martel or hammer crushes what it strikes."

Martello Towers. Round towers about 40 ft. high and of great strength. Many of them were built on the south-eastern coasts of England about 1803 against the threat of French invasion. They took their name from Mortella (Corsica), where a tower, from which these were designed, had proved extremely difficult to capture in 1794. Cp. PALMERSTON'S FOLLIES under FOLLY.

Mar-text. See MARPLOT.

Martha, St. Sister of St. LAZARUS and St. MARY MAGDALEN; patron saint of good housewives. She is represented in art in homely costume, bearing at her girdle a bunch of keys, and holding a ladle or pot of water in her hand. Like St. MARGARET, she is accompanied by a DRAGON bound, for she is said to have destroyed one that ravaged the neighbourhood of Marseilles. She is commemorated on 29 July and is patron of Tarascon.

Martha's Vineyard. An island some 100 square miles in area off the S.E. coast of Massachusetts; so named in 1602 by the navigator Bartholomew Gosnold.

Martian Laws. Laws said to have been compiled by Martia, wife of King Guithelin of Britain. According to Geoffrey of Monmouth (Historia Britannum) Martia was "a noble lady . . .

Martians

accomplished in all kinds of learning" and her work was translated into Saxon by King Alfred. Cp. MOLMUTINE LAWS.

Martians (mar' shānz). The hypothetical inhabitants of the planet MARS, which has a much less dense atmosphere than the earth. In 1898 H. G. Wells wrote The War of the Worlds, in which he recounted the adventures and horrors of a war between the men of Mars and the dwellers on Earth.

Martin. One of the swallow family; probably so called from the Christian name Martin (see St. MARTIN'S BIRD below), but possibly because it appears in ENGLAND about March (the Martian month) and disappears about MARTINMAS.

Martin drunk. Very drunk indeed; Richard Baxter uses the name as a synonym of a drunkard. See St. MARTIN.

The language of Martin is there [in heaven] a stranger.

Saint's Everlasting Rest (1650).

St. Martin (of Tours). The patron SAINT of innkeepers and reformed drunkards, usually shown in art as a young mounted soldier dividing his cloak with a beggar; in allusion to the legend that in mid-winter, when a military tribune at Amiens, he divided his cloak with a naked beggar who sought alms and that at night Christ appeared to him arrayed in this very garment. This effected his conversion.

He was born of heathen parents but was converted at ROME and became Bishop of Tours in 371, dying at Candes c. 400. His day is 11 November, the day of a pagan Feast; hence his purely accidental patronage and also the phrase MARTIN DRUNK.

St. Martin's beads, jewellery, lace, rings, etc. Cheap counterfeit articles. When the old collegiate church of St. Martin's-le-Grand was demolished at the dissolution of the monasteries, hucksters established themselves on the site and carried on a considerable trade in artificial jewellery, and cheap ware generally. Hence the use of the saint's name in this connexion. Cp. TAWDRY.

Certayn lyght braynes . . . wyll rather weare a Marten chayne, the pryce of viiij, then they woulde be unchayned.

THOMAS BECON: Jewel of Joy (c. 1548).

St. Martin's bird. The hen-harrier, called l'oiseau de Saint Martin in France, because it makes its passage through the country about 11 November (St. Martin's day).

St. Martin's goose. St. Martin's day (11 November) was at one time the great goose feast in France. The legend is that St. MARTIN was annoyed by a goose, which he ordered to be killed and served up for dinner. Hence, the goose was "sacrificed" to him on each anniversary. Cp. MICHAELMAS DAY.

St. Martin of Bullions. The St. SWITHIN of SCOTLAND. His day is 4 July, and the saying is that if it rains then, rain may be expected for forty days.

St. Martin's running footman. The DEVIL, traditionally assigned to St. Martin for such duties on a certain occasion.

How do we know whether St. Martin's running footman is not brewing another storm?

RABELAIS:

The Fourth Book: Pantagruel, ch. xxiii.

St. Martin's summer. A late spell of fine weather. St. Martin's day is 11 November. See SUMMER.

Martinmas. The feast of St. MARTIN, 11 November. His Martinmas will come, as it does to every hog—i.e. all must die. November was the great slaughtering time of the Anglo-Saxons when fodder was exhausted and oxen, sheep and hogs were killed and salted.

Martinet. A strict disciplinarian; so called from the Marquis de Martinet, colonel commanding Louis XIV's own regiment of infantry. The king required all young noblemen to command a platoon in this regiment before purchasing command of an infantry regiment. Martinet's system for training these wild young men in the principles of military discipline gained him lasting fame. He was slain at the siege of Duisburg in 1672.

Martini. A COCKTAIL essentially consisting of Martini Vermouth and gin, taking its name from the firm of Martini and Rossi, makers of vermouth. There are three forms of this cocktail, dry, medium, and sweet, each containing two parts gin to one of vermouth, the latter two cocktails having additional ingredients. In the U.S.A. the proportion of gin in a dry Martini is considerably higher.

Martyr (Gr.) simply means a witness, one who bears testimony; hence one who bears witness to his faith with his blood.

The Martyr King. Charles I of England, beheaded 30 January, 1649.

Martyr to science. One who loses his health or life though his devotion to science.

Tolpuddle Martyrs. See TOLPUDDLE.

Marvedie. See MARAVEDI.

Marxism. The philosophical and political and economic theories or system propounded by Karl Marx (1818–1883) and Friedrich Engels (1820–1895) which form the basis of modern Communist dogma. It involves a materialist conception of history, a theory of class war, a belief in the ultimate destruction of capitalism and the formation of a classless society.

Mary, the Mother of Christ, is represented in art as follows:

As the Virgin, with flowing hair, emblematical of her virginity.

As Mater Dolorosa. Somewhat elderly, clad in mourning, head draped, and weeping over the dead body of Christ.

As Our Lady of Dolours. Seated, her breast being pierced with seven swords, emblematic of her seven sorrows.

As Our Lady of Mercy. With arms extended, spreading out her mantle and gathering sinners beneath it.

As The glorified Madonna. Bearing a crown and sceptre, or an orb and CROSS, in rich robes and surrounded by angels.

Her seven joys. The ANNUNCIATION, VISITATION, NATIVITY, EPIPHANY, Finding in the Temple, Resurrection, Ascension.

Her seven sorrows. Simeon's Prophecy, the Flight into Egypt, the loss of the Holy Child, on meeting Our Lord on the way to CALVARY, the Crucifixion, the Taking Down from the CROSS, and the Entombment.

Bloody Mary. Queen Mary Tudor (1516, 1547–1558), for her persecution of PROTESTANTS. Some 300 suffered death, including Archbishop Cranmer.

Highland Mary. See under HIGHLANDS.

Little Mary. A euphemism for the stomach; from the play of that name by J. M. Barrie (1903).

The four Marys. The Queen's Marys, the companions of Mary Stewart, afterwards Queen of Scots. They were: Mary Beaton (or Bethune), Mary Livingstone (or Leuson), Mary Fleming (or Flemyng), and Mary Seaton (or Seyton). Mary Carmichael was not one of the four, although introduced in the well-known ballad.

Yestre'en the queen had four Marys,
This night she'll hae but three;
There was Mary Beaton and Mary Seaton,
Mary Carmichael, and me.

Mary Anne, or Marianne. A slang name for the guillotine, see MARY ANNE ASSOCIATIONS below.

Mary Anne Associations. Secret republican societies in France. The name was adopted by the Republican party because Ravaiillac was moved to assassinate Henry IV in 1610 by his reading De Rege et Regio Institutione by Mariana (see LIVY OF SPAIN).

Mary of Arnhem. The name used by Helen Sensburg in her NAZI propaganda broadcasts to British troops in N.W. Europe, 1944–1945. Her melting voice made her programmes very popular with the British, but without the results for which she hoped.

Mary Magdalene, St. Patron SAINT of penitents, being herself the model penitent of GOSPEL story. Her feast is 22 July. See MAGDALENE; MAUDLIN.

In art she is represented either as young and beautiful, with a profusion of hair, and holding a box of ointment, or as a penitent, in a sequestered place, reading before a CROSS or skull.

Marybuds. The flower of the MARIGOLD. Like many other flowers, they open at daybreak and close at sunset.

And winking marybuds begin
To ope their golden eyes.

SHAKESPEARE: Cymbeline, II, iii.

Marygold. See MARIGOLD.

Maryland (U.S.A.) was so named in compliment to Henrietta Maria, Queen of Charles I. In the Latin charter it is called Terra Mariæ.

Marylebone. This London district was originally called TYBURN, being situated on that little river. The name derives from St. Mary-at-Bourne, a village near Tyburn river, also called Marybourne, Maryborne, Marybone, or Mary-le-bone.

Masada. The great rock on the edge of the Judæan desert, the site of Herod the Great's palace, where the ZEALOTS made their last heroic stand against the Romans. When defeat was certain their leader Eleazar ben Ya'ir persuaded them to draw lots to select 10 men to kill the remaining 960 defenders. One of these finally slew his nine fellows and then pushed his sword through his own body. The story is told by JOSEPHUS. Among the relics revealed by Professor Yigael Yadin's excavations exhibited at London in 1966 were eleven small potsherds inscribed with names, on one of which was the name "ben Ya'ir". They are probably the lots in question.

Masaniello (mās ān yel' ò). A corruption of Tommaso Aniello, a fisherman's son who led the Neapolitan revolt of July 1647 and ruled Naples for nine days. He was finally betrayed and shot. His body was flung into a ditch but was reclaimed and interred with great pomp and ceremony. The discontent was caused by excessive taxation and Masaniello's immediate grievance was the seizure of his property because his wife had smuggled flour. See LAZZARONE.

Auber's opera La Muette de Portici (1828) is based on these events.

Mascot. A person or thing that is supposed to bring good luck (cp. JETTATURA). The word is French slang (perhaps connected with Provençal masco, a sorcerer), and was popularized in England by Audran's opera, La Mascotte (1880).

Ces envoyés du paradis
Sont des Mascottes, mes amis,
Heureux celui que le ciel dote d'une Mascotte.

Masculine ending. The stress or accent falling on the final syllable of a line of verse. Cp. FEMININE ENDING.

I must go down to the seas again, to the lonely sea and the sky,

And all I ask is a tall ship, and a star to steer her by;
MASEFIELD: Sea Fever, i.

Masher. An old-fashioned term for a "nut" or dude; an exquisite, a SWELL, a LADY-KILLER, or crusher. "Mashing", the same as "crushing" or "killing", came into use in the 1880s.

Mask, The Man in the Iron. See under IRON.

Masochism. The name for the condition in which sexual gratification depends on the subject's self-humiliation and self-inflicted pain; after Leopold von Sacher-Masoch (1836-1895), the Austrian novelist who described this aberration.

Mason and Dixon Line. The southern boundary line which separated Pennsylvania from MARYLAND, fixed at 39° 43' 26" N., marked out (1763-1767) by two English surveyors, Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon. From about 1820 it was popularly used to signify the boundary between North and South, "free" and "slave" states.

Mass (Lat. missa, a dismissal). The EUCHARIST. In the early Church the unbaptized were dismissed before the Eucharist proper began and the remaining congregation were solemnly dismissed at the end. By the 8th century the name missa had become transferred to the service as a whole, and the original meaning of the word faded out. The name Mass is used by the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH and by High Churchmen of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

High Mass, or Missa solemnis, in which the celebrant is assisted by a deacon and subdeacon, requires the presence of choir and acolytes. Sung Mass, or Missa Cantata, is a simplification in which the celebrant and congregation sing the musical parts of the service, but without the deacon and subdeacon. The plain form of Mass is called Low Mass. A Pontifical High Mass is one celebrated by a BISHOP or higher prelate with very full ritual. A Nuptial Mass follows the marriage service and Requiem Mass is one offered for the dead. There are also other special forms of Mass.

Mass Observation is a British trade-mark name for a system of obtaining information as to popular opinion, similar to the GALLUP POLL. It grew out of a voluntary organization started by Charles Madge and Tom Harrison in 1937.

In the two years of its existence M-O has been exploring new techniques for observing and analysing the ordinary. Through M-O you can already listen-in to the movements of popular habit and opinion.

MADGE AND HARRISON:
Britain by Mass-Observation, i (1939).

Massacre of the Innocents. The slaughter of the male children of Bethlehem "from two years old and under" when Jesus was born (Matt. ii, 16). This was done at the command of Herod the Great in order to destroy "the babe" who was destined to become "King of the Jews".

In parliamentary parlance, the phrase denotes the withdrawal at the close of the session of the bills which there has been no time to consider or pass.

Mast. To serve before the mast. To serve as a common sailor, whose quarters are in the forepart of the ship, the FORECASTLE. An expression belonging to the days of sail.

Master (derived partly from O.E. mægester and partly from O.Fr. maistre; from the Lat. magister).

Little Masters. See under LITTLE.

Master-at-arms. In the Royal Navy, a chief petty officer of the Regulating Branch concerned with police and disciplinary duties. He takes precedence over other C.P.O's.

Master of Arts, etc. One who holds a Master's degree of a university in arts. In the English universities it is the degree above that of Bachelor. At the modern universities it is awarded for further examination or research; at Oxford and Cambridge no further tests are required. In the Scottish universities it is a first degree. At most universities there are corresponding Master's degrees in other faculties.

Master of the Rolls. See ROLLS.

Master of the Sentences. See SENTENCES.

Master Mason. A FREEMASON who has been raised to the third degree.

Old Masters. The great painters (especially of Italy and the Low Countries) who worked from the 13th century to about the early 17th. Also their paintings.

Past Master. One who has held the office or dignity of master; hence an adept, one who is long-experienced in a craft, etc.

Matador. In bull-fights he is the final actor in the drama, his part being to play the bull alone and kill it.

In the game of OMBRE, Spadille (the ace of spades), Manille (the seven of trumps), and Basto (the ace of clubs) are called "Matadors".

Now move to war her sable Matadores . . .
Spadillo first, unconquerable lord,
Led off two captive trumps, and swept the board,
As many more Manillo forced to yield,
And marched a victor from the verdant field.
Him Basto followed. . . .

POPE: Rape of the Lock, canto iii.

In the game of dominoes of this name, the double-blank and all the "stones" that of themselves make seven (6-1, 5-2, and 4-3) are "matadors", and can be played at any time.

Matamore. A POLTROON, a swagger, a BOBADIL. It is composed of two Spanish words matar-Moros (a slayer of Moors). See MOOR-SLAYER.

Your followers catch your own humour, and must bandy and brawl in my court, and in my very presence, like so many Matamoros.

SCOTT: Kenilworth, xvi.

Matapan Stew (Austr.). A meal concocted of left-overs, and so called from the fact that the cook of H.M.A.S. Perth served a scratch hot meal during the Battle of Matapan, 28 March 1941.

Mate. A man does not get his hands out of the tar by becoming second mate. In the days of sail a second mate was still expected to work with the tar-pot with the men. The first mate was exempt from this dirty work.

Maté (măt' ä). Paraguay tea made from the leaves of Brazilian holly (Ilex paraguayensis). Its full name is Yerba de maté (yerba, herb; mate, vessel) from the hollow gourd in which it was infused. It is also called Brazil tea, Jesuit's tea and Yerba.

Mater Familias (mă' tēr fā mi li ās) (Lat.). The mother of a family.

Materia medica (mă tēr' i ä mēd' i ká) (Med. Lat., medical material). That branch of medicine which deals with the remedial substances employed for the cure and alleviation of disease, including their uses, properties and physiological effects. Dioscorides wrote his Materia Medica (1st century A.D.) giving the properties of some 600 medicinal plants and also animal products of medical and diatetic use which served to enlighten the herbalists of the 15th and 16th centuries.

Materialism. In philosophy, the doctrines of a Materialist, who maintains that there is nothing in the universe but matter, that mind is a phenomenon of matter, and that there is no ground for assuming a spiritual first cause. In general, Materialism is opposed to IDEALISM, free-will, and belief in God. In the ancient world, its chief exponents were EPICURUS and Lucretius, in modern times the 18th-century French philosophers Lamettrie and Holbach. In the 19th century Materialism was much influenced by the theory of evolution and became involved with problems of interpretation in science, while later Marx put forward DIALECTICAL MATERIALISM.

In everyday parlance "materialism" implies devotion to material things and interests.

Dialectical materialism. The Marxist adaptation of the Hegelian DIALECTIC to describe the way in which phenomena have, and therefore will, interact and develop; the general laws of motion which govern the evolution of nature and society. Every stage of history contains the germs of its own destruction, the thesis provokes its opposite or antithesis, and from the clash a new synthesis arises which preserves the best of both thesis and antithesis. The process then repeats itself. This conflict of opposites takes place gradually until a certain point, when quantitative change becomes qualitative change. By such processes is the classless society to be reached.

Historical materialism. This is the application of DIALECTICAL MATERIALISM to the evolution of society. Broadly it comes down to a materialist or economic interpretation of history in which all historical developments are basically due to economic phenomena and all social, political and intellectual life, as well as religion, are basically determined by the material conditions of life. Furthermore, historical development is part of the dialectical process.

When we find that the most different modes of production, those of highly civilised nations as well as those of uncivilised warrior tribes, were, for a thousand years, compatible with the same ideology [Christianity], we are surely justified in concluding that the ideology of these nations was determined by some cause other than economics.

KARL FEDERN:

The Materialist Conception of History, iii.

Materialize. In psychical research it denotes the assumption of bodily form of psychical phenomena. The principles governing materialization are as yet unknown.

Mathew, Father. Theobald Mathew (1796-1856), an Irish priest called The Apostle of Temperance. His work on behalf of total abstinence was truly remarkable. When the centenary of his death was celebrated in Cork (1956), 60,000 people gathered to honour his memory.

Matins. See MATTINS.

Matriculate (Lat. matricula, a roll or register). Students at universities matriculate when they enrol after fulfilling certain entrance requirements.

In common parlance, it used to mean to pass the entrance examination qualifying one to enter as a student at a university, although many sat for such examinations simply to obtain a qualification. This examination no longer exists.

In Scottish HERALDRY, when persons register their arms with the Lord LYON they are said to matriculate.

Matsya. See AVATAR.

Matter. A matter of course. Something one expects in the regular order of things; a natural consequence or accompaniment. For that matter. As far as that is concerned.

No matter. It is of no consequence; regardless of, as in, "no matter what happens."

Matter-of-fact. Unvarnished truth; prosaic, unimaginative, as a "matter-of-fact swain".

Matterhorn. The German name of the mountain in the Pennine Alps known to the French as Mont Cervin, and to the Italians as Monte Silvio; so called from its peak (Horn) and the scanty patches of green meadow (Matter) which cluster round its base. Above a glacier-line, 11,000 ft. high, it rises in an almost inaccessible obelisk of rock to a total height of 14,703 ft. It was first scaled in 1865 by Edward Whymper (1840-1911), when four of his party lost their lives.

Figuratively used it applies to any danger, desperate situation threatening destruction, or LEAP IN THE DARK, as the matrimonial Matterhorn.

Matthew, St. Is represented in art as (1) an EVANGELIST, old and with a long beard, with an ANGEL generally standing near by dictating his GOSPEL; (2) an APOSTLE, bearing a purse in reference to his being a publican; sometimes carrying a spear, sometimes a carpenter's rule or square. His symbol is an angel or a man's face, and his day is 21 September.

One legend says that St. Matthew preached for 15 years in Judæa after the Ascension, and that he carried the Gospel to Ethiopia, where he was murdered.

In the last of Matthew. At the last gasp, on one's last legs. This is a German expression, and arose thus: a Roman Catholic priest said in his sermon that Protestantism was in the last of Matthew, and, being asked what he meant, replied, "The last five words of the Gospel of St. Matthew are these: 'The end of this dispensation.'" He quoted the Latin version; ours is less correctly translated "the end of the world".

Matthew Parker's Bible; Matthew's Bible. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

Matthias, St. The APOSTLE chosen by lot to take the place left by the traitor Judas Iscariot (Acts i, 21-26). The name is a shortened form of Mattathias.

Mattins, or Matins. The BREVIARY office for the night called Vigilia until the 11th century, and originally held at midnight, but in the BENEDICTINE rule at 2 a.m. It is now anticipated and said the previous afternoon or evening. The name was retained in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER (1549) for the service of Morning Prayer which was derived from the ancient office. The name was discarded in the book of 1552.

Mattins of Bruges. The massacre of the French living in Bruges by the Flemings at daybreak, 18 May 1302.

Maudlin. Stupidly sentimental. Maudlin drunk is to be sentimentally drunk and inclined to tears. Maudlin slip-slop is sentimental chit-chat. The word is derived from the repentant tears of MARY MAGDALENE, who was often portrayed with eyes swollen from weeping. Cp. MAGDALENE.

Maul of Monks, The. Thomas Cromwell (1485-1540), VICAR-GENERAL (1535) who arranged for the visitation of the English monasteries and their subsequent dissolution.

Maumet, Maumetry. See MAMMET.

Maundy Thursday. The day before GOOD FRIDAY is so called from the first words of the antiphon for that day being Mandatum novum do vobis, a new commandment I give unto you (St. John xiii, 34), with which the ceremony of the washing of the feet begins. This is still carried out in Roman Catholic cathedrals and monasteries. It became the custom of popes, Catholic sovereigns, prelates, and priests to wash the feet of poor people. In England the sovereign did the same as late as the reign of James II. The word has been incorrectly derived from maund (a basket), because on the day before the great fast it was an ancient church custom to bring out food in maunds to distribute to the poor.

The Royal Maunds, or Maundy Money. Gifts in money given by the sovereign on MAUNDY THURSDAY to the number of aged poor persons that corresponds with her (his) age. It used to be distributed by the Lord High Almoner, but since 1883 the Clerk of the Almonry has been responsible. The distribution is now made at Westminster Abbey of silver money specially coined for the purpose. It is a relic of the Maundy Thursday custom of the "washing of the feet". James II was the last sovereign to distribute the doles in person until George V did so in 1932. Edward VIII also distributed purses in 1936. The sovereign is still usually present at the ceremony.

Mauretania, or Mauritania. Parts of Morocco and Algiers, the land of the Mauri or Moors. The kingdom of Mauritania was annexed to the Roman Empire in A.D. 42 and finally disintegrated when overrun by the VANDALS in 429.

The modern Islamic Republic of Mauretania is situated in the S.W. Sahara.

Mausoleum. Originally the name of the tomb of Mausolus, King of Caria, to whom his wife Artemisia erected a splendid monument at Halicarnassus (353 B.C.). Parts of the sepulchre, one of the SEVEN WONDERS OF THE WORLD (see WONDER), are now in the BRITISH MUSEUM. The name is now applied to any magnificent tomb, usually with a sepulchral chamber.

Notable examples are: that of AUGUSTUS; of Hadrian, i.e. the castle of St. Angelo at Rome; that of St. Peter the Martyr in the church of St. Eustatius at Milan; that of Frederick William III and Queen Louisa at Charlottenburg near Berlin; that of the Prince Consort at Frogmore in Windsor Park.

Mauthe Dog. A ghostly black spaniel that for many years haunted Peel Castle in the Isle of MAN. It used to enter the guardroom as soon as candles were lighted, and leave it at daybreak. While this spectre dog was present, the soldiers forebore all oaths and profane talk, but they always carried out their nightly duties of locking up and conveying the keys to the captain accompanied by one of their fellows. One night a drunken trooper, from bravado, performed the rounds alone but lost his speech and died in three days. The dog never appeared again.

During excavations in 1871 the bones of Simon, bishop of Sodor and Man (died 1247) were uncovered, with the bones of a dog at his feet.

Mauther, mawther. An old East Anglian dialect word for a young girl; frequently altered to Modder, Morther, Mor, etc. Its etymology is obscure.

Away! you talk like a foolish mauther.
BEN JONSON: The Alchemist, IV, vii.

When once a giggling morthor you,
And I a red-faced chubby boy . . .
ROBERT BLOOMFIELD: Richard and Kate, xii.

Mauvais, mauvaise (mō va, mō vāz). Fr., bad.

Mauvais ton. Bad manners, ill-breeding, vulgar ways.

Mauvaise honte (awnt). Bad or silly shame; false modesty, bashfulness, sheepishness.

Mauvaise plaisanterie. A rude or ill-mannered jest; a jest in bad taste.

Maverick. An unbranded animal, a stray, a masterless person or rover, Samuel A. Maverick, a Texan cattle-raiser, did not bother to brand his cattle; hence the practice arose of calling unbranded calves mavericks, and the usage extended to other animals. In the U.S.A. it acquired a political connotation from the 1880s, applying to politicians who did not acknowledge any party leadership. Kipling called an imaginary regiment "The Mavericks". To maverick is to seize or brand mavericks, hence to appropriate anything without legal claim.

Mavournin. Irish (mo mhurnin) for "My darling"; Erin go bragh is "Ireland for ever".

Land of my forefathers, Erin go bragh! . . .
Erin mavournin, Erin go bragh!
THOMAS CAMPBELL: Exile of Erin, v.

Mawworm. A hypocritical pretender to sanctity, a pious humbug. From the character of this name in Isaac Bickerstaffe's The Hypocrite (1769).

Maximum and Minimum (Lat.). The greatest and the least amount; as, the maximum and minimum price of beef during the year. A maximum and minimum thermometer is one that indicates the highest and lowest temperatures during a specified period.

May. The Anglo-Saxons called this month thrimilce, because then cows can be milked three times a day; the present name is the Lat. Maius, probably from Maia, the goddess of growth and increase, connected with major.

The old Dutch name was Bloumaand (blossoming month). In the French Revolutionary CALENDAR the month was called Floréal (the time of flowers, 20 April to 20 May).

Here we go gathering nuts in May. See under NUT.

It's a case of January and May. See under JANUARY.

May unlucky for weddings. This is a Roman superstition, and is referred to by Ovid. In this month were held the festivals of Bona Dea (the goddess of chastity), and the feasts of the dead called Lemuralia.

Nec viduæ tædis eadem, nec virginis apta
Tempora: quæ nupsit, non diuturna fuit;
Hæc quoque de causa, si te proverbia tangunt,
Mente malum Maio nubere vulgus ait.

ovid: Fasti, v, 487, etc.

Unlucky to wash blankets in May. This superstition still survives in parts of Britain, especially in the S.W. The old rhyme says:

Wash a blanket in May
Wash a dear one away.

May-day. Polydore Virgil says that the Roman youths used to go into the fields and spend the CALENDs of May in dancing and singing in honour of Flora, goddess of fruits and flowers. The English celebrated May-day with games and sports, particularly archery and MORRIS dancing and the setting up of the MAYPOLE. In due time ROBIN HOOD and MAID MARIAN came to preside as Lord and Lady of the May, and by the 16th century May-day was Robin Hood's day and Robin Hood plays became an integral part of the festivities.

May-day was also formerly the day of the London chimney-sweepers' festival. See also LABOR DAY.

Evil May Day. See EVIL.

Mayfair. A fashionable district in the WEST END of London north of PICCADILLY, to Oxford Street and between Park Lane and Berkeley Square. It was originally Brookfield, but takes its present name from the May fair which occupied the site of the present Hertford Street, Curzon Street, and Shepherd Market. There was an annual fair in the area from the reign of Edward I, called St. James's Fair, which began on the eve of St. JAMES and was suppressed in 1664. It was renewed by James II to commence on 1 May, hence the name. From the beginning of the 18th century it became a centre for drinking, gaming, etc., was temporarily suppressed in 1808, and finally abolished late in the reign of George III.

May-Fair Marriages. "The Rev. Alexander Keith's Chapel" in Curzon Street, Mayfair, was notorious for its traffic in weddings until the Act of 1753 stopped the trade. Here the youngest of the two beautiful Miss Gunnings was married to the sixth Duke of Hamilton in 1752. The ring was from a bed-curtain and the ceremony took place half an hour after midnight. Cp. FLEET MARRIAGES.

Maypole, May Queen, etc. Dancing round the Maypole on MAY-DAY, "going-a-Maying", electing a May Queen, and lighting bonfires, are all ancient relics of nature-worship. In Cornhill, LONDON, before the Church of St. Andrew a great shaft or maypole was set up, round which the people danced, whence the church came to be called St. Andrew Undershaft. On the first May morning people went "a-maying" to fetch fresh flowers and branches of hawthorn (hence its name may) to decorate their houses, and the fairest maid of the locality was crowned "Queen of the May".

A very tall ungainly woman is sometimes called a "Maypole", a term which was bestowed as a nickname on the Duchess of Kendal, one of George I's German mistresses.

The Maypole in the Strand. This once famous LONDON landmark was erected probably in the time of Elizabeth I, on a spot now occupied by the Church of St. Mary-le-Strand. Destroyed by the PURITANS in 1644, another (134 ft. high) was set up in 1661, it is said, by the farrier John Clarges to celebrate the marriage of his daughter to General Monck. By 1713 this was decayed, and another erected which was removed in 1718. It was bought by Sir Isaac Newton, who sent it to a friend in Wanstead, where it was erected in the park to support the then largest telescope in Europe.

May meetings. The annual gatherings, usually held at LONDON in May or June, of religious and charitable societies, to hear the annual reports and appeals for further support, etc.

Maya. The mother of GAUTAMA who saw in a dream the future BUDDHA enter her womb in the shape of a little white elephant. Seven days after his birth she died from joy.

Mayflower. The 180-ton ship in which the PILGRIM FATHERS finally sailed from Plymouth, Devon, 6 September 1620. They arrived off Cape Cod, 11 November, and established their colony, although the original intention was to land on the shore of Delaware Bay. At Jordans, Buckinghamshire, the burial place of William Penn, there is a barn traditionally held to be built from the timber of this ship.

In 1957 a replica of the ship under the command of A. J. Villiers, and built of Devonshire oak and elm, sailed from Plymouth to Massachusetts following the route of its predecessor.

The Mayflower Compact. An agreement signed by 41 adults in the cabin of the Mayflower acknowledging their allegiance to the King of England and setting up a body politic "to frame just and equal laws". (21 November 1620.)

Mayonnaise. A sauce made with pepper, salt, oil, vinegar, the yolk of egg, etc., beaten up together. When the Duc de Richelieu captured Port Mahon, Minorca, in 1756, he demanded food on landing; in the absence of a prepared meal, he took whatever he could find and beat it up together—hence the original form mahonnaise.

Mayor. The chief magistrate of a city, elected by the council, of which he becomes chairman. He holds office for twelve months.

The chief magistrate of LONDON is the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, a Privy Councillor. York has had a Lord Mayor since 1389 and in more recent times the honour has been bestowed on Birmingham, Bradford, Bristol, Cardiff, Hull, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle upon Tyne, Norwich, Nottingham, Plymouth, Portsmouth, Sheffield and Stoke-on-Trent. The Norman maire (mayor) was introduced by Henry II and it supplanted the old name of PORTREEVE. Cp. LORD MAYOR'S DAY; LORD MAYOR'S SHOW.

Mayor of the Bull-ring. In the Dublin of former times, this official and his sheriffs were elected on MAY-DAY and St. Peter's Eve "to be captaine and guardian of the bachelers, and the unwedded youth of the civitie". For the year the "Mayor" had authority to punish those who frequented houses of ill-fame. He was termed "Mayor of the Bull-ring" because he conducted any bachelor who married during his term of office to an iron ring in the market place to which bulls were tied for baiting, and made him kiss it.

Mayor of Garratt. See GARRATT.

Mayor of the Palace (Maire du Palais). Originally the major domus or steward of the Frankish Kings whose functions expanded into the affairs of state. By the 7th century they were chief ministers until, in 751, Pippin III, son of Charles MARTEL, and mayor of the palace of Neustria and Burgundy, became King of the Franks and suppressed the office. He was the founder of the Carolingian dynasty and father of CHARLEMAGNE.

Mazarin, Cardinal Jules (1602–1661), Italian-born successor to Cardinal Richelieu and minister to the Queen-Regent during the minority of Louis XIV.

Mazarin Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Mazarin Library. The first LIBRARY in Paris. The great Cardinal Mazarin left his collection of 40,000 books to the city on his death in 1661, and himself composed the rules for its conduct.

Mazarinades. Pamphlets in prose or verse published against Cardinal Mazarin (1602–1661) by supporters of the FRONDE.

Mazer. A large drinking vessel originally made of maple-wood, and so called from O.Fr. masere, O.H.Ger. Masar, a knot in wood, maple-wood.

A mazer wrought of the maple ware.

SPENSER: Shepherd's Calendar (August).

Mazikeen, or Shedeem. A species of beings in Jewish mythology resembling the Arabian JINN said to be agents of magic and enchantment. When ADAM fell, says the TALMUD, he was excommunicated for 130 years, during which time he begat demons and spectres.

Swells out like the Mazikeen ass. The allusion is to a Jewish tradition that a servant, whose task it was to rouse the neighbourhood to midnight prayer, one night mounted a stray ass and neglected his duty. As he rode along the ass grew bigger and bigger, till at last it towered as high as the tallest edifice, where it left the man, and there next morning he was found.

Meal. In meal or in malt. Directly or indirectly; in one way or another. If much money passes through the hand, some profit will be sure to accrue either "in meal or in malt", and a certain percentage of one or the other is the miller's perquisite.

Meal Tub Plot. In 1679 during the POPISSH PLOT scare, Thomas Dangerfield pretended to have discovered a WHIG plot to prevent the Duke of York's succession to the throne. The evidence was claimed to be concealed under the meal tub of his associate Mrs. Cellier. The falsity of this was discovered and he next accused prominent Roman Catholics of promoting the conspiracy as cover for a popish plot. Dangerfield was convicted of perjury and Mrs. Cellier finally pilloried for libel in connection with her trial.

Mealy-mouthed is the Greek melimuthos (honey-speech), and means velvet-tongued, afraid of giving offence, hypocritical, "smarmy".

Mean. Mean as hungry Tyson (Austr.). Very mean. In allusion to a very miserly Australian farmer, James Tyson (1819-1898).

Meander. To wind, to saunter about at random; so called from the Mæander, a winding river of Phrygia. It is said to have given DÆDALUS his idea for a LABYRINTH. The term is also applied to an ornamental pattern of winding lines, used as a border on pottery, wall decorations, etc.

Means Test. The principle of supplying evidence of need before qualifying for relief from public funds, i.e. a test of one's means. Such a test was introduced by the NATIONAL GOVERNMENT in 1931 when a person's unemployment benefit was exhausted, and the resulting inquisition was much resented by those concerned. It took note of any earnings by members of the household and all monetary assets, and penalized the provident. The regulations governing public assistance were modified after World War II.

Measure (O.Fr. mesure; Lat. mensura).

Beyond measure, or out of all measure. Beyond all reasonable degree; exceedingly, excessively.

Thus out of measure sad.

SHAKESPEARE: Much Ado about Nothing, I, iii.

To measure one's length on the ground. To fall flat on the ground; to be knocked down.

To measure other people's corn by one's own bushel. See under BUSHEL.

To measure strength. To wrestle together; to fight, to contest.

To measure swords. To try whether or not one is strong enough or sufficiently equally matched to contend against another. The phrase is from duelling, in which the seconds measure the swords to see that both are of the same length.

So we measured swords and parted.

SHAKESPEARE: As You Like It, V, iv.

To take the measure of one's foot. To ascertain how far a person will venture; to make a shrewd guess of another's character. The allusion is to ex pede Herculem. (see under EX).

To tread a measure. A poetic and archaic expression meaning "to dance", especially a slow stately dance.

"Nowt read we a measure!" said young Lochinvar.

SCOTT: Marmion, canto V, xii.

Meat, Bread. Both words can connote food in general. For Italians and Asiatics bread stands for food, an indication of their lower consumption of animal food. The English being greater consumers of meat, which simply means food, use the word almost exclusively for animal food. In the banquet given to this brethren, Joseph commanded the servants "to set on bread" (Gen. xliii, 31). In Ps. civ, 27, it is said of fishes, creeping things, and crocodiles that God gives them meat in due season. In parts of Devonshire potatoes for the table are still called meat potatoes, as opposed to seed potatoes, and feed potatoes for livestock.

To carry off meat from the graves. To be as POOR as a church mouse; to be so poor as to descend to robbing the graves of offerings. The Greeks and Romans used to make feasts at certain seasons, when spirits were supposed to return to their graves, and the fragments were left on the tombs for them. Hence the Latin proverb Eleemosynam sepulcri patris tui (Alms on your father's grave).

Mecca. The birthplace of MOHAMMED in Saudi Arabia. It is one of the two holy cities, the other being MEDINA. Derivatively it means a place one longs to visit.

Mecklenburg Declaration. The first declaration of independence in the U.S.A. made at Mecklenburg, N. Carolina, on 20 May 1775.

Medal of Honor. In the U.S.A., a medal instituted in 1862 for conspicuous acts of gallantry in the CIVIL WAR. It is the premier decoration of the United States, the equivalent of the VICTORIA CROSS.

Médard, St. (mā' dar). The French St. SWITHIN; his day is 8 June.

Quand il pleut à la Saint-Médard
Il pleut quarante jours plus tard.

He was bishop of Noyon and Tournai in the 6th century and founded the Festival of the Rose at Salency, in which the most virtuous girl in the parish receives a crown of roses and a purse of money. Legend says that a sudden shower once fell which soaked everyone except St. Médard who remained dry as toast, for an eagle had spread its wings over him, and ever after he was termed maitre de la pluie.

Medb. See MAEVE.

Medea (me dē' à). In Greek legend, a sorceress, daughter of Æetes, king of Colchis. She married JASON, the leader of the ARGONAUTS, whom she aided to obtain the GOLDEN FLEECE, and was the mother of Medus, regarded by the Greeks as the ancestor of the Medes.

Medea's kettle, or cauldron. A means of restoring lost youth. MEDEA cut an old ram into pieces, threw the bits into her cauldron, and a young lamb came forth. The daughters of Pelias accordingly killed and cut up their father thinking to restore him to youth in the same way, but Medea refused to save the situation.

Get thee Medea's kettle and be boiled anew.
CONGREVE: Love for Love, IV, vii.

Medes and Persians. See under LAW.

Mediæval times. See MIDDLE AGES.

Medici (med' i chi). A great and powerful family that ruled in Florence from the 15th to the 18th centuries, founded by Giovanni Medici, a banker, whose son Cosimo (1389-1464) was famous as a patron of art and learning. His grandson Lorenzo the Magnificent (1449-1492) was one of the outstanding figures of the RENAISSANCE.

From Lorenzo, brother of Cosimo the Elder, came the line of Grand Dukes of Tuscany, the first being his great-grandson Cosimo (1519-1574), who was regarded by many as the original of MACHIAVELLI's Prince. The Medici family gave three Popes to the Church, Leo X (1475-1521; POPE 1513-1521), in whose pontificate the REFORMATION began; Clement VII (1478-1534; Pope 1523-1534), who refused Henry VIII's divorce from Katharine of Aragon; and Leo XI, who was Pope for only a few months in 1605.

Medicine. From Lat. medicina, which meant both the physician's art and his laboratory, and also a medicament. The alchemists applied the word to the PHILOSOPHER'S STONE and the ELIXIR OF LIFE; hence SHAKESPEARE'S

How much unlike art thou, Mark Antony!
Yet, coming from him, the great medicine hath
With his tinct gilded thee.

Antony and Cleopatra, I, v.

The word was, and is, frequently used in a figurative sense, as—

The miserable have no other medicine
But only hope.

SHAKESPEARE: Measure for Measure, III, i.

Among the North American Indians medicine is a spell, charm, or FETISH, and sometimes even MANITOU himself, hence Medicine-man, a witch-doctor or magician.

The Father of Medicine. Aretæus of Cappadocia (2nd century A.D.) is sometimes so called, and especially HIPPOCRATES of Cos (c. 460-c. 377 B.C.).

Medicine Ball. A large, leather-covered, heavy ball tossed from one person to another as a form of exercise.

Medicine lodge. A tent or other form of structure used by North American Indians for ceremonial purposes.

Medicinal days. In ancient practice the 6th, 8th, 10th, 12th, 16th, 18th, etc., of a disease; so called because according to HIPPOCRATES no CRISIS occurs on these days and medicine may be safely administered.

Medicinal-finger. Also the leech-finger or leechman. The finger next to the little finger, the RING-finger; so called in mediæval times because of the notion that it contained a vein that led direct to the HEART.

Medina. The second holy city of the Mohammedans, called Yathrib before the Prophet fled thither from MECCA, but afterwards Medina-al-Nabi (the city of the prophet). See HEGIRA.

Mediterranean. The midland sea; the sea in the middle of the (Roman) earth (Lat. medius, middle; terra, land).

The Key of the Mediterranean. The Rock of GIBRALTAR.

Lighthouse of the Mediterranean. See under LIGHT.

Medmenham, Monks of. See HELL-FIRE CLUB.

Medusa. In classical mythology, the chief of the GORGONS. Legend says that she was a beautiful maiden, specially famous for her hair, but she violated the temple of MINERVA who thereupon transformed her hair into serpents and made her face so terrible that all who looked on it were turned to stone. PERSEUS, protected by the shield lent by Minerva (wherein he looked only on the Medusa's reflection), struck off the monster's head and so rescued ANDROMEDA. Medusa was the mother by NEPTUNE of Chrysaor and PEGASUS.

Meerscham (mēr' shawm) (Ger., sea-froth). This mineral (used for making tobacco-pipes), from having been found on the seashore in rounded white lumps, was popularly supposed to be sea-froth petrified. It is a compound of silica, magnesia, lime, water and carbonic acid. When first dug it lathers like soap, and is used as soap by the Tartars.

Meg. Formerly slang for a GUINEA, and more recently for a halfpenny.

No, no; Meggs are Guineas; Smelts are half-guineas.

SHADWELL: Squire of Alsatia, I, i (1688).

Long Meg, etc. See under LONG.

Mons Meg. A great 15th-century piece of ordnance in Edinburgh Castle, made at Mons in Flanders and much esteemed by the Scots. It was taken to London about 1757 and restored to Edinburgh in 1829. (Gr. megas, great.)

Roaring Meg. Formerly any large gun that made a great noise when fired was so called, as MONS MEG herself. Burton says: "Music is a roaring Meg against melancholy" (Gr. megas, great).

Drowning the noise of their consciences . . . by ringing their greatest Bells, . . . discharging their roaring-megs.

TRAPP: Comment on Job (1656).

Megarians. The inhabitants of Megara and its territory, Megaris, Greece, were proverbial for their stupidity; hence the proverb "Wise as a Megarian", i.e. not wise at all; yet see below. Cp. ABDERA.

Megarian School. A philosophical school of the 4th century B.C. founded by EUCLID, a native of Megara, and disciple of SOCRATES. It combined the ethical doctrines of SOCRATES with the METAPHYSICS of the ELEATICS.

Megrims (mē' grimz). A corruption of the Gr. hemi-crania (half the skull), through the Fr. migraine. A neuralgic affection generally confined to one brow or to one side of the forehead; whims, fancies.

Meinie, or Meiny (mi' ni). A company of attendants; a household (from O.Fr. meyné, mesnie, from Lat. mansio, a house). Our word menial has much the same derivation and significance.

They summon'd up their meiny, straight took horse.

SHAKESPEARE: King Lear, II, iv.

Mein Kampf (min kämf) (Ger., My Struggle). The name adopted by Adolf Hitler (1889-1945) for the book embodying his political and racial theories and misreadings of history, which in due course became the Nazi "Bible". The first part was written when he was in prison after the abortive "Beer Hall Putsch" of 1923. It was published in two parts (1925 and 1927). Cp. HITLERISM; MUNICH; NAZI.

Melosis (mi ð sis). This word, coming from the Greek and meaning "lessening", denotes a figure of speech by which an impression is deliberately given that a thing is of less size or importance than it actually is. It is also used of LITOTES.

Meistersingers. Burgher poets of Germany, who, in the 14th to 16th centuries, attempted to revive the national minstrelsy of the MINNESINGERS, which had fallen into decay. Hans Sachs, the cobbler (1494-1576), was the most celebrated. Wagner has an opera Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg (1868) in which he satirized his critics.

Melampod. Black hellebore; so called from Melampus, a famous soothsayer and physician of Greek legend, who with it cured the daughters of Prætus of their melancholy (VIRGIL: Georgics, iii, 550).

My seely sheep, like well below,
They need not melampode;
For they been hale enough I row,
And liken their abode.

SPENSER: Shepherd's Calendar (July).

Melancholy (Gr. melas chole). Lowness of spirits, supposed at one time to arise from a superfluity of black BILE.

Hence loathe Melancholy
Of Cerberus, and blackest midnight born.
MILTON: L'Allegro.

Melancholy Jacques. So Jean-Jacques Rousseau (1712-1778) was called for his morbid sensibilities and unhappy spirit. The expression is from SHAKESPEARE'S As You Like It.

Melanchthon is the Greek for Schwarzerde (black earth), the real name of the 16th-century German reformer. Similarly Æcolampadius is the Greek version of the German name Hauschein, and Desiderius Erasmus is one Latin and one Greek rendering of the name Gheraerd Gheraerd.

Melba. Melba toast, narrow slices of thin toast.

Peach, or Pêche Melba, a confection of peach on vanilla ice-cream, covered with raspberry purée.

These take their name from Dame Nellie Melba (1861-1931), the colourful Australian operatic soprano.

Meleager (mel ē ā' ger). A hero of Greek legend, son of Æneus of Calydon and Althæa, distinguished for throwing the javelin, for slaying the Calydonian BOAR, and as one of the ARGONAUTS. See ALTHÆA'S BRAND.

Melibœan Dye. A rich purple. Melibœa, in Thessaly, was famous for the ostrum, a fish used in dyeing purple.

A military vest of purple flowered,
Livelier than Melibœan.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, XI, 241.

Melicertes (mel i sēr' tēz). Son of Ino, a sea deity of Greek legend. Athamas imagined his wife Ino to be a lioness, and her two sons to be lion's cubs. In his frenzy he slew one of the boys and drove Melicertes and his mother into the sea. See LEUCOTHEA.

Mélisande. See MELUSINA.

Mell Supper. Harvest supper; in SCOTLAND and the northern counties the last sheaf of corn cut is called the mell, and when the harvest is borne a woman carries a mell-doll, i.e. a straw image dressed up like a young girl, on top of a pole among the reapers. See also HARVEST HOME.

Mellifluous Doctor. St. BERNARD of Clairvaux (1091-1153), the Oracle of the Church, whose writings were called a "river of Paradise".

Melodrama (Gr. melos, a song). Properly (and in the early 19th century) a drama in which song and music were introduced, an OPERA. These pieces were usually of a sensational character and the musical parts were gradually dropped. The word now denotes a lurid, sensational and highly emotional play with a happy ending in which the villain gets all he richly deserves. See RED BARN.

Melon. The Mohammedans say that the eating of a melon produces a thousand good works. See also ELIJAH'S MELONS.

Melpomene (mel pom'e ni). The muse of TRAGEDY.

Up then, Melpomene, thou mournfullest Muse of nine,

Such cause of mourning never hadst afore.

SPENSER: Shepherd's Calendar (November).

Melusina, or Mélisande. The most famous of all the fées of French romance, looked upon by the houses of Lusignan, Rohan, Luxembourg, and Sassenay as their ancestor and founder. Having enclosed her father in a high mountain for offending her mother, she was condemned to become every Saturday a serpent from her waist downward. She married Raymond, count of Lusignan, and made her husband vow never to visit her on a Saturday; but the count hid himself on one of the forbidden days, and saw his wife's transformation. Melusina was now obliged to quit her husband, and was destined to wander about as a spectre till the day of doom, though some say that the count immured her in the dungeon of his castle.

A sudden scream is called un cri de Mélusine, in allusion to the scream of despair uttered by Melusina when she was discovered by her husband; and in Poitou certain gingerbread cakes bearing the impress of a beautiful woman "bien coiffée", with a serpent's tail, made by confectioners for the MAY fair in the neighbourhood of Lusignan, are still called Mélines.

Memento mori (Lat., remember you must die). An emblem of mortality, such as a skull; something to put us in mind of the shortness and uncertainty of life.

I make as good use of it [Bardolph's face] as many a man doth of a death's head or a memento mori.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, III, iii.

Memnon. The Oriental or Ethiopian prince who, in the TROJAN WAR, went to the assistance of his uncle PRIAM and was slain by ACHILLES. His mother Eos (the Dawn) was inconsolable for his death, and wept for him every morning. The Greeks called the statue of Amenophis III at Thebes that of Memnon. When first struck by the rays of the rising sun it is said to have produced a sound like the snapping asunder of a cord. Poetically, when Eos kissed her son at daybreak, the hero acknowledged the salutation with a musical murmur.

Memory. The Bard of Memory. Samuel Rogers (1763-1855), the banker-poet; author of The Pleasures of Memory (1792). See MÆCENAS.

Memory Woodfall. William Woodfall (1746-1803), brother of the Woodfall who controlled the Public Advertiser in which the Letters of JUNIUS appeared. He established The Diary (1789), the first journal to report parliamentary proceedings the morning after their occurrence. He would attend a debate, and, without notes, report it accurately. See also HAN-SARD.

The ever memorable. John Hales of Eton (1584-1656), scholar and Arminian divine.

Memorial Day, 30 May, also known as Decoration Day, observed in most states of the U.S.A. as a holiday to honour those killed in war; originally to commemorate those who fell in the CIVIL WAR. In Virginia it is observed as Confederate Memorial Day. In Louisiana and Tennessee Confederate Memorial Day is 3 June, the birthday of Jefferson Davis; in Alabama, Florida, Georgia and Mississippi it is 26 April; and in the Carolinas, 10 May.

Menalcas. Any shepherd or rustic. The name figures in VIRGIL'S Eclogues and the Idylls of Theocritus.

Mencius. See MENG-TSE.

Mendelism. The theory of heredity propounded by Gregor Johann Mendel (1822-1884), the Austrian scientist and Abbot of Brunn, showing that the characteristics of the parents of cross-bred offspring reappear in certain proportions in successive generations according to definite laws. Mendel's Law was promulgated in 1865 through experiments with peas. Cp. MICHURINISM.

Mendicant Orders

Mendicant Orders, or Begging Friars.

The orders of the FRANCISCANS (Grey Friars), DOMINICANS (Black Friars), AUGUSTINIANS (Austin Friars), CARMELITES (White Friars), Servites, and other lesser orders.

Menechmians. Persons exactly like each other; so called from the Menæchmi of Plautus, the basis of SHAKESPEARE'S Comedy of Errors, in which not only the two Dromios are exactly alike but Antipholus of Ephesus is the facsimile of his brother, Antipholus of Syracuse.

Menelaus (men a lā' ūs), son of Atreus, brother of AGAMEMNON, and husband of HELEN, whose desertion of him brought about the TROJAN WAR. He was the king of Sparta or Lacedæmon.

Menevia. A form of the old name, Myryw, of St. David's, Pembrokeshire. Its present name is from Dewi, or DAVID.

The sons of Liethali obtained the country of the Dimetæ, where is a city called Menavia.

NENNIVS: Historia Britonum.

Meng-tse (d. 290 B.C.). The Chinese philosopher who ranks next to Confucius. After his death, his teachings were gathered by his disciples to form the Book of Meng-tse, or the Mencius, the fourth of the sacred books of China. Confucius, or Kung-fu-tse, wrote the other three; viz., Ta-heo (School of Adults), Chong-yong (The Golden Mean), and Lun-yu (The Book of Maxims).

Mother of Meng. A Chinese expression, meaning, "an admirable teacher". Meng's father died soon after the birth of the sage and he was brought up by his mother—the pattern of all mothers to the Chinese.

Menippus, the CYNIC, was born at Gadara, Syria, in the 3rd century B.C. He was called by Lucian the greatest snarler and snapper of all the dogs (cynics).

Varro wrote the Satyra Menippeæ, and, in imitation, a French political Satyre Menippée was published in 1593. It was the work of Leroy, Gillot, Passerat, Rapin, Chrestien, Pithou, and Durant, and was directed against the CATHOLIC LEAGUE.

Mennonites. Followers of Simon Menno (1492–1561), a parish priest of Friesland, who joined the ANABAPTISTS in 1536. They still exist in Holland, Germany, and America and some other places. They reject church organization, infant baptism, and usually military service and the holding of public office.

Mensheviks. A Russian word for a minority party. The name was applied to the moderate Russian social democrats who opposed the BOLSHEVIKS in the Russian Revolution of 1917.

Menthu. See BAKHA.

Mention in Dispatches. A reference by name to an officer in British military dispatches commending his conduct in action. An officer so mentioned is entitled to wear a small bronze oak leaf on the left breast or upon the medal ribbon for that particular campaign.

Mentor. A guide, a wise and faithful counsellor; so called from Mentor, a friend of ULYSSES, whose form MINERVA assumed when she accompanied TELE-MACHUS in his search for his father.

Menu. See MANU.

Meo periculo (Lat., at my peril). On my responsibility; at my own risk.

Mephistopheles. A manufactured name (possibly from three Greek words meaning "not loving the light") of a DEVIL or familiar spirit which first appeared in the late mediæval FAUST legend; he is well known as the sneering, jeering, leering tempter in Goethe's Faust.

Mercantilism. A term embracing a wide range of policies at different times in various countries and first popularized by Adam Smith's attack on Britain's "Mercantile System" in his The Wealth of Nations (1776). Mercantilism held sway in Britain between the mid-16th and the mid-18th centuries and was bound up with ideas of state power and security. National self-sufficiency, a favourable balance of trade which would bring an influx of the precious metals, and protection, were all basic to it, and colonial trade was primarily regulated in the interest of the mother country. Adam Smith taught that labour, not trade, was the real source of wealth and aimed to replace mercantilism by FREE TRADE and LAISSEZ-FAIRE.

Mercator's Projection is a Mercator's chart or map for nautical purposes. The meridian lines are at right angles to the parallels of latitude. It is so called after its inventor Gerhard Kremer (=merchant, pedlar) (1512–1594), whose surname latinized is Mercator.

Merchant Adventurers. Local guilds of merchant adventurers were formed in the 14th century to develop English export of cloth to Europe and in 1407 a regulated company of Merchants Adventurers was formed at LONDON. It became a national organization with headquarters at Bruges, but political difficulties led to its removal at different times to other centres in the Low Countries and Germany. In the 16th century the company successfully rivalled the HANSE and it was not finally dissolved until 1808.

Mercia. One of the ancient Anglian Kingdoms of ENGLAND which first rose in importance under Penda in the first half of the 7th century; in the 8th century, under Ethelbald and Offa, it became the dominant kingdom of the HEPTARCHY, and Mercian kings were supreme south of the Humber; but in 829 it was temporarily incorporated with WESSEX under Egbert.

It was subjected to Danish attacks from 855. The Danes settled the eastern part and the remainder came under the control of Wessex by the early 10th century. The earldom of Wessex, created by Cnut (1017-1037), came to an end in 1070. The name is from O.E. merce, referring to the MARCH or frontier against the Britons (Welsh); Mercia occupied the land between the Humber and THAMES, WALES and East Anglia.

Mercury. The Roman counterpart of the Greek HERMES, son of MAIA and JUPITER, to whom he acted as messenger. He was the god of science and commerce, the patron of travellers and also of rogues, vagabonds and thieves. Hence, the name of the god is used to denote both a messenger and a thief.

My father named me Autolycus; who being, as I am, littered under Mercury, was like a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles.

SHAKESPEARE: The Winter's Tale, IV, iii.

Mercury is represented as a young man with winged hat and winged sandals (talaria), bearing the CADUCEUS, and sometimes a purse.

Posts with a marble head of Mercury used to be erected where two or more roads met, to point out the way (Juvenal, viii, 53).

In astrology, Mercury "signifieth subtil men, ingenious, inconstant; rymers, poets, advocates, orators, phylosophers, arithmeticians, and busie fellowes", and the alchemists credited it with great powers and used it for many purposes. See Ben Jonson's masque, Mercury Vindicated. See QUICKSILVER.

Mercury fig (Lat. Ficus ad Mercurium). The Romans devoted the first fig gathered off a fig-tree to MERCURY. The proverbial saying was applied generally to all first fruits or first works.

You cannot make a Mercury of every log. PYTHAGORAS said: Non ex quovis ligno Mercurius fit. That is, "Not every mind will answer equally well to be trained into a scholar." The proper wood for a statue of Mercury was box—vel quod hominis pultorem præ se ferat, vel quod materies sit omnium maxime æterna (Erasmus).

Mercurial. Light-hearted, gay, volatile; such were supposed by the astrologers to be born under the planet Mercury.

Mercurial finger. The little finger, which, if pointed, denotes eloquence; if square, sound judgment.

The thumb in Chiromancy, we give Venus,
The forefinger to Jove, the midst to Saturn,
The ring to Sol, the least to Mercury.

BEN JONSON: Alchemist, I, i.

Mercy. The seven corporal works of mercy are: (1) To tend the sick; (2) To feed the hungry; (3) To give drink to the thirsty; (4) To clothe the naked; (5) To harbour the stranger; (6) To minister to prisoners; (7) To bury the dead. See Matt. xxv, 35-45.

The seven spiritual works of mercy are: (1) To convert the sinner; (2) To instruct the ignorant; (3) To counsel those in doubt; (4) To comfort those in sorrow; (5) To bear wrongs patiently; (6) To forgive injuries; (7) To pray for the living and the dead.

The Merciless, or Unmerciful Parliament. (3 February to 3 June 1388). The PARLIAMENT in which the Lords Appellant secured the condemnation of Richard II's friends. Four knights of the King's chamber were executed and some of his supporters were exiled to Ireland.

Meredith. We're in, Meredith. A popular catch phrase derived from the very successful Fred Karno sketch, The Bailiff, produced in 1907. It depicted the stratagems of a bailiff and his assistant Meredith attempting to enter a house for purposes of distraint. The phrase was used by the bailiff each time he thought he was on the verge of success.

Meridian. Sometimes applied, especially in SCOTLAND, to a noonday dram of spirits.

"... get him over to John's coffee-house, man—gie him his meridian—keep him there, drunk or sober, till the hearing is ower."

SCOTT: Redgauntlet, ch. i.

Merit, Order of. A British order for distinguished achievement in all callings founded by Edward VII in 1902, with two classes, civil and military. The Order is limited to 24 men and women and confers no precedence: it is designated by the letters O.M., following the first class of the Order of the BATH and precedes all letters designating membership of other Orders. The badge is a red and blue CROSS patté, with a blue medallion in the centre surrounded by a LAUREL wreath, and bears the words "For Merit". The ribbon is blue and crimson. Crossed swords are added to the badge for military members.

Merlin

Merlin. The historical Merlin was a Welsh or British BARD, born towards the close of the 5th century, to whom a number of poems have been very doubtfully attributed. He is said to have become a bard of King ARTHUR and to have perished after a terrible battle about 570 between the Britons and their Romanized compatriots.

His story has been mingled with that of the enchanter Merlin of the ARTHURIAN ROMANCE. This Prince of Enchanters was the son of a damsel seduced by a friend, but was baptized by Blaise, and so rescued from the power of SATAN. He became an adept in NECROMANCY, but was beguiled by the enchantress Nimue who shut him up in a rock; and later Vivien, the LADY OF THE LAKE, entangled him in a thornbush by means of spells, and there he still sleeps, though his voice may be sometimes heard.

He first appears in Nennius as the boy Ambrosius and in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Britonum and the Vita Merlini. These were developed by Robert Wace and Robert de Borron and later writers. See also Spenser's The Faerie Queene (III, iii) and Tennyson's Idylls.

Now, though a Mechanist, whose skill
Shames the degenerate grasp of modern science,
Grave Merlin (and belike the more
For practising occult and perilous lore)
Was subject to a freakish will
That sapped good thoughts, or scared them with defiance.

WORDSWORTH: The Egyptian Maid, iv.

The English Merlin. William Lilly (1602-1681), the astrologer, who published two tracts under the name of "Merlinus Anglicus" and was the most famous CHARLATAN of his day.

Mermaid. The popular stories of this fabulous marine creature, half woman and half fish, allied to the SIREN of classical mythology, probably arose from sailors' accounts of the dugong, a cetacean whose head has a rude approach to the human outline. The mother while suckling her young holds it to her breast with one flipper, as a woman holds her infant in her arm. If disturbed, she suddenly dives under water, and tosses up her fish-like tail. Cp. MERROW.

In later 16th-century plays the term is often used for a courtesan. See Mas-singer's Old Law, IV, i, and SHAKESPEARE's Comedy of Errors, III, ii, etc.

The Mermaid Tavern. The famous meeting place (in Bread Street, Cheap-side) of the wits, literary men, and men about town in the early 17th century. Among those who met there at a sort of early CLUB were Ben Jonson, Sir Walter Raleigh, Beaumont, Fletcher, John Selden, and in all probability SHAKESPEARE.

What things have we seen
Done at the Mermaid! Heard words that have been
So nimble, and so full of subtle flame,
As if that everyone from whence they came
Had meant to put his whole wit in a jest.
BEAUMONT: Lines to Ben Jonson.

Mermaid's glove. The largest of the British sponges (Halichondria palmata), so called because its branches resemble fingers.

Mermaid's purses. The horny egg cases of the ray, skate, or shark, frequently cast up by the waves on the sea-beach.

Merope (mer' ō pi). One of the PLEIADES; dimmer than the rest, because, according to Greek legend, she married SISYPHUS, a mortal. She was the mother of GLAUCUS.

Merops' Son. One who thinks he can set the world to rights, but can't. Agitators, demagogues, etc., are sons of Merops. The allusion is to PHÆTON, a reputed son of Merops (king of Ethiopia), who thought himself able to drive the car of PHŒBUS, but, in the attempt, nearly set the world on fire.

Merovingian Dynasty. The dynasty of Merovius, Merovech, or Merwig (great warrior), grandfather of Clovis, who ruled over the FRANKS in the 5th century. The dynasty rose to power under Clovis (d. 511) and gradually gave way before the MAYORS OF THE PALACE, until, in 751, the dynasty was brought to an end by Pippin the SHORT's usurpation.

Merrie England. See MERRY.

Merrow (Irish, múirúghach). A MERMAID, believed by Irish fishermen to forbode a coming storm.

It was rather annoying to Jack that, though living in a place where the merrows were as plenty as lobsters, he never could get a right view of one.
W. B. YEATS: Irish Folk Stories and Fairy Tales.

Merry. The original meaning is pleasing, delightful; hence, giving pleasure; hence, mirthful, joyous.

The old phrase Merrie England (Merry London, etc.) merely signified it was pleasant and delightful, not necessarily full of merriment; and so with the merry month of MAY.

The phrase merry men, meaning the companions at arms of a KNIGHT, or outlaw (especially of ROBIN HOOD), is really for merry MEINIE.

Merry Andrew. A buffoon, jester, or attendant on a QUACK doctor at fairs. Said by Thomas Hearne (1678-1735)—with no evidence—to derive from Andrew Boorde (c. 1490-1549), physician to Henry VIII, who to his vast learning added great eccentricity. Prior has a poem on "Merry Andrew". Cp. ANDREW.

Merry as a cricket, grig. See GRIG.

Merry begot. An old name for a BASTARD.

Merry Dancers. The NORTHERN LIGHTS, so called from their undulatory motion. The French call them chèvres dansantes (dancing goats).

Merry Greek. See GRIG.

Merry Maidens. An ancient circle of nineteen stones in St. Buryan parish, near Penzance, CORNWALL. Two pillar stones nearby, 120 ft. apart, are called the Pipers. The whole group was petrified for making sport on the SAB-BATH.

Merry Men. See MERRY.

Merry Men of May. An expanse of broken water which boils like a cauldron in the southern side of the Stroma Channel, Pentland Firth.

Merry Monarch. Charles II. Cp. OLD ROWLEY under ROWLEY.

Merry Monday. An old name for the day before SHROVE TUESDAY.

Merrythought. The furcula or wishing-bone in the breast of a fowl; sometimes pulled asunder by two persons, the one holding the larger portion is supposed to have his wish.

'Tis merry in hall, when beards wag all. (Shakespeare: Henry IV, Pt. II, V, iii). It is a sure sign of mirth when the beards of the guests shake with laughter.

To make merry. To be jovial, festive; to make merry over, to treat with amusement, to be joyful; to ridicule, to make fun of.

Merse. The south-easterly part of Berkshire was so called because it was the second half of the title to the Earl of Wemyss and March.

Merton College. The oldest Oxford college, founded in 1264 by Walter de Merton, bishop of Rochester and LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR (see under CHANCELLOR). He was, through this foundation, the originator of the collegiate system developed at Oxford and Cambridge. It was intended for training SECULAR CLERGY.

Meru. The "OLYMPUS" of the Hindus; a fabulous mountain in the centre of the world, 80,000 leagues high, the abode of VISHNU, and a perfect PARADISE.

Merveilleuse (mâr vâ yêrs) (Fr., marvellous). The sword of Doon of Mayence. It was so sharp that when placed edge downwards it would cut through a slab of wood without the use of force.

The term is also applied to the dress worn by the fops and ladies of the DIRECTORY period in France, who were noted for their extravagance and aping of classical Greek modes.

Mesa. In Spain and Spanish America, a term for a table-land (Lat. mensa, a table).

Mesmerism. So called from Friedrich Anton Mesmer (1734-1815), an Austrian physician who introduced his theory of "animal magnetism" at PARIS in 1778. It was the forerunner of HYPNOTISM which is increasingly studied for therapeutic purposes by the medical and psychiatric professions. Mesmerism is commonly used as a synonym for hypnotism.

Mesolithic Age (Gr. mesos, middle; lithos, stone). The Middle Stone Age in Europe, between the PALÆOLITHIC and NEOLITHIC periods.

Mesopotamia (Gr., the land between the rivers, i.e. the Euphrates and the Tigris), one of the cradles of civilization. It is now called Iraq.

The true "Mesopotamia" ring. Something high-sounding and pleasing, but wholly past comprehension. The allusion is to the story of the old woman who told her pastor that she "found great support in that blessed word Mesopotamia".

Mess. The usual meaning today is a dirty, untidy state of things, a muddle, a difficulty (to get into a mess); but the word originally signified a portion of food (Lat. missum, mittere, to send; cp. Fr. meats, viands, Ital. messa, a course of a meal); thence it came to mean mixed food, especially for an animal, and so a confusion, medley, jumble.

Another meaning was a small group of persons (usually four) who sat together at banquets and were served from the same dishes. This gave rise to army and navy mess, the place where meals are served and eaten, and to the Elizabethans using it in place of "four" or "a group of four". Thus, SHAKESPEARE says (Love's Labour's Lost, IV, iii), "You three fools lack'd me fool to make up the mess."

Messalina

In the INNS OF COURT, London, the members still dine in groups of four.

Mess traps. In the Royal Navy, the various utensils which make up the equipment of a mess, galley, or pantry.

Messalina. Wife of the Emperor Claudius of ROME, executed by order of her husband in A.D. 48. Her name has become a byword for lasciviousness and incontinency. Catherine II of Russia (1729-1796) has been called The Modern Messalina.

Messiah (Heb. mashiach, one anointed). It is the title of the expected leader of the Jews who shall deliver the nation from its enemies and reign in permanent triumph and peace. Equivalent to the Greek word Christ, it is applied by Christians to Jesus. Messiah (incorrectly The Messiah) is the title of an oratorio by Handel, first produced in Dublin in 1742.

Mestizo (mis ti sō). A Spanish-American term of 16th-century origin for a half-breed, ultimately from Lat. mixtus (past participle of miscere, to mix). At first it denoted the offspring of a Spaniard and an American Indian; also later of a NEGRO.

Metals. Metals used to be divided into two classes, Noble and Base. The Noble, or Perfect metals were GOLD, SILVER and platinum, because they were not acted on by air (or oxygen) at any temperature. The Base, or Imperfect metals are subject to oxidation in air and change their character. The only metals used in HERALDRY are or (gold) and argent (silver).

The seven metals in alchemy:

- Gold, APOLLO or the sun.
- Silver, DIANA or the moon.
- Quicksilver, MERCURY.
- Copper, VENUS.
- Iron, MARS.
- Tin, JUPITER.
- Lead, SATURN.

Metamorphic Rocks (Gr. meta, change; morphe, form). Rocks which have changed as a result of subjection to intense heat or pressure; such as marble (formed from chalk and limestone), slate (from clay and shale), gneiss (from granite).

Metaphor (Gr., transference). A figure of speech in which a name or descriptive term is applied to an object, etc., to which it is not literally applicable as, "The ship spread its wings to the breeze."

A mixed metaphor is a figure of speech in which two or more inconsistent metaphors are combined, as "It is likely that the Government will bury its head in the sand and drive a bulldozer through the educational system."

Metaphysics (Gr., after-physics), so called because the name was posthumously given to ARISTOTLE'S "First Philosophy" which he wrote after his Physics. The science of metaphysics is that branch of speculation which deals with the first principles of existence, such as, being, substance, essence, the infinite, ultimate reality, etc.; the philosophy of being and knowing; the philosophy which establishes truth of existence by abstract reason. At various times the whole range of philosophical inquiry has been classed as metaphysics and the contrast between philosophy and science is comparatively modern.

Metaphysical Poets. A term used to describe certain poets of the 17th century, notably John Donne, George Herbert, Richard Crashaw, Henry Vaughan, and Andrew Marvell. They are characterized by subtlety of thought, expressed frequently in compressed though sometimes far-fetched images, and the use of complex versification. They mostly show strong religious feeling. The word metaphysical in relation to poetry was first used by William Drummond of Hawthornden about 1630, then applied to this particular group of poets by Dryden in 1693, and used derogatively of them by Dr. Johnson in 1781.

Metathesis (met á thē' sis). A Greek word meaning "transposition". A change in the relative order between sounds or letters in a word, as O.E. bridd becoming bird and thrid becoming third. Cp. SPOONERISM.

Methodists. A name given (1729) to the members of Charles Wesley's HOLY CLUB at Oxford, from the methodical way in which they observed their principles. They were originally members of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND and the separatist Methodist Church was not established until after John Wesley's death (1791). The movement was itself soon faced with secessions, the first being the Methodist New Connexion (1797), followed by the Independent Methodists (1805), Primitive Methodists (1810), the Bible Christians (1815), the Wesleyan Methodist Association (1835), and the Wesleyan Reformers (1849). Reunion began in 1857 with the formation of the United Methodist Free Church and was completed with the formation of the Methodist Church of Great Britain in 1932. Methodism was introduced into the U.S.A. in the 1760s and grew steadily in importance.

The name was at one time applied to the JESUITS, because they were the first to give systematic representations of the method of polemics.

Since 1965 the Church of England and the Methodist Church have entered into negotiations for reconciliation.

Methuselah (me' thū zē lā). Old as Methuselah. Very old indeed, almost incredibly old. He is the oldest man mentioned in the BIBLE, where we are told (Gen. v, 27) that he died at the age of 969.

Metonic Cycle, The. A cycle of nineteen years at the end of which period the new moons fall on the same days of the year; so called because discovered by the Greek astronomer, Meton, 433 B.C. See CALLIPIC PERIOD.

Metonymy (me ton' i mi). The use of one thing for another related to it, as "the Bench" for the magistrates or judges sitting in court, "a silk" for a QUEEN'S COUNSEL, "the bottle" for alcoholic liquor. The word is Greek, meaning "a change of name".

Metropolitan. A BISHOP who controls a province and its SUFFRAGANS. The two metropolitans of England are the archbishops of Canterbury and York, and in Ireland the archbishops of Armagh and Dublin. The Archbishop of Canterbury is metropolitanus et primus totius Angliæ, and the Archbishop of York primus et metropolitanus Angliæ. In the early Church the bishop of the civil metropolis (mother city) was usually given rights over the other bishops (suffragans) of the province. In the GREEK CHURCH a metropolitan ranks next below a PATRIARCH and next above an archbishop.

Meum and tuum (mē' ūm, tu' ūm) (Lat.). Mine and thine: that which belongs to me and that which is another's. If a man is said not to know the difference between meum and tuum, it is another way of saying he is a thief.

Meum est propositum in taberna mori. A famous drinking song usually accredited to Walter Map (f. 1200), but by the anonymous German "Archpoet" (f. 1160).

Meum est propositum in taberna mori;

Ubi vinum proximum morientis ori

Tunc cantabit lætius angelorum chori;

Deus sit propitius huic potatori (etc.).

"It is my intention to die in a tavern. May wine be placed to my dying lips, that when the choirs of angels shall come they may say, God be merciful to this drinker".

Mews. Stables, but properly a cage for hawks when moulting (O.Fr. mue; Lat. mutare, to change). The word acquired its new meaning because the royal stables built in the 17th century occupied the site of the King's Mews where formerly the king's hawks were kept. It is now the site of the National Gallery in Trafalgar Square. With the development of fashionable LONDON in the 19th century, rows of stabling, with accommodation above for the coachman, were built and called Mews. Since the 1920s these have been steadily converted into garages with flats or maisonettes.

Mexitl, or Mextli. The principal god of the ancient Mexicans (hence the name of their country), to whom hundreds of human beings were offered annually as sacrifices. More usually called Huitzilopochtli (Humming-bird of the South, or He of the South), he was the god of war and storms and was born fully armed.

Mezzotint, or Mezzo tinto (Ital., medium tint). A process of engraving in which a copper plate is uniformly roughened so as to print a deep black, lights and half-lights being then produced by scraping away the burr; also a print from this, which is usually a good imitation of an indian-ink drawing.

Micah Rood's Apples. Apples with a spot of red in the heart. The story is that Micah Rood was a prosperous farmer at Franklin, Pennsylvania. In 1693 a pedlar with jewellery called at his house, and next day was found murdered under an apple-tree in Rood's orchard. The crime was never brought home to the farmer, but next autumn all the apples of the fatal tree bore inside a red blood-spot, called "Micah Rood's Curse", and the farmer died soon afterwards.

Micawber. An incurable optimist; from Dickens's Mr. Wilkins Micawber (David Copperfield), a great speechifier and letter-writer, and projector of BUBBLE SCHEMES sure to lead to fortune, but always ending in grief. Notwithstanding his ill success, he never despaired, but felt certain that something would "turn up" to make his fortune. Having failed in every adventure in the old country, he emigrated to Australia, where he became a magistrate.

Michael, St. The ARCHANGEL. The great prince of all the ANGELS and leader of the celestial armies.

Go, Michael, of celestial armies prince,

And thou, in military prowess next,

Gabriel; lead forth to battle these my sons

Invincible; lead forth my armed saints

By thousands and by millions ranged for fight.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, VI, 44.

His day (St. Michael and All Angels) is 29 September (see MICHAELMAS DAY). He appears in the BIBLE in Dan. x, 13, and xii, 1; Jude, verse 9; and Rev. xii, 7-9, where he and his angels fight the

Michael Angelo

DRAGON. His cult was popular in the MIDDLE AGES and he was also looked on as the presiding spirit of the planet MERCURY, and bringer to man of the gift of prudence.

In art St. Michael is depicted as a beautiful young man with severe countenance, winged, and clad in either white or armour, bearing a lance and shield, with which he combats a dragon. In the final judgment he is represented with scales, in which he weighs the souls of the risen dead.

St. Michael's Chair. An old beacon turret at the top of the chapel tower at St. Michael's Mount, Cornwall. It is said that whichever of a newly-married couple first sits there will gain marital supremacy. There is also a rock on the island called St. Michael's Chair.

The Order of St. Michael and St. George. A British order of knighthood instituted in 1818 to honour natives of the Ionian Isles and Malta. In 1864 the Ionian Islands were restored to Greece and the order was remodelled and extended in 1868, 1879, and subsequently, to British subjects serving abroad or in British overseas possessions, but is now largely awarded to members of the Diplomatic and Foreign service and for administrative service in the COMMONWEALTH.

It is now limited to 100 Knights Commanders, 355 Knights, and 1,435 Companions.

Michael Angelo, or Michelangelo. The celebrated Italian painter (1475-1564). His full name was Michelangelo Buonarroti.

Michel-Ange des Bamboches. Pieter van Laar, or Laer (c. 1592-c. 1642), Dutch painter, nicknamed Il Bamboccio, in allusion to his pictures of common life. See BAMBOCCIADES.

The Michelangelo of battle-scenes. Michelangelo Cerquozzi (1602-1660), a native of ROME, famous for his battle-scenes and shipwrecks.

Michelangelo of Music. Christoph Willibald von Gluck (1714-1787), the German composer.

Michelangelo of Sculptors. Pierre Puget (1620-1694), the French sculptor. Also René Slodtz (1705-1764).

Michaelmas Day. 29 September, the Festival of St. MICHAEL and All Angels, one of the QUARTER-DAYS when rents are due and the day when magistrates are chosen.

The custom of eating goose at Michaelmas (see also St. MARTIN'S GOOSE) is very old and is probably due to geese being plentiful and in good condition at this season. We are told that tenants formerly presented their landlords with one to keep in their good graces. The popular story is that Queen Elizabeth I, on her way to Tilbury Fort on 29 September 1588, dined with Sir Neville Umfreyville, and partook of geese, afterwards calling for a bumper of Burgundy, and giving as a toast "Death to the Spanish Armada!" Scarcely had she spoken when a messenger announced the destruction of the fleet by a storm. The Queen demanded a second bumper, and said, "Henceforth shall a goose commemorate this great victory." The tale is marred by the fact that the Armada was dispersed by winds in July and the thanksgiving sermon for victory was preached at St. Paul's on 20 August.

George Gascoigne, the poet, who died in 1577, refers to the custom of goose-eating at Michaelmas:

At Christmas a capon, at Michaelmas, a goose,
And somewhat else at New Yere's tide for feare
the lease flies loose.

Miching (M.E. michyng). Skulking, dodging. It is derived from O.Fr. muchier, mucier, to hide. It is still a common term in the West Country and Wales for "truanting". Hence to mich is to truant, and a truant is a micher.

Ham: Marry, this is miching mallecho: it means mischief.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, III, ii.

Michurinism. A genetic theory, named after the Soviet horticulturalist I. V. Michurin (1855-1935), repudiating the laws of Mendel and essentially claiming that acquired characteristics can be inherited. It is alternatively called Lysenkoism, after T. D. Lysenko, the Soviet agriculturalist, whose pamphlet Heredity and its Variability attempted to discredit orthodox genetics. Its revolutionary character was more due to Marxist wishful thinking than scientific proof, and the acceptability of such teaching to the Soviet Government. Lysenkoism replaced orthodox genetics in the U.S.S.R. in 1948 but after 1952 lost ground. Lysenko was dismissed from his key position in 1956. Cp. MENDELISM.

Mickey Finn. A draught or powder slipped into liquor to render the drinker unconscious. The term comes from a notorious figure in 19th-century Chicago. To take the mickey out of someone is to tease, and humiliate; to undermine his self-esteem.

Mickleton Jury. A corruption of mickle-tourn (magnus turnus), i.e. the jury of court LEETS which were visited at EASTER and CHRISTMAS by the county sheriffs in their tourns. In Anglo-Saxon times the Great Council of the kings was known as the mickle mote (great assembly).

Microcosm (Gr., little world). So man is called by PARACELUS. The ancients considered the world (see MACROCOSM) as a living being; the SUN and MOON being its two eyes, the earth its body, the ether its intellect, and the sky its wings. When man was looked on as the world in miniature, it was thought that the movements of the world and of man corresponded, and if one could be ascertained, the other could be easily inferred; hence arose the system of ASTROLOGY, which professed to interpret the events of a man's life by the corresponding movements, etc., of the stars.

Micronesia (Gr., small islands). The name given to the groups of small Pacific islands north of the Equator and east of the Philippines, including the Marianas, the Gilbert, the Caroline, and the Marshall Islands.

Midas (mī' dās). A legendary king of Phrygia who requested of the gods that everything that he touched might be turned to GOLD. His request was granted, but as his food became gold the moment he touched it, he prayed the gods to take their favour back. He was then ordered to bathe in the Pactolus, and the river ever after rolled over golden sands.

Another story told of him is, that when appointed to judge a musical contest between APOLLO and PAN, he gave judgment in favour of the SATYR; whereupon Apollo in contempt gave the king a pair of ass's ears. Midas hid them under his Phrygian cap; but his barber discovered them, and, not daring to mention the matter, dug a hole and relieved his mind by whispering in it "Midas has ass's ears", then covering it up again. Budæus gives a different version. He says that Midas kept spies to tell him everything that transpired throughout his kingdom, and the proverb "kings have long ears" was changed to "Midas has long ears".

A parallel of this tale is told of Portzmach, king of a part of Brittany. He had all the barbers of his kingdom put to death, lest they should announce to the public that he had the ears of a horse. An intimate friend was found willing to shave him, after swearing profound secrecy; but not able to contain himself, he confided his secret to a river bank. The reeds of this river were used for pan-pipes and hautbois, which repeated the words, "Portzmach—King Portzmach has horse's ears."

Midden. A muck-heap, a kitchen refuse heap. See KITCHEN-MIDDENS.

Better marry over the midden than over the moor. Better seek a wife among your neighbours whom you know than among strangers of whom you know nothing.

Ilka cock craws loodest on its ain midden. The Scottish form of "Every COCK crows loudest on his own dunghill."

Middle. Middle Ages. A term used by historians to denote that period of European history between the downfall of the ancient classical civilization of Greece and Rome consequent upon the barbarian invasions and the Europe of the RENAISSANCE and REFORMATION, roughly a period of 1,000 years. It has no obvious beginning or end and is usually taken to begin about the 5th century and to extend to the late 15th. It is a term of convenience, but has resulted in popular misconceptions giving the mediæval period a spurious unity and distinctness which it did not really possess. Cp. DARK AGES.

Middle Kingdom. A term denoting that period of ancient Egyptian history covered by the XIIth–XIVth Dynasties from about 2130 to 1600 B.C., and essentially the period of the XIIIth Dynasty.

In the feudal period of Chinese history, the appellation Chung Kwo, "The Middle Kingdom", denoted the royal domain or the civilized states of China proper, and was not used in connexion with the idea that China was in the middle of the world.

Middle Passage. That part of the middle Atlantic between West Africa and the West Indies, the usual route for the slave traders of former days.

Middle Temple. See TEMPLE.

Middle West. In the U.S.A., properly, the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin. It is the industrial centre of the United States and in many ways the political pivot of the country.

Middlesex. The original territory of the Middle Saxons, which seems to have included the area of the later counties of Middlesex and Hertford, between Essex and WESSEX. It became a SHIRE in the 10th century and was much reduced in area by the Local Government Act of 1888, and was finally absorbed by the Greater

Midgard

London Council, Surrey, and Hertfordshire in 1965.

Midgard. In Scandinavian mythology, the abode of the first pair, from whom sprang the human race. It was midway between NIFLHEIM and MUSPELHEIM, formed from the flesh and blood of YMIR and joined to ASGARD by the rainbow bridge BIFROST. Cp. UTGARD.

Mid-Lent Sunday. The fourth Sunday in LENT. It is called dominica refectiois (Refreshment Sunday) because the first lesson is the banquet given by Joseph to his brethren, and the GOSPEL of the day is the miraculous feeding of the five thousand. It is the day on which SIMNEL CAKES are eaten and it is also called MOTHERING SUNDAY.

Midnight Oil. Late hours.

Burning the midnight oil. Sitting up late, especially when engaged on literary work and study.

Smells of the midnight oil. See IT SMELLS OF THE LAMP under LAMP.

Midrash. Rabbinical commentary on, or exposition of, the Old Testament writings, from the Heb. root meaning "to teach", "to investigate". See HAGGADAH. Midrashim of the 2nd century are the Sifra on Leviticus, the Sifra on Numbers and Deuteronomy, and the Mekilta on Exodus. Cp. MISHNAH.

Midsummer. The week or so round about the summer SOLSTICE (21 June). Midsummer Day is 24 June, St. JOHN THE BAPTIST'S Day, and one of the QUARTER-DAYS.

Midsummer ale. Festivities which used to take place in rural districts at this season. Here ale has the same extended meaning as in CHURCH-ALE.

Midsummer madness. Olivia says to Malvolio in SHAKESPEARE'S Twelfth Night (III, iv), "Why, this is very midsummer madness." The reference is to the rabies of dogs, which was supposed to be brought on by midsummer heat. People who were inclined to be mad used to be said to have but a mile to midsummer.

Midsummer men. Orpine or Live-long, a plant of the Sedum tribe; so called because it used to be set in pots or shells on midsummer eve, and hung up in the house to tell damsels whether their sweethearts were true or not. If the leaves bent to the right, it was a sign of fidelity; if to the left, the "true-love's heart was cold and faithless".

Midsummer moon. "Tis midsummer moon with you"; you are stark mad. Madness was supposed to be affected by the MOON, and to be aggravated by summer heat; so it naturally follows that the full moon at midsummer is the time when madness would be most pronounced.

What's this, Midsummer moon?
Is all the world gone a-madding?

DRYDEN: Amphitryon, IV, i.

Midwife (O.E. mid, with; wif, woman). The nurse who is with the mother in her labour.

Midwife of men's thoughts. So SOCRATES termed himself, and, as Grote observed, "No man ever struck out of others so many sparks to get light to original thought." Out of his intellectual school sprang PLATO and the DIALECTIC school; EUCLID and the MEGARIAN; Aristippus and the Cyrenaic; Antisthenes and the CYNIC.

Mihrab. See KIBLAH.

Mikado (mik á' dō) (Jap. mi, exalted; kado, gate or door). The title used by foreigners for the Emperor of Japan. The Japanese title is Tenno. Cp. SHOGUN. One of Gilbert and Sullivan's most popular comic operas is The Mikado (1885).

Mike. A short name for the microphone. See also BIDDY; DICKY.

To mike, or to do a mike. To idle away one's time, pretending to be waiting for a job or avoiding one. The word may be from miche, to skulk. See MICHING.

Milan. The English form of Milano, the capital city of Lombardy, in Latin Mediolanum, "in the middle of the plain" (of Lombardy). In the MIDDLE AGES it was famous for its steel, used for making swords, chain armour, etc. See MILLINER.

The Edict of Milan. Proclaimed by Constantine after the conquest of Italy (313), to secure the Christians the restitution of their civil and religious rights.

The Milan Decrees. Decrees issued by NAPOLEON at Milan, 23 November and 17 December 1807. The second decree declared that all neutral shipping obeying the British Orders in Council (designed to prevent neutrals from trading with Napoleonic Europe) were lawful prizes if taken by France or her allies.

Milanion. See ATALANTA'S RACE.

Mile. A measure of length; in the British Commonwealth and the United States, 1,760 yd.; so called from Lat. mille, a thousand, the Roman lineal measure being 1,000 paces, or about 1680 yd. The old Irish and Scottish miles were a good deal longer than the standard English, that in Ireland (still in use in country parts) being 2,240 yd., the Scottish 1,980 yd.

The Nautical, or Geographical Mile is supposed to be one minute of a great CIRCLE of the earth; but as the earth is not a true sphere the minute is variable, so a mean length of 6,080 ft. (2,026 yd. 2 ft.) was adopted by the British Admiralty. The Geographical Mile varies slightly with different nations, so there is a further International Nautical Mile of 1,852 metres.

Milesians. Properly, the inhabitants of Miletus; but the name has been given to the ancient Irish because of the legend that two sons of Milesius, a fabulous king of Spain, conquered the country, and repopled it after exterminating the Firbolgs (the aborigines).

Milesian Fables. A Greek collection of witty but obscene short stories by Antonius Diogenes, no longer extant, and compiled by Aristides of Miletus (2nd cent. B.C.), whence the name. They were translated into Latin by Sidenna about the time of the civil wars of Marius and Sulla, and were greedily read by luxurious SYBARITES. Similar stories are still sometimes called Milesian Tales.

Milione, II (Ital., the million) or Marco Milione. The name given by the Venetians to Marco Polo and his writings. It may have been a reference to his stories of CATHAY and its wonders, millions, etc.

Military Knights of Windsor. See under KNIGHT.

Militia. A development of the fyrd in the form of a national levy for defence, organized by the Lords-Lieutenant on a county basis, and so called in the 17th century. The obligation to provide men and arms was placed on property owners and those called upon to serve were allowed to call upon substitutes. It was never properly trained and became essentially a volunteer force after 1852. It came to an end with the passing of the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act of 1907, but the name was applied to the Special Reserve in 1921 and revived by the Military Training Act of 1939.

Milk, To. Slang for to extract money out of somebody in an underhand way; also to plunder one's creditors, and (in mining) to exhaust the veins of ore after selling the mine.

To milk the cow with a spanner. To open a tin of evaporated or condensed milk with a tin-opener.

A land of milk and honey. One abounding in all good things, or of extraordinary fertility. It is figuratively used to denote the blessings of HEAVEN.

And I am come to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, . . . unto a land flowing with milk and honey.

Exod. iii, 8.

Milk and water. Insipid, without energy or character, baby-pap, feeble stuff.

Milk teeth. The first, temporary, teeth of a child.

The milk of human kindness. Sympathy, compassion.

It is too full o' th' milk of human kindness.

SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, I, v.

So that accounts for the milk in the coconut! Said when a sudden discovery of the reason for some action or state of things is made.

To cry over spilt milk. See under CRY.

Milk-run. An R.A.F. and R.A.A.F. expression of World War II for any sortie flown regularly day after day, or a sortie against an easy target on which inexperienced pilots could be used with impunity—as simple as delivering milk.

Milksop. An effeminate or babyish person; one without any backbone. The allusion is to young, helpless children, who are fed on pap.

Milky Way. See GALAXY.

Mill. To fight, or a fight. It is the same word as the mill that grinds flour (Lat. molere, to grind). Grinding was anciently performed by pulverizing with a stone or pounding with the hand. To mill is to beat with the fist, as persons used to beat corn with a stone.

To mill about is to move aimlessly in a circle, like a herd of cattle.

The mill cannot grind with water that is past. An old proverb, given in Herbert's Collection (1639). It implies that one must not miss one's opportunities and that it is no good crying over spilt milk (see under CRY).

The mills of God grind slowly. Retribution may be delayed, but it is sure to overtake the wicked. The Adagia of Erasmus puts it, Sero molunt deorum mole, and the sentiment is to be found in many authors, ancient and modern.

Though the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small;

Though with patience He stands waiting, with exactness grinds He all.

LONGFELLOW: Retribution (Poetic Aphorisms).

To go through the mill. To undergo hardship; to have been through difficulties and hardships.

Millenary Petition. An appeal to James I in 1603 from some 1,000 PURITAN clergy asking for certain changes in liturgy and worship, and for the prevention of pluralities and non-residence of clergy, etc. Their requests included the discontinuance of the sign of the cross in baptism, of the RING in marriage, and of Confirmation; also optimal use of the cap and surplice, more scope for preaching, simplification of music, etc. As a result James summoned the HAMPTON COURT CONFERENCE.

Millennium. A thousand years (Lat. mille, annus). In Rev. xx, 2, it is said that an angel bound SATAN a thousand years, and in verse 4 we are told of certain martyrs who will come to life again who "lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years". "This", says St. JOHN, "is the first resurrection"; and this is what is meant by the millennium—the period of a thousand years during which Christ will return to earth and live with His saints, and finally take them to heaven.

Millenarians, or Chiliasts (Lat. mille, Gr. chiliot, a thousand) is the name applied to early Christian sects who believed in a future MILLENNIUM. Such views were held by some post-REFORMATION sects and by some of the 17th-century Independents in England, and more recently by MORMONS, IRVINGITES, and Adventists.

Millennial Church. See SHAKERS.

Miller. A Joe Miller. A stale jest. A certain John Mottley compiled a book of facetiae in 1739, which (without permission) he entitled Joe Miller's Jest-Book, from Joseph Miller (1684–1738), a popular comedian of the day who could neither read nor write. A "Joe Miller" is applied to a stale joke implying that it is stolen from Mottley's compilation. Byron, in English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, refers to critics who "take hackney'd jokes from Miller". Cp. CHESTNUT.

Every honest miller has a thumb of gold. See under THUMB.

More water glideth by the mill than wots the miller of (SHAKESPEARE: Titus Andronicus, II, i). Many things are done in a house which the master and mistress never dream of.

To drown the miller. To put too much water into spirits, or tea. The idea is that the supply of water is so great that even the miller, who uses a water wheel, is drowned with it.

To give someone to the miller. To engage him in conversation till enough people have gathered round him to set upon the victim with stones, dirt, garbage, and all the arms which haste supplies a mob with. See MILL.

To put the miller's eye out. To make a broth or pudding so thin that even a miller's eye would be puzzled to find the flour.

Lumps of unleavened flour in bread are sometimes called miller's eyes.

Miller's thumb. A small freshwater fish four or five inches long, Cottus gobio, also called the Bullhead, from its large head.

Millerites. Followers of William Miller of Massachusetts (1782–1849), who in 1831 preached that the end of the world would come in 1843—now called SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS.

Milliner. A corruption of Milaner; so called from Milan in Italy, which at one time gave the law in Europe to all matters of taste, dress, and elegance.

Nowadays a milliner is expected to be a woman, but it was not always the case. Ben Jonson, in Every Man in his Humour, I, iii, speaks of a "milliner's wife", and the French had un modiste and une modiste.

Man-milliner. An effeminate fellow, or one who fusses over trifles.

The Morning Herald sheds tears of joy over the fashionable virtues of the rising generation, and finds that we shall make better man-milliners, better lacqueys, and better courtiers than ever.

HAZLITT:

Political Essays (On the Late War) (1814).

Millstone. Hard as the nether millstone. Unfeeling, obdurate. The lower or "nether" of the two millstones is firmly fixed and very hard; the upper stone revolved round upon it on a shaft, and the corn, running down a tube inserted in the upper stone, was ground by the motion of the upper stone upon the lower one.

The millstones of Montisci. They produce flour of themselves, whence the proverb, "Grace comes from God, but millstones from Montisci." (Boccaccio: Decameron, day viii, novel iii.)

To carry a millstone round one's neck. To be burdened with some heavy obligation, tie, etc.; to be handicapped by a dependant or companion who cannot be shaken off.

To look, or see through a millstone. To be wonderfully sharp-sighted.

Then . . . since your eies are so sharp that you can not only looke through a millstone, but cleane through the minde . . .

LYLY: Euphues, ii.

To see through a millstone as well as most means that in a complicated problem one can see as good a solution as anyone, though that may not be very adequate.

To weep millstones. Not weep at all.

Bid Glos'ter think on this, and he will weep—
Aye, millstones as he lessoned us to weep.

SHAKESPEARE: Richard III, I, iv.

Milo (mī' lō). A celebrated Greek athlete of Crotona in the late 6th century B.C. It is said that he carried through the stadium at OLYMPIA a heifer four years old, and ate the whole of it afterwards. When old, he attempted to tear in two an oak-tree, but the parts closed upon his hands, and while held fast he was devoured by wolves.

Milton. "Milton", says Dryden, in the preface to his Fables, "was the poetical son of Spenser . . . Milton had acknowledged to me that Spenser was his original."

Milton of Germany. Friedrich G. Klopstock (1724-1803), author of The Messiah (1773). Coleridge says he is "a very German Milton indeed".

Mimosa (mi mō' zā). Niebuhr says the mimosa "droops its branches whenever anyone approaches it, seeming to salute those who retire under its shade". The name reflects this notion, as the plant was thought to mimic the motions of animals, hence the "Sensitive Plant".

Mince Pies at CHRISTMAS time are said to have been emblematical of the manger in which our Saviour was laid. The paste over the "offering" was made in the form of a cratch or hay-rack. Southey speaks of—

Old bridges dangerously narrow and angles in them like the corners of an English mince-pie, for the foot-passengers to take shelter in.

Esprinella's Letters, III, 384 (1807).

Mince pies is also RHYMING SLANG for "the eyes".

To mince matters. To avoid giving offence by speaking or censuring in mild terms. More commonly used in the negative to mean blunt speaking. From the mincing of meat to make it more digestible or pleasing.

A mincing manner. A prim manner, one of affected delicacy. Similarly we speak of mincing ways.

