Cassell's Latin Dictionary

Since its first appearance in 1854 and through many revisions this dictionary has remained constant in its appeal to scholars. As Head of the Classical Department at Eton College, D. P. Simpson was uniquely qualified to revise the work in the light of modern knowledge and he has introduced fresh material from a number of sources. In English idiom and Latin spelling he has followed present-day usages.

“This new and revised Latin Dictionary is among the best of its kind, being reliable, compact and adequate for the needs of all save the specialist. He has produced what is in effect a new book, typographically easy to consult and combining elegance with utility.”

PREFACE

CASELL'S LATIN DICTIONARY first appeared in 1854, as the work of John Rely Beard (1800-76) and his son Charles Beard (1827-88). Both men were eminent Unitarian divines; the father in particular was well known as a minister and teacher in Manchester and the author or editor of many books, several of which were published by Cassell. From the outset the general form and scope of the book were very much the same as they are now.

The Latin-English section was compiled wholly by Charles Beard. In his preface he names the thirty-four Latin authors whose words have been his concern; in the main we should still accept these as the standard or 'classical' authors, though two or three of them are nowadays seldom read. He claims also to have included some 'mythological notices' and 'short biographies of distinguished Romans'. He acknowledges his indebtedness to various scholars, notably to two Germans, Dr Wilhelm Freund (whose Latin-German dictionary was also a main source of the standard work of Lewis and Short) and Dr Karl Ernst Georges, whose Lateinisch-Deutsches Handwörterbuch was then available in the tenth edition (Leipzig 1848). The length of the Latin-English text is perhaps two-thirds of that in the present volume. The articles are simple in structure, with no elaborate sub-division and no etymological notes except on words derived from the Greek.

Dr J. R. Beard takes over from his son at the beginning of the English-Latin section. In a fresh preface he tells us of his general aim 'to present a Latin equivalent for every English word and phrase now in current use'; the Latin offered is to be Ciceronian or as nearly as may well be. Modestly he admits that he has done no more than skim the cream of 'the best scholarship of Germany'. Of the non-German sources which he cites, the oldest and most attractive-sounding is Calliepeia, or A Rich Storehouse of Proper Choyce and Elegant Latine Words and Phrases, collected for the most part out of Tullies Works, by Thomas Drax (London, 1631). His English-Latin text is almost exactly as long as his son's Latin-English, and has the same simplicity to commend it; the Ciceronian strain is on the whole well maintained, though some of the more technical articles offer ecclesiastical, medical, and other special terms which we should not now wish to hear in school.

The subsequent history of the Dictionary, extending for now just over a century, seems clear enough in its main outline, though the loss of the Publisher's records during the Second World War has made it partly a matter of research and conjecture. In 1869 a second edition appeared, which was in fact a stereotype reprint, bound in the green boards and red back which remained for many years afterwards the regular livery of the book. In text no change was made until nearly the end of the Victorian period.

In 1886 appeared 'CASELL'S LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY Revised, enlarged and in part rewritten by J. R. V. Marchant, M.A.' This was a new version of the first half of the 1854 book. James Robert Vernam Marchant had gone up from the City of London School to Wadham College, Oxford, as a scholar in 1872. He had taken a 'first in Greats' in 1876 and taught for a short time at St Paul's School. He was called to the Bar in 1884, and in 1920 became County Court Judge on the East Anglian Circuit. He died in 1936. What he sought to do for C. Beard was to make his work 'suited for the middle forms of public schools'. This aim involved him both in pruning and in amplification. Stressing his concern with 'classical' Latin, he set out to cover a narrower field than Beard, omitting much that was 'archaic or post-Augustan'; thus he gives short shrift to Varro and Plautus, to Seneca and Vitruvius. But words which he retains are treated more fully than before, with more frequent notes on etymology (though 'of an unambitious kind'), typographical improvements such as the use of 'bold' letters in headings, more explanatory remarks in English and notably more illustrative quotations in Latin. Marchant acknowledges that his revision 'closely follows and in many points is based on the invaluable Dictionary of Professor Georges'. This standby was the 1879 edition of the 'Handwörterbuch' previously used by C. Beard, and comparison indeed confirms that nearly all that Marchant adds to Beard is drawn from this copious source; much of his English is a direct translation from the German of Georges, many of his new quotations from Latin authors are similarly inspired, and above all the somewhat elaborate apparatus of figures and letters with which he divides up even a short article wears a Teutonic look that points, quite justly, to the same origin. The effect of Marchant's changes as a whole was to increase the length of the Latin-English section by about one-third.

