Valli signed a solo contract with Private Stock in 1974 and soon had several hits, including "My Eyes Adored You" (#1, 1975), "Swearin' to God" (#6, 1975), and a cover of Ruby and the Romantics' "Our Day Will Come" (#11, 1975). The Four Seasons had almost ceased to exist, but in 1975 they made a comeback with one of their biggest-selling singles, "Who Loves You" (#3), followed the next year by "December 1963 (Oh What a Night)" (#1, 1976). Shortly before a 1977 tour, Valli announced—with some bitterness—that he would never work with the Four Seasons again, although he and Gaudio have retained co-ownership of the group and its name. But despite Valli's solo success ("Grease" hit #1 and sold over 7 million copies), the Four Seasons re-formed in 1980 with Gaudio, Valli, guitarist Don Ciccone (former lead singer of the Critters and a Season since 1974), keyboardist Jerry Corbetta (ex-lead singer of Sugarloaf), guitarist Larry Lingle, and drummer Gerry Polci (who had been singing with the group since 1973).

In 1984 Valli and Gaudio formed FBI Records, and the Four Seasons teamed with the Beach Boys for the single "East Meets West." Valli has appeared in the films Eternity and Modern Love. In 1990 the original members were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. Thanks to the 1994 film Forrest Gump, the Four Seasons' "December 1963 (Oh What a Night)" reentered the Hot 100 and became the longest-running single in the chart's history, with over 50 weeks total. The group, which now fluctuates around Valli (Gaudio no longer performs live), remains successful on the oldies circuit.

The Four Tops

Formed 1954, Detroit, MI

Levi Stubbs (b. Levi Stubbles, Detroit), voc.; Renaldo "Obie" Benson (b. Detroit), voc.; Lawrence Payton (b. Mar. 2, 1938, Detroit; d. June 20, 1997, Southfield, MI), voc.; Abdul "Duke" Fakir (b. Dec. 26, 1935, Detroit), voc.

1965—Four Tops (Motown); Second Album 1966—On Top; Live 1967—Reach Out; On Broadway; Greatest Hits 1968—Yesterday's Dreams 1969—Four Tops Now; Soul Spin 1970—Still Waters Run Deep; Changing Times; The Magnificent Seven (with the Supremes) 1971—Greatest Hits, vol. 2; The Return of the Magnificent Seven (with the Supremes) 1972—Dynamite (with the Supremes); Nature Planned It; Keeper of the Castle (Dunhill) 1973—Four Tops Story (Motown); Main Street People (Dunhill) 1981—Tonight (Casablanca) 1982—One More Mountain 1983—Back Where I Belong (Motown)

1985—Magic 1988—Indestructible (Arista) 1989—Anthology (Motown) 1993—Until You Love Someone: More of the Best (1965–1970) (Rhino) 1995—Christmas Here With You (Motown) 1997—(– Payton; + Theo Peoples, voc.) The Ultimate Collection.

One of Motown's most consistent hitmakers and its longest-lived original lineup, the Four Tops have charted with scores of upbeat love songs featuring Levi Stubbs' rough-hewn lead vocals. In 1994 they celebrated four decades together, without a single change in personnel. The four members met at a party in Detroit and soon began calling themselves the Four Aims. They were signed to Chess Records in 1956 and soon changed their name to the Four Tops to avoid confusion with the Ames Brothers. The single "Kiss Me Baby" b/w "Could It Be You" was the first of a string of supper-club-style flops that lasted for seven years on a series of labels (Red Top, Riverside, and Columbia). All the while, the group performed in top clubs.

By 1964, they had joined up with old friend Berry Gordy Jr., the founder of Motown Records. Gordy had them cut the unreleased Breaking Through for his experimental Workshop Jazz subsidiary. Later that year they were finally directed toward contemporary soul. Under the wing of Motown's top production and writing team, Holland-Dozier-Holland, the Four Tops were launched with "Baby I Need Your Loving," which went to #11 in 1964. Over the next eight years they made almost 30 appearances on the chart, and Levi Stubbs (whose brother Joe sang in the Falcons) became an international star and a major influence on other singers from the '60s to the present (in 1986 Billy Bragg had a U.K. hit with "Levi Stubbs Tears").

The group's 1966 hits included "Ask the Lonely" (#24).

The Four Tops: (top) Lawrence Payton, Renaldo Benson, (bottom) Levi Stubbs, Abdul Fakir

"Same Old Song" (#5), and "I Can't Help Myself (Sugar Pie, Honey Bunch)," which was #1. "Reach Out I'll Be There" hit the top of the pop chart in October 1966. The quartet followed up with "Standing in the Shadows of Love" (#6, 1967).

Like other top Motown acts, the Four Tops also became popular in major nightclubs around the world. Even in their hit-making prime, the Tops had less athletic choreography than the Temptations, for example, and the group was equally comfortable handling standards, show tunes, and big ballads. Like virtually all of Motown's first-tier acts, the Tops sought the longevity and stability of a career built equally on live appearances and records. In 1967 they scaled the charts with "Bernadette" (#4) and "Seven Rooms of Gloom" (#14); but when Holland-Dozier-Holland left Motown in 1967 to form their own label, the group's chart successes dwindled. In fact, two of the Four Tops' bigger hits from 1968 were covers: the Left Banke's "Walk Away Renee" (#14) and Tim Hardin's "If I Were a Carpenter" (#20). While many historians view HDH's departure as an irreparable blow to the group, in fact, the Tops cut a number of adventurous and successful singles under the guidance of other Motown staff producers, including "River Deep, Mountain High" with the Jean Terrell-led Supremes (#14 pop, #7 R&B, 1970), and "Still Water (Love)" (#11 pop, #4 R&B, 1970). In addition, Obie Benson cowrote Marvin Gaye's "What's Goin' On."

In 1972 the group left Motown for ABC/Dunhill, where it quickly recorded a couple of million-sellers: "Keeper of the Castle" (#10) and in 1973 "Ain't No Woman Like the One I've Got" (#4). It proved to be only a brief pop chart resurgence, though the group continued to hit the R&B Top 20, with "Seven Lonely Nights" and "Catfish." The Tops continued to tour the world, performing to packed houses. In 1981 the group moved to Casablanca Records and released the comeback hit, "When She Was My Girl" (#11 pop, #1 R&B). Two years later the Tops were back at Motown, and after performing in a "battle of the bands" with the Temptations on the Motown 25th-anniversary television special, embarked on the first of several coheadlining tours with that group, billed as T'n'T. The first tour ran nearly three years, went around the world, and included a sold-out stint on Broadway.

In 1986 Stubbs provided the voice for the man-eating plant Audrey II in the film Little Shop of Horrors; in 1985 the group had its last Motown hit, "Sexy Ways" (#21 R&B). Like many older Motown artists, the Four Tops sought another label, and in 1988 they signed with Arista. "Indestructible" (#35 pop, #66 R&B) marked another resurgence in the band's career, especially in the U.K., where their "Loco in Acapulco," from the soundtrack of the Phil Collins film Buster, was a Top 10 hit. Chartwise, the Four Tops had become one of the most popular American acts in the U.K., where a remix of "Reach Out I'll Be There" hit #11 in 1988, and the saloon standard "It's All in the Game" had gone to #5 in 1970.

In 1989 the group appeared on Aretha Franklin's Through the Storm, and in 1990 Stevie Wonder inducted the Tops into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. They returned to Motown in the '90s and recorded a Christmas album, but tragedy struck in 1997 when Lawrence Payton, the architect of the Tops' harmonies, died of liver cancer. The remaining members eventually recruited Theo Peoples, a former member of the Temptations [see entry]. They continue to perform. In 2000 Stubbs claimed that the group had completed an album with the help of former Motown writer Norman Whitfield, but as of mid-2001 it had not been released.

Kim Fowley

Born July 21, 1939, Los Angeles, CA

1967—Love Is Alive and Well (Tower/Capitol) 1968—Born to Be Wild (Imperial) 1969—Outrageous; Good Clean Fun 1972—I'm Bad (Capitol) 1973—International Heroes 1975—The Incredible Kim Fowley (Original Sound) 1977—Living in the Streets (Sonet) 1978—Visions of the Future (Capitol); Sunset Boulevard (PVC) 1979—Animal God of the Streets; Snake Document Masquerade (Island) 1980—Hollywood Confidential 1981—Son of Frankenstein (a.k.a. Bad News From the Underworld) (Moxie) 1988—Automatic (Secret) 1992—Hotel Insomnia (Marilyn, Sp.) 1993—White Negroes in Deutschland 1995—Kings of Saturday Night (with Ben Vaughan) (Sector 2); Let the Madness In (Receiver, U.K.) 1997—Outlaw Superman (Bacchus Archives) 1998—The Trip of a Lifetime (Resurgence); Michigan Babylon (Detroit Electric) 1999—Underground Animal (Bacchus Archives).

Songwriter, producer, writer, manager, publisher, consultant, and general scenemaker and rock & roll renaissance man Kim Fowley is the son of actor Douglas Fowley (Doc on Wyatt Earp) and stepgrandson of composer Rudolf Friml. In 1957 he met Brian Wilson and began writing songs; he made local news by singing with three members of a black vocal group, the Jayhawks. Since then Fowley has demonstrated an ear for new talent and a knack for gimmicky novelty singles.

In 1959, working as a disc jockey in Boise, Idaho, he produced the first sessions for Paul Revere and the Raiders ("Like, Long Hair" on Gardena). In the early '60s he assembled the Murmaids and produced their version of David Gates' "Popsicles and Icicles" (#3, 1964). He also produced the Hollywood Argyles' "Alley Oop" (#1, 1960); "Nutrocker," based on Tchaikovsky's music, for B. Bumble and the Stingers (#23, 1962); and the Rivingtons' "Papa-Oom-Mow-Mow" (#48, 1962).

In London in the mid-'60s, Fowley appeared on the TV show Ready, Steady, Go in 1966. He also produced sessions for Slade, Family, Dave Mason and Jim Capaldi of Traffic, and Soft Machine. Back in L.A., he sang on the Mothers of Invention's Freak Out. He also produced records by the Seeds and the Fraternity of Man ("Don't Bogart That Joint"). Fowler then produced Gene Vincent's 1969 comeback, I'm Back and I'm Proud, part of Warren Zevon's 1969 Wanted Dead or Alive; two albums for Helen Reddy; and Jonathan Richman and the Modern Lovers. In addition he wrote or cowrote songs recorded by the Beach Boys, the Byrds, Doug Sahm's Sir Douglas Quintet, Them, Leo Kottke, and Cat Stevens. He has published countless rock songs and recorded sporadically on his own, both under his own name and as "groups" including the Renegades ("Charge!").

In the late '70s Fowley assembled the teenage band the Runaways, who included Joan Jett and Lita Ford; he cowrote their "Cherry Bomb." In 1987, long after the original group had come apart, Fowley unsuccessfully launched another group with the same name (which he owns), and he later assembled a similar all-female rock band, the Orchids. Several of his poetry books have been published. Throughout the '90s he has satisfied his cult following with a stream of archival and new oddities, most of which are imports. In 1995 Fowley claimed to be 125 years old and announced that he'd been dead for 13 years.

Peter Frampton

Born Apr. 22, 1950, Beckenham, Eng.

1972—Wind of Change (A&M) 1973—Frampton's Camel
1974—Something's Happening 1975—Frampton 1976—Frampton Comes Alive! 1977—I'm in You 1979—Where I Should Be 1981—Breaking All the Rules 1982—The Art of Control 1986—Premonition (Atlantic) 1989—When All the Pieces Fit 1992—Shine On: A Collection (A&M) 1994—Peter Frampton (Relativity) 1995—Frampton Comes Alive II (E! Dorado/I.R.S.) 1998—The Very Best of Peter Frampton (A&M) 2000—Live in Detroit (CMC International); Anthology (Universal).

After years as the moderately successful lead guitarist and singer in a string of British bands—the Herd, Humble Pie, and his own Frampton's Camel—Peter Frampton's nearly continuous U.S. touring paid off in 1976 when his live set Frampton Comes Alive! hit #1, sold over 6 million copies, and was briefly ranked among the 10 best-selling albums ever.

Frampton made his professional debut at age 10 and joined the Herd at 16. The band had several U.K. teenybopper hits, including "From the Underworld" and "Paradise Lost" in 1967, and "I Don't Want Our Loving to Die" in 1968. Frampton was named "Face of 1968" by several British magazines. He left the Herd in 1969 to establish a reputation as a more serious musician, and formed Humble Pie [see entry] with ex-Small Face Steve Marriott and ex-Spooky Tooth bassist Greg Ridley. He wrote and sang part of Humble Pie's early repertoire but left in 1971 to pursue his own career.

After a stint of session work (George Harrison's All Things Must Pass, Harry Nilsson's Son of Schmilsson), Frampton recorded a solo debut with assistance from Ringo Starr, Billy Preston, and others. He formed Frampton's Camel with ex-Spooky Tooth Mike Kellie, Rick Wills (later of Roxy Music), the reunited Small Faces, Foreigner, and Bad Company, and Mike Gallagher in 1973 in order to tour the U.S. Frampton released an album a year and continued touring, making some inroads on FM radio, until the double-record Frampton Comes Alive! (#1, 1976), recorded at Winterland in San Francisco with a band composed of guitarist/key-boardist Bob Mayo, bassist Stanley Sheldon, and drummer John Siomos. The album included the best of Frampton's solo compositions and yielded three 1976 hit singles: "Show Me the Way" (#6), "Baby I Love Your Way" (#12), and "Do You Feel Like We Do" (#10). It would eventually sell about 18 million copies worldwide. By year's end Frampton had grossed nearly $70 million in concert fees and royalties.

The followup album, I'm in You (#2, 1977), had a #2 hit with the title cut, a gushy ballad, although its other singles didn't reach the Top 10. Frampton made his movie debut in Robert Stigwood's 1978 debacle, Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, but even before the movie was released there were rumors that he had succumbed to depression and heavy drinking. In June 1978 he suffered a concussion, muscle damage, and broken bones in a car crash in the Bahamas. Later that year his relationship with longtime girlfriend Penny McCall ended. By the late '70s Frampton had returned to touring 10,000-seaters, although Where I Should Be went gold and produced a Top 20 hit, "I Can't Stand It No More" (#14, 1979).

Four albums in the '80s on A&M and Atlantic failed to catch fire; Frampton began playing on others' records again. David Bowie, once a student of Frampton's art-teacher father, asked the guitarist to play on his 1987 Never Let Me Down LP and subsequent Glass Spiders Tour. Next Frampton started collaborating with his former Humble Pie cohort Steve Marriott, but their plans died in the house fire that claimed Marriott's life in 1991. Peter Frampton, his first album of new songs in five years, was a typically tuneful collection that showcased his lyrical guitar solos. But the stage remains Frampton's natural element, and his next two albums would be live ones, including Frampton Comes Alive II, a followup to his most famous recording.

In 2000 Frampton contributed to Cameron Crowe's movie Almost Famous by writing two songs, serving as "authenticity adviser," and playing the small part of Humble Pie's manager (Crowe had written the liner notes for Frampton Comes Alive). That same year, the guitarist, who now lives in Cincinnati, contributed two songs to Disney's Tigger Mania and launched Framptone, a company that markets gadgets such as the Talk Box, immortalized in "Show Me the Way."

Connie Francis

Born Concetta Maria Franconero, Dec. 12, 1938, Newark, NJ
1958—Who's Sorry Now (MGM) 1986—The Very Best of Connie Francis (Polydor) 1987—The Very Best of Connie Francis, vol. 2 1993—White Sox, Pink Lipsticks . . . and Stupid Cupid (Bear Family, Ger.) 1996—Live At Trump's Castle (Click/Legacy); Souvenirs (Polydor/Chronicles); Swinging Connie Francis (Audiophile) 1997—Where the Boys Are, Connie in Hollywood (Rhino).

During the period between 1958 and the Beatles' emergence in spring 1964, singer Connie Francis had 35 Top 40 hits, including three #1s: "Everybody's Somebody's Fool" and "My Heart Has a Mind of Its Own" in 1960, and "Don't Break the Heart That Loves You" in 1962. Popular in Italy, Germany, Japan, France, and Spain, where she records in the native languages, Francis has had over 50 U.S. chart singles (and 25 in the U.K.), more hits than any other female vocalist except Aretha Franklin. Although she came up with, performed with and got lumped in with the late-'50s teen idols, her international success and a catalogue that ranges from country music (1964's Connie Sings Great Country Favorites with Hank Williams Jr.) to Jewish, Irish, Spanish, Italian, and Latin compilations, places her in a class by herself.

Concetta Franconero debuted at age four playing "Anchors Aweigh" on accordion; by age 10 she began appearing on a local television show. By 11 she had appeared on several New York children's programs, and shortly after her 12th birthday sang "Daddy's Little Girl" on Arthur Godfrey's TV talent show. It was Godfrey who suggested that she change her name, which she did, though never legally. While still in her teens she recorded many demos, finally landing a deal with MGM in 1955. After a year and half of releasing flop singles, and with her contract in jeopardy, her father, a former dock worker, suggested she record an up-tempo version of one of his favorites, a 1923 tune called "Who's Sorry Now." It was a #4 hit in early 1958, and she later had hits with other oldies like "Among My Souvenirs" (#7, 1960) and "Together" (#6, 1961), both of which were written in 1928.

Over the next five years, Francis had 25 records in the Top 100. Some of her bestsellers included "Stupid Cupid" (#14, 1958), "My Happiness" (#2, 1959), "Lipstick on Your Collar" (#5, 1959), "Mama" (#8, 1960), and "Vacation" (#9, 1962), the last of which she cowrote. Francis appeared in four films: Where the Boys Are, Follow the Boys, Looking for Love, and When the Boys Meet the Girls. She also sang the theme for Where the Boys Are (#4, 1961) and appeared in Brylcreem hair-cream commercials. "A little dab'll do ya!"

Francis' big hits ended with the beginning of Beatlemania, though she had several minor successes through the end of the decade and continued to perform to sold-out crowds around the world. In December 1960, she became the youngest performer to ever headline at the Copacabana. Surgery to correct a problem with her nose resulted in her inability to sing in air-conditioned rooms, and she sang with great difficulty. She made her return to live performing in November 1974 at the Westbury Music Fair on Long Island. After the performance, a man entered her hotel room and beat and raped her. She later sued the Howard Johnson's motel for negligence and was awarded $3,055,000 in damages.

It would be several more years before she recovered from the traumatic assault. She stopped performing and underwent two and a half years of psychiatric treatment. There were frequent reports in the press of battles between her and her father, who had long been instrumental in her career. Her only brother, George, was murdered in 1981. She underwent three additional operations on her nose, and approximately seven years after her farewell live performance Francis made a triumphant return to the Westbury Music Fair. In 1984 she published her autobiography, Who's Sorry Now?, a revealing account of the early rock & roll scene, including her romance with singer Bobby Darin. Swinging Connie Francis contains covers of '30s jazz standards

Frankie Goes to Hollywood

Formed 1980, Liverpool, Eng.

Holly Johnson (b. William Johnson, Feb. 19, 1960, Khartoum, Sudan), voc.; Paul Rutherford (b. Dec. 8, 1959, Liverpool), voc.; Nasher Nash (b. Brian Nash, May 20, 1963), gr.; Mark O'Toole (b. Jan. 6, 1964, Liverpool), bass; Peter Gill (b. Mar. 8, 1964, Liverpool), drums.

1984—Welcome to the Pleasuredome (ZTT/Island) 1986—Liverpool 1994—Bang! . . . The Greatest Hits of Frankie Goes to Hollywood (Atlantic).

Holly Johnson solo: 1989—Blast (Uni) 1990—Hallelujah EP (MCA) 1991—Dreams That Money Can't Buy 1999—Soulstream (Pleasuredome, U.K.).

In pop music, controversy can be the mother of ascension. After Frankie Goes to Hollywood's sexually suggestive debut single, 1984's "Relax," was banned by the BBC—along with its accompanying video, set in a gay bar—it shot to the top of the British charts, where it remained for five weeks. And just as producer Trevor Horn's techno-savvy ingenuity had parlayed the mediocre hook propelling "Relax" into an insidious dance track, a promotion blitz engineered by ex-journalist Paul Morley turned the Liverpoolian quintet into an omnipresent phenomenon. Most memorable were the "Frankie Say" T-shirts, as cheekily unabashed in their admonitions on sex and politics as singer Holly Johnson was about his homosexuality.

Frankemania seemed destined to cross the Atlantic, but the amused fascination with which Americans observed the hoopla didn't translate into huge sales. The group's second smash U.K. single, "Two Tribes," a tepid but danceable anti-Cold War chant, peaked just outside the Top 40 here, despite a popular video in which Reagan and Chernenko look-alikes duked it out in a boxing ring. "Relax" reemerged as a U.S. single, hitting #10 in early 1985. After that, though, Frankie's 1984 debut album, Welcome to the Pleasuredome, spawned no more megahits at home or abroad. A subsequent album flopped, and by the end of the band's tour to support it in 1987, Frankie had broken up.

After a legal battle with ZTT Records and beginning a solo career, Johnson discovered in the early '90s that he was HIV-positive—a diagnosis that quickly developed into AIDS—and, after a year-long bout with depression, became a spokesman for AIDS awareness. In 1994 he published a frank and catty autobiography, A Bone in My Flute, and released a single, "Legendary Children." Encouraged by new treatments, as well as the enduring love of his longtime partner, art dealer Wolfgang Kuhle, Johnson continued to pursue his creative interests. He exhibited his paintings in a London art gallery in 1996; another exhibition of his artwork was held in Liverpool in 2000. He also established a home studio and record label in order to record and release a 1999 solo album, Soulstream. The disc included a new version of the Frankie ballad "The Power of Love," and a song called "Disco Heaven," about the friends Johnson has lost to AIDS. He directed a video for the latter, which featured an appearance by Boy George.

Aretha Franklin

Born Mar. 25, 1942, Memphis, TN

1956—The Gospel Sound of Aretha Franklin (Checker) 1961—Aretha (Columbia) 1962—The Electrifying Aretha Franklin; The Tender, the Moving, the Swinging Aretha Franklin 1963—Laughing on the Outside 1964—Songs of Faith (Checker); Unforgettable: A Tribute to Dinah Washington (Columbia); Runnin' Out of Fools 1965—Yeah!!; Once in a Lifetime (Harmony) 1966—Soul Sister (Columbia) 1967—Take It Like You Give It; Greatest Hits, vol. 1; Lee Cross (CBS); I Never Loved a Man (the Way I Love You) (Atlantic); Take a Look (Columbia); Aretha Arrives (Atlantic) 1968—Lady Soul; Aretha Now; Aretha in Paris; Greatest Hits, vol. 2 (Columbia); Queen of Soul (Harmony) 1969—Aretha Franklin: Live! (Hallmark); Soul '69 (Atlantic); Aretha's Gold; I Say a Little Prayer 1970—Don't Play That Song; This Girl's in Love With You; Spirit in the Dark; Sweet Bitter Love (Columbia) 1971—Live at Fillmore West (Atlantic); Greatest Hits 1972—Young, Gifted and Black; Amazing Grace 1973—Hey Now Hey (The Other Side of the Sky); The First Twelve Sides (Columbia); The Best of Aretha Franklin (Atlantic) 1974—Let Me in Your Life; With Everything I Feel in Me 1975—You; Two Originals 1976—Sparkle; Ten Years of Gold 1977—Satisfaction; Sweet Passion; Most Beautiful Songs 1978—Almighty Fire 1979—La Diva 1980—Aretha Sings the Blues (Columbia) 1981—Love All the Hurt Away 1982—Jump to It; Sweet Bitter Love 1983—Get It Right (Arista) 1983—Aretha's Jazz (Atlantic) 1984—Never Grow Old (Chess) 1985—Who's Zoomin' Who (Arista); 30 Greatest Hits (Atlantic); First Lady of Soul (Stylus) 1986—Aretha (Arista); Soul Survivor (Blue Moon) 1987—After Hours (Columbia); One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism (Arista) 1989—Through the Storm (Arista); After Hours (Columbia) 1991—What You See Is What You Sweat (Arista) 1992—Jazz to Soul (Columbia/Legacy) 1994—Aretha's Greatest Hits (1980–1994) (Arista); The Very Best of Aretha Franklin, vol. 1 (Rhino); The Very Best of Aretha Franklin, vol. 2 1997—Love Songs; The Early Years (Legacy) 1998—The Delta Meets Detroit: Aretha's Blues (Rhino); A Rose Is Still a Rose (Arista); You Grow Closer (Uni/Gospocentric); I Dreamed a Dream (Rhino) 1999—Amazing Grace: The Complete Recordings (Arista) 2000—Atlantic Singles (Rhino); Aretha Gospel (Chess).

Aretha Franklin is not only the definitive female soul singer of the '60s, but one of the most influential and important voices in the history of popular music. She fused the leaps and swoops of the gospel music she grew up on with the sensuality of R&B, the innovation of jazz, and the precision of pop. After she hit her artistic and commercial stride in 1967, she made over a dozen million-selling singles, and since then has recorded 20 #1 R&B hits. She moved toward the pop mainstream with fitful success in the '70s, but in the late '80s experienced a resurgence in popularity, and continues to record in a less ecstatic, perhaps more mature style.

Franklin's father, the Reverend C.L. Franklin, was the pastor of Detroit's 4,500-member New Bethel Baptist Church and a nationally known gospel singer ("the Man with the Million-Dollar Voice"). Her mother, Barbara, who was also a gospel singer, deserted the family when Aretha was six and died four years later. Aretha and her sisters, Carolyn and Erma, sang regularly at their father's church, and Aretha's first recordings were made there when she was 14. The Franklins were among the most prominent black families in Detroit. Many future stars, including Smokey Robinson, knew the family, and in the '50s Berry Gordy Jr. tried to sign Aretha to his fledgling Motown label. Reverend Franklin refused.

Aretha Franklin

The teenaged Aretha toured the gospel circuit with her father, and she was befriended by Clara Ward (according to some sources, the Reverend Franklin's lover), Mahalia Jackson, James Cleveland, and Sam Cooke. Cooke, who had only recently crossed over from recording gospel to pop, was an inspiration to the young singer, encouraging her to sign with the label he recorded for, RCA. In fact, Aretha nearly did, until she was signed by legendary talent scout John Hammond to Columbia. She moved to New York, and at first found acceptance in the R&B market with "Today I Sing the Blues" (#10 R&B, 1960), "Won't Be Long" (#7 R&B, 1961), and "Operation Heartbreak" (#6 R&B, 1961), but in six years and 10 albums, she had only one pop hit: "Rock-a-bye Your Baby With a Dixie Melody" (#37 pop, 1961). As reissues have focused new attention on Franklin's Columbia years, they have proven not to have been wasted entirely. She recorded several original songs ("Without the One You Love," "I'll Keep On Smiling," "Land of Dreams," "I Still Can't Forget") and a critically lauded tribute to her late friend Dinah Washington, as well as a 1962 version of "Try a Little Tenderness" that is said to have inspired Otis Redding to record it.

In 1966 she signed with Atlantic. With the help of producer Jerry Wexler, arranger Arif Mardin, and engineer Tom Dowd, Franklin began to make the records that would reshape soul music. Her first session (and the only one recorded at Muscle Shoals, in Alabama) yielded "I Never Loved a Man (the Way I Love You)" (#9 pop, #1 R&B, 1967) and heralded a phenomenal three years in which she sold in the millions with "Respect" (#1 pop and R&B, 1967), "Baby I Love You" (#4 pop, #1 R&B, 1967), "Chain of Fools" (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1968), "Since You've Been Gone" (#5 pop, #1 R&B, 1968), "Think" (#7 pop, #1 R&B, 1968), "The House That Jack Built" (#6 pop, #2 R&B, 1968), "I Say a Little Prayer" (#10 pop, #3 R&B, 1968), "See Saw" (#14 pop, #9 R&B, 1968), "The Weight" (#19 pop, #3 R&B, 1969), "Share Your Love With Me" (#13 pop, #1 R&B, 1969), "Eleanor Rigby" (#17 pop, #5 R&B, 1969), "Call Me" (#13 pop, #1 R&B, 1970), and "Spirit in the Dark" (#23 pop, #3 R&B, 1970).

Franklin's maternal ranged from R&B numbers by Otis Redding ("Respect"), Don Covay ("See Saw" [with Steve Cropper]), "Chain of Fools"), and Ronnie Shannon ("I Never Loved a Man") to pop fare by Carole King and Gerry Goffin ("[You Make Me Feel Like] a Natural Woman"), Lennon and McCartney ("Eleanor Rigby"), Burt Bacharach and Hal David ("I Say a Little Prayer"). She also recorded many of her own songs, cowritten with her first husband and then-manager Ted White ("Dr. Feelgood," "Since You've Been Gone [Sweet Sweet Baby]," "Think"), or her sister Carolyn ("Save Me" [with King Curtis]), who received solo songwriting credit for "Ain't No Way." Most of Franklin's '60s sessions were recorded with the Muscle Shoals Sound Rhythm Section, who, after the first session, were imported to New York City, or with a band led by saxophonist King Curtis. Franklin herself was responsible for the vocal arrangements, whose gospel-style call-and-response choruses often featured her sister Carolyn as well as the Sweet Inspirations [see entry].

By 1968 Franklin reigned throughout America and Europe as "Lady Soul"—a symbol of black pride. She was presented an award by Martin Luther King Jr. (to whose cause her father had been a major financial supporter), and appeared on the cover of Time, the accompanying profile of which would be her last major interview for many years. As Time reported (and other sources have since concurred), Franklin's personal life was quite turbulent. Throughout her career, Franklin has remained an enigmatic figure, alternately outspoken and reclusive, and much of her personal life has been shrouded in secrecy. She had married White in 1961. She already had two sons, Clarence and Edward, born before her 17th birthday. With White, she gave birth to Teddy Jr., a guitarist in her band since the '80s. Her marriage to White ended in 1969, by which time he had struck her in public on one occasion and shot her new production manager on another. Franklin herself was arrested in 1968 for reckless driving and again in 1969 for disorderly conduct. Also in 1969 her father was arrested for possession of marijuana. He hosted a controversial conference for a black separatist group that ended in a violent confrontation with Detroit police that left one officer dead and several other people wounded. During this time his daughter Aretha was rumored to be drinking heavily.

The hits continued (giving her more million-sellers than any other woman in recording history)—"Don't Play That Song" (#11 pop, #1 R&B, 1970), "Bridge Over Troubled Water" (#6 pop, #1 R&B, 1971), "Spanish Harlem" (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1971), "Rock Steady" (#9 pop, #2 R&B, 1971), "Day Dreaming" (#5 pop, #1 R&B, 1972), and "Until You Come Back to Me (That's What I'm Gonna Do)" (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1973). In the early '70s she gave birth to her fourth son, Kecalif, and in 1978 she married actor Glynn Turman. During this time Franklin seemed to be searching, sometimes aimlessly, for direction. But this period was not without its high points: Spirit in the Dark, Live at the Fillmore West, and Young, Gifted, and Black were all critically acclaimed. The pure gospel Amazing Gospel (recorded live in L.A. with her father officiating and the Reverend James Cleveland at the piano and conducting the choir) would be her last album with Wexler. During her last years with Atlantic she moved from producer to producer: Quincy Jones (Hey Now Hey), Curtis Mayfield (Sparkle, which included "Something He Can Feel," a 1992 Top 10 hit for En Vogue and Franklin's last Top 40 pop hit for nearly six years), Lamont Dozier (Sweet Passion), Van McCoy (La Diva). Her concerts became Las Vegas-style extravaganzas, and she soon established a reputation for her idiosyncratic (some would say ill-advised) costume choices. She also began showing signs of the unpredictability that would dog her career, particularly after a bad experience while flying resulted in a phobia that curtailed her touring.

In 1980 Franklin left Atlantic, signed with Arista, and positioned herself as the grande dame of pop. Her cameo appearance (she sang "Respect" and "Think") in The Blues Brothers movie that year has been cited as the beginning of a new phase. Her first two Arista albums were produced by Arif Mardin, and each included an old soul standard as well as glossier MOR material. "Love All the Hurt Away," a collaboration with George Benson, went to #6 on the R&B chart in 1981. Her version of Sam and Dave's "Hold On, I'm Comin'" earned a Grammy for Best R&B Vocal Performance, Female. With the Luther Vandross-produced Jump to It, she reestablished herself as a hitmaker when the title tune hit #1 R&B and #24 pop in 1982. Vandross was also behind the board for Get It Right.

But the momentum of her commercial comeback was halted by a series of personal tragedies, beginning with the 1979 attack on her father, in which he was shot by burglars in his Detroit home. He began to recover from his injuries but then lapsed into a coma state from which he did not emerge before his death in 1984. In 1982 Franklin moved back to the Detroit area, where she still lives. Two years later, she and Turman divorced. The year after her father's death, Franklin came fully back into the public eye with Who's Zoomin' Who (#13, 1985), a Narada Michael Walden-produced work that spun off three hit singles: the Grammy-winning "Freeway of Love" (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1985), the title track (#7 pop, #2 R&B, 1985), and a Top 20 duet with the Eurythmics, "Sisters Are Doin' It for Themselves." The album, which included guest performances by Clarence Clemons, Dizzy Gillespie, Carlos Santana, Peter Wolf, and most of Tom Petty's Heartbreakers, as well as backing vocals by sister Carolyn and Sylvester, among others, became her highest-charting album since 1972. The hits' accompanying videos were heavily played on MTV, and Franklin found the pop crossover success that had once eluded her. Its followup, Aretha, included the Top 30 "Jimmy Lee" (#2 R&B, 1986) and a version of "Jumpin' Jack Flash," produced by and featuring Keith Richards, as well as her Grammy-winning #1 duet with George Michael, "I Knew You Were Waiting (for Me)" (1987).

Subsequent albums were less popular. Her critically acclaimed One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism marked a return to gospel and featured Mavis Staples and the Reverend Jesse Jackson. It earned Franklin her 15th Grammy, for Best Female Soul Gospel Performance. Despite its hit title track (a duet with Elton John, #16 pop, #17 R&B, 1989), Through the Storm peaked at #55, and 1991's What You See Is What You Sweat made the lowest showing of any new album in her career. It contained a #13 R&B cover of Sly and the Family Stone's "Everyday People."

In 1987 Franklin became the first woman inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. In 1988 Franklin's sister Carolyn died of cancer; around the same period her brother and manager, Cecil, also died. She appeared with Frank Sinatra on his Duets album and in 1993 starred in her own television special, Duets, which featured her singing with a number of current pop stars, including Bonnie Raitt, Elton John, Smokey Robinson, George Michael, and Rod Stewart. She appeared at the inaugural celebration for President Bill Clinton, where her rendition of "I Dreamed a Dream" (from Les Miserables) barely got more attention than her wearing a fur coat (for which she offered no apologies). "A Deeper Love" (#63 pop, #30 R&B, 1994), from the Sister Act 2 soundtrack, was written and produced by Robert Cliviles and David Cole of C + C Music Factory. "Willing to Forgive" was another Top 20 R&B hit that year. In 1994 Franklin received a Grammy Award for Lifetime Achievement.

In 1996 Franklin signed a three-album deal with Arista for a reported $10 million. The next year, she was accepted into the Juilliard School of Music to study classical piano, and she recorded a new version of "Respect" for the movie Blues Brothers 2000, in which she reprised her role as a restaurant owner. She also formed a record label, World Class Records, primarily to release gospel music. In 1998 she delivered her 49th album, A Rose Is Still a Rose, a career-revitalizing collaboration with current stars such as the Fugees' Lauryn Hill and producers Sean Combs and Jermaine Dupri.

In 1999 her highly anticipated autobiography, Aretha: From These Roots (written with David Ritz), was released. Franklin then entered the new century by selecting, with the White House Millennium Council, "Respect" to be included in a time capsule to preserve significant cultural achievements for future generations.

Erma Franklin (born 1939) and Carolyn Franklin (born 1945; died April 25, 1988, Bloomfield Hills, MI) were professional singers for as long as their better-known sister. After many years on the gospel circuit, Erma began recording soul and pop material in the mid-'60s. Her 1967 Shout release, "Piece of My Heart" (#10, R&B), preceded Janis Joplin's version by several months. She recorded for the Brunswick label in the late '60s and early '70s. Carolyn sang backup for many of Atlantic's stars in the '60s. She later recorded as a solo artist for RCA.

Michael Franks

Born Sep. 18, 1944, La Jolla, CA

1973—Michael Franks (Brut) 1976—The Art of Tea (Reprise)
1977—Sleeping Gypsy (Warner Bros.) 1978—Birchfield Nines
1979—Tiger in the Rain 1980—One Bad Habit 1982—Objects of Desire 1983—Passionfruit 1985—Skin Dive
1987—The Camera Never Lies 1989—Previously Unavailable
(DRG) 1990—Blue Pacific (Reprise) 1993—Dragonfly
Summer 1995—Abandoned Garden (Warner Bros.) 1998—
The Best of Michael Franks: A Backward Glance 1999—
Barefoot on the Beach (Windham Hill).

Songwriter Michael Franks has been recording his own droll, laid-back pop-jazz tunes since 1973, with occasional pop recognition. His songs have been covered by Melissa Manchester, Manhattan Transfer, and the Carpenters, and he has written for Rod Stewart and Barbra Streisand.

Franks played folk and rock in high school in La Jolla, and he majored in contemporary literature at UCLA while working part-time as a musician. In the late '60s he completed a master's degree in contemporary culture at the University of Montreal. While in Canada he opened shows for Gordon Lightfoot and worked with Carnival, later Lighthouse.

In the early '70s Franks taught undergraduate music courses and worked toward a Ph.D. at UCLA and Berkeley. His doctoral dissertation was entitled "Contemporary Songwriting and How It Relates to Society." He scored two films in 1971, Count Your Bullets and Zandy's Bride. In 1972 Sonny Terry and Brownie McGhee recorded three of his songs, with Franks backing them on mandolin and banjo, on their Sonny & Brownie: Buddha/Brut signed him in 1972, and his "Can't Seem to Shake This Rock 'n' Roll" received some airplay. He toured the U.S. opening for comedian Robert Klein in 1973.

After scoring another film in England, Franks returned to California and took on a research project for Warner Bros. Pictures that led to his Reprise signing. His albums have featured well-known backing musicians—the Crusaders on The Art of Tea, which included the minor hit "Popsicle Toes" (#43, 1976); Brazilian musicians on Sleeping Gypsy—and have earned him a cult following.

In the '80s, Franks adopted a cooler sound, which eventually found favor in the rising "light jazz" and adult contemporary radio formats. Despite this, he has yet to enjoy any broad chart success, although his entire catalogue remains in print and "Your Secret's Safe With Me" got some exposure via its video on VH1. Franks is known for the vanned and respected company he keeps on his records, which have featured Astrud Gilberto (on Passionfruit), Patti Austin, Flora Purim, the Brecker Brothers, David Sanborn, Joe Sample, Larry Carlton, Luther Vandross, Art Garfunkel, Earl Klugh, and Steve Jordan, among many others. Dragonfly Summer includes guest appearances by Dan Hicks and Peggy Lee. Following a greatest-hits summary of his years with Warner Bros., Franks released his debut for Windham Hill in 1999.

Freakwater: See Eleventh Dream Day

John Fred and His Playboy Band

Formed late '50s, Baton Rouge, LA
 John Fred (b. May 8, 1941, Baton Rouge), voc., harmonica;
 Charlie Spinosa (b. Dec. 29, 1948, Baton Rouge), trumpet;
 Ronnie Goodson (b. Feb. 2, 1945, Miami, FL), trumpet; Andrew Bernard (b. 1945, New Orleans, LA), sax; James O'Rourke
 (b. Mar. 14, 1947, Fall River, MA), gtr.; Harold Cowart (b. June 12, 1944, Baton Rouge), bass; Joe Micelli (b. July 9, 1946, Baton Rouge), drums; Tommy Dee (b. Thomas De Generes, Nov. 3, 1946, Baton Rouge), organ.
 1965—John Fred and His Playboys (Paula) 1966—34:40 of John Fred and His Playboys 1967—Agnes English 1969—Permanently Stated 1970—Love in My Soul (Uni).

John Fred and His Playboy Band were an R&B-inspired rock band best known for its 1968 hit, the 3-million-seller "Judy in Disguise (with Glasses)." Led by John Fred, a former all-American basketball player at Louisiana State University, who began recording in 1958 with "Shirley" on Montel Records, the group established itself in Louisiana and Texas clubs in the early '60s. Its lone hit (which was also the group's 16th single), "Judy in Disguise" (a wordplay on the Beatles' "Lucy in the Sky With Diamonds"), hit #1 in January 1968; the 45's success propelled Agnes English to the lower rungs of the album chart. But followups like "Hey Hey Bunny" (#57, 1968) didn't come close to matching "Judy," and the group broke up the next year. Fred formed another Playboy Band in the mid-'70s before going to work for R.C.S. Records in Baton Rouge, where he coproduced a 1979 LP for Irma Thomas. In the late '80s Fred found a second career singing commercial jingles (winning a Clio Award for one of them), and later revived the Playboy Band to play the oldies circuit.

Freddie and the Dreamers

Formed 1960, Manchester, Eng.
 Freddie Garrity (b. Nov. 14, 1936), voc., gtr.; Derek Quinn
 (b. May 24, 1942), gtr., harmonica; Roy Crewsdon (b. May 29, 1941), gtr., piano, drums; Pete Birrell (b. May 9, 1941), bass;
 Bernie Dwyer (b. Sep. 11, 1940), drums.
 1964—You Were Made for Me 1965—Freddie and the Dreamers (Mercury); Do the Freddie 1966—Freddie and the Dreamers 1992—The Best of Freddie and the Dreamers (EMI).

Freddie and the Dreamers, all born in Manchester, were the buffoons of the British Invasion. The group was formed by ex-milkman Freddie Garrity, who had previously worked in a '50s skiffle band. A bespectacled young man with a slight resemblance to Buddy Holly, Freddie looked silly and nerdish, and—while the band played deadpan foils—gave forth with a cackling laugh and exaggerated dancing that included fairly acrobatic mid-air splits. In 1962, after successfully auditioning for the BBC, they rose to prominence in England and signed with Columbia. Their first single, a cover of James Ray's "If You've Gotta Make a Fool of Somebody," hit the British Top 5. Over the next few years they enjoyed a half-dozen U.K. hits, including "You Were Made for Me" (#3 U.K.) and "I Understand" (#5 U.K.).

"I'm Telling You Now," originally released in England in 1963, went to #1 in the U.S. in spring 1965, spurred by the group's touring and appearances on the Shindig! and Hulabaloo television shows. Another American hit, "Do the Freddie" (#18, 1965), sparked a momentary dance craze in emulation of Freddie's arm and leg waving. The group was featured in such films as Seaside Swingers, Just for You, and Cuckoo Patrol. Their U.S. hits ended in 1966. The band played cabarets and clubs until breaking up in 1968. Garrity and Pete Birrell thereafter hosted their own children's TV series in England called The Little Big Time. The Dreamers re-formed in 1976, with only Garrity remaining from the original lineup, and they remained active in supper clubs and cabarets into the '90s.

Free

Formed 1968, London, Eng.
 Paul Rodgers (b. Dec. 12, 1949, Middleborough, Eng.), voc.;
 Paul Kossoff (b. Sep. 14, 1950, London; d. Mar. 19, 1976, New York, NY), gtr.; Andy Fraser (b. Aug. 7, 1952, London), bass; Simon Kirke (b. July 28, 1949, Shrewsbury, Eng.), drums.
 1969—Tons of Sobs (A&M) 1970—Free; Fire and Water; Highway 1971—(group disbands) Free Live 1972—(group
 re-forms) Free at Last (—Kossoff; —Fraser; + Tetsu Yamauchi
 [b. Oct. 21, 1947, Fukuoka, Jap.], bass; + John "Rabbit" Bundrick, kybds.; + Kossoff; —Kossoff) 1973—Heartbreaker
 (group disbands) 1975—Best of Free 1993—*Molten Gold:
 The Anthology*.

Free distilled British blues down to riffs, silences, and Paul Rodgers' ornately anguished vocals—most memorably in "All Right Now" (#4, 1970). The style the group established was made more ponderous and commercially successful by Bad Company, Foreigner, and other '70s hard-rock bands.

Free started in the London pubs when Simon Kirke and Paul Kossoff, then in the blues band Black Cat Bones, heard Rodgers singing with Brown Sugar. The three enlisted 16-year-old Andy Fraser from John Mayall's Bluesbreakers, and they got the name Free from Alexis Korner. The quartet failed to make inroads with its first two albums and a U.S. tour opening for Blind Faith in 1969, but Fire and Water, which include "All Right Now," signaled that Free had honed its approach. Yet just months after the success of "All Right Now," in mid-1971, the group split up. Kossoff and Kirke joined bassist Tetsu Yamauchi (later with the Faces) and session keyboardist John "Rabbit" Bundrick for one album, Kossoff Kirke, Tetsu and Rabbit. Rodgers formed a group called Peace, and Fraser started Toby. By 1972, the original Free had re-formed for Free at Last. Personal problems and drug use—especially Kossoff's—took a toll on the band, and it broke up for good in early 1973. Fraser joined guitarist Chris Spedding in Sharks for one album; Kossoff started Back Street Crawler (later Crawler), but died of a drug-induced heart attack in 1976 on an airplane en route to New York. Rodgers and Kirke were joined by Yamauchi and Bundrick for 1973's Heartbreaker, then retired the Free name to start Bad Company [see entry]. Yamauchi replaced Ronnie Lane in the Faces, while Bundrick has added keyboards to the Who. In the mid-'80s Rodgers joined Jimmy Page [see entry] in the Firm; he later formed the Law with Kenney Jones of the Faces. The singer has since released several solo albums. In the late '90s and 2000 Kirke was backing Ringo Starr.

Glenn Frey: See the Eagles

Kinky Friedman

Born Richard Friedman, Oct. 31, 1944, Chicago, IL
 1973—Sold American (Vanguard) 1975—Kinky Friedman (ABC) 1976—Lasso From El Paso (Epic) 1983—Under the Double Ego (Sunrise) 1993—Old Testaments and New Revelations (Fruit of the Tune) 1995—From One Good American to Another 2000—Classic Snatches From Europe (Sphincter).

Country songwriter and sometime leader of the Texas Jewboys, Kinky Friedman draws his way through tunes like "High on Jesus," "Asshole From El Paso," "Ride 'em Jewboy," and "They Ain't Makin' Jews Like Jesus Anymore." Born in Chicago but raised in Texas, Richard Friedman studied psychology at the University of Texas, then joined the Peace Corps; he claims to have instructed Borneo natives in throwing the Frisbee. Back in Texas, at a farm called Rio Duckworth, he started King Arthur and the Carrots, whose songs like "Beach Party Boo" and "Schwinn Twenty-four," and Friedman's penchant for gaudy stage outfits, attracted the attention of Austin patrons like Kris Kristofferson and Commander Cody.

Friedman began making albums in 1973, with the support over the years of Waylon Jennings (who produced "Carryin' the Torch"), Ringo Starr, Billy Swan, and Bob Dylan, who invited Kinky to appear with the Rolling Thunder Revue, which provided some live cuts for Friedman's Lasso From El Paso. Friedman has appeared at Nashville's Grand Ole Opry but is apparently too vulgar for the mainstream country audience. Friedman takes pride in offending the politically correct crowd as well; he was named "Male Chauvinist of the Year" by the National Organization for Women in 1974 for his song "Get Your Biscuits in the Oven and Your Buns in Bed."

Friedman moved to New York in 1979 and frequently headlined at the Lone Star Cafe. In 1986 he published his first mystery novel: Greenwich Killing Time. He has since written 12 others: A Case of Lone Star (1987), When the Cat's Away (1989), Frequent Flyer (1990), Musical Chairs (1991), Elvis, Jesus & Coca-Cola (1993), Armadillos & Old Lace (1994), God Bless John Wayne (1995), The Love Song of J. Edgar Hoover (1996), Roadkill (1997), Blast From the Past (1998), Spanking Watson (1999), and The Mile High Club (2000). Friedman is not only the author of his books, but their protagonist as well. His books are bestsellers in England, Australia, and Germany. He returned to Texas in 1985, and the following year made an unsuccessful bid for Kerrville, Texas, justice of the peace. During the campaign, Friedman revealed that he had harbored his friend Abbie Hoffman at his ranch when the radical was being sought as a fugitive from justice in the mid-'70s.

The compilation Old Testaments and New Revelations sold more than 100,000 copies. From One Good American to Another collected songs from a couple of radio broadcasts (one recorded at New York's Electric Ladyland Studio in 1974), a 1979 session featuring Dr. John, and a new song, "God Bless John Wayne (People Who Read People Magazine)." In 1998 Friedman called in some of his famous friends—including Willie Nelson, Lyle Lovett, and Tom Waits—and issued the tribute album Pearls in the Snow—The Songs of Kinky Friedman on his own label, Kinkajou Records. Friedman continues to perform, although he considers himself primarily a novelist today. (As he wrote in response to the Encyclopedia researcher: "I've finally found a lifestyle that doesn't require my presence.")

Kinky Friedman

The Friends of Distinction

Formed 1967, Los Angeles, CA

Harry Elston (b. Nov. 4, 1938, Dallas, TX), voc.; Floyd Butler (b. June 5, 1941, San Diego, CA), voc.; Jessica Cleaves (b. Dec. 10, 1948, Beverly Hills, CA), voc.; Barbara Love (b. July 24, 1941, Los Angeles), voc.
1969—Grazin' (RCA); Highly Distinct 1970—Real Friends; Whatever 1971—Friends and People.

Black MOR pop vocal group the Friends of Distinction are best remembered for their 1969 "Grazin' in the Grass" (#3). The group was formed around chief composer Harry Elston, who had worked with Ray Charles, as did Floyd Butler and future Fifth Dimension members Marilyn McCoo and LaMonte McLemore under the name the Hi-Fi's. That group disbanded after a short tour with Charles, and after the Friends of Distinction came together, ex-football-starturned-Hollywood-actor Jim Brown became the group's financial backer. It signed with RCA in 1968.

By early 1969 "Grazin'" had hit the Top 5. Lesser hits—"Going in Circles" (#15, 1969) and "Let Yourself Go" (#63, 1969)—followed "Love or Let Me Be Lonely" was their last big hit (#6, 1970). In 1971 Barbara Love (daughter of West Coast disc jockey Reuben Brown) left the group, which soon disbanded. Jessica Cleaves went on to join Earth, Wind & Fire.

Robert Fripp

Born May 16, 1946, Wimbourne, Eng.

1973—No Pussyfooting (with Brian Eno) (Island, U.K.) 1975—Evening Star (with Brian Eno) 1979—Exposure (Polydor, U.K.) 1980—God Save the Queen/Under Heavy Manners (Polydor) 1981—Let the Power Fall (Editions EG); The League of Gentlemen 1982—I Advance Masked (with Andy Summers) (A&M) 1984—Bewitched (with Andy Summers) 1985—God Save the King 1986—Robert Fripp and the League of Crafty Guitarists Live!; The Lady or the Tiger (with Toyah Wilcox) (Editions EG) 1990—Robert Fripp and the League of Crafty Guitarists Live II 1991—Show of Hands (with the League of Crafty Guitarists); Kneeling at the Shrine 1993—Kings; The First Day (with David Sylvian) (Virgin) 1994—The Bridge Between (the Robert Fripp String Quartet) (Discipline); 1994: Soundscapes—Live in Argentina; Damage (with David Sylvian) (Virgin) 1995—Intergalactic Boogie Express: Live in Europe 1991 (with the League of Crafty Guitarists) (Discipline); A Blessing of Tears: 1995 Soundscapes, vol. II, Live in California 1996—That Which Passes: 1995 Soundscapes, vol. III; Radiophonics: 1995 Soundscapes, vol. I (Discipline, U.K.) 1998—The Gates of Paradise; November Suite: Soundscapes—Live at Green Park Station.

Guitarist, composer, and producer Robert Fripp has been at the forefront of progressive rock and new wave, and his pioneering use of electronics helped usher in ambient music. Founder of King Crimson [see entry], solo artist, and musical theoretician, he grounds his conceptual approach on a highly distinctive blend of rigorous technique and meta-physical discipline.

Starting off with the League of Gentlemen, a band of accompanists for visiting American singers, Fripp first recorded with Giles, Giles and Fripp. Their one album, The Cheerful Insanity of Giles, Giles and Fripp (1968), set forth the experimental approach King Crimson would expand from 1969 to 1975. Along with those of Yes and Emerson, Lake and Palmer, Crimson's eight albums, featuring a variety of highly technical players, typified the fusion of classical music elements and theatrical attack that hallmarked progressive rock.

Concurrently, Fripp teamed up with Brian Eno (for No Pussyfooting and Evening Star) and developed "Frippertronics," a method of tape-looped solo guitar improvisation that produces layers of sound. In 1974 Fripp also took up the teachings of J.G. Bennett, a proponent of the mystical philosophers Gurdjieff and P.D. Ouspensky. The result was an intensification of Fripp's conviction that music is an expression of spiritual aspiration, a link between the human and the divine.

Disbanding King Crimson before its final, live album came out, Fripp produced jazz records for a group called Centipede. He then briefly retired, declaring his intention to act henceforth as "a small, self-sufficient, mobile, intelligent unit." Lending his signature guitar to David Bowie's "Heroes," he returned to performance in 1977 and went on to produce Peter Gabriel's second album and Daryl Hall's 1980 solo LP Sacred Songs.

Exposure was Fripp's solo debut. With vocals by Hall, Gabriel, Terre Roche, and Peter Hammill, it showed him working relatively closely within the pop-song format. Re-forming King Crimson with guitarist Adrian Belew in 1981, he also collaborated in the early '80s with Police guitarist Andy Summers on I Advance Masked and Bewitched. As the decade progressed, either under his own name or the League of Gentlemen, Fripp continued innovating—from the "Frippertronics"-driven Let the Power Fall to the Crimson-like The League of Gentlemen.

Furthering his theoretical interests, Fripp founded Guitar Craft in the mid-'80s. A tutorial in his worldview, it offered guitar instruction and philosophical discussion. The League of Crafty Guitarists Live! and Show of Hands, featuring his students' acoustic playing showcased the school's approach. With his wife, singer and actress Toyah Wilcox, Fripp put out The Lady or the Tiger in 1986, a spoken-word album with musical backing. Kneeling at the Shrine, with Toyah fronting a new Fripp outfit, Sunday All Over the World, followed in 1991. Two years later, The First Day found Fripp pairing with David Sylvian. One of his more orthodox song-oriented outings, it made clear that his guitar style, for all its electronic modification, remained irrevocably melodic.

In the mid-'90s Fripp formed his own record label, Discipline Global Mobile, to release work by himself, other artists he admires, such as California Guitar Trio and Bill Nelson, and King Crimson spinoffs Project One (Fripp, bassists Tony Levin and Trey Gunn, and drummer Bill Bruford) and Project Two (Fripp, Belew, Gunn). In 1997 Fripp and his former management, publishing, and record company, Editions EG, settled a seven-year legal dispute over alleged nonpayment of royalties and other abuses.

Bill Frisell

Born William Frisell, Mar. 18, 1951, Baltimore, MD
 1983—In Line (ECM) 1985—Rambler 1988—Lookout for Hope; Works 1989—Before We Were Born (Elektra/Musician) 1990—Is That You? 1991—Where in the World? 1993—Have a Little Faith (Elektra/Nonesuch) 1994—This Land 1995—High Sign/One Week; Go West 1996—Quartet 1997—Nashville 1998—Gone, Just Like a Train 1999—Good Dog, Happy Man; 2000—Ghost Town (Nonesuch) 2001—Blues Dream.
 With Vernon Reid: 1986—Smash & Scatteration (Rykodisc).
 With Fred Hersch: 1998—Songs We Know (Nonesuch).
 With Burt Bacharach and Elvis Costello: 1999—The Sweetest Punch (Decca).

Bill Frisell first emerged as one of rock's leading improvisational guitar players, a trained jazz musician who initially played primarily with the downtown New York avant-garde scene (although he is now based in Seattle). He has over the years become a bandleader and composer of considerable note. Frisell's music encompasses rock, jazz, country, and blues with great humor, passion, and insight.

Frisell grew up in Denver, the son of a tuba- and bass-playing father. He initially played clarinet and saxophone, but switched to guitar while studying music at the University of Northern Colorado. He also plays banjo, bass, and ukulele. In 1977 he got a degree in arranging and composition from Berklee College of Music; the next year he moved to New York.

Counting Jimi Hendrix and jazz guitarists Wes Montgomery and Jim Hall among his influences, Frisell has played in a number of collaborative ensembles, including Power Tools with Ronald Shannon Jackson and Melvin Gibbs, Naked City with John Zorn, the Paul Bley Quartet, and the Paul Motian Trio. He has played on nearly 100 albums, including Hal Wilner's tributes to Nino Rota, Charles Mingus, and Walt Disney. He has also worked with Mananne Faithfull, Jan Garbarek, John Scofield, Marc Johnson's Bass Desires, Don Byron, and Caetano Veloso.

Frisell's first album, In Line, showcases solo work and duets with bassist Arild Andersen. On Rambler, he plays with such out-jazz musicians as trumpeter Kenny Wheeler and Motian. On Lookout for Hope, Frisell debuted the Bill Frisell Band, featuring cellist Hank Roberts, bassist Kermit Driscoll, and drummer Joey Baron; the quartet also plays on Where in the World? Is That You? was recorded with Wayne Horvitz. Have a Little Faith is a collection of covers that includes songs by John Philip Sousa, Sonny Rollins, Charles Ives, Bob Dylan, and Madonna.

In 1995 Frisell released The High Sign/One Week and Go

West, albums comprised of music that he composed for three silent Buster Keaton films. Quartet featured trumpet player Ron Miles, violinist Eyvind Kang, and trombonist Curtis Fowlkes. Nashville, recorded with members of Alison Krauss' bluegrass band Union Station and singer-songwriter Robin Holcomb, was voted "Album of the Year" in Downbeat's 1998 critics poll. The jazz magazine also named Frisell "Guitarist of the Year" in both 1998 and 1999. The Sweetest Punch features Elvis Costello, Cassandra Wilson, and a seven-piece band performing Frisell's arrangements of the songs that appeared on Costello and Burt Bacharach's Painted From Memory. Frisell also appears with Bono, Brian Eno, Daniel Lanois, and others on the soundtrack to the Wim Wenders film Million Dollar Hotel (2000). He composed and recorded the original soundtrack to Gus Van Sant's remake of Psycho (2000).

Fred Frith: See Henry Cow

Lefty Frizzell

Born William Orville Frizzell, Mar. 21, 1928, Corsicana, TX; died July 19, 1975, Nashville, TN
 1966—Lefty Frizzell's Greatest Hits (Columbia) 1982—Columbia Historic Edition 1984—Lefty Frizzell: His Life—His Music (Down Home Music) 1991—The Best of Lefty Frizzell (Rhino).

Singer Lefty Frizzell was one of the legends of honky-tonk country music; his original vocal style and literate songwriting influenced such C&W artists as Merle Haggard, Willie Nelson, Randy Travis, and Dwight Yoakam.

At age 12, Frizzell had a spot on a children's radio program, and by 16 he was a professional musician. His main musical model was the plaintive vocal style of Jimmie Rodgers, "the Singing Brakeman", Frizzell's own nickname came from his abilities as a fighter. A demo of Frizzell's song "If You've Got the Money I've Got the Time" brought him to the attention of Columbia Records, which signed him in the early '50s. In the years 1950-54, Frizzell had 15 Top 10 country hits, including the classics "Always Late (With Your Kisses)" (#1, 1951), "Mom and Dad's Waltz" (#2, 1951), "I Want to Be With You Always" (#1, 1951), "Travellin' Blues" (#6, 1951), and "Run 'Em Off" (#8, 1954). Top Nashville piano session man Floyd Cramer was a mainstay in Frizzell's band.

Frizzell became disillusioned by the music industry, however, and was plagued by a drinking problem that would continue until his death. By the late '50s, his hits were scarce (his classic 1959 version of "The Long Black Veil" hit #6 on the C&W chart), and by the early '60s he was all but forgotten. "Saginaw, Michigan" (#1 C&W, 1964) was Frizzell's last major hit. He was in the midst of a comeback when he died from a stroke at age 47. Two years after his death in 1975, the Frizzell tribute album, To Lefty From Willie, was released by Willie Nelson. Dwight Yoakam, one of many New Traditionalist Frizzell fans, recorded "Always Late (With Your Kisses)" on his 1987 album Hillbilly Deluxe.

Fugazi

Formed 1987, Arlington, VA

Ian MacKaye (b. ca. 1963), gtr., voc.; Guy Picciotto (b. ca. 1966), gtr., voc.; Joe Lally (b. ca. 1964), bass; Brendan Canty (b. ca. 1967), drums.

1988—Fugazi EP (Dischord) 1989—Margin Walker EP 1990—Repeater 1991—Steady Diet of Nothing 1993—In On the Kill Taker 1995—Red Medicine 1998—End Hits 1999—Instrument soundtrack.

Of all the bands to rise from the '80s American independent hardcore punk scene, Fugazi has remained truest to the DIY ethos, releasing albums on its own successful Dischord label. The band also steadfastly shuns mainstream attention and offers from major record labels. Inspired by the early work of hometown hardcore heroes Bad Brains, Fugazi's sound is a progression on the loud-fast aesthetic practiced by founding member Ian MacKaye's former bands, Embrace and the legendary Minor Threat.

Ian MacKaye started Dischord in the Arlington, Virginia, house he moved into after graduating from Washington, DC's Wilson High School in 1980. (Dischord later moved to a basement office beneath a dry cleaners.) He formed the label to put out records by his first band, the Teen Idles, followed by his next group, Minor Threat, which, along with Black Flag, was one of the most highly regarded hardcore punk bands. Dischord ultimately grew into a major underground force and has sold more than 2 million records since its inception. It released only DC-based acts, including Youth Brigade and the early Henry Rollins punk outfit S.O.A. When Minor Threat broke up in 1983, MacKaye moved on to the short-lived Embrace before teaming up with Happy Go Licky members Guy Picciotto and Brendan Canty in 1987 to form Fugazi. Joe Lally, a native of Rockville, Maryland, had worked as a roadie for one of the Dischord bands before joining Fugazi on bass. The band took its name from the Vietnam War-era acronym for "Fucked Up, Got Ambushed, Zipped In."

Despite the quartet's firm status as an independent entity, with relatively little promotion Fugazi has managed to amass a huge following, consistently packing large venues and selling about 150,000 copies of each album. Fugazi takes a decidedly pragmatic approach to rock & roll, eschewing the excessive rock-star lifestyle. The band keeps its album and concert prices low (for years, its CDs were priced at $8 each and admission to its all-ages shows was $5), renounces drugs and alcohol (Minor Threat inadvertently spawned the "straight-edge" hardcore movement of the mid-'80s via the lyrics to such songs as "Out of Step" and "Straight Edge"), refuses extravagant catering spreads backstage, uses only reputable, "alternative" promoters, and discourages the hardcore rituals of slam dancing and stage diving at shows. On album, Fugazi retains the attitude and angst inherent in the hardcore punk rock of its predecessors, but has slowed the tempos and added dense, metal-like instrumental foundations and the precise syncopations of reggae and the Police. In On the Kill Taker was Fugazi's first album to appear on the charts, peaking at #153 in 1993. Fugazi returned to the pop chart with Red Medicine (#126, 1995) and End Hits (#138, 1998).

By 1997, Lally had launched his own small label, Tolotta. And in 1999 Fugazi was the subject of Instrument, a film that documented 11 years of collected band footage on and off stage. A soundtrack album included previously unreleased tracks and new instrumental music recorded especially for the film.

The Fugees/Lauryn Hill/Wyclef Jean/Pras

Formed East Orange, NJ, ca. 1992

Lauryn Hill (b. May 26, 1975, South Orange, NJ), voc.; Nelust Wyclef Jean (b. Oct. 17, 1970, Haiti), voc., gtr., kybds.; Prakazrel "Pras" Michel (b. Oct. 19, 1972, Brooklyn, NY), voc. 1994—Blunted on Reality (Ruffhouse/Columbia) 1996—The Score; Bootleg Versions.

Wyclef Jean solo: 1997—Wyclef Jean Presents the Carnival Featuring Refugee Allstars (Ruffhouse/Columbia) 2000—The Eclectic: 2 Sides II a Book (Columbia).

Lauryn Hill solo: 1998—The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill (Ruffhouse/Columbia).

Pras Michel solo: 1998—Ghetto Supastar (Ruffhouse/Columbia).

Invoking the spirit of Bob Marley, avant-garde hip-hoppers the Fugees reinvented rap with their genre-blending recordings. With traces of reggae, folk, rock, soul, country, and Creole, the music of the Fugees symbolizes the interconnectedness of the African diaspora.

Vocalist Lauryn Hill grew up in the suburban environs of South Orange, New Jersey, in a household stocked with Curtis Mayfield, Stevie Wonder, Aretha Franklin, and Gladys Knight records. Hill was introduced to Pras Michel through a mutual high school friend, and the two came up with the idea for a rap group that would rhyme in different languages. Calling themselves Tranzlator Crew, Hill, Michel, and another female vocalist recorded some songs in a West Orange, New Jersey, studio. Michel's cousin, multi-instrumentalist Wyclef Jean, decided to stop by the studio and check out his relative's new group. Jean soon replaced the other female vocalist as the third member of Tranzlator Crew, and the trio of Hill, Michel, and Jean began hanging out regularly and exchanging musical ideas in the basement of Jean's uncle's house across town in East Orange.

Renaming the group the Fugees, the trio began auditioning for label representatives and caught the ear of Ruffhouse cofounder Chris Schwartz. Ruffhouse, which also discovered Latino rap group Cypress Hill, signed the group and released the mediocre debut, Blunted on Reality (#62 R&B, 1994). Except for the folky "Vocab" (#91 R&B, 1995) and the dancehall groove of the "Nappy Heads" remix (#49 pop, #52 R&B, 1994), Blunted on Reality failed to showcase the trio's talents.

The group really found its voice on the followup The Score (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1996). Brimming with postcolonial discourse and a gumbo of Afrocentric rhythms, the album exploded into the pop music world. Hill's evocative take on Roberta Flack's 1973 hit "Killing Me Softly" (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1996) was incessantly played on pop, R&B, hip-hop, and Adult Contemporary radio and won a Grammy for Best R&B Performance by a Duo or Group with Vocal. Other prominent songs like "Fu-Gee-La" (#29 pop, #13 R&B, 1995), "Ready or Not" (#22 R&B, 1996), and a cover of Bob Marley's "No Woman, No Cry" (#38 pop, #58 R&B, 1996) helped The Score win the Best Rap Album Grammy as well. The Score eventually sold more than 17 million copies, making the Fugees the biggest-selling rap group up to that time.

Following 1996's Bootleg Versions (#50 R&B), a collection of remixed and unreleased tracks, the group split up, reportedly so members could pursue solo careers. The first to release an album, Jean emphasized his Haitian roots with Carnival (#16 pop, #4 R&B, 1997). Its "We Trying to Stay Alive" (#45 pop, #14 R&B, 1997), "Guantanamo" (#23 R&B, 1997), and "Gone Till November" (#7 pop, #9 R&B, 1998) all achieved chart success, while "Jaspora" and "Yelé" feature Jean rapping and singing in the Haitian patois. After producing a number of R&B and hip-hop recordings, including Destiny's Child's "No, No, No (Part 2)" (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1997) and Pras's "Ghetto Supastar (That Is What You Are)" (#15 pop, #8 R&B, 1998), Jean recorded The Eclectic: 2 Sides II a Book (#9 pop, #3 R&B, 2000).

Though Pras' album Ghetto Supastar (#55 pop, #35 R&B, 1998) made some noise, it was Hill's The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1998) that dominated 1998's pop-music headlines, distinguishing the songstress from her Fugee counterparts. Her romantic involvement with Rohan Marley (Bob Marley's son) and the birth of the couple's first child was reflected in such hits as "Doo Wop (That Thing)" (#1 pop, #2 R&B, 1998), "Nothing Even Matters" (#25 R&B, 1999), "To Zion" (#77 R&B, 1999), and "Everything Is Everything" (#35 pop, #14 R&B, 1999). Her "Lost Ones" (#27 R&B, 1998) and "Ex-Factor" (#7 R&B, 1999) helped inflame the rumor that the end of a love affair between Hill and Jean led to the Fugees' breakup. Hill swept 1999's Grammy Awards show, winning five awards: Album of the Year, Best R&B Album, Best New Artist, Best Female R&B Vocal Performance, and Best R&B Song. The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill later stirred controversy when four musicians on the album claimed that they helped write and produce certain songs that were credited only to Hill. In February 2001 Hill settled the legal dispute by paying the musicians an undisclosed sum of money. Since high school, Hill has also pursued acting, appearing in the daytime soap As the World Turns as well as 1993's Sister Act 2: Back in the Habit.

The Fugs

Formed 1965, New York, NY

Ed Sanders (b. Aug. 17, 1939, Kansas City, MO), voc., gtr.; Tuli Kupferberg (b. Sep. 28, 1923, New York), voc.; Ken Weaver (b. Galveston, TX), voc., drums.

1965—The Village Fugs (Broadside/Folkways) 1966—The

Fugs (ESP) 1967—Virgin Fugs 1968—Tenderness Junction (Reprise); It Crawled Into My Hand, Honest 1969—The Belle of Avenue A (group disbands) 1970—Golden Filth: Live At the Fillmore East 1984—(group re-forms: Sanders; Kupferberg; Weaver; + Steve Taylor, gtr., voc.; + Coby Batty [b. Nov. 25, 1955], voc., drums; + Scott Petito [b. July 17, 1958], bass, gtr., kybds.) Refuse to Be Burnt-Out (Olufsen & New Rose) 1985—No More Slavery 1986—Star Peace 1988—Fugs Live in Woodstock 1992—Songs From a Portable Forest (Gazell) 1994—Fugs Live From the '60s (Ace) 1995—The Real Woodstock Festival.

Ed Sanders solo: 1970—Sanders Truckstop (Reprise) 1972—Beer Cans on the Moon 1992—Songs in Ancient Greek (Olufsen) 1996—American Bard.

Tuli Kupferberg solo: 1987—Tuli and Friends (Shimmy Disc).

These perverse post-Beatnik poets were too pointedly topical and obscene for mass consumption, but the Fugs were the most relentless comic satirists of the hippie era. Their targets included sexual repression, rock, politics, and the foibles of humanity in general.

Ed Sanders had graduated from New York University in 1960 with a B.A. in ancient Greek; in 1961 he marched on the Pentagon. He was a published poet who briefly ran the Peace Eye bookstore and published the literary magazine Fuck You. Tuli Kupferberg, a lanky, hirsute, perennially bedraggled-looking figure whom Beat poet Allen Ginsberg immortalized in Howl as "the person who jumped off the Brooklyn Bridge and survived," was also a published poet, and a graduate of Brooklyn College.

With Ken Weaver and an ever-changing roster of backing musicians—including Peter Stampfel and Steve Weber of the Holy Modal Rounders, guitarists Vinny Leary, Pete Kearney, and Ken Pine, bassists John Anderson and Charles Larkey, and drummer Bob Mason—they became a long-running off-off Broadway rock-theater phenomenon in Greenwich Village, with audiences often walking out on their scathingly profane, put-down-riddled theater-of-outrageous-absurdity performances.

After more than 900 shows at the Players Theater and the Bridge Theater, they began touring the United States. In the fall of 1968 they toured Europe, at one point trying unsuccessfully to get into then-troubled Czechoslovakia in order to lie down in front of invading Russian tanks as a protest against the invasion.

In the early '70s Sanders released solo albums on Repnse, Sanders' Truckstop and Beer Cans on the Moon, and reported on the Charles Manson trial for the underground press; he later wrote a best-selling book about the murder case and the trial, The Family. A collection of his poems, Thirsting for Peace in a Raging Century, won an American Book Award in 1988. A CD, Songs in Ancient Greek, was released in 1992. In 2000 he began publishing his eight-volume America, A History in Verse.

During the '60s Kupferberg published a number of books, including 1001 Ways to Make Love and 1001 Ways to Beat the Draft. He went on to become an established political cartoonist, whose work has been seen in more than 100 publications. He became the director of Revolting Theater, and performed at colleges and New York venues, as well as gigging with his band, Tuli and the Fuxxons. For a number of years he has produced a cable program on New York City's public access channels.

The band regrouped in 1984 for a reunion concert and remained together into the 21st century, touring and releasing records.

The Bobby Fuller Four

Formed mid-'60s, El Paso, TX
 Bobby Fuller (b. Oct. 22, 1943, Baytown, TX; d. July 18, 1966, Los Angeles, CA), gtr., voc.; Randy Fuller, bass; DeWayne Quirico, drums; Jim Reese, gtr.
 1965—The Bobby Fuller Four (Mustang) 1966—KRLA King of the Wheels 1987—The Best of the Bobby Fuller Four (1965–1966) (Rhino).

"I Fought the Law" established the Bobby Fuller Four for a half-year of stardom in 1966. The group, all Texans, established a reputation in El Paso, then moved to L.A. "Let Her Dance" became popular in the Southwest in 1965, and "I Fought the Law"—written by a member of Buddy Holly's Crickets, Sonny Curtis—reached #9 in 1966. (The Clash later covered it on The Clash.) A Buddy Holly cover, "Love's Made a Fool of You" (#26, 1966), was a followup hit.

In July 1966 Bobby Fuller died under mysterious circumstances in his car parked in front of his Hollywood home. The fact that he had been beaten up and had ingested gasoline was not released to the public at the time. Although the police ruled his death a suicide, friends speculated that he was murdered, possibly by mobsters. Afterward, the Randy Fuller Four continued, but without success.

Jesse "Lone Cat" Fuller

Born Mar. 12, 1896, Jonesboro, GA; died Jan. 29, 1976, Oakland, CA
 1963—San Francisco Bay Blues (Prestige) 1993—Jazz, Folk Songs, Spirituals & Blues (Fantasy).

Jesse Fuller was a country-bluesman, a one-man band, and the composer of "San Francisco Bay Blues." Fuller never knew his father, and the man his mother lived with often brutally mistreated him. By age five Fuller had learned to play a homemade stringed mouth bow. After living with his mother's relatives a few years, he left home at 10 and began traveling around the South and Midwest, working odd jobs and playing the blues.

In the early '20s Fuller was discovered outside Universal Film Studios shining shoes. He was given bit parts in The Thief of Bagdad, East of Suez, and other movies, for which he was paid $7.50 a day. During his middle age, he worked a succession of jobs, including cowering, broom making, and car washing. He remained committed to music, however, and in the late '30s debuted on radio station KNX (Oakland) singing "John Henry."

In 1951 Fuller decided to devote himself entirely to his music, and over the next decade he built a small cult following. He often used a one-man-band setup he had devised that allowed him to play guitar, harmonica, hi-hat with castanets, and his own invention, the footdella (a piano-string bass operated with a foot pedal). He wrote "San Francisco Bay Blues" in 1954, and five years later appeared at the Monterey Jazz Festival. Fuller became popular in Europe and England, and toured the U.S. regularly throughout the '60s. It wasn't until the mid-'50s that he began recording, cutting his early tracks for Prestige (later reissued on Fantasy). In 1976 he died of heart disease.

Lowell Fulson

Born Mar. 31, 1921, Choctaw Indian territory, OK; died Mar. 6, 1999, Long Beach, CA
 1966—Tramp (Kent) 1969—Now (United) 1972—On a Heavy Bag (Jewel) 1973—I've Got the Blues 1975—Lowell Fulson (Arhoolie); The Ol' Blues Singer (Granite) 1977—Hung Down Head (Chess); Blues Masters 1978—Lovemaker (Big Town) 1983—One More Blues (Evidence) 1988—It's a Good Day (Rounder) 1992—Hold On (Bullseye Blues) 1995—Them Update Blues 1997—My First Recordings (Arhoolie); The Complete Chess Masters (MCA).

A journeyman R&B performer whose recording career spans four decades, Fulson hit the pop chart in the mid-'60s. He is best known, however, as a songwriter, several of whose compositions have become modern blues classics.

Of Native American and African descent, Fulson (not Fulson, as is often written) grew up in Tulsa, where many of his relatives played stringed instruments. He left home around age 17 to join a traveling country & western string band. In 1940 he moved to Texas, where he played with the popular Texas Alexander. Shortly thereafter he was drafted and served in the Pacific, where he often entertained fellow soldiers.

A few months after his discharge in late 1945, Fulson moved to California. In 1946 he began recording in Oakland, concentrating on dance-hall blues numbers he had learned during his time with Alexander. His R&B hits began in 1948 with "Three O'Clock Blues" (a.k.a. "Three O'Clock in the Morning"), "You Know That I Love You," and "Come Back Baby" for Downbeat. They continued on the Swingtime label in 1950 and 1951 with "Every Day I Have the Blues" (#5 R&B, 1950), "Blue Shadows" (#1 R&B, 1950), and "Lonesome Christmas" (#7 R&B, 1950).

By the mid-'50s Fulson was recording for Chess/Checker, notably "Reconsider Baby" (#3 R&B, 1954), now a blues standard. His brief pop success began in 1965, when "Black Nights" (#11 R&B, 1965), on the Kent label, became a minor hit, followed two years later by "Make a Little Love" (#20 R&B, 1967), and his most successful release, "Tramp" (#5 R&B, 1967), which almost cracked the pop Top 50. Otis Redding and Carla Thomas subsequently had hits with Fulson's songs. In 1960 Fulson married Guitar Slim's widow, Sadie; she died in 1992. In 1993 he was inducted into the Rhythm & Blues Hall of Fame; during his life, he received five W.C. Handy Awards. Fulson continued to tour and perform around the world until 1997, when declining health caused him to scale back on his shows. He died in 1999. His final studio work, 1995's Them Update Blues, was nominated for a Grammy for Best Traditional Blues Album.

Fun Boy Three: See the Specials

Annette Funicello

Born Oct. 22, 1942, Utica, NY
 1959—Annette (Buena Vista) 1960—Annette Sings Anka; Hawaiianne; Italianette 1961—Dance Annette 1962—Annette Funicello; Annette—The Story of My Teens . . . and Sixteen Songs That Tell It 1993—Annette: A Musical Reunion With America's Girl Next Door (Disney)

Annette Funicello was the first female rock singer who needed only one name, for she was indeed America's girl next door. The first to admit she is not a great singer, Funicello experienced something of a musical revival in the '80s when L.A. disc jockey Rodney Bingenheimer began playing her old records, and since then an array of rockers, from the B-52's Fred Schneider to Redd Kross have noted her influence.

Walt Disney discovered her at a dance-school recital in Burbank, California, and immediately cast her as the last of 24 children for his new kid's TV show, The Mickey Mouse Club. Early in the show's original run, from fall 1955 to early 1959 (it was shown in syndication through the '70s), Annette emerged as the most popular Mouseketeer, and when the show was canceled she alone remained under contract to Disney. There she costarred in such films as Babes in Toyland (1961) and The Monkey's Uncle (1965), the title theme of which she recorded with the Beach Boys.

She also guested on numerous television series through the '80s.

Pairing Annette with songwriters Richard and Robert Sherman, Disney launched her recording career with a series of catchy but innocent hits: "Tall Paul" (#7, 1959), "First Name Initial" (#20, 1959), and "Pineapple Princess" (#11, 1960). She became a regular on Dick Clark's shows and soon befriended other teen idols, including Paul Anka, with whom she fell in love. He wrote "Puppy Love" and "Put Your Head on My Shoulder" for her. Annette made her biggest contribution to teen culture, however, in a series of beach-party films costarring Frankie Avalon: Beach Party (1963), Muscle Beach Party, Bikini Beach, Pajama Party (all 1964), and Beach Blanket Bingo (1965).

She retired from show business after marrying in 1965, although she made rare television appearances (and in 1968 had a cameo role in the Monkees' surrealist Head) and in the mid-'70s was the spokesperson for Skippy peanut butter. In 1987, while filming Back to the Beach with longtime friend Avalon, Funicello noticed the first symptoms of multiple sclerosis. She and Avalon toured the country through 1988, and in 1992 she publicly announced that she was suffering from MS. She has since become a spokesperson for others with the illness and founded the Annette Funicello Fund for Neurological Disorders. In 1994 she published her well-received autobiography, A Dream Is a Wish Your Heart Makes: My Story (cowritten with Patricia Romanowski). The following year, the book was the basis for a made-for-TV movie of the same name in which Annette and her real-life family appear briefly. In years since, Funicello has been largely out of the public eye.

Funkadelic: See George Clinton

Harvey Fuqua: See the Moonglows

Richie Furay: See Poco

a|b|c|d|e|f| |h|i|j|k|l|m|n|o|p|q|r|s|t|u|v|w|x|y|z

G

Kenny G

Born Kenneth Gorelick, June 5, 1956, Seattle, WA
1982—Kenny G (Arista) 1984—G Force 1985—Gravity
1986—Duotones 1988—Silhouette 1989—Live 1992—Breathless 1994—Miracles: The Holiday Album 1996—The Moment 1997—Greatest Hits 1999—Classics in the Key of G; Faith: A Holiday Album.

President Bill Clinton spoke for a lot of Americans in the early '90s when he called Kenny G one of his favorite jazz musicians. Most jazz purists have dismissed the saxophonist—Kenny G, that is—as a purveyor of soulless fluff that appeals primarily to fans of sentimental pop and New Age music. Nonetheless, Kenny G's instantly recognizable, smooth, mellow "contemporary jazz" style has made him one of the most commercially successful instrumental recording artists in history, selling more than 30 million albums worldwide.

Kenny G took up the saxophone as a child, after seeing the instrument played by a soloist on The Ed Sullivan Show. Although he started on alto sax and learned to play tenor as well, the soprano sax eventually became his signature instrument. At 17, he played in Barry White's Love Unlimited Orchestra, and in the mid-'70s he became the only white musician in a Seattle-based funk outfit called Cold, Bold, and Together. After graduating magna cum laude from the University of Washington, with a degree in accounting, Kenny G spent a few years playing in Oregon's Jeff Lorber Fusion Band, then signed with Ansta Records as a solo act in the early '80s.

The musician's first three albums sold respectably for instrumentals, but it was his fourth, 1986's Duotones, that proved the charm, reaching #6 on the pop chart and spawning the #4 single "Songbird." Silhouette followed its predecessor into the Top 10 (#8, 1988), and includes a couple of singles that did well on the R&B and Adult Contemporary charts, notably "We've Saved the Best for Last," on which Smokey Robinson sang. Breathless (#2 pop, #2 R&B, #1 Contemporary Jazz, 1992) featured vocals by Peabo Bryson and Aaron Neville, plus the single "Forever in Love," which won a Grammy for Best Instrumental Composition. Kenny G has also recorded with R&B divas Aretha Franklin, Whitney Houston, Dionne Warwick, Natalie Cole, and Toni Braxton, as well as with his even more critically reviled peer Michael Bolton. In 1993 the saxophonist was the only nonsinging pop star to appear on Frank Sinatra's Duets album. The following year's Miracles: The Holiday Album became one of the best-selling Christmas discs of all time, while 1996's The Moment went double platinum and hit #2 on the pop albums chart and #1 on the Top Contemporary Jazz Albums chart. In late 1997, he set the record for the longest-held note—45 minutes and 47 seconds—scoring a place in the Guinness Book of World Records. The 1999 album Classics in the Key of G was a collection of jazz standards such as "Round Midnight" and "In a Sentimental Mood."

Peter Gabriel

Born Feb. 13, 1950, Cobham, Eng.
1977—Peter Gabriel (Atco) 1978—Peter Gabriel (Atlantic)

1980—Peter Gabriel 1982—Peter Gabriel (Security) (Geffen)
 1983—Peter Gabriel Plays Live 1985—Birdy soundtrack 1986—So 1989—Passion: Music for the Last Temptation of Christ 1990—Shaking the Tree: Sixteen Golden Greats
 1992—Us 1994—Secret World Live 1999—*Ovo:
 Millennium Show (Real World/Virgin)* 2001—Up (Geffen).

As frontman for the British progressive-rock band Genesis [see entry], Peter Gabriel cowrote, sang, and acted out elaborate story songs, wearing masks and costumes. Since leaving Genesis in 1975 to begin a solo career, Gabriel has revealed a new array of guises, including soundtrack composer, social activist, world-music aficionado and benefactor, music-video innovator, and multimedia artist.

Gabriel's first solo album was an eponymously titled effort, as were his next three. (The idea, he once explained, was to suggest issues, as one would for a magazine.) The first and second LPs drew attention for the respective singles "Solsbury Hill" and "DIY." The third, produced by Steve Lillywhite, yielded "Games Without Frontiers" (#48, 1980) and showed Gabriel striving to break rock conventions: For instance, drummers Jerry Marotta and Phil Collins (Gabriel's former Genesis bandmate) were prohibited from using cymbals.

Gabriel's fourth album, subtitled Security (1982), was the singer's first to go gold; it also gave him his first Top 40 single with "Shock the Monkey." That same year, Gabriel financed the World of Music, Arts, and Dance (WOMAD) Festival, designed to bring African and Far Eastern music—which had increasingly influenced his work—to Western ears. To offset the festival's debt, he staged a Genesis reunion concert and released a WOMAD album, featuring cuts by himself, Robert Fripp (the producer of his second LP), and Pete Townshend alongside ethnic-music sources. The WOMAD Festival became an annual event, and the organization eventually spawned an education program and record label.

In 1984 Gabriel was tapped to score Alan Parker's film Birdy; the singer consequently won the Grand Jury Prize at Cannes. In 1985 he founded Real World Inc., aimed at developing cross-cultural projects in technology and the arts. The following year, he started the United Nations University for Peace, intended to fund an international human-rights computer network, and set up Real World Studios, a recording complex near Bath, England where artists including Van Morrison and New Order have since worked. (A Real World record label, dedicated to exposing ethnic music from around the world, was established in 1989.)

The year 1986 also saw Gabriel's commercial breakthrough. So, coproduced with Daniel Lanois, reached #2 and produced the funky, chart-topping "Sledgehammer," which Gabriel accompanied with a groundbreaking video full of provocative live-action-animation images. A video for "Big Time" (#8, 1987) followed suit. Other singles included "In Your Eyes" (#26, 1986) and "Don't Give Up" (#72, 1987), a duet with Kate Bush.

Gabriel joined U2, Sting, and others for a 1986 tour on behalf of Amnesty International. A 1988 Amnesty tour followed, with Gabriel, Sting, Bruce Springsteen, Tracy Chapman, and

Peter Gabriel

Youssou N'Dour (who had sung on So). Also in 1988, Gabriel performed "Biko," his tribute to South African civil-rights martyr Steven Biko (from 1980's Peter Gabriel) at a Nelson Mandela tribute at London's Wembley Stadium, and composed music for Martin Scorsese's controversial adaptation of The Last Temptation of Christ. The 1989 soundtrack album won a Grammy for Best New Age Performance.

Gabriel's next studio album, 1992's Us, was inspired by his mid-'80s divorce from childhood sweetheart Jill Moore and the breakup of a subsequent relationship with actress Rosanna Arquette. The album reached #2 and generated "Digging in the Dirt" (#52, 1992) and "Steam" (#32, 1992). In 1993 Gabriel enlisted an international roster including Sinéad O'Connor, Crowded House, James, and P.M. Dawn for a WOMAD tour. The 1994 double CD Secret World Live was recorded during two Italian concerts in 1993.

Also in 1994 the musician added another branch to his corporation, called Real World Multi Media, to use technology as another creative outlet. The division published its first CD-ROM, "Xplora 1," an interactive look into Gabriel's various projects, that year. A followup, "Eve," featuring Gabriel's music and the work of several visual artists, was released in 1997. The musician helped develop an attraction for the London Millennium Dome, which opened on New Year's Day 2000. Although by this time Gabriel seemed to be more involved in the aspects of his Real World organization than performing himself, he did appear on N'Dour's 2000 album, Joko, and is said to be working on a followup album to Us.

Rory Gallagher

Born Mar. 2, 1949, Ballyshannon, Ire.; died June 14, 1995, London, Eng.

1971—Rory Gallagher (Atco) 1972—Deuce (Polydor); Live! 1973—Blueprint; Tattoo 1974—Irish Tour '74; In the Beginning (Emerald Gem) 1975—Against the Grain (Chrysalis); Sinner . . . and Saint (Polydor) 1976—The Story So Far; Calling Card (Chrysalis); The Best Years (Polydor) 1978—Photo Finish (Chrysalis) 1979—Top Priority 1980—Stage Struck 1982—Jinx 1987—Defender (I.R.S.) 1990—Fresh Evidence 1999—BBC Sessions (BMG/Buddah).
With Taste: 1969—Taste (Atco).

Blues guitarist Rory Gallagher grew up in Cork, Ireland and got his first guitar at age nine. He played in pickup bands until leaving school at age 15 and toured in the early '60s with the Fontana Showband. By the time the group broke up in 1965, it was called the Impact. Gallagher then began working regularly in Hamburg, Germany, and in Ireland with bassist Charlie McCracken and ex-Them drummer John Wilson in a power trio he called Taste. The band moved to London in 1969 and released the first of several guitar showcase LPs, which met with some enthusiasm in the U.K. and Europe. Taste specialized in hard-rocking versions of blues and country chestnuts like "Sugar Mama." The group broke up in 1971, and Gallagher began leading small bands under his own name.

Bucking all trends, he subsequently conducted a moderately successful solo career, with increasing emphasis on his own blues-rock material. Gallagher played on Muddy Waters' The London Sessions (1972) and on the star-studded 1978 comeback LP by English skiffle star Lonnie Donegan. He regularly tours in the U.S., Britain, and Europe; a 1974 Irish tour was the subject of a documentary by director Tony Palmer. Gallagher died of complications following a liver transplant.

Gang of Four

Formed 1977, Leeds, Eng.

Jon King (June 8, 1955, London, Eng.), voc., melodica; Hugo Burnham (b. Mar. 25, 1956, London), drums; Andy Gill (b. Jan. 1, 1956, Manchester, Eng.), gr.; Dave Allen (Dec. 23, 1955, Cambria, Eng.), bass.
1978—Damaged Goods EP (Fast Product, U.K.) 1980—Entertainment! (Warner Bros.) 1981—Solid Gold (—Allen; + Sara Lee) 1982—Another Day, Another Dollar EP; Songs of the Free (—Burnham) 1983—Hard 1984—At the Palace (Phonogram, U.K.) (group disbands) 1990—A Brief History of the 20th Century (Warner Bros.) (group re-forms: King; Gill) 1991—Mall (Polydor) 1995—Shrinkwrapped (Castle) 1998—100 Flowers Bloom (Rhino).

The English-born Gang of Four played dissonant, dub-reggae-influenced, atonal funk with political lyrics. The band was extremely influential in the U.K. and a solid concert draw in the U.S. The group started at art school in Leeds in 1977, naming itself after a Chinese Communist political faction associated with Mao Tse-Tung's widow. Gang of Four released its debut EP, Damaged Goods, on the independent Fast Product label. Touring and the record, which became a hit at rock discos, brought the quartet a contract with EMI in Britain and, after a self-financed tour, with Warner Bros. in the U.S., which began a jumbled release schedule. (Entertainment! was released in Britain in October 1979 and in the U.S. in May 1980, for example.)

In the middle of the U.S. tour supporting Solid Gold, bassist Dave Allen quit; he was replaced on tour by Busta "Cherry" Jones, who had performed with Talking Heads and Chris Spedding. Later in 1981 bassist Sara Lee, who had been a member of the League of Gentlemen with Robert Fripp, joined the Gang of Four as a fulltime member. On its 1982 tour, the Gang of Four appeared as a five-piece group with vocalist Edi Reader. Although its music had apparently been too raw for U.S. radio, the group received extensive play in clubs for such danceable British hits as "At Home, He's a Tourist," "Damaged Goods," and "I Love a Man in Uniform."

In 1983 King and Gill fired Burnham and used a drum machine on Hard, ironically attacked by critics as sounding too soft. Drummer Stephen Goulding, who Graham Parker and the Rumour was added for a tour, while Burnham became a record industry A&R executive (after stints at Island and Imago, he landed at Quincy Jones' Qwest label). Citing musical differences, King and Gill disbanded Gang of Four in 1984; Allen and Burnham played an encore at a London farewell show.

Dave Allen went on to form Shriekback (with ex-XTC and League of Gentlemen keyboardist Barry Andrews) [see entry], King Swamp, and Low Pop Suicide. In addition, Allen founded the independent label World Domination; in 1994, that label released Allen's first solo album, The Elastic Purejoy.

Andy Gill produced the Red Hot Chili Peppers' debut album and worked on film soundtracks. (Allen and Jon King cowrote the music for 1984's The Karate Kid.) King formed two bands, Mechanic Preachers and King Butcher, before he and Gill re-formed Gang of Four for the critically well-received Mall (1991). The group—dubbed by critics the Gang of Two—also released Shrinkwrapped (1995), and toured as a four-piece that included Curve drummer Steve Monti, before moving on to other endeavors. A 1998 compilation, 100 Flowers Bloom, put the band's history in context.

Gang Starr

Formed 1988, Brooklyn, NY

The Guru Keith E. (b. Keith Elam, July 17, 1966, Boston, MA), voc.; DJ Premier (b. Chris Martin, Mar. 21, 1969, Prairie View, TX), DJ.

1989—No More Mr. Nice Guy (Wild Pitch) 1991—Step in the Arena (Chrysalis) 1992—Daily Operation 1994—Hard to Earn 1998—Moment of Truth (Noo Trybe/Virgin) 1999—Full Clip: A Decade of Gang Starr.

Guru solo: 1993—Jazzmatazz (Chrysalis) 1995—Jazzmatazz

Gang Starr: Guru, DJ Premier

ll: The New Reality; Guru Presents III Kid Records (Payday/London) 2000—Guru's Jazzmatazz: Street Soul (Virgin).

Gang Starr's music honors hip-hop's jazz roots. Indeed, the duo's biggest break came when director Spike Lee brought them together with saxophonist Branford Marsalis to collaborate on a piece for the film Mo' Better Blues.

Keith Elam (his Guru moniker stands for "Gifted Unlimited Rhymes Universal") formed the initial version of Gang Starr in his native Boston, where his father was the city's first black judge. Elam rebelled against his upbringing and moved to New York in 1983 to seek a career in music, but not before studying business at Morehouse College in Atlanta. In the mid-'80s Elam heard a demo tape by Chris Martin, a DJ from Brooklyn who was then studying computer science at Prairie View A&M University in Texas. When Martin returned to New York, the two moved into a Brooklyn apartment and began jamming.

Gang Starr's first album featured the songs "Positivity" and "Jazz Music," which pointed in the direction the duo would explore further on later albums. Gang Starr's major-label debut, Step in the Arena, reached #19. R&B. After the release of Daily Operation, Elam announced plans to do a solo project of jazz/hip-hop fusion music as Guru, featuring noted jazzmen Courtney Pine, Marsalis, and others. The resulting album, Jazzmatazz (#94), came out in 1993. A 1995 sequel, Jazzmatazz II: The New Reality (#71 pop, #16 R&B, 1995), added soul to the mix and featured Donald Byrd, Meshell Ndegeocello, and Chaka Khan. And a third chapter in 2000, Guru's Jazzmatazz: Street Soul, gathered Macy Gray, Herbie Hancock, the Roots, Isaac Hayes, and others. Meanwhile, Premier set up shop as a busy producer, working with the likes of KRS-ONE, Jay-Z, Big Daddy Kane, Heavy D., and the Notorious B.I.G. He also announced plans for his own solo project.

The duo reconvened for 1994's Hard to Earn (#25 pop, #2 R&B, 1994) and 1998's Moment of Truth (#6 pop, #1 R&B), which finally brought Gang Starr some mainstream success and its first gold album.

The Gap Band

Formed early 1970s, Los Angeles, CA

Ronnie Wilson, voc., trumpet, kybds.; Charles Wilson, lead voc., kybds.; Robert Wilson, bass, voc.; + other musicians.

1974—Magician's Holiday (Shelter) 1977—The Gap Band (Tattoo) 1979—The Gap Band II (Mercury) 1980—The Gap Band III 1982—Gap Band IV (Total Experience) 1983—Gap Band V—Jammin' 1985—Gap Gold/Best of the Gap Band; Gap Band VI 1986—Gap Band VII; The 12" Collection (Mercury) 1987—Straight From the Heart (Total Experience) 1989—Round Trip (Capitol) 1994—Best Of (Mercury); Testimony (Rhino) 1995—Ain't Nothin' But a Party 1999—Y2K: Funkin' Till 2000 Comz (Big Trax/Private I/Island/Mercury).
Charlie Wilson solo: 1992—You Turn My Life Around (Bon Ami) 2000—Bridging the Gap (Major Hits/Universal).

As the Gap Band, the three Wilson brothers, natives of Tulsa, Oklahoma, became one of the most popular funk bands of the '80s. Their father was a Pentecostal minister and their mother a pianist, and every Sunday the boys sang before their father's sermon. When they started the band in the early '70s, they named themselves using the first initials of three neighborhood streets—Greenwood, Archer, and Pine—to form Gap.

By 1974 they had met Leon Russell, who signed them to his Shelter Records, where they cut one album. They also performed as Russell's backup band for several years. In the mid-'70s the Wilsons moved to Los Angeles, where they recorded one gospel-styled single, "This Place Called Heaven," for A&M. They then moved to RCA-distributed Tattoo Records and cut a self-titled album that attracted some attention.

The Gap Band signed to Mercury Records, and "Shake," "Steppin' (Out)," and "I Don't Believe You Want to Get Up and Dance (Oops, Up Side Your Head)," all R&B Top 10 hits, brought it to national prominence. Then "Burn Rubber (Why You Wanna Hurt Me)" (#1 R&B, 1980) and "Yearning for Your Love" (#5 R&B, 1981) from the platinum III (#16, 1981) established the group as a major act. Another platinum album, Gap Band IV (#14) contained two 1982 #1 R&B singles: "Early in the Morning" and "Outstanding." "You Dropped a Bomb on Me" peaked at #2 (#31 pop).

The Gap Band continued with more R&B hits, including "Party Train" (#3 R&B, 1983), "Jam the Motha'" (#16 R&B, 1983), "Beep a Freak" (#2 R&B, 1984), "I Found My Baby" (#8 R&B, 1985), "Going in Circles" (#2 R&B, 1986), "Big Fun" (#8 R&B, 1986), "I'm Gonna Git You Sucka" (#14 R&B, 1988), "All of My Love" (#1 R&B, 1989), "Addicted to Your Love" (#8 R&B, 1990), and "We Can Make It Alright" (#18 R&B, 1990). The group's only other album to enter the Top 40 was the gold Gap Band V—Jammin' (#28, 1983). The Gap Band II has also been certified gold.

In 1990 Charles worked with Dave Stewart on the soundtrack of Rooftops, the film was a box-office flop. Later he toured with Eurythmics, and cowrote two songs on that group's We Too Are One ("Revival" and "Your Love Is Precious"). He has also appeared on records by Ray Charles, Quincy Jones, Snoop Dogg, Zapp, and Mint Condition. He later released his solo debut, You Turn My Life Around (#42 R&B, 1992). However, he never left the Gap Band, which continues to tour and record. Despite a lack of recent chart success, the trio became newly revered thanks to the mid- to late-'90s hip-hop-inspired, old-school funk revival.

Garbage

Formed 1993, Madison, WI

Shirley Manson (b. Aug. 26, 1966, Edinburgh, Scot.), voc., gtr.; Butch Vig (b. Aug. 2, 1956, Viroqua, WI), drums; Duke Erikson (b. Jan. 15, 1951, NE), gtr., kybds., bass; Steve Marker (b. March 16, 1959, Minneapolis, MN), gtr., bass. 1995—Garbage (Almo Sounds) 1998—Version 2.0.

In the age of video, many a band has owed its success to MTV. But Garbage may well be the first to owe its formation, at least in a roundabout way, to the channel. The band formed in 1993 as a trio composed of guitarists Steve Marker and Duke Enkson and drummer Butch Vig. Each had been a producer, with Vig achieving fame for manning the boards for Nirvana's Nevermind and the Smashing Pumpkins' Siamese Dream, among others. Vig and Marker co-owned Smart Studios in Madison, Wisconsin (where both had attended college), while Vig and Erikson had previously played together in the '80s indie bands Spooner and Firetown. As the new trio began writing and recording, they caught the video for the song "Suffocate Me" by the Scottish band Angelfish on MTV's 120 Minutes. Intrigued by the sound and presence of the band's fiery redheaded frontwoman, Shirley Manson, they contacted her in her native Edinburgh and invited her to Madison for an audition. Unhappy with her situation in Angelfish (an offshoot of Goodbye Mr. Mackenzie, for whom she had previously played keyboards and sang backup), Manson obliged.

With Manson joining on lead vocals and additional guitar, Garbage began work on its debut album in late 1994, fashioning an edgy but melodic electropop sound underscored by layers of crunchy guitars, samples, and rhythmic loops. Although Vig's reputation as a superstar producer was responsible for much of the advance press interest in Garbage, the outspoken, photogenic Manson would quickly emerge as the media focal point and star of the band. Released in late 1995, the group's self-titled debut climbed to #20 and spawned the #24 pop hit "Stupid Girl" and the #1 Modern Rock hit "#1 Crush" ("Vow," "Queer," and "Only Happy When It Rains" also charted). The album earned them multiple Grammy nominations, including Best New Artist, but they walked away from the awards show empty-handed. Nevertheless, continued radio, video, and print exposure, coupled with a two-year touring schedule, pushed the album's sales past double platinum, paving the way for the #13 chart debut of their second album, 1998's Version 2.0. That album went platinum behind the Modern Rock hits "Special" and "Push It." The following year, Garbage recorded the theme song to the 1999 James Bond movie, The World Is Not Enough.

In late 2000, the band shelved plans for a B sides compilation in order to concentrate on recording the followup to Version 2.0, which was tentatively entitled Beautiful Garbage and scheduled for a summer 2001 release.

Jerry Garcia: See the Grateful Dead

Art Garfunkel

Born Nov. 5, 1941, New York, NY

1973—Angel Clare (Columbia) 1975—Breakaway 1977—Watermark 1979—Fate for Breakfast 1981—Scissors Cut 1988—Lefty 1993—Up 'Til Now (Sony) 1997—Songs From a Parent to a Child.

Art Garfunkel contributed high harmonies, some lead vocals, coproduction, and arranging ideas to Simon and Garfunkel's string of folk-pop hits in the late '60s [see entry]. The duo disbanded in 1970, partially due to Garfunkel's growing interest in film. He has released occasional solo albums since. The two reunited to sing for half a million fans at a September 1981 concert in New York's Central Park and have played together onstage several times in the '90s.

Garfunkel met Paul Simon in grade school in Queens. The two had a teenybopper hit record, "Hey Schoolgirl!" (#49, 1958), as Tom and Jerry. Garfunkel also recorded a few unsuccessful sides on his own as "Arty Gar" for the Octavia and Warwick labels in the early '60s. But he had been seriously studying architecture and mathematics at Columbia University before deciding to join Simon in a professional music career.

Garfunkel's first film, Catch-22, was shot in 1969 as he and Simon drifted apart, and Garfunkel appeared in Carnal Knowledge (1971) and in Nicolas Roeg's Bad Timing/A Sensual Obsession (1980). He didn't revive his recording career until 1973, with the lavishly orchestrated Angel Clare (#5), which included the first of his solo hit singles, Jimmy Webb's "All I Know" (#9, 1973). His other appearances in the Top 40 in the '70s included "I Only Have Eyes for You" (#18, 1975) and "Breakaway" (#39, 1976). Garfunkel is particularly fond of moody, romantic ballads. His 1975 LP, Breakaway, included a studio reunion with Simon for "My Little Town," which became a Top 10 hit. In 1978 Garfunkel teamed up with Simon and James Taylor for a Top 20 version of Sam Cooke's "(What a) Wonderful World"; he also undertook his first U.S. solo tour.

Garfunkel seemed to fade from view in the '80s, but 1993 saw the release of Up 'Til Now, which hit the stores around the same time as Garfunkel's acclaimed onstage reunion with his former partner at the Paramount Theater at Madison Square Garden for a 23-concert run. Garfunkel also returned to the big screen that year, costarring in director Jennifer Lynch's controversial film Boxing Helena. He has also embarked on several walking campaigns: He crossed Japan by foot in the early '80s and traversed America in 40 intervals between 1984 to 1996. As of 2000 he was making his way across Europe.

Leif Garrett

Born Nov. 8, 1961, Hollywood, CA
 1977—Leif Garrett (Atlantic) 1978—Feel the Need (Scotti Brothers) 1979—Same Goes for You 1980—Can't Explain 1981—My Movie of You 1998—The Leif Garrett Collection (Rock 'n' Roll).

Leif Garrett was a mid-'70s television teen idol. He began his recording career at age 16 with a self-titled collection of rock oldies that included "Surfin' U.S.A." (#20, 1977). It became the first of several moderate hits, followed by remakes of Dion's "Runaround Sue" (#13, 1978) and "The Wanderer" (#49, 1978). He made his film debut as a child in the 1969 film Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice. Among his other film credits are the Walking Tall movies; he briefly had his own television series, Three for the Road (1975). The biggest hit of Garrett's career came in 1979, when "I Was Made for Dancin'" hit the Top 10 in both the U.S. and the U.K.

Having spent years in obscurity, Garrett resurfaced in 1999 and discussed the pitfalls of teen stardom and drug addiction on VH1's popular Behind the Music series. The show reunited him with his old friend Roland Winkler, who was paralyzed in a 1979 car crash in which Garrett was driving while intoxicated. Garrett also guested on The Crybaby, the 1999 album by arty sludge-metal kings the Melvins. He then formed a band called Godspeed and became friendly with shock rocker Marilyn Manson.

Marvin Gaye

Born Marvin Pentz Gay Jr., Apr. 2, 1939, Washington, DC; died Apr. 1, 1984, Los Angeles, CA
 1961—Soulful Mood (Tamla) 1963—That Stubborn Kinda Fellow 1964—Together (with Mary Wells) 1965—How Sweet It Is 1966—Greatest Hits; United (with Tammi Terrell) 1967—Greatest Hits, vol. 2 1968—You're All I Need to Get By; Marvin Gaye and His Girls (Terrell, Wells, Kim Weston) 1969—M.P.G. 1970—Superhits 1971—What's Going On 1972—Hits of Marvin Gaye; Trouble Man soundtrack 1973—Let's Get It On 1974—Anthology; Live 1976—The Best of Marvin Gaye 1978—Here, My Dear 1981—In Our Lifetime 1982—Midnight Love (Columbia) 1985—Dream of a Lifetime; Romantically Yours 1990—The Marvin Gaye Collection (Tamla/Motown) 1991—The Last Concert Tour (Giant) 1993—Seek and You Shall Find: More of the Best (1963-1981)

(Rhino) 1994—The Marvin Gaye Classic Collection (Motown); The Norman Whitfield Sessions 1995—The Master 1961-1984 1997—Vulnerable 1999—The Best of Marvin Gaye, the Millennium Collection, vol. 1: The '60s (MCA) 2000—The Best of Marvin Gaye, the Millennium Collection, vol. 2: The '70s.

With a career that exemplified the maturation of romantic black pop into a sophisticated form spanning social and sexual politics, Marvin Gaye was one of the most consistent and enigmatic of the Motown hitmakers. Certainly among the most gifted composers and singers, with a mellifluous tenor and a three-octave vocal range, he was also moody—avoiding TV, rarely performing live, and sometimes not showing up for the few concerts he did schedule. From "How Sweet It Is (To Be Loved by You)" to "Heard It Through the Grapevine," from "What's Going On" to "Sexual Healing," Gaye sang some of the most memorable black pop of the '60s, '70s, and '80s. He was nominated for eight Grammys before winning one in 1983. His life ended tragically one year later—and one day before his 45th birthday—when he was shot to death by his father, an Apostolic preacher, after a violent argument. In many respects, Gaye was, as his friend, the cowriter of "Sexual Healing," and author David Ritz titled his biography of him, a divided soul.

Gaye started singing at age three in church and was soon playing the organ as well. After a stint in the Air Force, he returned to DC and started singing in streetcorner doo-wop groups, including a top local group, the Rainbows. He formed his own group, the Marquees, in 1957. Under the auspices of supporter Bo Diddley, they cut "Wyatt Earp" for the Okeh label. In 1958 Harvey Fuqua heard the group and enlisted it to become the latest version of his ever-changing backing ensemble, the Moonglows (see entry). As such, Gaye was heard on "Mama Loochie" and other songs for the Chess label in 1959.

Marvin Gaye

By 1961, the group was touring widely. Detroit impresario Berry Gordy Jr. heard the group and quickly signed Gaye to his fledgling Motown organization later that year. Soon after, Gaye married Gordy's sister Anna. Gaye's first duties with the label were as a session drummer (he played on all the early hits by Smokey Robinson and the Miracles).

Gaye got his first hit with his fourth release, "Stubborn Kind of Fellow," in 1962. Over the next 10 years, working with nearly every producer at Motown (including the team of Holland-Dozier-Holland, Smokey Robinson, and Norman Whitfield), he enjoyed over 20 big hits. Although he specialized in midtempo ballads, he also had dance hits: "Hitch Hike" (#30, 1963), the 12-bar blues "Can I Get a Witness" (#22, 1963), which became a virtual anthem among the British mods, and "Baby Don't You Do It" (#27, 1964). But by and large he favored romantic, sometimes sensual ballads. He felt that his desire to move into a more mainstream, sophisticated style was hindered by Motown's emphasis on hits. For a performer as unenthusiastic about some of his material as Gaye later claimed to be, he gave almost every song he ever recorded an inspired reading. His Top 10 hits included "Pride and Joy" (#10, 1963), "I'll Be Doggone" (#8, 1965), "Ain't That Peculiar" (#8, 1965), and "How Sweet It Is to Be Loved by You" (#6, 1965). Among his 39 Top 40 singles of the period were also such unlikely hits as "Try I Baby" (#15, 1964, with background vocals by the Temptations), "You're a Wonderful One" (#15, 1964, with backing vocals by the Supremes), "One More Heartache" (#29, 1966), "Chained" (#32, 1968), and "You" (#34, 1968).

Beginning in 1964 Gaye was teamed with Mary Wells [see entry] for a couple of hits, "Once Upon a Time" (#19, 1964) and "What's the Matter With You" (#17, 1964), and with Kim Weston for "It Takes Two" (#17, 1967). But his greatest duets were with Tammi Terrell: "Ain't No Mountain High Enough" (#19, 1967), "Your Precious Love" (#5, 1967), "Ain't Nothing Like the Real Thing" (#8, 1968), and "You're All I Need to Get By" (#7, 1968), all penned and produced by Nicholas Ashford and Valene Simpson. In a 1967 concert Terrell collapsed into Gaye's arms onstage, the first sign of the brain tumor that killed her three years later. Although, contrary to popular belief, Gaye and Terrell were not romantically involved (she was involved with Temptation David Ruffin), he was deeply affected by her illness and death. Shortly thereafter Gaye had his biggest solo hit of the '60s with a dejected, paranoid reading of Norman Whitfield and Barrett Strong's "I Heard It Through the Grapevine" (#1, 1968), a song that had already been given a fiery treatment by another Motown act, Gladys Knight and the Pips.

The second, quite distinct phase of Gaye's career—and black popular music—began in 1971 with What's Going On. Along with Stevie Wonder, Gaye was one of the first Motown artists to gain complete artistic control of his records. What's Going On was a self-composed and -produced song cycle that could rightfully be called a concept album. Berry Gordy Jr., who still maintains that he didn't understand the record, was reluctant to release it. Gaye was vindicated when the album hit #6 and spun off three Top 10 singles: "What's Going On" (#2, 1971), "Inner City Blues (Make Me Wanna Holler)" (#9, 1971), and "Mercy Mercy Me (the Ecology)" (#4, 1971) were impassioned, timeless statements on Vietnam, civil rights, and the state of the world. "What's Going On" has been covered many times in the ensuing years, including a Top 20 version by Cyndi Lauper in 1986.

In 1972 Gaye scored the 20th Century-Fox film Trouble Man, and the dark, minimalist title track gave him yet another Top 10 hit (#7, 1973). By 1973, he had shifted his attention to pure eroticism with Let's Get It On, the title track of which went to #1. His late-1973 album with Diana Ross, Diana and Marvin, produced three fairly successful singles: "You're a Special Part of Me" (#12, 1973), "Don't Knock My Love" (#46, 1974), and "My Mistake (Was to Love You)" (#19, 1974), but this project was one of many things Gaye did with Motown that he felt were forced upon him.

Gaye's rocky marriage of 14 years to Anna Gordy Gaye was the subject of Here, My Dear as the '70s closed, with Gaye still reeling from the divorce settlement. He filed for bankruptcy, and his ex-wife later considered suing him for invasion of privacy over the content of Here, My Dear. (The album had been precipitated by court hearings in 1976, when a judge instructed Gaye to make good on overdue alimony payments by recording an album and giving his wife $600,000 in royalties.) With Gordy he fathered a son, Marvin Gaye III. He married his second wife, Janice, in 1977 and that year had a #1 hit, "Got to Give It Up, Pt. 1." They had two children: Nona, who has since become a recording artist in her own right, and Frankie. Janice was Gaye's muse, but he was also obsessed with her, and the relationship was tumultuous.

Under pressure from the Internal Revenue Service, Gaye moved to Europe to record his 1981 release, In Our Lifetime, which concentrated on his philosophies of love, art, and death. The next year, he left Motown for Columbia. His first album for the label, Midnight Love, sold 2 million copies and included the hit "Sexual Healing," which won a Grammy for Best Male R&B Vocal Performance. He sang live on the Grammy broadcast and, in 1983, in concert at Radio City Music Hall. During his Sexual Healing Tour, Gaye closed the show singing his hit in a silk robe, often stripping down to bikini underwear. Fan reaction was mixed. Also in 1983 he appeared in one of the more memorable segments of Motown's 25th-anniversary television special, obviously somewhat disoriented but riveting nonetheless. His a cappella version of "The Star-Spangled Banner," performed before the 1983 NBA All-Star game that year, became an instant bootlegged classic and is included on The Marvin Gaye Collection.

Gaye's comeback was one for the record books. But even with the recognition he longed for, Gaye was depressed, and his cocaine abuse was escalating, despite several attempts to clean up. He returned to the U.S. and moved into his parents' home—where he often quarreled with his father, with whom he'd been at odds since his teenage years. As Gaye later confessed to David Ritz, his internal life was marked by what Gaye viewed as an irreconcilable conflict between good (as represented by his strict religious upbringing) and evil (sex, drugs). In early 1984 Gaye reportedly threatened suicide several times and had become paranoid and irrational. Following a Sunday morning shouting match in his parents' home, Gaye's father shot him to death at point-blank range, he later claimed, in self-defense. Gaye's father was charged with and convicted of involuntary manslaughter. He was found to have a brain tumor, and was given a six-year suspended prison sentence.

After his death Motown and Columbia collaborated to produce Dream of a Lifetime and Romantically Yours, both based on unfinished recordings from the Sexual Healing sessions; among the tracks on the first album were the ribald, "Savage in the Sack" and "Masochistic Beauty," and some questioned whether Gaye had intended to release them at all. Since then, Gaye's work has been repackaged in a steady stream of new compilations. In addition, his work has been the subject of several tribute projects. In 1987 Gaye was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

Gloria Gaynor

Born Gloria Fowles, Sep. 7, 1949, Newark, NJ
 1975—Never Can Say Goodbye (MGM); Experience Gloria Gaynor 1976—I've Got You (Polydor) 1977—Glorious 1978—Gloria Gaynor's Park Avenue Sound 1979—Love Tracks; I Have a Right 1982—Gloria Gaynor (Atlantic) 1984—I Am What I Am (CBS) 1986—The Power (Stylus, U.K.) 1988—Gloria Gaynor's Greatest Hits (Polydor) 1990—Gloria Gaynor 90 (New Music, It.) 1992—Love Affair (Polydor) 1998—I Will Survive—The Anthology.

Gloria Gaynor is a singer who is best known for her anthemic late-'70s disco hit "I Will Survive." One of six children, she grew up listening to records by Nat "King" Cole and Sarah Vaughan. Following high school, she worked as an accountant but quit to join a band in Canada. She soon found herself back in Jersey, however, working day jobs until one night at a club a friend persuaded her to sing with the band. The group, the Soul Satisfiers, took her on tour for a year and a half. She then formed her own band and went to New York, where she signed to Columbia Records.

Gaynor's first single, "Honey Bee," was a disco hit in 1973, but Columbia soon lost interest. She signed to MGM, and Never Can Say Goodbye was a hit in early 1975. One of the first LPs specifically programmed for dancing, the title cut (an earlier hit for Isaac Hayes and then the Jackson 5) hit #9. She followed up with a less successful cover of another Motown hit, the Four Tops' "Reach Out I'll Be There," before a string of less popular singles. But five years later "I Will Survive" hit #1 on the pop chart (#4 R&B). Love Tracks (#4, 1979) went platinum.

Gaynor's last big hit was "I Am What I Am" (from the play La Cage Aux Folles), which hit #13 in the U.K. but made it only to #82 here. She became a born-again Christian in 1982 and put years of drug use and drinking behind her. Her 1997 autobiography is entitled I Will Survive. She continues to record and tour, she has performed before President Bill Clinton and Pope John Paul II and remains popular in Europe. In addition to recording import albums that mix neo-disco and gospel, she has released several American singles including 2000's Giorgio Moroder collaboration, "Last Night."

J. Geils Band

Formed 1967, Boston, MA
 Jerome Geils (b. Feb. 20, 1946, New York, NY), gtr.; Peter Wolf (b. Peter Blankfield, Mar. 7, 1946, Bronx, NY), voc.; Magic Dick (b. Dick Salwitz, May 13, 1945, New London, CT), harmonica; Danny Klein (b. May 13, 1946, New York), bass; Stephen Jo Bladd (b. July 13, 1942, Boston), drums.
 1968—(+ Seth Justman [b. Jan. 27, 1951, Washington, DC], kybds., voc.) 1971—The J. Geils Band (Atlantic) 1972—The Morning After; Full House 1973—Bloodshot; Ladies Invited 1974—Nightmares (and Other Tales From the Vinyl Jungle) 1975—Hot Line 1976—Blow Your Face Out 1977—Monkey Island 1978—Sanctuary (EMI America) 1980—Love Stinks 1981—Freeze-Frame 1982—Showtime! 1983—(- Wolf) 1984—You're Gettin' Even While I'm Gettin' Odd 1985—Flashback: Best of the J. Geils Band (EMI America) 1993—The J. Geils Band Anthology: Houseparty (Rhino) 1999—lineup: Geils; Wolf; Magic Dick; Klein; Justman; Sim Cain, drums. Peter Wolf solo: 1984—Lights Out (EMI America) 1987—Come As You Are 1990—Up to No Good (MCA) 1996—Long Line (Reprise) 1998—Fool's Parade (Mercury). Bluestime (Geils; Magic Dick; Michael "Mudcat" Ward, bass; Steve Ramsay, drums; Jerry Miller, gtr.): 1994—Bluestime (Rounder) 1996—Little Car Blues.

The J. Geils Band merged its collectors' dedication to blues, doo-wop, and R&B with enough pop know-how to keep the group contemporary. The band was named after guitarist J. (Jerome) Geils, but its lyricist and onstage focus was singer Peter Wolf. A high school dropout who learned to jive-talk on Bronx street corners, Wolf moved to Boston before he was 20 and earned a passable reputation as a painter before becoming a disc jockey on Boston's WBCN-FM, where he called himself Woofuh Goofuh. He joined the Hallucinations, which included drummer and fellow doo-wop collector Stephen Jo Bladd, and by 1967 the group was playing covers of R&B, blues, and '50s rock & roll, from John Lee Hooker to the Miracles. Meanwhile, Geils, bassist Klein, and harpist Magic Dick were working as an acoustic trio called the J. Geils Blues Band. After the Hallucinations broke up in 1967, Bladd and Wolf joined the J. Geils Band, which by then had gone electric.

While other fledgling bands were going psychedelic, this group acted like greasers, and its showmanship and taste in obscure covers earned it a following in New England. Justman, who later became the band's producer and composer, was an organist who had moved north from Atlantic City to attend Boston University; he joined in 1968.

The band toured almost constantly in the early '70s, while occasionally reaching the Top 40 with such songs as

"Looking for a Love" (#39, 1971), the reggae-style "Give It to Me" (#30, 1973, making its album, Bloodshot, gold), and "Must of Got Lost" (#12, 1974). In 1977 the Geils band briefly called itself Geils and released Monkey Island, the group's first self-produced effort. In 1979 Wolf's five-year marriage to actress Faye Dunaway ended in divorce.

After nine LPs with Atlantic, the band switched to EMI America in 1978 for Sanctuary, its first gold disc in five years. In 1980 the J. Geils Band conducted its most extensive tour ever (U.S., Japan, Europe) to support Love Stinks. The album introduced Justman's synthesizer work and went gold Freeze-Frame (#1, 1981), with the hits "Centerfold" (#1, 1981), "Freeze-Frame" (#4, 1982), and "Angel in Blue" (#40, 1982), was the band's best-selling album to date. One factor in the group's success was a series of catchy videos that captured Wolf's cool hipster charm ("Love Stinks," "Centerfold").

But tension had been brewing between the songwriting team of Wolf and Justman. When the group turned down material the singer had been writing with R&B legend Don Covay and Michael Jonzun of the Jonzun Crew, Wolf left—reluctantly—for a solo career in 1983. His Lights Out, coproduced by Jonzun, produced two Top 40 hits the following year, "Lights Out" (#12) and "I Need You Tonight" (#36), and the title track to 1987's Come As You Are reached #15. A third LP, in 1990, disappeared and Wolf along with it. He spent a few years focusing on painting, and began to play live again in 1993. In 1996 he released Long Line, which was followed by Fool's Parade a couple of years later. That critically acclaimed album was heavily influenced by '60s Memphis soul and sported liner notes by famed Elvis Presley biographer Peter Guralnick.

Meanwhile, Wolf's former band mates broke up after releasing one unsuccessful album with Justman on lead vocals, 1984's You're Gettin' Even While I'm Gettin' Odd. In 1993 Geils (now calling himself Jay) and Magic Dick formed Bluestime, and released a pair of straightforward blues albums in 1994 and 1996.

Surprisingly—since Wolf had left in such an acrimonious atmosphere—in the spring of 1999 the J. Geils Band announced a reunion tour. The original lineup (minus Stephen Jo Bladd, replaced by touring drummer Sim Cain) got back together, and in 2000 there was even talk of a new J. Geils Band studio album, though as of mid-2001 it had not come to pass.

Bob Geldof: See the Boomtown Rats

Generation X: See Billy Idol

Genesis

Formed 1966, Godalming, Eng.

Tony Banks (b. Mar. 27, 1950, East Hoathly, Eng.), kybds.;

Michael Rutherford (b. Oct. 2, 1950, Guildford, Eng.), gtr., bass, voc.; Peter Gabriel (b. Feb. 13, 1950, Woking, Eng.), voc.; Anthony Phillips (b. Dec. 1951, Putney, Eng.), gtr.; Chris Stewart, drums.

1968—(– Stewart; + John Silver, drums) 1969—From Genesis to Revelation (Decca, U.K.) (– Silver; + John Mayhew, drums) 1970—Trespass (Charisma, U.K.) (– Phillips; – Mayhew; + Phil Collins [b. Jan. 31, 1951, London], drums, voc.; + Steve Hackett [b. Feb. 12, 1950, London], gtr.) 1971—Nursery Cryme 1972—Fox Trot 1973—Genesis Live; Selling England by the Pound 1974—The Lamb Lies Down on Broadway (Atco) (– Gabriel) 1976—A Trick of the Tail; The Best of Genesis (Buddah) 1977—Wind & Wuthering (Atco); Seconds Out (Atlantic) (– Hackett) 1978—... And Then There Were Three ... 1980—Duke 1981—Abacab 1982—Three Sides Live 1983—Genesis 1986—Invisible Touch 1991—We Can't Dance 1992—Live/The Way We Walk, vol. 1: The Shorts 1993—Live/The Way We Walk, vol. 2: The Longs (– Collins; + Ray Wilson, voc.) 1997—Calling All Stations 1998—Genesis Archives Volume 1: 1967–1975 2000—Genesis Archives Volume 2: 1976–9.

Phil Collins solo: 1981—Face Value (Atlantic) 1982—Hello, I Must Be Going! 1985—No Jacket Required 1989—... But Seriously 1990—Serious Hits Live! 1993—Both Sides 1996—Dance Into the Light 1998—Hits 1999—A Hot Night in Paris; Tarzan: An Original Walt Disney Records Soundtrack (Universal/Walt Disney).

Tony Banks solo: 1979—A Curious Feeling (Charisma) 1983—The Fugitive 1983—The Wicked Lady (Atlantic) 1986—Quicksilver 1989—Bankstatement.

Mike Rutherford solo: 1979—Smallcreep's Day (Atlantic) 1982—Acting Very Strange.

Mike + the Mechanics, formed 1985: Rutherford, gtr., bass; Paul Carrack (b. Apr. 22, 1951, Sheffield, Eng.), voc., kybds.; Paul Young (b. June 17, 1947, Manchester, Eng., d. July 15, 2000, Altrincham, Eng.), voc.; Adrian Lee (b. Sep. 9, 1947, London), kybds.; Peter Van Hook (b. June 4, 1950, London), drums. 1985—Mike + the Mechanics (Atlantic) 1988—The Living Years 1991—Word of Mouth 1995—Beggars on a Beach of Gold.

Steve Hackett solo: 1976—Voyage of the Acolyte (Chrysalis) 1978—Please Don't Touch 1979—Spectral Mornings (Charisma, U.K.) 1980—Defector 1981—Cured (Virgin/Epic) 1997—Watcher of the Skies: Genesis Revisited (EMD/Angel).

Peter Gabriel solo: See entry.

The long career of Genesis breaks down neatly into two contrasting eras. For the first half Genesis was a cult band fronted by theatrical vocalist Peter Gabriel [see entry], playing majestic art rock that set the style for such American acts as Kansas and Styx—story songs set to complex, richly textured music with hints of classical pomp. After Gabriel left, drummer Phil Collins took over as lead singer—proving himself a more down-to-earth frontman—and the band's audience expanded exponentially, as Genesis streamlined its music into romantic pop songs and abandoned costume drama for laser lightshows. By the mid-'80s, Genesis was one of the world's most popular bands.

After Gabriel and Tony Banks played together in a band called Garden Wall, they formed a "songwriter's collective" with Mike Rutherford and Anthony Phillips while all four were students at Charterhouse, an exclusive British secondary school. In late 1967 British record mogul Jonathan King suggested the name Genesis and got the group a contract that resulted in the poppish 13-song From Genesis to Revelation (1968), which was not released in the U.S. until 1974.

Upon graduating, the four members lived together in an English country cottage and rehearsed for several months before playing their first gig in September 1969. They developed an elaborate stage show—Gabriel had a series of costume changes, including a bat and a flower—and with the adroit drumming of Phil Collins (formerly with Flaming Youth), their songs grew into extended suites on Nursery Cryme, Foxtrot, and Selling England by the Pound. They gained a large following in England and a dedicated cult in the United States. In 1974 Genesis' theatricality peaked with a two-LP set and attendant live show, The Lamb Lies Down on Broadway, in which Gabriel played Rael, who suffered various metamorphoses in a surreal Manhattan.

Gabriel left Genesis after Lamb for a solo career, and the group took 18 months to adjust. It auditioned over 400 singers before deciding Collins could take over, on tour, the trio employed a second drummer so that Collins could roam the stage. Genesis dispensed with costumes and continued to perform older material, which was credited to the whole group. A Trick of the Tail and Wind & Wuthering expanded the band's cult (the latter included Genesis' first hit single, "Your Own Special Way" [#62, 1977]), and... And Then There Were Three... with somewhat shorter songs, became its first gold album in 1978 (the LP later went platinum).

Genesis began to score U.S. Top 40 hit singles with "Follow You, Follow Me" (#23, 1978) from... And Then There Were Three... and "Misunderstanding" (#14, 1980) from Duke, in which the trio turned their narrative skills to love songs. For Abacab, Genesis incorporated some new-wave concision: the album (#7, 1981) sold 2 million copies, and the title song (#26, 1981) and "No Reply at All" (#29, 1981) were hits. The latter featured the Earth, Wind & Fire horn section, which also appeared on Collins' 2-million-selling solo debut, Face Value (#7, 1981). That album yielded the Top 20 hits "I Missed Again" (#19, 1981) and "In the Air Tonight" (#19, 1981).

Collins' second solo album, Hello, I Must Be Going! (1982), was a Top 10 hit and featured a cover of the Supremes' "You Can't Hurry Love" (#10, 1982). The group's Genesis (#9, 1983) spawned "That's All" (#6, 1983) and "Illegal Alien" (#44, 1984). In 1984 Collins produced ex-Earth, Wind & Fire vocalist Philip Bailey's Chinese Wall album and dueted with him on the hit single "Easy Lover" (#2, 1984). The next year Collins earned an Oscar nomination and won a Grammy for his movie love theme "Against All Odds (Take a Look at Me Now)" (#1, 1984), and hit #1 with "Separate Lives" (a duet with Marlyn Martin) from the film White Nights. His own 1985 album No Jacket Required hit #1 faster than Michael Jackson's Thriller had, with such hits as "One More Night" (#1, 1985), "Sussudio" (#1, 1985), "Don't Lose My Number" (#4, 1985), and "Take Me Home" (#7, 1986). For the July 13, 1985, Live Aid concert, Collins performed on his own in London that morning, then flew via the Concorde to the Philadelphia show to perform there solo later that day, as well as play drums in the Led Zeppelin reunion with Robert Plant and Jimmy Page. Also in 1985, Mike Rutherford launched Mike + the Mechanics, whose debut album (#26, 1985) produced hit singles with "Silent Running" (#6, 1985) and "All I Need Is a Miracle" (#5, 1986). The Living Years (#13, 1988) yielded a #1 hit in the title track, which was inspired by the death of Rutherford's father.

Genesis returned to the charts with Invisible Touch (#3, 1986), containing the title track (#1, 1986), "Throwing It All Away" (#4, 1986), and "Land of Confusion" (#4, 1986). The viciously satirical video for the latter featured England's Spitting Image puppets of Ronald Reagan, Margaret Thatcher, and others. "Tonight, Tonight, Tonight" (#3, 1987) was featured in TV commercials for Michelob beer, which also sponsored Genesis' 1987 tour (the Michelob campaign, which also used Eric Clapton's "After Midnight," was later satirized in Neil Young's "This Note's for You" video).

In 1988 Collins, who had acted professionally as a child, starred in the movie Buster (he'd made his big-screen debut as an extra in the Beatles' A Hard Day's Night), the soundtrack produced #1 hits for Collins in a cover of the Mindbenders' 1966 hit "Groovy Kind of Love" and "Two Hearts," cowritten with Lamont Dozier of the famed Holland-Dozier-Holland Motown team. His But Seriously (#1, 1989), an attempt to confront social issues, certified Collins as an "adult contemporary" superstar, with "Another Day in Paradise" (#1, 1989), "I Wish It Would Rain Down" (#3, 1990), "Do You Remember?" (#4, 1990), and "Something Happened on the Way to Heaven" (#4, 1990).

The hits continued for Genesis into the '90s, as We Can't Dance (#4, 1991) produced "No Son of Mine" (#12, 1991), "Hold On My Heart" (#12, 1992), and "I Can't Dance" (#7, 1992). The album was Collins' last studio effort with the group. He announced his departure in 1996, the same year his album Dance Into the Light was released. It hit #23, but failed to produce any Top 40 singles. Collins diversified in 1999, recording a live album of greatest hits arranged for a 20-piece big band and lending his vocal and songwriting skills to the soundtrack for Disney's animated Tarzan. (He won an Oscar for Best Original Song, for "You'll Be in My Heart.") Genesis continued, returning to the studio in 1997 with a new singer, 28-year-old Scotsman Ray Wilson, formerly of Stiltskin. Calling All Stations (#54, 1997) was touted as a slight return to the band's progressive-rock roots but lacked the commercial appeal of the Collins-era catalogue.

Gentle Giant

Formed 1970, England

Derek Shulman (b. Feb. 2, 1947, Glasgow, Scot.), voc., sax; Ray Shulman (b. Dec. 8, 1949, Glasgow), voc., bass, violin, perc.; Phil Shulman (b. Aug. 27, 1937, Glasgow), sax; Kerry Minnear

(b. Apr. 2, 1948), voc., kybds.; Gary Green (b. Nov. 20, 1950), voc., gtr.; Martin Smith, drums; Malcolm Mortimer, drums. 1970—Gentle Giant (Vertigo) 1971—(– Mortimer) Acquiring the Taste 1972—(– Smith; + John Weathers, drums, voc.) Three Friends (Columbia) 1973—Octopus (– P. Shulman); In a Glass House (WWA, U.K.) 1974—The Power and the Glory (Capitol) 1975—Free Hand; A Giant Step (Vertigo, U.K.) 1976—Interview (Capitol); Playing the Fool 1977—The Missing Piece; Pretentious 1978—Giant for a Day 1980—Civilian (Columbia).

Merging medieval madrigals and Béla Bartók's dissonances with rock dynamics, Gentle Giant was one of the most dauntingly complex of '70s British progressive-rock bands. It formed from the remains of an obscure late-'60s British pop band called Simon Dupree and the Big Sound, which included all three Shulman brothers (Derek was Simon Dupree). The Big Sound had one U.K. Top 10 hit, "Kites," in 1967.

John Weathers had been with Graham Bond and the Grease Band before joining the Shulmans; Gary Green had played with blues and jazz bands, and Kerry Minnear had studied at the Royal Academy of Music. With Gentle Giant the Shulmans moved in the direction of King Crimson and Jethro Tull, though they often used dissonant counterpoint far more intricately than either of them. At first they had only a small European cult. The political concept album The Power and the Glory finally broke them in America. The Missing Piece flirted with shorter, harder-rocking song structures, and the group simplified its music to little commercial avail, in the late '70s. For a short time the group was managed by radio consultant Lee Abrams, who produced its final LP, Civilian.

After the band's breakup, Derek Shulman moved to New York and became a powerful A&R executive with PolyGram Records (he signed Bon Jovi). Ray Shulman produced records by the Sugarcubes, the Sundays, and Ian McCulloch; in 2000 he was making music for computer games, while brother Phil was running a gift shop.

Bobbie Gentry

Born Roberta Lee Streeter, July 27, 1944, Chickasaw County, MS

1967—Ode to Billy Joe (Capitol) 1968—The Delta Sweete; Bobby Gentry and Glen Campbell (with Glen Campbell) 1969—Touch 'Em with Love; Bobbie Gentry's Greatest 1970—Fancy 1990—Greatest Hits (Curb).

Bobbie Gentry came to national prominence in 1967 with the first—and biggest—hit of her career, the enigmatic ballad "Ode to Billy Joe." From childhood, Gentry was determined to be a music star, and she wrote her first song at age seven on a piano. By her teens she had moved to California, where she attended UCLA (majoring in philosophy) and the L.A. Conservatory of Music. She worked as a secretary, occasionally performing in clubs at night, and then briefly as a Las Vegas showgirl before cutting her debut disc in 1967. "Ode to Billy Joe" hit #1, as did the album of the same name that year. A triple Grammy winner, "Ode" went on to sell 3 million copies internationally. The ballad provided the groundwork for a movie of the same title in 1976.

Gentry's later career never matched the success of her debut, although she was a star in England and hosted a British TV series, The Bobbie Gentry Show, in the early '70s. In America her late-'60s releases generally stalled in the middle rungs of the pop chart, except for a 1970 duet with Glen Campbell on the Everly Brothers' "All I Have to Do Is Dream" (#27). By the mid-'70s she was a staple on the Vegas-Reno circuit. She was briefly married to country singer Jim Stafford at the end of the decade. Gentry has since retired from music.

The Gentrys

Formed 1963, Memphis, TN

Larry Raspberry, gtr., voc.; Larry Wall, drums; Jimmy Johnson, trumpet, organ; Bobby Fisher, sax, gtr., piano; Pat Neal, bass; Bruce Bowles, voc.; Jimmy Hart, voc.

1965—Keep On Dancing (MGM) 1970—The Gentrys (Sun).

The Gentrys were a Memphis garage band whose biggest hit was 1965's "Keep On Dancing." They formed in 1963 to play sock hops and were soon winning local talent contests and battles of the bands. In 1964, after appearing on Ted Mack's Original Amateur Hour, they were signed to the local Youngstown label, and their first release, "Sometimes," was a regional hit. Their followup, "Keep On Dancing" (allegedly cut in an amazing 35 minutes), was leased to MGM and hit #4 in October 1965. Their 1966 releases, "Spread It On Thick" and "Everyday I Have to Cry," failed to crack the Top 40.

The group broke up in 1970, but Hart took over singing lead, and with a new group of musicians recorded three minor hits: "Why Should I Cry," "Cinnamon Girl," and "Wild World" on Sun. In the early '70s the Bay City Rollers revived "Keep On Dancing."

In 1973 Gentrys leader Larry Raspberry started Alamo, which recorded one album, then the Highsteppers, who recorded for Stax. He continues to perform and as of 2000 he was still leading a version of the Gentrys. Wall worked in record promotion. Jimmy Hart is a well-known professional wrestling manager for, among others, Hulk Hogan. With the help of late-period Gentry John Maguire and Hogan's wife, the pair wrote and performed the Hulkster's 1995 album American Made. Hart occasionally performs solo, as well.

Georgia Satellites

Formed 1979 (as Keith and the Satellites); lineup solidified in 1983, Atlanta, GA

Dan Baird (b. Dec. 12, 1953, CA), gtr., voc.; Mauro Megellan, drums; Rick Price (b. Aug. 15, 1951, Atlanta), bass; Rick Richards (b. Mar. 30, 1954, Jasper, GA), gtr.

1986—The Georgia Satellites (Elektra) 1988—Open All Night

1989—In the Land of Salvation and Sin 1991—(group disbands) 1993—(group re-forms: Richards, Price, + Joey Huffman, kybds.; + Billy Pitts, drums) Let It Rock 1997—Shaken Not Stirred (3NM).

Dan Baird solo: 1992—Love Songs for the Hearing Impaired (American) 1996—Buffalo Nickel.

The Yayhoos: Baird; Keith Christopher, voc., bass; Eric "Roscoe" Ambel (b. Aug. 20, 1957, Aurora, IL), gr., voc.; Terry Anderson, drums, voc.

2001—Fear Not the Obvious (Bloodshot).

A latter-day boogie band, the Georgia Satellites proffered bare-bones, full-tilt rock & roll, served up with a silly grin and lust in their hearts. They had a Top 10 single, "Keep Your Hands to Yourself" (#2, 1986), from their eponymous debut (#5, 1986).

Formed in Atlanta in 1979 as Keith and the Satellites with Richards and Baird along with Keith Christopher from local new-wave unit the Brains ("Money Changes Everything"), they honed their sound (called "hick AC/DC" by some record execs) during a residency at Hedgen's Rock 'n' Roll Tavern. In 1983, now known as the Satellites (Christopher left early on), the band shopped around a six-song demo with no success and called it quits the following year.

Making Waves, a British indie label, heard the tape and offered to finance a U.K. tour, releasing the tape as Keeping the Faith (1985). Richards and Baird recruited two other former Brains, Magellan and Price, and took the label up on its offer. The tour fell through, but the band persevered, moving to Nashville where it was discovered by Elektra.

Unable to match their debut single and album's success (a cover of "Hippy Hippy Shake" included on the soundtrack of Cocktail [1988] hit #45), the Georgia Satellites split again in 1991. After the breakup, Price played on Paul Westerberg's 14 Songs (1993); Richards joined Izzy Stradlin's post-Guns n' Roses band, the Ju Ju Hounds; Baird released two solo albums, Love Songs for the Hearing Impaired (1992) and Buffalo Nickel (1996) and performed with the Yayhoos.

After a 1992 reunion show, Richards and Price decided to give the Satellites another try, releasing Let It Rock in 1993 and Shaken Not Stirred in 1997.

Gerry and the Pacemakers

Formed 1959, Liverpool, Eng.

Gerry Marsden (b. Sep. 24, 1942, Liverpool), voc., gr.; Les Maguire (b. Dec. 27, 1941, Wallasey, Eng.), piano; John Chadwick (b. May 11, 1943, Liverpool), bass; Freddie Marsden (b. Oct. 23, 1940, Liverpool), drums.

1964—Don't Let the Sun Catch You Crying (Laurie); Gerry and the Pacemakers' Second Album 1965—Ferry Cross the Mersey (United Artists) 1991—The Best of Gerry and the Pacemakers, the Definitive Collection (EMI America).

Gerry and the Pacemakers were on the pop end of Liverpool's mid-'60s Merseybeat trend. They built up a following in Liverpool clubs like the Cavern and in the Hamburg, Germany, clubs. In 1962 they became the second group—after the Beatles—to be signed by manager Brian Epstein. Produced by George Martin, their first three records hit #1 on the British chart: "How Do You Do It?" (which the Beatles had also recorded), "I Like It," and "You'll Never Walk Alone." "How Do You Do It?" was one of their biggest U.S. hits (#9) in 1964. They scored Top 10 successes in the U.S. that year with the ballad "Don't Let the Sun Catch You Crying" and in 1965 with "Ferry Cross the Mersey." That year they starred in a movie of the same name, which featured nine original songs by leader Gerry Marsden.

By 1966, however, their releases ceased having much impact on U.S. charts, and the group disbanded a year later. Marsden began a marginally successful cabaret career, scoring minor U.K. hits like "Please Let Them Be" and "Gilbert Green" and acting on stage and TV, where he hosted a children's show, The Sooty and Sweep Show, for several years. In 1973 he re-formed the Pacemakers for a nostalgia tour of America, and ever since has performed all over the world.

In 1985 Marsden sang lead on a new version of "You'll Never Walk Alone," credited to "Crowd," intended to raise money for victims of a fire at a British soccer stadium. It went to #1, making him the only British artist ever to top the chart twice with different renditions of the same song. He nearly repeated that feat four years later with a new "Ferry Cross the Mersey" that included Paul McCartney and Frankie Goes to Hollywood's Holly Johnson. Once again the cause was soccer related: Proceeds from the record benefited families of fans who'd been crushed to death by unruly crowds during a match. It, too, made #1, seven spots higher than the original 1964 version.

The Geto Boys

Formed 1986 (as the Ghetto Boys), Houston, TX

Scarface (b. Brad Jordan, Nov. 9, 1969, Houston), voc.; Willie D (b. William Dennis, Nov. 1, 1966, Houston), voc.; Bushwick Bill (b. Richard Stephen Shaw, Dec. 8, 1966, Kingston, Jam.), voc.; Ready Red (b. Collins Leysath), DJ.

1988—Making Trouble (Rap-a-Lot) 1989—Grip It! On That Other Level 1990—Geto Boys (Def American) 1991—We Can't Be Stopped (Rap-a-Lot) 1992—(– Willie D; + Big Mike [b. Mike Barnett, Sep. 27, 1971, New Orleans, LA], voc.) Uncut Dope 1993—Till Death Do Us Part 1996—The Resurrection 1998—Da Good Da Bad & Da Ugly.

Scarface solo: 1991—Mr. Scarface Is Back (Rap-a-Lot) 1993—The World Is Yours 1994—Diary 1997—The Untouchable 1998—My Homies.

Bushwick Bill solo: 1992—Little Big Man (Rap-a-Lot).

Willie D solo: 1992—I'm Goin' Out Lika Soldier (Rap-a-Lot)

1989—Controversy 1994—Play Wicha Mama.

Willie D with Sho: 1993—Trouble Man (Wise Up/Wrap).

The Geto Boys ignited a firestorm of controversy with their first major-label release, a gangsta rap album containing an unprecedented level of explicit violence and pathology

When Geffen, then-distributor of Def American releases, refused to handle the record (and its lyrics of murder and necrophilia), it started a fierce debate within the music industry about whether record companies should refuse certain albums.

At 22, James "Li'l J" Smith brought together the members of the Geto Boys for his new label, Rap-a-Lot Records. Smith wanted to kick off his label with a group that would represent his old neighborhood, the Fifth Ward, a violent Houston, Texas, ghetto. Smith hand-picked the members: Willie D, a Fifth Ward native who once served time for robbing a Texaco station; Scarface, a multi-instrumentalist (piano, violin, guitar, drums) raised in a more middle-class section of Houston on as much rock & roll (Led Zeppelin, Blue Öyster Cult) as R&B; and Bushwick Bill, a four-foot-six dwarf born on the island of Jamaica and raised in the Bushwick section of Brooklyn, New York.

After two albums for Rap-a-Lot, the group signed with Def American (which later became American Recordings), then the label of death-metal band Slayer and shock comic Andrew "Dice" Clay. Geffen's refusal to distribute the Geto Boys' album led to accusations that the company operated under a double standard, profiting from the homophobia, racism, and misogyny of white artists such as "Dice" Clay, while refusing to release similar material by an African-American rap group. Virgin agreed to distribute the album, but the Geto Boys, disgruntled by the ordeal, returned to Rap-a-Lot. Their postcontroversy album, We Can't Be Stopped, shot to #24, higher than any previous release. Its single, "Mind Playing Tricks on Me" (#23 pop, #10 R&B, 1991), was based on the childhood feelings of Scarface, a suicide-prone manic-depressive who spent two of his teenage years in a mental ward.

Outside of the Geto Boys, the members are not friends. Indeed, each of the original rappers has done his own albums, and Willie D left the group permanently in 1992. Still, that same year the Geto Boys returned with Uncut Dope, with Big Mike Barnett replacing Willie D. In 1993 Till Death Do Us Part reached #1 on the R&B chart.

The Geto Boys have had several brushes with tragedy. In May 1991 Bushwick Bill lost his eye when his 17-year-old girlfriend shot him; drunk and depressed, he had talked her into shooting him by threatening to kill the couple's child if she didn't. In January 1993 Scarface was wounded and a friend of his killed by an off-duty cop during a gang-related fight outside a Shreveport, Louisiana, Waffle House. And in 1997, Bushwick Bill was indicted after allegedly trying to shoot his own brother, charges were later dropped when the brother refused to cooperate with prosecutors.

With 1996's The Resurrection (#6 pop, #1 R&B), the original trio unexpectedly reunited to demonstrate its lasting drawing power. The album attracted the usual controversy by mixing political themes with gangsta imagery, while viciously firing back at such vocal critics as Republican Senator Bob Dole. There was also critical acclaim for the Geto Boys' growing musical sophistication, incorporating G-Funk and Parliament-style grooves. The album included a new version of War's "The World Is a Ghetto" (#82 pop, #37 R&B). The trio's popularity continued on 1998's Da Good Da Bad & Da Ugly (#26 pop, #5 R&B). In 2000 Def Jam Records created a new label imprint to be headed by Scarface and called Def Jam South.

Andy Gibb

Born Mar. 5, 1958, Brisbane, Austral.; died Mar. 10, 1988, Oxford, Eng.

1977—Flowing Rivers (RSO) 1978—Shadow Dancing
1980—Andy Gibb's Greatest Hits; After Dark.

Pop singer Andy Gibb was the younger brother of the Bee Gees (who often contributed songs, harmonies, and production to his albums). He began a successful solo career in the late '70s with three #1 hits: "I Just Want to Be Your Everything" and "(Love Is) Thicker Than Water" in 1977, and "Shadow Dancing" in 1978.

By the time the elder Gibb brothers were getting their international career rolling in the late '60s, young Andy was already playing in amateur bands of his own. Following his brothers, he first established himself in Australia in the mid-'70s with tours and singles like "Words and Music." He then signed with Bee Gees manager Robert Stigwood, on whose RSO Records his first album was recorded under the tutelage of brother Barry. Brother Maurice supervised the platinum Shadow Dancing, which in addition to the title cut contained the hits "An Everlasting Love" (#5, 1978) and "(Our Love) Don't Throw It All Away."

Three Top 20 hits followed in 1980, but Gibb's sales began to slack off the following year. His personal life, too, took a nosedive. In 1982 he was fired as host of the popular syndicated TV show Solid Gold after one year and was let go from Broadway's Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat for missing performances. By 1985, Gibb was at the Betty Ford Clinic undergoing treatment for substance abuse, and two years later he filed for bankruptcy. The singer's fortunes began to look up somewhat when he signed with Island Records in January 1988, but while recording the album in England, Gibb died suddenly of myocarditis, inflammation of the heart.

Debbie Gibson

Born Deborah Gibson, Aug. 31, 1970, Merrick, NY

1987—Out of the Blue (Atlantic) 1989—Electric Youth
1990—Anything Is Possible 1993—Body Mind Soul 1995—Think With Your Heart (SBK/EMI) 1996—Greatest Hits (Atlantic)
1997—Deborah (Espiritu) 2001—M.Y.O.B. (Golden Egg).

In 1987 fresh-faced teenager Debbie Gibson emerged from her suburban Long Island home studio with a wholesome image and a knack for writing innocent poppy tunes young music fans could relate to. Having begun piano studies as a toddler, Gibson won a local songwriting contest at 12 and was signed to Atlantic Records four years later on the basis of her demo. Although categorized as bubblegum, the singles "Only in My Dreams" and "Shake Your Love"—both from Out of the Blue, which went to #7—boasted hooks that suggested a savvy songwriter in the making. Both songs peaked at #4 in 1987, and were followed into the Top 10 by the album's title track (#3) and the #1 ballad "Foolish Beat" in 1988, which put Gibson into the Guinness Book of World Records as the youngest person to ever write, record, and produce a #1 single.

Electric Youth did well initially, reaching #1 and charting two Top 40 singles (the title track at #11, "No More Rhyme" at #17) but by then, even fans seemed to have tired of Gibson the goody-goody wunderkind, who lived at home, was managed by her mom, and preached against sexual promiscuity and drug use. (In 1989 rock satirist Mojo Nixon released "Debbie Gibson Is Pregnant With My Two-Headed Love Child.") Anything Is Possible (#41, 1990) went gold but didn't make the Top 40. After a sabbatical, during which she appeared as Eponine in the Broadway company of Les Misérables, Gibson attempted a comeback with Body Mind Soul. The 1993 LP tried to present the 22-year-old singer in a more mature, even sensual light. The video for the single "Losin' Myself" (#86, 1993) featured her in slinky lingerie, while the song "Shock Your Mama" slyly poked fun at her squeaky clean image. The album only reached #109, though, and the following year Gibson lost her record contract.

In July 1993 she played Sandy in the London stage production of Grease. In 1995 she surprised rock fans by dueting with the punk band the Circle Jerks on a recorded cover of the Soft Boys' "I Wanna Destroy You"; she even appeared with the band at New York's famed CBGB to perform the song. The same year, she went to another musical extreme with her EMI album, Think With Your Heart, which featured mostly ballads recorded live with a 44-piece orchestra.

When EMI folded, the budding entrepreneur—now known as Deborah—formed her own label, Espiritu, and returned to dance music with the 1997 album Deborah, which included a remake of "Only in My Dreams." But musical theater proved to be the best match for Gibson's talents, and throughout the 1990s she went on to appear as Rizzo in a U.S. national tour of Grease, the title roles in local productions of Funny Girl and Gypsy, Belle in Broadway's Beauty and the Beast, and the Narrator in a U.S. national tour of Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat. She also attempted to embark on a film career, with two independently made comedies, Wedding Band and My Girlfriend's Boyfriend, which eventually were released on video. Gibson also had a sitcom pilot in development with Norman Lear in 2000; she would star as Maggie Bloom, an aspiring Broadway actress. The same year, she released a dance single, "What You Want," performed live at clubs and fairs, and began recording another album.

Jerry Gilmer and the Fireballs: See the Fireballs

Jimmie Dale Gilmore

Born May 6, 1945, Amarillo, TX

1988—Fair and Square (HighTone) 1989—Jimmie Dale Gilmore 1991—After Awhile (American Explorer/Elektra/Nonesuch) 1993—Spinning Around the Sun (Elektra) 1996—Braver Newer World 2000—One Endless Night (Windcharger Music/Rounder).

The Flatlanders, formed 1972: Gilmore; Joe Ely (b. Feb. 9, 1947, Amarillo, TX), voc., harmonica, Dobro, gtr.; Butch Hancock (b. July 12, 1945, Lubbock, TX), voc., gtr.; Tommy Hancock, fiddle; Syl Rice, string bass; Tony Pearson, mandolin; Steve Wesson, musical saw.

1972—More a Legend Than a Band (Plantation).

With Butch Hancock: 1993—Two Roads (Caroline).

Texas singer/songwriter Jimmie Dale Gilmore's distinctive high, plaintive voice, intriguing, esoteric lyrics, and traditional country & western sound have put him in the forefront of a looseknit group of mavencks who play a roots-based music that's been dubbed "Western beat." Having recorded his first album in 1972 as a member of Lubbock, Texas, country group, the Flatlanders, Gilmore has continuously collaborated over the years with ex-band mates Butch Hancock and Joe Ely. Several of Gilmore's songs, including "Dallas" and "Tonight I Think I'm Gonna Go Downtown," have been covered by such artists as David Byrne, 10,000 Maniacs, and Nanci Griffith.

Gilmore, who was named after "Singing Brakeman" Jimmie Rodgers, took up guitar as a teen, after first playing fiddle and trombone. Developing a repertoire of traditional country songs, he began providing music at poker parties in his hometown of Lubbock. His first demo recordings were financed in 1965 by Buddy Holly's father. By then a budding songwriter, Gilmore began forming bands: first, the T Nickel House Band, which included Joe Ely on bass, then the Hub City Movers.

Jimmie Dale Gilmore

After a stint living in Austin, Gilmore returned to Lubbock in 1972 and formed the Flatlanders with Ely, Hancock, mandolinist Tony Pearson, fiddler Tommy Hancock, and musical-saw player Steve Wesson. That March the group was invited to record an album in Nashville for a small label, which released the recordings only on 8-track. The Flatlanders fizzled soon after (though there have been occasional reunions ever since), and Gilmore, who'd been a philosophy student at Texas Tech, moved to Denver and joined a spiritual sect headed by Indian guru Maharaji Ji. After five years, Gilmore left the group and returned to Austin in 1980, where he began performing his own material, as well as songs written by Butch Hancock, with whom he frequently played. After eight years, he recorded his first solo album, 1988's Fair and Square, for the independent label HighTone. Jimmie Dale Gilmore followed the next year. He was "discovered" playing at a 1989 folk festival in Cambridge, England by 10,000 Maniacs' singer/songwriter Natalie Merchant and Elektra executive David Bither, who signed Gilmore to the label. Both 1991's After Awhile and Spinning Around the Sun (#62 C&W, 1993) earned Gilmore rave reviews, including twice being chosen Best Country Artist in ROLLING STONE's annual critics poll. In 1994 Gilmore recorded two songs with Mudhoney for a Sub Pop single and duetted with Willie Nelson on the benefit album, Red, Hot and Country. Teaming with producer T Bone Burnett for 1996's Braver Newer World, Gilmore simultaneously experimented with a more atmospheric and rock & roll sound somewhat reminiscent of a futuristic Roy Orbison album.

In 1998 the Flatlanders reunited to record "South Wind of Summer" for the soundtrack to The Horse Whisperer. It was their first studio collaboration in 26 years, and sparked a desire among Gilmore, Ely, and Butch Hancock to write more songs together for a possible new album. The group embarked on a national tour in the spring of 2000, which coincided with the release of a new Gilmore solo set, One Endless Night. The album marked a return to folkier material for the singer, being composed mostly of covers by his favorite songwriters (including Butch Hancock, John Hiatt, Townes Van Zandt, and Jerry Garcia).

Gipsy Kings

Formed 1976 as Los Reyes, Arles, Fr.
 Nicolas Reyes, voc., gtr.; Andre Reyes, gtr.; Tonino Baliardo, gtr.; Maurice Victor "Diego" Baliardo, gtr.; Jacques "Paco" Baliardo, gtr.; Djeloul "Chico" Bouchikhi, gtr.
 1982—Allegria (CBS France) 1983—Luna de Fuego

1988—Gipsy Kings (Elektra) 1989—Mosaique 1991—(- Bouchikhi; + Francois "Canut" Reyes, gtr.) Este Mundo
 1992—Live 1993—(+ Patchai Reyes, voc., gtr.) Love & Liberté (Nonesuch) 1995—The Best of the Gipsy Kings
 1996—Tierra Gitana 1997—(+ Georges "Baule" Reyes, gtr., voc.) Compas 1998—Cantos de Amor 2000—Volare! The Very Best of the Gipsy Kings.

Among the more unlikely sounds to emanate from the airwaves in 1989 were the frenetic flamenco chords and gitane shouts of the Gipsy Kings. One of the first real manifestations of the new interest in world music, this group comprised primarily of actual French Gypsies caused a brief sensation blending exotica with familiar European MOR like "Volare" and "My Way."

The Gipsy Kings grew out of the family group, Los Reyes, led by father José—a renowned flamenco singer—with sons Andre and Nicolas and brother-in-law, Bouchikhi. When José Reyes died, flamenco guitar virtuoso Tonino Baliardo joined, and the group changed its name to the Gipsy Kings. Sticking to a traditional Gypsy sound on early recordings, the acoustic-based unit gained attention only after modernizing its sound at the behest of producer and manager Claude Martinez. (The group continued to sing in gitane, a dialect mixing French, Spanish, and Catalan.)

Their 1988 album Gipsy Kings became a hit throughout Europe and yielded two hit singles, "Bamboleo" and "Djobi Djoba." After its U.S. release, Gipsy Kings (#57)—helped by the fern bar ubiquity of "Bamboleo"—stayed 42 weeks on the Billboard chart, going platinum. (The Gipsy Kings have sold more than 13 million records worldwide.) While neither Mosaique (#95, 1989) nor Este Mundo (#120, 1991) achieved the American recognition of their predecessor, the Gipsy

Gipsy Kings: Paco Baliardo, Andre Reyes, Diego Baliardo, Canut Reyes, Nicolas Reyes, Tonino Baliardo

Kings remain a popular international live act and have maintained a strong presence on the world music charts. Tierra Gitana, released in 1996, peaked at #143 on the pop chart, but 1997's Compas fared better, hitting #97. The group has survived numerous lineup changes over the years, with various Reyeses and Bahardos leaving and coming on board between albums and tours. Djeloul "Chico" Bouchikhi left the Gypsy Kings in 1991 and founded a new group, Chico and the Gypsies, shortly thereafter.

Philip Glass

Born Jan. 31, 1937, Baltimore, MD
 1972—Music With Changing Parts (Chatham Square); Solo Music (Shandar) 1973—Music in Similar Motion/Music in Fifths (Chatham Square) 1974—Music in Twelve Parts—Parts 1 & 2 (Elektra); Strung Out for Amplified Violin (Music Observations) 1975—Mad Rush/Dressed Like an Egg (Soho News) 1976—Dance Nos. 1 & 5 (Tomato) 1979—Einstein on the Beach (CBS Masterworks) 1981—Soho News (Soho News) 1982—Glassworks (Columbia) 1983—The Photographer (CBS Masterworks); Koyaanisqatsi (Antilles/Island) 1984—Satyagraha (CBS Masterworks) 1985—Mishima (Nonesuch) 1986—Songs From Liquid Days (Columbia); The Olympian 1987—DancePieces (CBS Masterworks); Akhnaton (Atlantic) 1988—Powaqqatsi (Nonesuch) 1989—1000 Airplanes on the Roof (Virgin); Solo Piano (Columbia); Mad Rush/Metamorphosis/Wichita/Vortex/Sutra (CBS Masterworks); The Thin Blue Line; Music in Twelve Parts (Virgin) 1990—Passages (Private) 1992—Music From the Screens (Point) 1993—"Low" Symphony; Violin Concerto (Deutsche Grammophon, Ger.); Itaipu/the Canyon (Sony Classical); Hydrogen Jukebox (Nonesuch); Glass Organ Works (Catalyst); Essential Philip Glass (Sony Masterworks); Anima Mundi (Nonesuch) 1994—Two Pages/Contrary Motion/Music in Fifths/Music in Similar Motion 1995—Kronos Quartet Performs Philip Glass; La Belle et la Bête 1996—The Secret Agent 1997—"Heroes" Symphony (Point); Kundun (Nonesuch) 1999—The CIVIL warS; Dracula 2000—Symphony No. 3 2001—Symphony No. 5 (Choral) Requiem, Bardo, and Nirmanakaya.

With his operas, orchestral works, dance pieces, and film scores, Philip Glass is the quintessential postmodernist composer. Bridging high and popular art, he uses Western and world music, minimalism and high-volume amplification, and has influenced ambient and New Age music.

Glass studied flute as a child and piano at the University of Chicago, where he also studied philosophy and mathematics. In the late '50s he earned a master's degree in composition at New York's Juilliard School of Music. A 1964 Fulbright grant sent him to Paris to study with Nadia Boulanger. There, a job transcribing Indian music with Ravi Shankar and a fascination with Eastern structures led him to repudiate his earlier work and the 12-tone music of purist contemporary classical composers.

After hitchhiking through Africa and India, Glass returned to New York in 1967 and began composing according to principles soon termed minimalist. The music involved repeated rhythmic cycles of notes and over the years, incorporated counterpoint and harmony. To play it, Glass formed the Philip Glass Ensemble, which toured art galleries and, as early as 1974, rock clubs including Max's Kansas City. He supported himself as a carpenter, furniture mover, and taxi driver. While initially refusing to publish his music so that the Ensemble could get more jobs playing live, Glass formed Chatham Square Productions in 1971 to record his works. He made substantial impact overseas—David Bowie and Brian Eno were among his early fans—and Virgin U.K. signed him in 1974.

Glass and scenarist Robert Wilson collaborated in 1976 on the first of his "portrait operas," Einstein on the Beach, a four-and-a-half-hour opera that toured Europe and played the Metropolitan Opera House. After Virgin released an album of short pieces, North Star, in 1977, Glass began gigging at both Carnegie Hall and rock clubs.

From the late '70s onward, much of Glass' energy went into theater works, including Satyagraha (its Sanskrit libretto was taken from the Bhagavad Gita) and Akhnaton (examining the myth of a pharaoh). He collaborated again with Wilson on CIVIL warS, whose intended 1984 performance was canceled due to lack of funds. In 1984 as well, he composed The Juniper Tree, an opera based on a Grimm's fairy tale, and music for the 23rd Olympics. In the mid- and late '80s, among his other stage works were A Descent Into the Maelstrom with choreographer Melissa Finley, and the operas The Fall of the House of Usher, 1000 Airplanes on the Roof, and The Making of Representative for Planet 8. He also scored two documentaries, Koyaanisqatsi and Powaqqatsi, the feature film Mishima, and plays for the Mabou Mines company.

For his recordings, Glass signed in 1981 the first exclusive composer's contract with CBS Masterworks since Aaron Copland and released his most popular instrumental album, Glassworks, a collection of orchestral and ensemble pieces. The Photographer, a music-theater work, included a song with lyrics by David Byrne of Talking Heads. In 1983 Glass collaborated with ex-Doors keyboardist Ray Manzarek on a version of Carl Orff's "Carmina Burana," Songs From Liquid Days (1986), with lyrics by Paul Simon, Laune Anderson, Suzanne Vega, and David Byrne, became his best-selling album. In 1990 Glass collaborated with Allen Ginsberg on Hydrogen Jukebox, an interpretation of Ginsberg's poems. In 1993 the composer released the "Low" Symphony, based on David Bowie's 1977 Low album, formed a new record label, Point, and signed an agreement with Nonesuch that would allow the company to record Glass's new material, remake several of his classics, and release CDs of his earliest pieces.

The late '90s proved to be one of Glass' most prolific periods. He scored Martin Scorsese's Kundun, wrote music for The Truman Show, and composed an opera, The Voyage, commemorating Columbus' arrival in America. By the end of the decade, he had completed two symphonies.

Gary Glitter

Born Paul Francis Gadd, May 8, 1940, Banbury, Eng.
1972—Glitter (Bell) 1991—Greatest Hits (Rhino).

Gary Glitter was at the forefront of the English glam-rock phase, along with David Bowie, T. Rex, and Slade. He had several hits in Britain with a distinctive sound (later revived by Adam and the Ants), featuring heavy drumming, hand-claps, echo guitar, and football-cheer choruses, but only minor chart success in America.

In 1960 Paul Gadd began releasing ballads as Paul Raven. He toured with clean-teen British idol Cliff Richard. Tommy Steele, and Billy Fury His "Paul Raven" rendition of Burt Bacharach's "Walk On By" became a big hit in the Middle East in 1961. He began working with writer/producer Mike Leander in 1965; the association continued into the '70s.

Gadd sang on the soundtrack to Jesus Christ Superstar in 1970 and, under the name Paul Monday, recorded a version of the Beatles' "Here Comes the Sun." But like his earlier records, it went nowhere. After considering such monikers as Terry Tinsel and Horace Hydrogen, he and Leander settled on the Gary Glitter identity in 1971.

Unashamedly climbing onto the glitter-rock bandwagon, Gary Glitter burst onto the English scene in 1972 and by midyear was inspiring regular crowd hysteria. "Rock and Roll Part II" hit #2 in England and became his only U.S. Top 10 entry (though it remains an anthem of choice at sporting events). Over the next two years he reeled off a string of hits, many of which topped the U.K. chart: "I Didn't Know I Loved You (Till I Saw You Rock 'n' Roll)," "Do You Wanna Touch Me?" (later a #20 hit for Joan Jett), "Hello, Hello, I'm Back Again," "I'm the Leader of the Gang," and "I Love You Love Me" in 1973, and "Always Yours," "Oh Yes You're Beautiful," "Love Like You and Me," and "Remember Me This Way" in 1974.

As the decade progressed, Glitter moved dangerously closer to self-parody. By the first of his highly publicized and short-lived "retirements" in 1976, he could boast of 13 consecutive English hits. Through his glory years he was perpetually backed by the Glitter Band wearing stacked heels and playing bejeweled, oddly shaped guitars. Led by Peter Oxendale (piano) and Gerry Shephard (guitar), the Glitter Band began making records on its own in the mid-'70s, including some disco-ish U.K. hits and a 1979 Oxendale and Shephard album, Put Your Money Where Your Mouth Is (Nemperor).

In October 1980 Glitter was in London bankruptcy court trying to work out a deal to pay off his nearly half-million pounds in back taxes. Not coincidentally, he returned to the road the following month. He also tried to raise some of the money by auctioning off his extravagant stage wardrobe. Since then Glitter has turned up in the news (an accidental overdose of sleeping pills in 1986), on British TV (a talk segment on a late-night program called Night Network), on the U.K. chart ("Another Rock and Roll Christmas" [#7, 1984] went gold), and on successful, annual Christmas tours.

In November 1997 he was arrested for amassing pornographic images of minors on his computer. Shortly thereafter, a married, 32-year-old former fan, alleged that Glitter had sexually assaulted her when she was 14 years old, in November 1999 the singer was cleared of the eight sexual assault charges. However, he pleaded guilty to collecting child pornography and served two months in jail. He retired from performing and publicly apologized for his actions. In June 2000 he was seen sailing off the southern coast of Spain.

The Go-Betweens

Formed Brisbane, Austral., 1977

Robert Forster (b. June 29, 1957, Brisbane), voc., gtr.; Grant McLennan (b. Feb. 12, 1958, Rock Hampton, Austral.), voc., gtr., bass; Lindy Morrison (b. Nov. 2, 1951, Austral.), drums.
1982—Send Me a Lullabye (Rough Trade, U.K.) 1983—Before Hollywood 1984—(+ Robert Vickers [b. Nov. 2, 1958, Austral.], bass) Spring Hill Fair (Sire, U.K.) 1985—Metal and Shells (PVC) 1986—Liberty Belle and the Black Diamond Express (Big Time) 1987—(+ Amanda Brown [b. Nov. 17, 1965, Austral.], violin, oboe, voc., kybds.) Tallulah (Beggars Banquet) 1988—(- Vickers, + John Willsteed [b. Feb. 13, 1957, Austral.], bass) 16 Lovers Lane (Beggars Banquet/Capitol) 1990—1978–1990 (group disbands) 1999—The Lost Album '78-'79 (Jetset); Bellavista Terrace: Best of the Go-Betweens (Beggars Banquet) 2000—(group re-forms: Forster; McLennan) The Friends of Rachel Worth (Jetset).
Robert Forster solo: 1990—Danger in the Past (Beggars Banquet, U.K.) 1993—Calling From a Country Phone 1994—I Had a New York Girlfriend 1996—Warm Nights.
G.W. McLennan solo: 1991—Watershed (Beggars Banquet) 1993—Fireboy 1995—Horsebreaker Star (Beggars Banquet/Atlantic) 1997—In Your Bright Ray.

During their 12 years together, the Go-Betweens released a string of exquisitely crafted, heady pop albums that received cult and critical acclaim but never broke through commercially. The band was formed by Brisbane University students McLennan and Forster, who were inspired by '60s folk and '70s punk. The two developed complementary songwriting and singing styles, with McLennan's extroverted minstrelsy balancing Forster's poetic odes. Both wrote about strange people, strange situations, and strange love, loading gentle, moody melodies with intense emotion.

After a string of Australian and British singles, the Go-Betweens moved to London in 1982. With the 1983 addition of bassist Robert Vickers, McLennan moved from bass to guitar. Despite successful tours, laudatory reviews, and at last, a major U.S. record company, success eluded the band. In 1987 they returned to Australia, leaving Vickers in New York. The rich pop album 16 Lovers Lane was the band's swansong.

Returning to Australia, Morrison and Brown formed the group Cleopatra Wong. Forster and McLennan released solo albums, with McLennan gaining some radio airplay with his Atlantic release, Horsebreaker Star. McLennan also recorded with the Church's Steve Kilbey, releasing a pair of albums under the name Jack Frost. Vickers went on to play with the New York band the Mad Scene, appearing on two of the group's records.

Forster and McLennan toured together as an acoustic duo in 1999, playing a series of dates in Europe, Australia, and the U.S. Their performances coincided with the release of two new Go-Betweens compilations: The Lost Album '78-'79, a collection of early tracks that included the group's first two indie singles, and Bellavista Terrace, an anthology of material culled from five of the band's six '80s albums. While they were out on road, Forster and McLennan also began writing songs together for a new Go-Betweens album: The Friends of Rachel Worth was recorded in Portland, Oregon, with members of Sleater-Kinney and other guests. Its release in 2000 was followed by a Go-Betweens tour with Forster and McLennan backed by a rhythm section.

The Go-Go's

Formed 1978, Hollywood, CA

Belinda Carlisle (b. Aug. 17, 1958, Hollywood), voc.; Charlotte Caffey (b. Oct. 21, 1953, Santa Monica, CA), gr.; Jane Wiedlin (b. May 20, 1958, Oconomowoc, WI), gr.; Margot Olaverra, bass; Elissa Bello, drums.

1979—(- Bello; + Gina Schock [b. Aug. 31, 1957, Baltimore, MD], drums) 1980—(- Olaverra; + Kathy Valentine [b. Jan. 7, 1959, Austin, TX], bass) 1981—Beauty and the Beat (I.R.S.) 1982—Vacation 1984—Talk Show (- Wiedlin; group disbands) 1990—Greatest (group re-forms: Carlisle; Wiedlin; Caffey; Schock; Valentine) 1994—Return to the Valley of the Go-Go's 2001—God Bless the Go-Go's (Beyond).

Belinda Carlisle solo: 1986—Belinda (I.R.S.) 1987—Heaven on Earth (MCA) 1989—Runaway Horses 1991—Live Your Life Be Free 1993—Real (Virgin) 1997—A Woman & a Man (ARK 21).

Jane Wiedlin solo: 1985—Jane Wiedlin (I.R.S.) 1988—Fur (EMI-Manhattan) 1990—Tangled (EMI).
Jane Wiedlin with froSTed: 1996—Cold (DGC).
The Graces: 1989—Perfect View (A&M).
House of Shock: 1988—House of Shock (Capitol).

The Go-Go's began as a comically inept all-girl punk novelty act, but within a few years they had made a #1 debut album that yielded two Top 20 hit singles ("Our Lips Are Sealed" and the gold "We Got the Beat") and were selling out arenas on tour.

Belinda Carlisle, who had been a cheerleader in high school, nearly became a member of the seminal L.A. punk band the Germs. With Jane Wiedlin, another L.A. punk scene regular, she began playing guitar. A more experienced guitarist, Charlotte Caffey, soon joined them, and they recruited a rhythm section in the inexperienced Olaverra and Bello.

The group debuted as the Go-Go's at Hollywood's punk club the Masque, with a 1½-song set. Though onlookers considered them another hilariously daring bunch of amateurs, they began rehearsing in earnest and soon recruited Gina Schock, a senous and adept drummer who'd toured briefly with cult-film star Edie Massey and her Eggs. By that time the Go-Go's had been playing the punk circuit for nearly a year, their sound gradually growing from punk to a Blondie-ish bouncy pop rock.

They went to England, where they attracted the attention of British ska-rockers Madness, who had the Go-Go's open a tour there. The British independent label Stiff recorded a Go-Go's single, and "We Got the Beat" became a minor hit in new-wave dance clubs in Britain and America. In early 1980 Olaverra was asked to leave due to her punk style and attitude; the rest of the group thought they wouldn't get a U.S. record deal if they didn't sound poppier. She was replaced by Kathy Valentine, who had played guitar briefly with British all-female heavy-metal band Girlschool and L.A. punk band the Textones. She joined the Go-Go's after a four-day crash course in bass and the band's repertoire.

The Go-Go's: Kathy Valentine, Jane Wiedlin, Gina Schock, Charlotte Caffey, Belinda Carlisle

The first Go-Go's album was produced by girl-group veteran Richard Gottschler and Rob Freeman, both of whom had worked on Blondie's first album. By spring 1982, Beauty and the Beat was #1, and "We Got the Beat" and "Our Lips Are Sealed" (the latter cowritten by Wiedlin and her lover Terry Hall of Britain's Specials and Fun Boy Three) were long-running hits. Vacation (#8, 1982) was slightly less popular but yielded a summertime Top 10 hit single in the title cut. Talk Show was a lesser hit (#18, 1984) that spawned hit singles in "Head Over Heels" (#11, 1984) and "Turn to You" (#32, 1984), but Wiedlin left the group soon after, prompting its dissolution. The women revealed years later that nearly non-stop touring and the party lifestyle that often went with it had taken its toll on the band; Caffey has spoken openly about kicking her heroin addiction. Schock underwent open-heart surgery.

Carlisle launched a successful post-Go-Go's solo career with Belinda (#13, 1986), on which Caffey and Wiedlin also appeared. It went gold and yielded a hit single in "Mad About You" (#3, 1986). Heaven on Earth (#13, 1987) went platinum, yielding Carlisle's biggest hits, "Heaven Is a Place on Earth" (#1, 1987) and "I Get Weak" (#2, 1987), plus another Top 10 hit in "Circle in the Sand" (#7, 1987). Live Your Life Be Free, however, flopped, as did albums by Wiedlin (Fur did produce a hit single in "Rush Hour" [#9, 1988]), who became an ardent animal rights activist. Caffey, with Meredith Brooks (who later had a solo hit with the song "Bitch") and Gia Ciambotti, recorded one album as the Graces, before the Go-Go's reunited for a tour to promote a 1990 best-of collection. Four years later, they reunited again, this time to record some new material for the compilation Return to the Valley of the Go-Go's. After the album's release, the band embarked on a lengthy tour, with ex-Bangles guitarist Vicki Peterson subbing for Caffey, who was pregnant with her daughter by partner Jeff MacDonald of the band Redd Kross.

Disillusioned after being on the road, the members returned to their individual projects. Valentine and Schock formed the Delphines with Dominique Davalos; Wiedlin fronted froSTed, whose 1996 album, Cold, featured four songs that she cowrote with Caffey. Caffey wrote songs for and with other artists (including Courtney Love) as well as arranged and "consulted" on albums (including Jewel's debut). Carlisle returned to her home with her husband, film producer Morgan Mason (son of actor James Mason), and their son in Europe, where she's continued to have a successful solo career. Then, in 1999, the quintet got together to write a movie treatment about their lives with the band. Invigorated by the team effort, they decided to play two weeks of concert dates on the West Coast and in the southwestern U.S. They also recorded a live album, which they planned to sell themselves on an official Web site. While each member still maintained her own career—including Wiedlin doing voiceovers for cartoons and playing occasional gigs with Caffey in Twisted & Jaded, and Schock performing in the band K-Five and writing music for movies, TV, and commercials—the group remained reunited this time, collaborating on songs, touring across the U.S. in 2000, and recording an album of new material, God Bless the Go-Go's.

Andrew Gold

Born Aug. 2, 1951, Burbank, CA

1975—Andrew Gold (Asylum) 1977—What's Wrong With This Picture? (Elektra/Asylum) 1978—All This and Heaven Too 1980—Whirlwind 1996—... Since 1951 (Pony Canyon, Jap.); Halloween Howls (Rhino) 1997—Thank You for Being a Friend—The Best of Andrew Gold.

Wax UK (with Graham Gouldman): 1986—Magnetic Heaven (RCA) 1987—American English 1989—A Hundred Thousand in Fresh Notes 1992—What Else Can We Do? (Caroline).

A studio musician, guitarist, and arranger who was instrumental in Linda Ronstadt's pop breakthrough, Andrew Gold went solo and had a hit of his own with "Lonely Boy" (#7, 1977). Gold is the son of soundtrack composer Ernest Gold (Exodus) and singer Marni Nixon, who dubbed vocals for nonsinging stars in West Side Story, My Fair Lady, and other Hollywood musicals. In the late '60s Andrew cofounded Bryndle with Karla Bonoff, Wendy Waldman, and ex-Stone Pony Kenny Edwards, and met his producer-to-be, Chuck Ploin. The group recorded one unreleased album for A&M.

When Bryndle broke up, Gold and Edwards started the Rangers; a demo tape reached Edwards' former employer Linda Ronstadt, who hired them both for her backing band. Gold became her arranger through 1977 and worked on albums including Heart Like a Wheel and its hit single "You're No Good," on which Gold played most of the instruments. He made his first solo album in 1975 and opened shows for Ronstadt while continuing to play in her backup band. In 1977 What's Wrong With This Picture? yielded "Lonely Boy." All This and Heaven Too included "Thank You for Being a Friend" (#25, 1978), which later became the theme song of the popular TV series The Golden Girls.

Gold's songs have been covered by Leo Sayer, Judy Collins, the James Gang, Cliff Richard, and Ronstadt; he has played sessions for Wendy Waldman, Carly Simon, Art Garfunkel, Loudon Wainwright III, James Taylor, Maria Muldaur, Karla Bonoff, John David Souther, and Eric Carmen. He has produced Bonoff, Nicolette Larson, Rita Coolidge, Moon Martin, Stephen Bishop, and others. Under the name Wax (later changed to Wax UK), he and 10cc's Graham Gouldman made four albums (American English; Magnetic Heaven; A Hundred Thousand in Fresh Notes; and What Else Can We Do?). Magnetic Heaven included a hit single, "Right Between the Eyes" (#43, 1986). A followup, "Bridge to Your Heart," went to #12 in the U.K. Bryndle re-formed in the mid-'90s and recorded an album in 1995. Gold also sang the theme to the popular '90s television comedy Mad About You. His 1996 effort Halloween Howls is aimed at children.

Golden Earring

Formed 1961, The Hague, Neth.

1970 lineup: George Kooymans (b. Mar. 11, 1948, The Hague), gtr., voc.; Rinus Gerritsen (b. Marinus Gerritsen, Aug. 9, 1946, The Hague), bass, kybds., harmonica; Barry Hay (b. Aug. 16, 1948, Saizabad, Neth.), voc., flute, sax; Cesar Zuiderwijk (b. July 18, 1950, The Hague), drums.
 1964—Just Earring (Polydor) 1972—Together 1973—Hearing Earring (Track) 1974—Moontan (MCA) 1975—Switch 1976—To the Hilt 1977—Golden Earring Live 1979—Grab It for a Second; No Promises, No Debts (Polydor) 1980—Long Blond Animal 1982—Cut (21) 1984—N.E.W.S.; Something Heavy Going Down—Live From the Twilight Zone 1986—The Hole 1989—Keeper of the Flame (Jaws/CNR) 1991—Bloody Buccaneers (First Quake/Columbia, Neth.) 1992—The Naked Truth 1994—Face It (Columbia) 1995—Love Sweat 1997—Naked II (CNR, Neth.) 1999—Paradise in Distress; Last Blast of the Century.

A Dutch group that began in 1961. Golden Earring was huge in its homeland and a minor act every place else until "Radar Love" hit #13 in 1974. By then the band had experimented with a range of styles before settling on the hard-rock approach that's brought it into the U.S. Top 40 only twice in its career. Nonetheless, Golden Earring remains the Netherlands' most successful and longest-lived rock export.

The group's original lineup in the mid-'60s included longtime mainstays George Kooymans and Rinus Gerritsen. As schoolboys, they had their first hit in 1964 with the bubblegumish "Please Go." It was the first of nearly 20 Dutch hits. By 1968, the maturing band had tired of the pop format and shifted to hard rock. Attempts to break into the U.S. and UK markets were largely unsuccessful, and its first U.S. tour in 1968 went unnoticed. In 1972, shortly after the group enjoyed a big hit in Europe with "Back Home," the Who (whose live histrionics the group openly imitated during its concerts) hired Golden Earring to open for a European tour and signed the group to its Track label. Hearing Earring (1973) was a compilation of previous Dutch releases and preceded a breakthrough tour of British college campuses.

Moontan spawned "Radar Love," and Golden Earring briefly became widely known in the U.S., where it opened stadium shows for the Doobie Brothers and Santana. But immediate followup success to "Radar" proved elusive, and through the decade, later LPs never reached the U.S. Top 100, although the group continued to score European hits. In addition to his activities with Earring, Kooymans produced records by other artists, including the 1979 European hit remake of "Come On" by the young Dutch group New Adventures.

In 1982 Golden Earring returned to the U.S. chart with the hit single and stylish video "Twilight Zone" (#10) from Cut (#24), but the group's three mid-'80s LPs that followed never made the Top 100. Each member has released solo LPs, all European.

In 1993, Zuiderwijk led a group of 1,000 drummers who performed on pontoons in the harbor of Rotterdam, Holland, Golden Earring joined them for an ultrapercussive "Radar Love." The band remains active and successful in Europe. The Naked Truth and Naked II contain acoustic hits, covers, and new originals.

Golden Smog: See the Jayhawks

Daavid Allen/Gong

Daavid Allen (b. Jan. 13, 1938, Melbourne, Austral.), gtr.: 1971—Banana Moon (BYG Actuel) 1976—Good Morning (Virgin) 1977—Now Is the Happiest Time of Your Life (Affinity) 1979—N'existe Pas (Charly) 1980—Divided Alien Playboy 80 1983—Alien in New York 1984—The Death of Rock and Other Entrances (Shanghai) 1986—Don't Stop 1987—Trial by Headline (Demi Monde) 1989—The Owl and the Tree 1990—Australia Aquaria; Stroking the Tail of the Bird 1991—The Seven Drones (Voiceprint); Jewel in the Lotus 1992—Live at the Witchwood 1992—Who's Afraid (Shimmy Disc) 1993—Twelve Selves (Voiceprint) 1994—Live 1963 1996—Dreamin' a Dream 1997—Glissando Spirit; Divided Alien Clockwork Band Live at Squat Theater New York August 1980.

Gong, formed 1970, Paris, Fr.: Daavid Allen, voc.; Gilli Smyth (b. Fr.), voc.; Didier Malherbe, sax, flute; Rachid Houari, drums, tabla; Burton Greene, piano, piano harp; Dieter Gewissler; Carl Freeman; Barre Phillips, bass; Tasmin Smyth, voc.
 1970—Magick Brother, Mystick Sister (BYG Actuel) (- Houari; - Greene; - Gewissler; - Freeman; - Phillips; - T. Smyth; + Christian Tritsch, bass, gtr.; + Pip Pyle, drums; + Daniel Lalou, horns, perc.; + Gerry Fields, violin) 1971—Continental Circus (BYG Actuel); Camembert Electrique (- Pyle; + Laurie Allan [b. Eng.], drums; + Francis Moze, bass; + Steve Hillage [b. Eng.], gtr.; + Tim Blake [b. Eng.], synth.) 1973—Radio Gnome Invisible: The Flying Teapot (Virgin) (- Tritsch; - L. Allan; + Mike Howlett [b. Eng.], bass; + Pierre Moerlen [b. Colmar, Fr.], drums, perc.; + Mireille Bauer [b. Fr.], perc.) Radio Gnome Invisible Part II: Angel's Egg 1974—You (- D. Allen; - Hillage; - Blake; + Benoit Moerlen [b. Colmar, Fr.], kybds., perc.) 1976—Shamal (+ Allan Holdsworth [b. Eng.], gtr.; + Patrice Lemoine, kybds.; + Francis Moze, bass) 1977—(+ Mino Cinelu, perc.) Gazeuse! (Polydor); Live Etc. (- Holdsworth; + D. Allen); Gong Est Mort (Tapioca) (- D. Allen) 1978—Expresso II (Polydor) 1979—Downwind (Arista); Time Is the Key (Arista, U.K.); Pierre Moerlen's Gong Live; Expresso (Arista) 1981—Leave It Open 1987—Breakthrough (Pierre Moerlen's Gong disbands; Gong re-forms via Daavid Allen's Gongmaison: D. Allen; Malherbe; Graham Clarke, violin, gtr.; Keith Missile [b. Keith Bailey], bass) 1989—Gong Maison (Demi Monde) (+ Pyle; + Shyamal Maitra, perc.) 1992—Shapeshifter (Celluloid) (- Missile; + Howlett; + G. Smyth; + Blake; + Steffi Sharpstrings, gtr.) 1995—The 25th Birthday Concert (Voiceprint) 1996—Live at Sheffield 1974 (New Rose Blues) 1998—Family Jewels (Outermusic); Live in Paris (Bataclan); Paragong Live 1973 (GAS); Live on TV 1990 (DEM) (- Missile; - Blake; - Sharpstrings; - Clarke; - Pyle; + Theo Travis, sax; + Chris Taylor, drums) 2000—Zero to Infinity (Snapper Music).

Gong started out as a European posthippie band with its own mythology of Pothead Pixies and UFOs and an unpredictable mixture of rock, folk, jazz, and synthesizers. Eventually, after numerous personnel changes and offshoots (some called Gong), the band moved into more conventional jazz rock.

The group's founder and leader is Daevid Allen, who had arrived in England from Australia in 1961. While attending Canterbury College of Art in 1966, he joined the original Soft Machine. Following the group's first European tour, Allen was refused reentry to the U.K. He then returned to France, where he lived and wrote poetry through 1969. By then he was playing regularly with vocalist Gilli Smyth, with whom he cut two LPs in 1969, Magick Brother, Mystick Sister and Banana Moon.

By 1970, the duo had expanded into the group Gong; drummer Pip Pyle quickly returned to England to join Canterbury jazz-rock group Hatfield and the North (and later National Health), and was replaced by Laurie Allan (no relation to Daevid). Band members took fanciful stage names, such as Shakti Yoni (Smyth), Bloomdido Bad de Grasse (saxman Didier Malherbe), and Hi T. Moonweed (synthesizer player Tim Blake). Daevid Allen began dropping in and out of the group in 1972, but after his departure in 1974 he contributed to You, which, coupled with earlier releases Flying Teapot and Angel's Egg, completed his "Radio Gnome Invisible" trilogy about the imaginary planet Gong.

Allen later recorded several LPs for Virgin and occasionally performed, sometimes billed as Gong. His 1976 LP Good Morning featured backup from the Spanish group Euterpe. By 1977, he was working with the New York avant-garde outfit Material [see Bill Laswell/Material entry] for About Time. In 1979 Allen released N'existe Pas and then led the first Gong-related group to play the United States. During the late '70s he lived in Woodstock, New York, and did solo tours (backed by tape collages), billed as the Divided Alien Clockwork Band.

Following Allen's exit from Gong proper, the leadership was assumed by percussionist Pierre Moerlen, who had joined the group in 1973 for Angel's Egg. Moerlen's father was the Strasbourg Cathedral organist and taught at the Strasbourg Conservatory, where Pierre studied from 1967 until 1972. Under Moerlen's influence, the group began to specialize in percussion-heavy jazz rock. His rotating cast of sidemen included such guitarists as Steve Hillage (who had departed by 1976 for a fairly successful solo career that included L, produced by Todd Rundgren), ex-Rolling Stone Mick Taylor (on whose 1979 solo debut Moerlen guested), and Allan Holdsworth (Tony Williams' Lifetime, Bill Bruford, and his own solo ventures), as well as keyboardists Mike Oldfield and Moerlen's brother Benoit. Of the original group, Didier Malherbe remained.

In 1977 Moerlen's group reunited with Allen to record Gong Est Mort. Afterward, Allen went back to his solo work:

in 1992 he recorded with New York postpunk artist/producer Kramer the album Who's Afraid, which was released on Kramer's Shimmy Disc label. In 1980 Moerlen finally led his version of Gong Stateside for some concerts; in subsequent years he had to compete with other Gong incarnations led by numerous band alumni (Allen's Planet Gong, Gongmaison, and New York Gong, Gilli Smyth's Mother Gong et al.), before his own edition of the group finally drifted apart.

The '90s saw Allen continuing on as a solo act, and convening several reunions with assorted original, previous, and new members, for tours (including U.S. jaunts in 1996 and 1999) and albums. Hillage has made electronic recordings under the name System 7. The new millennium brought a new Gong and Zero to Infinity, billed as "part five of the Radio Gnome Trilogy" (its liner notes declaring Shapeshifter part four).

Steve Goodman

Born July 25, 1948, Chicago, IL; died Sep. 20, 1984, Seattle, WA
 1971—Steve Goodman (Buddah) 1973—Somebody Else's Troubles 1975—Jessie's Jig and Other Favorites (Asylum)
 1976—Words We Can Dance To 1978—Say It in Private 1979—High and Outside 1980—Hot Spot 1982—Artistic Hair (Red Pajamas) 1983—Affordable Art 1984—Santa Ana Winds 1995—No Big Surprise: The Steve Goodman Anthology.

Singer/songwriter Steve Goodman is best remembered as the author of Arlo Guthrie's 1972 hit "The City of New Orleans," a modern train song. Through the '70s he released a series of folk albums.

Goodman enrolled in 1964 at the University of Illinois to study political science; in summer 1967 he went to New York and played in the parks for spare change for several months until he moved back to Chicago, where he began attending Lake Forest College. In 1969 he gave up academics for music and started performing in Chicago folk clubs.

Despite critical acclaim, Goodman's recordings never sold particularly well, and by 1973 he was still living in a $145-a-month apartment several blocks from Wrigley Field. Somebody Else's Troubles featured Bob Dylan (as Robert Milkwood Thomas) on piano on the title track. Goodman toured through the early '70s, but was ultimately best remembered for "City of New Orleans," which he wrote about his experiences while campaigning for Edmund Muskie. His songs have since been covered by David Allan Coe, John Denver, Joan Baez, and others.

Goodman, who'd been suffering from leukemia since the early '70s, succumbed to kidney and liver failure in 1984 at age 36 after undergoing a bone-marrow transplant. A year after his death, a Tribute to Steve Goodman came out on Red Pajamas, the label he had founded shortly before his death. Among the performers on the two-record set were longtime friends John Prine, Arlo Guthrie, and Bonnie Raitt.

Goo Goo Dolls

Formed 1985, Buffalo, NY

Johnny Rzeznik (b. Dec. 5, 1965, Buffalo), gtr., voc.; Robby Takac (b. Sep. 30, 1964, Buffalo), bass; George Tutuska (b. Oct. 10, 1967, Washington, DC), drums.

1987—Goo Goo Dolls (Celluloid/Mercenary) 1989—Jed (Enigma/Death) 1991—Hold Me Up (Metal Blade/Warner Bros.) 1993—Superstar Car Wash 1995—A Boy Named Goo (+ Tutuska; + Mike Malinin [b. Oct. 10, 1967, Washington, DC], drums) 1998—Dizzy Up the Girl (Warner Bros.) 2001—What I Learned About Ego, Opinion, Art & Commerce (1987–2000).

Originally a garage band with a strong taste for the melodic thrash championed by mid-'80s contemporaries the Replacements and Soul Asylum, the Goo Goo Dolls were a frequently jokey and loud outfit that evolved over the course of a decade into polished purveyors of mall-friendly power balladry. Thanks to his touch with acoustically sweetened ballads, and his casually videogenic appeal, lead singer Johnny Rzeznik even became a bit of a scruffy-chic idol. Such was not always the case. The band with bassist Robby Takac and drummer George Tutuska, initially formed in Buffalo, New York, as a group called the Sex Maggots. When a club owner complained about the name, the musicians picked Goo Goo Dolls from an ad in True Detective magazine. The band gigged locally and released its self-titled debut in 1987. The album Jed followed two years later, boasting a collaboration with guest vocalist Lance Diamond, a crooner-for-hire who sang on a version of Creedence Clearwater Revival's "Down on the Corner."

Diamond also appeared on Hold Me Up, which won attention on college radio, and also marked the first Goo Goo Dolls album to be distributed by Warner Bros., through a deal with the band's label, Metal Blade. Superstar Car Wash won the band critical regard and featured a song, "We Are the Normal," cowritten with Replacements frontman Paul Westerberg. But it took the 1995 release A Boy Named Goo (#27, 1995) to make the group a commercial success. Produced by Lou Giordano (Hüsker Dü, Sugar), the album took off after an L.A. rock station put the acoustic-flavored ballad "Name" (#5, 1995) into heavy rotation. Despite the breakthrough, and constant touring, the Goo Goo Dolls experienced turbulence. Tutuska was fired before the album's release and replaced by former Minor Threat drummer Mike Malinin, and in 1996 the band sued Metal Blade over royalties. Both Metal Blade and Warner Bros. filed countersuits. The case was settled, and the band signed directly to Warner Bros. The group's career stalled during this period but was rejuvenated with the ballad "Inis" (#9, 1998), which appeared on the City of Angels movie soundtrack. The song spent most of a year on Billboard's airplay charts, and was nominated for three Grammys. That September the band released Dizzy Up the Girl (#15, 1998), with the hits "Slide" (#8, 1998) and "Black Balloon" (#16, 1999).

Robert Gordon

Born 1947, Washington, DC

1977—Robert Gordon With Link Wray (Private Stock) 1978—Fresh Fish Special 1979—Rock Billy Boogie (RCA) 1980—Bad Boy 1981—Are You Gonna Be the One 1982—Too Fast to Live, Too Young to Die 1994—All for the Love of Rock & Roll (Viceroy) 1995—Red Hot (1977–1981) (Razor & Tie) 1997—Robert Gordon (List).

Singer Robert Gordon emerged from the New York new-wave scene in 1976 looking and sounding every bit the rockabilly revivalist he has always claimed not to be.

Gordon grew up in the DC suburb of Bethesda, Maryland, where he began singing at an early age; he joined his first band at 14, the Confidentials (which, with some personnel changes, became the Newports). By age 17, he was appearing in nightclubs. After a stint in the service, he moved New York City, where, around 1976–77, he formed Tuff Darts. He appeared with that group on Live at CBGB's, but departed soon after.

Gordon's debut album, Robert Gordon With Link Wray, featured his childhood hero Link Wray on guitar. "Red Hot" was a minor hit in 1977, and the pair toured Europe and the U.S. that year. Fresh Fish Special featured Bruce Springsteen's "Fire," which was written especially for Gordon and later became a hit for the Pointer Sisters. In December 1978 Gordon signed with RCA and in 1979 released Rock Billy Boogie. In 1980 Gordon's fifth album, featuring three songs by Marshall Crenshaw, was released. With its emphasis on a more contemporary pop sound, the LP was a decisive change from the rockabilly of his previous albums. Gordon had a minor hit with Crenshaw's "Someday, Someway" in 1981. Gordon has continued to record. His self-titled album from 1997 exhibits an old-time country influence.

Lesley Gore

Born May 2, 1946, New York, NY

1963—I'll Cry If I Want To (Mercury) 1964—Lesley Gore Sings of Mixed-up Hearts; Boys, Boys, Boys; Girl Talk 1965—Golden Hits of Lesley Gore 1966—Lesley Gore Sings All About Love 1967—California Nights 1968—Lesley Gore Golden Hits, vol. 2 1972—Someplace Else Now (Mowest) 1976—Love Me by Name (A&M) 1986—The Lesley Gore Anthology (Rhino) 1998—Sunshine, Lollipops & Rainbows: The Best of Lesley Gore.

As a teenager, Lesley Gore wrote and sang a series of pop weepers; after her hits ended, she moved into acting and songwriting. Her father was a swimsuit manufacturer who sent her to the Dwight Preparatory School for Girls in Englewood, New Jersey. During her senior year, she was discovered by Quincy Jones, who got her a deal with Mercury and produced her recordings through 1967. As she turned 17, they released her song "It's My Party," which went to #1 in June 1963.

At year's end, she had three more Top 5 smashes—"Judy's Turn to Cry," "She's a Fool," and the ballad she performed in the filmed T.A.M.I. Show, "You Don't Own Me" (later recorded by Joan Jett). The latter title expressed an undeniably feminist viewpoint virtually unheard before on the pop chart. Subsequent hits included "That's the Way Boys Are" (#12, 1964), "Maybe I Know" (#12, 1964), "Sunshine, Lollipops and Rainbows" (#13, 1965), and "California Nights" (#16, 1967).

Throughout her peak years, Gore studied at least part-time at Sarah Lawrence College, and she graduated in 1968 after her hits had stopped in 1967 (her last chart record was 1967's "Brink of Disaster"). After moving to California, she worked with independent producer Bob Crewe on a series of unsuccessful releases. She tried acting—in films like Girls on the Beach and Ski Party and TV fare like Batman. Largely out of sight for several years, she made several club appearances in 1970 and 1971, and in 1972 she signed with Motown subsidiary Mowest. The result of that pairing, 1972's Someplace Else Now, sold poorly. In late 1974 she switched to A&M and was reunited with Quincy Jones for Love Me by Name. Again, sales were disappointing here, but the album was well received in England.

In 1980 Gore contributed lyrics to the Oscar-nominated "Out Here on My Own" from the Fame soundtrack, which featured music by her brother, Michael. In the latter '80s she recorded "Since I Don't Have You" b/w "It's Only Make Believe," which featured Lou Christie. She continues to perform, often in Atlantic City.

Larry Graham/Graham Central Station

Born Aug. 14, 1946, Beaumont, TX

1974—Graham Central Station (Warner Bros.); Release Yourself 1975—Ain't No Bout-A-Doubt It 1976—Mirror 1977—Now Do U Wanta Dance 1978—My Radio Sure Sounds Good to Me 1979—Star Walk

Larry Graham solo: 1980—One in a Million You (Warner Bros.) 1981—Just Be My Lady 1982—Sooner or Later 1983—Victory 1999—GCS 2000 (NPG).

As bassist for Sly and the Family Stone, Larry Graham updated James Brown's percussive bass lines into a style that set the groove for the progressive funk of the '70s. After leaving Sly, he led Graham Central Station and developed a new image as a ballad singer.

Graham moved with his family to Oakland, California, at age two. By his teens he could play guitar, bass, harmonica, and drums; he also had a three-octave-plus vocal range. At 15 he began playing guitar with his cocktail lounge singer/pianist mother in her Dell Graham Trio. When they were reduced to a duo, Graham switched to bass. After four years, he quit to attend college for a year and a half, while working as a backup musician for John Lee Hooker, Jimmy Reed, the Drifters, and Jackie Wilson.

In 1967 Graham joined Sly and the Family Stone and stayed with the group until late 1972. He then took a local group called Hot Chocolate (not the Hot Chocolate of "Emma" and "You Sexy Thing" fame) and, with the addition of ex-Billy Preston keyboardist Robert Sam, formed the original Graham Central Station. Its debut album, Graham Central Station, sold over a quarter-million copies and yielded a minor pop hit, "Can You Handle It," in 1974. Release Yourself featured another small hit, "Feel the Need" GCS's third LP, Ain't No Bout-A-Doubt It, went gold four months after its release, with "Your Love" reaching the Top Forty.

Graham wrote every selection on the group's fourth release, Mirror, a progressive funk outing. In early 1977 the group released Now Do U Wanta Dance (with its Top 10 R&B title track), but neither it nor My Radio Sure Sounds Good to Me (which marked the addition of Graham's wife, Tina, as vocalist) attracted the hoped-for pop crossover success. Star Walk was the last group effort.

By the end of 1980, Graham was billed on his own and singing ballads. One in a Million You hit #26 on the pop chart, and the title track was a #9 single. In 1981 Graham produced and played nearly all the instruments on Just Be My Lady, which included a #4 R&B title track. Later R&B Top 30 singles include "Don't Stop When You're Hot" and "Sooner or Later" (both 1982), and a mildly successful duet with Aretha Franklin, "If You Need My Love Tonight" (1987).

In the early '90s Graham led a nine-piece band, Psychedelic Soul, which backed comedian (and guitar player) Eddie Murphy for a series of live shows (including one at the Montreux Jazz Festival) featuring Murphy's original material. In 1992 a revived Graham Central Station embarked on a national tour. GCS stayed on the road thanks to a rabid Japanese following and to the support of Prince, who used the group as a regular support act for his Jam of the Year tour. Original drummer Gaylord Birch, who was in on the reunion, succumbed to cancer in 1996. Boasting several original members, GCS 2000 also features personnel from the Family Stone and the New Power Generation, along with Chaka Khan and Prince himself, who released the album on his NPG label and coproduced it at Paisley Park Studios.

Grand Funk Railroad

Formed 1968, Flint, MI

Mark Farner (b. Sep. 29, 1948, Flint), gtr., voc.; Mel Schacher (b. Apr. 3, 1951, Owosso, MI), bass; Don Brewer (b. Sep. 3, 1948, Flint), drums.

1969—On Time (Capitol) 1970—Grand Funk; Closer to Home; Live Album 1971—Survival; E Pluribus Funk 1972—Mark, Don and Mel, 1966-1971 (+ Craig Frost [b. Apr. 20, 1948, Flint], kybds.); Phoenix 1973—We're an American Band 1974—Shinin' On; All the Girls in the World—Beware! 1975—Caught in the Act; Born to Die 1976—Good Singin', Good Playin' (MCA); Grand Funk Hits (Capitol) (group disbands) 1981—(group re-forms: Farner; Brewer; + Dennis Bellinger [b. Flint], bass) Grand Funk Lives (Full Moon/Warner Bros.) 1983—What's Funk (group disbands) 1991—Grand Funk Railroad (Capitol); More of the Best (Rhino) 1996—(group re-forms: Farner; Schacher; Brewer) 1999—Thirty Years of Funk: 1969-1999 (Capitol). Mark Farner solo: 1977—Mark Farner (Atlantic) 1978—No Frills.

Grand Funk Railroad (a.k.a. Grand Funk), the most commercially successful American heavy-metal band from 1970 until it disbanded in 1976, established the '70s success formula: continuous touring. Unanimously reviled or ignored by critics and initially by radio programmers, the group nonetheless amassed 11 gold or platinum albums, sold over 20 million LPs overall, and regularly set attendance records at arenas and stadiums. A prototypical "people's band," Grand Funk was a simplified model of blues-rock power trios like Cream and the Jimi Hendrix Experience. The members were all millionaires within two years of their debut.

Mark Farner began playing guitar at age 15 after a broken finger and bad knees ended his football career. After his high school expelled him in his senior year, he started playing full-time in semipro bands and, briefly, with Terry Knight and the Pack, a group that had a minor hit with "I (Who Have Nothing)" in 1966. The group also included drummer Don Brewer.

In late 1968 Farner and Brewer hooked up with bassist Mel Schacher, ex-? and the Mysterians; they made Knight, a former Detroit radio deejay, their manager and gave him complete business and artistic control. His first order of business was to name the trio Grand Funk Railroad. The band's first date was in Buffalo, New York, in March 1969; the following July the musicians played (for free) for 125,000 people at the Atlanta Pop Festival. While the music consisted mostly of power chords, the group's onstage winking and sweating made up in energy what it lacked in finesse. Capitol Records witnessed the legendary set and signed Grand Funk immediately.

With Knight producing, Grand Funk released its debut, On Time, that fall. Two years later the trio had one gold and five platinum LPs. Farner wrote and sang most of the early material, though Brewer later took the lead vocals on a few tunes. In Grand Funk's best year, 1970, it supposedly sold more than any other group in America. The next year, the band broke the Beatles' ticket sales record at New York's Shea Stadium, selling out a two-day stand in 72 hours and grossing over $300,000.

Grand Funk Railroad: Mel Schacher, Don Brewer, Mark Farner, Craig Frost

An undeniably triumphant moment, it marked the end of the honeymoon between Knight and the band. On March 27, 1972, Grand Funk terminated its relationship with Knight; he responded with $60 million in lawsuits. The band lost momentum while courts straightened out the mess, but with attorney John Eastman (Linda McCartney's father) handling its affairs, GFR eventually ditched Knight by buying him out.

Grand Funk's first post-Knight LP, Phoenix, introduced a fourth member, organist Craig Frost (who later joined Bob Seger's Silver Bullet Band). In 1973 Todd Rundgren produced the platinum We're an American Band, the title track of which was the group's first big AM hit (#1). Rundgren also produced Grand Funk's 10th LP, Shinin' On, which yielded another #1 single, a remake of Little Eva's "The Locomotion." The band continued to tour in 1975, as documented in Caught in the Act, but interest within the group was lagging. It scored two more pop hits that year: "Some Kind of Wonderful" (#3) and "Bad Time" (#4). The 1975 LP Born to Die was to be Grand Funk's last, but when Frank Zappa agreed to produce, the four members stayed together for Good Sin-gin', Good Playin'.

The group broke up in 1976 and returned to Michigan. Brewer and Schacher formed Flint, which released one album locally before disbanding. By the late '70s, Brewer had moved to Boca Raton, Florida. Farner spent his time with his wife and two children on his 1,500-acre farm in upstate Michigan and opened an alternative-energy store. He released two solo LPs—Mark Farner in 1977 and No Frills in 1978—and toured on occasion. In 1981 Farner and Brewer reunited for Grand Funk Lives, which picked up some AOR airplay with a remake of the Animals' "We Gotta Get Out of This Place." After a second album, 1983's What's Funk?, Grand Funk split up yet again, with Brewer joining former bandmate Craig Frost in Bob Seger's Silver Bullet Band. Farner, meanwhile, had become a born-again Christian. In 1988 a song of his, "Isn't It Amazing," hit #2 on the Inspirational chart.

In 1997, for the first time in 20 years, the original trio reunited onstage, launching a world tour with a tri-city concert event that benefitted the Bosnian-American Relief Fund, a charity that provided aid to the war-torn region. In 1997 the band released a live album, Bosnia. Pollstar magazine named Grand Funk one of 1998's 100 biggest-grossing tours, but following the release of a 30th-anniversary box set, Farner announced that he would resume his solo career.

Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five

Formed 1977, Bronx, NY

Grandmaster Flash (b. Joseph Saddler, Jan. 1, 1958, Barbados), DJ; Cowboy (b. Keith Wiggins, Sep. 20, 1969; d. Sep. 8, 1989), voc.; Melle Mel (b. Melvin Glover), voc.; Kid Creole (b. Nathaniel Glover), voc.; Mr. Ness (b. Eddie Morris), voc.; Rahiem (b. Guy Williams), voc.

1982—The Message (Sugarhill) 1983—Greatest Messages
1988—On the Strength (Elektra).

Grandmaster Melle Mel and the Furious Five: 1984—Work Party (Sugarhill) 1985—Stepping Off 1997—Right Now (Str8 Game).

Grandmaster Flash solo: 1985—They Said It Couldn't Be Done (Elektra) 1986—The Source 1987—Ba-Dop-Boom-Bang.
Grandmaster Flash/The Furious Five/Grandmaster Melle Mel: 1989—The Greatest Hits (Sugarhill) 1994—Message From Beat Street: The Best of Grandmaster Flash, Melle Mel, & the Furious Five (Rhino) 1996—The Adventures of Grandmaster Flash, Melle Mel, & the Furious Five: More of the Best.

Disco DJ Grandmaster Flash and his rap group the Furious Five were the premier DJ-rap team of the early '80s. Flash began spinning records at Bronx block parties, gym dances, and parks when he was 18. Within a year, he was working at local discos while studying electronics at technical school by day. He developed an idiosyncratic style that involved "cutting" (segueing between tracks precisely on the beat), "back-spinning" (turning records manually to make the needle repeat brief lengths of groove), and "phasing" (manipulating turntable speeds) to create aural montages. Strictly a spinner, he began working with rappers around 1977, first with Kurtis Blow and then with the Furious Five, who had mastered a routine of trading and blending lines and had introduced choreography to their act.

Flash and the Five were popular throughout New York by 1978, but they did not record until 1979, after the Sugar Hill Gang's "Rapper's Delight" showed that rap records could be hits. Flash and the Five recorded "Superrappin'" for Harlem-based Enjoy Records in 1979, before signing with Sugarhill Records the next year. Their first Sugarhill release, "Freedom" (#19 R&B, 1980), sold over 50,000 copies; it was followed by "Birthday Party" (#36 R&B, 1981).

These records' appeal was not limited to New York, and in 1980 Flash and the Five toured the nation. "The Adventures of Grandmaster Flash on the Wheels of Steel" (#55 R&B, 1981) was the first record to capture the urban "cutting" technique pioneered by Flash; it incorporated snatches of Chic's "Good Times," Blondie's "Rapture," and Queen's "Another One Bites the Dust." "The Message" (#4 R&B, 1982), a groundbreaking rap in its haunting depiction of ghetto life, was one of the most powerful and controversial songs of 1982, although it sounds tame compared to the gangsta rap that would follow.

During recording of the group's anticocaine single, "White Lines," in 1983, Flash and Melle Mel had a falling-out. The next year there were two Furious Fives performing, though both had lost the power and dazzle of the original group. Flash eventually dropped the Furious Five from his name but continued making solo albums through the '80s. In 1987 Melle Mel, Flash, and the Furious Five reunited for a charity concert hosted by Paul Simon at Madison Square Garden; the result was another album, 1988's On the Strength. Popular indifference soon led to another breakup. Flash reemerged in 1994 as coproducer of Public Enemy DJ Terminator's X's Super Bad album. The group reunited again in 1994 for a rap oldies package show that also included Kurtis Blow, Whodini, and Run-D.M.C. In 1995 Grandmaster Flash and Melle Mel joined Duran Duran in the studio for a new version of "White Lines (Don't Do It)." In 1997 Grandmaster Melle Mel and Scorpio released an album called Right Now and included a remake of Jean Knight's 1971 disco hit "Mr. Big Stuff." Flash closed the '90s as musical director and DJ of HBO's The Chris Rock Show.

Amy Grant

Born Nov. 25, 1960, Augusta, GA
1976—Amy Grant (Word) 1979—My Father's Eyes 1980—Never Alone 1981—Amy Grant in Concert 1981—Amy Grant in Concert, vol. 2 1982—Age to Age 1983—A Christmas Album 1984—Straight Ahead (Myrrh/A&M) 1985—Unguarded 1986—The Collection 1988—Lead Me On 1991—Heart in Motion 1992—Home for Christmas 1994—House of Love 1997—Behind the Eyes 1999—A Christmas to Remember (Interscope).

Singer/songwriter Amy Grant charted an ascent to pop stardom in the '80s and early '90s that would make her one of the most successful crossover artists in Christian music. With bouncy, hummable songs that became less overtly spiritual on each new album, and with videos that emphasized her wholesome good looks, Grant communicated the message that, as she told a reporter in 1991, "Christians can be sexy."

Grant grew up in Nashville and began playing the guitar while in summer camp, inspired by a friend who played John Denver songs. As a high school freshman, Grant was lured to a Bible-study meeting by her older sister's boyfriend, not long afterward, at 15, she landed a deal with Word Records, a Christian label. For a while, the young singer balanced studies at prep school and then Vanderbilt University with making records for Word's Myrrh label. By the time Word signed a distribution deal with A&M Records in the mid-'80s, Grant's star had already risen on the Christian-music circuit. Nineteen eighty-five's Unguarded marked her official arrival as a pop artist, cracking the Top 40 on the album charts and going platinum. Grant showed up at the Grammys that year—to accept one of five awards she's won in the gospel category—wearing a leopard-skin-print jacket and no shoes. In 1986 she recorded a duet with Chicago's Peter Cetera, the very secular #1 love song "The Next Time I Fall." The video also became popular on MTV, which had previously dismissed Grant as a Christian artist.

As Grant's visibility increased, so did skepticism among her more conservative observers in the Christian music community. But accusations of "selling out" to pop trends didn't faze the singer, who maintained that her songs had never been spiritually didactic and her music had always drawn on accessible pop textures. Heart in Motion (#10, 1991) included the #1 single "Baby Baby." Although the song's accompanying video showed Grant frolicking chastely with a male model, she and her husband at the time, songwriter and Nashville Network talk-show host Gary Chapman, cowrote the song for Millie, the second of their three children. "Every Heartbeat" and "That's What Love Is For," also from Motion, went to #2 and #7, respectively. In 1992 Grant's Home for Christmas peaked at #2, and the following year she began an annual tradition of performing a "Tennessee Christmas" concert in Nashville, which she and coperformer Michael W. Smith took on the road starting in 1997.

Grant further surprised the Christian music community by the confessional singer/songwriter approach on her next album, 1997's Behind the Eyes (#8 pop). She wrote many of the songs on an acoustic guitar, alone in a secluded cabin not far from her home. The production was sparse, the lyrics often melancholy; listeners speculated that Grant wasn't as happy as her picture-perfect life seemed. After a couple of singles shot up the Adult Contemporary chart ("Takes a Little Time" went to #4, "Like I Love You" to #15), the underlying reason for her despair became apparent when she separated from Chapman, her husband of 16 years, in December 1998. Hoping it was a temporary situation, her fans were shocked when the couple divorced a few months later and Grant soon began dating friend and country-music star Vince Gill, who also recently had divorced after a long marriage (The pair had known each other for several years, even recording a duet together, the title track to Grant's 1994 album House of Love). Grant released a third holiday album, A Christmas to Remember, and taped a corresponding television special in 1999. Around the same time, she made her acting debut in the leading role of a TV movie. Grant and Gill married in March 2000.

Eddy Grant

Born Edmond Montague Grant, Mar. 5, 1948, Plaisance, Guyana, West Indies

1979—Living on the Front Line (Epic); Walking on Sunshine
1982—Killer on the Rampage 1984—Going for Broke 1986—Born Tough 1990—File Under Rock (Enigma);
Barefoot Soldier 1993—Soca Baptism (Ice).

With his dreadlocks and gravelly voice, Eddy Grant may have looked like a Rastafarian reggae artist, but in fact was a pop-savvy, business-conscious straight arrow and something of a one-man music industry.

Grant's family moved to Britain while he was a youngster. By age 19, he was fronting an interracial British pop-rock band, the Equals, who scored a minor transatlantic hit in 1968 with "Baby, Come Back" (#32). In 1972 Grant left the Equals to form a production company and open a recording studio. He released his debut album on his own Ice Records label, setting his career pattern by playing every instrument himself, and merging reggae, funk, soul, rock, and pop elements. Walking on Sunshine (#20 U.K., 1979) hit big in England with the danceable title track and "Living on the Frontline" (#11 U.K., 1979), a protest song about South Africa. In 1982 Grant moved back to the Caribbean, relocating his home and studio to Barbados, and found massive U.S. success with Killer on the Rampage (#10, 1983), which contained a #2 smash hit in the funk-rock anthem "Electric Avenue." The reggae-rock ballad "I Don't Wanna Dance" was a minor followup hit (#53, 1983). Going for Broke (#64, 1984) yielded his last U.S. hit, "Romancing the Stone" (#26, 1984), written for but not included in the hit film of the same name. By the early '90s, Grant was still reportedly wealthy enough to bid unsuccessfully for control of the late Bob Marley's $16-million estate.

The Grass Roots

Formed 1966, Los Angeles, CA

Warren Entner (b. July 7, 1944, Boston, MA), gtr., voc., kybds.; Creed Bratton (b. Feb. 8, 1943, Sacramento, CA), gtr., banjo, sitar; Ricky Coonce (b. Aug. 1, 1947, Los Angeles), drums; Rob Grill (b. Nov. 30, 1944, Los Angeles), bass, voc.
1967—Let's Live for Today (Dunhill) 1969—Lovin' Thing (—Bratton; + Dennis Provisor [b. Nov. 5, ca. 1950, Los Angeles], organ) Leaving It All Behind 1971—Their 16 Greatest Hits 1972—(—Coonce; —Provisor; + Reed Kailing, gtr.; + Virgil Webber, gtr.; + Joel Larson, drums) 1975—The Grass Roots (Haven) (—Grill) 1982—Powers of the Night (MCA) 1996—All Time Greatest Hits.

The Grass Roots were a major American singles band during the late '60s and early '70s. The group was formed when pop producer/writers P.F. Sloan and Steve Barri, who had recorded the 1966 hit "Where Were You When I Needed You" (#28) under the name the Grass Roots, decided to continue recording and drafted an L.A. bar band, the Thirteenth Floor, to play on the records. Barri and Sloan continued to work together. The group that recorded the 1967 hits "Let's Live for Today" (#12) (a remake of an Italian hit by the Rokes) and "Things I Should Have Said" (#23) became the Grass Roots.

The group had several major hits, including the gold "Midnight Confessions" (#5, 1968), "I'd Wait a Million Years" (#15, 1969), "Heaven Knows" (#24, 1969), "The River Is Wide" (#31, 1969), "Temptation Eyes" (#15, 1971), "Sooner or Later" (#9, 1971), and "Two Divided by Love" (#16, 1971). After 1972's "The Runaway" (#39), the hits dried up, and the Grass Roots returned to small clubs. By the mid-'70s, the band was recording for the small Haven Records, where it managed one moderate comeback hit, "Mamacita" (#71, 1975).

Bassist/vocalist Rob Grill's 1980 solo LP, Uprooted, featured Mick Fleetwood and Lindsey Buckingham of Fleetwood Mac. He began touring as Rob Grill and the Grass Roots in 1981 before releasing Powers of the Night the following year. He and the "group" make the rounds of the oldies circuit to this day. Guitarist Warren Entner, meanwhile, got into the business end of the entertainment industry, managing the hard-rock acts Quiet Riot, Faith No More, L7, the Deftones, and Rage Against the Machine. He also was the executive producer of the 1983 film Pirates of Penzance.

Grateful Dead

Formed 1965, San Francisco, CA

Jerry Garcia (b. Jerome John Garcia, Aug. 1, 1942, San Francisco; d. Aug. 9, 1995, Forest Knolls, CA), gtr., voc.; Bob Weir (b. Robert Hall, Oct. 16, 1947, San Francisco), gr., voc.; Ron "Pigpen" McKernan (b. Sep. 8, 1945, San Bruno, CA; d. Mar. 8, 1973, San Francisco), kybds., harmonica, voc.; Phil Lesh (b. Philip Chapman, Mar. 15, 1940, Berkeley, CA), bass, voc.; Bill Kreutzmann, a.k.a. Bill Sommers, (b. Apr. 7, 1946, Palo Alto, CA.), drums.

1967—The Grateful Dead (Warner Bros.) (+ Mickey Hart [b. ca. 1950, Long Island, NY], drums, perc.) 1968—Anthem of the Sun (+ Tom Constanten, kybds.) 1969—Aoxomoxoa 1970—Live Dead (- Constanten); Workingman's Dead; American Beauty (- Hart) 1971—Grateful Dead (Skull and Roses) 1972—Europe '72 (- Pigpen; + Keith Godchaux [b. July 14, 1948, San Francisco; d. July 23, 1980, Marin County, CA], kybds.; + Donna Godchaux [b. Aug. 22, 1947, San Francisco], voc.) 1973—History of the Grateful Dead (Bear's Choice); Wake of the Flood (Grateful Dead) 1974—Grateful Dead From the Mars Hotel; Skeletons From the Closet (Warner Bros.) (+ Hart) 1975—Blues for Allah (Grateful Dead) 1976—Steal Your Face (Grateful Dead/United Artists) 1977—Terrapin Station (Arista); What a Long Strange Trip It's Been: The Best of the Grateful Dead (Warner Bros.) 1978—Shakedown Street (Arista) 1979—(- K. Godchaux; - D. Godchaux; + Brent Mydland [b. 1953, Munich, Ger.; d. July 26, 1990, Lafayette, CA], kybds.) 1980—Go to Heaven 1981—Reckoning; Dead Set 1987—In the Dark 1989—Built to Last; Dylan & the Dead (Columbia) 1990—Without a Net (Arista) (+ Vince Welnick [b. Feb. 22, 1952, Phoenix, AZ], kybds.) 1991—One From the Vault (Grateful Dead); Infrared Roses 1992—Two From the Vault 1995—Hundred Year Hall (Grateful Dead/Arista) 1996—Dozin' at the Knick (Arista) 1997—Fallout From the Phil Zone 1997—Fillmore East 2-11-69 (Grateful Dead); Live at Fillmore East (Arista); Capital Centre, Landover. . . (Grateful Dead) 2000—Dead in a Deck (Built to Last) (Arista) 2001—The Golden Road 1965-1972 (Rhino). Jerry Garcia solo: 1972—Garcia (Warner Bros.); Hooteroll (with Howard Wales) (Douglas) 1973—Live at the Keystone (Fantasy) 1974—(Compliments of) Garcia (Round) 1975—Old & in the Way 1976—Reflections 1978—Cats Under the Stars (Arista) 1982—Run for the Roses 1988—Almost Acoustic (Grateful Dead); Keystone Encores, vols. 1 and 2 (Fantasy) 1991—Jerry Garcia/David Grisman (Acoustic Disc); Jerry Garcia Band (Arista) 1993—Not for Kids Only (with David Grisman) (Acoustic Disc) 1996—Shady Grove (with David Grisman) 1997—How Sweet It Is (Arista) 1998—So What (Acoustic Disc) 2000—The Pizza Tapes. Bob Weir solo: 1972—Ace (Warner Bros.) 1976—Kingfish (Round) 1977—Kingfish Live 'n' Kickin' (Jet) 1978—Heaven Help the Fool (Arista) 1981—Bobby and the Midnighters 1984—Where the Beat Meets the Street (Columbia). Mickey Hart solo: 1972—Rolling Thunder (Warner Bros.) 1976—Diga Rhythm Band (Round) 1987—Apocalypse Now Sessions: The Rhythm Devils Play River Music (Passport) 1989—Music to Be Born By (Rykodisc) 1990—At the Edge 1991—Planet Drum; Honor the Earth 1996—Mickey Hart's Mystery Box 1998—Supralingua (Grateful Dead) 2000—Spirit Into Sound: The Magic of Music (Arista).

Phil Lesh (with Ned Lagin): 1975—Seastones (Round).

The Other Ones: 1999—The Strange Remain (Grateful Dead).

Psychedelic pioneers, the Grateful Dead was probably the most improvisatory of all major rock groups. From the late '60s until the 1995 death of leader Jerry Garcia, the Dead played long, freeform concerts that touched down on their own country-, blues-, and folk-tinged rock songs, and on a wide range of country, blues, and rock cover versions. Although Grateful Dead albums tended to sell a dependable 250,000 copies, the group had but one Top 10 single: "Touch of Grey."

The band concentrated on live shows rather than the recording process and by the '90s was consistently among the top-grossing tour attractions in all of rock. Nearly as famous as the band itself were the legions of "Deadheads"—predominantly white 18- to 24-year-olds who have lovingly preserved the era that spawned the Dead by emulating their Summer of Love predecessors' philosophy and that period's accoutrements: tie-dye clothing, hallucinogenic drugs, and the Dead's music. These fans supported the band with an almost religious fervor, following the group around the country and providing a synergy between band and audience that was unique in rock. In true psychedelic style, the Grateful Dead preferred the moment to the artifact—but to keep those moments coming, the Dead evolved into a far-flung and smoothly run corporate enterprise that, for all its hippie trimmings, drew admiring profiles in the financial and mainstream press.

Lead guitarist Jerry Garcia took up guitar at 15, spent nine months in the Army in 1959, then moved to Palo Alto, where he began his long-standing friendship with Robert Hunter, who later became the Dead's lyricist. In 1962 he bought a banjo and began playing in folk and bluegrass bands, and by 1964 he was a member of Mother McCree's Uptown Jug Champions, along with Bob Weir, Pigpen, and longtime associates Bob Matthews (who engineered Dead albums and formed the Alembic Electronics equipment company) and John Dawson (later of New Riders of the Purple Sage)

The Grateful Dead: Mickey Hart, Phil Lesh, Jerry Garcia, Brent Mydland, Bill Kreutzmann, Bob Weir

In 1965 the band became the Warlocks: Garcia, Weir, Piggpen, Bill Kreutzmann, and Phil Lesh, a former electronic-music composer. With electric instruments, the Warlocks debuted in July 1965 and soon became the house band at Ken Kesey's Acid Tests, a series of public LSD parties and multimedia events held before the drug had been outlawed. LSD chemist Owsley Stanley bankrolled the Grateful Dead—a name from an Egyptian prayer that Garcia spotted in a dictionary—and later supervised construction of the band's massive, state-of-the-art sound system. The Dead lived communally at 710 Ashbury Street in San Francisco in 1966–67 and played numerous free concerts, by 1967's Summer of Love, they were regulars at the Avalon and Carousel ballrooms and the Fillmore West.

MGM signed the band in 1966, and it made some mediocre recordings. The Dead's legitimate recording career began when Warner Bros. signed it. While its 1967 debut album featured zippy three-minute songs, Anthem of the Sun (#87, 1968) and Aoxomoxoa (#73, 1969) featured extended suites and studio experiments that left the band $100,000 in debt to Warner Bros., mostly for studio time, by the end of the '60s. Meanwhile, the Dead's reputation had spread, and they appeared at the Monterey Pop Festival in 1967 and Woodstock in 1969.

As the '70s began, the Dead recouped its Warner debt with three comparatively inexpensive albums—Live Dead (#64, 1970) (recorded in concert), Workingman's Dead (#27, 1970), and American Beauty (#30, 1970). The former featured extended psychedelic explorations, such as the classic "Dark Star," while in sharp contrast the latter two found the Dead writing concise countryish songs and working out clear-cut, well-rehearsed arrangements. Workingman's Dead (including "Uncle John's Band" [#69, 1970] and "Casey Jones") and American Beauty (including "Truckin'" [#64, 1971], "Ripple," and "Box of Rain") received considerable FM radio airplay, sold respectably, and provided much of the Dead's concert repertoire.

With a nationwide following, the Dead expanded its touring schedule and started various solo and side projects (aside from the band members' own works, many Dead members also appeared on the half-dozen-plus albums Dead lyricist Robert Hunter began releasing in 1973). The group worked its way up to a 23-ton sound system and a large traveling entourage of road crew, family, friends, and hangers-on—most of whom would later become staff employees complete with health-insurance and other benefits, as the Dead evolved into an efficient and highly profitable corporation. The Dead finished out its Warners contract with a string of live albums including 1971's Grateful Dead (#25) (which introduced more concert staples such as "Bertha" and "Wharf Rat"). In 1973 the Dead played for over half a million people in Watkins Glen, New York, on a bill with the Band and the Allman Brothers. By then the group had formed its own Grateful Dead Records and a subsidiary, Round, for nonband efforts.

Europe '72 (#24, 1972) was the last album to feature keyboardist Piggpen, a heavy drinker who died in 1973 of liver disease. Keith Godchaux, who had played piano with Dave Mason, joined the band and brought along his wife, Donna, as background vocalist. The pair toured and recorded with the Dead until 1979, when they were asked to leave and were replaced by pianist Brent Mydland. The following year, Keith Godchaux was killed in a car crash in Marin County.

In 1974 the Dead temporarily disbanded while members pursued outside projects, but the group resumed touring in 1976. After signing with Arista, the group began to use non-Dead producers for the first time: Keith Olsen (Fleetwood Mac) for Terrapin Station (#28, 1977) and Little Feat's Lowell George for Shakedown Street (#41, 1978). In 1978 the band played three concerts at the foot of the Great Pyramid in Egypt, which were recorded but not released. Go to Heaven (#23, 1980) yielded "Alabama Getaway" (#68, 1980), like "Truckin'" and "Uncle John's Band," a minor hit single. The Dead's main support continued to be its touring six months each year. The band celebrated its 15th anniversary with the release of two more live albums, including the mostly acoustic Reckoning (#43, 1981).

The band took a hiatus from recording until 1987, during which time the Dead toured with Bob Dylan (one tour was recorded for the album Dylan and the Dead [#37, 1989]), while Garcia's health and personal habits made disturbing headlines: In January 1985 he was arrested for heroin possession in San Francisco's Golden Gate Park, in July 1986, 15 months after being in a drug treatment program and while touring with Dylan, Garcia collapsed into a five-day, near-fatal diabetic coma brought on by drug use. Once he recovered, the Dead made a triumphant return with In the Dark (#6, 1987), their first Top 10 album, yielding "Touch of Grey" (#9, 1987). Two years later, however, trouble suddenly began following the Dead and its normally mellow army of Deadheads on tour. In April 1989 there were 55 arrests (mostly for drugs and disturbing the peace) and violent encounters with police at two Pittsburgh shows, and 70 arrests and reports of vandalism by Dead fans at three Irvine, California, shows. In October 1989 a college student died of a broken neck outside a Dead show at the New Jersey Meadowlands (his death was never explained, but an investigation cleared security guards of guilt), in December of that year a 19-year-old fan high on LSD died while in police custody for public intoxication at the L.A. Forum (the autopsy reported neck-compression during restraint, but police were cleared of any wrongdoing). As a result, the Dead recorded public service announcements imploring fans to act responsibly.

In July 1990 Mydland died of an overdose of injected cocaine and morphine. He was replaced by Vince Welnick, formerly of San Francisco's the Tubes; Bruce Hornsby, a Dead fan, sometimes sat in on piano during concerts as well. Welnick was not on the two From the Vault albums, which issued old tapes of legendary Dead shows (from 1968 in L.A. and San Francisco, and from the latter in 1974). In September 1992 the bearish, chain-smoking Garcia was hospitalized with diabetes, an enlarged heart, and fluid in the lungs. The Dead was forced to postpone a tour until the end of the year, doctors put Garcia on a strict diet, exercise, and no-smoking regimen. The Dead returned to the road with a slimmer, fitter Garcia in mid-December 1992 with a series of Bay Area concerts.

That same year Garcia—whose paintings, often pastel watercolors, had been exhibited internationally—unveiled a line of designer silk neckties bearing his artwork. By then the massive catalogue of Dead merchandise also included skis and snowboards as well as T-shirts and even a line of toddler wear. The Dead's tours in 1994–95 earned the band $52 million. In 1995 the Dead were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

On July 9, 1995, Jerry Garcia played his last show with the Grateful Dead. One month later, he died in his sleep at Serenity Knolls, a rehabilitation center where he'd been combating his long-standing heroin addiction. The cause of death was reported as a heart attack. Shortly thereafter, flags flew at half-mast at the San Francisco City Hall to mark the passing of an era. Garcia was survived by four daughters and his third wife, Deborah Koons Garcia, whom he had married the year before. Four months later, the band officially retired.

The music, however, continued. After Garcia's death, archival material, notably in the form of Dick's Picks, live sets chosen by super-fan Dick Latvala, was released in abundance. And the band's members, in various conglomerations, resumed playing: Bob Weir with his band, Ratdog, Phil Lesh with Phil Lesh and Friends. In 1998, as the Other Ones, Weir, Lesh, Hart, and Hornsby headlined the Furthur Festival, reviving for many fans the Deadhead spirit.

During their tenure with the Dead, the main members had worked at a number of side projects. Garcia's included session work with Jefferson Airplane and Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young. He formed New Riders of the Purple Sage in 1969 as a side project (see entry). From 1970 to 1973 he played occasional gigs with Bay Area keyboardist Merl Saunders (captured on the Keystone albums), and he kept up his bluegrass banjo skills with Old & In the Way, which also featured Peter Rowan (Sectarian), Vassar Clements, and David Grisman. Garcia recorded his first solo album, Garcia, in 1972; the cover shows his right hand, which has been missing its third finger since a childhood accident. Garcia joined organist Howard Wales on Hooteroll, and he toured and recorded with various Jerry Garcia bands in the '70s and '80s, before recording with David Grisman (who'd played mandolin on American Beauty) for two acoustic albums. His last project was an album of children's music, Not for Kids Only (Acoustic Disc), released in 1993.

Weir's first solo effort was 1972's Ace, which featured most of the Dead backing him. During the Dead's sabbatical he formed Kingfish with ex-New Rider Dave Torbert; in the early '80s Weir toured and recorded with Bobby and the Midnites, including drummer Billy Cobham (Mahavishnu Orchestra), bassist Alphonso Johnson (Weather Report), and guitarist Bobby Cochran (Steppenwolf). In 1991 Weir and his sister Wendy published Panther Dream, a children's book and companion audiocassette aimed at raising awareness of endangered rainforests—a cause the Dead had been supporting for several years through its Rex Foundation. In 1999

Weir completed a musical on the life of baseball legend Satchel Paige and continued working on digitizing the Dead song archives.

Phil Lesh teamed with electronic music composer Ned Lagin to record the atonal, aleatoric Seastones. Dead drummer Mickey Hart explored world music through his solo albums, with the Diga Rhythm Band, the Rhythm Devils (Hart and Kreutzmann composed incidental percussion music for the soundtrack of the film Apocalypse Now), and by producing albums by musicians from Africa, Asia, and South and Central America on Rykodisc. In 1991 Hart helped arrange a U.S. tour by the Gyuto Monks of Tibet. He also toured with his band, Planet Drum. By 2000, he'd written a book, Spirit Into Sound: The Magic of Music, and formed a new ensemble, the Mickey Hart Band.

Dobie Gray

Born Leonard Victor Ainsworth, July 26, 1942, Brookshire, TX
1973—Drift Away (Decca) 1975—New Ray of Sunshine (Capricorn) 1978—Midnight Diamond (Infinity) 1979—Dobie Gray 1981—Welcome Home (Robox) 1996—Drift Away: His Very Best (Razor & Tie).

Following a brief but successful mid-'60s pop career, singer Dobie Gray turned to country soul. Gray was born to sharecroppers with eight children. By the early '60s, he had moved to the West Coast to become a singer. Through a radio ad, he met Sonny Bono, who helped him get started. Gray had a minor hit, "Look at Me" (1963), but his next single, "The 'In' Crowd," was the biggest hit of his early period (#13, 1965), and a gold record. "See You at the 'Go-Go,'" which followed, stalled on the lower rungs of the chart.

By the late '60s, Gray had enrolled in prelaw classes and started acting. He appeared in a New York production of The Beard, Jean Genet's The Balcony, and the L.A. production of Hair. Despite his success in theater, Gray returned to music and through 1969 and 1970 he worked with the group Pollution. While cutting demos for songwriter Paul Williams, he met Williams' brother, Mentor, with whom he worked as a staff writer for A&M Records.

In 1973 Gray released Drift Away, the first of three MCA albums produced by Mentor Williams. The title track (written by Williams and later covered by Rod Stewart, among others) sold 1.5 million copies and hit #5. Late that summer Gray followed up with "Loving Arms," which sold over 100,000 copies. In 1975 (the same year he signed with Capricorn for the disco-tinged New Ray of Sunshine), Gray began playing benefit concerts for presidential candidate Jimmy Carter; in January 1977 he sang at Carter's inaugural-evening ceremonies. Gray continues to record and perform.

Macy Gray

Born Natalie Renee McIntyre, Sep. 9, 1970, Canton, OH 1999—On How Life Is (Epic) 2001—The Id.

One of the more unusual vocalists to emerge in the late '90s, Macy Gray claims a high-pitched voice undercut by an earthy rasp. Though it embarrassed her as a child growing up in a working-class black neighborhood in Canton, Ohio, it would later win her acclaim as an inheritor of such classic R&B and blues divas as Tina Turner and Billie Holiday. At 17, Gray (her stage name is an homage to a beloved family neighbor) moved to L.A., where she attended film school at the University of Southern California. There, she began singing jazz standards in local bars. In 1994 she recorded an album for Atlantic Records that was never released. She persevered, hosting open-mike performances after hours at a coffeehouse frequented by members of alternative hip-hop acts the Roots, Black Eyed Peas, and others. Experimenting with her own sound, a mix of old-school R&B, hip-hop, and funk, Gray—by now a single mother of three children—won a deal with Epic Records in 1998 and began recording her debut with producer/manager Andrew Slater (Fiona Apple, the Wallflowers). The triple-platinum On How Life Is (#4 pop, #9 R&B, 1999) yielded the hit single "I Try" (#5, 2000), which won a Grammy for Best Female Pop Vocal Performance.

Al Green

Born Al Greene, Apr. 13, 1946, Forrest City, AK
 1970—Green Is Blues (Hi); Gets Next to You 1972—Let's Stay Together; I'm Still in Love With You 1973—Call Me; Living for You 1974—Explores Your Mind 1975—Al Green Is Love; Greatest Hits 1976—Full of Fire; Have a Good Time 1977—The Belle Album; Greatest Hits, vol. 2 1978—Love Ritual; Truth and Time 1980—The Lord Will Make a Way (Myrrh) 1981—Higher Plane 1982—Precious Lord 1983—I'll Rise Again; Al Green Sings the Gospel (Motown) 1985—He Is the Light (A&M) 1986—Trust in God (Motown) 1987—Soul Survivor 1989—Love Ritual: Rare and Previously Unreleased 1968–76 (MCA); I Get Joy (A&M) 1991—One in a Million (Word/Epic) 1992—Love Is Reality 1995—Your Heart's in Good Hands (MCA) 1997—Anthology (The Right Stuff/Capitol).

To a greater extent than even his predecessors Sam Cooke and Otis Redding, Al Green embodies both the sacred and the profane in soul music. He was one of the most popular vocalists in the '70s, selling over 20 million records. His wildly improvisational, ecstatic cries and moans came directly from gospel music, and in the late '70s he returned to the Baptist church as a preacher. He continues to record albums in a pop-gospel style (to date he has earned eight gospel Grammys) with close ties to the Memphis soul music that made him famous.

Green (who dropped the third "e" from his surname when he went solo) was born to a large family of sharecroppers. When he was nine, he and his brothers formed a gospel quartet, the Greene Brothers. They toured the gospel circuits in the South and after the family moved to Grand Rapids, Michigan, three years later Green's father dismissed him from the quartet after he caught him listening to the "profane music" of Jackie Wilson. At 16 he formed a pop group, Al Greene and the Creations, with high school friends. Two members of the Creations, Palmer James and Curtis Rogers, founded a record company, Hot Line Music Journal, for which the group—renamed Al Greene and the Soul Mates—cut "Back Up Train" in 1967. The single went to #5 on the national R&B chart. Followups failed, however, and the group broke up.

Green met Willie Mitchell in Midland, Texas, in 1969. Mitchell was a bandleader, a producer, and a vice president of Hi Records of Memphis, to which he signed Green. He also became Green's producer and songwriting partner for the next eight years. Green Is Blues introduced the sound that would distinguish all the records Green made with Mitchell: simple but emphatic backbeats riding subdued horns and strings, and Green's voice floating untethered over the instruments.

His second album contained Green's first solo hits—"You Say It" (#28 R&B, 1970), "Right Now, Right Now" (#23 R&B, 1970), and "I Can't Get Next to You" (#11 R&B, 1970)—and his first gold single, "Tired of Being Alone" (#11 pop, #7 R&B, 1971), which he wrote. That began a three-year string of gold singles, most of them written by Green, Mitchell, and Jackson: "Let's Stay Together" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1971), "Look What You Done for Me" (#4 pop, #2 R&B, 1972), "I'm Still in Love With You" (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1972), "You Ought to Be With Me" (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1972), "Call Me (Come Back Home)" (#10 pop, #2 R&B, 1973), "Here I Am (Come and Take Me)" (#10 pop, #2 R&B, 1973), "Sha La La (Make Me Happy)" (#7 pop, #2 R&B, 1974), and "L-O-V-E (Love)" (#13 pop, #1 R&B, 1975).