To make mincemeat of. Utterly to demolish; to completely defeat an opponent, literally or figuratively. Minced meat is meat cut up very fine.

Mincing Lane (London). Called in the 13th century Menechinelane, Monechen-lane, etc., and in the time of Henry VIII Mynchyn Lane. The name is from O.E. mynechemn, a nun (fem. of munuc, monk), and the street is probably so called from the tenements held there by the nuns of St.

Helen's, in Bishopsgate Street. Mincing Lane is the centre of the tea trade, for which it is often used as a generic term.

Mind. A month's mind. See under MONTH.

In my mind's eye; Mind your eye. See under EYE.

Mind your own business; keep to your own affairs and don't intermeddle with those of other people; don't interfere or "POKE YOUR NOSE IN". (See under NOSE).

To be in two minds over a matter is to be in doubt.

To give a person a piece of one's mind. To express disapproval plainly and forcibly; to castigate.

To have a good mind to do something. To feel strongly inclined to do it.

To have a mind for it. To desire to possess it; to wish for it. Mind meaning desire, intention, is a common usage: "I mind to tell him what I think"; "I shortly mind to leave you", occur in SHAKESPEARE'S Henry VI, Pt. III, IV, i.

To set one's mind on. To be firmly resolved on; to greatly desire something.

Minden Boys. See MINDEN REGIMENTS under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICK-NAMES.

Minerva. The Roman goddess of wisdom and patroness of the arts and trades, fabled to have sprung, with a tremendous battle-cry, fully armed from the brain of JUPITER. She is identified with the Greek ATHENE, and was one of the three chief deities, the others being Jupiter and JUNO. She is represented as being grave and majestic, clad in a helmet and with drapery over a coat of mail, and bearing the ÆGIS on her breast. Phidias made a statue of her of ivory and gold 39 ft. high which was placed in the PARTHENON.

Invita Minerva (Lat., against the will of Minerva). Uninspired. Thus, Charles Kean acted comedy invita Minerva, his forte lying another way. Sir Philip Sidney attempted the Horatian metres in English verse invita Minerva. The phrase is from HORACE'S Ars Poetica, i, 385, Tu nihil invita dices faciesve Minerva.

The Minerva Press. A printing establishment in Leadenhall Street, London, famous in the late 18th century for its trashy, ultra-sentimental novels, characterized by complicated plots, etc.

Miniature. Originally, a rubrication or a small painting in an illuminated MS., which was done with minium or red lead. Hence the word came to express any small portrait or picture on vellum or ivory. It is in no way connected with Lat. minor or minimus.

Minims (Lat. Fratres Minimi, least of the brethren). A term of self-abasement assumed by a mendicant order founded by St. Francis of Paula in 1453. They went barefooted, and wore a coarse black woollen stuff, which they never took off, day or night. The FRANCISCANS had already adopted the title of Fratres Minores (inferior brothers). The superior of the minims is called corrector.

Minister. Literally, an inferior person, in opposition to magister, a superior. One is connected with the Lat. minus, and the other with magis. Our Lord says, "Who-soever will be great among you, let him be your minister", where the antithesis is well preserved. Gibbon has:

a multitude of cooks, and inferior ministers, employed in the service of the kitchens.
Decline and Fall, ch. xxi.

The minister of a church is one who serves the parish or congregation; and a minister of the crown is the sovereign's or state's servant.

Florimond de Remond, speaking of Albert Babinot, one of the disciples of Calvin, says, "He was student of the Institutes, read at the hall of the Equity school in Poitiers, and was called la Ministerie." Calvin, in allusion thereto, used to call him "Mr. Minister", whence not only Babinot but all the other clergy of the Calvinistic Church were called ministers.

Minnesingers. MINSTRELS. The lyric poets of 12th- to 14th-century Germany were so called, because the subject of their lyrics was Minne-sang (love-ditty). The chief Minnesingers were Heinrich von Veldeke, Heinrich von Ofterdingen, Wolfram von Eschenbach, and Walter von der Vogelweide. All of them were men of noble birth and they were succeeded by the MEISTERSINGERS.

Minoan. See MINOS.

Minorities (London). So called from the abbey of the Minoresses of the Order of St. CLARE, which stood on the site until the dissolution of the monasteries.

Minoresses. See CLARE, ORDER OF ST.

Minorites, or Minors. See FRANCISCANS.

Minos (mi' nōs). A legendary king and lawgiver of Crete, made at death supreme judge of the lower world, before whom all the dead appeared to give an account of their stewardship, and to receive the reward of their deeds. He was the husband of PASIPHÆ and the owner of the LABYRINTH constructed by DÆDALUS. From his name we have the adjective Minoan, pertaining to Crete: the Minoan period is the Cretan bronze age, roughly about 2500-1200 B.C.

Minotaur (mīn' ō tōr). A mythical monster with the head of a bull and the body of a man, fabled to have been the offspring of PASIPHÆ and a bull that was sent to her by POSEIDON. MINOS kept it in his LABYRINTH and fed it on human flesh, seven youths and seven maidens being sent as tribute from Athens every year for the purpose. THESEUS slew this monster.

Minstrel. Originally, one who had some official duty to perform (Lat. ministerialis), but quite early in the MIDDLE AGES restricted to one whose duty it was to entertain his employer with music, storytelling, juggling, etc.; hence a travelling gleeman and entertainer.

Mint. The name of the herb is from Lat. mentha (Gr. minthe), so called from Minthe, a NYMPH of the COCYTUS, and beloved by PLUTO. This nymph was metamorphosed by PROSERPINE (Pluto's wife) out of jealousy, into the herb called after her.

The Mint, a place where money is coined, gets its name from O.E. mynet, representing Lat. moneta, money.

The chief seat of the Mint was at LONDON and was situated in the TOWER of London from its erection until 1810, when it moved to new premises upon Tower Hill and was one of the earliest public buildings lighted with gas. In Henry VIII's reign and in Saxon times, there was also a Mint at Southwark which later became a refuge or asylum for debtors and vagabonds, and a place for illicit marriages. (Cp. FLEET MARRIAGES; MAYFAIR MARRIAGES.) See also TRIAL OF THE PYX under PYX.

Minute (mīn' it). A minute of time (one-sixtieth part of an hour) is so called from Med. Lat. pars minuta prima, which, in the old system of sexagesimal fractions, denoted one-sixtieth part of the unit. In the same way in geometry, etc., a minute is one-sixtieth part of a degree. Cp. SECOND.

A Minute gun. A signal of distress at sea, or a gun fired at the death of some distinguished person; so called because a minute elapses between the discharges.

Minute-men. American militiamen who, at the onset of the War of Independence, promised to take arms at a minute's notice. Hence one who is similarly vigilant and ready to take prompt action. The name has been adopted by a small, secret, ultra-right-wing American organization armed to conduct guerrilla warfare in the event of a Communist invasion. Minuteman is also the name of a U.S. intercontinental ballistic missile.

Minute (mī nūr'), from the same Latin word, denotes something very small; hence a minute (min' it) of a speech, meeting, etc., is a draft taken down in minute or small writing, to be afterwards engrossed or written larger.

Miocene (mī' ō sēn). The geological period immediately preceding the Pliocene, when the mastodon, Dinotherium, Protohippus and other creatures flourished.

Miracle plays. See MYSTERIES.

Miramolin (Commander of the Faithful). The title in the MIDDLE AGES of the Emperor of Morocco.

Mirror. Alasnam's mirror. See under ALASNAM.

Cambuscan's mirror. Sent to CAMBUSCAN by the King of Araby and Ind; it warned of the approach of ill fortune, and told if love were returned (Chaucer: Canterbury Tales, "The Squires Tale").

Lao's mirror reflected the mind and its thoughts, as an ordinary mirror reflects the outward seeming (Goldsmith: Citizen of the World, xlv).

Merlin's magic mirror, given by MERLIN to King Ryence. It informed the king of treason, secret plots, and projected invasions (Spenser: The Faerie Queene, III, ii).

Reynard's wonderful mirror. This mirror existed only in the brain of Master Fox. He told the queen lion that whoever looked in it could see what was done a mile off. The wood of the frame was not subject to decay, being made of the same block as King Crampart's magic horse (REYNARD THE FOX, ch. xii).

Vulcan's mirror showed the past, the present, and the future. Sir John Davies tells us that CUPID gave it to ANTINOUS, and Antinous gave it to PENELOPE, who saw therein "the court of Queen Elizabeth".

The Mirror for Magistrates. A large collection of poems (published 1555-1559) by William Baldwin, George Ferrers, and many others, with an "Introduction" by Thomas Sackville. It contains in metrical form biographical accounts of British historical figures and the mirror reflects the falls of the great. It was much extended in four later editions up to 1587.

The Mirror of Human Salvation. See SPECULUM HUMANE SALVATIONIS.

The Mirror of Diana. A lake in the Alban hills in the territory of ancient Aricia, in Italy, on the shores of which stood a famous temple of DIANA. The priest (called Rex) of this temple was one who had always murdered his predecessor. The Lake (Nemorensis Lacus) is over 100 ft. deep and some 3½ miles in diameter.

The Hall of Mirrors. The famous state apartments of the Palace of VERSAILLES. It was here that King William I of Prussia was acclaimed German Emperor (18 January 1871) after the defeat of France under NAPOLEON III.

Mirror writing. Writing which is reversed and which can only be read when held before a mirror. It sometimes occurs in left-handed people and those with certain derangements. The MSS. of Leonardo da Vinci were written from right to left.

Mirza (Pers., royal prince). When prefixed to a surname it is a title of honour, but when annexed to the surname it means a prince of the blood royal.

Miscreant (Fr. mécéant). A false believer; a term first applied to the Mohammedans who, in return, call Christians infidels, and associate with this word all that we imply by "miscreants".

Mise (mēz) (O.Fr., expenses). A word used to denote a payment or disbursement, and in particular the payment made by the COUNTY PALATINE of Chester to a new EARL, or by the Welsh to a new lord of the MARCHES and subsequently to a new Prince of WALES, who is also Earl of Chester.

The word is also applied to the settlement of a dispute by agreement or arbitration, as in the Mise of Amiens (1264), when Louis IX of France arbitrated between Henry III and the Montfortians, and the subsequent Mise of Lewes "for re-establishment of peace in the realm of England and the reconciliation of the discords which have arisen . . .".

Mise en scène (Fr., setting on stage). The stage setting of a play, including the scenery, properties, etc., and the general arrangement of the piece. Also used metaphorically.

Misère (mī zâr') (Fr., misery, poverty). In solo WHIST and some other games, the declaration made when the caller undertakes to lose every trick.

Miserere (miz e ré' re). The fifty-first psalm is so called because its opening words are Miserere mei, Deus (Have mercy upon me, O God. See NECK-VERSE). One of the evening services of LENT is called miserere, because this penitential psalm is sung, after which a sermon is given.

The under side of a folding seat in choir-stalls is called a miserere, or more properly, a misericord; when turned up it forms a ledge-seat sufficient to rest the aged in a standing position. A short dagger used by knights to end the agony of a wounded man was also known as a misericord (Lat. misereri, to have pity; cor, cordis, heart).

Misers. Among the most renowned are:

Baron Aguilar, or Ephraim Lopes Pereira d'Aguilar (1740-1802), born at Vienna and died at Islington, worth £200,000.

Daniel Dancer (1716-1794). His sister lived with him, and was a similar character, but died before him, and he left his wealth to the widow of Sir Henry Tempest, who nursed him in his last illness.

Sir Hervey Elwes, who died in 1763 worth £250,000, but never spent more than £110 a year. His sister-in-law inherited £100,000, but actually starved herself to death, and her son John (1714-1789), M.P., an eminent brewer in SOUTHWARK, never bought any clothes, never suffered his shoes to be cleaned, and grudged every penny spent on food.

Thomas Guy (c. 1645-1724), founder of Guy's Hospital.

William Jennings (1701-1797), a neighbour and friend of Elwes, died worth £200,000.

Mishnah, or Mishnah (Heb., learning, instruction, from shana to learn). The collection of moral precepts, traditions, etc., forming the basis of the TALMUD; the second or oral law (see GEMARA). It is divided into six parts: (1) agriculture; (2) Sabbaths, fasts, and festivals; (3) marriage and divorce; (4) civil and penal laws; (5) sacrifices; (6) holy persons and things.

Misnomers. There are many such in English which have arisen through ignorance, confusion of ideas, or from the changes that time brings about. Catgut for instance, was in all probability once made from the intestines of a cat but now never is, although the name remains.

Many misnomers are to be found in this book. See CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE, FORLORN HOPE, GERMAN SILVER, GUINEA-PIG, HUMBLE PIE, INDIAN (American), JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE, MEERSCHAUM, MOTHER-OF-PEARL, POMPEY'S PILLAR, SAND-BLIND, SLUG-HORN, VENTRILOQUISM, and WORMWOOD.

Some others are:

Blacklead is plumbago or graphite, a form of carbon, and has no LEAD in its composition.

Blindworms are neither blind nor worms. They are legless lizards.

China, as a name for porcelain, gives rise to the contradictory expressions Chelsea china, Nantgarw china, Sèvres china, Dresden china, etc.; like wooden or iron milestones; brass shoe-horns; silver for our present cupro-nickel coins, etc.

Dutch clocks were of German (Deutsch), not Dutch, manufacture.

Elements. Fire, earth, air, and water, still often called "the four elements", are not elements at all.

Galvanized iron is not usually galvanized, but is simply iron dipped into molten zinc.

Guernsey lily (Nerine sarniensis) is not a native of Guernsey, but of South Africa. It is said that a ship bringing specimens to Europe was wrecked on the coast of Guernsey; some of the bulbs were washed ashore and took root, hence the misnomer.

Honeysuckle. So named from the old idea that bees extracted honey therefrom, but it is entirely useless to the bee.

Indian ink comes from China, not from India.

Isle of Portland, in Dorset, is a peninsula.

Rice paper is not made from rice, but from the pith of a Formosan plant, Fatsia papyrifera.

Salts of lemon is in reality potassium acid oxalate, or potassium quadroxalate.

Silver paper used in wrapping is usually a form of tin-foil.

Slow-worm (or Blindworm). Is neither slow nor a worm.

Titmouse. Tit implies small and the second syllable represents O.E. mase, used of several small birds. It has no connexion with mouse.

Tonquin beans. A geographical blunder, for they are the seeds of Dipteryx odorata, from Tinka in Guyana, not Tonquin in Asia.

Turkeys do not come from Turkey, but from North America, and were brought to Spain from Mexico.

Turkish baths are not of Turkish origin though they were introduced from the Near East, which was associated with Turkish rule. The correct name of Hammam was commonly used in 17th-century England. HUMMUM'S Hotel in COVENT GARDEN was on the site of a 17th-century Hammam.

Whalebone is no bone at all but a substance attached to the upper jaw of the whale which serves to strain the algæ, etc., which it consumes, from the water it takes into its mouth.

Misprision (Fr. mépris). Concealment, neglect of; in law, a serious offence.

Misprision of felony. Neglecting to reveal a felony when known.

Misprision of treason. Neglecting to disclose or purposely concealing a treasonable design.

Misrule, Feast of. See KING OF MISRULE under KING.

Miss, Mistress, Mrs. (lady-master). Miss used to be written Mis, and is the first syllable of Mistress; Mrs. is the contraction of mistress and is called Mis'ess. As late as the reign of George II, unmarried women used to be styled Mrs., as, Mrs. Lepel, Mrs. Bellenden, Mrs. Blount, all unmarried women (see Pope's Letters).

Mistress was originally an honourable term for sweetheart or lover ("Mistress mine, where are you roaming"), and in the 17th century "Miss" was often used for a paramour, e.g. Charles II's "misses". Mistress has since come to mean a concubine.

Mistress Roper. An old name for a MARINE; so called by sailors from their alleged handling of ropes in a womanly or unseamanlike fashion.

The Mistress of the Night. The tuberose is so called because it emits its strongest fragrance after sunset.

In the language of flowers the tuberose signifies "the pleasures of love".

The Mistress of the World. Ancient ROME was so called because it controlled all the known world.

To kiss the mistress. To make a good hit, to shoot right into the eye of the target; in bowls, to graze another bowl with your own; the JACK used to be called the "mistress", and when one ball just touches another it is said "to kiss it".

Rub on, and kiss the mistress.

SHAKESPEARE: Troilus and Cressida, III, ii.

Miss. To fail to hit or—in such phrases as I miss you now you are gone—to lack, to feel the want of.

A miss is as good as a mile. A failure is a failure be it ever so little, and is no more be it ever so great; a narrow escape is an escape. An old form of the phrase was An inch in a miss is as good as an ell.

To miss the bus, or boat. To miss an opportunity; to be too late to participate in something.

The missing link. A popular term for that stage in the evolution of man when he was developing characteristics that differentiated him from the other primates with whom he shared a common ancestry; the link between man and the ape. The expression is sometimes applied disparagingly or jocularly.

Missal (Lat. liber missalis, book of the mass). The book containing the liturgy of the MASS with ceremonial instructions as used in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Mississippi Bubble. The French counterpart of our SOUTH SEA BUBBLE and equally disastrous. In 1716, John Law (1671–1729), a Scottish financier, obtained permission to establish a Banque générale in France and in 1717 set up the Compagnie de la Louisiane ou d'Occident and was granted control of the mint and the farming of the revenue. For these concessions he undertook the payment of the NATIONAL DEBT and at one time shares were selling at nearly 40 times their nominal value. The crash came in 1720 and many people were ruined.

Missouri. I'm from Missouri, you've got to show me. "I'm hard-headed and you have to show me", or "I won't believe anything without proof". First used in a speech in 1899 by Willard D. Vandiver, Congressman from Missouri.

Missouri Compromise. An arrangement whereby Missouri was in 1820 admitted to the UNION as a slave state, but with the proviso that there should be no slavery in the state north of 36° 30'.

Mistletoe (mis' él tō) (O.E. mistiltan; mist being both basil and mistletoe, and tan, a twig). The plant grows on various trees as a parasite, especially the apple-tree, and was held in great veneration by the DRUIDS when found on the OAK. Shakespeare calls it "the baleful mistletoe" (Titus Andronicus, II, iii), perhaps in allusion to the Scandinavian legend that it was with an arrow made of mistletoe that BALDUR was slain, or to the tradition that it was once a tree from which the wood of Christ's CROSS was formed; or possibly with reference to the popular belief that mistletoe berries are poisonous, or to the connexion of the plant with the human sacrifices of the Druids. It is probably for this latter reason it is excluded from church decorations. Culpeper says "some, for the virtues thereof, have called it lignum sanctæ crucis, wood of the holy cross, as it cures falling sickness, apoplexy and palsy very speedily, not only to be inwardly taken, but to be hung at their neck". Mistletoe is said to have certain toxic qualities when taken in large doses.

Kissing under the mistletoe. An English CHRISTMAS-time custom, dating back at least to the early 17th century. The correct procedure, now seldom observed, is that a man should pluck a berry when he kisses a girl under the mistletoe, and when the last berry is gone there should be no more kissing.

Mistpoeffers. See BARISAL GUNS.

Mistress. See MISS.

Mithra, or Mithras. The god of light of the ancient Persians, one of their chief deities, and the ruler of the universe, sometimes used as a synonym for the SUN. The word means friend, and this deity is so called because he befriends man in this life, and protects him against evil spirits after death. He is represented as a young man with a Phrygian cap and plunging daggers into the neck of a bull that lies upon the ground.

Sir Thomas More called the Supreme Being of his Utopia, "Mithra" and the cult of Mithraism had certain affinities with Christianity.

Mithridate (mith' ri dāt). A concoction named from Mithridates VI, King of Pontus and Bithynia (d. c. 63 B.C.), who is said to have made himself immune from poisons by the constant use of antidotes. It was supposed to be an antidote against poisons and contained 46 or more ingredients.

What brave spirit could be content to sit in his shop . . . selling Mithridatum and dragon's water to infected houses?

BAUMONT AND FLETCHER:
Knight of the Burning Pestle, I (1608).

Mitre (mī' ter) (Gr. and Lat. mitra, a headband, turban). The episcopal mitre is supposed to symbolize the cloven tongues of fire which descended on the apostles on the day of PENTECOST (Acts ii, 1-12).

The Mitre Tavern. A famous tavern in FLEET STREET, London, first mentioned in 1603, but probably a good deal older. It was a frequent resort of Johnson and Boswell and ceased to be a tavern in 1788. Another Mitre, mentioned by Ben Jonson and Pepys, existed in Wood Street.

Mitten. To give one the mitten. To reject a sweetheart, to jilt. Possibly with a punning allusion to Lat. mittere, to send (about your business), whence dismissal.

Mittimus (Lat., we send). A command in writing to a jailer, to keep the person named in safe custody. Also a writ for removing a record from one court to another. So called from the first word of the writ.

Mizzentop, maintop, foretop. A "top" is a platform fixed over the head of a lower mast, resting on the trestle-trees, to spread the rigging of the topmast. The mizzenmast is the aftermast of a three-masted ship and the foremast is forward of the mainmast.

Mnemosyne (ne mos' i ni). Goddess of memory and mother by ZEUS of the nine MUSES of Greek mythology. She was the daughter of heaven and earth (URANUS and GÆA).

To the Immortals every one
A portion was assigned of all that is;
But chief Mnemosyne did Maia's son
Clothe in the light of his loud melodies.
SHELLEY: Homer's Hymn to Mercury, lxxiii.

Moabite Stone, The. An ancient stèle, bearing the oldest extant Semitic inscription, now in the LOUVRE, Paris. The inscription, of 34 lines in Hebrew-Phœnician characters, gives an account of the war of Mesha, King of Moab, who reigned about 850 B.C., against Omri, Ahab, and other kings of Israel (see II Kings, iii). Mesha sacrificed his eldest son on the city wall in view of the invading Israelites. The stone was found by F. Klein at Dibhan in 1868, and is 3 ft. 10 in. high, 2 ft. broad and 14½ in. thick. The Arabs resented its removal and splintered it into fragments, but it has been restored.

Moaning Minnie. A World War II term for a six-barrelled German mortar, from the rising shriek when it was fired. The name was also given to the air-raid warning siren, then to any "moaner".

Mob. A contraction of the Lat. mobile vulgus, the fickle crowd. The term was first applied to the people by the members of the GREEN RIBBON Club.

In subsequent years the word was applied to an organized criminal gang.

Mob-cap. A bag-shaped cap formerly worn indoors by women and useful for concealing hair that was not yet "done". It was originally called mab-cap, from the old verb mab, to dress untidily.

Mock. Mock-beggar Hall, or Manor. A grand, ostentatious house, where no hospitality is afforded, neither is any charity given.

No times observed, nor charitable laws,
The poor receive their answer from the dawes
Who, in their cawing language, call it plaine
Mock-beggar Manour, for they come in vaine.
TAYLOR: The Water Cormorant (1622).

Mock of the Church. When BANNS OF MARRIAGE are called and none takes place. Formerly the churchwardens often fined the offenders.

Mockery. Trial by jury shall be a delusion, a mockery, and a snare. Thomas, Lord Denman made this observation in his judgment on the case of The Queen v. O'Connell (1844).

Mock-up. A phrase originating in World War II for a trial model or full-size working model. In the American Air Force, a panel mounted with models of aircraft parts and used for instructional purposes was so called.

Modality, in scholastic philosophy, means the mode in which anything exists. Kant divides our judgment into three modalities: (1) Problematic, touching possible events; (2) Assertoric, touching real events; (3) Apodictic, touching necessary events.

Modernism. A movement in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH which sought to interpret the ancient teachings of the Church with due regard to the current teachings of science, modern philosophy, and history. It arose in the late 19th century and was formally condemned by Pope Pius IX in 1907 in the encyclical Pascendi, which stigmatized it as the "synthesis of all heresies".

The term Modernist is also applied to liberal and RADICAL critics of traditional theology in other churches. The Modern Churchmen's Union was founded in 1898 and was strongly critical of Anglo-Catholic and Roman Catholic ideals. Dean Inge (1860-1954) and Bishop Barnes (1874-1953) were prominent among its members.

Modred. In ARTHURIAN ROMANCE, one of the Knights of the ROUND TABLE, nephew and betrayer of King ARTHUR. He is represented as the treacherous knight. He revolted against the king, whose wife he seduced, was mortally wounded in the battle of CAMLAN, and was buried in AVALON. The story is told, with a variation, in Tennyson's Guinevere (Idylls of the King).

Moderations. A contraction of Moderations, the first public examination taken by candidates in certain subjects for the BACHELOR OF ARTS degree at Oxford. It is conducted by "Moderators". Honour Moderations are now taken in Greek and Latin Literature; Mathematics; Theology; Biochemistry; Physics, Mathematics, and Engineering Science. There are also Law Moderations. The first public examination in other subjects is the Preliminary Examination. Cp. LITTLE GO; MATRICULATION; SMALLS.

Moderations and Rockers. The Moderations developed as a teenage cult in London in the early 1960s initially putting their emphasis on fastidiousness and extravagance in dress and fashion. The rise of Carnaby Street as their dress centre was a consequence. Mainly devoid of social conscience, there was some association with homosexuality and PURPLE HEARTS and their mode of life reflected the less desirable results of the AFFLUENT SOCIETY. With the rise of the rival gangs of leather-jacketed Rockers, akin to the Teddy Boys (see EDWARDIAN) of the 1950s, trouble began. Bank holiday clashes between Moderations and Rockers, who arrived in their hordes on scooters and motor-cycles, made certain seaside resorts hazardous places for the more responsible elements in society. Loutishness prevailed until the authorities took firm measures against them. They have been outmoded by the more recent cult of the Flower-Children. See FLOWER POWER under POWER.

Modus operandi (Lat.). The mode of operation; the way in which a thing is done, or should be done.

Modus vivendi (Lat., way of living). A mutual arrangement whereby persons, not on friendly terms at the time, can be induced to live together peacefully. The term may be applied to individuals, societies, and peoples.

Mogul (Mongol). The Great Mogul. The name given to the ruler of the Mohammedan-Tartar Empire in India which began in 1526 with Baber, great-grandson of Timur, or TAMERLANE. It disintegrated after the death of Aurangzeb in 1707. Noteworthy among the Mogul emperors were Akbar, Jahangir and Shah Jahan. Wealthy business TYCOONS, etc., are sometimes called moguls.

Mogul cards. The best quality playing-cards were so called because the wrapper, or the "duty-card" (cards are subject to excise duty) was decorated with a representation of the Great Mogul. Inferior cards were called "Harrys", "Highlanders", and "Merry Andrews" for a similar reason.

Mohammed, Mahomet (Arab., "the praised one"). There are various spellings, the most correct being Muhammad. It is the titular name of the founder of ISLAM or Mohammedanism, adopted by him at the time of the HEGIRA; his original name is given both as Kotham and as Halabi. He was born at MECCA c. 570 and died at MEDINA in 632.

Angel of. When Mohammed was transported to HEAVEN, he says: "I saw there an angel, the most gigantic of all created beings. It had 70,000 heads, each head had 70,000 faces, each face had 70,000 mouths, each mouth had 70,000 tongues, and each tongue spoke 70,000 languages; all were employed in singing God's praises."

Banner of. Sanjaksherif, kept in the Eyab mosque at Istanbul.

Bible of. The KORAN.

Camel (swiftest). Adha.

Cave. The cave in which GABRIEL appeared to Mohammed (610) was in the mountain of Hira, near Mecca.

Coffin. Legend held that Mohammed's coffin was suspended in mid-air at Medinal without any support.

S'piritual men are too transcendent . . .

To hang, like Mahomet, in the air,

Or St. Ignatius at his prayer,

By pure geometry.

BUTLER: Hudibras, III, ii, 602.

Daughter (favourite). Fatima.

Dove. Mohammed had a dove which he fed with wheat out of his ear.

Father of. Abdullah of the tribe of Koreish. He died just before or after the Prophet's birth.

Father-in-law of. Abu-Bekr (father of Ayesha) and the first CALIPH.

Flight from Mecca. The Hegira.

Horse of. Al Borak. See BORAK.

Miracles. Several are traditionally mentioned. The best known is that of the MOON. The story is that Habib the Wise asked Mohammed to prove his mission by cleaving the Moon in two. Mohammed raised his hands towards heaven and commanded the moon to do Habib's bidding. Accordingly it descended to the top of the KAABA, made seven circuits, and coming to the prophet, entered his right sleeve and came out of the left. It then entered the collar of his robe, descended to the skirt, and clove itself into two plaits, one of which appeared in the east of the skies and the other in the west. The two parts ultimately reunited.

Mother of. Amina, of the tribe of Koreish. She died when Mohammed was six years old.

Paradise of. The ten animals admitted to his paradise are:

(1) the dog Kratim, which accompanied the SEVEN SLEEPERS.

(2) Balaam's ass, which spoke with the voice of a man to reprove the disobedient prophet.

(3) SOLOMON's ant, of which he said, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard . . ."

(4) JONAH's whale.

(5) The ram caught in the thicket, and offered in sacrifice in lieu of Isaac.

(6) The calf of ABRAHAM.

(7) The camel of Saleb.

(8) The cuckoo of Bilkis.

(9) The ox of MOSES.

(10) Mohammed's steed, Al BORAK.

Stepping-stone. The stone upon which he placed his foot when he mounted Al Borak on his ascent to heaven. It rose as the beast rose, but Mohammed, putting his hand upon it, forbade it to follow him, whereupon it remained suspended in mid-air, where the True Believer, if he has faith enough, may still behold it.

Tribe. On both sides, the Koreish.

Uncle. Abu Tâlib, who took charge of Mohammed at the death of his grandfather.

Wives. Firstly, Kadija, a rich widow of the tribe of Koreish, who had been twice married already, and was forty years old. For twenty-five years she was his only wife, but he subsequently married a number of others, nine of whom survived him, the favourite being Ayesha. He also had concubines.

Year of Deputations. A.D. 630, the 8th of the Hegira.

If the mountain will not come to Mahomet, Mahomet must go to the mountain. When Mohammed was asked by the Arabs for miraculous proofs of his teaching he ordered Mount Safa to come to him, and as it did not move, he said, "God is merciful. Had it obeyed my words, it would have fallen on us to our destruction. I will therefore go to the mountain, and thank God that He has had mercy on a stiffnecked generation." The phrase is often used of one who, unable to get his own way, bows before the inevitable.

Mohocks. A class of ruffians who in the 18th century infested the streets of London. So called from the Mohawk Indians. One of their "new inventions" was to roll people down Snow Hill in a tub; another was to overturn coaches on rubbish-heaps. (See Gay: Trivia, III.)

A vivid picture of the misdoings of these and other brawlers is given in the Spectator, No. 324. Cp. TITYRE TUS.

Moir. Fate or Necessity, supreme even over the gods of OLYMPUS.

Moke. A donkey. See DICKY.

Molech. See MOLOCH.

Molière. The name adopted by the great French comic dramatist and actor Jean Baptiste Poquelin (1622-1673). He was taken ill when acting in his latest comedy

Le Malade Imaginaire and died the same night.

Molinism. The system of grace and election taught by the Spanish JESUIT, Louis Molina (1535-1600). His doctrine was that grace is a free gift to all, but consent of the will must be present before that grace can be effective. Cp. JANSENISTS.

Moll, Molly. Moll Cutpurse. See CUTPURSE.

Moll. An American term for a gunman's girl-friend; less commonly, for a prostitute.

Take away this bottle, it has Moll Thompson's mark on it. Moll Thompson is M. T. (empty).

Molly coddle. A pampered creature, a NAMBY PAMBY. To molly coddle is to fuss over or pamper.

Molly Maguires. An Irish secret society organized in 1843. Stout, active young Irishmen dressed up in women's clothes and otherwise disguised themselves to surprise rent-collectors. Their victims were ducked in bog-holes or more ruthlessly handled.

A similar Irish American secret society flourished in the mining districts of Pennsylvania between 1854 and 1877 which intimidated the German, Welsh, and English miners.

The judge who tried the murderer was elected by the Molly Maguires; the jurors who assisted him were themselves Molly Maguires. A score of Molly Maguires came forward to swear the assassin was sixty miles from the spot on which he had been seen to fire at William Dunn . . . and the jurors returned a verdict of Not Guilty.

W. HEPWORTH DIXON: New America, II, xxviii.

Molly Mog. This celebrated beauty was an innkeeper's daughter, at Oakingham, Berks. She was the toast of the gay sparks of the first half of the 18th century, and died unmarried in 1766, at the age of sixty-seven. Gay has a ballad on this Fair Maid of the Inn, in which the "swain" alluded to is Mr. Standen, of Arborfield, who died in 1730. It is said that Molly's sister Sally was the greater beauty. A portrait of Gay still stands in the inn.

Molloch, May, or The Maid of the Hairy Arms. An ELF of folklore who mingles in ordinary sports, and will even direct the master of the house how to play dominoes or draughts. Like the WHITE LADY of Avenel, May Molloch is a sort of BAN-SHEE.

"Meg Mullack and Brownie mentioned in the end of it [this letter], are two Ghosts, which (as it is constantly reported) of old, haunted a Family in Strathpey of the Name of Grant. They appeared at first in the likeness of a young Lass; the second of a young Lad."

JOHN AUBREY: Miscellanies.

Molmutine Laws. According to Geoffrey of Monmouth, the laws of Dunwallo Molmutius, legendary king of Britain, son of Cloten, king of Cornwall.

He enacted that the temples of the gods, as also cities, should have the privilege of giving sanctuary and protection to any fugitive or criminal, that should flee to them from his enemy.

Historia Britonum, II, xvii.

Moloch (mō' lok), or Molech (Heb., king). Any influence which demands from us the sacrifice of what we hold most dear. Thus, war is a Moloch, the guillotine was the Moloch of the French Revolution, king Mob is a Moloch, etc. The allusion is to the god of the AMMONITES, to whom children were made "to pass through the fire" (II Kings xxiii, 10). Milton says he was worshipped in Rabba, in Argob, and Basan, to the stream of utmost Arnon (Paradise Lost, I, 392-8). His victims were slain and burnt.

Molotov. The alias of the Russian diplomat Vyacheslav Mikhailovich Skryabin was given in World War II to:

The Molotov breadbasket. A canister of incendiary bombs which, on being launched from a plane, opened and showered the bombs over a wide area. Also to the Molotov cocktail, a home-made anti-tank bomb, invented and first used by the Finns against the Russians in 1940 and developed in Britain as one of the weapons of the HOME GUARD. It consisted of a bottle filled with inflammable and glutinous liquid, with a slow match protruding from the top. When thrown at a tank the bottle burst, the liquid ignited and spread over the plating of the tank.

Moly. According to HOMER, the mythical herb given by HERMES to ULYSSES as an antidote against the sorceries of CIRCE.

Black was the root, but milky white the flower,
Moly the name, to mortals hard to find.

POPE: Odyssey, X, 365.

The name is given to a number of plants, especially of the Allium (garlic) family, as the wild garlic, the Indian moly, the moly of Hungary, serpents moly, the yellow moly, Spanish purple moly, Spanish silver-capped moly, and Dioscorides' moly. They all flower in May, except "the sweet moly of Montpellier", which blossoms in September.

Momus (mō' mūs). One who carps at everything. Momus was the god of ridicule and the son of Nox (Night), who was driven out of HEAVEN for his criticisms of the gods. VENUS herself was censured for the noise made by her feet, although he could find no fault with her naked body.

Monday

Monday. The second day of the week; called by the Anglo-Saxons Monandæg, i.e. the day of the MOON.

St. Monday, or St. Lundi. A facetious name given to Monday (also called Cobblers' Monday) because it was observed by shoemakers and others as a holiday (holy day!).

There is a story in the Journal of the Folk-lore Society (Vol. I), that, while Cromwell lay encamped at Perth, one of his zealous partisans, named Monday, died and Cromwell offered a reward for the best lines on his death. A shoemaker of Perth brought the following:

Blessed be the Sabbath Day,
And cursed be worldly pelf,
Tuesday will begin the week,
Since Monday's hanged himself.

This so pleased Cromwell that he not only gave the promised reward but decreed that shoemakers should be allowed to make Monday a standing holiday.

Monday's child. The traditional rhyme says:

Monday's child is fair of face,
Tuesday's child is full of grace,
Wednesday's child is full of woe,
Thursday's child has far to go;
Friday's child is loving and giving,
Saturday's child works hard for a living;
But the child that is born on the Sabbath-day
Is bonny and blithe and good and gay.

Another rhyme says:

If you sneeze on Monday, you sneeze for danger;
Sneeze on Tuesday, kiss a stranger;
Sneeze on Wednesday, sneeze for a letter;
Sneeze on Thursday, something better;
Sneeze on Friday, sneeze for sorrow;
Sneeze on Saturday, see your sweetheart tomorrow.

That Monday morning feeling. Disinclination to start work after the week-end break (often employed in more strenuous exertion in the garden, etc.).

The swing-it-till-Monday basket. A nickname for the desk tray or basket for non-urgent matter or that which can safely be put aside until after the week-end.

Money. Shortly after the Gallic invasion of ROME, in 344 B.C., Lucius Furius (or according to other accounts, Camillus) built a temple to JUNO Moneta (the Monitress) on the spot where the house of Manlius Capitolinus stood; and to this temple was attached the first Roman mint, as the public treasury (ararium) was attached to the temple of SATURN. Hence the "ases" there coined were called moneta, and hence our word money.

Juno is represented on medals with instruments of coinage, as the hammer, anvil, pincers, and die; e.g.—

The oldest coin of Greece bore the impress of an ox. Hence a bribe for silence was said to be an "ox on the tongue". Subsequently each province had its own impress:

Athens, an owl (the bird of wisdom); Bœotia, BACCHUS (the vineyard of Greece); Delphos, a dolphin; Macedonia, a buckler (from its love of war); Rhodes, the disc of the sun (the COLOSSUS was an image to the sun).

Rome had a different impress for each coin:

For the As, the head of JANUS on one side, and the prow of a ship on the reverse; the Semi-as, the head of JUPITER and the letter S; the Sextans, the head of MERCURY and two points to denote two ounces; the Triens the head of a woman (? Rome or MINERVA) and three points to denote three ounces; the Quadrans, the head of HERCULES and four points to denote four ounces.

In every country there are popular nicknames for common coins and sums of money. Thus a baubee in SCOTLAND means a halfpenny and also is applied to money generally. In ENGLAND money is called brass, a current colloquialism being lolly, and we have a copper (1d.); a joey (4d.); a tanner, a tizzy (6d.); a bob (1s.); half a dollar, two and a kick (2s. 6d.); a dollar, a cartwheel (5s.); a QUID (20s.); a jimmy o'goblin (a SOVEREIGN); a fiver (£5); a tenner (£10); a pony (£25); a monkey (£500).

In N. America: a penny, a Red Indian (1c.); a nickel (5c.); a dime (10c.); a quarter, two bits (25c.); four bits (50c.); a buck (in silver, a cartwheel, a smacker) ($1.00); a sawbuck ($10.00); a century ($100.00); a monkey ($500.00); a grand, a G ($1000.00).

Money for old rope, or money for jam. An easy job, yielding a profitable reward for little effort.

Money of account is a monetary denomination used in reckoning and often not employed as actual coin. For example, a GUINEA is in British money of account, though no coin of this value is now in circulation. The U.S.A. mill, being one-thousandth of a dollar or one-tenth of a cent, is money of account.

Money will make the mare go. See MARE.

Ready money. Cash down; money available for immediate payment.

Mongrel Parliament. The PARLIAMENT that Charles II summoned at Oxford in 1681 to deprive the WHIGS of the support of the City of LONDON in their struggle to alter the succession, i.e., to exclude the Duke of York, a Roman Catholic.

Monism (mo' nizm). The doctrine of the oneness of mind and matter which explains everything in terms of a single reality, ignoring all that is supernatural; any one of the philosophical theories that denies the dualism of mind and matter and seeks to deduce all the varied spiritual and physical phenomena from a single principle.

Monitor. So the Romans called the nursery teacher. The Military Monitor was an officer to tell young soldiers of the faults committed against the service. The House Monitor was a slave to rouse the family in the morning, etc.

A shallow-draught ironclad with a flat deck, low freeboard and one or two revolving turrets of heavy guns, specially designed for coastal bombardment, was so called. The first such craft was designed by Captain John Ericsson in 1861 and used by the Federals in the American CIVIL WAR and was so called, as the designer said, because it was intended to "admonish the leaders of the Southern Rebellion" and to "prove a severe monitor" to them. The battle between the Monitor and the Confederate frigate Merrimac (1862) is notable as the first conflict between ironclads.

The word is also used to designate a broadcasting official employed to listen in to foreign (especially enemy) radio transmissions in order to analyse the news announced and to study propaganda. In normal circumstances the duties of a monitor include checking the quality of transmissions.

Monitorial System. The name given to the system of instruction, originally called the Madras System, devised by Andrew Bell (1753-1832) when superintendent of the Madras Orphanage (1789-1796). Owing to the dearth of suitably qualified masters, he used senior scholars or monitors to instruct their juniors. These monitors were taught to pass on factual information learned by rote, usually in the form of simple question and answer. The system was adopted in England by the early Lancasterian and National Schools (see NATIONAL SOCIETY) for the same reasons that caused Bell to devise it in the first place.

Monk (O.E. munuc; Med. Lat. monachus, a solitary). In the Western Church, properly a member of those religious orders living a community life under vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience.

See BENEDICTINES; CARTHUSIANS; CISTERCIANS. Cp. FRIARS; MENDICANT ORDERS.

In printing, a black smear or blotch made by leaving too much ink on the part is called a monk. Caxton set up his printing-press in the scriptorium of Westminster Abbey (see CHAPEL); and the association gave rise to the slang expressions monk and friar for black and white defects.

Monk Lewis. Matthew Gregory Lewis (1775-1818), so called from his highly coloured "Gothic" novel called Ambrosio, or the Monk (1795).

Monkey. Slang for £500 or (in America) $500; also for a mortgage (sometimes extended to a monkey with a long tail), and among sailors the vessel which contains the full allowance of GROG for a MESS. A child, especially an active, meddlesome one, is often called "a little monkey"—for obvious reasons.

Monkey's allowance. MORE KICKS THAN HALFPENCE (see under KICKS).

Monkey board. In the old-fashioned knifeboard horse-omnibuses, the step on which the conductor stood, and on which he often skipped about "like a monkey".

Monkey jacket. A short coat worn by seamen; so called because it has "no more tail than a monkey", or more strictly speaking, an ape.

Monkey puzzle. The Chilean pine, Araucaria imbricata, whose twisted and prickly branches puzzle even a monkey to climb.

Monkey spoons. Spoons having on the handle a heart surmounted by a monkey, at one time given in Holland at marriages to some immediate relative of the bride; at christenings and funerals to the officiating clergyman. See TO SUCK THE MONKEY, below.

Monkey suit. In the U.S.A. services, the term applied to full dress uniform, also to an aviator's overalls and sometimes to men's formal dress on important occasions.

Monkey tricks. Mischievous, ill-natured, or deceitful actions.

To get one's monkey up. To be riled or enraged; monkeys are often irritable and easily provoked.

To monkey with, or about. To tamper with or play mischievous tricks. To monkey with the cards is to try to arrange them so that the deal will not be fair; to monkey with the milk is to add water to it and then sell it as pure and unadulterated.

To pay in monkey's money (Fr. en monnaie de singe). In goods, in personal work, in mumbling and grimace. In PARIS when a monkey passed the Petit Pont, if it was for sale four deniers' toll had to be paid; but if it belonged to a showman and was not for sale, it sufficed if the monkey went through his tricks.

... being an original by Master Charles Charmois, principal painter to King Megistus, paid for in court fashion with monkey's money.

RABELAIS, IV, iii.

To suck the monkey. Among the Dutch, drinking is called "sucking the monkey", because the early morning appetizer of rum and salt was taken in a MONKEY SPOON. In sailor's slang "to suck the monkey" is to suck liquor from a cask through a straw; and when milk has been taken from a coconut, and rum has been substituted, "sucking the monkey" is drinking this rum.

Besides, what the vulgar call "sucking the monkey"

Has much less effect on a man when he's funky.

BARHAM:

Ingoldsby Legends (The Black Mousquetaire, II).

Monmouth. The town at the mouth of the Monnow; surname of Henry V of England, who was born there.

Monmouth cap. A soldier's cap.

The Welchmen . . . wearing leekes in their Monmouth caps.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry V, IV, vii.

The best caps were formerly made at Monmouth, where the capper's chapel doth still remain.

FULLER: Worthies of England.

Monmouth Street, SOHO. This former London street was once noted for its second-hand clothes shops; hence the expression Monmouth Street finery for TAWDRY, pretentious clothes.

[At the Venetian carnival] you may put on what-e'er

You like by way of doublet, cape or cloak,
Such as in Monmouth-street, or in Rag Fair
Would rig you out in seriousness or joke.

BYRON: Beppo, v.

Monmouth's Rebellion. The disastrous last throw of the Duke of Monmouth, reputed son of Charles II and Lucy Walters, to overthrow James II as champion of the Protestant religion. He landed at Lyme in 1685 and was hailed as King at Taunton and Bridgwater, but was routed by James II's army at Sedgemoor (6 July). Monmouth was executed and his rustic followers were dealt with at the BLOODY ASSIZES.

Monongahela. A river flowing into the Ohio at Pittsburgh, near which whisky is distilled. The term is sometimes applied to American whisky generally.

Monophysites (Gr. monos, one; phusis, nature). A religious sect in the Levant who maintained that Jesus Christ had only one nature, and that divine and human were combined in much the same way as body and soul were combined in man. They arose upon the condemnation of the EUTYCHIAN heresy at the Council of Chalcedon, 451, and are still represented by the Coptic (see COPTS), Armenian, Abyssinian, Syrian, and Malabar JACOBITE Churches.

Monothelites (Gr. monos, one; thelein, to will). A 7th-century heretical sect holding that Christ had only one will, the divine. Monothelitism was akin to the teaching of the MONOPHYSITES, and was an attempt to reconcile the latter to their fellow-Christians of the eastern Empire against Persian and Mohammedan invaders. It was condemned finally by the Council of Constantinople (680).

Monroe Doctrine (mūn rō'). The doctrine first promulgated in 1823 by James Monroe (President of the U.S.A., 1817-1825), to the effect that the American States would not entangle themselves in the broils of the Old World, nor suffer European powers to interfere in the affairs of the New. There was to be no future colonization by any European powers.

The Monroe Doctrine was invoked by the United States during the Anglo-Venezuelan boundary dispute over the limits of British Guiana (1894-1896).

The capture of Manila and the cession of the Philippines to the United States in 1898, and still more the part the Americans took in the World Wars have abrogated a large part of this famous Doctrine.

Mons Meg. See under MEG.

Mons Star. The British war medal ("The 1914 Star") given for service in France or Belgium in 1914, is popularly so called. The battle of Mons was fought on 23 August 1914.

Monseigneur. The title given to the DAUPHIN from the time of Louis XIV.

Monsieur. The eldest brother of the King of France was so called from the time of Louis XIV (1643-1715).

Monsieur de Paris. The public executioner or JACK KETCH of France.

Monsieur le Grand. The Great Equerry of France was so called.

The Peace of Monsieur. The peace that the HUGUENOTS, the POLITIQUES, and the Duke d'Alençon ("Monsieur") obliged Henry III of France to sign in 1576. By it the Huguenots and the Duke gained great concessions.

Monsignor (mon sē' nyōr) (pl. Monsignori). A title pertaining to all prelates in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, which includes all prelates of the Roman court, active or honorary. Used with the surname, as "Monsignor Newman", it does away with the solecism of speaking of Bishop so-and-so, which is like calling the Duke of Marlborough "Duke Churchill".

Mont (Fr., hill). The technical term in PALMISTRY for the eminences at the roots of the fingers.

That at the root of the thumb is the Mont de Mars, index finger is the Mont de Jupiter, long finger is the Mont de Saturne, ring finger is the Mont du Soleil, little finger is the Mont de Vénus.

The one between the thumb and the index finger is called the Mont de Mercure and the one opposite the Mont de la Lune.

Mont de Piété. A pawnshop in France; first instituted as monti di pietà (charity loans) at Rome under Leo X (1513-1521), by charitable persons who wished to rescue the poor from usurers. They advanced small sums of money on the security of pledges, at a rate of interest barely sufficient to cover the working expenses of the institution. Both the name and the system were introduced into France and Spain. Public granaries for the sale of corn were called in Italian Monti frumentarii. "Monte" means a public or state loan; hence also a "bank".

Montagnards. See MOUNTAIN, THE.

Montanists. A short-lived 2nd-century heretical sect; so called from Montanus, a Phrygian, who asserted that he had received from the HOLY GHOST special knowledge that had not been vouchsafed to the APOSTLES. They were extreme ascetics and believed in the speedy coming of the Second ADVENT.

Monteer Cap. See MONTERO.

Monteith. A scalloped basin to cool and wash glasses in; a sort of punch-bowl, made of silver or pewter with a movable rim scalloped at the top; so called, according to Anthony Wood, in 1683 from "a fantastical Scot called 'Monsieur Monteigh' who about that time wore the bottom of his coat so notched ~ ~ ~ ~."

New things produce new names, and thus

Monteith

Has by one vessel saved his name from death.
KING.

Montem. A custom observed triennially until 1847 by the boys of Eton College, who proceeded on Whit Tuesday ad montem (to a mound called Salt Hill), near Slough, and exacted a gratuity called salt-money from all who passed by. Sometimes as much as £1,000 was thus collected, and it was used to defray the expenses of the senior scholar at King's College, Cambridge.

Montero, or Monteer Cap. So called from the headgear worn by the monteros d'Espinoza (mountaineers), who once formed the interior guard of the palace of the Spanish king. It had a spherical crown, and flaps that could be drawn over the ears, not unlike a Victorian shooting-cap.

Montessori Method. A system of training and educating young children evolved by the Italian educationist, Dr. Maria Montessori (1870-1952). Based on "free discipline", and the use of specially devised "educational apparatus" and "didactic material", it has exercised considerable influence on work with young children. Cp. FRÖBEL SYSTEM.

Montgomery's division, all on one side.

This is a French proverb and refers to the FREE COMPANIES, of which a Montgomery was a noted chief. The booty he took he kept himself. Cp. LION'S SHARE.

Month. One of the twelve divisions of a year. Anciently a new month started on the day of the new MOON, or the day after; hence the name (O.E. monath) which is connected with moon. For the individual months see their names; see also LUNAR MONTH.

The old mnemonic for remembering the number of days in each month runs:

Thirty days hath September,
April, June, and November,
February eight-and-twenty all alone
And all the rest have thirty-one,
Unless that Leap Year doth combine
And give to February twenty-nine.

This, with slight variations, is to be found in Grafton's Chronicles (1590), etc. In Harrison's Description of England (prefixed to Holinshed's Chronicle, 1577), is the Latin version:

Junius, Aprilis, Septemque, Novemque, tricenos,
Unum plus reliqui. Februs tenet octo vicenos,
At si bissextus fuerit superadditur unus.

A month of Sundays. An indefinite but long time; NEVER.

A month's mind. Properly the Requiem MASS said for the deceased on the 30th day after death or burial. The term often occurs in old wills in connexion with charities to be disbursed on that day.

A month's mind was also used to denote an eager desire, as in:

I have a month's mind, instead of this damnable iteration of guesses and forebodings, to give thee the history of a little adventure which befell me yesterday.

SCOTT: Redgauntlet, Letter III.

Montjoie St. Denis

Month in month out. Throughout all the months; constantly; all the time.

Montjoie St. Denis, or Denys. The war-cry of mediæval France. Montjoie is a corruption of Mons Jovis, as the little mounds were called which served as direction-posts in ancient times; hence it was applied to whatever showed or indicated the way, as the banner of St. DENYS, called the ORIFLAMME. The Burgundians had for their war-cry, "Montjoie St. André"; the Dukes of Bourbon, "Montjoie Notre Dame"; and the Kings of England used to have "Montjoie St. George".

Montjoie was also the cry of the French heralds in the TOURNAMENTS, and the title of the French KING OF ARMS.

Where is Mountjoy the herald? speed him hence:
Let him greet England with our sharp defiance.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry V, III, v.

Montpelier. The name is frequently found in English streets, squares, etc., due to the French town Montpellier being a fashionable resort in the 19th century.

Montserrat (Lat. mons serratus, the mountain jagged like a saw). The Catalonians aver that this mountain was riven and shattered at the Crucifixion. Every rift is filled with evergreens. The monastery of Montserrat is famous for its printing-press and for its Black Virgin.

Monument, The. The fluted Roman-Doric column of Portland stone (202 ft. high) designed by Sir Christopher Wren to commemorate the Great FIRE of London of 1666. It stands near the north end of London Bridge, near the spot where the fire started. It was erected between 1671 and 1677. In 1681 the following inscription was made on the base (erased 1831):

This Pillar was set up in perpetual remembrance of that most dreadful burning of this Protestant city, begun and carried out by ye treachery and malice of ye popish faction, in ye beginning of Septem in ye year of Our Lord 1666, in order to ye carrying on their horrid plott, for extirpating the Protestant religion and old English liberty, and the introducing Popery and slavery.

It was this that made Pope refer to it as:

London's column pointing at the skies
Like a tall bully, lifts the head, and lies.
Moral Essays, III, 339.

Monuments and effigies in churches. The following points usually apply:

Founders of chapels, etc., lie with their monument built into the wall.

Figures with their hands on their breasts, and chalices, represent priests.

Figures with armour represent knights.

Figures with legs crossed represent either crusaders or married men, but those with a SCALLOP SHELL are certainly crusaders.

Female figures with a mantle and large ring represent nuns.

In the age of CHIVALRY the woman was placed on the man's right hand; but when chivalry declined she was placed on his left hand.

It may usually be taken that ancient inscriptions in Latin, cut in capitals, are of the first twelve centuries; those in Lombardic capitals and French, of the 13th; those in Old English text, of the 14th; while those in the English language and roman characters are subsequent to the 14th century.

Tablets against the wall came in with the REFORMATION; and brasses are mostly post-13th century.

Monumental City. Baltimore, Maryland, is so called because of its many monuments, churches, etc.

Moody and Sankey. Dwight Lyman Moody (1837-1899) was the son of a Massachusetts bricklayer who began his evangelical work in 1860. He was joined by Ira David Sankey (1840-1908) in 1870, who backed up Moody's preaching with singing and organ music. The famous "Sankey and Moody hymn book", first published in 1873, properly called Sacred Songs and Solos, was "compiled and sung" by Sankey. Their type of "Gospel Hymn" was partly popularized in Great Britain during their visits to this country and particularly by the SALVATION ARMY.

Moon. The word is probably connected with the Sanskrit root me-, to measure, because time was measured by it. It is common to all Teutonic languages (Goth. mena; O.Frisian mona; O.Norm. mane; O.E. mona, etc.) and is almost invariably masculine. In the EDDA the son of Mundilferi is MANI (moon), and daughter SOL (sun); so it is still with the Lithuanians and Arabians, and so it was with the ancient Slavs, Mexicans, Hindus, etc., and the Germans still have Frau Sonne (Mrs. Sun) and Herr Mond (Mr. Moon).

The moon is represented in five different phases: (1) new; (2) full; (3) crescent or decrescent; (4) half; and (5) gibbous, or more than half. In pictures of the ASSUMPTION it is shown as a crescent under Our Lady's feet; in the Crucifixion it is eclipsed, and placed on one side of the CROSS, the SUN being on the other; in the Creation and Last JUDGMENT it is also depicted.

In classical mythology the moon was known as HECATE before she had risen and after she had set; as ASTARTE when crescent; as DIANA or CYNTHIA (she who "hunts the clouds") when in the open vault of heaven; as PHOEBE when looked upon as the sister of the sun (i.e. PHOEBUS); and was personified as SELENE or Luna, the lover of the sleeping ENDYMION, i.e. moonlight on the fields.

The moon is called triform, because it presents itself to us either round, or waxing with horns towards the east, or waning with horns towards the west.

One legend connected with the moon was that there was treasured everything wasted on earth, such as misspent time and wealth, broken vows, unanswered prayers, fruitless tears, unfulfilled desires and intentions, etc. In ARIOSTO'S ORLANDO FURIOSO, Astolpho found on his visit to the moon (Bk. XXXIV, lxx) that bribes were hung on gold and silver hooks; princes' favours were kept in bellows; wasted talent was kept in vases, each marked with the proper name, etc.; and in The Rape of the Lock (canto V) Pope tells us that when the Lock disappeared—

Some thought it mounted to the lunar sphere,
Since all things lost on earth are treasured there,
There heroes' wits are kept in pond'rous vases,
And beaux' in snuff-boxes and tweezer-cases.
There broken vows and death-bed alms are found
And lovers' hearts with ends of riband bound,
The courtier's promises, and sick man's prayers,
The smiles of harlots, and the tears of heirs,
Cages for gnats, and chains to yoke a flea,
Dried butterflies, and tomes of casuistry.

Hence the phrase, the limbus of the moon. (See LIMBO.)

The cycle of the moon. See under CYCLE.

The island of the moon. Madagascar is so named by the natives.

The limbus of the moon. See MOON above.

Mahomet and the moon. See MOHAMMED.

The man in the moon. Some say it is a man leaning on a fork, on which he is carrying a bundle of sticks picked up on a Sunday. The origin of this fable is from Numb. xv, 32-36. Some add a dog also; thus SHAKESPEARE'S Midsummer Night's Dream (V, i) says:

This man with lantern, dog, and bush of thorn,
Presenteth moonshine.

Another tradition says that the man is Cain, with his dog and thorn bush; the thorn bush being emblematical of the thorns and briars of the fall, and the dog being the "foul fiend". Some poets make out the "man" to be ENDYMION, taken to the moon by DIANA.

Minions of the moon. Thieves who rob by night. (See Shakespeare: Henry IV, Pt. I, I, ii).

Moon's men. Thieves and highwaymen who ply their trade by night.

The fortune of us that are Moon's-men doth ebb and flow like the sea.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, I, ii.

The Mountains of the Moon means simply White Mountains. The Arabs call a white horse "moon-coloured".

I know no more about it than the man in the moon. I know nothing at all about the matter.

Once in a blue moon. See BLUE MOON under BLUE.

To aim, or level at the moon. To be very ambitious, as to aim, in shooting, at the moon.

To cast beyond the moon. See CAST.

To cry for the moon. To crave for what is wholly beyond one's reach. The allusion is to foolish children who "cry for the moon to play with". The French say Il veut prendre la lune avec les dents (He wants to take the moon between his teeth), alluding to the old proverb about the "moon" and a "green cheese".

You have found an elephant in the moon. You have found a MARE'S NEST. Sir Paul Neale, a conceited virtuoso of the 17th century, gave out that he had discovered "an elephant in the moon". It turned out that a mouse had crept into his telescope, and had been mistaken for an elephant in the moon. Samuel Butler has a satirical poem on the subject called The Elephant in the Moon.

You would have me believe that the moon is made of green cheese—i.e. the most absurd thing imaginable.

You may as soon persuade some Country Peasants, that the Moon is made of Green Cheese (as we say) as that 'tis bigger than his Cart-wheel.
WILKINS: New World, I (1638).

Moon-calf. An inanimate, shapeless abortion, formerly supposed to be produced prematurely owing to the malign influence of the moon; also a dolt or dunderhead.

I hid me under the dead moon-calf's gaberdine for fear of the storm.

SHAKESPEARE: The Tempest, II, ii.

Moon-drop. In Latin, virus lunare, a vaporous foam supposed anciently to be shed by the moon on certain herbs and objects, when influenced by incantations.

Upon the corner of the moon,
There hangs a vaporous drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground.

SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, III, v.

Cp. Lucan's Pharsalia, vi, 669, where Erichtho is introduced using it:

Et virus large lunare ministrat.

Moonlight. A moonlight flit. A clandestine removal of one's furniture during the night, to avoid paying one's rent or having the furniture seized in payment thereof.

Moonlighting. In the Ireland of former days, the name given to acts of agrarian violence at night. In Australia, riding after cattle by night and, in the U.S.A., holding a night job in addition to one's regular employment.

Moonrakers. A nickname of Wiltshire folk; also of simpletons. From the story that Wiltshire yokels, with typical country guile, when raking a pond for kegs of smuggled brandy, feigned stupidity when surprised by the excise men, and said that they were trying to rake out the moon, which was reflected in the water.

Moonshine. In the U.S.A., especially Florida, a colloquial term for illicitly distilled liquor, the keeper of an illicit still being called a moonshiner. The liquor, called "corn", "shine", or "white lightning", is made from maize, sugar, and water. Cp. BOOTLEGGER. In general colloquial usage the word means "nonsense", as in the phrase It's all moonshine; here the allusion is to the supposed effects of moonlight on mental stability. Cp. LUNATIC.

Moonstone. A variety of feldspar, so called on account of the play of light which it exhibits. It contains bluish-white spots, which, when held to the light, present a silvery play of colour not unlike that of the MOON.

Moor. The word is from Gr. and Lat. Maurus, an inhabitant of MAURITANIA. In the MIDDLE AGES, Europeans called all Mohammedans Moors, similarly the Eastern nations called all Europeans Franks. Camoëns, in the LUSIADS (Bk. VIII), gives the name to the Indians.

Moor-slayer, or Mata-moros. A name given to St. JAMES, the patron saint of Spain, because, as the legends say, in encounters with the Moors he came on his white horse to the aid of the Christians. See also MATAMORE.

Moot (O.E. gemot, a meeting). In Anglo-Saxon times, the assembly of freemen in a township, TITHING, etc. The main moots were those of the SHIRE and HUNDRED which served as units of local government. In a few towns, e.g. Aldeburgh, Suffolk, the town hall is still called the Moot Hall. Cp. WITENAGEMOT. In legal circles the name is given to the students' debates on supposed cases which formerly took place in the halls of the INNS OF COURT. The benchers and BARRISTERS took part, as well as the students.

Moot case, or moot point. A doubtful or unsettled question; one that is open to debate.

Mop, or Mop Fair. A statute or HIRING FAIR (see under FAIR). So called from the "mop" (a tuft or tassel) worn as a badge by those seeking hire. Carters fastened a piece of whipcord to their hats; shepherds, a lock of wool; grooms, a piece of sponge, etc.

All mops and brooms. Intoxicated.

Mops and mows. Grimaces; here mop is connected with Dut. mopken, to pout.

Mopping-up operations. In military parlance means the final reduction of isolated pockets of enemy resistance.

Moral. The Moral Gower. John Gower (c. 1325-1408), the poet, is so called by Chaucer (Troilus and Criseyde, V).

Father of Moral Philosophy. St. Thomas Aquinas (c. 1225-1274).

Moral Re-armament (M.R.A.). A movement founded in 1938 by Frank Buchman, who had earlier founded the OXFORD GROUP. Its purpose is to counter the MATERIALISM of present-day society by persuading people to live according to the highest standards of morality and love, to obey God, and to unite in a world-wide association according to these principles.

Morality Play. An allegorical dramatic form in vogue from the 15th to the 16th centuries in which the vices (see SEVEN DEADLY SINS) and VIRTUES were personified and the victory of the latter clearly established. It was a development from the earlier MYSTERY PLAYS. EVERYMAN, a 15th-century play translated from the Dutch Elckerlijck, is the best-known.

Moran's Collar. In Irish folk-tale, the collar of Moran, the wise councillor of King Feredach the Just, which strangled the wearer if he deviated from the strict rules of equity.

Moravians. A PROTESTANT Church which is a direct continuation of the BOHEMIAN BRETHERN. Theirs is a simple and unworldly form of religion and John Wesley was influenced by them. They are now to be found in Denmark, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Great Britain, and America.

More. More or less. Approximately; in round numbers, etc.; as, "It is ten miles, more or less, from here to there," i.e., "it is about ten miles."

The more one has, the more one desires, or wants. In French, Plus il en a, plus il en veut. In Latin, Quo plus habent, eo plus cupiunt.

My more having would be a source
To make me hunger more.

SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, IV, iii.

The more the merrier, the fewer the better cheer, or fare. The proverb is found in Heywood's Collection (1546) and Ray's (1670).

To be no more. To exist no longer; to be dead.

Cassius is no more.

SHAKESPEARE: Julius Cæsar, V, iii.

More of More Hall. See WANTLEY, DRAGON OF.

Morgan le Fay. The fairy sister of King ARTHUR, a principal figure in CELTIC legend and ARTHURIAN ROMANCE, also known as Morgane, Morganetta, Morgaine, Morgue la Faye and (especially in ORLANDO FURIOSO) as Morgana. See FATA MORGANA.

It was Morgan le Fay who revealed to King Arthur the intrigues of LANCELOT and GUINEVERE. She gave him a cup containing a magic draught and he had no sooner drunk it than his eyes were opened to the perfidy of his wife and friend.

In Orlando Furioso, she is represented as living at the bottom of a lake, and dispensing her treasures to whom she liked. In ORLANDO INNAMORATO, she first appears as "Lady Fortune", but subsequently assumes her witch-like attributes. In TASSO, her three daughters, Morganetta, Nivetta, and Carvilia, are introduced.

In the romance of OGIER THE DANE she receives Ogier in the Isle of AVALON when he is over 100 years old, restores him to youth, and becomes his bride.

Morganatic Marriage. One between a man of high (usually royal) rank and a woman of lower station, as a result of which she does not acquire the husband's rank and neither she nor any children of the marriage are entitled to inherit the title or possessions; often called a "left-handed marriage" because the custom is for the man to pledge his troth with his left hand instead of his right. George William, Duke of Zell, married Eleanora d'Esmiers in this way, and she took the name and title of Lady Harburg; her daughter was Sophia Dorothea, the wife of George I. George, Duke of Cambridge (1819-1904), cousin of Queen Victoria, contracted a morganatic marriage in 1840. His children took the surname Fitz-George. The word comes from the Med. Lat. phrase matrimonium ad morganicam, the last word representing O.H. Ger. morgangeba, the morning-gift, from husband to wife after the consummation of the marriage, and the wife's only claim to her husband's possessions.

Morgane, Morganetta. See MORGAN LE FAY.

Morgante Maggiore (môr gan' te mâ-jôr' è). A serio-comic romance in verse by Pulci of Florence (1482). The characters had appeared previously in many old romances; Morgante is a ferocious giant, converted by ORLANDO (the real hero) to Christianity. After performing the most wonderful feats, he dies at last from the bite of a crab.

Pulci was practically the inventor of this burlesque form of poetry, called by the French BERNESQUE, from the Italian, Berni (1497-1535), who excelled in it.

Morgiana (môr ji ân' à). In the ARABIAN NIGHTS (Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves), the clever, faithful slave of ALI BABA, who pries into the forty jars and discovers every jar but one contains a man. She takes the oil from the only jar containing it, and having made it boiling hot, pours enough into each jar to kill the thief therein. Finally she kills the captain of the gang and marries her master's son.

Morgue la Faye. The form of the name MORGAN LE FAY in OGIER THE DANE.

Morley, Mrs. The name under which Queen Anne corresponded with "Mrs. Freeman" (Sarah Churchill, Duchess of Marlborough).

Mormons. A religious sect, also called the Latter-Day Saints, taking their name from the Book of Mormon, or Golden Bible, allegedly written on golden plates by the angel Mormon, but probably derived from a romance, The Manuscript Found (1812), by the Rev. Solomon Spaulding (1761-1816). Joseph Smith (1805-1844) adapted this and claimed it as a direct revelation and founded his church in 1830 in the state of New York. Smith was murdered by a mob when imprisoned in Carthage gaol, Illinois, and his place was taken by Brigham Young (1801-1877), a carpenter. He led the persecuted "Saints" to the valley of the Salt Lake, 1,500 miles distant, generally called Utah, but by the Mormons, Deseret (Bee-country), the New Jerusalem, where they have been settled since 1847, despite many disputes with the U.S. Government.

The Mormons accept the Bible as well as the Book of Mormon as authoritative, they hold the doctrines of repentance and faith, that ZION will be built on the American continent, and believe in baptism, the EUCHARIST, the physical resurrection of the dead, and in the Second ADVENT when Christ will have the seat of His power in Utah. Marriage may be for "time and eternity". Popularly associated with polygamy, the Mormons practised it until 1890 when the U.S. Supreme Court finally declared against it. Hence the expression a regular Mormon for a promiscuous or flighty person who cannot keep to one wife or sweet-heart.

Morning. The first glass of whisky drunk by Scottish fishermen in salutation to the dawn.

Morning Star. Byron's name for Mary Chaworth, his charming neighbour at Newstead, with whom he was in love early in his life.

Morning Star of the Reformation. John Wyclif (c. 1324-1384).

Morocco. Strong ale made from burnt malt, used in the annual feast at Levens Hall, Westmorland, on the opening of Milnthorpe Fair. It was put into a large glass of unique form, and the person whose turn it was to drink (called the "colt") had to "drink the constable", i.e. stand on one leg and say "Luck to Levens as long as Kent flows", then drain the glass or pay a forfeit. The custom ended in the late 1870s.

Morocco men. Men who, about the end of the 18th century, used to visit public-houses touting for illegal lottery insurances. Their rendezvous was a tavern in Oxford Market, at the Oxford Street end of Great Portland Street.

Moros. The name of the MOSLEM inhabitants of the island of Mindanao and the Sulu Archipelago in the Philippine Islands, and applied to them by the Spanish conquerors because of their supposed resemblance to MOORS.

Morpheus. Ovid's name for the son of Sleep, and god of dreams; so called from Gr. morphe, form, because he gives these airy nothings their form and fashion. Hence the name of the narcotic, morphine, or morphia.

Morrice, Gil, or Childe. The hero of an old Scottish ballad, a natural son of an earl and the wife of Lord Barnard, and brought up "in gude grene wode". Lord Barnard, thinking the Childe to be his wife's lover, slew him with a broad-sword, and setting his head on a spear gave it to "the meanest man in a' his train" to carry to the lady. When she saw it she said to the baron, "Wi' that saim speir, O pierce my heart, and put me out o' pain"; but the baron replied, "Enouch of blood by me's bin spilt . . . sair, sair I rew the deid," adding:

I'll ay lament for Gill Morice,
As gin he were mine ain;
I'll neir forget the dreiry day
On which the youth was slain.

PERCY: Reliques, Gil Morrice, xxvi.

Percy says this pathetic tale suggested to Home the plot of his tragedy, Douglas.

Morris Dance. A dance, popular in England in the 15th century and later, in which the dancers often represented characters from the ROBIN HOOD stories (see MAID MARIAN). Other stock characters were Bavian the fool, MALKIN the clown, the HOBBY-HORSE, or a DRAGON, and foreigners, probably MOORS or Moriscos. It was commonly part of the MAY-games and other pageants and festivals and the dancers were adorned with bells. It was brought from Spain in the reign of Edward III, and was originally a military dance of the Moors or Moriscos, hence its name.

Nine Men's Morris. An ancient game (similar to draughts) once popular with shepherds and still found in East Anglia, and either played on a board or on flat greensward. Two persons have each nine pieces or "men" which they place down alternately on the spots (see diagram), and the aim of either player is to secure a row of three men on any line on the board, and to prevent his opponent achieving this by putting one of his own men on a line which looks like being completed, etc.

Strutt says, "The rustics, when they have not materials at hand to make a table, cut the lines in the same form upon the ground, and make a small hole for every dot."

The fold stands empty in the drowned field,
And crows are fatted with the murrain flock;
The nine men's morris is fill'd up with mud.

SHAKESPEARE:

A Midsummer Night's Dream, II, ii.

It is also called Merelles.

Mortal. A mortal sin. A "deadly" sin, one which deserves everlasting punishment; opposed to VENIAL.

Earth trembled from her entrails . . . some sad drops

Wept at completing of the mortal Sin

Original; while Adam took no thought.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, IX, 1003.

In slang and colloquial speech the word is used to express something very great or excessive, as, "He's in a mortal funk", "There was a mortal lot of people there", or as an emphatic expletive, "You can do any mortal thing you like."

Mortar. Originally a short gun with a large bore for throwing bombs. Said to have been used at Naples in 1435; first made in England 1543. Today mortars take the form of a long smooth-bored pipe which throws a bomb with a high trajectory extremely accurately.

Mortar-board. A college CAP surmounted by a square "board" usually covered with black cloth. The word is possibly connected with Fr. mortier, the cap worn by the ancient kings of France, and still used officially by the chief justice or president of the court of justice. It is perhaps more likely an allusion to the small square board or hawk on which a bricklayer or plasterer carries his mortar.

Morte d'Arthur, Le. See ARTHURIAN ROMANCES.

Morther. See MAUTHER.

Mortmain (O.Fr., Lat. mortua manus, dead hand). A term applied to land that was held inalienably by ecclesiastical or other corporations. In the 13th century, it was common for persons to make over their land to the Church and then receive it back as tenants, thus escaping their feudal obligations to the king or other lay lords. In 1279 the Statute of Mortmain was passed prohibiting the practice without the king's licence.

Morton's Fork. John Morton (c. 1420-1500), CARDINAL and Archbishop of Canterbury and minister of Henry VII, when levying forced loans or BENEVOLENCES from rich men so arranged that none should escape. Those who were ostentatiously rich were forced to contribute on the ground that they could well afford it, those who lived without display on the ground that their economies must mean they had savings. The argument was dubbed "Morton's fork", which was two-pronged.

Mortstone. A rock off Morte Point, Devon.

He may remove Mortstone. A Devonshire proverb, said incredulously of husbands who pretend to be masters of their wives. It also means, "If you have done what you say, you can accomplish anything".

Mortuary. Formerly a gift of the second best beast of the deceased to the incumbent of the parish church, later of the first or second best possession. In due course mortuaries became fees and in 1529 PARLIAMENT limited them to moderate amounts. The custom lingered on in some parishes into the 18th century.

Mosaic Law. The laws given in the PENTATEUCH including the Ten Commandments.

Moses. The horns of Moses' face. Moses is conventionally represented with horns, owing to a blunder in translation. In Exod. xxxiv, 29, 30, where we are told that when Moses came down from Mount Sinai "the skin of his face shone", the Hebrew for this shining may be translated either as "sent forth beams" or "sent forth horns"; and the VULGATE took the latter as correct, rendering the passage—quod cornuta esset facies sua. Cp. Hab. iii, 4, "His brightness was as the light; he had horns [rays of light] coming out of his hand."

Michael Angelo followed the earlier painters in depicting Moses with horns.

Moses boat. A type of boat made at Salisbury, Massachusetts, by a famous boat-builder, Moses Lowell, in the 18th century. Farther south (in the West Indies), it is said to have been a boat of sufficient capacity to take a hoghead of sugar from shore to ship in one trip.

Moses' rod. The DIVINING ROD is sometimes so called, after the rod with which Moses worked wonders before Pharaoh (Exod. vii, 9), or the rod with which he smote the rock to bring forth water (Exod. xvii, 6).

Moslem, or Muslim (moz' lem, müz' lim). A Mohammedan, the present participle of Arab. aslama, to be safe, or at rest, whence ISLAM. The Arabic plural Moslemin is sometimes used, but Moslems is more common, and in English more correct.

Mosstrooper. A robber, a bandit; applied especially to the marauders who infested the borders of ENGLAND and SCOTLAND, who encamped on the mosses (O.E. mos, a bog).

Most. Most unkindest cut of all. Treachery from a friend; the proverbial "last straw". From SHAKESPEARE's Julius Cæsar (III, ii). When Mark Antony was showing the dagger cuts in Cæsar's mantle he thus referred to the thrust made by BRUTUS, whom he described as "Cæsar's angel".

For when the noble Cæsar saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong than traitor's arms,
Quite vanquished him.

Mothball ships. Ships placed in reserve are so called from the post-World War II practice of spraying a plastic covering or cocoon over gun-mountings and other working parts, etc.

Mother. Properly a female parent (Sansk. mātr; Gr. mētēr; Lat. mater; O.E. mōdor; Ger. Mutter; Fr. mère; etc.) hence, figuratively, the origin of anything, the head or headquarters of a religious or other community, the source of, etc.

Mother is the name given to a stringy gummy substance, sometimes called mother of vinegar, which forms on the surface of a liquor undergoing acetous fermentation, consisting of the bacteria which are causing that fermentation.

Mother Ann, Bunch, Goose, Shipton, etc. See these names.

Mother Carey's Chickens. Sailor's name for stormy petrels, probably derived from mater cara or madre cara ("mother dear", with reference to the Virgin Mary). Sailors also call falling snow Mother Carey's Chickens. See MARRYAT'S Poor Jack for an account of sailors' superstitions on such matters.

Mother Carey's Goose. The great black petrel or fulmar of the Pacific.

Mother Carey is plucking her goose. It is snowing. Cp. HULDA.

Mother Church. The church considered as the central fact, the head, the last court of appeal in all matters pertaining to conscience or religion. St. John LATERAN, at ROME, is known as the Mother and Head of all churches. Also, the principal or oldest church in a country or district; the cathedral of a diocese.

Mother country. One's native country; or the country whence one's ancestors came to settle. England is the Mother country of Australia, New Zealand, Canada, etc. The German term is Fatherland.

Mother Earth. When Junius BRUTUS (after the death of Lucretia) formed one of the deputation to DELPHI to ask the ORACLE which of the three would succeed TARQUIN, the response was, "He who should first kiss his mother." Junius instantly threw himself on the ground, exclaiming, "Thus, then, I kiss thee, Mother Earth", and he was elected consul.

Mothering Sunday. MID-LENT SUNDAY, LATARE SUNDAY, when the POPE blesses the golden rose, children feast on mothering cakes and SIMNEL CAKES. A bunch of violets is emblematic of this day, and it is customary for children to give small presents to their mothers. It is said that it is derived from the ancient custom of visiting the MOTHER CHURCH on that day: but to school-children it meant a holiday, when they went home to spend the day with their mother or parents.

The Mother of Believers. Among Mohammedans, AYESHA, the second and favourite wife of MOHAMMED, who was called the "Father of Believers". Mohammed's widows are also sometimes called "mothers of believers".

The Mother of Cities (Umm-al-Bulud). Balkh is so called.

Mother of Presidents. The state of Virginia. George Washington, first President of the U.S.A. (1789-1796), was a Virginian.

Mother's Day. In the U.S.A. the second Sunday in MAY is observed to remember one's mother by some act of grateful affection. In schools the preceding Friday is so observed. Cp. MOTHERING SUNDAY.

Mothers' meeting. A meeting of mothers held periodically in connexion with some church or denomination, at which the women can get advice or religious instruction, drink tea, gossip, and sometimes do needlework. Hence, facetiously, a gossiping group of people—men as well as women.

Mother's ruin. A nickname for GIN.

Mothers' Union. A CHURCH OF ENGLAND women's society to safeguard and strengthen Christian family life, to uphold the lifelong vows of marriage, and generally to play a proper part in the life of the Church. It was incorporated by Royal Charter in 1926 and generally operates as a parish institution.

Does your mother know you're out? A jeering remark addressed to a presumptuous youth or to a simpleton. It is the title of a comic poem published in the Mirror, 28 April 1838. It became a catch phrase both in England and America and occurs in Barham's Ingoldsby Legends (Misadventures at Margate).

Oh mother, look at Dick! Said in derision when someone is showing off, or doing something easy with the intent of being applauded for his skill.

Tied to one's mother's apron-strings. See under APRON.

Mother-of-pearl. The inner iridescent layers of the shells of many bivalve molluscs, especially that of the pearl oyster.

Mother-sick. Hysterical. Hysteria in women used to be known as "the mother". It also means "pining for one's mother".

She [Lady Bountiful] cures rheumatisms, ruptures and broken shins in men; green sickness, obstructions, and fits of the mother in women; the king's evil . . . etc.

FARQUHAR: The Beaux' Strategem, I, i.

Mother-wit. Native wit, a ready reply; the wit which "our mother gave us".

Motion. The laws of motion, according to Galileo and Newton, are:

(1) If no force acts on a body in motion, it will continue to move uniformly in a straight line.

(2) If force acts on a body, it will produce a change of motion proportionate to the force, and in the same direction (as that in which the force acts).

(3) When one body exerts force on another, that other body reacts on it with equal and opposite force.

Motley. Men of Motley. Licensed fools; so called from their dress.

Motley's the only wear.

SHAKESPEARE: As You Like It, II, vii.

Motu proprio (Lat.). Of one's own motion; of one's own accord. Always applied to a rescript drawn up and issued by the POPE on his own initiative without the advice of others, and signed by him.

Mountain. The Mountain (Fr. La montagne). The JACOBINS and extremists in the National Assembly at the time of the French Revolution, so called because they occupied the topmost benches on the left. Among its leaders were Robespierre, Danton, Marat, Collot-d'Herbois, Camille Desmoulins, Carnot, and St. Just. They gained ascendancy in the CONVENTION, supporting the execution of the king and the REIGN OF TERROR. The terms Montagnard and Jacobin were synonymous. Extreme RADICALS in France are still called Montagnards. Cp. PLAIN.

The Mountain, on the other hand, was resolved, less from ferocity than from calculation, that the king should die.

LOUIS MADELIN:

The French Revolution, ch. xxv.

Mountain Ash. See ROWAN.

Mountain-devil. The thorn lizard or thorn devil, Moloch horridus, a native of Australia, a grotesque and hideous reptile.

Tasmanians are nicknamed mountain-devils, and also called Tassies and Apple-islanders.

Mountain dew. Scotch whisky; formerly that from illicit stills hidden away in the mountains. Cp. MOONSHINE.

If the mountain will not come to Mohammed. See under MOHAMMED.

The mountain in labour. A mighty effort made for a small effect. The allusion is to the celebrated line "Parturiunt montes, nascetur ridiculus mus" (Ars Poetica, 139), which HORACE took from a Greek proverb preserved by Athenæus.

The story is that the Egyptian king, Tachos, sustained a long war against Artaxerxes Ochus, and sent to the Lacedæmonians for aid. King Agesilaus went with a contingent, but when Tachos saw a little, ill-dressed, lame man, he said: "Parturiebat mons: formidabat Jupiter; ille vero murem peperit." ("The mountains laboured, JUPITER stood aghast, and a mouse ran out.") Agesilaus replied, "You call me a mouse, but I will soon show you I am a lion."

Creech translates Horace, "The travelling mountain yields a silly mouse"; and Boileau, "La montagne en travail enfante une souris".

The Old Man of the Mountains (Sheikh-al-Jebal). Hasan ibn-al-Sabbah, or Hassan ben Sabbah, the founder of the ASSASSINS, who made his stronghold in the mountain fastnesses of Lebanon. He led an Ismaili revival against the SELJUKS and by the end of the 11th century his terrorists were well established throughout Persia and Iraq.

To make mountains out of molehills. To make a difficulty of trifles. Arcem ex cloaca facere. The corresponding French proverb is, Faire d'une mouche un éléphant.

Mountebank (Ital. montabanco). A vendor of quack medicines at FAIRS, etc., who attracts the crowd by his tricks and antics; hence any CHARLATAN or self-advertising pretender. The BANK, or bench, was the counter on which traders displayed their goods, and street-vendors used to mount on their bank to patter to the public.

Mourning. Black. To express the privation of light and joy, the midnight gloom of sorrow for the loss sustained. The colour of mourning in Europe; also in ancient Greece and the Roman Empire.

Black and white striped. To express sorrow and hope. The mourning of the South Sea Islanders.

Greyish-brown. The colour of the earth to which the dead return.

Pale brown. The colour of withered leaves. The mourning of Persia.

Sky blue. To express the assured hope that the deceased has gone to HEAVEN; used in Syria, Armenia, etc.

Deep blue. The colour of mourning in Bokhara, also that of the Romans of the Republic.

Purple and violet. To express royalty, "kings and priests to God". The colour of mourning for CARDINALS and the kings of France; in Turkey the colour is violet.

White. Emblem of "white-handed hope". Used by the ladies of ancient ROME and Sparta, also in Spain till the end of the 15th century. Henry VIII wore white for Anne Boleyn.

Yellow. The sere and yellow leaf. The colour of mourning in Egypt and in Burma, where also it is the colour of the monastic order. In Brittany, widows' caps among the paysannes are yellow. Anne Boleyn wore yellow mourning for Katharine of Aragon. Some say yellow is in token of exaltation. See also BLACK CAP.

Mournival. See GLEEK.

Mouse. The soul was often anciently supposed to pass at death through the mouth of man in some animal form, sometimes a mouse or rat. A red mouse indicated a pure soul; a black mouse, a polluted soul; a pigeon or dove, a saintly soul.

Mouse is also slang for a black eye, and was formerly a common term of endearment, like bird, birdie, duckie, and lamb.

"God bless you, mouse," the bridegroom said,
And smakt her on the lips.

WARNER: Albion's England, II, x (1592).

It's a bold mouse that nestles in the cat's ear. Said of one who is taking an unnecessary risk. The proverb appears in Herbert's Collection (1640).

Poor as a church mouse. See POOR.

The mouse that hath but one hole is quickly taken. Have two strings to your bow. The proverb occurs in Herbert's Collection (1640) and in many European languages. In Latin it was Mus non uni fidit antro, the mouse does not trust to one hole.

When the cat's away the mice will play. See under CAT.

The Mouse Tower. A mediæval watch-tower on the Rhine, near Bingen, so called from the tradition that Archbishop HATTO was there devoured by mice. Actually it was built by Bishop Siegfried 200 years after Hatto's death, as a toll-house. The German Maut means "toll" (mouse is Maus), and the similarity of these words together with the unpopularity of the toll on corn gave rise to the legend.

Mousterian. A name given to the epoch of NEANDERTHAL MAN, from the cave of Le Moustier near Les Eyzies, on the right bank of the Vézère in France, where PALÆOLITHIC remains were found.

Mouth Down in the mouth. See DOWN.

His heart was in his mouth. See under HEART.

His mouth was made. He was trained or reduced to obedience, like a horse trained to the bit.

At first, of course, the fireworker showed fight . . . but in the end "his mouth was made", his paces formed, and he became a very servicable and willing animal.

LE FANU: House in the Churchyard, ch. xcix.

Hold your mouth! or Stop your mouth! A rougher equivalent of "hold your tongue"; be silent.

That makes my mouth water. The fragrance of appetizing food excites the salivary glands. The phrase means—that makes me long for it or desire it.

To be born with a silver spoon in one's mouth. See under BORN.

To laugh on the wrong side of one's mouth. See under LAUGH.

To live from hand to mouth. See under HAND.

To look a gift horse in the mouth. See GIFT-HORSE.

To make a mouth. To pull a wry face, to pout; to distort one's mouth in mockery.

To mouth one's words. To talk affectedly or pompously; to declaim.

He mouths a sentence as curs mouth a bone.

CHURCHILL: The Rosciad, 322.

To open one's mouth wide. To name too high a price; to strain after too big a prize.

To place oneself, or one's head in the lion's mouth. See under LION.

Moutons. Revenons à nos moutons (Fr., "Let us come back to our sheep"). A phrase used to express "let us return to the subject". It is taken from the 14th century French comedy La Farce de Maitre Pathelin, or l'Avocat Pathelin (line 1282), in which a woollen-draper charges a shepherd with ill-treating his sheep. In telling his story he continually ran away from the subject; and to throw discredit on the defendant's attorney (Pathelin), accused him of stealing a piece of cloth. The judge had to pull him up every moment, with "Mais, mon ami, revenons à nos moutons". The phrase is frequently quoted by Rabelais. See ENFANS SANS SOUCI, under SANS SOUCI.

Movable. The first movable. See PRIMUM MOBILE.

Movable Feasts. Annual church feasts which do not fall on a fixed date but are determined by certain established rules. EASTER Day is a notable example.

Move. Give me where to stand, and I will move the world. So said ARCHIMEDES of Syracuse; and the instrument he would have used is the lever.

To move the adjournment of the House (i.e. the HOUSE OF COMMONS). The House normally adjourns at the end of a day's sitting until the next day and motions of adjournment were formerly much used to hold up business. This form of obstruction is now prevented by STANDING ORDERS (see under STAND), etc. It is still open to a member "to move the adjournment on a definite matter of urgent public importance", although now a rare occurrence, and it can be disallowed by the SPEAKER. It is also customary to leave half an hour at the end of the day to allow M.P.s to raise matters "on the adjournment", thus giving scope for general debate and criticism. Occasionally the Government moves the adjournment after question-time as a concession to the Opposition and Private Members, thus leaving the day for discussion.

To move the previous question. See under QUESTION.

Mow (mō). The three mows in English are wholly distinct words. Mow, a heap of hay, etc. ("the barley-mow"), is O.E. mūga, connected with Icel. mūge, a swath. Mow, to cut down grass, corn, etc., is O.E. māwan connected with Ger. māhen, Gr. amān, and Lat. mētere, to reap. Mow, to grimace (in "mops and mows"), is Fr. moue, a pout or a grimace.

M.R.A. See MORAL RE-ARMAMENT.

Much. The miller's son in the ROBIN HOOD stories. In the MORRIS-DANCE he played the part of the Fool, and his great feat was to bang the head of the gaping spectators with a bladder of peas.

Muckle. Many a mickle makes a muckle. See under LITTLE.

Muddied Oafs. Footballers. See FLANNELLED FOOLS.

Muff. One who is awkward at games and sports, or who is effeminate, dull or stupid; probably a sneering allusion to the use of muffs to keep one's hands warm. The term does not seem to be older than the early 19th century, but there is a Sir Harry Muff in Dudley's interlude, The Rival Candidates (1774), a stupid, blundering dolt.

Muffins and Crumpets. Muffins is probably Fr. pain-moufflet, soft bread. Du Cange describes the panis mofletus as bread of a more delicate nature than ordinary, for the use of PREBENDS, etc., and says it was made fresh every day. Crumpets is a word of ancient but unknown origin; crumpet is also slang for the head, also a "bit of stuff".

Mufti. An Arabic word meaning an official expounder of the KORAN and Moham-medan law: thus the Mufti of JERUSALEM is the chief religious official of the Moslems of Jerusalem; but used in English to denote civil, as distinct from military or official costume. Our meaning dates from the early 19th century, and probably arose from the resemblance that the flowered dressing-gown and tasselled smoking-cap, worn by off-duty officers in their quarters, bore to the stage get-up of an Eastern Mufti.

As soon as our morning talks were done I gobbled a hasty luncheon, changed into plain clothes (we were taught to abhor the word 'mufti', and such abominable expressions as 'civvies' were in those days unknown).

W. S. CHURCHILL: My Early Life, ch. iv.

Mug. The word is used as slang for "face" and also for one who is easily taken in, possibly coming from the GYPSY meaning a simpleton or MUFF. To mug up, meaning to study hard for a specific purpose, e.g. to pass an examination, is an old university phrase. It has been suggested that it comes from the theatre where an actor, while making up his face or "mug", would hurriedly con over his lines.

Mug-house. An ale-house was so called in the 18th century where many people gathered in the large tap-room to drink, sing and spout, one of their number being made chairman. Ale was served to the company in their own mugs, and the place where the mug was to stand was chalked on the table.

Muggins. Slang for a fool or simpleton—a juggins. Possibly an allusion to MUG.

Muggletonian. A follower of Lodovic Muggleton (1609–1698), a journeyman tailor, who, about 1651, set up for a prophet. He was sentenced for blasphemous writings to stand in the pillory, and was fined £500. The members of the sect, which maintained some existence until c. 1865, believed that their two founders, Muggleton and John Reeve, were the “two witnesses” spoken of in Rev. xi, 3.

Mugwump. An Algonkin word meaning a chief; in Eliot’s Indian BIBLE the word “centurion” in the Acts is rendered mugwump. It is now applied in the U.S.A. to independent members of the Republican Party, those who refuse to follow the dictates of a CAUCUS, and all political PHARISEES whose party vote cannot be relied upon. It is also used in the sense of “big shot” or “BOSS”.

Mulatto (mū lāt’ ō) (Span., from mulo, a mule). The offspring of a Negress by a white man; loosely applied to any half-breed. Cp. CREOLE.

Sally Brown, she’s a bright mulatter,
Way-ay-y, Roll and go,
She drinks rum and chews terbaccer,
Spend my money on Sally Brown.

Sea Shanty.

Mulberry. Fable has it that the fruit was originally white and became blood-red from the blood of PYRAMUS and Thisbe. The botanical name is Morus, from Gr. moros, a fool; so called, we are told in the Hortus Anglicus, because “it is reputed the wisest of all flowers, as it never buds till the cold weather is past and gone.”

It is the symbol of prudence and as such was adopted by Ludovico Sforza, Duke of Milan (1451–1508), as his emblem. Hence his name Il Moro.

In the SEVEN CHAMPIONS (Pt. I, ch. iv), Eglantine, daughter of the King of Thessaly, was transformed into a mulberry-tree.

In World War II Mulberry was the code name given to the prefabricated ports towed across to the Normandy coast to make possible the supply of the Allied armies in France in 1944 consequent upon the D-DAY landings. Submersible sections of concrete formed a breakwater and quay alongside which the transports were unloaded. The name was chosen at the time because it was the next in rotation on the British Admiralty’s list of names available for warships. Two such Mulberries were set up, but the one serving the U.S. beaches was wrecked by a storm (19 June); that serving the British beaches was kept in service until Antwerp became available.

Here we go round the mulberry bush. An old game in which children take hand and dance round in a ring, singing the song of which this is the refrain.

Mulciber. Among the Romans, a name of VULCAN; it means the softener, because he softened metals.

And round about him [Mammon] lay on every side
Great heaps of gold that never could be spent;
Of which some were rude ore, not purified
Of Mulciber’s devouring element.

SPENSER: The Faerie Queene, II, vii, 5.

Mule. The offspring of a male ASS and a mare; hence a hybrid between other animals (or plants), as a mule canary, a cross between a canary and a goldfinch. The offspring of a stallion and a she-ass is not, properly speaking a mule, but a himny.

Very stubborn or obstinate people are sometimes called mules, in allusion to the reputed characteristic of the beast.

Crompton’s mule, or the Spinning-mule, was invented by Samuel Crompton (1753–1827) in 1779. His invention was pirated at the outset and he derived little financial benefit from his efforts. It was so called because it was:

a kind of mixture of machinery between the warp-machine of Mr. Arkwright and the woof-machine or hand-jenny of Mr. Hargrave.

Encyclopædia Britannica, 1797.

To shoe one’s mule. To appropriate moneys committed to one’s trust.

He had the keeping and disposal of the moneys, and yet shod not his own mule.

History of Francion, III, (1655).

Mull. To make a mull of a job is to fail to do it properly. It is either a contraction of muddle, or from the old verb to mull, to reduce to powder.

Among Anglo-Indians members of the service in the Madras Presidency were known as Mulls. Here the word stands for mulligatawry.

Mulled ale. Ale spiced and warmed; similarly mulled wine, etc. Possibly from M.E. molde-ale, a funeral feast (molde, the earth, the grave), but the derivation is uncertain.

Mulla. The Bard of Mulla’s silver stream. So Spenser was called by Shensstone, because at one time his home in Ireland was on the banks of the Mulla, or Awbeg, a tributary of the Blackwater.

Mullah (Arab. maula). A title of respect given by Mohammedans to religious dignitaries versed in the sacred law.

The Mad Mullah. A nickname given to Mohammed bin Abdullah, a mullah who gave great trouble to the British in Somaliland at various times between 1899 and 1920. He claimed to be the MAHDI and made extensive raids on tribes friendly to the British. The DERVISH power was not finally broken until 1920 when the Mad Mullah escaped to Ethiopia, where he died in 1921.

Mulligan. The word has several colloquial uses in the U.S.A.: (1) a stew; (2) a nickname for an Irishman; (3) underworld term for a policeman; (4) a second drive, allowed by your opponent on the first tee of a round of golf if you miss the first one.

Mulmutine Laws. See MOLMUTINE.

Mulready Envelope. An envelope resembling a half-sheet of letter-paper when folded, having on the front an ornamental design by William Mulready (1786-1863), the artist. These were the stamped penny postage envelopes introduced in 1840 but the Mulreadies remained in circulation for one year only owing to ridicule of their ludicrous design. They are prized by stamp-collectors.