By 1892 a similar task of revision had been carried out on Dr J. R. Beard's English-Latin section, and in that year a new edition of the whole work became available in thirty-four successive instalments, of which all but the last were sold for 3*d.*, the last for 2*d.* The title page gave the credit for the double revision jointly to Marchant and to Joseph Fletcher Charles, B.A. The Latin-English section remained exactly as printed in 1886 under Marchant's name. It is therefore clear that the English-Latin had been overhauled either by the two scholars together or by Mr Charles alone. This fresh recruit had been for a short time, in 1871, a fellow-pupil of Marchant at the City of London School. He was afterwards an exhibitor at University College, London, and a postmaster at Merton College, Oxford. After taking his degree he taught first at the High School, Gateshead, and then at his own (and Marchant's) old school from 1886 until shortly before his death in 1901. He published a book on Modern Thought and Modern Thinkers and several works of fiction. The general tendency of the changes which he made or helped to make in the Latin Dictionary was towards a more modern English and greater brevity. The English-Latin section now became little more than half as long as the Latin-English, whereas the two Beards had produced sections of equal length. The new proportion seems justified by the wholesome stress which it lays on the longer and more informative section, and is retained in the present volume.

After 1892 the Dictionary continued for sixty years to be reprinted at short intervals in the form which it had now reached.

In 1953 I was asked to undertake a complete overhaul of both sections of the work, and I now lay before the reader what is in many respects a new book. My aim has been to conform to the fashions of the present day, both in English idiom and in Latin spelling; to introduce fresh material from various sources; and in matters of explanation and arrangement to go part of the way back to the simplicity of the first edition. Yet while rewriting much, I have tried to adhere throughout to the traditional principle that 'classical' Latin, the language of what we still consider the best period, should be the prime concern of both parts of CASSELL'S NEW LATIN DICTIONARY. The first part is intended primarily to help the student in the reading of such Latin, the second part to help him in the writing of it, or rather in the writing of Latin prose in the manner of Cicero, Caesar or Livy; for the writing of Latin verse more specialized help is needed and should be sought elsewhere. But even for the limited purposes of Latin Prose composition (an exercise which may be called artificial certainly, but has long been regarded in England as an integral part of classical scholarship) the student should refer constantly to the Latin-English for further illumination.

Fuller information can be found at need in a number of other works. I would chiefly recommend the following, in addition to the Latin authors themselves.*

DICTIONARIES

Thesaurus Linguae Latinae. An exhaustive work begun by five German academies in 1900, which has now (1958) been taken as far as the letter M.
A Latin Dictionary, by Charlton T. Lewis and Charles Short (1879). Still the standard Latin-English work, pending the completion of that now in hand at Oxford, which will supersede it.
Smith's Smaller Latin-English Dictionary. Revised edition by J. F. Lockwood (1933).
Smith's Smaller English-Latin Dictionary (1870).
Dictionnaire Etymologique de la Langue Latine, by A. Ernout and A. Meillet (Third edition, 1951).

SPECIALIZED WORD-LISTS

Thesaurus Poeticus Linguae Latinae, by L. Quicherat. Third edition, by E. Chatelain (1895). A most convenient authority on the quantities of syllables in Latin words.
English-Latin Gradus or Verse Dictionary, by A. C. Ainger and H. G. Wintle (Second edition, 1891). This, rather than any other English-Latin word-list, should be used for the purpose of Latin verse composition.
Latin Phrase-Book. Originally by C. Meissner; translated from the German by H. W. Arden (1895). The phrases, mainly Ciceronian, are grouped according to subject-matter, but there is an English as well as a Latin index.
Horae Latinae: Studies in Synonyms and Syntax, by R. Ogilvie (1901). Occasional notes (arranged alphabetically) on the translation of certain English words and phrases into Latin prose.