In October 1974 Green was hospitalized with second-degree burns on his back, arm, and stomach. A former girlfriend, Mrs. Mary Woodson of New Jersey, had poured boiling grnts on him while he was bathing in his Memphis home and then killed herself with his gun. The incident apparently triggered a spiritual crisis in Green, and he announced his intention to go into the ministry. In 1976 he purchased a church building in Memphis and was ordained pastor of the Full Gospel Tabernacle.

Al Green

He did not, however, give up his pop career, and he preached at his church only when he was not on tour. His records continued to place regularly on the R&B chart and occasionally on the pop chart. In 1977 he built himself a studio and, with Belle, began producing his own records, maintaining the style and standards he had set with Mitchell. But during a 1979 concert in Cincinnati, he fell off the stage and narrowly escaped serious injury. He considered the incident a warning from God. For a time thereafter, his public appearances were limited to religious services in churches around the country, where he both sang and preached.

His '80s recordings, distributed by Myrrh, a gospel label, contain only religious songs, both standard hymns and Green's originals, in a style that mixes Memphis soul with gospel. In 1982 he did a stint on Broadway, costarring with Patti LaBelle in Vinnette Carroll's gospel musical Your Arms Too Short to Box With God. Talking Heads scored one of their biggest pop hits with a cover of Green's "Take Me to the River," and Green himself duetted with Annie Lennox of Eurythmics on the Jackie DeShannon classic "Put a Little Love in Your Heart," for the soundtrack of the 1988 film Scrooged. In 1992 Green signed a new deal with BMG Records and returned to the Memphis soul sound of his roots with Don't Look Back, which featured production help from David Steele and Andy Cox (Fine Young Cannibals) and Arthur Baker (Afrika Bambaataa's "Planet Rock" and other early-'80s dance hits). MCA released the album in the U.S. under the title Your Heart's in Good Hands in 1995. The year before, Green duetted with Lyle Lovett on Willie Nelson's "Funny How Time Slips Away" for Rhythm, Country, and Blues, a collection of duets that teamed up well-known artists in each of these fields. That collaboration netted him a Grammy. Green's box set, Anthology, includes not only the hits and other album cuts, but his onstage sermonizing and interview snippets. In 1995 Green was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. He sang "Funny How Time Slips Away" with Willie Nelson at the induction ceremony.

Today, Green performs both gospel and soul material in concert. Most recently, he has had an ongoing role in the TV series Ally McBeal, where he plays an evanescent character who moves in and out of McBeal's subconsciousness. In fall 2000 HarperCollins released his autobiography, Take Me to the River.

Norman Greenbaum

Born Nov. 20, 1942, Malden, MA
 1969—Spirit in the Sky (Reprise) 1970—Back Home Again
 1972—Petaluma 1995—Spirit in the Sky: The Best of Norman Greenbaum (Varèse Vintage).

In 1970 folksinger/songwriter Norman Greenbaum's electric jug-band stomp "Spirit in the Sky" sold 2 million copies. After playing local coffeehouses while attending Boston University, he had moved to the West Coast in the mid-'60s and formed Dr. West's Medicine Show and Junk Band, a psychedelic jug band that had a minor hit, "The Eggplant That Ate Chicago" (#52, 1966) before disbanding in 1967. Greenbaum then formed several other unsuccessful groups before embarking on his solo career in 1968. Working with producer and cowriter Eric Jacobson, he released a couple of unsuccessful singles from his Reprise debut, Spirit in the Sky, before the title track hit #3 on the American chart. Greenbaum's followups ("Canned Ham," 1970; "California Earthquake," 1971) never hit.

When Petaluma was released in 1972, he was largely out of the public eye, spending most of his time running a goat dairy on a farm near Petaluma, California. In 1983 the singer began dabbling in management and concert production. In 1986 British glam-pop band Doctor and the Medics recorded a hit cover of "Spirit in the Sky." The song has since become a popular cover for contemporary Christian artists. Greenbaum continues to work on songs at his home in Northern California.

Green Day

Formed 1989, Berkeley, CA
 Billie Joe Armstrong (b. Feb. 17, 1972, CA), voc. gr.; Mike Dirnt (b. Mike Pritchard, May 4, 1972, CA), bass; John Kiffmeyer, drums.
 1990—39/Smooth (Lookout) 1992—(—Kiffmeyer; + Tre Cool [b. Frank Edwin Wright III, Dec. 9, 1972, Ger.], drums)
Kerplunk 1994—Dookie (Reprise) 1995—Insomniac
 1997—Nimrod 2000—Warning.

Punk revivalists in style, this raucous trio achieved triple-platinum status with their major-label debut, Dookie. Although Green Day's taut, three-minute, guitar-driven songs ably revive the fierceness of the group's stylistic progenitors (the Who, the Clash, and the Sex Pistols), punk's original aim—to annoy, outrage, shock—is not Green Day's thing.

Friends since age 10, Billie Joe Armstrong and Mike Dirnt grew up in Rodeo, California. They formed their first real band, Sweet Children, at 14. When they were 17, the pair first recorded as Green Day, signing with the punk label Lookout and releasing the 1989 EP 1,000 Hours with drummer John Kiffmeyer. The next year, the group recorded its first full-length album, 39/Smooth, in a day. Two more EPs followed, with Kiffmeyer leaving to focus on his studies and Tre Cool, with whom Armstrong had played in a band called the Lookouts, taking over on drums for 1992's Kerplunk. With a solid fan base built on the nurturing, all-ages hardcore scene in Berkeley, the group signed with Reprise in April 1993. Its 1994 release, Dookie, proclaimed the next generation of punk, hitting #4 on the album chart, buoyed by the band's effervescent presence on MTV and at Lollapalooza and Woodstock '94. The album won a 1994 Grammy Award for Best Alternative Music Performance and sold 10 million copies worldwide. The 1995 followup Insomniac sold nearly 3 million copies and charted at #2, but failed to repeat the success of the band's major-label debut. Nimrod (#10, 1997) sold a million copies but won fresh exposure for the group, largely on the strength of the ballad "Good Riddance (Time of Your Life)." In 2000, Green Day released Warning (#4), a more introspective, even folk-influenced record that showed the group stretching artistically.

Professor Griff: See Public Enemy

Nanci Griffith

Born Nanci Caroline Griffith, July 6, 1953, Seguin, TX
 1978—There's a Light Beyond These Woods (B.F. Deal)
 1982—Poet in My Window (Featherbed) 1985—Once in a Very Blue Moon (Philo/Rounder) 1986—Last of the True Believers 1987—Lone Star State of Mind (MCA) 1988—Little Love Affairs; One Fair Summer Evening 1989—Storms 1991—Late Night Grande Hotel 1993—Other Voices, Other Rooms (Elektra) 1994—Flyer 1997—Blue Roses From the Moons 1998—Other Voices, Too (A Trip Back to Bountiful) 1999—The Dust Bowl Symphony.

Chronicling the lives of everyday people in a sweet voice and a direct, realistic style, singer/songwriter Nanci Griffith's brand of contemporary folk music—"folkabilly," as she calls it—draws on both country textures and Southern literary tradition. (She has written short stories and novels.) A gifted interpreter, Griffith is equally well regarded for her covers of songs by a range of artists, from Woody Guthrie to Lyle Lovett, as well as having her own songs covered by the likes of Kathy Mattea and Suzy Bogguss.

As a child, Griffith was exposed to a variety of jazz, country, and folk records; folk singer Carolyn Hester was a particular favorite. Griffith began playing guitar and singing in bars when she was 14 and continued while studying at the University of Texas. After graduating and working briefly as a kindergarten teacher, she began recording for independent labels. By the mid-'80s, her graceful soprano had attracted the attention of MCA Records.

Nanci Griffith

Her MCA debut, Lone Star State of Mind, included a rendition of Julie Gold's "From a Distance" which Griffith wanted to release as a single. MCA refused, and in 1990 Bette Midler had a smash hit with the song (Griffith's version did become a #1 single in Ireland, where she's enormously popular.) Griffith's frustration with MCA worsened, and she eventually defected to Elektra Records. Other Voices, Other Rooms (the title of Truman Capote's first book), an assortment of songs by influential folk artists, featured such guest musicians as Bob Dylan, John Prine, and Emmylou Harris, peaked on the charts at #54 in 1993, and won the Grammy for Best Contemporary Folk Album that year.

After undergoing radiation treatment for breast cancer in 1997, Griffith recorded a sequel to that album, Other Voices, Too (A Trip Back to Bountiful) (#85, 1998), in which she took a supporting role on several tracks to showcase the singing of her numerous guest vocalists. In addition, she oversaw a book about the recording of both albums, Nanci Griffith's Other Voices: A Personal History of Folk Music, published in 1998. In 1999 Griffith went in a classical direction with two projects: an album of new arrangements performed with the London Symphony Orchestra (Dust Bowl Symphony), and playing several of her songs live as part of This Heart, an original modern dance piece by Paul Vasterling, leader of the Nashville Ballet. She also awaited the publication of one of her novels, Two of a Kind Heart. Despite widespread support from fans and peers, to date Griffith has not found a niche on commercial radio.

Grin: See Nils Lofgren

The Guess Who

Formed 1962, Winnipeg, Can.

Chad Allan (b. Allan Kobel, ca. 1945), voc., gtr.; Bob Ashley, piano; Randy Bachman (b. Sep. 27, 1943, Winnipeg), gtr., voc.; Garry Peterson (b. May 26, 1945), drums; Jim Kale (b. Aug. 11, 1943, Winnipeg), bass.
 1965—(- Ashley; + Burton Cummings [b. Dec. 31, 1947, Winnipeg], kybds., voc.) Shakin' All Over (Scepter) 1966—(- Allan; + Bruce Dekker, voc.; - Dekker) 1969—Wheatfield Soul (RCA); Canned Wheat Packed by the Guess Who 1970—American Woman (- Bachman; + Greg Leskiw [b. Aug. 5, 1947], gtr.; + Kurt Winter [b. Apr. 2, 1946], gtr.) Share the Land 1971—So Long, Bannatyne; Best of 1972—Rockin' (- Leskiw; + Don McDougall [b. Nov. 5, 1947], gtr.) Live at the Paramount (- Kale; + Bill Wallace [b. May 18, 1949], bass, voc.) 1973—#10; Best of, vol. 2 1974—Artificial Paradise: Road Food (- Winter; - D. McDougall; + Domenic Troiano [b. ca.

1945, Modugno, It.], gtr., voc.) Flavours 1975—Power in the Music; Born in Canada (group disbanded) 1977—The Greatest of the Guess Who (RCA) 1979—(group re-forms: Kale; D. McDougall; + Allan McDougall, voc.; + Vince Masters, drums; + David Inglis, gtr.; + David Parasz, horns) All This for a Song (Hiltak) (numerous personnel changes follow) 1997—The Ultimate Collection (RCA) 1999—(classic lineup re-forms: Bachman; Kale; Cummings; Peterson; D. McDougall) 2000—(-Kale; + Wallace).
 Burton Cummings solo: 1976—Burton Cummings (Portrait) 1977—My Own Way to Rock 1981—Sweet Sweet (Alfa).

The Guess Who was Canada's premier singles band through the early '70s. The group, whose members were all born in Winnipeg, dates back to 1962, when buddies Chad Allan and Randy Bachman formed Allan and the Silvertones, later the Reflections, and then (to avoid confusion with a Detroit group) Chad Allan and the Expression. In 1965 the group changed its name to the Guess Who and had a surprise hit with a cover of Johnny Kidd and the Pirates' "Shakin' All Over" (#22, 1965). Its record company saw in the Guess Who's name an opportunity to imply that the band was actually a famous British group incognito. The group toured the United States as part of Dick Clark's Caravan of Stars Revue. That summer Burton Cummings joined, and when Allan left in 1966, he became the band's lead vocalist and focal point.

In 1968 the Guess Who landed a regular spot on the CBC-TV show Where It's At, hosted by ex-leader Allan. The group had minor success in Canada, but was unable to crack the U.S. market until producer Jack Richardson mortgaged his house to pay for the quartet to record in New York in September 1968. Richardson produced the first gold Guess Who single in the U.S., "These Eyes" (#6, 1969). The band's second RCA LP, Canned Wheat, boasted two hits—"Laughing" (#10, 1969) and "Undun" (#22, 1969).

In 1970 the Guess Who's record sales totaled $5 million, largely on the strength of its third album, American Woman. The fuzz guitar-propelled title track (#1) and "No Time" (#5) were U.S. hits. The Guess Who performed at the White House with Prince Charles and Princess Anne in attendance; First Lady Pat Nixon, undoubtedly briefed as to "American Woman"'s scathing anti-U.S. sentiment, requested that the band delete the song from its set.

While at the height of success, Cummings and Bachman were feuding bitterly; the guitarist, having recently converted to the Mormon faith, found the band's hedonistic lifestyle offensive. In July he departed, first for a brief collaboration with Allan as Brave Belt, then without Allan as Bachman-Turner Overdrive [see entry]. The Guess Who replaced him with two guitarists and continued its singles success with "Share the Land" (#10, 1970), "Hand Me Down World" (#17, 1970), "Rain Dance" (#19, 1971), and "Albert Flasher" (#29, 1971). But two years passed before the band's next Top 40 hit, by which time former James Gang guitarist Dominic Troiano was a member. A novelty tribute to disc jockey Wolfman Jack, "Clap for the Wolfman," made the Top 10, and another single, "Dancin' Fool," cracked the Top 30. Nevertheless, the group disbanded the next year.

Cummings had a hit on his first solo album with "Stand Tall" (#10, 1976). His 1981 album Sweet Sweet included a Top 40 hit, "You Saved My Soul." He continues to release Canadian albums. Cummings and Randy Bachman eventually made amends, and in 1983 the original group got back together for an album and concert video. Four years later the two toured together. Meanwhile, an everchanging Jim Kale-led lineup has continued to tour as the Guess Who since 1979, often with Kale as the sole '60s survivor. As of 1989, drummer Garry Peterson was also on the payroll. The Kale-led Guess Who has released several marginal albums on small labels such as Hiltak and El Mocambo.

In 1999, partially inspired by the U.S. chart success of Lenny Kravitz' take on "American Woman" (#49), the band's classic '60s lineup (plus '70s vet Don McDougall on rhythm guitar) reunited. Kale bowed out before an extensive Canadian tour; another '70s alumnus, Bill Wallace, replaced him. The group also performed with Kravitz at Canada's Much-Music Awards.

Guided by Voices

Formed ca. 1985, Dayton, OH

Robert Pollard Jr. (b. Oct. 31, 1957, Dayton), voc., gtr. (with numerous personnel changes).

1987—Devil Between My Toes (Schwa); Sandbox (Halo) 1989—Self-Inflicted Aerial Nostalgia 1990—Same Place the Fly Got Smashed (Rocket #9) 1992—Propeller (Rockathon) 1993—Vampire on Titus (Scat) 1994—Bee Thousand (Scat/Matador); Crying Your Knife Away (Lo-Fi) 1995—Alien Lanes (Matador); Box (Scat) 1996—Jellyfish Reflector (Jellyfish); Under the Bushes Under the Stars (Matador) 1997—Mag Earwig!; Tonics and Twisted Chasers (Rockathon) 1999—Do the Collapse (TVT) 2000—Suitcase: Failed Experiments and Trashed Aircraft (Fading Captain Series #6) 2001—Isolation Drills (TVT).

Dayton, Ohio's Guided by Voices had been releasing records for years before being discovered by the growing '90s alternative-rock scene. Core member singer/guitarist Robert Pollard, a one-time school teacher, led a revolving cast of players through extremes in melody and noise, making the band a champion of lo-fi indie rock, which evolved by decade's end into an accessible big-rock sound.

Pollard was still teaching fourth grade when he first began spending his summers on musical experiments with drummer Kevin Fennell and guitarist Mitch Mitchell. Calling the band Guided by Voices, the musicians began recording mainly as a hobby, and played to mostly unreceptive local barroom audiences. Early independent releases collected eccentric, lo-fi tracks that were sometimes almost comically brief. By 1992's Propeller (on the band's own Rockathon label), the group had essentially broken up. Guided by Voices then regrouped to sign with Ohio-based Scat Records, releasing 1994's Bee Thousand to a fast-growing alt-rock following. In 1994, after 14 years, Pollard finally quit his teaching job.

The band reached an even larger audience after it signed to Matador, which released 1995's 28-track Alien Lanes. Under the Bushes Under the Stars (1996) was the band's first album cut in a professional recording studio, coproduced by Steve Albini and Kim Deal (Breeders, Pixies). Pollard had branched out into solo projects, including releases under the names Nightwalker and Lexo & the Leapers. With 1999's Do the Collapse (produced by Ric Ocasek), Guided by Voices introduced a more accessible rock sound, with conventional guitar solos and more polished production values.

Guitar Slim

Born Eddie Jones, Dec. 10, 1926, Greenwood, MS; died Feb. 7, 1959, New York, NY
1954—Things That I Used to Do (Specialty) 1987—The Atco Sessions (Atlantic) 1991—Sufferin' Mind (Specialty).

Blues guitarist/singer Eddie "Guitar Slim" Jones' "Things That I Used to Do" was one of the top R&B records of 1954, selling a million copies. The song (now a blues standard) fused gospel and the blues, and featured Jones' electric guitar as well as the piano of a then largely unknown Ray Charles.

Jones began singing in church choirs as a child. While still in his teens, he formed a trio with pianist Huey "Piano" Smith and later began working solo. He recorded for Imperial and JB between 1951 and 1952. He served in the U.S. Army in Korea in the early '50s. An electric guitar pioneer, Jones was also a flashy dresser and a famed showman, known for playing hot in-concert solos while wandering as far as his 200-foot extension cord would allow. He died of pneumonia at the age of 32 and is buried (with his gold-top Gibson Les Paul guitar) in Thibodaux, Louisiana. His son has performed under the name Guitar Slim Jr.

The first known "Guitar Slim," incidentally, was a blues musician from Texas, Norman Green (born July 25, 1907; died September 28, 1975), who had minor hits, including "Fifth Street Alley Blues" and "Old Folks Boogie."

Guns n' Roses

Formed 1985, Los Angeles, CA
Axl Rose (b. William Bailey, Feb. 6, 1962, Lafayette, IN), voc.; Slash (b. Saul Hudson, July 23, 1965, Stoke-on-Trent, Eng.), gtr.; Duff McKagan (b. Michael McKagan, Feb. 5, 1964, Seattle, WA), bass; Steve Adler (b. 1965, OH), drums; Izzy Stradlin (b. Jeff Isbell, Apr. 8, 1962, Lafayette, IN) gtr.
1986—*Live!! @ Like a Suicide EP (Uzi/Suicide) 1987—Appetite for Destruction (Geffen) 1988—GNR Lies 1990—(- Adler; + Matt Sorum [b. Nov. 19, 1960, Long Beach, CA], drums; + Dizzy Reed [b. Darren Reed, June 18, 1963, Hinsdale, IL], kybds.) 1991—Use Your Illusion I; Use Your Illusion II (- Stradlin; + Gilby Clarke [b. Aug. 17, 1962, Cleveland, OH], gtr.) 1993—The Spaghetti Incident? (- Slash; - McKagan; - Sorum; - Clarke; + Buckethead, gtr.; + Robin Finck, gtr.; + Paul Tobias, gtr.; + Tommy Stinson [b. Oct. 6, 1966, San Diego, CA], bass; + Chris Pittman, kybds.; + Brian "Brain" Mantia, drums) 1999—Live Era '87-'93 2001—Chinese Democracy (Interscope).

Izzy Stradlin with the Juju Hounds: Stradlin, gtr., voc.; Jimmy Ashhurst, bass; Charlie "Chalo" Quintana, drums; Rick Richards (b. Mar. 30, 1954, Jasper, GA), gtr.

1992—Izzy Stradlin & the Juju Hounds (Geffen).

Duff McKagan solo: 1993—Believe in Me (Geffen).

Gilby Clarke solo: 1994—Pawn Shop Guitars (Virgin).

Slash with Snakepit: Slash, gtr.; Sorum, drums; Clarke, gtr.;

Mike Inez, bass; Eric Dover, voc.

1995—It's Five O'Clock Somewhere (Geffen) 2000—Am't Life Grand (Koch) (- Inez; + Johnny Blackout, bass).

With Appetite for Destruction, the biggest-selling debut in history, Guns n' Roses gained stardom in the late '80s with '70s-derived hard rock and a hedonistic rebelliousness that recalled the early Rolling Stones. Combining heavy-metal technique with punk attitude, the band provoked charges of multifarious bigotry but leavened their outrage with songs that bespoke the inchoate emotions of hard rock's primarily young, white male audience.

Raised in a working-class Indiana family, high school dropout Axl Rose had, by age 20, compiled a police record that included charges for public intoxication, criminal trespass, and contributing to the delinquency of a minor. An ELO and Queen fan, the singer became friends with guitarist Izzy Stradlin, and the two joined forces in L.A. in the early '80s to form a band. Crafting their name from those of two groups they'd played in, Hollywood Rose and L.A. Guns, they formed Guns n' Roses with English-born biracial guitarist Slash, whose parents, both in the music industry, had moved to L.A. when he was 11. With bassist Duff McKagan, whose own past included stealing a purported 133 automobiles, and drummer Steve Adler, the Gunners accrued notoriety (alluding to the band's heroin and alcohol abuse, their posters featured the legend "Addicted. Only the Strong Survive").

After independently releasing an EP, Guns n' Roses signed with Geffen in 1986, and, with producer Mike Clink (Heart, Eddie Money), put out Appetite for Destruction. Opening for Aerosmith, the band built a live following, and in September 1988, with wide MTV exposure given "Sweet Child o' Mine" (#1, 1988) and "Welcome to the Jungle" (#7, 1988), the album reached #1, it stayed there for five weeks and on the charts for nearly three years.

Next came GNR Lies, a Top 5 album that combined tracks from the EP with new songs, notably "Used to Love Her," with its chorus of "... but I had to kill her," and "One in a Million," its lyrics disparaging "faggots," "immigrants," and "niggers." Controversy ensued and would not let up. In 1988 two fans died in crowd disturbances at England's Monsters of Rock Festival, and while opening select dates for the Rolling Stones' 1989 tour garnered G n' R a larger audience, Slash shocked television viewers with an obscenity-laden speech at the American Music Awards the following year. Concurrently, reports surfaced of heroin use by Rose, Stradlin, and Adler, and Adler was fired for not straightening out.

Guns n' Roses:
Axl Rose, Duff McKagan,
Matt Sorum, Slash

In 1990 the band performed at Farm Aid IV and contributed a cover of Bob Dylan's "Knockin' on Heaven's Door" to the Days of Thunder soundtrack and an original, "Civil War," to Nobody's Child, a project to benefit Romanian orphans; Slash and McKagan played on Iggy Pop's Brick by Brick and Slash recorded with Dylan, Michael Jackson, Lenny Kravitz, and on a tribute album for Les Paul. But with Matt Sorum, formerly of the Cult, brought in on drums and with new keyboardist Dizzy Reed, 1990 was a year of regrouping.

The following year brought even greater success if no less turmoil. G n' R embarked on its first headlining world tour and released "You Could Be Mine" (#29, 1991) from the Terminator 2 soundtrack. But Rose's marriage to Erin Everly, daughter of Don Everly of the Everly Brothers, ended after three weeks amidst allegations of physical abuse, and Rose, after allegedly attacking a camera-wielding fan at a St. Louis concert, was charged with four misdemeanor counts of assault and one of property damage. Rose pleaded not guilty and remained unrepentant about an ensuing riot that left 60 people hospitalized, the band's equipment destroyed or stolen, and the hall sustaining over $200,000 in damages.

With Rose embarked on psychotherapy (during which he maintained discovery of sexual abuse at age two by his father), 1991 saw the simultaneous release of Use Your Illusion I and Use Your Illusion II, both shipping platinum. Due to tension with Rose, Stradlin then left and formed the JuJu Hounds with bassist Jimmy Ashhurst, drummer Charlie "Chalo" Quintana, and ex-Georgia Satellites guitarist Rick Richards (Stradlin's replacement was Gilby Clarke of Candy and Kills for Thrills). The band then set off on a 28-month tour. Among 1992's highlights were an MTV Vanguard Award for the group's body of work and an appearance in April at the Freddie Mercury Tribute, an AIDS benefit that via satellite drew the largest concert audience in history. In 1993 G n' R released The Spaghetti Incident?, an album of covers that paid homage to the band's punk roots. Among the tracks was one penned by Charles Manson, for which the band was heavily criticized. By 1994, rumors were proliferating that the band had broken up. Clarke released a solo album, Pawn Shop Guitars, and at the year's end Slash recorded a solo album with Snakepit, featuring Sorum and Clarke, Mike Inez of Alice in Chains, and Jellyfish guitarist Eric Dover on lead vocals.

None of these solo projects attracted G n' R-size audiences, and G n' R itself was falling apart. Slash was convinced to sign over rights to the Guns n' Roses name to Rose, later to the guitarist's regret. Clarke was fired. And Slash quit over creative differences with Rose, who insisted on introducing industrial and electronic elements into the G n' R sound. As the years dragged on, McKagan and Sorum eventually left. Rose seemed to go into seclusion, but was reportedly writing and recording, and at various points tried to recruit Moby and Youth as postmodern producers. Both declined, and Rose recorded with producer Roy Thomas Baker and a revolving cast of musicians. Finally, in 1999, a new, industrial-flavored song called "Oh My God" appeared on the End of Days film soundtrack. Then in late 2000, Rose's management promised a 2001 release for the long-delayed Chinese Democracy. That was followed by a New Year's Eve concert in Las Vegas where a handful of new songs and a new lineup of Guns n' Roses was first introduced: guitarists Buckethead, Robin Finck (Nine Inch Nails), and Paul Tobias; bassist Tommy Stinson (Replacements); keyboardist Chris Pittman; and drummer Brian "Brain" Mantia. The only holdover from the past was keyboardist Dizzy Reed, who first appeared on GNR Lies. After another appearance at the Rock in Rio festival in Brazil, the new G n' R continued touring.

Guru: See Gang Starr

Arlo Guthrie

Born July 10, 1947, Coney Island, NY
 1967—Alice's Restaurant (Reprise) 1968—Arlo 1969—Running Down the Road; Alice's Restaurant soundtrack (United Artists) 1970—Washington County 1972—Hobo's Lullaby (Reprise) 1973—Last of the Brooklyn Cowboys 1974—Arlo Guthrie 1975—Together in Concert (with Pete Seeger) 1976—Amigo 1977—The Best of (Warner Bros.) 1978—One Night 1979—Outlasting the Blues 1981—Power of Love 1986—Someday (Rising Son) 1991—All Over the World 1992—Son of the Wind 1994—More Together Again (with Pete Seeger) 1996—Alice's Restaurant—The Massacre Revisited; Mystic Journey.

Folksinger Arlo Guthrie became popular in the late '60s when his tall-tale "Alice's Restaurant" became an underground favorite and later a movie in which he appeared. His biggest pop hit was Steve Goodman's "City of New Orleans," and he is still a regular attraction on the folk circuit.

One of several children born to folksinger Woody and Marjorie Guthrie, Arlo grew up among musicians. At age three he danced and played the harmonica for Lead Belly. Pete Seeger was also a frequent guest. Arlo's mother taught him guitar at age six. He attended private schools in Brooklyn and then in Stockbridge, Massachusetts, the setting of "Alice's Restaurant." He attended college in Billings, Montana, but soon returned to New York to pursue a music career.

By late 1965, Guthrie was a regular on the East Coast coffeehouse circuit, and in 1967 he toured Japan with Judy Collins. His debut LP was released shortly after his appearance at the Newport Folk Festival, which included the 18-minute "Alice's Restaurant." As the '60s closed, he continued to build a following, and he appeared at Woodstock in August 1969. Guthrie's career picked up noticeably in the early '70s with Washington County and Hobo's Lullaby, which included the #18 hit "The City of New Orleans" (1972). Subsequent LPs have been well received, although his record sales have dropped off; he has been less interested in elaborate pop productions.

In 1977 Guthrie converted to Catholicism. During the late '70s he regularly toured the U.S. and Europe backed by Shenandoah, with whom he also recorded. Throughout the decade he often performed and recorded with Pete Seeger (Together in Concert), and he was an activist for numerous causes, including the antinuclear and ecological movements. In the late '80s Guthrie began acquiring his entire recording catalogue from Warner Bros. and reissuing it on his own Rising Son label. In 1992 Rising Son produced the Grammy-nominated Woody's 20 Grow Big Songs, an album and book set of the elder Guthrie's children's songs recorded by Arlo, his brother Joady, his sister Nora, and their children. That same year, Arlo also bought the Trinity Church in Housatonic, Massachusetts, which had been prominent in the "Alice's Restaurant" story; the edifice became the home of Rising Son Records, and the Guthrie Center, a nonprofit community service charity. It also served as the place of recording for the live, 30th-anniversary edition of Alice's.

In the mid-'90s Guthrie portrayed recurring guest characters on several TV shows including USA's Renegade and ABC's The Byrds of Paradise and Relativity. In 1995 he collaborated with artist Alice Brock on the kids' book Moose Come Walking; Mystic Journey, coproduced by Arlo and his son Abe, was Guthrie's first new studio album in a decade. In 1998 he began rearranging his music for symphony performances.

Woody Guthrie

Born Woodrow Wilson Guthrie, July 14, 1912, Okemah, OK; died Oct. 3, 1967, Queens, NY
 1967—This Land Is Your Land (Folkways) 1977—A Legendary Performer (RCA) 1988—The Greatest Songs of Woody Guthrie (Vanguard) 1993—Songs to Grow on for Mother and Child (Smithsonian Folkways) 1997—This Land Is Your Land (Rounder) 1999—The Asch Recordings, vols. 1-4 (Smithsonian Folkways).

In the '30s and '40s Woody Guthrie reinvented the American folk ballad as a vehicle for social comment and protest, laying the groundwork for Bob Dylan and numerous other rock singer/songwriters with such neotraditional songs as "This Land Is Your Land," "Pastures of Plenty," "So Long, It's Been Good to Know You," and nearly a thousand others.

Guthrie's father was a singer, banjo player, and sometime professional boxer. Woody left home at 16 and roamed through Texas and Louisiana, working as a newsboy, sign painter, spittoon washer, farm laborer, and at other menial jobs; he also sang in the streets. While visiting his uncle Jeff Guthrie in Pampa, Texas, in 1929, he learned to play guitar. During the Depression, Guthrie rode the rails as a hobo until around 1937, when he settled in L.A. and hosted a radio show on KFVD for a dollar a day.

Woody Guthrie

Guthrie's politics moved leftward, and at the start of World War II he relocated to New York. There he met the Weavers and Pete Seeger. He briefly embraced communism, although he was denied membership in the U.S. Communist party because he refused to renounce his religion, but he did write a column for a communist newspaper, The People's Daily World.

Although these leanings did not endear Guthrie to the U.S. government, his anti-Hitler songs did; his guitar had a sign on it saying "This Machine Kills Fascists." From 1943 to 1945 Guthrie was with the U.S. merchant marine in the U.K., Italy, and Africa. In 1945 he married Marjone Greenblatt Mazia, and together they had four children: Cathy (who was killed in a fire at age four), Nora, Joady, and Arlo.

Although Guthrie's songs traveled widely, he didn't record until 1940, when Alan Lomax taped several hours of talking and singing for the Library of Congress. Those sessions were later released on commercial labels including RCA (Woody Guthrie—A Legendary Performer and Dust Bowl Ballads) and Elektra. He also recorded with Lead Belly and Sonny Terry, but his recordings had little impact by themselves.

During his years of riding the rails, Guthrie developed a drinking problem. In 1952 he was diagnosed as alcoholic and confined to a mental institution before his problem was correctly diagnosed as Huntington's chorea, a genetically transmitted degenerative disorder of the nervous system from which Guthrie's mother had died. The disease kept him largely inactive and hospitalized during the last decade of his life.

Guthrie's fame has steadily increased over the years. Bob Dylan, who had traveled to New York to visit Guthrie in the hospital, sang his idol's praises early on, and Guthrie's son, Arlo, has also carried on the family name as a singer/songwriter. Pete Seeger, whose relationship with Woody dates back to the '30s, organized a series of memorial concerts for the singer in the late '60s. Two of those concerts—at Carnegie Hall in 1968 and the Hollywood Bowl in 1970—were recorded and released as albums featuring Dylan, Tom Paxton, Joan Baez, Judy Collins, Richie Havens, and Country Joe McDonald. In 1976 Guthrie's autobiography, Bound for Glory (published in 1943), was made into a motion picture with David Carradine playing Guthrie. That same year, Guthrie's previously unpublished prose work, Seeds of Man, was published. In 1988 he was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. Billy Bragg and Wilco introduced a new generation to Guthrie with their collaboration on Mermaid Avenue, vols. 1 and 2. Released in 1998 and 2000, the albums featured Guthrie lyrics set to new music by Bragg and Wilco.

Buddy Guy

Born George Guy, July 30, 1936, Lettsworth, LA
 1967—Left My Blues in San Francisco (Chess) 1968—A Man and the Blues (Vanguard); This Is Buddy Guy 1972—Hold That Plane 1981—Stone Crazy! (Alligator) 1991—Damn Right, I've Got the Blues (Silvertone) 1992—The Very Best of Buddy Guy (Rhino); The Complete Chess Studio Recordings (Chess/MCA); My Time After Awhile (Vanguard) 1993—Feels Like Rain (Silvertone) 1994—Slippin' In 1996—Buddy Guy Live: The Real Deal (with G.E. Smith & the Saturday Night Live Band) (Silvertone) 1997—Buddy's Blues (MCA) 1998—As Good As It Gets (Vanguard); Heavy Love (Silvertone) 1999—Buddy's Baddest: The Best of Buddy Guy 2000—Buddy Guy: 1979–82 Complete JSP Recordings (JSP, U.K.) 2001—Sweet Tea.

With Junior Wells: 1970—I Was Walking Through the Woods (Chess) 1972—Buddy Guy & Junior Wells Play the Blues (Atlantic) 1981—Drinkin' TNT 'n' Smokin' Dynamite (Blind Pig) 1991—Alone & Acoustic (Alligator) 1992—Live in Montreux (Evidence) 1998—Last Time Around—Live at Legends (Silvertone).

Eric Clapton once described him as the best guitar player alive. In fact, it's been through the support of his many famous and respected admirers that blues master Buddy Guy has come to the attention of rock audiences, from touring with the Rolling Stones in 1970 to soliciting guest appearances from Clapton, Jeff Beck, and Mark Knopfler for Damn Right, I've Got the Blues, the Grammy-winning 1991 album that both reestablished his stature in the music community and marked his greatest commercial success to date.

Buddy Guy

Guy began playing his instrument as a teenager, inspired by such Southern blues greats as Lightnin' Slim and Guitar Slim. The young guitarist left Baton Rouge in 1957 to test his chops in Chicago, the urban capital of the electric blues. Guy was on the verge of starving when a merciful stranger led him to the 708 Club and persuaded that evening's performer, Otis Rush, to allow him to sit in. Guy's impromptu performance earned him a steady gig at the club, and he was soon playing regularly at other local venues. His fierce, visceral style caught the ear of venerable composer/bassist Willie Dixon, who helped Guy land a contract with the noted blues label Chess Records. Though Guy was originally signed by Leonard Chess as a singer, he became a house guitarist for the company, playing on records by such legendary artists as Muddy Waters and Howlin' Wolf in addition to making radiant recordings on his own. (Waters was an early Guy supporter, having caught his show at the 708 Club.)

Since Guy's arrangement with Chess prevented him from getting credit for his work with artists on other labels, he eventually switched to Vanguard. Some of his most memorable work on Vanguard was done in collaboration with the great harmonica player Junior Wells [see entry], who Guy first met in a Chicago club and with whom he maintained a close association until Wells' death of cancer in early 1998. (The duo's last concert, recorded in 1993, was released as Last Time Around—Live at Legends.) Some of Guy's most acclaimed solo albums have been recorded live, including the Alligator release Stone Crazy!, one of his personal favorites, which captures a 1978 performance in France.

Although many of Guy's fans insist that he is best appreciated in concert, his recordings through the '90s have proved critical and popular favorites. Among them are three star-studded Grammy-winning albums: 1991's Damn Right, I've Got the Blues, 1993's Feels Like Rain (featuring Bonnie Raitt, Paul Rodgers, John Mayall, and Travis Tritt), and 1994's Slippin' In (with the Double Trouble rhythm section, pianist Johnnie Johnson, and guitarist David Grissom). Heavy Love (1998) features Jonny Lang and Steve Cropper. In 1993 Guy received Billboard's Century Award. He tours constantly, appearing at blues clubs and festivals around the world. Guy owns a Chicago club called Buddy Guy's Legends, where he can be found both performing and enjoying the playing of other acts when he's in town.

Guy/Teddy Riley

Formed 1985, New York, NY

Teddy Riley (b. Oct. 8, 1966, Harlem, NY), various instr.; Aaron Hall (b. Aug. 10, 1964, Bronx, NY), voc.; Timmy Gatling, voc., dancer.

1987—Guy (Uptown/MCA) 1990—(—Gatling; + Damion Hall [b. Albert Damion Hall June 6, 1968, Brooklyn, NY], voc., choreography) The Future (MCA) 1999—(group re-forms) Guy III.

Aaron Hall solo: 1993—The Truth (Silas/MCA).

Damion Hall solo: 1994—Straight to the Point (Silas/MCA).

Teddy Riley with Blackstreet: 1994—Blackstreet (Interscope) 1996—Another Level 1999—Finally.

In the late '80s, while barely out of his teens, Teddy Riley fathered New Jack Swing, a contemporary strain of R&B that wed traditional soul singing to the hip-hop beats that drove rap music. Though Riley first became recognized for his work with Guy, a trio he formed with friends, the wunderkind quickly became one of the most sought-after writer/producers in the R&B community, lending his distinctive talents to hot young artists like Keith Sweat and Bobby Brown and established stars such as James Ingram and Michael Jackson.

Riley took up keyboards and percussion as a young child, and was playing piano in Harlem clubs by age 10. He began jamming with local funk musicians at 12 and performed with a couple of bands before putting together Guy with Aaron Hall, a church-trained singer, and Timmy Gatling. The group's eponymous debut generated the R&B hit "Groove Me" (#4, 1988). Gatling quit shortly after its release, and was replaced by Hall's brother Damion, a singer/dancer/choreographer. Riley scored Guy singles for the film soundtracks to Do the Right Thing ("Mr. Fantasy") and New Jack City ("New Jack City"). The group's sophomore LP, The Future (#16 pop, #1 R&B, 1990), yielded three R&B Top 10 singles in 1991: "Let's Chill" (#3), "Do Me Right" (#2), and "D-O-G Me Out" (#8).

Guy split up soon afterward, with the Hall brothers pursuing solo careers and Riley developing his own production company and continuing his collaborations with major artists. He worked extensively on Michael Jackson's Dangerous album, and with the fledgling hip-hop acts Wreckx-N-Effect, Kool Moe Dee, and SWV. In 1994 Riley formed Blackstreet with Chauncey "Black" Hannibal, Dave Hollister, and Levi Little, as a pledge of allegiance to the group, each member had the band's name tattooed on his arm. Blackstreet, the band's debut, yielded four singles: "Bootie Call" (#34 pop, #14 R&B, 1994), "Before I Let You Go" (#7 pop, #2 R&B, 1994), "Joy" (#43 pop, #12 R&B, 1995), and "Tonight's the Night" (#80 pop, #27 R&B, 1995). But it was the followup, 1996's Another Level (#3 pop, #1 R&B), that produced its signature hit "No Diggity" (#1 pop and R&B), which rode the charts for six months. The group also charted with "Fix" (#58 pop, #17 R&B), and guested on hits by Jay-Z ("The City Is Mine") and Janet Jackson (the 1998 R&B chart-topper "I Get Lonely"). "Take Me There," a track recorded with Mya for the soundtrack to The Rugrats Movie, reached #14 in late 1998. The group's third album, Finally, was released in 1999, as was a Guy reunion, Guy III.

a|b|c|d|e|f|g| |i|j|k||l|m|n|o|p|q|r|s|t|u|v|w|x|y|z

Sammy Hagar

Born Oct. 13, 1947, Monterey, CA
1976—Nine on a Ten Scale (Capitol) 1977—Sammy Hagar
1978—Musical Chairs; All Night Long 1979—Street Machine
1980—Danger Zone; Loud and Clear 1982—Standing
Hampton (Geffen); Three Lock Box; Rematch (Capitol) 1984—
VOA (Geffen) 1987—Sammy Hagar 1994—Unboxed
1997—Marching to Mars (Track Factory/MCA) 1999—Red
Voodoo (with the Waboritas).

Best known as the successor to Van Halen frontman David Lee Roth, whom he replaced in 1985, Sammy Hagar entered the rock market as the lead vocalist of Montrose [see entry]. He went solo in 1975 and again in the mid-'90s upon his exit from Van Halen [see entry]. Years of touring as an arena-show opening act made him a midlevel star.

As a teenager, he considered following his father into the boxing ring, but by age 19 he was supporting himself as a musician in Southern California bar bands. After seven years of beer-joint one-nighters, he joined Montrose, with whom he would remain for two years, in 1973. A cover of Van Morrison's "Flamingos Fly" garnered AOR airplay for Hagar's first solo disc. His career gained real momentum in 1977, when he formed his own band with Montrose alumni Bill Church (bass), Alan Fitzgerald (keyboards), and Dennis Carmasi (who replaced original drummer Scott Matthews and was later replaced by Chuck Ruff). Guitarist David Lewark (later replaced by Gary Pihl) also joined them. The Sammy Hagar Band's late-'70s releases sold in the 100,000-to-200,000 range. Three Lock Box's "Your Love Is Driving Me Crazy" (#13, 1982) cracked the Top 20, and VOA (#32, 1984) went platinum, yielding the hit "I Can't Drive 55" (#26, 1984), an anthem protest against the lowering of highway speed limits. Two years after joining Van Halen, Hagar released an eponymous solo album (#14, 1987), which produced the hit single "Give to Live" (#23, 1987).

In 1996 Hagar left Van Halen. The Van Halen brothers maintain that Hagar quit the group; Hagar claims that he was fired. Riding a wave of headlines about the split, Hagar struck out on his own again with 1997's bitter Marching to Mars (#18) and 1999's more lighthearted, party-and-booze-themed Red Voodoo (#22). The latter features backing by the Waboritas, a band named after a mixed drink invented by the singer. Hagar also runs a club, the Cabo Wabo Cantina in Cabo San Lucas, Mexico, and markets his own line of tequila, Cabo Wabo Reposado.

Nina Hagen

Born Katherina Hagen, Mar. 11, 1955, East Berlin, Ger.
1980—Nina Hagen Band EP (Columbia) 1982—Nunsexmonkrock 1983—Fearless 1985—Nina Hagen in Ekstasy 1988—Punk Wedding EP (Amok, Can.) 1989—Nina
Hagen (Mercury, Ger.) 1991—Street (Polydor) 1993—
Revolution Ballroom (Phonogram, Ger.) 1995—Freu(D)leuch (RCA, Ger.) 1996—Bee Happy; 14 Friendly Abductions: The Best of Nina Hagen (Columbia/Legacy) 2000—Return of the Mother (Orbit, Ger.).

Singing about God and flying saucers in an operatic punk howl, Nina Hagen is one of the most eccentric artists rock has known, and she provides a vital link in the chain connecting prepunk conceptual artist Yoko Ono with postpunk performance artist Diamanda Galas. Hagen was born into an artistic family in Communist Germany. She sang for her first band in 1972, performing blues and Janis Joplin and Tina Turner covers—an emotive vocal training that shaped her own work. She studied music in school in 1973. One of her early bands, Automobid, did performances that combined the formats of a rock concert and a dance-music club, long before British raves.

Hagen renounced her Eastern bloc citizenship and moved to West Berlin in 1976, when her stepfather, a dissident songwriter, was exiled. Already known west of the Berlin Wall, Hagen immediately signed with CBS in Germany. She spent time in London, working with the Slits and discovering punk. She formed a band with other Germans, and their first album, Nina Hagen Band, became a European smash. Hagen ignored her success and moved to Holland to hang with Herman Brood, with whom she appeared in the film Cha Cha, along with singer Lene Lovich. She became infamous for such antics as demonstrating masturbation techniques on Austrian TV. In 1979 she was contractually obligated to rejoin her band, and Unbehagen, their second album, immediately went gold in Germany.

Hagen's debut American release features two tracks each from her first two albums, including "African Reggae" and German versions of the Tubes' "White Punks on Dope" and Lovich's "Lucky Number." She recorded Nunsex-monkrock in New York with a band including Paul Shaffer and Chris Spedding, she sang in English but, with her voice wildly changing pitches and tone, she evoked Babylon. Hagen's religious interests took on a new thematic twist after she claimed to have seen a UFO in Malibu in 1981: The deities in her songs rode in flying saucers on Fearless. The dance-music album was produced by Giorgio Moroder and Keith Forsey and featured the club hit "New York New York" and the Red Hot Chili Peppers rapping on "What It Is."

Nina Hagen in Ekstasy mixed dance, punk, and metal sounds; the album includes covers of "My Way" and Norman Greenbaum's "Spint in the Sky." Unable to land even a novelty hit, Hagen stopped recording for CBS. In 1987 the singer's marriage to a teenage fan became a cause célèbre, something she celebrated on her Canadian EP Punk Wedding. Nina Hagen featured "Viva Las Vegas," a cover of Joplin's "Move Over," and "Ave Maria."

Hagen's '90s recordings have had little impact outside her native Germany, despite the fact that Revolution Ballroom (1993) was produced by former Roxy Music guitarist Phil Manzanera. Hagen has, however, appeared in a number of feature films, including Portrait of a Woman Drinker and Pedro Almodovar's Pepi, Luci, Bom. Toward the end of the decade, she also played high-profile gigs in New York, L.A., and San Francisco, during which, among other things, she revealed her growing involvement with Hindu mysticism. In 1999 the colorful diva's career was the subject of German filmmaker Peter Sempel's documentary Nina Hagen: Punk + Glory.

Merle Haggard

Born Apr. 6, 1937, Bakersfield, CA

1967—Branded Man (Capitol) 1969—Sing Me Back Home
1970—Okie From Muskogee 1970—The Fightin' Side of Me
1972—The Best of Merle Haggard 1977—Songs I'll Always Sing; A Working Man Can't Get Nowhere Today 1981—Songs for the Mama That Tried (MCA); Big City (Epic) 1983—Poncho and Lefty (with Willie Nelson); Going Where the Lonely Go 1985—Kern River 1986—A Friend in California 1987—Walking the Line (with George Jones and Willie Nelson); Seashores of Old Mexico (with Willie Nelson) 1990—Blue Jungle (Curb) 1994—1994 1995—The Lonesome Fugitive: The Merle Haggard Anthology (1963–1977) (Razor & Tie) 1996—1996 (Curb); Down Every Road: 1962–1994 (Capitol) 1999—For the Record: 43 Legendary Hits (BNA) 2000—If I Could Only Fly (Anti/Epitaph); New Light Through Old Windows (7-N Music).

One of country music's most gifted and prolific songwriters, Merle Haggard symbolizes the American workingman—dignified, downtrodden, and not unlikely to visit the neighborhood bar—of whom he often sings. He is also a staunch upholder of musical traditions, particularly Western swing, and he leads one of country music's most improvisatory bands. Though an outspoken critic of the Nashville star system, Haggard was inducted into the Country Music Hall of Fame in 1994, that same year he was feted with two simultaneous tribute albums, one consisting of country superstars, the other a group of rootsy country mavericks. Haggard himself fits equally into both camps.

Haggard was born to a family of transplanted Oklahomans who were living in a converted boxcar in California. When he was nine, his father died of a brain tumor. He quit school in the eighth grade and hopped a freight train at age 14. Through the end of his teens, he mostly roamed the Southwest. Haggard had been in and out of reformatories—from which he frequently escaped—by the age of 14 for such petty crimes as car theft. A 20-year-old married father, he was arrested for breaking into a cafe (drunk, he thought the booming business was closed) and spent nearly three years in San Quentin. He was paroled in 1960. (In 1972 then-California governor Ronald Reagan expunged Haggard's criminal record, granting him a full pardon.)

After prison, Haggard went back to Bakersfield and worked for his brother digging ditches. He started playing lead guitar in a local country band, and by 1962, when he went to Las Vegas to back singer Wynn Stewart, Haggard had decided to make music his career.

In 1963 he formed an enduring partnership with Lewis Talley and Fuzzy Owens, the owners of Tally Records, an independent label in the Bakersfield area for which Haggard made his early recordings. In 1963 Haggard's first release sold only 200 copies, but his second, "Sing Me a Sad Song," made #19 on the Billboard country chart. He recorded with Tally through 1965, and Owens remains one of Haggard's close associates. But after Haggard's third solo single "(All My Friends Are Gonna Be) Strangers" hit the C&W Top 10, he was signed by Capitol.

Haggard formed his own backing group, the Strangers, with whom he began touring an average of about 200 nights a year. (The Strangers released their first album of instrumentals in 1970.) After Haggard's first marriage ended in divorce, he married Buck Owens' ex-wife, singer Bonnie Owens. He had previously recorded with her for Tally, but their duet career began in earnest with their first joint Capitol LP, Just Between the Two of Us (#4 C&W, 1965). They shared hit records, tours, and awards until their divorce in 1978. (A few years later, Owens returned to touring and recording as a backup singer with Haggard.)

In 1966 "Swinging Doors" and "The Bottle Let Me Down" hit the Top 5 on the country chart, and later in the year "The Fugitive" became his first country #1. He has amassed more than 100 country chart singles since—including 38 #1 hits—and had at least one Top 5 country hit every year between 1966 and 1987. Among his biggest hits are "Mama Tried," "Sing Me Back Home," "Hungry Eyes," "It's Not Love (But It's Not Bad)," "Everybody's Had the Blues," "If We Make It Through December," "It's All in the Movies," and "Big City." Of the hundreds of songs he's written, many have become country standards (his "Today I Started Loving You Again" has been recorded by more than 400 artists). Haggard became a controversial figure during the Vietnam War era by extolling the virtues of patriotism in "The Fightin' Side of Me" and "Okie From Muskogee."

But Haggard was more a traditionalist than a hard-line conservative. His many recordings—more than 65 albums since 1963—include a tribute to Western swing pioneer Bob Wills (A Tribute to the Best Damn Fiddle Player in the World), a gospel tribute, The Land of Many Churches, which included backing from the Carter Family; I Love Dixie Blues, a 1973 tribute to Dixieland jazz recorded in New Orleans; and Same Train, a Different Time, in honor of his first idol, Jimmie Rodgers. He played at the White House in 1973 for President Nixon and his family, and later for the Reagans at their California ranch. His music was part of the Apollo 16 mission to the moon, per the crew's request.

In 1978 he married one of his backup singers, Leona Williams; that marriage also ended in divorce. (Briefly married for a fourth time, he married again in the early '90s. He has two young children with his fifth wife, and, with his first, three grown children, two of whom have pursued country-music careers.) In 1981 Haggard published an autobiography (cowritten with Peggy Russell), Sing Me Back Home.

An occasional actor as well as singer, he appeared on TV in The Waltons and Centennial. He made his movie debut in 1968's Killer Three and was featured the next year in From Nashville With Music. In 1980 he made a cameo appearance in Bronco Billy, singing a duet with Clint Eastwood, "Bar Room Buddies" (#1 C&W, 1980). In addition to Bonnie Owens and Leona Williams, Haggard has also recorded duets with both George Jones and Willie Nelson.

Haggard's hits began to wind down in the late '80s as the new "hat acts" began to monopolize the country chart. After 25 years on the road, Haggard curtailed touring to an extent, spending more time on his ranch near Lake Shasta. Just after the release of his first album in four years, 1994, Arista/Nashville issued Mama's Hungry Eyes: A Tribute to Merle Haggard, with tracks by Clint Black, Brooks and Dunn, Alan Jackson, Vince Gill, and Alabama, among others. Concurrently, the independent, California-based label Hightone released Tulare Dust: A Songwriters' Tribute to Merle Haggard, with contributions from Lucinda Williams, Dwight Yoakam, Joe Ely, John Doe (X), Dave Alvin (the Blasters), Billy Joe Shaver, and others. In October 1994 he was inducted into the Country Music Hall of Fame.

While the music industry lauded Haggard with awards, tribute albums, and lavish reissues (the most expansive being 1996's career-spanning, four-disc Capitol box set, Down Every Road), Haggard felt he was given short shift by his label, Curb. After both his 1994 and 1996 albums were issued with near identical, nondescript cover art and released with virtually no promotion, Haggard left Curb Records. His 1999 autobiography, Merle Haggard's House of Memories: For the Record, was accompanied in stores by a double-disc collection of rerecorded versions of his greatest hits, For the Record: 43 Legendary Hits. A handful of the songs featured Haggard dueting with the varied likes of Willie Nelson, Brooks and Dunn, and pop singer Jewel; his new version of his 1984 #1 hit "That's the Way Love Goes" with Jewel reached #56 on the country singles chart.

If that collaboration raised eyebrows, it was nothing compared to his signing in 2000 to the independent Anti Records, distributed by punk label Epitaph. His Anti debut, If I Could Only Fly, received widespread critical acclaim and peaked at #26 on the C&W chart. Also in 2000, Haggard recorded a pair of gospel albums, Cabin in the Hills and Two Old Friends (with Albert E. Brumley Jr.), which he sold exclusively on his Web site and in Wal-Mart stores.

Haircut 100

Formed 1980, Beckenham, Eng.

Nick Heyward (b. May 20, 1961, Beckenham), voc.; Les Nemes (b. Dec. 5, 1960, Croydon, Eng.), bass; Graham Jones (b. July 8, 1961, Bridlington, Eng.), gtr.; "Memphis" Blair Cunningham (b. Oct. 11, 1957, New York, NY), drums; Phil Smith (b. May 1, 1959, Redbridge, Eng.), gtr.; Mark Fox (b. Feb. 13, 1958), perc., voc.

1982—Pelican West (Arista) 1983—(– Heyward) Paint and Paint (Polydor, U.K.) 1998—Nick Heyward & Haircut One Hundred Greatest Hits (BMG/Camden, U.K.).

Nick Heyward solo: 1983—North of a Miracle (Arista) 1987—Postcards From Home 1989—I Love You Avenue (Reprise)

1994—From Monday to Sunday (Epic) 1997—World's End (Creation, U.K.) 1998—The Apple Bed (Big Deal).

Though it claims but one U.S. Top 40 hit, 1982's "Love Plus One," Haircut 100's name still evokes an early-'80s wave of pretty English boys making fluffy dance pop and ingratiating bubblegum soul. Haircut 100 did enjoy greater (albeit short-lived) success in its native U.K., where the quintet's debut album, Pelican West (#2 U.K., 1982), spawned the hits "Favourite Shirts (Boy Meets Girl)" (#4 U.K., 1981) and "Fantastic Day" (#9 U.K., 1982) in addition to "Love Plus One" (#3, 1982). Critics praised the group for its savvy incorporation of Latin rhythms and jazz-funk textures, but scoffed at Nick Heyward's fey vocals and the band's meticulous, preening image. Heyward—also the group's songwriter—soon decided to pursue a solo career, and percussionist Mark Fox took over lead vocals for Haircut's followup LP, Paint and Paint, which never reached American shores and failed to chart in England. The group split up shortly afterward. Heyward made pleasurable, more contemplative pop albums on his own and settled down as a husband and father, while drummer "Memphis" Blair Cunningham played in one of the Pretenders' numerous lineups.

Bill Haley

Born July 6, 1925, Highland Park, MI; died Feb. 9, 1981, Harlingen, TX

1955—Rock Around the Clock (Decca) 1968—Greatest Hits (MCA) 1974—Golden Hits.

Bill Haley emerged from country music with "Rock Around the Clock," a rockabilly song that made him a teen idol. He cut his first record, "Candy Kisses," when he was 18, then hit the road for four years as a singer and guitarist with various country & western bands. In 1948 he became a disc jockey at WPWA in Chester, Pennsylvania. Calling himself the Ramblin' Yodeler, he put together a band, the Four Aces of Western Swing, to perform regularly on his radio show. With another group—first called the Down Homers, then the Saddlemen—he recorded country songs that quickly disappeared into obscurity. In 1950 they were signed to a Philadelphia label, Essex, and recorded a handful of country sides before covering Jackie Brenston's 1951 R&B hit, "Rocket 88." That record sold only 10,000 copies, but the song convinced Haley that high-energy music that kids could sing along to, clap to, and dance to—something like black R&B—would prove popular.

In 1952 he dropped his cowboy image altogether, changed the group's name to Bill Haley and His Comets, and covered another R&B hit, "Rock the Joint," which sold 75,000 copies. A Haley original, "Crazy Man Crazy," was covered by one Ralph Marterie and given extensive airplay, but Haley's own more rambunctious version was the one sought in record shops, and in 1953 it became the first rock & roll record to make the Billboard pop chart.

In 1954 Haley left Essex and signed with Decca under producer Milt Gabler. His first record for his new label was a song written by Jimmy DeKnight and his manager, Dave Myers, and originally recorded in 1952 by Sunny Dae: "Rock Around the Clock." It sold only moderately when first released in spring 1954, but its followup, a cover of Joe Turner's "Shake, Rattle and Roll," hit the Top 10 both in the U.K. and in the U.S., eventually selling a million copies. When "Rock Around the Clock" was rereleased in 1955 it rose to #1. The song was included on the soundtrack of Blackboard Jungle, a 1955 movie about juvenile delinquents, and it led viewers to identify the balding Haley as a young rebel. Throughout 1955 and 1956 he was the most popular rock & roll performer in the world, and within those two years he had 12 U.S. Top 40 records, including "See You Later Alligator," "Burn That Candle," "Dim, Dim the Lights," "Razzle-Dazzle," and "R-O-C-K."

In Britain, where authentic rock & rollers were scarcer than in America, he was even more popular. His visit there in February 1957 met with wild enthusiasm. But already his star was descending in America. High exposure (he starred in two Hollywood movies, Rock Around the Clock and Don't Knock the Rock) revealed him to be a pudgy, rather stiff, hardly rebellious family man. His last Top 40 hit was "Skippy Minnie" in 1958. While he never attempted to modernize his sound or his image, Haley continued to work as a nostalgia act, especially in Britain and Germany, where he was always treated as a star ("Rock Around the Clock" reentered the U.K. pop chart seven times, most recently in 1974). In 1969 and through the early '70s, Bill Haley and His Comets traveled with the Rock 'n' Roll Revival Shows promoted by Richard Nader and documented in a 1973 movie, Let the Good Times Roll. By the time of Haley's death from a heart attack, he had sold an estimated 60 million records; "Rock Around the Clock" alone has sold over 22 million copies worldwide. He was among the first inductees into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, in 1986. The Comets, meanwhile, continue to perform.

Daryl Hall and John Oates

Formed 1969, Philadelphia, PA

Daryl Hall (b. Oct. 11, 1949, Pottstown, PA), voc.; John Oates (b. Apr. 7, 1949, New York, NY), gtr., voc.

1972—Whole Oates (Atlantic) 1973—Abandoned

Luncheonette 1974—War Babies 1975—Daryl Hall John

Oates (RCA) 1976—Bigger Than Both of Us 1977—No

Goodbyes (Atlantic); Beauty on a Back Street (RCA) 1978—

Along the Red Ledge; Live Time 1979—X-Static 1980—

Voices 1981—Private Eyes 1982—H₂O 1983—Rock 'n

Soul Part 1 1984—Big Bam Boom 1985—Live at the Apollo

With David Ruffin and Eddie Kendrick 1988—Ooh Yeah! (Arista)

1990—Change of Season 1997—Marigold Sky (Push).

Daryl Hall solo: 1980—Sacred Songs (RCA) 1986—Three Hearts in the Happy Ending Machine 1993—Soul Alone (Epic)

1996—Can't Stop Dreaming (Push).

Daryl Hall and John Oates' blend of rock and R&B kept them on the singles chart throughout the '70s and '80s. They are the #1 charting duo in rock & roll history. Both were raised in Philadelphia suburbs. At age four Oates had moved to Pennsylvania from New York. He began playing guitar at age eight. Hall studied voice and piano. As teens, the two frequented Philadelphia ghettos, where they joined doo-wop groups. In 1967 Hall recorded a single with Kenny Gamble and the Romeos (which included future producers Gamble, Leon Huff, and Thom Bell). He met Oates later that year when his group, the Temptones, and Oates' group, the Masters, competed in a battle of the bands at Philadelphia's Adelphi Ballroom; they shared a freight elevator while escaping a gang fight. At Temple University Oates earned a degree in journalism, and Hall studied music but dropped out in his senior year.

Daryl Hall and John Oates

Hall formed Gulliver, a group that recorded one LP on Elektra in 1969, and Oates joined before it disbanded. Oates then traveled to Europe, and Hall became a studio musician, singing backup for the Delfonics, the Stylistics, and the Intruders. Upon Oates' return, the two decided to team up. In 1972 they signed with Atlantic Records and released their Anf Mardin-produced debut, Whole Oates, a folky album that attracted little attention. Their next LP, the R&B-oriented Abandoned Luncheonette (also produced by Mardin), yielded "She's Gone," a flop for Hall and Oates but a #1 R&B hit for Tavares six months later. In 1974 the two recorded War Babies, a concept LP, with producer Todd Rundgren. A drastic departure from their earlier efforts, the LP sold 100,000 copies in the New York area. Citing a lack of hit singles and stylistic inconsistency, Atlantic dropped them, but in 1976 the rereleased version of "She's Gone" made #7.

Their RCA debut (Daryl Hall John Oates) contained "Sara Smile," a #4 hit cowritten by Hall for his frequent collaborator/girlfriend Sara Allen (whose sister Janna Allen cowrote "Kiss on My List," "Private Eyes," and other Hall and Oates songs; she died of leukemia in 1993). With the release of 1976's Bigger Than Both of Us, the two previous albums went gold. Bigger eventually became their first platinum LP and contained their first #1 single, "Rich Girl."

Hall, the more prolific writer of the two, began working with Robert Fripp on a solo LP, Sacred Songs, which RCA refused to release until 1980. He also sang on Fripp's Exposure. Yet apart from the Top 20 "It's a Laugh" from Along the Red Ledge, and "Wait for Me" from X-Static the duo hit a late-'70s commercial slump. Hall and Oates retrenched and decided to produce their next LP themselves. The result, 1980's platinum Voices, returned them to the singles chart with a vengeance: "How Does It Feel to Be Back" (#30), "Kiss on My List" (#1), a cover of the Righteous Brothers' "You've Lost That Loving Feeling" (#12), and "You Make My Dreams" (#5). The following year's Private Eyes was similarly successful; the title cut and "I Can't Go for That (No Can Do)" were both #1, while "Did It in a Minute" went Top 10. H₂O yielded still more hits with "Maneater" (#1), "Family Man" (#6), and "One on One" (#7). Even the two new songs included on a best-of LP, the double-platinum Rock 'n Soul Part 1, cracked the Top 10: "Say It Isn't So" (#2, 1983) and "Adult Education" (#8, 1984). Big Bam Boom incorporated a marked hip-hop influence and produced Hall and Oates' sixth and last #1 hit, "Out of Touch," as well as "Method of Modern Love" (#5, 1985), "Some Things Are Better Left Unsaid" (#18, 1985), and "Possession Obsession" (#30, 1985). After a live LP recorded at Harlem's Apollo Theatre with former Temptations Eddie Kendricks (or Kendrick, as he was sometimes billed) and David Ruffin, Hall and Oates took a three-year sabbatical, during which time Hall released a second solo album, Three Hearts in the Happy Ending Machine. Its "Dreamtime" went Top 5 in 1986.

Hall and Oates resumed recording in 1988, but this third career phase was noticeably less successful. Their two albums, Ooh Yeah! and Change of Season, contained only one hit apiece: "Everything Your Heart Desires" (#3, 1988) and "So Close" (#11, 1990). After a long hiatus, during which Hall released two solo efforts, the pair signed to BMG-affiliated Push Records and released the commercially unspectacular Mangold Sky (#95, 1997). The single "Promise Ain't Enough" did however climb to #6 on the Adult Contemporary chart.

Tom T. Hall

Born Thomas Hall, May 25, 1936, Olive Hill, KY
 1968—Ballad of Forty Dollars and His Other Great Songs (Mercury) 1971—In Search of a Song 1972—We All Got Together And . . .; The Storyteller 1973—The Rhymer and Other Five and Dimers; For the People in the Last Hard Town 1974—Songs of Fox Hollow for Children of All Ages 1976—The Magnificent Music Machine 1982—The Storyteller and the Banjoman (Columbia) 1995—Storyteller, Poet, Philosopher (Mercury) 1996—Songs From Sopchoppy 1997—Homegrown.

If any writer understood that the key to the durable country song was in the tale told, it is Tom T. Hall, dubbed "the Storyteller." His songs place a premium on narrative, best exemplified by Hall's most popular tune, "Harper Valley P.T.A."

By the time he was nine years old Hall was already writing songs. As a teenager he played guitar in a bluegrass band and eventually landed a job as a disc jockey. Upon returning from the army in 1961 he enrolled at Roanoke College in Virginia where he studied literature, while continuing to write songs. Hall met with quick acclaim; Dave Dudley, Bobby Bare, and Burl Ives cut his songs.

By 1964, Hall had moved to Nashville, where he began a recording career of his own. His first single, "I Washed My Face in the Morning Dew" (1967), hit the C&W Top 40. The next year Hall's "Harper Valley P.T.A." (as recorded by Jeanie C. Riley) went to #1 on the pop chart and sold 6 million records. As with all of the songs he originally wrote for other artists, Hall has never recorded "Harper Valley P.T.A." himself.

Hall's most acclaimed songs of the '70s, including "The Year That Clayton Delaney Died" and "(Old Dogs, Children and) Watermelon Wine," relate vivid, detailed stories made all the more powerful for their economy of means. In 1973 Hall had his biggest pop hit, "I Love" (#12, #1 C&W). Hall's "I Can't Dance" was also recorded by Gram Parsons, and Leo Kottke cut the ironic "Pamela Brown." In 1978 Hall was inducted into the Nashville Songwriters' Hall of Fame.

All told, Hall has recorded nearly 30 albums, including a pair of bluegrass albums, The Magnificent Music Machine and The Storyteller and the Banjoman, which featured Bill Monroe and Earl Scruggs, respectively. Notable anthologies include the Storyteller, Poet, Philosopher box set and a collection of his country songs for children. Meanwhile, his songs are still being recorded by both mainstream acts (Alan Jackson, Billy Ray Cyrus) and others outside the Nashville establishment (Whiskeytown and Joe Henry, as featured on Sire Record's 1998 tribute album Real: The Tom T. Hall Project).

As of this writing, Hall has published nine books, including the novels The Laughing Man of Woodmont, Coves and What a Book! A Novel: The Songwriter's Handbook, an artist's guide; and short story collections.

Hammer

Born Stanley Kirk Burrell, Mar. 30, 1963, Oakland, CA
 As M.C. Hammer: 1988—Feel My Power (Bust It); Let's Get It Started (Capitol) 1990—Please Hammer Don't Hurt 'Em 1995—V Inside Out (Giant) 1996—Greatest Hits (Capitol) 1998—Family Affair (Oaktown).
 As Hammer: 1991—Too Legit to Quit 1994—The Funky Headhunter (Giant).

Savvy entrepreneur, showman extraordinaire, product pitchman, inspiration for both a doll and a Saturday morning cartoon, and African-American role model, M.C. Hammer appeared to be the rap incarnation of James Brown after the release of his #1 pop album, Please Hammer Don't Hurt 'Em. His massive success proved short-lived, however.

Growing up in the rougher precincts of Oakland, Stanley Kirk Burrell had two interests: performing and baseball. Combining them, he'd dance in the parking lot of the Oakland Coliseum, home of the baseball A's. Discovered there by the team's owner, Charlie Finley, Burrell was hired as a bat boy and soon became the team's unofficial mascot. The players nicknamed him Little Hammer because he resembled home-run king "Hammerin'" Hank Aaron. Two players, Mike Davis and Dwayne Murphy, gave more, each investing $20,000 in Hammer's Bustin' Records, started after an abortive attempt to break into pro ball and a three-year hitch in the Navy.

Hammer's first single, "Ring 'Em," sold by Hammer and his wife, became a #1 Bay Area hit. His debut album, Feel My Power, coproduced by Con Funk Shun producer Felton Pilate, sold 60,000 copies. Spotted in the audience at a club by a Capitol Records exec, who "didn't know who he was, but knew he was somebody," the label found out soon enough, handing Hammer a multialbum deal and a $750,000 advance. His first Capitol release, Let's Get It Started, a revamped version of Power, eventually sold 2 million copies.

Recorded on the back of his tour bus for less than $10,000, Please Hammer Don't Hurt 'Em sold more than 10 million copies, holding the #1 position for a record-shattering 21 weeks. It included the hits "U Can't Touch This" (#8, 1990) and "Pray" (#2, 1990). Buttressed by an elaborate, 30-member stage show, Hammer became a household word, appearing in Pepsi ads, heavy MTV rotation, and his own kids' cartoon, Hammerman. He also branched out, into management (Oaktown's 3.57), horse racing, and his own Help the Children Foundation. This kind of success breeds controversy, and some rappers publicly "dissed" Hammer's mainstream style and extravagant clothes (billowy harem-style pants), calling him a sellout. In 1990 Rick James sued Hammer over the sampling of "Super Freak" in "U Can't Touch This." Settling out of court, James was given cowriter credit.

For Too Legit to Quit, Hammer dropped the "M.C." from his name and saw his audience drop with it. Selling a more-than-respectable 3 million copies, Too Legit was a disappointment, despite its #5 title track, "2 Legit 2 Quit." A planned world tour was canceled midway, and Hammer's career hasn't been the same since. After a last-gasp hit with "Addams Groove," the theme to The Addams Family movie, Hammer returned in 1994 with a new label (Irving Azoff's Giant Records) and a gangsta rap persona. The Funky Headhunter only reached #12 and barely made platinum. Losing the gangsta costumes and reattaching the M.C. to his name didn't help V Inside Out (1995). Peaking at #119 and falling out of sight after only three weeks, the album effectively put an end to Hammer's career. He declared bankruptcy in 1997, and another album, Family Affair, was released.

Peter Hammill: See Van der Graaf Generator

John Hammond

Born Nov. 13, 1942, New York, NY
 1962—John Hammond (Vanguard) 1964—Big City Blues; Country Blues 1965—So Many Roads 1967—Mirrors; I Can Tell (Atlantic) 1968—Sooner or Later 1969—Southern Fried 1970—The Best of John Hammond (Vanguard); Source Point (Columbia) 1971—Dustin Hoffman as Little Big Man soundtrack 1972—I'm Satisfied 1973—Triumvirate (with Michael Bloomfield and Dr. John) 1975—Can't Beat the Kid (Capricorn) 1976—John Hammond: Solo (Vanguard) 1978—Footwork 1979—Hot Tracks 1980—Mileage (Sonet) 1982—Frogs for Snakes (Rounder) 1984—John Hammond Live in Greece (Lyra, Gr.) 1988—Nobody But You (Flying Fish) 1992—Got Love If You Want It (Pointblank/Charisma) 1994—Trouble No More (Pointblank/Virgin) 1995—Found True Love 1998—Long As I Have You 2001—Wicked Grin.

Blues singer John Paul Hammond is the son of talent scout/producer John Hammond. He studied art and sculpture in his youth and he became interested in country and Delta blues. While attending Antioch College in Yellow Springs, Ohio, Hammond learned guitar and harmonica and started singing.

His professional career began in L.A. in 1962, when he recorded an acoustic blues album for Vanguard. He continued to record regularly for Vanguard in the early '60s. In late 1963 he met some musicians who had once backed rockabilly singer Ronnie Hawkins in a Toronto bar. Hammond enticed the group, Levon and the Hawks (who would later become the Band), to come with him to New York. They backed Hammond until they were lured away by Bob Dylan (a discovery of Hammond's father). In the mid-'60s his backing band included, briefly, Jimi Hendrix.

Hammond played clubs regularly in the late '60s. He played many small concert venues (the Fillmores, Matrix Ballroom) as well. He performed on the 1971 soundtrack of the Dustin Hoffman film Little Big Man. The following year he recorded an album with bluesman Larry Johnson for the Biograph label. In 1973 he recorded for Columbia as part of a short-lived supergroup called Triumvirate, which also included Dr. John and Mike Bloomfield. By the late '70s, he was still playing clubs and touring internationally (he released a live album recorded in Greece in 1984). While staying true to the blues, Hammond has recorded in a variety of settings, often with name backing: Robbie Robertson, Garth Hudson, and Levon Helm of the Band, and Mike Bloomfield (on piano) on the mid-'60s albums So Many Roads and Mirrors; Robertson, the Band's Rick Danko, and Rolling Stone Bill Wyman on I Can Tell; Duane Allman on Southern Fried; blues pianist Roosevelt Sykes on Footwork; J.J. Cale and John Lee Hooker on Got Love If You Want It; Cale and blues singer Charles Brown on Trouble No More; and Duke Robillard and Charlie Musselwhite on Found True Love. Following the self-produced Long As I Have You, Hammond released Wicked Grin, an album consisting primarily of Tom Waits covers and produced by Waits himself.

Herbie Hancock

Born Apr. 12, 1940, Chicago, IL
1962—Takin' Off (Blue Note) 1963—My Point of View;

Inventions and Dimensions 1964—Empyrean Isles 1965—Maiden Voyage 1966—Blow-Up soundtrack (MGM) 1968—Hancock (Blue Note); Speak Like a Child 1969—The Prisoner; Fat Albert Rotunda (Warner Bros.) 1970—Mwandishi 1971—Crossings 1972—Sextant (Columbia) 1973—Headhunters 1974—Dedication; Thrust (Warner Bros.); Death Wish soundtrack (One Way) 1975—In Concert, vol. 2 (CTI); Flood (Columbia); Love Me by Name (A&M); Manchild 1976—Live in Japan (Columbia/Sony, Jap.); Secrets (Columbia); Happy the Man (Arista); Kawaida (DJM) 1977—Herbie Hancock Trio; V.S.O.P. (Columbia); Tempest in the Colosseum (Columbia/Sony); Sunlight 1978—An Evening With (Columbia, U.K.); Direct Step (Columbia); The Piano Core/Hancock (Polydor); Feets Don't Fail Me Now (Columbia) 1979—Live Under the Sky; In Concert (CBS) 1980—Monster (Columbia); Mr. Hands 1982—Herbie Hancock Quartet; Double Rainbow; By All Means (MPS); Magic Windows (Columbia) 1982—Lite Me Up 1983—Future Shock 1984—Sound-System 1985—Village Life (Columbia) 1986—Jazz Africa (Verve); Third Plane (Carrere) 1988—Perfect Machine (Columbia); Songs for My Father (Blue Note) 1994—Dis Is Da Drum (Mercury); Jamming (ROYAL CO.); A Tribute to Miles (Qwest) 1995—Jammin' With Herbie (Prime Cuts); Cantaloupe Island (Blue Note); New Standard (Verve) 1996—In Concert (Tristar); Living Jazz (Graphix Zone) 1997—I + 1 (PolyGram) 1998—Gershwin's World; Return of the Headhunters (Verve).

Keyboardist Herbie Hancock came to prominence as the pianist in Miles Davis' landmark mid-'60s quintet, a unit that went from refined postbop chamber jazz to pioneering electric fusion. The latter spurred Hancock on to a funk-fusion direction of his own. Once he established himself commercially, however, Hancock divided his time between funk and his harmonically adventurous, impressionistic acoustic jazz.

Although he had studied music, Hancock was working toward a B.A. in engineering at Grinnell College. In 1963 he came to New York and worked with jazz trumpeter Donald Byrd, at whose instigation Hancock recorded his first solo LP. His "Watermelon Man" was a pop-jazz crossover hit for Mongo Santamania. From 1963 to 1968, Hancock worked with Miles Davis; he also recorded solo albums and played on many sessions for Blue Note Records. After scoring Michelangelo Antonioni's film Blow-Up, he left Davis and began pursuing fusion with the 1970 album Mwandishi.

Hancock's breakthrough came with Headhunters, for which he formed the band of the same name, later explaining, "Rather than work with jazz musicians who could play funk, I worked with funk musicians who could play jazz." That album yielded the crossover hit "Chameleon" (#42 pop, #18 R&B, 1974). Thrust, Manchild, and the Death Wish film soundtrack also sold well, as did Fat Albert Rotunda, his soundtrack to a Bill Cosby cartoon TV special. In 1976 Hancock briefly diverged from his electric-funk course to form V.S.O.P. (Very Special Onetime Performance), an acoustic jazz group with Tony Williams, Weather Report's Wayne Shorter, bassist Ron Carter, and trumpeter Freddie Hubbard, playing in the early Blue Note-Miles Davis mode. They conducted a successful tour and recorded an album, and have since reconvened.

Herbie Hancock

Shortly thereafter, Hancock converted to Nicheran Shoshu Buddhism and two years later undertook an acoustic-piano duo tour with Chick Corea. In 1979 Feets Don't Fail Me Now was another commercial success, as was Monster in 1980. In 1981 V.S.O.P. toured and recorded as a quartet, minus Shorter and with trumpeter Wynton Marsalis replacing Hubbard. In 1982 Hancock produced Wynton Marsalis' Columbia Records debut, Hancock would later tour with brothers Wynton and Branford Marsalis.

The unexpected success of Future Shock and its single, "Rockit" (#71, 1983), gave Hancock even greater visibility. As produced by Bill Laswell, "Rockit" incorporated funk rhythms and hip-hop "scratching." The accompanying video (directed by Godley and Creme) won five MTV Video Music Awards in 1984. Hancock also established a career scoring films, including A Soldier's Story (1984), Round Midnight (1986), Richard Pryor's Jo Jo Dancer Your Life Is Calling (1986), and Colors (1988). Hancock won an Oscar for the Round Midnight soundtrack.

Though he ventures outside the genre, Hancock never leaves jazz far behind. In 1992, Hancock organized a Tribute to Miles [Davis] tour, which included Tony Williams, Wayne Shorter, Ron Carter, and Wallace Roney. Hancock continues working in a piano trio context, displaying what is perhaps the most influential piano style among today's post-Marsalis players. Later in the '90s Hancock founded Rhythm of Life, a foundation that offers arts and music classes to disenfranchised youth in San Francisco. In 1997 he was appointed artistic director of a $1.2-million jazz performance and education program sponsored by the Music Center of L.A. County and the Washington-based Thelonious Monk Institute of Jazz. In 1998 Gershwin's World, featuring Stevie Wonder and Joni Mitchell, won Hancock a Grammy Award. The next year, he began hosting Future Wave, a television program about music technology for BET on Jazz.

Hanson

Formed 1992, Tulsa, OK

Taylor Hanson (b. Mar. 14, 1983, Tulsa, OK), voc., kybds.; Isaac Hanson (b. Clarke Isaac Hanson, Nov. 17, 1980, Tulsa, OK), gtr., voc.; Zac Hanson (b. Zachary Hanson, Oct. 22, 1985, Arlington, VA), drums, voc.

1997—Middle of Nowhere (Mercury); Snowed In 1998—3 Car Garage; Indie Recordings '95-'96; Live From Albertane 2000—This Time Around (Island).

The brothers Hanson—Taylor, Isaac, and Zac—were the first of a seemingly endless wave of teen pop acts that came to dominate the charts at the tail end of the '90s. After its release in 1997, Hanson's infectious debut single, "MMMBop," rocketed to #1 in 27 countries and pushed Middle of Nowhere to worldwide sales of more than 8 million. By the time the boys released their second studio album, 2000's This Time Around, however, they learned how fickle the teen audience can be: A year later, it had yet to go platinum in America.

Three of six siblings in Tulsa, Oklahoma, the Hanson brothers were all home-schooled by their mother. After they took up their instruments, their family room jams eventually led to a stint of state fair-type performances and a pair of self-released recordings, a 1995 album, Boomerang, and a 1996 EP, MMMBop. The title track on the latter landed them a deal with Mercury in 1996, and the group commenced recording its major label debut in L.A. with help from established industry professionals like songwriter Desmond Child and hip producers Stephen Lironi (Black Grape) and the Dust Brothers (Beck, Beastie Boys). Despite all the hired hands, Taylor, Isaac, and Zac—just 14, 16, and 11, respectively, at the time—played their own instruments and wrote or cowrote every song on the album.

The Middle of Nowhere (#2, 1997) was an immediate success, quickly going quadruple platinum and sparking crowds of screaming teen and preteen girls at the group's appearances. Critics were kind to the album, too, recognizing the boys' sharp melodic sensibilities and often comparing precocious lead singer Taylor to the young Michael Jackson, "Little" Stevie Wonder, and the teenage Stevie Winwood of the Spencer Davis Group (underscored by Hanson's straight-up cover of "Gimme Some Lovin'" during their live shows). Mercury fed the frenzy by rapidly releasing three more Hanson albums over the course of the following 18 months: a Christmas set, Snowed In (#7, 1997), the live Live From Albertane (#32, 1998), and a compilation of songs from their two self-released recordings entitled 3 Car Garage: The Indie Recordings '95-'96 (#6, 1998).

Hanson would take three years before releasing a proper followup to Middle of Nowhere, however, and in the interim, the Backstreet Boys, 'N Sync, and Britney Spears had achieved fame on a level that made Hansonmania seem positively modest by comparison. Hanson's return with the more mature, rock-oriented This Time Around (featuring guest jams by Blues Traveler harpist John Popper and teen guitarist Jonny Lang) found the group largely out of sync with its teenybopper audience. The title track made it to #20, while the album climbed no higher than #19. In early 2001 the brothers began working on a new album in their home studio in Tulsa, collaborating on the projected first single with Matthew Sweet.

Happy Mondays/Black Grape

Formed 1980, Manchester, Eng.

Bez (b. Mark Berry, Apr. 18, 1964, Manchester), perc., dancer; Paul Davis (b. Mar. 7, 1966, Manchester), kybds.; Mark Day (b. Dec. 29, 1961, Manchester), gtr.; Paul Ryder (b. Apr. 24, 1964, Manchester), bass; Shaun Ryder (b. Shaun William George Ryder, Aug. 23, 1962, Manchester), voc.; Gary Whelan (b. Feb. 12, 1966, Manchester), drums.

1987—Squirrel and G-Man Twenty Four Hour Party People Plastic Face Carnt Smile (White Out) (Factory, U.K.) 1988—Bummed 1989—Madchester, Rave On 1990—Pills 'n' Thrills and Bellyaches (Elektra) 1991—Live 1992—Yes, Please 1993—Double Easy: The U.S. Singles (group disbands) 1999—(group re-forms: S. Ryder; P. Ryder; Bez; Whelan; + P. Wagstaff, gtr.; + Nuts, voc.).

Black Grape, formed 1993, Manchester: Bez, Shaun Ryder, Kermit (b. Paul Leveridge) voc.; Jed Lynch, drums; Wags (b. Paul Wagstaff) gtr.; Psycho (b. Carl McCarthy), voc.; Danny Saber, bass, kybds.

1995—It's Great When You're Straight . . . Yeah! (Radioactive) (- Bez) 1998—Stupid, Stupid, Stupid (group disbands).

Ecstasy-drenched and spacy, Happy Mondays dominated the British clubs and charts in the late '80s with their definitive acid-house grooves. Led by the outspoken Shaun Ryder and featuring Bez, a dancer, Happy Mondays practically invented the U.K. rave scene (along with the Stone Roses) and had an almost exclusively British following until 1990, when Pills 'n' Thrills and Bellyaches (#89) caught on in the States.

Formed by Ryder and his bass-playing brother, Paul, Happy Mondays played Manchester's Hacienda Club before signing to Factory Records. After the band toured with New Order, Bernard Sumner produced its second single "Freaky Dancin'." Happy Mondays' debut album, Squirrel and G-Man . . ., which John Cale produced in 10 days, included the singles "Tart Tart" and "24 Hour Party People" and established the acid-house sound—bass- and drum-heavy extended dance mixes with touches of '60s psychedelia and '70s R&B.

When Elektra released their second album, 1988's Bummed, in the U.S. in 1989, it stiffed. Among other problems, the band seemed too stoned to play its first stateside gig. But fueled by "Step On" (#9 Modern Rock, 1990) and the infectious "Step On" Remix '91" (#57, 1991), Pills 'n' Thrills and Bellyaches (#89, 1991) broke out in clubs. The album also featured a tribute to their '60s idol, "Donovan," (the Ryder brothers later became romantically linked with the singer's daughters, Astrella and Oriol). A live album, Live, followed. Produced by Chris Frantz and Tina Weymouth, Yes, Please, along with "Cut 'Em Loose Bruce," again hit in clubs and on modern-music radio, but not with mainstream listeners. In 1993 the band split up.

Shaun Ryder made a surprising return in 1995 with Black Grape. The new band added rap and funk influences to the Monday's raves and immediately entered the British charts with the single "Reverend Black Grape" and the album It's Great When You're Straight . . . Yeah! (#1, U.K.). While the title may have reflected a new sobriety for Ryder, his past still haunted him, and the band was originally denied entry to the U.S. due to prior offenses in the U.K. When the band was finally allowed into the States in 1996, it had lost Kermit (who could not tour due to illness but continued to work with the band) and Bez. Whatever momentum the band had was lost, and the record sold only 36,000 copies in America. Another British Top 10 single, "Fat Neck" (1996), recorded with former Smiths guitarist Johnny Marr, failed to shore up the band, and by early 1998, Ryder had parted ways with the rest of Black Grape, save producer Danny Saber. The band's next album, 1998's Stupid, Stupid, Stupid (released in the U.K. in late 1997), sold disappointingly on both sides of the Atlantic, and in 1998, Ryder threw in the towel. Just a year later, however, a new, postrehab Happy Mondays (sans original members Day and Davis) re-formed, including Black Grape's Paul Wagstaff (see chronology above for personnel) for a U.K. tour. They also released "The Boys Are Back in Town, Pt. 1," a cover of Thin Lizzy's 1976 rock anthem.

Tim Hardin

Born Dec. 23, 1941, Eugene, OR; died Dec. 29, 1980, Los Angeles, CA

1966—Tim Hardin I (MGM) 1967—Tim Hardin II 1968—Tim Hardin III Live in Concert (Verve) 1969—Tim Hardin IV; Suite for Susan Moore and Damion—We Are—One, One, All in One (Columbia) 1970—The Best of Tim Hardin (Verve) 1971—Bird on a Wire (Columbia) 1973—Painted Head; Archetypes (MGM); Nine (Antilles) 1981—Reason to Believe; The Best of Tim Hardin (Polydor) 1994—Hang On to a Dream: The Verve Recordings (Polygram Chronicles) 1996—Simple Songs of Freedom: The Tim Hardin Collection (Legacy).

Singer/songwriter Tim Hardin came to prominence during the folk-blues revival in the early '60s. He enjoyed critical acclaim for his smoky voice but had little commercial success on his own; others recorded his songs "If I Were a Carpenter" and "Reason to Believe."

Hardin traced his lineage back to the 19th-century Western outlaw John Wesley Hardin. He quit high school in 1959 and joined the Marines for two years, then enrolled in the American Academy of Dramatic Art in New York, but dropped out after a week. He moved to Cambridge, Massachusetts, and began performing in the folk clubs around Harvard Hardin's first tapes were recorded in 1962 but weren't released until 1967, as his third album. He returned to New York in 1963 and became an influential figure in Greenwich Village folk circles, blending strains of folk, blues, and jazz and playing with a group when most folkies were strictly soloists. He began to receive national attention in 1966, the year he performed at the Newport Folk Festival, and Tim Hardin I picked up critical accolades. About this time, Bob Dylan named him the country's greatest living songwriter.

His songs included "If I Were a Carpenter" (covered by Johnny Cash and June Carter, Bobby Darin, the Four Tops, Bob Seger, and Robert Plant, among others), "Reason to Believe" (covered by Peter, Paul and Mary, and Rod Stewart), and "Misty Roses." In the mid-'60s he was a regular attraction on the college campus circuits both in the U.S. and in Europe. By the late '60s, Hardin had settled into the rural artists' community in Woodstock, New York, and curtailed his performances. In 1969 he enjoyed his only Top 50 single with Bobby Dann's "Simple Song of Freedom." Hardin's Bird on a Wire LP used other writers' material; its studio band included future members of East-West folk-fusion band Oregon and jazz-rockers Weather Report.

In 1974 Hardin moved to southern England with his family and played regularly in English clubs. After a year, he moved back to L.A. His death in his L.A. apartment at age 39 was attributed to a heroin overdose.

John Wesley Harding

Born Wesley Harding Stace, Oct. 22, 1965, Hastings, Eng.
 1988—It Happened One Night (Demon, U.K.) 1989—God Made Me Do It: The Christmas EP (Sire) 1990—Here Comes the Groom 1991—The Name Above the Title 1992—Why We Fight 1996—John Wesley Harding's New Deal (Forward/Rhino) 1998—Awake (Zero Hour) 1999—Trad Arr Jones 2000—The Confessions of St. Ace (Malt/Hollywood).

John Wesley Harding took his stage name from Bob Dylan's 1968 album, but critics more often compare the handsome singer/songwriter to such Dylan heirs as Elvis Costello and Billy Bragg, punk and postpunk artists who combine trenchant wit and melodic savvy with folk rock's confessional style.

The son of two musically inclined schoolteachers—his mother had been an opera singer, his father, a jazz pianist—Harding sang and played guitar in pubs as a teenager, then pursued a Ph.D. in political and social theory at Cambridge University before deciding to make music his career in 1988. He quickly landed a deal with the U.K. label Demon Records and released the live album It Happened One Night (its title, like Here Comes the Groom, The Name Above the Title, and Why We Fight, an homage to film director Frank Capra) before signing to Sire. While his Sire debut LP—which featured members of Costello's band, the Attractions—drew praise for its catchy tunes and literate lyrics and spawned a successful video for the single "The Devil in Me," some detractors accused the singer of wearing his influences on his sleeve.

Bruce Springsteen asked Harding to be one of his rare opening acts in 1995, and Harding soon began recording for a series of smaller labels, including Zero Hour, which released his 1999 tribute to traditional folk musician Nic Jones. Country-rock guitarists Jimmie Dale Gilmore and Steve Earle guested on his 2000 album, The Confessions of St. Ace (a take on his original surname). Harding has maintained a loyal cult following, promoting his albums with solo acoustic performances.

Ben Harper/Ben Harper and the Innocent Criminals

Born Oct. 28, 1969, Pomona, CA
 1994—Welcome to the Cruel World (Virgin) 1995—Fight for Your Mind 1997—(+ the Innocent Criminals: Juan Nelson [b. Aug., 24, 1958, Cincinnati, OH], bass; Dean Butterworth

Ben Harper and the Innocent Criminals

[b. Sep. 9, 1966, Rochdale, Eng.], drums) The Will to Live 1999—(+ David Leach [b. Feb. 4, 1962, Irvington, NJ], perc.)—Burn to Shine 2001—Live From Mars.

Folk, blues, hard rock, country, jazz, and reggae are just a few of the genres that singer, songwriter, and guitarist Ben Harper has delved into throughout his career. His eclecticism has made him hard to categorize, and he's performed alongside all types of other performers (as a participant in the H.O.R.D.E. festival, as well as guesting on albums by artists as diverse as John Lee Hooker and Beth Orton). Born into a musical family, Harper picked up the guitar at an early age and began performing publicly at age 12. Shortly after appearing alongside Taj Mahal at a concert in 1992, Harper signed a contract with Virgin. His first album, Welcome to the Cruel World, introduced Harper as a folk-rocker with a soft, evocative voice and politically charged lyrics. Songs like "How Many Miles Must We March," "Like a King" and "I'll Rise" (with lyrics by Maya Angelou) demonstrate his Woody Guthrie-like propensity to write simply structured songs with sociopolitical messages. Fight for Your Mind (1995) features Harper's precocious capabilities on the Weissenborn (a hollow-necked, lap steel guitar), while The Will to Live (#89, 1997) and Burn to Shine (#67, 1999) highlight his move toward a more electric, amplified sound.

Roy Harper

Born June 12, 1941, Manchester, Eng.
1969—Folkjokeopus (World Pacific) 1970—Flat Baroque and Berserk (Harvest) 1971—Stormcock 1973—Life Mask 1974—Valentine; Flashes From the Archives of Oblivion 1975—When an Old Cricketer Leaves the Crease 1977—One of Those Days in England 1978—Roy Harper 1970-75 1980—The Unknown Soldier (Harvest) 1985—Whatever Happened to Jugula (PVC) 1991—Once (Awareness/A.R.S.) 1995—Unhinged (Griffin Music) 1998—The Dream Society (Science Friction) 2000—The Green Man 2001—Hats Off (The Right Stuff).

Folksinger, songwriter, and guitarist Roy Harper is best known to American rock fans as the subject of Led Zeppelin's "Hats Off to Harper," from its third LP. But in folk circles, and particularly in England, Harper is well known for his eccentric songs.

At age 15 he quit school and after a while joined the Royal Air Force. In an attempt to obtain a discharge, Harper pretended to be mentally ill, following his 1959 discharge he was committed to a mental institution. After his release 15 weeks later he wrote poems and songs in the streets of Blackpool. In 1964 he moved to London, and a year later began performing in clubs, part of a circle that included Jimmy Page, John Paul Jones, and Ronnie Lane. He also performed frequently in London's Hyde Park.

Harper recorded his first LP, The Sophisticated Beggar, for a British indie label. Beginning in 1971 with Stormcock, Jimmy Page began appearing on Harper's LPs. Among other musicians who have backed Harper are Pink Floyd's David Gilmour, Paul and Linda McCartney, and drummer Bill Bruford. That same year, however, Harper was hospitalized with a strange illness he claims to have contracted while giving a lamb mouth-to-mouth resuscitation (actually, it was a rare congenital circulatory disorder known as multiple pulmonary artero-venous fistula). In 1972 he made his film debut in the British Made.

Those unfamiliar with Harper's solo work have probably heard his voice: He sang lead on Pink Floyd's "Have a Cigar" from 1975's Wish You Were Here. Many of his '80s and early-'90s albums are imports (the discography above is partial), though Science Friction has since reissued a large chunk of his catalogue. The Unknown Soldier (1980) included "You," a duet with Kate Bush, who later appeared on Once (1991). She has also covered Harper's "Another Day."

In the early '90s Harper performed with his musically likeminded son, Nick, who subsequently played with Squeeze and embarked on a solo career. The Dream Society (1998), which features Jethro Tull's Ian Anderson, marked the elder Harper's return to touring and recording after a brief, self-imposed hiatus.

Harper's Bizarre

Formed 1963, San Francisco, CA
Ted Templeman (b. Oct. 24, 1944), lead voc.; Dick Scoppettone (b. July 5, 1945), voc., gtr.; Eddie James (b. Santa Cruz, CA), voc., gtr.; Dick Yount (b. Jan. 9, 1943, Santa Cruz, CA), voc., bass, gtr., drums.
1966—(+ John Peterson [b. Jan. 8, 1945, San Francisco], voc., drums) 1967—Feelin' Groovy (Warner Bros.); Anything Goes 1968—The Secret Life of Harper's Bizarre 1969—Harper's Bizarre 4 1970—Best of Harper's Bizarre 1976—As Time Goes By (Forest Bay).

A pop-rock group from prepsychedelic San Francisco, Harper's Bizarre had one big hit with Paul Simon's "The 59th Street Bridge Song (Feelin' Groovy)" (#13, 1967), a tune that Simon had originally offered to the Cyrkle. The group began by playing surf music in local bars, calling itself the Tikis. As such, they made their first records in the mid-'60s for the San Francisco-based Autumn Records. When Autumn went under, the Tikis became Harper's Bizarre in 1966, picked up John Peterson from another Autumn band, the Beau Brummels, and got signed to Warner Bros. Having by this time abandoned surf music for pop rock, they cut Feelin' Groovy with arrangements by Leon Russell. Specializing in five-part harmonies, the group revived several standards, like Cole Porter's "Anything Goes" (#43, 1967), Glenn Miller's "Chatanooga Choo Choo" (#45, 1967), and Johnny Horton's "Battle of New Orleans" (#95, 1968).

Harper's Bizarre disbanded in 1970 after recording four albums for Warner Bros. Lead singer Ted Templeman stayed on with the label and became one of its top in-house A&R men and producers (Van Morrison, the Doobie Brothers, Van Halen, among others). Templeman also produced a 1974 album by the re-formed Beau Brummels, which included his old Harper's Bizarre mate, John Peterson.

Slim Harpo

Born James Moore, Jan. 11, 1924, Lobdell, LA; died Jan. 31, 1970, Baton Rouge, LA

1965—A Long Drink of the Blues (Stateside) 1976—Blues Hangover (Flyright) 1980—Got Love If You Want It 1989—The Best of Slim Harpo (Rhino).

Slim Harpo was a blues singer, songwriter, guitarist, and harp player who wrote "I'm a King Bee," an early Rolling Stones showpiece.

One of at least four children, Harpo grew up in Port Allen, Louisiana. His parents died while he was still a child, and he quit school to support his siblings. At age 18 he moved to New Orleans to work as a longshoreman, and later went to Baton Rouge to work as a contractor. In the early '40s he played bars and clubs as Harmonica Slim.

Harpo met guitarist Lightnin' Slim, with whom he toured and performed (Lightnin' appears on "Rainin' in My Heart" and "I'm a King Bee") over the next 20 years. He eventually owned his own trucking business but continued to work in clubs, often with Lightnin' Slim. He had a hit in 1961 with "Rainin' in My Heart" (#34) and in 1966 with the sly, sexual "Baby, Scratch My Back" (#16 pop, #1 R&B). He toured rock clubs through the late '60s. Harpo died of a heart attack.

Don "Sugarcane" Harris/ Don and Dewey

Born June 18, 1938, Pasadena, CA; died Nov. 30, 1999, Los Angeles, CA

N.A.—Keep on Driving (Musidisc) 1970—Fiddler on the Rock (Polydor); Sugarcane (Epic) 1973—Cup Full of Dreams; Sugarcane's Got the Blues (BASF).

Don and Dewey (with Terry Dewey): N.A.—Don & Dewey (Specialty) 1974—They're Rockin' Till Midnight 1991—Jungle Hop.

He played guitar, harmonica, and piano, but R&B veteran Don "Sugarcane" Harris was best known for his blues-rock electric violin. As half of the '50s duo Don and Dewey, he cowrote "Farmer John" (covered by Neil Young on his Ragged Glory) and "Big Boy Pete." The pair cowrote its best-known song, "I'm Leaving It All Up to You." Harris then went on to play with Johnny Otis, Little Richard, Frank Zappa, John Mayall, and Tupelo Chain Sex (with Dewey Terry).

The son of carnival performers, Harris studied classical violin with L.C. Robinson from 1944 to 1954. In the mid-'50s he graduated from Manual Arts High School in L.A. He formed the Squires in 1956, and they played local bars for many months until Harris teamed with Dewey Terry to form Don and Dewey.

They recorded for Specialty Records in the late '50s and toured the West Coast as part of the Johnny Otis show. Otis nicknamed Harris "Sugarcane," reportedly in reference to his reputation as a ladies' man. Harris later recorded with Otis' band for Epic in 1969 (Cuttin' Up) and toured with his show before he and Dewey reunited in 1975. They played together sporadically until Harris' health declined in 1998.

After his original pairing with Dewey had disintegrated in the early '60s, Harris toured and recorded with Little Richard. In 1970 he hooked up with Frank Zappa, with whom he played violin and sang, most notably on Hot Rats and Weasels Ripped My Flesh. (Zappa has said that Don and Dewey's single "Soul Motion" b/w "Stretchin' Out" on Rush Records was one of the all-time great R&B records; both sides featured Harris' kinetic electric-violin work.) Harris also toured and recorded with John Mayall in 1970 and 1971, working concurrently throughout as an occasional solo act in L.A. clubs. In 1970 he began his solo recording career. He died of natural causes in 1999.

Terry also remained active in music, producing and playing on some of Harris' albums, playing with Johnny Otis, and releasing several solo albums.

Emmylou Harris

Born Apr. 2, 1947, Birmingham, AL

1970—Gliding Bird (Jubilee) 1975—Pieces of the Sky (Reprise) 1976—Elite Hotel 1977—Luxury Liner (Warner Bros.) 1978—Quarter Moon in a Ten Cent Town; Profile: The Best of Emmylou Harris 1979—Blue Kentucky Girl 1980—Roses in the Snow; Light of the Stable 1981—Evangeline 1982—Cimarron 1983—White Shoes 1984—Profile: The Best of Emmylou Harris, vol. 2 1985—The Ballad of Sally Rose 1986—Thirteen 1987—Angel Band 1989—Bluebird (Reprise) 1990—Duets; Brand New Dance 1992—The Ryman 1993—Cowgirl's Prayer (Asylum) 1994—Songs of the West (Warner Bros.) 1995—Wrecking Ball (Asylum) 1996—Portraits (Warner Bros.) 1998—Spyboy (Eminent) 2000—Red Dirt Girl (Nonesuch) 2001—Anthology: The Warner/Reprise Years (Warner Archives/Reprise/Rhino). With Dolly Parton and Linda Ronstadt: 1987—Trio (Warner Bros.) 1999—Trio II (Asylum). With Linda Ronstadt: 1999—Western Wall: The Tucson Sessions (Asylum).

During the '70s Emmylou Harris' clear, plaintive soprano made her a country hitmaker, and the neotraditionalist arrangements on her records appealed to rock & folk fans as well. A prolific performer, Harris has continued to garner attention and praise for her work, which has been enriched by superb supporting and collaborating musicians, and has included covers of material by song bards ranging from Gram Parsons to Bruce Springsteen to Lucinda Williams.

Harris grew up in a Virginia suburb of Washington. In high school she was a cheerleader, beauty pageant queen, and class valedictorian; she also played alto sax in the marching band. In 1965 she enrolled at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro and played there with a folk duo, but moved to Greenwich Village a year and a half later.

Emmylou Harris

where she played clubs and sat in with Jerry Jeff Walker and David Bromberg. She also recorded an unsuccessful album for the small Jubilee label. In 1970, after a short time in Nashville, she returned to her parents' house in Washington, DC, where she eventually found a band and began gigging locally.

After one DC club performance, Harris met the Flying Burrito Brothers; impressed by her voice, they recommended her to ex-member Gram Parsons [see entry], who was looking for a female duet partner for his upcoming debut solo recording. Parsons became a huge influence on Harris, introducing her to the music of such classic country greats as the Louvin Brothers. The two collaborated (on two Parsons albums and on a Fallen Angels tour) until Parsons' fatal overdose in September 1973. Devastated by Parsons' death, she later wrote a song about him, "Boulder to Birmingham," and over the years kept his music alive by recording his songs.

Harris subsequently formed a new group, including some former Parsons sidemen, and signed with Warner Bros. On 1975's Pieces of the Sky, she was backed by Elvis Presley's former sidemen Ron Tutt, James Burton, and Glen D. Hardin. Harris' touring group, dubbed the Hot Band, included songwriter Rodney Crowell [see entry] on guitar and harmony vocals, bassist Emory Gordy Jr., and pedal steel guitarist Hank DeVito. Guitarist Albert Lee and mandolinist/guitarist Ricky Skaggs [see entry] also played with Harris.

In 1975 her remake of the Louvin Brothers' "If I Could Only Win Your Love" topped the country chart; subsequent C&W hits included "Together Again" (#1, 1976), "One of These Days" (#3, 1976), "Sweet Dreams" (#1, 1976), "(You Never Can Tell) C'est La Vie" (#6, 1977), "Making Believe" (#8, 1977), and "To Daddy" (#3, 1977). Elite Hotel and Luxury Liner also attracted some rock fans, and she appeared in studio footage for the Band's 1976 documentary The Last Waltz, singing Robbie Robertson's "Evangeline." In 1980 she teamed with Roy Orbison for "That Lovin' You Feelin' Again," a #55 pop single that year (also featured on the soundtrack of the film Roadie).

In 1977 Harris married producer Brian Ahern, who had played a large role in shaping her early hits (and whose other credits included Anne Murray and Crowell). She began focusing on pure country material, and Blue Kentucky Girl won a Grammy for Best Female Country Vocal Performance. There were more C&W hits: "Two More Bottles of Wine" (#1, 1978), a cover of the Drifters' "Save the Last Dance for Me" (#4, 1979), and "Blue Kentucky Girl" (#6, 1979).

By 1982, Harris had eight gold albums. The early '80s also brought numerous top country singles: "Beneath Still Waters" (#1, 1980), "Wayfaring Stranger" (#7, 1980), a cover of the Chordettes' "Mister Sandman" (#10, 1981), a duet with Don Williams, "If I Needed You" (#3, 1981), "Tennessee Rose" (#9, 1982), "Born to Run" (#3, 1982), "(Lost His Love) On Our Last Date" (#1, 1983), "I'm Movin' On" (#5, 1983), "In My Dreams" (#9, 1984), and "Pledging My Love" (#9, 1984).

Harris' marriage to Ahern ended in 1983, and she relocated to Nashville. In 1985 she released The Ballad of Sally Rose a loosely autobiographical "country opera," to great acclaim. Harris cowrote and coproduced the album with her second husband, the Grammy-winning songwriter Paul Kennerley. In 1987 Harris' long-anticipated collaboration with Dolly Parton and Linda Ronstadt (who had both appeared on Sally Rose) finally came to fruition with Trio. It went platinum, reached #6 on the pop chart, and yielded C&W smashes with a version of the Phil Spector-penned 1958 #1 Teddy Bears hit "To Know Him Is to Love Him" (#1, 1987), "Telling Me Lies" (#3, 1987), "Those Memories of You" (#5, 1987), and "Wildflowers" (#6, 1988).

Harris' other 1988 hits included "We Believe in Happy Endings" (#1), with Earl Thomas Conley, and "Heartbreak Hill" (#8). In 1990 she had a #24 pop album, a compilation of previously released Duets pairing her with everyone from Gram Parsons to George Jones and Willie Nelson. She then replaced her longtime Hot Band with an acoustic aggregation, the Nash Ramblers. In 1991 Harris recorded At the Ryman live at the Grand Ole Opry's venerable auditorium. Her 1993 album, Cowgirl's Prayer, reached only #34 on the country charts but was a critical favorite.

Harris essentially cut her ties to the Nashville hit mill when she released her 1995 album, Wrecking Ball. She has always pushed country music's boundaries, but nothing in her catalogue anticipated such a departure. Produced by Daniel Lanois and recorded mainly with rock musicians, including U2 drummer Larry Mullen Jr., the album features unvarnished, otherworldly renditions of songs written by Bob Dylan, Jimi Hendrix, Steve Earle, and other lesser-known artists. Critics hailed the project as a triumph of innovation even as it alienated fans of Harris' more country-sounding work. It won the 1995 Grammy for Best Contemporary Folk Album.

In 1998 Harris signed with Eminent Records, a Nashville independent label, and released Spyboy, a live set featuring her touring band of the same name. Harris and guitarist Buddy Miller coproduced the album, which functions as something of a career retrospective. In 1999 Harris, Parton, and Ronstadt released their long-awaited Trio II album. The record's version of Neil Young's "After the Gold Rush" won a Grammy for Best Country Collaboration With Vocals. Harris and Ronstadt teamed up for a haunting duo record, Western Wall: The Tucson Sessions, later in the year. Harris executive produced and sang on Return of the Grievous Angel: A Tribute to Gram Parsons, released by Almo Sounds in 1999. The record featured covers of Parsons' songs by Elvis Costello, Beck, and Sheryl Crow, among others. In 1999 Harris won the prestigious Billboard Century Award. Her 2000 release, Red Dirt Girl, continued in the same vein of Wrecking Ball, but was composed of Harris originals. The album won a Grammy for Best Contemporary Folk Recording.

Wynonie Harris

Born Aug. 24, 1915, Omaha, NE; died June 14, 1969, Los Angeles, CA

N.A.—Good Rockin' Blues (King); Good Rockin' Tonight; Party After Hours (Aladdin) 1993—Women, Whiskey & Fish Tails (Ace) 1994—Bloodshot Eyes (Rhino).

Wynonie Harris was a big-band blues shouter whose style was a major influence on early rock & roll.

Harris dropped out of Creighton University in Omaha and began working as a comedian and dancer in the '30s. After teaching himself to play the drums, in the late '30s and early '40s he led his own local combo. When he moved to L.A. in the early '40s, he quit drumming and worked as a club emcee for a while; he also appeared as a dancer in the film Hit Parade of 1943.

In 1944 Harris became a vocalist with Lucky Millinder's band, with whom he cut his first records that year for Decca (and, a few years later, for King Records) and toured major ballrooms throughout America. He continued recording with jazz bands in the mid-'40s (Jack McVea, Oscar Pettiford, Illinois Jacquet, and others). He also worked with Johnny Otis, who influenced him toward a pop-tinged R&B style. While recording for King Records, Harris had his biggest successes with "Good Morning Judge," "Lovin' Machine," "All She Wants to Do Is Rock," and his mid-'50s Brnush hit, "Bloodshot Eyes." Harris also covered Roy Brown's "Good Rockin' Tonight," later an Elvis Presley hit. He toured widely throughout the late '40s with such traveling bands as the Lionel Hampton Orchestra, Dud Bascomb, and Big Joe Turner.

Harris continued club work, often as part of package shows, into the early '50s, cutting records for Cincinnati-based King Records and New York's Apollo label. In the mid-'50s he opened a cafe in Brooklyn and in 1963 went to L.A. and did the same. He was working as a bartender when he died of cancer at age 54. Harris had attempted several comebacks in the interim. In the early '60s he recorded for Atco and Roulette in New York and for Chicago-based Cadet. For one of his last public performances, in 1967, he played Harlem's venerable Apollo Theatre.

George Harrison

Born Feb. 25, 1943, Liverpool, Eng.

1968—Wonderwall Music (Apple) 1969—Electronic Sounds (Zapple) 1970—All Things Must Pass (Apple) 1972—Concert for Bangla Desh 1973—Living in the Material World 1974—Dark Horse 1975—Extra Texture (Read All About It) 1976—33 1/3 (Dark Horse); The Best of George Harrison (Capitol) 1979—George Harrison (Dark Horse) 1981—Somewhere in England 1982—Gone Troppo 1987—Cloud Nine 1989—Best of Dark Horse 1976-1989 1992—Live in Japan.

George Harrison played lead guitar and wrote occasional songs for the Beatles; he also was the group's only convert to Eastern religion. Since the Beatles broke up, he has had an uneven solo career.

Born into a working-class family, Harrison attended Dovedale Primary School, three years behind John Lennon. In 1954 he entered Liverpool Institute, a grade behind Paul McCartney. In 1956, at the height of Britain's skiffle craze, Harrison formed his first group, the Rebels. He started jamming occasionally with his new acquaintance McCartney, and in 1958 McCartney introduced him to Lennon. Soon all three were playing in the Quarrymen, who later became the Silver Beatles and then the Beatles.

Besides playing lead guitar, Harrison sang backup vocals and an occasional lead ("Roll Over Beethoven," "If I Needed Someone," "I'm Happy Just to Dance With You") in the Beatles. In the mid-'60s he was one of the first rock musicians to experiment with Indian and Far Eastern instruments; he studied with Bengali master sitarist Ravi Shankar. Harrison first played sitar on 1965's "Norwegian Wood" and later on "Within You Without You," "The Inner Light," and other songs. Harrison wrote songs as early as 1963 ("Don't Bother Me"), but it was difficult for him to get the group to record his material, one of the problems that led to the Beatles' breakup. Harrison's compositions include "I Need You," "You Like Me Too Much," "Taxman," "Love You To," "Piggies," "Savoy Truffle," "While My Guitar Gently Weeps," "Here Comes the Sun," and "Something" (#3, 1969), the only Harrison song to become a hit single for the Beatles.

After the Beatles officially disbanded in early 1970, Harrison continued his solo career, which he'd begun in November 1968 with the electronic sound collage soundtrack Wonderwall Music. In November 1970 he released his three-record set All Things Must Pass (#1), produced by Phil Spector and featuring guests such as Eric Clapton and Traffic's Dave Mason, which included the #1 hit single "My Sweet Lord." (A 1976 lawsuit successfully established that Harrison "unknowingly" plagiarized the song's melodic structure from the early-'60s hit by the Chiffons, "He's So Fine.") In late summer 1971 Harrison sponsored and hosted two benefit concerts at New York's Madison Square Garden for the people of Bangladesh. With guests including Ringo Starr, Eric Clapton, Leon Russell, and Bob Dylan, the concerts, the documentary film, and the Grammy-winning three-record set, Concert for Bangla Desh, were a resounding success, although funds raised by the proceedings were impounded during a nine-year audit of Apple by the IRS. (In 1981 a check for $8.8 million was finally sent through UNICEF, $2 million had been sent in 1972 before the audit began.) Harrison's song about the plight of the refugees, "Bangla Desh," hit the pop Top 25 in late 1971. Living in the Material World produced a #1 hit in 1973, "Give Me Love (Give Me Peace on Earth)."

In 1974 Harrison formed his own Dark Horse Records (with distribution via Warner Bros.), releasing a gold album of the same name late in the year (the title track of which hit #15 as a single), and touting America to support it. The sales of Extra Texture (Read All About It), were disappointing, a trend that continued unabated with 33 1/3 and George Harrison. A tribute to the slain Lennon, "All Those Years Ago," went #2 in 1981. Starr and Paul and Linda McCartney also appear on the record. Gone Troppo was a commercial flop, and Harrison stopped recording for several years, to concentrate on gardening, auto-racing, and other pursuits.

Harrison began producing albums in the late '60s by Apple Records protégés Jackie Lomax, Billy Preston, and Badfinger, he also participated in sessions by artists signed to his Dark Horse label in the mid-'70s. He has been regularly involved with members of the Monty Python comedy group as executive producer of film projects, including The Life of Brian and Time Bandits. Harrison also appeared in the Python Beatles parody film, All You Need Is Cash, as a reporter. In 1979 he privately published an autobiography, I Me Mine (a mass market edition was published in 1982).

Harrison ended a five-year hiatus from recording with Cloud Nine (#8, 1987), which went platinum and yielded the #1 hit single "Got My Mind Set on You" (a cover of an oldie recorded by Rudy Clark). The album, produced by Jeff Lynne of Electric Light Orchestra, spawned a Top 25 hit in "When We Was Fab," an evocation of the Beatles' cello-driven "I Am the Walrus" sound, which had been so influential on ELO. Harrison went on to join Lynne in the Traveling Wilburys [see entry]. In 1992, with his old friend Eric Clapton, Harrison embarked on his first tour in 18 years; that April Harrison played his first-ever U.K. solo concert (which also served to raise awareness of the Mahanishi Mahesh Yogi's new Natural Law party, then seeking seats in British Parliament).

He met his first wife, model Pattie Boyd (born Mar. 17, 1945), in early 1964 on the set of the Beatles film A Hard Day's Night (in which she briefly appeared). They were married on January 21, 1966, but their marriage began coming apart a few years later, and they separated and eventually divorced in 1977. Boyd later married guitarist Eric Clapton and was the subject of Clapton's "Layla." Harrison married Olivia Arias in England in September 1978, a month after their son, Dhani, was born.

After touring in the early '90s, Harrison mostly stayed out of the news. He joined Ringo Starr and Paul McCartney for 1995's "new" Beatles songs "Free as a Bird" and "Real Love." He and Starr attended Linda McCartney's funeral in June 1998. It was the first time the surviving Beatles had made a public appearance together in almost three decades. That same year, Harrison announced that he was battling throat cancer. Then, on December 30, 1999, Michael Abram, a mentally ill former heroin addict, stabbed and nearly killed Harrison after breaking into his Friar Park estate in Oxfordshire; Harrison was saved by his wife, Olivia, who managed to hit the assailant over the head with a poker and a table lamp.

His solo career on hold since Cloud Nine, he remastered All Things Must Pass for a January 2001 reissue; the five extra tracks included "My Sweet Lord 2000," which featured his son, Dhani, with whom Harrison had been reportedly working on a new studio album. In mid-2001 Harrison underwent further treatment for cancer; this followed previous treatment for throat and lung cancer.

Wilbert Harrison

Born Jan. 6, 1929, Charlotte, NC; died Oct. 26, 1994, Spencer, NC

1962—Battle of the Giants (Joy); Kansas City (Sphere) 1969—Let's Work Together (Sue) 1971—Wilbert Harrison (Buddah) 1989—Classic R&B Hits (Grudge) 1992—Kansas City (Relic).

Jump-blues singer Wilbert Harrison had two major pop hits a decade apart: "Kansas City" in 1959 and "Let's Work Together" in 1969. Harrison began recording in the early '50s with "This Woman of Mine" on Rockin'. He recorded for DeLuxe and Savoy without notable success. In 1959 Fury Records released "Kansas City," a version of Leiber and Stoller's "K.C. Lovin'" (written in 1952) that went to #1. The song was later recorded by the Beatles.

Harrison recorded through the '60s for numerous labels (Seahorn, Neptune, Doc, Port, Vest) until "Let's Work Together," on Sue, went to #32; it was later covered by Canned Heat, Roxy Music's Bryan Ferry, Dwight Yoakam, and the Kentucky Headhunters. "My Heart Is Yours," on SSS International, went to #98 in 1971, and he recorded through the '70s for Buddah, Hotline, Brunswick, and Wet Soul. For much of his career, Harrison—unable to afford sidemen—performed live as a one-man band. He released several albums in the past two decades, virtually all now out of print. He died of a stroke at age 65.

Deborah Harry: See Blondie

Mickey Hart: See the Grateful Dead

John Hartford

Born Dec. 30, 1937, New York, NY; died June 4, 2001, Nashville, TN

1967—Looks at Life (RCA); Earthwords and Music 1968—The Love Album; Housing Project; Gentle on My Mind and Other Originals 1969—John Hartford 1970—Iron Mountain Depot 1971—Aero-Plain (Warner Bros.) 1972—Morning Bugle 1975—Tennessee Jubilee (Flying Fish) 1976—Mark Twang; Nobody Knows What You Do 1977—Dillard, Hartford, Dillard (with Doug and Rod Dillard); All in the Name of Love 1978—Heading Down Into the Mystery Below 1979—Slumberin' on the Cumberland 1981—You and Me at Home; Catalogue 1984—Gum Tree Canoe 1987—Me Oh My, How the Time Does Fly: A John Hartford Anthology 1989—Down on the River 1991—Hartford and Hartford 1992—Cadillac Rag (Small Dog a Barkin') 1993—Goin' Back to Dixie 1994—The Walls We Bounce Off Of 1995—Old Sport 1996—No End of Love; Wild Hog in the Red Brush (Rounder) 1998—Speed of the Old Long Bow 1999—Good Old Boys 2000—Live From Mountain Stage (Blue Plate).

Singer, songwriter, and banjoist Hartford wrote "Gentle on My Mind" for Glen Campbell and recorded folk and bluegrass solo albums.

Best known for his banjo work but also adept at guitar and fiddle, Hartford was raised in St. Louis, where his father was a doctor and his mother a painter. He studied art at Washington University in St. Louis, and before moving to Nashville in the mid-'60s he worked as a sign painter, a commercial artist, a riverboat deckhand (he later became a licensed river pilot), and a disc jockey. His session work slowly picked up, and by the end of the '60s he had participated in the Byrds' Sweetheart of the Rodeo. Hartford continued studio gigs through the early '70s. In 1966 he signed with RCA, for which he eventually recorded eight albums.

But his biggest success came as a writer, notably "Gentle on My Mind," which, in addition to Campbell's Grammy-winning hit, has been covered more than 300 times, and has sold over 15 million copies internationally. It was originally a minor country hit for Hartford in 1967. Among his other compositions are "California Earthquake" and "Natural to Be Gone."

Hartford had his most extensive exposure in the late '60s as a regular on the Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour, which was followed by a stint on Glen Campbell's weekly television musical-variety show. At the start of the '70s he hosted his own syndicated show, Something Else. He switched from RCA to Warner Bros. in mid-1971, releasing his debut for the label, the David Bromberg-produced Aero-Plain (featuring guitarist Norman Blake, dobro player Tut Taylor, and fiddler Vassar Clements). Then he switched to the small Flying Fish label, and 1976's Mark Twang won a Grammy in the Ethnic-Traditional category—Hartford has gotten several nominations in the Traditional Folk category.

For decades, Hartford performed year-round, usually as a one-man band (he also toured with Campbell). He started slowing down in the late '90s, weakened by cancer and anemia but continued to record regularly, either solo or with a cast of regular collaborators that included his son Jamie. In 2000 he contributed two fiddle pieces to the soundtrack of the Coen brothers' movie O Brother, Where Art Thou? His long battle with cancer ended in June 2001.

PJ Harvey

Formed July 1991, Yeovil, Eng.

PJ Harvey (b. Polly Jean Harvey, Oct. 9, 1969, Yeovil), voc., gtr.; Rob Ellis (b. Feb. 13, 1962, Bristol, Eng.), drums; Stephen Vaughan (b. June 22, 1962, Wolverhampton, Eng.), bass. 1992—Dry (Island) 1993—Rid of Me; 4-Track Demos. PJ Harvey solo: 1995—To Bring You My Love 1998—Is This Desire? 2000—Stories From the City, Stories From the Sea. With John Parish: 1996—Dance Hall at Louse Point.

Led by the talented guitarist, songwriter, and singer Polly Jean Harvey, the postpunk power trio PJ Harvey came from small-town England in 1991 and took London by storm with its raw, dynamic rock and Harvey's evocative/provocative female-centric lyrics. Harvey formed the band with two friends in Yeovil and recorded its debut for less than $5,000. After creating a buzz in London and two chart-topping singles, PJ Harvey released Dry on the UK indie label Too Pure (Island Records released the album in the U.S.). In hypnotic tunes like "Dress," "Happy and Bleeding," and "Sheela-Na-Gig," Harvey sang about discovering, reviling, and reveling in her body. The tomboyish Harvey's discomfort with her femininity fueled her lyrics and image. Dry's album cover features the androgynous artist skinny and bare-chested.

Harvey, who grew up on a sheep farm, quickly developed a reputation for being a publicity-shy recluse and reportedly had a near nervous breakdown in 1992, after playing the mammoth Reading Festival. Recovered, she took her career in hand and chose iconoclastic Chicago-based producer

PJ Harvey

Steve Albini to produce the band's second album. Rid of Me sounded appropriately noisy and difficult. Harvey's lyrics mocked efforts to control her sexuality and art, taunting lovers on "Rid of Me" and "Legs" and declaring her stature over cock-rockers on "50 Ft. Queenie." Press-friendly now, Harvey disappointed many fans by denouncing feminism in interviews, although listeners found consolation in lyrics that seemed to contradict her stance. Harvey turned down a chance to play 1993's Lollapalooza. Her own American tour revealed a confident performer who was adding touches of a campy glam to her trademark austere appearance.

The tour also indicated that Harvey was having trouble with her band, and in August 1993, Ellis departed. The demos for Rid of Me, released as 4-Track Demos, verified criticism that Albini had buried Harvey's powerful vocals and barely touched the range of her aural ideas. The album included several new tracks, including the irresistible "Reeling."

Harvey completely dispensed with her band for 1995's To Bring You My Love (#40), a bluesy collection of songs that she produced with Flood (U2) and guitarist John Parish. Bassist Mick Harvey (ex-Birthday Party) and guitarist Joe Gore were among the guests who played on the critically acclaimed album.

In 1996 Harvey and Parish released Dance Hall at Louse Point, an album for which Harvey wrote and sang lyrics to Parish's music. The exception was an irony-drenched cover of Peggy Lee's Leiber/Stoller-penned 1969 hit "Is That All There Is?" Released as a single, the song also appeared on the soundtrack album for the film Basquiat, a movie depicting the life of the late graffiti artist.

Harvey duetted with Nick Cave on his Murder Ballads album (1996). The collaboration also led to a brief, heated romance, the dissolution of which Cave brooded over on The Boatman's Call (1997). Harvey and Flood coproduced Is This Desire? (#54, 1998). Built upon a bed of understated electrobeats, the album's songs found Harvey ruminating on the meaning of passion. She also sang on Tricky's Angels With Dirty Faces and made her acting debut, playing Mary Magdalene, in the film The Book of Life. The critically acclaimed Stories From the City, Stories From the Sea was much more upbeat than Harvey's usual fare.

Juliana Hatfield

Born July 27, 1967, Wiscasset, ME

With Blake Babies, formed 1986, Boston, MA: Hatfield, voc., bass; John Strohm (b. Mar. 23, 1967, Bloomington, IN), voc., gtr.; Freda Boner (b. Sep. 3, 1967, Nashville, TN), drums. 1987—Nicely, Nicely (Chewbud) 1989—Earwig (Mammoth) 1990—Sunburn 1991—Rosy Jack World EP 1993—Innocence and Experience 2001—God Bless the Blake Babies (Zoë/Rounder).

Juliana Hatfield solo: 1992—Hey Babe (Mammoth) 1993—Become What You Are (Mammoth/Atlantic) 1995—Only Everything 1997—Please Do Not Disturb EP (Bar/None) 1998—Bed (Zoë/Rounder) 2000—Beautiful Creature; Juliana's Pony: Total System Failure.

With her sweet voice juxtaposed against assertive guitar playing and introspective songwriting, Juliana Hatfield garnered attention on the college rock scene, first with the band Blake Babies, and even more so as a solo artist.

One of three children of a physician father and a Boston Globe fashion editor mother, Hatfield, deeply affected at age 11 by her parents' divorce, later drew on memories of adolescent unhappiness for her lyrics. Starting piano lessons from her mother at age six, Hatfield played Police and Rush covers in a high school group called the Squids before gravitating toward the Velvet Underground and X. While studying voice at Boston's Berklee College of Music, she met guitarist John Strohm and drummer Freda Boner. Switching to bass, she joined them to found Blake Babies, whose six-year career and three recordings established them as college-radio stars. Seeking a harder sound, Hatfield departed in 1990. Strohm and Boner formed the band Antenna. Strohm later formed Velo-Deluxe. In 2000 the trio reunited to record God Bless the Blake Babies. Upon the album's release, the Blake Babies embarked on a national tour.

In 1990 Hatfield contributed lyrics to the debut album of former Bangles singer Susanna Hoffs; she also sang and played on the Lemonheads' It's a Shame About Ray (Her complicated romantic relationship with Lemonhead singer Evan Dando became fodder for alt-rock gossip columns.)

Dando and John Wesley Harding appeared on Hatfield's own solo debut, the critically acclaimed Hey Babe, which showcased Hatfield's return to playing guitar. In 1992 she formed the Juliana Hatfield Three with bassist Dean Fisher and ex-Bullet LaVolta drummer Todd Philips; with songs about self-mutilation, anorexia, and familial tension set to pop melodies and heavy guitar, Become What You Are gave voice to blank-generation tension. Only Everything continued in the same vein two years later, but Hatfield left Mammoth after the label failed to release the followup, God's Foot.

Juliana Hatfield

She left the finished (and unreleased) album behind and moved on with a one-off EP for Bar/None before recording a trio of albums for Zoë.

With the entertainment media fascinated by Hatfield (1992 photo layouts in Sassy and Vogue), the singer also revealed a penchant for confessional, confrontational statements, asserting in interviews that she was still a virgin at age 25 and that women are genetically determined to be lesser guitarists than men. But her Zoë albums, beginning with Bed, found her showcasing edgier lyrics and a renewed passion for distorted guitar solos. Beautiful Creature and Total System Failure were released simultaneously, with the former's focus on introspective ballads balanced by the significantly louder, hard-rock alter ego of the latter. Total System Failure was credited to Juliana's Pony, a new trio composed of Hatfield on guitar, Mikey Welsh on bass, and Zephan Courtney on drums.

Donny Hathaway

Born Oct. 1, 1945, Chicago, IL; died Jan. 13, 1979, New York, NY

1970—Everything Is Everything (Atco) 1971—Donny Hathaway 1972—Donny Hathaway Live; Roberta Flack and Donny Hathaway (Atlantic); Come Back Charleston Blue soundtrack (Atco) 1973—Extension of a Man (Atlantic) 1978—The Best of Donny Hathaway (Atco) 1979—Roberta Flack Featuring Donny Hathaway (Atlantic) 1980—Donny Hathaway in Performance 1990—Donny Hathaway Collection.

A singer/songwriter/keyboardist best known for his duets with Roberta Flack, Donny Hathaway fused R&B, gospel, jazz, classical, and rock strains in a modestly successful solo career. He was raised in St. Louis by his grandmother, Martha Pitts, a professional gospel singer. From the age of three, Hathaway accompanied her on tours, billed as the Nation's Youngest Gospel Singer. He attended Howard University in Washington, DC, on a fine-arts scholarship.

One classmate was Roberta Flack, and in the early '70s, shortly after Flack started her solo career, the two began singing together. Their hits included Carole King's "You've Got a Friend" (#29, 1971) and "Where Is the Love" (#5, 1972), which established them as a duo. Roberta Flack and Donny Hathaway was a gold album, but due to personal problems both the partnership and Hathaway's solo career were put on hold for several years. When they reunited in 1978, they had their biggest hit, the gold single "The Closer I Get to You" (#2, 1978). Hathaway was working on Roberta Flack Featuring Donny Hathaway when he died after falling from his 15th-floor hotel room of the Essex House. (The police called it suicide; close friends refused to believe it.) The LP, released posthumously, hit #25 and went gold; a single, "You Are My Heaven," reached #47.

At the time of his death, Hathaway had released five solo albums in addition to his discs with Flack. He had recorded briefly for Curtom Records with June Conquest as June and Donnie, and got his first solo contract with Atlantic in 1970 under the patronage of King Curtis. Hathaway enjoyed R&B chart success in the early '70s with singles like "The Ghetto, Part 1" (#23 R&B, 1970), "Little Ghetto Boy" (#25 R&B, 1972), "Giving Up" (#21 R&B, 1972), "I Love You More Than You'll Ever Know" (#20 R&B, 1972), and "Love, Love, Love" (#16 R&B, 1973).

Concurrently, Hathaway worked as a producer and composer for others, including Aretha Franklin, Jerry Butler, and the Staple Singers. He also did freelance production work for Chess, Uni, Kapp, and Stax, and served as arranger for Curtom Records and band director for the Impressions. Quincy Jones hired Hathaway to score the 1972 film Come Back Charleston Blue. He also sang the theme song for the television series Maude. By the mid-'70s, he had formed his own independent production company. Hathaway's daughter Lalah came out with her debut album in 1990.

Richie Havens

Born Jan. 21, 1941, Brooklyn, NY

1965—Richie Havens Record (Douglas) 1966—Electric Havens 1967—Mixed Bag (Verve) 1968—Something Else Again 1969—Richard D. Havens 1983 1970—Stonehenge (Stormy Forest) 1971—Alarm Clock; "The Great Blind Degree" 1972—Richie Havens on Stage 1973—Richie Havens Portfolio 1974—Mixed Bag II (Polydor) 1976—The End of the Beginning (A&M) 1977—Mirage 1979—Connections (Elektra/Asylum) 1987—Simple Things (RBI); Richie Havens Sings the Beatles and Dylan (Rykodisc); Collection 1991—Now (Solar/Epic) 1993—Résumé: The Best of Richie Havens (Rhino) 1994—Cuts to the Chase (Forward).

Richie Havens, a black folksinger with a percussive, strummed guitar style, enjoyed his greatest popularity during the late '60s. He was born and raised in the Bedford-Stuyvesant ghetto, the eldest of nine children in a family headed by a pianist father. As a youth, he sang for spare change on streetcorners. By age 14 he was singing with the McCrea Gospel Singers in Brooklyn, and three years later he dropped out of high school to pursue a music career. He worked his way into Greenwich Village folk circles in the early '60s.

After recording two albums for the Douglas International-Transatlantic label, Havens started touring clubs throughout the U.S. in 1967, and he became a familiar act on the outdoor festival circuit, playing at the Newport Folk Festival (1966), the Monterey Jazz Festival (1967), the Miami Pop Festival (1968), the Isle of Wight Festival (1969), and Woodstock (1969). Despite such massive exposure, Havens never really transformed his concert audiences into record consumers. Signed to Verve in 1966, he jumped from there to MGM, A&M, Elektra, and others.

His repertoire has featured songs by Lennon-McCartney, Van Morrison, Bob Dylan, and James Taylor. His only chart success was with his cover of George Harrison's "Here Comes the Sun" (#16, 1971). Havens continued to be a reliable club and concert performer throughout the '70s. Late in the decade he conducted extensive tours of the Middle East and Europe. In 1979 he released his 15th album and Elektra Records debut, Connections. As an actor, his film credits include Catch My Soul (1974) and Richard Pryor's Greased Lightning (1977). He was also featured in the 1972 stage presentation of the Who's Tommy.

Throughout the '80s and '90s, Havens' slightly hoarse voice became familiar to television viewers through the dozens of commercial jingles he sang, for everything from Amtrak, to McDonald's, to Cotton Incorporated. In 1990 he cofounded the Natural Guard, a national organization that helps children learn to protect the environment. In 1999 he published a book of memoirs entitled They Can't Hide Us Anymore.

Dale Hawkins

Born Aug. 22, 1938, Goldmine, LA
1958—Suzie Q 1969—L.A., Memphis and Tyler, Texas (Bell)
1976—Dale Hawkins (Chess) 1995—Oh! Suzie Q—The Best of Dale Hawkins 1997—Daredevil (Norton) 1999—Wildcat Tamer (Mystic/Lightyear).

A rockabilly original, singer, guitarist, and bandleader Dale Hawkins was an important influence on such later rockers as John Fogerty, whose Creedence Clearwater Revival had a #11 hit in 1968 with Hawkins' "Suzie Q."

Hawkins signed with Chess in the mid-'50s and recorded for its Checker subsidiary for the next several years. He enjoyed his most rewarding year in 1957, when "Suzie Q" climbed to #27 on the pop chart. Hawkins followed up with more modest releases like "La Do-Dada" (#32, 1958), "A House, a Car and a Wedding Ring" (#88, 1958), "Class Cutter Yeah Yeah" (#52, 1959), and uncharted singles like "My Babe" and "Liza Jane." James Burton (who claims to have been coauthor of "Suzie Q"), Scotty Moore (of Elvis Presley's band), and Roy Buchanan were among the guitarists in Hawkins' band.

After touring the U.S. several times, Hawkins left Chess in 1961 and in the next few years recorded, with little impact on the market, for such labels as Tilt, Zonk, Atlantic, Roulette, and ABC-Paramount. By the mid-'60s, he was living in Tyler, Texas, and producing pop hits by the Five Americans ("Western Union," "Do It Again a Little Bit Slower") and Bruce Channel ("Hey Baby"). At the close of the '60s, Hawkins revitalized his recording career with an album recorded in Nashville with Box Tops producer Dan Penn. In the '70s he produced Rio Grande. Wildcat Tamer, from 1999, was Hawkins' first new release in 30 years. It includes an updated "Suzie Q."

Edwin Hawkins Singers

Formed 1967, Oakland, CA
1969—Let Us Go Into the House of the Lord (Pavillion) 1969—Oh Happy Day (Buddah); More Happy Days 1971—Children (Get Together) 1972—I'd Like to Teach the World to Sing 1973—New World 1974—Live 1983—Mass Choir

(Mercury) 1985—The Best of the Edwin Hawkins Singers (Savoy) 1989—Imagine Heaven (Lecton) 1990—Music and Arts Seminar Chicago Mass Choir 1991—Face to Face (Lecton/PolyGram) 1992—Oh Happy Day Reunion (Intersound) 1993—If You Love Me 1994—Kings & Kingdoms 1997—The Best of the Edwin Hawkins Singers (Capitol).

The Edwin Hawkins Singers had one of the most successful gospel pop hits ever in 1969 with "Oh Happy Day" (#4) and returned to the Top 10 the following year backing Melanie on "Lay Down (Candles in the Rain)" (#6). The group's arranger, director, and pianist, Edwin Hawkins (born August 1943, in Oakland), was a student at Berkeley in 1967 when he and an associate, Betty Watson, organized the large choir to represent their Oakland church, the Ephesian Church of God in Christ, at a Pentecostal Youth Congress in Washington, DC. The group was originally called the Northern California State Youth Choir.

By 1969, the group was 46 members strong and backed by keyboards, drums, and electric bass. To help raise money to finance a trip to the National Youth Congress in Cleveland that year, the choir recorded an album in a San Francisco church on an old two-track stereo machine. It included a fiery reading of the gospel standard "Oh Happy Day," which a local disc jockey started airing. By the spring of 1969, the single was a Top 10 hit. Buddah picked up the LP, Let Us Go Into the House of the Lord for national distribution.

Featured on the album was vocalist Dorothy Morrison (born in Longview, Texas, in 1945), who went on to some prominence as a solo gospel artist, including an appearance at the 1969 Big Sur Folk Festival. Other featured soloists in the Hawkins group included Elaine Kelly ("To My Father's House") and Margarette Branch ("I'm Going Through").

After contributing to Melanie's hit and touring Europe in 1970, the group quickly faded from prominence, partly because the personnel kept changing, and keeping such a large retinue active proved prohibitively expensive. But they remain a respected gospel force, especially in the Bay Area, touring as recently as 1999. Various core members of the choir, including Edwin Hawkins and Grammy-winning vocalist Tremaine Hawkins, have also been active on their own.

Ronnie Hawkins

Born Jan. 10, 1935, Huntsville, AR
1963—The Best of Ronnie Hawkins (Roulette) 1970—Ronnie Hawkins (Cotillion) 1971—The Hawk 1972—Rock and Roll Resurrection (Monument) 1974—The Giant of Rock 'n' Roll 1990—Best of Ronnie Hawkins and the Hawks (Rhino).

A 40-year veteran of roadhouse rock & roll, Ronnie Hawkins is best known as the man who assembled the Band. He formed his first group in 1952 while attending the University of Arkansas and shortly thereafter cut his first record, a cover of an Eddy Arnold tune, for a local label. In the mid-'50s, before moving to Memphis, he played piano behind Carl Perkins and Conway Twitty.

After a stint in the army, Hawkins went to Canada for the first time in 1958. For the next four years he alternated between club work there and one-nighter tours of Southern honky-tonks. In that period, he met the four Canadians and one American who later became known as the Band (Levon Helm, like Hawkins, was a transplanted Arkansan). They joined his band the Hawks, and accompanied him on his auto tours through the South and Canada before leaving him to back John Hammond Jr. in 1964. (A year later they became Bob Dylan's backing band, and by 1968 they were on their own.) Among other onetime Hawks were guitarists Roy Buchanan, Duane Allman, and Dominic Troiano.

Hawkins recorded extensively for the Roulette label in the late '50s and early '60s. In 1959 he enjoyed two American chart hits, "Mary Lou" (#26) and "Forty Days" (#45). But rockabilly was on its way out by the time Hawkins got his recording career under way. In 1962 he settled in Toronto and became proprietor and featured attraction at the Hawk's Nest Bar. His records were hits in Canada, especially his 1963 recording of Bo Diddley's "Who Do You Love."

By the mid-'60s, Hawkins was recording for his own Hawk label in Canada. He performed regularly on the rock ballroom circuit in the late '60s, and in 1969 he signed with Atlantic/Cotillion. Ronnie Hawkins was recorded in Alabama with the Muscle Shoals Rhythm Section, and it produced his last American chart single, "Down in the Alley" (#75, 1970).

In 1976 Hawkins appeared at the Band's farewell concert, documented in Martin Scorsese's film The Last Waltz. He also joined the group during the 1989 destruction of the Berlin Wall. He continues to perform in clubs. In 1992 he played President Bill Clinton's inaugural party. In 1995 he compiled Let It Rock!, a CD that paired new recordings with tracks by Jerry Lee Lewis and Carl Perkins.

Screamin' Jay Hawkins

Born Jalacy J. Hawkins, July 18, 1929, Cleveland, OH; died Feb. 12, 2000, Neuilly-sur-Sein, Fr.
 1957—At Home With (Epic) 1961—I Put a Spell on You
 1970—Screamin' Jay Hawkins (Philips) 1990—Voodoo Jive: The Best of Screamin' Jay Hawkins (Rhino) 1991—Cow Fingers and Mosquito Pie (Legacy) 1993—Stone Crazy (Bizarre/Rhino) 1995—Somthin' Funny Goin' On (Bizarre/Straight) 1999—Portrait of a Maniac (Aim) 2000—The Best of Screamin' Jay Hawkins/Voodoo Jive (Rhino).

A show-biz eccentric, Screamin' Jay Hawkins was known more for his flamboyant dress and onstage shenanigans than for his singing or piano and sax playing. His calling card, the wild and chilling "I Put a Spell on You"—a ballad that took a voodoo turn after Hawkins got drunk in the recording studio—was never a chart hit. Nonetheless, it is a rock & roll classic, covered by artists ranging from Nina Simone to Creedence Clearwater Revival and sampled by the Notorious B.I.G. for 1997's "Kick in the Door."

Hawkins, one of eight illegitimate children, was turned over to an orphanage by his mother and raised (or adopted) by a Blackfoot Indian family. He took piano lessons as a young child and by his early teen years was performing for tips in neighborhood bars. Inspired by singers such as Paul Robeson and Enrico Caruso, Hawkins studied opera at the Ohio Conservatory of Music. He was a Golden Gloves champion by 1943, continued boxing through the close of the decade, and in 1949 he won the middleweight championship of Alaska. Hawkins went into the service near the end of World War II. He emerged from the service planning to continue studying opera but turned to R&B around 1951 as a way to make a living. His first gig was working as a pianist and singer with a band led by guitarist Tiny Grimes, with whom he toured and recorded (his first single, "Why Did You Waste My Time," 1951) in the early '50s, and he recorded with the Leroy Kirkland Band in 1954. He also toured U.S. clubs that year with Fats Domino's revue.

In 1955 Hawkins began his solo career. Adopting the "Screamin'" moniker to fit his unrestrained, rocking R&B, he started working clubs, earning a reputation for energetic showmanship that bordered on lunacy; as part of Alan Freed's package tours, Hawkins would be carried offstage in a (sometimes flaming) coffin.

His recorded efforts had far less impact. Aside from a few exceptional recordings like "I Put a Spell on You" (1956), "Alligator Wine" (1958), and "Feast of the Mau Mau" (1967), his records have virtually been ignored. Nonetheless he has recorded extensively over the years for numerous labels, including Okeh, Mercury, Roulette, Decca, RCA, and Bizarre/Straight.

In the early '60s Hawkins lived, performed, and recorded mainly in Hawaii and England, returning to the continental U.S. in mid-decade to play the club circuit. In the early '70s he worked out of New York, frequently performing at the Apollo Theatre in Harlem. In the mid-'70s he toured Europe extensively with the Rhythm and Blues Roots of Rock & Roll troupe. Through the '80s, Hawkins remained active playing club dates. In 1982 Hawkins opened U.S. shows for Nick Lowe, 10 years later, he was doing his campy act—coffin and all—on TV talk shows, to promote Rhino's Voodoo Jive set, and the newly recorded Stone Crazy, which found him sounding as energetically bizarre as ever. He continued performing the rest of his life, and never lost his fondness for props: In 1999 he was performing in Paris with a toilet onstage for his "Constipation Blues."

Hawkins appeared in several films, notably the rock flicks Mister Rock 'n' Roll (1957) and American Hot Wax (1978), as well as Mystery Train (1989) and A Rage in Harlem (1991). He was awarded the Rhythm & Blues Foundation's Pioneer Award in 1998.

Hawkins died of multiple organ failure following surgery for an aneurysm, in France, where he had lived since 1993. He had been married six times and had countless extramarital liaisons. Shortly before his death, he had expressed a desire to find and contact the 57 children he believed to be his. After his death, a Web site was set up so that possible mothers and children could contact the estate.

Hawkwind

Formed 1969, London, Eng.

Original members (as Group X/Hawkwind Zoo): Terry Ollis, drums; Nik Turner (b. Oxford, Eng.), sax, voc., flute; Dave Brock (b. Isleworth, Eng.), gtr., voc., synth.; Dikmik (b. Michael Davis, Richmond, Eng.), electronics, kybds.; John Harrison, bass; Mick Slattery, gtr. (dozens of personnel changes follow; the major ones are listed below).

1970—(– Slattery; + Huw Lloyd Langton, gtr.) 1972—Hawkwind (United Artists) (– Langton; – Harrison; + Dave Anderson; bass; + Robert Calvert [b. Pretoria, S.A.; d. 1988], voc., gtr.; + Del Dettmar, electronics) 1972—In Search of Space (– Anderson; – Ollis; + Ian Kilmister, a.k.a. Lemmy [b. Dec. 24, 1945, Stoke-on-Trent, Eng.], bass) Doremi Fasol Latido 1973—Space Ritual/Alive in Liverpool and London (– Dikmik) 1974—(– Calvert; + Alan Powell, drums) Hall of the Mountain Grill 1975—(– Dettmar; – Kilmister; + Paul Rudolph, gtr.; + Simon House, violin, Mellotron, kybds.) Warrior on the Edge of Time (Atco) (+ Calvert) 1976—Roadhawks (United Artists, U.K.); Astounding Sounds—Amazing Music (Charisma, U.K.); Masters of the Universe (United Artists, U.K.) 1977—Quark Strangeness and Charm (Warner/Sire) 1978—(– Turner; – Powell; – Rudolph; – House) Hawklords 25 Years On (Charisma, U.K.) (+ Harvey Bainbridge, bass; – Calvert) 1978—(group disbands) 1979—PXR 5 (Charisma) (group re-forms.) 1980—Repeat Performance (Charisma, U.K.); Live '79 (Bronze, U.K.); Levitation (U.K.) 1987—Live Chronicles (Profile) 1989—The Xenon Codex (Profile) 1990—Space Bandits (Road Racer) 1991—Palace Springs 1992—Out & Intake (Griffin Music); Electric Teepee; Hawklords Live; California Brainstorm (Iloki); The Psychedelic Warlords (Cleopatra) 1993—Lord of Light 1994—It Is the Business of the Future to Be Dangerous (Griffin Music) 1995—Alien 4 1997—Distant Horizons (Emergency Broadcast System, U.K.) 1999—Epoch Eclipse—30 Year Anthology (EMI, U.K.).

An English psychedelic rock band. Hawkwind (a.k.a. Hawklords, Hawkwind Zoo, etc.) has been a cult act since its inception, touring and often playing for free (one of its most memorable appearances was outside the gates of the Isle of Wight Festival in 1970). The motley crew, whose one constant remains guitarist Dave Brock, was originally called Group X, then Hawkwind Zoo, then Hawkwind, and its first public performance—a 10-minute set at All Saints Hall in Notting Hill Gate—attracted a booking agent. United Artists signed Hawkwind in November 1969.

With the 1972 addition of South African-born lyricist (and sometimes vocalist) Robert Calvert, the group's material improved. That year the quasi-psychedelic In Search of Space sold over 100,000 copies in Britain alone. Part of a live 1972 concert was taped, and from it sprang the prepunk, heavy-metal "Silver Machine," a #3 British hit. Hawkwind's most successful album ever was the double LP Space Ritual, which cracked the English Top 10 in 1973. That year the band's hit-bound single "Urban Guerilla" was pulled from distribution by UA because of a coincidental outbreak of terrorist bombings in London.

The group toured the U.S. for the first time in late 1973, with a revue including a seminude dancer, Stacia. It made a couple of subsequent trips to the States in 1974 to support Hall of the Mountain Grill, but late in the year Indiana police impounded all of the group's equipment, claiming it owed $8,000 in back taxes, and Hawkwind returned to England.

Undaunted, by spring 1975 Hawkwind was back in America for its fourth tour, to support Warrior on the Edge of Time. Bassist Ian "Lemmy" Kilmister was arrested by Canadian customs officials for possession of amphetamine sulphate (initially presumed to be cocaine) and jailed. Not wishing to jeopardize yet another U.S. tour, the band fired him; he later formed the punk-metal band Motorhead [see entry], which was named after the flip side of Hawkwind's 1975 single "Kings of Speed."

Hawkwind played to much acclaim at the Reading Festival in August 1975; soon thereafter longtime collaborator and science-fiction author Michael Moorcock released New World's Fair with instrumental backing from the band. Moorcock and coauthor Michael Butterworth featured the group in their 1976 novel, The Time of the Hawklords (which inspired the group's name change a few years later).

With lyricist Calvert back in the fold (during his mid-decade absence he released two solo albums: Captain Lockheed and the Starfighters [1974] and Lucky Leif and the Longships [1975], the latter produced by Brian Eno), the group reshuffled its lineup once again and by 1978 (after a brief tenure as the Sonic Assassins) had changed its name to the Hawklords. Around the same time, Simon House (with Hawkwind since April 1974) left to join David Bowie's band. With linchpin Brock (who by the late '70s had a 10-acre farm in Devon) still dominating the band, Hawkwind continued with moderate English success through the end of the '70s.

By that point, the musicians had developed such a loyal cult that they were often compared to the Grateful Dead. Following an ill-fated tenure with RCA in the early '80s, they all but disappeared on this side of the Atlantic until the '90s. Ironically, they were playing large festivals and arenas at home and all over Europe, including many free and benefit shows. Some long-departed members, including Lemmy, reunited for a tour in the early '80s. They returned for a short concert tour of the U.S. in 1989; Space Bandits received an unusual amount of media attention here.

In 1990 Hawkwind added a female singer, Bridget Wishart, and began experimenting with dance music, which made converts of a few drug-crazed ravers. In recent years, the American cult of Hawkwind has grown thanks to touring and to the collective's influence on the noise, electronic, stoner-metal, and neo-psychedelic/space-rock undergrounds. In 2000 "Silver Machine" was used in a British Mazda commercial. The same year, the bulk of Hawkwind's 1969 through 1976 personnel assembled as a massive "Hawkestra" for a three-hour performance at London's Brixton Academy (the venue has also hosted all-night Hawkwind gigs).

Over the years, the group's output has been widely anthologized and reanthologized. Nik Turner continues to perform as a solo artist. Robert Calvert died of a heart attack in 1988, shortly before one of Hawkwind's many reunions.

Isaac Hayes

Born Aug. 20, 1942, Covington, TN
 1967—Presenting Isaac Hayes (Enterprise) 1969—Hot Buttered Soul 1970—The Isaac Hayes Movement; To Be Continued; 1971—Shaft soundtrack; Black Moses 1973—Joy; Live at the Sahara Tahoe 1975—Chocolate Chip (HBS); Disco Connection 1976—Juicy Fruit (Disco Freak) 1977—A Man and a Woman (with Dionne Warwick); New Horizon (Polydor) 1978—Hotbed (Stax); For the Sake of Love (Polydor) 1979—Don't Let Go; Royal Rappin's (with Millie Jackson) 1980—And Once Again 1981—Lifetime Thing 1986—U Turn (Columbia); Best of Isaac Hayes, vol. 1 (Stax); Best of Isaac Hayes, vol. 2 1988—Love Attack (Columbia) 1991—Greatest Hit Singles (Stax) 1995—Branded (Pointblank); Raw & Refined; Greatest Hits (Stax) 2000—Ultimate Collection (Uni/Hip-O).

As a songwriter, arranger, producer, pianist, and vocalist for Stax-Volt Records in the '60s and early '70s, Isaac Hayes played an essential part in the making of Memphis soul. In the early '70s he also laid the groundwork for disco. He has since been credited as the "Original Rapper," although his influence was first evident in the sexy, seductive bedroom rapping of Barry White and Marvin Gaye.

Hayes was raised by his sharecropper grandparents, and by the age of five was singing in church. By his teens, he and his grandparents had moved to Memphis, where he learned to play sax and piano. He began singing in local clubs with his own band Sir Isaac and the Doo-Dads, and cut his first records for local labels in 1962. Around the same time, he started playing sax with the Mar-Keys, and his association with the group led to studio work with Stax Records that turned into a formal relationship in 1964, when he was hired to play on Otis Redding sessions.

In the mid-'60s Hayes became more active as keyboardist in the Stax house band, and at Stax he developed a songwriting partnership with lyricist David Porter. Among their more than 200 collaborations were such hits as "Soul Man" and "Hold On, I'm Coming" for Sam and Dave; "B-A-B-Y" for Carla Thomas; and "I Had a Dream" for Johnnie Taylor.

Hayes began making his own Stax records in 1967, but made his reputation as a performer in 1969, when he recorded Hot Buttered Soul. With long songs (there were only four cuts on the whole album) and elaborate arrangements, the album hit #8 on the pop chart and went gold.

Hayes' biggest commercial triumph came in 1971, when he scored the Gordon Parks film Shaft. The double-album soundtrack won an Academy Award (making Hayes the first African-American composer so honored) and it yielded "The Theme From Shaft," which, with its insistent hi-hats, wah-wah guitars, and intoned monologue, hit #1 on the pop chart in 1971, went platinum, won a Grammy, and made Hayes an international superstar. Hayes' later appearance at the Grammy Awards telecast—swathed in silver and chains, bathed in clouds of smoke, and surrounded by beautiful women—was a showstopper. His other pop hits include covers of Burt Bacharach's "Walk On By" (#30 pop, #13 R&B, 1969) and Jimmy Webb's "By the Time I Get to Phoenix" (#37 pop and R&B, 1969), and his own "Never Can Say Goodbye" (#22 pop, #5 R&B, 1971), all on Stax's Enterprise subsidiary.

Hayes's early-'70s concerts featured a 20-piece orchestra, the Isaac Hayes Connection, with the singer wearing tights, cape, gold chains around his bare chest, and dark glasses fronting his shaved head. One performance was documented in the film Wattstax (1973).

In 1975, after fighting with Stax over royalties, he signed with ABC Records, setting up his own Hot Buttered Soul (HBS) subsidiary. His first ABC album went gold, but subsequent efforts were ignored in the disco market. In 1976 the bottom fell out of Hayes' career. Six million dollars in debt, he moved from Memphis to Atlanta. In 1978 Wallace Johnson, cofounder of the Holiday Inn chain, became his manager, but by 1980 he was suing Hayes for breach of contract. In the meantime, Hayes was taking steps toward a comeback. In 1977 he recorded a double set, A Man and a Woman, with Dionne Warwick, and he cowrote Warwick's 1979 Top 20 pop hit "Déjà Vu." On his own on the Polydor label, he returned to the charts with "Zeke the Freak" (#19 R&B, 1978), "Don't Let Go" (#21 pop, #11 R&B, 1979), and "Do You Wanna Make Love" (#30 R&B, 1979). His duet album with Millie Jackson, Royal Rappin's (1979), was popular on the soul chart. In 1986 he scored a Top 10 R&B hit with "Ike's Rap," an antidrug song. In 1994 he signed with Virgin Records.

He began acting in 1974 with Truck Turner, a blaxploitation film, which he also produced and scored. Among his other feature-film credits are It Seemed Like a Good Idea at the Time (1975), Escape From New York (1981), I'm Gonna Get You Sucka (1988), Robin Hood: Men in Tights (1993), Posse (1993), It Could Happen to You (1994), and Reindeer Games (2000). He has also appeared in several made-for-television films and guest-starred on The Rockford Files, Miami Vice, and The A-Team. In 1996 Hayes recorded the theme to Beavis and Butthead Do America, a film version of the popular MTV animated series. He also cowrote the soundtrack. Around the same time he found success as the distinctive voice of Chef, a libidinous school-cafeteria cook on the gross-out cartoon hit South Park. The show, on cable's Comedy Central, also spawned the 1999 movie and soundtrack South Park: Bigger Longer and Uncut (#28), a video game, and 1998's multiplatinum Chef Aid: The South Park Album (#16), to which Hayes contributed four comic nuggets including "Chocolate Salty Balls (P.S. I Love You)" (#1 UK) and "Tonight Is Right for Love," a duet with Meat Loaf. Having become a pop culture icon once again, Hayes began working for 98.7 KISS FM and became the second most popular morning DJ in New York.

Under the official name Nene Katey Ocansey I, Hayes is a member of the Royal Family of Noyami Mantse of the Kabiawe Division of the Ada Traditional Area in Ghana. As an African king, he has worked on improving the Ghanaian economy (he is an honorary chief in Nigeria as well). He continues to act, compose, and record. In 1992 Hayes became the spokesperson for the World Literacy Crusade. He also lectures on humanitarian issues both here and in Africa and is the founder of the Isaac Hayes Foundation, which works for increased literacy.

Ofra Haza

Born Nov. 19, 1957 or 1959, Tel Aviv, Israel; died Feb. 23, 2000, Tel Aviv

1987—Fifty Gates of Wisdom (Shanachie) 1988—Shaday (Sire/Warner Bros.) 1989—Desert Wind 1992—Kirya (East/West) 1997—Ofra Haza 1997 (BMG/Ariola).

A striking Sephardic beauty whose voice drew comparisons to both Barbra Streisand and legendary Middle Eastern vocalist Om Kalsoum, Ofra Haza was born to Yemenite Jewish parents in Hatikva, Tel Aviv's hardscrabble ghetto for immigrant Jews from Arab lands. At age 12 she joined the Hatikva theater troupe, with which she recorded (winning Israeli music awards for some albums). After serving two compulsory years in the Israeli army, Haza began her own recording career in 1979 and quickly became a top Israeli pop singer—whose records also sold well in neighboring Arab lands. In 1983 she won second prize in the annual Eurovision Song Contest.

In 1985 Haza returned to her roots by recording Yemenite Songs, a collection of ancient melodies she'd learned from her mother, with traditional instrumentation and lyrics from the 16th-century poetry of Yemenite-Jewish rabbi Shalom Shabazi. The album became a surprise world-beat hit in England, where Haza's voice was sampled from the track "Im Nin'alu" by Coldcut, for its hit 12-inch remix of rappers Enc B. and Rakim's "Paid in Full."

Haza's voice was also sampled by M/A/R/R/S in its international dance hit "Pump Up the Volume," only months before she released her first major-label U.S. album, Shaday (#130, 1989), a mix of Middle Eastern-inflected dance tracks and conventional Western pop ballads. Its souped-up version of "Im Nin'alu" became a minor U.S. dance hit (and a Top 20 pop hit in the U.K.). Kirya (1992) was produced by Don Was, featured guest vocals by Lou Reed and Iggy Pop, and was nominated for a Grammy in the world beat category. In 1992 Haza also recorded the single "Temple of Love," with British alternative-rock band Sisters of Mercy, and guested on Thomas Dolby's album Astronauts & Heretics. In 1994 she sang at the Oslo, Norway, Nobel Peace Prize ceremony for Israeli prime minister Yitzhak Rabin and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat. The next year, she appeared on Paula Abdul's Head Over Heels.

She did not release another album until her self-titled import in 1997, the same year she married businessman Doron Ashkenazi. In 1998 her voice graced two movie soundtracks, The Governess and Disney's Prince of Egypt. In February, 2000—weeks before she was heard singing "Open Your Heart" on the Madonna tribute album Virgin Voices vol. 2

(Cleopatra)—Haza suddenly and mysteriously died in a Tel Aviv hospital at age 41 (or 43), of massive internal organ failure, which one Israeli newspaper reported was due to complications from AIDS (neither her family nor her husband commented). Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak spoke at her Hatikva funeral.

Lee Hazlewood

Born Barton Lee Hazlewood, July 9, 1929, Mannford, OK 1963—Trouble Is a Lonesome Town (Reprise) 1964—The Not So Very Important People 1966—Lee Hazlewood Sings Friday's Child (Reprise) 1968—Nancy and Lee (with Nancy Sinatra); Nancy and Lee—Encore (with Nancy Sinatra) (RCA) 1973—Poet, Fool or Bum (Capitol) 1975—A House Safe for Tigers (CBS) 1976—20th Century Lee (RCA) 1977—Back on the Street Again (EMI) 1999—Farmisht, Flatulence, Origami, ARF! and Me (Smells Like Records).

Lee Hazlewood's long career includes work as an intriguing songwriter, pop record producer, and baritone singer (most notably in duets with Nancy Sinatra). He was raised in Port Arthur, Texas, and attended Southern Methodist University before being drafted to fight in Korea. Upon his discharge in 1953 he became a country disc jockey in Phoenix. By 1955, he was writing songs and producing an occasional recording session. His major success of the period was Sanford Clark's 1956 hit "The Fool," which he wrote and produced and which sold 800,000 copies. (The song was also a modest hit when covered by the Gallahads that year.)

In 1957 Hazlewood moved to Philadelphia and co-founded Jamie Records (Dick Clark was one of the partners), which he used to launch the career of guitarist Duane Eddy. Over three and a half years, he produced, among others, "Rebel Rouser," "Yep!" and "Forty Miles of Bad Road," which collectively sold about 20 million copies. In the early '60s Hazlewood had a hand in running such minor labels as Trey, East-West, and Gregmark, and in 1965 he produced several hits for Dino, Desi and Billy.

Hazlewood is best known to the public for his work with Nancy Sinatra [see entry]. Besides producing her hits "These Boots Are Made for Walkin'" (#1, 1966) and "Sugar Town" (#5, 1966), Hazlewood dueted with her on "Jackson" (#14, 1967), "Summer Wine" (#49, 1967), "Lady Bird" (#20, 1967), and "Some Velvet Morning" (#26, 1968), all of which he wrote. Many of Hazlewood's sexually charged songs were filled with double entendres, leaving listeners questioning their true meaning. That, along with his extraordinary deep voice, which he used to talk-sing his compositions, inspired post-punk artists who rediscovered his music in the '80s.

In 1967 Hazlewood's own label LHI Records signed Gram Parsons' International Submarine Band, whose 1968 album, Safe at Home, was produced by Hazlewood's then-girlfriend Suzi Jane Hokom. By the close of the '60s, Hazlewood was living in Stockholm, Sweden, and alternating between periods of virtual retirement and occasional solo activity in Europe.

In the '80s Hazlewood moved to Phoenix, Arizona, and retired from the music business. He reemerged in 1995, touring hip rock clubs with Nancy Sinatra in support of her comeback album. He discovered he'd become a cult figure among the postpunk cognoscenti, and by the end of the decade many of his early recordings had been reissued by Sonic Youth drummer Steve Shelley's Smells Like Records label. In 1999 the label released Hazlewood's first new recordings in decades, a collection of Tin Pan Alley standards. Telling one interviewer, "I'm happy that Sonic Youth drag along a few other people who like obscure old fucks like me," Hazlewood actually flew to New York to attend a "Loser's Lounge" nightclub tribute to his music.

Jeff Healey Band

Formed 1985, Toronto, Ontario, Can.

Jeff Healey (b. Norman Jeffrey Healey, Mar. 25, 1966, Toronto), gtr., voc.; Joe Rockman (b. Joseph Rockman, Jan. 1, 1957, Toronto), bass; Tom Stephen (b. Thomas Stephen, Feb. 2, 1955, St. John, New Brunswick), drums.
1988—See the Light (Arista) 1990—Hell to Pay 1992—Feel This 1995—Cover to Cover 1998—The Very Best of the Jeff Healey Band (BMG International, U.K.) 1999—The Master Hits: The Jeff Healey Band (Arista Heritage) 2000—Get Me Some (Atlantic).

Having lost his sight to eye cancer at a year old, blues-rock guitarist Jeff Healey developed an unconventional lap-top technique that involves using all five fingers for effects and bending strings with his thumb to hit unusual notes.

Healey received his first guitar at the age of three and cut his teeth on country licks. After attending the School for the Blind in Brantford, he registered at a local high school, where he played guitar and trumpet in jazz and concert bands and helped organize a blues-based group called Blues Direction. In 1985 a friend convinced legendary guitarist Albert Collins to let the 19-year-old Healey join him onstage during a Toronto club gig. Impressed, Collins invited the young musician to play with him and guitarist Stevie Ray Vaughan a few nights later. Healey was soon in hot demand for bar appearances.

Needing a band, Healey tapped local drummer Tom Stephen and Stephen's friend, bassist Joe Rockman. The Jeff Healey Band toured Canada for two years before signing with Arista Records in New York. Arista chose veteran Jimmy Iovine to produce the group's first album, just as Iovine was putting together the soundtrack for a film that featured a bar band whose guitarist was blind and played the instrument on his lap. This coincidence was even more uncanny than it might have seemed. The screenwriter for Road House, a film starring Patrick Swayze, had conceived the character after seeing Healey perform. The Canadian trio got the movie gig, and 1988's See the Light (#22) went platinum, yielding the #5 single "Angel Eyes" in 1989. Despite guest appearances by Mark Knopfler, George Harrison, and Jeff Lynne, 1990's Hell to Pay (#27) didn't fare as well. A third album, 1992's Feel This, only reached #174, and in 1995 the band released an album of covers.

Meanwhile, Healey, a longtime avid record collector whose vinyl library numbers more than 20,000, had begun hosting a local radio show called My Kinda Jazz from his home in Toronto in late 1991. The Canadian Broadcasting Company took the show national soon after, and it has been running on a regular basis since. The band also toured in Europe every summer before returning with Get Me Some in 2000.

Heart

Formed 1970, Seattle, WA

Ann Wilson (b. June 19, 1950, San Diego, CA), voc., gtr., flute; Nancy Wilson (b. Mar. 16, 1954, San Francisco, CA), voc., gtr., mandolin; Roger Fisher (b. 1950), gtr.; Howard Leese (b. June 13, 1951), kybds., synth., gtr.; Michael Derosier, drums; Steve Fossen, bass.

1976—Dreamboat Annie (Mushroom) 1977—Little Queen (Portrait) 1978—Magazine (Mushroom); Dog and Butterfly (Portrait) (- Fisher) 1980—Bébé Lé Strange (Epic); Greatest Hits Live 1981—(- Derosier; - Fossen) 1982—Private Audition (+ Mark Andes [b. Feb. 19, 1948, Philadelphia, PA], bass; + Denny Carmassi, drums) 1983—Passionworks 1985—Heart (Capitol) 1987—Bad Animals 1990—Brigade 1991—Rock the House Live! 1993—(- Andes; - Carmassi; + Fernando Saunders [b. Jan. 17, 1954, Detroit, MI], bass; + Denny Fongheiser [b. Apr. 21, 1959, Alameda, CA], drums) Desire Walks On 1994—Heart: 20 Years of Rock & Roll CD-ROM (Bob Hamilton's Lifework Series) 1995—The Road Home 1998—Greatest Hits (Sony) 2000—Greatest Hits 1985-1995 (Capitol).

Nancy Wilson solo: 1999—Live at McCabe's Guitar Shop (Epic). The Lovemongers (Ann Wilson; Nancy Wilson; + Sue Ennis, voc., gtr., kybds.; + Frank Cox, voc., gtr., mandolin, kybds.): 1992—Battle of Evermore EP (Capitol) 1997—Whirligig (Will) 1998—Here Is Christmas (2B Music).

Hard-rock band Heart, led by singer Ann Wilson and featuring her sister Nancy on guitar, sold millions of records in the late '70s. All but written off by 1985, they then engineered a comeback that saw them surpass their initial success.

The Wilson sisters grew up in Southern California and Taiwan before their Marine Corps captain father retired to the Seattle suburbs. After attending college they returned to Seattle, with Nancy working as a folksinger and Ann joining an all-male local group in 1970 called Heart. (The group was formed in 1963 by Steve Fossen and Roger and Mike Fisher as the Army. They later changed the name to White Heart, shortened to Heart in 1974.) Upon joining, Ann became lead guitarist Mike Fisher's girlfriend, and when Nancy joined in 1974, she became involved with Fisher's brother Roger.

After many one-nighters in the Vancouver area, in 1975 they attracted the attention of Canada's Mushroom label, run by Shelly Siegel. He had them cut Dreamboat Annie, which upon release in Canada sold 30,000 copies. In the US

Heart

Siegel released it first in Seattle, where it quickly sold another 25,000. With two hit singles—"Crazy on You" (#35, 1976) and "Magic Man" (#9, 1976)—the album eventually sold over a million copies.

By early 1977, the Wilson sisters had switched to CBS' subsidiary Portrait, a move that resulted in a prolonged legal fight with Siegel. In retaliation he released the partly completed Magazine at the same time Portrait released Little Queen. A Seattle court ruled that Mushroom had to recall Magazine so that the Wilsons could remix several tracks and redo vocals before rereleasing the disc. (The Wilsons had wanted the album taken off the market completely.)

Little Queen, with the hit "Barracuda" (#11, 1977), became Heart's second million-seller; Magazine and the double-platinum Dog and Butterfly followed suit in 1978. During sessions for Bébé Lé Strange, the Wilson-Fisher liaisons ended. Roger Fisher formed his own band in the Seattle area. Howard Leese and Nancy took up the guitar slack, and Nancy Wilson's childhood friend Sue Ennis helped out on song collaborations. The group hit the road for a 77-city tour to support Bébé, then returned to make Private Audition.

That album and the following year's Passionworks (featuring new bassist Mark Andes [Spint, Jo Jo Gunne, Firefall] and drummer Denny Carmassi [Gamma]) failed to go gold, putting Heart at a career crossroads. But the group's first album for Capitol, simply titled Heart (#1, 1985), sold 5 million copies on the strength of four Top 10 hits: "What About Love?" (#10, 1985), "Never" (#4, 1985), "These Dreams" (#1, 1986), and "Nothin' at All" (#10, 1986). In June 1986 Nancy Wilson married journalist, screenwriter, and director Cameron Crowe; she made a cameo appearance in his movie Fast Times at Ridgemont High. Bad Animals (#2, 1987), too, contained a chart-topper, in the power ballad "Alone," as well as "Who Will You Run To" (#7, 1987) and "There's the Girl" (#12, 1987). In 1989 Ann Wilson and Cheap Trick's Robin Zander had a #6 hit with their duet, "Surrender to Me." Brigade

(#3, 1990) became Heart's sixth multiplatinum LP and added three more Top 25 hits to its catalogue.

Following a 1990 tour, the Wilson sisters put together an informal acoustic group called the Lovemongers with Sue Ennis and Frank Cox; a four-song EP that included a version of Led Zeppelin's "Battle of Evermore" came out in late 1992, and the quartet performed several times in the Seattle area. The Lovemongers released a full-length album in 1997. When Heart reemerged with Desire Walks On (#48) in 1993, it was without Andes and Carmassi. For the group's subsequent tour, their places were taken by bassist Fernando Saunders and drummer Denny Fongheiser. The band offered live acoustic versions of its best-known songs on 1995's The Road Home, which was produced by Led Zeppelin's John Paul Jones. The pared-down format echoed Heart's low profile in the late '90s. Of the two sisters, Nancy has kept busiest, scoring her husband's movies Jerry Maguire and Almost Famous, and releasing a solo record in 1999. That same year, she and Ann embarked on a tour on their own, the first time they had ever done so.

In addition to their own recording career, the Wilson sisters have played a key role on the Seattle music scene. Among the groups who have recorded at their Bad Animals studio are R.E.M., Pearl Jam, Alice in Chains, and Soundgarden. Heart's Heart: 20 Years of Rock & Roll was the first CD-ROM multimedia biography/greatest-hits package ever released.

The Heartbreakers/Johnny Thunders

Formed 1975, New York, NY

Johnny Thunders (b. John Anthony Genzale, July 15, 1952, New York; d. Apr. 23, 1991, New Orleans, LA), gtr., voc.; Walter Lure (b. Apr. 22, 1949, New York), gtr., voc.; Richard Hell (b. Richard Myers, Oct. 2, 1949, Lexington, KY), bass, voc.; Jerry Nolan (b. May 7, 1946, New York; d. Jan. 14, 1992, New York), drums.

1976—(- Hell; + Billy Rath, bass) 1977—L.A.M.F. (Track, U.K.) (- Nolan; + Ty Styx, drums) 1979—Live at Max's Kansas City (Max's Kansas City/Beggars Banquet, U.K.) 1982—D.T.K.: Live at the Speakeasy (Jungle, U.K.) 1984—Live at the Lyceum Ballroom (ABC, U.K.); L.A.M.F. Revisited (Jungle, U.K.).
 Johnny Thunders solo: 1978—So Alone (Real) 1983—New Too Much Junkie Business (ROIR); Diary of a Lover (PVC)
 1987—Stations of the Cross (ROIR) 2001—Belfast Nights (Triple X).

After the original New York Dolls [see entry] broke up, Johnny Thunders—who had been the Dolls' Keith Richards to David Johansen's Mick Jagger—and Jerry Nolan formed the Heartbreakers, first as a trio with former Television bassist Richard Hell, who soon left to lead his own band, the Voidoids. If the New York Dolls were a precursor to punk rock, then the Heartbreakers served as a living bridge to it—updating classic Rolling Stones-style, sneering two-guitar rock in prototypical fast-and-furious style. With Thunders' shambling, drugged-out, foul-mouthed onstage charm, and songs like "Chinese Rocks" and "Too Much Junkie Business" celebrating the heroin-junkie lifestyle, these Heartbreakers could not be confused with Tom Petty's backup band.

The Heartbreakers built a following with a year of East Coast club gigs, but drew no offers from record companies. Sex Pistols impresario Malcolm McLaren, who had been involved in the Dolls' final days, invited the Heartbreakers to tour England, where they joined the Pistols, the Clash, the Damned, and the Slits on the historic 1976 Anarchy Tour. (Jerry Nolan later claimed he and Thunders first introduced Johnny Rotten and other punks to heroin during this time.) Heralded by punk rockers who'd been inspired by the Dolls, the Heartbreakers stayed in England for over a year, recording their debut album, L.A.M.F. (from an obscene graffiti used by the teen gangs of which Thunders and Nolan had been members). It was so poorly produced that Nolan quit the band in disgust and formed the short-lived Idols back in New York, while former Clash drummer Terry Chimes took Nolan's place briefly before the Heartbreakers drifted apart in London.

Thunders stayed there, and in 1978 recorded a critically acclaimed solo album, So Alone, with backing from Sex Pistols Steve Jones and Paul Cook, Peter Perrett of the Only Ones, Thin Lizzy's Phil Lynott, and ex-Small Faces/Humble Pie guitarist Steve Marriott. The album included a rare glimpse of Thunders' tender side in the classic "You Can't Put Your Arms Around a Memory," as well as nods to his musical roots in girl-group sava ("Great Big Kiss") and surf music (an amphetamine cover of the Chantays' "Pipeline"). Thunders returned to New York in late 1978 for the first of many Heartbreakers reunion/farewell gigs, which was captured on Live at Max's Kansas City. In 1980 Thunders formed Gang War with former MC5 guitarist Wayne Kramer, while Lure and Rath started the Heroes with Lure's younger brother Richie (a guitarist in the late-'70s punk band the Erasers). Thunders formed another short-lived band, Cosa Nostra, before reconvening the Heartbreakers again in 1982.

By this time Lure was working as a stockbroker. In 1984, with former Generation X guitarist (and future Sigue Sigue Sputnik leader) Tony James, Thunders finally remixed L.A.M.F. for Revisited. The Heartbreakers (with Nolan) held a final New York City reunion show in 1990. A year later Thunders, just back in the U.S. from a successful tour of Japan, died of a lethal mixture of methadone and alcohol in a New Orleans hotel room.

Heaven 17

Formed 1979, Sheffield, Eng.

Martyn Ware (b. May 19, 1956, Sheffield), synth.; Ian Craig-Marsh, (b. Nov. 11, 1956, Sheffield), synth.; Glenn Gregory (b. May 16, 1958, Sheffield), voc.

1982—Heaven 17 (Arista) 1983—The Luxury Gap 1984—How Men Are 1986—Pleasure One (Virgin) 1988—Teddy Bear, Duke & Psycho 1997—Bigger Than America (Eye of the Storm) 1998—Retox/Detox (Eagle) 1999—How Live Is (Almafame).

Computer-operators-turned-synthesizer-wizards Martyn Ware and Ian Craig-Marsh had worked together in the band Human League before forming the British Electric Foundation, an experimental dance-oriented production project that worked with a variety of singers and musicians. Heaven 17, a trio consisting of Ware, Craig-Marsh, and singer Glenn Gregory, became the best-known B.E.F. offshoot. Named after a group in Anthony Burgess' novel A Clockwork Orange, Heaven 17 faced the same accusations of slickness that met many technopop acts, but the band also won praise for its sophisticated electrofunk arrangements, and for Gregory's singing, which was judged unusually expressive for his genre.

Ware and Craig-Marsh hooked up with ex-photographer Gregory at a drama center in Sheffield. Heaven 17's first single, "(We Don't Need This) Fascist Groove Thang," was released in England in 1981; it became a minor hit there (#45), despite a BBC Radio ban induced by its title. The trio's eponymous debut album followed in 1982, and hit the U.S. charts at #68 the following year. Meanwhile, 1983's The Luxury Gap peaked at #4 in the U.K. In 1984 Gregory took part in the star-studded recording sessions for Band Aid's "Do They Know It's Christmas?" single. But despite How Men Are's success in England (#12 U.K., 1984), a commercial foothold eluded Heaven 17 in America, where the group never surpassed the mediocre chart performance of its first album. In 1988, after the release of Teddy Bear, Duke & Psycho, Ware and Gregory focused on production projects. By this point Ware had coproduced Tina Turner's 1983 cover of Al Green's "Let's Stay Together" (#26 pop, #6 UK)—which featured Gregory on backing vocals—and Terence Trent D'Arby's debut album, Introducing the Hardline According to Terence Trent D'Arby (1987). Ware and Craig-Marsh resurrected B.E.F. at large in 1990, and produced a single for the R&B singer Lalah Hathaway in 1991. In 1994 Ware produced Erasure's LP I Say, I Say, I Say.

The same year, a remix of the 1983 single "Temptation" was released and sold well worldwide, reminding the public that Heaven 17 still existed (the group had never broken up). Encouraged by the response, the members collaborated on their first album in eight years, Bigger Than America. To support the new release, the band embarked on its first tour ever, initially as an opening act for Erasure and then on its own. Retox/Detox was a collection of new versions of Heaven 17 songs recorded with '90s electronica artists, while How Live Is culled performances from its recent concerts. The group was working on a new studio album in 2000.

Heavy D. and the Boyz

Formed 1984, Mt. Vernon, NY

Heavy D. (b. Dwight Myers, May 24, 1967, Jam.), voc.; Eddie F. (b. Eddie Farrell, Mar. 25, 1968), DJ; G-Whiz (b. Glen Parrish, Oct. 20, 1968, New Rochelle, NY), stylist; Trouble T-Roy (b. Troy Dixon, Oct. 19, 1967; d. July 15, 1990), dancer.

1987—Living Large (Uptown/MCA) 1989—Big Tyme
1990—(– Trouble T-Roy) 1991—Peaceful Journey 1993—
Blue Funk 1994—Nuttin' but Love 1997—Waterbed Hev
(Uptown/Universal) 1999—Heavy.

At first Heavy D. seemed to be a novelty rapper, calling himself the Overweight Lover and giving his songs names like "Chunky But Funky." But his deep, amiable baritone and funky, fluid grooves, often characterized by the Teddy Riley–produced R&B-rap style New Jack Swing, won the approval of critics and serious hip-hop fans alike. In addition to Riley, the group has used a variety of well-known producers, including Enck Sermon, Marley Marl, Gang Starr's DJ Premier, and Heavy D.'s cousin Pete Rock.

Dwight Myers grew up the youngest of six children in a middle-class, Mt. Vernon, New York, home listening to rap on the radio. While still in his teens he won $1,500 in Atlantic City, with which he and Eddie Ferrell bought a computer, which he later traded for a drum machine and started making tapes in Ferrell's basement with friends Glen Parrish and Troy Dixon. The 260-pound, 6-foot-3-inch, light-skinned Myers began calling himself Heavy D.

Heavy D. and the Boyz: G-Whiz, Eddie F., Heavy D.

The rapper's messages could be romantic or tough, but they never celebrated violence like many of his successful contemporaries. In 1987 Heavy D. and the Boyz released Living Large. Both their second album, Big Tyme (#19 pop, #1 R&B, 1989), and third, Peaceful Journey (#21 pop, #5 R&B, 1991), sold platinum. In addition, Heavy D. wrote the theme song for the popular television show In Living Color. The group suffered two tragedies between Big Tyme and Peaceful Journey. In 1989 Heavy D.'s brother, Tony Myers, was gunned down. Then, while on tour in 1990, Trouble T-Roy fell from a ledge to his death during rehearsals. A year later, nine fans were killed and 29 injured during a stampede at a concert organized by Sean Combs at the City College of New York.

The group's string of hit singles, beginning in 1986, include: "Mr. Big Stuff" (#60 R&B, 1986), "Don't You Know" (#12 R&B, 1988), "We Got Our Own Thang" (#10 R&B, 1989), "Somebody for Me" (#8 R&B, 1989), "Gyrlz, They Love Me" (#12 R&B, 1990), "Now That We Found Love" (#11 pop, #5 R&B, 1991) (a rap cover of Third World's 1979 hit), and "Is It Good to You" (#32 pop, #13 R&B, 1991). Singles from 1993's Blue Funk (#40 pop, #7 R&B) were not as successful, but the Boyz came back in 1994 with the smash "Got Me Waiting" (#20 pop, #3 R&B), the first single from Nuttin' but Love. Both albums went gold.

In the early '90s Heavy D. launched an acting career, worked as a producer, and by 1996 was the president of Uptown Records—making him the first rapper to be simultaneously an active performer and a top label executive. Then, in 1997, Heavy D. left that post and made a surprisingly strong return to the charts with Waterbed Hev (#9 pop, #3 R&B, 1997). The single "Big Daddy" reached #18 on the pop chart, and his collaboration with Queen Latifah, "Need Your Love," reached #70. In 1999 Heavy had the rapper trading rhymes with such guests as Q-Tip, Cee-Lo of Goodie Mob, and Chico DeBarge. That same year, Heavy D. acted in Cider House Rules and appeared with Eddie Murphy and Martin Lawrence in Life.

Bobby Hebb

Born July 26, 1941, Nashville, TN
1966—Sunny (Philips).

Singer/songwriter Bobby Hebb is best known for the light, sentimental "Sunny" (#2, 1966). He was one of seven children of blind parents who taught him to play the guitar. At age 12, Hebb became one of the first blacks to play the Grand Ole Opry, when country legend Roy Acuff invited him to perform. In the early '60s he moved to Chicago, graduated from a dental technician's course, and took music classes while occasionally accompanying Bo Diddley on the spoons. He studied guitar with Chet Atkins, who helped him break into show business. Hebb eventually met Sylvia Shemwell, with whom he worked as Bobby and Sylvia. He later cut such tunes as "Night Train to Memphis" and "You Broke My Heart and I Broke Your Jaw."

In 1963 Hebb's brother Hal (a member of the Marigolds) was killed in a mugging. Hebb responded with "Sunny." He was unable to sell it to publishers, but in 1966, while recording an album, he cut the song at the end of a session to use up some extra time, and it became a hit. By year's end, Hebb had appeared on several major network television shows and toured the U.S. with the Beatles. (The singer claims to have recommended keyboardist Billy Preston to the Fab Four, after Ringo Starr asked him if he knew of any funky piano players.) Followup hits proved elusive, however. His last two chart appearances came before the year was out, with "A Satisfied Mind" (#39) and "Love Me" (#84).

Hebb had isolated U.K. hits like "Love Love Love" in the early '70s on GRT Records. As the decade progressed he made occasional club appearances in America and got a reworked "Sunny" ("Sunny '76") onto the soul chart but mostly lived a quiet life in a colonial mansion in Salem, Massachusetts.

Hebb claims to have written over 3,000 songs, a third of them published—including material for Percy Sledge, Mary Wells, Marvin Gaye, Billy Preston, Herb Alpert, and Lou Rawls, whose recording of Hebb's "A Natural Man" won a Grammy in 1971. "Sunny" was widely covered as well, showing up on discs by Cher, Georgie Fame, and Gloria Lynne, among others. Hebb now lives in an artists' colony in the small Massachusetts town of Rockport.

Michael Hedges

Born Dec. 31, 1953, Enid, OK; died Dec. 2, 1997, Mendocino, CA

1981—Breakfast in the Field (Windham Hill) 1984—Aerial Boundaries 1985—Watching My Life Go By 1986—Santabear's First Christmas 1987—Live on the Double Planet 1988—Strings of Steel 1989—The Shape of the Land 1990—Taproot 1994—The Road to Return 1996—Oracle 1999—Torched.

Solo steel-string acoustic guitarist Michael Hedges was by far the most ferocious-sounding artist to record for Windham Hill, the pioneering New Age label. Hedges had the intensity—and some of the techniques—of such acclaimed rock guitarists as Eddie Van Halen.

Hedges began studying piano at age four, after growing up listening to pop and rock music (he's cited the Beatles and Jethro Tull), he took up guitar, flute, clarinet, and cello. He focused on classical guitar at the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore, then attended Stanford's Center for Computer Research and Musical Acoustics—at both schools, studying by day and playing steel-string acoustic guitar in bars and cafes by night. Windham Hill founder Will Ackerman discovered Hedges performing at the Varsity Theater in Palo Alto. Hedges' all-instrumental debut, Breakfast in the Field, won raves from such jazz-rock guitar greats as Larry Coryell. Hedges' style and technique—a combination of unusual tunings, two-handed fretboard tapping, and full-chord hammer-ons and pull-offs, as opposed to the usual single-note variety—produced a harmonically rich and highly percussive sound that made his single guitar sound like a full band. Aerial Boundaries was nominated for a Best Instrumental Grammy; the title track was used in some TV commercials.

In 1985 Hedges introduced his vocals (in a jazzy, Joni Mitchell style), flute, synthesizer, and electric bass on the poorly received Watching My Life Go By, which featured guest vocals by Bobby McFerrin. That same year he recorded the soundtrack for a children's television special, Santabear's First Christmas. Through the late '80s and into the '90s with Taproot and The Road to Return, Hedges continued to focus on composition and vocals in addition to his remarkable guitar playing. In 1989 he contributed arranging, guitar, and background vocals to two tracks on David Crosby's Oh Yes I Can. His 1996 album Oracle reaffirmed Hedges' acoustic roots, but a fatal car accident the next year put a premature close to a much-lauded career. Oracle won Hedges a posthumous Grammy in 1998, and a final album, Torched, followed in 1999.

Richard Hell and the Voidoids

Formed Sep. 1976, New York, NY

Richard Hell (b. Richard Myers, Oct. 2, 1949, Lexington, KY), bass, voc.; Marc Bell (b. July 15, 1956, New York), drums; Robert Quine (b. Dec. 30, 1942, Akron, OH), gtr., voc.; Ivan Julian (b. June 26, 1955, Washington, DC), gtr., voc.

1976—Richard Hell EP (Ork) 1977—Blank Generation (Sire) 1978—(– Bell; + Jerry Antonius, bass, kybds.; + Frank Mauro, drums) 1980—(– Antonius; – Mauro; + Naux [b. July 20, 1951, San Jose, CA], gtr.; + Fred Maher, drums) 1982—Destiny Street (Red Star) 1984—R.I.P. (ROIR) 1990—Funhunt 1995—Go Now EP (Richard Hell with Robert Quine) (Tim/Kerr).

Dim Stars: 1992—Dim Stars (Caroline).

Richard Hell led the Voidoids, one of the most harshly uncompromising bands on New York's late-'70s punk scene, playing songs with dissonant, jagged guitar lines and dark, free-association imagery that owed something to both Captain Beefheart and the Velvet Underground. Hell had played with Johnny Thunders' Heartbreakers [see entry] and with the Neon Boys, who later became Television [see entry]. He then formed the Voidoids to perform his own songs. They were regular attractions at the punk showcase CBGB, along with Blondie, the Ramones, and Talking Heads.

Hell's 1977 debut album, Blank Generation, provided two anthems for the scene, the title cut and "Love Comes in Spurts." Although Hell performed frequently, he remained obscure outside of New York and London. In 1979 Nick

Lowe produced a single, "The Kid With the Replaceable Head."

In 1982 Hell resurfaced with a new band and an album, Destiny Street. (Original Voidoids guitarist Robert Quine, meanwhile, had joined Lou Reed's band for The Blue Mask.) Hell also began an acting career, appearing in Susan Seidelman's 1982 film Smithereens. He later acted in a 1993 underground film, Rachel Amodeo's What About Me?

By the mid-'80s, Hell had seemingly put music behind him; his writing—nonfiction, fiction, and poetry—was published by a variety of magazines, and he began doing spoken-word performances. R.I.P. and Funhunt documented live shows and outtakes; Go Now consists of Hell, accompanied by Quine, reading extracts from his novel by that name, which was eventually published by Scribner in 1996.

In 1992 Hell joined the Dim Stars, a side project initiated by Sonic Youth's Thurston Moore and Steve Shelley with Gumball's Don Fleming, the group, which played a limited number of gigs, released a triple seven-inch EP and a self-titled album. By 1999, Hell had begun work on a second novel, and his writing appeared in the collection The Rolling Stone Book of the Beats. The original Voidoids briefly reassembled in 2000 to record the one-off "Oh," a new studio track released only on the Internet.

Jimi Hendrix

Born Nov. 27, 1942, Seattle, WA, died Sep. 18, 1970, London, Eng.

1967—Are You Experienced? (Reprise) 1968—Axis: Bold as Love; Electric Ladyland 1969—Smash Hits 1970—Band of Gypsies (Capitol) 1971—The Cry of Love (Reprise); Rainbow Bridge 1972—Hendrix in the West 1973—Soundtrack Recordings From the Film, Jimi Hendrix 1975—Crash Landing 1976—Midnight Lightning 1978—The Essential Jimi Hendrix 1979—The Essential Jimi Hendrix, vol. 2 1982—The Jimi Hendrix Concerts 1986—Band of Gypsies 2 (Capitol/EMI) 1988—Radio One (Rykodisc) 1990—Lifelines: The Jimi Hendrix Story (Reprise); Hendrix Speaks: The Jimi Hendrix Interviews (Rhino) 1991—Stages 1967-70 (Reprise) 1994—Blues (MCA) 1995—Voodoo Soup 1997—First Rays of the New Rising Sun (Experience Hendrix/MCA); South Saturn Delta 1998—BBC Sessions; Experience Hendrix: The Best of Jimi Hendrix 1999—Live at the Fillmore East; Live at Woodstock 2000—Jimi Hendrix Experience.

Jimi Hendrix was one of rock's few true originals. He was one of the most innovative and influential rock guitarists of the late '60s and perhaps the most important electric guitarist after Charlie Christian. His influence figures prominently in the playing style of rockers ranging from Robin Trower to Living Colour's Vernon Reid to Stevie Ray Vaughan. A left-hander who took a right-handed Fender Stratocaster and played it upside down, Hendrix pioneered the use of the instrument as an electronic sound source. Players before Hendrix had experimented with feedback and distortion, but he turned those effects and others into a controlled, fluid vocabulary every bit as personal as the blues with which he began. His expressively unconventional, six-string vocabulary has lived on in the work of such guitarists as Adrian Belew, Eddie Van Halen, and Vernon Reid. But while he unleashed noise—and such classic hard-rock riffs as "Purple Haze," "Foxy Lady," and "Crosstown Traffic"—with uncanny mastery, Hendrix also created such tender ballads as "The Wind Cries Mary," the oft-covered "Little Wing," and "Angel," and haunting blues recordings such as "Red House" and "Voodoo Chile." Although Hendrix did not consider himself a good singer, his vocals were nearly as wide-ranging, intimate, and evocative as his guitar playing.

Hendrix's studio craft and his virtuosity with both conventional and unconventional guitar sounds have been widely imitated, and his image as the psychedelic voodoo child conjuring uncontrollable forces is a rock archetype. His songs have inspired several tribute albums, and have been recorded by a jazz group (1989's Hendrix Project), the Kronos String Quartet, and avant-garde flutist Robert Dick. Hendrix's musical vision had a profound effect on everyone from Sly Stone to George Clinton—and, through them, Prince—to Miles Davis. His theatrical performing style—full of unmistakably sexual undulations, and such tricks as playing the guitar behind his back (a tradition that went back at least to bluesman T-Bone Walker) and picking it with his teeth—has never quite been equaled. In the decades since Hendrix's death, pop stars from Michael Jackson to Prince have evoked his look and style.

As a teenager, Hendrix taught himself to play guitar by listening to records by blues guitarists Muddy Waters and BB King and rockers such as Chuck Berry and Eddie Cochran. He played in high school bands before enlisting in the U.S. Army in 1959. Discharged after parachuting injuries in 1961, Hendrix began working under the pseudonym Jimmy James as a pickup guitarist. By 1964, when he moved to New York, he had played behind Sam Cooke, B.B. King, Little Richard, Jackie Wilson, Ike and Tina Turner, and Wilson Pickett. In New York he played the club circuit with King Curtis, the Isley Brothers, John Paul Hammond, and Curtis Knight.

Jimi Hendrix

In 1965 Hendrix formed his own band, Jimmy James and the Blue Flames, to play Greenwich Village coffeehouses. Chas Chandler of the Animals took him to London in the autumn of 1966 and arranged for the creation of the Jimi Hendrix Experience, with Englishmen Noel Redding on bass and Mitch Mitchell on drums.

The Experience's first single, "Hey Joe," reached #6 on the U.K. chart early in 1967, followed shortly by "Purple Haze" and its double-platinum debut album, Are You Experienced? (#5, 1967). Hendrix fast became the rage of London's pop society. Though word of the Hendrix phenomenon spread through the U.S., he was not seen in America (and no records were released) until June 1967, when, at Paul McCartney's insistence, the Experience appeared at the Monterey Pop Festival. The performance, which Hendrix climaxed by burning his guitar, was filmed for Monterey Pop.

Hendrix's next albums were major hits (Axis: Bold as Love [#3, 1968], Electric Ladyland [#1, 1968]) and he quickly became a superstar. Stories such as one reporting that the Experience was dropped from the bill of a Monkees tour at the insistence of the Daughters of the American Revolution became part of the Hendrix myth, but he considered himself a musician more than a star. Soon after the start of his second American tour, early in 1968, he renounced the extravaganzas of his stage act and simply performed his music. A hostile reception led him to conclude that his best music came out in the informal settings of studios and clubs, and he began construction of Electric Lady, his own studio in New York.

Hendrix was eager to experiment with musical ideas, and he jammed with John McLaughlin, Larry Coryell, and members of Traffic, among others. Miles Davis admired his inventiveness (and, in fact, planned to record with him), and Bob Dylan—whose "Like a Rolling Stone," "All Along the Watchtower," and "Drifter's Escape" Hendrix recorded—later returned the tribute by performing "All Along the Watchtower" in the Hendrix mode.

As 1968 came to a close, disagreements arose between manager Chas Chandler and co-manager Michael Jeffrey; Jeffrey, who opposed Hendrix's avant-garde leanings, got the upper hand. Hendrix was also under pressure from Black Power advocates to form an all-black group and to play to black audiences. These problems exacerbated already existing tensions within the Experience, and early in 1969 Redding left the group to form Fat Mattress. Hendrix replaced him with an army buddy, Billy Cox. Mitchell stayed on briefly, but by August the Experience was defunct. In summer 1969 the double-platinum Smash Hits (#6) was released.

Hendrix appeared at the Woodstock Festival with a large informal ensemble called the Electric Sky Church, and later that year he put together the all-black Band of Gypsys—with Cox and drummer Buddy Miles (Electric Flag), with whom he had played behind Wilson Pickett. The Band of Gypsys' debut concert at New York's Fillmore East on New Year's Eve 1969 provided the recordings for the group's only album during its existence, Band of Gypsys (#5, 1970) (a second album of vintage tracks was released in 1986). Hendrix walked off-stage in the middle of their Madison Square Garden gig; when he performed again some months later it was with Mitchell and Cox, the group that recorded The Cry of Love (#3, 1971), Hendrix's last self-authorized album. With them he played at the Isle of Wight Festival, his last concert, in August 1970. A month later he was dead. The cause of death was given in the coroner's report as inhalation of vomit following barbiturate intoxication. Suicide was not ruled out, but evidence pointed to an accident.

In the years since his death, the Hendrix legend has lived on through various media. Randi Hansen (who appeared in the video for Devo's 1984 cover of "Are You Experienced?") became the best-known of a bunch of full-time Hendrix impersonators, even re-forming the Band of Gypsys with bassist Tony Saunders and Buddy Miles—who, briefly in the late '80s, was replaced by Mitch Mitchell.

Over a dozen books have been written about Hendrix, including tomes by both Redding and Mitchell, the most authoritative bio is generally considered to be David Henderson's Scuse Me While I Kiss the Sky. And virtually every note Hendrix ever allowed to be recorded has been marketed on approximately 100 albums, some of which mine his years as a pickup guitarist, various bootleg and legitimate live concerts and jam sessions, and even interviews and conversations. A controversial series produced by Alan Douglas, who recorded over 1,000 hours of Hendrix alone at the Electric Lady studio in the last year of his life, garnered attention through the mid-'90s. With the consent of the Hendrix estate, Douglas edited the tapes, erased some tracks, and dubbed in others, with mixed results. Radio One collected energetic live-in-the-studio performances by Hendrix and the Experience recorded for British radio in 1967.

In 1990 the first of several Hendrix tribute albums, If Six Was Nine, was released. Former Free/Bad Company/Firm vocalist Paul Rodgers released another tribute (The Hendrix Set, 1993) and appeared on the all-star Stone Free, which featured Hendrix covers by musicians ranging from Eric Clapton to Buddy Guy to the Cure to Ice-T to classical violinist Nigel Kennedy.

In 1991 Hendrix's ex-girlfriend Kathy Etchingham, along with Mitch Mitchell and his wife, Dee, began prodding Scotland Yard to reopen an investigation into their friend's death. England's attorney general finally agreed to the request in 1993; in early 1994 Scotland Yard announced it had found no evidence to bother pursuing the case any further. In 1993 an audio-visual exhibit of Hendrix's work called "Jimi Hendrix: On the Road Again" toured college campuses and art galleries in the U.S. to enthusiastic—and predominately young—audiences.

In 1994 a 24-year-old Swede named James Henrik Daniel

Sundquist claimed to have been conceived by the guitarist and Eva Sundquist during a 1969 Stockholm sojourn. Sundquist legally challenged Hendrix's father, James "Al" Hendrix, as the sole heir to the Jimi Hendrix estate, which was estimated to be worth at least $30 million. A year earlier, Al Hendrix, who in the mid-'70s had signed away the rights to portions of his son's work to various international conglomerates, had claimed that he'd been misled. With the financial aid of Paul Allen, the billionaire Hendrix fan who cofounded Microsoft with Bill Gates, he filed a federal lawsuit against those conglomerates and against the holding companies and lawyers connected to the estate. In 1995 he regained complete control of his son's estate, which included Jimi Hendrix's finished and unreleased recordings, as well as his musical compositions. This evolved into a series of CD reissues that were remastered from the original tapes. Having rereleased CDs of the guitarist's entire catalogue, the Hendrix estate, under the Experience Hendrix imprint of MCA, also issued the album on which Hendrix was working at the time of his death, First Rays of the New Rising Sun (#49, 1997). South Saturn Delta (#51, 1997) delved further into the archives. Experience Hendrix: The Best of Jimi Hendrix (#133, 1998) followed, as did the double-CD BBC Sessions (#50, 1998), the Band of Gypsies-era Live at the Fillmore East (#65, 1999), Live at Woodstock (#90, 1999), and, in 2000, the four-CD/eight-LP Jimi Hendrix Experience box set. Meanwhile Paul Allen amassed his cash to fund a modest Jimi Hendrix museum, which eventually blossomed into the $100 million Experience Music Project. Eight years in the making, the high-tech, interactive rock & roll museum—complete with a Jimi Hendrix Gallery—opened at the Seattle Center in 2000.

Nona Hendryx

Born Oct. 9, ca. 1946, Trenton, NJ
 1977—Nona Hendryx (Epic) 1983—Nona (RCA) 1984—The Art of Defense 1985—The Heat 1987—Female Trouble (EMI) 1989—SkinDiver (Private Music) 1992—You Have to Cry Sometime (with Billy Vera) (Shanachie) 1999—Transformation: The Best of Nona Hendryx (Razor & Tie).

Throughout her nearly 40 years as a performer, Nona Hendryx has established herself as a versatile singer and composer with individual flair, playing girl-group pop, glam funk, hard rock, new wave, and New Age. She joined Patti LaBelle and the Bluebelles with her friend Sarah Dash when she was 16. She stayed with LaBelle and Dash through their transformation into Labelle [see entry] and their breakup in 1977. That year, on her eponymous debut, she established herself as a rocker.

Always known for her wild style, Hendryx quickly fell into New York's new-wave hipoisie, singing backup on Talking Heads' Remain in Light, singing on Material's 1981 club hit "Bustin' Out," and forming her own bands Zero Cool and Propaganda. Nona was coproduced by Material and featured a lineup including Nile Rodgers, Jamaaladeen Tacuma, and Sly Dunbar. An eclectic and impressive all-female band played on the track "Design for Living": Tina Weymouth (Talking Heads), Nancy Wilson (Heart), Valerie Simpson (Ashford and Simpson), Laurie Anderson, and Gina Schock (Go-Go's). The dance-funk album included the hits "Keep It Confidential" (#22 R&B, 1983) and "Transformation" (#40 R&B, 1983).

Many of the same personnel—with the addition of Afrika Bambaataa—played on The Art of Defense, on which the use of three percussionists and three synthesists indicated Hendryx's interest in a fusion of rhythms and sounds. The album was again coproduced by Material. Producers Bernard Edwards and Arthur Baker brought their dance electronics skills to The Heat, which featured Keith Richards on the Grammy-nominated "Rock This House" and "I Sweat (Going Through the Motions)" (#28 R&B, 1984). Hendryx again pursued a mix of styles on Female Trouble, which yielded the single "Why Should I Cry?" (#5 R&B, 1987). She changed labels and sound for SkinDiver. Coproduced by Private Music founder Peter Baumann (ex-Tangerine Dream), the album was more atmospheric than her previous funk and rock work.

Hendryx has recorded and collaborated with Peter Gabriel, George Clinton, Bernie Worrell, Cameo, Mavis Staples, Bobby Brown, Prince, Garland Jeffreys, and Yoko Ono. She has written songs for Patti LaBelle, Sandra St. Victor, Naomi Campbell, and Lisa Lisa, and produced other artists, including Lisa Lisa. Her music has been used in films including Perfect and Coming to America. She has also composed for such dance companies as Alvin Ailey and Dance Theatre Workshop.

In 1992 Hendryx and blue-eyed soulman Billy Vera released You Have to Cry Sometime, an album consisting mostly of covers, including versions of '60s hits by Marvin Gaye, Solomon Burke, and the Isley Brothers. In 1999 Hendryx produced Word: Life, a concert held at New York's Irving Plaza featuring African-American poets and musicians. She also started her own label, Free Records, to issue spoken word and other recordings. In 2000 Hendryx wrote music and lyrics for the theater production of playwright Charles Randolph-Wright's Blue, a comedy depicting the foibles of an upscale African-American family.

Don Henley: See the Eagles

Clarence "Frogman" Henry

Born Mar. 19, 1937, Algiers, LA
 1961—You Always Hurt the One You Love (Argo) 1969—Is Alive and Well and Living in New Orleans and Still Doing His Thing (Roulette) 1970—Bourbon Street, Canal Street 1979—New Recordings 1983—The Legendary Clarence "Frogman" Henry 1994—Ain't Got No Home: The Best of Clarence "Frogman" Henry (MCA).

"I can sing like a man . . . I can sing like a girl . . . I can sing like a frog," claimed Clarence Henry in his rollicking 1966 Top 10 R&B hit "Ain't Got No Home." And he did—a piercing falsetto shriek and the guttural inhaled style that earned him his nickname Henry, who'd learned piano and trombone as a child, went on to sing and play piano with Bobby Mitchell's New Orleans R&B band in 1955 and remained a Crescent City favorite after his first hit. In 1961 he scored national pop and R&B hits with the Allen Toussaint-produced ballads "I Don't Know Why I Love You but I Do" (by Bobby Charles) and "You Always Hurt the One You Love." His other chartmaking singles included "Lonely Street" and "On Bended Knee" (1961) and "A Little Too Much" (1962). In the late '60s Henry appeared in a number of rock & roll revival shows, and in the early '70s he was still a popular act in New Orleans clubs. In 1982 "Ain't Got No Home" was featured on the soundtrack of the period film Diner. In the early '90s, a ruptured disk nearly ended the Frogman's performing career, but he persevered. In 1994 "I Don't Know Why I Love You, But I Do" was featured on the soundtrack to the hit movie Forrest Gump; the soundtrack to the 1996 film Casino included "Ain't Got No Home."

Henry Cow/Fred Frith

Formed 1968, Cambridge, Eng.

Fred Frith (b. Feb. 17, 1949, Heathfield, Eng.), gtr., violin, piano; Tim Hodgkinson, kybds., reeds; Chris Cutler, drums, tape effects; John Greaves, bass, piano, voc.; Geoff Leigh, reeds, sax.

1973—Legend (Virgin) 1974—(– Leigh; + Lindsay Cooper, bassoon, oboe) Unrest (Virgin, U.K.) 1975—Desperate Straights (with Slapp Happy); In Praise of Learning (with Slapp Happy) (+ Dagmar Krause, voc.) 1976—Concerts (Caroline, U.K.) 1978—(– Krause) Western Culture (Broadcast, U.K.). Art Bears: Frith; Cutler; Krause 1978—Hopes and Fears (Random Radar) 1979—Winter Songs (Recommended) 1981—The World as It Is Today (Re, U.K.). John Greaves/Peter Blegvad: 1977—Kew. Rhone. (Virgin). Fred Frith: 1974—Guitar Solos (Caroline, U.K.) 1980—Gravity (Ralph) 1981—Speechless 1982—Killing Time (with Massacre) (OAO/Celluloid); Live in Japan (Recommended, Jap.) 1983—Cheap at Half the Price (Ralph) 1984—Learn to Talk (with Skeleton Crew) (Rift) 1986—The Country of Blinds (with Skeleton Crew) 1988—The Technology of Tears (SST) 1990—The Top of His Head (Crammed, Bel.); Step Across the Border (RecRec) 1991—Guitar Solos Complete (East Side Digital) 1992—Helter Skelter (with Francois-Michel Pesenti) (RecRec, Swit.) 1994—Quartets 1995—Middle of the Moment 1996—Allies 1997—Eye to Ear (Tzadik); The Previous Evening (ReR, U.K.); Etymology (with Tom Cora) (Rarefaction) 1998—Pacifica (Tzadik); Funny Valentine (with Massacre) 1999—Stone, Brick, Glass, Wood, Wire (Graphic Sources 1986–1996) (Angelica, It.).

Henry Cow's determined, uncompromising eclecticism—its music spans rock, fusion, free improvisation, medieval chamber music, modern-classical, and avant-garde musique concrète—and committed socialist politics limited the band's following to a small, dedicated cult. Initially, the group's anticommercial leanings (it was formed the year of the Paris student riots) even kept it from a recording contract. In 1971 Henry Cow played the Glastonbury Festival (a sort of British Woodstock) en route to London to record its critically acclaimed debut LP. In 1973 the group scored an avant-garde British production of Shakespeare's Tempest, toured with the German progressive group Faust, and appeared on one side of the out-of-print Greasy Truckers Live at Dingwall's Dance Hall LP.

Henry Cow opened for Captain Beefheart on a European tour in 1974 and released its second LP, which included "Bittern Storm Over Ulm," a radical refraction of the Yardbirds' "Got to Hurry." In 1975 the band merged with the mutant cabaret outfit Slapp Happy (Dagmar Krause, Anthony Moore, and Peter Blegvad) for Desperate Straights, a collection of shorter songs, and for In Praise of Learning, where political lyrics were accompanied by noisy modern-classical music. Slapp Happy subsequently disbanded, and Krause joined Henry Cow.

In 1978, just before the release of Henry Cow's swan song, Western Culture, Frith, Blegvad, and Cutler made their first U.S. appearances in New York City. Since then, the remarkably prolific Frith's various projects have included the Art Bears, for which he, Cutler, and Krause recorded dissonant, quirky songs; Massacre, a noisy, rock-flavored power trio with bassist Bill Laswell and drummer Fred Maher; theater scores and the avant-rock band Naked City with John Zorn; the experimental Skeleton Crew, with the late cellist Tom Cora and harpist Zeena Parkins; a stint in Anton Fier's Golden Palominos; guest work with artists like the Residents, Brian Eno, and Swans; and solo work, which sometimes consists of free improvisation on disassembled guitars and various homemade electric instruments. On Cheap at Half the Price, he sang for the first time—typically in a peculiar high-pitched tone. Frith began releasing his own albums in 1974, some of which paired him with fellow avant-garde guitarists Hans Reichel, Henry Kaiser, and Derek Bailey. By the early '90s, he was a fixture at New York City's avant-garde haven, the Knitting Factory. European directors Nicolas Humbert and Werner Penzels chose Frith as the subject of their acclaimed 1990 documentary Step Across the Border. By the end of the decade, the guitarist was living in Oakland, California, where he taught music composition at Mills College. Stone, Brick, Glass, Wood, Wire is a four-CD set.

Blegvad performed in New York in the early '80s with Carla Bley, John Greaves of Henry Cow, and Arto Lindsay; he continued to work into the '90s, as a solo artist and in such groups as the Golden Palominos. Moore recorded more than a half-dozen atonal, poppish solo albums under the name A. or Anthony More. Cutler, Hodgkinson, and Cooper continued to make avant-garde music in Europe. Cutler also runs the influential, multinational Recommended Records.

The Heptones

Formed 1965, Kingston, Jam.

Barry Llewellyn (b. 1947, Jam.), voc.; Earl Morgan (b. 1945, Jam.), voc.; Leroy Sibbles (b. 1949, Jam.), voc.

1970—On Top (Studio One); Black Is Back 1971—Freedom

Line; and Friends, vol. 1 (Joe Gibbs) 1976—Cool Rasta (Trojan); Night Food (Island) 1977—Party Time 1978—In Love With You (United Artists); Better Days (Third World) 1979—The Good Life (Greenleeves) (- Sibbles; + Naggu Morris [b. ca. 1951]) 1981—Street of Gold (Park Heights) 1982—One Step Ahead (Sonic); On the Run (Shanachie) 1995—Sea of Love (Heartbeat) 1999—The Meaning of Life: Best of 1966–1976 (Trojan).

With their lilting rhythms and American-style soul harmony singing, the Heptones were the archetypal rock-steady group. Like the "rude boys" who were their first fans, the band members came from the Kingston slum Trenchtown. Morgan had previously led a group, and in 1965 he formed the new vocal trio with Sibbles, formerly a welder, and Llewellyn, an auto mechanic.

After five unsuccessful singles for Ken Lack's label, Coxsonne Dodd released the 45 "Fatty Fatty" on his Studio One label in 1966; although it was banned from Jamaican radio because of its sexual innuendos, "Fatty Fatty" was a huge hit. In Britain it was credited to Ken Boothe (a Studio One singer who had already built a small following in the U.K.); none of the early British releases bore their name. The Heptones were one of Jamaica's most popular groups of the late '60s, hitting with Sibbles songs like "Baby (Be True)," "Why Must I," "Why Did You Leave," and "Cry Baby Cry."

They stayed with Dodd's label until 1970, by which time rock steady was hardening into reggae. Their songs showed reggae's influence mostly in their increasingly political lyrics. Among their hits for producers Joe Gibbs, Geoffrey Chung, and Harry J. were "Young, Gifted and Black" (1970), "Hypocrites" (1971), "Freedom to the People" (1972, used as an anthem by the Jamaican People's National Party in their successful election campaign), a cover of Harold Melvin and the Blue Notes' "I Miss You" (1972), and "Book of Rules" (1973), which was featured in the 1979 film Rockers.

In 1973 the Heptones moved to Canada for two years, making Toronto their base for tours in the U.S. and Great Britain. They celebrated their return to Jamaica in 1975 with the chart-topping "Country Boy," and the following year signed their first multinational contract. Their first American-released album, Night Food, contained new versions of "Fatty Fatty" and "Book of Rules." Party Time, produced by Lee Perry, emphasized the reggae sound.

In 1979 Sibbles left the group to begin a solo career. Morgan and Llewellyn maintained the group with the addition of Naggu Morris. They toured the U.S. in 1982, while Sibbles toured with his own group. Throughout the '80s, both remained popular live draws. Sibbles returned to Jamaica in 1992 with plans to revitalize his recording career, and released It's Not Over on the VP label in 1997.

Herman's Hermits

Formed 1963, Manchester, Eng.

Peter "Herman" Noone (b. Nov. 5, 1947, Manchester), voc., piano, gtr.; Karl Green (b. July 31, 1947, Salford, Eng.), gtr., harmonica; Keith Hopwood (b. Oct. 26, 1946, Manchester), gtr.; Derek "Lek" Leckenby (b. May 14, 1945, Leeds, Eng.; d. June 4, 1994, Eng.), gtr.; Barry Whitwam (b. July 21, 1946, Manchester), drums.

1965—The Best of Herman's Hermits (MGM) 1966—Best of, vol. 2 1968—Best of, vol. 3.

Peter Noone and the Tremblers: 1980—Twice Nightly (Johnston) 1982—One of the Glory Boys.

Peter Noone with Phil Ramone: 1993—Playback (Noone/Ramone).

Major stars from the pop side of the British Invasion, Herman's Hermits had 11 Top 10 hits from 1964 through 1967. By the time changing musical trends had reduced the group to a curiosity, it had already sold over 40 million singles and albums worldwide.

Peter Noone studied singing and acting at the Manchester School of Music and was featured in the early '60s in several plays and on BBC-TV. By 1963, he was playing with the Heartbeats, a local Manchester group that consisted of Karl Green, Keith Hopwood, Derek Leckenby, and Barry Whitwam. The others claimed that Noone, then performing under the name Peter Novak, resembled Sherman of the Rocky and Bullwinkle television cartoon series; they then shortened the nickname to Herman.

In early 1964 they attracted the attention of U.K. producer Mickie Most, who released the group's first single, "I'm Into Something Good" (#13), that fall. It spent three weeks at the top of the British chart and sold over a million copies worldwide. In 1965 the Hermits dominated the U.S. chart, placing six singles in the Top 10 and appearing in the Connie Francis teen flick Where the Boys Meet the Girls. Herman's Hermits' hits (which actually featured such British sessionmen as future Led Zeppelins Jimmy Page and John Paul Jones) included "Mrs. Brown You've Got a Lovely Daughter" (#1), "I'm Henry the Eighth, I Am" (#1) (originally written in 1911 for a Cockney comedian), "Can't You Hear My Heartbeat" (#2), "Wonderful World" (#4), "Silhouettes" (#5) (originally recorded by the Rays), "Just a Little Bit Better" (#7) (all in 1965), "Listen People" (#3), "Dandy" (#5) (written by Ray Davies of the Kinks), "A Must to Avoid" (#8), and "Leaning on the Lamp Post" (#9) (all 1966). The Best of Herman's Hermits stayed on the album chart 105 weeks. Their last big hit was "There's a Kind of Hush" (#4) b/w "No Milk Today" (#35) in early 1967.

By 1971, the group had disbanded amid legal battles for royalties. The Hermits surfaced a few years later, sans Herman, for an abortive attempt at a comeback with Buddah Records. (Noone rejoined the others briefly in 1973 for some British Invasion Revival shows.)

Initially Noone returned to acting. In 1970 he met David Bowie, who supplied him with his first British solo hit, "Oh You Pretty Things," and played piano on the sessions. Their subsequent collaborations failed, however, as did Noone's other early-'70s releases for Rak Records. Mid-decade, Noone spent three years hosting a mainstream British television series but quit to avoid being pigeonholed as a cabaret performer. He moved to the south of France and cut a few singles that were moderate hits there and in Belgium.

By the late '70s, Noone had taken up part-time residence in L.A., where the thriving club scene induced him to try a comeback with a contemporary rock band, the Tremblers, whose members (guitarist/keyboardist Gregg Inhofer, drummer Robert Williams, guitarist George Conner, and bassist Mark Browne) had played variously with the Pop, Tonio K., Barbra Streisand, and Olivia Newton-John. Their 1980 debut album, Twice Nightly, marked Noone's debut as a producer of a record on which he performed. In 1982 he released an LP entitled One of the Glory Boys and appeared as Frederic in the Broadway production of The Pirates of Penzance. For five years in the '90s he hosted the VH1 program My Generation. Leckenby and Whitwam carried on as the Hermits until the former's death in 1994. Whitwam dragged the band's name through the '90s while Noone billed himself as Herman's Hermits Featuring Peter Noone to play the oldies circuit.

Kristen Hersh: See Throwing Muses/Belly

John Hiatt

Born 1952, Indianapolis, IN 1974—Hangin' Around the Observatory (Epic) 1975—Overcoats 1979—Slug Line (MCA) 1980—Two Bit Monsters 1982—All of a Sudden (Geffen) 1983—Riding With the King 1985—Warming Up to the Ice Age 1987—Bring the Family (A&M) 1988—Slow Turning 1990—Stolen Moments 1993—Perfectly Good Guitar 1994—Hiatt Comes Alive at Budokan 1995—Walk On (Capitol) 1997—Little Head 2000—Crossing Muddy Waters (Vanguard).

Singer/songwriter John Hiatt has had his songs covered by Rick Nelson, Dave Edmunds, the Searchers, Three Dog Night, Bonnie Raitt, and others, although his solo career has been only moderately successful.

Hiatt played in various garage bands before leaving his hometown at age 18 in 1970. He was discovered in Nashville by an Epic talent scout and made two quirky albums for the label—Hangin' Around the Observatory and Overcoats—that drew critical kudos but negligible sales. Without a record contract, Hiatt spent the next few years touring folk clubs as a solo act, before signing with MCA. He released two more records, the more new-wavish Slug Line and Two Bit Monsters, and received more critical nods, but despite some touring, they failed in the marketplace. Hiatt played and sang on sessions and toured with Ry Cooder, and he appears with Cooder (singing two songs) on the soundtrack to 1982's The Border.

Through the first half of the '80s, Hiatt's good-reviews/weak-sales pattern continued; meanwhile, he descended into alcoholism and suffered the suicide of his first wife. Hiatt was dumped by Geffen Records, but then got sober, remarried, and landed a new deal with A&M. He gathered Cooder, bassist Nick Lowe (who had produced some of his Geffen work), and session super-drummer Jim Keltner to record Bring the Family—which, with Slow Turning and Stolen Moments, would comprise Hiatt's "recovery trilogy," which brought him the most glowing reviews of his career, if not much of a rise in sales. Hiatt, Cooder, Lowe, and Keltner also recorded in 1992 under the name Little Village. For Perfectly Good Guitar, Hiatt recruited members of such younger bands as Cracker, School of Fish, and Wire Train. After the release of a live album in 1994, Hiatt left A&M for Capitol Records, which released the Grammy-nominated Walk On (#48) in 1995 and Little Head in 1997. During the next two years, four separate best-of collections were released by the singer's various labels. In late 1999 Hiatt's status as a songwriter's songwriter paid dividends in a new job: hosting the PBS studio concert series Sessions at West 54th. He also switched labels again, recording his 2000 release Crossing Muddy Waters for the reactivated Vanguard Records.

Dan Hicks and His Hot Licks

Formed 1968, San Francisco, CA

Dan Hicks (b. Dec. 9, 1941, Little Rock, AK), gtr., voc., harmonica, drums; David LaFlamme (b. Apr. 5, 1941, Salt Lake City, UT), violin; Bill Douglas, bass; Mitzy Douglas, voc.; Patti Urban, voc.

1968—(revised lineup: Hicks; Sherry Snow, voc.; Tina Natural (b. Christina Gancher, 1945), voc., celeste, perc.; Jimmie Bassoon, bass; Jon Weber (b. 1947), gtr.; Gary Pozzi, violin) 1969—(- Bassoon; + Jaime Leopold [b. 1947, Portland, OR], fiddle, bass; - Pozzi; + Sid Page [b. 1947, Portland], violin, mandolin) Original Recordings (Epic) (- Snow; - Gancher; - Weber; + Nicole Dukes, voc.; + Naomi Eisenberg [b. Brooklyn, NY], voc., violin; + Maryanne Price [b. Providence, RI], voc., cornet; + Bob Scott, drums; - Dukes; - Eisenberg) 1971—Where's the Money (Blue Thumb) (+ John Girtan [b. Burbank, CA], gtr.) 1972—Strikin' It Rich 1973—Last Train to Hicksville . . . the Home of Happy Feet 1974—(group disbands) 1991—The Very Best of Dan Hicks and His Hot Licks (See for Miles) 1994—Lost in the Eighties (Rare Prime Cuts); At the Boarding House, 1971; Paramount Theater, 1990 1997—Return to Hicksville (Hip-o) 1998—Early Muses (Big Beat) 2000—(group re-forms as Dan Hicks and the Hot Licks: Hicks; Page; + various musicians) Beatin' the Heat (Hollywood). Dan Hicks solo: 1978—It Happened One Bite (Warner Bros.) 1988—Mistletoe Jam (with the Christmas Jug Band) (Relix) 1994—Shootin' Straight (On the Spot).

In the late '60s and early '70s Dan Hicks performed his wry, jazzy, ironic, pseudo-nostalgia songs with the Hot Licks, a group modeled on Django Reinhardt's quintet, and the Lickettes, a pair of female vocalists. He grew up in Santa Rosa, California, began playing drums at age 11, and switched to guitar at age 20. In his teens he played in various local folk and jazz bands. He continued drumming while attending

San Francisco State College. Eventually he landed in the original Charlatans, a self-confessed amateur band, with whom he played from 1965 to 1968. During his last six months with the Charlatans, he began playing with his own group (documented on Early Muses), including violinist David LaFlamme, who later formed It's a Beautiful Day [see entry].

By early 1968, Hicks' drummerless group, the Hot Licks, was signed to Epic; its only album for the label, Original Recordings, flopped. After a series of personnel changes, the band signed to Blue Thumb in 1971. Its three albums for that label—Where's the Money (recorded live at L.A.'s Troubadour), Strikin' It Rich, and Last Train to Hicksville (the first Licks LP with a drummer)—blended the Andrews Sisters, Western swing, ragtime, and jazz. Hicks became known for compositions like "How Can I Miss You (When You Won't Go Away)," "Walkin' One and Only" (which was covered by Maria Muldaur), and "I Scare Myself" (recorded later by Thomas Dolby). Violinist Sid Page (who later played with Sly and the Family Stone) departed after Last Train, and by 1974 those particular Hot Licks were no more.

Following the group's breakup, Hicks has been sporadically active in the Bay Area as a solo artist, sometimes billed as Lonesome Dan Hicks. In early 1978 he reemerged with It Happened One Bite. He went on to form the Acoustic Warriors, with whom he recorded 1994's live Shootin' Straight. He revived the Hot Licks name for a 1991 reunion concert, and again for Beatn' the Heat, his star-studded comeback featuring Hot Licks alumnus Page, along with Elvis Costello, Tom Waits, Bette Midler, Brian Setzer, and Rickie Lee Jones.

The Highwaymen: See Johnny Cash; Waylon Jennings; Kris Kristofferson; Willie Nelson

Jessie Hill

Born Dec. 9, 1932, New Orleans, LA; died Sep. 17, 1996, New Orleans

1972—Naturally (Blue Thumb) 1978—Golden Classics (Collectables).

New Orleans pianist Jessie Hill's moment of national glory came with "Ooh Poo Pah Doo—Parts I & II" (#28, 1960), the first national hit produced by Allen Toussaint. Hill wrote the song, which Toussaint orchestrated with a call-and-response format recalling Ray Charles' "What'd I Say." But Hill was unable to come up with a followup hit. He recorded for Minit through 1963, his most successful effort being "Whip It on Me" (#91, 1960). He then moved to L.A. and fell in with other New Orleans expatriates like Dr. John (who covered Hill's "Qualify" on one of his solo albums). Hill recorded sporadically throughout the decade, culminating in a 1970 album for Blue Thumb. In the early '70s he returned to New Orleans, where he continued to write and perform in nightclubs until his death in 1996. His tunes, which include "Sweet Jelly Roll," "I Got Mine," and "Can't Get Enough," have been recorded by Ike and Tina Turner, and Sonny and Cher, among others.

Lauryn Hill: See the Fugees

Robyn Hitchcock/Soft Boys

Born Mar. 3, 1953, London, Eng.

With the Soft Boys, formed 1976, Cambridge, Eng.: Hitchcock, voc., gtr., bass; Alan Davies, gtr.; Andy Metcalfe, bass; Otis Fagg (b. Morris Windsor), drums.

1977—Give It to the Soft Boys EP (Raw, U.K.) (- Davies; + Kimberley Rew [b. Eng.], gtr., voc.) 1979—A Can of Bees (Two Crabs, U.K.) (- Metcalfe; + Matthew Seligman, bass) 1980—Underwater Moonlight (Armageddon, U.K.) 1981—Two Halves for the Price of One 1983—Invisible Hits (Glass Fish, U.K.) 1993—1976–81 (Rykodisc).

With the Egyptians, formed 1984: Hitchcock, voc., gtr.; Andy Metcalfe, bass; Morris Windsor, drums; Roger Jackson, kybds. 1985—Fegmania! (Slash); Gotta Let This Hen Out! (Relativity) 1986—Exploding in Silence EP; Element of Light (Glass Fish/Relativity) (- Jackson) 1988—Globe of Frogs (A&M) 1989—Queen Elvis 1991—Perspex Island 1993—Respect 1996—Greatest Hits (A&M).

Robyn Hitchcock solo: 1981—Black Snake Diamond Role (Armageddon, U.K.) 1982—Groovy Decay (Albion, U.K.) 1984—I Often Dream of Trains (Glass Fish, U.K.) 1986—Groovy Decoy (Glass Fish/Relativity); Invisible Hitchcock 1990—Eye (Twin/Tone) 1995—Gravy Deco (The Complete Groovy Decay/Decoy Sessions) (Rhino); You & Oblivion 1996—Moss Elixir (Warner Bros.) 1997—Uncorrected Personality Traits (Rhino) 1998—Storefront Hitchcock (Warner Bros.) 1999—Jewels for Sophia.

Robyn Hitchcock has the heart of a singer/songwriter but the warped sensibility of a man one step ahead of or behind his time. The former Soft Boy was perhaps the definitive cult artist of the '80s: devoutly followed but little known. Hitchcock was born in an artistic middle-class family in West London. He dropped out of art school and moved to Cambridge in 1974, where he began performing his eccentric folk songs. He played in a number of bands, including Maureen and the Meatpackers, before forming the Soft Boys in 1976 with drummer Morris Windsor, guitarist Alan Davies, and bassist Andy Metcalfe.

After Give It to the Soft Boys introduced their demented progressive rock in 1977, the band fired Davies and hired Cambridge guitar wizard Kimberley Rew, later of Katrina and the Waves. The London label Radar briefly signed the Soft Boys but dropped them after the single "I Want to Be an) Anglepouise Lamp" stiffer. A Can of Bees was a bizarre album whose "Hu-man Music" introduced the folk-ballad style that would become one of Hitchcock's strengths.

The Soft Boys worked on an album that the label did not release (many of its songs were later included on 1983's Invisible Hits). In 1979 the band taped an acoustic show that, with its clever covers and Hitchcock's eccentric banter, illustrated why they had a firm live following (the tape was released in 1983 via mail order). Working with a tiny budget and largely using an 8-track recorder, the Soft Boys then recorded the masterful Underwater Moonlight (1980).

The Soft Boys: Robyn Hitchcock, Kimberley Rew, Morris Windsor, Matthew Seligman

The Soft Boys toured the U.S. and released Two Halves for the Price of One, a collection of live tracks and oddities, before breaking up in 1981. Influenced by the Byrds and Syd Barrett, the Soft Boys were out of sync with the punk rock of their time, although many American bands, including R.E.M. and the Replacements, later claimed them as a major influence. In 1993 Rykodisc released a two-CD retrospective, and in January 1994 the band reunited for a show in London. After Matador reissued Underwater Moonlight in early 2001, the band reunited and did a series of well-received concerts in the U.S.

Hitchcock was still finding his voice on his first two solo albums, which he recorded with Matthew Seligman. Seligman then joined the Thompson Twins, and Hitchcock recorded Groovy Decay with bassist Sara Lee. (An alternate version of the album, featuring the demos with Seligman, was later released as Groovy Decay.) Hitchcock retired for two years and wrote lyrics for Captain Sensible (the Damned [see entry]). He returned in 1984 with the beautiful, acoustic I Often Dream of Trains, on which he finally sustained the combination of sensitivity and imagination that is his forte. That year the Soft Boys' first EP was rereleased as Wading Through a Ventilator, inspiring Hitchcock to contact Windsor and Metcalfe (who had also played with XTC and Squeeze), along with keyboardist Roger Jackson, and form the Egyptians.

The Egyptians have had a spotty career, hovering on the edges of artistic and commercial success. Fegmania! tracks "Egyptian Cream," "My Wife and My Dead Wife," and "The Man With the Light Bulb Head" were praised for their absurd images and narratives. With fans like R.E.M.'s Peter Buck (who has played with the Egyptians) as boosters, Hitchcock signed to A&M and scored college-radio hits with "Balloon Man" (off Globe of Frogs) and "So You Think You're in Love" (Perspex Island). Primarily on the strength of live shows, he has developed a devoted audience in America (he's still largely ignored in his native England). Respect (1993) is dedicated to his late father; the album was recorded on the Isle of Wight, where Hitchcock sometimes makes his home. Hitchcock also paints, and many of his albums feature his artwork. In 1995 Rhino began releasing all of Hitchcock's work on CD.

Hitchcock signed with Warner Bros. in 1996 and issued Moss Elixir, a spare, mostly acoustic record and his first since disbanding the Egyptians. In 1998 he released Storefront Hitchcock. The album was the soundtrack to a concert film of the same name directed by Jonathan Demme. The film was shot in a vacant Manhattan storefront. Jewels for Sophia (1999) featured guest appearances from Peter Buck, Grant Lee Phillips, and Young Fresh Fellows Scott McCaughey, Tad Hutchinson, and Kurt Bloch. More of a rock record than its predecessors, the album also evinced disarming sincerity, especially given Hitchcock's typically droll sense of humor.

Hole

Formed 1989, Los Angeles, CA

Courtney Love (b. July 9, 1964, San Francisco, CA), voc. gtr.; Eric Erlandson (b. Jan. 9, 1963, Los Angeles), gtr.; Jill Emery, bass; Caroline Rue, drums.

1991—Pretty on the Inside (Caroline) 1992—(– Rue; – Emery; + Patty Schemel [b. Apr. 24, 1967, Seattle, WA], drums; + Kristen Pfaff [b. 1967; d. June 16, 1994], bass) 1994—Live Through This (Geffen) (– Pfaff; + Melissa Auf der Maur [b. Mar. 17, 1972, Montreal, Can.], bass) 1998—Celebrity Skin (Geffen) 2000—(– Auf der Maur).

In the way that Yoko Ono can never be mentioned without the thought of John Lennon, Courtney Love will be forever tied to Nirvana's Kurt Cobain. Yet Love's confrontational stage presence with her band Hole, as well as her gut-wrenching vocals and powerful punk-pop songcraft, have made her an alternative-rock star in her own right.

Love's father, an early, minor Grateful Dead associate, and mother, a therapist, divorced when she was five. As a child, she lived on a commune in New Zealand with her mother. When she was 12, she did time at an Oregon reformatory after she got caught shoplifting. Dropping in and out of college, and living off a trust fund, Love moved from place to place, working as a stripper in Japan, Alaska, and California, and hanging out with mope-rockers in Liverpool, England. Back in L.A., she became friendly with director Alex Cox and scored small roles in a couple of his films, including Sid & Nancy.

By the time Love formed Hole with Eric Erlandson in 1989, she had already appeared as a vocalist in an early incarnation of San Francisco's Faith No More and in the Minneapolis all-girl band, Sugar Baby Doll, with Babes in Toyland's Kat Bjelland and L7's Jennifer Finch.

Hole began garnering the attention of the U.S. underground via the band's incendiary live performances and two early singles, "Dicknail" and "Retard Girl." Sonic Youth's Kim Gordon and Gumball's Don Fleming coproduced the acerbic debut album, Pretty on the Inside. These recordings and English tours made Hole the darlings of the U.K. music press. Hole was seemingly put on hold, however, during Love's courtship with and eventual marriage to Cobain (on February 24, 1992). The band, which had been courted by several major labels, signed a lucrative contract with Nirvana's [see entry] label Geffen.

After giving birth to a daughter, Frances Bean Cobain, Love and her husband became involved in a battle with children's services over custody of the baby, due to charges in the press that Love had done heroin during her pregnancy, the couple won the right to keep their baby.

In 1993 Hole began recording Live Through This with Erlandson, Patty Schemel, and Kristen Pfaff. One week before its release, Cobain was found dead of a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the head. Amid the tragedy, the album won rave reviews. Tragedy struck again on June 16, 1994, when bassist Pfaff overdosed on heroin. Vowing to keep Hole alive, Love enlisted Canadian bassist Melissa Auf der Maur and the band embarked on a tour, first opening for the Lemonheads, then for Nine Inch Nails. Live Through This (#52, 1994) made steady progress in the charts, yielding the singles "Miss World," which got modern-rock radio airplay, and "Doll Parts" (#65, 1994). The album went platinum in 1995, the year Hole toured with the fifth Lollapalooza. My Body, the Hand Grenade (1997) was a compilation made by Erlandson of rare and unreleased early material.

In the mid-'90s Love underwent a metamorphosis that made her even more controversial. The baby-doll dresses were replaced with Versace threads, and she began appearing on fashion-magazine covers. Music took a backseat in 1996 and '97, when Love concentrated on her acting career, including a role as a drug addict in Milos Forman's The People vs. Larry Flint that earned her a Golden Globe nomination. In 1997 Love fought a high-profile battle against the independent film Kurt and Courtney, which suggested she was responsible for Cobain's death, and succeeded in having it banned from that year's Sundance Film Festival. Hole's next album, the Southern California-drenched Celebrity Skin (#9, 1998), went platinum and was nominated for three Grammys. Smashing Pumpkin Billy Corgan co-wrote five of the songs. A single, the lavish ballad "Malibu," reached #81.

Melissa Auf der Maur left the band in early 2000 and joined Smashing Pumpkins. About the same time, Hole ended its relationship with its record label and began distributing MP3s, videos, and updates through its Web site. Love has become an outspoken defender of Napster and an advocate of artists' rights. In September 2000 Love signed a contract with a publisher for a book of poetry, a lyric book, and an insider's guide to the music business. A few months later she announced she would be recording a punk-rock album with a new band for the independent label Epitaph. Dubbed Bastard, the band was comprised of Hole drummer, Schemel, bassist Gina Crosley, and Venuca Salt guitarist Louise Post. In 2001 Love also began recording the soundtrack to her forthcoming film, Hello Suckers, which featured her singing '20s-era standards, backed by a ragtime band.

Billie Holiday

Born Eleanora Fagan, Apr. 7, 1915, Baltimore, MD; died July 17, 1959, New York, NY

1958—Lady in Satin (Columbia) 1959—Last Recording (Verve) 1972—God Bless the Child (Columbia) 1991—Lady in Autumn: The Best of the Verve Years (Verve); The Legacy (1933–1958) (Columbia); The Complete Decca Recordings (GRP) 1993—The Complete Billie Holiday on Verve (1945–1959) (Verve).

Billie Holiday—"Lady Day"—is the preeminent female jazz vocalist. From her artistic heyday in the mid-'30s through the following two decades of misfortune and drug addiction, Holiday continually rewrote the rules for jazz singing. Her voice was distinguished neither by power nor tonal beauty but by a superb, unerring ability to improvise melodic lines from the framework of standard songs; to subtly twist rhythm and expertly manipulate melody in order to personalize every song she sang. Revered for the directness and wrenching honesty of her work, Holiday relied on drama rather than sentiment to express the emotional content of her material.

Clarence Holiday, Billie's errant father, was a guitarist for Fletcher Henderson's big band. As a child, Holiday did odd jobs for a local brothel in order to hear recordings of Bessie Smith and Louis Armstrong that were played there. Her parents already split up and her mother impoverished. Holiday's early adolescence turned into a nightmare when, after being raped at age 10, she was accused of being "provocative" and sent to a reformatory.

Holiday moved to New York City in the late '20s, taking any singing jobs she could find around Harlem. Influential talent scout/producer John Hammond heard Holiday in 1933 and set up her first recording session, which included Benny Goodman as one of the supporting musicians. In 1935 Holiday began working with Teddy Wilson. Goodman's featured pianist. For Holiday's recordings Wilson would handpick players from the cream of the prominent big bands, it was at these sessions that Holiday developed her remarkable rapport with Count Basie's brilliant tenor saxophonist Lester Young. These Columbia recordings, which extend into the mid-'40s, are generally considered Holiday's finest work, and include such signature songs as "Miss Brown to You," "He's Funny That Way," "What a Little Moonlight Can Do," and "God Bless the Child" (which she helped to compose).

Holiday joined Count Basie's big band for one year in 1937, signing on next with white clarinetist Artie Shaw's band. Racial restrictions—Holiday wasn't allowed to enter hotels from the same entrance as the rest of the band—revolted her, and she soon quit. Holiday led her own groups until the end of her career.

Holiday's fame blossomed in 1939 during her extended engagement at New York's Café Society, the first interracial nightclub. That year she also recorded (for Commodore Records) "Strange Fruit," a signature ballad about prejudice and lynching in the South. In 1944 Holiday left Columbia to record for Decca. During this time, Holiday's heroin addiction led to several serious legal bouts. She was imprisoned for a year and afterward was prohibited from playing New York nightclubs. Holiday's personal life was also in disarray, owing to her self-destructive attraction to abusive and manipulative men.

Although Holiday's voice was by now worn from years of drugs and drink, her Verve recordings from the '50s capture some of her most moving and nuanced performances. By 1959, Holiday's hard living had caught up to her. On her deathbed, Holiday was arrested for heroin possession in the New York City hospital where she was being treated for kidney disease, and subsequently died.

Jennifer Holliday

Born Oct. 19, 1960, Houston, TX

1983—Feel My Soul (Geffen) 1985—Say You Love Me
1987—Get Close to My Love 1991—I'm on Your Side (Arista)
1994—On & On (Intersound) 1996—The Best of Jennifer Holliday (Geffen).

Jennifer Holliday reached the top of the pop charts via her show-stopping performance in the hit Broadway musical Dreamgirls. The R&B-based singer was raised in Houston by her mother, a grade-school teacher. She began singing as a teenager in the Pleasant Grove Baptist Church choir. Her plans to become a lawyer were forever changed when a member of a touring production of A Chorus Line saw her in a Houston play and paid for her flight to New York to audition for Your Arms Too Short to Box With God. Holliday got the lead.

In 1981 the singer was cast as Effie in Dreamgirls, the musical based loosely on the Supremes. (Ex-Supreme Mary Wilson, who maintained that the musical was emotionally if not factually true, titled her subsequent best-selling autobiography Dreamgirl: My Life as a Supreme.) Her performance of "And I Am Telling You I'm Not Going" (#22 pop, #1 R&B, 1982) won Holliday a Tony and a Grammy (the single appeared on the Dreamgirls soundtrack). Holliday became an overnight sensation, the incredible vocalist with no formal training and a downhome demeanor, the large-bodied upstart ingenue who had walked out on director Michael Bennett (Chorus Line) during rehearsals for Dreamgirls. Geffen signed Holliday and in 1983 released Feel My Soul (#31), which yielded the hit "I Am Love" (#2 R&B, 1983), as well as the single "Just Let Me Wait" (#24 R&B, 1983).

In 1984 Holliday sang on the Foreigner hit "I Want to Know What Love Is." In 1985 she returned to the stage in Sing, Mahalia, Sing. But Say You Love Me, released that year, yielded only a few minor R&B hits that failed to cross over to the pop charts (although the album's cover of Duke Ellington's "Come Sunday" did earn Holliday her second Grammy, for best inspirational performance).

Geffen dropped Holliday and Ansta signed her I'm on Your Side (#29 R&B, 1991) paired Holliday with established writers (Diane Warren, Angela Bofill, Narada Michael Walden) and producers (Barry Eastmond, Michael Powell), but fared little better than its predecessors, despite Holliday's much-vaunted new svelte image. The title track reached #10 on the R&B chart in 1991.

In 1994 Holliday released a gospel LP on which she openly acknowledged her stylistic debt to Aretha Franklin. Holliday then returned to Broadway, playing the role of the Teen Angel in a 1995 revival of Grease, after which she moved to L.A. to pursue a career in television. She has since had a regular part as a gospel singer on Ally McBeal. Holliday also released singles in 1999 and 2000, neither fared as well as her early hits.