A set of those odd-looking envelope-things, where Britannia (who seems to be crucified) flings To her right and her left, funny people with wings Amongst elephants, Quakers, and Catabaw Kings,—

And a taper and wax, and small Queen's-heads in packs,

Which, when notes are too big, you're to stick on their backs.

BARHAM:
Ingoldsby Legends, II, A Row in an Omnibus (Box).

Multipliers. So alchemists, who pretended to multiply GOLD and SILVER, were called. An Act was passed (2 Henry IV, c. iv) making the "art of multiplication" a felony. In the Canterbury Tales (Canon's Yeoman's Tale), the Canon's YEOMAN says he was reduced to poverty by ALCHEMY, adding: "Lo, such advantage is't to multiply".

Multitude, Nouns of. Dame Juliana Berners, in her Booke of St. Albans (1486), says, in designating companies we must not use the names of multitudes promiscuously, and examples her remark thus:

"We say a congregacyon of people, a hoost of men, a feylshyppyng of yeomen, and a bevy of lades; we must speak of a herde of deer, swannys, crans, or wrenys, a sege of herons or bytours, a muster of peccoeces, a watche of nyghtyngales, a flyghte of doves, a claterynge of choughes, a pryde of lyons, a slewthe of beeres, a gagle of geys, a skulke of foxes, a sculle of frerys, a pontificaliye of prestys, and a superfluyte of nonnes."

She adds, that a strict regard to these niceties better distinguishes "gentylnen from ungentylmen", than regard to the rules of grammar, or even to the moral law. See ASSEMBLAGE, NOUNS OF.

Multum in parvo (Lat., much in little). Much "information" condensed into few words or into a small compass.

Mum. A strong beer made in Brunswick; said to be so called from Christian Mumme by whom it was first brewed in the late 15th century.

Mum's the word. Keep what is told you a profound secret. See MUMCHANCE.

Seal up your lips, and give no words but—mum.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. II, I, ii.

To keep mum. To keep silent; not to speak or to tell anyone.

Mumbudget. An old exclamation meaning "Silence, please"; perhaps from a children's game in which silence was occasionally necessary. Cp. BUDGET; DRY; MUMCHANCE.

Have these bones rattled, and this head
So often in thy quarrel bled?
Nor did I ever wince or grudge it,
For thy dear sake. Quoth she, Mumbudget.
BUTLER: Hudibras, I, iii, 208.

Mumchance. Silence. Mumchance was a game of chance with dice, in which silence was indispensable. Mum is connected with mumble (Ger. mummeln; Dan. mumle, to mumble). Cp. MUM-BUDGET.

Also one who has nothing to say—

Methinks you look like Mumchance, that was hanged
For saying nothing.

SWIFT: Polite Conversation, i.

Mumbo Jumbo. The name given by Europeans (possibly from some lost native word) to a BOGY or grotesque idol venerated by certain African tribes; hence any object of blind unreasoning worship.

Mungo Park, in his Travels in the Interior of Africa (1795-1797), says (ch. iii) that Mumbo Jumbo "is a strange bugbear, common to all Mandingo towns, and much employed by the Pagan natives in keeping their wives in subjection". When the ladies of the household become too quarrelsome, Mumbo Jumbo is called in. He may be the husband or his agent suitably disguised, who comes at nightfall making hideous noises. When the women have been assembled and songs and dances performed "Mumbo fixes on the offender", she is "stripped naked, tied to a post, and severely scourged with Mumbo's rod, amidst the shouts and derision of the whole assembly."

Mummer. A contemptuous name for an actor; from the parties that formerly went from house to house at CHRISTMAS-time mumming, i.e. giving a performance of St. GEORGE and the Dragon, and the like, in dumb-show.

Mummy

Peel'd, patch'd and piebald, linsey-woolsey brothers,
Grave mummies! sleeveless some, and shirtless others.

POPE: Dunciad, III, 115.

Mummy is the Arabic mum, wax used for embalming; from the custom of anointing the body with wax and preparing it for burial.

Mummy wheat. Wheat (Triticum compositum) commonly grown on the southern shores of the Mediterranean, the seed of which is traditionally said to have been taken from ancient Egyptian tombs.

Mumpers. Beggars; from the old slang to mump, to cheat or to sponge on others; probably from Dut. mompnen, to cheat. In Norwich, Christmas WAITS used to be called "Mumpers".

A parcel of wretches hopping about by the assistance of their crutches, like so many Lincoln's Inn Fields mumpers, drawing into a body to attack the coach of some charitable lord.

NED WARD: The London Spy, Pt. V.

Mumping Day. St. THOMAS'S Day, 21 December, is so called in some parts of the country, because on this day the poor used to go about begging, or, as it was called, "a-gooding", that is, getting gifts to procure good things for CHRISTMAS, or begging corn. In Lincolnshire, the name used to be applied to BOXING DAY; in Warwickshire, the term used was "going-a-corning".

Mumpsimus. Robert Graves, in Impenetrability, gives this word as an example of the practice of making new words by declaration. With the meaning, "an erroneous doctrinal view obstinately adhered to", mumpsimus was put into currency by Henry VIII in a speech from the throne in 1545. He remarked, "Some be too stiff in their old mumpsimus, others be too busy and curious in their sumpsimus." He referred to a familiar story in the jest-books of a priest who always read in the MASS "quod in ore mumpsimus" instead of "sumpsimus", as his MISSAL was incorrectly copied. When his mistake was pointed out, he said that he had read it with an m for forty years, "and I will not change my old mumpsimus for your new sumpsimus." The word is now used to mean "an established manuscript-reading that, though obviously incorrect, is retained blindly by old-fashioned scholars".

Münchhausen, Baron (min' chou zen). Karl Friedrich Hieronymus, Baron Münchhausen (1720-1797) served in the Russian army against the Turks, and after his retirement told extraordinary stories of his war adventures. Rudolf Erich Raspe (1737-1794), a German scientist, antiquarian and writer, collected these tales, and when living in England as a mining engineer, published them in 1785 as Baron Münchhausen's Narrative of his Marvellous Travels and Campaigns in Russia. The text of Münchhausen as reprinted latterly contains Sea Adventures, an account of Baron de Tott (a character founded on a real French Hussar) partly written by Raspe, and much additional matter from various sources by other hands.

Mundane Egg. See EGG.

Mundungus. Bad tobacco; originally offal or refuse, from Span. mondongo, black pudding.

In Sterne's Sentimental Journey (1768), the word is used as a name for Samuel Sharp, a surgeon, who published Letters from Italy; and Smollett, who published Travels through France and Italy (1766), "one continual snarl", was called "Smel-fungus".

Mungo, St. An alternative name for St. KENTIGERN.

A superior kind of shoddy, made from second-hand woollens, is known as mungo.

Munich. Another Munich. A potentially disastrous, humiliating, or dishonourable act of appeasement or surrender. So called from the unfortunate act of appeasement, the Munich Pact or Agreement concluded between Great Britain, France, Germany, and Italy (30 September 1938) whereby the Sudetenland of Czechoslovakia was ceded to Germany.

Murderer's Bible, The. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Murrumbidgee Whaler. An Australian term for a tramp, the origin of which is obscure. Some derive the term from the fact that tramps camped for long periods by such rivers as the Murrumbidgee and then told lies about the fish or "whales" they had caught.

Muscadins. Parisian exquisites who aped those of London about the time of the French Revolution. They wore top-boots with long tails, and a high stiff collar, and carried a thick cudgel called a "constitution". It was thought "John Bullish" to assume a huskiness of voice, a discourtesy of manners, and a swaggering vulgarity of speech and behaviour.

Cockneys of London, Muscadins of Paris.

BYRON: Don Juan, viii, 124.

Muscular Christianity. Hearty or strong-minded Christianity, which braces a man to fight the battle of life bravely and manfully. The term was applied to the teachings of Charles Kingsley (1819-1875)—somewhat to his annoyance.

It is a school of which Mr. Kingsley is the ablest doctor; and its doctrine has been described fairly and cleverly as "muscular Christianity".
Edinburgh Review, Jan. 1858.

Muses. In Greek mythology the nine daughters of ZEUS and MNEMOSYNE; originally goddesses of memory only, but later identified with individual arts and sciences. The paintings of Herculaneum show all nine in their respective attributes. Their names are: CALLIOPE, CLIO, EUTERPE, THALIA, MELPOMENE, TERPSICHOPE, ERATO, POLYHYMNIA, URANIA. Three earlier Muses are sometimes given, i.e. Melete (Meditation), Mneme (Remembrance), and Aoide (Song).

Museum. Literally, a home or seat of the MUSES. The first building to have this name was the university erected at Alexandria by Ptolemy Soter about 300 B.C.

British Museum. See under BRITISH.

A museum piece. An object of historic or antiquarian interest and value, etc.; in a derogatory or facetious sense, any article which is antiquated or out of fashion, or an old-fashioned person.

Mushroom. Slang for an umbrella, on account of the similarity in shape; and as mushrooms are of very rapid growth, applied figuratively to anything that springs up "overnight", as a rapidly built housing estate, an upstart family, etc. In 1787, Bentham said, somewhat unjustly, "Sheffield is an oak; Birmingham is a mushroom."

To mushroom. To grow rapidly; to expand into a mushroom shape. Said especially of certain soft-nosed rifle bullets used in big-game shooting, or of a dense cloud of smoke that spreads out high in the sky, especially after an atomic explosion.

Music (Gr. mousikē, "art of the muses").

Father of Greek music. Terpander of Lesbos (fl. 676 B.C.).

Father of Modern Music. Mozart (1756-1791) has been so called.

Father of Musicians. Jubal, "the father of all such as handle the harp and organ" (Gen. iv, 21).

The Prince of Music. Giovanni Pierluigi da Palestrina (c. 1525-1594).

Music hath charms, etc. The opening line of Congreve's Mourning Bride.

Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast,
To soften rocks or bend a knotted oak.

The allusion is to ORPHEUS, who:

With his lute made trees,
And the mountain tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing,
SHAKESPEARE: Henry VIII, iii, i.

The music of the spheres. See under SPHERES.

To face the music. See under FACE.

Music Hall. This essentially popular form of variety entertainment had its origins in the "Free and Easy" of the public houses and in the song and supper rooms of early Victorian London. Food, drink, and the sing-song were its first ingredients and its patrons came from the working classes. The first music hall proper, the Canterbury, was opened in 1852 by Charles Morton (1819-1905), "the Father of the Halls", and a native of Hackney. It was specially built for the purpose, consequent upon the success of his musical evenings at the "Canterbury Arms", Lambeth, of which he became the landlord in 1849. Music Halls eventually became more numerous in London and the provinces than the regular theatres and such names as Palladium, Palace, Alhambra, Coliseum, Empire, Hippodrome, etc., proclaim their former glories. Their best days were before 1914, after which, revue, the cinema, wireless, and, later, television, helped to bring about their eclipse. They have left a legacy of popular ballad and song, and memories of a host of great entertainers whose fame depended upon the intrinsic qualities of their individual acts. Cp. EVANS'S SUPPER ROOMS.

Musical Small-coal man. Thomas Britton (c. 1654-1714), a coal-dealer of CLERKENWELL, who established a musical club in a shop in which all the musical celebrities of the day took part. The club met every Thursday night and was frequented by professional musicians such as Handel, talented amateurs such as Roger L'Estrange, and lovers of music generally.

Musits, or Musets (O.Fr. muce, a hiding-place). Gaps in a hedge, places through which a hare makes his way to escape the hounds, which is called musings.

The many musits through the which he goes
Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.
SHAKESPEARE: Venus and Adonis, 683.

Muslim. See MOSLEM.

Muspelheim. In Scandinavian mythology, the "Home of Brightness" to the south of NIFLHEIM, where Surt (black smoke) ruled with his flaming sword and where dwelt the sons of Muspel the fire giant.

Mussulman

Mussulman. A Mohammedan, a MOSLEM. The plural is Mussulmans.

Mustard. So called because originally must, new wine (Lat. mustus, fresh, new), was used in mixing the paste.

After meat, mustard. Expressive of the sentiment that something that would have been welcome a little earlier has arrived too late and is no longer wanted. C'est de la moutarde après dîner.

Must. To pass muster. To pass inspection; to "get by"; to be allowed to pass.

Mutantur. See TEMPORA MUTANTUR.

Mutatis mutandis (Lat. mutare, to change). After making the necessary changes; more literally, those things having been changed which were to be changed.

Mute, To stand. An old legal term for a prisoner who, when arraigned for treason or felony, refused to plead or gave irrelevant answers.

Mutton (Fr. mouton, sheep). In old slang, a prostitute, frequently extended to laced mutton.

Speed: Ay, sir: I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a laced mutton; and she, a laced mutton, gave me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labour.

SHAKESPEARE: Two Gentlemen of Verona, I, i.

The old lecher hath gotten holy mutton to him, a nunne, my lord.

GREENE: Friar Bacon.

It was with this meaning that John Wilmot, Earl of Rochester, wrote his mock epitaph on Charles II:

Here lies our mutton-eating king,
Whose word no man relies on;
He never said a foolish thing,
And never did a wise one.

Come and eat your mutton with me.
Come and dine with me.

Dead as mutton. Absolutely dead.

Mutton fist. A large, coarse red fist.

Mutton Lancers. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

To return to our muttons. See MOUTONS.

Mutual Friends. Can people have mutual friends? Strictly speaking not; but since Dickens adopted the solecism in the title of his novel Our Mutual Friend (1864), many people have objected to the correct term common friends. Mutual implies reciprocity from one to another (Lat. mutare, to change); the friendship between two friends should be mutual, but this mutuality cannot be extended to a third party.

Priest: A contract of eternal bond of love,
Confirmed by mutual joinder of your hands.
SHAKESPEARE: Twelfth Night, V, i.

Mynheer (min âr'). The Dutch equivalent for "Mr."; hence sometimes used for a Dutchman.

'Tis thus I spend my moments here,
And wish myself a Dutch mynheer.
COWPER: To Lady Austin.

Myrmidons (lit. ant people from Gk. myrmix) gained their name from the legend that when Ægina was depopulated by a plague its king, Æacus, prayed to JUPITER that the ants running out of an oak tree should be turned to men. According to one account they emigrated with Peleus to Thessaly, whence they followed ACHILLES to the siege of TROY. They were noted for their fierceness, diligence and devotion to their leader, hence their name is applied to a servant who carries out his orders remorselessly.

Myrmidons of the Law. Bailiffs, sheriffs' officers, policemen, and other servants of the law. Any rough fellow employed to annoy another is the employer's myrmidon.

Myron. A famous Greek sculptor noted for his realistic statues of gods, heroes, athletes, and animals. It is said that he made a cow so lifelike that even bulls were deceived and made their approaches. He was an older contemporary of Phidias.

Myrrha. The mother of ADONIS, in Greek legend. She is fabled to have had an unnatural love for her own father, and to have been changed into a MYRTLE. The resinous juice called myrrh is obtained from the Arabian myrtle (Balsamodendron myrrha).

Myrrophores (Gr., myrrh-bearers). The Marys who went to see the sepulchre, bearing spices, are represented in Christian art as carrying vases of myrrh (see Mark xvi, 1).

Myrtle. A leaf of myrtle, viewed in a strong light, is seen to be pierced with innumerable little punctures. According to fable, PHÆDRA, wife of THESEUS, fell in love with HIPPOLYTUS, her stepson. When Hippolytus went to the arena to exercise his horses, Phædra repaired to a myrtle-tree in Træzen to await his return, and beguiled the time by piercing the leaves with a hairpin.

In ORLANDO FURIOSO Astolpho is changed into a myrtle-tree by Acrisia. Cp. MYRRHA.

The ancient Jews believed that the eating of myrtle leaves conferred the power of detecting witches; and it was a superstition that if the leaves crackled in the hands the person beloved would prove faithful.

The myrtle which dropped blood.

ÆNEAS (Virgil's Æneid, Bk. III) tells the story of how he tore up a myrtle to decorate a sacrificial altar, but was terrified to find it dripped blood, while a voice came from the ground saying, "Spare me, now that I am in my grave." It was that of Polydorus, the youngest son of PRIAM and HECUBA, who had been murdered with darts and arrows for the GOLD he possessed. The deed was perpetrated by Polymnestor, King of Thrace, to whose care Polydorus had been entrusted.

Mysteries of Udolpho. A romance by Mrs. Radcliffe (1764–1823), which was published in 1794 and founded the so-called "terror school" of English Romanticism, though Walpole's Castle of Otranto (1764) had broken the ground. Cp. FRANKENSTEIN.

Mysterium. The letters of this word, which, until the time of the REFORMATION, was engraved on the Pope's tiara, are said to make up the number 666. See NUMBER OF THE BEAST.

And upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.

Rev. xvii, 5.

Mystery. In English two distinct words are represented: mystery, the archaic term for a handicraft, as in the art and mystery of printing, is the same as the Fr. métier (trade, craft, profession), and is the M.E. místere, from Med. Lat. misterium, ministerium, ministry. Mystery, meaning something hidden, inexplicable, or beyond human comprehension, is from Lat. mysterium (through French) and Gr. mústês, from muen, to close the eyes or lips.

It is from this latter sense that the old miracle plays, mediæval dramas in which the characters and story were drawn from sacred history, came to be called Mysteries, though they were frequently presented by members of a guild or mystery. Miracle plays (as they were called at the time) developed from liturgical pageantry, especially in the CORPUS CHRISTI processions, and were taken over by the laity. They were performed in the streets on a wheeled stage or on stages erected along a processional route, and non-Biblical subjects were also introduced. They flourished in England from the 13th to the 15th century but MORALITY PLAYS continued into the 16th century.

Mysteries of the Rosary. The fifteen subjects of meditation from the life of Christ and the Blessed Virgin Mary, connected with the decades of the ROSARY. The three greater mysteries. The TRINITY, Original Sin, and the Incarnation.

Myton, The Chapter of Myton. So the battle of Myton (1319) in Yorkshire was called, when the clergy led out their flocks to repel the Scottish invaders. Many were slain and the Scots devastated the area.

N

N. The fourteenth letter of our alphabet; represented in Egyptian hieroglyphic by a water-line (~~). It was called nun (a fish) in Phœnician, whence the Greek nu. N, a numeral. Gr. $\nu = 50$, but $\rho = 50,000$. N (Med. Lat.) = 90, or 900, but $\bar{N} = 90,000$, or 900,000.

n. The sign ~ (tilde) over an "n" indicates that the letter is to be pronounced as though followed by a "y", as cañon = canyon. It is used thus almost solely in words from Spanish. In Portuguese the accent (called til) is placed over vowels to indicate that they have a nasal value.

nth, or nth plus one. The expression is taken from the index of a mathematical formula, where n stands for any number, and n+1, one more than any number. Hence, n-dimensional, having an indefinite number of dimensions, n-tuple (on the analogy of quadruple, quintuple, etc.), having an indefinite number of duplications.

n ephelkustic. The Greek nu (ν) added for euphony to the end of a word that terminates with a vowel when the next word in the sentence begins with a vowel.

N or M. The answer given to the first question in the CHURCH OF ENGLAND Catechism; and it means that here the person being catechized gives his or her name or names. Lat. nomen vel nomina. The abbreviation for the plural nomina was—as usual—the doubled initial (cp. "LL.D." for Doctor of Laws); and this when printed (as it was in old Prayer Books) in BLACK-LETTER and close together, Ń. Ń. came to be taken for Ń.

In the same way the N, in the marriage-service ("I M. take thee N. to my wedded wife") merely indicates that the name is to be spoken in each case; but the M. and N. in the publication of banns ("I publish the BANNS OF MARRIAGE between M. of — and N. of —") stand for maritus, bridegroom, and nupta, bride.

N.B. (Lat. nota bene). Note well.

N.K.V.D. See OGPU.

Nab. Colloquial for to seize suddenly, without warning. (Cp. Norw. and Swed. nappa; Dan. nappe.) Hence nabman, a sheriff's officer or police constable.

Ay, but so be if a man's nabbed, you know.
GOLDSMITH: The Good-natured Man, III.

Nabob (nā' bob). Corruption of the Hind. nawab, deputy-governor; used of the governor or ruler of a province under the MOGUL Empire. Such men acquired great wealth and lived in splendour and eventually became independent princes. The name was sarcastically applied in the late 18th century to servants of the English East India Company who retired to England, having made their fortunes, bought estates and acquired seats in PARLIAMENT, etc.

Nabonassar, Era of. An era that was in use for centuries by the Chaldean astronomers, and was generally followed by Hipparchus and Ptolemy. It commenced at midday, Wednesday, 26 February, 747 B.C., the date of the accession of Nabonassar (d. 733 B.C.) as King of Babylonia. The year consisted of 12 months of 30 days each, with 5 complementary days added at the end. As no INTERCALARY day was allowed for, the first day of the year fell one day earlier every four years than the JULIAN year; consequently, to transpose a date from one era to another it is necessary to know the exact day and month of the Nabonassarian date, and to remember that 1,460 Julian years are equal to 1,461 Babylonian.

Naboth's Vineyard. The possession of another coveted by one who will use any means, however unscrupulous, to acquire it. (I Kings xxi.)

Nabu. See NEBO.

Nadir (nād' ir). An Arabic word, signifying that point in the heavens which is directly opposite to the ZENITH, i.e. directly under our feet; hence, figuratively, the lowest point in one's fortunes, the lowest depths of degradation, etc.

Nævius. See ACCIUS NÆVIUS.

Nag's Head Consecration. An early 17th-century story designed to deride the validity of the APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION in the CHURCH OF ENGLAND and in particular the validity of Archbishop Parker's consecration. The story is, that on the passing of the Act of Uniformity of 1559 in Queen Elizabeth's reign, 14 bishops vacated their sees, and all the other sees were vacant except that of Llandaff, whose bishop refused to officiate at Parker's consecration. He was therefore irregularly consecrated at the "Nag's Head" tavern, in Cheapside, by John Scory who had been deprived of the SEE of Chichester under Mary. In fact the consecration took place at LAMBETH PALACE on 17 December 1559 by four bishops who had held sees under Edward VI (Barlow, Scory, Coverdale, and Hodgkin). Those who took part in the consecration apparently dined at the "Nag's Head" afterwards. The story was first put about in 1604 by C. Holywood, a JESUIT.

Naiad (nī' ād). In classical mythology, a NYMPH of lake, fountain, river, or stream.

You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the wand'ring brooks,
With your sedg'd crowns, and ever-harmless looks,
Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land
Answer your summons: Juno does command.
SHAKESPEARE: The Tempest, IV, i.

Nail. A nail was formerly a measure of weight of 8 lb. It was used for wool, hemp, beef, cheese, etc. It was also a measure of length of 2½ inches.

Motto: You shall have . . . a dozen beards, to stuffe two dozen cushions.
Licio: Then they be big ones.
Dello: They be halfe a yard broad, and a nayle, three quarters long, and a foote thick.
LYLY: Midas, V, ii (1592).

In ancient ROME a nail was driven into the wall of the temple of JUPITER every 13 September. This was originally done to tally the year, but subsequently it became a religious ceremony for warding off calamities and plagues from the city. Originally the nail was driven by the prætor maximus, subsequently by one of the consuls, and lastly by the dictator (see Livy, VII, iii).

In World War I patriotic Germans drove nails into a large wooden statue of Field-Marshal Hindenburg, buying each nail in support of a national fund.

The nails with which Our Lord was fastened to the Cross were, in the MIDDLE AGES, objects of great reverence. Sir John Mandeville says, "He had two in his hondes, and two in his feet; and of on of theise the emperour of Constantynoble made a brydille to his hors, to bere him in bataylle; and throghe vertue thereof he overcam his enemyes" (c. viii). Fifteen are shown as relics. See IRON CROWN OF LOMBARDY under CROWN.

For want of a nail. "For want of a nail, the shoe is lost; for want of a shoe, the horse is lost; for want of a horse, the rider is lost." (Herbert: Jacula Prudentum).

Hard as nails. Stern, hard-hearted, unsympathetic; able to stand hard blows like nails. The phrase is used with both a physical and a figurative sense; a man in perfect training is "as hard as nails", and bigotry, straitlacedness, rigid puritanical pharisaism, make people "hard as nails".

Hung on the nail. Put in pawn. A reference to the old custom of hanging each pawn on a nail, with a number attached, and giving the customer a duplicate thereof.

I nailed him, or it. I pinned him, meaning I secured him, I fixed his attention or "got hold of him". Is. (xxii, 23) says, "I will fasten him as a nail in a sure place."

On the nail. Immediately, on the spot, as in, to pay on the nail. One meaning of nail (possibly from mediæval times) denoted a shallow vessel mounted on a stand and business was concluded by payment into the vessel. It may have been so named from the rough resemblance of the stand to a nail's shape. Outside the Corn Exchange at Bristol such "nails" or pillars can still be seen. (Cp. SUPERNACULUM.)

Nail drives out nail. A new interest or desire replaces what was previously felt for its predecessor; from the practice of using a new nail as a punch to drive out the old. An ancient proverb.

To drive a nail into one's coffin. See under COFFIN.

To hit the nail on the head. See under HEAD.

To nail to the counter. To convict and expose as false or spurious; as, "I nailed that lie to the counter at once." From the custom of shopkeepers nailing to the counter false money that was passed to them as a warning to others.

With colours nailed to the mast. See under COLOURS.

With tooth and nail. See under TOOTH.

Nail-paring. Superstitious people are particular as to the day on which they cut their nails. The old rhyme is:

Cut them on Monday, you cut them for health;
Cut them on Tuesday, you cut them for wealth;
Cut them on Wednesday, you cut them for news;
Cut them on Thursday, a new pair of shoes;
Cut them on Friday, you cut them for sorrow;
Cut them on Saturday, you see your true love tomorrow;
Cut them on Sunday, your safety seek,
The devil will have you the rest of the week.

Another rhyme conveys an even stronger warning on the danger of nail-cutting on a Sunday:

A man had better ne'er be born
As have his nails on a Sunday shorn.

Nain Rouge (nān roozh) (Fr., red dwarf). A LUTIN or house spirit of Normandy, kind to fishermen. There is another called Le petit homme rouge (the little red man).

Naked. O.E. nacod, connected with Lat. nudus, nude. Destitute of covering; hence, figuratively, defenceless, exposed; without extraneous assistance, as with the naked eye, i.e. without telescope or binoculars, etc.

Naked boy, or lady. The meadow saffron (Colchicum autumnale); so called because, like the almond, peach, etc., the flowers come out before the leaves. It is poetically called "the leafless orphan of the year", the flowers being orphaned or destitute of foliage.

The Naked Boy Courts, and Alleys, of which there are more than one in the City of London, are named from the PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGN of CUPID.

The naked truth. The plain, unvarnished truth; truth without trimmings. The fable says that Truth and Falsehood went bathing; Falsehood came first out of the water, and dressed herself in Truth's garments. Truth, unwilling to take those of Falsehood, went naked.

Namby-pamby. Wishy-washy; insipid, weakly sentimental; said especially of authors. It was the nickname of Ambrose Philips (1674-1749), bestowed on him by Henry Carey, the dramatist, for his verses addressed to Lord Carteret's children, and was adopted by Pope. It is also applied to a MOLLY CODDLE.

Name.

What's in a name? That which we call a rose
By any other name would smell as sweet.
SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, II, ii.

A name to conjure with. A very famous name, one of great influence. To conjure a name was to evoke a spirit. Thus Shakespeare says (Julius Cæsar, I, iii):

Write them together, yours is as fair a name;
Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well;
Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with 'em,
Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cæsar.

Give a dog a bad name. See under DOG.

Give it a name. Tell me what it is you would like; said when offering a reward, a drink, etc.

In the name of. In reliance upon; or by the authority of.

Their name liveth for evermore. These consolatory words, frequently used on war memorials, are from the APOCRYPHA:

Their bodies are buried in peace; but their name liveth for evermore.

Ecclesiasticus xliiv, 14.

To call a person names. To black-guard him by derogatory nicknames, or hurling opprobrious epithets at him.

Sticks and stones
May break my bones
But words can never hurt me.

Old Rhyme.

To lend one's name to. To authorize the use of one's name in support of a cause, venture, etc.

To name the day. To fix the day of the wedding—a privilege of the bride-to-be.

To take God's name in vain. To use it profanely, thoughtlessly, or irreverently.

Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.—Exod. xx, 7.

Among primitive peoples, as well as the ancient Hebrews, the name of a deity is regarded as his manifestation, and is treated with the greatest respect and veneration. See ADONAI. Among savage tribes there is a reluctance in disclosing one's name because this might enable an enemy by magic to work one some deadly injury; the Greeks were particularly careful to disguise or reverse uncomplimentary names. See ERINYES; EUMENIDES; EUXINE.

Nana. In the story of PETER PAN, the gentle and faithful old dog who always looked after the children of the Darling family. When Mr. Darling played a trick on Nana by giving her unpleasant medicine, which he himself had promised to drink, the family did not appreciate his humour. This put him out of temper and Nana was chained up in the yard before he went out for the evening. As a consequence Peter Pan effected an entry into the children's bedroom. See IN THE DOGHOUSE under DOG.

Nancy, Miss. An effeminate, foppish youth. The celebrated actress "Mrs." Anne Oldfield (see NARCISSA) was nicknamed "Miss Nancy".

Nancy Boy. A homosexual.

Nankeen. So called from Nankin in China. It is the natural yellow colour of Nankin cotton. Nankeens are trousers made from this fabric.

Nantes (nänt). An old name for brandy, from its manufacture there.

Edict of Nantes. The decree of Henry IV of France, published from Nantes in 1598, giving guarantees to the HUGUENOTS and permitting them rights of worship in named towns, etc. The edict was revoked by Louis XIV in 1685. See DRAGONNADES.

Nap. The doze or short sleep gets its name from O.E. hnæppian, to sleep lightly; the surface of cloth is so called from Mid. Dut. noppe; and Nap, the card game, is so called in honour of NAPOLEON III.

To be caught napping. See under CATCH.

To go nap. To set oneself to make five tricks (all one can) in the game of NAP; hence, to risk all you have on some venture, to back it through thick and thin.

Naphtha (näf' thá). The Greek name for an inflammable, bituminous substance coming from the ground in certain districts; in the MEDEA legend it is the name of the drug used by the witch for anointing the wedding robe of Glauce, daughter of King Creon, whereby she was burnt to death on the morning of her marriage with JASON.

Napier's Bones. The calculating square rods of bone, ivory, or boxwood with numerical tables on each of their sides, invented by the Scottish mathematician John Napier (1550-1617), laird of Merchiston, in 1615. This ingenious arrangement was used for shortening the labour of multiplications and divisions. The previous year he had invented logarithms. Cp. ABACUS.

Naples. See Naples and (then) die. An old Italian saying, implying that nothing more beautiful remains to be seen on earth. There is also a pun involved since Naples was once a centre of typhoid and cholera.

Napoleon Bonaparte (1769-1821). Emperor of the French (1804-1815). His reign is known in French history as the First Empire and his name is sometimes used to denote supremacy in a particular sphere as in, a Napoleon of finance. Cp. BONEY.

Code Napoléon. The code of laws prepared (1800-1804) under his direction, based on work begun by a committee of the CONVENTION and so called in 1807. It forms the basis of modern French law and is only second in importance to the code of Justinian. Equality in the eyes of the law, justice, and common sense are its keynotes.

Napoleon II, King of France and Duke of Reichstadt (1811-1832). He was the son of Napoleon and Marie Louise of Austria and never reigned.

Napoleon III (1808-1873). His reign (1852-1870) is called the Second Empire. He was the third son of Louis Bonaparte,

King of Holland (brother of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE) and Napoleon I's step-daughter Hortense de Beauharnais. Few men have had so many nicknames:

Man of December, so called because his COUP D'ÉTAT was 2 December 1851, and he was made emperor 2 December 1852.

Man of Sedan, and, by a pun, M. Sedantaire. It was at Sedan he surrendered his sword to William I, King of Prussia (1870).

Man of Silence, from his great taciturnity.
Comte d'Arenenberg, the name and title he assumed when he escaped from the fortress of Ham.

Badinguet, the name of the mason who changed clothes with him when he escaped from Ham. The emperor's partisans were called Badingueux, those of the empress were Montijoyeux.

Boustrapa is a compound of Bou[logne], Stra[sbourg], and Pa[r]is, the places of his noted escapades.

Rantipole, harum-scarum, half-fool and half-madman.

There are some curious numerical coincidences connected with Napoleon III and Eugénie. The last complete year of their reign was 1869. (In 1870 Napoleon was dethroned and exiled.)

Now, if to the year of coronation (1852) you add either the birth of Napoleon or the birth of Eugénie, or the date of marriage, or the capitulation of Paris, the sum will always be 1869. For example:

1852	}	1852	1852	1852	1852
1	}	1	1	1	1
8	}	8	8	8	8
0	}	2	5	7	7
8	}	6	3	1	1
1869		1869	1869	1869	1869

And if to the year of marriage (1853) these dates are added, they will give 1870, the fatal year.

Napoleon of the Ring. James Belcher, the pugilist (1781-1811), who was remarkably like Napoleon in looks.

Napoo (na poo'). Soldier slang of World War I for something that is of no use or does not exist. It represents the French phrase il n'y en a plus, there is no more of it. It occurs in a popular song of those days:

Bonsoir old thing, cheerio, chin-chin,
 Napoo, toodle-oo, goodby-ee.

Nappy ale. Strong ale has been so called for many centuries, probably because it contains a nap or frothy head.

Naraka (nar' a ká). In Hindu mythology and BUDDHISM, the place of torture for departed evil-doers. It consists of many kinds of hells, hot and cold.

Narcissa. In Pope's Moral Essays "Narcissa" stands for the actress Anne Oldfield (1683-1730). When she died her remains lay in state attended by two noblemen. She was buried in Westminster Abbey in a very fine Brussels lace head-dress, a holland shift, with a tucker and double ruffles of the same lace, new kid gloves, etc. See NANCY.

"Odious! In woollen? 'Twould a saint provoke!"
 Were the last words that poor Narcissa spoke.
 POPE: Moral Essays, i, 246.

"In woollen" is an allusion to the old law enacted for the benefit of the wool trade, that all shrouds were to be made of wool (see under WOOL).

Narcissus (nar sis' us). In Greek mythology, the son of Cephisus; a beautiful youth who saw his reflection in a fountain, and thought it the presiding nymph of the place. He jumped in the fountain to reach it, where he died. The NYMPHS came to take up the body to pay it FUNERAL honours but found only a flower, which they called by his name (Ovid: Metamorphoses, iii, 346, etc.).

Plutarch says the plant is called Narcissus from the Gr. narkē, numbness, and that it is properly narcosis, meaning the plant which produces numbness or palsy. ECHO fell in love with Narcissus.

Sweet Echo, sweetest nymph that liv'st unseen . . .
 Canst thou not tell me of a gentle pair,
 That liketh thy Narcissus are?

MILTON: Comus, 230.

Narcissism is the psychoanalytical term for excessive love and admiration of oneself.

Nark, or Copper's nark. A police spy or informer; from a Romany word, nak, a nose, on the analogy of NOSEY Parker. The term is also applied to a policeman. In colloquial parlance, to be narked is to be angry or annoyed, and nark it means stop it, "give over".

Narrow. The Narrow Seas. The Irish Sea and the English Channel, especially the area around the Straits of Dover.

Narrowdale Noon. To defer a matter till Narrowdale noon is to defer it indefinitely. Narrowdale is the local name for the narrowest part of Dovedale, Derbyshire, where dwelt a few COTTARS, who never saw the sun all the winter. When the sun's beams first pierce the dale in spring it is only for a few minutes in the afternoon. Cp. GREEK CALEND; NEVER.

Nasbys. A generic nickname in the U.S.A. for postal officials, particularly postmasters. The American humorist David Ross Locke (1833-1888) wrote a series of satirical articles in the form of letters which first appeared in 1861 in the Jeffersonian, published in Findlay, Ohio, and later in the Blade, published in Toledo, Ohio. These Nasby Letters purported to be those of a conservative, ignorant and whisky-drinking politician who hated Negroes and who was determined to be the postmaster of his little town. Comically spelled, and full of sly humour, the Nasby Letters were very popular, and soon gave rise to the generic title.

Naseby. Fable has it that this town in Northamptonshire is so called because it was considered the navel (O.E. nafela) or centre of ENGLAND, just as DELPHI was considered "the navel of the earth". In fact the town's name appears in DOMESDAY BOOK as Navesberi, showing that it was a burgh or dwelling of Hnæf, a Dane.

Naso (nā' zō). Ovid (Publius Ovidius Naso, 43 B.C.—A.D. 18), the Roman poet, author of Metamorphoses. Naso means "nose", hence Holofernes' pun: "And why, indeed, Naso, but for smelling out the odoriferous flowers of fancy." (SHAKESPEARE: Love's Labours Lost, IV, ii.)

Nathless, or Nathless (nāth' les). An archaic form of nevertheless.

Smote on him sore besides, vaulted with fire.
Nathless he so endured.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, I, 298.

National Anthem. The composition of "God Save the Queen", the British National Anthem, has been attributed to Dr. John Bull (d. 1628), organist at Antwerp Cathedral (1617–1628), and quite erroneously to Henry Carey, but the following, by Mme. de Brinon, was sung before Louis XIV in 1686:

Grand Dieu sauvez le roi,
Grand Dieu vengez le roi,
Vive le roi!
Qu'à jamais glorieux,
Louis victorieux,
Voie ses ennemis toujours soumis,
Vive le roi!

The Authorized Version of the BIBLE has:
And all the people shouted, and said, God save the king.

I Sam. x, 24.

It became popular at the time of the FORTY-FIVE Rebellion as a demonstration of loyalty to George II and opposition to the JACOBITES, to whom the phrase "confound their politics" may well refer.

The following are examples of the National Anthems or principal patriotic songs of other nations:

Argentina: Oíd, mortales, el grito sagrado Libertad.

Australia: God Save the Queen; Advance, Australia Fair.

Austria: (After World War II) Land der Berge, Land am Strome.

Canada: God Save the Queen; The Maple Leaf Forever; O Canada! terre de nos aieux.

Chile: Dulce patria, recibe los votos.

Denmark: The Song of the Danebrog; Kong Christian stod ved højen Mast (King Christian stood beside the lofty mast).

France: The Marseillaise.

Germany: (After World War I) Deutschland über alles (Germany over all).

German Democratic Republic: Zukunft standen aus Ruinen und der Zukunft zugewandt.

German Federal Republic: Einigkeit und Recht und Freiheit.

Italy: Inno di Mameli.

Mexico: Mexicanos, al grito de guerra.

Netherlands: Wilhelmus van Nassouwe.

New Zealand: God Defend New Zealand; God Save the Queen.

Norway: Ja, vi elsker dette Landet som det stiger frem (Yes we love our country, just as it is).

Peru: Somos libres, seámos lo siempre.

Portugal: Herois do mar.

Russia (under the Tsars): Bozhe Tsarya Khrami.

Scotland: Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled.

South Africa: Die Stem van Suid-Afrika.

Spain: Marcha de Granaderos.

Sweden: Du gamla, du fria, du fjällhöga Nord, Du tysta, du glädjrika sköna Nord! (Thou ancient, free, and mountainous North! Thou silent, joyous, and beautiful North!)

Switzerland: Trittst im Morgenrot daher (In the dawn you stride along).

U.S.A.: The Star-spangled Banner. See STARS AND STRIPES.

U.S.S.R.: Soyuz nerushimy respublik svobodnykh.

Wales: Mae hen wlad fy nhadau (Land of my Fathers); also Men of Harlech.

National Convention. For the French assembly of this name, see CONVENTION PARLIAMENTS.

In the U.S.A. the National Convention is the meeting of State delegates called by the national committees of the political parties which nominates candidates for President and Vice-President. The party platform is also drawn up.

National Debt. The public debt of the central government of a state and secured on the national revenue. The Funded Debt is the portion of the National Debt which is converted into bonds and annuities, etc. The remainder, essentially short-term debt, is called the Floating Debt.

The British National Debt assumed a permanent form in the reign of William III (1689-1702) and it has been managed by the Bank of England since 1750. The rapid increase of the National Debt has been mainly due to wars. See MISSISSIPPI BUBBLE; SINKING FUND; SOUTH SEA BUBBLE.

National Governments. As a result of the financial crises and the collapse of the LABOUR Government in 1931, an all-party COALITION was formed under J. Ramsay MacDonald, the first of a series of governments called "National" which held office in succession until 1940, under MacDonald, then Baldwin, and lastly Chamberlain. Those LIBERAL and Labour M.P.s who supported these governments called themselves National Liberal candidates and National Labour candidates. The administrations became increasingly CONSERVATIVE in character.

National Guard. In France, the revolutionary leaders formed a National Guard at Paris in July 1789, and similar citizen armies were formed in the provinces. It supported Robespierre, but turned against the CONVENTION and was defeated by NAPOLEON with regular troops. Under Napoleon, a National Guard or militia was re-established which continued in existence until the Paris Commune of 1871.

In the U.S.A., the National Guard is an organization of volunteer military units similar to the British Territorials. When called upon in a national emergency they become an integral part of the U.S. armed forces. The oldest unit is the 182nd infantry of Massachusetts which traces its origins back to 1636. Cp. MINUTE-MEN.

National Society. The shortened form of the name of the association formed in 1811 as the "National Society for the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church". It played a great part in the development of English education, especially before direct state participation and control. Principally known for the establishment of Church schools, or "National Schools", and teacher training colleges, it still continues its work. See MONITORIAL SYSTEM; VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS.

Nations, Battle of the. A name given to the battle of Leipzig (16-19 October 1813) which led to the first overthrow of NAPOLEON. Prussians, Russians, Austrians and Swedes took part against the French.

Native. To go native. To abandon civilized ways and to share the life and habits of a more primitive society.

Nativity, The. CHRISTMAS Day, the day set apart in honour of the Nativity or Birth of Christ.

The Cave of the Nativity. The "Cave of the Nativity" at Bethlehem, discovered, according to Eusebius, by the empress HELENA, is under the chancel of the BASILICA of the "Church of the Nativity". It is a hollow scraped out of rock, and there is a stone slab above the ground with a star cut in it to mark the supposed spot where Jesus was laid. There are no grounds for connecting the Nativity with a cave.

To cast a man's nativity. The astrologers' term for constructing a plan or map of the position of the twelve "houses" which belong to him and explaining its significance. See HOUSES, ASTROLOGICAL.

Nature. In a state of nature. Nude or naked.

A natural. A born idiot, i.e. someone who is born half-witted. The word is now commonly used to denote one who is naturally adept at some particular skill, especially at games.

For this drivelling love is like a great natural that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble in a hole.

SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, II, iv.

In music, a natural is a white key on the pianoforte, etc., as distinguished from a black key. In musical notation the sign \natural is employed to counteract the following note from a sharp or flat in the signature, and from a preceding accidental sharp or flat in the same bar.

A natural child. A BASTARD. The Romans called the children of concubines naturales, children according to nature and not according to law.

Natural increase. In population statistics, etc., the excess of births over deaths in a given period, usually a year. Cp. MALTHUSIAN DOCTRINE.

Natural Philosophy. See EXPERIMENTAL PHILOSOPHY.

Naught, Nought. These are merely variants of the same word, naught representing O.E. na whil and nought, no whit. In most senses they are interchangeable; but nowadays naught is the more common form, except for the name of the cipher, which is usually nought.

Naught was formerly applied to things that were bad or worthless, as in II Kings ii, 19, "The water is naught and the ground barren", and it is with this sense that Jeremiah (xxiv, 2) speaks of "naughty figs":

One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe . . . The other basket had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten.

The REVISED VERSION did away with the old "naughty" and substituted "bad"; and in the next verse, where the Authorized calls the figs "evil", the Douai Version has:

The good figges, exceeding good, and the naughty figges, exceeding naught: which cannot be eaten because they are naught.

Naughty Nineties, The. The 1890s in England, when the puritanical Victorian code of behaviour and conduct gave way in certain wealthy and fashionable circles to growing laxity in sexual morals, a growing cult of hedonism, and a more light-hearted approach to life. MUSIC HALLS were at the height of their popularity and the EMPIRE PROMENADE was in its heyday.

Those again concerned with the fashionable surface of life and letters in London are struck by the revulsion from puritanism to raffishness, and speak of the "naughty nineties"—the epoch of the Yellow Book and the Oscar Wilde case and of a more flaunting West End vice.

SIR ROBERT ENSOR: England 1870-1914, ch. X.

Nausicaa (naw sik ā' a). The Greek heroine whose story is told in the ODYSSEY. She was the daughter of Alcinous, king of the Phæaciads, and the shipwrecked Odysseus found her playing ball with her maidens on the shore. Pitying his plight she conducted him to her father, by whom he was entertained.

Nautical mile. See under MILE.

Navvy. A labourer employed on heavy work such as excavating, trenching, etc.; a contraction of navigator. The name derives from the days of canal construction, as the canals were called navigations.

This navigation really consists of two sections—the Forth and Clyde Navigation, and the Monkland Navigation. The former authorized in 1768, and opened in 1790.

E. A. PRATT: British Canals, ch. iv.

Nay-word. A byword, a password.

If I do not gull him into a nayword, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed.

SHAKESPEARE: Twelfth Night, II, iii.

We have a nay-word how to know one another; I come to her in white and cry mum; she cries budget; and by that we know one another.

SHAKESPEARE: Merry Wives of Windsor, V, ii.

Nazarene. A native of Nazareth; Our Lord is so called (John xviii, 5, 7). He was brought up in Nazareth, but was born in Bethlehem (see Matt. ii, 23). Hence the early Christians were called Nazarenes (Acts xxiv, 5); also an early sect of Jewish Christians, who believed Christ to be the MESSIAH, but who nevertheless conformed to much of the Jewish law.

Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? (John i, 46). A general insinuation against any family or place of ill repute. Can any great man come from such an insignificant village as Nazareth?

Nazarites (Heb. 'nazar, to separate). A body of Israelites set apart to the Lord under vows. They refrained from strong drink, and allowed their hair to grow. (See Numb. vi, 1-21.)

Nazi (nat' zi, naz' i). The shortened form of National-Sozialist, the name given to Adolf Hitler's party. See FÜHRER; MEIN KAMPF; NIGHT OF THE LONG KNIVES; SWASTIKA.

Ne plus ultra (nē plūs ūl' trā) (Lat., nothing further, i.e. perfection). The most perfect state to which a thing can be brought. See PLUS ULTRA.

Neæra (ne ē' rā). Any sweetheart or lady love. She is mentioned by HORACE, VIRGIL, and Tibullus.

To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Neæra's hair?

MILTON: Lycidas.

Neanderthal Man (ni än' dēr tal). A species of PALÆOLITHIC man inhabiting Europe during the MOUSTERIAN period. It was named from the bones discovered in a grotto of the Neanderthal ravine near Düsseldorf, in 1856. Similar remains have been found in many parts of Europe.

Neap Tides. Those tides which attain the least rise and fall at or near the first and last quarters of the moon. The high water rises little more than half as high above the mean level as it does at SPRING TIDES, and the low water sinks about half as little below it.

Near, meaning mean, is rather a curious play on the word close (close-fisted). What is "close by" is near.

Near side, and Off side. Left side and right side when facing forward. "Near wheel" means that to the driver's left hand; and "near horse" (in a pair) means that to the left hand of the driver. In a four-in-hand the two horses on the left side of the coachman are the near wheeler and the near leader. Those on the right-hand side are "off" horses. This, which seems an anomaly, arose when the driver walked beside his team. The teamster always walks with his right arm nearest the horse, and therefore, in a pair of horses, the horse on the left side is nearer than the one on his right. See also OFF.

Nebo (nē' bō). A god of the Babylonians (properly, Nabu) mentioned in Is. xlvī, 1. He was the patron of Borsippa, near Babylon, and was regarded as the inventor of writing, as well as the god of wisdom. The name occurs in many Babylonian royal names, as, Nebuchadnezzar, Nebushasban (Jer. xxxix, 13), Nebuzar-adan (11 Kings xxv, 8), etc.

Nebuchadnezzar (neb ū kād nez' ár). An incorrect form of Nebuchadnezzar (as it appears in Jer. xxi, 2, etc.). The name means NEBO protects the crown.

Nebuchadnezzar was the greatest king of Babylon and reigned from 604 to 561 B.C. He restored his country to its former prosperity and importance, practically rebuilt Babylon, restored the temple of BEL, erected a new palace, embanked the Euphrates, and probably built the HANGING GARDENS. His name became the centre of many legends.

The king spake, and said, Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?

While the word was in the king's mouth, there fell a voice from heaven, saying, O king Nebuchadnezzar, to thee it is spoken; the kingdom is departed from Thee.

Daniel iv, 30, 31.

Necessary. The 17th- and 18th-century term for a privy. In large houses the emptying and cleaning of this was carried out by a servant known as the Necessary Woman.

Necessitarians. Those who deny free will, holding that all action is determined by antecedent causes. Those who believe in free will are called libertarians.

Necessity. Necessity knows no law. These were the words used by the German Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg in the Reichstag on 4 August 1914, as a justification for the infringement of Belgian neutrality.

Gentlemen, we are now in a state of necessity, and necessity knows no law. Our troops have occupied Luxembourg and perhaps have already entered Belgian territory.

To quote Milton:

So spake the Fiend, and with necessitie,
The Tyrant's plea, excus'd his devilish deeds.
MILTON: Paradise Lost, IV, 393.

The phrase is common to most languages. Publius Syrus has Necessitas dat legem, non ipsa accipit (Necessity gives the law, but does not herself accept it), and the Latin proverb Necessitas non habet legem appears in Piers Plowman (14th century) as, "Neede hath no law."

To make a virtue of necessity. To grin and bear it; "what can't be cured must be endured".

Thanne is it wisdom, as it thinketh me
To maken vertu of necessitee.

CHAUCER: Knight's Tale, 3041.

Quintilian has laudem virtutis necessitati damus; St. Jerome (epistle liv, section vi), Fac de necessitate virtutem. In the Roman de la Rose (line 14058) we find S'il ne fait de nécessité vertu, and Boccaccio has Si come savia fatta della necessità.

Neck. Slang for cheek, impudence.

Neck and crop. Entirely. The crop is the gorge of a bird; a variant of the phrase is neck and heels, as, "I bundled him out neck and heels." There was once a punishment which consisted in bringing the chin and knees of the culprit forcibly together, and then thrusting him into a cage.

Neck and neck. Very close competitors, very near in merit. A phrase from the TURF, when two or more horses run each other very closely.

Neck of the woods (U.S.A.). A settlement in the forest, or slang for any area.

Neck or nothing. Desperate. An all-out attempt; to win by a neck or to be nowhere; a racing phrase.

Oh that the Roman people had but one neck! The words of CALIGULA, the Roman Emperor. He wished that he could slay them all with one stroke.

Stiff-necked. Obstinate and self-willed. In the Psalms we read: "Speak not with a stiff neck" (lxxv, 5); and Jer. xvii, 23, "They obeyed not . . . but made their neck stiff"; and Isaiah xlvi, 4, says: "Thy neck is an iron sinew." The allusion is to a wilful horse, ox, or ass, which will not answer to the reins.

To get it in the neck. To be thoroughly castigated; to be severely reprimanded. The phrase is an Americanism—I got it where the chicken got the axe—"in the neck".

To stick one's neck out. To ask for trouble; to expose oneself to being hurt, as a chicken might stick out its neck for the axe.

Necking. A common expression for amorous "petting". In the Western States of the U.S.A., necking is to tie a restless animal by the neck to a tame one in order to render it more tractable. Necking is also part of a column between the shaft and capital, as the annulets of a DORIC capital.

Neck-tie party (U.S.A.). A hanging, particularly by LYNCH LAW.

Neck-verse. The first verse of Ps. li. See MISERERE. "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving kindness:

Necromancy

according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions."

He [a treacherous Italian interpreter] by a fine cunny-catching corrupt translation, made us plainly to confesse, and cry Miserere, ere we had need of our necke-verse.

NASH: The Unfortunate Traveller (1594).

This verse was so called because it was the trial-verse of those who claimed BENEFIT OF CLERGY, and if they could read it, the ORDINARY of the prison said, "Legit ut clericus" (he reads like a clerk) and the prisoner saved his neck, being only burnt in the hand and set at liberty.

Necklace. A necklace of coral or white bryony beads used to be worn by children to aid their teething. Necklaces of hyoscyamus or henbane-root have been recommended for the same purpose.

Diamond Necklace. See under DIAMOND.

The Fatal Necklace. The necklace which CADMUS gave to HARMONIA; some say that VULCAN, and others that Europa, gave it to him. It possessed the property of stirring up strife and bloodshed. It is said to have eventually become the property of Phayllus, who gave it to his mistress. Her youngest son set fire to the house and mother, son, and the necklace were destroyed.

Necromancy (nek' rō măn si) (Gr. nekros, the dead; manteia, prophecy). Propheying by calling up the dead, as the WITCH OF ENDOR called up Samuel (I Sam. xxviii, 7 ff.). Also the art of magic generally, the black art.

Nectar (Gr.). In classical mythology, the drink of the gods. Like their food AMBROSIA, it conferred immortality. Hence the name of the nectarine, so called because it is as "sweet as nectar".

Neddy. Little Edward, an old familiar name for a DONKEY. Cp. CUDDY; DICKY; DOBBIN.

"Neddy" is also the popular name for the National Economic Development Council set up by the Government in 1962; and the numerous Economic Development Committees for particular industries which have since appeared are often called "Little Neddies" (21 by 1968).

Need. Needfire. Fire obtained by friction; a beacon. It was formerly supposed to defeat sorcery, and cure diseases ascribed to WITCHCRAFT, especially cattle diseases. We are told in Henderson's Agricultural Survey of Caithness (1812), that as late as 1785 it was so used as a charm when stock were seized with the murrain.

The ready page, with hurried hand,
Awaked the need-fire's slumbering brand.

SCOTT:

The Lay of the Last Minstrel, Canto Third, xxix.

Needs must. Necessity compels. A shortening of the old saying, "Needs must when the devil drives". See under DEVIL.

Needful, The. Ready money, cash.

Needham. You are on the high-road to Needham—to ruin or poverty. The pun is on need and there is no reference to Needham in Suffolk. Cp. LAND OF NOD.

Needle. Looking for a needle, etc. See under BOTTLE.

The eye of a needle. See under CAMEL.

To get the needle. To become thoroughly vexed, or even enraged, and to show it. A variant of the phrase is to get the spike.

To hit the needle. To hit the nail right on the head, to make a perfect hit. A term in archery, equivalent to hitting the bull's-eye.

To needle. In the U.S.A., to provoke, goad or tease.

Negative. The answer is in the negative. The Parliamentary circumlocution for No.

Negro. Negro offspring. White father and Negro mother; MULATTO.

White father and mulatto mother: quadroon.

White father and quadroon mother: quintero.

White father and quintero mother: white.

White parent and quadroon parent: octeroon.

Negus (ne' gus). The drink—port or SHERRY, with hot water, sugar and spices—is so called from a Colonel Francis Negus (d. 1732), who first concocted it.

The ruler of Ethiopia is entitled the Negus, from the native n'gus, meaning crowned.

Neiges d'Antan, Les (nāzh don tan) (Fr.). A thing of the past. Literally "last year's snows", from the refrain of François Villon's well-known Ballade des Dames du Temps Jadis:

Prince, n'enquerez de sepmaine
Ou elles sont, ne de cest an,
Que ce reffrain ne vous remaine:
Mais ou sont les neiges d'antan?

(Where are the snows of yester-year?)

Neither. Neither here nor there. Irrelevant to the subject under discussion; a matter of no moment.

Nelly. A popular name in Australia for MOTHER CAREY'S GOOSE.

Nelson's Pillar. See under PILLAR.

Nemean (nem' ē ān). Nemean Games.

One of the four great festivals of ancient Greece, held in the valley of Nemea in Argolis every alternate year, the first and third of each OLYMPIAD. Legend states that they were instituted in memory of Archemorus who died from the bite of a serpent as the expedition of the SEVEN AGAINST THEBES was passing through the valley. It was customary for the games to open with a funeral oration in his honour. After HERCULES had slain the NEMEAN LION the games were held in honour of ZEUS. Athletic contests were added after the model of the OLYMPIC GAMES. The victor's reward was at first a crown of OLIVES, later of green parsley. PINDAR has eleven odes in honour of victors.

The Nemean Lion. A terrible lion which kept the people of the valley of Nemea in constant alarm. The first of the Twelve Labours of HERCULES was to slay it; he could make no impression on the beast with his club, so he caught it in his arms and squeezed it to death. Hercules ever after wore the skin as a mantle.

My fate cries out,
And makes each petty artery in this body
As hardy as the Nemean lion's nerve.
SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, iv.

Nemesis. The Greek goddess, daughter of Nox; a divinity of vengeance who rewarded virtue and punished the wicked and all kinds of impiety; the personification of divine retribution. Hence, retributive justice generally, as the Nemesis of Nations, the fate which, sooner or later, overtakes every great nation.

And though circuitous and obscure
The feet of Nemesis how sure!
SIR WILLIAM WATSON: Europe at the Play.

Nemine contradicente (usually contracted to nem. con.) (Lat.). No one opposing, unanimously.

Nemine dissentiente (nem. diss.) (Lat.). Without a dissentient voice.

Nemo me impune lacessit (Lat.). No one provokes me with impunity. The motto of the Order of the THISTLE and of the kings of SCOTLAND.

Nenni Telegram. The telegram of support sent by John Platts-Mills, Konni Zilliacus, and twenty other members of LABOUR Party to the pro-Communist socialist Signor Nenni at the time of the Italian general election of April 1948. The Labour Party officially supported the right-wing Italian socialists, thus Platts-Mills was accordingly expelled from the party and Zilliacus subsequently.

Neolithic Age (Gr. neos, new; lithos, stone). The later STONE AGE of Europe.

Neolithic stone implements are polished, more highly finished and more various than those of the PALÆOLITHIC AGE; man knew something of agriculture, kept domestic animals, used boats, slings, and bows and arrows. It was superseded by the Bronze Age.

Nepenthe, or Nepenthes (Gr. ne, not; penthos, grief). An Egyptian drug mentioned in the ODYSSEY (IV, 228) that was fabled to drive away care and make people forget their woes. Polydamna, wife of Thonis, King of Egypt, gave it to HELEN.

That nepenthes which the wife of Thone
In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena.
MILTON: Comus, 675-6.

Nephew (Fr. neveu; Lat. nepos). Both in Latin and archaic English the word means grandchild or descendant; hence nepotism, the undue favouring and promotion of one's relations. In the Authorized Version of the BIBLE, I Tim. v, 4, reads—"if any widow have children or nephews"; but in the REVISED VERSION "grandchildren".

Niece (Lat. neptis) similarly means granddaughter or female descendant.

Nepman. A term applied in the U.S.S.R. to the man allowed to engage in private-enterprise business under the New Economic Policy (N.E.P.) begun in 1921.

Nepomuk. See ST. JOHN OF NEPUMUK under JOHN.

Neptune. The Roman god of the sea corresponding to the Greek POSEIDON, hence, allusively, the sea itself. Neptune is represented as an elderly man of stately mien, bearded, carrying a trident, and sometimes astride a dolphin or horse. See HIPPOCAMPUS.

Neptunian, or Neptunist. The name given to certain 18th-century geologists, who held the opinion of Werner (1750-1817), that all the great rocks of the earth were once held in solution in water, and were deposited as sediment. Cp. VULCANIST.

Nereus. "THE OLD MAN OF THE SEA", a sea-god of Greek mythology represented as a very old man. He was the father of the NEREIDS and his special dominion was the Ægean Sea.

Nereids. The sea-nymphs of Greek mythology, the fifty daughters of NEREUS and "grey-eyed" Doris. The best known are AMPHITRITE, THETIS, and GALATEA. Milton refers to another, Panope, in his Lycidas (line 99):

The air was calm and on the level brine
Sleek Panope with all her sisters played.

And the names of all will be found in Spenser's The Faerie Queene, Bk. IV, c. xi, verses 48-51.

Neri. See BIANCHI.

Nero, A. Any bloody-minded man, relentless tyrant, or evil-doer of extraordinary cruelty; from the depraved and infamous Roman Emperor, C. Claudius Nero (A.D. 37, 54-68), whom contemporaries believed to be the instigator of the great fire that destroyed most of ROME in A.D. 64, and to have recited his own poetry and played his lyre while enjoying the spectacle. Nero blamed the Christians. Nero of the North. Christian II of Denmark (1481-1559), also called "The Cruel". He massacred the Swedish nobility at Stockholm in 1520, and thus prepared the way for Gustavus Vasa and Swedish freedom.

Neroli. The essential oil of orange blossoms, used in EAU DE COLOGNE and other perfumes, is said to have been named after an Italian princess of the Neroli family.

Nerthus, or Hertha. The name given by Tacitus to a German or Scandinavian goddess of fertility, or "Mother Earth", who was worshipped on the island of Rügen. She roughly corresponds with the classical CYBELE; and is probably confused with the Scandinavian god Njorthr or NIORDHR, the protector of sailors and fishermen. Nerthus and Njorthr alike mean "benefactor".

Nessus. Shirt of Nessus. A source of misfortune from which there is no escape. The shirt of Nessus killed HERCULES. See DEIANIRA; cp. HARMONIA.

Nest-egg. Money laid by. The allusion is to the custom of placing an egg in a hen's nest to induce her to lay her eggs there. If a person has saved a little money, it serves as an inducement to him to increase his store.

Nestor. King of Pylos, in Greece; the oldest and most experienced of the chieftains who went to the siege of TROY. Hence the name is frequently applied as an epithet to the oldest and wisest man of a class or company. Samuel Rogers, for instance, who lived to be 92, was called "the Nestor of English poets".

Nestorians. Followers of Nestorius, Patriarch of Constantinople, 428-431 (d. c. 451). He is traditionally supposed to have asserted that Christ had two distinct natures and that Mary was the mother of his human nature. His teaching was condemned by Pope Celestine in 430. A separate Nestorian Church was established which spread to Asia where most of their churches were destroyed by Timur (TAMBURLAINE) about 1400. A small group called Assyrian Christians survived in parts of Asia Minor and Persia.

Net. On the Old Boy net. To arrange something through a friend (originally, someone known at school) instead of through the usual channels—a British military expression in World War II.

Neustria. The western portion of the ancient Frankish Kingdom, originally corresponding to north-western France between the Loire and the mouth of the Scheldt. In the 8th century the name was applied to Western Lombardy.

Never. There are numerous locutions to express this idea, as:

- At the coming of the COCQCIGRUES.
- At the Latter Lammas.
- NARROWDALE NOON.
- In the reign of QUEEN DICK.
- On ST. TIB'S EVE.
- In a MONTH OF SUNDAYS.
- When two Fridays or three Sundays come together.
- When Dover and Calais meet.
- When the world grows honest.
- When the Yellow river runs clear.

Never Never Land. The land where the Lost Boys and Red Indians lived, and where Pirates sailed up the lake in J. M. Barrie's PETER PAN (1904). The phrase was applied to the whole of the Australian outback, but since the publication of We of the Never Never (1908) by Mrs. Aeneas Gunn it was restricted to the Northern Territory.

New. New Atlantis. See under ATLANTIS.

New Deal. The name given to President Roosevelt's policy of economic reconstruction announced in his first presidential campaign (1932). "I pledge you, I pledge myself, to a new deal for the American people". A relief and recovery programme known as the "First New Deal" was inaugurated in March 1933, and a "Second New Deal" concerned with social reform in January 1935. The "Third New Deal" of 1938 sought to preserve such gains made by its predecessors.

New England. The collective name of the north-eastern states of the U.S.A.—Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hampshire, and Maine. In colonial days, Plymouth and New Haven formed part of the group before they lost their separate identities as part of Massachusetts and Connecticut respectively. The name was given to the area by Captain John Smith in 1614 and colonization was begun by the PILGRIM FATHERS after the Plymouth Company of Virginia had been revived as the Council for New England. During the English CIVIL WAR a New England Confederation was found consisting of Massachusetts, Plymouth, Connecticut, and New Haven to maintain a common front. James II formed a short-lived Dominion of New England (1687-1689), consisting of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Plymouth, Maine, and New Hampshire, to which New York and New Jersey were added.

New Jersey tea. The popular name for Ceanothus americanus, a white-flowered plant found in the north-eastern areas of the U.S.A. The name derives from the fact that Indians and colonists made a kind of tea from the plant, the former regarding the drink as possessing medicinal properties. According to tradition, some colonists used this tea to avoid the British tax on imported tea.

New Jerusalem. The city of HEAVEN foretold in Rev. xxi, 2, "coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband". Hence, figuratively, the perfect society.

The New Jerusalem Church. The name chosen (c. 1784) by Richard Hindmarsh for the sect founded by him on the doctrines of Emanuel Swedenborg. See SWEDENBORGIANS.

New Learning. The name given to the revival of Greek and Latin classical learning during the period of the 15th- and 16th-century RENAISSANCE.

New lease of life. Renewed health and vigour, especially applied to someone who appears to gain his "second wind" after a serious illness or change of circumstances.

New Look. The name given to the long-skirted women's dress of 1948. The style was reminiscent of Edwardian days and was short-lived.

New Morality. A popular term of the 1960s implying that the hitherto publicly accepted canons of morality are no longer relevant to present-day society, owing to the rapid spread of social and technical change, the advent of the PILL, and more "enlightened" attitudes generally. Such thinking has been induced by the growth of the AFFLUENT SOCIETY, the diminishing of individual responsibility occasioned by the WELFARE STATE, the declining influence of Christian standards and "middle-class morality", and the championship of hedonism and self-indulgence by AVANT-GARDE writers and scientific theorists, who seem to lack the balance of historical perspective. In the sphere of sexual behaviour it has been neatly defined by Lord Shawcross as "the old immorality"; and, in general, its effect has been to deprive many of the young of a sense of direction, duty, and that self-discipline which helps to distinguish man from the animal. The growth of the PERMISSIVE SOCIETY has not as yet produced much of a credit balance. Cp. SCARLET LETTER.

New Style. See GREGORIAN YEAR.

New Thought. A general term for a system of therapeutics based on the theory that the mental and physical problems of life should be met, regulated and controlled by the suggestion of right thoughts. This system has nothing in common with CHRISTIAN SCIENCE, auto-suggestion or psychotherapy.

New World. The Americas; the Eastern Hemisphere is called the Old World.

I have called the New World into existence to redress the balance of the Old. The famous words used by George Canning (1777-1827), British Foreign Secretary, in 1826 to justify his allowing a French occupation of Spain, but not of the former Spanish colonies in South America, whose independence he had recognized in 1823. "Contemplating Spain, such as our ancestors had known her, I resolved that if France had Spain, it should not be Spain with the Indies. I called the New World into existence to redress the balance of the Old." Cp. MONROE DOCTRINE.

New Year's Day. 1 January. The Romans began their year in March; hence September, October, November, December for the 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th months. Since the introduction of the Christian era, CHRISTMAS Day, LADY DAY, EASTER Day, 1 March and 25 March have in turns been considered as New Year's Day. With the introduction of the GREGORIAN YEAR, 1 January was accepted as New Year's Day by most Christian countries, but not until 1600 in Scotland, and 1752 in England.

New Year's gifts. The giving of presents at this time was a custom among both the Greeks and the Romans, the latter calling them strenæ, whence the French term étrenne (a New Year's gift). Nonius Marcellus says that Tatiüs, King of the SABINES, was presented with some branches of trees cut from the forest sacred to the goddess STRENIA (strength) on New Year's Day, and from this incident the custom arose.

Our forefathers used to bribe the magistrates with gifts on New Year's Day —a custom abolished by law in 1290, but even down to the reign of James II the monarchs received their tokens.

New York. Formerly New Amsterdam, so named in honour of James, Duke of York, brother of Charles II, to whom it was granted after its capture by the British in 1664.

Newcastle. To carry coals to Newcastle.
See under COAL.

Newgate. According to Stow, this was first built in the city wall of LONDON in the time of Henry I, but excavations have shown that there was a Roman gate here about 31 ft. in width. It may have fallen into disuse, and have been repaired by Henry I, the present name being given at the time.

Newgate Gaol. The first prison (over the gate) existed in the reign of King John. The last prison on the site (designed in 1770) was closed in 1880 and demolished in 1902, and it was for long the prison for the City of LONDON and County of Middlesex. Many notorious criminals and state prisoners were confined there, as well as debtors. Condemned criminals were executed in the street outside, "condemned sermons" being preached the preceding Sunday, to which the public were formerly admitted.

From its prominence, Newgate came to be applied as a general name for gaols, and Nash, in his Pierce Penniless (1592), says it is "a common name for all prisons, as homo is a common name for a man or woman".

The Newgate Calendar. A biographical record of the more notorious criminals confined at Newgate; begun in 1773 and continued at intervals for many years. In 1824-1828 A. Knapp and Wm. Baldwin published, in 4 vols., The Newgate Calendar, comprising Memoirs of Notorious Characters, partly compiled by George Borrow; and in 1886, C. Pelham published his Chronicles of Crime, or the New Newgate Calendar (2 vols.). The term is often used as a comprehensive expression embracing crime of every sort.

I also felt that I had committed every crime in the Newgate Calendar.

DICKENS: Our Mutual Friend, ch. xiv.

Newgate fashion. Two by two. Prisoners used to be conveyed to Newgate linked together in twos.

Must we all march?

Yea, two and two, Newgate fashion.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, III, iii.

Newgate fringe. The hair worn under the chin, or between the chin and the neck. So called because it occupies the position of the rope when men are about to be hanged.

Newgate knocker. A lock of hair twisted into a curl, worn by COSTERMONGERS and persons of similar status. So called because it resembles a knocker, and the wearers were too often inmates of Newgate.

News. The letters E^N S^S W used to be prefixed to newspapers to show that they obtained information from the four quarters of the world, and the supposition that our word news is thence derived is an ingenious conceit but destroyed by the old spelling newes; it is from the Fr. nouvelles.

News is conveyed by letter, word or mouth
And comes to us from North, East, West and South.

Witt's Recreations.

The word is now nearly always construed as singular ("the news is very good"), but it was formerly treated as a plural, and in the Letters of Queen Victoria the Queen and most of her correspondents so treated it:

The news from Austria are very sad, and make one very anxious.

To the King of the Belgians, 20 August 1861.

Newspeak. Language in which the words change their meaning to accord with the official party-political views of the state. Coined by George Orwell (1903-1950) in his 1984.

Newt. See NICKNAMES.

Newtonian Philosophy. The astronomical system that in the late 17th century displaced COPERNICANISM, and also the theory of universal gravitation. So called after Sir Isaac Newton (1642-1727), who established the former and discovered the latter.

Nature and Nature's laws lay hid in night;
God said "Let Newton be", and all was light.
POPE: Intended for Sir Isaac Newton.

Next of Kin. The legal term for a person's nearest relative, more especially where estate is left by an intestate. In English law the next of kin in priority is: Husband or wife; children; father or mother (equally if both alive); brothers and sisters; grandparents; uncles and aunts; half uncles and aunts; the Crown.

Next friend, in law, is an adult (usually a relation) who brings an action in a court of law on behalf of a minor or a person of unsound mind.

Nibelungenlied, The (nē be lung'en lēd). A great mediæval German epic poem founded on old Scandinavian legends contained in the Volsunga Saga and the EDDA.

Nibelung was a mythical king of a race of Scandinavian dwarfs dwelling in Nibelheim (i.e. "the home of darkness, or mist"). These Nibelungs or Nibelungers were the possessors of the wonderful "Hoard" of gold and precious stones guarded by the dwarf ALBERICH, and their name passed to later holders of the Hoard, SIEGFRIED's following and the Burgundians being in turn called "the Nibelungs".

Siegfried, the hero of the first part of the poem, became possessed of the Hoard and married KRIEMHILD, sister of GUNTHER, King of Worms, whom he helped to secure the hand of BRUNHILD of Iceland. After Siegfried's murder by Hagen at Brunhild's instigation, Kriemhild carried the treasure to Worms where it was seized by Gunther and his retainer Hagen. They buried it in the Rhine, intending later to enjoy it; but they were both slain for refusing to reveal its whereabouts, and the Hoard remains for ever in the keeping of the Rhine Maidens. The second part of the Nibelungenlied tells of the marriage of the widow Kriemhild with King Atli or Etzel (Attila), her invitation of the Burgundians to the court of the Hunnish King, and the slaughter of all the principal characters, including Gunther, Hagen and Kriemhild.

Nic Frog. See under FROG.

Nicæa. The Council of Nicæa. The first ECUMENICAL COUNCIL of the Christian Church held under Constantine the Great in 325 at Nicæa in Bithynia, Asia Minor, primarily to deal with the ARIAN heresy, which it condemned. The second Council of Nicæa (787), the seventh General Council of the Church, was summoned by the Empress Irene to end the Iconoclastic Controversy (see ICONOCLASTS).

Nicene Creed. The creed properly so called was a comparatively short statement of beliefs issued in 325 by the COUNCIL OF NICÆA to combat the ARIAN heresy. The "Nicene Creed" commonly referred to is that properly called the Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed, referred to in Article VIII of the THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES given in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, which ultimately derives from the Baptismal Creed of JERUSALEM. It is used in the EUCHARIST of the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, the CHURCH OF ENGLAND, and the EASTERN CHURCH, where it still forms part of the service of Baptism. It was first used at Antioch in the late 5th century and gradually gained acceptance in both East and West. See also FILIOQUE CONTROVERSY.

Nicholas, St. One of the most popular saints in Christendom, especially in the East. He is the patron saint of Russia, of Aberdeen, of parish clerks, of scholars (who used to be called clerks), of pawn-brokers (because of the three bags of gold—transformed to the three gold BALLS—that he gave to the daughters of a poor man to save them from earning their dowry in a disreputable way), of little boys (because he once restored to life three little boys who had been cut up and pickled in a salting-tub to serve for bacon), and is invoked by sailors (because he allayed a storm during a voyage to the HOLY LAND) and against fire. Finally he is the original of SANTA CLAUS.

Little is known of his life but he is said to have been Bishop of Myra (Lycia) in the early 4th century, and one story relates that he was present at the COUNCIL OF NICÆA (325) and buffeted Arius on the jaw. His day is 6 December, and he is represented in episcopal robes with either three purses of gold, three gold balls, or three small boys, in allusion to one or other of the above legends. Cp. LOMBARD.

St. Nicholas's Bishop. See BOY BISHOP.

St. Nicholas's Clerks. Old slang for thieves and highwaymen. It has been suggested that it may be an allusion to the liberties taken by choristers on St. Nicholas' day when they chose their BOY BISHOP.

Sirrah, if they meet not with Saint Nicholas' clerks, I'll give thee this neck.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, II, i.

Nick. Slang for to pilfer; in the 18th century those who delighted to break windows by throwing halfpence at them were called nickers.

His scattered pence the flying Nicker flings,
And with the copper shower the casement rings.

GAY: Trivia, III, 323.

Old Nick. The DEVIL. The term was in use in the 17th century, and is perhaps connected with the German Nickel, a GOBLIN, or in some forgotten way with St. NICHOLAS. Butler's derivation from Niccolò Machiavelli is, of course, poetical licence:

Nick Machiavel had ne'er a trick

Hudibras, III, i.

He nicked it. Won, hit, accomplished it. A nick is a winning throw of dice in the old game of hazard. Also, he stole it (see NICK above).

In the nick. In prison, in custody.

In the nick of time. Just in time, at the right moment. The allusion is to tallies marked with nicks or notches. (See TALLY.)

To nick the nick. To hit the exact moment. Tallies used to be called "nick-sticks". Hence, to make a record of anything is "to nick it down", as the publicans used to nick a score on a TALLY.

Nicka-Nan Night. The night preceding SHROVE TUESDAY was so called in CORNWALL because boys played tricks and practical jokes on that night. The following night they went from house to house singing—

Nicka, nicka nan,
Give me some pancake and then I'll be gone;
But if you give me none
I'll throw a great stone
And down your doors shall come.

Nickel. The metal is so called from the Ger. Kupfernickel, the name given to the ore from which it was first obtained (1754) by Axel F. von Cronstedt. Kupfer means copper, and Nickel is the name of a mischievous GOBLIN fabled to inhabit mines in Germany; the name was given to it because, although it was copper-coloured, no copper could be got from it, and so the Nickel was blamed.

In the U.S.A. a nickel is a coin of 5 cents, so called from being made of an alloy of nickel and copper.

Nickelodeon. The first cinema theatre called a "Nickelodeon" (because the admission price was only five cents), was that opened by John P. Harris and Harry Davis at McKeesport, near Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in 1905. The picture shown was The Great Train Robbery. It was the first real motion-picture theatre and thousands more nickelodeons soon sprang up throughout the U.S.A.

Nicker, or Nix. In Scandinavian folklore, a water-wraith, or KELPIE, inhabiting sea, lake, river, and waterfall. They are sometimes represented as half-child, half-horse, the hoofs being reversed, and sometimes as old men sitting on rocks wringing the water from their hair. The female nicker is a nixy.

Nickname. Originally an eke-name, eke being an adverb meaning "also", O.E. eac, connected with iecan, to supply deficiencies in or to make up for. A newt was formed in the same way. Cp. APRON; NONCE. Surnames as such were not common in England before the 13th century; hence identification was helped by nicknames such as "Long", "Brown", "Bull", "Russell" (red-haired), "Sour milk", "Barefoot", etc. The "eke" of a beehive is the piece added to the bottom to enlarge the hive.

National Nicknames. Among the best known are:

For an American of the U.S.A., "BROTHER JONATHAN", a "YANKEE"; for the U.S.A. personified, "UNCLE SAM" (see under SAM).

For an Australian, "AUSSIE", "DIGGER". For a Dutchman, "NIC FROG" (see under FROG) and "Mynheer Closh".

For an Englishman, "JOHN BULL", "LIMEY", "POMMIE".

For a Frenchman, "Crapaud" (see FLEUR-DE-LYS), "Froggie" or "FROG", "Johnny" or "Jean", "Robert MACAIRE".

For a French Canadian, "Jean Baptiste".

For French peasantry, "Jacques Bonhomme".

For French reformers, "BRISSTINS".

For a German, "COUSIN MICHAEL" or "Michel", "HUN", "Fritz", "Heinie", "Kraut".

For an Irishman, "PADDY".

For an Italian, "Antonio", or "Tony". Cp. WOP.

For a Scot, "Sandy", "Mac", or "Jock".

For a Spaniard or Portuguese, "Dago" (Diego).

For a Welshman, "TAFFY".

Traditional Nicknames of those with a particular surname are numerous. Among them are:

Dinger or Daisy Bell; Nobby Clark; Cocky Ducros (Austr.); Pincher Martin; Dusty Miller; Spud Murphy; Spud Thomson; Knocker White.

In Australia fair-headed people are called "Snowy" and red-headed "Blue".

Nickneven. A gigantic malignant hag of Scottish superstition. Dunbar has well described this spirit in his Flying of Dunbar and Kennedy.

Nicodemus, Gospel of. See under GOSPEL. Nicodemused into nothing. To have one's prospects in life ruined by a silly name; according to the proverb, "Give a dog a bad name and hang him." It is from Sterne's Tristram Shandy (vol. I, 19):

How many Cæsars and Pompeys . . . by mere inspiration of the names have been rendered worthy of them; and how many . . . might have done . . . well in the world . . . had they not been Nicodemused into nothing.

Nicotine. So named from Nicotiana, the Latin name of the tobacco plant, given to it in honour of Jean Nicot (c. 1530-1600), French ambassador to Portugal, who introduced tobacco into France about 1560.

Niece. See NEPHEW.

Nifheim (nif' èl him) (i.e. mist-home). In Scandinavian mythology, the region of endless cold and everlasting night, ruled over by the goddess HEL. It consisted of nine worlds, to which were consigned those who die of disease or old age; it existed in the north and out of its spring Hvergelmir flowed twelve ice-cold streams. Cp. MUSPELHEIM.

Nigger (Lat. niger, black). A Negro or anyone of very dark skin. It is now an offensive term.

Nigger Minstrels. The common name for the once-popular "coon" shows of the MUSIC HALL and seaside concert party who drew their inspiration from the CHRISTY MINSTREL shows. The Kentucky Minstrels and Black and White Minstrels are more recent revivals of this type of performance. Their songs were characterized by humour and pathos, plantation life was romanticized but it was essentially good-humoured and without any offensive intent. See also UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.

A nigger in the woodpile. Originally a way of accounting for the disappearance of fuel; it now denotes something deceitful or underhanded; a concealed trouble-maker or suspicious circumstance.

Night of the Long Knives, The. A descriptive phrase applied to the night of 30 June 1934 when Hitler, assisted by Göring and Himmler's GESTAPO, secured the murder of the leaders of the BROWNSHIRTS (S.A.) and some Catholic leaders. The shootings (mainly at Munich and Berlin) actually began on the Friday night of the 29th and continued through the Sunday. The estimates of those killed vary between 60 and 400 and Röhm and Schleicher were among them. Hitler had decided to rely on the Reichswehr rather than risk dependence on Röhm and the S.A. Himmler presented the assassins with "daggers of honour" inscribed with his name.

Nightingale. The Greek legend is that Tereus, King of Thrace, fetched Philomela to visit his wife, Procne, who was her sister; but when he reached the "solitudes of Heleas" he dishonoured her, and cut out her tongue that she might not reveal his conduct. Tereus told his wife that Philomela was dead, but Philomela made her story known by weaving it into a robe, which she sent to Procne. Procne, in revenge, cut up her own son and served him to Tereus, and as soon as the king discovered it he pursued his wife, who fled to Philomela; whereupon the gods changed all three into birds; Tereus became the hawk, his wife the swallow, and Philomela, the nightingale, which is still called Philomel (lit., lover of song) by the poets.

Youths and maidens most poetical . . .
Full of meek sympathy must heave their sighs
O'er Philomela's pity-pleading strains.
COLERIDGE: The Nightingale.

The Swedish Nightingale. The operatic singer, Jenny Lind (1820-1887), afterwards Mme Goldschmidt. She was a native of Stockholm.

Nightmare. A sensation in sleep as if something heavy were sitting on one's breast, formerly supposed to be caused by a monster who actually did this. It was not infrequently called the night-hag, or the riding of the witch. The second syllable is the O.E. mare (old Norse mara), an INCUBUS, and it appears in the Fr. cauchemar, "the fiend that tramples". The word now usually denotes a frightening dream, a night terror.

The Nightmare of Europe. NAPOLEON BONAPARTE was so called.

Nihil. Nihil obstat. The words by which a Roman Catholic censor of books (Censor Librorum) declares that he has found nothing contrary to faith or good morals in the book in question. The full Latin phrase is nihil obstat quominus imprimatur, nothing hinders it from being printed.

The IMPRIMATUR is granted by the BISHOP or his delegate.

Nihilism (ni' hil izm) (Lat. nihil, nothing). The name given to an essentially philosophical and literary movement in Russia which questioned and protested against conventional and established values, etc. The term was popularized by Turgenev's novel Fathers and Sons (1862) and was subsequently confused with a kind of revolutionary anarchism. Although nihilism proper was basically non-political, it strengthened revolutionary trends. The term was not new having long been applied to negative systems of philosophy.

Nike (ni' kè). The Greek winged goddess of victory, according to Hesiod, the daughter of PALLAS and STYX. A U.S.A. army ground-to-air missile for use against high-flying attacking planes is so named from this goddess.

Nil admirari (Lat.). To be stolidly indifferent. Neither to wonder at anything, nor yet to admire anything. The tag is from HORACE (Ep. I, vi, 1):

Nil admirari prope res est una, Numici,
Solaque, quæ possit facere et servare beatum.

(Not to admire, Numicius, is the best—
The only way to make and keep men blest.)
Conington.

Nil desperandum (Lat.). Never say die; never give up in despair; a tag from HORACE (Carmen, I, vii, 27):

Nil desperandum Teucro duce et auspice Teucro.
(There is naught to be despaired of when we are under Teucer's leadership and auspices.)

Nile. The Egyptians used to say that the rising of the Nile was caused by the tears of ISIS. The feast of Isis was celebrated at the anniversary of the death of OSIRIS, when Isis was supposed to mourn for her husband.

The Hero of the Nile. Horatio, Lord Nelson (1758-1805), from his great victory at Aboukir Bay (1798), for which he was made Baron Nelson of the Nile.

Nimbus (Lat., a cloud). In Christian art a HALO of light placed round the head of an eminent personage. There are three forms: (1) Vesica piscis, or fish form (cp. ICHTHYS), used in representations of Christ and occasionally of the Virgin Mary, extending round the whole figure; (2) a circular halo; (3) radiated like a star or sun. The enrichments are: (1) for our Lord, a CROSS; (2) for the Virgin, a circlet of stars; (3) for ANGELS, a circlet of small rays, and an outer circle of quatrefoils; (4) the same for SAINTS and martyrs, but with the name often inscribed round the circumference; (5) for the Deity the rays diverge in a triangular direction. Nimbi of a square form signify that the persons so represented were living when they were painted.

The nimbus was used by heathen nations long before painters introduced it into sacred pictures of saints, the TRINITY, and the Virgin Mary. PROSERPINE was represented with a nimbus; the Roman EMPERORS were also decorated in the same manner because they were divi. Cp. AUREOLE.

Nimini-pimini. Affected simplicity. Lady Emily, in General Burgoyne's The Heiress, III, ii (1786), tells Miss Alscip to stand before a glass and keep pronouncing nimini-pimini—"The lips cannot fail to take the right plie".

A similar conceit is used by Dickens in Little Dorrit (Bk. II, ii), where Mrs. General tells Amy Dorrit:

Papa gives a pretty form to the lips. Papa, potatoes, poultry, prunes, and prism are all very good words for the lips; especially prunes and prism.

W. S. Gilbert has the form (Patience, II):

A miminy-piminy, Je-ne-sais-quoi young man.

Nimrod. Any daring or outstanding hunter; from the "mighty hunter before the Lord" (Gen. x, 9), which the TARGUM says means a "sinful hunting of the sons of men". Pope says of him, he was "a mighty hunter, and his prey was man" (Windsor Forest, 62); so also Milton interprets the phrase (Paradise Lost, XII, 24, etc.).

The legend is that the tomb of Nimrod still exists in Damascus, and that no dew ever falls upon it, even though all its surroundings are saturated.

Nimrod was the pseudonym of Major Charles Apperley (1779-1843), a devotee of hunting and contributor to the Sporting Magazine. His best-known works are The Life of John Mytton Esq., The Chase, the Turf, and the Road, and the Life of a Sportsman.

Nine. Nine, FIVE, THREE are mystical numbers—the DIAPASON, diapente, and diatriton of the Greeks. Nine consists of a trinity of trinities. According to the Pythagoreans man is a full chord, or eight notes, and deity comes next. Three, being the TRINITY, represents a perfect unity; twice three is the perfect dual; and thrice three is the perfect plural. This explains why nine is a mystical number.

From ancient times the number nine has been held of particular significance. DEUCALION's ark was tossed about for nine days when it stranded on the top of Mount PARNASSUS. There were nine MUSES, nine Gallicenæ or virgin priestesses of the ancient Gallic ORACLE; and Lars Porsena swore by nine gods.

NIOSBE's children lay nine days in their blood before they were buried; the HYDRA had nine heads; at the Lemuria, held by the Romans on 9, 11, and 13 May, persons haunted threw black beans over their heads, pronouncing nine times the words: "Avaunt, ye spectres, from this house!" and the EXORCISM was complete (see Ovid's Fasti).

There were nine rivers of HELL, or, according to some accounts, the STYX encompassed the infernal regions in nine circles; and Milton makes the gates of HELL "thrice three-fold", "three folds were brass, three iron, three of adamantine rock". They had nine folds, nine plates, and nine linings (Paradise Lost, II, 645).

VULCAN, when kicked from OLYMPUS, was nine days falling to the island of LEMNOS; and when the fallen ANGELS were cast out of heaven Milton says "Nine days they fell" (Paradise Lost, VI, 871).

In the early Ptolemaic system of astronomy, before the PRIMUM MOBILE was added, there were nine SPHERES; hence Milton, in his Arcades, speaks of

The celestial siren's harmony,
That sat upon the nine enfolded spheres.

In Scandinavian mythology there were nine earths, HEL being the goddess of the ninth; there were nine worlds in NIFL-HEIM, and ODIN's ring dropped eight other rings every ninth night.

In folk-lore nine appears frequently. The ABRACADABRA was worn nine days, and then flung into a river; in order to see the FAIRIES one is directed to put "nine grains of wheat on a four-leaved clover"; nine knots are made on black wool as a charm for a sprained ankle; if a servant finds nine green peas in a peascod, she lays it on the lintel of the kitchen door, and the first man that enters is to be her cavalier; to see nine magpies is most unlucky; a cat has nine lives (see also CAT O'NINE TAILS); and the nine of Diamonds is known as the CURSE OF SCOTLAND.

The weird sisters in Shakespeare's Macbeth (I, iii) sang, as they danced round the cauldron, "Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine, and thrice again to make up nine"; and then declared "the charm wound up"; and we drink a Three-times-three to those most highly honoured.

Leases are sometimes granted for 99 years, that is three times three-three-three. Many run for 99 years, the dual of a trinity of trinities.

See also the NINE POINTS OF THE LAW below, and the NINE WORTHIES under WORTHIES. There are nine orders of angels; in HERALDRY there are nine marks of cadency and nine different crowns recognized.

Dressed up to the nines. To perfection from head to foot. Dressed "to kill". Perhaps a corruption of to then eyne (to the eyes).

Nine days' Queen. Lady Jane Grey. She was proclaimed queen in London on 10 July 1553; Queen Mary was proclaimed in London on 19 July.

A nine days' wonder. Something that causes a great sensation for a few days, and then passes into the LIMBO of things forgotten. An old proverb is: "A wonder lasts nine days, and then the puppy's eyes are open", alluding to dogs, which like cats, are born blind. As much as to say, the eyes of the public are blind in astonishment for nine days, but then their eyes are open, and they see too much to wonder any longer.

King: You'd think it strange if I should marry her.
Gloster: That would be ten days' wonder, at the least.

King: That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. III, III, ii.

The Nine First Fridays. In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH the special observance of the first FRIDAY in each of nine consecutive months, marked by receiving the EUCHARIST. The practice derives from St. Mary Alacoque (see SACRED HEART under HEART), who held that Christ told her that special grace would be granted to those fulfilling this observance.

Nine Men's Morris. See under MORRIS.
Nine-tail bruiser. Prison slang for the CAT-O'-NINE-TAILS.

Nine tailors make a man. See TAILOR.
Nine times out of ten. Far more often than not.

Possession is nine points of the law. It is every advantage a person can have short of actual right. The "nine points of the law" have been given as: (1) a good deal of money; (2) a good deal of patience; (3) a good cause; (4) a good lawyer; (5) a good counsel; (6) good witnesses; (7) a good jury; (8) a good judge; and (9) good luck.

To look nine ways. To squint.

Ninepence. Commendation Ninepence. See COMMENDATION.

Nice as ninepence. A corruption of "Nice as nine-pins". In the game of nine-pins, the "men" are set in three rows with the utmost exactitude or nicety.

Nimble as ninepence. Silver ninepences were common till the year 1696, when all unmilled coin was called in. These ninepences were very pliable or "nimble", and, being bent, were given as love tokens, the usual formula of presentation being To my love, from my love. There is an old proverb, A nimble ninepence is better than a slow shilling.

Ninepence to a shilling. An old rustic phrase in the West of England meaning that the person referred to is deficient in common sense or intelligence.

Right as ninepence. Perfectly well; in perfect condition.

Ninus. Son of Belus, husband of SEMIRAMIS, and the reputed builder of Nineveh. It is at his tomb that the lovers meet in the PYRAMUS and Thisbe travesty:

Pyr.: Wilt thou at Ninny's tomb meet me straightway?

This.: 'Tide life, 'tide death, I come without delay.
SHAKESPEARE: Midsummer Night's Dream, V, i.

Niobe (nī' o bē). The personification of maternal sorrow. According to Greek legend, Niobe, the daughter of TANTALUS and wife of AMPHION, King of THEBES, was the mother of fourteen children, and taunted LATONA because she had but two — APOLLO and DIANA. Latona commanded her children to avenge the insult and they consequently destroyed Niobe's sons and daughters. Niobe, inconsolable, wept herself to death, and was changed into a stone, from which ran water, "Like Niobe, all tears" (SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, ii).

The Niobe of Nations. So BYRON styles ROME, the "lone mother of dead empires", with "broken thrones and temples"; a "chaos of ruins"; a "desert where we steer stumbling o'er recollections" (Childe Harold, iv, 79).

Niord, Niordhr, or Njorthr. A Scandinavian god, protector of wealth and ships, who dwelt at Noatun by the sea-shore. His wife Skadi lived in the mountains, for the gulls disturbed her sleep! See CUP OF VOWS; NERTHUS.

Nip. A nip of whisky, etc. Short for Nipperkin. A small wine and beer measure containing about half a pint, or a little under; now frequently called "a nip".

His hawk-economy won't thank him for't
Which stops his petty nipperkin of port.

PETER PINDAR: Hair Powder.

The traditional Devon and Cornish song The Barley Mow starts with drinking the health out of the "jolly brown bowl", and at each chorus increases the size of the receptacle until in the sixteenth and last we have:

We'll drink it out of the ocean, my boys,
Here's a health to the barley mow!
The ocean, the river, the well, the pipe, the hogshead, the half-hogshead, the anker, the half-anker, the gallon, the half-gallon, the pottle, the quart, the pint, the half a pint, the quarter pint, the nipperkin, and the jolly brown bowl!

Nip and tuck. A NECK-AND-NECK race: a close fight.

Number Nip. Another name for RÜB-ZAHL.

To nip in the bud. To destroy before it has had time to develop; to stop something in its early stages, as a bud is nipped by frost or pests, etc., thus preventing further growth.

Nip-cheese, or Nip-farthing. A miser, who nips or pinches closely his cheese and farthings. Among sailors the purser is nicknamed "Nip-cheese". (Dutch nypen.)

Nipper. Slang for a small boy.

Nippon. The Japanese name of Japan, "the great land of the rising sun".

Nirvana (Sansk., a blowing out, or extinction). In BUDDHISM, the cessation of individual existence; the attainment of a calm, sinless state of mind achieved by the extinction of passion, a state which can be attained during life.

Nisei (nē' sā). A person born in the U.S.A. of Japanese descent but a loyal American.

Nisi (ni' si) (Lat., unless). In Law a "rule nisi" is a rule unless cause be shown to the contrary.

Decree nisi. A decree of divorce granted on the condition that it does not take effect until made absolute, which is done in due course, unless reasons why it should not have meantime come to light. Every decree of divorce is, in the first instance, a decree nisi.

Nisi prius (Lat., unless previously). Originally a writ commanding a SHERIFF to empanel a jury which should be at the Court of WESTMINSTER on a certain day unless the justices of assize previously come to his county.

The second Statute of Westminster (1285) instituted Judges of nisi prius, who were appointed to travel through the shires three times a year to hear civil causes. A trial at nisi prius is now a trial by jury in a civil cause before a single judge.

Nisroch. The Assyrian god in whose temple Sennacherib was worshipping when he was slain (II Kings xix, 37). Nothing is known of this god but the name is probably a corruption of Asur or a by-form of Asuraku. Cp. ASSHER.

Nisus and Euryalus. An example of proverbial friendship comparable to that of PYLADES and Orestes. Nisus with a Trojan friend raided the camp of the Rutulians and slaughtered many of the enemy in their drunken sleep, but the youthful Euryalus was killed by Volscens. Nisus rushed to avenge his death and in slaying Volscens was himself killed (Aeneid, IX).