ON GENERAL ANTIQUITIES

A Companion to Latin Studies. Edited by Sir J. Sandys (Third Edition, 1921).
The Oxford Classical Dictionary (1949).

ON LATIN PROSE COMPOSITION

Hints towards Latin Prose Composition, by A. W. Potts (Sixth Edition, 1902).
Latin Prose Composition, by W. R. Hardie (1908).
Sermo Latinus, by J. P. Postgate (New Edition, 1913).
'Bradley's Arnold' Latin Prose Composition, revised by J. F. Mountford (1938).

Without the constant help given to me by most of these books, and others besides, I should have been lost indeed. Hardly smaller is my debt to generous and patient friends, at Eton, at Oxford and—not least—in the office of the publishers.

ADVICE TO THE USER

Latin-English Section

VOCABULARY. This section contains articles on most of the words used by 'classical' authors from about 200 B.C. to A.D. 100. A number of proper names have also been included, especially those that figure prominently in Roman history and Roman writings.

ORDER OF WORDS. Alphabetical order has been followed in the main, but where two Latin words are very closely connected one article has been placed below the other, at the cost of taking a word out of its ordinary turn. Thus adverbs appear under the adjective from which they are derived, and participles (if their use as adjectives needs description) under the parent verb; in the same way proper names that are related together have been arranged in a group. But wherever this system has involved a wide departure from alphabetical order, cross-references have been inserted. Small figures have been prefixed to words which are different but spelt alike, such as ¹*bēta* (=beet) and ²*bēta* (=β).

SPELLING OF LATIN WORDS. The aim has been to follow the general tendencies shown by modern editors of Latin texts. Thus the 'unassimilated' forms of compound words are often preferred to the assimilated, for example—adsiduus to assiduus; here again the cross-references should prevent mystification. I, i replaces J, j throughout, but V, v is retained.

DECLENSION, CONJUGATION, ETC. The Latin word printed in bold type at the head of an article is followed, first, by any alternative form in which it may be found (e.g. caussa, as alternative to causa). Next come, if the word is a noun, its genitive and gender and further details of its declension if not regular; if the word is an adjective, the feminine and neuter forms of the nominative singular, or else its genitive, singular; if the word is a verb, either its present infinitive active or whatever else the user will need in order to be sure of the conjugation. There follows, for many words, a simple indication of origin, enclosed in brackets; in such notices an oblique stroke is often used to distinguish between separate elements in the derivation; for instance aliunde is shown to have come from alius and unde by means of the etymological note '(alius/unde)'.

QUANTITY. The natural length of vowels has been indicated by means of the usual symbols (˘ short, – long) wherever this seemed helpful, and especially at the beginning of an article. But short vowels which are followed by two consonants have generally been left unmarked, because the syllables containing them are liable to be scanned as long. So have many vowels in final syllables, provided that they conform to some regular type of declension or conjugation; for example, -a is not marked short in mensa, nor -o long in amo, nor -e short at the end of any active infinitive.

STRUCTURE OF ARTICLES. In many of the articles a distinction is drawn between the 'literal' and the 'transferred' uses of a word. The kind of difference meant is that between the uses of the English word 'sea' in the two phrases 'lost at sea' and 'a sea of troubles'. Consequently an article, or a part of an article, often falls into two sections, prefaced by the two keywords 'LIT.' and 'TRANSF.'. The abbreviation 'Fig.' (=figurative) is used in much the same sense as 'TRANSF.', but generally to describe occasional rather than regular uses of a word. 'Hence' introduces senses and uses which follow naturally from what has already been described.

Arabic numbers in brackets, (1), (2), (3), etc., are used as a separate means of classification, to introduce senses of a word which are parallel and not to be distinguished from each other as literal and transferred. Where an item prefaced by such a number requires to be divided again into parallel members, lower-case letters, a, b, c, etc., are used.