The Hollies

Formed 1962, Manchester, Eng.

Graham Nash (b. Feb. 2, 1942, Blackpool, Eng.), gtr., voc.; Allan Clarke (b. Apr. 15, 1942, Salford, Eng.), voc.; Anthony Hicks (b. Dec. 16, 1943, Nelson, Eng.), gtr.; Donald Rathbone (b. Eng.), drums; Eric Haydock (b. Feb. 3, 1943, Manchester), bass.

1963—(- Rathbone; + Robert Elliott [b. Dec. 8, 1942, Burnley, Eng.], drums) 1965—Here I Go Again (Imperial); Hear! Here! 1966—(- Haydock; + Bernard Calvert [b. Sep. 16, 1943, Burnley, Eng.], bass) Beat Group!; Bus Stop 1967—Stop, Stop, Stop: The Hollies' Greatest Hits; Evolution (Epic); Dear Eloise/King Midas in Reverse 1968—(- Nash; + Terry Sylvester [b. Jan. 8, 1945, Liverpool, Eng.], gtr., voc.) 1969—Words and Music by Bob Dylan; He Ain't Heavy, He's My Brother 1970—Moving Finger 1971—(- Clarke; + Mikael Rikfors [b. Swed.], voc.) Distant Light 1972—Romany 1973—(- Rikfors; + Clarke) 1974—Hollies 1975—Another Night 1977—The Hollies/Clarke, Hicks, Sylvester, Calvert, Elliott (Epic) (- Clarke) 1978—(+ Clarke) A Crazy Steal 1981—(- Sylvester; - Calvert) 1983—(band re-forms: Nash; Elliott; Hicks; Clarke) What Goes Around . . . (Atlantic) 1993—30th Anniversary Collection (EMI).

After the Beatles, the Hollies were the most consistently successful singles band in Britain, and their string of hits extended into the '70s.

The Hollies: Bernie Calvert, Graham Nash, Tony Hicks, Allan Clarke, Bobby Elliott

The group was formed by childhood friends Allan Clarke and Graham Nash, who had worked together as the Two Teens, Ricky and Dane, and the Guytones. They became the Deltas with the addition of Don Rathbone and Eric Haydock, then the Hollies after Tony Hicks joined them. The group was named after Buddy Holly. By late 1963, they had British Top 20 hits with covers of the Coasters' "Searchin'" and Maunce Williams and the Zodiacs' "Stay" Around this time they also wrote a book, How to Run a Beat Group.

With Clarke on lead vocals and Nash leading the harmonies, the Hollies had a string of U.K. hits that included "Just One Look," "Here I Go Again," "We're Through" (1964), "Yes I Will," "I'm Alive" (their first British #1), and "Look Through Any Window" (1965). The latter was one of the several singles that entered the U.S. chart, but it wasn't until "Bus Stop" (#5) in 1966 that the group cracked the U.S. Top 10. Over the next several months, their U.S. hits included "Stop Stop Stop" (#7, 1966), "Carrie-Anne" (#9, 1967), "On a Carousel" (#11, 1967), and "Pay You Back With Interest" (#28, 1967).

In the late '60s the Hollies shifted to more experimental rock. The results—Stop! Stop! Stop!, Evolution, Dear Eloise/King Midas in Reverse—didn't establish them as an album group. Nash, one of the group's main writers, quit in late 1968. He was reportedly upset that the band was recording an entire LP of Dylan covers (Words and Music by Bob Dylan) and yet had refused to record several of his own songs, including "Marrakesh Express," a hit for his next band, Crosby, Stills and Nash.

The Hollies advertised in British trade papers for Nash's replacement and found Terry Sylvester, who stayed with the group until 1981. In 1970 "He Ain't Heavy, He's My Brother" hit #7, but within a year Clarke was forced out because of personality clashes with other band members. This left Hicks the only original member. Clarke briefly pursued a solo career (My Real Name Is 'Arold and Headroom), only to rejoin the group in 1973 after his replacement, Swedish vocalist Mikael Rikfors, was fired because his thickly accented lead vocals sounded strange onstage. Rikfors has since had a very successful career in Scandinavia; among the artists who have recorded his compositions are Cyndi Lauper, Richie Havens, and Santana.

The Hollies had their biggest U.S. hit with "Long Cool Woman (in a Black Dress)" (#2, 1972) and hit a second peak with "The Air That I Breathe" (#6, 1974). In 1977 Clarke again quit the band and released another solo LP (I Wasn't Born Yesterday), yet returned to the group for A Crazy Steal. Epic dropped the Hollies in 1979. Their last group effort was a 1980 British LP entitled Buddy Holly, released in conjunction with Paul McCartney's Buddy Holly Week. In 1983 Nash, Clarke, Elliott, and Hicks re-formed to record What Goes Around . . ., which produced a Top 30 version of the Supremes' "Stop! In the Name of Love." Since then, Allan, Hicks, and Elliott have continued to tour, while 1993 saw those three plus Sylvester and original bassist Haydock record two new tracks: "Nothing Else But Love," written by Richard Marx, and Nik Kershaw's "The Woman I Love," a #42 hit in England. The Hollies reunited with Nash again to record a track for a 1996 Buddy Holly tribute album, in which their voices harmonized with a tape of Holly's "He Ain't Heavy, He's My Brother," reissued in 1988, topped the British chart.

Buddy Holly and the Crickets

Born Charles Hardin Holley, Sep. 7, 1936, Lubbock, TX; died Feb. 3, 1959, near Clear Lake, IA

Crickets: (The Crickets were Buddy Holly's backup group until late 1958, when they went their separate ways. See text. The Crickets remained active following Holly's death.)

Formed ca. 1955, Lubbock, TX: Sonny Curtis (b. May 9, 1937, Meadow, TX), gtr.; Don Guess, bass; Jerry Allison (b. Aug. 31, 1939, Hillsboro, TX), drums.

The Crickets also included, at various times: Niki Sullivan (b. 1939), gtr.; Joe Mauldin, bass; Tommy Allsup, gtr.; Glen Hardin (b. May 18, 1939, Wellington, TX), piano; Jerry Naylor (b. Mar. 6, 1939, Stephenville, TX), voc.; Waylon Jennings (b. June 15, 1937, Littlefield, TX), gtr.

1957—Chirpin' Crickets (Brunswick) 1959—The Buddy Holly Story (Coral) 1963—Reminiscing 1964—Showcase 1978—The Buddy Holly Story soundtrack (Epic); 20 Golden Greats (MCA) 1985—Legend 1993—The Buddy Holly Collection.

Buddy Holly

Buddy Holly was a rock pioneer. He wrote his own material, used the recording studio for doubletracking and other advanced techniques, popularized the two guitars, bass, and drums lineup, and recorded a catalogue of songs that continue to be covered: "Not Fade Away," "Rave On," "That'll Be the Day," and others. His playful, mock-ingenuous singing, with slides between falsetto and regular voice and a trademark "hiccup," has been a major influence on Bob Dylan, Paul McCartney, and numerous imitators. When he died in an airplane crash at 22, he had been recording rock & roll for less than two years.

Holly learned to play the piano, fiddle, and guitar at an early age. He was five when he won $5 for singing "Down the River of Memories" at a local talent show. In the early '50s he formed the country-oriented Western and Bop Band with high school friends Bob Montgomery and Larry Welborn. Between late 1953 and 1955 they performed on local radio station KDAV and recorded demos and garage tapes, several of which were posthumously released as Holly in the Hills. By 1956 (after Holly had dropped the e from his last name), the group's reputation on the Southwestern country circuit led to a contract to cut country singles in Nashville for Decca. The label didn't think much of Montgomery, who graciously bowed out, insisting that Holly accept the deal. With Sonny Curtis and Bob Guess, Holly cut "Blue Days, Black Nights" b/w "Love Me," billed as Holly and the Two Tunes. Like subsequent pure country releases ("Modern Don Juan," "Midnight Shift," and "Girl On My Mind"), it went unnoticed. One of his last recordings for the label (which Decca refused to release) was "That'll Be the Day," a song that in a later rock version became one of Holly's first hits. During this period, Holly began writing prolifically. Typical of his romantic fare was a song that began as "Cindy Lou" but was changed to "Peggy Sue" at new Cricket Jerry Allison's suggestion. ("Peggy Sue" was the future Mrs. Allison; they've since divorced.) It eventually became one of Holly's biggest hits.

Following the failed sessions with Decca, Holly and his friends returned to Lubbock. In 1956 and 1957 Holly and drummer Allison played as a duo at the Lubbock Youth Center and shared bills with well-known stars as they passed through the area. Once they opened for a young Elvis Presley (Holly later said, "We owe it all to Elvis"), who influenced Holly's move into rock & roll.

On February 25, 1957, Holly and the newly named Crickets drove 90 miles west to producer Norman Petty's studio in Clovis, New Mexico, to cut a demo. Their rocking version of "That'll Be the Day" attracted a contract from the New York-based Coral/Brunswick label, and it rose to #1 by September. As with many of Holly's early hits, producer Petty picked up a cowriter's credit. The song's success prompted the Crickets' first national tour in late 1957. Several promoters (including those at the Apollo Theatre in New York, where Holly and his group became one of the first white acts to appear) were surprised that the group was white.

Under a contractual arrangement worked out by Petty (who quickly became Holly's manager), some discs were credited to the Crickets, while others bore only Holly's name. His first hit under the latter arrangement was "Peggy Sue" (#3, 1957), which also became one of several big hits in England, where he toured to much acclaim in 1958. "Oh, Boy!," released at year's end by the Crickets, hit #10. By 1958, Holly had reached the Top 40 with "Maybe Baby" (#17), "Think It Over" (#27), "Early in the Morning" (#32), and "Rave On" (#37).

In October 1958 Holly left Petty and the Crickets (who continued on their own), moved to Greenwich Village, and married Puerto Rico-born Mana Elena Santiago after having proposed to her on their first date. His split from Petty (who died in 1984) led to legal problems, which tied up his finances and prompted Holly to reluctantly join the Winter Dance Party Tour of the Midwest in early 1959. He also did some recording in New York; many of the tapes were later overdubbed and released posthumously. During that last tour, Holly was supported by ex-Cricket guitarist Tommy Allsup and future country superstar Waylon Jennings (whose first record, "Jolé Blon," Holly produced).

Tired of riding the bus, and in order to get his laundry done, Holly, along with a couple of the tour's other featured performers, the Big Bopper and Ritchie Valens, chartered a private plane after their Clear Lake, Iowa, show to take them to Moorhead, Minnesota. Piloted by Roger Peterson, the small Beechcraft Bonanza took off from the Mason City, Iowa, airport at about 2:00 a.m. on February 3, 1959, and crashed a few minutes later, killing all on board.

Holly's death was marked by the release of "It Doesn't Matter Anymore" (#13, 1959), which topped the U.K. chart for six consecutive weeks. In his wake, Holly left behind enough old demos and uncompleted recordings to fill several posthumous collections. A 1978 feature film, The Buddy Holly Story (starring Gary Busey), revived interest in Holly's life and career.

The Crickets continued on as a group through 1965, with a variety of personnel revolving around Allison, Curtis, and Glen D. Hardin. This lineup had some minor U.S. success but, like Holly, the Crickets were most popular in England, where they had three early-'60s hits—"Love's Made a Fool of You," "Don't Ever Change," and "My Little Girl"—the latter of which was included in the British film Just for Fun. The Crickets later costarred with Lesley Gore in The Girls on the Beach. As the '60s progressed, the Crickets' activities became more sporadic and included a Holly tribute album recorded with Bobby Vee. It was Vee who had filled Holly's spot on the ill-fated 1959 tour.

In 1973 Hardin left to join Elvis Presley's band (he would later join Emmylou Harris' Hot Band). Around this time the Crickets recorded an album with a lineup that included Allison, Curtis, and English musicians Rick Grech and Albert Lee (another future Hot Band member). Curtis and Mauldin regrouped the original Crickets in 1977 to perform in England for Buddy Holly Week (sponsored by Paul McCartney, who had just purchased the entire Holly song catalogue).

Some of the Crickets have had solo careers. In 1958 Allison released "Real Wild Child" for Coral Records (with Holly on lead guitar) under the nom de disc of Ivan. Curtis, who wrote Holly's "Rock Around With Ollie Vee," went on to write "I Fought the Law" (covered by the Bobby Fuller Four and the Clash), "Walk Right Back" (for the Everly Brothers, for whom Curtis played lead guitar off and on throughout the '60s), and the theme song of The Mary Tyler Moore Show. He has made solo albums since 1958 for A&M, Mercury, Coral, Liberty, Impenal, and other labels. By the early '80s, he was still active with Elektra/Asylum, for which he released the single "The Real Buddy Holly Story" as a response to the Hollywood biopic, which he and others criticized as being factually inaccurate.

In 1986 Holly was one of the first inductees into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame; seven years later he was honored with his own postage stamp. In 1988 the Crickets released a new album, Three Piece, on Jerry Allison's Rollercoaster label. Again they played the Buddy Holly Week festival that year, McCartney joined them onstage. In 1989 the musical Buddy: The Buddy Holly Story opened on London's West End; it ran on Broadway in 1990, and as of this writing continues its London run. It has starred Brits as well as Americans in the role of Buddy Holly, including U.S. actor Paul Hipp and musician Robert Burke Warren [see the Fleshtones entry]. In 1996 MCA released Not Fade Away: Remembering Buddy Holly, featuring contributions from Waylon Jennings, Los Lobos, the Band, the Crickets, and others, as well as a "duet" between Holly and namesake the Hollies. Three years later the Buddy Holly Museum opened in Lubbock.

Holy Modal Rounders

Formed 1963, New York, NY

Peter Stampfel (b. Oct. 29, 1938, Milwaukee, WI), banjo, fiddle, voc.; Steve Weber (b. June 22, 1942, Philadelphia, PA), gr., voc. 1964—The Holy Modal Rounders (Prestige); Holy Modal Rounders 2 1967—Indian War Whoop (ESP) 1969—The Moray Eels Eat the Holy Modal Rounders (Elektra); Good Taste Is Timeless (Metromedia) 1972—Stampfel and Weber (Fantasy) 1975—Alleged in Their Own Time (Rounder) 1976—Last Round (Adelphi) 1981—Goin' Nowhere Fast (Rounder); Have Moicy (as the Unholy Modal Rounders) 1998—Holy Modal Rounders, 1 & 2 (Fantasy) 1999—Too Much Fun! Peter Stampfel solo: 1986—Peter Stampfel and the Bottlecaps (Rounder) 1989—The People's Republic of Rock 'n' Roll (Homestead) 1995—You Must Remember This (Gert Town) 2001—I Make a Wish for a Potato.

The Holy Modal Rounders, a loose group centering on Peter Stampfel and Steve Weber, are gonzo traditionalists who mix old folk and bluegrass tunes with their own bouncy, absurdist free associations. The Rounders' closest brush with commercial success came when their "If You Wanna Be a Bird" appeared on the Easy Rider movie soundtrack, but such songs as "Boobs a Lot" and "My Mind Capsized" kept folk rock from taking itself too seriously.

Stampfel was previously with folk groups like MacGrundy's Old Tyme Wool Thumpers. He and Weber met in 1963 on the East Coast. They recorded albums for Prestige and then began working with the Fugs [see entry] and contributed to the Fugs' first record on the Broadside label.

In 1965 the groups went their separate ways; Stampfel formed the Moray Eels, and Weber revived the Rounders moniker and added other musicians for the first time (including playwright Sam Shepard, who played drums and wrote songs) for Indian War Whoop on ESP. They also scored Shepard's play Operation Sidewinder. Around the same time, the group's free-flowing lineup also briefly included Jeff "Skunk" Baxter, later with Steely Dan and the Doobie Brothers.

In the early '70s their Good Taste Is Timeless, featuring "Boobs a Lot," got some FM airplay. Shortly thereafter, Fantasy Records released Stampfel and Weber, followed in 1975 by a reunion LP, Alleged in Their Own Time, on Rounder Records (named in their honor). In late 1981, still folk-cult favorites, Stampfel and Weber did some East Coast dates as a duo to support Goin' Nowhere Fast, and Stampfel has continued to appear around New York City with his group, the Bottle Caps. In 1999 the two reunited as Holy Modal Rounders for Too Much Fun!

Hoodoo Gurus

Formed 1981, Sydney, Austral.

Dave Faulkner (b. Oct. 2, 1954, Perth, Austral.), voc., gr.; Brad Shepherd (b. Feb. 1, 1961, Sydney), gr., voc.; Clyde Bramley, bass; James Baker, drums.

1983—Stoneage Romeos (A&M) 1985—(—Baker; + Mark Kingsmill [b. Dec. 4, 1956, Sydney], drums) Mars Needs Guitars! (Big Time/Elektra) 1987—Blow Your Cool! 1988—

(- Bramley; + Rick Grossman [b. Nov. 2, 1955, Sydney], bass) 1989—Magnum Cum Louder (RCA) 1991—Kinky 1992—Electric Soup 1994—Crank (Zoo/BMG) 1996—Blue Cave.

Aussie pub rockers the Hoodoo Gurus built their music from the debris of American pop culture—everything from garage-band pop to science-fiction B movies. But while their unique sensibility earned them critical favor and a college-radio following, wide U.S. appeal eluded them.

Le Hoodoo Gurus, as they were originally called, formed in a friend's living room as a five-piece band including ex-Scientists Rod Radalj and James Baker. Singer Dave Faulkner was the group's sole continuous member; he first came to musical infamy in 1979 with the underground hit "Television Addict" by his Perth band the Victims.

By their debut album the Hoodoos were a four-piece, with Faulkner's wacky pop songs braced by Brad Shepherd's junk-metal guitar. Stoneage Romeos (which was dedicated to, among others, Arnold [the Pig] Ziffel from the 1960s TV sitcom Green Acres) introduced the band's offbeat take in songs like "(Let's All) Turn On," "I Want You Back," "I Was a Kamikaze Pilot," and "Leilani." The album was a critical and college-radio smash Down Under and well received in America. Shortly after its U.S. release, Mark Kingsmill joined the band. With the first single from Mars Needs Guitars!, the Australian Top 20 hit "Bittersweet," Faulkner showed a more sensitive, serious side. But on "LikeWow—Wipeout" the Hoodoo Gurus' sound was reminiscent of '60s garage rockers, while the title track paid homage to their hankering for sci-fi kitsch.

Constant touring brought the Hoodoos to the U.S. and Europe. The Bangles helped them with one of their biggest singles, "What's My Scene," from 1987's Blow Your Cool!; the women also sang on the album track "Good Times." On the East Coast, the band became buddies with New York's Flesh-tones (who in the '90s would release an album on Faulkner's Australian indie label). Rick Grossman, formerly of the Divinyls, joined in 1988. Magnum Cum Louder gave the band three alternative club hits: "Come Anytime," "Another World," and "Baby Can Dance." The album's title ironically addressed the band's reluctant pigeonholing into the college-radio market; the track "Where's That Hit?," ostensibly about baseball, is clearly autobiographical. Kinky featured the Hoodoo Gurus' paean to '60s sexuality, "Miss Freelove '69," but the album failed to make a dent on the charts. Three years later, the band resurfaced with Crank, released several months earlier in Australia. Produced by Ed Stasium, the hard-rocking album included guest backing vocals from ex-Bangle Vicki Peterson and New York City chanteuse Wendy Wild.

After releasing Blue Cave in 1996, the Hoodoos called it quits, but not before embarking on a final Australian tour. Faulkner went on to work on soundtracks and musicals while Grossman started playing with the Ghostwriters.

John Lee Hooker

Born Aug. 22, 1917, Vance, MS; died June 21, 2001, Los Altos, CA

1961—John Lee Hooker Plays and Sings the Blues (Chess) 1962—Folklore of John L. Hooker (Vee Jay) 1966—It Serves You Right (Impulse) 1968—Urban Blues (Stateside) 1970—No Friend Around (Red Lightnin'); Alone, vol. 1 (Labor) 1971—Coast to Coast (United Artists); Endless Boogie; Hooker 'n' Heat (with Canned Heat) (Liberty); Goin' Down Highway 51 (Specialty) 1972—Boogie Chillen (Fantasy); Never Get Out of These Blues Alive 1974—Best of (Crescendo); Don't Turn Me From Your Door (Atco) 1975—John Lee Hooker (New World) 1978—The Cream (Tomato) 1981—Hooker Alone, vol. 1 (Labor) 1982—Hooker Alone, vol. 2 1987—Jealous (Pausa); The Best of John Lee Hooker (GNP Crescendo) 1989—The Healer (Chameleon) 1991—Mr. Lucky (Charisma); The Ultimate Collection 1948–1990 (Rhino) 1992—Boom Boom (Charisma) 1993—John Lee Hooker on Vee Jay 1955–1958 (Vee Jay) 1995—Chill Out (Pointblank) 1997—Don't Look Back 1998—The Best of Friends.

Blues musician John Lee Hooker helped define the post-World War II electric blues with his one-chord boogie compositions and his rhythmic electric guitar work. His deep voice was inimitable. Historically, he was one of the great links between the blues and rock & roll.

Hooker was one of 11 children. He sang at church in Clarksdale, Mississippi. His first musical instrument was an inner tube stretched across a barn door. In his adolescence he was taught rudimentary guitar technique by his stepfather, William Moore, who often performed at local fish fries, dances, and other social occasions in the late '20s; another early influence was Blind Lemon Jefferson. In 1931 Hooker went to Memphis, where he worked as an usher at the Daisy Theater on Beale Street. He moved to Cincinnati in 1933 and sang with gospel groups like the Big Six, the Delta Big Four, and the Fairfield Four.

The Hoodoo Gurus: Dave Faulkner, Brad Shephard, Mark Kingsmill, Rick Grossman

His career eventually took root in Detroit in the late '30s. He began recording in the late '40s. Hooker was exclusively a singles artist for his first few very prolific years. His first release, "Boogie Chillen," issued on the Modern label, was an instant million-seller and a jukebox hit. "I'm in the Mood" sold a million copies in 1951; the blues-record market was soon saturated with Hooker material on myriad labels, often released under such pseudonyms as Birmingham Sam, John Lee Booker, Boogie Man, John Lee Cooker, Delta John, Johnny Lee, Texas Slim, and Johnny Williams. His only pop chart entry was with "Boom Boom" (#60, 1962), later recorded by the Animals. In 1959 he cut his first album for Riverside Records and made his debut performance at the Newport Folk Festival. He toured Europe extensively in the early '60s. In the mid-'60s he toured and recorded frequently with Britain's Groundhogs.

By 1970, Hooker was living in Oakland, California. He teamed up with Canned Heat for Hooker 'n' Heat (Liberty), which made inroads on the American charts (#73) and abroad. Charlie Musselwhite and Van Morrison joined Hooker in 1972 for Never Get Out of These Blues Alive, the release of which roughly coincided with Fantasy's double-LP Boogie Chillen, a compilation of early material and previously unreleased tapes from 1962. Hooker continued to tour and record in the '70s and '80s, often opening for rock acts like Canned Heat and Foghat. In 1980 he appeared in The Blues Brothers film.

The late '80s brought a renewal of interest in Hooker. British and American rockers, including the Spencer Davis Group, the J. Geils Band, Canned Heat, and George Thorogood, had covered his songs. He sang the title role on Pete Townshend's 1989 album The Iron Man, which was based on a children's book. The same year he joined the Rolling Stones for their concerts in Atlantic City, New Jersey. The Healer (#62, 1989), which featured guest appearances by Carlos Santana, Robert Cray, Los Lobos, George Thorogood, Canned Heat, and others, was his biggest commercial success. The album spent 38 weeks on the chart. Hooker earned his first Grammy Award for "I'm in the Mood," the album's duet with Bonnie Raitt. In October 1990 New York's Madison Square Garden hosted an all-star concert celebrating Hooker's music. Raitt, Joe Cocker, Huey Lewis, Ry Cooder, Gregg Allman, Willie Dixon, and others joined the bluesman for the occasion. That year he also joined Miles Davis on the Grammy-nominated movie soundtrack The Hot Spot. (Davis reportedly called Hooker "the funkiest man alive, buried up to his neck in mud.")

In 1991 Hooker was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame; he was nominated for another Grammy for 1991's Mr. Lucky, which featured tracks recorded with the Robert Cray Band, Keith Richards, Ry Cooder, Tom Waits, Van Morrison, Johnny Winter, Carlos Santana, and others. His 1992 release Boom Boom featured guest guitar work by ex-Fabulous Thunderbird Jimmie Vaughan and blues great Albert Collins.

In early 1995 Hooker announced that he would lighten his touring schedule. Van Morrison, who played on 1995's Chill Out, produced 1997's Don't Look Back, which features appearances by both Morrison and Los Lobos. The Best of Friends rounds up Hooker's numerous superstar collaborations. The first biography about the bluesman, Boogie Man, was published in Europe in 1999, and in America the following year. In 2000 Hooker won a Grammy for lifetime achievement. He died in his sleep at the age of 83.

The Hooters

Formed 1980, Philadelphia, PA

Rob Hyman, voc., kybds.; Eric Bazilian, voc., gr.; John Lilley, gr.; Fran Smith Jr., bass, voc.; David Uosikkinen, drums.

1983—Amore (Antenna) 1985—Nervous Night (Columbia)
1987—One Way Home 1989—Zig Zag 1993—Out of Body (MCA) 1994—Greatest Hits, I (Sony International); Greatest Hits, II; The Hooters Live (MCA International) 1996—Hooterization (Sony/Legacy).
Largo (Hyman; Bazilian; + Rick Chertoff, trumpet, drums, sax, voc., perc.): 1998—Largo (Blue Gorilla/Mercury).

The Hooters burst onto the charts in the summer of 1985 with Nervous Night and a string of moderate hits—"And We Danced" (#21, 1985), "Day by Day" (#12, 1986), and "Where Do the Children Go" (#38, 1986)—that reflected the group's wide-ranging and diverse musical influences and loves. Blending basic rock & roll instrumentation and themes with folk instrumentation (mandolin, dulcimer, accordion, and the melodica, or "hooter," from which they took the group's name), the Hooters forged a unique sound that, since the late '80s, has found a wider audience overseas than in the U.S.

Rob Hyman and Eric Bazilian were members of Baby Grand, a group that cut two albums for Arista in the late '70s and included future producer Rick Chertoff. When that group broke up, Bazilian and Hyman continued writing and doing session work. They arranged for, played on, and provided backing vocals for Cyndi Lauper's 1983 breakthrough album She's So Unusual, for which Hyman cowrote the hit single "Time After Time." Shortly thereafter, the duo rounded out the Hooters with three additional musicians. The band released several independent singles and an album, Amore, which sold 100,000 copies.

Their debut for Columbia, Nervous Night (#12, 1985), went platinum, and its followup, One Way Home (#27, 1987), was certified gold, despite a lack of Top 50 singles. By then the Hooters had topped a number of music-magazine polls as best new group and best new live act, but the commercial momentum soon began to let up. Zig Zag missed the Hot 100, although a rendition of the folk classic "500 Miles" (fea-turning Peter, Paul and Mary, who had recorded the song in the early '60s) went to #37 in 1989.

Around the world, however, it was a far different story. In England "Satellite" from One Way Home went to #22. It was also a hit in Germany. The group has also earned gold and platinum albums in Japan, Australia, and several European countries. Bazilian and Hyman have continued to work with a number of artists, including Johnny Clegg and Savuka, Taj Mahal, and Sophie B. Hawkins. Most recently they cowrote and played on Joan Osborne's 1995 hit album Relish, which included the Bazilian-penned single "One of Us." Osborne, alongside Lauper, the Chieftains, and members of the Band, also appeared on the 1998 self-titled debut by a Largo, a folkier, more ethereal project led by Bazilian, Hyman, and Chertoff. In 1999 Ricky Martin covered Bazilian and Hyman's "Private Emotion" on his self-titled breakthrough album.

Hootie & the Blowfish

Formed 1986, Columbia, SC

Darius Rucker (b. 1966, Charleston), voc., gtr.; Mark Ryan (b. 1967, Gaithersburg, MD), gtr.; Dean Felber (b. 1967, Gaithersburg), bass; Jim Sonefeld (b. 1965, Chicago, IL), drums. 1991—Kootchytop EP (self-released) 1994—Cracked Rear View (Atlantic) 1996—Fairweather Johnson 1998—Musical Chairs 2000—Scattered, Smothered & Covered. Mark Ryan solo: 2000—30 on the Rail (Atlantic).

Hootie & the Blowfish's major label debut Cracked Rear View was released with little fanfare in the fall of 1994. Prior to its release, the Blowfish were an unassuming if easily likeable college bar band with one self-released EP to their credit. But as soon as the album's lead single, "Hold My Hand" (#10), took off, both Hootie and Cracked Rear View were well on their way into the record books. By 1995, Cracked Rear View was a #1 record, destined to sell 16 million copies and become the second highest-selling debut album in history (behind 1976's Boston).

The members of Hootie came together while attending the University of South Carolina in Columbia, South Carolina (frontman Darius Rucker, guitarist Mark Ryan, and bassist Dean Felber hooked up in 1986, with fellow student Jim Sonefeld joining on drums three years later). After adopting the nicknames of a couple of their friends (Hootie, Blowfish), the band commenced playing at bars and frat parties throughout the South and East Coast, eventually building up a following that snatched up some 50,000 copies of their 1991 EP Kootchytop and as many T-shirts as the band could print up. Impressed by their grassroots success, Atlantic signed the group a couple of years later. While many critics dismissed the breezily catchy folk-rock songs on Cracked Rear View, so far removed from the edgy alt rock and grunge still in vogue at the time, radio listeners and record buyers embraced it wholeheartedly. In addition to "Hold My Hand," the album's hits included "Let Her Cry" (#9), "Only Wanna Be With You" (#6), and "Time" (#14). Rucker, who sang in a deep, warm, baritone and stood out by being a black man in a predominately white genre, attracted the most media attention; he was the one many inevitably assumed to be "Hootie," with the rest of the group his backup "Blowfish."

Cracked Rear View was still selling strongly when Hootie & the Blowfish released their followup effort, Fairweather Johnson, in the spring of 1996. Although it debuted at #1 and eventually went triple platinum, it was considered a commercial disappointment next to its blockbuster predecessor. The album yielded only two modest hits: "Old Man & Me" (#13) and "Tucker's Town" (#38). Musical Chairs, released two years later, debuted and peaked at #4.

In 2000 the band issued Scattered, Smothered & Covered (#71), a collection of B sides and cover songs, including their take on Led Zeppelin's "Hey Hey What Can I Do" (from 1995's Encomium: A Tribute to Led Zeppelin). The year also produced the first Hootie-related solo offering, guitarist Mark Ryan's 30 on the Rail.

Mary Hopkin

Born May 3, 1950, Pontardawe, South Wales
1969—Postcard (Apple) 1971—Earth Song 1972—Those Were the Days 1979—Welsh World of Mary Hopkin (Decca); Kidnapped 1995—Those Were the Days—The Best of Mary Hopkin (Capitol).

Welsh singer Mary Hopkin was briefly an international star in the late '60s. She began singing at age four and was soon taking voice lessons and singing in the Congregational Tabernacle Choir. Hopkin studied music, art, and English at the local grammar school and continued at Cardiff College of Music and Drama. While a student there, she earned extra money by singing in pubs. When she appeared on the BBC-TV variety show Opportunity Knocks in 1968, she was spotted by the model Twiggy, who told Paul McCartney about her. McCartney signed her to Apple and supervised her first sessions, which produced "Those Were the Days" (#2, 1968). The song had already been recorded by the Limeliters, who had adapted it from a Russian folk song called "Darogoi Dlimmoya" (Dear for Me), first recorded in the '20s.

Hopkin was 18 years old when her debut album, Postcard, was released. McCartney wrote and produced her second single, "Goodbye" (#13, 1969), which hit #2 on the British chart. She then moved on to work with producer Mickie Most. Hopkin enjoyed lesser hits in the early '70s—including "Temma Harbour," "Que Sera, Sera (Whatever Will Be, Will Be)," "Think About Your Children" (1970), and "Knock Knock Who's There" (1972)—and toured a bit.

As an actress, she costarred in 1969 with Tommy Steele in a pantomime production of Dick Whittington at the London Palladium and in 1971 appeared with David Essex in Cinderella in Manchester. Around the same time, she married British record producer Tony Visconti and began raising a family. Through the mid-'70s her singing career was limited to occasional backup vocals (as Mary Visconti) for Ralph McTell, David Bowie, and Thin Lizzy. In 1976 "If You Love Me" on Visconti's Good Earth label, hit #32 on the English chart. She starred in a 1980 Christmas production of Rock Nativity at the Hexagon Theatre in Reading.

In 1981 she and Visconti broke up, and Hopkin, then a mother of two, returned to music. First she briefly joined a British trio, Sundance; then in 1984 she reemerged as lead singer of a group called Oasis (not the '90s Brit-pop band). Its debut album placed in the U.K. Top 25. She performed with the Chieftains on several occasions in the '90s. In 2000 she collaborated with the U.K. group the Crocкета

Lightnin' Hopkins

Born Mar. 15, 1912, Centerville, TX; died Jan. 30, 1982, Houston, TX

1959—Lightnin' Hopkins (Folkways) 1965—Down Home Blues (Prestige) 1968—Texas Blues Man (Arhoolie) 1970—Lightnin', vol. 1 (Poppy) 1972—Double Blues (Fantasy); Lonesome Lightnin' (Carnival) 1976—All Them Blues (DJM) 1989—Texas Blues (Arhoolie) 1990—The Gold Star Sessions, vol. 1; The Gold Star Sessions, vol. 2 1991—The Complete Prestige/Bluesville Recordings (Prestige/Bluesville) 1992—The Complete Candid Recordings of Lightnin' Hopkins and Otis Spann (Mosaic).

The most frequently recorded traditional blues artist in history (who, paradoxically, did the bulk of his performing as an impoverished street singer), Sam "Lightnin'" Hopkins was a country-blues stylist whose career spanned more than three decades, even though he did not begin in earnest until he was nearing middle age. His solo style, with its irregular verses and voice-and-guitar call-and-response, has roots in the earliest blues.

Born in a small farming community, Hopkins lived virtually his entire life in the Houston area. He was one of six children (his sister and four brothers were also musicians), and at age eight he debuted on a guitarlike instrument fashioned from a cigar box and chicken wire. Subsequently, his brother Joel "John Henry" Hopkins (later a well-known bluesman in his own right) taught him to play guitar. Hopkins dropped out of school to hobo through Texas, playing informally in the streets and jamming with folk legends like Blind Lemon Jefferson, whom he met in the summer of 1920. As the '30s progressed he supported himself primarily as a farmworker, while playing for tups in Texas bars and nightspots. More than once Hopkins found himself working the Houston County Prison Farm's road gang. After drifting for several years he settled in Houston's Third Ward ghetto after World War II and then rarely left.

In 1946 Hopkins and pianist Wilson "Thunder" Smith went to L.A. and cut some sides for the Aladdin label. While there, he gained his Lightnin' moniker. When little came of the Aladdin sessions, he returned to Houston and, backed only by his own guitar, cut "Short Haired Woman" b/w "Big Mama Jump" in 1947 for Gold Star Records. It sold 40,000 copies, and the followup, "Baby Please Don't Go," doubled that figure, beginning two years of local success.

Over the next few years Hopkins recorded prolifically for several companies based in Houston, L.A., and New York. He insisted upon being paid in cash for each studio take, thereby relinquishing his rights to his maternal (he rarely received royalties on his massive catalogue of work) and causing confusion in his recording legacy. (A complete Hopkins discography would include efforts for over 20 record companies.) His style and stance are represented on reissues and compilation/anthologies like Tradition's Autobiography and Best, Arhoolie's Early Recordings, Prestige's Greatest Hits, and others compiled from his hundreds of sides. Among his many compositions were "December 7, 1941," "Don't Embarrass Me, Baby," "Ball of Twine," "I'm Gonna Meet My Baby Somewhere," and "Little Antoinette."

When Texas blues fell from national favor by the mid-'50s, Hopkins' career nosedived, though he did record and perform in Europe, usually solo, sometimes with a backing ensemble. Reduced once again to Houston street singing (perennially working the Dowling Street area), he was saved by the later folk and blues revival and was rediscovered by musicologist and author Sam Charters (The Country Blues), who recorded him for Folkways in 1959. That same year, he played the University of California Folk Festival and in 1960 appeared at Carnegie Hall in a show featuring Joan Baez and Pete Seeger. In 1961 Hopkins toured with Clifton Chenier's band and continued to play regularly at Houston nightspots like Irene's and the Sputnik Bar. A 1967 documentary on the singer, The Blues of Lightnin' Hopkins, won the Gold Hugo Award at the Chicago Film festival.

Hopkins performed at folk festivals and in rock venues in the late '60s, but was slowed by an auto crackup in 1970 that put his neck in a protective brace. Nevertheless he continued club work on and off through the '70s. In the early '70s he recorded for the Denver-based Tumbleweed Records. Meanwhile, tapes continued to surface on a variety of labels, and in 1972 he contributed to the soundtrack of the feature film Souther. Hopkins remained sporadically active for the rest of the decade, capping his lengthy career with an appearance at Carnegie Hall in spring 1979. He did little recording in his final years but could be seen prowling the Houston streets in his black Cadillac Coupe de Ville. In 1981 he underwent surgery for cancer of the esophagus, which later proved terminal.

Nicky Hopkins

Born Feb. 24, 1944, London, Eng.; died Sep. 6, 1994, Nashville, TN

1966—Revolutionary Piano (Columbia, U.K.) 1973—The Tin Man Was a Dreamer 1975—No More Changes (Mercury).

Studio keyboardist Nicky Hopkins was in and out of groups in Britain and the U.S. beginning in the '60s; Ray Davies wrote the Kinks' "Session Man" in his honor.

Hopkins began playing the piano at age three and studied at the Royal Academy of Music from 1956 to 1960. He joined Screamin' Lord Sutch's Savages in 1960 and two years later moved to the Cyril Davies R&B All-Stars, the two groups included many musicians who would make their names in the British Invasion and its aftermath. Hopkins left Davies in May 1963 because of illness and began work as a session keyboardist after he emerged from the hospital 19 months later. He recorded with the Rolling Stones, the Beatles, the Who, the Small Faces, the Kinks, and other bands, and in 1968 he joined the Jeff Beck Group, which at the time included Rod Stewart and Ron Wood.

In the late '60s he also recorded with his own short-lived group, Sweet Thursday, which included future Cat Stevens guitarist Alun Davies and Jon Mark of the Mark-Almond Band. But after nine months in the Jeff Beck Group, Hopkins joined the Quicksilver Messenger Service in San Francisco and recorded with it on Shady Grove. He also recorded with Steve Miller and the Jefferson Airplane, and appeared with the Airplane at the Woodstock Festival.

In the '70s Hopkins returned to work as a sideman, touring with the Rolling Stones (he appears on "Jumpin' Jack Flash" and "Sympathy for the Devil") and the albums Let It Bleed, Exile on Main Street, and Black and Blue in 1972 and sporadically with the Jerry Garcia Band, and backing Graham Parker and others on records. His attempt at a solo career in the mid-'70s was widely ignored. In 1979 he joined the group Night, which had a hit single that year with "Hot Summer Nights," but quit soon after. He then moved to Northern California, where he kept a low profile. He later moved to Nashville, where he died of complications from previous intestinal surgeries.

Bruce Hornsby and the Range

Formed 1984, Los Angeles, CA

Bruce Hornsby (b. Bruce Randall Hornsby, Nov. 23, 1954, Richmond, VA), voc., kybds.; David Mansfield, violin, mandolin, gtr.; George Marinelli Jr., gtr.; Joe Puerta, bass; John Molo, drums.

1986—The Way It Is (RCA) 1988—(– Mansfield; + Peter Harris, gtr., mandolin) Scenes From the Southside 1990—(– Harris) A Night on the Town.

Hornsby solo: 1993—Harbor Lights (RCA) 1995—Hot House 1998—Spirit Trail 2000—Here Come the Noise Makers.

Pianist and singer Bruce Hornsby spent years writing and playing for other artists before his own band, the Range, broke through in 1986 with "The Way It Is," an anti-racism song that became a #1 pop single. Hornsby's increased visibility made his eclectic jazz-influenced skills even more highly sought after; numerous and diverse popular acts enlisted his support, solidifying his reputation as a musician's musician. Meanwhile, Hornsby's recordings with the Range, which mixed roots-rock textures with mellow R&B overtones, continued to appeal to a core audience of adult-contemporary and album-oriented rock fans.

Raised in Williamsburg, Virginia, the lanky Hornsby played varsity basketball in high school and dreamed of a professional athletic career. His piano studies sidetracked him, though, and Hornsby wound up studying at Boston's Berklee College of Music and earning his degree from the University of Miami's School of Music in 1977. In 1980 with a band including his older brother, Bob, and drummer John Molo, Hornsby moved to L.A. There, he and his younger brother, John, were hired as contract writers for 20th Century-Fox. (Hornsby eventually cowrote with his brothers several songs for his albums.) Hornsby also did session work and toured in Sheena Easton's band. By 1984, the Range's original lineup was complete and eager to be signed. At first, though, even the pushing of early supporter Huey Lewis, a big star at the time, proved futile, but then a demo of songs performed acoustically by Hornsby attracted major-label interest.

The Way It Is, fueled by the title track, reached #3 (also #1 Adult Contemporary) and spawned the additional hits "Mandolin Rain" (#4 pop, #1 Adult Contemporary 1987) and "Every Little Kiss" (#14, 1987). Subsequently, Hornsby and the Range collected a Grammy for Best New Artist. A sophomore album, 1988's Scenes From the Southside, reached #5 and yielded the #5 pop single "The Valley Road" (#1 Adult Contemporary) and the #35 followup "Look Out Any Window." Then 1990's A Night on the Town peaked at #20 and produced the #18 single "Across the River," which featured Jerry Garcia on guitar.

Meanwhile, Hornsby tickled the ivories on albums by Bob Dylan, Robbie Robertson, Bonnie Raitt, and Squeeze, among others. He cowrote and played on Don Henley's 1989 hit "End of the Innocence," and toured extensively with the Grateful Dead, putting in 18 months with the band after keyboardist Brent Mydland's death in 1990.

In 1993, after disbanding the Range—keeping Molo as his drummer and adding bassist Jimmy Haslip to his core backing band—Hornsby released the solo album Harbor Lights (#46), featuring appearances by Raitt, Garcia, Phil Collins, Pat Metheny and Branford Marsalis. The disc offered "Fields of Gray" (#69), a reflection on Hornsby's new parenthood of twin sons. Two years later he returned with the eclectic Hot House with guest artists Garcia, Metheny, Chaka Khan, and bluegrass banjo virtuoso Béla Fleck. The album produced the upbeat "Walk in the Sun" (#54, 1995). Meanwhile, Hornsby continued playing live, both as a headliner and as a supporting player for friends such as Raitt as well as on the festival circuit. His solo sets were often jazzy and improvisational, and a focus on jams was prominent on the 1998 two-CD studio set Spirit Trail. In 1998 longtime drummer Molo tired of Hornsby's intensive touring schedule and took an extensive break from performing.

Johnny Horton

Born Apr. 3, 1925, Los Angeles, CA, died Nov. 5, 1960, Milano, TX

1959—The Spectacular Johnny Horton (Columbia) 1960—

Johnny Horton Makes History; Johnny Horton's Greatest Hits 1971—The World of Johnny Horton 1989—American Originals.

Johnny Horton was one of the first country & western singers to cross over onto the pop chart. His "The Battle of New Orleans" was a #1 hit in 1959.

Sources disagree as to where and when Horton was born (some claim April 30, 1927, or November 30, 1929, and Tyler, Texas, is sometimes stated as his place of birth). His mother taught him to play guitar at an early age, and he later attended Seattle University, where he majored in petroleum engineering and dabbled in songwriting. After traveling around Alaska and Louisiana, he started performing in clubs and on Pasadena radio station KXLA, billed as the Singing Fisherman.

In 1951 Horton moved to Shreveport, Louisiana, where for eight years he was a star attraction on The Louisiana Hayride radio show. He began recording in 1951 but had little success until his move to Columbia Records. There his version of Jimmie Driftwood's "Battle of New Orleans" hit in 1959; it was also a hit for Lonnie Donegan in England (#2, 1959). Horton's subsequent hits included "Johnny Reb" (#54, 1959), "Sink the Bismarck" (#3, 1960), and "North to Alaska" (#4, 1960), the title song to a John Wayne film. Around 1960 Horton, an avid believer in the occult, became convinced his death was imminent. He rescheduled engagements frequently, but perhaps not often enough, for while returning home from a performance at the Skyline in Austin he was killed in a car accident. By strange coincidence, the Skyline had been the site of Hank Williams' last performance, and Horton's widow, Billy Jean, had been married to Williams as well.

Hot Chocolate

Formed 1970, London, Eng.

Errol Brown (b. Jam.), voc.; Patrick Olive (b. Grenada), gtr., perc., bass; Larry Ferguson (b. Nassau), kybds.; Harvey Hinsley (b. Mitcham, Eng.), gtr.; Ian King, drums; Tony Wilson (b. Trinidad), bass, voc.

1973—(- King; + Tony Connor [b. Romford, Eng.], drums)

1974—Cicero Park (Big Tree) 1975—Hot Chocolate

(- Wilson) 1976—Man to Man 1977—10 Greatest Hits

1978—Every 1's a Winner (Infinity) 1979—Going Through the

Motions 1980—Mystery (EMI) 1993—Every 1's a Winner:

The Very Best of Hot Chocolate 1995—The Rest of, the Best of Hot Chocolate 2000—Hot Chocolate Collection.

This Caribbean-British interracial soul band had '70s hits with social-comment dance tunes. Their biggest one in America was "You Sexy Thing" (#3, 1976), and their "Brother Louie" (a Top 10 hit for them in England in 1973) became a #1 hit for Stones in America the same year. The London-based band got its first contract with the Beatles' Apple label, for which it released a reggae-style version of John Lennon's "Give Peace a Chance" (1970). Hot Chocolate then worked with producer Mickie Most, concentrating on singles. It established itself in the U.K. in the early '70s with moderately successful releases like "Love Is Life" (#6 U.K., 1970) and "I Believe (in Love)" (#8 U.K., 1971). "Emma" (#8 U.S., #3 U.K., 1975) finally broke the group stateside in early 1975, followed by "Disco Queen" (#28, 1975) and "You Sexy Thing."

Errol Brown and Tony Wilson wrote most of Hot Chocolate's songs, and in the early '70s their compositions were covered by Mary Hopkin, Peter Noone (Herman's Hermits), April Wine, and Suzi Quatro. But in 1975 Wilson left the group for a solo career (his solo debut, "I Like Your Style," came out in 1976). Hot Chocolate persevered with 1976's Man to Man, which expanded its considerable following in Europe. The group enjoyed moderate U.S. success with "Don't Stop It Now" (#42, 1976), "So You Win Again" (#31, 1977), "Going Through the Motions" (#53, 1979), and "Are You Getting Enough Happiness" (#65, 1982). Brown and company cracked the U.S. Top 10 again in early 1979 with "Every 1's a Winner" (#6).

Hot Chocolate remained popular in the U.K., charting with "Girl Crazy" (#7 U.K., 1982) and "It Started With a Kiss" (#5 U.K., 1982); when Brown quit for a solo career in 1987, the band broke up. Ten years later, Hot Chocolate found itself reheated as "You Sexy Thing" was prominently featured in two hit movies—Boogie Nights and The Full Monty—and a TV commercial for Burger King.

Hothouse Flowers

Formed 1986, Dublin, Ire.

Liam O'Maonlai (b. Nov. 7, 1964, Dublin), voc., kybds., harmonica; Fiachna O'Braonain (b. Nov. 27, 1965, Dublin), gtr.; Peter O'Toole (b. Apr. 1, 1965, Dublin), bass, bouzouki; Jerry Fehily (b. Aug. 29, 1963, Bishops Town, Ire.), drums; Leo Barnes (b. Oct. 5, 1965, Dublin), sax.

1988—People (London) 1990—Home 1993—Songs From the Rain (PolyGram) 1995—(- Fehily; - Barnes) 1998—Born (London, U.K.).

Hothouse Flowers has endeared itself to modern rock fans with a rootsy, passionate pop hybrid incorporating elements of traditional Irish folk music and American blues and gospel. Singer Liam O'Maonlai and guitarist Fiachna O'Braonain met in grade school, started playing together as teenagers, and quit college in 1985 to become the Incomparable Benzini Brothers, an acclaimed street-performance act that, after the addition of a bassist, drummer, and sax player, evolved into Hothouse Flowers. In 1986 the fledgling musicians were spotted on Irish television by U2's Bono, who immediately offered them support.

The following year, Hothouse Flowers released its first single on U2's own label, Mother Records, a feat that attracted the interest of many major record companies. The band soon landed a deal with PolyGram's London label. Its 1988 debut album, People, reached the top of the Irish chart within a week and went to #2 in England. In America, though, People would reach only #88, and two subsequent albums would make even less of an impression. Its failure to transcend cult status in the U.S. notwithstanding, Hothouse Flowers nevertheless drew critical praise for its warm sound, and particularly for O'Maonlai's raw, soulful vocals, which inspired companions to Van Morrison and Bruce Springsteen.

After a long world tour that ended in 1994, the members took a nearly two-year break. During this period, O'Maonlai formed a trio called alt with ex-Split Enz/Crowded House creative force Tim Finn and songwriter Andy White. The trio released an album called altitude in 1995, and toured behind it. Meanwhile, O'Braonain and O'Toole recorded and toured with singer Michelle Shocked. When the Hothouse Flowers members got together to discuss the future of the band in late 1995, drummer Fehily and saxophonist Barnes were let go, as the remaining trio decided to experiment with a harder-edged sound. O'Toole switched instruments, from bass to rhythm guitar and mandolin, and the re-formed group released Born in Europe in 1998. O'Maonlai planned to record a solo album of traditional Irish music in 2000.

Hot Tuna

Officially split from Jefferson Airplane, 1972

Jorma Kaukonen (b. Dec. 23, 1940, Washington, DC), gr., voc.; Jack Casady (b. Apr. 13, 1944, Washington, DC), bass.

1970—Hot Tuna (RCA) (+ Will Scarlett, harmonica) 1971—First Pull Up—Then Pull Down (+ Papa John Creach [b. May 28, 1917, Beaver Falls, PA; d. Feb. 22, 1994, Los Angeles, CA], elec. violin; + Sammy Piazza, drums) 1972—(—Scarlett) Burgers (Grunt) 1974—(—Creach) The Phosphorescent Rat 1975—(—Piazza; + Bob Steeler, drums) America's Choice; Yellow Fever 1976—Hoppkorv 1977—(—Steeler) 1978—Double Dose (+ Nick Buck, kybds.) 1979—Final Vinyl 1984—Splashdown (Relix) 1985—Historic Hot Tuna 1989—(+ Harvey Sorgan [b. Apr. 16 1957, Rockville Centre, NY], drums) 1990—(+ Michael Falzarano [b. May 22, 1951, Brooklyn, NY], gr., mandolin, harmonica, voc.); Pair a Dice Found (Epic) 1992—(+ Pete Sears [b. May 27, 1948, Bromley, Eng.], kybds.) Live at Sweetwater (Relix) 1993—Live at Sweetwater Two 1996—Classic Acoustic; Classic Electric 1996—Hot Tuna in a Can (RCA) 1997—Splashdown Two (Relix) 1998—Live in Japan; The Best of Hot Tuna (RCA) 1999—And Furthermore . . . (Arista).

Jorma Kaukonen solo: 1974—Quah (Grunt) 1979—Jorma (RCA) 1980—Barbeque King 1985—Too Hot to Handle (Relix); Magic 1995—Magic Two; The Land of Heroes (American Heritage/Relix) 1996—Christmas 1999—Too Many Years.

Jack Casady and Jorma Kaukonen, original recording members of the Jefferson Airplane, grew up together in northwest Washington, DC. After high school Kaukonen headed for the Philippines to join his relocated government-service parents and traveled in the Orient before moving to San Francisco and working as a folkie. He soon fell in with the Airplane and called his old friend Casady, then teaching guitar in Washington. The two stayed with the Airplane until 1972.

By then they had already started Hot Tuna (they originally called the group Hot Shit, but RCA balked), which was intended to operate as a satellite band. Early on, other members of the Airplane played with Tuna, including vocalist Marty Balin and drummers Spencer Dryden and Joey Covington. The group's low-key debut was recorded live at Berkeley's New Orleans House with harmonica player Will Scarlett and Kaukonen on acoustic guitar. Their music eventually became loud and electric.

First Pull Up—Then Pull Down marked the arrival of the middle-aged black violinist Papa John Creach. Born in Pennsylvania in the early part of the century, Creach was 18 when his family moved to Chicago, where he received some classical training and was briefly affiliated with the Illinois Symphony Orchestra. By the late '30s, he had begun two decades of tooning the cocktail lounge circuit. After settling in San Francisco in the '60s, he became friends with drummer Joey Covington, who recommended that Tuna get in touch with Creach. Creach was with Hot Tuna from 1971 until 1973. He played concurrently with the Airplane and launched a solo career with his 1971 self-titled Grunt/RCA debut. By the time of 1972's Filthy, Creach had formed his own band, Zulu, which he continued after leaving Tuna.

Hot Tuna's first album as a completely autonomous entity was its fourth, The Phosphorescent Rat. The group was a commercial oddity: despite the fact that its mid-'70s releases weren't big sellers, it insisted on playing concerts of at least two hours, which necessitated headliner status. In 1978 the group disbanded.

Kaukonen then resumed the solo recording career he had started with 1974's Quah (produced by Casady), releasing Jorma in 1979. Kaukonen toured solo, while nurturing a fondness for ever-changing hair color and tattoos. He also played briefly in a San Francisco-based new-wave band, Vital Parts. Casady, meanwhile, maternalized with white-blond hair in a new-wave outfit of his own, SVT. In 1984 both musicians reverted. Casady reunited with former Jefferson Airplane singers Marty Balin and Paul Kantner in a group called KBC; while Kaukonen, still flying solo, started playing acoustic blues and folk again. (He later released two more albums, Too Hot to Handle and the live Magic.) Also that year, Relix Records released Splashdown, a Hot Tuna radio performance from 1975.

In 1983 Casady and Kaukonen staged a "temporary reunion," playing some club dates together. The band reformed on a more permanent basis in 1986, adding new member Michael Falzarano, a multi-instrumentalist and singer, in 1990. (Falzarano had previously accompanied Hot Tuna on its 1983 reunion gigs.) That year, a full-fledged tour and new studio album, Pair a Dice Found, followed. In 1992 Hot Tuna released Live at Sweetwater, featuring guests Pete Sears (formerly of Jefferson Starship), Maria Muldaur, and the Grateful Dead's Bob Weir. Sweetwater Two followed the next year. Also in the early '90s, Casady toured with Paul Kantner in Jefferson Starship: The Next Generation, while Kaukonen traveled with Falzarano in a musical aggregation called Kaukarano.

By 1992, keyboardist Sears had joined the band, and Harvey Sorgen had replaced Bob Steeler on drums. This incarnation toured often and released a series of live albums; concurrently, Kaukonen recorded more solo material. In addition, Kaukonen continued to run Fur Peace Ranch Guitar Camp, which he founded with his wife and manager, Vanessa Lillian, in 1989, in the Appalachian Mountains of Ohio. Here he conducted guitar workshops alongside such fellow instructors as band mate Casady (who taught bass), bluesman John Hammond, folk singer Arlo Guthrie, and former Saturday Night Live bandleader G.E. Smith.

Son House

Born Eddie House, Mar. 21, 1902, Riverton, MS; died Oct. 19, 1988, Detroit, MI

1965—Father of the Folk Blues (Columbia) 1973—Son House (Arhoolie) 1979—The Real Delta Blues (Blue Goose) 1991—Delta Blues: The Original Library of Congress Sessions From Field Recordings 1941–1942 (Biograph) 1992—Father of the Delta Blues: The Complete 1965 Recordings (Legacy) 1998—Original Delta Blues.

Blues vocalist and guitarist Son House—often cited as a major influence by Muddy Waters, Robert Johnson, Bob Dylan, and Bonnie Raitt—was one of the Mississippi Delta bluesmen who laid the groundwork for rock & roll in the years prior to World War II. House was one of the instigators of the regional tendency toward biting guitar sounds, dramatic vocals, and full-tilt rhythm sections.

House was born on a plantation, and by age 15 was delivering sermons in churches in Louisiana and Tennessee. In the early '20s he became pastor of a Baptist church in Lyon, Mississippi. In 1927 he taught himself to play guitar, and from then on he was a fixture on the Delta house-party circuit. Around 1928 he worked as part of Dr. McFadden's Medicine Show, but that career was quickly ended by a stint in the state prison at Parchman, Mississippi. Released in 1929, he moved to Lula, Mississippi, where he came under the tutelage of Delta legend Charley Patton. Through Patton he recorded his first sides for the Paramount label in 1930. House did not record again for 10 years, but he was an active performer, in partnership with Willie Brown, in the rural South. In the early '40s musicologist Alan Lomax, tipped off to House's prodigious talent by Muddy Waters, recorded him for the Library of Congress (in sessions later released commercially on Arhoolie, and in 1991 on Biograph). House moved to Rochester, New York, in 1943, and from then until 1964 he played only occasionally and only locally.

Spurred by the folk-blues revival of the early '60s, House reemerged to much acclaim, attracting a large white audience for the first time in his life. He began recording in earnest, touring the campus and coffeehouse circuits, appearing at folk and blues festivals in the U.S., Canada, and Europe, and performing at rock venues. House was the subject of a 1969 film short, and he appeared in several documentaries and on television before retiring from music in 1974. He lived the rest of his years in Detroit.

The Housemartins: See Fatboy Slim

House of Pain: See Everlast

Cissy Houston

Born Emily Houston, 1933, Newark, NJ
1971—Cissy Houston (Janus) 1977—Cissy Houston (Private Stock) 1979—Warning—Danger (Columbia) 1980—Step Aside for a Lady 1992—I'll Take Care of You (with Chuck Jackson) (Shanachie) 1995—Midnight Train to Georgia: The Janus Years (Ichiban) 1996—Face to Face (House of Blues) 1997—He Leadeth Me.

Gospel-soul singer Cissy Houston was a member of the '60s soul group the Sweet Inspirations and has since pursued a sporadic solo career (abetted by occasional session work) as she split her time between music and raising a family. She first sang with a family gospel group, the Drinkard Singers, which sometimes included her nieces Dionne and Dee Dee Warwick. The group was well known on the East Coast gospel circuit and recorded for RCA and Savoy.

After quitting the Drinkards, Houston established herself as a pop backup singer in New York. By 1967, she had become lead vocalist in the Sweet Inspirations. "Sweet Inspiration," a gospel-pop single, cracked the Top 20 in early 1968, and they established further credentials with their backup work for Aretha Franklin, Elvis Presley, Neil Diamond, Dusty Springfield, and others. Houston quit the group in 1970 and began recording solo with Cissy Houston, which included "Be My Baby" (#92, 1971). Houston was the first to record "Midnight Train to Georgia," which later became a hit single for Gladys Knight. She also toured as part of Dionne Warwick's backup trio, which included Dee Dee Warwick and Darlene Love. Houston devoted the next several years primarily to raising her three children, so her second solo disc was not released until 1977.

Houston has continued to be a popular backup vocalist, notably on Chaka Khan's Chaka (1978); Aretha Franklin's Aretha (1980), Love All the Hurt Away (1981), and Jump to It (1982); and Luther Vandross' Never Too Much (1981) and Forever, For Always, For Love (1982). She hosted a weekly radio broadcast from the New Hope Baptist Church in Newark and played occasional New York club dates with her then-less-famous daughter, Whitney. In 1995 she received the Rhythm & Blues Foundation's Pioneer Award. Face to Face (1996) and He Leadeth Me (1997) each won a Grammy Award for Best Traditional Soul Gospel Album.

Thelma Houston

Born Mississippi
1971—Sunshower (ABC/Dunhill) 1975—I've Got the Music in

Me (Sheffield Labs) 1976—Any Way You Like It (Tamla)
1977—The Devil in Me; Thelma and Jerry (with Jerry Butler)
(Motown) 1978—Ready to Roll (Tamla); Two to One (Motown)
1981—Superstar Series, vol. 20; Never Gonna Be Another One
(RCA) 1983—Thelma Houston (MCA) 1986—Qualifying Heat
1990—Throw You Down (Reprise) 1991—The Best of Thelma Houston (Motown).

Thelma Houston's dramatic, quavering, gospel-based delivery made her one of disco's most distinctive voices. As a youngster in Mississippi she sang in churches before her family moved to California. By the late '60s she was working Southern California clubs, thereby attracting the attention of the Fifth Dimension's manager, Marc Gordon, who landed her a contract with ABC/Dunhill. Over the next few years she made pop records with such producers as Jimmy Webb (the critically acclaimed Sunshower) and Joe Porter.

Houston's most successful effort from this period was a version of Laura Nyro's "Save the Country" (#74, 1970). Her breakthrough came via Tamla/Motown and the Gamble-Huff disco hit "Don't Leave Me This Way" (#1, 1977). Other efforts for Motown included an appearance on the soundtrack of the Motown-produced film The Bingo Long Traveling All Stars & Motor Kings (1976). She has also appeared in the films Norman, Is That You?, Death Screams, and The Seventh Dwarf. In 1977 she joined Jerry Butler for Thelma and Jerry; "Saturday Night, Sunday Morning" (#34 pop, #19 R&B, 1979) returned her to the chart as the disco era came to a close. In the '70s and '80s she had modest success on RCA and MCA. "You Used to Hold Me So Tight," peaking at #13 R&B in 1984, was her highest-charting record since 1976. In 1989 she appeared on the soundtrack to the film Lean on Me. She continues to perform, and she occasionally sings on compilations and on albums by other artists.

Whitney Houston

Born Aug. 9, 1963, Newark, NJ
1985—Whitney Houston (Arista) 1987—Whitney 1990—I'm Your Baby Tonight 1992—The Bodyguard soundtrack
1995—Waiting to Exhale soundtrack 1996—The Preacher's Wife 1998—My Love Is Your Love 2000—Whitney: The Greatest Hits.

As the daughter of renowned gospel and soul singer Cissy Houston, and the cousin of Dionne Warwick, Whitney Houston was better connected than most young vocalists when she embarked on a recording career in the mid-'80s. But neither genes nor industry contacts can account for the level of superstardom to which Houston quickly ascended. Blessed with a sublimely creamy, agile voice—and picture-perfect locks to boot—the singer delivered the sort of buoyant dance tunes and smooth, hummable ballads that are equally at home on the pop, R&B, and Adult Contemporary charts. For years critics carped that her supple singing would be better served by more soulful, less commercially ingratiating material, when she finally did emerge with a more urban sound, the media homed in on her increasingly irresponsible personal behavior. But where America's record-buying public was concerned, Houston became a star of the highest order, one whose appeal crossed races, cultures, and generations.

As a child, Houston sang in her family's church choir. At 15 she began performing in her mother's nightclub act. While attending a Catholic high school, the lithe beauty signed with a modeling agency and posed for magazines including Glamour and Vogue. After graduating, she continued to model and sing, backing up Lou Rawls and Chaka Khan, then at 19 was spotted by Arista president Clive Davis—who had previously steered the careers of Warwick and Houston family friend Aretha Franklin—while giving a showcase in Manhattan. Davis signed Houston, and started choosing songs for her debut album, which featured duets with established stars Teddy Pendergrass (her first hit, "Hold Me") and Jermaine Jackson, and cost Arista an extraordinarily hefty sum of $250,000.

Released in 1985, Whitney Houston proved a worthwhile investment, shooting to #1 and generating the smash singles "You Give Good Love" (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1985), "Saving All My Love for You" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1985), "How Will I Know" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1985), and "Greatest Love of All" (#1 pop, #3 R&B, 1986). Whitney solidified Houston's success, reaching #1 and spawning "I Wanna Dance with Somebody (Who Loves Me)" (#1 pop, #2 R&B, 1987), "Didn't We Almost Have It All" (#1 pop, #2 R&B, 1987), "So Emotional" (#1 pop, #5 R&B, 1987), "Where Do Broken Hearts Go" (#1 pop, #2 R&B, 1988), and "Love Will Save the Day" (#9 pop, #5 R&B, 1988). Also in 1988, Houston recorded "One Moment in Time," NBC-TV's theme song for the Summer Olympics (#5 pop). In 1989 she teamed up with Aretha Franklin on the #5 R&B hit "It Isn't It Wasn't, It Ain't Never Gonna Be."

In 1990 I'm Your Baby Tonight's title track topped the pop and R&B charts, as did "All the Man That I Need." There were more hits in 1991—"Miracle" (#9 pop, #2 R&B), "My Name Is Not Susan" (#20 pop, #8 R&B), and "I Belong to You" (#10 R&B)—but, peaking at #3, Baby proved disappointing after its predecessors. Houston bounced back in a big way, though, with the 1992 film The Bodyguard, in which she made her acting debut (as a singing star, opposite Kevin Costner), to mixed reviews and huge box office success. The movie's soundtrack—with six tracks sung by Houston—proved even more successful, hitting #1 and producing a monster single, Houston's cover of Dolly Parton's "I Will Always Love You" (1992), which remained at the top of the chart for an unprecedented 14 weeks, as well as a cover of Chaka Khan's 1978 hit "I'm Every Woman" (#4 pop, #5 R&B, 1993) and "I Have Nothing" (#4 pop, #4 R&B, 1993). In 1992 Houston married singer Bobby Brown [see entry]; their first child, Bobbi Kristina, was born the next year.

Whitney Houston

Houston's next career move was to attempt to duplicate the success of the movie/soundtrack combination of The Bodyguard with 1995's black-female friendship film Waiting to Exhale, in which the singer costarred alongside Angela Bassett. The movie was popular with audiences, and resulted in a few more hit singles for Houston, most notably "Exhale (Shoop Shoop)" (#1 pop and R&B) and a duet with CeCe Winans, "Count on Me" (#8 pop, #7 R&B, 1996). In 1996 Houston starred with Denzel Washington and Courtney B. Vance in The Preacher's Wife, a box-office disappointment whose soundtrack nevertheless gave her another charting ballad, "I Believe in You and Me" (#4 pop, #4 R&B). She tied the small screen in 1997, producing and playing the Fairy Godmother to Brandy's Cinderella in a Wonderful World of Disney remake of Rodgers and Hammerstein's Cinderella. In 1998 Houston released her first studio album since 1990, the uncharacteristic My Love Is Your Love (#13 pop, #7 R&B). Aside from a handful of ballads, including her Oscar-winning duet with fellow diva Manah Carey, "When You Believe" (#15 pop, #33 R&B, 1998–99), from The Prince of Egypt, and the Diane Warren–penned torch song "I Learned From the Best" (#13 R&B, 1999), the album showcased a new, savvy street credibility that had previously come through only in Houston's later interviews and her private life with Brown. Hip-hop personalities and producers such as Wyclef Jean, Lauryn Hill, Rodney Jerkins, Missy Elliott, and Faith Evans collaborated with the vocalist on various tracks. The public still loved the new Whitney, giving her hits with the sultry "Heartbreak Hotel" (#2 pop, #1 R&B), the kick-him-out anthem "It's Not Right But It's Okay" (#4 pop, #7 R&B, 1999), and the reggae-inflected title track (#4 pop, #2 R&B, 1999).

While Houston was back in the spotlight, reports of her already notorious prima donna behavior became more prevalent in 1999 and 2000: She was often hours late for interviews, photo shoots, and rehearsals; canceled concerts and talk-show appearances; and in what would be the start of a string of tabloid stories questioning her state of mind, dodged arrest for marijuana possession at a Hawaii airport in January 2000 (charges were later dismissed). In the months that followed that incident, Houston was a surprising no-show at her mentor Clive Davis' induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, and was allegedly booted out of Academy Awards rehearsals for an all-star tribute to Burt Bacharach. Rumors about her tumultuous marriage to Brown resurfaced, particularly when he was briefly imprisoned in mid-2000 for a parole violation. Yet Houston attempted to have the last laugh with a powerful performance at an Arista Records anniversary party that also served as a tribute to Davis, plus the release of a two-disc greatest-hits collection that equally highlighted her ballads and dance-club remixes and featured four new songs, three of which were duets with Deborah Cox, Enrique Iglesias, and George Michael.

Howlin' Wolf

Born Chester Arthur Burnett, June 10, 1910, West Point, MS; died Jan. 10, 1976, Hines, IL

1958—Howlin' Wolf (Chess) 1964—Moaning in the Moonlight 1965—Poor Boy 1966—Real Folk Blues 1967—More Real Blues; Evil; Live and Cookin' at Alice's Revisited 1971—The London Sessions 1986—His Greatest Sides, vol. 1 (Chess/MCA) 1987—Cadillac Daddy: Memphis Recordings, 1952 (Rouner) 1991—The Chess Box (Chess/MCA) 1997—His Best (Chess 50th Anniversary Collection).

Delta bluesman Howlin' Wolf was one of the most influential musicians of the post–World War II era, and his electric Chicago blues—featuring his deep, lupine voice—shaped rock & roll.

Chester Arthur Burnett, named after the 21st president, was raised on a cotton plantation in Ruleville, Mississippi, and learned guitar as a child. In the Mississippi Delta area he began studying with the rural masters, notably guitarist and vocalist Charley Patton, his biggest single influence, and his half sister's husband, harmonica player Sonny Boy Williamson (Rice Miller).

As Howlin' Wolf, he played his first gig in the South on January 15, 1928, and throughout the '30s frequently performed on street corners. He formed his first band, the House Rockers, in Memphis in 1948 with pianist Bill Johnson, lead guitarist Willie Johnson, and drummer Willie Steele. Later personnel included at various times harmonica players James Cotton and Little Junior Parker, pianist Ike Turner, and guitarist Willie Johnson.

In 1951 Turner, a freelance talent scout, had Wolf record for Sam Phillips' Memphis-based Sun Records. Those masters were then leased to Chess Records, and in 1957 one of them, "Moanin' at Midnight," became his first R&B hit. In 1952 Wolf moved to Chicago, where his music was well received. Some consider the recordings he made for Chess during the '50s and '60s his best. Among them were the 1957 R&B hit "Sitting on Top of the World," "Spoonful," "Smokestack Lightnin'," "Little Red Rooster," "I Ain't Superstitious," "Back Door Man," "Killing Floor," and "How Many More Years." His songs, many of them written by Willie Dixon, have been covered by American and English rock acts like the Rolling Stones (with whom Wolf appeared on the Shindig! TV show in 1965), Grateful Dead, the Yardbirds, Jeff Beck, the Doors, Cream, the Electric Flag, Little Feat, and Led Zeppelin.

Wolf, who stood an imposing 6-foot-3 and weighed nearly 300 pounds, frequently appeared at blues and rock festivals in the late '60s and early '70s. His 1971 album, The London Sessions, featured backup support from Eric Clapton, Ringo Starr, Steve Winwood, and Charlie Watts and Bill Wyman of the Rolling Stones. That same year Wolf received an honorary doctorate from Columbia College in Chicago. He lived the last years of his life in Chicago's crumbling South Side ghetto. He suffered several heart attacks in the early '70s and received kidney dialysis treatment, but he continued to play occasionally; one of his last concerts was in November 1975 at the Chicago Amphitheatre with B.B. King, Bobby "Blue" Bland, and Little Milton. He entered a hospital in mid-December and died at age 65 of complications from kidney disease. Howlin' Wolf was posthumously inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1991.

The Hues Corporation

Formed 1969, Los Angeles, CA

H. Ann Kelly (b. Hubert Ann Kelly, Apr. 24, 1947, Fairchild, AL), voc.; St. Clair Lee (b. Bernard St. Clair Lee Calhoun Henderson, Apr. 24, 1944, San Francisco, CA), voc.; Fleming Williams (b. Flint, MI), voc.

1974—Freedom for the Stallion (RCA) (– Williams; + Tommy Brown [b. Birmingham, AL], voc.) Rockin' Soul 1975—Love Corporation (– Brown; + Karl Russell [b. Apr. 10, 1947, Columbia, OH], voc.) 1977—I Caught Your Act (Warner/Curb); Best of the Hues Corporation (RCA) 1978—Your Place or Mine (Warner Bros.).

Disco-soul group the Hues Corporation had its one big hit with "Rock the Boat" (#1, 1974), which sold over 2 million copies. A vocal trio featuring two men and a woman, the Hues took its name from Howard Hughes (changing the spelling to avoid legal problems).

After working the lounge circuit, the group signed with RCA in 1973 and had a minor pop hit with the title track of its debut album, Freedom for the Stallion. The Corporation's big success came in mid-1974 with "Rock the Boat." Followups like "Rockin' Soul" (#18, 1974) and "Love Corporation" (#62, 1975), with Tommy Brown in place of Fleming Williams, were modest in comparison. Brown left in 1975; his spot was taken by Karl Russell.

The Hues Corporation made frequent TV appearances in the mid-'70s and also appeared in the film Blacula. Longtime vocal arranger and producer Wally Holmes was still on board after the group switched to Warner/Curb Records in 1977 for I Caught Your Act; the LP's title track (#92, 1977) was the act's last chart appearance. Russell left the group in 1980 and became an ordained minister in Anniston, Alabama, where he runs Soni Boo Records, a gospel label.

The Human League

Formed 1977, Sheffield, Eng.

Phil Oakey (b. Oct. 2, 1955, Sheffield), voc., synth.; Martyn Ware

(b. May 19, 1956, Sheffield), synth.; Ian Craig Marsh (b. Nov. 11, 1956, Sheffield), synth.; Philip Adrian Wright (b. June 30, 1956, Sheffield), stage visuals.

1979—Reproduction (Virgin) 1980—Travelogue (– Ware; – Marsh; + Ian Burden [b. Dec. 24, 1957, Sheffield], bass, synth.; + Suzanne Sulley [b. Mar. 22, 1963, Sheffield], voc.; + Joanne Catherall [b. Sep. 18, 1962, Sheffield], voc.) 1981—(+ Jo Callis [b. May 2, 1955, Glasgow, Scot.], synth.) 1982—Dare (A&M); Love and Dancing 1983—Fascination! 1984—Hysteria 1986—Crash 1988—Greatest Hits 1990—Romantic? 1995—Octopus (EastWest) 1998—The Very Best of the Human League (Ark 21).

Philip Oakey with Giorgio Moroder: 1985—Philip Oakey and Giorgio Moroder (A&M).

Armed with synthesizers and electronic percussion, the Human League became the undisputed leader of the British electropop movement in 1982. The band topped the American chart with the million-selling "Don't You Want Me," taken from Dare, its third British album and first U.S. release. Led by Philip Oakey, the League had released its debut album, Reproduction, three years earlier. Travelogue followed the next year. Both critically acclaimed works featured synthesizer textures reminiscent of Kraftwerk and dark lyrics that Oakey delivered in an ominous voice reminiscent of mid-'70s David Bowie.

Oakey felt the band's heavy reliance on prerecorded tapes in live shows was dishonest, which led to the departures of Martin Ware and Ian Marsh in 1980. The two synthesists formed the popular Heaven 17 later that year. Meanwhile, Oakey and remaining Human Leaguer Philip Wright recruited bassist/synthesizer player Ian Burden, two female backing singers, and synthesist Jo Callis, former guitar-playing leader of Scotland's punk-kitsch rockers the Rezillos. Allying itself with producer Martin Rushent (the Stranglers, Buzzcocks), the Human League recorded Dare, which quickly brought it fame in England. Coinciding with its subsequent American success, the group toured the States, where audiences got a good taste of U.K. electropop, complete with robotic drum machines.

That the group's songwriters (mainly Oakey, Callis, and Burden) were less than prolific quickly became apparent. Love and Dancing reprised instrumental tracks from Dare while Fascination! contained just five songs. Two of them became hits in 1983: the Motown-ish "Mirror Man" (#30) and "(Keep Feeling) Fascination" (#8), which mimicked the vocal arrangement of Sly and the Family Stone. Hysteria introduced a gutsier sound, with Callis playing guitar and Burden thumping an actual bass. "The Lebanon," a powerful guitar-driven track about the strife in that country, was a minor hit at #64.

The following year Oakey recorded an album with disco producer Giorgio Moroder; the Human League's decision to hire modern-funk producers Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis to helm Crash wasn't as surprising as it might seem. The plaintive "Human," a Jam-Lewis composition, hit #1. Curiously, rather than build on its momentum, the Human League all but disappeared until 1990. That year's Heart Like a Wheel contained a Top 40 hit in the title track. Oakey and company vanished once again until the 1995 release of the commercially unsuccessful Octopus. In the late '90s the band occasionally surfaced to play new-wave revival bills.

Humble Pie

Formed 1969, Essex, Eng.

Steve Marriott (b. Jan. 30, 1947, London, Eng.; d. Apr. 20, 1991, Arkesden, Eng.), gtr., voc., kybds., harmonica; Peter Frampton (b. Apr. 22, 1950, Beckenham, Eng.), gtr., voc.; Greg Ridley (b. Oct. 23, 1947, Carlisle, Eng.), bass, voc.; Jerry Shirley (b. Feb. 4, 1952, Eng.), drums.

1969—As Safe as Yesterday Is (Immediate, U.K.); Town and Country 1970—Humble Pie (A&M) 1971—Rock On; Performance—Rockin' the Fillmore (- Frampton; + David "Clem" Clempson [b. Sep. 5, 1949, Eng.], gtr., voc.) 1972—Smokin'; Lost and Found 1973—Eat It 1974—Thunder Box 1975—Street Rats (group disbands) 1980—(group re-forms: Marriott; Shirley; + Bobby Tench, voc., gtr.; + Anthony Jones, bass) On to Victory (Atco) 1981—Go for the Throat 1982—The Best (A&M).

Steve Marriott solo: 1976—Marriott (A&M) 1981—Steve Marriott.

Early-'70s hard-rock band Humble Pie was formed and fronted by the raspy-voiced Steve Marriott, who had left the Small Faces in 1968. He hooked up with ex-Herd guitarist Peter Frampton (whose boyish good looks had already elicited teenybopper acclaim), ex-Spooky Tooth bassist Greg Ridley, and drummer Jerry Shirley. In 1969 the group retired to Marriott's Essex cottage for months of rehearsal. Its first single, "Natural Born Boogie," hit the Top 5 on the U.K. chart. Neither the quartet's debut album, As Safe as Yesterday Is, nor the acoustic-oriented Town and Country made much of an impact in the U.S. until repackaged as Lost and Found.

Humble Pie toured the U.S. for the first time in late 1969 but returned home to find that the Immediate label had gone under. It found a new manager (Dee Anthony) and label (A&M), and its next LP, Humble Pie, featured Frampton's melodic acoustic rock. But neither it nor the gutsier Rock On provided an American breakthrough. Anthony sent the group to America on a frenzied tour that produced Performance—Rockin' the Fillmore, recorded live at New York's Fillmore East in May 1971. Loud and raucous, it went gold. Frampton [see entry] left the group in late 1971.

The loss of the guitarist, combined with the outstanding sales of the rock-and-blues-oriented Fillmore album, prompted the group to concentrate on boogie material. Smokin', its first album with new guitarist Dave "Clem" Clempson, was the group's most successful, reaching #6. But shortly thereafter Humble Pie's fortunes fell, and in 1975 the members split up.

Shirley formed an L.A. group, Natural Gas, with ex-Badfinger member Joey Molland. Clempson (previously with Colosseum) joined Greenslade before he and Pie bassist Ridley teamed up with former Jeff Beck drummer Cozy Powell to form the short-lived Strange Brew. Clempson has since played with Jack Bruce, among others.

Marriott, meanwhile, led Steve Marriott's All-Stars before participating in a Small Faces reunion in 1976. By 1980, Marriott and Shirley had re-formed Humble Pie with ex-Jeff Beck vocalist Bobby Tench. Their two albums—1980's On to Victory and 1981's Go for the Throat—were met with limited success. In mid-1981 the group's tour of the U.S. was interrupted when Marriott smashed his hand in a hotel door. In June, having recovered, he had to halt the tour again when he was hospitalized in Dallas with an ulcer. Once again Humble Pie disbanded, with Shirley going on to drum for the hard-rock group Fastway and for a version of Badfinger. Shirley, who had moved to Cleveland and worked as a radio personality, put together a new Humble Pie, which toured in the '90s. In 1991, when Marriott died in a fire in his 16th-century cottage at age 44, he and Peter Frampton were recording together. They completed three songs, which appeared on Frampton's later solo albums.

Alberta Hunter

Born Apr. 1, 1895, Memphis, TN; died Oct. 17, 1984, New York, NY

1961—Songs We Taught Your Mother (Prestige/Bluesville)
1978—Remember My Name 1980—Amtrak Blues (Columbia).

Alberta Hunter sang the blues for over 70 years, and was one of the first black American musicians to tour the world. A spellbinding cabaret singer, Hunter could be both sophisticated and sassy, winking slyly through double entendres or reducing her audience to tears. Among her best-known recordings are "Down Hearted Blues," "A Good Man Is Hard to Find," "My Castle's Rocking," and "You Can't Tell the Difference After Dark." She began singing professionally as a teenager in Chicago. In 1921 Hunter performed and recorded with the Fletcher Henderson orchestra and made her first solo recordings. Upon moving to New York that year, she began recording regularly; she recorded in 1924 with Louis Armstrong's Red Onion Jazz Babies for the Gennett label.

Hunter first performed on Broadway when she replaced Bessie Smith in the musical comedy How Come in 1923. By 1925, she was leading her own trio in club work and took it on subsequent national tours. In 1927, billed as "America's Foremost Brown Blues Singer," she played in England, France, and Monaco. She visited Scotland, Egypt, Greece, and the Scandinavian countries in the '30s. Back home, Hunter appeared with Paul Robeson in a 1928 Broadway production of Showboat and, beginning in the early '30s, expanded her audience through a featured spot on WABC radio's Negro Achievement Hour. By the end of the decade she was regularly featured on several East Coast stations. In the mid-'30s she had one of her most active club periods, playing Harlem's Cotton Club and appearing at Connie's Inn with Louis Armstrong.

Hunter's recording career revitalized alongside the Depression economy and in the mid-'30s she recorded with the Jack Jackson Orchestra on HMV. She recorded in 1939 with the Charlie Shavers Quartet for Decca and in 1940 with the Eddie Heywood orchestra for Bluebird. She spent most of World War II with the USO touring China, Burma, India, Egypt, and Africa, including a 1945 command performance for General Dwight D. Eisenhower at Frankfurt, Germany. She was given a meritorious service award for her contributions to the war effort.

Hunter returned to New York club work after the war and by the early '50s was recording again. In 1957 she retired from music to work as a nurse, which she did for two decades, with only infrequent returns to performing some sessions in 1961 and 1962 for the Prestige/Bluesville, Riverside, and Folkways labels.

In 1977, at age 82, Hunter reemerged to establish residency at the Cookery in New York's Greenwich Village. The attendant publicity prompted a Columbia contract. Her wit and style are amply demonstrated in a 1985 video, Jazz at the Smithsonian. She died from natural causes.

Ian Hunter

Born June 3, 1946, Shrewsbury, Eng.

1975—Ian Hunter (Columbia) 1976—All-American Alien Boy 1977—Overnight Angels (Columbia, U.K.) 1979—You're Never Alone With a Schizophrenic (Chrysalis); Shades of Ian Hunter (Columbia) 1980—Welcome to the Club (Chrysalis) 1981—Short Back n' Sides 1983—All of the Good Ones Are Taken (Columbia) 1989—Y U I Orta (with Mick Ronson) (Mercury) 1995—Ian Hunter's Dirty Laundry (Cleveland International) 1997—The Artful Dodger (Citadel, U.K.) 2000—Once Bitten Twice Shy (Columbia/Legacy); Missing in Action.

The former leader of Mott the Hoople (see entry), singer/songwriter Ian Hunter pursued a moderately successful solo career in the late '70s, but within a few years he had faded from view.

Hunter's family settled in Blackpool but moved frequently. His father, who worked for MI5, the British CIA, was regularly transferred. By the time Hunter was 11 he had attended 17 different schools. His family finally settled in Shrewsbury where he played with a band called Silence that recorded an unsuccessful album. In 1962 he played harmonica in another amateur band but continued to work day jobs until 1968, when he started playing bass in Germany with Freddie "Fingers" Lee. A few months later he helped launch Mott the Hoople in England.

With its debut album in 1969, Mott the Hoople established itself as Dylan-influenced hard-rockers with "Rock and Roll Queen" and, under the tutelage of David Bowie, became glitter-rock favorites with 1972's All the Young Dudes and its title single. During his last days with the group, Hunter wrote the autobiographical Reflections of a Rock Star, published in 1977. In late 1974 he left after being hospitalized in New Jersey for physical exhaustion.

Hunter moved to New York and made his self-titled solo debut, which featured ex-Bowie guitarist Mick Ronson, who had played in a late version of Mott. The album produced a British Top 20 hit, "Once Bitten Twice Shy." Hunter toured America and England in late 1975. His next two albums were All-American Alien Boy and Overnight Angels (which Hunter later called "disgusting"; it wasn't issued in the U.S. until Columbia included it on the retrospective Shades of Ian Hunter).

You're Never Alone With a Schizophrenic (#35, 1979), Hunter's successful Chrysalis debut, once again featured Mick Ronson as producer, arranger, and guitarist. By 1980, Hunter had formed his own band, including Ronson, guitarist Tom Moringello, and keyboardists George Meyer and Tom Mandell. He toured that year to promote his live Welcome to the Club. Mick Jones of the Clash produced Short Back n' Sides in 1981.

Hunter has also produced records, including Ellen Foley's debut album and Generation X's second LP, Valley of the Dolls. In addition he wrote Barry Manilow's hit "Ships." After All the Good Ones Are Taken, he wasn't heard from again until 1989's Y U I Orta, another collaboration with Ronson. It came out months after the American band Great White scored a #5 hit with "Once Bitten Twice Shy." Hunter put in an appearance at the April 1992 AIDS benefit concert honoring the late Freddie Mercury. Guitar great Ronson died of cancer in 1993.

In 1995 Hunter resurfaced in Ian Hunter's Dirty Laundry, a one-off band featuring Glen Matlock (ex-Sex Pistols), Honest John Plain and Darrell Barth (ex-Crybabys), Vom (ex-Doctor and the Medics), and Casino Steel (ex-Hollywood Brats). He was on his own again for 1997's The Artful Dodger, which remains unreleased in America. Once Bitten is a double-CD of Mott-era material and solo hits. It includes a version of "All the Young Dudes" on which Hunter is backed by Def Leppard.

Ivory Joe Hunter

Born Oct. 10, 1914, Kirbyville, TX; died Nov. 8, 1974, Memphis, TN

1971—The Return of Ivory Joe Hunter (Epic); 16 of His Greatest Hits (King); Ivory Joe Hunter (Everest) 1989—I'm Coming Down With the Blues (Home Cooking) 1994—Since I Met You Baby; The Best of Ivory Joe Hunter (Razor & Tie).

A pop-blues singer, pianist, and songwriter, Ivory Joe Hunter was a popular R&B figure in the '40s and '50s, and one of the first R&B singers to interpret country songs. He started playing the piano in grade school and eventually developed a style influenced by Fats Waller. He worked as program director at KFDM radio in Beaumont, Texas, and made his first recordings in 1933 for the Library of Congress via musicologist Alan Lomax.

Hunter recorded briefly with Johnny Moore's Three Blazers for the Exclusive label. He soon started his own Ivory Records and scored his first regional hit with "Blues at Sunnse." He then left Texas in 1942 for California, where he helped form and recorded for Pacific Records ("Pretty Mama Blues"). With King Records from 1947 to 1950, his R&B hits included "Landlord Blues" and "Guess Who" in 1949, and "I Quit My Pretty Mama" in 1950. Signed to MGM, Hunter released "I Almost Lost My Mind," which hit #1 on the R&B chart and had sold a million copies by the time Pat Boone covered it in 1956. Hunter spent most of the '50s on the R&B chart, first with such MGM releases as "I Need You So" (#2, 1950), and then, after signing with Atlantic in 1954, alongside Ray Charles and Chuck Willis.

Hunter finally reached white listeners with "Since I Met You Baby" (#12, 1956), which got him exposure on the Ed Sullivan Show after "Empty Arms" (1957), "Yes I Want You" (1958), and "City Lights" (1959). Hunter's popularity declined, although he continued to record. In the late '60s he sang country as a revue member of the Grand Ole Opry in Nashville, and he tried a comeback in 1971 when he released The Return of Ivory Joe Hunter. In late 1974 Hunter died of cancer in a Memphis hospital. His songs have been covered by Nat "King" Cole, the Five Keys, and Elvis Presley, who cut "My Wish Came True" and "Ain't That Loving You, Baby."

Mississippi John Hurt

Born July 3, 1893, Teoc, MS; died Nov. 2, 1966, Grenada, MS
1966—Mississippi John Hurt Today (Vanguard) 1967—The Immortal Mississippi John Hurt 1970—The Best of Mississippi John Hurt 1972—Last Sessions.

Blues singer Mississippi John Hurt was renowned for his fingerpicking and restrained phrasing. He was one of sharecroppers Isom and Mary Hurt's three children, and he lived as a sharecropper most of his life. A frequent singer in local churches, Hurt dropped out of school at age 10 in 1903, by which time he'd taught himself to play a three-finger-picking style of guitar.

Most of Mississippi John Hurt's performances were for audiences in the Avalon, Mississippi, area. Heavily influenced by Jimmie Rodgers, as were many bluesmen of the era, he slowly developed an original country/Delta blues style. In 1928 he was taken to New York and Memphis to cut a few sides for Okeh Records, among them a rendition of the blues standard "Stack-O-Lee." But during the Great Depression, Hurt faded back into rural anonymity until he was rediscovered, at age 70, during the early-'60s folk-blues revival by blues enthusiast Tom Hoskins.

Hurt played at the Newport Folk Festival in 1963, 1964, and 1965; at Carnegie Hall; at rock clubs like the Café Au Go Go in New York, on TV's Tonight Show in 1963; and in the 1965 Canadian Broadcasting documentary This Hour Has Seven Days. He also reactivated his recording career, cutting several albums, including Today, The Immortal Mississippi John Hurt, and Last Sessions, which was recorded in a Manhattan hotel in 1966, shortly before his death from a heart attack. Hurt helped popularize such traditional material as "Candy Man Blues" and "C. C. Rider" as well as his own "Coffee Blues" and "Chicken." He was survived by his widow, Jesse, and their 14 children. In 2001 Avalon Blues: A Tribute to the Music of Mississippi John Hurt was released. Produced by Peter Case, it featured new recordings of Hurt songs by Lucinda Williams, Steve Earle, John Hiatt, and others.

Hüsker Dü/Grant Hart/Bob Mould/Sugar

Formed 1979, St. Paul, MN

Bob Mould (b. Oct. 16, 1960, Malone, NY), gtr., voc.; Greg Norton (b. Mar. 13, 1959, Rock Island, IL), bass; Grant Hart (b. Grantzberg Vernon Hart, Mar. 18, 1961, St. Paul), drums, voc.

1981—Land Speed Record (New Alliance) 1982—Everything Falls Apart (Reflex) 1983—Metal Circus EP (SST) 1984—Zen Arcade 1985—New Day Rising 1985—Flip Your Wig 1986—Candy Apple Grey (Warner Bros.) 1987—Warehouse: Songs and Stories 1993—Everything Falls Apart and More (Rhino) 1994—The Living End (Warner Bros.).

Grant Hart solo: 1988—2541 EP (SST) 1989—Intolerance 1996—Ecce Homo (World Service) 1999—Good News for Modern Man (Pachyderm).

Grant Hart with Nova Mob: 1991—Admiral of the Sea EP (Rough Trade); The Last Days of Pompeii 1994—Nova Mob (Restless).
Bob Mould solo: 1989—Workbook (Virgin) 1990—Black Sheets of Rain 1994—Poison Years 1995—Egooveride EP (Rykodisc) 1996—Hubcap 1998—The Last Dog & Pony Show.

Bob Mould with Sugar: 1992—Copper Blue (Ryko) 1993—Beaster EP 1994—File Under: Easy Listening 1995—Besides.

Hüsker Dü laid the groundwork for the '90s alternative-rock boom when it became one of the first DIY-era American indie bands to land a major-label deal. The Minnesota-based power trio's influential sound expanded the parameters of punk by incorporating hummable pop melodies and introspective lyrics into a thick hardcore foundation.

Bob Mould was born to mom-and-pop grocery store owners in an upstate New York farming town near Lake Placid. In 1978 he moved to St. Paul, Minnesota, to attend Macalester College, where he took urban studies and worked part-time at a record store. It was there that he met Grant Hart, a local drummer who shared his love of punk rock, and Greg Norton, who played bass and listened to jazz. The three began rehearsing together in Norton's basement, naming themselves Hüsker Dü (Swedish for "do you remember?") after a '50s board-game.

In the early '80s the trio signed to SST and released Land Speed Record, a milestone of hardcore whose 17 songs clocked in at just over a meteoric 26 minutes. For the next five years, Hüsker Dü—along with Black Flag, Minutemen, R.E.M., and Twin City peers the Replacements—toured almost constantly and released some of the most important albums of the postpunk era. Hüsker Dü hit its most important peak with 1984's Zen Arcade, one of punk's few double-disc classics, and one of even fewer punk concept albums (it chronicled a boy's passing from adolescence into adulthood).

Hüsker Dü: Greg Norton, Grant Hart, Bob Mould

By 1986, the band was plagued by internal problems, including drug use and a power struggle between songwriters Mould and Hart. On its major-label debut, Candy Apple Grey, Mould's lyrics had become more inward-looking than ever, while the rage in Hart's angst-laden rockers had reached the boiling point. Over Warner Bros.' objections, the band followed up with a second double-disc LP, 1987's Warehouse: Songs and Stories, with the songwriting split down the middle. On the eve of the group's 1987 tour, Hüsker Dü's young manager, David Savoy, committed suicide. A recording from that tour was released as 1994's The Living End.

On January 25, 1988, Bob Mould, having put down drugs and drink, quit the band to pursue a solo career as a post-punk confessional singer/songwriter. Mould's first Virgin album, Workbook (#127, 1989), took up from where his more reflective material on Candy Apple Grey and Warehouse left off. After 1990's Black Sheets of Rain (#123), Mould was dropped by Virgin and cofounded a record company, SOL (Singles Only Label). By 1992, he formed a new band, Sugar, and signed to Rykodisc in the U.S. and Creation in the U.K., settling somewhere between the melodic roar of Hüsker Dü and his solo material. Sugar released Copper Blue that year and enjoyed the modern-rock hits "Helpless" (#5, 1992) and "If I Can't Change Your Mind." After 1995's Besides (#122), a collection of ranties and live cuts, Mould disbanded Sugar and resumed his solo career with the tortured Hubcap (#101, 1996), playing all the instruments himself and inscribing it with the words, "This one is for me." His 1998 album The Last Dog & Pony Show was named for what he promised would be his final high-decibel rock tour, to be followed thereafter by live acoustic performances.

Bassist Greg Norton left the music business altogether to become a chef when Hüsker Dü dissolved. But Grant Hart immediately returned to SST for the 2541 EP and a 1989 solo album, Intolerance, before forming Nova Mob. The new band released two albums, beginning in 1991 with a rock opera called The Last Days of Pompeii. Hart broke up Nova Mob three years later and continued his solo career with the live acoustic Ecce Homo in 1996 and Good News for Modern Man in 1999. He also played keyboards on a track on Patti Smith's Gung Ho in 2000.

a|b|c|d|e|f|g|h| |j|k|l|m|n|o|p|q|r|s|t|u|v|w|x|y|z

Janis Ian

Born Janis Eddy Fink, May 7, 1951, New York, NY
1967—Janis Ian (Verve Forecast); For All the Seasons of Your Mind 1968—The Secret Life of J. Eddy Fink 1969—Who Really Cares 1971—Present Company (Capitol) 1974—Stars (Columbia) 1975—Between the Lines; Aftertones 1977—Miracle Row 1978—Janis Ian 1979—Night Rains 1980—Best of Janis Ian 1981—Restless Eyes 1993—Breaking Silence (Morgan Creek) 1995—Revenge (Beacon) 1997—Hunger (Windham Hill) 2000—God & the FBI.

Singer/songwriter Janis Ian began her career at 15 with a 1967 hit about interracial romance entitled "Society's Child." After an eight-year slump, she returned to pop radio in 1975 with a platinum LP and Grammy Award-winning single, "At Seventeen."

The daughter of a music teacher, Ian studied piano as a child and began writing songs when she enrolled in Manhattan's High School of Music and Art. There she changed her surname from Fink to Ian (her brother's middle name). The folk journal Broadside published her "Hair of Spun Gold" and invited her to perform at a hootenanny at the Village Gate. Ian soon had a contract with Elektra but was dropped when she insisted upon recording her own material; she then signed with Verve.

In 1966 she recorded a song she had written while waiting to see her guidance counselor, "Society's Child (Baby I've Been Thinking)." It was banned by several radio stations and ignored by the rest until conductor Leonard Bernstein featured Ian on his CBS-TV special Inside Pop: The Rock Revolution, where she performed the song accompanied by the New York Philharmonic. "Society's Child" became a #14 hit in 1967.

Ian dropped out of high school in her junior year and released her first album. She recorded two more albums for Verve but never produced a followup hit single. She gave away most of her earnings to friends and charities; management and taxes took the rest. Ian retired before she was 20. She moved to Philadelphia and married photojournalist Peter Cunningham. Her marriage lasted only a short while, and Ian returned to recording with the unsuccessful Present Company. She moved to California, where she lived alone and continued writing. Her next album, Stars, included "Jesse," a #30 hit for Roberta Flack, later covered by Joan Baez on Diamonds and Rust.

Ian's most commercially successful year was 1975, when she sold over $5 million worth of records. She released the platinum Between the Lines, which included "Watercolors" and "At Seventeen" (#3), the latter of which got her a Grammy for Best Female Vocal. Followups like Aftertones, Miracle Row, Janis Ian, and Night Rains were less popular. Following a 12-year hiatus from recording, Ian—having revealed her homosexuality—returned to the scene with Breaking Silence, whose subdued, folkish songs forthrightly tackled such subjects as battered wives ("His Hands"), eroticism ("Ride Me Like a Wave"), concentration camps ("Tattoo"), and '60s nostalgia ("Guess You Had to Be There"). The lyrics on 1995's Revenge dealt with prostitution and homelessness. Following 1997's Hunger, Ian successfully underwent surgery to remove a benign liver tumor. Willie Nelson and Chet Atkins assisted her on "Memphis," a track from 2000's God & the FBI.

Ian and Sylvia

Formed 1959, Toronto, Can.

Ian Tyson (b. Sep. 25, 1933, Victoria, British Columbia, Can.); Sylvia Tyson (b. Sylvia Fricker, Sep. 19, 1940, Chatham, Ontario, Can.).

1962—Ian and Sylvia (Vanguard) 1963—Four Strong Winds
1964—Northern Journey 1965—Early Morning Rain
1966—Play One More 1967—So Much for Dreaming; Ian and Sylvia (Columbia) 1968—Nashville (Vanguard); Full Circle; The Best of Ian and Sylvia 1970—Greatest Hits, vol. 1 1971—Greatest Hits, vol. 2 1972—You Were on My Mind (with the Great Speckled Bird) (Columbia) 1973—The Best of Ian and Sylvia 1998—Vanguard Session (Vanguard).
Ian Tyson solo: 1975—Ol' Eon (A&M) 1979—One Jump Ahead of the Devil (Boot) 1993—And Stood There Amazed; I Outgrew the Wagon (Vanguard) 1994—Eighteen Inches of Rain; Cowboyography; Old Corrals & Sagebrush & Other Cowboy Culture Classics 1996—All the Good 'Uns 1999—Lost Herd.
Sylvia Tyson solo: 1975—Woman's World (Capitol) 2000—River Road and Other Stories (Outside, Can.).

Canadian folksingers/songwriters Ian and Sylvia were active in the folk revival of the early '60s as performers and composers. By the late '60s, they had turned to country music.

Ian Tyson was raised on a Canadian farm. He traveled much of western Canada working various jobs, including performing in the rodeo, until he was seriously injured at age 19. Shortly after turning 21 and enrolling in the Vancouver School of Art, he started singing in clubs, sometimes as part of a group called the Sensational Stripes. Tyson graduated from art school and moved to Toronto, where he worked days as a commercial artist and, with partner Don Francks, played blues and traditional folk material. He was well known in Canadian music circles by the time he met Sylvia Fricker in 1959.

Fricker's mother was a music teacher, organist, and choir director at their church. Sylvia became involved in the Toronto folk scene after graduating from high school. Within a year of meeting, she and Tyson were performing regularly as a duo.

They moved to New York in the early '60s and began working on the club-and-campus folk circuit. Their first album, recorded in a Masonic temple in Brooklyn, featured traditional songs; their second contained Ian Tyson's best-known song, "Four Strong Winds." Sylvia's "You Were on My Mind" (a 1965 hit for We Five) was on the duo's fourth album, Northern Journey, which was released around the time they married in 1964.

As the '60s ended the Tysons moved toward country music and briefly toured and recorded with a C&W band called Great Speckled Bird. Tyson began a solo career with a country single, "Love Can Bless the Soul of Anyone," and later became the host of a music-variety show on Canadian television. He produced Sylvia's solo debut, Woman's World, and she began hosting a folk-music show, Touch the Earth, on CBC radio. The couple divorced and went their separate ways in 1975.

After settling down on a ranch in the foothills of southern Alberta's Rockies, Ian Tyson began recording albums of cowboy songs in the early '80s, among them Cowboyography, which went platinum in Canada (the dates above indicate U.S. releases). Sylvia Tyson continued her solo career and eventually joined the country-folk group Quartette. In 1995 she and Tom Russell coauthored a collection of anecdotes entitled And Then I Wrote: The Songwriter Speaks. In 2000 she was performing River Road and Other Stories, a one-woman show of monologues and songs, complete with a companion album.

Ice Cube

Born O'Shea Jackson, June 15, 1969, Los Angeles, CA
1990—AmeriKKKa's Most Wanted (Priority); Kill at Will EP
1991—Death Certificate 1992—The Predator 1993—Check Yo Self EP 1994—Lethal Injection; Bootlegs & B-Sides; You Know How We Do It EP; Bop Gun (One Nation) EP 1997—Featuring . . . Ice Cube 1998—War & Peace Vol. 1 (The War Disc) 2000—War & Peace Vol. 2 (The Peace Disc).
Westside Connection (with Mack 10 and WC): 1996—Bow Down (Priority).

When Ice Cube left the notorious L.A. rap group N.W.A. in 1990, he continued writing hard-hitting gangsta rap songs that pushed buttons in the media as well as among parents, politicians, and police. He also embarked on a successful acting career that by the end of the decade had almost eclipsed his musical output.

The son of a strict two-parent home (his mom was a clerk, and dad a groundskeeper at UCLA), South Central L.A. native O'Shea Jackson found success with N.W.A. [see entry] after graduating from college in 1988 with a degree in drafting. In 1990 he had a falling out with N.W.A.'s management and went solo. For his first album, Cube and his group, Da Lench Mob, enlisted Public Enemy's celebrated Bomb Squad production team, whose dense musical collages include artful uses of sampling and turntable manipulation. Released in spring 1990, AmeriKKKa's Most Wanted (#19 pop, #6 R&B, 1990) went gold in 10 days and platinum in three months. A sonically forceful, lyrically vicious album, it juxtaposes a barrage of disparaging terms like "bitch" and "ho" with astute, politically charged observations of ghetto life: gang violence, black-on-black killing, abusive police poverty, drugs, money, and sex roles. Parents and officials immediately criticized Cube for being a bad role model. Cube countered that that was not his responsibility. Even among rock critics who defended his gangsta rap for its realism, he was censured for the brutal track "You Can't Fade Me," in which the song's protagonist fantasizes aborting his girlfriend's pregnancy with a coat hanger

AmenKkKa's Most Wanted also introduced Cube's female collaborator, Yo Yo, who on the point-counterpoint track "It's a Man's World" offered a black woman's perspective to counter Cube's male-centric observations. (Ice Cube landed Yo Yo a reported six-figure deal with Atlantic and coproduced her 1991 #5 R&B debut album, Make Way for the Motherlode.) For all its unanswered questions and contradictions, AmenKkKa's Most Wanted is considered a rap classic.

With his powerful, rhythmic baritone delivery, Ice Cube has maintained a consistently high standing among critics and fans. Still, after the Kill at Will EP (#34 pop, #5 R&B, 1991), he returned with two of his most controversial songs to date on Death Certificate (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1991): "Black Korea," wherein he denigrates Korean market owners, and "No Vaseline," in which he antagonistically refers to N.W.A manager Jerry Heller as a "Jew." The songs led to the first condemnation of an artist in the editor's note of the music trade publication Billboard. The album's single, "Steady Mobbin'," reached #67 pop and #30 R&B that year. In December 1992 Ice Cube made history again when The Predator debuted at #1 on both the pop album and R&B charts (it sold 1.5 million within a month of release); the album included "It Was a Good Day" (#15 pop, #7 R&B, 1993), a clever ghetto fantasy where everything goes surprisingly night for 24 hours.

By late 1993, Lethal Injection reached #5 pop and #1 R&B. Cube didn't release another solo album of new material for several years, though he formed Westside Connection with rappers Mack 10 and WC for a blast of "old-school gangsta hip-hop" entitled Bow Down (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1996). He also wrote and produced Da Lench Mob's Guerrillas in the Mist. Cube reunited with ex-band mate Dr. Dre for the single "Natural Bom Killaz" (#16 R&B, 1994), but a followup album collaboration to be called Helter Skelter did not materialize.

In the early '90s Cube began a second career as an actor and filmmaker, building on a flair for songwriting and rapping that was already richly cinematic. His first film was John Singleton's acclaimed 1991 drama Boyz n the Hood, in which Cube portrayed a teenage ex-con in South Central L.A. named Doughboy. He then appeared in 1992's Trespass as a thug sidekick to fellow actor/gangsta rapper Ice-T. While appearing in Singleton's Higher Learning, the director encouraged Cube to write his own films. In 1995 the rapper appeared in the comedy Friday, which he also coscripted with frequent music collaborator DJ Pooh. Ice Cube then wrote, directed, and acted in 1998's The Players Club. His Hollywood career has alternated between the popular likes of the horror film Anaconda (1997) and critical successes such as the Gulf War satire Three Kings (1999). Cube wrote, produced, and starred in slapstick-heavy Next Friday in 2000. He stars in John Carpenter's Ghosts of Mars, due for release in late 2001.

Converted to the Nation of Islam in 1992, Cube was by the late '90s a dedicated family man, a married father of three. He returned to recording with a two-album project: War & Peace Vol. 1 (The War Disc) (#7 pop, #2 R&B, 1998) and War & Peace Vol. 2 (The Peace Disc), which also reunited Cube with N.W.A's Dr. Dre and MC Ren on the opening track, "Hell Low." The new albums sold respectably but failed to match the numbers of his early solo career. A new track credited to N.W.A also appeared on the soundtrack to Cube's Next Friday, followed by a national arena tour in 2000 with Dre, Ren, Snoop Dogg, and Eminem.

Ice-T

Born Tracy Marrow, b. Feb. 16, 1958, Newark, NJ
1987—Rhyme Pays (Sire) 1988—Power 1989—Freedom of Speech . . . Just Watch What You Say 1991—O.G. Original Gangster 1993—Home Invasion (Rhyme Syndicate/Priority); The Classic Collection (Rhino) 1996—VI: Return of the Real (Rhyme Syndicate/Priority) 1999—Seventh Deadly Sin (Coroner/Atomic Pop).

With Body Count: 1992—Body Count (Sire) 1994—Born Dead (Virgin) 1997—Violent Demise: The Last Days.

Ice-T was one of the creators of gangsta rap, building a hard-edged West Coast sound rooted in his own experiences hustling on the streets of L.A. But he became hip-hop's most controversial figure in 1992 after coming under fire for "Cop Killer," a song by his trash-metal side band, Body Count. The lyrics painted a brutal picture of the strife between inner-city police and ghetto youth, and even drew criticism from then-President George Bush. At nearly every turn, Ice-T has been martyred or chastised, managing to offend both the left and right with his provocative words. In the minds of his supporters, Ice-T's violent, often misogynistic tales of mayhem are more sarcastic and even humorous than cynical or gratuitous. With his blunt vocal delivery, narrative-style writing, and mesmerizing B-movie images, Ice-T was one of the earliest West Coast rappers to gain respect among the New York hip-hop set. As an artist, he set the stage for N.W.A, Snoop Dogg, and the Notorious B.I.G. and mingled easily with underground rockers on the first Lollapalooza Tour in 1991. He founded his own Rhyme Syndicate label (distributed by Sire/Warner Bros.) and introduced the likes of Everlast.

Born Tracy Marrow in New Jersey, he was raised by an aunt in L.A. after the death of his parents. Inspired by ghetto novelist/poet Iceberg Slim, he began penning poems while attending Crenshaw High School. At 15 he started hanging out with gang members on the streets of South Central L.A. He was never a gang member himself but spent his days as a young criminal (committing anything from robbery to kidnapping, he later told interviewers) before spending four years in the army. By 1983, he had adopted the name Ice-T (in honor of Iceberg Slim) and recorded a sing-song rap called "The Coldest Rap" over a funky Jimmy Jam-Terry Lewis backing track, the song for which he received $20, came out on the independent label Satum. The next year Ice-T landed a regular gig at seminal L.A. rap club the Radio and was asked to appear in the movie Breakin' (he also appeared in its sequel).

By the time of his 1987 debut album, Rhyme Pays, Ice-T had started incorporating poignant stories about inner-city street life ("6 in the Mornin'", "Squeeze the Trigger") into his heretofore mostly light, sex-obsessed repertoire. Complaining that the songs glorified sex and violence, Tipper Gore's Parents' Music Resource Center (PMRC) persuaded Sire to attach a warning sticker to the album. Meanwhile, actor/director Dennis Hopper liked Ice-T's tales enough to ask the rapper to pen the title song for his 1988 gang-culture film Colors.

Power (#35 pop, #6 R&B, 1988) produced two minor hits, "High Rollers" (#76 R&B) and a personalized take on Curtis Mayfield's "Pusherman," retitled "I'm Your Pusher" (#13 R&B). Continuing to draw fire from cultural watchdog organizations, Ice-T teamed up with former Dead Kennedys frontman Jello Biafra, who'd had an earlier run-in with the PMRC himself, for the sarcastic kick-off track of his subsequent album, The Iceberg/Freedom of Speech... Just Watch What You Say (#37 pop, #11 R&B, 1989). Although the album was well received, Ice-T later said he had been too preoccupied with the censorship issue. In 1991 Ice-T released his magnum opus, OG Original Gangster (#15 pop, #9 R&B), a ferocious, 24-track album that chronicled the life of a ghetto tough in songs like "Home of the Bodybag," "Straight Up Nigga," and "Lifestyles of the Rich and Infamous." OG also introduced his thrash-metal band Body Count on the song of the same name.

Body Count's self-titled debut album came out to little fanfare in 1992. Then a Texas police group noticed a track called "Cop Killer" and threatened to boycott Sire's parent company Time Warner. Within a year, Ice-T became a household name, appearing on the cover of ROLLING STONE in a police uniform. After initially supporting the artist, Time Warner quickly accepted when the rapper offered to remove "Cop Killer" from the album; the label soon began asking other artists under its umbrella to remove similarly objectionable material. When the company rejected the artwork for Ice-T's next solo album, Home Invasion, the rapper elected to be released from his seven-album contract; he left the company in January 1993 with five gold albums. (In 1993 he released Home Invasion (#14 pop, #9 R&B), artwork and all, on the independent label Priority.) Warner's decision to let go of Ice-T provided a chilling symbol of how intense corporate fear of rap had become in the wake of "Cop Killer." Body Count (including high school friend Ernie C. on guitar) reemerged with a third album, Violent: Demise The Last Days, in 1997 on Virgin Records.

In 1994 Ice-T's autobiography, The Ice Opinion, was published by St. Martin's Press. By then, he had begun a successful acting career, appearing in several films, including New Jack City (1991), Ricochet (1991), Trespass (1992), and Surviving the Game (1994). He also played an ex-convicted-crimefighter on the short-lived network TV drama Players in 1997. But Ice-T continued to rap, even as his sales noticeably diminished, releasing VI: Return of the Real (#89 pop, #19 R&B, 1996) and Seventh Deadly Sin (1999).

Ice-T Works

Formed 1980, Liverpool, Eng.

Ian McNabb (b. Robert Ian McNabb, Nov. 3, 1960, Liverpool), gr., voc.; Chris Layne, bass; Chris Sharrack, drums.
1984—Ice-T Works (Arista) 1985—The Small Price of a Bicycle (Chrysalis) (+ Dave Green, kybds.) 1986—Seven Singles Deep (Beggars Banquet, U.K.) 1987—If You Want to Defeat Your Enemy Sing His Song (Beggars Banquet/RCA) (- Layne; - Sharrack; + Roy Corkhill, bass; + Zak Starkey [b. Sep. 13, 1965, London], drums) 1988—Blind (- Green; - Starkey; + Dave Baldwin, kybds.; + Paul Burgess, drums; - Mark Revell, gr.) 1990—Permanent Damage (Epic, U.K.) 1992—Best of Ice-T Works (Beggars Banquet, U.K.).

Playing poker-faced, neopsychedelic pop rock with jangly guitars, Ice-T Works (who took their name from an obscure science-fiction novel) emerged from the postpunk Liverpool scene that produced Echo and the Bunnymen. Ice-T Works grew out of such local Liverpool bands as City Limits and Cherry Boys, and scored its first U.K. hit single with "Nirvana" in 1982. The band's debut album charted in the U.S. (#40, 1984) and yielded a Top 40 pop hit in "Whisper to a Scream (Birds Fly)" (#37, 1984). The group's second album was a British hit but failed to make the U.S. chart. In fact, Ice-T Works made no further impact in the U.S., save for the news that ex-Beatle Ringo Starr's son, Zak Starkey, joined on drums for 1987's Blind.

Ice-T Works disbanded in 1990, with bandleader Ian McNabb embarking on a solo career. He released Truth and Beauty on the British indie label This Way Up in early 1993, and recorded a second solo album, Head Like a Rock, in 1994 in L.A. with American musicians, including Billy Talbot and Ralph Molina of Crazy Horse and legendary Meters drummer Joseph "Zigaboo" Modeliste. That album, and its successor, Merseybeast, were both released in 1995. McNabb also performed and recorded with Mike Scott of the Waterboys.

Ides of March

Formed ca. 1964, Berwyn, IL

James Peterik, lead voc., gr., kybds., sax; Ray Herr, voc., gr., bass; Larry Millas, gr., organ, voc.; Bob Bergland, bass, sax; John Larson, trumpet; Chuck Somar, horn; Michael Borch, drums.
1970—Vehicle (Warner Bros.) 1971—Common Bond 1972—World Woven (RCA) 1973—Midnight Oil 2000—Ideology (Sundazed).

A seven-piece group with horns from the suburbs of Chicago, the Ides of March were often accused of being Blood, Sweat and Tears imitators. Their one big hit, "Vehicle" (#2, 1970), sounded like BS&T, but the Ides of March had actually formed long before Blood, Sweat and Tears (or the Ides') local contemporaries Chicago.

The group members met in elementary school and formed the band while in high school. In the next few years they all enrolled in the same college. The band scored two minor 1966 hits—"You Wouldn't Listen" and "Roller Coaster"—and faded until 1970, when Peterik's "Vehicle" was released. The record had been certified gold by November 1972, but the Ides proved unable to find a followup hit.

The Ides left Warner Bros. for RCA, to little avail, then disbanded. A mid-'70s attempt to regroup never got off the ground. Peterik returned to the chart over a decade later as a member of Survivor, whose single "Eye of the Tiger" hit #1 in the summer of 1982. He also wrote and cowrote hits for 38 Special. Peterik went solo in 1996 and formed the project World Stage. He collaborated with Brian Wilson on "Dream Angel," which was featured on the ex-Beach Boy's 1998 Imagination album. The original Ides reunited in 1990, adding two new musicians to the lineup. Their recent recordings include an EP, a tribute song for the 1998 Chicago Cubs baseball team, and a greatest-hits package featuring new material.

Billy Idol/Generation X

Born William Michael Albert Broad, Nov. 30, 1955, Stanmore, Middlesex, Eng.

With Generation X: formed 1976, London, Eng.: Billy Idol, voc.; Tony James, bass, voc.; Bob Andrews, gtr., voc.; John Towe, drums.

1978—Generation X (Chrysalis) 1979—Valley of the Dolls
1981—Kiss Me Deadly; Dancing With Myself EP 1985—The Best of Generation X.
Billy Idol solo: 1981—Don't Stop EP 1982—Billy Idol
(Chrysalis) 1983—Rebel Yell 1986—Whiplash Smile
1987—Vital Idol 1990—Charmed Life 1993—Cyberpunk
2001—Greatest Hits.

From his beginnings as frontman for Generation X, Billy Idol's career has touched on trends from punk to cyberpunk. While his sincerity has sometimes been questioned, with four platinum albums—Rebel Yell (#6, 1983), Whiplash Smile (#6, 1986), Vital Idol (#10, 1987), and Charmed Life (#11, 1990)—there is no doubting his success. One of the earliest acts to embrace MTV, Idol became a network fixture in a series of sexually suggestive, bimbo-festooned videos. While widely reviled, the clips fixed Idol's sneering, leather-clad, bad-boy image and made hits of "White Wedding" (#36, 1983), "Rebel Yell" (#46, 1984), "Eyes Without a Face" (#4, 1984), "To Be a Lover" (#6, 1986), "Mony Mony 'Live'" (#1, 1987), and "Cradle of Love" (#2, 1990).

A Beatle-loving child of the '60s, by 1976 William Broad had changed his name to Billy Idol, dyed his hair platinum blond, and begun hanging out at Malcolm McLaren's Sex boutique. He joined Chelsea, an early punk band, that year, leaving two months later with Tony James to form Generation X. Unabashedly commercial, they had a string of British hits in 1977, including "Your Generation," "Ready Steady Go," and "Wild Youth," and were the first punk band to appear on the BBC's Top of the Pops.

A second album, Valley of the Dolls, produced by Mott the Hoople's Ian Hunter, was not well received, nor was Kiss Me Deadly. Idol quit in 1981, but not before releasing an EP Dancing With Myself.

Idol, who had spent four years as a child on Long Island, moved to Greenwich Village and signed with Kiss manager Bill Aucoin. He put together a band with guitarist and songwriting partner Steve Stevens plus a group of local musicians and recorded an EP, Don't Stop (#71, 1981). Produced by Giorgio Moroder protégé Keith Forsey, it was notable for its cover of Tommy James and the Shondells' 1968 smash "Mony Mony" and a revamped version of "Dancing With Myself," a club hit. On this and subsequent albums Idol and Forsey merged punk's rebel stance with slickly produced metallic rock and an undercurrent of disco dance rhythms.

Idol's image as a lusty bad boy was maintained offstage as well. His tours were infamous for their excesses, and Idol was accused of attempted rape in 1985. In 1990 he was seriously injured in a motorcycle accident in L.A. The accident kept him from playing the part of Tom Baker in Oliver Stone's The Doors (1991) (he ended up playing the smaller part of Cat) and delayed the release of Charmed Life, his first album of new material in three years and his first without Stevens. Charmed Life revived Idol's career, but his brand of misogyny seemed tired. After a three-year hiatus Idol returned with Cyberpunk (#48, 1993). Its title, videos, and accompanying computer press release caused many to claim that Idol was once again jumping on a bandwagon, this time that of a punky sci-fi Internet subculture.

The '80s revival found him appearing as himself in the Adam Sandler hit, The Wedding Singer (1998). In 2001 he attempted a comeback, appearing on VH1's Storytellers and as the subject of Behind the Music; he also released Greatest Hits (#74, 2001).

Julio Iglesias

Born Julio Jose Iglesias de la Cueva, Sep. 23, 1943, Madrid, Spain

1980—Hey! (Columbia) 1981—From a Child to a Woman
1982—Moments 1983—In Concert; Julio 1984—1100 Bel Air Place 1985—Libra 1988—Non Stop 1990—Starry Night 1994—Crazy 1996—Tango 1998—My Life: The Greatest Hits 2000—Noche de Cuatro Lunas.

From Valentino on, America's infatuation with the image of the Latin lover refuses to die. In the '80s Julio Iglesias slipped effortlessly into the role and for a brief moment it looked like the suave crooner would achieve in America the incredible success that he had enjoyed around the rest of the world.

The man whom the Guinness Book of World Records claims has sold more records than any other singer (an estimated 250 million by 2000) originally wanted to be a professional soccer player. When a near-fatal car accident ended that dream in 1962, Iglesias spent his recovery time learning how to play guitar, compose, and sing. Bowing to his father's wishes, Iglesias studied law, but music remained his love. After winning first prize at the 1968 Spanish Song Festival, where he sang his own "La Vida Sigue Igual," Iglesias was signed by Discos Columbia. In the '70s Iglesias became a major MOR star in Europe and Latin America. Often recording versions of his songs in Spanish, French, Italian, German, Portuguese, and English, Iglesias achieved near-global success.

He had his first major English-language hit in 1981 when his version of Cole Porter's "Begin the Beguine" topped the British charts. His U.S. breakthrough came through the unlikely but immensely popular 1984 duet with Willie Nelson, "To All the Girls I've Loved Before" (#5). A duet with Diana Ross, "All of You" (#19), hit later that year. Both tracks appeared on the triple-platinum 1100 Bel Air Place.

Iglesias' tall, dark, and handsome looks, European charm, and ultrasoft singing endeared him to a romance-starved audience, but a noticeable difficulty with spoken English hampered his wider appeal. Despite the initial hits and adoring fans, Iglesias could not sustain his stateside recording success. Nevertheless, he has become a perennial live attraction, regularly filling houses from Radio City Music Hall to Vegas, and he continues to sell well. Starry Night, featuring his cover of Don McLean's "Vincent," went to #37, while 1994's Crazy, featuring guests Dolly Parton and Art Garfunkel, went to #30. Tango, his 1996 collection of classic tango songs, peaked at #81, but topped Billboard's Latin 50 chart for 10 weeks. He was knocked off the top by his son Enrique, who later crossed over to top Billboard's Hot 100 chart with 1999's "Bailamos" and 2000's "Be With You." (Another son of Iglesias, Julio Jr., also crossed over to the Hot 100 in 1999).

Iglesias' first major career retrospective, 1998's My Life: The Greatest Hits, was a double-disc set that devoted a disc each to both his English and Latin hits. In 2000 he released his 77th album, the Spanish Noche de Cuatro Lunas, which found Iglesias contributing his own songs for the first time in nearly two decades.

The Impressions

Formed 1957, Chicago, IL

Curtis Mayfield (b. June 3, 1942, Chicago; d. Dec. 26, 1999, Roswell, GA), voc., gtr.; Jerry Butler (b. Dec. 8, 1939, Sunflower, MS), voc.; Arthur Brooks (b. Chattanooga, TN); Richard Brooks (b. Chattanooga, voc.); Sam Gooden (b. Sep. 2, 1939, Chattanooga), voc.

1958–59—(– Butler; + Fred Cash [b. Oct. 8, 1940, Chattanooga], voc.) 1961—(– A. and R. Brooks) 1963—The Impressions (ABC) 1964—The Never Ending Impressions; Keep On Pushing 1965—People Get Ready; Greatest Hits 1968—Best of the Impressions; We're a Winner 1970—(– Mayfield; + Leroy Hutson, voc.) 1973—(– Hutson; + Reggie Torrian, voc.; + Ralph Johnson, voc.) 1974—Finally Got Myself Together (Curton) 1976—For Your Precious Love (Vee-Jay); Originals (ABC); The Vintage Years (Sire) 1979—Come to My Party (20th Century-Fox) ca. 1980—(– Johnson; + Nate Evans, voc.) 1981—Fan the Fire 1989—The Impressions' Greatest Hits (MCA) 1992—The Young Mods' Forgotten Story (Curton); 1992—Curtis Mayfield and the Impressions: The Anthology 1961–1977 (MCA) 1993—Their Complete Vee-Jay Recordings (Vee-Jay) 1997—The Very Best of the Impressions (Rhino).

The Impressions' close vocal harmonies and big-band-style horn arrangements were precursors of and a major influence on '60s soul, especially its romantic ballads. The group's original members—Sam Gooden, and brothers Richard and Arthur Brooks—were in a Tennessee group, the Roosters, and made their way to Chicago, where they hooked up with a team of songwriter/producers, Jerry Butler and Curtis Mayfield, of the Northern Jubilee Gospel Singers.

The Impressions' first hit, "For Your Precious Love" (#11, 1958), featured Butler's lead vocals, but within the year he left the group for a solo career (although he continued to work with Mayfield [see entry]). Cash, who had not been in the initial lineup, replaced Butler. After the group's next major hit, "Gypsy Woman" (#20 pop, #2 R&B, in 1961, the Brooks brothers dropped out, leaving the trio of Mayfield, Gooden, and Cash.

Mayfield became the Impressions' leader and, with a distinctly soft yet emotive falsetto, the group's lead vocalist. Under his guidance, the Impressions became one of the era's most popular vocal groups. Their trio vocals were also a major influence on Jamaican pop. Through the '60s, the group had hits with Mayfield's love songs, such as "Talking About My Baby" (#14, 1964), "I'm So Proud" (#14 pop, #14 R&B, 1964), "Woman's Got Soul" (#29 pop, #9 R&B, 1965), and his gospel-tinged message songs, including "Keep On Pushin'" (#10, 1964), "People Get Ready" (#14, 1965), and "Amen" (#7, 1965). Mayfield also kept up an active career as producer, arranger, and songwriter; he left the Impressions in 1970.

Howard University graduate Leroy Hutson took over the group in the early '70s and kept it on the soul chart with "Check Out Your Mind" ("Baby) Turn On to Me" and "Ain't Got Time," among others, before going solo in 1973. Cash and Gooden regrouped with Reggie Tonan and Ralph Johnson, and had a Top 20 pop hit (#1 R&B) in 1974 with "Finally Got Myself Together," and they did the soundtrack for the blaxploitation film Three the Hard Way. They continued to record for various labels into the '80s, with middling success, although a 1975 single, "First Impressions," hit the UK Top 20. In 1983 Butler and Mayfield rejoined the group for a reunion tour, and they performed together intermittently through the years.

The Impressions last recorded with Mayfield shortly before his death in December 1999: a new version of "People Get Ready" for Atlanta's Year 2000 celebration. In 2000 the Impressions received the Rhythm & Blues Foundation's Pioneer Award.

The Incredible String Band

Formed 1965, Glasgow, Scot.

Mike Heron (b. Dec. 12, 1942), voc., gtr., assorted instruments; Robin Williamson (b. Nov. 24, 1943), voc., gtr., assorted instruments; Clive Palmer, banjo.

1966—The Incredible String Band (Elektra) (– Palmer) 1967—The 5000 Spirits or the Layers of the Onion; The Hangman's Beautiful Daughter (+ Christina "Licorice" McKenzie, violin, assorted instruments; + Rose Simpson, bass) 1968—Wee Tam; The Big Huge 1969—Changing Horses 1970—I Looked Up; U; Be Glad for the Song Has No Ending (Reprise) 1971—(– Simpson; + Malcolm Le Maistre, bass, voc.) 1972—Liquid Acrobat as Regards the Air (Elektra); Earth Span (Island) 1973—(– McKenzie) No Ruinous Feud (+ Gerald Dott, kybds., reeds) 1974—Hard Rope and Silken Twine (+ John Gilston, drums; + Graham Forbes, gtr.) 1974—Seasons They Change 1997—(group re-forms: Heron; Williamson; Palmer; + Lawson Dando, piano; + Bina Williamson, voc.) The Chelsea Sessions 1967 (Pig's Whisker, U.K.) 1998—Bloomsbury 1997 1999—At the Pure Fountain.

A highly eclectic Scottish folk group founded in the mid-'60s, the Incredible String Band had a repertoire of original songs derived from British traditional ballads, Appalachian tunes, Delta blues, Indian ragas, Ethiopian oud music, calypso, Gilbert and Sullivan, and international folk styles. Fans of their proto-world music included Led Zeppelin (Robert Plant once credited the group as an inspiration for his band's forays into British folk) and the Rolling Stones (who tried and failed to sign ISB to their Mother Earth label in the late '60s). Though there were other shifting members of the band, ISB was essentially just two Glasgow-born songwriters, Robin Williamson and Mike Heron, who between them played a wide assortment of instruments.

In 1965 Williamson played in a jug-band duo at Glasgow's Incredible Folk Club with its owner Clive Palmer. Heron (who had played in the Edinburgh rock group Rock Bottom and the Deadbeats) joined soon after, and the trio took its name from Palmer's club. After an eponymous debut on Elektra in 1966, Williamson and Palmer traveled in North Africa. Upon their return, Palmer left the group, but the other two kept performing in local clubs. In November 1966 they made their first concert appearance outside Scotland, at London's Royal Albert Hall, with Tom Paxton and Judy Collins on the bill. The two American artists helped spread ISB's reputation in the U.S. (Collins later recorded Williamson's "First Girl I Loved"), and in 1967 its second LP, The 5000 Spirits or the Layers of the Onion, was acclaimed on both sides of the Atlantic.

A cult audience developed in the U.S., but in England ISB was a mainstay of the hippie movement. In 1967 the virtuoso multi-instrumentalist duo version of ISB recorded one more LP, The Hangman's Beautiful Daughter. Williamson and Heron then added two women: bassist Rose Simpson and Christina McKenzie on violin, kazoo, and other instruments. Their first releases together, the two-disc Wee Tam and The Big Huge, were viewed by some as indulgent and disappointing, and the band's reputation declined as the '60s ended, though their music became increasingly ambitious. The album U was conceived as a loose stage show that played with a mime troupe.

In 1971 Simpson left, replaced by Malcolm Le Maistre in 1972. Gerard Dott, another multi-instrumentalist, replaced McKenzie in 1973. He knew Heron from childhood and had played in a skiffle band with Williamson and Heron. In 1971 the band members were drifting apart, with Heron releasing the solo LP Smiling Men With Bad Reputations, Williamson issuing his own LP, Myrrh, in 1973. (Both had become Scientologists.) By the time of their last show together in 1974, they had become harder-rocking after adding drummer Gilston and guitarist Forbes. Heron did session work and later formed Mike Heron's Reputation with ex-ISB's Gilston, Forbes, and Le Maistre. Williamson moved to L.A., formed Robin Williamson's Merry Band, and released three LPs of poetry and music and a 1981 solo album on Flying Fish Records.

In the late '90s the Incredible String Band's original members, augmented by new pianist Lawson Dando and Williamson's wife Bina, reunited. The group has toured several times and released several archival and live reunion albums on Palmer's Pig's Whisker label.

Indigo Girls

Formed 1980, Decatur, GA; became Indigo Girls 1983

Amy Ray (b. Apr. 12, 1964, Atlanta, GA) voc., gtr.; Emily Saliers (b. July 22, 1963, New Haven, CT) voc., gtr.

1986—Indigo Girls EP (Indigo) 1987—Strange Fire 1989—Indigo Girls (Epic) 1990—Nomads Indians Saints 1991—Back on the Bus, Y'All EP 1992—Rites of Passage 1994—Swamp Ophelia 1995—1200 Curfews 1997—Shaming of the Sun 1999—Come On Now Social.

Blending their voices in powerful harmonies over acoustic guitars, the Indigo Girls have attained a degree of pop success rare for artists so firmly rooted in folk and women's music. Amy Ray's rough alto and moody rock songs provide an edgy balance to Emily Saliers' warm soprano and folksy compositions.

The two childhood friends began making music together while still in high school in suburban Atlanta, calling themselves Saliers and Ray. They continued to perform while attending Emory University, where they changed their name to the Indigo Girls. They released their first independent single, "Crazy Game," in 1985, followed by an EP and a full-length album before signing with Epic. They established a large enough following with their independent releases that they could maintain artistic control in their major-label deal. Members from both R.E.M. and the Hothouse Flowers play on the Grammy-winning, Scott Litt-produced Indigo Girls. Although the single "Closer to Fine" was played by MTV, VH1, and some radio stations, constant touring, a supportive press, and devoted fans drove the duo's gold and platinum record sales.

Litt produced Nomads Indians Saints, which featured Mary Chapin Carpenter, the Ellen James Society, drummers Kenny Aronoff and Jim Keltner, and bassist Sara Lee, and included the Grammy-nominated single "Hammer and a Nail." Back on the Bus, Y'All was a live EP. On Rites of Passage, the band experimented with rock noise and Latin and African percussion, working with producer Peter Collins, whose credits include Queensryche and Alice Cooper. Guests include the Roches, Jackson Browne, David Crosby, Lisa Germano, and Budgie and Martin McCarrick from Siouxsie and the Banshees. The album (#21, 1992) was nominated for a Grammy. Collins also produced 1994's Swamp Ophelia (#9), which featured the duo's first totally electric song, "Touch Me Fall." In addition to including such previous guests as Germano, the Roches, and Lee, Ophelia featured Jane Siberry, and ex-Allman Brothers pianist Chuck Leavell.

Alongside their somber spirituals, the Indigo Girls frequently sing about environmentalism, feminism, and other social issues. They have played benefits on behalf of Habitat for Humanity, the Children's Health Fund, and Humanitas, among others. Ray actively supports independent music and is the founder of the Atlanta-based Daemon Records, whose roster has included James Hall, the Ellen James Society, Danielle Howle, the Rock-A-Teens, and Kristen Hall. In 1994 both Ray and Saliers acted in the Herbert Ross film Boys on the Side. They also starred in an update of the musical Jesus Christ Superstar that cast Ray as Jesus and Saliers as Mary Magdalene.

In 1995 the Indigo Girls released their second live album, 1200 Curfews (#40). Their next record, Shaming of the Sun (#7, 1997), continued the musical experimentation the duo had begun with Swamp Ophelia, featuring tape loops and rock guitar solos. It also boasted guest appearances from Dallas Austin and Steve Earle. Come On Now Social (1999) grew out of a series of London jam sessions with Ghostland, a band that backed Sinéad O'Connor during the 1998 Lillith Fair Tour. The album included cameos from Meshell Ndegeocello, Joan Osborne, Sheryl Crow, and Luscious Jackson drummer Kate Schellenbach, as well as the broadside "Faye Tucker," a song about Karla Faye Tucker, the first woman executed by the state of Texas since the Civil War.

James Ingram

Born Feb. 17, 1952, Akron, OH

1983—It's Your Night (Qwest) 1986—Never Felt So Good (Warner Bros.) 1990—It's Real 1991—The Power of Great Music 1993—Always You 1999—Forever More (Love Songs, Hits & Duets) (Private Music).

With his smooth, deep voice and ladies' man charm, James Ingram is a true pop singles artist. In the '80s he became a chart-topping, Grammy-winning balladeer mostly on the basis of his collaborations with such artists as Quincy Jones, Patti Austin, and Michael McDonald.

Ingram moved from Akron to L.A. in the mid-'70s with the band Revelation Funk, but the group soon broke up, and he began singing demo tapes for a publishing company. Ray Charles hired Ingram to produce, play keyboards, and write songs for him. Until Quincy Jones heard one of Ingram's tapes and asked him to sing on an album, Ingram hadn't considered himself a vocalist. In 1981 Ingram won a Grammy without having released an album of his own, when he was honored for "One Hundred Ways" (#14, 1981), from Jones' The Dude. "Just Once" from that album went to #17. Other collaborations with Jones include "We Are the World," the film The Color Purple and Michael Jackson's album Thriller (Ingram cowrote "P.Y.T. [Pretty Young Thing]").

"Baby, Come to Me" (#1, 1982), from Austin's album Every Home Should Have One, became the theme for the soap opera General Hospital. Ingram's gold 1983 debut album yielded the Grammy-winning "Yah Mo B There," a duet with McDonald. Ingram performed a string of songs for soundtracks, including "How Do You Keep the Music Playing?" (#45, 1983), another duet with Austin, for Best Friends; "Somewhere Out There" (#2, 1986), with Linda Ronstadt, for An American Tail; and "Better Way" (#66, 1987) for Beverly Hills Cop II. But Ingram didn't score a hit on his own until the Thom Bell-produced It's Real, which featured "I Don't Have the Heart" (#1, 1990).

Ingram was out of the limelight during the mid-'90s, but returned to the charts in 1998 when he was the featured vocalist on John Tesh's "Give Me Forever (I Do)," a #5 hit of the Billboard Hot AC (Adult Contemporary) chart. Ingram and Tesh repeated the formula with "Forever More (I'll Be the One)," which peaked at #12 on the Hot AC chart the following year. Ingram's 1999 best-of album includes the latter hit, plus newly recorded material, along with a version of "My Funny Valentine" set to hip-hop beats.

The Ink Spots

Formed late '20s, Indianapolis, IN

Members have included Jerry Daniels, gtr., voc.; Orville "Hoppy" Jones (b. Feb. 17, 1905, Chicago, IL; d. Oct. 18, 1944, Chicago), voc.; Charles Fuqua (d. 1971), gtr., voc.; Ivory "Deek" Watson (d. 1969), voc.

1936—(- Daniels; + Bill Kenny [b. 1915; d. Mar. 23, 1978], voc.) 1980—The Best of the Ink Spots (MCA).

Though the Ink Spots enjoyed their greatest popularity years before rock & roll came into being, their vocal style was a precursor to the smooth doo-wop vocal groups of the '50s, including the Ravens, the Marceels, the Flamingos, the Platters, and others.

The original group was formed when Daniels, Jones, Fuqua, and Watson met in Indianapolis. After moving to New York in the early '30s, they changed their name from King, Jack and the Jesters to the Ink Spots. In 1935 they signed with RCA Victor, then Decca. Soon thereafter, lead singer Jerry Daniels left the group and was replaced by Bill Kenny. In February 1939 the Ink Spots released "If I Didn't Care," their first million-selling record. Subsequent hits included "My Prayer," "Maybe," "We Three," "Whispering Grass," "To Each His Own," and "I Don't Want to Set the World on Fire," a song that was revived in the late '80s for Chanel commercials.

After Hoppy Jones died on October 18, 1944, from what was discovered to have been a brain hemorrhage, internal dissension cast the group's future in doubt. A flurry of personnel changes ensued, leaving Kenny the sole consistent member. Charlie Fuqua (uncle of Harvey Fuqua of the Moonglows and later Motown fame) established his own group of Ink Spots. This group toured the world and was the first black act to play in a number of venues throughout the American South. The Ink Spots had a final #1 hit with "To Each His Own" in 1946. There have been several lineups of Ink Spots through the years, but only the original lineup was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1989.

Inspirational Carpets

Formed 1986, Chadderton, Eng.

Stephen Holt (b. Eng.), voc.; Graham Lambert (b. July 10, 1964, Oldham, Eng.), gtr.; Clint Boon (b. June 28, 1959, Oldham), organ; David Swift (b. Eng.), bass; Craig Gill (b. Dec. 5, 1971, Manchester, Eng.), drums.

1988—(– Holt; – Swift; + Thomas Hingley [b. July 9, 1965, Oxford, Eng.], voc.; + Martyn Walsh [b. July 3, 1968, Manchester], bass) 1990—Life (Mute) 1991—The Beast Inside 1992—Revenge of the Goldfish 1994—Devil Hopping 1995—The Singles.

Inspirational Carpets emerged in the late '80s, with Stone Roses and Happy Mondays, from Manchester, England's pre-rave psychedelic dance-rock scene. Inspirational Carpets were more of a throwback than other bands on the scene, with Clint Boon's reedy Farfisa organ recalling mid-'60s garage rock, and pudding-bowl haircuts defining their look. In England the band managed to balance commercial success with independent-label credibility. In the U.S. it steadily built a core cult through albums on Mute Records (the label that had launched synth-pop bands Depeche Mode and Erasure) and live shows, where Inspirational Carpets (who recorded as live as possible in the studio) proved they could play, and blew some minds with a trippy light show.

The band's swirling, melodic neo-'60s sound was already formed on its first single, 1987's "Plane Crash." Original vocalist Stephen Holt was replaced by Thomas Hingley, whose portentous, Jim Morrison-style vocals evoked Ian McCulloch and Julian Cope, respectively, of early '80s Liverpool neopsychedelic bands Echo and the Bunnymen and Teardrop Explodes. Inspirational Carpets formed its own label, Cow Records, gaining notoriety for its slogan "Cool as Fuck." The band's first album, Life (1990), hit #2 in the U.K., its sophomore effort, 1991's The Beast Inside, did nearly as well, charting at #4 UK. By Inspirational Carpets' third album, Revenge of the Goldfish (#17 U.K., 1992), Graham Lambert's guitar—often surf-like in its reverb—had taken on near-equal footing with Boon's organ. After the 1994 release of Devil Hopping the group was dropped by Mute and disbanded. Boon launched his own act, the Clint Boon Experience!, in 1999.

The Intruders

Formed 1960, Philadelphia, PA

Phil Terry (b. Nov. 1, 1943, Philadelphia), voc.; Robert "Big Sonny" Edwards (b. Feb. 22, 1942, Philadelphia), voc.; Samuel "Little Sonny" Brown, voc.; Eugene "Bird" Daughtry (b. Oct. 29, 1939, Kinston, NC; d. Dec. 25, 1994), voc. 1968—Cowboys to Girls (Gamble) 1969—Intruders Greatest Hits 1973—Save the Children 1995—The Best of the Intruders: Cowboys to Girls (Legacy).

This vocal quartet was an early project for the production team of Kenny Gamble and Leon Huff. The group's members sang around Philadelphia in the early '60s and recorded one single for the local Gowen Records in 1961. Three years later they met Leon Huff, who produced their single "All the Time" on Musicor Records. By 1966, Huff had teamed with Kenny Gamble to form Gamble Records, and the Intruders became the company's first signing.

The Intruders' first chart single, "We'll Be United" (#14 R&B), started a hot streak in 1966. "Devil With an Angel's Smile" hit #26 R&B, also in 1966. "Together" (#9 R&B; later a huge hit for Tierra), "Baby, I'm Lonely" (#9 R&B), and "A Love That's Real" (#35 R&B) in 1967 built the Intruders' and the Gamble and Huff team's national reputation.

The next year was the Intruders' peak, with the million-selling "Cowboys to Girls" (#6 pop, #1 R&B). "Love Is Like a Baseball Game" (#26 pop, #4 R&B, 1968) and "Slow Drag" (#12 R&B, 1969) followed. Gamble and Huff gave them "Sad Girl" (#14 R&B) in 1970 and "When We Get Married" (#8 R&B) and "(Win, Place or Show) She's a Winner" (#12 R&B) in 1972. The Intruders' "I'll Always Love My Mama" (#36 pop, #6 R&B, 1973) was a disco mainstay and a perennial Mother's Day favorite.

In 1975 the Intruders broke up. But in 1984, Eugene Daughtry, who'd been working as a truck driver, assembled a new group with his brother Fred, cousin Al Miller, and Lee Williams. A 1984 single, "Who Do You Love?," made the charts in England.

INXS

Formed 1977, Sydney, Austral.

Garry Gary Beers (b. June 22, 1957, Sydney), bass; Michael Hutchence (b. Jan. 22, 1960, Sydney; d. Nov. 22, 1997, Sydney), voc.; Andrew Farriss (b. Mar. 27, 1959, Perth, Austral.), kybds., gtr.; Jon Farriss (b. Aug. 10, 1961, Perth), drums; Tim Farriss (b. Aug. 16, 1957, Perth), gtr.; Kirk Pengilly (b. July 4, 1958, Sydney), gtr., sax, voc. 1980—INXS (Aus. Deluxe) 1981—Underneath the Colours 1983—Shabooh Shoobah (Atco); Dekadance EP 1984—The Swing 1985—Listen Like Thieves (Atlantic) 1987—Kick 1990—X 1991—Live Baby Live 1992—Welcome to Wherever You Are 1993—Full Moon, Dirty Hearts 1994—INXS: The Greatest Hits 1997—Elegantly Wasted (PGD/PolyGram) 2001—Shine Like It Does: The Anthology (1979–1997) (Atlantic/Rhino). Michael Hutchence solo: 2000—Michael Hutchence (V2).

INXS: Tim Farriss, Michael Hutchence, Jon Farriss, Garry Gary Beers, Kirk Pengilly, Andrew Farriss

Years before it became fashionable for white artists to mix guitar rock textures with hip-hop beats, INXS emerged from Down Under with a danceable funk-rock fusion that would make the band international stars by the mid-'80s. Adding to the group's commercial appeal was the charisma of its lead singer, Michael Hutchence, who combined Jaggeresque posturing with looks evoking a lankier Jim Morrison; like Morrison, Hutchence would meet an early, tragic death that shocked the world.

INXS began as a family act, originally calling itself the Farriss Brothers. While still in high school, Andrew Farriss and Hutchence—who would become INXS's primary composer and lyricist, respectively—joined forces in a band that also included Garry Beers; around the same time, Tim Farriss and Kirk Pengilly were playing in groups together. The five got together with drummer Jon Farriss in 1977, completing the lineup that would officially become INXS two years later (after Jon graduated high school). At that point, the group relocated from Perth, where Jon went to school, back to Sydney, and began playing pubs in and around the Australian capital. Gigs in other parts of the country followed, leading to an Australian record contract.

The band soon set its sights on an American audience, signing with Atco Records and embarking on an extensive U.S. tour in support of 1983's Shabooh Shoobah. Later that year a studio session with noted funk producer Nile Rodgers resulted in the groove-n-ddden single "Original Sin," which approached the Top 40 and showed up again on 1984's The Swing. But INXS's real breakthrough came with 1985's Listen Like Thieves, which went to #11 and produced the #5 single "What You Need" the following year. Kick (1987) sent the Aussies into the pop stratosphere, peaking at #3 and yielding four hit singles: the #1 smash "Need You Tonight" and, in 1988, "Devil Inside" (#2), "New Sensation" (#3), and "Never Tear Us Apart" (#7). In the wake of such success, 1990's X was, relatively, a mild disappointment, peaking at #5 but spawning just one Top 10 single, "Suicide Blonde" (#9).

INXS nonetheless remained extremely popular, selling out London's Wembley Stadium in 1991 and releasing a live album and video, Live Baby Live, while Hutchence remained visible by dating bubblegum singer/actress Kylie Minogue and supermodel Helena Christensen. Welcome to Wherever You Are (1992) got positive reviews for its sonic adventurousness, but was again only moderately successful, producing an AOR radio hit with "Beautiful Girl" (#46) in 1993. Later that year, INXS released its tenth album, Full Moon, Dirty Hearts (#53), which featured Chrissie Hynde (duetting with Hutchence on the title track) and Ray Charles. In 1994 INXS departed from Atlantic (which released the band's greatest-hits collection that year), joined PolyGram, and embarked on recording a new studio album.

In 1995 Hutchence began a relationship with British talk-show host Paula Yates, the estranged wife of famed Live Aid organizer Bob Geldof. The new couple had a daughter, Heavenly Hiraani Tiger Lily, in 1996, and planned to marry, but their happiness was marred by the paparazzi and Yates' bitter divorce and custody battle over her and Geldof's three daughters. Meanwhile, Elegantly Wasted was released in the spring of 1997 and the title track was a mild hit (#13, 1997). While in his hometown of Sydney preparing for INXS' 20th anniversary tour in November 1997, the 37-year-old Hutchence hanged himself in his hotel room in what was widely believed to be a suicide (though one theory that emerged was that his death was an accident resulting from autoerotic asphyxiation). Yates would die of a heroin overdose in September 2000. Geldof would be awarded temporary custody of Hutchence's daughter.

For two years prior to his death, Hutchence had been recording a solo album with producers Andy Gill of Gang of Four and Danny Saber of Black Grape. The self-titled album was released posthumously in 2000, with Hutchence's friend Bono adding vocals to one track. The rest of the band—who had learned of Hutchence's death while waiting for him to show up for rehearsal—surfaced in 2000 as the house band for Broadway composer Tim Rice's Musical Spectacular, a brief tour. They were also involved with the making of an Australian television documentary about INXS, an INXS photograph book, and a final album by the band, featuring Hutchence's vocals, all slated for release in 2001.

Iron Butterfly

Formed 1966, San Diego, CA
 Doug Ingle (b. Sep. 9, 1946, Omaha, NE), kybds., voc.; Ron Bushy (b. Sep. 23, 1945, Washington, DC), drums, voc.; Jerry Penrod (b. San Diego), bass; Darryl DeLoach (b. San Diego), voc.; Danny Weis (b. San Diego), gtr.
 1968—Heavy (Atco) (—Penrod; —DeLoach; —Weiss; + Lee

Dorman [b. Sep. 15, 1942, St. Louis, MO], bass, gtr., piano; + Erik Braunn [b. Aug. 11, 1950, Boston, MA], gtr., voc.) In-A-Gadda-Da-Vida 1969—Ball 1970—Live (– Braunn; + Mike Pinera [b. Sep. 29, 1948, Tampa, FL], gtr., voc.); + Larry “Rhino” Reinhardt [b. July 7, 1948, FL], gtr.) 1971—The Best of Iron Butterfly/Evolution; Metamorphosis (group disbands) 1974—(group re-forms: Braunn; Bushy; + Phil Kramer [b. July 12, 1952, Youngstown, OH], bass; + Howard Reitzes [b. Mar. 22, 1951, Southgate, CA], kybds., gtr.) 1975—Sun and Steel (MCA); Scorching Beauty 1993—(group re-forms: Bushy; Pinera; + Dorman, bass; + Derek Hilland, kybds., voc.) Light and Heavy: The Best of Iron Butterfly (Rhino).

Now remembered as a passing fancy of the acid-rock era, at its peak Iron Butterfly was considered a leading hard-rock band. During the group’s relatively brief lifetime, it sold about 7 million albums; In-A-Gadda-Da-Vida sold 4 million copies alone. The album’s focal point was the 17-minute title track (featuring a 2½-minute drum solo), which was also something of a catalyst in establishing “progressive” FM radio programming.

“In-A-Gadda-Da-Vida” was written by group leader, organist, and chief vocalist Doug Ingle, whose father was a church organist. Ingle formed his first group at age 16 in San Diego, where he met drummer Ron Bushy, one of four San Diegans to accompany Ingle to L.A. in late 1966.

In L.A., Iron Butterfly worked Bido Lito’s and eventually moved to the Galaxy and the Whisky-a-Go-Go. By early 1967, the band had a recording contract. Its debut disc stayed on the charts for nearly a year, partly because of the national exposure the group got as an opening act for the Doors and the Jefferson Airplane. Shortly after the LP was released, three of the original members left, among them Danny Weiss, later of Rhinoceros.

With new bassist Lee Dorman and guitarist Erik Braunn, Iron Butterfly recorded In-A-Gadda-Da-Vida (“In a Garden of Eden,” some suggested), which became Atlantic’s then-biggest seller. The album stayed on the chart for 140 weeks, 81 of them in the Top 10. An edited version of the title track hit #30. Ball hit #3 and went gold, but subsequent efforts failed.

In late 1969 Braunn left and later formed Flintwhistle with Penrod and DeLoach of the original lineup. He and Dorman also discovered Black Oak Arkansas, whose first album was produced by Dorman and guitarist Mike Pinera (formerly of Blues Image), who replaced Braunn in Iron Butterfly. Also joining was Larry “Rhino” Reinhardt (who had been living with Gregg and Duane Allman). Metamorphosis followed, but the group broke up after its farewell performance on May 23, 1971.

During Iron Butterfly’s career, all six of its albums charted; it toured the U.S. eight times and Europe as well. The group was featured in the film Savage Seven (along with Cream), from which came the first of several singles (“Possession” b/w “Unconscious Power”). Yet another, “Easy Rider,” was featured in the film of the same name. In the mid-’70s the group was revived by Braunn and Bushy with the inconsequential Scorching Beauty and Sun and Steel; other lineups have appeared over the years. Pinera went on to play with Cactus and Alice Cooper. In 1973 Dorman formed jazz-rock outfit Captain Beyond.

Iron Maiden

Formed 1976, London, Eng.

Paul Di’anno (b. May 17, 1959, London), voc.; Steve Harris (b. Mar. 12, 1957, London), bass, voc.; Dave Murray (b. Dec. 23, 1958, London), gtr.; Doug Sampson, drums. 1979—(+ Tony Parson, gtr.) 1980—(– Parson; – Sampson; + Dennis Stratton [b. Nov. 9, 1954, London], gtr.; + Clive Burr, drums) Iron Maiden (Harvest/Capitol) (– Stratton; + Adrian Smith [b. Feb. 27, 1957, London], gtr.) 1981—Killers; Maid in Japan (– Di’anno; + Bruce Dickinson [b. Paul Bruce Dickinson, Aug. 7, 1958, Worksop, Eng.], voc.) 1982—The Number of the Beast (– Burr; + Nicko McBrain [b. June 5, 1954], drums) 1983—Piece of Mind 1984—Powerslave 1985—Live After Death 1986—Somewhere in Time 1988—Seventh Son of a Seventh Son 1990—(– Smith; + Janick Gers, gtr.) No Prayer for the Dying (Epic) 1992—Fear of the Dark 1993—A Real Live One (Capitol); A Real Dead One; Live at Donnington (– Dickinson; + Blaze Bayley, voc.) 1995—The X Factor (CMC) 1998—Virtual XI 1999—Ed Hunter (Portrait) (– Bayley; + Dickinson; + Smith) 2000—Brave New World (Portrait).
Bruce Dickinson solo: 1990—Tattooed Millionaire (Columbia) 1994—Balls to Picasso (Mercury) 1996—Skunkworks (Raw Power) 1997—Accident of Birth (CMC).

Taking its name from the medieval torture device, Iron Maiden was part of England’s late-’70s crop of heavy-metal bands that boasted simple guitar riffs, bone-crunching chording, and sneaking vocals.

Formed in 1976 by Steve Harris and Dave Murray, the first incarnation of Iron Maiden was inspired by the do-it-yourself punk ethos, and the group released an EP, The Soundhouse Tapes, on its own label, Rock Hard Records. Iron Maiden, the band’s 1980 Capitol debut album, was pure, unadulterated screaming heavy metal. It went Top 5 in Britain; the following year’s Killers made #12. America, however, was slower to embrace the denim- and leather-clad group, which distinguished itself from its peers with unusually literate songs (written by Harris) full of hellish imagery (“Children of the Damned”), their themes borrowed from films (“The Number of the Beast,” inspired by The Omen II) and ancient mythology (“Flight of Icarus”). Maiden was certainly one of the few bands of any genre to employ a mascot, a 10-foot rotting corpse named Eddie.

The Number of the Beast, featuring new vocalist Bruce “Air Raid Siren” Dickinson, topped the LP chart in Britain and initiated a streak of seven consecutive platinum or gold albums in the States, despite virtually no radio or MTV exposure. The followup, 1983’s Piece of Mind, went to #14; Somewhere in Time made #11. Beginning with Seventh Son of a Seventh Son, sales began to slip. In 1990 Adrian Smith, who came aboard in 1980, left to form A.S.A.P. with drummer

Zak Starkey, son of Ringo. Janick Gers took his place in time to record No Prayer for the Dying, Maiden's last album to go gold in the States. It contained "Bring Your Daughter to the Slaughter," a song originally recorded by Dickinson alone for the Nightmare on Elm Street, Part 5 soundtrack. Dickinson's version went to #1 in the UK.

Iron Maiden has weathered its numerous personnel changes without a hitch. By the time of his 1993 exit from Maiden, Dickinson, a top-rated fencer and swordsman, had already published a novel, The Adventures of Lord Iffy Boatrace, and released a solo album. He reunited with his old mates in 1999, after the departure of his replacement, Blaze Bayley, formerly of the group Wolfsbane. At the same time Smith returned to the fold. That year's greatest-hits album, Ed Hunter, also spawned a namesake Maiden video game. The all-new Brave New World (2000) features a three-guitar lineup.

Chris Isaak

Born June 26, 1956, Stockton, CA

1985—Silvertone (Warner Bros.) 1987—Chris Isaak

1989—Heart Shaped World (Reprise) 1993—San Francisco Days 1995—Forever Blue 1996—Baja Sessions 1998—Speak of the Devil.

Chris Isaak's pompadoured good looks are something of a throwback to the '50s and early '60s, and so is his music. Isaak's tender, crooning vocal style and his habit of offsetting chugging rockers with haunted ballads of isolation and heartache have invited comparisons to Elvis Presley and Roy Orbison. The singer/songwriter, who has enjoyed good reviews and an enthusiastic cult following since the mid-'80s, scored his breakthrough hit in 1991 with "Wicked Game" (#6 pop).

Isaak didn't embark on a musical career until after graduation from the University of the Pacific with a degree in English and communications arts. (He also boxed for a while, getting his nose broken seven times.) The singer/guitarist moved to San Francisco, where he formed Silvertone, a band that came to the attention of producer Enk Jacobsen, who helped Isaak land a solo contract with Warner Bros. Isaak's 1985 debut album was named after his band, whose members have continued to back him on tour. (A new guitarist, Hershel Yatovitz, was added to the lineup beginning with Baja Sessions.)

Despite acclaim from the press and other musicians, Isaak's moody, guitar-driven songs weren't much of a success on radio or MTV. Then in 1990, after his third album, Heart Shaped World, had been declared a flop, director David Lynch used an instrumental version of "Wicked Game" on the soundtrack of Wild at Heart. The song caught the attention of an Atlanta, Georgia, radio station music director. He tracked down Isaak's original version and, with the support of listeners, soon had it on heavy rotation. Word spread to stations across the country, and the single hit the Top 10 in early 1991. His next album, San Francisco Days, reached the Top 40, but no singles charted.

Forever Blue in 1995 featured the mild hit "Somebody's Crying" (#45), and contained another track that would repeat Isaak's breakthrough of having a song from a past release gain renewed life thanks to a movie. "Baby Did a Bad, Bad Thing" was used to atmospheric effect in the coming attraction to Stanley Kubrick's last film, 1999's Eyes Wide Shut. In the interim, 1996's Baja Sessions included a cover of Orbison's "Only the Lonely," but neither that album nor 1998's Speak of the Devil produced any hit singles.

Isaak's classic handsomeness and dry sensibility have also gotten him work as an actor. After earning small parts in two Jonathan Demme films, Married to the Mob and The Silence of the Lambs, Isaak costarred in Bernardo Bertolucci's Little Buddha (1993), and appeared in such other works as Tom Hanks' That Thing You Do! (1996) and Hanks' mini-series From the Earth to the Moon (1998). He gained more exposure in 2001 playing a somewhat fictionalized version of himself in the Showtime series The Chris Isaak Show, which glamorized the lives of Isaak and his band mates.

The Isley Brothers

Formed ca. 1955, Cincinnati, OH

Rudolph Isley (b. Apr. 1, 1939), voc.; Ronald Isley (b. May 21, 1941), lead voc.; O'Kelly Isley (b. Dec. 25, 1937; d. Mar. 31, 1986, Alpine, NJ), voc.; Vernon Isley (d. 1955).

1955—(- V. Isley) 1959—Shout (RCA) 1962—Twist and Shout (Wand) 1964—Twisting and Shouting (United Artists) 1966—This Old Heart of Mine (Tamla) 1969—It's Our Thing (T-Neck) (+ Ernie Isley [b. Mar. 7, 1952], bass, perc., gtr.; + Marvin Isley [b. Aug. 18, 1953], bass, perc.; + Chris Jasper, kybds., synth.) 1971—In the Beginning . . . With Jimi Hendrix 1972—Brother, Brother, Brother 1973—3 + 3; Isleys' Greatest Hits 1974—Live It Up 1975—The Heat Is On 1976—Harvest for the World 1977—Go for Your Guns 1978—Showdown; 1979—Winner Take All 1980—Go All the Way 1981—Grand Slam 1983—Between the Sheets 1984—(- M. Isley; - E. Isley; - C. Jasper) 1985—Masterpiece (Warner Bros.) 1987—Smooth Sailin' 1989—Spend the Night 1990—(Ronald, Rudolph, Ernie, and Marvin Isley reunite) 1991—The Isley Brothers Story, vol. 1: The Rockin' Years (1959-68) (Rhino); The Isley Brothers Story, vol. 2: T-Neck Years (1968-85) 1992—Tracks of Life (Warner Bros.) 1996—Mission to Please (T-neck/Island) 1999—It's Your Thing: The Story of the Isley Brothers (Sony/Legacy). Isley, Jasper, Isley: 1985—Caravan of Love (Columbia) 1987—Different Drummer (CBS Associated). Chris Jasper solo: 1987—Superbad (CBS Associated). Ernie Isley solo: 1990—High Wire (Elektra).

A Cincinnati-born family group, which by now has included two generations of Isleys, the Isley Brothers started out on the black R&B circuit and had occasional pop and AOR successes. The original members (including a fourth brother, Vernon, who died in a 1955 bicycle accident) were encouraged to sing by their father, a professional singer, and their mother, a pianist who accompanied them when they performed in churches before Vernon's death. Tenor Ronnie Isley was soon designated lead vocalist.

In 1957, while still in their teens, Ronald, Rudolph, and O'Kelly (who later dropped the O') went to New York and over the next year recorded several unsuccessful neo-doo-wop tunes (including "The Angels Cried"). While performing at the Howard Theater in Washington, DC, in the summer of 1959, the group was spotted by an RCA executive, who signed the Isleys. Their debut single for the label was "Shout," written in the call-and-response gospel vocal style; it was the first and most successful of the RCA recordings produced for them by Hugo Peretti and Luigi Creatore. "Shout" reached only #47 on the pop chart but became an R&B standard (since covered by such diverse artists as Lulu, Joey Dee and the Starliners, Tom Petty, and the Blues Brothers). It eventually sold over a million copies, and the group earned enough to move the entire family from Cincinnati to New Jersey.

Although the Isleys toured widely, it wasn't until they'd left RCA in 1962 and recorded "Twist and Shout" (originally recorded by the Topnotes, later covered by the Beatles) on Wand Records that they had their next hit; it reached #17. Subsequent releases on Wand and United Artists failed to hit, and the brothers toured on the R&B circuit with their backup band, which included Jimmy James (a.k.a. Jimi Hendrix). Hendrix was with the Isleys for most of 1964 and made his first recordings with them, including several sides for Atlantic and one for the Isleys' T-Neck label ("Testify"). Some of his work with the group was released in 1971 as In the Beginning.

In 1965 the Isleys signed to the Motown subsidiary Tamla, but although they worked with Motown's top writing and production team, Holland-Dozier-Holland, only their first single, "This Old Heart of Mine" (#12, 1966) became a pop hit. The song hit #3 in England two years later, after the Isleys had moved there to sustain their career. In 1969 they returned home and began recording for their own label, T-Neck Records. Named after their adopted hometown of Teaneck, New Jersey, the label was a revival of a company started in the early '60s and then abandoned. Their first release, "It's Your Thing" (#2, 1969), became their biggest pop hit, eventually selling over 2 million copies; it won a Grammy for Best R&B Vocal Performance. "It's Your Thing" was written and produced by the Isleys themselves, as were "I Turned You On" (#23, 1969) and "Pop That Thang" (#24, 1972).

In 1969 the Isleys added a second generation brothers Ernest and Marvin, as well as brother-in-law Chns Jasper and nonrelative drummer Everett Collins. With Ernie's Hendrix-like guitar lines, the group often covered material by rock writers like Stephen Stills—whose "Love the One You're With" was a #18 hit in 1971 for the Isleys—Eric Burdon and War's "Spill the Wine" (#49, 1971), and Bob Dylan's "Lay Lady Lay" (#71, 1971).

"That Lady (Part I)" (#6, 1973), a 2-million-selling single, made 3 + 3 a platinum album. The Isleys' next big pop hit, the gold "Fight the Power (Part I)" (#4, 1975), came from The Heat Is On. While the following year's Harvest for the World didn't produce any gold singles, it still sold over half a million copies in three days.

In the latter part of the '70s, the Isleys adapted to the disco market. Though their pop hits albums (Go for Your Guns, Showdown, Winner Take All, Go All the Way, Grand Slam, Between the Sheets) continued to sell gold or platinum, and they scored a number of R&B #1 hits: "The Pride" (1977), "Take Me to the Next Phase (Part 1)" (1978), "I Wanna Be With You (Part 1)" (1979), and "Don't Say Good-night" (1980). Their more contemporary-styled R&B hits in the '80s and '90s included "Between the Sheets" (#3 R&B, 1983), "Choose Lover" (#6 R&B, 1983), "Smooth Sailing" (#3 R&B, 1986), "Spend the Night (Ce Soir)" (#3 R&B, 1989), "One of a Kind" (#38 R&B, 1990), "Sensitive Lover" (#24 R&B, 1992), "Let's Lay Together" (#24 R&B, 1996), "Floatin' on Your Love" (#14 R&B, 1996), and "Tears" (#12 R&B, 1997). In addition, Ronald Isley enjoyed success outside the group with a pair of duets: "Lay Your Troubles Down" (#10 R&B, 1990, with his future wife Angela Winbush) and a remake of "This Old Heart of Mine" (#10 pop, 1990, with Rod Stewart).

In 1984 Ernie and Marvin Isley and Chris Jasper left to form Isley, Jasper, Isley. They had a #1 R&B hit with "Caravan of Love" in 1985; the song went to #1 in the U.K. in an a cappella cover version by the Housemartins the following year. The trio's other R&B Top 20 hits include "Look the Other Way" (1984), "Insatiable Woman" (1986), "8th Wonder of the World" (1987), and "Givin' You Back the Love" (1987). O'Kelly died of a heart attack in 1986, and not long after, Rudolph left to join the ministry.

The Isley Brothers reunited in 1990. In 1992 they were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. In 1994 they won a copyright infringement suit against Michael Bolton, proving to the court's satisfaction that Bolton's hit "Love Is a Wonderful Thing" was based on their song of the same name. Bolton ignited controversy when, in commenting on the trial's outcome, he suggested that the jury had granted the Isleys a large award because they are black and he is white. The Isley Brothers were awarded 100 percent of the profits from the single and 28 percent of the profits from the album. In 2001 the Isley Brothers, featuring Ronald Isley a.k.a. Mr. Biggs, entered their sixth decade of hitmaking with "Contagious" (#41, pop, #10 R&B).

It's a Beautiful Day

Formed 1968, San Francisco, CA

David LaFlamme (b. Apr. 5, 1941, Salt Lake City, UT), elec. violin, voc.; Linda LaFlamme, kybds.; Val Fuentes (b. Nov. 25, 1947, Chicago, IL), drums; Pattie Santos (b. Nov. 16, 1949, San Francisco; d. Dec. 14, 1989, Healdsburg, CA), voc., perc.; Hal Wagenet (b. Willits, CA), gtr.; Michael Holman (b. Denver, CO), bass.

1968—(-L. LaFlamme; + Fred Webb [b. Santa Rosa, CA], kybds.) 1969—It's a Beautiful Day (Columbia) 1970—Marrying Maiden 1971—(-Holman; + Bill Gregory, gtr.; + Tom Fowler, bass) Choice Quality Stuff 1972—Live at Carnegie Hall 1973—(-D. LaFlamme; -Fowler; + Graig Block, violin; + Bud Cockrell, bass) It's a Beautiful Day . . . Today 1974—1001 Nights (group disbands) 1979—It's a Beautiful Day.

David LaFlamme solo: 1977—White Bird (Amherst) 1978—Inside Out.

Pattie Santos and Bud Cockrell: 1978—New Beginnings (A&M).

David and Linda La Flamme: 2000—Workin' the Gold Mine (Davlin).

It's a Beautiful Day came to national prominence with its FM standard, "White Bird." The group was led by David LaFlamme, who started playing violin at age five, and later played as soloist with the Utah Symphony. After serving in the army, he moved to California in 1962. Through the '60s he performed several styles of music, including jazz with the John Handy Concert Ensemble. LaFlamme often jammed with several future members of Big Brother and the Holding Company and was part of an early version of Dan Hicks and His Hot Licks.

By the time he formed It's a Beautiful Day on a summer afternoon (hence the group name), LaFlamme was playing jazz, classical, folk, and rock. He played on a specially adapted amplified solid-body five-string violin (the fifth string was a low C, so the instrument's range was as wide as that of a violin and viola combined), and LaFlamme's soloing established the group as a top local draw. Three of the songs on the group's self-titled 1969 debut, including "White Bird," were penned by LaFlamme and his wife, Linda, who left the group shortly thereafter and formed the communal San Francisco band Titus' Mother. It's a Beautiful Day stayed on the chart for more than a year and went gold.

In 1970 the group toured England. After several personnel changes, it released Marrying Maiden. The LP included "Don and Dewey," a tribute to the '50s duo of the same name and featured the eponymous Don "Sugarcane" Harris. The group disbanded in 1974 after its sixth LP, 1001 Nights, went largely unnoticed. By that time David LaFlamme had been tossed out by the others, who allegedly felt he took a disproportionate share of royalties. Replacement Graig Block was the grand-nephew of violin virtuoso Jasche Heifetz. LaFlamme later recorded two solo LPs, White Bird (1977) and Inside Out (1978). Two later band members, Bud Cockrell and David Jenkins, formed Pablo Cruise in 1973. In 1989 Pattie Santos died in a car accident. The remaining original members briefly re-grouped as It's a Beautiful Day and performed in 1998. Aided by IABD drummer Val Fuentes, the LaFlammes released a CD several years later.

a|b|c|d|e|f|g|h|i| |k|l|m|n|o|p|q|r|s|t|u|v|w|x|y|z

Freddie Jackson

Born Freddie Anthony Jackson, Oct. 2, 1958, New York, NY
 1985—Rock Me Tonight (Capitol) 1986—Just Like the First Time 1988—Don't Let Love Slip Away 1990—Do Me Again
 1992—Time for Love 1994—The Greatest Hits of Freddie Jackson; Here It Is (RCA); Freddie Jackson at Christmas
 1995—Private Party (Street Life) 1998—Anthology (RCA)
 1999—Life After 30 (Orpheus).

Freddie Jackson was among the most successful of the new R&B singers to follow in the wake of Luther Vandross. Along with such vocalists as James Ingram and Alexander O'Neal, Jackson came to epitomize the "love man"—the full-throated, neoclassic soul singer whose pleas of love and lust relied on displays of bravura, technique, and openhearted emotion.

Jackson began singing in church while growing up in Harlem. He later held down a day job as a word processor while singing backup vocals at night for such established singers as Evelyn "Champagne" King and Angela Bofill. After singing with the bands Mystic Merlin and LJE, he became so disheartened with the music business that he quit for a year, but upon returning he quickly came to the attention of vocalist Melba Moore. She took Jackson on tour with her as a backup vocalist and featured soloist, exposure that brought his long-awaited recording contract. "Rock Me Tonight (for Old Times Sake)" (#18 pop, #1 R&B) and "You Are My Lady" (#12 pop, #1 R&B), from his 1985 debut album, made him an instant star.

Jackson's first two albums went platinum, and he became a major live act, in 1989 he headlined four nights at Broadway's Lunt-Fontanne Theater. While pop hits tapered off, Jackson scored repeatedly on the R&B charts: "Tasty Love" (#1, 1986), "A Little Bit More" (with Melba Moore) (#1, 1986), "Do Me Again" (#1 1991), and "Main Course" (#2, 1991). In 1994, in hopes of reigniting his chart success, Jackson moved from Capitol to RCA. The anticipated revival not forthcoming, he again withdrew from the spotlight, only to resurface again in early 2000 with Life After 30.

Janet Jackson

Born Janet Damita Jackson, May 16, 1966, Gary, IN 1983—Janet Jackson (A&M) 1984—Dream Street 1986—Control 1989—Janet Jackson's Rhythm Nation 1814
 1993—janet. (Virgin) 1995—Design of a Decade 1986/1996 (A&M) 1997—The Velvet Rope (Virgin) 2001—All for You.

As the baby of pop music's best-known family, Janet Jackson could have spent her career in the shadow of her eight siblings, particularly brother Michael. Instead, with the help of some savvy creative and professional advisers outside the family, Janet established herself as the preeminent pop-funk diva of the late '80s and early '90s. Her wispy voice was a pale echo of Michael's, but on Janet's albums—and in her videos and live performances, which revealed a crisp, athletic dance technique not unlike her brother's—singing wasn't the point. Her slamming beats, infectious hooks, and impeccable production values were perfectly suited to the breezy zeal with which she declared her social and sexual independence.

As a young child, Jackson was a tomboy who aspired to be a jockey. When she was seven, though, her father, Joseph, encouraged her to join her brothers—by then famous as the Jackson 5—in their music and variety act. (Sister La Toya joined them for several shows in 1974, the following year, La Toya, eldest sister Rebbie, and brother Randy were all in on the act, while brother Jermaine bowed out.) Shows in Las Vegas resulted in a summer-replacement TV show in 1976 (on CBS), which led Janet to roles on the popular sitcoms Good Times and Diff'rent Strokes.

Next, Jackson secured a contract with A&M Records, and in 1982, while still managed and creatively guided by her father, she released a forgettable debut album, Janet Jackson. The album did yield a #6 R&B single, "Young Love." Another TV role, on the series Fame, followed, as did another unremarkable album, 1984's Dream Street, and another R&B hit, "Don't Stand Another Chance" (#9). Also in 1984, at the age of 18, Jackson defied her family by marrying singer James DeBarge, whose fledgling R&B sibling act DeBarge was being hyped as a successor to the Jacksons. The marriage was annulled after less than a year, but the seeds of Jackson's independence from the family dynasty, and her father in particular, were firmly planted.

Then John McClain, an A&M executive and family friend, suggested that Jackson work with Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis of the Time. Collaborating with these musician/writer/producers, Jackson recorded her breakthrough album, 1986's Control, which topped the pop and R&B album charts and spawned numerous hits: "What Have You Done for Me Lately" (#4 pop, #1 R&B), "Nasty" (#3 pop, #1 R&B), "When I Think of You" (#1 pop, #3 R&B), and, in 1987, "Control" (#5 pop, #1 R&B), "Let's Wait Awhile" (#2 pop, #1 R&B), and "The Pleasure Principle" (#14 pop, #1 R&B). Helping fuel these singles were Jackson's highly energized, elaborately staged videos, most of which featured movie-musical-inspired choreography by Paula Abdul, who was discovered by Jackie Jackson, Abdul's boyfriend during her L.A. Lakers cheerleading days.

Having asserted her adulthood and self-reliance with Control, by 1987 Jackson had dismissed her father as manager (as other siblings had done before her) before recording Rhythm Nation 1814. Control's successor dealt with larger social issues, like the need for tolerance, and found Jam and Lewis assuming more of the songwriting duties. (Years later, Jackson would also credit her boyfriend, René Elizondo Jr., for contributing ideas to many of her songs beginning with this album; it was known that he helped choreograph, and eventually directed, some of her videos.) Rhythm Nation hit #1 in the pop and R&B categories in 1989, and generated the smash singles "Miss You Much" (#1 pop and R&B) and, in 1990, "Rhythm Nation" (#2 pop, #1 R&B), "Escapade" (#1 pop, #1 R&B), "Alright" (#4 pop, #2 R&B), "Come Back to Me" (#2 pop, #2 R&B), "Black Cat" (#1 pop, #10 R&B), and "Love Will Never Do (Without You)" (#1 pop, #3 R&B). To promote the album, Jackson embarked on her first major tour, which matched the energy and spectacle of her videos.

In 1991 Virgin Records owner Richard Branson lured Jackson away from A&M with a contract worth more than $30 million. Her last original hit with A&M was a 1992 duet with Luther Vandross, "The Best Things in Life Are Free" (#10 pop, #1 R&B), recorded for the soundtrack to the film Mo'Nasty. In 1993 Jackson made her own movie debut as the heroine (opposite rapper Tupac Shakur) of director/screenwriter John Singleton's Poetic Justice, for which she received lukewarm reviews but an Oscar nomination for the song "Again."

That same year, Jackson's Virgin album janet. shot to the top of the pop and R&B charts, as did the single "That's the Way Love Goes." More Top 10 singles followed, including "If" (#4 pop, #3 R&B, 1993) and "Again" (#1 pop, #7 R&B, 1994). Her new material was just as confrontational, and more aggressively sexual, than her previous work had been; ditto for the accompanying tour, which featured Jackson in midriff-baring costumes, interacting suggestively with male dancers—indeed, more reminiscent of Madonna than Michael. While Janet's once squeaky-clean image wasn't shattered by scandal as her brother's was, it was clear by the early '90s that the littlest Jackson was nobody's baby, and very much her own woman.

Jackson's status as a hitmaker led her to help her brother Michael regain some credibility by collaborating with him on the duet and elaborate video for "Scream" (#5 pop, #2 R&B) in 1995. The same year, she also had a solo hit with "Runaway" (#3 pop, #6 R&B). She'd continue to please her fans with her next album, The Velvet Rope (#1 pop, #2 R&B), in 1997. At times still sensual in nature—including a cover of Rod Stewart's seduction song "Tonight's the Night," without a change in the gender of the woman being sung to—much of the album had a melancholy feel and self-doubting lyrics. While doing interviews to promote the album and its tour, Jackson admitted to dealing with depression and long-standing self-esteem issues while working on the album. It did produce its share of hits, including "Got 'Til It's Gone" (#3 R&B, 1997), based around a sample of Joni Mitchell's "Big Yellow Taxi" and featuring the rapper Q-Tip, "Together Again" (#1 pop, #8 R&B, 1997), and "I Get Lonely" (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1998), featuring the group BLACKstreet. In 1999 she enjoyed a hit with Busta Rhymes, "What's It Gonna Be?!", which hit the top of the R&B singles chart.

But Jackson's life wasn't everything it appeared to be. Fans were surprised when, in 2000, Jackson's longtime creative and romantic partner, Elizondo, filed for divorce from the singer after nine years of marriage. Although Elizondo was seen as a loving, stable presence in Jackson's life, it had not been public knowledge that the couple had ever married. Jackson explained that she'd wanted to protect the union from media scrutiny. Also in 2000 Jackson returned to acting, costarring with multiple versions of Eddie Murphy in Nutty Professor II: The Klumps, which featured Jackson's "Doesn't Really Matter" (#5, 2000). In 2001 Jackson released the double-platinum All for You (#1, 2001), featuring the #1 title track.

Jermaine Jackson: See the Jackson 5

Joe Jackson

Born David Ian Jackson, Aug. 11, 1954, Burton-on-Trent, Eng.
 1979—Look Sharp (A&M); I'm the Man 1980—Beat Crazy
 1981—Joe Jackson's Jumpin' Jive 1982—Night and Day
 1983—Mike's Murder soundtrack 1984—Body and Soul
 1986—Big World 1987—Will Power 1988—Live 1980/86
 1989—Blaze of Glory 1991—Laughter and Lust (Virgin)
 1994—Night Music 1997—Heaven and Hell (Sony Classical)
 1999—Symphony No. 1 2000—Live in New York: Summer in the City (Manticore/Sony Classical); Night and Day II.

When singer Joe Jackson first emerged at the height of 1979's pop-new-wave explosion, he was frequently compared to Elvis Costello and Graham Parker. Beginning with his third album, however, Jackson shattered his "angry young man" image and released a series of credible forays into reggae and big-band jazz as well as symphonic and other idioms. As Jackson has made abundantly clear in interviews, a number of songs (including "Hit Single" and "Obvious Song"), and his controversial 1984 statement "Video Is Killing Music," he cares little for the trappings or machinations of pop stardom. Like the late Frank Zappa, he considers himself primarily a composer, not a rock star.

Jackson began studying violin at age 11, but after a few years he persuaded his parents to buy him a piano so that he could write songs. He later studied oboe and percussion as well. He received a scholarship to study composition at London's Royal Academy of Music from 1971 to 1974. After graduation he formed a band called Arms and Legs. While working as musical director at the Portsmouth Playboy Club, Jackson produced an LP-length demo of his songs that got him a publishing contract with Albion Music. Soon afterward, A&M producer David Kershenbaum got Jackson a recording contract with his label.

Look Sharp was recorded in a week and a half. The single "Is She Really Going Out With Him?" hit #21, and the album went to #20. I'm the Man, released six months later, hit #22. Jackson was quickly labeled a power-pop performer, an image that was changed with the release of Beat Crazy, an ominous reggae-inflected LP. Jackson himself produced it, and his group was billed for the first time as the Joe Jackson Band. The LP was less commercially successful (#41), and a three-song EP that included Jackson singing Jimmy Cliff's "The Harder They Come" (available only on British import) got considerably more U.S. airplay.

Within months of the LP's release, Jackson was back in the studio working on Jumpin' Jive, a collection of '40s swing tunes, including some by Louis Jordan. A novel idea at the time, Jumpin' Jive was fairly popular (#42) but yielded no hit singles, although Jackson toured the U.S. with a big band

In 1982 Jackson moved to New York to record Night and Day, which incorporated hints of salsa, funk, and minimalism, the sleek, jazzish "Steppin' Out" (#6) sold 250,000 copies, and the album went gold. His last Top 40 single to date was "You Can't Get What You Want (Till You Know What You Want)" (#15, 1984), from Body and Soul.

In 1986 Jackson recorded Big World over three nights before a live audience. Each subsequent album—the autobiographical Blaze of Glory, the instrumental Will Power, and the acclaimed Laughter and Lust—found critical favor but middling commercial success. Though Jackson has proved more popular outside the United States, where his eclecticism, daring, and outspokenness are embraced, he has been living mostly in New York since 1984. The city was the inspiration for a followup to Night and Day, 2000's Night and Day II, and the setting for a live album featuring covers along with some of Jackson's hits rearranged for piano, bass, and drums.

Beginning with his 1983 appearance on the soundtrack for Mike's Murder, Jackson has scored a number of films, including Tucker (1988), Queens Logic (1990), and Three of Hearts (1992). He has also turned toward classical music, composing for and performing with the Tokyo Philharmonic Orchestra (Shujin No Je, 1985), writing classical/pop hybrids (Night Music, 1994; Heaven and Hell, 1997), and even a full-on symphony (Symphony No. 1, 1999). In 1999 Jackson published a memoir, A Cure for Gravity: A Musical Pilgrimage.

Mahalia Jackson

Born Oct. 26, 1911, New Orleans, LA; died Jan. 27, 1972, Chicago, IL

1963—Bless This House (Columbia); Mahalia Jackson: Greatest Hits 1968—Sings the Best-loved Hymns of Dr. Martin Luther King 1971—Sings America's Favorite Hymns 1972—The Great Mahalia Jackson 1976—How I Got Over 1991—Gospels, Spirituals and Hymns (Legacy/Columbia).

Mahalia Jackson is generally regarded as one of the best and certainly the most popular gospel singers ever. Her forceful, bluesy style was greatly influenced by Ma Rainey and Bessie Smith, though Jackson never sang secular music. Aretha Franklin cites Jackson as her favorite singer.

Jackson and family regularly attended New Orleans' Mount Moriah Baptist Church. Despite her strict religious training, she heard and enjoyed New Orleans' wealth of jazz and blues. She often listened to the music of Smith and Rainey on records. In 1927 she moved to Chicago, where she worked as a domestic and a nurse. In 1935 Jackson made her recording debut after scouts from Decca Records had heard her sing at a funeral. From Decca, Jackson moved to the small Apollo label, where she became a gospel legend. Her recording of "Move On Up" sold more than 2 million copies. In concert Jackson was known to extend it to as long as 25 minutes. Crucial to her popularity was her accompanist, pianist Mildred Palls, whom record executive John Hammond called "the greatest gospel accompanist that ever lived."

In 1954 Jackson signed to Columbia Records, where A&R director Mitch Miller used strings and choirs to back her, increasing her popularity with whites, but inhibiting much of her earlier fire. In 1996 gospel singer Mavis Staples and pianist Lucky Peterson released Spirituals and Gospel Dedicated to Mahalia Jackson, a tribute to their mentor Jackson, who died of heart failure in 1972.

Marlon Jackson: See the Jackson 5

Michael Jackson

Born Aug. 29, 1958, Gary, IN 1971—Got to Be There (Motown) 1972—Ben 1973—Music and Me 1975—Forever, Michael: The Best of Michael Jackson 1979—Off the Wall (Epic) 1982—Thriller 1987—Bad 1991—Dangerous 1995—HIStory: Past, Present, and Future, Book I 1997—Blood on the Dance Floor: HIStory in the Mix (Sony).

In the years since Michael Jackson made his first national television appearance with his brothers at the age of 11, he has evolved from a singing and dancing soul music prodigy to the self-proclaimed but widely acknowledged "King of Pop." As a musician, he has ranged from Motown's snappy dance fare and lush ballads to techno-edged New Jack Swing to work that incorporates both funk rhythms and hard-rock guitar. At his early-'80s zenith, riding the crest of his best-selling album, Thriller, spotlighted in his red zippered jacket and single white sequined glove, he was ubiquitous. A superb businessman, Jackson has exerted unparalleled control over his career and has, in effect, managed himself since he and his brothers (sans Jermaine) left Motown for Epic Records in 1975. As a singer, dancer, and writer, Jackson's talent is unassailable.

With the passage of time, however, and especially since 1993, it is Jackson's personality that has dominated headlines formerly dedicated to his prodigious artistic accomplishments and humanitarian efforts. His chummy work was enormous and focused always on his highly publicized identification with children. Infatuated with Peter Pan and E.T., Jackson seemed a kind of childlike extraterrestrial, benign (if in an eerie way), either sexless or sexually ambiguous, neither black nor white. Secluded by his celebrity, he appeared to touch down to earth only on stage or videotape; fanatically private, he generated endless gossip. In 1993, with Jackson facing allegations of child molestation, his career was rocked with scandal as gargantuan as his fame. Not since Shirley Temple has a child star so entranced the American public, and the massive public soul-searching the allegations against Jackson inspired were but one indication of the almost inestimable role he has played in shaping pop culture. Jackson returned to the tabloids in 1994 with the shocking announcement that he had wed Lisa Marie Presley, an act that led to even more speculation about his motives but which undeniably made him, until his divorce two years later, the son-in-law of the late Elvis Presley.

The Jackson 5's lead singer and focal point, Michael became more popular than the group as the '80s began. He had a string of solo hits in the early '70s ("Got to Be There" [#4, 1971], "Rockin' Robin" [#2, 1972], "Ben" [#1, 1972]) and played the Scarecrow in the film version of The Wiz in 1978. But it was with veteran producer Quincy Jones, whom he met while filming The Wiz, that Jackson began his amazing rise. In 1979 the team's Off the Wall made him the first solo artist to release four Top 10 hits from a single album: "Don't Stop Till You Get Enough" (#1, 1979), "Rock With You" (#1, 1979), "Off the Wall" (#10, 1980), and "She's Out of My Life" (#10, 1980) presented him as a mature artist whose funk rhythms and pop melodies appealed equally to blacks and whites. In the album's wake, the Jacksons' Triumph sold a million copies and prompted a $5.5 million-grossing tour. Even at this early stage, Jackson and his brothers were exploring video and the short film that accompanied this album's title track was an imaginative, technically advanced effort.

In 1982 Jackson and Jones collaborated on a storytelling record of Steven Spielberg's E.T. The album, which was hastily withdrawn from the market due to a legal dispute, is now a prime Jackson collectable. That year Diana Ross, one of Jackson's mentors, scored a #1 hit with Michael's "Muscles." Jackson had also begun an alliance with Paul McCartney, who had written "Girlfriend" for Off the Wall. The two reconvened to cowrite the duet "The Girl Is Mine" (#2, 1982).

It was 1983 that marked Jackson's complete ascension. With Quincy Jones again producing, Thriller yielded, in addition to "The Girl Is Mine," two other hit singles by early 1983—"Billie Jean" (#1, 1983) and "Beat It" (#1, 1983) (with a guitar solo delivered gratis by Eddie Van Halen)—and went on to become the best-selling album in history, with over 45 million copies sold worldwide. Charting at #1 in every Western country, it spent a record 37 weeks at U.S. #1. The first album ever to simultaneously head the singles and albums charts for both R&B and pop, it eventually generated an unprecedented seven Top 10 singles, including "P.Y.T. (Pretty Young Thing)" (#10, 1983), "Wanna Be Startin' Somethin'" (#5, 1983), "Human Nature" (#7, 1983), and "Thriller" (#4, 1983). Of its record 12 Grammy nominations, it won eight in 1983, a historical sweep.

Thriller also broke through MTV's de facto color line, where videos by black artists had rarely been shown. Michael's self-choreographed "Beat It," costing $160,000, received extensive play. The "Thriller" video, with a voiceover by horror movie stalwart Vincent Price and state-of-the-art special effects, was directed by John Landis, establishing Jackson's practice of working with notable filmmakers. In May, performing solo and with his brothers on NBC's 25 Years of Motown special, Michael popularized his distinctive "Moonwalk" dance step, and, in performing "Billie Jean," was the only artist featured on the program whose repertoire included a non-Motown song. Later in 1983, while another duet with McCartney—"Say Say Say" from Paul's Pipes of Peace— topped the charts for six weeks, Jackson announced a $5 million sponsorship deal with Pepsi-Cola.

In 1984, while filming a Pepsi commercial Jackson was seriously injured when a pyrotechnic effect went awry, setting his hair on fire. The singer underwent surgery for scalp burns; he later received facial laser surgery. Rumors about other reconstructive work began shortly before the release of Thriller and would build in coming years. Among the procedures he has been rumored to have undergone are facelifts, a purported six nose surgeries, and the lightening of his skin with chemicals (it was also alleged that he took female hormones to maintain his falsetto).

After receiving a Presidential Award from Ronald Reagan in June 1984, Jackson joined his brothers on a supporting tour for the Jacksons' Victory (from which Michael's duet with Mick Jagger, "State of Shock," reached #3). The highly publicized tour, which Jackson undertook reluctantly, was plagued by mismanagement (boxing promoter Don King was in charge, much to Jackson's displeasure, and his parents were coproducers), internal strife (at one point, several of the Jackson brothers, their parents, and numerous other parties had each retained their own lawyers), and general mismanagement (the method of selling tickets prompted a public outcry). A disillusioned Jackson donated his revenues to children's charities. Nonetheless, the shows were considered spectacular, brimming with high-tech special effects. Jackson ended the year by receiving a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame.

In 1985 Jackson cowrote with Lionel Richie "We Are the World," the theme song for USA for Africa. It reached #1 and embellished Michael's reputation as a humanitarian. Jackson's relationship with Paul McCartney soured later that year as, bidding against both McCartney and Yoko Ono, he secured the ATV music publishing catalogue for $47.5 million: among ATV's holdings, more than 250 Lennon/McCartney songs (Jackson has long been known inside the industry for his almost encyclopedic command of the details of his business dealings.)

Shortly after signing a second contract with Pepsi in 1986 for $15 million, Jackson released Bad, the biggest-selling album of all time, in 1987. Its 17-minute title track video was directed by Martin Scorsese. Bad generated five #1s in 1987-88: "Just Can't Stop Loving You," "Bad," "The Way You Make Me Feel," "Man in the Mirror," and "Dirty Diana." The Bad tour—over a year long—became the biggest-grossing tour in history and one of the most expensive (Jackson's entourage included 250 people).

With 1988 came Jackson's long-awaited, heavily illustrated, and brief autobiography, Moonwalk, in which he claimed that his father, Joseph Jackson, had hit him as a child. Generally, however, the book (edited by Jacqueline Onassis) was considered unrevealing (A second volume of his writings, Dancing the Dream, was published in 1992 to less enthusiastic response.)

By the end of the '80s, Jackson had moved from the Encino, California, family home to Neverland, an estimated $28-million, 2700-acre California ranch complete with ferris wheel, an exotic menagerie, a movie theater, and a security staff of 40. There Jackson—famous for clean-living (he neither smoked, drank, nor used drugs, and was rarely seen in the company of a woman)—hosted an endless series of parties for children, many of them disabled, critically ill, or underprivileged.

His popularity seemingly unassailable, Jackson signed a $28-million deal with L.A. Gear sportswear to be its spokesperson, but the idea proved a failure and Jackson was dropped after one commercial. At the start of the '90s, however, Jackson's popularity was massive enough to land him the biggest contract ever awarded an entertainer. Jackson signed a $65-million deal with Sony Corporation in 1991 that promised him an unprecedented share of the profits from his next six albums, his own record label, a role in developing video software products, and a chance to star in movies. Reportedly he would receive more than $120 million an album if each could match the sales of Thriller. Sony reported that it expected revenues of $1 billion from the partnership. By 1991, Jackson's celebrity status was unquestioned—he'd hosted Elizabeth Taylor's eighth wedding at Neverland and been publicly praised by such Hollywood establishment figures as Fred Astaire, Jane Fonda, and Katharine Hepburn—and he seemed unstoppable.

In 1991, at a recording cost of $10 million, Dangerous was released. Coproduced by New Jack Swing creator Teddy Riley, the album featured material ("Heal the World," "Who Is It") that recalled his work with Quincy Jones, with whom he had parted ways shortly after Bad. Riley, however, toughened and updated Jackson's sound, stripping off some of the smooth studio gloss of his previous works. With the $1.2-million video for the single "Black or White," Jackson demanded that MTV and Black Entertainment Television (BET) announce him as "the King of Pop" (a fact he would later deny in a live televised interview with Oprah Winfrey). Hoping to outdistance Bad's over $20 million in sales, he prepared for a spectacular world tour. Also in 1992, he embarked on a five-nation African tour; there, however, he was widely criticized for his aloof behavior. That same year, with his personal fortune estimated at $200 million, Jackson established the Heal the World Foundation to raise awareness of children-related issues, including abuse.

With 1993 came Jackson's crisis. The year, however, began auspiciously. Appearing in January at the NAACP Image Awards, the American Music Awards, and the pre-inaugural gala for President Bill Clinton, he also reached 91 million viewers in his half-time performance at Super Bowl XXVII, the most widely viewed—and many said, boring—entertainment event in TV history. And he announced the start of a $1.25 million program to provide drug prevention and counseling services to L.A. children following that city's riots. In a February TV interview with a less than incisive Oprah Winfrey, he revealed that he suffered from vitiligo, a disease he maintained discolored his skin, and that he was a victim of abuse at the hands of his father, Joseph. He tried to dispel such long-standing tabloid rumors as the one that he once tried to buy the bones of the Elephant Man or had slept in a hyperbaric chamber. He also said that he was dating movie actress Brooke Shields, who had been a companion during the Thriller period. The interview was one of the most-watched television programs in history. In March he formed Michael Jackson Productions Inc., an independent film company that would give a share of its profits to his Heal the World Foundation. In June he debuted his MJJ/Epic record label, releasing the Free Willy soundtrack.

But scandal erupted on August 17 when a Beverly Hills psychiatrist approached the L.A. Police after a 13-year-old patient claimed that Jackson had fondled him. Later, specific charges brought by the boy's father claimed that Jackson had sexually abused the boy at his house earlier in the year. After the father obtained a ruling to deny Jackson contact with the son, the police raided Neverland, seizing videotapes and other possible evidence (nothing incriminating turned up). While traveling to Bangkok for the Dangerous tour, Jackson denied the charges, his security consultant maintaining that the boy's father had attempted to extort $20 million to start a production company (he added that Jackson received at least 25 such extortion threats a year). With Pepsi supporting him and his retinue denying a suicide attempt, Jackson turned 35 at the end of August. Shortly thereafter, Jackson canceled his second Singapore show, claiming migraine headaches.

In September Jackson's sister, La Toya, reported that he used to spend the night with young boys in his room, and two former employees, who maintained that Jackson owed them $500,000 in wages, asserted that they'd witnessed Jackson's sexual involvement with several young boys. Jackson then pulled out of a deal to contribute the title track to the movie Addams Family Values. After Jackson's alleged victim filed a civil suit for seduction and sex abuse, the singer canceled the rest of the Dangerous tour, maintaining that pressure from the charges had left him addicted to painkillers. Pepsi then ended its 10-year partnership with the star. In November five former Neverland guards sued Jackson for firing them, allegedly because they knew about his relationships with minors. Toward the end of the year, business continued, with Sony announcing that Dangerous sales had topped 20 million and Jackson signing a $70-million, five-year deal with EMI Music to administer his ATV catalogue. But in December, back in the U.S., Jackson in a four-minute cable TV broadcast confronted his accusers and decried the extensive examination of his body that the police had conducted as part of their investigation.

On January 25, 1994, lawyers for Jackson and the alleged victim announced a private settlement of the boy's case, despite the fact that Jackson resolutely continued to deny wrongdoing. While terms were not disclosed, estimates of Jackson's payment reached as high as $26 million. One day earlier, following a criminal investigation into Jackson's claims that the boy's father was part of an extortion plot against him, the D.A. declined to file charges. The L.A. district attorney also investigated the claims of a second boy that Jackson had shared a bed with him, even while the boy alleged no impropriety on the singer's part. The district attorney, also finding no evidence of wrongdoing, concluded the investigation. In August a statement issued by MJJ Productions verified two months of rumors that Jackson had married 26-year-old Lisa Marie Presley, who had been estranged from her husband, with whom she had two children.

Jackson and his bride appeared on television with Diane Sawyer to discuss the marriage; it would be a short-lived one, as the couple divorced in 1996. Jackson later married Debbie Rowe, a nurse he'd met in the early '80s when undergoing treatment for vitiligo. A boy, Prince, and a girl, Paris, resulted from the union.

In 1995, ushered in with a $30-million marketing campaign, the largest in history, Jackson's HIStory, a double-album of hits and new material, was released. Featuring "Scream," a duet with his sister Janet, the album dropped out of the Top 10 after only a few weeks. The song "They Don't Care About Us" including the lyric "Jew me/sue me" provoked charges of anti-Semitism even from such stalwart Jackson supporters as Steven Spielberg. In 1997 a followup, Blood on the Dance Floor: HIStory in the Mix (#24), also fared poorly (by Jackson's admittedly remarkable standards).

In 1997 Jackson was found innocent by Milanese authorities of plagiarism for his song "Will You Be There" (from Dangerous and used in the film Free Willy); Italian singer/songwriter Albano Carrisi had accused Jackson of copying his 1986 song "I Cigni Di Balaka." In 1999, after several appeals courts had continued to rule in Jackson's favor, a criminal court in Rome found Jackson guilty of plagiarism, but the approximately $3,000 fine was suspended. Since then, Jackson's lawyers have appealed the ruling in an attempt to remove the judgment against him. Jackson is slated to star as the famed writer in a film entitled The Nightmares of Edgar Allan Poe (the filming has not started as of early 2001), and was reportedly working on a new album. Also, in England, he enjoyed a kind of vicarious revival, with British dance-music artists recording a number of hits featuring Jackson samples.

Millie Jackson

Born 1943, Thompson, GA

1972—Millie Jackson (Spring) 1973—It Hurts So Good
 1974—Caught Up 1977—Feelin' Bitchy 1978—Get It
Out'cha System 1979—A Moment's Pleasure; Royal Rappin's
 (with Isaac Hayes) (Polydor); Live and Uncensored (Spring)
 1980—For Men Only (Polydor); I Had to Say It 1981—Just a
Lil' Bit Country 1982—Live and Outrageous (Rated XXX)
 1986—An Imitation of Love (Jive) 1988—The Tide Is Turning
 1992—Young Man, Older Woman 1994—Rock N' Soul
 (Ichiban) 1995—It's Over!? 1997—Totally Unrestricted:
The Millie Jackson Anthology (Rhino).

Soul singer and songwriter Millie Jackson was internationally popular for well over a decade, thanks to live shows that interwove gritty deep-soul singing and raunchy raps. Jackson grew up in Georgia and lived with her grandfather, a preacher, until she ran away at age 14. She came to New York

City and worked as a model, mostly for confession magazines. In 1964, on a bet, she jumped onstage and sang at the Palm Cafe in Harlem. For the rest of the '60s, she worked as a singer around New York. She cut a single in 1969 for MGM, but kept her day job until she signed with Spring Records in 1971.

Jackson had her first soul hit in 1972 with "A Child of God" (#22 R&B), followed by "Ask Me What You Want" (#14 R&B), and "It Hurts So Good" (#3 R&B, 1973), which was included on the soundtrack of Cleopatra Jones. Her breakthrough was the 1974 album Caught Up, the first recording of her live act. It was a concept album on which Jackson played a wife on one side and the Other Woman on the other; it yielded a hit single, "(If Loving You Is Wrong) I Don't Want to Be Right" (#42 pop, 1974), and went gold. Both Feelin' Bitchy and Get It Out'cha System went gold, although Jackson's language was often so blunt that she got no airplay. Feelin' Bitchy was a gold album. Jackson recorded a duet album, Royal Rappin's, with Isaac Hayes in 1979 and continued to play large halls and record regularly into the early '80s, acting as her own manager and coproducer, and with her own publishing company, Double Ak-Shun Music.

Following her 1981 excursion to Nashville for Just a Lil' Bit Country, Jackson was absent from the recording scene for almost five years—aside from a noncharting 1985 duet with Elton John, "Act of War" (on his To Be Continued). In 1986 she signed a new deal with Jive Records. An Imitation of Love, on which Jackson finally ceded production control to others, yielded a Top 10 R&B hit in "Hot! Wild! Unrestricted! Crazy Love!" But her commercial profile never again ascended to its '70s heights; ironically, Jackson—with her soulful vocalizing, insistence on live bands, and practiced stagecraft—found herself displaced by the rap music she'd so vividly presaged. In the mid-'90s Jackson turned the basis of the song "Young Man, Older Woman" into a theatrical musical comedy.

Rebbie Jackson: See the Jackson 5

Wanda Jackson

Born Oct. 20, 1937, Maud, OK
 1960—Rockin' With Wanda (Capitol) 1966—Wanda Jackson Sings Country Blues 1972—Praise the Lord 1974—Country Gospel (Word) 1979—Greatest Hits (Capitol) 1990—Rockin' in the Country: The Best of Wanda Jackson (Rhino) 1996—Vintage Collections (Capitol).

Wanda Jackson burst on to the predominantly male rockabilly scene in the mid-'50s with a dynamic stage presence, a robust voice, and a gift for songwriting. Dubbed the "Queen of Rockabilly," she has also performed country and gospel songs over the course of her long career.

Growing up in Oklahoma and Bakersfield, California, Jackson first sang professionally at age nine. At 13, she got her own radio program, and soon after she began singing with such country & western stars as Hank Thompson. In 1954 she got a record deal with Decca. A 1955 appearance with Elvis Presley caused Jackson to add rockabilly to her repertoire, when Presley raved that her strong voice was perfect for the style. In 1956 she signed to Capitol and her repertoire became feisty and in your face: "Hot Dog," "Fujiyama Mama," "Mean, Mean Man," and particularly, her biggest hit, "Let's Have a Party" (#37, 1960), which featured backing by Gene Vincent's Blue Caps. By the early '60s, with rockabilly waning, she returned to country, scoring with her self-penned "Right or Wrong" (#29, 1961) and "In the Middle of a Heartache" (#27, 1961). Jackson became very popular overseas ("Fujiyama Mama" was a big hit in Japan), and she has recorded in German, Dutch, and Japanese (phonetically).

In June 1971 she and her husband became born-again Christians, so she began adding gospel songs to her repertoire. In the mid-'90s Jackson toured with Rosie Flores, and found a new generation of fans. She continues to tour throughout the world.

The Jackson 5/The Jacksons/ The Jackson Family

Formed 1967, Gary, IN
 Sigmund Escó "Jackie" Jackson (b. May 4, 1951, Gary), voc.; Toriano Adaryll "Tito" Jackson (b. Oct. 15, 1953, Gary), gr., voc.; Jermaine La Jaune Jackson (b. Dec. 11, 1954, Gary), voc., bass; Marlon David Jackson (b. Mar. 12, 1957, Gary), voc.; Michael Joe Jackson (b. Aug. 29, 1958, Gary), lead voc.
 1969—I Want You Back (a.k.a. Diana Ross Presents the Jackson 5) (Motown) 1970—ABC; Third Album; Christmas Album 1971—Maybe Tomorrow 1972—The Jackson 5's Greatest Hits 1973—Get It Together 1974—Dancing Machine 1975—(+ Steven Randall "Randy" Jackson [b. Oct. 29, 1961, Gary], voc., kybds.) 1976—The Jacksons (Epic) 1977—Motown Special (Motown); Anthology; Goin' Places (Epic) 1978—Destiny 1980—Triumph (Epic) 1981—Live 1984—Victory 1989—2300 Jackson Street.
 Jermaine Jackson solo: 1972—Jermaine (Motown) 1973—Come Into My Life 1976—My Name Is Jermaine 1977—Feel the Fire 1978—Frontiers 1980—Let's Get Serious; Jermaine 1981—I Like Your Style 1982—Let Me Tickle Your Fancy 1984—Jermaine Jackson (Arista) 1986—Precious Moments 1989—Don't Take It Personal 1991—You Said (La Face/Arista).
 Jackie Jackson solo: 1973—Jackie Jackson (Motown) 1989—Be the One (Polydor).
 Marlon Jackson solo: 1987—Baby Tonight (Capitol).
 Randy Jackson solo, as Randy and the Gypsies: 1989—Randy & the Gypsies (A&M); as Randy Jackson's China Rain: 1991—Bed of Nails.
 As the Jackson Family: ca. 1976—Jackson 5 + Maureen "Rebbie" Jackson (b. May 29, 1950, Gary), voc.; + La Toya Jackson (b. May 29, 1956, Gary), voc.; + Janet Jackson (b. May 16, 1966, Gary), voc.
 Rebbie Jackson solo: 1984—Centipede (Columbia) 1986—

Reaction 1988—R U Tuff Enuff 1998—Yours Faithfully (MJJ).
 La Toya Jackson solo: 1980—La Toya Jackson (Polydor)
 1981—My Special Love 1984—Heart Don't Lie (Private I)
 1986—Imagination 1988—You're Gonna Get Rocked; La Toya
 (Teldec) 1994—From Nashville to You (Mar Gor) 1995—Bad Girl (Prime Cuts).

Since its national debut in 1969 with "I Want You Back," the Jackson 5 has been the most accomplished, successful black pop soul vocal group and one of the most popular family acts in pop music. Over the group's long and unparalleled career, the Jackson brothers upheld and expanded the R&B/soul vocal traditions of their idols and mentors, evolving from a Temptations-style, closely directed vocal group to a self-contained soul/disco/pop powerhouse. The constant media focus on lead-singing prodigy Michael Jackson [see entry] has overshadowed the contributions of his brothers, especially in the later phase of their career, when they each wrote and produced material on the group's two most acclaimed albums, Triumph and Destiny.

The group's father, Joseph Jackson, had been a guitarist in a group called the Falcons (not to be confused with the group of "You're So Fine" fame) with his brother and three other men. Shortly after Joseph married Katherine Scuse, their quickly growing family forced him to give up his musical ambitions. Although he worked as a crane operator, he maintained an interest in music, often playing his electric guitar in the house. Katherine often led the children in singing songs, especially harmony-rich country & western standards, which she loved.

Beginning in the early '60s, Tito, Jermaine, and Jackie performed around Gary, Indiana, as the Jackson Family; around 1964 Michael and Marlon joined, and the group became the Jackson 5. Popular in their hometown, in 1968 they cut one unsuccessful single, "Big Boy" b/w "You've Changed." By then the group (which included keyboardist Ronnie Rancifer and drummer Johnny Jackson [no relation]) had been opening shows for such R&B stars as Sam and Dave, the Isley Brothers, the O'Jays, Gladys Knight and the Pips, James Brown, and the Temptations, among others. On weekends, they traveled by van throughout the Midwest, venturing as far from home as Phoenix, Arizona, and Washington, DC. Though numerous Motown performers knew of and worked with the young group, it was probably Bobby Taylor of the Vancouvers and Gladys Knight (not Diana Ross, as label publicity later claimed) who brought them to Berry Gordy Jr.'s attention. Although Gordy did not attend their Motown audition, it was filmed, and within months the Jackson 5 were signed to the label.

The Jacksons: Michael Jackson, Tito Jackson, Randy Jackson, Jackie Jackson, Marlon Jackson

Although Motown would remain a force in black music for several more years, historically speaking, the Jackson 5 was perhaps the last act to benefit from the label's all-encompassing approach to talent development. Newly relocated to L.A., Motown no longer kept a staff of choreographers, etiquette teachers and coaches. Instead, Berry Gordy entrusted much of the Jackson 5's early training to one of his most recent hirings, Suzanne de Passe. The boys and their father were moved to L.A., where the boys lived with Diana Ross or Berry Gordy. Even from this early point, friction between Gordy and Joseph Jackson over the handling of the Jackson 5 was evident, although Joseph remained at least nominally their manager.

In January 1970 "I Want You Back" hit #1 and sold over 2 million copies, becoming the first of a string of 13 Top 20 singles for Motown, including "ABC" (#1, 1970), "The Love You Save" (#1, 1970), "I'll Be There" (#1, 1970, their biggest seller), "Mama's Pearl" (#2, 1971), "Never Can Say Goodbye" (#2, 1971), "Maybe Tomorrow" (#20, 1971), "Sugar Daddy" (#10, 1971), "Little Bitty Pretty One" (#13, 1972), "Lookin' Through the Windows" (#16, 1972), "Corner of the Sky" (#18, 1972), "Dancing Machine" (#2, 1974), and "I Am Love" (#15, 1975). Many of the group's Motown hits were written by "The Corporation" (Freddie Perren, Fonce Mizell, Deke Richards, and Berry Gordy Jr.). The Jackson 5 toured frequently, always tutored and supervised by the Motown staff.

In 1972 the group received a commendation from Congress for its "contributions to American youth." Throughout the '70s and '80s, the Jacksons and their family (which included three sisters: Rebbie, La Toya, and Janet) were considered ideal role models. Prompted by Motown, the national media regularly touted the family's strong religious beliefs (mother Katherine and several of the children, including Michael, were devout Jehovah's Witnesses) and work ethic. In fact, the family was often erroneously depicted as having arisen from the ghetto, a PR fabrication that infuriated the Jackson parents.

The Jackson 5 voiced their animated likenesses for a Saturday morning cartoon series in 1971, and beginning in 1976 all nine siblings starred in The Jacksons, a CBS musical-variety program. During that time, the entire clan also appeared in Las Vegas shows that featured the Jackson 5 (now six with the inclusion of youngest son Randy) and their three sisters. Like many young singing acts, the Jacksons had witnessed a decline in record sales through the mid-'70s. They began to outgrow the teen-idol market, and through the decade all of the brothers, except Michael and Randy, maimed early. While dance music was beginning to dominate black music, Motown stubbornly held the Jackson 5 to its old formula rather than move in the direction of "Dancing Machine" (#2, 1994), for example. Both Joseph and the Jackson brothers believed they would benefit by writing and producing their own records, something Gordy and Motown were notoriously reluctant to permit. In fact, Joseph had overseen the construction of a state-of-the-art recording studio at the family home in Encino, California, to encourage his sons to become more creatively independent.

Like many other Motown artists, the Jackson 5 left the label over artistic control. When the group announced its departure in 1975, the label sued for breach of contract. The $20-million suit was eventually settled in 1980, with the Jacksons paying $600,000 ($100,000 in cash and $500,000 in "other items") and the label retaining all rights to the name the Jackson 5. The move also brought the family's first public rift, as Jermaine refused to leave Motown with his brothers. In 1973 he had married Berry Gordy Jr.'s only daughter, Hazel Joy, in what was then claimed to be one of the most lavish weddings in the history of Hollywood. It was also viewed by some to be the merger of record-business dynasties, but given Joseph Jackson and Berry Gordy's long-running mutual dislike, it never was.

Like Jackie (who released a quickly forgotten LP in 1973) and Michael (whose solo career is recounted in his entry), Jermaine had also tested the waters as a solo act. Although Michael continually overshadowed his siblings, in the group's early years, Jermaine was successfully promoted as a teen idol. His Jermaine (#27, 1972) spun off a Top 10 remake of Shep and the Lumelites' "Daddy's Home." Subsequent releases on his father-in-law's label did not fare nearly as well until 1980's Let's Get Serious (#6 pop, #1 R&B), with its #9 pop, #1 R&B title track. For the next couple of years, Jermaine's singles made a solid showing on the R&B charts (1980's "You're Supposed to Keep Your Love for Me" and "Little Girl, Don't You Worry," and 1981's "You Like Me, Don't You" and "I'm Just Too Shy") but returned to the pop Top 20 with "Let Me Tickle Your Fancy" (#18 pop, #5 R&B, 1982). Shortly thereafter, with the blessings of his father-in-law and with Hazel functioning as his manager, Jermaine moved to Arista, where his eponymously titled 1984 label debut became his first Top 20 LP since 1980 and an R&B #1. Boosted by a string of stylishly crafted videos, "Dynamite" (#15 pop, #8 R&B, 1984) and "Do What You Do" (#13 pop, #14 R&B, 1984) pushed the album to gold. However, Jermaine's later efforts—including a duet with Pia Zadora (with whom he also performed)—flopped, and Don't Take It Personal, like his second, third, and fourth Motown albums, did not enter the Top 100. In 1987 Jermaine and Hazel divorced.

Meanwhile, back in March 1976, the remaining five Jackson brothers changed their name to the Jacksons and signed with Epic. Kenny Gamble and Leon Huff produced their first two Epic LPs, The Jacksons (featuring "Enjoy Yourself" [#6 pop, #2 R&B, 1976]) and Goin' Places (#63, 1977), neither of which the Jackson brothers believed suited them. They began writing their own material, beginning with Destiny, which contained "Shake Your Body (Down to the Ground)", within a few years they were producing most of their own material as well. Except for four singles that failed to crack the Top 40, the Jacksons picked up the streak where they'd left off and the hits kept coming: "Show You the Way to Go" (#28 pop, #6 R&B, 1977), "Blame It on the Boogie" (#54 pop, #3 R&B, 1979), "Shake Your Body (Down to the Ground)" (#7 pop, #3 R&B, 1979), "Lovely One" (#12 pop, #2 R&B, 1980), "Heart-break Hotel" (sometimes titled "This Place Hotel" and not to be confused with the Elvis Presley hit of the same name) (#22 pop, #2 R&B, 1980). In light of Michael's preeminence, many historians overlook the songwriting contributions of the other brothers, each of whom cowrote at least one of the hits above.

Through 1979 and 1980, Michael's Off the Wall dominated the charts. The Jacksons' Triumph (#10 pop, #1 R&B, 1980) sold a million copies and prompted a 39-city tour that grossed $5.5 million. Then, as always, the Jackson's live shows garnered outstanding reviews. They were among the first acts to incorporate lavish special effects, and with Triumph's "Can You Feel It," video pioneers of sorts. Although the song was not a hit, a special video produced for it was used to open their concerts. A live LP, Jacksons Live (#30 pop, #10 R&B, 1981), documented this period.

Through 1981 and most of 1982 the Jacksons kept a low profile, although with Michael moving increasingly outside his father's managerial control, Joseph turned his attention again to the Jackson sisters, overseeing the production of La Toya's and Janet's first albums. Neither was hugely successful, although each had a share of R&B charting singles: La Toya, with "Stay the Night" (#31 R&B, 1981) and "Bet'cha Gonna Need My Lovin'" (#22 R&B, 1983), and Janet with "Young Love" (#6 R&B, 1982) and "Say You Do" (#15 R&B, 1983). For Janet Jackson [see entry], greater success would come only after she declared her artistic independence from her father with Control in 1986. During this time, Joseph also encouraged his eldest, Rebbie, who had married a fellow Jehovah's Witness and seemed an unlikely entertainer, to record "Centipede" (#24 pop, #4 R&B, 1984) and "Plaything" (#8 R&B, 1988) were her biggest hits. Subsequent singles, including a 1986 duet with Cheap Trick's Robin Zander ("You Send the Rain Away") and rapper Melle Mel ("R U Tuff Enuff"), were quickly forgotten.

The years 1983 and 1984 marked a turning point for all the Jacksons, and beginning with the six brothers' reunion at the Motown 25 television special taping, the family would dominate the charts and the news for the next 18 months. Interestingly, it was after the brothers' reunion—their first appearance with Jermaine since the 1974 Las Vegas show, after which he announced his decision to stay behind with Motown—that Michael dazzled the audience with his performance of his first single off Thriller, "Billie Jean," and unveiled his Moonwalk dance step. Critics agree that was a pivotal moment in Jackson's career, as indeed it was. But it also marked the beginning of the end for the Jackson brothers. By most credible accounts, it was Jermaine, who was always Joseph's favorite son and the most aggressive of the siblings, who pushed hardest for a continuation of the reunion and what would become the Victory Tour. Although the brothers had severed all business ties with Joseph, he and their mother, along with boxing promoter Don King, produced the tour. By the time it opened in Kansas City, on July 6, 1984, the enterprise was awash in so much controversy that Michael pledged all of his proceeds to charity. Nevertheless, the tour became the most widely covered and largest-grossing tour of its time. Given Thriller's massive success, few were surprised to learn that the Victory Tour and album (#4 pop, #3 R&B, 1984) would be Michael's swan song with the group. But Marlon also announced his decision to leave once the tour ended. His "Don't Go" (#2 R&B, 1987) from Baby Tonight is his biggest solo hit to date. Although Victory sold over 2 million copies, it spawned just one Top 10 hit, "State of Shock" (#3, 1984), a duet between Michael and Mick Jagger. It would be the Jacksons' last Top 10 pop hit.

Ironically, the family's decline began following a 24-month period between January 1983 and December 1984 when Michael had six Top 10 (including two #1) solo hits, Jermaine had two Top 20 pop hits, and Rebbie, Janet, and La Toya were near-constant presences on the R&B chart. But the personal and public turmoil that has marked the family was just beginning. Janet eloped with singer James DeBarge while the rest of the family was traveling with the Victory Tour; La Toya, then Michael, moved out of the family home. For La Toya, whose early ambivalence toward her career is apparent, record sales remain elusive in the U.S., although she has performed throughout the rest of the world, recording albums that range from smutty Euro-disco to faux-country. In the wake of her two appearances in Playboy magazine (the first of which, in 1989, became one of the magazine's best-selling issues), her international bestseller La Toya: Growing Up in the Jackson Family (in which she accused her father of child abuse), and her now-dissolved marriage to controversial manager Jack Gordon, La Toya became a figure of controversy both inside and outside the family. While her parents and several siblings have been vociferously critical of her, others, including Michael, have pledged their support. Obscured in the public outcry over her book was the fact that in the French edition of her autobiography, Katherine Jackson had written of Joseph beating the children and having extramarital affairs; these passages were deleted from the later U.S. edition. And while several Jackson family members protested the right of any Jackson to reveal family secrets, before and after La Toya's book, several other siblings and even Joseph had floated proposals for their own version of the family saga: only Katherine and Michael (whose Moonwalk also alluded to physical abuse) found takers. La Toya appeared publicly with her brothers (except Jermaine) as part of USA for Africa. Having split acrimoniously with Gordon in the mid-'90s, she has since renewed ties with her family.

Other Jacksons made headlines as well. In 1980 Katherine Jackson (accompanied by Janet and Randy) attacked one of Joseph's secretaries in his office with a blunt instrument. No charges were filed. Jermaine's marriage to Hazel Gordy ended, as did Jackie's to his wife Enid (who later accused him of physically attacking her and won a court order barring him from her home); Jackie and Enid divorced in 1986. Randy, who had been nearly killed in a late-'70s car accident that severely damaged his legs, was convicted of physically abusing his wife and his infant daughter in 1991. He pleaded no contest to the battery charge and was to have entered a rehabilitation program. In 1994 Tito's ex-wife DeLores, known as Dee Dee, whom he had married in 1972 and with whom he had three children, drowned in a friend's swimming pool.

In the summer of 1989, the Jacksons—by then a quartet of Jackie, Jermaine, Tito, and Randy—released 2300 Jackson Street (the address of their Gary, Indiana, childhood home) nearly five years after Victory. It peaked at a disappointing #59, and its autobiographical title track, which reunited the brothers with Michael and Janet, and a number of nieces and nephews, did not chart. In 1991 Jermaine released "Word to the Badd," a clear attack on Michael, which made headlines but did not become a hit.

The family's plans to open a Jackson family museum in Las Vegas and their mismanaged Jackson Family Honors tribute were overshadowed by the then-pending child-abuse allegations against Michael. The Family Honors program, which aired in February 1994, was plagued by slow ticket sales, allegations of financial improprieties, and a final show that was deemed lackluster. In the mid-'90s sketchy reports of J5, a new Jacksons album featuring most of the famous siblings, began to surface. Despite that, no group material has been issued as of mid-2001.

By all indications, with the exception of Michael's and Janet's spectacular careers, the Jackson family's dominance as an entertainment dynasty had come to an end. Unfortunately, their long-held public status as role models and exemplars of conservative family values has also been damaged irrevocably (oddly, in no small part because of the highly rated, family-controlled 1992 made-for-TV account of their early years, which depicted Joseph as violent and demanding). Despite this, the family remains unique in the annals of pop-music history, a phenomenal success story that will surely continue to unfold for years to come.

Mick Jagger: See the Rolling Stones

The Jaggerz/Donnie Iris

Formed 1965, Pittsburgh, PA

Donald Iris (b. Dominic Ierace, 1943, Ellwood City, PA), gtr., voc.;

Benny Faiella (b. Eugene Faiella, Beaver Falls, PA), gtr., bass;

Thom Davies (b. Duquesne, PA), kybds., trumpet; James Ross

(b. Aliquippa, PA), bass, trombone; William Maybray, bass; James "Pugs" Pugliano, drums.

1969—Introducing the Jaggerz (Gamble) 1970—We Went to Different Schools Together (Kama Sutra) 1971—(—Ross) 1975—Come Again (Wooden Nickel) 1998—(lineup: Faiella; Ross; Pugliano; others) And the Band Played On . . . (Jaggerz).
Donnie Iris solo: 1980—Back on the Streets (MCA) 1981—King Cool 1982—The High and the Mighty 1983—Fortune 410 1985—No Muss . . . No Fuss (HME) 1992—Footsoldier in the Moonlight (Seathru) 1999—Together Alone (Primary).

Led by frontman/lead vocalist Donnie Iris (credited on the LPs as D. Ierace), the Jaggerz had a #2 1970 single with the million-selling "Rapper." Their debut 45, "Baby I Love You" (Gamble Records), with William Maybray on lead vocals, was a flop. The next year they signed to Kama Sutra and recorded We Went to Different Schools Together, which contained "The Rapper." Two subsequent singles, "I Call My Baby Candy" and "What a Bummer," never even reached the Top 70. By then, Iris had left the band to pursue a solo career; the group continued without him and recorded an LP in 1975 for Wooden Nickel Records, but with no success.

Iris worked in a Pittsburgh recording studio and then joined Wild Cherry, which had a platinum single in 1976 with "Play That Funky Music." With ex-Wild Cherry keyboardist Mark Avsec, Iris began composing. Around 1979 he recorded Back on the Streets for a Cleveland label, Midwest National. He then formed his own band. MCA later released the LP nationally, and in 1980 Iris' "Ah! Leah!" went to #29. In 1981 Iris, with his band the Cruisers, released King Cool. It produced two Top 40 hits, "Love Is Like a Rock" and "My Girl." Iris continues to record and tour; he often performs "The Rapper" in his shows. Jimmy Ross, meanwhile, performed on the oldies circuit as a member of the Skyliners ("Since I Don't Have You"). In 1998 he revived the Jaggerz for a self-released CD with Faiella and Pugliano.

The Jam/Paul Weller/The Style Council

The Jam, formed 1973, Woking, Eng.: Paul Weller (b. May 25, 1958, Woking), gtr., voc.; Bruce Foxton (b. Sep. 1, 1955, Eng.), bass, voc.; Rick Buckler (b. Dec. 6, 1955, Woking), drums, voc. 1977—In the City (Polydor); This Is the Modern World 1978—All Mod Cons 1979—Setting Sons 1980—Sound Affects 1981—Absolute Beginners 1982—The Gift; Dig the New Breed 1983—Snap! 1991—Greatest Hits 1992—Extras 1993—Live Jam 1996—The Jam Collection 1997—Direction, Recreation, Creation.

The Style Council, formed 1983, Eng.: Weller; + Mick Talbot, kybds.; + Dee C. Lee, voc.

1983—Introducing the Style Council EP (Polydor) 1984—My Ever Changing Moods (Geffen) 1985—Internationalists 1986—Home & Abroad (Polydor) 1987—The Cost of Loving 1988—Confessions of a Pop Group 1989—The Singular Adventures of the Style Council (Greatest Hits, vol. 1) 1994—Here's Some That Got Away 1996—The Style Council Collection.

Paul Weller solo: 1992—Paul Weller (Go! Discs/London)

1993—Wild Wood 1995—Stanley Road 1997—Heavy Soul (Island) 1998—Modern Classics—The Greatest Hits 2000—Heliocentric.

First with the Jam, then with Style Council and as a solo artist, songwriter/guitarist Paul Weller mined a range of pop styles, from the Jam's punk-colored Mod and Merseybeat, through the Style Council's white soul, to his '90s excursions into folk and psychedelia. While Weller and his groups have enjoyed immense popularity in the U.K., here in the U.S. Weller's work has found a small, devoted following at best.

Though it first came to prominence in London's 1976 punk-rock explosion, the Jam shared only a high-speed, stripped-down approach with its contemporaries. The trio's clothes, haircuts, and tunes reflected an obsession with the mid-'60s Mod style, and some termed the band the new Who. Although Paul Weller's gruffly accented vocals and earnest songs never broke through to American audiences, the Jam became consistent hitmakers in Britain.

Weller, while attending Sheerwater Secondary Modern School in Woking, originally formed a folk duo with guitarist Steve Brooks in 1972. They later formed the Jam with guitarist Dave Waller and drummer Rick Buckler. Waller and Brooks quit in 1974, and bassist Bruce Foxton joined. With Weller's father as manager, they worked on '60s R&B and Mod-rock covers and some originals; in 1976 they made a successful London debut at the 100 Club's first punk extravaganza. Their debut album was a British hit, yielding a Top 40 U.K. single in the title tune (from which the Sex Pistols later used a riff for their "Holiday in the Sun"). Modern World followed the same format, but the album was so harshly criticized by the British music press that the highly sensitive Weller nearly broke up the band. That year the Jam also released soul covers of "Back in My Arms Again" and "Sweet Soul Music."

The Jam: Rick Buckler, Paul Weller, Bruce Foxton

Just before the well-received All Mod Cons (#6 U.K., 1978), the group released three successful U.K. singles: "News of the World" (#27), a cover of the Kinks' "David Watts" (#25), and "Down in the Tube Station at Midnight" (#15), which revealed a new political commitment. "Tube Station," a protest against Britain's anti-immigrant "Paki-bashing" phenomenon, was banned by the BBC. Setting Sons (#137 U.S., #4 U.K., 1979) was a decline-of-the-Empire/class-conflict concept album and yielded the British hit "The Eton Rifles" (#3, 1979); it also included "Heatwave" Sound Affects (#2 U.K., 1980) was the Jam's biggest commercial success to date, with a #1 British hit in "Start!" and another minor U.K. hit in the acoustic ballad "That's Entertainment."

The Jam continued making inroads on the American market with The Gift (#82 U.S., #1 U.K., 1982) which yielded the Motownish "Town Called Malice." Both Cons and Sons went gold in England. In 1980 Weller appeared on Peter Gabriel's third solo LP. In October 1982 Weller announced that the group was breaking up. "It really dawned on me how secure the situation was, the fact that we could go on for the next 10 years making records, getting bigger and bigger. That frightened me because I realized we were going to end up like the rest of them." Nonetheless, the group's English fans never gave up, and its last single, "Beat Surrender," came on the chart there at #1 in 1982.

Weller quickly released his first post-Jam efforts as leader of Style Council in 1983. Officially only a duo with Weller and Mick Talbot, Style Council was a bold experiment that Weller later admitted was not entirely successful. Working with a number of guest artists, including Curtis Mayfield, Style Council was conceived as an American '60s-style soul unit with a political point of view. Critics were mixed on how well that goal was met, but U.K. fans were unanimous in their support. Between 1983 and 1988, the group had seven U.K. Top 10 hits: "Speak Like a Child" and "Long Hot Summer" (1983), "My Ever Changing Moods," "Groovin' (You're the Best Thing)" b/w "Big Boss Groove," and "Shout to the Top" (1984), "Walls Come Tumbling Down!" (1985), and "It Didn't Matter" (1987). In contrast, here in the States, the Style Council placed only one Top 30 single, "My Ever Changing Moods" (#29, 1984) and only the album of the same name made the Hot 100, at #66, also in 1984. Facing declining interest, the Style Council disbanded in 1990. In 1986 Weller married fellow Style Council member Dee C. Lee (whom he later divorced), and cowrote and coproduced her group Slam Slam's 1991 album, Free Your Feelings.

Weller reemerged with the Paul Weller Movement in early 1991 and released his first, eponymous solo album the following year. His followup, Wild Wood launched Weller on a run of critical and commercial success. The album went to #2 in the U.K. and was nominated for the country's prestigious Mercury Music Prize, its successor, Stanley Road (featuring guest appearances by Steve Winwood and Oasis' Noel Gallagher), produced two British Top 10 singles ("The Changing Man," #7, and "You Do Something to Me," #9) and went to #1 in the U.K. The record also won Weller a 1995 BRIT Award for Best Male Artist, which he won again the following year. But despite his continued success in Britain with his next two releases, Heavy Soul (#2 U.K.) and the greatest-hits compilation Modern Classics (#7 U.K.), Weller failed to make a mark in America. Subsequently, his 2000 release, Heliocentric, was released only in the U.K.

Elmore James

Born Elmore Brooks, Jan. 27, 1918, Richland, MS; died May 24, 1963, Chicago, IL

1966—Blues Masters, vol. 1 (Blue Horizon) 1969—Whose Muddy Shoes (Chess) 1970—Tough (Blue Horizon) 1971—The Sky Is Crying (Sphere Sound); I Need You 1973—Street Talkin' (Muse) 1976—Anthology of the Blues: Legend of Elmore James (Kent); Anthology of the Blues: Resurrection of Elmore James 1982—Red Hot Blues (Quicksilver) 1989—The Complete Fire and Enjoy Sessions, Part I (Collectables); The Complete Fire and Enjoy Sessions, Part II; The Complete Fire and Enjoy Sessions, Part III; The Complete Fire and Enjoy Sessions, Part IV 1992—The Complete Elmore James Story (Capricorn/Warner Bros.); Elmore James—King of the Slide Guitar: The Fire/Fury/Enjoy Recordings (Capricorn) 1994—The Classic Early Recordings, 1951–1956 (Atomic Beat) 2001—Shake Your Money Maker: The Best of the Fire Sessions (Buddah).

One of the most influential postwar urban-blues guitarists, Elmore James was the one Chicago bluesman perhaps most responsible for shaping the styles of slide-guitar playing that translated from blues to rock. His anthems, like "It Hurts Me Too," "Dust My Broom" (by Robert Johnson), "Shake Your Money Maker," and "The Sky Is Crying," have been covered by Eric Clapton, Fleetwood Mac, John Mayall, Savoy Brown, George Thorogood, and others. His influence can most directly be heard in the slide-guitar work of Duane Allman and the Rolling Stones' Brian Jones.

James began picking on a homemade lard-can guitar as a child. By the late '30s, he was working Mississippi taverns with blues legends Robert Johnson and Sonny Boy Williamson (Rice Miller). Between 1943 and 1945 he served in the navy. He began recording in 1951 for the Trumpet label in Jackson, Mississippi. He later moved to Chicago but continued to perform in the South and parts of the Midwest.

It was when he began recording in Chicago that James became one of the first and foremost modernizers of the Delta blues tradition. In 1963, while visiting the home of his cousin Homesick James, a bluesman with whom he'd performed in the '40s, Elmore James suffered a fatal heart attack. His stylistic influence can be traced to bluesmen like J.B. Hutto, B.B. King, Freddie King, Jimmy Reed, and Hound Dog Taylor, as well as rockers like Jimi Hendrix and Johnny Winter. His son, Elmore James Jr., is also a musician.

Etta James

Born Jamesetta Hawkins, Jan. 25, 1938, Los Angeles, CA 1961—At Last (Chess); Second Time Around 1963—Etta James; Top Ten; Rocks the House 1965—Queen of Soul

1967—Call My Name 1968—Tell Mama 1970—Sings Funk 1971—Losers Weepers; Peaches 1972—Miss Etta James (Crown); Best of; Twist With; Golden Decade (Chess) 1973—Etta James 1974—Come a Little Closer 1975—Etta Is Better Than Evah! 1978—Deep in the Night (Warner Bros.) 1986—Blues in the Night, vol. 1: The Early Show (Fantasy); The Late Show 1988—The Sweetest Peaches: The Chess Years, vol. 1 (1960–66) (Chess/MCA); The Sweetest Peaches: The Chess Years, vol. 2 (1967–1975); Seven Year Itch (Island) 1989—The Gospel Soul of Etta James (Arrival) 1990—Stickin' to My Guns (Mercury) 1992—The Right Time (Elektra) 1993—How Strong Is a Woman: The Island Sessions (4th & Broadway) 1994—Mystery Lady: Songs of Billie Holiday (Private); Live From San Francisco 1995—Time After Time 1997—Love's Been Rough on Me 1998—Life, Love & the Blues 1999—Best of Etta James: The Millennium Collection (MCA); Heart of a Woman (Private) 2000—The Chess Box (Chess); Matriarch of the Blues (Private).

Soul singer Etta James survived a decade-long heroin addiction to forge a career that has seen her turn out well over a dozen hits and was still going strong with concert appearances past the year 2000. James was still in her early teens and singing with a vocal trio called the Peaches when legendary R&B bandleader Johnny Otis [see entry] discovered her. At Otis' L.A. home, he and Etta cowrote her first hit, "Roll With Me, Henry," an answer to Hank Ballard and the Midnighters' off-color "Work With Me, Annie." Under the title "The Wallflower," "Henry" became a #2 R&B hit in 1955. That year Georgia Gibbs had a #1 pop hit with a mild cover of the tune, called "Dance With Me, Henry." Later, James' version was retitled "Dance With Me, Henry."

Through the mid-'50s James became a mainstay of Otis' revue and scored another R&B hit with "Good Rockin' Daddy" (#12, 1955). In 1960 she moved from Modern to Chess Records' Argo subsidiary, and the R&B hits began coming again: "All I Could Do Was Cry" (#2 R&B), "My Dearest Darling" (#5 R&B), and a duet as Etta and Harvey (with Harvey Fuqua of Harvey and the Moonglows) entitled "If I Can't Have You" (#52 pop, #6 R&B). She also sang background vocals on Chuck Berry's "Almost Grown" and "Back in the U.S.A."

James continued making R&B hits through the early '60s. In 1961 she had more Top 10 R&B hits with "At Last" (#2 R&B) and "Trust in Me" (#4 R&B), and in 1962 with "Something's Got a Hold on Me" (#4 R&B) and "Stop the Wedding" (#6 R&B). In 1963 she hit the pop chart with "Pushover" (#25 pop, #7 R&B), as well as "Pay Back" (#78), "Two Sides to Every Story" (#63), and "Would It Make Any Difference to You" (#64); 1964 brought "Baby, What You Want Me to Do?" (#82) and "Loving You More Every Day" (#65).

In the '60s she developed a heroin addiction that lasted through 1974 and kept her much of the time in L.A.'s Tarzana Psychiatric Hospital. Still, she hit big with "Tell Mama" (#23 pop, #10 R&B, 1967), "Losers Weepers" (#26 R&B, 1970), and "I've Found a Love" (#31 R&B, 1972). Though she has not had any major hit records since ending her heroin addiction, James has remained a popular concert performer. She played the Montreux Jazz Festival in 1977 and opened some dates for the Rolling Stones' 1978 U.S. tour. Seven Year Itch was produced by keyboardist Barry Beckett, house keyboardist at Alabama's legendary Muscle Shoals studio, where James had recorded such '60s R&B hits as "I'd Rather Go Blind." She returned to Muscle Shoals to record The Right Time, which reunited her with Jerry Wexler (the longtime Aretha Franklin producer, who'd worked on James' Deep in the Night album) and included a duet with Steve Winwood, shortly after the album's release, James was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. She won her first Grammy for 1994's Mystery Lady: The Songs of Billie Holiday. In 1995 she published her autobiography (cowritten with David Ritz), Rage to Survive. James continues to record and perform to an ever-increasing audience and critical acclaim.

Rick James

Born James Johnson, Feb. 1, 1948, Buffalo, NY
1978—Come Get It (Gordy) 1979—Bustin' Out of L. Seven; Fire It Up 1980—Garden of Love 1981—Street Songs 1982—Throwin' Down 1983—Cold Blooded 1984—Reflections 1985—Glow 1986—The Flag; Greatest Hits 1988—Wonderful (Reprise) 1994—Bustin' Out (Motown) 1997—Urban Rhapsody (Private I/Mercury).

Singer/songwriter/keyboardist/guitarist Rick James emerged in the late '70s with an energetic blend of blatant come-ons and dance music he called "punk funk." James was expelled from five different schools before leaving Buffalo at 15 to join the U.S. Naval Reserves. Soon after, he went AWOL and ended up in Toronto, where, as Ricky Matthews, he formed and fronted a band called the Mynah Birds, which included Neil Young and Bruce Palmer (later of Buffalo Springfield) and Goldy McJohn (of Steppenwolf). They were signed to Motown and recorded, but nothing was released, and the group soon disbanded. James then worked as a sideman, playing bass with several groups through the '70s, with only minimal success.

In 1978 James re-signed with Motown, this time as a songwriter and producer. That year his solo debut, Come Get It, sold a million copies, and "You and I" was a hit (#13 pop, #1 R&B). Subsequent singles—"Mary Jane" (#41 pop, #3 R&B, 1978), "Bustin' Out" (#6 pop, #8 R&B, 1979), "High on Your Love Suite" (#12 R&B, 1979), "Love Gun" (#13 R&B, 1979), "Big Time" (#17 R&B, 1980), "Give It to Me Baby" (#40 pop, #1 R&B, 1981), "Super Freak (Part 1)" (#16 pop, #3 R&B, 1981)—propelled each of his releases, including the uncharacteristically ballad-laden Garden of Love, onto the pop chart.

James' stage image—long corn-rowed and beaded hair, elaborate sequined costumes and instruments—and his bass-heavy music have prompted companions with Sly Stone and with George Clinton's Parliament-Funkadelic. James has also produced Teena Marie, the Temptations ("Standing on the Top"), and Carl Carlton.

Beginning around 1983, James' career entered a slump.

and although he remained a formidable presence on the R&B chart, none of his releases made the Top 30. His R&B Top 20 singles include "Dance wit' Me (Part 1)" and "Hard to Get" (1982), "Cold Blooded" (#1 R&B), "U Bring the Freak Out," and a duet with Smokey Robinson, "Ebony Eyes" (1983); "17" (1984), "Can't Stop" and "Glow" (1985); and "Sweet Sexy Thing" (1986). In 1983 he unveiled the Mary Jane Girls, a quartet of sexy singers he produced and wrote for. While he had a #3 hit with his "In My House" for the Mary Jane Girls and produced comedian Eddie Murphy's debut album and #2 hit single, "Party All the Time," James' own releases began to fall by the wayside. A #1 R&B song featuring rapper Roxanne Shanté, "Loosey's Rap," failed to make the pop chart at all in 1988, but James returned to the pop chart via MC Hammer's "U Can't Touch This," a 1990 megahit that featured "Super Freak."

James made the news again in 1991 after he and a female companion were arrested and charged with two instances of physically abusing women who refused to join them in group sex. James, who admitted he was a cocaine addict and that the attacks occurred during drug binges, was later convicted of assaulting one of the women. He was sentenced to five years, four months in prison. In a press release issued to coincide with the release of Bustin' Out, James commented on the positive aspects of his drug rehabilitation and prison experience, admitting that he had been a drug addict for over 35 years. He also claimed to have written an autobiography, tentatively entitled Memoirs of a Superfreak. In 1996 James was released from prison and quickly got to work on the somewhat successful Urban Rhapsody (#170 pop, #31 R&B, 1997). He toured in support of Urban Rhapsody until November 1998, when he suffered a stroke on stage.