Nitouche (ni toosh'). Faire la Sainte Nitouche, to pretend to great sanctity, to look as though BUTTER would not melt in one's mouth. Sainte Nitouche, a contraction of n'y touche, is a name given in France to a hypocrite.

Nivetta. See MORGAN LE FAY.

Nivôse (nē vōz) (Lat. nivosus, very snowy). The fourth month of the FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR (see under CALENDAR), lasting from 21 December to 19 January.

Nix. See NICKER. The word is also slang for "nothing" (Ger. nichts, nothing). "He won't work for nix" means he won't work without payment.

Nizam (ni zām'). The title of sovereignty of the ruler of the former state of Hyderabad, India; contracted from Nizam-ul-mulk (regulator of the state), in 1713 the title of Asaf Jah, who later became independent of MOGUL control.

Njorthr. See NIORD.

No. No can do. I cannot do it.

No dice (U.S.A.). Nothing doing.

No Man's Land. The name given to the area between hostile lines of entrenchments or to any space contested by both sides and belonging to neither. In the OPEN FIELD system, odd scraps of land, also called "Jack's land" or "anyone's land".

Noah. Noah's Ark. A name given by sailors to a white band of cloud spanning the sky like a rainbow and in shape something like the hull of a ship. If east and west, expect dry weather, if north and south, expect wet. It is also used as a PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGN.

Noah's wife. According to legend she was unwilling to go into the ark, and the quarrel between the patriarch and his wife forms a prominent feature of Noah's Flood, in the Chester and Townley MYSTERIES.

Hastow not herd, quod Nicholas, also
The sorwe of Noe with his felawshipe
Er that he mighte gete his wyf to shipe?
CHAUCER: Miller's Tale, 352.

Nobbler. An Australian colloquial term for a short drink, one-fifth of a gill or a fluid ounce.

Nobby. Smart, elegant, neat; from NOB, a slang term for one of the upper classes, a contraction of noble or nobility. Cp. SNOB.

Noble. A former English gold coin, from the superior quality of its GOLD. First minted by Edward III (1344), possibly in commemoration of the Battle of Sluys (1340). It was originally valued at 6s. 8d. and replaced by the royal or rose noble in 1465.

The Noble. Charles III of Navarre (1361-1425).

The Noble Duke of York of nursery rhyme fame was George III's second son.

The noble Duke of York,
He had ten thousand men;
He marched 'em up to the top of the hill,
And he marched 'em down again.

The rhyme was a derisive commentary on his abortive operations in Flanders (1794) against the French. He was young at the time, although some versions refer to "the rare old Duke" or "the grand old Duke". The land was flat, otherwise the rhyme is fair comment. He was made Commander-in-Chief in 1798. See DUKE OF YORK'S COLUMN under COLUMN.

The Noble Science. The old epithet for fencing or boxing, sometimes called "The Noble Art of Self-Defence".

... a bold defiance
Shall meet him, were he of the noble science.
BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER:
Knight of the Burning Pestle, II, i.

Noblesse oblige (nō bles' ō blēzh') (Fr.). Noble birth imposes the obligation of high-minded principles and noble actions.

Noctes Ambrosianæ. A series of papers on literary and topical subjects in the form of dialogues, contributed to Blackwood's Magazine, 1822-1835. They were written principally by Professor John Wilson, "Christopher North". See AMBROSIAN NIGHTS.

Nod. A nod is as good as a wink to a blind horse. However obvious a hint or suggestion may be, it is useless if the other person is unable to see it.

On the nod. On credit. To get a thing on the nod is to get it without paying for it at the time. The phrase is from the auction room where one signifies a bid by a mere nod of the head, the formalities of paying being attended to later.

The land of Nod. See under LAND.

A nodding acquaintance. A slight acquaintance, a person with whom one exchanges a nod for recognition when passing without seeking to become more closely acquainted. When used of one's acquaintance with literary works, etc., it means a superficial or slight knowledge.

Noddy. A Tom Noddy is a very foolish or half-witted person, "a noodle". The marine birds called noddies are so silly that anyone can go up to them and knock them down with a stick. It seems more than likely that the word is connected with nod, but it has been suggested that it was originally a pet form of Nicodemus.

Noddy is a well-known, somewhat simple, "nodding-man" in Enid Blyton's children's books and it is also an old name for cribbage.

Noel (nō' el). In English (also written Nowell), a Christmas CAROL, or the shout of joy in a carol; in French, Christmas Day. The word is Provençal nadal, from Lat. natalem, natal.

Nowells, nowells, nowells!
Sing all we may,
Because that Christ, the King,
Was born this blessed day.
Old Carol.

Nokes. See JOHN-A-NOKES.

Nolens volens. (no' lenz vo' lenz). Whether willing or not. Two Latin participles meaning "being unwilling (or) willing". Cp. WILLY-NILLY.

Noli me tangere (nol' i me tãn' jer i) (Lat., touch me not). The words Christ used to MARY MAGDALENE after his resurrection (John xx, 17) and given as a name to a plant of the genus Impatiens. The seed vessels consist of one cell in five divisions, and when the seed is ripe each of these, on being touched, suddenly folds itself into a spiral form, and leaps from the stalk. See Darwin's Loves of the Plants, II, iii.

Noll. Old Noll. Oliver Cromwell was so called, Noll being a familiar form of Oliver.

Nolle prosequi (nol' i prõ sek' wi) (Lat., to be unwilling to prosecute). A petition from a plaintiff to stay a suit. Cp. NON PROS.

Nolo contendere (nõ' lõ kon ten' dé rē) (Lat., I am unwilling to contend). A plea in law by which the defendant, while not admitting guilt, declares he will not offer any defence. A plea tantamount to that of "guilty".

Nolo episcopari (nõ' lõ ep isk õ pá rī) (Lat., I am unwilling to be made a BISHOP). The formal reply supposed to be returned to the royal offer of a bishopric. Chamberlayne says (Present State of England, 1669) that in former times the person about to be elected modestly refused the office twice, and if he did so a third time his refusal was accepted.

Nom. Nom de guerre (Fr. "war name"). An assumed name. It was once customary for every entrant into the French army to assume a name, especially in the times of CHIVALRY, when knights were known by the device on their shields.

Nom de plume. English-French for "pen-name" or pseudonym, the name assumed by a writer, cartoonist, etc., who does not choose to use his own name; as Curren Bell (Charlotte Brontë); Stendhal (Marie Henri Beyle). Cp. GEORGE ELIOT; GEORGE SAND; VOLTAIRE.

Nominalism. The SCHOOLMEN's name for the theory of knowledge which denies the objective existence of abstract ideas. A form of Nominalism was put forward by Roscelin in the 11th century, but in its more pronounced form by WILLIAM OF OCCAM in the 14th century. Those who held the opposite view were called Realists (see REALISM).

Non. The Latin negative, not; adopted in English and very widely employed as a prefix of negation, e.g. non-abstainer, non-conformist, non-existent, non-residence, nonsense, etc.

Non amo te, Zabidi. See FELL.

Non Angli sed angeli. See ANGLES.

Non assumpsit (Lat., he has not undertaken). The legal term for a plea denying a promise or undertaking.

Non-com. A non-commissioned officer in the army (more usual in the U.S.A.).

Non compos mentis (Lat., not of sound mind). Said of a lunatic, idiot, drunkard, or one who has lost memory and understanding by accident or disease.

Non-ego. See EGO.

Non est. A contraction of Lat. non est inventus (not to be found). They are the words which the sheriff writes on a writ when the defendant is not to be found in his bailiwick.

Non mi ricordo (I do not remember). A shuffling way of saying, "I don't choose to answer that question". It was the usual answer of the Italian witnesses when under examination at the trial of Queen Caroline, wife of George IV, in 1820.

Non placet (Lat., it is displeasing). The formula used, especially by the governing body of a University, for expressing a negative vote.

Non pros. for Lat. non prosequitur, he does not follow up. Judgment non pros. for a defendant was pronounced in an action when the plaintiff failed to take the necessary steps in time.

Non sequitur (Lat., it does not follow). A conclusion which does not follow from the premises stated; an inconsequent statement, such as Artemus Ward's:

I met a man in Oregon who hadn't any teeth—not a tooth in his head—yet that man could play on the bass drum better than any man I ever met.

Nonce. M.E. for than ones, for the once. Cp. NICKNAME.

Nonce-word. A word coined for a particular occasion, such as BIRRELLISM, LIMEHOUSE, PUSEYITE.

Nonconformists. In England, members of PROTESTANT bodies who do not conform to the doctrines of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND. They had their origins in the BROWNISTS, and Baptists of Elizabeth I's reign and among the 17th-century PURITANS and sectaries. After the RESTORATION and the subsequent Act of Uniformity of 1662, which enforced strict observance of the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, some 2,000 clergy were ejected and a lasting division resulted. The DISSENTERS or Nonconformists were subjected to the CLARENDON CODE until relief came with the Toleration Act of 1689 and later measures. Nonconformity received further recruits particularly with the advent of the METHODISTS.

Nonconformist Conscience. See under CONSCIENCE.

Nones (nōnz). In the ancient Roman CALENDAR, the ninth (Lat. nonus) day before IDES; in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, the office for the ninth hour after sunrise, i.e. between noon and 3 p.m.

Non-jurors. Those HIGH CHURCH clergy who refused to take the oath of allegiance to William and Mary after the Revolution of 1688 and who were deprived of their livings in 1690. Their numbers included Archbishop Sancroft and five other bishops. They maintained their own episcopal succession until the death of their last bishop in 1805. Cp. SEVEN BISHOPS.

Non-resistance. In the CHURCH OF ENGLAND passive obedience to royal commands was a natural corollary of the DIVINE RIGHT OF KINGS but it acquired a particular importance after the RESTORATION, when TORY-minded clergy advocated non-resistance to combat NONCONFORMIST doctrines and WHIG policies. When James II tried to promote Roman Catholicism, many advocates of non-resistance abandoned their support of the monarchy and others became NON-JURORS after the accession of William of Orange.

Norman French. The old French dialect spoken in Normandy at the time of the CONQUEST and spoken by the dominant class in ENGLAND for some two centuries subsequently. Vestiges remain, particularly in legal terminology, and in other connections, such as "Fitz" (fits, son) that precedes certain family surnames. The royal assent to bills passed by PARLIAMENT is still given in Norman French, La Reine remercie ses bons sujets, accepte leur benevolence, et ainsi le veult, etc.

Norns, The. The fates, dispensers of destiny in Norse mythology. They lived at the foot of the ash-tree YGGDRASIL which they watered daily from the fountain called Urd. These sisters eventually became three in number in imitation of the three FATES of classical legend.

Norroy (i.e. north roy, or king). The third King of Arms (see HERALD) is so called, because his jurisdiction is on the north side of the river Trent; that to the south is exercised by CLARENCEUX. In 1943, the office of ULSTER KING OF ARMS was united with that of Norroy.

North. There was an old belief that only evil-doers should be buried on the north side of a churchyard, which probably arose from the lack of sun on this side.

The east was God's side, where his throne is set; the west, man's side, the Galilee of the Gentiles; the south, the side of the "spirits made just", where the sun shines in his strength; and the north, the devil's side. Cp. THE DEVIL'S DOOR under DEVIL.

As men die, so shall they arise; if in faith in the Lord, towards the south . . . and shall arise in glory; if in unbelief . . . towards the north, then they are past all hope.

COVERDALE: Praying for the Dead.

North, Christopher. See NOCTES AMBROSIANÆ.

He's too far north for me. Too canny, too cunning to be taken in; a very hard bargainer. The inhabitants of Yorkshire are supposed to be very canny, especially in driving a bargain; and when you get to Aberdeen—!

North Briton. A periodical founded by John Wilkes in 1762 to air his animosity against Lord Bute and the Scottish nation. See NUMBER 45 under FORTY; GENERAL WARRANTS.

The North East Passage. A hoped-for route to the East round the north extremity of Asia. It was first attempted by Willoughby and Chancellor (1553-1554) and its only practical result was the establishment of the Muscovy Company (1555). The passage was traversed by the Swedish ship Vega in 1897.

That everlasting cassock, that has worn
As many servants out as the North-east Passage
Has consumed sailors.

BRAUMONT AND FLETCHER:
The Woman's Prize, II, ii.

The North Pole was first reached on 6 April 1909, by the American explorer Robert Edwin Peary (1856-1920). In May 1933, the North Pole was claimed by the Russians and four years later they established a Polar station there under Prof. Otto Schmidt.

The North West Frontier. Particularly, the north-west frontier of British India and the province of that name, now part of PAKISTAN. Owing to the warlike nature of the local tribesmen and the Russian advance in central Asia, it gained an especial importance from the later 19th century, and was a constant drain in men and money.

The North-West Passage. The name given to the long-sought-for route to the East round the north of the American continent, the search for which began with Sebastian Cabot's voyage of 1509. Search continued through the centuries by men such as Frobisher, Davis, Hudson, Baffin and Bylot, Cook, and Vancouver. It was first traversed by the

Northamptonshire Poet

Norwegian Roald Amundsen (1903-1905).

The Northern Bear. Tsarist Russia was so called.

The Northern Gate of the Sun. The sign of CANCER, or summer SOLSTICE; so called because it marks the northern tropic.

The Northern Lights. The AURORA BOREALIS.

The Northern Wagoner. The genius presiding over the GREAT BEAR (see under BEAR) or CHARLES'S WAIN, which contains seven large stars.

By this the northern wagoner had set His sevenfold team behind the stedfast star [the pole-star].

SPENSER: The Faerie Queene, Bk. I, ii, i.

Dryden calls the Great Bear the Northern Car, and similarly the crown in Ariadne has been called the Northern Crown. Cp. CYNOSURE.

Northamptonshire Poet. John Clare (1793-1864), son of a farmer at Helpstone.

Northumbria. The Anglo-Saxon kingdom formed in the early 7th century, which included all ENGLAND north of the Humber, and S.W. and E. SCOTLAND to the Firth of Forth. For most of the 7th century it was the most powerful English kingdom and its kings Edwin, Oswald, and Oswiu held the office of BRETWALDA. Its dominance was replaced by that of MERCIA. It was long noted as a centre of learning.

Norway, Maid of. See MAID.

Nose. A nose of wax. See under WAX.

As plain as the nose on your face. Extremely obvious, patent to all.

Bleeding of the nose. According to some, a sign that one is in love. Grose says if it bleeds one drop only it forebodes sickness, if three drops the omen is still worse; but Melton, in his Astrologaster, says, "If a man's nose bleeds one drop at the left nostril it is a sign of good luck, and vice versa."

Cleopatra's nose. See under CLEOPATRA.

Golden nose. Tycho Brahe (d. 1601), the Danish astronomer. He lost his nose in a duel, so adopted a golden one, which he attached to his face by a cement which he carried about with him.

The bloodthirsty Emperor Justinian II, nicknamed Rhinotmetus, had a golden nose in place of the nose that had been cut off by his general Leontius before he ascended the imperial throne. It used to be said that when Justinian cleansed this golden nose, those who were present knew that the death of someone had been decided upon.

Led by the nose. Said of one who has no will of his own but follows tamely the guidance of a stronger character, as horses, asses, etc., are led by the nose by bit and bridle. Hence SHAKESPEARE'S Iago says of Othello, he was "led by the nose as asses are" (I, iii). Bulls, buffaloes, camels, and bears are led by a ring through their nostrils. Isaiah xxxvii, 29, says: "Because thy rage against me . . . is come up into mine ears, therefore will I put my hook in thy nose . . . and . . . I will turn thee back."

Nose tax. It is said that in the 9th century the Danes imposed a poll tax in IRELAND, and that this was called the "Nose Tax", because those who neglected to pay were punished by having their noses slit.

On the nose. An American expression meaning exactly on time. It originated in the broadcasting studio, where the producer, when signalling to the performers, puts his finger on his nose when the programme is running to schedule time.

The Pope's nose. The rump of a fowl, which is also called the parson's nose. The phrase is said to have originated during the years following James II's reign (1685-1688), when anti-Catholic feeling was high.

To bite, or snap one's nose off. To speak snappishly. To pull (or wring) the nose is to affront by an act of indignity; to snap one's nose is to affront by speech. Snarling dogs snap at each other's noses.

To count noses. A horse-dealer counts horses by the nose, as cattle are counted by the head; hence, the expression is sometimes ironically used of numbering votes, as in the Division lobbies.

To cut off your nose to spite your face, or to be revenged on your face. To act out of pique in such a way as to bring harm to yourself.

To follow one's nose. To go straight ahead; to proceed without deviating from the path.

To keep one's nose to the grindstone. To keep hard at work. Tools, such as scythes, chisels, etc., are constantly sharpened on a stone or with a grindstone.

Be to the poor like onie whunstone,
And haud their noses to the grunstone.
BURNS: Dedication to Gavin Hamilton.

To look down one's nose. To treat disdainfully, to regard with disapproval; from the customary attitude of disapproval of lowering one's eyelids and looking down one's nose.

To pay through the nose. To pay too much. Of many conjectured origins, the most likely is that this phrase derives from the NOSE TAX (see above).

To poke, or thrust one's nose in. Officially to intermeddle with other people's affairs; to intrude where one is not wanted.

To put one's nose out of joint. To supplant a person in another's good grace; to upset one's plans; to humiliate or bring disgruntlement to someone.

To take pepper i' the nose. See under PEPPER.

To turn up one's nose. To express contempt. When a person sneers he turns up the nose by curling the upper lip.

To wipe one's nose. See under WIPE.

Under one's very nose. Right before one. In full view.

Nosey. Very inquisitive; overfond of poking one's nose into the business of others. One who does this is a Nosey Parker, an epithet of unknown origin. The Duke of Wellington was nicknamed "Nosey" by his troops from his strongly accentuated aquiline nose. The nickname was also given to Oliver Cromwell. See COPPER NOSE.

Nostradamus. The name assumed by Michel de Nostradame, French physician and astrologer (1503-1566) who published an annual "Almanack" as well as the famous Les Centuries (1555) which suffered papal condemnation in 1781. His controversial prophecies were couched in very ambiguous language. Hence the saying "as good a prophet as Nostradamus", i.e., so obscure that your meaning cannot be understood.

Notables, The Assembly of. In French history, an assembly of persons of distinction and political weight summoned by the VALOIS kings at their pleasure instead of convening the STATES GENERAL. It was the only concession made to consulting the will of the nation. They were called together by Richelieu in 1626-1627 and not again until 1787, when Louis XVI was harassed by impending financial collapse. The last time they met was 6 November 1788. Cp. PARLEMENT.

Notarikon (Gr. notarikon; Lat. notarius, a shorthand writer). A cabalistic word denoting the old Jewish art of using each letter in a word to form another word, or using the initials of the words in a sentence to form another word, etc., as CABAL itself was fabled to have been from Clifford, Ashley, Buckingham, Arlington, and Lauderdale; and as the term ICHTHYS was applied to the Saviour. Other instances are: A.E.I.O.U.; CLIO; HEMPE; LIMP; SMECTYMNUS. Cp. HIP! HIP! HURRAH.

Notch. Out of all Scotch and Notch. See under SCOTCH.

Note. To compare notes. To exchange opinions, observations, etc., on a particular matter or subject, with someone else. Here the reference is to the written note.

To strike the right note. To say, write, or to do the particularly appropriate thing to suit the occasion; the allusion is to the note in music.

Notes of the Church. The four characteristic marks of the Church, i.e. one, holy, catholic, and apostolic, as set forth in the NICENE CREED. These "notes" were used by Roman Catholic theologians and others, and by the TRACTARIANS to demonstrate their claims.

Note-shaver (U.S.A.). A discounter of bills, an usurer.

Nothing. Mere nothings. Trifles; unimportant things or events.

Next to nothing. A very little, as, "It will cost next to nothing"; "He eats next to nothing."

Nothing doing! Used to imply that your request is refused; your wishes cannot be met, etc.

Nothing venture, nothing have, or win. An old proverb, if you won't take a chance, you cannot expect to gain anything; if you daren't throw a SPRAT you mustn't expect to catch a mackerel.

Out of nothing one can get nothing; the Latin Ex nihilo nihil fit—i.e. every effect must have a cause. It was the dictum by which Xenophanes, founder of the ELEATIC School, postulated his theory of the eternity of matter. Persius (Satires, iii, 84) has De nihilo nihilum, in nihilum nil posse reverti, From nothing nothing, and into nothing can nothing return.

We now use the phrase as equivalent to "You cannot get blood from a stone", or expect good work from one who has no brains.

That's nothing to you, or to do with you. It's none of your business; it is not your concern.

There's nothing for it but to . . . There's no alternative, there is only one thing to do.

To come to nothing. To turn out a failure; to result in naught.

To make nothing of. To fail to understand; not to do anything with; not to make a fuss about.

To think nothing of. To regard as unimportant, or easy.

Nought. See NAUGHT.

Nous (nous) (Gr., mind, intellect). Adopted in English and used to denote "intelligence", "horse-sense", "understanding".

Thine is the genuine head of many a house,
And much divinity without a NOUS.

POPE: Dunciad, IV, 244.

Nous was the Platonic term for mind, or the first cause, and the system of divinity referred to above is that which springs from blind nature.

Nous avons changé tout cela (noo zāv on shon' zhā too sela) (Fr., We have changed all that). A facetious reproof to one who lays down the law upon everything, and talks contemptuously of old customs, old authors, old artists, etc. The phrase is taken from MOLIÈRE'S Médecin Malgré Lui, II, vi.

Nouveaux riches (noo vō' rēsh) (Fr., the new rich). A phrase with derogatory implications applied to those who have newly acquired considerable affluence and who often seek to use their money for social climbing, etc. Cobbett wrote of the "damned aristocracy of money" in this connexion and in his Rural Rides (30 October 1821) he describes "a park" belonging to a Mr. Montague with Dutch gardens and pseudo-Gothic dwelling and says: "I do not know who this gentleman is. I suppose he is some honest person from the 'Change or its neighbourhood; and that these gothic arches are to denote the antiquity of his origin!"

Nova Scotia. See ARCADIA.

Novatians (nō vā' shānz). Followers of Novatian, a presbyter of ROME in the 3rd century. They were doctrinally orthodox, but objected to the readmission into the Church of those who had dallied with paganism. They were excommunicated, but Novatianist churches persisted until after the 5th century.

Novel disseisin ("Seisin" is possession, hence "new dispossession"). A petty assize introduced by Henry II (c. 1166) to provide quick remedy for the man disseised, i.e. ejected from his FREEHOLD. If juries decided a man was wrongly disseised, he was restored to possession. It was particularly welcome after the anarchy of Stephen's reign and as time progressed the period covered by "novel" was increasingly extended until it lost meaning.

Novella. A diminutive from Lat. novus, new. A short story of the kind contained in Boccaccio's Decameron, and immensely popular in the 16th and 17th centuries. Such stories were the forerunners of the long novel and also of the short story of more recent times.

November (Lat. novem, nine). The ninth month in the ancient Roman CALENDAR, when the year began in MARCH; now the eleventh. The old Dutch name was Slaght-maand (slaughter-month, the time when the beasts were slain and salted down for winter use); the old Saxon Wind-monath (wind-month, when the fishermen drew their boats ashore, and gave over fishing till the next spring); it was also called Blot-monath—the same as Slaght-maand. In the French Republican Calendar it was called Brumaire (fog-month, 23 October to 21 November).

No sun—no moon!

No morn—no noon

No dawn—no dusk—no proper time of day.

No warmth, no cheerfulness, no healthful case,

No comfortable feel in any member—

No shade, no shine, no butterflies, no bees,

No fruits, no flowers, no leaves, no birds!—

November!

T. HOOD: No! (1844).

Novena (nō vē' nā) (Lat. novenus, nine each). In Roman Catholic devotions, a prayer for some special object or occasion extended over a period of nine days.

Nowell. See NOEL.

Noyades (nwa' yad) (Fr., drownings). During the REIGN OF TERROR in France (1793-1794), Carrier at Nantes drowned many of his victims in the Loire by stowing them in boats and removing the plugs. NERO, at the suggestion of Anicetus, attempted to drown his mother in the same manner.

Null and void. No longer of binding force; having no further validity.

Nulla linea. See NO DAY WITHOUT ITS LINE under LINE.

Nullarbor Plain, The Great (Lat. nulla arbor, no tree). The vast bare plain north of the Australian Bight, so named from its treeless character.

Nulli secundus (Lat., second to none). The motto of the COLDSTREAM GUARDS, which regiment is hence sometimes spoken of as the Nulli Secundus Chib.

Numbers, Numerals. PYTHAGORAS looked on numbers as influential principles; in his system:

1 was Unity, and represented Deity, which has no parts.

2 was Diversity, and therefore disorder; the principle of strife and all evil.

3 was Perfect Harmony, or the union of unity and diversity.

- 4 was Perfection; it is the first square ($2 \times 2 = 4$).
- 5 was the prevailing number in Nature and Art.
- 6 was Justice.
- 7 was the CLIMACTERIC number in all diseases.

With the ancient Romans 2 was the most fatal of all the numbers; they dedicated the second month to PLUTO, and the second day of the month to the MANES.

In old ecclesiastical symbolism the numbers from 1 to 13 were held to denote the following:

- 1 The Unity of God.
- 2 The hypostatic union of Christ, both God and man.
- 3 The TRINITY.
- 4 The number of the EVANGELISTS.
- 5 The wounds of the Redeemer; two in the hands, two in the feet, one in the side.
- 6 The creative week.
- 7 The gifts of the HOLY GHOST and the seven times Christ spoke on the CROSS.
- 8 The number of BEATITUDES (Matt. v, 3-11).
- 9 The nine orders of ANGELS.
- 10 The number of the Commandments.
- 11 The number of the APOSTLES who remained faithful.
- 12 The original college.
- 13 The final number after the conversion of Paul.

All our numerals and ordinals up to a million (with one exception) are Anglo-Saxon. The one exception is Second, which is French. The Anglo-Saxon word was other, as First, Other, Third, etc., but as this was ambiguous, the Fr. seconde was early adopted. Million is from Lat. mille, a thousand.

The primitive method of counting was by the fingers (cp. DIGITS); thus, in the Roman system of numeration, the first four were simply i, ii, iii, iiiii; five was the outline of the hand simplified into a v; the next four figures were the four combined, thus, vi, vii, viii, viiii; and ten was a double v, thus x. At a later period iiiii and viiii were expressed by one less than five ($i-v$) and one less than ten ($i-x$); nineteen was ten-plus-nine ($x+ix$), etc. See also ARABIC FIGURES.

Apocalyptic number, 666. See NUMBER OF THE BEAST, below.

Back number. Any number of a paper or periodical previous to the current issue; hence an out-of-date or old-fashioned person or thing; one no longer IN THE SWIM (see under SWIM).

The Book of Numbers. In the Old Testament, the Fourth Book of Moses, from the "numbering" of the Israelites in chapters iii and xxvi.

Cyclic number. A number the final digit of whose square is the same; 5 (25) and 6 (36) are examples.

Golden numbers. See under GOLDEN.

His days are numbered. They are drawing to a close; he is near death.

God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it.—Dan. v, 26.

Irrational number. A definite number not expressible in a definite number of digits, as the root of a number that cannot be exactly extracted.

Medical number. In the Pythagorean system (see NUMBER above), 7.

Not to have one's number on it. An expression used by members of the armed forces when one has a narrow escape from a bullet or other missile, since it was not supposedly earmarked by fate for one's extinction. Cp. YOUR NUMBER'S UP.

The Number of the Beast. 666; a mystical number of unknown meaning but referring to some man mentioned by St. JOHN.

Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man: and his number is Six hundred threescore and six. Rev. xiii, 18.

One of the most plausible suggestions is that it refers to Neron Cæsar, which in Hebrew characters with numerical value gives 666, whereas NERO, without the final "n", as in Latin, gives 616 ($n=50$), the number given in many early MSS., according to Irenæus.

Among the CABBALISTS, every letter represented a number, and one's number was the sum of these equivalents to the letters in one's name. If, as is probable, the Revelation was written in Hebrew, the number would suit either Nero, Hadrian, or Trajan—all persecutors; if in Greek, it would fit Caligula or Lateinos, i.e. the Roman Empire; but almost any name in any language can be twisted into this number, and it has been applied to many persons assumed to have been ANTICHRIST or Apostates, Diocletian, Evanthas, JULIAN THE APOSTATE, Luther, Mohammed, Paul V, Silvester II, NAPOLEON Bonaparte, Charles Bradlaugh, William II of Germany, and several others; as well as to certain phrases supposed to be descriptive of "the Man of Sin", as Vicar-General of God, Kakos Odegos (bad guide), Abinu Kadescha Papa (our holy father the pope), e.g.—

M	a	o	m	e	t	i	s
40	I	70	40	5	300	10	200	= 666
L	a	t	e	i	n	o	s
30	I	300	5	10	50	70	200	= 666

One suggestion is that St. John chose the number 666 because it just fell short of the holy number 7 in every particular;

Nunawading Messiah

was straining at every point to get there, but never could. See also MYSTERIUM.

There's luck in odd numbers. This is an ancient fancy. According to the Pythagorean system nine represents Deity. A major chord consists of a fundamental or tonic, its major third, and its just fifth. As the odd numbers are the fundamental notes of nature, the last being the Deity, it is understandable how they came to be considered the great or lucky numbers. Cp. DIAPASON; NUMBERS.

Good luck lies in odd numbers . . . They say, there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance or death.

SHAKESPEARE: The Merry Wives of Windsor, V, i.

The odd numbers 1, 3, 5, 7, 9 (which see), seem to play a far more important part than the even numbers. VIRGIL (Eclogues, viii, 75) says Numero Deus impari gaudet (the god delights in odd numbers). THREE indicates the "beginning, middle, and the end". The Godhead has three persons; so in classical mythology HECATE had threefold power; JOVE's symbol was a triple thunderbolt, NEPTUNE's a sea-trident, PLUTO's a three-headed dog; the Horæ three. There are SEVEN notes, NINE planets, nine orders of ANGELS, seven days a week, thirteen lunar months, or 365 days a year, etc.; FIVE senses, five fingers, five toes, five continents, etc.

To consult the Book of Numbers. A facetious way of saying "to put it to the vote".

Your number's up. You are caught, or about to die. A soldier's phrase; in the American army a soldier who has just been killed or has died is said to have "lost his mess number". An older phrase in the Royal navy was "to lose the number of his mess". Cp. NOT TO HAVE ONE'S NUMBER ON IT, above.

Number One. See under ONE.

Nunawading Messiah. Andrew Fisher of Nunawading, Victoria, Australia, who declared himself to be the Messiah in 1871. His hundred followers were polygamous, he himself having three wives.

Nunc dimittis. The Song of Simeon (Luke ii, 29), "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace", so called from the opening words of the Latin version, Nunc dimittis servum tuum, Domine.

Hence, to receive one's Nunc Dimittis, to be given permission to go; to sing one's Nunc dimittis, to show satisfaction at departing.

The Canticle is sung at Evening Prayer in the CHURCH OF ENGLAND, and has been anciently used at COMPLINE or VESPERS throughout the Church.

But, above all, believe it, the sweetest canticle is, 'Nunc dimittis' when a man hath obtained worthy ends and expectations.

BACON: Essays (Of Death).

Nuncheon. Properly, "the noon-tide draught"; M.E. noneschench (none, noon; schench, a cup or draught); hence, light refreshments between meals, lunch. The word luncheon has been affected by the older nuncheon. Cp. BEVER; TIFFIN.

Laying by their swords and truncheons,
They took their breakfasts, or their nuncheons.

BUTLER: Hudibras, I, i, 345.

Nunky. Slang for Uncle, especially as meaning a pawnbroker; or for UNCLE SAM (see under SAM).

Nunky pays for all. The American government (see UNCLE SAM under SAM) has to "stand the RACKET".

Nuremberg. Nuremberg Eggs. Watches, which were invented at Nuremberg about 1500, and were egg-shaped.

Nuremberg Laws. The infamous NAZI laws promulgated in September 1935. Jews, and all those of Jewish extraction, were deprived of all rights of German citizenship, and regulations were made against those of partial Jewish ancestry. Marriage between Jew and "German" was forbidden. Nuremberg was the centre of the annual Nazi Party convention.

Nuremberg Trials. The trial of 23 NAZI leaders conducted by an Inter-Allied tribunal at Nuremberg after World War II (September 1945-May 1946). Three were acquitted. Göring, Ribbentrop and nine others were condemned to death, and the remainder sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. Hitler, Himmler, and Goebbels avoided retribution by committing suicide.

Nurr and Spell. See KNURR.

Nursery. A room set apart for the use of young children (Lat. nurrire, to nourish); hence, a garden for rearing plants (tended by a nurseryman).

In horse-racing, Nurseries are races for two-year-olds; and figuratively the word is used of any place or school of training for the professions, etc.

Nursery cannons. In billiards, a series of cannons played so that the balls move as little as possible.

Nursery rhymes. The traditional metrical jingles learned by children "in the nursery" and frequently used in their games. They contain survivals of folk-lore, ancient superstitions, festival games, and local customs, history, etc. Most of them are very old, but some are more recent, such as Old Mother Hubbard and the NOBLE DUKE OF YORK.

Nursery slopes. Easy hillsides on which beginners learn to ski.

Nut. Slang for the head; perhaps from its shape. Also slang for a DUDE, a swell young man about town; in this sense it is sometimes spelled Knut, from an early 20th-century song featured by Basil Hallam, "I'm Gilbert the Filbert, the colonel of the K-nuts".

A hard nut to crack. A difficult question to answer; a hard problem to solve.

A tough nut. A difficult one to handle or convince.

He who would eat the nut must first crack the shell. The gods give nothing to man without great labour.

Here we go gathering nuts in May. This burden of the old children's game is a corruption of "Here we go gathering knots of may", referring to the old custom of gathering knots of flowers on MAY-DAY i.e. "to go a-maying". There are no nuts to be gathered in May.

It is time to lay our nuts aside (Lat. relinquere nuces). To leave off our follies, to relinquish boyish pursuits. The allusion is to an old Roman marriage ceremony, in which the bridegroom, as he led his bride home, scattered nuts to the crowd, as if to symbolize he gave up boyish playthings.

A nut case. Crazy, daft.

That's nuts to him. A great pleasure, a fine treat, "meat and drink".

To edge his way along the crowded paths of life, warning all human sympathy to keep its distance, was what the knowing ones call nuts to Scrooge.
DICKENS: A Christmas Carol, 1.

To be dead nuts on, or nuts on. To be highly gratified with; to be very keen on.

My aunt is awful nuts on Marcus Aurelius; I beg your pardon, you don't know the phrase; my aunt makes Marcus Aurelius her Bible.

WILLIAM BLACK: Princess of Thule, xi.

To be off one's nut, to be nuts. Crazy, demented. Hence, Nut house, a lunatic asylum.

To use a sledgehammer to crack a nut. To take quite disproportionate steps to settle what is really a very small matter; virtually the same as "to break a butterfly on a wheel" (see under BREAK).

The Nut-brown Maid. An English ballad probably dating from the late 15th century, first printed (c. 1502) in Arnold's Chronicle at Antwerp. It tells how the "Not-browne Mayd" was wooed and won by a knight who gave out that he was a banished man. After describing the hardships she would have to undergo if she married him, and finding her love true to the test, he revealed himself to be an earl's son, with large estates in Westmorland.

The ballad is given in PERCY'S RELIQUES, and forms the basis of Prior's Henry and Emma.

Nutcrack Night. ALL HALLOWS' EVE, from the customary cracking of nuts.

Nutcrackers. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

The "Iliad" in a nutshell. Pliny (vii, 21) tells us that the ILIAD was copied in so small a hand that the whole work could lie in a walnut shell; his authority is Cicero (Apud Gellium, ix, 421).

Whilst they (as Homer's Iliad in a nut)

A world of wonders in one closet shut.

On the Tradescant Monument, Lambeth Church-yard.

Huet, Bishop of Avranches (d. 1721), proved by experiment that a parchment 27 by 21 centimetres could contain the entire Iliad, and that such a parchment would go into a common-sized nut; he wrote 80 verses of the Iliad (which contains in all 501,930 letters) on a single line of a page similar to this Dictionary. This would be 19,000 verses to the page, or 2,000 more than the Iliad contains.

In the Harleian MSS. (530) is an account of Peter Bales, a clerk of the Court of CHANCERY about 1590, who wrote a BIBLE so small that he enclosed it in a walnut shell of English growth. Lalanne described, in his Curiosités Bibliographiques, an edition of la Rochefoucauld's Maximes, published by Didot in 1829, on pages one inch square, each page containing 26 lines, and each line 44 letters. Charles Toppan, of New York, engraved on a plate one-eighth of an inch square 12,000 letters; the Iliad would occupy 42 such plates engraved on both sides. George P. Marsh says, in his Lectures, he has seen the entire KORAN in a parchment roll four inches wide and half an inch in diameter.

To lie in a nutshell. To be explained in a few words; to be capable of easy solution.

Nutmeg State. The nickname of CONNECTICUT, where wooden nutmegs were allegedly manufactured for export.

Nutter's Dance. A dance still performed at Bacup, Lancashire, on EASTER Saturday. The "nutters" are eight men clad in black, with white skirts and stockings, with wooden "nuts" fastened to their hands, waist and knees. The dance is performed to music and time is kept by clapping the nuts.

Nymphs

Nymphs (nimphs) (Gr., young maidens). In classical mythology, minor female divinities of nature, of woods, groves, springs, streams, rivers, etc. They were young and beautiful maidens and well disposed towards mortals. They were not immortal, but their life span was several thousand years. Particular kinds of nymphs were associated with the various provinces of nature. See DRYADS; HAMA-DRYADS; NAIADS; NEREIDS; OCEANIDS; OREADS.

O

O. The fifteenth letter of our alphabet, the fourteenth of the ancient Roman, and the sixteenth of the Phœnician and Semitic (in which it was called "the eye"). Its name in O.E. was oedel, home, As a mediæval Latin numeral 0 represents II. A headless man had a letter [O] to write
He who read it [naught] had lost his sight,
The dumb repeated it [naught] word for word,
And deaf was the man who listened and heard [naught].

Dr. Whewell.

Round as Giotto's O. Said of work that is perfect and complete, but done with little effort. See GIOTTO.

The fifteen O's, or The O's of St. Bridget. Fifteen meditations on the PASSION composed by St. Bridget. Each begins with O Jesu, or a similar invocation.

The Seven O's, or The Great O's of Advent. The seven antiphons to the MAGNIFICAT sung during the week preceding CHRISTMAS. They commence respectively with O Sapientia, O Adonai, O Radix Jesse, O Clavis David, O Oriens Splendor, O Rex gentium, and O Emmanuel. They are sometimes called The Christmas O's.

O'. An Irish patronymic. (Gael. ogha; Ir. oa, a descendant.)

O' in tam-o'-shanter, what's o'clock? cat-o'-nine-tails, etc., stands for of; but in such phrases as He comes home late o' night, I go to church o' Sundays, it represents M.E. on.

O.K. All correct, all right; a reassuring affirmative that, coming from the U.S.A. to England, has spread colloquially throughout several European languages. Its first recorded use occurs in 1839. Commonly regarded as standing for "O.K. Korrekt" (all correct), it apparently derives from the political society called "Democratic O.K.," the "O.K." signifying "Old Kinderhook", a nickname of the Democratic leader, Martin Van Buren (1782-1862).

O.P. Riots. When COVENT GARDEN Theatre was reopened in 1809 after the disastrous fire of the preceding year, the charges of admission were increased; but night after night for three months a throng crowded the pit, shouting "O.P." (old prices); much damage was done, and the manager was obliged at last to give way.

O tempora! O mores! (ō tem' pōr ā ō mōr' ēz) (Lat.). Alas! how the times have changed for the worse! Alas! how the morals of the people have degenerated! The tag is from Cicero's In Catalinam, i, 1.

O Yes! O Yes! O Yes! See OYEZ.

Oaf. A corruption of ouph (elf). A foolish lout or dolt is so called from the notion that idiots are CHANGELINGS, left by the FAIRIES in place of the stolen ones.

Oak. The oak was in ancient times sacred to the god of thunder because these trees are said to be more likely to be struck by lightning than any other. The DRUIDS held the oak in greatest veneration and the WOODEN WALLS of England depended upon it. About 3,500 full-grown oaks or 900 acres of oak forest were used in selecting the timber for a large three-decker line-of-battle ship. (See HEART OF OAK.) The strength, hardness, and durability of the timber, as well as the longevity of the tree, have given the oak a special significance to Englishmen, hence its name the Monarch of the Forest.

I sit beneath your leaves, old oak,
You mighty one of all the trees;
Within whose hollow trunk a man
Could stable his big horse with ease.
W. H. DAVIES: The Old Oak Tree.

Among the famous oaks of England are:

The Abbot's Oak, near Woburn Abbey, was so called because the abbot of Woburn was hanged on one of its branches, in 1537, by order of Henry VIII.

The Boscobel Oak. See OAK-APPLE DAY. The Bull Oak, Wedgenock Park, was growing at the time of the CONQUEST.

Cowthorpe Oak, near Wetherby, Yorkshire, will hold 70 persons in its hollow. It is said to be over 1,600 years old.

The Ellerslie Oak, near Paisley, is reported to have sheltered Sir William WALLACE and 300 of his men.

FAIRLOP OAK, see FAIRLOP.

Herne's Oak. An oak in Windsor Great Park, reputed to be haunted by the ghost of Herne the Hunter (see WILD HUNTS-MAN). It was supposed to be 650 years old when blown down in 1863. Queen Victoria planted a young oak on the site.

Honour Oak. This boundary oak still standing at Whitchurch, Tavistock, marked the Tavistock limit for French prisoners on parole from Princetown prison during the years 1803-1814, when England was at war with France. It was also the place where money was left in exchange for food during the cholera epidemic of 1832.

King Oak. See William the Conqueror's Oak, below.

The Major Oak, Sherwood Forest, Edwinstowe, is supposed to have been a full-grown tree in the reign of King John. The hollow of the trunk will hold 15 persons, but new bark has considerably diminished the opening. Its girth is 37 or 38 ft., and the head covers a circumference of 240 ft.

Meavy Oak. A venerable oak in front of the lych-gate of Meavy Church, near Yelverton, Devon, some 25 ft. in circumference, in the hollow of which nine persons are once reputed to have dined. According to tradition it dates back to Saxon times.

Owen Glendower's Oak, at Shelton, near Shrewsbury, was in full growth in 1403, for in this tree Owen Glendower witnessed the great battle between Henry IV and Henry Percy. Six or eight persons can stand in the hollow of its trunk. Its girth is 40½ ft.

The Parliament Oak, Clipston, in Sherwood Forest, was the tree under which Edward I held a PARLIAMENT in 1282. He was hunting when a messenger announced the Welsh were in revolt under Llewelyn ap Gruffydd. He hastily convened his nobles under the oak and it was resolved to march against the Welsh at once. It was still standing at the beginning of this century.

Queen's Oak, Huntingfield, Suffolk, is so named because near this tree Queen Elizabeth shot a buck.

The Reformation Oak, on Mousehold Heath, near Norwich, is where the rebel Ket held his court in 1549, and when the rebellion was stamped out nine of the ringleaders were hanged on this tree.

Robin Hood's Larder was an oak in Sherwood Forest. The tradition is that ROBIN HOOD used its hollow trunk as a hiding-place for the deer he had slain. Late in the last century some schoolgirls boiled their kettle in it, and burnt down a large part of the tree, which was reputed to be 1,000 years old. It was blown down in 1966, and the Duke of Portland gave a suitably inscribed remnant to the Mayor of Toronto.

The Royal Oak. See OAK-APPLE DAY.

Sir Philip Sidney's Oak, near Penshurst, Kent, was planted at his birth in 1554, and was commemorated by Ben Jonson and Waller.

The Swilcar Oak, in Needwood Forest, Staffordshire, is between 600 and 700 years old.

William the Conqueror's Oak, or the King Oak, in Windsor Great Park, which is supposed to have afforded him shelter, is 38 ft. in girth.

Heart of Oak. See under HEART.

Oak before the Ash. The old proverbial forecast, referring to whichever is in leaf first, says:

If the oak's before the ash
Then you'll only get a splash;
If the ash precedes the oak,
Then you may expect a soak.

i.e. a wet summer is to be expected.

To sport one's oak. An old university custom signifying that one is "not at home" to visitors by closing the oak or outer door of one's rooms.

Oak-apple Day (also called Royal Oak Day). 29 May, the birthday of Charles II and the day when he entered London at the RESTORATION; commanded by Act of PARLIAMENT in 1664 to be observed as a day of thanksgiving. A special service (expunged in 1859) was inserted in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER and people wore sprigs of oak with gilded oak-apples on that day.

It commemorates Charles II's concealment with Major Careless in the "Royal Oak" at Boscobel, near Shifnal, Salop, after his defeat at Worcester (3 September, 1651).

Oak boys. Bands of PROTESTANT agrarian rioters in ULSTER in the 1760s, so called from the oak sprays worn in their hats. Their main grievance was against the TITHE system. Cp. STEELBOYS.

Oakes's Oath (Austr.). Unreliable testimony delivered on oath. The phrase is said to derive from one, Oakes, who was asked in a Court of Law if he could identify a pair of horns as belonging to one of his own cattle. After hesitating a moment he is reported to have said, "I'll chance it; Yes!"

Oakley, Annie. An expert American marks-woman (1860-1926), who in BUFFALO BILL's Wild West Show, using a playing card as a target, centred a shot in each of the pips. From this performance of hers, and the resemblance of the card to a punched ticket, springs the American use of the name "Annie Oakley" to mean a complimentary ticket to a show, a meal ticket, or a pass on a railway.

Oaks, The. The "Ladies Race", one of the CLASSIC RACES of the turf; it is for three-year-old fillies, and is run at Epsom two days after the DERBY. It was instituted in 1779 and so called from an estate of the Earl of Derby near Epsom named "The Oaks".

Oakum. Picking oakum. An old employment given to prisoners, the picking and unravelling of old rope, which was used for caulking the decks of wooden ships. It is the O.E. acumbe, off-combings.

Oannes (ō ān' ēz). A Babylonian god having a fish's body and a human head and feet. In the daytime he lived with men to instruct them in the arts and sciences, but at night returned to the depths of the Persian Gulf.

Oar. To put your oar into my boat. To interfere in my affairs.

To rest on one's oars. To take a rest or breathing space after hard work or strenuous effort. A boating phrase.

To toss the oars. To raise them vertically, resting on the handles. It is a form of salute.

Oasis (ō ā' sis) (Coptic ouahe; from ouih, to dwell). A fertile spot in the midst of desert country where water and vegetation are to be found. A delightful spot, or a charming and sheltered retreat from a drab or noisy environment, is sometimes called "a perfect oasis".

Oaten pipe. A rustic musical pipe made of an oat straw so cut as to be stopped at one end with a knot, the other end being left open. A slit made in the straw near the knot was so cut as to form a reed.

Meanwhile the rural ditties were not mute,
Temper'd to the oaten flute.

MILTON: Lycidas.

Oatmeals. A 17th-century nickname given to profligate bands in the streets of London. Cp. MOHOCKS; TITYRE TUS.

Do mad prank
With roaring boys and Oatmeals.
DEKKER AND FORD: Sun's Darling, I, i.

Oatmeal Monday. The mid-term Monday at the Scottish universities when the father of a poor student would bring him a sack of oatmeal to provide his staple diet for the rest of the term.

Oats. To sow one's wild oats. To indulge in youthful excesses and dissipations.

The reference is to sowing bad grain (wild) instead of good (cultivated).

Obadiah. An old slang name for a QUAKER.

Obeah, Obi. The belief in and practice of obeah, i.e. a kind of sorcery or witchcraft prevalent in West Africa and formerly in the West Indies. Obeah is a native word, and signifies something put into the ground, to bring about sickness, death, or other disaster. Cp. VODOO.

Obelisk. A tapering pillar of stone, originally erected by the Egyptians, who placed them in pairs before temple portals. The base was usually one-tenth of the height and the apex was copper-sheathed. Each of the four faces bore incised HIEROGLYPHS. The best known in England is CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE.

The tallest of all obelisks is at ROME, taken there from Heliopolis by the Emperor CALIGULA and erected in the circus that is now the Piazza of St. Peter's. Although weighing some 320 tons, it was moved bodily on rollers by order of Pope Sixtus V, in 1586. Spectators were forbidden to utter a sound on pain of death during the operation, and when the ropes were straining to breaking point, one of the workmen, a sailor from San Remo, called "Acqua alle funi" (Water on the ropes), so saving the situation at the risk of the death penalty.

The Obelisk of Luxor, in the Place de la Concorde, PARIS, came from Thebes, and was presented to Louis Philippe in 1831, by the then KHEDIVÉ of Egypt. Its hieroglyphs record the deeds of Rameses II (12th century B.C.). Cp. COLUMN.

Oberammergau. See PASSION PLAY.

Obermann. The impersonation of high moral worth without talent, and the tortures endured by the consciousness of this defect. From Senancour's psychological romance of this name (1804), in which Obermann, the hero, is a dreamer perpetually trying to escape the actual.

Oberon. King of the FAIRIES, husband of TITANIA. Shakespeare introduces them in his Midsummer Night's Dream. The name is probably connected with ALBERICH, the king of the elves.

He first appeared in the mediæval French romance, Huon de Bordeaux, where he is a son of Julius CÆSAR and MORGAN LE FAY. He was only three feet high, but of angelic face, and was the lord and king of Mommur. At his birth, the fairies bestowed their gifts—one was insight into men's thoughts, and another was the power of transporting himself to any place instantaneously; and in the fullness of time legions of ANGELS conveyed his soul to PARADISE.

Obi. See OBEAH.

Obiter dictum (ob' i tēr dik' tūm) (Lat.). An incidental remark, something said in passing; a judge's expression of opinion backed by his knowledge and experience, but not forming part of a judgment and therefore not legally binding. Obiter means in passing, the more common plural form of the phrase being obiter dicta.

Object; Objective. See SUBJECT.

Oblong (U.S.A.). A late 19th-century slang term for a bank note.

Obolus. An ancient Greek bronze or silver coin of small value; also a mediæval silver coin of small value. See BELISARIUS.

Observantins. See FRANCISCANS.

Obverse. That side of a coin or medal which contains the principal device. Thus, the obverse of our coins is the side which contains the sovereign's head; the other side is the reverse.

Occam's Razor. Entia non sunt multiplicanda præter necessitatem (entities ought not to be multiplied except from necessity), which means that all unnecessary facts or constituents in the subject being analysed are to be eliminated. Occam dissected every question as with a razor.

William of Occam, the Doctor Singularis et Invincibilis (d. 1349), the great FRANCISCAN scholastic philosopher, was probably born at Ockham, Surrey, Occam being the latinized form of the name.

Occasion. To improve the occasion.

To draw a moral lesson from some event or occurrence.

Occult Sciences (Lat. occultus; related to celare, to hide). Magic, ALCHEMY, ASTROLOGY, palmistry, DIVINATION, etc.; so called because they were hidden mysteries.

Oceanids, or Oceanides. In Greek mythology, sea-NYMPHS, daughters of OCEANUS and Tethys, among whom were DORIS, Electra, and AMPHITRITE. Offerings were made to them by mariners.

Oceanus (ō sē' á nus). A Greek sea-god; also the river of the world which circles the earth and as such represented as a snake with its tail in its mouth. As a sea-god, he is an old man with a long beard and with bull's horns on his head.

Ockham. See OCCAM.

October. The eighth month of the ancient Roman CALENDAR (Lat. octo, eight) when the year began in MARCH; the tenth of ours. The old Dutch name was Wyn- maand; the O.E. Winmonath (wine-month, or the time of vintage); also Teo-monath (tenth month) and Winterfylleth (winter full-moon). In the French Revolutionary Calendar it was Vendémiaire (time of vintage, 22 September to 21 October).

A tankard of October. A tankard of the best and strongest ale, brewed in October.

October Club. In the reign of Queen Anne, a group of High TORY M.P.s who met at a tavern near PARLIAMENT to drink OCTOBER ALE and to abuse the WHIGS. It became politically prominent about 1710 although it had probably existed from the end of William III's reign.

Also a left-wing political club at Oxford in the 1930s of Communist sympathies, taking its name from the OCTOBER REVOLUTION.

Octobrists. A "constitutionalist" centre party in Russia supported by the landlords and wealthy mercantile interests, prominent in the dumas between 1907 and 1914, after the Tsar's famous liberal manifesto published in October 1905.

October Revolution. In Russian history, the BOLSHEVIK revolution of September 1917 (November in the western calendar) which led to the overthrow of Kerensky and the MENSHEVIKS and the triumph of Lenin.

Od. See ODYLE.

Odal. See UDAL TENURE.

Odd. There's luck in odd numbers. See under NUMBERS.

Odd Fellows. A Friendly Society of 18th-century origins, first formed at London. During the period of the French Revolutionary Wars many lodges were prosecuted for alleged "seditious" activities, as were many harmless organizations. In 1813, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows was formed at Manchester and it became the most influential in England. The movement spread to the United States and Canada and allied bodies now exist in various European countries.

Sette of Odd Volumes. A literary dining Society in London, founded in 1884.

At odds. At variance.

By long odds. By a great difference; as, "He is the best man by long odds." In horse-racing, odds are the ratio by which the amount staked by one party to a bet exceeds that of the other; hence long odds indicates a big variance in this ratio.

Odds and ends. See END.

Odin

Over the odds. Beyond what might normally be expected. A phrase from betting. Cp. BY LONG ODDS, above.

That makes no odds. No difference; never mind, that is no excuse. An application of the betting phrase.

To shout the odds. To make a noisy protest or fuss; as a bookmaker noisily proclaims the odds.

Odin (ō' din). The Scandinavian name of the god called by the Anglo-Saxons WODEN. He was god of wisdom, poetry, war, and agriculture. As god of the dead, he presided over banquets of those slain in battle. (See VALHALLA.) He became the All-wise by drinking of Mimir's fountain, but purchased the distinction at the pledge of one eye, and is often represented as a one-eyed man wearing a hat and carrying a staff. His remaining eye is the SUN, his horse Sleipnir. He was master of magic and discovered the RUNES.

The promise of Odin. The most binding of all oaths to a Norseman. In making it the hand was passed through a massive silver ring kept for the purpose; or through a sacrificial stone, like that called the "Circle of Stennis".

The vow of Odin. A matrimonial or other vow made before the "Stone of Odin" in the Orkneys. This was an oval stone, with a hole in it large enough to admit a man's hand. Anyone who violated a vow made before this stone was held infamous.

Odium theologicum (ō' di ūm thē ō loj' i kŭm) (Lat.). The bitter hatred of rival theologians. No wars so sanguinary as holy wars; no persecutions so relentless as religious persecutions; no hatred so bitter as theological hatred.

Odor lucri (ō' dōr lŭ' kri) (Lat.). The sweets of gain; the delights of money-making.

Odour. In good odour; in bad odour. In favour, out of favour; in good repute, in bad repute.

The odour of sanctity. In the MIDDLE AGES it was held that a sweet and delightful odour was given off by the bodies of saintly persons at their death, and also when their bodies, if "translated", were distinterred. Hence the phrase, he died in the odour of sanctity, i.e. he died a saint. The SWEDENBORGIANS say that when the celestial ANGELS are present at a death-bed, what is then cadaverous excites a sensation of what is aromatic.

There is an "odour of iniquity" as well and SHAKESPEARE has a strong passage on the odour of impiety. Antiochus and his wicked daughter were killed by lightning and Shakespeare says (Pericles, Prince of Tyre, II, iv):

A fire from heaven came and shrivelled up
Their bodies, e'en to loathing; for they so stunk
That all those eyes adored them ere their fall
Scorn now their hand should give them burial.

Od's, used in oaths, as:

Od's bodikins! or Odsbody! means "God's body".

Od's pittikins! God's pity.

Od's plessed will! (Merry Wives of Windsor, I, i). God's blessed will.

Od rot 'em! See DRAT.

Od-zounds! God's wounds.

Odyle (od' il). The name formerly given to the hypothetical force which emanates from a medium to produce the phenomena connected with MESMERISM, spirit-rapping, table-turning, and so on. Baron von Reichenbach (1788-1869) called it Od force, and taught that it pervaded all nature, especially heat, light, crystals, magnets, etc., and was developed in chemical action; and also that it streamed from the fingers of specially sensitive persons.

That od-force of German Reichenbach

Which still from female finger-tips burns blue.

MRS. BROWNING: Aurora Leigh, vii, 566.

Odyssey (od' i si). The epic poem of HOMER which records the adventures of Odysseus (Ulysses) on his homeward voyage from TROY. The word implies the things or adventures of ULYSSES.

Œcumenical Councils (ē kŭ men' ik āl) (Gr. oikoumenikos, the whole inhabited world—ge, earth, being understood). Ecclesiastical councils whose findings are—or were—recognized as binding on all Christians.

Those commonly recognized in the East and West, which dealt with the heresies indicated, are:

Nicæa, 325 (Arianism); Constantinople, 381 (Apollinarianism); Ephesus, 431 (Nestorianism); Chalcedon, 451 (Eutychianism); Constantinople, 553 and 680-1 (Monothelitism); Nicæa, 787 (Iconoclasm).

The ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH also recognizes:

Constantinople, 869-870; Lateran, 1123, 1139, 1179, 1215; Lyons, 1245, 1274; Vienne, 1311-1312; Constance 1414-1418; Ferrara-Florence, 1438-1439; Trent, 1545-1563 (Protestantism and Reform); Vatican, 1869-1870 (Papal Infallibility); Vatican, 1962-1965.

The Second VATICAN COUNCIL was attended by observers from the CHURCH OF ENGLAND and 26 other denominations.

Œcumenical Movement. The movement towards re-unity among the various Christian Churches, which has gathered strength in recent years, especially since the Second Vatican Council and the establishment of the World Council of Churches inaugurated at Amsterdam in 1948 which comprises most of the prominent Christian bodies.

Œdipus (ē di pūs) was the son of Laius, King of Corinth, and of Jocasta his wife. To avert the fulfilment of the prophecy that he would murder his father and marry his mother, Œdipus was exposed on the mountains as an infant and taken in and reared by the shepherds. When grown to manhood he unwittingly slew his father; then, having solved the riddle of the SPHINX, he became King of THEBES, thereby gaining the hand in marriage of Jocasta, his mother, of whose relationship to himself they were both ignorant. When the facts came to light Jocasta hanged herself and Œdipus tore out his own eyes.

An Œdipus complex is the psycho-analytical term for the sexual desire (usually unrecognized by himself) of a son for his mother and conversely an equally unrecognized jealous hatred of his father.

Œil-de-Bœuf (ē ē de bœrf) (Fr., "bull's-eye"). A large reception room (salle) in the Palace of VERSAILLES was so named from its round "bull's-eye" window. The ceiling, decorated by Van der Meulen, contains likenesses of Louis XIV's children. It was the ante-room where courtiers waited and gossiped, hence the name became associated with BACKSTAIRS intrigue.

Les Fastes de l'Œil-de-Bœuf. The annals of the courtiers of the Grand Monarque; hence the anecdotes of courtiers generally.

Enone (ē nō' nē). A NYMPH of Mount IDA, the wife of PARIS before he abducted HELEN. She prophesied the disastrous consequences of his voyage to Greece and, on the death of Paris, killed herself.

Off (Lat. ab, from, away). The house is a mile off—i.e. is "away" or "from" us a mile. The word preceding off defines its scope. To be "well off" is to be away or on the way towards prosperity or well-being; to be "badly off" is the reverse.

The off-side of a motor-car is that to the right hand of the driver (cp. NEAR); in Association Football the referee signals Off-side and awards a free kick when the ball is played and a player of the attacking side is nearer to his opponent's goal-line and there are not two of his opponents between himself and the goal.

An act of behaviour, a thing, a person, etc., is said to be a bit off when it is not quite up to proper standards. (See OFF COLOUR under COLOUR.) A girl is said "to get off" when she succeeds in "hooking" a male.

Offa's Dyke. An earthwork running from the Wye, near Monmouth, to near Prestatyn in Flintshire, probably built by Offa of MERCIA (c. 784–796) as a boundary between him and the Welsh.

Office, The Divine. The obligatory prayers, etc., of the Church said by priests and the religious. The Divine Office (horæ canonica) of the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH is contained in the BREVIARY.

Office, The Holy. See INQUISITION.

Offing. In the offing. Said of a ship visible at sea off the land. Such a ship is often approaching port, hence the phrase is used figuratively to mean "about to happen", "likely to occur" or "likely to take place", etc.

Og, King of Bashan, according to Rabbinical legend, was an antediluvian GIANT, saved from the Flood (see DELUGE) by climbing on the roof of the ark. After the passage of the Red Sea, MOSES first conquered Sihon, and then advanced against the giant Og whose bedstead, made of iron, was 9 cubits long and 4 cubits broad (Deut. iii, 11). The legend says that Og plucked up a mountain to hurl at the Israelites, but he got so entangled with his burden that Moses was able to kill him without much difficulty.

In Dryden's ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, Og is used for Thomas Shadwell, who was very large and fat.

Ogam, or Ogham. The alphabet in use among the ancient Irish and British peoples. There were 20 characters, each of which was composed of a number (from one to five) of thin strokes arranged and grouped above, below, or across a horizontal line.

m	g	ng	f	r	p	ā	o	u	e

The word is connected with Ogmnius, the name of a Gaulish god, likened to HERCULES by Lucian, who performed his feats through eloquence and the gift of languages. Cp. RUNE.

Ogier the Dane (ō' jī ér). One of the great heroes of mediæval romance whose exploits are chronicled in the CHANSONS DE GESTE; son of Geoffrey, King of Denmark, of which country (as Holger Danske) he is still the national hero. In one account his son was slain by CHARLEMAGNE's son Charlot and in revenge Ogier killed the king's nephew and was only prevented from slaying Charlemagne himself. He eventually returned from exile to defend France against the Saracen chief Brehus. In another romance, it is said, FAIRIES attended his birth, among them MORGAN LE FAY, who eventually took him to AVALON where he dwelt for 200 years. She then sent him to defend France against invasion, after which she took him back to Avalon. William Morris gives a rendering of this romance in his Earthly Paradise (August).

Ogpu, or G.P.U. The secret political police of the U.S.S.R. which succeeded the Cheka in 1922. The initials stand for Obedinnoe Gosudarstvennoe Politicheskoe Upravlenie (United State Political Administration). It was renamed the N.K.V.D., Narodnyi Komissariat Vnutrennykh Dyel (People's Commissariat for Internal Affairs), in 1934. In 1944 Ministerstvo (Ministry) was substituted for "N.K." and it became the M.V.D.

Ogres of nursery story are GIANTS of very malignant disposition, who live on human flesh. The word was first used (and probably invented) by Perrault in his Histoires ou Contes du temps passé (1697), and is thought to be made up from Orcus, a name of PLUTO.

Ogygia (ō jīj' i a). See CALYPSO.

Ogygian Deluge. In Greek legend, a flood said to have occurred when Ogyges was King of Bœotia, some 200 years before DEUCALION's flood. Varro says that the planet VENUS underwent a great change in the reign of Ogyges. It changed its diameter, its colour, its figure, and its course.

Oi Polloi, properly HOI POLLOI.

Oil. Fixed oils. See under FIX.

Oil of Angels. Money used as a bribe or douceur; in allusion to the old coin called an ANGEL.

Oil of Palms. See PALM-OIL.

Burning the midnight oil. See MIDNIGHT OIL.

To be well oiled. Pretty well drunk.

To oil the knocker. To fee the porter. The expression is from Racine's Les Plaideurs: "On n'entre point chez lui sans graisser le marteau" (no one enters his house without oiling the knocker).

To pour oil on troubled waters. To soothe by gentle words; to use tact and diplomacy to restore calm after excited anger and quarrelsome argument.

The allusion is to the well-known fact that the violence of waves is much decreased when oil is poured upon them. In Bede's Ecclesiastical History (731) it is said that St. Aidan gave a young priest, who was to escort a maiden destined for the bride of King Oswy, a cruse of oil to pour on the sea if the waves became stormy. The priest did this when a storm arose and thereby calmed the waters.

To strike oil. To make a lucky or valuable discovery; to come upon good fortune in some form or other. The phrase refers to the finding of mineral oil deposits, always a source of wealth.

Old. Used colloquially as a term of endearment or friendship, as in My dear old chap, my old man (i.e. my husband); as a general disparagement, as in old cat, old fogey, old geezer, old stick-in-the-mud; and as a common intensive, as in SHAKESPEARE'S "Here will be an old abusing of God's patience and the King's English" (The Merry Wives of Windsor, I, iv), and in the modern "any old thing will do".

For names such as Old Grog, Harry, Noll, Rowley, Scratch, Tom, etc., see under these words.

Old Bold Fifth. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Old Bags. John Scott Eldon (1751-1838), Lord CHANCELLOR; so called from his carrying home with him in different bags the cases still pending his judgment.

Old Bailey. The Central Criminal Court of the City of LONDON and of (approximately) the Greater London area, situated in the thoroughfare of this name. It is probably from Med. Lat. ballium, enclosure; the enclosure of the City wall between LUDGATE and NEWGATE. The area has historic associations with crime owing to the proximity of NEWGATE GAOL and its being the site of public executions, the last victim being a FENIAN executed by William Calcraft in 1868. It was also the site of a pillory.

Old Believers. Those members of the Russian ORTHODOX CHURCH who rejected the liturgical reforms of the patriarch Nikon and were excommunicated in 1667. They were subjected to violent persecution and eventually resolved into two groups, the Popovtsy, and the Bespopovtsy, the latter rejecting the priesthood altogether. The former attained state recognition in 1881.

Old Bill. See 'OLE, A BETTER.

Old Blood and guts. General G. S. Patton. See BLOOD AND GUTS.

Old Bona Fide. Louis XIV (1638, 1643-1715).

Old Boots. See under BOOTS.

Old Boy. A friendly colloquial form of address between men of any age; the term also denotes a former pupil of a particular school, hence "old boys' clubs", "old boys' dinners", etc. Old girl is similarly used to denote old scholars, and by men as an affectionate term of address to members of the opposite sex. It is also applied to certain female animals, especially horses. Both terms are applied in the obvious sense to elderly men and women. See OLD SCHOOL TIE.

Old Boy Net. See NET.

Old Braggs. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Old Bullion. Thomas Hart Benton (1782-1858), Jacksonian Democrat and statesman. He opposed the establishment of a national bank and was nicknamed "Old Bullion" for his championship of the virtues of "hard money" (see HARD CURRENCY).

Old Catholics. In the Netherlands, the Church of Utrecht which separated from ROME in 1724 after allegations of Jansenism. The term is more particularly associated with members of the German, Austrian, and Swiss Churches who rejected the dogmas of papal INFALLIBILITY after the VATICAN COUNCIL of 1870 and were joined by others as a result of the KULTURKAMPF. Their episcopal succession is derived from the Church of Utrecht. There are other small groups of Poles and Croats. The Old Catholics are in communion with the CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Old Chapel. See under CHAPEL.

Old Contemptibles. See CONTEMPTIBLES.

Old Cracow Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Old Dominion. See under DOMINION.

Old Dozen. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Old Fogs. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Old Fox. A nickname of George Washington and Marshal Soult.

Old Glory. The United States Flag. See STARS AND STRIPES.

Old Guard. The veteran regiments of NAPOLEON's Imperial Guard, the flower of the French army. Devoted to their Emperor, the Old Guard could be relied upon in any desperate strait, and it was they who made the last charge of the French at Waterloo. Figuratively, the phrase Old Guard is used for the stalwarts of any party or movement.

The Imperial Guard was composed of four regiments of the Young Guard, four of the Middle Guard, four of the Old Guard, four cavalry regiments, and 96 pieces of artillery.

NAPOLEON: The Waterloo Campaign, II, iv.

Old Hickory. The nickname of General Andrew Jackson (1767-1845), 7th President of the U.S.A.; it arose from his staunchness and strength of character.

Old Hundredth. See under HUNDRED.

Old Ironsides. See IRONSIDES.

Old King Cole. See COLE.

Old Lady of the Bund. The nickname given by British residents in China to The North China Daily News, published at Shanghai (1855-1950).

Old Lady of Threadneedle Street. See under THREADNEEDLE STREET.

Old Man Eloquent. MILTON so called Isocrates. When he heard of the result of the battle of Chæroneia, which was fatal to Grecian liberty, he died of grief.

That dishonest victory
At Chæroneia, fatal to liberty,
Killed with report that Old Man Eloquent.

MILTON: Sonnet x.

The name was also applied to John Quincy Adams (1767-1848), 6th President of the U.S.A. (1825-1829).

Old Man of the Mountain. See under MOUNTAIN.

Old Man of the Sea. In the story of Sinbad the Sailor (ARABIAN NIGHTS), the Old Man of the Sea hoisted himself on Sinbad's shoulders and clung there for many days and nights, much to the discomfort of Sinbad, who finally got rid of the Old Man by making him drunk. Hence, any burden, figurative or actual, of which it is impossible to free oneself without the greatest exertions is called an Old Man of the Sea. Cp. NEREUS.

Old Masters. See under MASTER.

Old Nick. See under NICK.

Old Pretender. See PRETENDER.

Old Reekie. See AULD REEKIE.

Old Rough and Ready. General Zachary Taylor (1784-1850), 12th President of the U.S.A., 1849-1850.

Old School Tie. Literally, a distinguishing necktie worn by OLD BOYS of a particular school. Such ties being essentially associated with the public schools and the older grammar schools led to old school tie being given a pejorative use as a symbol of class distinction, e.g. "the old school tie brigade", meaning the members of a privileged class.

Oldenburg Horn

Old Style, New Style. Terms used in chronology. Old Style refers to dating by the JULIAN CALENDAR and New Style by the GREGORIAN CALENDAR.

Old Vic. The theatre in Waterloo Road, LONDON, which became famous for its Shakespearean productions under the management of Lilian Baylis, who took over from her aunt, Emma Cons, in 1912, and who died in 1937. It was opened in 1818 as the Coburg and was renamed the Royal Victoria Hall in 1833. In 1963 it became the temporary home of the National Theatre. See SADLER'S WELLS.

Old wives' tales. Superstitious stories and beliefs such as are kept alive and spread by credulous old women.

Old woman. Colloquially, a fusspot, an old ditherer, as, "he is a proper old woman."

Old World. So Europe, Asia, and Africa are called when contrasted with the NEW WORLD.

Oldenburg Horn. A horn long in the possession of the reigning princes of the House of Oldenburg, but now in the collection of the King of Denmark. According to tradition, Count Otto of Oldenburg, in 967, was offered drink in this silver-gilt horn by a "wild woman", at the Osenborg. As he did not like the look of the liquor, he threw it away, and rode off with the horn.

'Ole, A Better. Old Bill, a walrus-moustached, disillusioned old soldier, in the 1914-1918 war, portrayed by Captain Bruce Bairnsfather (1887-1959), artist and journalist, in his publications Old Bill and The Better 'Ole. Cowering in a muddy shell-hole in the midst of a withering bombardment, he says to his grouching pal Bert, "If you know of a better 'ole, go to it." The joke and Old Bill struck the public fancy and Old Bill became the embodiment of a familiar type of simple, cynical, long-suffering, honest old grouser.

Olet lucernam (ō' let loo sēr' nām). A Latin proverb, see IT SMELLS OF THE LAMP under LAMP.

Olio (ō' li ō) (Span. olla, a stew, or the pot in which it is cooked; from Lat. olla, a pot). In Spain a mixture of meat, vegetables, spices, etc., boiled together and highly seasoned; hence any HOTCHPOTCH of various ingredients, as a miscellaneous collection of verses, drawings, pieces of music, etc.

Olive. In ancient Greece the olive was sacred to PALLAS, in allusion to the story that at the naming of ATHENS she presented it with an olive branch. It was the symbol of peace and fecundity, brides wearing or carrying an olive garland as ours do a wreath of ORANGE BLOSSOM. A crown of olive was the highest distinction of a citizen who deserved well of his country, and was the highest prize in the OLYMPIC GAMES.

In the Old Testament, the subsiding of the FLOOD was demonstrated to Noah by the return of a DOVE bearing an olive leaf in her beak (Gen. viii, 11).

Olive Branch Petition. A peace move adopted by Congress (5 July 1775) after Bunker Hill to secure reconciliation with Great Britain and drawn up by John Dickinson. Lord North's conciliation proposals were rejected by the Americans and George III refused to receive the Olive Branch Petition.

Olive branches. A facetious term for children in relation to their parents; the allusion is to "Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine . . . thy children like olive plants round about thy table" (Ps. cxxxviii, 3).

The wife and olive branches of one Mr. Kenwigs.
DICKENS: Nicholas Nickleby, xiv.

To hold out the olive branch. To make overtures for peace; in allusion to the olive being an ancient symbol of peace. In some of Numa's medals the king is represented holding an olive twig, indicative of a peaceful reign.

Oliver. CHARLEMAGNE's favourite PALADIN, who, with ROLAND, rode by his side. He was the son of Regnier, Duke of Genoa (another of the paladins), and brother of the beautiful Aude. His sword was called Hauteclair, and his horse Ferrant d'Espagne.

A Roland for an Oliver. See under ROLAND.

Olivetans. Pierre Robert (c. 1506-1538), a cousin of Calvin, PROTESTANT reformer and translator of the Old Testament; called "Olivetanus" in allusion to his "burning the midnight oil".

Olivetans. Brethren of Our Lady of Mount Olivet, an offshoot of the BENE-DICTINES. The order was founded in 1319 by St. Bernard Ptolemei. For a time they were total abstainers.

Olla Podrida (ol' yá pod rē' dá) (Span., putrid pot). Odds and ends, a mixture of scraps or pot-au-feu, into which every sort of eatable is thrown and stewed. Cp. OLIO. Figuratively, the term means an incongruous mixture, a miscellaneous collection of any kind, a medley.

Olympia. The ancient name of a valley in Elis, Peloponnesus, so called from the famous games held there in honour of the OLYMPIAN ZEUS. The ALTIS, an enclosure of about 500 ft. by 600 ft., was built in the valley, containing the temple of Zeus, the Heræum, the Metroum, etc., the STADIUM, with gymnasia, baths, etc. Hence the name is applied to large buildings for sporting events, exhibitions, etc., such as the Olympia at Kensington, London.

Olympiad. Among the ancient Greeks, a period of four years, being the interval between the celebrations of the OLYMPIC GAMES. The first Olympiad began in 776 B.C., and the last (the 293rd) in A.D. 392.

Olympian Zeus, or Jove. A statue by Phidias, one of the "Seven Wonders of the World" (see under WONDER). Pausanias (vii, 2) says when the sculptor placed it in the temple at OLYMPIA (433 B.C.), he prayed the god to indicate whether he was satisfied with it, and immediately a thunderbolt fell on the floor of the temple without doing the slightest harm.

It was a chryselephantine statue, i.e. made of ivory and GOLD; and, though seated on a throne, was 60 ft. in height. The left hand rested on a sceptre, and the right palm held a statue of Victory in solid gold. The robes were of gold and so were the four lions which supported the footstool. The throne was of cedar, embellished with ebony, ivory, gold, and precious stones.

It was removed to Constantinople in the 5th century A.D., and perished in the great fire of 475.

Olympic Games. The greatest of the four sacred festivals of the ancient Greeks, held every fourth year at OLYMPIA in July. After suitable sacrifices, racing, wrestling, and other contests followed, ending on the fifth day with processions, sacrifices, and banquets and OLIVE garlands for the victors.

The games were revived in 1896 as international sporting contests, the first being held at Athens, and subsequently at Paris (1900), St. Louis (1904), London (1908), Stockholm (1912), Antwerp (1920), Paris (1924), Amsterdam (1928), Los Angeles (1932), Berlin (1936), London (1948), Helsinki (1952), Melbourne (1956), Rome (1960), Tokyo (1964), Mexico City (1968).

Winter Olympic Games were inaugurated in 1924.

Olympus. The home of the gods of ancient Greece, where ZEUS held his court, a mountain about 9,800 ft. high on the confines of Macedonia and Thessaly. The name is used for any PANTHEON, as, "ODIN, THOR, BALDER, and the rest of the Northern Olympus."

Om. Among the BRAHMINS, the mystic equivalent for the name of the Deity; it has been adopted by modern occultists to denote absolute goodness and truth or the spiritual essence.

Om mani padme hum ("Om, the jewel, is in the lotus: Amen"). The mystic formula of the Tibetans and northern Buddhists used as a charm and for many religious purposes. They are the first words taught to a child and the last uttered on the death-bed of the pious. The LOTUS symbolizes universal being, and the jewel the individuality of the utterer.

Omar Khayyam (ō' mar ki yām'), Persian poet, astronomer, and mathematician, lived at Nishapur, where he died at about the age of 50 in A.D. 1123. He was known chiefly for his work on algebra until Edward Fitzgerald published a poetical translation of his poems in 1859. Little notice of this was taken, however, until the early '90s when the RUBAIYAT took Britain and America by storm. It is frankly hedonistic in tone, but touched with a melancholy that attunes with eastern and western pessimism alike. Fitzgerald never pretended that his work was other than a free version of the original; he made several revisions, but did not improve on his first text.

Ombre (om' bër) (Span. hombre, man). A card-game, introduced into England from Spain in the 17th century, and very popular till it was supplanted by QUADRILLE, about 1730. It was usually played by three persons, and the eights, nines, and tens of each suit were left out. Prior has an epigram on the game; he was playing with two ladies, and Fortune gave him "success in every suit but hearts". Pope immortalized the game in his Rape of the Lock.

Ombudsman (om' boods man) (Swed. ombydzman, a commissioner). In Scandinavian countries, an official appointed by the legislature whose duty it is to protect the rights of the citizen against infringement by the government. Sweden has had one since 1809, Denmark since 1955, and Norway since 1962. New Zealand was the first COMMONWEALTH country to appoint such a commissioner (1962) and Great Britain appointed a Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration in 1967.

Omega (ō' meg á). See ALPHA.

Omelet (om' lét). You can't make omelets without breaking eggs. Said by way of warning to one who is trying to "get something for nothing"—to accomplish some desired object without being willing to take the necessary trouble or make the necessary sacrifice. The phrase is a translation of the French On ne saurait faire une omelette sans casser des œufs.

Omens. Phenomena or unusual events taken as a prognostication of either good or evil; prophetic signs or auguries. Omen is a Latin word adopted in the 16th century. Some traditional examples of accepting what appeared to be evil omens, as of good AUGURY, are:

Leotychides II, of Sparta, was told by his augurs that his projected expedition would fail because a viper had got entangled in the handle of the city key. "Not so," he replied, "the key caught the viper."

When Julius Cæsar landed at Adrumetum he tripped and fell on his face. This would have been considered a fatal omen by his army, but, with admirable presence of mind, he exclaimed, "Thus I take possession of thee, O Africa!" A similar story is told of Scipio.

When William the Conqueror leaped upon the English shore he fell on his face and a great cry went forth that it was an ill-omen; but the duke exclaimed, "I have taken seisin of this land with both my hands".

Omnibus (Lat., for all, dative pl. of omnis, all). The name was first applied to the public vehicle in France in 1828. In the following year it was adopted by Shillibeer for the vehicles which he started on the Paddington (now MARYLEBONE) Road, London. The plural is omnibuses, and the word is generally abbreviated to bus, without any initial apostrophe—just as cabriolet became cab, not cab's.

Omnibus Bill. The Parliamentary term for a BILL embracing clauses that deal with a number of different subjects, as a Revenue Bill dealing with Customs, Taxes, Stamps, Excise, etc.

Omnibus box. A box at a theatre for which the subscription is paid by several different parties, each of which has the right of using it.

Omnibus train. An old name for a train that stops at all stations—a train for all, as apart from the specials and the expresses that ran between only a few stations.

Omnibus volume. A collection in one volume of an author's works, of short stories, essays, etc.

Omnium (Lat., of all). The particulars of all the items, or the assignment of all the securities, of a government loan.

Omnium gatherum. DOG-LATIN for a gathering or collection of all sorts of persons and things; a miscellaneous gathering together without regard to suitability or order.

Omphale (om' fá lē). In Greek legend, the Queen of Lydia of masculine inclinations to whom HERCULES was bound a slave for three years. He fell in love with her and led a submissive life spinning wool. Omphale wore the lion's skin while Hercules wore a female garment.

On. A little bit on. Slightly drunk.

It's not on. Impossible. It cannot be done. A phrase from snooker, used when the object ball is obscured.

It's not on today. It's not on the menu, "it's off", i.e., not available.

On the beach. Retired from naval service.

On the loose. See under LOOSE.

On the shelf. See under SHELF.

To have something on a person. To possess damaging evidence or information about him as, defiantly, "you've got nothing on me", meaning, "you know nothing that can incriminate me".

On dit (ong dē) (Fr., they say). A rumour, a report, a bit of gossip. "There is an on dit that the prince is to marry soon."

Once. Once and for all. Finally, emphatically, and decisively, as, "Let us settle this affair once and for all."

Once bitten twice shy. I am not to be caught again; I have learned by previous experience and am not going to be made a fool of twice.

Once in a while. Only occasionally.

Once upon a time. The traditional opening phrase in fairy stories, at some indefinite time long ago.

To give someone, or something the once-over. To make a quick examination or assessment of.

One. One is Deity. The Evil One is the DEVIL.

By one and one. Singly, one at a time; entirely by oneself.

He was one too many for me. He was a little too clever for me, he outwitted me.

Number one. Oneself; hence to look after number one; to be selfish; to seek one's own interest.

In the Royal Navy, the first lieutenant of a ship or establishment is colloquially known as "Number One" or "Jimmy the one".

One and all. Everybody, individually and jointly. The phrase is the motto of Cornishmen.

One in the eye, on the nose, in the bread-basket, etc. A blow on the spot named—the last being slang for the stomach. One in the eye is also used figuratively, for a telling blow.

One of these days. Someday, at some unspecified time in the future.

There is One above. A reference to the Deity.

To go one better than he did. To improve upon another's lead, performance, action, story, etc. The phrase is from card-playing; at poker if one wishes to continue betting one has to "go" at least "one better", i.e. raise the stake.

One-armed bandit. A gambling or "fruit" machine operated by the insertion of coins and the pulling of an arm or lever. So called because it frequently "robs" one of loose change.

One-horse town. A very small town with few amenities. An expression of American origin when a small community might only boast of one horse. Now used figuratively of any small, amateurish affair as "a one-horse show", "a one-horse outfit".

One-night stand. A single evening performance by a touring theatrical company, circus, etc., at a town only likely to provide an audience for one night.

One-track mind. A mind with one dominant preoccupation which constantly reverts to the one subject, as a single-track railway only allows traffic in one direction at a time.

Oneida Community, The. See PERFECTIONISTS.

Onomatopoeia (on ō măt ō pē' ā) (Gr. onomatopoiia, word-making). The forming of a word by imitating the sound associated with the object designated, or a word that appears to suggest its nature or qualities. "Cuckoo", "murmur", "tinkle" are examples.

Onus (ō' nus) (Lat.). The burden, the responsibility; as, "The whole onus must rest on your shoulders."

Onus probandi (Lat., the burden of proving). The obligation of proving some proposition, accusation, etc.; as, "The onus probandi rests with the accuser."

Onyx (on' iks) is Greek for a finger-nail; so called because the colour of the onyx resembles that of the finger-nail.

Oom Paul. "Uncle" Paul, the name familiarly applied to Paul Kruger (1825-1904), President of the Transvaal Republic and leader of Boer resistance to British rule in South Africa.

Op. cit. (Lat. opere citato). In the work quoted.

Opal (Gr. opallios; probably from Sansk. upala, a germ). This semi-PRECIOUS STONE, well known for its play of iridescent colours, a vitreous form of hydrous silica, has long been deemed to bring ill-luck. Alphonso XII of Spain (1857, 1874-1885) presented an opal ring to his wife on his wedding-day, and her death occurred soon afterwards. Before the funeral he gave the ring to his sister, who died a few days later. The king then presented it to his sister-in-law, and she died within three months. Alphonso, astounded at these fatalities, resolved to wear the ring himself, and within a very short time he, too, was dead. The Queen Regent then suspended it from the neck of the Virgin of Almudena of Madrid.

Open. Open City. A city which is completely demilitarized and left open to occupation, either because of its historic treasures and importance or because it is a centre for hospitals and wounded.

Open diplomacy, as opposed to secret diplomacy, is defined in the first of Woodrow Wilson's FOURTEEN POINTS, "open covenants of peace openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind". It is perhaps significant that the Treaty of VERSAILLES was an open treaty negotiated in secret, ultimately by President Wilson, Clemenceau and Lloyd George.

Open door. In political parlance, the principle of admitting all nations to a share in a country's trade, etc. Also any loophole left for the possibility of negotiation between contending parties, nations, etc.

Open field system. The old manorial common-field system of agriculture in which the unfenced "open" arable fields were cultivated in common by the villagers. It was essentially a three-field system based on a triennial crop rotation. From the 15th century, and especially in the 18th and 19th centuries, the system gave way to enclosures. It still survives at Laxton in Nottinghamshire. Cp. COMMON.

Open letter. A letter to a particular person but published in a newspaper or periodical so that its contents may be publicly known, usually of a critical nature or as a protest.

Open question. See under QUESTION.

Open secret. See SECRET.

Open Sesame. See SESAME.

Open shop. See under SHOP.

To keep open house. See under HOUSE.

Opera. Drama set to music, the latter being an integral part of the composition. Dialogue is mostly in verse and sung to orchestral accompaniment; lyrics are an important element and in older operas a ballet was often included. The rise of opera dates from the end of the 16th century and it became popular after the first opera house was opened at Venice, in 1637. Alessandro Scarlatti (1659–1725) established the aria as a legitimate form of soliloquy, and introduced the recitativo. Henry Purcell (c. 1658–1695) was the father of English opera, writing some 42 musical works for the stage, some of them, such as Dido and Aeneas (1689) being full operas.

Grand opera. Opera in which the entire libretto is set to music.

Opéra bouffe (Fr. bouffe, buffoon) is a form of French comic opera or operetta, light in construction and of slight musical value.

Opera buffa, a form of light Italian comedy with musical numbers and dialogue in recitative; comic opera.

Opéra comique is a French type of opera which contains spoken dialogue. It does not mean "comic opera".

Operetta. Short opera, light opera, usually with spoken dialogue. The works of Gilbert and Sullivan may be included in this category.

Ophir. An unidentified territory, famed in the Old Testament for its fine GOLD, possibly in S.E. Arabia. (See I Kings ix, 26–28.)

Opinicus. A fabulous monster in HERALDRY, compounded from DRAGON, CAMEL and LION. It forms the crest of the Barber-Surgeons of London. The name seems to be a corruption of Ophinicus, the classical name of the constellation, the serpent (Gr. ophis).

Opium-eater. Thomas de Quincey (1785–1859), author of The Confessions of an English Opium-Eater (1821).

Opium War. The name given to the war between Great Britain and China, the First Chinese War, 1839–1842. The British government did not contest the Chinese right to prohibit trade in opium, but the demand that foreign merchants should agree that if opium were found on a British ship the culprits would be handed over for execution and the ship or cargo confiscated. Hostilities began when the British refused to surrender an innocent British subject for execution after the death of a Chinaman in a brawl. Cp. HONG MERCHANTS.

The Opium of the People. A CATCH-PHRASE applied to religion. It is derived from Karl Marx (On Hegel's Philosophy of Law).

Religion is the sigh of the hard-pressed creature, the heart of a heartless world, as it is the soul of soulless circumstances. It is the opium of the people.

Oppidan (Lat. oppidum, town). At Eton College, a student not on the foundation, but who boards in the town.

Opponency. See ACT OF OPPOENCY.

Opposition. The constitutional term for whichever of the major political parties is out of power. The leader of the Opposition receives a salary as such. In the HOUSE OF COMMONS, the Opposition sits on the benches to the SPEAKER's left, its leaders occupying the FRONT BENCH (see under BENCH).

Ops. The old SABINE fertility goddess and wife of SATURN. She was later identified with RHEA.

Optime (op' ti mē). In Cambridge phraseology, a graduate in the second or third division of the Mathematical TRIPOS, the former being Senior Optime and the latter Junior Optime. The term comes from the Latin phrase formerly used—Optime disputasti (You have disputed very well). The class above the Optimes is composed of WRANGLERS.

Optimism. The doctrine that "whatever is, is right", that everything which happens is for the best. It was originally set forth by Leibnitz (1646–1716) from the postulate of the omnipotence of God, and is cleverly travestied by VOLTAIRE in his CANDIDE, ou l'Optimisme (1759), where Dr. PANGLOSS continually harps on the maxim that "all is for the best in this best of all possible worlds".

Opus (ō' pus) (Lat., a work). See MAGNUM OPUS.

Opus Anglicanum. Rich mediæval embroidery dominated by work in silver and gold thread; so called because the reputation of England was unrivalled in this art which revealed the skill of the English gold and silver wiresmiths. It was mostly employed on ecclesiastical vestments and frontals, but also on banners, palls, robes, and hangings.

Opus operantis, opus operatum; ex opere operato (Lat.). Theological terms long used in relation to the effectiveness of acts relating to the sacraments. Opus operantis means the "act of the doer"; opus operatum, the "act done" irrespective of the qualities or disposition of the recipient. Thus baptism is held to convey regeneration to an infant. To hold that a SACRAMENT gives grace ex opere operato (from the act of being done) means that the sacrament, properly performed, itself conveys grace, irrespective of the merits of the performer or recipient.

Or. The heraldic term for the metal GOLD. See HERALDRY.

Oracle (Lat. oraculum; from orare, to speak, to pray). The answer of a god or inspired priest to an inquiry respecting the future; the deity giving responses; the place where the deity could be consulted, etc.; hence, a person whose utterances are regarded as profoundly wise and authoritative.

I am Sir Oracle,
And when I ope my lips let no dog bark.
SHAKESPEARE: The Merchant of Venice, I, i.

The most famous of the very numerous oracles of ancient Greece were those of:

APOLLO, at DELPHI, the priestess of which was called the Pythoness; at DELOS, and at Claros.

DIANA, at Colchis.

ÆSCULAPIUS, at Epidaurus, and at ROME.

HERCULES, at ATHENS and Gades.

JUPITER, at DODONA (the most noted),

AMMON in Libya, and in CRETE.

MARS, in Thrace.

MINERVA, at Mycenæ.

PAN, in ARCADIA.

TROPHONIUS, in BÆOTIA, where only men made the responses.

VENUS, at Paphos, another at Aphæa, etc.

In most of the temples, women, sitting on a tripod, made the responses, many of which were ambiguous and so obscure as to be misleading; to this day, our word oracular is still used of obscure as well as of authoritative pronouncements. Examples are:

When CRÆSUS consulted the Delphic oracle respecting a projected war, he received for answer, "Cræsus Halyn penetrans magnum pervertet opum vim" (When Cræsus crosses over the river Halys, he will overthrow the strength of an empire). Cræsus supposed the oracle meant he would overthrow the enemy's empire, but it was his own that he destroyed.

Pyrrhus, being about to make war against Rome, was told by the oracle:

"Credo te, Æacide, Romanos vincere posse" (I believe, Pyrrhus, that you the Romans can conquer), which may mean either "You, Pyrrhus, can overthrow the Romans", or "Pyrrhus, the Romans can overthrow you".

Another prince, consulting the oracle on a similar occasion, received for answer, "Ibis redibis nunquam per bella peribis" (You shall go you shall return never you shall perish by the war), the interpretation of which depends on the position of the comma; it may be "You shall return, you shall never perish in the war", or "You shall return never, you shall perish in the war", which latter was the fact.

Philip of Macedon sent to ask the oracle of Delphi if his Persian expedition would prove successful, and received for answer—

The ready victim crowned for death
Before the altar stands.

Philip took it for granted that the "ready victim" was the King of Persia, but it was Philip himself.

When the Greeks sent to Delphi to know if they would succeed against the Persians, they were told

Seed-time and harvest, weeping sires shall tell
How thousands fought at Salamis and fell.

But whether the Greeks or the Persians were to be the "weeping sires", no indication was given, nor whether the thousands "about to fall" were to be Greeks or Persians.

When Maxentius was about to encounter Constantine, he consulted the guardians of the SIBYLLINE BOOKS as to the fate of the battle, and the prophetess told him, "Illo die hostem Romanorum esse periturum", but whether Maxentius or Constantine was the "enemy of the Roman people" the oracle left undecided.

In the BIBLE (I Kings xxii, 15, 35) we are told that when Ahab, King of Israel, was about to wage war on the King of Syria, and asked Micaiah if Ramoth-Gilead would fall into his hands, the prophet replied, "Go, for the Lord will deliver the city into the hand of the king." In the event, the city fell into the hands of the King of Syria.

The Oracle of the Church. St. BERNARD of Clairvaux (1091-1153). Cp. MELLI-FLUOUS DOCTOR.

The Oracle of the Holy Bottle. The oracle to which Rabelais (Bks. IV and V) sent PANURGE and a large party to obtain an answer to a question which had been put to SIBYL and poet, monk and fool, philosopher and witch, judge and fortune-teller: "whether Panurge should marry or not?" The oracle was situated at BACBUC "near Catay in Upper India", and the story has been interpreted as a satire on the Church. The celibacy of the clergy was for long a moot point, and the "Holy Bottle" or cup to the laity was one of the moving causes of the schisms from the Church. The crew setting sail for the Bottle refers to Anthony, Duke of Vendôme, afterwards king of Navarre, setting out in search of religious truth.

The oracle of the sieve and shears. See SIEVE.

To work the oracle. To succeed in persuading another to favour some plan or to join in a project, etc., when the chances seemed slender. Also, in slang, to raise money.

They fetched a rattling price through Starlight's working the oracle with those swells.

BOLDREWOOD: Robbery Under Arms, ch. xii.

Orange. William III's territorial name originally came from Orange (anciently Arausio), a town on the Rhône north of Avignon; his ancestors acquired it through marriage. The House of Orange still reigns in the Netherlands.

Orange Lodges. See ORANGEMEN.

Orange blossom. The conventional decoration for the bride at a wedding, introduced as a custom into ENGLAND from France about 1820. The orange is said to indicate the hope of fruitfulness, few trees being more prolific; while the white blossoms are symbolical of innocence. Hence the phrase, to go gathering orange blossoms, to look for a wife.

Orange Lilies. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Orangemen, Orange Order. A society founded in 1795 in ULSTER to maintain "the PROTESTANT Constitution, and to defend the King and his heirs as long as they maintain the Protestant ascendancy". It was formed after an armed clash between Roman Catholics and Protestants in Armagh, known as the Battle of the Diamond. The name commemorated William of Orange (William III), who defeated James II and his Catholic supporters at the Battle of the Boyne in 1690. Orange Lodges or clubs of militant Protestants spread throughout the province, their members being known as Orangemen, an earlier association of this name having been formed in the reign of William III. Gladstone's championship of HOME RULE after 1886 led to a revival of the movement. The Orange Order still flourishes, imposing ethical obligations on its members.

Orange Peel. A nickname given to Sir Robert Peel when Chief Secretary for Ireland (1812-1818), on account of his PROTESTANT bias and opposition to Roman Catholic emancipation.

Orange-tawny. The ancient colour appropriated to clerks and persons of inferior condition, also the colour worn by Jews. Hence Bacon says: "Usurers should have orange-tawny bonnets, because they do judaize" (Essay xli).

Orator. Orator Henley. John Henley (1692-1756), who for about 30 years delivered lectures on theological, political, and literary subjects.

Orator Hunt. Henry Hunt (1773-1835), RADICAL politician. He presided at the famous PETERLOO meeting, and as M.P. for Preston (1830-1833) presented the first petition to PARLIAMENT in favour of women's rights. See A WHITE HAT under HAT.