Fresh paragraphs have been introduced on no rigid principle, but only to break up some of the longer articles as seemed desirable.

LATIN AUTHORS. Authors' names have been abbreviated throughout according to the list given below (p. xi). Some classical authority is adduced for every word, and for every separate sense of a word, which appears in this section of the dictionary, but such notes are intended to be representative rather than exhaustive, and simply to suggest how widely a word (or special sense of a word) was used during the classical period, and by what kind or kinds of author.

English-Latin Section

PURPOSE. This section is intended chiefly as an aid to Latin Prose composition, by which is meant the conversion of English prose of various styles and periods into Latin prose of a 'classical' type. Most of the English words treated here are therefore such as might well arise in this form of exercise, and such as can be turned without excessive distortion into classical Latin, whether literary or colloquial. Words like 'madhouse', because they correspond to no genuine Roman idea or institution, have been omitted. There is another kind of word which has necessarily been treated, but not without misgivings. This is the abstract or general term, such as 'passion' or 'politics', which depends on the particular context in which it occurs for its exact meaning, so that the student who meets it in an actual 'prose' should be in a better position to evaluate it and to find an appropriate equivalent than the lexicographer who grapples with it in isolation. For such words some of the more common and useful equivalents are offered here, but for general guidance only and with no hope of saving the student from the need for careful thought and discriminating choice.

The comparatively small scope of this section will make it advisable to refer to the Latin-English section for fuller information about many of the Latin words offered.

ORDER OF WORDS. Alphabetical order has been followed strictly in this section. Words which are different but look alike are distinguished from each other by a reference to parts of speech, e.g. 'subst.', 'adj.'.

LATIN EQUIVALENTS. These are taken as far as possible from Cicero, Caesar and Livy, and may be understood to have been used by at least one of those three, if no particular authority for them is cited. A very small proportion of Latin words are shown to belong quite outside the classical period, by such indications as 'leg.' (i.e. used only by the late writers on law) or 'eccl.' (i.e. used only by Christian writers).

SPELLING OF LATIN WORDS. This is the same as in the Latin-English section.

DECLENSION AND CONJUGATION. Nouns of the fourth declension are followed by a reference to their genitive singular, in the form '(-ūs)', in order to distinguish them from nouns of the second. Similar notes give warning of other unexpected modes of declension. Verbs are cited in the present infinitive active (if they have one), in order to show their conjugation; but their principal parts should be checked in the Latin-English section.

QUANTITY. These are given more sparingly than in the Latin-English section, and chiefly to indicate either declension (as in the fourth-declension genitive -ūs) or conjugation (as in the second- and third-conjugation infinitives -ēre and -ĕre).

STRUCTURE. The same general principles are followed here as in the Latin-English section.

USE OF BRACKETS. Round brackets, (), are used not only for the ordinary purposes of parenthesis, such as further explanation or qualification, and the citing of authorities, but also to suggest that some word may be omitted in a Latin phrase, or that both the simple and the compound forms of a Latin word are available for use (e.g. (per)suadēre represents both suadēre and persuadēre).

USE OF homo AND res. To illustrate uses of Latin words, homo (=a person) and res (=a thing) have been introduced in preference to aliquis and aliquid. The following are the forms that will most often be found:

Nom.	singular	homo	res
Acc.	„	hominem	rem
Genit.	„	hominis	rei (genit.)
Dat.	„	homini	rei (dat.)
Abl.	„	homine	re

THE ROMAN CALENDAR

YEARS. From the earliest times the official method of referring to a particular year was to give the names of the consuls of that year. Antiquarians, especially Varro, sought for a more convenient method, and eventually 753 B.C. was accepted as the date of the foundation of Rome, and subsequent events were related to that. Thus:

A.U.C. 1 (the first year ab urbe condita, i.e. after the foundation of Rome)=753 B.C.

A.U.C. 2=752 B.C.; and so on; for the whole B.C. era, subtract the A.U.C. number from 754 to obtain the B.C. number.