Tommy James and the Shondells

Formed 1960, Niles, MI

Lineup ca. 1965: Tommy James (b. Thomas Gregory Jackson, Apr. 29, 1947, Dayton, OH), voc.; Ronald Rosman (b. Feb. 28, 1945), kybds.; Michael Vale (b. July 17, 1949), bass; Vincent Pietropaoli, drums; George Magura, sax, bass, organ.
1965—(– Pietropaoli; – Magura; + Peter Lucia [b. Feb. 2, 1947], drums; + Eddie Gray [b. Feb. 27, 1948], gtr.) 1966—Hanky Panky (Roulette) 1968—Mony Mony 1969—Crimson and Clover 1969—The Best of Tommy James and the Shondells 1989—Anthology (Rhino).
Tommy James solo: 1976—In Touch (Fantasy) 1977—Midnight Rider 1980—Three Times in Love (Millennium) 1991—Tommy James: The Solo Years (1970–1981) 1995—A Night in Big City: An Audio-Movie (Aura).

Tommy James and the Shondells were one of the most consistently successful American pop groups of the late '60s. Group leader and singer James taught himself to play guitar at age nine; four years later he formed the Shondells. The group played locally, and in 1963 recorded a Jeff Barry–Ellie Greenwich song, "Hanky Panky," as a favor for a local disc jockey. In late 1965 a Pittsburgh DJ began playing it, and more than 20,000 copies were sold within a few days. After its national release on Roulette in 1966, it hit #1 and sold a million copies, whereupon James assembled a new cast of Shondells.

Between 1966 and the Shondells' 1970 dissolution, the group amassed 13 other Top 40 hits, among them "I Think We're Alone Now" (#3, 1967), "Mirage" (#10, 1967), "Mony, Mony" (#3, 1968), "Crimson and Clover" (#1, 1969), "Sweet Cherry Wine" (#7, 1969), and "Crystal Blue Persuasion" (#2, 1969). With "Crimson and Clover" (the group's biggest seller at 5.5 million), the Shondells' sound became more psychedelic than bubblegum. James began producing, as well. After the group disbanded, James returned to his home in upstate New York for several months (partially to recuperate from a drug problem) before reemerging in 1970 to produce Alive and Kickin's hit version of his "Tighter, Tighter." He had a #4 hit the following year with "Draggin' the Line." The Shondells, meanwhile, materialized that year as a new group called Hog Heaven, which released one LP on Roulette.

James' subsequent singles failed to crack the Top 30, and solo LPs like Midnight Rider (produced by Jeff Barry) never hit. He returned to the chart in 1980, however, with "Three Times in Love" (#19). By that time, it was estimated James had sold over 30 million records. Although the '80s brought him no more hits, covers of Tommy James and the Shondells' songs seemed to be everywhere. Joan Jett took "Crimson and Clover" to #7 in 1982, and in 1987 Billy Idol's version of "Mony Mony" replaced teen singer Tiffany's "I Think We're Alone Now" as the #1 record in the U.S. In the mid-'90s James formed the Aura label, for which he continues to release solo efforts and archival Shondells material.

The James Gang

Formed 1967, Cleveland, OH

Jim Fox, drums; Tom Kriss, bass; Glen Schwartz, gtr.
1969—(– Schwartz; + Joe Walsh [b. Nov. 20, 1947, Wichita, KS], gtr., voc.) Yer Album (ABC) (– Kriss; + Dale Peters, bass) 1970—James Gang Rides Again 1971—Thirds; Live in Concert (– Walsh; + Domenic Troiano [b. ca. 1945, Modugno, It.], gtr.; + Roy Kenner, voc.) 1972—Straight Shooter; Passin' Through 1973—Best of (– Troiano; + Tommy Bolin [b. 1951, Sioux City, IA; d. Dec. 4, 1976, Miami, FL], gtr.); Bang (Atco); Gold Record (ABC) 1974—Miami (Atco) (– Bolin; – Kenner; group disbands) 1975—(group re-forms: Fox; Peters + Richard Shack, gtr.; + Bubba Keith, gtr., voc.) Newborn 1976—Jesse Come Home 2000—Greatest Hits (MCA).

The James Gang was a favorite American hard-rock band during the early '70s. Founded by drummer Jim Fox, who had played in Cleveland bands since age 14, the group earned a word-of-mouth reputation throughout the Midwest. Glen Schwartz (who left to join Pacific Gas and Electric) was replaced by future Eagle Joe Walsh (see entry), the group's best musician and star attraction. Pete Townshend, a friend of the Gang, arranged for it to open for the Who in Europe in 1971.

Despite a career-long lack of hit singles, the trio's second, third, and fourth LPs all went gold, and it continued to be a major concert draw around the world for a while after Walsh's departure to form Barnstorm. His replacement, Domenic Troiano, left in 1973 to join the Guess Who, and Walsh recommended Tommy Bolin for the part. But Bolin (who had worked with Billy Cobham) contributed to only two LPs—Miami and Bang (originally titled James Gang Bang)—before joining Deep Purple. Vocalist Roy Kenner soon left as well, and in 1974 the group temporarily disbanded, only to re-form a year later with Bubba Keith and Richard Shack. The James Gang never recaptured its early momentum and disbanded for good in 1976.

Jan and Dean

Jan Berry, born Apr. 3, 1941, Los Angeles, CA; Dean Torrence, born Mar. 10, 1941, Los Angeles
 1962—Golden Hits (Liberty); Surf City and Other Swingin' Cities
 1963—Drag City 1964—The Little Old Lady From Pasadena
 1965—Golden Hits, vol. 2; Command Performance/Live in Person 1966—Golden Hits, vol. 3 1971—Legendary Masters (United Artists) 1974—Gotta Take That One Last Ride
 1982—One Summer Night/Live (Rhino) 1995—Teen Suite
 1958–1962 (Varèse Vintage) 1996—Golden Summer Days.

Between their 1958 debut single, "Jennie Lee," and Jan Berry's near-fatal car crash in April 1966, Jan and Dean were the premier surf music duo, charting 13 Top 30 singles and selling over 10 million records worldwide.

The two were friends and football teammates at Emerson Junior High in L.A. They formed a group, the Barons, with drummer Sandy Nelson ("Teen Beat," "Let There Be Drums") and future Beach Boy Bruce Johnston. With a singer named Arnie Ginsburg, they recorded a #8 hit for Arwin Records entitled "Jennie Lee," written about a local stripper. Dean Torrence, who sang lead, was serving in the National Guard when the contracts were signed, so the single was credited to Jan and Arnie.

Once Torrence returned, he and Berry resumed their partnership, Ginsburg joined the army, and Arwin dropped them. Herb Alpert and Lou Adler became their managers and produced "Baby Talk" (#10, 1959) for their small Dore label. Five Top 100 entries on the Dore and Challenge labels preceded the pair's signing with Liberty in 1961. After three minor hits, in 1963 they recorded their only #1, "Surf City," a song cowritten by their friend Brian Wilson. The Beach Boys leader also contributed vocals and worked with Jan and Dean on their debut LP, Linda Goes Surfin'; Torrence, uncredited, later sang lead on the Beach Boys' 1966 smash "Barbara Ann." The Beach Boys and Jan and Dean often appeared on each other's records until their record companies objected.

Berry did the bulk of the duo's songwriting, including the soundtrack for a 1964 Fabian beach movie entitled Ride the Wild Surf. The pair hosted The T.A.M.I. Show that same year.

Both continued their educations full-time (Torrence was premed and then an architecture student at UCLA, Berry an art and design student at USC) until they were convinced of their musical success. Their hits included "Heart and Soul" (#25, 1961), "Linda" (#28, 1963), "Honolulu Lulu" (#11, 1963), "Drag City" (#10, 1964), "Dead Man's Curve" (#8, 1964), "The Little Old Lady (From Pasadena)" (#3, 1964), "Ride the Wild Surf" (#16, 1964), "Sidewalk Surfin'" (#25, 1964), "You Really Know How to Hurt a Guy" (#27, 1965), "I Found a Girl" (#30, 1965), and "Popsicle" (#21, 1966).

But by the mid-'60s, their friendship had become strained to the point where they considered breaking up. In April 12, 1966, Berry crashed his Corvette into a parked truck at 65 mph on L.A.'s Whittier Boulevard. His three passengers were killed, and he sustained brain damage so severe that it wasn't until 1973 that he was able to remember an entire song lyric. He is still partially paralyzed and suffers speech difficulties. During the years of recovery, he regularly recorded demos for Lou Adler as therapy. Meanwhile, Torrence had recorded a solo album, Save for a Rainy Day (over which Berry was furious), and became head of Kitty Hawk Graphics in Hollywood. Between then and 1981 he won design awards (and one Grammy) for his album covers (among his clients were the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, the Beach Boys, Nilsson, Steve Martin, Linda Ronstadt, and, of course, Jan and Dean). Berry also recorded on his own, issuing "Mother Earth" and "Don't You Just Know It" in 1972 on his old friend Lou Adler's Ode label.

The pair made a premature and unsuccessful comeback appearance in 1973 (lip synching to prerecorded tracks), but by 1977 they were again performing live on occasion. A television-movie account of their lives entitled Dead Man's Curve aired in 1978 on ABC-TV and renewed interest in Jan and Dean. They continue to tour and in 1982 released One Summer Night—Live. They later appeared on the Back to the Beach soundtrack. As of 1999 the duo still made 40 to 50 public appearances a year.

Jane's Addiction/Porno for Pyros

Formed 1986, Los Angeles, CA
 Perry Farrell (b. Perry Bernstein, Mar. 29, 1959, Queens, NY), voc.; Eric Avery (b. Apr. 25, 1965, Los Angeles), bass; David Navarro (b. June 6, 1967, Santa Monica, CA), gtr.; Steve Perkins (b. Sep. 13, 1967, Los Angeles), drums.
 1987—Jane's Addiction (Triple X) 1988—Nothing's Shocking (Warner Bros.) 1990—Ritual de lo Habitual 1991—Live and Rare (WEA) 1997—Kettle Whistle (- Avery; + Flea, bass).
 Porno for Pyros, formed 1992, Los Angeles: Farrell, voc.; Perkins, drums; + Peter DiStefano (b. Jul. 10, 1965, Los Angeles), gtr.; Martyn Le Noble (b. Apr. 14, 1969, Vlaardingen, Neth.), bass.
 1993—Porno for Pyros (Warner Bros.) 1996—Good God's Urge.
 Perry Farrell with Psi Com: 1994—Psi Com (Triple X, reissue).

Deconstruction (Avery; Navarro): 1994—Deconstruction (American).

Polar Bear (Avery; Biff Sanders, drums; Thomas Van Wendt, gtr.): 1997—Polar Bear EP (Dry Hump).

Perry Farrell solo: 2001—Song Yet to Be Sung (Virgin).

Dave Navarro solo: 2001—Trust No One (Capitol).

Led by the flamboyant, outspoken Perry Farrell, Jane's Addiction blended elements of art rock, punk, and metal into an ambitious musical juxtaposition of sublime beauty and utter decadence. The group broke up during its peak of popularity in 1991, just after its appearances on the first Lollapalooza Tour (which Farrell organized). Farrell continued chasing his muse in Porno for Pyros.

Perry Bernstein spent the early part of his life working for his jeweler father in New York City's diamond district. When he was still a child, his mother committed suicide (Farrell alluded to this later, on "Then She Died ..." from Ritual de lo Habitual, singing to a friend who has died of an overdose, "Will you say hello to my ma? ... She was an artist, just as you were"). After her death, the Bernsteins moved to Woodmere, Long Island, and then to Miami.

Bernstein attended college briefly in Oceanside, California, but quit after having a nervous breakdown. He then started lip synching and doing exotic dancing in a Newport Beach nightclub, taking the stage name Perry Farrell by adopting his brother's first name as his last (making a pun on peripheral). In 1981 he started the gothlike Psi Com, which released an indie-label EP before breaking up in 1985.

A year later Farrell formed Jane's Addiction, which he named after a prostitute friend who introduced him to band mates Eric Avery and David Navarro. Farrell, reputedly a control freak, became notorious among L.A.'s arty rock scene. Sporting Day-Glo girdles or black vinyl bodysuits, heavy mascara, and neon dreadlocks, he stalked stages singing in his high, mannered voice while the members of his band churned out a foreboding sound often compared to Led Zeppelin. After releasing a self-titled live album on L.A.'s Triple X Records, a major-label bidding war ensued. Warner Bros. won, putting out Nothing's Shocking the following year.

In 1990, on the strength of a catchy single and video ("Been Caught Stealing"), Ritual de lo Habitual skyrocketed up the charts, peaking at #19. The album made the news when some record chains refused to carry it because of its cover art (it featured Farrell's own nude sculptures). At the band's request, Warners issued the album to some stores in a plain white cover with only the text of the First Amendment printed on it.

That same year, Farrell codirected a film called Gift, a free-form creation that included scenes of Jane's Addiction live in Mexico City and a Santana wedding. Farrell remained in the limelight throughout 1991, when he brought his idea of an alternative-rock traveling circus to life with Lollapalooza, was busted on drug charges in Santa Monica, and brought Jane's Addiction to a close. In 1992 he and drummer Perkins formed Porno for Pyros, which put out its self-titled debut album to cool reception the following year. Porno returned in 1996 with Good God's Urge (#20). That same year, Porno guitarist Peter DiStefano was diagnosed with cancer. Though he survived, the band never returned to action.

Navarro and Avery formed the experimental, short-lived Deconstruction in 1993 before Navarro left to join the Red Hot Chili Peppers. The guitarist was in the Chili Peppers long enough to record One Hot Minute, a disappointment both commercially and critically. Between bands, Navarro could be heard on a variety of influential albums, including Alanis Monsette's Jagged Little Pill and Nine Inch Nails' Further Down the Spiral.

Navarro was visible again in 1997, when Farrell unexpectedly reconvened Jane's Addiction for a six-week national tour and the album Kettle Whistle (#21), a collection of outtakes, live recordings, and two new tracks. Chili Peppers bassist Flea sat in for Avery, who chose not to return. Avery instead focused on Polar Bear, a collaboration with Biff Sanders of Ethyl Meatplow. Mixing rock with electronic elements and Middle Eastern tempos, Polar Bear released a self-titled EP.

Lollapalooza continued forward, but when Farrell's partners booked mainstream metal band Metallica as the 1996 headliner, he pulled out and immediately created the short-lived ENIT Festival. By 1998, Lollapalooza was shut down indefinitely. Farrell had by then fully embraced the electronic dance movement, and in the late '90s he could be found working the turntables as a DJ in clubs in L.A. and New York. In 1999 he released Rev, which collected several Jane's Addiction and Porno for Pyros recordings with two new tracks. Farrell also began work on a solo album featuring such guests as Dave Navarro and Mad Professor. Entitled Song Yet to Be Sung, it was released in June 2001 concurrently with Navarro's debut solo album, Trust No One.

Japan

Formed 1974, London, Eng.

David Sylvian (b. David Batt, Feb. 23, 1958, London), voc., gtr.; Steve Jansen (b. Steve Batt, Dec. 1, 1959, London), drums; Richard Barbieri (b. Nov. 30, 1958), kybds.; Mick Karn (b. Anthony Michaelides, July 24, 1958, London), sax; Rob Dean, gtr.

1978—Adolescent Sex (Hansa, Ger.); Obscure Alternatives 1979—Quiet Life (Fame) 1980—Live in Japan (Hansa, Ger.); Gentlemen Take Polaroids (Virgin) 1981—(—Dean) Tin Drum; Assemblage (Hansa, Ger.) 1983—Oil on Canvas (Virgin) 1984—Exorcising Ghosts 1989—A Souvenir From Japan (Hansa, Ger.).

Mick Karn solo: 1982—Titles (Virgin) 1987—Dreams of Reason Produce Monsters 1993—Bestial Cluster (CMP). Rain Tree Crow: 1991—Rain Tree Crow (Virgin).

David Sylvian solo: 1984—Brilliant Trees (Virgin) 1985—Alchemy—An Index of Possibilities (Virgin, U.K.) 1986—Gone to Earth (Virgin) 1987—Secrets of the Beehive 1988—Plight & Premonition (with Holger Czukay) (Venture) 1989—Weatherbox (Virgin); Flux + Mutability (with Czukay) (Venture)

1991—Ember Glance: the permanence of memory 1993—The First Day (with Robert Fripp) (Virgin) 1994—Damage: Live (with Robert Fripp); Darshan Remixes (Alex) 1999—Dead Bees on a Cake (Virgin); Approaching Silence.

Precursors of England's short-lived New Romantic movement, London's Japan mixed glam theatrics and synthesizer pop with influences as diverse as Erik Satie and Motown to achieve success in the Far East, notoriety at home, and indifference in the U.S.

With his brother Steve on drums, David Sylvian led the quartet, which signed with German label Anola-Hansen in 1977. Sylvian's Bryan Ferry-style vocals and the band's pop-star glamour marked them as an alternative to punk; their following was largest among Japanese listeners. With industry legend Simon Napier Bell as manager, they switched to Virgin, and their English audience grew. Sylvian began collaborating with Yellow Magic Orchestra's Ryuichi Sakamoto [see entry]; their albums continued to reflect a sometimes baffling stylistic variety, although they gained U.K. Top 20 hits with "Quiet Life," "Ghosts," and a cover of Smokey Robinson and the Miracles' 1967 hit "I Second That Emotion."

Tension between Sylvian and saxophonist Mick Karn caused Japan's breakup in 1982, but its principal members continued recording. Karn alternated between music and sculpture, collaborations, and session work (Midge Ure, Gary Numan, Robert Palmer). He released solo albums and, for a short time, joined Bauhaus' Peter Murphy in the duo Dali's Car. Jansen and Barbiën in 1986 collaborated on an album entitled Worlds in a Small Room, then worked briefly together as the Dolphin Brothers.

In 1989 Japan reunited as Rain Tree Crow and subsequently released an album of the same name in 1991. Sylvian soon left to concentrate on his own work. His sound departed further from Japan's; either solo or with Robert Fripp, Bill Nelson, or Can alumnus Holger Czuckay, his work verged on New Age ambience. He also eschewed the theatricality that was his former band's trademark. His interest in aesthetics, however, remained. In 1984 he published his first book of photographs, Perspectives: Polaroids 82/84; in 1990 his installation of sculpture, sound, and light, Ember Glance: the permanence of memory, was staged in Japan.

Jason and the Scorchers

Formed 1981, Nashville, TN

Jason Ringenberg (b. Nov. 22, 1958, Kewanee, IL), voc., gr., harmonica; Warner Hodges (b. June 4, 1959, Wurtzburg, Ger.), gr., voc.; Jeff Johnson (b. Dec. 31, 1959, Nashville), bass; Perry Baggs (b. Mar. 22, 1962, Nashville), drums, voc.
1982—Reckless Country Soul EP (Praxis) 1983—Fervor EP 1985—Lost & Found (EMI America) 1986—Still Standing (+ Andy York [b. July 28, 1961, Wichita, KS], gr.; + Ken Fox [b. Feb. 16, 1961, Toronto, Ont., Can.], bass) 1989—Thunder and Fire (A&M) 1992—Essential Jason and the Scorchers, vol. 1: Are You Ready for the Country (EMI) 1995—A Blazing Grace (Mammoth) 1996—Clear and Impetuous Morning 1998—Midnight Roads & Stages Seen.

Jason Ringenberg solo: 1992—One Foot in the Honky Tonk (Liberty).

Jason and the Scorchers was one of the hottest live acts among the mid-'80s cow-punk bands. Unlike the majority of groups on the updated country-rock scene, however, Jason and company actually emerged from Nashville, not the West Coast.

Raised on his parents' Sheffield, Illinois, hog farm, Jason Ringenberg sang and played guitar in a number of bluegrass, folk, and country bands during his teens. In 1981 he moved to Nashville, where he met his fellow Scorchers after singer-guitarist Warner Hodges witnessed Ringenberg perform in a chaotic local band opening for Carl Perkins. The following year the group recorded its first EP as Jason and the Nashville Scorchers and toured with R.E.M. While on the road, Ringenberg and R.E.M. singer Michael Stipe collaborated on Fervor's "Both Sides of the Line," and Stipe sang backup vocals on the EP's "Hot Nights in Georgia." The song that most identified the Scorchers' oeuvre, perhaps, was Fervor's Ramones-meets-Southern-rock update of Bob Dylan's "Absolutely Sweet Marie."

Jason and the Scorchers' subsequent albums moved closer to country rock, with Ringenberg's ballads becoming more heartfelt and Hodges' guitar work more Stoneslike. Two later cover songs that further crystallized the band's sound were "Lost Highway" (from Lost & Found) and "19th Nervous Breakdown" (Still Standing). The band's guitar attack was beefed up for Thunder and Fire (1989) with the addition of Andy York. Label problems and a grueling 1990 U.S. tour opening for Dylan hammered the nail in the band's coffin, however. Hodges, York, and Fox joined former Del Lord guitarist Eric Ambel's Roscoe's Gang, and Ringenberg attempted a career as a solo country artist, releasing One Foot in the Honky Tonk, a hard-edged traditional C&W release that also failed to attract mainstream country audiences. After EMI issued Essential Jason and the Scorchers, vol. 1, consisting of the out-of-print Fervor and Lost & Found, along with some B sides, the original members regrouped and began performing again in 1994. The band then released A Blazing Grace in 1995 and soon entered an Atlanta storefront studio for 1996's Clear and Impetuous Morning, which again featured metal-strength riffs amid the C&W. The reinvigorated band then released a two-disc live set, 1998's Midnight Roads & Stages Seen. Hometown respect for the Nashville country rockers finally emerged in 2000, when the Country Music Hall of Fame included Scorchers artifacts in the museum's permanent collection.

Jay and the Americans

Formed 1961, Brooklyn, NY

John "Jay" Traynor, lead voc.; Kenny Vance (b. Kenny Rosenberg, Dec. 9, 1943), voc.; Sandy Deane (b. Sandy Yaguda, Jan. 30, 1943), voc.; Howie Kane (b. Howard Kirshenbaum, June 6, 1942), voc.

 1962—(+ Marty Sanders [b. Feb. 28, 1941], voc.; - Traynor; + Jay Black [b. David Blatt, Nov. 2, 1941], lead voc.) 1986—All-Time Greatest Hits (Rhino).

Jay and the Americans were a clean-cut vocal group whose '60s hits included four Top 10 entries. The group's first hit, the Leiber and Stoller-produced "She Cried" (#5, 1962), featured the original Jay, John Traynor, on lead vocals. That year, he left the group, and guitarist Marty Sanders invited his songwriting partner, David Blatt, to audition. Blatt adopted the moniker Jay, and the reconstituted group had its first hit with "Only in America" (#25, 1963). The song was originally recorded by the Drifters, but when the group's label decided not to release it, their vocals were erased, and Jay and the Americans' were added to the original tracks. The following year Jay and Americans hit #3 with "Come a Little Bit Closer," and in 1965 the grandiose "Cara Mia" hit #4. This, their best-remembered hit, was revived in the Netherlands in 1980 and reached #1.

In 1965 they released an uptempo cover of "Some Enchanted Evening" (#13) and Neil Diamond's first hit as a songwriter, "Sunday and Me" (#18). It was not until 1969 that they again hit the Top 10, this time with the million-selling cover of the Drifters' 1960 hit "This Magic Moment" (#6).

The group stopped recording in 1970 after hitting the Top 20 for the last time with "Walking in the Rain" (#19). A contractual dispute with United Artists over publishing rights kept the band from recording for a number of years. Jay Black kept the name alive by touring as a rock nostalgia act into the '90s. As a solo artist, he recorded an album in 1975 and later had a minor European hit with "Love Is in the Air" (covered by John Paul Young in the U.S.). Future Steely Dan founders Donald Fagen and Walter Becker were part of the group's backup band in the early '70s, and in 1970 Kenny Vance produced their soundtrack album for You Got to Walk It Like You Talk It. Vance also worked as a solo artist, recording his debut album in 1975. Sanders pursued writing, and Deane went into producing. "Looking for an Echo," a nostalgic tribute to doo-wop, was recorded with an ad hoc group that included several Americans and ex-Rascal Eddie Brnati.

The Jayhawks/Golden Smog

Formed 1985, Minneapolis, MN

Mark Olson (b. Sep. 18, 1961, Minneapolis), voc., gtr., harmonica; Gary Louis (b. Mar. 10, 1955, Toledo, OH), voc., gtr.; Marc Pearlman (b. July 29, 1961, St. Petersburg, FL), bass; Norm Rogers, drums.

1986—The Jayhawks (Bunkhouse) 1988—(- Rogers; + Thad Spencer, drums) 1989—Blue Earth (Twin/Tone) (- Spencer; + Ken Callahan, drums) 1992—Hollywood Town Hall (American) 1995—(- Callahan; + Karen Grotberg [b. Mar. 18, 1959], piano, voc.) Tomorrow the Green Grass (+ Tim O'Reagan [b. Oct. 1, 1958, Chandler, AZ], drums, voc.; - Olson) 1997—(+ Craig Johnson [b. May 9, 1965, Minneapolis], gtr., voc.) Sound of Lies 2000—Smile (Columbia/American) (- Grotberg; + Jen Gunderman [b. Nov. 23, 1969], kybds., voc.).

 Mark Olson with the Original Harmony Ridge Creek Dippers: 1997—The Original Harmony Ridge Creek Dippers (Creek) 1998—Pacific Coast Rambler 1999—Zola and the Tulip Tree 2000—My Own Jo Ellen (Hightone).
 Golden Smog (Louis; Pearlman; Johnson; Jeff Tweedy, gtr., voc.; Murphy, gtr., voc.; Jody Stephens, drums): 1992—On Golden Smog (Crackpot) 1995—Down by the Old Mainstream (Rykodisc) 1998—Weird Tales.

Drawing heavily from templates of the Louvin Brothers and Gram Parsons, the Jayhawks (along with contemporaries Uncle Tupelo and its splinter groups, Wilco and Son Volt) helped usher in the "alt country" or "y alternative" movement of the '90s. After the departure of founder and cofrontman Mark Olson in 1995, however, the Jayhawks shifted gears and moved toward a more sophisticated pop-rock sound in the vein of fellow Minneapolis cult heroes Big Star.

The Jayhawks came together in 1985 when Olson, a stand-up bass player with the Minneapolis rockabilly act Stagger Lee, recruited drummer Norm Rodgers, bassist Marc Pearlman, and guitarist Steve Retzler to back him up in an ensemble that would allow him to play his own material. Retzler was soon replaced by Gary Louis, a veteran of another local rockabilly band, Safety Last. The Jayhawks' self-titled, self-released debut album earned them a demo deal with A&M in 1988, but the label was uninterested in the results. Rodgers was replaced by Thad Spencer, and Louis—discouraged by the band's prospects and recovering from a serious auto accident—jumped ship. He came back on board after local label Twin/Tone picked up the band on the strength of their A&M demo and released Blue Earth in 1989. The album failed to make a commercial impression, but it attracted the attention of producer George Drakoulis, who signed the band to Def American after hearing Blue Earth in the background during a phone call with Twin/Tone.

Produced by Drakoulis (and featuring the band's third drummer, Ken Callahan), Hollywood Town Hall was released in 1992 to rave reviews. Marked by the shared lead vocals and striking harmonies of Olson and Louis, the album would prove to be an Americana landmark, eventually hailed by ROLLING STONE as one of the essential albums of the decade. The band's first "hit" of note would not come until the follow-up, 1995's Tomorrow the Green Grass (#92), which featured the Louns-sung singles "Blue" and "Bad Time," the latter a Grand Funk Railroad cover. The group now featured piano player Karen Grotberg and drummer Tim O'Reagan, but their future was thrown into question when Olson announced his departure to spend more time with his wife, singer/songwriter Victoria Williams, who suffered from multiple sclerosis. The couple relocated to the desert outside Joshua Tree California and formed the rootsy folk band Original Harmony Ridge Creekdippers. They self-released three Creekdippers albums before signing with Hightone Records, which issued My Own Jo Ellen in 2000.

With Louis stepping up as frontman and Kraig Johnson, from the Minneapolis band Run Westy Run, joining as an extra guitarist, the Jayhawks carried on with Sound of Lies (1997). The album found the band scaling back on the country- and folk-inspired elements of their sound in favor of a more psychedelic pop approach, with darker lyrics and heavier guitar. They continued in this direction for 2000's Bob Ezrin-produced Smile. Grotberg left after the recording of the album and was replaced by Jen Gunderman.

Louis, Pearlman, and Johnson also moonlight in Golden Smog, a loose-knit side project that also includes members of Wilco (Jeff Tweedy), Soul Asylum (Dan Murphy), and Big Star (Jody Stephens). The group originated as a novelty cover act (as demonstrated on the 1992 EP On Golden Smog), but two subsequent albums of original material established the mercurial unit as a critically well-received touring and recording act in its own right.

Jay-Z

Born Shawn Carter, Dec. 4, 1970, Brooklyn, NY
 1996—Reasonable Doubt (Roc-A-Fella/Priority) 1997—In My Lifetime, vol. 1 (Roc-A-Fella/Def Jam) 1998—Volume 2 . . .
Hard Knock Life 1999—Volume 3 . . . The Life & Times of S. Carter 2000—Dynasty: Roc La Familia 2000.

One of the top hip-hop performers of the late '90s, hardcore rapper Jay-Z grew up in Brooklyn's tough Marcy Projects. (He supposedly took his name from two nearby subway lines.) Like fellow New York rappers DMX and Nas, he achieved broad mainstream acceptance for his unflinching accounts of urban life. After appearing on tracks by Big Jay and Original Flavor, Jay-Z released his first album, Reasonable Doubt (#23 pop, #3 R&B, 1996), which included "Ain't No Nigga" (#50 pop, #17 R&B, 1996) with Foxy Brown. Another single, "Can't Knock the Hustle" (#73 pop, #35 R&B, 1996), featured guest vocals from Mary J. Blige. Unhappy with the album's distribution, Jay-Z formed his own record company, Roc-A-Fella, and signed a deal with Def Jam. In My Lifetime, vol. 1 (#3 pop, #2 R&B, 1997) was an unqualified success, but 1998's Volume 2 . . . Hard Knock Life (#1 pop and R&B, 1998) allowed the rapper to thoroughly dominate the pop charts. Two singles, debuting within a month of each other, did the rest: the jaunty "Can I Get a . . ." (#19 pop, #6 R&B, 1998), from the Rush Hour soundtrack, and "Hard Knock Life (Ghetto Anthem)" (#15 pop, #10 R&B, 1998), which used a sample of a children's chorus from The Original Broadway Cast of "Annie". The rapper embarked on a hugely successful tour and boosted the careers of such protégés as Ja Rule, Beanie Sigel, and Memphis Bleek. Volume 2 sold more than 4 million copies and won a Grammy Award for Best Rap Album. The 1999 followup, Volume 3 . . . The Life & Times of S. Carter (#1 pop and R&B, 2000), along with two hits—Maniah Carey's #1 pop and R&B "Heartbreaker" (on which he rapped) and "Do It Again (Put Ya Hands Up)" (#17 R&B, 1999)—continued the winning trend. In December 1999 Jay-Z was charged with first-degree assault in the stabbing of record executive Lance "Un" Rivera. A new album, The Dynasty: Roc La Familia (#1 pop and R&B, 2001), included the hit "I Just Wanna Love U (Give It 2 Me)" (#11 pop, #1 R&B, 2001).

Jazz Crusaders: See the Crusaders

D.J. Jazzy Jeff and the Fresh Prince: See Will Smith

Wyclef Jean: See the Fugees

Blind Lemon Jefferson

Born ca. July 1897, Couchman, TX; died ca. Dec. 1930, Chicago, IL
 1968—Master of the Blues, vol. 1 (Biograph) 1969—Blind Lemon Jefferson 1926–1929 1971—Master of the Blues, vol. 2 1971—Black Snake Moan (Milestone) 1974—Blind Lemon Jefferson 1988—King of the Country Blues (Yazoo).

One of the first country bluesmen of the '20s, arguably the most influential, and surely the most commercially popular, singer/guitarist Blind Lemon Jefferson (Lemon was his given first name) influenced other bluesmen like Lightnin' Hopkins, Big Joe Williams, Robert Pete Williams, T-Bone Walker, and B.B. King.

Blind from birth, Jefferson began performing in his early teens on streets and at parties and picnics. He was as much a "songster"—with a repertoire spanning blues, shouts, moans, field hollers, breakdowns, ballads, religious hymns, and prison and work songs—as a bluesman. As a teenager he worked throughout Texas, then hoboed through the South and Southwest, from Georgia to St. Louis, into the early '20s, although Dallas was always his home base. Around 1925 he was signed to Paramount Records, for which he recorded his own distinctive, haunting country blues under his own name, and religious songs under the pseudonym Deacon L.J. Bates. His blues recordings were among the best-selling "race" records of the 1925–30 era.

Jefferson reportedly suffered a heart attack in 1930 in Chicago and was left on the streets to die of exposure just before Christmas. His best-remembered tunes include "Black Snake Moan," "See That My Grave Is Kept Clean," "Long Lonesome Blues," and "Booger Rooger Blues," in which he coined the term "booger rooger" (for a wild party), which later became "boogie-woogie." A 1970 biography, Blind Lemon Jefferson, by Bob Groom, was published by BluesWorld.

The Jefferson Airplane/ Jefferson Starship/Starship

Jefferson Airplane, formed 1965, San Francisco, CA
Marty Balin (b. Martyn Jerel Buchwald, Jan. 30, 1942, Cincinnati, OH), voc.; Paul Kantner (b. Mar. 17, 1941, San Francisco, CA), gtr., voc.; Jorma Kaukonen (b. Dec. 23, 1940, Washington, DC), gtr., voc.; Signe Toly Anderson (b. Sep. 15, 1941, Seattle, WA), voc.; Bob Harvey, bass; Skip Spence (b. Alexander Lee Spence, Apr. 18, 1946, Ontario, Can.; d. Apr. 16, 1999, Santa Cruz, CA), drums.

1965—(- Harvey; + Jack Casady [b. Apr. 13, 1944, Washington, DC], bass) 1966—Jefferson Airplane Takes Off (RCA) (- Anderson; + Grace Slick [b. Grace Barnett Wing, Oct. 30, 1939, Chicago, IL], kybds., voc.; - Spence; + Spencer Dryden [b. Apr. 7, 1943, New York, NY], drums) 1967—Surrealistic Pillow; After Bathing at Baxter's 1968—Crown of Creation 1969—Bless Its Pointed Little Head; Volunteers 1970—The Worst of the Jefferson Airplane (- Dryden; + Joey Covington, drums) 1971—(- Balin; + Papa John Creach [b. May 28, 1917, Beaver Falls, PA; d. Feb. 22, 1994, Los Angeles, CA], fiddle) Bark (Grunt) 1972—(- Covington; + John Barbata, drums) Long John Silver (+ David Freiberg [b. Aug. 24, 1938, Boston, MA], voc., bass, gtr., kybds.; - Kaukonen; - Casady) 1973—Thirty Seconds Over Winterland 1974—Early Flight 1977—Flight Log 1987—2400 Fulton Street—An Anthology (RCA) 1990—White Rabbit and Other Hits 1992—Jefferson Airplane Loves You.

As Jefferson Starship: 1974—(Slick; Barbata; Freiberg; Creach; Kantner; + Peter Kangaroo [b. Peter Kaukonen], bass; + Craig Chaquico [b. Sep. 26, 1954, Sacramento, CA], gtr.; - Kangaroo; + Pete Sears [b. Eng.], bass) Dragon Fly 1975—(+ Balin) Red Octopus (- Creach) 1976—Spitfire 1978—Earth (- Slick; - Balin) 1979—Jefferson Starship Gold (+ Mickey Thomas [b. Dec. 3, 1949, Cairo, GA], voc.; - Barbata; + Aynsley Dunbar [b. Jan. 10, 1946, Liverpool, Eng.], drums) Freedom at Point Zero 1981—(+ Slick) Modern Times 1982—Winds of Change (- Dunbar; + Don Baldwin, drums) 1984—Nuclear Furniture (- Kantner; - Freiberg).

As Starship: 1985—Knee Deep in the Hoopla (Grunt) (- Sears) 1987—No Protection 1988—(- Slick) 1989—Love Among the Cannibals (RCA) 1990—(+ Brett Bloomfield, bass; + Mark Morgan, kybds.) (group disbands) 1991—Greatest Hits (Ten Years and Change, 1979-1991) (RCA).

Jefferson Airplane re-forms: 1989—(the 1966-1974 lineup: Kantner; Balin; Slick; Casady; Kaukonen) Jefferson Airplane (Epic).

As Jefferson Starship ("the Next Generation"): 1992—(Kantner; Casady; Creach; + Tim Gorman, kybds., voc.; + Prairie Prince [b. May 7, 1950, Charlotte, NC], drums, perc.; + Mark "Slick" Aguilar, gtr., voc.; Darby Gould [b. ca. 1965], voc.) 1994—(+ Balin; + Diana Mangano; - Creach) 1995—Deep Space/Virgin Sky (Intersound) (- Gorman; - Gould) 1996—(- Cambra; + T Lavitz, kybds.) 1999—Windows of Heaven (CMC International); Greatest Hits—Live at the Fillmore (- T Lavitz; + Chris Smith [b. 1964, New Haven, CT], kybds.).

Paul Kantner solo: 1970—Blows Against the Empire (credited to Paul Kantner/Jefferson Starship) (RCA) 1983—The Planet Earth Rock and Roll Orchestra.

Paul Kantner and Grace Slick: 1971—Sunfighter (Grunt).

Kantner, Slick, David Freiberg: 1973—Baron Von Tollbooth and the Chrome Nun (Grunt).

Grace Slick solo: 1974—Manhole (Grunt) 1980—Dreams (RCA) 1981—Welcome to the Wrecking Ball 1984—Software.

Grace Slick and the Great Society: 1970—Collector's Item From the San Francisco Scene (Columbia).

Marty Balin solo: 1973—Bodacious DF (RCA) 1980—Rock Justice (EMI) 1981—Balin 1983—Lucky 1990—Balince—A Collection (Rhino) 1991—Better Generation (GWE).

Mickey Thomas solo: 1971—As Long as You Love Me (MCA) 1981—Alive Alone (Elektra).

Craig Chaquico solo: 1993—Acoustic Highway (Higher Octave) 1994—Acoustic Planet 1996—A Thousand Pictures 1997—Once in a Blue Universe.

Papa John Creach solo: 1971—Papa John Creach (Grunt)

1972—Filthy 1974—Playing My Fiddle for You (with Zulu)

1975—I'm the Fiddle Man (with Midnight Sun) (Buddha)

1976—Rock Father 1992—Papa Blues (Bee Bump).

KBC Band: formed 1985 (Kantner; Balin; Casady; + Aguilar, gtr.; + Barry Lowenthal, drums; + Gorman, kybds., voc.; + Keith Crossan, sax): 1986—KBC Band (Arista).

Through myriad personnel shifts, including the 1984 departure of founder/guiding light Paul Kantner, several name changes, and its metamorphosis from a group of hippie revolutionaries to MOR pop powerhouse—and back again—the Jefferson Airplane/Starship franchise proved one of the most durable and volatile in rock.

At the start, the Jefferson Airplane epitomized the burgeoning Haight-Ashbury culture and provided its soundtrack. The Airplane established a psychedelic unity with communal vocal harmonies and a synthesis of elements from folk, pop, jazz, blues, and rock. The band got started in 1965 when Marty Balin, formerly with the acoustic group the Town Criers, met Paul Kantner at the Drinking Gourd, a San Francisco club. They were first a folk-rock group, rounded out by Jorma Kaukonen, Skip Spence, Signe Anderson, and Bob Harvey, though Harvey was soon replaced by Jack Casady. Their first major show was on August 13, christening the Matrix Club, which later became the outlet for new S.F. bands. RCA signed them late in the year, and Jefferson Airplane Takes Off (#128, 1966) came out in September 1966 and went gold.

Jefferson Airplane: Paul Kantner, Grace Slick, Spencer Dryden, Marty Balin, Jorma Kaukonen, Jack Casady

Just before the LP came out, in the summer of 1966, Signe Anderson left to have a baby and was replaced by former model Grace Slick. Slick had been a member of the Great Society, a group formed in 1965. The Great Society, which included Grace's husband at the time, Jerry Slick, and her brother-in-law Darby, had completed two LPs for Columbia that weren't released until after Slick became a star with the Airplane. Spence left the Airplane to form Moby Grape and was replaced by a former jazz drummer, Spencer Dryden, completing the Airplane's most inventive lineup.

Slick's vocals were stronger and more expressive than Anderson's; she later claimed that she always tried to imitate the yowl of the lead guitarist. She brought with her two former Great Society songs to Surrealistic Pillow—"Somebody to Love" (by Darby Slick) and her own "White Rabbit" (which was banned in some areas as a pro-drug song)—both of which became Top 10 singles, and the album (#3, 1967) sold half a million copies. After Bathing at Baxter's (#17, 1967) included a nine-minute psychedelic jam-collage, "Spayre Change," and occasioned the group's first battle with RCA over obscene language. The word "shit" was deleted from the lyric sheet. Baxter's had no hit singles and didn't sell well, but the Airplane recouped with the gold Crown of Creation (#6, 1968), which included Slick's "Lather" and David Crosby's "Triad," a song about a ménage à trois that had been rejected by Crosby's current group, the Byrds.

The band's ego conflicts were already beginning, however, as Slick stole media attention from Balin (the band's founder), and the songwriting became increasingly divergent. Live, Slick and Balin traded vocals in battles that became increasingly feverish, and the volatile sound of the band in concert was captured on Bless Its Pointed Little Head (#17, 1969). By the time the sextet recorded 1969's Volunteers, the Airplane's contract allowed it total "artistic control," which meant that the "Up against the wall, motherfuckers" chorus of "We Can Be Together" appeared intact. The Airplane performed at the Woodstock and Altamont festivals but then had its second major shakeup. Dryden left in 1970 to join the New Riders of the Purple Sage (he was replaced by Joey Covington), and the band stopped touring when Slick became pregnant by Kantner. Anxious to perform, Kaukonen and Casady formed Hot Tuna [see entry] (originally Hot Shit), which later seceded from the Airplane, although, like most band members, they would return.

In the meantime, Kantner and the housebound Slick recorded Blows Against the Empire (#20, 1970). Billed as Paul Kantner and Jefferson Starship (the debut of the name), the LP featured Jerry Garcia, David Crosby, Graham Nash, and other friends. It became the first musical work nominated for the science-fiction writers' Hugo Award. At the same time, a greatest-hits package entitled The Worst of the Jefferson Airplane (#12, 1970) was released. On January 25, 1971, Slick and Kantner's daughter, China, was born; and that spring, Balin, who had nothing to do with Blows and contributed only one cowritten composition to Volunteers, left. He formed a short-lived band, Bodacious D F.

In August the Airplane formed its own label, Grunt, distributed by RCA. The band's reunited effort, Bark (#11, 1971), saw them with Covington and all of Hot Tuna, including violinist Papa John Creach, who had first performed with Hot Tuna at a Winterland show in 1970. The band had grown apart, though, and Hot Tuna and Kantner-Slick were each writing for their own offshoot projects. In December 1971 Slick and Kantner released Sunfighter (#89, 1971) under both their names, with baby China as cover girl. (China grew up to become an MTV VJ and an actor.)

In July 1972 this version of the Airplane recorded its last studio LP, Long John Silver (#20), with some drumming from ex-Turtle John Barbata. In August 1972 at a free concert in New York's Central Park, the band introduced ex-Quicksilver Messenger Service bassist, keyboardist, and vocalist David Freiberg to the ranks. The Airplane unofficially retired at that point. By that September, Casady and Kaukonen had decided to go full-time with Hot Tuna, though they appeared on the live LP Thirty Seconds Over Winterland (#52, 1973), which came out in April 1973. Slick, Kantner, and Freiberg recorded Baron Von Tollbooth and the Chrome Nun (#120, 1973), one of the band's least popular efforts. Slick's equally disappointing solo debut, Manhole (#127), appeared in January 1974. By then, she had developed a senous drinking problem, and the band was hoping that the Tuna players would return. They did not.

Finally, in February 1974 Slick and Kantner formed the Jefferson Starship (no strict relation to the group on Blows), with Freiberg, Creach, Barbata, and 19-year-old lead guitarist Craig Chaquico. Chaquico had played with the Grunt band Steelwind with his high school English teacher Jack Traylor and on Slick and Kantner's collaborative LPs beginning with Sunfighter. The new group also included Peter Kangaroo (Jorma's brother), though in June he was replaced by Pete Sears, a British sessionman who had played on Rod Stewart's records and had been a member of Copperhead. On Dragon Fly (#11, 1974), Balin made a guest appearance on his and Kantner's song "Caroline." The LP went gold.

Balin tentatively rejoined the band in January 1975, and the group's next big breakthrough came with Red Octopus, its first #1 LP, hitting that position several times during the year and selling 4 million copies. Balin's ballad "Miracles" was a #3 single. The band was more popular than ever, but in Slick's opinion the music had become bland and corporate, and her rivalry with Balin had not diminished. The group's followup LP, 1976's Spitfire, went #3 and platinum, its first album to do so. But after the successful Earth (#5, 1978, also platinum), both Slick and Balin left.

By then, Slick and Kantner's romance had ended. In November 1976, she married the band's 24-year-old lighting director, Skip Johnson. Slick's alcoholism forced her to quit: the band in the middle of a European tour, leading to a crowd riot in Germany when she did not appear. Her solo albums were neither great critical nor great commercial successes, although throughout the years, her distinctive singing style never changed. In 1980 Balin produced a rock opera entitled Rock Justice in San Francisco. Balin did a solo LP of MOR love songs and in 1981 had a hit single with "Hears."

With its two lead singers gone, the group's future again seemed in question, but in 1979 singer Mickey Thomas, best known as lead vocalist on the Elvin Bishop hit "Fooled Around and Fell in Love," joined, and Barbata was replaced by Aynsley Dunbar, a former Frank Zappa and David Bowie sideman who had just left Journey. The new lineup's Freedom at Point Zero (#10, 1979) went gold. The group's momentum ground to a halt in 1980 after Kantner suffered a brain hemorrhage that, despite its severity, left no permanent damage. The next year came Modern Times (#26, 1981), which featured Slick on one track; she rejoined the band in February 1981, and the Jefferson Starship again ascended with a string of Top 40 hits: "Be My Lady" (#28, 1982), "Winds of Change" (#38, 1983), and "No Way Out" (#23, 1984).

Professing his disdain for the group's more commercial direction, Kantner left in 1984, taking with him the "Jefferson" of its name. Then known simply as Starship, the group enjoyed even greater commercial success. From the platinum #7 Knee Deep in the Hoopla came "We Built This City" (#1, 1985), "Sara" (#1, 1986), and "Tomorrow Doesn't Matter Tonight" (#26, 1986). No Protection (#12, 1987) included the group's third #1 hit, 1987's "Nothing's Gonna Stop Us Now," and "It's Not Over ('Til It's Over)" (#9, 1987), which was later adopted as the theme song of Major League Baseball. The last Top 40 single, "It's Not Enough," appeared in 1989. The core trio of Thomas, Chaquico, and Baldwin, abetted by Brett Bloomfield and Mark Morgan, attempted to keep the ship afloat, but in 1990 they called it quits. Thomas formed yet another group, Starship With Mickey Thomas, whose only links to the original dynasty were himself and latecomer Bloomfield.

In the meantime, in 1989 Kantner, Slick, Balin, Casady, and Kaukonen revived the early Jefferson Airplane lineup and released Jefferson Airplane (#85, 1989). Before that, Kantner, Balin, and Casady formed the KBC Band; its self-titled LP went to #75 in 1986. With Starship now disbanded, Kantner reclaimed the Jefferson Starship moniker and put together a new lineup in 1991, which included Airplane/Starship stalwarts Casady and Creach as well as Tim Gorman (who had worked with the Who and the Jefferson Airplane), ex-Tube Prairie Prince, ex-KBC member Slick Aguilar, and lead singer Darby Gould, whom Kantner discovered fronting her band World Entertainment War. Gould was joined by vocalist Diana Mangano. The next year, Balin joined This group, dubbed by Kantner Jefferson Starship—The Next Generation, toured in the early '90s to positive reviews. With Slick (who had by then retired from performing) guesting on several songs, the band recorded the live Deep Space/Virgin Sky, which consisted of new material as well as "covers" of classic Airplane and Starship tracks. The band continues to tour regularly; the album Windows of Heaven first came out in Germany in 1998 but was remixed for its American release in 1999.

In 2000 Balin, Kantner, and Casady started touring as Jefferson Airplane's Volunteers and were promptly sued by Jefferson Airplane manager and shareholder of Jefferson Airplane Inc. Bill Thompson, for using the name without permission. Adding to the confusion, Mickey Thomas has been touring as Starship Featuring Mickey Thomas since 1992.

Slick has remained true to her vow not to perform anymore and now dedicates herself to painting. Involving health reasons, she declined to appear with Jefferson Airplane when it performed at its induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in January 1996 (though she guested on ex-4 Non Blondes singer Linda Perry's album In Flight later that same year). In 1998 she published her autobiography, Somebody to Love?

Garland Jeffreys

Born ca. 1944, Brooklyn, NY

1969—Grinder's Switch Featuring Garland Jeffreys (Vanguard)
1973—Garland Jeffreys (Atlantic) 1977—Ghost Writer (A&M)
1978—One-Eyed Jack 1979—American Boy and Girl 1981—Escape Artist (Epic); Rock & Roll Adult 1983—Guts for Love
1991—Don't Call Me Buckwheat (RCA) 1992—Matador and More (A&M) 1997—Wildlife Dictionary (Logic/BMG.).

Garland Jeffreys' urban-romantic lyrics and tough-edged rock & roll gained him a large critical following, though little commercial success in the U.S. Jeffreys, who is part black, part white, and part Puerto Rican, endured growing up mulatto in Sheepshead Bay, Brooklyn. He attended Syracuse University in part because it was football hero Jim Brown's alma mater. There he befriended Lou Reed and upon graduating in 1965 spent a short while in Florence, Italy, studying Renaissance art. After briefly attending New York's Institute of Fine Arts, he began writing and singing songs.

By 1966, Jeffreys was performing solo in the Lower Manhattan club the Balloon Farm, which also featured musicians such as John Cale, Eric Burdon, and Lou Reed. Jeffreys made his living waiting tables and playing in several small-time bands—Train, Mandoor Beekman, and Romeo—before joining with the Buffalo-area group Raven to form Grinder's Switch in 1969. The band cut only one LP, Grinder's Switch Featuring Garland Jeffreys, before breaking up in 1970. Jeffreys resumed his solo career, playing Manhattan clubs and signing with Atlantic in 1973.

His self-titled debut, part of which was recorded in Jamaica, was released that March, and a nonalbum single entitled "Wild in the Streets" became an FM anthem. Critics applauded Jeffreys' emotive voice and tense music, but the single flopped. Frustrated, Jeffreys retired for a while, then returned in 1975 with a single on Ansta, "The Disco Kid." Following tours with Jimmy Cliff and Toots and the Maytals, Jeffreys re-signed with A&M in late 1976 and released Ghost Writer the next year. That album was praised for its romantic lyrics and Jeffreys' unique vocals, but neither it nor its two followups sold well.

Jeffreys left A&M after 1979's American Boy and Girl. The samba "Matador" went Top 10 in several European countries, winning him a new U.S. deal with Epic, which released Escape Artist in 1981. The album included a cover of "96 Tears" and was well received. Jeffreys toured, backed by the Rumour, resulting in a live LP out in late 1981 called Rock & Roll Adult. Following the less well-received Guts for Love, Roll Adult, Jeffreys essentially disappeared from the recording scene for nearly eight years. Don't Call Me Buckwheat was a critically acclaimed examination of racial issues.

Waylon Jennings

Born June 15, 1937, Littlefield, TX

1966—Folk Country (RCA) 1967—Love of the Common People 1969—Waylon Jennings (Vocalion) 1970—The Best of Waylon Jennings (RCA); Singer of Sad Songs 1971—The Taker/Tulsa 1972—Ladies Love Outlaws 1973—Lonesome, On'ry & Mean; Honky Tonk Heroes 1974—The Ramblin' Man; This Time 1975—Dreamin' My Dreams 1976—Are You Ready for the Country; Wanted: The Outlaws (with Willie Nelson, Jessi Colter, and Tompall Glaser); Waylon Live 1977—Ol' Waylon 1978—Waylon & Willie 1979—Greatest Hits 1980—Music Man 1982—Black on Black; WWII (with Willie Nelson) 1986—Will the Wolf Survive (MCA) 1988—Full Circle 1990—The Eagle (Epic) 1992—Too Dumb for New York City, Too Ugly for L.A. 1993—Cowboys, Sisters, Rascals & Dirt (RCA); The RCA Years—Only Daddy That'll Walk the Line 1994—Waymore's Blues (Part II) 1996—Right for the Time (Justice) 1998—Closing In on the Fire (Ark 21) 2000—Never Say Die Live! (Sony/Lucky Dog).

With the Highwaymen (Jennings, Willie Nelson, Johnny Cash, and Kris Kristofferson): 1985—Highwayman (Columbia) 1990—Highwayman 2 1995—The Road Goes on Forever (Capitol) 1999—Highwayman Super Hits (Sony).

Waylon Jennings, along with Willie Nelson, was one of the founding fathers of the rougher, so-called outlaw country movement that championed honky-tonk country over the string-laden Nashville style.

At age 12, Jennings became one of the youngest disc jockeys in radio, working at a Texas country station. At 22, he moved to Lubbock, where he continued to work as a DJ, and then teamed up with Buddy Holly, who asked him to join his touring band on bass. He toured with Holly in 1959, and Holly produced Jennings' first solo single, "JolÉ Blon," on Brunswick Records. Jennings was booked on the charter plane flight in which Holly was killed, but gave his seat to the Big Bopper.

In 1963 Jennings formed his own group, the Waylor, and played a brand of folk country, recording for Trend, J.D.'s (part of Vocalion), Ramco, and A&M. He was signed to RCA by Chet Atkins in 1965, began to play mainstream country, and had a #23 C&W hit with his version of "MacArthur Park" in 1969, which won Jennings his first Grammy. But in the early '70s, with albums like Ladies Love Outlaws, Jennings began to develop a more rebellious style, with a rockier edge, and he was booked into rock venues. The 1976 album Wanted: The Outlaws, featuring Waylon, Willie Nelson, Tompall Glaser, and Jennings' wife, Jessi Colter, was the first country LP to be certified platinum. Ol' Waylon, the first platinum record by a solo country artist, contained the #1 C&W hit "Luckenbach, Texas." Jennings' duets with Willie Nelson also produced the hits "Good Hearted Woman" and his second Grammy winner, "Mammas Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up to Be Cowboys" (#42 pop, 1978). Both "Luckenbach, Texas" and "Good Hearted Woman" crossed over to #25 on the pop charts. His Greatest Hits (1979) sold over 4 million copies (C&W's first quadruple-platinum album) and included the #1 country hit "Amanda." (By the early '80s, Jennings had to his credit five platinum LPs, and four platinum and eight gold singles.)

Waylon Jennings

In 1985 Jennings joined Nelson, Johnny Cash, and Kris Kristofferson as the Highwaymen, releasing three albums. A move to MCA and producer Jimmy Bowen expanded Jennings' musical range, exemplified by his cover of Los Lobos' "Will the Wolf Survive" (#5 C&W, 1986). Jennings had triple-bypass heart surgery in 1988 (Johnny Cash recuperated from his own heart surgery in a room across the hall). In 1991 Jennings' song "The Eagle" became an unofficial anthem for the troops of Operation Desert Storm. His 1994 LP, Waymore's Blues (Part II), was produced by Don Was. Right for the Time, released two years later on the independent Texas label Justice Records, hit stores at the same time as his acclaimed autobiography. Waylon, cowritten with Patti Smith guitarist/rock scribe Lenny Kaye. The same summer found Jennings braving young rock audiences on the Lollapalooza Tour, appearing on three dates night before headliners Soundgarden and Metallica. Two years later he surfaced on another indie, Ark 21, for which he cut Closing in on the Fire (#71 C&W). Guests on the album included rockers Sting, Sheryl Crow, and Mark Knopfler, as well as legendary "Country Gentleman" Carl Smith, whom Jennings coaxed out of retirement to sing on one track. The year 2000 found Jennings back on a major label (Sony imprint Lucky Dog), which released Never Say Die Live. The live album, featuring a reunion of Jennings' old road band as well as guest performances by his wife, Jessi Colter, and newfangled Nashville "outlaws" Montgomery Gentry and Travis Tritt, was recorded over two nights in January 2000 at Nashville's historic Ryman Auditorium.

The Jesus and Mary Chain

Formed 1984, East Kilbride, Scot.

William Reid (b. Oct. 28, ca. 1958, Glasgow, Scot.), gtr., voc.;

Jim Reid (b. Dec. 29, ca. 1961, Glasgow), gtr., voc.; Douglas Hart, bass; Murray Dalglish, drums.

1984—(– Dalglish; + Bobby Gillespie, drums) 1985—Psychocandy (Reprise) (– Gillespie; + John Loder, drums) 1987—(– Loder; + John Moore [b. Dec. 23, 1964, Eng.], drums) Darklands (Warner Bros.) 1988—Barbed Wire Kisses 1989—(– Moore; numerous lineup changes follow, only the major ones are listed) Automatic (+ Richard Thomas, drums; – Hart) 1992—Honey's Dead (Def American) 1994—(– Thomas; + Ben Lurie, bass, gtr.; + Steve Monti, drums) Stoned & Dethroned (American) 1998—Munki (Sub Pop) (– William Reid).

With pretty pop melodies buried deep in feedback and grindingly distorted guitars, the Jesus and Mary Chain became darlings of the mid-'80s British press and a college-radio cult hit in the United States. Their melancholy noise made them one of the most distinctive of the Velvet Underground's many musical progeny and paved the way for critically acclaimed early-'90s noise-guitar bands such as My Bloody Valentine.

Shortly after forming the band just outside Glasgow, Scotland, the Reid brothers moved the Jesus and Mary Chain to London to record their first single, "Upside Down." In late 1984 came the first in an ongoing series of drummer changes (after 1986, the drummers were mostly used for live shows only, not for the albums). Bobby Gillespie, vocalist with another Scottish band, Primal Scream, replaced Dalglish on drums—which consisted of banging out simple time on a snare drum and one tom-tom, much like the Velvet Underground's Maureen Tucker. The Jesus and Mary Chain's early work was sneering, thrashing postpunk, delivered in furious 20-minute sets that sometimes ended with audiences violently annoyed by the brevity of the set, the loud feedback, and/or the Reids' singing with their backs to the crowd. The band accepted the obvious comparison to punk rock but then turned around in fall 1985 and recorded the first of its slow, throbbing noise-pop classics, "Just Like Honey," which was built on the classic Phil Spector drumbeat from "Be My Baby." Gillespie returned to Primal Scream a month before Psychocandy was released to enormous critical acclaim in both England and America.

The Jesus and Mary Chain: Ben Lurie, Jim Reid, William Reid

The Darklands album was followed by a North American tour during which Jim Reid was arrested for assaulting a male heckler (Reid was later acquitted by a Toronto court.) In early 1992 the group was banned from the British television show Top of the Pops over the lyrics to its single "Reverence," which included such lines as "I wanna die just like Jesus Christ / I wanna die just like J.F.K." That summer the band played the U.S. on the second annual Lollapalooza Tour. Stoned & Dethroned (1994) proved a departure for the Reid brothers, with its soft, acoustic sound; the album's first single, "Sometimes Always," featured Mazzy Star's Hope Sandoval. Though the song hinted at a commercial breakthrough, it was four years before another U.S. release. Munki, released by Seattle's Sub Pop label, was a flop. William Reid quit the same year, and the group disbanded in 1999. William recorded solo; Jim formed the band Freeheat.

Jesus Jones

Formed 1988, London, Eng.

Mike Edwards (b. June 22, 1964, London), voc., gtr.; Jerry De Borg (b. Oct. 30, 1963, London), gtr.; Barry D (b. Iain Baker, Sep. 29, 1965, Surrey, Eng.), kybds.; Al Jaworski (b. Jan. 31, 1966, Plymouth, Eng.), bass; Gen (b. Simon Matthews, Apr. 23, 1964, Wiltshire, Eng.), drums.

1989—Liquidizer (SBK) 1991—Doubt 1993—Perverse
1998—Already (Combustion/EMI) 1998—Greatest (EMI, Jap.).

Mixing post-new-wave pop rock with liberal doses of sampling and dance rhythms, Jesus Jones scored a huge 1991 hit with "Right Here, Right Now," a song that marveled at the end of the Soviet empire. Topping the charts on both sides of the Atlantic, "Right Here, Right Now" was used as a campaign theme by presidential candidate Bill Clinton before he adopted Fleetwood Mac's "Don't Stop."

Mike Edwards, Jerry De Borg, Al Jaworski, and Gen had been together in a London band called Camouflage. While vacationing in Spain in 1988, they renamed themselves Jesus Jones, reportedly because they were Bnts—"Joneses"—surrounded by people named "Jesus." Iain "Barry D" Baker then joined, and he and Edwards began working on getting new sounds with digital-sampling synthesizers. Influenced by rap, alternative rock, and England's pre-rave acid-house scene, Jesus Jones recorded its debut album in late 1988. It produced a U.K. hit in "Info Freako" (#42, 1989), which failed to chart in America but got some college-radio play. In February 1990 Jesus Jones became one of the first British bands to perform in Romania after the fall of that country's oppressive Ceausescu regime. Doubt (#25, 1991) topped America's alternative-rock charts and yielded big hit singles in "Right Here, Right Now" (#2, 1991) and "Real, Real, Real" (#4, 1991). Perverse (#59, 1993), however, failed to make much of a splash. After a four-year hiatus, the band changed labels and returned with Already, which was released a year later in the U.S.

Jethro Tull

Formed 1967, Blackpool, Eng.

Ian Anderson (b. Aug. 10, 1947, Edinburgh, Scot.), voc., flute, gtr.; Mick Abrahams (b. Apr. 7, 1943, Luton, Eng.), gtr.; Glenn Cornick (b. Apr. 24, 1947, Barrow-in-Furness, Eng.), bass; Clive Bunker (b. Dec. 12, 1946, Blackpool), drums.
1968—(– Abrahams; + Martin Barre [b. Nov. 17, 1946], gtr.)
1969—This Was (Reprise); Stand Up 1970—Benefit (+ John Evan [b. Mar. 28, 1948], kybds.) 1971—(– Cornick; + Jeffrey Hammond-Hammond [b. July 30, 1946], bass) Aqualung (– Bunker; + Barriemore Barlow [b. Sep. 10, 1949], drums)
1972—Thick as a Brick; Living in the Past (Chrysalis) 1973—A Passion Play 1974—War Child 1975—Minstrel in the Gallery 1976—M.U.—The Best of Jethro Tull (– Hammond-Hammond; + John Glascock [b. 1953; d. Nov. 17, 1979; London, Eng.), bass; + David Palmer, kybds.) Too Old to Rock 'n' Roll 1977—Songs From the Wood; Repeat: Best of, vol. 2
1978—Heavy Horses; Burstin' Out (Live) (– Glascock; + Tony Williams, bass) 1979—Stormwatch (– Williams; – Evan; – Barlow; + Eddie Jobson [b. Apr. 28, 1955, Eng.), kybds., violin; + Dave Pegg [b. Nov. 2, 1947, Birmingham, Eng.), bass; + Mark Craney [b. Los Angeles, CA], drums) 1980—"A"
1981—(– Craney; – Jobson; + Gerry Conway, drums; + Peter-John Vettese, kybds.) 1982—The Broadsword and the Beast

1984—Under Wraps (– Conway) 1985—Original Masters (Best of) 1987—Crest of a Knave (– Vettese; + Conway, drums; + Doane Perry, drums) 1988—20 Years of Jethro Tull 1989—Rock Island (– Conway; + Martin Allcock, kybds.)
1991—Catfish Rising (– Vettese; – Allcock; + John "Rabbit" Bundrick, kybds.; + Foss Patterson, kybds.; – Bundrick; – Patterson; – Perry; + Dave Mattacks, drums) 1992—A Little Light Music 1992—(– Mattacks; + Perry; + Andy Giddings, kybds.) 1993—The Best of Jethro Tull; 25th Anniversary Boxed Set 1995—(– Pegg; + Steve Bailey, bass) Roots to Branches 1999—(– Bailey; + Jonathan Noyce, bass) J-Tull Dot Com (Fuel/Varèse Sarabande).
Ian Anderson solo: 1983—Walk Into Light (Chrysalis) 1995—Divinities: Twelve Dances With God (Angel) 2000—The Secret Language of Birds (Fuel/Varèse Sarabande).

Named for no apparent reason after an 18th-century British agronomist who invented the machine drill for sowing seed, Jethro Tull has been one of the most commercially successful and eccentric progressive-rock bands. In 1987, two decades after its founding, the band won a Grammy for Best Hard Rock/Metal Performance, Vocal or Instrumental, for Crest of a Knave.

Jethro Tull began as a blues-based band with some jazz and classical influences, and was initially proclaimed by the British press in 1968 as "the new Cream." By the early '70s, it had expanded into a full-blown classical-jazz-rock-progressive band and in the late '70s turned toward folkish, mostly acoustic rock, all the while selling millions of albums and selling out worldwide tours. Jethro Tull's driving force is Ian Anderson. With his shaggy mane, full beard, and penchant for traditional tartan-plaid attire, Anderson acquired a reputation as a mad Faginesque character with his Olde English imagery and stage antics like playing the flute or harmonica while hopping up and down on one leg (He confessed to ROLLING STONE in 1993 that he had only recently learned the correct fingerings.)

Anderson moved to Blackpool as a child and met the future members of Jethro Tull in school. He and members of both early and later Jethro Tull lineups formed the John Evan Band in the mid-'60s, which played in northern England with middling success. In late 1967 the band regrouped as Jethro Tull, adding guitarist Mick Abrahams and drummer Clive Bunker, and Anderson taught himself the flute.

The band had its first big success at the 1968 Sunbury Jazz and Blues Festival in England. Tull recorded its debut, This Was, that summer, and by autumn it was high on the LP chart in England. The album was released in the U.S. in 1969, and though it sold only moderately, critics hailed the band. That year the British music weekly Melody Maker made Jethro Tull its #2 Band of the Year, after the Beatles (the Rolling Stones were third). Abrahams left after the first LP (Black Sabbath's Tony Iommi briefly replaced him) to form Blodwyn Pig [see entry] and later the Mick Abrahams Band.

Jethro Tull's first U.S. tour in 1969 paved the way for the chart success of Stand Up (#20), on which Martin Barre replaced Abrahams. One of the more popular numbers on that album was an Anderson flute instrumental based on a Bach "Bouree." (This Was had featured Rahsaan Roland Kirk's "Serenade to a Cuckoo"; Anderson had acquired his trademark flute effects—singing through the flute and flutter-tonguing—from Kirk.) Tull's next LP, Benefit (#11, 1970), went gold in the U.S., and the group began selling out 20,000-seat arenas. Cornick left to form Wild Turkey and was replaced by Jeffrey Hammond-Hammond, a childhood buddy of Anderson's who'd been mentioned in several Tull tunes ("A Song for Jeffrey," "Jeffrey Goes to Leicester Square," "For Michael Collins, Jeffrey and Me").

By far the band's most successful record in the United States, Aqualung (#7, 1971) was an antichurch/pro-God concept album, which eventually sold over 5 million copies worldwide, yielding FM standards like "Cross-Eyed Mary," "Hymn 43," and "Locomotive Breath." Then Bunker left to form the abortive Jude with ex-Procol Harum Robin Trower, ex-Stone the Crows Jim Dewar, and Frankie Miller. His replacement was Barriemore Barlow, whose superlative technique was put to good use on Thick as a Brick, another concept album in which one song stretched over two sides in a themes-and-variations suite, a vague protest against Life Itself. The album reached #1 in the U.S. and went gold. A Passion Play (#1, 1973) followed the same format but was even more elaborate; critics soundly thrashed Anderson for his indulgence, resulting in his permanent mistrust of the music press and a two-year touring layoff.

However, the heavily orchestrated War Child (#2, 1974) became Tull's next gold LP (the Living in the Past compilation, with a hit in its title tune, had also gone gold) and yielded a #12 hit single in "Bungle in the Jungle." Minstrel in the Gallery (#7, 1975), Tull's first extended flirtation with Elizabethan folk ideas, went gold, and M.U.—The Best of Jethro Tull (#13, 1976) went platinum. Hammond-Hammond then left, replaced by John Glascock. In the title cut of Too Old to Rock 'n' Roll (#14, 1976), Anderson turned ironic self-deprecation into self-glorification. Songs From the Wood (#8, 1977), with its minor hit single "The Whistler," was Tull's deepest exploration into acoustic folk (Anderson had just produced an LP for Steeleye Span). The band's next two albums continued to merge the rustic with Anderson's tortuously intricate classical/jazz/rock thematics.

During 1978 Glascock's health deteriorated, and he was replaced by Tony Williams. Glascock died in 1979 after undergoing heart surgery, and his replacement was former Fairport Convention member Dave Pegg. Before "A" (#30, 1980), Anderson revamped the band to include ex-Roxy Music Eddie Jobson and Mark Craney. The tour supporting "A" was documented and incorporated into the long-form video Slipstream. Beginning with The Broadsword and the Beast (#19, 1982), Anderson cowrote material with Peter Vettese, who had also worked with him on his solo album, Walk Into Light. The following year's Under Wraps continued to evince the group's new keyboard-dominated sound and, by Tull standards, was a flop, topping at #76.

In 1984 a throat problem forced Anderson to forgo singing for the next three years. By then he had established a profitable business raising salmon in Scotland. The first album he recorded after that involuntary hiatus was Crest of a Knave (#32, 1987), the group's first gold album since Stormwatch and the recipient of the first-ever Best Hard Rock/Metal Performance Grammy. Many observers felt that given the competition (which included Metallica and AC/DC) and the ill-fitting category, this was one of the more ridiculous awards in Grammy history. Jethro Tull hit the road, but Rock Island stalled at #56, and even a return to a more blues-influenced sound could not pull Catfish Rising past #88. Interestingly, in the U.K. that album debuted at #1 on both the heavy-metal and folk/roots charts. A Little Light Music, a live recording of a stripped-down Tull consisting of only Anderson, Barre, Dave Pegg, with Dave Matlocks on drums, went only to #150.

A silver-anniversary world tour ran from early 1993 to mid-1994. Once it ended, Anderson began work on an album for EMI's classical division, and Martin Barre released his first solo album. Although Jethro Tull is not the commercial force it once was (1999's studio offering, J-Tull Dot Com, peaked at only #161), its catalogue still sells phenomenally well, and its best-known songs are staples of AOR and classic-rock radio.

Joan Jett

Born Joan Larkin, Sep. 22, 1960, Philadelphia, PA
 1981—Bad Reputation (Boardwalk); I Love Rock 'n' Roll
 1983—Album (Blackheart/MCA) 1984—Glorious Results of a Misspent Youth 1986—Good Music 1988—Up Your Alley
 1990—The Hit List (Blackheart/Epic) 1991—Notorious 1994—Pure and Simple (Warner Bros.); Flashback (Blackheart)
 1997—Fit to Be Tied: Great Hits by Joan Jett
 (Mercury/Blackheart) 1999—Fetish (Blackheart) 2001—Unfinished Business EP.
 With Evil Stig: 1995—Evil Stig (Blackheart/Warner Bros.).

Singer/guitarist Joan Jett was one of the most surprising success stories of the early '80s. The latter-day leader of the much-maligned all-female teenage hard-rock group the Runaways (see entry), Jett could barely get a U.S. deal for her first solo album at the beginning of 1981. One year later her second solo LP had a #1 single and went Top 5 and platinum.

Jett's family moved to Baltimore when she was in grade school and to Southern California when she was 14. That Christmas she got her first guitar. Her initial and continuing inspiration was the British early-'70s glitter-pop music of T. Rex, Gary Glitter, Slade, David Bowie, and Suzi Quatro, whose tough stance Jett most closely emulated. At 15 she met producer Kim Fowley at Hollywood's Starwood Club and became part of his group, the Runaways. The band gave its last show New Year's Eve 1978 in San Francisco.

In the spring of 1979 Jett was in England trying to get a solo project going. While there she cut three songs with ex-Sex Pistols Paul Cook and Steve Jones, two of which came out as a single in Holland only. Back in L.A., Jett produced the debut album by local punks the Germs and acted in a movie based on the Runaways (with actresses playing the rest of the band) called We're All Crazy Now (its title taken from the Slade song). The movie was never released, but while working on it Jett met Kenny Laguna (producer of Jonathan Richman, Greg Kihn, and the Steve Gibbons Band) and Ritchie Cordell (bubblegum legend who cowrote Tommy James and the Shondells' "I Think We're Alone Now" and "Mony Mony").

Jett fell ill and spent six weeks in the hospital suffering from pneumonia and a heart-valve infection. She then assembled a solo debut, with Laguna and Cordell producing, using the Jones-Cook British tracks plus guest musicians Sean Tyla and Blondie's Clem Burke and Frank Infante. As Joan Jett, the album came out in Europe only. It was rejected by every major and minor label in the U.S., and finally Laguna put out the LP himself. After much positive U.S. press, the album was picked up by Boardwalk in January 1981 and re-named Bad Reputation. But it didn't sell.

After a year of touring with her band the Blackhearts, Jett's second LP, even harder-rocking than the first, came out in December 1981, including a version of "Little Drummer Boy" on the pre-Christmas editions. It immediately bolted up the chart, aided by a remake of a B side by the Arrows, the pop-heavy-metal single "I Love Rock 'n' Roll," which hit #1 in early 1982. Jett reached the Top 20 twice more that year with a pair of covers, Tommy James' "Crimson and Clover" (#7) and Gary Glitter's "Do You Wanna Touch Me (Oh Yeah)" (#20).

The singer/guitarist's popularity has been sporadic ever since. The followup to I Love Rock 'n' Roll went gold but contained only the Top 40 "Fake Friends"; by the time of 1988's Up Your Alley, Jett's career appeared all but finished. The previous year, her foray into film (Light of Day, the story of a struggling rock & roll band, starring Michael J. Fox) had fared poorly at the box office, and even her version of the title song, penned by Bruce Springsteen, failed to break the Top 30. But the platinum Up Your Alley put Jett's gritty, unadorned hard rock back on the chart with "I Hate Myself for Loving You" (#8, 1988) and "Little Liar" (#19, 1988). Then came another dry spell, broken only by yet another cover tune: AC/DC's vengeful "Dirty Deeds" (#36, 1990).

In 1992 Jett left Epic Records for Warner Bros. At a time when she was verging on becoming a punk anachronism, she became frequently cited as an archetype of the so-called Riot Grrrl movement of women-led bands. She produced a single for Bikini Kill, whose singer Kathleen Hanna then cowrote four songs on Jett's 1994 LP, Pure and Simple. Despite that album's positive reviews, Jett wasn't able to keep the momentum going. She released a live album with the Gits (a punk band whose singer, Mia Zapata, had been murdered) under the moniker Evil Stig and continued to associate with the indie-rock scene, but her own output since Pure and Simple has been slim. In addition to a pair of compilations, there have been only 1999's confidential Fetish (a mix of old, rare, and new songs) and the 2001 EP Unfinished Business, which collects five sports-related songs, including a version of "Love Is All Around" (the theme to The Mary Tyler Moore Show).

In 1999 Jett and the Blackhearts performed for allied troops in the Balkans. At the end of 2000 Jett joined the Broadway cast of The Rocky Horror Show, playing Columbia and Usherette.

Jewel

Born Jewel Kilcher, May 23, 1974, Payson, UT

1995—Pieces of You (Atlantic) 1998—Spirit (Atlantic)

1999—Joy: A Holiday Celebration.

Atz Kilcher and Lenedra Carroll may not have made much of an impression with the two albums they recorded as a folk duo (1977's Early Morning Gold and 1978's Born and Raised on Alaska Land), but their daughter, Jewel, would become one of the most successful female solo artists of all time. She was catapulted into the mainstream—and to the forefront of the Lilith Fair pack of new female singer/songwriters—on the strength of a powerfully expressive voice and a debut album, Pieces of You, that took about nine months to chart and sold more than 11 million copies.

Jewel (who uses only her first name professionally) was born in Utah, where her father was attending college. Soon after, her parents moved the family back to Homer, Alaska, to live on the 800-acre homestead of her paternal grandfather, a Swiss emigrant who helped draft Alaska's state charter. Their log cabin home had no running water. At the age of six, Jewel began singing with her parents and two brothers in local bars and restaurants. She continued performing with her father after her parents' divorce two years later but moved to Anchorage to be with her mother when she was 15 and then to Michigan to attend the Interlochen Fine Arts Academy, where she studied opera and learned to play guitar. After graduation she rejoined her mother in San Diego, where she began a series of waitress jobs to make rent before deciding to live out of her VW van and concentrate on songwriting. This led to a steady gig at the local Inner-Chance Coffeehouse, where Jewel began attracting such a large crowd that she landed a recording contract with Atlantic within five months. She was 19.

Released in February 1995, Pieces of You seemed to be dead on arrival. But the label stuck by her, and 14 months of steady touring later, the album's lead single, "Who Will Save Your Soul," began to take off. The song debuted on the singles chart in June 1996 and peaked at #11. A second single, "You Were Meant for Me," went to #2. By the time the third single, "Foolish Games" (also featured on the Batman & Robin soundtrack), went to #7, Pieces of You had climbed to #4. The album was met with mixed reviews—Jewel herself would later dismiss many of the songs as immature and poorly recorded—but her voice (particularly her knack for both scat singing and yodeling) was widely regarded as a marvel. When Time magazine spotlighted the '90s brigade of female singer/songwriters for a 1997 cover story on Sarah McLachlan's successful all-woman Lilith Fair festival tour, it was Jewel's face that adorned the cover, with the headline "Jewel and the Gang"

Released nearly four years after Pieces of You, Spirit (1998) debuted at #3 and sold over 4 million copies (as opposed to its 11-million-selling predecessor). The lead single, "Hands," went to #6, but "Down So Long" and "Jupiter (Swallow the Moon)" stalled at #59 and #51, respectively. Jewel's popularity and visibility remained high, however, as evidenced by the success of her 1998 poetry collection, A Night Without Armor, which topped the New York Times bestseller list.

In 1999 she cofounded (with her mother) her own nonprofit charity organization, Higher Ground for Humanity—intended, according to her Web site, to "inspire positive change on global, community, and individual levels." The same year, she performed both at Woodstock '99 and at the NetAid concert at Giants Stadium in New Jersey, sang two duets with Merle Haggard for his career retrospective, For the Record: 43 Legendary Hits, and released the Christmas album Joy: A Holiday Collection (#32). She also made her film debut with a starring role in director Ang Lee's Civil War drama, Ride With the Devil.

In 2000 Jewel released her second book, Chasing Down the Dawn, a collection of journals chronicling both her public and private life. As of this writing, a new album was in the planning stages.

Jodeci

Formed 1988, Charlotte, NC

K-Ci (b. Cedric Hailey, Sep. 2, 1969, Charlotte), voc.; Jo-Jo (b. Joel Hailey, June 10, 1971, Charlotte), voc.; Devante Swing (b. Donald DeGrate, Sep. 29, 1969, Newport News, VA), voc.; Mr. Dalvin (b. Dalvin DeGrate, July 23, 1971, Newport News), voc. 1991—Forever My Lady (Uptown/MCA) 1993—Diary of a Mad Band 1995—The Show, the After-Party, the Hotel. K-Ci & Jo-Jo: 1997—Love Always 1999—It's Real. Dalvin DeGrate: 2000—Met.A.Mor.Phic (Maverick).

Jodeci helped lead the first wave of romantically inclined R&B vocal groups who wed neo-doo-wop harmonies to '90s dance rhythms. While at first overshadowed on the pop charts by Boyz II Men and Color Me Badd, Jodeci was enormously popular with black audiences when all three groups emerged in 1991. The group finally claimed a Top 10 pop crossover of its own two years later.

The Hailey and DeGrate brothers met while singing in different Charlotte, North Carolina, church choirs. Taking their group name from a combination of three members' stage names, Jodeci landed a record deal after singing for executives at MCA's Uptown black pop label. The group's debut album, Forever My Lady (#18 pop, #1 R&B, 1991), sold more than 2 million copies, yielding hits in "Stay" (#41 pop, #1 R&B, 1991) and the title track (#25 pop, #1 R&B, 1991), which was cowritten and coproduced by Al B. Sure! DeVante Swing reciprocated by cowriting and coproducing Sure!'s album Private Times and the Whole 9.

In April 1993 K-Ci and DeVante Swing turned themselves in to Teaneck, New Jersey, police where they were arraigned on charges of aggravated sexual contact and weapons possession; they were subsequently sentenced to probation and community service. Four months later "Lately," from Jodeci's appearance in early 1993 on Uptown MTV Unplugged, rose to #4 on the pop chart (#1 R&B). Success followed with the release later that year of Diary of a Mad Band (#3 pop, #1 R&B), which featured the singles "Cry for You" (#15 pop, #1 R&B, 1993) and "Feenin'" (#25 pop, #2 R&B, 1994).

The group's next release, 1995's The Show, the After-Party, the Hotel (#2 pop, #1 R&B), launched three singles onto the charts: "Freek 'n You" (#14 pop, #3 R&B), "Love U 4 Life" (#31 pop, #8 R&B), and "Get On Up" (#22 pop, #4 R&B). K-Ci scored with a solo single, a remake of Bobby Womack's "If You Think You're Lonely Now" (#17 pop, #11 R&B), from the soundtrack to the 1995 film Jason's Lyric, and joined Jo-Jo for "How Could You" (#53 pop, #16 R&B, 1996) from the film Bulletproof. The pair was also featured on 2Pac's (Tupac Shakur) #1 hit, 1996's "How Do U Want It." It wasn't long before the brothers cut loose with their own album, 1997's Love Always (#6 pop, #2 R&B), which was an attempt to tone down Jodeci's racy lyrical content while focusing more on lush balladry. The singles included "You Bring Me Up" (#26 pop, #7 R&B), "Last Night's Letter" (#46 pop, #15 R&B), "All My Life" (#1 pop and R&B), and "Don't Rush (Take Love Slowly)" (#24 R&B). In 1999 the brothers released a second album, It's Real. The following year, Dalvin DeGrate's solo album, Met.A.Mor.Phic, was released on Madonna's Maverick label.

Billy Joel

Born William Martin Joel, May 9, 1949, Bronx, NY 1972—Cold Spring Harbor (Family/Philips) 1973—Piano Man (Columbia) 1974—Streetlife Serenade 1976—Turnstiles 1977—The Stranger 1978—52nd Street 1980—Glass Houses 1981—Songs in the Attic 1982—The Nylon Curtain 1983—An Innocent Man 1985—Greatest Hits: vol. I & vol. II 1986—The Bridge 1987—Kohuept In Concert 1989—Storm Front 1993—River of Dreams 1997—Greatest Hits, vol. III; The Complete Hits Collection 1973-1997 2000—2000 Years—The Millennium Concert.

Beginning as a quintessential confessional singer/songwriter, Billy Joel has gone on to render consistently well-crafted pop. Classically trained he combines rock attitude with musicianly professionalism. Whether taking the form of rock & roll, new wave, hard-edged dance fare, '60s nostalgia, or political statement, his songs are marked by a melodicism derived ultimately from Tin Pan Alley and Paul McCartney. His forte is the romantic ballad epitomized by his signature tune, "Just the Way You Are." Unlike that of many of his pop-music contemporaries, Joel's work has been perceived as progressing over the years, moving steadily from the purely personal, some would argue sophomoric, concerns of his earliest work to embrace a wider range of styles—particularly with his classical compositions—and subjects. As bard of everyday suburban dream and disappointment, he has achieved a singular voice and status.

When Joel was eight, his father, a German Jew, left the family to live in Vienna, Austria, and divorced Joel's mother. She struggled to support her two children in suburban Hicksville, Long Island, where, as a teenager, Joel ran with a leather-jacketed street gang. He also boxed for three years, breaking his nose in the process.

In the late '60s, after playing in a series of local cover bands, he joined the Long Island group the Hassles, who released two meager-selling records on the United Artists label. He then formed a hard-rock duo, Attila, with Hassles drummer Jonathan Small. Small's wife, Elizabeth Weber, would later wed Joel. Attila's only album also failed. Taking up commercial songwriting, Joel signed with Family Productions in 1971. His solo debut, Cold Spring Harbor, demonstrated both his fondness for Long Island and the somber side of his singing/songwriting approach, but because the tapes were inadvertently sped up slightly in production, Joel's voice sounded nasal and unnatural.

Legal and managerial woes precluded an immediate follow-up, and for six months Joel performed in West Coast piano bars under the name "Bill Martin." These experiences informed his breakthrough, Piano Man, yielding hits in the Top 30 title track, the Top 100 "Travelin' Prayer," and "Worse Comes to Worst." His third solo album, another respectable seller, featured "The Entertainer" (#34, 1974). Turnstiles came next, and although "New York State of Mind" eventually became a standard, Joel's career appeared to be in a holding pattern. Then came The Stranger and a string of hit singles: 1977's "Just the Way You Are" (#3) and 1978's "Movin' Out (Anthony's Song)" (#17), "She's Always a Woman" (#17), and "Only the Good Die Young" (#24). "Just the Way You Are," written for his first wife and then-manager Elizabeth (the couple divorced in 1982), won two Grammys in 1979 and became a popular tune for both weddings and cover versions—by some counts, there have been approximately 200 versions of the song recorded.

More hits followed—from 1978's 52nd Street, "My Life" (#3, 1978), "Big Shot" (#14, 1979), and "Honesty" (#24, 1979); from 1980's Glass Houses, "It's Still Rock and Roll to Me" (#1, 1980) and "You May Be Right" (#7, 1980)—and in 1979 Joel appeared at the Havana Jam Concert in Cuba. In 1981 he released Songs in the Attic, a live collection of pre-Stranger material, also that year, "Say Goodbye to Hollywood" (later recorded by Ronnie Spector) became a hit. Despite the hits, Joel remained in his most vociferous critics' eyes "a lightweight"; Joel responded publicly by tearing up critical reviews onstage during his concerts.

Critically and musically, the tide seemed to turn for Joel with the socially conscious The Nylon Curtain, which showcased his musical skill and pop traditionalist's gift for song structure. That, along with his perseverance and industry, began winning critical converts (in 1992, Joel was inducted into the Songwriters Hall of Fame, followed by induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1999). Featuring "Pressure" (#20, 1982), "Allentown" (#17, 1982), a Reagan-era unemployment lament, and "Goodnight Saigon" (#56, 1983), about Vietnam vets, The Nylon Curtain went to #7. Several of Joel's singles were showcased in innovative ("Pressure") and dramatic ("Allentown") music videos that were put into heavy rotation on the then-new MTV. The multiplatinum An Innocent Man, a stylistic homage to early '60s AM-radio pop, offered "Tell Her About It" (#1, 1983), "An Innocent Man" (#10, 1983), "The Longest Time" (#14, 1984), "Keeping the Faith" (#18, 1985), and "Uptown Girl" (#3, 1983), a Four Seasons-esque valentine for Christie Brinkley, the model whom Joel would marry in 1985 (the couple divorced in 1994). After a seven-night run at Madison Square Garden in 1984, he released Greatest Hits: vol. I & vol. II, his seventh consecutive Top 10 album.

The Bridge (1986) found him duetting on "Baby Grand," with Ray Charles, for whom Joel's and Brinkley's daughter, Alexa Ray, was named. The next year Joel toured the Soviet Union; the live Kohuept documented the concerts. In 1989 Storm Front and its first single, "We Didn't Start the Fire," charted simultaneously at #1; its centerpiece ballad "Shameless" became a hit for Garth Brooks two years later, and its supporting tour saw Yankee Stadium hosting its first rock concert. By this time, Joel had reorganized his band, found new management, and, for longtime producer Phil Ramone, substituted Foreigner guitarist Mick Jones.

With 1993's River of Dreams, which also hit #1, Joel's lyrical content, oftentimes topical and acerbic, revealed a more philosophical outlook. With a cover painting by Brinkley, and employing producer Danny Kortchmar (known for his work with James Taylor and Don Henley), River featured fellow Long Islander Leslie West (ex-Mountain) on guitar. The album's title track reached #3, and "All About Soul," with guest vocals by the group Color Me Badd, peaked at #29. A tour of the U.S. with fellow piano man Elton John followed in 1994. (The duo would tour internationally in 1998.)

The title of River of Dreams' last track, "Famous Last Words," would prove prophetic in terms of the direction Joel's career would take next. In 1997, the year he released another volume of greatest hits (with three new recordings that were all cover songs, an oddity for the prolific songwriter), Joel announced that he was concentrating on composing classical music for the foreseeable future. Still, he didn't disappear from the public eye; he continued to speak about songwriting to aspiring musicians at colleges and performed with his band on tour, culminating in a 1999 New Year's Eve concert at New York's Madison Square Garden, which resulted in a live two-disc set.

Joel's career has been marked by tumultuous business moves—his 1972 relinquishing of publishing rights to Family Productions, his legal battles with Elizabeth, and a $90-million lawsuit Joel filed against his ex-manager and former brother-in-law Frank Weber in 1989 alleging fraud and misappropriation of funds (in 1990 he was awarded $2 million and, in a twist, by 1994 Joel was paying Weber $550,000 and forgiving $600,000 still owed). In September 1992 Joel filed another $90 million lawsuit, this time against former lawyer Allen Grubman, charging fraud, malpractice, and breach of contract (in October 1993 Joel and Grubman announced that litigation had ceased, no news of a financial settlement followed). And, not stopping, Joel also filed sued against his onetime tour manager Rick London (Elizabeth's brother-in-law). Joel then dropped the suit in early 1995. Deeply suspicious of the music business, Joel has fought for lower concert-ticket prices and attacked ticket scalping; he has contributed extensively to philanthropic causes, including many on Long Island.

David Johansen/Buster Poindexter

Born Jan. 9, 1950, Staten Island, NY
 1978—David Johansen (Blue Sky) 1979—In Style 1981—Here Comes the Night 1982—Live It Up 1984—Sweet Revenge (Passport) 1990—Crucial Music: The David Johansen Collection (CBS Special Projects) 1993—The David Johansen Group Live (Epic) 1995—From Pumps to Pompadour: The David Johansen Story (Rhino) 2000—David Johansen and the Harry Smiths (Chesky).
 As Buster Poindexter: 1987—Buster Poindexter (RCA) 1989—Buster Goes Berserk 1994—Buster's Happy Hour (Forward/Rhino).

A rock & roll chameleon, David Johansen moved from the protopunk leader of the New York Dolls [see entry] to a sincere, soulful solo singer to Buster Poindexter, an ultrasmooth lounge singer. Like the Dolls, his solo albums garnered much critical acclaim but few financial rewards; only as Poindexter was he able to gain popular acclaim.

Growing up, Johansen played in many local bands (including the Vagabond Missionaries and Fast Eddie and the Electric Japs) before forming the Dolls in late 1971. He was the Dolls' rubber-faced, loose-jointed lead singer, a self-mocking showman. In 1975, just as the downtown New York music scene was gathering steam, the Dolls fell apart, and Johansen didn't enter a recording studio again until late 1977, when he recorded his debut solo LP. Dolls guitarist Syl Sylvain toured with Johansen to support the LP, which included several songs the two had written while they were still in the Dolls. David Johansen attempted to bring the Dolls' spirit to the masses ("Funky But Chic"). The album bombed commercially (selling only about 68,000 copies), but critics raved about the songwriting and Johansen's streamlined but raw, soulful rock.

Johansen's next two solo LPs saw him making some musical compromises in pursuit of a wider audience. In Style, with its thicker, Motown-influenced sound (the Four Tops' Levi Stubbs is one of Johansen's early favorites), solidified Johansen as a critics' pet but sold only a bit better than the debut. Here Comes the Night (#160, 1981) attempted a more overt commercial turn, but despite a tour opening for then-hitmaker Pat Benatar, the album still didn't spark much consumer interest. Since all along Johansen had been known for his top-notch live shows, he tried to recoup in 1982 by releasing his first live record, Live It Up (#148, 1982). The single, an Animals medley featuring "We Gotta Get Out of This Place," "It's My Life," and "Don't Bring Me Down," was a minor hit. That year, Johansen appeared at Shea Stadium, opening for the Clash and the Who.

Buster Poindexter (a.k.a. David Johansen)

Sweet Revenge was a last-ditch attempt at commercial success, with Johansen rapping and singing over a synthesized dance beat. Its failure caused him to rethink his career, and in 1984 he emerged as the tuxedoed Buster Poindexter (also the name of his music publishing company), playing piano bars with a repertoire that included Tiny Bradshaw and Joe Liggins songs.

Originally a trio, Poindexter's band expanded into the Banshees of Blue, with additional backup singers, guitars, and horns. The first Buster Poindexter album (#90, 1988) included a high-energy cover of the 1984 Caribbean soca hit "Hot Hot Hot" (#45, 1988). Buster's Caribbean success helped Johansen, who had been a member of the Ridiculous Theatrical Company prior to joining the Dolls, in his side career as an actor. He was cast in Married to the Mob (1988) and Scrooged (1988); as Buster, he appeared on Saturday Night Live and The Tonight Show. In the fall of 1994 Johansen hosted Buster's Happy Hour on VH1.

Johansen's latest incarnation, as blues revivalist, came about by accident. When Allan Pepper, the coowner of the celebrated New York nightclub the Bottom Line, was preparing for the club's 25th anniversary, he asked Johansen to perform but wanted something different than Buster Poindexter. Johansen had rediscovered the blues he listened to as a youth and put together a new act featuring songs by Muddy Waters, Lightnin' Hopkins, and other rock and blues forefathers. He called the band the Harry Smiths in tribute to the legendary folk-blues archivist who compiled the seminal Anthology of American Folk Music. Intended as simply a one-off gig, the response to the show was so enthusiastic that Johansen booked more shows and eventually took the band into the studio.

Elton John

Born Reginald Kenneth Dwight, Mar. 25, 1947, Pinner, Middlesex, Eng.

1970—Elton John (Uni) 1971—Tumbleweed Connection; Friends (Paramount); 11-17-70 (Uni); Madman Across the Water 1972—Honky Château 1973—Don't Shoot Me, I'm Only the Piano Player (MCA); Goodbye Yellow Brick Road 1974—Caribou; Greatest Hits 1975—Empty Sky (originally released in 1969, U.K. only); Captain Fantastic and the Brown Dirt Cowboy; Rock of the Westies 1976—Here and There; Blue Moves (MCA/Rocket) 1977—Greatest Hits, vol. II (MCA) 1978—A Single Man 1979—The Thom Bell Sessions; Victim of Love 1980—21 at 33 1981—The Fox (Geffen) 1982—Jump Up! 1983—Too Low for Zero 1984—Breaking Hearts 1985—Ice on Fire 1986—Leather Jackets 1987—Live in Australia (MCA); Greatest Hits, vol. III, 1979-1987 (Geffen) 1988—Reg Strikes Back (MCA) 1989—Sleeping With the Past 1990—To Be Continued 1992—The One; Greatest Hits 1976-86; Rare Masters (Polydor) 1993—Duets (MCA) 1994—Circle of Life (Hollywood) 1995—Made in England (Rocket/Island) 1996—Love Songs (MCA) 1997—The Big Picture (Rocket) 1999—Aida (PolyGram) 2000—The Road to El Dorado soundtrack (DreamWorks).

For most of the '70s, Elton John and lyricist Bernie Taupin were a virtual hit factory, with 25 Top 40 singles, 16 Top 10, and six #1 hits; 15 of the 19 albums released in the United States during that time went gold or platinum. In the '80s their fortunes declined only slightly. To date, they have achieved more than four dozen Top 40 hits and become one of the most successful songwriting teams in pop history. John's rich tenor and gospel-chorded piano, boosted by aggressive string arrangements, established a musical formula, while he reveled in an extravagant public image. At the start of the '90s John confessed the personal costs of that extravagance—drug abuse, depression, bulimia—and revealed as well his impressive struggles to regain control. Since the late '80s, he has been deeply involved in the fight against AIDS. And while his critical stature has varied over the years, his melodic gifts have proved undeniable. He was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1994. In 1998, he became Sir Elton, with Queen Elizabeth dubbing him a knight.

As Reginald Dwight, John won a piano scholarship to the Royal Academy of Music at age 11. Six years later he left school for show business. By day he ran errands for a music publishing company; he divided evenings between a group, Bluesology, and solo gigs at a London hotel bar. Bluesology was then working as a backup band for visiting American soul singers such as Major Lance, and Patti LaBelle and the Blue Belles. In 1966 British R&B singer Long John Baldry hired Bluesology as his band (in 1971 Elton coproduced an album of Baldry's).

Elton John

Responding to an ad in a music trade weekly, Dwight auditioned for Liberty Records with his hotel repertoire. The scouts liked his performance but not his material. (Liberty wasn't his only audition; he was also rejected by King Crimson and Gentle Giant.) Lyncist Bernie Taupin (born May 22, 1950, Sleaford, England) had also replied to the Liberty ad, and one of the scouts gave Dwight a stack of Taupin lyrics. Six months later the two met. By then, Dwight was calling himself Elton Dean, after John Baldry and Bluesology saxophonist Elton Dean. (Some years later he made Elton Hercules John his legal name; Hercules was a childhood nickname.) John and Taupin took their songs to music publisher Dick James, who hired them as house writers for £10 (about $25) a week, and whose Dick James Music owned all John-Taupin compositions until 1975.

Taupin would write lyrics, sometimes a song an hour, and deliver a bundle to John every few weeks. Without changing a word, and only rarely consulting Taupin, John would fit tunes to the phrases. Arrangements were left to studio producers. For two years they wrote easy-listening tunes for James to peddle to singers; on the side, John recorded current hits for budget labels like Music for Pleasure and Marble Arch.

On the advice of another music publisher, Steve Brown, John and Taupin started writing rockier songs for John to record. The first was the single "I've Been Loving You" (1968), produced by Caleb Quaye, former Bluesology guitarist. In 1969, with Quaye, drummer Roger Pope, and bassist Tony Murray, John recorded another single, "Lady Samantha," and an album, Empty Sky. The records didn't sell, and John and Taupin enlisted Gus Dudgeon to produce a followup with Paul Buckmaster as arranger. (Brown continued to advise John until 1976. Dudgeon produced his records through Blue Moves and sporadically in the mid-'80s. Elton John established the formula for subsequent albums: gospel-chorded rockers and poignant ballads.

Uni (later MCA) released Elton John (withholding Empty Sky until 1975), and John made his historical American debut at the Troubadour in L.A. in August 1970, backed by ex-Spencer Davis Group drummer Nigel Olsson and bassist Dee Murray (Murray would play with John off and on until his death in 1992 from a stroke suffered during treatment for skin cancer.) Kicking over his piano bench Jerry Lee Lewis-style and performing handstands on the keyboards, John left the critics raving. "Your Song" (#8, 1970) earned the album to the American Top 10. Tumbleweed Connection, with extensive FM airplay, sold even faster. By the middle of 1971, two more albums had been released: a live set taped from a WPLJ-FM New York radio broadcast on November 17, 1970, and the soundtrack to the film Friends, written three years before. Despite John's public repudiation of it, Friends went gold. Elton John was the first act since the Beatles to have four albums in the American Top 10 simultaneously. Madman Across the Water (#8) came out in October 1971, and before year's end a Bernie Taupin recitation-and-music album, Taupin, was on the market.

Honky Château was the first album credited to the Elton John group: John, Olsson, Murray, and guitarist Davey Johnstone. And with the 1972 release of "Rocket Man" (#6), John began to dominate the Top 10. "Crocodile Rock" was his first #1; "Daniel" and "Goodbye Yellow Brick Road" reached #2. Then came the tidal wave: "Bennie and the Jets" (#1), "Don't Let the Sun Go Down on Me" (#2), "The Bitch Is Back" (#4), a cover of Lennon-McCartney's "Lucy in the Sky With Diamonds" (#1), "Philadelphia Freedom" (#1), "Someone Saved My Life Tonight" (#4), and "Island Girl" (#1). Honky Château was the first of seven #1 albums, the most successful being Goodbye Yellow Brick Road, which held the #1 spot for eight weeks in late 1973, and a 1974 greatest-hits compilation that held fast at #1 for 10 weeks.

In 1973 John formed his own MCA-distributed label and signed acts—notably Neil Sedaka ("Bad Blood," on which he sang background vocals) and Kiki Dee (with whom he recorded "Don't Go Breaking My Heart" [#1, 1976])—in which he took personal interest. Instead of releasing his own records on Rocket, he opted for $8 million offered by MCA. When the contract was signed in 1974, MCA reportedly took out a $25-million insurance policy on John's life.

That same year Elton John joined John Lennon in the studio on Lennon's "Whatever Gets You Thru the Night," then recorded "Lucy in the Sky With Diamonds" with Dr. Winston O'Boogie (Lennon) on guitar. Dr. O'Boogie joined Elton John at Madison Square Garden, Thanksgiving Day 1974, to sing both tunes plus "I Saw Her Standing There." It was Lennon's last appearance on any stage and came out on an EP released after his death.

In the mid-'70s John's concerts filled arenas and stadiums worldwide. He was the hottest act in rock & roll. And his extravagances, including a $40,000 collection of custom-designed and determinedly ridiculous eyeglasses and an array of equally outrageous stagewear, seemed positively charming.

After Captain Fantastic (1975), the first album ever to enter the charts at #1, John overhauled his band: Johnstone and Ray Cooper were retained. Quayle and Roger Pope returned, and the new bassist was Kenny Passarelli (formerly of Joe Walsh's Barnstorm). James Newton-Howard joined to arrange in the studio and to play keyboards. John introduced the lineup before a crowd of 75,000 in London's Wembley Stadium in the summer of 1975, then recorded Rock of the Westies; also that year, he was honored with a star on Hollywood's Walk of Fame. And John appeared as the Pinball Wizard in the Ken Russell film of the Who's Tommy. But John's frenetic recording pace had slowed markedly, and he performed less often. A live album, Here and There, had been recorded in 1974. John's biggest hit in 1976 was the #1 Kiki Dee duet. A single from the downbeat Blue Moves (#3, 1976), "Sorry Seems to Be the Hardest Word," reached #6.

In November 1977 John announced he was retiring from performing. After publishing a book of his poems—The One Who Writes the Words for Elton John—in 1976, Taupin began collaborating with others. John secluded himself in any of his three mansions, appearing publicly only to cheer the Watford Football Club, an English soccer team that he later bought. Some speculated that John's retreat from stardom was prompted by adverse reaction to his 1976 admission in ROLLING STONE of his bisexuality.

A Single Man employed a new lyricist, Gary Osborne, but featured no Top 20 singles. In 1979, accompanied by Ray Cooper, John became the first Western pop star to tour the Soviet Union, then mounted a two-man comeback tour of the U.S. in small halls. John returned to the singles chart with "Mama Can't Buy You Love" (#9, 1979), a song from an EP recorded in 1977 with Philadelphia soul producer Thom Bell. A new album, Victim of Love, failed to sustain the rally, and by 1980, John and Taupin reunited to write songs for 21 at 33 and The Fox. (Taupin put out a solo album, He Who Rides the Tiger.) A single, "Little Jeannie," reached #3. An estimated 400,000 fans turned out for a free concert in New York's Central Park in August, later broadcast on HBO. Olsson and Murray were back in the band, and John had just signed a new recording contract. His second Geffen LP—Jump Up—contained "Empty Garden (Hey Hey Johnny)," his tribute to John Lennon, which he performed at his sold-out Madison Square Garden show in August 1982. He was joined on stage by Yoko Ono and Sean Ono Lennon, Elton John's godchild.

In 1983, with a version of "I Guess That's Why They Call It the Blues" (#4), featuring Stevie Wonder on harmonica, Elton had his biggest hit since 1980—and while he wouldn't match his '70s success, he would continue to place in the Top 10 throughout the '80s—"Sad Songs (Say So Much)" (#5, 1984), "Nikita" (#7, 1986), an orchestral version of "Candle in the Wind" (#6, 1987), and "I Don't Wanna Go On With You Like That" (#2, 1988). His highest-charting single was a collaboration with Dionne Warwick, Gladys Knight, and Stevie Wonder on "That's What Friends Are For" (#1, 1985). Credited to Dionne and Friends, the song raised funds for AIDS research. His albums continued to sell, but of the six released in the latter half of the '80s, only Reg Strikes Back (#16, 1988) placed in the Top 20.

And the '80s were years of personal upheaval for John. In 1984 he surprised many by marrying studio engineer Renate Blauel. While the marriage lasted four years, John later maintained that he had realized that he was gay before he married. In 1986 he lost his voice while touring Australia and shortly thereafter underwent throat surgery. John continued recording prolifically, but years of cocaine and alcohol abuse, initiated in earnest around the time of Rock of the Westies' 1975 release, were beginning to take their toll. In 1988 he performed five sold-out shows at New York's Madison Square Garden, his final concert—his 26th—breaking the Grateful Dead's career record of 25 sold-out Garden appearances. But that year also marked the end of an era: Netting over $20 million, 2,000 items of John's memorabilia were auctioned off at Sotheby's in London, as John bade symbolic farewell to his excessive, theatrical persona (Among the items withheld from the auction were the tens of thousands of records John had been carefully collecting and cataloguing throughout his life.) In later interviews, he deemed 1989 the worst period of his life, comparing his mental and physical deterioration to Elvis Presley's last years.

Around that time, he was deeply affected by the plight of Ryan White, an Indiana teenager with AIDS. Along with Michael Jackson, John befriended and supported the boy and his family until White's death in 1990. Confronted by his then-lover, John checked into a Chicago hospital in 1990 to combat his drug abuse, alcoholism, and bulimia. In recovery, he lost weight and underwent hair replacement, and subsequently took up residence in Atlanta, Georgia. In 1992 he established the Elton John AIDS Foundation, intending to direct 90 percent of the funds it raised to direct care, 10 percent to AIDS prevention education. He also announced his intention to donate all future royalties from sales of his singles (beginning with "The One") in the U.S. and U.K. to AIDS research. That year, he released the #8 album The One, his highest-charting release since 1976's Blue Moves, and John and Taupin signed a music publishing deal with Warner/Chappell Music—an estimated $39-million, 12-year agreement—that would give them the largest cash advance in music publishing history.

In 1992, at the Freddie Mercury Memorial and AIDS Benefit concert at Wembley Stadium, John duetted with Axl Rose on Queen's "Bohemian Rhapsody," a reconciling gesture, given Rose's previously homophobic reputation. He also released Duets, a collaboration with 15 artists ranging from Tammy Wynette to RuPaul. He was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1994. He collaborated with Tim Rice on music for the animated film The Lion King. The soundtrack featured "Can You Feel the Love Tonight," an Academy Award-winner for Best Original Song; the hit also won a Grammy for Best Male Pop Vocal Performance. At the Academy Awards ceremonies, John acknowledged his domestic partner, Canadian filmmaker David Furnish. Furnish, in 1997, made a well-received, candid documentary, Tantrums and Tiaras. In 1995 John released Made in England (#13, 1995), which featured the hit single "Believe" (#13, 1995). In 1996 Bernie Taupin released the album Last Stand in Open Country, with a band of his friends called Farm Dogs.

The year 1997 was a significant one for John personally and professionally. He lost two close friends, designer Gianni Versace and Princess Diana. Upon Diana's death, Bernie Taupin reworked the lyrics of a song originally written about Marilyn Monroe in 1973. The resulting tribute, "Candle in the Wind 1997" b/w "Something About the Way You Look Tonight" (Rocket/A&M), easily became the all-time highest-certified single, with U.S. sales of 11 million in the first month (all proceeds were donated to the Diana, Princess of Wales Memorial Fund). John's accomplishment is particularly stunning when matched against his previous track record. "Candle," his 16th certified single, has outsold all of his other gold and platinum singles combined. The song is not on his 1997 album The Big Picture, which was released shortly after the tribute single.

Also in 1997 vestiges of the flamboyant Elton resurfaced as he threw a 50th birthday party, costumed as Louis XIV, for 500 friends (the outfit cost more than $80,000). In 1999 John had a pacemaker installed to overcome a minor heart problem. That year, as well, he collaborated again with Tim Rice, this time on a Broadway musical version of Verdi's opera Aida. The pair also collaborated on a DreamWorks animated feature, The Road to El Dorado.

John has written and/or performed on countless tracks by other artists. He has played piano on records by Rick Astley, Kevin Ayers, Jon Bon Jovi, Jackson Browne ("Redneck Friend"), Bob Dylan, George Harrison, the Hollies ("He Ain't Heavy, He's My Brother"), Ringo Starr, and Rod Stewart. Among the many records to which he contributed backing vocals are Tom Jones' "Dellilah" and "Daughter of Darkness," Olivia Newton-John's "The Rumour," and "Dyin' Ain't Much of a Livin'" from The Blaze of Glory: Young Guns II. At the 2001 Grammy Awards show, John duetted with Eminem on the controversial white rapper's "Stan." Gay-rights activists and organizations criticized John for embracing (literally and figuratively) Eminem.

Little Willie John

Born William J. Woods, Nov. 15, 1937, Cullendale, AR; died May 27, 1968, Walla Walla, WA
1956—Fever (King) 1970—Free at Last 1977—Little Willie John 1953—1962.

Little Willie John was part of the same revolutionary generation of gospel-trained soul singers that yielded Sam Cooke, James Brown, and Jackie Wilson. He was 18 when he had his first hit, "All Around the World," and 23 when he made his biggest hit, "Sleep" (#13, 1960). John stood just over five feet (which, combined with his youthfulness, earned him his nickname) and had a voice that was stronger and rougher than Wilson's or Cooke's, and ncher and more wide-ranging than Brown's. He was first discovered at a Detroit talent show in 1951 by Johnny Otis, though King Records' Syd Nathan ignored Otis' recommendation and instead signed Hank Ballard, who'd performed at the same show.

For the next few years John occasionally sang with the Duke Ellington and Count Basie orchestras and toured with R&B saxophonist Paul Williams' combo before King finally signed him. He first dented the R&B chart with the Joe Turner-ish big-band rock of "All Around the World." John was the first artist to record the R&B standard "Fever." His version hit the Top 30, but two years later Peggy Lee's went to #8. The song has since been recorded countless times, including in charting versions by the McCoys (1965) and Rita Coolidge (1973). Madonna covered it on Erotica in 1992. Through the late '50s he scored other R&B hits with "Talk to Me, Talk to Me," "Let Them Talk" (both ballads), and the James Brown-inspired "Heartbreak." Only "Talk to Me, Talk to Me" and "Sleep" made the pop Top 20. In 1966, by which time his hits had run out, Little Willie John was convicted of manslaughter and sent to prison in Walla Walla, Washington, where he died of a heart attack. Though he is an overlooked figure, his significance is perhaps best indicated by the title of an album by fellow King Records artist James Brown: Thinking of Little Willie John and a Few Nice Things. John was posthumously inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1996.

Linton Kwesi Johnson

Born 1952, Chapelton, Jam.

1978—Dread Beat an' Blood (Virgin Frontline) 1979—Forces of Victory (Mango) 1980—Bass Culture; LKJ in Dub 1984—Making History; Reggae Greats 1985—Linton Kwesi Johnson Live (Rough Trade); In Concert With the Dub Band (Shanachie); Dub Poetry (Mango) 1991—Tings an' Times (Shanachie) 1994—In Dub, vol. 2 (LKJ) 1997—LKJ A Cappella Live 1998—Independent/Intavenshan (Island) 1999—More Time (LKJ).

A Jamaican-English intellectual and poet, Linton Kwesi Johnson has earned critical respect and cult-level sales. His songs assault racism with protest verses in Jamaican patois, sung/spoken in a distinctive, deep voice to rock-solid reggae accompaniment.

Living in England since 1963, Johnson has been inspired by the black American scholar W.E.B. Du Bois. He was associated with the Youth League of the British Black Panther Party and, while studying for a sociology degree, started to give poetry readings backed by a group of drummers called Rasta Love (writing with a reggae beat in his head, he called himself a "dub poet").

His first album, Dread Beat an' Blood, was the soundtrack to a film about Britain's Jamaican immigrants; the message of the music was in keeping with London's Rock Against Racism movement and Brixton's racial turmoil in the late '70s. Forces of Victory, with strong support from bassist/arranger Dennis Bovell, yielded minor underground hits in "Reality Poem" and "Sonny's Lettah," while LKJ in Dub was predominantly instrumental. While he continued to record throughout the '80s, Johnson regarded himself primarily as a political activist, working for Race Today, a black political organization, and writing on black affairs for academic and political publications. Between 1985 and 1988 he retired from performing, although his writing, its social consciousness paralleling that of Gil Scott-Heron, continued to influence such poets as Michael Smith and Mutabaruka. Among his influential books are Voices of the Living and the Dead, Dread Beat and Blood, and Inglan Is a Bitch.

Johnson reactivated his musical career with 1991's studio album, Tings an' Times; by this juncture he had become acknowledged, at least in critical circles, as not only a reggae pioneer but a forerunner of the urban poetry of rap.

Robert Johnson

Born May 8, 1911, Hazlehurst, MS; died Aug. 16, 1938, Greenwood, MS

1961—King of the Delta Blues Singers (Columbia) 1970—King of the Delta Blues Singers, vol. 2 1990—The Complete Recordings.

Though a street singer whose repertoire was not limited to the blues, Robert Johnson is among the first and most influential Delta bluesmen, despite his having recorded only 29 songs before dying at the age of 27. He is credited with writing blues standards like "Dust My Broom" (which Elmore James made into a postwar electric-blues anthem), "Sweet Home Chicago," "Ramblin' on My Mind," "Crossroads" (covered by Cream), "Love in Vain" and "Stop Breaking Down" (covered by the Rolling Stones), and "Terraplane Blues" (covered by Captain Beefheart and His Magic Band on Mirror Man). Equally important, Johnson's persona and his songs introduced a musical and lyrical vocabulary that are the basis of the modern blues and blues-based rock.

Little was known of Johnson's life until Peter Guralnick set out to discover what truth he could about the bluesman; his Searching for Robert Johnson (1988) stands as the closest thing to a definitive biography. Johnson was born to Mrs. Julia Dodds, the product of her extramarital relationship with Noah Johnson. As a young boy he lived with his mother and baby sister in a number of homes, including that of a Charles Spencer, who kept two mistresses, one of whom was Johnson's mother, and their children. Johnson's mother left him in Spencer's care until, at age seven or so, Johnson was deemed too disobedient and was returned to his mother and his new stepfather, Willie "Dusty" Willis. He lived with them in Robinsonville, 40 miles south of Memphis, until young manhood.

He began playing the Jew's harp, then the harmonica. Sometime in his teens he began using the surname of Johnson. Poor eyesight and lack of interest in education led him to quit school. Sometime in the late '20s, he picked up the guitar. He was influenced by pioneering Delta bluesmen like Charley Patton and Willie Brown, as well as any number of journeyman musicians he met.

In 1929, at age 17, he married Virginia Travis; she and their first baby died during childbirth in April 1930. Shortly thereafter Johnson met Son House, who would become an important influence on the young bluesman. It was then that Johnson decided to leave behind the sharecropping life he seemed destined for and take to the road. He returned to his birthplace and there met his mentor, Ike Zinneman, an obscure bluesman. Also in Hazelhurst, he married Calletta Craft, a woman who reportedly worshiped him and allowed him the freedom of spending days and nights in Zinneman's company. The darker, more occult aspects of the Johnson legend first appear here; reputedly, Zinneman learned the blues playing his guitar while sitting atop tombstones. Johnson began writing down his songs, and when not picking cotton, he performed locally in juke joints or on the courthouse steps. Sometime in the early '30s, he left his birthplace for the Mississippi Delta. His wife suffered a breakdown and returned to her home, she died a few years later.

After a brief return to Robinsonville, he settled in Helena, Arkansas, where he met and played with Robert Nighthawk, Elmore James, Honeyboy Edwards, Howlin' Wolf, Calvin Frazier, Memphis Slim, Johnny Shines, Sonny Boy Williamson II, Hacksaw Harney—a virtual who's who of early rural blues. It was at this time that he took up with Estella Coleman and unofficially adopted her son Robert Lockwood Jr., who was to become a respected bluesman himself, using the name Robert Jr. Lockwood. Johnson toured up and down the Mississippi, as far north as New York and Canada. It also was during this time that his stature grew, and he became protective and jealous of his playing style. His repertoire included blues standards, his own compositions, and even such popular tunes of the day as "Yes, Sir, That's My Baby" and "Tumbling Tumbleweeds."

Johnson was always attractive to women; as his prowess grew, he was the object of jealousy, from fellow musicians and jilted boyfriends and husbands. He often claimed that he learned to play guitar from the Devil himself, and many of his recordings evince a haunting, otherworldly inspiration. Over the years, he became erratic, often moody, but always ambitious. For years he had wanted to record, and on November 23, 1936, he finally did. The first song he recorded was "Terraplane Blues." It became a best-selling hit for Vocalion, a Columbia Records specialty label. During his lifetime, over the course of three recording sessions that November, Johnson created what is arguably the most influential single artist's catalogue in rock and blues history: "Kindhearted Woman Blues," "I Believe I'll Dust My Broom," "Sweet Home Chicago," "Rambling on My Mind," "When You've Got a Friend," "Come On in My Kitchen," "Phonograph Blues," "Blues," "They're Red Hot," "Dead Shrimp Blues" (never issued), "Cross Road Blues," "Walking Blues," "Last Fair Deal Gone Down," "Preaching Blues (Up Jumped the Devil)," "If I Had Possession Over Judgment Day," "Stones in My Passway," "I'm a Steady Rollin' Man," "From Four Till Late," "Hellhound on My Trail," "Little Queen of Spades," "Malting Milk,"

"Drunken Hearted Man," "Me and the Devil Blues," "Stop Breakin' Down," "Traveling Riverside Blues," "Honeymoon Blues," "Love in Vain," and "Milkcow's Calf Blues."

In August 1938 Johnson played the last show of his life. While playing at a roadhouse, he attempted to rekindle a relationship with the owner's wife Sonny Boy Williamson, who was with him, cautioned him not to drink from an open whiskey bottle he was offered. Johnson refused to heed the warning, and three days later died of strychnine poisoning and pneumonia. He was buried in an unmarked grave.

Despite his comparatively small number of recordings, Johnson has a paramount place in blues history and, though he played acoustically, was a strong influence on such electric bluesmen as Muddy Waters, Elmore James, Johnny Shines, Robert Jr. Lockwood, Robert Nighthawk, and others. There were rumors that Johnson had played electric guitar just after his death, producer/manager John Hammond, organizing his first landmark Spirituals to Swing concert, wanted Johnson to perform; unable to locate the late Delta bluesman, Hammond settled for Big Bill Broonzy.

To the surprise of the record industry, the double-CD box set Robert Johnson: The Complete Recordings sold over half a million copies and was certified platinum. Over half a century after Johnson's death, the CD package received a Grammy for Best Historical Recording.

George Jones

Born George Glenn Jones, Sep. 12, 1931, Saratoga, TX
 1960—George Jones Sings (Mercury); Country Church Time; George Jones Salutes Hank Williams 1961—Country and Western Hits 1964—George Jones Sings Like the Dickens!
 (United Artists) 1965—George Jones & Gene Pitney (with Gene Pitney) (Musicor); The Race Is On (United Artists) 1969—I'll Share My World With You (Musicor) 1971—We Go Together (with Tammy Wynette) (Epic) 1979—My Very Special Guests 1980—I Am What I Am 1981—Still the Same Ole Me 1982—A Taste of Yesterday's Wine (with Merle Haggard) 1991—Along Came Jones (MCA); The Best of George Jones 1955–1967 (Rhino) 1992—Walls Can Fall (MCA) 1993—High-Tech Redneck 1994—Cup of Loneliness: The Classic Mercury Years (Mercury); The Bradley Barn Sessions (MCA) 1994—The Essential George Jones: The Spirit of Country Music (Legacy/Epic); One (with Tammy Wynette) 1996—I Lived to Tell It All 1998—It Don't Get Any Better Than This 1999—The George Jones Collection; Cold Hard Truth (Asylum); Live With the Possum.

George Jones is the king of country singers and a highly acclaimed songwriter. His straightforward aversion to trends and his dark but romantic persona have served him well through nearly five decades of recordings, a highly publicized marriage to and divorce from singer Tammy Wynette, and bouts with addictions and poor health. Though he dominated country radio from the late '50s into the '80s, his more recent recordings have received little airplay. He remains, however, the preeminent country stylist and is so acknowledged by critics and young country stars alike.

Jones grew up the eighth child in a poor Texas family, his father an alcoholic laborer, his mother a church pianist. He came to music early, singing at 9, playing guitar at 11 and writing his first song at 12. Jones ran away from home at age 14, in 1947 he was hired by the duo Eddie and Pearl. A regular radio spot gave Jones his first glimmer of fame and also got him his first endearing nickname, Possum, so dubbed by a disc jockey for Jones' close-set eyes and turned-up nose. By 18 Jones already had a wife, a child, and a broken marriage behind him.

After three years in the Marine Corps, Jones returned to Texas to start his musical career in earnest. He again gained attention while singing on the radio. A Houston producer, H. W. "Pappy" Daily, signed Jones to the Starday label; there, Jones had his first C&W hits, including "Why Baby Why" (#4, 1955), "You Gotta Be My Baby" (#7, 1956), and "Just One More" (#3, 1956). After Starday merged with the national label Mercury in 1957, Jones began cutting the classic singles that made him famous; among them, 1959's "White Lightning," Jones' first C&W #1 and his only pop hit (#73). Other hits from this period include "Who Shot Sam" (#7, 1959), "The Window Up Above" (#2, 1960), and "Tender Years" (#1, 1961).

Jones' long string of country hits includes "She Thinks I Still Care" (#1, 1962), "You Comb Her Hair" (#5, 1963), "The Race Is On" (#3, 1964), "We Must Have Been Out of Our Minds" (a duet with Melba Montgomery) (#3, 1963), "Walk Through This World With Me" (#1, 1967), "A Good Year for the Roses" (#2, 1970), "The Grand Tour" (#1, 1974), "He Stopped Loving Her Today" (#1, 1980), and "Yesterday's Wine" (with Merle Haggard) (#1, 1982). In addition to these and other major sellers were dozens of Top 20 hits. In all, Jones has found himself on the C&W chart—as a solo artist or in duet settings—over 150 times.

But Jones' phenomenal success as an artist ran neck and neck with his increasingly erratic behavior. Jones' excessive drinking, and later drug abuse, caused him to consistently miss shows (giving him the new nickname, No Show Jones), shirk off recording sessions, and behave violently toward wives and friends. In 1969 Jones married country superstar Tammy Wynette. Though their four-year marriage was stormy (Jones was accused of beating her and threatening her with a rifle), the two had chart success together during and after the marriage: "We're Gonna Hold On" (#1, 1973), "Golden Ring" (#1, 1976), "Near You" (#1, 1976), and "Two Story House" (#2, 1980).

Jones turned over a new leaf in his recording career and personal life during the 1980s. Eschewing the overproduced sound that had been cluttering his work, Jones returned to his honky-tonk roots. He sought help for substance abuse, amended his no-show ways, and established a stable fourth marriage. His 1992 single "I Don't Need Your Rockin' Chair" (#34 C&W) featured 10 contemporary country hitmakers, including Garth Brooks, Clint Black, Alan Jackson, and Travis Tritt. In 1994 Jones recorded The Bradley Barn Sessions, a series of duets with performers including Trisha Yearwood, Keith Richards, and Mark Knopfler. That fall, Jones underwent triple bypass surgery, upon recovery, he returned to the studio to record One, a reunion album with Wynette that the pair supported with a short tour. The following year saw the release of his notoriously self-deprecating, tell-all autobiography, I Lived to Tell It All. An album of the same name followed later that year, peaking at #26 on the country chart. In 1998 he began hosting his own variety show on TNN, The George Jones Show, which ran for two years.

Jones recorded one more album for MCA in 1998 but asked to be released from the label out of frustration from lack of radio airplay. He was in the finishing stages of recording his debut for Asylum the following year when he drove his sport-utility vehicle into a concrete bridge, landing him in the hospital with damaged lungs and liver. He later pleaded guilty to DWI—his first slip off the wagon in more than a dozen years. He survived the ordeal with a new lease on life, a rush of renewed media interest, and his highest-charting album of the decade, Cold Hard Truth (#5 C&W), which featured the single "Choices" (#24 C&W). Live With the Possum followed later the same year.

Grace Jones

Born May 19, 1952, Spanishtown, Jam.

1977—Portfolio (Island) 1978—Fame 1979—Muse

1980—Warm Leatherette 1981—Nightclubbing 1982—

Living My Life 1985—Slave to the Rhythm (Manhattan)

1986—Island Life (Island); Inside Story (Manhattan) 1989—

Bulletproof Heart (Capitol) 1993—Sex Drive (Island) 1998—

Private Life: The Compass Point Sessions.

Grace Jones, the provocative 6-foot model-turned-disco-singer, was first mainly a cult artist of the New York gay dance clubs. There she developed a reputation as much for her archly stylish look and S&M-tinged theatrical stage show (she'd enter on a motorcycle and dance with body builders) as for her monotone singing. In 1980, when she followed the dance-club trend to emphasize rock disco, her music won more broad-based support and critical respect.

Jones grew up in Jamaica, where her father was a clergyman influential in local politics (as was his father before him). She moved with her family to Syracuse, New York, when she was 12 and, after attending college, traveled to Manhattan to work for the Wilhelmina Modeling Agency. After a stint of acting, appearing in the film Gordon's War, she was far more successful as a model in Paris, posing for the covers of Vogue, Der Stern, and Elle. Jones wanted to be a singer and while in France did some recording.

In 1977 Jones landed a record deal with Island, with disco mixer Tom Moulton as her producer, and recorded "I Need a Man," a big dance hit that summer. She had other disco hits with "La Vie en Rose" and "Do or Die." Her first three albums catered mainly to the urban dance crowd, receiving little critical attention, but that changed when she began to cover more rock-oriented material on Warm Leatherette. Produced by Chris Blackwell, the album included versions of the Pretenders' "Private Lives," Roxy Music's "Love Is the Drug," and Tom Petty's "Breakdown." The Sly Dunbar/Robbie Shakespeare-produced Nightclubbing (#32, 1981), with a David Bowie/Iggy Pop-penned title track, had her biggest R&B single (#5) with "Pull Up to the Bumper" and was voted Album of the Year by England's New Musical Express.

Grace Jones

"Nipple to the Bottle" (#17 R&B, 1982) helped Living My Life reach #69 in 1983, and Jones scored two more R&B Top 20 singles: "Slave to the Rhythm" (#20 R&B, 1985), from the Trevor Horn-produced album of the same title, and "I'm Not Perfect (But I'm Perfect for You)" (#9 R&B, 1986), from Inside Story (which Jones coproduced with Nile Rodgers). Jonathan Elia and Clivillés and Cole (better known for their C + C Music Factory) produced Bulletproof Heart, but none of her albums since Nightclubbing has entered the U.S. Top 40.

Not surprisingly, Jones has made some memorable film appearances, in Conan the Destroyer, A View to a Kill, and Boomerang. She has also produced several acclaimed videos, including the Grammy-nominated 1983 long-form program A One Man Show. In 1996 she married her former bodyguard, Atilla Altaunbay, in Rio de Janeiro during Carnival. Sex Drive marked her return to her original label, Island. The title track was a #1 hit on the dance chart. A remix of "Pull Up to the Bumper" appeared on the dance charts in 2000.

Howard Jones

Born John Howard Jones, Feb. 23, 1955, Southampton, Hampshire, Eng.

1984—Human's Lib (Elektra) 1985—Dream Into Action
1986—Action Replay EP; One to One 1989—Cross That Line
1992—In the Running 1993—The Best of Howard Jones;

Working in the Backroom (Dtox, U.K.) 1995—
Live Acoustic America (Plump) 1997—Angels and Lovers
(Pony Canyon In, U.K.) 1998—People (Ark 21) 2000—
Perform.00 (Seven Days Music, Ger.); Pefawm (Dtox).

With his endearing pop sensibility and canny ear for a melodic hook, Howard Jones was responsible for some of the warmest and most accessible techno pop released in the mid-'80s. Jones wrote lyrics as buoyant as his music, revealing humanist ideals and encouraging positive action and self-esteem. As ROLLING STONE observed, this child of the '60s was "called everything . . . from a synthesized Gilbert O'Sullivan to a high-tech hippie."

Jones began playing piano at the age of seven. As a teenager in Canada (his parents had moved the family) he played organ in a progressive-rock outfit called Warnor. Jones later studied at the Royal Northern School of Music in Manchester, England, but dropped out. He gave piano lessons and ran a produce-delivery business with his wife while performing in several funk and jazz bands. But what finally attracted a record company executive's attention was his one-man show, which featured a drum machine, a sequencer, and polyphonic keyboards. Supplementing the act was a mime named Jed Hoile, who would tour with Jones for years to come.

In the early '80s Jones signed to WEA in Europe and Elektra in the U.S. His 1984 debut album, Human's Lib (#59 U.S., #1 UK), did well in England and on American college radio, thanks to catchy numbers like "New Song" (#27 U.S., #3 UK, 1983) and "What Is Love?" (#33 U.S., #2 UK, 1983). The singer made a bigger splash in the States with Dream Into Action, which went to #10 in the U.S. and yielded the lithe, rhythmic single "Things Can Only Get Better" (#5). Jones' most successful song to date is "No One Is to Blame," a wistful ballad from his 1986 EP Action Replay. Produced by Phil Collins, "Blame" peaked at #4.

In the Running (1992) was more organic in its musical approach than Jones' previous five releases, emphasizing the singer's piano work and several atypically melancholy songs. The tour supporting the album featured a single percussionist accompanying Jones on piano. In the Running sold poorly, though, and Jones' longtime major label declined to renew his contract. Jones established his own label, Dtox, and recorded his next album (Working in the Backroom) in his home studio; he sold the album at his concerts. His ingenuity impressed an independent U.K. label, which distributed his live album, 1995's Live Acoustic America. After another U.K. disc, Jones signed to the American indie Ark 21, which released People in 1998, and participated in the Big Rewind Tour with Culture Club and the Human League the same year.

Jones has maintained the Dtox label and occasionally works with new bands; he coproduced the 1996 debut album for the British group Januaryland, as well as a single for the U.K. trio Lovatux in 1998. He has also continued to record his own material: Perform.00, featuring reworkings of old songs plus some new ones—including a duet with Duncan Sheik—was released in a few European countries in 2000. That same year he released a double album (Pe-fawm), also a combination of old and new tracks, via the Internet.

Quincy Jones

Born Mar. 14, 1933, Chicago, IL

1961—The Quintessence (MCA/Impulse) 1969—Walking in Space (A&M) 1970—Gula Matari 1972—Smackwater Jack 1973—You've Got It Bad, Girl 1974—Body Heat 1975—Mellow Madness 1976—I Heard That! 1977—Roots 1978—Sounds and Stuff Like That 1981—The Dude 1982—Q; The Best 1989—Compact Jazz: Quincy Jones (Phillips/PolyGram); Back on the Block (Qwest) 1993—Miles & Quincy Live at Montreux (with Miles Davis) (Warner Bros.) 1995—Q's Jook Joint 1999—From Q, With Love.

One of the most prolific and successful figures in contemporary pop, Quincy Jones began as a jazz and soul trumpeter, became a bandleader overseas, and returned to America to carve out a long and still-prospering career as a composer, arranger, and producer. His best-known and best-selling work may have been with Michael Jackson, but Jones has worked for hundreds of other successful acts, including Herb Alpert, Louis Armstrong, LaVern Baker, Glen Campbell, Ray Charles, José Feliciano, Roberta Flack, Aretha Franklin, Herbie Hancock, B.B. King, Little Richard, Manhattan Transfer, Johnny Mathis, Frank Sinatra, Billy Preston, Paul Simon, Ringo Starr, George Benson, Bill Withers, James Ingram, the Brothers Johnson, and the Jacksons. Jones has also had a successful career recording under his own name, and has scored over 35 films and composed about a dozen TV-show themes. By the early '90s, he had been nominated for 76 Grammys (the most for any artist) and he had won 26. As one of the first blacks to score films and become a record company executive, he also helped advance the status of African-Americans in the music business.

Jones moved with his family at an early age to Seattle, where he began studying trumpet while in grade school. At 14 he met Ray Charles, and the two formed a band that began playing Seattle soul clubs. While working with Charles, he became an arranger. At age 15 he joined vibraphonist Lionel Hampton's big band and was all set to embark on a European tour when Hampton's wife demanded he be kept off the tour so he could attend school.

Within a year Jones had won a scholarship to Boston's Berklee School of Music, where he took 10 classes a day and earned money by playing in snip joints at night. Word of the young trumpeter's skills got out through the jazz grapevine, and at 17 he was invited to New York by jazz bassist Oscar Pettiford to write two arrangements for an album. Jones received $17 per arrangement. He stayed in New York, relishing the opportunity to hang out with Charlie Parker, Thelonious Monk, and Miles Davis. He began playing at recording sessions and at Manhattan jazz clubs, and eventually rejoined Hampton's orchestra for a European tour. Jones also toured Europe with Dizzy Gillespie. In the mid-'50s he made Paris his home.

In France he became music director for Barclay Records and was staff composer/arranger for Harry Arnold's Swedish All-Stars of Stockholm. He also studied classical composition with Nadia Boulanger, who had once taught Igor Stravinsky. Through the '50s Jones won awards in Europe for his arranging and composing. According to his bio, in the mid-'50s Jones became the first popular conductor/arranger to record with a Fender bass; if true, that's a good example of the way Jones has always kept his ears as open to pop and R&B as to the more sophisticated sounds of jazz. Toward the end of the decade he began leading an 18-piece big band, which was a financial failure. He returned to the States in 1961, $100,000 in debt.

In New York, Jones became a vice president at Mercury Records, making him one of the first blacks to hold such a post. There he produced, arranged, and played on hundreds of sessions, as well as producing 10 gold records for Lesley Gore, including "It's My Party," "Judy's Turn to Cry," and "You Don't Own Me." He won his first Grammy in 1963 for his arrangement of the Count Basie Orchestra's recording of "I Can't Stop Loving You," and in the mid-'60s arranged Frank Sinatra's "Fly Me to the Moon." He stayed with Mercury from 1961 to 1968 and also recorded albums of his own.

In 1965 Jones scored his first film, Sidney Lumet's The Pawnbroker. He went on to score or write theme songs for Mirage, The Slender Thread, Walk Don't Run, In the Heat of the Night, A Dandy in Aspic, In Cold Blood, Enter Laughing, For Love of Ivy, and Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice. Jones received Oscar nominations for his In Cold Blood score and for "The Eyes of Love" from Banning (1967) and "For Love of Ivy" (1969). He won an Academy Award for his score for In the Heat of the Night. He also composed theme music for TV shows, including Inside, The Bill Cosby Show, and Sanford and Son, as well as PBS's Rebop, and has received several Emmy Awards.

In 1969 Jones signed with A&M Records and began a solo recording career in earnest. Walking in Space (#56, 1969) and Smackwater Jack (#56, 1971) won Grammys. In 1971 Jones scored the music for the Academy Awards show. By that time he had been married for several years to Peggy Lipton, star of TV's The Mod Squad. The couple later divorced. In 1973 he collaborated on Aretha Franklin's Hey Now Hey LP and won a Grammy for his single "Summer in the City" from You've Got It Bad, Girl. In 1974 his Body Heat album made the pop Top 10 and went gold. Later that year he was hospitalized for the first of two severe neural aneurysms.

Jones returned in 1976 with the first of his many protégés, the Brothers Johnson, who had performed on Jones's Mellow Madness. He produced and arranged their platinum debut LP, Look Out for #1. In 1977 Jones won an Emmy for his score for the TV miniseries Roots, and he scored the 1978 film The Wiz. It was while working on The Wiz that Jones met Michael Jackson. The following year Jones produced and arranged Jackson's multimillion-selling Off the Wall.

Jones continued his producing/arranging successes in the early '80s with Chaka Khan and Rufus, George Benson, and James Ingram. He released another of his hit albums, The Dude (#10), in 1981; it was his biggest hit since Body Heat, remaining on the chart for over a year and yielding a Top 30 single in a version of Chaz Jankel's "Ai No Corrida." In 1982 Jones produced another Ingram hit, "One Hundred Ways" ("Just Once" had been the first), and won five Grammy Awards, including one for The Dude. A compilation album of his solo work, entitled Q, was released, and Jones went on to produce Donna Summer's self-titled album that year, as well as Michael Jackson's mega-hit, Thriller (Jones also produced Jackson's 1987 album Bad).

Through the '80s, Jones moved into film and television production, coproducing Stephen Spielberg's 1985 adaptation of Alice Walker's novel The Color Purple. After the 1985 Grammy Awards gala, Jones oversaw the arrangement and production of "We Are the World," the anthem of USA for Africa. His album Back on the Block (#9, 1989) found Jones anticipating the early-'90s "jazz-rap" trend, bringing together such jazz stars as Dizzy Gillespie, Miles Davis, Ella Fitzgerald, and Sarah Vaughan, with rappers Ice-T, Big Daddy Kane, and Melle Mel. The album, which also featured Ray Charles, won a Best Album Grammy in 1990—the same year Jones also won a Grammy Legends Award, and saw the theatrical release of his film biography, Listen Up: The Lives of Quincy Jones.

In 1991 Jones became executive producer of the hit NBC-TV comedy show, Fresh Prince of Bel-Air, a vehicle for rapper Will Smith of D.J. Jazzy Jeff and the Fresh Prince. Two years later, he launched the glossy hip-hop magazine Vibe, and released Miles and Quincy Live at Montreux—a document of Miles Davis' final recording, for which Jones conducted the lush Gil Evans charts Davis had first recorded in the late '50s. In 1995 Jones won the Jean Hersholt Humanitarian Award at the Academy Awards. That same year Qwest released Q's Jook Joint (#32 pop, #6 R&B, #1 Contemporary Jazz), a selection of contemporary versions of the mogul's older material. This all-star hit celebrated Jones' 50 varied years in the music business. From Q, With Love is a two-CD compilation of Jones' production work.

Rickie Lee Jones

Born Nov. 8, 1954, Chicago, IL
 1979—Rickie Lee Jones (Warner Bros.) 1981—Pirates
 1983—Girl at Her Volcano EP 1984—The Magazine 1989—Flying Cowboys (Geffen) 1991—Pop Pop 1993—Traffic From Paradise 1995—Naked Songs 1997—Ghostyhead 2000—It's Like This.

Though Rickie Lee Jones' music is an eccentric mixture of R&B, Beat jazz, and folk, her debut album made her an instant star. The LP quickly went platinum, bolstered by the single "Chuck E's in Love." It would be her only hit single, but Jones kept a solid cult following into the late '90s.

Jones grew up in Phoenix, Arizona; Olympia, Washington; and various cities in California. In 1973, at age 19, she went to L.A., where she worked as a waitress and eventually began performing in small clubs. Much of her act consisted of rhythmic spoken-word monologues. This Beat influence was also a crucial part of her later music and led to her friendship with singer/songwriter Tom Waits. (Jones is pictured on the back of Waits's 1978 Blue Valentine LP and sang a Waits song on the King of Comedy soundtrack.)

Jones attracted the interest of Warner Bros. Records in late 1978, when her early manager Nick Mathe sent the company a four-song demo she had originally cut under the auspices of A&M. In addition, friend Ivan Ulz sang the song "Easy Money" over the phone to Little Feat's Lowell George, who, after visiting Jones, recorded her song for his Thanks I'll Eat It Here solo LP. All this intrigued Warners staff producer Ted Templeman and A&R man Lenny Waronker, who signed her. The latter coproduced her debut with Russ Titleman.

Released in April 1979, "Chuck E's in Love" rose to #4. On the album (#3, 1979), Jones' voice ranged from a faint moan to a sexy, full-throated roar. Some critics praised her unique song structures with their jazz and show-tune shadings, plus her lyrical "visions," filled with colorful, low-down characters. Others saw her as a pseudo-bohemian. Jones bridled at being frequently compared to Joni Mitchell, citing Laura Nyro and Van Morrison as prime influences.

Her 1981 followup, Pirates (#5), used longer and more complex songs about death and transfiguration; it went gold. Girl at Her Volcano (#39, 1983) was a 10-inch EP; all but one song were ballad covers. The Magazine (#44, 1984) and Flying Cowboys (#39, 1989)—the latter produced by Steely Dan's Walter Becker and featuring collaborations with the Scottish band Blue Nile—both sold respectably. The David Was-produced Pop Pop (#121)—with jazzmen Charlie Haden and Joe Henderson supporting Jones, as she crooned all ballad covers, ranging from '20s Tin Pan Alley to Jimi Hendrix and Jefferson Airplane—did not fare so well. Jones dueted with John Mellencamp on "Between a Laugh and a Tear" on his 1985 Scarecrow album, and in 1989 with Dr. John on the Grammy-winning "Makin' Whoopee," from his In a Sentimental Mood: Traffic From Paradise (#111, 1993) featured a cover of David Bowie's "Rebel Rebel," and such guests as David Hidalgo of Los Lobos, Lyle Lovett, Bnan Setzer, and acoustic guitar virtuoso Leo Kottke (whose album Peculiaros Jones produced). Naked Songs (#121, 1995) documented live performances from an acoustic tour, while 1997's Ghostyhead (#159) was a riskier venture: Jones's foray into electronic textures and percussive loops, albeit of a low-key, homegrown variety. For 2000's It's Like This, the singer was back on more familiar artistic turf, recording standards and classic rock tunes (Traffic's "The Low Spark of High-Heeled Boys") with guest musicians such as Joe Jackson, Taj Mahal, and Ben Folds.

Tom Jones

Born Thomas Jones Woodward, June 7, 1940, Pontypridd, Wales
 1965—It's Not Unusual (Parrot); What's New, Pussycat?; Thunderball (United Artists) 1966—A-Tom-Ic Jones (Parrot)

1967—Funny Familiar Forgotten Feelings: Thirteen Smash Hits; Green, Green Grass of Home (PolyGram) 1968—The Tom Jones Fever Zone (Parrot); Help Yourself; Delilah (PolyGram) 1969—Tom Jones Live! (Parrot); This Is Tom Jones; Live in Las Vegas (Parrot) 1970—Tom; I (Who Have Nothing) 1971—She's a Lady; Tom Jones Live at Caesar's Palace 1972—Close Up 1973—The Body and Soul of 1974—Somethin' 'bout You Baby I Like 1975—Memories Don't Leave Like People Do 1976—Say You'll Stay Until Tomorrow (Epic) 1977—Tom Jones Greatest Hits (London); What a Night (Epic) 1979—Rescue Me (MCA) 1981—Darin' (Mercury) 1983—Don't Let Our Dreams Die Young (Polydor) 1984—Love Is on the Radio (London) 1985—Tender Loving Care (Mercury); The Country Side of Tom Jones (London) 1987—Things That Matter Most to Me (Mercury) 1988—Move Closer (Jive) 1991—Carrying a Torch (Chrysalis, U.K.) 1994—The Lead and How to Swing It (Interscope) 1997—Tom Jones Live (BMG); I Need Your Lovin' (32 Jazz) 1999—Reload (Gut, U.K.) 2000—It's Not Unusual (PolyGram).

While possessing a voice nearly as remarkably expressive as those of the R&B legends he admires, Tom Jones initially achieved more notoriety as a sex symbol than respect as a singer. After a career encompassing '60s pop followed by '70s conquests of country and Las Vegas, Jones made a surprising late-'80s comeback, spearheaded by covers of Prince's "Kiss" (#13, 1987) and EMF's "Unbelievable."

The son of a coal miner, Tom Woodward grew up in a home that had no bath and began singing in church as a child. As a teenager he had problems with drinking and delinquency. By age 16 he had married and was working odd jobs, from carpentry and glove-cutting to construction. A part-time pub singer, he later taught himself drums and played with various local bands before adopting the stage name Tommy Scott and joining the Senators. By 1963, the group had become a popular local attraction, and the following year fellow Welshman Gordon Mills became his manager.

In 1964 Woodward changed his surname to Jones, after the success of the film Tom Jones, and the pair went to London, where Jones signed to Decca. After one single flopped, Jones requested a new Mills number, "It's Not Unusual," which had originally been intended for Sandie Shaw. Jones' brassy version was #1 in Britain and Top 10 in America in 1965, later that year came the million-selling followup, the Bacharach-David theme from the film What's New Pussycat? In 1967 Jones' version of Porter Wagoner's country tune "Green, Green Grass of Home" (#11) was an international hit. Other hit singles from this period include "Delilah," "Love Me Tonight," and "I'll Never Fall in Love Again" (1969); "Daughter of Darkness," "I (Who Have Nothing)," "Without Love (There Is Nothing)" (1970), and "She's a Lady" (1971).

But more than a pop star, Jones was a phenomenon. The year 1969 saw four of his albums go gold and the debut of his highly rated U.S. television variety series, This Is Tom Jones. Among the highlights of the show's two-year run was Jones and guest Janis Joplin bumping and grinding through a duet, much of which was shot from the waist up. Jones' reputation as a sex symbol was further enhanced by a well-publicized affair with the Supremes' Mary Wilson. (As of this writing, Jones, a grandfather, is still wed to his first wife.) Though the hits waned, Jones remained a top draw live, where female fans pelted him with room keys and panties, a form of tribute Jones claims to have since tired of.

While in the early years critics were sometimes less than kind to Jones, he has counted among his admirers Elvis Presley and Paul McCartney, who wrote "The Long and Winding Road" especially for him. His original fans, it seems, never went away, and with "Kiss," "Unbelievable," and a 1993 #1 U.K. hit with the Beatles' "All You Need Is Love," a new, younger audience embraced him as well. His well-received musical series, The Right Time, on VH1 and guest spots on several TV shows, including The Simpsons, further fueled the early-'90s Tom Jones' revival.

That revival, spearheaded by Mark Woodward, Jones' son and manager, first received a critical imprimatur when Jones recorded the UK-only Carrying the Torch in collaboration with Van Morrison. He bolstered his new success by appearing in a version of Dylan Thomas' Under Milkwood, directed by Anthony Hopkins, singing at Carnegie Hall at a benefit for Sung's Rainforest Foundation, contributing a sly remake of Randy Newman's "You Can Leave Your Hat On" to the hit film The Full Monty, and appearing in the Tim Burton movie, Mars Attacks. In 1999, signed to the independent U.K. label Gut Records, he released an album of duets with Van Morrison, Natalie Imbruglia, and others. By then his status was assured: A young British band, Space, had recorded a tribute single, "The Ballad of Tom Jones," and the singer had been awarded the honor of the Order of the British Empire.

Janis Joplin

Born Jan. 19, 1943, Port Arthur, TX, died Oct. 4, 1970, Hollywood, CA

1967—Big Brother and the Holding Company (Mainstream) 1968—Cheap Thrills (Columbia).

Janis Joplin solo: 1969—I Got Dem Ol' Kozmic Blues Again Mama! (Columbia) 1971—Pearl 1972—In Concert 1973—Greatest Hits 1974—Janis soundtrack 1980—Anthology 1982—Farewell Song 1993—Janis (Sony) 1999—Box of Pearls: The Janis Joplin Collection.

Singer Janis Joplin was perhaps the premier blues-influenced singer of the '60s, and certainly one of the biggest female stars of her time. Even before her death, her tough blues-mama image only barely covered her vulnerability. The publicity concerning her sex life and problems with alcohol and drugs made her something of a legend. In recent years, periodic attempts to recast her life and work within the context of feminism have met with mixed results, and of her deceased contemporaries (Jimi Hendrix, Jim Morrison, et al.), she is perhaps the least well known to younger audiences.

Born into a comfortable middle-class family, Joplin was a loner by her early teens, developing a taste for blues and folk music, soon she retreated into poetry and painting. She ran away from home at age 17 and began singing in clubs in Houston and Austin, Texas, to earn money to finance a trip to California. By 1965, she was singing folk and blues in bars in San Francisco and Venice, California; had dropped out of several colleges; and was drawing unemployment checks. She returned to Austin in 1966 to sing in a country & western band, but within a few months a friend of San Francisco impresario Chet Helms told her about a new band, Big Brother and the Holding Company [see entry], which needed a singer in San Francisco. She returned to California and joined Big Brother.

Janis Joplin

Joplin and Big Brother stopped the show at the 1967 Monterey Pop Festival; Albert Grossman agreed to manage them, and Joplin was on her way to becoming a superstar. After a fairly successful first LP in 1967 with Big Brother, Columbia Records signed the unit, and Cheap Thrills, with the hit single "Piece of My Heart" (#12, 1968), became a gold #1 album. Within a year Joplin had come to overshadow her backing band, and she left Big Brother (though she appears, uncredited, on a few tracks on the group's 1971 Be a Brother LP), taking only guitarist Sam Andrew with her to form the Kozmic Blues Band.

Joplin toured constantly and made television appearances as a guest with Dick Cavett, Tom Jones, and Ed Sullivan. Finally the Kozmic Blues LP appeared, with gutsy blues-rock tracks like "Try (Just a Little Bit Harder)." During this time she became increasingly involved with alcohol and drugs, eventually succumbing to heroin addiction. Yet her life seemed to be taking a turn for the better with the recording of Pearl. She was engaged to be married and was pleased with the Full Tilt Boogie Band she'd formed for the Pearl album (Pearl was her nickname). On October 4, 1970, her body was found in her room at Hollywood's Landmark Hotel, face down with fresh puncture marks in her arm. The death was ruled an accidental heroin overdose.

The posthumous Pearl LP (#1, 1971) yielded her #1 hit version of former lover Kris Kristofferson's "Me and Bobby McGee" and was released with one track, "Boned Alive in the Blues," missing the vocals Joplin didn't live to complete. Several more posthumous collections have been released, as well as the 1974 documentary Janis. The 1979 film The Rose, starring Bette Midler, was a thinly veiled account of Joplin's career. She has since been the subject of several biographies, including Love, Janis, penned by her therapist sister, Laura, and Alice Echols' 1999 work, Scars of Sweet Paradise. Joplin's former residence in San Francisco's Haight district was converted into a drug rehab center in 1999.

Louis Jordan

Born Louis Thomas Jordan, July 8, 1908, Brinkley, AR; died Feb. 4, 1975, Los Angeles, CA

1975—The Best of Louis Jordan (MCA) 1980—I Believe in Music (Classic Jazz) 1992—Just Say Moe! Mo' of the Best of Louis Jordan (Rhino) 1999—Let the Good Times Roll: Anthology 1938–1953 (MCA).

It's impossible to overstate Louis Jordan's importance to popular music, particularly rock & roll. Via his vocal approach, song structures, and lyrics, Jordan was the direct link between rhythm & blues and rock & roll. B.B. King, Ray Charles, and Chuck Berry, among other artists, are specific in their admiration for Jordan, claiming him as an important model for their own music; all have also recorded his songs.

Jordan learned saxophone as a youth in Arkansas. He later toured with the famed Rabbit Foot Minstrels revue, where he played behind such blues legends as Bessie Smith, Ma Rainey, and Ida Cox. Moving to New York in the mid-'30s, Jordan, by now an accomplished jazz alto saxophonist, worked with Clarence Williams and Louis Armstrong before hooking up with drummer Chick Webb's swing band. In addition to playing sax in the horn section, Jordan began singing with the band, mainly on such blues and novelty songs as "Gee, But You're Swell" and "Rusty Hinge."

In 1938 Jordan started his own small group, the Elks Rendez-Vous Band, named for the club where they were playing a long-term engagement. Jordan signed with a major label, Decca, and in 1939 changed the name of the group to the Tympany Five.

From 1941 to 1949 Jordan had a series of hit records that defined his humorous, bluesy, and always musical approach, including "Knock Me a Kiss," "I'm Gonna Move to the Outskirts of Town," "What's the Use of Gettin' Sober (When You're Gonna Get Drunk Again)," "Five Guys Named Moe," "Is You Is or Is You Ain't My Baby," "Caldonia," "Beware," "Choo Choo Cha Boogie," "Saturday Night Fish Fry," and "Let the Good Times Roll." These songs are classic models of "jump style" rhythm & blues; their arrangements drawing from swing and blues, their rocking rhythms pointing toward a new music that was just around the corner. During this period, Jordan performed his songs in a series of short comic films that can be seen as precursors to music videos.

Jordan's hits continued into the early '50s. "Ain't Nobody Here But Us Chickens," "Run Joe," "Early in the Morning," and "School Days" among them. By this time Jordan was not only the most popular figure in the burgeoning R&B market, but also the most influential.

Jordan's importance to rock & roll was made clear by Jordan's Decca producer Milt Gabler. When later producing seminal records by Bill Haley and His Comets, Gabler claimed he fashioned their sound purely after Jordan's earlier sides, particularly in the treatment of the guitars and horns.

Jordan left Decca in 1954, and his popularity almost immediately began to diminish. He recorded and toured heavily throughout the '50s and '60s, but rock & roll, the music he had helped bring into the world, supplanted his sophisticated, smoother style.

Jordan died in 1975 from heart failure. But his music wasn't forgotten. Joe Jackson's 1981 Jumpin' Jive paid tribute to Jordan in its song selections and arrangements. In the early '90s, Five Guys Named Moe, a revue based on Jordan's music, ran on London's West End and New York's Broadway

Journey

Formed 1973, San Francisco, CA

Neal Schon (b. 1955, San Mateo, CA), voc., gtr.; Ross Valory (b. 1950, San Francisco), bass; Gregg Rolie (b. 1948), voc., kybds.; Prairie Prince (b. May 7, 1950, Charlotte, NC), drums; George Tickner, gtr.

1974—(- Prince; + Aynsley Dunbar [b. 1946, Liverpool, Eng.], drums) 1975—Journey (Columbia) (- Tickner) 1976—Look

Into the Future 1977—Next (+ Robert Fleischman, voc.; - Fleischman; + Steve Perry [b. 1949, Hanford, CA], voc.)

1978—Infinity (- Dunbar; + Steve Smith [b. Boston], drums)

1979—Evolution; In the Beginning 1980—Departure

1981—(- Rolie; + Jonathan Cain, kybds.) Captured; Escape

1983—Frontiers 1986—(- Smith; - Valory) Raised on Radio

1988—Greatest Hits 1989—(group disbands) 1992—

Time³ 1996—(group re-forms: Perry; Cain; Schon; Valory; Smith) Trial by Fire 1998—(- Perry; - Smith; + Steve Augeri, voc.; + Dean Castronovo, drums) 2001—Arrival.

Steve Perry solo: 1984—Street Talk (Columbia) 1994—For the Love of Strange Medicine.

Neal Schon (with Jan Hammer): 1981—Untold Passion

(Columbia) 1983—Here To Stay.

Jonathan Cain solo: 1994—Back to the Innocence (Interscope).

Between their 1975 debut as a predominantly instrumental progressive rock group and their first platinum LP in 1978, Journey underwent format changes that led to their emergence as one of the top American hard-pop bands. Gregg Rolie had cofounded Santana with Carlos Santana and had sung lead on several Santana tunes, including "Evil Ways" and "Black Magic Woman." Neal Schon joined Santana after its second LP, Abraxas, when he was 17. The two left Santana in 1972. Rolie and his father opened a restaurant in Seattle, while Schon jammed with other Bay Area musicians.

Former Santana road manager Walter Herbert brought Schon and Rolie together again with ex-Steve Miller bassist Ross Valory, who, along with George Tickner, had played in Frumious Bandersnatch, a Bay Area group Herbert managed. In an impromptu contest on San Francisco station KSAN-FM, listeners were asked to name the band; the winning name was Journey. The group played its first shows with Prairie Prince, who was then drummer with the Tubes. When he decided to stay with the Tubes, British journeyman Aynsley Dunbar, whose earlier associations included John Mayall, Jeff Beck, the Bonzo Dog Band, Mothers of Invention, Lou Reed, and David Bowie, joined. Within a year of its 1974 New Year's Eve debut at San Francisco's Winterland, the group was signed to Columbia. Following Journey's debut LP, on which Rolie did most of the singing, Tickner, tired of touring, left the band. The group's next two albums sold moderately. Herbert, convinced that the group needed a lead singer, hired Robert Fleischman. Meanwhile, Steve Perry, a drummer/singer, had contacted the group several times asking to join. Due to a series of fortuitous events—Perry was recommended to Herbert by a Columbia executive around the time Herbert had decided to fire Fleischman—Perry was in With Infinity (#21, 1978), their fourth LP and the first with Perry. Journey became a top group, as moderately successful singles ("Wheel in the Sky," "Lights") and constant touring made Infinity the group's first platinum LP; it eventually sold 3 million copies.

In September 1978, soon after Infinity's success, Dunbar was dismissed from the group for what Herbert termed "incompatibility of the first order." In April 1980 Journey's Nightmare Productions charged that Dunbar had been overpaid more than $60,000 in advances. In May 1980, Nightmare Productions (in which the band members and Herbert owned stock) was sued for $3.25 million by Dunbar, who claimed that he had been "squeezed out" of the group just when the earnings were increasing, and he sued for breach of contract, nonpayment of royalties, and other charges.

Journey: Jonathan Cain, Steve Perry, Neal Schon, Ross Valory, Steve Smith

Meanwhile, Dunbar (who joined Jefferson Starship) was replaced by Steve Smith, formerly Journey's drum roadie, who had studied at the Berklee School of Music and played with Focus, Jean-Luc Ponty, and Montrose. "Lovin', Touchin', Squeezin'" from Evolution (#20, 1979) was Journey's first Top 30 hit; earlier that year "Just the Same Way" had been a moderate success.

In 1980 "Anyway You Want It" from Departure (#8, 1980) hit #23. Departure became Journey's third consecutive multiplatinum album. Columbia repackaged material from the first three (pre-Perry) LPs as In the Beginning. After Departure, Rolie tired of touring and left. He was replaced by ex-Babys keyboardist Jonathan Cain, who cowrote Journey's 1981 #4 ballad hit, "Who's Crying Now." In 1981 Schon recorded an LP entitled Untold Passion with keyboardist Jan Hammer. Escape became the group's first #1 LP. It sold 7 million copies and spawned two other Top 10 hits: "Open Arms" and "Don't Stop Believin'." All of the Perry LPs have been certified platinum, and in late 1982 the group became the first rock band to inspire a video game, Journey—Escape.

Like many other mainstream hard-rock outfits, Journey made the transition to video, and their post-1983 albums continued to sell in the millions. Bolstered by a string of Top 20 hits that included "Separate Ways (Worlds Apart)" (#8, 1983), "Faithfully" (#12, 1983), "Only the Young" (#9, 1985), "Be Good to Yourself" (#9, 1986), "Suzanne" (#17, 1986), "Girl Can't Help It" (#17, 1986), and "I'll Be Alright Without You" (#14, 1987). Frontiers (#2, 1983), Raised on Radio (#4, 1986), and Greatest Hits (#10, 1988) sold over 10 million copies combined. Steve Perry also launched a successful side solo career and had a #3 hit with 1984's "Oh Sherrie" from his double-platinum Street Talk (#12).

The group disbanded after Schon and Cain left in 1989 to join Cain's ex-Babys band mate John Waite in Bad English [see the Babys entry]; in 1991 Valory and Rolie joined the Storm. Time peaked only at #90. In late 1993 the band, minus Perry, reunited at a Bay Area concert honoring Herbert. In 1994 Perry had a hit album with For the Love of Strange Medicine (#15, 1994) and a top single, "You Better Wait" (#6, 1994). However, he and Journey resumed activity in 1996, resulting in Trial by Fire (#47 pop). The single "When You Love a Woman" hit #1 on the Adult Contemporary chart. Perry departed again and was replaced by sound-alike Steve Augen for "Remember Me," Journey's contribution to the 1998 Armageddon soundtrack. The group, which also sported a new drummer, released Arrival in early 2001.

Joy Division/New Order

Joy Division: Formed 1976, Manchester, Eng.

Ian Curtis (b. July 15, 1956, Macclesfield, Eng.; d. May 18, 1980, Macclesfield), voc.; Bernard Sumner (b. Bernard Albrecht, Jan. 4, 1956), gtr.; Peter Hook (b. Feb. 13, 1956, Salford, Eng.), bass; Stephen Morris (b. Oct. 28, 1957, Macclesfield), drums.

1979—Unknown Pleasures (Factory, U.K.) 1980—Closer 1981—Still 1995—Permanent (Qwest) 1998—Heart & Soul (London).

New Order, formed 1980, Manchester: Hook; Sumner; Morris; + Gillian Gilbert (b. Jan. 27, 1961, Manchester, Eng.), kybds.

1981—Movement (Factory, U.K.) 1983—Power, Corruption and Lies 1985—Low-life (Qwest) 1986—Brotherhood

1987—Substance 1989—Technique 1993—Republic

1995—The Best of.

Electronic: Sumner; + Johnny Marr (b. John Maher, Oct. 31, 1963, Manchester), gtr.; + Neil Tennant (b. Neil Francis Tennant, July 10, 1954, Brunton Park, Eng.), voc.

1991—Electronic (Warner Bros.) 1996—Raise the Pressure

1999—Twisted Tenderness (Koch).

The Other Two: Gilbert; Morris.

1993—The Other Two and You (Qwest) 1999—Superhighways (PolyGram).

Revenge: Hook; + David Hicks, gtr.; + Chris Jones, kybds.; + Ashley Taylor, drums; + David Potts, bass.

1990—One True Passion (Capitol).

Monaco: Hook; Potts.

1997—Music for Pleasure (Polydor).

Until the death of singer Ian Curtis in 1980, Joy Division was one of Britain's most admired and promising postpunk bands. New Order built on that promise, with 1983's "Blue Monday" forging an influential alliance of new wave and dance music.

Joy Division's Velvet Underground-derived drone and Curtis' matter-of-fact, gloomy lyrics scored significant club hits with "She's Lost Control," "Transmission," and "Love Will Tear Us Apart," a British hit single (#13 U.K., 1980). Formed by Hook and Sumner after seeing the Sex Pistols play in Manchester on June 4, 1976, the group took shape after Curtis responded to a "seeking singer" ad posted by the two at the local Virgin record store. Morris joined on drums the following year. The band, naming itself Joy Division after Nazi military prostitute compounds, released a four-song EP, Ideal for Living, by year's end.

In April 1978 the band generated a buzz when they performed at a Stiff Records battle of the bands. After turning down deals with Britain's RCA and Radar labels, the group recorded their first album, Unknown Pleasures, with producer Martin Hannett. They chose Manchester independent Factory Records to release the album, which was an immediate success in the U.K.

The next year the band's acclaim grew as they toured England and Europe. In March they returned to the studio to record their second album, Closer. Curtis, who was responsible for much of the group's dark vision, suffered from epileptic grand mal seizures—occasionally while performing onstage. Having attempted suicide in the past, Curtis hanged himself on May 18, 1980, just prior to the release of Closer (Joy Division's most commercially successful album) and the group's first U.S. tour. A collection of demos, outtakes, and live performances, Still, was released in 1981.

The remaining members regrouped as New Order and added Morris' girlfriend Gillian Gilbert on keyboards. Like Joy Division, it has eschewed publicity, with no band photos on album covers, and playing low-key, unemotional concerts. The group's sound—a brighter but still moody version of Joy Division, with Sumner's monotonal yet plaintive vocals at the center—gained it club hits with "Everything's Gone Green" (1981) and "Temptation" (1982).

"Blue Monday" (1983) was New Order's breakthrough. Released only as a 12-inch single, it matched the band's usual emotional chill to a propulsive dance track and reached #5 on the Billboard dance chart, selling over 3 million copies worldwide. Sessions with dance producer Arthur Baker followed, producing "Confusion" (1983), another dance-floor favorite, which hit #71 R&B.

The band left Factory Records in 1985, signing with Quincy Jones' new Qwest label. Although Low-life (#94, 1985) and Brotherhood (#117, 1986) were their first American chart albums, sales were disappointing. Substance (#36, 1987), Technique (#32, 1989), and the hit single "True Faith" (#32, 1987) turned things around, but the band members turned their backs on stardom, releasing only the British World Cup Soccer theme "World in Motion . . ." (#1 U.K., 1990) before unofficially parting ways to pursue solo projects.

Sumner had the greatest success, teaming with ex-Smiths guitarist Johnny Marr and Pet Shop Boy Neil Tennant on "Getting Away With It" (#38, 1990), featured on Electronic (#109, 1991). Bassist Peter Hook's solo project, Revenge, released One True Passion (#190, 1990), while Morris and Gilbert wrote British TV themes, eventually releasing an album as the Other Two.

New Order re-formed in 1993, releasing Republic (#11), followed by a successful tour of the U.S. But the band members went their own ways after the tour, Sumner continuing with Electronic, Hook exiling himself in Monaco, and Gilbert and Morris (now husband and wife) remaining the Other Two.

Joy Division remained an influence on modern rock, as shown by the continuing interest in their scant output, reissued in Permanent, a "greatest hits" collection with several rare and unreleased tracks, and Heart & Soul, a four-CD box set that collected their every extant recording. In 1998 New Order performed a hometown reunion show. In the following year, they recorded their first new song in more than six years, "Bruta," for the Leonardo DiCaprio film The Beach.

Joy of Cooking

Formed 1967, Berkeley, CA

Terry Garthwaite (b. July 11, 1938, Berkeley), gtr.; Toni Brown (b. Nov. 16, 1938, Madison, WI), voc., piano; Ron Wilson (b. Feb. 5, 1933, San Diego, CA), congas; Fritz Kasten (b. Oct. 19, Des Moines, IA), drums; David Garthwaite (b. CA), bass. 1970—Joy of Cooking (Capitol) (– D. Garthwaite; + Jeff Neighbor (b. Mar. 19, 1942, Grand Coulee, WA), bass) Closer to the Ground 1972—Castles (– Brown) 1990—Retro Rock #3: The Best of Joy of Cooking (Capitol).

Joy of Cooking was one of the first rock bands led by women. Though the group lasted over five years, it had only one hit,

"Brownsville," from its debut, and a small cult following. Terry Garthwaite began singing and playing guitar in junior high school and made her television debut at 14. A graduate of UC at Berkeley, she met Toni Brown, a creative writing graduate of Bennington College, and together with Garthwaite's brother David, Ron Wilson, and Fritz Kasten, they formed Joy of Cooking, a folk-rock group. Four years later they signed a record deal with Capitol, and "Mockingbird" became an FM staple. After their third LP, Brown left the group, and Garthwaite formed a larger band, which toured and recorded an album that was never released because of contractual problems.

In 1973 Brown and Garthwaite recorded an album entitled Cross Country. They have each recorded solo albums and were reunited in 1977 for The Joy, which received positive critical reaction but garnered few sales. They have since disbanded; both have recorded solo.

Judas Priest

Formed 1969, Birmingham, Eng.

Kenneth "K.K." Downing (b. Oct. 27, 1951, West Midlands, Eng.), gtr.; Ian Hill (b. Jan. 20, 1952, West Midlands), bass.

1971—(+ Rob Halford [b. Aug. 25, 1951, Birmingham], voc.; + John Hinch, drums) 1974—(+ Glenn Tipton (b. Oct. 25, 1949, West Midlands), gtr.; – Hinch; + Alan Moore, drums) Rocka Rolla (Gull) 1976—Sad Wings of Destiny 1977—(– Moore; + Simon Phillips, drums) Sin After Sin (Columbia) 1978—(– Phillips; + Les Binks, drums) Stained Class 1979—Hell Bent for Leather; Unleashed in the East (– Binks; + Dave Holland, drums) 1980—British Steel 1981—Point of Entry 1982—Screaming for Vengeance 1984—Defenders of the Faith 1986—Turbo 1987—Priest . . . Live 1988—Ram It Down 1989—(– Holland; + Scott Travis, drums) Painkiller 1992—(– Halford) 1993—Metalworks '73-'93 1995—(+ Tim "Ripper" Owens, voc.) 1997—Jugulator (CMC).

Judas Priest, a leather-clad heavy-metal band, was formed by guitarist K.K. Downing and bassist Ian Hill. In 1971 frontman Rob Halford joined (he'd previously worked in theatrical lighting), having met Hill, whom his sister was then dating (and later married). The band didn't get a contract until 1974, just after guitarist Glenn Tipton joined. Its first LP was released that year, but both it and the 1976 followup, Sad Wings of Destiny, sold marginally.

The band began to develop a following in England, and in 1977 Priest signed with Columbia, which released Sin After Sin. Produced by ex-Deep Purple bassist Roger Glover, Sin featured guest drummer Simon Phillips and an unlikely heavy-metal version of Joan Baez's "Diamonds and Rust" similar in style to Nazareth's 1973 treatment of Joni Mitchell's "This Flight Tonight." The group's songs, highlighted by Tipton and Downing's dual lead-guitar attack, were catchier and shorter than most other early-'70s heavy metal, anticipating late-decade acts like Def Leppard.

Stained Class (#173, 1978) featured new drummer Les Binks, replaced with ex-Trapeze member Dave Holland after Priest's live-in-Japan Unleashed in the East (#70, 1979). The live LP included a version of Fleetwood Mac's "Green Manalishi." Over the years Judas Priest became increasingly known for its extravagant live show, which featured Halford, in his trademark S&M gear, thundering onstage on a Harley-Davidson motorcycle. The band's seventh album, 1980's British Steel (#34), was its first U.S. Top 40 entry, and a heavy-metal landmark. Concise songs like "Living After Midnight" and "Breaking the Law" mated metal aggression with new-wave melodicism. Both went Top 20 in Britain.

Judas Priest: Ian Hill, K.K. Downing, Rob Halford, Glenn Tipton, Dave Holland

The 1981 followup, Point of Entry (#39, 1981), failed to build on the band's momentum, but the platinum Screaming for Vengeance (#17, 1982) broke Judas Priest in a big way stateside, and gave the group its closest thing to an American hit single, "You've Got Another Thing Comin'" (#67, 1982). The song's stylish video showed Priest performing on a laser-lit stage while a conservative business type outfitted in a trenchcoat and bowler hat appears to be fleeing some unseen, sinister force. At the clip's end, Tipton and Downing's guitars explode—as does the character's head, literally—leading to a powerful climax.

Vengeance, Defenders of the Faith (#18, 1984), and Turbo (#17, 1986) all went platinum, and Priest's mid-'80s success spurred sales of its earlier albums. Through 1990's Painkiller (#26, 1990), all but the group's second live LP, released in 1987, had sold more than 500,000 copies apiece. By the late '80s, however, other, younger metal bands began to make inroads on Priest's audience.

In 1986 Judas Priest became the unwitting object of controversy when the parents of two mentally unstable Reno, Nevada, teenagers sued both the group and Columbia Records for $6.2 million, claiming that a song on 1978's Stained Class contained subliminal messages that drove their sons to shoot themselves in 1985. One died instantly, the other lived but overdosed fatally on methadone three years later. Priest was acquitted of all charges in the six-week 1990 trial. The gold Painkiller came out shortly thereafter.

Halford, who'd relocated to Arizona in the early '80s and then moved to San Diego in 1999, abruptly quit Judas Priest in December 1992 to form his own band, the grungy Fight, which was active in the mid-'90s. (Scott Travis, Priest's drummer since 1990, assisted him but remained in Judas Priest.) Later in the decade, Halford led the industrial Two, which signed to Trent Reznor's nothing label. He also briefly fronted a post-Ozzy Black Sabbath, and collaborated with Pantera. In 1998 he obliterated many a metal stereotype (and confirmed years' worth of rumors) by openly announcing his homosexuality. In 1999 he returned to metal under the name Halford, and parted ways with nothing.

Tipton released a solo album in 1997. The four remaining members of Judas Priest auditioned vocalist Tim "Ripper" Owens, a longtime fan who had fronted a JP tribute act. He joined his idols after singing only a portion of one song. The group's first album sans Halford, Jugulator, peaked at #82 in 1997.

The Judds/Wynonna

Formed 1983, Nashville, TN

Naomi Judd (b. Diana Judd, Jan. 11, 1946, Ashland, KY), voc.; Wynonna Judd (b. Christina Ciminella, May 30, 1964, Ashland), voc., gtr.

1984—The Judds: Wynonna & Naomi (Curb/RCA); Why Not Me 1985—Rockin' With the Rhythm 1987—Heart Land; Christmas Time With the Judds 1988—Greatest Hits 1989—River of Time 1990—Love Can Build a Bridge; Collector's Series 1991—Greatest Hits, vol. 2 1995—Number One Hits 2000—The Judds Reunion.
Wynonna solo: 1992—Wynonna (Curb/MCA) 1993—Tell Me Why 1996—revelations 1997—Collection; The Other Side (Curb/Universal) 2000—New Day Dawning (Mercury/Curb).

After rising to fame in the mid-'80s, the Judds remained the most beloved mother-daughter act in country music—in any mass-appeal musical genre, in fact—until chronic hepatitis forced Wynonna Judd's mom, Naomi, to retire in 1991. Though Naomi's age-defying beauty earned much media attention, it was Wynonna's rich, authoritative lead vocals (Naomi usually sang harmony) and her equally confident way with ballads and rootsy rockers that gave the duo musical cachet, and enabled the younger Judd to embark on a successful solo career in the early '90s.

Naomi married at 17, and at 18 gave birth to Christina Ciminella, who later changed her name to Wynonna. (The choice was inspired by a reference in the song "Route 66.") The family moved to L.A. in 1968; two years later Naomi left Wynonna's father, who had by then fathered a second daughter, Ashley (later a successful actress). Eventually, mother and children relocated to Morrill, Kentucky, where, as Naomi struggled to make ends meet, Wynonna discovered the guitar. The Judds then moved back to California; there Naomi earned a nursing degree and spent her off-hours singing with Wynonna. In 1979 they were in the Nashville suburb of Franklin, and Naomi wound up nursing the daughter of a prominent C&W producer, Brent Maher, after the girl was injured in a car accident. After her recovery, Naomi gave Maher a demo tape that she and Wynonna had made; impressed, Maher passed it on to executives at RCA Records' Nashville division, who signed the duo.

Over the next few years, the Judds consistently took their smooth harmonies and old-fashioned but unsentimental songs to the top of the C&W chart. Their #1 C&W singles (later collected on the retrospective Number One Hits) included "Mama He's Crazy" (1984), "Why Not Me" (1984), "Girls Night Out" (1985), "Love Is Alive" (1985), "Have Mercy" (1985), "Grandpa (Tell Me 'Bout the Good Old Days)" (1986), "Rockin' With the Rhythm of the Rain" (1986), "Cry Myself to Sleep" (1986), "I Know Where I'm Going" (1987), "Maybe Your Baby's Got the Blues" (1987), "Turn It Loose" (1988), and "Change of Heart" (1988). Other hits included a remake of "Don't Be Cruel" (#10 C&W, 1987), "Give a Little Love" (#2 C&W, 1988), and "One Hundred and Two" (#6 C&W, 1991). In addition, the Judds garnered five Grammy Awards, in the Best Country Vocal Duet category.

After an emotional (and thoroughly publicized) farewell tour in 1991, Wynonna began working on her solo debut. Wynonna (1992) won critical raves, topped the C&W chart, and produced three #1 country singles: "She Is His Only Need," "I Saw the Light," and "No One Else on Earth," as well as the #4 single "My Strongest Weakness." Wynonna also became a #4 pop album. In 1993 Wynonna joined forces with tour mate and fellow crossover star Clint Black for the single "A Bad Goodbye" (#43 pop, #2 C&W, 1993). Also in 1993 Wynonna released her second solo album, Tell Me Why (#5 pop, #1 C&W, 1993), and Naomi published a best-selling memoir, Love Can Build a Bridge, which was made into a highly rated TV movie in 1995. Wynonna then reunited with her mother, whose illness was in remission, for a nationally televised performance at the 1994 Super Bowl during half-time.

Later that year, Wynonna announced she was pregnant with her first child by her Nashville businessman boyfriend, Arch Kelley III. The pregnancy prompted the singer to take an 18-month break from touring, though she began recording her album revelations (released in 1996). Son Elijah Judd Kelley was born in December 1994; when Wynonna was expecting their second child, she married Kelley, in January 1996. Daughter Grace was born that summer.

Her revelations (#9 pop, #2 C&W) contained a nearly eight-minute version of Lynyrd Skynyrd's "Free Bird," as well as the #1 country hit "To Be Loved by You" and the #14 "Heaven Help My Heart." The compilation Collection (#72 pop, #9 C&W) followed in 1997, as did The Other Side (#38 pop, #5 C&W), with the country singles "When Love Starts Talkin'" (#13 C&W) and "Come Some Rainy Day" (#14 C&W). In 1998 Wynonna's energies were devoted to a messy divorce from Kelley.

In 1999 Naomi, in remission for a few years, started to host a nationally syndicated radio show, Heart to Heart With Naomi Judd, from her home in a Nashville suburb. She and Wynonna held a reunion concert in Phoenix on New Year's Eve 1999 (A live recording of highlights was later released.) The concert led to a two-month reunion tour in early 2000, as well as a limited-edition four-song Judds EP packaged with a percentage of Wynonna's 2000 solo album, New Day Dawning. Wynonna's album included covers of the Fabulous Thunderbirds' "Tuff Enuff" and Joni Mitchell's "Help Me."

The Jungle Brothers

Formed 1986, Brooklyn, NY

Mike G (b. Michael Small, May 13, 1969, New York, NY), voc.; Afrika Baby Bambaataa (b. Nathaniel Hall, May 22, 1970, New York), voc.; Sammy B (b. Samuel Burwell, Dec. 9, 1967, New York), DJ.

1988—Straight Out the Jungle (Idlers/Warlock) 1989—Done by the Forces of Nature (Warner Bros.) 1993—(+ Torture [b. Colin Bobb, Oct. 18, 1974, Guyana], voc.) J. Beez wit the Remedy 1997—Raw Deluxe (Gee Street/V2) (- Burwell) 2000—V.I.P.

The Jungle Brothers opened the doors to the '90s jazz-rap trend by blending horns and scat vocals into their early raw, liting hip-hop style. Often sporting bright African colors, psychedelic beads, and wire-rimmed shades, the group was part of the late-'80s neo-hippie rap collective known as the Native Tongues, along with De La Soul, A Tribe Called Quest, and Queen Latifah.

While attending high school in Brooklyn, Michael Small began a rap group in 1986 with Harlemites Nathaniel Hall and Samuel Burwell. An early demo tape of their music made it into the hands of influential DJ Red Alert, of the New York City radio station WRKS-FM, who helped the JB's land a deal with the independent rap label Idlers Records. The group's first single, "Jim Browski," was popular among the city's hip-hop underground, but it was the B side, "I'll House You," a blend of rap and the house dance-music style, that really turned heads.

The Jungle Brothers signed with Warner Bros. in 1989 and released Done by the Forces of Nature (#46 R&B, 1989). They spent the next few years producing such artists as Fishbone and A Tribe Called Quest, and contributed a song to the soundtrack of Living Large, a film in which they appeared. Funksters Bootsy Collins, Gary "Mudbone" Cooper, and Bernie Worrell collaborated on the 1993 album J. Beez wit the Remedy (#52 R&B), as did outrageous new JB member Torture. The group's music remains influential and critically praised, though commercial success continues to elude them.

The JB's collaborated with reggae singer Luciano on the 1996 single "Who Could It Be?" (#96 R&B). After 1997's Raw Deluxe (#37 R&B), Burwell left the group. By now the Jungle Brothers had embraced the U.K. electronic dance scene and enjoyed an underground hit with a remix of their track "Jungle Brother" by the drum-and-bass duo Urban Takeover (made up of Aphrodite and Mickey Finn). The duo was soon invited to appear on Propellerheads' debut album, and they in turn asked that group's Alex Gifford to produce 1999's V.I.P., bathing the album under a layer of drum-and-bass as the Jungle Brothers moved even further away from mainstream rap's tales of guns and money. Now married and with families, the Jungle Brothers doggedly promoted Afrocentrism, spirituality, and good times.

a|b|c|d|e|f|g|h|i|j| |l|m|n|o|p|q|r|s|t|u|v|w|x|y|z

Kaleidoscope/David Lindley

Formed 1966, Berkeley, CA

Ferus Epp (b. Chester Crill, a.k.a. Max Buda, Templeton Parceley, Connie Crill), violin, kybds., voc.; John Vidican, perc.; Solomon Feldthouse (b. Sulyman Feldthouse), gtr., voc., strings; David Lindley (b. 1944, San Marino, CA), violin, gtr., voc.; Chris Darrow, gtr., voc., violin.

1967—Side Trips (Epic) 1968—A Beacon From Mars (– Darrow; – Vidican; + Stuart Brotman, bass; + Paul Lagos, drums) 1969—Kaleidoscope 1970—(– Brotman; + Ron Johnson, bass; + Jeff Kaplan [d. 1970], gtr., voc.) Bernice (Columbia) (– Feldthouse; – Crill; + Richard Aplan, flute (group disbands) 1975—(group re-forms: Feldthouse; Brotman; Lagos; Crill; Darrow) 1976—When Scopes Collide (Pacific Arts) 1991—Greetings From Kartoonistan . . . We Ain't Dead Yet (Giffhorse/Curb) 1991—Egyptian Candy: A Collection (Legacy).

David Lindley solo: 1981—El Rayo-X (Elektra) 1982—Win This Record! 1988—Very Greasy.

Kaleidoscope was known in the late '60s for eclectic albums that drew from bluegrass, blues, Cajun music, Middle Eastern music, and acid rock, using various exotic instruments (e.g. saz, oud) Despite a noteworthy appearance at the 1968 Newport Folk Festival and a live act that included flamenco and belly dancers, Kaleidoscope's early albums, Sidetrps and Beacon From Mars, were ignored. John Vidican and Chris Darrow were replaced by Paul Lagos and Stuart Brotman, with no resulting rise in popularity for subsequent LPs Kalei- doscope and Bernice. Shortly after the 1970 drug-related death of guitarist Jeff Kaplan, a recent recruit, the band broke up, although Darrow, Lagos, Brotman, Feldthouse, and Crill reunited in 1975 to record When Scopes Collide, with only minor contributions from Lindley (under the name DeParis Letante) and in 1991 for Greetings From Kartoonistan.

After he left Kaleidoscope, Darrow recorded solo albums for United Artists and other labels. One of those efforts was created with members of British folk-rockers Fairport Convention. "Max Buda" made a guest appearance on Darrow's 1979 LP, Fretless. Since the '70s, Feldthouse has been making jewelry, playing sessions, working as a solo flamenco artist, and participating in the long-running world-music group Sirocco. Brotman became involved with the klezmer revival.

Today Kaleidoscope is remembered primarily as the band led by David Lindley before he hooked up with Jackson Browne and Ry Cooder. In the '80s Lindley also recorded solo LPs. In the early '90s he visited Madagascar, where he recorded and documented music with avant-garde guitarist Henry Kaiser. Later in the decade he collaborated with Jordanian percussionist Hani Naser. By 2000, Lindley was performing with banjo player Wally Ingram.

Kansas

Formed 1970, Topeka, KS

Kerry Livgren (b. Sep. 18, 1949, KS), gtr., kybds., synth.; Steve Walsh (b. 1951, St. Joseph, MO), kybds., synth., voc.; Robby Steinhardt (b. 1951, MS), violin, voc.; Richard Williams (b. 1951, KS), gtr.; Phil Ehart (b. 1951, KS), drums; Dave Hope (b. Oct. 7, 1949, KS), bass.

1974—Kansas (Kirshner) 1975—Masque; Song for America 1976—Leftoverture 1977—Point of Know Return 1978—Two for the Show 1979—Monolith 1980—Audio-Visions 1981—(– Walsh; + John Elefante [b. 1958, Levittown, NY], voc., kybds.) 1982—Vinyl Confessions 1983—Drastic Measures (CBS Associated) (group disbands) 1984—The Best of Kansas 1986—(group re-forms: Walsh; Ehart; Williams; + Steve Morse [b. July 28, 1954, Hamilton, OH], gtr.; + Billy Greer, bass, gtr.) Power (MCA) 1988—(numerous personnel changes follow) In the Spirit of Things 1994—The Kansas Box Set (Legacy) 1995—Freaks of Nature (Intersound) 1997—(+ Steinhardt) 1998—Always Never the Same (River North) 1999—(+ Livgren; + Hope) 2000—Somewhere to Elsewhere (Magna Carta) (– Livgren; – Hope).
Steve Walsh solo: 1979—Schemer-Dreamer (Kirshner).

Although Kansas' ornate and complex rock has been dismissed by critics as a pastiche of early-'70s British progressive rock, some of the band's albums have sold in the millions. For years the group labored through the Midwest, playing clubs and bars, its odd mix of Anglophilia and boogie falling mostly on bewildered ears. The members met while attending high school in Topeka, and after playing in various local groups, Kerry Livgren, Phil Ehart, and Dave Hope formed the first edition of Kansas in 1970. A year later they changed their name to White Clover and added Robby Steinhardt, a classically trained violinist who had played with orchestras in Europe when his father, chairman of the music-history department at the University of Kansas, was there on sabbatical. The group went through numerous personnel changes before Ehart, seeking new ideas, went to England in 1972. On his return four months later, he revived White Clover with Hope, Steinhardt, Richard Williams, and Steve Walsh; Livgren, who became the group's main songwriter, joined soon after, and they reverted to the name Kansas.

The sextet's first album initially sold about 100,000 copies, but constant touring built its following, and Kansas' second and third LPs each sold about 250,000. Leftoverture (#5, 1976), which featured "Carry On Wayward Son" (#11, 1977), sold over 3 million copies. The 1977-released Point of Know Return (#4) went triple platinum, garnering two hit singles—"Point of Know Return" (#28) and "Dust in the Wind" (#6). Two for the Show, a live album (#32, 1978), is also platinum, and Monolith (#10, 1979) (Kansas' first self-produced venture) and Audio-Visions (#26, 1980) are gold.

In 1980 schisms began to form within the group. Livgren and then Hope became born-again Christians. Livgren cut a solo album, Seeds of Change, in 1980, as Walsh had the previous year with Schemer-Dreamer. Walsh also sang on ex-Genesis Steve Hackett's solo album, Please Don't Touch. By the end of 1981, Walsh had left the group to form a hard-rock quartet called Streets. Vinyl Confessions, the first Kansas LP to feature his replacement, John Elefante, went Top 20 and delivered a #17 hit with "Play the Game Tonight." But after one more studio album, Drastic Measures (1983), the group disbanded. Livgren and Elefante both went on to find considerable success in contemporary Christian music, the former as an artist, the latter as a producer.

In 1986 Ehart, Williams, and Walsh regrouped, adding the brilliant jazz-fusion guitarist Steve Morse (Dixie Dregs, Steve Morse Band) and bassist Billy Greer, who'd played with Walsh in Streets. Neither of that group's two LPs, Streets (1983) and Crimes in Mind (1985) had sold well. The revamped Kansas' first album, Power, produced the group's fourth, and last, Top 20 hit, "All I Wanted." However, 1988's In the Spirit of Things did not find a receptive audience. The followup, Freaks of Nature, appeared seven years later. Having splintered 19 years earlier, the original Kansas lineup, augmented by Greer, reconvened for 2000's Somewhere to Elsewhere.

Paul Kantner: See Jefferson Airplane

KC and the Sunshine Band

Formed 1973, Florida

Harry Wayne Casey (b. Jan. 31, 1951, Hialeah, FL), voc., kybds.; Richard Finch (b. Jan. 25, 1954, Indianapolis, IN), bass; Jerome Smith (b. June 18, 1953, Miami, FL; d. July 28, 2000, W. Palm Beach, FL), gtr.; Robert Johnson (b. Mar. 21, 1953, Miami), drums; Fermin Coytisol (b. Dec. 31, 1951, Havana, Cuba), congas; Ronnie Smith (b. 1952, Hialeah), trumpet; Denvil Liprot, sax; James Weaver, trumpet; Charles Williams (b. Nov. 18, 1954, Rockingham, NC), trombone.

1974—Do It Good (T.K.) 1975—The Sound of Sunshine (a.k.a. The Sunshine Band) 1976—Part 3; KC and the Sunshine Band 1977—I Like to Do It (President) 1978—Who Do Ya (Love) (T.K.) 1979—Do You Wanna Go Party? 1980—Greatest Hits 1981—The Painter (Epic) 1982—All in a Night's Work 1989—The Best of KC and the Sunshine Band (Rhino) 1993—Oh Yeah (ZYX) 1999—25th Anniversary Edition (Rhino).
KC solo: 1984—KC Ten (Meca).

KC and the Sunshine Band were the most successful promulgators of the boisterous, tropically funky dance music known as the Miami Sound. The Sunshine Band originated in the T.K. Studios in Hialeah, Florida, near Miami. H.W. Casey, a former record retailer, began working in 1973 for Tone Distributors, where he met Richard Finch, a Miami session bassist hired by T.K. as an engineer. The two formed a songwriting partnership and recorded as KC and the Sunshine Junkanoo Band. (Junkanoo is a percussion-oriented pop from the Bahama Islands, characterized by a liberal mix of horns, whistles, and vocal chants.) Their first record, "Blow Your Whistle," reached #27 on R&B chart in 1973, and its followup (as KC and the Sunshine Band), "Sound Your Funky Horn," went to #21 early the next year, persuading T.K. to release an album.

Do It Good was a hit in Europe, and the single "Queen of Clubs" went to #7 on British chart in 1974 (not placing on American chart until its reissue two years later), when KC and the Sunshine Band toured the U.K. Casey and Finch wrote, arranged, and produced "Rock Your Baby," a #1 hit for George McCrae (who had sung on Do It Good) on both pop and R&B charts in 1974, which sold a reported 11 million copies worldwide. The following year KC and the Sunshine Band struck gold with "Get Down Tonight" (#1 pop and R&B).

KC and the Sunshine Band—now expanded to nine members, all black except for Casey and Finch—ruled the charts and the dance floors for the next three years. "That's the Way (I Like It)" and "(Shake, Shake, Shake) Shake Your Booty" reached #1 on the pop chart in 1975 and 1976, respectively. The Sunshine Band became the first act to score four #1 pop singles in one 12-month period since the Beatles in 1964. Three of these were #1 R&B as well. The band's string of hit singles continued with "I'm Your Boogie Man" (#1 pop, #3 R&B, 1977) and "Keep It Comin' Love" (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1977).

It looked as if the group had come to the end of the string in 1978 with the minor hits "Boogie Shoes" and "It's the Same Old Song," but in 1979 KC and company returned with "Do You Wanna Go Party" (#8 R&B), "Please Don't Go" (#1 pop), and "Yes, I'm Ready," the latter featuring the vocals of Ten De Sario (#2 pop, #20 R&B). In 1984, after Casey had recovered from a serious 1982 car crash, the group hit the Top 20 again with "Give It Up," which went to #1 in the U.K. Casey and Finch were also involved in hitmaking—as songwriters, producers, or both—for Betty Wright (her Grammy-winning "Where Is the Love"), Jimmy "Bo" Horne, Fire (the female vocal group that backed the Sunshine Band on "That's the Way"), and Leif Garrett.

In the early '90s KC revamped his act, releasing a new album and making numerous television and concert appearances, both here and in Europe, where the group always had a strong following. He currently milks the disco revival circuit and is shopping around a new album entitled Yummy. Guitarist Jerome Smith was crushed to death in a construction accident.

Ernie K-Doe

Born Ernest Kador Jr., Feb. 22, 1936, New Orleans, LA; died July 5, 2001, New Orleans

1961—Mother-in-Law (Minit) 1972—Ernie K-Doe (Janus)
1990—Ain't No Shame in My Game (Syla) 1993—I'm Cocky But I'm Good 1999—The Best of Ernie K-Doe (Mardi Gras).

With his national chart-topper "Mother-in-Law," Ernie K-Doe was one of the young black singers whose jaunty beat and rollicking good humor popularized New Orleans R&B in the early '60s. Raised by an aunt in New Orleans, Kador was heavily influenced by gospel. By the time he was 15, he had become a member of the Golden Chain Jubilee Singers and the Zion Travellers. He made his first recording when he was in Chicago visiting his mother in 1953. It was never released. He went on to sing with the Moonglows and the Flamingos, and two years later Kador returned to New Orleans, where he made a name for himself with a vocal group called the Blue Diamonds. By then he had legally changed his name to K-Doe.

An outgoing showman, K-Doe made the Blue Diamonds a favorite act in the Crescent City. After recording with them for Savoy, he cut his first solo record, "Do Baby Do," for Specialty in 1956. He also recorded for Herald before "Hello My Lover," a single for Minit, became a regional hit in 1959. His next hit was "Mother-in-Law," a novelty song produced by Allen Toussaint. The record went to #1 on both the pop and R&B charts in 1961.

He followed "Mother-in-Law" with a handful of singles for Minit, the most successful of which were "Te-Ta-Te-Ta-Ta" (#53 pop, #21 R&B, 1961) and "I Cried My Last Tear" (#69, 1961). He later recorded for Duke, placing "Later for Tomorrow" at #37 on the R&B chart in 1967, and subsequently for Janus. Allen Toussaint produced a couple of K-Doe albums in the early '70s, though K-Doe soon left Toussaint. Into the '90s, he remained active on the New Orleans club circuit and appeared regularly at Delta region music festivals. He died of liver failure at age 65.

Paul Kelly

Born Paul Maurice Kelly, Jan. 13, 1955, Adelaide, Austral.
1987—Gossip (A&M) 1988—Under the Sun 1989—So Much Water So Close to Home 1991—Comedy (Doctor Dream) 1994—Wanted Man (Vanguard) 1995—Deeper Water 1996—Live at the Continental and the Esplanade 1998—Words and Music.

Paul Kelly has been known to (a relatively small) American audience since 1987, but in his native Australia, this literate songwriter (So Much Water So Close to Home takes its title from a Raymond Carver story) has been working since 1977.

Kelly started out as a folksinger, playing Adelaide coffee shops in the mid-'70s. He moved to Melbourne in 1976 and became part of that city's pub scene, playing solo and with the bands High Rise Bombers, the Dots (who released two albums), and, finally, the Coloured Girls. The last of these, taken from a lyric in Lou Reed's "Walk on the Wild Side," were signed by A&M for American distribution. For America the name was changed to Paul Kelly and the Messengers in deference to racial sensitivities; the group (Michael Armiger, bass; Michael Barclay, drums; Pedro Bull, keyboards; Steve Connolly, guitar; and Chris Coyne, sax) adopted that name in Australia by 1989. A&M released the Australian double LP, Gossip, in the States as a single album. It mixed writerly craftsmanship with punk passion and was met with critical raves but low sales. Even production by Scott Litt (R.E.M.), brought in for So Much Water, could not change matters, and A&M dropped Kelly in 1989. In 1991 he was signed by the independent Doctor Dream label, and released Comedy. He moved to folk specialist Vanguard Records for 1994's Wanted Man, which found him spanning continents, collaborating with Americans Dr. Dre, members of Was (Not Was) and Bonnie Raitt's backing band, and fellow Australian Nick Cave.

Again, the album was met with critical plaudits and commercial shrugs in America, a fate that met his next two albums.

R. Kelly

Born Robert Kelly, Jan. 8, 1969, Chicago, IL
1992—Born Into the 90's (Jive) 1993—12 Play 1995—R. Kelly 1998—R. 2000—TP-2.Com.

Raised on Chicago's South Side, R&B vocalist R. Kelly had years of show business experience behind him when his debut album, Born Into the 90's (#42 pop, #3 R&B, 1992), was released. A natural musician, he had busked on city streets and won a national talent contest with one of his early groups, MGM, before putting together the group Public Announcement to begin recording in 1991. The singer's often provocative lyrics and blend of hip-hop and funk rhythms, old-school soul, and polished production was instantly successful, laying the platform for a career as a prolific singles artist and an in-demand producer and songwriter for other artists, including Whitney Houston and Boyz II Men.

After the single "She's Got That Vibe" (#7 R&B, 1991), R. Kelly scored two consecutive chart-topping 1992 R&B hits, "Honey Love" and "Slow Dance (Hey Mr. DJ)." All the tunes got pop airplay, but "Dedicated" (#31 pop, #9 R&B, 1993) performed strongest outside the R&B market. The next album, 12 Play (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1993), was a major breakthrough, selling more than 5 million copies and firmly establishing Kelly's libidinous persona with the hits "Sex Me (Parts I & II)" (#20 pop, #8 R&B, 1993), "Bump n' Grind" (#1 pop and R&B, 1994), and "Your Body's Callin'" (#13 pop, #2 R&B, 1994). Dunning 1994 Kelly produced the successful debut album by Aaliyah, a teenage Detroit R&B singer. Kelly also wrote and coproduced "You Are Not Alone" for Michael Jackson, which was released in 1995 on HIStory.

Kelly's self-titled third album, released late in 1995, toned down the overt sexuality that had become his trademark, due in part to the influence of his friend, the gospel singer Kirk Franklin. The recording topped the pop and R&B charts, sold more than 7 million copies, and produced three #1 R&B singles: "You Remind Me of Something" (#4 pop, 1995), "Down Low (Nobody Has to Know)" (#4 pop, 1996), and "I Can't Sleep Baby (If I)" (#5 pop, 1996). "I Believe I Can Fly" (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1996), from the Space Jam soundtrack, won three Grammy Awards. Kelly's next hit, "Gotham City" (#9 pop and R&B, 1997), was also from a movie, Batman & Robin. In late 1998 the two-CD R. debuted at #2 (#1 R&B) and sold more than 6 million copies. Following the success of "I'm Your Angel" (#1 pop, #5 R&B, 1998), a duet with Celine Dion, Kelly put six straight singles on the R&B chart during 1999, including "When a Woman's Fed Up" (#22 pop, #5 R&B), "Did You Ever Think" (#27 pop, #8 R&B), and "If I Could Turn Back the Hands of Time" (#12 pop, #5 R&B). He was also featured on Sean Combs' "Satisfy You" (#2 pop, #1 R&B). The next year's TP-2.Com topped the charts, despite lukewarm reviews.

Chris Kenner

Born Dec. 25, 1929, Kenner, LA; died Jan. 25, 1976
1963—Land of a Thousand Dances (Atlantic) 1987—I Like It Like That (Collectables).

New Orleans vocalist Chris Kenner had a hit single in 1961 with "I Like It Like That." But in the record business—and especially the New Orleans music community in which he had been active since the '50s—he was best known for writing hits for Fats Domino, Wilson Pickett, and the Dave Clark Five.

Kenner started his career as a singer with a gospel quartet, the New Orleans Harmonizing Four, in the early '50s and made his first records for the Baton and Imperial labels in 1957. His "Sick and Tired" on Imperial was cut that year, but Fats Domino's cover made #22 in 1958. Kenner remained a local figure, recording for labels like Pontchartrain, until he teamed up with Allen Toussaint, producer for Mini Records' Instant label "I Like It Like That," their first collaboration, went to #2 on both the R&B and pop charts in 1961. The song returned to the Top 10 four years later in a cover version by the Dave Clark Five. Kenner's classic "Land of 1000 Dances"—which in his 1963 rendition made it to #77—was a #30 hit for Cannibal and the Headhunters in 1965 and a #6 hit for Wilson Pickett in 1966. Two other acts, the Three Midnites and Electric Indian, had modest hits with the song. Kenner's 1964 recording of "Something You Got" was a huge success in New Orleans.

Alcohol addiction plagued Kenner throughout his life, which hit a low with his 1968 conviction for statutory rape. He continued to record with Instant until 1969 and died seven years later of a heart attack.

Kentucky Colonels

Formed 1961, California
Clarence White (b. June 7, 1944, Lewiston, ME; d. July 14, 1973, Palmdale, CA), gtr., voc., Billy Ray Latham (b. Jan. 12, 1938), banjo; Roland White (b. Apr. 23, 1938, Madawaska, ME), mandolin, voc.; Roger Bush, bass; LeRoy Mack, Dobro; Bobby Sloane, fiddle.
1963—New Sounds of Bluegrass America (Briar) 1964—Appalachian Swing! (World Pacific) 1965—(—Sloane; —C. White) 1974—(+ C. White) Kentucky Colonels (Rounder) 1975—Livin' in the Past; (+ Scotty Stoneman, voc., fiddle) The Kentucky Colonels With Scotty Stoneman 1978—Kentucky Colonels 1966 1979—Kentucky Colonels 1965–1967 1980—Clarence White and the Kentucky Colonels 1984—On Stage 1988–1955–1967; The Kentucky Colonels Featuring Clarence White 1991—Long Journey Home (Vanguard).

A seminal bluegrass band, the Kentucky Colonels featured two brothers, the mandolinist Roland White and guitarist Clarence White, who later went on to fame in the last edition of the Byrds.

The Maine-born White brothers had been playing country music since 1954 as the Country Boys (with brother Eric on bass). In 1961 Roger Bush replaced Eric White, and the Kentucky Colonels were formed. The group established itself at folk festivals and throughout the national bluegrass circuit; they performed twice on Andy Griffith's TV show. The group's 1964 masterpiece, Appalachian Swing!, was reissued by Rounder in 1993.

In 1965 Clarence White left the group, turning his attention to the electric guitar and quickly becoming a top L.A. sessionman. White joined the Byrds in 1968, staying until the group split up in 1973. Roland White unsuccessfully attempted to revive the Kentucky Colonels after Clarence's departure; Roland later worked with Bill Monroe and Lester Flatt and, in the '70s, Country Gazette.

Following the Byrds' demise, the Kentucky Colonels regrouped with Clarence White for occasional shows. After one of these 1973 performances, in Southern California, Clarence White was killed by a drunk driver while loading his equipment into a van. Roland White has continued to perform on the folk and bluegrass circuit with various aggregations of players.

Doug Kershaw

Born Jan. 24, 1936, Teal Ridge, LA
 1969—The Cajun Way (Warner Bros.) 1970—Spanish Moss 1971—Doug Kershaw 1972—Swamp Grass; Devil's Elbow 1973—Douglas James Kershaw 1974—Mama Kershaw's Boy 1975—Alive and Pickin' 1976—The Ragin' Cajun 1977—Flip Flop Fly 1978—Louisiana Man 1979—Louisiana Cajun Country (Starflite) 1989—The Best of Doug Kershaw (Warner Bros.) 1999—Two Step Fever (Susie Q); Diggy Diggy Lo.

Doug Kershaw is America's best-known Cajun fiddler, though his traditional bayou sound has always been a bit too exotic to secure him a major country or rock audience. He was born on a tiny island in the Gulf of Mexico in a poor French-speaking community and didn't learn English until after he turned eight. His father was an alligator hunter who shot himself through the head when Doug was just seven. The family soon relocated to Lake Arthur, Louisiana, where Doug went to school and practiced on his older brother's fiddle, which he'd first fooled with at age five; he has since taught himself 28 other instruments.

Kershaw played his first date at age eight, at a local bar called the Bucket of Blood, with his mother accompanying him on guitar. He graduated from McNeese State University with a degree in mathematics, and then with two of his brothers he formed the Continental Playboys.

Kershaw was writing by the time he left the bayou at age 18 to try to record in Nashville. Billed as Rusty and Doug (Rusty was his 16-year-old brother), the two recorded for Hickory Records and became regulars on the Grand Ole Opry by 1957. After a stint in the army, Kershaw penned his best-known piece, "Louisiana Man," in 1960, which went to #10 on the country & western chart the next year and became a country standard. Also in 1961 the two hit the C&W list with "Diggy Diggy Lo" (#14), but the brothers had no followup, and they soon broke up.

It wasn't until later in the '60s that Kershaw got beyond his regional reputation. With the help of producer Buddy Killen, he got a contract with Warner Bros., which led to 1969's The Cajun Way. His appearance on The Johnny Cash Show that summer (on the same program as Bob Dylan) attracted national attention and brought him to the rock circuit. Kershaw was offered a cameo acting role in the "psychedelic western" movie Zachariah, and also appeared in Medicine Ball Caravan (a rock tour film), We Have Come for Your Daughters, and 1978's Days of Heaven. In 1999 he was performing 200 concerts a year and planning a chain of restaurants called Doug Kershaw's Cajun Kitchen. He released two new albums, one of which is in French, and was working on his autobiography.

Chaka Khan

Born Yvette Marie Stevens, Mar. 23, 1953, Great Lakes, IL
 1978—Chaka (Warner Bros.) 1980—Naughty 1981—What 'Cha Gonna Do for Me 1982—Echoes of an Era (Elektra-Musician); Chaka Khan (Warner Bros.) 1984—I Feel for You 1986—Destiny 1988—CK 1989—Life Is a Dance/The Remix Project 1992—The Woman I Am 1996—Epiphany: The Best of Chaka Khan (Reprise) 1998—Come 2 My House (NPG).
 With Rufus: 1973—Rufus (ABC) 1974—Rags to Rufus; Rufusized 1975—Rufus Featuring Chaka Khan 1977—Ask Rufus 1978—Street Player 1979—Numbers; Masterjam (MCA) 1981—Party 'Til You're Broke; Camouflage 1983—Live—Stompin' at the Savoy (Warner Bros.).

Chaka Khan, lead singer for Rufus and later a solo act, grew up on Chicago's South Side. At age 11 she formed her first band, the Crystalettes, who played the Chicago area. She was also very active at school and became president of the Black Students Union at age 16. At the time, she was also a member of the Afro-Arts Theater, which toured briefly with Mary Wells. A few years later, when Khan was working on the Black Panthers' breakfast program, she took her African name, Chaka, which means "fire."

In 1969 Khan quit school and worked with a band called Lyfe and then the Babysitters, doing endless sets of dance music. In 1972 she teamed up with Kevin Murphy (ex-American Breed) and Andre Fisher to form Rufus. The band went on to earn six gold or platinum LPs before Khan went solo in 1978. Her first album, Chaka, was produced by Arif Mardin and featured members of the Average White Band and Rufus guitarist Tony Maiden. It went gold and contained Ashford and Simpson's "I'm Every Woman" (#21, and a 1993 hit for Whitney Houston).

While under contract to do two more LPs with Rufus, with whom she traded barbs in the press, Khan continued to record solo LPs and tour with her own band. In 1979 she sang vocals on Ry Cooder's Bob Till You Drop, and in 1982 she recorded live with Rufus at New York's Savoy Theater. She also collaborated with Lenny White, Chick Corea, Freddie Hubbard, Joe Henderson, and Stanley Clarke on an album of jazz standards, Echoes of an Era

Khan's pop career was revived by I Feel for You (#14, 1984), which went platinum and yielded a #3 pop hit in the title track, an obscure song written by Prince, from his second album. Khan's version was produced by Quincy Jones, who mixed in rapping by Melle Mel of Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five, hip-hop turntable scratching, and harmonica flourishes by Stevie Wonder. The track won Khan a Grammy for Best Female R&B Vocal Performance. While she continued to score R&B hits, Khan's subsequent efforts fared disappointingly on the pop charts: Destiny reached #67, and CK only #125. After that album, Khan moved to Europe, splitting time between homes in England and West Germany. She sang backing vocals on Steve Winwood's hit "Higher Love." In 1990 she won a Grammy for her duet with Ray Charles, "I'll Be Good to You." In 1996 she released a best-of compilation, Epiphany (#84 pop, #22 R&B). That year "Missing You," from the soundtrack to the film Set It Off found Khan collaborating with R&B divas Brandy, Tamia, and Gladys Knight for a #25 pop and a #10 R&B single. Allied with Prince's NPG label, Khan returned in 1998, but Come 2 My House peaked only at #49 on the R&B chart.

Khan's sister Taka Boom is also a singer, with a recording career of her own. Khan's daughter Milini was a member of the group Pretty in Pink.

Kid Creole and the Coconuts/ Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band

Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band, formed 1974, New York, NY

August Darnell (b. Thomas August Darnell Browder, Aug. 12, 1950, Bronx, NY), voc., bass, gtr.; "Sugar-Coated" Andy Hernandez (a.k.a. Coati Mundi, b. Jan. 3, 1953, New York), vibraphone, voc.; Stony Browder Jr. (b. 1949, Bronx), gtr., kybds; Cory Daye (b. Apr. 25, 1952, Bronx), voc.; Mickey Sevilla (b. 1953, P.R.), drums.

1976—Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band (RCA) 1978—Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band Meets King Penett 1980—James Monroe H.S. Presents Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band Goes to Washington (Elektra).

Kid Creole and the Coconuts, formed 1980, New York, NY:

Original lineup: Darnell; Hernandez; Fonda Rae, voc.; Lourdes Cotto, voc.; Brooksie Wells, voc.; Franz Krauns, gtr.; Andrew Lloyd, perc.; Winston Grennan, drums; Peter Schott, kybds.

1980—Off the Coast of Me (Ze/Atlantis) 1981—Fresh Fruit in Foreign Places (Sire) 1982—Wise Guy 1983—

Doppelganger 1985—In Praise of Older Women and Other Crimes 1987—I, Too, Have Seen the Woods 1990—

(+ Daye, voc.) Private Waters in the Great Divide (Columbia) 1991—You Shoulda Told Me You Were . . . 1992—Kid Creole Redux (Sire) 1995—To Travel Sideways (Hot Productions); Kiss Me Before the Light Changes 1999—The Conquest of You (SPV, Ger.).

August Darnell built an entire career on an ahead-of-its-time mixture of different sounds he called "mulatto music," a combination of Latin, Caribbean, and disco rhythms with big band, swing, and pop show tunes.

The son of a Dominican father and French-Canadian mother, Darnell grew up in the Bronx, where in 1965 he formed the rock band the In-Laws with his brother, Stony Browder Jr. By 1976, they had formed Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band, enlisting Browder's girlfriend, Cory Daye, as vocalist. That year "Cherchez la Femme" became a hit in New York discos and eventually reached #31 R&B and #27 pop. Later albums had trouble finding success on increasingly segmented radio playlists; by 1980 the Savannah Band had all but collapsed.

Darnell had originally envisioned Kid Creole and the Coconuts as a side project while Browder put together a new Savannah Band. He had produced albums for Machine and James Chance, and signed a deal with Ze Records in 1980. Taking Hernandez along as co-composer and arranger, Darnell saw Kid Creole as representative of modern America, embodying all races and cultures. He also insisted that the band was small enough to tour, something the string- and horn-laden Savannah band could not do. Onstage, band members assumed fictitious identities, sported costumes, and were part of a choreographed and elaborately produced show.

Kid Creole and the Coconuts' debut album, Off the Coast of Me, and its followup, Fresh Fruit in Foreign Places (#180, 1981), told the story of Mimi, a tale conceived along the lines of a Latin/Caribbean Odyssey, with the music reflecting each stop of Mimi's travels. With former Savannah Band member Gichy Dan providing rapping narratives, the band performed the albums' material at New York's Public Theater.

Signs of fracture surfaced with Wise Guy (#145, 1982; a.k.a. Tropical Gangsters in Europe). Originally conceived as a Darnell solo project, it became a Kid Creole album at the request of Warner Bros. executives. The album gave the band its only U.S. chart single, "I'm a Wonderful Thing, Baby" (#44 R&B, 1982). Kid Creole albums became Darnell albums in all but name, with the band a loose amalgamation of musicians and singers.

More popular in England, where they had three Top 10 hits in 1982 ("I'm a Wonderful Thing, Baby" [#4], "Stool Pigeon" [#7], "Annie, I'm Not Your Daddy" [#2]), Darnell and his crew began to tour Europe extensively, appearing at the Montreux Jazz Festival and performing for the United Nations in Geneva. In the States, they were seen in the 1984 movie Against All Odds and provided the music for the Francis Ford Coppola segment of New York Stories (1989). Darnell also wrote the score for Eric Overmyer's off-Broadway musical In a Pig's Valise in 1987.

Darnell recorded three more Kid Creole albums for Sire before he moved the band to Columbia Records in 1990. Their Columbia debut, Private Waters in the Great Divide, featured "The Sex of It," a song written and produced by Prince.

Most of Kid Creole's activity (such as it was) in the '90s took place in Europe and especially Japan, where the band remained popular. From 1997 through 1999, Darnell starred in the retro musical Oh! What a Night in various locations around England, concluding with a London run in fall 1999; he has also begun to sing in Las Vegas. Meanwhile, Coati Mundi regularly appears in New York with his Rhumbaphonic Orchestra.

Kid Frost

Born Arturo Molina Jr., May 31, 1962, Los Angeles, CA
1990—Hispanic Causing Panic (Virgin) 1992—East Side Story.

Kid Frost uses hip-hop to raise Chicano consciousness, rapping in Spanish and English about life in East L.A. The son of a musically minded career military man, Frost was raised on bases in Guam and Germany. Exposed to Latin music at home, he began playing guitar, keyboards, and drums. When his family returned to East L.A., he discovered the rough urban life he documents in his songs.

Frost made a critical splash with his debut, Hispanic Causing Panic (#67 pop, #45 R&B, 1990), whose anthemic single "La Raza" (#42, 1990) heralded a new era of Latin rap. On the track "Come Together," Frost rapped about the importance of uniting rather than fighting. He practiced what he preached by founding Latin Alliance, a coalition of Hispanic rappers, in 1989. The 1991 Virgin album Latin Alliance featured Frost and Cuban-born Mellow Man Ace rapping with War on "Low Rider."

East Side Story (#73 pop, #54 R&B, 1992) paints blunt pictures of urban life. The single "No Sunshine," an update of the classic Bill Withers tune, was featured as the chilling backdrop to American Me, Edward James Olmos' film about prison life. The album includes cameos by Main Source and Boo-Yaa T.R.I.B.E. Frost follows up his messages by playing benefits for Rock the Vote and supporting antigang activities. In 1992 he rapped on "City of Fallen Angels," a record raising funds for relief efforts after the L.A. riots. He also appeared on a 1997 single by Domino. Excluding a few live appearances, he has remained fairly quiet through early 2001.

Kid 'n Play

Formed ca. 1988, E. Elmhurst, Queens, NY
Kid (b. Christopher Reid, Apr. 5, 1964, Bronx, NY), voc.; Play (b. Christopher Martin, July 10, 1962, Queens), voc.
1988—2 Hype (Select) 1990—Kid 'n Play's Funhouse
1991—Face the Nation.

Kid 'n Play, best known for their rap and dance performances in the House Party movies of the early '90s, represented hip-hop's wholesome, middle-class, television-friendly image in much the same way as D.J. Jazzy Jeff and the Fresh Prince. With his freckles and seven-inch-high vertical hairstyle, Kid, the son of a black social worker father and white teacher mother, was at one time one of the most recognizable faces in rap. His sidekick Play, child of an ex-con-turned-minister father and church secretary mother, sported a cleaner-cut look with his neatly trimmed mustache and wacky, self-designed clothes.

Formed in the same Queens neighborhood that spawned turntable king Eric B., of Eric B. and Rakim, as well as rap producer Hurby "Luv Bug" Azor, the duo initially called themselves Fresh Force. Azor, the producer of hitmakers Salt-n-Pepa, became their manager and signed them to his own Select label. Kid 'n Play's early singles provided an upbeat alternative to New York's harder-edged hip-hop. Their first hit, "Rollin' With Kid 'n Play" (#11 R&B, 1989), was fun and catchy. The duo followed up with several moderate hits including "2 Hype" (#46 R&B, 1989), "Fun House (The House We Dance In)" (#27 R&B, 1990), and "Ain't Gonna Hurt Nobody" (#51 pop, #26 R&B, 1991).

After 2 Hype with its expanded palette of go go and house styles, sold nearly a million copies, hitting the Top 10 on the R&B albums chart, the success threatened Kid 'n Play's street credibility; they were accused in some circles of selling out. The group's complete crossover into the pop mainstream came in 1990 when they appeared in Reginald and Warrington Hudlin's surprise hit movie House Party, with a performance that drew companions to Abbott and Costello. By 1994, Kid 'n Play had returned to the silver screen three times, in House Party 2 (1991), Class Act (1992), and House Party 3 (1994), and starred in their own Saturday morning cartoon series, Kid 'n Play.

The partnership soon dissolved, and by 1996, Martin (a.k.a. Play) had squandered his hip-hop fortune, divorced actress Shari Headly (Coming to America), and contemplated suicide. But he recovered from his depression to write, direct, and perform a play loosely based on those experiences, Radio Live: The House Party With a Purpose. While Martin has expressed hope in reuniting with his former partner, both worked mainly as actors in subsequent years: Reid (a.k.a. Kid) in a 1999 TV movie, Border Line; that same year, Martin appeared in a stage play, Rapp's City, codirected by Cheryl "Salt" James of Salt-n-Pepa.

Kid Rock

Born Robert James Ritchie, Jan. 15, 1971, Romeo, MI
1990—Grits Sandwiches for Breakfast (Jive) 1993—The Polyfuzer Method (Continuum) 1994—Fire It Up EP (Top Dog/Continuum) 1996—Early Mornin' Stoned Pimp (Top Dog) 1998—Devil Without a Cause (Top Dog/Lava/Atlantic) 2000—The History of Rock.

After spending a decade toiling in obscurity and releasing a handful of albums that went nowhere, Kid Rock—Detroit's self-proclaimed "American Bad Ass"—spiked the title track of his fourth album, 1998's Devil Without a Cause, with a bold declaration: "I'm going platinum!" With the white trash rap/rock anthem "Bawitdaba" and a star-making performance at Woodstock '99, he delivered on his promise. By the end of 2000, Devil Without a Cause was closing in on U.S. sales of 6 million.

Kid Rock was born Robert James Ritchie in Romeo, Michigan, a small, rural town north of the Detroit metro area, where his father owned a Lincoln-Mercury dealership. While growing up, Ritchie frequently clashed with his father, whom he blamed for being a workaholic, resulting in Ritchie's leaving home on multiple occasions as a teenager. He experimented with drugs and occasionally sold crack for spending money, but his primary focus was music. Though raised on his parent's classic rock & roll albums (Creedence Clearwater Revival, Bob Seger, etc.), Ritchie was just as taken with rap and hip-hop. He formed his own break-dance crew, the Furious Funkers, and refined his scratching skills. Before long, he was DJ'ing and rapping at clubs and parties throughout the Detroit area, slowly building a reputation that led to a deal with Jive Records.

His 1990 debut, Grits Sandwiches for Breakfast, netted Kid Rock an opening spot on an Ice Cube tour and sparked controversy when the FCC threatened to fine a college radio station $23,750 for playing the album's homage to oral sex, "Yo-Da-Lin in the Valley." The fine was eventually dropped, and so was Kid Rock; Grits Sandwiches failed to sell enough to hold Jive's interest. He then signed to the indie label Continuum, which released 1993's The Polyfuze Method and the 1994 heavy metal-leaning EP, Fire It Up. Both failed to reach an audience beyond his local Detroit following. Undaunted, Kid Rock borrowed $8,500 from his father to set up his own label, Top Dog, and self-release his third full-album, Early Mornin' Stoned Pimp, in 1996. The album sold enough for Kid Rock to attract the attention of Atlantic Records.

Devil Without a Cause (#4, 1999) was slow out of the gate but began a steady climb up the Billboard Top 200 as rock radio and MTV picked up on the album's hybrid rap/metal singles "I Am the Bulldog" (#31 Mainstream Rock) and "Baw-ldaba" (#10 Modern Rock). A third single, "Cowboy" (which threw dirty Southern rock and country elements into the mix), went to #5 on the Modern Rock chart and #82 on the Hot 100. In 1999—10 years after his debut album—Kid Rock was nominated for a Best New Artist Grammy (he lost to Christina Aguilera).

The History of Rock (#2, 2000) featured remixed and rerecorded versions of tracks culled from his pre-Atlantic career and a couple of new tracks. He also announced plans to issue various projects by members of his Twisted Brown Trucker Band on his Atlantic-distributed Top Dog label, beginning with Double Wide (2000) by his DJ Uncle Kracker. An album was also planned for his sidekick, Joe C. (born Joseph Calleja), but the diminutive 26-year-old rapper—who suffered from the digestive disorder celiac disease—died in his sleep on November 16, 2000.

Johnny Kidd and the Pirates

Formed 1959, England

Best known and longest-lived lineup: Johnny Kidd (b. Frederick Heath, Dec. 23, 1939, London, Eng.; d. Oct. 7, 1966, Eng.), voc.; Mick Green, gtr.; Johnny Spence, bass; Frank Farley, drums.

1978—Best of Johnny Kidd and the Pirates (EMI); Out of Their Skulls (Warner Bros.) 1979—Skull Wars.

Singer Johnny Kidd is best remembered as coauthor of the rock classic "Shakin' All Over," a tune covered by many bands, including the Guess Who and the Who. Although Kidd and the Pirates never gained a commercial foothold in the U.S., in his homeland Kidd is revered, and his band, the Pirates, is recognized as one of the first hard-rocking bands England produced before 1962, and a prototype for the heavy-metal guitar trios it predated by nearly a decade.

Kidd and the Pirates were primarily a singles and live concert act. Onstage, Kidd wore black leather and an eyepatch. Their first hit was Kidd's 1959 "Please Don't Touch," which hit #25 in the U.K. A year later "Shakin' All Over," epitomizing Kidd's intense, Gene Vincent-inspired hard-rockabilly approach, was a #1 hit. "You Got What It Takes" (#25) and "Restless" (#22) were other 1960 successes, but the band didn't hit again until 1963's "I'll Never Get Over You," which went to #4. "Hungry for Love," which got as high as #20 that year, was the band's last commercial gasp, as the Merseybeat explosion put it permanently out of the limelight.

In April 1966 Kidd, depressed over his declining fortunes, disbanded the group, only to return a month later with a new lineup that included Nick Simper (later of Deep Purple). That fall Kidd died in a car crash. In 1976 Mick Green (who'd played with Billy J. Kramer and the Dakotas, and the Cliff Bennett Band) re-formed the original Pirates with Spence and Farley. This revived lineup stayed together and recorded four U.K. albums before they broke up in 1982. By then Green was a well-established guitar hero.

Greg Kihn Band/Greg Kihn

Formed 1975, Berkeley, CA

Original lineup: Greg Kihn (b. 1952, Baltimore, MD), voc., gtr.; Robbie Dunbar, gtr.; Larry Lynch, drums, voc.; Steve Wright, bass, voc.

1976—Greg Kihn (Beserkley) (- Dunbar; + Dave Carpenter, gtr.) 1977—Greg Kihn Again 1978—Next of Kihn 1979—With the Naked Eye 1980—Glass House Rock (+ Gary Phillips, kybds.) 1981—Rockin'roll 1982—Kihn'ntued (- Carpenter; + Greg Douglass, gtr.) 1983—Kihn'spiracy 1984—Kihn'tagious (EMI/Beserkley) 1985—Citizen Kihn (EMI) 1986—Love and Rock and Roll 1989—Kihn'solidation: The Best of Greg Kihn 1994—Mutiny (Clean Cuts/Rounder) 1996—Horror Show 2000—All the Right Reasons (U.K.).

Greg Kihn's band—a power-pop outfit influenced by the Yardbirds, the Beau Brummels, and Bruce Springsteen, among others—began as one of the four original acts on the Beserkley label of Berkeley, California. Kihn first came to Berkeley from Baltimore in late 1974 and wound up contributing two solo songs to the 1975 anthology Beserkley Chartbusters, vol. 1. He also sang backup vocals on Jonathan Richman's "Roadrunner."

At the time, Kihn used Earth Quake as his support band, and his first album, in 1976, featured guitarist Robbie Dunbar from the group (Dunbar's brother Tommy was in the Rubinoos, another Beserkley act), plus bassist Steve Wright and Lynch. Kihn added Dave Caperender to replace Dunbar in early 1976. The band's second album was harder rocking than the first and included a reworking of Springsteen's "For You"; Springsteen later adapted Kihn's arrangement for his own live shows.

The band's next few albums began to sell (about 125,000 copies each), and it built a following in the Bay Area. But Kihn never developed more than a cult following until Roc-kihnroll's "The Breakup Song (They Don't Write 'Em)" reached #15 in 1981. Keyboardist Gary Phillips, who joined in time for that album, had previously worked in Earth Quake and Copperhead, with ex-Quicksilver guitarist John Cipollina.

"Jeopardy" and its popular video brought Kihn to the Top 5 in 1983 and Kihnspiracy to #15. Kihnstagious peaked at #121 the following year. His last hit was "Lucky" (#30) in 1985. While Kihn has not repeated that chart success, he has continued to release a number of albums under his own name. He writes and edits a fan newsletter called Rocklife and has written a number of novels, including The Real Reason English Rock Stars Love America, which he plans to serialize on the Internet. The critically acclaimed Mutiny featured Kihn in an acoustic setting performing songs by Elliott Murphy, the Temptations, and Bob Dylan, among others. Horror Show coincided with the 1996 publication of Kihn's gore novel of the same name. He has also worked as a morning radio personality in San Jose.

Killing Joke

Formed 1978, London, Eng.

Jaz Coleman (b. Feb. 26, 1960, Cheltenham, Eng.), voc., kybds.; Geordie (b. K. Walker, Dec. 18, 1958, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Eng.), gtr.; Youth (b. Martin Glover, Dec. 27, 1960, Africa), bass; Paul Ferguson (b. Mar. 31, 1958, High Wycombe, Eng.), drums. 1980—Killing Joke (EG) 1981—What's This For . . .! 1982—Revelations; Ha! Killing Joke Live EP (- Geordie; - Youth; + Paul Raven, bass) 1983—Fire Dances 1985—Night Time 1987—Brighter Than a Thousand Suns 1988—Outside the Gate (- Ferguson; + Geordie, gtr.; + Martin Atkins (b. Aug. 3, 1959, Coventry, Eng.), drums) 1990—Extremities, Dirt, & Various Repressed Emotions (Noise/RCA) 1994—(- Atkins; + Youth) Pandemonium (Big Life/Zoo) 1996—Democracy.

Known for its loud, energetic stage performances—with frontman Jaz Coleman wearing warpaint and shaking maniacally—England's Killing Joke initially tried to bridge the seemingly disparate styles of punk rock and disco with a big dance beat and noisy, abrasive guitars. In this regard the band was similar to Public Image Ltd., and in fact in its late-

'80s incarnation Killing Joke included ex-PiL drummer Martin Atkins. The band was also known for sometimes savage lyrics and often sardonic and controversial record-sleeve art and posters. Killing Joke was banned from performing a Glasgow, Scotland, gig after a 1980 concert poster depicted Pope Pius XII appearing to bless two columns of Nazi brownshirts.

Jaz Coleman, reportedly of Egyptian descent, first began working with ex-Matt Stagger Band drummer Paul Ferguson; Youth, who had played with the Rage at the seminal London punk club the Vortex, and guitarist Geordie soon joined. Their first single, "Wardance," found careening punkish energy and stomping metallic mass colliding over a martial rhythm. Legendary British radio DJ John Peel, who was so impressed by "Wardance," he said it had to be someone famous recording under an assumed name, gave it intense play. The walloping tribal rhythms of such early Killing Joke singles as "Psyche" and "Follow the Leader" landed the group on Billboard's disco chart.

Coleman's occult obsessions led the band to disintegrate after its third album, he fled to Iceland in anticipation of the apocalypse. Youth followed, then returned to England to work with Ferguson on a new band called Brilliant. But then Ferguson went to Iceland too, taking new bassist Paul Raven with him. The revamped Killing Joke returned to England and recorded more conventional albums, lacking the ominous power of its earlier work. Geordie rejoined for the Extremities album, a return to noisy avant-dance form. After a four-year hiatus, Killing Joke came back as a three-piece—Coleman, Geordie, and original bassist Youth—releasing the harshly metallic album Pandemonium. In fall 1994 the trio embarked on a world tour. Coleman also devoted his energies to classical music, becoming a composer-in-residence for the New Zealand Symphony Orchestra, while Youth found a parallel career remixing dance tracks. The band released Democracy in 1996, which took an expectedly bitter view of politics.

Albert King

Born Albert Nelson, Apr. 25, 1923, Indianola, MS; died Dec. 21, 1992, Memphis, TN

1962—The Big Blues (King) 1967—Born Under a Bad Sign (Stax) 1968—King of the Blues Guitar (Atlantic) 1972—I'll Play the Blues for You (Stax) 1975—Truckload of Lovin' (Utopia) 1977—The Pinch (Stax) 1979—Chronicle; New Orleans Heat (Tomato) 1982—Albert King Masterworks (Atlantic/Deluxe) 1986—The Best of Albert King (Stax/Fantasy) 1989—Let's Have a Natural Ball (Modern Blues) 1990—Wednesday Night in San Francisco (Live at the Fillmore) (Stax/Fantasy); Thursday Night in San Francisco (Live at the Fillmore) 1999—The King (Charly).

Albert King's mammoth physical presence—he weighed more than 250 pounds and stood 6-foot-4—was reflected in his harsh, imposing vocals and biting, influential blues style.

He bought his first guitar for $1.25 sometime around 1931

(he later played a left-handed Gibson Flying V), and his first inspiration was T-Bone Walker. For a long while he had to work nonmusic jobs to survive (including bulldozer operator and mechanic), but in the late '40s King settled in Osceola, Arkansas, and worked local gigs with the In the Groove Boys. He then migrated north, where he played drums for Jimmy Reed and also sang and played guitar on his own singles, including "Lonesome in My Bedroom" and "Bad Luck Blues" for the Parrot label in 1953.

King then moved to St. Louis and formed another band, but he didn't record again until 1959, when he signed to the local Bobbin label. He worked for several small companies in the early '60s, including King Records, which released his 1961 hit "Don't Throw Your Love on Me Too Strong" (#14 R&B). But King's real break came in 1966, when he signed to Stax. Using the label's famed Memphis sidemen, he cut some of his best-known works, including "Laundromat Blues" (1966) and his album Born Under a Bad Sign, made with Booker T. and the MG's in 1967. King began to break through to white audiences: He appeared at the first Fillmore East show on March 8, 1968, with Tim Buckley and Big Brother and the Holding Company, and also played at the hall's closing on June 27, 1971. (A live album, Live Wire/Blues Power, had been recorded at Fillmore West.)

In November 1969 King played with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, forming what was termed "an 87-piece blues band." Over the years his songs have been covered by Free, John Mayall, the Electric Flag, and others. He toured more than ever in the '70s, though he left Stax in 1974. King signed to Utopia in 1976 and to Tomato in 1978, charting some minor R&B singles. In 1990 he made a guest appearance on guitarist Gary Moore's Still Got the Blues, and he continued to perform until his death from a heart attack at age 69. At King's funeral, Joe Walsh—just one of many six-string disciples—paid tribute with a slide-guitar rendition of "Amazing Grace."

B.B. King

Born Riley B. King, Sep. 16, 1925, Itta Bena, MS
 1965—Live at the Regal (ABC) 1968—B.B. King Story (Blue Horizon) 1969—B.B. King Story, vol. 2; Live and Well (Bluesway); Completely Well 1970—Indianola Mississippi Seeds (ABC) 1971—Live in Cook County Jail; Live at the Regal 1973—The Best of B.B. King 1974—Together for the First Time . . . Live (with Bobby "Blue" Bland) (MCA) 1975—Lucille Talks Back (ABC) 1976—B.B. King Anthology; Together Again . . . Live (with Bobby "Blue" Bland) (MCA) 1977—Kingsize (ABC); Lucille 1978—Midnight Believer 1979—Take It Home 1981—There Must Be a Better World Somewhere (MCA) 1983—Blues 'n' Jazz 1985—Six Silver Strings 1986—The Best of B.B. King, vol. 1 (MCA) 1988—Do the Boogie! B.B. King's Early 50s Classics (Virgin) 1989—King of the Blues (MCA) 1990—Live at San Quentin 1991—There Is Always One More Time; Live at the Apollo (GRP) 1993—Blues Summit (MCA); My Sweet Little Angel (Virgin) 1995—Heart & Soul

1996—How Blue Can You Get?: Classic Live Performances 1964 to 1994 (MCA) 1997—Deuces Wild 1999—Let the Good Times Roll: The Music of Louis Jordan; Blues on the Bayou 2000—Riding With the King (with Eric Clapton) (Reprise).

B.B. King is universally recognized as the leading exponent of modern blues. Playing his trademark Gibson guitar, which he refers to affectionately as Lucille, King's voice-like string bends and left-hand vibrato have influenced numerous rock guitarists, including Eric Clapton, Mike Bloomfield, and David Gilmour of Pink Floyd, as well as modern blues players such as Buddy Guy. An eight-time Grammy winner, King has received virtually every music award, including the Grammy for Lifetime Achievement in 1987.

King picked cotton as a youth. In the '40s he played on the streets of Indianola before moving on to perform professionally in Memphis around 1949. As a young musician, he studied recordings by both blues and jazz guitarists, including T-Bone Walker, Charlie Christian, and Django Reinhardt.

In the early '50s King was a disc jockey on the Memphis black station WDIA, where he was dubbed the "Beale Street Blues Boy." Eventually, Blues Boy was shortened to B.B., and the nickname stuck. The radio show and performances in Memphis with friends Johnny Ace and Bobby "Blue" Bland built King's strong local reputation. One of his first recordings, "Three O'Clock Blues" (#1 R&B), for the RPM label, was a national success in 1951. During the '50s, King was a consistent record seller and concert attraction.

King's Live at the Regal is considered one of the definitive blues albums. The mid-'60s blues revival introduced him to white audiences, and by 1966 he was appearing regularly on rock concert circuits and receiving airplay on progressive rock radio. He continued to have hits on the soul chart ("Paying the Cost to Be the Boss," #10 R&B, 1968) and always maintained a solid black following. Live and Well was a notable album, featuring "Why I Sing the Blues" (#13 R&B, 1969) and King's only pop Top 20 single, "The Thrill Is Gone" (#15 pop, #3 R&B, 1970).

B.B. King

In the '70s King also recorded albums with longtime friend and onetime chauffeur Bobby Bland: the gold Together for the First Time . . . Live (1974) and Together Again . . . Live (1976). Stevie Wonder produced King's "To Know You Is to Love You." In 1982 King recorded a live album with the Crusaders.

King's tours have taken him to Russia (1979), South America (1980), and to dozens of prisons. In 1981 There Must Be a Better World Somewhere won a Grammy Award; he won another in 1990 for Live at San Quentin. He was inducted into the Blues Foundation Hall of Fame in 1984, and the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1987. In 1990 he received the Songwriters Hall of Fame Lifetime Achievement Award. In May 1991, he opened B.B. King's Blues Club in Memphis. A second one opened in New York City in 2000.

In 1989 he sang and played with U2 on "When Love Comes to Town," from their Rattle and Hum. The four-disc box set released that same year, King of the Blues, begins with King's career-starting single "Miss Martha King," originally released on Bullet in 1949. For Blues Summit, King was joined by such fellow bluesmen as John Lee Hooker, Lowell Fulson, and Robert Cray.

King once said he aspired to be an "ambassador of the blues," and by the '90s he seemed to have attained just that iconic status. In 1995 he received the Kennedy Center Honors. The next year saw the publication of his award-winning autobiography, Blues All Around Me (coauthored with David Ritz). In 2000 the double-platinum Riding With the King (with Eric Clapton) topped Billboard's Top Blues Albums chart, which it has remained on for more than a year as of this writing.

Ben E. King

Born Benjamin Earl Nelson, Sep. 28, 1938, Henderson, NC
 1961—Spanish Harlem (Atco) 1964—Ben E. King's Greatest Hits (Atlantic) 1975—Supernatural Thing; Ben E. King Story
 1976—I Had a Love 1977—Benny and Us (with the Average White Band) (Atco) 1978—Let Me Live in Your Life (Atlantic)
 1981—Street Tough 1987—The Ultimate Collection: Ben E. King
 1993—Anthology (Atlantic/Atco) 1999—Shades of Blue (Half Note).

Ben E. King's smooth tenor earned him a reputation as a romantic R&B singer for a career that has spanned more than 30 years. He hit a commercial peak as lead vocalist for the late-period Drifters and as a solo artist in the early '60s.

King sang in church choirs in North Carolina, and when his family moved to Harlem he formed his first group while attending James Fenimore Cooper Junior High. It was called the Four B's, as all members' names started with B. In the mid-'50s King tried out unsuccessfully for the Moonglows, but by 1956 he had joined a professional band, the Five Crowns, whose manager supposedly found the 18-year-old King through a chance meeting. King toured with the band, which included Bobby Hendricks, who left to become lead singer for the Drifters in early 1958.

The Five Crowns made 11 records between 1952 and 1958, none of them hits, but in 1959 the Drifters' manager, George Treadwell (who owned the name but was deserted by the original band), thought the Crowns were good enough to become his "new Drifters." The new group immediately hit it big with "There Goes My Baby" (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1959), sung and cowritten by King, and reputedly the first R&B hit to use strings. King sang lead on two other gold singles for the band (all produced by Jerry Leiber and Mike Stoller), including their biggest pop smash and only #1, "Save the Last Dance for Me" (1960). He also sang on the standard "This Magic Moment" (#16 pop, #4 R&B, 1960).

In mid-winter 1960 King went solo and had a #10 pop, #15 R&B hit in 1961 (supervised by Phil Spector) with "Spanish Harlem," a song Spector wrote with Jerry Leiber. King followed it with another Top 10 the same year, the stark self-penned "Stand by Me" (#4 pop, #10 R&B). In 1962 he hit with "Don't Play That Song" (#11 pop, #2 R&B). After that King fared better on the R&B chart than the pop chart, though his 1963 hit "I (Who Have Nothing)" (#29 pop, #16 R&B) became a top seller for Tom Jones in 1970. By the end of 1963, King's career had slowed; though he often played in Europe, he was largely out of the spotlight until 1975, when he re-signed with his old label, Atlantic, and had an immediate hit with "Supernatural Thing, Part 1" (#5). In 1977 he collaborated with longtime admirers the Average White Band on Benny and Us (with two R&B Top 30 hits, "Get It Up" and "A Star in the Ghetto"), while continuing with several solo hits, including 1980's "Music Trance" (#29 R&B).

King's career was revived in 1986 when "Stand by Me" became a Top 10 hit a second time after it was featured in the Rob Reiner film of the same name, costarring teenage actor River Phoenix. Another song of King's—a remake of the Monotones' "Book of Love," recorded with Bo Diddley and Doug Lazy—made it into a movie, 1991's The Book of Love. He continues to tour and record.

Carole King

Born Carole Klein, Feb. 9, 1942, Brooklyn, NY
 1968—Now That Everything's Been Said (with the City) (Ode)
 1970—Carole King: Writer 1971—Tapestry; Music 1972—Rhymes and Reasons 1973—Fantasy 1974—Wrap Around Joy 1975—Really Rosie 1976—Thoroughbred 1977—Simple Things (Capitol) 1978—Welcome Home (Avatar); Her Greatest Hits (Ode) 1979—Touch the Sky (Capitol) 1980—Pearls: Songs of Goffin and King 1982—One to One (Atlantic) 1983—Speeding Time 1989—City Streets (Capitol) 1993—Colour of Your Dreams (King's X/Rhythm Safari) 1994—Carole

King, In Concert; Time Gone By 1996—The Carnegie Hall Concert: June 18, 1971 (Sony/Legacy).

Singer/songwriter Carole King has had two outstanding careers. Throughout the '60s she was one of pop's most prolific songwriters, writing the music to songs like the Shirelles' "Will You Love Me Tomorrow?" and the Drifters' "Up on the Roof" with most lyrics by her first husband, Gerry Goffin. Then in 1971 her multimillion-selling Tapestry helped popularize the '70s pop-rock singer/songwriter genre.

King began playing piano at age four; in high school she started her first band, the Co-sines. While attending Queens College in 1958 she met Gerry Goffin, and the two became cowriters. King had written some early singles like "Goin' Wild" and "Baby Sittin'," but they went nowhere. Neil Sedaka had a hit dedicated to her in October 1959 called "Oh! Carol," but her reply song, "Oh! Neil," stilled.

In 1961 she and Goffin cowrote "Will You Love Me Tomorrow?," a #1 hit for the Shirelles, and the song has been covered countless times since. The two young writers, like Sedaka, Cynthia Weil, and Barry Mann, wrote their songs for Don Kirshner and Al Nevins' Aldon Music in Brill Building cubicles. They wrote over 100 hits in a range of rock styles, including "Wasn't Born to Follow" (the Byrds), "Chains" (the Cookies), "Don't Bnng Me Down" (the Animals), and "I'm Into Something Good" (Herman's Hermits). In 1962 the King-Goffin team wrote, arranged, conducted, and produced the song "The Loco-Motion" for their 17-year-old babysitter, Little Eva (Boyd; see entry), and it went #1 that summer. That year King made a brief foray into solo recording, but her only hit single at the time was "It Might as Well Rain Until September" (#22).