The Orator of the Human Race. See ANACHARSIS CLOOTZ.

Oratorio is sacred story or drama set to music, in which solo voices, chorus, and instrumental music are employed. St. Philip Neri introduced the acting and singing of sacred dramas in his Oratory at ROME in the late 16th century, and it is from this that the term comes.

Orc. A sea-monster fabled by ARIOSTO, Drayton, Sylvester, etc., to devour men and women. The name was sometimes used for a whale.

An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals, and orcs, and sea-mews clang.
MILTON: Paradise Lost, XI, 829.

Orcades. The Roman name for the Orkneys, probably connected with the old ORC, a whale.

Orcus. A Latin name for HADES. Spenser speaks of a DRAGON whose mouth was:

All set with iron teeth in ranges twain,
That terrified his foes, and armed him,
Appearing like the mouth of Orcus grisely grim.
The Faerie Queene, VI, xii, 26.

Ordeal (O.E. ordel, judgment). The ancient Anglo-Saxon and Teutonic practice of referring disputed questions of criminality to supernatural decision, by subjecting the accused to physical trials in the belief that God would defend the right, even by miracle if needful. Hence, figuratively, an experience testing endurance, patience, courage, etc. All ordeals, except that by battle and cold water for witches, were abolished in ENGLAND in the early 13th century when trial by jury took their place. Similar methods of trial are found among other races.

Ordeal, or wager of battle. The accused was obliged to fight his accuser. Lords often chose vassals to represent them and priests and women were allowed champions. It was legally abolished in 1818 when the right was claimed by a person charged with murder.

Ordeal of fire was for persons of high rank. Carrying a red-hot iron or walking barefoot and blindfolded over red-hot plough-shares were the usual forms. If the accused showed no wound after three days he was adjudged innocent.

Ordeal of boiling water was usual for the common people and involved plunging the hand into hot water either up to the wrist or elbow and guilt was presumed if the skin was injured.

Ordeal by cold water. The accused was bound and tossed into water. If he floated he was guilty. If he sank he was hauled out. This became a common test for WITCHCRAFT.

Ordeal of the bier. A suspected murderer was required to touch the corpse and was deemed guilty if blood flowed from the body.

Ordeal of the cross. The accuser and accused stood upright before a CROSS and he who moved first was adjudged guilty. See also JUDICIUM CRUCIS.

Ordeal of the Corsned. See CORSNED.

Ordeal of the Eucharist was for priests. It was believed that if the guilty partook of the SACRAMENT divine punishment would follow for the sacrilege committed.

Order! When members of the HOUSE OF COMMONS and other debaters call out Order! they mean that the person speaking is in some way breaking the rule or order of the assembly, and has to be called to order.

The Order of the Day. The prevailing state of things.

The Orders of the Day. In the HOUSE OF COMMONS, the items of business set down for a particular day on the Order Papers, the main business of the day.

To move for the Orders of the Day, as a substantive motion in the HOUSE OF COMMONS, is now obsolete. "That this House do pass to the orders of the day" is used as an amendment on a motion introduced before the ordinary business of the day (e.g. a PRIVILEGE motion), to prevent debate.

Architectural Orders. See ARCHITECTURE.

Holy Orders. A clergyman is said to be in holy orders because he belongs to one of the orders or ranks of the Church. In the CHURCH OF ENGLAND these are three, viz., Deacon, Priest, and BISHOP; in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH there is a fourth, that of Sub-deacon.

In ecclesiastical use the term also denotes a fraternity of monks or friars (as the Franciscan Order), and also the Rule by which the fraternity is governed.

Orders in Council. Orders issued by the PRIVY COUNCIL with the sanction of the SOVEREIGN under the royal prerogative. In practice they are drawn up on the advice of Ministers who are answerable to PARLIAMENT, usually to deal with matters demanding immediate attention. Orders in Council are also issued on matters of administrative detail under certain Acts of Parliament.

Orders of Knighthood. See KNIGHT.

Ordinal Numbers. See CARDINAL NUMBERS.

Ordinary. In the CHURCH OF ENGLAND, an ecclesiastic who has ordinary or regular jurisdiction in his own right and not by deputy, usually the BISHOP of a diocese and the archbishops. The Chaplain of NEWGATE GAOL was called the Ordinary thereof. In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, the POPE, diocesan bishops, abbots, apostolic vicars, etc., are classed as ordinaries. In SCOTLAND certain judges of the Court of Sessions are called Lords Ordinary and those legal experts appointed to aid the HOUSE OF LORDS in the determination of appeals are called Lords of Appeal in Ordinary.

A meal prepared at an eating-house at a fixed rate for all comers is called "an ordinary"; hence, the place providing such meals.

'Tis almost dinner; I know they stay for you at the ordinary.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER:
The Scornful Lady, IV, i.

In HERALDRY the "ordinary" is a simple charge, such as the chief, pale, fesse, bend, bar, chevron, cross or saltire.

The Ordinary of the Mass. That part of the MASS which varies in accordance with the Church Calendar as opposed to the CANON OF THE MASS which does not change.

Oreads (ôr' ē adz) or Oreades. NYMPHS of the mountains (Gr. oros, mountain).

The Ocean-nymphs and Hamadryades,
Oreads and Naiads, with long weedy locks,
Offered to do her bidding through the seas,
Under the earth, and in the hollow rocks.

SHELLEY: Witch of Atlas, xxii.

Oregon Trail. A famous pioneer route some 2,000 miles long from Independdence, Missouri, across the plains, thence up the North Platte, through South Pass, Wyoming, along the Snake River, across southern Idaho and the Blue Mountains to the Columbia river, and finally by raft to the mouth of the Willamette. It was first followed by Nathaniel Wyeth of Massachusetts in 1833 and in the 1840s it became a regular emigrant route and was also used as the overland route to the Californian gold-fields.

The modern highway called the "Oregon Trail" follows a slightly different route.

Orellana (or el ā' nà). A former name of the river Amazon, after Francisco de Orellana, lieutenant of Pizarro, who first explored it in 1541.

Oremus. See LEGEM PONE.

Orestes. See PYLADES.

Orgies (ôr' jĕz). Drunken revels, riotous feasts, wild or licentious extravagance. So called from the Gr. orgia, the secret nocturnal festivals in honour of BACCHUS.

Orgoglio (ôr gō' lyō) (Ital., Arrogant Pride, or Man of Sin). In Spenser's Faerie Queene (I, vii and viii), a hideous giant as tall as three men, son of Earth and Wind, who typifies the tyrannical power of the Church of ROME.

Oriana. The beloved of AMADIS OF GAUL, who called himself Beltenebros when he retired to the Poor Rock (Amadis de Gaula, ii, 6).

Queen Elizabeth I is sometimes called the "peerless Oriana", especially in the madrigals entitled the Triumphs of Oriana (1601).

Orientation (Lat. oriens, the east). The placing of the east window of a church due east so that the rising sun may shine on the altar. Anciently, churches were built with their axes pointing to the rising sun on the saint's day; so that a church dedicated to St. JOHN was not parallel to one dedicated to St. PETER, but in the building of modern churches the saint's day is not, as a rule, regarded.

Figuratively, orientation is the correct placing of one's ideas, mental processes, etc., in relation with each other and with current thought—the ascertainment of one's "bearings".

Oriflamme (Fr., "flame of gold"). The ancient banner of the Kings of France, first used in battle in 1124, which replaced the blue hood of St. MARTIN. It was the standard of the abbey of St. DENYS and was a crimson flag on a gilded staff, and said by some writers to have had three points or tongues with tassels of green silk. It was last used in the field at Agincourt (1415) and was replaced by a blue standard powdered with FLEUR-DE-LIS.

It is reputed that infidels were blinded by merely looking at it. In the Roman de Garin the Saracens cry, "If we only set eyes on it we are all dead men"; and Froissart records that it was no sooner unfurled at Rosbecq than the fog cleared away from the French, leaving their enemies in misty darkness.

Original Sin. See under SIN.

Orinda, The Matchless. Katherine Philips née Fowler (1631-1664), poetess and letter-writer. She first adopted the signature "Orinda" in her correspondence with Sir Charles Cotterell, and afterwards used it for general purposes. Her praises were sung by Cowley, Dryden, and others.

Orion (o ri' on). A giant hunter of Greek mythology, noted for his beauty. He was blinded by Ænopion, but VULCAN sent Cedalion to be his guide, and his sight was restored by exposing his eyeballs to the sun. Being slain by DIANA, he was made one of the constellations and is supposed to be attended with stormy weather. His wife was named Side and his dogs Arctophonus and Ptoophagus.

The constellation Orion is pictured as a giant hunter with belt and sword surrounded by his dogs and animals. Betelgeuse and Bellatrix are the "shoulder" stars and three bright stars in a line form the belt, below which is the sword-handle containing a remarkable nebula.

Orkneys. See ORCADES.

Orlando. The Italian form of ROLAND, one of the great heroes of mediæval romance, and the most celebrated of CHARLEMAGNE'S PALADINS.

Orlando Furioso (Orlando mad). An epic poem in 45 cantos, by ARIOSTO (published 1516-1533). Orlando's madness is caused by the faithlessness of ANGELICA, but the main subject of the work is the siege of PARIS by Agramant the MOOR, when the Saracens were overthrown.

The epic is full of anachronisms. We have CHARLEMAGNE (d. 814) and his paladins joined by King Edward IV of England, Richard Earl of Warwick, etc. (Bk. VI). Cannon are employed by Cymosco, King of Friza (Bk. IV). In Bk. XVII the late mediæval PRESTER JOHN appears (see under JOHN), and in the last three books Constantine the Great, who died in 337.

Among English translations are those of Sir John Harington, by command of Queen Elizabeth I (1591), John Hoole (1783), and W. S. Rose (1823-1831).

About 1589 a play (printed 1594) by Robert Greene entitled The Historie of Orlando Furioso was produced. In this version Orlando marries Angelica.

Orlando Innamorato (Orlando in love). An unfinished romance by Boiardo (1434-1494) featuring the love of ROLAND and ANGELICA. ARIOSTO wrote his Orlando Furioso as a sequel and in 1541 Berni turned Boiardo's work into a burlesque.

Ormandine. See SEVEN CHAMPIONS.

Ormulum. A long poem in Transition, or Early Middle, English, of which only a "fragment" of some 20,000 lines is extant. It is so called from its author Orm or Ormin, an Austin canon who wrote about 1200. It consists of a simple narrative of the gospels appointed to be read in church each with a homily upon it and expositions out of Aelfric, BEDE, and St. Augustine. It is preserved in the BODLEIAN LIBRARY and its orthography makes it particularly valuable evidence of the vowel-length at the time.

This boc iss nemmed Ormulum
Forrthi that Orm it wrohhte.

Ormuzd, or Ahura Mazda. In ZOROASTRIANISM, the principle or ANGEL of light and good, and creator of all things and judge of the world. He is in perpetual conflict with AHRIMAN but in the end will triumph.

And Oromaze, Joshua, and Mahomet,
Moses and Buddh, Zerdusht, and Brahm,
A tumult of strange names, which never met
Before, as watchwords of a single woe, Arose.

SHELLEY: Revolt of Islam, X, xxxi.

Orosius. An early 5th-century Spanish presbyter and historian whose Historia Adversus Paganos, from the Creation to A.D. 417, was translated into Anglo-Saxon from the Latin by King ALFRED. It was a popular textbook of general history in the MIDDLE AGES. He presented some of his works to St. AUGUSTINE when he visited him in 415.

Orpheus (ôr' fûs). In Greek legend, a Thracian poet, son of Ægeus and CALLIOPE (held by some to be a son of APOLLO), who could move even inanimate things by his music—a power that was also claimed for the Scandinavian ODIN. When his wife EURYDICE died he went into the infernal regions and so charmed PLUTO that she was released on the condition that he would not look back till they reached the earth. When about to place his foot on the earth he turned round and Eurydice vanished instantly.

That Orpheus' self may . . . hear
Such strains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto, to have quite set free
His half regain'd Eurydice.

MILTON: L' Allegro, 145-50.

The prolonged grief of Orpheus at his second loss so enraged the Thracian women that in one of their Bacchanalian ORGIES they tore him to pieces. The fragments of his body were collected by the MUSES and buried at the foot of Mount OLYMPUS, but his head, thrown into the river Hebrus, was carried into the sea, and so to Lesbos, where it was buried.

What could the Muse herself that Orpheus bore,
The Muse herself, for her enchanting son,
Whom universal nature did lament,
When by the rout that made the hideous roar
His gory visage down the stream was sent,
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore?

MILTON: Lycidas, 58.

Orpheus of Highwaymen. So John Gay (1685-1732) has been called on account of his Beggar's Opera (1728).

The Orphic Egg. See MUNDANE EGG under EGG.

Orphism. A movement in painting started by Robert Delaunay (1885-1941), characterized by patches and swirls of intense and contrasting colours.

Orrery (or' ér i). A complicated piece of mechanism showing by means of clock-work the movements of the planets, etc., round the sun. It was invented about 1700 by George Graham, who sent his model to Rowley, an instrument maker, to make one for Prince Eugene. Rowley made a copy of it for Charles Boyle (1676-1731), third Earl of Orrery, in whose honour it was named. One of the best is Fulton's, in Kelvin Grove Museum, Glasgow.

Orson (Fr. ourson, a little bear). Twin brother of Valentine in the old romance of VALENTINE AND ORSON.

Orthodox. The Orthodox Church. The Eastern Church, properly, The Holy Orthodox Catholic Apostolic Eastern Church. Cp. GREEK CHURCH.

Orthodox Sunday, or Feast of Orthodoxy, in the Eastern Church, is the First Sunday in LENT, to commemorate the restoration of the icons in 842. See ICONOCLASTS.

Orthos, or Orthrus. The dog of GERYON, destroyed by HERCULES. See ECHIDNA.

I shall not eat your orts—i.e. your leavings.

Let him have time a beggar's orts to crave.
SHAKESPEARE: Rape of Lucrece, 895.

Orvietan, or Venice Treacle, once held to be a sovereign remedy against poison, an electuary of unknown composition. It took its name from a charlatan of Orvieto, Italy, who used to pretend to poison himself and effect a cure with his potion.

Orwell, George. The pseudonym adopted by Eric Arthur Blair (1903-1950), old Etonian and socialist; author of The Road to Wigan Pier, ANIMAL FARM, Nineteen Eighty-Four, etc.

Os sacrum (Lat.). The sacred bone. A triangular bone at the lower part of the vertebral column. See LUZ.

Oscar. A gold-plated figurine awarded annually by the American Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for the best film-acting, writing, or production of the year. There are two claims for the origin of this name. One is that in 1931 the present executive secretary of the Academy, Mrs. Margaret Herrick, joined as librarian; on seeing the then nameless gold statue for the first time she exclaimed "it reminds me of my Uncle Oscar"—the name stuck.

The other claim is that it derives indirectly from Oscar Wilde. When on a lecture tour of the U.S.A. he was asked if he had won the Newdigate Prize for Poetry, and he replied, "Yes, but while many people have won the Newdigate, it is seldom that the Newdigate gets an Oscar." When Helen Hayes was presented with the award, her husband Charles MacArthur, a noted wit and playwright, said, "Ah, I see you've got an Oscar", and the name stuck.

Osiris (ō sī' ris). One of the chief gods of ancient Egypt; son of Nut, brother of SET, his jealous and constant foe, and husband of ISIS. Set encompassed his death, but Osiris underwent resurrection with the aid of THOTH. His son HORUS became his avenger. He was the god of the dead and of the after-life and resurrection.

The name means Many-eyed and Osiris is usually depicted as a man wearing the White Crown and holding a sceptre and flail, or as a mummy.

Osmand. A necromancer in The Seven Champions of Christendom, I, xix, who by enchantment raised an army to resist the Christians. Six of the Champions fell, whereupon St. GEORGE restored them; Osmand tore out his own hair, in which lay his magic power, bit his tongue in two, disembowelled himself, cut off his arms, and then died. See SEVEN CHAMPIONS.

Ossa. See PELION.

Ossian, or Olsin. The legendary Gaelic bard and celebrated warrior hero of the 3rd century, the son of Fionn Macumhail (FINGAL). He is best known from the publications (1760-1763) of James Macpherson (1736-1796), purporting to be translations of poems by Ossian, the son of Fingal, from original MSS. Macpherson became famous and his works were widely translated, but their authenticity was challenged by Dr. Johnson and others. They seem to have been essentially made up by Macpherson himself with some use of ancient sources.

"I [Johnson] look upon M'Pherson's Fingal to be as gross an imposition as ever the world was troubled with."

BOSWELL:
Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides
(Wed., 22nd Sept.).

Ostracism (Gr. ostrakon, a potsherd). Black-balling, boycotting; exclusion from society, etc. The word arose from the ancient Greek custom of banishing, by a popular vote, one whose power was a danger to the state, the citizens writing the name of one whose banishment was deemed desirable on a sherd. Cp. BLACK-BALLED; BOYCOTT.

Ostrich. At one time the ostrich was fabled, when hunted, to run a certain distance and then thrust its head into the sand, thinking because it cannot see that it cannot be seen (cp. CROCODILE); hence the application of ostrich-like, ostrich-head, ostrich belief, etc., to various forms of self-delusion.

The ostrich also has the habit of eating indigestible things such as stones and hard objects to assist the function of its gizzard. This has given rise to such phrases as to have a digestion like an ostrich or to have an ostrich-stomach, i.e. to be able to digest anything.

But I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. II, IV, x.

Ostrich eggs are often suspended in Eastern churches as symbols of God's watchful care. It used to be thought that the ostrich hatches her eggs by gazing on them, and if she suspends her gaze even for a minute or so the eggs are addled. Furthermore, we are told that if an egg is bad the ostrich will break it; so will God deal with evil men.

Oh! even with such a look as fables say
The mother ostrich fixes on her egg,
Till that intense affection
Kindle its light of life.

SOUTHEY: Thalaba, III, 24.

Ostrog Bible, The. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Othello's occupation's gone. A phrase from SHAKESPEARE'S Othello (III, iii), sometimes used when one is "laid on the shelf", no longer "the observed of all observers".

Other Day, The. Originally this meant "the second day" either forward or backward, other being the Old English equivalent for second, as in Latin unus, alter, tertius; or proximus, alter, tertius. Starting from today, and going backwards, yesterday was the proximus ab illo; the day before yesterday was the alterus ab illo, or the other day; and the day preceding that was tertius ab illo, or three days ago. Now the phrase is used to express "a few days ago", "not so long since".

Otium cum dignitate (ō' ti ūm kūm dig ni tā' ti: Lat., leisure with dignity). Retirement after a person has worked and saved enough to live upon in comfort.

Otium cum dignitate is to be had with £500 a year as well as with 5,000.

Bolingbroke to Swift, 19 November 1729.

Ottava Rima (o ta' vā rē' mā). A stanza of eight ten-syllable lines, rhyming a b a b a b c c, as used by Keats in his Isabella, BYRON in Don Juan, etc. It originated in Italy and was used by TASSO and ARIOSTO and many others, the lines being eleven-syllable.

Ottoman Empire. The Turkish empire founded by Othman or Osman I (1288-1320), which lasted until 1919.

Otus. See EPHIALTES.

Ouida (wē' dá). The pseudonym of Marie Louise de la Ramée (1839-1908), a prolific writer of romantic novels of high society, the best known being Under Two Flags (1867). She was an unconventional, and later eccentric character, herself unlucky in pursuit of romance. She was born at Bury St. Edmunds, the daughter of a French father and an English mother, the name Ouida being her early childhood attempts to pronounce "Louise".

Ouija (wē' já). A device employed by spiritualists for receiving spirit messages. It consists of a small piece of wood on wheels, placed on a board marked with the letters of the alphabet and certain commonly-used words. When the fingers of the communicators are placed on the Ouija board it moves from letter to letter and thus spells out sentences. The word is a combination of Fr. oui and Ger. ja, both meaning "yes". Ouija is a registered trade mark in the United States of America.

Out. Murder will out. The secret is bound to be revealed; "be sure your sins will find you out".

O blisful god, that art so just and trewe!
Lo, how that thou biwreyest mordre alway,
Mordre wol out, that see we day by day.

CHAUCER: Nun's Priest's Tale, 284.

Out and away. By far, incomparably, as, "He is out and away the best batsman."

Out and out. Thoroughly, absolutely, without qualification, thus an "out and out liar" is a complete and utter liar.

Out of it. Left on one side, not included.

Out on a limb. Isolated, stranded, cut off; as an animal on the end of a branch of a tree.

Outed, expelled, ejected.

To be out for. To have one's mind set on achieving some particular end.

To go all out. To make every effort, to do one's utmost.

To have it out. To contest either physically or verbally with another to the utmost of one's ability; as, "I mean to have it out with him one of these days"; "I had it out with him"—i.e. "I spoke my mind freely and without reserve." The idea is that of letting loose pent-up disapprobation.

To out-Herod Herod. See HEROD.

To outrun the Constable. See under CONSTABLE.

Outback. The more remote and sparsely populated areas in the Australian interior, the bush.

Oval, The. The famous cricket ground at Kennington, LONDON, the headquarters of the Surrey Cricket Club, a former market garden, was opened in 1846. It was after Australia's victory at the Oval in 1882 that the ASHES came into being.

Ovation. An enthusiastic display of popular favour, so called from the ancient Roman ovatio, a minor form of TRIUMPH in which the conqueror entered the city on horseback or on foot wearing a crown of MYRTLE instead of GOLD.

Oven-wood. Brushwood; wood only fit for burning or heating the oven for bread-making, etc. Long an obsolete term except in certain country districts where it lingered.

A narrow brook, by rushy banks concealed,
Runs in a bottom and divides the field;
Oaks intersperse it, that had once a head,
But now wear crests of oven-wood instead.

COWPER: The Needleless Alarm.

Over. Half seas over. See under HALF.

It's all over with him. He's finished, he can't go any farther, he's "shot his bolt" Said also of one who has been given up by the doctors.

Over and above. In addition to; besides.

Over and over again. Very frequently, repeatedly. In Lat., iterum iterumque.

Over the left. See under LEFT.

Overlander. An Australian term for those stockmen employed in driving cattle or sheep from one station to another. Tramps and settlers who arrived "overland" were called "overland men". As the 19th-century ballad says:

We're not fenced in with walls or gates
No monarch's realms are grander.
Our sheep and cattle eat their fill,
And wander blithely at their will,
O'er forest, valley, plain or hill,
Free as an Overlander.

The Overlander.

Overlord. The famous code name given to the Allied operation for the invasion of N.W. Europe in 1944.

Overture (Fr. ouvert, O.F. overt, past part. of ouvrir, to open). An opening, a preliminary proposal; a piece of music for the opening of an OPERA. Independent pieces of instrumental music in overture style are called concert overtures.

To make overtures is to be the first to make an advance, as with a view to acquaintanceship, some business deal, or a reconciliation.

Overy, or Overie. The priory church of St. Mary Overy, renamed St. Saviour's in 1540, and which became SOUTHWARK Cathedral in 1905, was legendarily founded by a ferryman's daughter called Mary (or Mary Overs). Her miserly father Awdrey feigned death in the hope that sorrow would restrain his household's consumption of victuals. Instead they rejoiced and made merry, whereupon Awdrey rose up in anger, only to be slain as a ghost. Mary, now possessed of his fortune, sent for her lover, but he was thrown from his horse and was killed. In sorrow she founded the nunnery which she entered. Overy is probably a corruption of "over the river".

Owain. The hero of a 12th-century legend, The Descent of Owain, written by Henry of Saltrey, an English CISTERCIAN. Owain was an Irish KNIGHT of Stephen's court who, by way of penance for a wicked life, entered and passed through ST. PATRICK'S PURGATORY.

Owl. The emblem of ATHENS, where owls abounded. Hence MINERVA (ATHENE) was given the owl for her symbol. The Greeks had a proverb, To send owls to Athens, which meant the same as our To carry coals to Newcastle (see under COAL). See also MADGE.

I live too near a wood to be scared by an owl. I am too old to be frightened by a BOGY.

Like an owl in an ivy-bush. Having a sapient, vacant look, as some persons have when in their cups; having a stupid vacant stare. Owls are proverbial for their judge-like solemnity; IVY is the favourite plant of BACCHUS, and was supposed to be the favourite haunt of owls.

Good ivy, say to us, what birds hast thou?
None but the owl that cries "How How!"
Carol (15th century).

Gray, in his Elegy, and numerous other poets bracket the two:

From yonder ivy-mantled tower
The moping owl doth to the moon complain.

The owl was a baker's daughter. According to a Gloucestershire legend, our Saviour went into a baker's shop for something to eat. The mistress put a cake into the oven for Him, but her daughter said it was too large, and reduced it by half. The dough, however, swelled to an enormous size, and the daughter cried out, "Heugh! heugh! heugh!" and was transformed into an OWL. Ophelia alludes to the tradition:

Well, God 'ield you! They say the owl was a baker's daughter.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, IV, v.

Owlglass. See EULENSPIEGEL.

Owl Jug. A large pot-bellied earthenware container with two ear-handles, once common in Dorset, used for carrying water, cider, etc.

Owl light. Dusk; the gloaming, "BLIND MAN'S HOLIDAY". Fr. Entre chien et loup.

Ox. One of the four figures which made up the cherubim in Ezekiel i, 10. It is the emblem of the priesthood, and was assigned to St. LUKE as his symbol because he begins his GOSPEL with the Jewish priest sacrificing in the Temple.

It is also an emblem of St. Frideswide, St. LEONARD, St. Sylvester, St. MÉDARD, St. Julietta, and St. Blandina.

Off-ox. A stupid or clumsy person. In an ox-team the off-ox is the one farthest away from the driver. See NEAR.

He has an ox on his tongue. See MONEY.

The black ox hath trod on your foot, or hath trampled on you. Misfortune has come to you or your house; sometimes, you are henpecked. A black ox was sacrificed to PLUTO, the infernal god, as a white one was to JUPITER.

Venus waxeth old; and then she was a pretie wench, when Juno was a young wife; now crows foote is on her eye, and the blacke oxe hath trod on her foot.

LYLY: Sapho and Phao, IV, ii.

The dumb ox. See under DUMB.

Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn (Deut. xxv, 4). In other words, do not grudge him the mouthful he may snatch when working for you; do not deprive a man of his little perquisites.

To play the giddy ox. To act the fool generally; to behave in an irresponsible or over-hilarious manner. There was an old phrase, to make an ox of one, meaning to make a fool of one; and in SHAKESPEARE'S Merry Wives of Windsor (V, v) we have:

Fal.: I do begin to perceive that I am made an ass.
Ford.: Ay, and an ox too; both the proofs are extant.

Ox-bow. A horseshoe bend in a river.

Ox-eye. A sailor's name for a cloudy speck which indicates the approach of a storm. When Elijah heard that a speck no bigger than a "man's hand" might be seen in the sky, he told Ahab that a torrent of rain would overtake him before he could reach home (I Kings xviii, 44, 45). Thomson's The Seasons (Summer, line 975) says:

Amid the Heavens,
Falsely serene, deep in a cloudy speck
Compress'd the mighty, Tempest brooding dwells.

Oxgang. An Anglo-Saxon measure of no very definite quantity; as much as an ox could gang over or cultivate. Also called a bovate. Eight oxgangs made a carucate. An oxgang became a conventional unit varying from about 10 to 25 acres in different places. The Lat. jugum was a similar term, according to Varro, "Quod juncti boves uno die exarare possunt."

Oxbridge. A word widely used as an abbreviation for Oxford and Cambridge collectively, and for the type of historic English university. For some it is a convenient term, for others it has tendentious and snobbish implications. Cp. CAMFORD; REDBRICK.

Repeated differences with the university authorities caused Mr. Foker to quit Oxbridge in an untimely manner.

THACKERAY: Pendennis, ch. xviii.

Sixth Forms and Oxbridge Entry.

The Times (A Heading of 5 February 1968).

Oxford. Oxford bags. Very wide-bottomed flannel trousers fashionable among Oxford undergraduates in the 1920s.

Oxford Blues. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Oxford frame. A picture frame the sides of which cross each other at the corners forming a cross-like projection; once much used for photographs of college groups, etc.

Oxford Group. The name first adopted in South Africa by the followers of Frank Buchman (1878-1961), also called Buchmanism which developed into the MORAL RE-ARMAMENT movement. He had a considerable following at Cambridge in the 1920s, but later wider support at Oxford. The movement was EVANGELICAL in character and also became concerned with social, industrial, and international questions.

Oxford Movement. A High Church revival movement in the CHURCH OF ENGLAND "started and guided" by Oxford clerics, especially John Keble, J. H. Newman, R. H. Froude, and E. B. Pusey (hence Puseyism as another name for the movement). They were dissatisfied with the decline of Church standards, and with the increase of liberal theology, and feared that the Catholic Emancipation Act of 1829 endangered the English Church. The movement began in 1833 with Keble's sermon against the suppression of ten Irish bishoprics. It was published under the title of National Apostasy. Three tracts setting forth their views were published in 1833 and many Tracts for the Times followed, hence the name Tractarianism. They stressed the historical continuity of the Church of England and the importance of the priesthood and the sacraments. "PROTESTANT" and EVANGELICAL hostility was aroused, especially after Newman's reception into the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH in 1845, but in spite of much official opposition the movement had a lasting influence on the standards and ceremonial of the Church.

Whether we call it by the ill name of the Oxford counter-reformation or the friendlier name of catholic revival, it remains a striking landmark in the varied notions of English religious thought and feeling for the three-quarters of a century since the still unfinished journey first began.

MORLEY: Life of Gladstone, Bk. II, iv, iii (1903).

Provisions of Oxford. See MAD PARLIAMENT.

Oxymoron. A rhetorical figure in which effect is produced by the juxtaposition of contradictory terms, such as "Make haste slowly", "Faith unfaithfully kept him falsely true". The word is the Gr. for "pointedly foolish".

Oyer and terminer (oi' ěr, těr' min ěr). An Anglo-French legal phrase meaning "to hear and determine". Commissions or Writs of oyer and terminer as issued to judges on circuit twice a year in every county directing them to hold courts for the trial of offences.

Oyez! Oyez! Oyez!

Oyez! Oyez! Oyez! (δ yes) (O.Fr., Hear ye!). The call made by a public crier, court officer, etc., to attract attention when a proclamation is about to be read out. Sometimes written O yes!

Oyster. And did you ever see an oyster walk upstairs? A satirical query sometimes addressed to one who has been telling unbelievable yarns about his own experiences.

Close as a Kentish oyster. Absolutely secret; hermetically sealed. Kentish oysters are proverbially good, and all good oysters are fast closed.

Never eat an oyster unless there's an R in the month. Good advice which limits the eating of native oysters to the months from September to April, the normal marketing time. The legal close time for oysters in ENGLAND and SCOTLAND, however, extends only from 15 June to 4 August. The advice does not necessarily apply to imported oysters.

"I think oysters are more beautiful than any religion."

SAKI: The Chronicles of Clovis.

The world's mine oyster. The world is the place from which to extract profit, etc., as a pearl can be extracted from an oyster. SHAKESPEARE uses the phrase (The Merry Wives of Windsor, II, ii).

Who eats oysters on St. James's Day will never want. ST. JAMES'S Day, 25 July, falls during what is now the close season (see NEVER EAT AN OYSTER, above). It may be supposed that oysters obtainable so unseasonably early would be a luxury only eaten by the rich.

Oz, Wizard of. See under WIZARD.

P

P. The sixteenth letter in the English alphabet called pe, "mouth", by the Phoenicians and ancient Hebrews, and represented in Egyptian hieroglyph by a shutter.

In the 16th century, Placentius, a DOMINICAN friar, wrote a poem of 253 HEXAMETER verses called Pugna Porcorum, every word of which begins with the letter p. It opens thus:

Plaudite, Porcelli, porcorum pigra propago—which may be translated:

Piglets, praise pigs' prolonged progeny.

P as a mediæval numeral stands for 400, \bar{P} stands for 400,000. It is also the ab-bréviation for "new penny" in the British decimal currency.

The Four PP or P's. A "merry interlude" by John Heywood, written c. 1540. The four principal characters are "a Palmer, a Pardoner, a Potticary (apothecary), and a Pedlar".

The Five P's. William Oxbury (1784–1824) was so called, because he was Printer, Poet, Publisher, Publican, and Player.

P.P.P.P.P. (in music). p = piano (Ital., soft); pp and ppp = pianissimo (Ital., very soft).

P.C. The Roman patres conscripti. See CONSCRIPT FATHERS.

P.P.C. See CONGÉ.

P.S. (Lat. post-scriptum). Written afterwards—i.e. after the letter or book was finished.

P's and Q's. Mind your P's and Q's. Be very circumspect in your behaviour. Most probably it derives from an admonition to children learning the alphabet to be careful to distinguish between the forms of p and q or to printers' apprentices in handling and sorting type. More fancifully it is suggested that in public houses accounts were scored up for beer "P" for pints and "Q" for quarts and a customer needed "to mind his P's and Q's" when the reckoning came. Another is that in the France of Louis XIV, when huge WIGS were fashionable, dancing masters would warn their pupils to "Mind your P's (i.e. pieds, feet) and Q's (i.e. queues, wigs)" lest the latter fall off when bending low to make a formal bow.

Pace (pā' si). From Lat. pax, meaning peace or pardon, is used in the sense of "with the permission of" when preceding the mention of some person who disagrees with what is being done.

Pace-eggs. See under PASCH.

Pace. To be put through one's paces.

To test one's capabilities, as a horse might be tried out by an intending purchaser.

To set the pace. To set the standard of achievement for others to emulate or keep up with, as in a race.

Pacific, The. Amadeus VIII, Duke of Savoy (1383, 1391–1439; d. 1451). As Felix V (1440–1449) he was an ANTI-POPE.

Frederick III, Emperor of Germany (1415, 1440–1493).

Olaf III of Norway (1030–1093).

Pacific Ocean. So named by MAGELLAN in 1520, because there he enjoyed calm weather and a placid sea after the stormy and tempestuous passage of the Straits of Magellan. It was first sighted by Balboa in 1513.

Pacifico, Don. David Pacifico, a Portuguese Jew born at GIBRALTAR claimed exorbitant damages of £26,618 from the Greek government when his house at ATHENS was burned down by rioters. They refused payment, whereupon he asserted his British citizenship and, in January 1850, Palmerston sent the Mediterranean fleet to the Piræus which seized Greek shipping. Eventually compensation was agreed at some £5,000, it being found that Pacifico claimed as much as £150 for a bedstead and £10 for a pillowcase. The handling of the affair aroused a vigorous criticism in PARLIAMENT. See CIVIS ROMANUS SUM.

Pack (U.S.A.). To carry, as, to pack a gun.
Pack and Penny Day. The last day of a FAIR when traders were packing up their stalls and prepared to dispose of their remaining goods cheaply. A day for bargains.

Pack-Rag-Day. Old MAY DAY; so called in Lincolnshire, because servants hired for the year packed up their clothes, or "rags", to go home or to seek new employment.

Packing a jury. Selecting for a jury persons whose verdict is likely to be partial.

Pack up your troubles in your old kit-bag. The opening line of one of the most memorable army choruses of World War I.

Pack up your troubles in your old kit-bag,
 And smile, smile, smile.
 While you've a lucifer to light your fag,
 Smile, boys, that's the style, etc.

To pack up. Slang for to take one's departure; to cease from a task; to have no more to do with a matter.

To send one packing. To dismiss summarily.

Package Deal. A settlement including a number of conditions which must be accepted in its entirety by the parties concerned. From the idea of a parcel or package containing in one wrapping a number of different items. Similarly a package tour is a touring holiday which also includes provision for meals, entertainment, gratuities, lodging, etc., for a comprehensive payment.

Packet. To stop a packet. Colloquially, to receive a severe injury, actually or figuratively; a packet of trouble.

Packstaff. See PIKESTAFF.

Pactolus. The golden sands of the Pactolus. The Pactolus is a small river in Lydia, Asia Minor, once famous for the particles of GOLD in its sands, which legendarily was due to MIDAS having bathed there. Its gold was exhausted by the time of AUGUSTUS.

Paddington Fair. A public execution. TYBURN was in the parish of Paddington. Public executions were abolished in 1868.

Paddle your own canoe. Depend on your own exertions; be self-reliant and independent of others.

Paddock. Cold as a paddock. A paddock is a toad or frog; and we have the corresponding phrases "cold as a toad", and "cold as a frog".

Here a little child I stand,
 Heaving up my either hand;
 Cold as paddocks though they be,
 Here I lift them up to Thee,
 For a Benizon to fall
 On our meat and on us all.

ROBERT HERRICK: A Child's Grace.

Paddy, Paddywhack. An Irishman; from PATRICK (Erse, Padraig). In slang both terms are used for a loss of temper, a childish temper; the latter also denotes the gristle in roast meat.

Padishah is the Turkish form of the Persian Padshah, a king or reigning sovereign. It was formerly applied exclusively to the SULTAN of Turkey.

Padre (pa' drā). A chaplain is so called by personnel of the armed forces. It is Spanish, Italian, and Portuguese for "father", and was adopted by the British Army in India, where it was introduced by the Portuguese.

Padua was long supposed in SCOTLAND to be the chief school of NECROMANCY; hence Scott says of the Earl of Gowrie:

He learned the art that none may name
 In Padua, far beyond the sea.

Lay of the Last Minstrel, I, xi.

Pæan (pē' ân). According to HOMER, the name of the physician to the gods. It was used in the phrase Io Pæan as the invocation in the hymn to APOLLO, and later in hymns of thanksgiving to other deities; hence pæan has come to mean any song of praise or thanksgiving, any shout of triumph or exultation.

Pagan (Lat. paganus, a rustic). Its present meaning of a heathen or non-Christian has usually been held to be derived from the fact that heathen practices lingered in the villages long after the Christian Church was established in the towns. The word was also a Roman contemptuous name for a civilian and it is likely that when the early Christians called themselves milites Christi (soldiers of Christ) they adopted the military usage, paganus, for those who were not "soldiers of Christ". (See the penultimate note to ch. xxi of Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire.)

Pagoda

Pagoda. A Buddhist temple or sacred tower in India, China, etc.; also the name of gold and silver coins formerly current in southern India, from the representation of a pagoda on the reverse. Hence the phrase To shake the pagoda-tree, to make money readily in the Far East.

The amusing pursuit of "shaking the pagoda-tree", once so popular in our Oriental possessions.
THEODORE HOOK: Gilbert Gurney, I.

Paid. See PAY.

Pain. Bill of Pains and Penalties. See under BILL.

For one's pains. In return for one's trouble or well-meant efforts.

On, or under pain of. Under the threat of punishment or penalty for non-compliance.

To be at pains. To take trouble, to make a positive effort.

Paint. To paint the lily. To indulge in hyperbolic praise, to exaggerate the beauties, good points, etc., of the subject.

To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet, . . .
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.
SHAKESPEARE: King John, IV, ii.

To paint the lion. An old nautical term, meaning to strip a person naked and then smear his body all over with tar.

To paint the town red. To have a gay, noisy time; to cause some disturbance in town by having a noisy and disorderly spree. A phrase of American origin.

Painter. It is said that Apelles, being at a loss to delineate the foam of ALEXANDER'S horse, dashed his brush at the picture in despair, and did by accident what he could not accomplish by art. Similar stories are told of many other artists and also of the living quality of their paintings. It is reputed that Apelles painted Alexander's horse so realistically that a living horse mistook it and began to neigh. Velasquez painted a Spanish ADMIRAL so true to life that Philip IV mistook the painting for the man and reproved the portrait for not being with the fleet. Birds flew at grapes painted by Zeuxis; and Mandyn tried to brush off a fly from a man's leg, both having been painted by Matsys. Parrhasios of Ephesus painted a curtain so well that Zeuxis told him to draw it aside to reveal the picture behind it; and Myron, the Greek sculptor, is said to have fashioned a cow so well that a bull mistook it for a living creature.

Painter. To cut the painter. To sever connexion, as a boat is set adrift if the painter is cut which holds it fast to the mooring post, etc. The phrase was much used in the 19th century with reference to possible severance between Great Britain and her colonies.

Pair Off. When two members of PARLIAMENT of opposite parties agree to absent themselves, so that when a vote is taken the absence of one neutralizes the missing vote of the other, they are said to pair off. In the HOUSE OF COMMONS this is usually arranged by the WHIPS.

Paix (pā) (Fr.). La Paix des Dames (the Ladies' Peace). The treaty concluded at Cambrai in 1529, between Francis I and Charles V of Germany; so called because it was effected by Louise of Savoy (mother of the French King) and Margaret, the Emperor's aunt.

Pakeha. Any resident in New Zealand who is not a Maori. Thought by some to be a Maori word, but probably a native corruption of an abusive term used by early whaling crews.

Pakistan. The name of this state formed in 1947 was coined by Chaudrie Rahmat Ali in 1933 to represent the units which should be included when the time came: P—Punjab; A—Afghan border states; K—Kashmir; S—Sind; Tan for Baluchistan.

Pal. A gypsy word meaning brother or mate.

Palace originally meant a dwelling on the Palatine Hill (see PALATINATE) of ROME, where AUGUSTUS, and later Tiberius and NERO, built their mansions. The word was hence transferred to other royal and imperial residences; then to similar buildings, such as Blenheim Palace, Dalkeith Palace, and to the official residence of a BISHOP; and finally to a place of amusement as the CRYSTAL PALACE, the People's Palace, and—in irony—to a gin palace (see under GIN). See also ALLY PALLY.

In parts of Devonshire cellars for fish, storehouses cut in the rock, etc., are called palaces or pallaces; but this may be from the old word palis, a space enclosed by a palisade.

All that cellar and the chambers over the same, and the little pallace and landing-place adjoining the River Dart.

Lease granted by the Corporation of Totnes in 1703.

Paladin (pāl' à din). Properly, an officer of, or (one connected with, the PALACE, a palatine; usually confined in romance to the Twelve Peers of CHARLEMAGNE's court, and hence applied to any renowned hero or KNIGHT-ERRANT.

The most noted of Charlemagne's paladins were Allory de l'Estoc; Astolfo; Basin de Genevois; FIERABRAS or Ferumbras; Florismart; GANELON, the traitor; Geoffroy, Seigneur de Bordelois, and Geoffroy de Frises; Guerin, Duc de Lorraine; Guillaume de l'Estoc, brother of Allory; Guy de Bourgogne; Hoël, Comte de Nantes; Lambert, Prince de Bruxelles; Malagigi; Nami or Nayme de Bavière; OGER THE DANE; OLIVER; Otuel; Richard, Duc de Normandie; RINALDO; Riol du Mans; ROLAND, otherwise Orlando; Samson, Duc de Bourgogne; and Thiry or Theiry d'Ardaine. Of these, twelve at a time seem to have formed a special bodyguard to the king.

Palæmon (pāl ē' mon). In Roman legend, a son of Ino (see LEUCOTHEA), and originally called MELICERTES. Palæmon is the name given to him after he was made a sea-god, and as Portumnus he was the protecting god of harbours. The story is given in Spenser's Faerie Queene (IX, xi); in the same poet's Colin Clout his name is used for Thomas Churchyard (c. 1520-1604), the poet.

Palæolithic Age (pā li ð lith' ik) (Gr. palaios, old; lithos, a stone). The first of the STONE AGES when man was essentially a hunter using somewhat primitive stone or flint tools and weapons. Cp. NEOLITHIC.

Palais Rose. The first of many international conferences after World War II was held in the rose-decorated chamber of a Parisian mansion. The monotonous reiteration by the Russian delegate of "No" to every suggestion put forward gave origin to the phrase "Another Palais Rose" to describe an abortive conference.

Palamedes (pāl a' mē' dēz). In Greek legend, one of the heroes who fought against TROY. He was the son of Nauplius and Clymene, and was the reputed inventor of lighthouses, scales and measures, the discus, dice, etc., and was said to have added four letters to the original alphabet of CADMUS. It was he who detected the assumed madness of ULYSSES, in revenge for which the latter encompassed his death. The phrase, he is quite a Palamedes, meaning "an ingenious person", is an allusion to this hero.

In ARTHURIAN ROMANCE, Sir Palamedes is a SARACEN knight who was overcome in single combat by TRISTRAM. Both loved Ysolde, the wife of King Mark; and after the lady was given up by the Saracens, Tristram converted him to the Christian faith, and stood his godfather at the font.

Palamon and Arcite. See ARCITE.

Palatinate. The province of a palatine, who originally was an officer of the imperial palace at ROME. This was on the Palatine Hill, which was so called from PALES.

In Germany The Palatinate was the name of a former state on the Rhine, and later that of a detached portion of Bavaria to the west of the Rhine which in 1946 became part of the newly formed Land Rhineland-Palatinate. See also COUNTY PALATINATE.

Pale, The English. The name given in the 14th century to that part of IRELAND where English rule was effective resulting from the English settlement of Henry II's reign, viz. Louth, Meath, Trim, Dublin, Kilkenny, Wexford, Waterford, and Tipperary. By the latter 15th century, it had shrunk to the four counties of Louth, Meath, Dublin, and Kildare, and this shrinking continued until the reconquest of Ireland was effected by the Tudors.

The word is from Lat. palum, a stake; hence a fence, a territory with defined limits. Hence the phrases Within the pale and Beyond the pale, pale here meaning "the bounds of civilization" or "civilized behaviour".

There was also an English pale around Calais (1347-1558), and in Imperial Russia, from 1792, a notorious Pale of Settlement for the Jews.

Paleface. A name for a white man, attributed to the North American Indians, as if a translation from an Indian expression, but largely owing its popularity to the novels of Fenimore Cooper.

Pales (pā' lēz). The Roman god (later a goddess) of shepherds and their flocks whose festivals, Palilia, were celebrated on 21 April, the "birthday of ROME", to commemorate the day when ROMULUS, the wolf-child, drew the first furrow at the foot of the hill, and thus laid the foundation of the "Roma Quadrata", the most ancient part of the city.

Palimpsest (Gr. palin, again; psestos, scraped). A parchment or other writing surface on which the original writing has been effaced and something else has been written, anciently common practice owing to the shortage of material. As the writing was not always entirely effaced, many works, otherwise lost, have been recovered. Thus Cicero's De Republica was restored, though partially erased to make way for a commentary of St. Augustine on the PSALMS.

Palindrome (Gr. palin dromo, to run back again). A word or line which reads backwards and forwards alike, as Madam, also Roma tibi subito motibus ibit amor. They have also been called Sotadics, from their reputed inventor, Sotades, a scurrilous Greek poet of the 3rd century B.C. Probably the longest palindrome in English is:

Dog as a devil deified
Deified lived as a god.

There is also NAPOLEON'S reputed saying:

Able was I ere I saw Elba.

Adam's reputed self-introduction to Eve:

Madam, I'm Adam.

Also—Lewd did I live, evil I did dwell[!]; and there is the celebrated Greek palindrome:

NIYONANOMHMATAMHMONANOYIN,

i.e. wash my transgressions, not only my face. It appears as the legend round many fonts, notably that in the BASILICA of St. Sophia, Istanbul, those at St. Stephen d'Egrev, Paris, and St. Menin's Abbey, Orleans; and, in England, round the fonts of St. Martin's on Ludgate Hill, St. Mary's in Nottingham and at Dulwich College; and in churches at Worlingworth (Suffolk), Harlow (Essex), Knapton (Norfolk), and Hadleigh (Suffolk).

Palinode (Gr., singing again). A song or discourse recanting a previous one; such as that of Stesichorus to HELEN after he had been struck blind for singing evil of her, or HORACE'S Ode (Bk. I, xvi), which ends:

... nunc ego mitibus
Murare quæro tristia, dum mihi
Fias recentatis amica
Opprobrium animumque reddas.

It was a favourite form of versification among Jacobean poets, and the best known is that of Francis Quarles (1592–1644) in which man's life is likened to all the delights of nature, all of which fade, and man too dies.

Isaac Watts (1674–1748) had a palinode in which he retracts the praise bestowed upon Queen Anne in a laudatory poem on the earlier years of her reign, saying that the latter part deluded his hopes.

Palinurus, or Palinure. Any pilot, especially a careless one; from the steersman in VIRGIL'S ÆNEID, who went to sleep at the helm, fell overboard, and was swept ashore three days later, only to be murdered on landing.

Lost was the nation's sense, nor could be found,
While the long solemn unison went round;
Wide and more wide, it spread o'er all the realm;
Even Palinurus nodded at the helm.

POPE: The Dunciad, IV, 611.

Palissy Ware. Dishes and similar articles of pottery, covered with models of fish, reptiles, shells, flowers, leaves, etc., carefully coloured and enamelled in high relief; so called after Bernard Palissy (1510–1589), the French potter and enameller.

Pall (pawl). The small linen cloth stiffened by cardboard which covers the chalice at the EUCHARIST; also the covering thrown over a coffin. It is the Lat. pallium, a robe or mantle; also the long sweeping robe or pall worn by sovereigns at their coronation, by the POPE and archbishops. See PALLIUM.

Sometimes let gorgeous Tragedy
In scattered pall come sweeping by.
MILTON: Il Penseroso, line 97.

Pall-bearers. The custom of appointing men of mark for pall-bearers came to us from the Romans. Julius CÆSAR had magistrates for his pall-bearers; AUGUSTUS Cæsar had senators; Germanicus had tribunes and centurions; L. Æmilius Paulus had the chief men of Macedonia who happened to be at ROME at that time; but the poor were carried on a plain bier on men's shoulders.

Pall Mall (pāl māl). This dignified WEST-END thoroughfare, the centre of "clubland", takes its name from the old "alley" where Pall-mall was played long before Charles II introduced it in St. James's Park (see MALL). When the street was first built it was named Catherine Street, after Catherine of Braganza, Charles II's queen. "Pale-maille", says Cotgrave, "is a game wherein a round box ball is struck with a mallet through a high arch of iron, which he that can do at the fewest blows, or at the number agreed upon, wins" (Ital. palla, ball; maglio, mallet). See CROQUET.

Palladian. An architectural style based on the ancient classical, introduced by the Italian architect Andrea Palladio (1518–1580). It was first used in England by Inigo Jones, and the Banqueting Hall, WHITEHALL, once the United Services Museum, built in 1622, is an example of his work.

Palladium. In classical legend, the colossal wooden statue of PALLAS in the citadel of TROY, which was said to have fallen from HEAVEN, and on the preservation of which the safety of the city was held to depend. It was said to have been taken by the Greeks and the city burned down; and later said to have been removed to ROME by ÆNEAS.

Hence the word is now figuratively applied to anything on which the safety of a people, etc., is supposed to depend.

The liberty of the press is the palladium of all the civil, political, and religious rights of an English man.

Letters of Junius: Dedication.

See also ANCILE; EDEN HALL.

The rare metallic element, found associated with platinum and gold, was named palladium by its discoverer, Wollaston (1803), from the newly discovered asteroid, Pallas. The London theatre called The Palladium appears to derive its name from the mistaken notion that the ancient Palladium, like the COLOSSEUM, was something akin to a circus.

Pallas, or Pallas Athene. A name of MINERVA, sometimes called Pallas Minerva, daughter of JUPITER, perhaps so called from the spear which she brandished. Another suggestion is that she was named after Pallas, one of the TITANS, whom she flayed, using his skin as a covering.

Pallium. The Roman name for a square woollen cloak worn by men in ancient Greece, especially by philosophers and courtesans, corresponding to the Roman TOGA. Hence the Greeks called themselves gens palliata, and the Romans gens togata.

At the present time, the scarf-like vestment of white wool with red crosses, worn by the POPE and archbishops, is called the pallium. It is made from the wool of lambs blessed in the church of St. Agnese, ROME, and until he has received his pallium no Roman Catholic archbishop can exercise his functions. Its use in the Church of England (see under CHURCH) ended with the REFORMATION, although it is still displayed heraldically in the arms of the Archbishop of Canterbury in the shape of a letter Y. It is also called a PALL.

Palm. The well-known tropical and subtropical tree gets its name from the Lat. palma, the palm of the hand, from the spread-hand appearance of its fronds. The palm-tree is said to grow faster from its being washed down. Hence it is the symbol of resolution overcoming calamity. It is said by Orientals to have sprung from the residue of the clay of which ADAM was formed.

An itching palm. A hand ready to receive bribes. The old superstition is that if your palm itches you are going to receive money.

Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemned to have an itching palm.
SHAKESPEARE: Julius Cæsar, IV, iii.

Palm-oil. Bribes, or rather money for bribes, fees, etc.

Palm Sunday. The Sunday next before EASTER. So called in memory of Christ's triumphant entry into JERUSALEM, when the multitude strewed the way with palm-branches and leaves (John xii, 12-19). In mediæval England "palms" were often made from willow, box, and yew.

Sad Palm Sunday. 29 March 1461, the day of the battle of Towton, the most fatal of all the battles of the WARS OF THE ROSES (see under ROSE) when well over 30,000 men were slain.

Whose banks received the blood of many thousand men,
On "Sad Palm Sunday" slain, that Towton field
we call . . .
The bloodiest field betwixt the White Rose and the Red.

DRAYTON: Polyolbion, xxviii.

To bear the palm. To be the best. The allusion is to the Roman custom of giving the victorious GLADIATOR a branch of the palm-tree.

To palm off. To pass off fraudulently. The allusion is to jugglers, who conceal in the palm of their hand what they pretend to dispose of in some other way.

To yield the palm, i.e. to yield the palm of victory (see TO BEAR THE PALM, above). To admit another's superiority in a given field.

Palmistry, or Chiromancy (Gr. cheir, the hand; mantike, divination). The art of reading the palm (of the hand) and deducing the character, temperament, fortune, etc., of the owner from the lines upon it. The art is ancient and was practised by the Greeks, Chaldean astrologers, GYPSIES, etc.

Palmy days. Prosperous or happy days, as those were to a victorious gladiator when he went to receive the palm-branch as the reward of his prowess.

Palma Christi (Lat., Palm of Christ.) The castor-oil plant (Ricinus communis).

Palmam qui meruit ferat (Lat., Let him bear the palm who has deserved it). Nelson's motto and that of the battleship, H.M.S. Nelson. The line comes from Jortin's Lusus Poetici (1748), Ad ventos, stanza iv:

Et nobis faciles parcite et hostibus,
Concurrant pariter cum ratibus rates:
Spectent numina ponti, et
Palmam qui meruit ferat.

Palmer (Lat. palmifer, palm-bearer). A pilgrim to the HOLY LAND who was given a consecrated palm-branch to carry back which was usually laid on the altar of his parish church on his return.

His sandals were with travel tore
Staff, budget, bottle, scrip he wore;
The faded palm-branch in his hand
Showed pilgrim from the Holy Land.

SCOTT: Marmion, i, 27.

Palmerin. The hero of a number of 16th-century Spanish romances of CHIVALRY, on the lines of AMADIS OF GAUL. The most famous are Palmerin de Oliva, and Palmerin of England. Southey published an abridged translation of the latter.

Palmerston's Follies. See under FOLLY.

Palmetto State. The State of South Carolina. The palmetto is a fan-leaved palm.

Palmistry. See under PALM.

Palmy Days. See under PALM.

Paludament. A distinctive mantle worn by a Roman general in the time of war. This was the "scarlet robe" in which Christ was invested (Matt. xxvii, 28).

They flung on him an old scarlet paludamentum
—some cast-off war-cloak with its purple laticlave from the Prætorian wardrobe.

FARRAR: Life of Christ, ch. lx.

Pam (pam). The knave of clubs in certain card-games, also the name of a card-game; short for Pamphile, French for the knave of clubs.

This word is sometimes given as an instance of Johnson's weakness in etymology. He says it is "probably from palm, victory; as trump from triumph".

Pam was the usual nickname of the great Victorian statesman Viscount Palmerston (1784-1865). See OPIUM WAR; PALMERSTON'S FOLLIES under FOLLY.

Pampero, The. (pãm pë' ro). A dry north-west wind that blows in the summer season from the Andes across the pampas to the sea-coast.

Pamphlet. A small written work of comparatively few sheets, often controversial and of only temporary interest. The word has been variously derived but is probably from Pamphilet, the French name of a 12th-century amatory Latin poem Pamphilus seu de Amore.

Pan (Gr., all, everything). In Greek mythology, the god of pastures, forests, flocks, and herds; also the universal deity. Another more probable etymology is that the name is derived from the same root as Lat. pascere, to graze. His parentage is variously given as born of JUPITER and CALISTO, HERMES and PENELOPE, etc., and he is represented with the upper part of a man and the body and legs of a goat. His lustful nature was a characteristic and he was the symbol of fecundity.

Universal Pan,
Knit with the Graces and the Hours in dance,
Led on the eternal spring.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, IV, 266.

Legend has it that at the time of the Crucifixion, just when the veil of the TEMPLE was rent in twain, a cry swept across the ocean in the hearing of a pilot, "Great Pan is Dead", and at the same time the responses of the ORACLES ceased for ever. (See E. B. Browning's poem of this name.) It has been suggested that what the mariner heard was a ritual lamentation in honour of ADONIS. See also PANIC.

Pan-pipes. A wind instrument of great antiquity, consisting of a series of pipes of graduated length, across the upper ends of which the player blows, obtaining a scale of thin, reedy notes. The story is that it was first formed by PAN from a reed into which the nymph SYRINX was transformed when fleeing from his amorous intentions.

Pan. To pan out. To turn out, to happen, as, "it is panned out satisfactorily". From the pan used by a prospector to wash out GOLD from the gravel of streams and riverbeds.

Panacea (pãn à sê' à) (Gr., all-healing). A universal remedy. Panacea was the daughter of ÆSCULAPIUS, and the medicine that cures is the daughter or child of the healing art.

In the MIDDLE AGES the search for the panacea was one of the self-imposed tasks of the alchemists. Fable tells of many panaceas, such as the PROMETHEAN UNGUENT which rendered the body invulnerable, ALADDIN's ring, the balsam of FIERABRAS, and PRINCE AHMED's APPLE (see under APPLE). Cp. ACHILLES's SPEAR; MEDEA's KETTLE, etc.

Panache (pan ash). The literal meaning of this French word is a plume of feathers flying in the wind as from the crest of a helmet. Figuratively, it is applied to one's courage or spirit, to keeping one's end up.

Pancake. A thin flat cake of batter fried in fat, traditionally cooked and eaten on Pancake Day (SHROVE TUESDAY). The ingredients are eggs, symbolic of creation, flour for the staff of life, salt for wholesomeness, and milk for purity. Shrove Tuesday became a day of revelry sounded off by the ringing of the Pancake Bell, which was the signal for the villagers to cease work and go home to make pancakes or join in the games and merry-making. A Pancake Day race is still held at Olney, Bucks, and at Westminster School the Pancake Greaze or Scrimmage still persists. At the latter contest the school cook tosses the pancake over a bar separating the Upper and Lower School and the boy who secures the pancake is rewarded with a guinea.

Panchæa (pån kē' à). A fabulous land, possibly belonging to ARABIA FELIX, renowned among the ancients for the quality of its perfumes, such as myrrh and incense.

Pancras, St. One of the patron saints of children (cp. NICHOLAS), martyred in the Diocletian persecution (304) at ROME at the age of 14. His day is 12 May, and he is usually represented as a boy with a sword in one hand and a palm-branch in the other.

The first church to be consecrated in England by St. Augustine, at Canterbury, was dedicated to St. Pancras.

Pandarus. In Greek legend, a Lycian leader and ally of the Trojans. Owing to his later connexion with the story of TROILUS and CRESSIDA, he was taken over by the romance-writers of the MIDDLE AGES as a procurer. See PANDER.

Pandects of Justinian (Gr. pandektes, all-receiving, all-containing). The great compendium or DIGEST of Roman law made in the 6th century by order of Justinian, consisting of 50 books. These superseded all previous law books and decisions in his empire.

Pandemonium (Gr., all the demons). A wild, unrestrained uproar, a tumultuous assembly. The word was first used by MILTON as the name of the principal city in HELL. It was formed on the analogy of PANTHEON.

The rest were all
Far to the inland retired, about the walls
Of Pandemonium city and proud seat
Of Lucifer.

Paradise Lost, X, 424 (see also I, 756).

See also CORDELIER'S CLUB.

Pander. To pander to one's vices is to act as an agent to them, and such an agent is termed a pander, from PANDARUS, who procures for TROILUS the love of CRESSIDA. In Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing it is said that Troilus was "the first employer of pandars" (V, ii).

Pandora's Box. A present which seems valuable, but which is in reality a curse; like that of MIDAS, who found his very food became GOLD, and so uneatable.

PROMETHEUS made an image and stole fire from HEAVEN to endow it with life. In revenge, JUPITER told VULCAN to make the first woman, who was named Pandora (i.e. the All-gifted), because each of the gods gave her some power which was to bring about the ruin of man. Jupiter gave a box which she was to present to him who married her. Prometheus distrusted Jove and his gifts, but Epimetheus, his brother, married the beautiful Pandora, and, against advice, accepted the gift of the god. Immediately he opened the box, all the evils flew forth, and have ever since continued to afflict the world. According to some accounts the last thing that flew out was Hope; but others say that Hope alone remained.

Pangloss, Dr. (Gr., all tongues). The pedantic old tutor to the hero in VOLTAIRE'S CANDIDE, ou l'Optimisme (1759). His great point was his incurable and misleading OPTIMISM; it did him no good and brought him all sorts of misfortune, but to the end he reiterated "all is for the best in this best of all possible worlds". This was an attack upon the current theories of J.-J. Rousseau.

Panhandle. In the U.S.A., a narrow strip of territory belonging to one State which runs between two others, such as the Texas Panhandle, the Panhandle of Idaho, etc. West Virginia is known as the Panhandle State.

A panhandler, however, is not an inhabitant of such territory, but American slang for a street-beggar, perhaps from carrying a pan of tin for the reception of any oddments he may be given.

Panic. The word comes from the god PAN because the sounds heard by night in the mountains and valleys, which give rise to sudden and unwarranted fear, were attributed to him. There are various legends accounting for the name; one is that BACCHUS, in his eastern expeditions, was opposed by an army far superior to his own, and Pan advised him to command all his men at dead of night to raise a simultaneous shout. The innumerable echoes made the enemy think they were surrounded on all sides, and they took to sudden flight. Another belief is that he could make men, cattle, etc., bolt in "Panic" terror. Cp. Judges vii, 18-21.

Panjandrum. A pretentious or pompous official, a local "potentate". The word occurs in Samuel Foote's farrago of nonsense which he composed to test old Macklin (c. 1697-1797), the actor, who said he had brought his memory to such perfection that he could remember anything by reading it over once. There is more than one version of the following test passage:

So she went into the garden to cut a cabbage-leaf to make an apple-pie, and at the same time a great she-bear came running up the street and popped its head into the shop. "What! no soap?" So he died, and she—very imprudently—married the barber. And there were present the Picinnies, Jobillies, the Garyulies, and the Grand Panian-drum himself, with the little red button a-top, and they all fell to playing the game of catch-as-catch-can till the gunpowder ran out at the heels of their boots.

It is said that Macklin was so indignant at this nonsense that he refused to repeat a word of it.

Panope. See NEREIDS.

Panopticon (Gr., pan, all; optikos, of sight). Jeremy Bentham's name for his proposed circular prison with a warder's well in the centre for the inspection of convicts. The Royal Panopticon of Science and Art, in Leicester Square, was opened in 1854 as a place of popular instruction and a home for the sciences and music. It was built in the Moorish style but failed in its original intention. It was renamed the ALHAMBRA and became a theatre in 1871; it was burnt down in 1882 and finally demolished in 1936.

Pantables. See PANTOFLES.

Pantagruel. The principal character in Rabelais' great satire The History of Gargantua and Pantagruel (the first part published in 1532, the last posthumously in 1564). He was King of Dipsodes and son of GARGANTUA, and by some identified with Henri II of France. He was the last of the giants, and Rabelais says he got his name from the Gr. panta, all, and Arab. gruel, thirsty, because he was born during the drought which lasted thirty and six months, three weeks, four days, thirteen hours, and a little more, in that year of grace noted for having "three Thursdays in one week". Though he was chained in his cradle with four great iron chains, like those used in ships, he stamped out the bottom, which was made of weavers' beams. When he grew to manhood he knew all languages, all sciences, and all knowledge of every sort, out-Solomoning SOLOMON in wisdom. His immortal achievement was his voyage to UTOPIA in quest of the ORACLE OF THE HOLY BOTTLE. See PANURGE.

Wouldst thou not issue forth . . .
To see the third part in this earthy cell
Of the brave acts of good Pantagruel.

RABELAIS:
To the Spirit of the Queen of Navarre.

Pantagruelism. Coarse and boisterous buffoonery and humour, especially with a serious purpose—like that for which PANTAGRUEL was famous.

Pantaloon. Breeches, trousers, under-drawers or pants, get their name from Pantaloön, a lean and foolish old Venetian of 16th-century Italian comedy, who was dressed in loose trousers and slippers. His name is said to come from San Pantaleone (a patron SAINT of physicians and very popular in Venice), and he was adopted in later harlequinades and PANTOMIMES as the butt of the clown's jokes.

Playing pantaloon. Playing second fiddle; being the CAT'S-PAW of another; slyly imitating.

Pantehnicon (pân tek' ni kôn) (Gr., belonging to all the arts). The name was originally coined for a bazaar for the sale of artistic work built about 1830 in Motcomb Street, Belgrave Square; as this was unsuccessful, the building was converted into a warehouse for storing furniture, and the name retained. It is now often used in place of pantehnicon van, a furniture-removing van.

Pantheism. The doctrine that God is everything and everything is God; a monistic theory elaborated by Spinoza, who by his doctrine of the Infinite Substance sought to overcome the opposition between mind and matter, body and soul. It also denotes PAGAN worship of all the gods. Cf. DUALISM.

Pantheon (Gr. pan, all; theos, god). A temple dedicated to all the gods; specifically that erected at ROME by Agrippa, son-in-law to AUGUSTUS. It is circular, nearly 150 ft. in diameter, and of the same total height; in the centre of the dome roof is a space open to the sky. Since the early 7th century, as Santa Maria Rotunda, it has been used as a Christian Church. Among the national heroes buried there are Raphael, Victor Emmanuel II, and Humbert I. See also BARBARI.

The Panthéon at PARIS was originally the church of St. GENEVIÈVE, started by Louis XV in 1764 and completed in 1812. In 1791 the CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY renamed it the Panthéon and decreed that men who had deserved well of their country should be buried there. Among them are Rousseau, VOLTAIRE, and Victor Hugo. Hence, a building to commemorate national heroes, or a MAUSOLEUM for such. Thus Westminster Abbey is sometimes called "The British Pantheon".

The Pantheon opened in Oxford Street in 1772 was built by Wyatt for musical promenades, and was much patronized by those of rank and fashion. It was converted into a theatre for Italian opera in 1791 and the orchestra included Cramer, La Motte, and Cervetto. It was burned down in 1792, rebuilt in 1795 as a theatre, etc., eventually becoming a bazaar in 1835 and subsequently being used for business premises. The original building was ornamented with Grecian reliefs, and statues of classical deities, Britannia, George III and Queen Charlotte.

Panther (earlier Panthera). In mediæval times this animal was supposed to be friendly to all beasts except the DRAGON, and to attract them by a peculiarly sweet odour it exhaled. Swinburne, in Laus Veneris, gives this characteristic a more sinister significance:

As one who hidden in deep sedge and reeds
Smells the rare scent made when the panther feeds,
And tracking ever slotwise the warm smell
Is snapped upon by the warm mouth and bleeds,
His head far down the hot sweet throat of her—
So one tracks love, whose breath is deadlier.

In the old Physiologus, the panther was the type of Christ, but later, when the savage nature of the beast became more widely known, it became symbolical of evil and hypocritical flattery; hence Lyly's comparison (in Euphues, The Anatomy of Wit) of the beauty of women to "a delicate bait with a deadly hook, a sweet panther with a devouring paunch, a sour poison in a silver pot".

The mediæval idea perhaps arose from the name which is taken from Gr. panther, all beasts. See also REYNARD'S WONDERFUL COMB, under COMB.

Pantile. A roofing-tile curved transversely to an ogee shape. In the 18th century as DISSENTERS' chapels (and also cottages) were frequently roofed with these, such meeting-houses were sometimes called pantile-shops, and the word was used in the sense of dissenting. Mrs. Centlivre, in A Gotham Election (1715), contrasts the pantile crew with a good churchman.

The Parade at Tunbridge Wells, known as the Pantiles, was so called because the name was erroneously applied to such flat Dutch tiles as those with which it is paved.

Pantisocracy (Gr., all of equal power). The name given by Coleridge to the communistic, Utopian society that he, with Southey, George Burnett, and others intended (c. 1794) to form on the banks of the Susquehannah River. The scheme came to nothing owing chiefly to the absence of funds.

Pantofles, or Pantables (pän' toflz, pän' táb lz). Slippers, especially loose ones worn by Orientals.

To stand upon one's pantofles. To stand on one's dignity, get on the high horse. It was a common proverbial phrase from the 16th to the 18th century.

I note that for the most part they stand so on their pantofles that they be secure of perils, obstinate in their own opinions . . . ready to shake off their old acquaintance without cause, and to condemn without colour.

LYLY: Euphues, The Anatomy of Wit (1578).

Pantomime. According to etymology this should be all dumb show, but the word was commonly applied to an adaptation of the old Commedia dell'Arte that lasted down to the 19th century. The principal characters are HARLEQUIN and COLUMBINE, who never speak, and Clown and PANTALOON, who keep up a constant fire of joke and repartee. The old Christmas pantomime or harlequinade as an essentially British entertainment was first introduced by John Weaver (1673-1760), a dancing-master of Shrewsbury, in 1702. It is now usually based on a nursery tale such as CINDERELLA, Mother Goose, JACK AND THE BEANSTALK, PUSS IN BOOTS, etc., enlivened by catchy songs, pretty chorus girls and considerable buffoonery.

Panurge (Gr. pan, all; ergos, worker); the "all-doer", i.e. the rogue, he who will "do anything or anyone". The roguish companion of PANTAGRUEL, and one of the principal characters in Rabelais's satire. A desperate rake, always in debt, he had a dodge for every scheme, knew everything and something more, and was a born companion of the mirthfullest temper and most licentious bias; but was timid of danger and a desperate coward. He consulted lots, dreams, etc., and finally the ORACLE OF THE HOLY BOTTLE; and found insuperable objections to every one of its obscure answers.

Some commentators on Rabelais have identified Panurge with Calvin, others with the Cardinal of Lorraine; and this part of the satire seems to be an echo of the great REFORMATION controversy on the celibacy of the clergy.

Pap. He gives pap with a hatchet. He does or says a kind thing in a very brusque and ungracious manner. One of the scurrilous tracts which Martin Marprelate (see MARPRELATE CONTROVERSY) published in 1589 was entitled Pap with a Hatchet.

Paper. So called from papyrus, the giant water-reed from which the Egyptians manufactured a material for writing on.

Not worth the paper it is written on. Said of an utterly worthless statement, promise, etc.

On paper. In writing: as opposed to verbally.

It sounds all right on paper, i.e. in theory, before being put to the test.

Paper blockade. A blockade proclaimed but not backed up by suitable means of enforcement.

Paper credit. Credit allowed on the score of bills, promissory notes, etc., that show that money is due to the borrower.

Paper money, or currency. Bank notes as opposed to coin, or bills used as currency.

Paper profits. Hypothetical profits shown on a company's prospectus, etc.

The Paper King. John Law. See MISSISSIPPI BUBBLE.

Paper tiger. One who, or that which, seems strong, forceful or powerful, but is in fact feeble or ineffective—a balloon when pricked.

To paper a house. In theatrical phraseology, to fill the theatre with "deadheads", or non-paying spectators, admitted by paper orders.

To paper over the cracks. To prevent an open breach, by a temporary expedient or settlement unlikely to last, and to ignore the fundamental points at issue which require more radical treatment. So Bismarck alluded to the Convention of Gastein of August 1865, after the defeat of Denmark, by which Austria was to administer Holstein, and Prussia, Denmark. "We have", he said, "papered over the cracks." The Austro-Prussian War broke out in June 1866.

To send in, or to receive one's papers. To resign one's appointment, commission, etc., or to receive one's dismissal.

Paphian (pā' fi ān). Relating to VENUS, or rather to Paphos, a city of Cyprus, where Venus was worshipped; a Cyprian; a prostitute.

Papier mâché (pāp' yā mǎsh' ā) (Fr., chewed paper). Pulped paper mixed with glue or layers of paper glued together and while pliable moulded to form various articles. Lacquered and often inlaid with mother of pearl, papier mâché articles were greatly in vogue in Victorian times. In 1772 Henry Clay of Birmingham used it in coachbuilding; it was also widely employed for architectural mouldings, etc., and in 1833 ten cottages and a villa were prefabricated in papier mâché and shipped to Australia. Papier mâché is probably of ancient Chinese origin, but the name is due probably to the popularity of French articles in 18th-century England. Cp. POTICHOMANIA; PYROGRAPHY.

Papyrus. The written scrolls of the ancient Egyptians are called papyri, because they were written on papyrus. See PAPER.

Par (Lat., equal). Stock at par means that it is to be bought at the price it represents. Thus £100 stock if quoted at £105 would be £5 above par; if at £95, it would be £5 below par. A person in low spirits or ill health is said to be "below par".

In journalism a par is a paragraph, a note of a few lines on a subject of topical interest.

Paracelsus. The name coined for himself by Theophrastus Bombastus von Hohenheim (1490-1541) implying that he was superior to Celsus, the famous writer and physician of the 1st century. He studied chemistry and ALCHEMY and after experience of mining became a medical practitioner. He made many enemies owing to his disputatious temperament and flouting of academic traditions, and wrote numerous treatises propounding his theories which showed a keen concern for the development of medicine. He was essentially a Neoplatonist and held that, as man contained all elements, a knowledge of alchemy and the physical sciences was necessary for the treatment of disease. He did much to encourage innovation, but his work was marred by a certain element of charlatanism and superstition.

Paraclete. The advocate; one called to aid or support another; from Gr. parakalein, to call to. The word is used as a title of the HOLY GHOST, the Comforter.

O source of uncreated Light
The Father's promised Paraclete!
DRYDEN: Veni, Creator Spiritus.

Paradise. The Greeks borrowed this word from the Persians, among whom it denoted the enclosed and extensive parks and pleasure grounds of the Persian kings. The SEPTUAGINT translators adopted it for the garden of EDEN, and in the New Testament and by early Christian writers it was applied to HEAVEN, the abode of the blessed dead.

A fool's paradise. See under FOOL.

Paradise Lost. MILTON's epic poem was first published in 1667. It tells the story:

Of Man's first disobedience and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree whose mortal taste
Brought death into the World, and all our woe
With loss of Eden.

SATAN rouses the panic-stricken host of fallen angels with tidings of a rumour current in HEAVEN of a new world about to be created. He calls a council to discuss what should be done, and they agree to send him to search for this new world. Seating himself on the TREE OF LIFE, Satan overhears ADAM and EVE talking about the prohibition made by God, and at once resolves upon the nature of his attack. He takes the form of a mist, and, entering the serpent, induces Eve to eat of the FORBIDDEN FRUIT. Adam eats "that he may perish with the woman whom he loved". Satan returns to HELL to tell his triumph, and MICHAEL is sent to lead the guilty pair out of the Garden.

Milton borrowed largely from the epic of Du Bartas (1544-1590), entitled The First Week of Creation which was translated into almost every European language; and he was indebted to St. Avitus (d. 523), who wrote in Latin hexameters The Creation, The Fall, and The Expulsion from Paradise, for his description of Paradise (Bk. I), of Satan (Bk. II), and other parts.

In 1671 Paradise Regained (in four books) was published. The subject is the Temptation. Eve, being tempted, fell, and lost Paradise; Jesus, being tempted, resisted, and regained Paradise.

Paradise shoots. The lign aloe; said to be the only plant descended to us from the Garden of EDEN. When ADAM left Paradise he took a shoot of this tree, and from it the lign aloes have been propagated.

The Earthly Paradise. It was a popular mediæval belief that paradise, a land or island where everything was beautiful and restful, and where death and decay were unknown, still existed somewhere on earth. It was usually located far away to the east and in 9th-century maps it is shown in China, and the fictitious letter of PRESTER JOHN to the Emperor Emmanuel Comnenus states that it was within three days' journey of his own territory—a "fact" that is corroborated by Mandeville. The Hereford map (13th century) shows it as a circular island near India. Cp. BRANDON, ST.

William Morris's poem of this title (1868-1870) tells how a band of Norsemen seek vainly for this paradise, and return in old age to a nameless city where the gods of ancient Greece are still worshipped.

Parallel. None but himself can be his parallel. Wholly without a peer. The line occurs in Lewis Theobald's The Double Falsehood (1727), III, i, a play which he tried to PALM OFF on the literary world as SHAKESPEARE'S. There are many similar sentences; for example:

And but herself admits no parallel.
MASSINGER: Duke of Millaine, IV, iii (1623).

None but himself can parallel.
Anagram on John Luburne (1658).

Paraphernalia (pär ä fēr nā' lyä) (Gr. para, beside; pherne, dowry). Literally, all that a married woman could legally claim as her own, i.e. personal articles, wearing apparel, jewellery, etc. Hence, personal attire, articles in general, anything for show or decoration.

Parasite (pär' ä sit) (Gr. para sitos, eating at another's cost). A plant or animal that lives on another; hence, a hanger-on, one who fawns and flatters for the sake of what he can get out of it—a "SPONGER" (see under SPONGE).

Parcheesi. A game resembling back-gammon, played mostly in the U.S.A.

Parchment. Made from the skins of animals and is so called from Pergamum, in Mysia, Asia Minor, where it was used for writing material when Ptolemy prohibited the exportation of PAPYRUS from Egypt.

Pardon Bell. The ANGELUS bell. So called because of the INDULGENCE once given for reciting certain prayers forming the Angelus.

Pardoner. A mediæval cleric licensed to preach and collect money for a definite object such as a CRUSADE or the building of a church, for contributing to which letters of INDULGENCE were exchanged. By many they were regarded as licences to sin and were denounced by Chaucer, Langland, and Wyclif.

The pardoner's mitten. Whoever put this mitten on would be sure to thrive in all things.

He that his hondē put in this metayn,
He shal have multiplying of his grayn,
Whan he hath sowen, be it whete or otes,
So that ye offre pans [pence] or ellēs grootes.

CHAUCER: Prologue to the Pardoner's Tale.

Pari mutuel (pa' ri mū tū el') (Fr., mutual stake). The name first given to the totalizator, which ensures that the winners of a race share the money staked on the horses, etc., after the cost of management, taxes, etc., have been deducted.

Pari passu (Lat., at the same pace). At the same time; in equal degrees. Two or more schemes carried on at once and driven forward with equal energy are said to be carried on pari passu.

Pariah. A low-caste Hindu of southern India, from a native word meaning "a drummer", because such Hindus beat the drums at certain festivals. Europeans extended the term to those of no caste at all; hence its application to outcasts generally. Cp. UNTOUCHABLES.

Parian. Pertaining to the island of Paros, one of the Cyclades, renowned for its white marble; hence a fine white porcelain used for making statuettes, vases, etc.

Parian Chronicle. One of the ARUNDELIAN MARBLES, found on the island of Paros, and bearing an inscription which contains a chronological register of the chief events of the mythology and history of ancient Greece from the reign of Cecrops (c. 1580 B.C.) to the archonship of Diognetus (264 B.C.), of which approximately the last 100 years is missing.

Paris. In Greek legend, the son of PRIAM, King of TROY, and HECUBA; and through his abduction of HELEN the cause of the siege of Troy. Hecuba dreamed that she was to bring forth a firebrand, and as this was interpreted to mean that the unborn child would bring destruction to his house, the infant Paris was exposed on Mount IDA. He was, however, brought up by a shepherd and grew to perfection of beautiful manhood. At the judgment on the APPLE OF DISCORD, HERA, APHRODITE, and ATHENE had each offered him a bribe—the first power, the second the most beautiful of women, and the third martial glory. In return for her victory, Aphrodite assisted him in the abduction of Helen, for whom he deserted his wife CENONE, daughter of the river-god, CEAREN. At Troy, Paris, having killed ACHILLES, was fatally wounded with a poisoned arrow by PHILOCTETES at the taking of the city.

Paris, the capital of France (see LUTETIA). Rabelais gives a whimsical derivation of the name. He tells (I, xvii) how GARGANTUA played a disgusting practical joke on the Parisians who came to stare at him, and the men said that it was a sport "par ris" (to be laughed at); wherefore the city was called Par'is.

The heraldic device of the city of Paris is a ship. As Sauval says, "L'île de la cité est faite comme un grand navire enfoncé dans la vase, échoué au fil de l'eau vers le milieu de la Seine". This form of a ship struck the authorities, who, in the later MIDDLE AGES, emblazoned it in the shield of the city.

Monsieur de Paris. See under MONSIEUR.

Plaster of Paris. Gypsum, especially calcined gypsum used for making statuary casts, keeping broken limbs rigid for setting, etc. It is found in large quantities in the quarries of Montmartre, Paris.

Paris-Garden. A bear-garden; a noisy disorderly place. In allusion to the famous Tudor bull-baiting and bear-baiting gardens of that name at BANKSIDE, on the site of a house owned by Robert de Paris, who held the manor in the reign of Richard II. About 1595 the Swan Theatre was erected here and, in 1613, this gave way to The Hope.

Do you take the court for Paris-garden?
SHAKESPEARE: Henry VIII, V, iv.

Paris green, or French green. A vivid light green pigment composed of acetoarsenite of copper, also used as an insecticide. Named from the French capital, where it was manufactured.

The Parisian Wedding. The massacre of ST. BARTHOLOMEW which took place (24 August 1572) during the festivities at the marriage of Henry of Navarre and Margaret of France.

Charles IX, too, although it was not possible for him to recall to life the countless victims of the Parisian wedding, was yet ready to explain those murders to the satisfaction of every unprejudiced mind.

MOTLEY: The Rise of the Dutch Republic, III, ix.

Parkinson's Law. As satirically promulgated by C. Northcote Parkinson in his book with that title (1957), it states that the amount of work done is in inverse proportion to the number of people employed; in other words, something similar to the Law of Diminishing Returns takes effect. The "law" is directed mainly at public administration, but it is aimed also at inefficient business administration.

Parlement. Under the old régime in France, the sovereign court of justice at Paris, where councillors were allowed to plead, and where justice was administered in the king's name. It was a development of the curia regis. In due course, twelve provincial parlements were created. They had not the function of a court of peers as had the Parlement of Paris, but they had certain administrative powers. The Paris Parlement received appeals from all inferior tribunals, but its own judgments were final. It took cognizance of all offences against the crown, the peers, the BISHOPS, the corporations, and all high officers of state. It had no legislative power, but had to register the royal edicts before they could become law. The Parlements were abolished by the CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY in 1790.

Parliament (Fr. parlement, Med. Lat. parliamentum, a talk, meeting, discussion). Its application to assemblies of the king and his magnates, etc., becomes common in 13th-century England and a representative element was introduced at these meetings. It became an established institution during the 14th century.

A number of Parliaments have been given characteristic names for various reasons. See under ADDLED; BAREBONES; CONVENTION; DEVIL'S; DRUNKEN; DUNCES; GOOD; GRATTAN'S; LONG; MAD; MONGREL; PENSIONARY; RUMP; UNLEARNED; USELESS; WONDERMAKING, etc.

Parliamentary language, i.e. restrained and seemly language, such as is properly required of any member speaking in Parliament.

Parliamentary Train. By the Regulation of Railways Act of 1855 every railway in Great Britain was obliged to run at least one train a day over its system, at a minimum speed of 12 m.p.h., calling at every station, at a fare not greater than 1d. a mile. This was repealed in 1915.

Parlour. Originally the reception room in a monastery, etc., where the inmates could see and speak (Fr. parler) to their friends.

Parlour boarder. Said of one in a privileged position; from the pupil at a boarding school who resided with the principal and received extra care and attention.

Parlour tricks. Accomplishments that are useful in company, at parties, etc. "Don't try any of your parlour tricks here" is used in the sense of, Don't try any of your games or nonsense with me.

Parnassus. A mountain near DELPHI, Greece, with two summits, one of which was consecrated to APOLLO and the MUSES, the other to BACCHUS. It is supposedly named from Parnassus, a son of NEPTUNE, and DEUCALION'S ark came to rest there after the flood. Owing to its connexion with the Muses it came to be regarded as the seat of poetry and music; hence To climb Parnassus is "to write poetry".

The Legislator, or Solon of Parnassus. Nicolas Boileau (1636-1711) was so called by VOLTAIRE, because of his Art of Poetry, a production unequalled in the whole art of didactic poetry.

Gradus ad Parnassum (Lat., steps to Parnassus). The fanciful title of a once popular dictionary of Latin prosody used in schools for the teaching of Latin verse. It was also the title of a well-known treatise on musical composition written in Latin by Johan Joseph Fux, published at Vienna in 1725, and for Clementi's collection of piano studies.

Parnassian School. The name given to a group of French poets flourishing from about 1850 to 1890, from a collection of their poems entitled Le Parnasse contemporain (1866). They included Théophile Gautier, Leconte de Lisle, Baudelaire, François Coppée, and Sully Prudhomme and Verlaine.

They were nicknamed les impassibles for their supposed devotion to "art for art's sake" and represented a reaction against the romanticism of Hugo and Lamartine.

In England, the group of poets following Rossetti and William Morris have sometimes been referred to as "the Parnassians".

Parody. Father of Parody. Hipponax of Ephesus (6th century B.C.). Parody means an ode which perverts the meaning of another ode (Gr. para ode).

Parolles (pà rōl' ēz). He was a mere Parolles. A pretender, a man of words, and a pedant. The allusion is to the faithless, bragging, slandering villain who dubs himself "captain", pretends to knowledge which he has not, and to sentiments he never feels, in SHAKESPEARE'S All's Well That Ends Well.

Parquet (par' ket). The word is a diminutive of O. Fr. parc, an enclosure (in Mod. Fr. it has the meanings of both BAR and BENCH). In England it is commonly used of a form of wooden flooring made up of blocks laid in a pattern; in the U.S.A. it denotes the ground floor of a theatre (more commonly called the "orchestra" nowadays) corresponding to the English "pit", the latter deriving from the bear-baiting pit of the 16th century.

Parr. Thomas Parr, the "old, old, very old man", was said to have lived in the reigns of ten sovereigns, to have done penance for incontinence at the age of 105, to have married a second wife when he was 122 years old, and to have had a child by her. He was a husbandman, reputedly born at Alberbury, near Shrewsbury, in 1483, and died in 1635. He was taken to the court of Charles I by the Earl of Arundel in 1635, and the change of his mode of life killed him. He was buried in the south transept of Westminster Abbey. There is no real evidence supporting his alleged age of 152, but he was doubtless a very old man. See LONGEVITY.

Parsees. GUEBRES or fire-worshippers; descendants of Persians who fled to India during the Mohammedan persecution of the 7th and 8th centuries, and still adherents of Zoroastrianism. The word means People of Pars, i.e. Persia. See TOWERS OF SILENCE under SILENCE.

Parsifal, Parsival. See PERCIVAL, SIR.

Parsley. He has need now of nothing but a little parsley, i.e. he is dead. A Greek saying; the Greeks decked tombs with parsley, because it keeps green a long time.

Parson. See CLERICAL TITLES.

Grey-coat parson. An impropiator; a layman who owned the TITHES.

Parson Adams. A leading character in Fielding's Joseph Andrews (1742), often taken as the type of the good-natured, hard-working, and learned country CURATE who is totally ignorant of "the ways of the world".

He was drawn from Fielding's friend, the Rev. William Young, who edited Ainsworth's Latin Dictionary (1752).

Parson and Clerk. An old children's game played with burnt paper, the sparks representing persons.

So when a child (as playful children use)
Has burnt to tinder a stale last-year's news,
The flame extinct, he views the roving fire—
There goes my lady, and there goes the squire,
There goes the parson, oh illustrious spark!
And there, scarce less illustrious, goes the clerk!
COWPER:
On observing Some Names of Little Note.

Two red sandstone rocks at Dawlish are known as the Parson and Clerk. The story is that an inland parson used to visit a certain BISHOP of Exeter who was in ill health in the hope that he might gain the see on the bishop's death. One winter's night, when on his now customary errand guided by the parish clerk, they lost their way, but with the aid of a rustic eventually found shelter at Dawlish. Among rough company they passed the night in carousal, and in the morning heard that the bishop was dead. In haste the parson pushed his clerk into the saddle, but the horses refused to budge. "I believe the DEVIL is in the horses," said the parson; "I believe he is," answered the clerk, only to be greeted with laughter from the company who had now turned into jeering demons. The house disappeared and they found themselves on the seashore, the horses still ignored the whip and they both lost consciousness. Neither parson nor clerk returned to their parish, but two strange rocks now stood on the shore.

Parson's nose. The rump of a fowl. Also called the "POPE's nose".

Part. A portion, a piece, a fragment.

For my part. As far as concerns me.

For the most part. Generally, as a rule.

In good part. Not to take offence.

Part and parcel. An essential part, portion, or element.

Part of speech. A grammatical class of words of a particular character. The old rhyme by which children used to be taught the parts of speech is:

Three little words you often see
Are ARTICLES, a, an, and the.
A NOUN's the name of anything;
As school or garden, hoop or swing.
ADJECTIVES tell the kind of noun;
As great, small, pretty, white, or brown.
Instead of nouns the PRONOUNS stand;
Her head, his face, our arms, your hand.
VERBS tell of something being done;
To read, count, sing, laugh, jump, or run.
How things are done the ADVERBS tell;
As slowly, quickly, ill, or well.
CONJUNCTIONS join the words together;
As, men and women, wind or weather.
THE PREPOSITION stands before
A noun, as in or through a door.
THE INTERJECTION shows surprise;
As, oh! how pretty! ah! how wise!
The whole are called nine parts of speech,
Which reading, writing, speaking teach.

Lines 7 and 8 are now completely misleading as the so-called "pronouns" here function as possessive adjectives; but it must be remembered that her, his, our, your, etc., were formerly regarded as personal pronouns of the possessive or genitive case.

Part up! Slang for "hand over", as in, "If you don't part up with the money, there will be trouble". An extension of the use is the old saying (George Buchanan, tutor to James VI), A fool and his money are soon parted.

Till death us do part. See DEPART.

To play a part. To perform some duty or pursue some course of action; also, to act deceitfully. The phrase is from the stage, where an actor's part is the words or the character assigned to him.

To take part. To assist; to participate.

To take the part of. To side with, to support the cause of.

A man of parts. An accomplished man; one who is clever, talented, or of high intellectual ability.

The parting of the ways. Said of a critical moment when one has to choose between two different courses of action. The allusion, of course, is to a place at which a road branches off in different directions.

Partant pour la Syrie (Departing for Syria). The official march of the French troops in the Second Empire. The words were by Count Alexander de Laborde (1774-1842), and the music—attributed to Queen Hortense, mother of NAPOLEON—was probably by the flautist Philip Drouet (1792-1873). The ballad tells how young Dunois followed his lord to Syria, and prayed the Virgin "that he might prove the bravest warrior, and love the fairest maiden". Afterwards the count said to Dunois, "To thee we owe the victory, and my daughter I give to thee". The refrain was: Amour à la plus belle; honneur au plus vaillant.

Parthenon (par' thè non) (Gr., "The maiden's chamber"). The great temple of ATHENE at ATHENS, many of the sculptured friezes and fragments of pediments of which are now in the BRITISH MUSEUM among the ELGIN MARBLES. The temple was begun by the architect Ictinus about 445 B.C. and was mainly embellished by Phidias, whose colossal chryselephantine statue of Athene was its chief treasure. The Parthenon was destroyed during the siege of Athens in 1687 by the Venetians, when the powder stored in it by the Turks exploded.

Parthenope (par then' ò pi). Naples; so called from Parthenope, the SIREN, who threw herself into the sea out of love for ULYSSES, and was cast up in the Bay of Naples.

Parthenopean Republic. The transitory Republic of Naples, established with the aid of the French in 1799, and overthrown by the Allies in the following June, when the BOURBONS were restored.

Parthian shot, or shaft. A parting shot; a telling or wounding remark made on departure, giving one's adversary no time to reply. An allusion to the ancient practice of Parthian horsemen turning in flight, to discharge arrows and missiles at their pursuers.

Parti pris (par' ti prè) (Fr., choice or side having been taken). A preconceived opinion, bias.

Particularists. Those who hold the doctrine of particular election and redemption, i.e. the election and redemption of some, not all, of the human race.

Partington. Dame Partington and her mop. A taunt against those who try to withstand progress or the inevitable. Sidney Smith, speaking at Taunton in October 1831, on the rejection of the Reform Bill by the Lords, compared them to Dame Partington, who, during a great storm at Sidmouth in 1824, tried to push back the Atlantic with her mop. "She was excellent at a slop, or a puddle," he said,

"but she should not have meddled with a tempest. Gentlemen, be at your ease—be quiet and steady. You will beat Mrs. Partington."

B. P. Shillaber, the American humorist, published The Life and Sayings of Mrs. Partington (1854), the old lady, like Mrs. MALAPROP, constantly mis-using words.

Partlet (O. Fr. Pertelote, a feminine proper name). A neckerchief or ruff worn in the 16th century by women. Also used as the name of a hen with reference to the frill-like feathers round the neck of some hens. The hen in Chaucer's Nun's Priest's Tale is called Partlet.

Partridge, always partridge! See PER-DRIX.

St. Partridge's Day. 1 September, when partridge shooting begins.

Parturiunt montes, etc. See THE MOUNTAIN IN LABOUR under MOUNTAIN.

Party. Person or persons under consideration. "This is the next party, your worship"—i.e. the next case to be examined.

As a Victorian colloquialism party was synonymous with person—"That dull old party in the corner"—and is still often used in this sense. When a sailor goes ashore to meet his "party" he means his "lady friend".

Party line. The official "line" or policy of a political party; also a telephone line shared by two or more subscribers. To toe the party line is to follow or be coerced into following party policy.

Parvenu (par' ve nū) (Fr., arrived). An upstart; one who has risen from the ranks. The word was made popular in France by Marivaux's Paysan Parvenu (1735).

The insolence of the successful parvenu is only the necessary continuance of the career of the needy struggler.

THACKERAY: Pendennis, II, xxi.

Parvis (par' vis) (Parvisus, a Low Latin corruption of paradisus, a church close, especially the court in front of St. Peter's at ROME in the MIDDLE AGES). The "place" or court before the main entrance of a cathedral. In the parvis of St. Paul's lawyers used to meet for consultation as brokers do in exchange. The word is now applied to the room above the church porch.

A sergeant of lawe, war and wys,
That often hadde ben atte parvyys.

CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales, line 309.

Pasch. EASTER, from the Greek form of the Hebrew Pesch, PASSOVER.

Pasch eggs, or Pace eggs. EASTER eggs, given as an emblem of the Resurrection. Paschal Lamb. The lamb sacrificed and eaten at the Jewish PASSOVER. For Christians, Jesus Christ is called the Paschal Lamb because He was called the "Lamb of God" by John (i, 29) and in allusion to I Cor. v, 7—"For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us".

Pasha (pāsh' a). A Turkish title borne by governors of provinces and certain military and civil officers of high rank. There were three grades of pashas, which were distinguished by the number of horse-tails carried before them and planted in front of their tents. The highest rank were those of three tails; the grand VIZIER was always such a pasha, as also were commanding generals and admirals; generals of division, etc., were pashas of two tails; and generals of brigades, rear-admirals, and petty provincial governors were pashas of one tail. Cp. BASHAW.

Pasht. See BUBASTIS.

Pasiphæ (pās' i fē). In Greek legend, a daughter of the Sun and wife of MINOS, King of Crete. She was the mother of ARIADNE, and also through intercourse with a white bull (given by POSEIDON to Minos) of the MINOTAUR.