A.U.C. 753=1 B.C.

A.U.C. 754=A.D. 1.

A.U.C. 755=A.D. 2; and so on; for the whole A.D. era, subtract 753 from the A.U.C. number to obtain the A.D. number.

MONTHS. The year originally consisted of ten months, and began with March; later the number was fixed at twelve. The following are used as adjectives with mensis, Kalendae, etc.; also in the masculine as substantives (sc. mensis):

Ianuarius	Maius	September
Februarius	Iunius	October
Martius	Quinctilis (later called Iulius)	November
Aprilis	Sextilis (later called Augustus)	December

DAYS. Until the reforms of Julius Caesar, the normal year consisted of 355 days only, but was from time to time lengthened by the addition of intercalary months. The irregular working of this system caused great uncertainty and confusion. Caesar first gave the special length of 445 days to the year 46 B.C. (called by Macrobius annus confusionis), and then in 45 B.C. instituted a regular cycle of four years, such as we have now, of which three contained 365 days and the fourth, the leap-year, 366.

The following words and phrases indicate on a certain date (according to the Calendar of Caesar, which was used from 45 B.C. onwards):

Days of the month	January, August, December (31 days)	March, May July, October (31 days)	April, June, September November (30 days)	February (28 days)

LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY

A, a, the first letter of the Latin Alphabet.

a, as an abbreviation, see table of Latin abbreviations.

a, ah, interj. Ah! Pl., Verg.

ā, āb, abs, prep. with abl. (a stands before consonants except h; ab before vowels, h and sometimes consonants; abs only sometimes before c, q, t—esp. te). Ab denotes motion away from a fixed point (opp. ad).

LIT., in space. (1) of motion, as with verbs of going or taking, away from: ad carceres a calce revocari, Cic. Often with persons: a me, from me, from my house, from my purse, etc., Cic. Often strengthened by usque, all the way from: usque ab capitolio excitatus, Cic. (2) of distance from a point, with actual motion not necessarily involved, from. So with measures of distance, adverbs like procul, etc., and such verbs as abesse, distare: ab urbe abesse milia passuum ducenta, Cic. (3) of the side from which a thing is viewed, and so of the direction in which it lies: a septentrionibus, on or to the north, Caes.; a fronte, a tergo, a latere, a dextro cornu, Cic.; ab novissimis, in the rear, Caes.

TRANSF., in time, indicating duration or distance from, after: ab hora tertia bibebatur, Cic.; cuius a morte hic tertius et tricesimus annus, Cic.; ab urbe condita. Esp. with nouns indicating stages, times of life, etc.: ab initio; ab ovo; a pueris.

TRANSF., of other, analogous relations. (1) of separation, difference, change from: quantum mutatus ab illo, Verg. So of protection from, with such verbs as defendere. Of position or number, counting from: quartus ab Arcesila, Cic. Of a part detached or considered separately from a whole; out of, of: nonnulli ab novissimis, some of the rear-guard, Cic. (2) of origin. So regularly of agency, especially with passive or intransitive verbs, by, at the hands of: reprehendi ab, Cic.; interire ab, Cic.; and of causation generally, from, because of: id facinus natum a cupiditate, Cic. With places of origin, from: Turnus ab Aricia, Liv.; of ancestry, training, etc.: Zeno et qui ab eo sunt, Zeno and his school, Cic. With sources of information, gifts, etc., from: so accipere, emere, audire ab. (3) corresponding to LIT. (3) above, of other relations; in connexion with, on the side of: imparati cum a militibus tum a pecunia, as regards soldiers and money, Caes. Esp. with terms indicating employment: servus a pedibus, a footman, Cic.; a manu servus, secretary, Suet.

ābācus -i, m. (ἀβάξ), a square board. Hence (1) a sideboard: Cic. (2) a counting-board: Pers. (3) a gaming-board divided into compartments: Suet. (4) in architecture, a painted ceiling panel: Vitruv., Plin.; or the square slab on the top of a column: Vitruv.