In the mid-'60s Goffin, King, and columnist Al Aronowitz tried to launch their own label, Tomorrow Records. It failed, but one band they produced, the Myddle Class, included bass player Charles Larkey, who became King's second husband after she divorced Goffin and moved to L.A. with her two children, Sherry and Louise (who launched a recording career of her own at age 19 in 1979 with Kid Blue).

In 1968 King formed a group called the City, with Larkey and guitarist Danny Kortchmar, who had both previously played on three Fugs albums. They also knew each other from the New York club circuit, where the Myddle Class had played with Kortchmar's band the Flying Machine, which also included vocalist James Taylor. The City never toured because of King's stage fright, though they did make one unsuccessful LP on Ode Records, Now That Everything's Been Said. The LP later yielded hits for Blood, Sweat and Tears ("Hi-De-Ho") and James Taylor ("You've Got a Friend," which also appeared on King's Tapestry). Taylor encouraged King to write her own lyrics and finally record solo again, resulting in 1970's Writer, with a backup band that included Kortchmar and others (who later recorded two Atlantic albums under the name Jo Mama). King toured with Jo Mama and Taylor, and they all worked on the 1971 critical and commercial windfall, Tapestry, which had two hit singles ("It's Too Late," #1, 1971; "So Far Away," #14, 1971), won four Grammys, went #1, and stayed on the chart for nearly six years. It remains a solid catalogue performer and has now sold 22 million copies.

King's early-'70s LPs went gold and Top 10 (Music and Wrap Around Joy both hit #1), and in late 1974 she had a #2 hit with "Jazzman" from Wrap Around Joy. In 1975 King wrote the music for a children's program, Really Rosie, and began to write with Goffin again. She switched to Capitol Records in late 1976, and her first album for the new label, Simple Things (#17, 1977), went gold. She began touring with a band called Navarro, introduced to her by Dan Fogelberg, and married her collaborator at the time, Rick Evers, who died of a heroin overdose in 1978.

By then her albums were selling modestly, though she did better with her 1990 Pearls LP (#44), which featured King's versions of some of her best-known '60s collaborations with Goffin, such as "One Fine Day" (#12, 1980) and "Hey Girl." King hasn't had a Top 40 hit since, and she has considerably slowed down her recording and touring schedules. In 1989 Eric Clapton guested on the title single from City Streets. Her 1993 album Colour of Your Dreams was released on her own King's X label and included Guns n' Roses guitarist Slash on the track "Hold Out for Love." For Carole King: In Concert, the 1990 Rock and Roll Hall of Fame inductee was supported by an eight-piece band that included her daughter Sherry Goffin on background vocals. In 1994 she made her Broadway acting debut when she took over Petula Clark's role in Bloodbrothers.

Involved in environmental issues since the '80s, the songwriter was honored at the 1999 star-studded event Carole King: Making Music With Friends—A Concert for Our Children, Our Health, and Our Planet. The following year, she was a guest on fellow Brill Building songwriter Barry Mann's album Soul & Inspiration.

King's music remains an essential part of America's pop consciousness. In 1993 the off-Broadway revue Tapestry: The Music of Carole King evoked the songwriter's biggest hits. A tribute album, 1995's Tapestry Revisited, featured singers such as Celine Dion, Faith Hill, Rod Stewart, and Richard Marx performing songs from King's enduring 1971 record.

Earl King

Born Earl Silas Johnson, Feb. 7, 1934, New Orleans, LA
1978—New Orleans Rock 'n' Roll (Sonnet); Earl King (Vivid)
1986—Glazed (with Roomful of Blues) (Black Top) 1990—Sexual Telepathy 1994—Hard River to Cross 1997—New Orleans Street Talkin' 2001—King of New Orleans (Uni/Fuel 2000).

Along with Robert Parker, Irma Thomas, and Lee Dorsey, Earl King is one of New Orleans' major R&B singers. King's father was a blues pianist who died when King was a child. Young Earl King started his career as a gospel singer around 1950 and learned to play guitar and sing the blues a few years later. He sang with pianist Huey "Piano" Smith until 1953, when he recorded his first solo work for Savoy under the name Earl Johnson. In 1954 King was signed by Art Rupe to Specialty Records and had a regional hit that year with "A Mother's Love."

His touring group was then called Earl King and the Kings (they also recorded separately for Specialty), but in 1955 King signed with Johnny Vincent's new Ace label. He immediately scored his biggest hit, "Those Lonely, Lonely Nights." It sold 250,000 copies without ever entering the national chart. The song, a two-chord slow ballad, was a major influence on all future Louisiana swamp rock, paving the way for people like Dr. John, who later covered King's "Let's Make a Better World" on Destively Bonnaroo. Later in 1955 "Don't Take It So Hard" went to #13 R&B.

King had some local hits in 1958, like "Well-O Well-O Well-O Baby." He worked for Rex Records in 1959 with then staff sessionman Mac Rebennack (later known as Dr. John). That year he also sold 80,000 copies of "Everybody Has to Cry Sometime" under the pseudonym Handsome Earl. His first release for Imperial in 1960 was the savage "Come On," later covered by Jimi Hendrix, and his biggest hit for the label was a #17 R&B hit in 1962, "Always a First Time." King's witty "Trick Bag" (an archetypal piece of New Orleans funk later covered by Robert Palmer) was later redone by the Meters in 1976 with King sitting in. In the mid-'60s he worked as a session musician for Motown, where he recorded several unreleased sides. He then returned to New Orleans, where he played with Professor Longhair, cutting one of the Professor's best-known songs, "Big Chief." King recorded for many obscure labels in the '60s while also continuing on the New Orleans scene as a songwriter (for the Dixie Cups, Lee Dorsey, the Meters, Fats Domino, and Professor Longhair, among others) and producer.

During the '70s and early '80s he performed almost every year at the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival. In 1986 Glazed was nominated for the Best Contemporary Blues Album Grammy.

Evelyn "Champagne" King

Born June 29, 1960, Bronx, NY

1977—Smooth Talk (RCA) 1979—Music Box 1980—Call on Me 1981—I'm in Love 1982—Get Loose 1983—Face to Face 1985—Long Time Coming 1988—Flirt (EMI Manhattan) 1989—Girl Next Door (EMI America) 1993—Love Come Down—The Best of Evelyn "Champagne" King 1995—I'll Keep a Light On (Expansion, U.K.).

Pop-soul singer Evelyn "Champagne" King was 17 when she hit it big with the single "Shame" (#9 pop, #7 R&B), a sexy song that was part of disco's domination of the charts in 1978. The publicity fable goes that King, who grew up in Philadelphia, was working nights as a cleaning lady at Philadelphia International Studios when staff producer Theodore Life overheard her quietly crooning Sam Cooke's "A Change Is Gonna Come." He immediately offered to produce her, resulting in 1977's Smooth Talk (#14, 1978), which included "Shame" and "I Don't Know If It's Right" (#23 pop, #7 R&B). The album and both singles went gold, as did her next album, Music Box. In 1981 King had her first #1 R&B hit with "I'm in Love" (#40 pop), followed by a second R&B #1, "Love Come Down" (#17 pop). Her other R&B hit singles include "Betcha She Don't Love You" (#2 R&B, 1982), "Shake Down" (#12 R&B, 1984), "Your Personal Touch" (#9 R&B, 1985), "Flirt" (#3 R&B, 1988), "Kisses Don't Lie" (#17 R&B, 1988), and "Hold On to What You've Got" (#8 R&B, 1988). She continues to perform on the international disco revival and soul circuits.

Freddie King

Born Freddie Christian, Sep. 3, 1934, Gilmer, TX; died Dec. 28, 1976, Dallas, TX

1970—My Feeling for the Blues (Cotillion) 1971—Gettin' Ready . . . (Shelter) 1972—Texas Cannonball (A&M) 1973—Woman Across the River (Shelter) 1974—Burglar (RSO) 1975—The Best of Freddie King (Shelter); Larger Than Life (RSO) 1975—Best of Freddie King (Island) 1977—Original Hits (Starday/King); (1934–1976) (RSO) 1989—Just Pickin' (Modern Blues).

Freddie King, a pioneering modern blues guitarist, was a major influence on rock guitarists, especially in the British blues boom of the '60s. Growing up in Texas, King heard the recordings of Arthur Crudup, Big Bill Broonzy, Blind Lemon Jefferson, and Lightnin' Hopkins, but he later described his guitar style as a cross between Muddy Waters, T-Bone Walker, and B.B. King (no relation); a mixture of country and urban blues. When he was 16, his family moved to Chicago, where he would sneak into blues clubs to jam with Muddy Waters' band. He also played with Memphis Slim, LaVern Baker, Willie Dixon, and others before recording his first solo record in 1956.

In 1960 King joined the Federal label and had several big R&B hits, including "Hideaway" and "Have You Ever Loved a Woman?" (later covered on Layla by Eric Clapton, a long-time admirer). Federal released 77 songs by King, including 30 instrumentals, in the next six years. But by 1966 King was without a contract, living as a semi-obscure legend in Texas.

Meanwhile, his songs were being covered in England by bands like Chicken Shack and John Mayall, and he eventually took advantage of the blues revival, playing some shows in England. That led to a 1968 contract with Cotillion and two albums produced by King Curtis. He then signed to Leon Russell's Shelter label, released three albums, and did enough full-time concert-hall touring to earn him a more mainstream white rock audience—the largest following of his career. In 1974 King switched to RSO and cut Burglar in England with help from Eric Clapton; he followed it up with Larger Than Life in 1975. The next year, three days after a Christmas-night show in Dallas, King died of heart failure, a bloodclot, and internal bleeding from ulcers.

King Crimson

Formed 1969, England

Robert Fripp (b. May 16, 1946, Wimbourne, Eng.), gtr., Mellotron; Greg Lake (b. Nov. 10, 1948, Bournemouth, Eng.), bass, voc.; Ian McDonald (b. June 25, 1946, London, Eng.), kybds., sax, flute, voc.; Michael Giles (b. 1942, Bournemouth), drums; Pete Sinfield (b. Eng.), lyrics, light show.

1969—In the Court of the Crimson King (Atlantic) (– McDonald; – Giles; – Lake) 1970—In the Wake of Poseidon (+ Gordon Haskell [b. Eng.], voc., bass; + Andy McCulloch [b. Eng.], drums; + Mel Collins [b. Eng.], sax, flute, Mellotron) 1971—Lizard (– Haskell; – McCulloch; + Boz Burrell [b. Raymond Burrell, ca. 1946, Lincoln, Eng.], bass, voc.; + Ian Wallace [b. Sep. 29, 1946, Bury, Eng.], drums; – Sinfield) 1972—Islands; Earthbound (Editions U.K., U.K.) (– Burrell; – Wallace; – Collins; + Bill Bruford [b. May 17, 1949, London], drums; + Jamie Muir [b. Eng.], perc.; + John Wetton [b. July 12, 1949, Derby, Eng.], bass, voc.; + David Cross [b. 1948, Plymouth, Eng.], violin, kybds.; Robert Palmer-Jones [b. Eng.], lyrics) 1973—Larks' Tongues in Aspic (Atlantic) (– Muir) 1974—Starless and Bible Black; Red (– Cross; group disbands) 1975—USA 1981—(group re-forms: Fripp; Bruford; + Adrian Belew [b. Robert Steven Belew, Dec. 23, 1949, Covington, KY], gtr., voc.; + Tony Levin [b. Anthony Levin, June 6, 1946, Boston, MA], bass, Chapman Stick) Discipline (Warner Bros.) 1982—Beat 1984—Three of a Perfect Pair 1991—Frame by Frame (EG/Caroline); The Essential King Crimson (Caroline) 1992—The Great Deceiver: Live 1973–74 1993—The Concise King Crimson (Caroline); The Abbreviated King Crimson 1994—(+ Pat Mastelotto, drums; + Trey Gunn, gtr., Chapman Stick) VROOOM EP (Discipline) 1995—Thrak (Virgin); B'Boom (Discipline) 1996—THRakATaK; Schizoid Man EP (Alex) 1997—Epitaph (Discipline) 1998—The Night Watch; Absent Lovers: Live in Montreal 1984 1999—Cirkus (Caroline); The Deception of the Thrush (Discipline); The ProjeKcts (– Bruford; – Levin) 2000—The ConstruKction of Light (Virgin).

The eerie portentous sound of early King Crimson set the tone for British art rock. But by the time the group's Mellotron-heavy sound and psychedelic lyrics had turned into lucrative clichés, leader Robert Fripp had long since shifted the group's style toward music that was far more eccentric, complex, and dissonant.

The original Crimson's roots went back to 1967, when the Bournemouth trio Giles, Giles and Fripp began making whimsical pop, which resulted in one British-only album in 1968 called The Cheerful Insanity of Giles, Giles and Fripp. (For a short time Judy Dyble, early Fairport Convention vocalist, also sang with them.) The band broke up in November 1968, and while bassist Peter Giles went on to become a solicitor's clerk, Fripp and drummer Mike Giles formed Crimson with ex-Gods bassist Greg Lake and their old associate Ian McDonald, who introduced them to lyricist Pete Sinfield. Sinfield also worked the band's psychedelic light show.

Crimson made its debut at the London Speakeasy on April 9, 1969, and on July 5 the group played to 650,000 people at the Rolling Stones' free Hyde Park concert. In October

In the Court of the Crimson King, with music by McDonald and Fripp, was released, and endorsed by Pete Townshend as "an uncanny masterpiece." But the group soon began an endless series of personnel changes, with only Fripp remaining through it all. On the band's debut U.S. tour, Giles and McDonald left, the latter in a band-control squabble. The two recorded a Crimson sound-alike album, McDonald and Giles, in 1970. During the sessions for Crimson's second album, Greg Lake also left to form Emerson, Lake and Palmer. He'd met Emerson, then with the Nice, during Crimson's disastrous U.S. tour. Crimson might have ended there if Fripp had accepted offers to replace Pete Banks in Yes or to join Aynsley Dunbar in Blue Whale. Instead he brought in Gordon Haskell to complete the vocals on the second album (Elton John had also tried out), got old friend Pete Giles for a brief stint on bass, persuaded brother Mike to do "guest drumming," and pulled in some other friends, including future member Mel Collins, to finish it up. Fripp's guitar style was already distinctive; he used classical-guitar technique to create angular, sustained, screaming phrases on his Gibson, and he usually performed seated.

In late 1970 Fripp formed a new Crimson with Collins, Haskell, Sinfield, and drummer Andrew McCulloch (later of Greenslade). Jon Anderson of Yes did a guest vocal on the resulting Lizard. Two days after the album was finished, the band fell apart. One vocalist who tried out for the next Crimson was Roxy Music's Bryan Ferry, but Fripp opted for singer Boz Burrell, whom he taught to play bass. The band rounded out by Collins and drummer Ian Wallace, recorded the subdued Islands in 1971 and, like the first group, fell apart on its U.S. tour. (Burrell later joined Bad Company.) Even the long-standing Pete Sinfield left this time; he recorded a solo LP and produced the debut Roxy Music album. The Islands-period band did manage to release a poorly recorded live document of its U.S. tour, Earthbound, released in the U.K. only.

Fripp emerged in 1972 with his most forward-looking and brashest Crimson, including Bill Bruford (who left the far more successful Yes to join), John Wetton (of Family, new lyricist Robert Palmer-Jones, David Cross, and Jamie Muir (who left for a Buddhist monastery after Larks' Tongues in Aspic). This lineup specialized in brainy, Gothic metal and jagged, dissonant free improvisation, and drew critical comparisons to Captain Beefheart's Magic Band and, thanks to Cross' electric violin, the Mahavishnu Orchestra. Cross also left after the followup, Starless and Bible Black, but he did play with the band until its last tour, culminating in a final show in New York's Central Park on July 1, 1974. A live LP from that date and Red, recorded with Cross as a "guest" member in late summer 1974, were both released after the disbanding. Ian McDonald was about to rejoin the band and did play on Red (he joined Foreigner in 1976).

But as artistically successful as Red was, Fripp came to hate the entire art-rock movement (which was at its commercial peak) along with the mechanics of the music business itself (which he termed "vamping"), and so he officially ended the band on September 28. On October 18, 1974, Fripp stated, "King Crimson is completely over. For ever and ever."

Fripp decided to work as a "small, mobile, intelligent, self-sufficient unit," in contrast to the overgrown "dinosaur" bands he'd come to loathe. Using the echo-delay tape system devised by Brian Eno for 1973's No Pussyfooting, which he dubbed "Frippteronic," Fripp played solo concerts, slowly building minimalist chords with the notes on tape. He produced and played on Daryl Hall's first solo album, Sacred Songs, and two albums by the Roches, and added guitar lines to albums by Eno, David Bowie, Peter Gabriel, Talking Heads, and Blondie. In 1980 he returned to group performing with the short-lived League of Gentlemen (the name of one of Fripp's earliest amateur bands), which also featured former XTC keyboardist Barry Andrews, and which added a danceable rock beat to Fripp's intricate, repeating guitar lines; League bassist Sara Lee went on to join Gang of Four.

In 1981 Fripp revived King Crimson as a quartet that he had been planning to call Discipline, including session bassist Tony Levin (who had toured with Peter Gabriel), guitarist Adrian Belew (ex-Zappa, ex-Bowie, ex-Talking Heads), and Bruford. The new band drew on minimalism, African and Far Eastern polyrhythms, and the angularity of the final Crimson of the '70s. The group toured the U.S. and Europe to wide acclaim, but disbanded after recording its third album, Three of a Perfect Pair.

In 1994 Fripp—after recording and touring the previous year with ex-Japan vocalist David Sylvian—announced yet another re-formation of King Crimson. Calling the new lineup a double trio, he enlisted two drummers, Bruford and David Sylvian's drummer Pat Mastelotto. Also in the band: Belew, Levin, and Chapman Stick (a 12-string instrument combining elements of bass and guitar) player Trey Gunn (who'd been a student in one of Fripp's "Guitar Craft" seminars, and had played on the 1991 album Kneeling at the Shrine by Fripp and his wife Toyah Wilcox's band, Sunday All Over the World). This lineup debuted with the EP, VROOOM, on Fripp's own independent Discipline Records.

In 1997, after extensive touring for Thrak, the band "fractalized" (as Fripp put it) into four subgroups called "Projects," which were recorded on Deception of the Thrush and The ProjeKcts; the techno-groove-jam Projekt 2 (Frapp, Gunn, and Belew on electronic drums only) also released its own Space Groove album on Discipline. Partly to counter bootleggers, Fripp released a steady stream of new and old Crimson live recordings: Epitaph featured the original 1969 lineup, Night Watch the 1972-74 edition, and Cirkus collected live recordings spanning the band's entire career (he also released "Collectors Club" concert recordings of lineups throughout Crimson history, by mail-order only, through the Discipline Web site). With Bruford and Levin sitting out (see Bruford entry), Cnmsn returned as a quartet on ConstruKction of Light.

King Curtis

Born Curtis Ousley, Feb. 7, 1934, Fort Worth, TX, died Aug. 13, 1971, New York, NY

1967—Live at Small's Paradise (Atco) 1968—Best of King Curtis; Blues at Montreux (Atlantic) 1971—Live at Fillmore West (Atco) 1988—Soul Twist (Collectables) 1989—The Best of King Curtis 1994—Istant Soul: The Legendary King Curtis (Razor & Tie).

Saxophonist King Curtis, a definitive R&B session soloist and bandleader (of the Kingpins), was a favorite of pop, rock, soul, and jazz performers, especially after his famous tenor sax solo on the Coasters' 1957 hit "Yakety-Yak."

An adopted child, Curtis was first influenced by fellow Southwesterners T-Bone Walker and Buster Smith, plus such jazz saxophonists as Lester Young and Louis Jordan. He got his first sax at age 12, played in several high school bands, and turned down several college scholarships to tour with Lionel Hampton's band.

Curtis arrived in New York in 1952 and was discovered by a record company scout who found him session work. He went on to back more than 125 performers, including the Shirelles, Wilson Pickett, Sam and Dave, Eric Clapton, the Allman Brothers, and Delaney and Bonnie. In addition, Curtis made his own records, beginning in the late '50s: "Soul Twist," on the small Enjoy label, topped the R&B chart (#17 pop, 1962). He later signed with Capitol and then in 1965 with Atco. His first release for that label was an instrumental version of "Spanish Harlem."

Curtis played on several of Aretha Franklin's records, including "Bridge Over Troubled Water," and was appointed her musical director just before he died. (He assembled the band that graced a number of her most famous records: Richard Tee, Cornell Dupree, Jerry Jemmott, and Bernard Purdie.) The saxophonist also produced or coproduced albums by Roberta Flack, Delaney and Bonnie, Donny Hathaway, Freddie King, and Sam Moore of Sam and Dave. One of his last recording sessions was for John Lennon's Imagine. He was stabbed to death outside his home on New York's West 86th Street after he asked two men who were shooting drugs to move off his steps. In 2000 Curtis was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

King Floyd

Born Feb. 13, 1945, New Orleans, LA
1971—King Floyd (Cotillion) 1975—Well Done (Chimneyville)
1977—Body English 1994—Choice Cuts (Malaco) 2000—Old Skool Funk.

Soul-funk singer King Floyd began his career at age 12 in New Orleans. He began recording for the local Uptown label in 1964, and two years later he moved to Pulsar, where he enjoyed further regional success. By the time he released his biggest hit, the self-penned slow and sassy (with reggae overtones) "Groove Me" (#6, 1971), he was working under the guidance of another New Orleans veteran, Wardell Quezergue, at the Malaco studios in Jackson, Mississippi. He made other isolated appearances on the pop chart in the early '70s with songs like "Baby Let Me Kiss You" (#29, 1971) and "Woman Don't Go Astray" (#53, 1972). Floyd remains active in New Orleans and does session work.

The Kingsmen

Formed 1958, Portland, OR

Lynn Easton, voc., sax; Jack Ely, gtr., voc.; Mike Mitchell, gtr.; Bob Nordby, gtr., bass.

1962—(+ Don Gallucci, organ; + Gary Abbott, drums)

1963—(- Ely; - Nordby; - Gallucci; - Abbot; + Norm Sundholm, bass, voc.; + Dick Peterson, drums, voc.; + Barry Curtis, organ, voc.; numerous personnel changes follow) The Kingsmen in Person (Wand) 1964—The Kingsmen, vol. 2 1965—The Kingsmen, vol. 3; The Kingsmen on Campus 1966—15 Great Hits 1985—The Best of the Kingsmen (Rhino).

Well before the '90s grunge onslaught, the Northwest was a particularly fertile breeding ground for raunchy rock & roll in the early '60s. Paul Revere and the Raiders became the area's most successful group, but the most famous song—indeed one of the best known and most notorious songs in the history of rock & roll—was "Louie Louie." Though the Raiders cut their version in 1963, it was the Kingsmen who had the hit.

"Louie Louie," first recorded by its composer, Richard Berry, in 1956, is marked by a three-chord progression simple enough to endear it to every last fratband. The Kingsmen's version (#2, 1963), recorded for $50, stood out thanks to co-founder Jack Ely, who garbled his words to the extent that no one knew exactly what he was singing. By educated guesses it was obscene enough to be banned by many radio stations and to spark an FCC investigation. The Kingsmen, however, always maintained that they had said nothing lewd. The story behind the song was chronicled in a 1993 book, Louie Louie, by Dave Marsh.

Two more hits followed—"Money" (#16, 1964) and "The Jolly Green Giant" (#4, 1965)—before the band first went on hiatus in 1967. Guitarist Mike Mitchell fronted the Kingsmen when they signed a contract with Capitol in 1973, which ultimately went nowhere. With Dick Peterson and Barry Curtis in the group since 1963, the quintet has continued to perform into 2001. On November 9, 1998, 10 of the band's past and present members won a five-year court battle over 30 years of back royalties for "Louie Louie," when the Supreme Court declined to hear an appeal of an earlier 1995 decision granting the Kingsmen back royalties.

Kingston Trio

Formed 1957, San Francisco, CA

Bob Shane (b. Feb. 1, 1934, Hilo, HI), various string instruments, voc.; Nick Reynolds (b. July 27, 1933, San Diego, CA), various string instruments, voc.; Dave Guard (b. Nov. 19, 1934, Honolulu, HI; d. Mar. 22, 1991, Rollinsford, NH), various string instruments, voc.

1958—The Kingston Trio (Capitol) 1959—From the Hungry i;

The Kingston Trio at Large; Here We Go Again! 1960—Sold Out; String Along; Stereo Concert 1961—Make Way; Goin' Places; Close-up (- Guard; + John Stewart [b. Sep. 5, 1939, San Diego], gtr., voc.) 1962—College Concert; Best of the Kingston Trio; Something Special; New Frontier 1963—The Kingston Trio #16; Sunny Side! 1964—Time to Think; Back in Town 1965—Best of the Kingston Trio, vol. 2 1967—(- Stewart; - Reynolds) 1973—(as the New Kingston Trio: Shane, + Roger Gamble [d. 1985], various string instruments, voc.; + George Grove [b. Oct. 9, 1947, Hickory, NC], various string instruments, voc.) 1985—(- Gamble; + Bob Haworth [b. Oct. 9, 1946, Spokane, WA], various string instruments, voc.) 1988—(- Haworth; + Reynolds) 1990—Capitol Collectors Series 1995—The Capitol Years 1999—(- Reynolds; + Haworth).

The Kingston Trio was a clean-cut, more commercial alternative to the left-tinged folksingers of the late '50s. Inspired by Woody Guthrie and the Weavers, the trio scored its only #1 hit in 1958 with "Tom Dooley," a song based on a 19th-century folk tune, "Tom Dula." Until the emergence of Peter, Paul and Mary, Nick Reynolds, Bob Shane, and Dave Guard were the country's preeminent folksingers: Five of their first six albums reached #1, and every one of the trio's first 17 LPs, through 1963, made the Top 20.

In 1961 John Stewart replaced Guard, who went on to form the Whiskeyhill Singers. The group attempted to broaden its repertoire from traditional American and English folk songs to include contemporary protest songs, such as its 1962 single, "Where Have All the Flowers Gone" (#21). Nevertheless, the Kingston Trio's popularity waned, and by 1967 both Reynolds and Stewart had left (the latter for a solo career). They were replaced by Roger Gamble and George Grove in 1973, when Shane re-formed the group as the New Kingston Trio and began touring again. A 1982 PBSTV special hosted by Tom Smothers brought together all six Kingston Trio members for the first time. Gamble was replaced after he suffered a sudden, fatal heart attack in 1985. Guard died of cancer in 1991. Reynolds, who'd re-joined the trio in the '80s, retired in 1999. The group—founding member Shane with Grove and Haworth—continues to tour and record.

King's X

Formed 1980, Springfield, MO

Jerry Gaskill (b. Dec. 27, 1957, Bridgeton, NJ), drums; Doug Pinnick (b. Sep. 3, 1950, Joliet, IL), bass, voc.; Ty Tabor (b. Sep. 17, 1961, Jackson, MO), gtr., voc.

1988—Out of the Silent Planet (Megaforce) 1989—Gretchen Goes to Nebraska 1990—Faith Hope Love by King's X 1992—King's X (Atlantic) 1994—Dogman 1996—Ear Candy 1997—Best of King's X 1998—Tape Head (Metal Blade) 2000—Please Come Home . . . Mr. Bulbous. Ty Tabor solo: 1998—Moonflower Lane (Metal Blade) Platypus (Ty Tabor): 1999—When Pus Comes to Shove (Velvet) 2000—Ice Cycles (InsideOut).

Poundhound (Doug Pinnick): 1998—Massive Grooves From the Electric Church of Psychofunkadelic Grungelism Rock Music (Metal Blade).

Supershine (Doug Pinnick): 2000—Supershine (Metal Blade).

Seeing themselves more as a band of Christians than as a Christian-rock band, the biracial King's X (bassist/vocalist Doug Pinnick is black) laces powerful, pop-laden heavy metal with spiritual messages.

All three members had previously been involved in Christian music: Doug Pinnick and Jerry Gaskill met playing in the popular Christian-rock group Petra and later backed Christian rocker Phil Keaggy; Ty Tabor played bluegrass in his family's band. Tybor met Gaskill at Springfield's Evangel College, and in 1980 they formed the Edge. (A fourth member, Dan McCollom, was recruited but left the band early on.)

After touring for five years, they moved to Houston, lured by promises of financial backing. That deal collapsed, but the band met Sam Taylor (formerly with ZZ Top's management), who produced them, managed them, and rechristened them King's X, after a band he had liked in high school.

Their first two albums, Out of the Silent Planet and Gretchen Goes to Nebraska, went nowhere, even though critics and other musicians took note of their structurally complex songs and tight harmonies. Faith Hope Love by King's X (#85, 1990), powered by the single "It's Love," finally brought the band into the Top 100. In 1991 they contributed "Junior's Gone Wild" to the Bill and Ted's Bogus Journey soundtrack. The next year they released their first major-label album, the self-titled King's X (#138), which proved to be a commercial disappointment. In 1994 King's X played the Woodstock Festival and released a new album, Dogman. After another studio album, Ear Candy, and a compilation, King's X was dropped by Atlantic and signed with independent label Metal Blade, on which it released two more albums of its lyrical prog metal, Tape Head and Please Come Home... Mr. Bulbous. The band unveiled a goofy streak with Tape Head's "Walter Bela Farkas (Live Peace in New York)," in which guest Wally Farkas did his best to emulate Yoko Ono's most extreme vocal stylings.

In addition to King's X, Tabor and Pinnick have recently developed busy solo careers. Tabor wrote, produced, and played most of the instruments on 1998's Moonflower Lane; he then recorded two albums with Platypus. Not to be left behind, Pinnick handled most of the creative duties (with a bit of help from King's X's Gaskill) in Poundhound then Supershine, each of which has released an album.

The Kinks

Formed 1963, London, Eng.

Ray Davies (b. June 21, 1944, London), gtr., voc.; Dave Davies (b. Feb. 3, 1947, London), gtr., voc.; Mick Avory (b. Feb. 15, 1944, London), drums; Pete Quaife (b. Dec. 27, 1943, Tavistock, Eng.), bass.

1964—You Really Got Me (Reprise) 1965—Kinks-Size;

Kinda Kinks 1966—Kinks Kinkdom; The Kinks Kontroversy; The Kinks Greatest Hits! Face to Face 1967—Something Else! Live at the Kelvin Hall 1968—(The Kinks Are) The Village Green Preservation Society (– Quaife; + John Dalton, bass); Arthur, or the Decline and Fall of the British Empire 1970—Lola Versus Powerman and the Moneyground, Part One 1971—(+ John Gosling, kybds.) Muswell Hillbillies (RCA) 1972—The Kinks Kronikles (Reprise); Everybody's in Show-Biz (RCA) 1973—Preservation Act 1 1974—Preservation Act 2 1975—The Kinks Present a Soap Opera; The Kinks Present Schoolboys in Disgrace 1976—(– Dalton; + Andy Pyle, bass) 1977—Sleepwalker (Arista) 1978—Misfits (– Pyle; – Gosling; + Jim Rodford [b. July 7, 1945, St. Alban's, Eng.], bass, voc.; + Gordon Edwards, kybds.; – Edwards) 1979—Low Budget (+ Ian Gibbons, kybds., voc.) 1980—One for the Road 1981—Give the People What They Want 1983—State of Confusion 1984—(– Avory; + Bob Henrit [b. May 2, 1945, Eng.], drums) Word of Mouth 1986—Come Dancing With the Kinks; Father Christmas; Think Visual (MCA) 1988—Live: The Road (London) (– Gibbons) 1989—U.K. Jive (+ Mark Haley, kybds.) 1993—Phobia (Columbia) 1995—Tired of Waiting for You (Rhino) 1996—To the Bone (Guardian).

Dave Davies solo: 1980—AFL-3603 (RCA) 1981—Glamour 1983—Chosen People (Warner Bros.) 1987—The Album That Never Was (PRT) 1998—Unfinished Business: Dave Davies Kronikles 1964–1998 (Essential) 2000—Live at the Bottom Line (Koch International).

Ray Davies solo: 1998—The Storyteller (Capitol).

The Kinks were part of the British Invasion, and their early hits, "You Really Got Me" and "All Day and All of the Night," paved the way for the power chords of the next decade's hard rock. But most of leader Ray Davies' songs have been elegies for the beleaguered British middle class, scenarios for rock theater, and tales of show-business survival. After their first burst of popularity, the Kinks became a cult band in the mid-'70s until, buoyed by the new wave's rediscovery of the Davies catalogue, they returned to arenas in the '80s. In the '90s brothers Dave and Ray established more separate identities while the Kinks' reputation remained secure.

Ray Davies was attending art school when he joined his younger brother Dave's band, the Ravens, in 1963. In short order Ray took over the group—renamed the Kinks—retaining bassist Pete Quaife and recruiting Mick Avory to play drums. With this lineup they released a pair of unsuccessful singles before recording "You Really Got Me," a #1 hit in England that reached #7 in the U.S. in 1964. The following year "All Day and All of the Night" and "Tired of Waiting for You" both reached the Top 10 in the U.S. and set a pattern for future releases of alternating tough rockers ("Who'll Be the Next in Line") and ballads ("Set Me Free").

In 1966 the Kinks released two singles of pointed satire, "A Well Respected Man" (#13) and "Dedicated Follower of Fashion" (#36), indicating the personal turn Ray Davies' songs were taking. Their next album, The Kinks Kontroversy, though containing another hard-rock 45, "Till the End of the Day" (#50) was increasingly introspective, with songs like

The Kinks: (top) Dave Davies, Mick Avory, (bottom) Peter Quafe, Ray Davies

"I'm on an Island" Also that year, an appearance on the American TV show Hullabaloo resulted in a problem with the American Federation of Musicians that wasn't resolved until 1969 and prevented the group from touring the U.S. for some time. "Sunny Afternoon" (#14, 1966) from Face to Face was their last hit of that period.

During their years of U.S. exile, Ray Davies composed the first of many concept albums. (The Kinks Are The Village Green Preservation Society (1968), an LP of nostalgia for all the quaint English customs (such as virginity) that other bands were rebelling against. Dave Davies, who had been writing the occasional song for the Kinks almost from the beginning, had a "solo" hit in England with "Death of a Clown," actually a Kinks song that he wrote and sang. More of Dave's singles followed ("Susannah's Still Alive," "Lincoln County"), none of which repeated the success of "Clown." A planned solo album was recorded but released much later, in 1987, as The Album That Never Was. The Kinks' next LP, Arthur, or the Decline and Fall of the British Empire, was, with the Who's Tommy, an early rock opera written for a British TV show that never aired.

The Kinks' next concept album, Lola Versus Powerman and the Moneygoround Part One (#35, 1970), was built around the story of trying to get a hit record. "Lola" undoubtedly the first rock hit about a transvestite, reached #9. Lola was the group's first Top 40 LP since 1966's The Kinks Greatest Hits (#9).

The group then left Reprise for RCA, continuing to work on concept pieces, once again without hits. Nevertheless it acquired a reputation as a cheerfully boozy live band. Kinks performances were known for messy musicianship and onstage arguments between Ray and Dave Davies, while Ray clowned with limp wrists and sprayed beer at the audience. This was chronicled on Everybody's in Show-Biz (#70, 1972), a double album split between Ray Davies' first road songs and a loose live set.

Concept albums became soundtracks for theatrical presentations starring the Kinks in the next years. Preservation Acts 1 and 2, Soap Opera (#51, 1975), and Schoolboys in Disgrace (#45, 1975) were all composed for the stage, complete with extra horn players and singers. For all of the elaborate shows, though, the albums weren't selling.

The Kinks left RCA and concept albums behind in 1976, and 1977's Sleepwalker hit #21 with its title track (#48). They finally scored a hit in 1978 with "A Rock 'n' Roll Fantasy" (#30, 1978), off Misfits (#40, 1978). Low Budget (#11, 1979), aided by another successful 45, "Wish I Could Fly Like Superman" (#41, 1979), became the Kinks' first gold record since the Reprise greatest-hits collection of their early singles.

In the meantime, new groups began rediscovering the Kinks' catalogue, notably Van Halen ("You Really Got Me") and the Pretenders ("Stop Your Sobbing"). The group, which had tightened up considerably onstage with the addition of former Argent bassist Jim Rodford in 1978, responded with One for the Road (#14, 1980), a double live album that was accompanied by one of the first full-length rock videos. It, too, went gold, as did Give the People What They Want (#15, 1981).

Over the years, Ray Davies has also produced two albums by Claire Hamill (for his ill-fated Konk Records), worked with Tom Robinson, and scored the films The Virgin Soldiers and Percy. Dave Davies finally came out with a solo album, AFLI-3603, in 1980, followed by Glamour in 1981 and Chosen People in 1983; all featured Dave on most of the instruments and achieved modest success.

Thanks in part to some beautifully produced videos, the Kinks' third wind continued with State of Confusion (#12, 1983), which gave the group its first Top 10 hit since "Lola," the delightfully nostalgic "Come Dancing" (#6, 1983). A wistful ballad, "Don't Forget to Dance," cracked the Top 30 later in the year. Other mid-'80s activities included Return to Waterloo (1985), a film Ray Davies wrote and directed, incorporating Kinks music, and Ray having a daughter, Natalie, with Chrissie Hynde of the Pretenders in 1983. The relationship ended the following year. In 1986 Ray also acted in the film Absolute Beginners.

Beginning with Word of Mouth (#57, 1984), the Kinks once again fell on hard times. None of the band's subsequent albums sold well. But the Kinks, with ex-Argent drummer Bob Henrit in place of Avory, remain a touring attraction. In 1993 the group undertook its first U.S. tour in more than three years to promote Phobia. The album's first single, "Hatred (A Duet)," poked fun at the long-standing filial antagonism between Ray and Dave Davies that has led both brothers to quit the band on more than one occasion. Despite the sibling rivalry and sagging record sales, these 1990 Rock and Roll Hall of Fame inductees endure with dignity and wit. In 1992 Ray directed a documentary on the making of the Charles Mingus tribute album, Weird Nightmare.

The band's 1996 release, To the Bone, was a live-in-the-studio rerecording of many of their hits. In 1995 Ray Davies' "unauthorized autobiography" X-Ray was published in the U.S. He then did some shows performing a spoken word/unplugged piece called 20th Century Man, for which he read sections of his book and sang Kinks songs. By that time, the band's reputation was enjoying another revival, as contemporary British stars Blur and Oasis acknowledged their debt to the Kinks. And in the U.S., Velvel Records initiated a 15-album reissue series of the group's classic recordings. Dave published Kink, his own autobiography, in 1997, a recounting of his early debauchery and current interest in metaphysics. Also in the '90s he provided the musical score for John Carpenter's Village of the Damned and toured with a band called Dave Davies Kink Kronikles. In 2000 Ray Davies' first collection of short stories, Waterloo Sunset. Stories, was published.

Kiss

Formed 1972, New York, NY

Gene Simmons (b. Chaim Whitz, changed to Gene Klein, Aug. 25, 1949, Haifa, Israel), bass, voc.; Paul Stanley (b. Stanley Eisen, Jan. 20, 1950, Queens, NY), gr., voc.; Peter Criss (b. Peter Crisscoulas, Dec. 20, 1947, Brooklyn, NY), drums, voc.; Ace Frehley (b. Paul Frehley, Apr. 27, 1951, Bronx, NY), gr.
 1974—Kiss (Casablanca); Hotter Than Hell 1975—Dressed to Kill; Alive 1976—Destroyer; Kiss—The Originals; Rock and Roll Over 1977—Love Gun; Alive 2 1978—Double Platinum 1979—Dynasty 1980—Unmasked (– Criss; + Eric Carr [b. July 12, 1950, Brooklyn; d. Nov. 24, 1991, New York], drums) 1981—Music From "The Elder" 1982—(– Frehley; + Vinnie Vincent, gr.) Creatures of the Night (Mercury) 1983—Lick It Up 1984—(– Vincent; + Mark St. John, gr.) Animalize 1985—(– St. John; + Bruce Kulick, gr.) Asylum 1987—Crazy Nights 1988—Smashes, Thrashes and Hits 1989—Hot in the Shade 1991—(– Carr; + Eric Singer, drums) 1992—Revenge 1993—Alive III 1996—(– Kulick; – Singer; + Frehley; + Criss) Unplugged; You Wanted the Best You Got the Best!! 1997—Greatest Kiss (– Frehley; – Criss; + Kulick; + Singer) Carnival of Souls (– Kulick; – Singer; + Frehley; + Criss) 1998—Psycho-Circus 2001—(– Criss; + Singer). Paul Stanley solo: 1978—Paul Stanley (Casablanca). Gene Simmons solo: 1978—Gene Simmons (Casablanca). Ace Frehley solo: 1978—Ace Frehley (Casablanca) 1987—Frehley's Comet (Megaforce) 1988—Live + 1; Second Sighting 1989—Trouble Walkin'. Peter Criss solo: 1978—Peter Criss (Casablanca) 1993—Criss (Tony Nicole Tony).

Kiss may have been one of the biggest-selling acts of the '70s, but it will always be known, above all else, as the band without a face. Until 1983, when the group removed its distinctive comic-book makeup, the four members' faces supposedly had never been photographed (although pictures of them applying their makeup for an early photo session ran in Creem magazine in the early '80s). Theatrics and basic hard rock have been Kiss' main calling card. The quartet formed in the heyday of glitter and rock theater, and it set out to define, at first, evil cartoon-character personas, highlighted by Gene Simmons' bass-playing, fire-breathing, (stage) blood-spewing ghoul.

The group was founded by Simmons and Stanley, who met in a band in 1970. They found Criss through his ad in ROLLING STONE. After rehearsing as a trio, the group took out an ad in the Village Voice for a guitarist with "flash and balls" and discovered Ace Frehley. At the time, they were all working dead-end jobs, with the exception of Simmons, who taught school at P.S. 75 in Manhattan. Their visual image and game plan were in place from the start. After a few New York shows, Kiss met independent television director Bill Aucoin, who helped the group get a deal with Casablanca Records.

The critics hissed at the anonymous heavy-metal thud rock on the band's first three albums and howled at its mock-threatening image. Nonetheless, Kiss hit it off with its fans (the Kiss Army) from the very start. After some hard financial times (an entire 1975 tour was reportedly financed on Aucoin's American Express card), the band took off with Alive (#9, 1975), which contained the Top 20 hit "Rock and Roll All Nite."

In 1976 the band's sound and image shifted toward not necessarily softer but certainly more commercial fare, beginning with Criss' ballad "Beth" (#7, 1976), a million-seller that he wrote for his wife, Lydia. Accordingly, Kiss' audience grew from mostly male adolescent heavy-metal fans to include more teenyboppers. As the group racked up more and more platinum records—six between 1976 and 1979—it became increasingly less threatening. Young fans were frequently photographed wearing the makeup of their favorite Kiss member.

On June 28, 1977, Marvel Comics published a Kiss comic book. The red ink used supposedly contained a small amount of blood from the band members themselves. It sold over 400,000 copies. In the fall of 1978 NBC broadcast a feature-length animated cartoon entitled Kiss Meets the Phantom of the Park and Marvel issued a second Kiss comic. But the group's popularity was beginning to wane. Four simultaneously released solo LPs sold poorly—Frehley's was most popular—although the group had several hit singles, including the disco-metal oddity "I Was Made for Loving You" (#16, 1979). In 1980 Criss left for a solo career. He was replaced by Eric Carr, who drummed into the '90s but died of cancer at age 41. The group then briefly changed its image, abandoning the comic-book characters for a New Romantic-influenced look. Music From "The Elder," an overambitious concept album, featured songs cowritten by Lou Reed and was the group's first album not to go gold. Kiss quickly reverted to its ghoulish makeup and primitive hard-rock music, and Creatures of the Night eventually sold 500,000 copies and was certified gold.

Kiss: Gene Simmons, Paul Stanley, Peter Criss, Ace Frehley

What to do? Change image again. Lick It Up (#24, 1983) depicted the group (now with Vinnie Vincent in place of Frehley) without its makeup and sparked a commercial resurgence. By the early '90s, Kiss had sold more than 70 million albums. And as proof that in rock & roll anyone can become a legend if he sticks around long enough, 1994 saw the release of Kiss My Ass, on which artists as diverse as Garth Brooks, Lenny Kravitz, and Anthrax recorded their favorite Kiss songs as a tribute to the band critics loved to hate.

The success of the album anticipated the 1996 reunion of the original Kiss for the taping of MTV's Unplugged (#15, 1996), which in turn led to a full-on reunion tour—the year's highest-grossing concert attraction—complete with makeup, stage blood, and pyrotechnics. With Carnival of Souls (#27, 1997) already recorded, Kulick and Singer left and the recombinant Kiss released Psycho-Circus (#3, 1998), feeding interest in what the band claimed was a 2000 farewell tour. Whether or not Kiss is kaput, the band's legacy is ensured by the savvy merchandising of its instantly recognizable, cartoonish image, which has inspired pinball games, plastic action figures and comic book spinoffs. Meanwhile, Simmons has enjoyed a long-term second career playing movie villains. He appeared with the original band in the 1999 film Detroit Rock City, a teen comedy about the misadventures of a Kiss fan (Edward Furlong) en route to a big Detroit show. As of this writing, Simmons was penning his autobiography, tentatively entitled KISS and Make Up, and the "farewell tour" was rolling on through 2001.

The KLF

Formed 1987, England

Bill Drummond (b. William Butterworth, Apr. 29, 1953, S.A.), synth, samplers; Jimi Cauty (b. James Cauty, 1956, Devon, Eng.), gr.

1990—Chill Out (WaxTrax, U.K.) 1991—The White Room (Arista).

Britain's mysterious, mischievous KLF made post-hip-hop, rave-influenced, psychedelic trance-dance music that one critic described as "dance music for the home." Its name stood for "Kopynright Liberation Front"; the group's stated mission was to see if sampling would hold up in a court of law.

Bill Drummond had played in the new-wave band Big in Japan (with Holly Johnson, later of Frankie Goes to Hollywood); ran Liverpool's Zoo Records and managed its two top acts, Echo and the Bunnymen and Teardrop Explodes; and was an A&R executive with WEA Records when he signed ex-Zodiac Mindwarp guitarist Jimi Cauty's band, Brilliant (whose only album flopped). Drummond and Cauty recorded dance singles under the names Disco 2000, Space, and Justified Ancients of Mu Mu—often shortened to "Jams." The Jams album 1987 (What the Fuck's Going On) drew a quick lawsuit from Abba, whose "Dancing Queen" was heavily sampled on it (as were the Beatles, Led Zeppelin, and others). It was immediately recalled, and reissued—with all unauthorized samples edited out—as an extended single, "The Jams 45 Edits EP" (Authorized samples were used in the followup single, "Who Killed the Jams?")

As the Timelords, Drummond and Cauty combined a hip-hop version of Gary Glitter's "Rock and Roll Part 2" with the theme of the popular British science-fiction TV show Dr. Who, the resulting "Doctoring the Tardis" topped the U.K. chart in 1988. Cauty and Drummond then became KLF, and recorded Chill Out, which reflected the near-New Age work Cauty had begun doing with the Orb [see entry]

Drummond and Cauty scored an international dance hit with "What Time Is Love?" (#57, 1991) from the group's first U.S. album, The White Room (#39, 1991). It also contained the smash pop hit "3 A.M. Eternal" (#5, 1991), which was accompanied by a music video showing the group clad in robes and hoods, moving in formation as if enacting some strange, cultish ritual. In 1992 the KLF had another hit with "Justified and Ancient," a surreal feature for country-music queen Tammy Wynette, who gamely wore a skintight, turquoise mermaid dress for the video. The song reached #11 on the pop chart—higher than Wynette's 1968 classic "Stand by Your Man."

Drummond and Cauty broke up the KLF in late 1992 but continued working as conceptual pranksters "The K Foundation." In 1993 they announced that they'd recorded a "world anthem"—"Que Sera Sera" redone as "K Sera Sera" with the Red Army Choir—but refused to release it until world peace was achieved.

The Knack

Formed 1978, Los Angeles, CA

Doug Fieger (b. Aug. 20, Detroit, MI), gr., voc.; Berton Averre (b. Dec. 13, Van Nuys, CA), gr.; Bruce Gary (b. Apr. 7, 1952, Burbank, CA), drums; Prescott Niles (b. May 2, New York, NY), bass.

1979—Get the Knack (Capitol) 1980—... but the Little Girls Understand 1981—Round Trip (group disbands) 1991—(group re-forms: Fieger; Averre; Niles; + Billy Ward, drums) Serious Fun (Charisma) (- Ward) 1998—(+ Terry Bozzio [b. Dec. 27, 1950, San Francisco, CA], drums) Proof: The Very Best of the Knack (Rhino); Zoom.

Doug Fieger solo: 2000—First Things First (Zen).

In the summer of 1979 the Knack enjoyed one of the biggest commercial debuts in rock history. Its first album, recorded in 11 days for a mere $18,000, went gold in 13 days, platinum in seven weeks, and eventually sold 5 million copies worldwide. The single "My Sharona" sold 10 million copies. However, the group quickly suffered an equally intense backlash. With its Beatles-like packaging (the back cover of Get the Knack imitated A Hard Day's Night), plus what critics saw as contrived pop innocence and sexist lyrics, the band members were labeled cynical fakes—an accusation heightened by their refusal to do interviews. In the wake of the Knack's success, scores of "innocent pop" L.A. bands were signed. A "Knuke the Knack" movement arose in the more radical quarters of the very same L.A. club scene where the band had begun.

Songwriters Doug Fieger met Berton Averre in California when he moved there from Detroit in 1971 with his band Sky, which made two LPs for RCA. During the mid-'70s Fieger and Averre began writing together, and after working abroad, Fieger moved back to L.A., where he, Averre, and Bruce Gary teamed up with Prescott Niles to form the Knack.

The Knack played the Southern California club circuit for seven months, resulting in 13 labels wanting to sign the band. Capitol won out, and the Knack's debut, produced by Mike Chapman (who did many of the successful pop-new wave LPs of that year, including Blondie's), was released by June 1979 with the #1 single "My Sharona." The critical backlash and the lack of individual image caught up with the Knack commercially, though, and its followup album sold a comparatively disappointing 600,000 copies. The band members began to argue constantly, their third LP, Round Trip (#93, 1981), barely broke the Top 100, and following an unsuccessful 1981 tour they disbanded.

Averre, Gary, and Niles continued as the Game briefly before going on to back up others. Gary drummed behind Bob Dylan, Jack Bruce, and Bette Midler; Averre, too, played with the Divine Miss M., while Niles toured with Josie ("Johnny, Are You Queer?") Cotton. They regrouped again in the mid-'80s as the Front, with actor Steven Bauer on vocals. Fieger, meanwhile, founded Doug Fieger's Taking Chances, which went nowhere. In 1987 Niles, Averre, and a newly sober Fieger got back together, with drummer Bill Ward. A 1991 album, Serious Fun, did not chart, and the Knack members went their separate ways again. Fieger, in addition to playing a small role on the hit TV series Roseanne, recorded a solo album produced by Don Was. In 1994 the Knack began touring again after "My Sharona" found a new audience through its inclusion in the Reality Bites soundtrack. Ex-Missing Persons/Frank Zappa drummer Terry Bozzio replaced Ward on 1998's Zoom, which failed to cause much of a commercial stir. As of this writing, the original lineup was still touring.

Gladys Knight and the Pips

Formed 1952, Atlanta, GA

Gladys Knight (b. May 28, 1944, Atlanta), voc.; Merald "Bubba" Knight (b. Sep. 4, 1942, Atlanta), voc.; Brenda Knight, voc.; William Guest (b. June 2, 1941, Atlanta), voc.; Eleanor Guest, voc. (b. 1940; d. 1997, Atlanta).

1957—(- B. Knight; - E. Guest; + Edward Patten [b. Aug. 2, 1939, Atlanta], voc.; + Langston George, voc.) 1962—(- George) 1967—Everybody Needs Love (Motown) 1968—Feel'n' Bluesy; Silk 'n' Soul 1969—Nitty Gritty 1970—Greatest Hits (Soul) 1971—If I Were Your Woman 1972—Neither One of Us 1973—Imagination (Buddah) 1974—Anthology (Tamla); Claudine soundtrack (Buddah); I Feel a Song 1975—2nd Anniversary; The Best of Gladys Knight and the Pips 1976—Gladys Knight and the Pips' Greatest Hits 1980—About Love (Columbia) 1982—Touch 1983—Visions 1985—Life 1987—All Our Love (MCA) 1990—Soul Survivors: The Best of Gladys Knight and the Pips (Rhino) 1997—The Ultimate Collection (Motown).

Gladys Knight solo: 1991—Good Woman (MCA) 1994—Just for You 1998—Many Different Roads 2001—At Last.

Gladys Knight and the Pips rose to prominence on the Motown label in the late '60s, but their popularity peaked after they moved to Buddah in 1973. The group is a family, the members of which were all born in Atlanta, where Gladys' parents sang in church choirs. As a child, she herself sang with the Mount Maniah Baptist Church choir, and toured Southern churches with the Morris Brown Choir before she was five. At seven she won a grand prize on the Ted Mack Original Amateur Hour, which led to several TV appearances. The Pips were formed in 1952 at Gladys' older brother Merald's birthday party, when, to entertain the family, Gladys arranged an impromptu singing group, including Merald, sister Brenda, and cousins William and Eleanor Guest. Cousin James Woods urged them to go pro; they adopted his nickname, "Pip."

They toured nationally with Jackie Wilson and Sam Cooke before Gladys was 13, but their 1957 recording debut with Brunswick went nowhere; Eleanor and Brenda left to get married, and were replaced by cousin Edward Patten and Langston George. This configuration, with Gladys' grainy alto still up front, recorded its first R&B Top 20 hit in 1961, the Johnny Otis-penned "Every Beat of My Heart." George left after two more singles ("Letter Full of Tears" went Top 5), and the group became a quartet.

The group faltered in the early '60s. In 1962 Gladys had a baby, and the Pips did studio backups; even after they reunited they were still known only to R&B fans. They had no connection to the mass audience until the mid-'60s, when they were a guest act on the Motown touring revue. Signed to Motown, their cover of "Heard It Through the Grapevine" became a #2 smash in 1967. They also scored with "The End of the Road" (#15), "Friendship Train" (#17), and "If I Were Your Woman" (#9).

Just as "Neither One of Us" (#2) was mounting the chart, the group decided to leave Motown in 1973, citing lack of label support. Their first LP for Buddah, Imagination (#9, 1973), made the move worthwhile. It was their biggest seller, going gold and yielding three gold singles: "Midnight Train to Georgia" (#1, 1973), "I've Got to Use My Imagination" (#4, 1974), and "Best Thing That Ever Happened to Me" (#3, 1974). In 1973 the group won two Grammys: Best Pop Vocal Performance by a Duo, Group or Chorus for "Neither One of Us" and Best R&B Vocal Performance by a Duo, Group or Chorus for "Midnight Train to Georgia." Motown continued to release albums by the group after it had left; the group claims it has never received royalties from these or "Neither One of Us."

Gladys Knight and the Pips: Edward Patten, Merald "Bubba" Knight, William Guest, Gladys Knight

The hits continued with "The Way We Were"/"Try to Remember" (#11, 1975), and the band did the movie soundtrack to Claudine with Curtis Mayfield in 1974, which included the single "On and On" (#5, 1974). Gladys made her acting debut in 1976 in a film with the unlikely subject of love set among the Alaskan oil fields, called Pipe Dreams; in 1985 she also costarred in the short-lived TV series Charlie and Co. In 1977, because of legal proceedings involving the band's attempted switch of labels to Columbia, plus an old unsettled suit by Motown, Gladys was not allowed to record with the Pips on LP for three years (though they did sing together live).

In the meantime, the group's popularity waned. Gladys recorded a solo LP, and the Pips did two albums for Casablanca, finally reuniting in 1980 on Columbia with About Love, produced by Ashford and Simpson, yielding the #3 R&B hit "Landlord." Visions also had hit singles, "Save the Overture (for Me)" (#66 pop, #1 R&B, 1983) and "You're Number One (In My Book)" (#5 R&B, 1983). "Love Overboard" (#13 pop, #1 R&B, 1987), from All Our Love (#39, 1987), won the group a Grammy in 1988 for Best R&B Performance by a Duo or Group with Vocal. Another single from that album, "Lovin' on Next to Nothin'" went to #3 R&B the following year.

Gladys Knight's Good Woman (#45 pop, #1 R&B, 1991) featured many of her own songs. In the accompanying press release the group was described as "suspended." Knight's solo hits include "It's Gonna Take All Our Love" (#29 R&B, 1988), "License to Kill" (from the James Bond film) (#69 R&B, 1989), "Men" (#2 R&B, 1991), "Where Would I Be" (#66 R&B, 1992), and "Next Time" (#30 R&B, 1995). She also won a Grammy in 1986 for the AIDS-benefit record "That's What Friends Are For," which she recorded with Dionne Warwick, Stevie Wonder, and Elton John. In 1996 she collaborated with R&B divas Brandy, Tamia, and Chaka Khan on "Missing You" (#25 pop, #10 R&B) for the soundtrack to Set It Off. Following her 1997 divorce from her third husband, motivational speaker Les Brown, Knight became a Mormon. Many Different Roads was her first inspirational album. In the late '90s she had a recurring role on TV's The Jamie Foxx Show. Her autobiography, Between Each Line of Pain and Glory: My Life Story, came out in 1997.

Kool and the Gang

Formed 1964, Jersey City, NJ

Robert "Kool" Bell (b. Oct. 8, 1950, Youngstown, OH), voc., bass; Ronald Bell (b. Nov. 1, 1951, Youngstown), tenor sax; Dennis "Dee Tee" Thomas (b. Feb. 9, 1951, Jersey City), sax, flute; Claydes Smith (b. Sep. 6, 1948, Jersey City), lead gtr.; Robert "Spike" Mickens (b. Jersey City), trumpet; Rickey Westfield (b. Jersey City), kybds.; George "Funky" Brown (b. Jan. 5, 1949, Jersey City), drums.

1971—Live at the Sex Machine (De-Lite); The Best of Kool and the Gang; Music Is the Message 1972—Live at P.J.'s; Good Times 1973—Wild and Peaceful; Kool Jazz 1974—Light of Worlds 1975—Kool and the Gang Greatest Hits; Spirit of the Boogie (Polydor) 1976—(+ Clifford Adams [b. Oct. 8, 1952, NJ], trombone) Love and Understanding; Open Sesame 1977—The Force (– Westfield) 1978—Kool and the Gang Spin Their Top Hits; Everybody's Dancin' 1979—(+ James "J.T." Taylor [b. Aug. 16, 1953, SC], voc.) Ladies Night 1980—Celebrate! (Mercury) (+ Curtis Williams [b. Dec. 11, 1962, Buffalo, NY], kybds.; + Michael Ray [b. Dec. 24, 1962, NJ], trumpet, voc.) 1981—Something Special 1982—As One 1983—In the Heart 1984—Emergency 1986—Forever (Mercury) 1988—Everything's Kool and the Gang: Greatest Hits and More 1989—(– Taylor; + Skip Martin, voc.; + Odeon Mays, voc.; + Gary Brown, voc.) Sweat 1993—The Best of Kool and the Gang, 1969–1976; Unite (JRS) 1995—(various lineup changes; + Taylor) 1996—State of Affairs (Curb). J.T. Taylor solo: 1989—Master of the Game (MCA) 1991—Feel the Need 1993—Baby, I'm Back 2000—A Brand New Me (Taylor Made).

In the '70s and '80s Kool and the Gang enjoyed many platinum hits with their horn-driven funky dance and pop music, but they started out in the mid-'60s playing jazz. They began as the Jazziacs, formed while they were all attending Lincoln High School in Jersey City (except guitarist Smith). Leader Robert "Kool" Bell's father used to room with Thelonious Monk, whose music, along with Miles Davis' and John Coltrane's, offered early influences, as did Pharoah Sanders and Leon Thomas, who sometimes showed up at the band's local jam sessions. The group went through several name changes, including the Soul Town Review and the New Dimensions, before becoming Kool and the Gang in 1968. They shifted to more accessible funk R&B, and their eponymous debut single in 1969 reached #19 on the R&B chart.

Kool and the Gang's sound—designed by the group's musical director, Ronald Bell—was highlighted by chunky guitar fills, staccato horn blasts, and group "party" vocal chants. Several modest dance hits, like "Funky Man" (#16 R&B, 1970) and "Love the Life You Live" (#31 R&B, 1972), led to their massive breakthrough in 1973 with three top singles on one gold album, Wild and Peaceful (#30, 1973), including "Funky Stuff" (#29 pop, #5 R&B, 1973), "Jungle Boogie" (#4 pop, 1974, #2 R&B, 1973), and "Hollywood Swinging" (#6, 1974). Other hit singles include "Higher Plane" (#1 R&B, 1974), "Rhyme Tyme People" (#3 R&B, 1974), "Spirit of the Boogie" (#1 R&B, 1975), "Caribbean Festival" (#8 R&B, 1975), "Love and Understanding (Come Together)" (#8 R&B, 1976), and "Open Sesame—Part 1" (#6 R&B, 1976). Their dance style anticipated disco, but they were temporarily shoved in the background by the trend, though they got a minor pop hit with "Open Sesame," which appeared on the next year's Saturday Night Fever soundtrack. Some of their music in the mid-'70s reflected their "spiritual phase"—several members are devout Muslims. In the late '80s Ronald Bell changed his name to Khalis Bayyan, and Robert Bell became Amir Bayyan.

In 1978 the band got new management and a full-fledged lead singer who could handle ballads. Tenor James Taylor (no relation to the pop-folk singer) fronted the band on 1979's Ladies Night (#13) and with the help of coproducer Eumir Deodato, it hit the pop Top 10 (#1 R&B) with the title track. The single went gold, the album, platinum. In 1980 Kool and the Gang released "Too Hot" (#5 pop, #3 R&B, 1980), and "Celebration" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1980), which went platinum and became a theme song for the return of the U.S. hostages from Iran, not to mention a standard of wedding bands everywhere. The Celebrate! (#10) LP also went platinum, as did Something Special (#12, 1981), yielding the hits "Take My Heart (You Can Have It If You Want It)" (#17 pop, #1 R&B, 1981), "Steppin' Out" (#12 R&B, 1982), "Get Down on It" (#10 pop, #4 R&B, 1982), "Big Fun" (#21 pop, #6 R&B, 1982), and "Let's Go Dancin' (Ooh La. La. La)" (#30 pop, #7 R&B, 1982).

Kool and the Gang's poplarity continued through the '80s, but many of their biggest hits—"Joanna" (#29, 1983) and "Tonight" (#13 pop, #7 R&B, 1984) from In the Heart (#29, 1983) and "Fresh" (#9 pop, #1 R&B, 1984), "Cherish" (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1985), and "Emergency" (#18 pop, #7 R&B, 1985) from the platinum Emergency (#13, 1984)—were softer ballads. Other hits include "Victory" (#10 pop, #2 R&B, 1986), "Stone Love" (#10 pop, #4 R&B, 1987), and "Holiday" (#9 R&B, 1987). Taylor left the group in 1989 and released his solo debut that year. His biggest hit single to date is "All I Want Is Forever," a #2 R&B duet with Regina Belle from the film Tap (1989).

The group's first album without Taylor, Sweat, did not make a great commercial impression, peaking on the R&B albums chart at #52. The group's more recent singles include "Rags to Riches" (#38 R&B, 1988), "Raindrops" (#27 R&B, 1989), and "Never Give Up" (#74 R&B, 1989). Taylor returned in time for 1996's State of Affairs, but chart success eluded the album. That didn't matter; Kool and the Gang's music lives on in the samples and tributes of contemporary rappers such as Sean Combs, Coolio, and Will Smith. The group (sans J.T. Taylor) continues to tour.

Kool Moe Dee

Born Mohandas DeWese, Aug. 8, New York, NY
 1986—Kool Moe Dee (Rooftop-Jive) 1987—How Ya Like Me Now 1989—Knowledge Is King (Jive-RCA) 1990—African Pride EP (Jive) 1991—Funke Funke Wisdom 1993—Greatest Hits 1994—Interlude (Easylee).

Kool Moe Dee is one of rap's more eloquent practitioners of braggadocio. Having discovered the joys of making rhymes via Dr. Seuss' How the Grinch Stole Christmas and heavy-weight champ Muhammad Ali's boasting, the young Mohandas DeWese was poised to join New York's burgeoning late-'70s rap scene. When the Treacherous Three, a hip-hop trio he belonged to, split up, he continued on his own, releasing the musically spare Kool Moe Dee. The album became an instant classic of rap's so-called old-school style and contained the minor pop hit "Go See the Doctor" (#89, 1987). The title track of the platinum How Ya Like Me Now (#35, 1987) put Kool Moe Dee into a blistering feud with L.L. Cool J (he claimed Cool J nipped off his style). A temporary truce was called in 1990 when the two shook hands backstage at Harlem's Apollo Theatre. "How Ya Like Me Now" reached #22 on the R&B chart in late 1987, but it took 1988's "Wild, Wild West" (#4, R&B) to get Kool Moe Dee into the Top 10. His Funke Funke Wisdom was a critical disappointment, though it spawned the single "How Kool Can One Blackman Be?" (#49 R&B, 1991). In 1992 the IRS auctioned Kool Moe Dee's Mercedes-Benz for $20,300 and the proceeds were credited toward the $180,000 in back taxes he owed. In 1993 a greatest-hits album was released. The next year Dee reunited with the Treacherous Three for a guest-laden LP entitled Old School Flava. Singed to DJ Easy Lee's label, he also released his most recent solo album, Interlude. In 1999 "Wild Wild West" climbed to #1 on the pop chart (#3 R&B), when Will Smith, Dru Hill, and Dee himself remade the song, which served as the title track to the movie in which Smith starred that year.

Al Kooper

Born Feb. 5, 1944, Brooklyn, NY
 1969—I Stand Alone (Columbia); You Never Know Who Your Friends Are 1970—Kooper Session (with Shuggie Otis); Easy Does It 1971—Landlord soundtrack (United Artists); New York

City (Columbia) 1972—A Possible Projection of the Future/Childhood's End; Naked Songs 1975—Unclaimed Freight—Al's Big Deal 1976—Act Like Nothing's Wrong (United Artists) 1982—Championship Wrestling (Columbia) 1994—Rekooperation (MusicMasters) 1995—Soul of a Man: Al Kooper Live.
 With Mike Bloomfield and Stephen Stills: 1968—Super Session (Columbia).
 With Mike Bloomfield: 1969—The Live Adventures of Mike Bloomfield and Al Kooper (Columbia).

Al Kooper played a major role in the blues rock of the '60s. He originated what has become commonly known as the "Dylan-esque organ" with his work on Highway 61 Revisited, helped popularize the blues with the Blues Project, and put together Blood, Sweat and Tears, which began the big-band jazz-rock trend that influenced bands like Chicago. He also discovered Lynyrd Skynyrd and the Tubes.

Kooper, who prefers to play piano or guitar, turned professional at age 15, when he joined the Royal Teens after they had a #3 hit in 1958 with "Short Shorts." He left the band in the late '50s, turned to writing and session work, and studied for a year at the University of Bridgeport. In 1965 he cowrote a #1 hit for Gary Lewis and the Playboys, "This Diamond Ring." That same year, producer Tom Wilson gave Kooper a job playing organ on Dylan's single "Like a Rolling Stone" and later on Highway 61 Revisited. Kooper also backed Dylan at his 1965 Newport Folk Festival appearance and worked on Blonde on Blonde and, later, New Morning.

In 1965 Kooper and Steve Katz formed the Blues Project [see entry], and in 1967 they founded Blood, Sweat and Tears [see entry]. Kooper picked the band members and produced their 1968 debut, Child Is Father to the Man, but he left before the band's big commercial success to work as a Columbia staff producer and record several collaborative LPs. The first was 1968's Super Session with guitarists Mike Bloomfield (whom he met during the Dylan sessions) and Stephen Stills. That album became one of the year's bestsellers. Kooper again collaborated with Bloomfield in 1969 for a live LP. He went on to record several solo albums, which received less attention than his collaborations or the albums he'd done session work on (e.g., the Rolling Stones' Let It Bleed and Jimi Hendrix's Electric Ladyland).

By the '70s, Kooper had become known more as a producer than as a musician. He oversaw the first three Lynyrd Skynyrd records, the Tubes' 1975 debut, and Nils Lofgren's Cry Tough. In 1976 he cut his first solo LP in three years and published an autobiography, Backstage Passes. On St. Patrick's Day 1981 he performed in New York City in a Blues Project reunion, and later that year he toured with Bob Dylan. Kooper celebrated his 50th birthday with a Bottom Line show in 1994, a year that saw the release of his first album in 12 years, Rekooperation. In between he toured as part of Joe Walsh's band in 1991, played keyboards on a 1990 Byrds session, produced the 1991 LP Scapegoats by Green on Red, and scored a short-lived TV series, Crime Story. In 1995 he coproduced For the Love of Harry, an album that paid tribute to Harry Nilsson. In 1997 Kooper began teaching at Boston's Berklee College of Music. He gave up the post in 2000, when he moved to upstate New York to care for his mother. In 1998 he published a book of his music memoirs, Backstage Passes and Backstabbing Bastards.

Korn

Formed 1993, Huntington Beach, CA
 Jonathan Davis (b. Jonathan Houseman Davis, Jan. 18, 1971, Bakersfield, CA), voc.; Brian "Head" Welch, (b. Brian Phillip Welch, June 19, 1970, Torrance, CA), gtr.; James "Munky" Shaffer, (b. June 6, 1970, Rosedale, CA), gtr.; Reggie "Fieldy" Arvizu (b. Reginald Arvizu, Nov. 2, 1969), bass; David Silveria, (b. Sep. 1970, Bakersfield), drums.
 1994—Korn (Immortal/Epic) 1996—Life Is Peachy 1998—Follow the Leader 1999—Issues.

If point of impact of the early-'90s grunge explosion can be traced to Nirvana's Nevermind, the full commercial arrival of rap-metal can be pinpointed to August 1998—the month Korn's aptly titled third album, Follow the Leader, debuted at #1. Rage Against the Machine had reached that landmark two years earlier, but Follow the Leader opened the floodgates; subsequent releases by Korn and fellow rock rappers Limp Bizkit (and to a lesser extent Papa Roach) would all either bow at #1 or entrench themselves in the Top 10 for weeks and months on end well into the turn of the 21st century.

Korn came together in 1993, when mortuary assistant Jonathan Davis, who sang in a band called Sex Art, was invited to join a metal group called Creep. All hailing from Bakersfield, California, its members—Brian "Head" Welch, James "Munky" Shaffer, Reggie "Fieldy" Arvizu, and David Silveria—originally had recorded an album under the moniker L.A.P.D. With Davis handling lead vocals and primary song-writing duties, the band renamed itself Korn and relocated to Orange County's Huntington Beach. A deal with Epic imprint Immortal followed, resulting in the group's self-titled debut released in the fall of 1994.

MTV and radio largely ignored the album, but relentless touring and a rabid fan base (via gigs and the Internet) eventually pushed sales past the 2-million mark. The followup, 1996's Life Is Peachy, debuted at #3 and also went double platinum. The album also gave the band its first taste of MTV rotation with the video for "A.D.I.D.A.S." and a headlining slot on the Lollapalooza festival tour.

By the time the quadruple-platinum Follow the Leader (#1, 1998) hit stores two years later, Korn didn't need invitations to join other festival tours—it headlined its own. Its inaugural Family Values Tour also featured the German industrial band Rammstein, Orgy, Ice Cube, and Limp Bizkit, who garnered a record deal thanks to Korn's support. The special-effects-laden video for the album's "Freak on a Leash" helped Korn win its first Grammy. Released in November 1999, Korn's Issues also debuted at #1 (selling nearly 600,000 copies its first week in stores) and went triple platinum. The band premiered the album in its entirety with a special concert at New York's famed Apollo Theatre in Harlem.

Alexis Korner

Born Alexis Koerner, Apr. 19, 1928, Paris, Fr.; died Jan. 1, 1984, London, Eng.

1969—Alexis Korner's All Stars Blues Incorporated (Transatlantic) 1970—The New Church (Metronome) 1972—Accidentally Born in New Orleans (Warner Bros.), Bootleg Him! 1974—Snape Live on Tour (Brain) 1975—Get Off My Cloud (Columbia) 1978—Just Easy (Intercom) 1979—Me (Jeton).

Alexis Korner is better known for the musicians he discovered than for the music they made in his bands. His group Blues Inc. formed in 1961, was a major factor in the '60s blues revival in England and America.

Educated throughout Europe, Korner was already 34 years old and a veteran of a dozen years in jazz and skiffle groups when he formed Blues Inc. with Charlie Watts (later a Rolling Stone), Cyril Davies, and Dick Heckstall-Smith (later of John Mayall's Bluesbreakers and Colosseum). Among the dozens of musicians to woodshed with Blues Inc. before Korner broke up the group in 1967 were Mick Jagger, Cream's Ginger Baker and Jack Bruce; Hughie Flint (later with Mayall, then McGuinness-Flint); Danny Thompson, John Renbourn, and Terry Cox (all future Pentangle); Graham Bond; and Long John Baldry. Between Blues Inc. and his next band, New Church, with Danish singer Peter Thorup, Korner worked with pre-Led Zeppelin Robert Plant, Humble Pie's Steve Marriott, and Andy Fraser, who later formed Free with assistance from Korner that included suggesting the group's name and arranging for its debut performance.

New Church had a sizable European following, but it wasn't until 1971 and CCS (the Collective Consciousness Society), a 25-member-plus group assembled by noted British pop producer Mickie Most and fronted by Korner and Thorup, that he had his first chart entry, at the age of 43. "Whole Lotta Love." That same year Korner appeared on B.B. King's In London LP, Korner's first American record. He and Thorup toured the U.S. the next year, opening for King Crimson. By tour's end Mel Collins, Ian Wallace, and Boz Burrell (later of Bad Company) had quit Crimson and formed Snape with Korner and Thorup. They recorded the album Accidentally Born in New Orleans around the same time that Bootleg Him!, a retrospective of Korner's work, was finally released in America.

In England Korner had his own popular BBC Radio 1 program. At the time of his death from lung cancer, he was working on a 13-part TV series chronicling the history of rock & roll.

Leo Kottke

Born Sep. 11, 1945, Athens, GA

1969—Twelve String Blues (Oblivion) 1970—Circle 'Round the Sun (Symposium) 1971—Mudlark (Capitol) 1972—Six and Twelve-String Guitar (Takoma); Greenhouse (Capitol) 1973—My Feet Are Smiling; Ice Water 1974—Dreams and All That Stuff 1975—Chewing Pine 1976—Leo Kottke 1971-1976—Did You Hear Me?; Leo Kottke (Chrysalis) 1978—Burnt Lips

1979—Balance 1980—Live in Europe 1982—Guitar Music 1983—Time Step 1986—A Shout Towards Noon (Private Music) 1988—Regards From Chuck Pink 1989—My Father's Face 1990—That's What 1991—Great Big Boy; Essential Leo Kottke (Chrysalis) 1993—Peculiaroso (Private Music) 1997—Standing in My Shoes 2000—One Guitar, No Vocals.

Leo Kottke's propulsive fingerpicked guitar instrumentals and (to a lesser extent) his gallows-humor lyrics have garnered him a solid cult following. He grew up in 12 different states and tried playing violin and trombone. While living in Muskogee, Oklahoma, a cherry bomb planted by a neighborhood kid in a bush exploded, permanently impairing young Kottke's hearing in his left ear. Later, during a brief stint in the Naval Reserve, his right ear was damaged by firing practice. After the navy, Kottke went to St. Cloud State College in Minnesota, but after three years he dropped out and began hitchhiking around and practicing the guitar, which he'd been playing since he was 11.

Kottke's first LP, Twelve String Blues, was a 1969 set at the Scholar Coffee House in Minneapolis. He sent tapes to guitarist John Fahey, who signed him to his own Takoma label and introduced him to manager/producer Denny Bruce (who had played drums for the early Mothers of Invention). Kottke's one album for Takoma, Six and Twelve-String Guitar, was a collection of solo instrumentals that eventually sold 400,000 copies; in its liner notes, Kottke described his voice as "geese farts on a muggy day." He signed with Capitol and put out six albums, using bass and drums as studio backup and introducing his vocals, which weren't so bad. He appeared on the soundtrack of Terence Malick's 1978 film Days of Heaven. Guitar Music was his first all-instrumental LP since his Takoma album; Time Step was produced by T Bone Burnett and included guest vocals by Emmylou Harris. Kottke continues to tour as a soloist and in 1993 released Peculiaroso, produced by Rickie Lee Jones. The David Z-produced Standing in My Shoes followed in 1997. One Guitar, No Vocals includes new material as well as reinterpretations of older pieces.

Kraftwerk

Formed 1970, Dusseldorf, W. Ger.

Ralf Hütter (b. 1946, Krefeld, Ger.), voc., electronics, organ; Florian Schneider-Esleben (b. 1947, Dusseldorf), voc., electronics, woodwinds; Klaus Dinger, drums; Thomas Homann, gr., bass.

1970—Kraftwerk (Philips, Ger.) (— Homann; + Michael Rother, gr.; + Eberhardt Krahnemann, bass) 1972—(— Krahnemann; — Hütter) (+ Hütter) Kraftwerk 2 1973—(— Dinger; — Rother) Ralf and Florian (Vertigo, U.K.) 1974—(+ Klaus Roeder, violin, kybds.; + Wolfgang Flür, electronic perc.) Autobahn 1975—(— Roeder; + Karl Bartos, kybds., voc.) Radio-Activity (Capitol) 1977—Trans-Europe Express 1978—The Man-Machine 1981—Computer World (Warner Bros.) 1986—Electric Cafe (EMI) 1990—(— Flür; — Bartos; + Fritz Hübner, electronic perc.) 1991—The Mix (Elektra).

Kraftwerk's robotic, repetitive, all-electronic music influenced virtually every synthesizer band that followed in its wake. In the mid-'70s the German group literally invented the man-machine sound and image. In 1970 Ralf Hütter and Florian Schneider-Esleben, who had met studying classical music at the Dusseldorf Conservatory, founded Kling-Klang Studio. Their first recorded appearance together is on 1970's Tone Float, the debut by a psychedelic kraut-rock quintet called Organisation. After leaving that group, Hütter and Schneider took the name Kraftwerk ("power plant") and began experimenting with integrating mechanized sounds from everyday life into music. Following numerous lineup changes, during which two members defected to form the influential kraut-rock band Neu!, Kraftwerk was reduced to a duo. After Ralf and Florian (not released in the U.S. until 1975), the pair added Klaus Roeder and Wolfgang Flür.

They found immediate success with their first U.S. release, Autobahn, which went Top 5. The requisite hit was an edited version of the 22-minute minimalist title track about a monotonous journey along the famed German-Austrian superhighway. Kraftwerk's next two LPs were paens to such other modern-world wonders as the radio (Radio-Activity) and the train (Trans-Europe Express). David Bowie cited Ralf and Florian as an influence for his Low and "Heroes" albums. (There is some evidence that Bowie's "V-2 Schneider" is a tribute.) Kraftwerk confirmed its cold, conceptualist image with "Trans-Europe Express" and "Showroom Dummies," both of which became late-'70s disco hits. In 1977 the group toured the U.S. playing electronic instruments and dressed in mannequin outfits. The members later threatened to tour by sending over robots in lieu of themselves while they rested in their studio.

The Man-Machine featured more accessible music. Kraftwerk then disappeared for three years, not emerging until 1981 with the pop-oriented Computer World (#72, 1981), which stayed on the U.S. chart for 42 weeks and produced a #1 U.K. single, "The Model." Meanwhile, the "Trans-Europe Express" melody and the rhythm of "Numbers" made their way into rap, on Afrika Bambaataa's "Planet Rock." After 1986's Electric Café, Kraftwerk kept a relatively low profile, releasing only a best-of, The Mix.

Thanks to the flood of new techno, ambient, and experimental electronic sounds, in the '90s a new set of fans embraced Kraftwerk's catalogue and its ideas. The band headlined the U.K.'s Tribal Gathering concert in 1997 and has played select live dates, festivals, and raves. In 1999 the world exhibition organization Expo 2000 commissioned Kraftwerk to record "Expo 2000," the event's theme song. It doubled as a single.

Billy J. Kramer and the Dakotas

Formed 1963, Liverpool, Eng.

Billy J. Kramer (b. William Howard Ashton, Aug. 19, 1943, Bootle, Eng.), voc.; Tony Mansfield (b. May 28, 1943, Salford, Eng.), drums; Mike Maxfield (b. Feb. 23, 1944, Manchester, Eng.), gtr.; Robin Macdonald (b. July 18, 1943, Nairn, Scot.), gtr.; Raymond Jones (b. Oct. 20, 1939, Oldham, Eng.; d. Jan. 20, 2000), bass. 1964—Little Children (Imperial) N.A.—The Best of Billy J. Kramer and the Dakotas (Capitol).

Billy J. Kramer was the type of crooner that dominated the British pop chart until the Beatles changed the rules. Ironically he owed his fleeting fame largely to the Beatles: He shared their manager, Brian Epstein; their label, EMI-Parlophone; and their producer, George Martin. And two of his biggest hits were written by John Lennon and Paul McCartney.

Liverpudlian William Ashton had already adopted his stage name, Billy J. Kramer, by 1963, when he and his group, the Coasters, were spotted by Brian Epstein. Epstein set Kramer up with a Manchester combo, the Dakotas, and the Beatles' songwriters, John Lennon and Paul McCartney. "Do You Want to Know a Secret?" was his first success, in 1963, followed by "Bad to Me," a hit on both sides of the Atlantic (#9 U.S.). (Kramer later recalled how he'd learned "Do You Want to Know a Secret?" from a crude demo tape John Lennon had recorded in a bathroom.) The singer's biggest non-Lennon/McCartney number was "Little Children" (#7, 1964). His last hit came in 1965 with "Trains and Boats and Planes" (#47, 1965). Soon after, Brian Epstein began devoting more attention to the Beatles, and the Dakotas split up. Kramer continued performing on the cabaret circuit until the mid-'70s, when he unsuccessfully attempted a comeback. Between 1973 and 1983 he released 11 singles on seven different U.K. labels. In 1984 Kramer relocated to Long Island, and he continues to perform on the oldies circuit.

Alison Krauss

Born July 23, 1971, Champaign, IL

1987—Too Late to Cry (Rounder) 1989—Two Highways (with Union Station) 1990—I've Got That Old Feeling 1992—Every Time You Say Goodbye (with Union Station) 1994—I Know Who Holds Tomorrow (with the Cox Family) 1995—Now That I've Found You: A Collection 1997—So Long So Wrong (with Union Station) 1999—Forget About It.

Blessed with an angelic voice and virtuosic fiddling skills, bluegrass propagator Alison Krauss has already accrued more honors than most artists receive in a lifetime. By age 22, she had won two Grammys, been inducted into the Grand Ole Opry, and recorded with some of the best-known artists in country music. She also boasts noteworthy record production skills and fronts Union Station, an acclaimed bluegrass outfit.

Krauss displayed her musical aptitude at an early age. When she was 5 she started taking classical violin lessons in her hometown of Champaign, Illinois, and by age 12 had become the state fiddling champion. She had discovered bluegrass at age 8, and at 14 joined Union Station, a local bluegrass band. That year the group, billed as Alison Krauss and Union Station, mesmerized a throng at the Newport Folk Festival, garnering the young fiddler a recording contract with Rounder Records. Her first solo effort, Too Late to Cry, was augmented by bluegrass legends Jerry Douglas (dobro), Sam Bush (mandolin), and Tony Trischka (banjo).

Two years later, Krauss' bandleading skills were showcased on Two Highways, her first album with Union Station. In 1990 I've Got That Old Feeling, a solo effort (her contract allows her to alternate solo albums and albums with Union Station), won Krauss her first Grammy for Best Bluegrass Album, and in 1992 she received another for Every Time You Say Goodbye. That July she was the first bluegrass artist in 29 years to join the Grand Ole Opry, and that year she was named Female Vocalist of the Year by the International Bluegrass Music Association (IBMA), who also awarded her its Album of the Year award for Every Time You Say Goodbye.

In 1994 she produced and collaborated on the Cox Family's bluegrass/gospel album I Know Who Holds Tomorrow. In 1995 the fiddler confirmed her appeal to a wider audience than bluegrass usually gets when her cover of "When You Say Nothing at All" (#53 pop, #3 C&W)—which appeared first on a Keith Whitley tribute album, then on the Krauss collection Now That I've Found You (#13 pop, #2 C&W)—became a hit. Proving that this success was no fluke, Krauss charted yet again with her next studio albums, So Long So Wrong (#4 C&W, 1997; Grammy for Best Bluegrass Album) and Forget About It (#60 pop, #5 C&W, 1999). In 2000 she headlined Rounder's 30th-anniversary show in New York.

In addition to her own work, Krauss has played on sessions with such diverse artists as Vince Gill, Michael McDonald, Dolly Parton, Phish, and Kenny Rogers—whose "Buy Me a Rose" (#1 C&W, 2000) became Krauss' first time at the top of the charts; she contributed guest vocals. In classic bluegrass style, she continues to combine influences, melding the traditional with the new, thus solidifying her niche as one of the foremost ambassadors of the genre.

Lenny Kravitz

Born Leonard Albert Kravitz, May 26, 1964, New York, NY
1989—Let Love Rule (Virgin) 1991—Mama Said 1993—Are You Gonna Go My Way 1995—Circus 1998—5
2000—Greatest Hits (EMD/Virgin).

Lenny Kravitz survived the ridicule of being called "Mr. (Lisa) Bonet" and the scorn of critics who accused him of being a derivative neohippie to forge a successful career making anachronistic, soul-inflected, '60s-style rock for the '90s.

The only child of white TV news producer Sy Kravitz and black actress Roxie Roker (of TV's The Jeffersons), Kravitz spent the first 10 years of his life in Manhattan, then moved with his family to L.A., where his first musical experience came in the California Boys Choir. He taught himself guitar, bass, piano, and drums. Kravitz attended the exclusive Beverly Hills High School (classmates included Saul Hudson, later Slash, and Mana McKee), where he adopted the David Bowie-inspired, wild-party persona Romeo Blue. In 1985

Lenny Kravitz

Kravitz met actress Lisa Bonet of TV's The Cosby Show. They were married in 1987 and had one daughter, Zoe, before separating in 1991; their divorce became final two years later.

Let Love Rule displayed Kravitz's voice, which sounded uncannily like Elvis Costello's, and his retro-rock style, which sounded uncannily like all sorts of people—the Beatles, Bob Dylan, Jimi Hendrix. While reviews were mixed, the album sold fairly well (#61, 1989), and the title track reached #89 in 1990.

In 1990 Kravitz shared writing and producing chores with Madonna on her "Justify My Love." A year later Prince (discovery Ingrid Chavez (who costarred in his Graffiti Bridge) sued, claiming she had cowritten the song with Kravitz. He admitted to having worked with Chavez, but maintained that they had agreed to keep her role in writing the song "private." The matter was eventually settled out of court. The rhythm track, meanwhile, had been sampled from a Public Enemy song.

In January 1991, as tensions in the Persian Gulf mounted, Kravitz hastily recorded an all-star cover of John Lennon's "Give Peace a Chance" (#54), with guitar work by Slash and vocal and video appearances by over two dozen other artists, including Yoko Ono, Sean Lennon, Bonnie Raitt, Peter Dinklage, Run-DMC, L.L. Cool J, and the Red Hot Chili Peppers.

Mama Said (#39, 1991) sold better than its predecessor, with the polished, Curtis Mayfield-style "It Ain't Over 'Til It's Over" hitting #2, his highest-charting single to date. In 1993 Kravitz released Are You Gonna Go My Way (#12). The hard-rocking, extremely Hendrixesque title track was nominated for two 1994 Grammys. Two years later, Circus (#10, 1995) reflected the singer's reportedly newfound focus on Christianity, with such tracks as "God" and "The Resurrection." Meanwhile, Kravitz suffered the death of his mother that December. The performer joined the 1996 summer H.O.R.D.E. Tour, and in 1998 released 5 (#36, 1998), whose hit "Fly Away" (#12 pop, 1998) won a Grammy Award and received extensive exposure from usage in television commercials. A cover version of the Guess Who's 1970 hit "American Woman," included on the Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me soundtrack, reached #49 in 1999. His next move was a heavily hyped, triple-platinum Greatest Hits (#2, 2000) and the #4 album track "Again."

Kris Kross

Formed 1991, Atlanta, GA

Mack Daddy (b. Chris Kelly, Aug. 11, 1978, Englewood, NJ), voc.; Daddy Mack (b. Chris Smith, Jan. 10, 1979, Atlanta), voc. 1992—Totally Krossed Out (Ruffhouse/Columbia) 1993—Da Bomb 1996—Young, Rich & Dangerous.

Wearing their clothes backward and rapping in prepubescent squeaks, the members of Kris Kross were a teenybopper, hip-hop sensation in the early '90s. The two Chrises were discovered by producer Jermaine Dupri while he was shopping at an Atlanta mall. He groomed and coached them for a year—dressing them in baggy, backward gear—and wrote songs for their multiplatinum debut, Totally Krossed Out (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1992). The duo called themselves the Mack Daddy (Kelly) and Daddy Mack (Smith) and rapped about missing the school bus and sneaking into clubs. Propelled by the multiplatinum single "Jump" (#1, 1992), which sampled the Jackson 5's "I Want You Back," and "Warm It Up" (#13 pop, 1993), Kris Kross became international stars. They toured Europe opening for Michael Jackson and appeared in the film Who's the Man? as well as on a score of TV shows.

By their second album, the boys' voices had begun to deepen, and they accordingly tried to evince a more hardcore attitude, rapping like young gangstas. Whereas Dupri wrote their debut, Kelly contributed some lyrics on Da Bomb (#13 pop, #2 R&B, 1993). Several songs featured dancehall rhythms, with reggae rapper Supercat guesting on "Alright" (#19 pop, #8 R&B, 1993). That single and "I'm Real" (#84 pop, #45 R&B, 1993) garnered some chart success. The pair continued to mature on 1996's Young, Rich & Dangerous (#15 pop, #2 R&B), which boasted a collaboration with Da Brat, Mr. Black, and Aaliyah entitled "Live and Die for Hip Hop" (#72 pop, #36 R&B). The Chrises have long since disappeared from hip-hop, but "Jump" endures as an anthem at professional basketball games.

Kris Kristofferson

Born June 22, 1937, Brownsville, TX

1970—Kristofferson (Monument) 1971—Me and Bobby McGee; Cisco Pete (Columbia); The Silver-Tongued Devil and I (Monument) 1972—Josie; Border Lord; Jesus Was a

Capricorn 1973—Why Me? 1974—Spooky Lady's Sideshow 1975—Who's to Bless and Who's to Blame 1976—Surreal Thing; A Star Is Born soundtrack (Columbia) 1977—Songs of Kristofferson 1978—Easter Island 1979—Shake Hands With the Devil 1980—Help Me Make It Through the Night; To the Bone 1981—Nobody Loves Anybody Anymore 1986—Repossessed 1990—Third World Warrior (Mercury) 1991—Singer/Songwriter (Columbia Legacy) 1995—A Moment of Forever (Justice) 1999—The Austin Sessions (Atlantic). With Rita Coolidge: 1973—Full Moon (A&M) 1974—Breakaway (Monument) 1978—Natural Act (A&M). With Willie Nelson: 1984—Music From SongWriter soundtrack (Columbia); How Do You Feel About Foolin' Around. With the Highwaymen (Willie Nelson, Johnny Cash, and Waylon Jennings): 1985—Highwayman (Columbia) 1990—Highwayman 2 1995—The Road Goes On Forever (Capitol) 1999—Highwayman Super Hits (Sony). With Waylon Jennings, Willie Nelson, and Billy Joe Shaver: 2000—Honky Tonk Heroes (Pedernales/FreeFalls).

Kris Kristofferson finished out the '70s as a movie star, but several of his songs—"Sunday Morning Coming Down," "Me and Bobby McGee," and "Help Me Make It Through the Night"—have become country-rock standards. In the early '70s their boozey romanticism helped define "outlaw" country.

After receiving a Ph.D. from Pomona College, Kristofferson went to Oxford University on a Rhodes scholarship in 1958. He first wanted to be a novelist, but he was also writing songs; he changed his name to Kris Carson and was signed by Tommy Steele's manager. In 1960 he joined the army, but five years later, when he was about to accept a job teaching English at West Point, he decided instead to invest all his time in songwriting once again, encouraged by a meeting with his idol, Johnny Cash. He moved to Nashville in 1965 and tried to pitch his songs while working as a night janitor at the Columbia studios, cleaning ashtrays at the same time Bob Dylan was recording Blonde on Blonde there. (Billy Swan, Kristofferson's future guitarist, later worked the same job.)

His break finally came in 1969, when Johnny Cash gave Kristofferson's song "Me and Bobby McGee" to Roger Miller, who made it a hit on the country chart. Kristofferson appeared on Cash's TV show, and Cash had a hit with "Sunday Morning" in 1969. In March 1971, Janis Joplin's version of "Bobby McGee" went to #1, and about the same time Sammi Smith had a #8 pop hit with "Help Me Make It Through the Night." Kristofferson's own recording debut was released in June 1970. His commercial potential caught up to his critical success on 1971's The Silver-Tongued Devil and I, which went gold. The next year's Border Lord was panned, and from then on his recording career declined. Meanwhile, he made his film debut in 1972's Cisco Pike and two years later appeared in Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid, a film in which his second wife, Rita Coolidge, also appeared. They were married in 1973; they had met two years earlier. From there, Kristofferson established himself as an actor in Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore, The Sailor Who Fell From Grace With the Sea, Semi-Tough, Convoy, and a remake of A Star Is Born with Barbra Streisand.

Kristofferson had a 20-year drinking problem, which he finally kicked in the late '70s. He toured and recorded throughout the '70s, sometimes with Coolidge until their marriage dissolved in December 1979. Since 1980 Kristofferson has appeared in well over a dozen films, including features such as Heaven's Gate (1980), Rollover (1981), Trouble in Mind (1985), and 1984's SongWriter, in which he costarred with fellow "outlaw" Willie Nelson. He has also costarred in numerous made-for-TV movies and miniseries. In 1994 he costarred in Sodbusters, and the following year played a murderous sheriff in director John Sayles' Lone Star. His other '90s films include Sayles' Limbo, Payback (with Mel Gibson), and A Soldier's Daughter Never Cries.

Kristofferson is known for his outspoken leftist political views, which, he claims, led to his break from his longtime label, Columbia, in the late '80s. To date, all of his major country hits have been collaborative efforts with Nelson, Johnny Cash, and Waylon Jennings in the country supergroup the Highwaymen: 1985's "Highwayman" (#1 C&W), "Desperadoes Waiting for a Train" (#15 C&W), and 1990's "Silver Stallion" (#25 C&W). Meanwhile, Kristofferson's solo output has slowed considerably in the last decade. After 1990's politically themed Third World Warrior, it would be five years before he resurfaced with the Don Was-produced A Moment of Forever on the independent Justice label. The Austin Sessions, released by Atlantic in 1999, was comprised of newly recorded versions of Kristofferson's best-known songs with guests including Steve Earle, Jackson Browne, and Vince Gill.

KRS-ONE/Boogie Down Productions

Formed 1986, Bronx, NY

KRS-ONE (b. Lawrence "Kris" Parker, 1966, Bronx), voc.; Scott LaRock (b. Scott Sterling, Bronx; d. Aug. 25, 1987, Bronx), DJ. Boogie Down Productions: 1987—Criminal Minded (B Boy)

(—LaRock; + Kenny Parker [b. Bronx], DJ) 1988—By All Means Necessary (Jive) 1989—Ghetto Music: The Blueprint of Hip Hop 1990—Edutainment 1991—Ya Know the Rules EP; Live Hardcore Worldwide: Paris, London, & NYC 1992—Sex and Violence.

KRS-ONE solo: 1993—Return of the Boom Bap (Jive) 1995—

KRS-ONE 1997—I Got Next 2000—A Retrospective: Dedicated to Scott LaRock 2001—Sneak Attack (In the Paint/Front Page/KOCH).

Beginning as a pioneering gangsta rap group, Boogie Down Productions (BDP) had become the hip-hop vehicle for rapper Kris "KRS-ONE" Parker's philosophical proselytizing by the time of 1990's Edutainment. Parker had embarked on an ambitious anti-violence crusade after his partner, DJ Scott LaRock, was gunned down in 1987 while trying to break up a street fight. Still, it is Boogie Down Production's blend of hip-hop with reggae dancehall and rock influences that sets the group apart from other message-oriented rappers.

Growing up on welfare in Brooklyn and the Bronx, Kris Parker was introduced to rap music through his mother's collection of discs, including some by the Treacherous Three and Grandmaster Flash. Parker ran away from home at 13 and began living on the streets. During the day he would read about philosophy and religion at the library, and at night he'd practice his rapping at the homeless shelters where he lived. At 17 he got his GED.

While staying at the Franklin Armory Shelter in the Bronx, Parker met social worker Scott Sterling, known on weekends as DJ Scott LaRock. The two formed BDP and released Criminal Minded on the independent B Boy record label in 1987. The album's smooth grooves and hard rhymes foreshadowed gangsta rap. In August that year LaRock was killed.

Parker kept going with his brother Kenny, releasing By All Means Necessary (#75 pop, #18 R&B, 1988) the following year. The album introduced the rapper's "edutainment" style of rap in songs such as "My Philosophy" and "Stop the Violence," the latter of which Parker turned into a movement in 1989 to help curb black-on-black violence. BDP's albums sold relatively well. Both Ghetto Music (#36 pop, #7 R&B, 1989) and Edutainment (#32 pop, #9 R&B, 1990) went gold and continued Parker's message of anti-violence. Although Live Hardcore Worldwide failed to make it onto the pop chart, Sex and Violence reached #42 (#20 R&B, 1992). Return of the Boom Bap, KRS-ONE's solo debut, reached #37 (#5 R&B, 1993), while the commercial success of KRS-ONE (#19 pop, #2 R&B, 1995) and I Got Next (#3 pop, #2 R&B, 1997) bolstered BDP/KRS's fan base.

By the late '80s, Parker had begun doing college lecture tours wherein he would touch on a range of topics including Afrocentrism, religion, politics, violence, and his own revisionist views of American history. In 1991 he organized a group of artists including Chuck D, L.L. Cool J, Queen Latifah, British folkie Billy Bragg, and R.E.M.'s Michael Stipe for the consciousness-raising compilation H.E.A.L. (Human Education Against Lies): Civilization Vs. Technology. Toward the end of the '90s KRS began erecting the Temple of Hip-hop—an organization dedicated to the teaching of hip-hop history—and became a mentor/tutor at Harlem's Riverside Church.

In 2000 KRS-ONE bought out of his contract with Jive and began putting together material for Sneak Attack, his first studio album in four years.

Fela Anikulapo Kuti/Femi Kuti

Fela Kuti (b. Fela Ransome Kuti, Oct. 15, 1938, Abeokuta, Nigeria; d. Aug. 2, 1997, Lagos, Nigeria), voc., sax, kybds. 1970—Fela's London Scene (Makossa) 1971—Fela With Ginger Baker Live; Open and Close (EMI) 1972—Shakara 1973—Afrodisiac; Gentleman (Creole) 1975—He Miss Road (EMI); Question Jam Answer (Makossa); Expensive Shit; Roforofo Fight; Mr. Follow-Follow (Phonodisc); Confusion (Polydor); Monkey Banana (Coconut) 1976—Upside Down (London); Na Poi; Yellow Fever; Kalakuta Show (Makossa) 1977—Zombie

(Mercury); Fear Not for Man (Decca); J.J.D. (Johnny Just Drop); Stalemate; Opposite People; Sorrow Tears and Blood (Kalakuta) 1979—Coffin for Head of State (Makossa); V.I.P.: Vagabonds in Power; Unknown Soldier (Phonodisc) 1980—Fela and Roy Ayers: Music of Many Colors; Authority Stealing (Polydor); I.T.T. (International Thief) 1981—Black President (Arista, U.K.); Original Sufferhead 1982—Unnecessary Begging (Makossa); Alagbon Close 1983—Perambulator (Lagos International) 1984—Live in Amsterdam (EMI, Fr.) 1985—Army Arrangement (Celluloid); Shuffling and Shmiling; No Agreement 1987—Teacher Don't Teach Me Nonsense (Mercury) 1988—I Go Shout Plenty 1989—Beasts of No Nation (Shanachie) 1990—Odoo 1992—Black Man's Cry: Classic Fela 1993—The '69 Los Angeles Sessions (Stern's Africa) 1999—Underground System; Live (Shanachie); The Best of Fela Kuti: The Black President (Universal).
 Femi Kuti (b. Olufemi Anikulapo Kuti, June 16, 1962, London, Eng.), voc., sax: 1995—Femi Kuti (Tabu) 1996—Femi Kuti & Positive Force (Melodie) 1999—Shoki Shoki (Barclay Fr.); Shoki Remixed.

Fela Anikulapo Kuti was the leading exponent—and arguably the originator—of afro-beat, an urban West African dance-while-you-protest style that modernized traditional Yoruba music (call-and-response chanting over polyrhythmic drumming) with repeated R&B-style horn figures and funk-styled guitar chords. Keyboardist, saxophonist, vocalist, composer, and bandleader, he was also one of the most politically outspoken figures in international pop.

Fela Kuti was the son of Funmilayo Kuti, a woman well known in Nigeria as a feminist and labor organizer, she exerted early and lasting influence on Fela, although his youthful interests were more musical than political. In 1959 he went to England to study at the Trinity College of Music, and he began playing piano in jazz, R&B, and rock bands with African, British, and American musicians, among them Ginger Baker of Cream. He also took up the alto saxophone.

Returning to Nigeria in the mid-'60s, he formed a band that was successful enough to afford a move en masse to the U.S. in 1969. Alternating between New York and L.A., the band made virtually no impression on American audiences, but influenced by American black militants, Fela returned to Nigeria in 1970 with new ideas about the role of the musician in political change.

He formed a new band, Africa 70 (also spelled Afrika 70), an ensemble of 20 instrumentalists, singers, and dancers, and began making albums that showed the influences of James Brown and Sly and the Family Stone. He set up a communal estate for the band and their families on the outskirts of Lagos, eventually building a hospital and a recording studio on its grounds (the latter with the help of Ginger Baker, who lived in Nigeria for much of the '70s). The site became a meeting place for West African radical artists, writers, and activists and the object of harassment by Nigeria's military junta. Fela's songs were highly critical of government corruption, police brutality and the greed of foreign investors. Nigerian hits (most of his releases) such as "Zombie" and "Monkey Banana" openly mocked the authorities.

After Fela and associates were jailed and beaten by police on a number of occasions, he declared his property the independent Kalakuta Republic. On February 18, 1977, presumably in reaction to that act of treason, 1,000 armed soldiers attacked Kalakuta. In a full day of fighting, Kalakutans were raped, wounded, and arrested, and the settlement was burned. Fela's mother later died from injuries she suffered in the attack. After being released from jail, Fela and his followers exiled themselves to Ghana for a year. There he married his 27 female singers and dancers, giving him 28 wives.

On his return to Nigeria, Fela rebuilt Kalakuta but was banned from giving concerts, which previously had drawn as many as 100,000 fans to each. So, for the first time since 1970, he took his show abroad, traveling through Germany, Italy, and France with his entourage of 70. Back in Nigeria in 1979, he formed a political party, Movement of the People, and ran for the presidency of Nigeria that year until election authorities banned him from the campaign. In 1983 Fela's band, now known as Egypt 80, was joined for an African tour by American jazz trumpeter Lester Bowie, of the Art Ensemble of Chicago (he plays on Perambulator and Fear Not for Man).

Fela had promised to run again for Nigeria's presidency in 1983, but a military government returned to power that year, and in September 1984, as he was about to depart for an international tour, Fela was arrested at Lagos Airport and sentenced to five years in jail for currency smuggling. During his incarceration, his son Femi, who had played sax in the band for several years, took over leadership of Egypt 80, and New York avant-funk bassist and producer Bill Laswell (Maternal, Time Zone) finished production of material that became Army Arrangement, bringing in P-Funk keyboardist Bernie Worrell and other musicians to play over Fela's tapes. Meanwhile, Amnesty International took up Fela's cause and, after another change in Nigeria's government, worldwide publicity led to Fela's release in July 1985. He was immediately flown to appear at the final show of Amnesty International's Conspiracy of Hope Tour in New Jersey. There, looking frail, he played piano with Rubén Blades and percussion with the Neville Brothers.

A year later, a much stronger Fela and Egypt 80 finally toured the U.S., to sizable audiences and great critical acclaim; they returned in 1989 with reggae singer Jimmy Cliff and African reggae star Lucky Dube. In March 1993 Fela was jailed once again in Lagos, on a murder charge stemming from the beating death of a worker at Fela's home. The charge was eventually dropped.

Fela's mammoth recorded output dropped off considerably in the '90s, and in retrospect it may have been due to failing health: he succumbed to AIDS-related heart failure in 1997. Femi, who'd already recorded with some Egypt 80 members, began his own career, leading his band Positive Force with the critically acclaimed Shoki Shoki. His afro-beat was far less political than his father's, but his hit single "Beng Beng Beng" was still banned by the Nigerian government for its sexual content. While rappers Q-Tip and Mos Def sampled Fela's music, Femi collaborated with the Roots for one track on Shoki Shoki, and appeared on rapper Common's Like Water for Chocolate. Fela's former drummer Tony Allen also released the critically acclaimed Black Voices in 1999.

Jim Kweskin Jug Band

Formed 1963

Jim Kweskin (b. July 18, 1940, Stamford, CT), gr., voc.; Bill Keith, pedal steel gr., banjo; Mel Lyman (b. Melvin Lyman, Mar. 24, 1938, Eureka, CA; d. Apr. 1978, Boston, MA), harmonica, banjo; Fritz Richmond, jug, washtub bass; Richard Greene, fiddle; Maria D'Amato Muldaur (b. Maria Grazia Rosa Domenica D'Amato, Sep. 12, 1943, New York, NY), voc., kazoo, tambourine; Geoff Muldaur (b. 1945, Pelham, NY), gr., voc.
 1968—The Best of the Jim Kweskin Jug Band (Vanguard)
 1970—Greatest Hits 1998—Acoustic Swing & Jug.

The Jim Kweskin Jug Band was a slaphappy answer to the earnestness of the "folk revival" as typified by Peter, Paul and Mary. The members rarely wrote their own material but specialized in uncovering folk, blues, jazz, and novelty tunes of the past and remaking them in their raucous acoustic style. Kweskin was merely the nominal leader of the ever-shifting aggregation, Geoff Muldaur was more likely to be heard on lead vocals and guitar. Mana D'Amato, who would later wed Muldaur and have a successful duo and solo career under her married name, also sang and played fiddle, although the latter instrument would eventually be manned by future Blues Project/Seatrain virtuoso Richard Greene. Fritz Richmond blew jug and became a virtuoso on wash-tub bass.

One of the later additions to the band was harmonica player Mel Lyman. Lyman, a self-styled prophet and authoritarian religious leader, split up the group in 1967. Kweskin became a disciple, the others went solo or faded into obscurity. Lyman's followers maintain that he died in 1978 after a long illness, though there are no existing funeral records or death certificates pertaining to the event. They deny rumors that he is still living or that he fled to Europe. Kweskin's solo work includes Jim Kweskin's America (1971), Jim Kweskin Lives Again (1978), and Swing on a Star (1980). In the '90s Kweskin performed with his group, Jim Kweskin and Samoa with the Swinging Tenants. A newly formed Jim Kweskin Jug Band playing the group's old repertoire hit the Northeast club circuit in 2001.

a|b|c|d|e|f|g|h|i|j|k| |m|n|o|p|q|r|s|t|u|v|w|x|y|z

Patti LaBelle

Born Patricia Louise Holt, Oct. 4, 1944, Philadelphia, PA
1977—Patti LaBelle (Epic) 1978—Tasty 1979—It's Alright With Me 1980—Released 1981—Best of/The Spirit's in It (Philadelphia International) 1983—I'm in Love Again 1985—Patti 1986—The Winner in You (MCA) 1989—Be Yourself 1990—This Christmas 1991—Burnin'; Wishing You a Merry Christmas (Hits of Sugarhill) 1992—Live! (MCA) 1994—Gems; Flame 1996—Greatest Hits 1998—Live! One Night Only 1999—Best of Patti LaBelle: 20th Century Masters 2000—When a Woman Loves.

Following the 1976 breakup of Labelle, the group she'd founded 15 years before, Patti LaBelle embarked on a solo career. It took her nearly a decade to achieve massive success; during that time she established herself as a soul diva noteworthy for her three-octave contralto and theatrical stage presence.

LaBelle, whose self-titled debut featured the kind of sassy funk and yearning ballads she'd been singing for years, continued releasing credible albums while initiating an acting career. In 1982 she costarred with Al Green in the Broadway revival of Your Arms Too Short to Box With God and then went on to play a blues singer in the movie A Soldier's Story and star in the Truman Capote/Harold Arlen musical House of Flowers. On television, she appeared in the Emmy-winning Motown Salutes the Apollo and Sisters in the Name of Love as well as the sitcoms A Different World and Out All Night.

On her albums, she became known primarily for duets with performers ranging from her ex-Labelle band mates Nona Hendryx and Sarah Dash to Gladys Knight, Michael Bolton, Bobby Womack, and Grover Washington Jr. "New Attitude," from the Beverly Hills Cop soundtrack, gained her a #17 hit in 1985; her biggest success came with Winner in You and its duet with Michael McDonald, "On My Own" (#1, 1986).

In 1992 winning a Grammy for Best Female R&B Vocal Performance for Burnin', LaBelle lists among her many other awards the Martin Luther King Lifetime Achievement Award and the Ebony Achievement Award; twice she has been the recipient of the NAACP Entertainer of the Year Award. Her appearance in the 1985 Live Aid telecast underscored the charitable interests she continues to promote. She has served as spokeswoman for the National Cancer Institute (all three of her sisters died from the disease) and national chairwoman of the Black Health Research Foundation, and has worked for AIDS awareness.

In 1996 her autobiography, Don't Block the Blessings: Revelations of a Lifetime, became a bestseller. She followed it with a 1999 cookbook, LaBelle Cuisine: Recipes to Sing About and in 2001 Patti's Pearls: Lessons in Living Genuinely, Joyfully, Generously. She has also produced a line of designer cosmetics. Music, however, remains paramount for LaBelle. In 2000 she released When a Woman Loves, a concept album about the female perspective on romance, with songs by Diane Warren.

Labelle

Formed as Patti LaBelle and the Blue Belles, 1961, Philadelphia, PA

Patti LaBelle (b. Patricia Louise Holt, Oct. 4, 1944, Philadelphia), voc.; Nona Hendryx (b. Aug. 18, 1945, Trenton, NJ), voc.; Sarah Dash (b. May 24, 1942, Trenton), voc.; Cindy Birdsong (b. Dec. 15, 1939, Camden, NJ), voc.

1967—(– Birdsong) Dreamer (Atlantic) 1971—(group was renamed Labelle) Labelle (Warner Bros.); Gonna Take a Miracle (with Laura Nyro) (Columbia) 1972—Moonshadow (Warner Bros.) 1973—Pressure Cookin' (RCA) 1974—Nightbirds (Epic) 1975—Phoenix 1976—Chameleon.

Patti LaBelle solo: see entry.

Nona Hendryx solo: see entry.

Sarah Dash solo: 1979—Sarah Dash (Kirshner) 1985—You're All I Need (Capitol).

In its 16 years together, Labelle developed from a fairly conventional '60s girl group—replete with sequined gowns, bouffants, and polished choreography—into a band with a unique, space-queen look, an idealistic political consciousness, and an individual gospel-tinged, funky rock & roll sound. They began as Patti LaBelle and the Blue Belles, bringing together LaBelle and Cindy Birdsong from the Ordettes with Nona Hendryx and Sarah Dash from the Del Capris. Their 1962 single "I Sold My Heart to the Junkman" became a #15 hit, followed by versions of "Danny Boy" (#76, 1964) and "You'll Never Walk Alone" (#34, 1964).

The Blue Belles became a trio in 1967 when Birdsong left to replace Florence Ballard in the Supremes. Although they were hugely popular at the Apollo Theatre and on the soul circuit, they were mismanaged. In 1970 Britisher Vicki Wickham (who knew the Blue Belles from their mid-'60s appearance on the English TV show Ready Steady Go, which she produced) became their manager, revamping their image and leading them toward more contemporary rock. She also encouraged Hendryx to contribute more of her own songs.

In 1971, after Wickham rechristened the group Labelle, it released an eponymous debut on Warner Bros. and toured the U.S. with the Who. That same year the band collaborated with Laura Nyro on Gonna Take a Miracle, a collection of '50s and '60s soul and doo-wop remakes. In 1973 Labelle, at a headline Bottom Line show, joined the glitter trend, debuting its soon-to-be-famous lamé space-cadet suits. In 1974 it became the first black act ever to play New York's Metropolitan Opera House, there it introduced what was to become its only million-selling hit, "Lady Marmalade" (#1, 1975), a shouter about a Creole hooker. The single, written by Bob Crewe, Allen Toussaint, and Kenny Nolan, highlighted its Nightbirds LP, produced by Toussaint in New Orleans.

Labelle: Nona Hendryx, Patti LaBelle, Sarah Dash

Since Hendryx and Patti LaBelle had basic musical differences, Labelle broke up in 1976. Sarah Dash played small clubs and began recording solo albums in 1979. She continues to work as a background singer for various artists, including Keith Richards, the Rolling Stones, LaBelle, and Hendryx. The three were reunited on "Release Yourself," from LaBelle's 1991 solo album Burnin'.

Ladysmith Black Mambazo

Formed 1964, Ladysmith, S.A.

Joseph Shabalala (b. Aug. 28, 1940, S.A.), voc.; Headman Shabalala (b. Oct. 9, 1945, S.A.; d. Dec. 11, 1991, S.A.), voc.; Jockey Shabalala (b. Nov. 4, 1944, S.A.), voc.; Ben Shabalala (b. Nov. 30, 1957, S.A.), voc.; Albert Mazibuko (b. Apr. 16, 1948, S.A.), voc.; Abednego Mazibuko (b. Mar. 12, 1954, S.A.), voc.; Russel Mthembu (b. Mar. 12, 1947, S.A.), voc.; Inos Phungula (b. Mar. 31, 1945, S.A.), voc.; Jabulani Dubazana (b. Apr. 25, 1954, S.A.), voc.; Geophrey Mdletshe (b. Jan. 23, 1960, S.A.), voc.

1984—Induku Zethu (Shanachie) 1985—Ulwandle Oluncgwelwe 1986—Inala 1987—Shaka Zulu (Warner Bros.) 1988—Umthombo Wamanzi (Shanachie); Journey of Dreams (Warner Bros.) 1989—How the Leopard Got His Spots (with Danny Glover) (Windham Hill) 1990—Classic Tracks (Shanachie); Two Worlds One Heart (Warner Bros.) 1991—(– H. Shabalala) 1992—Best of Ladysmith Black Mambazo (Shanachie) 1994—Liph' Iqiniso; Gift of the Tortoise (Warner Bros.); Inkanyezi Nezazi (Flame Tree) 1996—Thuthukani Ngoxolo (Shanachie) 1997—Heavenly 1998—Vol. 2: Best of Ladysmith 1999—In Harmony: Live at the Royal Albert Hall.

Through its participation in Paul Simon's 1986 Graceland album and 1987 tour, Ladysmith Black Mambazo became the most well-known African group in the Western world. Before then, it spent two decades becoming one of the best-selling groups in South Africa. Formed by Joseph Shabalala with his family and friends in the town of Ladysmith, LBM is a Zulu mbube choir who plays a rhythmic cappella music alternately called mbaqanga, Iscathamiya, or "township jive." Iscathamiya was born in the mines of South Africa, where black laborers, living in camps far from home, developed a style of competitive singing and dancing to pass the time. The workers brought the contests, called Cothoza Mfana, back to the townships with them.

Ladysmith Black Mambazo

Joseph went to Durban and sang in bands before returning to Ladysmith to form his own group, with his brothers Headman and Jockey Shabalala (Ben joined later) and his cousins Albert and Abednego Mazibuko. Soon Ladysmith Black Mambazo was the champion of Cothoza Mfana. It got its first recording contract in 1970 and has released more than 30 albums in South Africa, some of which Shanachie rereleased in America (U.S. release dates are listed in discography, above). LBM sang on two of Graceland's tracks, "Diamonds on the Soles of Her Shoes" and "Homeless," and subsequently toured with Simon, also appearing with him on a Showtime TV special and Saturday Night Live.

This fame garnered the group its own deal with Warner. Its 1987 album, Shaka Zulu, produced by Simon and sung partly in English, won a Grammy. Journey of Dreams includes a Simon-arranged version of "Amazing Grace." How the Leopard Got His Spots is a Rudyard Kipling tale narrated by Danny Glover. On Two Worlds One Heart, the group collaborated with George Clinton.

Ladysmith also contributed songs to the soundtracks for Coming to America and Dry White Season, played on harpist Andreas Vollenweider's album Book of Roses, were featured in Michael Jackson's Moonwalker video, have been regular guests on Sesame Street, and appeared in an award-winning 7-Up commercial. In 1992 the band toured South Africa with Simon: the following year it performed as the chorus in The Song of Jacob Zulu, a Steppenwolf Theatre Company production that played on Broadway at New York's Plymouth Theatre. The music won a Drama Desk Award.

Ladysmith Black Mambazo's world fame did not protect it from the brutal injustices of its homeland's political system, however. In December 1991 Headman Shabalala was shot along a highway near Durban: a white security guard was convicted of manslaughter.

LBM collaborated with Dolly Parton, Bonnie Raitt, Phoebe Snow, and Lou Rawls on its 1997 album Heavenly, a record that featured a mix of American and Zulu spirituals, as well as instrumental accompaniment. In 1998 the U.K. division of Heinz used "The Star and the Wise Man," a song from Ladysmith's Inkanyezi Nezazi album (1994), in a series of TV ads marketing soups, baked beans, and spaghetti. The song became a Top 20 single in England. On October 7, 1998, the group's longtime producer West Nkosi, a prime mover on the South African music scene since the '60s, died after sustaining injuries in a car wreck.

Greg Lake: See Emerson, Lake and Palmer

Major Lance

Born Apr. 4, 1941, Chicago, IL; died Sep. 3, 1994, Decatur, GA

1963—The Monkey Time (Okeh) 1976—Um, Um, Um, Um, Um, Um/The Best of Major Lance (Epic) 1977—Live at the Torch (Contempo) 1978—Now Arriving (Tamla) 1995—Everybody Loves a Good Time! The Best of Major Lance (Legacy) 2000—The Very Best of Major Lance.

With Curtis Mayfield writing his material and Carl Davis producing, soul vocalist Major Lance enjoyed many hits in the early '60s and helped establish what became known as the Chicago soul sound, along with the Impressions, Jerry Butler, Gene Chandler, and others. Lance had spent some time as a professional boxer, and he recorded for Mercury before meeting Mayfield and signing with Okeh, Columbia's revitalized "race" label. After hearing the song "The Monkey Time," which Mayfield had written for Lance, Okeh president Carl Davis hired Mayfield as staff producer and Lance as a singer.

Mayfield and Lance's first release, "Delilah" (1962), was a flop. But the followup, "The Monkey Time," shot to #8 in September 1963 and helped kick off a dance trend called the Monkey. The song's orchestral sound (arranged by Johnny Pate) was adapted by Okeh as a "Chicago style" and can be heard on Mayfield's later recordings with the Impressions. Lance's highest-charting pop hit, "Um, Um, Um, Um, Um, Um," hit #5 in February 1964 (the song was also the first major British hit for Wayne Fontana and the Mindbenders the same year).

Although Lance's pop hits ceased soon after, he had several minor R&B chart successes through 1970. He switched to Carl Davis' Dakar Records in 1968 and then to Mayfield's Curtom label. In 1972 Lance recorded for Volt, and in 1974 he signed to Playboy Records, where he rerecorded "Um, Um, Um . . ." with little success. In 1982 eight of Lance's songs were included on the Epic compilation Okeh Soul; prior to its release Lance had emerged from a prison stay for a 1978 cocaine-selling conviction. He died of heart disease at age 55 in 1994.

Jonny Lang

Born Jon Gordon Langseth, Jan. 29, 1981, Fargo, ND
1995—(As Kid Jonny Lang and the Big Bang) Smokin' (Oarfin)
1997—Lie to Me (A&M) 1998—Wander This World.

Although he was only 16 when his major-label debut, 1997's Lie to Me, was released, blues guitarist Jonny Lang got a relatively late start as teen prodigies go. He began playing saxophone at 11 but did not pick up guitar until he was 13, shortly after his father, a former drummer, took him to see a local Fargo, North Dakota, act, the Bad Medicine Blues Band. Lang began taking lessons from the band's guitarist, Ted Larsen, and within months was fronting the group (renamed Kid Jonny Lang and the Big Bang). After a move to Minneapolis and the independent release of the band's Smokin' in 1995, Lang was signed as a solo artist to A&M the following year. Released on the eve of his 16th birthday, Lie to Me debuted at #1 on Billboard's New Artist Chart and earned Lang opening spots on tours with Aerosmith, the Rolling Stones, and B.B. King, as well as a cameo alongside Wilson Pickett in the movie Blues Brothers 2000. Though often lumped alongside fellow young guitar slingers Kenny Wayne Shepherd and Derek Trucks, Lang distinguishes himself by handling his own vocals. Featuring songs ranging from 12-bar blues to soul to funk, Wander This World (#28, 1998) was as much a showcase for his voice as it was his guitar playing. In 1999, shortly before embarking on a tour with Jeff Beck, Lang performed at Mick Jagger's 56th birthday party in France and alongside B.B. King for President Clinton at a PBS-filmed blues extravaganza on the White House lawn. His third A&M album was slated for release in 2001.

k.d. lang

Born Kathryn Dawn Lang, Nov. 2, 1961, Consort, Alberta, Can.
1984—A Truly Western Experience (Bumstead) 1987—Angel With a Lariat (Sire) 1988—Shadowland 1989—Absolute Torch and Twang 1992—Ingénue 1993—Even Cowgirls Get the Blues soundtrack 1995—All You Can Eat (Warner Bros.) 1997—Drag 2000—Invincible Summer.

Because of her androgynous aesthetic, outspoken political views, and proud lesbianism, k.d. lang has frequently been attacked by conservatives, but she's come out smelling like a rose. The "cowgirl from Calgary" claimed three Grammys, including Best Female Pop Vocal Performance in 1992.

Despite her sometimes campy approach to country & western music—she used to perform in rhinestone-studded garb and cat's-eye glasses—lang is an authentic country girl, raised in an isolated rural town. She began singing at age five, and by her teen years was performing at weddings. She grew up listening to classical music and rock, discovering country when she played a Patsy Cline-type character in a play at Red Deer College. In 1982 she answered an ad in an Edmonton newspaper placed by a Western swing band. She and the band, the Reclines, toured Canada for two years.

Her first album was released by an Edmonton indie, to little notice. It was her live shows, where lang could outkitch Minnie Pearl and out-emote Barbra Streisand, that drew the attention of Sire Records head Seymour Stein. Once lang was signed, her more serious side came across, and she toned down her crazy stage act. Angel With a Lariat, recorded with the Reclines and produced by Dave Edmunds, was accordingly rocking.

In 1987 lang did a remake of "Crying" with Roy Orbison. Although the single sold 50,000 copies in the U.S., radio play eluded lang, who was considered too weird for country stations, and too country for rock stations. Perhaps to prove her authenticity, Shadowland (1988) paid homage to the genre's leading ladies. The album was produced by former Cline mentor Owen Bradley and included guest appearances by Loretta Lynn, Kitty Wells, and Brenda Lee. On 1989's Absolute Torch and Twang, lang mixed her crooning (particularly on the magnificent "Pullin' Back the Reins") and honky-tonk sides ("Three Days"). The album won her a 1989 Grammy for Best Female Country Vocal Performance.

In 1990 lang filmed a commercial for the "Meat Stinks" campaign of People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals. Although the spot never aired, Entertainment Tonight ran a story on it. Stations in the cattle-producing Midwest boycotted lang (not that they played her music much before), her mother was swamped with hate mail, and the sign honoring her in her hometown was defaced with the words "Eat Beef Dyke." Lang's career proved surprisingly immune to such controversies: Ingénue's smoldering pop went double platinum and garnered lang one Grammy and five nominations.

Interviewed for the gay magazine The Advocate in 1992, lang, who had been out to anyone paying attention since she was a teen, officially proclaimed her homosexuality. Far from ruining her career, the announcement seemed to fan the fires of media interest. In 1993 New York magazine dubbed her the icon of "Lesbian Chic," and in photographer Herb Ritts' send-up of a Norman Rockwell illustration, a Vanity Fair cover showed her reclining in a barber's chair, clutching and pretending to be shaved by scantily clad model Cindy Crawford. That year lang wrote the soundtrack for Even Cowgirls Get the Blues. She starred in the 1991 Percy Adlon film Salmonberries and has stated that she plans to continue pursuing an acting career.

All You Can Eat (#37, 1995) found lang leaving country music behind altogether and reinventing herself yet again, this time as a sultry dance-pop diva. Drag (#29, 1997), a concept album produced by Craig Street (Cassandra Wilson), used smoking as a metaphor for love and addiction and featured mostly torchy ballads. Included on the record were covers of Peggy Lee's "Don't Smoke in Bed" and the Les Paul and Mary Ford hit "Smoke Rings," lang's wry remake of the Steve Miller Band's "The Joker" was the album's first single.

In 1997 lang performed the song "Surrender" for the closing credits of the James Bond movie Tomorrow Never Dies. She also did more acting, appearing in the TV sitcom Dharma and Greg and playing a feminist film director in the made-for-TV movie Mario Puzo's The Last Don. In 2000 lang released Invincible Summer, a collection of Brazilian surf pop produced by Madonna cohort Damian LeGassick. Also in that year, she appeared in the thriller Eye of the Beholder.

Daniel Lanois

Born Sep. 19, 1951, Hull, Quebec, Can.
1989—Acadie (Opal/Warner Bros.) 1993—For the Beauty of Wynona (Warner Bros.).

Called "the most important record producer to emerge in the '80s" by ROLLING STONE, Daniel Lanois has drawn kudos for his work with U2, Peter Gabriel, and Bob Dylan. Like his sometime-collaborator Brian Eno, Lanois has shown a flair for delicate, atmospheric touches, both in producing material for other musicians and in his own projects as a composer and recording artist. Stressing emotional vibrancy over the technical aspects of making albums, Lanois has recorded in such unlikely settings as castles, dairy barns, and a former porn theater in his efforts to elicit honest, spontaneous performances. The results of this visceral approach have ranged from the soaring intensity of Lanois' Grammy-winning coproduction (with Eno) of U2's The Joshua Tree to the moody, understated passion of his own solo efforts.

Lanois' French-Canadian parents were both musically inclined: His mother sang, and his father (and grandfather) played fiddle. When they separated in 1963, Lanois moved with his mother to a suburb of English-speaking Hamilton, Ontario, where he learned to play guitar and began playing gigs with various Canadian artists. In 1970 Lanois set up a home studio with his brother Robert, 10 years later, after working with numerous local musicians, they opened Grant Avenue Studio in Hamilton.

Lanois' break came in 1979 when Eno, who was beginning to pioneer his starkly dreamy "ambient music," did some recording at his studio. The chemistry between Eno and Lanois in their instrumental experiments came to commercial fruition when Eno was tapped to produce an album for U2. For that effort, 1984's The Unforgettable Fire, Eno enlisted Lanois as coproducer. The results impressed another pop star, Peter Gabriel, who asked Lanois to coproduce his soundtrack to the 1984 film Birdy. Gabriel and Lanois again shared production credit for 1986's So and 1992's Us; Gabriel's most successful albums. Lanois continued to work with U2 as well, coproducing 1987's The Joshua Tree with Eno, served as principal producer for 1991's Achtung Baby, which earned him another Grammy, and teamed up with Eno again to coproduce the band's Grammy-winning 2000 release All That You Can't Leave Behind. In addition, Lanois earned praise for coproducing, with Robbie Robertson, the singer's eponymous solo debut in 1987, and for his work at the boards on Bob Dylan's Oh Mercy (1989) and Time Out of Mind (1997); the Neville Brothers' Yellow Moon (1989); Lucious Jackson's Fever in Fever Out (1996); and for streamlining the efforts of country artists Emmylou Harris (1995's Wrecking Ball) and Willie Nelson (1998's Teatro). In 1989 Lanois released Acadie, his debut as a singer/songwriter. The album was received enthusiastically by critics, as was its 1993 successor, For the Beauty of Wynona. So far, though, the quirky radiance of Lanois' songs hasn't proved as accessible to pop fans as the work of his celebrated clients. Still, he continues to impress his peers and has crossed over to film work, scoring the soundtracks to Billy Bob Thornton's Sling Blade (1996) and All the Pretty Horses (2000), and participating as part of the Million Dollar Hotel Band, along with Bono and Eno, for the soundtrack to the Bono-cowritten, Wim Wenders-directed movie The Million Dollar Hotel (2000).

Bill Laswell/Material

Born Feb. 12, 1955, Salem, IL
1983—Baselines (Celluloid/Elektra/Musician) 1988—Hear No Evil (Venture/Virgin) 1994—Axiom Ambient: Lost in the Translation; Psychonavigation (Subharmonic) 1995—Cymatic Scan; Bass Terror (Sub Rosa); Silent Recoil (Low) 1996—Second Nature (Subharmonic); Sacred System, Chapter One: Book of Entrance (ROIR); Oscillations (Subharmonic); Outland, vol. 2 (EFA); Psychonavigation, vol. 2: Dark Massive/Disengage: Ambient Compendium (Cleopatra); Equations of Eternity (WordSound) 1997—City of Light (Sub Rosa); Dub Meltdown (WordSound); Sacred System, Chapter 2 (Roir); Ambience Dub, vol. 1 (APC); Ambience Dub, vol. 2 1998—Oscillations, vol. 2: Advanced Drum'n'Bass (Sub Rosa); Outland, vol. 3 (EFA); Equations of Eternity, vol. 2: Veve (WordSound); Nagual Suite (RCA); Jazzonia (Douglas); Divination: Sacrifice (Meta); Dreams of Freedom: Ambient Translations of Bob Marley in Dub (Axiom/Island); Panthalassa: The Music of Miles Davis, 1969-1974 (Columbia) 1999—Dark Side of the Moog 7 (EFA); Boniche Dub (APC); Invisible Design (Tzadik); Psychonavigation, vol. 4 (EFA); Rasa: Serene Timeless Joy (Meta); Imaginary Cuba

(RCA); Broken Vessels (Velvet); Panthalassa: The Remixes (Columbia) 2000—Permutation (ION); Emerald Aether: Shape Shifting (Shanachie); Dub Chamber 3 (Roi); Outland, vol. 4 (EFA); Moog 6 (Fax World); Lo-Def Pressure (Sub Rosa).

With Material, formed 1979, New York, NY:

Laswell, bass; Michael Beinhorn, kybds.; Fred Maher, drums. 1979—Temporary Music 1 EP (Zu) 1981—Temporary Music 2 EP (Red Music U.K.); Busting Out EP (ZE-Island); Memory Serves (Celluloid/Elektra/Musician) 1982—(- Maher; + Nicky Skopelitis [b. Jan. 19, 1960, New York], gr.) One Down (Celluloid/Elektra) 1986—Red Tracks (Red) 1989—(- Beinhorn) Seven Souls (Virgin) 1991—The Third Power (Axiom) 1994—Hallucination Engine. With Praxis: 1984—Praxis EP (Celluloid) 1992—Transmutation (Axiom).

Bassist and producer Bill Laswell is a rampant musical cross-pollinator and conceptualist, forging new directions for the fusion of jazz, rock, and funk. Laswell grew up in Detroit, where he played in funk bands. He moved to New York in 1978 and formed Matenal, originally to back Daevud Allen (Gong) on a U.S. tour. The group soon became a floating vehicle for musical experimentation.

The original incarnation of Matenal was based around the rhythm section of Laswell, Michael Beinhorn, and Fred Maher. They recorded a few EPs, including the club single "Busting Out" with Nona Hendryx [see entry] singing, and the album Memory Serves, which featured Sonny Sharrock, Fred Frith, George Lewis, and Henry Threadgill. Minus Maher but plus guitarist Nicky Skopelitis, Matenal recorded the funky One Down, again featuring Hendryx and Frith as well as Archie Shepp, Nile Rodgers, Oliver Lake, and Whitney Houston. Red Tracks compiled the Temporary Music EPs. Beinhorn departed in 1989, going on to produce such artists as Soundgarden.

On Seven Souls, Matenal explored Arabic music, featuring guests Fahiem Dandan, Simon Shaheen, and L. Shankar, as well as beat author William Burroughs. Laswell produced rather than played on The Third Power, which featured Bootsy Collins, the Jungle Brothers, Bernie Worrell, Sly Dunbar, and Robbie Shakespeare (Laswell produced Sly and Robbie's solo albums). On Hallucination Engine, Matenal explored ambient music; the single "Mantra" was remixed by British ambient artists the Orb. Laswell's collaborators included Wayne Shorter, Shaheen, Worrell, Collins, Dunbar, Burroughs, and Shankar.

Laswell's work outside of Matenal has been equally varied and fruitful. In 1982 he formed Massacre with Frith and Maher, releasing the album Killing Time. That year he also played bass on Laune Anderson's "Mr. Heartbreak." Laswell's first solo album features key players of the downtown New York music scene of the '80s, including cowriter Beinhorn, Martin Bisi, Ronald Shannon Jackson, Ralph Carney, and Daniel Ponce. The album was released by Celluloid, a label Laswell helped form and run.

In 1983 Laswell cowrote and produced Herbie Hancock's hit "Rockit" and won a Grammy for a track on Hancock's following album, Sound-System. In 1984 Laswell produced the single "World Destruction," featuring Afrika Bambaataa and Johnny Lydon. Calling himself Praxis, Laswell experimented with hip-hop and a drum machine on a 1984 EP, and played with Bootsy Collins and guitarist Buckethead on a 1992 album. His 1988 solo album, Hear No Evil, features violinist Shankar and Skopelitis. Laswell has played with numerous other acts, including the Golden Palominos, Last Exit, Brian Eno, David Byrne, Peter Gabriel, Fab Five Freddy, John Zorn, and Peter Brotzmann. He has produced such artists as Mick Jagger, Yellowman, Motorhead, Iggy Pop, and the Ramones.

In 1988 Laswell formed Axiom Records in a partnership with Island Records. There he has continued to be a post-modern Renaissance man, releasing (out-of-this-) world music, experimental jazz, and mutant rock. In 1990 he established Greenpoint Studio. He traveled to the remote village of Jajouka, Morocco, in 1991 to record Bachir Attar and the Master Musicians of Jajouka, released on Axiom as Apocalypse Across the Sky (1992).

The second half of the '90s found Laswell more prodigious than ever, releasing between five and nine albums per year. Panthalassa: The Music of Miles Davis, 1969-1974 (1998) subjects recordings from Davis' jazz-rock fusion and hard-funk phases to electronic reconstruction. Laswell did much the same thing with the work of reggae legend Bob Marley on Dreams of Freedom (1998), and with Cuban and Irish music on Imaginary Cuba (1999) and Emerald Aether (2000), respectively.

Cyndi Lauper

Born Cynthia Anne Stephanie Lauper, June 22, 1953, New York, NY

1983—She's So Unusual (Portrait) 1986—True Colors 1989—A Night to Remember (Epic) 1993—Hat Full of Stars 1995—12 Deadly Cyns and Then Some (Epic) 1997—Sisters of Avalon (Sony) 1998—Merry Christmas . . . Have A Nice Life!

With her little-girl voice, thrift-store style, and art-school training, Cyndi Lauper was one of the earliest female icons to harness MTV's influence and become a pop star. Her debut album was the first in history by a woman to have four Top 5 singles; led by "Girls Just Want to Have Fun," it also won her the unlikely title of "Woman of the Year" from Ms magazine.

Lauper was raised in Brooklyn and Queens by her waitress mother, a life she paid homage to when her mother starred in the video for "Girls." After dropping out of high school and spending a few years "finding herself," Lauper sang for cover bands on Long Island. She almost ruined her voice and sought training from Katherine Agresta, an opera singer and rock & roll vocal coach. She then spent four years singing and writing songs for Blue Angel, a rootsy rock band whose strong New York following never translated into sales for their eponymous 1980 Polydor album.

Lauper filed for bankruptcy after Blue Angel split, and for a while sang in a Japanese restaurant dressed like a geisha until her manager and boyfriend David Wolff landed her a deal with the CBS imprint Portrait. She's So Unusual (#4, 1983) became an international hit, eventually selling more than 5 million records in the U.S. alone, led by "Girls" (#2, 1983), "All Through the Night" (#5, 1984), "She Bop" (#3, 1984), and "Time After Time" (#1, 1984). The album, produced by Rick Chertoff and featuring Rob Hyman and Eric Bazilian of the Philadelphia band the Hooters [see entry], won Lauper a Grammy and put the singer on the brink of superstardom. On The Tonight Show, the rainbow-haired singer with the Betty Boop voice claimed that professional wrestler Captain Lou Albano was her mentor and had taught her the keys to fame: politeness, etiquette, and grooming.

Lauper was never able to match the success of her debut, although 1986's True Colors' title track went to #1 and featured "Change of Heart" (#3, 1986) and a cover of Marvin Gaye's "What's Going On" (#12, 1987). In 1985 she had a #10 hit with "The Goonies 'R' Good Enough," from the film The Goonies. (Lauper's own ventures into acting have proved ill-fated: One movie never made it out of the studio, and 1988's Vibes and 1993's Life With Mikey flopped.)

A Night to Remember was trashed by critics and stalled at #37 on the pop chart; it contained one hit, "I Drove All Night" (#6, 1989). In 1990 she ended her personal and professional relationship with Wolff; the following year she married actor David Thornton, with Little Richard presiding.

She returned in 1993 with Hat Full of Stars (#112), reasserting control over her career (coproducing and cowriting all tracks) and proving to critics that she had grown with the times. The album deals with such issues as racism, backstreet abortions, and incest; collaborators include Mary Chapin Carpenter, Junior Vasquez, and her old friends the Hooters. The album faltered commercially, however, yielding no hit singles.

In 1994 Lauper made a comeback of sorts in the U.K. with the release of the anthology 12 Deadly Cyns and Then Some, which reached #2, and "Hey Now (Girls Just Want to Have Fun)," a remix of her first hit, which topped the singles chart. Despite the remix's appearance in the movie To Wong Foo, Thanks for Everything, Julie Newmar, the album fared less well when later issued in the U.S. (#81 pop, 1995). Its followup, Sisters of Avalon (#188 pop, 1997), Lauper's first album of new material in four years, also went nowhere.

Lead Belly

Born Huddie Ledbetter, ca. 1885, Mooringsport, LA; died Dec. 6, 1949, New York, NY
 1953—Lead Belly's Last Sessions, vol. 1 (Folkways); Lead Belly's Last Sessions, vol. 2 1968—Leadbelly Sings Folk Songs
 1969—Leadbelly (Capitol) 1973—Leadbelly (Fantasy)
 1989—Alabama Bound (RCA); Bourgeois Blues (Collectables)
 1991—King of the Twelve-String Guitar (Columbia/Legacy); Midnight Special (Rounder); Gwine Dig a Hole to Put the Devil In; Let It Shine on Me 1994—The Titanic; Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen; Go Down Old Hannah 1996—Where Did You Sleep Last Night (Folkways) 1997—Bourgeois Blues.

Lead Belly (sometimes spelled "Leadbelly"), the self-styled "king of the 12-string guitar," was one of the modern world's prime links to rural traditions. He helped inspire the folk and blues revivals of the '50s and '60s.

Lead Belly grew up in Louisiana and Texas, where his family moved when he was five. He was eight when he started playing the Cajun accordion (windjammer). According to Lead Belly, at age seven he broke up arguments between his parents by hitting his father in the head with a poker and threatening him with a shotgun. Traveling around in his early teens, the singer picked up music that dated back to slave days, and by the time he was 17 he was playing guitar—first an 8-string and then the 12-string. At 18 he was forced to leave his home after he impregnated the same girl twice without marrying her. He went to West Texas to pick cotton and began playing with his friend and mentor Blind Lemon Jefferson in Dallas.

But Lead Belly's troubles followed him, and he spent a year in prison on the Harrison County chain gang for assaulting a woman. He escaped and adopted the name Walter Boyd. When he was 33 he shot and killed a man in an argument over a woman, and on June 7, 1918, he received a 30-year sentence. Five years later, however, Lead Belly wrote a song begging Texas governor Pat Neff for a pardon; in 1925 Neff complied. Lead Belly's hollering style reflected his hard years in prison, and it wasn't long before he was back behind bars—for attempted murder—at Louisiana's Angola penitentiary. It was there that folklorists John A. and Alan Lomax discovered him in 1933 while recording music for the Library of Congress. The Lomaxes recorded the incarcerated Lead Belly singing an updated version of the song that had charmed Pat Neff. This time Governor O.K. Allen heard it and, likewise, let Lead Belly out of prison in 1934.

Upon his release, the Lomaxes brought him to New York. They published a book about him in 1936, and he recorded his best-known songs: "The Rock Island Line," "The Midnight Special," and "Goodnight Irene." Whether Lead Belly wrote, adapted, or simply remembered the songs and copyrighted them for himself is unknown, though it is certain that he was the first to bring them to the public. In 1939 Lead Belly landed in jail yet again (New York's Rikers Island) and served two years for assault. But all of this only enhanced his legend. While in New York he played with Pete Seeger, Woody Guthrie, and Sonny Terry and later toured the East Coast.

Ironically, six months after the singer died of Lou Gehrig's disease in 1949, his "Goodnight Irene" became a folk hit for the Weavers. There were many repackagings of his work in the late '60s to early '70s, and in 1976 a film about his life, directed by Gordon Parks, was released.

Led Zeppelin

Formed 1968, England
 Jimmy Page (b. James Patrick Page, Jan. 9, 1944, Heston, Eng.), grt.; John Paul Jones (b. John Baldwin, Jan. 3, 1946, Sidcup, Eng.), bass, kybds.; Robert Plant (b. Aug. 20, 1948, Bromwich, Eng.), voc.; John "Bonzo" Bonham (b. John Henry Bonham, May 31, 1948, Redditch, Eng.; d. Sep. 25, 1980, Windsor, Eng.), drums.

1969—Led Zeppelin (Atlantic); Led Zeppelin II 1970—Led Zeppelin III 1971—Untitled (known as Runes or Zoso) 1973—Houses of the Holy 1975—Physical Graffiti (Swan Song/Atlantic) 1976—Presence; The Song Remains the Same 1979—In Through the Out Door 1982—Coda 1990—Led Zeppelin (Atlantic) 1992—Remasters 1993—Led Zeppelin—Boxed Set 2; Led Zeppelin—The Complete Studio Recordings 1997—The BBC Sessions 1999—Early Days: The Best of Led Zeppelin, vol. 1 2000—Latter Days: The Best of Led Zeppelin, vol. 2.

It wasn't just Led Zeppelin's thunderous volume, sledgehammer beat, and edge-of-mayhem arrangements that made it the most influential and successful heavy-metal pioneer, it was the band's finesse. Like its ancestors the Yardbirds [see entry], Zeppelin used a guitar style that drew heavily on the blues; its early repertoire included remakes of songs by Howlin' Wolf, Albert King, and Willie Dixon (who later won a sizable settlement from the band in a suit in which he alleged copyright infringement; see his entry for details). But Jimmy Page blessed the group with a unique understanding of the guitar and the recording studio as electronic instruments, and of rock as sculptured sound, like Jimi Hendrix. Page had a reason for every bit of distortion, feedback, reverberation, and out-and-out noise that he incorporated. Few of the many acts that try to imitate Led Zeppelin can make the same claim.

Page and Robert Plant were grounded also in British folk music and fascinated by mythology, Middle Earth fantasy, and the occult, as became increasingly evident from the band's later albums (the fourth LP's title is comprised of four runic characters). A song that builds from a folk-baroque acoustic setting to screaming heavy metal, "Stairway to Heaven," fittingly became the best-known Led Zeppelin song and a staple of FM airplay, although like most of the group's "hits," it was never released as a single. Though critically derided more often than not, Led Zeppelin was unquestionably one of the most enduring bands in rock history, with U.S. sales of more than 100 million records.

When the Yardbirds fell apart in the summer of 1968, Page was left with rights to the group's name and a string of concert obligations. He enlisted John Paul Jones, who had done session work with the Rolling Stones, Herman's Hermits, Lulu, Dusty Springfield, and Shirley Bassey. Page and Jones had first met, jammed together, and discussed forming a group when both were hired to back Donovan on his Hurdy Gurdy Man LP. Page had hoped to complete the group with drummer B.J. Wilson of Procol Harum and singer Terry Reid. Neither was available, but Reid recommended Plant, who in turn suggested Bonham, drummer for his old Birmingham group, Band of Joy. The four first played together as the session group behind P.J. Proby on his Three Week Hero. In October 1968 they embarked on a tour of Scandinavia under the name the New Yardbirds. Upon their return to England they recorded their debut album in 30 hours.

Adopting the name Led Zeppelin (allegedly coined by Keith Moon), they toured the U.S. in early 1969, opening for Vanilla Fudge. Their first album was released in February; within two months it had reached Billboard's Top 10. Led Zeppelin II reached #1 two months after its release, and since then every album of new material has gone platinum; five of the group's LPs have reached #1. After touring almost incessantly during its first two years together, Zeppelin began limiting its appearances to alternating years. The band's 1973 U.S. tour broke box-office records throughout the country (many of which had been set by the Beatles), and by 1975 its immense ticket and album sales had made Led Zeppelin the most popular rock & roll group in the world. In 1974 the quartet established its own label, Swan Song. The label's first release was Physical Graffiti (#1, 1975), the band's first double-album set, which sold 4 million copies.

On August 4, 1975, Plant and his family were seriously injured in a car crash while vacationing on the Greek island of Rhodes. As a result, the group toured even less frequently. That and speculation among fans that supernatural forces may have come into play also heightened the Zeppelin mystique (Plant believed in psychic phenomena, and Page, whose interest in the occult was well known, once resided in Boleskine House, the former home of infamous satanist Aleister Crowley).

In 1976 Led Zeppelin released Presence, a 4-million seller.

Led Zeppelin: Jimmy Page, John Bonham, Robert Plant, John Paul Jones

The group had just embarked on its U.S. tour when Plant's six-year-old son, Karac, died suddenly of a viral infection. The remainder of the tour was canceled and the group took off the next year and a half. In late 1978 Plant, Page, Jones, and Bonham began work on In Through the Out Door, their last group effort. They had completed a brief European tour and were beginning to rehearse for a U.S. tour when, on September 25, 1980, Bonham died at Page's home of what was described as asphyxiation; he had inhaled his own vomit after having consumed alcohol and fallen asleep. On December 4, 1980, Page, Plant, and Jones released a cryptic statement to the effect that they could no longer continue as they were. Soon thereafter it was rumored that Plant and Page were going to form a band called XYZ (ex-Yes and Zeppelin) with Alan White and Chris Squire of Yes; the group never materialized. In 1982 Zeppelin released Coda (#6, 1982), a collection of early recordings and outtakes.

Plant and Page each pursued solo careers [see entries]. Jones released a soundtrack album, Scream for Help, in 1986, and has worked in production. The remaining members of Zeppelin have reunited three times. They played in 1985 at Live Aid (with Phil Collins and Tony Thompson on drums), and in May 1988 (with John Bonham's son, Jason, on drums) at the Atlantic Records 40th-anniversary celebration at New York's Madison Square Garden. They also performed at Jason Bonham's wedding. Zeppelin's concert movie, The Song Remains the Same (originally released in 1976), is still a staple of midnight shows around the country, and Zeppelin tunes like "Stairway to Heaven," "Kashmir," "Communication Breakdown," "Whole Lotta Love," and "No Quarter" are still in heavy rotation on classic-rock radio playlists. In 1990 a St. Petersburg, Florida, station kicked off its all-Zeppelin format by playing "Stairway to Heaven" for 24 hours straight. (Less than two weeks later, the station had expanded its playlist to include Pink Floyd.)

In fall 1994 Page and Plant participated in the No Quarter album, which they followed up with a new 1998 studio effort, Walking Into Clarksdale. Jones, who was not invited to join them, was by then working and touring with Diamanda Galás, with whom he recorded 1994's The Sporting Life. In 1997 a live-in-the-studio collection of Zeppelin's BBC radio sessions peaked at #12 and went platinum. In 1999 the recording industry announced that the band was only the third act in music history to achieve four or more diamond-certified albums, signifying sales of 10 million copies.

Albert Lee

Born Dec. 21, 1943, Leominster, Eng.
1979—Hiding (A&M) 1982—Albert Lee 1986—Speechless (MCA) 1987—Gagged but Not Bound 2000—Con Sabor Latino (WEA Latina).

British guitarist Albert Lee has earned a strong reputation as a sideman for Jackson Browne, Dave Edmunds, Joan Armatrading, Joe Cocker, Eric Clapton, Emmylou Harris, Rodney Crowell, and others. Beyond his adaptability, he is one of the few English guitarists more interested in country music than in blues. Lee began playing piano at age seven, emulating Jerry Lee Lewis. But by 16 he had switched to guitar. In 1964 he joined Chris Farlowe's backup group, the Thunderbirds, which also included Carl Palmer. The Thunderbirds were a popular R&B outfit in England, and Jimmy Page and Steve Howe have cited Lee's work as an early influence. In 1968 the band dissolved. Lee joined Country Fever and later formed the country-influenced Heads, Hands and Feet. After three albums, that band folded, and Lee went on to play on Jerry Lee Lewis' The Session LP.

In 1973 Lee joined Rick Grech with the Crickets, still singing Buddy Holly's tunes; a year later he was in L.A. doing session work, including a stint with Don Everly. He joined Joe Cocker for his 1974 tour of Australia and New Zealand and A&M offered Lee a solo contract in 1975. Before he got around to finishing an album, though, Lee joined Emmylou Harris' Hot Band. He stayed in Harris' band for two years and left in 1978 to finally record his solo album but continued to play on Harris' records as well.

Instead of touring to support his own album, Lee took to the road in 1979 as part of Eric Clapton's band. He played on Clapton's live LP Just One Night (1980) and on his studio albums, Another Ticket (1981) and Money and Cigarettes (1983). Between tours with Clapton, he finished a second solo album. He has also toured with the Everly Brothers, among others.

Alvin Lee: See Ten Years After

Arthur Lee: See Love

Brenda Lee

Born Brenda Mae Tarpley, Dec. 11, 1944, Atlanta, GA
1960—Brenda Lee (Decca); This Is . . . Brenda 1961—Emotions; All the Way 1962—Sincerely; Brenda, That's All 1963—All Alone Am I; Let Me Sing 1965—Too Many Rivers 1966—10 Golden Years 1975—Brenda Lee Now (MCA) 1976—L.A. Sessions 1980—Take Me Back; Even Better 1991—The Brenda Lee Anthology, vol. 1 1956–1961; The Brenda Lee Anthology, vol. 2 1962–1980 1999—Rockin' Around the Christmas Tree (Decca).

Singer Brenda Lee's decade-spanning recording career began when she was only 12, by the time she was 16, her single "Rockin' Around the Christmas Tree" (#14, 1960) became an international hit. By age seven Lee was singing on radio and TV shows in Atlanta. Her father died when she was eight, and her income helped support the family. In 1956 she met Red Foley's manager, Dub Albritten. He booked her on shows with Foley, which led to national TV exposure. On July 30 of that year Lee entered a Nashville studio with Owen Bradley (producer of Patsy Cline and later Loretta Lynn) and recorded "Rockin' Around the Christmas Tree." Lee soon toured Europe, where, to appease French promoters who had thought she was an adult, Albritten spread the rumor that she was a 32-year-old midget.

Back in the U.S., Lee next recorded some of her biggest hits: "Sweet Nothings" (#4, 1960), "I'm Sorry" (#1, 1960), "I Want to Be Wanted" (#1, 1960), and many other early-'60s Top 10s. She soon became known as "Little Miss Dynamite," and by the time she was 21 she had cut 256 sides for Decca Records.

In the '70s Lee's hits were on the country chart rather than the pop chart. She scored with "If This Is Our Last Time" (#30 C&W, 1971), "Nobody Wins" (#3 C&W, 1973), and three Top 10s in 1974. She continued to record country hits while also doing a syndicated Nashville interview show. Lee had a small acting role in Smokey and the Bandit 2, and she sang the title song of Neil Simon's Only When I Laugh. In 1988 she joined Loretta Lynn and Kitty Wells as guests on k.d. lang's Shadowland album, produced by Owen Bradley. Lee remains an active live performer on the oldies and country circuits. Rockin' Around the Christmas Tree, a 1999 compilation, boasts three new tracks.

In 1984 Lee received a Governors Award from the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences, the organization that awards the Grammy. She has also received numerous other distinctions. Her lifetime record sales are estimated at over 100 million copies.

Peggy Lee

Born Norma Deloris Egstrom, May 6, 1920, Jamestown, ND 1957—The Man I Love (Capitol) 1969—Is That All There Is?
 1980—The Best of Peggy Lee (MCA) 1990—*Capitol
 Collectors Series: The Early Years; The Peggy Lee Songbook:
 There'll Be Another Spring* (Musicmasters) 1992—*Moments
 Like This* (Chesky) 1998—Miss Peggy Lee (Capitol) 1999—
The Complete Recordings 1941–1947 (Columbia/Legacy).

Peggy Lee's subdued singing style, which embraces jazz, blues, Latin, swing, and pop, first came to public attention in her work with Benny Goodman's orchestra, especially in 1943, when she released the hit "Why Don't You Do Right?" Lee's mother died when she was 4, and she began working on a farm by 11 and singing professionally at 14, first at a Fargo, North Dakota, radio station and later at a Palm Springs hotel, where she met Goodman.

After her hit with Goodman's band, she married the group's guitarist, David Barbour, and retired for several years to have a child before she and Barbour began writing new material together, with Peggy usually providing the lyrics. Lee was one of the forerunners of the rock trend that encouraged singers to write their own material, and with Barbour she wrote, among others, "I Don't Know Enough About You," "Mañana," and "It's a Good Day." She has also collaborated with Sonny Burke, Duke Ellington, Quincy Jones, Johnny Mandel, and Dave Grusin. Lee's hit most covered by rock performers is "Fever" (#8, 1958).

She was one of the first old-guard performers to recognize the Beatles' talents, and as a "reward," Paul McCartney later wrote "Let's Love" for her, which became the title of her Atlantic debut in 1974. In 1969 she had one of her biggest hits with Leiber and Stoller's "Is That All There Is?," arranged by Randy Newman.

Lee appeared in three films, making her debut in 1951's Mr. Music, followed by a remake of The Jazz Singer with Danny Thomas (1953), and Pete Kelly's Blues (1955), for which she was nominated for an Academy Award. In 1955 she cowrote songs and voiced the character Peg in Disney's animated feature film Lady and the Tramp. She also cowrote with Victor Young and sang the title songs of the films Johnny Guitar and Tom Thumb.

Although she suffered bouts of poor health, she continued to perform and record new studio albums into the '90s. In 1983 she mounted a short-lived one-woman Broadway show entitled Peg. Her autobiography, Miss Peggy Lee, was published in 1989, and was a bestseller in the U.K. She has received numerous awards throughout her career, and was a founding artist of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. In 1994 she received the Society of Singers' Lifetime Achievement Award. Declining health, including two strokes, kept her out of the public eye in the late '90s, though numerous retrospectives have allowed her legacy to endure.

The Left Banke

Formed 1965, New York, NY

Steve Martin, voc.; Tom Finn, bass; Jeff Winfield, gtr.; George Cameron, drums; Michael Brown (b. Michael Lookofsky, Apr. 25, 1949, Brooklyn, NY), organ, piano, harpsichord.
 1967—Walk Away Renee/Pretty Ballerina (Smash) (– Winfield; + Rick Brand, gtr.; – Brown) 1969—The Left Banke Too
 1986—Strangers on a Train (Camerica) 1992—There's Gonna Be a Storm: The Complete Recordings, 1966–1969 (Mercury).

Left Banke leader Michael Brown began studying piano and harpsichord when he was eight. At 16 he wrote "Walk Away Renee." Two years later, in 1966, his band, the Left Banke, released the song as its first single, and it became a #5 hit. The followup, "Pretty Ballerina" (#15, 1967), was similar to "Renee" in its classical-tinged melody, choirboy vocals, and strings-and-harpsichord accompaniment (then dubbed baroque rock). After composing the bulk of the material for the Left Banke's debut LP and a second album, Brown left the group. The Left Banke continued unsuccessfully without him, breaking up in 1969.

Brown's next band, Montage, was not particularly successful, and he then formed Stones with vocalist Ian Lloyd but left before its big 1973 hit, "Brother Louie" (written by members of Hot Chocolate). Brown then worked for a while as an A&R man for Mercury Records.

In 1976 he formed the Beckies, who lasted long enough to record a single LP for Sire. Since then Brown has remained mostly out of sight, surfacing briefly as a sideman with New York singer Lisa Burns. "Walk Away Renee" was covered by the Four Tops in 1968 and was once again a smash. Martin, Finn, and Cameron regrouped without Brown in 1978 for an album released eight years later on the independent Camerica label, Strangers on a Train.

Lemonheads

Formed 1986, Boston, MA

Evan Dando (b. Mar. 4, 1967, Boston), voc., gtr., drums; Ben Deily, voc., gtr., drums; Jesse Peretz, bass.

1986—Laughing All the Way to the Cleaners EP (Huh-Bag) (+ Doug Trachten, drums) 1987—Hate Your Friends (Taang!) (- Trachten; + John Strohm, gtr.) 1988—Creator 1989—Create Your Friends (- Strohm); Lick (- Deily; - Peretz; + David William Ryan [b. Oct. 20, 1964, IN], drums) 1990—Lovey (Atlantic) 1991—Favorite Spanish Dishes (- Peretz; + Juliana Hatfield [b. July 27, 1967, Wicasset, ME], bass) 1992—It's a Shame About Ray (- Hatfield; + Nick Dalton [b. Nov. 14, 1964, Austral.], bass) 1993—Come On Feel the Lemonheads 1996—Car Button Cloth (TAG/Atlantic) (+ Bill Gibson, bass; + Murph [b. Emmett Patrick Murphy], drums).

Lemonheads started out as a democratic pop-punk band in the style of Hüsker Dü and the Replacements, but evolved into a vehicle for singer/songwriter Evan Dando's catchy postpunk pop songs. By the early '90s, Dando's music, together with his cover-boy good looks, had won the band a succession of magazine spreads.

Born to progressive parents—his mother had been a model, his father an attorney—Evan Dando grew up in Boston's North Shore. Among his parents, two sisters, and a brother, the music around the house ranged from Steely Dan and the Motown roster to Neil Young and Black Sabbath. When he was 12, Dando's parents split up, and he shut down emotionally. He became fascinated by Charles Manson, and years before Guns n' Roses sparked controversy by covering a Manson song, Lemonheads included the mass murderer's ballad "Home" on Creator.

While still in high school, Dando and friends Ben Deily and Jesse Peretz (son of New Republic editor in chief Marty Peretz) formed the Whelps. Before recording the first EP, the group became the Lemonheads, named for the popular Midwestern candy. At the time, Dando played drums. On the strength of their initial 7-inch EP, the Lemonheads signed with the independent Taang! label and put out Hate Your Friends, Creator, and Lick. But a power struggle began to erode the Dando-Deily relationship, resulting in a temporary breakup during which Dando played with Juliana Hatfield's [see entry] Blake Babies. When Dando rejoined on guitar, Deily departed.

The group signed with Atlantic after its cover of Suzanne Vega's "Luka" became popular on college radio. By that time, the Lemonheads had become Dando's band, and in 1991 Peretz quit to become a successful video director for the likes of the Foo Fighters, the Breeders, and the Lemonheads. Their first successful album for the major label was It's a Shame About Ray (#68), on which Hatfield repaid Dando by filling in on bass (onetime roommates, the two were rumored to be romantically involved, though both denied it). After the group's cover of Simon and Garfunkel's "Mrs. Robinson" became an MTV hit, Atlantic reissued It's a Shame . . . with that song tacked on the end. While earning new fans, Dando's side career as a teen-idol cover boy earned some underground backlash, including a fanzine called Die! Evan! Die! As usual, Dando seemed amused. Like much of the band's work, Come On Feel the Lemonheads (#56, 1993)—notable for a guest appearance by former Flying Burrito Brothers pedal steel guitarist Sneaky Pete Kleinow—garnered more press coverage (particularly after Dando spoke openly about his drug use and was frequently seen with Courtney Love) than sales. In 1994 Dando began touring acoustically with English drummer/singer/songwriter Epic Soundtracks (Swell Maps, Jacobites, These Immortal Souls), with whom he'd collaborated on songwriting.

By 1996, what had become severe drug abuse for Dando (sampling heroin, speed, ecstasy, acid, etc.) was overcome in time for Car Button Cloth, recorded with a new lineup that included former Dinosaur Jr drummer Murph and ex-Eastern Dark bassist Bill Gibson. Dando also dabbled as an actor, appearing in Reality Bites and Heavy. And by 2000, the singer traveled to Australia to record an album of country cover songs, with plans to record another of solo pop tunes.

John Lennon and Yoko Ono

John Lennon, born John Winston Lennon, Oct. 9, 1940, Liverpool, Eng.; d. Dec. 8, 1980, New York, NY; Yoko Ono, born Feb. 18, 1933, Tokyo, Japan.

John Lennon and Yoko Ono: 1968—Unfinished Music No. 1: Two Virgins (Apple) 1969—Unfinished Music No. 2: Life with the Lions (Zapple); Wedding Album (Apple); Live Peace in Toronto, 1969 (with the Plastic Ono Band) 1972—Some Time in New York City 1980—Double Fantasy (Geffen) 1982—The John Lennon Collection 1984—Milk and Honey (Polydor) 1986—Live in New York City (Capitol).

John Lennon solo: 1970—John Lennon/Plastic Ono Band (Apple) 1971—Imagine 1973—Mind Games 1974—Walls and Bridges 1975—Rock 'n' Roll; Shaved Fish 1982—John Lennon Collection 1986—John Lennon Live in New York City (Capitol/EMI); Menlove Avenue (Capitol) 1988—Imagine: John Lennon 1990—Lennon (EMI) 1998—Anthology (Capitol); Lennon Legend: The Very Best of John Lennon (Apple); Wonsaponatime (Capitol).

Yoko Ono solo: 1970—Yoko Ono/Plastic Ono Band (Apple) 1971—Fly 1973—Approximately Infinite Universe; Feeling the Space 1981—Season of Glass (Geffen) 1982—It's Alright (I See Rainbows) (Polydor) 1985—Starpeace 1992—Onobox (Rykodisc); Walking on Thin Ice 1994—New York Rock original cast recording (EMI) 1996—Rising (Capitol).

John Lennon was the Beatles' most committed rock & roller, their social conscience, and their slyest verbal wit. After the group's breakup, he and his second wife, Yoko Ono, carried on intertwined solo careers. Ono's early albums presaged the elastic, screechy vocal style of late-'70s new-wavers like the B-52's and Lene Lovich. L7 and Babes in Toyland have also been influenced by and benefited from Ono's attitudinal, emotionally trailblazing work. Lennon strove to break taboos and to be ruthlessly, publicly honest. When he was murdered on December 8, 1980, he and Ono seemed on the verge of a new, more optimistic phase. In the years since Lennon's death, many critics and music historians have revised their view of Ono to recognize her contributions as a pioneering woman rock musician and avant-garde artist.

Yoko Ono and John Lennon

Like the other three Beatles, Lennon was born to a working-class family in Liverpool. His parents, Julia and Fred, separated before he was two (Lennon saw his father only twice in the next 20 years), and Lennon went to live with his mother's sister, Mimi Smith: when Lennon was 17 his mother was killed by a bus. He attended Liverpool's Dovedale Primary School and later the Quarry Bank High School, which supplied the name for his first band, a skiffle group called the Quarrymen, which he started in 1955. In the summer of 1956 he met Paul McCartney, and they began writing songs together and forming groups, the last of which was the Beatles. In 1994 a tape of John and the Quarrymen performing two songs, made July 6, 1957, the day he met McCartney, came to light. Recorded by Bob Molyneux, then a member of the church's youth club, it was auctioned at Sotheby's that September, fetching $122,900 from EMI. On the tape, Lennon sings "Puttin' on the Style," then a #1 hit for skiffle king Lonnie Donegan, and "Baby Let's Play House," the Arthur "Hard Rock" Gunter song that had been recorded by Elvis Presley and a line of which ("I'd rather see you dead, little girl, than to be with another man") Lennon later used in the Beatles' "Run for Your Life."

Just before the Beatles' official breakup in 1970 (Lennon had wanted to quit the band earlier), Lennon began his solo career, more than half of which consisted of collaborations with Ono.

Ono was raised in Tokyo in a wealthy Japanese banking family. She was an excellent student (in 1952 she became the first woman admitted to study philosophy at Japan's Gakushuin University) and moved to the U.S. in 1953 to study at Sarah Lawrence College. After dropping out, she became involved in the Fluxus movement, led by New York conceptual artists including George Maciunas, La Monte Young, Diane Wakoski, and Walter De Maria. During the early '60s Ono's works (many of which were conceptual pieces, some involving audience participation) were exhibited and/or performed at the Village Gate, Carnegie Recital Hall, and numerous New York galleries. In the mid-'60s she lectured at Wesleyan College and had exhibitions in Japan and London, where she met Lennon in 1966 at the Indica Gallery.

The two began corresponding, and in September 1967 Lennon sponsored Ono's "Half Wind Show" at London's Lisson Gallery. In May 1968 Ono visited Lennon at his home in Weybridge, and that night they recorded the tapes that would later be released as Two Virgins. (The nude cover shots, taken by Lennon with an automatic camera, were photographed then as well.) Lennon soon separated from his wife, Cynthia (with whom he had one child, Julian, in 1964); they were divorced that November. Lennon and Ono became constant companions.

Frustrated by his role with the Beatles, Lennon, with Ono, got a chance to explore avant-garde art, music, and film. While he regarded his relationship with Ono as the most important thing in his life, the couple's inseparability and Ono's influence over Lennon would be a source of great tension among the Beatles, then in their last days.

Three days after Lennon's divorce, he and Ono released Two Virgins, which, because of the full-frontal nude photos of the couple on the jacket, was the subject of much controversy; the LP was shipped in a plain brown wrapper. On March 20, 1969, Lennon and Ono were married in Gibraltar; for their honeymoon, they held their first "Bed-in for Peace," in the presidential suite of the Amsterdam Hilton. The peace movement was the first of several political causes the couple would take up over the years, but it was the one that generated the most publicity. On April 22, Lennon changed his middle name from Winston to Ono. In May they attempted to continue their bed-in in the United States, but when U.S. authorities forbade them to enter the country because of their arrest on drug charges in October 1968, the bed-in resumed in Montreal. That May, in their suite at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel, they recorded "Give Peace a Chance"; background chanters included Timothy Leary, Tommy Smothers, and numerous Hare Krishnas. Soon afterward "The Ballad of John and Yoko" (#8, 1969) was released under the Beatles' name, though only Lennon and McCartney appear on the record.

In September, Lennon, Ono, and the Plastic Ono Band (which included Eric Clapton, Alan White, and Klaus Voormann) performed live in Toronto at a Rock 'n' Roll Revival show. The appearance, which was later released as Live Peace in Toronto, 1969, was Lennon's first performance before a live concert audience in three years. Less than a month later he announced to the Beatles that he was quitting the group, but it was agreed among them that no public announcement would be made until after pending lawsuits involving Apple and manager Allen Klein were resolved. In October the Plastic Ono Band released "Cold Turkey" (#30, 1969), which the Beatles had declined to record, and the next month Lennon returned his M.B.E. medal to the Queen. In a letter to the Queen, Lennon cited Britain's involvement in Biafra and support of the U.S. in Vietnam and—jokingly—the poor chart showing of "Cold Turkey" as reasons for the return.

The Lennons continued their peace campaign with speeches to the press; "War Is Over! If You Want It" billboards erected on December 15 in 12 cities around the world, including New York, Hollywood, London, and Toronto; and plans for a peace festival in Toronto. When the festival plans deteriorated, Lennon turned his attention to recording "Instant Karma!" which was produced by Phil Spector, who was then also editing hours of tapes into the album that would be the Beatles' last official release, Let It Be. In late February 1970 Lennon disavowed any connection with the peace festival, and the event was abandoned. In April, McCartney—in a move that Lennon felt was an act of betrayal—announced his departure from the Beatles and released a solo LP. From this point on (if not earlier), Ono replaced McCartney as Lennon's main collaborator. The Beatles were no more.

At the time, much attention was focused on Ono's alleged role in the band's end. An Esquire magazine piece racistly entitled "John Rennon's Excursive Gloupie" was an extreme example of the decidedly antiwoman, anti-Asian backlash against Ono that she and Lennon endured for years to come. As Ono told Lennon biographer Jon Wiener in a late 1983 interview for his book Come Together: John Lennon in His Time, "When John I was first together he got lots of threatening letters: 'That Oriental will slit your throat while you're sleeping.' The Western hero had been seized by an Eastern demon."

In late 1970 Lennon and Ono released their Plastic Ono Band solo LPs. Generally, Ono's '70s LPs were regarded as highly adventurous works and were thus never as popular as Lennon's. Lennon's contained "Mother," which, along with other songs, was his most personal and, some felt, disturbing work—the direct result of his and Ono's primal scream therapy with Dr. Arthur Janov. In March 1971 "Power to the People" hit #11, and that September, Lennon's solo LP Imagine was released; it went to #1 a month later. By late 1971 Lennon and Ono had resumed their political activities, drawn to leftist political figures like Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin. Their involvement was reflected on Some Time in New York City (recorded with Elephant's Memory), which included Lennon's most overtly political releases (his and Ono's "Woman Is the Nigger of the World" and Ono's "Sisters, O Sisters"). The album sold poorly, reaching only #48.

Over the next two years Lennon released Mind Games (#9) and Walls and Bridges (#1), which yielded his only solo #1 hit, "Whatever Gets You Thru the Night," recorded with Elton John. On November 28, 1974, Lennon made his last public appearance, at John's Madison Square Garden concert. The two performed three songs: "Whatever Gets You Thru the Night," "I Saw Her Standing There," and "Lucy in the Sky With Diamonds," released on an EP after Lennon's death. Next came Rock 'n' Roll, a collection of Lennon's versions of '50s and early-'60s rock classics like "Be-Bop-a-Lula." The release was preceded by a bootleg copy, produced by Morris Levy, over which Lennon successfully sued Levy. Rock 'n' Roll (#6, 1975) would be Lennon's last solo release except for Shaved Fish, a greatest-hits compilation.

Meanwhile, Lennon's energies were increasingly directed toward his legal battle with the U.S. Immigration Department, which sought his deportation on the grounds of his previous drug arrest and involvement with the American radical left. On October 7, 1975, the U.S. Court of Appeals overturned the deportation order; in 1976 Lennon received permanent resident status. On October 9, 1975, Lennon's 35th birthday, Ono gave birth to Sean Ono Lennon. Beginning in 1975, Lennon devoted his full attention to his new son and his marriage, which had survived an 18-month separation from October 1973 to March 1975. For the next five years, he lived at home in nearly total seclusion, taking care of Sean while Ono ran the couple's financial affairs. Not until the publication of a full-page newspaper ad in May 1979 explaining his and Ono's activities did Lennon even hint at a possible return to recording.

In September 1980 he and Ono signed a contract with the newly formed Geffen Records, and on November 15 they released Double Fantasy (#1, 1980). A series of revealing interviews were published, "(Just Like) Starting Over" hit #1, and there was talk of a possible world tour.

But on December 8, 1980, Lennon, returning with Ono to their Dakota apartment on New York City's Upper West Side, was shot seven times by Mark David Chapman, a 25-year-old drifter and Beatles fan to whom Lennon had given an autograph a few hours earlier. Lennon was pronounced dead on arrival at Roosevelt Hospital. At Ono's request, on December 14 a 10-minute silent vigil was held at 2 p.m. EST in which millions around the world participated. Lennon's remains were cremated in Hartsdale, New York. At the time of his death, Lennon was holding in his hand a tape of Ono's "Walking on Thin Ice."

Two other singles from Double Fantasy were hits: "Woman" (#2, 1981) and "Watching the Wheels" (#10, 1981). Double Fantasy won a Grammy for Album of the Year (1981). Three months after the assassination, Ono released Season of Glass, an LP that deals with Lennon's death (his cracked and bloodstained eyeglasses are shown on the front jacket), although many of the songs were written before his shooting. Season of Glass is the best known of Ono's solo LPs; it was the first to receive attention outside avant-garde and critical circles.

In 1982 Ono left Geffen for Polydor, where she released It's Alright, Milk and Honey (which featured six songs by Ono and six by Lennon), and Starpeace. During the Starpeace Tour, Ono performed behind the Iron Curtain, in Budapest, Hungary, but the tour was not as warmly received elsewhere. None of these albums was particularly successful commercially, but in the wake of renewed appreciation for Ono's work, Rykodisc issued the six-CD box set Onobox in 1992 and five years later reissued on CD the entire Ono catalogue. In 1984 a number of artists, including Rosanne Cash, Harry Nilsson, Elvis Costello, Roberta Flack, and Sean Lennon (in his recording debut), participated in Every Man Has a Woman Who Loves Him, a collection of Ono songs. Following a 1989 retrospective at New York's Whitney Museum, Ono's artwork found a new audience and has since been shown continuously throughout the world. In 1994 she wrote a rock opera entitled New York Rock, which ran off-Broadway for two weeks to largely positive reviews. Clearly autobiographical, the play was a love story featuring songs from every phase of her recording career.

In addition to pursuing her own projects, Ono has maintained careful watch over the Lennon legacy. In the mid-'80s she opened the Lennon archives to Andrew Solt and David Wolper for their 1988 film biography Imagine (Ono and Solt's documentary on the making of the album Imagine, Gimme Some Truth, was released in 2000). Coming as it did just a few months after the publication of Albert Goldman's scurrilous The Lives of John Lennon, some observers saw Imagine as a piece of spin control. In fact, however, it had been in the works for more than five years by then. Ono's decision not to sue Goldman (she stated that her lawyers warned that legal action would only bring more attention to the discredited tome) was in itself controversial. Paul McCartney urged a public boycott of the Goldman book, which was almost universally reviled. Shortly after its publication, Sean asked to study abroad, and Ono accompanied him to Geneva, where they took up residence for a few years. On September 30, 1988, a week before Imagine's release, John Lennon received his star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. It is located near the Capitol Records building.

On March 21, 1984, Ono, Sean Lennon, and Julian Lennon were present as New York City Mayor Ed Koch officially opened Strawberry Fields, a triangular section of Central Park dedicated to John's memory and filled with plants, rocks, and other objects that Ono had solicited from heads of state around the world. In 2000 there were a number of events commemorating Lennon's 60th birthday and the 20th anniversary of his death, including a major exhibition on Lennon and his work at the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame & Museum.

Julian Lennon

Born John Charles Julian Lennon, Apr. 8, 1963, Liverpool, Eng.
1984—Valotte (Atlantic) 1986—The Secret Value of Daydreaming 1989—Mr. Jordan 1991—Help Yourself 1999—Photograph Smile (Fuel).

John Lennon's only child by his first wife, Cynthia Powell, Julian Lennon already had a small niche in rock history (Paul McCartney wrote "Hey Jude" about him) before he released Valotte, the debut album that was his biggest hit to date.

While growing up, Julian wasn't close to John, who divorced Cynthia in 1968 and then relocated to New York with Yoko Ono. Despite his father's wealth, Julian lived a typical middle-class life with his mother. Clearly, however, the younger Lennon's musical sensibilities were shaped by his father's music and that of the Beatles, as well as David Bowie, Steely Dan, and the Police. After his father was murdered in December 1980, Lennon spent some time haunting London nightclubs before deciding to put his long-harbored musical ambitions to the test.

He hooked up with Atlantic Records and veteran producer Phil Ramone (Billy Joel, Paul Simon). In 1985 Valotte (named for the French chateau where it was recorded) yielded the hit singles "Valotte" (#9), "Too Late for Good-byes" (#5), and "Say You're Wrong" (#21). Critics and listeners noted Lennon's uncanny physical and vocal resemblance to his father, but they also praised the young songwriter and multi-instrumentalist (guitar, keyboards, percussion) for his moodily insinuating melodies. He even earned a Grammy nomination for Best New Artist of 1985. Unfortunately, 1986's The Secret Value of Daydreaming wasn't as well received, and 1989's Mr. Jordan and 1991's Help Yourself were all but ignored.

Frustrated, Lennon decided to take a break from the music industry, opting to break ties with Atlantic and spend several years traveling and dabbling in other creative pursuits, such as painting, photography, cooking, and acting. He resurfaced to cowrite a song for the 1995 movie Mr. Holland's Opus (whose soundtrack also contains a couple of John's songs), as well as file a lawsuit against Yoko Ono for a share of his late father's copyrights. The two reached an out-of-court financial settlement in 1996, although around that time, he had to buy some of John's memorabilia in order to have personal mementos of his father. On occasion, he has since been openly critical about Ono's handling of the elder Lennon's estate, specifically her decision to authorize his artwork to be reprinted on such items as neckties and mugs. His comeback album, Photograph Smile was originally released in Europe on the label he had formed, Music from Another Room, before being issued in the States in 1999.

Sean Lennon

Born Oct. 9, 1975, New York, NY
1998—Into the Sun (Grand Royal).

The son of John Lennon and Yoko Ono, Sean Lennon blends the pop craft of his father's music with the avant-garde inventiveness of his mother's to create his own experimental, alternative-rock vision. The songs on his debut album, Into the Sun, incorporate Eastern music, bossa nova, jazz, pop, hard rock, and country, as well as the kitchen-sink, cut-and-paste techniques of fellow contemporary artists Stereolab, Beck, and the Beastie Boys.

When Lennon was born, his famous father had taken time off from his own music to raise his son while Ono handled the family's business affairs. After the elder Lennon was shot to death outside the family's Dakota apartment building on Manhattan's Upper West Side in 1980, Sean was suddenly thrust into the public eye. Almost immediately afterward, he was shielded from the media, and later attended boarding schools in Switzerland. Lennon reemerged in 1991, when he appeared as a pianist on friend Lenny Kravitz's album Mama Said. Lennon briefly attended Columbia University in the early '90s but dropped out as his interest turned to New York's indie-rock scene.

In the mid-'90s, Lennon encouraged his mother to begin performing again, and the two formed the noise-rock group IMA. The band performed around New York and became the basis of Ono's 1995 album Rising. It was during this period that Lennon began dating Yuka Honda, the keyboard player for the experimental East Village duo Cibo Matto [see entry]. Lennon appeared on Cibo Matto's 1997 album Super Relax, eventually becoming the group's permanent bassist.

Through his association with Honda, Lennon met the Beastie Boys, who had signed Cibo Matto to their Grand Royal label. Beastie Boy Adam Yauch liked Lennon's solo music and asked if he wanted to record an album for the label. When Into the Sun was released in the spring of 1998, critics lauded the album for its ambitiousness. Partly due to Lennon's association with the hip indie-rock scene, he has been able to elude the comparisons to his father that dogged the pop career of his half brother, Julian, a decade earlier. Into the Sun was a modest seller, reaching only #153 on Billboard's album chart.

Annie Lennox: See Eurythmics

The Lettermen

Formed 1960, Los Angeles, CA

Tony Butala (b. Nov. 20, 1940, Sharon, PA), voc.; Bob Engemann (b. Feb. 19, 1936, Highland Park, MI), voc.; Jim Pike (b. Nov. 6, 1938, St. Louis, MO), voc.

1966—The Best of the Lettermen (Capitol) 1967—The Lettermen!!! . . . and "Live!" (– Engemann; + Gary Pike, voc.); Goin' Out of My Head 1969—Hurt So Bad (– J. Pike; + Doug Curran, voc.; numerous personnel changes follow) 1974—All-Time Greatest Hits 1981—(lineup: Butala; Donovan Scott Tea, voc.; Mark Preston, voc.; Donnie Pike, voc.) 1986—(lineup: Butala; Pike; Tea; Robert Poynton, voc.) 2001—(lineup: Butala; Tea; Darren Dowler, voc.).

The Lettermen have been harmonizing pop songs for more than 40 years. Personnel have changed, their repertoire has been revamped with the times, and their hits are long behind them, but they continue. Original members Tony Butala, Bob Engemann, and Jim Pike all had a measure of music-business experience, in guises ranging from the Mitchell Boys Choir to Stan Kenton, when they formed the Lettermen in 1960. They were hired by George Burns and Jack Benny to open their live shows. A brief tenure with Warner Bros. Records followed before the Lettermen signed with Capitol in 1961. Their first single for the label, "The Way You Look Tonight," went gold, in 1962 "When I Fall in Love" and "Come Back Silly Girl" were Top 20 hits. Their albums of that period always made the Top 100; four were certified gold. They have grossed over $25 million in sales for Capitol Records. As tastes in music changed, the Lettermen adapted their smooth voices to the latest trend: folk revival when they started out, electric guitars in the mid-'60s, even disco and new wave in later years.

In 1967 they went through their first shift in personnel. Engemann was replaced by Gary Pike (Jim's brother), without any affect on their hitmaking abilities; they scored one of their biggest successes that year with a medley of "Goin' Out of My Head" and "Can't Take My Eyes Off of You." "Hurt So Bad" (#12, 1969) was their last gold record, though the trio continued releasing records on Capitol throughout the '70s. The Lettermen also branched into commercials, earning a Golden Globe Award for a Pan-Am ad. In 1982 they left Capitol for the Applause label. Still overseen by Butala, the group has not charted an LP since 1974, but it continues to record new material and tour successfully.

Levert/Gerald Levert

Formed 1982, Cleveland, OH

Gerald Levert (b. July 13, 1966, Canton, OH), voc.; Sean Levert (b. Sep. 28, 1968, Cleveland), voc.; Marc Gordon (b. Sep. 8, 1964), kybds., voc.

1986—Bloodline (Atlantic) 1987—The Big Throwdown 1988—Just Coolin' 1990—Rope a Dope Style 1993—For Real Tho' 1997—The Whole Scenario 2001—The Best of Levert (Rhino).

Gerald Levert solo: 1991—Private Line (EastWest) 1994—Groove On 1998—Love & Consequences 2000—G (Elektra).

Gerald Levert and Eddie Levert: 1995—Father & Son (EastWest).
Gerald Levert with LSG: 1997—Levert, Sweat, Gill (EastWest).
Sean Levert solo: 1995—The Other Side (Atlantic).

With keyboardist/vocalist Marc Gordon, singing brothers Gerald and Sean Levert—sons of the O'Jays' Eddie Levert Sr.—formed a trio that adapted the smooth, soulful harmonies of the O'Jays, Spinners, and other leading '70s R&B groups to a progressively aggressive funky and hip-hop-driven musical style.

The Levert siblings hooked up with Gordon while in their midteens. After practicing at the Leverts' home studio, the threesome began performing in Ohio clubs. An independently released single, "I'm Still," became popular in the Baltimore/Washington, DC, region, attracting the interest of Atlantic Records. Levert's debut album, Bloodline, yielded the #1 R&B hit "(Pop, Pop, Pop, Pop) Goes My Mind." The following year The Big Throwdown (#32 pop, #3 R&B, 1987) produced the R&B singles "Casanova" (#5 pop, #1 R&B, 1987), "My Forever Love" (#2 R&B, 1987), and "Sweet Sensation" (#4 R&B, 1988). In 1988 the band again topped the R&B singles chart with "Addicted to You," from the film soundtrack Coming to America.

Also in 1988 Gerald Levert and Gordon formed Trevel

Productions, a writing and producing team that worked with such artists as the O'Jays, Anita Baker, Men at Large, Teddy Pendergrass, and Miki Howard, whose hit "That's What Love Is" (#4 R&B, 1988) featured Gerald on vocals. Levert's 1988 album, Just Coolin' (#79 pop, #6 R&B), was produced by Trivel and generated another #1 R&B single with the title song, featuring rapper Heavy D. "Gotta Get the Money" reached #4. Rope a Dope Style (#9 R&B, 1990) spawned hits with the title track (#7 R&B, 1990), "All Season" (#4 R&B, 1990), and "Baby I'm Ready" (#1 R&B, 1991). Gerald's solo album, Private Line, peaked at #2 R&B and included the singles "School Me" (#3 R&B, 1992), "Can You Handle It" (#9 R&B, 1992), and "Baby Hold On to Me" (#1 R&B, 1992), the latter a duet between Gerald and his father. After the release of Gerald's second solo effort, Groove On (#2 R&B) in 1994, Gerald and Eddie recorded an album of duets, 1995's Father & Son (#20 pop, #2 R&B). The same year, Sean released his solo recording, The Other Side (#22 R&B).

While the group Levert still released one more album (1997's Whole Scenario, #10 R&B), Gerald was increasingly pursuing other endeavors. Also in 1997, he released an album with another group, LSG, comprised of himself and fellow R&B crooners Keith Sweat and Johnny Gill (ex-New Edition). The supergroup toured in 1998; by this time, it had become apparent that Levert the group would not continue. Gerald released another solo album, Love & Consequences, in 1998 and toured with Patti LaBelle the following year. He also dabbled in acting, appearing on the sitcom The Jamie Foxx Show, and formed a label, United Sound Records, to sign new talent. In 2000 he released a solo album on Elektra, titled simply G.

Furry Lewis

Born Mar. 6, 1893, Greenwood, MS; died Sep. 14, 1981, Memphis, TN

1969—Presenting the Country Blues (Blue Horizon) 1970—In Memphis (Matchbox) 1971—Furry Lewis (Xtra); & Fred McDowell (Biograph); Furry Lewis Band (Folkways) 2001—Take Your Time (with Lee Baker Jr.) (Adelphi).

Legendary Memphis bluesman Walter "Furry" Lewis is thought by some to be the first guitarist to play with a bottleneck, a technique later used by Robert Johnson, Bukka White, and Johnny Shines. (Earlier musicians had achieved a similar effect using a knife across the strings.) The son of a Mississippi sharecropper, Lewis moved from his birthplace to Memphis in 1899 and while still in school, began playing guitar in local bands with W.C. Handy, Will Shade, and the Memphis Jug Band. He was a teen when he began performing on Beale Street.

Lewis toured the country in medicine shows and also played the jukeboxes with Memphis Minnie and Blind Lemon Jefferson as early as 1906 and straight through the '20s. In 1916 he lost a leg in a railroad accident; it was replaced by a wooden stump. In 1927 he and Jim Jackson auditioned for the Vocalion label in Chicago. The next year his first recordings, including "Good Looking Girl Blues," "John Henry," and "Billy Lyons and Stack O'Lee," were released.

His singing style was a kind of talking blues, but the market for that music died in the Depression, and Furry spent the next 44 years supporting himself as a street cleaner. He did some performing by night, but he didn't record again until the late '50s, when Sam Charters recorded him for Prestige. Later recordings for Biograph, Folkways, Adelphi, and Rounder never earned enough for Lewis to quit the sanitation department. He did play many blues and folk festivals in the '60s and '70s and recorded with Bukka White, though his best shot at fame came in the early '70s, when he toured with Don Nix and the Alabama State Troopers and appeared on a Leon Russell television special.

In 1975 the Rolling Stones invited him along as their opening act in Memphis, and after a meeting with him, Joni Mitchell wrote "Furry Sings the Blues," which appeared on her Hejira album. Lewis also appeared on The Tonight Show and in two films, Burt Reynolds' W.W. and the Dixie Dance King, and This Is Elvis. He died of heart failure at age 88.

Gary Lewis and the Playboys

Formed 1964, Los Angeles, CA

Most popular lineup: Gary Lewis (b. Gary Levitch, July 31, 1945, Los Angeles), drums, voc.; Al Ramsey (b. July 27, 1943, NJ), gtr.; John R. West (b. July 31, 1939, Uhrichsville, OH), gtr.; David Walkes (b. May 12, 1943, Montgomery, AL), kybds.; David Costell (b. Mar. 15, 1944, Pittsburgh, PA), bass. 1965—This Diamond Ring (Liberty) 1966—Golden Greats 1968—More Golden Greats.

With seven consecutive Top 10 singles in 1965 and 1966, and over 7.5 million records sold, Gary Lewis was certainly one of the most successful Hollywood offspring turned rock & roller. Lewis was drafted in 1966, and since his 1969 army discharge, he has attempted several comebacks. The eldest son of comedian Jerry Lewis started playing drums at age 14, four years later he formed the Playboys. They became a regular fixture at Disneyland, and producer Snuff Garrett signed them to Liberty in 1964. With Leon Russell's arrangements and Al Kooper as cowriter, the Playboys scored a #1 hit their first time out with "This Diamond Ring."

Russell also worked on the subsequent singles: "Count Me In" (#2, 1965), "Save Your Heart for Me" (#2, 1965), "Everybody Loves a Clown" (#4, 1965), "She's Just My Style" (#3, 1966), "Sure Gonna Miss Her" (#9, 1966), and "Green Grass" (#8, 1966).

The group appeared in A Swingin' Summer (1965) and Out of Sight (1966). The Playboys' popularity had waned just slightly when Lewis was drafted, and upon his discharge he re-formed the group with other musicians. Though Lewis would score two more chart singles, he would never again have a Top 10 hit, despite an attempt to update his image from teenage pop star to "sensitive" singer/songwriter. His career was further complicated by drug problems and a divorce. Lewis performs regularly on the oldies circuit with the Playboys, who now consist of Rich Spina, Billy Sullivan, John Dean, and Michael Hadak.

Huey Lewis and the News

Formed 1979, Marin County, CA

Huey Lewis (b. Hugh Cregg III, July 5, 1950, New York, NY), voc., harmonica; Chris Hayes (b. Nov. 24, 1957, CA), gtr.; Mario Cipollina (b. Nov. 10, 1954, CA), bass; Bill Gibson (b. Nov. 13, 1951, CA), drums; Sean Hopper (b. Mar. 31, 1953, CA), kybds.; Johnny Colla (b. July 2, 1952, CA), sax, gtr.

1980—Huey Lewis and the News (Chrysalis) 1982—Picture This 1983—Sports 1986—Fore! 1988—Small World 1991—Hard at Play (EMI) 1994—Four Chords and Several Years Ago (Elektra) 1996—(— Cipollina; + John Pierce, bass) Time Flies . . . the Best of Huey Lewis and the News.

One of the most commercially successful American bands of the early to mid-'80s, Huey Lewis and the News have released 17 Top 40 singles and sold over 12 million albums' worth of conservative, straight-ahead rock & roll. While critics derided the group for its bland predictability, fans were drawn to lead singer Huey Lewis and the band's fun-time persona and its radio-friendly sound.

The group traces its roots to the Bay Area, where Lewis and future News member Sean Hopper founded a country-rock group called Clover. Contrary to popular misconception, the entire band did not back Elvis Costello on his debut album; only Hopper did. The group had a U.K. record deal, and its first single, "Chicken Funk," was produced by Nick Lowe, but neither of its albums made much of an impression. Another Clover member, John McFee, quit to join the Doobie Brothers, and the group soon disbanded. Back in California, Lewis formed American Express. Among the members were ex-Soundhole Johnny Colla, Bill Gibson, and Mario Cipollina (the brother of Quicksilver Messenger Service's John Cipollina). In 1980 the group signed with Chrysalis, which requested a name change. Later that year Huey Lewis and the News' self-titled debut LP came and went without making a nick on the chart.

Early 1982 saw the release of the group's breakthrough album, Picture This (#13, 1982), which took off on the strength of the Mutt Lange-penned "Do You Believe in Love" (#7, 1982), followed by "Hope You Love Me Like You Say You Do" (#36, 1982). The group's second release, the 7-million-selling Sports (#1, 1983), stayed on the chart over three years. Boosted by a series of tongue-in-cheek videos that showcased Lewis' movie-star good looks, this album spun off five Top 20 hits, including four Top 10s: "Heart and Soul" (#8, 1983), "I Want a New Drug" (#6, 1984), "The Heart of Rock & Roll" (#6, 1984), and "If This Is It" (#6, 1984). Late in 1984 Lewis brought suit against Ray Parker Jr., alleging that the latter's hit "Ghostbusters" was a plagiarization of "I Want a New Drug." The case was later settled out of court. The next year brought the group's first #1 single, "The Power of Love," from the hit movie Back to the Future.

Three years elapsed between the release of Sports and Fore! (#1, 1986), which sold 3 million copies. From it came five more hits: "Stuck With You" (#1, 1986), "Hip to Be Square" (#3, 1986), Bruce Hornsby's "Jacob's Ladder" (#1, 1987), "I Know What I Like" (#9, 1987), and "Doing It All for My Baby" (#6, 1987). Around this time Lewis had helped Hornsby secure a record deal, and Lewis wrote several songs on his debut album.

The News' next release, Small World (#11, 1988), marked a change in direction, and while critics were not impressed, there were two hits: "Perfect World" (#3, 1988) and "Small World" (#25, 1988). Hard at Play (#27, 1991) was the first of the group's LPs since their debut to chart outside the Top 20; its only hit was "Couple Days Off" (#11, 1991). Four Chords and Several Years Ago (#55, 1994) is a collection of R&B and rock remakes. Lewis made his screen-acting debut in Robert Altman's 1994 film Short Cuts; he later appeared alongside Gwyneth Paltrow in 2000's Duets.

Jerry Lee Lewis

Born Sep. 29, 1935, Ferriday, LA

1958—Jerry Lee Lewis (Sun) 1964—The Greatest Live Show on Earth (Smash); Live at the Star Club Hamburg (Philips) 1968—Another Place, Another Time (Smash) 1969—Jerry Lee Lewis' Original Golden Hits, vol. 1 (Sun); Jerry Lee Lewis' Original Golden Hits, vol. 2 1970—A Taste of Country; Sunday Down South; Ole Tyme Country Music; There Must Be More to Love Than This (Mercury) 1971—Original Golden Hits, vol. 3 (Sun); Monsters 1973—The Session (Mercury) 1978—Best of Jerry Lee Lewis, vol. 2 (Mercury) 1980—Killer Country (Elektra) 1982—The Best of Jerry Lee Lewis (Featuring 39 and Holding) 1984—18 Original Sun Greatest Hits (Rhino) 1985—Milestones 1986—Twenty Classic Jerry Lee Lewis Hits (Original Sound) 1987—Rare and Rockin' (Sun) 1989—Rare Tracks (Rhino); Classic Jerry Lee Lewis (Bear Family, Ger.) 1994—All Killer, No Filler! (Rhino) 1995—Young Blood (Sire); Killer Country (Mercury).

Though he had only three Top 10 hits in the first, purely rock & roll phase of his career, many critics believe Jerry Lee Lewis was as talented a '50s rocker as Sun labelmate Elvis Presley. Some also believe he could have made it just as big commercially if his piano-slhammering musical style was not so relentlessly wild, his persona not so threateningly hard-edged.

Lewis' first musical influences were eclectic. His parents, who were poor, spun swing and Al Jolson records. But his earliest big influence was country star Jimmie Rodgers. In his early teens he absorbed both the softer country style of Gene Autry and the more rocking music of local black clubs, along with the gospel hymns of the local Assembly of God church. Lewis first played his aunt's piano at age eight and made his public debut in 1949 at age 14, sitting in with a local C&W band in a Ford dealership parking lot. When he was 15 Lewis went to a fundamentalist Bible school in Waxahachie, Texas, from which he was soon expelled. He has often said that rock & roll is the Devil's music.

Jerry Lee Lewis

In 1956 Lewis headed for Memphis (financed by his father) to audition for Sam Phillips' Sun Records. Phillips' assistant, Jack Clement, was impressed with Lewis' piano style but suggested he play more rock & roll, in a style similar to Elvis Presley's. (Presley had recently switched from Sun to RCA.) Lewis' debut single, "Crazy Arms" (previously a country hit for Ray Price), did well regionally, but it was the followup, 1957's "Whole Lotta Shakin' Going On" (#3), that finally broke through. The song first sold 100,000 copies in the South, after Lewis' appearance on Steve Allen's TV show, it sold over 6 million copies nationally. "Great Balls of Fire" (#2, 1957) sold more than 5 million copies and was followed by more than a half million in sales for "Breathless" (#7, 1958) and "High School Confidential" (#21, 1958), the title theme song of a movie in which Lewis also appeared. Both "Whole Lotta Shakin' " and "Great Balls" were in the pop, country, and R&B Top 5 simultaneously, "Shakin' " at #3 pop, and #1 R&B and C&W, and "Great Balls" at #2 pop, #3 R&B, and #1 C&W. Lewis' high school nickname was the "Killer," and it stuck with him as he established a reputation as a tough, rowdy performer with a flamboyant piano style that used careening glissandos, pounding chords, and bench-toppling acrobatics.

Lewis' career slammed to a stop, though, after he married his 13-year-old third cousin, Myra Gale Brown, in December 1957. (She was his third wife; at age 16 he had wed a 17-year-old, and soon after that ended, he got caught in a shotgun marriage.) The marriage lasted 13 years, but at the time, Lewis was condemned by the church in the US and hounded by the British press on a 1958 tour. His career ran dry for nearly a decade. He had a modest 1961 hit with "What'd I Say," but in 1963 he left Sun for Smash/Mercury. He toured relentlessly, playing clubs, billing his act as "the greatest show on earth." On the way, he developed a drinking problem. In 1968 he played Iago in a rock-musical version of Shakespeare's Othello called Catch My Soul.

Eventually, Lewis and his producer, Jerry Kennedy, decided to abandon rock & roll for country music. In 1968 Lewis had the first of many Top 10 country hits with "Another Place, Another Time," followed by "What Made Milwaukee Famous (Made a Loser Out of Me)." Between then and the early '80s he had more than 30 big country hits, including "To Make Love Sweeter for You" (#1 C&W, 1968), "There Must Be More to Love Than This" (#1 C&W, 1971), "Would You Take Another Chance on Me" (#1 C&W, 1971), "Chantilly Lace" (#1 C&W, 1972), "Middle Age Crazy" (#4 C&W, 1977), and "Thirty-nine and Holding" (#4 C&W, 1981). Subsequent singles were minor C&W hits, none charting higher than #43.

In 1973 Lewis released The Session, a return-to-rock album recorded in London with a host of top British musicians, including Peter Frampton, Alvin Lee, Klaus Voormann, and Rory Gallagher, redoing oldies. It resulted in some pop chart success with "Drinkin' Wine Spo Dee Odee," an R&B song he'd performed at his public debut in 1949. In 1978 Lewis signed with Elektra and enjoyed some FM radio play with "Rockin' My Life Away." He also continued to tour, performing all the styles of his career: rock, country, gospel, blues, spirituals, and more. In 1981 Lewis played a German concert with fellow Sun alumni Johnny Cash and Carl Perkins. The show was released as an album called Survivors in 1982. On June 30, 1981, Lewis was hospitalized in Memphis with hemorrhaging from a perforated stomach ulcer. After two operations, he was given a 50-50 chance of survival, four months later he was back on tour. He appeared on the 1982 Grammy Awards telecast with his cousin Mickey Gilley, another cousin is TV evangelist Jimmy Swaggart.

Lewis' personal life has been marked by tragedy and controversy. In 1973 Jerry Lee Lewis Jr., who played drums in his father's band, was killed in an automobile accident. (Lewis' brother had died when hit by a car when Jerry was two.) His other son, Steve Allen (named after the talk-show host), drowned in 1962 at age three. In September 1976 Lewis accidentally shot his bassist in the chest.

In 1982 his estranged fourth wife, Jaren Gunn Lewis, also drowned in a pool under mysterious circumstances shortly before their divorce settlement. His fifth wife, Shawn Stephens Lewis, was found dead in their home 77 days after their wedding. Although investigative pieces, including one in ROLLING STONE, exposed discrepancies in Lewis' and various local law-enforcement officials' accounts of the incident and flaws in the investigation, no charges were ever brought against Lewis. Despite the presence of blood at the couple's home, on Lewis, and on his wife's body, investigators did not even test to determine whose blood it was. A private and illegal (since it was conducted out of state) autopsy performed by the same coroner who determined that Elvis Presley had succumbed to cardiac arrhythmia declared Shawn Lewis was determined to have died from pulmonary edema. Even after published reports established problems with the investigation, the case was not reopened. Jerry Lee Lewis remarried again, taking his sixth wife. She later gave birth to Jerry Lee Lewis III, Lewis' only surviving son (he also had a daughter with Myra).

In recent years, Lewis has been plagued by serious health problems and battles with the IRS. He was treated at the Betty Ford Clinic for addiction to painkillers. His health has been poor and record sales have dropped off. He last came to widespread public attention in 1989, when the biographical film Great Balls of Fire, starring Dennis Quaid as Lewis, was released. Lewis was among the first 10 inductees into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1986. In 1995 he finally released a new album, Young Blood. He continues to gig sporadically. In 1999 he performed in Baltimore, Maryland, at the Smithsonian Institution's bash celebrating the 300th anniversary of the piano.

Ramsey Lewis

Born May 27, 1935, Chicago, IL

1956—Ramsey Lewis and His Gentlemen of Swing (Argo)
 1958—Down to Earth (EmArcy) 1959—An Hour With the Ramsey Lewis Trio (Argo) 1960—Stretchin' Out; Ramsey Lewis Trio in Chicago 1961—More Music from the Soil; Never on Sunday 1962—Country Meets the Blues; Bossa Nova; Sound of Spring 1963—Pot Luck; Barefoot Sunday Blues 1964—The Ramsey Lewis Trio at the Bohemian Caverns; You Better Believe Me; Back to the Blues 1965—The In Crowd (Cadet); Choice! The Best of The Ramsey Lewis Trio 1966—Wade in the Water (Chess); Movie Album; The Groover (Cadet); Hang On Ramsey; Swingin' 1967—Gain' Latin; Dancing in the Street 1968—Maiden Voyage; Ramsey Lewis Trio; Up Pops Ramsey 1969—Mother Nature's Son; Solid Ivory; Another Voyage; Piano Player (Chess) 1970—Them Changes (Cadet) 1971—Back to the Roots 1973—Funky Serenity (Columbia); Ramsey Lewis' Newly Recorded All-Time, Non-Stop Golden Hits 1974—Solar Wind 1975—Sun Goddess; Don't It Feel Good; Live in Tokyo (Cadet) 1976—Salongo (Columbia) 1977—Love Notes; Tequila Mockingbird 1978—Legacy 1979—Ramsey (CBS); 1980—Routes (Columbia) 1981—Blues for the Night Owl; 3 Piece Suite 1982—Live at the Savoy; Chance Encounter 1983—Reunion; Les Fleurs 1984—The Two of Us (with Nancy Wilson) 1985—Fantasy 1987—Keys to the City 1988—We Meet Again (with Billy Taylor) (CBS); A Classic Encounter With the Philharmonic Orchestra 1989—Urban Renewal (Columbia) 1992—Ivory Pyramid (GRP) 1993—Sky Islands 1995—Between the Keys 1998—Dance of the Soul 1999—Appassionata (Narada); Eye on You (Columbia); Encore! Ramsey Lewis Trio in Tokyo (Chess) 2000—Urban Nights III (Narada).

Keyboardist Ramsey Lewis has had much commercial success with pop-jazz instrumentals, particularly in the mid-'60s, when his remakes of current hits—Dobie Gray's "The In Crowd," the McCoy's "Hang On Sloopy"—went Top 20.

Releasing consistently well-crafted albums, Lewis has maintained a solid career.

Lewis studied classical piano at the Chicago College of Music and De Paul University. He began playing professionally at age 16 with the Clefs, a group that included bassist Eldee Young and drummer Isaac Red Holt, with whom he formed the Ramsey Lewis Trio in 1956. In 1965 the Trio won a Grammy for "The In Crowd" (#5, 1965). ("Hang On Sloopy" [#11, 1965] won a Grammy in 1973 after being rereleased on Golden Hits.) Besides the Trio's albums, Lewis played with Max Roach, Sonny Stitt, and Clark Terry in 1965; the Trio broke up. His former sideman founded Young-Holt Unlimited and scored a #3 hit with "Soulful Strut" in 1969. In 1966 Lewis' new trio, drummer Maurice White, later of Earth, Wind & Fire, and Cleveland Eaton on bass scored another hit with "Wade in the Water" (#19) and Lewis received another Grammy for "Hold It Right There."

Lewis enjoyed much success through the mid-'70s, and his Sun Goddess (#12, 1975), produced by White, went gold. In the '80s he explored new settings: Keys to the City juxtaposes piano with synth; Classic Encounter features the Philharmonic Orchestra. He also duetted with jazz pianist Billy Taylor and singer Nancy Wilson. In 1990 Lewis began cohosting a jazz radio show in Chicago; shortly thereafter he became a host for a BET jazz program. In the '90s he produced music for commercials with his son Kevyn and was appointed Art Tatum Professor in Jazz Studies at Chicago's Roosevelt University.

Smiley Lewis

Born Overton Amos Lemons, July 5, 1920, Union, LA; died

Oct. 7, 1966, New Orleans, LA

1970—Shame Shame Shame (Liberty) 1978—I Hear You Knocking (United Artists); The Bells Are Ringing.

Singer/guitarist/pianist Smiley Lewis was a major New Orleans R&B performer, though his best songs became pop hits only for other people. His parents moved to New Orleans from his small-town birthplace when he was 11, and he began recording there in 1947 for Deluxe Records under the name Smiling Lewis. The best-loved work of this gravel-voiced singer came during his 1950–60 period, when he was produced by Dave Bartholomew, yielding such songs as "Shame Shame Shame" and two R&B hits, "The Bells Are Ringing" (#10, 1952) and "I Hear You Knocking" (#2, 1955), which featured a classic piano intro from Huey Smith. A few months later, Lewis' version of "Knocking" was eclipsed by Gale Storm's #2 pop hit cover. The song was revived 15 years later by Dave Edmunds, who made it a hit again. Another of Lewis' tunes, "One Night (of Sin)," was cleaned up and changed to "One Night (of Love)" and became a hit for Elvis Presley in 1958.

Beginning in 1961, Lewis recorded for Okeh, then Dot and Loma Records (at the last, produced by Allen Toussaint), and he worked until his death in 1966 of stomach cancer.

Gordon Lightfoot

Born Nov. 17, 1938, Orillia, Ont., Can.

1966—Lightfoot (United Artists) 1968—The Way I Feel; Did She Mention My Name? 1969—Back Here on Earth; Early Lightfoot; Sunday Concert 1970—Sit Down Young Stranger (Reprise); If You Could Read My Mind 1971—Summer Side of Life 1972—Don Quixote; Old Dan's Records 1973—Sundown 1974—The Very Best of Gordon Lightfoot (United Artists) 1975—Cold on the Shoulder (Reprise); Gord's Gold 1976—Early Morning Rain; Summertime Dream 1978—Endless Wire (Warner Bros.) 1980—Dream Street Rose 1982—Shadows 1983—Salute 1986—East of Midnight 1988—Gord's Gold, vol. 2 1993—Waiting for You (Reprise) 1998—A Painter Passing Through 1999—Songbook (Rhino).

One of the most successful Canadian singer/songwriters, bantone Gordon Lightfoot was inspired to write his own songs by writers like Bob Dylan, Tom Paxton, and Phil Ochs in the early '60s. Prior to that he played piano, worked summers in his father's laundry, and then immigrated to L.A. in 1958 to attend now defunct Westlake College. There he studied orchestration but soon returned to Toronto, where he worked as an arranger and producer of commercial jingles until 1960. Encouraged by Pete Seeger and friends Ian and Sylvia, he then switched to guitar and along with his studio work, began playing folk music at local coffeehouses.

Lightfoot soon developed his own identity with country-ish material like his debut Canadian hit, "Remember Me." Ian and Sylvia added two of his folksy numbers to their stage show, "For Lovin' Me" and "Early Morning Rain," and introduced Lightfoot to their manager, Albert Grossman, who promptly gave both songs to his other clients Peter, Paul and Mary. The trio made "For Lovin' Me" a #30 U.S. hit in 1965.

On his own, Lightfoot began releasing solo albums in 1966, the first six on United Artists. Each sold between 150,000 and 200,000 copies. In 1969 he switched to Repnse, and his label debut, Sit Down Young Stranger, sold 750,000 copies with the help of his first U.S. hit, "If You Could Read My Mind" (#5, 1971). Many other artists, including Bob Dylan, Jerry Lee Lewis, Johnny Cash, Elvis Presley, Barbra Streisand, and Judy Collins, continued to cover his songs.

Lightfoot's popularity peaked in the mid-'70s with a #1 gold LP and single in 1974, both called Sundown. He hit #2 with "The Wreck of the Edmund Fitzgerald" (about an ore vessel that sank on Lake Superior), released on the Summertime Dream LP in May 1976. Although he didn't release an album of new material between 1986 and 1993, Lightfoot toured regularly. He still commands a loyal following, particularly in his homeland. In November 1997 he received that country's highest official honor, the Order of Canada citation, for his efforts in spreading Canadian culture.

Lil' Kim

Born Kimberly Denise Jones, July 11, 1975, Brooklyn, NY
1996—Hard Core (Atlantic) 2000—The Notorious K.I.M.

Lil' Kim took female MCing to its raunchiest, loudest, most empowering extent. By depicting the lewdest of female-dominated sexual fantasies—a role reversal in the sometimes misogynistic pop-music world—she redefined hip-hop feminism.

Lil' Kim grew up on the same block as the Notorious B.I.G. [see entry] in the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn. After leaving home at 15 and resorting to drug dealing, she was convinced by her close friend and future boyfriend B.I.G. to give up dealing for rapping. In 1995 B.I.G. enlisted Lil' Kim as the sole woman in the Junior M.A.F.I.A. (Masters At Finding Intelligent Attitudes), a collective of Brooklyn-based MCs. The group's first and only album, Conspiracy (#8 pop, #2 R&B, 1995), introduced Lil' Kim's nasty-as-I-wanna-be attitude to a mass audience and generated the hits "Player's Anthem" (#13 pop, #7 R&B, 1995) and "Get Money" (#17 pop, #4 R&B, 1996). In 1996 Atlantic released Lil' Kim's solo debut, Hard Core (#11 pop, #3 R&B, 1996), which features tracks produced by Sean Combs and others. "No Time" (#18 pop, #9 R&B, 1996), featuring a rap by Sean Combs, held the top spot on the rap singles chart for 11 consecutive weeks.

Four days after "No Time" was certified gold, B.I.G. was murdered. Lil' Kim then joined Sean Combs on 1998's Bad Boy Tour, and appeared on recordings by Jay-Z, Missy Elliott, and Mobb Deep. The Notorious K.I.M. (#4 pop, #1 R&B, 2000) features "Hold On," a tribute to Notorious B.I.G.

Limp Bizkit

Formed 1994, Jacksonville, FL

Fred Durst (b. William Fredrick Durst, Aug. 20, 1971, Jacksonville), voc.; Wes Borland (b. Wesley Scott Borland, Feb. 7, 1975, Nashville, TN), gtr.; John Otto (b. ca. 1978), drums; Sam Rivers (b. Sep. 21, 1977, Jacksonville), bass.
1995—(+ DJ Lethal [b. Leor DiMant, Dec. 18, 1972, Latvia], turntables) 1997—Three Dollar Bill, Y'all$ (Flip/Interscope) 1999—Significant Other 2000—Chocolate Starfish and the Hot Dog Flavored Water.
Wes Borland with Bigdumbface: 2001—Duke Lion Fights the Terror! (Interscope).

While Rage Against the Machine and Korn first took the rap-rock genre into Top 10 territory, Limp Bizkit carried it into the record books. Highlighted by the call-and-response anthem "Nookie," the band's second album, Significant Other, knocked the Backstreet Boys' blockbuster Millennium off the top of the charts in 1999, and 2000's Chocolate Starfish and the Hot Dog Flavored Water debuted at #1 and became the year's fastest-selling rock album.

While growing up in Gastonia, North Carolina, frontman Fred Durst embraced both punk and rap, splitting his leisure time between skateboarding and break dancing. After high school, he did a short stint in the navy (he received a medical discharge after injuring his wrist in a skateboarding accident) and settled in Jacksonville, Florida, where he worked as a tattoo artist. Forming Limp Bizkit in 1994, Durst enlisted guitarist Wes Borland, drummer John Otto, and bassist Sam Rivers. The following year, former House of Pain turntablist DJ Lethal joined the fold (having met the band when Limp Bizkit opened a House of Pain show). The band's fate was sealed when Durst tattooed the members of Korn [see entry] and afterward gave them a demo tape; Korn passed it along to people in the music industry, and by 1997, Limp Bizkit had landed a deal with Flip/Interscope.

The band's first album, Three Dollar Bill, Y'all$ (#22, 1997) attracted controversy early on when the story broke that Interscope had bought advertising time from a Portland, Oregon, radio station to play the single "Counterfeit" 50 times. Limp Bizkit weathered the payola storm and saw its rap/metal cover of George Michael's "Faith" become a Modern Rock hit. During its concert performances that year, the band would emerge onstage at the beginning of each show from a giant toilet. By the time Significant Other bowed at the top of the chart in late 1999, Limp Bizkit had become a rock superstar, headlining its own tour and garnering a prime slot at the ill-fated Woodstock '99 (where the band's performance of "Break Stuff" would be cited by many as initiating the mayhem and hooliganism that ultimately brought the three-day festival down in flames).

The controversial Woodstock appearance did little to slow Limp Bizkit down, however. Durst, who made no secret of his ambition to be an industry power player as well as a rock star, was given his own Flawless imprint by Interscope and was appointed senior vice president of A&R. During the summer of 2000, Limp Bizkit went against the grain of the music industry by aligning itself with the controversial online song-trading software company Napster by participating in a free-admission tour with Cypress Hill (Napster picked up the bill). The band's third album, Chocolate Starfish and the Hot Dog Flavored Water, debuted at #1 in October 2000, selling more than a million copies its first week in stores. Earlier that year, the band also had scored another Modern Rock hit with the Mission: Impossible-2 soundtrack offering, "Take a Look Around." In 2001 guitarist Borland branched out with the side-project band Bigdumbface.

David Lindley: see Kaleidoscope

Arto Lindsay: See DNA

Lipps, Inc.

Formed 1977, Minneapolis, MN
 Steven Greenberg (b. Oct. 24, 1950, St. Paul, MN), kybds., synth., bass, drums, perc., voc.; Cynthia Johnson (b. Apr. 6, 1956, St. Paul), voc.; David Rivkin, gr.; Tom Riopelle, gr.; Terry Grant, bass; Ivan Rafowitz, kybds.
 1980—Mouth to Mouth (Casablanca); Pucker Up 1981—Designer Music.

Lipps, Inc. (pronounced "lip-sync") burst out of Minnesota's Twin Cities in 1980, the same year that Prince began his ascent to superstardom with Dirty Mind. Where Prince launched a career by bridging rock, pop, and funk to form the Minneapolis Sound, Lipps, Inc. had only one big hit—the instant classic "Funkytown" (#1 pop, #2 R&B, 1980), an extended dance track that seamlessly melded percolating synth pop (complete with electronic vocals), slashing funk guitar, disco strings, and the gospelish vocals of Cynthia Johnson over a relentless big beat.

A studio-bound unit, Lipps, Inc. was the brainchild of composer/producer/multi-instrumentalist Steven Greenberg. Johnson had been Minnesota's Miss Black U.S.A. contestant in 1976. Aside from "Funkytown," Mouth to Mouth (#5, 1980) also produced a minor hit in "Rock It" (#64 pop, #85 R&B, 1980). The prompt followup album Pucker Up (#63, 1980) yielded only "How Long" (#29 R&B, 1980). Lipps, Inc. scored minor hits with the subsequent singles "Hold Me Down" (#70 R&B, 1981) and "Addicted to the Night" (#78, 1983), then, following several lineup changes, disbanded. A decade later, Greenberg surfaced as the founder of October Records; in 1998 he produced a quickly forgotten movie entitled Funkytown. Johnson kept working on the Minneapolis music scene, leading an all-female funk band, Kat Klub, and eventually becoming a jazz singer. As David Z, guitarist David Rivkin would go on to become one of Prince's sound engineers (his brother Bobby was Prince's first drummer); he is currently a well-known producer, based in Nashville.

Mance Lipscomb

Born Apr. 9, 1895, Navasota, TX; died Jan. 30, 1976, Navasota 1962—Mance Lipscomb, Texas Songster (Arhoolie) 1964—Mance Lipscomb, Texas Songster, vol. 2 1966—Mance Lipscomb, Texas Songster, vol. 3 1968—Mance Lipscomb, Texas Songster, vol. 4 1970—Mance Lipscomb, Texas Songster, vol. 5; Trouble in Mind (Reprise) 1994—Texas Blues Guitar (Arhoolie).

Discovered during the early-'60s folk-blues boom, singer/guitarist/fiddler Mance Lipscomb is generally considered a Texas country-blues great, an artistic descendant of Blind Lemon Jefferson and compatriot of Lightnin' Hopkins. Actually, though, Lipscomb was a bluesman and more a songster and minstrel who performed ballads, reels, shouts, and breakdowns as well as blues. Though he didn't record until age 65, his influence has been noted in the work of Bob Dylan, Janis Joplin, and the Grateful Dead, among others.

Lipscomb learned to play fiddle from his father, an emancipated slave turned professional musician, and played with him around the Navasota-Brazos area until 1911. Between shows Lipscomb taught himself guitar and worked the fields. Before 1956 he played only for small gatherings of friends and coworkers at picnics or dances. He moved to Houston in 1956, and in 1960 was discovered by Chris Strachwitz, a folk-music archivist and founder of Arhoolie Records, who brought tapes of his music to various members of the folk-blues community. Lipscomb played several folk festivals and was recorded by Arhoolie. He continued recording and performing until 1974, when heart disease forced him to retire. Lipscomb also appeared in several documentary films:

The Blues (1962), The Blues Accordin' to Lightnin' Hopkins (1968), Les Blank's Blues Like Showers of Rain (1970), A Well Spent Life (1971), and Out of the Blacks Into the Blues (1972).

Lisa Lisa and Cult Jam

Formed 1984, New York, NY

Lisa Lisa (b. Lisa Velez, Jan. 15, 1967, New York), voc.; Spanador (b. Alex Mosely, 1962, New York), gtr.; Mike Hughes (b. 1963, New York), drums.

1985—Lisa Lisa & Cult Jam With Full Force (Columbia)

1987—Spanish Fly 1989—Straight to the Sky 1991—

Straight Outta Hell's Kitchen 1997—Super Hits.

Lisa Lisa solo: 1994—LL77 (Pendulum/ERG).

Lisa Lisa and Cult Jam come from the same New York dance-music scene that produced Madonna, but their Latin roots are authentic rather than appropriated. Lisa Velez grew up in New York's Hell's Kitchen, the youngest of 10 children. She began singing in church at age nine, and in high school was involved in musical theater. She met percussionist Mike Hughes in 1983 at the Fun House, a downtown New York club where Velez hung out because she heard Madonna was discovered there.

Hughes and Spanador had been working with the Brooklyn group and production team Full Force, which was looking for a female singer with a girlish voice for a song it had written. Taking the name Lisa Lisa, patterned after Full Force's U.T.F.O. hit "Roxanne, Roxanne," the singer and her new band and producers scored an underground dance smash with "I Wonder If I Take You Home" (#34 pop, #6 R&B, 1985). The song was first released on the 1984 Breakdancing compilation, then as a single in 1985. Their platinum debut album, Lisa Lisa & Cult Jam With Full Force (#52, 1985), featured the hit and a number of other dance tracks, including "All Cried Out" (#8 pop, #3 R&B, 1986).

Featuring a larger variety of sounds including dance, funk, salsa, and doo-wop, the platinum Spanish Fly (#7, 1987) was an even bigger hit, yielding the singles "Head to Toe" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1987), "Lost in Emotion" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1987), "Someone to Love Me for Me" (#7 R&B, 1987), and "Everything Will B-Fine" (#9 R&B, 1988). Lisa Lisa and Cult Jam opened for David Bowie that year and toured the world as a headlining act.

The group's success began to stall with their third album, Straight to the Sky, which featured only the minor hit "Little Jackie Wants to Be a Star" (#29, 1989). Lisa Lisa, Cult Jam, and Full Force tried to recapture their dance/pop success by bringing in C + C Music Factory's David Cole and Robert Cliviles to produce one side of Straight Outta Hell's Kitchen, until then, Full Force had been the band's sole producers, songwriters, arrangers, and managers. But the album's one hit, "Let the Beat Hit 'Em" (#37 pop, #1 R&B, 1991), failed to cross over in a big way to the pop audience.

Velez subsequently parted ways with her band, producers/managers, and label. In December 1993 Pendulum/ERG released Lisa Lisa's solo debut, "Skip to My Lu" (#38 R&B); an album, LL77, followed in January 1994. Success as a solo artist nevertheless eluded Velez as LL77 failed to break into Billboard's Top 100 album chart. The singer approached everyone from Sean Combs to Michael Jackson about putting out a followup album, but she couldn't get a record deal. In 1997 she took her act to the stage, starring in Bambo Babies, a musical about young Latinos trying to make it in Hollywood.

Velez has used her fame to try to be a positive role model for urban youth. She has participated in campaigns to increase AIDS awareness and to fight illiteracy, drug abuse, and teen suicide.

Little Anthony and the Imperials

Formed 1957, New York, NY

Anthony Gourdine (b. Jerome Anthony Gourdine, Jan. 8, 1940, New York), lead voc.; Ernest Wright Jr. (b. Aug. 24, 1941, Brooklyn, NY), second tenor; Clarence Collins (b. Mar. 17, 1941, Brooklyn), baritone; Tracy Lord, first tenor; Gloucester "Nat" Rogers, bass.

1961—(- Lord; - Rogers; + Sammy Strain [b. Dec. 9, 1941], first tenor; - Gourdine; + George Kerr, lead) 1963—(group reunites: Gourdine; Strain; Wright; Collins) 1964—I'm on the Outside Lookin' In (DCP) 1965—Goin' Out of My Head (Veep) Early '70s—(- Wright; + Kenny Seymour) 1974—(- Seymour; + Bobby Wade, voc.) On a New Street (Avco) 1989—Best of Little Anthony and the Imperials (Rhino) 1992—(group reunites: Gourdine; Strain; Collins; Wright).

Little Anthony solo: 1980—Daylight (MCA/Songbird).

Little Anthony and the Imperials are considered one of the best late-'50s doo-wop groups. Their first and biggest hit was the million-selling "Tears on My Pillow" (#4, 1958). Lead singer Anthony Gourdine began his career with the Duponts, a band of Brooklyn singers who cut two singles in 1955 on the Winley and Royal Roost labels. He then formed the Chesters, who cut one song under that name in 1957 on Apollo and then were renamed the Imperials by their new label, End. The Little Anthony moniker for the then 5-foot-4 (he is now 5-foot-10) singer was added by Alan Freed and first turned up on later pressings of "Tears on My Pillow." The group had another hit in 1960, "Shimmy, Shimmy, Ko-ko Bop" (#24) then broke up. Little Anthony was idle until 1963, after the group had re-formed minus Lord and Rogers, and having added Sammy Strain. This lineup had consistent chart success with "Goin' Out of My Head" (#6, 1964) (written by Teddy Randazzo, formerly of the Three Chuckles), "Hurt So Bad" (#9, 1965), and "Take Me Back" (#16, 1965).

After that the Imperials had no more major chart action but continued recording on Veep from 1966 to 1968, United Artists (1969 to 1970), and on Avco in 1974, which yielded the #25 soul hit "I'm Falling in Love With You." Little Anthony played solo on the Las Vegas circuit in the early '70s and, after a slow period later in the decade, became a born-again Christian. He signed a solo deal in 1980 with MCA/Songbird and released Daylight, produced by B.J. Thomas. Gourdine spent much of the '80s and early '90s playing supper clubs as well. Strain later joined the O'Jays, and the remaining Imperials, with a few lineup changes, continued to tour as well.

In 1992 Gourdine, Wright, Collins, and Strain reunited for a Madison Square Garden oldies show. What was supposed to have been a onetime event grew into a permanent re-formation (which Strain left the O'Jays to participate in) that officially began on Valentine's Day 1993. They appeared on a television special celebrating American Bandstand's 40th anniversary. The Imperials continued to perform into 2000.

Little Eva

Born Eva Narcissus Boyd, June 29, 1945, Bell Haven, NC
1962—Lilloco-Motion (Dimension) 1988—The Best of Little Eva (Murray Hill) 1989—Back on Track (Malibu).

Perhaps no baby-sitter in history ever got a bigger break than Eva Boyd, who, the story goes, at age 17 was baby-sitting for songwriters Carole King and Gerry Goffin. They asked her to record a tune they'd just written called "The Loco-Motion." The song borrowed its arrangement from the Marvelettes' "Please Mr. Postman." With the Cookies ("Chains") as backup singers, plus the powerhouse voice of the newly named Little Eva, the record went to #1 on the pop and R&B charts in 1962. Eva had another danceable followup with "Keep Your Hands off My Baby" (#12 pop, #6 R&B, 1962), and in 1963 she scored a Top 20 with "Let's Turkey Trot" (#20 pop, #16 R&B), all recorded for Dimension. Eva also recorded "Swingin' on a Star" (#38, 1963), a duet with Big Dee Irwin, formerly of the Pastels.

Eva's sister Idalia also recorded with the label, earning only one minor hit, "Hoola Hooping." Eva cut a few more records for other labels, including Spring and Amy, but never re-created her original overnight success. Disenchanted with the music business, she retired in the early '70s, but in the '90s began performing live again on the oldies circuit.

Little Feat

Formed 1969, Los Angeles, CA
Lowell George (b. 1945; d. June 29, 1979, Arlington, VA), voc., gtr., slide gtr., harmonica; Bill Payne (b. Mar. 12, 1949, Waco, TX), kybds., voc.; Richard Hayward, drums; Roy Estrada, bass, voc.
1971—Little Feat (Warner Bros.) 1972—Sailin' Shoes (- Estrada; + Kenny Gradney [b. New Orleans, LA], bass; + Paul Barrere [b. July 3, 1948, Burbank, CA], gtr., voc.; + Sam Clayton, congas) 1973—Dixie Chicken 1974—Feats Don't Fail Me Now 1975—The Last Record Album 1977—Time Loves a Hero 1978—Waiting for Columbus 1979—Down on the Farm (- George) (group disbands) 1981—Hoy-Hoy! 1988—(group re-forms: Barrere; Payne; Hayward; Clayton; Gradney; + Craig Fuller, voc., gtr.; + Fred Tackett, gtr., trumpet) Let It Roll 1990—Representing the Mambo 1991—Shake Me Up (Morgan Creek) 1994—(- Fuller; + Shaun Murphy, voc.)

1995—Ain't Had Enough Fun (Zoo) 1996—Live From Neon Park 1998—Under the Radar (CMC International) 2000—Chinese Work Songs; Hotcakes and Outtakes: 30 Years of Little Feat (Rhino).

Lowell George solo: 1979—Thanks I'll Eat It Here (Warner Bros.).
Paul Barrere solo: 1983—On My Own Two Feet (Atlantic) 1984—Real Lies 1995—If the Phone Don't Ring (Zoo).

Little Feat mixed every strain of Southern music—blues, country, gospel, rockabilly, boogie, New Orleans R&B, and Memphis funk—with surreal lyrics and a sense of absurdity and professionalism that could only have come from Southern California. Despite this, Little Feat had two gold albums; the live Waiting for Columbus went platinum. And Little Feat enjoyed a strong cult following and became one of California's most influential bands of the '70s.

The band was formed by Lowell George and Roy Estrada, both former Mothers of Invention members; Richie Hayward, ex-Fraternity of Man (of "Don't Bogart That Joint" on the Easy Rider soundtrack); and classically trained pianist Bill Payne. George's bluesy vocals and slide guitar dominated the sound of the band, and his playful songwriting set its tone, although he could write conventional country-rock songs like "Willin'" (which appeared on the first two Feat albums and has been covered by Linda Ronstadt, Commander Cody, and others), he reveled in wordplay and non sequiturs. As a child, George appeared on TV's Ted Mack's Original Amateur Hour, playing a harmonica duet with his brother Hampton; he played flute in the Hollywood High School orchestra and, later, oboe and bantone saxophone in Frank Sinatra recording sessions. In 1965 he started a folk-rock group, The Factory, which Hayward joined after answering an ad. The Factory recorded for Uni Records. When it broke up, George became rhythm guitarist in Frank Zappa's Mothers of Invention and was with a short-lived Standells (of "Dirty Water" fame) reunion before starting Little Feat.

After "Easy to Slip" from Sailin' Shoes failed to hit, Little Feat went through one of its many breakups, and the first (prior to its 1988 re-formation) to result in personnel changes. Estrada went into computer programming, though he briefly rejoined Zappa a few years later. He was replaced by two New Orleans musicians, Kenny Gradney and Sam Clayton, along with guitarist Paul Barrere.

The Little Feat of Dixie Chicken was slightly less raucous and more funky; the group toured with New Orleans songwriter Allen Toussaint, whose "On Your Way Down" appeared on Dixie Chicken. For the rest of the decade, Little Feat established itself as a touring band, particularly on the East Coast and in the South. The group also became a mainstay of the L.A. music community, Payne especially, did a lot of session work. The band kept an erratic recording schedule, partly because it was frequently breaking up, and partly because George, who had become Feat's producer, had trouble making final decisions; song titles and lyrics would often appear on album covers but not on the LPs themselves.

Beginning with The Last Record Album, Barrere and Payne (usually as collaborators) began to take on a larger share of the songwriting, moving the band toward jazz rock. George produced an album by the Grateful Dead (Shakedown Street) and announced periodically that he was working on a solo album. When Thanks I'll Eat It Here (originally the projected title of Sailin' Shoes) finally appeared in 1979, George announced Little Feat's breakup and went on tour with his own band, in the middle of the tour, he died, apparently of a heart attack. Little Feat finished Down on the Farm and disbanded. Hoy-Hoy! compiled live tracks and alternate takes.

After George's death, Hayward toured with Joan Armatrading and recorded and toured with Robert Plant. Payne returned to studio work and occasional tours, including one with James Taylor. In 1983 and 1984 Barrere released solo albums (reissued on one CD in 1995) and toured with his own band.

Barrere, Payne, Hayward, Gradney, and Clayton reformed Little Feat in 1988, with guitarists Fred Tackett (an L.A. sessionman who'd appeared on some earlier Feat albums) and Craig Fuller (formerly with country-rock band Pure Prairie League). Let It Roll (#36, 1988) went gold. Representing the Mambo (#45, 1990) didn't, and Shake Me Up reached only #126. Fuller was replaced by Shaun Murphy, the band's first female member, in 1994.

Little Feat may not make the headlines anymore, but it continues to tour regularly and has gained a healthy following among admirers of new jam bands. It returned the favor by covering Phish's "Sample in a Jar" on 2000's Chinese Work Songs. Hotcakes and Outtakes is a four-CD set covering the band's entire career and including demos from the Lowell George era.

Little Milton

Born James Milton Campbell Jr., Sep. 7, 1934, Inverness, MS

1969—Grits Ain't Groceries (Checker) 1972—Little Milton Greatest Hits (Chess); Walking the Back Streets (Stax)
1974—Golden Decade (Phonogram); Blues 'n' Soul (Stax); Montreux Festival; Tin Pan Alley 1976—Blues Masters (Chess)
1983—Age Ain't Nothin' but a Number (MCA) 1984—Playing for Keeps (Malaco) 1985—I Will Survive 1986—Annie Mae's Cafe 1987—Movin' to the Country 1988—Back to Back
1990—Too Much Pain 1991—Reality 1992—Strugglin' Lady 1994—I'm a Gambler 1995—Live at Westville Prison (Delmark); Greatest Hits (Malaco) 1996—Cheatin' Habit
1997—Greatest Hits (Chess) 1998—For Real (Malaco)
1999—Welcome to Little Milton.

Through a career that spans more than five decades, veteran blues singer/guitarist Little Milton has emerged as a blues master. The son of Delta sharecroppers, he took up guitar at the age of 12, his love of music inspired by the Grand Ole Opry radio broadcasts as well as blues and gospel. (He considers T-Bone Walker his most important influence.) At 15 he left home to play with Eddie Kusick, Rice Miller (Sonny Boy Williamson), and Willie Love. In 1953 he was signed to Sun

Records, where he recorded with Ike Turner (later of Ike and Tina fame). Milton soon moved on to other labels, including Meteor in 1957 and St. Louis' Bobbin, which he cofounded, in 1958.

His single "I'm a Lonely Man" caught the attention of Leonard Chess, who signed him to Checker in 1961. There he had his first real success with "So Mean to Me" (#14 R&B, 1962). In 1965 he went all the way to #1 R&B with "We're Gonna Make It," a #25 pop hit. His gospel-souful vocals were reminiscent of Bobby Bland, yet still distinctive, earning him another top hit that year with "Who's Cheating Who?" (#43 pop, #4 R&B). Some of his Checker hits were arranged by Donny Hathaway. In 1967 he had a #7 R&B hit with "Feel So Bad."

Milton had many other Checker hits (five R&B Top 20 singles in 1969 alone) before going to Memphis in 1971 to sign with Stax. He enjoyed R&B hits with that label as well, including "That's What Love Will Make You Do" (#9, 1972), and released one of his best-known singles, "Walkin' the Back Streets and Cryin'." He also performed in the 1973 film Wattstax.

After leaving Stax in 1976, Milton produced LPs for the Glades label in Miami and continued to tour. He experienced a career resurgence after signing to Malaco in 1984. In 1988 he received the W.C. Handy Blues Entertainer of the Year Award and was inducted into the Blues Hall of Fame. He received the Pioneer Award from the Rhythm & Blues Foundation in 1997. For Real and Cheatin' Habit were Top 15 blues LP hits. Welcome to Little Milton, his 1999 album that featured such guest artists as Lucinda Williams, Dave Alvin, Delbert McClinton, and Gov't Mule, among others, earned a Grammy nomination for Best Contemporary Blues Album. He continues to tour extensively.

Little Richard

Born Richard Wayne Penniman, Dec. 5, 1932, Macon, GA
1959—His Biggest Hits (Specialty); Little Richard's Grooviest 17 Original Hits 1965—King of Gospel Songs (Mercury); Little Richard's Greatest Hits Recorded Live (Okeh) 1975—The Very Best of Little Richard (United Artists) 1985—Essential (Specialty); 18 Greatest Hits (Rhino) 1988—Shut Up! A Collection of Rare Tracks 1989—The Specialty Box Set (Specialty) 1990—The Specialty Sessions 1991—The Georgia Peach 1992—Shake It All About (Walt Disney) 1996—Shag On Down by the Union Hall (Specialty).

Pounding the piano and howling lyrics in a wild falsetto, Little Richard—the so-called Quasar of Rock—became a seminal figure in the birth of rock & roll. His no-holds-barred style, mascara-coated eyelashes, and high—almost effeminate—pompadour were exotic and in many ways personified the new music's gleeful sexuality and spirit of rebellion. In his own way—and as he is wont to exclaim to anyone in earshot—he is the king of rock & roll.

One of 12 children, Penniman grew up in a devout Seventh-Day Adventist family; his two uncles and a grandfather were preachers, though his father sold bootleg whiskey. The young Penniman sang gospel and learned piano at a local church. But his parents never encouraged his musical interests, and at age 13 Penniman was ejected from their house. (In a 1982 televised interview, he claimed it was because of his homosexuality.) He moved in with a white family, Ann and Johnny Johnson, who ran Macon's Tick Tock Club. There Richard first performed.

In 1951 Penniman won a contract with RCA after playing at an Atlanta radio audition. His recordings during the next two years were fairly conventional jump blues, like "Every Hour" and "Get Rich Quick," neither of which made any commercial impression. In 1952 he moved to Houston, where he recorded for Don Robey's Peacock label. Initially he recorded with the backup groups the Deuces of Rhythm and the Tempo Toppers, though in 1955 he switched to fronting the Johnny Otis Orchestra for four sides. He toured small black nightclubs, performing mostly blues; his rock numbers were not well received.

Down on his luck, he sent a demo tape to Art Rupe of Specialty Records in L.A., who, as luck would have it, had been looking for a hard-edged voice like Penniman's to front some New Orleans musicians. Rupe signed on "Bumps" Blackwell as the producer and, with a Crescent City rhythm section, Little Richard entered the studio on September 14, 1955. One of the songs he cut was an old between-song filler piece called "Tutti Frutti" (with lyrics cleaned up by New Orleans writer Dorothy La Bostrie; one original line was "Tutti Frutti, good booty/If it don't fit, don't force it, you can grease it, make it easy"). Richard's whooping, shouting vocals, sexy-dumb lyrics, and wild piano banging on "Tutti Frutti" set the style for his future hits. The single sold to both black and white fans—over 3 million copies by 1968—and its influence was incalculable. Out of Richard's approximately 36 sides for Specialty, seven were gold: "Tutti Frutti" (#17), "Long Tall Sally" (#6), "Rip It Up" (#17) in 1956, "Lucille" (#21), "Jenny, Jenny" (#10), and "Keep a Knockin'" (#8) in 1957, and "Good Golly, Miss Molly" (#10, 1958). Penniman also appeared in three early rock & roll movies: Don't Knock the Rock (1955), The Girl Can't Help It—in which his salacious reading of the title song is a revelation—(1956), and Mister Rock 'n' Roll (1957).

But in 1957, at the height of his success, Little Richard suddenly quit his rock career after a tour of Australia. He claimed that a vision of the apocalypse came to him in a dream, and that he saw his own damnation. In his authorized biography he tells a story of a plane flight during which the overheated engines appeared in the darkness of night to be on fire. He prayed to God and promised that if the plane landed safely he would change his ways. A few days later, while performing outdoors, he caught a glimpse of the Russian satellite Sputnik, and days after that, a plane he was scheduled to have flown in crashed. Interpreting these incidents as divine signs that he should change his ways, Richard entered Oakwood College in Huntsville, Alabama, where he received a B.A. and was purportedly ordained a minister in the Seventh-Day Adventist Church. (Richard has since claimed that he was never a minister.) Specialty tried to keep his conversion a secret, issuing the hit "Keep a Knockin'," pieced together from half-finished sessions. In 1959 he recorded his first religious album, God Is Real, which was reissued.

Little Richard

Little Richard did not return to rock until 1964. After a failed attempt to gain a major audience on the evangelical circuit with his gospel recordings, he tried to resurrect his rock following with the anachronistic and unsuccessful "Bama Lama Bama Loo" on Specialty in 1964. The world was already switching its attention to the newer sounds of the Beatles. (Ironically, Little Richard was one of Paul McCartney's idols.) Through the years, Little Richard mounted many unsuccessful comeback attempts on Vee-Jay, Modern, Okeh, and Brunswick.

His best shot came in the early '70s, when he got a contract with Reprise and recorded three R&B/rock LPs—The Rill Thing, King of Rock 'n' Roll, and Second Coming—which garnered some fair critical notices and led to some recording sessions with Delaney and Bonnie and Canned Heat. Richard did some late-night talk shows and club dates during the early '70s, but by the decade's close, he was again stressing his attachment to the church, preaching and singing gospel, and renouncing rock & roll, drugs, and his own homosexuality. Over the years, he has alluded to having embraced heterosexuality, but in 2000 he probably described his past most accurately when he told the Los Angeles Times: "I was what you called back in that day a freak. I was flamboyant in every direction. I'm glad I'm able to look back on it and say, 'Thank you, Lord,' and go on."

The year 1984 saw the publication of The Life and Times of Little Richard, an authorized biography by Charles White. Incredibly frank, the book got plenty of attention for its juicy anecdotes (including a threesome with a stripper and Buddy Holly, and a mid-'70s bout with drug addiction) and guilt-ridden accounts of his battle to tame his sexuality: "Homosexuality is contagious," he is quoted as having saying. "It's not something you're born with." The book ends with a chapter-long sermon from Richard. Later, he claimed that in some portions of the book he had been misquoted. He shares the copyright with Charles White and his longtime manager Robert "Bumps" Blackwell.