Pasque eggs. See PASCH EGGS.

Pasquinade (pās kwīn ād'). A LAMPOON or political squib, having ridicule for its object; so called from Pasquino, an Italian tailor or barber of the 15th century, noted for his caustic wit. After his death, a mutilated statue was dug up and placed near the Piazza Navona. As it was not clear whom the statue represented, and as it stood opposite Pasquin's house, it came to be called "Pasquin". The people of ROME affixed their political, religious, and personal satires to it, hence the name. At the other end of the city was an ancient statue of MARS, called Marforio, to which were affixed replies to the Pasquinades.

Pass. A pass, or A common pass. At the universities, an ordinary degree, one without honours, a pass degree, the recipient being called a passman.

A pretty pass. A difficult or deplorable state of affairs.

To pass current. To be generally accepted as genuine or credible.

To pass the buck. To evade responsibility, to pass responsibility on to someone else. An American phrase, coming from the game of poker. The "buck", perhaps a piece of buckshot or a "bucktail", was passed from one player to another as a reminder that the recipient was to be the next dealer. The earliest recorded use of the phrase is by Mark Twain in 1872.

To pass the time of day. To exchange a greeting by some remark appropriate to the time of day or the weather, as "Good morning", "It's a lovely day", etc.

Passing Bell. See under BELL.

Passpartout (pas' par too) (Fr., pass everywhere). A master-key; also a simple kind of picture-framing in which the picture is placed between a sheet of cardboard and a piece of glass, the whole being held together by strips of fabric pasted round the edges. Also the name of Phileas Fogg's French valet in Jules Verne's novel Round the World in Eighty Days.

Passes, St. Bernard. Two Alpine passes into Italy, the Great St. Bernard from Switzerland, the little St. Bernard from France. On the former is the famous hospice founded by St. Bernard of Menthon (923-1008, canonized 1681), served by the AUGUSTINIAN CANONS. From early days they have succoured pilgrims and others crossing the pass, for this purpose breeding the large and handsome St. Bernard dog, trained to track and aid travellers lost in the snow. In May, 1800, NAPOLEON made his famous passage of the Alps across the Great St. Bernard pass with 30,000 men, the only track then being a bridle path.

Passim (pās' im) (Lat., here and there, in many places). A direction often found in annotated books which tells the reader that reference to the matter in hand will be found in many passages in the book mentioned.

Passion, The. The sufferings of Jesus Christ which had their culmination in His death on the CROSS.

Passion Flower. A plant of the genus Passiflora, whose flowers bear a fancied resemblance to the instruments of the PASSION. Cp. PIKE. It seems to have been given the name by 16th-century Spanish missionaries to South Africa.

The leaf symbolizes the spear.

The five petals and five sepals, the ten apostles (Peter who denied, and Judas who betrayed, being omitted).

The five anthers, the five wounds.

The tendrils, the scourges.

The column of the ovary, the pillar of the cross.

The stamens, the hammers.

The three stigmas, the three nails.

The filaments within the flower, the crown of thorns.

The calyx, the glory or nimbus.

The white tint, purity.

The blue tint, heaven.

It keeps open three days, symbolizing the three years' ministry.

Passion Play. A development of the mediæval MYSTERY play with especial reference to the story of Our Lord's passion and death. The best-known survival of such plays, which were common in 14th-century France, is the Oberammergau Passion Play, which takes place every ten years. In 1633 the BLACK DEATH swept over the village of Oberammergau; when it abated the inhabitants vowed to enact the PASSION every ten years and this has been done with one or two exceptions. It is now a highly commercial undertaking although the cast is still taken from the villagers.

Passion Sunday. See JUDICA.

Passionists. Members of the Congregation of Discalced Clerks of the Most Holy Cross and Passion of Our Lord Jesus Christ, founded by St. Paul of the Cross in 1720. The first house, at Monte Argentario, an island off the coast of Tuscany, was opened in 1737. Their chief work is in the holding of retreats and missions. The fathers wear on the breast of their black habit a white heart with the inscription Jesu Xpi Passio, surmounted by a CROSS.

Passover. A Jewish festival to commemorate the deliverance of the Israelites, when the ANGEL of death (that slew the firstborn of the Egyptians) passed over their houses, and spared all who did as MOSES commanded them. The festival began on 14th of Nisan (i.e. about 12 April) when the PASCAL LAMB was eaten, and the Festival of Unleavened Bread lasted seven days.

Patch. A fool; so called from the nickname of Cardinal Wolsey's jester, Sexton, who got his name either from Ital. pazzo, a fool, or from the motley or patched dress worn by licensed fools.

What a pied ninny's this! thou scurvy patch!
SHAKESPEARE: The Tempest, III, ii.

Cross-patch. An ill-tempered person.

Not a patch upon. Not to be compared with; as, "His horse is not a patch upon mine."

To patch up a quarrel. To arrange the matter in a not very satisfactory way; a coat that has been torn and then "patched up" is pretty sure to break out again; so is a quarrel. Cp. PAPER OVER THE CRACKS.

Patent (through Fr. from Lat. patentem, lying open). Open to the perusal of anybody. A thing that is patented is protected by LETTERS PATENT.

Letters patent. Documents from the SOVEREIGN or a crown office conferring a title, right, privilege, etc., such as a title of nobility, or the exclusive right to make or sell for a given number of years some new invention. So called because they are written upon open sheets of parchment, with the seal of the sovereign or party by whom they were issued pendant at the bottom.

Patent Rolls. CHANCERY enrolment of LETTERS PATENT under the GREAT SEAL collected on parchment rolls and first dating from 1201. Each roll contains a year, though in some cases the roll is subdivided into two or more parts. Each sheet of parchment is numbered and called a membrane; for example the 8th sheet, say, of the 10th year of Henry III is cited thus: "Pat. 10 Hen. III, m. 8". If the document is on the back of the roll it is called dorso, and "d" is added to the citation. Patents of invention were last enrolled in 1853 and they are now registered at the Patent Office. Cp. CLOSE ROLLS.

Paternoster (Lat., Our Father). The Lord's Prayer; from the first two words in the Latin version. Every eleventh bead of a ROSARY is so called, because at that bead the Lord's Prayer is repeated; and the name is also given to a certain kind of fishing tackle, in which hooks and weights to suit them are fixed alternately on the line somewhat in rosary fashion.

A Paternoster-while. Quite a short time; the time it takes to say a paternoster.

To say the Devil's paternoster. See under DEVIL.

Paternoster Row (LONDON) was probably so named from the ROSARY or paternoster makers. There is mention as early as 1374 of a Richard Russell, a "paternosterer", who dwelt there, and we read of "one Robert Nikke, a paternoster maker and citizen", in the reign of Henry IV. Another suggestion is that it was so called because funeral processions on their way to St. Paul's began their Pater noster at the beginning of the Row. For three centuries Paternoster Row was the home of publishers and booksellers. It was totally destroyed in an air raid in December 1940.

Pathetic Fallacy. A term coined by John Ruskin (1819-1900) to describe the figure of speech that attributes human feelings to nature.

Pathfinder. One of the names of Natty Bumppo in Fenimore Cooper's LEATHER-STOCKING Novels. It was given to the Patient Grisel

American Major-General John Charles Fremont (1813-1890) who conducted four expeditions across the Rocky Mountains. In World War II, R.A.F. pilots who identified targets and dropped flares to guide the attacking force were called "Pathfinders".

Patient Grisel. See GRISELDA.

Patmos. The island of the Sporades in the Aegean Sea (now called Patmo or Patino), to which St. JOHN retired—or was exiled (Rev. i, 9). Hence the name is used allusively for a place of banishment or solitude.

Patres Conscripti. See CONSCRIPT FATHERS.

Patriarch (Gr. patria, family; archein, to rule). The head of a tribe or family who rules by paternal right; applied specially (after Acts vii, 8) to the twelve sons of Jacob, and to ABRAHAM, Isaac, and Jacob and their forefathers. In one passage (Acts ii, 29) David is spoken of as a patriarch.

In the early Church, "Patriarch", first mentioned in the Council of Chalcedon, but virtually existing from about the time of the Council of Nicæa, was the title of the highest Church officers. A Patriarch ordained METROPOLITANS, convened councils, received appeals, and was the chief BISHOP over several countries or provinces, as an archbishop is over several dioceses. It was also the title given by the POPES to the archbishops of Lisbon and Venice, in order to make the patriarchal dignity appear lower and distinct from the papal. It is also the title of the chief bishop of various Eastern churches, as the JACOBITES, Armenians and MARONITES.

In the ORTHODOX Eastern Church the bishops of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and JERUSALEM are patriarchs, the Patriarch of Constantinople bearing the style of Œcumenical Patriarch. Within a religious order the title is given to the founder, as St. Benedict, St. FRANCIS, and St. DOMINIC.

Patrician. Properly, one of the patres (fathers) or senators of ROME (see CONSCRIPT FATHERS), and their descendants. As for long they held all the honours of the state, the word came to signify the magnates or nobility of a nation, the aristocrats or "patrician class".

Patrick, St. The apostle and patron SAINT of IRELAND (commemorated on 17 March) was not an Irishman but was born at Bannavem (c. 389). Its location is unknown but it may have been in Glamorgan and his father, Calpornius, was a Roman official and deacon. As a boy he was captured in a Pictish raid and sold as a slave in Ireland. He escaped to GAUL where he probably studied in the monastery of Lérins before returning to Britain. After receiving a supernatural call to preach to the heathen of Ireland, he returned to Gaul and was ordained deacon. He landed in Wicklow (432) and going north converted the people of ULSTER and later those of other parts of Ireland. He established many communities and churches including the cathedral church of Armagh. He is said to have died in 461 and to have been buried at Down in Ulster.

St. Patrick left his name to many places and numerous legends are told of his miraculous powers. Perhaps the best known tradition is that he cleared Ireland of its vermin. The story goes that one old SERPENT resisted him, so he made a box and invited the serpent to enter it. The serpent objected, saying it was too small; but St. Patrick insisted it was quite large enough to be comfortable. Eventually the serpent got in to prove it was too small, whereupon St. Patrick slammed down the lid and cast the box into the sea.

In commemoration of this he is usually represented banishing the serpents; and with a SHAMROCK leaf.

St. Patrick's Cross. The same shape as St. Andrew's CROSS (X), only different in colour, viz. red on a white ground.

St. Patrick's Purgatory. A cave on Station Island in Lough Derg., Co. Donegal, a resort of pilgrims from the 13th century. The legend is that Christ revealed it to St. Patrick and told him that all who visited it in penitence and faith would gain a full INDULGENCE of their sins and they would gain sight of the torments of HELL and the joys of HEAVEN. Henry of Saltrey tells how Sir OWAIN visited it, and Fortunatus, of CHAP-BOOK fame, was one of the adventurers. It was blocked up by order of the POPE on St. Patrick's Day, 1497. Caldéron (1600-1681) has a play on the subject, El Purgatorio de San Patricio.

Why then should all your chimney-sweepers be Irishmen? . . .

Faith, that's soon answered, for St. Patrick, you know, keeps purgatory; he makes the fire, and his countrymen could do nothing if they cannot sweep chimneys.

DEKKER: The Honest Whore, Pt. II, I, i.

The Order of St. Patrick. A British order of knighthood instituted by George III in 1783, originally consisting of the Sovereign, the Lord Lieutenant, and 15 knights (enlarged to 22 in 1833). Its motto is Quis Separabit? In 1968 the Order consisted of the Sovereign and 2 knights.

Patriots' Day. In the U.S.A. the anniversary of the battle of Lexington, 19 April 1775, the first battle in the War of Independence. It is a public holiday in Massachusetts and Maine.

Patroclus. The gentle and amiable friend of ACHILLES. When the latter refused to fight in order to annoy AGAMEMNON, Patroclus appeared in the armour of Achilles at the head of the MYRMIDONS and was slain by HECTOR.

Patroon (Dut., a patron). A landowner in New Jersey and New York when they were Dutch colonies. The patroon had certain manorial rights and privileges which were abolished about 1850.

Patter. To chatter, to clack, also the running talk of CHEAP-JACKS, conjurers, entertainers and comedians, etc., is from PATERNOSTER. When saying MASS the priest often recited in a low, rapid, mechanical way until he came to the words "and lead us not into temptation", which he spoke clearly and deliberately.

Patter. The patter of feet, of rain, etc., is not connected with the above. It is a frequentative of pat, to strike gently.

Pattern. From the same root as patron (Lat. pater, father). As the patron ought to be an example, so pattern has come to signify a model.

Paul, St. Patron saint of preachers and tentmakers (see Actis xviii, 3). Originally called Saul, his name, according to tradition, was changed in honour of Sergius Paulus, whom he converted (Actis xiii, 6-12).

His symbols are a sword and open book, the former the instrument of his martyrdom and the latter indicative of the new law propagated by him as the apostle of the Gentiles. He is represented as of short stature, with bald head and grey, bushy beard; and legend relates that when he was beheaded at ROME (c. A.D. 66) after having converted one of NERO's favourite concubines, milk instead of blood flowed from his veins. He is commemorated on 25 January.

St. Paul the Hermit. The first of the Egyptian hermits. When 113 years old, he was visited by St. ANTONY, himself over 90, and when he died in 341, St. Antony wrapped his body in the cloak given to him by St. Athanasius, and his grave was dug by two lions. He lived in a cave, and he is represented as an old man, clothed with palm-leaves, and seated under a palm-tree, near which are a river and loaf of bread.

A Paul's man. A braggart; a captain out of service, with a long rapier; so called because the Walk down the centre of Old St. Paul's, LONDON, was at one time the haunt of stale knights and other characters. These loungers were also known as Paul's Walkers; Jonson called BOBADIL a Paul's man.

Paul's Cross. A pulpit in the open air situated on the north side of Old St. Paul's Cathedral, in which, from 1259 to 1643, eminent divines preached in the presence of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen every Sunday. The cross was demolished in 1643 by order of PARLIAMENT. A new pulpit and CROSS were erected on the site in 1910.

Paul Jones. A dance which became popular in Britain in the 1920s in which the ladies formed an outward facing circle moving in the opposite direction to the men, who faced inwards. The couples facing each other when the music stopped became partners for the next part of the dance, this pattern being repeated several times. It was earlier one of the "sets" in American barn-dancing, perhaps named after the naval adventurer John Paul Jones (1747-1792).

Paul Pry. See PRY.

To rob Peter to pay Paul. See ROB.

Pavan, or Pavin (pa' van). A stately Spanish dance of the 16th and 17th centuries, said to be so called because in it the dancers stalked like peacocks (Lat. pavones), the gentlemen with their long robes of office, and the ladies with trains like peacock's tails. The pavan, like the minuet, ended with a quick movement called the galliard, a sort of gavotte. The etymology is uncertain and it is also suggested that the name is from Padova (Padua).

Every pavan has its galliard. Every sage has his moments of folly. Every white must have its black, and every sweet its sour.

Pawnbroker's Sign, The. See BALLS, THE THREE GOLDEN.

Pawnee (paw' nee). Anglo-Indian for water (Hind. pani, water). It is also the name of a North American Indian tribe.

Brandy pawnee. Brandy and water.

Pax (paks) (Lat., peace). The "kiss of peace", which is given at High MASS. It is omitted on MAUNDY THURSDAY.

Also a sacred utensil used when mass is celebrated by a high dignitary. It is sometimes a crucifix, sometimes a tablet, and sometimes a reliquary, and is handed round to be kissed as a symbolic substitute for the "kiss of peace".

The old custom of "kissing the bride", which took place immediately before the Communion of the newly married couple and still obtains in some churches, is derived from the Salisbury rubric concerning the Pax in the Missa Sponsalium:

Tunc amoto pallio, surgant ambo sponsus et sponsa; et accipiat sponsus pacem a sacerdote, et ferat sponsæ osculans eam et neminem alium, nec ipse, nec ipsa; sed statim diaconus vel clericus a presbytero pacem accipiens, ferat aliis sicut solitum est.

Pax! The schoolboy's cry of truce.

Pax Britannica. The peace formerly imposed by British rule in her colonial empire. The phrase is modelled on the Latin Pax Romana, the peace existing between the different parts of the Roman empire.

The pax Britannica was an umbrella that sheltered all colonists, one which they neither wished nor could afford to dispense with.

A. P. THORNTON:

The Imperial Idea and Its Enemies, iii.

Since the U.S.A. has increasingly taken over Britain's former role, the term Pax Americana has come into vogue.

Pax vobis(cum) (Peace be unto you). The formula used by a BISHOP instead of "The Lord be with you", wherever this versicle occurs in Divine service. They are the words used by Christ to His APOSTLES on the first EASTER morning.

Pay, to discharge a debt, is through O. Fr. paier, from Lat. pax, peace, by way of pacare, to appease. The nautical pay, to cover with hot tar when caulking, represents O. Fr. peier, from Lat. picare, to cover with pitch (Lat. pix).

He who pays the piper calls the tune. The one who foots the bill has the control. The allusion is obvious.

Here's the devil to pay, and no pitch hot. See under DEVIL.

I'll pay him out. I'll be a match for him, I'll punish him.

To pay in his own coin. To treat him as he has treated you; to settle with him by the methods he himself employs; a TIT FOR TAT.

To pay off old scores. See under SCORE.

To pay on the nail. See under NAIL.

To pay out a rope is to let it out gradually.

To pay with the roll of the drum. Not to pay at all. No soldier can be arrested for debt when on the march.

How happy the soldier who lives on his pay,
And spends half-a-crown out of sixpence a day;
He cares not for justices, beadies, or bum,
But pays all his debts with the roll of the drum.
O'KEEFE.

Who's to pay the piper? Who is to pay the score? When a piper amused guests at inns or on the green he expected payment for his efforts.

You can put paid to that. You can treat it as finished, it's all over and done with. A phrase from the counting-house; when "Paid" is put to an account it is settled. Similarly that's put paid to him means "that's settled him".

Pay dirt. A mining term for ground which pays for working.

Pay load. The goods or passengers carried in a ship, aeroplane, etc., which pay for their carriage, as opposed to crew and equipment, etc.

Paynim (pā' nim), from the O. Fr. paenime, Lat. paganismus, a heathen, was the recognized chivalric term for a MOSLEM.

Peace. A Bill of Peace. A bill intended to secure relief from perpetual litigation. It is brought by one who wishes to establish and perpetuate a right which he claims, but which, from its nature, is controversial.

The Perpetual Peace. The peace concluded 24 June 1502 between ENGLAND and SCOTLAND, whereby Margaret, daughter of Henry VII, was betrothed to James IV of Scotland; but the Scots invaded England in 1513! The name has been given to other treaties, as that between Austria and Switzerland in 1474, and between France and Switzerland in 1516.

If you want peace, prepare for war. A translation of the Latin proverb, Si vis pacem, para bellum. It goes a step farther than the advice given by POLONIUS to his son (Hamlet, I, iii), for you are told, whether you are "in a quarrel" or not, always bear yourself so that all possible opposers "may beware of thee".

The Kiss of Peace. See PAX.

Peace at any price. LORD PALMERSTON sneered at the QUAKER statesman John Bright, as a "peace-at-any-price man". Cp. CONCHY.

Though not a "peace-at-any-price" man, I am not ashamed to say I am a peace-at-almost-any-price man.

LORD AVEBURY: The Use of Life, xi (1894).

Peace in our time. The unfortunate phrase used by Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, on his return from MUNICH, 30 September 1938. It comes from the versicle in Morning Prayer, "Give peace in our time, O Lord."

Peace with honour. A phrase popularized by Lord Beaconsfield on his return from the Congress of Berlin (1878), when he said:

Lord Salisbury and myself have brought you back peace—but a peace I hope with honour, which may satisfy our Sovereign and tend to the welfare of the country.

SHAKESPEARE has:

We have made peace
With no less honour to the Antians
Than shame to the Romans.

Coriolanus, V, v.

The Queen's, or King's Peace. The peace of law-abiding subjects; originally the protection secured by the king to those employed on his business.

To kill an alien, a Jew, or an outlaw, who are all under the king's peace or protection, is as much murder as to kill the most regular born Englishmen.

Blackstone's Commentaries, IV, xiv.

To hold one's peace. To keep silent, to refrain from speaking.

To keep the peace. To refrain from disturbing the public peace, to prevent strife or commotion. Wrongdoers are sometimes bound over to keep the peace for a certain time by a magistrate, subject to entering into a recognizance.

Peace Ballot. A national ballot (27 June 1935) organized by the "National Declaration Committee" under the chairmanship of Lord Cecil (closely linked with the League of Nations Union), on certain questions of peace and disarmament. Over 11½ million votes were in favour of adherence to the League of Nations and over 10 million voted for a reduction in armaments. The ballot was misinterpreted by the AXIS powers as a sign of British weakness.

Peace Pledge Union. A body pledged to renounce war, organized by Canon Dick Sheppard of St. Martin-in-the-Fields in 1936.

Peacock. A peacock in his pride. A peacock with his tail fully displayed.

By the peacock! An obsolete oath which at one time was thought to be blasphemous. The fabled incorruptibility of the peacock's flesh caused the bird to be adopted as a type of the resurrection.

There is a story that when George III had partly recovered from one of his bouts of "insanity" his Ministers got him to read the King's speech, and he ended every sentence with the word peacock. The Minister who drilled him said that peacock was an excellent word for ending a sentence, only kings should not let subjects hear it, but should whisper it softly. The resulting pause at the close of each sentence had an excellent effect.

The peacock's feather. An emblem of vainglory, and in some Eastern countries a mark of rank.

As a literary term the expression is used of a borrowed ornament of style spatchcocked into the composition; the allusion being to the fable of the jay who decked herself out in a peacock's feathers, making herself an object of ridicule.

The peacock's tail is an emblem of an EVIL EYE, or an ever-vigilant traitor; hence the feathers are considered unlucky. Cp. ARGUS-EYED.

Peal. To ring a peal. Correctly speaking a set of bells is called a ring of bells and the sound made is a peal. Specifically, to ring a peal is to ring a series of CHANGES on a set of bells, although the expression is commonly used more loosely.

Pearls. Discorides and Pliny mention the belief that pearls are formed by drops of rain falling into oyster-shells while open; the raindrops thus received being hardened into pearls by some secretions of the animal. They are actually a secretion forming a coating and repeated so often that they attain considerable thickness, caused by the attempts of marine and fresh-water molluscs to get rid of a foreign object (e.g. a grain of sand or tiny parasitic worm).

According to HORACE (II Satires, iii, 239), Clodius, son of Æsop the tragedian, drew a pearl of great value from his ear, melted it in vinegar, and drank to the health of Cecilia Metella. This story is referred to by Valerius Maximus, Macrobius, and Pliny. Cp. CLEOPATRA AND HER PEARL.

A pearl of great price. Something highly treasured or of especial value. One of the doctrinal works of the MORMONS is called The Pearl of Great Price.

To cast pearls before swine. To offer something of a quality which the uncultured PHILISTINE is unable to appreciate; to offer one's "pearls of wisdom" to an unappreciative audience.

Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine.
Matt. vii, 6.

The Pearl Coast. So the early Spanish explorers named the Venezuelan coast from Cumana to Trinidad; the islands off this coast were called the Pearl Islands. This area was the site of large pearl-fisheries.

Pearl Mosque. At Agra, India; built of white marble at the orders of Shah Jehan, who also ordered the more famous TAJ MAHAL in the same city. There is another Pearl Mosque at Delhi, which was Aurangzeb's private place of prayer.

Pearlies. The coster "kings" and "queens", "princes" and "princesses" of the LONDON boroughs, so named from their glittering attire studded with innumerable pearl buttons. Since the Festival of Britain (1951), there has been a Pearly King of London. Originally elected by the street-traders of London to safeguard their rights from interlopers and bullies, they now devote their efforts to collecting and working for charities. Their tradition is an old one and they are a reminder of the more colourful London when barrow-boys were more prevalent than supermarkets. See COSTERMONGER.

Peasants' Revolt. The name given to the English peasant risings of 1381 which were immediately occasioned by an unpopular poll-tax at a time when there was a growing spirit of social revolt. Its chief centre was south-eastern England, especially Kent and Essex. Wat Tyler's men beheaded the Archbishop of Canterbury (Sudbury) and temporarily held LONDON, and John Ball joined the Kentish rebels. King Richard II promised free pardon and redress of grievances (abolition of villeinage, etc.), and Wat Tyler was slain by Walworth, the MAYOR of London. Severe retribution followed and the boy King's promises were not kept.

In Germany the Peasants' Revolt or Peasant War of 1524-1525 was caused by tyranny and oppression by the nobility and further stimulated by the seeming encouragement of religious reformers. Luther disowned the peasants and threw in his lot with the princes, and the risings were put down with great severity.

Peascod. Winter for shoeing, peascod for wooing. The allusion in the latter clause is to the custom of placing a peascod with nine peas in it on the door-lintel, under the notion that the first man who entered through the door would be the husband of the person who placed the peascod. Another custom is alluded to by William Browne of Tavistock (1591-1643):

The peascod greene oft with no little toyle
Hee'd seeke for in the fattest, fertill'st soile,
And rend it from the stalke to bring it to her
And in her bosome for acceptance woo her.
Britannia; Pastorals, II, 3.

Pec. Old Eton slang for money. A contraction of Lat. pecunia. See PECUNIARY.

Peccavi. To cry peccavi. To acknowledge oneself in the wrong. Sir Charles Napier, in 1843, sent a preliminary despatch with the single word "Peccavi" (I have sinned, i.e. I have Sindh) announcing his conquest by the victory of Miani.

Pecker. Keep your pecker up. As the mouth is in the head, pecker (the mouth) means the head; and to "keep your pecker" up means to keep your head up, or more familiarly, "keep your chin up", "never say die".

Peckham. All holiday at Peckham, i.e. no appetite, not peckish; a pun on the word peck, as "going to Bedfordshire" is a pun on the word bed.

Going to Peckham. Going to dinner.

Peckish. Hungry, or desirous of something to eat. "Peck" refers to fowls, etc., which peck their food.

Pecksniff. A canting hypocrite, who speaks homilies of morality, does the most heartless things "as a duty to society", and forgives wrongdoing in nobody but himself (Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit).

Pecos Bill (pe' kos). A cowboy of American legend who performed superhuman prodigies on the frontier in early days. One of his feats was to dig the Rio Grande river.

Pectoral Cross. See CRUX PECTORALIS.

Peculiar. A parish or group of parishes exempt from the jurisdiction of the ORDINARY of the diocese. There were many such in mediæval England, e.g. monastic peculiars, royal peculiars, archiepiscopal and diocesan peculiars, peculiars belonging to Orders, and cathedral peculiars. In 1832 there were still over 300 peculiars but they were abolished between 1838 and 1850. See also DEAN OF THE ARCHES; DEANS OF PECULIARS.

Court of Peculiars. In particular, a branch of the Court of ARCHES which had jurisdiction over the PECULIARS of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Peculiar People. Properly, the Jews, the "Chosen people". The title was also assumed by a London sect, the "Plumstead Peculiars", founded in 1838. They refuse medical, but not surgical aid and rely on the efficacy of prayer and on anointing oil by the elders. The name is based on Titus ii, 14—"purify unto himself a peculiar people".

Pecuniary. From pecus, cattle, especially sheep. Varro says that sheep were the ancient medium of barter and standard of value. Ancient coin was marked with the image of an ox or sheep.

Pedagogue (Gr. pais, boy; agein, to lead).

A "boy-leader", hence a schoolmaster—now usually one who is pompous and pedantic. In ancient Greece the pedagogos was a slave whose duty it was to attend his master's son whenever he left home.

Pedestal. To set on a pedestal. To idolize or to idealize. From the custom of showing reverence to figures of SAINTS and others set on pedestals.

Pedlar. This word for an itinerant vendor of small wares is not from Lat. pedes, feet, but is probably from ped, basket, in which his goods were carried. In Norwich, Ped-market was where women used to display eggs, butter, cheese, etc., in open hampers.

Pedlar's Acre. A portion of Lambeth Marsh bequeathed to the parish church of St. Mary, and possibly originally a "squatting-place" of pedlars. In the church is a window containing a representation of a pedlar and his dog and the story is that a pedlar bequeathed "his acre" to the church on the condition that he and his dog were commemorated in a window. It has been suggested that it is a REBUS on Chapman, the name of a benefactor. There is a similar representation in Swaffham Church, Norfolk, of one John Chapman, and a similar tradition persists there.

Pedlars' French. The jargon or CANT of thieves, rogues, and vagabonds. "French" was formerly widely used to denote anything or anyone that was foreign, and even Bracton uses the word "Frenchman" as a synonym of foreigner.

Instead of Pedlars' French, gives him plain language.

Faithful Friends (17th century), I, ii.

Peel. A fortified keep or tower, particularly one built in the 16th century along the border areas of ENGLAND and SCOTLAND as a defence against raids. It derives from Lat. palus, a stake. Perhaps the best known is the Peel on St. Patrick's Isle, off the Isle of Man, connected to the main island by a causeway. See MAUTHE DOG.

A Peel Parish. In the CHURCH OF ENGLAND, a district taken out of an existing parish which may with due formalities be constituted a new parish. So called from the fact that Sir Robert Peel was Prime Minister when the ACT OF PARLIAMENT (1843) authorizing such changes was passed.

Peeler. Slang for a policeman; first applied to the Irish constabulary founded by Sir Robert Peel when Chief Secretary for IRELAND (1812-1818), and later to the Metropolitan Police which he established in 1829 when Home Secretary. Cp. BOBBY.

In the 16th century the word was applied to robbers, from peel (later pill), to plunder, strip of possessions, rob. Holinshed, in his Scottish Chronicle (1570) refers to Patrick Dunbar, who "delivered the countrie of these peelers". Cp. also Milton's Paradise Regained, IV, 136:

That people . . . who, once just,
Frugal, and mild, and temperate, conquered well
But govern ill the nations under yoke,
Peeling their provinces, exhausted all
By lust and rapine.

Peelites. Those CONSERVATIVES who supported and remained loyal to Sir Robert Peel at the time of the Repeal of the Corn Laws. Among them were Aberdeen, Gladstone, Goulburn, Graham, and Sidney Herbert and they did not return to the Conservative party after the rift in 1846.

Peep-o'-Day Boys. The Irish PROTESTANT faction in ULSTER of the 1780s and 1790s; so called because they used to visit the houses of their Roman Catholic opponents (called Defenders) at "peep of day" searching for arms or plunder, etc. Cp. ORANGEMEN.

Peeping Tom of Coventry. See GODIVA, LADY.

Peers of the Realm. The five orders of DUKE, MARQUESS, EARL, VISCOUNT and BARON. The word peer is the Lat. parēs (equals), and in feudal times all great vassals were held as equals.

The Twelve Peers of Charlemagne. See PALADINS.

Peewits' Pinch. The same as "BLACK-THORN WINTER", the short cold spell that usually occurs in MARCH, when peewits are about to begin nesting, and feel their "pinch" when frost and cold winds come upon them at this time. Peewits nest on the ground.

Peg. A square peg in a round hole. One who is doing (or trying to do) a job for which he is not suited; e.g. a BISHOP refereeing a prize-fight.

I am a peg too low. I am low-spirited, moody; I want another draught to cheer me up. Our Saxon ancestors used tankards with pegs inserted at equal intervals, so that when two or more drank from the same bowl no one might exceed his fair allowance (cp. IN MERRY PIN under PIN). We are told that St. DUNSTAN introduced the fashion to prevent brawling.

Come, old fellow, drink down to your peg!
But do not drink any farther, I beg.

LONGFELLOW: Golden Legend, iv.

To peg a price. To fix or maintain a market price, as by buying, selling or subsidy.

To peg away at it. To stick at it persistently, often in spite of difficulties and discouragement.

To peg out. To die. From the game of cribbage where the game is ended by a player pegging out the last holes.

To take one down a peg. To take the conceit out of a braggart or pretentious person; to lower their self-esteem. The allusion is to a ship's colours, which used to be raised and lowered by pegs; the higher the colours are raised the greater the honour, and to take them down a peg would be to diminish the honour.

Trepanned your party with intrigue,
And took your grandees down a peg,
BUTLER: Hudibras, II, ii.

Pegasus. The winged horse on which BELLEROPHON rode against the CHIMÆRA. When the MUSES contended with the daughters of Pieros, HELICON rose heavenward with delight; but Pegasus gave it a kick, stopped its ascent, and brought out of the mountain the soul-inspiring waters of HIPPOCRENE; hence, the name is used for the inspiration of poetry.

Then who so will with virtuous deeds assay
To mount to heaven, on Pegasus must ride,
And with sweete Poets verse be glorified.
SPENSER: Ruines of Time, 425.

In World War II, the horse, with Bellerophon on his back, in pale blue on a maroon ground, was adopted as the insignia of all British Airborne troops.

Peine forte et dure (pān fort ā dūr). A species of torture applied to contumacious felons who refused to plead; it usually took the form of pressing the accused between boards until he accepted a trial by jury or died. Juliana Quick (1442), Anthony Arrowsmith (1598), Walter Calverly (1605), and Major Strangways (1657) suffered death in this way. Even in 1741 this torture was invoked at the Cambridge assizes. It was abolished in 1772. (Lat. pæna, punishment; fortis et dura, intense and severe.)

Peking Man (Sinanthropos pekinensis). The name given to remains of a skull found near Peking in 1929 which in many respects showed resemblances to that of PITHECANTHROPUS erectus and held as being intermediate between Java and NEANDERTHAL MAN.

Pelagians. Heretical followers of the British monk Pelagius (a Latinized form of his Welsh name Morgan, the sea). They denied the doctrine of ORIGINAL SIN (see under SIN) or the taint of ADAM, and maintained that we have power of ourselves to receive or reject the GOSPEL. They were opposed by St. Augustine and condemned by Pope Innocent I in 417 and again by Pope Zozimus in 418.

Pelf. Filthy Pelf. Money; usually with a contemptuous implication—as we speak of “filthy lucre”; or “Who steals my purse steals trash”.

The word is from O. Fr. pelvre, connected with our pilfer, and was originally used of stolen or pilfered goods, ill-gotten gains.

Pelican. In Christian art, a symbol of charity; also an emblem of Jesus Christ, by “whose blood we are healed”. St. JEROME gives the story of the pelican restoring its young ones destroyed by serpents, and his own salvation by the blood of Christ. The popular fallacy that pelicans feed their young with their blood arose from the fact that the parent bird transfers macerated food from the large bag under its bill to its young. The correct term for the heraldic representation of the bird in this act is a pelican in her piety, piety having the classical meaning of filial devotion.

The mediæval BESTIARY tells us that the pelican is very fond of its brood, but, when they grow, they often rebel against the male bird and provoke his anger, so that he kills them; the mother returns to the nest in three days, sits on the dead birds, pours her blood over them, revives them, and they feed on her blood.

Then sayd the Pellycane,
When my byrdis be slayne
With my bloude I them reuyue [revive].
Scripture doth record
The same dyd our Lord,
And rose from death to lyue.
SKELTON: Armoury of Birdis.

The Pelican State. Louisiana, U.S.A., which has a pelican in its device. Pelicans are plentiful on its coast.

Pelion (pē li on). Heaping Pelion upon Ossa. Adding difficulty to difficulty, embarrassment to embarrassment, etc. When the giants tried to scale HEAVEN, they placed Mount Pelion upon Mount Ossa, two peaks in Thessaly, for a scaling ladder (Odyssey, XI, 315).

Pell-mell. Headlong; in reckless confusion. From the players of PALL-MALL, who rushed heedlessly to strike the ball.

Pelleas, Sir. One of the Knights of the ROUND TABLE, famed for his great strength. He is introduced in Spenser's The Faerie Queene (VI, xii) as going after the BLATANT BEAST. See also Tennyson's Pelleas and Ettare.

Pells. Clerk of the Pells. An officer of the EXCHEQUER, whose duty is was to make entries of receipts and disbursements on the pells or parchment rolls. The office was abolished in 1834 (O. Fr. pel, peau, skin or hide).

Pelmanism. A system of mind and memory training originated by W. J. Ennever in the closing years of the 19th century, and so called because it is an easy name to remember. Owing to its very extensive advertising, the verb to pelmanize, meaning to obtain good results by training the memory, was coined. It has also given its name to a card game, popular with children, which largely depends on mental concentration and memory.

Pelops. Son of TANTALUS, and father of Atreus and Thyestes. He was king of Pisa in Elis, and was cut to pieces and served as food to the gods. The Morea was called Peloponnesus, "the island of Pelops", from this mythical king.

The ivory shoulder of Pelops. The distinguishing or distinctive mark of anyone. The tale is that DEMETER ate the shoulder of Pelops when it was served by TANTALUS; when the gods put the body back into the cauldron to restore it to life, this portion was lacking, whereupon Demeter supplied one of ivory.

Not Pelops' shoulder whiter than her hands.
W. BROWNE: Britannia's Pastorals, 11, iii.

Pembroke Table. A small usually rectangular table capable of being extended by side flaps supported by hinged brackets. According to Thomas Sheraton (Cabinet Directory, 1803) they were introduced soon after the mid-18th century and were named after the "lady who first gave orders for one of them, and who probably gave the first idea of such a table to the workmen".

P.E.N. The initials of an international association of poets, playwrights, editors, essayists, and novelists, who seek to defend the freedom of artistic expression throughout the world by promoting the friendship and co-operation of writers in all countries.

Pen is the Lat. penna, a feather, both words being derived from the Sanskrit root pet—to fly. Pet—gave Sansk. patra (feather); this became Lat. penna (Eng. pen), and in O. Teut. fethro (Ger. Feder; Dut. veder; Eng. feather). In O. Fr. penne meant both feather and pen, but in Mod. Fr. it is restricted to the long wing- and tail-feathers and to heraldic plumes on crests, while pen is plume. Thus the French and English usage has been vice versa, English using plume in HERALDRY, French using penne, the English writing implement being a pen and the French, plume.

Pen-name. A pseudonym. See NOM DE PLUME.

Penalty envelopes. In the U.S.A., envelopes franked for official use by government departments like those stamped O.H.M.S. (On Her Majesty's Service) in Britain. "Penalty" refers to the penalty for their misuse.

Penates. See DII PENATES; LARES AND PENATES.

Pencil. Originally a painter's brush, and still used of very fine paint-brushes, from Lat. penicillum, a paint-brush, diminutive of peniculus, a brush, which itself is a diminutive of penis, a tail. When the modern pencil came into use in the early 17th century it was known as a dry pencil or a pencil with black lead.

Knight of the Pencil. A bookmaker; a reporter; also anyone who makes his living by scribbling.

Pencil of rays. All the rays of light that issue from one point or can be found at one point; so called because a representation of them has the appearance of a pointed pencil.

Pendente lite (penden' ti li te) (Lat.). Pending the trial; while the suit is going on.

Pendragon. A title conferred on several British chiefs in times of great danger when they were invested with supreme power, especially (in ARTHURIAN ROMANCES) to Uther Pendragon, father of King ARTHUR. The word is Welsh pen, head, and dragon (referring to the war-chief's dragon standard). It corresponded to the Roman dux bellorum.

Geoffrey of Monmouth relates that when Aurelius, the British king, was poisoned by Ambron, during the invasion of Pascentius, son of Vortigern, "there appeared a star of wonderful magnitude and brightness, darting forth a ray, at the end of which was a globe of fire in form of a dragon, out of whose mouth issued forth two rays; one of which seemed to stretch itself beyond the extent of Gaul, the other towards the Irish Sea, and ended in seven lesser rays" (Bk. VIII, ch. xiv). Uther, brother of Aurelius and his predestined successor, ordered two golden dragons to be made, one of which he presented to Winchester Cathedral, and the other "to be carried along with him to his wars", whence he was called Uther Pendragon.

Penelope (pé nel' ō pi). The wife of ULYSSES and mother of TELEMACHUS in Homeric legend. She was a model of all the domestic virtues.

The Web of Penelope. A work "never ending, still beginning"; never done, but ever in hand. Penelope, according to HOMER, was pestered with suitors at Ithaca while ULYSSES was absent at the siege of TROY. To relieve herself of their importunities, she promised to make a choice of one as soon as she had finished a shroud for her father-in-law. Every night she unravelled what she had done in the day, and so deferred making any choice until Ulysses returned and slew the suitors.

Penetralia (pen e trā'li à) (Lat., the innermost parts). The private rooms of a house; the secrets of a family. Properly, the part of a Roman TEMPLE to which the priest alone had access, where the sacred images were housed, the responses of the ORACLES made, and the sacred mysteries performed. The HOLY of HOLIES was the penetralia of the Jewish Temple.

Penguin. The name of this flightless bird is applied to a training aircraft used on the ground; also, jocularly, to a member of the Women's Royal Air Force, a "flapper" who does not fly. Cp. KIWI.

Penitential Psalms. The seven psalms expressive of contrition (vi, xxxii, xxxviii, li, cii, cxxx, cxliii). From time immemorial they have all been used at the ASH WEDNESDAY services; the first three at MATINS, the 51st at the Communion, and the last three at Evensong.

Pennsylvania Dutch (Ger. Deutsch, German). The name given to the German settlers in Pennsylvania who first began to arrive in 1683 and whose immigration was actively promoted by William Penn. A steady influx continued through much of the 18th century—in some parts a German patois is still spoken—and the influence of their culture and industry has been notable. See MENNONITES; TUNKERS.

Penny (O.E. pening). The English coin, before decimalization worth one-twelfth of a shilling, was originally made of silver and was used by the Anglo-Saxons. The first English copper penny was made in 1797 by Boulton at the Soho Mint, Birmingham, hence a copper as a common synonym for a penny. A few silver pennies are still coined as MAUNDY MONEY, but they were last struck for general circulation in the reign of Charles II. In 1860 bronze coins were substituted for copper. A few gold pennies (worth 20 silver pennies) were struck in the reign of Henry III.

The plural pennies is used of the number of coins and pence of the value. A penny is sometimes used to denote low-value coins of other nations, such as in Luke xx, 24, where it stands for the Roman denarius from which the symbol d for a penny is derived. (See also P.)

A penny for your thoughts! Tell me what you are thinking about. Addressed humorously to one in a BROWN STUDY. The phrase occurs in Heywood's Proverbs (1546).

A penny saved is a penny gained, or earned, etc. An old adage intended to encourage thrift in the young.

A pretty penny. A considerable sum of money, an unpleasantly large sum.

He has got his pennyworth. He has got good value for his money; sometimes said of one who has received a good drubbing.

In for a penny, in for a pound. Once involved the matter must be carried through whatever obstacles or difficulties may arise—there can be no drawing back.

In penny numbers. In small amounts, or little by little. From the stories eked out in serial form in the penny periodicals of former days.

No penny, no paternoster. No pay, no work; you'll get nothing for nothing. The allusion is to pre-REFORMATION days, when priests would not perform services without payment.

Not a penny to bless himself with. A variant of, "He has not a sixpence to bless himself with." See BLESS.

Penny plain, twopence coloured. A phrase originating in the shop of a maker of toy theatres in East London. The scenery and characters for the plays to be "acted" were printed on sheets of thick paper ready to be cut out, these being sold at 1d. if plain, 2d. if coloured.

Penny wise and pound foolish. Said of one who is in danger of "spoiling the ship for a ha'porth of tar". One who is thrifty in small matters and careless over large ones is said to be penny wise.

Take care of the pence and the pounds will take care of themselves. An excellent piece of advice, which Chesterfield records in his Letter to his son (5 February 1750) as having been given by "old Mr. Lowndes, the famous Secretary of the Treasury, in the reigns of King William, Queen Anne, and George I". Chesterfield adds:

To this maxim, which he not only preached, but practised, his two grandsons at this time, owe the very considerable fortunes that he left them.

The saying was parodied in the Advice to a Poet, which goes, "Take care of the sense and the sounds will take care of themselves."

To turn an honest penny. To earn an honest penny by working for it.

Penny-a-liner. The old name for a contributor to the newspapers who was not on the staff and was paid a penny a line. As it was in his interest to "pad" as much as possible, the word is still used in a contemptuous way for a second-rate writer or newspaper HACK.

Penny-dreadful, or -horrible. A cheap boy's paper full of crude situations and highly coloured excitement. Still used of such trashy periodicals although they are no longer available for a penny. A "shilling shocker" was a similar but more expensive publication.

A penny-father. A miser, a penurious person who "husbands" his pence.

To nothing fitter can I thee compare
Than to the son of some rich penny-father,
Who having now brought on his end with care,
Leaves to his son all he had heap'd together.

DRAYTON: Idea, X, i.

Penny farthing. The nickname of what was also called the "ordinary" bicycle that came into vogue in 1872; the front wheel being sometimes as much as 5 ft. in diameter, while the rear was only 12 in., hence the name. The drive was directly on the front wheel, the seat being directly above it and slightly back from the perpendicular of the axle. The "Safety" bicycle, much on the lines of the usual cycle of today, was introduced in 1885.

Penny fish. A name given to the JOHN DORY because of the round spots on each side left by St. PETER'S FINGERS.

Penny gaff. A concert or crude music-hall entertainment for which the entrance charge was one penny. See GAFF.

Penny-leaf. A country name for the navelwort or wall pennywort (Cotyledon umbilicus), from its round leaves.

Penny-pies. A name given to the moneywort (Sibthorpia europæa), and to the PENNY-LEAF.

Penny readings. Parochial entertainments consisting of readings, music, etc., for which one penny admission was charged.

Penny weddings. Weddings formerly in vogue among the poor in SCOTLAND and WALES at which each guest paid a small sum of money not exceeding a shilling. After defraying expenses, the residue went to the newly-weds to aid in furnishing their home.

Vera true, vera true. We'll have a' to pay . . . a sort of penny-wedding it will prove, where all men contribute to the young folk's maintenance.

SCOTT: The Fortunes of Nigel, xxvii.

Pennyroyal. A species of mint (Mentha pulegium). It is a corruption of pulyole ryale, from Lat. pulegium, thyme (so called from pulex, a flea, because it was supposed to be harmful to fleas), and Anglo-French real, royal. The French call the herb pouliot, from pou, a flea.

Pennyweight. 24 grains, i.e. one-hundred-and-fortieth of a pound TROY; so called because it was formerly the same proportion of the old TOWER POUND (i.e. 22½ grains), which was the exact weight of a new silver penny. The abbreviation is dwt., denarius weight. Cp. PENNY.

Pension. Etymologically, that which is weighed out (Lat. pensionem, payment; from pendere, to weigh; also to pay, because payment was originally weighed out. Cp. our pound, both a weight and a piece of money).

Pension, a boarding house (to live en pension, i.e. as a boarder), though now pronounced and treated as French (pon si on), was, in the 17th century, ordinary English; this use arose because pension was the term for any regular payment made for services rendered such as for board and lodging.

Pensioner. The counterpart at Cambridge of the Oxford COMMONER, i.e. one who pays for his own commons.

At the INNS OF COURT, the pensioner is the officer who collects the periodical payments made by the members for the upkeep of the Inn.

Gentlemen Pensioners. The old name for the members of the Honourable Corps of GENTLEMEN AT ARMS.

The Pensioner, or Pensionary Parliament. The LONG PARLIAMENT or CAVALIER PARLIAMENT of Charles II (1661-1679), so called from the bribes or pensions accepted by many of its members.

Pentacle. A five-pointed star, or five-sided figure, used in sorcery as a TALISMAN against WITCHES, etc., and sometimes worn as a folded headdress of fine linen, as a defence against demons in the act of conjuration. It is also called the Wizard's Foot, and is supposed to typify the five senses, though as it resolves itself into three triangles, its efficacy may spring from its being a triple symbol of the TRINITY.

It is also a candlestick with five branches. Cp. SOLOMON'S SEAL.

And on her head, lest spirits should invade,
A pentacle, for more assurance, laid.

ROSE: Orlando Furioso, III, xxi.

Pentagon

The Holy Pentacles numbered forty-four, of which seven were consecrated to each of the planets SATURN, JUPITER, MARS, and the SUN; five to both VENUS and MERCURY; and six to the MOON. The divers figures were enclosed in a double circle, containing the name of God in Hebrew, and other mystical words.

Pentagon. A vast five-sided building erected in Washington, D.C., to house government officials. It now houses the U.S. Department of Defense, and the word Pentagon is a synonym for the official American attitude in military matters.

Pentameron. A collection of fifty folk tales modelled on the DECAMERON and written in the Neapolitan dialect by Giambattista Basile (c. 1575-1632) and first published at Naples in 1637. The stories were supposed to have been told by ten old women during five days, to a Moorish slave who had taken the place of the true princess.

The Pentameron (1837) of Walter Savage Landor (1775-1864) was a collection of five long imaginary conversations.

Pentameter (pen tām' e tēr). In prosody, a line of five feet, DACTYLS or SPONDEES divided by a cæsure into two parts of two-and-a-half feet each—the line used in alternation with the HEXAMETER in Latin elegiac verse. The name is sometimes wrongly applied to the English five-foot IAMBIC line.

In the hexameter rises the fountain's silvery column,

In the pentameter aye falling in melody back.

COLERIDGE: Example of Elegiac Metre.

Pentateuch (pen' ta tūk). The first five books of the Old Testament, anciently attributed to MOSES (Gr. penta, five; teuchos, a tool, book).

The Samaritan Pentateuch. The Hebrew text of the Pentateuch as preserved by the Samaritans; said to date from the 4th century B.C.

Pentathlon. An athletic contest of five events, usually the jump, javelin throw, 200-metre race, discus throw, and 1,500-metre flat race. In the ancient OLYMPIC GAMES the contest consisted of running, jumping, throwing the discus and javelin, and wrestling.

Pentecost (Gr. pentecoste, fiftieth). The festival held by the Jews on the fiftieth day after the second day of the PASSOVER; our WHIT SUNDAY.

Pentecostal Churches. PROTESTANT sects associated with manifestations of the gift of tongues such as had occurred at PENTECOST (see Acts ii, 1-4), and evangelical and healing campaigns.

Pentecostals. In mediæval England, offerings made to the parish priest at WHITSUNTIDE were called Pentecostals, or Whitsun-farthings. The term is also used of offerings paid by the parish church to the cathedral of the diocese. Cp. DOWELLING MONEY; PETER'S PENCE; SMOKE-FARTHINGS.

Penthesilea. Queen of the AMAZONS who, in the post-Homeric legends, fought for TROY; she was slain by ACHILLES. Hence any strong, commanding woman. Sir Toby Belch in SHAKESPEARE'S Twelfth Night (II, iii) calls Maria by this name.

Peony. According to fable, so called from Pæon, the physician who cured the wounds received by the gods in the Trojan war. The seeds were, at one time, worn round the neck as a charm against the powers of darkness.

About an Infant's neck hang Peonie,
It cures Alcydes cruell maladie.

SYLVESTER: Du Bartas, I, iii, 712.

People. Chosen People. The Israelites, the Jews.

The good, or little people. FAIRIES, ELVES, etc.

People of God. See SHAKERS.

People's Charter. See CHARTISM.

Pepin the Short. See SHORT.

Pepper. To pepper one well. To give one a good basting or thrashing.

To take pepper i' the nose. To take offence. The French say, La moutarde lui monte au nez.

Take your pepper in the nose, you mar our sport.
MIDDLETON: The Spanish Gypsy, IV, iii.

When your daughter is stolen, close

Pepper Gate. The equivalent of "locking the stable door when the horse has bolted". Pepper Gate used to be on the east side of the city of Chester. It is said that the mayor's daughter eloped and the mayor ordered the gate to be shut.

Pepper-and-salt. A cloth mixture of light and dark wools making a pattern of light and dark dots.

Peppercorn rent. A nominal rent. A peppercorn is of very slight value and is a token rental; virtually free possession without the ownership of the freehold.

Cowper makes a figurative use of the custom.

True. While they live, the courtly laureate pays
His quit-rent ode, his pepper-corn of praise.

Table-talk, 110.

Pepperpot. A stew of tripe, dumplings, and vegetables originating in Philadelphia; also a celebrated West Indian dish of cassareep, fish, vegetables (chiefly the unripe pods of the okra) and chillies.

Per contra (Lat.). A commercial term for "on the opposite side of the account". Used also of arguments, etc.

Per saltum (Lat., by a leap). A promotion or degree given without going through the usual stages; as the ordination of a man to the priesthood who is not yet a deacon. Such ordinations, now prohibited, were common in earlier times.

For the same reason, those that are advanced by degrees are less envied than those that are advanced suddenly, and "per saltum".

BACON: Essays (Of Envy).

Perambulator. A wooden wheel which, when pushed along by a man on foot, records exactly the distance traversed. Such apparatuses were used by the employees of John Cary in the production of the first accurate Itinerary of the Great Roads of England and Wales (1798). The name, usually abbreviated "pram", has been attached to the vehicle in which babies are taken for walks.

Perceforest (pêrs' for est). An early 14th-century French prose romance (said to be the longest in existence), belonging to the Arthurian cycle, but mingling with it the ALEXANDER romance. After Alexander's war in India, he comes to England, of which he makes Perceforest, one of his knights, king. The romance tells how Perceforest establishes the Knights of the Franc Palais, how his grandson brings the GRAIL to England, and includes many popular tales, such as that of the SLEEPING BEAUTY.

Percival, Sir. The Knight of the ROUND TABLE who, according to Malory's Morte d'Arthur (and Tennyson's Idylls of the King) finally won a sight of the Holy GRAIL. He was the son of Sir Pellinore and brother of Sir Lamerocke. In the earlier French romances (based probably on the MABINOGION and other CELTIC originals) he has no connexion with the Grail, but here (as in the English also) he sees the lance dripping with blood, and the severed head surrounded with blood in a dish. The French version of the romance is by Chrétien de Troyes (12th century), which formed the basis of Sebastian Evans's The High History of the Holy Graal (1893). The German version, Parsifal or Parzival, was written some 50 years later by Wolfram von Eschenbach and it is principally on this version that Wagner drew for his opera, Parsifal (1882).

Percy. When Malcolm III of SCOTLAND invaded ENGLAND and reduced the castle of Alnwick, Robert de Mowbray brought to him the keys of the castle suspended on his lance; and handing them from the wall, thrust his lance into the king's eye; from which circumstance, the tradition says, he received the name of "Pierce-eye", which has ever since been borne by the Dukes of Northumberland.

This is all a fable. The Percies are descended from a great Norman baron, who came over with William, and who took his name from his castle and estate in Normandy.

SCOTT: Tales of a Grandfather, iv.

Percy's Reliques. The famous collection of old ballads and poems published as Reliques of Ancient English Poetry by Thomas Percy in 1765. He became Bishop of Dromore in 1782 and died in 1811. He was encouraged in his project by Shennstone, Johnson, Garrick, and others, and Scott acknowledged his debt to Percy's work: "To read and to remember was in this instance the same thing, and henceforth I overwhelmed my schoolfellows, and all who would hearken to me, with tragical recitations from the ballads of Percy."

Perdita. In SHAKESPEARE'S A Winter's Tale, the daughter of Leontes and Hermione of Sicily. She was abandoned by order of her father, and put in a vessel which drifted to "the sea-coast of Bohemia" where the infant was discovered by a shepherd, who brought her up as his own daughter. In time, FLORIZEL, the son and heir of the Bohemian King Polixenes, fell in love with the supposed shepherdess. The match was forbidden by Polixenes and the young lovers fled to Sicily. Here the story is cleared up, and all ends happily in the restoration of Perdita to her parents, and her marriage with Florizel.

Mrs. Robinson, the actress and mistress of George IV when Prince of Wales, was specially successful in the part of Perdita, by which name she came to be known, the Prince being known as Florizel.

Perdrix, toujours perdrix (pâr' drê too zhoor pâr' drê). Too much of the same thing. According to Horace Walpole, the confessor of one of the French kings reproved him for conjugal infidelity, and was asked by the king what he liked best. "Partridge", replied the priest, and the king ordered him to be served with partridge every day, till he quite loathed the sight of his favourite dish. When the king eventually visited him, and hoped he had been well served, the confessor replied, "Mais oui, perdrix, toujours perdrix." "Ah! ah!" replied the amorous monarch, "and one mistress is all very well, but not 'perdrix, toujours perdrix.'"

Soup for dinner, soup for supper, and soup for breakfast again.

FARQUHAR: The Inconstant, V, ii.

Père Lachaise (pâr la shâz). This great Parisian cemetery is on the site of a religious settlement founded by the JESUITS in 1626, and later enlarged by Louis XIV's confessor, Père Lachaise. After the Revolution, the grounds were laid out as a cemetery and were first used in 1804. It was here that the Communards made their last stand in 1871.

Peregrine Falcon. A falcon of wide distribution, formerly held in great esteem for hawking, and so called (13th century) because taken when on passage or peregrination, from the breeding place, instead of straight off the nest, as was the case with most others (Lat. peregrinus, a foreigner, one coming from foreign parts). The hen is the falcon of falconers; the cock the tercel. See HAWK.

The word peregrine was formerly used as synonymous with pilgrim, and (adjectivally) for one travelling about.

Perfect. Perfect number. One of which the sum of all its divisors exactly measures itself, as 6, the divisors of which are 1, 2, 3=6. These are very scarce; indeed, from 1 to 40 million there are only five, viz., 6; 28; 496; 8,128 and 33,550,336.

Perfect rhyme is a rhyme of two words spelled or pronounced alike but with different meanings, as "rain" and "reign", "thyme" and "time".

Perfectibilist. See ILLUMINATI.

Perfectionists. Members of a communistic sect formed by J. H. Noyes (1811-1886) in Vermont about 1834, and removed by him and settled at Oneida, New York, 1847-1848. Its chief features were that the community was held to be one family, mutual criticism and public opinion took the place of government, and wives were—theoretically, at least—held in common, till 1879, when, owing to opposition, this was abandoned. In 1881 the sect, which had prospered exceedingly through its thrift and industry, voluntarily dissolved and was organized as a joint-stock company.

Perfume means simply "from smoke" (Lat. per fumum), the first perfumes having been obtained by the combustion of aromatic woods and gums. Their original use was in sacrifices to counteract the offensive odours of burning flesh.

Peri (pê' ri). Originally, a beautiful but malevolent sprite of Persian myth, one of a class which was responsible for comets, eclipses, failure of crops, etc.: in later times applied to delicate, gentle, fairy-like beings, begotten by fallen spirits who direct with a wand the pure in mind the way to HEAVEN. These lovely creatures, according to the KORAN, are under the sovereignty of EBLIS; and MOHAMMED was sent for their conversion, as well as for that of man.

The name used sometimes to be applied to any beautiful girl.

Paradise and the Peri. The second tale in Moore's Lalla Rookh. The Peri laments her expulsion from HEAVEN, and is told she will be readmitted if she will bring to the gate of heaven the "gift most dear to the Almighty". After a number of unavailing offerings she brought a guilty old man, who wept with repentance, and knelt to pray. The Peri offered the Repentant Tear, and the gates flew open.

Perillus and the Brazen Bull. See under INVENTORS.

Perilous Castle. The castle of "the good" Lord Douglas was so called in the reign of Edward I, because DOUGLAS destroyed several English garrisons stationed there, and vowed to be revenged on anyone who should dare to take possession of it. Scott calls it "Castle Dangerous" (see Introduction of Castle Dangerous).

Peripatetic School (per i pâ tet' ik). The school or system of philosophy founded by ARISTOTLE, who used to walk about (Gr. peri, about; patein, to walk) as he taught his disciples in the covered walk of the Lyceum. This colonnade was called the peripatos.

Periphrasis (pe rif' râ sis). The rhetorical term for using more words than are necessary in an explanation or description. A fair example is: "Persons prejudicial to the public peace may be assigned by administrative process to definite places of residence", i.e. breakers of the law may be sent to gaol.

Perish the thought! Do not entertain such an idea for a moment! A quotation from Colley Cibber's version of SHAKESPEARE'S Richard III, V, v.

Periwinkle. The plant name is from Lat. pervinca, to bind around. It is a trailing plant. In Italy it used to be wreathed round dead infants and was thus called fiore di morto.

The sea-snail of this name was called in O.E. pinewinkle, the first syllable probably being cognate with Lat. pina, a mussel, and winkle from O.E. wincel, a corner, with reference to its much convoluted shell.

Perk. Possibly allied to perch; also, in the plural, a contraction of "perquisites".

To perk up. To get more lively, to feel better.

Permissive Society. A term widely used in Britain in the 1960s to denote the increasingly tolerant and liberal attitudes in society which tend to blur the distinctions between right and wrong. Gambling clubs, strip clubs, the legalizing of homosexual practices between "consenting adults", and the growing use of "bad language" and obscenities in publications and in the theatre are all evidences. The borderline between permissiveness and decadence is not always apparent. See AVANT GARDE; NEW MORALITY.

There is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, II, ii.

Perpetual Motion. The term applied to some theoretical force that will move a machine for ever of itself—a mirage which holds attractions for some minds much as did the search for the PHILOSOPHER'S STONE, the ELIXIR OF LIFE, and the FOUNTAIN OF (perpetual) YOUTH. According to the laws of thermodynamics it is impossible.

Persecutions, The Ten Great. According to Orosius: (1) under Nero, A.D. 64; (2) Domitian, 95; (3) Trajan, 98-117; (4) Marcus Aurelius, 177; (5) Septimius Severus, 193-211; (6) Maximinus Thrax, 235; (7) Decius, 250; (8) Valerian, 258; (9) Aurelian, 272; (10) Diocletian, 303-305. In fact neither Trajan nor Severus were active persecutors.

These were all persecutions of Christians, but Christians have persecuted each other before they slowly learned toleration. See ALBIGENSES; BARTHOLOMEW, MASSACRE OF ST.; DRAGONNADES; HUGUENOT; INQUISITION; WALDENSIANS; etc.

Jews, particularly, have suffered persecution for religious and other reasons, the worst of all being perpetrated by the NAZI régime, when possibly some 10 million were exterminated. Political persecutions have been common through the ages and in modern times totalitarian and Communist countries have relied on this weapon.

Persephone. See PROSERPINA.

Persepolis. The capital of the ancient Persian empire. It was situated some 35 miles N.E. of Shiraz. The palaces and other public buildings were some miles from the city and were approached by magnificent flights of steps.

Perseus. In Greek legend, the son of JUPITER and DANAË. He and his mother were set adrift in a chest but rescued by the intervention of Jupiter. He was brought up by King Polydectes, who, wishing to secure DANAË, got rid of him by encouraging him in the almost hopeless task of obtaining the head of the MEDUSA. With the help of the gods, he was successful, and with the head (which turned all that looked on it into stone) he rescued ANDROMEDA, and later metamorphosed Polydectes and his guests to stone.

Before his birth, an ORACLE had foretold that Acrisius, father of Danaë, would be slain by Danaë's son (hence his being originally cast adrift to perish). This came to pass, for while taking part in the games at Larissa, Perseus accidentally slew his grandfather with a discus.

Person. From Lat. persona, which meant originally a mask worn by actors (perhaps from per sonare, to sound through), and later transferred to the character or personage represented by the actor (cp. our dramatis personæ), and so to any definite character, at which stage the word was adopted in English through O. Fr. persone.

Confounding the Persons. The heresy of Sabellius (see SABELLIANISM), who declared that Father, Son, and Holy Ghost were but three names, aspects, or manifestations of one God, the orthodox doctrine being that of the ATHANASIAN CREED:

We worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity; Neither confounding the Persons, nor dividing the Substance (Neque confundentes personas, neque substantiam separantes).

Persona grata (Lat.). An acceptable person; one liked. When a diplomatic representative becomes no longer acceptable to the government to which he is accredited he is no longer persona grata, which virtually requests his recall. Persona non grata is the reverse of persona grata.

Perth. The Five Articles of Perth (1618) were imposed on the Church of Scotland by James VI and I, enjoining kneeling at communion; the observance of CHRISTMAS, GOOD FRIDAY, EASTER, and PENTECOST; confirmation; communion for the dying; and early baptism of infants. They were ratified by the Scottish Parliament, 4 August 1621, called BLACK SATURDAY, and condemned by the General Assembly at Glasgow in 1638.

Peru. From China to Peru. From one end of the world to the other; world-wide. Equivalent to the biblical "from Dan to Beersheba". The phrase comes from the opening of Johnson's Vanity of Human Wishes:

Let observation with extensive view
Survey mankind from China to Peru.

Boileau (Sat. viii, 3) had previously written:

De Paris au Pérou, du Japon jusqu'à Rome.

Peruvian Bark, called also Jesuit's Bark, because it was introduced into Spain by the JESUITS. "Quinine", from the same tree, is called by the Indians quinquina. See CINCHONA.

Petard. Hoist with his own petard. Beaten with his own weapons, caught in his own trap; involved in the danger intended for others, as were some designers of instruments of torture. See under INVENTORS. The petard was a thick iron engine of war, filled with gunpowder, and fastened to gates, barricades, etc., to blow them up. The danger was lest the engineer who fired the petard should be blown up by the explosion.

Let it work;
For 'tis sport, to have the engineer
Hoist with his own petard; and it shall go hard
But I will delve one yard below their mines,
And blow them at the moon.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, III, iv.

Pétaud (pā' tō). 'Tis the court of King Pétaud, where everyone is master. There is no order or discipline at all. A French proverb of unknown origin.

Peter, St. The patron saint of fishermen, being himself a fisherman; the "Prince of the APOSTLES". His feast is kept universally on 29 June, and he is usually represented as an old man, bald, but with a flowing beard, dressed in a white mantle and blue tunic, and holding in his hand a book or scroll. His peculiar symbols are the keys, and a sword (Matt. xvi, 19, and John xviii, 10).

Tradition tells that he confuted SIMON MAGUS, who was at NERO's court as a magician, and that in A.D. 65 he was crucified with his head downwards at his own request, as he said he was not worthy to suffer the same death as Our Lord. The location of his bones under the high altar of St. Peter's, ROME, was announced in 1950 and the POPE confirmed their authenticity in 1968.

St. Peter's Fingers. The fingers of a thief. The allusion is to the fish caught by St. Peter with a piece of money in its mouth. It is said that a thief has a fish-hook on every finger.

St. Peter's Fish. The JOHN DORY; also the HADDOCK.

Peter's Pence. An annual tribute of one PENNY, paid at the feast of St. Peter to the see of ROME, collected at first from every family, but afterwards restricted to those "who had the value of thirty pence in quick or live-stock". This tax was collected in England from the late 8th century until its abolition by Henry VIII in 1534. It was also called Rome-Scot, Rome fardynges, or Peter's farthings. Much of it never got as far as Rome. Cp. PENTECOSTALS.

Peter's Pence now consists of voluntary offerings made to the HOLY SEE by Roman Catholics.

Great Peter. A bell in York Minster, weighing 10½ tons, and hung in 1845.

Peter-boat; Peterman. A fishing boat made to go either way, with stem and stern alike. So called from Peterman, an old term for a fisherman.

I hope to live to see dog's meat made of the old usurer's flesh . . . his skin is too thick to make parchment, 'twould make good boots for a peterman to catch salmon in.

CHAPMAN: Eastward Ho, II, ii.

Peterhouse, or St. Peter's College, the oldest of the Cambridge colleges, having been founded in 1284 by Hugo de Basham, Bishop of Ely.

Peter the Hermit (c. 1050-1115). Preacher of the first CRUSADE. He took part in the siege of Antioch (1098) and entered JERUSALEM with the victorious crusaders. He afterwards became Prior of Huy.

Peter Pan. The little boy who never grew up, the central character of Sir J. M. Barrie's famous play of this name (1904). One night Peter entered the nursery window of the house of the Darling family to recover his shadow. He flew back to NEVER NEVER LAND accompanied by the Darling children, to rejoin the Lost Boys. Eventually all were captured by the pirates, except Peter, who secured their release and the defeat of the pirates. The children, by now homesick, flew back to the nursery with their new friends but Peter refused to stay as he did not wish to grow up. In their absence Mr. Darling lived in the dog kennel as penance for having taken NANA away, thus making possible the children's disappearance in the first instance.

Frampton's statue of Peter Pan in Kensington Gardens was placed there by Barrie in 1912.

Peter Pindar. See under PINDAR.

Peter-see-me. A favourite Spanish wine so called in the 17th century. The name is a corruption of Pedro Ximenes, the name of a grower who introduced a special grape.

Peter-see-me shall wash thy noul
And malaga glasses fox thee;
If, poet, thou toss not bowl for bowl
Thou shalt not kiss a doxy.

MIDDLETON: Spanish Gipsy, III.

Peter the Wild Boy. In 1724 a boy was found walking on his hands and feet and climbing trees like a squirrel in a wood near Hameln, Hanover. He was taken to George I, who brought him to England and put him under the care of Dr. Arbuthnot, who had him christened "Peter". He never became articulate and eventually lived with a farmer who equipped him with a brass collar inscribed "Peter the Wild Boy, Broadway Farm, Berkhamstead". On the farmer's death (1785) Peter refused food and soon died.

To peter out. To come gradually to an end, to give out. A phrase from the American mining camps of the 1840s; of unknown origin.

To rob Peter to pay Paul. See ROB.

Peterloo, or the Manchester Massacre. On 16 August 1819 a large crowd (about 50,000 to 60,000) gathered at St. Peter's Field, Manchester, to hear ORATOR HUNT address them on Parliamentary reform, and fearing a riot the magistrates ordered the YEOMANRY to disperse the assembly. Eleven people were killed, including two women, and some 600 injured. Hunt was arrested and given three years' imprisonment. The "massacre" caused great indignation throughout England.

The name was founded on Waterloo, then fresh in the public mind.

Petit Sergeanty. See under SERGEANTY.

Petitio principii (Lat.). A BEGGING OF THE QUESTION, or assuming in the premises the question you undertake to prove. In mediæval logic a principium was an essential, self-evident principle from which particular truths were deducible; the assumption of this principle was the petitio, i.e. begging of it. It is the same as "arguing in a circle".

Petitio Principii, as defined by Archbishop Whately, is the fallacy in which the premise either appears manifestly to be the same as the conclusion, or is actually proved from the conclusion, or is such as would naturally and properly so be proved.

J. S. MILL: System of Logic, II, p. 389.

Petitioners and Abhorrrers. Names given to political groupings in the reign of Charles II, eventually superseded by WHIGS and TORIES. When Charles II prorogued a newly elected Parliament in October 1679, Shaftesbury and the Country Party petitioned the King to summon Parliament. The Court party abhorred this attempt to encroach on the royal prerogative. Hence the names as party labels.

Petrel. The stormy petrel. A small sea-bird (Procellaria pelagica), traditionally so named from Ital. Petrello, little Peter, because during storms these birds seem to be able to fly patting the water with each foot alternately as though walking on it, reminiscent of St. PETER, who walked on the Lake of Gennesareth. Sailors call them MOTHER CAREY'S CHICKENS. The term is used figuratively of one whose coming always portends trouble.

Petticoat Government is control by women, i.e. when women "wear the trousers".

Petticoat Lane. The Sunday street-market, since the 1840s officially called Middlesex Street, and originally known as Hogham Lane, situated between Aldgate and Bishopsgate. It was settled by HUGUENOT silk-weavers, later by Jews, and became a noted centre for second-hand clothes and general goods. It continues as a market for clothes, fruit, toys, cheap jewellery, etc., and is still a popular East End feature.

Petto. In petto. In secrecy, in reserve (Ital., in the breast). The Pope creates cardinals in petto, i.e. in his own mind, and keeps the appointment to himself till he thinks proper to announce it. On the declaration of their names their seniority dates from their appointment in petto. It is claimed that the English historian Lingard was made cardinal in petto by Leo XII, who died before announcing the fact.

Petty Cury (Cambridge) means "The Street of Cooks", from Lat. curare, to cure or dress food. It is called Parva Cokeria in a deed dated 13 Edward III. Probably at one time it was part of the Market Hall.

Peutingerian Table. A map on parchment of the military roads of the Western Roman Empire supposed to be a copy of one made in the 3rd century A.D. This copy was found by Konrad Celtes in 1494, who bequeathed it to his friend Konrad Peutinger (1465-1547) of Augsburg.

Pewter. To scour the pewter. To do one's work.

But if she neatly scour her pewter,
Give her the money that is due t'her.
KING: Orpheus and Eurydice.

Pfister's Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Phædra (fē' drà). Daughter of MINOS and PASIPHÆ, who became enamoured of her stepson HIPPOLYTUS. On her rejection by him she brought about his death by slandering him to her husband THESEUS. She subsequently killed herself in remorse. See MYRTLE.

Phædrus (fē' drūs). A freedman of AUGUSTUS, who, in the reign of Tiberius, translated ÆSOP'S FABLES into Latin verse, interspersing them with anecdotes of his own. A prose version of his work, written about the 10th century, served as a model for the mediæval fabulists.

Phaeton (fā' tòn). In classical myth, the son of PHŒBUS (the Sun); he undertook to drive his father's chariot, and was upset and thereby caused Libya to be parched into barren sands, and all Africa to be more or less injured, the inhabitants blackened, and vegetation nearly destroyed, and would have set the world on fire had not ZEUS transfixed him with a thunderbolt.

Gallop apace, you fiery-footed steeds,
Towards Phœbus' lodging; such a waggoner
As Phaeton would whip you to the west,
And bring in cloudy night immediately.
SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, III, ii.

The name was given to a light, four-wheeled open carriage usually drawn by two horses.

Phaeton's Bird. The swan. Cygnus, son of NEPTUNE, was the friend of PHAETON and lamented his fate so grievously that APOLLO changed him into a swan, and placed him among the constellations.

Phalanx (fāl' āngks). The close order of battle in which the heavy-armed troops of a Grecian army were usually drawn up. Hence, any number of people distinguished for firmness and solidity of union.

Phalaris (fāl' a ris). The brazen bull of Phalaris. See under INVENTORS.

The Epistles of Phalaris. A series of 148 letters said to have been written by Phalaris, Tyrant of Agrigentum, Sicily, in the 6th century B.C. and edited by Charles Boyle in 1695. Boyle maintained them to be genuine, but Richard Bentley, applying methods of historical criticism, proved that they were forgeries, probably of the 2nd century A.D. See BOYLE CONTROVERSY.

Phantom. A spirit or apparition, an illusory appearance; from M.E. and O.Fr. fantosme, Gr. phantasma (phanein, to show).

Phantom corn. The mere ghost of corn; corn that has as little body as a spectre.

Phantom fellow. One who is under the ban of some HOBGOBLIN; a half-witted person.

Phantom flesh. Flesh that hangs loose and flabby; formerly supposed to be bewitched.

The Phantom Ship. The FLYING DUTCHMAN.

Pharamond (fâr' à mond). In the ARTHURIAN ROMANCES, a KNIGHT of the ROUND TABLE, said to have been the first king of France and to have reigned in the early 5th century. He was the son of Marcomir and father of Clodion.

La Calprenède's novel Pharamond, ou l'Histoire de France was published in 1661.

Pharaoh (fâr' ô). An expression meaning the "great house", applied to the kings of ancient Egypt in much the same way as "the HOLY SEE" came to be used for the Pope, or "the Sublime PORTE" for the government of the Sultan of Turkey. Its popular use stems from the BIBLE but its use as a term for the King of Egypt begins during the 18th dynasty with Akhnaton. In hieroglyphics the old usage of four or five titles persisted.

The Pharaohs of the Bible are mostly not identifiable owing to vagueness of reference and absence of reliable chronological data, but the Pharaoh of the Oppression is usually taken to be Ramses II of the 19th dynasty, and his son Merenptah, the Pharaoh of the Exodus.

According to the TALMUD, the name of Pharaoh's daughter who brought up MOSES was Bathia.

In Dryden and Tate's Absalom and Achitophel, "Pharaoh" stands for Louis XIV of France.

Pharaoh's chicken, or hen. The Egyptian vulture, so called from its frequent representation in Egyptian HIEROGLYPHS.

Pharaoh's corn. The grains of wheat sometimes found in mummy cases. Cp. MUMMY WHEAT.

Pharaoh's rat. See ICHNEUMON.

Pharaoh's serpent. A chemical toy consisting of sulpho-cyanide of mercury, which fuses into a serpentine shape when lighted; so called in allusion to the magic serpents of Exod. vii, 9-12.

Pharisees (fâr' i sēs) (Heb. perusim; from perash, to separate) means "those who have been set apart". The Jewish party of this name first appeared in Judea in the reign of John Hyrcanus I (135-104 B.C.) and strove to ensure that the state was governed in strict accordance with the TORAH. Their influence in the development of orthodox Judaism was profound. The condemnations of Jesus were essentially against the more extremist followers of the Pharisee Shammai, who were open to charges of narrow literalism and hypocrisy. The TALMUD mentions the following groups:

(1) The "Dashers" or "Bandy-legged" (Nikfi), who scarcely lifted their feet from the ground in walking, but "dashed them against the stones", that people might think them absorbed in holy thought (Matt. xxi, 44).

(2) The "Mortars", who wore a "mortier" or cap, which would not allow them to see the passers-by, that their meditations might not be disturbed. "Having eyes they saw not" (Mark, viii, 18).

(3) The "Bleeders", who inserted thorns in the borders of their gaberdines to prick their legs in walking.

(4) The "Cryers", or "Inquirers", who went about crying out, "Let me know my duty, and I will do it" (Matt. xix, 16-22).

(5) The "Almsgivers", who had a trumpet sounded before them to summon the poor together (Matt., vi, 2).

(6) The "Stumblers", or "Bloody-browed" (Kizai), who shut their eyes when they went abroad that they might see no women, being "blind leaders of the blind" (Matt. xv, 14). Our Lord calls them "blind Pharisees", "fools and blind".

(7) The "Immovables", who stood like statues for hours together, "praying in the market places" (Matt. vi, 5).

(8) The "Pestle Pharisees" (Medinkia), who kept themselves bent double like the handle of a pestle.

(9) The "Strong-shouldered" (Shikmi), who walked with their back bent as if carrying on their shoulders the whole burden of the law.

(10) The "Dyed Pharisees", called by Our Lord "Whited Sepulchres", whose externals of devotion cloaked hypocrisy and moral uncleanness. (Talmud of Jerusalem, Berakoth, ix; Sota, v, 7; Talmud of Babylon, Sota, 22b.)

Pharos (fâr' os). A lighthouse; so called from the lighthouse (see SEVEN WONDERS OF THE WORLD under WONDER) built by Ptolemy Philadelphus on the island of Pharos, off Alexandria, Egypt. It was 450 ft. high, and according to JOSEPHUS could be seen at a distance of 42 miles. Part was blown down in 793 and it was totally destroyed by an earthquake in 1375.

Pharsalia (far sâ' lia). An epic in Latin hexameters by Lucan. It tells of the civil war between Pompey and CÆSAR, and of the battle of Pharsalus (48 B.C.) in which Pompey, with 45,000 legionaries, 7,000 cavalry, and a large number of auxiliaries, was decisively defeated by Cæsar, who had only 22,000 legionaries and 1,000 cavalry. Pompey's battle-cry was Hercules invictus; that of Cæsar, Venus victrix.

Phasian Bird. The pheasant (Phasianus colchicus); so called from Phasis, a river of Colchis, whence the bird is said to have been introduced elsewhere in Europe by the ARGONAUTS.

Phedippides. See MARATHON.

Phigalian Marbles (fi gâ' li ân). A series of 23 sculptures in ALTO-RELIEVO, forming part of the ELGIN MARBLES. They were removed from the temple of APOLLO at Bassæ, near Phigalia, in 1812, and represent the combat of the CENTAURS and the LAPITHÆ, and that of the Greeks and AMAZONS.

Philadelphia (fil à del' fi à). The first city of the State of Pennsylvania, founded in 1682 by William Penn (1644-1718) and others of the SOCIETY OF FRIENDS, and so named from the Greek philadelphia, brotherly love. It was also the name of an ancient city in eastern Palestine, the seat of one of the SEVEN CHURCHES (Rev. iii, 7).

Philadelphia lawyer. A lawyer of outstanding ability, with a keen scent for the weaknesses in an adversary's case, and a thorough knowledge of the intricacies of the law. "You will have to get a Philadelphia lawyer to solve that" is a familiar American phrase. It is said that in 1735, in a case of criminal libel, the only counsel who would undertake the defence was Andrew Hamilton, the famous Philadelphia barrister, who obtained his client's acquittal in face of apparently irrefutable evidence, and charged no fee. In NEW ENGLAND there was a saying that three Philadelphia lawyers were a match for the DEVIL.

Philadelphists. See BEHMENTISTS.

Philandering (fi lan' der ing). Coquetting with a woman; paying court, and leading her to think you love her, but never declaring your preference. Philander literally means "a lover of men" (Gr. philos, loving; andros, man), but as the word was made into a proper noun and used for a lover by Ariosto in ORLANDO FURIOSO (followed by Beaumont and Fletcher in The Laws of Candy), it obtained its present significance. In Norton and Sackville's GORBODUC (1561), Philander is the name of a staid old counsellor.

Philemon and Baucis. Poor cottagers of Phrygia (husband and wife), who, in Ovid's story (Metamorphoses, viii, 631), entertained JUPITER and MERCURY, in the guise of travellers, so hospitably that Jupiter transformed their cottage into a TEMPLE, making them its priest and priestess. They asked that they might both die together, and it was so. Philemon became an oak, Baucis a linden tree, and their branches intertwined at the top.

Philip, St., is usually represented bearing a large CROSS, or a basket containing loaves, in allusion to John vi, 5-7. He is commemorated with St. JAMES THE LESS on 3 May.

Philip, remember thou art mortal. A sentence repeated to the Macedonian king every time he gave an audience.

Philip sober. When a woman who asked Philip of Macedon to do her justice was snubbed by the petulant monarch, she exclaimed, "Philip, I shall appeal against this judgment." "Appeal!" thundered the enraged king, "and to whom will you appeal?" "To Philip sober", was her reply.

Philippe Égalité. See ÉGALITÉ.

Philippic. A severe scolding; a speech full of acrimonious invective. So called from the orations of Demosthenes against Philip of Macedon, to rouse the Athenians to resist his encroachments. The orations of CICERO against Antony are called "Philippics".

Philistines. Properly, a warlike immigrant people of ancient Palestine or Philistia who contested its possession with the Israelites, hence a heathen foe. Its application to the ill-behaved and ignorant, those lacking culture and sensibility or of base and materialistic outlooks, stems from the term Philister as used by German university students to denote the townspeople, the "outsiders". This is said to have arisen at Jena, because of a TOWN AND GOWN row in 1693, which resulted in a number of deaths, when the university preacher took for his text, "The Philistines be upon thee" (Judges xvi, 12). Its use was much popularized in England by Matthew Arnold's frequent employment of the term in his Culture and Anarchy (1869).

The people who believe most that our greatness and welfare are proved by our being very rich, and who most give their lives and thoughts to becoming rich, are just the very people whom we call Philistines.

Culture and Anarchy, ch. i.

Philoctetes. The most famous archer in the TROJAN WAR, to whom HERCULES, at death, gave his arrows. In the tenth year of the siege ULYSSES commanded that he should be sent for, as an ORACLE had declared that TROY could not be taken without the arrows of Hercules. Philoctetes accordingly went to Troy, slew PARIS, and Troy fell.

The Philoctetes of Sophocles is one of the most famous Greek tragedies.

Philomel. See NIGHTINGALE.

Philopena. From the German Vielliebchen, darling, sweetheart. A philopena is a double almond.

One evening we invited him to dine at our table, and we ate a philopena together.

MRS. MACKIN: Two Continents (1898).

The word is also applied to a game in which each of two persons tries to inveigle the other into paying a forfeit.

Philosopher. The sages of Greece used to be called sophoi (wisemen), but PYTHAGORAS thought the word too arrogant, and adopted the compound philosophie (lover of wisdom), whence "philosopher", one who courts or loves wisdom.

Marcus Aurelius (121-180) was surnamed The Philosopher by Justin Martyr, and the name was also conferred on Leo VI, Emperor of the East (d. 911), and Porphyry, the Neoplatonic opponent of Christianity (d. c. 305).

The leading philosophers and Schools of Philosophy in Ancient Greece were:

Philosophers of the Academic sect.

PLATO, Speusippos, Xenocrates (see XENOCRATIC), Polemo, Crates of Athens, Crantor, Arcesilaos, Carneades, Clitomachos, Philo, and Antiochos.

Philosophers of the Cynic sect. ANTISTHENES, DIOGENES of Sinope, Monimos, Onesicritus, Crates of Thebes, Metrocles, Hipparchia, MENIPPUS, and Menedemos of Lampsacos.

Philosophers of the Cyrenaic sect. Aristippos, Hegesias, Anniceris, Theodoros, and Bion.

Philosophers of the Eleac and Eretriac sects. Phædo, Plisthenes, and Menedemos of Eretria.

Philosophers of the Eleatic sect. Xenophanes, Parmenides, Melissos, ZENO of Tarsos, Leucippos, DEMOCRITUS, Protagoras, and Anaxarchos.

Philosophers of the Epicurean sect. EPICURUS, and a host of disciples.

Philosophers of the Heraclitan sect. Heraclitus; the names of his disciples are unknown.

Philosophers of the Ionic sect. Anaximander, Anaximenes, Anaxagoras, and Archelaos.

Philosophers of the Italic sect. PYTHAGORAS, EMPEDOCLES, Epicharmos, Archytas, Alcmaëon, Hippasos, Philolaos, and Eudoxos.

Philosophers of the Megaric sect. EUCLID, Eubulides, Alexinos, Euphantos, Apollonius Chronosis, Diodorus, Ichthyas, Clinomachos, and Stilpo.

Philosophers of the Peripatetic sect. ARISTOTLE, Theophrastos, Strato, Lyco, Aristoxenus, Critolaos and Diodoros.

Philosophers of the Sceptic sect. Pyrrho (see PYRRHONISM) and Timon.

Philosophers of the Socratic sect. SOCRATES, Xenophon, Æschines, Crito, Simon, Glauco, Simmias, and Cebes.

Philosophers of the Stoic sect. ZENO, Cleanthes, CHRYSIPPUS, Zeno the Less, Diogenes of Babylon, Antipater, Panætios, Epictetus, Marcus Aurelius, and Posidonios.

Philosopher's Egg. A mediæval preservative against poison and a cure for the plague. The shell of a new egg was pricked, the white blown out, and the place filled with saffron or a yolk of an egg mixed with saffron.

Philosophers' Stone. The hypothetical substance which, according to the alchemists, would convert all baser metals into GOLD; by many it was thought to be compounded of the purest sulphur and mercury. Mediæval experimenters toiled endlessly in the search, thus laying the foundations of the science of chemistry, among other inventions. It was in this quest that Böttcher stumbled on the manufacture of DRESDEN porcelain, Roger Bacon on the composition of gunpowder, Geber on the properties of acids, Van Helmont on the nature of gas, and Dr. GLAUBER on the "salts" which which bear his name.

In Ripley's treatise, The Compound of Alchemie (c. 1471), we are told the 12 stages or "gates" in the transmutation of metals are: (1) Calcination; (2) Dissolution; (3) Separation; (4) Conjunction; (5) Putrefaction; (6) Congelation; (7) Cibation; (8) Sublimation; (9) Fermentation; (10) Exaltation; (11) Multiplication; and (12) Projection. Of these the last two were much the most important; the former consisting of the ELIXIR, the latter in the penetration and transfiguration of metals in fusion by casting the powder of the philosopher's stone upon them, which is then called the "powder of projection". According to one legend, Noah was commanded to hang up the true philosophers' stone in the ark, to give light to every living creature therein; while another related that DEUCALION had it in a bag over his shoulder, but threw it away and lost it. Cp. ALKAHEST; PARACELSUS.

Philosopher's Tree, or Diana's Tree. An amalgam of crystallized SILVER, obtained from mercury in a solution of silver; so called by the alchemists, with whom DIANA stood for silver.

Philter (Gr. philtron; from philein, to love). A draught or charm to incite in another the passion of love. The Thessalian philters were the most renowned, but both Greek and Romans used these dangerous potions, which sometimes produced insanity. Lucretius is said to have been driven mad by one, and CALIGULA's death is attributed to some philters administered by his wife, Cæsonia. Brabantio says to Othello:

Thou has practised on her [Desdemona] with foul charms,
Abused her delicate youth with drugs or minerals
That weaken motion.

SHAKESPEARE: Othello, I, ii.

Phiz, the face, is a contraction of physiognomy.

Th' emphatic speaker dearly loves t' oppose
In contact inconvenient, nose to nose,
As if the gnomon on his neighbour's phiz,
Touch'd with a magnet, had attracted his.

COWPER: Conversation, 269.

Phiz was the pseudonym of Hablot K. Browne, illustrator of many of Dickens's novels.

Phlegethon (Gr. phlego, to burn). A river of liquid fire in HADES, flowing into the ACHERON.

Fierce Phlegethon,
Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, II, 580.

Phlogiston (flō jis' ton) (Gr., "combustible"). The inflammable substance that was supposed to be a constituent of all combustible material. A theory introduced by the German chemist Georg Ernst Stahl in 1702, and which held sway until the time when Lavoisier replaced it by the theory of oxygenation in the 1770s.

Phœbe (fē' bi). A female TITAN of classical myth, daughter of URANUS and GÆA; also a name of DIANA, as goddess of the MOON.

Phœbus (Gr., the Shining One). An epithet of APOLLO, god of the SUN. In poetry the name is sometimes used of the sun itself, sometimes of Apollo as leader of the MUSES.

The Rosy Morne long since left Tithones bed,
All ready to her silver coche to clyme;
And Phæbus gins to shew his glorious hed.

SPENSER: Epithalamion.

Phœnix (fē' niks). A fabulous Egyptian (Arabian, or Indian, etc.) bird, the only one of its kind, according to Greek legend said to live a certain number of years, at the close of which it makes in Egypt (or ARABIA, etc.) a nest of spices, sings a melodious dirge, flaps its wings to set fire to the pile, burns itself to ashes, and comes forth with new life. It is to this bird that SHAKESPEARE refers in Cymbeline (I, vi):

If she be furnished with a mind so rare,
She is alone the Arabian bird.

The Phoenix and Turtle (attributed to Shakespeare) is based on the legendary love and death of this bird and the turtle-dove.

The phoenix was adopted as a sign over chemists' shops through the association of this fabulous bird with ALCHEMY. PARACELUS wrote about it, and several of the alchemists employed it to symbolize their vocation.

The phoenix is also a symbol of the Resurrection.

Phœnix, the son of Amyntor king of Argos, was tutor to ACHILLES.

Phoenix dactylifera. The date-palm; so called from the ancient idea that this tree, if burnt down or if it falls through old age, will rejuvenate itself and spring up fairer than ever.

Phoenix period, or cycle, generally supposed to be 500 years; Tacitus tells us it was 500 years; R. Stuart Poole that it was 1,460 Julian years, like the SOTHIC PERIOD; and Lipsius that it was 1,500 years. Opinions vary between 250 and 7,000 years. Tacitus (Annales, vi, 28) mentions four appearances of the bird in Egypt.

Phoenix Park (Dublin). A corruption of the Gaelic Fionn-uisge, the clear water, so called from a spring at one time resorted to as a chalybeate spa.

The Phoenix Park Murders. The assassination (6 May 1882) of Lord Frederick Cavendish, Chief Secretary for Ireland, and Mr. Burke, Under-Secretary, by Irish INVINCIBLES, when walking in Phoenix Park, near the Vice-regal lodge. They were hacked to death by surgical knives on the day of Lord Spencer's arrival in Dublin as viceroy. James Carey, a Dublin councillor, one of the Invincibles, turned QUEEN'S EVIDENCE and five of the gang were hanged, others being given life sentences. Carey was shot later by an avenger. The affair aroused great horror and proved a great embarrassment to the Irish leader, Parnell.

Phoney, or phony. Fraudulent, bogus, insincere; an American colloquialism and slang term that became anglicized about 1920. It derives from fawney, an obsolete underworld CANT word meaning the imitation gold ring used by confidence tricksters. During World War II, the period of comparative inactivity, from the outbreak to the invasion of Norway and Denmark, was characterized by American journalists as the "Phoney War".

Phonograph. In Britain, the name of the old sound-reproducing machine with cylindrical records which gave place to the gramophone, which in turn was supplanted by the electrical record-player. In America the flat-disc gramophone is called a phonograph.

Phony. See PHONEY.

Photo-finish. The end of a race so closely contested that the winner can be discovered with certainty only by means of a photograph taken at the finish. Most race-courses are equipped to take such photographs.

Phrygians (frij' yanz). An early Christian sect of the late 2nd century, so called from Phrygia, where they abounded; also called MONTANISTS.

Phrygian cap. The cap of liberty.

Phrygian mode. In music, the second of the "authentic" ecclesiastical modes. It had its "final" on E and its "dominant" on C, and was derived from the ancient Greek mode of this name, which was warlike.

Phryne (fri' nê). A famous Athenian courtesan of the 4th century B.C., who acquired so much wealth by her beauty that she offered to rebuild the walls of Thebes if she might put on them the inscription: "ALEXANDER destroyed them, but Phryne the hetæra rebuilt them." It is recorded of her that, when she was being tried on a capital charge, her defender, who had failed to move the judges by his eloquence, asked her to uncover her bosom. She did so, and the judges, struck by her beauty, acquitted her on the spot.

She is said to have been the model for Praxiteles' Cnidian VENUS, and also for Apelles' picture of Venus Rising from the Sea.

Phylactery (Gr. phylacterion; from phyl-asso, I watch). A charm or amulet worn by the ancient Jews on the wrist or forehead. It consisted of four slips of parchment, each bearing a text of Scripture, enclosed in two black leather cases. One case contained Exod. xiii, 1-10, 11-16; and the other case Deut. vi, 4-9, xi, 13-21. The idea arose from the command of Moses, "Therefore shall ye lay up these my words in your heart . . . and bind them for a sign upon your hand . . . as frontlets between your eyes" (Deut. xi, 18).

Phynnodderee. A Manx HOBGOBLIN combining the properties of the Scandinavian TROLL, the Scottish BROWNIE and the Irish LEPRECHAUN. He drives home straying sheep and helps in the harvesting if a storm be brewing, and is possessed of great strength for his size.

Physician (Gr. phusis, nature).

The Beloved Physician. St. LUKE, so called by St. PAUL in Col. iv, 14.

The Physician finger. The third. See MEDICINAL FINGER.

The Prince of Physicians. AVICENNA.

Physiocrats. A school of French political economists in the second half of the 18th century founded by François Quesnay (1694–1774), a court physician. They attacked the economic regulations of MERCANTILISM, and held that wealth consisted in the products of the soil, not in coin or bullion. They advocated a predominantly agricultural society, FREE TRADE, and LAISSEZ-FAIRE. All revenue was to be raised by a land tax. The word is from the Greek, meaning "government according to nature".

Piazza (pi ät' zä). An Italian word meaning square, or market-place, such as the piazza of COVENT GARDEN. In America it is applied to the verandah of a dwelling-house.

Great Piazza Coffee House. A flourishing coffee house at the N.E. angle of the COVENT GARDEN piazza opened in 1756, previously (1754–1756) known as Macklin's. It was here that, in 1809, Sheridan watched the fire at the DRURY LANE Theatre saying: "A man may surely be allowed to take a glass of wine at his own fireside." It became a hotel in 1840 and was pulled down to make way for the Floral Hall in 1865.

Pica. See PIE.

Picards. An extremist early 15th-century sect prevalent in Bohemia and the VAUDOIS, said to be so called from Picard of Flanders, their founder, who called himself the New ADAM, and tried to introduce the custom of living in the nude, like Adam in PARADISE. They were suppressed by Ziska in 1421. Cp. ADAMITES.

Picaresque (pik ä resk'). The term applied to the class of literature that deals sympathetically with the adventures of clever and amusing rogues (Span. picaresco, roguish, knavish). The Spanish novel Lazarillo de Tormes (1553) is the earliest example of its kind and Le Sage's Gil Blas (1715) is perhaps the best known. Nash's Jack Wilton (1594) is the earliest English example, and others are Defoe's Moll Flanders and Colonel Jack.

Picayune. Formerly, in FLORIDA and Louisiana, the Spanish half-real, from the Fr. picailon, an old small coin of Piedmont. Hence the use of the word for anything of trifling value or contemptible character.

Piccadilly. This famous London street takes its name after a Piccadilly Hall that existed in the vicinity in the early 17th century, the home of Robert Baker, a tailor. The name is derived from pickadils or peccadilloes, which, according to Blount's Glossographia (1656), were the round hems about the edge of a skirt or garment, also a kind of stiff collar or band for the neck and shoulders. The name may be in allusion to the tailor's source of wealth or that it was the "skirt house" or outermost house in the district.

Piccadilly Weepers. See WEEP.

Piccinists. See GLUCKISTS.

Pick-a-back. On the back or shoulders, as a pack is carried. The term dates at least from the early 16th century, but its precise origin, and the force of the pick-, are unknown. Other forms of it are a-pigga-back, piggy-back, pick-back, etc.

Pickle. A rod in pickle. One ready to chastise with at any moment; one "preserved" for use.

I'm in a pretty pickle. In a sorry plight, or state of disorder.

How cam'st thou in this pickle?
SHAKESPEARE: The Tempest, V, i.

To be pickled. A colloquial term for being drunk.

Pickle-herring. The German term for a CLOWN or buffoon, from a humorous character of that name in an early 17th-century play. It was adopted in ENGLAND through Addison's mention in The Spectator (No. 47, 1711), where he wrongly attributes it to the Dutch.

Pickwickian. In a Pickwickian sense. Said of words or epithets, usually of a derogatory or insulting kind, that, in the circumstances in which they are employed, are not to be taken as having quite the same force or implication as they naturally would have. The allusion is to the scene in ch. i of Pickwick Papers when Mr. Pickwick accused Mr. Blotton of acting in "a vile and calumnious manner", whereupon Mr. Blotton retorted by calling Mr. Pickwick "a humbug". It finally was made to appear that both had used the offensive words only in a Pickwickian sense, and that each had, in fact, the highest regard and esteem for each other.

Picts. Ancient inhabitants of SCOTLAND before the coming of the Scots (Goidelic-speaking Celts) from Northern Ireland, in the 5th century. The Scots settled in Dalriada (Argyll) and the Pictish kingdom survived until the mid-9th century when it was conquered by Kenneth Mac Alpine, King of Dalriada. The name is the Lat. picti, painted, i.e. "tattooed men".

Picts' houses. Underground prehistoric dwellings found in the Orkneys and on the east coast of SCOTLAND, and attributed to the Picts.

Picture (Lat. pictura; from pictus, past participle of pingere, to paint). A model, or BEAU-IDEAL, as, He is the picture of health; The bride looked a picture.

Picture Bible. A name given to the BIBLIA PAUPERUM.

The pictures. A colloquial term for the cinema or "picture-house".

To put someone in the picture. To inform someone of the proceedings or developments to date.

To see the picture whole. To be able to appreciate fully a situation, case, etc., in its entirety, based on a proper appreciation of its constituent elements.

Pidgin English. The semi-English LINGUA FRANCA used in China and the Far East, consisting principally of mispronounced English words with certain native grammatical constructions. For instance, the Chinese cannot pronounce r, so replace it with l—te-lee for "three", solly for "sorry", etc. Also, in Chinese there is always inserted a word (called the "classifier") between a numeral and its noun, and this in Pidgin English is replaced by piece—e.g. one piece knife, two piece hingkichi (handkerchiefs). Pidgin is a corruption of business. Pidgin English is a utilitarian form of basic English and is widely used in varying forms by many native peoples with whom the English have come in contact.

Hence, this is not my pidgin, this is not my business, not my responsibility or affair.

Pie, or Pi. A printer's term to describe the mix-up of types (as when dropped), or a jumble of letters when a word or sentence is badly printed. It may be an allusion to the mixed ingredients in a pie, or it may come from the assortment of types used in the old pie or pre-REFORMATION books of rules for finding the prayers, etc. proper for the day. The ordinal was called the pica or pie from the colour and confused appearance of the rules which were printed in old black-letter type on white paper, thus giving a pied appearance (Lat. pica, a magpie).

Pie, or pi is also an epithet applied to a smugly or irritatingly pious person.

Pie in the sky. The good time or good things promised which never come; that which will never be realized.

You will eat, bye and bye,
In the glorious land above the sky!
Work and pray,
Live on hay,
You'll get pie in the sky when you die!
JOB HILL: The Preacher and the Slave.

To eat humble pie. See under EAT.

Piece. Piece goods. Fabrics woven in recognized lengths for certain purposes for sale by the piece.

Pièce de résistance (pi äs dè rä zès tōns) (Fr., piece of resistance). The "substantial piece" i.e. the main dish of a meal; the joint or meat dish. Figuratively, the most important feature, the main event, the best part of the show, the outstanding item.

Pieces of Eight. The old Spanish silver peso (piastre) or DOLLAR of 8 reals of the 17th and 18th centuries. It was marked with an 8.

To give a person a piece of one's mind. See under MIND.

Piece work. A term used when an industrial worker is paid by the piece or job, instead of by the hour, etc.

Pied. Au pied de la lettre (Fr., to the foot of the letter). Quite literally, close to the letter.

A wild enthusiastic young fellow, whose opinions one must not take au pied de la lettre.
THACKERAY: Pendennis, I, xi.

Pied-à-terre (pē ä dá târ') (Fr. foot on the ground). A temporary lodging or a country residence, a footing.

Mr. Harding, however, did not allow himself to be talked over into giving up his own and only little pied-à-terre in the High Street.

TROLLOPE: Barchester Towers, ch. xlv.

Pied Piper of Hamelin. The legend is that the town of Hamelin (Westphalia) was infested with rats in 1284, that a mysterious piper in a parti-coloured suit appeared in the town and offered to rid it of vermin for a certain sum, which offer was accepted by the townspeople. The Pied Piper fulfilled his contract but payment was not forthcoming. On the following St. John's Day he reappeared, and again played his pipe. This time all the children followed him and he led them to a mountain cave where all disappeared save two—one blind, the other dumb, or lame. Another version is that they were led to Transylvania where they formed a German colony. The story, familiar in ENGLAND from Robert Browning's poem, appeared earlier in James Howell's Familiar Letters (1645-1655). The legend has its roots in the story of the CHILDREN'S CRUSADE (see under CRUSADES).

Piepowder Court. A court of justice formerly held at PAIRS, which dealt with disputes between buyers and sellers. Literally a "wayfarer's court", piepowder being from Fr. pie-poudreux, dusty-footed (also a vagabond).

Is this well, goody Joan, to interrupt my market in the midst, and call away my customers? Can you answer this at the pie-poudres?

BEN JONSON: Bartholomew Fair, III, i.

Pierrot (pē' rō) (i.e. "Little Peter"). A traditional character in French PANTOMIME, a kind of idealized clown. He is generally tall and thin, has his face covered with white powder or flour, and wears a white costume with very long sleeves and a row of big buttons down the front. Cf. HARLEQUIN.

Piers Plowman. See VISION OF PIERS PLOWMAN.

Pietà (pē ā ta'). A representation of the Virgin embracing the dead body of her Son. Filial or parental love was called pietas by the Romans.

Pietists. A 17th-century Lutheran movement seeking to revive the life of the Lutheran Church in Germany. It was started by P. J. Spener (1635-1705) and the name was applied derisively by the orthodox in the same way as the term METHODIST was used in England.

Pig. The pig was held sacred by the ancient Cretans because JUPITER was suckled by a sow; it was immolated in the ELEUSINIAN MYSTERIES; was sacrificed to HERCULES, to VENUS, and to the LARES by all who sought relief from bodily ailments. The sow was sacrificed to CERES "because it taught men to turn up the earth". The pig is unclean to Jews and Moslems.

The five dark marks on the inner side of each of a pig's forelegs are supposed to be the marks of the DEVIL's claws when they entered the swine (Mark v, 11-15). See also HOG; SOW.

A pig in a poke. A blind bargain. The reference is to a common trick of yore of trying to palm off on a GREENHORN a cat for a sucking-pig. If he opened the poke or sack he "let the cat out of the bag", and the trick was disclosed. The ruse is referred to in Thomas Tusser's Five Hundreth Good Pointes of Husbandrie (1580). The French chat en poche refers to the fact, while our proverb refers to the trick. Pocket is a diminutive of poke.

A pig's whisper. A very short space of time; properly a grunt—which doesn't take long.

You'll find yourself in bed in something less than a pig's whisper.

DICKENS: Pickwick Papers, ch. xxxii.

Bartholomew pig. See under BARTHOLOMEW.

He has brought his pigs to a pretty market. He has made a very bad bargain; he has managed his affairs badly. Pigs were for long a principal article of sale among country folk.

Pig-a-back. See PICK-A-BACK.

Pig's ear. In RHYMING SLANG, beer.

Pig-headed. Obstinate, contrary.

Pig Iron. Iron cast in oblong ingots now called pigs but formerly sows. Sow is now applied to the main channel in which the molten liquid runs, the smaller branches which diverge from it being called pigs, and it is the iron from these which is called pig iron.

Pig and Whistle. See PUBLIC-HOUSE SIGNS.

Pigs and whistles. Trifles. To go to pigs and whistles is to be ruined, to go to the DEUCE.

I would be nane suprised to hear the morn that Nebuchadnezzar was a' gane to pigs and whistles, and driven out with the divors bill to the barren pastures of bankruptcy.

GALT: The Entail, I, ix.

Pigs in clover. People who have money but don't know how to behave decently. Also, a game consisting of a box divided into recesses into which one has to roll marbles by tilting the box.

Please the pigs. If circumstances permit, Deo volente. An alliterative form which has been given several laboured explanations, such as "please the PYX", or "please the PIXIES".

St. Anthony's pig. See under ANTHONY.

The Pig and the Tinderbox. An old colloquial name for the ELEPHANT AND CASTLE public-house; in allusion to its sign of a pig-like elephant surmounted by the representation of a castle which might pass as a tinderbox.

To drive one's pigs to market. To snore very loudly.

To drive pigs. To snore.

To pig it. To eat in a greedy fashion, to bolt one's food; to live in a slovenly piggy fashion, in ill-kept and ill-provided circumstances.

To pig together. To huddle together like pigs in a sty. To share and share alike, especially in lodgings in a small way; formerly it meant to sleep two (or more) in the same bed.

To stare like a stuck pig. With open mouth and staring eyes, as a pig that is being killed; in the utmost astonishment, mingled sometimes with fear.

When pigs fly. NEVER.

Pigskin. A saddle, the best being made of pigskin. "To throw a leg across a pigskin" is to mount a horse.

Pigtail. In England the word first appeared (17th century) as the name of a tobacco that was twisted into a thin rope; and it was used of the plait of twisted hair worn by sailors till the early 19th century, as it is still used of that worn by schoolgirls.

When the Manchu invaded and conquered China in the 17th century the Chinese were required to wear queues or pigtails as a sign of servitude until the advent of the republic in 1912.

Pig-wife. A woman who sold crockery. A piggin was a small pail, especially a milk-pail; and a pig a small bowl, cup or mug.

Piggy-banks. The traditional pig-shaped money-box, still manufactured, nowadays often in plastic but formerly of earthenware or glass. Such money-boxes, with a coin or coins inside, were given to apprentices in Tudor times as CHRISTMAS BOXES.

Pigeon. Slang for a dupe, an easily gullible person, a GULL. To pigeon is to cheat or gull one out of his money by fairly transparent hoaxes. Pigeons are very easily caught by snares, and in the sporting world rogues and their dupes are called "rooks and pigeons". Thackeray has a story entitled "Captain Rook and Mr. Pigeon".

The Black Pigeons of Dodona. See under DODONA.

Flying the pigeons. Stealing the coals from a cart or sack between the coal-dealer's yard and the house of the customer.

That's not my pigeon. That is not my responsibility; that's not my job; also used in the form, "That's someone else's pigeon". Pigeon here is an incorrect variant spelling of "pidgin". See PIDGIN ENGLISH.

To pluck a pigeon. To cheat a gullible person of his money; to fleece a GREENHORN.

To put the cat among the pigeons. See under CAT.

Pigeon, or Pigeon's Blood. Soy sauce; also the colour of a fine dark RUBY.

Pigeon English. An incorrect form of PIDGIN ENGLISH.

Pigeon Pair. Boy and girl twins. It was once supposed that pigeons always sit on two eggs which produce a male and a female, and these twin birds live together in love the rest of their lives.

Pigeon's milk. Partly digested food, regurgitated by pigeons for their young; also a non-existent liquid which gullible children and APRIL FOOLS are sometimes sent to fetch. Cp. ELBOW-GREASE.

Pigeon-hole. A small compartment for filing papers; hence, a matter that has been put on one side is often said to have been pigeon-holed. In dovescots a small hole is left for the pigeons to walk in and out.

Pigeon-livered. Timid, easily frightened, like a pigeon.

It cannot be
But I am pigeon-livered, and lack gall
To make oppression bitter; or, ere this,
I should have fatted all the region kites
With this slave's offal.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, II, ii.

Piggin. See PIG-WIFE.

Piggott Forgeries. See under FORGERY.

Pigmies. See PYGMIES.

Pigwidgin, or Pigwiggen. A FAIRY OR DWARF; anything very small.

Pigwiggen was this Fairy Knight,
One wond'rous gracious in the sight
Of fair Queen Mab, which day and night
He amorously observed.

DRAYTON: Nymphidia, I, 89.

Pike. The Germans have a tradition that when Christ was crucified all fishes dived under the water in terror, except the pike, which, out of curiosity, lifted up its head and beheld the whole scene; hence the fancy that in a pike's head all the parts of the Crucifixion are represented, the CROSS, three nails, and a sword being distinctly represented. Cp. PASSION FLOWER.

Pikestaff. Plain as a Pikestaff. Quite clear, obvious, and unmistakable. The earlier form of the phrase (mid-16th century) was plain as a packstaff, i.e. the staff on which a pedlar carried his pack, which was worn plain and smooth.

O Lord! what absurdities! as plain as any packstaff.

DRYDEN: Amphitryon, III, i.

Pilate. One tradition has it that Pontius Pilate's later life was so full of misfortune that in CALIGULA's time he committed suicide at ROME. His body was thrown into the Tiber, but evil spirits so disturbed the water that it was retrieved and taken to Vienne, where it was cast into the Rhône, eventually coming to rest in the recesses of a lake on Mount PILATUS. Another legend is that he committed suicide to avoid the sentence of death passed on him by Tiberius because of his having ordered the crucifixion of Christ. His wife is given as Claudia Procula, or Procla, and by some she has been identified with Claudia of II Tim. iv, 21: there is a story that they both became penitent and died peaceably in the faith.

In the Coptic Church he is regarded as a martyr, and his feast day is 25 June. Procla has been canonized in the GREEK CHURCH.

The Acts of Pilate. An apocryphal work, probably of the 4th century, recounting the trial, death, and resurrection of Christ. In combination with another treatise on the Descent of Christ into Hades, the two are known as the Gospel of Nicodemus.

Pilate voice. A loud ranting voice. In the old mysteries all TYRANTS were made to speak in a rough ranting manner. Similarly SHAKESPEARE has "out-herods HEROD" (Hamlet, III, ii), and "This is Ercles' vein, a tyrant's vein" (Midsummer Night's Dream, I, ii).

The Miller, that for-drunken was al pale . . .
in Pilates vois he gan to crye,
And swoor by armes and by blood and bones,
"I can a noble tale for the nones
With which I wol now quyte the Knightes tale".

CHAUCER: Miller's Prologue, 12-19.

Pilatus, Mount. In Switzerland, between the canton of Lucerne and Unterwalden. So called because during westerly winds it is covered with a white "cap" of cloud (Lat. pileatus, covered with the pileus, or felt cap). The similarity of the name gave rise to a fabled connexion with PILATE. One tradition is that Pilate was banished to GAUL by Tiberius and threw himself into the lake near the summit of this mountain, where he appears annually. Whoever sees the ghost will die before the year is out. In the 16th century a law was passed forbidding anyone to throw stones into the lake for fear of bringing a tempest on the country.

Pilgarlic, or Pill'd Garlic. In the 16th and 17th centuries, a term for a bald-headed man, especially one who had lost his hair through disease, and left a head that was suggestive of peeled garlic. Stow says of one getting bald: "He will soon be peeled garlic like myself." The term was later used of any poor wretch forsaken by his fellows, and in a humorous and self-pitying way, of oneself.

After this [feast] we joggled off to bed for the night; but never a bit could poor pilgarlic sleep one wink, for the everlasting jingle of bells.

RABELAIS: Pantagruel, V, viii.

Pilgrim Fathers. The term (first used in 1799) applied to the emigrants who founded the colony of Plymouth, NEW ENGLAND, in 1620. In 1608 a PURITAN congregation from Scrooby (Notts.) settled at Leiden and eventually decided to migrate to America. They finally left Plymouth in the MAYFLOWER. Of the 102 settlers, 24 were women, and only 35 of the party were Puritans. Their tradition is part of American folklore.

The Pilgrims is a club founded in honour of the Pilgrim Fathers in 1902 with one branch in London and the other in New York.

The Pilgrim's Progress. The allegorical masterpiece of John Bunyan, the first part of which appeared in 1678 and the second in 1684. It tells of Christian's pilgrimage, beset with trials and temptations, but with incidental encouragement, until he reached the Celestial City where he was later joined by his wife and children. The rustic simplicity and directness of its story gave it lasting appeal and many expressions have become part of the language. "The Slough of Despond", "Vanity Fair", "Mr. Worldly Wiseman" and "Mr. Facing-both-ways" are notable examples.

Pilgrim's Way. The road from Winchester in Hampshire to Canterbury in Kent, used by pilgrims from Europe and the south and west of England when visiting the shrine of Archbishop Becket. The route followed by the mediæval pilgrims follows a much more ancient trackway.

Pilgrimage. A journey to a sacred place undertaken as an act of religious devotion, either as an act of veneration or penance, or to ask for the fulfilment of some prayer. In the MIDDLE AGES the chief venues in the West were Walsingham and Canterbury (England), Fourvière, Le Puy, and St. Denis (France); ROME, Loretto, and Assisi (Italy); COMPOSTELA, Guadalupe, and Montserrat (Spain); Mariazell (Austria), Cologne, Trier (Germany); Einsiedeln (Switzerland). The pre-eminent pilgrimage was of course to the HOLY LAND. LOURDES became a noted place of pilgrimage for Roman Catholics after 1858.

Miraculous cures were sometimes effected upon those who worshipped at these shrines and spiritual and bodily welfare was the main concern of most pilgrims; for others a pilgrimage was an occasion for a holiday and an opportunity to visit distant parts or foreign lands. Cp. COCKLE HAT; CRUSADES; PALMER.

When that Aprille with his shoures soote
The droghte of Marche hath perced to the roote . . .

Than longen folk goon on pilgrimages,
(And palmers for to seken straunge strondes) . . .
CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales (Prologue).

The Pilgrimage of Grace. A rising in Yorkshire (1536-1537) due to political unrest among the gentry occasioned by inclosures, etc., and the religious changes culminating in the dissolution of the monasteries. Under Robert Aske, the "pilgrims" took the five wounds of Christ as their banner and captured York and Hull. Among the insurgents were the Archbishop of York, Lords Darcy, Latimer, Lumley, Scrope, and Sir Thomas Percy. The Duke of Norfolk effected a truce based on promises of redress which were not kept. A full pardon was offered but further outbreaks in 1537 gave Henry VIII the excuse to execute some 220 rebels.

Pill, The. Since the introduction of the oral contraceptive in the early 1960s its impact has caused it to be known as the pill, to the exclusion of all others. In Victorian England pills were popular "universal remedies" for many maladies, but especially associated with liver complaints and constipation. Thomas Holloway and Thomas Beecham were the two richest pill magnates of the day, the former entering the market in 1837 and the latter in 1857. Aloes, ginger, and soap formed the basis of their products, and both became millionaires.

To gild the pill. To soften the blow; to make a disagreeable task less offensive, as pills used to be gilded (and are now sugar-coated) to make them more palatable.

Pillar. From pillar to post. Hither and thither; from one thing to another without definite purpose; harassed and badgered. The phrase was originally from post to pillar, and comes from the old tennis-courts in allusion to the banging about of the balls.

Nelson's Pillar. Formerly Dublin's most controversial monument, erected in honour of the great sailor by a committee of bankers and merchants in 1808-9, who raised the funds by public subscription. It was sited in Sackville Street (now O'Connell Street) and the statue of Nelson on the top was the work of Thomas Kirk. The column contained a spiral staircase leading to the top of the doric abacus and somewhat fresher air. The whole monument was 134 ft. high. It was blown up by young Republican extremists on 8 March 1966, and the 50 ft. of masonry left standing was demolished by army engineers. Nelson's head was removed to a Corporation depot whence it was taken by a group of art students and flown to London for subsequent sale to an antique dealer. Cp. NELSON'S COLUMN under COLUMN.

Pillar Saints. See STYLITES.

The Pillars of Hercules. The opposite rocks at the entrance to the Mediterranean, one in Spain and other in Africa, anciently called Calpe and Abyla, now Gibraltar and Mount Hacho (on which stands the fortress of Ceuta). The tale is that they were bound together till HERCULES tore them asunder in order to get to Gades (Cadiz). Macrobius ascribes the feat of making the division to Sesostris (the Egyptian Hercules), Lucan follows the same tradition; and the Phœnicians are said to have set on the opposing rocks two large pyramidal columns to serve as seamarks, one dedicated to Hercules and the other to ASTARTE.

I will follow you even to the Pillars of Hercules. To the end of the world. The ancients supposed that these rocks marked the utmost limits of the habitable globe.

Pompey's Pillar. See under POMPEY.

Pillory. Punishment by the pillory was not finally abolished in England till 1837, but since 1815 it had been used only for cases of perjury. In Delaware, U.S.A., it was a legal punishment down to 1905. It was abolished in France in 1832. It was a popular punishment for libel, and among those pilloried for this offence were Prynne, Bastwick, Defoe and, in 1797, Thomas Evans, the preacher, for singing a seditious Welsh song.

Pilot. Through Fr. from Ital. pilota, formerly pedota, which is probably connected with Gr. pedon, a rudder.

Pilot balloon. A small balloon sent up by the wind; hence, figuratively, a feeler; a hint thrown out to ascertain public opinion on some point.

Pilot engine. The leading engine when two are needed to draw a railway train; also an engine sent ahead of a train carrying important personages, etc., to ensure that the line is clear.

Pilot fish. The small sea-fish Naucrates ductor, so called because it is supposed to pilot the shark to its prey.

Pilot scheme, project. An experimental try-out.

The pilot that weathered the storm. William Pitt the younger, who as Prime Minister steered the country through much of the European storm stirred up by the French Revolution. It derives from Canning's Song for the Inauguration of the Pitt Club.

Pilpay, or Bidpay. The name given as that of the author of Kalilah and Dimnah (otherwise known as The Fables of Pilpay), which is the 8th-century Arabic version of the Sanskrit Panchatantra. The word is not a true name, but means "wise man" (Arab. bidbah), and was applied to the chief scholar at the court of an Indian prince.

Pitdown Man, or Pitdown Skull. See under FORGERIES.

Pimlico (London). Formerly the pleasure gardens of Hoxton, but the better-known Pimlico is the district of WESTMINSTER between Knightsbridge and the Thames and St. James's Park and Chelsea. It was once noted for its pleasure gardens, such as the Mulberry Garden (now the site of Buckingham Palace), RANELAGH, and Jenny's Whim. The origin of the name is unknown.

Pin. At a pin's fee. At an extremely low estimate; valueless.

I do not set my life at a pin's fee.
SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, iv.

I don't care a pin, or a pin's point. I don't care in the least.

I do not pin my faith upon your sleeve. I am not going to take your IPSE DIXIT for gospel. In feudal times badges were worn on the sleeve by a leader's partisans and sometimes badges were changed for some reason, hence people were chary of judging by appearances and would say, "You wear the badge, but I do not intend to pin my faith on your sleeve".

In merry pin. In merry mood, in good spirits.

The calender, right glad to find
His friend in merry pin,
Return'd him not a single word,
But to the house went in.

COWPER: John Gilpin, st. xlv.

Pin here may refer to the pin or key of a stringed instrument by which it is kept at the right pitch, or it may be an allusion to the pins or pegs of peg-tankards (cp. I AM A PEG TOO LOW under PEG). By the rules of good fellowship a drinker was supposed to stop only at a pin, and if he went beyond it, he was to drink to the next one. As it was hard to stop exactly at the pin, the effort gave rise to much mirth, and the drinker had usually to drain the tankard.

No song, no laugh, no jovial din
Of drinking wassail to the pin.
LONGFELLOW: The Golden Legend, I.

Not worth a pin. Wholly worthless.

Pin money. A woman's allowance of money for her own personal expenditure. Pins were once very expensive, and in 14th- and 15th-century wills there were often special bequests for the express purpose of buying pins; when they became cheap, women spent their allowances on other fancies but the term pin money remained in vogue.

Miss Hoyden: Now, nurse, if he gives me two hundred a year to buy pins, what do you think he'll give me to buy fine petticoats?

Nurse: Ah, my dearest, he deceives thee foully, and he's no better than a rogue for his pains! These Londoners have got a gibberage with 'em would confound a gipsy. That which they call pin-money is to buy their wives everything in the versal world, down to their very shoe-ties.

VANBRUGH: The Relapse, V, v (1697).

Pins and needles. The tingling that comes over a limb when it has been numbed or is "asleep".

On pins and needles. On TENTERHOOKS; in a state of fearful expectation or great uneasiness.

Policy of pin pricks. A policy of petty annoyances to wear someone down. The term came into prominence during the period of strained relations between Britain and France in 1898 at the time of the Fashoda incident. It is an anglicization of a much older French phrase, un coup d'épingle.

There's not a pin to choose between them. They're as like as two peas, practically no difference between them.

To tirl at the pin. See under TIRL.

To pin a person down. To "nail him down", to compel him to reveal his intentions or to state clearly his views, etc.

To pin something on a person. To fasten the blame, guilt, or responsibility on him.

Weak on his pins. Weak in his legs, the legs being a man's "pins" or PEGS.

You could have heard a pin drop. Said of a state—especially a sudden state in the midst of din—of complete silence. Leigh Hunt speaks of "a pin-drop silence" (Rimini, I, 144).

Pin-up Girl. In World War II service-men used to pin up in their quarters pictures of film stars, actresses, or their own particular girl-friends. These were called "pin-up girls".

Pinch. A pinch for stale news. A punishment for telling as news what is well known.

At a pinch. In an urgent case; if hard pressed. There are things that one cannot do in the ordinary way, but that one may manage "at a pinch".

Peewits' pinch. See PEEWIT.

To be pinched for money. To be in financial straits, hard up. Hence to pinch and scrape or to pinch it, to economize, to cheesepare.

To pinch. Slang for to steal.

Where the shoe pinches. See under SHOE.

Pinch-hitter. A person who substitutes for another in a crisis. The term is from baseball where the pinch-hitter—a man who always hits the ball hard—is put in to bat when the team is in desperate straits.

Pinchbeck. An alloy of copper (5 parts) and zinc (1 part), closely resembling GOLD, so called from Christopher Pinchbeck (1670–1732), a manufacturer of trinkets, watches, and jewellery in FLEET STREET, London. The term is used figuratively of anything spurious, of deceptive appearance, or low quality.

Pindar (c. 522–443 B.C.). A renowned lyric poet of THEBES who achieved great respect and public honour for his verse from his contemporaries.

Pindaric Verse (pin dar' ik). Irregular verse; a poem of various metres, and of lofty style; after the fashion started by Abraham Cowley in the mid-17th century, who inaccurately imitated in English the Greek versification of Pindar. He published fifteen Pindarique Odes in 1656 and the style was copied by many, including Dryden and Pope.

Pindar, Pinder, or Pinner of Wakefield. See AS GOOD AS GEORGE-A-GREEN under GEORGE.

Peter Pindar. The pseudonym of Dr. John Wolcot (1738–1819), one-time physician-general in Jamaica and incumbent of Vere, Jamaica. He obtained an M.D. at Aberdeen in 1767 and was ordained in London in 1769. He returned to practise medicine at Truro but removed to London in 1780 to devote his time to the writing of satirical verse and caricatures on the WHIG side. He had few scruples or convictions and George III was a victim of his pen. His verses include The Lousiad, Whitbread's Brewery visited by their Majesties, and Bozzy and Piozzi.

Pine-tree shilling. A coin struck (1652–1684), contrary to English law, by the mint established by Massachusetts. Other shillings bore the devices of the oak-tree and willow. Charles II became aware of the practice, but as the royal OAK was used as a device took no action. The export of coins from Great Britain was forbidden and the early colonists relied on barter in wampum, beaver skins, corn, tobacco, etc., or on foreign coinage.

Pine-tree State. Maine, which has forests of these trees, and bears a pine-tree on its COAT OF ARMS.

Pink. The flower is so called because the edges of the petals are pinked or notched. The verb to pink means to pierce or perforate, also to ornament dress material by punching holes in it so that the lining can be seen, scalloping the edges, etc. In the 17th century it was commonly used of stabbing an adversary, especially in a duel.

"There went another eyelet-hole to his brodered jerkin!"—"Fairly pinked, by G—d!" In fact, the last exclamation was uttered amid a general roar of applause, accompanying a successful and conclusive lunge, by which FEVERIL ran his gigantic antagonist through the body.
SCOTT: Feveril of the Peak, ch. xxxii.

In pink. In the scarlet coat of a fox-hunter. The colour is not pink, but no hunting man would call it anything else. Cp. REDCOATS.

In the pink. In excellent health. An abbreviation of the modern phrase "in the pink of condition", deriving from SHAKESPEARE'S "the very pink of courtesy" (Romeo and Juliet, II, iv), Steele's "the pink of courtesy" (Tatler, no. 204), Goldsmith's "the very pink of perfection" (She Stoops to Conquer, I), and Burns's "the pink o' womankind" (The Posie).

Pinkerton. Pinkerton's National Detective Agency was founded at Chicago (1852) by Allan Pinkerton (1819–1884), Glasgow-born deputy sheriff of Kane County, Illinois, who had proved himself a detective of some resource. It came to the forefront during the CIVIL WAR, when, in 1861, Pinkerton's men uncovered a plot to assassinate Lincoln, the President-elect. Pinkerton also found the means of obtaining military and political information from the Southern States during the war and eventually organized the Federal Secret Service. His most sensational coups were the discovery of the thieves of $700,000 stolen from the Adams Express in 1866, and the breaking-up of the MOLLY MAGUIRES (1877), an Irish-American secret society with many subversive and lawless deeds to their discredit.

Pinocchio (pě nō' kiō). The mischievous hero of the famous puppet story Le Avventure di Pinocchio (1883) by G. Lorenzini, who wrote under the name of "Collodi", which was taken from his birthplace.

The story tells how a carpenter found a piece of wood that laughed and cried like a child and gave it to his friend Geppetto who fashioned from it the puppet Pinocchio. His creation proved unusually mischievous and had many bizarre adventures including having his feet burned off, his nose elongated, and being transformed into a donkey. Eventually he learned to show sympathy and goodness and "the fairy" changed him to a real boy back at home with Geppetto.

Pious. The Romans called a man who revered his father pīus; hence Antoninus was called pīus, because he requested that his adoptive father (Hadrian) might be ranked among the gods. ÆNEAS was called Pīus because he rescued his father from the burning city of TROY. The Italian word PIETÀ has a similar meaning.

The Pious. Ernest I, founder of the House of Gotha (1601-1674).

Robert II, son of Hugh Capet (c. 970, 966-1031).

Louis I of France. See DEBONAIR.

Eric IX of Sweden (reigned 1150-1160).

Frederick III, Elector of Palatine (1515, 1559-1576).

Pip. The pips on cards and dice were named from the seeds of fruit (earlier peep, origin obscure). This is merely an abbreviated form of pippin, which denoted the seed long before it denoted apples raised from seed. To be pipped is to be BLACKBALLED or defeated, the black ball being the pip. To be pipped at the post is to be defeated when victory seemed in sight.

Till the pips squeak. To put extreme pressure on someone, literally or metaphorically. An allusion to the squeezing of such fruits as oranges and lemons.

To get one's second pip. In the army, to be promoted from second to first lieutenant, these ranks and that of captain being marked by "pips", a nickname for the stars on the shoulder straps.

To have, or get the pip. To be thoroughly "fed up", downhearted and miserable. Probably connected with pip, the poultry disease which causes fowls to pine away.

Pip emma. Soldier slang in World War I for P.M. Originally telephones; "ten pip emma" avoids any possibility of misunderstanding. In the same way ack emma stands for A.M.

Pipe. As you pipe, I must dance. I must accommodate myself to your wishes. "He who pays the piper calls the tune."

Pipe down! Stop being aggressive or noisy, stop talking. A naval colloquialism derived from the boatswain's call of this name meaning "hands turn in", i.e. "lights out".

Piping hot. Hot as water which pipes or sings; hence, new, only just out.

Piping times of peace (SHAKESPEARE, Richard III, I, i). Times when there was no thought of war, and the pastoral pipe instead of the martial trumpet was heard on the village greens.

Put that in your pipe and smoke it. Digest that if you can. "Swallow that one!" An expression used by one who has given an adversary a severe rebuke or given him "something to think about".

The pipe of peace. See CALUMET.

To pipe one's eye. To snivel, weep.

To put one's pipe out. To spoil his piping; to make him change his key or sing a different tune; "to take his shine out".

Pipeclay. Routine; excessive attention to "parade-ground" correctness in dress, drill, SPIT AND POLISH, etc. (cp. RED TAPE). Pipeclay was formerly much in evidence on soldiers' belts, gloves, and other accoutrements.

Pipe-laying (U.S.A.). Swaying the issue in an election by slipping in voters who are not on the electoral roll.

Pipeline. In the pipeline. Already under way; in process of manufacture or delivery, etc. From the transport of oil by pipeline.

Pipe Rolls, or Great Rolls of the Pipe. The name given to a class of EXCHEQUER records on account of their being kept in rolls in the form of a pipe. They begin in 1131 and continue till 1831, and contain the annual accounts of SHERIFFS with the Exchequer, county by county. They are now in the Public Record Office, Chancery Lane, London.

Piper. Piper's news. Stale news; FIDDLER'S NEWS.

The Pied Piper. See PIED.

Tom Piper. So the piper is called in the MORRIS DANCE.

Who's to pay the piper? See under PAY.

Pippin. See PIP.

Pippin the Short. See under SHORT.

Pis-aller (pēz āl' ā) (Fr., worst course). A makeshift; something for want of a better; a last expedient.

Pisces (pis'kēz) (Lat. the fishes). A constellation and the twelfth sign of the ZODIAC.

Piso's Justice (pi' zō). Verbally right, but morally wrong. Seneca says that Piso condemned a man on circumstantial evidence for murder; but when the execution was about to take place, the man supposed to have been murdered appeared. The centurion sent the prisoner to Piso, and explained the situation to him; whereupon Piso condemned all three to death, saying, Fiat justitia (Lat., let justice be done). The condemned man was executed because he had been sentenced, the centurion because he had disobeyed orders, and the man supposed to have been murdered because he had been the cause of death to two innocent men.

Pistol. Formerly pistolet; so called from the old pistolese, a dagger or hanger (a short cut-and-thrust sword), for the manufacture of which Pistoia, in Tuscany, was famous.

Pocket pistol. See under POCKET.

To fire one's pistol in the air. Purposely to refrain from injuring an adversary. The phrase is often used of argument, and refers to the old practice of duellists doing this when they wished to discharge a "debt of honour" without incurring risks or wounding their opponent.

A steady voice said "Fire"; and the Duke raised his pistol. But Winchilsea's was still pointing at the ground. The Duke paused for an instant, fired, and hit his coat. Then Winchilsea fired in the air.
P. GUEDALLA: The Duke, viii, iii.

Pit-a-pat. My heart goes pit-a-pat. Throbs, palpitates. An echoic or a RICOCHET word, as "fiddle-faddle", "harum-scarum", "ding-dong", etc.

Anything like the sound of a rat
Makes my heart go pit-a-pat.

BROWNING: Pied Piper of Hamelin.

Pitch. The black resinous substance gets its name from Lat. pix; the verb (to fling, settle, etc.) is the M.E. pichen, pykken.

The devil to pay and no pitch hot. See under DEVIL.

He that touches pitch will be defiled. A rotten apple injures its companions. "Evil communications corrupt good manners." The saying occurs in Ecclesiasticus (xii, 1), "he that toucheth pitch shall be defiled therewith".

Pitch and pay. Pay up at once. There is a suppressed pun in the phrase: "to pay a ship" is to coat it with pitch.

The word is pitch and pay—trust none.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry V, II, iii.

Pitch and toss. A game in which coins are pitched at a mark, the player getting nearest having the right to toss all the other's coins into the air and take those that come down with heads up. Hence, to play pitch and toss with one's money, prospects, etc., is to gamble recklessly, to play DUCKS AND DRAKES.

The bounding pinnacle played a game
Of dreary pitch and toss;
A game that, on the good dry land,
Is apt to bring a loss.

THOS. HOOD: The Sea Spell.

To pitch into one. To assail him vigorously; to give it him hot.

To queer one's pitch. See under QUEER.

A pitched battle. See BATTLE.

Pitcher. From Med. Lat. picarium or bicarium; the word is a doublet of beaker.

Little pitchers have long ears. Little folk or children hear what is said when you little think it. The ear of a pitcher is the handle, made somewhat in the shape of a man's ear.

The pitcher went once too often to the well. The dodge was tried once too often, and utterly failed. The sentiment is proverbial in most European languages.

Pithecanthropus (pith e kán throp ús) or Java Man. The name given by Haeckel in 1868 to the hypothetical MISSING LINK; from Gr. pithekos, ape, and anthropos, man. Later Pithecanthropus was the generic name given to the remains of the extinct man-like ape discovered near Trinil, Java, in 1891. Cp. PEKIN MAN.

Pitt Diamond. A diamond of just under 137 CARATS found at the Parteel mines, India, and bought by Thomas Pitt (see DIAMOND PITT) in 1702 from a thief for a sum (said to have been £20,400) far below its real value. Hence Pope's reference:

Asleep and naked as an Indian lay,
An honest factor stole a gem away.
Moral Essays, Ep. iii, 361.

Pitt sold the diamond in 1717 to the Regent Orleans (hence its alternative name the "Regent Diamond") for £135,000; it later adorned the sword-hilt of NAPOLEON, and is still in the possession of France. Its original weight before cutting was 410 carats.

Pitt's Pictures. "Blind" windows were so called because many window spaces were blocked up when Pitt the younger greatly increased the window tax in 1782 and 1797, although houses with fewer than seven windows were exempted in 1792.

Pixie, or Pixy. A sprite or FAIRY of folklore, especially in CORNWALL and Devon, where some held pixies to be the spirits of infants who died before baptism. In Cornwall and West Devon figures of "piskeys" or pixies are still very much in evidence at "beauty spots" as souvenirs and lucky charms for tourists.

Place. Place-makers' Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Place aux dames (Fr.). Make way for the ladies; ladies first.

Placebo (plās ē' bō) (Lat., I shall please, or be acceptable). VESPERS for the dead; because the first antiphon at Vespers of the office of the Dead began with the words Placebo Domino in regione vivorum, "I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living" (Ps. cxvi, 9).

As sycophants and those who hoped to get something out of the relatives of the departed used to make a point of attending this service and singing the Placebo, the phrase to sing placebo came to mean to play the flatterer or sycophant. Chaucer gives the name to such a parasite in the Merchant's Tale and in the Parson's Tale says, "Flattereres been the develes chapelleyens that singen evere Placebo" (Sxi).

A king when he presides in council, let him beware how he opens his own inclination too much in that which he propoundeth; for else counsellors . . . instead of giving free counsel, will sing him a song of "placebo".

BACON: Essays (Of Counsel).

An innocuous medicine designed to humour a patient, and which may have a beneficial psychological and physical effect is called a placebo.

Placemen. A name given to those members of the HOUSE OF COMMONS who held "places" or offices of profit under the Crown. Their numbers grew steadily after the RESTORATION with the corrupt use of Crown patronage by the Treasury to gain support for the government of the day. (See WHIG BIBLE under BIBLE.) Placemen included ministers, civil servants, court officials, contractors, army and navy officers, etc. Attempts to limit their influence by Place Bills excluding them from the Commons were frequent, particularly from the 1690s until the 1740s, but few were passed. The objective was mainly secured by administrative reforms (1782-1870) which abolished places. The problem of patronage, however, still exists.

But what is said far too seldom is that the whole development of government intervention into so many aspects of economic and social affairs has meant a huge proliferation of jobs, salaries or honorifics, available for distribution to party loyalists.

MAX BELOFF: The Times article, 16 April 1968.

Plagiarist (plā' jā rist), one who appropriates another's ideas, etc., in literature, music, and so on, means strictly a kidnapper or manstealer. Martial applies it to a literary thief.

Plain, The. The GIRONDISTS were so called in the French Revolutionary National Convention, because they sat on the level floor or plain of the hall. After their overthrow this part of the House was called the marais or swamp, and included such members as were under the control of the MOUNTAIN.

It's all plain sailing. It's perfectly straightforward; there need be no hesitation about the course of action. A nautical phrase which should be written plane, not plain. Plane sailing is the art of determining a ship's position on the assumption that the earth is flat and she is sailing, therefore, on a plane, instead of a spherical surface, which is a simple and easy method of computing distances.

Plains Indians is the name given to the Indian tribes of the central prairie areas of North America from Alberta to Texas—once the land of the American bison or buffalo. They are the redskins of popular fame, with their feather head-dresses, teepees, and peace pipes. Among the numerous tribes are the Dakota, BLACKFEET, Cheyenne, Comanche, PAWNEE and APACHE.

Planets. The heavenly bodies that revolve round the SUN in approximately circular orbits; so called from Gr. planes, wanderer, because to the ancients they appeared to wander about among the stars instead of having fixed places.

The primary planets are MERCURY, VENUS, the Earth, MARS, JUPITER, SATURN, URANUS, and PLUTO (discovered in 1930); these are known as the major planets, the asteroids between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter being the minor planets.

The secondary planets are the satellites, or moons revolving round a primary.

Mercury and Venus are called inferior planets since their orbits are nearer to the sun than the Earth's; the remaining planets are superior planets. Only five of the planets were known to the ancients (the Earth not being reckoned), viz. Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn; but to these were added the Sun and MOON, making seven in all.

For the relation of metals and precious stones to the planets see PRECIOUS STONES.

Planet-struck. A blighted tree is said to be planet-struck. Epilepsy, paralysis, lunacy, etc., are attributed to the malignant aspects of the planets. Horses are said to be planet-struck when they seem stupefied, whether from want of food, colic, or stoppage.

They with speed

Their course through thickest constellations held,
Spreading their bane; the blasted stars looked wan,
And planets, planet-strook, real eclipse
Then suffered.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, X, 410.

To be born under a lucky, or unlucky planet. According to ASTROLOGY, some planet, at the birth of every individual, presides over his destiny. Some of the planets, like JUPITER, are lucky; and others, like SATURN, are unlucky. See HOUSES, ASTROLOGICAL.

Plank. Any one portion or principle of a political PLATFORM.

To walk the plank. To be put to the supreme test; also, to be about to die. Walking the plank was a mode of disposing of prisoners at sea, much in vogue among pirates in the 17th century.

Plantagenet (plăn tăj' e net). A name commonly given since the mid-17th century to the royal line now more properly called ANGEVIN and to the LANCASTRIAN and YORKIST kings from Henry IV to Richard III; the descendants of Geoffrey, Count of Anjou, and Matilda, daughter of Henry I. It may have arisen from Geoffrey of Anjou's habit of wearing a sprig of broom (planta genista) in his cap, or that he planted broom to improve his hunting covers. Henry II was Geoffrey's son. The House of Plantagenet therefore includes the following kings: Henry II, Richard I, John, Henry III, Edward I, II, and III, Richard II, Henry IV, V, VI, Edward IV and V, and Richard III. It was historically only a nickname, first used as a surname by Richard Duke of York, father of Edward IV.

Plate. In horse-racing, the GOLD or SILVER cup forming the prize; hence the race for such a prize.

A lot on one's plate. Slang for having much to do or worry about.

Plates of meat. RHYMING SLANG for "feet"; often abbreviated to plates.

Selling plate. A race in which owners of starters have to agree beforehand that the winners shall be sold at a previously fixed price.

Platform. The policy or declaration of a political party, that on which the party stands (cp. PLANK). In this sense it is an Americanism dating from before the mid-19th century. It was, however, used in the late 16th century of a plan or scheme of church government, and Milton says, "some . . . do not think it for the ease of their inconsequent opinions to grant that the Church-discipline is platformed in the Bible, but that it is left to the discretion of men" (Church Government).

Plato (c. 428-348 B.C.). The great Athenian philosopher, pupil of SOCRATES, and founder of the ACADEMY. Of his numerous writings the Republic has perhaps been the most influential. He was originally called Aristocles but the name Plato is said to have been bestowed by his gymnastic teacher, from his broad shoulders. Some say it arose from the breadth of his forehead.

Platonic bodies. An old name for the five regular geometric solids described by PLATO, viz. the tetrahedron, hexahedron, octahedron, dodecahedron, and icosahedron, all of which are bounded by like, equal, and regular planes.

Platonic love. Spiritual love between persons of opposite sexes; the friendship of man and woman, without any sexual implications. The phrase is founded on a passage towards the end of the Symposium in which PLATO was extolling not the non-sexual love of a man for a woman but the loving interest that SOCRATES took in young men—which was pure, and therefore noteworthy in the Greece of the period.

I am convinced, and always was, that Platonic Love is Platonic nonsense.

RICHARDSON: Pamela, III, lxxviii.

The Platonic Year. See PLATONIC CYCLE under CYCLE.

Platonism is characterized by the doctrine of pre-existing eternal ideas, and teaches the immortality and pre-existence of the soul, the dependence of virtue upon discipline, and the trustworthiness of cognition.

Plattddeutsch (plăt doich). Low German, the language of the (North) German plain, which, until 1500, was the business language of northern Europe. See HIGH GERMAN.

Play. "This may be play to you, 'tis death to us." The allusion is to ÆSOP'S FABLE of the boys throwing stones at some frogs.

As good as a play. Intensely amusing. Said to have been the remark of Charles II at the HOUSE OF LORDS debate on Lord Ross's Divorce Bill (1670).

He played his cards well. See under CARD.

Played out. Exhausted; out of date; no longer in VOGUE.

Playing possum. See POSSUM.

To play for time. To prolong or delay negotiations, coming to a decision, in the hope of staving off defeat, failure, etc.; as in CRICKET, when victory for the batting team is no longer possible in the remaining time, but cautious play may lead to a drawn game instead of defeat.

To play into someone's hands. See under HAND.

To play someone up. To be a nuisance to them, to harass and annoy, to behave in a troublesome fashion, as school-children are wont to "play up" certain of their teachers.

To play to the gallery, or to the gods. See GALLERY, and AMONG THE GODS under GOD.

To play up to someone. To seek to ingratiate oneself with a person by flattery, etc. Probably of theatrical origin.

Pleader, Pleading. See SPECIAL PLEADING.

Plebeian (ple bé' án). One of, or appertaining to, the common people; properly a free citizen of ROME, neither PATRICIAN nor client. From Lat. plebs, the common people.

Plebiscite (pleb'i sit). In Roman history, a law enacted by the "comitia" or assembly of tribes; nowadays it means the direct vote of the whole body of citizens of a state on some definite question; thus Louis Napoleon's COUP D'ÉTAT (2 December 1851) was confirmed by a carefully "rigged" plebiscite and in November 1852 another plebiscite approved the re-establishment of the Empire.

Pledge. To guarantee; to assign as security; hence in drinking a toast, to give assurance of friendship by the act of drinking.

Drink to me only with thine eyes,
And I will pledge with mine.

BEN JONSON: To Celia.

To sign, or take the pledge. To bind oneself by one's pledged word to abstain from intoxicating liquors. Such a pledge was taken by members of the BAND OF HOPE.

Pleiades (plí' a dēz). In classical myth, the seven daughters of ATLAS and Pleione, sisters of the HYADES. They were transformed into stars, one of which, MEROPE, is invisible, out of shame, because she married a mortal man; while others say it is ELECTRA who hides herself from grief for the destruction of TROY and its royal race. Electra is known as "the lost Pleiad".

One of those forms which flit by us, when we Are young, and fix our eyes on every face, . . .
Whose course and home we know not, nor shall know,
Like the lost Pleiad seen no more below.

BYRON: Beppo, xiv.

The great cluster of stars in the constellation TAURUS, especially the seven larger ones, were called the Pleiades by the Greeks from the word plein, to sail, because they considered navigation safe at the rising of the constellation, and their setting marked the close of the sailing season.

The Pleiad. A name frequently given to groups of seven particularly illustrious persons.

The Philosophical Pleiad. The Seven WISE MEN OF GREECE are sometimes so called.

The Pleiad of Alexandria. A group of seven contemporary poets in the 3rd century B.C., viz. Callimachus, Apollonius of Rhodes, Aratus, Philiscus (called HOMER the Younger), Lycophron, Nicander, and THEOCRITUS.

Charlemagne's Pleiad, the group of scholars with which the Emperor surrounded himself, viz. CHARLEMAGNE (who, in this circle, was known as "David"), Alcuin ("Albinus"), Adelard ("Augustine"), Angilbert ("Homer"), Riculfe ("Damætas"), Varnefrid, and Eginhard.

The French Pleiad of the 16th century, who wrote poetry in the metres, style, etc., of the ancient Greeks and Romans. Ronsard was their leader, the others being Daurat, Du Bellay, Belleau, Baif, Jodelle, and Pontus de Tyard. Scévole de Sainte-Marthe and Muretus are sometimes given instead of Jodelle and Pontus de Tyard.

The second French Pleiad. Seven contemporary poets in the reign of Louis XIII (1610-1643), very inferior to the "First Pleiad". They are Rapin, Commire, Larue, Santeuil, Ménage, Duprier, and Petit.

Plimsoll Line, or Mark. The mark fixing the maximum load line of a merchant vessel in salt water. It takes its name from Samuel Plimsoll (1824-1898), M.P. for Derby, who from 1870 led a campaign of protest against the overloading and overinsuring of unsafe shipping. His sensational outburst when Disraeli's government decided to drop the Shipping Bill in 1875 led to the Merchant Shipping (Plimsoll) Act of 1876.

Plon-plon. The sobriquet of Prince Napoleon Joseph Charles Bonaparte (1822-1891), son of Jerome Bonaparte, an adaptation of Craint-plon (Fear-bullet), the nickname he earned in the Crimean War.

Plonk. Also "RED BIDDY" or "Pinkie". An Australian term for cheap red wine fortified by methylated spirit. It is popularly applied to any cheap red wine.

Plough. Another name for the GREAT BEAR (see under BEAR).

Fond, Fool, or White Plough. The plough dragged about a village on PLOUGH MONDAY. Called white, because the MUMMERS were dressed in white, gaudily trimmed with flowers and ribbons. Called fond, or fool, because the procession is fond or foolish—i.e. not serious or of a business character.

Plough alms. In mediæval England, a payment of one penny for each plough team in the parish, paid to the priest a fortnight after EASTER.

Plough Monday. The first MONDAY after Twelfth Day is so called because it was the end of the CHRISTMAS holidays when men returned to their plough or daily work. It was customary for farm labourers to draw a plough (see FOND above) from door to door and solicit "plough-money" to spend in a frolic. The queen of the banquet was called Bessy. Cp. DISTAFF.

Speed the plough, or God speed the plough. A wish for success and prosperity in some undertaking. It is a very old phrase, and occurs in the song sung by ploughmen on PLOUGH MONDAY.

To be ploughed. To fail to pass an examination (see PLUCK).

To plough the sands. To engage in some altogether fruitless labour.

To plough with another's heifer. To use information obtained by unfair means, e.g. through a treacherous friend. A Biblical phrase. When the men of Timnath gave Samson the answer to his riddle, he replied:

If ye had not ploughed with my heifer, ye had not found out my riddle.

Judges xiv, 18.

To put one's hand to the plough. To undertake a task; to commence operations in earnest. Only by keeping one's eyes on an object ahead is it possible to plough straight.

And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

Luke, ix, 62.

To put the plough before the oxen. Another way of saying "to put the cart before the horse" (see CART).

Ploughbote. A bote or estover dating back to Saxon times, the tenant-right of taking wood from the estate for repairing the tools of husbandry; originally for the maintenance of the woodwork of the plough.

Plover. An old synonym for a dupe or GULL; also for a courtesan.

To live like a plover. To live on nothing, to live on air. Plovers, however, live on small insects and worms, which they hunt for in newly ploughed fields.

Plowden. "The case is altered," quoth Plowden. There is more than one story accounting for the origin of this old phrase—used by Jonson as the title of one of his comedies (1598). One is that Edmund Plowden (1518-1585), the great lawyer, was defending a gentleman who was accused of hearing MASS, and elicited the fact that the service was performed by a layman masquerading in priestly vestments for the purpose of informing against the worshippers. Thereupon the brilliant lawyer observed, "The case is altered, no priest, no mass", thus securing the acquittal of his client. Another version is that Plowden was asked what legal remedy there was against some hogs that trespassed on a complainant's ground. "There is a very good remedy," began the lawyer, but when told they were his own hogs, said, "Nay, then, the case is altered."

Pluck, meaning courage, determination, was originally pugilistic slang of the late 18th century, and meant much the same as heart. A "pug" who was lacking in pluck was a coward; the pluck of an animal is the HEART, liver, and lungs, that can be removed by one pull or pluck. Cp. the expressions bold heart, lily-livered (see LIVER), a man of another KIDNEY, BOWELS OF MERCY, a vein of fun, it raised his BILE, etc.

A rejected candidate at an examination is said to be plucked, because formerly at the ancient universities, when degrees were conferred and the names were read out before presentation to the Vice-Chancellor, the PROCTOR walked once up and down the room, and anyone who objected might signify his dissent by plucking the proctor's gown. This was occasionally done by tradesmen to whom the candidate was in debt.

"No, it isn't that, sir. I'm not afraid of being shot; I wish to God anybody would shoot me. I have not got my degree. I - I'm plucked, sir".

THACKERAY: Pendennis, ch. xx.

A plucked pigeon. One fleeced out of his money; one plucked by a ROOK or sharper.

There were no smart fellows whom fortune had tumbled . . . no plucked pigeons, or winged rooks - no disappointed speculators - no ruined miners.

SCOTT: Peveril of the Peak, ch. xi.

He's a plucked 'un. He's a plucky chap; there's no frightening him.

I'll pluck his goose for him. I'll cut his crest, lower his pride, make him EAT HUMBLE PIE. Comparing the person to a GOOSE, the threat is to pluck off his feathers in which he prides himself.

Plug. Plug song. A song given publicly, as on the radio. To plug in this connexion is to publicize somewhat excessively.

Plugged in. Au fait with the latest trends in fashion or popular trends generally. "Switched on" is similarly used; both are derived from electrical appliances.

Plug ugly. A rowdy, unpleasant character, a term said to have originated at Baltimore.

Plum. Old slang for a very large sum of money (properly £100,000), or for its possession. Nowadays the figurative use of the word means the very best part of anything, the prize, the "pick of the basket", a WINDFALL.

Plumes. In borrowed plumes. Assumed merit; airs and graces not merited. The allusion is to the fable of the jay who dressed up in peacock's feathers.

To plume oneself on something. To be proud of it, conceited about it; to boast of it. A plume is a feather, and to plume oneself is to feather one's own conceit.

Plump. To give all one's votes to a single candidate, or to vote for one only when one has the right to vote for more. The earlier phrase was to give a plumper, or to vote plump.

Plunger. One who plunges, i.e. gambles recklessly, and goes on when he can't afford it in the hope that his luck will turn. The 4th and last Marquis of Hastings was the first person so called by the TURF. He was the original of Cham-pagne Charlie and the most notorious spendthrift and wastrel of the mid-19th century. One night he lost three games of draughts for £1,000 a game. He then cut a pack of cards for £500 a cut, and lost £5,000 in an hour and a half. He paid both debts before he left the room.

Plus fours. Loose KNICKERBOCKERS overlapping the knee-band and thereby giving added freedom for active outdoor sports. They were particularly popular with golfers in the 1920s. The name derives from the four extra inches of cloth required below the knee in tailoring.

Plus ultra. The motto in the Spanish royal arms. It was once Ne plus ultra ("thus far and no farther"), in allusion to the PILLARS OF HERCULES, the ne plus ultra of the world; but after the discovery of America, and when Charles V inherited the crown of Aragon and Castile, with all the vast American possessions, he struck out ne, and assumed the words plus ultra for the national motto, the suggestion being that Spain could go farther.

Pluto. In Roman mythology, the ruler of the infernal regions, son of SATURN, brother of JUPITER and NEPTUNE, and husband of PROSERPINE; hence, the grave, the place where the dead go before they are admitted into ELYSIUM or sent to TARTARUS.

In World War II, Pluto was the code-name (from the initials of Pipe Line Under The Ocean) given to the pipelines to carry oil fuel laid across the bed of the English Channel—from Sandown to Cherbourg and from Dungeness to Boulogne.

Plutonian or Plutonist. See VULCANIST.

Plutonic Rocks. Granites, certain porphyries and other igneous unstratified crystalline rocks, supposed to have been formed at a great depth and pressure, as distinguished from the volcanic rocks which were formed near the surface. So called from PLUTO, as the lord of elemental fire. Richard Kirwan used the term in his Elements of Mineralogy, 1796.

Plutus. In Greek mythology, the god of riches. Hence, rich as Plutus, and plutocrat, one who exercises influence or possesses power through his wealth. The legend is that he was blinded by ZEUS so that his gifts should be equally distributed and not go only to those who merited them.

Plymouth Brethren. A sect of Evangelical Christians founded in Ireland about 1828 by J. N. Darby, one-time Anglican priest (hence they are sometimes called Darbyites), and deriving their name from Plymouth, the first centre set up in England (1830). In 1849 they split up into "Open Brethren" and "Exclusive Brethren". They have no organized ministry and lay emphasis on the Breaking of Bread each Sunday.

Pocahontas (pok á hon' tás). Daughter of Powhatan, an Indian chief of Virginia. She is said to have rescued Captain John Smith when her father was on the point of killing him. She subsequently married John Rolfe, the first Englishman to plant and cure tobacco. In 1616 she came to ENGLAND with her husband and infant son and was presented to James I and Queen Anne. She died off Gravesend (21 March 1617) when about to return to Virginia, and was buried in St. George's Church. Curiously enough she passed her stay at the Bell-Savage (see LA BELLE SAUVAGE).

The blessed
Pocahontas, as the historian calls her,
And great King's daughter of Virginia.
BEN JONSON: Staple of News, II, v (1625).

Pocket (M.E. poket, a pouch, small bag, etc.). From its attributive use for small articles designed to be carried in the pockets of a garment, as pocket handkerchief, pocket watch, it is figuratively used of numerous things and people of less than normal or average size. Thus, Germany, forbidden to build warships of over 10,000 tons by the Treaty of VERSAILLES (1919), constructed several formidable battleships purporting to be within this limit which were known as pocket battleships.

Pocket borough. Before the Reform Act of 1832, a borough where the electorate was so small that the local magnate had the borough "in his pocket", i.e. he was able to return his own nominee.

Pocket judgment. A bond under the hand of the debtor, countersigned by the sovereign. It could be enforced without legal process, but has for long fallen into disuse.

Pocket pistol. Colloquial for a flask carried in "self-defence", because we may not be able to get a dram on the road.

Queen Elizabeth's Pocket Pistol. An ancient bronze cannon given to Elizabeth I by the Netherlands in recognition of her help against Philip II of Spain. It used to overlook the Channel from the Dover Cliffs and is now in Dover Castle.

Pocket veto. When the President of the U.S.A. refuses to sign a Bill which has passed both Houses, he is said to pocket it.

Put your pride in your pocket. Lay it aside for the nonce.

To be in, or out of pocket. To be a gainer or loser by some transaction.

To have someone in one's pocket. To have complete influence over a person; to be sure of his ready complaisance in any matter.

To line one's pockets. To make a good deal of money, TO FEATHER ONE'S NEST (see under FEATHER); often with the implication of profiting at the expense of others.

To pocket an insult. To submit to an insult without showing annoyance.

To put one's hand in one's pocket. To give money (often to a charity).

Poccurante (pō kō kū rān' ti). (Ital. poccurante, caring little). Inouciant, DEVIL-MAY-CARE (see under DEVIL PHRASES), easy-go-lucky. Hence, poccurantism, indifference to matters of importance but concern about trifles. Also used for one who in argument leaves the main gist and rides off on some minor and indifferent point.

Podsnap. A pompous, self-satisfied man in Dickens's Our Mutual Friend, the type of one who is overburdened with stiff-starched etiquette and self-importance. Hence, Podsnappery. Cp. PECKSNIFF.

He always knew exactly what Providence meant. Inferior and less respectable men might fall short of that mark, but Mr. Podsnap was always up to it. And it was very remarkable (and must have been very comfortable) that what Providence meant was invariably what Mr. Podsnap meant.

Our Mutual Friend, Bk. I, ch. xi.

Podunk. A term for a little American ONE-HORSE TOWN; from the place near Hartford, Connecticut, of this name, which is of American Indian origin.

Poet. Poet Laureate. A court official, now appointed by the PRIME MINISTER, who composes odes in celebration of royal birthdays and State occasions. The appointment essentially dates from the time of James I, but in earlier times there had been an occasional Versificator Regis and the universities gave the LAUREL wreath to graduates in rhetoric and Latin versification and to meritorious poets, among whom Skelton was styled Laureatus. The laurel crown was anciently a mark of distinction and honour. The following is the list of Poets Laureate:

Ben Jonson, 1619-1637
Sir William Davenant, 1638-1668
John Dryden, 1670-1688
Thomas Shadwell, 1688-1692
Nahum Tate, 1692-1715
Nicholas Rowe, 1715-1718
Laurence Eusden, 1718-1730
Colley Cibber, 1730-1757
William Whitehead, 1757-1785
Thomas Warton, 1785-1790

Henry James Pyc, 1790-1813
 Robert Southey, 1813-1843
 William Wordsworth, 1843-1850
 Alfred Tennyson, 1850-1892
 Alfred Austin, 1896-1913
 Robert Bridges, 1913-1930
 John Masfield, 1930-1967
 Cecil Day Lewis, 1968-

Poeta nascitur, non fit. Poets are born, not made. See under BORN.

Poet's Corner. The southern end of the south transept of Westminster Abbey, first so called by Oliver Goldsmith because it contained the tomb of Chaucer. Addison had previously (The Spectator, No. 26, 1711) alluded to it as the "poetical quarter", in which he says—

I found there were Poets who had no Monuments, and Monuments which had no poets.

Among writers buried here are Spenser, Dryden, Dr. Johnson, Sheridan, Dickens, Browning, Tennyson, Macaulay, Hardy, and Kipling. There are many monuments to writers not buried here. Ben Jonson was buried in the north aisle of the Abbey, and Addison in Henry VII's Chapel.

The term Poet's Corner is also facetiously applied to the part of a newspaper in which poetical contributions are printed.

Point. Defined by EUCLID as "that which hath no parts". Playfair defined it as "that which has position but not magnitude", and Legendre says it "is a limit terminating a line", which suggests that a point could not exist without a line, and presupposes that we know what a line is.

A point of honour. See under HONOUR.

A point of order. In a formal deliberative assembly, a question raised as to whether a particular proceeding is in accordance with the rules of the body itself.

A point-to-point race. A race, especially a STEEPCHASE, direct from one point to another; a cross-country race.

On points. A World War II expression relating to the system of rationing food, clothing, etc. Apart from direct rationing of meat, bacon, sugar, fats and tea, miscellaneous groceries, etc., were given "points" values and each ration-book holder was given a certain number of points to spend in an allotted period. Hence "it's on points" was a common reference to many commodities.

Point of no return. The point in an aircraft's flight at which it has not enough fuel to return to its point of departure and must continue. Hence its figurative application, a point or situation from which there is no going back.

Armed at all points. Armed to the teeth; having no parts undefended.

A figure like your Father,
 Arm'd at all points exactly, cap-a-pe,
 Appears before them.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, ii.

To come to the point. To speak out plainly, to avoid circumlocution; to get to the gist of the matter; not to BEAT ABOUT THE BUSH. (See under BEAT.)

In point of fact. A stronger way of saying "As a fact", or "As a matter of fact".

Not to put too fine a point upon it. Not to be over delicate in stating it; the prelude to a blunt though truthful remark. The allusion here is to the sharp end of a tool or weapon, etc.

To carry one's point. To attain the desired end; to get one's way.

To dine on potatoes and point. To have potatoes without any relish or extras, a very meagre dinner indeed. When salt was dear and the salt-cellar empty, parents used to tell their children to point their potato to the cellar, and eat it. This was potato and point, and the "joke" lies in the allusion to a point-steak, which is the best portion.

To give one points. To be able to accord him an advantage and yet beat him; to be considerably better than he.

To make a point of doing something. To treat it as a matter of duty, or to make it a special object. The phrase is a translation of the older French faire un point de.

To stand on points. On punctilios; delicacy of behaviour. SHAKESPEARE puns on the phrase in the following quotation, the side allusion being that Quince, in the delivery of his Prologue, had taken no notice of the stops, or points:

This fellow doth not stand upon points.

A Midsummer Night's Dream, V, i.

To stretch a point. To exceed what is strictly right or proper. It may allude to the tagged laces called points, formerly used in costume; to "truss a point" was to tie the laces which fastened the garment; to "stretch a point", to stretch these laces, so as to adjust for growth or the temporary fullness after good feeding.

To truss his points. To tie the points of garments, especially hose. The points were cords tagged like shoe-laces, attached to doublets and hose, etc.; being very numerous, some second person was required to "truss" them or fasten them properly.

Point-blank. Direct. A term from gunnery; when a cannon is so placed that the line of sight is parallel to the axis and horizontal, the discharge is point-blank, and was supposed to go direct, without curve, to an object within a certain distance. In French point blanc is the white mark or BULL'S-EYE of a target, to hit which the ball or arrow must not deviate in the least.

Now art thou within point-blank of our jurisdiction regal.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt. II, IV, ii.

Point d'appui (pwān dā pwē'). A stand-point, a fulcrum, a base for action; a pretext to conceal the real intention. Literally, the point of support.

Point-device. An archaic expression meaning punctilious, minutely exact.

Men's behaviour should be like their apparel, not too strait or point device, but free for exercise or motion.

BACON: Essays (Of Ceremonies and Respects).

Pointillisme (pwān' till izm) (Fr. pointiller, to dot, to stipple). A Neo-Impressionist technique of painting with dots of pure colour, popularized by the French painter Georges Seurat (1859-1891). It is also known as the Divisionist technique. Cp. IMPRESSIONISM.

Poison. See MITHRIDATE.

Box-office poison. An American expression for an unsuccessful play, etc.

One man's meat is another man's poison. What is palatable or beneficial to one man is distasteful or harmful to another.

Poisson d'Avril (pwa' son dā vril) (Fr., April fish). The French equivalent of our APRIL FOOL.

Poke. A bag, pouch, or sack—from which comes our pocket, a little poke. The word is virtually obsolete except in the phrase to buy A PIG IN A POKE (see under PIG).

Poke bonnet. A long, straight, projecting bonnet, commonly worn by women in the early 19th century and later by SALVATION ARMY lassies and old-fashioned QUAKER women. Perhaps so called because it projects or pokes out in front.

To poke fun at one. To ridicule.

Poker face. An expressionless face characteristic of the good poker-player, who assumes it to conceal from his adversaries any idea of what cards he may be holding.

Poky. Cramped, narrow, confined, as a poky little room. Also poor and shabby.

The ladies were in their pokiest old headgear.

THACKERAY: The Newcomes, ch. lvii.

As a noun it is U.S. slang for a prison.

Polack (pō' lāk). An inhabitant of Poland, a term now superseded by Pole, although humorously used in the U.S.A.

So frowned he once, when, in an angry parle,
He smote the sledded Polacks on the ice.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, i.

Poland. There are many legends of early Poland. One is that Prince Popiel invited all his family to a banquet and when they were drunk killed them off with poisoned wine. He was duly punished when millions of mice entered his castle and devoured him. The chiefs then elected one Piast, a wheelmaker, to be their ruler, it having been reported that when he had been sitting in the garden with his wife two young men with white wings on their shoulders were with them, and this was deemed a favourable omen. The two ANGELS were Cyril and Methodius, the APOSTLES of central Europe. The Piast dynasty ruled from 880 until 1370. See also LAND OF THE WHITE EAGLE.

The Polish Corridor. The territory given to Poland by the Treaty of VERSAILLES (1919) to give her access to the Baltic Sea west of Danzig. The Corridor cut off East Prussia from the rest of Germany and proved to be a bone of contention from the outset. It followed roughly the line of the Vistula.

Pole. The stake, mast, measure (16½ ft.), etc., gets its name from Lat. palus, a pale or stake; pole—the North Pole, magnetic pole, etc., is from Gr. polos, axis, pivot.

Barber's pole. See under BARBER.

The Poles are the vintagers in Normandy. The Norman vintage consists of apples beaten down by poles. The French say, En Normandie l'on vendange avec la gaule, where gaule is a play on the word gaul, but really means a pole. During the German occupation of Paris (1941-1944) students once marched through the streets carrying two posts (deux gaules) and it took the Germans some time to realise that this was a play on the name De Gaulle—then a symbol of French nationality and liberty.

Under bare poles. See BARE POLES.

Polichinelle, Un Secret de. See under SECRET.

Polish. Polish off. To finish out of hand. In allusion to articles polished.

I'll polish him off in no time. I'll soon deal with him, give him a good drubbing.

To polish off a meal. To eat it quickly; to finish it off.

Spit and polish. See SPIT.

Politbureau. Formerly, the chief policy-making body of the Communist Party in the U.S.S.R., first formed in 1917. It examined matters before they were submitted to the government and consisted of five members. It was superseded by the PRESIDIUM of the Central Committee of the Communist Party in 1952.

Politeness of Kings. A definition of punctuality.

Politiques (pol i tēk'). In French history, a party of "moderates", formed after the Massacre of St. BARTHOLOMEW around the Duke of Montmorency and the Marshal de Cossé-Brissac, who reacted against the fanaticism of CATHOLIC LEAGUE and HUGUENOT alike, and sought to bring the wars of religion to an end. The Satyre Ménippée (see MENIPPUS) was their work and it championed the cause of Henry of Navarre as the future king of France.

Polka. A round dance said to have been invented about 1830 by a Bohemian servant girl, which soon took Europe by storm. It is danced by couples in 2/4 time, the characteristic feature being the rest on the second beat.

Poll (pōl) (of Teutonic origin) means the head; hence, the number of persons in a crowd ascertained by counting heads, hence the counting of voters at an election, and such phrases as to go to the polls, to stand for election, and poll tax, a tax levied on everybody.

The Cambridge term, the Poll, meaning students who obtain a pass degree, i.e. a degree without honours, is probably from Gr. hoi polloi, the common herd. These students—poll men, are said to go out in the poll, and to take a poll degree.

Pollux. In classical mythology the twin brother of CASTOR.

Polly, Mary. The change of M for P in pet names is by no means rare, e.g.—

Margaret, Maggie or Meggy, becomes Peggie, and Pegg or Peg.

Martha, Matty becomes Patty.

In the case of Mary—Polly we see another change by no means unusual—that of r into l or ll. Similarly, Sarah becomes Sally; Dorothea, Dora, becomes Dolly; Henry, Hal.

Polonius. A garrulous old courtier in SHAKESPEARE'S HAMLET, typical of the pompous, sententious old man. He was the father of Ophelia and lord chamberlain to the king of Denmark.

Poltergeist (pol tēr gist). A household spirit well known to spiritualists, remarkable for throwing things about, plucking the bed-clothes, making noises, etc. It is a German term—Polter, noise; Geist, spirit. See SAMPFORD GHOST.

Polt-foot. A club-foot. Ben Jonson calls VULCAN, who was lame, the "polt-footed philosopher". Variant spellings are poult and powl, and its literal meaning is chicken-foot.

Venus was content to take the blake Smith [Vulcan] with his powl foote.

LYLY: Euphues.

Poltroon. A coward; from Ital. poltro, a bed, because cowards are sluggards and feign themselves sick a-bed in times of war.

In falconry the name was given to a bird of prey, with the talons of the hind toes cut off to prevent it flying at game, probably from the old idea that the word was the Lat. pollice truncus, maimed in the thumb.

Polycrates (pol i krā' tēz). See AMASIS.

Polyhymnia, or Polymnia. The Muse of lyric poetry and the inventor of the lyre. She invented harmony and presided over singing. See MUSES.

Polyphemus (pol i fē' mūs). One of the CYCLOPS, who ruled over Sicily. When ULYSSES landed on the island the monster made him and twelve of his crew captives; six of them he ate, and then Ulysses contrived to blind him and escape with the rest of the crew (cp. LESTRIGONS). See also ACIS; GALATEA.

Pomander (pom ān dēr). From the Fr. pomme d'ambre, apple of AMBER or ambergris. A ball made of perfume, such as ambergris, which was worn or carried in a perforated case in order to ward off infection or counteract bad smells. The cases, usually of gold or silver, were also called "pomanders".

Pomatum (po mā' tùm). Another name for pomade, so called because originally made by macerating over-ripe apples (Fr. pommes) in grease.

There is likewise made an ointment with the pulpe of Apples and Swines grease and Rose water, which is used to beautifie the face . . . called in shops pomatum, of the Apples whereof it is made.

GERARD: Herbal, III, xcv (1597).

Pomfret Cakes. See PONTEFRACT.

Pommard. A red Burgundy wine, so called from a village of that name in the Côte d'Or, France. The word is sometimes colloquially used for cider, the pun being on pomme, apple.

Pommel. The pommel of a sword is the rounded knob terminating the hilt, so called from its apple-like shape (Fr.

pomme, apple); and to pommel or pummel one, to pound him with your fists, was originally to beat him with the pommel of your sword.

Pommie, Pommy. An Australian and New Zealand term for an Englishman, used both affectionately and disparagingly. Of uncertain origin, it may derive ultimately from pomme (apple) or pomegranate, possibly in allusion to the pink and white complexions of the English in contrast to their own tanned countenances.

Pomona (po mō' nà). The Roman goddess of fruits and fruit-trees (Lat. pomum), hence fruit generally.

Pompadour (pom' pa dôr), as a colour, is claret purple, so called from Louis XV's mistress, the Marquise de Pompadour (1721-1764).

There is an old song supposed to be an elegy on John Broadwood, a QUAKER, which introduces the word:

Sometimes he wore an old brown coat,
Sometimes a pompadore,
Sometimes 'twas buttoned up behind,
And sometimes down before.

The word is also applied to a fashion of hairdressing in which the hair is raised (often on a pad) in a wave above the forehead.

Pompey (pom' pi). In British naval slang, Portsmouth.

It is also a generic name formerly used of a black footman, as ABIGAIL used to be a lady's maid. (One of Hood's jocular book-titles was Pompeii, or Memoirs of a Black Footman, by Sir W. Gill (Sir W. Gill wrote a book on Pompeii).)

Pompey's Pillar. A Corinthian column of red granite, nearly 100 ft. high, erected at Alexandria by Publius, Prefect of Egypt, in honour of Diocletian and to record the conquest of Alexandria in 296. It was probably miscalled by travellers through ignorance. Cp. CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE.

Pongo. In the old romance of THE SEVEN CHAMPIONS of Christendom he was an amphibious monster of Sicily who preyed on the inhabitants of the island for many years. He was slain by the three sons of St. GEORGE.

Pongo is also a sailor's name for a soldier.

Pons Asinorum (ponz äs i nôr' ùm) (Lat., the asses' bridge). The fifth proposition, Bk. I, of EUCLID—the first difficult theorem, which dunces rarely got over for the first time without stumbling. It is anything but a "bridge"; it is really pedica asinorum, the "dolts' stumbling-block".

Pontefract, or Pomfret Cakes. Liquorice lozenges impressed with a castle and made at Pontefract since the 16th century. The name of the town is still frequently pronounced pumfret, representing the Anglo-Norman and M.E. Pontfret. The place was called Fractus Pons by Orderic (1097) and Pontefractus by John of Hexham (c. 1165), in allusion to the old Roman bridge over the Aire, broken down by William I in 1069, remains of which were still visible in the 16th century.

Pontiff. The term formerly applied to any BISHOP but now only to the POPE—the Supreme Pontiff. It means literally one who has charge of the bridges (Lat. pons, pontis, a bridge), and these were under the care of the principal college of priests in ancient Rome, the head of which was the Pontifex Maximus.

Pontius Pilate's Bodyguard. See REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Pony. Slang for £25; also (especially in the U.S.A.) for a translation CRIB; also for a small beer-glass holding slightly less than a gill.

In card games the person on the right hand of the dealer is called the pony, from Lat. pone, "behind", being behind the dealer.

Pony Express. This was the U.S. government mail system across the continent just before the days of railways and telegraphs. It ran from St. Joseph, Missouri, to the Pacific Coast and was inaugurated in 1860; less than two years later it was superseded by the electric telegraph. The schedule time for the whole distance was ten days, but Lincoln's inaugural address was taken across the continent in 7 days 17 hours. Fleet horses were used, not ponies, ridden for stages of 10 to 15 miles, the rider doing three stages before handing over the wallet. The service was operated by the firm of Russell, Majors and Waddell.

Pooh Bah, A. One who holds numerous offices simultaneously, usually from motives of self-interest. Pooh Bah, The Lord High Everything Else, is a character in Gilbert and Sullivan's Mikado, who was First Lord of the Treasury, Lord Chief Justice, Commander-in-Chief, Lord High Admiral, Master of the Buckhounds, Groom of the Back Stairs, Archbishop of Titipu, and Lord Mayor.

Poor. Poor as a church mouse. In a church there is no cupboard or pantry where a mouse may take his pickings and he thus has a lean time.

Poor as Job. The allusion is to JOB being deprived by SATAN of everything he possessed.

Poor as Lazarus. This is the beggar LAZARUS, full of sores, who was laid at the rich man's gate and desired to be fed with crumbs that fell from DIVES' table (Luke xvi, 19-31).

Poor Clares. See FRANCISCANS.

Poor Jack, or John. Dried hake. We have "JOHN DORY", a "jack" (pike), a "jack shark", etc., and Jack may be here a play on the word "Hake", and John a substitute for Jack.

'Tis well thou art not fish; if thou hadst, thou hadst been poor-john.

SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, I, i.

Cp. the jocular proof that an eel pie is a fish pie, a fish pie may be a jack pie, a jack pie is a john pie, and john pie is a pie john (pigeon).

Poor man. Scottish term for the blade-bone of a shoulder of mutton. In some parts of England it is termed a "poor knight of Windsor", because it holds the same relation to "Sir Loin" (see SIRLOIN) as a Windsor Knight does to a BARONET. Scott (Bride of Lammermoor, Note to ch. xix) tells of a laird terrifying an English landlord by saying that he "could relish a morsel of poor man" for his dinner. (See KNIGHTS OF WINDSOR.)

Poor Richard. The assumed name of Benjamin Franklin in a series of ALMANACS from 1732 to 1757. They contained maxims and precepts on temperance, economy, cleanliness, chastity, and other virtues; and several ended with the words "as poor Richard says".

Poor Robin's Almanack. A humorous ALMANAC, parodying those who seriously indulged in prophecy, published at intervals from 1662 to as late as 1828. The early issues were almost certainly the work of William Winstanley (c. 1628-1698). As a specimen of the "predictions", the following, for January 1664, may be cited:

Strong Beer and good Fires are fit for this Season as a Halter for a Thiefe; and, when every Man is pleas'd, then 'twill be a Merry World indeed . . . This month we may expect to hear of the Death of some Man, Woman, or Child, either in Kent or Christendom.

There are none poor but those whom God hates. This does not mean that poverty is a punishment, but that those whom God loves are rich in his love. In this sense DIVES may be the poor man, and LAZARUS abounding in that "blessing of the Lord which maketh rich".

Pope. The word represents the O.E.

papa, from ecclesiastical Latin, and Gr. pappas, the infants' word for father.

In the early Church the title was given to many bishops; Leo the Great (440-461) was the first to use it officially, and in the time of Gregory VII (1073-1085) it was, by decree, specially reserved to the Bishop of Rome. Cp. PONTIFF.

According to Platina, Sergius II (844-847) was the first pope who changed his name on assuming office. Some accounts have it that his name was Hogsmouth, others that it was "Peter di Porca" and he changed it out of deference to St. PETER, thinking it arrogant to style himself Peter II. However, the first clear case of changed name was when Peter, Bishop of Pavia, on election (983) changed his name for that of John XIV.

Gregory the Great (590-604) was the first pope to adopt the title Servus Servorum Dei (the Servant of the Servants of God). It is founded on Mark x, 44.

The title Vicar of Christ, or Vicar of God, was adopted by Innocent III, 1198.

Including Paul VI, there are commonly 261 popes enumerated, and the nationality of two of them is unknown. Of the remainder, 208 were Italians, 15 Frenchmen, 12 Greeks, 6 Germans, 6 Syrians, 3 Africans, 3 Spaniards, 2 Dalmatians, and 1 each Dutch, English, Portuguese, and Jew (St. Peter).

For the drink called a Pope, see BISHOP.

The Black Pope. The General of the JESUITS.

The Pope of Geneva. A name given to Calvin (1509-1564).

The Red Pope. The Prefect of the PROPAGANDA.

The Pope's eye. The tender piece of meat (the lymphatic gland) surrounded by fat in the middle of a leg of an ox or a sheep. The French call it Judas's eye, and the Germans the priest's tit-bit.

The Pope's nose. Another name for the PARSON'S NOSE.

The Pope's slave. So Cardinal Cajetan (d. 1534) called the Church.

Pope Joan. A once popular card game played with an ordinary pack minus the eight of diamonds, called the "Pope Joan" (see under JOAN); also a circular revolving tray with eight compartments.

Popish Plot (1678). A fictitious JESUIT plot to murder Charles II and others, enthrone the Duke of York, fire the CITY OF LONDON, after which, with the aid of French and Irish troops, a PROTESTANT massacre was to ensue. The plot was invented by the scoundrelly Titus Oates (1649-1705) and before the anti-Catholic panic abated in 1681 some 35 Catholics were judicially murdered, including the Roman Catholic Primate of Ireland. Oates was eventually pilloried, whipped, and imprisoned when James II became king.

Popinjay. An old name for a parrot (ultimately of Arabic origin; Gr. papagos), hence, a conceited or empty-headed fop.

I then, all smarting with my wounds being cold,
To be so pester'd with a popinjay,
Out of my grief and my impatience,
Answered neglectingly I know not what,
He should, or he should not.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt. I, I, iii.

The Festival of the Popinjay. The first SUNDAY in MAY, when a figure of a popinjay, decked with parti-coloured feathers and suspended from a pole, served as a target for shooting practice. He whose ball or arrow brought down the bird, by cutting the string by which it was hung, received the proud title of "Captain Popinjay" for the rest of the day, and was escorted home in triumph.

Poplar. The poplar was consecrated to HERCULES, because he destroyed Kakos in a cavern of Mount Aventine, which was covered with poplars. In the moment of triumph, the hero plucked a branch from one of the trees and bound it round his head. When he descended to the infernal regions, the heat caused a profuse perspiration which blanched the under surface of the leaves, while the smoke of the eternal flames blackened the upper surface. Hence the leaves of the poplar are dark on one side and white on the other.

The white poplar is fabled to have originally been the NYMPH Leuce, beloved by PLUTO. He changed her into this at death.

Poppy Day. See REMEMBRANCE DAY.

Popski's Private Army. A British volunteer force in World War II operating under the orders of Lieut.-Col. Peniakoff in a series of daring and highly successful raids in North Africa and southern Europe. The Colonel was familiarly known as "Popski", and his irregular forces wore the initials P.P.A. on their shoulders, much to the chagrin of conservative military circles.

Popular Front. A political alliance of all Left-wing parties (LABOUR, LIBERAL, Socialist, but not necessarily Communist) against reactionary government and especially dictatorship.

Populist. A term applied in the U.S.A. to a member of the People's Party, an agrarian protest movement formed at St. Louis in 1891. They demanded free and unlimited silver currency, the prohibition of alien land ownership, state control of transport, etc.

Porcelain. Ital. porcellana, from porcella, a little pig, the name given by the early Portuguese traders to cowrie-shells, the shape of which is not unlike a pig's back, and later to Chinese earthenware, which is white and glossy, like the inside of these shells.

Porch, The. A philosophic sect, generally called STOICS (Gr. stoa, a porch), because ZENO, the founder, gave his lectures in the public ambulatory, Stoa poikile (the painted colonnade), in the agora of ATHENS.

The successors of Socrates formed societies which lasted several centuries; the Academy, the Porch, the Garden.

SEELEY: Ecce Homo.

Pork, Pig. The former is Norman, the latter Saxon. As in the case of most edible domestic animals, the Norman word is used for the meat and the Saxon for the live animal. See PIG.

Pork Barrel. An American term applied to legislation, normally achieved by LOG-ROLLING, which makes available Federal funds for local improvements or developments in the district of the congressman who promotes the measure to maintain popularity with the electorate. It is an allusion to old plantation days when slaves assembled at the pork barrel for the allowance of pork reserved for them, and "pork barrel" for the congressman is a reward for party service.

Porphyrogenitus (pōr fī ro jen' i tūs). A surname of the Byzantine Emperor, Constantine VII (905-959). It signifies "born in the purple" (Gr. porphuros, purple; genetos, born), and a son born to a sovereign after his accession is so designated. It was specifically an epithet of the Byzantine emperors born while their father was reigning and the term refers to the purple room used by the empress for her accouchement.

Porridge. Everything tastes of porridge. However we may deceive ourselves, whatever CASTLES IN THE AIR we may construct, the facts of home life will always intrude.

He has supped all his porridge. Eaten his last meal; he is dead.

Keep, or save your breath to cool your porridge. A blunt remark to one who is giving unwanted or unsought advice.

Well, Friar, spare your breath to cool your porridge; come, let us now talk with deliberation, fairly and softly.

RABELAIS: Pantagruel, etc., V, xxviii.

Not to earn salt to one's porridge. To earn practically nothing; to be a "waster".

Port, meaning the left-hand side of a vessel when facing forward, is probably port, harbour, and it replaced the earlier larboard which was so easily confused with STARBOARD, so called from the days when the steerboard or rudder was carried over the right-hand side, and it was therefore necessary to come alongside on the larboard side. It is presumed the term port derives from the fact that the larboard was thus towards the side of the port.

A vessel's port-holes are so called from Lat. porta, a door; the harbour is called a port from Lat. portus, a haven; the dark red wine gets its name from Oporto, Portugal (which is again the Lat. portus), and port, the way of bearing oneself, is from Lat. portare, to carry.

Any port in a storm. Said when one is in a difficulty and has to take whatever refuge, literal or metaphorical, offers itself.

Port-Royal. A convent of CISTERCIAN nuns about 8 miles S.W. of VERSAILLES, which in the 17th century became a centre of the JANSENIST influence. In 1626 the community had moved to PARIS and Port-Royal des Champs was occupied mostly by laymen living a semi-monastic existence, among them many distinguished scholars. In 1648 some of the nuns returned and the hermits moved elsewhere in the neighbourhood.

From 1653 it came under papal condemnation for its adherence to Jansenism, and Louis XIV began active persecution from 1661. By 1669 the conformist nuns were all at the Paris house and the supporters of Jansen remained at Port-Royal des Champs until forcibly removed in 1709. The buildings were duly destroyed but Port-Royal-de-Paris remained in being till the French Revolution.

Porte, or Sublime Porte. Originally the official name of the OTTOMAN Court at Constantinople, and later used as a synonym for the Turkish government. The word is the French translation of an Arabic word for "gate", the gate in question being the Imperial Gate or "High" (sublime) gate of the SERAGLIO at Constantinople.

Porteous Riots. At Edinburgh, in September 1736, a smuggler awaiting death for robbing an excise-collector escaped with the aid of Andrew Wilson, a fellow culprit. At the latter's execution, Lieutenant Porteous ordered the town guard to fire on the mob, which had become tumultuous; about six people were killed and eleven injured. Porteous was condemned to death but temporarily reprieved; whereupon some citizens burst into the gaol and, dragging him to the Grassmarket, hanged him by torchlight on a barber's pole. The Lord Provost was dismissed as a consequence and the city fined £2,000. The episode is featured in Scott's Heart of Midlothian.

Porter. See ENTIRE; STOUT.

Portia (pôr'shà). A rich heiress and "lady barrister" in Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice, in love with Bassanio. Her name is often used for a female advocate.

Portland Vase. A cinerary urn of transparent blue glass, coated with opaque white glass cut in cameo fashion, found in a tomb (supposed to be that of Alexander Severus) near ROME in the 17th century. In 1770 it was purchased from the Barberini Palace by Sir William Hamilton for 1,000 guineas, and came afterwards into the possession of the Duke of Portland, one of the trustees of the BRITISH MUSEUM, who placed it in that institution for exhibition. In 1845 a lunatic named Lloyd dashed it to pieces, but it was so skilfully repaired that the damage is barely visible. It is ten inches high, and six in diameter at the broadest part.

Portmanteau Word. An artificial word made up of parts of others, and expressive of a combination denoted by those parts—such as squarson, a cross between a squire and a parson. Lewis Carroll invented the term in Through the Looking-glass, ch. vi; slithy, he says means lihe and slimy, mimsy is flimsy and miserable, etc. So called because there are two meanings "packed up" in the one word.

Portreeve. In Saxon times and later, the chief magistrate of a mercantile town, port here meaning town. See also REEVE.

Portsmouth. The Portsmouth Defence. This is a ploy whereby a man accused of assault pleads guilty but in defence says that he was outraged by a homosexual advance being made to him. It stems, of course, from Portsmouth being the chief port of the British Navy, where many men of all sorts and conditions are thrown together.

Portsoken Ward. The most easterly ward of the City of LONDON. (Port, town; soke, franchise.) It was the soke of the old KNIGHTENGUILD outside the wall in the parish of St. Botolph, Aldgate.

Portumnus. See PALÆMON.

Poseidon (pò sí' don). In Greek mythology, the god of the sea, the counterpart of the Roman NEPTUNE. He was the son of CRONOS and RHEA, brother of ZEUS and HADES, and husband of AMPHITRITE. It was he who, with APOLLO, built the walls of TROY, and as the Trojans refused to give him his reward he hated them and took part against them in the TROJAN WAR. Earthquakes were attributed to him, and he was said to have created the first HORSE.

Poser. Formerly used of an examiner, one who poses (i.e. "opposes") questions, especially a BISHOP's examining chaplain, and for each of the two representatives of the FELLOWS of King's College, Cambridge, among the examiners for scholarships to the Foundation of Eton and King's in the days when scholarships at King's were closed to all except scholars of Eton.

The examination [for an Eton scholarship] was conducted by the Provosts of Eton and King's, the Fellows of Eton and two representatives of the Fellows of King's called Posers, so called either because they posed you with questions you could not answer, or because they placed you on the list. OSCAR BROWNING, Memories of Sixty Years (1910).

Nowadays the word usually denotes a puzzling question or proposition.

Posh. This colloquialism for "grand", "SWELL", or "first rate" has its origin in the old days of constant steamship travel between England and India. Passengers travelling by the P. & O. (Peninsular and Oriental) would, at some cost, book their return passage with the arrangement "PORT Outward STARBOARD Homeward", thus ensuring cabins on the cooler side of the ship, as it was usually quite unbearably hot when crossing the Indian Ocean. Passages were booked "P.O.S.H." accordingly, and Posh soon came to be applied to a first-class passenger who could afford this luxury.

Positivism. A term originally applied to the system of Auguste Comte (1798-1857), which only recognized observable ("positive") facts scientifically established and disregarded metaphysical and theological considerations. Its chief English exponent was Frederic Harrison (1831-1923) who actively promoted it as a religious system centred on the worship of humanity.

In the wider sense, Positivism applies to any philosophical approach which rejects metaphysics and confines itself to the facts of experience.

Posse (pos' i) (Lat., to be able). A body of men—especially CONSTABLES—who are armed with legal authority.

Posse Comitatus. The whole power of a county—that is, all male members of the county over 15 years of age with the exception of clergymen and peers, who may be summoned by a SHERIFF to assist in preventing a riot, or enforcing process. In modern times assistance is limited in practice to constables and special constables.

Possum. To play possum is to lie low, to feign quiescence, to dissemble. The phrase comes from the opossum's habitual attempt to avoid capture by feigning death.

Post. Post-and-rail. Wooden fencing made of posts and rails. In Australia, strong tea as made in the BUSH or OUTBACK in which the stalks are floating is called post-and-rail tea.

Post Captain. A term used in the Royal Navy from about 1730 to 1815 to distinguish an officer who held a captain's commission (post) from one of inferior rank who had been given the title by courtesy because he was in command of a small ship or was acting as captain. Ships below the size of a frigate were not entitled to a post captain.

Post paper. A standard size of paper measuring 15 × 19½ in. in writing papers, and 15½ × 19½ in. in printings; so called from an ancient watermark which has been supposed to represent a post-horn. This horn or bugle mark was, however, in use as early as 1314, long before anything in the nature of a postman or his horn existed. It is probably the famous horn of ROLAND.

Beaten on the post. Only just beaten; a racing term, the "post" being the winning-post.

By return of post. By the next mail in the opposite direction; originally the phrase referred to the messenger, or "post", who brought the dispatch and would return with the answer.

From pillar to post. See PILLAR.

Knight of the post. See under KNIGHT.

Post haste. With great speed or expedition. The allusion is to the system of postal messengers changing their horses every 20 miles or so, a method used by travellers in a great hurry. The term was in use by the early 16th century.

To be posted in a club is to have one's name put upon the notice board as no longer a member, for non-payment of dues or other irregularity. In the Army and R.A.F. it means to be assigned to a specific post or appointment; the naval term is to be drafted.

To be well posted. To be thoroughly acquainted with it, well informed. Originally an American colloquialism, probably from the counting-house, where ledgers are posted. In the U.S.A. it means that hunting and fishing are prohibited—land posted with signs.

To run your head against a post. To go ahead heedlessly and stupidly, or as if you had no eyes.

Post (Lat., after), Post factum (Lat.). After the act has been committed.

Post hoc, ergo propter hoc (Lat.). After this, therefore because of this; expressive of the fallacy that because one thing follows another, the former is the cause of the latter. Because a man drinks a glass of beer and then falls over it does not follow that the beer was the cause of his fall. He may have actually slipped on a banana skin.

Post meridiem (Lat.). After noon; usually contracted to "P.M."

Post mortem (Lat.). After death; as, a post-mortem examination, for the purpose of ascertaining the cause of death.

A post-mortem degree. In old university slang, a degree given to a candidate after having failed at the POLL.

Post nati (Lat., those born after). Historically, a term referring to a judicial decision of 1607 which decided that all those born in SCOTLAND after James VI's accession as James I of ENGLAND (1603) were natural born subjects of the king of England. James unsuccessfully tried to bring about the union of England and Scotland and to get the English Parliament to agree to the naturalization of his Scottish subjects.

Post obit (Lat. post obitum, after decease, i.e. of the person named in the bond). An agreement to pay for a loan by a larger sum to be paid on the death of the person specified from whom the borrower has expectations.

Post term (Lat. post terminum, after the term). The legal expression for the return of a writ after the term, and for the fee that then is payable for its being filed.