But one can never count Little Richard out of the spotlight for long, and in 1985—at nearly age 60—he launched a formidable comeback with a featured role in the hit film, Down and Out in Beverly Hills; he also appeared in Why Do Fools Fall in Love and Last Action Hero. He made guest appearances on such popular television series as Miami Vice, Martin, and Full House and has been a pitchman in commercials for a number of companies, including Taco Bell, McDonald's, and Charlie perfume. He contributed backing vocals to the U2-B.B. King hit "When Love Comes to Town," and duetted with Elton John on the latter's Duets and Tanya Tucker on Rhythm, Country & Blues ("Somethin' Else").

In a development that surely would surprise his first-generation fans, Little Richard has had his greatest latter-day recording success with a new generation: their grandchildren. After recording a rock-rap version of "Itsy Bitsy Spider" for the all-star Pediatric Aids Foundation benefit album For Our Children, Richard recorded Shake It All About. It included children's standards, such as "On Top of Old Smokey" and his own "Keep a Knockin'" (complete with him yelling "Shut up!" to his background chorus of kids). He also appears on Kermit Unpigged (1994) and in Shelley Duvall's award-winning children's video, Mother Goose Rock 'n' Rhyme. He also sang the theme song to the PBS children's program, The Magic School Bus.

On into the 21st century, Little Richard remains one of the most recognized and quotable celebrities in the world. His life story was the subject of a made-for-TV movie in 2000, starring the actor Leon. The apparently ageless (and vegetarian) Richard continues to tour, his spirit and passion for the music—and himself—undiminished. As he announced from a stage shortly after his 66th birthday, "I'm still beautiful. I'm not conceited—I'm convinced!"

Little Richard was among the first 10 inductees into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1986. In 1993 he received a Lifetime Achievement Award from the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences. He performed at Bill Clinton's presidential inaugural in 1992. In his hometown of Macon he has been honored with a street bearing his name, Little Richard Penniman Boulevard. He has also received the Rhythm & Blues Foundation's Pioneer Award.

Little River Band

Formed 1975, Melbourne, Austral.

Beeb Birtles (b. Gerard Bertelkamp, Nov. 28, 1948, Amsterdam, Neth.), gr.; Graham Goble (b. May 15, 1947, Austral.), gr.; Glenn Shorrock (b. June 30, 1944, Chatham, Eng.), lead voc.; Roger McLachlan (b. N.Z.), bass; Derek Pellicci (b. Eng.), drums; Rick Formosa (b. Sep. 1, 1954, Rome, It.), gr.
1975—Little River Band (Harvest) 1976—After Hours
1977—(- Formosa; - McLachlan; + David Briggs, gr., voc.; + George McArdle, bass) Diamantina Cocktail 1978—Sleeper

Catcher 1979—First Under the Wire (- McArdle) 1980—Backstage Pass (+ Wayne Nelson, voc. bass) 1981—Time Exposure 1982—Greatest Hits (- Briggs; + Steve Housden [b. Sep. 21, 1951, Bedford, Eng.], gr.; + John Farnham [b. Eng.], voc.; - Shorrock) 1983—The Net 1985—(- Pellicci; + Steven Prestwich, drums; + David Hirschfelder, kybds.) Playing to Win 1986—No Reins 1988—(- Farnham; - Hirschfelder; - Prestwich; + Shorrock; + Pellicci) 1988—Monsoon (MCA) 1990—Get Lucky (MCA/Curb) 1991—Worldwide Love (Curb) 1994—Reminiscing—The 20th Anniversary Collection (Rhino) 2000—Where We Started From (self-released, Austral.) (lineup: Housden; Nelson; + Kevin Murphy, drums; + Greg Hind, gr.; + Glenn Reither, kybds.)

Australia's Little River Band has enjoyed numerous hits in America with its vocal-harmony country pop. The band began in 1975 from the ashes of a CSN&Y-type group called Mississippi. Though LRB formed in Australia, only Graham Goble was born there. Glenn Shorrock, born in England, moved to Australia as a teenager and was part of one of the country's most successful '60s teenybop bands, the Twilights. At the same time, Beeb Birtles played in the successful Aussie band Zoot, which used to dress entirely in pink and also included Rick Springfield. As a teenager, Rick Formosa was invited to join the Edgar Winter Group, but his parents made him turn down the offer.

In 1972 Shorrock moved back to England, joined the classical-rock band Esperanto, and later did studio sessions with Cliff Richard. There, in 1975, he met Birtles, Goble, and Pellicci, who'd just broken up Mississippi. The four agreed to form a new band (taking their name from a road sign) back in Melbourne, eventually with McLachlan (bass) and Formosa (guitar). They signed with Capitol and in 1976 released their eponymous debut, which included the #28 U.S. hit "It's a Long Way There." Before the first U.S. tour that same year, Formosa and McLachlan left.

The band's next American record was a best-of from two Australian LPs. Titled Diamantina Cocktail, it included the breakthrough hit "Help Is on Its Way" (#14, 1977). LRB also scored big with "Reminiscing" (#3, 1978) and "Lady" (#10, 1979). In late 1979 "Lonesome Loser" (#6, 1979) and "Cool Change" (#10, 1979) drove First Under the Wire into platinum sales. McArdle left after a 1979 U.S. tour, gave away all his money, and moved into Australia's Blue Mountains for a three-year Bible-study course.

In 1980 the band released a double live album, then added American bassist Wayne Nelson. The band scored another Top 10 single in 1981 with "The Night Owls" (#6) from Time Exposure, produced by George Martin. Other hits from that album were "Take It Easy on Me" (#10) and "Man on Your Mind" (#14).

Briggs left, then Shorrock pursued a solo career. John Farnham, a singer from Adelaide, replaced Shorrock, and numerous personnel changes followed. Farnham left for a very successful solo career in Australia, then Shorrock returned. Working again with Boylan, they recorded their first MCA LP, Monsoon.

As of this writing, three of their LPs are platinum, including the double-platinum Greatest Hits, and two others gold. Though Little River Band had eight entries in Billboard magazine's list of the 50 all-time biggest Australian hits in the U.S., the band has yet to repeat its earlier success. Still, despite numerous changes in personnel, the band still tours regularly and in 2000 self-released its first studio album in more than a decade.

Little Walter

Born Marion Walter Jacobs, May 1, 1930, Marksville, LA; died Feb. 15, 1968, Chicago, IL

1963—The Best of Little Walter (Chess) 1969—Hate to See You Go 1972—Blues Boss Harmonica 1974—Confessin' the Blues 1986—Blues World of Little Walter (Delmark) 1989—The Best of Little Walter, vol. 2 (Chess) 1993—The Essential Little Walter.

Whether or not Little Walter was actually the first person to amplify the harmonica, as has been claimed, he was a pioneer in using the microphone to bring out the moaning, echoing, and hornlike sounds that are basic to modern blues harmonica. Walter Jacobs began playing the harmonica as a child in the South, and he attracted the attention of Muddy Waters, with whom he often recorded and toured in the late '50s. When the blues scene centralized in Chicago and went electric in the '50s, with Waters as one of its stars, Walter moved north. He joined Waters' band and started releasing his own records. The instrumental "Juke" was a #1 R&B hit in 1952, one of the biggest hits of any Delta-Chicago bluesman.

Throughout the '50s Little Walter placed records in the R&B Top 10: "Sad Hours," "Blues With a Feeling," "Mean Old World," "You Better Watch Yourself," "You're So Fine," "Key to the Highway," and his other #1 record, "My Babe." He toured with the Aces, formerly Junior Wells' band breaking out of the blues circuit to play Harlem's Apollo Theatre and other large venues. And though he never made the pop chart, his reputation and influence were widespread, especially in England, where a generation of harmonica players learned from his records and from his disciple Cyril Davies. Walter, who possessed a volcanic temper and a fondness for drink, died from head injuries suffered in a Chicago street fight.

Live

Formed 1985, York, PA

Edward Kowalczyk (b. July 16, 1971, York), voc., gtr.; Chad Taylor (b. Nov. 24, 1970, Owings Mills, MD), gtr.; Patrick Dahlheimer (b. May 30, 1971, York), bass; Chad Gracey (b. July 23, 1971, York), drums.

1991—Four Songs EP (Radioactive); Mental Jewelry 1994—Throwing Copper 1997—Secret Samadhi 1999—The Distance to Here.

Characterized by an earnest approach to anthemic rock and a spiritual zeal reminiscent of Joshua Tree-era U2. Live climbed from modest Modern Rock success to the mainstream on the strength of its 1994 breakthrough album, the 6-million-selling Throwing Copper.

Edward Kowalczyk, Chad Taylor, Patrick Dahlheimer, and Chad Gracey came together for a middle-school talent show in the Pennsylvania blue-collar town of York. The group remained together throughout high school, going through a handful of band names and new-wave covers before settling on the moniker Public Affection and recording a self-released cassette of originals, The Death of a Dictionary, in 1989. Frequent trips into New York to play at CBGB helped net the band a deal with Radioactive Records in 1991. With the new name Live, the band entered the studio with former Talking Heads keyboardist Jerry Harrison that year and began recording the EP Four Songs. The single "Operation Spirit (The Tyranny of Tradition)" went to #9 on the Modern Rock chart and paved the way for the band's Harrison-produced, full-length debut, 1991's Mental Jewelry (#73). The album's lyrics, penned by Kowalczyk, were heavily inspired by Indian guru Jiddu Krishnamurti.

Fueled by heavy touring (including billing at Woodstock '94 and Peter Gabriel's WOMAD tour) and a string of hit singles ("I Alone," "All Over You," and the #1 Modern Rock hits "Selling the Drama" and "Lightning Crashes"), Throwing Copper went to #1 in 1994. The momentum continued long enough to help 1997's Secret Samadhi (coproduced by the band and Jay Healy) debut at #1. Deriving its name from a state of Hindu meditation, the album spawned four Modern Rock hit singles, but failed to match its predecessor's success, with sales topping off at 2 million. Harrison came back on board as coproducer for 1999's The Distance to Here, which debuted at #4 and featured the #78 single "The Dolphin's Cry."

Living Colour

Formed 1983, Brooklyn, NY

William Calhoun (b. July 22, 1964, Brooklyn), drums; Corey Glover (b. Nov. 6, 1964, Brooklyn), voc.; Vernon Reid (b. Aug. 22, 1958, London, Eng.), gtr.; Muzz Skillings (b. Manuel Skillings, Jan. 6, 1960, Queens, NY), bass.

1988—Vivid (Epic) 1990—Time's Up 1992—(- Skillings, + Doug Wimbish [b. Sep. 22, 1956, Hartford, CT], bass) 1993—Stain 1995—Pride 1998—Super Hits. Vernon Reid solo: 1996—Mistaken Identity (Sony). Corey Glover solo: 1998—Hymns (LaFace).

A black band playing rock, Living Colour has used the platform of rock stardom to advocate a political agenda of self-reliance and self-knowledge. As spearheads of New York's Black Rock Coalition, they put their philosophy into action, advancing the cause of other African-American rock bands. Their energetic, rhythmically complex, and harmonically sophisticated music—which draws equally from Jimi Hendrix, Led Zeppelin, and post-Bitches Brew Miles Davis—was accessible enough to yield charting singles, including "Cult of Personality" (#13, 1989) and "Glamour Boys" (#31, 1989).

Vernon Reid had already gained fame as a guitarist in Ronald Shannon Jackson's Decoding Society and Defunkt before he formed Living Colour in 1983. (The group's name is taken from the old NBC preprogram announcement, "The following program is brought to you in . . ."). Originally a side project with a revolving cast of musicians, the lineup solidified in 1985 when Corey Glover, who met Reid in 1982, rejoined the band after acting in Platoon. Black Rock Coalition events brought Reid in contact with Berklee College of Music graduate Calhoun and Skillings, who had played with Harry Belafonte.

Mick Jagger heard Living Colour at CBGB in 1987 and offered to finance a demo. The two songs he produced, "Which Way to America?" and "Glamour Boys," helped garner the band a contract with Epic, and appeared, remixed, on its debut, Vivid (#6, 1988). While critically lauded, the album languished until the video for "Cult" appeared on MTV. The politically charged single became a gold record and earned the group an MTV Video Music Award for Best New Artist.

The band opened up for the Stones on 1989's Steel Wheels Tour, and Reid played on Keith Richards' Talk Is Cheap. This activity did not detract from Living Colour. Time's Up (#13, 1990), which includes guests Little Richard, Mick Jagger, and Queen Latifah, received an even better critical reception than their debut, and, like Vivid, won the Best Hard Rock Performance Grammy.

Tensions began to rise in 1991. With no new album forthcoming, Epic released Biscuits (#110, 1991), an EP of outtakes, live performances, and covers. Reid and Glover played in a side project, Nightshade, and in early 1992 Skillings left the band. He was replaced by Sugar Hill session bassist and George Clinton veteran Doug Wimbish. The new band co-produced Stain (#26, 1993), which focused less on political issues and more on interpersonal relationships in such songs as "Bi" and "Mind Your Own Business." In early 1995 the band announced it had broken up.

Of all of the band's members, Reid has had the most active, versatile career. The year following Living Colour's breakup, he released a solo album, Mistaken Identity, on which he enrolled jazz legend Teo Macero and hip-hop studio whiz Prince Paul as coproducers, and which featured guest turns by clarinetist Don Byron and turntablist DJ Logic. Reid continues to play regularly in New York, popping up in unexpected corners: He wrote a score for the dance performance Jazz Train in 1998, and appeared in the Brooklyn Academy of Music's tributes to Prince and Jimi Hendrix in 1999 and 2000. Reid enjoys experimenting with various musical partners, and often explores his avant tendencies in combos such as Guitar Oblique (with fellow guitarists Elliott Sharp and David Torn), Masque, and My Science Project.

As for Glover, he settled on a more traditional funk-and-soul style on 1998's Hymns, which he cowrote with the Family Stand's Peter Lord and V. Jeffery Smith. At the end of 2000, Living Colour reunited for a surprise show in New York.

L.L. Cool J

Born James Todd Smith, Jan. 14, 1968, Queens, NY
 1985—Radio (Def Jam/Columbia) 1987—Bigger and Deffer
 1989—Walking With a Panther 1990—Mama Said Knock You Out
 1993—14 Shots to the Dome 1995—Mr. Smith
 1996—All World: Greatest Hits 1997—Phenomenon.

Ever since he had his first hit single at age 16, L.L. Cool J has been one of rap's brightest artists, propelled by both his willingness to stay street and his desire to be a pop icon. L.L.'s parents divorced when he was four, and he was raised by his grandparents in Queens. He began rapping when he was nine; his grandfather bought him a DJ system when he was 11. He made tapes in his basement, which he sent to record companies, including Def Jam, then being formed by Rick Rubin and Russell Simmons. In 1984 "I Need a Beat" became Def Jam's first release; it sold 100,000 copies, and L.L. dropped out of high school.

Radio (#6 R&B, 1985) was the first Def Jam album. The platinum disc was considered groundbreaking for L.L.'s arrangement of raps into song structures, with verses and choruses. The album included the anthem "I Can't Live Without My Radio" (#15 R&B, 1985), which L.L. performed during his cameo in the movie Krush Groove. Bigger and Deffer (#3, 1987), produced by L.L. and the L.A. Posse, lived up to its title, going double platinum with the singles "I Need Love" (#14 pop, #1 R&B, 1987) and "I'm Bad" (#4 R&B, 1987). The former, a ballad, clinched L.L.'s image as a heartthrob. His name stands for Ladies Love Cool James; Playgirl magazine named him one of the 10 sexiest men in rock.

In 1988 L.L. had a minor hit with "Going Back to Cali" (#31 pop, #12 R&B) from the Less Than Zero soundtrack. He headlined a Def Jam tour and played a Just Say No Foundation antidrug concert at Radio City Music Hall. Some rap fans felt L.L. sold out on Walking With a Panther (#6 pop, #1 R&B, 1989), which yielded the single "I'm That Type of Guy" (#15 pop, #7 R&B, 1989). He was booed at an Apollo show; L.L. himself has said he was out of touch with the rap constituency at that time.

Living Colour: Doug Wimbish, Vernon Reid, Corey Glover, William Calhoun

He came back swinging with the Grammy-winning Mama Said Knock You Out (#16 pop, #2 R&B, 1990), a tough, compelling album coproduced with Marley Marl that is L.L.'s biggest-selling record to date. L.L.'s comeback was kicked off by "The Boom'n' System" (#48 pop, #6 R&B, 1990), followed by "Around the Way Girl" (#9, 1990) and "Mama Said Knock You Out" (#17 pop, #12 R&B, 1991). In May 1991 he was the first rap artist to perform on MTV's Unplugged. On 14 Shots to the Dome (#5 pop, #1 R&B, 1993), L.L. seemed confused about his strategy again; he stuck with the past by working with Marl but tried to update his credibility with some gangsta poses. None of the album's four singles made it into the Top 20.

Aiming for an impact outside the rap world, L.L. appeared in the films The Hard Way (1991) and Toys (1992) and performed at the 1993 presidential inauguration. In addition, concerned with children's welfare, he taped a radio commercial for a "Stay in School" literacy campaign and founded the Camp Cool J Foundation and Youth Enterprises, a program for urban youth.

In 1995 L.L. starred in In the House, a network-TV sitcom that ran for three seasons. He also recorded Mr. Smith (#20 pop, #4 R&B), a multiplatinum album that produced three Top 10 singles. "Hey Lover" (#3 pop, #3 R&B, 1995), which featured the group Boyz II Men on backing vocals, won the MC a Grammy for Best Rap Solo Performance in 1996. Phenomenon (#7 pop, #4 R&B, 1997), a semiconfessional album, yielded three more hit singles; the record was released in conjunction with the publication of the L.L.'s autobiography, I Make My Own Rules. Since then the rapper has focused on acting, appearing in several feature films, notably Oliver Stone's Any Given Sunday.

Richard Lloyd: See Television

Nils Lofgren

Born June 21, 1951, Chicago, IL

With Grin: 1971—Grin (Spindizzy) 1972—1 + 1; All Out

1973—Gone Crazy (A&M) 1985—Best of Grin (Epic)

1999—The Very Best of Grin (Columbia).

Nils Lofgren solo: 1975—Nils Lofgren (A&M) 1976—Cry

Tough 1977—I Came to Dance; Night After Night 1979—

Nils 1981—Night Fades Away (Backstreet) 1983—

Wonderland 1985—Flip (Columbia); The Best of Nils Lofgren

(A&M) 1989—Classics Volume 13 1991—Silver Lining

(Rykodisc) 1992—Crooked Line 1995—Damaged Goods

(Pure) 1997—Code of the Road: Greatest Hits Live (The Right Stuff) 1998—Acoustic Live.

Pop-rock singer, songwriter, and guitarist Nils Lofgren was the leader of Grin and later led his own bands before joining Bruce Springsteen's E Street Band in the '80s. Lofgren moved with his parents to Maryland, near Washington, DC, as a child, and there he began playing accordion at age five and studied jazz and classical music before turning to rock at 15. He formed Grin in 1969 with bassist Bob Gordon and drummer Bob Berberich (later adding younger brother Tom on second guitar). The group's local reputation attracted Neil Young and Danny Whitten of Crazy Horse, whom Nils met while they were touring through Maryland. At age 17 Lofgren played piano and sang on Young's 1970 LP After the Goldrush, and the next year he did a guest spot on Crazy Horse's debut LP, to which he also contributed two songs.

Instead of staying with Young or Crazy Horse, Lofgren used the credits to help him get a record contract for Grin. The trio signed to Spindizzy (a Columbia subsidiary), and its 1971 debut was critically praised for its tuneful ballads and tight melodic rockers, as was the followup, 1 + 1, which included "White Lies." The single never passed #75, though, and Grin's tours failed to attract large audiences. In 1973 Young again asked Lofgren to take time out from Grin to join him for the Tonight's the Night Tour. Lofgren agreed and later played on the 1975 album of the same name. In 1973 Grin signed with A&M, but Gone Crazy was not well received. That and the group's financial problems caused it to disband in mid-1974. Later that year, when Mick Taylor left the Stones, Lofgren was briefly rumored as a replacement.

Lofgren signed with A&M and debuted in 1975 with the acclaimed Nils Lofgren. In 1976 he followed it with Cry Tough, produced by Al Kooper. He began to build a following, largely on the strength of live shows. Nils included three songs Lofgren had cowritten with Lou Reed. (A different three written by the two appear on Reed's Bells LP.) In 1980 Lofgren signed with Backstreet Records, which issued Night Fades Away.

After joining Neil Young for his 1983 Trans tour, Lofgren replaced Little Steven Van Zandt in Bruce Springsteen's E Street Band in 1984. He stayed until Springsteen stopped working with that group in 1991, then joined the 2000 reunion tour. Springsteen made a guest appearance on Lofgren's Silver Lining (#153, 1991), which was recorded for the tiny independent Towebell label, and picked up for distribution by a bigger indie, Rykodisc.

Lofgren continues to record and tour, but his solo activities have a much lower profile than his work in the E Street Band.

Kenny Loggins

Born Jan. 7, 1948, Everett, WA

1977—Celebrate Me Home (Columbia) 1978—Nightwatch

1979—Keep the Fire 1980—Alive 1982—High Adventure

1985—Vox Humana 1988—Back to Avalon 1991—Leap of Faith 1993—Outside: From the Redwoods 1994—Return to Pooh Corner 1997—Yesterday, Today, Tomorrow: The Greatest Hits of Kenny Loggins; The Unimaginable Life 1998—December 2000—More Songs From Pooh Corner (Sony/Wonder).

Singer/songwriter Kenny Loggins has been successful as half of the duo Loggins and Messina, a gentle-rocking solo artist, and a writer and performer of hit soundtrack tunes. He began playing guitar while in the seventh grade of a parochial school in Alhambra, California, where his family settled after living in Detroit and Seattle. In college Loggins joined a folk group, but by the late '60s he had turned to rock, first in Gator Creek and then in Second Helping. In 1969 he left Second Helping and worked for $100 a week as a songwriter for ABC Records' publishing outlet, Wingate Music. Around this time, he toured with the remnants of the Electric Prunes.

Back in L.A., Loggins met Jim Ibbotson of the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band. Ibbotson and the band decided to record four of Loggins' songs on their Uncle Charlie and His Dog Teddy, one of them, "House at Pooh Corner," was a minor hit. In 1970 Don Ellis, an A&R staffer at Columbia and a close family friend, introduced Loggins to ex-Poco Jim Messina, who was looking for acts to produce. Clive Davis signed Loggins to the label, and the singer spent the year working up material with Messina, leading to their informal joint debut. Their union would last five years and yield seven successful albums before the split in late 1976 [see Loggins and Messina].

In 1977 Loggins released his solo debut, the platinum Celebrate Me Home (#27, 1977). He continued in the same pop-rock style with 1978's Nightwatch (#7), which also sold over a million copies and included the #5 single "Whenever I Call You 'Friend'" (cowritten with Melissa Manchester and featuring a vocal by Stevie Nicks). Keep the Fire (#16, 1979) boasted "This Is It" (#11, 1979). Loggins cowrote the Doobie Brothers' 1979 hit "What a Fool Believes."

He had a hit in 1980 with "I'm Alright" (#7), the theme song from the movie comedy Caddyshack. More hits from other films followed through the '80s: "Footloose" (#1, 1984) and "I'm Free (Heaven Help the Man)" (#22, 1984) from Footloose; "Danger Zone" (#2, 1986) from Top Gun; "Meet Me Halfway" (#11, 1987) from Over the Top; and "Nobody's Fool" (#8, 1988) from Caddyshack II. For the relatively less successful Leap of Faith (#71, 1991) and Return to Pooh Corner (#65, 1994), the singer/songwriter drew heavily on his personal life; the former addressed his divorce from his wife, Eva, while the latter contained songs and lullabies he'd sung to his four children.

After a short break and a greatest-hits collection (#39, 1997), Loggins returned with The Unimaginable Life, another confessional album that this time addressed in unflinchingly personal detail his life with new wife, Julia (with whom he also coauthored a companion book of the same title). While the album peaked at #107, Loggins scored another Adult Contemporary hit with "For the First Time" from the film One

Fine Day. He concluded the '90s with a Christmas record, December, and another album of children's music, More Songs From Pooh Corner.

Loggins and Messina

Kenny Loggins, born Jan. 7, 1948, Everett, WA; Jim Messina, born Dec. 5, 1947, Maywood, CA 1972—Kenny Loggins With Jim Messina Sittin' In (Columbia); Loggins and Messina 1973—Full Sail 1974—On Stage; Motherlode 1975—So Fine 1976—Native Sons; The Best of Friends 1977—Finale 1980—Best Of.
 Kenny Loggins solo: see entry.
 Jim Messina solo: 1979—Oasis (Columbia) 1981—Messina (Warner Bros.).

The highly successful Loggins and Messina partnership began by accident. Ex-Poco and Buffalo Springfield guitarist Jim Messina agreed to produce Kenny Loggins' solo album, but during the recording sessions the two discovered their styles complemented each other and decided to form a band, which scored a string of country-pop hits.

Messina was raised in Harlingen, Texas, and began playing guitar at age five. He was 12 when his parents moved to California. After graduating from high school in 1965, Messina began doing studio work at Harmony Recorders Audio Sound, Wally Heider, and Sunset Sound, where in late 1967 he met the Buffalo Springfield while that group was recording its second LP, Buffalo Springfield Again. He wound up producing and playing bass on the group's final LP, Last Time Around, and then formed Poco with fellow ex-Springfield Richie Furay. After two years and three albums, he left Poco in November 1970 to become an independent producer for Columbia; his first project was to be Kenny Loggins.

Their live debut at the Troubadour in Los Angeles was billed as the Kenny Loggins Band with Jim Messina. Loggins and Messina's 1972 debut album billed them as Kenny Loggins With Jim Messina Sittin' In. The debut album took a slow climb up the chart but eventually went platinum, aided by one of its tunes, "Danny's Song," which became a Top 10 hit for Anne Murray. It also included the light Caribbean-pop FM radio favorite "Vahevala."

The duo's second LP was its first equal billing and gave Loggins and Messina the hit singles "Your Mama Don't Dance" (#4, 1972) and "Thinking of You" (#18, 1973). The album went platinum, as did the followup, Full Sail. Although generally dismissed by critics, Loggins and Messina continued to sell more gold and platinum records. Their reworking of '50s hits, So Fine, sold disappointingly, and even though their final and seventh LP, Native Sons, went gold, they broke up in November 1976. A best-of (The Best of Friends) and a second live LP (Finale) were released after the split. Loggins, who went on to a hugely popular solo career, claims his and Messina's partnership was an informal union (each was contracted separately to Columbia), and they always thought each LP would be their last together. Messina's solo efforts met with far less acclaim than did his ex-partner's. In 1989 he rejoined Poco for the successful reunion album Legacy.

London Suede

Formed Oct. 1989, London, Eng.

Brett Anderson (b. Sep. 29, 1967, Haywards Heath, Eng.), voc., gtr.; Bernard Butler, gtr.; Matt Osman (b. Oct. 9, 1967, Welwyn Garden City, Eng.), bass; Justine Frischmann (b. Sep. 16, 1969, London), gtr.; Mike Joyce (b. June 1, 1963, Manchester, Eng.), drums; Simon Gilbert (b. May 23, 1965, Stratford-upon-Avon, Eng.), drums.

1991—(– Joyce) 1992—(– Frischmann) 1993—Suede (Nude/Columbia) 1994—Dog Man Star; Stay Together EP (– Butler; + Richard Oakes [b. Oct. 1, 1976, Perivale, Eng.], gtr.) 1996—Coming Up (+ Neil Codling [b. Dec. 5, 1973, Stratford-upon-Avon], kybds.) 1997—Sci-Fi Lullabies 1999—Head Music 2000—Sessions CD.

Bernard Butler solo: 1995—The Sound of McAlmont-Butler (Hut) 1998—People Move On (Creation/Columbia) 2000—Friends & Lovers.

Suede helped create the '90s Brit-pop movement with a melodic, guitar-heavy sound, conquering the UK charts while paving the way for greater international success by the likes of Oasis and Blur. Initially centered around the songwriting team of Brett Anderson and Bernard Butler, Suede drew attention for both its glam-influenced sound and a sexually provocative, androgynous image.

Schoolmates Anderson and Matt Osman formed the band Geoff in 1985 and recorded two demos before leaving for university studies in London. The pair reunited a few years later to form the short-lived band Suave & Elegant before placing an ad seeking a guitarist in New Musical Express. Bernard Butler responded and became a songwriting partner with Anderson. They called the new band Suede, named after the Mornsey song "Suedehead." A variety of musicians came and went, including drummer Mike Joyce (formerly of the Smiths). Justine Frischmann briefly joined before leaving in 1992 to form Elastica (see entry).

Following the debut singles "The Drowners" (#49 U.K., 1993) and "Metal Mickey" (#17 U.K., 1993), Suede's self-titled debut album was an immediate hit in Britain, reaching #1. The album also spawned the single "Animal Nitrate" (#7 U.K., 1993), but the band was unable to significantly crack the American market. Even worse, the band was forced to call itself London Suede in America, where an obscure Maryland-based lounge singer calling herself Suede had filed a lawsuit. Anderson and Butler's relationship disintegrated during the making of the followup, Dog Man Star. Butler quit shortly after it was finished and was replaced by 17-year-old Richard Oakes.

Dog Man Star was a commercial disappointment, but Butler enjoyed a UK Top 10 single "Yes" with soul singer David McAlmont. Suede resurfaced in 1996 with Coming Up (#1 U.K.), but the album wasn't released in the U.S. for nearly a year. Head Music followed in 1999. Butler released a solo debut, People Move On, in 1998. Friends & Lovers followed in 2000.

Lone Justice/Maria McKee

Formed 1983, Los Angeles, CA

Maria McKee (b. Aug. 17, 1964, Los Angeles), voc., gtr.; Ryan Hedgecock (b. Feb. 27, 1961, Los Angeles), gtr., voc.; Marvin Etzioni (b. Apr. 18, 1956, New York, NY), bass, voc.; Don Heffington (b. Dec. 20, 1950, Los Angeles), drums.

1985—Lone Justice (Geffen) 1986—(– Etzioni; – Heffington; + Shayne Fontayne, gtr.; + Gregg Sutton, bass; + Rudy Richman, drums; + Bruce Brody [b. Dec. 11, 1950], kybds.) Shelter (– Hedgecock) 1999—This World Is Not My Home. Maria McKee solo: 1989—Maria McKee (Geffen) 1993—You Gotta Sin to Get Saved 1996—Life Is Sweet. Marvin Etzioni solo: 1992—The Mandolin Man (Restless) 1993—Bone 1994—Weapons of the Spirit. Ryan Hedgecock solo: 1992—Echo Park (Yellow Moon, U.K.). Hedgecock with Parlor James: 1996—Dreadful Sorry EP (Discovery) 1998—Old Dreams (Sire).

An exponent of L.A.'s thriving early-'80s club scene Lone Justice won critical kudos—and the admiration of some of rock's biggest names—with its self-titled 1985 debut album. Produced by Jimmy Iovine, Lone Justice folded country and gospel inflections into spirited, rootsy rock arrangements. Singer Maria McKee was born into a musical family; her half brother was Bryan MacLean of the '60s band Love. Her mighty soprano is texturally evocative of such greats as Aretha Franklin, Janis Joplin, and Dolly Parton, and her authoritative delivery inspired comparisons to other rock & soul luminaries—among them Bruce Springsteen and Bob Dylan, who were both Lone Justice fans. So was Tom Petty, who lent the group a song for its first album, and U2, on whose 1985 tour Lone Justice was an opening act.

The band was formed by McKee and Hedgecock, who initially began performing as an acoustic duo. With the addition of a rhythm section, the band went electric, began attracting attention on the L.A. club circuit, and signed a deal with Geffen. Though Lone Justice garnered raves, it proved a commercial disappointment. Dissension grew within the band, particularly after Iovine, who had become the group's manager, downplayed the other members' contributions in favor of McKee's. By the second album, 1986's Shelter, there was an all-new lineup, save for McKee and, on acoustic guitar, Hedgecock, who left soon after the LP's release. The title ballad, cowritten by McKee and Springsteen's E Street Band guitarist Little Steven Van Zandt, who also coproduced the album, hit the Top 50 (#47), but by then the band had thrown in the towel.

McKee continued working with keyboardist Bruce Brody and released an eponymous solo debut in 1989, on which Brody, Robbie Robertson, Richard Thompson, and Marc Ribot participated as musicians and/or songwriters. (Most of the album's songs were written or cowritten by McKee, who had contributed or collaborated on a fair amount of Lone Justice's maternal.) For her second album, McKee reunited with Lone Justice's original rhythm section and enlisted Jayhawks guitarists/vocalists Mark Olson and Gary Louns. The singer then took a turn in an unexpected direction for her third solo album, 1996's Life Is Sweet. Rather than relying on her tried-but-true country-rock sound, she played lead guitar and explored alternative-rock territory. McKee resurfaced in 2001 on the Songcatcher soundtrack singing traditional country folk.

As for the other members of Lone Justice, Etzioni released a trio of solo albums and produced discs for such bands as Counting Crows and Toad the Wet Sprocket. Hedgecock recorded the LP Echo Park for a British label, formed Parlor James with Amy Allison (the daughter of jazz musician Mose Allison), and joined Allison's other band, the Maudlins. Heffington contributed drums to recordings by the Jayhawks, Victoria Williams, and Lucinda Williams. Fontayne joined Springsteen's band in 1992, during the Boss' non-E Street Band period.

This World Is Not My Home (1999) is a Lone Justice retrospective with nine previously unreleased tracks.

Long Ryders

Formed in 1982, Los Angeles, CA

Sid Griffin (b. Sep. 18, 1955, Louisville, KY), gtr. and other stringed instruments, voc.; Stephen McCarthy (b. Feb. 12, 1958, Richmond, VA), gtr., voc.; Greg Sowders (b. Mar. 17, 1960, La Jolla, CA), drums; Tom Stevens (b. Sep. 17, 1956, Elkhart, IN), bass.

1983—10-5-60 EP (PVC) 1984—Native Sons (Frontier)
1985—State of Our Union (Island) 1987—Two Fisted Tales
1989—Metallic B.O. cassette (Long Ryders Fan Club)
1995—BBC Radio 1 Live Concert (Windsong) 1998—
Long Ryders Anthology (PolyGram).

Sid Griffin solo: 1997—Little Victories (Country-Town).
Coal Porters (with Griffin): 1991—Rebels Without Applause
(Zuma) 1994—Land of Hope and Crosby (Temple Bar)
1995—Los London.

Western Electric (with Griffin): 2000—Western Electric (Gadfly).
Gutterball (with McCarthy): 1993—Gutterball (Mute) 1995—
Weasel (Break Out).

Blending punk attitude with late-'60s country-rock instrumentation, the Long Ryders were principal exponents of the mid-'80s L.A. underground pop style known as cow punk.

Leader Sid Griffin left his native Kentucky for L.A. after reading about punk rock in a magazine. Inspired by his hero, the late Gram Parsons, he also wound up rediscovering the country music of his youth. In 1982 he formed Long Ryders with fellow displaced Southerner Stephen McCarthy. After a disappointing first EP, the band released the well-received Native Sons (featuring guest vocals by ex-Byrd Gene Clark). Long Ryders' Island output sold poorly and received lukewarm critical response. Unhappy with the way the label had promoted them, the band members called it quits after 1987's Two Fisted Tales.

Griffin, who relocated to London, eventually formed another country-rock band, the Coal Porters. In 1997 he released a solo album, Little Victories, which included appearances by Billy Bragg, Steve Wynn, and Griffin's wife, former Dream Academy singer Kate St. John. McCarthy, moving back to his native Richmond, Virginia, teamed up with ex-members of the Silos, Dream Syndicate, and House of Freaks and formed the off-the-cuff outfit Gutterball, which released a self-titled album on Mute Records in 1993.

Griffin authored Gram Parsons: A Musical Biography, published by a small press in 1985. By 1997 he was working on both a biography of Gene Clark of the Byrds and a "funny pop" autobiography. Griffin continued to explore his Parsons obsession as both a music journalist and musician; he has appeared on two Parsons tribute albums to date. He reemerged in 2000 with a new band called Western Electric. On a self-titled debut album that same year, Griffin's new project remained typically hook-filled and earthy, but with such added postmodern elements as electronic beats and dreamy lap steel guitar that brought the music surprisingly close to trip-hop.

Loose Ends

Formed ca. 1981, London, Eng.

Carl McIntosh, bass, gtr., voc.; Jane Eugene, voc.; Steve Nichol, trumpet, kybds.

1984—A Little Spice (Virgin, U.K.) 1985—So Where Are You
1986—Zagora 1988—The Real Chuckeeboo (MCA) 1990—(—Eugene; —Nichol; + Linda Carriere; + Sunay Suleyman) Look How Long.

During its heyday in the latter half of the '80s, the British trio Loose Ends enjoyed success in two separate capacities: first, as a pop-funk outfit whose catchy output did well on the American R&B charts; then as songwriter/producers and remixers for other R&B acts. Trumpeter and keyboardist Steve Nichol was already a working studio musician, with the Jam's album The Gift among his credits, when he met singer Jane Eugene at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama. The two hooked up with Carl McIntosh, a session bassist who also sang and played guitar, to complete Loose Ends' lineup, and were signed by Virgin Records' U.K. division in the early '80s. (Their recordings would be distributed in the U.S. by MCA.)

After becoming a fixture on England's funk scene with a couple of danceable singles, the band released its debut album, A Little Spice (#46 U.K., 1984), the album reached #46 in the States upon release the following year. Also in 1985, Loose Ends hit the top of the R&B singles chart with "Hangin' on a Stnng (Contemplating)," a track featured on its second LP, So Where Are You (#13 U.K.). Over the next few years, the group continued making albums and scored R&B smashes like "Slow Down" (#1, 1986) and "Watching You" (#2, 1988). Meanwhile, its members wrote and produced material for pop-soul artists like Juliet Roberts, Five Star, and Cheryl Lynn, and also worked as remixers. In 1990 a new incarnation of Loose Ends, in which Eugene and Nichol were replaced by Linda Carniere and Sunay Suleyman, released the #10 R&B single "Don't Be a Fool," followed by the LP Look How Long (#124 pop, #28 R&B). The album generated the moderate R&B hit "Cheap Talk" (#28, 1991).

Jennifer Lopez

Born July 24, 1970, Bronx, NY
1999—On the 6 (Work/Epic) 2001—J.Lo.

An actress and dancer whose break came when in 1990 she was hired as one of the gyrating "Fly Girls" on the black-oriented comedy series In Living Color. Bronx-born Jennifer Lopez already had a successful movie career—starring in such films as Money Train (1995), Selena (1997), and Out of Sight (1998)—when she recorded her debut album On the 6 (#8 pop, #8 R&B, 1999). The release of the dance-oriented album with tracks produced by, among others, Emilio Estefan and Lopez's future boyfriend, Sean Combs, was well timed to join a wave of Latin pop artists, such as Ricky Martin and Enrique Iglesias, crossing over to the mainstream. Driven by videos that emphasized Lopez's choreographic moves and sex appeal, the album charted for 42 weeks with hit singles in "If You Had My Love" (#1 pop, #6 R&B, 1999) and "Waiting for Tonight" (#8 pop, 1999). Lopez's pop success boosted her profile on the big screen, where she appeared in the thriller The Cell (2000) and the romantic comedy The Wedding Planner (2001); she ranks as the highest-paid Latina actress in Hollywood history. Her relationship with Combs made tabloid fodder, and in December 1999 she was held for questioning after fleeing a New York nightclub shooting with Combs and his protégé Shyne, though no charges were pressed against Lopez. As the case was going to court (and before Combs' acquittal), the couple's breakup was announced and Lopez's second album, J.Lo., was released, entering the charts at #1, with the lead-off single, "Love Don't Cost a Thing" (#3, 2001).

Lords of the New Church: See the Dead Boys

Los Bravos

Formed 1965, Spain
Michael Kogel (b. Apr. 25, 1945, Berlin, Ger.), lead voc., gtr.; Manuel Fernandez (b. Sep. 29, 1943, Seville, Spain), kbds.; Miguel Vicens Danus (b. June 21, 1944, Palma de Mallorca, Spain), bass; Pablo Sanllehi, a.k.a. Pablo Gomez (b. Nov. 5, 1943, Barcelona, Spain), drums; Antonio Martinez (b. Oct. 3, 1945, Madrid, Spain), gtr.
1966—Black Is Black (Press).

Los Bravos became the first Spanish rock band to have an international hit single when "Black Is Black" reached #4 in 1966. A combination of local bands Mike and the Runaways (who had several hits in Spain during the early '60s) and Los Sonor, they were signed to British Decca after Decca's Spanish representative sent one of the group's singles to producer Ivor Raymonde. Though Los Bravos never matched the sales of "Black Is Black," "Going Nowhere" and "Bring a Little Lovin'" were minor successes in 1966 and 1968 respectively, and "I Don't Care" climbed to #16 on the British chart in 1966. By the end of the decade their popularity was confined to Spain. In 1972 Kogel had a minor hit single, "Louisiana," under the name Mike Kennedy.

Los Lobos

Formed 1973, East Los Angeles, CA
Cesar Rosas (b. Sep. 26, 1954, Hermosillo, Mex.), gtr., voc.; David Hidalgo (b. Oct. 6, 1954, Los Angeles), voc., gtr., accordion, violin, banjo, piano, perc.; Luis "Louie" Perez (b. Jan. 29, 1953, Los Angeles), drums, voc., gtr., perc.; Conrad R. Lozano (b. Mar. 21, 1951, Los Angeles), bass, guitarron, voc.
1978—Los Lobos del Este de Los Angeles: Just Another Band From East L.A. (New Vista) 1983—... And a Time to Dance EP (Slash) 1984—(+ Steve Berlin [b. Sep. 14, 1955, Philadelphia, PA], sax, flute, kbds., harmonica, melodic) How Will the Wolf Survive? (Slash/Warner Bros.) 1987—La Bamba soundtrack; By the Light of the Moon 1988—La Pistola y el Corazón 1990—The Neighborhood 1992—Kiko 1993—Just Another Band From East L.A.: A Collection 1996—Colossal Head 1999—This Time (Hollywood) 2000—El Cancionero—Mas y Mas: A History of the Band From East L.A. (Rhino).
Cesar Rosas solo: 1999—Soul Disguise (Rykodisc).
Rosas and Hidalgo with Los Super Seven: 1998—Los Super Seven (RCA); Canto (Sony/Legacy).
Hidalgo and Perez with Latin Playboys: 1994—Latin Playboys (Slash/Warner Bros.) 1999—Dose (Atlantic).
Hidalgo with Houndog: 1999—Houndog (Columbia/Legacy).

For nearly three decades Los Lobos have been exploring the artistic and commercial possibilities of American biculturalism, moving back and forth between their Chicano roots and their love of American rock. Although the band first gained fame as part of the early-'80s roots-rock revival, they don't so much strip music down as mix it up, playing norteño, blues, country, Tex-Mex, ballads, folk, and rock.

Los Lobos have been guests on albums by Ry Cooder, Elvis Costello, Fabulous Thunderbirds, Roomful of Blues, and Paul Simon. Their music has been used in the films La Bamba, Eating Raoul, The Mambo Kings, Alamo Bay, and Chan Is Missing.

Cesar Rosas, Conrad Lozano, David Hidalgo, and Louie Perez have known one another since they were adolescents in East L.A. They formed Los Lobos (Spanish for "the Wolves") to play weddings and bars in their neighborhood. Although they had previously played in rock and Top 40 bands, together they decided to experiment with acoustic folk instruments and explore their Mexican heritage, playing norteño and conjunto music on instruments including the guitarron and bajo sexto. Los Lobos got their first full-time gig in 1978, playing at a Mexican restaurant in Orange County. That year they also released their debut album, Just Another Band From East L.A.

Los Lobos: David Hidalgo, Louie Perez, Steve Berlin, Conrad Lozano, Cesar Rosas

Eventually, Los Lobos' experimentation led them back to electric instruments. They played one of their last acoustic shows opening for Public Image Ltd. at the Olympic Auditorium in L.A. in 1980, where they were booed by the audience. Nonetheless inspired by punk's energy, Hidalgo and Perez began writing songs and playing Hollywood clubs. The Blasters became fans and urged Slash to sign Los Lobos.

And a Time to Dance was produced by T Bone Burnett and Blasters saxman Steve Berlin. Its divergent collection of dance songs included the 70-year-old Mexican Revolution song "Anselma," which won a Grammy in 1983 for Best Mexican-American Performance. Berlin joined Los Lobos for Will the Wolf Survive? a much praised album whose title track later became a country hit for Waylon Jennings. On By the Light of the Moon, coproduced by Burnett, Los Lobos wrote political songs about life in the barrio.

In 1987 Los Lobos recorded several Ritchie Valens songs for the La Bamba soundtrack (#1, 1987). Though the success of the title track (#1, 1987) and "Come On, Let's Go" (#21, 1987) suddenly lifted Los Lobos out of their bar-band, critics'-fave status, they took a noncommercial detour with La Pistola y el Corazón, featuring the traditional Mexican music they had played throughout the '70s.

On The Neighborhood, they returned to more rocking material, working with John Hiatt, the Band's Levon Helm, and drummer Jim Keltner. The album's title paid homage to the deep connections the band still feels to East L.A. In 1991 Hidalgo and Perez wrote songs with the Band for that group's reunion album. The material inspired Kiko, an evocative, avant-Latin-pop album produced by Mitchell Froom. In 1993 Slash released a 20-year-anniversary retrospective of Los Lobos songs; Just Another Band From East L.A. A Col- lection includes material from the band's debut LP, rare B sides, and live tracks, as well as the band's hits.

Latin Playboys (1994), a self-titled album by an ad hoc group consisting of Hidalgo, Perez, Froom, and Tchad Blake, was a cross between the music of Los Lobos and Captain Beefheart. The muscular funk rock of Los Lobos' next album, Colossal Head (#81 pop, 1996), split the difference between Kiko and Latin Playboys.

In 1998 Rosas and Hidalgo released Los Super Seven as part of a loose-knit Latin supergroup of the same name that included Freddy Fender, Joe Ely, and accordionist ace Flaco Jiménez, among others. A followup was released in 2001, which included vocalists Raul Malo of the Mavericks and Caetano Veloso. In 1999 Rosas released Soul Disguise, a gritty, R&B-inflected solo record. For his part, Hidalgo teamed up with ex-Canned Heat guitarist Mike Halby as Hounddog for a self-titled blues album. After this rash of side projects, Los Lobos returned to the studio to make This Time, the final installment in a trilogy of heady, groove-rich albums (including Kiko and Colossal Head) exploring Mexican folklore and mysticism. In 2001 Los Lobos was the recipient of the Billboard Century Award.

Lounge Lizards

Formed 1979, New York, NY

John Lurie (b. Dec. 14, 1952, Minneapolis, MN), sax; Evan Lurie (b. Sep. 28, 1954), piano; Arto Lindsay (b. May 28, 1953, Richmond, VA), gtr.; Anton Fier (b. June 20, 1956, Cleveland, OH), drums; Steve Piccolo, bass.

1981—The Lounge Lizards (EG) 1983—(— Lindsay; — Piccolo; — Fier; + Peter Zummo, trombone; + Tony Garnier, bass; + Doug E. Bowne, drums) Lounge Lizards—Live at the Drunken Boat (Europa) 1984—(— Zummo; — Garnier; + Roy Nathanson, sax; + Curtis Fowlkes, trombone; + Marc Ribot, gtr., trumpet; + Erik Sanko [b. Sep. 27, 1963, New York], bass) 1985—Live 79/81 ROIR Sessions cassette (ROIR) 1986—Live in Tokyo—Big Heart (Island) 1987—(+ E.J. Rodriguez, perc.) No Pain for Cakes 1989—Voice of Chunk (Lagarto) 1991—(— Evan Lurie; — Nathanson; — Fowlkes; — Ribot; — Rodriguez; — Sanko; — Bowne; + Michael Blake [b. Montreal, Can.], sax; + Steven Bernstein [b. Oct. 8, 1961, Washington, DC], trumpet, cornet; + Jane Scarpantoni [b. Oct. 4, 1960, Nyack, NY], cello; + Bryan Carrott, vibes, marimba, tympani; + Michele Navazio [b. Mar. 10, 1960, Elgin, IL], gtr.; + Billy Martin [b. Oct. 3, 1963, New York], perc.; + Oren Bloedow, bass; + G. Calvin Weston [b. June 6, 1959, Philadelphia, PA], drums) Lounge Lizards—Berlin 1991 Part 1 (Verabra, Ger.) 1992—Lounge Lizards—Live in Berlin 1991, vol. 2 1993—(— Carrott; — Bloedow; + Sanko; + Dave Tronzo [b. Dec. 13, 1957, Rochester, NY], slide gtr.; + Danny Blume, gtr.; + John Medeski, piano, organ) 1998—Queen of All Ears (Strange & Beautiful).

With Teo Macero and London Philharmonic Orchestra: 1984—Fusion (Europa).

John Lurie solo: 1986—Stranger Than Paradise/The Resurrection of Albert Ayler (Enigma) 1987—Down by Law/

Variety (Intuition/Capitol) 1989—Mystery Train (RCA)
 1998—Fishing With John 1999—African Swim & Manny & Lo 2000—The Legendary Marvin Pontiac: Greatest Hits
 (Strange and Beautiful).
 John Lurie National Orchestra: 1993—Men With Sticks (Crammed Disc).
 Evan Lurie solo: 1990—Selling Water by the Side of the River (Island).

The Lounge Lizards became a hip downtown New York band in the '80s by playing "fake jazz," music based more on the feel of jazz than the structures. The group started as a one-time gig playing songs John Lurie had written for a movie. Their punk-lounge act went over big, though, and the Lizards have taken themselves and their music increasingly seriously over the years.

The initial band, featuring brothers John and Evan Lurie, noise guitarist Arto Lindsay, former Feelies drummer Anton Fier, and bassist Steve Piccolo, was half a rock band. That lineup played on the Lizards' debut and the ROIR live cassette released in 1985, with guitarists Dana Vacek and Danny Rosen playing on some tracks on the latter. Lindsay and Fier left to form Ambitious Lovers and Golden Palominos respectively, and the Lizards replaced them with more conventional jazz players. The group became popular in Europe, where it recorded several live albums and where some of its LPs were released before American labels caught on.

Island signed the Lizards in 1986. Lurie's vocals were featured for the first time on No Pain for Cakes. After two albums, Lurie became frustrated with the record company and released Voice of Chunk on his own label, via mail order, with ads placed in magazines and on TV. The venture lost money, and that lineup of the group broke up soon after. Lurie re-formed the Lizards for more tours and the Berlin live albums. The Lounge Lizards continued to be popular in New York and Europe into the mid-'90s.

John Lurie has also been a successful artist outside the Lizards. He performed solo at Carnegie Hall in 1980 and in 1982 was a featured soloist with the Quebec Symphony Orchestra. In 1991 he composed string quartets for the Kronos Quartet and in 1992 composed and performed a string quartet for the Balanescu Quartet. In 1991-92 he toured Europe with the John Lurie National Orchestra. He has composed and recorded several soundtracks for filmmaker Jim Jarmusch, including Stranger Than Paradise (the album includes a composition for the Albert Ayler dance company), Down by Law (the soundtrack is backed with Variety, the score for a Betty Gordon film), and Mystery Train, other Lounge Lizards also played on these albums. In addition, Lurie acted in Stranger Than Paradise, Down by Law, Wild at Heart, Paris, Texas, and The Last Temptation of Christ. From 1990 to 1992 he created a pilot for a cable television series, Fishing With John, on which he took guests to unique fishing spots, such as Tom Waits to Jamaica and Dennis Hopper to Thailand.

After years of legal and management problems, Lurie launched his own Strange and Beautiful label, on which the Lizards released Queen of All Ears in 1998. The same year, Lurie also issued the soundtrack to his series of nature-show spoofs, Fishing With John. In 2000 he put out a wickedly funny solo album under the name of Marvin Pontiac, a fictional alter ego born to a West African father and a white Jewish mother from New Rochelle, New York, a pedigree that fairly sums up the scope of Lurie's visionary music.

Evan Lurie released solo albums in Belgium in 1985 and 1989. On Selling Water by the Side of the River, he is joined by a violinist and a bandoneon player.

Courtney Love: See Hole

Darlene Love

Born Darlene Wright, July 26, 1938 or 1941, Los Angeles, CA
 1984—Live (Rhino) 1988—Paint Another Picture (Columbia)
 1992—The Best of Darlene Love (Abkco); Bringing It Home (with Lari Groves) (Shanachie) 1998—Unconditional Love (Harmony).

As one of Phil Spector's handpicked early-'60s girl-group singers, Darlene Love sang some lead vocals with the Crystals, Bob B. Soxx and the Blue Jeans, and also had hits under her own name.

Darlene Wright started singing in 1958 with an L.A. vocal group called the Blossoms. (Her sister Edna later sang with the Honey Cone, which hit big in 1971 with the #1 "Want Ads.") The Blossoms recorded without success as a foursome for Capitol Records between 1958 and 1960, and then as a trio for Challenge and Okeh. They also did backup singing on the L.A. session circuit, supporting Bobby "Boris" Pickett ("Monster Mash"), James Darren ("Goodbye Cruel World"), Bobby Day ("Rockin' Robin"), and many others.

When Love came to Spector's attention, he had her and the Blossoms sing "He's a Rebel," which went #1 in 1962. The producer had originally intended the Gene Pitney composition for the Crystals, and in fact put their name on the record, though they didn't sing a note. Love also sang lead on "He's Sure the Boy I Love" (#11, 1963), also falsely credited to the Crystals, and in the short-lived vocal trio Bob B. Soxx and the Blue Jeans, who had a hit with "Zip-a-Dee Doo-Dah" (#8 pop, #7 R&B, 1963), from the Walt Disney movie Song of the South. All of these recordings were on Spector's Philles label.

Love went on to record six Philles singles under her own name, including "Wait Till My Bobby Gets Home" (#26, 1963), "Today I Met The Boy I'm Gonna Marry" (#39, 1963), and "A Fine Fine Boy" (#53, 1963). She also appears on Phil Spector's classic Christmas album. Love continued to sing with the Blossoms throughout the '60s. They were regulars on Shindig! and toured with Elvis Presley in the early '70s. Love then sang backup for Dionne Warwick for 10 years, beginning in 1971.

In the '80s the singer branched out into acting, appearing in the Lethal Weapon films and the Broadway show Leader of the Pack. She also recorded two solo albums.

Long respected as one of the top vocalists in pop music, Love finally received long-overdue recognition in 1993, when a show based on her career, Portrait of a Singer, opened in January at New York's Bottom Line club. Love performed weekly in the long-running show. In 1996 she participated in the revue 20th-Century Pop with Merry Clayton and Marianne Faithfull. She continues to perform around the country, garnering critical praise for her annual holiday show, Love for the Holidays.

In 1993 Love sued Phil Spector for back royalties; in 1997 a New York Supreme Court jury ruled in her favor but, because of the statute of limitations in New York State, awarded her only $263,500 for royalties going back to 1987. In 1998 the singer published her autobiography, My Name Is Love, and released a gospel album, Unconditional Love.

Monie Love

Born Simone Johnson, July 2, 1970, London, Eng.

1990—Down to Earth (Warner Bros.) 1993—In a Word or 2.

Born in England but raised partly in Brooklyn, rapper Monie Love has bridged musical and geographical gaps with help from influential friends the world over. She began rapping at 14, when she set her poems to music. Love had her first success in London's dance clubs with her second single, "Grandpa's Party," a tribute to Afrika Bambaataa. In 1988 she met stateside Bambaataa boosters the Jungle Brothers, becoming their European road manager. (She raps on their second album.) Later that year she came to New York and joined the Native Tongues group of rappers, whose ranks include De La Soul and Queen Latifah.

Love first came to fame in the U.S. rapping with Latifah on "Ladies First," the track from Latifah's debut album that heralded a new wave of "womanist" hip-hop artists. She also guested on the single "Buddy" from De La Soul's groundbreaking 3 Feet High and Rising. Her own albums have fused rap with house music, to somewhat mixed results. Three tracks on Down to Earth, including the singles "It's a Shame (My Sister)" (#26 pop, #8 R&B, 1991), a remake of the Spinners' 1970 hit, and "Monie in the Middle," were produced by the Fine Young Cannibals' Andy Cox and David Steele, while the Jungle Brothers' Afrika Baby Bambaataa produced six songs. The album reflected the positive political consciousness and psychedelic sense of humor of the Native Tongues school.

In between albums, Love had her first baby, and the featured cut off 1993's In a Word or 2 (#75 R&B) was "Born 2 B.R.E.D." (#56 R&B). It and one other track were produced by Prince. The album challenged the conservative "family values" agenda articulated the previous year by U.S. Vice President Dan Quayle and offered words of encouragement to young blacks. The track "Bullets Carry No Names" was cowritten by Ice-T.

Love's third album for Warner was shelved after her A&R rep left the label. In order to pay the bills—the rapper subsequently had a second daughter—she landed a radio show on New York's Hot 97 R&B station. Love also cohosted MTV's

Lip Service. Meanwhile, she was without a record deal until she signed with the U.K.-based Relentless label, on which she released a single, "Slice of Da Pie," in 2000. An album featuring guest appearances by the Roots and members of the Native Tongues collective was in the works as of mid-2001.

Love/Arthur Lee

Formed 1965, Los Angeles, CA

Arthur Lee (b. Arthur Porter Taylor, Mar. 7, 1945, Memphis, TN), gr., voc.; Bryan MacLean (b. Sep. 25, 1946, Los Angeles; d. Dec. 25, 1999, Los Angeles), gr., voc.; John Echols (b. 1945, Memphis), lead gr.; Ken Forssi (b. 1943, Cleveland, OH; d. Jan. 5, 1998), bass; Don Conka, drums.

1965—(—Conka; + Alban "Snoopy" Pfisterer [b. 1947, Switz.], drums) 1966—Love (Elektra) (+ Michael Stuart, drums; + Tjay Cantrelli, horns; Pfisterer switches to kybbs.) 1967—Da Capo (—Pfisterer; —Cantrelli) 1968—Forever Changes (—MacLean; —Echols; —Forssi; —Stuart; + Frank Fayad, bass; + George Suranovitch, drums; + Jay Donnellan, gr.) 1969—Four Sail; Out Here (Blue Thumb) (—Donnellan; + Gary Rowles, gr.)

1970—False Start 1974—(group re-forms: Lee; + Melvan Whittington, lead gr.; + John Sterling, rhythm gr.; + Sherwood Akuna, bass; + Joe Blocker, drums; + Herman McCormick, congas) Reel to Real (RSO) 1975—(group disbands; periodic reunions follow) 1980—Best of Love (Rhino) 1982—Love Live; Studio/Live (MCA) 1992—Arthur Lee and Love (New Rose, Fr.) 1995—Love Story 1966–1972 (Rhino).

Arthur Lee solo: 1972—Vindicator (A&M) 1981—Arthur Lee (Rhino).

Bryan MacLean solo: 1997—If You Believe In (Sundazed) 2000—Candy's Waltz.

Love, headed by singer/guitarist Arthur Lee, was a seminal '60s L.A. band, emerging from the Sunset Strip at the same time as the Byrds, Buffalo Springfield, the Doors, and the Mamas and the Papas. The group started out playing a Byrds-influenced folk rock but later covered many styles, including bluesy R&B, pop, and hard rock.

Lee moved from his Memphis birthplace to L.A. with his family when he was five. By age 17 he was playing in local bands, including Arthur Lee and the LAGs (styled after Booker T. and the MG's). The band, which included later Love member John Echols, cut one single for Capitol, an instrumental, "The Ninth Wave." Love was formed with unknown musicians: MacLean had been a roadie for the Byrds, and Forssi had played with the Surfaris after their hits faded. Lee originally called the group the Grass Roots, but changed it, since the name was already taken by another soon-to-be-well-known band.

Love's first album was hailed by critics as a classic in the new folk-rock style and sold 150,000 copies. Its 1966 single "My Little Red Book" (penned by Burt Bacharach and Hal David) was a minor hit. The band's second album, Da Capo, featured some topically druggy lyrics, jazz touches, and a few personnel changes. The album was another ground-breaker, featuring one of the first side-long cuts in rock, the 20-minute-long "Revelation." The album also included the Top 40 hit "7 and 7 Is." Forever Changes, however, is considered by many to be Love's best, its answer to Sgt. Pepper, with orchestral touches, including horn and string arrangements, and a psychedelic feel that influenced many of the early-'80s neopsychedelic British bands such as the Monochrome Set, the Teardrop Explodes, and Echo and the Bunnymen.

In 1968 Lee reorganized the group (members of the first edition later claimed excessive drug use had driven the band apart, MacLean said he nearly overdosed on heroin, then joined a Christian ministry and suffered a nervous breakdown) and hired a new band of three, plus four sessionmen to help out in the studio on Four Sail and Out Here, he briefly renamed himself Arthurly. Love next toured England (the band seldom left L.A.), and Lee recorded a full LP with Jimi Hendrix. The album was buried in legal problems, though one track, "The Everlasting First," turned up on False Start in 1970. In 1971 Lee dismissed his band.

Lee was supposed to have recorded a solo album for Columbia, but his debut wound up on A&M in 1972, the hard-rocking Vindicator, credited to Arthur Lee and Band Aid. Like later Love LPs, the record didn't sell well. In 1973 he planned to make another solo album with Paul Rothchild's new Buffalo Records, but the label folded before the LP was released. In 1974 Lee came back on RSO with an all-new Love, but the music disappointed many and included three remakes of old Love cuts. His next effort was a solo EP in 1977 on Da Capo Records. In 1979 he toured locally with MacLean (whose sister Mana McKee would emerge in the '80s with the country-rock band Lone Justice) and another incarnation of Love, and in 1980 Rhino Records put out Best of Love, a compilation of '60s tracks. In 1981 the label issued a new Arthur Lee solo LP, his first in seven years. In 1994 Lee, backed by members of the New York-area punk band Das Damen, toured clubs under the Love banner, to ecstatic reaction from audiences and critics, who urged reappraisal of his oeuvre as the missing link between the Byrds and the Doors. That comeback was cut short in 1996 when Lee—who had had several run-ins with the law over the years—was sentenced to 8 to 12 years in prison for illegal possession of a firearm after pointing a pistol at a neighbor.

Forssi died of brain cancer in early 1998. MacLean remained in the Christian ministry and returned to making music. He died of a heart attack on Christmas Day, 1999, without having completed an album. If You Believe In (1997) and Candy's Waltz (2000) are two collections of demos and solo recordings spanning the '60s through the '80s.

Love and Rockets: See Bauhaus

Loverboy

Formed 1979, Calgary, Can.

Paul Dean (b. Feb. 19, 1946, Can.), gtr.; Mike Reno, voc.; Doug Johnson, kybds.; Matt Frenette, drums; Scott Smith (b. Feb. 13, 1955; d. Nov. 30, 2000, near San Francisco, CA), bass.

1980—Loverboy (Columbia) 1981—Get Lucky 1983—Keep It Up 1985—Lovin' Every Minute of It 1987—Wildside 1988—(group disbands) 1989—Big Ones 1993—(group re-forms: Dean; Reno; Johnson; Frenette; Smith) 1994—Loverboy Classics 1997—VI (CMC) 2000—(– Smith). Paul Dean solo: 1989—Hard Core (Columbia).

Paul Dean had been involved with 13 unsuccessful Canadian bands (including Streetheart) before meeting Mike Reno, himself a veteran of many groups, having recorded with Moxy. They teamed up originally to work as a studio-based duo a la Steely Dan. But when record-company interest hinged on their forming a band, they held auditions. Doug Johnson, Matt Frenette, and Scott Smith were chosen, and the quintet was named Loverboy (Coverboy was also under consideration). Their modernized, new-wave-tinged hard rock became the surprise hit of 1981 as, buoyed by the group's incessant touring, their self-titled debut album went double platinum and hatched two successful singles: "Turn Me Loose" (#35, 1981) and "The Kid Is Hot Tonight" (#55, 1981). Their second album, Get Lucky, featuring the hits "Working for the Weekend" (#29, 1981) and "When It's Over" (#26, 1982), went multiplatinum, as did 1983's Keep It Up. In 1984 lead singer Reno had a hit with "Almost Paradise . . . Love Theme From Footloose," a duet with Ann Wilson of Heart (#7). Lovin' Every Minute of It, the band's last platinum effort to date, featured the Top 10 singles "Lovin' Every Minute of It" and "This Could Be the Night." Wildside didn't reach the Top 40, and Big Ones just scraped in at #189. Loverboy disbanded in spring 1988, but after playing together in what was to have been a one-time-only appearance, the members regrouped. A fall 1993 tour with the re-formed April Wine was followed by an 80-date U.S. tour in summer 1994. They continued to perform through the '90s, releasing the all-new VI. The Loverboy Classics anthology even went gold in 1998. The band was devastated in late 2000 when bassist Scott Smith drowned after a wave swept him out of his sailboat. As of early 2001 the quartet planned to carry on despite the tragedy.

Lyle Lovett

Born Nov. 1, 1957, Klein, TX

1986—Lyle Lovett (MCA/Curb) 1988—Pontiac 1989—Lyle Lovett and His Large Band 1992—Joshua Judges Ruth 1994—I Love Everybody 1996—The Road to Ensenada 1998—Step Inside This House 1999—Live in Texas.

Lyle Lovett's songs coolly confront the cynical, sometimes violent and misogynistic side of romance. Originally marketed as a country singer (and garnering a number of C&W hits), Lovett has taken his increasingly eclectic, sly music (and increasingly pronounced Eraserhead-style pompadour) well beyond Nashville to a wider audience and an acting career.

Born into a small town that has become a large Houston suburb, Lovett attended Texas A&M University in the mid-'70s. He started performing at coffeehouses and continued to play in Europe, where he traveled while a graduate student. Originally doing covers, he later wrote his own songs because he felt he "was never a good enough singer to do Merle Haggard."

Lyle Lovett

His career did not take off until he returned to the States in 1984. Nanci Griffith (whom Lovett met in college when he interviewed her for the school paper) covered his "If I Were the Woman You Wanted" on Once in a Very Blue Moon in 1984. He sang on that album and her next, Last of the True Believers; Lacy J. Dalton recorded his "Closing Time." Through singer Guy Clark (a Lovett idol), MCA's Tony Brown received a demo of Lovett's songs in 1984; Brown signed Lovett and produced his first three albums. While ostensibly a country album, Lyle Lovett features undercurrents of folk, rock, and jazz. Despite its lack of standard Nashville fare, the LP yielded four C&W hits: "Farther Down the Line" (#21 C&W, 1986), "Cowboy Man" (#10 C&W, 1986), "God Will" (#18 C&W, 1987), and "Why I Don't Know" (#15 C&W, 1987).

Lovett's subsequent albums became progressively more eclectic. The bluesy Pontiac (#117 pop, #12 C&W, 1988) included "Give Back My Heart" (#13 C&W, 1987), "She's No Lady" (#17 C&W, 1988), and "I Loved You Yesterday" (#24 C&W, 1988), and Lovett toured Europe backed by only his guitar and a cellist. With Lyle Lovett and His Large Band, he did a 180-degree turn, augmenting his sound with horns and strings. The tuxedoed singer pictured on the cover showed just how far Lovett had moved from country, and the music matched his new urbane image, with jazzy arrangements and snatches of standards. A #10 C&W album, Large Band lacked hit singles ("I Married Her Just Because She Looks Like You" reached only #45 C&W) but brought Lovett to the attention of pop audiences (#62 pop) and helped him earn a Grammy Award for Best Male Country Vocal Performance in 1989. Large Band also contained his gender-bending version of Tammy Wynette's "Stand by Your Man," later used to great effect in the 1992 film The Crying Game.

Joshua Judges Ruth (#57 pop, 1992), which didn't make the country chart, was recorded in L.A. with Little Feat producer George Massenburg, taking Lovett further afield. The songs added heavy doses of gospel and pop, and Lovett became a featured artist on VH1. L.A. seems to have agreed with Lovett: He has acted in several films, including four directed by Robert Altman, and appeared in episodes of the TV sitcoms Mad About You and Dharma and Greg. Lovett married actress Julia Roberts in 1993; the couple divorced in 1995.

In 1994 Lovett released I Love Everybody (#26), an album consisting entirely of songs he had written before he launched his recording career. The Road to Ensenada (#24 pop, #4 C&W) marked Lovett's return to the country chart. The record featured guest appearances from Jackson Browne, Shawn Colvin, and Randy Newman, and won a Grammy for Best Country Album. Step Inside This House (#55 pop, #9 C&W) found Lovett covering the songs of such fellow Texans as Guy Clark, Townes Van Zandt, and Willis Alan Ramsey, songwriters who had a formative influence on Lovett. Live in Texas was culled from dates that Lovett played in Austin and San Antonio with his Large Band in 1995.

Lene Lovich

Born Lili Marlene Premilovich, Mar. 30, 1949, Detroit, MI
 1979—Stateless (Stiff/Epic) 1980—Flex 1981—New Toy
 EP 1982—No Man's Land 1990—March (Pathfinder).

Though she had hit singles in England and Europe, Lene Lovich has yet to reach the American singles chart. Her new-wave-era, Slavick-milkmaid getup, and ululating vocals were distinctive, to say the least, and they fit the oddball lyrics and pop hooks devised by Lovich and cowriter and future husband Les Chappell.

Lovich was born in Detroit and moved to England when she was 13. After studying sculpture at London's Central School of Art, she took part in experimental theater, worked as a go-go dancer, played all manner of music, and became interested in dream images (inspiring her to visit Salvador Dalí). She and Chappell joined the soul-funk band the Diversions in 1975, with whom they recorded an album for Polydor that was never released. While still with the group, Lovich recorded the Lovich-Chappell composition "Happy Christmas." In 1978 author and disc jockey Charlie Gillett introduced Lovich to Stiff Records' president, Dave Robinson. A few months later, Stiff issued her version of Tommy James and the Shondells' "I Think We're Alone Now" and put her on the Be Stuff Tour '78 with Rachel Sweet, the Records, Wreckless Eric, Mickey Jupp, and Jona Lewie.

After American record companies refused her debut LP (as well as those by most other Be Staff artists), the tour came to New York; Epic Records became interested. In summer 1979, almost a year after its release in the U.K., Stateless came out in the U.S. In England, "Lucky Number" and "Say When" (written by James O'Neill of Fingerprintz) had become hit records, as did "Bird Song," the first single from Flex, released in 1980. "New Toy," the title track of Lovich's six-song mini-LP of 1981, was another British success that failed to crack the U.S. chart, although it was a rock-disco favorite (its writer, Thomas Dolby, subsequently started a successful solo career). In 1982 she found herself without a record label.

Lovich also costarred with Herman Brood and Nina Hagen in the 1979 film Cha-Cha, played the lead in the French television film Rock, and assumed the title role in the 1983 London stage play Mata Hari, which she cowrote.

Since the mid-'80s she has been actively involved in the animal-rights movement. In 1988 she received a Humanitarian Award from People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA). She wrote and recorded "Rage" with Erasure; the song appeared on the animal-rights benefit album Tame Yourself. Lovich has also written for opera (The Collector, with Cerrone) and recorded Peter Hammil and Judge Smith's opera, Fall of the House of Usher. Shortly after the release of 1990's March, her label folded. As of the mid-'90s she was working on a novel.

Lovin' Spoonful

Formed 1965, New York, NY

John Sebastian (b. Mar. 17, 1944, New York), gr., Autoharp, harmonica, lead voc.; Steve Boone (b. Sep. 23, 1943, Camp Lejeune, NC), bass; Zal Yanovsky (b. Dec. 19, 1944, Toronto, Can.), lead gr., voc.; Joe Butler (b. Jan. 19, 1943, New York), drums.

1965—Do You Believe in Magic (Kama Sutra) 1966—Daydream; Hums of the Lovin' Spoonful 1967—The Best of the Lovin' Spoonful (– Yanovsky; + Jerry Yester, gr.) 1968—(– Sebastian; group disbands) 1990—Anthology (Rhino) 1999—Live at the Hotel Seville (Varèse Vintage) 2000—Greatest Hits (Buddha).

Electrified jug band the Lovin' Spoonful had two years as New York's leading folk rockers. Its sound was dubbed "good-time music," and when the good times stopped in 1967 after publicity about the arrest of Steve Boone and Zal Yanovsky for drugs, so did the quarter's hits.

John Sebastian and Yanovsky founded the Spoonful; they had been members of the Mugwumps with future Mamas and Papas Cass Elliot and Denny Doherty (as immortalized in the Mamas and Papas' "Creeque Alley"). The group's first single, Sebastian's "Do You Believe in Magic," went Top 10 in 1965, as did its followup, "You Didn't Have to Be So Nice," in early 1966. More hits followed in 1966 and 1967: "Daydream" (#2), "Did You Ever Have to Make Up Your Mind?" (#2), "Summer in the City" (the Spoonful's lone #1), "Rain on the Roof"

(#10), "Darling Be Home Soon" (#15), "Nashville Cats" (#8), and "Six O'Clock" (#18). During its peak period, the Spoonful made three albums and also provided the soundtracks to Francis Ford Coppola's You're a Big Boy Now and Woody Allen's What's Up, Tiger Lily?

But that ended after Boone and Yanovsky reportedly set up someone they knew in a drug bust in May 1966. Apparently, both Boone and Yanovsky were arrested in Berkeley, California, for possession of marijuana, and in exchange for the police department not prosecuting, the two introduced an undercover narcotics agent to an acquaintance who purchased drugs, resulting in the acquaintance's arrest. The ensuing publicity created a public outcry calling for a boycott of their records and concerts. Yanovsky left the group in June 1967. He was replaced by Jerry Yester, the former producer of the Association, which included his brother Jim Yester. Though the hits didn't stop altogether ("She Is Still a Mystery," #27, 1967), the Spoonful's popularity was waning. After one LP without Yanovsky, Everything Playing, Sebastian, who wrote and sang most of the songs, left to start his solo career [see entry].

The group broke up in 1968. Butler formed a new Lovin' Spoonful and put out an album, Revelation: Revolution '69, with no success. The drummer then took up acting, appearing in several Broadway plays (Hair, Mahogany) and films (Born to Win, One Trick Pony), and also worked as a Hollywood sound editor and sound-effects man. Yester recorded Farewell Aldebaran with his wife, Judy Henske (coproduced by Yanovsky), and formed the band Rosebud, which made one album. He has continued to work as a producer, credited on Tom Waits' first album. Yanovsky returned to Canada and opened a restaurant in Kingston, Ontario, Chez Piggy, while Boone ran a recording studio on a 135-foot houseboat that he docked in Baltimore's Inner Harbor. Little Feat, Bonnie Raitt, Emmylou Harris, and Ricky Skaggs all recorded there; in 1977, it sank.

The original Lovin' Spoonful reunited in 1980 to perform "Do You Believe in Magic" in Paul Simon's film One Trick Pony. In 1991, Boone, Butler, and Yester began touring as the Lovin' Spoonful, with drummer John Marrella and keyboardist/guitarist Lena Yester, Jerry's daughter. In 2000 the group was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. Boone has also been attempting to launch a new band called Forq.

Nick Lowe

Born Mar. 24, 1949, Walton-on-Thames, Eng.

1978—Pure Pop for Now People (Columbia) 1979—Labour of Lust 1982—Nick the Knife 1983—The Abominable Showman 1984—Nick Lowe and His Cowboy Outfit 1985—The Rose of England 1988—Pinker and Prouder Than Previous 1989—Basher: The Best of Nick Lowe 1990—Party of One (Reprise/Warner Bros.) 1994—The Impossible Bird (Upstart) 1998—Dig My Mood 1999—Nick Lowe: The Doings (The Solo Years) (Edsel, U.K.) 2001—The Convincer (Yep Roc).

With Little Village (Lowe; John Hiatt; Jim Keltner; Ry Cooder): 1992—Little Village (Reprise).

For over 30 years, singer, songwriter, and producer Nick Lowe has created a body of work that includes boozy, good-time British pub rock, sharp satire, and introspective contemporary American country. The son of a Royal Air Force officer, Lowe grew up in England and the Mideast. His first band, Kippington Lodge, eventually became Brinsley Schwarz [see entry], for which Lowe did much of the songwriting. When Brinsley Schwarz broke up in 1975, Lowe began writing more openly sardonic pop songs while performing with Rockpile [see entry] and producing Releasing singles under a variety of names, Lowe was honing his broad ironic streak and his unapologetic talent for lifting other people's hooks. For "Bay City Rollers, We Love You" and "Rollers Show," Lowe recorded as the Tartan Horde ("Rollers Show" later turned up on Pure Pop). "Let's Go to the Disco" was supposedly by the Disco Bros. In 1976 Lowe cofounded Stiff Records with Dave Edmunds [see entry] and manager Jake Riviera. The label's first release was Lowe's 45 "So It Goes" b/w "Heart of the City"; he also recorded "I Love My Label." In the next year, working as staff producer, he oversaw records by Elvis Costello (My Aim Is True, This Year's Model, Armed Forces, Get Happy), Mickey Jupp (whose "Switchboard Susan" Lowe covered on Labour of Lust), the Damned, Wreckless Enc, and Alberto y Los Trios Paranoias, as well as two records of his own. These included the EP Bow! (an "answer" to David Bowie's LP Low), which featured a version of Sandy Posey's "Born a Woman," and "Marie Provost," later on Pure Pop.

In late 1977 Lowe and Costello left Stiff to join label cofounder Jake Riviera's new venture, Radar Records. He had his first British hit with "I Love the Sound of Breaking Glass," which was included on that year's LP Pure Pop (Jesus of Cool in the U.K.). Labour of Lust, though billed as a solo album, was really the work of Rockpile. It yielded Lowe's only American Top 40 single, "Cruel to Be Kind" (#12, 1979). His next charting single was "I Knew the Bride (When She Used to Rock and Roll)" (#77, 1985), with backing from Huey Lewis and the News.

Lowe remained an active producer, working on a number of Costello's albums, several LPs by Graham Parker and the Rumour (including Howlin' Wind), one by Dr. Feelgood, and the Pretenders' debut single, "Stop Your Sobbing," in addition to his then-wife Carlene Carter's Musical Shapes and Blue Nun, and a session with her stepfather, Johnny Cash, who performed Lowe's "Without Love" (off Labour of Lust).

In 1981 Rockpile disbanded, and Lowe resumed his solo career, releasing Nick the Knife and returning to the road with a band alternately known as the Chaps and Noise to Go that included former Rumour guitarist Martin Belmont, ex-Ace/Squeeze pianist Paul Carrack (for whom Lowe produced a solo album), and Lowe playing rhythm guitar instead of bass. Among Lowe's '80s production credits are two later Elvis Costello albums (Trust and Blood and Chocolate, which he coproduced), the Fabulous Thunderbirds' T-Bird Rhythm, and John Hiatt's Riding With the King In 1990 he and Carter, who had married on August 18, 1979, divorced.

During the late '80s Lowe suffered from what he described as a deep depression for about two years. He has also suffered from alcoholism. Feeling overlooked and unable to see a future for the music he loved, he considered retiring from music. Riviera and Costello urged him to get back to work. He worked with Hiatt on his Bring the Family (1987), and out of that project grew Little Village, a band made up of Lowe, Hiatt, Jim Keltner, and Ry Cooder, whose self-titled album came out in 1992. Also around that time Lowe began working in Costello's band and undertook a solo acoustic tour in England.

In 1990 Lowe landed a new solo deal with Warner/Reprise, and old cohort Dave Edmunds (with whom Lowe has had an up-and-down relationship through the years) produced Party of One, which included the amusing single "All Men Are Liars," with a verse rhyming "Rick Astley" with "ghastly." In 1994 Lowe played bass on Elvis Costello's Brutal Youth, and around the same time, songwriting royalties for Curtis Stigers' version of "(What's So Funny 'Bout) Peace, Love, and Understanding?" on the record-breaking The Bodyguard soundtrack earned Lowe more than $1 million. Dropped by Warners, Lowe moved to the indie for his next release. Critically acclaimed, country-tinged The Impossible Bird contained Lowe's "The Beast in Me," which he wrote for his former father-in-law Johnny Cash, who made it the centerpiece of his masterful, 1994 Grammy-winning American Recordings, and featured ex-Commander Cody guitarist Bill Kirchen. Dig My Mood was also well received and combined his usual pop rock with jazz touches. The Convincer displayed a range of styles, including R&B, country, jazz, and pop.

L7

Formed 1985, Los Angeles, CA

Suzi Gardner (b. Aug. 1, 1960, Altus, OK), gr., voc.; Jennifer Finch (b. Aug. 5, 1966, Los Angeles), bass, voc.; Donita Sparks (b. Apr. 8, 1963, Chicago, IL), gr., voc.; Roy Koutsky, drums. 1987—L7 (Epitaph) 1990—(—Koutsky, + Demetra "Dee" Plakas [b. Nov. 9, 1960, Chicago], drums) Smell the Magic EP (Sub Pop) 1992—Bricks Are Heavy (Slash) 1994—Hungry for Stink 1996—(—Finch; + Gail Greenwood, bass) 1997—The Beauty Process: Triple Platinum (Warner Bros.) 1998—Omaha to Osaka (Man's Ruin) 1999—(—Greenwood; + Janis Tanaka, bass) Slap-Happy (Wax Tadpole/Bong Load).

L7 brings a sense of outrage and outrageousness to the normally muddled world of grunge. Although the four women despise being identified by gender, they were nonetheless leaders in the early-'90s resurgence of women rockers. The band helped found Rock for Choice, an organization that hosts fund-raising concerts to support the cause of reproductive rights. In 1992 L7 seemed to challenge the masculine clichés of rock quite literally when Sparks pulled a tampon from her vagina and threw it into the crowd at England's mammoth Reading Festival.

L7: Donita Sparks, Suzi Gardner, Jennifer Finch, Dee Plakas

L7 (the name comes from the slang for "square") built its following through independent releases and frequent tours of Europe and the States. It went through a series of drummers, some of them male, before settling on Plakas. A single for Sub Pop's singles club and an EP for the label, with the catchy, anthemic "Shove," made it one of Hollywood's hottest underground bands. Bricks Are Heavy, featuring the popular alternative track "Pretend We're Dead," was produced by Butch Vig on the heels of his success with Nirvana's Nevermind. In 1994 L7 performed in the John Waters film Serial Mom, and won more fans via Lollapalooza appearances and the release of its highly praised album Hungry for Stink.

As intimated by its wry title, hopes were high for L7's 1997 followup, The Beauty Process: Triple Platinum (#172 pop). Yet despite production assistance from Rob Cavallo (Green Day), wider success eluded the group. After Warner Bros. dropped the band from its roster, L7 put out a live album, Omaha to Osaka, on the independent Man's Ruin imprint. Then it started its own Wax Tadpole label, through which it released Slap-Happy in 1999. The album found the group in fine form, its crunching riffs and biting humor fully intact. The Beauty Process, a video documentary about the band produced and directed by ex-Nirvana bassist Krist Novoselic, followed later in the year.

Lulu

Born Marie McDonald McLaughlin Lawrie, Nov. 3, 1948, Glasgow, Scot.

1967—To Sir With Love (Epic) 1971—New Routes (Atco)

1979—Don't Take Love for Granted (Rocket) 1981—Lulu (Alfa) 1994—Independence (SBK).

At age 18 Lulu recorded "To Sir With Love," the title theme from the movie in which she costarred with Sidney Poitier. It quickly went to #1 in the U.S., becoming the first hit by an artist from the U.K. to hit the top of the U.S. chart without ever entering the British chart. This success led her to much work on TV and on the cabaret circuit. Before recording this pop ballad, however, she and her band, the Luvvers, had hit the British Top 10 with a cover of the Isley Brothers' hit "Shout." (Lulu's version hit #94 in the U.S. Top 100 in 1964 and #96 as a reissue in 1967 at the height of her U.S. popularity.)

Marie Lawrie made her show-business debut at age nine singing at Bridgeton Public Hall and soon began appearing regularly with a local accordion band. At age 14 she began singing weekend gigs in Glasgow clubs and by 15 was a regular in that area with her group the Glen Eagles. In 1964 her group was renamed Lulu and the Luvvers and hit the chart with "Shout."

In 1966 Lulu went solo (and became the first British female act to perform behind the Iron Curtain, in Poland), and in 1967 she hit the British Top 10 again with Neil Diamond's "The Boat That I Row." That year her performance in To Sir With Love garnered raves. In the late '60s Lulu worked as both a TV personality and a recording artist, and in 1969 she married Bee Gee Maunce Gibb (they divorced in 1973). With the production team of Jerry Wexler, Tom Dowd, and Arif Mardin, she recorded New Routes at Muscle Shoals in 1970, from which sprang the U.S. Top 30 hit "Oh Me, Oh My, I'm a Fool for You, Baby."

In the early '70s Lulu toured throughout the world, headlining in such places as Las Vegas and Berlin, and had her own prime-time BBC-TV weekly music series. She was absent from the U.K. chart until 1974, when she again hit the Top 10 with the David Bowie-arranged cover of his "The Man Who Sold the World," and from the U.S. chart until 1981, when she hit with "I Could Never Miss You (More Than I Do)" (#18) and "If I Were You" (#44). Except for a remake of "Shout," a U.K. Top 10 hit in 1986, she did not record again until 1993's Independence, a dance-oriented work. The title cut was a U.K. Top 20 hit and a dance hit here. Other successful singles include a duet with Bobby Womack, "I'm Back for More," and a U.K. #1 cover of Dan Hartman's "Relight My Fire." She has also begun writing songs; she cowrote Tina Turner's "I Don't Wanna Fight." As of 2000, she continued to act, perform, and occasionally record.

Luna

Formed 1991, New York, NY

Dean Wareham (b. Aug. 1, 1963, Wellington, N.Z.), voc., gtr.;

Justin Harwood (b. July 6, 1965, Taradale, N.Z.), bass; Stanley

Demeski (b. ca. 1960), drums

1992—Lunapark (Elektra) 1993—Slide EP 1994—Bewitched

(+ Sean A. Eden [b. Mar. 5, 1965, London, Ont., Can.], gtr., voc.) 1995—Penthouse 1996—Luna EP (– Demeski; + Lee Wall [b. Apr. 23, 1968, Winston-Salem, NC], drums) 1997—Pup Tent 1999—The Days of Our Nights (Jericho/Sire) 2001—Live (Arena Rock).
Dean Wareham solo: 1991—Anaesthesia EP (No. 6 Records).

After the breakup of the acclaimed indie band Galaxie 500, New Zealand-born singer/guitarist Dean Wareham formed Luna 2 in 1991. The new band, which also included Chills bassist Justin Harwood and ex-Feelies drummer Stanley Demeski, later trimmed the name to Luna and signed to Elektra Records, debuting with Lunapark. Like Galaxie 500, Luna was in the mold of New York's Velvet Underground/Television school, with moody, minimalist rock and imagistic, literate wordplay. The result could often be understated, though the band kicked up the beat on tour. On Bewitched, Luna added second guitarist Sean A. Eden. The album also featured a guest appearance by Sterling Morrison of the Velvet Underground. Luna continued that trend by inviting Television's Tom Verlaine, as well as Stereolab's Laetitia Sadier, to appear on 1995's Penthouse. That album's cover of Serge Gainsbourg's "Bonnie and Clyde" was a particular crowd pleaser. By now Luna enjoyed a strong following and regular critical support, albeit without attaining any chart action. Just prior to the scheduled release of The Days of Our Nights, though, Luna was dropped from Elektra. Six months later, independent Jericho Records released the 1999 album, which closed with an arch cover of Guns n' Roses' "Sweet Child O' Mine." The band's first live album was issued on another indie label in 2001.

Lydia Lunch

Born Lydia Koch, June 2, 1959, Rochester, NY
1980—Queen of Siam (Ze) 1981—Eight-Eyed Spy (Fetish); Pre-Teenage Jesus EP (Ze); 13.13 (Ruby) 1982—The Agony Is the Ecstasy EP (with the Birthday Party) (4AD) 1985—The Uncensored Lydia Lunch cassette (Widowspeak) 1987—Honeymoon in Red (with Rowland S. Howard) 1988—Stinkfist EP (with Clint Ruin); The Crumb EP (with Thurston Moore) 1989—Naked in Garden Hills (with Harry Crews); Drowning in Limbo 1991—Shotgun Wedding (with Rowland S. Howard) (Triple X) 1993—Crimes Against Nature 1995—Rude Hieroglyphics (with Exene Cervenkova) (Rykodisc) 1996—Universal Infiltrators (Atavistic) 1998—Matrikamantra; Widowspeak (WMC/Pilot).

At 16, Lydia Lunch was one of New York's first "no wave" artists with her band Teenage Jesus and the Jerks. Working with a variety of bassists, Lunch (vocals and guitar)—alternately shrieking and chanting in a monotone—and Bradley Field ("drum") recorded two singles (later collected on a 12-inch), four cuts for Brian Eno's No New York compilation, and an EP (pre-Teenage Jesus) featuring original member James Chance (then Siegfried) [see entry] on saxophone before he left the band to form the Contortions. A side project of the period was Beirut Slump, whose lone 45 included sometime-Jerk Jim Sclavunos on bass and filmmaker Vivienne Dick on violin. Lunch also starred in three of Dick's movies, as well as in Beth and Scott B's Black Box, The Offenders, and, in 1982, Vortex (which debuted at the New York Film Festival).

In 1980 Lunch left no wave behind and recorded Queen of Siam with the aid of ex-Contortions/John Cale bassist George Scott (a.k.a. Jack Ruby), saxophonist Pat Irwin, ex-Voidoid and Teenage Jesus producer Robert Quine on guitar, and big-band arranger Billy Ver Planck, the composer of the theme to The Flintstones. Concurrently, Lunch, Scott, Irwin, Sclavunos (on drums), and guitarist Michael Paumgardhen started the bluesy Eight-Eyed Spy. Scott's death from a heroin overdose in 1980 kept Eight-Eyed Spy from making a full studio LP, though a combination of live performances and studio work with Irwin on bass filled a posthumous cassette and an album.

With the end of Eight-Eyed Spy, Irwin concentrated on his instrumental group, the Raybeats (he later became a touring member of the B-52's), while Sclavunos and Paumgardhen joined Lunch's Devil Dogs. But turnover in personnel and a repertoire of cover songs kept that group from recording. Instead, Lunch moved to California and started 13.13. The lineup of the group was fluid (one version included three members of early L.A. punk rockers the Weirdos). In 1982 Lunch appeared on an EP, The Agony Is the Ecstasy, with the Birthday Party. Also that year Lunch collaborated with X's Exene Cervenkova on a book of poetry entitled Adulterers Anonymous. The mid-'80s saw Lunch concentrating more on her highly confrontational spoken-word performances. She founded Widowspeak Productions in 1984 to release her own and others' work. Lunch also began a collaboration with notorious underground filmmaker Richard Kern, starring in his films The Right Side of My Brain (with Henry Rollins) and Fingered.

Other collaborations were musical: She recorded with ex-Birthday Party guitarist Rowland S. Howard, including 1987's Honeymoon in Red and 1991's Shotgun Wedding and on a 1988 EP, Stinkfist, with Jim Thirlwell, a.k.a. Foetus, a.k.a. Clint Ruin. Also in 1988 she formed the combo Harry Crews with Sonic Youth bassist/vocalist Kim Gordon and recorded The Crumb with Sonic Youth's Thurston Moore. With Exene Cervenkova, she recorded Rude Hieroglyphics, a mix of songs and spoken-word tracks, in 1995.

In 1993 Lunch taught a visiting-artists workshop for the San Francisco Art Institute's performance/video department. That year Triple X released a three-CD box set, Crimes Against Nature, of Lunch's spoken-word performances. In 1997 Lunch's novel Paradoxia was published, her writing has appeared in several other books, including The Rolling Stone Book of the Beats (1999) and Men's Journal: The Great Life (2000). Lunch's photography has also been anthologized and exhibited, and she contributed a track, "Gloomy Sunday," to 1999's The Blair Witch Project soundtrack.

John Lurie: See Lounge Lizards

Frankie Lymon and the Teenagers

Formed 1955, New York, NY

Frankie Lymon (b. Sep. 30, 1942, New York; d. Feb. 28, 1968, New York), lead voc.; Sherman Garnes (b. June 8, 1940, New York; d. 1978), bass voc.; Joe Negroni (b. Sep. 9, 1940, New York; d. 1977), baritone voc.; Herman Santiago (b. Feb. 18, 1941, New York), first tenor voc.; Jimmy Merchant (b. Feb. 10, 1940, New York), second tenor voc.

1956—The Teenagers Featuring Frankie Lymon (Gee)

1986—Frankie Lymon and the Teenagers: For Collectors

Only (Murray Hill) 1989—The Best of Frankie Lymon and the Teenagers (Rhino) 1998—The Very Best of Frankie Lymon and the Teenagers.

When he was 13, Frankie Lymon had a #1 R&B record (#6 pop and #1 U.K.) with "Why Do Fools Fall in Love?" At 18 his career was over; eight years later he died of a heroin overdose. He was the first young black teen idol and an inspiration to countless young singers, including Ronnie Spector, Garland Jeffreys, Marvin Gaye, Michael Jackson, and Diana Ross, whose cover of "Fools" was a Top 10 hit in 1981. More than 25 years after his death, the two surviving Teenagers, Herman Santiago and Jimmy Merchant, made music-business and legal history when a federal court recognized them as the authors of the song and awarded them back royalties estimated in the millions.

The rags-to-riches-to-rags story began in New York, where Lymon and the Teenagers were school friends who sang on street corners. The Teenagers were originally a quartet, known first as the Ermines, then the Coupe de Villes. They discovered Lymon, who had sung in his father's gospel group, the Harlemaires, and he joined the group, which then became the Premiers. In 1955 Richard Barrett of the Valentines heard them perform on a street corner outside his window and arranged for the group to be signed by the record label his group recorded for, Gee. Label executives were impressed by the group with Santiago singing lead, but when it came time to record a song Santiago and Merchant cowrote, "Why Do Fools Fall in Love?," Lymon stepped in since Santiago had a cold. The song, credited to Lymon and producer George Goldner, was their first record. By then they were known as Frankie Lymon and the Teenagers.

Lymon's boyish soprano became the group's trademark, and the group's clean-cut, innocent image was embraced by the public and the record industry at a time when Congress was beginning to investigate payola. Smiling and neatly attired in letter sweaters and loose, sharply creased trousers, Frankie Lymon and the Teenagers were a crossover smash. "Fools" was one of four Top 20 R&B songs off the Teenagers' debut album; the others were "I Promise to Remember" (#10, 1956), "I Want You to Be My Girl" (#13 pop, #3 R&B, 1956), and "The ABC's of Love" (#14 R&B, 1956). The LP also included "I'm Not a Juvenile Delinquent," which the group sang in the 1956 Alan Freed film Rock, Rock, Rock. A year later, after appearing in another Freed movie, Mr. Rock and Roll, and making a successful tour of the U.K., Lymon left the group for a solo career.

The Teenagers continued without him, with a string of less charismatic lead singers, but nothing hit. After reuniting with Lymon briefly in 1965, the group called it quits for many years. By then Lymon, too, had fallen on hard times, mostly due to his worsening drug addiction. His first 45, "Goody Goody," was a modest hit (#20 pop, 1957); subsequent records were outright flops. A comeback attempt in 1960 with Bobby Day's "Little Bitty Pretty One" hit #58. His handlers had tried a number of new stylistic approaches for Lymon, whose natural change in voice was less appealing. But Lymon's problems ran much deeper. In the '60s he was arrested for drug possession and claimed in an Ebony magazine profile to have been a pimp at the height of the Teenagers' success. He had left the army, married a school-teacher named Emira Eagle, and was playing the lounge at an Augusta, Georgia, Howard Johnson's when he got a brief job in New York. Just a few days after returning to his hometown, he was found dead of a heroin overdose. In the '70s Games died of a heart attack, and Negroni passed away after a cerebral hemorrhage. Merchant became a cabdriver.

In 1981, to commemorate the silver anniversary of "Fools," Santiago and Merchant recruited Pearl McKinnon and Eric Ward. There were a few more personnel changes in the revived Teenagers. One latter-day edition included Jimmy Castor [see entry] (who understudied for Frankie Lymon at the group's height), Tony Sal (ex-Ronnie and the Daytonas and the Jimmy Castor Bunch), and New York City oldies radio disc jockey Bobby Jay.

In the meantime, "Why Do Fools Fall in Love?" had proven its durability, becoming a hit record again for the Happenings in 1967, being featured on the hit American Graffiti soundtrack, and being covered many times. In 1984 Frankie Lymon's widow filed for a renewal of her late husband's copyright on the song, only to discover that it had become the property of unscrupulous record executive Morris Levy. A lawsuit was then filed in federal court, charging that Levy and Goldner had fraudulently represented themselves as the coauthors of a song written by Frankie Lymon. With millions in back royalties at stake, Levy recalled a woman, Elizabeth Waters, who had contacted him several years before, claiming she had been married to Lymon in the '60s (Waters, it was later discovered, was legally married to another man when she married Lymon). Levy also tracked down another woman who claimed to have been married to Lymon, Zola Taylor, a former singer with the Platters. (She could produce no wedding license for the nuptials that allegedly occurred in Tijuana.) It was later revealed that Levy had promised both women financial compensation in return for their disputing Emira Lymon's claim of widowhood, and it worked. Waters won the case around the same time Levy was sentenced to 10 years in federal prison for extortion in another case. An appellate court reversed the decision, deeming Emira to be Lymon's legal widow.

But the twists and turns did not end there. Merchant and Santiago pressed their own case, claiming they were the true authors of the song and, thus, the rightful recipients of any royalties due. Although their case appeared weakened by the years that had elapsed, in 1992 a federal court proclaimed Jimmy Merchant and Herman Santiago—not Lymon, Goldner, or Levy, by then all deceased—the song's authors and rightful copyright owners. The two Teenagers had successfully argued that they were tricked out of the royalties, then intimidated (through a 1969 death threat) into silence. In most such cases, the plaintiffs never see justice, at best, royalties are awarded going back the previous three years. For Merchant and Santiago, though, the judge ruled in their favor and went even further, awarding royalties back to 1969. Unfortunately, the decision was overturned on appeal; the Teenagers lost again.

In 1993 the band was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. Actor Larenz Tate portrayed Lymon in the 1998 biopic Why Do Fools Fall in Love. Santiago has publicly questioned the factual accuracy of certain passages of the film.

Barbara Lynn

Born Barbara Lynn Ozen, Jan. 16, 1942, Beaumont, TX
1976—Here Is Barbara Lynn (Oval) 1988—You Don't Have to Go (Ichiban) 1993—You'll Lose a Good Thing (Sounds of the Fifties, Neth.) 1994—So Good (Bullseye Blues) 2000—Hot Night Tonight (Antone's).

Barbara Lynn is an East Texas R&B singer (and left-handed guitar player) with a bluesy voice and a casual, low-key style. Her first and biggest hit, the New Orleans-style standard "You'll Lose a Good Thing" (#8 pop, #1 R&B, 1962), was written by the 16-year-old Lynn as a poem. She was discovered singing blues in Louisiana clubs by musician/arranger Huey P. Meaux, who subsequently produced all her records. Most of her early hits—including "You're Gonna Need Me" (#13 R&B, 1963) and "It's Better to Have It" (#26 R&B, 1965)—were recorded in Cosimo Matassa's New Orleans studio but were released by Philadelphia-based Jamie Records.

In 1966 Lynn signed to Meaux's Tribe label but recorded no hits. In 1968 she went to Atlantic, hitting with "This Is the Thanks I Get" (#39 R&B, 1968) and "(Until Then) I'll Suffer" (#31 R&B, 1971). The Rolling Stones covered her "Oh! Baby (We Got a Good Thing Goin')" on Rolling Stones Now! Recording-wise, little was heard from Lynn through the '80s except for a single LP from Ichiban. Six years later So Good was released to critical acclaim. The followup, 2000's Hot Night Tonight, features appearances by Ivan Neville, Bernard Fowler, and Daryl Jones.

Loretta Lynn

Born Loretta Webb, Apr. 14, 1935, Butcher Hollow, KY 1966—Don't Come Home a' Drinkin' (Decca) 1968—Greatest Hits 1970—Coal Miner's Daughter 1972—Lead Me On (with Conway Twitty) 1974—Greatest Hits, vol. 2 (MCA) 1975—Back to the Country; Home 1976—When the Tingle Becomes a Chill; Somebody Somewhere 1977—I Remember Patsy; Out of My Head and Back in My Bed 1979—We've Come a Long Way, Baby 1980—Loretta; Lookin' Good 1981—Two's a Party (with Conway Twitty) 1982—I Lie; Making Love From Memory 1983—Lyin', Cheatin', Woman Chasin', Honky Tonkin', Whiskey Drinkin' You 1985—Just a Woman 1988—Who Was That Stranger 1991—The Country Music Hall of Fame: Loretta Lynn 1992—The Old Rugged Cross 1993—Honky Tonk Angels (with Dolly Parton and Tammy Wynette) (Columbia) 1994—Honky Tonk Girl: The Loretta Lynn Collection (MCA) 1995—An Evening With Loretta Lynn (Musketeer) 2000—Still Country (Audiom).

Country singer and songwriter Loretta Lynn grew up in the remote, poverty-stricken town of Butcher Hollow, Kentucky. Named after Loretta Young, Lynn didn't do much singing in her early youth. Instead, after one month of dating, she was married at age 13 to Mooney (Moonshine) Lynn (he was 19), who took her 3,000 miles away to Custer, Washington, where he worked in logging camps. Lynn became a mother at 14 and had four children in her first four years of marriage; she was a grandmother at 29. Besides taking care of the kids, taking in other people's laundry, and occasionally making extra money by picking strawberries with migrant workers, Lynn began writing songs on her Sears Roebuck guitar. Her husband encouraged her to go public and became her manager, lining up shows at local bars and clubs. At age 27 Lynn cut a record for the California Zero label, "I'm a Honky Tonk Girl," which she and Mooney promoted themselves by visiting radio stations around the country. They worked their way to Nashville, and the song eventually became a #14 hit on the C&W national chart.

Loretta Lynn

Once in Nashville, Lynn persuaded Ott Devine, manager of the Grand Ole Opry, to book her, and she first appeared there in October 1960. An appearance with Buck Owens led to a contract with Decca, for whom she's made more than 50 records over a period of 30 years. Her first Decca hit, produced by Owen Bradley in 1962, was called "Success" (#6 C&W). Since then she has had 16 #1 C&W hits, including the standards, "Don't Come Home a' Drinkin' (With Lovin' on Your Mind)" (1966), "Fist City" (1968), "Woman of the World (Leave My World Alone)" (1969), and the autobiographical "Coal Miner's Daughter" (1970). Also in 1970 she began touring regularly with Conway Twitty, with whom she had a number of #1 C&W hits, including 1971's "After the Fire Is Gone" and "Lead Me On," followed by "Louisiana Woman, Mississippi Man" (1973), "As Soon As I Hang Up the Phone" (1974), and "Feelins'" (1975). Lynn was the first woman to win the Entertainer of the Year Award from the Country Music Association, in 1972. Her self-penned controversial hit "The Pill" (#70 pop, #5 C&W, 1975) was seen by some as a down-home feminist classic, while "One's on the Way" (#1 C&W, 1971) celebrated motherhood.

Her later hits included the C&W #1 singles "Rated 'X'" (1972), "Love Is the Foundation" (1973), "Trouble in Paradise" (1974), "Somebody Somewhere (Don't Know What He's Missin' Tonight)" (1976), "She's Got You" (1977), "Out of My Head and Back in My Bed" (1977), as well as other C&W Top 20 hits, such as "When the Tingle Becomes a Chill" (1975), "We've Come a Long Way, Baby," "I Can't Feel You Anymore" (1979), and "I Lie" (1982).

In 1976 Lynn (with New York Times reporter George Vecsey) wrote her autobiography, Coal Miner's Daughter, and it became one of the 10 biggest-selling books of that year. In 1980 a movie based on Lynn's autobiography and starring Sissy Spacek came out, to much acclaim. (Spacek, who sang Lynn's songs in the film, won the Best Actress Oscar for her performance.) Lynn herself has dabbled in acting, making guest appearances on Fantasy Island and The Dukes of Hazard, as well as The Muppet Show.

Although Lynn's recording career slowed to a halt in the late '80s (1988's Who Was That Stranger would be her last solo album for a dozen years), she remained one of country music's most popular and well-loved stars. She was inducted into the Country Music Hall of Fame in 1988 and presented with the Pioneer Award at the 1995 Academy of Country Music Awards. Honky Tonk Girl: The Loretta Lynn Collection, a career-spanning three-disc box set, was released in 1994. She joined Dolly Parton and Tammy Wynette to record 1993's Honky Tonk Angels album, but she spent much of the first half of the '90s nursing her ailing husband, Mooney, who passed away in 1996 from diabetes complications. They had been married 48 years. In September 2000, her 40th anniversary as a performer, Lynn returned with the Randy Scruggs-produced Still Country on the independent Audium label. The album featured two new songs of her own, including her tribute to Mooney, "I Can't Hear the Music." She planned to publish her second autobiography in 2001.

Lynyrd Skynyrd

Formed 1966, Jacksonville, FL

Ronnie Van Zant (b. Jan. 15, 1949; d. Oct. 20, 1977, Gillsburg, MS), voc.; Gary Rossington, gtr.; Allen Collins (b. ca. 1952; d. Jan. 23, 1990, Jacksonville), gtr.; Billy Powell, kybds.; Leon Wilkeson (d. July 27, 2001, Ponte Vedra Beach, FL), bass; Bob Burns, drums.

1973—(+ Ed King, gtr.) Pronounced Leh-Nerd Skin-Nerd (MCA) 1974—Second Helping (– Burns; + Artimus Pyle [b. Spartanburg, SC], drums) 1975—(– King) Nuthin' Fancy 1976—Gimme Back My Bullets (+ Steve Gaines [b. Seneca, MO; d. Oct. 20, 1977, Gillsburg, MS], gtr.) One More From the Road 1977—Street Survivors 1978—Skynyrd's First . . . And Last 1979—Gold and Platinum 1987—Legend 1988—Southern by the Grace of God/Lynyrd Skynyrd Tribute Tour—1987 1991—[group re-forms: Rossington; Pyle; Wilkeson; King; Powell; + Johnny Van-Zant, voc.; + Randall Hall, gtr.; + Custer, drums] Lynyrd Skynyrd 1991 (Atlantic) 1993—The Last Rebel 1994—Endangered Species (Capricorn) 1996—(– King; + Rickey Medlocke, gtr.; + Hughie Thomasson, gtr.) Freebird . . . The Movie (MCA) 1997—Twenty (CMC International) 1998—Lyve 1999—Edge of Forever 2000—Then and Now.

Johnny Van-Zant solo: 1980—No More Dirty Deals (Polydor)

1981—Round Two 1982—The Last of the Wild Ones

1985—Van-Zant (Geffen) 1990—Brickyard Road (Atlantic).

Lynyrd Skynyrd was the most critically lauded and commercially successful of the Allman Brothers–influenced Southern bands. When it first rose to prominence in 1973, the group epitomized regional pride that stressed cocky, boisterous hard rock, as opposed to the Allmans' open-ended blues. When the band broke up in 1977 after a plane crash killed Ronnie Van Zant and newcomer Steve Gaines and backup singer Cassie Gaines, Southern rock suffered a tremendous loss.

The nucleus of what would become Lynyrd Skynyrd first met in high school in their hometown, Jacksonville, Florida. Van Zant, Allen Collins, and Gary Rossington formed the band My Backyard in 1965, eventually joined by Leon Wilkeson and Billy Powell. Their later name immortalized a gym teacher, Leonard Skinner, who was known to punish students who had long hair.

The band, with original drummer Bob Burns, was playing in Atlanta at a bar called Funocchio's in 1972, when it was spotted by Al Kooper, who was on a tour with Badfinger and also scouting bands for MCA's new Sounds of the South label. Kooper signed Skynyrd and produced its 1973 debut, Pronounced Leh-Nerd Skin-Nerd, adding session guitarist Ed King (late of Strawberry Alarm Clock). The group's initial hook was its three-guitar attack, topping the Allmans' trademark two-guitar leads. Skynyrd first got major FM airplay with the lengthy "Freebird." What had been written as a tribute to Duane Allman eventually became an anthem for Skynyrd fans and—when revived, without lyrics, by the Rossington Collins Band in 1980—a tribute to Van Zant.

The band hooked up with the Who's Quadrophenia tour

Lynyrd Skynyrd: Leon Wilkeson, Allen Collins, Ronnie Van Zant, Gary Rossington, Artimus Pyle, Steve Gaines, Billy Powell

in 1973 and acquired a reputation as a live act. Its 1974 followup LP, the multiplatinum Second Helping, also produced by Kooper, reached #12. It included another instant Southern standard, "Sweet Home Alabama" (#8, 1974), a reply to Neil Young's "Alabama" and "Southern Man." But Van Zant often wore a Neil Young T-shirt, and Young later offered the band several songs to record, though they never made it to vinyl.

In December 1974 Artimus Pyle joined as a replacement for Burns; King quit a month later. The band's third record went to #9, but 1976's Gimme Back My Bullets, produced by Tom Dowd, sold somewhat less. Skynyrd regrouped in October 1976 with the double live One More From the Road (recorded at Atlanta's Fox Theater), which went to #9, sold triple platinum, and featured new third guitarist Steve Gaines, plus a trio of female backup singers, including Gaines' sister Cassie. The band became one of the biggest U.S. concert draws.

Street Survivors, its sixth LP, was released three days before the plane crash of October 20, 1977. Skynyrd was traveling in a privately chartered plane between shows in Greenville, South Carolina, and Baton Rouge, Louisiana, when it crashed just outside Gillsburg, Mississippi, killing three members. The rest escaped with injuries. Fuel shortage was a possible cause of the crash, although by the next year a lawsuit filed against the airplane company faulted the plane's personnel and its mechanical integrity. Ironically, the cover of the band's last LP pictures the members standing in flames and included an order form for a "Lynyrd Skynyrd survival kit." There was also a Van Zant composition about death called "That Smell." The LP cover was changed shortly after the accident, and the album (#5, 1977) went on to become one of Skynyrd's biggest sellers. The next year Skynyrd's First . . . and Last was released, consisting of previously unavailable early band recordings from 1970 to 1972 (the band had planned on releasing it before the accident). It went platinum, and in 1980 MCA released a best-of called Gold and Platinum.

That same year a new band emerged from Lynyrd Skynyrd's ashes. The Rossington-Collins Band [see entry] featured three of the surviving members plus female lead singer Dale Krantz. Artimus Pyle, meanwhile, began touring with his Artimus Pyle Band in 1982.

In 1986 tragedy struck again when Allen Collins crashed his car, killing his girlfriend and leaving him paralyzed from the waist down. Four years later he died of respiratory failure due to pneumonia at age 37. To mark the 10th anniversary of the fatal plane crash, in 1987 Rossington, Powell, Wilkeson, and King put Lynyrd Skynyrd back together, along with guitarist Randall Hall and Johnny Van-Zant (the only one of the brothers who hyphenates his surname) on lead vocals. The younger brother of Ronnie and Donnie (38 Special) was a marginally successful solo artist, releasing five albums from 1980 through 1990. Dale Krantz, by then Dale Krantz Rossington, sang backup for a 32-date Skynyrd reunion tour, which was chronicled on the following year's double live album, Southern by the Grace of God/Lynyrd Skynyrd Tribute Tour—1987.

In 1991 the same group (minus Pyle, and with "Custer" on drums) released a new LP, Lynyrd Skynyrd 1991. Both it and 1993's The Last Rebel carried on Skynyrd's musical tradition and were well received. The band signed with Southern-rock stronghold Capricorn Records and released the one-off acoustic Endangered Species in 1994. Guitanist King left the band shortly after, and new guitarists Rickey Medlocke (formerly of Blackfoot) and Hughie Thomasson (formerly of the Outlaws) were hired as full-time members. The 1996 concert documentary Freebird . . . The Movie captured the original band in its prime, on celluloid and an MCA soundtrack. The group's next albums were released on North Carolina-based CMC International, a label that established a solid market niche reviving the careers of slumping arena-rock acts. Sure enough, a 1997 Behind the Music special on VH1 aired while the band was in midtour supporting the album Twenty (#97, 1997), which marked the 20th anniversary of the fatal, fateful plane crash. Wilkeson died of natural causes in July 2001.

a|b|c|d|e|f|g|h|i|j|k|l| | n|o|p|q|r|s|t|u|v|w|x|y|z

Kirsty MacColl

Born Oct. 10, 1959, London, Eng.; died Dec. 18, 2000, Cozumel, Mex.

1981—Desperate Character (Polydor) 1989—Kite (Charisma) 1991—Electric Landlady 1993—Titanic Days (I.R.S.) 1995—Galore 2000—What Do Pretty Girls Do? (Hux); Tropical Brainstorm (V2, U.K.).

Kirsty MacColl's simultaneously witty and affecting songs and crystalline voice won her a large following in Britain, where "There's a Guy Works Down the Chip Shop Swears He's Elvis" (#14 U.K., 1981) and "Walking Down Madison" (#23 U.K., 1991) were Top 40 hits. American listeners have mostly heard Kirsty's vocals on records by the Rolling Stones, the Smiths, Talking Heads, Billy Bragg, and Van Morrison. Her duet with the Pogues' Shane McGowan, "Fairytale of New York" (#2 U.K., 1987), was one of the most successful Christmas singles ever released in Britain.

The daughter of English folk-music legend Ewen MacColl (who, among other things, wrote "The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face"), Kirsty signed with Stiff Records at age 16. Her 1979 debut single, "They Don't Know," failed to make a dent but became a hit (#8 U.S., 1984; #2 U.K., 1983) for Tracey Ullman in 1984. "Chip Shop" and Desperate Character (1981) showcased her talent as a rueful pasticheur, deftly mixing country, rockabilly, and pop influences. A second album recorded for Polydor in 1983 was rejected and never released.

In 1984 she married producer Steve Lillywhite (Simple Minds, Rolling Stones, U2, Talking Heads). Their first collaboration was a cover of Billy Bragg's "A New England" (#7 U.K., 1985). Lillywhite produced MacColl's first American releases, Kite (1989) and Electric Landlady (1991). Collaborating with guitarists Johnny Marr (the Smiths), Mark E. Nevin (Fairground Attraction), and Marshall Crenshaw, the albums reflect her social concerns, attacking Margaret Thatcher, shallow pop stars, and the dichotomy between rich and poor. (She also hosted an environmental special on the BBC.) Musically the songs range from dance and rap inflections ("Walking Down Madison") to samba ("My Affair") and include cover versions (the Kinks' "Days" [#12 U.K., 1989]) and original takes on '60s pop (her "He Never Mentioned Love"). MacColl's 1993 album, Titanic Days, featured "Can't Stop Killing You" and "Angel," which received U.S. Modern Rock-radio airplay.

The liner notes of the 1995 compilation Galore featured testimonies in the form of eulogies from the likes of Bono (who called her "Noelle Coward"), Morrissey, and David Byrne, all praising MacColl as one of the finest British songwriters. MacColl, who'd separated from Lillywhite in 1994 (they divorced in 1997), remained below the radar in the second part of the '90s, sticking to guest appearances on records (most notably Billy Bragg's). She resurfaced in 2000 with Tropical Brainstorm, her first album of new material in seven years. Inspired by trips to Cuba and Brazil, it saw the perennially British MacColl winningly try her hand at Latin-American rhythms. Later that year, she released What Do Pretty Girls Do?—a collection of BBC radio sessions recorded between 1989 and 1995. She was struck by a boat and killed while scuba diving with her two sons in Mexico. She was 41.

Lonnie Mack

Born Lonnie McIntosh, July 18, 1941, Harrison, IN 1963—The Wham of That Memphis Man! (Fraternity) 1969—Glad I'm in the Band (Elektra); Whatever's Right 1970—For Collectors Only 1971—The Hills of Indiana 1977—Home at Last (Capitol); Lonnie Mack and Pismo 1985—Strike Like Lightning (Alligator) 1986—Second Sight 1988—Roadhouses & Dance Halls (Epic) 1990—Live! Attack of the Killer V (Alligator); Dueling Banjos (QCA) 1998—South (Mack's Flying V); Live at Coco's 1999—Direct Hits and Close Calls; The Pressure's All Mine.

A pioneering rock & roller, Lonnie Mack utilized the whammy bar of his Gibson Flying V to achieve an enormously influential rockabilly sound. Learning guitar at age five, he attended closely to Chet Atkins' and Merle Travis' thumb-and-finger-picking approach. Les Paul was also an early idol, and Mack's guitar was the highlight of his first group, Lonnie and the Twilighters, as well as the subsequent Troy Seals Band, for whom he played lead.

Going solo in 1961, Mack released an instrumental version of Chuck Berry's "Memphis" that charted at #5. Feeding his guitar through a Leslie cabinet usually employed by organists, he trademarked his distinctive "twangy" sound. A followup, "Wham!" entered the Top 30, and a debut album, The Wham of That Memphis Man!, became a roots classic. While overshadowed by his playing, Mack's R&B-influenced singing also drew notice.

An occasional session player for James Brown, Freddie King, and most notably the Doors (Morrison Hotel), Mack put out three albums on Elektra at the turn of the decade. Glad I'm in the Band, Whatever's Right, and the country-inflected Hills of Indiana were more critical than commercial successes, and in 1971, having assumed cult status among musicians, Mack retreated for six years. Surfacing in 1977 with Lonnie Mack and Pismo and the acoustic-driven Home at Last, he returned to strength with 1985's Strike Like Lightning, produced by longtime fan Stevie Ray Vaughan.

Second Sight, Roadhouses & Dance Halls, and Live! Attack of the Killer V confirmed his comeback. Concentrating on blues and the country and gospel roots that formed him, his later work displays, with renewed vitality, his rich, vibrato guitar tone. He continues to tour, and in the late '90s began releasing, on his own Mack's Flying V label, a series of Internet-available albums.

Madness

Formed 1978, London, Eng.

Lee Thompson (b. Oct. 5, 1957, London), sax; Chris Foreman (b. Aug. 8, 1958, London), gtr.; Mike Barson (b. Apr. 21, 1958, London), kybds.; Dan Woodgate (b. Oct. 19, 1960, London), drums; Mark Bedford (b. Aug. 24, 1961, London), bass; Graham "Suggs" McPherson (b. Jan. 13, 1961, Hastings, Eng.), voc.; Chas Smash (b. Carl Smyth, Jan. 14, 1959), MC, steps, trumpet. 1979—One Step Beyond (Stiff) 1980—Absolutely 1981—7 1983—Madness (Geffen) (- Barson) 1984—Keep Moving 1985—Mad Not Mad 1986—(group disbands) 1988—(group re-forms as the Madness: Foreman; Thompson; Smyth; McPherson; + Jerry Dammers [b. Gerald Dankin, May 22, 1954, India], kybds.; + Steve Nieve, kybds.; + Bruce Thomas, bass) 1992—Divine Madness (Virgin) 1997—Total Madness . . . The Very Best of Madness (Geffen) 1999—(group re-forms: Thompson; Foreman; Barson; Woodgate; Bedford; McPherson; Smyth) Universal Madness: Live in Los Angeles (Golden Voice); Wonderful (Virgin, U.K.).

Madness first came to prominence in 1978, along with the Specials, in the forefront of Great Britain's ska revival. (Ska was a prereggae Jamaican dance rhythm popular in the '60s.) In time Madness became a vaudevillian pop group, matching its self-proclaimed "nutty sound" to soul, R&B, and music-hall music as well as ska and becoming a top singles band in Britain. Lee Thompson, Mike Barson, and Chris Foreman had been together since 1976 in the band Morris and the Minors. As group membership varied, Chas Smash and future Madness manager John Hassler auditioned as replacements without success; by 1978 Graham McPherson, Dan Woodgate, and Mark Bedford had all joined the group, now known as the Invaders. That year they changed their name to Madness, after a favorite Prince Buster ska song.

In 1979 the Specials' 2-Tone label released "The Prince," dedicated to Prince Buster. When it reached #16 on the British chart, Madness signed with Stiff. Chas Smash joined as emcee and dancer, and Madness recorded One Step Beyond. The title cut became a Top 10 British single, and the album stayed in the British charts for most of a year, peaking at #2. Absolutely, with the single "Baggy Trousers" (#3 U.K., 1980) (a Madness onstage trademark), peaked at #2 U.K., as Madness began to broaden its style, becoming spokesmen for Cockney youth. Other U.K. Top 10 singles from that period included "My Girl," "Work Rest and Play," "Embarrassment," "The Return of the Los Palmas Seven," "Grey Day," and "Shut Up."

In 1981 Madness made a film about starting a group, Take It or Leave It, playing itself. The British album 7 included two more U.K. hits, "It Must Be Love" and "Cardiac Arrest," and Madness' first #1 British single, "House of Fun," which brought the LP to #5. Through late 1983 the group's further Top 10 U.K. singles were "Driving in My Car" (1982), "Our House" (1982), "Tomorrow's (Just Another Day)" (1983), "Wings of a Dove" (1983), and "The Sun and the Rain" (1983).

But U.S. response to Madness was confined to concert audiences. Rise and Fall and Complete Madness, the latter a greatest-hits collection released simultaneously with a videocassette, were not released on a U.S. label, although they were bestsellers in Britain and Europe. Despite the popularity of Madness (#41, 1983), which included a number of previous British hits from 1981–82, here in the U.S. the group slid back into obscurity. From that album, Madness saw its only U.S. Top 10 hit with "Our House" (#7, 1983). Despite a handful of lively and amusing videos, including "House of Fun," and another minor hit, "It Must Be Love" (#33, 1983), Madness' next album, Keep Moving, peaked at #109.

At home, however, Madness continued its winning streak with several more hits, among them "Michael Caine" (#11, 1984), "Yesterday's Men" (#18, 1985), and "(Waiting for) The Ghost Train" (#18, 1986). In the fall of 1986 the group disbanded, although several members returned as the Madness with an unsuccessful album, The Madness, that was not released here and was largely ignored at home. Its single, "I Pronounce You," was a minor UK hit, then that group broke up as well. Thompson and Foreman continued for one album as the Nutty Boys. Woodgate later joined Voice of the Beehive. McPherson went into management before releasing a solo album, The Lone Ranger, in 1995, and Smyth became an A&R man for Go! Discs Records. From 1992–96 the group gave a nod to the American Woodstock when it reunited each year for "Madstock" in London's Finsbury Park. Members reunited again in 1998 for a stateside tour, recording a live album during their L.A. date that they issued the following year. That same year, Madness released its first album of original material in more than a decade, Wonderful; a U.K.-only recording, the album produced the #10 British single "Lovestruck."

Madonna

Born Madonna Louise Ciccone, Aug. 16, 1958, Bay City, MI
 1983—Madonna (Sire) 1984—Like a Virgin 1986—True Blue 1987—Who's That Girl; You Can Dance 1989—Like a Prayer 1990—I'm Breathless; The Immaculate Collection 1992—Erotica (Maverick) 1994—Bedtime Stories 1995—Something to Remember 1996—Evita (Warner Bros.) 1998—Ray of Light (Maverick) 2000—Music.

Madonna is the most media-savvy American pop star since Bob Dylan and the most consistently controversial one since Elvis Presley. In the minds of her supporters, her sassy approach to dance music and in-your-face videos gave feminism a much-needed makeover throughout the '80s, smashing sexual boundaries, redefining the nature of eroticism, and challenging social and religious mores. To her detractors, she merely reinforced the notion of "woman as plaything," turning the clock back on conventional feminism two decades. One thing is rarely disputed: At nearly every turn, she has maintained firm control over her career and image.

Born in Bay City, Michigan, Madonna Ciccone was one of six children. Her mother died when Madonna was six, leaving her father, a Chrysler/General Dynamics engineer, to raise the family. She began studying dance at 14 and, after graduating from high school in 1976, continued her dance studies at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor. She moved to New York in 1978, where she studied briefly with the Alvin Ailey dance troupe.

Madonna

Her first crack at pop music came when a boyfriend let her sing and play drums in his band, the Breakfast Club. While in the band, she landed a brief job as backup singer and dancer with disco star Patrick ("Born to Be Alive") Hernandez. In 1981 she quit the Breakfast Club and started writing songs with a former boyfriend from her college years, Steven Bray. The two gained attention in the trendy New York club Danceteria, where the DJ, Mark Kamins, played her tapes; it was Kamins who took Madonna's demo to Sire Records and produced her first club hit, 1982's "Everybody." After a 12-inch single, "Burning Up"/"Physical Attraction," hit #3 on the dance chart in early 1983, she began recording her first album with the high-profile DJ John "Jellybean" Benitez, with whom she became romantically involved. A few months later Sire released her self-titled debut, which peaked at #8. It spawned "Holiday," a single that crossed over from nightclubs to radio, eventually topping out at #16 on the pop chart by the following year.

Madonna enlisted manager Freddie DeMann, who had guided Michael Jackson from the Jacksons' late-'70s slump through Thriller. DeMann soon had Madonna making history with a couple of titillating videos. In March 1984 "Borderline" (#10), with its video celebrating interracial love, was released, it was followed by "Lucky Star" (#4), whose video offered provocative glimpses of the star's navel. Public opinion was—and would remain—split. Most critics initially dismissed Madonna as a prefab disco prima donna offering style over substance, a few, however, saw something different and hailed her as a strong new female voice. BOY TOY belt and all, Madonna (#8, 1983) sold more than 5 million copies.

In late 1984 the Nile Rodgers-produced Like a Virgin (#1, 1984), with its #1 title song, shot to the Top 10 upon its release; it eventually sold more than 10 million copies. Doubtless inspired by her indisputable videogenic presence, DeMann had negotiated movie deals for Madonna (before her stardom, she had already acted in the low-budget indie film A Certain Sacrifice), landing her a small part as a nightclub singer in Vision Quest and the title role in Desperately Seeking Susan. Throughout 1985 Madonna was ubiquitous, appearing in both movies, with hit songs on three albums. By March, "Crazy for You" (#1), from the Vision Quest soundtrack, and "Maternal Girl" (#2), from Like a Virgin, were in the Top 5 simultaneously. Her other hits were Virgin's "Angel" (#5) and "Dress You Up" (#5), and the club smash "Into the Groove," from the Susan soundtrack. Her Virgin Tour was the hot ticket during the first half of the year.

Also in 1985 Madonna married actor Sean Penn, with whom she appeared in the critical and commercial flop Shanghai Surprise (a film produced by ex-Beatle George Harrison). Then she hit the pop world with a musical left hook: "Papa Don't Preach" (#1, 1986). The initial single from the 7-million seller True Blue (#1, 1986) drew criticism for its message that young unwed women should keep their babies. As the lyrical content of Madonna's songs deepened, critical acceptance of her began to grow. Her subsequent 1986 hits were "True Blue" (#3) and "Open Your Heart" (#1), followed in 1987 by "La Isla Bonita" (#4). Another ill-advised acting venture, 1987's Who's That Girl, was tied into a #1, platinum album of the same name, which included the hit title song (#1) and "Causing a Commotion" (#2). In 1988 she appeared in David Mamet's Broadway production Speed the Plow. The next year she and Penn divorced.

She returned to music in 1989 with Like a Prayer (#1), and the title song's video—complete with burning crosses and an eroticized black Jesus—launched Madonna's biggest and costliest controversies thus far. Released in March, it was censored by the Vatican, and the public response prompted Pepsi-Cola to cancel the singer's lucrative endorsement deal. Despite that, "Like a Prayer" debuted at #1. The international controversy only raised the singer's profile. Like a Prayer spawned four other Top 20 hits: "Express Yourself" (#2), "Cherish" (#2), "Oh Father" (#20), and "Keep It Together" (#8).

Madonna hit her megastar stride in 1990, when she appeared as Breathless Mahoney with then-boyfriend Warren Beatty in Dick Tracy; its soundtrack, I'm Breathless (#2, 1990), bore hits in "Hanky Panky" (#10) and the nonmovie double-platinum single "Vogue" (#1), which honored and revived the popular gay dance craze. In 1991 she scored hits with "Rescue Me" (#9) and "Justify My Love" (#1); the video for the latter fanned the flames of controversy yet again with its explicit depiction of various forms of sexual expression. She then oversaw the film Truth or Dare, a documentary of her Blond Ambition Tour dressed up to look like D.A. Pennebaker's Dylan movie, Don't Look Back. Madonna also became one of the first pop stars to speak out about AIDS and help raise money for research.

The singer affirmed her business acumen in 1992 when she signed a seven-year, $60-million deal with Time Warner, guaranteeing release of all albums, films, and books under her Maverick production corporation. Her first Maverick project was a highly controversial 128-page coffee-table photo book, Sex, which had Madonna posing nude and wearing S&M gear. Sex was followed by the mostly panned erotic film thriller Body of Evidence and the album Erotica, which peaked at #2 and produced Top 5 hits in 1992: the title track (#3, 1992) and "Deeper and Deeper" (#7). "Bad Girl" (#36) and "Rain" (#14) were both Top 40 hits in 1993. By then, Maverick was releasing work by other artists, including hip-hop chanteuse Meshell Ndegeocello, and Madonna embarked on her worldwide Girlie Show Tour, which drew a mixed critical reaction. An appearance on The Late Show With David Letterman returned Madonna to the headlines in spring 1994, when, using an abundance of profanities, she engaged in a verbal sparring match with the comedian. She also returned to the pop chart that year with the #2 single "I'll Remember," from the 1994 film With Honors. Her late-1994 album, Bedtime Stories (#3), presented a fairly traditional R&B sound and yielded the hit singles "Secret" (#4, 1994) and "Take a Bow" (#1, 1995). The title track (#42) was cowritten by Björk. Madonna then released the compilation Something to Remember (#6, 1995), which gathered the singer's ballads with three new songs. She soon won the lead role in a film version of Andrew Lloyd Webber's Evita, a musical based on the life of Argentina's Evita Perón. Evita earned Madonna favorable reviews and spawned the hit singles "Don't Cry for Me Argentina" (#8) and "You Must Love Me" (#18).

Despite her chameleon inclinations, Madonna stayed consistently within the dance world during the '90s. Her only foray into rock came in a duet with brother-in-law Joe Henry on 1996's Sweet Relief II: Gravity of a Situation benefit album. She gave birth to daughter Lourdes in October 1996; the father was personal trainer Carlos Leon.

Madonna assumed an active role at the increasingly successful Maverick, personally approving every act signed, including the chart-topping Alanis Morissette [see entry]. In 1998 Madonna released the soul-searching Ray of Light (#2, 1998), an album produced by William Orbit that explored the new sounds of drum and bass, trip-hop, and other forms of electronic dance music. It spawned the hit singles "Frozen" (#2), "Ray of Light" (#5), and "The Power of Good-Bye" (#11). Madonna then recorded a dance version of Don McLean's "American Pie" (#29, 2000) for the soundtrack of her film The Next Best Thing. Her collaboration with Orbit continued on 2000's Music (#1, 2000), which also featured production by French dance artist Mirwais Ahmadzai. Singles from Music included "Music" (#1, 2000) and "Don't Tell Me" (#4, 2000). She gave birth to a son, Rocco, in 2000, and in 2001 she married Rocco's father, British director Guy Ritchie (Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels; Snatch).

Magazine

Formed 1977, Manchester, Eng.

Howard Devoto, voc.; John McGeoch (b. May 28, 1955, Strathclyde, Scot.), gtr., sax; Dave Formula, kybds.; Barry Adamson (b. June 1, 1958, Manchester), bass; Martin Jackson, drums.

1978—Real Life (Virgin) (– Jackson; + John Doyle, drums)

1979—Secondhand Daylight (– McGeoch; + Robin Simon, gtr.)

1980—The Correct Use of Soap; Play (Live) 1981—Magic, Murder and the Weather (I.R.S.) (group disbands) 1982—After the Fact 1987—Rays and Hail, 1978–1981 (Virgin) 1991—Scree: Rarities 1978–1981 (Blue Plate) 2000—... Magazine (Maybe It's Right to Be Nervous Now) (Virgin, U.K.).

Howard Devoto solo: 1983—Jerky Versions of the Dream (I.R.S.). Luxuria (Devoto and Noko): 1988—Unanswerable Lust (Beggars Banquet) 1990—Beast Box.

Visage, formed 1978: Steve Strange (b. Steve Harrington, May 28, 1959, Wales), voc.; Midge Ure (b. James Ure, Oct. 10, 1953, Glasgow, Scot.), gtr.; Billy Currie (b. Apr. 1, 1952), violin; Formula; McGeoch; Adamson; Rusty Egan (b. Sep. 19, 1957), drums.

1980—Visage (Polydor) 1982—The Anvil 1983—Fade to Grey—The Singles Collection 1984—Beat Boy.

Barry Adamson solo: 1989—Moss Side Story (Mute) 1991—Delusion soundtrack 1992—Soul Murder 1993—The Negro Inside Me EP 1996—Oedipus Schmoedipus 1998—As Above, So Below 1999—The Murky World of Barry Adamson.

Howard Devoto formed Magazine after leaving the seminal Manchester punk band, the Buzzcocks [see entry]. The band first came to prominence with a critically acclaimed British hit single, "Shot by Both Sides," which shared its guitar line with a Buzzcocks tune "Lipstick" (both cowritten by Devoto and Buzzcock Pete Shelley). From there, though, the band's sound became more chilly and ponderous, rounding off its punky edges with Dave Formula's adept art-rockish keyboard hooks and fills. The second album was much smoother than the first, and Soap was an extremely polished bid for a wider commercial market, something the band might have actually earned had it not broken up after recording only one more LP. Devoto's solo Jerky Versions of the Dream offered up a more idiosyncratic musical outlook; his later project, Luxuria, merged on pretension.

Formula, McGeoch, and Adamson participated in Visage, the definitive new-romantic band formed by vocalist Steve Strange. Although Visage had four U.K. Top 20 hits ("Fade to Grey," "Mind of a Toy," "Damned Don't Cry," and "Night Train"), most of the members had commitments elsewhere. McGeoch went on to play with Siouxsie and the Banshees. Midge Ure and Billy Currie were in Ultravox [see entry]. Adamson joined Nick Cave's Bad Seeds [see entry], but left in 1987 for a solo career that started off with three "faux soundtracks"—modern takes on John Barry and Bernard Herrmann—for movies that exist only in his imagination. Starting with 1998's As Above So Below, Adamson began singing more on his records, as well as using contemporary dance grooves. He also contributed music to the theatrical films Delusion (1990), Gas Food Lodging (1992) and Lost Highway (1997).

Taj Mahal

Born Henry Saint Clair Fredericks, May 17, 1942, New York, NY 1968—Taj Mahal (Columbia); The Natch'l Blues 1969—Giant

Step/De Ole Folks at Home 1971—The Real Thing; Happy Just to Be Like I Am (Mobile Fidelity) 1972—Recycling the Blues (and Other Related Stuff) 1973—Sounder (Columbia); Oooh So Good 'n' Blues 1974—Mo' Roots 1975—Music Keeps Me Together 1976—Satisfied 'n' Tickled Too; Anthology, vol. 1 1977—Music Fuh Ya' (Musica Para Tu) (Warner Bros.); Brothers 1978—Evolution (the Most Recent) 1979—Taj Mahal and International Rhythm Band Live (Crystal Clear) 1980—Taj Mahal and International Rhythm Band (Magnet); Going Home (Columbia) 1981—The Best of Taj Mahal; Live (Magnet) 1987—Taj (Gramavision); Live and Direct (Laserlight) 1988—Shake Sugaree (Music for Little People) 1991—Mule Bone (Gramavision); Like Never Before (Private); Don't Call Us (Atlantic) 1992—Taj's Blues (Columbia/Legacy) 1993—World Music (Columbia); Dancing the Blues (Private) 1994—Taj Mahal 1980 (Just a Memory) 1995—Mumatz Mahal (Waterlily Acoustic) 1996—Live at Ronnie Scott's (DRG); Phantom Blues (Private) 1997—Señor Blues (Private); Shakin' a Tailfeather (Rhino) 1998—Sacred Island (Private); In Progress and Motion (1965–1998) (Columbia/Legacy) 1999—Kulanjan (Hannibal); Blue Light Boogie (Private) 2000—Shoutin' in Key (Hannibal); Big Blues: Live at Ronnie Scott's (Castle); Best of Taj Mahal: The Private Years (Private).

Taj Mahal began developing his archival interest in the roots of black American and Caribbean music while studying at the University of Massachusetts in the early '60s. His family had moved to Springfield, Massachusetts, from Brooklyn when he was young; although his parents were musical (his father a noted jazz arranger and pianist), young Fredericks first sought a college degree in animal husbandry. At the same time, he became a member of the Pioneer Valley Folklore Society and studied the ethnomusicology of rural black styles.

After receiving his B.A., he played blues in Boston folk clubs before moving to Santa Monica, California, and, in 1965, forming a blues-rock band with Ry Cooder and future Spirit drummer Ed Cassidy called the Rising Sons. They signed with Columbia but broke up before recording. Columbia offered the singer—whose moniker, "Taj Mahal," had appeared to him in a dream—a solo deal and his debut, introducing guitarist Jesse Ed Davis, was released in early 1967. His early albums, including Giant Step/De Ole Folks at Home and The Real Thing, were blues records laced with ragtime. On later albums he explored calypso and reggae. Live, he's worked solo, accompanying himself with piano, guitar, bass, and harmonica, and he's also appeared with bigger bands: one featured four tubas, another included steel drums. The Pointer Sisters backed him up on some recordings in their early days.

Mahal penned the music for the 1972 film Sounder (in which he had a small acting role); he has since written scores for Sounder II and Brothers, for television shows, and for 1991's Broadway production of Mule Bone, by Langston Hughes and Zora Neale Hurston. In 1974 he played bass with the short-lived Great American Music Band, with David Gnsman and violinist Richard Greene. He has continued to record extensively. Among the highlights of his later work are the Grammy-winning Señor Blues, Sacred Island, which incorporates Hawaiian influences, and Kulanjan, which explores his West African heritage. Shoutin' in Key (2000) won the Best Contemporary Blues Grammy.

Mahavishnu Orchestra/John McLaughlin

Formed 1971, New York, NY

Original lineup: John McLaughlin (b. Jan. 4, 1942, Yorkshire, Eng.), gr.; Rick Laird (b. Feb. 5, 1941, Dublin, Ire.), bass; Jerry Goodman, violin; Billy Cobham (b. May 16, 1944, Panama), drums; Jan Hammer (b. Apr. 17, 1948, Prague, Czech.), kybds. 1971—The Inner Mounting Flame (Columbia) 1972—Birds of Fire 1973—Between Nothingness and Eternity 1974—(- Laird; - Goodman; - Cobham; - Hammer; + Jean-Luc Ponty [b. Sep. 29, 1942, Avranches, Fr.], violin; Gayle Moran, kybds., voc.; Ralphe Armstrong, bass; Narada Michael Walden [b. Apr. 23, 1952, Kalamazoo, MI], drums) Apocalypse 1975—Visions of the Emerald Beyond (- Moran; - Ponty; + Stu Goldberg, kybds.) 1976—Inner Worlds; In Retrospect (Polydor) 1980—Best of the Mahavishnu Orchestra 1984—(- Armstrong; - Walden; + Bill Evans, sax; Jonas Hellborg [b. ca. 1958, Swe.], bass; + Cobham, drums; Danny Gottlieb [b. Apr. 18, 1953, New York], perc.; Mitch Forman, kybds.) Mahavishnu (Warner Bros.) 1987—(- Forman; - Cobham; + Jim Beard, kybds.) Adventures in Radioland (Verve) 1999—The Lost Trident Sessions (Columbia).

John McLaughlin solo: 1969—Extrapolation (Polydor) 1970—Devotion (Douglas) 1971—My Goal's Beyond 1972—Love, Devotion and Surrender (with Carlos Santana) (Columbia) 1978—Johnny McLaughlin, Electric Guitarist 1979—Electric Dreams (with One Truth Band) 1980—The Best of John McLaughlin 1981—Friday Night in San Francisco (with Al DiMeola and Paco De Lucia); Belo Horizonte (Warner Bros.) 1983—Passion, Grace and Fire (with DiMeola, De Lucia) (Columbia); Music Spoken Here (Warner) 1990—Mediterranean Concerto (ECM); Live at the Royal Festival Hall (Uni/Verve) 1991—The Best of McLaughlin (Columbia) 1992—Que Alegria (Verve) 1993—Time Remembered: Plays Bill Evans; Free Spirits Featuring John McLaughlin: Tokyo Live 1995—After the Rain (with Free Spirits); The Promise 1996—This Is Jazz, vol. 17 (Sony) 1997—The Heart of Things (Verve) 2000—Live in Paris (with the Heart of Things). Shakti: 1976—Shakti With John McLaughlin (Columbia) 1977—A Handful of Beauty; Natural Elements; The Best of Shakti (Moment) 1999—Remember Shakti (Verve).

The original Mahavishnu Orchestra was the apotheosis of the career of guitar virtuoso John McLaughlin. Prior to its formation in 1971, McLaughlin made his name in England with numerous local blues bands, notably the groups of Graham Bond and Brian Auger. He moved to America in the late '60s and became a guitarist in demand, recording six albums between 1969 and 1971, split between the early jazz-rock fusions of Miles Davis and Tony Williams' Lifetime.

In the meantime, having recorded Extrapolation with jazz musicians in England, McLaughlin cut his second solo LP, Devotion, with Jimi Hendrix's Band of Gypsies rhythm section: drummer Buddy Miles and bassist Billy Cox and Lifetime organist Larry Young. McLaughlin recruited rock studio drummer Billy Cobham (who had played with the progressive, horn-laden band Dreams and with Davis) and violinist Jerry Goodman (a veteran of the classical-influenced Flock) for his third solo album, 1971's My Goal's Beyond, which also featured an Indian tabla player, Badal Roy. Next he founded the Mahavishnu Orchestra by adding European jazz-oriented players Rick Laird (onetime bassist with Buddy Rich) and keyboardist Jan Hammer (who had played with Elvin Jones and Sarah Vaughan). Mahavishnu was a name given McLaughlin by his guru, Sri Chinmoy, and for a time the guitarist billed himself as Mahavishnu John McLaughlin.

To Miles Davis' fusion of jazz and rock, McLaughlin added his own synthesis of East and West, mixing the stop-and-start melodies and rhythms of Indian ragas with the force of rock and the improvisational options of jazz. The Mahavishnu Orchestra was an immediate sensation, opening a whole new era of jazz-rock fusion, although even those players who could match McLaughlin's speed couldn't approach his lyricism. The Mahavishnu Orchestra's second album, Birds of Fire (#15, 1973), hit the Top 20. But conflicts within the group—especially over composer credit, most of which was claimed by McLaughlin—broke up the first Mahavishnu Orchestra after its third album, a live recording.

McLaughlin recorded Love, Devotion and Surrender (#14, 1973) with fellow Sri Chinmoy disciple Carlos Santana, and retained the Mahavishnu Orchestra name for a variety of groups, including one with drummer Narada Michael Walden (later a successful R&B producer and songwriter) and keyboardist Gayle Moran (later of Return to Forever). Apocalypse (#43, 1974) involved the London Symphony Orchestra and former Beatles producer George Martin. None of the later Mahavishnu Orchestras got the same commercial and critical response as the first one.

In 1976 McLaughlin, no longer affiliated with Sri Chinmoy, gave up both the name Mahavishnu and the group name Mahavishnu Orchestra. He formed an acoustic group, Shakti, with whom he recorded three albums even closer in style to Indian ragas than the Orchestra had been. After a collaboration with ex-Return to Forever guitarist Al DiMeola, he formed a new electric group, the One Truth Band, with whom he recorded and toured. McLaughlin then moved from New York to Paris and has continued to record with European musicians.

The other original Orchestra members have continued to record and perform. Laird played around New York with numerous jazz and rock groups before devoting himself to photography; after a 1974 collaboration with Hammer, Like Children, Goodman apparently dropped out of the music business, resurfacing in the late '80s as a New Age artist. Hammer has recorded frequently on his own, with Jeff Beck, and in 1982 with Journey's Neal Schon; he has his own Red Gate Studio. Hammer's "Miami Vice Theme" was a major hit single (#1, 1985). And Cobham has recorded and performed with a new jazz-rock band nearly every year, also touring with Grateful Dead guitarist Bob Weir's Bobby and the Midnites.

From 1984 to 1986 McLaughlin re-formed the Mahavishnu Orchestra with an entirely different lineup, including drummer Danny Gottlieb, keyboardist Mitch Forman, and saxophonist Bill Evans, who had previously worked with Miles Davis.

Although never entirely forsaking electric music, McLaughlin tended thereafter to concentrate on the acoustic guitar. During the late '80s he occasionally toured as a duo with virtuoso bassist Jonas Hellborg, and then formed a trio with percussionist Trilok Gurtu and bassist Kai Eckhardt. McLaughlin also performed orchestral works (Mediterranean Concerto) and appeared on the soundtrack of the 1986 jazz film Round Midnight.

McLaughlin performed with Miles Davis as part of a 1991 Davis career retrospective that took place just months prior to the trumpeter's death (McLaughlin had earlier guested on Davis' You're Under Arrest and Aura). In 1993 McLaughlin collaborated with a European classical guitar quintet to produce a tribute to the late jazz pianist and composer Bill Evans, an important influence for McLaughlin. The next year McLaughlin—back on electric guitar—teamed up with organist Joey DeFrancesco and drummer Dennis Chambers to form the Free Spirits. Among his other projects in the '90s were a collaboration with Free Spirits and legendary jazz drummer Elvin Jones, the forming of a new ensemble, the Heart of Things, and a revival of Shakti. In 2000, rediscovered music by the original Mahavishnu Orchestra was released.

Mahogany Rush/Frank Marino and Mahogany Rush

Formed 1971, Montreal, Can.

Original lineup: Frank Marino (b. Francesco Antonio Marino, Nov. 20, 1954, Montreal), gr., voc.; Paul Harwood (b. Feb. 30, 1953, Montreal), bass; Jimmy Ayoub (b. Dec. 7, 1941, Honolulu, HI), drums.

1971—Maxoom (Kot'ai) 1973—Child of the Novelty (20th Century-Fox) 1975—Strange Universe 1976—Mahogany Rush IV (Columbia) 1977—World Anthem 1978—Mahogany Rush Live 1979—Tales of the Unexpected 1980—(+ Vince Marino, gr.) What's Next 1982—(- Ayoub; + Timm Biery, drums) 1986—(- Harwood; + Peter Dowse, bass) 1987—Full Circle (Maze) 1989—Frank Marino and Mahogany Rush: Double Live 1990—From the Hip (Vision) (- V. Marino) 1991—(- Biery; + Dave Goode, drums) 1996—Dragonfly: The Best of Frank Marino and Mahogany Rush (Razor & Tie) 2000—(+ Mick Layne, gr., kybds.) Eye of the Storm (Justin Time).

The long-running supernatural explanation of how guitarist Frank Marino came by his flashy, effects-laden playing style entered into rock legend because it was patently absurd. Today it ranks as an untruth that refuses to die, despite Marino's many vehement denials. For the record, then, here's the gist of the old story. Allegedly, a teenage Marino was in a Montreal hospital recovering from illness, drug overdose, or an auto accident when he lapsed into a deep coma. Upon awakening several days later, Manno claimed he'd been visited by the spirit of Jimi Hendrix. Although a nonmusician (some sources say he could play drums and guitar), Manno picked up the guitar and began playing a lot like Jerry Garcia and Hendrix. In recent years, Marino has disavowed the story altogether.

Whatever happened, Manno, then just 17, found a bassist and drummer, and Mahogany Rush was born. The recorded evidence of Maxoom (rereleased in the mid-'70s by 20th Century-Fox) shows a competent heavy-metal guitarist with an intense Hendrix fetish. Manno slowed the pace a bit for Novelty, which concentrated more on actual songs, and has since diversified his guitar style a bit in a jazz-rock fusion direction. By the late '70s, the band was billed as Frank Marino and Mahogany Rush. For years, Manno endured critical barbs and moderate records sales (though 1983's "Strange Dreams" got some AOR airplay) at best. Through the '80s, however, he continued to tour and record intermittently for small labels, all the while building a cult among the burgeoning metal contingent. In 2000 he resurfaced and returned to performing after an eight-year hiatus. Die-hard fans hailed Eye of the Storm as a return to form. Founding Mahogany Rush bassist Paul Harwood went on to play the blues in Big Bat and the Amazing Bluestones.

The Main Ingredient

Formed 1964, New York, NY

Enrique Antonio "Tony" Silvester (b. Oct. 7, 1941, Colon, Panama), voc.; Luther Simmons Jr. (b. Sep. 9, 1942, New York), voc.; Don McPherson (b. July 9, 1941, Indianapolis, IN; d. July 4, 1971), voc.

mid-'60s—(+ Cuba Gooding [b. Apr. 27, 1944, New York], voc.) ca. 1965—(- Gooding) 1970—The Main Ingredient L.T.D.

(RCA) 1971—(- McPherson; + Gooding) Tasteful Soul; Black Seeds 1972—Bitter Sweet (RCA) 1973—Afrodisiac; Greatest Hits (+ Carl Tompkins [b. Petersburg, VA], voc.; - Silvester) 1974—Euphrates River 1975—Rolling Down a Mountainside 1976—Spinning Around; Shame on the World (group disbands) 1977—Music Maximus (group re-forms: Silvester; Simmons; Gooding) 1980—Ready for Love 1981—Only Have Eyes for You 1986—(- Simmons; + Jerome Jackson, voc.) 1996—A Quiet Storm (RCA) 2000—(lineup: Gooding; + George Staley Sr., voc.; + Larry Moore, voc.).

Cuba Gooding solo: 1978—The First Cuba Gooding Album (Motown) 1979—Love Dancer.

In 1971 the Main Ingredient was a smooth black vocal trio on the rise. After years of struggle, it had placed three singles in a row on the R&B chart—"You've Been My Inspiration" (#25, 1970), "I'm So Proud" (#13, 1970), and "Spinning Around" (#7, 1971)—when lead singer Don McPherson died of leukemia. With his replacement, Cuba Gooding (who had been in the group in the '60s but quit to attend college), the group went on to its greatest success.

McPherson, Luther Simmons Jr., Gooding, and Tony Silvester formed the Poets in the early '60s and were signed to Mike Stoller and Jerry Leiber's Red Bird label in 1965. Their one chart record for that label was "Merry Christmas Baby." In 1967 they left Red Bird for RCA, renaming themselves the Insiders. But their luck did not improve until they changed their name again "You've Been My Inspiration" followed soon after.

After McPherson's death, the Main Ingredient moved toward pop. "Black Seed Keep on Growing" was another soul hit, reaching #15 in 1971, after which the trio finally had its first pop hit, "Everybody Plays the Fool" (#3 pop, #2 R&B, 1972). (In 1993 the song was covered by Aaron Neville.) More pop hits followed in 1974—"Just Don't Want to Be Lonely" (#10 pop, #8 R&B) and "Happiness Is Just Around the Bend" (#35 pop, #7 R&B)—as well as four more Top 40 R&B records before the Main Ingredient broke up in 1976. "You've Got to Take It" (#18) and "You Can Call Me Rover" (#34) in 1973, and "Rolling Down a Mountainside" (#7) and "Shame on the World" (#20) in 1975. Gooding's brief solo career proved disappointing. Silvester, however, became a successful producer of artists including Sister Sledge, Ben E. King, and Bette Midler. Simmons became a stockbroker. In 1980 a reunion as the Main Ingredient featuring Cuba Gooding yielded the R&B chart single "Think Positive" (#69). In 1986 "Do Me Right" also peaked at #69 R&B. The trio continues to perform, with Gooding as the sole holdover from the old days. His son, Cuba Gooding Jr., became a successful actor whose credits include Boyz n the Hood, Pearl Harbor, and an Oscar-winning role in Jerry Maguire.

Malo

Formed 1971, San Francisco, CA

Original lineup: Jorge Santana (b. June 13, 1954, Jalisco, Mex.), gtr.; Arcelio Garcia Jr. (b. May 7, 1946, Manati, P.R.), voc., perc.; Abel Zarate (b. Dec. 2, 1952, Manila, Philippines), gtr., voc.; Roy Murray, trumpet, trombone, flute, sax; Pablo Tellez (b. July 2, 1951, Granada, Nicaragua), bass; Rich Spremich (b. July 2, 1951, San Francisco), drums; Richard Kermod (b. Oct. 5, 1946, Lovell, WY), kybds.; Luis Gasca (b. Mar. 23, 1940, Houston, TX), trumpet, fluegelhorn. 1972—Malo (Warner Bros.); Dos 1973—Evolution 1974—Ascension (group disbands) 1981—(group re-forms: Garcia; + numerous others) 1991—The Best of Malo (GNP Crescendo) 1995—Señorita.

Like Carlos Santana, brother Jorge formed his own Latin-rock band, Malo (Spanish for "bad"). Reinforcing the Santana connection, two of Carlos' percussionists, Coke Escovedo and Victor Pontoja, guested on Malo's debut LP, which spent a number of weeks in the Top 15 and yielded the band's one hit, "Suavecito" (#18, 1972).

Many of Malo's members were veterans of the San Francisco scene, either with rock bands or with Latin bands from the Mission District. Richard Kermod and Luis Gasca had played together in Janis Joplin's Kozmic Blues Band; Gasca's jazz credentials include stints with Count Basie, Woody Herman, and Mongo Santamania. Dos and Evolution both had minor success on the album chart, Ascension fared worse, and the band broke up. Gasca has recorded pop-jazz albums for Fantasy Records. Singer Arcelio Garcia fronted several new versions of Malo in the '80s and '90s.

The Mamas and the Papas

Formed 1965, New York, NY

John Phillips (b. Aug. 30, 1935, Parris Island, SC; d. Mar. 18, 2001, Los Angeles, CA), voc., gtr.; Dennis Doherty (b. Nov. 29, 1941, Halifax, Nova Scotia, Can.), voc.; Michelle Phillips (b. Holly Michelle Gilliam, Apr. 6, 1944, Long Beach, CA), voc.; Cass Elliot (b. Sep. 19, 1943, Baltimore, MD; d. July 29, 1974, London, Eng.), voc.

1966—If You Can Believe Your Eyes and Ears (Dunhill); The Mamas and the Papas 1967—Deliver 1968—Farewell to the First Golden Era; The Papas and the Mamas (group disbands) 1969—16 of Their Greatest Hits 1971—(group re-forms) People Like Us (group disbands) 1973—Golden Hits 1981—(group re-forms: J. Phillips; Doherty; + Mackenzie Phillips, voc.; + Elaine "Spanky" McFarlane [b. June 19, 1942, Peoria, IL], voc.); Doherty carries on with various lineups) 1998—Greatest Hits (MCA).

Although the Mamas and the Papas made their commercial impact with airy California folk pop and were on the scene as L.A. went psychedelic, they were a product of the Greenwich Village folk community. John Phillips had been active in New York since 1957; he had previously attended George Washington University and, for three months, the U.S. Naval Academy. In 1962 he met and married Holly Michelle Gilliam, who had come to New York to be a model; she began singing with his group, the Journeymen.

Denny Doherty had been a member of the Halifax Three, which, after two albums for Epic, included future Lovin' Spoonful member Zal Yanovsky. Doherty and Yanovsky joined Cass Elliot and her first husband, Jim Hendricks, to form Cass Elliot and the Big Three. The group changed its name to the Mugwumps and went electric, with Art Stokes on drums and John Sebastian on harmonica. The Mugwumps recorded one album—not released until 1967—and broke up. Sebastian and Yanovsky formed the Lovin' Spoonful; Elliot fronted a jazz trio; and Doherty joined John and Michelle Phillips as the New Journeymen.

To rehearse, the New Journeymen went to St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands; Elliot joined them and worked on the island as a waitress, then moved to California with her husband. The New Journeymen relocated to California, where they stayed with Elliot and Hendricks, and Elliot officially joined the group. They recorded backing vocals for a Barry McGuire record, then got their own contract as the Mamas and the Papas.

In 1966 and 1967 they had six Top 5 hits—"California

The Mamas and the Papas: John Phillips, Cass Elliott, Denny Doherty, Michelle Phillips

Dreamin' " (#4), "Monday, Monday" (#1), "I Saw Her Again" (#5), "Words of Love" (#5), "Dedicated to the One I Love" (#2), and the autobiographical "Creeque Alley" (#5, 1967)—and four gold albums. John Phillips also wrote a signature song of the flower-power era, "San Francisco (Be Sure to Wear Flowers in Your Hair)" (#4, 1967), which was recorded by Scott McKenzie, an ex-Journeyman. The quartet also appeared at the 1967 Monterey Pop Festival, which John Phillips helped finance.

By 1968, though, the group was falling apart and decided to disband. John and Michelle Phillips had marriage problems; John made a solo LP, The Wolf King of L.A., and then coproduced (with Lou Adler) Robert Altman's 1970 film Brewster McCLOUD. Michelle Phillips appeared in The Last Movie with Dennis Hopper, to whom she was later married for eight days. John and Michelle Phillips divorced in 1970. But the band had other, legal problems. Dunhill and group members sued each other for breach of contract (excluding Elliot, who continued to record for the label on her own) and for fraudulent withholding of royalties, respectively. In 1971 the group made what it later admitted was a poor reunion album, People Like Us. Cass Elliott continued her solo career until her death from a heart attack in 1974.

Doherty recorded two solo albums but with little success. Michelle Phillips' acting career began to pick up with films like Dillinger and Ken Russell's 1976 movie bio of Rudolph Valentino, in which she costarred with Rudolf Nureyev. In 1977 she recorded a solo LP for A&M, Victim of Romance. She found greater fame on TV, as a cast member of the popular evening soap Knots Landing.

John Phillips had become idle by the mid-'70s, reportedly living off his $100,000-a-year royalties from songs like "California Dreamin'." By 1975 he had stopped work altogether. He was arrested by federal narcotics agents on July 31, 1980. Phillips' eight-year, $15,000-fine sentence was reduced to 30 days. Phillips cleaned up, as did his daughter, actress Mackenzie Phillips (One Day at a Time). The two appeared on numerous television programs and lectured around the country. The pair also decided to revive the Mamas and the Papas. John Phillips contacted Doherty (who by then was hosting a popular television show in Nova Scotia) and filled out the new foursome with Elaine "Spanky" McFarlane, from Spanky and Our Gang (see entry), John Phillips, who cowrote the Beach Boys' 1988 #1 smash "Kokomo," is also the father of singer Chynna Phillips, formerly of Wilson Phillips. By the mid-'90s Doherty was the sole remnant of the original group.

In 2000, two years after the Mamas and the Papas were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, various newspapers reported that Fox had secured the rights to create a feature film about the '60s quartet. In 2001 Phillips completed recording a solo album, Phillips 66, two days later he entered the hospital, where he died of heart failure on March 18.

Melissa Manchester

Born Feb. 15, 1951, Bronx, NY

1973—Home to Myself (Bell); Bright Eyes 1975—Melissa (Arista) 1976—Help Is on the Way; Better Days and Happy Endings 1977—Singin'... 1978—Don't Cry Out Loud 1979—Melissa Manchester 1980—For the Working Girl 1982—Hey Ricky 1983—Greatest Hits; Emergency 1985—Mathematics (MCA) 1989—Tribute (Mika) 1995—If My Heart Had Wings (Atlantic); Melissa Manchester Performs Pocahontas (Dove Audio) 1997—The Essence of Melissa Manchester (Arista) 1998—Joy (Angel).

Melissa Manchester is a singer and sometime songwriter in the Peter Allen/Carole Bayer Sager/Barry Manilow MOR axis. A member of a musical family (her father was a bassoonist with the Metropolitan Opera), she began singing jingles at age 15. She attended the High School of Performing Arts in the late '60s while working as a staff writer at Chappell Music. Upon graduation she entered New York University and enrolled in a songwriting seminar taught by Paul Simon. She then played clubs in Manhattan, where she was discovered by Bette Midler and her accompanist, Barry Manilow. They hired her as a backup singer (Harlette) in 1971.

Six months later Manchester got a record contract of her own. Her 1973 debut, Home to Myself, featured many songs cowritten by Carole Bayer Sager. In 1975 her third LP, Melissa, yielded her first hit, "Midnight Blue." She didn't have a really big followup until her version of Peter Allen/Carole Bayer Sager's song "Don't Cry Out Loud," which went to #10 in 1979. She cowrote Kenny Loggins' smash duet with Stevie Nicks, "Whenever I Call You 'Friend'."

In 1980 Manchester became the first performer to have recorded two of the movie themes nominated for an Academy Award, "Ice Castles" and "The Promise." In 1982 she had her biggest hit with "You Should Hear How She Talks About You" (#5) from Hey Ricky, which netted her the Grammy for Best Female Vocal Performance. Through the '80s Manchester recorded sporadically. Her Tribute is a collection of standards, such as "Over the Rainbow" and "La Vie en Rose." She has branched into acting, appearing in Bette Midler's film For the Boys and portraying the title character's mother in the television series Blossom. Her recent recordings consist primarily of holiday music. In the late '90s she joined Peabo Bryson and Roberta Flack on the Colors of Christmas album and subsequent tour. She also starred in the touring revue Andrew Lloyd Webber—Music of the Night.

Mandrill

Formed 1968, New York, NY

Original lineup: Lou Wilson (b. Panama), trumpet, congas, voc.; Ric Wilson (b. Panama), sax, voc.; Carlos Wilson (b. Panama), trombone, flute, gtr., perc., voc.; Omar Mesa (b. Havana, Cuba), gtr., voc.; Bundie Cenac (b. St. Lucia), bass, voc.; Claude Cave, kybds., vibraphone, voc.; Charlie Padro, drums, voc.
 1971—Mandrill (Polydor) (– Cenac; + Fudgie Kae, bass)
 1972—Mandrill Is (– Padro; + Neftali Santiago, drums)
 1973—Composite Truth; Just Outside of Town (– Mesa; + Doug Rodrigues, gtr.) 1974—Mandrilland 1975—Best of Mandrill (– Kae; + Brian Allsop, bass, voc.; – Santiago; + Andre Locke [b. Brooklyn, NY], drums, voc.; – Rodrigues; + Tommy Trujillo, gtr., voc.) Solid (United Artists) (+ Wilfredo Wilson [b. Panama], voc., perc., bass) Beats From the East 1977— (– Locke; + Santiago; – Allsop; – Trujillo; + Juaquin Jessup, gtr., perc., voc.) We Are One (Arista) 1978— (– Santiago; Jessup; + David Conley [b. Dec. 27, 1953, Newark, NJ], bass) New Worlds 1980—Getting in the Mood 1988—The Best of Mandrill (Polydor).

Emerging from the tough Bedford-Stuyvesant area of Brooklyn, Mandrill played a mixed urban brew encompassing elements of Santana-tinged Latin rock, Chambers Brothers-style soul, and horn-driven rock. The band was founded by the Wilson brothers, all of whom spent their childhoods in Panama. After attending college for various amounts of time (Ric got a medical degree from Harvard), Ric, Lou, and Carlos began jamming together with other musicians, eventually settling on a seven-member lineup. Their debut LP became a big breakout on rock FM radio as well as black stations, aided by the eponymous title song, selling 150,000 copies in the New York area alone. The band's biggest hits were on the soul chart, peaking with 1973's "Fencewalk" at #19. Also that year, Mandrill played with Duke Ellington at the Newport Jazz Festival. Altogether, Mandrill recorded five albums for Polydor, but in January 1975 the group switched to United Artists, moved to L.A., and went through some major personnel changes, all the while retaining the three Wilsons and original member Cave.

For Beast From the East, the youngest and fourth Wilson brother, Wilfredo, joined the fold as singer/percussionist. The band did well on concert tours but still didn't break big, and in 1977 it switched to Arista after contributing to the soundtrack of Muhammad Ali's film biography, The Greatest. Mandrill's biggest hit was "Too Late" (#37 R&B, 1978). The group continues to perform in New York.

Chuck Mangione

Born Nov. 29, 1940, Rochester, NY

1960—The Jazz Brothers (Milestone) 1961—Hey Baby! (Original Jazz); Spring Fever 1962—Recuerdo (Jazzland) 1970—Friends and Love . . . A Chuck Mangione Concert (Mercury) 1971—Together 1972—The Chuck Mangione Quartet; Alive! 1973—Land of Make Believe 1975—Chase the Clouds Away (A&M) 1976—Bellavia; Main Squeeze 1977—Feels So Good 1978—An Evening of Magic: Chuck Mangione Live at the Hollywood Bowl; Children of Sanchez; The Best of Chuck Mangione (Mercury) 1979—Fun and Games (A&M) 1980—Tarantella 1982—Love Notes (Columbia); Classics of Modern Jazz, vol. 6 (A&M) 1983—Journey to a Rainbow (Columbia) 1984—Disguise 1986—Save Tonight for Me 1987—Live at the Village Gate (Feels So Good); The Best of Chuck Mangione 1988—Eyes of the Veiled Temptress (Columbia) 1991—Encore: Mangione Concerts (Mercury) 1992—Compact Jazz: Chuck Mangione (Verve) 1995—Live at the Village Gate, vol. 2 (Pro Arte) 1996—Greatest Hits (Feels So Good); Boys From Rochester 1999—The Feeling's Back (Chesky) 2000—Everything for Love.

By selling a million copies of his instrumental "Feels So Good" in 1978, flugelhornist Chuck Mangione established himself as a pop-jazz star. While never recapturing commercially that late-'70s peak, he can be seen as a precursor of such later purveyors of soothing sounds as Kenny G and John Tesh.

Mangione grew up in a musical family, and big-jazz names passing through Rochester were entertained and fed in the Mangione household. He took up piano at age eight, trumpet two years later. In 1960, with his brother Gap on piano, he formed the Jazz Brothers quintet. After they disbanded in 1965, he performed with Art Blakey and the Jazz Messengers and in trumpeter Maynard Ferguson's band.

Recording on his own, Mangione moved away from jazz's complexities to write and arrange instrumentals for a small group, often backed by strings or full orchestra. He recorded the Friends and Love double album with the Rochester Philharmonic. He won his first Grammy (Best Instrumental Composition, 1976) for "Bellavia."

Feels So Good went gold in February 1978; by April of that year it was platinum, and eventually sold more than 2 million copies. "Chase the Clouds Away" was played as background music by ABC-TV during telecasts of the 1976

Olympics. In 1980 Mangione was commissioned by ABC Sports to write music for the Winter Olympics (which made up Fun and Games), and his Olympic music won an Emmy that year for Music Composition/Direction. Mangione won another Grammy (Best Pop Instrumental Performance, 1978) for Children of Sanchez, a score for a film based on the Oscar Lewis book. In December 1980, Mangione held a massive benefit concert in his hometown for victims of a recent earthquake in Italy; Dizzy Gillespie, Chick Corea, and Steve Gadd were among those present.

Switching to CBS in 1982, Mangione began working with such outside producers as Eumir Deodato and Thom Bell in the mid-'80s. His albums, beginning to employ synthesizers but otherwise still featuring melodic pop jazz, continued to sell respectably, and he toured often, occasionally appearing in concert with symphony orchestras. In the late '80s he reunited with the Jazz Brothers for an American tour.

At the end of the decade, Mangione took an extended, three-year hiatus from music before setting out on the road again with most of the original musicians from the Feels So Good album. In the late '90s he began doing voice-over acting in the Fox television series King of the Hill, playing himself as a character.

The Manhattans

Formed 1961, Jersey City, NJ

George "Smitty" Smith (d. 1971), lead voc.; Winfred "Blue" Lovett (b. Nov. 16, 1943, NJ), bass voc.; Edward "Sonny" Bivins (b. Jan. 15, 1942, NJ), tenor voc.; Kenneth Kelley (b. Jan. 9, 1943, NJ), second tenor voc.; Richard Taylor (d. Dec. 7, 1987), baritone voc.

1966—Dedicated (Carnival) 1967—For You and Yours
1968—With These Hands (King/Deluxe) 1969—Million to One 1970—(+ Gerald Alston [b. Nov. 8, 1942], tenor voc.)
1971—(- Smith) 1972—There's No Me Without You (Columbia) 1974—That's How Much I Love You 1976—The Manhattans 1977—It Feels So Good (- Taylor) 1978—There's No Good in Goodbye 1979—Love Talk 1980—After Midnight 1981—Black Tie; Follow Your Heart (Solid Smoke) 1983—Forever by Your Side (Columbia) 1985—Too Hot to Stop It 1986—Back to Basics 1988—(- Alston; + Roger Harris) 1989—Sweet Talk (Vally Vue) (group disbands) 1993—(group re-forms: Alston; Lovett; + Troy May, voc.; + David Tyson, voc.) 1995—The Best of the Manhattans—Kiss and Say Goodnight (Columbia/Legacy).

Steadfast practitioners of a suave, soul-ballad harmony style rooted in doo-wop, anchored by the recitations of "Blue" Lovett, the Manhattans have never maintained mass popularity despite a long string of hits.

Winfred Lovett and Kenneth Kelley had sung in rival Jersey City doo-wop groups; Richard Taylor met Edward Bivins during an air force hitch in Germany in the late '50s. Returning to the New York area, Taylor and Bivins united with Lovett, Kelley, and Smith to form Ronnie and the Manhattans, who recorded several unsuccessful singles, one for Bobby Robinson's Enjoy Records. The Manhattans finally got their break when Barbara Brown, a singer with Joe Evans' Newark-based Carnival Records, retired from recording; she recommended the Manhattans to Evans, who caught them at Harlem's Apollo Theatre and signed them.

After several unsuccessful singles, the group hit big in 1965 with Lovett's tune "I Wanna Be (Your Everything)," which sold 500,000 copies and made the R&B Top 20 (Bivins and Taylor also wrote songs for the group.) In the next two years the Manhattans followed with a string of transitional doo-wop/soul hits like "Searchin' for My Baby," "Follow Your Heart," "Baby I Need You," and "Can I," all of which made the R&B Top 30. In 1968 the group signed with King subsidiary Deluxe, for which it had only minor successes like "If My Heart Could Speak" and "From Atlanta to Goodbye."

In 1971 the group was dealt a seemingly crushing blow when Smith died of spinal meningitis. However, a replacement, Gerald Alston, was discovered in North Carolina, and with a signing to Columbia in 1972, the Manhattans continued to release romantic soul hits. Among those that made the R&B Top 10 were "There's No Me Without You" (1973), "Don't Take Your Love From Me" (1974), "Hurt" (1975), the R&B and pop #1 "Kiss and Say Goodbye" (1976), "I Kinda Miss You" (1976), "It Feels So Good (to Be Loved So Bad)" (1977), "Am I Losing You" (the only one that did not enter the pop chart, 1978), and "Shining Star" (#5 pop, #4 R&B, 1980). By then the Manhattans had been together nearly 20 years. Taylor left in 1977 to pursue his religious interests; he converted to Islam. Alston enjoyed a solo career but returned to the group for its 1993 reunion to commemorate its 30th anniversary.

Bivins leads a latter-day lineup that still records and performs. Regina Belle, who has since gone on to a successful solo career, briefly sang with the group in the mid-'80s.

The Manhattan Transfer

Formed 1969, New York, NY

Tim Hauser (b. Dec. 12, 1941, Troy, NY), voc., gtr., banjo; Pat Rosalia, tambourine, voc.; Erin Dickens, gtr., tambourine, voc.; Gene Pistilli, gtr., voc.; Marty Nelson, gtr., clarinet, piano. Sometime after 1969—(- Rosalia; - Dickens; - Nelson; - Pistilli) 1972—(+ Alan Paul [b. Nov. 23, 1949, Newark, NJ], voc.; + Janis Siegel [b. July 23, 1952, Brooklyn, NY], voc.; + Laurel Massé [b. ca. 1954], voc.) 1975—Jukin' (Capitol, recorded before 1972 with original lineup); The Manhattan Transfer (Atlantic) 1976—Coming Out 1978—Pastiche; Live 1979—(- Massé; + Cheryl Bentyne [b. Jan. 17, 1954, Mount Vernon, WA], voc.) 1980—Extensions 1981—Mecca for Moderns; The Best of the Manhattan Transfer 1983—Bodies and Souls 1984—Bop Doo-Wopp 1985—Vocalese 1987—Live; Brasil 1991—The Off-Beat of Avenues (Columbia) 1992—The Christmas Album; Anthology (Rhino) 1994—The Manhattan Transfer Meets Tubby the Tuba (Summit) 1995—Tonin' (Atlantic) 1997—Swing 2000—The Spirit of St. Louis. Janis Siegel solo: 1982—Experiment in White (Atlantic)

1987—At Home 1989—Short Stories (with Fred Hersch)
 1995—Slow Hot Wind (with Fred Hersch) (Varèse Sarabande)
 1999—The Tender Trap (Monarch).

The Manhattan Transfer is a four-part vocal harmony group that began as a nostalgia act and has since recorded and performed in an array of styles including swing, doo-wop, jazz scat, Latin, and pop. Unlike many pop groups, however, Manhattan Transfer's eclectic approach has served it well: The group has won 10 Grammy Awards, is a perennial winner of annual jazz polls, and is a strong concert draw around the world.

Manhattan Transfer first formed in 1969 as a Jim Kweskin Jug Band-style good-time group and signed to Capitol. It took its name from a novel by John Dos Passos about New York in the '20s. The quartet soon broke up, though, and the only remaining member was Tim Hauser. (Also in that early incarnation was Gene Pistilli, who had written "Sunday Will Never Be the Same" with Terry Cashman for Spanky and Our Gang.)

The new Manhattan Transfer formed in 1972 and soon became popular on New York's cabaret circuit. Hauser had sung in doo-wop groups as a youth, around 1958 with the Criterions in high school and later with the Viscoutos, who had a hit with "Harlem Nocturne." Later he played in a folk band with Jim Croce. Alan Paul was a child actor who had appeared in road companies of Oliver and Grease, in movies (The Pawnbroker) and TV commercials. Janis Siegel had recorded with the Young Generation, a group produced by Leiber and Stoller and at one time groomed to be the next Shangri-Las, and in a folk group called Laurel Canyon. With fourth member Laurel Massé they released their Atlantic debut in 1975 (containing "Operator," a #22 hit) and immediately got a summer network-TV replacement series, which lasted three weeks in August. But even with the nostalgia trend of the time, the band didn't sell in this country, though it had a #1 hit in England and France with "Chanson d'Amour."

In 1979, after being injured in an automobile accident, Massé left and was replaced by Cheryl Bentyne, daughter of a swing musician. The band had begun to modernize its look—shifting from tuxedos to a new-wave/Deco combination—and broadened its audience with the release of Extensions, from which "Twilight Zone/Twilight Tones" became a modest hit (#30, 1980). That album also included the group's version of "Birdland," for which it was awarded its first Grammy. In mid-1981 the Manhattan Transfer had a Top 10 hit with a remake of the old Ad Libs song "Boy From New York City." That song won a Grammy for Best Pop Vocal Performance by a Duo or Group With Vocal, while "Until I Met You (Corner Pocket)" from the same album got the Grammy for Best Jazz Performance, Duo or Group. The following year, Manhattan Transfer's version of "Route 66" won another Grammy, and the year after that, "Why Not!" continued the streak. In late 1983 "Spice of Life," from Bodies and Souls, hit #40. Although conventional hit singles are rare for this group, their work is a staple of easy-listening and jazz-radio formats.

With Jon Hendricks, of the team Lambert, Hendricks, and Ross, the group essayed the jazz vocal style known as vocalese, where lyrics are added to what were originally instrumental jazz pieces. The resulting Vocalese garnered 12 Grammy nominations (only Michael Jackson's Thriller got more) and won two (the group got one and the album's arrangers got the other). The next album, Brasil, which featured songs by Gilberto Gil and Milton Nascimento, among others, was awarded the Grammy for Best Pop Performance by a Duo or Group With Vocal.

With The Off-Beat of Avenues, the quartet moved to Columbia Records and, for the first time, wrote or cowrote and produced most of the work. After releasing a Christmas album, the group returned to Atlantic Records with 1995's Tonin', an album focused on '50s and early '60s pop and loaded with guests such as Bette Midler, Phil Collins, and Chaka Khan. The group returned to its jazz inspiration for its subsequent releases, 1997's Swing and 2000's Spirit of St. Louis, dedicated to the music of Louis Armstrong.

Barry Manilow

Born Barry Alan Pinkus, June 17, 1946, Brooklyn, NY
 1972—Barry Manilow (Bell) 1973—Barry Manilow II 1975—Tryin' to Get the Feeling (Arista) 1977—This One's for You; Barry Manilow Live 1978—Even Now 1979—Barry Manilow's Greatest Hits; One Voice 1980—Barry 1981—If I Should Love Again 1982—Oh, Juliet! Here Comes the Night 1983—Greatest Hits, vol. 2 1984—2:00 A.M. Paradise Cafe 1985—The Manilow Collections—Twenty Classic Hits; Manilow (RCA) 1987—Swing Street (Arista) 1989—Barry Manilow 1990—Live on Broadway; Because It's Christmas 1991—Showstoppers 1992—The Complete Collection and Then Some . . . 1994—Singing With the Big Bands 1996—Summer of '78 1998—Manilow Sings Sinatra.

Pop singer/songwriter Barry Manilow has sold nearly 60 million records worldwide. In 1977 his unabashedly romantic (verging on mawkish) pop gave him five albums on the charts simultaneously, a record surpassed by only Frank Sinatra and Johnny Mathis. He has since focused his attention on a wide range of genres, including Broadway show tunes and traditional jazz.

When Manilow was seven he picked up his first instrument, the accordion. He later attended New York College of Music and the Juilliard School of Music. He also worked in the CBS mailroom, and there, at 18, he met a director who encouraged him to do some musical arranging. Soon after, Manilow wrote an off-Broadway musical adaptation of The Drunkard, which had a long run. In 1967 he became musical director of the CBS-TV series Callback and later did conducting and arranging for Ed Sullivan productions. He also played in a cabaret-act duo, and in spring 1972, while filling in as house pianist at New York's Continental Baths, he met Bette Midler and soon became her musical director, arranger, and pianist. He coproduced and arranged her 1972 Grammy-winning debut and her 1973 followup. During this time he wrote commercial jingles for Dr Pepper, Band-Aids, and State Farm Insurance, among others (contrary to popular lore, he did not write, although he sang, McDonald's "You Deserve a Break Today")

Manilow landed a solo deal with Bell (later Arista) in 1972 but first toured with Midler as a featured performer before releasing his debut LP in 1972 and doing his own road show in 1974. His second LP came out in 1973, and in only nine weeks his cover of "Mandy" went to #1 in January of 1975. Hits like "Could It Be Magic" (#6, 1975), "It's a Miracle" (#12, 1975), Beach Boy Bruce Johnston's "I Write the Songs" (#1, 1976), and "Trying to Get the Feeling" (#10, 1976) followed. His debut album went platinum, and over the years a dozen more followed suit, including the multiplatinum Barry Manilow Live, Even Now, and Greatest Hits. His regular coproducer was ex-Archie Ron Dante up until his 10th LP in 1981.

Manilow won an Emmy for one of his TV specials, a special Tony for a Broadway concert, and a Grammy in 1979. In 1980 he produced Dionne Warwick's platinum comeback LP which contained the hit "I'll Never Love This Way Again." In early 1982 he hit the Top 20 with "The Old Songs" and later had a lesser hit with a remake of the Four Seasons' "Let's Hang On." He continued scoring gold albums through the '80s. 2:00 A.M. Paradise Cafe (#28, 1984) and Swing Street found Manilow moving from schmaltzy pop to a more jazz-oriented sound (he was joined on the albums by such singers and musicians as Mel Tormé, Sarah Vaughan, and Gerry Mulligan).

In 1984 Manilow scored music to words by the great lyricist Johnny Mercer, for the song "When October Goes"; Mercer's widow had found a trunk full of unpublished lyrics and offered them to Manilow. Manilow eventually scored and produced an album full of Mercer lyrics, 1991's With My Lover Beside Me, sung by Nancy Wilson. That same year saw Manilow release Showstoppers, a collection of Broadway show tunes on which he was joined by such stage singers as Barbara Cook, Michael Crawford, and Hinton Battle. In 1988 Manilow produced a song, "Perfect Isn't Easy," featuring Midler's voice for the animated Disney movie Oliver and Company.

In 1994 Barry Manilow's Copacabana—The Musical premiered in London (it would tour the U.S. in 2000–2001). Harmony, a musical for which he wrote the score, opened at California's La Jolla Playhouse in 1997. He also scored two animated features, Thumbelina (1994) and The Pebble and the Penguin (1995). With Manilow busy working for the stage and screen, his last two studio recordings have been made up mostly of covers—'70s hits for Summer of '78 and songs popularized by Frank Sinatra for Manilow Sings Sinatra. Manilow's autobiography, Sweet Life: Adventures on the Way to Paradise was published in 1987.

Aimee Mann/'Til Tuesday

Born Sep. 8, 1960, Richmond, VA, voc., bass
 1993—Whatever (Imago) 1995—I'm With Stupid (Geffen)
 1999—Music From the Motion Picture "Magnolia" (Reprise)

2000—Bachelor No. 2 EP (SuperEgo).

With 'Til Tuesday, formed 1982, Boston, MA: Robert Holmes (b. Mar. 31, 1959, Hampton, Eng.), gtr.; Joey Pesce (b. Apr. 14, 1962, Bronx, NY), kybds.; Michael Hausman (b. June 12, 1960, Philadelphia, PA), drums: 1985—Voices Carry (Epic) 1986—Welcome Home (—Pesce; + Clayton Scobel, gtr.; + Jon Brion, gtr.; + Michael Montes, kybds.) 1988—Everything's Different Now.

Singer/songwriter Aimee Mann's career offers a classic case study in troubled relations between an artist and her record labels, and a testimony to creative perseverance over the long haul. Picking up her brother's guitar during recovery from a childhood illness, Mann first learned music through the songbooks of Neil Young and Elton John. After high school, she moved to Boston to attend the Berklee College of Music, where she switched from vocal studies to learning the bass.

She joined a local postpunk band, the Young Snakes, and in 1982 formed 'Til Tuesday with English guitarist Robert Holmes, drummer Michael Hausman, whom she'd met at Berklee and with whom she lived for a few years, and keyboardist Joey Pesce. The group won a battle-of-the-bands contest sponsored by a Boston radio station, which led to a record deal. The band's debut, Voices Carry (#19, 1985), became a major breakthrough thanks to the success of the pop-rock hit "Voices Carry" (#8, 1985), whose popular video depicts Mann dramatically breaking free of an abusive and controlling lover. 'Til Tuesday's second album, Welcome Home (#49, 1986), spawned only minor hits in "What About Love" (#49, 1986) and "Coming Up Close" (#59, 1987). Mann was winning attention as a songwriter, however, and won a fan and friend in Elvis Costello, who cowrote one song with her for Everything's Different Now, which sold poorly (#124, 1988) and failed to produce a hit single.

'Til Tuesday broke up, and it was five years before Mann freed herself from the group's Epic contract and reemerged with the very Beatlesque Whatever, a critically acclaimed moderate seller. The release of Mann's second album, I'm With Stupid, was delayed when her label (Imago) went out of business. The singer balked at an offer by Warner Bros. to release the effort and eventually signed with Geffen, which released it in 1995. Two years later, Mann married fellow singer/songwriter Michael Penn [see entry], whom she would later join in a fancifully themed Acoustic Vaudeville Tour, complete with a standup comic.

Mann's troubles with the record industry continued, however, when Geffen was absorbed by Interscope in 1999. She was dropped by the label but acquired the rights to her unreleased material. Meanwhile, her friendship with filmmaker Paul Thomas Anderson (for whom Penn had scored the movies Hard Eight and Boogie Nights) led to her songs being used extensively in his 1999 film Magnolia, which the director has said was inspired by Mann's music. In early 2000 Mann released the long-delayed Bachelor No. 2, which had first seen light as a limited-edition EP sold by the singer on a summer acoustic tour, on her own SuperEgo label.

Manfred Mann

Formed 1964, England

Manfred Mann (b. Michael Lubowitz, Oct. 21, 1940, Johannesburg, S.A.), kybds.; Paul Jones (b. Paul Pond, Feb. 24, 1942, Portsmouth, Eng.), voc., harmonica; Mike Hugg (b. Aug. 11, 1942, Andover, Eng.), drums; Michael Vickers (b. Apr. 18, 1941, Southampton, Eng.), gr.; Tom McGuinness (b. Dec. 2, 1941, London, Eng.), bass.
 1964—The Manfred Mann Album (Ascot); The Five Faces of Manfred Mann; Mann Made 1965—My Little Red Book of Winners (– Vickers; + Jack Bruce [b. May 14, 1943, Lanarkshire, Scot.], bass) Mann Made Hits 1966—Pretty Flamingo (United Artists); Greatest Hits (Capitol) (– Bruce; – Jones) 1967—Up the Junction (Fontana) (+ Klaus Voormann [b. Apr. 29, 1942, Berlin, Ger.], bass; + Michael D'Abo [b. 1944, Bethworth, Eng.], voc., gr., flute) 1968—The Mighty Quinn (Mercury) 1992—The Best of Manfred Mann: The Definitive Collection (EMI).

Manfred Mann's Earth Band, formed 1971, Eng.: Mann; + Mick Rogers, voc., gr.; + Colin Pattenden, bass; + Chris Slade, drums.

1972—Manfred Mann's Earth Band (Polydor); Glorified, Magnified 1973—Get Your Rocks Off (a.k.a. Messin') 1974—Solar Fire; The Good Earth (Warner Bros.) 1975—Nightingales and Bombers (+ Chris Thompson, gr., voc.; + Dave Flett, gr.; + Pat King, bass; – Flett; + Steve Waller, gr.; – Waller; + John Lingwood, drums) 1976—The Roaring Silence 1977—Watch 1979—Angel Station 1980—Chance 1984—Somewhere in Afrika (Arista) 1991—Plains Music (Rhythm Safari/Priority).

Michael D'Abo solo: 1970—D'Abo (MCA) 1972—Down at Rachel's Place (A&M) 1974—Broken Rainbows 1976—Smith and D'Abo (Columbia, U.K.).

Although led by two trained musicians who shared a measure of disdain for pop music, Manfred Mann scored an impressive 16 British hit singles during the '60s, many of which were American successes as well, including the #1 record "Do Wah Diddy Diddy" in 1964. Mann himself later moved into jazz rock and AOR.

Manfred Mann and Mike Hugg formed the eight-man Mann-Hugg Blues Brothers in 1962, playing blues and jazz. The following year they pared the group down to a quintet with a new name, Manfred Mann. At this point, they turned to pop-oriented rock & roll. Their first two singles ("Why Should We Not?" and "Cock-a-Hoop") were not especially successful, but their third, "5-4-3-2-1," became their first hit, its popularity aided by its adoption as the theme song of the British rock television program Ready Steady Go (Manfred Mann's "Hubble Bubble Toil and Trouble" became the show's theme song later on.) The hits came rapidly after that: "Do Wah Diddy Diddy" (#1, 1964), "Come Tomorrow" (#50, 1965), and "Pretty Flamingo" (#29, 1966).

In 1965 Vickers quit the band and was replaced briefly by Jack Bruce, who left six months later to form Cream. Bruce was replaced by Revolver jacket artist Klaus Voormann. Later Paul Jones quit as well to concentrate on acting and a solo recording career. He had two British hits, "High Time" and "I've Been a Bad Bad Boy," from the 1967 film Privilege, in which he starred, playing a pop idol. He was replaced by Mike D'Abo.

Fluctuating personnel had less discernible effect on the group's continued chart success than its leader's growing ambivalence. British hits those years included "Semi-Detached Suburban Mr. James," "Ha! Ha! Said the Clown," "My Name Is Jack," and their international hit cover of Bob Dylan's "The Mighty Quinn" (#10, 1968). After scoring the film Up the Junction in 1967, Mann and Hugg broke up the band and formed the more ambitious Manfred Mann's Chapter Three, complete with a five-man horn section, while McGuinness joined ex-John Mayall drummer Hughie Flint to form McGuinness Flint. Chapter Three recorded a pair of albums (Chapter Three, 1969, Chapter Three, Volume 2, 1970) before Mann and Hugg parted company. Hugg to compose soundtracks (some believe he alone was responsible for Up the Junction) and Mann to launch Manfred Mann's Earth Band.

The Earth Band was designed to show off the group's virtuosity in a heavy-rock format. Upon its formation in 1971, the group toured extensively, building an audience until in 1977 its version of Bruce Springsteen's "Blinded by the Light" became a #1 single. In 1973 the Earth Band had a British hit with "Joybringer," based on a tune from Gustav Holst's The Planets. In five more years of recording, Mann and company were not able to repeat the feat, even when they tried another Springsteen composition, "Spint in the Night," although it did go to #40. Somewhere in Afrika (#40, 1984) was the highest-charting of Mann's US-released albums since the gold The Roaring Silence (#10, 1976). "Runner" (#22, 1984) from Somewhere was Mann's last hit in the US.

Onetime lead singer Michael D'Abo, who sang lead on "Mighty Quinn," pursued an uneven solo career. He was far more successful as a songwriter; among his compositions are "Build Me Up Buttercup" (cowritten with Tony McCaulay and recorded by the Foundations) and "Handbags and Gladrags" (Rod Stewart). Smith and D'Abo is a collaborative effort with former Dave Clark Five lead singer Mike Smith. His daughter, Olivia D'Abo, is an actress. She played Kevin Arnold's older sister on The Wonder Years.

Minus Mann himself and augmented by a new rhythm section, Jones, D'Abo, McGuinness, Hugg, and Vickers reunited several times in the '90s as the Manfreds.

Marilyn Manson

Formed Marilyn Manson and the Spooky Kids, 1989, Tampa Bay, FL

Marilyn Manson (b. Brian Hugh Warner, Jan. 5, 1969, Canton, OH), voc.; Gidget Gein, bass; Daisy Berkowitz (b. Scott Mitchell Putesky, Apr. 28, 1968, East Orange, NJ), gr.; Madonna Wayne Gacy (b. Stephen Bier Jr., Mar. 6), kybds.; Sara Lee Lucas (b. Fred Streithorst II), drums.

1993—(– Gein; + Twiggy Ramirez [b. Jeordie White, June 20, 1972, NJ], bass) 1994—Portrait of an American Family (Nothing/Interscope) 1995—(– Lucas; + Ginger Fish [b. Kenny Wilson, Sep. 28], drums) Smells Like Children EP 1996—(– Berkowitz; + Zim Zum [b. Mike Linton, June 25], gr.) Antichrist Superstar 1997—Remix & Repent EP 1998—(– Zim Zum; + John 5 [b. John Lowery], gr.) Mechanical Animals 1999—The Last Tour on Earth 2000—Holy Wood (In the Shadow of the Valley of Death).

Drawing inspiration from Alice Cooper, Ozzy Osbourne, David Bowie, the occult, and, by his own admission, the King James Bible, Marilyn Manson established himself in the '90s as one of the most vilified agent provocateurs in rock history. Predictably, the more parental groups, politicians, and religious advocates protested his music and stage antics, the more Manson emerged as a martyr in the war against censorship. Charismatic and outspoken in interviews, he defended himself as a result of, rather than a cause of, a corrupt society.

Manson was born and raised Brian Hugh Warner in a middle-class family in Canton, Ohio. He was close to his parents but chafed at the ideologies and rules he had to contend with at the private Christian school he attended. Seduced by the rock albums he was exposed to in school (during lectures about the alleged evil messages embedded in the music), he took to rebellion and got himself expelled. After finishing high school at a public school, he moved to South Florida with his family, where he formed Marilyn Manson and the Spooky Kids in 1989 after a short stint at rock journalism. Each member of the group adopted a stage name patterned after Manson's—the name of a female icon (Marilyn Monroe, Madonna) crossed with a serial killer's (Charles Manson, John Wayne Gacy). The band released a series of self-produced cassettes and developed enough of a reputation on the hard-rock scene to attract the attention of Nine Inch Nails frontman Trent Reznor, who signed them to his Interscope imprint, Nothing Records, in 1993. The following year, Reznor produced the group's industrial-metal debut album, Portrait of an American Family, and took the band on tour with Nine Inch Nails.

During the group's first tour, Manson wasted little time in securing his status as a nightmare to the Christian right, exposing himself and feigning (or not) sexual acts with other band members onstage (he was arrested after one concert in Florida). He was made a "reverend" of the Church of Satan by founder Anton LaVey, though Manson would later note that he was no more a practicing Satanist than he was a practicing Christian, as he was baptized.

Nonetheless, the controversy—and a radio hit with a hard-rock cover of the Eurythmics' "Sweet Dreams (Are Made of This)"—pushed the 1995 EP Smells Like Children to #31 and gold sales status; it later went platinum. With the prophetically titled Antichrist Superstar (#3, 1996), Manson became a superstar. A brutally aggressive concept album about a nihilistic rock god, it spawned a stage show in which Manson stood at a podium and ripped pages out of a Bible.

Fueled by rumors (all false) that the shows also involved animal sacrifices, bestiality, and rape, activist groups across America lobbied with varying degrees of success to ban the group's performances. In the midst of all the furor, Manson released his autobiography, The Long Hard Road out of Hell (with rock critic Neil Strauss), in 1997, along with the Remix & Repent EP (#102).

For Mechanical Animals (#1, 1998), Manson adopted the persona of an androgynous, Ziggy Stardust-style glam rocker, Omega. In interviews, he explained that Antichrist Superstar and Mechanical Animals were both part of a pseudoautobiographical trilogy, told in reverse order—with Mechanical Animals intended as a satire in which the protagonist's revolution becomes "sold out." The album went platinum like Antichrist Superstar before it, but the accompanying tour was derailed when Manson's music was blamed, along with violent video games, as a negative influence on the two teenage boys responsible for the Columbine High School massacre in April 1999. Manson canceled several concert dates in light of the tragedy but vehemently distanced himself from the tragedy, decrying the killings as well as allegations that his or anybody else's music was in any way responsible for the killers' actions.

After a live album, The Last Tour on Earth (#82, 1999), Manson returned in 2000 with the final part of his trilogy, Holy Wood (In the Shadow of the Valley of Death) (#13). Telling the story of the future antichrist superstar's origins before his corruption, the album ditched the glam-rock sound of Mechanical Animals for a return to heavy, industrialized goth rock. The same year, he launched his own label, Post Human Records, with electronic hard-rock act Godhead his first signing. Manson planned to publish a novel based on his album trilogy in 2001.

Phil Manzanera: See Roxy Music

Teena Marie

Born Mary Christine Brockert, Mar. 5, 1956, Santa Monica, CA 1979—Wild and Peaceful (Gordy) 1980—Lady T; Irons in the Fire 1981—It Must Be Magic 1983—Robbery (Epic) 1984—Starchild 1986—Emerald City 1988—Naked to the World 1990—Ivory 1994—Passion Play (Sara) 1997—Lovergirl: The Teena Marie Story (Sony/Columbia/Legacy) 2000—Black Rain (Sara).

Before Mariah Carey and Lisa Stansfield hit the R&B chart in the early '90s, Teena Marie distinguished herself as a white singer worthy of the support of such soul-music icons as Rick James and Motown Records. Granted, when Motown released Marie's debut album (on its Gordy label), the record company suspiciously saw fit not to put her photo on the cover. But in 1985, when Marie's single "Lovergirl" hit #4 on the pop chart (and #9 on R&B), an accompanying video got enough airplay to ensure that the attractive singer's face—which, in fact, could have been mistaken for that of a light-skinned black woman—was as accessible as her lithely soulful voice and sultry, jazz-tinged funk-pop songs.

One of six children born to music-loving parents, Mary Christine Brockert began singing professionally at the age of eight, performing at weddings and appearing on TV commercials, using her nickname from early on Teena Marie also started writing songs on the family piano. Following a year at Santa Monica College, where she studied English, the singer was tapped by Motown chairman Berry Gordy Jr. for a TV project that was eventually shelved. Gordy signed her in 1977, though, and shortly thereafter, James overheard her singing in a recording studio and decided to produce her first album, Wild and Peaceful, which spawned the R&B hit "I'm a Sucker for Your Love" (#8, 1979). Marie continued her associations with James and Gordy for the next couple of years, touring with the former (and coyly evading speculation that they were lovers, although they were) and yielding successful R&B singles like "I Need Your Lovin'" (#9, 1980) and "Square Biz" (#3, 1981) for the latter.

In 1981, the year her fourth Motown album was released, Marie was nominated for a Grammy for Best Female R&B Vocal Performance, one of only a few white performers to earn an honor in an R&B category. The same year, though, she sued the company for nonpayment of royalties. She was freed from her contract, awarded a cash settlement, and set a precedent with what became known as the "Teena Marie Law," which protects the rights of recording artists by forbidding a record company to hold an artist under contract if it refuses to release the artist's recordings. The singer was picked up by Epic Records; her second Epic album, Starchild, included "Lovegirl," her only Top 20 pop single to date. On the R&B chart Marie remained a viable presence into the late '80s, scoring the hits "Ooo La La La" (#1, 1988) and "Work It" (#10, 1988).

In the early '90s, Marie devoted herself to caring for her newborn daughter, Alia. When Epic dropped her, she started her own label, Sara, on which she released 1994's Passion Play. She went back on the road, first as part of Funkfest '95 with Cameo and the Gap Band, then on another funk/R&B revival tour, this one formed by comedian Sinbad and also featuring Earth, Wind & Fire. Marie released another album, Black Rain, on her label in 2000.

Mark-Almond Band

Formed 1970, London, Eng.

Jon Mark (b. Cornwall, Eng.), gtrs., voc., perc.; Johnny Almond (b. July 20, 1946, Enfield, Eng.), voc., sax, flute, vibes, congas, oboe; Rodger Sutton (b. Eng.), bass, cello; Tommy Eyre (b. Sheffield, Eng.), piano, organ, gtr.

1971—Mark-Almond (Blue Thumb) (+ Dannie Richmond, perc.)

1972—Mark-Almond 2 (+ Ken Craddock, kybds.; + Colin

Gibson, bass) Rising (Columbia) 1973—(- Craddock;

- Gibson) Mark-Almond 73 (- Sutton; - Eyre; + Geoff Condon, horns; + Alun Davies, gtr.; + Wolfgang Melz, bass; + Bobby

Torres, perc.) (group disbands) 1975—(Mark and Almond reunite) 1976—To the Heart (ABC) 1978—Other People's Rooms (A&M).

In 1970 Jon Mark and Johnny Almond, two longtime British sessionmen, left John Mayall's Bluesbreakers to form a band that combined mellow jazz and folk.

Before joining Mayall, Mark had coproduced Marianne Faithfull's early albums with Mick Jagger, and later spent two years writing for Faithfull and accompanying her on the road. He also toured with folksinger Alun Davies (later guitarist for Cat Stevens), and from there the two formed a short-lived band called Sweet Thursday, with Nicky Hopkins, Brian Odgers, and Harvey Burns. Though their sole LP on Tetragrammaton was released the day the company folded, "Gilbert Street" became an FM hit in the U.S.

Almond had worked in Zoot Money's Big Roll Band, the Alan Price Set, and his own Johnny Almond's Music Machine, which recorded two solo LPs for Deram in England. Both he and Mark joined Mayall in 1967 (they appear on Turning Point), but after a second LP with him, Empty Rooms, the two formed the Mark-Almond Band with Tommy Eyre (who'd backed Joe Cocker, Juicy Lucy, and Aynsley Dunbar) and Rodger Sutton, formerly of Jody Grind. The Mark-Almond Band's debut contained the FM hit "The City," an 11-minute jam. An audience began to grow, especially for the group's tours, which featured long instrumental forays. With their second LP, Mark and Almond added guest drummer Dannie Richmond, who'd long been associated with jazz bassist Charles Mingus. Mark-Almond was briefly a seven-piece band, for its 73 album, before disbanding. Mark lost a finger in an accident that year, but came out with a solo LP, Songs for a Friend, in 1975.

Later that year he and Almond reunited to record To the Heart. They still hadn't found a major audience, but they got another deal on A&M in 1978, resulting in Other People's Rooms, which included a new version of "The City." They really were no longer a group (the album was recorded with all studio musicians besides the two principals) and called it quits for good soon after.

The Mar-Keys

Formed 1957, Memphis, TN

Original lineup: Terry Johnson, drums; Steve Cropper (b. Oct. 21, 1941, Willow Springs, MO), gtr.; Donald "Duck" Dunn (b. Nov. 24, 1941, Memphis), bass; Jerry Lee "Smoochie" Smith, piano; Charles "Packy" Axton (b. Feb. 17, 1941; d. Jan. 1976), sax; Don Nix (b. Sep. 27, 1941, Memphis), sax; Wayne Jackson, trumpet; Charlie Freeman (b. Memphis; d. Jan. 31, 1973, Memphis), gtr.

1961—Mar-Keys (Atlantic) 1965—The Great Memphis Sound.

Though they had just one Top 10 single, the Mar-Keys were among those most responsible for the development of the Memphis sound of the '60s, the hallmark of the influential Stax-Volt label. Guitarist Steve Cropper formed the band in 1957, when he was just 16, as a quartet. By the early '60s they had added horns and keyboards and were backing up Sate-ite Records (later Stax-Volt) soul stars Rufus and Carla Thomas. They also began releasing their own singles and albums of instrumentals, scoring a Top 10 hit and a gold record in 1961 with their first 45, "Last Night." In later years, after much shifting of personnel, the name Mar-Keys was quietly retired, but various band members remained active. Cropper and Dunn had many hits as half of Booker T. and the MG's [see entry]. Onetime Mar-Key Don Nix went on to a modestly successful solo career and also played with Delaney and Bonnie and Leon Russell, while Jackson joined the Memphis Horns and Freeman, the Dixie Flyers.

Marky Mark and the Funky Bunch

Formed 1991, Boston, MA

Marky Mark (b. Mark Wahlberg, June 5, 1971, Dorchester, MA), voc.; Scott Ross (b. Apr. 6, 1969, Boston), dancer; Hector Barrons (b. May 14, 1967, Boston), dancer; Terry Yancy (b. Sep. 11, 1969, Boston), DJ.
1991—Music for the People (Interscope) 1992—You Gotta Believe.

The younger brother of New Kids on the Block's Donnie Wahlberg, Marky Mark was, after Vanilla Ice, rap's second Great White Hope. By the late '90s he had made a successful transition to respected actor.

Marky had a rough upbringing in the lower-class Boston suburb of Dorchester. He discovered hip-hop in the late '80s and, between doing jail time for knocking an Asian-American unconscious with his beer in 1988 and a 1990 arrest for assault, he began weight lifting, taught himself to rap, and practiced break dancing with his brother Donnie.

In 1990 Marky recorded a demo with his brother, and just a year later, he and the Funky Bunch emerged with "Good Vibrations." The record incorporated and credited an old disco hit by Loleatta Holloway (who was featured in the video between shots of Marky lifting weights and rolling around in bed with a pretty girl) and hit #1 in 1991. Its followup, "Wildside" (#10, 1991), was based on and credited Lou Reed's classic "Walk on the Wild Side." Marky's debut album, Music for the People (#21, 1991), went platinum. After his rise to fame, publicity got out about his previous violent racial incidents with black and Asian-American youths. Antidefamation groups protested, pressuring Marky to tape antiracism public service announcements.

By the end of 1992, Marky's pumped-up pectorals were omnipresent in magazines and on billboards, through his endorsement of fashion designer Calvin Klein's underwear. But You Gotta Believe (#67, 1992) quickly fell off the charts, yielding only one minor hit single in the title track (#49, 1992). In August 1992 Marky and a bodyguard were charged with assaulting a man at a Dorchester tennis court (the case was eventually dismissed by the court). In October 1993 Marky released a home-video workout tape.

Greater things were in store, however, outside the music business. Reverting to his given name, Mark Wahlberg, the rapper/model won the male lead in Boogie Nights, the 1997 movie drama loosely based on the life of superendowed '70s porn star John Holmes. Roles followed in the high-profile films Three Kings (1999) and The Perfect Storm (2000).

Bob Marley and the Wailers

The Wailers, formed 1963, Jamaica

Bob Marley (b. Robert Nesta Marley, Apr. 6, 1945, St. Ann's Parish, Jam.; d. May 11, 1981, Miami, FL), voc., gtr.; Peter Tosh (b. Winston Hubert Macintosh, Oct. 9, 1944, Westmoreland, Jam.; d. Sep. 11, 1987, Barbican, St. Andrew, Jam.), voc., gtr.; Bunny Livingstone (b. Neville Livingstone O'Reilly, Apr. 10, 1947, Kingston, Jam.), voc., perc.; Beverly Kelso, voc.; Junior Braithwaite, voc.

1965—(– Kelso; – Braithwaite) 1969—(+ Aston Francis "Family Man" Barrett [b. Nov. 22, 1946, Kingston], bass; + Carlton Lloyd "Carly" Barrett [b. Dec. 17, 1950, Kingston; d. Apr. 17, 1987, Kingston], drums) 1973—Catch a Fire (Island) (+ Earl "Wire" Lindo [b. Jan. 7, 1953, Kingston], kybds.); Burnin' (– Tosh; – Livingstone).

As Bob Marley and the Wailers: 1974—(+ Bernard "Touter" Harvey [b. Jam.], kybds.; + Al Anderson [b. Montclair, NJ], gtr.; + the I-Threes [Rita Marley, Marcia Griffiths, Judy Mowatt, all b. Jam.], voc.; + Alvin "Seeco" Patterson [b. Jam.], perc.; + Tyrone Downie [b. Jam.], kybds.; + Julian "Junior" Marvin [b. U.S.], gtr.; + Lee Jaffe, harmonica) Natty Dread (Island) (– Marvin; – Jaffe; – Lindo; + Earl "Chinna" Smith, gtr.) 1975—Live (– Downie; + Donald Kinsey [b. May 12, 1953, Gary, IN]) 1976—Rastaman Vibration (– Kinsey; – Smith; – Harvey; – Anderson; + Marvin; + Downie) 1977—Exodus (– Downie) 1978—Kaya (+ Lindo; + Anderson; + Downie) Babylon by Bus 1979—Survival 1980—Uprising 1983—Confrontation 1984—Legend 1991—Talkin' Blues (Tuff Gong) 1992—Songs of Freedom (Island) 1995—Natural Mystic 1999—Chant Down Babylon.

Tremendously popular in their native Jamaica, where Bob Marley was regarded as a national hero, the Wailers were also reggae music's most effective international emissaries. Marley's songs of determination, rebellion, and faith found an audience all over the world.

Marley left his rural home for the slums of Kingston at age 14. When he was 17, Jimmy Cliff [see entry] introduced him to Leslie Kong, who produced Marley's first single, "Judge Not," and several other obscure sides. In 1963, with the guidance of Jamaican pop veteran Joe Higgs, Marley formed the Wailers, a vocal quintet, with Peter Tosh, Bunny Livingstone, Junior Braithwaite and Beverly Kelso. Their first single for producer Coxson Dodd, "Simmer Down," was one of the biggest Jamaican hits of 1964, and the Wailers remained on Dodd's Studio One and Coxson labels for three years, hitting with "Love and Affection."

When Braithwaite and Kelso left the group around 1965, the Wailers continued as a trio, Marley, Tosh, and Livingstone trading leads. In spite of the popularity of singles like "Rude Boy," the artists received few or no royalties, and in 1966 they disbanded. Marley spent most of the following year working in a factory in Newark, Delaware (where his mother had moved in 1963). Upon his return to Jamaica, the Wailers reunited and recorded, with little success, for Dodd and other producers. During this period, the Wailers devoted themselves to the religious sect of Rastafan.

Bob Marley

In 1969 they began their three-year association with Lee "Scratch" Perry, who directed them to play their own instruments and expanded their lineup to include Aston and Carlton Barrett, formerly the rhythm section of Perry's studio band, the Upsetters. Some of the records they made with Perry—like "Trenchtown Rock"—were locally very popular, but so precarious was the Jamaican record industry that the group seemed no closer than before to establishing steady careers. It formed an independent record company, Tuff Gong, in 1971, but the venture foundered when Livingstone was jailed and Marley got caught in a contract commitment to American pop singer Johnny Nash [see entry], who took him to Sweden to write a film score (and later had moderate hits with two Marley compositions, "Guava Jelly" and "Stir It Up").

In 1972 Chris Blackwell—who had released "Judge Not" in England in 1963—signed the Wailers to Island Records and advanced them the money to record themselves in Jamaica. Catch a Fire was their first album marketed outside Jamaica, which featured several uncredited performances such as Muscles Shoals' guitarist Wayne Perkins playing lead on "Concrete Jungle" and "Stir It Up." (They continued to release Jamaica-only singles on Tuff Gong.) Their recognition abroad was abetted by Eric Clapton's hit version of "I Shot the Sheriff," a song from their second Island album. They made their first overseas tour in 1973, but before the end of the year, Tosh and Livingstone (who later adopted the surname Wailer) left for solo careers [see entries].

Marley expanded the instrumental section of the group and brought in a female vocal trio, the I-Threes, which included his wife, Rita. Now called Bob Marley and the Wailers, they toured Europe, Africa, and the Americas, building especially strong followings in the U.K., Scandinavia, and Africa. They had U.K. Top 40 hits with "No Woman No Cry" (1975), "Exodus" (1977), "Waiting in Vain" (1977), and "Satisfy My Soul" (1978), and British Top 10 hits with "Jamming" (1977), "Punky Reggae Party" (1977), and "Is This Love" (1978).

In the U.S., only "Roots, Rock, Reggae" made the pop chart (#51, 1976), while "Could You Be Loved" placed on the soul charts (#56 R&B, 1980), but the group attracted an ever larger audience: Rastaman Vibration went to #8 pop and Exodus hit #20. In Jamaica the Wailers reached unprecedented levels of popularity and influence, and Marley's pronouncements on public issues were accorded the attention usually reserved for political or religious leaders. In 1976 he was wounded in an assassination attempt.

A 1980 tour of the U.S. was canceled when Marley collapsed while jogging in New York's Central Park. It was discovered that he had developed brain, lung, and liver cancer, it killed him eight months later. In 1987 both Peter Tosh and longtime Marley drummer Carlton Barrett were murdered in Jamaica during separate incidents. Rita Marley continues to tour, record, and run the Tuff Gong studios and record company.

Marley was a pioneer not only because he single-handedly brought reggae to the world, but because his passionate, socially observant music has become a yardstick against which all reggae will forever be measured.

Ziggy Marley and the Melody Makers

Formed 1979, Kingston, Jam.

David "Ziggy" Marley (b. Oct. 17, 1968, Kingston) voc., gtr., kybds.; Stephen Marley (b. Apr. 20, 1972, Wilmington, DE), voc., gtr., perc., DJ; Cedella Marley (b. Aug. 23, 1967, Kingston), voc.; Sharon Marley Prendergast (b. Nov. 23, 1964, Kingston), voc. 1985—Play the Game Right (EMI America) 1986—Hey World! 1988—The Best of Ziggy Marley and the Melody Makers; Conscious Party (Virgin) 1989—One Bright Day 1991—Jahmekya 1993—Joy and Blues 1995—Free Like We Want 2 B (Elektra) 1997—The Best Of (1988–1993) (Virgin); Fallen Is Babylon (Elektra) 1999—Spirit of Music Chant 2000—Live: vol. 1.

As the eldest son of international reggae stars Bob and Rita Marley, Ziggy Marley was a natural choice to fill the vacuum left by his father's death in 1981. He has been burdened with the double expectations of carrying on reggae's traditions and Rastafanan proselytizing while expanding the music to a new, younger audience. After a rocky start, though, he has generally succeeded, receiving Grammys for both Conscious Party and One Bright Day.

Taught guitar and drums by his father, Marley started sitting in on the Wailers' recording sessions from age 10; in 1979 an already ailing Bob Marley brought Ziggy, along with sister Cedella, brother Stephen, and half sister Sharon, into the studio to record a single, "Children Playing in the Streets." Called the Melody Makers, the group started playing at family events, gaining notice with an appearance at their father's state funeral in 1981.

Signed by EMI America, the band recorded two albums that veered toward the pop side of reggae. This, combined with Ziggy's preternatural resemblance, both physically and vocally, to his father, caused him to be dubbed derisively, "Marley lite." Low sales and the fact that EMI wanted to market Ziggy as a solo act moved the band to Virgin Records.

The changes on Conscious Party (#23 pop, #26 R&B, 1988) went deeper than a new label. Recorded for the first time outside Kingston, with new producers (Talking Heads' Chris Frantz and Tina Weymouth), the album was well received both commercially and critically, yielding the hit "Tomorrow People" (#39, 1988). One Bright Day (#26 pop, #43 R&B, 1989) continued this growth, while Jahmekya (#63, 1991) and Joy and Blues (#178 pop, #75 R&B, 1993) added modern dance-hall and rock sounds to the mix.

Ziggy has continued the Marley tradition of political activism, becoming a Goodwill Youth Ambassador for the United Nations and winning an NAACP Image Award. He also started the Ghetto Youth United record label in Kingston to record the next generation of reggae music. In 1994 the band switched labels to Elektra and began putting together material for 1995's Free Like We Want 2 B (#170). Fallen Is Babylon (1997) highlights the increasing songwriting ability of Stephen, who wrote three songs and cowrote four. Stephen also oversaw the recording of the Bob Marley tribute album by various artists, Chant Down Babylon (#60 pop, #21 R&B, 1999). The album put a hip-hop spin on Bob Marley standards by combining Bob's original vocals with vocals by contemporary artists such as Lauryn Hill, Busta Rhymes, Erykah Badu, and the Roots. Spirit of Music, which was produced by Don Was and features an appearance by Taj Mahal, saw the Melody Makers go in a folkier, more soulful direction.

Branford Marsalis

Born Aug. 26, 1960, New Orleans, LA
 1984—Scenes in the City (Columbia) 1986—Royal Garden Blues; Romances for Saxophone 1987—Renaissance
 1988—Random Abstract 1989—Trio Jeepy 1990—Crazy People Music; Music From Mo' Better Blues (Sony) 1991—The Beautiful Ones Are Not Yet Born (Columbia) 1992—I Heard You Twice the First Time 1993—Bloomington 1994—Buckshot LeFonque 1996—Dark Keys 1997—Music Evolution (with Buckshot LeFonque) 1999—Requiem (Sony).

Where his trumpet-playing younger brother Wynton Marsalis [see entry] represents a strict allegiance to the orthodoxies of the jazz tradition, saxophonist Branford Marsalis openly embraces pop culture while simultaneously maintaining a reputation as a serious jazz musician.

Marsalis grew up in New Orleans; his father, Ellis, is a renowned jazz educator and pianist. As teenagers Branford and Wynton played together in funk bands; while Wynton later disavowed these early experiences, Branford never lost his youthful taste for R&B and rock music. Becoming more committed to jazz, Branford enrolled in Boston's Berklee College of Music. After short stints with the Lionel Hampton Orchestra and Clark Terry's band, Branford joined Wynton in drummer Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers. Starting out on alto saxophone but soon switching to tenor sax, Marsalis was quickly recognized as one of the most proficient of the new traditionalists—young players who were reinvestigating the hard-bop and modal-jazz styles of the '60s.

In 1981 Branford joined Wynton's band and subsequently appeared on his first five recordings, playing both tenor and soprano saxophones. Four years later Branford shocked the jazz world by leaving Wynton's band (by then the most popular in jazz) to record and tour with Sting. From that point on, Marsalis had few qualms crossing the boundaries of musical genre and celebrity. With Sting, Marsalis recorded The Dream of the Blue Turtles (1985) and Nothing Like the Sun (1987); he also appeared in Sting's rock documentary Bring on the Night.

Marsalis started his own quartet in 1986, playing uncompromising jazz much as he had in Wynton's band. Like Wynton, Branford has also made classical recordings. Another Marsalis brother, Delfeayo (a trumpet player), produces most of Branford's records.

Outside projects would find Branford all over the pop-music map, guesting on records by Public Enemy, the Grateful Dead, the Neville Brothers, Tina Turner, and Bruce Hornsby. In 1994 Marsalis continued his exploration of musical genres with Buckshot LeFonque, a hip-hop project with Gang Starr's DJ Premier, whom Marsalis had worked with on the soundtrack for Spike Lee's Mo' Better Blues. That year also he won, with Bruce Hornsby, a Grammy for Best Pop Instrumental Performance for the tune "Barcelona Mona."

As an actor, Marsalis can be seen in the films School Daze and Throw Momma From the Train. In 1992 Marsalis became the musical director for The Tonight Show and second banana for host Jay Leno, instantly making him the most widely recognized living jazz musician in the world. Disaffected with playing "straight man" to Leno's humor, however, Marsalis left in 1995.

More recently, his projects have continued to reflect his diversity; he released a followup to the highly successful Buckshot LeFonque in 1997, and in 1999 one of his most highly regarded jazz albums, a tribute to his longtime keyboard ally, the late Kenny Kirkland.

Wynton Marsalis

Born Oct. 18, 1961, New Orleans, LA
 1980—All American Hero (Who's Who in Jazz); Wynton
 1982—Wynton Marsalis (Columbia) 1983—Think of One . . .
 1984—Hot House Flowers; English Chamber Orchestra (CBS)
 1985—Black Codes from the Underground (Columbia) 1986—J Mood 1987—Carnaval; Marsalis Standard Time, vol. 1
 1988—The Wynton Marsalis Quartet Live at Blues Alley; Baroque Music for Trumpets (CBS) 1989—The Majesty of the Blues; (Columbia) Crescent City Christmas Card; Quiet City 1990—

Standard Time, vol. 3: Resolution of Romance; Original Soundtrack from "Tune in Tomorrow"; Trumpet Concertos; 24 (Sony) 1991—Standard Time, vol. 2: Intimacy Calling (Columbia); Thick in the South: Soul Gestures in Southern Blue, vol. 1; Uptown Ruler: Soul Gestures in Southern Blue, vol. 2; Levee Low Moan: Soul Gestures in Southern Blue, vol. 3 1992—Blue Interlude 1993—Citi Movement 1994—In This House, On This Morning 1995—Joe Cool's Blues (Columbia); Live in Swing Town (Jazz Door) 1995—Blakey's Messengers, vol. 1; Blakey's Messengers, vol. 2; Blakey's Theme (Westwind) 1996—Live at Bubba's (Jazz World); In Gabriel's Garden (Columbia) 1997—Jump Start and Jazz 1998—The Midnight Blues: Standard Time, vol. 5; One by One (Delta) 1999—Marsalis Plays Monk: Standard Time, vol. 4 (Columbia); A Fiddler's Tale (Sony); At the Octoroon Balls; Big Train (Columbia); Sweet Release and Ghost Story (Sony); Mr. Jelly Lord; Standard Time, vol. 6 (Columbia); Reeltime (Sony Classical) 2000—Portrait of Wynton Marsalis (CBS); The London Concert (Sony Classical); The Marcia Suite (Columbia).

Wynton Marsalis is the most important figure in the current-day jazz renaissance. Marsalis galvanized a stagnant musical scene in the early '80s with his spectacular trumpet playing and has since championed America's cultural commitment to jazz.

Marsalis hails from a family steeped in jazz [see Branford Marsalis entry]. By his early teenage years, Marsalis already showed prodigious talent on the trumpet. While studying classical music at school—he was a featured guest soloist with the New Orleans Philharmonic at 14—Marsalis also played funk gigs with Branford and became interested in jazz. In 1979 Marsalis accepted an invitation to attend the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood; that fall he was awarded a full scholarship to New York's Juilliard School of Music. By the summer of 1980, Marsalis was already sitting in with drummer Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers. Over the next two years he would play in Blakey's band and Herbie Hancock's V.S.O.P. quartet.

His jazz and classical credentials in order at age 20, Marsalis was given major-label contracts to record in both genres. He formed a quartet, including Branford on saxophones, playing modal hard bop in a style associated with Miles Davis' groups of the mid-'60s. Marsalis took any opportunity to slam the commerciality of electric fusion—as well as pop—exalting instead the purity of acoustic jazz. Marsalis' musical prowess and sartorial splendor excited a wide crop of younger jazzmen, who sprang up unexpectedly in the mid-'80s.

The combination of Marsalis' talent, virulent outspokenness, and support of his powerful record company made him a star overnight. He won jazz and classical Grammys in 1983, and has won 10 altogether. After Branford left his band in 1985, Wynton began delving deeper into the jazz tradition. Greater echoes of Louis Armstrong and Duke Ellington were to be heard in his work; by The Majesty of the Blues (1989), Marsalis was exploring his New Orleans roots, mixing earthy, pre-swing jazz with modernistic elements derived from John Coltrane and Miles Davis. Blue Interlude and Citi Movement found him experimenting with long-form compositions.

In 1988 Marsalis helped develop the jazz program at Lincoln Center and was appointed its artistic director. In the early '90s he began scoring for dance, collaborating with noted choreographers Garth Fagan, Peter Martins, and Twyla Tharp. In 1997, for his jazz opera Blood on the Fields, Marsalis became the first nonclassical artist to win a Pulitzer Prize for composition. In 1999 in an endeavor he entitled "Swinging Into the 21st," he released an astonishing 15 CDs, from live recordings to ballet. He has also written two books, Marsalis on Music and Sweet Swing Blues on the Road.

Marshall Tucker Band

Formed 1971, Spartanburg, SC

Toy Caldwell (b. 1948; d. Feb. 23, 1994, Moore, SC), lead gtr., steel gtr., voc.; George McCorkle, rhythm gtr.; Doug Gray (b. May 2, 1948, Spartanburg), lead voc.; Paul Riddle, drums; Jerry Eubanks (b. Mar. 9, 1950, Spartanburg), alto sax, flute, organ, piano, voc.; Tommy Caldwell (b. 1950; d. Apr. 28, 1980, Spartanburg), bass, voc.

1973—The Marshall Tucker Band (Capricorn) 1974—A New Life; Where We All Belong 1975—Searchin' for a Rainbow 1976—Long Hard Ride 1977—Carolina Dreams 1978—Together Forever; Greatest Hits 1979—Running Like the Wind (Warner Bros.) 1980—Tenth (– Tommy Caldwell; + Franklin Wilkie, bass) 1981—Dedicated 1982—Tuckerized 1983—Just Us (– Toy Caldwell; – Riddle; – McCorkle; – Wilkie; + Rusty Milner [b. June 2, 1958, Spartanburg], gtr.; + Tim Lawter [b. Dec. 10, 1958, Spartanburg], bass, gtr.) 1988—Still Holdin' On (Mercury) 1990—Southern Spirit (Cabin Fever Music) 1992—Still Smokin' 1993—Walk Outside the Lines 1995—The Best of the Marshall Tucker Band—The Capricorn Years (Era/K-Tel) 1996—Country Tucker 1997—M.T. Blues 1998—Face Down in the Blues 1999—Gospel.
Toy Caldwell solo: 1992—Toy Caldwell (Cabin Fever Music).

The Marshall Tucker Band tempered Southern rock with pop, country, ballad, and even MOR "jazz" influences. The band centered on the Caldwell brothers, who, like all the original band members, were born and grew up in Spartanburg, South Carolina. As a teen, Toy Caldwell first worked in a rock & roll outfit, the Rants, which included George McCorkle on rhythm guitar. At the same time, brother Tommy played with Doug Gray in the New Generation. Both groups toured the club circuit until 1966, when they were all drafted into the army. After their discharge four years later, Toy wrote "Can't You See," which later became the Marshall Tucker Band's first U.S. single and a Top 5 country hit for Waylon Jennings in 1976. But first he formed the Toy Factory, with Gray and Jerry Eubanks, a band that lasted almost two years, until 1971, when McCorkle, Paul Riddle, and Tommy Caldwell joined to form the Marshall Tucker Band, named after the piano tuner who owned their rehearsal hall.

Their self-titled debut was released in March 1973, and they were openers on the Allman Brothers' tour; by 1974 they were headliners. The band's songs received much FM airplay, especially "Take the Highway," "24 Hours at a Time," and "Fire on the Mountain." MTB's debut went gold, followed by five other gold records and one platinum—Carolina Dreams—which included "Heard It in a Love Song" (#14, 1977). On January 20, 1977, the band, along with Sea Level, played at the inauguration of President Jimmy Carter. In 1979 the group signed to Warner Bros. for Running Like the Wind.

On April 28, 1980, Tommy Caldwell died from injuries sustained in an automobile accident six days earlier. Only a month before, another brother, Tim, had died in a car accident. The band's LP in memory of Tommy, released one year later, was called Dedicated. Franklin Wilkie, who'd played with Toy and McCorkle in the Rants, took over on bass. He had also played in the Toy Factory but, instead of joining the initial Marshall Tucker Band, played for six years with Garfeel Ruff, which recorded two albums for Capitol.

In 1983 Toy Caldwell, McCorkle, and Riddle, weary of the road, sold their interest in the group to Gray and Eubanks. Along with guitarist Rusty Milner and bassist Tim Lawter, both Spartanburg natives, they have continued to tour and record with a succession of musicians. Its Still Smokin' and Walk Outside the Lines LPs showed the band leaning more in a country direction, with several singles making the country Top 100. The band then added another variation to its Southern-rock format: M.T. Blues collected blues-inflected numbers from its catalogue and the positive reception it got led to the recording of the studio album Face Down in the Blues in 1998. The following year it released a spiritual album, simply titled Gospel.

On February 23, 1994, Toy Caldwell died in his sleep of a heart attack at age 45, two years after having released a solo album. As of early 2001, Marshall Tucker included Gray (the only original member left), Milner, Lawter, guitarist Stuart Swanlund, drummer B.B. Borden, and flute/sax player Clay Cook.

Martha and the Vandellas/ Martha Reeves

Formed 1962, Detroit, MI

Martha Reeves (b. July 18, 1941, Detroit), lead voc.; Annette Beard, voc.; Rosalind Ashford (b. Sep. 2, 1943, Detroit), voc.

1963—Come and Get These Memories (Gordy); Heat Wave (– Beard; + Betty Kelly [b. Sep. 16, 1944, Detroit], voc.)

1965—Dance Party 1966—Greatest Hits; Watchout!

1967—Live! (– Kelly; + Lois Reeves, voc.) 1968—Ridin' High

1969—(– Ashford; + Sandra Tilley [d. 1981], voc.) Sugar n'

Spice 1970—Natural Resources 1972—Black Magic

1974—Anthology 1980—Motown Superstar Series, vol. 11

(Motown) 1986—Compact Command Performance

1993—Live Wire! The Singles, 1962–1972; Motown Legends

1998—The Ultimate Collection.

Martha Reeves solo: 1974—Produced by Richard Perry (MCA)

1976—The Rest of My Life (Arista) 1978—We Meet Again (Fantasy) 1980—Gotta Keep Moving.

Driven by Martha Reeves' soulful, brassy lead vocals, the Vandellas became Motown's earthier, more aggressive "girl group" alternative to the Supremes. Their biggest hits, like "Dancing in the Street" and "Heat Wave," are among the most popular dance records of the '60s.

Reeves, Beard, and Ashford sang as the Del-Phis in high school and cut one single on Check-Mate Records, a subsidiary of Chess. Reeves had also sung professionally under the stage name Martha LaVaille. In 1961 Reeves got a job at Motown in the A&R department as secretary to Motown A&R director William "Mickey" Stevenson. One day Motown head Berry Gordy Jr. needed background singers in short order for a session; Reeves and her friends were called in. They sang behind Marvin Gaye on "Stubborn Kind of Fellow" and "Hitch Hike" before recording "I'll Have to Let Him Go" as Martha and the Vandellas, taking their new name from Detroit's Van Dyke Street and Reeves' favorite singer, Della Reese.

Their first hit, a beat ballad called "Come and Get These Memones" (#29 pop, #6 R&B, 1963), was followed by two explosive Holland-Dozier-Holland dance records: "Heat Wave" (#4 pop, #1 R&B, 1963) and "Quicksand" (#8 pop, 1963). After being turned down by Kim Weston, "Dancing in the Street" (cowritten by Weston's husband, Mickey Stevenson, and Marvin Gaye) was given to Martha and the Vandellas; they turned it into their biggest hit (#2 pop, 1964). Their other big hits included "Nowhere to Run" (#8 pop, #5 R&B, 1965) and "I'm Ready for Love" (#9 pop, #2 R&B, 1966). "Jimmy Mack" (#10 pop, #1 R&B, 1967) and "Honey Chile" (#11 pop, #5 R&B, 1967) were the last Holland-Dozier-Holland compositions they recorded, and were their last big hits.

By 1967 the group was billed as Martha Reeves and the Vandellas. Annette Beard retired in 1963 and was replaced by former Velvelette Betty Kelly; when Kelly left four years later, Reeves' younger sister Lois took her place. Rosalind Ashford quit the group in 1969 and was replaced by another ex-Velvelette, Sandra Tilley (who had also been one of the Orlons of "South Street" fame). Tilley died during surgery for a brain tumor in 1981. The group broke up in 1973 after giving a farewell performance on December 21, 1972, at Detroit's Cobo Hall. Lois Reeves went on to work with Al Green.

As recounted in her 1994 autobiography, Dancing in the Street (cowritten with Mark Bego), Reeves believed that her group's success was undermined by Motown and Berry Gordy Jr.'s obsession with the Supremes. For example, "Jimmy Mack" was held back from release for two years because it sounded too much like the Supremes' then-current singles. The Vandellas and the Supremes' rivalry extended beyond the charts; between Diana Ross and Reeves, it was sometimes personal. A strong personality, Reeves clashed with Gordy, often demanding answers to business questions most other Motown artists didn't ask until years after they left the label. Struggling to maintain a hectic schedule of recording and performing, Reeves became addicted to a range of psychoactive prescription drugs, exacerbating emotional problems that culminated in at least two nervous breakdowns and a period of institutionalization. She has lived drug-free since 1977. In 1989 she, Beard, and Ashford sued Motown for back royalties.

In 1974 Reeves signed with MCA. Her solo debut, produced by Richard Perry, contained a minor hit in "Power of Love." Although that album, as well as her subsequent solo releases, have been critically acclaimed, she never attained the success she had enjoyed with the Vandellas. She continues to tour and record; sometimes the Vandellas consist of her sisters Lois and Delphine. On special occasions, she performs with Beard and Ashford. In 1995 Kate Pierson and Fred Schneider of the B-52's inducted the trio into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

Ricky Martin

Born Enrique Martin Morales IV, Dec. 24, 1971, San Juan, P.R.
1991—Ricky Martin (Sony Discos) 1993—Me Amaras
1995—A Medio Vivir 1998—Vuelve 1999—Ricky Martin
(C2/Columbia) 2000—Sound Loaded (Columbia).

Out of the Latin pop singers that seduced America in 1999—Marc Anthony, Enrique Iglesias, and Jennifer Lopez, to name a few—Ricky Martin emerged as the most successful. By the end of the year, his good looks and inescapable "Livin' la Vida Loca" had propelled Martin—already a huge hit in the rest of the world—to megastar status in the States.

Singing and acting since he was six years old, Martin joined Puerto Rico's premier boy band, Menudo, in 1984. The singer left the band five years later, having reached the maximum age allowed for Menudo members. (To keep its perennially young image, the band dictated that no boy in its rotating lineup could be over the age of 16.) By 1994, Martin had relocated to California and landed a part on the soap opera General Hospital, followed by a 1996 stint on Broadway in Les Misérables. Meanwhile, beginning in 1991, Martin released four Spanish-language albums, all of which sold well. His fourth, Vuelve, went to #1 on the Latin chart and yielded the 1998 World Cup anthem, "La Copa de la Vida (The Cup of Life)," which topped the singles charts in more than 30 countries and, having sold 11 million copies internationally, is the biggest-selling single in the history of Columbia Records. In 1999 Martin gained widespread exposure in the U.S. via an incendiary performance at the Grammy Awards ceremony, at which he also received a Grammy for Best Latin Pop Performance. His first English-language album, Ricky Martin (#1, 1999) followed, its kickoff single, "Livin' la Vida Loca," sat at #1 for five weeks and became the fourth biggest-selling single in the history of the Hot 100. Martin released Sound Loaded (#4) at the end of 2000, which yielded only one hit single, "She Bangs" (#12, 2000). A duet with Christina Aguilera, "Nobody Wants to Be Lonely" (#43, 2001), was a moderate hit.

John Martyn

Born 1948, Glasgow, Scot.

1968—London Conversation (Island); The Tumbler 1970—The Road to Ruin; Stormbringer (Warner Bros.) 1971—Bless the Weather (Island) 1973—Solid Air; Inside Out 1975—Sunday's Child; Live at Leeds 1977—So Far, So Good; One World 1980—Grace and Danger (Antilles) 1981—Glorious Fool (Duke) 1982—Well Kept Secret (Duke/Antilles) 1983—Philentropy (Body Swerve) 1984—Sapphire (Island) 1986—Piece by Piece; Foundations; BBC Radio 1 Live in Concert (BBC Prod., U.K.) 1990—The Apprentice (Off Beat) 1991—Cooltide 1993—No Little Boy (Mesa Blue Moon); Couldn't Love You More 1994—Sweet Little Mysteries: The Island Anthology (Island) 1996—And (Go! Discs) 1998—Live (Resurgent); The Church With One Bell (Thirsty Ear); Live at Bristo (Blueprint) 1999—Dirty Down and Live: Shaw Theatre London, 1990 2000—Glasgow Walker.

Though never a commercial success, John Martyn's eccentric brand of folk—elliptical songwriting, intimately bluesy singing, heavily jazz-flavored music—has held steady appeal for critics and fans. Signed as Island's first white solo artist, Martyn, as early as 1968's The Tumbler, caused something of a stir in British folk circles by working with jazz reedman Harold McNair. Bless the Weather fully extended the jazz tendencies, while Inside Out and Solid Air (its title track a eulogy for Martyn's friend musician Nick Drake) found him using hypnotically repeated melodies and echoplexed acoustic guitar. With his wife, Beverly, Martyn produced two other jazz-inflected discs, Stormbringer and The Road to Ruin.

One World introduced a new ethno-eclecticism; Martyn had spent time in Jamaica with reggae producers Lee Perry and Jack Ruby. In 1980, after a three-year absence due to substance abuse, Martyn delivered a crucial breakthrough with Grace and Danger, featuring the percussion, vocals, and production of longtime fan Phil Collins. Glorious Fool, featuring Eric Clapton; Well Kept Secret; the live Philentropy; and Sapphire (its relative ebullience a tribute to Martyn's new marriage) continued the progression—traces of folk influence remained, but his sound now had greater mainstream pull. In the late '80s Martyn's alcohol problems resurfaced; he reemerged strongly, however, with The Apprentice and Cooltide. He began recording for U.S. independent Mesa Blue Moon in 1993. After a three-year hiatus in the mid-'90s, he returned with And, which forefronted jazz and trip-hop influences, followed by a set of cover songs, The Church With One Bell. In 2000 he reached a new audience by contributing a song to the soundtrack of the film The Talented Mr. Ripley.

The Marvelettes

Formed 1960, Inkster, MI

Gladys Horton (b. 1944); Katherine Anderson (b. 1944), voc.;
Georgia Dobbins (a.k.a. Georgeanna, a.k.a. Tillman, b. 1944;

d. Jan. 6, 1980, Detroit, MI), voc.; Juanita Cowart (b. 1944), voc.; Wanda Young (b. 1944), voc.
 1961—Please Mr. Postman (Tamla); The Marvelettes Sing; Playboy 1963—(- Dobbins; - Cowart) Marvelous Marvelettes
 1966—Marvelettes Greatest Hits 1967—Marvelettes
 1968—Sophisticated Soul 1969—(- Horton; + Anne Bogan, voc.; - Young) In Full Bloom 1970—Return of the Marvelettes
 1975—Anthology (Motown) 1986—Compact Command
Performance 1998—The Ultimate Collection.

Among Motown's female vocal groups, the Marvelettes were the only one whose early sound was pure girl group: girlish and sweet as opposed to sophisticated (like the Supremes) or soulful (like Martha Reeves and the Vandellas). The original Marvelettes were founded by Gladys Horton, a 15-year-old high school student who, together with four girlfriends from Inkster High School, decided to enter a school talent contest. The acts who placed first through third were allowed to audition for Motown talent scouts; the Marvels, as they were then called, came in fourth (though members have since claimed first). Nonetheless, they did audition for a Motown scout, who advised them to develop original material. Dobbins rewrote "Please Mr. Postman," a song a neighbor named William Garrett (who happened to be a mail carrier) gave her. "Postman"—which features Marvin Gaye on drums—has the distinction of being not only the Marvelettes' debut recording and their first and biggest hit, but Motown's first #1 pop record. The song stayed on the chart for almost six months.

The next year proved their most successful, with "Playboy" (#7 pop, #4 R&B), "Beechwood 4-5789" (#17 pop, #7 R&B), "Someday, Someway" (#9 R&B), and "Strange I Know" (#10 R&B). "Too Many Fish in the Sea" (#25 pop, #15 R&B), "I'll Keep Holding On" (#11 R&B), and "Danger Heartbreak Dead Ahead" (#11 R&B) were their 1965 hits. In 1963 both Dobbins and Cowart quit the group due to the strain of touring. Florence Ballard of the Supremes occasionally subbed on tours. Thereafter, the Marvelettes continued as a trio.

Many Motown historians assert that the Marvelettes were not as well promoted as some of the label's other female acts, specifically the Supremes and the Vandellas. Ironically, in 1963 the trio refused to record a Holland-Dozier-Holland song entitled "Baby Love." When recorded by the Supremes, "Baby Love" turned out to be one of 1964's biggest hits and one of Motown's best sellers and the first of that group's string of a dozen #1 hits.

Over the next two years, the Marvelettes, with Wanda Young Rogers (she married Miracle Bobby Rogers; they've since divorced), regained the pop chart with three of Smokey Robinson's most notable productions: "Don't Mess With Bill" (#7 pop, #3 R&B, 1966), "The Hunter Gets Captured by the Game" (#13 pop, #2 R&B, 1967), and "My Baby Must Be a Magician" (#17 pop, 1968, #8 R&B, 1967). Robinson's "Here I Am Baby" (#14 R&B, 1968) and Ashford and Simpson's "Destination: Anywhere" (#28 R&B) marked the end of the Marvelettes' most lucrative years. Interestingly, while most Motown groups duplicated their success in the U.K., the Marvelettes had just one Top 20 hit there, Van McCoy's airy ballad "When You're Young and in Love." By this time Horton (who along with Young had been a lead singer) had left, and the numerous personnel changes that followed reduced the group to nothing more than a name.

In 1980 Dobbins, who had married the Contours' Billy Gordon, died in her mother's Detroit home of sickle-cell anemia. Wanda Young Rogers has continued to work on and off with lineups of the Marvelettes, and several members have recorded for the British Motorcity label. A group, now featuring Horton and Young as sometime "special guests," continues to perform.

Richard Marx

Born Richard Noel Marx, Sep. 16, 1963, Chicago, IL
 1987—Richard Marx (EMI/Manhattan) 1989—Repeat Offender 1991—Rush Street (Capitol) 1994—Paid Vacation 1997—Flesh and Bone; Greatest Hits 2000—Days of Avalon (Signal 21).

The son of a jingle-composing father and a jingle-singing mother, it was perhaps inevitable that Richard Marx would create '70s-style hook-filled pop. With his good looks, nice-guy image, and gift for catchy melodies, Marx became a sizable MTV star in the late '80s.

After accompanying his parents to recording studios, Marx began singing on commercial jingles himself at age five. As a teenager he began writing songs, and at age 18, through a series of acquaintances, he managed to get a demo to Lionel Richie, then a member of the Commodores. Richie encouraged Marx to come to L.A., there he sang backup on such Richie solo hits as "All Night Long (All Night)" and "Running With the Night," and wrote songs with Kenny Rogers ("What About Me") and for Chicago. After writing a song for Staying Alive, the John Travolta sequel to Saturday Night Fever, he met the female lead, Cynthia Rhodes (best known for her dancing in Toto's "Rosanna" video), whom he would marry in 1989.

After five years of trying, Marx finally landed his own deal and promptly produced an eponymous double-platinum debut album (#8, 1987) that yielded four hit singles: the Eagles-like "Don't Mean Nothing" (#3, 1987), with slide guitar from ex-Eagle Joe Walsh; "Should've Known Better" (#3, 1987), with backing vocals by ex-Tube Fee Waybill and ex-Eagle Timothy B. Schmit; "Endless Summer Nights" (#2, 1988); and "Hold On to the Nights" (#1, 1988). The triple-platinum Repeat Offender produced such hits as "Satisfied" (#1, 1989), "Right Here Waiting" (#1, 1989), "Angelia" (#4, 1989), "Too Late to Say Goodbye" (#12, 1990), and "Children of the Night" (#13, 1990). The latter celebrated, and raised some funds for, the L.A. organization of the same name, which aided teen prostitutes and runaway children.

Rush Street (#35, 1991) was promoted with a publicity-stunt tour in which Marx played five coast-to-coast concerts—at airports in Baltimore, New York, Cleveland, Chicago, and L.A.—in 24 hours; its hit singles included

"Keep Coming Back" (#12, 1991), "Hazard" (#9, 1992), and "Take This Heart" (#20, 1992). He returned in 1994 with Paid Vacation (#37, 1994). The R&B-flavored Flesh and Bone followed three years later, charting with the single "Until I Find You Again" (#42, 1997) and featuring guest vocalists Luther Vandross and Randy Jackson. Marx also dueted with Donna Lewis on "At the Beginning" (#45, 1997), from the soundtrack to the animated film Anastasia. Marx switched labels for his next release, 2000's Days of Avalon.

Dave Mason

Born May 10, 1946, Worcester, Eng.
 1970—Alone Together (Blue Thumb) 1971—Dave Mason and Cass Elliot 1972—Headkeeper; Dave Mason Is Alive!
 1973—It's Like You Never Left (Columbia); The Best of Dave Mason (Blue Thumb); Dave Mason (Columbia) 1975—Split Coconut 1976—Certified Live 1977—Let It Flow 1978—Mariposa de Oro 1980—Old Crest on a New Wave 1988—Two Hearts (MCA/Voyager) 1999—Ultimate Collection (Hip-O/Universal); Live: 40,000 Headmen Tour (with Jim Capaldi) (Receiver, U.K.) 2000—Super Hits (Columbia).

Singer, songwriter, and guitarist Dave Mason has gone from being an integral early member of the acclaimed British jazz-pop band Traffic, to a top-selling solo act, to performing beer commercials when his solo albums were faltering, to briefly joining Fleetwood Mac.

By the mid-'60s, Mason was working in a band with drummer Jim Capaldi. In 1967 the pair met Steve Winwood, and they formed Traffic [see entry]. Mason's songwriting gave the band its first big commercial successes in the U.K. with "Hole in My Shoe," "You Can All Join In," and "Feel'in' Alright" (later a Top 40 hit for Joe Cocker). However, Mason's pop-rock sensibility clashed with Winwood's jazz/blues leanings, and Mason was in and out of the band frequently, finally leaving for good in late 1968. He coproduced (with Jim Miller) the debut LP by the British band Family [see entry], Music in a Doll's House, then formed a short-lived band with Capaldi, Traffic reedman Chris Wood, and keyboardist Wynder K. Frog.

Having met seminal country-rocker Gram Parsons while touring with Traffic, Mason went to L.A. There Parsons introduced him to Delaney and Bonnie Bramlett, and he joined their Friends Tour of 1969, much of which was shared with Eric Clapton and Blind Faith (which included Winwood). Back in L.A., Mason recorded Alone Together (#22, 1970) with Capaldi, Leon Russell, Rita Coolidge, Delaney and Bonnie, and others. The LP stayed on the album chart over six months and went gold. The opening track, "Only You Know and I Know," was a #42 single for Mason in 1970; Delaney and Bonnie's version hit #20. Mason toured the U.S. much of the year, taking time off in June to play a London show with Clapton's Derek and the Dominos at their Lyceum debut.

In the summer of 1970 Mason renewed an old acquaintance with Mama Cass Elliot, forming a duo act that debuted at L.A.'s Hollywood Bowl that September, and recording a poorly received LP together. When the partnership dissolved, Mason briefly returned to England to guest with Traffic for a tour that resulted in the live LP Welcome to the Canteen, and he played on George Harrison's All Things Must Pass.

From that point on, Mason's solo career was erratic, though many of his subsequent LPs sold well. Headkeeper was half new material, half live renditions of earlier songs, while Is Alive was all of the latter. Best of furthered the apparent holding pattern, though It's Like You Never Left (#50, 1973), with support from Graham Nash and Stevie Wonder, and later albums saw Mason recoup somewhat. Dave Mason (#25, 1974) and Split Coconut (#27, 1975) were the two highest-charting albums after his solo debut. He had his biggest solo hit in 1977, when "We Just Disagree," from Let It Flow (#37, 1977), reached #12. By late 1981 Mason could be heard singing radio commercials for Miller Beer.

Since 1983 he has continued to tour with his band, but his chart success has been spotty at best. In early 1994 it was announced that he had joined Fleetwood Mac [see entry]; he toured with the band that summer, then played on its 1995 release Time. Mason resumed his solo career in 1996. In 1999 he toured with Capaldi, with whom he released a live album.

Massive Attack

Formed 1987, Bristol, Eng.
 Daddy G (b. Grant Marshall, Dec. 18, 1959, Bristol), voc., prod.; 3-D (b. Robert Del Naja, Jan. 21, 1965, Brighton, Eng.), voc., prod.; Mushroom (b. Andrew Vowles, ca. 1968), prod.
 1991—Blue Lines (Virgin) 1994—Protection 1995—No Protection: Massive Attack vs. Mad Professor (Circa) 1998—Mezzanine (Virgin); Singles 90/98 (- Mushroom).

With their roots in the Bristol, England, club scene of the early '80s, the members of Massive Attack originated trip-hop, one of the most influential sounds of the '90s, combining the rhythmic urgency of hip-hop, the freewheeling samples of the DJ's craft, soul-rich melodies, and dub-reggae's hefty, intoxicating bottom end. The group began in 1983 as a loose collective of singers, rappers, DJs, and producers that staged parties under the name the Wild Bunch. Included in its ranks were Mushroom (Andrew Vowles) and Daddy G (Grant Marshall), as well as Nellee Hooper (later of Soul II Soul, and a producer for Madonna, Björk, and others), and Tricky [see entry]. The Wild Bunch released a 1986 cover of Burt Bacharach's "The Look of Love," which became a European dance-club sensation, just as legal authorities began to clamp down on the Bristol party circuit. In 1987 graffiti artist 3-D (Robert Del Naja) joined Daddy G and Mushroom to form Massive Attack. A series of singles led to the 1991 release of Blue Lines, which featured an array of vocalists—including Shara Nelson, Tricky, and reggae singer Horace Andy—and promoted a somnambulatory beat that ran counter to the hyped-up dance rhythms of techno. On its 1994 followup, Protection, the group enlisted Everything But the Girl vocalist Tracey Thorn, who lent a jazzier feel and contributed songs, with additional vocals from Andy, Tricky, and Nigerian singer Nicolette. The next year saw the release of No Protection: Massive Attack vs. Mad Professor, a radical remix of Protection in league with the antic British reggae producer. Three years later, the group followed with Mezzanine (#60, pop), with guest vocalists Andy, Elizabeth Fraser of the Cocteau Twins, and Sara Jay. The same year, an 11-CD box set, Singles 90/98, compiled remixes of a career's worth of singles. Mushroom left to pursue a solo career. As of 2001, the remaining duo was back in the studio, preparing a new album.

Master P

Born Percy Miller, Apr. 29, 1970, New Orleans, LA
 1991—Get Away Clean (In a Minute) 1992—Mama's Bad Boy; The Ghetto's Tryin' to Kill Me (No Limit) 1995—99 Ways to Die 1996—Ice Cream Man 1997—Ghetto D 1998—MP Da Last Don 1999—Only God Can Judge Me 2000—Ghetto Postage.

Epitomizing the rapper as self-made mogul, Master P came out of seemingly nowhere—which, in hip-hop terms, was New Orleans—in the early '90s. He subsequently created his own sprawling, family-based roster of gangsta rap and R&B acts, whose recordings were churned out at a feverish pace on his independent label, No Limit. Though best known for the signature groan of his 1998 platinum hit "Make 'Em Say Uhh!" (#16 pop, #18 R&B), P won at least as much attention as a businessman. An entrepreneur with interests in films, toys, clothing, and sports management, P made the cover of Fortune magazine in 1999 as one of the richest Americans under age 40, ranking #28 with a net worth of $361 million.

Raised by his grandmother in the notoriously tough Caliope projects in New Orleans's Third Ward, P—born Percy Miller—was exposed to the street life he would later draw on in his music. In 1988 his brother Kevin was shot to death in a drug-related incident. He moved to Richmond, California, where his mother lived, and opened the No Limit record store with $10,000 from a malpractice settlement after the death of his grandfather. He released two unnoticed albums in the '90s. Convinced of the strong market for gangsta rap, P moved back to New Orleans, where he founded No Limit as a label and in 1992 released The Ghetto's Tryin' to Kill Me, the first of scores of unapologetically hard-core, funk-driven underground rap albums to be recorded for his imprint. In addition to his own albums—99 Ways to Die (#41 R&B, 1995), the gold Ice Cream Man (#26 pop, #3 R&B, 1996), the double-platinum Ghetto D (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1997), the quadruple-platinum MP Da Last Don (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1998), Only God Can Judge Me (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1999), and Ghetto Postage (#26 pop, #2 R&B, 2000)—P recorded three albums with the trio Tru (featuring his younger brothers, also No Limit solo artists, Silk the Shocker and C-Murder): True (#25 R&B, 1995), Tru 2 Da Game (#8 pop, #2 R&B, 1995), and Da Crime Family (#5 pop, #2 R&B, 1999). P also oversaw recordings from Snoop Dogg, Mystikal, Mia X and Fiend, and others. Between occasional efforts to initiate a second career as a professional basketball player (he had won a sports scholarship to the University of Houston prior to starting his recording career) and negotiating the NFL contract of Heisman Trophy winner Ricky Williams. P also directed the semiautobiographical, straight-to-video release I'm Bout It (1997) and produced the theatrical releases I Got the Hook Up (1998) and Foolish (1999) with comedian Eddie Griffin. Other productions include the straight-to-video action dramas Da Game of Life (1998) and Da Last Don (1998).

Master P

matchbox twenty (originally matchbox 20)

Formed 1995, Orlando, FL

Rob Thomas (b. Feb. 14, 1972, Ger.), voc.; Kyle Cook (b. Aug. 29, 1975, IN), gr., voc.; Adam Gaynor (b. Nov. 26, 1963), gr., voc.; Brian Yale (b. Oct. 24, 1968), bass; Paul Doucette (b. Aug. 22, 1972, Pittsburgh, PA), drums.

1996—Yourself or Someone Like You (Lava/Atlantic) 2000—mad season by matchbox twenty.

Sturdy if unassuming musicianship, relentless touring, and the radio-ready songs of lead singer Rob Thomas made matchbox twenty a surprise success in the late '90s. Its 1996 debut album, Yourself or Someone Like You, had gone platinum 10 times over by 2000.

Dividing his youth between Florida and South Carolina before dropping out of high school to sing in bands throughout the Southeast, Rob Thomas began playing in Orlando with bassist Brian Yale and drummer Paul Doucette. The three left the band Tabitha's Secret to form matchbox 20 with guitarists Kyle Cook and Adam Gaynor. Enlisting Collective Soul producer and keyboardist Matt Serletic to produce their demos, they crafted guitar rock that fused a '90s grunge edge with a '70s stadium-rock accessibility.

Signed in 1996, the band released a debut that took a while to catch on but, boosted by heavy MTV rotation, stayed on the charts for nearly two years. Yourself or Someone Like You, filled with such crowd-pleasing singles as "Push," "3 A.M.," "Real World" (#38, 1998) and "Back 2 Good" (#29, 1998) found the band becoming a favorite among those alternative-rock fans who responded to a more commercial version of a sound that crossed the styles of such predecessors as R.E.M. and Pearl Jam.

The lyrics to "Push"—"I wanna push you around"—provoked the ire of women's advocacy groups, and the band was sued in 1998 by ex-members of Tabitha's Secret for a share of song profits, but in general matchbox 20 kept a fairly low profile for so successful an outfit. By 1998, it had been voted Best New Band in the ROLLING STONE annual readers poll, opened for the Rolling Stones' Bridges to Babylon Tour in Texas, and had amassed a strong following in North America and in Australia and New Zealand. That year also it contributed, along with artists like Elton John and Jewel, to Legacy: A Tribute to Fleetwood Mac's Rumours, and Thomas was featured in People magazine's "50 Most Beautiful People in the World" issue.

In 1999 "Smooth," sung and cowritten by Thomas, was featured as the lead single for Carlos Santana's phenomenally successful Supernatural; as a result, Thomas was named BMI's Pop Songwriter of the Year in 1999, and won three Grammy Awards in 2000 for Song of the Year, Record of the Year, and Best Pop Collaboration With Vocals.

In 2000 the quintet released its eagerly anticipated sophomore effort, mad season by matchbox twenty (#3). The album featured a slight name change (from matchbox "20" to "twenty") and music that again asserted Thomas' gift for penning hook-laden singles.

Material: See Bill Laswell

Johnny Mathis

Born John Royce Mathis, Sep. 30, 1935, San Francisco, CA 1957—Warm (Columbia) 1958—Merry Christmas; Swing Softly; Open Fire, Two Guitars 1959—Heavenly; Faithfully 1963—Johnny's Newest Hits 1975—Feelings 1978—You Light Up My Life; That's What Friends Are For (with Deniece Williams) 1981—The First 25 Years—The Silver Anniversary Album 1984—Live 1986—The Hollywood Musicals 1993—How Do You Keep the Music Playing?; The Music of Johnny Mathis: A Personal Collection 1996—All About Love 1998—Because You Loved Me: Songs of Diane Warren 2000—Mathis on Broadway.

Johnny Mathis' smooth ballad singing and distinctive, nasal tenor voice have made him, by some people's figures, the second most consistently charted album artist in popular music, just after Frank Sinatra. He is said to have become one of America's first black millionaires. His Greatest Hits album from 1958 spent 490 weeks—nine and a half years—on the chart.

Mathis' parents worked as domestics for a San Francisco millionaire. At 13 Johnny took professional opera lessons, though his early goal was to become a physical education teacher. (In 1956, while attending San Francisco State College, he was invited to the Olympic track trials held in Berkeley.) Singing in a jam session at San Francisco's 440 Club, Mathis was discovered by Columbia Records executive George Avakian, who sent him to New York to record. His first recordings were jazz influenced, but Columbia A&R head Mitch Miller told him to switch to pop ballads.

His first hit came just one year later in July 1957, "Wonderful Wonderful" (#14), followed by "It's Not for Me to Say" (#5) and his big #1 in November, "Chances Are." Most of Mathis' big hits, including "The Twelfth of Never" (#9, 1957), "Misty" (#12, 1959), and "What Will Mary Say" (#9, 1963), were in the late '50s and early '60s, though his albums sold consistently well thereafter (always at least 250,000 copies, as he covered whatever MOR songs were hits at the time). He captured younger ears and hearts with his 1978 duet with Deniece Williams, "Too Much, Too Little, Too Late," which soared to #1 on both soul and pop charts (he and Williams also recorded "Without Us," used as the theme for the TV show Family Ties). He made some unsuccessful stabs at rock and postdisco dance recordings before returning to his trademark romantic pop balladry in the late '80s. The compilation A Personal Collection included a Mathis duet with Barbra Streisand, who had long cited him as a favorite and chief influence, on a medley from West Side Story.

Into the '90s, Mathis was still headlining Atlantic City and Las Vegas resorts—even selling out three shows at New York's Carnegie Hall in October 1993—entrancing sold-out crowds of middle-aged people, many of whom had shared their first kiss, or conceived their children, to the (recorded) sound of his voice.

Dave Matthews Band

Formed 1991, Charlottesville, VA
 Dave Matthews (b. Jan. 9, 1967, Johannesburg, S.A.), voc., gtr.; Boyd Tinsley (b. May 16, 1964, Charlottesville), violin; LeRoi Moore (b. Sep. 7, 1961, Durham, NC), keys; Peter Dinklage (b. Mar. 19, 1969, New York, NY), kbds.; Stefan Lessard (b. June 4, 1974, Anaheim, CA), bass; Carter Beauford (b. Nov. 2, 1958, Charlottesville), drums.
 1993—(—Griesar) Remember Two Things (Bama Rags)
 1994—Under the Table and Dreaming (RCA) 1996—Crash
 1997—Live at Red Rocks 8.15.95 (Bama Rags/RCA) 1998—Before These Crowded Streets (RCA) 1999—Listener Supported (Bama Rags/RCA) 2001—Everyday (RCA).
 Dave Matthews and Tim Reynolds (b. Dec. 15, 1957, Weisbaden, Ger., gtr.): 1999—Live at Luther College.

The Dave Matthews Band emblazoned the '90s with its hybrid of jazz, folk, and world music. By the end of the decade, Matthews' introspective lyrics and distinctive vocal timbre resonated through capacity stadiums across the U.S., as the DMB (an acronym used by avid followers) achieved an arena-rock magnitude equal to that of the Rolling Stones, Led Zepelin, and the Grateful Dead.

The son of a physicist father and an architect mother, Matthews spent his formative years in Johannesburg, South Africa, and Westchester County, New York. After being drafted by the South African military to fight in favor of an apartheid political system at the age of 18, Matthews retreated with his family to the U.S. for good and soon ended up in Charlottesville, Virginia. There he began writing songs on his acoustic guitar during the day and working as a bartender at Miller's—Charlottesville's premier bar for local musicians—by night. Matthews eventually began jamming with top-notch players who frequently gigged at Miller's: guru trumpeter John D'earth, fusion drummer Carter Beauford, and reeds player LeRoi Moore. By spring 1991, the Dave Matthews Band played its first concert at a rooftop party in Charlottesville with its soon-to-be permanent lineup: Beauford, Moore, virtuosic violinist Boyd Tinsley, and bassist Stefan Lessard.

In the tradition of the Grateful Dead and Phish, the Dave Matthews Band built up a fan base by allowing fans to record and circulate tapes of the band's performances. Fan favorites like "Ants Marching" and "Tripping Billies" were revamped nightly as the band opened up ample musical space for improvisation. The band's first record, 1993's Remember Two Things, was an indie success on the college charts and eventually went gold. RCA signed the band and released Under the Table and Dreaming (#11, 1994), which yielded the hits "What Would You Say," "Ants Marching," and "Satellite." Within a year, Under the Table and Dreaming went four times platinum.

After playing on the jam-band-friendly H.O.R.D.E. summer tour with Blues Traveler and the Allman Brothers and headlining a few national tours, the Dave Matthews Band recorded 1996's Crash, which debuted at #2 on the pop albums chart. Matthews and brethren then proceeded to generate a string of live recordings as a way of celebrating the band's live aesthetic. Live at Red Rocks 8/15/95 (#3, 1997), Live at Luther College (#2, 1999) (recorded on one of Matthews' acoustic-only tours with guitarist and longtime collaborator Tim Reynolds), and Listener Supported (#15, 1999) all document Matthews' commitment to his ever-swelling, increasingly diversified fan base. Meanwhile, 1998's studio album, Before These Crowded Streets, a series of solemn narratives about a tormented man's yearnings for his lover, debuted at the #1 spot on the pop albums chart. The dawning of the new millennium saw Matthews pick up an electric guitar for the first time on a studio recording. Produced and cowritten by Quincy Jones apprentice Glen Ballard, the uncharacteristically giddy Everyday (#1, 2001) signifies the DMB's evolution into a world-class rock band without conceptual boundanes.

Iain Matthews

Born Ian Matthew MacDonald, June 16, 1946, Lincolnshire, Eng. 1970—Matthews Southern Comfort (Uni); Second Spring

(Decca); Later That Same Year (MCA); If You Saw Thro' My Eyes (Vertigo); Tigers Will Survive 1973—Valley Hi (Elektra) 1974—Some Days You Eat the Bear . . . and Some Days the Bear Eats You; Journeys From Gospel Oak (Mooncrest) 1976—Go for Broke (Columbia) 1977—Hit and Run 1978—Stealin' Home (Mushroom) 1979—Siamese Friends 1980—Spot of Interference (RSO) 1988—Walking a Changing Line—The Songs of Jules Shear (Windham Hill) 1990—Pure and Crooked Gold (Gold Castle) 1992—Best of Matthews Southern Comfort (MCA) 1993—The Soul of Many Places (Elektra); The Skeleton Keys (Mesa/Blue Moon) 1994—The Dark Ride (Watermelon) 1996—God Looked Down 1998—Excerpts from Swine Lake (Blue Rose, Ger.) 2000—A Tiniest Wham.

With Hamilton Pool: 1995—Return to Zero (Watermelon).

With Elliott Murphy: 2001—La Terre Commune (Eminent).

A founding member of the seminal British folk-rock band Fairport Convention [see entry], Matthews left that band in 1969 after its second LP. (He used his middle name for a surname to avoid confusion with King Crimson's Ian McDonald; in the past Matthews has spelled his first name as "Ian"). He formed his own group, Matthews Southern Comfort, which hit with a cover of Joni Mitchell's "Woodstock" (#23 U.S., #1 U.K., 1971). In addition to Matthews' songwriting, vocals, and guitar, the ensemble also featured pedal steel guitarist Gordon Huntley, who went on to play on Rod Stewart's solo album Never a Dull Moment. Matthews left Southern Comfort in late 1970 for a solo career; in 1972 he formed Plainsong, which recorded In Search of Amelia Earhart (Elektra) before disbanding. He moved to California and continued recording solo albums.

Despite the Fairport association, Matthews has never considered himself a folkie: his first band, Pyramid, was a surf group. Yet he did record Siamese Friends, an album of traditional music. Still, most of his efforts feature country-flavored pop that's suited to his high tenor voice. He had a hit in 1979 with "Shake It" (#13). In the late '70s he moved to Seattle, where he formed the band Hi-Fi with David Surkamp, former vocalist with St. Louis progressive rockers Pavlov's Dog. Hi-Fi released a live EP (Hi-Fi Demonstration Record) for First American-SP&S. Matthews worked as a talent scout for Island Music and Windham Hill from 1983 to 1988. In 1988 the singer/guitarist recorded Walking a Changing Line, Windham Hill's first all-vocal album. Now a resident of Austin, Texas, he remains as active and as eclectic as ever. He regrouped Plainsong for a string of '90s albums, commencing with 1992's Dark Side of the Room. The band dissolved again in 2000. Matthews' 1993 solo effort, The Skeleton Keys, was his first album to contain all original material.

The Mavericks

Formed 1989, Miami, FL

Raul Malo (b. Raul Martinez, Aug. 7, 1965, Miami), voc., gtr.,

Robert Reynolds (b. Apr. 30, 1962, Kansas City, MO), bass; Paul

Deakin (b. Sep. 2, 1959, Plainsville, OH), drums; Ben Peeler, gtr., lap steel, mandolin, banjo.

1990—The Mavericks (Y&T) 1991—(- Peeler; + David Lee Holt, gtr.) 1992—From Hell to Paradise (MCA) 1994—(- Holt; + Nick Kane [b. Nicholas James Kane, Aug. 21, 1954, Jerusalem, GA], gtr.) What a Crying Shame 1995—Music for All Occasions 1998—Trampoline 1999—Super Colossal Smash Hits of the 90s: The Best of the Mavericks (Mercury).

The Mavericks started out playing honky-tonk in Miami bars, only to develop an expansive mix of country, rock & roll, Cuban, and lounge music that would dazzle and, later, bewilder the Nashville establishment. It would also win the band quite a few rock and pop fans in the process.

The group coalesced when bass player Robert Reynolds convinced longtime pal Paul Deakin, a drummer with both a degree in jazz and local punk cred, to start a country band with him. The plan was for Reynolds to play rhythm guitar and sing, but the arrival of Raul Malo, the Mavericks' original bassist, soon changed that. The son of Cuban expatriates, Malo proved himself to be an emotive crooner in the Roy Orbison mold; it wasn't long before he was fronting the band.

In 1990, with lead guitarist Ben Peeler on board, the Mavericks released their self-titled debut album on the local Y&T label. Major-label country-record execs soon got wind of the project and flew the group to Nashville to play a high-profile showcase, at which MCA offered the Mavericks a contract. In 1992, with David Lee Holt replacing Peeler, the band recorded From Hell to Paradise. The album consisted mostly of Malo's socially conscious originals, including the hard-hitting title track, the saga of his aunt's flight from Cuba to Miami to escape Castro's rule. The record's first single, a turbo-charged cover of Hank Williams' "Hey Good Lookin'," dented the country Top 100 (#74 C&W, 1992).

Looking for a hit, the Mavericks eschewed message songs for crisp, radio-ready fare on 1994's What a Crying Shame (#54 pop, #6 C&W). The group also substituted guitarist Nick Kane for Holt. Both moves paid off when the album yielded a pair of Top 20 country singles, "There Goes My Heart" (#20 C&W, 1994) and "O What a Thrill" (#18 C&W, 1994), the latter written by singer/songwriter Jesse Winchester. Adding keyboardist sideman Jerry Dale McFadden and graduating to headliner status along the way, the group toured hard behind the album, which eventually went platinum. In 1994 Reynolds married country hitmaker Trisha Yearwood; the couple would later divorce.

The Mavericks' next album, Music for All Occasions (#58 pop, #9 C&W, 1995), veered hard into lounge-music territory. It also drew mixed reviews, its detractors dismissing the record as retro kitsch. Nevertheless, the album went gold and produced three more hit singles, including "Here Comes the Rain" (#22 C&W, 1995) and "All You Ever Do Is Bring Me Down" (#13 C&W, 1996). The former won the group a Grammy in 1996. The album also attracted trendy audiences who were popularizing the '50s exotica of Esquivel and Martin Denny.

Trampoline (#96 pop, #9 C&W, 1998), recorded live in a converted Nashville church, proved to be the Mavericks' most ambitious album to date. A kaleidoscopic record that encompassed all of the band's influences and then some, the album was hailed as a triumph by critics and fans but didn't fare as well commercially* as the group's previous two releases, causing the Mavericks and MCA to part company. Guitarist Nick Kane put out a solo album in 1999, while Reynolds and McFadden released a 2000 album as part of Swag, a supergroup of sorts featuring Tom Petersson of Cheap Trick and Ken Coomer of Wilco. Malo participated in the Latin supergroup Los Super Seven, with members of Los Lobos, Caetano Veloso, and Susana Baca, which released Canto in 2001. Later that year he began recording his first solo album.

Maxwell

Born May 23, 1973, Brooklyn, NY

1996—Maxwell's Urban Hang Suite (Columbia) 1997—MTV Unplugged 1998—Embrya.

Maxwell emerged as one of the few artists in the '90s to put the Motown feel back into R&B. The son of a West Indian mother and Puerto Rican father, the Brooklyn native began playing music around the age of 16. After borrowing a Casio keyboard from a friend, Maxwell (his record-label publicist refuses to divulge his birth name) soon became obsessed with writing music. In the early '90s he built up a small following by performing at various Manhattan clubs and handing out tapes to friends and acquaintances.

In 1994 Maxwell signed a deal with Columbia, which released his debut, Maxwell's Urban Hang Suite (#45 pop, #8 R&B, 1996), a collection of soulful compositions packed with romantic imagery and lulling rhythms. "Ascension (Don't Ever Wonder)" (#36 pop, #8 R&B, 1996), the album's first single, and "Sumthin' Sumthin'" (#23 R&B, 1997) took Maxwell's seductive voice to a broad audience. His MTV Unplugged special, which turned into a seven-song album (#53 pop, #15 R&B, 1997), demonstrated Maxwell's Marvin Gaye-like ability to captivate a live audience with smooth vocals, sensual looks, and a formidable backing band. Embrya (#3 pop, #2 R&B, 1998) enjoyed even more commercial success, solidifying Maxwell's star status. In 1999 his "Fortunate" (#4 pop, #1 R&B) was featured on the movie soundtrack Life.

John Mayall/John Mayall's Bluesbreakers

John Mayall, born Nov. 29, 1933, Macclesfield, Eng.

The Bluesbreakers, formed 1963, London, Eng.:

Mayall, kybds., harmonica, voc., gtr.; Davy Graham, gtr.; John McVie (b. Nov. 26, 1945, London), bass; Peter Ward, drums; - Graham; + Bernie Watson, gtr.

1964—(+ Hughie Flint, drums; - Watson; + Roger Dean, gtr.)

1965—John Mayall Plays John Mayall (Decca, U.K.) (- Dean;

+ Eric Clapton [b. Mar. 30, 1945, Ripley, Eng.], gtr.: - Clapton; + various musicians on gtr., including Peter Green [b. Oct. 29, 1946, London], gtr.: - McVie; + Jack Bruce [b. May 14, 1943, Glasgow, Scot.]; + Clapton; - Bruce; + McVie] 1966—Bluesbreakers—John Mayall With Eric Clapton (London) (- Clapton; - Flint; + Aynsley Dunbar [b. Jan. 10, 1946, Lancaster, Eng.], drums) 1967—A Hard Road (- Duribar; + Mick Fleetwood [b. June 24, 1947, Redruth, Eng.], drums; - Fleetwood; - Green; + Mick Taylor [b. Jan. 17, 1948, Welwyn Garden City, Eng.]; + Keef Hartley [b. Mar. 8, 1944, Preston, Eng.], drums; + Chris Mercer, sax; + Rip Kant, sax; - Kant); Crusade; The Blues Alone + Henry Lowther, trumpet; + Dick Heckstall-Smith [b. Sep. 26, 1934, Ludlow, Eng.], sax; - McVie; + Paul Williams, bass; - Williams; + Keith Tillman, bass) 1968—Diary of a Band, vol. 1; Diary of a Band, vol. 2 (- Tillman; + Andy Fraser [b. Aug. 7, 1952, London], bass; - Fraser; + Tony Reeves, bass; - Hartley) Bare Wires (+ Jon Hiseman [b. June 21, 1944, London], drums; - Mercer; - Lowther; - Hiseman; - Heckstall-Smith; + Colin Allen, drums; - Reeves; + Steve Thompson, bass); Blues From Laurel Canyon 1969—(- Taylor; - Allen; + Jon Mark [b. Cornwall, Eng.], gtr.; + Johnny Almond [b. July 20, 1946, Enfield, Eng.], sax) Looking Back: Turning Point 1970—Empty Rooms (Polydor) (- Mark; - Almond; + Harvey Mandel [b. Mar. 11, 1945, Detroit, MI], gtr.; - Thompson; + Alex Dmochowski; - Dmochowski; + Larry Taylor, bass; + Don "Sugarcane" Harris [b. June 18, 1938, Pasadena, CA; d. Nov. 30, 1999, Los Angeles, CA], violin); USA Union 1971—(+ Clapton; + M. Taylor; + Hartley) Back to the Roots (- Clapton; - M. Taylor; - Hartley) Thru the Years (London) (- Mandel; - Harris; + Jimmy McCulloch [b. 1953, Glasgow; d. Sep. 27, 1979, London], gtr.) Memories (Polydor) (- McCulloch; + Freddy Robinson, gtr.; + Blue Mitchell, trumpet; + Ron Selico, bass; + Clifford Solomon, saxes; - Selico; + Hartley) 1972—Jazz-Blues Fusion (+ Victor Gaskin, bass; + Fred Jackson, baritone and tenor saxes; + Charles Owens, tenor and soprano flute; + Ernie Watts, tenor sax; - Solomon; + Red Holloway, flute, saxes) Moving On 1973—The Best of John Mayall (+ D. Harris; - Jackson; - Owens; - Watts) Ten Years Are Gone 1975—(- Mitchell; - Robinson; + Hightide Harris, bass, gtr.; - D. Harris; - Hartley; + Randy Resnick, gtr.; + Soko Richardson, drums) The Latest Edition (- H. Harris; - Resnick; + L. Taylor; - Holloway; + D. Harris; + Dee McKinnie [b. 1950], voc.); + Rick Vito [b. Oct. 13, 1949, Darby, MA], gtr.; + Jay Spell, kybds.) New Year, New Band, New Company (Blue Thumb); Notice to Appear 1976—A Banquet in Blues (ABC) 1977—(- McKinnie; - S. Richardson; - Vito; - D. Harris; + Holloway; + Gary Rowles, gtr.; + Frank Wilson, drums; + Warren Bryant, perc.; + Pepper Watkins, voc.; + Patty Smith, voc.) Lots of People (- Holloway; - Rowles; - Spell; - L. Taylor; - Wilson; - Bryant; - Watkins; - P. Smith; + James Quill Smith, gtr.; + Steve Thompson, bass; + S. Richardson, drums) A Hard Core Package 1978—The Last of the British Blues (group disbands; Bottom Line features nonband musicians) 1979—Bottom Line (DJM) (+ J. Smith; + Vito, gtr.; + Chris Cameron, piano, clarinet; + Christian Mostert, soprano and tenor saxes, flutes; + Angus Thomas, bass; + Ruben Alvarez, drums; + Maggie Parker, voc.); No More Interviews 1980—(- Vito; - Cameron; - Mostert; - Thomas; - Alvarez; + Kevin McCormick, bass; + S. Richardson, drums) Road Show Blues ca. 1981—(- McCormick; - J. Smith; - S. Richardson; - Parker; + Don McMin, gtr.; + Bobby Manuel, gtr.; + Jeff Davis, bass; + Mike Gardner, drums) 1982—(Bluesbreakers reunion lineup: Mayall; McVie; Mick Taylor; Colin Allen) (group disbands) ca. 1984—(lineup: Mayall; Coco Montoya, gtr.; Kal David, gtr.; Willie McNeil, drums; Walter Trout, gtr.; Bobby Haynes, bass) 1985—(- David; - McNeil; + Joe Yuele [b. Jan. 26, 1951, Haverhill, MA], drums) 1986—Behind the Iron Curtain (GNP Crescendo) 1987—The Power of the Blues (Entente, Ger.) 1988—Chicago Line (Island); Archives to Eighties: Featuring Eric Clapton and Mick Taylor (Polydor); Primal Solos (PolyGram) 1990—(- Haynes; + Freebo, bass; - Trout) A Sense of Place (Island) 1991—(- Freebo; + Rick Cortes, bass) 1992—John Mayall: London Blues, 1964–1969 (PolyGram); John Mayall: Room to Move, 1969–1974 1993—Wake Up Call (Silvertone) 1994—The 1982 Reunion Concert (with the 1982 reunion lineup above) (Repertoire); Cross Country Blues (with 1980 and 1984 lineups above) (One Way) (- Montoya; + Buddy Whittington [b. Dec. 28, 1956, Fort Worth, TX], gtr.) 1995—Spinning Coin (Silvertone) 1995—(- Cortes; + John Paulus, bass) 1997—Blues for the Lost Days 1998—As It All Began: The Best of John Mayall and the Bluesbreakers (PolyGram); Drivin' On: The ABC Years 1975–1982 (MCA) 1999—Padlock on the Blues (Padlock) (- Paulus; + Greg Rzab, bass) 2000—Live at the Marquee 1965 (Spitfire) (- Rzab; + Hank Van Sickle [b. Pittsburgh, PA], bass) 2001—Along for the Ride (Eagle/Red Ink).

The father of the British blues movement, John Mayall has also been its hardest perennial, taking the phrase "back to the roots" with more dogged tenaciousness than most. He's been one of the most famous talented scouts in rock music, having discovered many musicians—Eric Clapton, Mick Taylor, Jack Bruce, Keef Hartley, Aynsley Dunbar, Jon Mark, John Almond, Jon Hiseman, Peter Green, Mick Fleetwood, and John McVie—who went on to significant careers of their own. He was also something of an iconoclast. He formed his first band when he was nearly 30, and in the late '60s, when hyperamplification was the rage, Mayall veered toward a subdued acoustic sound. As of this writing, despite closing in on the age of 70, Mayall continues to tour and record.

Mayall began playing guitar and ukulele at age 12, by 14 he was playing boogie-woogie piano as well. After graduating from Manchester Junior School of Art in 1949, he worked briefly as a window dresser. In 1955 he formed his first group, the Powerhouse Four. At age 18 Mayall entered the British army, upon his discharge he returned to art school. After graduating from art school in 1959 he became a successful typographer and graphic artist (he later designed many of his album covers). In 1962 he formed the Blues Syndicate, he moved to London in 1963.

John Mayall and the Bluesbreakers' debut LP was recorded live in December 1964 and originally released only in England. By the time of the second Bluesbreakers LP (the first released in the U.S.), Mayall had been playing music for nearly 20 years. In 1965 Clapton was on guitar, and Jack Bruce had replaced McVie. Decca dropped the group, and around this time Mayall recorded a single, "I'm Your Witch-doctor" (produced by Jimmy Page), for Immediate. Clapton had left the group shortly before, and McVie returned in 1966 to join Green on guitar and Hughie Flint (later with McGuinness Flint) on drums. In the meantime, Bluesbreakers—John Mayall With Eric Clapton became Mayall's first major hit. Green, McVie, and Mick Fleetwood left after 1967 to form Fleetwood Mac, and Mick Taylor (later of the Rolling Stones) came in on guitar that year, at age 16; bassist Andy Fraser (later with Free) joined in 1968; in the early '70s so did guitarists Harvey Mandel (later with Canned Heat, among others) and Rick Vito (later of Fleetwood Mac). In addition, many other musicians have rehearsed, performed, or recorded with Mayall without officially becoming part of any of his numerous lineups. Mayall never seemed perturbed by the many personnel changes; in fact, he often encouraged his musicians to leave for greater fame and wealth.

John Mayall

Virtually all of Mayall's albums of this period were critically acclaimed and, for blues records, commercially successful as well. Bluesbreakers—John Mayall With Eric Clapton and A Hard Road were Top 10 albums in the U.K. Crusade, another U.K. Top 10 LP, introduced 18-year-old Mick Taylor, drummer Keef Hartley (who, like Mayall, had an intense interest in Native American culture), and horn arrangements played by noted British jazz-rock sessionmen like Chris Mercer and Dick Heckstall-Smith. On Blues Alone Mayall played all the instruments except drums (handled again by Hartley). Bare Wires (#3 U.K.) made a transition from blues to progressive jazz rock. Heckstall-Smith and Hiseman left after this album to form the jazz-rock band Colosseum. It was the first Mayall album to enter the U.S. chart, peaking at #59.

After he had become known in the U.S., Mayall bought a house in the L.A. area and recorded Blues From Laurel Canyon (#68, 1969). Turning Point (#32, 1969), Mayall's only gold LP, was all acoustic, with no drums; it featured Jon Mark's acoustic rhythm guitar and Johnny Almond's reed arsenal, and included one of Mayall's most popular tunes, "Room to Move." Mayall hit a commercial peak stateside with Diary of a Band, a two-volume collection of recordings by previous Bluesbreaker lineups. It was followed by his highest-charting album to date, USA Union (#22, 1970), which included future Sugaralt stalwarts Larry Taylor, Harvey Mandel, and Don "Sugar cane" Harris. Like a number of Mayall's band members, these three would drift in and out of the lineup for years to come. Back to the Roots (#52, 1971) featured a onetime lineup that included Mayall's latest band plus Mick Taylor, Eric Clapton, Johnny Almond, and Keef Hartley. (In 1988 Mayall, who was never satisfied with the sound of this album, discovered, restored, and remixed the original tapes, rerecording most of the drum parts with then-current Bluesbreaker drummer Joe Yuele and his own vocal and instrumental tracks. The result, Archives to Eighties, contains 13 of Back to the Roots' 18 tracks and is considered not only a successful restoration but one of Mayall's most important '80s releases.)

Mayall shifted focus for Jazz-Blues Fusion (#64, 1972), which featured jazz trumpeter Blue Mitchell Mitchell, as well as tenor saxophonist Ernie Watts, and an extensive horn and reeds section appeared on Moving On. Mayall's music, with the exception of "Room to Move," got little stateside airplay even during his early-'70s heyday. By the mid-'70s, Mayall's star had faded somewhat, as had his voice—hence the addition of female singer Dee McKinnie on New Year, New Band, New Company, Notice to Appear, produced by New Orleans songwriter Allen Toussaint, won little success commercially or critically. A Banquet in Blues and Lots of People continued this trend. Still, Mayall kept recording. He lost virtually everything he owned, including the original artwork for some of his album covers, which he designed, and a priceless collection of pornography (some dating back to the Victorian era), when his California home was destroyed by fire in 1979. That year also saw the dissolution of another Bluesbreakers lineup. Mayall then recorded The Bottom Line, essentially a solo album that featured Cornell Dupree, Steve Jordan, Paul Shafer, Michael and Randy Brecker, Lee Ritenour, Jeff Porcaro, and Cheryl Lynn among its many guest musicians. Both it and No More Interviews (the first album to feature Mayall's wife, singer/songwriter Maggie Parker, on vocals—they married in 1982) represented a return to form.

In early 1982, Mayall, McVie, and Taylor staged a Bluesbreakers reunion, playing a short series of dates in America and Australia. A live album of the reunion concerts was recorded but not released, due to lack of record-company interest. It finally saw the light of day in 1994 under the title The 1982 Reunion Concert.

Following Road Show Blues, Mayall ceased recording for the next five years, devoting his time to live performances in and around California. In 1984 he assembled the core of one of his most stable lineups, featuring guitarist Coco Montoya (who would remain for a decade) and bassist Bobby Haynes. His next live release, Behind the Iron Curtain, neither returned him to the charts nor incited great critical enthusiasm. Yet he retained a following strong enough to support several tours of the U.S. and Europe and, unlike many blues purists of his generation, survived to catch the next blues-revival wave in the late '80s.

By the early '90s Mayall seemed to have come full circle: His 1993 album Wake Up Call, which features guest artists Albert Collins, Mick Taylor, Mavis Staples, and Buddy Guy, was one of five nominated for a Best Contemporary Blues Album Grammy. Padlock on the Blues featured guest appearances by John Lee Hooker and Ernie Watts. Though the basic lineup has been unusually stable the past decade, the Bluesbreakers have moved on. Longtime guitarist Coco Montoya began a successful solo career, and bassist Greg Rzab joined the Black Crowes and Jimmy Page in summer 2000. Typically, Mayall (who neither smokes nor drinks and never did drugs) made the new century—at age 66—still on the road, traveling the world, about 100 days a year.

Curtis Mayfield

Born June 3, 1942, Chicago, IL; died Dec. 26, 1999, Roswell, GA
 1970—Curtis (Curtom) 1971—Curtis/Live!; Roots 1972—Superfly 1973—His Early Years With the Impressions (ABC)
 1974—Sweet Exorcist (Curtom) 1975—America Today
 1976—Give, Get, Take and Have 1977—Never Say You Can't Survive 1978—Do It All Night 1979—Heartbeat (RSO)
 1980—Something to Believe In 1981—Love Is the Place (Boardwalk)
 1982—Honesty 1985—We Come in Peace With a Message of Love (CRC) 1988—Live in Europe (Ichiban)
 1990—Take It to the Streets (Curtom) 1996—New World Order (Warner); People Get Ready! The Curtis Mayfield Story (Rhino) 1997—The Very Best of Curtis Mayfield (Castle).

Curtis Mayfield was a driving force in black music from the early '60s through the mid-'70s, as a singer, writer, producer, and label owner.

Mayfield began singing with gospel groups such as the Northern Jubilee Singers, who were part of his grandmother's Traveling Soul Spiritualist Church. He met lifelong friend and collaborator Jerry Butler [see entry] at a gospel function, and they went on to form the Impressions [see entry], a rhythm & blues vocal group, in 1957. In 1958 they, along with Sam Gooden and Richard and Arthur Brooks, recorded "For Your Precious Love" on Vee-Jay Records. Butler's cool bantone dominated the record, and he left to pursue a solo career. Mayfield and Butler teamed up again in 1960, with Butler singing and Mayfield writing and playing guitar on "He Will Break Your Heart" (#7 pop, #1 R&B). A re-formed Impressions with Mayfield, Gooden, and Fred Cash signed with ABC-Paramount and scored with Mayfield's flamenco-styled "Gypsy Woman" (#20 pop, #2 R&B).

Mayfield then entered a prolific period during which his writing and singing would come to define the Chicago sound, which rivaled Motown in the early and mid-'60s. With the Impressions, Mayfield produced, wrote, and sang lead on numerous hits: some included uplifting civil-rights-movement messages. "It's All Right" (#4 pop, #1 R&B) in 1963; "I'm So Proud" (#14 pop), "Keep On Pushing" (#10 pop), and "Amen" (#7 pop, #17 R&B) in 1964; "People Get Ready" (#14 pop, #3 R&B) in 1965; and "We're a Winner" (#14 pop, #1 R&B) in 1968 reflect the quality of Mayfield's work.

Meanwhile, as the staff producer for Columbia-distributed Okeh Records, Mayfield wrote memorable music for Major Lance—"The Monkey Time" (#8 pop, #4 R&B) and "Um, Um, Um, Um, Um, Um" (#5 pop)—and for Gene Chandler "Just Be True" (#19 pop) and "Nothing Can Stop Me" (#18 pop, #3 R&B). On his own Windy C and Mayfield labels, he produced hits with the Five Starsteps and Cubie, "World of Fantasy" (#12 R&B), and the Fascinations, "Girls Are Out to Get You" (#13 R&B), respectively.

In the late '60s Mayfield started his third company, Curtom, this one distributed by Buddah Records. During the '70s Curtom moved from Buddah to Warner Bros. to RSO Records for distribution. In 1970 Mayfield also made a major career move, leaving the Impressions to go solo, though he continued to direct the group's career through the decade.

Solo albums—Curtis (#19), Curtis/Live! (#21), and Roots (#40) all sold well, establishing Mayfield as a solo performer. But it was his soundtrack to the blaxploitation film Superfly that is generally considered his masterpiece—an eerie yet danceable blend of Mayfield's knowing falsetto with Latin percussion and predisco rhythm guitars. The 4-million-selling album (#1, 1972) included two gold singles, "Superfly" (#8 pop, #5 R&B) and "Freddie's Dead" (#4 pop, #2 R&B); it sold an additional million copies as a tape. It foreshadowed Mayfield's continued involvement with film in the '70s. He scored Claudine, writing the Gladys Knight and the Pips' single "On and On" in 1974; Let's Do It Again, which featured the Staples Singers on the title song in 1975; and Sparkle with Aretha Franklin in 1976. Two years later Mayfield and Franklin would team again for Almighty Fire. In 1977 Mayfield would both score and act in the low-budget prison drama Short Eyes, a critical success.

Curtis Mayfield

As a solo artist, Mayfield continued to score with "Future Shock" (#11 R&B, 1973), "If I Were Only a Child Again" (#22 R&B, 1973), "Can't Say Nothin'" (#16 R&B, 1973), "Kung Fu" (#3 R&B, 1974), "So in Love" (#9 R&B, 1975), "Only You Babe" (#8 R&B, 1976), and two duets with Linda Clifford: "Between You Baby and Me" (#14 R&B, 1979) and "Love's Sweet Sensation" (#34 R&B, 1980).

In 1980 Mayfield, who by then had moved with his family (including six children) from Chicago to Atlanta, signed with Boardwalk Records and enjoyed a popular album and singles with Love Is the Place and "She Don't Let Nobody (But Me)" (#15 R&B) and "Toot 'n' Toot 'n' Toot" (#2 R&B). Mayfield rejoined the Impressions for a 1983 reunion tour. Mayfield's recording career hit a wall when Boardwalk went bankrupt, but he formed his own CRC label to release 1985's We Come in Peace With a Message of Love, which went unnoticed, as did his 1990 album for the revived Curtom label (distributed by Atlanta's Ichiban). Mayfield continued touring, however, and was especially popular in England, where the band the Blow Monkeys recorded a duet with him in 1987, "(Celebrate) The Day After You."

In 1990 Mayfield scored the dud movie Return of Superfly; the music was released on an album, Superfly 1990, on which Mayfield collaborated with rapper Ice-T—one of several '90s stars, such as Arrested Development and Lenny Kravitz, to cite Mayfield's influence. On August 14, 1990, while Mayfield was performing an outdoor concert in Brooklyn, New York, a lightning rig fell atop him, leaving him permanently paralyzed from the neck down. Mayfield and the Impressions were subsequently inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, and a lavish and emotional tribute was paid to Mayfield at the 1994 Grammy Awards gala.

In 1994 Shanachie Records released an all-star Mayfield-tribute album entitled People Get Ready, which featured Delbert McClinton, Jerry Butler, Bunny Wailer, and Huey Lewis and the News. Another tribute, A Tribute to Curtis Mayfield, included Eric Clapton, Elton John, Bruce Springsteen, Gladys Knight, and Jerry Butler, among others. The enduring appeal of Mayfield's songs is evidenced in the wide range of artists who have recorded them: Deniece Williams ("I'm So Proud"), UB40 ("I Gotta Keep Moving"), David Allan Coe ("For Your Precious Love"), Rod Stewart and Jeff Beck ("People Get Ready"), and En Vogue ("Giving Him Something He Can Feel").

In 1996 Mayfield released his last album, New World Order, which included guest appearances by Aretha Franklin and Mavis Staples. Considerably weakened by his quadriplegia, Mayfield was forced to record some of his vocals one line at a time. (This is because the diaphragm, which is crucial to vocal control, was rendered paralyzed by Mayfield's spinal cord injury.) The record was warmly greeted. Unfortunately, complications from diabetes, which had resulted in the amputation of a leg in 1998, led to his death at age 57 in 1999. Just prior to his death, he and the Impressions had recorded their part of an all-star version of "People Get Ready" for the Atlanta's Year 2000 celebration. In 2000 Mayfield was posthumously inducted into the Songwriters' Hall of Fame and, with the Impressions, he received the Rhythm & Blues Foundation's Pioneer Award.

Paul McCartney

Born James Paul McCartney, June 18, 1942, Liverpool, Eng.

1967—The Family Way soundtrack (London Records)
 1970—McCartney (Apple) 1971—Ram (credited to Paul and Linda McCartney) 1980—McCartney II (Columbia)
 1982—Tug of War 1983—Pipes of Peace 1984—Give My Regards to Broad Street 1986—Press to Play (Capitol)
 1987—All the Best! 1989—Flowers in the Dirt 1990—Tripping the Live Fantastic; Tripping the Live Fantastic—Highlights! 1991—Unplugged; CHOBAB CCCP—The Russian Album; Liverpool Oratorio (EMI Classics) 1993—Off the Ground; Paul Is Live 1997—Flaming Pie; Paul McCartney's Standing Stone (EMI Classics) 1999—Run Devil Run.
 Wings, formed 1971: P. McCartney; Linda McCartney (b. Linda Louise Eastman, Sep. 24, 1941, Scarsdale, NY; d. Apr. 17, 1998, Santa Barbara, CA), kybds., voc.; Denny Laine (b. Brian Hines, Oct. 29, 1944, Eng.), gr., kybds., voc.; Denny Seiwell, drums.
 1971—Wild Life (Apple) 1972—(+ Henry McCullough [b. Scot.], gr.) 1973—Red Rose Speedway (– McCullough; – Seiwell); Band on the Run 1974—(+ Jimmy McCulloch [b. June 4, 1952, Glasgow, Scot.; d. Sep. 27, 1979, London, Eng.], gr.; + Geoff Britton, drums; – Britton; + Joe English [b. Feb. 7, 1949, Rochester, NY], drums) 1975—Venus and Mars (Capitol) 1976—Wings at the Speed of Sound; Wings Over America (– English; – McCulloch) 1978—London Town; Wings Greatest (+ Steve Holly, drums; + Laurence Juber, gr., voc.) 1979—Back to the Egg (Columbia) 2001—Wingspan (Hits & History) (Capitol).
 The Fireman (McCartney; Youth [b. Dec. 27, 1960]) 1994—Strawberries Oceans Ships Forest (Capitol) 1998—Rushes.

Paul McCartney's gift for light-pop songwriting has made him the most commercially successful ex-Beatle and one of the most successful songwriters of the century. He answered his critics in 1976 with the single "Silly Love Songs," one of many post-Beatles hits. If, as some critics maintain, his solo work hasn't measured up to the standards of his collaborations with John Lennon, McCartney has still shown a consistent talent for writing songs that are tuneful and popular. McCartney was also the only ex-Beatle to form a permanent working band; Wings, which he led from 1971 to 1981, recorded for more years than the Beatles. Sir Paul is the only ex-Beatle to date to have been knighted.

Paul McCartney grew up in working-class Liverpool. His father, James, led the Jim Mac Jazz Band in the 1920s. A few months after his mother, Mary, died of breast cancer in 1956, Paul bought his first guitar and learned to play. In June 1956 he met Lennon and asked to join his band, the Quarrymen. McCartney's rendition of Eddie Cochran's "Twenty Flight Rock" at a subsequent audition won him entry.

In 1963 McCartney met Jane Asher, to whom he addressed many of his best-known love songs, and on Christmas Day 1967, at a McCartney family party, he announced their engagement. But by July 1968 the engagement was off. Soon after, he met American photographer Linda Eastman, whom he married on March 12, 1969.

In April 1970, only two weeks before the scheduled release of the Beatles' Let It Be, McCartney released his first nonsoundtrack solo album—a one-man-studio-band LP recorded in Campbelltown, England, in late 1969. The double-platinum McCartney (#1, 1970) had a pronounced homemade quality; it was spare and sounded almost unfinished, but it also contained "Maybe I'm Amazed," which became an international hit and McCartney's first post-Beatles pop standard (the Beatles had only recently disbanded as the tune became a hit). The winsome, homespun-ditty motif continued with Ram (#2, 1971), credited to Paul and Linda McCartney. It also inspired Lennon's "How Do You Sleep?"—a vicious, thinly veiled attack on McCartney. Meanwhile, Ram yielded two major hit singles in "Another Day" (#5, 1971) and "Uncle Albert/Admiral Halsey," which made #1 in America.

Later in 1971 McCartney formed Wings, which was intended as a recording and touring outfit. Along with Linda, Wings featured American session drummer Denny Seiwell and ex-Moody Blues guitarist Denny Laine. Wings' Wild Life, with Linda McCartney on keyboards and backup vocals, sold only moderately, failing to yield a hit single. In 1972 ex-Grease Band guitarist Henry McCullough joined

Paul McCartney

McCartney spent 1972 releasing several singles, including "Give Ireland Back to the Irish" (#16 U.K.) (rush-released after the January 1972 "Bloody Sunday" incident in which British soldiers killed 13 Irish civilians in Londonderry, Ireland; the song was banned by the BBC), "Mary Had a Little Lamb" (#9, U.K., #28 U.S.) (yes, the nursery rhyme), and the hard-rocking, mildly salacious "Hi Hi Hi." Only the latter was a major U.S. hit, going to #10 in 1973.

Red Rose Speedway (#1, 1973), the next Wings album, yielded a #1 hit single in the U.S. with the heavily orchestrated ballad "My Love." Also in 1973, McCartney was arrested and then released on a drug charge, and he did his own television special, which received mixed reviews in both the U.S. and the U.K. Later Wings made its first tour of Britain and recorded the title theme song for the James Bond film Live and Let Die which went to #2 in the U.S. Laine released a solo LP, Ahh Laine.

After Wings' U.K. tour, Seiwell and Henry McCullough left the group. Denny Laine accompanied Paul and Linda to Nigeria to record Band on the Run. While each of the previous Wings albums had ended up going gold, Band on the Run (#1, 1974) went triple platinum in short order and yielded two Top 10 hit singles—"Helen Wheels" (#10, 1973) and "Jet" (#7, 1974)—and the bouncy title track minisuite (#11, 1974). It also included McCartney's answer to Lennon's "How Do You Sleep?" in "Let Me Roll It," and featured a cover photo of McCartney accompanied by such celebrities as film actors James Coburn and Christopher Lee.

McCartney formed a new Wings, recruiting guitarist Jimmy McCulloch from Thunderclap Newman and Stone the Crows, and drummer Geoff Britton, a British karate expert. They recorded "Junior's Farm" (#3, 1974) in Nashville in 1974 and, later that year, went to New Orleans (where they found new drummer Joe English) to record Venus and Mars, which yielded several hit singles (including the #1 "Listen to What the Man Said") and went platinum. At the Speed of Sound found McCartney giving his band members a chance to compose and sing much of the material, but McCartney's own contributions were almost all hits. Two went gold: "Silly Love Songs" (#1, 1976) and "Let 'Em In" (#3, 1976). Shortly after the album's release, Wings completed a world tour that had begun in Britain on September 9, 1975, and ended on October 21, 1976. The Over America triple-record live album was recorded on that tour.

In 1977 McCartney, under the pseudonym Percy Thrillington, recorded an obscure, all-instrumental version of Ram and produced Denny Laine's Holly Days, a solo album of Buddy Holly songs. A live "Maybe I'm Amazed" hit #10 in 1977. That year saw the release of the McCartney-Laine "Mull of Kintyre," based on a Scottish folk song, which became the first single ever to sell 2 million copies in Britain and was a minor hit in the U.S. as well. It was McCartney's first British #1 single since he'd left the Beatles. Later that year, under the name Susie and the Red Stripes, McCartney and Wings had another minor hit single in the reggae-inflected "Seaside Woman."

After London Town, which yielded another #1, "With a Little Luck." Jimmy McCulloch departed for the re-formed Small Faces. Back to the Egg failed to yield a hit and sold unspectacularly. In January 1980 McCartney was arrested for possession of marijuana in Tokyo at the beginning of a Japanese tour, jailed for 10 days, then freed and not prosecuted. Soon after, he and Wings embarked on a British tour, after which drummer English left. McCartney then organized all-star benefit concerts for the people of Kampuchea and released McCartney II (#3, 1980), his first one-man-band album since his solo debut. It contained the #1 hit "Coming Up."

In April 1981 Denny Laine announced he was leaving Wings, the reason being McCartney's reluctance to tour because of the death threats he was receiving in the wake of John Lennon's murder. McCartney continued with the well-received Tug of War, a solo album featuring a host of guest performers (Laine, ex-Beatle Ringo Starr, Beatles producer George Martin), most notably Stevie Wonder, who sang with McCartney on the #1 hit single "Ebony and Ivory." Tug also yielded a #10 hit in "Take It Away." McCartney sang on Michael Jackson's "The Girl Is Mine," a Top 10 hit in 1983. Jackson returned the favor by singing on Pipes of Peace's "Say Say Say," which topped the chart later that same year.

Embittered by the 1967 sale of publishing rights to his and John Lennon's Beatles songs to British film producer Lew Grade—a sale made while the Beatles were in India with Mahanishi Mahesh Yogi—McCartney has invested extensively in pop-song copyrights over the years. Among his holdings are the entire Buddy Holly catalogue, "On Wisconsin," and "Autumn Leaves." However, shortly after "Say Say Say" was a hit, McCartney advised Michael Jackson to invest in music publishing—and Jackson later bought the Northern Songs catalogue, which included all of the Beatles songs McCartney had written with Lennon. McCartney never hid his anger at the move, especially when Jackson began licensing Beatles tunes for television commercials (such as "Revolution," used in a late-'80s Nike sneaker ad). McCartney later told Musician magazine that "complications with Yoko" (whose son Sean was a close friend of Jackson's) had prevented him from making a competitive bid for his own songs.

In 1984 McCartney made a dramatic feature film, Give My Regards to Broad Street, set within London's music industry, which was roundly panned by critics. Its soundtrack (#21, 1984) consisted largely of rerecorded Beatles and McCartney hits, the album went gold, and one new track, the ballad "No More Lonely Nights," became a #6 pop hit. He scored a #7 pop hit in 1985 with the theme song to the comedy film Spies Like Us: Press to Play (#30, 1986), found McCartney collaborating with ex-10cc Eric Stewart; the album's only hit was "Press" (#21, 1986). In 1988, as a sort of glasnost gesture, McCartney released an album of rock oldies exclusively on the Soviet Melodiya label under the title CHOBA B CCCP ("Back in the USSR," roughly translated). For Flowers in the Dirt (#21, 1989), McCartney collaborated on some songs with Elvis Costello (McCartney also cowrote and played on a couple of tracks on Costello's Spike, including "Veronica"). The album yielded a hit in "My Brave Face"

(#25, 1989), but McCartney was reportedly quite disappointed that the album failed to chart higher, despite a 1989 world tour (with a band featuring ex-Pretenders guitarist Robbie McIntosh and ex-Average White Band bassist Hamish Stuart) that was documented on Tripping the Live Fantastic (#26, 1990).

In early 1991 McCartney became one of the first major artists to release an album from his appearance on MTV's Unplugged acoustic showcase; Unplugged (The Official Bootleg) hit #14. Later that year McCartney released CHOBA B CCCP in the U.S. (where it reached only #109) and unveiled his first classical work, Liverpool Oratorio (#177, 1991), which failed to impress classical critics. McCartney returned to pop with Off the Ground; the album entered the chart at #17 but dropped quickly and failed to yield a hit single. His New World tour fared better, and resulted in another live album, Paul Is Live (#78, 1993). In April 1993 McCartney was joined onstage by Starr for "Hey Jude" at an all-star Earth Day concert in Los Angeles.

In 1994 McCartney quietly assumed the pseudonym the Fireman and released Strawberries Oceans Ships Forest, a techno-dance collaboration with ambient producer Youth (a second Fireman album, Rushes, would follow in 1998). Executed with far less stealth was the massive Beatles Anthology project, in which he reunited with George Harrison and Ringo Starr for a documentary miniseries and three double albums of demos and live rantes (all three topped the U.S. chart). Anthology 1 and 2 each included a "new" Beatles track ("Free as a Bird," #6, 1995, and "Real Love," #11, 1996, respectively), which were built upon John Lennon demo recordings.

McCartney was knighted by the Queen of England in 1997. Later that year he released Flaming Pie (#2) (the title a reference to a joke Lennon told about how the Beatles got their name), which featured guest appearances by Starr, George Martin, Steve Miller, Jeff Lynne, and McCartney's son, James, on guitar. He closed out the year by releasing his second classical piece, Standing Stone (#194).

On April 17, 1998, McCartney lost the love of his life when Linda succumbed to breast cancer. Except for the 10 days he spent in jail in Japan, the couple had never been apart. Though her musical talent was often questioned by critics, Linda found great success in other endeavors: as an animal-rights activist, photographer, vegetarian cookbook author, and vegan frozen-foods entrepreneur. The couple had four children: Heather (from Linda's previous marriage), Mary, Stella, and James. After a year of mourning, McCartney went back into Abbey Road studio with a new band (including Pink Floyd's David Gilmour and Deep Purple's Ian Paice) and began recording the vintage rock & roll covers (and three new originals) that made up Run Devil Run (#27, 1999). He celebrated its release with a one-off gig at Liverpool's Cavern Club on December 14, 1999, which was broadcast over the Internet to an audience of more than 3 million. Earlier that year he was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame as a solo artist.

The year 2000 saw the release of A Garland for Linda (#7 Classical), a benefit album of modern classical pieces, including McCartney's own "Nova." A new solo album of original material was planned for release by year's end.

Delbert McClinton

Born Nov. 4, 1940, Lubbock, TX
 1972—Delbert and Glen (Clean) 1973—Subject to Change 1975—Victim of Life's Circumstances (ABC)
 1976—Genuine Cowhide 1977—Love Rustler 1978—Second Wind (Capricorn); Very Early Delbert McClinton (Le Cam)
 1979—Keeper of the Flame (Capricorn) 1980—The Jealous Kind (Capitol) 1981—Plain From the Heart 1989—Live From Austin (Alligator) 1990—I'm With You (Curb) 1991—Best of Delbert McClinton 1992—Never Been Rocked Enough 1993—Delbert McClinton 1994—Honky Tonkin' Blues (MCA) 1997—One of the Fortunate Few (Rising Tide) 1999—The Ultimate Collection (Hip-o) 2001—Nothing Personal (New West).

Delbert McClinton has been singing R&B, blues, rockabilly, and country for 35 years, starting on the Texas honky-tonk circuit. In the late '50s McClinton's Straitjackets were the house band and one of the few white acts at Jacks, a Fort Worth club where they backed up Howlin' Wolf, Lightnin' Hopkins, and Big Joe Turner. McClinton's first record, a cover of Sonny Boy Williamson's "Wake Up Baby," released in 1960, was the first white single played on Fort Worth's KNOK.

Inspired by bluesman Jimmy Reed, McClinton switched from guitar to harmonica, and in the early '60s, when he toured England with Bruce Channel (he'd played on Channel's #1 1962 hit "Hey Baby"), he taught some harp licks to John Lennon, who was playing in a then-unknown opening act, the Beatles. In 1964 and 1965 he had a group called the Ron Dels, who were shunted around to three labels, though one song ("If You Really Want Me To, I'll Go") did reach the Hot 100 in 1965.

McClinton spent the late '60s on the local Texas bar circuit, until he and Glen Clark formed Delbert and Glen, a duo that cut two LPs for Atlantic's Clean subsidiary in 1972 and 1973. He didn't get a solo contract until 1975, and his subsequent albums on ABC won critical kudos but sold poorly. In 1978 he recorded two discs for Capricorn just before the label folded; his composition "Two More Bottles of Wine" later became a #1 country hit for Emmylou Harris, and the Blues Brothers recorded his "B Movie Boxcar Blues." His next record, The Jealous Kind, recorded with some Muscle Shoals musicians, turned his luck around, earning McClinton his own Top 40 hit, "Giving It Up for Your Love" (#8, 1980).

Since then, McClinton has retained a strong following, having released several more albums. In 1992 he won a Grammy for his duet with Bonnie Raitt, "Good Man, Good Woman," and in 1993 another duet, with Tanya Tucker, entitled "Tell Me About It" was nominated for Best Country Collaboration With Vocals. His Live From Austin was also nominated for a Best Contemporary Blues Grammy. After several years of silence he returned with One of the Fortu- nate Few Since the early '90s he's also hosted and booked Delbert McClinton & Friends Sandy Beach Cruises, in which 1,000 fans pack a Caribbean cruise ship and enjoy a week of nonstop concerts performed by dozens of musicians.

Delbert McClinton

Van McCoy

Born Jan. 6, 1944, Washington, DC; died July 6, 1979, Englewood, NJ
 1975—Disco Baby (Avco) 1976—The Hustle (H&L)
 1978—My Favorite Fantasy (MCA) 1979—Lonely Dancer; Sweet Rhythm (H&L).

Throughout the '60s and '70s, Van McCoy was primarily a songwriter and producer for artists like Aretha Franklin, Gladys Knight and the Pips, Peaches and Herb, and Melba Moore. He had one of disco's biggest hits with his own 1975 instrumental single "The Hustle" (#1 pop, #1 R&B).

McCoy studied piano from age four, and a year later he and his older brother Norman, a violinist, began performing at Washington teas as the McCoy Brothers. He wrote his first song at age 12, and while studying psychology at Howard University, he began singing with the Starlighters, a group that cut a few locally released records. During his second year at Howard, he moved to Philadelphia and started a record label with his uncle.

McCoy then began writing and producing hits for Ruby and the Romantics, Gladys Knight, Barbara Lewis, and others. He recorded an album on Columbia, then in 1968 formed his own record production and music publishing company with Joe Cobb. In 1973 he and Charles Kipps established White House Productions, renamed McCoy-Kipps Productions in 1976. Other popular singles by McCoy include "Change With the Times" (#46 pop, #6 R&B, 1975) and "Party" (#69 pop, #20 R&B, 1976). He died of a heart attack in 1979.

Ian McCulloch: See Echo and the Bunnymen

Michael McDonald

Born Feb. 12, 1952, St. Louis, MO

1982—If That's What It Takes (Warner Bros.) 1985—No Lookin' Back 1990—Take It to Heart (Reprise) 1993—Blink of an Eye 2000—Blue Obsession (Ramp).

In the latter half of the '70s, as singer and keyboardist for the Doobie Brothers, onetime Steely Dan member Michael McDonald helped redefine the sound of what had once been a straight-ahead rock & roll band. McDonald's soulful, falsetto-happy vocals and gospel-influenced instrumental technique guided the Doobies into mellow R&B territory. After that group disbanded in 1982, the singer/songwriter embarked on a solo career that took him even further in that direction. On his own, and in duets with several leading R&B artists, McDonald established a smooth, light, jazz-inflected style that appealed to fans of adult contemporary music. He also garnered a few major pop singles and earned the respect of critics and the R&B community.

Before the Doobies' breakup, McDonald sang backup on one of Christopher Cross' big hits, 1980's "Ride Like the Wind" (#2). McDonald released his first solo album, If That's What It Takes, two years later. The album went to #6 and spawned the single "I Keep Forgettin' (Every Time You're Near)" (#4 pop, #7 R&B, 1982). The following year he teamed up with James Ingram on "Yah Mo B There" (#19 pop, #5 R&B, 1984). No Lookin' Back featured a slightly harder-edged sound than its predecessor. The album peaked at #45, and its title track went to #34, both in 1985.

In 1986 another duet with a contemporary soul icon proved McDonald's biggest hit to date: "On My Own," a love-lorn ballad that paired him with Patti LaBelle, was a #1 smash. McDonald entered the Top 10 again later that year with "Sweet Freedom" (#7), the theme song for the film comedy Running Scared. McDonald didn't release another studio album until 1990, though, and that effort, Take It to Heart, only made it to #110. In 1992 the singer enjoyed a slight commercial rebound, and a considerable artistic coup, when Aretha Franklin featured him on her 1992 R&B hit, "Ever Changing Times" (#19). Also that year, McDonald reconciled with the driving forces behind Steely Dan, Donald Fagen and Walter Becker, in the New York Rock and Soul Revue, a recording and touring collective that also included Boz Scaggs, Phoebe Snow, and Chuck Brown. In 1993 McDonald released his fourth solo album, Blink of an Eye, a commercial flop.

In 1995 McDonald joined the Doobie Brothers for a reunion tour, the same year, he sought creative inspiration by moving with his wife and two children from Southern California to Nashville. He continued to tour solo and recorded an album that would have been released in 1997 had he and his record label, Reprise, not parted ways. McDonald returned to the spotlight in 1999, performing a song ("Eyes of a Child") on the soundtrack to the animated movie South Park: Bigger, Longer and Uncut. Around the same time, he formed an independent label, Ramp Records, with producer Chris Pelonis and actor Jeff Bridges (who is also a musician). With three more tracks added since the '97 sessions, McDonald's Blue Obsession was Ramp's first release, in 2000. The same year, the singer was honored with the Yamaha Lifetime Achievement Award and tribute concert, where he performed with the Doobie Brothers, among others.

Mississippi Fred McDowell

Born Jan. 12, 1904, Rossville, TN; died July 3, 1972, Memphis, TN

1969—I Don't Play No Rock 'n' Roll (Capitol) 1972—Mississippi Fred McDowell 1904–1972 (Just Sunshine) 1973—Keep Your Lamp Trimmed and Burning (Arhoolie) 1989—Shake 'Em On Down (Tomato) 1993—The Train I Ride (New Rose) 1995—Live at the Mayfair Hotel (American).

Although Mississippi Fred McDowell didn't make his first recording until the age of 55, he proved to be among the most influential of blues singers/guitarists on rock & roll, particularly with singer/guitarist Bonnie Raitt, who brought him on her early tours and recorded his songs. McDowell made dozens of records but is probably best known as the composer of "You Got to Move," covered by the Rolling Stones on Sucky Fingers.

McDowell taught himself the guitar as a teenager and played locally in Tennessee while working as a farmer. In 1926 he moved to Memphis to become a professional musician, which he gave up for farming again in 1940, when he relocated to Como, Mississippi. His recording career began in 1959, at which point he began devoting more and more time to music. He made records, frequently with his wife, Annie Mae, and played at all the major folk and blues festivals of the '60s. With the increased attention paid by rock & rollers to bluesmen, he appeared at a number of rock festivals as well. In addition to his many records, McDowell was captured in nearly a half-dozen films, including The Blues Maker (1968) and Fred McDowell (1969). He died of abdominal ulcers in 1972.

Reba McEntire

Born Reba Nell McEntire, Mar. 28, 1955, Chockie, OK

1980—Feel the Fire (Mercury) 1981—Heart to Heart 1982—Unlimited 1983—Behind the Scenes 1984—Just a Little Love 1985—The Best of Reba McEntire; Have I Got a Deal for You (MCA) 1986—Whoever's in New England; What Am I Gonna Do About You; Reba Nell McEntire (Mercury) 1987—The Last One to Know (MCA); Reba McEntire's Greatest Hits; Merry Christmas to You 1988—Reba 1989—Sweet Sixteen; Reba Live 1990—Rumor Has It 1991—For My Broken Heart 1992—It's Your Call 1993—Greatest Hits,

vol. 2 1994—Read My Mind 1995—Starting Over 1996—What If It's You 1998—If You See Him 1999—The Secret of Giving: A Christmas Collection; So Good Together.

A feisty redhead with a thick Oklahoma accent, Reba McEntire parlayed a strong, pure voice and a penchant for singing songs about ordinary women—and the extraordinary demands that life places on them—into country-music superstardom. She is one of the best-selling female country artists of all time, yet still remains accessible enough for her fans to refer to her simply as Reba. McEntire's unaffected, strikingly emotional delivery invited a few comparisons to her idol Patsy Cline; and like Cline, McEntire made news outside the C&W arena as the result of a plane crash: In 1991 eight members of her band were killed when a twin-engine jet bound for a show in Texas slammed into the side of a mountain. (The musicians included Jim Hammon, Paula Kaye Evans, Michael Thomas, Terry Jackson, Joey Cigainero, Tony Saputo, and Chris Austin, as well as band manager, Kirk Cappello.) The tragedy occurred the same year that McEntire released For My Broken Heart, her most consistently grim album (and one of her biggest commercial successes).

McEntire's father was a steer roper on the rodeo circuit. During high school, the singer competed at rodeos as a barrel racer, and played nightclubs with her siblings as the Singing McEntires. She eventually went to college and planned to become a teacher, but a gig singing the national anthem at the National Rodeo Finals resulted in a contract with Mercury Records. Her first Top 10 C&W hit came in 1980—four years after signing—with "(You Lift Me) Up to Heaven" (#8). A steady stream of country hits followed: "Today All Over Again" (#5, 1981), "I'm Not That Lonely Yet" (#3, 1982), "Can't Even Get the Blues" (#1, 1982), "You're the First Time I've Thought About Leaving" (#1, 1983), "Why Do We Want (What We Know We Can't Have)" (#7, 1983), and "Just a Little Love" (#5, 1984).

But it was in the latter half of the 1980s, after she switched to MCA Records, that McEntire's star really rose. Her string of Top 3 C&W albums began with 1986's Whoever's in New England (#1) and continued with What Am I Gonna Do About You (#1, 1986), Greatest Hits (#2, 1987), The Last One to Know (#3, 1987), Reba (#1, 1988), Sweet Sixteen (#1, 1989), Reba Live (#2, 1989), Rumor Has It (#2, 1990), For My Broken Heart (#3, 1991), It's Your Call (#1, 1992), Greatest Hits, vol. 2 (#2, 1993), Read My Mind (#2, 1994), Starting Over (#1, 1995), What If It's You (#1, 1996), and If You See Him (#2, 1998). (If You See Him also went to #8 on the pop-album chart in 1998.) McEntire racked up an equally impressive list of top country singles, including "How Blue" (#1, 1984), "Somebody Should Leave" (#1, 1985), "Whoever's in New England" (#1, 1986), "Little Rock" (#1, 1986), "What Am I Gonna Do About You" (#1, 1986), "One Promise Too Late" (#1, 1987), "The Last One to Know" (#1, 1987), "Love Will Find Its Way to You" (#1, 1988), "I Know How He Feels" (#1, 1988), "New Fool at an Old Game" (#1, 1988), "Cathy's Clown" (#1, 1989), "Walk On" (#2, 1990), "You Lie" (#1, 1990), "Rumor Has It" (#3, 1990), "Fallin' Out of Love" (#2, 1991), "For My Broken Heart" (#1, 1991), "Is There Life Out There" (#1, 1992), "The Greatest Man I Never Knew" (#3, 1992), "Does He Love You" (#1, 1993), "Till You Love Me" (#2, 1994), "The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter" (#1, 1995), "And Still" (#2, 1995), "The Fear of Being Alone" (#2, 1996), "How Was I to Know" (#1, 1996), "I'd Rather Ride Around With You" (#2, 1997), and "If You See Him/If You See Her," a collaboration with Brooks & Dunn (#1, 1998).

McEntire is also known as a strong businesswoman; she and her second husband, Narvel Blackstock—her band's steel guitarist, who became her road manager—ran Starstruck Entertainment, a company that handled song publishing and managing other acts. McEntire branched out into acting in 1989 with a role in the cult horror flick Tremors. She also costarred in the Kenny Rogers' TV movie The Gambler, as well as a few telefilms based on her own songs. In 1994 McEntire published her autobiography, Reba: My Story (written with Tom Carter), which spent 15 weeks on the New York Times bestseller list. That same year, her album Read My Mind reached #2 on the country chart. She continued to release a new album almost every year in the late 1990s, and two in 1999, one a Christmas collection. In 1999 McEntire also published a second book, Comfort From a Country Quilt: Finding New Inspiration and Strength From Old-Fashioned Values, reflections on her life, particularly being a mother to her then-nine-year-old son, Shelby. In addition, she went on the road with The Singer's Diary, a musical play about her life and career from 1974 to 1991 (with McEntire playing herself) that ended with a concert. In March 2001 she returned to feature-film acting in One Night at McCool's, with Michael Douglas and Paul Reiser. She became a hit on Broadway that year as well, starting in Annie Get Your Gun.

McFadden and Whitehead

Gene McFadden, born 1949, Philadelphia, PA; John Whitehead, born 1948, Philadelphia
1979—McFadden and Whitehead (Philadelphia International)
1980—I Heard It in a Love Song
John Whitehead solo: 1988—I Need Money Bad (Mercury).

Gene McFadden and John Whitehead are prolific songwriters who contributed greatly to the success of Kenny Gamble and Leon Huff's Philadelphia International Records.

The duo's career began when both belonged to a vocal group called the Epsilons. They worked with many of the Stax stars, including Otis Redding, and sang background vocals on Arthur Conley's "Sweet Soul Music." Later the group's name was changed to Talk of the Town. Frustrated by their lack of success as performers, McFadden and Whitehead turned to songwriting. During their tenure as staff writers for PIR, they wrote "Bad Luck," "Where Are All My Friends," and "Wake Up Everybody" for Harold Melvin and the Blue Notes (all with arranger Vic Carstarphen); "Backstabbers" (Whitehead with Gamble and Huff) for the O'Jays; and "I'll Always Love My Mama" (Whitehead, Carstarphen, Huff) for the Intruders.

In 1979 they recorded one of that summer's most popular singles, "Ain't No Stoppin' Us Now" (#13 pop, #1 R&B). In the early '80s the duo produced records for Teddy Pendergrass, Melba Moore, and others. They each took a turn at recording solo albums. Whitehead was convicted in the '80s of tax evasion. He had a minor R&B hit in 1988 with "I Need Money Bad." As of 2000 the pair was together again, working on new material for the Philly Sounds label.

Bobby McFerrin

Born Mar. 11, 1950, New York, NY

1982—Bobby McFerrin (Elektra/Musicon) 1984—The Voice 1986—Spontaneous Inventions (Blue Note) 1988—Simple Pleasures (EMI-Manhattan) 1990—Medicine Music 1992—Hush (with Yo-Yo Ma) (Sony Masterworks); Play (with Chick Corea) (Blue Note) 1995—Paper Music (with the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra) (Sony Classical) 1996—Bang! Zoom (Blue Note); The Mozart Sessions (with Chick Corea and the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra) (Sony Classical); The Best of Bobby McFerrin (Blue Note) 1997—Circlesongs (Sony Classical).

A human one-man band, vocalist Bobby McFerrin is one of the most unique talents in the history of America's performing arts. McFerrin has developed a virtuosic ability to vocally produce musical sounds and tones that can replicate virtually any instrument—a miracle of technique and musical knowledge balanced by a zany wit and nerve.

Both of McFerrin's parents were opera singers; his father dubbed Sidney Poitier's singing in the 1959 film version of Porgy and Bess. McFerrin studied piano rather than voice, attending Juilliard and Sacramento State College. He had been playing piano for University of Utah dance workshops when he decided to change musical direction. While singing in journeyman bands, McFerrin came to the attention of noted jazz vocalist Jon Hendricks, who recruited him for his own group. McFerrin's next break came when comedian Bill Cosby caught him performing with Hendricks' group in a San Francisco club. Cosby got McFerrin booked at the prestigious Playboy Jazz Festival in 1980. After his triumphant appearance at the 1981 Kool Jazz Festival in New York, McFerrin was signed by Elektra.

McFerrin had no intention of being a traditional jazz singer. He performed alone, using his mult textured voice while rhythmically beating his body to simulate full-band accompaniment. Standard jazz fare was also avoided; McFerrin took on James Brown's "I Feel Good," the Beatles' "Blackbird," Cream's "Sunshine of Your Love," and funky tunes like his original "I'm My Own Walkman"; all manner of classical, jazz, and pop strains would routinely arise during his free-form performances.

In 1988 McFerrin had a fluke hit single with "Don't Worry Be Happy" (#1), a Reagan-era piece of gloss with a video that helped to cement McFerrin's lovable madcap image. By the late '80s McFerrin was ubiquitous—recording with jazz musicians (Chick Corea) and classical players (Yo-Yo Ma), and singing The Cosby Show theme and on TV commercials. In 1993 he was a featured performer at the White House jazz picnic, a sure sign, along with the 10 Grammy Awards he'd earned over the years, of his mainstream appeal.

In 1994 McFerrin's career took a new turn when he was appointed creative chair of the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra—he would serve as conductor and develop educational programs. He has continued to release albums ranging from classical music to jazz to pop.

MC5

Formed 1965, Lincoln Park, MI

Rob Tyner (b. Robert Derminer, Dec. 12, 1944; d. Sep. 17, 1991, Royal Oak, MI), voc.; Wayne Kramer (b. Apr. 30, 1948, Detroit, MI), gr.; Fred "Sonic" Smith (b. WV; d. Nov. 4, 1994, Detroit), gr.; Michael Davis, bass; Dennis Thompson, drums. 1969—Kick Out the Jams (Elektra) 1970—Back in the USA (Atlantic) 1971—High Time 1983—Babes in Arms cassette (ROIR) 2000—The Big Bang!: Best of the MC5 (Rhino).

Wayne Kramer solo: 1995—The Hard Stuff (Epitaph) 1996—Dangerous Madness 1997—Citizen Wayne 1998—LLMF (Live Like a Mutherfucker).

Some called the MC5 (for "Motor City Five," after their home base) the first '70s band of the '60s. The group's loud, hard, fast sound and violently antiestablishment ideology almost precisely prefigured much of punk rock. There was, however, one crucial difference: The MC5 truly believed in the power of rock & roll to change the world.

The band first formed in high school and came to prominence in 1967–68 as the figureheads (or "house band") of John Sinclair's radical White Panther Party. At concerts and happenings the band caused a sensation by wearing American flags and screaming revolutionary slogans laced with profanities. In 1968 the MC5 went with Sinclair to Chicago to play while the Democratic Convention was under way. Its debut LP (#30, 1969), recorded live in 1968, captured the band in typical raw, revved-up, radical form, and embroiled Elektra Records in controversy over the title tune's loud-and-clear shout "Kick out the jams motherfuckers!" Some stores refused to stock the album; in response, the MC5 took out strongly worded ads in underground papers and, to Elektra's further distress, plastered one offending store's windows with Elektra stationery on which was scrawled, "Fuck you." Elektra and the MC5 parted company shortly thereafter, but not before the band had cut another version of "Kick Out the Jams," with "brothers and sisters" substituted for the offending expletive. (It was available as a single and on some subsequent issues of the album, against the band's wishes.)

The MC5: Fred "Sonic" Smith, Michael Davis, Dennis Thompson, Wayne Kramer, Rob Tyner

When Sinclair went to jail on a marijuana charge, the MC5 was left with neither a manager nor a label. Atlantic signed the group, and its debut was produced by rock critic Jon Landau. Back in the USA was hailed by critics as one of the greatest hard-rock albums of all time. Record sales were almost nil, however, and never improved. Dropped by Atlantic, the band went to England but soon fell apart, with Michael Davis and Dennis Thompson the first to leave.

Rob Tyner had some success as a songwriter and photographer; he died of a heart attack in 1991. (The remaining members reunited to play a benefit concert for Tyner's family.) Davis went on to form the Ann Arbor band Destroy All Monsters, with ex-Stooge Ron Ashton. Thompson struggled with abortive solo ventures; and in the late '70s Smith formed the Sonic Rendezvous Band, which toured Europe with Iggy Pop and recorded one single. Remaining in the Detroit area, in 1980 he married Patti Smith, with whom he had two children; in November 1994 he died from heart failure.

In the mid-'70s Wayne Kramer pled guilty to a cocaine-dealing charge and spent two years in prison, where he played music with jazz trumpeter Red Rodney. Upon his release, Kramer formed a short partnership with ex-New York Doll and ex-Heartbreaker Johnny Thunders (Gang War), was featured guitarist with Motor City funksters Was (Not Was) (Kramer played the psychedelic guitar on the single "Wheel Me Out"), released two singles, and led his own band, Air Raid. In 1994 Kramer signed with punk label Epitaph and recorded the first of several solo albums featuring his crunchy hard rock and lyrics reflecting on social and political issues. The Hard Stuff (1995) included guest spots from members of Bad Religion and Suicidal Tendencies. Kramer continues to tour, usually backed by a rhythm section, and occasionally does spoken-word performances. In 2001 he formed his own label, MuscleTone Records, and played in the loose-knit band the Racketeers.

Kate and Anna McGarrigle

Kate McGarrigle, born 1946, Montreal, Can.; Anna McGarrigle, born 1944, Montreal
 1976—Kate and Anna McGarrigle (Warner Bros.) 1977—Dancer With Bruised Knees 1978—Pronto Monto 1980—French Record (Hannibal) 1983—Love Over and Over (Polydor) 1990—Heartbeats Accelerating (Private Music) 1996—Matapedia (Hannibal) 1998—The McGarrigle Hour.

The McGarrigle sisters' songs bring together a wide range of folk and pop styles, from Stephen Foster parlor songs to Celtic traditional songs to Cajun fiddling to gospel to pop standards. Although their wry, generally unsentimental songs have been best known in the U.S. as covers (by Linda Ronstadt, Maria Muldaur, and others), they have had hits in Canada and Europe, especially with songs recorded in French.

The McGarrigles grew up in Montreal and are bilingual. In the mid-'60s they were half of the Mountain City Four, whose other members (Chaim Tannenbaum and Dane Lanken) continue to perform and record with them. While Anna was studying at Montreal's Ecole des Beaux Arts and Kate was attending McGill University, the National Film Board of Canada commissioned the Mountain City Four to score a film, Helicopter Canada.

Kate performed around New York in the '60s, sometimes as a duo with Roma Baran (who later produced Laurie Anderson), and both sisters wrote songs. Anna's first effort, "Heart Like a Wheel," was used in the soundtrack of Play It as It Lays and became the title tune of the double-platinum Linda Ronstadt album. Ronstadt has also covered Kate's "Talk to Me of Mendocino" and "You Tell Me That I'm Falling Down." Maria Muldaur covered Kate's "The Work Song" and Anna's "Cool River."

Kate married New York singer/songwriter Loudon Wainwright III, and her song "Come a Long Way" appeared on Wainwright's Attempted Moustache, which also included Kate's backup vocals. Kate and Anna both sang on Wainwright's Unrequited. Shortly after the birth of their son, Rufus—who would later embark on his own career as a singer/songwriter—the marriage broke up.

The McGarrigles' songwriting brought them a contract on their own, but their high, reedy voices and homey arrangements were not well received by U.S. radio programmers despite critics' raves. The McGarrigles toured infrequently; their US tour after their debut LP consisted of two weeks of Massachusetts dates. After Pronto Monto, an attempt to make more conventional-sounding folk pop, the McGarrigles were dropped by Warner Bros. Kate appeared on an album by Albion Country Band, a Fairport Convention offshoot. The McGarrigles reemerged with a Canadian best-seller, French Record, a compilation of material in French from previous albums and new French songs. Love Over and Over, a return to their original style, was the occasion for a U.S. tour. After headlining the Newport Folk Festival in 1992, the sisters toured the U.K. and Europe for two years before releasing 1996's Matapedia. Their first album in six years, the record included the Emmylou Harris collaboration "Goin' Back to Harlan," which the three had recorded a year earlier for Harris' Wrecking Ball. Harris reappeared on The McGarrigle Hour, which featured singers such as Linda Ronstadt and several McGarrigle family members—sister Jane, Kate's ex, Loudon Wainwright, their son, Rufus Wainwright, and Anna's husband, Dane Lanken, among others—performing songs by the likes of Irving Berlin, as well as McGarrigle originals. In 2001 the McGarrigles' vocals were featured on Nick Cave's No More Shall We Part.

Roger McGuinn: See the Byrds

Barry McGuire

Born Oct. 15, 1935, Oklahoma City, OK
 1965—Eve of Destruction (Dunhill) 1966—This Precious Time 1968—The World's Last Private Citizen.

Singer/songwriter Barry McGuire's first and last hit was his debut solo record, the prototypical protest song "Eve of Destruction." The Bob Dylan-style folk-rock tune made #1 in 1965, although some stations banned it because of its pessimistic lyrics. It also inspired an answer record, "Dawn of Correction."

Before "Eve," McGuire had been with the New Christy Minstrels and had been the featured vocalist on their 1963 hit "Green Green." He was further credited with helping to launch the career of the Mamas and the Papas, for which he was thanked with a mention in "Creeque Alley" In the '70s McGuire had his own dawn of redemption: After a decade of drug addiction, he became a born-again Christian and sold hundreds of thousands of Christian pop records. In the mid-'80s he moved to New Zealand but continues to perform and record.

Sarah McLachlan

Born Jan. 28, 1968, Halifax, Nova Scotia, Can.
 1988—Touch (Netwerk) 1991—Solace (Arista) 1993—Fumbling Towards Ecstasy 1994—The Freedom Sessions 1996—Rarities, B-Sides and Other Stuff (Netwerk) 1997—Surfacing (Arista) 1999—Mirrorball.

Canadian singer/songwriter Sarah McLachlan rose to international prominence during the mid-'90s, thanks to her expressive voice and a series of increasingly mature albums. Toward the end of the decade, her solo career became somewhat overshadowed by the Lilith Fair, the unexpectedly successful summer touring festival that McLachlan founded to showcase women musicians. McLachlan was raised by her adoptive parents in Halifax, Nova Scotia, where she took piano, guitar, and voice lessons as a child. While fronting a new-wave band called October Game at age 17, she was offered the chance to record a demo as a solo artist for Canada's Netwerk label. Her parents balked at the idea, so she refused. But when the label extended a better offer two years later, after McLachlan had finished her first year of art college, she accepted and moved to Netwerk's home in Vancouver, British Columbia, where she still resides.

In 1988 Netwerk put out McLachlan's debut, Touch, which went gold in Canada and was released worldwide the next year. Her followup and first recording for Arista, Solace, showed an increased maturity in her songwriting and foreshadowed the lyrical depth she would exhibit on 1993's Fumbling Towards Ecstasy. Inspired in part by a trip the singer took to Cambodia and Thailand, and the suffering she witnessed there, Fumbling saw McLachlan extending the subject matter of her lyrics beyond her previous topics of love and romantic relationships. The album, which yielded the hit singles "Possession" (#73, 1994) and "Good Enough" (#77, 1994), went triple platinum and gained McLachlan a wide fan base. Her next recording, 1997's Surfacing extended her previous success: It went to #2, produced three hit singles ("Adia," [#3]; "Angel," [#4], and "Building a Mystery," [#13]), and won McLachlan two Grammy Awards, for Best Female Pop Vocal Performance and Best Pop Instrumental Performance. The album eventually sold more than 7 million copies.

In 1997 McLachlan launched the Lilith Fair, which she founded in defiance of numerous promoters' insistence that a tour featuring more than one woman would never sell. In addition to the headlining McLachlan, the fair's bill included Tracy Chapman, Jewel, Joan Osborne, and Paula Cole and became the summer's top-grossing tour, outselling the more established (and male-dominated) Lollapalooza and H.O.R.D.E. festivals. Lilith Fair diversified its lineup during the next two years, showcasing musicians such as Erykah Badu, Bonnie Raitt, Missy Elliott, Luscious Jackson, the Dixie Chicks, and the Pretenders. Sticking to her resolution to keep the festival to a three-year run, McLachlan headed up the final Lilith Fair in 1999. In June of that year she released the triple-platinum live album Mirrorball (#3, 1999), for which she won the Grammy for Best Female Pop Vocal Performance in 2000.

Maria McKee: See Lone Justice

Malcolm McLaren

Born Jan. 22, 1946, London, Eng.
 1983—Duck Rock; D'Ya Like Scratchin' (Island) 1984—Would Ya Like More Scratchin'; Fans 1985—Swamp Thing 1989—Waltz Darling (Epic) 1990—Round the Outside! Round the Outside! (Atlantic) 1994—Paris (V2) 1996—The Largest Movie House in Paris (Noi) 1998—Buffalo Gals Back to Skool (Priority); World Famous Supreme Team Show (Atlantic).

Whether considered a postmodern genius or a posturing charlatan, Malcolm McLaren is one of the postpunk era's most provocative characters.

McLaren spent the '60s in various art schools before becoming entranced with the Internationale Situationist, a Marxist/Dadaist faction who had stirred up trouble during the 1968 Paris student protests. In 1969 radical fashion designer Vivienne Westwood came into McLaren's life, prompting McLaren's involvement with youth culture. (The couple have a child, Joseph.)

By the early '70s McLaren was operating the clothing store Let It Rock, which catered to the neo-'50s Teddy Boy style. There he met the seminal glam-punk band, the New York Dolls [see entry], then on a British tour. Becoming their manager in 1974, he relocated to New York. Setting the pattern for McLaren's future managerial endeavors, the relationship with the Dolls was short-lived. Back in London, McLaren opened another clothing store, Sex, specializing in S&M fashion. Picking from the store's rebellious, underclass clientele, McLaren formed the Sex Pistols [see entry], a pre-fab band, to help play out his anarchist fantasies. McLaren's brilliant manipulation of record companies and the media, as well as the band itself is legendary.

After the Pistols' breakup following their disastrous 1978 U.S. tour, McLaren devised Bow Wow Wow [see entry]. Although McLaren fostered the careers of both Adam Ant [see entry] and Boy George [see Culture Club entry], bowing out before either reached fame, he never aligned himself fully with another group or singer again.

For his next project McLaren merged indigenous music from around the world with contemporary black dance music, transforming himself into a brilliant synthesist in the eyes of some, a cultural imperialist in others'. Duck Rock features "Buffalo Girls" (#9 U.K., 1982) and "Double Dutch" (#3 U.K., 1983), unique pastiches that draw together hip-hop, Southern folk music, and African tribal rhythms. Fans was even more outrageous, combining rap and hip-hop with opera fragments, as in the single "Madam Butterfly" (#13 U.K., 1984). Waltz Darling, credited to Malcolm McLaren and the Bootzilla Orchestra, teamed Bootsie Collins and Jeff Beck with a symphony orchestra for another skewed mélange of high-, mid-, and low-brow culture.

With visions of subverting the film world, McLaren spent four unproductive years in Hollywood. He tried to develop projects with Steven Spielberg and had a highly publicized affair with actress/model Lauren Hutton. By the early '90s McLaren had quit California and returned to Europe. In 1993 he released Paris, featuring film icon Catherine Deneuve; four years later he worked on the hip-hop album Buffalo Gals Back to Skool, wrote ancient Greek music for an NBC made-for-TV movie of The Odyssey, wrote a film musical treatment of the life of Christian Dior, and began a stage adaptation of his own life story. In 1998 he created and managed a Chinese girl group, Jungk, and was commissioned to write his autobiography. In 1999 he ran for mayor of London, proposing to legalize brothels and marijuana. He aborted the bid in summer 2000.

John McLaughlin: See Mahavishnu Orchestra

Don McLean

Born Oct. 2, 1945, New Rochelle, NY
1970—Tapestry (United Artists) 1971—American Pie
1972—Don McLean 1973—Playin' Favorites 1974—Homeless Brother 1976—Solo 1977—Prime Time (Arista)
1980—Chain Lightning (Millennium) 1981—Believers
1983—Dominion 1986—Greatest Hits Then & Now (Capitol)
1987—Love Tracks 1990—For the Memories, vols. 1 & 2 (Gold Castle) 1992—Classics (Curb) 1995—River of Love.

Though he had occasional subsequent hits, singer/songwriter Don McLean is chiefly remembered for his #1 single of 1972, "American Pie," an 8½-minute saga inspired by the death of Buddy Holly. The song propelled his second album to #1 and obscured McLean's folksinging past and future for many years.

Before his sudden fame, McLean had earned a small following for his work with Pete Seeger on the sloop Clearwater, which sailed up and down the Hudson River on ecology campaigns. Perry Como turned one of the songs from McLean's debut album, "And I Love You So," into an international hit, and songwriters Norman Gimbel and Charles Fox made McLean the subject of "Killing Me Softly With His Song." Roberta Flack's Grammy Award-winning single of 1973. But even as American Pie yielded a second hit, the ballad "Vincent" (#12) (played daily at Amsterdam's Van Gogh Museum), McLean's smash success proved unrepeatable, and he spent a period of several years refusing to play "American Pie" and letting his career wind down.

McLean's albums for his new label, Millennium, started selling, and in 1981 he had a few hits: a remake of Roy Orbison's "Crying" (#5), his own "Castles in the Air" (#36), and "Since I Don't Have You" (#23). The rest of the decade found McLean bouncing from one style to another: Dominion was recorded live with an orchestra and rock backing band. Greatest Hits Then & Now was half new songs, half rerecorded, best-of maternal: Love Tracks was a straight-ahead country album, and For the Memories was covers of songs by composers ranging from Irving Berlin, George Gershwin, and Cole Porter, to Hank Williams, Wilhe Nelson, and Leiber and Stoller. In 1995 McLean released River of Love, his first new studio album in years. In 2000 Madonna had a hit with a cover of "American Pie," which appeared in the film The Next Best Thing.

Grant McLennan: See the Go-Betweens

MC Lyte

Born Lana Moorer, Oct. 11, 1971, Queens, NY
1988—Lyte as a Rock (First Priority/Atlantic) 1989—Eyes on This 1991—Act Like You Know 1993—Ain't No Other 1996—Bad as I Wanna B (EastWest) 1998—Seven & Seven.

MC Lyte is one of rap's steadiest-hitting and most respected female stars, known for her street-smart sensibility. Lyte grew up in Brooklyn, where she began rapping at age 12. When she was 16, her father started First Priority records and released Lyte's debut single, "I Cram to Understand U (Sam)," a clever rap about a boyfriend whose "other woman" turns out to be crack. The family act continued when Lyte's brothers Milk and Gizmo of Audio Two produced Lyte as a Rock. The narrative songs with minimal beats included "10% Dis" and "Paper Thin."

Lyte continued to write songs that were strong on content in Eyes on This, including the singles "Cha Cha Cha,"

"Cappuccino," and "Stop, Look, Listen." "I'm Not Having It" was used in a TV commercial about AIDS, an issue Lyte has frequently spoken out about. In 1990 she became the first rapper to play Carnegie Hall when she performed at an AIDS benefit. She has recorded public service announcements for Musicians for Life and visited schools for the Stop the Violence movement.

On Act Like You Know Lyte called in a variety of producers to add new touches of soul and R&B to her sound. The single "When in Love" (#14 R&B, 1991) was produced by Wolf and Epic, who had created huge hits for Bell Biv DeVoe. The album also included the rap hits "Poor Georgie" (#83 pop, #11 R&B, 1992) and "Eyes Are the Soul" (#84 R&B, 1992). Lyte fans protested that the rapper had softened her tough street style, and after Act Like You Know was only mildly popular compared with gangsta rap's gangbuster sales, Lyte went "hard" again on Ain't No Other (#90 pop, #16 R&B, 1993). The album opens with a bragging boost from KRS-ONE and features the single "Ruffneck," (#35 pop, #10 R&B, 1993) produced by Wreckx-N-Effect, a paean to criminally minded homeboys. The album also includes "Steady Fucking," a biting response to disses made by Roxanne Shanté. The album purposely avoided message songs; Lyte told interviewers she thought her audience was tired of hearing preaching and teaching.

MC Lyte started a management company in the early '90s, Duke Da Moon, with fellow female rappers Lin Que and Kink Easy, both of whom perform on "Hard Copy" from Ain't No Other. In 1996 Lyte released "Keep On, Keepin' On" (#10 pop, #3 R&B), a gold single featuring the female R&B quartet Xscape that appeared in the movie Sunset Park. Bad as I Wanna B (#59 pop, #11 R&B, 1996) charted two other singles, notably "Cold Rock a Party" (#11 pop, #5 R&B). In 1997 the rapper also acted in An Alan Smithee Film—Burn Hollywood Burn, a movie satirizing show business. Her costars included Whoopi Goldberg and Sylvester Stallone. Lyte's 1998 album, Seven & Seven (#71 R&B), didn't fare as well as its predecessors, despite the presence of guest producers Missy Elliott and L.L. Cool J.

James McMurtry

Born Mar. 18, 1962, Fort Worth, TX
1989—Too Long in the Wasteland (Columbia) 1992—Candyland 1995—Where'd You Hide the Body? 1997—It Had to Happen (Sugar Hill) 1998—Walk Between the Raindrops.

The son of noted novelist and screenwriter Larry McMurtry, singer/songwriter James McMurtry has drawn praise for his own terse, gnatty character sketches. The elder McMurtry gave his son his first guitar when he was seven: James' mother—an English professor who divorced his father while James was a toddler—taught him his first chords. Later, as a student at the University of Arizona, James McMurtry began playing and singing at a local cafe.

He eventually returned to Texas, where he tended bar in San Antonio while continuing to perform. Then his father, who was scripting a film called Falling From Grace, passed a copy of McMurtry's demo tape on to the movie's director and star, John Mellencamp. Impressed by McMurtry's rootsy folk-rock songs, Mellencamp helped the young singer land a record contract and coproduced his 1989 debut album, Too Long in the Wasteland, with Michael Wanchic, a member of Mellencamp's band. McMurtry also appeared on the soundtrack to Falling From Grace, as part of a group called Buzzin' Cousins, whose other members were Mellencamp, John Prine, Joe Ely, and Dwight Yoakam. (The Cousins contributed the track "Sweet Suzanne.") In 1992 McMurtry released Candyland, produced by Wanchic, with Mellencamp as executive producer. The ambitious Where'd You Hide the Body? was released with a video of short film interpretations of each song, produced with film students from California State and the University of Southern California. Guitanist Charlie Sexton played on It Had to Happen and Walk Between the Raindrops.

Big Jay McNeely

Born Cecil James McNeely, Apr. 29, 1927, Los Angeles, CA
1956—Big "J" in 3-D (Federal) 1963—Big Jay McNeely Live at Cisco's (Warner Bros.); Big Jay McNeely Selections (Savoy) 1989—Swingin' Cuts (Collectables) 1993—Live at Birdland 1957 2000—Central Avenue Confidential (Atomic Theory).

One of the original honking rock & roll tenor saxophonists, Big Jay McNeely was famed for his playing-on-his-back acrobatics and his raw, hard-swinging playing, both of which influenced subsequent rock guitarists such as Dick Dale and Jimi Hendrix. Billed as the King of the Honkers, McNeely had his first hits in 1949, with "Deacon's Hop" (#1 R&B) and "Wild Wig" (#12 R&B). His best-known composition is "There Is Something on Your Mind," a #5 R&B hit (#44 pop) in 1959 when sung by his own band's vocalist, Haywood "Little Sonny" Warner. New Orleans singer Bobby Marchan had an even bigger hit with "There Is Something on Your Mind, Part 2" the next year (#1 R&B, #31 pop). The song has since been recorded by Gene Vincent, King Curtis, B.B. King, and Etta James.

McNeely retired from music for 20 years, during which time he worked for the post office in L.A. He returned to performing in 1983 and, unlike many of his contemporaries, is doing very well. He continues to tour and to record with blues and rockabilly bands, mostly in Europe and Australia. According to Jim Dawson, the author of Nervous Man Nervous: Big Jay McNeely and the Rise of the Honking Tenor Sax, McNeely earned more from performing in the '90s than at any other time in his career. He continues to perform.

Clyde McPhatter: See the Drifters

Christine McVie; John McVie: See Fleetwood Mac

Meat Loaf

Born Marvin Lee Aday, Sep. 27, 1947, Dallas, TX
 1971—Stoney and Meat Loaf (Rare Earth) 1977—Bat out of Hell (Cleveland International) 1981—Dead Ringer 1983—Midnight at the Lost and Found 1984—Hits out of Hell; Bad Attitude 1986—Blind Before I Stop 1987—Meat Loaf Live 1993—Bat out of Hell II: Back Into Hell (MCA) 1995—Welcome to the Neighborhood 1998—The Very Best of Meat Loaf (Epic) 1999—VH1 Storytellers (Beyond).

Bat out of Hell (#14, 1977) made Meat Loaf rock's first 250-pound-plus superstar since Leslie West. One of the biggest-selling LPs of the '70s, Bat has sold over 13 million copies in the U.S. Within a few years of its release, however, Meat Loaf all but disappeared from the U.S. music scene, only to reemerge again in 1993 with an album more successful than Bat.

It's unclear exactly when and how Marvin Lee Aday became Meat Loaf, but by 1966, when he moved from his native Texas to California, he'd formed a band alternately known as Meat Loaf Soul and Popcorn Blizzard, which, until its breakup in 1969, had opened shows for the Who, Iggy Pop and the Stooges, Johnny and Edgar Winter, and Ted Nugent. He then auditioned for and got a part in a West Coast production of Hair and traveled with the show to the East Coast and then to Detroit, where he hooked up with a singer named Stoney to record the unsuccessful LP Stoney and Meat Loaf—rereleased in 1979 as Meat Loaf (Featuring Stoney). Meat Loaf went to New York to appear in the off-Broadway gospel musical Rainbow in New York in 1973, and then successfully auditioned for More Than You Deserve, written by Jim Steinman.

Steinman, a New Yorker who'd spent his early teen years in California, had studied classical piano. Later he wrote a play called Dream Engine in New York. Meanwhile, Meat Loaf had played Eddie in the hugely successful cult film The Rocky Horror Picture Show and sung lead vocals on one side of Ted Nugent's platinum LP Free for All. After meeting at More Than You Deserve auditions, Meat Loaf and Steinman toured with the National Lampoon Road Show; then Steinman wrote a musical called Never Land (a Peter Pan update), from which would come much of the material for Bat out of Hell. (Never Land was produced in 1977 at Washington's Kennedy Center.) Meat Loaf and Steinman rehearsed for a full year before Todd Rundgren, an early supporter of the project, agreed to produce them.

At first, Bat, with its highly theatrical, bombastically orchestrated teen drama, sold well only in New York and Cleveland. Then Meat Loaf hit the road with a seven-piece band that included singer Karla DeVito in the role Ellen Foley had played on the LP's "Paradise by the Dashboard Light" (which also included a cameo by New York Yankees former shortstop and announcer Phil Rizzuto). The LP was platinum by the end of the year, with the hit singles "Paradise by the Dashboard Light" (#39), "Two out of Three Ain't Bad" (#11), and "You Took the Words Right out of My Mouth" (#39).

Meat Loaf appeared in the films Americathon (1979) and Roadie (1980). In 1981 Steinman released his own Rundgren-produced solo LP, Bad for Good. Still the world awaited Bat's sequel. Stories circulated that Meat Loaf had been coaxed to sing on Bad for Good but couldn't or wouldn't because of a variety of physical and emotional problems. Finally toward the end of 1981, Dead Ringer (#45, 1981) was released to meager response. Meanwhile, Steinman initiated lawsuits against Epic and Meat Loaf. Midnight at the Lost and Found had no Steinman material and included a few songs cowritten by "M. Lee Aday." Meat Loaf eventually declared bankruptcy and underwent physical and psychological therapy to get his voice back. He somehow managed to keep making records, which went virtually unnoticed in the U.S., though he remained a concert draw in England.

In 1993 Meat Loaf—back with Steinman—reemerged with Bat out of Hell II: Back Into Hell, unabashedly picking up, in sound and story, right where "Mr. Loaf" (as the New York Times called him) had left off with Bat out of Hell. The comeback album sold even faster than the original, entering the chart at #25 and eventually hitting #1, selling 10 million copies within three months worldwide, and yielding a hit single in "I'd Do Anything for Love (But I Won't Do That)". In January 1994 that song won Meat Loaf his first Grammy, in the category of Best Male Rock Vocal Performance. Meat Loaf also mounted a Broadway/arena-rock tour reminiscent of days of yore, with his entrance heralded by bombastic power chords interrupting a string quartet, which opened the shows playing a medley of his early hits. This renewed popularity led to prestigious engagements, such as a duet with Luciano Pavarotti at a benefit concert for the children of Bosnia in 1995.

Despite this success, Steinman and Meat Loaf parted ways once again. Although it featured contributions from the likes of Diane Warren, who penned the single "I'd Lie for You (and That's the Truth)" (#13, 1995), Welcome to the Neighborhood (#17, 1995) quickly sank from the chart and the following tour did not do well; the singer was then dropped by MCA. In the mid-'90s his former label, Cleveland International, and Sony became involved in several lawsuits concerning claimed underpayment of royalties for Bat out of Hell. The cases were settled out of court for an undisclosed amount in 1998.

Without a label, Meat Loaf once again turned to acting, appearing in Crazy in Alabama and Fight Club, both in 1999. That same year he released the live VH1 Storytellers, along with an autobiography, To Hell and Back.

Meat Puppets

Formed in 1980, Phoenix, AZ
 Curt Kirkwood (b. Jan. 10, 1959), gtr., voc.; Cris Kirkwood (b. Oct. 22, 1960, Amarillo, TX), bass, voc.; Derrick Bostrom (b. June 23, 1960, Phoenix), drums.
 1981—In a Car Ep (World Imitation) 1982—Meat Puppets

(SST) 1983—Meat Puppets II 1985—Up on the Sun 1986—Out My Way EP 1987—Mirage; Huevos 1989—Monsters 1990—No Strings Attached 1991—Forbidden Places (London) 1994—Too High to Die 1995—No Joke! 1999—You Love Me EP; Live in Montana (Rykodisc) (– Cris Kirkwood; – Bostrom; + Shandon Sahn, drums; + Kyle Ellison, gtr.; + Andrew Duplantis, bass).

Meat Puppets started out as an engagingly incompetent, country-tinged thrash trio. By its third full-length album, however, the band had developed a signature sound that pitted the deconstructionist attitude of American hardcore against the carefree spirit of the Grateful Dead.

Brothers Curt and Cns Kirkwood grew up in Phoenix, Arizona, where they attended a Jesuit prep school and played in various mainstream-oriented rock bands. Not interested in continuing their educations, the two formed Meat Puppets along with local drummer Derrick Bostrom. In the beginning the group was so intent on playing a rough and spontaneous style of music that they refused even to rehearse.

In 1981 the Puppets released In a Car, an EP of earsplitting avant rock boasting five songs in five minutes. The trio's irreverence so impressed Black Flag guitarist Greg Ginn that he signed the Puppets to his influential SST label and released the band's noisy, experimental debut LP later the following year (and reissued In a Car in 1985).

The Kirkwoods took a radically different approach on the influential Meat Puppets II, delivering a set of ragged, out-of-tune country-punk songs that hinted at their future desert-breeze-style sound. Growing more professional with each subsequent release, the psychedelic/country/punk/folk on Up on the Sun came out to flattening reviews in 1985.

In 1990, on the strength of Huevos and Monsters, as well as Curt Kirkwood's continually improving Jerry Garcia-style fretwork, the band signed to London Records, releasing Forbidden Places the next year. (No Strings Attached is a retrospective of Meat Puppets' SST work.) Kurt Cobain, a longtime Meat Puppets fan, invited the Kirkwoods to join Nirvana in its December 1993 Unplugged performance, where Cobain sang three songs from Meat Puppets II. The exposure helped push the Puppets' Too High to Die to #62 the following year, and earned them an alternative radio hit with "Backwater." But the band could not maintain that popularity with 1995's No Joke! (#183).

Subsequent years were largely inactive. Cris Kirkwood fell into severe drug abuse (his wife died of an overdose), and he officially left the band. Bostrom also left, though he remained active in Rykodisc's 1999 reissues of the Meat Puppets' SST catalogue and the band's Web site. By 1998, Curt Kirkwood had relocated to Austin and recruited new members into the Puppets: drummer Shandon Sahn (the son of Doug Sahn), sometime Butthole Surfer guitarist Kyle Ellison, and bassist Andrew Duplantis. In 2000 the band signed to Breaking Records, an Atlantic imprint owned by Hootie & the Blowfish.

Megadeth

Formed 1983, Los Angeles, CA
 Dave Mustaine (b. Sep. 13, 1961, La Mesa, CA), gtr., voc.; David Ellefson (b. Nov. 12, 1964, MN), bass; Chris Poland, gtr.; Gars Samuelson (b. 1958; d. July 14, 1999, Orange City, FL), drums.
 1985—Killing Is My Business . . . and Business Is Good (Combat)
 1986—Peace Sells . . . But Who's Buying? (Capitol) (– Poland; – Samuelson; + Jeff Young, gtr.; + Chuck Behler, drums)
 1988—So Far, So Good . . . So What? (– Young; – Behler; + Marty Friedman [b. Dec. 8, 1962, Washington, DC], gtr.; + Nick Menza [b. July 23, 1964, Ger.], drums) 1990—Rust in Peace 1992—Countdown to Extinction 1994—Youthanasia 1995—Hidden Treasures 1997—Cryptic Writings 1999—Risk (– Menza; + Jimmy DeGrasso [b. Mar. 16, 1963, PA], drums) 2000—Capitol Punishment: The Megadeath Years (– Friedman; + Al Pitrelli [b. Sept. 26, 1962, NY], gtr.).

When guitarist Dave Mustaine was booted out of Metallica early in its career, he formed Megadeth, which continued his former group's thrash-metal style with even more speed and intensity.

Mustaine was seven when his parents divorced, and his family wound up living in poverty in the Southern California suburbs. During his teens, Mustaine's mother was often away, leaving him with his sisters; he told a journalist that a brother-in-law once punched him in the face for listening to Judas Priest. Mustaine's revenge was to join a heavy-metal band, and in 1981 he became a founding member of Metallica [see entry], from which he was fired two years later in a power struggle over leadership and allegations of his drug use. Mustaine, whose reputation for outspokenness and mood swings is notorious, formed Megadeth that same year with Minnesota native Dave Ellefson.

Mustaine and Ellefson hoped to create a jazz-oriented progressive strain of heavy metal based on chops as much as emotional aggression. Megadeth's first album, Killing Is My

Megadeth: Nick Menza, Dave Mustaine, Marty Friedman, David Ellefson

Business . . . and Business Is Good succeeded in that regard and garnered mainly positive reviews, even from critics normally hostile to heavy metal. Mustaine's drug use, meanwhile, deepened with his discovery of heroin. Still, the band's subsequent albums Peace Sells . . . But Who's Buying? (#76, 1986) and So Far So Good . . . So What? (#28, 1988), continued in its celebrated lightning-speed, chops-heavy style.

In 1990 Mustaine was arrested for impaired driving and went into a 12-step program for his drug and alcohol problems. The same year Megadeth released Rust in Peace, which reached #23. Mustaine's former band, meanwhile, paved the way for thrash metal when its self-titled album of 1991 skyrocketed to the top of the charts. Megadeth followed in Metallica's footsteps the next year with Countdown to Extinction, which went to #2.

Offstage, Mustaine continued getting into trouble. In 1993 Megadeth was dumped from its opening spot on Aerosmith's tour when that group tired of Mustaine's misbehavior. Megadeth returned in 1994 with Youthansia (the album's press release was written by novelist Dean Koontz), which debuted at #4. That same year, Mustaine slipped back into drug use briefly during a tour, but has since returned to sobriety, claiming even to refuse nitrous oxide while in the dentist's chair.

Before recording 1997's Cryptic Writings (#10), Mustaine started work on a degree in business management at the University of Phoenix and began mastering Web design. He put those new skills to work when his company designed the Web site for Alice Cooper's theme restaurant, Alice Cooper's town.

Megadeth's lineup changes continued, as former Suidicidal Tendencies drummer Jimmy DeGrasso joined in time for 1999's Risk. That album's title and revamped sound were inspired by published comments from Metallica's Lars Ulrich suggesting that Megadeth take more musical risks. The subsequent album incorporated surprising industrial and Mid-Eastern flavors along the edges.

The Mekons

Formed May 1977, Leeds, Eng.

Jon Langford (b. Oct. 11, 1957, Newport, S. Wales), voc., gtr., drums; Tom Greenhalgh (b. Nov. 4, 1956, Stockholm), voc., gtr. 1979—The Quality of Mercy Is Not Strnen (Virgin, U.K.) 1980—The Mekons (Red Rhino, U.K.) 1982—It Falleth Like Gentle Rain From Heaven—The Mekons Story (CNT, U.K.) 1983—The English Dancing Master EP 1985—(+ Sally Timms [b. Nov. 29, 1959, Leeds], voc.; + Lu Knee (a.k.a. Lu Edmonds), bass; + Steve Goulding, drums; + Susie Honeyman, violin) Fear and Whiskey (Sin, U.K.) 1986—Crime and Punishment EP; The Edge of the World; Slightly South of the Border EP 1987—Honky Tonkin' (Twin/Tone) 1988—So Good It Hurts 1989—Original Sin; The Mekons Rock 'n' Roll (A&M) 1990—F.U.N. '90 EP; New York (ROIR) 1991—The Curse of the Mekons (Blast First, U.K.) 1992—Wicked Midnite EP (Loud) 1993—(+ Sarah Corina, bass) I ♥ Mekons (Quarterstick) 1994—

Retreat From Memphis 1995—United 1996—Pussy, King of the Pirates (with Kathy Acker) 1998—Me 2000—Journey to the End of the Night.

Waco Brothers (with Langford and Goulding): 1995—To the Last Dead Cowboy (Bloodshot) 1997—Cowboy in Flames; Do You Think About Me? 1999—Waco World 2000—Electric Waco Chair.

Jon Langford solo: 1998—Skull Orchard (Sugar Free).

Sally Timms: 1995—To the Land of Milk and Honey (Feel Good All Over) 1999—Cowboy Sally's Twilight Laments . . . For Lost Buckaroos (Bloodshot).

Intensely independent, idealistic yet cynical, the Mekons are one of the longest-lasting combos of the British punk era. Their music has gone from dissonant, minimal art punk, to danceable, dub-heavy electronics, to ragged country, sensitive folk, and anthemic rock & roll. (Space does not permit a full accounting of all the group members' various solo and outside projects.) A postpunk cottage industry—and favorite among rock critics—the Mekons never attained more than a cult following. The group's bad luck with record labels and staunchly leftist politics are legendary.

Tom Greenhalgh and Jon Langford were Leeds art students when the Sex Pistols came through town in 1976. Inspired by the group's amateurish playing, Greenhalgh, who knew only two chords, formed the Mekons (named for a green-headed alien in a '50s comic strip, Dan Dare Space Pilot of the Future). Within months, future guitarist Jon Langford joined on drums, the two emerging as a band alongside their more political Leeds University brethren, the Gang of Four.

After a single "Never Been in a Riot" (a witty reply to the Clash's "White Riot"), the band signed with Virgin and released The Quality of Mercy Is Not Strnen, a humorous, intelligent, but utterly inept collection of noisy punk. In a move that would repeat itself throughout the Mekons' career, Virgin dropped the band midway through recording of their second album. When some of the members bowed out, the group developed a revolving-door membership, with Greenhalgh and Langford the only constants.

The band released Devils Rats and Piggies a Special Message From Godzilla (later known simply as The Mekons) on the U.K. independent label Red Rhino. After a 1980 European tour and two subsequent New Year's Eve shows in New York with hometown friends Gang of Four, the Mekons nearly called it quits. (Langford formed a side band, Three Johns, which put out 13 albums over the next seven years.) In 1982 the group compiled a hodgepodge of old and new material for The Mekons Story, released on yet another U.K. indie, CNT. With renewed vigor, they returned to the studio and recorded the country-tinged English Dancing Master.

In the two years that lapsed between albums, Sally Timms, a Leeds native who had sung with the band in the past, joined, followed by ex-Rumour drummer Steve Goulding, bassist Lu Knee (a.k.a. Lu Edmonds), and classically trained violinist Susie Honeyman. In 1985 the group released the celebrated Fear and Whiskey (issued in the U.S. in 1989 as

The Mekons: Sally Timms, Jon Langford, Susie Honeyman, Tom Greenhalgh

Original Sin, revealing an interest in rough-hewn country music that would later flourish in '90s solo projects by Timms and Langford (with the twangy Waco Brothers). By then, the Mekons had evolved a distinct, though highly eclectic, sound. Their mid- to late-'80s Sin and Twin/Tone albums were generally well received, but the Mekons became most loved for their raucous live shows.

In 1989 the Mekons signed with A&M and released their most critically acclaimed album, The Mekons Rock 'n' Roll, a collection of heartfelt rockers with a healthy dose of skepticism. But more major-label troubles were around the corner. After the bizarre, sparse, dance-oriented F.U.N. '90—which contained a crude recording of the late rock critic Lester Bangs singing behind a dub-heavy track—the Mekons asked to be released from A&M, citing insufficient financial support. A&M said no, then refused to release the group's followup album. In 1991 the aptly named Curse of the Mekons appeared on U.K. label Blast First, but A&M retained the American rights. The album, which Langford has called one of the Mekons' best, was not released in the U.S. until 2001.

More problems arose in 1992 when a WEA subsidiary, Loud Records, signed the Mekons but promptly suffered financial troubles, which led to their sitting on the group's next album, a collection of Mekons-style love songs called I ♥ Mekons, for nearly a year. The group finally released the record on the independent Quarterstick label in 1993; the following year, it put out Retreat From Memphis.

Throughout their career, the Mekons' core membership of Langford and Greenhalgh (and later Timms and Honeyman) has been joined by a host of musicians, including founding members Kevin Lycett (guitar) and Mark White (vocals), as well as ex-Pretty Thing Dick Taylor (guitar), Brendan Crocker (guitar), Rico Bell (accordion), Sarah Conna (bass), among others. And by the late '90s, much of the band had relocated to Chicago, finding champions at such local indie labels as Quarterstick and Bloodshot.

In 1996 "Mekons United," a traveling multimedia art exhibition celebrating their work in recorded sounds and visual arts, toured museums in the U.S. (In subsequent years, Langford would enjoy solo exhibitions of his paintings.) An accompanying book and CD, the mostly electronic United, were also released. That same year, the band collaborated with author Kathy Acker on a performance-art piece, Pussy, King of the Pirates, which toured live and was released on CD. The Mekons' hunger for new sounds and styles blossomed further on 1998's Me, which mixed guitars, strings, and traditional Arabic instruments with synthesizers and experiments in dub and drum loops. The folk-soul blend Journey to the End of the Night emerged in 2000.

Melanie

Born Melanie Safka, Feb. 3, 1947, Queens, NY
 1969—Born to Be (Buddah); Melanie 1970—Candles in the Rain; Leftover Wine 1971—The Good Book; Gather Me (Neighborhood) 1972—Four Sides of Melanie (Buddah); Stoneground Words (Neighborhood) 1973—At Carnegie Hall 1974—Madrugada; As I See It Now 1975—Sunset and Other Beginnings 1976—Photograph (Atlantic) 1978—Phonogenic—Not Just Another Pretty Face (Midsong) 1979—Ballroom Streets (RCA) 1982—Arabesque (Blanche) 1985—Am I Real or What (Amherst) 1990—The Best of Melanie (Rhino) 1991—Precious Cargo (Precious Cargo) 1993—Freedom Knows My Name (Lonestar) 1997—Low Country; Antlers 1999—Beautiful People: The Greatest Hits of Melanie (Buddha) 2000—Melanie Recorded Live @ Borders (DES).

Singer/songwriter Melanie caught the last upsurge of hippie innocence in songs like "Lay Down (Candles in the Rain)" and "Beautiful People." While she sold over 22 million records around the world, her childlike demeanor, cracked voice, and naive lyrics made her a novelty act before her time.

Melanie Safka's family moved to Boston and then to Long Branch, New Jersey, when she was a teenager. After high school she studied at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts. Soon after she signed a song-publishing agreement with her future producer and husband, Peter Schekeryk. In 1967 she won a recording contract with Columbia Records, which released her single "Beautiful People." When the record did not sell, Columbia dropped her and she returned to the local folk clubs until 1969, when a single from Born to Be, "What Have They Done to My Song, Ma," hit in France.

In August 1969 Melanie appeared at Woodstock, which inspired her to write "Lay Down (Candles in the Rain)." Released in spring 1970, it became a #6 single, and the Candles in the Rain LP went gold. From then on, it became a ritual for her loyal fans to light candles at her shows. In summer 1970 "Peace Will Come (According to Plan)" hit #32, and she made a live album, Leftover Wine. That fall, the New Seekers had a smash hit with their version of "What Have They Done to My Song, Ma."

In 1971 Melanie and her husband formed their own record company, Neighborhood, and the singer immediately had her biggest success, the #1 "Brand New Key," which sold over 3 million copies. Another single off the LP, "Ring the Living Bell," hit the Top 40. Gather Me went gold. That same year, she performed and toured the world as a spokesperson for UNICEF.

After that, her records stopped selling, and in 1975 Neighborhood folded. She was signed by Atlantic Records, and her label debut, Photograph, was coproduced by company president Ahmet Ertegun and Schekeryk. In 1978 she recorded for Midsong, and the next year released Ballroom Streets on RCA. In 1989 Melanie won an Emmy for "The First Time I Loved Forever," her song for the TV show Beauty and the Beast. She toured Europe and continued recording for small and import labels in the '90s. As of 2001 she had 33 albums to her name. The mother of three has also performed at several Woodstock anniversary concerts and at various humanitarian events. Her daughters sing as a duo called Safka.

John Mellencamp

Born Oct. 7, 1951, Seymour, IN 1976—Chestnut Street Incident (Mainman/MCA) 1978—A Biography (Riva) 1979—John Cougar 1980—Nothin' Matters and What If It Did 1982—American Fool 1983—Uh-huh 1985—Scarecrow 1987—The Lonesome Jubilee (Mercury) 1989—Big Daddy 1991—Whenever We Wanted 1993—Human Wheels 1994—Dance Naked 1996—Mr. Happy Go Lucky 1997—The Best That I Could Do (1978–1988) 1998—John Mellencamp (Columbia) 1999—Rough Harvest (Mercury).

Singer/songwriter John Mellencamp became one of 1982's biggest stars when his fifth LP, American Fool, went to #1, sold over 5 million copies, and yielded two hit singles, "Hurts So Good" (#2) and "Jack and Diane" (#1). More important, perhaps, has been Mellencamp's evolution from a Springsteen-style hard-rock stylist into what one critic called a "renaissance rocker." From American Fool on, Mellencamp's critical stock rose even as record sales leveled off.

Mellencamp was born with a form of spina bifida, a potentially crippling neural tube defect that required surgery and a lengthy hospitalization. Coddled by his mother and encouraged by his father to excel, Mellencamp grew into a self-proclaimed rebel. At 17 he eloped with his pregnant girlfriend, Priscilla Esterline, and began attending community college and working a series of blue-collar jobs. He had written a number of songs before he moved to New York at age 24 to begin a music career. There he met David Bowie's manager, Tony DeFries, who christened Mellencamp Johnny Cougar, helped him get what has been reported as a $1 million deal with the Mainman label, and oversaw the recording of his debut, Chestnut Street Incident. The LP, which consisted of cover tunes, failed to hit, and MCA dropped Mellencamp, who, it has been reported, was not even aware that he had "adopted" the Cougar stage name until he saw his album cover. That and several other early experiences in the music business, no doubt, contributed to the sometimes jaundiced view of show business that Mellencamp has expressed repeatedly through the years.

Four years later he signed (to his dismay, as John Cougar) with Riva Records and, working with Rod Stewart's manager, Billy Gaff, recorded two more LPs, the latter of which, John Cougar (#64, 1979), contained "I Need a Lover." Previously a radio hit for Pat Benatar, "I Need a Lover" was a #28 hit for Mellencamp in the U.S. and went to #1 in Australia. Nothin' Matters (#37, 1980), produced by Steve Cropper, sold 900,000 copies and contained the hits "This Time" (#27, 1980) and "Ain't Even Done With the Night" (#17, 1981). Cougar divorced his first wife in 1981, and that year married Vicky Granucci. (They would later divorce.)

Two years later came Mellencamp's commercial breakthrough, American Fool (#1, 1982). The videos for its hit singles—the Grammy-winning "Hurts So Good" (#2, 1982), "Jack and Diane" (#1, 1982), and "Hand to Hold On To" (#19, 1982)—quickly became MTV staples, and Cougar toured as an opening act for Heart. The next year's Uh-Huh (#9, 1983) came out with American Fool still on the charts and included "Crumblin' Down" (#9, 1983), "Pink Houses" (#8, 1983), and "Authority Song" (#15, 1984). That year Mellencamp, who had incorporated "Mellencamp" into his stage name, embarked on his first headlining tour. With Scarecrow (#2, 1985) Mellencamp stayed the hard-rock course, producing another string of hits: "Lonely Ol' Night" (#6, 1985), "Small Town" (#6, 1985), "R.O.C.K. in the U.S.A." (#2, 1986), "Rain on the Scarecrow" (#21, 1986), and "Rumbleseat" (#28, 1986).

In 1985 Mellencamp, with Willie Nelson and Neil Young, was a co-organizer of Farm Aid. He appeared at Farm Aid concerts I through VI. Over the years, he has also given concerts to call attention to the American farmer's plight, and in 1987 he testified before a congressional subcommittee on the issue. In addition he has been an outspoken critic of beer- and cigarette-company sponsorship of concert tours and refuses to allow his music to be used in commercials.

Mellencamp's style took a dramatic turn with The Lonesome Jubilee (#6, 1987), which blended traditional American folk instrumentation (for example, Lisa Germano's violin and accordions) in a number of songs that lamented rather than celebrated contemporary Middle America. Its hits were "Paper in Fire" (#9, 1987), "Cherry Bomb" (#8, 1987), and "Check It Out" (#14, 1988). His next albums, more deeply introspective in some ways, each sold about a million copies, but the hits were fewer and farther between than in previous years. Big Daddy (#7, 1989) included the somewhat cynical semiautobiographical "Pop Singer" (#15, 1989), and Whenever We Wanted (#17, 1991)—his first album as John Mellencamp, rather than John Cougar Mellencamp—featured "Get a Leg Up" (#14, 1991) and "Again Tonight" (#36, 1992). The "Get a Leg Up" video featured model Elaine Irwin, who became his third wife. Human Wheels (#7, 1993) yielded no major hit singles. Dance Naked (#13, 1994) featured the #3 hit cover of Van Morrison's "Wild Night," a duet with singer/bassist Meshell Ndegeocello. Mellencamp's plans to embark on a large 1994 North American tour were scuttled after he was diagnosed with a heart condition. Although initial reports described Mellencamp's problem as an arterial blockage, he later admitted that he had suffered a heart attack.

As if to comment on his brush with mortality, Mellencamp titled his next album Mr. Happy Go Lucky (#9, 1996) and sought out dance-mix specialist Junior Vasquez to put an urban spin on his signature heartland sound. Tony Toni Toné bassist Raphael Saadiq and North Mississippi diddley-bow player Lonnie Pitchford were among guest performers. "Key West Intermezzo (I Saw You First)" (#14, 1996) was a hit, and a second single, "Just Another Day," reached #46. Not all was happy-go-lucky, however, as Mellencamp terminated his relationship with his label the following year. Though he owed PolyGram/Mercury five albums, he was free to sign with Columbia after signing off on The Best That I Could Do: 1978–1988 (#33, 1997), a hits collection, and the acoustic Rough Harvest (#99, 1999). His emancipatory release was called John Mellencamp (#41, 1998), and featured guest appearances by ex-Guns n' Roses guitarist Izzy Stradlin and drummer Stan Lynch of Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers.

Mellencamp has produced or coproduced all of his own albums, as well as Mitch Ryder's Never Kick a Sleeping Dog (1983), James McMurtry's Too Long in the Wasteland (1989), and the soundtrack from Falling From Grace (1992), the film in which he made his acting and directorial debut. Written by Larry McMurtry (James' father, of Lonesome Dove fame), Falling From Grace garnered mixed reviews, but some praised Mellencamp's direction. In the '90s Mellencamp has also exhibited his paintings throughout the country, including in the Twice Gilded show. His work also appears in the book Musicians as Artists. He received the Billboard Century Award in 2001.

Harold Melvin and the Blue Notes

Formed 1955, Philadelphia, PA

Harold Melvin (b. June 25, 1939, Philadelphia; d. Mar. 24, 1997, Mount Airy, PA), voc.; Bernard Wilson, voc.; Jesse Gillis Jr., voc.; Franklin Peaker, voc.; Roosevelt Brodie, voc. ca. 1960—(Melvin; Wilson; + John Atkins, voc.; + Lawrence Brown, voc.) ca. 1970—(Melvin; Lawrence Brown, voc.; Lloyd Parks, voc.; Bernard Wilson, voc.; + Teddy Pendergrass [b. Mar. 26, 1950, Philadelphia], drums, then voc.).

1972—Harold Melvin and the Blue Notes (Philadelphia International) 1973—I Miss You; Black and Blue (– Parks; + Jerry Cummings, voc.) 1975—To Be True; Wake Up Everybody (– Pendergrass; + David Ebo, voc.) 1976—All Their Greatest Hits 1977—Reaching for the World (ABC) (+ Dwight Johnson, bass/baritone voc.; + Bill Spratley, baritone voc.) 1980—The Blue Album (Source) 1981—All Things Happen in Time (MCA) 1981 on—(various personnel) 1995—If You Don't Know Me by Now: The Best of Harold Melvin and the Blue Notes (Legacy/Epic).

Although formed in 1955, this Philadelphia-based vocal group did not attain widespread popularity until the mid-

'70s, with Teddy Pendergrass [see entry] as lead singer. Harold Melvin founded the Blue Notes as an old-style doo-wop group with three other singers and Bernard Wilson, the only other member who would remain through most of its many incarnations. Melvin was not a great lead singer, but he was a highly disciplined leader who designed the group's precision choreography, an upscale "tie and tails" look, and a broad repertoire that made the group as popular in Atlantic City pimp bars as in Miami hotel showrooms.

The first Blue Notes recorded its first single, "If You Love Me," for Josie but disbanded soon after, leaving Melvin and Wilson to regroup with new lead John Atkins and Lawrence Brown. After years in the '60s on the chitlin' circuit, they were signed to the William Morris Agency on the recommendation of Martha Reeves. They frequently appeared in supper clubs in Las Vegas, Lake Tahoe, Reno, and Miami Beach.

Around the time Atkins left, Pendergrass joined. He had been drumming in a faux Cadillac group when Melvin, who had fired his entire band, hired the whole group to back the Blue Notes. Pendergrass, an excellent drummer, moved up to the lead spot after another of dozens of personnel shifts. Although Melvin and the Blue Notes was a Philly fixture, the city's leading producers, Kenny Gamble and Leon Huff, had no interest in the group until they caught a live show with Pendergrass up front. Soon, the group was signed to the mighty Philadelphia International Records and, along with the O'Jays, became one of the first groups associated with the Sound of Philadelphia.

From 1972 until Pendergrass left in October 1975 to pursue a solo career, Harold Melvin and the Blue Notes had three #1 R&B singles: "If You Don't Know Me by Now" (#3 pop, 1972), "The Love I Lost" (#7 pop, 1973), and "Wake Up Everybody" (#12 pop, 1976). Other hits included "I Miss You" (#58 pop, #7 R&B, 1972), "Satisfaction Guaranteed" (#58 pop, #6 R&B, 1974), "Where Are All My Friends" (#8 R&B, 1974), "Bad Luck" (#15 pop, #4 R&B, 1975), "Tell the World How I Feel About 'Cha Baby" (#7 R&B, 1976), and "Hope That We Can Be Together Soon" (#42 pop, 1975) (featuring Sharon Paige).

As Pendergrass' star rose, friction increased between Melvin and him (in part, because many people assumed that Teddy was Harold). A compromise in billing was struck, with "featuring Teddy Pendergrass" added to the group's name. Following Pendergrass' departure for a hugely successful solo career, Melvin brought in lead singer David Ebo, and the group signed to ABC. Although the Blue Notes' label debut, "Reaching for the World," hit #6 on the R&B chart, subsequent releases failed to match their mid-'70s success. In 1979 they switched to Source Records, where "Prayin'" was a moderate R&B hit (#18).

Their last charting single was 1984's "I Really Love You." The group continued to tour, with an ever-changing lineup. At various times throughout the Blue Notes' career, members have included Bunny Sigler and Billy Paul [see entry]. Melvin suffered strokes in July and November 1996 and another shortly before his death in March 1997.

Memphis Slim

Born Peter Chatman, Sep. 3, 1915, Memphis, TN; died Feb. 24, 1988, Paris, Fr.

1973—Legacy of the Blues (GNP/Crescendo) 1975—Rock Me Baby (Black Lion) 1976—Chicago Boogie 1978—Boogie Woogie (Festival) 1993—Memphis Slim at the Gate of Horn (Vee-Jay) 1995—Chicago Blues Masters, vol. 1 (with Muddy Waters) (Capitol) 1997—The Bluebird Recordings 1940–1941 (RCA).

Blues singer and barrelhouse pianist Memphis Slim was perhaps the first bluesman to leave America for Europe and become a star there. He is also the composer of "Every Day (I Have the Blues)," which became a big-band standard when sung by Joe Williams with Count Basie's orchestra.

Having taught himself the piano and learned from such Memphis greats as Speckled Red and Roosevelt Sykes, Slim went to Chicago in 1939, where he met Big Bill Broonzy. Though Broonzy told Slim that he had talent but lacked an original style, by 1940 Slim had become Broonzy's accompanist, a job he held until the late '40s. Slim led his own groups as a singer/pianist on the late-'40s blues circuit and had a minor R&B hit in the early '50s with his own "Beer Drinkin' Woman." With the folk boom of the late '50s and early '60s, Slim's popularity was renewed, and he played for large white audiences for the first time. His band at that time included the Chicago bassist/composer Willie Dixon. In 1959 Slim earned a standing ovation at the Newport Folk Festival and, shortly thereafter, shared the bill at New York City's Village Gate with Pete Seeger. At this time, he recorded for Folkways, but his recorded legacy may be found on dozens of albums from many labels.

In 1960 Memphis Slim first toured Europe and was well enough received that he went back again in 1962, doing especially well at his French debut. After an Israeli tour in 1963, he made Paris his home. He became a celebrity, a star performer at major music halls in England and all over the Continent, and he was an often-seen face on French TV. Though his later recordings failed to recapture the raw energy of his classic '50s small-group recordings, Memphis Slim recorded with a number of British, American, and European jazz and rock musicians, including Alexis Korner (Slim occasionally toured England in the early '60s with Korner and Cyril Davies), Alex Harvey, and others. He died of kidney failure in 1968.

Men at Work

Formed 1979, Melbourne, Austral.

Colin Hay (b. June 29, 1953, Scot.), voc., gtr.; Ron Strykert (b. Aug. 18, 1957, Austral.), gtr., voc.; Jerry Speiser (b. Austral.), drums, voc.; Greg Ham (b. Sep. 27, 1953, Austral.), sax, flute, voc., kybds.; John Rees (b. Austral.), bass, voc. 1982—Business as Usual (Columbia) 1983—Cargo 1984—(- Speiser; - Rees) 1985—Two Hearts (group disbanded)

1996—(group re-forms: Ham; Hay; + various new personnel)

Contraband 1998—Brazil.

Colin Hay solo: 1987—Looking for Jack (Columbia) 1990—Wayfaring Sons (MCA) 1992—Peaks and Valleys 1994—Topanga (Lazy Eye, Austral.) 1998—Transcendental Highway.

Australia's Men at Work were one of the most successful rock groups of 1982 and won that year's Grammy for Best New Artist. Its American debut, Business as Usual, broke the Monkees' 1966 record for the longest run at #1 for a debut LP (15 weeks) and included two #1 singles, "Who Can It Be Now?" and "Down Under."

Colin Hay, the group's lead singer and main songwriter, moved with his family to Australia from Scotland at age 14. The group, several members of which had played together in other aggregations, became a regular Australian pub band, first gaining a following at the Cricketer's Arms Hotel bar. By the time Men at Work signed with Australian Columbia, the band had a national following and was the highest-paid unrecorded band in the country. The band's debut LP, when released in its homeland, stayed at #1 for 10 weeks, beating the record previously held by Split Enz's True Colours. In the U.S., Business as Usual sold 5 million copies and spent nearly two years on the album chart. In its videos for "Who Can It Be Now?" and the exotic "Down Under," the band established a zany persona right out of A Hard Day's Night, while Hay's reedy voice drew comparisons to Sting.

Cargo, issued in April 1983, had been finished since the previous summer but was held for release because of the debut's phenomenal success. It debuted in the Top 30 with Business still in the Top 5, and within weeks, both albums were in the Top 10. Men at Work's second effort was also enormously successful, going double platinum and spawning the hits "Overkill" (#3, 1983), "It's a Mistake" (#6, 1983), and "Dr. Heckyll and Mr. Jive" (#28, 1983).

But while their records were scaling the charts, Men at Work were at one another's throats, arguing over management and songwriter Drummer Jerry Speiser and bassist John Rees left in 1984. In 1985, following the release of the gold Two Hearts, Hay, guitarist Ron Strykert, and keyboardist/saxophonist Greg Ham called it quits. Hay released several solo albums, but by then American audiences had lost interest. He subsequently became an actor and was living in California by the mid-'90s. To coincide with the 1996 release of a Men at Work retrospective, he revived the band with the help of Ham. In 1998 they toured the world and issued Brazil, a collection of live hits taped in South America.

Natalie Merchant

Born Oct. 26, 1963, Jamestown, NY

1995—Tigerlily (Elektra) 1998—Ophelia 1999—Live in Concert.

Natalie Merchant grew up the daughter of Sicilian working-class parents in economically depressed Jamestown, New York. While still living at home and attending a local community college, she joined 10,000 Maniacs [see entry] at age 17. She won a huge following as the band's lead vocalist, on-stage focal point, and frequent songwriter. In 1992, during preproduction for that year's Our Time in Eden, she told her band mates she'd be leaving the group, but stayed with them long enough to tour behind the album and make an appearance on MTV Unplugged (released on album in 1993).

Merchant financed and produced the recording of her solo debut, Tigerlily (#13, 1995), which she cut live in the studio with a three-piece band. An unmitigated success, the subdued, languid-sounding album spawned several hit singles, including "Carnival" (#10, 1995), "Wonder" (#20, 1995), and "Jealousy" (#23, 1996). Her next effort, the lush, dirliglike Ophelia (#8, 1998), had an accompanying long-form video directed by ROLLING STONE art director Fred Woodward and chief photographer Mark Seliger. With a nod to artist Cindy Sherman, the 22-minute film depicted Merchant in a number of guises ranging from circus queen to nun to suffragette, among others. The album's only single to receive much airplay was "Kind & Generous."

In 1999 Merchant contributed guest vocals to Billy Bragg's Woody Guthrie project, Mermaid Avenue, vol. 2, which was released in 2000 and featured new music set to Guthrie lyrics. Merchant's June 13, 1999, appearance at New York's Neil Simon Theater was documented on Live in Concert (#82, 1999).

The Merseybeats

Formed 1963, Liverpool, Eng.

Tony Crane, gr., voc.; Aaron Williams, gr., voc.; Bill Kinsley, bass, voc.; John Banks, drums.

1964—The Merseybeats (Fontana) (– Kinsley; + John Gustafson, bass); England's Best Sellers (Arc Int'l).

Taking their name from the label given to Liverpool's British Invasion bands, the Merseybeats first scored UK hits with ballads, starting with covers of the Shirelles' "It's Love That Really Counts" (#24, 1963) and Dusty Springfield's "Wishin' and Hopin'" (#13, 1964). Their next, and biggest, British hit came with Peter Lee Stirling's "I Think of You" (#5, 1964), followed by "Don't Turn Around" (#13, 1964) and "Last Night" (#40, 1964).

In 1964 they were joined by bassist John Gustafson (later briefly with Roxy Music) from another local hitmaking unit, the Big Three. The band broke up in 1966, but Tony Crane and Billy Kinsley continued as the Merseys, scoring their biggest hit with "Sorrow" (#4 UK, 1966), later covered by David Bowie. After a few more English hits, "I Love You, Yes I Do" (#22 UK, 1965) and "I Stand Accused" (#38 UK, 1966), the Merseys broke up. Crane and Kinsley continue to tour in England with a reconfigured lineup.

Metallica

Formed 1981, Los Angeles, CA

James Alan Hetfield (b. Aug. 3, 1963, Los Angeles), gr., voc.;

Ron McGovney, bass; Dave Mustaine (b. Sep. 13, 1961, La Mesa, CA), gr.; Lars Ulrich (b. Dec. 26, 1963, Gentofte, Den.), drums 1982—(– McGovney; + Clifford Lee Burton [b. Feb. 10, 1962; d. Sep. 27, 1986, Swed.], bass) 1983—(– Mustaine; + Kirk Hammett [b. Nov. 18, 1962, San Francisco, CA], gr.) Kill 'Em All (Megaforce) 1984—Ride the Lightning (Megaforce/Elektra) 1985—Whiplash EP (Megaforce) 1986—Master of Puppets (Elektra) (– Burton; + Jason Newsted [b. Mar. 4, 1963, Battle Creek, MI], bass) 1987—The $5.98 EP Garage Days Re-Revisited 1988—... And Justice for All 1991—Metallica 1993—Live Shit: Binge & Purge 1996—Load 1997—ReLoad 1998—Garage Inc. 1999—S&M 2001—(– Newsted).

In the '80s—when big hair and small ideas dominated heavy metal—Metallica's dense blend of brains and brawn gave the genre a much-needed charge. By 1991, fans had responded to Metallica's message in droves, buying 6 million copies of the group's fifth full-length album—Metallica—and elevating its previous LPs to platinum. In the process, grim-faced guitarist/singer James Hetfield became not only a hero for the nation's largest fraternity of misfits—suburban metalheads—but also a critically respected songwriter and bandleader. Metallica ended the decade as the biggest-selling rock act of the '90s.

Hetfield and Lars Ulrich came from different worlds to form Metallica in the L.A. suburbs in 1981. Hetfield, whose father was owner of a trucking company and mother a light-opera singer, was raised in a strict Christian Science home; Ulrich, a recently transplanted Dane, had intended to become a professional tennis player like his father, Torben Ulrich. What the two teenagers shared was an interest in the gritty music of UK hard rockers Motörhead. Adding guitarist Dave Mustaine and bassist Ron McGovney, the band started writing songs and recording demo tapes. Metallica's lineup solidified after Clifford Lee Burton replaced McGovney in 1982, and the Bay Area guitarist Kirk Hammett replaced Mustaine the following year. Mustaine, who was booted out for excessive substance abuse, went on to form Megadeth [see entry].

After gaining a solid cult following among fans who could not identify with contemporary pretty-boy pop-metal combos such as Van Halen and Bon Jovi, Metallica became known for its sophisticated, often complex song structures and serious lyrics that reflected teen obsessions with anger, despair, fear, and death. In sharp contrast to those of other death-obsessed metal bands, Metallica's lyrics pose deeper questions about justice and retribution, drug addiction, mental illness, and political violence. The group's debut album, Kill 'Em All, is an anarchic catharsis of gloom, with songs like "No Remorse" decrying the insanity of war and "Seek and Destroy" looking at mindless street violence. (Rereleased in 1986, the album went to #155.) On subsequent albums, the subject matter alternated between the political (... And Justice for All) and the personal (Metallica).

In 1986 Metallica's tour bus skidded off an icy road in Sweden, killing bassist Burton. The surviving members took some time off before regrouping with ex-Flotsam and Jet-sam bassist Jason Newsted. Newsted's more solid playing style brought a thicker, tighter sound, which contributed to the group's massive success in the late '80s and early '90s. On August 8, 1992, the band experienced another near-tragedy when their pyrotechnics went awry during an ill-fated performance with Guns n' Roses (it was the same night of G n' R's notorious riot show) at Montreal's Olympic Stadium; Hetfield wound up walking into a wall of flames and suffering serious burns, but recovered fully.

Metallica had developed its following without the benefit of radio play, so it came as a bit of a surprise when Master of Puppets reached #29 in 1986. The followup EP, Garage Days Re-Visited, a collection of covers of songs by various punk and metal bands including Killing Joke and the Misfits, made it to #28. Metallica's first Top 10 album was ... And Justice for All, which reached #6 in 1988 with its single "One," breaking in to the Top 40 at #35. Its striking video included clips from the 1971 antiwar film adaptation of Dalton Trumbo's Johnny Got His Gun, the tale of a faceless quadruple-amputee World War I veteran. After a three-year hiatus, the much-anticipated Metallica (a.k.a. the Black Album) entered the charts at #1. The album contained a string of hits, including "Enter Sandman" (#16), "The Unforgiven" (#35), and "Nothing Else Matters" (#34). Metallica's first official live album, Live Shit (#26, 1993), was recorded in 1993 over five shows in Mexico City.

In 1994 Metallica sued its longtime label, Elektra, seeking escape from a contract that locked the band in to a modest 14 percent royalty rate. The suit was settled out of court, and the band re-signed with the label. By then, Metallica recognized the changes on the rock landscape epitomized by Nirvana, and in 1996 the band fully stepped away from its early lyrics of blood and guts and explored some nonmetal influences for an updated, almost alternative-leaning sound on Load (#1). The album continued the band's string of hits with "Until It Sleeps" (#10), "Hero of the Day" (#60), and "King Nothing" (#90). Metallica also sought to change its image: Band members cut their hair, and the abstract album cover by controversial photographer Andres Serrano (famous for his work Piss Christ) depicted a mixture of blood and semen. Not all fans were pleased.

More confusion followed when Metallica headlined the alternative rock-themed Lollapalooza Tour in 1996. That year, the band also made a surprise stop at the Whisky-a-Go-Go in Hollywood for the 50th birthday party of Lemmy of Motorhead, appearing at the club all dressed like the metal veteran and performing a full set of Motorhead songs. In 1997 Metallica finished songs left over from the Load sessions for the heavier ReLoad (#1), which included vocals by Marianne Faithfull on "The Memory Remains" (#28). The album also contained "The Unforgiven II" (#59). The next year, Metallica combined the original Garage Days Revisited EP with 11 new covers and various B sides for the two-disc set Garage Inc. (#2). A live collaboration with the San Francisco Symphony (arranged and conducted by Michael Kamen) was recorded for 1999's S&M.

In 2000 Metallica led a battle over the rights of recording artists against Napster, a popular music file-sharing Web site where fans could download music (including Metallica's) for free. Metallica not only responded with copyright infringement suits against Napster but demanded that the estimated 335,000 Napster users who had ever downloaded a Metallica track be permanently barred from the service. To critics it was a confounding strategy that inevitably targeted some of the band's most rabid followers. Despite a fan backlash, the controversy failed to derail that year's successful stadium tour with Korn and Kid Rock. In January 2001 Newsted left Metallica on good terms; the band has vowed to carry on with a replacement.

The Meters

Formed 1967, New Orleans, LA

Art Neville (b. Arthur Lanon Neville, 1938, New Orleans), kybds., voc.; Leo Nocentelli, gtr., voc.; Joseph "Zigaboo" Modeliste, drums, voc.; George Porter Jr., bass, voc.

1969—The Meters (Josie) 1970—Look-Ka Py Py; Struttin'
1972—Cabbage Alley (Reprise) 1974—Rejuvenation; Cissy Strut (Island) 1975—(+ Cyril Neville [b. 1950, New Orleans], perc., voc.) Fire on the Bayou (Reprise) 1976—Trick Bag
1977—New Directions (Warner Bros.) (group disbands)
1990—(group re-forms: A. Neville; Nocentelli; Porter Jr.; + Russell Batiste, drums) Good Old Funky Music (Rounder)
1991—Funky Miracle (Charly) 1992—The Meters Jam; Uptown Rulers: The Meters Live on the Queen Mary (Rhino)
1995—(- Nocentelli; + Brian Stoltz, gtr.) Funkify Your Life: The Meters Anthology 1997—The Very Best of the Meters.

The Meters were better known—and better paid—as New Orleans' finest backup band than as a self-contained feature act. Their lean, peppery R&B gave a funky flavor to recordings by out-of-towners like Paul McCartney and Labelle, but on their own, their rhythms were too tricky, their vocals too understated, and their sound altogether too spare to reach a broad audience.

When Art Neville formed the group in 1967, he had been a prominent musician in New Orleans for almost 15 years. He was still in high school when, leading the Hawketts, he cut the 1954 Chess single "Mardi Gras Mambo," which made them a popular regional act and is still pressed every year for Mardi Gras. He had put out a handful of regional hits as a soloist—"Cha Dooky Doo" and "Ooh-Whee Baby" on Specialty in the late '50s, and "All These Things" on Instant in 1962—before he formed Art Neville and the Sounds with his brothers Charles and Aaron as singers, guitarist Leo Nocentelli, bassist George Porter, and drummer Ziggy Modeliste around 1966. They played local clubs until producer Allen Toussaint and his business partner Marshall Sehorn hired them, minus Charles and Aaron, to be the house rhythm section for their Sansu Enterprises in 1968. As such, they backed Lee Dorsey, Chris Kenner, Earl King, Betty Harris, and Toussaint himself on stage and in the studio in the late '60s and early '70s.

Concurrently, the quartet performed on its own as the Meters. Their popularity was not limited to New Orleans, and their hits—mostly dance instrumentals—included “Sophisticated Cissy” (#34 pop, #7 R&B, 1969), “Cissy Strut” (#23 pop, #4 R&B, 1969), “Look-Ka Py Py” (#11 R&B, 1969), and “Chicken Strut” (#11 R&B, 1970).

In 1972 the Meters signed with Repnse Records, retaining Toussaint as their producer and Sehorn as manager. The major label did not bring about a commercial breakthrough—in fact, the moderate hits gave way to minor hits—but the Meters were widely heard, if not recognized, on albums by Dr. John, Robert Palmer, Jess Roden, Labelle, King Biscuit Boy, and Paul McCartney and Wings. They backed Dr. John on tours in 1973 and King Biscuit Boy in 1974, and opened shows for the Rolling Stones on the Stones’ 1975 American and 1976 European tours.

In 1975 the Meters joined George and Amos Landry—members of a Mardi Gras ceremonial “black Indian tribe,” the Wild Tchoupitoulas, and uncle and cousin, respectively, to Neville—to record The Wild Tchoupitoulas (Island, 1976). Aaron, Charles, Art, and Cyril Neville contributed vocals to the sessions, reuniting the Neville Sounds for the occasion. Shortly before that album’s release, Cyril joined the Meters. A year later, the group cut ties with Toussaint and Sehorn, complaining that it was denied artistic control. For New Directions, the Meters teamed with San Francisco producer Dave Rubinson, but that album was not to their satisfaction either, and in 1977, when Toussaint and Sehorn claimed the Meters name, the band broke up. Art and Cyril joined Aaron and Charles as the Neville Brothers, while the other band members found freelance work in New Orleans. Modeliste drummed for Keith Richards and Ron Wood on their New Barbarians tour in 1979.

The Meters re-formed in 1990 with drummer Russell Batiste taking over for Modeliste, who had moved to L.A. and become a session player. In 1994 founding member Nocentelli left the band, reportedly because of disagreements with Art Neville over whether or not the band should be compensated for samples lifted from their back catalogue by contemporary hip-hop groups. Brian Stoltz, who replaced Nocentelli, had played with the Neville Brothers. The Meters continue to tour. In 1995 Rhino released Funkify Your Life, a two-CD compilation of the group’s early Josie and Warner Bros. sides. In November 2000 Porter, Neville, Nocentelli, and Modeliste reunited for a one-night-only concert in San Francisco, marking the first time in 20 years that the quartet all shared the same stage.

Pat Metheny

Born Aug. 12, 1954, Lee’s Summit, MO
 1975—Bright Size Life (ECM) 1977—Watercolors 1978—Pat Metheny Group 1979—New Chautauqua 1980—American Garage; 80/81 1981—As Falls Wichita, So Falls Wichita Falls (with Lyle Mays) 1982—Offramp 1983—Travels; Rejoicing (with Charlie Haden and Billy Higgins) 1984—First Circle; ECM Works 1985—The Falcon and the Snowman soundtrack (EMI America) 1986—Song X (with Ornette Coleman) (Geffen) 1987—Still Life (Talking) 1988—ECM Works II (ECM) 1989—Letter From Home (Geffen) 1990—Question and Answer (with Dave Holland and Roy Haynes) 1992—Secret Story 1993—The Road to You: Recorded Live in Europe 1994—Zero Tolerance for Silence 1995—We Live Here 1996—Sign of Four (Knitting Factory); Quartet (Geffen) 1997—Beyond the Missouri Sky, A Map of the World (with Charlie Haden) (Uni Verve); Imaginary Day (Warner Bros.); Jim Hall/Pat Metheny (Telarc) 1998—Passaggio Per Il Paradiso (Geffen International) 1999—All the Things You Are (Fruit Tree); A Map of the World (Warner Bros.) 2000—Trio 99>00.

Practically overnight in the late ’70s, Pat Metheny became one of the most influential voices in contemporary jazz guitar. His chiming guitar work, rooted in bop but tinged with country and occasional rock overtones, insistent yet ethereal, signaled a visionary talent on the instrument. A 13-time Grammy winner, Metheny has managed to be commercially successful while pursuing an artistic vision that encompasses a wide range of jazz styles.

Metheny began seriously delving into jazz and the guitar at age 14; within two years he was working professionally in Kansas City. After a stint at the University of Miami, Metheny was invited by the vibist and bandleader Gary Burton—who had heard him earlier at a Wichita jazz festival—to teach at Boston’s Berklee College of Music, the nation’s premier jazz school. Metheny then joined Burton’s band, at times playing an electric 12-string guitar—an instrument almost unheard of in jazz.

After playing with Burton, Metheny put together his own group; among the musicians was keyboardist Lyle Mays, a mainstay of Metheny’s bands ever since. Before the band recorded 1978’s Pat Metheny Group, Metheny had already released Bright Size Life (1975) and Watercolors (1977). On the latter two albums, he was accompanied by drummer Bob Moses and bassist Jaco Pastorius, whom he’d met in Miami in the mid-’70s. Pastorius and Metheny also toured together in 1979 as part of Joni Mitchell’s band. (Some of those performances were recorded for Mitchell’s album Shadows and Light.)

With the success of New Chautauqua (#44, 1979), American Garage (#53, 1979), and As Falls Wichita, So Falls Wichita Falls (#50, 1981), Metheny made deeper inroads into the pop market and became the most influential jazz-guitar stylist since John McLaughlin. Although his own group used the instrumentation of a typical rock band by employing electric bass and keyboards (including synthesizers), Metheny kept his hand in more traditional jazz contexts as well. The album 80/81 found him recording with two Ornette Coleman sidemen, bassist Charlie Haden and tenor saxophonist Dewey Redman; 1984’s Rejoicing was a trio session with Haden and drummer Billy Higgins; Question and Answer (1990) featured bassist Dave Holland and drummer Roy Haynes. In 1986 Metheny shared a recording with one of his heroes, Ornette Coleman, on Song X, a highly praised collaboration.

Metheny’s score for John Schlesinger’s 1985 film, The Falcon and the Snowman, featured "This Is Not America" (#32, 1985), cocomposed and sung by David Bowie. Still Life (Talking) (#86, 1987), Metheny's first solo album for Geffen, went gold. By the mid-'80s, Metheny had become seriously interested in both advanced technologies—experimented widely with synthesizers and guitar effects and designs that included a 42-stringed instrument—and world music. He began exploring Brazilian and African music and expanded his groups to include percussionists and a singer. Metheny also guested on recordings by Brazilian singer/songwriter Milton Nascimento. In the early '90s, Metheny toured and recorded with saxophonist Joshua Redman. Among the highlights of his work since have been an impressionistic collaboration with Haden, Beyond the Missouri Sky, a lush, pastoral work that marked Metheny's return to film scoring, and Two 99>00, another fine trio outing, this time with bassist Larry Grenadier and drummer Bill Stewart. Despite changes in format and sound, Metheny's acclaim and popularity have remained consistent.

MFSB

Formed early '70s, Philadelphia, PA
 1973—MFSB (Philadelphia International); MFSB: Love Is the Message 1974—TSOP (TSOP) 1975—Universal Love (Philadelphia International) 1976—Philadelphia Freedom; Summertime 1977—The End of Phase I 1978—MFSB and Gamble Huff Orchestra (TSOP) 1980—Mysteries of the World 1995—The Best of MFSB: Love Is the Message (Legacy) 1999—Deep Grooves.

MFSB (Mother, Father, Sister, Brother) was the nickname for the crew of studio musicians who played on most of the "Sound of Philadelphia" records released by Kenny Gamble and Leon Huff's Philadelphia International Records in the early '70s. Many of these musicians appeared on Cliff Nobles' popular dance tune "The Horse" (#2 pop and R&B) in 1968. Under the MFSB title, they had a #1 pop and R&B single, "TSOP (The Sound of Philadelphia)," in 1974. For many years, that Kenny Gamble-Leon Huff composition was the theme for the syndicated music show Soul Train. Many MFSB members also appeared on Salsoul Orchestra recordings. Although personnel changed frequently in the later years, musicians on MFSB's most popular early LPs included Ron Kersey and Kenny Gamble (keyboards), Norman Harris, Roland Chambers, and Bobby Eli (guitars); Lenny Pakula (organ); Zach Zachery (sax); Ronnie Baker (bass); Vince Montana (vibes); Earl Young (drums); Larry Washington (percussion); and Don Renaldo (conductor).

George Michael

Born Georgios Kyriacos Panayiotou, June 25, 1963, London, Eng.

1987—Faith (Columbia) 1990—Listen Without Prejudice vol. 1 1996—Older (DreamWorks) 1998—Ladies & Gentlemen: The Best of George Michael (Epic) 1999—Songs From the Last Century (Virgin).

With Queen and Lisa Stansfield: 1993—Five Live EP (Hollywood).

Few could have guessed that the transition from teenybopper idol to serious singer/songwriter would go as smoothly as it did for George Michael, who became famous as half of the British pop duo Wham! [see entry] before ascending to pop superstardom with his solo debut, Faith. Whereas in Wham! Michael used his cherubic good looks and uncanny knack for a melodic hook to create ingratiating but disposable pop, his solo work reveals an earnest effort to achieve deeper musical and emotional resonance. His radiant ballads, insidious dance tracks, and blue-eyed soul singing established him as a top artist. His popularity never waned in the U.K.—all of his albums have reached either #1 or #2 on the album charts there—but subsequent efforts have been able to match his early solo successes in the U.S.

Michael's first post-Wham! outing was "I Knew You Were Waiting (for Me)," a duet with Aretha Franklin that hit #1 in 1987 and earned Michael a Grammy for Best R&B Performance by a Duo. Shortly afterward, Michael released the funky first single off of Faith, "I Want Your Sex," which, bolstered by a sexy video, quickly soared to #2. The album would eventually spin off four #1 hits: "Faith" (1987), the shimmering "Father Figure" (1988), the romantic ballad "One More Try" (1988), and "Monkey" (1988). "Kissing a Fool" hit #5, further boosting the 14 million-selling Faith, 1988's smash album and Grammy winner for Album of the Year.

In his videos and media appearances, Michael cultivated a sex-symbol image, albeit a more rugged—leather, chin stubble, sneer—and mature one than he had nurtured in Wham! But with the release of his second solo effort, Listen Without Prejudice vol. 1, in 1990, Michael surprised fans and industry insiders by shunning the press and saying that he wouldn't make videos. The album peaked at #2 nonetheless, and there was a chart-topping hit, the somber "Praying for Time" (#1, 1990). The danceable second single, "Freedom 90"—whose lyrics spelled out Michael's decision to abandon his rock-star persona—went to #8 (1990) and was made into a video, albeit without Michael's presence (instead, a bevy of supermodels lip-synched his vocals.) In late 1991 Michael was back on the charts with a #1 version of Elton John's "Don't Let the Sun Go Down on Me," recorded live with John.

A year later, Michael announced that he would take legal action to terminate his contract with Sony Music, the corporation that took over his label, Columbia Records. He charged that Sony, still wishing to package Michael as a sex symbol, lacked respect for his artistic expression and that it only halfheartedly supported his projects benefiting AIDS research and prevention, among them his duet with Elton John and his three-track contribution to a compilation album called Red Hot + Dance. In 1993, Sony grudgingly granted Hollywood Records permission to release Five Live, an EP of two cover songs performed by Michael on his 1991–92 tour and three from his appearance at the Freddie Mercury tribute concert in 1992, during which he sang Queen songs with surviving members of that band. All proceeds from the record went to the Phoenix Trust, an AIDS chanty set up in Mercury's memory.

In June 1994 a London court rejected Michael's claim that his contract with Sony amounted to "restraint of trade" and upheld the $12 million contract the singer had signed with the company in 1988. At the time, Michael owed the label six more albums on a contract that could run to 2003. Two months later, Michael filed an appeal of the verdict. As the legal battle continued, Michael was unable to release new product. Under a special arrangement, however, Michael performed his song "Jesus to a Child" on television as part of an annual appeal to raise funds for needy children. After hearing the six-minute song, listeners pledged $32,000 to the chanty.

In 1995, though Michael lost the appeal he filed, he signed new contracts with DreamWorks in the U.S. and Virgin in the rest of the world. He released his first album of new material in six years, Older, in 1996 (#6), featuring "Jesus to a Child" (#7) and the dance track "Fastlove" (#8), but the release sold just 900,000 copies in the U.S.

Michael's profile was heightened again in 1998, but for a more notorious reason: In April of that year, he was arrested for lewd conduct in the men's room of a public park in Beverly Hills. Speculation arose regarding the nature of the "lewd conduct," and before Michael could become the target of international crude jokes, he took control of the matter and outed himself as homosexual on CNN. Though the court fined him and ordered him to perform community service, he seemed somewhat relieved to reveal the truth to the media and his fans. That fall, he even set the scene for his video for "Outside" (one of two new songs from Ladies & Gentlemen: The Best of George Michael) in a public restroom; it featured dancing men dressed in leather and male actors portraying police officers kissing. Unfortunately, this was no joke to Michael's real-life arresting officer, who filed a lawsuit against him, claiming slander; the judge dismissed the case.

In late 1999 Michael put the embarrassing events of the previous year behind him with the release of Songs From the Last Century, an album of cover songs coproduced by Phil Ramone (Billy Joel) that ran the gamut from the Depression-era "Brother Can You Spare a Dime" to the Police's "Roxanne." In 2000 Michael participated in Equality Rocks, a concert in Washington, DC, organized by the Human Rights Campaign that highlighted the issue of gay rights.

Lee Michaels

Born Nov. 24, 1945, Los Angeles, CA
 1968—Carnival of Life (A&M) 1969—Recital; Lee Michaels
 1970—Barrel 1971—5th 1972—Life; Space and First Takes 1973—Nice Day for Something (Columbia) 1974—Tailface 1975—Saturn Rings (ABC) 1992—The Lee Michaels Collection (Rhino).

Screaming himself hoarse, pounding his overamped Hammond organ, and backed only by an enormous drummer called Frosty, Lee Michaels made his name as one of the original hard rockers—and surely the first, perhaps the only, to play hard rock on a keyboard rather than a guitar. His 1971 hit "Do You Know What I Mean?" stands as the classic example of Michaels' unique sound.

Though he concentrated on this heavy-keyboard approach during much of his career, Michaels could also play sax, accordion, trombone, and guitar. He'd started out as a lounge pianist in Fresno in the mid-'60s, with aspirations to be a jazz/blues horn player. Instead, he joined his first band, the Sentinels, in 1965. After the Sentinels disbanded, Michaels and the band's drummer, John Barbatia (later with the Turtles and Jefferson Starship), joined a Bay Area band led by Joel Scott Hill. However, Michaels, inspired by a Jefferson Airplane show, soon left to pursue his own sound. He assembled a five-piece band named for himself, and recorded his debut LP.

After another change of heart—and much experimentation with organs and amplifiers—Michaels dismissed his band. Though the public responded favorably to his one-man-band debut, Recital, his greatest success resulted from collaborations with Frosty (Bartholomew Eugene Smith-Frost). About six and a half hours' worth of jamming resulted in Lee Michaels, his most successful LP to that time. Michaels and Frosty toured as a duo, selling out major halls across the U.S. Michaels' third LP yielded "Eighty Hi" and a cover of the blues standard "Stormy Monday," both of which received substantial FM-radio airplay. Frosty then left to form his own band, Sweathog.

Michaels kept at it and had his only hits in 1971 with "Do You Know What I Mean?" (#6) and "Can I Get a Witness?" (#39); the album on which they appeared, 5th, went Top 20. Space and First Takes featured drummer Keith Knudsen, who later left Michaels to join the Doobie Brothers, at which point Michaels retired for an extended holiday in Hawaii to "sit under a tree." He reunited with Frosty for Tailface, but with his successes apparently behind him, Michaels again retired after Saturn Rings.

Mickey and Sylvia

Mickey Baker (b. McHouston Baker, Oct. 15, 1925, Louisville, KY), gtr., voc.; Sylvia Robinson (b. Sylvia Vanderpool, Mar. 6, 1936, New York, NY), voc., gtr.
 1989—Love Is Strange and Other Hits (RCA).

In 1954, Mickey Baker, a blues guitarist who had recorded as a solo act, met vocalist Sylvia Vanderpool. He gave her guitar lessons, and from this evolved a partnership that in 1956 produced the million-selling hit "Love Is Strange" (#11 pop, #2 R&B). The pair had two more hits—"There Oughta Be a Law" (#46 pop, #15 R&B, 1957) and "Baby You're So Fine" (#52 pop, #27 R&B, 1961)—before breaking up in 1961 when Mickey moved to Europe. (They reunited briefly in 1965 to perform a few gigs.) Later, Mickey wrote several guitar instruction books, including the bestseller Jazz Guitar.

In 1956 Sylvia had married Joe Robinson, and more than a decade later the couple founded All Platinum Records and All Platinum Studios. As a producer, Sylvia's credits range from the 1961 Ike and Tina Turner hit "It's Gonna Work Out Fine" (on which she also played guitar) to the Moments' 1970 gold single "Love on a Two-Way Street" (which she cowrote) and Shirley and Company's 1976 disco hit "Shame, Shame, Shame" (which she wrote).

In 1973 Sylvia returned to the chart with "Pillow Talk" (#3 pop, #1 R&B) on her own Vibration label. She also continued to hit the R&B chart through 1978, notably with "Sweet Stuff" (#16, 1974) and "Automatic Lover" (#43, 1978). In the late '70s Sylvia revived the ailing All Platinum label by renaming it Sugar Hill and putting together a group of rap vocalists, the Sugar Hill Gang, which had a smash hit with "Rapper's Delight" (#26 pop, #4 R&B, 1979). She went on to sign and produce other top rap acts such as Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five and the Funky Four Plus One.

Bette Midler

Born Dec. 1, 1945, Paterson, NJ
 1972—The Divine Miss M (Atlantic) 1973—Bette Midler 1974—Songs for the New Depression 1977—Broken Blossom; Live at Last 1979—Thighs and Whispers; The Rose soundtrack 1980—Divine Madness 1983—No Frills 1985—Mud Will Be Flung Tonight! 1989—Beaches soundtrack 1990—Some People's Lives 1991—For the Boys soundtrack 1993—Gypsy soundtrack 1995—Bette of Roses 1997—Experience the Divine 1998—Bathhouse Betty (Warner Bros.) 2000—Bette.

Early on, singer Bette Midler's sexpot camp image—trash with flash—proved as important to her success as did her singing. Over the next three decades, Midler survived several career setbacks, but she turned in a series of acclaimed film performances and returned to the top of the charts in 1989 with "Wind Beneath My Wings." And while her later hits tend toward MOR-ish sentimentality, her record-breaking 1993 concert tour and her 1999 Divine Miss Millennium Tour proved that the Divine Miss M had lost none of her humor or charm. She is, as one critic wrote, "Sophie Tucker, Ethel Merman, and Judy Garland rolled into one furiously energetic package."

Midler was born in New Jersey but raised in Hawaii. From an early age, she took an interest in acting (her mother named her after Bette Davis), and in high school Midler worked in theater and sang in a female folk trio called the Piendine Three. In 1965 she had a bit part as a missionary's wife in the film Hawaii, after which she left for L.A.; she later moved to New York. There (in between odd jobs like go-go dancing in a New Jersey bar), Midler got parts in several Tom Eyen off-Broadway productions, followed by a three-year run in Broadway's Fiddler on the Roof, during which she eventually moved from the chorus to the featured part of Tzeitel. In 1971 she played the double role of Mrs. Walker and the Acid Queen in the Seattle Opera Association's production of Tommy.

Around 1970 Midler decided to concentrate on singing and was soon performing at the Continental Baths, a gay men's club in New York City. There she developed her campy comedy routines and a broad musical repertoire that included Andrews Sisters takeoffs, blues, show tunes, and '60s girl-group numbers. Her piano accompanist was Barry Manilow. She quickly became a cult item and soon an above-ground sensation on major TV talk shows. Her debut LP, The Divine Miss M, went gold and won her the Grammy for Best New Artist. She appeared on the cover of Newsweek and had a #8 hit with a remake of the Andrews Sisters' "Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy" in 1973.

Sales after the second LP dropped off sharply, though she always retained a loyal concert following. In 1979, Midler starred in The Rose, a film loosely based on the life of Janis Joplin. Her performance earned her an Oscar nomination. The soundtrack LP went platinum in 1980, aided by the Top 10 title song. Later in the year, a Midler concert film and soundtrack entitled Divine Madness were released. Her humorous memoirs of her first world tour, A View From a Broad, hit the bestseller list that year as well. Her next literary effort was a children's book entitled The Saga of Baby Divine, which was published in 1983.

Midler's career slump began in 1982 with her next feature film, the ironically titled Jinxed. A critical and commercial bomb, the comedy was released amid rampant rumors of disagreements between Midler and her costars and director. Her reputation was damaged, seemingly irreparably, and she suffered a nervous breakdown. In later interviews she openly discussed that painful period as one of heavy drinking and deep depression. In 1984, after a brief courtship, she married Martin von Haselberg, a commodities trader and performance artist who was part of a duo known as the Kipper Kids. Soon thereafter, Midler began to turn her career around with a series of comedies for the Walt Disney Studio-Touchstone Pictures: Down and Out in Beverly Hills and Ruthless People (both 1986), Outrageous Fortune (1987), and Big Business (1988), in which she and Lily Tomlin each played dual roles as two sets of twin sisters. She returned to drama with Beaches, a sentimental paean to women's friendship that spawned a multiplatinum #2 soundtrack album and the #1 Grammy-winning single "Wind Beneath My Wings."

In 1991 Midler costarred with Woody Allen in Scenes From a Mall and later that year starred in Stella. Also in 1991 another multiplatinum album, Some People's Lives, produced the #2 Grammy-awarded ballad "From a Distance." The song got a lot of play during the Gulf War. She received her second Oscar nomination for For the Boys, a musical that follows a USO entertainer and her partner (played by James Caan) through three wars. The movie was not a commercial success but garnered favorable reviews, and the soundtrack went gold. The film was in the news again when comedienne Martha Raye charged that details of the film's story line were derived from an outline of Raye's own life story, a treatment for which Raye claimed that Midler had seen. The charges were dismissed on February 23, 1994, because the judge ruled there was no basis for the suit.

In 1992 Midler won an Emmy for singing several sentimental songs (including one she'd written entitled "Dear Mr. Carson," described as "a love letter from America's women") to Johnny Carson on one of the last Tonight Show broadcasts. Midler's 1993 tour, Experience the Divine, showed her in top form. She delivered an over-the-top reading of Mama Rose in a made-for-television version of Gypsy that same year, and also starred in the feature film Hocus Pocus. She returned to recording in 1995 with the release of the ballad-heavy Bette of Roses; she also did a cameo in the movie Get Shorty the same year. Midler's most successful movie comeback came in 1996, though, when she costarred with Diane Keaton and Goldie Hawn as a spurned ex-wife in The First Wives Club. She followed it up with the romantic comedy That Old Feeling in 1997, the same year she filmed a concert special for HBO. Called Diva Las Vegas, the concert won Midler a Best Performance Emmy. Perhaps inspired by that musical success, Midler recorded another album, Bathroom Betty, in 1998. The title and much of the disc's content harkened back to Midler's early days working at the Continental Baths and her old bawdy style. (It also included a ballad more typical of her latter-day chart popularity, "My One True Friend," which was used over the end credits of the Meryl Streep film One True Thing.) Midler got back to her show-business roots even further by embarking on a small-scale tour of dance clubs in support of the album.

Throughout the '90s, Midler also got heavily involved with charity work, lending her name, time, and financial support to causes such as AIDS, voter registration, and, most notably, restoring parks and highways in New York City. She toured on a larger scale in 1999 and continued her acting career with back-to-back flops in early 2000: the feature films Isn't She Great (in which she played Valley of the Dolls author Jacqueline Susann) and Drowning Mona (in which her title character is killed off early in the movie). More promising were her efforts in late 2000, a role in the Mel Gibson-Helen Hunt movie What Women Want and her own sitcom, Bette, on CBS, which ran for one season. In the latter, Midler played a slightly fictionalized version of herself, a well-known actress/singer.

Midnight Oil

Formed 1976, Sydney, Austral.

Peter Garrett (b. Apr. 16, 1953, Sydney), voc.; Rob Hirst (b. Sep. 3, 1955, Sydney), drums, voc.; Jim Moginie (b. May 18, 1956, Sydney), gtr., kybds.; Martin Rotsey (b. Feb. 19, 1956, Sydney), gtr.; Andrew "Bear" James, bass.
 1978—Midnight Oil (Powderworks) 1979—Head Injuries
 1980—(– James; + Peter Gifford, bass) Bird Noises EP 1981—Place Without a Postcard 1983—10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3, 2, 1 (Columbia) 1984—Red Sails in the Sunset 1985—Species
Deceases EP 1987—Diesel and Dust 1990—(– Gifford; + Dwayne "Bones" Hillman [b. May 7, 1958, N.Z.], bass) Blue Sky Mining 1992—Scream in Blue Live 1993—Earth and Sun and Moon 1996—Breathe (Sony/Work) 1997—20,000 Watt R.S.L.—The Collection (Columbia) 1998—Redneck Wonderland 2000—The Real Thing (Sony).

Midnight Oil holds the distinction of being the only known rock band whose lead singer ran for a seat on the Australian senate (in 1984, on a Nuclear Disarmament Party ticket). In fact, frontman Peter Garrett—he of the shaved head and somewhat forbidding stature—and his band mates have never been shy about sharing their social and political convictions. Such concerns have often been at the fore of the Oils' lean, driving guitar rock, whether they're addressing the evils of nationalism gone amok or the dangers of dissing Mother Nature. Moreover, the band's dedication to political and environmental causes has extended beyond its songs; having formed alliances with organizations ranging from Greenpeace to the Tibet Council, Midnight Oil has endorsed these projects—through benefit concerts and general outspokenness—with an ardor that's made the efforts of many other socially conscious artists pale in comparison.

Drummer Rob Hirst and guitarists Martin Rotsey and Jim Moginie first played together as the Farm, touring Sydney's northern coast, before recruiting Garrett, then a law student, through a newspaper ad in the mid-'70s. (Garrett received his degree in 1977 but never practiced.) In 1976, adding bassist Andrew "Bear" James to the lineup, the band became Midnight Oil and quickly developed an avid following for its live shows. Record companies were unsure of Garrett's market potential, however, and so after numerous rejections, the Oils formed their own independent label, Powderworks. (The group's indie releases were later reissued by Columbia in the U.S.) The band promoted its eponymous debut album (recorded in 10 days) with concerts benefiting Greenpeace, the anti-uranium mining movement, and Save the Whales. A second album, Head Injuries, went gold in Australia.

Midnight Oil's star rose further, domestically at least, with its major-label debut album, 10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3, 2, 1, which remained in the Australian Top 40 for two years. Meanwhile, the Oils continued to work benefit concerts, including several on behalf of nuclear disarmament, into its hectic touring schedule. The Oils finally enjoyed their international breakthrough when 1987's Diesel and Dust reached #21 in the U.S. and yielded the #17 pop single "Beds Are Burning," an angry wake-up call about the plight of aboriginal Australians—a prominent theme on the album and in the band's work at large—and their biggest hit to date.

Blue Sky Mining followed its predecessor to the upper reaches of the American LP chart (#20), but its most successful single, "Blue Sky Mine," peaked at #47. Shortly after its release, the Oils staged a concert outside the Exxon building in Manhattan to express their disgust over the Exxon Valdez oil spill in Alaska. (A video of the performance, Black Rain Falls, was released to raise funds for Greenpeace.) A subsequent live album, Scream in Blue Live (#141, 1992), and another two studio efforts, Earth and Sun and Moon (#49, 1993) and the uncharacteristically nonpolitical Breathe (1996), proved commercially disappointing. However, a 1997 greatest-hits collection, 20,000 Watt R.S.L., debuted at #1 on the Australian album chart. Perhaps inspired by this success and fueled by Garrett's new position as president of the Australian Conservation Foundation—in part leading to him being named an Official Living Treasure by the Australian National Trust—the band's next album, 1998's Redneck Wonderland, was angrier in tone, attacking widespread conservatism. The band released The Real Thing in 2000, around the same time they performed at the closing ceremony of the Summer Olympic Games in Sydney.

Drummer Hirst, also a songwriter, released two albums in Australia with his side project, Ghostwriters, a duo with Rick Grossman of Hoodoo Gurus, in the '90s.

Mighty Clouds of Joy

Formed ca. 1955, Los Angeles, CA

Joe Ligon (b. Oct. 11, 1936, Troy, AL), voc.; Johnny Martin (b. Los Angeles; d. 1987), voc.; Elmo Franklin (b. Oct. 8, 1936, FL), voc.; Ermant Franklin, voc.; Richard Wallace (b. June 9, 1940, TX), voc., bass; Jimmy Jones, voc.; David Walker, voc. ca. 1960—(+ Leon Polk, voc.) 1962—Live at the Music Hall (Peacock) 1964—Presenting: The Untouchables 1966—Sing Songs of Rev. Julius Cheeks and the Nightingales 1968—Live! At the Apollo ca. 1960s—(– Polk; – Jones) 1972—A Bright Side 1973—Best of Mighty Clouds of Joy 1974—It's Time (ABC/Dunhill) 1975—Kickin' (ABC) 1977—Truth Is the Power 1978—Live and Direct; The Very Best of the Mighty Clouds of Joy 1979—Changing Times (Epic) ca. late 1970s—(– Ermant Franklin) Early 1980s—(+ Paul Beasley, voc.; + Johnny Valentine [b. July 3, 1962, Newark, NJ], drums, voc.) 1980—Cloudburst (Myrrh) 1982—Request Line (ABC); Miracle Man (Myrrh); Mighty Clouds Alive 1983—Sing and Shout 1987—(– Beasley; + Michael Cook, voc.; – Martin) Catching On (Word) 1989—Night Song 1991—(lineup: Ligon; Wallace; Elmo Franklin; Cook; Michael McCowin [b. Oct. 18, 1959, Dallas, TX], voc.) Pray for Me 1993—Memory Lane (Best of) (– Cook; + Wilbert Williams [b. Apr. 26, 1959, Sanford, NC], voc.) 1996—Power (Intersound) 1997—Live in Charleston 1999—It Was You (CGI/Platinum) 1999—(lineup: Ligon; Wallace; McCowin; Valentine; + Ron Staples, voc., bass) 2000—(– Cook; – Cowin; + Tim Woodson, voc.) 2001—(– Woodson; + Cook).

One of the top contemporary gospel vocal units, and one of the very few to attempt a pop/soul crossover, the Mighty Clouds of Joy have won three Grammy awards: Best Gospel Performance, Traditional for Live and Direct (1978) and Changing Times (1979) and Best Traditional Soul Gospel Album for Pray for Me (1991). Through their long career, they have shared the stage with artists as diverse as Earth, Wind & Fire, the Rolling Stones, the Reverend James Cleveland, Paul Simon, Marvin Gaye, Aretha Franklin, and Andrae Crouch. Incorporating choreography, a colorful wardrobe (as opposed to the traditional black of other gospel acts), and

R&B/soul instrumentation such as drums, electric keyboards, and electric guitars (the above chronology does not include all musicians), the Mighty Clouds of Joy have been among the more progressive and most popular of modern gospel groups. Their latter-day repertoire has incorporated the Isley Brothers' "Shout" and the O'Jays' "Love Train" alongside more traditional gospel fare.

The core original members—Joe Ligon, Johnny Martin, Elmo Franklin, Ermant Franklin, Richard Wallace, Jimmy Jones, and David Walker—first got together in high school in L.A. Later members would include Leon Polk and Paul Beasley from the Gospel Keynotes. As of mid-2001, Ligon and Wallace are the sole original members remaining in the group, though Elmo Franklin was with the lineup through the '90s. Lead singer Joe Ligon, whose father sang in a quartet, was heavily influenced by the gritty, grunting style of the Reverend Julius Cheeks of the Sensational Nightingales (as was Wilson Pickett) and the sermons of the Reverend C.L. Franklin (Aretha's father).

In 1959 the group signed to Houston, Texas-based Peacock, home of such gospel giants as the Dixie Hummingbirds and the Nightingales. There they recorded their first gospel hit, "Steal Away to Jesus." Toward the end of their Peacock label days, critics began comparing the Clouds' high-harmony sound to that of Curtis Mayfield and the Impressions, although overall their approach was rawer.

Throughout their long career, the Mighty Clouds have worked with a number of pop producers. In 1974 they recorded It's Time with backing from members of Philadelphia International's house band, MFSB, and production by Kenny Gamble and Leon Huff. The Grammy-winning Changing Times was produced by Frank Wilson, whose earlier writing and production credits at Motown included the Supremes' "Up the Ladder to the Roof" and the Four Tops' "Still Water Love." Wilson also produced Night Song. The Mighty Clouds' Top 10 R&B hits include "Ride the Mighty High" and "Time." In 1980 they moved to ABC's Christian-oriented Myrrh label, and Cloudburst was produced by Earth, Wind & Fire's Al McKay. Freddie Perren, another Motown producer/writer, was responsible for Sing and Shout.

The group performed with Paul Simon during his 1993 monthlong series of shows in New York City. They continue to tour the world and record—their latest release, It Was You, was nominated for a Grammy in the Best Traditional Soul Gospel Album category.

The Mighty Diamonds

Formed 1973, Kingston, Jam.

Donald "Tabby" Shaw (b. Oct. 7, 1955, Kingston), lead voc.; Lloyd "Judge" Ferguson (b. Aug. 28, 1949, Kingston), harmony voc.; Fitzroy "Bunny" Simpson (b. May 10, 1951, Kingston), harmony voc.

1976—Right Time (Virgin) 1977—Ice on Fire 1978—Planet Earth; Stand Up (Channel One) 1979—Deeper Roots (Front Line/Virgin) 1980—Tell Me What's Wrong (J&J) 1981—

Indestructible (Alligator) 1982—Reggae Street (Shanachie)
1988—Get Ready (Rohit); Never Get Weary (Live & Learn)
1989—Ready for the World (Shamar) 1993—Paint It Red
(RAS Records) 1994—Speak the Truth 1995—Need a Roof
(Channel One) 1997—Deeper Roots Plus Dub (Caroline)
1999—Right Time Come (NYC Music); Heads of Government (Penthouse).

One of the young reggae vocal trios modeled on the original Wailers, the Heptones, and others of the late '60s and early '70s, the Mighty Diamonds became one of the most popular reggae groups of the second generation by setting their incisive, militant lyrics in close, soft-toned harmonies and languorous rhythms. They had their first hit in Jamaica in 1974 with "Shame and Pride." Two more hits that year showed the range of their material: "Jah Jah Bless the Dreadlocks" was based on Rastafarian chants, while "Let's Put It All Together" was a reggae version of the Stylistics' hit. (American soul music has been an essential element of virtually every Diamonds song.)

By the end of 1975, Jamaican hits like "Right Time," "Have Mercy," and "I Need a Roof" had been picked up by reggae fans in England, and in 1976, the group was signed to Virgin Records, which released its first album in the U.K. and the U.S. later that year. The year 1976 saw the Diamonds' first visit to America; they toured with Toots and the Maytals. They made a name for themselves as entertaining showmen with their comic stage patter and occasional soul ballads.

But in spite of their Amercanisms (Ice on Fire was produced by New Orleans R&B veterans Allen Toussaint and Marshall Sehorn), the Mighty Diamonds were no more able to break into the American pop market than others among their Jamaican compatriots. In Jamaica, on the other hand, they continued to score big hits—among them "Tamarind Farm" in 1979 and "Wise Son" (#1) in 1980. "Pass the Kouchie," a hymn to marijuana, was banned by the Jamaican government, but when released as "Pass the Knowledge," it also went to #1 (1981). (Another version of this song, "Pass the Dutchie," was a hit for Musical Youth in late 1982.)

Although styles gave way to dancehall in the late '80s, the Mighty Diamonds remained steadfast reggae traditionalists. The group recorded frequently throughout the next decade and was a popular draw on the reggae concert circuit.

Mike + the Mechanics: See Genesis

Amos Milburn

Born Apr. 1, 1927, Houston, TX; died Jan. 3, 1980, Houston
1963—The Return of the Blues Boss (Motown) 2001—The Best of Amos Milburn (Capitol).

Amos Milburn was one of rhythm & blues' most consistent-selling vocalists from the mid-'40s into the '50s. He signed with L.A.-based Aladdin Records in 1946 and the next year had a million-seller with "Chicken Shack Boogie." Subsequently, Milburn would top the R&B chart with songs about alcohol: "Bad Bad Whiskey" (#1 R&B, 1950), "One Scotch, One Bourbon, One Beer" (#2 R&B, 1953), "Thinking and Drinking" (#8, 1952), and "Let Me Go Home, Whiskey" (#3, 1953). "One Scotch," also sung by John Lee Hooker was revived by George Thorogood and the Destroyers in the late '70s. Milburn recorded for various labels, including Motown and Ace, until a stroke in the late '60s left him partially paralyzed.

Buddy Miles

Born Sep. 5, 1946, Omaha, NE

With the Buddy Miles Express: 1968—Expressway to Your Skull (Mercury) 1969—Electric Church 1994—Hell and Back (Rykodisc).

With the Buddy Miles Band: 1970—Them Changes; We Got to Live Together 1971—Message to the People; Live 1972—Carlos Santana and Buddy Miles Live (Columbia).

Solo: 1973—Chapter VII (Columbia); Booger Bear 1974—All the Faces of Buddy Miles 1975—More Miles Per Gallon (Casablanca) 1976—Bicentennial Gathering of the Tribes (with Dickey Betts) 1997—The Very Best of Buddy Miles (Mercury/Universal) 1998—Miles Away From Home (Hip-O/Universal).

With the Buddy Miles Regiment: 1981—Sneak Attack (Atlantic).

With the California Raisins: 1987—The California Raisins Sing the Hits (Priority) 1988—Sweet, Delicious & Marvelous; Christmas With the California Raisins.

With Hardware: 1994—Third Eye Open (Rykodisc).

Buddy Miles' long and interesting career spans over four decades and includes stints as a Jimi Hendrix sideman and bandmember as well as a lead vocal spot for the popular Claymation "group" the California Raisins. Though best known as a singer/drummer, he also plays guitar a la Hendrix, left-handed and upside down.

By the time he was 12, Miles was drumming in his father's jazz group, the Bebops. Approximately three years later, he began working with a number of groups, including the Delfonics, the Ink Spots, and Ruby and the Romantics. He also had played on the session that produced the Jaynetts' 1963 hit "Sally Go 'Round the Roses." Miles was playing in Wilson Pickett's backup band in 1967 when guitarist Mike Bloomfield spotted him at a Brooklyn Murray the K show and invited him to join the Electric Flag. Miles appears on that group's A Long Time Coming (1968), The Electric Flag (1969), and The Band Kept On Playing (1974).

In 1968 Miles formed his Buddy Miles Express from the ruins of Electric Flag, the Express (which featured guitarist Jim McCarty, later with Cactus) peppered Miles' mélange of hard rock and soul with brassy horn charts. Then and since, too, Miles played drums on many other artists' records, including an early John McLaughlin album, Devotion, Jimi Hendrix's Electric Ladyland, and Muddy Waters' Fathers and Sons. Over the years, he recorded two albums with Carlos Santana (1972's Miles/Santana Live and 1987's Freedom) as well.

The Express came to a halt when Miles joined Hendrix and bassist Billy Cox in what was probably the first black rock group, Hendrix's Band of Gypsies. It was a brief alliance, but it produced the acclaimed Band of Gypsies, a live album recorded on New Year's Eve 1969. It included versions of Miles' "Them Changes" and "We Gotta Live Together." Just 10 months later Hendrix died in London, and Miles re-formed the Buddy Miles Express, which included Cox. It was this group that had a minor hit with "Them Changes."

Though Miles would remain prodigiously active for some time, "Them Changes" was his last fling at the pop charts under his own name. In 1974 he joined the reunited Electric Flag for a comeback that dissolved before the end of the year. Beginning in 1978, he served a jail term for grand theft; he had left famous tailor Nudie's store without paying for some merchandise. He was also convicted of auto theft. While doing his time, Miles formed bands at both the California Institution for Men at Chino and San Quentin.

It would seem that Miles' career was all but finished but shortly after his release from prison in 1985, Miles recorded "I Heard It Through the Grapevine" for a producer friend. The track found its way to an advertising firm then "casting" the voices for its California Raisins commercials. Miles went on to voice the "lead" Claymation Raisin for the Cleo-winning series of ads and sang on the dried fruits' three LPs, which included the platinum The California Raisins Sing the Hit Songs, produced by Ross Vanelli. In 1992 Miles formed Hardware, a trio that includes guitarist Steve Salas and bass player Bootsy Collins. Into the new millennium, he continued to tour across the globe with a rotating backing band.

Steve Miller Band

Formed 1966, San Francisco, CA

Steve Miller (b. Oct. 5, 1943, Milwaukee, WI), gtr., voc.; James "Curly" Cooke, gtr., voc.; Lonnie Turner (b. Feb. 24, 1947, Berkeley, CA), bass; Tim Davis, drums.
 1967—(+ Boz Scaggs [b. June 8, 1944, OH], gtr., voc.; + Jim Peterman, kybds., voc.; - Cooke) 1968—Children of the Future; Sailor (Capitol) (- Scaggs; - Peterman; + Ben Sidran, kybds.) 1969—Brave New World; Your Saving Grace (- Turner; - Sidran; + Bobby Winkelman, gtr., bass, voc.) 1970—Number 5 1971—(- Davis; - Winkelman; + Ross Valory [b. 1950, San Francisco], bass; + Jack King, drums; + Dickie Thompson, kybds.; + Gerald Johnson, bass) Rock Love 1972—(- Valory; + Sidran; + Roger Clark, perc.) Recall the Beginning . . . A Journey From Eden; Anthology (- Johnson) 1973—(+ Turner; - Jack King; + John King, drums) The Joker (- John King; - Sidran) 1976—(+ Gary Mallaber [b. Oct. 11, 1946, Buffalo, NY], drums) Fly Like an Eagle 1977—(+ Byron Allred, kybds.; + David Denny, gtr.; + Greg Douglas, gtr.) Book of Dreams 1978—Greatest Hits 1974-78 1981—(- Denny; - Douglas; + Johnson) Circle of Love (+ Kenny Lee Lewis [b. 1954, Pasadena, CA], gtr.; + John Massaro, gtr.) 1982—

Abracadabra 1983—Live 1984—Italian X-Rays 1986—Living in the 20th Century 1988—(- Mallaber; - Lewis; + Gordon Knudtson, drums; + Billy Peterson, bass) Born 2B Blue 1993—Wide River (Polydor) 1994—Steve Miller Band Box Set (Capitol) 1997—Greatest Hits 1974-1978 (DCC Gold Disc).

In his long career, Steve Miller has gone from being one of the first young white West Coast blues-rockers to one of the biggest-selling pop-rock artists of the late '70s and early '80s. Although his record sales have slowed considerably since [for his new LPs, that is], this deliberately enigmatic figure remains a fixture on classic-rock radio and the concert trail.

Miller's father was a music-loving pathologist who often brought home guests like Charles Mingus and T-Bone Walker. At age four, Steve met guitarist Les Paul, who taught him some chords and later let him sit in on some Les Paul-Mary Ford studio sessions. At age 12, Miller formed his first blues band, the Marksmen Combo. The band stayed together for five years and included Boz Scaggs, who played off and on with Miller later and has had a prominent career of his own.

At the University of Wisconsin, Miller led one of the first blues-rock bands in town, the Ardells, which included Scaggs, pianist Ben Sidran, and future Cheap Trick manager Ken Adamany. The group later evolved into the Fabulous Knight Trains. Miller left college to go to Denmark, where he studied literature at the University of Copenhagen. He soon grew disillusioned with academia, however, and moved to Chicago, where his interest in blues was rekindled both by the classic black city-blues artists on the South Side and by the new generation of young white blues players that included Mike Bloomfield, Elvin Bishop, and Paul Butterfield. He formed a short-lived band with Barry Goldberg (who went on to join Bloomfield in the Electric Flag), the Goldberg-Miller Blues Band.

In 1966 Miller moved to San Francisco and formed the Steve Miller Blues Band with guitarist James "Curly" Cooke, bassist Lonnie Turner, and drummer Tim Davis. The quartet became a local favorite, playing many free outdoor shows; it also backed Chuck Berry on a live album recorded in 1967 at the Fillmore, and contributed three tunes to the soundtrack of the film Revolution. After playing the Monterey Pop Festival in 1967, Miller was approached by Capitol Records. He helped change the economics of rock music by holding out for what was at the time a record-breaking advance payment for a debut LP and a sizable royalty rate. The band's first LP, Children of the Future, was recorded in England, with Glyn Johns and the band coproducing. It became an almost instant staple of progressive FM radio, although it failed to yield a hit single. The second LP, Sailor (#24, 1968), contained "Livin' in the USA," which grazed the Top 50 and remains a rock-radio classic. By that time, the band had dropped the "Blues" from its name.

Miller's audience expanded with his next several albums: Brave New World (#22, 1969), Your Saving Grace (#38, 1969), Number 5 (#23, 1975), and Rock Love (#82, 1971). None of these albums produced hit singles, although many of Miller's album tracks continued to get heavy exposure on FM radio, especially "Brave New World," "Space Cowboy," and "My Dark Hour" (on which Paul McCartney plays bass, pseudonymously though transparently credited as Phil Ramon).

In early 1972 Miller broke his neck in an auto accident, but the injury wasn't diagnosed until several weeks later. He then developed hepatitis, which sidelined him through early 1973. Meanwhile, the Anthology (#56, 1972) collection was selling well (it eventually went gold in 1977). Miller kept writing tunes while convalescing.

In 1973 The Joker (#2) revealed a new Steve Miller. The sound was slick and bouncy; the LP's title song was a #1 single in the U.S. and went gold; the album went platinum. Instead of rushing to capitalize on his breakthrough success, though, Miller took three years to deliver a followup. Fly Like an Eagle (#3, 1976) consolidated his newfound popular success and stayed on the chart for nearly two years. "Take the Money and Run" was a #11 single; "Rock'n Me" was a #1 single; the title tune made #2 on the singles chart and also went gold. (In the late '90s it became the theme song for a U.S. Postal Service ad campaign.) The LP and its title track even made the Top 20 on the R&B chart. Through mid-2001, it had sold more than 4 million copies.

Book of Dreams (#2, 1977), like Eagle, passed the platinum mark (3 million copies by 2001) and contained three hits: "Jet Airliner" (#8), "Jungle Love" (#23), and "Swingtown" (#17). Those and other Miller favorites appeared on Greatest Hits 1974-78 (#18, 1978), which has now sold 8 million copies.

In 1978 Miller took a break and moved to a farm in Oregon, where he built a 24-track studio. He did not release another record until 1981's Circle of Love, which contained "Heart Like a Wheel" (#24, 1981) (not the Anna McGarrigle song popularized by Linda Ronstadt) and a bizarre side-long track titled "Macho City." The album went merely gold, prompting predictions that Miller's commercial years were behind him. But 1982's Abracadabra gave him his third #1 hit in the title track, which was boosted by a catchy video. Born 2B Blue (#108, 1988) marked a dramatic shift, featuring jazz standards with Ben Sidran, vibraphonist Milt Jackson, and saxophonist Phil Woods. While it did not sell well, critics were impressed.

With the release of Wide River in 1993, the 50-year-old Miller undertook a 50-city tour, during which he played mainly to audiences less than half his age. Miller has not put out any new studio album since, but he remains a strong live draw, playing sets made up mostly of material from his '70s work. The 1997 Greatest Hits sold more than 7 million copies.

Milli Vanilli

Formed 1988, Munich, Ger.

Fabrice Morvan (b. May 14, 1966, Guadeloupe, Fr.), alleged voc.; Rob Pilatus (b. June 8, 1965, Ger.; d. Apr. 3, 1998, Frankfurt, Ger.), alleged voc.

1989—Girl You Know It's True (Arista) 1990—The Remix Album.

As Rob & Fab: 1993—Rob & Fab (Taj).

Milli Vanilli's first hit was titled "Girl You Know It's True" (#2, 1989), but by 1990 the Grammy Award-winning duo became synonymous with all that is fake in pop. Not only were they accused of lip-synching their #1 hits—"Baby Don't Forget My Number," "Blame It on the Rain," and "Girl I'm Gonna Miss You" (all 1989)—on television and onstage, but they confessed to not having sung a note on their records, either. The startling admission resulted in broken careers, more than 25 lawsuits, an embarrassed Grammy Award committee, and a deeply chagrined record label.

The story begins when the German-born Pilatus, an out-of-work break dancer and model, met Fabrice Morvan, a Parisian gymnast, in an L.A. disco in 1984. The two frustrated singers returned to Europe to begin a career. Their initial attempt at stardom, a 1986 German release, flopped. Looking for work, they showed up at producer Frankie Farian's Munich studio. Farian, best known for his work with Boney M, had just recorded "Girl You Know It's True" (a song originally recorded by an American band, Numarx) with a musically accomplished but unattractive band. Rob and Fab were pliable and photogenic but untalented. Offering the duo $4,000 each plus royalties, Farian christened them Milli Vanilli, variously defined as Turkish for "positive energy," the name of a Berlin disco, or an homage to British synth-pop band Scritti Politti.

Decked out in bulge-revealing bicycle shorts and shoulder-length dreadlocks, Morvan and Pilatus danced and mouthed the song on European TV, working it into an international hit that crossed the Atlantic when Clive Davis picked it up for his Arista label. An album, Girl You Know It's True (#1, 1989), was quickly recorded.

The Milli Vanilli scam began to unravel after Charles Shaw, a U.S. Army veteran who was the actual singer, went public with his story in late 1989. After months of denials, Pilatus, who wanted more money and a chance to sing, confirmed that his and Morvan's sole contribution to Milli Vanilli was visual. The Grammy committee was the first to respond, rescinding the band's Best New Artist Grammy in November. Twenty-seven lawsuits were then filed, charging Arista Records, its parent BMG, and various concert promoters with fraud. The suits were settled in a Chicago court by a decision granting anyone with proof of purchase of Girl You Know It's True a rebate of up to $3. More than 80,000 claims had been filed as of 1995.

On November 30, 1991, despondent over his career and the breakup of a romance, Pilatus attempted suicide in L.A. Farian released an album by the "Real Milli Vanilli" in 1991, but without Rob and Fab's visual appeal, it stiffed. Pilatus and Morvan recorded an album, Rob & Fab, but lacking Farian's musical gloss, it, too, failed.

Morvan dealt with his fall from grace as best he could, he relocated to L.A. and took a series of low-profile jobs (including one with Berlitz) while continuing to work on a solo career. He returned to performing as a solo act in late 1997, and his work as a singer and a songwriter received some mildly favorable reviews.

Pilatus, on the other hand, never recovered from the Milli Vanilli fiasco and developed severe drug problems. In 1996 a judge ordered him to enter an L.A. rehabilitation program after he pleaded guilty in three assault cases. During that period, Pilatus made another suicide attempt, ingesting alcohol and pills, slitting his wrists, and threatening to jump from a ninth-floor window. Pilatus died of a heart attack in a Frankfurt hotel room in 1998.

Stephanie Mills

Born Mar. 22, 1957, Queens, NY

1973—Movin' in the Right Direction (Paramount) 1976—For the First Time (Motown) 1979—What Cha Gonna Do With My Lovin' (20th Century) 1980—Sweet Sensation 1981—Stephanie 1982—Tantalizingly Hot (Casablanca) 1983—Merciless 1984—I've Got the Cure 1985—Stephanie Mills (MCA) 1987—If I Were Your Woman 1989—Home 1991—Christmas 1992—Something Real 1995—The Best of Stephanie Mills (Mercury); Personal Inspirations (Gospocentric) 1996—Greatest Hits (MCA).

Stephanie Mills was still a teenager when her starring role in the original Broadway production of The Wiz catapulted her to fame and paved the way for a recording career that would find her bubbly, lyric soprano gracing several popular R&B singles. Like many R&B artists, the petite Mills got her start singing in church, at Baptist services in Brooklyn, New York. At only nine years old, she won the prestigious talent competition at Harlem's Apollo Theatre. Appearances with the Isley Brothers and the Spinners followed, as did an album on Paramount Records and a role in the Broadway play Maggie Flynn.

In 1975 Mills won the part of Dorothy in the all-black musical-theater adaptation of The Wizard of Oz. The show was a smash, and Motown Records founder Berry Gordy Jr. took an interest in its star. (Ironically, Gordy's most famous protégée, Diana Ross, usurped the role of Dorothy in the film version of The Wiz.) Mills' Motown debut, For the First Time, was produced and written by noted hitmakers Burt Bacharach and Hal David. Nonetheless, it proved a commercial disappointment, and Motown dropped Mills. The young singer bounced right back, though, signing with 20th Century Records and, in 1979, enjoying her first R&B hit, "What Cha Gonna Do With My Lovin'" (#8). The following year, Mills scored an even bigger R&B single, the #3 "Sweet Sensation," and landed a #6 pop hit with "Never Knew Love Like This Before" (#12, R&B). In 1981, Mills again reached #3 on the R&B chart with "Two Hearts," a duet with Teddy Pendergrass.

After switching over to Casablanca Records, Mills generated just one R&B Top 10 single between 1982 and 1985, "The Medicine Song" (#8). Meanwhile, her 1980 marriage to Shalamar's Jeffrey Daniels—the first of three failed marriages for Mills—quickly soured. The latter half of the decade was more fortuitous: Mills topped the R&B singles chart in 1986 with "I Have Learned to Respect the Power of Love" and repeated this achievement twice the next year, with "I Feel Good All Over" and "(You're Puttin') A Rush on Me." Another song, "Secret Lady," reached #7. In the early '90s Mills became Dorothy again in a touring company of The Wiz. In 1992 she released Something Real, which yielded one moderately successful R&B single, "All Day, All Night" (#20, 1993).

Professional hardship was to follow, however, in 1993. Mills parted ways with her longtime label, MCA, and sued her business manager for misappropriation of funds. She returned to her roots with a gospel album, Personal Inspirations, in 1995. After taking some time off to concentrate on her third marriage, to Detroit radio station program director Mike Saunders, Mills returned to musical theater. She appeared in a Detroit holiday production of Langston Hughes' Black Nativity, led by her Wiz director, George Faison, in 1995, costarred with Teddy Pendergrass in a touring revival of Your Arms Too Short to Box With God in 1996; and was featured on the Chicago stage in Ragume in 1999.

Garnet Mimms and the Enchanters

Formed 1963, Philadelphia, PA

Garnet Mimms (b. Garrett Mimms, Nov. 26, 1937, Ashland, WV), voc.; Sam Bell (b. Philadelphia), voc.; Charles Boyer (b. NC), voc.; Zola Pearnell (b. Philadelphia), voc.

1963—Cry Baby (United Artists) 1964—(— the Enchanters) As Long as I Have You 1966—I'll Take Good Care of You 1973—Remember EP 1977—Garnet Mimms Has It All (Arista).

Five of the songs Garnet Mimms recorded are better known through the versions by his fan Janis Joplin: "Cry Baby," "My Baby," "Try (Just a Little Bit Harder)," "Piece of My Heart," and "Get It While You Can." In 1962 Mimms was a promising but unsuccessful singer who had recently abandoned his R&B group, the Gainors. The Enchanters were ex-Gainor Sam Bell and Charles Boyer and Zola Pearnell, the latter two veteran gospel singers and songwriters. Philadelphia producer Jerry Ragavoy gave them their 1963 million-selling hit, "Cry Baby" (#4 pop, #1 R&B), a gritty James Brown-styled gospel-soul frenzy featuring Mimms screaming the title phrase over and over. The tune was written by Ragavoy (a.k.a. Norman Meade) and producer Bert Berns (a.k.a. Bert Russell), a co-owner of Bang Records. With the exception of "Maybe" (by Richard Barrett), Ragavoy cowrote the other three songs covered by Joplin as well.

Within a year, Mimms and the Enchanters (which were in fact an ever-changing roster of female session singers that at times included Dionne and Dee Dee Warwick and Cissy Houston) had three more hits: "For Your Precious Love" (#26, 1963), "Baby Don't You Weep" (#30, 1963), and "A Quiet Place" (#78, 1964). In 1964 Ragavoy split Mimms from the Enchanters. The latter went more or less ignored, but Mimms himself had hits with "Tell Me Baby" (#69), "One Girl" (#67), and "Look Away" (#73) (later covered by Manfred Mann and the Spencer Davis Group) in 1964; "A Little Bit of Soap" (#95, 1965), and "I'll Take Good Care of You" (#30 pop, #15 R&B) in 1966.

For the next several years, Mimms continued to record.

with spotty success. A 1974 project with members of the group Brass Construction, for instance, went nowhere. In 1977 Mimms, backed by his new group, the Truckin' Co., had a minor hit in both the U.S. and the U.K. with "What It Is" from the album Garnet Mimms Has It All. Mimms has since become a born-again Christian. Howard Tate, who had been one of the Gainors, had a hit with "Get It While You Can," one of Mimms' unsuccessful singles.

The Mindbenders: See Wayne Fontana and the Mindbenders

Ministry

Formed 1981, Chicago, IL

Al Jourgensen (a.k.a. Hypo Luxa, b. Allen Jourgensen, Oct. 9, 1958, Havana, Cuba), voc., gr.; Lamont Welton, bass; Stevo, drums.

1981—Cold Life EP (Wax Trax!) 1982—(– Welton; – Stevo; + Stephen George, drums) 1983—With Sympathy (Arista) 1986—(– George) Twitch (Sire) (+ Paul Barker [a.k.a. Hermes Pan, b. Feb. 8, 1950, Palo Alto, CA], bass, programming; William Riefkin [b. Sep. 30, 1960, Seattle, WA], drums; Roland Barker [b. June 30, 1957, Mountainview, CA], kybds.) 1987—Twelve Inch Singles (Wax Trax!) 1988—The Land of Rape and Honey (Sire) 1989—A Mind Is a Terrible Thing to Taste (+ Mike Scaccia [b. June 14, 1965, Babylon, NY], gr.) 1990—In Case You Didn't Feel Like Showing Up (Live) 1992—Psalm 69: The Way to Succeed and the Way to Suck Eggs (– Riefkin; – Scaccia; + Louis Svitek, gr.; + Duane Buford, programmer; + Rey Washam, drums) 1996—Filth Pig 1999—Dark Side of the Spoon (Warner Bros.) 2000—Live Psalm 69 Tour (Ipecac Records).

Ministry began as a fairly faceless dance combo derivative of the early '80s British synth-pop groups. But by the band's second full-length album, frontman Al Jourgensen had started pitting the abrasive sounds of such avant-industrial pioneers as Cabaret Voltaire, Einstürzende Neubauten, and Front 242 against a full-bodied guitar assault. By the early '90s, Ministry's signature art-damaged metal had sparked an ear-bleeding sensation, and Jourgensen was being hailed as the Phil Spector of industrial disco.

After discovering punk rock at a late-'70s Ramones show, Jourgensen moved to Chicago and formed Ministry. The group put out a few singles and an EP on the local independent label Wax Trax! before signing with Arista in 1982. When the label attempted to mold Jourgensen into an American version of England's Howard Jones, the singer/guitarist put up a fight and was dropped. Three years later, a regrouped Ministry surfaced on Sire, where, in an unusual arrangement, the group was not required to submit demo tapes to keep the company abreast of its progress. After the release of Twitch, Jourgensen and new partner Paul Barker began perfecting Ministry's self-described "aggro" sound: angry, shouted vocals and samples over a thick wall of guitar.

Ministry's tour for its second full-length Sire album, The Land of Rape and Honey, featured a virtual who's who of abrasive alternative rock: Nine Inch Nails' Trent Reznor, Fim Tribe's Chris Connelly, Skinny Puppy's Ogre, Jesus Lizard's David Yow, former PiL/Killing Joke drummer Martin Atkins, and others. Connelly returned as guest vocalist on A Mind Is a Terrible Thing to Taste and the 1990 live album In Case You Didn't Feel Like Showing Up. Meanwhile, Jourgensen and Barker had become figureheads of a sort of Chicago/Wax Trax! musical mafia, producing offshoot projects such as Revolting Cocks (basically Ministry with Chris Connelly as lead vocalist), 1,000 Homo DJs, Acid Horse, Pailhead, Pigface, and Lard, among others.

In 1992 Ministry ascended to new heights with Psalm 69: The Way to Succeed and the Way to Suck Eggs. The album shipped at 350,000 copies (nearly 100,000 more than any previous release) and entered the charts at #27. It received glowing reviews, even from critics who had heretofore shunned the arty industrial genre. The single "Jesus Built My Hotrod" featured guest vocals by Butthole Surfer Gibby Haynes. Ministry's newfound success was cemented when the group appeared on the 1992 Lollapalooza Tour. Fans would have a long wait between albums, however. Jourgensen spent the next few years surviving two near-fatal car crashes, a divorce, the death of friend River Phoenix, and a 1993 move to Austin, Texas, where he was convicted of drug possession. Still, in Austin, Ministry built a studio and began work on a followup to Psalm 69. But technical problems nearly led to a band breakup. Jourgensen returned to Chicago, where the album was finally completed. The result was Filth Pig, which reached #19 on the pop album chart. Among the tracks was a brooding, grinding version of Bob Dylan's "Lay Lady Lay."

Ministry released Dark Side of the Spoon in 1999, stretching beyond industrial boundaries by incorporating acoustic instruments (including banjos, sitars, and zithers) into its usual chaotic musical fabric. The band also stirred controversy when Kmart refused to carry the album, citing cover art that showed the backside of a nude, overweight woman wearing a dunce cap and standing before a blackboard that read "I will be God." The band toured in 1999, though Jourgensen suggested Ministry would release just one more album before disbanding. Meanwhile, he formed another of his many side projects, Buck Satan and the 666 Shooters, a country band.

Mink DeVille/Willy DeVille

Formed 1974, San Francisco, CA

Willy DeVille (b. William Boray, Aug. 27, 1953, New York, NY), voc., gr., harp; Louis X. Erlanger, gr., voc.; Bobby Leonards, kybds.; Ruben Siguenza, bass; T.R. "Manfred" Allen, drums. 1977—Cabretta (Capitol) 1978—Return to Magenta (– Leonards; – Siguenza; – Allen) 1980—Le Chat Bleu (- Erlanger; + Rick Borgia, gtr.; + Kenny Margolis, accordion, kybds.; + Joey Vasta, bass; + Thommy Price, drums; + Louis Cortelezzi, horns) 1981—Coup de Grâce (Atlantic) 1983—Where Angels Fear to Tread 1985—Sportin' Life. Willy DeVille solo: 1986—Miracle (A&M) 1990—Victory Mixture 1994—Backstreets of Desire (Forward/Rhino) 1996—Loup Garou (Discovery) 1999—Horse of a Different Color (East West, Fr.).

Although Mink DeVille emerged from New York's late-'70s punk-rock scene, its music was romantic R&B. After the band appeared on the 1976 Live From CBGB compilation LP, it was signed by Capitol. The core of the band had been formed in San Francisco, where leader Willy DeVille had traveled after a 1971 trip to London from his Lower East Side home. There he met Ruben Siguenza and Tom Allen, and the three began playing leather bars and lounges under names like Lazy Eights and Billy DeSade and the Marquis. After reading about the Ramones and CBGB in a music magazine, the three of them formed Mink DeVille.

The band's debut LP was produced by Jack Nitzsche and was a critical success, yielding a U.K. Top 20 hit single in "Spanish Stroll." In 1979 Willy DeVille moved to Paris to record Le Chat Bleu, firing most of his band in the process. When Capitol heard the tapes of the new LP—replete with accordion-backed traditional French and Cajun-style romantic ballads—it delayed the album's U.S. release for nearly a year, prompting DeVille to sign with Atlantic.

DeVille made his Atlantic debut with Coup de Grâce. Both Where Angels Fear to Tread and Sportin' Life were well received by critics here but little known to listeners. DeVille disbanded the group after Sportin' Life. Like many artists before him, he found a much more enthusiastic audience in France, where he lived for a while and still maintains a home.

Mark Knopfler produced Miracle, which included "Storybook Love," a song nominated for an Oscar after it was included on the The Princess Bride soundtrack. On Victory Mixture, DeVille paid tribute to New Orleans, another of his several current "hometowns." He continued to explore classic R&B, Cajun, and rockabilly styles on Loup-Garou (1996), which included a duet with Brenda Lee on "You'll Never Know." Despite a positive critical response to that album in the U.S., DeVille's followup, Horse of a Different Color (1999), was an import.

Minor Threat: See Fugazi

Minutemen/FIREHOSE

Minutemen, formed 1979, San Pedro, CA
D. Boon (b. Dennes Dale Boon, Apr. 1, 1958; d. Dec. 22, 1985, AZ), gtr., voc.; Mike Watt (b. Dec. 20, 1957, Portsmouth, VA), bass, voc.; Frank Toche, drums.
1980—(- Toche; + George Hurley [b. Sep. 4, 1958, Brockton, MA], drums) Paranoid Time EP (SST) 1981—The Punch Line 1982—Bean-Spill EP (Thermidor) 1983—What Makes a Man Start Fires? (SST); Buzz or Howl Under the Influence of Heat 1984—Double Nickels on the Dime; The Politics of Time (New Alliance) 1985—Tour-Spiel EP (Reflex); My First Bells 1980–1983 cassette; Project: Mersh EP; 3-Way Tie (for Last) 1987—Ballot Result; Post-Mersh, vol. 1; Post-Mersh, vol. 2 1989—Post-Mersh, vol. 3 1998—Introducing the Minutemen.

fIREHOSE, formed 1986, San Pedro, CA:

Watt; Hurley; eD FROMOHIO (b. Ed Crawford, Jan. 26, 1962, Stubenville, OH), gtr., voc.).

1986—Ragin', Full-On (SST) 1987—if'n 1989—fROMOHIO 1991—flyin' the flannel (Columbia) 1992—The Live Totem Pole EP; The Red & the Black EP 1993—Mr. Machinery Operator.

Mike Watt solo: 1995—Ball-Hog or Tugboat? (Columbia) 1997—Contemplating the Engine Room (Sony).

The Minutemen were one of the most adventurous hardcore punk bands, taking the music to places no one expected it could go—into funk, free jazz, even folk. Fiercely independent and to the far left politically, the trailblazing power trio delivered brief, angular blasts of formless music at breakneck speeds, though with a gutsy, unaffected groove.

Mike Watt and D. Boon were childhood friends in the blue-collar town of San Pedro, California, when they formed the Reactionaries, a fairly conventional rock four-piece. With the rise of punk in the late '70s, they renamed themselves the Minutemen (for the new brevity of their songs and the ironic right-wing reference). In honor of his hometown, Watt spray-painted "Pedro" on the body of his bass.

Minutemen were the second band (behind Black Flag) to release a record on the seminal South Bay independent punk label SST in 1980: Paranoid Time, an EP of short songs and free-form political rants Watt dubbed "spiels." With 1981's The Punch Line, the Minutemen locked in to their signature groove and gained a strong following on the L.A. punk scene. Bean-Spill is a whiplash five-song EP with a six-minute running time. The trio ventured into free-jazz territory on What Makes a Man Start Fires? and Buzz or Howl, its music and politics taking on a near-poetic elegance in tunes like "Bob Dylan Wrote Propaganda Songs" and "I Felt Like a Gringo." The 45-song Double Nickels on the Dime (trucker lingo for 55 mph on Interstate 10) is one of punk's few double-record sets, and stands with Hüsker Dü's Zen Arcade as an American punk classic.

In 1985 the Minutemen released two albums of longer, more accessible songs—Project Mersh (a sarcastic play on the word commercial) and 3-Way Tie (for Last)—that included cover versions (Steppenwolf's "Hey Lawdy Mama" and Creedence Clearwater Revival's "Have You Ever Seen the Rain") and the most structured original compositions of their career. That year, they toured behind R.E.M.

In December 1985, at the height of the trio's career, Boon died in a van accident in the Arizona desert following a gig. Watt and Hurley planned to throw in the towel, but re-formed as FIREHOSE when an enthusiastic Minutemen fan, 19-year-old Ed Crawford, called from Ohio and asked to step in on guitar FIREHOSE continued in the Minutemen vein, but with longer songs and a more folky feel (courtesy of Crawford). (Watt and his wife, former Black Flag bassist Kira Roessler, also formed the part-time double-bass duo, Dos, whose two albums, Dos [1986] and Numero Dos [1989], came out on New Alliance.) After the band released three independent albums, Columbia signed FIREHOSE and released flyin' the flannel, The Live Totem Pole EP, and the J Mascis-produced Mr. Machinery Operator. Then, on February 12, 1994, FIREHOSE played a final, unadvertised gig before a small, devoted crowd back where the whole thing started—in downtown San Pedro.

By June 1994, Mike Watt, who had played with Saccharine Trust in the mid- to late-'80s, had begun work on a solo album with help from Eddie Vedder (Pearl Jam), Thurston Moore (Sonic Youth), Frank Black (Pixies), Dave Grohl (Nirvana, Foo Fighters), the Beastie Boys, Chris Cornell (Soundgarden), Henry Rollins, and nearly 50 other musicians. Released as Ball Hog or Tugboat? (#129, 1995), the album spawned a Modern Rock radio hit in "Against the 70's" (sung by Vedder). A subsequent Watt solo tour featured an all-star backing band (again including Vedder and Grohl). Watt then appeared on Porno for Pyros' Good God's Urge and toured as a member of the band. In 1997 he released a "punk-rock opera" called Contemplating the Engine Room, recorded with drummer Steve Hodges and guitarist Nels Cline, who played one of Boon's old guitars on a track. For the first time, Watt handled all of the singing on the album, which was dedicated to his late father and Boon.

That same year, Watt joined Cline, keyboardist Money Mark (Beastie Boys), and Stephen Perkins (Jane's Addiction, Porno for Pyros) in a new improvisational band called Banyan. Watt toured with a new backing band, Pair of Pliers in 1999, but was sidelined by a serious intestinal illness. He returned to the road the next year with his own band and with J Mascis & the Fog. By now, George Hurley was playing as part of Red Krayola, with Mayo Thompson (Pere Ubu) and David Grubbs (Gastr del Sol).

Missing Persons

Formed 1980, Los Angeles, CA

Dale Bozzio (b. Dale Consalvi, Mar. 2, 1955, Boston, MA), voc.; Warren Cuccurullo (b. Dec. 8, 1956), gtr.; Chuck Wild, kybds.; Patrick O'Hearn (b. ca. 1956), bass; Terry Bozzio (b. Dec. 27, 1950, San Francisco, CA), drums.

1982—Missing Persons EP (Capitol); Spring Session M 1984—Rhyme & Reason 1986—Color in Your Life 1987—The Best of Missing Persons (Capitol/EMI) 1999—Late Nights, Early Days (Sumthing Distribution).

Missing Persons is one of several early MTV new-wave bands remembered as much for its look as its songs. The focus of attention was vocalist Dale Bozzio, a former Boston-area Playboy Bunny with a hiccupy, Lene Lovich-like voice and a futuristic camp/sci-fi look that featured peekaboo plastic outfits (including Plexiglass-bowl bras) and hot-pink hair.

Terry Bozzio was playing drums with Frank Zappa when he first met Dale Consalvi, who'd come to Hollywood to pursue acting, in an L.A. recording studio. Though Bozzio soon after toured with U.K., the pair eventually formed Missing Persons in 1980, the year after they married. They enlisted guitarist Warren Cuccurullo and bassist Patnick O'Hearn, who had also played in Zappa's band, and Chuck Wild, a classically trained keyboardist.

Missing Persons' eponymous debut EP, recorded in 1981 and reissued by Capitol (#46, 1982), contained what would be their two biggest hits, "Words" (#42, 1982) and "Destination Unknown" (#42, 1982), which set pop-rock melodies and Dale's squeaky voice against electronic textures. Both songs were also included on the group's first and most successful album, Spring Session M (#17, 1982), the title an anagram for the band's name. Rhyme & Reason (#43, 1984) produced only a minor hit in "Give" (#67, 1984), and when Color in Your Life stiffed (#86, 1986, no hit singles), the group broke up, as did the Bozzios' marriage. Dale remarried twice, released one quick-vanishing solo album on Prince's Paisley Park label, and finally settled back in the Boston area to raise two children. Terry Bozzio spent three years working with Jeff Beck (he appears on Beck's 1989 Guitar Shop album), then gave drum clinics and classes around the world. Cuccurullo joined Duran Duran in 1990, O'Hearn made a series of successful instrumental New Age albums, and Wild wrote scores for film and TV; among his credits is the final season of the Max Headroom show.

Nostalgia for '80s pop, fueled by soundtracks for such films as The Wedding Singer, brought Missing Persons back together in the late '90s, and the band toured with contemporaries Wang Chung and A Flock of Seagulls. Late Nights, Early Days, featuring live recordings from 1981, was released in 1999. In mid-2001 all original members of Missing Persons reunited to play a handful of shows in Southern California. Plans were in the works for a full-scale tour, followed by a new recording.

Mission of Burma

Formed 1979, Boston, MA

Clint Conley (b. May 16, 1955, Indianapolis, IN), bass, voc.; Roger Miller (b. Feb. 24, 1952, Ann Arbor, MI), gtr., voc.; Martin Swope (b. June 1, 1955, Ann Arbor), tapes; Pete Prescott (b. Oct. 26, 1957, Nantucket Island, MA), drums.
1981—Signals, Calls, and Marches EP (Ace of Hearts)
1982—VS. 1985—The Horrible Truth About Burma
1987—Mission of Burma EP (Taang!); Forget 1988—Mission of Burma (Rykodisc).

Mission of Burma combined the smarts of progressive and art rock with the energy of punk, virtually inventing the shimmering, noisy-but-melodic wall-of-guitar sound adopted by such postpunk bands as Hüsker Dü. The band remained relatively unknown outside of the Northeast during its early '80s heyday and split up before making its biggest impact on American independent rock.

The classically trained Roger Miller grew up in Ann Arbor, Michigan, where he would often see his favorite local bands, the Stooges and MC5. By 1978, tired of the Detroit-area music scene, he moved to Boston. There he joined Clint Conley in Moving Parts, which splintered into Mission of Burma, with local drummer Pete Prescott and Martin Swope, a Michigan friend of Miller's who created the band's behind-the-scenes tape effects. The first of Burma's legendary, loud gigs was in February 1979.

Mission of Burma's debut recording was the tuneless 1980 single "Academy Fight Song," which became a postpunk classic and was covered by R.E.M. in 1989. Signals, Calls, and Marches contained another postpunk staple, "That's When I Reach for My Revolver." Burma hit its artistic peak on the 1982 LP VS. The title of the posthumous live album, The Horrible Truth About Burma, refers to Miller's increasing problem with tinnitus, a hearing disorder that forced Burma into early retirement in 1983. (The Taang! releases include outtakes, and the Rykodisc collection combines the first two albums with selected live and unreleased tracks.)

Miller continued making music but focused on quieter solo projects, mainly such avant-garde groups as the Binary System and his and Swope's Birdsongs of the Mesozoic. He also created soundtrack music as part of the Alloy Orchestra. Prescott formed the Volcano Suns, and Conley temporarily dropped out of music to become a TV producer. Meanwhile, Mission of Burma's influence continued, evidenced by Moby's cover of the band's "That's When I Reach for My Revolver" on his 1997 Animal Rights album. The former collaborators always dismissed speculation on a Burma reunion, though in 1998, Miller performed reworked Burma material with the Saturnalia String Trio. In 2000 Mission of Burma finally performed a brief, unexpected reunion of sorts in a Boston club when Miller played keyboards and cornet with the Peer Group, a band that included Prescott and Conley.

Joni Mitchell

Born Roberta Joan Anderson, Nov. 7, 1943, Fort Macleod, Can. 1968—Joni Mitchell (Reprise) 1969—Clouds 1970—Ladies of the Canyon 1971—Blue 1972—For the Roses (Asylum) 1974—Court and Spark; Miles of Aisles 1975—The Hissing of Summer Lawns 1976—Hejira 1977—Don Juan's Reckless Daughter 1979—Mingus 1980—Shadows and Light 1982—Wild Things Run Fast (Geffen) 1985—Dog Eat Dog 1988—Chalk Mark in a Rain Storm 1991—Night Ride Home 1994—Turbulent Indigo (Reprise) 1996—Hits; Misses 1998—Taming the Tiger 2000—Both Sides Now.

One of the most respected singer/songwriters in music, Joni Mitchell is also one of rock's most daring and uncompromising innovators. Her career has ranged from late-'60s and early-'70s popularity with confessional folk-pop songs to her current exalted cult status via a series of jazz-inflected experiments that presaged the multicultural and world-music experiments of Paul Simon, Peter Dinklage, and Sting by more than a decade. Through the '80s and '90s, Mitchell's influence could be seen in a range of artists beyond the legion of female—and male—singer/songwriters who claim her Prince, Jimmy Page, Robert Plant, Janet Jackson, John Mellencamp, Donna Summer, Cassandra Wilson, and a host of jazz musicians acknowledge her. Several of Mitchell's early compositions became famous in versions recorded by others—Crosby, Stills and Nash's "Woodstock," for example—but her own ululating vocals and open-tuned guitar continue to inspire imitators. In more recent years, younger female jazz-influenced singers have attempted to emulate her smoke-burnished voice and distinctive delivery. Her sound and her style, however, remain uniquely her own.

An only child, Roberta Anderson grew up in Saskatoon, Canada. At age nine she was stricken with polio. Defying doctors' predictions that she would never walk again, she recovered after spending nights in the children's ward singing at the top of her lungs. Throughout her childhood she was involved in art and music, and she taught herself to play guitar from a Pete Seeger instruction book. When she enrolled at the Alberta College of Art in Calgary, she took a ukulele with her and began playing folk music.

She soon moved to Toronto, where she began performing on the local folk scene and gave birth to a baby girl. The social stigma of being an unwed mother was so intense that Mitchell did not even tell her parents. Without money, a job, or even a home, she entered into what she later termed "a marriage of convenience" to folksinger Chuck Mitchell in 1965. They moved together to Detroit, where Mitchell felt she had no option but to place her daughter, named Kelly Dale Anderson, up for adoption. She and Chuck Mitchell soon divorced; he continues to perform.

Mitchell became a crucial sensation on Detroit's folk scene, and her notices led to a series of successful engagements in New York. There, in 1967, she was signed by Reprise Records. In late 1968 Judy Collins had a smash hit with Mitchell's "Both Sides Now" (In 1991 Carly Simon turned the song's lyrics into a children's book.) Collins also recorded Mitchell's "Michael From the Mountains" on her Wildflowers album; the British folk-rock band Fairport Convention recorded Mitchell's "Eastern Rain"; and Tom Rush recorded "The Circle Game." Thanks to this indirect success, Mitchell's debut LP—coproduced by David Crosby—sold fairly well. Clouds (#31, 1969) sold better, Ladies of the Canyon (#27, 1970) went platinum and yielded a minor hit single "Big Yellow Taxi" (#67, 1970) (which Janet Jackson sampled nearly 30 years later in her hit "Got 'Til It's Gone").

Mitchell's next platinum album was the critically acclaimed Blue (#15, 1971), which featured "Carey," "My Old Man," and "The Last Time I Saw Richard." That album included contributions from musician friends like James Taylor (purportedly the subject of "Blue" and, from For the Roses, "See You Sometime"). For the Roses (#11, 1972) went gold and contained another minor hit single, the countryish "You Turn Me On (I'm a Radio)" (#25, 1972). The highest-charting album of Mitchell's long career remains 1974's Court and Spark (#2), which yielded the hit single "Help Me" (#7, 1974). By this time, Mitchell's sound had grown from simple, unadorned acoustic guitar and voice into a sophisticated continental-pop blend replete with horns, keyboards, and complex backing vocal arrangements performed by Mitchell herself. Court and Spark pointed to Mitchell's future direction with its version of Annie Ross' jazz-jive "Twisted," Mitchell's first recorded cover.

Joni Mitchell

For the live Miles of Aisles (#2, 1974) album, Mitchell was accompanied by the jazz-fusion band L.A. Express (which included Tom Scott, who had figured prominently on Court). The Hissing of Summer Lawns (#4, 1975) was complex and sophisticated; it fared poorly critically. Yet that album is today cited as influential by jazz artists and singers (particularly such tracks as "Edith and the Kingpin" and "Shades of Scarlet Conquering"). In any case, Hissing was a commercial hit, and years later critical opinion has been revised to acknowledge its bold experiments ("The Jungle Line" was probably the first pop record to use Burundi drums). It also contained her cooler but no less cutting observations on the music industry's conflict between business and art ("The Boho Dance"), a theme that would become increasingly prominent in both Mitchell's art and interviews. Hejira (#13, 1976), though smoother and more spare instrumentally, was another commercial success that baffled many critics. To a greater degree than any of her previous works, this album tackled issues of commitment and freedom from a uniquely feminine perspective. In 1976 Mitchell appeared at the Band's San Francisco farewell concert and in the filmed documentary of that event, The Last Waltz.

In light of her previous two albums, the double-album Don Juan's Reckless Daughter (#25, 1977) was a logical if mysterious next step. Some critics felt that her lyrics had grown more convoluted and vague; indeed, Mitchell was using song structures far more ambitious and rich than the straight singer/songwriter confessional mode. Still, contrary to the then-prevailing view, Don Juan's Reckless Daughter was not all wild experimentation; in fact, half of its tracks (for example, "Talk to Me," "Off Night Backstreet," "Jencho") might have worked on any previous Mitchell album. But with jazz musicians Larry Carlton and Wayne Shorter, augmented by a group of Latin percussionists (including Airtio), Mitchell scouted new musical territory in "The Tenth World" and the side-long "Paprika Plains." Perhaps indirectly, Don Juan led to Mitchell's most daring and most controversial project, her work with jazz bassist and composer Charles Mingus. Then dying of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (Lou Gehrig's disease), Mingus invited Mitchell to collaborate with him. She set lyrics to some of the last melodies Mingus wrote, composed the rest of the material herself, and released Mingus not long after the bassist's death. It received mixed reviews but went to #17, an incredibly high chart position for a jazz album and a testament to Mitchell's fans' enduring interest in her work. The live album Shadows and Light (#38, 1980), which featured a band including Jaco Pastorius of Weather Report, jazz-rock guitarist Pat Metheny, and the a cappella vocal group the Persuasions, also met mixed reviews.

Years later, Mitchell repeatedly and adamantly expressed no regrets about the rocky course she set. "I would do it all over again in a minute for the musical education," she told ROLLING STONE. In 1982 Mitchell released her first album for Geffen, Wild Things Run Fast (#25, 1982), a more pop-oriented album that featured a cover of Elvis Presley's "You're So Square" Baby I Don't Care" (#47, 1982). That year she married her bassist, Larry Klein. (They divorced in 1992 but have continued to work together.)

With Dog Eat Dog (#63, 1985), Mitchell's work showed a new emphasis on social commentary. Coproduced by Thomas Dolby, the album featured appearances by Michael McDonald ("Good Friends") and actor Rod Steiger (as a money-grubbing evangelist on "Tax Free"). Chalk Mark in a Rainstorm (#45, 1988)—with a guest roster that included Peter Gabriel ("My Secret Place"), Willie Nelson, Tom Petty, and Billy Idol ("Dancin' Clown")—was hailed by some critics as a return to form. Others, however, found it bland. Throughout the '80s Mitchell all but abandoned the concert stage. Her hastily arranged acoustic set at the 1986 Amnesty International benefit (she was a last-minute substitute for Pete Townshend) was cut short when the crowd, obviously unfamiliar with her work, booed her.

Mitchell experienced a resurgence of sorts with the '90s, due to a confluence of events: a trio of albums generally considered among her best, her finding and reestablishing a relationship with the daughter she had given up for adoption, and a flurry of industry accolades and honors. Fans and critics swooned over Night Ride Home (#41, 1991), an album of readily accessible albeit sophisticated jazz-tinged pop. Three years later, Turbulent Indigo (#47, 1994) was released to glowing critical response and a Best Pop Album Grammy. While promoting that album, Mitchell disclosed that she was suffering from post-polio syndrome, a neurological condition related to her childhood bout with the disease that made it difficult for her to perform. Because her repertoire includes more than 50 different tunings, Mitchell was considering quitting the stage until she obtained a Roland VG-8 computerized guitar that eliminates the need for retuning.

In 1995 Mitchell became the fourth artist to receive Billboard's Century Award (previous recipients were George Harrison, Billy Joel, and Buddy Guy). It would seem that the award was made for Mitchell, since it recognizes artists who have not been accorded the acknowledgement they deserve. Two years later, Mitchell was reunited with her daughter, Kilauren Gibb, and a grandson. Though Mitchell had been quietly seeking her daughter and had written, however obliquely, of the matter in several songs (Blue's "Little Green" and Wild Things' "Chinese Café"), Kilauren began to suspect the connection when she received some basic information about her biological parents that seemed to match information posted on a Joni Mitchell fan Web page. Mitchell skipped her 1997 induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame because she wanted to spend more time with her newly discovered family on her first Mother's Day.

Taming the Tiger (#75, 1998) was another critical triumph, followed in 2000 by a concept collection of standards concerning romance, Both Sides Now (#66, 2000). Using orchestral and big-band backing, Mitchell tackled such classics as "At Last," "Stormy Weather," "You're My Thrill," and "You've Changed," with two of her older songs, "Both Sides Now" and "A Case of You." Both Sides Now received the Best Traditional Pop Vocal Album Grammy.

In the late '90s, Mitchell began appearing on television occasionally and performing in concert. In 1998 she undertook a limited tour with Bob Dylan, and in 2000 she toured to promote Both Sides Now. That spring, TNT presented "An All Star Tribute to Joni Mitchell," on which k.d. lang, Cassandra Wilson, Elton John, Richard Thompson, James Taylor, Wynonna, and others performed her music.

Mitchell has produced or coproduced each of her albums since her debut and has maintained control of her master recordings and her publishing from the beginning of her career. An accomplished painter and photographer, she created the art for each of her album covers, and her artwork has been exhibited throughout the world. Her first major career retrospective, Voices—The Work of Joni Mitchell, opened at the Mendel Art Gallery in Saskatoon in June 2000.

Willie Mitchell

Born Jan. 3, 1928, Ashland, MS
 1968—Live (Hi); Soul Serenade; Solid Soul 1969—On Top
 1970—Robbin's Nest 1971—Hold It 1973—The Many Moods of Willie Mitchell 1977—Best of Willie Mitchell
 1986—That Driving Beat 1999—Soul Serenade: The Best of Willie Mitchell (Hi/The Right Stuff).

Although he reached the R&B Top 40 repeatedly during the '60s as a bandleader, Willie Mitchell really made his mark in the music business as vice president of Hi Records, where he helped fashion modern Memphis soul.