Post-Impressionism. The name applied to the phase of painting that followed IMPRESSIONISM. The chief exponents were Cézanne, Gauguin, Van Gogh, and Seurat. It aimed at synthesis and the expression of the material and spiritual significance of the subject free from restraint. Cp. POINTILLISME.

Poste restante (pōst res tant') (Fr., remaining post). A department at a post office to which letters may be addressed for callers, and where they will remain (within certain limits) until called for.

Posteriori. See A POSTERIORI.

Postman Poet. See DEVONSHIRE POET.

Postman's knock. An old parlour kissing game. The girls are each given a number. The "postman" knocks on the door a certain number of times and the girl whose number corresponds with the number of knocks has to kiss the postman.

Posy properly means a verse or sentence inscribed on a ring or other object and is a contraction of poesy. The meaning of a bunch of flowers, a nosegay, probably comes from the custom of sending verses with gifts of flowers. Cp. GARLAND.

About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring
That she did give me; whose posy was,
For all the world, like cutler's poetry
Upon a knife, Love me, and leave me not.
SHAKESPEARE: The Merchant of Venice, V, i.

Pot. Apart from designating a variety of vessels and containers, the word pot is one of the many slang terms for the drug marijuana.

A big pot. An important person; also descriptive of a big belly.

A little pot is soon hot. A little person is quickly "riled". Grumio makes humorous use of the phrase in SHAKESPEARE'S The Taming of the Shrew (IV, i).

A pot of money. A large amount of money; especially a large stake on a horse.

A watched pot never boils. Said as a mild reproof to one who is showing impatience; watching and anxiety won't hasten matters.

Gone to pot. Ruined, gone to the bad. The allusion is to the pot in which left-overs of cooked meat are put ready for their last appearance as a hash.

In the melting pot. Affairs are in a state of flux or transition; the outcome is still not apparent. The allusion is obvious.

The pot calling the kettle black. Said of one accusing another of faults similar to those committed by himself.

The pot of hospitality. The pot or cauldron hanging over the fire, which in IRELAND used to be dipped into by anyone who dropped in at meal-times, or required refreshment.

To keep the pot a-boiling. To keep things going briskly, to see that the interest does not flag; also to go on paying one's way and making enough to live on.

Pot-boiler. Anything done merely for the sake of the money it will bring in—because it will “keep the pot a-boiling”, i.e. help to provide the means of livelihood; applied especially to work of small merit by artists and writers.

Pot-hook. The hook over an open fire on which hung the pot. The term was applied to a “hooked” stroke used in writing, especially to the stroke terminating in a curve formerly practised by children in learning to write, as in the second element of n.

Pot-hunter. One whose main aim is the collecting of prizes rather than enjoying a sport or activity for its own sake, the pot being the silver cup commonly awarded for sporting events, etc.

Pot-valour. Courage provided by liquor, DUTCH COURAGE; one so fortified is said to be pot valiant.

Pot-wallopers. Before the Reform Act of 1832, those who possessed a vote as householders because they had boiled their own pot at their own fireplace in the constituency for at least six months. The earlier form was pot-waller, from O.E. weallan, to boil.

Potato. This very useful and common vegetable (Solanum tuberosum) was introduced by the Spaniards from America into Europe. Sir Walter Raleigh is supposed to have introduced it on his Irish lands from Virginia about 1585, and Sir John Hawkins brought back the sweet potato from the Caribbean in 1565. This latter plant, Ipomœa batatas, from which the word potato is derived, is supposed to have aphrodisiac qualities and Falstaff refers to them when he says, “Let the sky rain potatoes” (SHAKESPEARE: Merry Wives of Windsor, V, v).

Both spud and murphy are slang terms for a potato and anyone with the name Murphy is always nicknamed “Spud”.

Only two things in this world are too serious to be jested on—potatoes and matrimony.
Irish Aphorism.

A set of circumstances or an issue which is difficult, risky, or disagreeable to handle is colloquially called a hot potato. In the U.S.A. cold potato means “cold fish”.

Potato Jones. Captain D. J. Jones, who died in 1962 aged 92. In 1937, with his steamer Marie Llewellyn loaded with potatoes, he tried to run General Franco's blockade off Spain, but was prevented by a British warship. Two other blockade-running captains were called Ham-and-Egg Jones and Corncob Jones.

Potato War. The Prussian name for the War of the Bavarian Succession (1778–1779), because the operations largely revolved around the acquisition or denial to the enemy of supplies.

Potatoes and Point. See under POINT.

To think small potatoes of it. To think very little of it, to account it of very slight worth or importance.

Potato-bogle. So the Scots call a scarecrow, the head of these bird-bogies being a big potato or turnip.

Poteen (po tēn') (Irish poitin, little pot). Whisky that is produced privately in an illicit still, and so escapes duty.

Potent. Cross potent. A heraldic CROSS, each limb of which has an additional cross-piece like the head of an old-fashioned crutch; so called from Fr. potence, a crutch. It is also known as a Jerusalem cross.

Potichomania (po tēsh' ō mā' ni à). The name is a combination of Fr. potiche, glass vase, and manie, craze or fad. It denotes the art of decorating plain glass vases, etc., on the inside with patterned paper designs to imitate decorated porcelain of various kinds. Glass panels, cheval-screens, chiffoniers, and other furniture was similarly dealt with. The art spread from France to ENGLAND in the early 19th century and is fully described in Cassell's Household Guide of 1875. A debased form of potichomania consisted in sticking figures on the outside of pottery jars and varnishing over the whole. Such jars were called “Dolly Varden” jars.

Potiphar's Wife (pot' i fār) is unnamed both in the BIBLE (Gen. xxxix, 7) and the KORAN. Some Arabian commentators have called her Rahil, others ZULEIKA, and it is this latter name that the 15th-century Persian poet gives her in his Yusuf and Zulaikha.

In C. J. Wells's poetic drama Joseph and His brethren (1824), of which she is the heroine, she is named Phraxanor.

Potlatch. Among certain North American Indians of the north-west coast, a feast at which gifts are distributed lavishly to the guests while the hosts sometimes destroy some of their own valuable possessions. It is a social barbarity to refuse an invitation to a potlatch, or not to give one in return.

Potpourri (pō poo' rē) (Fr.). A mixture of dried sweet-smelling flower-petals and herbs preserved in a vase. Pourri means rotten and potpourri is literally the vase containing the "rotten" flowers. It is also a HOTCH-POTCH or OLLA PODRIDA; and in music, a medley of favourite tunes strung together.

Pott. A size of printing and writing paper (15½ × 12½ in.); so called from its original watermark, a pot, which really represented the Holy GRAIL.

Potter's Field. A name applied to a burial ground formerly reserved for strangers and the friendless poor. It is an allusion to the field bought by the chief priests with the thirty pieces of silver returned to them by the repentant JUDAS (Matt. xxvii, 7).

And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in.

Poulaines (poo' lānz). The long pointed toes of the 14th century. They were put on the feet of suits of armour for purposes of defence. They appeared also on the fashionable souliers à la poulaine. The fashion is thought to have come from Poland—whence the name.

Poult (pōlt). A chicken, or the young of the turkey, guinea-fowl, etc. The word is a contraction of pullet, from Late Lat. pulla, a hen, whence poultry, poulterer, etc.

Poulter's Measure. In prosody, a metre consisting of alternate ALEXANDRINES and fourteeners, i.e. twelve-syllable and fourteen-syllable lines. The name was given to it by Gascoigne (1576) because, it is said, poulterers—then called poulters—used sometimes to give twelve to the dozen and sometimes fourteen. The following specimen is from Surrey's Complaint of the absence of her lover, being upon the sea:

Good ladies, ye that have your pleasure in exile,
Step in your foot, come take a place, and mourn with me awhile,
And such as by their lords do set but little price
Let them sit still, it skills them not what chance come on the dice.

Pound. The unit of weight (Lat. pondus, weight); also, before the decimalization of the British currency, cash to the value of twenty SHILLINGS sterling, because in the CARLOVINGIAN period the Roman pound (twelve ounces) of pure SILVER was coined into 240 silver pennies. The symbols £ and lb. are for libra, the Latin for a pound. In for a penny, in for a pound. See under PENNY.

Pound of flesh. The whole of the bargain, to the last letter of the agreement, the bond literatim et verbatim. The allusion is to Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice (IV, i), where Shylock bargained with Antonio for a "pound of flesh" but was foiled in his suit by PORTIA, who said the bond was expressly a pound of flesh, and therefore (1) the Jew must cut the exact quantity, neither more nor less than a just pound; and (2) in so doing he must not shed a drop of blood.

Pour. To pour down the drain. Figuratively, to waste one's resources, especially money, on useless, totally unproductive or unprofitable projects.

Poverty. When poverty comes in at the door, love flies out at the window. An old proverb, given in Ray's Collection (1742), and appearing in many languages. Keats says much the same in Lamia (Pt. II):

Love in a hut, with water and a crust,
Is—Love forgive us—cinders, ashes, dust.

Powder. I'll powder your jacket for you. A corruption of Fr. poudrer, to dust. Cp. I'LL DUST YOUR JACKET FOR YOU under DUST.

Not worth powder and shot. Not worth the trouble; the thing aimed at is not worth the cost of the ammunition.

Power. Black Power. An emotive concept originating among certain sections of Negro opinion in the U.S.A. since 1966, whose advocates aim at redressing racial injustice by militant black nationalism that allows for violence and race war.

Flower Power. The power of the "Flower Children", based on the slogan "Make Love not War"; the Flower Children or Beautiful People being a new form of HIPPIY movement whose adherents are characterized by the wearing of bells and flowers. The Flower Children appeared in Britain in 1967, taking their pattern from San Francisco.

The powers that be. A common expression applied to those in authority, especially those who exercise control of society as whole. The phrase is taken from Rom. xiii, 1—"The powers that be are ordained of God."

Pow-wow. A consultation. Derived from the North American Indians.

Præmonstratensian. See PREMONSTRATENSIAN.

Præmunire (prē mū nī' rē). The title of numerous statutes passed from 1353, and especially that of 1393 designed to assert the rights of the Crown against encroachments from the Papacy, particularly rights of patronage, the removal of cases from the King's courts, and EXCOMMUNICATION. The name also denotes the offence, the writs, and the punishment under these statutes. The writ begins with the words præmunire facias, "that you cause to be forewarned". The most famous case of præmunire was when Henry VIII invoked the statute against Cardinal Wolsey in 1529 on account of his activities as Papal legate. A peer so charged cannot be tried by his peers, but must accept a jury. The last statute involving præmunire was the Royal Marriage Act of 1772.

Prætorian Guard, or Prætorians. Prætor was the title given to a provincial consul who had military powers and the general's bodyguard was the cohors prætoria. From the time of AUGUSTUS to that of Constantine, the Prætorians were the household guard of the Roman emperors. In due course they acquired a dangerous power of making and unmaking emperors in times of crisis and they were eventually (312) dispersed among the legions. Cp. JANISSARIES.

Pragmatic Sanction (Gr. pragmatikos, business-like, official). A term originating in the BYZANTINE EMPIRE to denote a public decree and later used by European sovereigns for important declarations defining their powers, settling the succession, etc. Prominent among such was the Pragmatic Sanction of St. LOUIS, 1269, and that of Charles VII in 1438, asserting the rights of the Gallican Church against the Papacy; that which settled the Empire of Germany in the House of Austria in 1439; the instrument by which Charles VI of Austria settled the succession of his daughter, Maria Theresa, in 1713; and that of Naples, 1759, whereby Charles III of Spain ceded the succession to the Kingdom of Naples to his third son and his heirs in perpetuity. The Pragmatic Sanction of 1713 is the most usually referred to unless some qualification is added.

Pragmatism (Gr. pragma, deed). The philosophical doctrine that the only test of the truth of human cognitions or philosophical principles is their practical results, i.e. their workableness. It does not admit absolute truth, as all truths change their trueness as their practical utility increases or decreases. The word was introduced in this connexion about 1875 by the American logician C. S. Peirce (1839-1914) and was popularized by William James, whose Pragmatism was published in 1907.

Prairie Schooner. A large covered wagon, drawn by oxen or mules, used to transport settlers across the North American continent.

Praise the Lord and Pass the Ammunition. A World War II phrase used by an American Naval chaplain during the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbour, though the actual identity of the chaplain has since been in dispute. Made the subject of a popular song in 1942.

Prajapatis. See MANU.

Prang. R.A.F. slang in World War II, meaning to bomb a target with evident success; to shoot down another or to crash one's own aircraft; and generally to collide, or bump into, with any vehicle. Hence, also, wizard prang, for a wonderful or extremely accurate hit, etc.

Pratique (prät' êk'). The licence given to an incoming vessel when she can show a clean BILL OF HEALTH or has fulfilled the necessary quarantine regulations.

Prayer wheel. A device used by the Tibetan Buddhists as an aid or substitute for prayer, supposedly founded on a misconstruction of the BUDDHA's instructions to his followers that they should "turn the wheel of the law"—i.e. preach BUDDHISM incessantly. It varies from a small pasteboard cylinder inscribed with prayers to a larger water-wheel. Among the many prayers is the mystic formula OM MANI PADME HUM, and each revolution represents one repetition of the prayers.

It is also another name for the mediæval WHEEL OF FORTUNE.

Pre-Adamites. The name given by Isaac de la Peyrère (1655) to a race of men whom he supposed to have existed before the days of ADAM. He held that only the Jews are descended from Adam, and that the Gentiles derive from these "Pre-Adamites".

Prebend (Late Lat. præbenda, a grant, pension). A cathedral BENEFICE, its holder being a prebendary. In the 19th century nearly all prebends became honorary offices only, and members of CHAPTERS came to be designated CANONS.

Precariæ. See BOON WORK.

Precarious (Lat. precarius, obtained by prayer) is applied to what depends on our prayers or requests. A precarious tenure is one that depends solely on the will of the owner to concede to our prayer; hence, uncertain, not to be depended on.

Preceptor. Among the Knights TEMPLAR a preceptory was a subordinate house or community (the larger being commanderies) under a Preceptor or Knight Preceptor. The Grand Preceptor was the head of all the preceptories in a province, those of Jerusalem, Tripolis, and Antioch being the highest ranking.

Précieuses, Les (prā sē ěrz) (Fr.). The ladies of the intellectual circle that centred about the Hôtel de RAMBOUILLET in 17th-century Paris. It may be interpreted as "persons of distinguished merit". Their affected airs were the subject of MOLIÈRE'S comedy Les Précieuses Ridicules (1659), and they were further satirized in Les Femmes Savantes (1672).

Precious Stones. The ancients divided precious stones into male and female, the darker being the males and the light ones the females. Male sapphires approach indigo in colour, but the females are sky-blue. Theophrastus mentions the distinction.

And the tent shook, for mighty Saul shuddered; and sparkles 'gan dart
From the jewels that woke in his turban, at once with a start,
All its lordly male-sapphires, and rubies courageous at heart.

BROWNING: Saul, viii.

According to the Poles, each month is under the influence of a precious stone:

January	Garnet	Constancy
February	Amethyst	Sincerity
March	Bloodstone	Courage
April	Diamond	Innocence
May	Emerald	Success in love
June	Agate	Health and long life
July	Cornelian	Content
August	Sardonyx	Conjugal felicity
September	Chrysolite	Antidote to madness
October	Opal	Hope
November	Topaz	Fidelity
December	Turquoise	Prosperity

In relation to the signs of the ZODIAC:

Aries	Ruby	Libra	Jacinth
Taurus	Topaz	Scorpio	Agate
Gemini	Carbuncle	Sagittarius	Amethyst
Cancer	Emerald	Capricornus	Beryl
Leo	Sapphire	Aquarius	Onyx
Virgo	Diamond	Pisces	Jasper

In relation to the planets:

Saturn	Turquoise	Lead
Jupiter	Cornelian	Tin
Mars	Emerald	Iron
Sun	Diamond	Gold
Venus	Amethyst	Copper
Moon	Crystal	Silver
Mercury	Loadstone	Quicksilver

In HERALDRY:

The topaz represents "or" (gold), or Sol, the Sun.

The pearl or crystal represents "argent" (silver), or Luna, the Moon.

The ruby represents "gules" (red), or the planet Mars.

The sapphire represents "azure" (blue), or the planet Jupiter.

The diamond represents "sable" (black), or the planet Saturn.

The emerald represents "vert" (green), or the planet Venus.

The amethyst represents "purpure" (purple), or the planet Mercury.

Many precious stones were held to have curative and magical properties, e.g. loadstone prevented quarrels between brothers; jasper worn by the ploughman ensured the fertility of a field; turquoise protected the wearer from injury if he fell; jade for the Chinese was the most pure and divine of natural materials and had many properties, including stimulating the flow of milk in nursing mothers when powdered and mixed with milk and honey.

Precocious means early ripened (Lat. præ, before; coquere, to cook); hence, premature; development of mind or body before one's age.

Many precocious trees, and such as have their spring in the winter may be found, in most parts of Europe.

SIR THOS. BROWNE: Vulgar Errors, ii, 6.

Premier (prē' mi ěr). First, chief (Fr. premier from Lat. primus, first). Hence the Prime Minister (Fr. premier ministre), the first minister of the Crown.

Première (pre mi ār'). The feminine form of the Fr. premier, commonly denotes the first performance of a play or film.

Première danseuse. The leading female dancer in a ballet.

Ce n'est que le premier pas qui coûte (Fr.). It is only the first step that costs anything. PYTHAGORAS used to say, The beginning is half the whole.

Incipe dimidium facti est cœpisse.

AUSONIUS.

Dimidium facti, qui cœpit, habet.

HORACE: Ep., I, ii, 41.

"Well begun is half done."

Premillennarians. See SECOND ADVENTISTS.

Premonstratensian (prē mon strā ten' sian) or Norbertine Order. An order founded by St. Norbert in 1120 in the diocese of Laon, France, which adopted the rule of St. Augustine. A spot was pointed out to him in a vision, hence the name Pré montré or Pratum Monstratum (the meadow pointed out). In England the order possessed 35 houses before the dissolution and its members were called "White Canons".

Prepense (prē pens'). Malice prepense. MALICE aforethought; malice designed or deliberate (Lat. præ, before; pensare, to think).

Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, The. A group of artists formed in London in 1848 consisting of Holman Hunt, Millais, D. G. Rossetti, and the sculptor Thomas Woolner. It was later joined by J. Collinson, W. H. Deverell, F. G. Stephen and W. M. Rossetti; Ford Madox Brown and Ruskin supported their movement, which espoused a closer study of nature than was practised by those tied to academical rules, and the study of the method and spirit of the artists before Raphael (1483-1520). Nevertheless, their works contained much artificiality of literary origins. The group was attacked by many artists and critics, especially by Charles Dickens in Household Words in 1850. From this date D. G. Rossetti ceased to exhibit publicly. Their works are characterized by exaggerated attention to detail and a high degree of finish.

... a society which unfortunately, or rather unwisely, has given itself the name of "Pre-Raphaelite"; unfortunately, because the principles on which its members are working are neither pre- nor post-Raphaelite, but everlasting. They are endeavouring to paint with the highest possible degree of completion, what they see in nature, without reference to conventional or established rules; but by no means to imitate the style of any past epoch.

RUSKIN:

Modern Painters, pt. II, sect. vi, ch. iii, § xvi.

Presbyterians. Members of a church governed by elders or presbyters (Gr. presbuteros, elder), and ministers in a hierarchy of representative courts. Their doctrine is fundamentally Calvinistic. The CHURCH OF SCOTLAND (see under CHURCH) became presbyterian after the REFORMATION but the growth of Presbyterianism in 17th-century England was checked by the rise of the INDEPENDENTS and the Act of Uniformity of 1662. The Presbyterian Church of Wales is of 18th-century origin.

New Presbyterian is but Old Priest writ large. There is no difference other than in the name; the name may be different but both things are essentially the same. The word priest actually derives from the same root as presbyter. The phrase is from Milton's New Forcers of Conscience.

Presence. See REAL PRESENCE.

Presents (prez'ents).

Know all men by these presents— i.e. by the writings or documents now present (Lat. per presentes, by the [writings] present).

Presidium. In the U.S.S.R. the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, since 1936 a body elected by the Supreme Soviet which fulfils the role of constitutional head of the State. Its chairman is its representative in ceremonial affairs and it issues ordinances when the Supreme Soviet is not in session. See POLITBUREAU.

Press-gang. The name given particularly to those naval parties who carried out the task of impressment, an ancient and arbitrary method of obtaining men for military service dating back to the early 13th century. Individual captains of ships provided their own parties until the demands of the 18th-century Navy led to the establishment of an Impress Service with depots where seafarers abounded. Apart from seizing men from taverns, they seized merchant sailors from ships at sea, etc., and Pressed men formed about half of a ship's crew. The Royal Navy relied on this method until the 1830s, when improvements in pay and conditions encouraged adequate voluntary enlistment, although impressment has never been abolished. The word has nothing to do with "pressing" in the sense of "forcing" but derives from the prest or imprest money (Fr. prêter, to lend) advanced on enlistment, rather like the army's "KING'S SHILLING".

But woe is me! the press-gang came,
And forc'd my love away
Just when we named next morning fair
To be our wedding day.

The Banks of the Shannon,
(an Irish ballad of 1785).

Prester John. See under JOHN.

Prestige (pres tēzh). A word with a curiously metamorphosed meaning. The Lat. praestigia, from which it is derived, means juggling tricks, hence the extension to illusion, fascination, charm and so to the present meaning of standing, influence, reputation, based upon past achievements and associations, etc.

Presto. The name frequently applied to himself by Swift in his Journal to Stella. According to his own account (Journal, 1 August 1711) it was given him by the notorious Duchess of Shrewsbury, an Italian:

The Duchess of Shrewsbury asked him, was not that Dr. —, Dr. —, and she could not say my name in English, but said Dr. Presto, which is Italian for Swift.

Preston and his Mastiffs. To oppose Preston and his mastiffs is to be foolhardy, to resist what is irresistible. Christopher Preston established the Bear Garden at Hockley-in-the-Hole in the time of Charles II, and was killed in 1700 by one of his own bears.

... I'd as good oppose
Myself to Preston and his mastiffs loose.
JOHN OLDHAM: Satyr in Imitation of the Third of Juvenal (1683).

Pretender. The Old Pretender. James Francis Edward Stewart or Stuart

(1688-1766), son of James II, the WARMING-PAN BABY, and known as the Old Chevalier. He was called James III by the JACOBITES on the death of his father in 1701. The word "Pretender" here denotes one who makes a claim or pretension to a title.

The Young Pretender. Charles Edward Stuart (1720-1788), son of the OLD PRETENDER, and popularly known as Bonnie Prince Charlie or the Young Chevalier. See THE FORTY-FIVE under FORTY.

Pretext. A pretence or excuse. From the Lat. prætexta, a dress embroidered in the front, worn by Roman magistrates, priests, and children of the aristocracy between the age of 13 and 17. The prætextatæ were dramas in which actors personated those who wore the prætexta; hence persons who pretend to be what they are not.

Prevarication. The Lat. word varico means I straddle, and prævaricor, I go zigzag or crooked. The verb, says Pliny, was first applied to men who ploughed crooked ridges, and afterwards to men who gave crooked answers in the law courts, or deviated from the straight line of truth. Cp. DELIRIUM.

Previous Question. See under QUESTION.

Priam (pri' am). King of TROY when that city was sacked by the Greeks, husband of HECUBA, and father of 50 children, the eldest of whom was HECTOR. When the gates of Troy were thrown open by the Greeks concealed in the wooden horse, Pyrrhus, the son of ACHILLES, slew the aged Priam.

Priapus (pri a' pûs). In Greek mythology, the son of DIONYSUS and APHRODITE, the god of reproductive power and fertility (hence of gardens), and protector of shepherds, fishermen and farmers. He was later regarded as the chief deity of lasciviousness and obscenity and the phallus was his attribute.

Prick. The prick of conscience. Remorse; tormenting reflection on one's misdeeds. In the 14th century Richard of Hampole wrote a devotional treatise with this title.

Prick the Garter. See under GARTER.

To kick against the pricks. To strive against odds, especially against authority. Prick here is an ox-goad, and the allusion is to Acts ix, 5—"It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks."

To prick up one's ears. To pay particular attention; to do one's best to listen to what is going on. In allusion to the twitching of a horse's ears when its attention is suddenly attracted.

Pricking for sheriffs. The annual choosing of SHERIFFS used to be done by the king, who marked the names on a list by pricking them with a bodkin at random. Sheriffs are still "pricked" by the sovereign, but the names are chosen beforehand.

Prick-èared. Said of a dog with up-standing ears. The PURITANS or ROUND-HEADS were so called because they had their hair cut short and covered their heads with a black skull-cap drawn down tight, leaving the ears exposed.

Pricklouse. An old contemptuous name for a tailor.

Prick-song. Written music for singing as distinguished from music learnt by ear. So called because the notes were originally pricked in on parchment. The term has long been obsolete.

He fights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion.

SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, II, iv.

Pride (M.E. pryde). Overweening self-esteem, arrogance of bearing; also a proper sense of what is proper or becoming to oneself. It has further the meaning ostentation, finery, magnificence, etc., or that which persons are proud of; thus Spenser (The Faerie Queene, I, i, 7) talks of "loftie trees yclad with sommers' pride" (verdure); Pope (Odyssey, viii, 439), of a "sword whose ivory sheath [was] inwrought with curious pride" (ornamentation).

A pride of lions. A company or group of lions.

Fly pride, says the peacock. (SHAKESPEARE, Comedy of Errors, IV, iii.) A bird proverbial for pride, the POT CALLING THE KETTLE BLACK. See under POT.

The heraldic peacock is said to be in his pride when depicted with the tail displayed and the wings drooping.

Pride goes before a fall. An adaptation of Proverbs xvi, 18—"Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall."

The pride of the morning. The early mist or shower which promises a fine day. The morning is too proud to come out in her glory all at once—or the proud beauty being thwarted weeps and pouts awfully.

Pride's Purge (6 December 1648). When Charles I was a captive, after his defeat in the field, the LONG PARLIAMENT declared for a reconciliation (5 December), whereupon a body of soldiers under Colonel Pride arrested 45 M.P.s and debarred 78 others from entry. Another 20 refused to sit and the RUMP was prepared to serve the Army's purposes.

Prig. An old CANT word (probably a variant of PRICK) for to filch or steal, also for a thief. In SHAKESPEARE'S The Winter's Tale (IV, ii) the clown calls AUTOLYCUS a "prig" who "haunts wakes, fairs, and bear-baitings".

Shadwell (The Squire of Alsatia, I, 1) uses the term of a pert COXCOMB, "and thou shalt shine, and be as gay as any spruce prig that ever walked the street".

Nowadays prig denotes a conceited, formal or didactic person—one who tries to teach others how to behave, etc., without having any right to do so.

Prima Donna (prē' ma don' a) (Ital., first lady). The principal female singer in an opera.

Prima facie (Lat.). At first sight. A prima facie case is a case or statement which, without minute examination into its merits, seems plausible and correct.

Primary colours. See under COLOURS.

Primate. The title of the BISHOP of the "first" or chief see of a state (Lat. prima sedes); originally the METROPOLITAN of a province. The Archbishop of York is called Primate of England and the Archbishop of Canterbury Primate of All England.

Prime (Lat. primus, first). In the Western Church, the office appointed for the first hour (6 a.m.), the first of the CANONICAL HOURS. Milton terms sunrise "that sweet hour of prime" (Paradise Lost, V, 170); and the word is used in a general way of the first beginnings of anything, especially of the world itself. Cp. Tennyson's "dragons of the prime" (In Memoriam, lvi).

In my prime. In my youth; at the best period of my life.

Prime Minister. The first minister of the Crown; the PREMIER.

Prime Numbers. THE GOLDEN NUMBER, also called simply the "Prime". In mathematics a prime number is any positive number which cannot be expressed as the product of two others, e.g., 1, 3, 5, 7, 11, etc.

Primed. Fully prepared and ready to deliver a speech or to cope in an argument, etc. A man whose head is full of his subject is said to be "primed to the muzzle". The allusion is to firearms. Primed is also a euphemism for "drunk".

Primer. Originally the name of a book of devotions used by the laity in pre-

REFORMATION England; and this was used as a first reading book. The name was then applied to a small book by which children were taught to read and pray and hence to an elementary school book on any subject.

This litel child his litel book lerninge
As he sat in the scole at his prymer.

CHAUCER:

Canterbury Tales (The Prioress's Tale, l. 72).

Great primer (prim' er). A large-sized type, rather smaller than 18 point, 4½ lines to the inch.

Long primer. A smaller-sized type, 9½ point, 7½ lines to the inch.

Primero (prim' er' o). A very popular card game for about a hundred years after 1530, in which the cards had three times their usual value, four were dealt to each player, the principal groups being flush, prime, and point. Flush was the same as in poker, prime was one card of each suit, and point was reckoned as in piquet.

I... left him at primero with the Duke of Suffolk.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry VIII, V, 1

Primrose. A curious corruption of the Fr. primerole, which is the name of the flower in M.E. This is from the Late Lat. primula, and the rose (as though from prima rosa, the first, or earliest rose) is due to a popular error.

Primrose Day. 19 April, the anniversary of the death of Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield, the season when primroses are at their best. See PRIMROSE LEAGUE.

The Primrose League. A Conservative party organization founded by members of the FOURTH PARTY in 1883, having as its objects "the maintenance of religion, of the estates of the realm, and of the imperial ascendancy". The name was taken in the mistaken belief that the primrose was Lord Beaconsfield's favourite flower, from the wreath of primroses sent to his funeral with the words, "His favourite flowers from Osborne, a tribute of affection from Queen Victoria". The league had its greatest influence and popularity in the days before World War I when imperial sentiment was at its height.

Primrose path. The easy way, the path of pleasure and self-indulgence. SHAKESPEARE refers to the "primrose path of dalliance" (Hamlet I, iii), and to "the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire" (Macbeth, II, i).

Primum mobile (pri' mum mō' bile) (Lat., the first moving thing), in the PTOLEMAIC SYSTEM of astronomy, the ninth (later the tenth) sphere. It was supposed to revolve round the earth from east to west in 24 hours, carrying with it all the other spheres. Milton refers to it as "that first mov'd" (Paradise Lost, III, 483) and Sir Thomas Browne (Religio Medici) used the phrase, "Beyond the first movable", meaning outside the material creation. According to Ptolemy, the primum mobile was the boundary of creation, above which came the EMPYREAN, or seat of God.

The term is figuratively applied to any machine which communicates motion to others; and also to any great sources of motion or in the development of ideas, etc. Thus, SOCRATES may be called the primum mobile of the Dialectic, MEGARIAN Cyrenaic, and CYNIC systems of philosophy.

Primus (pri' mus) (Lat., first). The presiding BISHOP of the Episcopal Church of Scotland. He is elected by the other six bishops, and presides in Convocation, and at meetings relative to Church matters.

Primus inter pares (Lat.). The first among equals.

Prince (Lat. princeps, chief, leader). A royal title which, in England, is now limited to the sons of the sovereign and their sons. Princess is limited to the sovereign's daughters and his sons' (but not daughters') daughters.

Black Prince. See under BLACK.

Crown Prince. The title of the heir-apparent to the throne in some countries, as Sweden, Denmark, and Japan (formerly also in Germany).

Prince Consort. A prince who is the husband of the reigning queen.

Prince Imperial. The title of the heir-apparent in the French Empire of NAPOLEON III (1852-1870).

Prince Regent. A prince ruling on behalf of the legal sovereign; in British history George, PRINCE OF WALES (see under WALES), who acted as regent for his father, George III. See REGENCY.

Prince of the Asturias. The title of the heir-apparent to the former Spanish throne.

Prince of the Church. A CARDINAL.

Prince of Darkness. The DEVIL; SATAN.

Prince of Peace. The MESSIAH; Jesus Christ.

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given . . . and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.

Isaiah ix, 6.

The Spanish statesman Manuel de Godoy (1767-1851) was called Prince of the Peace for his negotiations with France in the Treaty of Basle, 1795.

Prince of Physicians. A title given to AVICENNA.

Prince of Piedmont. The heir-apparent to the House of Savoy, former kings of Italy.

Prince of Wales. See under WALES.

Prince Rupert's drops. See RUPERT.

Prince's Metal. See RUPERT.

Princess Royal. The title of an eldest daughter of a British sovereign. On the death of a Princess Royal the eldest daughter of the then reigning monarch automatically receives the title and retains it for life, no matter how many sovereigns with daughters may occupy the throne during her lifetime. George III's daughter Charlotte, Queen of Wurtemberg, was Princess Royal until her death in 1828; neither George IV nor William IV having daughters, the title was in abeyance until 1840 when Queen Victoria's daughter, Princess Victoria (later the Empress Frederick of Germany), succeeded to it. She remained Princess Royal until her death in 1901, when King Edward's daughter, Princess Louise, Duchess of Fife, succeeded. On her death in 1931 the title passed to Princess Mary, Countess of Harewood, daughter of George V. She died in 1965. Princess Anne then became Princess Royal.

Principalities. Members of one of the nine orders of angels in mediæval angelology. See ANGEL.

In the assembly next upstood

Nisroch, of Principalities the prime,

MILTON: Paradise Lost, VI, 447.

Printer. The Printer's Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Printers' marks.

? is ¶—that is, the first and last letters of questio (question).

: is ¹/_o. Io in Latin is the interjection of joy.

* is used by the Greek grammarians to arrest attention to something striking (asterisk or star).

† is used by the Greek grammarians to indicate something objectionable (obelisk or dagger). Both marks are now used to indicate footnotes.

Priori. See A PRIORI.

Prisca, St. A Roman Christian maiden tortured and beheaded (c. 270) under the Emperor Claudius II. There is a church of St. Prisca at ROME. She is represented between two lions who, it is said, refused to attack her.

St. Priscilla, a Christian convert of the 1st century, and mentioned several times in the New Testament (Acts xviii, Rom. xvi, I Cor. xvi, 2 Tim. iv), is also known as St. Prisca.

Priscian's Head (prish' an). To break Priscian's head (Lat. Dinimere Priscianis caput). To violate the rules of grammar. Priscian was a great grammarian of the early 6th century, whose name is almost synonymous with grammar.

And hold no sin so deeply red
As that of breaking Priscian's head.

BUTLER: Hudibras, Pt. II, ii.

Sir Nathaniel: Laus Deo, bone intelligo.

Holofernes: Bone!—bone for bene: Priscian a little scratch'd; 'twill serve.

SHAKESPEARE: Love's Labour's Lost, V, i.

Prisoner. Prisoner of Chillon. See CHILLON.

Prisoner of the Vatican. See under VATICAN; LATERAN TREATY.

Privateer. A privately owned vessel commissioned under LETTERS OF MARQUE by a belligerent state to wage war on the enemy's commerce. The practice of issuing such commissions ceased as a result of the Declaration of Paris, 1856, but it did not finally become obsolete until the Hague Convention of 1907.

Privilege. In the Parliamentary sense applies to PARLIAMENT's right to regulate its own proceedings and in the case of the Commons the right to regulate membership; also the right to punish for breach of privilege or contempt, the right to freedom of speech, and freedom from civil arrest. In addition there is still the freedom of access as a body to the sovereign to present an address and the request for a favourable construction on its proceedings.

Privy Council. The council chosen by the SOVEREIGN originally to administer public affairs, but now never summoned to assemble as a whole except to proclaim the successor to the Crown on the death of the Sovereign, or to hear the Sovereign's announcement of intention to marry. It usually includes Princes of the Blood, the two PRIMATES, the Bishop of London, the great officers of State and of the Royal Household, the Lord CHANCELLOR and Judges of the Courts of Equity, the Chief Justices of the Courts of COMMON LAW, the Judge Advocate, some of the PUISNE JUDGES, the SPEAKER of the HOUSE OF COMMONS, the Lord Mayor of London, Ambassadors, Governors of Colonies, and many politicians. The business of the Privy Council is nowadays to give formal effect to Proclamations and ORDERS-IN-COUNCIL; for this a quorum of three suffices. The CABINET and the Judicial Committee are, in theory, merely committees of the Privy Council. Privy Councillors are entitled to the prefix "the Right Honourable", and to the use of the initials "P.C." after their names; they rank next after Knights of the GARTER who may be commoners. The Lord President of the Council is the fourth great officer of State.

Privy Seal. The seal which the sovereign uses in proof of assent to a document, kept in the charge of a high officer of State known as the Lord Privy Seal. In matters of minor importance it is sufficient to pass the Privy Seal, but instruments of greater moment must have the GREAT SEAL also.

Prize Court. A court of law set up in time of war to examine the validity of capture of ships and goods made at sea by the navy.

Prize money. The name given to the net proceeds of the sale of enemy shipping and property captured at sea. Prior to 1914 the distribution was confined to the ships of the Royal Navy actually making the capture; since that date all prize money has been pooled and shared out among the navy as a whole. Prize money was paid at the end of World War II for the last time.

The prize ring is the boxing ring in which a prize fight takes place, a prize fight being a boxing match for a money prize or trophy.

Pro (Lat., for, on behalf of). Pro is also a common shortening of "professional" as, "He is a golf pro".

Pro and con (Lat.). For and against. "Con" is a contraction of contra. The pros and cons of a matter are all that can be said for or against it.

Pro bono publico (prō bō' nō pub' lik ō) (Lat.). For the public good or benefit.

Pro rata (prō rā' ta) (Lat.). Proportional or proportionally.

Pro tanto (Lat.). As an instalment, good enough as far as it goes, but not final; for what it is worth.

I heard Mr. Parnell accept the Bill of 1886 as a measure that would close the differences between the two countries; but since then he stated that he had accepted it as a pro tanto measure. . . . It was a parliamentary bet, and he hoped to make future amendments on it.

Joseph Chamberlain, 10 April 1893.

Pro tempore (Lat.). Temporarily; for the time being, till something is permanently settled. Contracted into pro tem.

Procès-verbal (prō sā vār' bal) (Fr.). A detailed and official statement of some fact; especially a written and authenticated statement of facts in support of a criminal charge.

Procne. See NIGHTINGALE.

Proconsul. A magistrate of ancient ROME who was invested with the power of a consul and charged with the command of an army or the administration of a province. The name has often been applied to some of the great colonial administrators of the former British Empire.

Procris (prok' ris). Unerring as the dart of Procris. When Procris fled from CEPHALUS out of shame, DIANA gave her a dog (Lælaps) that never failed to secure its prey, and a dart which not only never missed aim, but which always returned of its own accord to the shooter.

Procrustes' Bed (prō krus' tēz). Procrustes, in Greek legend, was a robber of Attica, who placed all who fell into his hands upon an iron bed. If they were longer than the bed he cut off the overhanging parts, if shorter he stretched them till they fitted it. He was slain by THESEUS. Hence, any attempt to reduce men to one standard, one way of thinking, or one way of acting, is called placing them on Procrustes' bed. Cp. DAMIENS' BED OF STEEL.

Tyrants more cruel than Procrustes old,
Who to his iron-bed by torture fits
Their nobler parts, the souls of suffering wits.
MALLET: Verbal Criticism (1733).

Proctor. Literally this is one who manages the affairs of another, the word being a contraction of "procurator". At the universities of Oxford and Cambridge the proctors are two officials whose duties include the maintaining of discipline. Representatives of ecclesiastical bodies in Convocation are called Proctors. The Queen's Proctor is a law official entitled to intervene in a divorce or nullity suit where collusion or fraud is suspected.

Procyon (prō' si on). The Lesser DOG-STAR (see under DOG(5)), alpha in Canis Minor, so called because it rises before the Dog-Star (Gr. pro, before; kyon, dog). It is the eighth brightest star in the heavens. See ICARIUS.

Prodigal. Festus the Latin lexicographer (2nd century A.D.) says the Romans called victims wholly consumed by fire prodigæ hostiæ (victims prodigalized), and adds that those who waste their substance are therefore called prodigals. This derivation is incorrect. Prodigal is Lat. pro-ago or prod-igo, I drive forth, and persons who had spent all their patrimony were "driven forth" to be sold as slaves to their creditors.

Prodigy (Lat. prodigium, a portent, prophetic sign). One endowed with surprising qualities.

The Prodigy of France. Guillaume Budé (1467-1540), the French humanist, was so called by Erasmus.

The Prodigy of Learning. Samuel Hahnemann (1755-1843), the German physician and scholar, was so named by J. Paul Richter.

Producer's Goods. An economist's term for goods such as tools and raw material, which satisfy needs only indirectly, through making other goods.

Profane means literally before or outside the temple (Lat. pro fano); hence profanus was applied to those persons who came to the temple and, remaining outside and unattached, were not initiated.

Profile (prō' fil) means shown by a thread (Ital. profilo; Lat. filum, a thread). A profile is an outline, but especially a view, or drawing or some other representation, of the human face outlined by the median line. The term "profile", for an essay setting forth the outstanding characteristics of an individual—a verbal outline, so to speak—came into use in the 1940s.

Profound. The Profound Doctor. Thomas Bradwardine, Richard Middleton, and other 14th-century scholastic philosophers were given the title.

Most Profound Doctor. Ægidius de Coleman (d. 1316), a Sicilian SCHOOLMAN.

Prog. The verb was used in the 16th century for "to poke about" for anything, especially to forage for food; hence the noun is slang for food, but its origin is unknown. Burke says, "You are the lion, and I have been endeavouring to prog for you."

So saying, with a smile she left the rogue,
To weave more lines of death, and plan for prog.
DR. WOLCOT: Spider and Fly.

Prog is also university slang for PROC-TOR.

Programme Music is instrumental music based on a literary, historical, or pictorial subject and intended to describe or illustrate this theme musically.

Projection. Powder of projection. A form of the PHILOSOPHERS' STONE, which was supposed to have the virtue of changing baser metals into GOLD. A little of this powder, being cast into the molten metal, was to project from it pure gold.

Proletariat (prō le târ' i ät). The labouring classes; the unpropertied wage-earning classes. In ancient ROME the proletarii could hold no office, and were ineligible for the army and only served the State with their offspring (proles).

The proletariat, the lowest stratum of our present society, cannot stir, cannot raise itself up, without the whole superincumbent strata of official society being sprung into the air.

MARK AND ENGELS: Communist Manifesto, I.

Prom, or Promenade Concert. A concert in which some of the audience stand in an open area of the concert-room floor. Promenade Concerts, familiarly called "Proms", date back to the days of the London pleasure gardens such as VAUXHALL and RANELAGH, while Mansard conducted similar concerts at Paris in the 1830s and from 1838 his example was followed at London. In 1895 Sir Henry Wood (1869-1944) began the concerts at the Queen's Hall which he conducted for over half a century and which are a regular feature of London life. In 1927 the B.B.C. took over their management from Chappell's. The destruction of the hall by enemy action in 1941 caused a break in the concerts but they were renewed at the Royal Albert Hall.

In the U.S.A. going to a prom means attending a dance given by members of a class at school or college.

Prometheus (prō mē' thūs) (Gr., Forethought). One of the TITANS of Greek myth, son of IAPETOS and the ocean-nymph Clymene, and famous as a benefactor to man. It is said that ZEUS employed him to make men out of mud and water, and that then, in pity for their state, he stole fire from HEAVEN and gave it to them. For this he was chained by Zeus to Mount Caucasus, where an EAGLE preyed on his liver all day, the liver being renewed at night. He was eventually released by HERCULES, who slew the eagle. It was to counterbalance the gift of fire to mankind that Zeus sent PANDORA to earth with her box of evils.

Promethean. Capable of producing fire; pertaining to PROMETHEUS.

A somewhat dangerous match invented in 1828 was known as a "Promethean". It consisted of a small glass bulb containing sulphuric acid, the outside being coated with potassium chlorate, sugar, and gum surrounded by a paper wrapping in the form of a spill. When the glass was bitten with the teeth the chlorate fired the paper.

I carried with me some promethean matches, which I ignited by biting; it was thought so wonderful that a man should strike fire with his teeth, that it was usual to collect the whole family to see it.

DARWIN:

The Voyage of the "Beagle" (1839), ch. iii.

Promethean fire. The vital principle; the fire with which PROMETHEUS quickened into life his clay images.

I know not where is that Promethean heat
That can thy light relume.

SHAKESPEARE: Othello, V, ii.

Promethean unguent. Made from a herb on which some of the blood of PROMETHEUS had fallen. MEDEA gave JASON some of it, and thus rendered his body proof against fire and warlike instruments.

Promised Land, or Land of Promise. Canaan; so called because God promised ABRAHAM, Isaac, and Jacob that their offspring should possess it. Figuratively, HEAVEN or any place of expected happiness or fulfilment.

Proof. A printed sheet to be examined and approved before it is finally printed. The first, or foul, proof is that which contains all the compositor's errors; when these are corrected the impression next taken is called a clean proof and is submitted to the author; the final impression, which is corrected by the reader, is termed the press proof.

The Proof Bible. See BIBLE, SOME SPECIALLY NAMED EDITIONS.

Proof prints. The first impressions of an engraving. India proofs are those taken off on India paper.

Proofs before lettering are those taken off before any inscription is engraved on the plate. After the proofs the connoisseur's order of value is—(1) prints which have the letters only in outline; (2) those in which the letters are shaded with a black line; (3) those in which some slight ornament is introduced into the letters; (4) those in which the letters are filled up quite black.

Proof spirit. A term applied to a standard mixture of alcohol and water used as a basis for customs and excise purposes. It is legally defined as having a specific gravity of $1\frac{1}{2}$ at 51°F. When the mixture has more alcohol it is said to be over proof, and when less under proof. In earlier days proof spirit was held to be that which if poured over gunpowder and ignited would eventually ignite the powder. If the spirit was under proof the water remaining would prevent the firing of the powder.

Prooshan Blue. A term of great endearment, when after the battle of Waterloo the Prussians were immensely popular in England. Sam Weller in Pickwick Papers (ch. xxxiii) addresses his father as, "Vell, my Prooshan Blue." See PRUSSIAN BLUE.

Prop, To. An Australian term used to describe when horses come to a sudden stop. Hence, generally, to JIB, to refuse to co-operate.

Propaganda. The Congregation or College of the Propaganda (Congregatio de propaganda fide) is a committee of cardinals established at Rome by Gregory XV in 1622 for propagating the Faith throughout the world. Hence the term is applied to any scheme, association, publication, etc., for making PROSELYTES or influencing public opinion in political, social, and religious matters, etc.

Property Plot, in theatrical language, means a list of all the "properties" or articles which are needed for the production of a particular play. Everything used on the stage is termed a "prop". "Actor's props" are articles of personal use, the remainder are termed "manager's props".

Prophet, The. The special title of MOHAMMED. According to the KORAN there have been 200,000 prophets, but only six of them brought new laws or dispensations, viz. ADAM, Noah, ABRAHAM, MOSES, Jesus, and Mohammed.

The Great, or Major Prophets. Isaiah, JEREMIAH, Ezekiel, and DANIEL; so called because their writings are more extensive than the prophecies of the other twelve.

The Minor, or Lesser Prophets. Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Micah, JONAH, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, whose writings are less extensive than those of the four GREAT PROPHETS.

Props. See PROPERTY PLOT.

Proscription. Outlawry, the denunciation of citizens as public enemies, etc.; so called from the Roman practice of writing the names of the proscribed on tablets which were posted up in the forum, sometimes with the offer of a reward for those who should aid in bringing them to court. If the proscribed did not answer the summons, their goods were confiscated and their persons outlawed. In this case the name was engraved on brass or marble, the offence stated, and the tablet placed conspicuously in the market-place.

Prose means straightforward speaking or writing (Lat. oratio prosa), in opposition to foot-bound speaking or writing, oratio vincta (fettered speech, i.e. poetry).

It was Monsieur Jourdain, in MOLIÈRE'S Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, who suddenly discovered that he had been talking prose for forty years without knowing it.

Proselytes (pros' e lits). From Gr. proselutos, one who has come to a place; hence, a convert, especially (in its original application) to Judaism. Among the Jews proselytes were of two kinds—viz. "The proselyte of righteousness" and the "stranger that is within thy gates" (Hellenes). The former submitted to circumcision and conformed to the laws of MOSES; the latter went no farther than to refrain from offering sacrifice to heathen gods, and from working on the SABBATH.

Proserpina, or Proserpine (pro sēr' pi nā, pros' er pin). The Roman counterpart of the Greek goddess Persephone, queen of the infernal regions and wife of PLUTO (see DAFFODIL), and sometimes identified with HECATE.

Prosit (prō' sit) (Lat., "May it benefit you"). Good luck to you! A salutation used in drinking a person's health, and particularly associated with German university students.

Prosperity Robinson. F. J. Robinson (1782-1859), Viscount Goderich, afterwards first Earl of Ripon, Chancellor of the Exchequer 1823-1827, so called by Cobbett who also dubbed him later "Goody Goderich". In 1825 he boasted in the House of the prosperity of the nation, but unfortunately the autumn and winter were marked by bank failures, bankruptcies and stock exchange collapse. However, his economic policies were generally progressive.

Protean. See PROTEUS.

Protectionist. One who advocates the imposition of import duties, to "protect" home produce and manufactures. Cp. MERCANTILISM.

Protector, The. A title sometimes given in England to the regent during the sovereign's minority.

John of Lancaster, Duke of Bedford, was made Regent of France and Pro-rector of England during the minority (1422-1442) of his nephew, Henry VI; and Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, was Protector during Bedford's absence in France, which was, in fact, for most of the time.

Richard, Duke of Gloucester, was Protector from 1483 until his assumption of the crown as Richard III. He took Edward V into his custody on the death of Edward IV.

Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset, was Protector (1547-1550) and Lord Treasurer in the reign of his nephew, Edward VI.

The Lord Protector of the Commonwealth. Oliver Cromwell (1599-1658) was declared such in 1653. His son Richard succeeded to the title in 1658, but resigned in May 1659.

The Protectorate. See COMMONWEALTH.

Protestant. A member of a Christian Church upholding the principles of the REFORMATION or (loosely) of any Church not in communion with ROME. In the time of Luther his followers called themselves "evangelicals". The name arose from the Lutheran protest against the recess of the Diet of Spire (1529) which declared that the religious STATUS QUO must be maintained.

The Protestant Pope. Clement XIV (1769-1775), who ordered the suppression of the JESUITS in 1773. He was a patron of art and a liberal-minded statesman.

Proteus (prō' tūs). In Greek legend, NEPTUNE's herdsman, an old man and a prophet, famous for his power of assuming different shapes at will. Hence the phrase, As many shapes as Proteus, i.e. full of shifts, aliases, disguises, etc., and the adjective protean, readily taking on different aspects, ever-changing, versatile.

Proteus lived in a vast cave, and his custom was to tell over his herds of sea-calves at noon, and then to sleep. There was no way of catching him but by stealing upon him at this time and binding him; otherwise he would elude anyone by a rapid change of shape.

Protevangelium (prō te vān jē' li um). The first (Gr. protos) gospel; a term applied to an apocryphal gospel which has been attributed to St. JAMES THE LESS. It was supposed by some critics that all the gospels were based upon this, but it appears to be the compilation of a Jewish Christian from a variety of sources and dates from the 2nd century. The name is also given to the curse upon the SERPENT in Gen. iii, 15, which has been regarded as the earliest utterance of the GOSPEL:

And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.

Prothalamion (prō thā lā' mi ūn). The term coined by Spenser (from Gr. thalamos, a bridal chamber) as a title for his "Spousall Verse" (1596) in honour of the double marriage of Lady Elizabeth and Lady Katharine Somerset, daughters of the Earl of Worcester, to Henry Gilford and William Peter, Esquires. Hence a song sung in honour of the bride and bridegroom before the wedding. Cp. EPITHALAMIUM.

Protocol (prō' tō kol). In diplomacy, the original draft of a diplomatic document such as a dispatch or treaty; from Gr. protos, first, kolla, glue, a sheet glued to the front of a manuscript, or the case containing it, giving certain descriptive particulars. The word also denotes the code of correct procedure, etiquette, and ceremonial to be observed in official international intercourse.

The Protocols of the Elders of Zion. Forged material published by Serge Nilus in Russia in 1905, based on an earlier forgery of 1903, purporting to outline secret Jewish plans for achieving world power by undermining Gentile morality, family life and health, and by securing a monopoly in international finance, etc. Their falsity was first exposed by Philip Graves, The Times correspondent in Constantinople, in 1921 and later judicially, at Berne (1934-1935). Their influence in inciting anti-semitism notably among the Russians, and later providing Hitler and his associates with an excuse they knew to be a myth, provide tragic evidence of the power of the "big lie". See FORGERIES.

Proto-martyr. The first martyr (Gr. protos, first). STEPHEN the deacon is so called (Acts vi, vii), and St. ALBAN is known as the proto-martyr of Britain.

Proud, The. Otto IV, Emperor of Germany (c. 1182, 1208-1218).

Tarquin II of Rome. Superbus. (Reigned 535-510 B.C., d. 496.)

The Proud Duke. Charles Seymour, 6th Duke of Somerset (1662-1748). He would never suffer his children to sit in his presence, and would never communicate with his servants except by signs.

To do someone proud. To treat them lavishly; to give them first-class hospitality, etc.

To stand proud. In engineering and the practical skills, said of something which sticks out further than it should or above a particular plane.

Provincial. One who lives in the provinces, at a distance from the metropolis, hence the meaning of narrow, unpolished.

The Provincial of an Order. In a religious order, one who has authority over all the houses of that order in a province or given area. He is usually elected by the provincial CHAPTER.

Proxime accessit (Lat. proxime, next; accessit, he approached). An expression used in prize lists, etc., for the runner-up, the one who came very near the winner.

Prud'homme (proo' dom) in O.Fr. meant a man endowed with all the knightly virtues (preux homme), but later implied a man of proven honesty, experience and knowledge in his craft or trade, whence its specialized meaning in Mod. Fr. for a member of an Industrial Arbitration Board.

Prudhomerie is the loud and pompous enunciation of the obvious, derived from the character Joseph Prud'homme, created by the French writer Henri Monnier (1830).

Prunella (proo' nel a). A dark, smooth, woollen stuff of which clergymen's and barristers' gowns used to be made, also gaiters and the uppers of boots; probably so named from its plum colour (Fr. prunelle, sloe).

All leather and prunella. See LEATHER.

Prunes and prisms. See NIMINI-PIMINI.

Prussian Blue. So called because it was discovered by a Prussian, Diesbach, a colourman of Berlin, in 1704. It was sometimes called Berlin blue. It is made by adding ferrous sulphate solution to one of potassium ferrocyanide to which ferric chloride is subsequently introduced. Prussic acid (hydrocyanic acid) can be made by distilling Prussian blue. Cp. PROOSHAN BLUE.

Prussianism. A term denoting the arrogance and overbearing methods associated with the Prussian military machine and governmental attitudes from the days of Frederick the Great (1712-1786) until World War I. Unfortunately there was a return to Prussianism in Germany under the NAZIS.

In its simplest form, Prussianism is blind submission. It is a philosophy of a military Order that sought primarily to maintain its position against the possible revolt of the conquered. It is the spirit of an army carried over into a bureaucracy and into society itself. . . . It is discipline—and servility. Standardized.

EDGAR MOWER:

Germany Puts the Clock Back, ch. v.

Pry, Paul. An idle meddlesome fellow, who has no occupation of his own, and is always interfering with other folk's business. The term comes from the hero of John Poole's comedy, Paul Pry (1825).

Psalmazar, George. A classical example of the impostor. A Frenchman whose real name is unknown to this day, he appeared in London in 1703 claiming to be a native of Formosa, at that time an almost unknown island. In 1704 he published an account of Formosa with a grammar of the language, which from beginning to end was a fabrication of his own. The literary and critical world of London was taken in, but his imposture was soon exposed by Roman Catholic missionaries who had laboured in Formosa, and after a time Psalmazar publicly confessed his fraud. He turned over a new leaf and applied himself to the study of Hebrew and other genuine labours, ending his days in 1763 as a man of some repute and the friend of Dr. Johnson. See FORGERIES; OSSIAN; PROTOCOLS OF THE ELDERS OF ZION.

Psalms. Of the 150 songs in the Book of Psalms, 73 are inscribed with David's name, 12 with that of Asaph the singer, 11 to the sons of Korah, a family of singers. Psalm xc is attributed to Moses. The whole compilation is divided into five books: Bk. 1, from i to xli; Bk. 2, from xlii to lxxii; Bk. 3, from lxxiii to lxxxix; Bk. 4, from xc to cvi; Bk. 5, from cvii to cl.

Much of the Book of Psalms was for centuries attributed to David (hence called the sweet psalmist of Israel) but it is doubtful whether he wrote any of them. The tradition comes from the author of Chronicles, and II Sam. xxii is a psalm attributed to David that is identical with Ps. xviii. Also, the last verse of Ps. lxxii ("The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended") seems to suggest that he was the author up to that point.

In explanation of the confusion between the Roman Catholic and PROTESTANT psalters, it should be noted that Psalms ix and x in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER version (also in the BIBLE, AUTHORISED VERSION and REVISED VERSION) are combined in the Roman Catholic Psalter to form Psalm ix, and Psalms cxiv and cxv in the Book of Common Prayer are combined in the Roman Catholic Psalter to form Psalm cxiii. Again, Psalm cxvi in the Book of Common Prayer is split to form Psalms cxiv and cxv in the Roman Catholic Psalter, and Psalms cxlvii in the Book of Common Prayer is split to form Psalms cxlvi and cxlvii in the Roman Catholic Psalter. Thus only the first eight and the last three Psalms coincide numerically in both psalters. See also GRADUAL PSALMS; PENITENTIAL PSALMS.

Pschent. See EGYPT.

Pseudepigrapha (sū de pig' rá fá) (Gr., falsely inscribed or ascribed). In Biblical scholarship, a term applied to certain pseudonymous Jewish writings such as the "Book of Enoch", the "Assumption of MOSES", the "Psalms of SOLOMON", the "Fourth Book of the MACCABEES" (see under MACCABÆUS), etc., which were excluded from the CANON of the Old Testament and the APOCRYPHA.

Pseudonym. See NOM DE PLUME.

Psyche (sī' kē) (Gr., breath; hence, life, or soul itself). In "the latest-born of the myths", Cupid and Psyche, an episode in the GOLDEN ASS, Psyche is a beautiful maiden beloved by CUPID, who visited her every night but departed at sunrise. Cupid bade her never seek to know who he was, but one night curiosity got the better of her; she lit the lamp to look at him, a drop of hot oil fell on his shoulder and he awoke and fled. The abandoned Psyche then wandered far and wide in search of her lover; she became the slave of VENUS, who imposed on her heartless tasks and treated her most cruelly. Ultimately she was united to Cupid and became immortal. The tale appears in Walter Pater's Marius the Epicurean.

Psychedelic experiences. In the jargon of the BEATNIK fringe and world of HIPPIES and pop groups, "mind-expanding" experiences produced by drugs, flashing lights, music, dancing, etc., usually in combination. The expression was imported into Britain in 1966.

Psychological Moment, The. The moment when the mind is readiest to receive suggestions from another. It is an inaccurate translation of the German Das Momentum, which means momentum, not moment. It is incorrectly applied when the idea of mental receptivity is absent, but it is popularly used to mean "the opportune moment", "just at the right time", etc.

Ptolemaic System (to le mā' ik). The system to account for the apparent motion of the heavenly bodies expounded in the 2nd century by Ptolemy, the famous astronomer of Alexandria. He taught that the earth is fixed in the centre of the universe, and the heavens revolve round it from east to west, carrying with them the sun, planets, and fixed stars, in their respective spheres, which he imagined as solid coverings (like so many skins of an onion) each revolving at different velocities. The tenth or outer sphere was the PRIMUM MOBILE. This theory was an attempt to systematize theories long held by PLATO, ARISTOTLE, Hipparchus, and others, and it substantially held sway until replaced by the COPERNICAN SYSTEM.

Public (Lat. publicus, from populus, the people). The people, generally and collectively, of a state, nation or community. Also a colloquial contraction of "public house", more usually contracted to "pub".

The simple life I can't afford,
Besides, I do not like the grub—
I want a mash and sausage, "scored"—
Will someone take me to a pub?

G. K. CHESTERTON: Ballade of an Anti-Puritan.

Pub-crawl. Colloquially, to go on a pub-crawl is to partake in a drinking session in which one progresses, after suitable refreshment, from one public house to another, the number of such visited obviously depending on the length of stay at each and the capacity of the "crawler" to stay the course. Cp. BUSH-SHANTY.

Public-house signs are in themselves a fascinating study and much of Britain's history may be gleaned from them, as well as folk-lore, HERALDRY, social customs, etc. Many are a compliment to the lord of the manor or a nobleman or his cognizance, as the Warwick Arms, the BEAR AND RAGGED STAFF. Others pay tribute to distinguished warriors or their battles, as The Marquis of Granby, the Duke of Wellington, the Waterloo, the Keppel's Head, the Trafalgar. Royalty is conspicuously represented by the Crown, the King's Arms, the Prince Regent, the Prince of Wales, the Victoria, the Albert, the George, etc. Literary names are less conspicuous, but there is a Shakespeare, Milton Arms, Macaulay Arms, Sir Richard Steele, and Sir Walter Scott, as well as The Miller of Mansfield, Pindar of Wakefield, Sir John Falstaff, Robinson Crusoe, and Valentine and Orson. Simon the Tarnier, The Good Samaritan, Noah's Ark, the Gospel Oak, the Angel have a Biblical flavour, and myth and legend are represented by The Apollo, Hercules, Phœnix, King Lud, Merlin's Cave, The Man in the Moon, Punch, Robin Hood, the Moonrakers, Cat and the Fiddle, etc.

Some signs indicate sporting associations, such as the Cricketers, the Bat and Ball, the Bowling Green, the Angler's Rest, the Huntsman; or trades associations as Coopers', Bricklayers', Plumbers', Carpenters', Masons' Arms, etc. Others show a whimsical turn as The Who'd a Thought It, The Five Alls, The World Turned Upside Down, The Good Woman.

The following list will serve to exemplify the subject:

The Bag o' Nails, a corruption of "Bacchanals"; also The Devil and Bag o' Nails.

The Bear. From the popular sport of bear-baiting.

The Bell. Mostly derived from the national addiction to bell-ringing.

The Bell Savage. See LA BELLE SAUVAGE.

The Blue Boar. A cognizance of Richard, Duke of York, father of Edward IV.

The Blue Lion. Denmark (possibly a compliment to James I's queen, Anne of Denmark), also the badge of the Earl of Mortimer.

Bolt in Tun. The punning heraldic badge of Prior Bolton, last of the clerical rulers of St. Bartholomew's before the REFORMATION.

The Bull and Dog. From the sport of bull-baiting.

The Bull and Gate. See under BULL.

The Case is Altered. See FLOWDEN.

The Cat and Fiddle. See under CAT.

The Cat and Kittens. See under CAT.

The Cat and Wheel. A corruption of St. "CATHERINE'S Wheel".

The Chequers. See CHEQUERS.

The Coach and Horses. A favourite sign of a posting-house or stage-coach inn.

The Cock and Bottle. See under COCK.

The Cross Keys. See under KEY.

The Devil. See GO TO THE DEVIL under DEVIL; and BAG O' NAILS above.

Dirty Dick's. See under DIRT.

The Dog and Duck, or The Duck in the Pond, indicating that the sport so called could be seen there. A duck was put into the water, and a dog set to hunt it; the fun was to see the duck diving and the dog following it under water.

The Five Alls consists of a king (I rule all), a priest (I pray for all), a soldier (I fight for all), a JOHN BULL or a farmer (I pay for all), and a lawyer (I plead for all).

The Four Alls. The first four of the FIVE ALLS, above.

The Fox and Goose. Sometimes signifying that there were arrangements within for playing the game of Fox and Goose.

The Golden Fleece. An allusion to the fable of the GOLDEN FLEECE and to the woollen trade.

The Golden Lion. The badge of Henry I and the PERCYs of Northumberland.

The Goat and the Compass. See under GOAT.

The Golden Cross. A reference to the emblems carried by the crusaders.

The Goose and Gridiron. See under GOOSE.

The Green Man, The Green Man and Still. See under GREEN.

Hearts of Oak. A compliment to the British naval tradition. See under HEART.

The Hole in the Wall. Perhaps an allusion to the hole in the wall of a prison through which the inmates received donations, or a reference to the narrow alley or passage by which the tavern was approached.

The Horse and Jockey. An obvious allusion to the TURF.

The Man with a Load of Mischief. A sign in Oxford Street, nearly opposite Hanway Yard, said to have been painted by Hogarth, showing a man carrying a woman with a glass of gin in her hand, a magpie, and a donkey, etc.

The Marquis of Granby. In compliment to John Manners (see GRANBY), eldest son of John, third Duke of Rutland—a bluff, brave soldier, generous and greatly beloved by his men.

What conquest now will Britain boast
Or where display her banners?
Alas! in Granby she has lost
True courage and good Manners.

The Pig and Tinderbox. See under PIG.

The Pig and Whistle. Said by some to be a corruption of pig and wassail, pig being an abbreviation of piggin, an earthen vessel; or a facetious form of the BEAR AND RAGGED STAFF, etc.; but possibly a sign-painter's whimsy.

The Plum and Feathers. A corruption of The Plume and Feathers, the Prince of Wales's Feathers (see under WALES).

The Queen of Bohemia. In honour of James I's daughter Elizabeth who married Frederick, Elector of the Palatinate, who was chosen King of Bohemia in 1619.

The Red Cow. Possibly because at one time red cows were more esteemed in England than the more common "black".

The Red Lion. Rampant, Scotland; also the badge of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster.

The Rising Sun. A badge of Edward III.

The Rose. A symbol of England.

The Rose and Crown. One of the "loyal" public-house signs.

The Running Footman. From the liveried servant who used to run before the nobleman's carriage.

St. George and the Dragon. In compliment to the patron saint of ENGLAND.

The Salutation. Refers to the angel saluting the Virgin MARY.

The Saracen's Head. Reminiscent of the CRUSADES.

The Seven Stars. An astrological sign.

The Ship and Shovel. Said to be a corruption of Sir Cloudesley Shovel, the admiral of Queen Anne's reign, but probably refers to the shovels used for unloading coal, etc.

The Star and Garter. The insignia of the Order of the GARTER.

The Swan and Antelope. Supporters of the arms of Henry IV.

The Swan and Harp. See GOOSE AND GRIDIRON under GOOSE.

The Swan with Two Necks. See under SWAN.

The Tabard. A sleeveless coat, worn by noblemen and heralds, upon which a coat of arms was embroidered. The tavern with this sign at Southwark was where Chaucer's pilgrims "assembled".

The Talbot (a hound). The arms of the Talbot family.

The Three Kings. An allusion to the three kings of COLOGNE, the MAGI.

The Turk's Head. Like the Saracen's Head, an allusion to the CRUSADES.

The Two Chairmen. Found in the neighbourhood of fashionable quarters when sedan chairs were in vogue.

The Unicorn. The Scottish supporter in the royal arms of Great Britain.

The White Hart. The cognizance of Richard II.

The White Lion. The cognizance of Edward IV as Earl of March. Also the device of the Dukes of Norfolk, the Earls of Surrey, etc.

See also THE OLD CHAPEL under CHAPEL; MERMAID TAVERN.

Publicans (Lat. publicani). In the Roman Empire, wealthy business-men who contracted to manage State monopolies or to farm the taxes, which often led to abuses. Hence their unpopularity in the provinces and their being associated with sinners in the New Testament.

Pucelle, La (pū sel') (Fr., "The Maid") i.e. of Orleans, JOAN OF ARC. Chaplain and VOLTAIRE wrote a poem with this title.

Puck. A mischievous sprite of popular folk-lore, also called ROBIN GOODFELLOW.

In Spenser's Epithalamion he is an evil goblin:

Ne let the Pouke, nor other evill sprights, but SHAKESPEARE'S Midsummer Night's Dream (II, i) shows him as:

that shrewd and knavish sprite
Call'd Robin Goodfellow; are not you he
That frights the maidens of the villagery;
Skim milk, and sometimes labour in the guern
And bootless make the breathless housewife churn;
And sometime make the drink to bear no barm;
Mislead night wanderers, laughing at their harm?
Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck,
You do their work, and they should have good luck.

Pudens (pū' denz). A soldier in the Roman army, mentioned in II Tim. iv, 21, in connexion with Linus and Claudia. According to tradition, Claudia, the wife of Pudens, was a British lady; Linus, otherwise Cyllen, was her brother; and Lusius "the British king", the grandson of Linus. Tradition further adds that Lucius wrote to Eleutherus, Bishop of ROME, to send missionaries to Britain to convert the people.

Pudding. Pudding-time. Dinner-time, the time at which pudding, anciently the first dish, was set on the table; hence the critical time, the nick of time, the opportune moment. Cp. PSYCHOLOGICAL MOMENT.

When George in pudding-time came o'er,
And moderate men looked big, sir,
The Vicar of Bray.

The proof of the pudding is in the eating. An old proverb meaning that performance is the true test, not appearances, promises, etc.; just as the best test of a pudding is to eat it, not just to look at it.

Pueblo (pweb' lō). The Spanish word meaning "people" (Lat. populus), hence a town or village. It has been applied particularly to the peace-loving Indians of New Mexico and Arizona, and to their communal villages.

Puff. An onomatopœic word, suggestive of the sound made by puffing wind from the mouth; since at least the early 17th century, applied to extravagantly worded advertisements, reviews, etc., with the implication that they have as much lasting value as a "puff of wind".

In Sheridan's The Critic (1779), Puff, who, he himself says, is "a practitioner in panegyric, or, to speak more plainly, a professor of the art of puffing", gives a catalogue of puffs:

Yes, sir,—puffing is of various sorts, the principal are, the puff direct, the puff preliminary, the puff collateral, the puff collusive and the puff oblique, or puff by implication. These all assume, as circumstances require, the various forms of letter to the editor, occasional anecdote, impartial critique, observation from correspondent, or advertisement from the party.

The Critic, I, ii.

Puffed up. Conceited; elated with conceit or praise; filled with wind. A puff is a tartlet with a very light or puffy crust.

That no one of you be puffed up for one against another.

I Cor., iv, 6.

Puff-ball. A fungus of the genus Lycoperdon, so called because it is ball-shaped and when it is ripe it bursts and the spores come out in a "puff" of fine powder.

Puisne Judges (pū' ni). Formerly justices and barons of the COMMON LAW courts at Westminster other than the Chief Justices; by the Judicature Act of 1877, Judges of the High Court other than the Lord CHANCELLOR, the Lord Chief Justice, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas and the Lord Chief Baron (the last two offices becoming defunct). Since the Judicature Act of 1925 the term applies to Judges of the High Court other than the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice, and the President of the Probate Division, but is not usually attached to the Master of the Rolls. Puisne is etymologically the same as puny; it is the Fr. puisne, subsequently born (Lat. post natus) and signifies "junior" or "inferior in rank".

Pulitzer Prizes, for literary work, journalism, drama, and music, are awarded annually from funds left for the purpose by Joseph Pulitzer (1847-1911), a prominent and wealthy American editor and newspaper proprietor.

Pull. The act of drawing or tugging to oneself; hence, figuratively, "influence", especially with those in control. See TO PULL THE STRINGS below.

A long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together—i.e. a steady, energetic, and systematic co-operation. The reference may be to the oarsmen in a boat, or to a TUG-OF-WAR, or the act of hauling with a rope, for all of which a simultaneous strong pull is required.

The long pull. The extra quantity of beer supplied by a publican to his customer over and above the exact quantity ordered and paid for. In the U.S.A. the term is applied to long and diligent effort.

Pull devil, pull baker. Said in encouragement of a contest, usually over the possession of something. See under DEVIL.

To have the pull of, or over one. To have the advantage over him; to be able to dictate terms or make him do what you wish.

To pull bacon. TO COCK A SNOOK (see under COCK).

To pull one's punches. Not to be as blunt as one could be; to soften the blow and to avoid offence by holding back a little. In boxing, blows delivered intentionally ineffectively are said to be "pulled".

To pull one's weight. To do the very best one can, to play one's proper part. A phrase from rowing; an oarsman who does not put all his weight into the stroke is a drag on the rest of the crew and something of a passenger.

To pull oneself together. To rouse oneself to renewed activity; to shake off depression or inertia.

To pull someone's leg. To delude him in a humorous way, lead him astray by chaff, exaggeration, etc.

To pull the chestnuts out of the fire. To retrieve a difficult situation for someone; to get someone out of an embarrassment. The allusion is to the fable of the monkey and the cat. See TO BE MADE A CATSPAUF under CAT.

To pull the strings. To use private influence "behind the scenes". From the puppet-master who controls the movements of the puppets by the strings attached to them. Cp. TO PULL THE WIRES under WIRE.

To pull the wool over someone's eyes. To deceive or hoodwink; to blind him temporarily to what is going on.

To pull through. To get oneself well out of difficulty or serious illness.

To pull together. To co-operate harmoniously.

To pull up one's hooks. To cut adrift from one's local ties and to move from the district. To pull up stakes is a similar American phrase conveying the idea of striking camp and moving on.

Pullman. Properly a well-fitted railway saloon or sleeping-car built at the Pullman Carriage Works, Illinois; so called from the designer, George M. Pullman (1831-1897) of Chicago. The word is now applied to other luxurious railway saloons, and to motor-cars.

Pummel. See POMMEL.

Pump. To prime the pump. To give financial aid to an enterprise in the hope that it will become self-supporting. From starting a pump working by pouring in water to establish suction.

To pump someone is to extract information out of him by artful questions; to draw from him all he knows, as one draws water from a well by gradual pumping. Ben Jonson in A Tale of a Tub (IV, iii) has, "I'll stand aside whilst thou pump'st out of him his business."

Pumpnickel. The coarse rye-bread ("brown George") eaten in Germany, especially in Westphalia. Thackeray applied the term as a satirical nickname to petty German princelings ("His Transparency, the Duke of Pumpnickel") who made a great show with the court officials and etiquette, but whose revenue was almost nil.

Pun. He who would make a pun would pick a pocket. Dr. Johnson is usually credited with this silly dictum, but the correct version is: "Any man who would make such an execrable pun would not scruple to pick my pocket", the remark addressed by the critic John Dennis (1657-1734) to Purcell. See the Public Advertiser, 12 January 1779, and the Gentleman's Magazine, vol. II, p. 324; also the note to Pope's Dunciad, bk. I, l. 63.

The "execrable pun" was this: Purcell rang the bell for the drawer or waiter, but no one answered it. Purcell, tapping the table, asked Dennis "why the table was like the tavern!" Ans. "Because there is no drawer in it."

Punch. The name of this beverage, which was introduced into England in the early 17th century, is usually held to derive from Hind. panch, five, because it has five principal ingredients (spirit, water, spice, sugar, and some acid fruit juice). It may equally derive from puncheon, the large wine cask.

Punch and Judy. The name of Mr. Punch, the hero of the puppet play, probably comes from Ital. pulcinello, a diminutive of pulcino, a young chicken. His identification with Pontius Pilate and of Judy with JUDAS is imaginary. The story roughly in its present form is attributed to an Italian comedian, Silvio Fiorillo (about 1600), and it appeared in ENGLAND about the time of the RESTORATION. Punch, in a fit of jealousy, strangles his infant child, whereupon his wife Judy belabours him with a bludgeon until he retaliates and beats her to death. He flings both bodies into the street, but is arrested and shut up in prison whence he escapes by means of a golden key. The rest is an allegory showing how the light-hearted Punch triumphs over (1) Ennui, in the shape of a dog; (2) Disease, in the disguise of a doctor; (3) Death, who is beaten to death; and (4) the DEVIL himself, who is outwitted. In subsequent English versions JACK KETCH instead of hanging Punch gets hanged instead.

The satirical humorous weekly paper, Punch, or The London Charivari, is, of course, named after Mr. Punch, who naturally featured prominently on the cover design for very many issues. It first appeared in July 1841 under the editorship of Mark Lemon and Henry Mayhew. Pleased as Punch. Greatly delighted. Punch is always singing with self-satisfaction at the success of his rascally ways.

Suffolk Punch. A short-legged, sturdy, thick-set cart horse. The term was formerly applied to any short fat man, and is probably a dialect variant of bunch.

[I] did hear them call their fat child Punch, which pleased me mightily, that word being become a word of common use for everything that is thick and short.

Pepys's Diary, 30 April 1669.

To be punch drunk. To experience a form of concussion to which boxers are liable, causing unsteadiness of gait resembling drunkenness, used figuratively of one "reeling from heavy punishment".

Punctual. No bigger than a point, exact to a point or moment (Lat. ad punctum). Hence the ANGEL, describing this earth to ADAM, calls it, "This spacious earth, this punctual spot"—i.e. a spot no bigger than a point (Milton: Paradise Lost, VIII, 23).

Punctuality is the politeness of kings (Fr. L'exactitude est la politesse des rois). A favourite maxim of Louis XVIII, but erroneously attributed by Samuel Smiles to Louis XIV.

Pundit (Hind. pandit). In India, a learned man, one versed in Sanskrit, law, religion, etc. We use the word for a learned man, an expert, an authority.

Punic Apple. A pomegranate or apple belonging to the genus Punica.

Punic Faith (Lat. punica fides). Treachery, violation of faith, the faith of the Carthaginians. The Phœnicians (Lat. Punicus, a Phœnician) founded Carthage and the long-drawn-out Punic Wars between Rome and Carthage ended in the latter's destruction. The Roman accusations of breach of faith were classic instances of the POT CALLING THE KETTLE BLACK. Cp. ATTIC FAITH.

Our Punic Faith

Is infamous, and branded to a proverb.

ADDISON: Cato, II.

Pup. Slang for a pupil, especially an undergraduate studying with a tutor.

As applied to the young of dogs, the word is an abbreviation of puppy, which represents Fr. poupée, a dressed doll, a plaything.

An empty-headed, impertinent young fellow is frequently called a young puppy, hence Douglas Jerrold's epigram in his Man Made of Money—

Dogmatism is puppyism come to its full growth.

To be sold a pup. To be swindled.

Pure, Simon. See SIMON PURE.

Purgatory. The doctrine of Purgatory, according to which the souls of the departed suffer for a time till they are purged of their sin, is of ancient standing, and in certain phases of Jewish belief GEHENNA seems to have been regarded partly as a place of purgatory.

The early Church Fathers developed the concept of purgatory and support for the doctrine was adduced from 2 Macc. xii, 39-45; Matt. xii, 32; 1 Cor. iii, 11-13; etc. The first decree on the subject was promulgated by the Council of Florence in 1439. It was rejected by the CHURCH OF ENGLAND in 1562 by the XXIIInd of the Articles of Religion.

St. Patrick's Purgatory. See under PATRICK.

Purification, Feast of. See CANDLEMAS DAY.

Puritans. The more extreme PROTESTANTS inside and outside the CHURCH OF ENGLAND who found the Elizabethan religious settlement unacceptable and wished a further "purification" of religion. They looked more and more to the BIBLE as the sole authority, rejecting all tradition in matters of public worship, and were mainly Calvinist in outlook and theology. They feature in the 16th and 17th century as BROWNISTS, BARROWISTS, PRESBYTERIANS, Baptists, SEPARATISTS, and Independents, and were sometimes called Precisionists from their punctiliousness over religious rules and observances. After the RESTORATION and the Act of Uniformity (1662), they became collectively known as DISSENTERS or NON-CONFORMISTS.

Purlieu (pér' lū). The outlying parts of a place, the environs; originally the borders or outskirts of a forest, especially a part which was formerly part of the forest. It is a corruption of the O.Fr. pourallée, a going through; the lieu, as though for place, being an erroneous addition due to English pronunciation and spelling of the French. Thus Henry III allowed certain portions around the forests, acquired by his predecessors by unlawful encroachment, to be freed from the forest-laws and restored to former owners. The boundaries were then settled by a perambulation or pourallée. See FOREST COURTS.

In the purlieus of this forest stands

A sheepcote fenced about with olive-trees.

SHAKESPEARE: As You Like It, IV, iii.

Purple. A synonym for the rank of Roman emperor, derived from the colour of the emperor's dyed woollen robe, hence phrases such as "raised to the purple". Purple robes were a mark of dignity among the ancient Greeks and Romans and were worn by kings, magistrates, and military commanders, hence purple became a symbol of luxury and power. It was obtained from shellfish (Buccinum, Murex) and the deep colour was termed purpura (from the name of one of these molluscs). The famous Tyrian purple was made from a mixture of these shells and was very costly to produce. Differing shades were obtained by various combinations and methods. Since Roman times, purple was used in the insignia of emperors, kings and prelates, and a priest is said to be raised to the purple when he is created CARDINAL, though his insignia are actually red. Purpure is one of the tinctures used in HERALDRY, and in engravings it is shown by lines running diagonally from sinister to dexter (i.e. from right to left as one looks at it). See COLOURS.

Born in, or to the purple. See PORPHYROGENITUS.

Purple Emperor. One of the largest and most richly coloured British butterflies, Apatura iris. Only the male has the purple sheen.

Purple Heart. A U.S. army medal awarded for wounds received by enemy action while on active service. It consists of a silver heart bearing the effigy of George Washington, suspended from a purple ribbon with white edges. The heartwood of Copaifera pubiflora and C. bracteata is called Purple Heart or Purple Wood. It is a native of Guyana and a rich plum colour, and was used in making ramrods for guns. Purple Heart is also the popular name of a stimulant pill (Drin-amy) favoured by youthful drug-takers, so called from its shape and colour.

Purple patches. Highly coloured or florid patches in a literary work which is generally undistinguished. The allusion is to Horace's De Arte Poetica, 14:

Inceptis gravibus plerumque et magna professis
Purpureis, late qui splendeat, unus et alter
Adsuitur pannus.

Pursuivant

(Often to weighty enterprises and such as profess great objects, one or two purple patches are sewn on to make a fine display in the distance.)

Pursuivant (pēr' swi vânt). The lowest grade of the officers of arms comprising the Heralds' College, the others, under the EARL MARSHAL, being (1) the Kings of Arms, and (2) the HERALDS.

ENGLAND has four Pursuivants, viz. Rouge Croix, Bluemantle, Rouge Dragon, and Portcullis; SCOTLAND has three, viz. Carrick, Kintyre, and Unicorn.

Purveyance. A doublet of providence, from Lat. providentia, foresight. Historically, the Crown prerogative of purchasing provisions etc. for the HOUSEHOLD at an appraised price and of impressing horses and vehicles. With an itinerant court such compulsory purchases caused much local hardship, especially as ready payment was rare, and from the late 13th century protests led to statutes against its abuse. It was largely abolished in 1660 but the purveyance of horses by the army was practised in World War I and this and the right of impressment of vehicles still exist for the Services. The current use of compulsory purchase orders on properties has much in common with practices denounced under the early Stuart kings.

Puseyite (pū' zi it). A HIGH CHURCH follower of E. B. Pusey (1800-1882), Professor of Hebrew at Oxford, one of the leaders of the OXFORD MOVEMENT, and a contributor to Tracts for the Times. Hence Puseyism as an unfriendly name for Tractarianism.

Push. To give one the push. To give him his CONGÉ, to give him the sack (see under SACK).

To push off. To depart, to commence the operations. A phrase from boating—one starts by pushing the boat off from the bank. Used imperatively, Push off means "Go away", "Get out of here".

To push the boat out. A popular expression meaning to celebrate by treating one's acquaintances to a drinking session. Of nautical origin, probably from the idea of a final celebration before sailing, to give impetus to one's departure.

Push-button civilization. A phrase descriptive of the highly industrialized nations of the world where household chores are performed, and entertainment provided, etc., by electrical appliances operated by "push-button" controls.

Push-button, or press-button war. A war carried on with guided missiles controlled by pushing or pressing a button.

Puss. A conventional call-name for a cat, possibly imitative of a cat-like sound; also applied in the 17th century and since to hares. The derivation from Lat. lepus, a hare, Frenchified into le pus, is, of course, only humorous.

Puss in Boots. This nursery tale, Le Chat Botté, is from Straparola's Nights (1530), No. xi, where Constantine's cat procures his master a fine castle and the king's heiress. It was translated from the Italian into French, in 1585, and appeared in Perrault's Les contes de ma Mère l'Oye (1697), through which medium it reached England. In the story the clever cat secures a fortune and a royal partner for his master, who passes off as the Marquis of Carabas, but is in reality a young miller without a penny in the world.

Puss in the Corner. An old game recorded in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes of the People of England. A boy or girl stands in each corner of a room and a fifth player in the middle. Those in the corners change positions in a succession and the centre player tries to occupy a corner before another can reach it. If achieved the loser occupies the centre.

Pussyfoot. A person with a soft, catlike sneaking tread, and from PUSSYFOOT JOHNSON (below), now applied as a noun to advocates of, and as an adjective to opinions, legislation, etc., promoting total abstinence.

Pussyfoot Johnson. W. E. Johnson (1862-1945), the temperance advocate, gained his nickname from his "cat-like" policies in pursuing law-breakers in gambling saloons, etc., in Indian territory when serving as Chief Special Officer of the U.S. Indian Service (1908-1911). After this he devoted his energies to the cause of prohibition and gave over 4,000 lectures on temperance.

Put. A clown, a silly shallow-pate, a butt; one easily "put upon".

As he gave the good-night to two or three young fellows before landing, one of them, instead of returning the civility, asked us what queer old put we had in the boat.

ADDISON: Sir Roger at Spring Gardens.

Put and Take. A game of chance played with a modification of the old "tee-to-tum", one side of which is marked Put—signifying that the player pays—and another Take. It was popular in the early 1920s.

To put one's shoulder to the wheel. To make a determined effort; as a carter would put his shoulder to the wheel to assist his horses hauling his waggon out of a rut.

To put two and two together. To draw conclusions from facts, events, etc.; two and two make four, hence the suggestion of a simple and obvious deduction.

To stay put. To remain firmly in a position, literally or figuratively.

Putsch (pooch). A German word, the same as our push, applied to a COUP DE MAIN or political uprising.

Pygmalion (pig mā' li ōn). In Greek legend, a sculptor and king of Cyprus. According to Ovid's Metamorphoses, he fell in love with his own ivory statue of his own ideal woman. At his earnest prayer the goddess APHRODITE gave life to the statue and he married it. The story is found in Marston's Metamorphosis of Pygmalion's Image (1598). Morris retold it in The Earthly Paradise (August), and W. S. Gilbert adapted it in his comedy of Pygmalion and Galatea (1871), in which the sculptor is a married man. His wife, Cynisca, was jealous of the animated statue (Galatea), which, after considerable trouble, voluntarily returned to its original state. The name was used figuratively by G. B. Shaw for a play produced in 1912 from which the popular musical My Fair Lady was derived.

Pygmy (pig' mi). The name used by HOMER and other classical writers for a supposed race of DWARFS said to dwell in Ethiopia, Africa, or India; from Gk. pygme, the length of the arm from the elbow to the knuckles. They cut down corn with hatchets and made war against cranes which came annually to plunder them. When HERCULES visited their country they climbed up his goblet by ladders to drink from it, and while he was asleep two whole armies of pygmies fell upon his right hand and two on his left and were rolled up by Hercules in the skin of the NEMEAN LION. Swift's debt to this legend is apparent in his Gulliver's Travels.

The term is now applied to certain dwarfish races of central Africa (whose existence was established late in the 19th century), Malaysia, etc.; also to small members of a species, as the pygmy hippopotamus.

Pylades and Orestes (pi' lă dēz, ō res' tēz). Two friends in Homeric legend, whose names have become proverbial for friendship, like those of DAMON AND PYTHIAS, DAVID AND JONATHAN. Orestes was the son, and Pylades the nephew, of AGAMEMNON, after whose murder Orestes was put in the care of Pylades' father (Strophius), and the two became fast friends. Pylades assisted Orestes in obtaining vengeance on Ægisthus and CLYTEMNESTRA, and afterwards married ELECTRA, his friend's sister.

Pylon. Properly a monumental gateway (Gr. pulon, a gateway), especially of an Egyptian temple, consisting of two massive towers joined by a bridge over the doorway; now usually applied to the obelisks that mark out the course on an airfield or to the standards for electric cables.

Pyramid (pir' á mid) (Gr. pyramís, a wheat cake). The Greek name of these massive royal tombs of ancient Egypt was probably of humorous application. Zoser's step-pyramid at Saqqara (IIIrd Dynasty) was the forerunner of the true pyramid. The next stage was when the step-pyramid at Meidum was covered with a uniform slope from base to top by filling in the steps (c. 2670 B.C.). The famous Great Pyramid at Giza, covering some 13 acres and originally rising to a height of 481 ft., was built by Cheops or Khufu (c. 2650 B.C.). That of Chephren or Khafra (c. 2620 B.C.), his son, is slightly smaller, and the third, the tomb of Mycerinus or Menkaura (c. 2600 B.C.), is 204 ft. high. Each contains entrances with passages leading to an antechamber and the burial chamber. Other pyramids are to be found at Abusir, Saqqara, Dahshur, Lisht, and in the Faiyum.

The kings of the XIth Dynasty built small brick pyramids at Thebes.

Pyramus (pir' á mús). A Babylonian youth in classic story (see Ovid's Metamorphoses, iv), the lover of Thisbe. Thisbe was to meet him at the white mulberry-tree near the tomb of Ninus, but she, scared by a lion, fled and left her veil, which the lion besmeared with blood. Pyramus, thinking his lady-love had been devoured, slew himself, and Thisbe, coming up soon afterwards, stabbed herself also. The blood of the lovers stained the white fruit of the mulberry-tree into its present colour. The "tedious brief scene" and "very tragical mirth" presented by the rustics in SHAKESPEARE'S Midsummer Night's Dream is a travesty of this legend.

Pyrography. The art of decorating woodwork, furniture, panelling, etc., by designs and pictures burnt in with hot steel points. Some of the best work was as fine in detail as a good etching. Pyrography dates from the 17th century and reached its highest standard in the 19th century. In its crude form it is poker-work.

Pyromancy

Pyromancy (Gr. pur, fire; manteia, divination). Divination by fire or the shapes observed in fire.

Pyrrha (pi' rǎ). The wife of DEUCALION.

Pyrrhic Dance (pi' rik). The famous war-dance of the Greeks; so called from its inventor, Pyrrichos, a Dorian. It was a quick dance, performed in full armour to the flute, and its name is still used for a metrical foot of two short "dancing" syllables. The Romaika, still danced in Greece, is a relic of the ancient Pyrrhic dance.

Ye have the Pyrrhic dance as yet;
Where is the Pyrrhic phalanx gone?

BYRON: Don Juan, canto III
(The Isles of Greece, I. 56).

Pyrrhic victory. A victory won at too heavy a price, like the costly victory won by Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, at Asculum in 279 B.C. ("One more such victory and we are lost.") Pyrrhus lost all his best officers and many men.

Pyrrhonism. Scepticism, or philosophic doubt; so named from Pyrrho (4th century B.C.), the founder of the first Greek school of sceptical philosophy. Pyrrho maintained that nothing was capable of proof and admitted the reality of nothing but sensations.

Pythagoras (pi thǎg' or ás). The Greek philosopher and mathematician of the 6th century B.C. (born at Samos), to whom was attributed the enunciation of the doctrines of the TRANSMIGRATION OF SOULS and of the harmony of the spheres, and also the proof of the 47th proposition in the 1st book of EUCLID, which is hence called the Pythagorean proposition. He taught that the SUN, MOON, and PLANETS have a motion independent of their daily rotation but seems to have held that the universe was earth-centred (see PYTHAGOREAN SYSTEM).

Pythagoras was noted for his manly beauty and long hair. Many stories are related of him, such as that he distinctly recollected previous existences of his own, having been (1) Æthelides, son of MERCURY; (2) Euphorbus the Phrygian, son of Panthous, in which form he ran PATROCLUS through with a lance, leaving HECTOR to kill him; (3) Hermetimus, the prophet of Clazomenæ; and (4) a fisherman. To prove his Phrygian existence he was taken to the temple of HERA, in Argos, and asked to point out the shield of the son of Panthous, which he did without hesitation. Rosalind alludes to this story in Shakespeare's As You Like It (III, ii) when she says:

I was never so be-rhym'd since Pythagoras' time that I was an Irish rat, which I can hardly remember.

It is also elaborated in Twelfth Night (IV, ii):

Clown: What is the opinion of Pythagoras concerning wild fowl?

Mal.: That the soul of our grandam might haply inhabit a bird.

Clown: What thinkest thou of his opinion?

Mal.: I think nobly of the soul, and no way approve his opinion.

Other legends assert that one of his thighs was of GOLD, and that he showed it to ABARIS, and exhibited it in the OLYMPIC GAMES.

It was also said that Pythagoras used to write on a looking-glass in blood and place it opposite the MOON, when the inscription would appear reflected on the moon's disc; and that he tamed a savage Daunian bear by "stroking it gently with his hand", subdued an EAGLE by the same means, and held absolute dominion over beasts and birds by "the power of his voice" or "influence of his touch".

At Croton he became the centre of the Pythagorean brotherhood which sought the moral reformation of society, practising temperance and abstinence from fleshy food.

The letter of Pythagoras. The Greek letter upsilon, Y; so called because it was used by him as a symbol of the divergent paths of virtue and vice.

The Pythagorean System. The astronomical system so called which held the universe to be spherical in shape with fire at its centre, around which revolved the counter-earth, the earth, then the MOON, the SUN, the five PLANETS, and lastly the sphere of fixed stars. It is a forerunner of the COPERNICAN SYSTEM and seems to be later hypothesis of the Pythagoreans and not to have been originated by Pythagoras himself.

The Pythagorean Tables. See TABLE OF PYTHAGORAS.

The Theorem of Pythagoras. That the square on the hypotenuse of a right-angled triangle is equal to the sum of the squares on the other two sides.

Pythia (pith' i á). The priestess of APOLLO at DELPHI who delivered ORACLES. Inspiration was obtained by inhaling sulphureous vapours which issued from the ground from a hole over which she sat on a three-legged stool or tripod. Oracles were only available in the spring and were originally spoken in HEXAMETER verses.

Pythian Games. The Greek games held in honour of APOLLO at Pytho in Phocis, subsequently called DELPHI. They took place every fourth year, in the third year of each OLYMPIAD, and were next in importance to the OLYMPIC GAMES.

Pythias. See DAMON.

The Knights of Pythias. A benevolent fraternity in the U.S.A. and Canada, founded at Washington, D.C., in 1864. The Pythian Sisters, founded in 1888, are recruited from female relatives of the Knights.

Python (pi' thon). The monster serpent hatched from the mud of DEUCALION's deluge, and slain by APOLLO at DELPHI (Pytho).

Pyx (picks) (Gr. pyxis, a boxwood vessel). A small metal receptacle or box in which the reserved HOST is taken to sick people. It is also the vessel in which the Host is reserved in the Tabernacle in Roman Catholic (and some Anglican) churches.

Trial of the Pyx. In ENGLAND, out of every 15 lb. TROY WEIGHT of gold and every 60 lb. of "silver" minted a coin is put into the pyx or box for annual testing at Goldsmiths' Hall in the City of London. This is known as the trial of the pyx. The coins are tested for weight and fineness in the presence of the QUEEN's REMEMBRANCER and a jury of goldsmiths. Their verdict is delivered in the presence of the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER. The trial was initiated in the reign of Edward I and formerly took place in the Chapel of the Pyx in Westminster Abbey.

Q

Q. The seventeenth letter of the English alphabet, and nineteenth of the Phœnician and Hebrew. In English q is invariably followed by u except in the transliteration of some Arabic words, as in Qatar. Qu in English normally represents the sound kw as in quinquennial but occasionally k as in perique, grotesque, and quay (pronounced kē). Without the u it is pronounced k as in Iraq. Formerly, in Scotland, qu replaced hw as in quhat, or hwat (what). Q as a mediæval Latin numeral represents 500.