Mitchell studied trumpet in high school and performed in dance bands before forming his first group in 1954. By the end of the decade, that group had become the house band at the Home of the Blues label, where it also began recording its own instrumentals. Mitchell became a well-known studio musician and arranger; he worked with Charlie Rich, the Bill Black Combo, and Ace Cannon, among others. Mitchell signed with Hi in 1961, and started slowly with "20-75" and "Percolatin'" in 1964 before scoring his first R&B hit, "Buster Brown" (#29), in 1965. It was followed by the R&B hits "Bad Eye" (#23, 1966), "Soul Serenade" (#10, 1968), "Prayer Meetin'" (#23, 1968), "30-60-90" (#31, 1969), and "My Babe" (#37, 1969). Mitchell also began producing singers, including O.V. Wright, Syl Johnson, and Otis Clay, but he never stopped playing—that's his trumpet solo on B.J. Thomas' breakthrough hit, "Raindrops Keep Falling on My Head."

After the death of Hi president Joe Cuoghi around 1964, Mitchell took on more production and administrative duties for the label, and in 1969 he abandoned what remained of his own recording career to produce his discovery, Al Green. Mitchell's first two 1970 hits as a producer were Green's "I Can't Get Next to You" and Ann Peebles' "Part Time Love." Through the decade, his success was uninterrupted. He oversaw all of the recordings that established Al Green high among the most influential singers of the '70s, and produced others, including Ann Peebles on "I Can't Stand the Rain," in the soul style he and Green pioneered.

Mitchell worked with Al Green again in the '80s on He Is the Light and Going Away. Among the many other artists he has produced are Ike and Tina Turner, Rufus Thomas, Bobby Bland, and Paul Butterfield. In 1994 he opened his Willie Mitchell's Rhythm & Blues Club, on Beale Street, in Memphis. (Interestingly, the same location previously housed Jerry Lee Lewis' the Spot.)

Moby

Born Richard Melville Hall, Sep. 11, 1965, New York, NY
 1992—Moby (Instinct); Ambient 1993—Early Underground;
Move EP (Elektra) 1995—Everything Is Wrong 1996—Rare:
The Collected B-sides 1989–1993 (Instinct); Animal Rights
 (Elektra) 1997—I Like to Score 1999—Play (V2) 2000—
Mobysongs 1993–1998 (Elektra).

Often tagged the king of techno—as well as the first face of techno—Moby is notable among the hordes of anonymous DJs merely because he has stepped out from behind his turntable to seek the attention typically awarded only to rock stars. Yet his music—a symphonic combination of disco beats, punk-rock speed, and anthemic lyrics—withstands the focus. Conveniently, Richard Melville Hall's nickname, given to him as a child (in reference to his great-great-great-uncle Herman Melville's Moby Dick), fits perfectly with the pseudonyms of other techno artists like Aphex Twin, the Orb, and the Prodigy. But Moby's devout spirituality, veganism, and abstinence from alcohol and drugs are a departure from the typically bacchanalian rave scene.

Moby grew up in Danien, Connecticut, where, while in high school, he formed his first band, the Vatican Commandos, a hardcore punk outfit for which he played guitar. After dropping out of college (where he studied religion and phiosophy), he moved to New York and started hanging out in dance clubs and DJing. By 1990, he had released some singles and EPs for the underground dance label Instinct, these included "Go," which set the Twin Peaks TV show theme to a frantic dance beat and went to #10 in the U.K. In 1991 this led to some remix projects (Michael Jackson, Depeche Mode, Pet Shop Boys, Brian Eno, and the B-52's) and a record deal with Elektra.

Moby

With the release of 1995's Everything Is Wrong, Moby stretched the techno sound; the album contains the expected high-BPM tracks yet also features a bluesy punk song ("What Love") and the metallish "All That I Need." For its release party, Moby actually performed some of the songs on acoustic guitar.

That affinity for guitar was prophetic; Moby's 1996 follow-up Animal Rights revealed his passion for punk and hardcore—he even did a cover of Mission of Burma's "That's When I Reach for My Revolver." The album drew mixed reviews, however, and many dance-music fans felt abandoned by one of their gurus. Meanwhile, Moby continued to work on film scores, and he released a compilation of his movie tunes entitled I Like to Score.

With 1999's Play (#45, 2000), a party-pleaser that also ingeniously pushed musical boundaries with its combinations of electronica and old blues and gospel recordings, Moby managed to capture both critical acclaim (two Grammy nominations and top honors in the 1999 Village Voice critics poll) and legions of new fans (the album went double platinum in 2000 and sold more than 3 million copies worldwide). Suddenly, Moby's music was heard in countless movie trailers, TV shows, and commercials, while the man himself became an unlikely poster boy for Calvin Klein. His former label, Elektra, tried to cash in on Moby's new fame with the compilation Mobysongs 1993–1998, a survey of his earlier work. "South Side" (#14, 2001) featured Gwen Stefani.

Moby Grape

Formed 1966, San Francisco, CA

Skip Spence (b. Alexander Spence, Apr. 18, 1946, Windsor, Can.; d. Apr. 16, 1999, Santa Cruz, CA), gtr.; Peter Lewis (b. July 15, 1945, Los Angeles, CA), gtr.; Jerry Miller (b. July 10, 1943, Tacoma, WA), gtr.; Bob Mosley (b. Dec. 4, 1942, Paradise Valley, CA), bass; Don Stevenson (b. Oct. 15, 1942, Seattle, WA), drums.

1967—Moby Grape (Columbia) 1968—Wow (— Spence) 1969—Moby Grape '69; Truly Fine Citizen (group remains active with numerous names and personnel changes) 1971—20 Granite Creek (Reprise) 1978—Live Grape (Escape) 1983—Moby Grape '83 (San Francisco Sound) 1993—Vintage: The Best of Moby Grape (Sony/Legacy).

Skip Spence solo: 1969—Oar (Columbia).

Bob Mosley solo: 1972—Bob Mosley (Reprise) 1986—Wine & Roses EP (Niteshift) 1989—(as Mosley Grape) Live at Indigo Ranch (San Francisco Sound) 1999—Never Dreamed (Taxim, Ger.).

Jerry Miller Band: 1995—Life Is Like That (Messaround).

Peter Lewis solo: 1995—Peter Lewis (Taxim, Ger.).

Of the many groups to emerge from San Francisco in the late '60s, Moby Grape stood out as the band that most preferred structured songs to free-form jamming and the one that mixed L.A. folk rock with San Francisco's standard psychedelia. But it was never able to capitalize on its potential, partly because of hype from Columbia Records that threatened to bury its debut album. Moby Grape grew out of Northern California's Frantics, which included Jerry Miller, Bob Mosley, and Don Stevenson. Mosley met Peter Lewis (son of actress Loretta Young), who had recently abandoned Peter and the Wolves for solo work; Skip Spence was a guitarist who had played drums with the Jefferson Airplane and cowritten several songs ("My Best Friend," "Blues From an Airplane") that appeared on the Airplane's early albums.

Released in June 1967, Moby Grape became infamous at once when Columbia chose to release eight of its 13 cuts simultaneously on 45s, confusing radio DJs. Only the frenetic "Omaha" charted. The record also came with a poster of the band and a front-cover photograph that featured Stevenson with his middle finger extended (later airbrushed out). Amid the furor, the actual music was virtually ignored.

Moby Grape's second album, Wow, was similarly derailed by gimmickry; it contained a track that could be played only at 78 rpm and a "bonus" LP, Grape Jam, that included Al Kooper and Mike Bloomfield. Moby Grape then disbanded but re-formed as a quartet soon after, without Spence, and commemorated the event with Moby Grape '69. This set a pattern of breakup, re-formation, album, breakup that continues until this day. Before 1995, the members were legally forbidden from using the name Moby Grape; over the years they came up with such imaginative permutations as Maby Grope, Mosley Grape, the Melvilles (as in Herman Melville, author of Moby Dick), and the Legendary Grape. Miller, Lewis, Mosley, and Stevenson carried the project into the early '90s. Mosley, who was homeless in the middle of the decade, was occasionally gone. A 1998 tour featured Miller, Lewis, and Mosley but not Stevenson.

Absent from these reunions was Spence, a diagnosed paranoid schizophrenic who showed signs of mental illness during the Moby Grape's original run. On tour, he once broke into Stevenson's room, claiming that voices had told him the drummer was possessed by the devil; by 1968, he'd been committed to New York's Bellevue Hospital. In 1991, while a resident of a residential-care house in San Jose, California, he contributed a song, "All My Life I Love You," to a cassette by Miller, Stevenson, Mosley, Lewis, and two new musicians. This '90s version of Moby Grape opened shows for another reunited California band, the Doobie Brothers (whom Spence allegedly named). In 1993 Spence joined the other original members onstage for a Bay Area gig. That year's release of a CD retrospective, Vintage, brought this now-revered Moby Grape more attention than it ever received during its lifetime.

Spence's stark, darkly eccentric 1969 solo release, Oar, became a sought-after item in the late '90s. Shortly after the performer's death in 1999, Birdman Records issued More Oar: A Tribute to Alexander "Skip" Spence, a song-for-song cover of the album featuring acts ranging from Beck to Tom Waits to Mudhoney. The original LP was reissued with 10 bonus tracks that year as well.

Modern English

Formed 1979, Colchester, Eng.

Robbie Grey, voc., gtr.; Gary McDowell, gtr., voc.; Stephen Walker, kybds.; Mick Conroy, bass, gtr., voc.; Richard Brown, drums.

1980—Mesh and Lace (4AD) 1983—After the Snow (Sire)
1984—Ricochet Days (— Walker; — Brown; + Aaron Davidson, kybds., gtr., voc.) 1986—Stop Start 1990—Pillow Lips (TVT) 1996—Everything Is Mad (Imago).

This British postpunk pop-rock band scored a minor MTV-era hit with "I Melt With You" (#78, 1983), a mix of pounding drums, jangling guitars, and a prominent synthesizer riff, which was much more upbeat and romantic than the songs on Modern English's bleak, Joy Division-inspired debut album. The single was from After the Snow (#70, 1983), which was in fact the band's best-selling album. Modern English's only subsequent U.S. chart entry was "Hands Across the Sea" (#91, 1984) from Ricochet Days (#93, 1984). Stop Start failed to crack the Top 100, as did Pillow Lips, recorded after a four-year hiatus. The band then split apart as Grey took a three-year break. He re-formed the group in 1995 and released another album, Everything Is Mad, the following year.

Molly Hatchet

Formed 1975, Jacksonville, FL

Dave Hlubek (b. 1952, Jacksonville), gtr.; Duane Roland (b. Dec. 3, 1952, Jeffersonville, IN), gtr.; Steve Holland (b. 1954, Dothan, AL), gtr.; Danny Joe Brown (b. 1951, Jacksonville), voc.; Banner Thomas, bass; Bruce Crump, drums.

1978—Molly Hatchet (Epic) 1979—Flirtin' With Disaster
1980—Beatin' the Odds (— Brown; + Jimmy Farrar [b. La Grange, GA], voc.) 1981—Take No Prisoners (— Farrar; + Brown) 1982—(— Thomas; — Crump; + Barry Borden [b. May 12, 1954, Atlanta, GA], drums; + Riff West [b. Apr. 3, 1950, Orlando, FL], bass) 1983—No Guts . . . No Glory
1984—(— Holland; — Borden; + John Galvin, kybds.; + Crump)
The Deed Is Done 1985—Double Trouble Live 1987—(— Hlubek; + Bobby Ingram, gtr.) 1989—Lightning Strikes Twice (Capitol) (numerous personnel changes follow) 1996—(— Brown; + Phil McCormack, voc.) Devil's Canyon (CBH, Ger.) 1998—Silent Reign of Heroes (CMC); Super Hits (Epic/Legacy) 2001—Kingdom of XII (CMC).

Danny Joe Brown solo: 1981—Danny Joe Brown and the Danny Joe Brown Band (Epic).

Molly Hatchet is a guitar-heavy Southern-blues-boogie and heavy-metal band from Jacksonville, Florida, home of Lynyrd Skynyrd, Grinderswitch, Blackfoot, and 38 Special. Ronnie Van Zant, lead singer of Lynyrd Skynyrd, planned to produce Hatchet shortly after it formed, but died in a 1977 plane crash.

The group's debut LP went platinum; its second, double platinum. All the while, Molly Hatchet (its name taken from Hatchet Molly, a legendary Southern prostitute who allegedly lured men to her lair, where she castrated and mutilated them) toured as steadily as any working band, often playing more than 250 dates per year. The group also established an image as gun-toting, hard-drinking rowdies. Worn out from the road, vocalist Danny Joe Brown left in early 1980; the following year he released a solo LP. Along with new vocalist Jimmy Farrar, Molly Hatchet added a horn section (from Tower of Power) for the first time on Take No Prisoners. Farrar then left for a solo career, and Brown rejoined. The group's 1985 live album featured a version of Lynyrd Skynyrd's "Freebird," in tribute to their original mentor. Molly Hatchet continued to tour into the '90s. With the 1996 departure of Brown, a diabetic whose health had been worsening, the band pressed on, relieved of any original members and led by '80s holdovers Bobby Ingram and John Galvin.

The Moments/Ray, Goodman, and Brown

The Moments, formed mid-'60s, Hackensack, NJ

Mark Greene, lead voc.; John Morgan, voc.; Richie Horsely, voc. 1969—(— Greene; — Horsely; + William Brown [b. June 30, 1946, Perth Amboy, NJ], voc.; + Al Goodman [b. Mar. 31, 1947, Jackson, MS], voc.; — Morgan; + Johnny Moore, voc.) 1970—(— Moore; + Harry Ray [b. Dec. 15, 1946, Hackensack;

d. Oct. 1, 1992], voc.) 1984—The Moments' Greatest Hits (Chess/MCA).

As Ray, Goodman, and Brown: 1980—Ray, Goodman and Brown (Polydor); Ray, Goodman and Brown II 1992—(– Ray; + Kevin Owens, voc.).

The Moments were a trio that recorded numerous hits for New Jersey-based All Platinum Records' Stang label. The original Moments, featuring Mark Greene's falsetto, charted with "Not on the Outside" (#57 pop, #13 R&B) in 1968. After a series of personnel changes, a new group of Moments—Billy Brown, Al Goodman, and Johnny Morgan—had a million-selling single with "Love on a Two-Way Street" (#3 pop, #1 R&B) in 1970.

After Harry Ray replaced Morgan, the group maintained its popularity with black audiences. The Moments had another big hit with 1974's "Sexy Mama" (#17 pop, #3 R&B). A legal battle with All Platinum (owned by Joe and Sylvia Robinson, she of Mickey and Sylvia fame) in the mid-'70s left the group idle for two and a half years. It resurfaced in 1979 as Ray, Goodman, and Brown on the Polydor label and had hits with "Special Lady" (#5 pop, #1 R&B, 1980), "Happy Anniversary" (#16 R&B, 1980), and "Take It to the Limit" (#8 R&B, 1989). They also provided backing vocals for a pair of Millie Jackson LPs. Ray died of a stroke in 1992. Assisted by Kevin Owens, Goodman and Brown continued to perform into 2000.

Eddie Money

Born Edward Mahoney, Mar. 21, 1949, Brooklyn, NY
 1977—Eddie Money (Columbia) 1978—Life for the Taking 1980—Playing for Keeps 1982—No Control 1983—Where's the Party?
 1986—Can't Hold Back 1988—Nothing to Lose
 1989—Greatest Hits: Sound of Money 1991—Right Here
 1992—Unplug It In EP 1995—Love and Money (Wolfgang)
 1997—Shakin' With the Money Man (CMC)
 1999—Ready Eddie.

Eddie Money is a rough-voiced rock singer whose self-titled debut album contained two hit singles, "Baby, Hold On" (#11, 1978) and "Two Tickets to Paradise" (#22, 1978). The son of a New York City policeman, Edward Mahoney seemed destined to follow in his father's footsteps, and he attended the New York Police Academy. But at night he moonlighted in a rock & roll band as Eddie Money. Deciding that he loved rock more than police work, the singer quit the academy and moved to Berkeley, California, where he sang at Bay Area bars. Promoter Bill Graham signed on as Money's manager and negotiated his contract with Columbia Records.

A familiar face in the early days of MTV, Money maintained a low profile for about three years before releasing Can't Hold Back; during that time he was working to overcome a drug problem. That album became the biggest of his career, going platinum on the strength of a #4 duet with Ronnie Spector, "Take Me Home Tonight." He continued through the '80s with fairly consistent success. His other Top 30 hits include "Maybe I'm a Fool" (#22, 1979), "Think I'm in Love" (#16, 1982), "I Wanna Go Back" (#14, 1987), "Endless Nights" (#21, 1987), "Walk on Water" (#9, 1988), "The Love in Your Eyes" (#24, 1989), and "Peace in Our Time" (#11, 1990). Signed to CMC International in the late '90s, he continues to draw on the rock nostalgia circuit.

Monica

Born Monica Arnold, Oct. 24, 1980, Atlanta, GA
 1995—Miss Thang (Rowdy/Arista) 1998—The Boy Is Mine (Arista).

One of the most popular of a new breed of young vocalists to emerge from the Atlanta urban music scene in the '90s, Monica became a chart-topping R&B star before her 15th birthday. Raised in the Atlanta suburb of College Park, the singer was touring with a gospel choir, Charles Thompson and the Majestics, when she was 10, and frequently participated in local talent showcases. It was at one of these events that she was discovered by producer Dallas Austin, who headed the Atlanta-based Rowdy label. In 1995 her debut, Miss Thang (#36 pop, #7 R&B, 1995) was released, and Monica enjoyed a string of hit singles: "Don't Take It Personal (Just One of Dem Days)" (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1995), "Before You Walk Out of My Life" (#7 pop, #1 R&B, 1995), "Like This and Like That" (#4 R&B, 1995), "Why I Love You So Much" (#9 pop, #3 R&B, 1996), and the Diane Warren tune "For You I Will" (#4 pop, #2 R&B, 1997), from the Space Jam soundtrack. By the time her next album, The Boy Is Mine (#8 pop, #2 R&B, 1998), was released, Monica had graduated early from high school (with a 4.0 average) and parlayed her tall, elegant looks into a modeling contract and an acting career. The leadoff single "The Boy Is Mine" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1998), a duet with another youthful diva, Brandy, became the third-highest-selling single in the history of the Hot 100, according to Billboard. Two other hits followed: "The First Night" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1998) and "Angel of Mine" (#1 pop, 1998; #2 R&B, 1999).

Monica

The Monkees

Formed 1965, Los Angeles, CA

David Jones (b. Dec. 30, 1945, Manchester, Eng.), voc.; Michael Nesmith (b. Dec. 30, 1942, Houston, TX), gr., voc.; Peter Tork (b. Feb. 13, 1944, Washington, DC), bass, voc.; Mickey Dolenz (b. Mar. 8, 1945, Tarzana, CA), drums, voc.

1966—The Monkees (Colgems) 1967—More of the Monkees; Headquarters; Pisces, Aquarius, Capricorn and Jones Ltd. 1968—The Birds, the Bees and the Monkees; Head soundtrack 1969—(– Tork) Instant Replay (group disbands) 1976—Greatest Hits (Arista) 1986—(group re-forms: Jones; Tork; Dolenz) Then and Now . . . The Best of the Monkees 1987—Pool It! (Rhino) 1996—(+ Nesmith) Justus.

The Monkees were the first, and arguably the best, of the prefabricated '60s and '70s pop groups (others include the Partndge Family and the Archies). Manufactured by TV executives to capitalize on the success of the Beatles, they were hard to take seriously. But thanks in large part to the songwriting of Neil Diamond, Tommy Boyce and Bobby Hart, and their own Mike Nesmith, the Monkees made some exceptionally good pop records, such as "I'm a Believer," "(I'm Not Your) Steppin' Stone," and "Pleasant Valley Sunday."

Davy Jones had been a stage actor and a racehorse jockey in Britain. Mickey Dolenz, whose father had starred in several films, became a child actor at age 10 in various TV shows (including NBC's Circus Boy) under the name Mickey Braddock; Michael Nesmith and Peter Tork had worked as musicians before becoming Monkees. The group was formed for a TV comedy series dreamed up by Columbia Pictures executives, specifically inspired by the Beatles' film A Hard Day's Night. Some 500 candidates auditioned for the show in fall 1965, among those rejected were Stephen Stills and Danny Hutton (who went on to Three Dog Night). The Monkees were chosen for their personalities and photogenic capacities, not for musical ability.

In the beginning, they sang but did not play any instruments, leaving that to L.A. studio players, and on the TV show they only mimed playing as they lip synched. The show first aired in September 1966 and became an immediate success. That same year, the Monkees' debut LP went gold and yielded three Top 20 gold singles: "I'm a Believer" (by Neil Diamond), "Last Train to Clarksville," and "Steppin' Stone." The first two hit #1.

The "nonmusician" Monkees frantically learned instruments so they could tour and at least appear competent. They succeeded at this, though they certainly couldn't reproduce their records' studio sound live. With hordes of screaming teens attending every show, though, it didn't matter much anyway. This, combined with Colgems' (a Don Kirshner company) refusal to reveal the truth about the Monkees' lack of playing ability, rankled Nesmith in particular. After intergroup arguments about what to do, Nesmith told a 1967 New York press conference, "There comes a time when you have to draw the line as a man. We're being passed off as something we aren't. We all play instruments, but we didn't on any of our records. Furthermore, our record company doesn't want us to and won't let us." Look magazine ran the story, prompting a heated meeting between group members and Screen Gems, during which Nesmith nearly came to blows with an executive when told he could be legally suspended from the band. Eventually the band got its wish, and the hits kept on coming: Diamond's "Little Bit Me, Little Bit You" (#2), Gerry Goffin and Carole King's "Pleasant Valley Sunday" (#3), and John Stewart's "Daydream Believer" (#1) in 1967, "Vallen" (#3) in 1968. The LPs Headquarters, Pisces, Aquarius . . . and Birds, Bees . . . all went gold.

The Monkees: Peter Tork, Mickey Dolenz, Davy Jones, Mike Nesmith

The group staged successful worldwide tours in 1967 and 1968. In 1967 in London, Dolenz brought Jimi Hendrix to the band's attention, and the Monkees invited him to open their summer U.S. tour. The group's audience didn't know what to make of Hendrix, still unknown in America at the time, and booed him, he quit the tour after two weeks.

The TV show was canceled in late 1968, after which Tork left the band, while the other three continued for another year and a half. The Monkees' 1968 film Head, written by series producer Bob Rafelson and Jack Nicholson, initially struck most as a surrealistic extension of the television show's wacky humor. Featuring cameo appearances by Victor Mature, Annette Funicello, Sonny Liston, and Frank Zappa, and some of the group's more adventurous music, Head was a box-office flop. Decades later, however, it stands as a pioneering effort in long-form music video.

Mike Nesmith [see entry] went on to have a fairly prolific and successful career as a country-rock songwriter (he wrote "Different Drum," a 1968 hit for Linda Ronstadt's group the Stone Poneys), singer, and producer, and an early rock-video maker (Popclips); Jones and Dolenz reunited with Boyce and Hart for a 1976 LP. Tork and his band the New Monks conducted small-scale tours in the early '80s.

In 1986 the Monkees enjoyed a major revival in popularity that pulled six of their old LPs onto the chart. MTV re-broadcast the television series, beginning in March 1987. A new best-of, Then and Now, went platinum, and "That Was Then, This Is Now," one of three new tracks recorded by Jones, Dolenz, and Tork, hit #20. The trio toured that summer and came out with a new album, Pool It!, the following year. Nesmith had no interest in becoming a Monkee again, but did join the other three onstage in July 1989, one day before the band was awarded a star on Hollywood's Walk of Fame. Both Jones, who tours tirelessly on his own, and Dolenz, a successful producer of commercials, wrote books about their experiences as Monkees. Dolenz's I'm a Believer (coauthored with Mark Bego) was published in 1994.

Surprisingly, Nesmith returned for the Monkees' 1996 studio album, Justus, which coincided with Rhino Records' complete 21-volume video anthology of the television show. The group's Greatest Hits collection went gold in 2000. That year, the VH1 cable music network aired Daydream Believers, an original movie about the quartet.

Bill Monroe

Born Sep. 13, 1911, Rosine, KY; died Sep. 9, 1996, Springfield, TN

1962—Bluegrass Ramble (MCA) 1963—Bluegrass Special 1965—Bluegrass Instrumentals 1969—Voice From on High
1970—Kentucky Bluegrass 1972—Uncle Pen 1973—Bean Blossom 1984—Columbia Historic Edition (Columbia)
1986—Stars of the Bluegrass Hall of Fame (MCA) 1987—Bluegrass '87 1988—Southern Flavor 1989—Live at the Opry—Celebrating 50 Years at the Grand Ole Opry 1991—Cryin' Holy Unto the Lord; Mule Skinner Blues (RCA) 1994—The Music of Bill Monroe, 1936–1994 (MCA).

With the Monroe Brothers: 2000—The Monroe Brothers vol. 1: What Would You Give in Exchange for Your Soul? (Rounder)
2001—The Monroe Brothers vol. 2: Just a Song of Old Kentucky.

Few practitioners of American music have had as profound an impact on their particular idiom as Bill Monroe, "the Father of Bluegrass." With a career that spanned six decades, he was almost single-handedly responsible for amalgamating elements of blues, gospel, jazz, country, and Celtic folk into the string-driven hybrid we now call bluegrass, named after Monroe's seminal group, the Blue Grass Boys.

The youngest of eight children, Monroe grew up in rural Kentucky and was exposed to music at an early age. His mother sang and played several instruments, while his uncle was a talented fiddler. Since his older brothers already played fiddle and guitar, the nine-year-old Bill decided to take up the mandolin.

When he was 18, Bill moved to East Chicago, Indiana, where he began paying his musical dues. Five years later, he joined his brother Charlie in Charlotte, North Carolina, where they became popular purveyors of traditional blues and gospel. Beginning in 1936, the Monroe Brothers recorded some 60 songs for RCA showcasing their mandolin/guitar configuration and intertwining vocal harmonies. Two years later, the duo split, and Bill formed the Kentuckians, soon re-named the Blue Grass Boys in honor of Monroe's beloved "bluegrass state" of Kentucky.

In October 1939, Monroe and his group joined the Grand Ole Opry in Nashville and toured with the Opry's road show. Meanwhile, the Blue Grass Boys became a veritable training ground and revolving door for Monroe's talented musical apprentices. (Over 100 musicians have claimed membership in the ensemble over the years.) In 1946 Monroe assembled his most legendary cast of Blue Grass Boys: Lester Flatt (guitar and vocals), Earl Scruggs (banjo), Chubby Wise (fiddle), and Howard Watts (bass). It was with this stellar outfit that Monroe would forge the classic bluegrass sound: high vocal harmonies, extemporaneous mandolin licks, solidly rhythmic guitar and banjo, sinewy fiddle bursts, and jazzy bass runs. The quintet recorded such classic Monroe originals as "Kentucky Waltz" (#3 C&W, 1946), "Footprints in the Snow" (#5 C&W, 1946), "Blue Moon of Kentucky" (1947) (covered in 1955 by Elvis Presley), and "Wicked Path of Sin" (#13 C&W, 1948). When Flatt and Scruggs departed in late 1948, Monroe continued his chart success. All told, Monroe had nine Top 30 country hits between 1946 and 1959.

Monroe was elected to the Country Music Hall of Fame in 1970 but did not rest on his laurels. The 1986 album Stars of the Bluegrass Hall of Fame features Monroe with some famous protégés: Ralph Stanley, Mac Wiseman, and the Seldom Scene, among others. That same year, the U.S. Senate passed a resolution that recognized Monroe's "many contributions to American culture," and in 1988 Southern Flavor won the first ever Grammy for bluegrass music. Monroe also received the Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences' Lifetime Achievement Award in 1993. The following year he was showcased in High Lonesome, a critically acclaimed film documentary chronicling the history of bluegrass music. Though he suffered from several health problems, Monroe continued to perform into his 80s. A debilitating stroke in early 1996 led to his death on September 9 of that year. He was inducted as a pioneer into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1997. Produced by Monroe protégé Ricky Skaggs, a 2000 Monroe tribute album, Big Mon, with performances by artists including Dwight Yoakam, Dolly Parton, and John Fogerty, was nominated for a Grammy in 2001.

Montrose

Formed 1974, California

Ronnie Montrose (b. Nov. 29, 1947, CO), gr.; Sammy Hagar (b. Oct. 13, 1947, Monterey, CA), voc.; Bill Church, bass; Denny Carmassi, drums.

1973—Montrose (Warner Bros.) 1974—(- Church; + Alan Fitzgerald, bass, kybds.) Paper Money 1975—(- Hagar; + Bob James, voc.; + Jim Alcovar, kybds.) Warner Bros. Presents Montrose 1976—(+ Randy Jo Hobbs, bass) Jump On It (group disbands) 1987—(group re-forms: Montrose; + Johnny Edwards, voc.; + James Kottack, drums; + Glen Letsch, bass) Mean (Enigma) 1994—Music From Here (Fearless Urge).

Ronnie Montrose solo: 1978—Open Fire (Warner Bros.) 1983—Territory 1988—The Speed of Sound 1990—The Diva Station 1991—Mutatis Mutandis (I.R.S.) 1996—Mr. Bones (Sega) 1999—Bearings (RoMoCo).
 With Gamma: 1979—Gamma 1 (Elektra) 1980—Gamma 2 1982—Gamma 3 1992—The Best of Gamma (GNP Crescendo).

Ronnie Montrose's heavy-metal power bands seem at odds with the delicate acoustic and restrained electric guitar he lent to Van Morrison's Tupelo Honey and St. Dominic's Preview LPs. After playing in local bands in Colorado, Montrose went to California around 1970. There he played on sessions for Beaver and Krause, the Beau Brummels, Gary Wright, Kathi McDonald, and Dan Hartman, as well as for Morrison. In 1972 he played with Boz Scaggs before joining the Edgar Winter Band, and in 1973 Montrose turned down an offer to be Mott the Hoople's lead guitarist. Instead, he formed his own band.

Montrose's debut album, despite no singles, went platinum. Lead vocalist Sammy Hagar left for a solo career after Montrose's second LP; by 1978 ex-Montrose members Church, Fitzgerald, and Carmassi had joined Hagar. Carmassi later joined Heart, Coverdale/Page, and Ted Nugent. In the early '80s Montrose was leading another band, Gamma, which released three albums before breaking up. He then briefly revived Montrose, which released Mean in 1987, before reverting to solo work again. Among the lineup for Mean were future Kingdom Come drummer James Kottak and future Foreigner singer Johnny Edwards. The group dissolved again, and Ronnie Montrose continued to record solo. His recent work tends toward jazz rock. In 1996 he completed the soundtrack to the video game Mr. Bones. Bearings is an acoustic work.

Moody Blues

Formed 1964, Birmingham, Eng.

Denny Laine (b. Brian Hines, Oct. 29, 1944, Jersey, Eng.), gtr., voc.; Mike Pinder (b. Dec. 27, 1941, Birmingham), kybds., voc.; Ray Thomas (b. Dec. 29, 1941, Stourport-on-Severn, Eng.), flute, voc.; Clint Warwick (b. Clinton Eccles, June 25, 1939, Birmingham), bass; Graeme Edge (b. Mar. 30, 1941, Rochester, Eng.), drums.
 1965—Go Now—Moody Blues #1 (London) 1966—The Magnificent Moodies (Decca, U.K.) (– Warwick; – Laine; + Justin Hayward [b. David Justin Hayward, Oct. 14, 1946, Swindon, Eng.], gtr., voc.; + John Lodge [b. July 20, 1945, Birmingham], bass, voc.) Days of Future Passed (Deram) 1968—In Search of the Lost Chord 1969—On the Threshold of a Dream; To Our Children's Children's Children (Threshold) 1970—A Question of Balance; In the Beginning (Deram) 1971—Every Good Boy Deserves Favour (Threshold) 1972—Seventh Sojourn 1974—This Is the Moody Blues 1977—The Moody Blues Caught Live + 5 (London) 1978—Octave (– Pinder; + Patrick Moraz [b. June 24, 1948, Morges, Switz.], kybds.) 1981—

Long Distance Voyager (Threshold) 1983—The Present 1985—Voices in the Sky/The Best of the Moody Blues 1986—The Other Side of Life 1988—Sur la Mer (Polydor) 1989—Legend of a Band: Greatest Hits 1967–1988 (Threshold) 1991—Keys of the Kingdom (Polydor) 1992—(– Moraz) 1993—A Night at Red Rocks With the Colorado Symphony Orchestra (Polydor) 1994—Time Traveller (Polydor/Threshold) 1999—Strange Times (Universal).
 Justin Hayward solo: 1977—Songwriter (Deram) 1980—Night Flight 1985—Moving Mountains (Threshold) 1989—Classic Blue 1997—View From the Hill.
 John Lodge solo: 1977—Natural Avenue (London).
 Hayward and Lodge: 1975—Blue Jays (Threshold).
 Graeme Edge Band featuring Adrian Gurvitz: 1975—Kick Off Your Muddy Boots (Threshold) 1977—Paradise Ballroom (London).
 Ray Thomas solo: 1975—From Mighty Oaks (Threshold) 1976—Hopes Wishes and Dreams.
 Mike Pinder solo: 1976—The Promise (Threshold) 1994—Off the Shelf (One Step) 1995—A Planet With One Mind 1996—A People With One Heart 2000—An Earth With One Spirit.
 Patrick Moraz solo: 1983—Music for Piano and Drums (Editions E.G.) 1986—Flags 1995—Windows of Time (Hot Records).

Though their first hit single, "Go Now" (#10, 1965), was a classic Merseybeat ballad, the Moody Blues were best known as one of rock's first classical-pomp groups. Since then, the Moodies have made regular forays back onto the hit-singles chart and remain a perennial arena-filling live attraction. Well into their fourth decade (with the core quartet of Ray Thomas, Justin Hayward, John Lodge, and Graeme Edge intact since 1967), the Moody Blues have proved impervious to the long-prevalent critical view that their music is bombastic and pretentious. The Moody Blues were among the first groups to make extensive use of the Mellotron and the flute. Their early psychedelically-influenced works were highly evocative, and their sometimes obtuse lyrics (as in "Nights in White Satin") have been thought by fans to possess a deeper meaning.

Before becoming the Moody Blues, all of the band members had worked in various local Birmingham blues and R&B bands. Ray Thomas and Mike Pinder played with the rockabilly-inspired El Riot and the Rebels (who often opened for the Beatles in England in the mid-'60s) and later the R&B-style Krew Cats, who were popular in Hamburg, Germany. Meanwhile, Denny Laine was fronting Denny Laine and the Diplomats (which included future Electric Light Orchestra drummer Bev Bevan), and Graeme Edge had been in a series of groups, the most recent being Gerry Levene and the Avengers (which included future ELO member and Move leader Roy Wood). Clint Warwick had belonged to the Rainbows. A number of misconceptions regarding the group's name have endured, but they chose Moody Blues to have the word "Blues" in it and because Mike Pinder's favorite song was Duke Ellington's "Mood Indigo."

Initially a blues-influenced band, the Moody Blues began playing in spring 1964, by which time Laine and Pinder were writing songs while the group was performing a catalogue of Motown, James Brown, and American blues songs. The group also backed a long list of American blues musicians, including Little Walter Jacobs and Sonny Boy Williamson (Rice Miller), on their U.K. tours. The Moodies' second single, "Go Now," was a cover of a little-known R&B song. It went to #1 in the U.K. and #10 in the U.S. In 1965. Subsequent singles did not fare as well, and the group was living near poverty. Warwick tired of the situation and left; Laine followed months later. (In the '70s, Laine would join Paul McCartney's Wings.) John Lodge, who'd played with Thomas in bands before the Moody Blues, replaced Laine. When Eric Burdon, who had collected a bag of letters in response to an ad he'd placed to find musicians for a new Animals lineup, invited Thomas to pore through them for the Moody Blues, the first he chose was from Justin Hayward. Hayward had worked in a number of bands and just recorded a solo single, produced by Lonnie Donegan, that went nowhere. In September 1966 he was hired.

The Moody Blues: Justin Hayward, Ray Thomas, Patrick Moraz, Graeme Edge, John Lodge

That same year the Moody Blues signed a new recording contract, with Deram. After a few more unnoticed singles, at the behest of the label, the group was to record a rock version of Dvorak's Symphony No. 9. Were it not for their purchase of a Mellotron (a keyboard instrument that reproduces the sounds of violins, flutes, choirs, and so forth, through tapes) in 1967, the Moody Blues might never have been heard from again. But with the Mellotron (and, occasionally, actual orchestras) providing grandiose symphonic accompaniment, the Moodies' material had changed to cosmic lyrics set to heavily orchestrated pop tunes and extended suites. The week's studio time Deram granted them for the Dvorak project was used instead to record Days of Future Passed. With the Hayward-penned hit single "Tuesday Afternoon" (#24, 1968), the platinum Days of Future Passed went to #27 in the U.K. (where "Nights in White Satin" was the hit single) and #3 in the U.S., where it remained on the chart over two years.

That LP—credited as having been recorded with a group of musicians billed as the (nonexistent) London Festival Orchestra—kept returning to the album chart as late as 1973. Hayward's "Nights in White Satin" has had an interesting chart history, hitting #19 in 1967 in the U.K., then returning to the chart two more times in the next dozen years (#9 U.K., 1972; #14 U.K., 1979). Here in the U.S., "Nights" was not a hit until 1972, when it reached #2.

Though the Moody Blues concentrated on writing musically ambitious and lyrically profound songs, they were still capable of turning out crowd-pleasing singles, such as "Question" (#21, 1970), "The Story in Your Eyes" (#23, 1971), "Isn't Life Strange?" (#29, 1972), and "I'm Just a Singer (In a Rock and Roll Band)" (#12, 1973). Their albums of this period all went gold. In Search of the Lost Chord (#23, 1968), On the Threshold of a Dream (#20, 1969), To Our Children's Children's Children (#14, 1970), A Question of Balance (#3, 1970), Every Good Boy Deserves Favour (#2, 1971), and Seventh Sojourn (#1, 1972). In addition to their widely played hit singles, the Moody Blues also had an album-track catalogue of songs that received heavy exposure on FM radio: "The Story in Your Eyes," "Ride My See Saw," "Higher and Higher," and "Legend of a Mind" In 1969 the band established its own label, Threshold, as a Decca subsidiary.

After Seventh Sojourn, the Moody Blues took a lengthy sabbatical, during which time all five members pursued solo and collaborative projects. Graeme Edge recorded two albums with guitarist/keyboardist/vocalist Adrian Gurvitz; Lodge and Hayward recorded Blue Jays, a sort of Moody Blues continuation, then put out records individually; Thomas issued From Mighty Oaks; and Pinder followed with The Promise. In the late '80s Hayward's Classic Blue found him singing "MacArthur Park" and "Stairway to Heaven," among other hits, with backing by the London Symphony Orchestra. Of his solo efforts, only Blue Jays was a Top 30 album.

In 1978 the Moody Blues regrouped for the platinum Octave (#13)—which included "Steppin' in a Slide Zone" (#39, 1978)—though on a subsequent U.S. tour, Pinder was replaced by ex-Refugee, ex-Yes keyboardist Patrick Moraz. Pinder has since continued to compose and record, although his releases have been rare. With Moraz, the band recorded Voyager, which hit #1 and boasted the hit singles "Gemini Dream" (#12) and "The Voice" (#15). Critically regarded as outmoded, the Moody Blues soldiered on. Except for 1983's Top 30 single "Sitting at the Wheel," the Moody Blues were absent from the singles chart until "Your Wildest Dreams" (#9, 1986), a nostalgic song accompanied by a sentimental and at times humorously self-deprecating video. The album it came from, The Other Side of Life, went to #9, and two years later, "I Know You're Out There Somewhere" (#30, 1988), from Sur la Mer (#38, 1988), was another hit. Keys of the Kingdom (#94, 1991) proved the group's lowest-charting album of new material, yet the Moody Blues were able to mount a successful tour. Around that time, Moraz left the group. In 1992 the Moody Blues celebrated the silver anniversary of Days of Future Passed with a tour featuring a full orchestra. A show at Colorado's majestic Red Rocks amphitheater was recorded for an album and filmed for a video documentary that was later shown on PBS. In 1999 they released Strange Times, their first album of new music in eight years and first attempt at producing themselves.

The Moonglows/Harvey Fuqua

Formed 1950, Cleveland, OH

Bobby Lester (b. Jan. 13, 1930, Louisville, KY; d. Oct. 15, 1980, Louisville), voc.; Harvey Fuqua (b. July 27, 1929, Chicago, IL), voc.; Alexander "Peter" Graves (b. Apr. 17, 1939, AL), voc.; Prentiss Barnes (b. 1921, Magnolia, MS), voc.; Billy Johnson (b. Aug. 1929, d. Apr. 29, 1987), gr.
 1959—Look, It's the Moonglows (Chess) 1962—The Best of Bobby Lester and the Moonglows 1964—The Moonglows 1972—The Return of the Moonglows (RCA) 1984—Their Greatest Hits (Chess) 1991—Sincerely (Huub) 1992—On Stage 1996—Rare Acapella Recordings (Starr Digital) 2000—Harvey & the Moonglows 2000 (Resurging Artists).

Influenced by the classic black pop vocal stylings of the Ink Spots and the Mills Brothers, doo-wop quartet the Moonglows in turn influenced virtually every succeeding black male R&B vocal group.

In the early '50s Louisville, Kentucky, baritone Harvey Fuqua and tenor Bobby Lester sang together on street corners and in local talent shows before Fuqua relocated to Cleveland; he and his wife left Louisville after a fire in which the couple's two children and her mother were killed. In Ohio, Fuqua formed a jazz-oriented vocal trio, the Crazy Sounds, and enlisted Lester as a fourth member to join himself, tenor Peter Graves, and bass Prentiss Barnes. Legendary Cleveland DJ Alan Freed, host of The Moondog Rock 'n' Roll Party radio show, discovered the group, signed them first to his Champagne Records label and then to Chance and Chess Records in Chicago. The group, which Freed redubbed the Moonglows, also starred in two of Freed's seminal rock & roll movies, 1956's Rock, Rock, Rock, and 1957's Mister Rock and Roll. Written by Fuqua but partially credited to Freed, "Sincerely," the Moonglows' first Chess single, soared to #1 on the R&B chart in 1955; it reached #20 on the pop chart while a glossy version by the McGuire Sisters went to #1. In 1956 "See Saw" became a #6 R&B, #25 pop hit, the next year, "Please Send Me Someone to Love" also placed in the pop chart. By 1958, with guitarist Billy Johnson on board and the group's name now Harvey and the Moonglows, "Ten Commandments of Love" went to #22 pop.

On their recordings, Lester and Fuqua alternated singing lead. Tension between the two led to the group breaking up in 1959. Lester moved to Chicago and opened a nightclub, and Fuqua moved to Detroit, where in 1960 he launched what would be a long and successful career in artist development. He formed two Detroit labels, Harvey and Tri-Phi, and worked as producer and talent scout for Motown. (He also married Berry Gordy's sister Gwendolyn.) Among his discoveries were Marvin Gaye (whom Fuqua featured in the short-lived New Moonglows), the Spinners and the Dells. Among his Motown productions were the Supremes' "Someday We'll Be Together," Stevie Wonder's "Yester-Me, Yester-You, Yesterday," and a number of duets by Marvin Gaye and Tammi Terrell.

In the mid-'70s, after a brief Moonglows reunion and the release of a single, "Sincerely, '72," Fuqua made a foray into disco with his protégé Sylvester. In 1982 he produced Marvin Gaye's last studio album, Midnight Love.

The Moonglows were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 2000, that year also saw the release of Harvey & the Moonglows 2000 on Fuqua's own Resurging Artist Records. Since the '90s, Fuqua has been a trustee for the Rhythm & Blues Foundation, an organization that helps R&B veterans receive songwriting and performance credit, financial assistance, and medical treatment. He continues to perform.

Alanis Morissette

Born June 1, 1974, Ottawa, Can.

1991—Alanis (MCA Canada) 1992—Now Is the Time 1995—Jagged Little Pill (Maverick) 1998—Supposed Former Infatuation Junkie 1999—MTV Unplugged.

Alanis Morissette pulled off one of the most successful second acts in rock history in the summer of 1995 when the former teen dance-pop star reinvented herself as the undisputed queen of alt-rock angst with Jagged Little Pill and its vitriolic lead single, "You Oughta Know." The album went on to sell 16 million copies in the U.S., surpassing the record for a female solo artist previously set by her label boss, Madonna.

Alanis Morissette

Morissette (along with a twin brother) was born in 1974 to a couple of educators in Ottawa, Ontario. She showed an early interest in performing, she began piano lessons at age six, penned her first song at nine, and landed an acting gig on the Nickelodeon children's television series You Can't Do That on Television at age 10. In 1987 she used part of her TV earnings to finance a self-released single, "Fate Stay With Me," which in turn led to a publishing deal and her signing to MCA Canada.

Although both Alanis (1991) and Now Is the Time (1992) sold well enough to make Morissette a moderately successful pop star in Canada (where she was given a Juno Award for Most Promising Female Artist in 1992), neither album made any impact south of the border. A fortuitous move to L.A. in 1994, however, led the 20-year-old singer to Glen Ballard, a producer/songwriter who had honed his craft working under Quincy Jones and writing and producing hits for Michael Jackson ("Man in the Mirror") and Wilson Phillips. Together, Morissette and Ballard quickly hammered out the aggressive rock songs that would become Jagged Little Pill. Their demos landed Morissette a new record deal with Madonna's Warner Bros. subsidiary, Maverick Records.

Released in June 1995, Jagged Little Pill (#1) spawned a handful of Modern Rock and crossover pop hits, beginning with the bitter breakup rant, "You Oughta Know" (#13, 1995), and continuing with "Hand in My Pocket" (#15, 1995), "All I Really Want" (#65, 1995), "Ironic" (#4, 1996), and "You Learn" (#6, 1996). Pill would also earn Morissette four Grammy Awards, including Album of the Year. By the time she released 1998's decidedly lower-key, Eastern-music-inspired Supposed Former Infatuation Junkie (#1), Jagged Little Pill had sold close to 28 million copies worldwide.

Inevitably, given the runaway success of its predecessor, Supposed Former Infatuation Junkie (coproduced by Morissette and Ballard) was judged a commercial disappointment despite domestic sales of 3 million. Nevertheless, the album's "Thank U" climbed to #17, while "Uninvited," plucked from the 1998 soundtrack to the Nicolas Cage movie City of Angels, earned Morissette two more Grammys (including Best Rock Song).

In 1999 Morissette embarked on a co-headlining tour with fellow alt-rock singer/songwriter Ton Amos, and attracted some controversy by playing the role of God in the Kevin Smith comedy Dogma. Meanwhile, sales of her live MTV Unplugged set topped off at half a million, and the album peaked at #63. Morissette was scheduled to deliver a new studio album—her first self-produced effort—by the end of 2001.

Morphine

Formed 1990, Cambridge, MA

Mark Sandman (b. 1952; d. July 3, 1999, Rome, It.), bass, voc., kybds., gtr.; Dana Colley, sax, voc.; Jerome Dupree, drums.

1992—(– Dupree; + Billy Conway, drums) Good
(Accurate/Distortion) 1993—Cure for Pain (Rykodisc)
1995—Yes 1997—Like Swimming (DreamWorks); B-Sides and Otherwise (Rykodisc) 2000—The Night (DreamWorks).

Arising from the local Boston combos Treat Her Right and Three Colors, Morphine floored critics and amazed a devoted cult of fans throughout the '90s. The trio immediately distinguished itself with its cool, peculiar musical approach, which shunned guitar in favor of frontman Mark Sandman's distorted two-string slide bass and Dana Colley's ferocious, jazz-tinged sax. The bizarrely bluesy, out-of-nowhere debut, Good, made inroads on American college radio and seemed like a promising start.

Signed to the larger Rykodisc label and rounded out by new, extraordinarily skillful drummer Billy Conway, the members of Morphine became press darlings and alternative-rock notables with 1993's Cure for Pain, which featured such memorably lusty tracks as "Thursday" and "Candy." The combination of Sandman's detached, ironic mutter and bleary-eyed, darkly sexual imagery had grown just as compelling as his self-described, minimalist "low-rock." The album sold over 300,000 copies on the strength of nonstop touring and the appearance of several of its tunes in the hit independent film Spanking the Monkey. Morphine also attracted a substantial European following; the three-piece played the Montreaux Jazz Festival in 1995. Yes (#101, 1995) and its single "Honey White" repeated the successful formula.

Making the leap to the major label DreamWorks but keeping its idiosyncratic tendencies intact, the band unveiled Like Swimming (#67, 1997). Morphine came to a sudden and unfortunate end, however, when Sandman died of a heart attack during a 1999 concert in Italy. Colley and Conway recruited many of the departed bassist's friends (including original Morphine drummer Jerome Dupree) and toured as the nine-piece Orchestra Morphine in tribute to their former cohort. The Night, recorded prior to Sandman's passing, finds guitar, keyboards, and backing vocals creeping into the group's formerly bare-bones rumble.

Van Morrison

Born George Ivan Morrison, Aug. 31, 1945, Belfast, N. Ire.
1965—Them (Parrot); Them Again 1967—Blowin' Your Mind (Bang) 1968—Astral Weeks (Warner Bros.) 1970—Moondance; His Band and the Street Choir 1971—Tupelo Honey 1972—St. Dominic's Preview 1973—Hard Nose the Highway 1974—It's Too Late to Stop Now; Veedan Fleece; T.B. Sheets (Bang) 1977—This Is Where I Came In; A Period of Transition (Warner Bros.) 1978—Wavelength 1979—Into the Music 1980—Common One 1982—Beautiful Vision 1983—Inarticulate Speech of the Heart 1985—A Sense of Wonder (Mercury); Live at the Grand Opera House, Belfast 1986—No Guru, No Method, No Teacher 1987—Poetic Champions Compose 1989—Avalon Sunset 1990—Enlightenment; The Best of Van Morrison (Polydor) 1991—Bang Masters (Epic); Hymns to the Silence (Polydor) 1993—The Best of Van Morrison, vol. 2; Too Long in Exile 1994—A Night in San Francisco 1995—Days Like This 1996—How Long Has This Been Going On (Verve); Songs of Mose Allison: Tell Me Something (PolyGram) 1997—The Healing Game (Polydor) 1998—The Philosopher's Stone 1999—Back on Top (Pointblank/Virgin) 2000—The Skiffle Sessions: Live in Belfast, 1998.

With the Chieftains: 1988—Irish Heartbeat (Mercury).

With Linda Gail Lewis: 2000—You Win Again (Pointblank/Virgin).

Part Celtic bard, part soulster, and part ecstatically scating mystical visionary, Van Morrison is a painfully introverted figure who rarely gives interviews and is often at a loss to explain his own lyrics. In the studio, he can sing like a soul man getting the spirit; onstage, however, his brilliance can be undercut by whim or temper, and he has upon occasion alienated audiences by rushing through songs and remaining aloof between them. Nonetheless, his influence among rock singer/songwriters is unrivaled by any living artist: outside of that other prickly legend, Bob Dylan, Echoes of Morrison's rugged literateness and his gruff, feverishly emotive vocal style can be heard in latter-day icons ranging from Bruce Springsteen to Elvis Costello, while the Irish artist's own restless muse has kept him prolific and engaging through the '90s.

Morrison's mother sang at social gatherings, and his father collected classic blues and jazz records. He learned guitar, saxophone, and harmonica while in school, and was playing with Belfast blues, jazz, and rock bands by his mid-teens. At 15, he quit school, joined an R&B band called the Monarchs, and toured Europe with them as saxophonist. While in Germany, a film director offered Morrison a role in a movie as a jazz saxophonist. The project was dropped, and Morrison returned to Belfast and opened an R&B club in the Maritime Hotel. He recruited some friends to form Them, which became an immediate local sensation as the club's house band.

Them recorded two singles in late 1964: "Don't Start Crying Now" (a local hit) and Big Joe Williams' "Baby Please Don't Go" (which made the British Top 10 in early 1965). After the latter's success, the band moved to London and hooked up with producer Bert Berns. They recorded Berns' "Here Comes the Night," which went to #2 in the UK and made the Top 30 in the U.S. Them's next two singles, "Gloria" (by Morrison) and "Mystic Eyes," were minor U.S. hits; "Gloria" was later covered by the Shadows of Knight (who took the song to #10 in 1966) and Patti Smith. Them's lineup underwent constant changes, and Berns brought in sessionmen, including Jimmy Page, for their albums. After a mostly unsuccessful U.S. tour in 1966, the group returned to England. Morrison disbanded Them, which soon re-formed with Ken McDowell as vocalist.

Morrison, meanwhile, grew frustrated by music-business manipulations (Them had wrongly been given a rough-kids image by their company), stopped performing, and moved back to Belfast. Meanwhile, Bert Berns (a.k.a. B. Russell) formed Bang Records in New York, and sent Morrison a plane ticket and an invitation to record four singles for his new label. One of them, "Brown Eyed Girl," reached #10 in the U.S. in 1967. Morrison toured America but was again disgruntled when Berns released the other singles—which Morrison considered demos—as Blown Your Mind.

Van Morrison

After Berns died of a sudden heart attack in December 1967, Morrison undertook an East Coast tour and wrote material for his next album. Warner Bros. president Joe Smith signed him in early 1968, and Morrison went into a New York studio that summer with numerous jazz musicians. In 48 hours he cut one of rock's least classifiable, most enduring albums, Astral Weeks, the first manifestation of Morrison's Irish-romantic mysticism. Though most of its cuts were meandering and impressionistic, with folk guitars over jazzy rhythms topped by Morrison's soul-styled vocals, critics raved; the album is still considered one of Morrison's richest, most powerful efforts.

His next album, Moodance (#29, 1970), traded the jazz-and-strings sound of Astral Weeks for a horn-section R&B bounce. The title tune and "Come Running" were chart singles, the latter in 1970 (#39), the former not until late 1977. The fittingly titled "Into the Mystic" became a minor hit for Johnny Rivers, while "Caravan" became an FM radio favorite. It was the first Morrison album to chart in the Top 100, and it eventually went platinum. His Band and the Street Choir (#32, 1970) yielded two uptempo R&B-flavored Top 40 hits in "Domino" (#9, 1970) and "Blue Money" (#23, 1971). By this time, Morrison had moved to Mann County, California, and married a woman who called herself Janet Planet.

Tupelo Honey (#27, 1971) reflected his new domestic contentment. It yielded a hit in "Wild Night" (#28) and went gold, thanks to progressive FM radio, which latched on to the lyrical title tune (featuring Modern Jazz Quartet drummer Connie Kay). St. Dominic's Preview (#15, 1972) included the minor hit single "Jackie Wilson Said" (#61) and contained two extended journeys into the mystic: "Listen to the Lion" and "Almost Independence Day." In 1972 Morrison guested on the John Lee Hooker-Charlie Musselwhite album Never Get Out of These Blues Alive.

By the time of Hard Nose the Highway (#27, 1973), Morrison had formed the 11-piece Caledonia Soul Orchestra, which was featured on the live LP It's Too Late to Stop Now. In 1973, though, Morrison suddenly divorced Janet Planet, disbanded the Caledonia Soul Orchestra, and returned to Belfast for the first time since 1966. There he began writing material for Veedon Fleece (#53, 1974).

Morrison took three years to produce a followup. He reportedly began sessions for an album four different times (one with jazz-funk band the Crusaders), but completed none. By 1976, he was living in California again. Late that year he appeared at the Band's farewell concert and in Martin Scorsese's film of the event, The Last Waltz. Finally, in 1977 came A Period of Transition (#43, 1977), which featured short jazz and R&B-oriented tunes and backup by pianist Mac "Dr. John" Rebennack. For Wavelength (#28, 1978), Morrison took on concert promoter Bill Graham as manager (they split in 1981); the album sold fairly well. Still, Morrison's chronic stage fright continued to plague him. At a 1979 show at New York's Palladium, he stormed off the stage midset without a word and didn't return.

The more serene Into the Music (#43, 1979) implied that Morrison had become a born-again Christian, and Common One (#73, 1980) delved more into extended mysticism. Beautiful Vision (#44, 1982) was more varied and concise, and it generated, as usual, sizable critical acclaim and respectable sales. It also included "Cleaning Windows," which contained references to such Morrison inspirations as Lead Belly, bluesmen Blind Lemon Jefferson, Sonny Terry, Brownie McGhee, and Muddy Waters, as well as Beat author Jack Kerouac and country singer Jimmie Rodgers. Inarticulate Speech of the Heart (#116, 1983) offered "special thanks" to L. Ron Hubbard, founder of the Church of Scientology.

With A Sense of Wonder (#61, 1985), Morrison continued on his spiritual journey and drew further on literary influences, incorporating the work of a favorite poet, William Blake, on the track "Let the Slave." Meanwhile, Morrison rediscovered his ethnic roots and wanderlust, leaving his California home to travel nomadlike through Dublin, Belfast, and London. On No Guru, No Method, No Teacher (#70, 1986), the singer shared this sense of rebirth, while the album's title sneered at critics who had tried to pigeonhole his religious beliefs.

Morrison delved deeper into Celtic imagery with Poetic Champions Compose (#90, 1987) and collaborated with Ireland's best-loved traditional band, the Chieftains, on Irish Heartbeat (#102, 1988). Avalon Sunset (#91, 1989) contained "Whenever God Shines His Light on Me," a duet with Cliff Richard that became Morrison's first British Top 20 single since his days with Them, and "Have I Told You Lately That I Love You," which in 1993 became a #5 U.S. hit for Rod Stewart.

Morrison entered the '90s with the nostalgia-drenched Enlightenment (#62, 1990), on which he recalled first becoming acquainted with rock & roll and continued to explore the links between spiritual and romantic love. These themes carried over onto the similarly-acclaimed double album Hymns to the Silence (#99, 1991), while on Too Long in Exile (#29, 1993), the singer brought things full circle, covering songs by some of his heroes—including Ray Charles and Sonny Boy Williamson—and duetting with John Lee Hooker on Them's "Gloria," with enough ardor to dispel any suspicions that age had mellowed him. Hooker, in fact, turned up as a surprise guest at some of Morrison's concerts in the early '90s, and Morrison would produce two of Hooker's albums in the late '90s. Morrison's spirited 1993 performances in San Francisco, documented on A Night in San Francisco (recorded December 18), were indicative of his renewed vigor onstage. That same year, Morrison was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. A couple of years later, How Long Has This Been Going On (1996), a live jazz show recorded with Georgie Fame and Friends at Ronnie Scott's Club in London in 1995 also attested to his renewed energy. Nevertheless, Days Like This (#33, 1995) and The Healing Game (#32, 1997) were railed by critics as predictable, lackluster performances, especially Morrison's vocals; the former, however, included two duets with his daughter, Shana. Morrison took on an elder-statesman role when the song "Days Like This" was adopted as a peace anthem in Northern Ireland, and he received an Order of the British Empire title in 1996. A prolific artist, he continued his extraordinary output of an album nearly every year, and released The Philosopher's Stone, a two-disc set of previously unreleased material, in 1998. Back on Top, an album of new material, followed the next year. In 2000 Morrison was inspired by working with other musicians, and he released a concert recording of skiffle tunes performed with Lonnie Donegan, The Skiffle Sessions: Live in Belfast, 1998, and You Win Again, an album of country, rockabilly, and blues covers performed with singer/pianist Linda Gail Lewis, the sister of Jerry Lee Lewis.

Morrissey: See the Smiths

The Motels

Formed 1971, Berkeley, CA
 Martha Davis (b. Jan. 15, 1951, Berkeley), voc.; Dean Chamberlain, gtr.; Lisa Brennis, bass; Chuck Wada, gtr.
 1975—(+ Robert Nueman, drums; - Brennis; + Richard D'Andrea, bass) 1977—(- Wada; - Chamberlain; - D'Andrea; + Jeff Jourard, gtr.; - Neuman; + Michael Goodroe, bass; + Marty Jourard, sax, kybds.; + Brian Glascock, drums)
 1979—Motels (Capitol) 1980—(- J. Jourard; + Tim McGovern, gtr.) Careful 1981—(- McGovern; + Guy Perry, gtr.) 1982—All Four One 1983—(+ Scott Thurston, gtr., kybds.) Little Robbers 1985—Shock 1990—No Vacancy: The Best of the Motels 2001—Anthologyland (Oglio).
 Martha Davis solo: 1987—Policy (Capitol).

The Motels were one of L.A.'s original new-wave bands and one of its most respected, though it took them a long time to capitalize commercially on either point. After a number of personnel shake-ups and 10 years into their existence, the Motels released their first hit single, "Only the Lonely," and their first hit album, All Four One.

Motels singer/songwriter Martha Davis started her first band in 1972. Having married at age 15, she was by then the mother of two daughters. Over four years, the group changed its name from the Warfield Foxes to the Motels, changed its image from a joke to a serious venture, and moved from Berkeley to L.A. Early members Dean Chamberlain (who went on to Code Blue) and Richard D'Andrea (who later played with ex-Blondie Gary Valentine's the Know) left the group. The next version, with Marty Jourard, Michael Goodroe, Brian Glascock (brother of late Jethro Tull bassist John Glascock), and Jourard's brother Jeff, signed to Capitol and recorded The Motels. Tim McGovern, once of L.A. power-poppers the Pop, replaced Jourard for Careful and a stillborn LP called Apocalypse. Capitol rejected the latter. McGovern left the Motels (to reappear with the Burning Sensations); the band rerecorded Apocalypse's songs with studio musicians.

The gambit paid off with "Only the Lonely" (#9, 1982). The band's next album, the gold Little Robbers, contained another #9 pop hit. "Suddenly Last Summer" Shock, another Top 40 album, included "Shame" (#21, 1985). Davis then discovered she had cancer, which was instrumental in splitting up the Motels. Having recovered successfully, she released a 1987 solo album containing the single "Don't Tell Me the Time." She continues to perform live and recently worked on a children's music project. The two-disc Anthologyland contains an odd assortment of Motels demos, alternate versions, and live tracks.

Mother Love Bone: See Pearl Jam

Mothers of Invention: See Frank Zappa

Mötley Crüe

Formed 1981, Los Angeles, CA

Tommy Lee (b. Thomas Lee Bass, Oct. 3, 1962, Athens, Gr.), drums; Mick Mars (b. Bob Deal, Apr. 3, 1956, Huntington, IN), gr., voc.; Vince Neil (b. Vince Neil Wharton, ca. 1961, Hollywood, CA), voc.; Nikki Sixx (b. Frank Carlton Serafino Ferranno, Dec. 11, 1958, San Jose, CA), bass.
 1982—Too Fast for Love (Elektra) 1983—Shout at the Devil 1985—Theatre of Pain 1987—Girls, Girls, Girls 1989—Dr. Feelgood 1991—Decade of Decadence—'81-'91 1992—(– Vince Neil; + John Corabi [b. Apr. 26, 1959, Philadelphia, PA], voc.) 1994—Mötley Crüe (Elektra/Asylum) 1996—(– Corabi; + Neil, voc.) 1997—Generation Swine 1998—Greatest Hits (Motley Records/Beyond) 1999—Supersonic and Demonic Relics (Beyond); Live Entertainment or Death

2000—(– Lee; + Randy Castillo [b. Dec. 18, 1961, Albuquerque, NM], drums) New Tattoo.

Vince Neil solo: 1993—Exposed (Elektra).

Union (John Corabi): 1998—Union (Mayhem) 2000—The Blue Room (Spitfire).

Methods of Mayhem (Tommy Lee): 1999—Methods of Mayhem (MCA).

The poster boys for '80s hair-metal, Mötley Crüe parlayed an image of fast-living, hard-driving postadolescent reprobates and fast, pummeling songs into platinum-level heavy-metal superstardom, topping the charts with Dr. Feelgood (#1, 1989) and coming close with Theatre of Pain (#6, 1985), Girls, Girls, Girls (#2, 1987), and a greatest-hits collection, Decade of Decadence—'81-'91 (#2, 1991).

Nikki Sixx was a member of the locally successful L.A. metal band London when he decided to form his own band. Tommy Lee came aboard as drummer, and they decided to call themselves Christmas. Guitarrist Mick Mars was discovered through a classified ad reading "LOUD RUDE AGGRESSIVE GUITARIST AVAILABLE." That he used the same hair dye as Sixx cemented the relationship. Vocalist Vince Neil was plucked from a Cheap Trick cover band. Mars came up with the new, strangely unlabeled name. Their eponymous, independently released debut was picked up by Elektra and retitled Too Fast for Love (#77, 1983).

Shout at the Devil (#17, 1983), with its canny hints of Satanism, followed, but the band did not catch on in a big way until Theatre of Pain (#6, 1985). Fueled by a cover of Brownsville Station's anthemic "Smokin' in the Boys Room" (#16, 1985) and "Home Sweet Home" (#89, 1985), considered to be the first "power ballad" played on MTV, the album sold over 2 million copies.

For all the album sales, Crüe was known as a live band playing a rock version of a Vegas review, a leering embrace of all things hedonistic, with elaborate sets and lighting, revolving drum sets, pyrotechnics, and dancing girls. Still, Girls, Girls, Girls (#2, 1987) and Dr. Feelgood (#1, 1989) continued the band's streak of platinum albums, selling 2 million and 4 million copies respectively. Decade of Decadence—'81-'91 (#2, 1991) included new material, such as their misguided cover of the Sex Pistols' "Anarchy in the U.K."

Mötley Crüe lived the rock & roll lifestyle to the fullest, with celebrity marriages—Tommy Lee to Dynasty and Melrose Place star Heather Locklear from 1986 to 1994, then to Baywatch bombshell Pamela Anderson in 1995 (they divorced in 1998 and reunited in 1999 only to split again), and Nikki Sixx to former Prince protégée Vanity in 1987—substance abuse, and scrapes with the law. Sixx spent over a year addicted to heroin. In 1986 Neil was convicted of vehicular manslaughter, the result of a 1984 drunken accident that killed Hanoi Rocks drummer Nicholas Dingley and seriously injured two others. He served 20 days in jail, performed 200 hours of community service, and was assessed $2.6 million in damages. (Tragedy would touch Neil again in 1994 when his four-year-old daughter Skylar died of a rare childhood cancer.)

In 1992 Neil was replaced by John Corabi; he filed a

$5 million wrongful termination suit, then formed the Vince Neil Band, which included ex-Billy Idol sidekick guitarist Steve Stevens, bassist Robbie Crane, drummer Vik Foxx, and guitarist Dave Marshall, and released Exposed (#13, 1993). Meanwhile, Mötley Crüe's first album with Corabi at the mike (#7, 1994) was also the band's first one to be certified only gold. Corabi was fired in 1996 (and later joined Union with ex-Kiss guitarist Bruce Kulick) so that Neil could rejoin the Crüe fold. The reunion album, Generation Swine (#4, 1997), attempted to explore grunge and industrial sounds, but despite the band covering itself ("Shout at the Devil '97"), its constituency didn't bite, and the record quickly fell off the chart. Greatest Hits (#25, 1998) and Live Entertainment or Death (#133, 1999) continued Mötley Crüe's commercial skid. Shortly after completing the subsequent tour, drummer Lee spent four months in jail for assaulting his then-wife, Pamela. Upon being released, Lee left the band and formed Methods of Mayhem, in which he played guitar and sang. He was replaced in Mötley Crüe by former Ozzy Osbourne drummer Randy Castillo. The new lineup returned to its original hard-rock formula on New Tattoo (#41, 2000), but the album was received tepidly.

Motörhead

Formed 1975, England

Lemmy Kilmister (b. Ian Kilmister, Dec. 24, 1945, Stoke-on-Trent, Eng.), bass, voc.; Eddie Clark, gtr.; Phil "Philthy Animal" Taylor (b. Sep. 21, 1954, Chesterfield, Eng.), drums. 1977—Motörhead (Chiswick, U.K.) 1979—Overkill (Bronze, U.K.); Bomber 1980—Ace of Spades (Mercury) 1981—No Sleep Till Hammersmith 1982—Iron Fist (- Clark; + Brian Robertson [b. Glasgow, Scot.], gtr.) 1983—Another Perfect Day (- Robertson; - Taylor; + Phil Campbell [b. May 7, 1961, Pontypridd, Wales], gtr.; + "Wurzel" [b. Oct. 23, 1949, Cheltenham, Eng.], gtr.; + Pete Gill, drums) 1984—No Remorse (Bronze) 1986—Orgasmatron (GWR/Profile) 1987—Rock 'n' Roll 1988—No Sleep at All (Enigma) 1990—The Birthday Party (GWR) 1991—1916 (WTG) (- Gill; + Taylor, drums; - Taylor; + Mikkey Dee [b. Oct. 31, 1963, Olundby, Swed.], drums) 1993—March or Die 1994—Bastards (Motörhead/ZYX) 1995—(+ Campbell) Sacrifice (CMC International) (- Wurzel) 1996—Overnight Sensation 1998—Snake Bite Love 1999—Everything Louder Than Everyone Else 2000—We Are Motörhead; The Best of Motörhead.

Known to produce no less than 126 decibels in its live shows, England's Motörhead is easily one of the world's loudest rock & roll bands. The heavy-metal group's raunchy leather-biker image underlined its fascination with violence, as did such album titles as Overkill, Bomber, and Iron Fist. Motörhead's hard-and-fast sound prefigured the thrash and speed-metal genres of the late '80s and '90s, and the group was cited as an influence by Guns n' Roses (who had Motörhead open on their 1992 U.S. tour) and Metallica.

Bassist/vocalist Lemmy Kilmister, formerly with progressive British rockers Hawkwind [see entry], put together Motörhead in 1975, and the group released its self-titled debut album in 1977, in the middle of the punk boom. After establishing itself on the British chart with two subsequent albums, the band recorded Ace of Spades, its official American debut. Motörhead has yet to make a significant dent in the American chart, but it is a huge concert draw in the U.K. and has steadily built a cult following in the U.S.

With the balladic title track of 1916, Motörhead began breaking out of its trademark bludgeoning sound: the trend continued on Bastards (Kilmister originally intended to call the group Bastard) with "Lost in the Ozone" and "Don't Let Daddy Kiss Me," a song about incest from a little girl's point of view.

Onetime Motörhead guitarist "Fast" Eddie Clarke went on to form Fastway with ex-Humble Pie Jerry Shirley. He was briefly replaced in Motörhead by ex-Thin Lizzy Brian Robertson, before Wurzel and Phil Campbell (who has also vanously gone by the names Wizzo, Zoom, and Wizzo von Wizzo) settled the lineup through the '80s. Wurzel left after the recording of Sacrifice, and the band's lineup settled down to a three-piece again.

The Motors

Formed 1977, England

Nick Garvey, voc., gtr., bass; Andy McMaster, voc., kybds., bass; Bram Tchaikovsky (b. Peter Bramall), gtr., voc.; Ricky Slaughter, drums, voc.

1977—The Motors (Virgin) 1978—Approved by the Motors (- Tchaikovsky; - Slaughter) 1980—Tenement Steps.

The Motors' two songwriters, Nick Garvey and Andy McMaster, met in Ducks Deluxe, a British pub-rock band. Garvey joined Ducks in its early stages in December 1972, after working as road manager for the Flamin' Groovies. The Scottish McMaster had been involved in rock since the mid-'60s, playing for a while with the Stoics, which included Frankie Miller, and he'd also written a successful record of children's songs. He joined Ducks just before its second and final record, Taxi to the Terminal Zone. After the group broke up, Garvey switched from bass to guitar and formed the Snakes, while McMaster worked for a music publisher.

In early 1977 the two began collaborating on songs, soon recruiting ex-Snakes drummer Ricky Slaughter and guitarist Bram Tchaikovsky. Their debut, highlighted by Garvey and McMaster's dual lead vocals, boasted the British hit single "Dancing the Night Away." After the British success of "Airport" (from Approved by the Motors), Garvey and McMaster decided to fire the rest of the band and go on as a studio two-some with revolving musicians. Tchaikovsky went on to record four solo albums; Garvey produced his debut, 1979's Strange Man, Changed Man, which contained the Top 40 hit "Girl of My Dreams." The two Motors decided to forgo touring, and they released Tenement Steps (produced by Jimmy Iovine) in 1980. The LP featured the minor hit "Love and Loneliness," with Rockpile's Terry Williams on drums and ex-Man Martin Ace on bass.

Mott the Hoople

Formed 1968, Hereford, Eng.

Stan Tippens (b. Eng.), lead voc.; Mick Ralphs (b. Mar. 31, 1948, Hereford), gtr., voc.; Overend Pete Watts (b. May 13, 1947, Birmingham, Eng.), bass; Dale "Buffin" Griffin (b. Oct. 24, 1948, Ross-on-Wye, Eng.), drums; Verden Allen (b. May 26, 1944, Hereford), organ.

1969—(– Tippens; + Ian Hunter [b. June 3, 1946, Shrewsbury, Eng.], piano, gtr., lead voc.) Mott the Hoople (Atlantic) 1970—Mad Shadows 1971—Wildlife 1972—Brain Capers; Rock 'n' Roll Queen; All the Young Dudes (Columbia) 1973—(– Allen) Mott (– Ralphs; + Morgan Fisher, kybds.; + Ariel Bender, a.k.a. Luther James Grosvenor [b. Dec. 23, 1949, Evesham, Eng.], gtr.) 1974—The Hoople; Mott the Hoople Live (– Bender; + Mick Ronson [b. ca. 1946, Hull, Eng.; d. Apr. 30, 1993, London, Eng.], gtr.; – Hunter; – Ronson) 1975—(name changed to Mott; + Ray Major, gtr.; + Nigel Benjamin, voc.) Drive On 1976—Shouting and Pointing; Greatest Hits 1993—The Ballad of Mott: A Retrospective 1994—Backsliding Fearlessly: The Early Years (Rhino). British Lions (Watts; Griffin; Fisher; Major; + John Fiddler, voc.): 1978—British Lions (RSO).

Mott the Hoople started out as an uneven, hard-rock Dylanesque curiosity but ended as a glitter-age group. Mott also gave rise to the solo career of songwriter Ian Hunter [see entry]. The group began in the late '60s, when Mick Ralphs, Verden Allen, Overend Pete Watts, and Dale Griffin began playing around Hereford, England, in a group called Silence. They got a record contract in early 1969 and went to London with vocalist Stan Tippens to record under producer Guy Stevens, who renamed the band Mott the Hoople after a 1967 novel by Willard Manus. Tippens was replaced by Ian Hunter in July (Tippens subsequently became the band's road manager and later worked for the Pretenders.)

The group recorded its eponymous debut album in August 1969, and it garnered much curious attention for Hunter's Dylan-like rasp and the odd choice of covers, such as Sonny Bono's "Laugh at Me." Mad Shadows was moodier and poorly received, and the country-oriented Wildlife did not fare well either.

Yet even though its records didn't sell, Mott became a big live attraction in England. In July 1971, the group caused a mini-not at London's Albert Hall, which factored into the hall management's decision to ban rock completely. After the release of Brain Capers, the group was ready to disband, but then David Bowie stepped in to give it a focused glam-rock image and a breakthrough single.

He first offered "Sufragette City," but the band wanted "Drive In Saturday," which Bowie refused to give up. Luckily, Mott accepted his offer of a third song, "All the Young Dudes." Bowie produced the LP of the same name, and Mott had a top British single with "Dudes." The song became a signature piece for glitter rock and a gay anthem—something it took the all-straight band a while to get used to. "All the Young Dudes" went to #37 in the U.S.

The group's followup album, 1973's Mott, was its masterpiece—a self-produced effort that featured the British hit singles "Honoloochie Boogie" and "All the Way From Memphis." It was also a concept album about the fight for, and mistrust of, success, highlighted by the autobiographical "Ballad of Mott the Hoople." Around this time, Hunter's Diary of a Rock Star was published in England.

Despite its success, the band began to fall apart. Allen left because the group rarely recorded his songs. Ralphs quit because he was upset by Allen's leaving and irked that one of his songs for Mott, "Can't Get Enough," was beyond the singing range of either himself or Hunter. (The song was a Top 5 hit the following year for Ralphs' next band, Bad Company [see entry].) Hunter and company filled the guitar gap with Luther Grosvenor—formerly with Spooky Tooth and Stealer's Wheel—who changed his name to Ariel Bender upon joining. The Live album was taken from shows in London in November 1973 and in New York in May 1974.

The band had just begun to sell well in the States when another falling-out occurred. Late in 1974, Mick Ronson [see entry] replaced Bender. By the end of the year, Hunter and Ronson had split together, and Mott the Hoople was no more. Hunter had a solo deal with Columbia, but his first tour, billed as the Hunter-Ronson Band, was a disaster, with a disillusioned band playing to half-filled houses. Meanwhile, Watts, Griffin, and Fisher, joined by Ray Major and Nigel Benjamin, carried on as Mott. They released two undistinguished albums, after which Benjamin left, and the band fell apart again. Undaunted, the remaining members added a new lead singer, ex-Medicine Head John Fiddler, and continued for two years under the name British Lions. After Allen had left Mott back in 1973, he formed Cheeks with future Pretenders James Honeyman-Scott and Martin Chambers. The group toured through 1976 but never recorded. Ronson died of cancer.

Bob Mould: See Hüsker Dü

Mountain

Formed 1969, New York, NY

Felix Pappalardi (b. 1939, Bronx, NY; d. Apr. 17, 1983, New York), bass, voc.; Leslie West (b. Leslie Weinstein, Oct. 22, 1945, Queens, NY), gtr., voc.; N.D. Smart, drums.

1969—Leslie West—Mountain (Leslie West solo) (Windfall) 1970—(– Smart; + Corky Laing [b. Apr. 26, 1948, Montreal, Can.], drums; + Steve Knight, organ) Mountain Climbing 1971—Nantucket Sleighride; Flowers of Evil 1972—Mountain Live (The Road Goes On Forever) (group disbands) 1973—Best of (Columbia) 1974—(group re-forms: West; Pappalardi; + Alan Schwartzberg, drums; + Bob Mann, kybds.) Twin Peaks (– Schwartzberg; – Mann; + Laing) Avalanche (group disbands)

1985—(group re-forms: West, Laing, + Mark Clarke, bass)
 1986—Go for Your Life (Scotti Bros.) 1995—Over the Top (Legacy).
 Leslie West solo: 1975—The Great Fatsby (Phantom) 1994—
Dodgin' the Dirt (Blues Bureau International).

Cream pioneered the power-trio format, Mountain capitalized on it. The trio was formed in 1969 by Cream's producer, Felix Pappalardi, and 250-pound ex-Vagrant guitarist Leslie West.

The Vagrants had been Long Island legends but never could expand their appeal as had local predecessors the Young Rascals. Although the release of the Vagrants' single "Respect" preceded Aretha Franklin's, the group was buried when Franklin's rendition came out soon after. Atco turned to Pappalardi to record the group's fourth single, but it was another flop. When the fifth attempt proved no better, the band broke up.

West set to recording a solo album, produced by Pappalardi. The result, Leslie West—Mountain, inspired the two to form Mountain, with N.D. Smart held over from the Mountain LP, and the addition of Steve Knight. Mountain proved akin to a cruder, louder version of Cream. Propelled by the momentum of West's solo album and Pappalardi's production credentials, success was nearly instantaneous. The band's fourth live performance was at the Woodstock festival. Smart was then replaced by Corky Laing, who handled drumming chores on Mountain's debut album, Mountain Climbing (#17, 1970), which went gold and yielded the #21 hit "Mississippi Queen."

Nantucket Sleighride earned the group another gold album in 1971. But the formula began to wear thin, and after one more studio album and a live LP, Pappalardi decided to return to production. Knight disappeared along the way as well, and ex-Cream bassist Jack Bruce joined what was thereafter known as West, Bruce and Laing. That group recorded three LPs for Columbia: Why Dontcha (1972) and Whatever Turns You On (1973) were moderately successful. After the second LP, the group disbanded; a live LP, Live 'n' Kickin', followed.

In the ensuing years, West and Laing periodically resurrected the Mountain moniker, sometimes with Pappalardi (who'd suffered hearing loss from the group's thundering volume and had to semiretire from live work), sometimes not. They have also appeared in the New York metropolitan area billed as the New Mountain. West has performed with his group, the Leslie West Band, as well. In 1982 Laing formed the Mix, and from 1986 to 1989, he led a blues band that featured guest stars Mick Taylor and Lester Chambers. Since 1989, Laing has been vice president of A&R for PolyGram Records.

In 1983 Pappalardi was shot dead by his wife and songwriting collaborator, Gail Collins. Two years later West, Laing, and bassist Mark Clarke issued Go for Your Life, which featured concise hard-rocking numbers and a noticeably svelte (well, maybe not svelte) West. Today, the guitarist pops up from time to time on shock jock Howard Stern's radio show. In the '90s Laing and West compiled Mountain's silver-anniversary retrospective, Over the Top, which included three new songs.

The Move/Roy Wood

Formed 1966, Birmingham, Eng.

Roy Wood (b. Ulysses Adrian Wood, Nov. 8, 1946, Birmingham), gtr., voc.; Bev Bevan (b. Nov. 25, 1944, Birmingham), drums, voc.; Carl Wayne (b. Aug. 18, 1944, Moseley, Eng.), voc.; Trevor Burton (b. Mar. 9, 1944, Aston, Eng.), gtr., bass, voc.; Chris "Ace" Kefford (b. Dec. 10, 1946, Moseley), bass, voc.

1968—The Move (Regal Zonophone, U.K.) (—Kefford) 1969—(—Burton; + Rick Price [b. June 10, 1944, Birmingham], bass, voc.) 1970—Shazam (A&M) (—Wayne; + Jeff Lynne [b. Dec. 30, 1947, Birmingham], gtr., kybds, voc.) 1971—Looking On (Capitol) (—Price) Message From the Country 1972—(group disbands; becomes Electric Light Orchestra) Split Ends (United Artists) 1974—The Best of the Move (A&M) 1979—Shines On.

Roy Wood solo: 1973—Boulders (United Artists); Wizzard's Brew (Harvest) 1974—See My Baby Jive; Introducing Eddie and the Falcons (Warner Bros.) 1975—Mustard (Jet) 1977—Super Active Wizzo (Warner Bros.) 1979—On the Road Again.

The Move's half-ironic pop made the group popular in Britain in the late '60s, but it was virtually unknown in America until its final days, when its energies were concentrated on a transformation into the Electric Light Orchestra [see entry]. With Roy Wood's songwriting, the Move was a remarkably versatile group, sending pop singles to the top of the English chart while its albums featured extended forays into all manners of folk rock, heavy metal, and psychedelia.

The Move started in 1966, when five of Birmingham's top musicians left their respective cover bands—Wood from Mike Shendan and the Nightnders; Trevor Burton from the Mayfair Set, and Carl Wayne, Bev Bevan, and Ace Kefford from Carl Wayne and the Vikings—for a greater challenge. Wood's compositions acknowledged British trends, notably the psychedelic movement, as well as classical music: The band's debut single, "Night of Fear," was based on the 1812 Overture; it hit #2 on the U.K. chart in early 1967.

With the aid of crafty manager Tony Secunda (who died in 1995), the Move achieved almost instant notonety. Its stage act climaxed with the destruction of television sets and automobiles with axes, and a publicity mailing for a 1967 45, "Flowers in the Rain," depicted Prime Minister Harold Wilson in bed with his secretary. This latter stunt resulted in a lawsuit and the band's loss of royalties, which would have been considerable: The single reached #2 on the British chart. The Move's first and only English #1 was the lush "Blackberry Way."

Even within the group, the Move's image was divided. Carl Wayne was an aspiring balladeer who eventually left the group for a cabaret and TV career. Trevor Burton and Chris Kefford were rock & rollers. Kefford quit first, not to be heard from again, and Burton followed in 1969. He stayed active for a while as a member of the Uglys (with future ELO member Richard Tandy), the Balls (with Steve Gibbons and former Moody Blue Denny Laine, later of Wings), and, in the late '70s, the Steve Gibbons Band.

With Rick Price on bass, the Move recorded Shazam, an album of six cuts in six different styles interspersed with man-on-the-street interviews. The album was calculated to combat the group's British bubblegum image. The British group Amen Corner turned the opening track, "Hello Susie," into a Top 5 U.K. hit in mid-1969. Soon after Shazam's release, Wayne left. His place was taken by Jeff Lynne, who had replaced Wood in the Nightriders as they were renamed the Idle Race. (The Idle Race enjoyed modest British popularity, due in part to the Wood composition "Here We Go Round the Lemon Tree.") After 1971's Looking On, which included the Move's sixth Top 10 British hit, a throbberingly heavy number titled "Brontosaurus," the band announced a planned metamorphosis into the Electric Light Orchestra, incorporating classical-music instrumentation such as cello and violin.

But there were to be more Move records: an adventurous LP, Message From the Country, and a series of commercial singles (collected on Split Ends). In the meantime, Price had left the band; he had become superfluous once the group abandoned the stage. While the Move put out its last contract-fulfilling singles in 1971 and 1972 (including Lynne's rousing "Do Ya," a minor hit for the Move, later a much greater one for ELO), the recording of the first Electric Light Orchestra album was under way. On its release in summer 1972, the Move was finished. No sooner had ELO officially begun, however, than Wood quit, abandoning classical rock for '50s-influenced rock & roll. In the '70s and '80s, he released albums on his own and with his group Wizzard. Although little known in the U.S., he continued to have success at home: two Phil Spector-esque singles, "See My Baby Jive" and "Angel Fingers," topped the chart there in 1973.

Alison Moyet/Yaz

Born Genevieve Alison-Jane Moyet, June 18, 1961, Billericay, Essex, Eng.

With Yaz (Moyet, voc.); Vince Clarke (b. July 3, 1960, South Woodford, Eng.), kybds: 1982—Upstairs at Eric's (Sire) 1983—You and Me Both 1999—The Best of Yaz (Reprise). Alison Moyet solo: 1984—Alf (Columbia) 1987—Raindancing 1991—Hoodoo 1993—Essex 1995—Singles (Sony).

Alison Moyet rose to fame in her native England in the early '80s as half of the short-lived but influential technopop duo Yazoo (known as Yaz in the U.S.). While her partner, ex-Depeche Mode songwriter Vince Clarke, crafted electronic-based arrangements, cowriter Moyet's earthy, soulful alto lent heart to the material—as Annie Lennox's mezzo did to Eurythmics' music. Unlike Eurythmics, Yaz didn't enjoy commercial success in the U.S., though the duo's sultry, rhythmically compelling style—and particularly Moyet's voice—was admired by fans of progressive pop. The pair's debut, Upstairs at Eric's, featured the new-wave dance-club hits "Don't Go," "Only You," and "Situation." When Yaz split up after You and Me Both, Clarke went on to form the Assembly and, later, Erasure [see entry]. Moyet, meanwhile, embarked on a solo career that garnered more widespread recognition in the U.K. than it did stateside.

As a teenager in the late '70s, Moyet was drawn to punk's energy, but she soon realized that her warm voice was better suited to R&B. She sang with a couple of pub bands before hooking up with Clarke. After Yaz disbanded, Moyet continued offsetting synth-laden orchestration with a sensuous, bluesy vocal technique. Her solo debut, Alf, sold more than 1.5 million copies in England alone and went Top 10 all over Europe and in Australia. Raindancing (1987) was also well received by fans, entering the British charts at #2.

Moyet was not satisfied with the production, promotion, or marketing of either album, however. After taking a few years off, the singer rebounded in 1991 with Hoodoo. A denser, more stylistically diverse album—and to Moyet and critics, a more successful one, too—it sold fewer copies than any of her previous efforts, although the first single from the album, "It Won't Be Long," received a Grammy nomination in the Best Female Rock Vocal category. Essex wasn't the commercial breakthrough that Moyet may have hoped for, either, but the album did garner some very favorable reviews. The year 1995 saw the release of Moyet's greatest-hits collection, Singles, which entered the U.K. charts at #1 and eventually went double platinum there. The following year she contributed vocals to the Tricky album Nearly God, released in the U.K. In 1999—more than 15 years after the duo's demise—The Best of Yaz was released, and a new remix of "Situation" hit #1 on the Hot Dance Music/Club Play chart in the U.S.

Mudhoney

Formed 1988, Seattle, WA

Mark Arm (b. Feb. 21, 1962, CA), voc, gtr.; Dan Peters (b. Aug. 18, 1967, Seattle), drums; Steve Turner (b. Mar. 28, 1965, Houston, TX), gtr.; Matt Lukin (b. Aug. 16, 1964, Aberdeen, WA), bass.

1988—Superfuzz Bigmuff EP (Sub Pop) 1989—Mudhoney 1990—Boiled Beef & Rotting Teeth 1991—Every Good Boy Deserves Fudge 1992—Piece of Cake (Reprise) 1993—Blinding Sun EP; Five Dollar Bob's Mock Cooter Stew EP 1995—My Brother the Cow 1998—Tomorrow Hit Today 2000—March to Fuzz (Sub Pop).

Mudhoney was one of the leading players in the early-'90s Seattle scene. Named for a Russ Meyer film, the band formed after Mark Arm and Steve Turner left Green River, the prototypical Northwest-sound band whose members also went on to form Mother Love Bone and Pearl Jam. Arm and Turner joined with Matt Lukin, who had been fired by sludge progenitors the Melvins, and Dan Peters, who briefly played with Nirvana and the Screaming Trees. With their big distorted-guitar sound (their debut was named after an effects pedal), '70s hard-rock homages, and twisted, ironic take on rockism, Mudhoney's early records defined grunge. Their "Touch Me I'm Sick" single was parodied as "Touch Me I'm Dick" in the movie Singles, and the Matt Dillon character in that film was rumored to be modeled after Arm.

Before Nirvana came along, Mudhoney was Sub Pop's biggest-selling band. The group was especially popular in England, where it first toured with Sonic Youth in 1989 and was supported by influential DJ John Peel. The members are faithful to the indie aesthetic, recording Every Good Boy Deserves Fudge and Piece of Cake at Conrad Uno's Egg Studio (first on 8-track, then progressing to 16) and releasing numerous one-off projects, including a 1989 single on which they and Sonic Youth covered each other and a similar 1994 single with Texas singer/songwriter Jimmie Dale Gilmore. Financial problems at Sub Pop drove the quartet to a major label. Still, Mudhoney refused to be serious on Piece of Cake; one track featured Lukin making fart sounds.

My Brother the Cow (1995) found Mudhoney, a band whose music had long relied on riffs and clever turns of phrase, making great strides in the songwriting department and earning widespread critical acclaim. If anything, Tomorrow Hit Today (1998) featured even stronger material; produced by legendary Memphis producer Jim Dickinson, it also boasted tighter playing and a cleaner sound. Lukin left the band in 1999 (the bass player was immortalized in Pearl Jam's "Lukin"), leaving the remaining members of the group dubbed "the grandfathers of grunge" and contemplating whether or not to soldier on as a trio.

Geoff and Maria Muldaur

Geoff Muldaur (b. 1945, Pelham, NY), gr., voc.; Maria Muldaur (b. Maria Grazia Rosa Domenica d'Amato, Sep. 12, 1943, New York, NY), voc., violin.

Geoff and Maria Muldaur: 1969—Pottery Pie (Reprise) 1972—Sweet Potatoes (Warner Bros.).

Geoff Muldaur solo: 1964—Geoff Muldaur (Prestige) 1965—Sleepy Man Blues 1975—Is Having a Wonderful Time (Reprise) 1976—Motion 1978—Geoff Muldaur and Amos Garrett (with Amos Garrett) (Flying Fish) 1979—Blues Boy 1986—I Ain't Drunk (Hannibal) 1998—Secret Handshake (Hightone) 2000—Password.

Maria Muldaur solo: 1972—Mud Acres (Rounder) 1973—Maria Muldaur (Reprise) 1974—Waitress in a Donut Shop 1976—Sweet Harmony 1978—Southern Winds (Warner Bros.) 1979—Open Your Eyes 1980—Gospel Nights (Takoma) 1982—There Is a Love (Myrrh) 1983—Sweet and Low (Tudor) 1985—Translucency (Uptown) 1991—On the Sunny Side (Music for Little People) 1993—Louisiana Love Call (Black Top) 1994—Meet Me at Midnight 1995—Jazzabelle (Stony Plain) 1996—Fanning the Flames (Telarc) 1998—Southland of the Heart; Swingin' in the Rain (Rhino) 1999—Meet Me Where They Play the Blues (Telarc) 2000—Maria Muldaur's Music for Lovers.

The Muldaurs, who married in the mid-'60s and divorced in 1972, both graduated from the early-'60s folk scene, Geoff with Jim Kweskin's Jug Band, Maria with the Even Dozen Jug Band (which included John Sebastian, Stefan Grossman, Steve Katz, and Joshua Rifkin) and the Kweskin band. They have recorded solo and together. Maria's career has been far more commercially successful.

The two married while they were both with Kweskin's Jug Band. Geoff Muldaur had made a couple of rather obscure albums that demonstrated his attraction to folk blues, vintage jazz, gospel, and country music. Maria D'Amato, in the meantime, had grown up in Greenwich Village, listening to blues and big-band music. In high school she formed an all-girl Everly Brothers-inspired group, the Cameos, and then the Cashmeres, who were offered a recording contract that her mother forbade her to sign because Maria was still a minor. She gravitated to the Village folk scene with the Even Dozen Jug Band, then joined Kweskin, where she sang the blues and Leiber and Stoller—and married Geoff.

Their two duo LPs were eclectic and folksy to the point of sounding homemade ("Produced by Nobody," proclaimed the Sweet Potatoes sleeve), and both featured the guitar of Amos Garrett, with whom both Muldaurs would remain associated. In 1973 Geoff moved to Woodstock and worked with Paul Butterfield's Better Days band.

Mana began her own career in 1973 with her enormously successful debut LP, which featured a wide range of material contributed by such artists as Dolly Parton, Dan Hicks, Dr. John, Kate McGarrigle, and Wendy Waldman. "Midnight at the Oasis" was a Top 10 single from the album, and the LP eventually sold gold. Her second album featured horn arrangements by Benny Carter and contained the hit "I'm a Woman" (#12, 1975). The failure of her third album to sell well, despite continuing critical acclaim, left her disillusioned. Geoff, in the meantime, released elaborately produced solo albums on Repnse and folksier ones on Flying Fish. Mana continued to record solo, albeit more and more sporadically. In 1978 she guested on Elvin Bishop's Hog Heaven LP. By 1980, she was a born-again Christian, and within a year had released a gospel album.

Through the remainder of the '80s and '90s, Mana recorded in a range of styles. Translucency was a critically lauded pop-jazz effort, while Louisiana Love Call featured Amos Garrett as well as Charles and Aaron Neville, Dr. John, and other New Orleans-based musicians. On the Sunny Side is a children's record; Swingin' in the Rain contains '30s and '40s big-band songs arranged for kids. Maria has also acted (Pump Boys and Dinettes; The Pirates of Penzance).

After a long hiatus, Geoff appeared on the 1993 self-titled debut by Jenni Muldaur, his daughter with Mana. Having become a record producer and an Emmy-winning composer for television and film, he returned to the studio in the late '90s with the roots-flavored Secret Handshake. He has continued to record and perform as a bluesy solo artist.

Mungo Jerry

Formed 1969, London, Eng.

Ray Dorset (b. Mar. 21, 1946, Ashford, Eng.), gr., voc.; Colin

Earl (b. May 6, 1942, Hampton Ct., Eng.), piano; Paul King (b. Jan. 9, 1948, Dagenham, Eng.), banjo, gtr., jug; Mike Cole, string bass.

1970—Mungo Jerry (Janus); Memoirs of a Stockbroker; In the Summertime (Pye) 1975—Mungo Jerry 1978—Ray Dorset and Mungo Jerry (Polydor).

Mungo Jerry was a British quartet of skiffle revivalists (skiffle was roughly the English equivalent of jug-band music) that had a novelty hit in 1970 with "In the Summertime," a #3 single (#1 in England) that earned the group a gold record in the U.S. and eventually sold 6 million copies worldwide.

Prior to 1970, the band had been known as the Good Earth, and if the name change helped it achieve its hit, it never did the trick again in the U.S. However, Mungo Jerry did have an impressive list of Top 40 successes in Britain: "Baby Jump," "Alright, Alright," "You Don't Have to Be in the Army to Fight the War," "Lady Rose," "Open Up," "Wild Love," and "Longlegged Woman Dressed in Black."

Michael Martin Murphey

Born Mar. 14, 1945, Dallas, TX

1972—Geronimo's Cadillac (A&M) 1973—Cosmic Cowboy Souvenir 1974—Michael Murphey (Epic) 1975—Blue Sky Night Thunder; Swans Against the Sun 1976—Flowing Free Forever 1978—Lone Wolf 1979—Peaks, Valleys, Honky-Tonks and Alleys 1982—Michael Martin Murphey (Liberty) 1983—The Heart Never Lies 1986—Tonight We Ride 1988—River of Time 1989—Land of Enchantment (Warner Bros.) 1990—Cowboy Songs I 1991—Cowboy Christmas—Cowboy Songs II 1993—Cowboy Songs III—Rhymes of the Renegades; Wide Open Country 1995—America's Horses; Sagebrush Symphony 1997—Horse Legends 1998—Cowboy Songs IV (Valley Entertainment) 1999—Acoustic Christmas Carols.

One of the original "cosmic cowboys" of country rock, Michael Murphey started out as one of the leaders of the late-'60s-to-mid-'70s Austin, Texas, "progressive country" music scene. Before he became a musician, Murphey had been intent on joining the Southern Baptist ministry and had studied Greek at North Texas State University and creative writing at UCLA. After working as a staff songwriter at Screen Gems (the Monkees' "What Am I Doing Hangin' Round") for five years in the late '60s and a brief stint with the Lewis and Clarke Expedition, Murphey began performing solo. Producer Bob Johnston signed him to A&M and produced Murphey's debut LP in Nashville.

The title tune of his debut made #37 on the singles chart and was covered by Hoyt Axton, Cher, Clare Hamill, and others. He smoothed out his style for his biggest hit, 1975's "Wildfire" (#3). In 1980 his "Cherokee Fiddle" was featured on the Urban Cowboy film soundtrack, he also appeared in the film Take This Job and Shove It. Also that year, Murphey wrote the screenplay for and appeared in Hard Country.

In 1982 he had a Top 20 pop hit with "What's Forever

For?" (#1 C&W). His other country hits include "Still Taking Chances" (#3 C&W, 1982), "Love Affairs" (#11 C&W, 1983), "Don't Count the Rainy Days" (#9 C&W, 1983), "Will It Be Love by Morning" (#7 C&W, 1984), "What She Wants" (#8 C&W, 1984), "Carolina in the Pines" (#9 C&W, 1985), "A Face in the Crowd"—a duet with Holly Dunn—(#4 C&W, 1987), "A Long Line of Love" (#1 C&W, 1987), "I'm Gonna Miss You, Girl" (#3 C&W, 1987), "Talkin' to the Wrong Man"—a duet with Murphey's son, Ryan—(#4 C&W, 1988), "From the Word Go" (#3 C&W, 1988), and "Never Givin' Up On Love" (#9 C&W, 1989), from the film Pink Cadillac. Among the artists who have covered Murphey's material are John Denver ("Boy From the Country"), the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band ("Cosmic Cowboy"), Kenny Rogers ("Ballad of Calico"), and Jerry Jeff Walker ("Backslider's Wine"). He continues to tour approximately 150 days a year.

In 1990 Murphey released an album of cowboy songs and continued to make records in that vein, albeit with a decidedly easy-listening bent, throughout the decade. Among the highlights from these albums is Murphey's duet with Johnny Cash on "Tennessee Stud" (from Horse Legends). Murphey's move in this direction was a natural outgrowth of his role as a promoter of WestFest, the annual traveling celebration of the Western history, art, and culture that he founded in 1986.

Elliott Murphy

Born Mar. 16, 1949, Garden City, NY

1973—Aquashow (Polydor) 1974—Lost Generation (RCA) 1976—Night Lights 1977—Just a Story From America (Columbia) 1981—Affairs (Courtesan) 1982—Murph the Surf 1984—Party Girls/Broken Poets (WEA International) 1985—Après le Deluge (EMIS) 1987—Milwaukee (New Rose) 1988—Change Will Come 1989—Live Hot Point 1990—12 1991—If Poets Were King EP 1992—Diamonds by the Yard (Razor & Tie); Paris/New York (New Rose) 1993—Unreal City (Razor & Tie) 1996—Selling the Gold (DejaDisc) 1999—Beauregard (Koch) 2000—April—A Live Album (Last Call, Fr.). With Iain Matthews: 2001—La Terre Commune (Eminent).

Singer/songwriter Elliott Murphy's 1973 debut was hailed as "the best Dylan since 1968," and over the years Murphy has developed a following in both the U.S. (where he was born and raised, in Garden City, an upper-middle-class Long Island suburb) and Europe, where he now lives. His father owned the Aqua Show in Queens, near the World's Fair grounds, where big-band acts like Duke Ellington would perform. Murphy began playing guitar at age 12, and by age 13 he had formed his first band. In 1966 his group, the Rapscallions, won a New York State battle of the bands.

Murphy then moved to Europe, where he sang in the streets and in 1971 had a bit part in Fellini's Roma. With his brother Matthew he traveled Europe, busking. He returned to New York, where during the early '70s, he was a regular in New York's Mercer Arts Center scene with the New York Dolls, Patu Smith, and others, and performed with his band Elliott Murphy's Aquashow. He was discovered by critic Paul Nelson, and though his band's Aquashow LP was widely acclaimed, commercial success eluded him in America. Some of his best-known songs, such as "Drive All Night" and "The Last of the Rock Stars," received exposure on FM radio. His only hits have been in Europe.

In 1981 Murphy formed his own label, Courtesan, and began writing short stories and a novel. Over the years his work has appeared in Spin and in ROLLING STONE, for which he conducted major interviews with Tom Waits and Keith Richards; he also penned the liner notes for 1969 Velvet Underground Live. His novel, Cold and Electric, was published in France in the late '80s around the time he moved to Paris, where he still resides with his wife and son.

Murphy's work still garners critical acclaim. Party Girls/Broken Poets, for example, won the 1984 New York Music Award for Album of the Year despite never having been released in the United States, and in 1996 longtime admirer Bruce Springsteen joined Murphy for a duet on Selling the Gold's "Everything I Do (Leads Me Back to You)." In 2001 Murphy released La Terre Commune, a collaboration with Fairport Convention founding member Iain Matthews.

Peter Murphy: See Bauhaus

Anne Murray

Born Morna Anne Murray, June 20, 1945, Springhill, Can. 1970—Snowbird (Capitol) 1973—Danny's Song 1974—Country; Love Song 1976—Keeping in Touch 1978—Let's Keep It That Way 1979—New Kind of Feeling 1980—Anne Murray's Greatest Hits 1981—Where Do You Go When You Dream 1984—Heart Over Mind 1986—Something to Talk About 1987—Harmony; Country Hits; Songs of the Heart 1988—As I Am 1989—Anne Murray Christmas; Love Songs; Greatest Hits, vol. 2 1990—You Will 1991—Yes I Do 1992—Fifteen of the Best 1993—Croonin' 1994—Now & Forever 1996—Anne Murray 1999—What a Wonderful World—26 Inspirational Classics (Straightway/Sparrow).

Anne Murray, the MOR country-pop singer, was the first female Canadian vocalist to earn a gold record in the U.S. (Joni Mitchell was second, with Ladies of the Canyon.) Born and raised in a coal-mining town, Murray was always interested in singing. While attending the University of New Brunswick in the mid-'60s, she auditioned unsuccessfully for the Halifax TV show Sing Along Jubilee; two years later she was hired for the station's summer series. She taught physical education on Prince Edward Island but also sang in small clubs and sometimes on another Canadian show, Let's Go, spurred on by Brian Ahern (her first producer) and Bill Lamgstroth (who became her husband, they have two children).

In the late '60s, Murray recorded her first LP for the small Canadian label Arc, which led to a deal with Capitol of Canada. She debuted in America in mid-1970 with the gold Snowbird LP and its title-song single (#8), which later in the year became the first 45 by a Canadian female to go gold.

Murray began to appear regularly on Glen Campbell's U.S. TV show and toured and recorded the LP Anne Murray/Glen Campbell with him in 1971. Still, she didn't have another major American hit until March 1973 and her Top 10 cover of Kenny Loggins' "Danny's Song." Other hit singles include a cover of Lennon and McCartney's "You Won't See Me" (#8, 1974), "Love Song" (#12, 1975), and "I Just Fall in Love Again" (#12, 1979).

After taking three years off to raise her family, Murray came back in January 1978 with the platinum Let's Keep It That Way, her biggest success ever, bolstered by the #1 pop, #4 country, gold ballad "You Needed Me" and the Top 5 country hit "Walk Right Back." New Kind of Feeling also went platinum, as did Greatest Hits and Christmas Wishes. As far as the U.S. pop singles charts go, Murray's big streak ended then, but she's enjoyed ongoing success in country. "A Little Good News" (#1 C&W, 1983) won her the Grammy for Best Female Country Vocal Performance in 1983; it was also the Country Music Awards' single of the year. In 1985 her duet with Dave Loggins (of "Please Come to Boston" fame), "Nobody Loves Me Like You Do," was another #1 country hit and country-music award winner. Among her other country hit singles are "Just Another Woman in Love" (#1 C&W, 1984), "Time Don't Run Out on Me" (#2 C&W 1985), "I Don't Think I'm Ready for You" (#7 C&W, 1985), "Now and Forever (You and Me)" (#1 C&W 1986), "Feed This Fire" (#5 C&W, 1990), and a duet with Kenny Rogers, "If I Ever Fall in Love Again" (#28 C&W, 1989). What a Wonderful World (1999) found her trying to crack the devotional-music market.

In her native Canada, Murray was named Country Female Vocalist of the Year every year from 1979 to 1986. She continues to tour and to record, having sold over 40 million albums worldwide.

My Bloody Valentine

Formed 1984, Dublin, Ire.

Kevin Patrick Shields (b. May 21, 1963, Queens, NY), gr., voc.; Colm Michael O'Ciosio (b. Oct. 31, 1964, Dublin), drums; Dave Conway (b. Dublin), voc.; Tina (b. Dublin), kybds.

1985—This Is Your Bloody Valentine EP (Tycoon; Ger. Dossier, 1988) (+ Deborah Ann Googe [b. Oct. 24, 1962, Somerset, Eng.], bass) 1986—Geek EP (Fever) The New Record by My Bloody Valentine EP (Kaleidoscope Sound) 1987—Sunny Sundae Smile EP (Lazy); Strawberry Wine EP; Ecstasy EP [- Conway; - Tina; + Bilinda Jayne Butcher [b. Sep. 16, 1961, London, Eng.], gr., voc.) 1988—My Bloody Valentine Isn't Anything (Creation, U.K.) 1990—Tremolo EP (Creation, U.K.) 1991—Loveless.

The original My Bloody Valentine sounded nothing like the post-1988 model, which introduced a groundbreaking studio concoction of discordant guitar and effects and fragile melodies, kicking off Britain's late-'80s dream-pop scene.

After moving from New York to Ireland at age six, Kevin Shields befriended Colm O'Ciosio, who shared his obsession with pop music. In 1984 the two formed My Bloody Valentine, named for a B movie, with singer Dave Conway. It wasn't until 1988's Isn't Anything, however, that MBV locked into its unusual, influential sound, inspired equally by the churning guitars of the Jesus and Mary Chain, the melodic sense of the Cocteau Twins, and the dissonance of Sonic Youth. (All of their U.K. releases from 1988 were subsequently released in the U.S.) Sire signed MBV that same year, but it took a full three years for the band to complete its full-length magnum opus, Loveless, which cost a reported $500,000 and nearly sunk its British label. (The LP reached only #24 in the U.K. and didn't chart in the States.) The band's approach onstage—motionless and reserved—popularized the phrase “shoe gazers” to describe their (and those who followed in their footsteps) passive, introspective demeanor.

My Bloody Valentine has yet to return after the deeply influential Loveless. After moving to Island Records, plans for a followup were reportedly hobbled by technical problems. Nevertheless, up through the late '90s, Shields promised that another album was imminent. By then, though, bassist Deborah Ann Googe had joined former Stereolab keyboardist Katharine Gifford in Snowpony, which released The Slow Motion World of Snowpony in 1998. O'Ciosoig joined Clear Spot. And Shields occasionally appeared on records by the likes of J Mascis and Dinosaur Jr and Experimental Audio Research before finally joining Primal Scream on tour in 2000 as a result of coproducing that group's XTRMNTR album.

a|b|c|d|e|f|g|h|i|j|k|l|m| |o|p|q|r|s|t|u|v|w|x|y|z

N

Nas

Born Nasir Ben Olu Dara Jones, ca. 1973, Brooklyn, NY
1994—Illmatic (Columbia) 1996—It Was Written 1999—I Am . . . ; Nastradamus.

One of the more distinctive rap artists to emerge in the mid-'90s, Nas put an emphasis on gritty, poetic storytelling. His dense, percussive mixes, which didn't preclude savvy pop moves, won him both commercial success and critical support. The son of masterful jazz cornetist and songwriter Olu Dara, with whom he has sometimes recorded, Nas was raised in the Queensbridge Houses, a massive Queens housing project that hip-hop pioneers Marley Marl and MC Shan also called home. As a child, he wrote short stories about his life in the projects and conceived his own comic books and screenplays, taking inspiration from the films of Martin Scorsese and George Lucas. He got his break as a rapper when MC Serch (formerly of the group 3rd Bass) picked his tune "Halftime" for inclusion on the soundtrack to the independent film Zebrahead (1992). A deal with Columbia followed, and in 1994 Nas released his debut album, Illmatic (#12 pop, #2 R&B, 1994). Two years later, the followup It Was Written (#1 pop and R&B, 1996), featuring collaborations with Dr. Dre, DJ Premier, and Havoc of Mobb Deep, premiered at the top of the charts and went double platinum. Nas charted highest with the singles "Street Dreams" (#22 pop, #18 R&B, 1996) and "Head Over Heels" (#35 pop, #17 R&B, 1997), on which he guested with Allure. In 1998 he starred in Belly, a gangsta-rap drama from video director Hype Williams. During 1999 he released two albums. I Am . . . (#1 pop and R&B, 1999) charted highest, fueled by the singles "Nas Is Like" (#86 pop, #30 R&B, 1999) and "Hate Me Now" (#62 pop, #18 R&B, 1999), a duet with Sean Combs. The latter tune featured a sample from Carl Orff's Carmina Burana and achieved notoriety when Combs was arrested for allegedly beating Nas' manager, Steve Stoute, over a scene in the song's video in which Combs is depicted nailed to a cross. The video was revised, Combs paid Stoute $50,000, and charges were dropped. After appearing as a guest on Missy "Misdemeanor" Elliott's "Hot Boyz" (#5 pop, #1 R&B, 1999), Nas released Nastradamus (#7 pop, #2 R&B, 1999).

Graham Nash: See Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young; the Hollies

Johnny Nash

Born Aug. 19, 1940, Houston, TX
1972—I Can See Clearly Now (Epic) 1973—My Merry-Go-Round 1974—Celebrate Life 1979—Let's Go Dancing 1993—The Reggae Collection.

Johnny Nash was one of the first performers to bring reggae to the attention of the American public, doing so with the self-penned "I Can See Clearly Now," a #1 hit in 1972. He also recorded Bob Marley's first U.S. hit song in 1973 with a cover of Marley's "Stir It Up" (#12). Though many believed him to be Jamaican, Nash actually grew up in Texas and had been recording since 1957. He began singing gospel in a Baptist church and by 13 was on the Houston TV show Matinee, breaking the era's local-television color bar. He sang C&W as well as pop, easy-listening soul, and calypso. In 1956 Arthur Godfrey gave him a spot on his TV show, where Nash performed for the next seven years.

Nash began his recording career in 1957 for ABC-Paramount with "A Teenager Sings the Blues." His first chart single was "A Very Special Love" (#23, 1958), which was followed by "The Teen Commandments," sung with Paul Anka and George Hamilton IV (#29, 1959). In the early '60s, he recorded unsuccessfully for Warner Bros. (1962-63), Groove, and Argo (1964). Still, his compositions did well for others: like "What Kind of Love Is This," for instance, became a Top 20 hit for Joey Dee in 1962. In the late '60s Nash began recording at Byron Lee's studio in Jamaica and went on to build his own studio there. He formed his own labels, Joda and Jad, before hitting the chart again with the reggae "Hold Me Tight," a Top 5 pop hit in 1968. Around this time he had more hits in England, including a reggae cover of Sam Cooke's "Cupid" in 1969. Nash also began to star in films, such as Take a Giant Step, Sweden's Love Is Not a Game (1974), and Key Witness. In 1971, while living in England, he signed to Epic, leading to his "I Can See Clearly Now" peak in 1972. After 1973's "Stir It Up" (a hit in England back in 1971), Nash had no more big American hits, though he maintained his popularity in England with covers of Little Anthony and the Imperials' "Tears on My Pillow" (#1 U.K., 1975) and Sam Cooke's "(What a Wonderful World)" (#25 U.K., 1976).

Naugthy by Nature

Formed 1986, East Orange, NJ

Treach (b. Anthony Criss, Dec. 2, 1970, East Orange), voc.;
Vinnie (b. Vincent Brown, Sep. 17, 1970, East Orange), voc.;
Kay Gee (b. Kier Gist, Sep. 15, 1969, East Orange), DJ.
1991—Naugthy by Nature (Tommy Boy) 1993—19Naugthy!!!
1995—Poverty's Paradise 1999—Nature's Finest; 19Naugthy9: Nature's Fury (Arista).

The rap trio Naugthy by Nature came out of nowhere in summer 1991 with its massive hit "O.P.P." (#6 pop, #5 R&B), a cheating anthem for the hip-hop '90s. Ironically, the group originally had recorded the track in 1989 but was unable to find anyone interested in releasing it until NBN met rapper Queen Latifah at a party. Latifah signed the group to her Flavor Unit Management company and brought it to Tommy Boy. "O.P.P.," with its call-and-response chorus of "'Ya down wit' O.P.P.?/Yeah, you know me!," sold more than 2 million copies and was nominated for a Grammy. The key to the song's success was its juxtaposition of a rough ghetto rap by Treach (short for "the treacherous MC") with the pop pep of samples from the Jackson 5's "ABC." The song also teased the censors: Treach's rap says the title stands for "Other People's Property," but the lyrics also indicate the final P means "pussy." The second single from Naugthy by Nature (#16, 1991), "Ghetto Bastard," was retitled "Everything's Gonna Be Alright" for radio. Naugthy by Nature also performed the single "Ghetto Anthem" from the Juice soundtrack.

The group returned to the top of the charts with 19Naugthy!!! (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1993) and the single "Hip Hop Hooray" (#8 pop, #1 R&B, 1993). The song's video was directed by Spike Lee, and the group performed the hit in the movie Who's the Man? The album featured Vinnie's raps more than their debut had, but Treach's rhyming style continued to get lavish praise from critics and other rappers.

Poverty's Paradise (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1995), another mix of head-bobbers and message raps, produced two more big singles: "Feel Me Flow" (#17 pop, #17 R&B) was built upon a sample of the Meters' "Find Yourself," "Craziest" (#51 pop, #27 R&B) upon a sample of Charles Wright's "That's All That Matters Baby." Poverty's Paradise won a Grammy for Best Rap Album. In 1997 NBN released "Mourn You Til I Join You" (#51 pop, #24 R&B), a tribute to the late Tupac Shakur. 19Naugthy9: Nature's Fury (#22 pop, #9 R&B, 1999) included "Jamboree," a single featuring the female R&B duo Zhane that reached the Top 10 on both the pop and R&B charts. In 1999 Treach married Sandra "Pepa" Denton of the female rap trio Salt-N-Pepa.

Nazareth

Formed 1968, Dunfermline, Scot.

Dan McCafferty (b. William McCafferty, Oct. 14, 1946, Dunfermline), voc., bagpipes; Manny Charlton, gtr.; Darrell Sweet (b. May 16, 1947, Bournemouth, Eng.; d. Apr. 30, 1999, New Albany, IN), drums; Pete Agnew (b. Sep. 14, 1946, Dunfermline), bass, voc.
1971—Nazareth (Warner Bros.) 1972—Exercises 1973—Razamanaz (A&M); Loud n' Proud 1974—Rampant 1975—Hair of the Dog 1976—Close Enough for Rock 'n' Roll; Play 'n' the Game 1977—Hot Tracks; Expect No Mercy 1978—(+ Zal Cleminson [b. May 4, 1949, Glasgow, Scot.], gtr.) No Mean City 1980—Malice in Wonderland (—Cleminson) 1981—The Fool Circle (+ Billy Rankin, gtr.; + John Locke [b. Sep. 25, 1943, Los Angeles, CA], kybds.) S'Naz 1982—2XS (—Locke) 1983—Sound Elixir (MCA) (—Rankin) 1988—Classics 1989—(—Charlton; + Rankin) 1993—No Jive (Griffin) 1995—(—Rankin; + Jimmy Murrison [b. Nov. 8, 1964], gtr., voc.; + Ronnie Leahy [b. Apr. 10, 1947, kybds., piano) 1999—Boogaloo (CMC) (—Sweet; + Lee Agnew [b. 1971], drums, voc.).
Dan McCafferty solo: 1975—Dan McCafferty (A&M).

Nazareth is a hard-rocking (sometimes heavy-metal) group from Scotland whose major distinguishing feature, besides its Rod Stewart-ish lead singer, Dan McCafferty, has been its penchant for inventively arranged, pile-driving versions of quieter songs by writers like Joni Mitchell, Woody Guthrie, Tim Rose, and Bob Dylan. The members met in Dunfermline in the semipro band the Shadettes, which included McCaf-ferty, Pete Agnew, and Darrell Sweet. When Manny Charlton joined in 1968, they changed their name to Nazareth (inspired by the first line of the Band's "The Weight") and got their first record contract in 1971. The quartet's first two LPs were generally ignored, but for 1973's Razamanaz, it switched to A&M and got Roger Glover (ex-Deep Purple bassist) to produce. Nazareth had its first British hits that year: "Broken Down Angel" (#9) and "Bad Bad Boy" (#10). Loud n' Proud yielded a brutal version of Joni Mitchell's "This Flight Tonight," which hit big in the UK, and got some FM airplay in the U.S. It also included a nine-minute metallic rendition of Dylan's "The Ballad of Hollis Brown." The LP established Nazareth in Europe and Canada, where it has had many gold and platinum records.

The group's only U.S. hit was "Love Hurts" (#8, 1976), a song written by Boudleaux Bryant for the Everly Brothers that had been a hit for Jim Capaldi in England. Also that year, Nazareth reached #14 in England with "My White Bicycle," originally a psychedelia-period song from Tomorrow (a band that included future Yes guitarist Steve Howe). Vocalist McCafferty released a solo LP in 1975; meanwhile, Nazareth kept its lineup intact until 1978, when it added second guitarist Zal Cleminson, who had spent five years with the Sensational Alex Harvey Band and also played on McCafferty's solo LP. Cleminson appeared only on No Mean City and Malice in Wonderland. By 1981, the group was back to a foursome, but it expanded to a sextet the following year with the additions of former Spirit keyboardist John Locke and guitarist Billy Rankin. Malice in Wonderland and Fool Circle were produced by ex-Steely Dan and Doobie Brother Jeff Baxter (Nazareth's previous five LPs had been produced by Charlton, taking over for Glover, who had produced Razamanaz, Loud n' Proud, and Rampant.)

By the mid-'80s, Nazareth was without a U.S. record label, but the band continued to issue albums regularly in Canada and Europe. In 1993, 10 years after its last American release, Nazareth brought out No Jive. One again the group was a foursome, but with Rankin in place of the talented Charlton, who'd left in 1990 to pursue production work. Following further lineup changes and the all-new Boogaloo, founding drummer Sweet suffered a fatal heart attack during a 1999 American tour. Rankin and Charlton have also recorded solo for small and import labels.

The Nazz

Formed 1967, Philadelphia, PA

Todd Rundgren (b. June 22, 1948, Upper Darby, PA), gr., voc.; Stewkey (b. Robert Antoni, Nov. 17, 1947, Newport, RI), kybds., lead voc.; Thom Mooney (b. Jan. 5, 1948, Altoona, PA), drums; Carson G. Van Osten (b. Sep. 24, 1946, Cinnaminson, NJ), bass. 1968—Nazz (SGC) 1969—Nazz Nazz 1970—Nazz 3.

The Nazz, Todd Rundgren's first recording band, was a power-pop quartet from Philadelphia. Rundgren and Carson Van Osten came from Woody's Truck Stop (a Philly blues band). Thom Mooney was from the Munchkins, and Stewkey had previously been with Elizabeth—all local groups. The foursome made its live debut in July 1967, opening for the Doors at Philadelphia's Town Hall, and by the following February had a record contract. Its debut LP, Nazz, showcased Rundgren as the group's chief writer, though Stewkey handled lead vocals. The maternal, influenced by the Beatles and the early Who, included the hard-rocking "Open My Eyes" and "Hello It's Me," which later appeared on Rundgren's Something/Anything solo LP in 1972. The band got good press and began turning up in the teen magazines. But problems set in with its second LP, Nazz Nazz. There were ego conflicts (Rundgren and Mooney fought the most), and the album, originally planned as a double LP called Fungo Bat, was split by management into 1969's Nazz Nazz and 1970's Nazz 3. The tracks on the latter LP originally featured Rundgren's lead vocals, but these were erased and Stewkey's put on instead. Before Nazz 3 came out, Rundgren and Van Osten quit. Stewkey and Mooney kept a version of the Nazz going until mid-1970. Mooney then left for California and later played with the Curtis Brothers and Tattoo, with ex-Raspberry Wally Bryson. He was also in Bob Welch's power trio, Paris Van Osten became an animation artist; Rundgren became a successful producer and solo artist; Stewkey joined a band with future Cheap Trickster Rick Nielsen called Fuse, which recorded one LP for Epic. Mooney also joined Fuse for a while but left before it became Sick Man of Europe, which eventually included Tom Petersson, also later of Cheap Trick. One bootleg disc of theirs surfaced, Retrospective Foresight, which included, besides some originals, several Nazz outtakes from various incarnations.

The Nazz: Todd Rundgren, Thom Mooney, Stewkey, Carson G. Van Osten

Meshell Ndegéocello

Born Michelle Johnson, Aug. 29, 1968, Berlin, Ger.

1993—Plantation Lullabies (Maverick) 1996—Peace Beyond Passion 1999—Bitter.

In the tradition of Gil Scott-Heron and Public Enemy, Meshell Ndegéocello's music asserts and embodies black power. Add to this racial insurgency her outspokenness about her own bisexuality, and bassist/songwriter Ndegéocello was one of the most politically forthright artists of the '90s.

Ndegéocello's parents—a devout mother and saxophone-playing father—would have a direct impact on her music. Growing up in the Washington, DC, area, Ndegéocello, who at the time was still going by her birth name Michelle Johnson, exposed herself to African music, jazz, and go-go. After spending limited time in music programs at the Duke Ellington School of the Arts and Howard University, Ndegéocello became pregnant and fled to New York in fear of her parents' reaction. In 1988 she gave birth to her son, Askia, and renamed herself Meshell Ndegéocello (the surname is Swahili for "free like a bird").

Following an unsuccessful audition as bassist for Living Colour and time spent with the activist band Women in Love, Ndegéocello signed with Mavens and in 1993 released Plantation Lullabies (#166 pop, #35 R&B, 1994). Mostly conceived in her Harlem studio, Plantation Lullabies details Ndegéocello's internal and external battles with homophobia, racism, drug addiction, and ghetto life. The songs "Dred Loc" (#86 R&B, 1993) and "If That's Your Boyfriend (He Wasn't Last Night)" (#73 pop, #23 R&B, 1994), both tales of sexual experiences with men, introduced the androgynously attractive Ndegéocello as an urban philosopher with an artful message of feminism and sexual liberation.

"Wild Night," a 1994 duet with John Mellencamp, brought Ndegéocello's bantone vocals and funky bass lines to a wider audience and peaked at #3 on the pop chart. Her 1996 followup, Peace Beyond Passion (#63 pop, #15 R&B, 1996), brims with soulful funkiness and religious myth. From "Leviticus: Faggot," a tale about parents repudiating their homosexual son, to the spoken words of "Make Me Wanna Holler," Peace Beyond Passion paints a portrait of Ndegéocello cello as a renaissance woman—a spiritual-minded singer, poet, rapper, and multi-instrumentalist. Her third album, Bitter (#105 pop, #40 R&B, 1999), veers away from some of the acid realities of her first two efforts to reveal a more delicate, solemn side.

Meshell Ndegéocello

Youssou N'Dour

Born Oct. 1, 1959, Dakar, Senegal
 1986—Nelson Mandela (Polydor) 1987—Inedits 84085
 (Celluloid) 1988—Immigres (Virgin) 1989—The Lion
 1990—Set 1992—Eyes Open (40 Acres and a Mule/Columbia) 1994—The Guide (Wommat)
 (Chaos/Columbia) 2000—Joko (Sony).

A "world beat" or "Afro-pop" pioneer, Youssou N'Dour began catching on with European and American audiences in the late '80s with his brand of mbalax—traditional Senegalese percussion-based music—that the singer combined with pop strings and jazz chord changes, funky horns, and Islamic-inflected vocals.

Born into a family of griots (storyteller/historians) and musicians, N'Dour grew up in cosmopolitan Dakar, listening to West African music, reggae, and R&B. By his mid-teens, he was already the chief vocalist for the Star Band, Senegal's top pop outfit, and he formed his own band, Etoile de Dakar, in 1979. Eventually changing their name to Le Super Etoile and becoming African superstars (N'Dour set up his own production company and opened a nightclub), the 10-piece band began performing in London and Paris in the early '80s.

Riveted by N'Dour during a 1984 concert in London, world-music enthusiast Peter Gabriel traveled to Senegal to meet him. Subsequent N'Dour appearances in 1986 on Gabriel's So, Paul Simon's Graceland, and on a Gabriel world tour drew notice from Western record companies. 1986's Nelson Mandela introduced N'Dour to worldwide audiences. Appearing in 1988 as part of Amnesty International's Human Rights Now! Tour alongside Sting and Bruce Springsteen increased his exposure; he also recorded with Harry Belafonte and Ryuichi Sakamoto.

To critics who have accused N'Dour, or at least his record companies, of diluting the distinctively Senegalese energy of his music on The Lion, Set, and, to a lesser degree, Eyes Open, N'Dour replies that he no longer considers himself exclusively an African artist. Indeed his 1994 LP, The Guide, featured Branford Marsalis and Neneh Cherry as guests and sold more than 1 million copies internationally. N'Dour's duet with Cherry, "7 Seconds," also became a major European hit. But then, seemingly on the verge of attaining global reach akin to that of Bob Marley, N'Dour surprised pundits and retreated to Dakar.

There, using Gabriel's Real World complex in England as his model, N'Dour began building up his entertainment empire. Most notably, he formed his own record label and started releasing roots-oriented music (his own recordings and those of other artists) to African audiences. N'Dour didn't resurface in international circles until he and Axelle Red performed his "La Cour Des Grands" at the 1998 soccer World Cup. In 2000 N Dour released Joko, his first album geared toward the global market in six years. An expansive collection that ranges from reggae to rap, the record includes collaborations with Sting, Gabriel, and former Fugees mainstay Wyclef Jean.

Fred Neil

Born 1937, St. Petersburg, FL; died July 7, 2001, Summerland Key, FL

1964—Hootenanny Live at the Bitter End (FM); World of Folk Music; Tear Down the Walls 1966—Fred Neil (Capitol) 1967—Bleecker and Macdougall (Elektra) 1969—Everybody's Talkin' (Capitol) 1970—Little Bit of Rain (Elektra); The Other Side of This Life (Capitol) 1971—Sessions 1999—The Many Sides of Fred Neil (Collectors' Choice).

Although songwriter Fred Neil did not record a new album or tour for 30 years prior to his death, and even at the peak of his career, he kept a low profile, his honey-laden baritone, 12-string guitar playing, and introspective songwriting (particularly his "Everybody's Talkin'") made him a cult figure among folk-rock aficionados.

While still in his teens, Neil performed at the Grand Ole Opry. In the late '50s, he moved to New York, and Buddy Holly recorded a number of his tunes, including "Come Back Baby." The flipside to Roy Orbison's hit "Cry" was a cover of Neil's "Candy Man" (#25, 1961). Neil became part of the Greenwich Village folk scene, where his songwriting and his mastery of 12-string guitar made him a leading figure. His earliest recordings featured backing by John Sebastian and Felix Pappalardi, but none of his albums sold well. He spent long hours in the studio rerecording tracks with legendary producer Nik Venet. (Other Side of This Life features Gram Parsons on a track.) Neil's biggest hit, and the song for which he is best known, is Harry Nilsson's cover of his "Everybody's Talkin'" (#6, 1969) from the Midnight Cowboy soundtrack.

After moving to Coconut Grove, Florida, Neil, who had developed a heroin problem, became a recluse. On Earth Day 1970, Neil established the Dolphin Project with partner Richard O'Barry. The few performances he gave over the years since were local benefit concerts for the Coconut Grove-based organization.

For such an obscure figure, Neil's impact on other singer/songwriters has been widespread: His songs have been covered by the Lovin' Spoonful, José Feliciano, It's a Beautiful Day, the Youngbloods, Eric Burdon and the Animals, Dion, Stevie Wonder, Johnny Mathis, Neil Diamond, Richie Havens, and Linda Ronstadt, among many others. Billy Bragg's version of Neil's "The Dolphin Song" (earlier recorded by Tim Buckley), was a U.K. hit in 1992. He was found dead at his Florida home in 2001.

Vince Neil: See Mötley Crüe

Rick Nelson

Born Eric Hilliard Nelson, May 8, 1940, Teaneck, NJ; died Dec. 31, 1985, DeKalb, TX

1957—Ricky (Imperial) 1958—Ricky Nelson 1959—Ricky Sings Again; Songs by Ricky 1960—More Songs by Ricky 1961—Ricky Is 21 1962—Album Seven by Rick 1963—Best Sellers by Ricky Nelson; For Your Sweet Love (Decca) 1964—Rick Nelson Sings "For You" 1966—Bright Lights & Country Music 1967—Country Fever 1968—Another Side of Rick 1969—Perspective 1970—Rick Nelson in Concert; Rick Sings Nelson 1971—Rudy the Fifth 1972—Garden Party 1974—Windfall (MCA) 1977—Intakes (Epic) 1981—Playing to Win (Capitol) 1986—Memphis Sessions (Epic) 1990—Ricky Nelson, vol. 1: The Legendary Masters Series (EMI) 1991—The Best of Rick Nelson, vol. 2 1993—Stay Young: The Epic Recordings (Epic) 1995—1969–1976 (Edsel) 1996—Rockin' With Ricky (Ace) 1999—25 Greatest Hits (EMI); Anthology (BGO) 2000—The Best of Ricky Nelson (Castle); Legacy (Capitol).

When singer Rick Nelson was posthumously inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1987, ROLLING STONE publisher and Hall of Fame cofounder Jann Wenner noted "the critical myopia that dogged [Nelson's] career" indeed, Rick, or Ricky, as he was known early on, launched his career from a position of privilege: his family's popular weekly television series, The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet. Nelson was wealthy, handsome, a household name, and an American teen idol long before he ever cut a record. In nearly every regard, he would seem the antithesis of the early rockers who made the music he first loved and recorded, rockabilly, and far removed from the late-'60s environment that nurtured early country rock, of which he was at the vanguard. And yet musicians as diverse as Eric Andersen and John Fogerty, and even some of his own heroes, including Carl Perkins and Scotty Moore, admired and respected Nelson.

Nelson's father was a famous bandleader and his mother a singer and actress who had been famous since the early '30s. In 1949, Rick and his older brother David began playing themselves on their parents' popular radio comedy series, The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet, which went to TV three years later. From his first appearance, the impish, wise-cracking Rick became the program's most popular character. His trademark line, "I don't mess around, boy," became a national catchphrase with prepubescent viewers. Not surprisingly, when Ricky began singing on the show in 1957, he had a massive audience. According to Nelson, he had no musical ambitions until a girlfriend said she was in love with Elvis Presley. He retorted that he too was cutting a record—which in reality he had no plans to do—and then did.

His first hit was a cover of Fats Domino's "I'm Walkin'", it went to #4 in 1959 and sold a million records after Nelson performed it on TV. The flip side, "A Teenager's Romance," hit #2. Between then and 1961, Nelson had more than two dozen pop hits, several of them double-sided, including the rockabilly "Be-Bop Baby" (#3, 1957), "Stood Up" (#2, 1958) b/w "Waitin' in School" (#18, 1958), "Believe What You Say"

Rick Nelson

(#4, 1958) b/w "My Bucket's Got a Hole in It" (#12, 1958), "Lonesome Town" (#7, 1958) b/w "I Got a Feeling" (#10, 1958), "It's Late" (#9, 1959) b/w "Never Be Anyone Else but You" (#6, 1959), "Just a Little Too Much" (#9, 1959). He also hit with ballads, such as "Poor Little Fool" (#1, 1958), Baker Knight's "Lonesome Town," "Sweeter Than You" (#9, 1959), and "Travelin' Man" (#1, 1961) and its B side, the Gene Pitney-penned "Hello Mary Lou" (#9, 1961). Some of Nelson's early hits, including "Waitin'," "Believe What You Say," and "It's Late," were penned by Dorsey and/or Johnny Burnette [see entries]. For seven years, Nelson's backup band featured James Burton, who later became Presley's lead guitarist.

In 1962, Nelson had three more Top 10 hits ("Young World," the autobiographical "Teenage Idol," and "It's Up to You"), and another in 1964, "For You." By then he had married Kris Harmon, another product of a show-business family and become the father of the first of his four children, daughter Tracy, Twins Matthew and Gunnar [see entry on Nelson] and a third son, Sam, followed shortly. As of 1964, Nelson's hit-making days were behind him, and after the family's show was canceled in 1966, he found himself at loose ends. Late that year he appeared, costarring with Joanie Summers (of "Johnny Get Angry" fame), in a little-seen, sophisticated rock satire entitled On the Flip Side. Nelson's fame also brought him numerous film offers, but unlike many other teen idols, from the beginning he eschewed the typical teen fare for more acclaimed parts such as his role in Howard Hawks' classic Rio Bravo (1959), which costarred John Wayne and Dean Martin, and The Wackiest Ship in the Army (1960), with Jack Lemmon.

Nelson continued to record (he'd signed a 20-year contract in 1963) but, as he later admitted, without enthusiasm until he began recording in a style that would soon become known as country rock. On Bright Lights & Country Music and Country Fever, Nelson covered material by Doug Ker-shaw, Willie Nelson, Hank Williams, and Bob Dylan, as well as contributed his own "Alone." Hanging out at the L.A. country-rock bastion the Troubadour, Nelson recruited ex-Poco bassist Randy Meisner and began forming the Stone Canyon Band, which at various times would also include Dennis Larden of Every Mother's Son, Richie Hayward, briefly on leave from Little Feat, Tom Brumley of Buck Owens' Buckaroos, Steve Love, later with Roger McGuinn and the New Riders of the Purple Sage, and Steve Duncan, later of the Desert Rose Band. With this group, he scored a minor commercial comeback with a cover of Dylan's "She Belongs to Me" (#33, 1969). A double live album recorded at the Troubadour in 1970, Rick Nelson in Concert, marked a crucial turning point for Nelson. With songs by Dylan, Tim Hardin, and Eric Andersen (who supplied the liner notes), it put to rest the charge that he was a talentless teen idol and garnered unanimous rave reviews.

His next success rose out of failure. In October 1971, when Nelson and his band appeared at a rock & roll revival at New York's Madison Square Garden, the audience booed his long-hair look and new material, particularly a version of the Rolling Stones' "Honky Tonk Women." Just a few months later, however, on a tour of England (his first, despite having had 19 Top 40 hits there), fans, including Elton John and Cliff Richard, turned out in droves and, more important to Nelson, fully accepted his new direction. Out of these experiences, he wrote his last million-seller (his first in over a decade) and his personal anthem, "Garden Party." It hit #6, went gold in 1972, and pushed the album of the same name to #32 (Nelson's best album-chart showing since 1964).

Followup albums didn't catch on, and by the mid-'70s, Nelson had lost his MCA contract. He released an album on Epic in 1977, then moved to Capitol for Playin' to Win. For a while, it was rumored that another fan, Paul McCartney, planned to produce Nelson, but nothing came of it. Partially because he so loved performing and partially due to an expensive and protracted divorce from his wife, Nelson found himself on the road an average of 250 nights a year through the late '70s and early '80s. When he sang in "Garden Party" "If memories are all I'd sing / I'd rather drive a truck," he meant it, even turning down a long-term million-dollar-plus offer (arranged by Elvis Presley's manager, Colonel Tom Parker) to play Las Vegas at a point when he was deeply in debt. In September 1984 he was invited, along with John Fogerty, the Judds, and Dave Edmunds, among others, to join in the finale of a Sun Records reunion album that featured Nelson's early idols Johnny Cash, Roy Orbison, Carl Perkins, and Jerry Lee Lewis. (The album documenting the event, Interviews From "The Class of '55" Recording Sessions, won a Grammy in 1986 for Best Spoken Word or Nonmusical Recording; it was Nelson's only Grammy.)

By 1985, Nelson had assembled a new, young band, bassist Pat Woodward, drummer Ricky Intveld, keyboardist Andy Chapin (who'd worked with Steppenwolf and the Association), and lead guitarist Bobby Neal, whom Nelson had met on an earlier recording date in Memphis. (The resulting Memphis Sessions, a collection of rockabilly covers, was released posthumously.) That August, a live documentary of Nelson was taped during a tour on which he opened for Fats Domino and was backed by the Jordanaires. He signed a new deal with Curb/MCA and on December 26, completed recording Buddy Holly's "True Love Ways" for his upcoming album. He closed his last performance four days later with Holly's "Rave On."

On December 31, 1985, en route to a New Year's Eve show in Dallas, Texas, Nelson's DC-3 (which had previously been owned by Jerry Lee Lewis) caught on fire and crashed in a field near DeKalb, Texas. Early press reports erroneously suggested that drug use, namely freebasing cocaine, might have played a role in the crash that killed Rick, his band, and his fiancée, Helen Blair (the pilot and copilot survived). In fact, the National Transportation Safety Board's 1987 report determined that the fire began in a malfunctioning gas heater. Nelson was buried in L.A.'s Forest Lawn Cemetery.

In the years immediately following Rick Nelson's death, many other artists paid tribute to him: Bob Dylan included "Lonesome Town" in his 1986 concerts, and newer artists, including Jimmie Dale Gilmore, Dwight Yoakam, and Chris Isaak, have cited his influence. Sons Matthew and Gunnar, now known professionally as Nelson, regularly perform their father's hits, particularly "Garden Party" and "Lonesome Town," in concert. The enduring appeal of "America's favorite family" made A&E's Biography broadcast of Ozzie & Harriet: The Adventures of America's Favorite Family one of the series' highest-rated programs ever.

Sandy Nelson

Born Sander L. Nelson, Dec. 1, 1938, Sarita Monica, CA
1961—Let There Be Drums (Imperial) 1962—Drums Are My Beat!; Golden Hits.

Sandy Nelson scored several hits in the late '50s and early '60s with his rocking guitar-and-drum-based instrumentals, most notably 1959's "Teen Beat" (#4). Nelson was friends with Jan and Dean, Nancy Sinatra, and Phil Spector when they were all in high school. His first band was Kip Tyler and the Flips, which at one point included future Beach Boy Bruce Johnston on piano. That band recorded for Ebb and Challenge records. Nelson later played on the Teddy Bears' gold "To Know Him Is to Love Him" (he also toured with them) and also drummed on Gene Vincent's 1959 Crazy Times LP before recording "Teen Beat" for the small Original Sound label. The song went gold, and Nelson was quickly signed by Imperial Records. His second hit, however, didn't come until 1961, with "Let There Be Drums" (#7).

Just before he cut that record, Nelson lost his left foot in a car accident—but it didn't affect his drumming. He later hit with "Drums Are My Beat" (#29, 1962) and a "Teen Beat" update inventively titled "Teen Beat '65" (#44, 1964). He continued to record, with only minor success, through the mid-'70s.

Tracy Nelson

Born Dec. 27, 1944, Madison, WI
1965—Deep Are the Roots (Prestige) 1968—Living With the Animals (Mercury) 1969—Make a Joyful Noise; Mother Earth Presents Tracy Nelson Country 1970—Satisfied 1971—Bring Me Home (Reprise) 1973—A Poor Man's Paradise (Columbia) 1974—Tracy Nelson (Atlantic) 1975—Sweet Soul Music (MCA) 1976—Time Is on My Side 1978—Homemade Songs (Flying Fish) 1980—Doin' It My Way (Adelphi) 1993—In the Here and Now (Rounder) 1995—I Feel So Good 1996—Move On 2001—Ebony & Irony (Eclectic/CMD).
With Marcia Ball and Irma Thomas: 1998—Sing It! (Rounder).

Tracy Nelson was long considered one of the strongest female singers in rock—especially during her time with Mother Earth during the late '60s, when she was sometimes compared to Janis Joplin. But she soon edged away from Mother Earth's R&B gospel and began stressing country when the band moved to Nashville. One of her songs, "Down So Low," has been covered by Linda Ronstadt and many other singers.

Growing up in Wisconsin, Nelson began playing piano at age five, guitar at 13. She also sang in the church choir. She played coffeehouses while attending the University of Wisconsin and also during that period formed her first band, the Fabulous Imitations, which was followed by the White Trash Blues Band, which lasted two weeks. She recorded her first solo LP around this time, too, the blues-influenced Deep Are the Roots on Prestige, with harmonica player Charlie Musselwhite and other Chicago blues musicians backing her. In 1966 Nelson moved to San Francisco, and in July of that year she formed Mother Earth (named after a Memphis Slim blues song). Its critically respected debut, Living With the Animals, included backup by Elvin Bishop and Mark Naftalin of the Paul Butterfield Blues Band. In 1969 the group moved to a farm outside Nashville, and its music became increasingly country oriented (as evidenced on Mother Earth Presents Tracy Nelson Country). After Bring Me Home, the band went through many personnel changes; the only member to stick with Nelson through them was guitarist John "Toad" Andrews. In 1973 the band (by now billed as Tracy Nelson/Mother Earth) released A Poor Man's Paradise, and in 1974 Nelson recorded her self-titled solo Atlantic debut. The album included a duet with Willie Nelson, "After the Fire Is Gone," which was nominated for a Grammy. In 1975 she signed with MCA, and in the late '70s she recorded albums for the independent Flying Fish and Adelphi labels. Homemade Songs included a duet with Carlene Carter. Comfortable playing Nashville clubs, Nelson vanished from the recording scene for over a decade before reemerging with 1993's critically acclaimed In the Here and Now, recorded in Nashville with such guest artists as Musselwhite and New Orleans R&B singer Irma Thomas, to whom she had dedicated her 1976 album Time Is on My Side. The '90s saw Nelson return to blues and R&B, a move culminating in 1998's Sing It!, a collaboration with Thomas and pianist Marcia Ball.

Willie Nelson

Born Apr. 30, 1933, Abbott, TX

1962—... And Then I Wrote (Liberty) 1963—Here's Willie Nelson 1967—Make Way for ... (RCA); The Party's Over 1968—Texas in My Soul; Good Times 1971—Willie Nelson and Family; Yesterday's Wine 1972—The Willie Way 1974—Phases and Stages (Atlantic) 1975—What Can You Do to Me (RCA); Red Headed Stranger (Columbia) 1976—The Sound in Your Mind; Troublemaker; Wanted! The Outlaws (with Waylon Jennings, Tompall Glaser, Jessi Colter) (RCA); Live 1977—To Lefty From Willie (Columbia) 1978—Waylon and Willie (with Waylon Jennings) (RCA); Stardust (Columbia) 1979—Willie and Family Live; Pretty Paper; ... Sings Kristofferson; Sweet Memories (RCA); One for the Road (with Leon Russell) (Columbia) 1980—San Antonio Rose (with Ray Price); Honeysuckle Rose soundtrack 1981—Somewhere Over the Rainbow; Willie Nelson's Greatest Hits and Some That Will Be 1982—Always on My Mind; Pancho and Lefty (with Merle Haggard); Waylon and Willie: WWII (with Waylon Jennings); In the Jailhouse Now (with Webb Pierce) 1983—Tougher Than Leather; Without a Song 1984—City of New Orleans; Angel Eyes; Music From Songwriter (with Kris Kristofferson); Funny How Time Slips Away (with Faron Young) 1985—Half Nelson; Me and Paul; Brand on My Heart (with Hank Snow) 1986—Partners; The Promiseland |1987—Island in the Sea 1988—What a Wonderful World; All-Time Greatest Hits, vol. 1 (RCA) 1989—A Horse Called Music (Columbia) 1990—Nite Life: Greatest Hits and Rare Tracks 1959-71 (Rhino); Born for Trouble (Columbia) 1991—Who Will Buy My Memories? (Sony Music Special Products); Clean Shirt (with Waylon Jennings) (Epic) 1993—Across the Borderline (Columbia) 1994—Moonlight Becomes You (Justice) 1995—Healing Hands of Time (Liberty); Willie Nelson: A Classic and Unreleased Collection (Rhino) 1996—Spirit (Island) 1998—Teatro 1999—Night and Day (Free Falls) 2000—Me and the Drummer (with the Offenders) (Luck); Milk Cow Blues (Island); Willie Nelson Live at the Grapevine Opry (Great Music).
With the Highwaymen (Johnny Cash, Waylon Jennings, and Kris Kristofferson): 1985—Highwayman (Columbia) 1990—Highwayman II 1995—The Road Goes On Forever (Capitol) 1999—Highwaymen Super Hits (Sony).

One of country & western's most popular, prolific, and distinctive singer/songwriters, Willie Nelson started out as a songwriter without much of a solo singing career and eventually became a star singer mostly covering pop and C&W standards. His dry, wry voice and plaintive, understated delivery helped him transcend country to reach wider pop audiences. In the '70s he spearheaded "outlaw" country—the non-Nashville alliance between "redneck" country musicians and "hippie" rock musicians—and helped establish Austin, Texas, as a country-rock capital. His grizzled face brought him film roles in Electric Horseman, Honeysuckle Rose, Barbarossa, and 1984's Songwriter, in which he costarred with Kris Kristofferson (who, a year later, would join Nelson, Johnny Cash, and Waylon Jennings on the first Highwaymen project). His problems with the Internal Revenue Service, as well as his leisure-time marijuana use, made

Nelson an "outlaw" for real—and a counterculture style hero to many, long after the counterculture had gone back underground.

Nelson was raised by his grandparents and worked cotton fields until he was 10, when he began playing guitar in local German and Czech polka bands. He joined the air force, after which he attended Baylor University in Waco, Texas. Before dropping out, he sold Bibles and encyclopedias door-to-door, worked as a disc jockey and musician, and taught Sunday school. While teaching Sunday school in Fort Worth, Nelson was also playing honky-tonk clubs on Saturday nights, when his parishioners demanded he choose between the church and music, he chose the latter. He played bars around the country, taught guitar, and wrote songs.

With the $50 he earned from his first published song, "Family Bible," Nelson went to Nashville, where songwriter Hank Cochran got him a publishing contract. Nelson wrote pop and C&W hits for many artists: "Night Life" for Rusty Draper, "Funny How Time Slips Away" for Jimmy Elledge and Johnny Tillotson, "Crazy" for Patsy Cline, "Hello Walls" for Faron Young, "Wake Me When It's Over" for Andy Williams, and "Pretty Paper" for Roy Orbison. Eventually he had a recording contract of his own, but his weathered tenor and his taste for sparse backup were considered uncommercial.

When his Nashville home burned down around 1970, Nelson moved back to Texas, continuing to record, write, and perform. In 1972 he held his first annual Fourth of July picnic with young and old rock and country musicians in Dripping Springs, Texas—an event that would soon become a local institution. The Fourth of July was named Willie Nelson Day by the Texas Senate in 1975. In Austin, Nelson also began to clarify his own ideas on country music, simultaneously reclaiming traditions of honky-tonk, Western swing, and early country music and giving the songs a starker, more modern outlook. Phases and Stages, a concept album produced by Arif Mardin, introduced Nelson's mature style, and 1975's Red Headed Stranger, a "country opera," made his music a commercial success. With a hit remake of Fred Rose's "Blue Eyes Crying in the Rain" (originally recorded by Roy Acuff in the '40s), the album went gold. In 1975 Nelson shared the Outlaws compilation LP with Waylon Jennings, Tompall Glaser, and Jessi Colter, three other country musicians ignored by the Nashville establishment; it was the first platinum country LP.

Willie Nelson

Nelson and his band, which included his older sister Bobbie on piano, toured constantly through the '70s and were a major concert attraction through the South and West before the rest of the country caught on. But by the end of the decade, Nelson was an established star. Willie and Family Live (1978) went double platinum.

Meanwhile, Nelson's songwriting tapered off; he did an album-length tribute to Kris Kristofferson and made duet albums with George Jones, Merle Haggard, and Ray Price. The 4 million-seller Stardust, produced by Memphis veteran Booker T. Jones, was an album of old pop standards. For Honeysuckle Rose, Nelson wrote one new song, "On the Road Again," that became a #1 country single and a #20 pop hit. In the '80s Nelson had multiplatinum albums with Always on My Mind and Greatest Hits while maintaining his prolific output of music and films. The first Highwaymen collaboration with Kristofferson, Jennings, and Johnny Cash (#35, 1985) went gold—as did the 1985 Half Nelson, though it reached only #178 on the pop albums chart. In 1984 Nelson dueted with Julio Iglesias on the #5 pop hit "To All the Girls I've Loved Before"; in 1985 he helped launch the first Farm Aid concert for America's embattled family farmers. Along with Neil Young and John Mellencamp, he has helped organize each succeeding Farm Aid benefit show.

Since the early '70s, even while performing in Las Vegas (as he did in the late '70s), Nelson has sported his standard attire: long hair and beard, headband, jeans, T-shirt, and running shoes. The latter four items were nearly the only possessions he had left after the IRS investigated him and in 1990 slapped him with a $16.7 million bill. Nelson was forced to auction off almost all of his possessions in 1991 (most of them reportedly bought by friends who vowed to return them to Nelson once he regained financial stability). To help raise desperately needed capital, Nelson sold Who'll Buy My Memories? (subtitled The IRS Tapes) direct through an 800 telephone number. Nelson and the IRS eventually agreed to a $9 million settlement, and the singer sued the accounting firm of Price Waterhouse, claiming it had mismanaged his finances. More money came in through Nelson's appearances in TV and radio ads for Taco Bell.

In 1993 Nelson recorded the acclaimed Across the Borderline, on which such in-demand rock pros as producer Don Was (who'd recently rescued Bonnie Raitt and the B-52's from commercial oblivion) and mixer Bob Clearmountain recorded Nelson duetting with Bonnie Raitt, Sinéad O'Connor, and Bob Dylan, on tunes by Dylan, Paul Simon, Peter Dinklage, John Hiatt, and Lyle Lovett. Nelson followed that up with Moonlight Becomes You, a Stardust-style album of old pop standards that began with a "hidden" track in which Nelson told listeners that the album was on independent Justice Records because no major label would gamble on releasing such a record. Be that as it may, Nelson moved to Liberty for his next recording, 1995's Healing Hands of Time, another set of pop standards. The following year, he became the first country performer to sign with Island Records, and he released the self-penned, self-produced Spirit; he followed that with the critically acclaimed Teatro (#104, 1998), a collaboration with producer Daniel Lanois. Eclectic as always, Nelson then released a jazzy collection of instrumentals (1999's Night and Day) before segueing into his first blues record (2000's Milk Cow Blues), on which he revisited some of his older songs. His long-delayed reggae album, on which he has been working on and off since 1996 with producer Don Was, is now scheduled for a 2001 release. Nelson was inducted in the Country Music Hall of Fame in 1993.

Nelson

Formed 1988, Los Angeles, CA

Matthew Nelson (b. Matthew Gray Nelson, Sep. 20, 1967, Los Angeles), voc., bass; Gunnar Nelson (b. Gunnar Eric Nelson, Sep. 20, 1967, Los Angeles), voc., gtr.; Brett Garsed (b. Apr. 20, 1963, Victoria, Austral.), lead gtr.; Joey Cathcart (b. June 29, 1967, San Fernando Valley, CA), rhythm gtr.; Paul Mirkovich (b. Mar. 20, 1963, Studio City, CA), kybds.; Bobby Rock (b. July 13, 1963, Houston, TX), drums.
1990—After the Rain (DGC/Geffen) 1995—Because They Can 1998—Imaginator (Varèse).

Identical twin sons of the late rock star Rick Nelson, Gunnar and Matthew Nelson were among a string of successful second-generation rock acts to emerge in the late '80s (e.g., Julian Lennon, Ziggy Marley, and Wilson Phillips). The Nelson twins, though, are the only ones whose family's show-business legacy spans four generations. With their waist-length blond hair and videogenic good looks, Gunnar and Matthew were pop-star naturals, and Nelson's melodic, neo-'70s AOR-rock—echoing Boston, Foreigner, and Heart—found a wide audience.

Gunnar and Matthew grew up in a typical latter-day Hollywood home, a far cry from the '50s idyll that their paternal grandparents Ozzie and Harriet Nelson depicted on their long-running TV series The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet. In fact, father Rick, Ozzie and Harriet's boy, was often on tour, while his wife, Kris Harmon (sister of actor Mark Harmon and actress Kelly Harmon), became an alcoholic and later a drug abuser. After their parents separated bitterly in 1977 amid mutual charges of infidelity and substance abuse, the twins stayed first with their mother, then—on their 18th birthday in 1985—moved in with Rick, who'd whetted their musical appetites by taking them backstage, on tour, and to recording studios when he could. Three months later, on New Year's Eve, 1985, Rick was killed in a plane crash en route to a concert. Gunnar and Matthew had planned to accompany their father on that tour, but Rick inexplicably decided at the last minute not to take them.

Though devastated, the boys kept a previously booked engagement on TV's Saturday Night Live in early 1986. Stung by accusations that they were capitalizing on their father's death, the pair retreated and regrouped. Gunnar, who'd been playing drums, learned guitar so he could move out front with Matthew.

They eventually recorded demo tapes that landed a 1988 deal. Two years in the making, After the Rain (the title referred to their familial tribulations, which included older sister and actress Tracy Nelson's bout with Hodgkin's disease) hit #17, yielding a #1 hit single in "(Can't Live Without Your Love and Affection," plus "After the Rain" (#6, 1990), "More Than Ever" (#14, 1991), and "Only Time Will Tell" (#28, 1991). Though Nelson had a followup ready for release in 1993, DGC shelved the album (a concept disc about television called Imaginator) because it wasn't pop-oriented enough. Meanwhile, the success of more raw-boned acts like Nirvana and Pearl Jam cast the siblings' brand of power pop out of favor. The acoustic-based Because They Can was released in 1995, but by then Nelson's major-label days were nearly over. Imaginator was released in 1998 on an independent label, and the brothers continued to tour while attempting to rebuild their career in Nashville.

The Nerves: See the Beat

Mike Nesmith

Born Robert Michael Nesmith, Dec. 30, 1942, Houston, TX
 1968—Mike Nesmith Produces/The Wichita Train Whistle Sings (Dot)
 1970—Magnetic South (RCA); Loose Salute 1971—Nevada Fighter
 1972—Tantamount to Treason; And the Hits Just Keep On Comin'
 1973—Pretty Much Your Ranch Standard Stash 1974—The Prison (Pacific Arts)
 1976—Best of (RCA) 1977—From a Radio Engine to a Photon Wing (Pacific Arts)
 1978—Live at the Palais; Compilation 1979—Infinite Rider on the Big Dogma
 1980—Elephant Parts 1989—The Newer Stuff (Rhino) 1991—The Older Stuff: The Best of Michael Nesmith (1970–1973)
 1994—The Garden (Rio Royal) 1999—16 Original Classics (Collectables).

Michael Nesmith came to the Monkees as an experienced musician and continued to prosper after the group dissolved in 1969, largely as a pioneer and innovator in the field of video. Nesmith's mother, an ex-secretary, grew rich after inventing Liquid Paper. He grew up in Farmers Branch, Texas, just outside Dallas. When he was 20, he got a guitar as a Christmas gift upon his discharge from the air force. Nesmith formed local folk-country bands and played club dates, venturing further and further afield during the '60s. On the way home from a Rhode Island gig, he stopped off in Memphis to do some session work with Stax/Volt Records. He then moved to L.A. and played the folk circuit as a solo act until he auditioned for—and became one of—the Monkees [see entry].

In 1968 Nesmith's "Different Drum" became Linda Ronstadt's first big hit. That same year, before the Monkees broke up, he recorded Wichita, an instrumental LP of his own compositions. When the Monkees finally dissolved, Nesmith formed the First National Band—featuring steel guitarist Red Rhodes—and made Magnetic South, which yielded the hit single "Joanne" (#21, 1970). After Loose Salute, the First National Band broke up, and Nesmith—retaining Rhodes and adding bassist Johnny Meeks, who'd played with Gene Vincent's Blue Caps—formed the Second National Band. At this time, he announced plans for a trilogy of three-album sets, nine LPs in all, that would detail the past, present, and future of country & western music. However, when Jac Holzman stepped down as president of Elektra Records—with whom Nesmith's Countryside label was affiliated—his replacement, David Geffen, was less receptive to the idea and shelved it.

Still, Nesmith's projects tended to grow more ambitious. He formed the Pacific Arts Corporation and in 1974 released the concept album The Prison, which included a book that was eventually worked into a stage play/ballet. Three years later, "Rio," a track from From a Radio Engine to the Photon Wing, was a Top 30 hit in the U.K. and a hit in several foreign countries, thanks in large part to the innovative video clip Nesmith produced for it through his then-fledgling film company, Pacific Arts. Here in America, where the clip was rarely if ever seen, "Rio" vanished, and From a Radio Engine was not even among the Top 200, demonstrating the power of video. Less than three years later, Nesmith's Elephant Parts, a conceptual rock video that combined music, comedy, and dance, received much critical acclaim and, in 1981, won the first Grammy ever awarded to a video. That year also saw the release of his Popclips, a series of syndicated half-hour video programs, hosted by Howie Mandel and shown on Nickelodeon. At that point, many artists were making video clips intended for airing on foreign television and on music programs such as American Bandstand. Warner Cable expressed interest in buying the Popclips name and creating all-music-video programming. Nesmith and company declined. Two years later, Warner Cable launched MTV.

Until Pacific Arts dissolved in 1994, it was a major force in music video; among the many videos produced there was Lionel Richie's "All Night Long." In addition to video work, Nesmith produced the feature films Repo Man and Tapeheads as well as his own projects. He was also involved in home video distribution. A 1990 distribution deal with PBS Home Video would be Pacific Arts' undoing: Through what a judge would term "intentional misrepresentation" and "intentional interference" with Pacific Arts' contractual relationships with third parties, PBS rendered Pacific Arts unable to pay its licensing fees—including those to PBS itself. PBS sued PA, Nesmith countersued, and in 1999 an L.A. federal judge awarded Nesmith almost $47 million after finding PBS guilty of several charges, including the aforementioned "intentional misrepresentation" and "interference."

Reportedly a multimillionaire, Nesmith continues to record sporadically. After years of refusing invitations to join in Monkees reunions (he claims he is no longer bitter about his experience), he participated in the recording of the group's 1996 album Justus. In 1998 he published his first novel, The Long Sandy Hair of Neftoon Zamora.

The Neville Brothers

Formed 1977, New Orleans, LA

Arthur Neville (b. Dec. 17, 1937), kybds., voc.; Charles Neville (b. 1939), saxes, perc., voc.; Aaron Neville (b. Jan. 24, 1941), voc., perc.; Cyril Neville (b. 1949), perc., voc.

1978—The Neville Brothers (Capitol) 1981—Fiyoo on the Biyou (A&M) 1984—Neville-ization (Black Top) 1985—Live at Tipitina's (Spindletop) 1987—Uptown (EMI America) 1988—Treacherous: A History of the Neville Brothers (Rhino) 1989—Yellow Moon (A&M) 1990—Brother's Keeper 1991—Treacherous Too! (Rhino) 1992—Family Groove (A&M) 1994—Live on Planet Earth 1996—Mitakuye Oyasin Oyasin 1997—The Very Best of the Neville Brothers (Rhino) 1999—Uptown Rulin': The Best of the Neville Brothers (A&M); Valence Street (Columbia).

Aaron Neville solo: 1990—Greatest Hits (Curb); My Greatest Gift (Rounder) 1991—Tell It Like It Is (Curb); Warm Your Heart (A&M) 1993—The Grand Tour; Aaron Neville's Soulful Christmas 1995—The Tattooed Heart 1997—To Make Me Who I Am 2000—The Very Best of Aaron Neville; Devotion (Tell It/EMI Gospel).

By the time the four Neville brothers formed their own group in 1977, the family name had been prominent in New Orleans R&B for more than two decades, thanks in large part to Art Neville's high school band, the Hawketts, who had recorded the perennial Carnival hit "Mardi Gras Mambo" in 1954. Charles and Aaron Neville had joined the Hawketts briefly, and when Art went into the navy in 1958, Aaron inherited the group's leadership.

In 1960 Aaron had his first solo hit, "Over You" (#21 R&B), on the Minit label; his second came with "Tell It Like It Is" (#2 pop, #1 R&B) for Parlo in 1966. Art and Aaron were reunited in the '60s when, with a three-man rhythm section, they gigged in New Orleans as the Neville Sounds. In 1967 producer Allen Toussaint hired Art and the Sounds' rhythm section—the future Meters—as his house band, and the Neville Sounds broke up. Aaron resumed his solo career, recording intermittently for Instant, Safan, and Bell, but also working as a dock hand. Charles went to New York to play sax in various jazz bands; he returned to New Orleans in the early '70s and served a three-year sentence at Angola Prison Farm for possession of two marijuana joints. The Nevilles got together in the studio again, this time with youngest brother, Cyril, in 1975, when they backed the Wild Tchoupitoulas, a "tribe" of Mardi Gras "black Indians" led by the Nevilles' uncle, George "Big Chief Jolly" Landry. The Wild Tchoupitoulas was released on Island Records in 1976, and the following year, after the Meters had disbanded, the Nevilles backed Landry onstage. Soon they were performing their own sets as the Neville Brothers, a vocal group specializing in four-part harmonies. Their first album presented them as something of a disco band, however, and Capitol dropped their contract.

It was three years before they recorded their second album, after Bette Midler persuaded producer Joel Dorn to work with them and the Nevilles secured the aid of R&B veteran arranger Wardell Quezergue. The result, Fiyoo on the Biyou, featured Aaron's delicate, quavering tenor on vocal warhorses like "Mona Lisa" and "The Ten Commandments of Love," as well as New Orleans "second-line" standards like "Iko Iko," and was widely praised but rarely bought. The Neville Brothers lost their contract. In 1982, having opened some U.S. shows for the Rolling Stones the year before, they were expected to sign with Rolling Stones Records. Instead, they recorded two live albums in New Orleans for the tiny independent Black Top and Spindletop labels. They continued to tour, too, carrying the feathered costumes and additional singers that transformed them into the Wild Tchoupitoulas to climax their shows.

While the Neville Brothers' recording career remained at a commercial impasse—only Yellow Moon (#66, 1989) and Brother's Keeper (#60, 1990) made the Top 100—Aaron Neville's career as a pop balladeer was rekindled through his 1989 duet with Linda Ronstadt, "Don't Know Much," which hit #2 pop. Millions came to marvel at the incongruity of Neville's angelic falsetto voice emerging from his imposing, hugely muscled physique and rather intimidating, craggy visage. Curb and Rounder capitalized on Aaron's success with best-ofs reaching back to the early '60s, while Ronstadt coproduced Warm Your Heart (#44, 1991), which included another Top 10 hit in "Everybody Plays the Fool" (#8, 1991), a remake of the Main Ingredient's 1972 hit. The Grand Tour (#37, 1993) yielded the Adult Contemporary hit in "Don't Take Away My Heaven," and Neville even enjoyed brief success with Soulful Christmas (#36, 1993) and The Tattooed Heart (#64 pop, #50 R&B, 1995). Aaron also won a 1994 Grammy for a vocal collaboration with Trisha Yearwood, "I Fall to Pieces." To Make Me Who I Am (#188 pop, #73 R&B, 1997) offered up another adult contemporary hit in "Say What's in My Heart," while 2000's Devotion, a traditional gospel record, earned Aaron Neville a Grammy nomination for Best Traditional Soul Gospel Album. In 2001, while he and his brothers began writing songs for another Neville Brothers album, Aaron was preparing a possible second gospel collection.

The Neville Brothers: Cyril, Aaron, Charles, Art

The New Christy Minstrels

Formed 1961

1962—The New Christy Minstrels (Columbia) 1963—The New Christy Minstrels in Person; Tall Tales! Legends and Nonsense; Ramblin' Featuring "Green Green" 1964—Today 1966—Greatest Hits 1999—Hits and Highlights 1962–1968 (Raven).

The New Christy Minstrels were an ultracommercial folk-based group that provided an early training ground for Kenny Rogers and the First Edition, John Denver, Larry Ramos, some members of the Association, actress Karen Black, future Byrd Gene Clark, Barry McGuire and Kim Carnes.

The group was formed by Randy Sparks in 1961. He'd taken the name from the Christy Minstrels, which had been formed back in 1842 by Edwin P. Christy. The original minstrels were a vaudeville act that popularized the work of Stephen Foster; it lasted in some incarnation or another until 1921, in its later stages including such figures as Al Jolson and Eddie Cantor. The "New" Minstrels were in no way related to the originals. They wrote their own material and first hit the chart in 1963 with "Green Green" (#14), cowritten by McGuire and Sparks, "Saturday Night" (#29, 1963), and "Today" (#17, 1964). Clark was with the group at this time, when it began playing the White House and other "establishment" places.

In 1964 the New Christy Minstrels hosted their own summer television show. In 1967 their musical director at the time, Mike Settle, took three other band members—Thelma Camacho, Kenny Rogers, and Terry Williams—and formed the First Edition (according to some sources, it was Rogers who formed the group). The Minstrels continued to record, with steadily declining sales, until their breakup in the early '70s.

New Edition

Formed ca. 1981, Boston, MA

Bobby Brown (b. Robert Bradsford Brown, Feb. 5, 1969, Boston), voc.; Michael Bivins (b. Aug. 10, 1968, Boston), voc.; Ricky Bell (b. Sep. 18, 1967, Boston), voc.; Ronnie DeVoe (b. Nov. 17, 1967, Boston), voc.; Ralph Tresvant (b. May 16, 1968, Boston), voc.
1983—Candy Girl (Streetwise) 1984—New Edition (MCA)
1985—All for Love 1985—Christmas All Over the World
1986—Under the Blue Moon 1988—(- Brown; + Johnny Gill [b. May 22, 1966, Washington, DC], voc.) Heart Break 1991—Greatest Hits 1996—Home Again (MCA) 1998—Lost in Love: Best of Slow Jams 2000—All the Number Ones (Hip-O/Universal).
Bobby Brown solo: see entry.
Bell, Biv, DeVoe: see Bell Biv DeVoe entry.
Johnny Gill solo: 1983—Johnny Gill (Atlantic) 1985—Chemistry 1993—Provocative (Motown) 1996—Let's Get the Mood Right 1997—Mood; Favorites.
Johnny Gill with LSG: 1997—Levert, Sweat, Gill (EastWest).
Ralph Tresvant solo: 1990—Ralph Tresvant (MCA) 1993—It's Goin' Down.

In the early '80s, the teenaged pop-funk outfit New Edition was dismissed as the branchchild of impresario Mauce Starr, an ambitious writer/producer whose slick, bouncy songs and savvy marketing had made its members stars. By the decade's end, however, the vocal group had bred some of the most intriguing artists in contemporary R&B. New Edition's original five members met while attending junior high school in Boston's Roxbury neighborhood. They were discovered by Starr while performing in a talent show he was promoting. After Starr landed them a deal with the hip-hop label Streetwise, New Edition scored two Top 10 R&B singles in 1983, "Candy Girl" (#1) and "Is This the End" (#8). Later that year, the group secured a major-label contract with MCA Records and severed ties with Starr, who went on to form New Kids on the Block.

Starr's writing and production nonetheless fueled New Edition's eponymous 1984 album, which reached #6 and spawned the hits "Cool It Now" (#4 pop, 1985, #1 R&B, 1984), "Mr. Telephone Man" (#12 pop, #1 R&B, 1985), and "Lost in Love" (#6 R&B, 1985). More successful R&B singles followed in 1985 and 1986: "Count Me Out" (#2, 1985), "A Little Bit of Love (Is All It Takes)" (#3, 1986), "With You All the Way" (#7, 1986), "Earth Angel" (#3, 1986), and "Once in a Lifetime Groove" (#10, 1986).

By then, though, the group was splintering. Bobby Brown left in 1986 to embark on a successful solo career [see entry] and was replaced by Johnny Gill, who sang on the 1988 hit "If It Isn't Love" (#7 pop, #2 R&B). Gill himself eventually went solo, as did Ralph Tresvant, whose self-titled debut album topped the R&B chart in 1990 and yielded the #1 R&B single "Sensitivity" (#4 pop). In 1991 Tresvant scored the R&B hits "Stone Cold Gentleman" (#3), which featured Brown rapping, and "Do What I Gotta Do" (#2). In 1988 the remaining members of New Edition formed the hip-hop trio Bell Biv DeVoe [see entry], this group had pop and R&B hits with the songs "Poison" (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1990) and "Do Me!" (#3 pop, #4 R&B, 1990). All six members (including both Brown and Gill) reunited in 1996 for an album of new material, Home Again—featuring tracks produced by Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis, Sean Combs, and Gerald Levert—which quickly rose to #1 on both the pop and R&B charts and featured the singles "Hit Me Off" (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1996), "I'm Still in Love With You" (#7 pop and R&B, 1996), "You Don't Have to Worry" (#10 R&B, 1996), and "One More Day" (#22 R&B, 1997). In 1997 the re-formed group toured, performing a mixture of New Edition songs and their individual solo hits. There was tension between some of the members, however, and Brown, amid his own infamous legal troubles, left the tour before it ended. In 1998 the group's longtime record label, MCA, filed a breach-of-contract lawsuit against the most recent members (excluding Brown), claiming it was owed four more New Edition albums and two more Bell Biv DeVoe albums. A couple of greatest-hits collections were released, one of which, All the Number Ones, included both group and solo material, but Brown and Gill have continued to concentrate on their solo careers, while Bivins established the record label Biv10, for which he grooms new talent.

New Kids on the Block/NKOTB

Formed 1985, Boston, MA

Donnie Wahlberg (b. Aug. 17, 1969, Boston), voc.; Jonathan Knight (b. Nov. 29, 1968, Worcester, MA), voc.; Jordan Knight (b. May 15, 1970, Worcester, MA), voc.; Danny Wood (b. May 14, 1969, Boston), voc.; Joe McIntyre (b. Dec. 31, 1972, Needham, MA), voc.

1986—New Kids on the Block (Columbia) 1988—Hangin' Tough 1989—Merry, Merry Christmas 1990—Step by Step, No More Games: The Remix Album 1994—Face the Music (as NKOTB) 1999—Greatest Hits.

Jordan Knight solo: 1999—Jordan Knight (Interscope).

Joe McIntyre solo: 1999—Stay the Same (C2/Columbia).

When composer/producer/promoter Maurice Starr lost New Edition, the teen-soul outfit he created in the early '80s, to a record contract dispute, the impresario resolved to create an equally successful all-white act in New Edition's image. He more than succeeded: New Kids on the Block, in fact, eclipsed the superstardom achieved by its predecessors (as a collective unit, at least), scoring numerous smash singles and, in 1991, topping Forbes magazine's list of highest-paid American entertainers, surpassing even Michael Jackson and Madonna. The vocal group's R&B-flavored bubblegum pop didn't prove as popular with critics as it did with the young girls who flocked to their shows and gobbled up New Kids merchandise. (At the group's peak, there were more than 140 products licensed with the group's name.) After suffering some professional and legal troubles, the Kids tried to reinvent themselves as a more mature, musically ambitious act, NKOTB.

In 1984 Starr enlisted a Boston talent agency to find white singers, rappers, and dancers. The agency first discovered Donnie Wahlberg, who would become the band's most outspoken and artistically confident member. (In 1991 he produced a hit album for his kid brother, Marky Mark.) Wahlberg introduced Starr to brothers Jonathan and Jordan Knight—respectively New Kids' oldest member and its falsetto-voiced lead singer (who joined the group with braces on his teeth)—and break dancer Danny Wood. All of the boys had been bused to the same grade school in Roxbury, a mostly black neighborhood where Starr lived. Joe McIntyre completed the lineup of Nynuk, which became New Kids on the Block after Wahlberg wrote a song by that name for the quintet's eponymous debut album.

Originally released in 1986, New Kids on the Block sold poorly. But after a slow start, 1988's Hangin' Tough—written, produced, and arranged by Starr—became a #1 pop album, fueled by the hits "Please Don't Go Girl" (#10, 1988) and "You Got It (The Right Stuff)" (#3, 1989). More Top 10 singles followed: "I'll Be Loving You (Forever)" (#1, 1989); "Hangin' Tough" (#1, 1989) and its B side, a cover of the 1970 Delfonics hit "Didn't I (Blow Your Mind)" (#8, 1989); "Cover Girl" (#2, 1989); and "This One's for the Children" (#7, 1990). Step by Step, which the New Kids coproduced with Michael Jonzun and Starr, also topped the charts in 1990, generating a #1 title track and the #7 song "Tonight."

An album of remixes, released later that year, peaked at #19 in 1991. By then backlash-inducing problems had arisen: Wahlberg and McIntyre were allegedly involved in two separate brawls in which other parties were injured. That same year, Wahlberg was charged with hotel-room arson; after pleading guilty to criminal mischief, he was ordered to make public-service announcements. Then, a former New Kids producer sued Starr on the grounds that the boys hadn't sung on their albums, an accusation they publicly refuted. In 1992 the group resurfaced as NKOTB, with the single "If You Go Away" (#16), which didn't win over any detractors. But NKOTB's 1994 album, the Starr-less Face the Music, fared surprisingly well with critics. The album's producers included Wahlberg, hip-hop wizard Teddy Riley, and smooth pop veteran Narada Michael Walden (Whitney Houston, Maniah Carey). Still, this would be the group's last effort before the members embarked on solo careers.

Although it looked like McIntyre would get a big acting break as the male lead in the movie version of the off-Broadway musical The Fantasticks in 1995, the film sat on the shelf for five years and got little attention when it was finally released. In the interim, McIntyre (who, oddly, went from the more mature moniker Joe to Joey when he got older) wrote and recorded pop songs, financed a solo album, and sold more than 2,000 copies via his Web site before the New Kids' former label, Columbia, signed him and released the effort, Stay the Same (#49, 1999), on its offshoot label C2 in 1999. Meanwhile, also in 1999, Jordan Knight cofinanced a collaboration with famed writer-producer team Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis (Janet Jackson) and released a self-titled solo album of uptempo R&B tunes. Wahlberg, like his younger brother Mark, pursued acting. He landed leading roles in a 1998 TV remake of The Taking of Pelham One Two Three and the independent film Southie the same year, as well as a small but pivotal role in the 1999 smash The Sixth Sense. Wood became a music producer in Miami, while Jonathan Knight left the entertainment industry and began a career in real estate.

Randy Newman

Born Nov. 28, 1944, New Orleans, LA
 1968—Randy Newman (Reprise) 1970—12 Songs 1971—Live 1972—Sail Away 1974—Good Old Boys 1977—Little Criminals (Warner Bros.) 1979—Born Again
 1981—Ragtime soundtrack (Elektra) 1983—Trouble in Paradise (Warner Bros.) 1984—The Natural soundtrack
 1987—Three Amigos soundtrack 1988—Land of Dreams (Reprise) 1989—Parenthood soundtrack 1990—Avalon soundtrack; Awakenings soundtrack 1994—The Paper soundtrack 1995—Maverick soundtrack (Warner Bros); Walt Disney's Toy Story soundtrack (Disney); Faust (Reprise)
 1996—James and the Giant Peach soundtrack (Disney) 1997—Cats Don't Dance soundtrack (PGD/PolyGram)
 1998—Pleasantville soundtrack (Varèse Sarabande); A Bug's Life soundtrack (Disney); Gully: 30 Years of Randy Newman (Rhino) 1999—Bad Love (DreamWorks); Toy Story 2 soundtrack (Disney) 2000—Meet the Parents soundtrack (DreamWorks).

Randy Newman writes mordant, ironic, concise songs with chromatic twists worthy of George Gershwin and Kurt Weill. He sings in a deep drawl and accompanies himself on piano (Fats Domino was an early hero) and often tours alone. Newman tends to write lyrics about characters usually bordering on the pathological: bigots, perverts, slaveship captains, ELO fans. While this practice tends to limit his pop appeal, a few of his songs have been widely covered, and he has a solid cult following. He has had one major hit single—"Short People" (#2, 1978)—and recorded other popular songs, including "The Blues" (#54, 1983) and "I Love L.A." Since the '80s he has also established himself as a leading composer of movie soundtracks, collecting 13 Oscar nominations for his efforts.

Newman grew up in a musical family with Hollywood connections; his uncles Alfred and Lionel both scored numerous films. By age 17, Randy was staff writer for a California music publisher. One semester short of a B.A. in music from UCLA, he dropped out of school. Lenny Waronker, son of Liberty Records' president, was a close friend and, later, as a staff producer for Warner Bros., helped get Newman signed to the label.

Newman's early songs were recorded by a number of performers. His friend Harry Nilsson recorded an entire album with Newman on piano, Nilsson Sings Newman, in 1970. Judy Collins ("I Think It's Going to Rain Today"), Peggy Lee ("Love Story"), and Three Dog Night—for whom "Mama Told Me (Not to Come)" hit #1—all enjoyed success with Newman's music.

Newman became a popular campus attraction when touring with Nilsson. His status as a cult star was affirmed by his critically praised debut, Randy Newman, in 1968, which featured his own complex arrangements for full orchestra, and later by 1970's 12 Songs. He also sang "Gone Dead Train" on the soundtrack of Performance (1970). Live and Sail Away were Newman's first commercial successes, but his audience has been limited to some degree because his songs are often colored by his ironic, pointed sense of humor, which is rarely simple and frequently misunderstood.

Randy Newman

Good Old Boys, for example, was a concept album about the South, with the lyrics expressing the viewpoint of white Southerners. Lyrics such as "We're rednecks, and we don't know our ass from a hole in the ground" made people wonder whether Newman was being satirical or sympathetic. He toured (to Atlanta and elsewhere) behind the album with a full orchestra that played his arrangements and was conducted by his uncle Emil Newman.

Little Criminals, in 1977, contained Newman's first hit single, "Short People," which mocked bigotry and was taken seriously by a vocal offended minority. "Baltimore" from that album was covered by Nina Simone. Following that album's release, Newman toured for the first time since 1974. He claimed that in the interim he'd done nothing but watch television and play with his three sons.

In 1979 his Born Again featured guest vocals by members of the Eagles. In 1981 Newman composed the soundtrack for the film Ragtime (the first of many soundtrack assignments) and was nominated for two Oscars (Best Song, Best Score). His 1983 album, Trouble in Paradise, included guest appearances by Linda Ronstadt, members of Fleetwood Mac, and Paul Simon, who sang a verse of "The Blues." That album's "I Love L.A." became something of an anthem, thanks in part to a flashy music video directed by Newman's cousin, Tim Newman (who went on to shoot popular videos for ZZ Top, among others). Land of Dreams (#80, 1988) spawned a minor hit in "It's Money That Matters" (#60, 1988). It would take Newman 10 more years to make another studio album, 1999's critically acclaimed Bad Love. With that record peaking at #194, he continues to meet his biggest success in Hollywood, where he spent most of the '90s becoming one of the town's most sought-after film composers. Although the material on his own records is literate and biting, the songs he writes for movies are decidedly simpler and with a sunnier outlook—and they usually meet with more success. Both "I Love to See You Smile" from Parenthood and "When She Loved Me" from Toy Story 2, for instance, were nominated for Oscars; in 1998 alone, Newman garnered three Oscar nominations for three different movies.

In 1995 Newman wrote a musical adaptation of Goethe's Faust. Both the play and the accompanying CD (which featured guests such as Bonnie Raitt, Linda Ronstadt, Elton John, Don Henley, and James Taylor in the role of God) were commercially unsuccessful. In 2000 he received the Billboard Century Award

New Order: See Joy Division

New Riders of the Purple Sage

Formed 1969, Marin County, CA

John "Marmaduke" Dawson (b. 1945, San Francisco, CA), gtr., voc.; David Nelson (b. San Francisco), gtr., voc.; Jerry Garcia (b. Aug. 1, 1942, San Francisco, d. Aug. 9, 1995, Forest Knolls, CA), pedal steel gtr.; Mickey Hart (b. ca. 1950, Long Island, NY), drums; Phil Lesh (b. Philip Chapman, Mar. 15, 1940, Berkeley, CA), bass.

1970–71—(– Hart; – Lesh; + Spencer Dryden [b. Apr. 7, 1943, New York, NY], drums; + Dave Torbert, bass) 1971—New Riders of the Purple Sage (Columbia) (– Garcia; + Buddy Cage [b. Toronto, Can.], pedal steel gtr.) 1972—Powerglide; Gypsy Cowboy 1973—The Adventures of Panama Red 1974—Home Home on the Road (– Torbert; + Skip Battin [b. Clyde Battin, Feb. 2, 1934, Galipolis, OH], bass) Brujo 1975—Oh, What a Mighty Time 1976—Best of the New Riders of the Purple Sage (– Battin; + Stephen Love [b. IN], bass); New Riders (MCA) 1977—(+ Allen Kemp, gtr.) Who Are These Guys 1978—Marin County Line (– Dryden) 1980—(– Love) Feelin' Alright (A&M) 1981 (– Dawson; – Cage) 1982—(+ Rusty Gauthier, gtr., violin, fiddle, mandolin, dobro) 1985—(– Kemp; + Gary Vogensen, voc., gtr.) 1986—Before Time Began (Relix) 1987—Vintage New Riders of the Purple Sage 1992—Midnight Moonlight 1994—(reunion lineup: Dawson; Nelson; Cage) Live in Japan 1997—Relix's Best of the New Riders of the Purple Sage.

The New Riders of the Purple Sage began as a loosely constructed offshoot of the Grateful Dead. The group's history dates back to spring 1969, when Dead lead guitarist Jerry Garcia first bought a pedal steel guitar and was searching for a country band to use it in. Jams developed among Garcia and the core of the new band—David Nelson and main songwriter John Dawson—plus other Dead members Mickey Hart and Phil Lesh, thus forming the first Riders band.

Hunter and Dawson had loose connections to Dead members dating back to 1962. Nelson first knew Garcia and lyricist Robert Hunter from his days in the Wildwood Boys back in art school. Nelson was also an early member of Big Brother and later the New Delhi River Band in Marin County, California, which included Dave Torbert and Dawson (who in 1964 had played in another Dead progenitor, Mother McCree's Uptown Jug Champions).

Hunter and Nelson named the band after Riders of the Purple Sage, a 1912 Western novel by Zane Grey, and they became the opening band for the Dead tours in 1970. By the time they got a contract with Columbia Records, in 1971 (by then they called themselves New Riders of the Purple Sage), former Jefferson Airplane drummer Spencer Dryden had replaced Hart, and Torbert had taken over for Lesh. Garcia bowed out after the debut (the Dead took up too much of his time), and in late 1971 the group added Buddy Cage on pedal steel. He'd previously played with Ian and Sylvia's Great Speckled Bird.

Like the Dead and Commander Cody, the Riders became associated with dope-smoking hippiedom, especially with the anthemic "Panama Red," written by nonmember Peter Rowan. This made the band a strong concert attraction, though their albums sold only moderately. The Adventures of Panama Red was their lone LP to go gold. The lineup was stable until February 1974, after the live LP Home Home on the Road, when Torbert left to form Kingfish with Dead rhythm guitarist Bob Weir. Ex-Byrd Skip Battin took his place for two LPs and then left in 1976 to join a new version of the Flying Burrito Brothers. The group then switched to MCA and added Steve Love on bass. He'd previously played with Roger McGuinn as well as Rick Nelson's Stone Canyon Band. The New Riders recorded two LPs for MCA before being dropped. The group continued to tour, with Dawson at the helm, playing small clubs. Nelson left the band in the early '80s performing with the Jerry Garcia Acoustic Band, and in early 1994 formed the David Nelson Band. That year, Nelson, Dawson, and Cage reunited for some New Riders performances. Several archival recordings have been released on the Dead-affiliated Relix label.

Juice Newton

Born Judy Kay Newton, Feb. 18, 1952, NJ

1975—Juice Newton and Silver Spur (RCA) 1976—After the Dust Settles; Come to Me (Capitol) 1978—Well Kept Secret 1979—Take Heart 1981—Juice 1982—Quiet Lies 1983—Dirty Looks 1984—Can't Wait All Night (RCA); Greatest Hits (Capitol) 1987—Emotion 1988—Old Flame 1989—Ain't Gonna Cry 1990—Greatest Country Hits (Curb) 1998—The Trouble With Angels (River North); Anthology (Renaissance) 1999—American Girl.

Country-pop singer Juice Newton recorded five mostly ignored albums before she suddenly hit it big in 1981 with a platinum LP and three Top 10 singles, starting with a remake of Memlee Rush's 1968 hit "Angel of the Morning." Newton grew up in a Virginia seaside community and taught herself acoustic guitar at 13. She moved to Los Gatos, California, in the late '60s, and with Texas-born Otha Young formed Dixie Peach. A year later, in 1972, Newton and Young formed Silver Spur with bassist Tom Kealey. After years of doing cover-heavy bar gigs, the three began to concentrate on original material. In 1975 they signed to RCA (billed as Juice Newton and Silver Spur) and released an eponymous LP with heavy folk-rock leanings. They did one more unsuccessful album for RCA, After the Dust Settles, in 1976, and the next year signed to Capitol for Come to Me, produced by Elliot Mazer (who'd worked with Janis Joplin, Neil Young, and the Band). The LP was closer to country rock this time, and included a song given to her by Bob Seger called "Good Luck Baby Jane." Newton also sang backup vocals that year on Bob Welch's solo LP French Kiss. In 1978 Silver Spur disbanded, and Newton went solo with Well Kept Secret. In 1979 she had her first country hit, "Sunshine," from Take Heart.

Juice was her breakthrough LP. Following the success of "Angel of the Morning" (#4), she hit with "Queen of Hearts" (#2), a rockabilly track recorded in 1979 by Dave Edmunds, and "The Sweetest Thing" (#7 pop, #1 C&W, 1981). The LP went platinum. Other hit singles for Newton include "Love's Been a Little Bit Hard on Me" (#7 pop, #2 C&W, 1982), "Break It to Me Gently" (#11 pop, #2 C&W, 1982), "A Little Love" (#44 pop, #64 C&W, 1984), "You Make Me Want to Make You Mine" (#1 C&W, 1985), "I'm So Hurt" (#1 C&W, 1985), "Old Flame" (#1 C&W, 1986), "Both to Each Other (Friends and Lovers)" (#1 C&W, 1986), "Cheap Love" (#9 C&W, 1986), "What Can I Do With My Heart" (#9 C&W, 1986), and "Tell Me True" (#8 C&W, 1987). Having spent the '90s as a nightclub act, Newton began recording again in 1997, this time in an Adult Contemporary vein.

Olivia Newton-John

Born Sep. 26, 1948, Cambridge, Eng.
 1973—Let Me Be There (MCA) 1975—If You Love Me, Let Me Know 1977—Olivia Newton-John's Greatest Hits 1978—Totally Hot 1981—Physical 1982—Olivia's Greatest Hits, vol. 2 1985—Soul Kiss 1988—The Rumour 1989—Warm and Tender (Geffen) 1992—Back to Basics: The Essential Collection 1971–1992 1998—Back With a Heart (MCA).

Olivia Newton-John's career has mirrored the Sandra-Dee-to-leather-girl transformation of her role in Grease—from fresh-faced pop-country singer to a sexier pop-rock & roll singer. In both guises she has had great commercial success, scoring 15 Top 10 hits.

Newton-John's grandfather was Nobel Prize-winning German physicist Max Born, and her father was headmaster of Ormond College in Melbourne, Australia. Newton-John grew up in Melbourne, where in high school she formed her first band, the Sol Four, with three other girls. She quit school and at age 16 won a talent contest and was sent to England. For the next two years, she worked there with fellow Australian Pat Carroll (who later married Newton-John's producer John Farrar). When Carroll's visa expired, she was sent back to Australia, and Newton-John joined Don Kirshner's attempt to make a British Monkees, a short-lived band called Tomorrow (no relation to Steve Howe's first band).

She began touring with British superstar Cliff Richard and appearing regularly on his series It's Cliff Richard, which greatly boosted the British sales of her first single, Bob Dylan's "If Not for You" (1971), it was also a hit (#25) in America. She had other British hits with covers of George Harrison's "What Is Life" (1972) and John Denver's "Take Me Home Country Roads" (1973). Her US breakthrough came in 1973 with her first American LP, Let Me Be There (#54), which went gold, aided by the gold-single title track (#6). The album also won her a Grammy as Best Country Female Singer. Her next LP, If You Love Me, Let Me Know (#1, 1974), went gold and included the title-track gold single (#5, 1974) and a gold hit for her version of Peter Allen's "I Honestly Love You" (#1, 1974).

Newton-John moved to L.A., and her albums continued to go gold. Have You Never Been Mellow hit #1 in 1975. A number of country performers, however, resented her presence on the country chart—with hits like "Have You Never Been Mellow" (#1 pop, #3 C&W, 1975) and "Please Mr. Please" (#3 pop, #5 C&W, 1975)—and when she won the Best Female Singer award in 1976 from the Country Music Association, some members quit in protest.

In 1978 Newton-John starred in Grease, which went on to become the most profitable movie musical ever made, grossing over $160 million worldwide and yielding three singles for Newton-John—"You're the One That I Want," sung with John Travolta (#1), "Summer Nights" (#5), and "Hopelessly Devoted to You" (#3). She and Cliff Richard hit with their 1980 duet "Suddenly" (#20), and she also appeared that year in the film fantasy Xanadu, which was a commercial flop. The Xanadu album, however, peaked at #4 and went double platinum. Her sexier image was reinforced with the platinum LPs Totally Hot (#7, 1978) and Physical (#6, 1981), the latter of which boasted three 1982 hit singles, including the #1 title track, "Physical," which topped the chart for 10 weeks running. In 1983 she reunited with Travolta onscreen in Two of a Kind; the film was a critical and commercial failure, but its soundtrack spun off two charting singles: "Twist of Fate" (#5, 1983) and "Livin' in Desperate Times" (#31, 1984).

In 1984 Newton-John married actor Matt Lattanzi, from whom she separated in 1995; they have a daughter, Chloe, born in 1986. That year, she opened her chain of clothing stores, Koala Blue; it filed for bankruptcy in 1991. In the late '80s, she released her last album under her MCA contract, The Rumour, which did not break the U.S. Top 50. In 1989 she signed to Geffen, where her first release was a collection of children's songs and lullabies, Warm and Tender. Recorded in Nashville, the country-tinged Back With a Heart (#59, 1998) featured a new recording of her hit "I Honestly Love

You" with backup vocals by Babyface. The following year, she appeared in the independent movie Sordid Lives, for which she also wrote and performed five songs.

Since the birth of her daughter, Newton-John has been active in numerous environmental-protection efforts. In the early '80s, she was honored with an Order of the British Empire (OBE). In the early '90s, she successfully underwent treatment for breast cancer, an experience she documented on 1994's self-produced and self-released (in Australia) Gaia: One Woman's Journey.

The New York Dolls

Formed 1971, New York, NY

Johnny Thunders (b. John Genzale, July 15, 1954; d. Apr. 23, 1991, New Orleans, LA), gr.; Arthur Kane, bass; Billy Murcia (b. 1951, New York; d. Nov. 6, 1972, London, Eng.), drums; Rick Rivets, gr.; David Johansen (b. Jan. 9, 1950, Staten Island, NY), voc.

1972—(+ Sylvain Sylvain [b. Syl Mizrahi, 1953, Cairo, Egypt], gr.; - Rivets; - Murcia; + Jerry Nolan [b. May 7, 1951, New York; d. Jan. 14, 1992, New York], drums) 1973—New York Dolls (Mercury) 1974—Too Much Too Soon 1981—Lipstick Killers (ROIR) 1984—Red Patent Leather (Restless) 1985—Best of the New York Dolls (Mercury) 1986—Night of the Living Dolls 1993—Paris Le Trash (Triple X) 1994—Rock 'n' Roll (Mercury).

David Johansen solo: see entry.

Johnny Thunders solo: see Heartbreakers entry.

Sylvain Sylvain solo: 1979—Sylvain Sylvain (RCA) 1981—Sylvain Sylvain and the Teardrops (with the Teardrops) 1998—Sleep Baby Doll (Fish Head).

When the New York Dolls formed in late 1971, they were not only creating some of the most passionate music of the new glitter era (and in fact defining a new New York rock style) but setting the stage for the punk movement that followed five years later.

The band members were born and grew up in various boroughs of New York City and played in local bands; several had been in Actress. In late 1971 Johnny Thunders, Rick Rivets, Arthur Kane, and Billy Murcia began jamming, and soon they were joined by singer David Johansen. After they had replaced Rivets with Syl Sylvain, the combo started playing the Mercer Arts Center in Lower Manhattan. The Dolls' music was strongly influenced by the Rolling Stones, the MC5, the Stooges, and the Velvet Underground, but deliberately more amateurish. And their cross-dressing captured the outrage and threat of glam. Despite this, their music and attitude were down to earth, and their stardom-by-self-definition stance served to keep most record companies at a distance. Still, a local glam scene of sorts developed around the group.

During the Dolls' first tour of England, Murcia died after mixing alcohol with pills; the official cause of death was suffocation. The band replaced him with Jerry Nolan, who would appear on its Todd Rundgren-produced debut. Though both the debut and its followup—which was produced by George "Shadow" Morton—were critical successes, they were commercial disasters; the group's sound and image were just too weird. After they lost their recording contract, the Dolls were briefly managed by Malcolm McLaren (who later worked with the Sex Pistols), who suggested that they use a communist flag as a stage backdrop. When no new record contract developed, both Nolan and Thunders left the band, and Johansen and Sylvain continued to tour with various backing musicians under the Dolls name through 1977. Thunders and Nolan formed the Heartbreakers [see entry], and later, Thunders created his own bands, one of which, Gang War, included MC5 guitarist Wayne Kramer. In 1978 Nolan and Kane played a few shows backing former Sex Pistol Sid Vicious. Johansen [see entry] began his solo career in 1978, and Sylvain stayed with Johansen's band until he quit in 1979 to start his own solo career.

Johnny Thunders died of a drug overdose in 1991. Former band mate Jerry Nolan made his last public performance at a memorial concert for Thunders—Nolan himself died shortly thereafter of a stroke at age 40.

Through the years, archival Dolls material has surfaced: In 1981 ROIR released Lipstick Killers, a formative Dolls studio tape from 1972, Red Patent Leather documents a 1975 New York show, Night of the Living Dolls includes previously unreleased material; Paris Le Trash is another live album. Rock 'n' Roll is an anthology.

Nice

Formed 1967, London, Eng.

Keith Emerson (b. Nov. 1, 1944, Todmorden, Eng.), organ, piano, synthesizers, voc.; Lee Jackson (b. Jan. 8, 1943, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Eng.), bass, gr., voc.; Brian "Blinky" Davison (b. May 25, 1942, Leicester, Eng.), drums; David O'List (b. Eng.), gr., voc.

1968—The Thoughts of Emerlist Davjack (Immediate) (- O'List) 1969—Ars Longa Vita Brevis; Nice 1970—Five Bridges (Mercury); Keith Emerson With the Nice 1971—Elegy.

Besides providing the blueprint for Emerson, Lake and Palmer, the Nice was a link between the early experimentalism of late-'60s psychedelia and classical-influenced art rock. As Keith Emerson's initial platform, its snickering desecration of the classics, along with its long instrumental interludes, helped expand the form—and pretensions—of rock.

The Nice began in August 1967 as a backup for English black female soul vocalist P.P. Arnold. All the members had previously played in other British groups; Emerson and Lee Jackson knew each other from the R&B aggregation Gary Farr and the T-Bones. By October, the Nice had split from Arnold and released its English debut single, "The Thoughts of Emerlist Davjack," on manager Andrew Oldham's Immediate Records; that title also graced its debut LP. The album's centerpiece was "Rondo," an organ raveup based on Mozart. Live, Emerson went wild on numbers like this (or on his jazzed-up version of Bob Dylan's "She Belongs to Me"), stabbing his keyboard with knives and pulling mock-masturbatory moves. Along with these antics (continued later in ELP), Emerson also wore flashy gold lamé clothes and performed stunts like burning a U.S. flag onstage at London's Royal Albert Hall during a performance of Leonard Bernstein's "America" from West Side Story. The Nice was subsequently banned from the hall, and Bernstein tried to stop the group from releasing its instrumental version of the song in the U.S. Partly because Emerson had become the star, guitarist David O'List left. For a few days in 1969 he replaced Mick Abrahams in Jethro Tull.

During most of Nice's 2½-year career, it was a three-piece power trio, with Emerson establishing himself as the Hendrix of the organ. The group was popular in Europe but never sold many records in the U.S. The three were just beginning to draw some attention stateside when Emerson, playing the Fillmore West with the band, met Greg Lake while the latter was touring with King Crimson on its 1969 U.S. debut. Frustrated by the Nice's lack of success, Emerson trashed the group in early 1970 and formed ELP with Lake and drummer Carl Palmer later that year. The Nice's last LP, Elegy, was released shortly after ELP's debut in 1971.

Jackson formed Jackson Heights (which recorded five LPs between 1970 and 1973), and in 1974 he and Davison teamed up with keyboardist Patrick Moraz (who was Emerson's understudy in the Nice) in an ELP-style group called Refugee. But it didn't last, and Moraz went on to Yes and to the Moody Blues. Davison played briefly with Gong in the mid-'70s.

Stevie Nicks: See Fleetwood Mac

Nico

Born Christa Päffgen, Oct. 16, 1938, Cologne, Ger.; died July 18, 1988, Ibiza, Spain
 1968—Chelsea Girl (MGM/Verve) 1969—The Marble Index (Elektra) 1971—Desertshore (Reprise) 1974—June 1st, 1974 (with Kevin Ayers, John Cale, and Brian Eno) (Island); The End 1981—Drama of Exile (Aura) 1983—Do or Die! (Nico in Europe) (ROIR) 1985—Camera Obscura (Beggars' Banquet, U.K.) 1988—Nico/Peel Sessions (Strange Fruit, U.K.) 1998—The Classic Years (Island).

At one time billed as the Moon Goddess, singer Nico's dark, avant-garde music and deep, hypnotic voice were first heard in the Velvet Underground [see entry]. She continued to work sporadically as a solo artist after leaving the Velvets, though a longtime heroin addiction and methadone dependency sidetracked her career.

The German-born Nico first worked as a model in Paris but got into music in the mid-'60s through a friendship with Rolling Stone Brian Jones and Stones manager Andrew Loog Oldham, for whom she cut a British single, "The Last Mile," on his Immediate label in 1965. The song was produced, cowritten, and arranged by Jimmy Page. The next year, Nico met Andy Warhol in New York, socialized at the Factory, and appeared in his film The Chelsea Girls. (She had played a small role in Fellini's La Dolce Vita.) Warhol later introduced her to Lou Reed and John Cale in the Velvet Underground. She got feature billing in the band ("the Velvet Underground and Nico") but left after the first album. Nico's connection with her old group remained strong, though, and on her 1968 solo debut she recorded songs by Cale and Reed, as well as some by a 16-year-old named Jackson Browne, who accompanied her during shows. Besides Browne, at some early shows she was accompanied by Tim Hardin and Tim Buckley. The Marble Index and Desert Shore were produced and arranged by Cale; on The Marble Index he played all the instruments except Nico's own droning harmonium, her trademark.

Nothing was heard from Nico for the next few years; she spent most of her time in Paris. In early 1974 she signed with Island. She appeared in a special London concert at the Rainbow Theatre with Kevin Ayers, Cale, and Brian Eno, resulting in an album named after the date of the event, June 1st, 1974, with Nico doing a lengthy, especially morbid version of the Doors' "The End." That song title was the name of her solo return, out later in the year, again produced by Cale. She and Island allegedly had disputes during the recording (Eno kept them from dropping her), but in 1975 the label let her go. In the later '70s and early '80s, Nico did periodic solo shows on the club circuit. In 1981 she released her first LP in seven years, Drama of Exile, which included versions of the Velvet's "I'm Waiting for the Man" and Bowie's "Heroes." She recorded what would be her last album, Camera Obscura, in 1985, again produced by Cale.

Leading a vagabond life, Nico floated from country to country, spending the last year of her life in Manchester, England. Reportedly, her methadone dependency had diminished and her songwriting had increased when she took her grown son, Ari (by French actor Alain Delon), on holiday to the Spanish island of Ibiza. On July 17, 1988, she had an accident on her bicycle; a cabdriver found her on the side of a steep mountain road and took her to four hospitals before she was admitted. Misdiagnosed as having a sunstroke, she died there the next evening of a cerebral hemorrhage. She was cremated in Berlin, where the urn containing her ashes was buried in her mother's grave.

Night Ranger: See Damn Yankees

Willie Nile

Born Robert Noonan, June 7, 1948, Buffalo, NY
 1980—Willie Nile (Arista) 1981—Golden Down 1991—Places I Have Never Been (Columbia) 1992—Hard Times in America EP (Polaris) 1997—Archive Alive/Willie Nile Live in Central Park (Archive Recordings) 1999—Beautiful Wreck of the World (River House Records).

Singer/songwriter Willie Nile won much critical praise in 1980 for his Dylan-turned-early-Springsteen-esque folk rock.

He debuted late in the game by rock standards—at age 30—after spending seven years appearing sporadically on the Greenwich Village folk scene. Nile's grandfather had played piano with Bill "Bojangles" Robinson and Eddie Cantor. In college, Nile studied and wrote poetry and got swept up in Bob Dylan's hyperverbal style. Late in the '60s he made some periodic forays to New York to play the same clubs where Dylan began. In 1973 Nile finally moved to the Village, where he frequently played acoustic sets in clubs such as Kenny's Castaways on Bleecker Street. In 1978 a rave review from Robert Palmer in the New York Times piqued record company interest that led to a contract with Arista. Nile's eponymous debut (#145, 1980), produced by Roy Halee, who had engineered the Yardbirds and Simon and Garfunkel in the '60s, was praised for its Byrdsy guitars, folk-melodiousness, and rocking Buddy Holly influences, plus Nile's affecting, nervous vocals (which he describes as a "curious attempt at singing"). Others found his lyrics disappointing.

Nile's early live band featured ex-Television bassist Fred Smith and former Patti Smith drummer Jay Dee Daugherty. In July 1980 the band did some stadium openers for the Who at Pete Townshend's personal request, made after the Who guitarist heard Nile's debut. (Right after touring with the Who, Nile performed in Central Park; the live recording was released in 1997.) Nile's followup, Golden Down (#158, 1981), again was much talked about in the press, and featured Daugherty, Smith, and Paul Shaffer, but did not prove a breakthrough. Nile again toured the U.S., and in 1982 he signed to Geffen. His next album did not appear until 1991, however, when Columbia released Places I Have Never Been, on which Nile was backed by a virtual who's who of modern folk, including Roger McGuinn, Terry and Suzzy Roche, Loudon Wainwright III, and Richard Thompson, among others. Though it failed to chart, Nile continued touring and recording. In the summer of 1992, he opened for Ringo Starr and the All-Starr Band. His first two albums were reissued with bonus tracks by Razor & Tie Records.

Nile has continued to tour, most recently with his backup band, the Worry Dolls. In the late '90s, inspired by fellow Buffalo native Ani DiFranco and her remarkable success as an independent artist, Nile launched his own River House Records and sells his records through his Web site. The label's first release, Beautiful Wreck of the World—Nile's first new recording in seven years—was critically acclaimed. Billboard's Critics' Choice and the Village Voice's Pazz and Jop Critics' Poll both cited it as one of the 10 best albums of 1999. Reviewers were particularly taken by "On the Road to Calvary," a song Nile wrote for his late friend, singer/songwriter Jeff Buckley.

Harry Nilsson

Born Harry Edward Nelson III, June 15, 1941, Brooklyn, NY; died Jan. 15, 1994, Agoura Hills, CA

1967—The Pandemonium Shadow Show (RCA) 1968—Aerial Ballet 1969—Harry; Skidoo soundtrack 1970—Nilsson Sings

Newman; The Point soundtrack 1971—Nilsson Schmilsson 1972—Son of Schmilsson 1973—A Little Touch of Schmilsson in the Night 1974—Son of Dracula soundtrack (with Ringo Starr) (Rapple); Pussy Cats (with John Lennon) (RCA) 1976—That's the Way It Is (RCA) 1977—Knnilsson 1978—Nilsson's Greatest Music 1988—A Touch More Schmilsson in the Night (RCA, U.K.) 1995—Personal Best: The Harry Nilsson Anthology (RCA).

Singer/songwriter Harry Nilsson moved to California with his family when he was a child and, after graduating from an L.A. parochial school, became a processor at a Van Nuys, California, bank. In the meantime, he learned guitar and piano. By the mid-'60s, using the Nilsson name for his musical persona, he was writing songs, trying to sell them during the day while working nights at the bank. He sold three tunes to Phil Spector, two were recorded by the Ronettes and one by the Modern Folk Quartet. Nilsson also earned extra money by singing on demos and in radio commercials, and in 1967 he signed with RCA. While Nilsson was recording his debut LP, his "Cuddly Toy" became a hit for the Monkees, as his "One" would be for Three Dog Night in 1969.

Despite extravagant critical acclaim, Shadow Show sold poorly. However, it did bring a call from London one night: "It's John . . . John Lennon. Just want to tell you your album is great! You're great!" Later, Brian Epstein made an unsuccessful attempt to woo Nilsson from RCA to Apple. At a press conference for the launching of the Apple label, the Beatles answered "Nilsson" when asked who their favorite artist and group were.

Aerial Ballet fared better, as it included the smash hit "Everybody's Talkin'," a Fred Neil song that stayed in the U.S. Top 10 much of 1969 and was the theme song for the film Midnight Cowboy. Nilsson had written another song intended to be that film's theme. "I Guess the Lord Must Be in New York City"—a #34 hit in 1969. Harry sold fairly well, too, and Nilsson composed scores for Otto Preminger's film Skidoo (1968), for which he sang the closing credits, and the TV sitcom The Courtship of Eddie's Father (1969). Nilsson would later write and sing an original score for the animated TV movie The Point, which yielded the #34 hit "Me and My Arrow" (A 1976 London stage production of The Point would unite ex-Monkees Davy Jones and Mickey Dolenz.) Nilsson never performed a public concert, and he only rarely made televised appearances.

In 1970 Nilsson recorded an album of his friend Randy Newman's compositions. Though critically acclaimed, it sold little. The next year, though, Nilsson achieved his commercial breakthrough with Nilsson Schmilsson, which, with the #1 hit version of Badfinger's "Without You," eventually went platinum. The "Schmilsson" persona, a sort of schmaltzy alter ego, returned on subsequent LPs like the gold Son of Schmilsson. Nilsson proudly announced that he was recording with Frank Sinatra's arranger, Gordon Jenkins. As time went on, Nilsson never quite matched Schmilsson's success. Still, several hits followed: "Coconut" (#8, 1972), "Jump Into the Fire" (#27, 1972), and "Space Man" (#23, 1972).

He made the Son of Dracula (1974) film with Ringo Starr, then became Lennon's drinking buddy during the ex-Beatle's separation from his wife Yoko Ono. During this time, the two recorded Pussy Cats, an album of old rock & roll songs. Nilsson faded from the recording scene during the '80s, straightened out, started a family, and pursued business interests, which included a Hollywood-based film distribution company. After John Lennon's murder, Nilsson became a gun-control advocate, joining the Washington, DC-based Coalition to Stop Handgun Violence. He made a low-key return to recording with 1988's A Touch More Schmilsson in the Night, on which he sang such pop standards as "Over the Rainbow" and "It's Only a Paper Moon." In 1993 he suffered a heart attack, which inspired him to begin writing and recording again in earnest, even though he had no contract. Just a few days after finishing a new album, and with producer Al Kooper already working on a Nilsson tribute album, he died of heart disease at age 52, leaving behind a wife and seven children. The 1995 tribute album For the Love of Harry: Everybody Sings Nilsson featured Randy Newman, Brian Wilson, Adrian Belew, and others.

Nine Inch Nails

Formed 1987, Cleveland, OH

Trent Reznor (b. May 17, 1965, Mercer, PA), voc., kybds., gtr., bass, drums, programming.

1989—Pretty Hate Machine (TVT) 1992—Broken EP (Nothing/TVT/Interscope); Fixed EP 1994—March of the Pigs EP; The Downward Spiral 1995—Further Down the Spiral 1999—The Fragile.

Nine Inch Nails is a one-man industrial-rock band whose symphonic noise and intense lyrics articulate an alienation and rage that have attracted a wide audience. The diviner of this millenarian angst is Trent Reznor, who writes, arranges, performs, and produces all of NIN's material.

Reznor grew up isolated in small-town Pennsylvania, where he studied classical piano as a kid, switching to keyboards and playing in garage bands as a teen. He dropped out of Pennsylvania's Meadville College, moved to Cleveland, and recorded a self-made demo. That tape got him signed to TVT, an independent label best known for compilations of TV jingles.

Pretty Hate Machine was coproduced by Flood (Depeche Mode U2), John Fryer (Love & Rockets, Cocteau Twins), and Adrian Sherwood and Keith LeBlanc. It yielded three college-radio hits, most notably "Head Like a Hole," the video for which got extensive MTV play. Although the album vented an extremely dire, introspective outlook, it sold a million copies. This was at least in part due to the fact that Reznor assembled a band that spent three years on the road promoting Pretty Hate Machine, in the process dazzling audiences at the 1991 Lollapalooza Tour and opening for Guns n' Roses in Europe. NIN spent so long touring because Reznor was suing to be released from TVT, who he said didn't support him artistically or financially. Several other companies were interested in NIN, and when TVT wouldn't let Reznor go, Interscope negotiated an agreement to corelease the band. Interscope also gave Reznor his own label, Nothing. Broken (#7, 1992) was recorded during this period in a number of locations "without the permission of The Record Label," as the liner notes say. The EP is an intensely devastated and devastating document, once again entirely masterminded by Reznor, with three tracks coproduced by Flood. NIN had Coil and Foetus' Jim Thirwell remix tracks from Broken on Fixed.

Broken debuted at #7 on the pop albums chart, while "Wish," a track from the record, won a Grammy for Best Metal Performance. Reznor tested the freedom granted by his new record company on the video for "Happiness in Slavery," which showed a man being sexually tortured and ground into a pulp by a machine—a visualization of NIN's own tortured nature as a synth band venting human emotions and an apt metaphor for Reznor's feelings about the music business. This was not the first controversial NIN video: "Sin," from the first album, was refused by MTV for its images of genital piercing and gay men smearing blood on each other, while outtakes from "Down in It" were investigated by the FBI, which suspected that they were culled from a snuff film.

Working on his next album in L.A., Reznor moved into the house where Charles Manson's followers murdered Sharon Tate. Flood again coproduced, and the album featured guitarist Adrian Belew. The Downward Spiral (1994), a dense, depression-filled and uncompromising work, debuted at #2 on the chart and went on to sell 5 million copies.

In the summer of 1994, NIN appeared at the Woodstock '94. A version of "Happiness in Slavery" from the live album culled from performances at the festival earned NIN its secand Grammy for Best Metal Performance. In 1996, Reznor co-produced shock-rocker Marilyn Manson's Antichrist Superstar (the two men later had a falling-out). Reznor also produced the soundtracks for Oliver Stone's Natural Born Killers (1994) and David Lynch's Lost Highway (1997).

Trent Reznor (a.k.a. Nine Inch Nails)

Accolades from both the rock and mainstream press were pouring in by this time, with Time magazine naming Reznor one of the 25 most influential Americans. In 1999 NIN released its first studio album in five years, a despairing double CD called The Fragile (#1). Working with a broader sonic palette than before, Reznor tempered his throbbing cacophony with moodier, subdued moments; ROLLING STONE hailed the record "a brutal and delicate masterpiece." "The Day the World Went Away" debuted at #17 on the Billboard Hot 100 chart to become the first Top 40 single of NIN's career.

1910 Fruitgum Company

Formed 1968, New Jersey

Joey Levine, voc.; Bruce Shay (b. 1948), voc., gtr., perc.; Frank Jeckell, voc., gtr.; Mark Gutkowski (b. 1948), gtr.; Larry Ripley (b. 1948), horns; Rusty Oppenheimer (b. 1948), drums; Pat Karwan, gtr., voc.; Floyd Marcus, drums, voc.; Chuck Travis (b. 1946), voc., gtr.

1968—Simon Says (Buddha); 1, 2, 3 Red Light 1969—Indian Giver 2001—The Best of the 1910 Fruitgum Co. (Buddha).

The 1910 Fruitgum Company, like the Ohio Express (with whom it shared lead singer Joey Levine), was a faceless studio assemblage formed by the Jeff Kasenetz-Jeff Katz production team for Buddah Records to record bubblegum pop. Its first hit, "Simon Says" (#4, 1968), pioneered the genre and was followed by "1, 2, 3 Red Light" (#5, 1968—later covered in concert by the Talking Heads), "Goody Goody Gumdrops" (#37, 1968), "Indian Giver" (#5, 1969), and "Special Delivery" (#38, 1969). The group's last chart-making tune came in 1969 with "The Train" (#57). In 1968 Kasenetz and Katz merged the members with another bubblegum group, the Kasenetz-Katz Singing Orchestral Circus, which hit with "Quick Joey Small (Run Joey Run)" (#25). The 1910 Fruitgum Company disbanded in 1970, though a group of that name continues to perform.

Nirvana

Formed 1987, Aberdeen, WA

Kurt Donald Cobain (b. Feb. 20, 1967, Hoquiam, WA.; d. Apr. 5, 1994, Seattle, WA), voc., gtr.; Krist Anthony Novoselic (a.k.a. Chris Novoselic, b. May 10, 1965, Compton, CA), bass; Aaron Burckhard, drums.

1988—(- Burckhard; + Chad Channing [b. Jan. 31, 1967, Santa Rosa, CA], drums) 1989—(+ Jason Everman, gtr.) 1989—Bleach (Sub Pop) (- Everman) Blew EP (Tupelo) 1990—(- Channing; + Dave Grohl [b. Jan. 14, 1969, Warren, OH], drums) 1991—Nevermind (DGC) 1992—Incesticide 1993—In Utero (+ Pat Smear [b. Georg Albert Ruthenburg, Aug. 5, 1959, Los Angeles, CA], gtr.) 1994—MTV Unplugged in New York 1996—From the Muddy Banks of the Wishkah.

Nirvana is widely credited with bringing the sound and spirit of late-'70s punk rock to a mainstream pop audience. In 1991 the Seattle-based trio took the angry, nihilistic message of the Sex Pistols' landmark 1977 single "Anarchy in the U.K." to #6 (#1 Modern Rock) with its own sarcastic blueprint for frustration, "Smells Like Teen Spirit." The band's reign was tragically cut short slightly more than two years later, on April 5, 1994, when leader Kurt Cobain took his own life following at least one earlier suicide attempt and severe bouts with drug addiction, a chronic stomach ailment, and depression. He was 27.

Kurt Cobain and Krist Novoselic grew up in Aberdeen, Washington, a small logging town 100 miles southwest of Seattle. When Cobain was eight, his secretary mother and auto-mechanic father divorced, leaving him constantly moving from one set of relatives to another. As a child he loved the Beatles, but by nine discovered the heavier music of Led Zeppelin, Black Sabbath, and Kiss. Cobain met the 6-foot-7-inch Novoselic, son of a local hairdresser, through mutual friend Buzz Osborne of the Aberdeen band the Melvins. Osborne introduced them to the hardcore punk of Black Flag and Flipper.

In 1987 Cobain and Novoselic, both of whom had long felt alienated from their working-class peers, formed Nirvana and started playing parties at the liberal Evergreen State College in nearby Olympia. The following year, Seattle independent label Sub Pop signed the band and released its first single, "Love Bug" b/w "Big Cheese." Nirvana's debut album, Bleach, recorded for $606.17, came out in 1989 to kudos from the underground-rock community; it sold an initial 35,000 copies, considerable for an indie-label release. The next year, Nirvana put out another Sub Pop single, "Sliver" b/w "Dive," and recorded six new songs (including "Smells Like Teen Spirit") with producer Butch Vig. Although opposed to major labels in principle, the band claimed it shopped the songs to bigger companies in hopes of getting the message of punk to a larger audience.

A major-label bidding war ensued, with DGC ultimately offering the group a $287,000 advance (rumors had it at $750,000). With Nevermind, Nirvana succeeded at getting punk to the populace on a grand scale: After an initial shipment of 50,000 copies, the record kept selling, eventually bumping new albums by Michael Jackson, Garth Brooks, U2, and MC Hammer from the top of the chart. Nevermind ultimately sold 10 million copies in the U.S. alone; it also produced another hit, "Come as You Are" (#32, 1992). In the wake of that success, Cobain explored a few pet projects, including performing frayed guitar feedback on William Burroughs' The "Priest" They Called Him spoken-word CD and coproducing the Melvins' Houdini album.

By early 1992, Nirvana's success was biting back. As "Smells Like Teen Spirit" continued climbing up the charts, Cobain began bemoaning the group's meteoric rise, worrying that fans were missing the point of Nirvana's antiestablishment message. Simultaneously, his new relationship with Courtney Love, singer of the band Hole [see entry], had become a hot topic in the gossip columns. The couple married on February 24. When Love became pregnant with Cobain's child and was quoted in a Vanity Fair article as admitting she had used heroin during the pregnancy, news of the couple's alleged drug addiction hit the media fan. Scrutiny of the Cobain-Love affair reached a level of intensity matched in the pop world only by John Lennon and Yoko Ono, or the ill-fated punk couple Sid Vicious and Nancy Spungen. On August 18, 1992, the Cobains delivered a healthy seven-pound baby, Frances Bean (named after the tormented, lobotomized '40s film actress Frances Farmer). After a battle with children's services in L.A., which challenged the Cobain's parental fitness based on Love's comments in Vanity Fair, the couple was granted custody of the child. Amid the chaos, Nirvana released Incesticide, a collection of early singles and outtakes. Beginning in spring of 1993, a series of events occurred that foreshadowed the demise of Cobain and Nirvana. On May 2, the singer overdosed on heroin at his Seattle home. The following month, he was charged with domestic assault after Love summoned the police during an argument over Cobain's gun collection. On July 23, Cobain overdosed again, this time in the bathroom of a New York hotel room before a Nirvana show at the Roseland Ballroom.

Nirvana: Dave Grohl, Kurt Cobain, Krist Novoselic

On September 21, Nirvana released In Utero, which debuted at #1 and ultimately produced the Modern Rock radio hits "Heart-Shaped Box" and "All Apologies." On January 7, 1994, Nirvana performed what would be their last American concert, at the Seattle Center Arena. On February 6, the band departed for a European tour, but after a series of shows in France, Portugal, the former Yugoslavia, Germany, and Italy, decided to take a break, during which Cobain remained in Rome. At 6:30 a.m. on March 4, Love found Cobain unconscious in the couple's room at Rome's Excelsior Hotel, the result of an overdose of the tranquilizer Rohypnol. At first deemed an accident, later reports uncovered a suicide note. Cobain remained in a coma for 20 hours. When the Cobains returned to Seattle, things took a turn for the worse. On March 18, police arrived at the Cobain home again after the singer locked himself in a room with a .38-caliber revolver, threatening to kill himself.

On March 30, Cobain checked in to the Exodus Recovery Center in L.A., but fled on April 1, after telling staff members he was going outside for a smoke. On April 8, he was found dead in a room above the garage of the couple's Seattle home, the result of a self-inflicted, 20-gauge shotgun wound to his head. For weeks afterward, fans, the news media, MTV, and radio mourned his death with specials about Nirvana and the generations they inspired. In November 1994, MTV Unplugged in New York, an album of the acoustic show taped in 1993, was released.

Novoselic and Grohl made a post-Nirvana performance appearance together in 1994 in Olympia, Washington, where they joined the Stinky Puffs onstage for a set that included the Puffs' "I Love You Anyway," a song for Cobain. Grohl soon found success leading his new band the Foo Fighters [see entry], and with Novoselic gathered 16 live Nirvana performances recorded between 1989 and 1994 for From the Muddy Banks of the Wishkah. While Novoselic turned to alcohol in the months after Cobain's suicide, he eventually stopped drinking and formed a political action committee (JAMPAC, for Joint Artists and Music Promotions Political Action Committee) to battle censorship. In 1994 he picked up a guitar and joined Venezuela-born singer-bassist Yva Las Vegas for the short-lived band Sweet 75, which released a self-titled album on Geffen in 1997. Novoselic occasionally played with a band called Sunshine Cake, but by decade's end, most of his energy was spent on political activism, performing with Soundgarden's Kim Thayil and Dead Kennedys founder Jello Biafra as the No WTO Combo during protests against the World Trade Organization's 1999 gathering in Seattle; a live album, Live From the Battle in Seattle, was released by Biafra's Alternative Tentacles label in 2000. Novoselic also collaborated again with Grohl on a planned Nirvana box set for 2001, in part to celebrate the 10th anniversary of Nevermind.

Nirvana's success changed the course of rock music in the '90s, cementing the rise of alternative rock and legitimizing the differences in perspective between the earlier baby-boom generation of rock fans and the subsequent so-called Generation X. The band's impact was also felt by some of Cobain's own musical heroes, heard in such Cobain tributes as Neil Young's Sleeps With Angels album and Patti Smith's song "About a Boy." Cobain's expressions of support for women and homosexuals challenged the earlier rock & roll status quo. With his sensitive lyrics and outward frustrations over the disordered state of the world, Cobain brought a new edge and urgency to pop music.

Nitty Gritty Dirt Band

Formed 1966, Long Beach, CA
Bruce Kunkel (b. ca. 1948, Long Beach), gr., voc.; Jeff Hanna

(b. July 11, 1947, Detroit, MI), gtr., drums, voc.; Jackson Browne (b. Oct. 9, 1948, Heidelberg, W. Ger.), gtr., voc.; Jimmie Fadden (b. Mar. 9, 1948, Long Beach), drums, washboard, harmonica, washtub bass, gtr., voc.; Ralph Barr (b. Boston, MA), gtr., clarinet, voc.; Les Thompson (b. Long Beach), mandolin, bass, voc.; - Browne; + John McEuen (b. Dec. 19, 1945, Long Beach), banjo, mandolin, gtr., fiddle.

1967—Nitty Gritty Dirt Band (Liberty); Ricochet 1968—(- Kunkel; + Chris Darrow, gtr., mandolin, voc., fiddle) 1968—Rare Junk 1969—Alive (- Darrow; - Barr; + Jimmy Ibbotson [b. Jan. 21, 1947, Philadelphia, PA], gtr., drums, kybds., voc.) 1970—Uncle Charlie and His Dog Teddy 1972—All the Good Times (United Artists); Will the Circle Be Unbroken 1974—(- Thompson) Stars and Stripes Forever 1975—Dream 1976—(- Ibbotson) Dirt, Silver and Gold 1978—The Dirt Band 1979—An American Dream 1980—(+ Bob Carpenter [b. Dec. 26, 1946, Philadelphia, PA], voc., kybds., accordion) Make a Little Magic 1981—Jealousy 1983—(+ Ibbotson) Let's Go 1984—Plain Dirt Fashion (Warner Bros.) 1985—Partners, Brothers and Friends 1986—Twenty Years of Dirt: The Best of the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band 1987—(- McEuen; + Bernie Leadon [b. July 19, 1947, Minneapolis, MN], gtr., banjo, mandolin, voc.) Hold On 1988—Workin' Band; (- Leadon) More Great Dirt; 1989—Will the Circle Be Unbroken, vol. 2 (Universal) 1990—The Rest of the Dream 1991—Live Two Five 1992—Not Fade Away (Liberty) 1994—Acoustic 1999—Bang Bang Bang (DreamWorks).

One of the few country-rock bands that moved from old-time country to rock, rather than vice versa, the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band (or Dirt Band, as it was known in the late '70s and early '80s) has delved into all sorts of musical Americana. Through the years, the group's material has gone from a hybrid jug band/string band, through bluegrass and hoedowns, to country swing and country rock.

As high school students, in 1965, Jeff Hanna and Bruce Kunkel started a group called the Illegitimate Jug Band. Around this time, the pair met Jackson Browne, and in college the three formed the core of the original version of the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, along with Jimmie Fadden, Ralph Barr, and Les Thompson. Browne departed and was replaced by John McEuen, and the band recorded its debut LP, which yielded a modest hit single, "Buy for Me the Rain" (#45, 1967). As the band was trying to decide whether to go with rock or stay traditional, it made an appearance in the 1968 film Paint Your Wagon. In 1969 the group temporarily disbanded, though all kept busy with various musical pursuits. Joined by Jimmy Ibbotson (and minus Barr and Darrow), the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band regrouped and recorded its breakthrough, Uncle Charlie (#66, 1970), which featured the Top 10 cover of Jerry Jeff Walker's "Mr. Bojangles." The group's next important project was a historic meeting with a bevy of old-time country and bluegrass artists including Roy Acuff, Earl Scruggs, Maybelle Carter, Doc Watson, Merle Travis, and Vassar Clements to record Will the Circle Be Unbroken (#68, 1972). The groundbreaking three-disc set of traditional folk and country tunes received critical raves and eventually went platinum. Over 16 years later, the group released Will the Circle Be Unbroken, vol. 2 (#95, 1989), which featured Johnny Cash, June Carter Cash, Ricky Skaggs, Chet Atkins, Levon Helm, John Prine, Emmylou Harris, Roger McGuinn, Earl Scruggs, Rosanne Cash, and others.

Nitty Gritty Dirt Band: Jeff Hanna, Bob Carpenter, Jimmie Fadden, Jimmy Ibbotson

A popular live act—band members trade myriad string and other instruments about during their concerts—the Dirt Band, in 1977, became the first U.S. rock group to tour the Soviet Union. The following year, the group arranged and later performed Steve Martin's novelty hit "King Tut" (#17, 1978). In 1980 a duet with Linda Ronstadt, "An American Dream," was a #13 hit, six months later, the group scored again with "Make a Little Magic" (#25, 1980), featuring Nicolette Larson. Beginning in 1983, the group had a series of 16 Top 10 country hits—of which three, "Long Hard Road (The Sharecropper's Dream)" (1984), "Modern Day Romance" (1985), and "Fishin' in the Dark" (1987), all hit #1.

In 1986 longtime member McEuen left the band to pursue solo projects, which included scoring the 1993 miniseries The Wild West. The group continues to keep a busy performance schedule and occasionally record new albums. Bang Bang Bang (1999) includes a duet with singer/songwriter Matraca Berg, who is married to Hanna and is the author of several country hits.

Mojo Nixon

Born Neill Kirby McMillan Jr., Aug. 2, 1957, Chapel Hill, NC
Mojo Nixon and Skid Roper (Nixon, voc., gtr.; Skid Roper [b. Richard Banke, Oct. 19, 1954, National City, CA], washboard, perc., harmonica, mandolin).

1985—Mojo Nixon and Skid Roper (I.R.S.) 1986—Frenzy

1987—Bo-Day-Shus!!! (Enigma) 1989—Root Hog or Die (I.R.S.)
 1990—Unlimited Everything (Enigma) (– Roper).
 Mojo Nixon solo: 1990—Otis (I.R.S.) 1992—Horny Holidays!
 (Triple X) 1995—Whereabouts Unknown (Ripe & Ready) 1997—Gadzooks!!! (Needletime) 1999—The Real Sock Ray
Blue! (Shanachie).
 With Jello Biafra: 1994—Prairie Home Invasion (Alternative Tentacles).

The clown prince of postpunk roots-rock revivalists, Mojo Nixon became a cult star as an exuberant, irreverent white-trash loudmouth. His songs, which attack sanctimony and revel in lowbrow thrills, are a primitive, ferocious blend of rockabilly, blues, and R&B.

Onetime Virginia state bicycle-racing champion Kirby McMillan allegedly took a cross-country bike ride and became Mojo Nixon in New Orleans after imbibing a concoction of green liqueurs. Nixon eventually settled in San Diego, forming a two-man band with multi-instrumentalist Skid Roper. Their debut album included "Jesus at McDonald's". Frenzy featured "Stuffin' Martha's Muffin," a bawdy ode to then-MTV VJ Martha Quinn. Bo-Day-Shus!!! expanded the Nixon-Roper cult with "Elvis Is Everywhere," in which Nixon extolled the undying spirit of Elvis Presley. Root Hog or Die, produced in Memphis by Jim Dickinson (Alex Chilton, Replacements), featured extra musicians and a slightly slicker sound. MTV (for which Nixon had taped some promotional spots) actually showed Nixon's video for "Debbie Gibson Is Pregnant With My Two-Headed Love Child," in which teen-pop starlet Gibson was played by actress Winona Ryder. (Ryder costarred in the Jerry Lee Lewis biopic Great Balls of Fire with Nixon, who played Lewis' drummer.)

Nixon then parted company with Roper, who has recorded two countryish albums. 1989's Trails Plowed Under and 1991's Lydia's Cafe, with his band the Whirlin' Spurs. Nixon's Otis, which included X bassist John Doe, Dash Rip Rock guitarist Bill Davis, and Del-Lords guitarist Enc Ambel, featured "Don Henley Must Die." The earnest ex-Eagle Henley himself did not find it funny, but the two mended fences in July 1992, when Henley joined Nixon onstage at an Austin, Texas, club. By then, Nixon had formed the Toad Liquors, with whom he recorded the Christmas album Horny Holidays, and had toured with ex-Blaster Dave Alvin in the Pleasure Barons. In 1993 he began working with ex-Dead Kennedys frontman Jello Biafra on a "folk" album, Prairie Home Invasion, released on Biafra's Alternative Tentacles label in 1994. The following year, Nixon courted music-industry controversy once again with the release of Whereabouts Unknown, which was to feature the song "Bnng Me the Head of David Geffen." The mogul's eponymous label denounced the tune as a stunt, and Nixon withdrew it from the album even though no legal action was threatened. (It appears on Gadzooks!!!) Subsequent albums, recorded for independent labels, saw Nixon stick more firmly to his agenda. His 1999 release, The Real Sock Ray Blue!, included screeds about O.J. Simpson, cybersex, and Princess Diana.

No Doubt

Formed 1986, Orange County, CA
 Original lineup: John Spence (b. John Francis Spence; d. Dec. 21, 1987, Anaheim, CA), voc.; Eric Stefani (b. Eric Matthew Stefani, June 17, 1967, Fullerton, CA), kybds.; Gwen Stefani (b. Oct. 3, 1969, Fullerton), voc.
 1987—(+ Tony Kanal [b. Aug. 27, 1970, London, Eng.], bass; – Spence) 1988—(+ Tom Dumont [b. Jan. 11, 1968, Los Angeles, CA], gtr.) 1989—(+ Adrian Young [b. Aug. 26, 1969, Long Beach, CA], drums) 1992—No Doubt (Interscope/Atlantic) 1994—(– E. Stefani) 1995—The Beacon Street Collection (Beacon Street Records); Tragic Kingdom (Trauma/Interscope) 2000—Return of Saturn (Interscope/Trauma).

Formed by brother and sister Eric and Gwen Stefani with high school friend John Spence in 1986, the pop/ska band No Doubt labored in near obscurity for nearly a decade before achieving worldwide success with the 15 million-selling Tragic Kingdom in the mid-'90s. Spence, whose back-flipping set an early standard for the band's frantic performances, was the group's original lead singer, while Gwen did harmony vocals. Bassist Tony Kanal joined in early 1987. On December 21, 1987—a year to the month after the band's formation—Spence took his own life in an Anaheim park. The group carried on with Gwen Stefani assuming lead-vocal duties, and they soon added guitarist Tom Dumont and drummer Adrian Young. They signed to Interscope in 1991 and released their self-titled debut the following year; it tanked. Eric Stefani left in 1994 to work as an animator for the TV series The Simpsons, though several of his songs appeared on both 1995's self-released The Beacon Street Collection and Tragic Kingdom, released on Interscope later that year.

Tragic Kingdom was slow to take off, but reached #1 after 14 months on the strength of three hit singles—"Just a Girl" (#23 pop), "Spiderwebs" (#5 Modern Rock), and the #2 Modern Rock ballad "Don't Speak," in which Stefani sang about the breakup of her seven-year relationship with Kanal. Stefani, like Blondie's Deborah Harry before her, attracted the lion's share of the band's media attention, often appearing on magazine covers without the other group members. Her relationship with Bush frontman Gavin Rossdale kept her profile high even during the downtime between the end of the Tragic Kingdom tour and the release of Return of Saturn (#2, 2000). Although that album sold far less than its predecessor, it featured two successful singles, "Ex-Girlfriend" (#2 Modern Rock) and "Simple Kind of Life" (#38). Stefani was featured on Moby's 2001 hit "South Side."

Notorious B.I.G. (Biggie Smalls)

Born Christopher Wallace, May 21, 1972, Brooklyn, NY; died Mar. 9, 1997, Los Angeles, CA
 1994—Ready to Die (Bad Boy) 1997—Life After Death
 1999—Born Again.

Mammoth-sized rapper (6 feet 3 inches and close to 300 pounds) the Notorious B.I.G., alternately known as Biggie Smalls but born Christopher Wallace, released just one album during his lifetime: 1994's Ready to Die. Written by Wallace and produced by Sean Combs, it was a remarkable debut, distinguished by Wallace's thick, commanding baritone and his slow, matter-of-fact rhymes about the hustler's life he left behind for rap. Wallace would not attain true iconic status until after his murder, on March 9, 1997. By the time his second album, the sprawling, double-CD Life After Death, hit stores three weeks later, Wallace—like his rival Tupac Shakur before him—had become a rap martyr.

By the time he was 15, Wallace was selling crack in Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant neighborhood. He gave up drug dealing for rap, however, and recorded homemade demos in his basement. One of these found its way to Uptown Records A&R chief Sean Combs, who, after leaving Uptown to start his own Bad Boy Entertainment label, signed Biggie Smalls. The Notorious B.I.G. helped Bad Boy on its way to becoming one of the most successful rap and R&B labels of the '90s when Ready to Die, released in September 1994, went to #3 on the R&B album chart and spawned several hits: "Juicy" (#27 pop, #14 R&B, 1994), "Big Poppa" (#6 pop, #4 R&B, 1995), and "One More Chance/Stay With Me" (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1995) among them. The album itself was also a crossover success, climbing to #15.

In the wake of the album's success, Wallace was frequently called on as a guest artist, and he appeared on Michael Jackson's "This Time Around," from 1995's HISTORY Past, Present and Future, Book I, among other recordings. He also started his own Undeas label, to which he signed fellow Bedford-Stuyvesant rap troupe Junior M.A.F.I.A. He executive-produced and guested on Hard Core, the 1996 debut by Junior M.A.F.I.A. vixen Lil' Kim, with whom he had an on-again/off-again affair.

As Wallace's (and Bad Boy's) profile rose, he and Combs became entangled in an ongoing East Coast–West Coast rivalry with Death Row founder Manion "Suge" Knight and his own star rapper, Tupac Shakur. When Shakur was shot and wounded in New York on November 30, 1994, he publicly implicated Wallace and Combs, and later taunted Wallace with the song "Hit 'Em Up," in which he boasted of sleeping with Wallace's wife, singer Faith Evans. On September 13, 1996, Shakur was murdered in Las Vegas, and six months later, Wallace was shot and killed while driving away from the Soul Train Awards party in L.A. No arrest has been made in either case to date, though informants reportedly told police that Shakur had been killed by a member of the L.A. Crips, a gang linked to Bad Boy; meanwhile, the Crips' bitter rivals, the Bloods, were similarly thought to have ties to Death Row.

Released less than a month after Wallace's death, Life After Death debuted at #1 on both the pop and R&B charts, selling 690,000 copies its first week and eventually going 10 times platinum. Two of the album's singles, "Hypnotize" and "Mo Money Mo Problems," topped the singles chart. Later that summer, Combs released his own debut solo album, No Way Out, which featured his tribute to Wallace, "I'll Be Missing You" (#1, 1997). In 1999 Bad Boy released the posthumous Notorious B.I.G. album Born Again (#1). Comprised of remixes and vault material, the album featured guest appearances by Eminem, Snoop Dogg, Missy Elliott, Method Man, Busta Rhymes, and Sean Combs.

NRBQ

Formed 1967, Miami, FL, as the New Rhythm and Blues Quintet
 Terry Adams (b. Aug. 14, 1950, Louisville, KY), kybds., voc., harmonica, trumpet; Joey Spampinato (b. Aug. 16, 1950,
 New York, NY), bass, voc.; Steve Ferguson (b. Nov. 21, 1949, Louisville, KY), gr., voc.; Tom Staley (b. Mar. 3, 1950, Fort Lauderdale, FL), drums; Frank Gadler (b. May 8, 1950, New York), voc.
 1969—NRBQ (Columbia) 1970—Boppin' the Blues (with Carl
 Perkins) 1971—(+ Al Anderson [b. July 26, 1947, Windsor, CT], gr., voc.; - Ferguson) 1972—Scraps (Kama Sutra) 1973—Workshop (- Gadler) 1974—(+ Donn Adams
 [b. Jan. 16, Fleming, KY], trombone; + Keith Spring [b. Dec. 28, Louisville, KY], sax; - Staley; + Tom Ardolino [b. Jan. 12, 1955, Springfield, MA], drums) 1977—All Hopped Up (Red Rooster)
 1978—At Yankee Stadium (Mercury) 1979—Kick Me Hard
 (Rounder/Red Rooster) 1980—Tiddlywinks (Rounder)
 1983—Grooves in Orbit (Bearsville) 1985—Tapdancin' Bats
 (Rounder) 1986—Lou & the Q (with Capt. Lou Albano)
 1986—She Sings, They Play (with Skeeter Davis) 1987—God Bless Us All 1988—Diggin' Uncle Q 1989—Wild Weekend
 (Virgin) 1990—Peek-a-Boo: The Best of NRBQ, 1969–1989
 (Rhino) 1992—Stormalong (with John Candy) (BMG Kidz);
Honest Dollar (Rykodisc) 1993—Stay With Me (Columbia)
 1994—Message for the Mess Age (Rhino/Forward) (- Anderson; + Johnny Spampinato [b. Jan. 29, 1957, New York], gr., voc.)
 1997—Tokyo: Recorded Live at on Air West Tokyo (Rounder);
You're Nice People You Are 1998—You Gotta Be Loose: Recorded Live in U.S.A. 1999—NRBQ; Ridin' in My Car.
 Terry Adams solo: 1996—Terrible (New World).
 Al Anderson solo: 1972—Al Anderson (Vanguard) 1988—*Party
 Favors* (Twin/Tone) 1996—Pay Before You Pump (Import).
 Steve Ferguson solo: 1993—Jack Salmon & Derby Sauce
 (Schoolkids) 1995—Mama U Seapa.

Since the late '60s, NRBQ has been playing its unique, often wacky mix of rockabilly, country, pop, jazz, and every other style of popular music, a blend the band has dubbed "omnipop." Though they've had only one charting single—"Get That Gasoline Blues" (#70, 1974)—their incessant touring, onstage unpredictability, down-to-earth humor, and intermittent releases have garnered them a dedicated cult following.

The band formed when Kentucky natives Terry Adams and Steve Ferguson met Bronx-born Joey Spampinato in Miami. While playing in a New Jersey club, they were spotted by Slim Harpo, who encouraged Steve Paul to book them into his New York club, the Scene. Their performances there drew positive press, and within the year Columbia had signed them. The band's first album—which mixed originals with covers of Eddie Cochran's "C'mon Everybody," Sun Ra's "Rocket Number 9," and Bruce Channel's "Hey! Baby"—was nearly buried by a "new Beatles" hype, and the second, a collaboration with rockabilly legend Carl Perkins, was generally misunderstood. Guitarist Al Anderson, onetime leader of the Wildweeds, a country-rock group from Connecticut, joined them in 1971 when Ferguson departed.

